McGraw Manor survey subject

A 100 percent door-to-door survey of the occupants of the McGraw Manor Housing Area will be conducted Jan. 19-23. The purpose of the survey is to confirm occupancy/use of government quarters and to collect data useful to installation management.

Sponsors are requested to make arrangements to be present or have an adult member of the family present in quarters at the time scheduled for the survey. Individual letters will be sent to each occupant and will include a schedule of the dates and times when quarters are expected to be surveyed and a blank copy of the survey form. Applicable portions of the survey forms should be completed by occupants prior to the team's visit.

Commanders are requested to insure that members of their units who reside in McGraw Manor are notified of the survey and that they are permitted to be present in quarters during the scheduled time of the survey.

Members of the survey team will be dispatched in two-person teams and will be uniquely identified as described in letters sent to occupants.

Data resulting from this housing survey will be analyzed, refined and used to improve installation management and to survey the remaining post housing areas at later dates.

Shoulder Boards OK'd

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--Black shoulder marks (boards) for NCO's was one of two items recommended by the Army Cohesion and Stability Team (ARCOST) that received Army Chief of Staff approval recently. Gen. E.C. Meyer also granted an exception to policy to allow soldiers stationed in tropical areas to wear awards and decorations on the green uniform shirt.

According to Army uniform board officials, the NCO shoulder marks are similar to the officer shoulder marks except the cloth is black and gold stripes are not on the NCO marks.

The NCO marks, which are authorized for wear by corporals E-4 through E-9s, will come with embroidered rank insignia. Soldiers E-1 through Specialist Four E-4 will continue to wear metal rank insignia pinned to their green shirt collars.

Officials comment that the NCO shoulder marks have been approved for standard fielding. That is, when a soldier is promoted to or within the NCO ranks, new shoulder marks with the appropriate rank will automatically be issued.

Although the expression "Shoulder Boards" is often heard the proper terminology is "Shoulder Marks", officials explain. No wear date has been determined for the new marks which will be worn on the shoulder loops on the green shirts and the women's overblouses that will be available later, they say.

Gen. Meyer's decision to allow soldiers stationed in certain areas to wear their awards and decorations on the green shirt affects service-members stationed in Clothing Zone I. This zone includes Panama and Hawaii where tropical climates and warm or hot weather for the entire year is the norm.

The decision allows soldiers stationed in those areas the option of wearing awards on the Army green shirt when worn as an outer garment. The policy exception takes effect immediately with the major command commander having the discretion to set a specific wear date.

"I have a Dream..."

He was a man of many dreams. He dreamt one day people would see that they were meant to live together as brothers and sisters.

He dreamed empty stomachs would be filled, wars would end and man would no longer have to be afraid.

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. told us, "With faith we will be able to speed up the day when there will be peace on earth and good will toward men. It will be a glorious day, the morning stars will sing together and the sons of God will shout for joy."

Dr. King, a man for all people, was born in Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 15, 1929. Remember him on the anniversary of his birth as a man who refused to lose faith. For a more in depth look at the man behind the dream, see story on page 4.

Don't make work through laziness

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Operator assistance, may I help you?"
"Could you give me the number of . . .?"
"Yes, the number is 545-XXXX. but did you realize that number is in the directory?"

The Fort Benning operators don't actually ask this last question after giving out a phone number, but maybe they should. Telephone directories are readily available and should be used but often aren't.

The operators are busy people and shouldn't have to continually look up numbers for people who are too lazy to find it themselves. According to Ray Weaver, Chief of the Operation Division, U.S. Army Communications Command, there are many, many calls in an eight hour period. "Sixty percent of the calls are for information on phone numbers," said Weaver. "The others are for placing AUTOVON calls, or other official business.

"When an operator is tied up giving out a number that's in the directory, that particular operator can't handle the more important calls; the priority ones," explained Weaver. "A person can locate a number by looking in the book just as quickly as dialing 113."

Marilyn Anderson, chief of operators at Fort Benning's Miliken Telephone Exchange, says people should have enough courtesy to look in the directory first, before calling for assistance. "Each desk with a telephone on it should have a Fort Benning directory and a Columbus phone book next to it," she added. "This would eliminate a lot of operator use." Anderson said that these were the sentiments of all the operators. "We strive to do a good job, but it's impossible when people don't use the directory."

She also said that people should be aware that new Fort Benning directories are out and are available at Bldg. 479 on Main Post.

Telephone directories aren't hard to read. They are organized so numbers are easy to locate. Picking up a book is no harder than lifting a telephone receiver, so why create extra work for someone else when finding a number yourself would be just as easy.

LEDGER columnist praised

Editor's note: A copy of the following letter was recently sent to Columbus LEDGER columnist Jack Swift. The authors of this letter also wanted to share it with BAYONET readers.

Dear Mr. Swift:
The Faith Middle School at Fort Benning, Ga. recently held a two and a five-mile foot race.

The race was a tremendous success involving more than 500 runners and an estimated 700 spectators. The primary goal of our race was to involve as many pre-teen and teenage runners as possible with the philosophy that an interest in individual fitness at this age level will carry over into adulthood.

Our largest supporter with approximately 30 runners ages 10 and under was Wilbur Elementary School located on the Fort Benning reservation with the main push coming from Mrs. Diane Oliver of that school.

We recently learned that Mrs. Oliver's class had invited the "most important" personalities in the Columbus area to come visit and run with them prior to the Faith Christmas Race. The result of their invitations was that one person responded to their request and spent part of his busy day with them.

We all know that generous person as Mr. Jack Swift - the others that were invited and didn't even bother to respond with a "thank you, but my schedule will not allow me to come", are known by other names.

For your work and inspirational leadership with the youth of Wilbur School and certainly the youth throughout Columbus and Phenix City, we- the Faith School Physical Education Department - salute you. We are enclosing a complimentary T-shirt that hopefully will remind you that you are invited to next year's event on December 5, 1981.

Again thank you for your positive guidance and concern.

Sincerely,
Sandra Rogers

Officer promotion boards cancelled

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--Regular Army (RA) promotion boards for commissioned officers in the temporary grades 0-6 and below are cancelled for 1981. Under provisions of the new Defense Officers Personnel Management Act (DOPMA), most officers now serving in a temporary grade will be automatically promoted to the RA grade on Sept. 18, 1981, the date DOPMA takes effect.

DOPMA ends the dual-temporary and permanent-promotion system for RA officers. The new law, signed by the president on December 12, provides that all active duty officers be placed under a single "Active Duty List".

The DOPMA provisions for those officers now serving in a temporary grade does not apply to officers who have gone before a selection board in the past and been passed over for promotion.

Army officials note officers who have already been passed over for promotion to RA captain, major or lieutenant colonel must be considered by a selection board slated for next October. Those who are selected at that time will then be promoted. Officers not recommended for promotion will be retired or discharged, under current law. Officers with 18 years of active duty until retirement.

Officers who have already been passed over twice for RA promotion to captain, major or lieutenant colonel will be retired or discharged, except those within the 18-year sanctuary. These officers also will be allowed to continue on active duty until eligible for retirement.

Officers now on RA promotion lists as a result of 1980 selection boards will continue to be promoted under current law until Sept. 15, 1981. At that time, the new DOPMA provisions become effective.

Aircrew gets Arcoms

Army Commendation Medals were recently awarded to the pilot, co-pilot, crew chief and medic of a helicopter that crashed Sept. 18 near Dahlonga, Ga. with seven Fort Benning ranger students on board.

The pilot, WO James J. Goddard, 121st Aviation Company, 34th Medical Battalion, was recognized for handling the helicopter in an expert manner following an engine failure. His actions prevented serious injuries to his passengers and crew. He has also been submitted for the Air Medal.

The co-pilot, CWO Richard L. Hults, also the 121st Aviation Company, was awarded for his outstanding duty performance in helping the pilot control the aircraft.

The crew chief, Sp4 Dale E. Cotner, was credited with responding quickly thus preventing any fatalities. And Sp4 Robert Carlisle, a medic with the 498th Medical Company, provided comprehensive medical treatment and supervised the evacuation from the crash site.

On April 8, 1959 Mower Barracks (Bldg. 2755) on Main Post was named after Sgt. Mower.

Dr. King's dream lives on today

One of the most emotionally powerful scenes ever documented was Martin Luther King, Jr.'s address to a church gathering the night before he was killed.

The death threats against him were getting more and more numerous when on April 3, 1968, his eyes glistening with tears, King talked about the possibility of his death.

"It really doesn't matter with me now," he said, "because I have been to the mountaintop. And I've looked over, and I've seen the promised land. I may not get there with you. But I want you to know tonight that we as a people will get to the promised land. So I'm happy tonight. I'm not worried about anything. I'm not fearing any man."

The power of that moment lay in King's courage.

Courage is the state or quality of mind or spirit that enables one to face danger with self-possession, confidence and resolution. King showed us his courage by caring so strongly about helping people that normal fears and desires became matters of secondary concern to him.

It's important that Martin Luther King be remembered not as a saint, but as a man. It's too easy to sit back and idolize people like him, to say that they were capable of deeds that most people are not capable of. If he had thought that about Thoreau and Gandhi, he wouldn't have learned anything from their lives and wouldn't have been able to teach us anything through his own. And King's life is full of lessons.

Wanted to help people

When he began his ministry in 1954, he was offered jobs at two churches and three colleges in the North, and one church in Montgomery, Ala. He didn't think job opportunity; he thought about where he could be of most help to people. He went to Alabama.

King became known in Montgomery for not only his preaching, but also for his advocacy of social reform. He said that religion must care about both heaven and earth because bad living conditions scar people's souls.

A year later, King became widely

"... I still have a dream. It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream. That one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed - We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal."

known when he was chosen by the blacks in Montgomery to lead their protest against the arrest of a black woman for her refusal to give up her bus seat for a white person. The resulting boycott of buses was the start of many reform movements King would be involved in for the rest of his life.

Characteristic of all his social actions, King's efforts even at first were solely dedicated to attaining equal rights for everyone. If people took offense to what he did, it was a personal problem, because he never sought to antagonize or seek vengeance.

Believed in human dignity

King knew that he faced a big chance of being subjected to violence by people negative to his crusade for the rights of blacks. But he also knew that violence was not only morally wrong, but counterproductive.

"Our aim must never be to defeat or shame the white man," King told his followers. "Our aim must be to win his friendship and understanding."

King believed in human dignity and he said that true dignity was denied to everybody when equality was denied to some. For the some who were denied equality to turn around and deny others their dignity was a vicious circle.

Booker T. Washington, the black leader who lived in the 1900s, once said, "Let no man pull you so low as to make you hate him." King believed in the truth of this statement and often included it in his speeches.

So King continued trying to make people understand, not concede. The civil rights movement became stronger and more popular through his efforts. Every time it suffered a set-back, he cried for humanity. Every time it won a test case, he reminded everyone that it was a victory for all people and not a defeat for anyone.

Organized a pilgrimage

King accepted his next great challenge in May, 1957. He helped to organize a prayer pilgrimage to Washington, D.C. to demand the vote for blacks who were denied their rights by devious state laws. King addressed 35,000 people in front of Lincoln Memorial.

"Give us the ballot," he said, "and we will no longer plead. We write proper laws. Give us the ballot and we will fill the legislatures with men of good will. Give us the ballot and we will get the people judges who love mercy."

It was still a long struggle from there, but King kept working, braving attempts on his life because that was the price he was willing to pay so that all people might have equality. And little by little the civil rights movement realized progress.

On Aug. 28, 1963, the movement's efforts reached a peak when 250,000 people marched to the Lincoln Memorial to listen to civil rights leaders. It was on this occasion that King delivered his most famous speech.

"I have a dream," he said. "It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream. I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal."

President John F. Kennedy was sympathetic toward the civil rights cause and he pushed Congress for effective legislation to combat discrimination. But before this could be realized, the president was assassinated. No one grieved for his death more than Martin Luther King, but, characteristically, he reacted not with hate or anger, but with sorrowful understanding.

"We are all involved in the death of President Kennedy," he said. "We tolerated hate. We tolerated violence in all walks of life. We tolerated the idea that a man's life was sacred only if we agreed with his views. And so the plague spread until it claimed a warmly loved president. We mourned a man who had become the pride of the nation. But we grieved as well for ourselves."

Won Nobel Peace Prize

President Lyndon B. Johnson urged Congress to pass the Kennedy civil rights legislation. King was present at the signing of the historic bill that went a long way toward making equality real for people in the United States.

King, already recognized and honored throughout the world, won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1964. In his acceptance speech, he said:

"I accept this award today with an abiding faith in America and an audacious faith in the future of mankind. I refuse to accept the idea that man is mere flotsam and jetsam in the river of life which surrounds him."

King knew that for all the progress he had helped the civil rights movement make, there was still much to be done in order for equality to truly become a reality. And he dedicated his life to doing as much of the needed work as he could until April 4, 1968, the day he was murdered.

Housing referral business: find homes

The Department of Defense directed that a Housing Referral Office (HRO) be established at every military installation with more than 500 assigned military personnel in July 1967.

At that time, a complete off-post survey was conducted to determine the availability of community housing for use by military personnel on a non-discriminatory basis.

Although Housing Referral has undergone some changes since its beginning, the day-to-day operation remains basically the same. The original Housing Referral concept was started due to the shortage of military family housing and the need to provide adequate housing in the local community for all service members irregardless of race, color, religion, national origin or sex.

Fort Benning's Housing Referral Office is the service member's guide to the most suitable off-post housing in the Columbus and Phenix City communities. The objectives of the office is threefold: to provide a personalized and convenient service to all military personnel and their dependents in locating good nondiscriminatory off-post housing, to insure that applicant and/or family is quickly, suitably, and economically housed and that such housing is reasonably near the duty station and to provide a central point of contact for all complaints involving off-post housing.

The HRO staff attempts to match the service member's requirements and preferences to the numerous listings maintained on file. Housing Referral service to the service member includes:

- A complex up-to-date listing of apartments, mobile home parks, and private houses available for rent.

- A listing of houses that are for sale by individuals and companies.

- Information and literature on temporary accommodations such as motels, mobile home spaces, efficiency apartment, etc.

- Information on location of schools, churches, shopping centers and other points of interest.

- Local streets map is provided all HRO customers to help in locating HRO referrals, churches, schools, etc.

- Numerous VA and HUD pamphlets pertaining to purchasing homes.

The Department of Defense and the Housing Referral Office here has no intention of displacing the real estate agent. In fact, HRO continues to welcome listings from local real estate firms.

The HRO operations actually enhances a real estate company's chances of gaining customers. All agents whether involved with rental or sale of properties are encouraged to utilize the service provided by HRO. Individuals who have housing for rent or sale can utilize this service whether or not they are associated with the military.

The Housing Referral Office is the starting place for all newly arrived personnel here. Current regulations as well as military orders required the individual to report to HRO before making housing arrangements for renting, leasing, or purchasing any off-post housing and is provided without cost to the service member. Remember, no fee is charged! However, don't get this service confused with the rental agencies in this area who do charge a fee.

Don't store gas

Even though it's tempting to do, remember these words: There is no safe way to store gasoline!

Vapors from gasoline stored in the home or garage can be ignited by a flame, a spark, or even a hidden pilot light.

If you are thinking of carrying gasoline in a can in your car's trunk, don't do it. Gas vapor in the trunk can be ignited by a collision or any type of flame and a fatal explosion could result.

If you absolutely, positively must store gasoline, write to the Consumer Product Safety Commission, Washington, D.C. 29207, for a copy of their booklet "Gasoline Is Made To Explode."

Abbreviations confuse wife

By Rick Gregory

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)—My wife and I just can't seem to communicate anymore.

The problem began when I found it impossible to leave Army language at the office and switch to English at home.

When I came home late one night and told her I had been to a "GI Party", she complained that I had all the fun and asked why she wasn't invited.

One day I announced that I getting "short". She told me it was because the heels on my boots were wearing down.

When I told her I felt like "reupping", she told me if I felt sick to do it in the toilet, I once told her that I had a long conversation with my "Top". She asked me if I ever talked to any of my other toys.

When I dashed home with the good news that I had been selected for the "secondary zone", she wanted to know if that was a spin-off from the "twilight zone".

While I was trying to study for a test on "NBC", she told me I was wasting my time because all we got on television was CBS and ABC.

Worrying about getting orders for overseas, I told her that a lot of soldiers were on "levy". She said she had never heard of the stuff, but it sounded better than being on "LSD".

When I told her that I was getting more "rank" soon, she said she certainly hoped not because she had run out of air freshener.

To get even with me, the first thing she does when I come home is talk about the events on all the soap operas she's seen during the day.

We have finally reached an understanding on the problem without inhibiting each other's freedom of speech.

I bought her a dictionary on the military language. And I faithfully read the soap opera synopses about Bob marrying Ellen even though his ex-girl friend is pregnant and is marrying Bob's father so Ellen's mother can't.

Winter: soldiers' enemy

Weather has always been one of the soldier's worst enemies. The soldiers at Valley Forge, Napoleon's soldiers retreating from Moscow and the soldiers fighting through European winters during the world wars faced this bitter enemy.

More than 90,000 cases of cold weather injury took soldiers from their duty during World War II.

Cold weather injuries are unnecessary. With a little know-how and preparation injury can be avoided.

Frost bite and hypothermia are the worst predators in winter.

Frost bite is when part of the body freezes in temperatures less than 32 degrees. The first symptom is usually an uncomfortable aching sensation, tingling or stinging. Numbness follows if this condition goes untreated. The skin begins to turn red and will later turn pale gray or waxy white.

Frostbite attacks in two stages—superficial and deep. Treatment depends on the degree of injury. If the frostbitten part has been numb for only a short time then it's probably superficial. Otherwise, it is best to assume that the injury is deep and serious.

The best treatment for superficial frostbite is to go inside where it's warm. If that can't be done, cover the cheeks, nose or ears with the hands until pain returns. Place frostbitten hands under the armpits, next to bare skin. Don't rewarm frostbitten areas by massage, exposure to open fires, exhaust pipes, cold water soaks or rubbing with snow.

In case of deep frostbite, don't try to treat it in the field. Get to a hospital or aid station as quickly as possible. Be prepared for pain when the area thaws out.

It's a lot easier to prevent or stop it in its early stages than to thaw and care for badly frozen flesh.

Wear sufficient clothing. Avoid clothes which interfere with the blood's circulation. Tight fitting shoes, socks and gloves are especially dangerous. Keep dry. Exercise face, fingers and toes to keep them warm.

Soldiers from Fort Benning enjoyed a birds eye view of the Atlanta Hawks-Boston Celtics Game, as guests of the Atlanta Hawks at The Omni in Atlanta. Boston won the holiday encounter, 112 to 107 in the last two minutes of the action packed game.

Letter reveals busy holidays

Dear Mother:

How was Christmas? Was everybody there? Did you receive the gift that I sent in the mail?

My Christmas was great. I mean that it was great but not like being home.

Remember I said the Brigade had a lot of activities planned for us. Well they sure did.

It started with a "Special Operation Appreciation," well that what they called it. What the Army did, was take about 75 men downtown to the 1st Baptist Church in Columbus. When we got there the people met us at the front door. When we got inside, the church members entertained us with magic and some music. We even got asked to get involved, we had sort of a sing-a-long. After the show we went downstairs and had some home cooked food and soft drinks. We sat around and talked with everyone until it was time to go.

On Christmas Eve about 40 guys and I went to Andersonville. Even though we didn't get off the bus at the Prison Camp, we did get to go into the little historic town of Andersonville, where a nice elderly lady told us about the place and what it was like during the Civil War. We got to walk around town and visit for awhile. I was glad to get back on the bus to leave, because it started to rain just as we were leaving.

Christmas Day was another thing altogether. Remember how everyone crowds around the T.V. set to watch football? Well the Army got us tickets to the Blue-Gray game.

Not only that, they got us a Police escort there and back. You should have seen it. One Police car, blue light and siren, and eight buses with a wrecker. They picked us up in Columbus, who turned us over to the Phenix City Police Department and then when we left their city limits the Alabama State Patrol escorted us all the way to Montgomery.

They passed us through red lights and everything to the bewilderment of everybody else.

I went to a Boston Celtics-Atlanta Hawks basketball game also. I sat in the stands and was the lone rooter in our section for Boston. Boy did I get some evil looks.

After that we went to a textile plant and were shown how denim is made. That pair of pants that I got Dad may have started right here in Columbus on a cotton ball.

On the same day I went to Former President Franklin D. Roosevelt's Little White House in Warm Springs, Ga. It was an interesting tour.

I had a chance to go to the 'Peach Bowl', but a friend of mine got sick, so I decided to stay behind. We watched a little of it on T.V. but left and went out for awhile.

Well so much for my Christmas. I'll see you when I graduate from training. I know that I'll be able to come home then, before I go to my next unit.

Say hello to everyone for me and give them my love.

Love always,
Yours Son

Christmas leave ends after 14 great days

To any visitor to Fort Benning, the long lines leading into Kimbro Gym might have made him think that a major sporting event was taking place last weekend.

Had they stopped to investigate this phenomenon, they would have discovered just the opposite.

What was happening was not a sporting event, but the end result of a glorious 14 day Christmas leave.

"Operation Return 81" was in full swing as buses, taxis and even Privately Owned Vehicles (POV's) jammed the small parking area. According to an Infantry Training Brigade spokesman, "An estimated 4,400 soldiers returning to Fort Benning, passed through the 'Return 81' site on the way back to their parent units somewhere on Fort Benning."

There to meet the returning soldiers was an assorted group of men who gave briefings and instructions as to what was expected of them as they passed through the site.

Kimbro Gym was used as the focal point to control the massive surge of troops returning from their leaves and to make it easier and cheaper for most of them.

"Operation Return 81" ended Wednesday night when 158 Puerto-Rican soldiers returned to Fort Benning from their home leaves. The operation at Kimbro Gym ended Monday after the bulk of returning soldiers had been processed through the site.

1st Infantry Training Brigade soldiers browsed through the small gift shop during their trip to Andersonville.

Entertainment was part of the special "Operation Appreciation" that some 70 Infantry Training Brigade soldiers attended in downtown Columbus.

AN ADULT EDUCATION OPPORTUNITY

If you are an adult who did not complete high school, here is an opportunity for you to study and prepare for the high school equivalency certificate (GED) in your own home. This series of seventeen lessons and mini-exams was prepared by the De Kalb County (GA) Adult General Education Program. The Defense Activity for Non-Traditional Education Support (DANTES) and your base education office, in cooperation with your installation newspaper, present this series for your benefit.

SOCIAL STUDIES

In 1889, after years of college and traveling throughout Europe searching for her role in society, Jane Addams opened up Chicago's first settlement house, Hull House, in the now-legendary Ward Nineteen. Almost three-quarters of Chicago's population then was foreign-born, and Ward Nineteen in particular was an appalling slum peopled by more than 50,000 immigrants, poor and ignorant of the language, ill-clothed, hungry, disease-ridden and in need of medical attention. Formerly owned by one of Chicago's pioneers, Hull House became a "Cathedral of Humanity" offering education, recreation and sanctuary to the people living in Ward Nineteen—Irish, Bohemians, Italians, Germans, Poles and Russian Jews. Though Hull House concerned itself with bringing to Ward Nineteen such things as basic as sanitation and nutrition, it also, and perhaps more importantly, attempted to raise the social, cultural and intellectual levels of the Ward's inhabitants by providing facilities for the expression of art, drama and music.

Yet it would be erroneous to suppose that Jane Addams and Hull House existed only to relieve the suffering and squalor of the poor. Jane Addams was caught up in the reform spirit of the times, and she was clever enough to realize that the squalid lives of the poor would change only when pressure was exerted against the upper levels of society, against the politicians and the wealthy who constituted the political and economic establishment of the day. Thus, one of her earliest battles was to pressure the Illinois state legislature into passing legislation providing for sanitary standards in factories, limiting the number of hours women could work at night and fixing fourteen as the minimum age a child was permitted to work. Although quickly struck down by the Illinois State Supreme Court, these laws, nevertheless, were an important part of a long struggle that ended in the 1930s with federal legislation protecting not only women but all workers as well.

During World War I, before America's entrance, Jane Addams visited, as a representative of the Congress of Women, the major warring powers with pleas for peace. When the war ended she visited defeated Germany, then facing starvation because of the continued Allied blockade after the Armistice, and as a member of the American Friends Service Committee, she assisted in feeding the millions of starving people in the nation. For these actions she received the enmity of the American people who accused her of pro-German sympathies. However, long after the anti-German hysteria ended, she was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for her efforts to secure world peace.

Her contributions to the betterment of society were enormous. Her simple humanity and faith in people were limitless. Though she was often misunderstood and hated by many who did not wish to be reminded of society's failures, her advice nevertheless, was sought by presidents and world leaders. Though she was never elected to public office or, indeed, enrolled as a member of a political party, few women in American history have had such political influence.

SUBJECT

UNCLEAR REFERENCE

In the lesson on pronouns, you learned that a pronoun takes the place of a noun. The noun it replaces is called the antecedent. The antecedent must be clear to the reader.

Example: Dad told James that he stayed, up too late. Who stayed up - Dad or James?

Remember to keep the subject-verb-object relationship clear, also.

Example: The beauty contestant who nearly fainted quietly took a seat. Did the contestant faint quietly or take a seat quietly?

BE CONSISTENT

Have you ever talked with a person who seemed to shift in point of view? Example: If you live in an air conditioned house, one should feel fortunate. The subject was you in the first part of the sentence and shifts to one in the second part. It is incorrect to change from second person pronoun to third person pronoun.

SENTENCE UNIT

A sentence contains a complete thought and only one thought. If it contains more than one thought, it lacks unity.

Example: The Smiths have excellent vegetables and he is a farmer. The Smiths could have excellent vegetables from the market. Farming is Mrs. Smith's profession.

PARALLEL CONSTRUCTION
Always use the same grammatical form.
Example: I like reading; swimming and to listen to music. (incorrect) I like reading, swimming and listening to music. (correct)

Sheriff's Target

Over the past few months I have continually emphasized that crime prevention is community business and have asked for your help in making Fort Benning a better and safer place to train, work and live. When we all pull together, good things seem to happen.

During the Christmas/New Year holiday season, 85 families took advantage of the military police offer to check their quarters while they were away on leave. I am pleased to report that each of these families returned to find their houses secure and the content intact. Eight other families were not so lucky; they had their homes broken into. When asked why they hadn't informed the military police that they were going to be away, some indicated that they weren't aware of the service. Others said they did know, but simply did not take advantage of it. The result was a collective loss of more than $6,200.

When people get involved in crime prevention, the crooks just don't have a chance. An example is an incident which occurred in early December, when a soldier at Kelley Hill heard the sound of glass breaking in the vicinity of an Exchange concession.

Col. Ward Provost Marshal

He reported the suspicious activity to a battalion staff duty officer who in turn called the military police.

A patrol sent to investigate apprehended four individuals attempting to break into a storage shed. The quick thinking and positive response of both the soldier and the Staff Duty Officer prevented a larceny that we all would have paid for through higher prices.

Another example occurred just before the Christmas holidays when the interest and concern of an NCO for a young trainee resulted in the solving of an armed robbery case. The NCO, an E5, noticed a young soldier at the PX Mall who appeared troubled and began to talk to him.

The soldier eventually related a story to the NCO about another trainee in his unit who was attempting to sell a weapon used in an armed robbery.

The NCO contacted military police and what resulted was the positive identification of two hold-up men, the apprehension of one, and the recovery of the weapon used. Again, it was the community involvement that helped solve the case.

Unfortunately, we have also seen the other side of the coin. In our investigation of two separate larcenies during the past month, we have discovered that people living around the activities being broken into were awakened by noises being made by the thieves, but took no action to report them. They just rolled over and went back to sleep—and Fort Benning lost over $11,000.

Which kind of citizen are you? Climb on the crime prevention bandwagon! Get involved and help. If you won't, you're part of the problem.

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--Some colonels and lieutenant colonels should take note of the date Feb. 1, 1981. That's the date applications for the Army War Corresponding Studies class is due to the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center (MILPERCEN), according to MILPERCEN officials.

The War College Corresponding Studies Board is scheduled to meet in April 1981 to select officers for attendance in the academic year 1981/83 Class. According to officials, about 132 officers are picked to attend the two year course. Students under the program attend a Resident Mid-Course and End-Of-Course phase held at the War College, Carlisle Barracks, Pa.

Eligible officers are colonels and lieutenant colonels who would have completed 15, but not more than 25 years of service by July 1, 1981. Officials said applications should be addressed to the appropriate MILPERCEN Career Management Division, 200 Stovall St., Alexandria, Va. 22332. Applications must arrive by Feb. 1, 1981.

According to MILPERCEN official, officers who graduate from the Corresponding Studies Course are awarded a Military Educational Level (MEL) code of one. This allows Corresponding Studies graduates to compete equally with graduates of the Resident Course for assignments requiring Senior Service College graduates. Officials offer there is no other Senior Service College Level Nonresident Course that qualifies for a MEL code change.

The names of officers selected will be announced in June 1981, officials comment.

INFANTRY HALL

"Working with these young folks is super. It's a lot of fun working with them. It's amazing what these young folks can do" . . . Harley Nolden, Band Director.

Beating drums set the tune for the band.

Colonial Band 'dream' becomes reality

By Tom Sabel
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It began in the mind of one man who had a dream of forming a fife and drum corps. It ended with a nationally recognized marching band.

The Colonial Band of Explorer Post 76, Fort Benning, is the culmination of the dream of retired Maj. Bill C. Drollinger, who was its director until May 1980. The band is currently directed by Harley Wolden.

The open membership of the band attracts young people between the ages of 13 and 18. The first criteria of any aspiring band member is a love of music. A working knowledge of music and a musical instrument are also necessary.

The band began in 1975 as a fife and drum corps in anticipation of the 1976 Bicentennial celebration. This is when the group took on the motif of a colonial unit. According to Marlene Lehman, spokesman for the Colonial Band, the band members make their own uniforms. The patterns for the uniforms duplicate the minutemen's as closely as possible. "This can lead to some problems because some of the material for the uniforms is no longer being made," she said. Fortunately they still have an adequate supply, she added.

Give the band every inch

"The kids give the band every inch," said Mrs. Lehman. "When we marched in last year's Mardi Gras in New Orleans it was cold and windy, the temperature dropped from 36 degrees to the low 20's while they were marching. That didn't stop them as they marched the entire five miles without skipping a beat."

"I never thought I would appreciate the sight of a green Army bus. But after I finished marching along the route with those kids at the Mardi Gras I came to love the sight of that bus," she added.

Part of post Scouting

As part of the scouting program here, the post provides them with buses for their trips. "But that's all, just the buses. We have to provide fuel for the buses, insurance, qualified drivers and take care of any mechanical problems that should happen on the trip," she explained.

Learn signs of hypothermia

You know it's cold outside but the thermometer is above freezing. What the heck, you can't freeze to death so why worry about it. While you may not freeze, you could become the victim of another of winter's killers— hypothermia.

Hypothermia is the medical term for lowered body temperatures, caused by exposure to the cold. Hypothermia can be aggravated by wetness, wind and exhaustion. When hypothermia strikes, the body cannot produce heat as quickly as it is lost. If a person's internal body temperature drops below 78.6 degrees the person will die.

As the body temperature drops, the body shows symptoms of hypothermia. The first symptom is intense and uncontrollable shivering. Simple tasks become difficult. As the body temperature continues to drop the violent shivering continues. Speech becomes difficult, thinking sluggish and amnesia begins to set in.

When the body temperature falls between 90 and 86 degrees shivering stops and the muscles become rigid. Muscle coordination is affected, producing erratic jerky movements. Thinking becomes less clear making comprehension of the situation dull. Amnesia may be total at this point.

If body temperature continues to fall, the victim becomes irrational, loses contact with the environment and drifts into a stupor. Pulse and breathing slow. Further drops in body temperature brings on unconsciousness, erratic heartbeat, failure of cardiac and respiratory control and ultimately death.

Treatment for hypothermia is getting the victim warm to reduce the body's heat loss. Get the victim to a sheltered area. Replace the wet clothes with dry ones. Put the victim in a pre-warmed sleeping bag along with hot stones, canteens of hot water or with another person. As the victim regains consciousness hot, non-alcoholic drinks.

Like frostbite, hypothermia can easily be prevented. Staying dry in cold weather is important. Wet clothes lose 90 percent of their insulating value. Cover the head, neck, body and legs with clothes proven effective against wind-driven rain. Beware of the wind, even the slightest breeze carries heat away from bare skin much faster than still air. Wind drives cold air under and through clothing. Wind also refrigerates wet clothes by evaporating moisture from the surface.

While frostbite strikes when the temperature falls below freezing, hypothermia can strike anytime when the temperature is between 30 and 50 degrees.

How About That?

William W. Erbach, Sr.
Engineer Group Chaplain

As we sit today surrounded by the remnants of what was a wonderful Christmas, with its gifts and fun and visitors, with its toys and laughing and good food, I look at all the junk that is piled at the trashcans-the junk, litter and leftovers.

It really makes me pause and ponder about those gifts that generate so much clutter. I think of all the waste that went into making things look "nice" or go "well". It really amazes me how far we have come from simplicity of the gifts that were even that started this tradition in the first place.

The billions and billions of dollars that were spent to bring a moment of happiness only to have a portion of it end in the trash can. What a waste. Now I'm not leading up to an appeal for the underprivileged this day, my suspicion is that most of you through conscience or good cheer have already responded to the appeals before or during your Christmas shopping. What I am challenging in many ways is the type of gifts that are being given.

A very prosperous business man once asked his executives, "Do you know what I am giving my son for Christmas, this year?" Certainly they were curious what a man who had everything would give his child who had everything, for they knew how the child was indulged. He handed them a slip of paper on which it said, "To my dear son; I will give you one hour each weekday and two on Sunday to do anything you want to. Love Dad." How About That?

That is a gift the like of which has no price tag and very little waste. Sometimes I believe that the best things in life are free. What gift did you give or possibly receive that will truly last beyond the tarnish or the batteries. God gave us a gift of a Son.

Sweet memories

Gone but not forgotten for their combined 90 years of government service are, left to right, Jack Sanders (who was a senior auditor for Director Research and Management Division), Marcia Wolfe (management analyst, DRM) and Otto Chitwood (senior budget analyst, DRM). They all retired recently with 30 years of service each. Here, they enjoy a special reception held in their honor.

Ignore your soldiers and they'll go away.

The hardest part of a commander's job isn't training soldiers. It's keeping them after they're trained.

Because the strength of the Army depends on those who make a commitment to it. But even the best motivated soldiers need an incentive to stay.

Yet a reason many soldiers give for not reenlisting is that they think the Army doesn't care about them.

In fact, they feel ignored. And when people feel that way, they definitely don't feel like staying.

That's why the job of talking with your soldiers about their reenlistment opportunities should begin when their training does, not when it's too late.

Keeping good soldiers in the Army is as much your job as training them. Let them know they're wanted. Or else they'll go away.

Keep a good soldier in the Army.

Sports

Climb up sports ladder

The challenge is on!

A racquetball "challenge ladder" was recently started and will run through Feb. 28. Contestants will be placed on the ladder in the order they apply. The challenge is free and the top four finishers will receive trophies.

Anyone who would like to try their hand at this journey should contact the Racquetball Center at 5-1474 for sign-up. If players are ready for more, another ladder will start after this one is finished.

Rules for the challenge are as follows:

*All matches will be played at Santiago Gym, Audie Murphy Gym, or the Racquetball Center because they are the only regulation courts here.

*Players will advance by challenging and defeating, or gaining a default from the player challenged.

*A player may challenge any two places above him. Challengers must contact the gyms for reservations for court times.

*If the challenger wins, only the players involved change places. If the defender wins, positions remain the same and challenger may not challenge the same player for one week.

*Challenges must be met in the order in which they are offered.

*A defender must play within three days after receiving a challenge, unless he has too many other contests pending. If in playing these games, he succeeds in moving out of challenging range of contestants who have challenged him, he need not play them.

*There is no acceptable excuse, except military commitment, for failure to play within the time limit, he must forfeit.

*All results must be called in the next working day.

*The player at the top of the ladder at the end of the competitive period is the winner.

*All matches will consist of the best of two of three games. The first two games will be 15 points and the third game, 11 points. The winner must only win by one point. If time expires and the game is not completed, players must reschedule the match and replay only that game from the start.

No basketball losses so far

Headquarters Company, Headquarters Command, remained undefeated in Company level basketball league action by edging out a 33-30 win over the United States Army Infantry Board (USAIB) team, Monday night at Audie Murphy Gym.

Both teams kept the ball moving and featured good defensive play to account for the low-scoring game. Headquarters came out on top at the half with a 16-12 score

High-scorers for Headquarters were Rick Miles and Van Green with eight points each. Jose Clemente and Earl Mitchell added six and David Jones put in five.

Larry Riley dominated the boards, dropping in a game-high 12 points for USAIB. Joe Foreman added five and Charles Williams and Madison Evans squeezed in four each.

Learn judo: get back in condition

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Thinking about getting back into shape but hate the thought of running endless miles or spending money to do it?

Well, how about something different that will give good results while enabling a person to learn self defense? Free judo classes will start again here Monday. The classes will at Kimbro Gym on Sand Hill every Monday and Wednesday from 6:30 to 8 p.m. All military personnel, Department of the Army civilians and dependents are welcome to participate. Dependents should be at least nine-years-old.

Warm-ups essential

Instructing the classes will be Phil Van Trese, who holds a fourth-degree-black-belt in both Judo and Karate and a third-degree-black-belt in Aikido, another martial art. The 34-year-old staff sergeant, assigned to Headquarters, Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, has been teaching martial arts for 19 years. He won a Bronze Medal in the Pan American games in 1973 and a Silver Medal in the World University games the same year.

"I've never to pay for a class before, so I don't feel I should charge others to teach what I know," said Van Trese. "Besides a lot of people just don't have the money and don't get a chance very often to get much for free anymore."

Teacher for 19 years

No experience is necessary, according to Van Trese and participants will be briefed on what they'll be doing and what is expected of them. "I can handle between 20-30 people at a time," he said. "If I get more, the classes can be split up." The classes will include a lot of exercising, since warm-up is a must, according to Van Trese. Instruction will also go a little into other martial arts. Loose clothing should be worn and T-shirts are not advisable, said Van Trese. Sweatshirts would be more appropriate.

Anyone interested should come by Kimbro Gym while classes are in progress to sign up. Spectators are welcome to see what they're getting into or just to watch.

'Darlings' worth seeing

By Bill Powell
 WFBG Broadcast Journalist

Quite a few years ago when the only flesh you saw in a movie was a tantalizing slight view of a neck with a high collar, a movie title like "Little Darlings" would have sounded to be on a par with "Little Women" and "Mrs. Miniver." If "Mrs. Miniver" had gotten a peek at "Little Darlings" she probably would have passed out or swooned. I believe that's the term they used then.

The subject matter of "Little Darlings" is kind of out of the ordinary. The whole movie centers around teenaged girls going to summer camp. Kristy McNichol is a hard-talking, street-wise girl not really interested in males. She's going to camp because her mother feels it's best for her. Tatum O'Neal portrays a spoiled commercial actress who always does big talking about her love life; one thing leads to another and Tatum and Kristy's characters are in a contest to see who loses her virginity first.

the camp counselor and Kristy's character tries to lose her's to a boy at the camp across the lake.

I continued watching the movie to its inevitable conclusion and kept asking myself if the idea was far-fetched. The answer was probably not as far-fetched as it sounds. My biggest fear was that parents might bring their kids despite the richly deserved "R" rating and get copycat ideas. Especially with such well-known and admired teen stars as McNichol and O'Neal.

I felt the acting was very true to life and a lot of credit should go to both the actors and the director. It deals in a very straightforward manner with a very difficult subject and gets to the heart of a matter probably a lot of girls have trouble with. My advice to parents is if you think your teenager is mature enough to handle the subject matter take them. If not go yourselves and take a look. It gives a contemporary look at society as it exists today. As to whether one, or both, or either for that matter, wins the contest you'll have to see for yourselves. I give "Little Darlings" 3 and 1/2 stars. 1/2

Benning's W-2s expected Jan. 28

Anxiously awaited W-2 Forms will be distributed to local units on January 28, for military personnel.

Capt. Dennis Saylor, Chief of the pay and exam branch here, emphasized safeguarding the forms because "the local finance office cannot make up another W-2 if one is lost. We are prohibited from reissuing or even correcting an incorrect one," he said. "If someone loses a form or if one is incorrect another one must be requested. Requests go through unit commanders or PSNCOs to the local finance officer for forwarding to the Finance and Accounting Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. It will take at least two to four weeks to receive another one," he concluded.

Never leave child unattended

By Tom Sabel

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The mother planned on being gone only a few minutes, a quick errand to the commissary. Her four-year-old son, Sean, was sleeping peacefully.

She was relieved, he was finally sleeping, his week-long bout with the flu had kept him awake most of that time. The commissary lines were longer than she had anticipated and it took her longer to get home than she had expected. She was starting to worry; she didn't like to leave Sean alone for very long.

She put the groceries on the counter and went to the back bedroom to check on him. He was still in bed. "Sean," she whispered. "Sean," she said a little louder. Still no reaction.

When she touched him he didn't move.

His lips were bluish and his skin cold.

"Sean!" she screamed.

Sean was sitting up on the examining table in the emergency room, no worse for wear. "Sean is going to be all right. He just choked on a bit of his own vomit," explained the doctor.

On the way back she promised herself she wouldn't leave her son alone like that again.

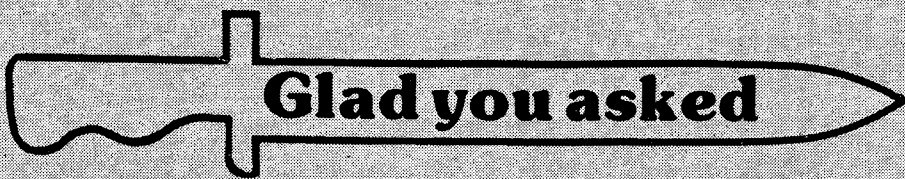

Leaving children alone can be dangerous. In a recent incident here, the fire department rushed into a set of quarters filled with smoke. Fortunately, it was only smoke and not a fire. However, a young child was found alone in the quarters. Through Fate's hand a tragedy was averted — the child was found in time!

The investigation of another fire here showed that a fire which gutted two apartments and damaged several more was caused by children playing with matches. They had been left alone by their parents.

Under USAIC Regulation 210-5 children under 12 years of age should not be left unattended. There are many good reasons for this: Children may not know that playing with matches can lead to death; The bottle of disinfectant so carefully hidden can be found; A sleeping child can become entangled in the sheets and blankets and be strangled, or a child, left alone, could fall down a flight of stairs and lay injured for some time before the parents come back home.

The loss of a child is a tragedy. The loss of a child through negligence is inexcusable.

Glad you asked

How can parents get more involved in their children's education?

Pearl Brakonecke
principal

White School, Fort Benning

Come to the school and talk to the teacher. Read stories after lunch during the children's idle time. Some fathers and grandparents do this now. Give the youngsters a chance to enjoy another voice and personality. This gives the teacher a break. Make teachers aware that you want to be involved.

Blanche Tyndall
reading specialist

McBride School, Fort Benning

Parents should come to school and observe the children in my class or visit their regular classrooms. They can volunteer to help teachers by checking papers or running the stencil machine. At home, check daily to be sure their children bring home their papers and homework. Make sure your children study.

Master's Degree in Education

Show children that life is a classroom and learning is a way of growing—not only for themselves but for teachers and parents as well.

Take an active interest in what your child is learning. Be an "at home" teacher. Read with your youngster. Take them to museums. Apply what they've learned in class to daily life.

Help your child develop his or her potential. If you nurture the learning process, a child has the opportunity of becoming a beautiful butterfly instead of a timid caterpillar who lost his or her chance because of an inactive or uncaring parent.

William Watson
assistant principal for instruction
Spencer High School

Parents should talk with their children about the subjects they learn in class. They should find out what's going on at school. Become involved.

Parents and children don't seem to communicate and when the channels are blocked, problems arise. Parents should keep in touch with the education process. There must be a state of awareness as to what their children do in school.

Rupert Nunally
principal

Wilbur School, Fort Benning

Both parents must become familiar with classroom and homeroom teachers. Be concerned, know who they are.

Each day one of the parents should find out what the youngster did in school that day. Ask, "How was school today. Have any homework?" Encourage your child, display his or her drawing on the refrigerator. Say, "This is lovely," or, "Let's send this to grandma." Show interest today, don't wait until the end of the grading period.

Read to your children and let them follow along. Ask questions afterwards. Help develop their reading skills. If possible, invite the teacher to your home. It gives you a chance to talk on familiar ground. This shows your children that you and the teacher can work together. A long time ago teachers had to visit students' homes.

Visit the classroom or school. Don't wait for a special invitation. Stay around and have lunch with your child, it'll make him glow with pride and love and it's good for school public relations. Watch your child perform in a school project or athletic event. Don't wait to visit until your child has difficulties.

Parents need to show their children practical education. Take them to the market and explain prices, weights and measures. When you travel, talk about the local geography. If your children say that school or a certain topic is meaningless to them, let them know you understand but in time their education will prove valuable: an education prepares them for life. (Mr. Nunally has taught in Fort Benning schools for 25 years).

121st Aviation learns night combat

During hostile conflicts, some combat is bound to take place at night. The 121st Aviation Company is ready for that challenge.

They prepare by training with night vision goggles for flying in darkness and with the M-60A1 machinegun and the M-16 rifle for defending themselves when necessary.

When undergoing night vision training using the goggles, the lights outside the helicopter are turned off and the pilots rely on minimum interior lighting to guide their craft.

CWO 3 Robert McCoy, a pilot with the 121st who has undergone night vision training said, "The 121st initiated training in July to meet aviation mission requirements at night. The modes of the flight have been developed to provide total night mission capability while reducing the pilot workload as much as possible."

McCoy went on to emphasize, "The training began with two instructor pilots and two students per instructor pilot. Our goal is to produce pilots qualified in night goggle use after 23-hours of instruction during darkness."

Flying in the darkness isn't an easy trick to master and, like a magician, the pilot must be aware and able to deal with visual illusions in the darkness. McCoy explained, "The pilot uses his monocular cues in order to properly judge distances, ground speed and the size of surrounding objects."

After completing the preliminary training, pilots begin flying with the goggles. McCoy said, "The night vision goggle is a self-contained viewing device which amplifies light for passive vision in the darkness. Adjusting to the goggles is a challenge for any pilot due not only to a reduction in peripheral vision but also depth perception."

Just because pilots have completed initial training doesn't mean they don't use the gear anymore. As part of the Combined Arms Team, McCoy said,

"We must maintain our proficiency because it's essential programs such as this that enable Army aviators to successfully complete their missions."

The training gives the gunners the feel of flying in the air while firing. This is an important variable when it comes to hitting targets in real-life situations.

WO1 Charles Taylor, a pilot with the 121st, said, "When landing a helicopter in a hostile situation, realistically the enemy is going to surround the aircraft and fire from all sides. Therefore, we would have M-60A1's attached to both sides of the UH-1's. While training, we go with just one for familiarization."

The crew chiefs are trained twice a year for a combat environment since all aircraft in a hostile situation have a need for suppressive fire. The 121st will continue to train in both machinegun fire and night vision goggle areas to be ready for any upcoming conflict. The soldiers of the 121st continue to live up to the Army aviator's creed, "Above the best" under any conditions.

Officers named soon to staff colleges

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--Under new scheduling guidelines designed to improve stability, the recent Command and General Staff College (C & G S) selection board has picked 1,760 officers to attend Command and Staff Colleges over the next four years.

Names of all officers, selected, and designated schools for those officers attending in Academic Year (AY) 81-82, will be released this week, according to Department of the Army (DA) officials.

Officials pointed out that 943 officer students will attend school during AY 81-82; 433 will go in AY 82-83; 398 in AY 83-84; and, 4 in AY 84-85. The Army's academic year runs roughly from August through June, comparable with civilian education calendars.

Army officers selected for CG & S schooling next year will attend one of seven different schools, officials say. Six hundred and seventy-nine (679) officers will attend the Army's Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.; 188 will go to the Armed Forces Staff College, Norfolk, Va.; 24 to the U.S. Navy Command and General Staff College, Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala.; 12 to the U.S. Marine Corps Command and Staff College, Quantico, Va.; 3 to the U.S. Army Supérieure De Guerre in France.

Officials say the selection board picked officers that were within their eight and 15th year of active commissioned service. To be eligible for selection, an officer had to be a promotable captain, a major or lieutenant colonel. All officers within the zone were considered for selection regardless of year group.

Because the Defense Department has placed strict criteria on Permanent Change of Station

(PCS) moves, officials in the Office of the Army Deputy Chief of Staff, personnel, say the length of time at the present duty station played a major role in the attendance slating process.

Officials add that, beginning next year, year group selection for officers in their eight through eleventh years of service will start. Under this system, each year group will be allowed a percentage of the available annual staff college seats. Officers will be considered for those seats against only those officers within their same year group.

During the transition to this new selection system, officers in their 12th through 15th years of service will still be eligible for selection. By the beginning of AY 84-85, the year group selection guidelines will be in full operation and only officers in their eight through eleventh year will be considered for CG & S schooling.

If you have had a child born overseas during the time you have been in the Service, you probably think you have done everything necessary for that child to prove that he or she is a United States citizen. Unless you have obtained a Certificate of Citizenship for that child, you have not, as parents, taken the necessary steps to provide your child with the documentation necessary to show that he or she is an American citizen.

If you have had a child born overseas, you probably have one or several State Department forms reporting the child's birth, or authorizing the child's admission to the United States. These forms are not sufficient, however, to prove American citizenship.

With certain unusual exceptions, if either of the parents of the child is an American citizen at the time of the birth abroad, the child will be a full-fledged American citizen, entitled to all rights a child born in this country would have, since our Constitution states that any child born in this country is an American citizen, the common way of proving that a person is a citizen is by showing a certificate of birth in the United States.

The foreign-born child, of course, will be unable to show such a certificate of birth and, therefore, will be unable to prove his citizenship unless an extensive check is made to determine the citizenship of the parents and whether any of the unusual circumstances are present which could preclude the child's being a citizen even though his parents are citizens.

Born in a U.S. military hospital overseas, perhaps, but. . . .

To simplify proving one is a citizen in a situation such as this, the Immigration and Naturalization Service issues a legal document known as a Certificate of Citizenship. This certificate is the legal proof that the person named thereon is a citizen.

It is important to remember that the child is already a citizen and the certificate merely proves it. This is not a certificate of naturalization, but merely a certificate to prove existing status. The child would still be a citizen even though he did not have this certificate, it would just help him to be able to prove it.

To obtain this Certificate of Citizenship, it is necessary to file an application form, No. N-600, with the nearest Immigration and Naturalization Service Office and pay the necessary fee.

An immigration officer will then make the necessary inquiries to insure that your child is a citizen, and if all is in order, the Certificate of Citizenship will be forthcoming.

A Certificate of Citizenship should be processed immediately because when it is needed it may take considerable time to round up the necessary documentation and the people required to be interviewed.

If the child and both parents are not together at the same time, do not hesitate in requesting a Certificate of Citizenship. There are immigration offices in almost every country in the world.

Some of the purposes for which the Certificate of Citizenship may be necessary are: to prove citizenship to get a passport, to enter a child in school in some states, to receive a commission in the Armed Forces, to secure a Government job, to expedite a security clearance and for Social Security purposes.

Lower air fares to end March 31

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--Servicemembers have until the end of March to take advantage of reduced air fares being offered by several major airline companies.

Department of the Army (DA) officials say the Military Traffic Management Command (MTMC) is trying to convince air carriers to continue offering the 50 percent discount beyond the March 31 expiration date.

Maj. Gen. John D. Bruen, MTMC commander, said, "The response by these airlines is a definite boost to the morale and welfare of military personnel everywhere. We are looking for increased participation to include all airlines, plus an indefinite extension past the March 31, 1981 date."

Presently, there are 11 air carriers participating in the 50 percent furlough fare program. With the exception of USAIR which has no expiration date for its reduced furlough fares, active duty servicemembers and Coast Guard personnel on leave or pass can fly within the continental United States for half price. Officials note the special reduced rates do not apply to oversea flights or servicemember families.

Besides USAIR, other airlines offering the 50 percent air fare discount on a trial basis are Trans World Airlines (TWA), American, Continental, United, Western, Pan American (PAN AM), Eastern, Northwest, Piedmont and Braniff.

Officials explain soldiers traveling on leave or pass at their own expense are eligible for the discounts. Eligible soldiers must present their green identification card to buy tickets under the trial program.

Personnel discharged from active duty whose travels is completed within seven days after the date of discharge are also eligible for the reduced fares, according to officials. They must present their separation orders to buy tickets.

TWA, USAIR and PAN AM offer the 50 percent discount on all domestic routes, while the other eight airlines provide the reduced fare on selected routes only.

"Travelers are encouraged to shop around for the lowest fares," say officials. "There may be other airlines we are not yet aware of which have joined the trial program."

A number of other airlines, officials add, continue to offer a 25 percent furlough fare discount for soldiers on leave or pass.

Some soldiers to get more pay

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--Optional Basic Allowance for Quarters (BAQ) for senior NCO's and certain Warrant and junior Commissioned Officers highlights the military pay and allowances benefit act of 1980. The bill was signed into law by the president on December 23.

Also referred to as the military fair benefits act originally proposed last May, the new law includes special overseas extension incentives for certain soldiers.

Other items in the new law include:

- Increase in existing special pay and new authority for special pay for sea duty, submarine duty and nuclear officers,

- The authority for servicemembers on long operational deployment to save up to 90 days leave time,

- Excludes trailer pads provided by the government for privately owned house trailers and mobile homes from the definition of quarters. Any fee charged by the government for the use of such pads by servicemembers will cover the cost of maintenance, services and utilities, and

- Extends the current term of service for each of the three judges of the Court of Military Appeals to ten years or until the end of their current term, whichever is later.

- DA officials say the new law, which will take effect in January, allows single senior NCO's (E-7 and above) and certain Warrant Officers and junior Commissioned Officers the option of living off-post and drawing BAQ. Previously: these personnel had to live in government-provided quarters if they were available.,

- The new overseas extension incentives called for by the law provided for all military services to pay up to $50 per month for certain servicemembers who extend their overseas tours voluntarily for a period of not less than one year.

In addition, the appropriate service secretary could authorize additional leave time or transportation for the servicemember in place of extra pay.

Defense budget up in 1981

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)—Over $160 billion in federal funds was agreed on by Congress to run the Department of Defense (DOD) during FY 81.

The $160.1 billion FY 81 DOD Appropriations Bill, of which $38.5 billion has been programmed for the Army, was signed into law by the President on Dec. 15, 1980. DOD had been operating on a Continuing Resolution Authority (CRA) issued by Congress in September.

According to Army Budget officials, the DOD money bill includes funds to support the increases in military compensation items called for by the FY 81 DOD Authorizations Bill and the Nunn-Warner Amendment.

The Nunn Warner Amendment to the Armed Forces Personnel Management Act of 1980 called for:

*A 10 percent increase in the Basic Allowance for Subsistence (BAS),

*The establishment of a Variable Housing Allowance (VHA) program,

*The removal of the 10 cents mileage reimbursement ceiling for Permanent Change of Station travel,

*A 25 percent increase in officer and enlisted flight pay, and

*A Selective Reenlistment Bonus for soldiers with 10 to 14 years of service.

The FY 81 DOD Authorization Act includes:

*An increase in the maximum enlistment bonus award from $3,000 to $5,000, and an increase in the maximum reenlistment bonus award from $15,000 to $20,000,

*A new Selective Affiliation Bonus for the Selected Reserve,

*A new reenlistment bonus of $600 for the Individual Ready Reserve,

*An increase in per diem allowance for temporary duty travel for military personnel from $35 to $50 and an increase from $50 to $75 in the maximum reimbursement for high cost areas,

*An increase in the reimbursement paid for moving a mobile home or trailer,

*A family separation allowance for E-1 through E-4 soldiers with four years or less of service,

*A one-year test program of increased educational benefits,

*In the CHAMPUS program, coverage for routine infant medical care and an increase in the maximum coverage for handicapped dependents.

*Discretionary authority for the Secretary of Defense to offer up to four months basic pay as a continuation bonus for pilots with six to 18 years of service, and

*An 11.7 percent increase in basic pay, BAS and Basic Allowance for Quarters for service-members.

A major item in the Appropriations Bill allows DOD to start a paying Mileage Allowance in Lieu of Transportation (MALT)-Plus program. According to officials, MALT-Plus would provide military travelers with $35 a day plus pay seven cents a mile for travel. Major procurement and research and development items funded by the FY 81 money bill include:

*Almost $1.1 billion for buying 569 XM-1 Abrams tanks,

*Money for 300 Infantry/Calvary Fighting Vehicles,

*352.3 million for production of 80 UH-60A Black Hawk helicopters,

*448.7 million for low rate initial production of the Patriot Air Defense System which includes buying 130 missiles and six fire units,

*$115.2 million for production of 2,340 rockets for the Multiple Launch Rocket System (MLRS),

*Funds for 17 additional AH-1S Cobra Gunships and modification of AH-1G Cobras to the newer AH-1S configuration,

*198.7 million for the CH-47D (Chinook) helicopter modernization program,

*$369.9 million for buying 600 Roland Forward Area Air Defense missiles,

*$41 million for buying 32 chassis for Chapparral Fire Units,

*$75 million for the M60A3 tank conversion program,

*$140 million for advance procurement for the Division Air Defense (DIVAD) Gun System,

*$14.6 million for Field Artillery Battery Computer Systems,

*$34 million for buying 108 M198 Towed Howitzers, and

*$9 million for buying six C-12 Utility Aircraft. Army Budget officials note that no funds were provided for binary munitions production in the FY 81 DOD money.

Peanuts — A Senegalese Connection

When Papa and Nasi Fall arrived at Fort Benning, it was a lot like being home.

Any weekend when a tinge of homesickness taints the happy hours provided by Columbus, a short ride into the Chattahoochee Valley countryside will turn the tide. Almost all it takes is a peanut field or two to allay the gnawing desire to be home again — and right now.

If there is any one thing that ties the Chattahoochee Valley to Senegal, home for the captain and his lovely wife, it's peanuts — the major crop here and the major crop there.

Capt. Fall is within six weeks of going home, but he won't be going home empty handed. Now finishing the advanced officers course here, it is the last stop on an American tour that has taken him to a half dozen Army posts and several schools.

The nearest like home, on the western tip of Africa, is Fort Huachuca, he says. The climate, the flora and the fauna more closely approximate Senegal than any of the other posts at which he has been stationed.

But both Papa and Nasi will go home with a special remembrance of Fort Benning. Not only will it have provided the educational material for a rising young captain in the Senegalese Army (about a division of troops), but Nasi will be carrying back the expertise of western coiffure styling.

For several months she has been studying under William South and honing her natural talents. Reports on her efforts only start at outstanding.

Both Capt. Fall and his wife speak an English that is pure delight to the ear. The accents, a mixture of Senegalese and French, reveal his birth place in Senegal — St. Louis, not the harsh Saint Louis to which we have grown accustomed, but the soft Senn Louiee of the French.

Capt. Fall is a veteran, already, of 14 years service in the Senegalese Army, protector of his country that has been independent from the paternalistic France for 20 years.

While the captain will go wherever he is stationed in that country of more than five million people (about the same as Georgia) living in 76,124 square miles (half again as big as this state.), Mrs. Fall will be opening up her own beauty shop in Dakar, the capital city of 600,000.

Hers won't be the only shop in town, but she hopes that she will be able to boast of the latest styles — not from Europe, but from the United States.

With almost two years in the United States behind him, except for a 30-day trip home midway through his tour here, neither Capt. Fall nor his wife would venture a guess on what they will be remembering the most one, five or 10 years from now.

They may not venture a guess, but the chances are good that tops among the good memories will be those of Fort Benning, Columbus and the Chattahoochee Valley.

One thing is almost sure, we all are better for having been able to host them during a part of their stay in this country.

William South, owner of a local beauty shop, shows Nasi Fall how to properly set Lenora Smith's (a customer) hair. Fall is the wife of Capt. Papa Fall, an allied officer from Senegal, Africa, who is presently a student of the Infantry School here.

Army updated in 1980

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)—Last year saw many changes in the U.S. Army, primarily because of renewed public interest in American defense capabilities, concern over world events, and programs and initiatives on the part of the Army Chief of Staff (CSA). In addition, the Army embarked on a concerted effort to equip and modernize its force for the decade of the 80's and beyond.

In January 1980, world events which concerned soldiers had Americans being held hostage in Iran, Soviet soldiers in Afghanistan, the American dollar losing exchange value against foreign currencies, buying power dwindling because of spiraling inflation, and the heating up of a presidential campaign which ultimately provided a new administration to lead the United States in 1981.

In early 1980, much public concern and various congressional actions focused on the status of the U.S. Armed Forces and America's ability to defend and protect its national and international interests. This increased interest in the well-being of American defense capabilities had a significant impact on individual soldiers and their families.

New and technically advanced machinery and equipment became very visible during 1980. In February, the Army announced its decision to buy 100 infantry and armored cavalry units. The (IFV/CFV) to upgrade its mechanized infantry and armored cavalry units. The IFV/CFV, scheduled to come off the assembly line in May 1981, will eventually replace the M113 armored personnel carrier now used in those units.

Also in February, the first production models for the XM-1 Abrams main battle tank was delivered to the Army. They were the first of 110 tanks approved for production during FY80. More than 7,000 of the new tanks are planned over the next eight years. The Abrams, according to Army officials, became the first entirely new tank to be produced in at least 30 years and is designed to replace the M60 series of main battle tanks during the decade of the 80's.

Army of the 1980's into a disciplined, well-trained fighting force" in March this "vision" paper served to talk to soldiers and Department of the Army (DA) civilians about where the Army is and where it's going. Meyer outlined the various Army programs and concerns which would be receiving additional attention during the next few years, including the challenge of manning the total force which, he explains is the "major challenge the Army faces today."

Continuing efforts to upgrade the Army's Artillery Arsenal Led System (MLRS) to be fielded in the early 1980's.

The Army's new utility transport helicopter, the UH-60 black hawk helicopter, began extensive operations in exercises throughout the world during 1980. The new helicopter is designed to replace the UH-1 Huey as the primary air carrier of infantry squads for the 80's.

In the area of personnel management, the Army instituted wide ranging changes in the way it assigns, promotes, develops and trains today's soldiers for the 1980's and beyond.

The Skill Qualification Test (SQT) program was broadened to include the majority of the Army's enlisted occupational skills; a new Physical Training (PT) program was decided on and includes a new over-40 PT program; new officer evaluation reports were being used along with the phasing out of evaluation reports for junior enlisted soldiers; a new soldier support center was established to better support the needs of soldiers and their families; command tours for the company, battalion and brigade commanders were extended to lend stability to Army combat units; unit commanders were authorized to award promotion points to soldiers competing for promotion to E-5 and E-6; the Military Enlistment Processing Command (MEPCOM) was separated from the U.S. Army Recruiting Command (USAREC) to better manage manning the total force; and various other changes which impacted on soldiers and their families became Army policy.

In the clothing arena, many policy changes occurred during 1980. Indeed, the most significant uniform changes involves the green dress uniform Meyer approved a new year-round green uniform fabric to replace the four basic fabrics in the uniforms male and female soldiers are now wearing. The new fabric, a 55/45 polyester-wool blend, is expected to be available in the Army supply system by late 1981.

In another uniform development, the new camouflage fatigue uniforms will be issued to new soldiers for the first time starting in September-October 1981. The camouflage fatigues, which will be made from a 50/50 nylon cotton blend, are scheduled to replace the wash and wear fatigues now issued. In addition, the new fatigues will come with an infrared resin treatment which will reduce soldiers' vulnerability to infrared detection devices. A modified, ranger-style camouflage patrol cap will replace the current "baseball" cap to go with the new fatigue uniform.

Two other significant uniforms-decisions were made by the CSA during the latter part of 1980.

The beret-wear issue for Airborne soldiers was settled in November when Gen. Meyer approved the maroon beret for "members of all airborne units on jump status." Meyer postponed his "decision on the headgear for soldiers in other units" until a later date.

Black shoulder marks (boards) for NCO's was approved for wear.

Hops: inexpensive way to fly

An economical way to travel in the military is to take military hops. Fort Benning has hops going out frequently to locations all over the United States. Soldiers are welcome to fly along them at no charge. However, dependents aren't.

If you are going to fly on a military hop, check the schedules that appear in the BAYONET and then call the Operation Desk at Lawson Army Air Field to confirm the dates and time. The Operation Office also advises that soldiers wanting to fly check back two days before the scheduled take-off date to insure that the flight hasn't been cancelled.

If soldiers take hops they can plan leave in advance around the date the flight is scheduled. Although the Operation Office can tell you when a flight is leaving, they aren't aware of when another hop will be coming back to Fort Benning. However, once the soldier arrives at the destination they can check for hops returning to this area.

Identification cards, dog tags and a copy of your leave, pass or orders are needed to board a flight. Also, Class A's must be worn on all flights.

Flights leaving in the future include:

- Rickenbacker Air Force Base, Ohio Jan. 24
- Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala. Wednesday
- Oklahoma City, Okla. Friday
- Pope Air Force Base, N.C. Jan. 29

Army looking for qualified linguists

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--If you're good in speaking different languages, then the Army Linguist Program may be just the opportunity you've been looking for.

According to officials at the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center (MILPERCEN), the Army needs enlisted people qualified in a variety of languages. These languages include Chinese-Mandarin, Czech, Polish, Arabic and Turkish, among others.

The Army Linguist Program, officials say, is mostly voluntary although some soldiers could be selected for linguist duty if Army requirements cannot be filled.

In order to qualify for language training, interested enlisted soldiers should not be on overseas assignment orders and must have a score of 89 or higher on the Defense Language Aptitude Battery (DLAB) or a score of 18 or higher on the Defense Language Aptitude Test (DLAT).

Soldiers who are selected for training go to the Defense Language Institute (DLI) Foreign Language Center, Monterey, Calif. Officials say basic course lengths range from 24 to 46 weeks, depending on the language to be taught.

The DLI is able to teach 50 different languages divided into four language groups: Romanic-Germanic, Asian, Slavic and Middle East-Southern Europe. Officials say the Institute is equipped with the latest in audio visual training aids, closed circuit television and laboratory facilities.

DLI graduates are awarded the additional skill identifier "L" and assigned to one of 5,000 linguist positions worldwide. Officials comment normal initial duty hours on completion of training are for a minimum of 12 months.

Other languages for which linguist opportunities are available include Russian, Japanese, Dutch, Greek, Flemish, Swedish, Spanish-American, French, Chinese-Cantonese, Arabic-Saudi, Spanish-Castilian, Hungarian, Korean, Arabic-Egyptian, Persian-Farsi, Persian-Afghan, Serbo-Croatian and Danish. Other positions are open for Finnish, Portuguese-Brazilian, Tagalog, Indonesian and Portuguese-European linguists.

Enlisted soldiers interested in language training should check with their local military personnel offices for more details. Request for language training are sent to DA, MILPERCEN, ATTN: DAPC-EPT-S, 2461 Eisenhower Ave., Alexandria, Va. 22331, as outlined in AR 611-6 and DA Pamphlet 600-8; officials say.

"WHEN YOU'RE A CIVILIAN AGAIN, AN EXTRA $1,300 A YEAR SURE COMES IN HANDY."

"I got out of the Army in February of 1977, right when all the prices were going up. Food. Clothing. Gas. You name it and it went up.

"Fortunately, when I was out-processing, someone asked me if I wanted to make some extra money with a local Army Reserve unit, and I said yes.

"It's good I joined right away, because it took me a couple of months to find a good full-time job.

"Even with a regular job, the extra $1,300 I earned with the Reserve came in handy. It was the difference between barely making ends meet and being able to put a little money away.

"By going direct from Active into the Reserve, I was also able to keep my rank of E-4. I'm now an E-5, pulling in over $1,600 a year. Not bad for a weekend a month and two weeks annual training.

"I'm also taking advantage of some other benefits. I buy a lot of my auto supplies at the PX. I carry low-cost government life insurance through the Reserve. I also think the retirement package is a good deal.

"A side benefit that's helped me is the additional training I've picked up in the Reserve. I was an MP on active duty but have become an Accounting Specialist in the Reserve. Right now, that's helping me with the business degree I'm working toward at a local college.

"So I can recommend the Army Reserve to anyone coming off active duty. The extra income is good, and it's nice being with people who can appreciate what you achieved in the service."

Sheriff's Target

Recently, two soldiers were walking back to Fort Benning after a night out on town.

Two males driving a civilian car stopped and offered to sell the soldiers some marijuana. They indicated that they did not have any money with them. The two soldiers were then driven down a dirt road across from the Hideaway Club in Kelley Hill. They were told to give up their wallets. When it was discovered that their wallets were empty, the driver of the car threatened to kill them and leave them in the woods if they did not come up with some money.

The two soldiers were then searched—pockets, socks, and shoes. Knowing that they did not have any money and to prevent possible harm, one of the soldiers told the driver they knew someone back in their unit that they could sell marijuana to. Upon arriving at the unit, the two soldiers reported the incident to the company CQ who called the battalion Staff Duty Officer. The MP's were then notified and the two men were apprehended. Marijuana was found on both the subjects and in the car. The driver of the car was tried by general court-martial and convicted of kidnapping and attempted robbery. He was sentenced to confinement at hard labor for 21 months, forfeiture of $250 for 21 months, reduction to E-1, and a Bad Conduct Discharge. His partner, who was a civilian, will be prosecuted in the civilian courts.

There were 49 robberies of soldiers on and off the installation last year. Of the 49 robberies, 23 started with a service member accepting a ride from someone he or she didn't know. The point is clear; accepting a ride under these conditions is dangerous. When asking for directions or if someone asks directions of you, do not get too close to the car. If you must obtain or accept a ride from a stranger, ask his or her destination before telling yours. Don't go with a strange group of people that outnumbers you or your friends. Remember, besides being unauthorized, HITCHHIKING IS DANGEROUS.

As part of the post wide program to decrease crime and recover stolen property here, a list of identifiable property will be published in the BAYONET from the Provost Marshal's Office weekly. The items listed have been stolen for two weeks. If you have any information, please call the Military Police at 545-5222/5223.

Leaded gas in '81 GM cars OK

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)—General Motors (GM) 1981 automobiles equipped with emission control systems will now be allowed to re-enter the U.S. after use overseas, say Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) officials.

It was originally thought the use of leaded gas in these models would damage the Computer Command Emission Control System which would costly to replace. According to GM, these fears have been eliminated. The cars will meet Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) standards for return to the continental U.S.

However, GM recommends the removal of the catalytic converter its pellets from a 1981 model vehicle before using the leaded gas most often available overseas. Leaded gas will cause damage to the converter which is part of the emission control system. Upon return to the U.S., the converter or pellets, along with a new exhaust oxygen sensor must be re-installed. The cost will be about $50, GM officials have informed AAFES.

The warranty provisions will not be affected in any way by the use of leaded fuel overseas.

Orders for Germany mean future of travel, training, constant readiness

First Armored Division Infantrymen get a first hand look at an East German Honor Guard at the Russian Eternal Flame Memorial in East Berlin.

By Mike Ungar
Special to the BAYONET

Editor's note: Captain Wayne Sabo, Department of Tactics, gives a three hour briefing to Officers and Non-commissioned Officers attending the Officer Advanced Course, Officer Basic Course, and the Advanced Non-commissioned Officer Course with assignments for Europe. Much of the information within is based on an interview with him. The opinions are those of Captain Sabo and the author.

Many soldiers will receive orders for Germany within the next few months. Over one third of the United States Army is in Europe. For many, this will be their first tour in Europe; others have served there before. Each individual's experience will be unique depending on their unit, commander, and communities near their installations.

Compared to the United States, the military training in Europe is as good or better. Most units train in cycles, sometimes called the "XYZ" cycle.

The "X" cycle is unit field training. During the "X" cycle, the unit may travel to a local training area or one of the three major training areas: Grafenwoehr, Wildflecken, or Hohenfels. Field training exercises (FTX's) are also run periodically throughout the year during this cycle. FTX's many times take place on the German countryside.

The "Y" cycle is individual training. This includes Skill Qualification Testing and review, Expert Infantryman Badge qualifications, and other individual tasks.

The "Z" cycle is commonly referred to as "guard" detail. During this cycle the soldier can expect to pull guard duty, post clean-up, and other support details.

A tour in Germany also gives soldiers the opportunity for some specialized training. The Platoon Confidence Course at Bad Tolz and French Commando School at Alt Breisack are two examples of platoon sized training not available in the states.

Germany also has one of the best Military Operations on Urbanized Terrain (MOUT) in the world at Bonnland near Hammelburg. Other MOUT sites are situated at Berlin and Hohenfels.

Adventure training is available for those units that seek challenge and excitement. At Berchtesgaden, one can learn kayaking and mountaineering. At Wildflecken, cross-country skiing is available.

Most American units do some concurrent training with the German Army. Partnership training is the name for all facets of this training. One aspect of partnership training is where American soldiers compete for the German shooting medal and German sports medal. Both medals challenge the soldiers' abilities and are authorized for wear while in Europe. American units and German units also maneuver together occasionally in combined exercises.

The soldier should prepare to train in harsher conditions than in the states. The weather never seems to cooperate with the field exercises. Snow has been seen in July at Wildflecken.

The units in Germany have higher priorities than most units stateside and thus are as combat ready as any unit in the states. This readiness is accomplished through more live fire exercises, quarterly FTX's, and newer equipment (most European units already are equipped with the latest version of the personal carrier, the M113A2, and the new Improved Tow Vehicle, the ITV).

The military aspect of serving in Europe is exciting. But living in Europe may not be quite as glamorous unless one plans ahead. The reality of living in Germany is it will be very different than anywhere in the states.

One of the first activities the enlisted man and officer will be required to attend in Europe is the Headstart/Gateway program. These programs introduce the American serviceman to German language and customs, driving in Europe, down proofing, and other topics helpful to living in Germany.

Housing is short at most units in Europe. Most locations have a waiting list for on post housing for servicemen with dependents and off post housing is usually lower quality. Off post housing is also expensive, especially the cost of the utilities. The single person can usually get into the barracks or Bachelor Officer Quarters without much trouble, even though they are overcrowded in many areas.

If one does decide to bring dependents to Europe, the young enlisted soldier can expect to just barely survive on their pay. Medical facilities are sparse and far apart however, there should be little problem finding schools for the children.

The economy in Germany has a higher inflation rate than the United States. This contributes to the difficulty the dollar has on the German economy. The dollar is worth between 1.75 and 2.00 marks. This compounds problems with living on the economy, since German prices are even more expensive than United States prices.

For those Americans who desire to get to know the Germany and the German culture, some units have program called "people's programs." These programs are usually battalion sponsored and give soldiers (sometimes with dependents) the opportunity to travel.

An example of this program might be a trip over a four-day weekend to Garmish. However, several day trips are offered to areas closer to one's unit.

The best way to get to know the German people is to present yourself well to the Germans. The Germans are extremely courteous and polite people as a general rule. This suggestion does not guarantee success with the Germans, but more likely than not the Germans will meet you half way and you will find yourself enjoying Germany.

Finally, once soldiers get orders for Germany they can best prepare for the tour by doing several things.

- The first is to insure that you are in good physical shape. This is true for any soldier going to an unit.

- Second, prepare yourself mentally for military alerts. Approximately once a month, each unit goes on alert. This means the soldier has less than two hours to be prepared to go to war, and you never know whether the alert is the real thing or not.

- Finally, before you leave the states make sure that you have all your personal and financial affairs organized. This means affairs like power of attorney, a will, and checking accounts should all be in order. The soldier should also have between $600 and $1000 extra if he is considering obtaining off post housing. This is to pay for phone deposits, apartment deposits, and other initial apartment costs.

Preparing to go to Europe is no easy task. Army Community Service has information on most posts and Kasernes for those who are curious about the assignment in Europe.

The best advice for those who receive orders for Europe is to prepare yourself both mentally and physically for your stay in Germany. This will increase your chances of having a memorable time overseas.

German customs

Change culture shock to adventure with preparation

By Mike Ungar
Special to the BAYONET

For the servicemember, a tour in Germany can be a nightmare. The people dress differently, speak a different language and have different habits.

However, as an American, the more you can learn about the German culture, the more you will be at ease living in Germany.

The soldier must first be aware that, just as the United States has different customs from North to South and East to West, Germany also has different regional customs. However, some general information is fairly common wherever one lives or travels in Germany.

- Whenever passing someone on the street or in the hallway of an apartment building, it is courteous to recognize them with a greeting. Either "Guten Morgen" (good morning) or "Guten Tag" (good day) are appropriate.

- Just as in the United States, please and thank-you are words which should be used when asking for or receiving something. In Germany, these words are even more important, as the Germans are a courteous people. Please is "bitte" and thank-you is "danke."

- The Germans eat with their fork in the left hand and knife in the right hand, usually never placing the silverware down during the meal.

- The food is carried to the mouth with the left hand. When eating in a Gasthaus (a German restaurant), it is not uncommon to be seated at a table with others not in your party. The Germans use the Gasthaus in smaller communities as a meeting place. Certain tables may be reserved for regulars at these Gasthauses.

- In the United States, the customer usually pays a cashier following the meal. But in Germany, "Herr Ober," the waiter, comes to your table to collect your bill. A 10% or 15% service charge is usually added to the bill, and it is not necessary to leave extra unless you feel the service warrants it.

- Stores in Germany have much tighter hours than in the United States. You will probably find no stores open on Sunday, and if a store is open on Saturday it will probably close by 2 p.m. Stores also do not usually stay open in the evenings past 6:30 p.m. and many stores in smaller communities close for lunch.

- If you live in an apartment house, the tenants may be responsible for the upkeep of the apartment house. The tenants may clean the stairwells or clean snow off the walks on a rotating basis.

- Taking a bath may be illegal after 10 p.m. as well as the playing of TVs and radios late in the evening. To be sure of what you can and cannot do, be sure to read the lease thoroughly. Ask your landlord if you do not understand something and have the Housing Referral Office (HRO) give you assistance in apartment matters.

Background On...

GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC

Geography: The German Democratic Republic (East Germany) has an area of 41,601 sq. mi., not including the Soviet sector of Berlin (156 sq. mi.). Situated on the great north European plain, the nation is bounded by the Baltic Sea, the Federal Republic of Germany, Czechoslovakia, and Poland.

People: With 16,850,000 citizens (including 1,094,000 in the Soviet sector of Berlin), the GDR is one of the most densely populated countries in Europe. The population is ethnically German except for a very small (0.2 percent) Slavic minority.

Language: German.
Capital: While the GDR claims East Berlin as its capital and has set up government offices there, the four occupied sectors of Greater Berlin remain under Four Power (US, UK, France, and USSR) control; the US does not recognize the Soviet sector of Berlin as a legally constituent part of the German Democratic Republic. Other cities: Leipzig (564,306), Dresden

Religions: Protestant 59%; Roman Catholic 8%; no affiliation 32%.

Literacy: 99 percent.

Government: Communist; self-government proclaimed under direction of Soviet occupation authorities on October 11, 1949. All effective government control is in the hands of the East German Communist Party. The Communist Party (Socialist Unity Party (SED)) structure parallels that of the official government and most important governmental positions are held by SED members. Nominally the government is a parliamentary one with the Volkskammer (People's Chamber) elected every 5 years. The executive branch consists of the Ministerrat (Council of Ministers) and Staatsrat (Council of State; however, the most powerful individual in the nation is the General Secretary of the SED and the most important decisionmaking body is the Politburo of the SED.

Economy: Gross National Product: $73.1 billion. Per capita income: $4,360. Natural resources are brown coal, potash, uranium, but exports are mainly machinery, chemical products, textiles.

Brief History: With the unconditional surrender of Germany on May 8, 1945, the United States, United Kingdom, and the U.S.S.R. occupied the country and assumed responsibility for its government. Under international agreements, the three commanders in chief exercised supreme authority in their respective zones and sitting as the Allied Control Council, acted jointly on questions affecting Germany as a whole. In 1948 the Soviets repudiated the wartime agreements and refused to participate in the Four Power administration of Germany. After a series of People's Congresses were called in 1948 and 1949 in Soviet-occupied Germany, under Soviet direction a Constitution was drafted on May 30, 1949, and adopted on October 7, 1949. A People's Chamber (Volkskammer) and a States Chamber (Landerkammer) were established; the latter was abolished in 1958. On October 11, 1949, the German Democratic Republic was proclaimed. The U.S.S.R. and its East European allies immediately recognized the GDR; it remained largely unrecognized by non-Communist countries until 1972-73.

Berlin's Special Status: Surrounded by the German Democratic Republic, Berlin was made a separate area under four-power control at the end of WW II. It was the seat of the Allied Control Authority, which was to govern Germany as a whole and the seat of the eventual central German government. In 1948 the Soviets repudiated their wartime agreements and refused to participate any longer in the four power administration of Germany or the joint administration of Berlin. The city today remains a quadripartite responsibility, although the Allied authority (Berlin Kommandatura) can exercise effective control of only the three Western sectors. The infamous, 45 kilometer-long Berlin Wall constructed by the GDR divides the city in half.

U.S.-GDR Relations: The United States and the German Democratic Republic established diplomatic relations on September 4, 1974. Since then there has been a modest but steady expansion of trade, cultural, and other contacts between the two countries.

Know facts before shipping car

By Mike Ungar
Special to the BAYONET

Are you considering shipping a privately owned vehicle (POV) to Europe on your next assignment? There are several important facts one needs to know before shipping a POV at government expense.

First, all personnel grade E-5 and above and some E-4s are eligible to ship their POVs at government expense. POVs can be shipped from a port close to where flights leave for Europe or from a port close to home. The approximate shipping time to Europe is anywhere from 30 days from the East Coast to 90 days from the West Coast.

Before shipping a POV, a rigorous inspection must be passed by each vehicle. All vehicles must have four-way emergency flashers; lights, horns and brakes must be in good working order. Tire treads must be at least one millimeter deep; wheels properly aligned; mirrors and windshield free of breaks and cracks, and bumpers in place. The exhaust system must be tightly secured and free of leaks.

The shipping ports are strict with their standards. The servicemember must be prepared to pay for any repairs that are needed for the POV to meet the United States Army-Europe safety inspections upon arrival in Europe.

If the POV can meet the inspection standards, the next step is to call your insurance company. The cost of insuring a car in Europe may be double the cost of insuring the vehicle in the Fort Benning area. Also, the car may be worth less in Europe than in the United States in the insurance companies' eyes due to more expensive gas, unavailability of repair parts and other factors.

The soldier has to make sure his insurance policy is updated and complete. Proof of this action is needed to pick up the POV in Europe.

Once the car is at the shipping port, the owner should prepare the POV for shipping. Nothing valuable should be left in the car. Citizens band radios (CBs) are illegal in cars in Europe and should not be taken. Car stereos and tape players should be removed prior to shipment to insure they will not be stolen.

Finally, driving a POV in Europe is not like driving a POV in the United States. The Germans reach speeds of over 120 miles per hour on the Autobahn (their version of a freeway or interstate highway.) To obtain a license to drive in Europe, a driver's test must be passed. Europe's tests are much more difficult than our U.S. license tests.

Before shipping a POV to Europe, contact the transportation office in Building 18, near the Post Office on main post. They have all the information needed to ship a POV to Europe and can answer any question concerning POV shipments.

Inauguration site moves

By David M. Maxfield

Smithsonian News Service

When Ronald Regan is sworn in as the 40th president of the United States on Jan. 20, he and the notables gathered on the platform will look out over the sweeping federal city vista designed by Pierre L'Enfant in 1791. It will be a new Inauguration Day view.

For the first time in American history, the inaugural ceremony will be held at the West Front of the U.S. Capitol, with its panoramic view down the mile-long National Mall to the Washington Monument and the Lincoln Memorial beyond.

This will mark a long-awaited switch from the traditional swearing-in site at the East Front. The change will give thousands more Americans than a direct view of ceremonies. At best, 100,000 or so could be crowded into the East Front area whereas an estimated half-million or more will be able to gather on the slope of Capitol Hill and the Mall for the oath-taking and speeches.

Beginning with Andrew Jackson's great day in 1829 when the planners decided to move the ceremony from inside the Capitol to the steps outside, 35 inaugurals have been held at the East Portico. The last was Jimmy Carter's in 1977. To explain why it took so long to move around to the West Front requires a word about the changing appearance of the nation's capitol.

National Mall Cleaned

Quite simply, until the 20th century, the National Mall was a mess. Railroad tracks crisscrossed the area only a few yards from where the next president will be inaugurated, a shanty town once existed nearby and a neighboring redlight district completed the seedy scene.

In 1901, Congress decided it was about time to clean things up and return to the master design for Washington, D.C., envisioned by L'Enfant. But even by the 1930's, the Mall rejuvenation was far from finished. Then World War II came along; and up went rows of dreary "temporary" office buildings that once again altered the intended ceremonial landscape. Through all this, the East Front kept its special honor until the decision to move west was made in 1980.

Since the first inauguration in 1789, presidents have taken the simple 35-word oath of office prescribed by the Constitution in a variety of places--the Senate and House chambers (the last time in 1912), the East Room of the White House (Gerald R. Ford, 1974), on board Air Force One (Lyndon B. Johnson, 1963), a farmhouse in Vermont (Calvin Coolidge, 1932) and, oddly, at Brown Hotel in Washington (John Tyler), following William Henry Harrison's death in office in 1841.

George Washington took the oath on the balcony of Federal Hall in New York City, the first capitol of the United States. By his own account, the retired general was reluctant to leave his Mount Vernon home when called by the nation's first culprit who is going to the place of his execution."

But Washington's rendezvous with history was set. As inaugural historian Francis Russell has written, whether the newly adopted Constitution and its new Congress would endure or fall apart seemed to depend on the general. "Washington was indeed the father figure, more revered and honored than loved familiarly, a republican with the dignity of a monarch, standing above shifting opinions and party strife, a symbol of all Americans."

Bells rang in joy

Congress, meanwhile, had been working on the inaugural arrangements, and on April 30, 1789, a week after Washington arrived in New York, the ceremony originally scheduled for March 4 but delayed for one thing or another, at last took place. "All the bells in the city rang out a peal of joy," a 17-year-old girl reported after the ceremony, "and the multitude before us sent forth a shout as seemed to rend the skies."

The first inaugural address was delivered--not in public as it is today--but behind closed doors to the

The oath taking ceremony in most years has been followed by such optional activities as speeches, parades, gala balls, fireworks and the issuing of commemorative medals. Doughboys win

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Doughboys remained undefeated, edging out a narrow 87-85 come-from-behind win against Fort McPherson Saturday.

According to Doughboys Coach Oliver Green, the Doughboys were hurt by 12 turnovers in the first half which accounted for their weak lead. However, they still managed to come out on top with a 43-37 halftime lead, but fell 12 points behind McPherson at the 9:45 mark of the fourth quarter.

Lyons connected with a long side-shot to tie the score 72 with less than five minutes left in the game and Mack's next two points gave the Doughboys the lead at 3:28. McPherson's Bynum tied the score again at with 1:19 left but the Doughboys quickly scored and never lost the lead again before defeating the "Mack Attack."

The Doughboys will face McPherson again tomorrow when they travel to McPherson. Green said the team's offense will play with a few changes, but defensive play will remain the same.

McPherson's "Mack Attack" team had their troubles too, including five technicals. Doughboys Mike Mack connected on all four of the techs he shot to pace the Doughboy to victory with 14 of his 24 points in the second half.

Harry Lyons was the Doughboy's high-scorer with 26 points, 10 of which were foul shots. Nate Harris added 11 and Robert Thomas put in six for the win.

Without the help of Jimmy Bynum, McPherson may not have done as well as they did. Bynum dominated the boards throughout the game, putting in a game-high 33 points. Rick Donnell and Malcolm Hardman added 14 each.

Green said the Doughboys "came out cold" in the second half which accounted for the 68-56 lead by McPherson at one point. "We weren't hitting the boards at the start, but the last seven minutes of the game we got back on track and remained in total control the rest of the way," said Green.

Fort Benning Doughboy's Nate Harris (r) heads down court while Fort McPherson's Rick Donnell tries to steal the ball. The Doughboys slid by with an 87-85 victory.

Football team needs coach

Although it's the middle of basketball season, football teams everywhere need to get their players prepared for spring training, and Fort Benning is no exception.

The Doughboys football team presently needs coaches for their 1981 season. Ralph Santaliz will return as head coach and says the team will be ready to begin preparation in early February.

According to Santaliz, coaches are needed to handle the offensive and defensive lines, linebackers and defensive backs. "Interested individuals should be aware of the extra effort it takes to coach the team," he said. "To have a successful program in this type of college-level competition, we must have enough dedicated coaches to enable us to stress individual fundamentals that are a major part of any winning program."

record last season which was due partly to a late start of practice, according to Santaliz. "We want to put in more effort this year to get over the hump as opposed to last season," he said. "You need that extra effort when playing against college teams, so coaches should be ready to start with weight training early next month, then spring practice in March and run through the last game in November."

"We are not looking for individuals who are looking for ego enhancement," explained Santaliz, "Rather for those who want to be part of a winning program. This will require a lot of after duty practice."

Santaliz added that three coaches will be returning from last season, which will give the team a good nucleus. However, there are several openings to be filled.

Anyone interested in coaching should contact Santaliz at 545-4178.

Armchair Sports

No coaches, no team

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

What makes a winning team in any sport? Everyone knows the players on the team must know the game, whatever it may be, and be good at it. And it goes without saying that they should be dedicated, with the will to win.

As spectators, people see the basketball go through the hoop, the fullback score the touchdown or the golf ball go into the hole. However, spectators usually don't realize the strategies involved and the number of practice sessions it took to perform the various maneuvers of different sports.

But how do the players become winners? Or maybe the question should be - who or what inspires them to win? Do I have to spell it out? OK, if you haven't guessed, I'll tell you - COACHES.

Sometimes there is an abundance of players for a team, but no one to coach them. The Doughboys football team is looking for more coaches right now without much luck. A team needs a coach, it's one of the most important ingredients for a successful team no matter what the sport.

A coach is the one who instills the key factor of discipline into the players. If he's good he inspires his players to practice and repeat the plays over and over, keeping them in top form.

The late, great football coach Vince Lombardi said, "Winning is the only thing." Although winning may not be the only thing for some people, Lombardi was admired and respected for his philosophy - something that's needed between every coach and his players for success.

A coach should be a motivator for the players and push them to do their best. But he's also a lot more. He's an organizer, a public relations representative for the team and a counselor to help his players with personal problems, if needed.

I'll never forget a coach I had a few years back. During one game, I was running to third base when I was hit right on the head with the ball.

Although it hurt and the coach asked if I wanted to sit on the bench, I kept on playing. It never occurred to me that it could happen again, but sure enough, it did. I got hit a second time right on the head. The coach tried to get me to quit again, but I finished the game.

Afterwards, the coach was giving our team a pep talk and he used me as an example to the other girls. He said, "If this little girl can get out on the field, get hit in the head twice and still try her best, the rest of you should be able to try just as hard."

That really made my day and I told myself I'd do my best at every game I played from there on out.

Coaching isn't easy, but any coach would probably say that the rewards they get from doing the job are worth it. Of course, playing a sport is just as hard, and the benefits just as great. But put together a highly motivated, caring coach with the same type of players, and the team will be a winner - even if they lose.

New player leads the way

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Doughgirls finally added a game to their win column Saturday afternoon rolling over Fort McPherson 60-22 at Briant Wells Fieldhouse.

The Doughgirls started a whole new team this season getting off to a slow start by losing their first two games. However, their play has greatly improved since the addition of a new player, Lisa Myers. She scored a game-high 18-points in the Doughgirls' first victory of the young season.

"Most of the girls just got back from leave, and they were really determined to win this one," explained Doughgirls Coach Perry Graves.

Although McPherson's team was recently organized and this was their first game, they managed to make it through the game without a single foul. The Doughgirls cut down on their fouls and ended with 15, but luckily, McPherson only scored on two of the shots.

Shirley McCoy was the Doughgirls second high-scorer with 16-points and Gail Payton added 11. Team captain Teresa Irwin wasn't up to her usual scoring game, but still put in eight.

Being inexperienced, McPherson's players didn't do much on the backboards.

High scorers were Sydney Shruby with seven and Octavia Hanson with four.

The Doughgirls enjoyed a 20-9 halftime advantage over McPherson then went on to score a whopping 40-points in the second half.

Graves said although the Doughgirls are improving, they are still looking for more players. "We have three openings for anyone who would like to play forward or center and the team could use other players as well," he said. Anyone interested should call Graves at 545-2461.

The Doughgirls next game is tomorrow when they take on McPherson again there.

CSM Floyd "Sonnie" Clark holds on for dear life during the 1977 Saddle Bronc Championships in North Carolina. He took the championship and it was to be his last rodeo ride.

Soldier recalls bronco days

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Yeee Ha! Ride 'em cowboy!

Imagine a crowd of people, their excitement mounting while anxiously waiting to see if the cowboy can stay on the huge bull bucking furiously in the ring.

Picture the man, standing six-feet, one-inch tall, wearing his cowboy garb. Complete with buckskin trousers, hat, boots and spurs, he walks toward the thunderous applause of the crowd. "Thank you," he says in the southern drawl that compliments his outfit.

The next day, the same man wakes up early to put on another uniform. This one's all green but it's worn just as proudly as the other.

Such was the life of one of Fort Benning's top non-commissioned officers for several years. Those were the days when CSM Floyd "Sonnie" Clark was both a professional "rodeo cowboy" and a professional soldier in the U.S. Army. He's still a soldier, presently working as the Command Sergeant Major for the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade but he "turned in his spurs" a few years ago.

Clark still reminisces about the many years he spent as a rodeo cowboy. "Not just anybody will go out and climb on a ton of dynamite," said Clark.

"It's something you really have to love to do; rodeoing isn't easy."

"You can easily get broken bones, get kicked, and some of the mean bulls can hurt you real bad. Besides your joints get jerked so bad, you can get arthritis," explained Clark.

"I only got hurt once riding," said Clark. "It was in 1977 when I won the Saddle Bronc Championship in North Carolina. I came off my horse to take down a steer in the bulldogging event. The steer was coming at me about 40 m.p.h. and stopped dead in his tracks, hitting me with his horn."

"Rodeoing is a young man's game, with the average age between 18-25," continued 40-year-old Clark. "I've taught a lot of kids myself and as you get older, it's hard to watch them outrope you."

The Oklahoma native started out in the Junior Rodeo when he was 15-years-old. He went on to win the Junior All-Around Cowboy title at the age of 18.

Clark has competed in all five rodeo events - saddle bronc, bareback, calf-roping, bull riding and bulldogging. "It's something when you can watch a man come off a horse at 45-50 miles per hour, grab a bull's horns to stop him, then throw him," said Clark while talking about the bulldogging event.

Rodeo riders are a special breed of people," continued Clark. "If someone gets hurt, help is right there. It's kinda like a fraternity."

Clark has competed in rodeos all over the United States and also in Canada. He won the title of All-American Cowboy in 1967, has won three calf-roping championships in Oklahoma and has qualified for the National Finals six times.

Clark no longer owns any horses after a freak accident in 1977 killed both of his. "We were on our way back from Oklahoma when they ate some bad hay and died," he said. "They were like family and it really hurt. I've never owned a horse since."

Clark has been in the Army for 21 years, and happily explains he's done the two things in life he's always wanted to do - being a rodeo rider and a soldier.

First Ladies written into history books

By Rick Kiernan
1/29th Executive Officer

With the death of Mamie Eisenhower earlier this year and the election of Ronald Reagan, Americans are reminded once again of the contributions made by the President's better half — the First Lady.

Presently seven ladies belong to this exclusive alumna association: Bess Truman, Pat Nixon, Betty Ford, Lady Bird Johnson, Jackie Kennedy, Rosalynn Carter, and of course the incoming First Lady Nancy Reagan.

The title of "First Lady" was first applied by British Correspondent William Russell to Mary Todd Lincoln in 1863. Over the years, these ladies were unlike in many ways, but did have a few traits in common.

Each brought a unique quality to their position and even to the office held by their respective husbands. Every schoolgirl knows that Martha Curtis Washington was married to the father of our country, but only a few of her successors are remembered for specific traits and contributions.

Abigail Adams, for instance, was the first wife to live in the White House and the only First Lady to be both wife and mother to a President (John and John Quincy). While many students of distaff history know of Dolly Madison's prowess as a hostess, only a few know that Rachel Jackson (Old Hickory's wife) was the focal point in Andrew's duel of honor to protect her name and reputation.

Even less readers know that Harriet Lane Johnston was a "First Lady" without ever being married to a President! How's that? — Easy. She was the niece of James Buchanan (our only bachelor to occupy the White House) and served as official hostess until she departed Washington in the heart-break of imminent Civil War on March 4, 1861.

Perhaps the most tragic figure to be First Lady was Mary Todd Lincoln. She endured the death of both a son and husband during the White House stay. Her tragedy was in striking parallel to the joy of Frances Falsom Cleveland. She was the only First Lady to be married in the White House (June 1886) and was the youngest at 22 years of age. Mrs. Cleveland also holds the distinction of being mistress of the White House on two occasions. As her husband was reelected but did not succeed himself, she bade farewell to her staff in 1889 and returned happily in 1893 upon his second term in office.

With the advent of the 20th Century, the role of the First Lady gained stature. President Woodrow Wilson's first wife (Eileen Axson) died in 1914 and he remarried Edith G. Wilson who literally was his right hand during a terminal illness the last two years of his term.

Eleanor Roosevelt held the title the longest as her husband, Franklin, won an unprecedented fourth term of office. She was a most supportive wife and later a humanitarian with the Red Cross and United Nation's (UNICEF) Program.

Bess Truman quietly and loyally supported her husband, Harry, as did Pat Nixon in recent times of trouble and tragedy. Mamie Eisenhower was accustomed to the limelight as she watched Ike go from Second Lieutenant in the U.S. Army to the White House.

The forerunner of the new First Lady — politically knowledgeable, tenacious and yet a loving mother and loyal wife — was Lady Bird Johnson. Rosalynn Carter was also of this mold and proved to be a most valuable asset and confidante to her husband, Jimmy. She was strong, like Betty Ford who served as a formidable example to women across the nation and yet even closer to the President as a partner and willing advisor.

First Gentlemen?

How about this consideration? While little has been written to prepare potential First Ladies, even less has been set forth for the man who is husband to the first female president. With ERA and such personalities as Margaret Thatcher and Golda Meir to set the stage, the policy, protocol and precedent for the "First Gentleman" could be a real challenge!

Inaugural events since George Washington's time have centered on a simple, 35-word oath prescribed by the Constitution. Here, Abraham Lincoln in 1861 repeats the words, "I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the Office of the President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

President

combined Houses of Congress meeting in the Senate chamber. It was Jackson, the frontier populist, who moved the ceremony outside in 1829.

The content of the later addresses also differed from Washington's largely because of his unanimous electoral support in 1788 and again in 1792.

Something of a catharsis for the American people, inauguration speeches usually serve as an act of political healing, helping to restore national unity following hard-fought campaigns.

This precedent was established when Washington decided to leave the scene and, for the first time in U.S. history, there was a seriously contested presidential election. John Adams, who defeated Thomas Jefferson, was not personally a popular figure, historian Russell notes, but in his inaugural address in 1797 he dedicated himself to work for a reconciliation of "various political opinions."

Perhaps the most familiar of all words of reconciliation, however, were those of Abraham Lincoln in 1865 just before the Civil War's end: "With malice toward none, with charity toward all...let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's wounds."

Custom revived

Beginning with Washington's walk from Federal Hall to St. Paul's Church for special services, parades have been a favorite part of most inaugurations. Indeed, when Jimmy Carter surprised the nation by walking to the White House in 1977, he was reviving an old custom

Thomas Jefferson, it now seems incredible to report, walked back to his Washington boarding house after his swearing in to receive the citizens who came to call. Later, "to the distress of his fellow boarders," Louise Durbin writes in Inaugural Cavalcade, "Jefferson insisted on taking his old seat at the foot of the table—the farthest away from the fire—at a dinner attended by civic and military leaders."

Inaugural ball

The ball at the end of the inevitably exhausting inaugural day has always been a special event, but its purpose has changed over the past 200 years. During the 1800s, "they were very social, rather like cotillions," Margaret Klaphor, political history curator at the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History, says, but today "they have become political," another reward for people who have worked on the campaigns.

At touch of a button TV airs information

WFBG broadcast journalist

As most television networks proceed into their second and even third seasons, WFBG-TV brings you a few changes and those are minor.

"Reflections on History" is a new series of two to three minute programs hosted by the Curator of the National Infantry Museum, Dick Grube. Each week Mr. Grube takes a look at events in military history and brings them into perspective.

Another program that may be coming in the future is one that looks at your cars and ways to keep it in shape with helpful hints to save you money and costly repairs.

If you like what you see on WFBG-TV or if you have suggestions on how to improve the programming write us at the Fort Benning Public Affairs Office, Building 4, Room 601, Fort Benning or call 545-2201. Following are highlights from next week's programming:

- "Healers in Uniform" looks at health care available to Army personnel as well as research that is being done.

- "Love Thy Neighbor" shows how the local postman applies the Golden Rule to make life better.

- "We Are Women" points out that women don't seek so-called "men's jobs" but seek to explain about the need women have to be a part of a society where stereotyped sex roles no longer apply.

- "The Bridge That Was" tells the story of the destruction of a bridge with explosives by the 36th Engineer Group.

- "OSUT-One Station Unit Training" takes you to where soldiers are trained from Basic through AIT right here on Fort Benning. Consult your BAYONET or Benning Bulletin for times and dates of scheduled programming.

'Close Encounters' rehashed

By Bill Powell
 Those of you who see things move in the sky at night probably can identify them as an airplane, weather balloon or whatever. "Special Edition-Close Encounters of the Third Kind" is for those of you who think you've seen "whatever". This movie is about the world of UFO's or, for the uninitiated, Unidentified Flying Objects. The script is pretty good, the acting is good and the special effects are fantastic.

I do have a warning, however. As good as the movie is it is only slightly different from "Close Encounters of the Third Kind." The only difference is that some material that was left out of the original was added to the special edition. Adding only a tiny bit more clarity to the overall picture.

If you enjoyed the acting of Richard Dreyfus the first time around, as well as the special effects then by all means visit the world of aliens again. If you've never seen "Close Encounters" this version is what the first should have been. I appreciate the ability of anyone who can take something old and change it slightly and try to resell it. But to me as well as many of those who saw the original, this special edition is a "ripoff"-Not worth the additional admission price.

For those who never saw "Close Encounters" I rate this movie "Close Encounters-Special Edition" as Four Stars. However, those who saw "Close Encounters" the first time around, I would rate this movie "R" for Ripoff.

"Let's choose up sides." I can remember back when I was very young on that city street that was the playground and the backyards that were our park, the group of us that never felt deprived because we had each other.

Their was always some shifting of allegiances depending on who was mad at whom. It felt good to be part of that group because there was always someone to play with even when schoolwork, music lessons or vacations broke us up. The thing that I really hated the most was when a boxball or basketball game was called up and someone shouted "Let's choose up sides." I was awkward kid, taller than the rest but all hands and feet and was therefore the last one picked, the leftover, and it always reaffirmed thre feeling that someone would have to be stuck with me.

One never quite over being the odd man out. I've seen it happen even in the grown-up world. Albert Einstein and Thomas Edison both are examples of odd men out. Both failed at school and left before they were finished, at least by worldly standards. Obviously someone failed to see what the worth of these men was. A warning in a sign I read: "Don't be upset with me, God ain't finished with me, yet!" How About That?

The fact of the matter is that even in the adult games we play there is danger when we choose up sides. Bigatry, jealousy, losers, weaker ones, always are produced when we operate that way. We don't have to choose sides if we but take each person as they present themselves and help to find a place in our lives. We need each other and the potential that person holds for us. Each time you turn on a light remember the guy who was an "odd man out" and think about the person you choose to be on on someone else's team because they didn't fit in to your plans. You may be the loser it produces.

Aliens must register this month

The Immigration and Nationality Act requires all aliens in the United States on Jan. 1 of each year, with few exceptions, to report their addresses to the Attorney General during the month of January.

Aliens temporarily absent from the United States during the month of January must report their addresses within 10 days after returning to this country.

Forms I-53, the cards upon which this report must be made, are available at any United States Post Office during the month of January. They made also be obtained from the Department of Justice, Immigration Service, Washington, D.C. 20536 or at any branch office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service around the country. After completing the form I-53, the alien should place a stamp on the reverse side and deposit the card in any mail box.

The Immigration and Nationality Act provides serious penalties for willful failure to submit the report. Compliance with this requirement is, therefore, of importance to all aliens in the Armed Forces having relatives who are not citizens but residents of this country.

A- All closing costs must be paid by the veteran in cash from his or her own resources without borrowing.

Q- How much was the recent education allowance increase and what is the effective date?

A- Chapter 34 and 35 benefit rates

A- You can have the check deposited directly into your bank account. You should contact your bank to initiate this procedure.

Q- I received a letter stating the Veterans Administration has put my education loan in default. I selected the option of quarterly payments; now VA wants payment in full or other payment arrangements. Why?

A- Once an account has been reported in default, it is treated as any other debt due the United States government. The agreement signed was only in effect if the payments had been made on time. Therefore, it is void. New arrangements must then be set up for recoupment of this debt, either by offset, if possible, or monthly payments.

Q- As an honorably discharged veteran, I understand that I am entitled to Veterans Administration medical benefits. Are there any benefits for my family?

A- Your family is not entitled to care in a VA facility. There is a medical insurance program called CHAMPVA available to families of totally disabled service connected veterans.

Q- My brother and I entered active duty prior to Dec. 31, 1976. I was honorably discharged on Dec. 31, 1979, and he was honorably discharged on Feb. 25, 1980. Would we both have the same delimiting date of Jan. 1, 1990, for our education benefits?

A- The final cutoff date for receipt of Chapter 34 education benefits is Dec. 31, 1989. As a result of this, anyone eligible for these benefits released from active duty after Dec. 31, 1979, will have a delimiting date of Dec. 31, 1989.

Top soldier Hawaii bound

A 25-year-old Army Automotive Repairman with only 13 months in service was named Fort Benning's Soldier of the Year and is now vacationing with his wife in Hawaii after winning the prestigious title.

Sgt. Philip G. Johnston is the lucky Army sergeant who won. He is a member of Company D, 197th Support Battalion.

For his wife, Gail Doreen, a secretary for Tom's Foods in Columbus, the trip to Hawaii is especially sweet. "I think this is just great. I've never been on an airplane before and now we're on our way to Hawaii. It's a big thrill for me," she explained.

Johnston graduated from John Dickinson High School in Louisville, Ky. as an honor graduate. After two years of electronic training at Delaware Technical Community College in Stanton, Del. he entered the Automotive Training Center of Exton, Penn.

He entered the Army through the delayed entry program in March, 1979 and was placed on active duty May 15, 1979. Johnston took basic combat training at Fort Dix, N.J. where he was selected outstanding trainee. He took his AIT at Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Md.

For his being named Fort Benning's "Soldier of the Year" Johnston has received an Army Commendation Medal, a three-day pass, an infantryman statue, $100 (from the Ledger-Enquirer newspaper), six nights in Hawaii (a TRADOC award) and a set of dress blues from the Association of the United States Army's (AUSA) "Follow Me" chapter.

Army education program changed

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--Soldiers interested in the Army's education program may be interested in recent changes announced by the Adjutant General's Education Directorate.

Enlisted active duty soldiers in grades E-5 and above are now entitled to receive 90 percent tuition assistance, provided they have less than 15 years of service. The rate for soldiers below the grade of E-5 or those with more than 15 years of service remains at 75 percent, officials note.

To be eligible for tuition assistance, soldiers must be enrolled in an MOS-related course or be working toward a higher degree from an accredited school, explain officials.

Tuition assistance allows soldiers on active duty to work toward a higher degree in their off-duty time and have the Army pay for part of their tuition. For example, if a servicemember enrolls in a college course which costs $300, the 90 percent tuition assistance program pays $270 of that amount.

Also, soldiers participating in the Serviceman's Education Testing Program may be eligible for such entitlements as Loan Forgiveness, Non-Contributory VEAP (Veterans Educational Assistance Program) or the Educational Assistance Program.

The Loan Forgiveness Program is open to both active and reserve component enlistees who are high school diploma graduates, score 50 or above in verbal math on the entrance exam and opt for training in critical skills.

With one arm around his wife and the other holding his airline ticket, this soldier has it made. He's Army sergeant Philip Johnston with wife Gail, and they're on their way to a free trip to Hawaii. Johnston won the trip for his being named Fort Benning's "Soldier of the Year."

Our 52 heroes

By Tim Boivin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If a picture is worth 1,000 words, then the picture of events over the last 14 1/2 months could fill an Encyclopedia's binding. The hostages are not yet home, but they are finally free. For this we, and most certainly they, are extremely grateful.

Questions were raised throughout the Iranian hostages crisis as the television news shows tallied the days up and everyone pointed accusing fingers. Who was responsible for not getting them out in the first place; who was responsible for not retaliating as soon as the hostages were taken, who blew the rescue attempt; who was responsible for the hostages release last minute delays; who, who, who?

It is no longer a question of who but a statement of thanksgiving that fills the hearts of Americans the world over. In the end, despite all the setbacks, questions and accusations, patience did prove to be a virtue. What is done is done, this we can never forget. Now let us unite as a nation to insure that this never happen again and try to pay tribute to the 52 hostages and the commandos who died while trying to rescue them.

A national news magazine ran a cover story recently asking, "Where have our heroes gone?" With the youthful American hockey players tripping over each other in a little New York village in jubilation with soldiers in a desert wanting so hard to drive on to save their fellow countrymen being held in captivity, with 52 hostages being held and still expressing words of gratitude to this wondrous nation in their few letters allowed home, we don't have to look any longer for heroes in our nation. They are right before our eyes and let us never forget them.

The BAYONET and all Fort Benning soldiers welcome home, no longer 52 hostages, but 52 genuine American heroes. We'll never forget you.

Profile soldiers nab suspect

By Tim Boivin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Three soldiers with medical profiles on their legs gave pursuit and eventually caught an assault suspect last week at the Main Mall while other soldiers ducked in their cars to avoid the suspect.

The three soldiers, Capt. Paul Rock, 2nd Lt. Wayne Winterling and 2nd Lt. Rex Williams of the Third Ranger Company were about to get in their cars in the Main Mall parking lot when they heard a woman scream that a man had tried to assault her with a knife. They were approximately 100-meters away when they spotted a man running toward Marne Road.

Rock said, "As we began to pursue the suspect, we saw people jumping into their cars to get out of the way. Wayne saw one E-7 duck into a car when all that he had to do was reach out to stop the suspect or trip him up."

The three soldiers chased the suspect across Marne Road down a red clay road. Twice the suspect turned and threatened them with the knife. After the second threat the soldiers split up, with Rock continuing to pursue while the other two circled back along a firebreak.

Winterling ran along the firebreak to Marne Road, where he flagged down a Military Police vehicle with Sp4s Danny Hutchason and Joyce Wingo inside. As the MP vehicle did a turn-around, Winterling spotted the suspect coming out of the brush along Marne Road and jumped out of the car with a stick he had picked up earlier.

While the MPs frisked the suspect, Winterling said, "I kept waving this big stick around.

If that guy made one more move, I was ready to bash him. Finally, the other two came out and talked me into letting the MPs handle the rest of the situation."

After frisking the suspect and not finding a knife, a search was conducted and Hutchason found the knife about 20-feet from where the suspect was apprehended. The incident is now under investigation and the names of the suspect and assault victim are not being released until the investigation is complete.

Williams summed up the attitude of all three soldiers toward the indifference shown by other people in the parking lot when he said, "For all we knew, that lady could have been stabbed. Here we are, three soldiers with profiles on our legs, chasing an assault suspect, while other able-bodied people are ducking out of the way.

Court favors detection dogs

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--Using a recent U.S. Military Court of Appeals decision as a guideline, military police (MP) here will continue to use marijuana detection dogs in unit health and welfare inspections.

In the United States versus Middleton, the court upheld a health and welfare inspection that used a detection dog. The dog's alert provided the probable cause for the commander to authorize a search of the locker where the contraband was discovered.

According to 1st Lt. Jack Heacock, executive officer of the 139th Military Police Company here, "The decision will keep us at the rate we have been going. We run about 60 barracks missions a month besides the usual dogs that are on the patrol missions."

Commanders request the dogs, decide whether or not the case goes to trial and, Heacock added, "We will continue to work with the major commands on post to implement the programs."

The court stated that the commander (or member of the commander's inspection party, may use all of his senses during the inspection. This rationale extends to the use of a trained drug detection dog as a means of improving his own natural senses, according to Army legal officials.

Evidence found in the course of an inspection is admissible if the inspection is legitimate, officials comment. That is, if the inspection was really intended to insure the fitness and well-being of the unit inspected rather than as pretext for avoiding limitations that apply to a criminal investigation search and seizure.

Moreover, if the dog alerts on a place not included in the scope of the original inspection, the commander may authorize a search of that place based on probable cause. In order to satisfy himself that probable cause exists, the commander must be familiar with the reliability of the dog and be satisfied that the dog has alerted on the place in question. Evidence found as a result of such a search is admissible in court proceedings.

Claymore testing

Checking the electrical wiring of the claymore mine, Drill Sergeant Donald Bailey of Norfolk, Va., points out an area in the testing system that might present problems for Pvt. Charles White, of Minnetonka, Minn. The sergeant is a member of the 3rd Battalion, 4th Brigade, 31st Infantry, 80th Army Division (Reserve) out of Virginia Beach, Va. Bailey is one of more than 100 reserve drills here this week.

Bank no longer accepts allotments

The St. Louis County Bank in Clayton, Mo. has informed the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center that as of Jan. 1, it no longer accepts allotments. It will continue to accept composite checks on the guaranteed deposit program.

The U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center has taken action to stop all allotments payable to the bank. A remark will read on the bottom of the January 1981 LES "Allotment stop requested by St. Louis Bank."

Soldiers will not be notified by the bank or USAFAC. It is up to the soldier to make arrangements for these allotments or payments.

Culture shock

Benning students exposed to Columbus fine arts

Last week a fifth grade teacher, Owen Ditchfield, of Loyd school here, escorted his students on a field trip that exposed his class to the cultural activities and opportunities available in Columbus.

The trip began with a visit through the historic district of Columbus and ended with a tour of the Columbus College School of Fine Arts. In between stops included the Springer Opera House, Bradley Library, Columbus Museum of Arts and Sciences and lunch at Weracoba Park.

According to Ditchfield, "The visits will enrich the art and music instructions the students receive in the classroom. They were exposed to many of the careers that exist in the fine arts today."

The children are dependents of military personnel stationed here.

Susan Cornett is mesmerized by an intriguing statue appropriately named "Dancers on Stilts". The statue is part of the permanent collection at the Columbus Museum of Arts and Sciences.

Bill Cyperg looks at the "girl performing a cartwheel" statue.

Retirees get DEERS forms

By the end of January, all retired military personnel living in Georgia should have received in the mail, a packet containing enrollment forms for a new Department of Defense program.

The Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System (DEERS) is a computerized system to check the eligibility of persons seeking medical care at military facilities.

Retired service members are automatically enrolled in the system but they must enroll their eligible dependents.

To do so, the forms must be completed and copies of proof of dependency must be sent with the completed forms. Proof of dependency consists of marriage licenses, birth certificates or other documents showing the dependents relationship to the sponsor. Copies should be sent forward-- not the originals!

If enrollment packets are not received by the end of January, retired personnel should contact DEERS office at their nearest parent service installations.

Retired Army personnel should contact DEERS office at Fort Benning by calling 545-1793 or visiting building 83 on main post.

Retired personnel living in Florida and Alabama will not receive packets during January. They will be enrolled at a later date.

Trucking on to winner's circle

Everytime Joe Goin sits behind the wheel of his light blue 57 Chevy pickup he feels like a million bucks. Willie Nelson or Paul Newman couldn't be happier with their pickup than Joe is with his.

"I always dreamed of having an old Chevy pickup. I had almost given up ever trying to find one when I drove by a car lot on Victory Drive and there it was.

From the first night that I brought it home my wife and our two girls just loved it. But it needed work. I made some major changes underneath the pickup, with the interior, and also on the engine. The truck is semi-original."

Last week the Columbus Iron Works and Trade Center held a car, truck and van show. Goin had the chance he'd been waiting for. To show the folks what a gem of a find he had found. "I had a lot to do in a short amount of time if I thought I had any chance of winning in the show. With a lot of help from my wife and a neighbor I managed to get ready in time. I entered my 57' Chevy last Friday night. The other show cars had large displays, mirrors underneath, and turn tables. I was in competition with all late postwar pickups, between 1957 to 1972. The judge who judged my Chevy said that if I had only had the original wheels, wood in bed, and back bumper, I would have a real show stopper."

Last Sunday night the awards were passed out. Out of 64 Chevy pickups, Goin's 57 came in second place.

"I couldn't believe it. I sent my application off to become a member of the International Show Car Association. My dream was coming true. Hopefully, I will get a sponsor someday. Restore the Chevy back to the original and go to Las Vegas for the grand show. I plan to enter most of the shows in the Southern District. I guess the people I really have to thank my wife, Lana and my girls, Kim and Kathy, for all the time I put into the pickup." SSgt. Joesph Goin works for the Weapons and Maintenance Department at Fort Benning.

How About That?

By William Erbach
36th Engineer Group chaplain

This may be a crazy time of the year to be thinking about it but the other day I was sitting at the window of my office, just wishing I didn't have to be there. There were so many other places that I could and wanted to be.

As I thought about that my mind wandered back through the years when "Spring Fever" took up a large portion of my afternoons, especially school afternoons. There was also with that a lesson that had been imparted to me even when I was in grade school.

I remember one spring day when the sun was shining, the birds were singing, and the schoolhouse windows were opened for the first time since the cold, hard winter. Every now and then a bird would come and sit on the window sill and be enough of a distraction from what I was doing to move my head and start me thinking of the outdoors.

Oh, how I wished I could have been anywhere but where I was. Oh, how I wished I could be like that bird and just go where I wanted to, do what I wanted to — be free!!!

Well, it was about that time the teacher asked me a question and realized that I, along with several others, were fighting to stay outside the classroom.

Unlike several of her predecessors, she did not fly to the window in rage, rant and carry on about our wandering eyes but said nothing that would in any way compete with our wandering minds.

Instead, she had us all stand at the windows and look out at the birds and pointed out that the birds were not playing but working, looking for food. She explained how the robins, cardinals and sparrows were searching for grubs, for flies and for seeds. In fact, she went on, "I suspect that when they come to sit on the window sill and see all you boys and girls just sitting around doing nothing they think in their hearts, oh, if I only could go to school." How About That?

The grass always seems greener on the other side of the fence. All we are doing is trying to escape reality and responsibility when we believe that sort of thing. No one can ever reach the top of a mountain just by wishing for it. You have to do a lot of hard climbing.

If you come up against a hard problem or something that you don't understand, you have to face it with all your ability and energy. If you need help ask for it, but realize that wishing won't make it so, for "if wishes were horses then beggars would ride!"

Survey

A 100 percent door-to-door survey of the occupants of the Main Post Housing Area will be conducted Feb. 2-6 to confirm occupancy/use of government quarters and to collect data useful to installation management.

Sponsors are requested to make arrangements to be present or have an adult member of the family present in quarters at the time scheduled for the survey. Individual letters will be sent to each occupant and will include a schedule of the dates and times when quarters are expected to be surveyed and a blank copy of the survey form. Applicable portions of the survey forms should be completed by occupants prior to the team's visit. Commanders are requested to insure that members of their units who reside on Main Post are notified of the survey and that they are permitted to be present in quarters during the scheduled time of the survey.

Members of the survey team will be dispatched in two-person teams and will be uniquely identified as described in letters sent to occupants.

Data resulting from this housing survey will be analyzed, refined and used to improve installation management and to survey the remaining post housing areas at later dates.

Civilian awarded

A water landing by soldiers from the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, was one of two quick insertion techniques. In the water landing, soldiers jump into the raft from the helicopter. In the helocast, the raft is dropped and then soldiers jump into the water and swim to the raft.

3/7th troops go waterborne

By Tim Boivin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Some Fort Benning soldiers recently got together in a Chinook helicopter, gathered near the rear exit, and one by one jumped out, yelling, "Waterborne! Waterborne?"

"Yes, waterborne," said Capt. Joseph Parker of the Combat Service Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade. "It was one of the finishing touches to a two-day exercise during which we conducted an air mobile assault exercise and the next day practiced field expedient river crossings and air mobile and search.

Parker went on to say, "The 1st Battalion, 21st Aviation from Fort Campbell, Ky. provided the Chinooks so we could get some training with heavy helicopters. Included in this was a water landing.

"During a water landing, a Chinook comes within a few feet of the water, a rubber raft is dropped in the pond and the soldiers jump into the raft and paddle to shore."

In addition to the water landing, Parker continued, "We did some helocasting, which is another quick insertion technique. The helicopter swoops to the water, the raft's pushed out, the soldiers jump out into the water and swim to the raft before paddling to shore."

Parker explained the reasoning behind the training by saying, "Both insertion techniques are good for places where the helicopters can't land or look for a place to land, like the jungle. Instead, we can hover over a body of water and land troops into combat situations."

1/21st provides Chinooks

In an air mobile assault exercise, the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry was lifted by the 1st Battalion, 21st Aviation out of Cat Field on Kelley Hill and into a blocking position to stop an enemy assault.

The Chinooks from the 1st Battalion, 21st Aviation were needed because the assault helicopters Fort Benning has are too light to carry out the size of mission the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry was attempting.

One of the soldiers who made the jump into Victory Pond, SSgt. Willie Brown, remembered, "It was cold. It took me about 1.5 seconds to come up for air and realize what to do because of the altitude we were at and coming in at 10 knots. Once I hit the water, I had to get my stuff together fast to make it to the raft."

Gamma Goat builds confidence

One other type of training device the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry worked with was the Gamma Goat vehicle, that has an amphibious capability. Parker said, "The Gamma Goat was a real confidence builder. It also was ready during the water landing and helocasting in case any rescue attempt was needed."

Brown said, "I thought the training was fantastic. Every soldier got waterborne orientation. When it comes time for an actual combat, instead of a simulated situation, this is something the soldiers will have to do to fight the enemy. It was a good training exercise and I'd be glad to do it again."

Parker concluded, "The whole day at Victory Pond gave the people some confidence about crossing water channels. Everything we tried worked out pretty well."

Part of the training the 3/7th did include crossing Victory Pond in a raft made from materials that were already used. After a couple of attempts, the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry gets this raft, made of used cannisters and wood that was lying around, into the water.

W2s expected on Wednesday

The Christmas bills are (hopefully) just about paid off but if you've noticed that your money has become a little short due to the post Christmas economic crush, relief may be in sight.

Why? It's tax time once again and for those individuals expecting a good return, an economic shot in the arm is on the way.

W-2 forms will soon be released to unit first sergeants and commanders here. The forms will be available to soldiers at their units on Wednesday. Those who arrived here after Jan. 5 will get their W-2s from the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center, Fort Benjamin Harrison.

Anyone not getting a W-2 by March 5 should go through their unit's first sergeant or commander. Those with incorrect W-2s should also go through their units to fill out the proper paperwork to obtain a new one.

Homeless animal

In the arms of veterinary technician James Hall is a Bull Mastiff puppy. The Veterinary Clinic on post has animals such as this one who desperately need a new home and master. A loving friend can be yours for only $7 to cover the cost of vaccinations and blood tests. Adoption hours are from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Town Talk

Every Tuesday in the Enquirer

Taxes make annual appearance

By John P. Phelps, II
Chief Legal Assistance

Once again income tax time has arrived. For soldiers here this means the filing of the federal tax return. For many others it will also mean the filing of the state tax return as well.

Every soldier here should file an income tax return. First of all, it is required by law. Secondly, the filing of a federal and state return will usually bring a much welcomed and perhaps much needed tax refund.

Prior to filing your 1980 income tax return here are a few tips to help you file the right return. Upon receiving your W-2 form, don't immediately file a "short form", Form 1040A. You may be cheating yourself out of a larger refund.

If you and your spouse both work, or if you are a divorced or a separated spouse with custody of your children, you can take a child care credit for baby-sitting expenses. Alimony payments, some business expenses, and home improvement expenses which make your residence more energy efficient, may also be used to reduce your tax even though you don't itemize your deductions.

To take the previously mentioned credits and deductions the "long form", Form 1040, must be used. Take the credits and deductions where indicated and check the box stating that you are not itemizing. Thus, even though you don't itemize you can use these credits and deductions to substantially reduce your tax.

The tax forms that you received from the IRS are based upon the type of form you filed for 1979. They may not be the forms that you need to file your 1980 tax return. If you need additional forms, the Legal Assistance Office of the Staff Judge Advocate's Office has most federal tax forms available. They also have a number of state tax forms. The Legal Assistance Office is located in Building 5 on Main Post.

In order to take advantage of tax credits and deductions that may be available to you, consult your unit tax officer.

All unit tax officers have attended a three-day seminar on income tax preparation conducted here by the Internal Revenue Service.

"I don't care what you say, I'm mother and father to my troops and I should get a child care credit for every one of them."

If Top would have seen his unit tax officer, he wouldn't be confused about the child care credit. See your unit tax officer for help in filing your 1980 return.

YOU'D BE SURPRISED WHAT YOU CAN GET IN YOUR NEXT ENLISTMENT JUST BY ASKING.

If you've always wanted an assignment in Europe, but somehow the Army always had other plans for you, now you can make your own plans. You can reenlist for Europe. Or Korea. The Canal Zone. Hawaii. Alaska. Or, if you're serving overseas, a new duty station in the continental United States. And all you have to do is ask. One soldier who did is SP4 Ralph Cook, 3/68 Armor, Mannheim, Germany.

"Getting to Europe is something I always wanted. They work you harder here, but I do get to see a lot. I like the architecture. The customs. The people. I've been to Munich twice now, and the Oktoberfest is just madness. Really fun."

In your next enlistment, you could end up with a lot more than a new overseas assignment. Chances are pretty good you'll make more rank, earn more pay and move up in responsibility. So talk to your Reenlistment NCO. And find out exactly how far you can go in your next enlistment.

KEEP A GOOD SOLDIER IN THE ARMY. REENLIST.

What's going on here?! No more airborne training at Fort Benning? And what happened to all the recreational activities, church services, and, you've got to be kidding - no more food!

Of course, this is a joke. But it wouldn't be if it weren't for the 1,200 people, sometimes more, who make up Headquarters Command. The command consists of Companies A, B and Headquarters, and the 283rd Army Band. The command has the job of supporting the entire United States Army Infantry Center.

There would be no airborne training if the Parachute riggers of Company B weren't here to pack the chutes. There also wouldn't be any recreational services if not for the Morale Support w Company A, no church services witho lains and their assistants from Headq pany and no food without the food servi of Company B.

But this is just a corner of the huge pic the command does. The soldiers, assi tached, staff most of the directorates a manding general's staff. This puts the from weapon's maintenance to any rang control and testing; from the 283rd Ar aviation; from legal assistance to tra and from the Inspector General's offic tional Infantry Museum. Even Post
Maj. Gen. David E. Grange Jr. is

utive officer, many people don't realize the enormous span the people of Headquarters Command cover. "When the day starts, it not only begins with these soldiers going to different places all over post, but also with soldiers stationed in Dahlonga, Ga. and Eglin Air Force Base, Fla. to support the Ranger camps and at Destin, Fla. to support the recreation area".

Lt. Col. Robert R. Jorgensen, the battalion commander, not only must keep track of the assigned military personnel, but the attached as well. He is responsible for the soldiers' administration, training, billeting, supply, military discipline and welfare. He exercises special court-martial jurisdiction over the Army Research Institute Field Unit; U.S. Army Special Security Detachment; U.S. Army Logistic Assistance Office; U.S. Army Infantry Board; Fort Benning District, Third Region, U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Division; and the U.S. Army Communications Command-Fort Benning.

"We must maintain a close working relationship with all the directors and staff activity chiefs," said Jorgensen. "A great deal of coordination is done by the Command Sergeant Major and unit first sergeants with the staff sergeants major and NCOIC's." Jorgensen talked about the wide variety of jobs the soldiers who play a big part in the command have. "You name an MOS and we've probably got it," he said. "This is partly due to the approximately 200 special duty soldiers attached. Without them, many jobs and services such as recreation just couldn't be provided.

"There's a certain lack of unit identity for these soldiers," added Jorgensen. They are assigned to one unit, attached to another unit, and work for yet another organization. "They are rotated every six months and come from the 197th Infantry Brigade, 36th Engineer Group and the 34th Medical Battalion.

"Not only is it difficult to maintain unit identity and integrity in an organization such as Headquarters Command, but it is difficult to properly prepare soldiers for their Skill Qualification Test because of the large number of MOS's involved.

"However, we have some fine soldiers in Headquarters Command who carry out their jobs in a proficient and dedicated way. We try to maintain high standards of conduct, performance, and appearance, and I believe the vast majority of the soldiers live up to their standards quite well."

Sp5 Sandra Crockett a unit clerk in Headquarters Company, was a truck driver before coming here in July. "I'm much busier in a company like this," she said. "We have people working in 22 different sections, so it's a lot of work. My job consists of doing everything!" Kaléta mentioned Crockett as being a "very good worker" at handling the big job she has.

Another soldier from Headquarters Company, Sp4 Gregory Reisman, is a surveyor. "I should be out at Kelley Hill, but they need me here," he said. "We have to survey every range on post and that's a big job." He also said the experience he's getting from his job will definitely help when he leaves the service.

SSgt. Anthony McPherson from Company B is a sanitation inspector working for the Installation Food Service. "I have a challenging and rewarding job that I love," he said. "I have to inspect 45 dining facilities on post and that's not counting the ones I inspect at the Ranger Camp at Dahlonga, Ga. and Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

The soldiers of Headquarters Command play a vital part in everyday life here. They are perhaps some of the best soldiers on post but more important, they are the nucleus that allows for the smooth operation of the Home of the Infantry!

SFC John Smith plays baritone during a practice session with the 283rd Army Band.

SSgt. Anthony McPherson, Company B, inspects one of the post's dining facilities as part of his job with the Installation Food Service.

Sheriff's Target

Sp4 Battle hustles to his car, parked in the company parking lot. He has just been released for chow and must be back to stand in a 12:45 p.m. formation. Not much time to get home, see his wife, and grab a bite to eat.

He turns on the ignition, puts his car in reverse, looks to the rear, both left and right, then turns forward again before backing.

Sp4 Battle failed to notice that Sgt. Doughboy pulled into the parking lot in a quarter ton jeep since Battle looked to the rear, and was travelling by him as he pulled out.

Nobody likes traffic accidents, even the minor ones involving no injuries. They involve loss of time and money, both precious commodities these days. They also result in the inconvenience of being without a vehicle during repairs. Last year there were 113 traffic accidents here resulting from improper backing of a vehicle, making it the leading cause of minor traffic accidents. Ninety-two occurred in parking lots!

The accidents resulted in charges against 68 military personnel and 45 military dependents or civilians. Property damage of over $30 thousand to privately owned vehicles and $2,500 to military vehicles makes this the most costly category of traffic accidents.

Readers are reminded that current Fort Benning policy directs that individuals found at fault in a motor vehicle accident must attend a 10-hour remedial driver's training class after duty hours. The damage to the car, the time in repairs, increased insurance rates, etc., hardly seems worth it compared to the extra few seconds it takes to be a bit more careful. This type of accident can be prevented. The choice is yours.

In first time Beret Bowl

Rangers, Airborne to clash

By Jeffrey M. Frazer
Airborne Department writer

It isn't as well publicized as the Philadelphia-Oakland matchup Sunday in New Orleans but the First Beret Bowl between the Ranger Instructors and the Airborne Instructors certainly has just as much competitive spirit.

The game, a challenge match, will be played Sunday, Feb. 15 in Doughboy Stadium with kick-off time scheduled for 2 p.m. The Rangers challenged the Airborne instructors to what is hoped to be an annual gridiron encounter here.

Airborne expects fierce battle

John Hester, who coaches the Airborne Team said, "The competition between the Airborne and Ranger Departments is nothing short of fierce. This matchup will prove to be a fast-paced, exciting game for both the players and the spectators."

"It's similar to an All-Star Game in that there are three weeks of preparation time and a team is formed from the talent that is available. The team that has prepared best in the amount of time allowed will be the winner," he explained.

"In sporting events, the nature of both the Airborne Department and the Ranger Department has been to capitalize on mistakes. The team that makes the fewest mistakes stands the best chance of winning. We are generally sticking to the basics generally sticking to the basics and will run fundamental plays with a few special plays to keep them alert."

"We've got a lot of speed and experience and that kind of talent is going to make us a very strong contender."

"I don't have any prediction for the outcome of the game but both teams are in for a lot of hard-hitting. I look for a good contest," explained Hester.

Rangers confident!

According to Skip Swackhammer, coach of the Rangers, this time they are sure of success. "The Airborne Department has beaten us just about every year in softball and the competitiveness between the two departments is tremendous. We lost to them in flag football this year too, but there was a lot of animosity about how that game was called," said Swackhammer.

"We know we can play tackle football well so I suggested to Col. Cameron, The Ranger Department director, that a challenge be issued to the Airborne Department. We are very happy that they have accepted the challenge.

"The key to winning the game is the desire to win

it. We will give 150 percent on that field for 60-minutes of hard-hitting football and with that kind of heart, it has to be a great game," he explained. "We are looking for clean competition from the Airborne Department and we are looking forward to playing a hard-knocking team.

"We have a very strong defensive line and we feel that it will be hard to score on us. The offense has a great deal of speed and agility with particular speed in the backfield and in the receiver positions.

"We've brought a few of our instructors in from the Mountain and Florida Camps and some of these guys have some playing experience. However, the majority of the team has never played organized tackle football before."

"I predict a real close game and a game that the fans can count on for some tough football. We're really looking forward to it."

Jimmy the Greek hasn't named a favorite for this bone-jarring clash but the way the two teams have been practicing, it figures to be dead even.

The Silver Wings (the Fort Benning Jump Team) will jump the gameball into the stadium and half-time entertainment is planned. Concessions will be available. Admission is free.

Doughgirls take victory

Myers leads with 18

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Doughgirls traveled to Fort Benning Saturday and came home with their second win of the season with an easy 45-28 victory.

The Doughgirls had defeated the "Lady Mack Attack" the week before, and once Lisa Myers once again led Benning with a game-high 18 points. Teresa Irving added 11 and Gail Payton and Sherryl Binckney put in four each.

Doughgirls Coach Perry Graves said the team played well and he substituted freely to give everyone a chance to play. "The girls who normally didn't play much really showed they want to be part of the team," he said.

The Doughgirls scored most of their points in the first half and came out well ahead with a 31-10 halftime lead. Improved defensive play by the Doughgirls kept McPherson's score to a minimum. Graves said, "The girls are really getting their defensive play down the more they practice. We're still having some problems because it's hard for some of the players to make it to practice, but our passing and offense are still improving and some girls who never scored before scored in this game."

Leading McPherson with 10 points was Felicia Chatman. Octavia Hanson and Thomasa Ruffin added six each.

The Doughgirls held the lead throughout the game. McPherson may have been hurt by the absence of last game's high-scorer, Sydney Shruby.

The Doughgirls will get another chance at the PM 76's, a team from Atlanta who defeated them earlier in the season, tomorrow at 1 p.m. in Audie Murphy Gym.

VA aid available abroad

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — Veterans planning to go overseas to live, work or vacation should check with their local VA office before going, advise Veterans Administration (VA) officials.

Veterans should know just what benefits are available to them in a foreign country before they go.

Those with service-connected disabilities should get a statement of disabilities from the office keeping their medical records.

Veterans can receive emergency treatment or hospitalization — paid for by VA — when an application for medical benefits and the statement are presented to the U.S. Embassy or Consulate in a foreign country.

Veterans should apply for medical benefits within 72 hours of need.

For veterans with non-service connected disabilities, the Veterans Memorial Hospital, Manila, the Philippines, is the only overseas hospital where VA-paid care is available.

Veterans will be admitted to the hospital on a space available basis only if they cannot afford other hospitalization.

In addition to medical care, certain educational benefits are available overseas. Veterans, their spouses and children can use these benefits.

Individuals may get information on benefits and services available overseas from their local VA offices or from one of the national veterans service organizations.

Surviving on Super Sunday

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

We are living in a world full of addicts, some good, some bad. Some curable, some not.

If a friend is hooked on drugs, help is available at a rehabilitation center, an alcoholic can be sent to Alcohol's Anonymous, but how does someone cope with that real nutso who can't keep his mind off a game played with a "pig-skin?"

If you're involved with one of the umpteen million football addicts in the world, calm down! There is a cure on its way, at least a temporary one. Those "football crazies" will finally be getting their biggest "rush" of the year this Super Sunday when they glue themselves in front of the tube to watch the Philadelphia Eagles and the Oakland Raiders clash in Super Bowl XV.

Watch out ladies!

But a word of warning- this is "THE DAY" they've been waiting for, and since nothing matters to addicts but that "all-time high" you may crack up if you're not prepared.

First, if you have hyperactive kids, lock them in a closet so they don't run back and forth in front of the T.V. during the game. If your dog's not housebroken yet or he barks a lot tie him outside.

If your mother usually drops by on Sundays to chat, leave a note on the door saying "nobody's home", then hide the car a few blocks away. If you decide to get out your housecoats and put on something sexy, don't bother, your mate won't even notice. Don't even take a bath because he might yell for one of the beers out of the case he told to you to buy.

Take the phone off the hook. If his buddies are over to watch the game, make sure you cook enough food to feed them all but don't wash the pile of dishes until the game's over because you might make too much noise.

Keep aspirin handy

If they start yelling during the game, don't tell them to keep it down. Your loving addict might throw you out of the house, or not speak to you for days for embarrassing him in front of his friends. Have a bottle of aspirin on hand in case you get "Super Headache No. 15." Don't think about seeing a lawyer, instead tell yourself over and over, "This is the last day until next year, this is the last day until . . ."

Don't get mad at yourself for not planning a weekend trip with your girlfriends, besides, most of them are football loonies, too.

Finally, if you can't get up the courage to sneak out the back door because your mate might need another beer, just hold on and pray to God that his team wins.

Doughboy's Nate Harris, right, guards Fort McPherson's Rick Donnel.

Freethrows win it

Doughboys squeek by

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Anybody who saw the Doughboy's first game against Fort McPherson here Jan. 10, would probably have thought he was watching an instant replay Saturday. Benning pulled out another 87-85 win over the "Mack Attack" after again coming from behind.

McPherson was playing on their home court this time and their fans cheered them on as the Doughboys fell 10 points behind at the 12:37 mark of second half. However, the Doughboys rallied for a comeback to take on a Harry Lyons Jumper a 77-76 lead with 5:43 left. Lyons paced the Doughboys down the stretch adding six crucial points to his 16-point total. After getting off to a slow start in the first half.

Robert Hooper and Gregory Hicks were second-half high scorers with 10-points each to help push the Doughboys over the edge.

Leading the Doughboys with 18 of his 22-points in the first half was forward Mike Mack. "We were behind, but that's when we really get going and play our best," explained Mack.

According to Doughboy Coach Oliver Green, his team didn't play a bad game overall, "but our turnovers are still kind of loose, which hurt some."

Returning as high-scorer for McPherson was Jimmy Bynum with 22 points with Rick Donnell matching him. Malcom Hardom finished close behind, adding 18 in the hard-fought defeat.

At one point in the game, Lyons and Hicks took turns hitting the backboards to give the Doughboys an 81-76 second-half lead with 4:04 left. Hardom had the chance to tie McPherson on free throws with 2:22 left, but he missed both. Bynum then quickly scored for an 83-83 tie at 2:16.

Hooper shot back with two for the Doughboys, then Mack made the final two points on free-throws after Hardom fouled-out with 38 seconds left in the game.

The Doughboys faced the Columbus YMCA last night and results will be published in the next week's BAYONET. Their next two games are tonight at 8:30 and Sunday at 2 p.m. when they take on a Columbus team from Beallwood Heights, who the Doughboys have already defeated this year. The action takes place at Briant Wells Fieldhouse on Main Post. Admission is free.

Boxers fight in Campbell

By Becky Bulgrin

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The year was 1956 and Fort Benning's boxing Doughboys took the title of Third Army Boxing Champions against defending champs Fort Bragg, who took the title for two straight years before.

Fort Bragg is still known for their strong boxing team and it's currently ranked number one in the United States. Benning, however, took a long break and 1980 marked the first time in 11 years that this post has had organized boxing, according to boxing coach Anthony Stoddard.

Benning is now preparing for their first-ever FORSCOM East tournament and will again take on Fort Bragg, along with other posts in that region. Other competition will be held in FORSCOM West and winners from both tournaments will attend the All-Army training camp at Fort Bragg.

Twelve of Benning's boxers will be traveling to Fort Campbell, Ky. to compete in the tournament which takes place Feb. 9-13. The trip is being sponsored and paid for by TRADOC, according to Stoddard.

"We'll have a lot of good boxers competing in FORSCOM," said Stoddard. "Most have been fighting with the team throughout our recent season and there are two new fighters who are very experienced."

One of the additions is Larry Brown and Stoddard says he's a top rated boxer in the Amateur Athletic Union (AAU). "Brown hasn't fought with the team before because he couldn't get time off from the unit. He's looking good and will be fighting in the 156-pound weight class.

The other new member is Willie Shiver, who will be boxing in the 178-pound weight class. "Shriver's an experienced fighter, but hasn't boxed with the team yet because he was playing football with the Doughboys," said Stoddard.

Team veteran Larry Golden will fight in the 119-pound weight class, Roderick Williams at the 125-pound class, Dwayne Edwards at 139, Kevin "Boom Boom" Houston at 125 and Al Fracker at the 178-pound weight class.

According to the coach, the boxers have been running, doing calisthenics, "beating their heads against the bags," and getting excess liquids out of their bodies. Their first sparring session started Monday and Stoddard says the team will be ready to put on a good show at the tournament.

Anglers rig hot spot

By Jim Porter

Winter is now upon us and most "fair weather fishermen" have wisely "hung it up" until Spring. How-some-ever, there are a few diehards and I guess I have to be classed among them. Mother nature might not have given me enough common sense to come in out of the cold, but at least she provided me with an instinct of survival.

Necessity being the Mother of Invention spawned the idea of a dependable, portable, cheap source of heat to maintain my old fingers at least thawed enough to grasp the reel handle.

Simply get yourself a mechanic drop light (also called a trouble light) and cut the electrical plug off the end. Replace that plug with either a small pair of alligator clips or a plug which will fit the electrical receptacle on your boat. Next, paddle your big wheel down to the neighborhood hardware store and get a 12 volt, 50 to 100 watt, light bulb. Tell old Sam what you want it to fit and you'll find that there is a 12 volt bulb which looks precisely like the normal 110 volt model in your living room lamp.

The next time you're out there chasin' them leapin' lunkers and your pinkies get frosty, simply fire that old light bulb up and get some feelings. The shield which protects the bulb is just exactly right to keep from burning your hands or clothing but is close enough to the bulb to allow you all the warmth you need. An additional benefit is that, after your hands are fixed up, you can put the darned thing up your jacket and it will keep your entire upper body warm.

This little jewel is cheap, dependable, has no fuel to spill, and is very compact. Also, it doubles beautifully as a night light in the boat, either for an emergency or getting a Musky Jitterbug out of your soft-soled moccasins. It draws little from your battery so don't worry about the aspect.

Two warnings apply: 1. Don't put it up under a rubber or plastic rain suit as I'm not sure they can take the heat. 2. Don't let Momma or the kids get ahold of the 12 volt bulb and put it up in Granny's room. It's not dangerous but it greatly shortens bulb life and the flash as it burns out may stretch a garter belt or two. (Courtesy of Military Bass Angler's Association and Military Outdoors Magazine).

Three shooters break national rifle records

By Becky Bulgrin

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Three members of Fort Benning's Junior Rifle Club have broken a national record shooting a standard rifle as a three-man team.

William H. Haracourt, Ronald L. Wigger and David A. Cannella traveled to Phoenix, Ariz. last June 20 to compete in the 20th U.S. International Shooting Championships but only recently found out they broke a national record with a 1,675 score for the team event.

Each member received a certificate from the National Rifle Association with the title "National Records."

Haracourt is currently a senior at Spencer High School in Columbus and is a deputy commander in the ROTC program there. Wigger is now attending Eastern Kentucky University and Cannella is in his first year at West Point.

In other marksmanship news, personnel of the United States Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) helped the Dependent Youth Activities (DYA) raise $7,700 in the onpost sale of Christmas trees during the holidays. This amount was cleared for the 1981 budget of the swimming team, Junior Rifle team and the Boy and Girl Scouts of Fort Benning. Lt. Col. Lones Wigger was the DYA project officer for this effort which is a yearly project.

That's not the only kind of help the Marksmanship Unit gives. USAMU's Pistol Branch recently assisted the Columbus Police Department in testing of night firing equipment on Phillips Range here. Five night firing training sessions were conducted for 150 police officers Jan. 12-16.

Famous general's lives top television highlights

By Bill Powell
WFBG Broadcast Journalist

WFBG-TV tries to include programming for most tastes but if you have a suggestion as to how we can better serve you, please contact the Public Affairs Office, Bldg. 4, Room 601, Fort Benning 31905 or call 545-2201.

Following are some highlights of next weeks programming:

- "Big Picture-Famous Generals" looks at the careers of George Patton and Douglas MacArthur. The programs focus on Patton's action in World War II in Africa and Europe and MacArthur's exploits in the Pacific, post-war Japan and the early fighting in Korea.

- "Take Ten-It Pays to Know Your L-E-S" is an informational program on how to read this important piece of paper. With tax time coming up you can get a head start on figuring your taxes in the absence of W-2 forms by knowing how to read your December L-E-S.

- "Making Contact Abroad" could be a helpful addition to your viewing time if your planning on going overseas soon. This program shows some of the more common problems encountered abroad and offers techniques that can be used to help make people respond more favorably to American servicemen and gain rewarding experience.

- "Joshua" is the story of a boy who learns that everyone can give something of themselves to others.

Consult your BAYONET or Benning Bulletin for times and days of scheduled programs.

Japanese products get hike in prices

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)—Prices for products from Japan will increase by 10 percent in "In Exchange catalog '81", say Army and Air Force Service (AAFES) officials.

The new prices will begin with orders postmarked after Jan. 16. Only Japan origin items in the Far East and special order sections ("S" pages) of the catalog are affected by the increase.

The higher cost is based on the rising strength of the Japanese Yen against the U.S. dollar. Inflation and currency changes pressure the catalog market just as they do the rest of the economy, explained AAFES officials.

Congressman impressed

Quality soldiers still needed

By Bill Powell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

All of the best weapons in the world are useless unless soldiers are qualified to use them. That is the opinion of Congressman Ike Skelton (D) from Missouri.

"My concern has been and undoubtedly will be that of personnel. You can have the most sophisticated weaponry in the world, the best anti-tank guns, the best howitzers, the best tanks, the best rifles; but if you don't have the personnel who are qualified and of high intelligence and high motivation, the weaponry isn't going to do you a bit of good," he explained.

The congressman, who hails from Missouri's Fourth District and was elected to Congress in 1976, was recently appointed a permanent member of the House Armed Services Committee. When asked why he was visiting Fort Benning, Congressman Skelton indicated that some legislative votes might be extremely close and he wanted to have the knowledge necessary to know what he was talking about and voting on in Congress.

Training and its effectiveness is a major concern for Congressman Skelton whose district is the home of Whitman Air Force Base and 150 intercontinental ballistic missile silos.

But he is impressed with what he's seen. "Quite frankly I'm very impressed with Fort Benning," he said. "I think that this story, what you do here, and the training you give here, is first rate. There's none better in the world and I think the American people should know this."

Congressman Skelton's interest in personnel extends beyond the areas of recruiting good people; it also involves keeping them in. Non-commissioned officers are a special concern because of the years of experience and leadership techniques they can pass on to the new people coming under their control and guidance.

Leadership is such an important thing to the congressman that he successfully handled a bill that gave the nation an additional 5,500 Reserve Officer Training Corps Scholarships. With the addition of the ROTC scholarships he feels that the present programs of obtaining officers through Officer Candidate School, the United States Military Academy and ROTC are adequate to do the job of getting leaders for the military.

In the event manpower needs are not met, he favors going back to the draft to augment the reserves and national guard, as well as the active duty military. But he believes that Congress would never try to implement a draft unless the president asked for it.

On the subject of weapons and whether they're adequate to defeat an enemy, he says that as a country lawyer from a little town in Missouri he, as well as other legislators, depends on the military to assess weapons systems and make recommendations and suggestions on new systems. He added that the advice of the Department of the Army and the Training and Doctrine Command have yielded outstanding and excellent equipment.

Congressman Skelton believes that the tide has turned from when he first came to Congress in 1977. At that time he was quite concerned about the readiness of the military for conflict. While he feels the United States still has to play a game of "catch-up" in its defense program he thinks the military is ready. Ready at least for a short term or limited period of time. "Over a protracted period of time, no."

He added, "I think we must do a great deal of follow through augmentation and building, but what I see on readiness, I'm frankly impressed."

Families torn by separation

Various problems lead to the separation of families. Military families often face even more problems than their civilian counterparts.

Separation has become a part of military life due to unaccompanied overseas tours. This and other reasons can cause permanent legal separation.

For advice from soldiers who have gone through legal separation and from chaplains and lawyers who have counseled soldiers going through legal separation, see page 20.

Housing abuse senseless

By Dave Bristow
USAIC Public Affairs Office

What some people do to government quarters is a crime.

While most families take care of their quarters, there are those who, for one reason or another seriously abuse them. Why they do what they do is anybody's guess.

No utility bills to pay, not even a water bill and they even enjoy free garbage pickup. Rent is less than the cost of an apartment of comparable size off post, and the gasoline they save by living on post should make them happy.

Those that neglect their quarters cause the family housing people on post many headaches. According to family housing manager Kenneth Hankins, there is a problem, whether willfully or unwillingly, of occupants abusing their quarters. "We have our share of people who just don't care about the living condition of their quarters. In one case a woman got mad at her husband and, while he was away shot the picture tube out of her television set with a 22 pistol and then shot six holes into the wall of her living room."

Hankins commented on common abuse problems. "There is a big problem with damage to hardwood floors caused by pets. Some animals urinate on these floors and it causes permanent damage. We also have problems with people moving furniture around causing damage to the floors. People punch holes in the walls and use harsh abrasives in trying to clean walls. Some people will flush dirty disposable diapers down their toilets causing our facility engineers problems with clogged pipes. Another big problem we have is children locking themselves in the bathroom and then the door is broken down to get the children out."

Not too much has been left to the imagination when it comes to abusing housing. One man, after shooting a deer, cleaned the animal in the basement of his quarters and tried washing the entrails down the basement sink. Once again, Facility Engineers had to be called.

A first sergeant reported he had a soldier who went AWOL and left his house so full of roaches that the Facility Engineers had to fumigate the place before a detail could go in to clean it up. Garbage was all over the place and the whole house smelled like dogs.

When soldiers go AWOL the parent unit is left holding the bag. They have the responsibility of sending in a detail to clean the abandoned house. Most units do not have the manpower it takes to clean the quarters right away. Sometimes it can take up to two to three months for that house to be ready for another family. With a list of hundreds of people waiting for quarters, this makes the wait for housing much longer.

Fortunately, less than 10 percent of people living in government quarters are of the type described above. However, those that are will likely find themselves facing a large fee for damage they have caused in their quarters.

Honor the flag

By Debbie Harrison
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Recently, the U.S. flag has been poorly displayed by people living in family quarters and units.

The flag represents us as Americans and it needs to be treated as such. People living in family quarters need to remember how to properly fly the flag.

Each set of quarters, except at the new quarters such as Davis Hill and Bouton Heights, has a flag bracket. The flag should be flown during daylight hours from 6:10 a.m. until 7:32 p.m. and taken down at night as well as in inclement weather. The flag should also be replaced when tattered and worn.

Units on post can fly their flags in the brackets provided on the barracks or on a flag pole. Flags raised on the flag pole should be rendered the same courtesies as at Infantry Hall.

The Army has three flags: Garrison, Storm and Post. The Garrison flag is used during holidays and important occasions, such as Inauguration Day and as designated by presidential proclamation. The Post flag is flown daily. The Storm flag is flown during inclement weather.

Letters to the Editor

Wife complains

Letter to the Editor:

I'm an Army wife and I'm complaining about Army wives complaining.

Who told them the job of a GI's wife was going to be easy? Any job has its pitfalls, and this one is no exception. You have to ride the waves. Learn to help yourselves a little and not expect someone to do everything for you. It's obvious that these wives have been through very little if a mere delay in travel has upset them so. How about the wives who had husbands in Vietnam or had them go off to Korea without them? And how many have had their pay messed up or their household goods misplaced for months?

THIS IS A BIG CORPORATION your husbands work for, ladies and mix-ups happen. This corporation also has help through the ACS and the Red Cross, not to mention your neighbors. We're all in this together. I've helped my neighbors many times and have been more than repaid by their help. I can understand your anguish. Wanting to be with your husbands every possible minute is understandable when you live with the knowledge that they can be taken away from you at any hour of the day or night. But your husband has a job to do, and you have a job to do.

Make life easier on him and you by learning to do your job well. Have more faith in yourself and your neigh-ors. Most Army wives are very strong individuals and have managed to keep their marriage and family together without writing the President.

If you find you can't cope with your situation ask your neighbor about some of the times she's been through. I have no doubt that you will discover things could be a lot worse.

Fireman saves Lavoie victim

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Smoke and flames were coming from a two-story apartment in Lavoie

Eddie Alexander, a firefighter from the Main Post Fire Department, prepares to climb off one of the department's fire trucks. Alexander has been chosen to receive a Heroism Award for saving the life of a Lavoie Manor occupant during a fire.

Manor when fire truck No. 1 arrived on the scene.

"I was the first one to enter the apartment and found an occupant lying on the floor surrounded by smoke," explained Eddie Alexander, a firefighter from the Main Post Fire Department. "He was unconscious so I took him down two flights of stairs, and out of the building where I started giving him mouth to mouth resuscitation until the Emergency Medical Service arrived."

Alexander was credited with saving the life of the smoke inhalation victim.

This was the first time he had saved a life since entering the fire service in 1969. He has been selected from 71 other firemen in the U.S. to receive the Heroism Award from Firehouse Magazine, along with a $100 check, for his heroic efforts.

"I know my job is dangerous, but you don't think about the danger until after something like that is over," said Alexander. "It's a natural instinct when you see another human being lying on a floor to get him out; it's my job."

The 37-year-old Columbus native has been working here for almost two years, after serving nine years as a city firefighter in Columbus.

"Firefighting is the same anywhere you go. You don't know when something might happen, so you have to be ready at all times," he explained.

"I have a good job here, and although I work more hours, I get better benefits and more money than I did downtown. And with the job Fire Prevention here does, there aren't as many fires."

Alexander starts his work day at 8 a.m. and works a 24-hour shift. Although the firemen get the next day off, Alexander says he actually spends more time at the fire station than at home.

"Fires happen in spells and when we're not fighting them, we go through a certain routine every day," he said. "We check our equipment to make sure it's operating correctly, do cleaning details just like soldiers, go through in-station training, and practical training outside."

"Normal duty hours end at 5 p.m., but we're on call after that," Alexander continued. "We're called to car wrecks, grass fires and, unfortunately, false alarms."

However, even with their long hours, the fireman get three days off every other week. Alexander says this gives him time to help keep up the house and yard since his wife, Margaret, also works here in Military Finance. "My time off also lets me enjoy my kids, Monica, 15, Veronica, 12, and my baby, Akilah, three," he concluded.

Enlisted students sought for military prep school

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--The U.S. Military Academy Preparatory School (USMAPS), Fort Monmouth, N.J. is now accepting applications for the 1981-82 class which begins in August 1981. Application deadline for the class is May 1, 1981.

USMAPS is an Army school which helps selected enlisted personnel to qualify physically, academically and militarily, said USAMAPS officials, because admission to USMAPS is very competitive. Last year, 1,200 Regular

The basic eligibility requirements call for an applicant to be:

Soldiers learn rescue skills

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If a member of your family is caught in a life or death situation, you'd naturally hope someone was around who was qualified to help him.

In order to insure that everyone here has qualified medical personnel available, the 2nd Combat Support Hospital, 34th Medical Battalion, recently sponsored their first Emergency Medical Technician (EMT) course. Soldiers from various units here attended the course.

The course will continue for other medical personnel here, according to Lt. Col. James Weiss, commander of the 2nd Combat Support Hospital and the project coordinator. "We want to initiate an on-going, viable Emergency Medical Services training program to serve the Fort Benning community," said Weiss.

The first EMT course started Oct. 14 and the 22 students participating completed it Jan. 13. The students were first nominated, interviewed, then accepted into the 150-hour course, which is Georgia approved.

"Prospective candidates must need the skill as part of their job and should express their desire to participate in the course to their unit commanders," explained Weiss.

Sp4 Frank Crisp, patient care specialist with the 676th Medical Detachment, said he got a chance to use equipment he's never used before and learn new techniques to save people's lives in different situations. "We were taught ways to get people out of wrecked vehicles (extrication) and what to do afterwards," he explained. "We even cut one vehicle to pieces, taking the whole top off of it. The state of Georgia brought one of their ambulances over which contained a lot of equipment the military doesn't have," he added.

The course is paid for by the Army and gives soldiers credit and promotion points after passing the final test. The students then take the state exam, which makes them licensed EMTs in Georgia if they pass.

Instructing the course was Mr. Wynn Jones from Cobb Memorial Hospital in Phenix City, who has been teaching EMT for three years. He will be instructing the next class also, and says, "This is the first time I've taught the course to soldiers and, as medics, they seem to have more of a basic medical understanding. They also seem to be able to work with their hands a lot better than the civilians I've taught, which is very important."

Wynn went on to say that the soldiers will benefit from the course because of the changes and new skills that are part of the medical field. "We got a chance to work in various areas of Cobb Hospital, including the emergency room and cardiac area, and to observe other areas," said Crisp.

Sp4 David Lang, medic, said anyone would benefit from the course. "The course is designed for someone with at least a general knowledge in the medical field; however, previous experience is not absolutely necessary to complete it."

The hours of instruction are from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., generally on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday of each week. Weiss said the philosophy of the units involved is that the classes are duty time and duty schedules for the class members will be adjusted to include all classes.

According to Weiss, this first course was tightly controlled within the 34th Medical Battalion in order to iron out problem areas and establish a viable EMT program. For future courses, quotas will again be given to all major commands here.

Other personnel who would qualify as first responders to an accident scene such as Military Police, Forest Rangers and Fire Department personnel are also eligible. For more information concerning the program, contact Lt. Col. Weiss at 545-7581.

Virginia lawyer named Army boss

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — John O. Marsh, appearing before members of the Senate Armed Services Committee, was recommended for confirmation as the next Secretary of the Army. Secretary Marsh succeeds former Secretary of the Army Clifford L. Alexander Jr.

During the confirmation hearing, Secretary Marsh, a 54-year-old Virginia lawyer, was quizzed in a number of wide-ranging areas from his military background to Army personnel problems to modernization of the total force to binary weapons and munitions.

The central theme of the new secretary's hearing revolved around the total Army concept which, according to Secretary Marsh, the United States government accepted when it decided to go to an all-volunteer force.

"The National Guard and Reserve will receive high priority and special attention," stated Secretary Marsh addressing the total force issue.

During the very cordial and friendly hearing, the retired Virginia Army National Guard lieutenant colonel was questioned repeatedly on the subject of the draft and registration.

Although not directly answering those questions, Secretary Marsh did allow the committee members his thoughts on the present system.

"Service to the nation is not only a privilege, but a duty of every citizen of the United States," commented Secretary Marsh. He also said the current selective service registration requirement "was useful."

In the area of readiness, he offered two watchwords that the nation's and the Army's leaders need to be concerned with. "Adequacy and readiness" should be identified with the Army's ability to do its job, according to Secretary Marsh. Adequacy includes such things as the size and structure of the force, its weaponry and other machinery. Readiness involves things such as individual soldier skills and competency and the ability to move quickly.

He said the modernization program should be continued to its completion and that it should not simply be "addressed to the active force, but vast quantities are needed in the reserve components in the total force concept."

A Winchester, Va. native, Secretary Marsh now lives in Arlington, Va. He told the Armed Services Committee senators that he will "inform myself" on the various issues confronting the Army. He said he would work closely with the Congress in their joint responsibility to the nation for the care of its Army.

"I am not only a servant of the people, but a servant of this great nation and this committee," said Secretary Marsh, "and I will devote my time, talents and efforts to that (Army Secretary) post."

Awards given to volunteers

By Tim Boivin

With the number of military wives working, a lot of responsibility falls on volunteers to care for children. Fort Benning's Army Community Service (ACS) recently honored one of their volunteers who takes care of children at the Lavoie Community Life Center.

Johnnie Eason, the wife of SSgt. David Eason of the 444th Transportation Company, was awarded a two-year pin, a 750-hour guard and the 500 Silver Bowl for her volunteer services to the Fort Benning community. She was one of over 60 volunteers honored by ACS at ceremonies held yesterday at the Follow Me Golf Club's ballroom.

Eason is chairperson of ACS for handicapped children and also assistant director at the Lavoie Community Life Center. She said, "I mostly work with arts and crafts with the kids. Before I came to Lavoie when the Tiny Tots program opened in October, my primary duties were as chairperson for the handicapped children. Now I split my time between the two."

The care Eason shows for the children is apparent in her everyday dealings with the children. In a recent class, when a child mentioned that the glue smelled like bubble gum, she was quick to laugh but also, she warned, "That glue may smell good, but it isn't for chewing. Save that for the bubble gum."

While other military families have both parents working to make ends meet, volunteers like Johnnie Eason donate their time so that the children aren't left alone. Her classes last until noon and then a special nursery is open until 5 p.m. for those children whose parents don't get off until then.

"WHEN YOU'RE A CIVILIAN AGAIN, AN EXTRA $1,400 A YEAR SURE COMES IN HANDY."

"I got out of the Army in February of 1977, right when all the prices were going up. Food. Clothing. Gas. You name it and it went up.

"Fortunately, when I was out-processing, someone asked me if I wanted to make some extra money with a local Army Reserve unit, and I said yes.

"It's good I joined right away, because it took me a couple of months to find a good full-time job.

"Even with a regular job, the extra $1,400 I earned with the Reserve came in handy. It was the difference between barely making ends meet and being able to put a little money away.

"By going direct from Active into the Reserve, I was also able to keep my rank of E-4. I'm now an E-5, pulling in over $1,600 a year. Not bad for a weekend a month and two weeks annual training.

"I'm also taking advantage of some other benefits.

I buy a lot of my auto supplies at the PX.

I carry low-cost government life insurance through the Reserve.

I also think the retirement package is a good deal.

"A side benefit that's helped me is the additional training I've picked up in the Reserve. I was an MP on active duty but have become an Accounting Specialist in the Reserve. Right now, that's helping me with the business degree I'm working toward at a local college.

"So I can recommend the Army Reserve to anyone coming off active duty. The extra income is good, and it's nice being with people who can appreciate what you achieved in the service."

	How much can you make part-time with the Army Reserve?
	Per Weekend	Per Year

ACS helps community through many channels

By Sally Entlich
ACS Correspondent

The Save-A-Toy Program at Army Community Service (ACS) was able to provide toys, games and books for over 150 children in the military community. This program was only possible through the generosity of the members of the Fort Benning and Columbus communities.

Further evidence of community spirit has been shown by the generous donations to the Battered Spouse Shelter. Needed items are towels, soap, toothpaste and other personal toilet articles. Donations to the Save-A-Toy and Shelter Programs were aided by Fort Benning's Commanders' Wives. Donations of material or cash are tax-deductible.

In the spring of 1981 activities at ACS will be focused on the Community Life Centers, Handicapped Children's Summer Camp, Citizenship Classes and the mailing out of Fort Benning Welcome Packets to every ACS and Family Services in the world.

The opportunity for you to make your community a better place to live is available at the ACS Office. Make arrangements for a Supervisor's interview by calling 545-1233 or 1169. Your time will be well spent in the volunteer program at ACS.

Lonely pup

Loneliness is not for just human beings. A lost or forgotten animal gets lonely too. You can help. Many good dogs and cats like this mixed breed can be yours for $7 to cover the cost of vaccinations and blood tests. Bring home a new friend from the Veterinary Clinic on post.

At tax time, we put military people at ease.

As a military person, you may be able to deduct special costs from your income. You may have allowances that can't be taxed at all.

You may have a civilian income, second job income tax return, or a working spouse and/or dependents.

You may have to file out-of-state income tax returns.

In short, doing your income tax return could take more time and work than you might think.

H&R Block takes the time to understand the special tax situations of military personnel. We'll dig for every legal deduction to which you're entitled.

So file your income tax return at ease this year. Don't pay a dollar more than you really owe. Phone or come in now to H&R Block.

C.G.'s message

The Month of February (1981) has been designated as Black History Month by both the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History, and the Department of Defense. This Year's National Theme is "Afro-American (Black) History — Role Model for Black Youth." Although various activities will take place throughout the month, the week of Feb. 13-20 will highlight our activities here.

The founding and birth of our Nation was greatly assisted by the blood, sweat and tears of those blacks who fought and died to enable this great country to be what it is today. Their contributions are well documented in the annals of our history and can be traced to the pre-Revolutionary War period. The accomplishments of Black Americans in behalf of this country are varied and many. They include the areas of medicine, law, technology, sports, agriculture and music, to mention but a few.

With their accomplishments and contributions in mind, it is fitting and proper that we take time to honor these noble Americans during this period. Therefore, I urge all here to join with me and other citizens of this great nation in commemorating this occasion.

Mail call — for 10,000

Story and photos
by Tom Sabel

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Letters from home. There's nothing that gladdens a soldier's heart more than a letter from home. Especially if the soldier is new to the Army and going through the rigors of basic training.

The more than 10,000 soldiers who train at Infantry Training Brigade have four men to thank when the mail comes in. These four, who handle as much as 60 percent of the military mail coming here, pick up and sort the mail which is sent on to the soldiers' company.

Sometimes the job is huge. "On some days, Mondays especially, we've had the van so full of mail that we couldn't fit another mail bag in," said Sgt. David Bell, one of the brigade's mail handlers.

The incoming mail is first picked up at the post office on Main Post. This is more than just picking up the familiar U.S. Mail bags of letters. There is also insured and registered mail which need special handling. "There was only one day last year when there wasn't insured or registered mail," commented Bell.

On the day the reporter followed them through their daily rounds Sp4 Kenneth Kelly helped Bell with the mail pick up. The truck barely squeezed through the parking spot at the post office's loading dock. Good teamwork between the two made the parking as smooth as butter.

After the truck was loaded, it was back to the brigade's mail room. The mail room gets top awards for simplicity, being in a building by itself

Racks of mail bags hung in iron-pipe stanchions are the first thing to catch the eye in the barn like atmosphere of the building. They seem to go on without number with at least one bag for each company, usually more.

As SFC José Cantu and Mr. Walter E. Rhodes begin sorting the mornings mail while Bell cataloged the insured and registered mail. Their easy humor and casual conversations showed that they worked easily and well together. The teamwork of Bell and Kelley carried through with the other two workers.

"A little dab'll do ya, the girls won't pursue ya," sings Wilson quietly to himself as he sorts the mail. The conversation among the workers turn to silence as they get down to the morning's work. Each has their own table to work on as they sort the mail. Each has his own method of sorting. "I tend to sort the mail by envelope size first, it makes it easier to make bundles of them," said Cantu.

As the morning goes on, the many bags of mail, first sent only to the Infantry Training Brigade by the Main Post post office, are slowly broken down to company levels.

"The strangest piece of mail I can remember is a package of squid. Somebody sent it from Hawaii and by the time we had gotten it, it had sprung a leak. Boy, did it smell," recalls Bell.

Mail from around the world—for the soldiers.

Sp4 Kenneth Kelly holds open the van door as Sgt. David Bell loads still one more sack of mail.

Self moves earn money

More than $177,570 was paid to soldiers here in incentives last quarter. By doing this the government saved $67,344. Sound a bit confusing?

Well, by moving themselves instead of having the government move their household goods for a stateside assignment these soldiers received a cash incentive. They also had the convenience of having their furniture and other belongings with them when they arrived at their destination.

"Do-It-Yourself moves, or DITY, is a voluntary program where the soldier move his household goods himself rather than have the government hire a mover," said Mrs. Janis Moore, Chief of the Household Goods Section, Transportation office.

Here's how it works.

The soldier needs to go to the transportation office to see if they are eligible for DITY. If the cost of moving themselves is less than what the government would pay for hired movers then they are eligible.

At the transportation office they can pick up the necessary forms, an application for shipping personal property and an inventory sheet for DITY moves. The inventory sheet is an extensive list used to calculate the number of cubic feet of goods. This will determine the size of trailer or truck the government will rent for the soldier.

After meeting with a transportation counselor to work out the details of the size of trailer or truck, mileage and how long the truck or trailer will be rented, the soldier then picks up the truck or trailer, packs his goods and hits the road to his next duty assignment.

If the final cost of the DITY move is less than 80 percent of what it would cost the government to move the soldier, then the difference between that 80 percent and the actual cost of the move is given to the soldier as incentive, said Mrs. Moore. "Some of the incentives have been as high as $700," she said.

"There are some common problems which the customers can easily overcome," added Mrs. Moore. She explained the biggest problem is that customers have more property than their inventory shows. This gives them a smaller truck or trailer than they need. However, the inventory sheet is the only thing we have to go on when we contract for the truck or trailer."

Another problem the customer faces is not getting to their destination on time or driving more miles than the mileage allows. "The customers then need to pay for the extra days and the mileage themselves," said Mrs. Moore.

The most frequently faced problem is one of weight, said Mrs. Moore. The customers fail to weigh or properly weigh the truck or trailer before and after it's loaded. This can prevent the customer from receiving a monetary incentive.

- You must file a joint return if you are married, unless the exceptions discussed under Single Parents apply, and
- You must pay someone, other than your child under 19 or a person you claim as your dependent, to care for the qualifying person.

The three sections below provide you, the taxpayer, with the information you need to determine if you are eligible to take these tax credits. The requirements stated under Married Couples apply to all three sections, with the exceptions noted under Single Parents and the Disabled Spouse Care Credit.

Married couples

If you and your spouse are working parents and you pay someone to care for your dependent child who is under the age of fifteen, so that you can work or look for work, you may be able to take a tax credit of 20 percent of the amount you paid.

It is important to note that your spouse is considered to have worked if: 1) He or she was a full-time student during each of 5 months during the tax year; or 2) He or she was physically or mentally unable to care for himself or herself.

Only work-related expenses qualify for the credit. These expenses must have been for the well-being and protection of a qualifying person, and they are not considered work-related merely because they occurred while you were working. Examples of child care expenses include: Expenses for nursery school or day school for preschool children if you paid them to allow you to work; or, expenses for a babysitter or housekeeper to care for your children so that you can work.

However, amounts you paid for food, clothing or education, are not child care expenses. Thus, schooling in the first grade or higher is not considered a child care expense, nor is the cost of getting the child to and from your home and the care location. Also you may only include expenses you had for a qualifying person during the time that person qualified (in other words if your child turns 15 in April, you can only use the expenses you had prior to your child's birthday).

To compute the child care credit you must look to the limits on the amount of work related expenses allowed by the Internal Revenue Service. These include both the earned income limit and the dollar limit.

Simply stated, the earned income limit requires that the amount of your work-related expenses during any tax year used to figure this credit may not be more than your earned income or the earned income of your spouse, whichever is less. Earned income includes: wages, salaries, tips, other employee compensation, net earnings from self-employment, and any housing allowances. Earned income does not include pensions, annuities, unemployment compensation or workman's compensation. Thus, if you have one child you may be entitled to a maximum credit of 20 percent of $2,000; however, if your earned income is $10,000 and your spouse's is $1,500, you can only get a credit of 20 percent of $1,500, even if your child care expenses are $2,000 or more.

In situations where your spouse is either a full-time student, or not physically or mentally capable of caring for himself or herself, your spouse will be considered to have earned income of $166 a month if there is one qualifying child in your home, or $333 if there are two or more qualifying children in your home. Only one spouse can be considered to have earned income of $166 or $330 for any one month.

The dollar limit requires that the maximum amount of work-related expenses you paid during your tax year which you may take for one qualifying person is $2,000, or for two or more qualifying persons, $4,000. Since the tax credit is 20 percent of these work-related expenses, then the most you may reduce your tax in any year is $400 if your expenses are for one qualifying person or $800 if the expenses are for two or more.

To claim the child care or disabled spouse care credit complete Form 241 (Credit for Child and Dependent Care Expenses), or a statement with the details and how you figured the credit, and attach it to your Form 1040 (not 1040A). This credit is limited to your tax liability and is not refundable.

Single parents

This credit is also available to a divorced or separated parent who has custody of a child under 15, even though the parent may not be entitled to a dependency exemption for the child. Thus, if you are divorced, legally separated under a decree of divorce or separate maintenance, or separated under a written separation agreement, your child or stepchild qualifies if you had custody for a longer time during the calendar year than the other parent. Besides the age requirement your child must have:

- Been in the custody of one or both parents for more than half of the year, and
- Received more than half of his or her support from one or both parents.

All the requirements stated above under the married couples section apply to single parents, except for the need to file a joint return. If you are legally separated under a decree of divorce or of separate maintenance, you are not considered married and you may claim the credit (if you meet all the requirements) on a separate return. If you are married and file a separate return, you will not be considered married (and are eligible for the credit) if:

- Your home was the home of a qualifying person for more than half the tax year, and
- You paid more than half the cost of keeping up your home for the tax year, and
- Your spouse did not live in your home for the last 6 months of the tax year.

Remember, you must meet all the requirements listed under the married couples section stated above, including the limits on work related expenses.

Disabled spouse care credit

If your spouse is physically or mentally unable to care for himself or herself and you must pay someone to take care of them so you can work or look for work, then you may be entitled to a tax credit for these work-related expenses. This credit has the same requirements as the child care credit stated above, except for the additional prerequisites listed below.

First of all, the physical or mental incapacity of your spouse must be disabling. Examples of this are persons who are not able to dress, clean or feed themselves because of physical or mental problems, or persons with mental defects who require constant attention to prevent injury to themselves or others.

An important fact-to-note is that you are allowed this credit only for expenses you have for services performed in your home, so that you could work. Thus, if you place your disabled spouse in a nursing home, payments to the nursing home for his or her care are not considered work-related expenses. However, if your spouse remained in your home, you may treat as work-related expenses (within the earned income and dollar limits) the wages you paid a household employee whose work included caring for your spouse so you could work.

Remember a disabled person is considered to have earned income of $166 a month if there is one qualifying person in your home, and $333 a month if there are two or more qualifying persons in your home. Furthermore, only one spouse can be considered to have earned income of $166 or $333 for any one month.

Sheriff's Target

Last week we had an incident on post in which a dependent wife, after shopping at the Main Mall PX, was approached by a man with a knife as she was entering her automobile.

Through quick thinking and determination, she pushed the man away, ran, yelled for help, and escaped unharmed. The man fled, was pursued and caught by three Ranger students, apprehended by military police, and turned over to the FBI for processing and eventual prosecution.

Assaults against women, sexual or otherwise, are not very common here; but there have been 16 incidents since the beginning of this fiscal year Oct. 1.

While most of these involved domestic disputes between husbands and wives, it is still a good idea to take heed of some measures to insure that such incidents do not happen to you.

When leaving your home, regardless for how long, lock your doors. When riding in a vehicle keep your doors locked. Never pick up hitchhikers. If you have automobile trouble, raise the hood, tie a handkerchief or something white to the radio antenna or door handle and remain in your car with the doors locked.

Ask anyone who stops to assist you to report your predicament to the nearest service station rather than accepting their help unless you know them. When parking at night, park only in areas that are well lighted or will be well lighted when you return.

When leaving your vehicle, lock all doors to prevent anyone from entering and hiding in it. Check both the front and rear compartments of your automobile when you return to make sure no one is hiding inside. Do not go walking after dark if you can help it and never go alone if possible. There is safety in numbers. Also avoid taking shortcuts through wooded areas. Make sure the entrances to your residence are well lit. When returning home, whether during daylight or after dark, before getting out of your car have your house key in hand.

It is also a good idea to have your automobile key in hand before approaching your car to enter. Never admit strangers to your home. Ask for identification. All post engineers have identification as do Southern Bell telephone installers and repairmen.

Alone - separation brings

By Tim Boivin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Whew! What a long day. First the formation at 5:30 a.m., then off to the range after breakfast, not to return until dinnertime. Those C-rations weren't so hot for lunch, either. Turning the car into the driveway, the thought should be 'Ah! Home, sweet home!'

Why is there this sudden uneasy feeling engulfing the entire body as the car door slams behind? Maybe that argument last night solved things, maybe it didn't. If only she could understand.

It doesn't take long to start up where it left off. First, the old inquisition. "Where have you been? Dinner was served a half-hour ago. The kids wanted to see you before they went to their scout meeting but, no, you couldn't be here. I know you want to serve your country, but what's the matter with paying your family a little attention?"

Reaching the end

The breaking point has been reached. Amazingly calm, but with a hurt feeling never uncovered before, the response; "I can't take it anymore. Arguing every night, even with the kids around. It's no good for me, it's no good for you and it sure isn't any good for the kids. You won't see a counselor for ways to make our marriage work, yet you want me to provide all the answers so it will work. What do I look like, a computer? I don't have all the answers. I'm leaving you. You'll hear from my lawyer.

And another military marriage heads down the rocky road of separation on its way to divorce. A lot of times those rocks turn to boulders as soldiers face the reality of property settlements, visitation rights, figuring out who owes who what and assorted other little ditties not even thought of before.

Jake W., a specialist fourth class with Headquarters Command here, reveals, "Not only did I face those problems, but my wife also wrote a bad check while we were separated and she wouldn't even let my parents visit their grandchild unless I came along, despite the fact that they live just five miles from her in Virginia.

Financial hardships faced

"I was held responsible for the check and didn't find out until recently that there is a special identification card that replaces the one they usually give dependents separated spouses. On this one she isn't allowed to write checks. Boy, did I hard way."

Jeff Z., a private first class with Headquarters Command, said, "The biggest problem I faced change

when I got separated was financial. I was left with the apartment electric payments, not to mention the car payment, food and luxuries. Together we barely made ends meet. With the separation it was like a nightmare."

Legal Assistance helps

Capt. John Phelps of the Legal Assistance section of the Staff Judge Advocate's office here said, "We don't have all the answers for a soldier's problem during separation, but if they make an appointment with us we can advise them so they'll be able to avoid many of the legal pitfalls."

Legal Assistance will advise soldiers on the legal rights and obligations they still have in the marriage. Phelps elaborated, "Even if the parties don't intend to file for divorce right away, a separation agreement can eliminate many problems during the separation. The agreement will define the rights and responsibilities of both parties in the separation. Not knowing the rights and responsibilities in a separation can cause hardships and bad feelings on both sides."

Drawing up agreement

Although Legal Assistance can't represent soldiers in a civilian court, they can assist the soldier by drawing up the separation agreement. Phelps explained, "If the separation is for the reason of getting a divorce, we draw up the agreement when requested to do so. In it we outline responsibilities relating to child support and visitation, debts, property settlement and the obligation to the spouse, even though they aren't divorced yet."

Phelps added that the spouse is allowed to keep the dependent identification card until the divorce is final. However, as Jake W. put it, "There is a special card for separated spouses that doesn't allow them to cash checks. I went to the commissary here (my wife had cashed the bad check in a commissary in Virginia) and asked them why I still had to pay for the check. They said I was still responsible for wife's actions since we weren't yet divorced. Now I'm on the bad check roster because of someone I'm trying to get divorced from."

Watch legal problems

That wasn't Jake's only problem. He continued, "We owned a mobile home. My wife sold it to a couple who couldn't get a loan. She signed a personal contract with them so, while I was still paying off six months worth of payments on the home, she wasn't even living in it and making money off of it too. I was paying for something I didn't even know I didn't own."

Jake found out, a little too late again, that he could have avoided this problem also. He explained, "She had a power of attorney in my name so she was within her rights in selling the home. If someone is going through a legal separation, they should cancel any power of attorney their spouse has. It will save a lot of financial grief."

Jake also advised, "If you have a joint bank account, as soon as you get separated set up separate bank accounts and close the joint account. That's just using common sense."

Applauds Legal Assistance

Jeff Z. applauded the efforts of his lawyers at Legal Assistance, saying, "The appointment only took a couple days; my lawyer was very good with advice on how to solve my financial difficulties and also how to handle the pressure."

Jeff went on to advise, "If you're going through a separation, try to control the heat of passion on a date until you are in private or after you're divorced. Remember, although you are separated, you're still legally married and being caught in the act can result in being taken to court for adultery. Adultery is punishable in Georgia by a jail term of up to five years and also punishable under the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ)."

Amazingly, Jake W. still hasn't lost his sense of humor despite his recent disappointments. In an anecdote to his story, he laughingly said, "After all the problems my wife has caused me, financial and otherwise, she called me up recently and wanted to get back together. Needless to say, I declined."

Seeking professional help

For some, counseling works

By Tim Boivin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Both soldiers interviewed by The BAYONET on the problems they faced during legal separation took advantage of counseling to try to solve their marital problems. Although both marriages eventually failed, Jake W. and Jeff Z. strongly endorsed counseling as a way, if not to save the marriage, then to save self-esteem and figure out what went wrong.

Jeff Z. said, "I tried counseling but my wife gave up on it. At first I placed all the blame on myself, figuring I was responsible for all the problems we had. With the counseling I began to realize I couldn't be responsible for all the problems, that we had to share them and work them out together. However, my wife wouldn't come for help, so how could we work it out together?"

Jake W. elaborated even further, saying, "If you feel your marriage is heading for a separation, go to the Army doctors trained to help people try to figure out their problems or to the chaplains. They'll see you together or separate."

Two chaplains, Capt. Mark Fritch and Capt. Charles Canada of The Infantry Chapel on Main Post, have dealt with the marital problems of many soldiers. Their main advice was that they can't Jake went on to explain, "Being married to someone in the military is hard. My wife said she wanted a full-time husband, not a part-time husband. I was in combat arms and that made it even more of a problem because of the time spent in the field." solve the problems for a marriage but they can suggest options to the troubled couple.

Fritch said, "The type of counseling we use depends on the couple's individual needs. A lot of it is just letting them vent their problems while lending an ear. If a person or couple comes to see us, they usually want to save their marriage. They aren't the ones who found another lover."

Canada emphasized, "Although the cause you hear for many of the break-ups is that the dependent spouse couldn't handle military life, that usually isn't the sole factor causing the problem. It could be one of many problems, such as the individual's

Band to perform

The United States Continental Army Band, the official musical representative of the United States Army Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC), will be featured in concert at the Hardaway High School Auditorium in Columbus on Feb. 16 at 8 p.m. It is co-sponsored by Fort Benning and Columbus College.

The TRADOC Band's appearance at Hardaway ends a 16-day tour of the Southeast. The 65-member band, which is homebased at Fort Monroe, Va., will present a non-stop program of stirring patriotic melodies as well as several contemporary works.

Directed by Capt. Kenneth H. Rose, the band will appear Feb. 4-15 at the Florida State Fair and at several concert sites in the Tampa-St. Petersburg, Fla., area before sweeping through Georgia enroute back to Virginia. Band members are all graduates of the School of Music in Norfolk, Va., and many hold baccalaureate and graduate degrees in music.

In addition to military and civic performances in the Virginia Peninsula area, the band annually visits a wide variety of cities and towns throughout the nation. In 1975 the band toured the Northeast during the Army's Bicentennial, then went on an extended tour in 1976 during the nation's Bicentennial. This talented group of musicians from TRADOC has performed at Disneyland and Walt Disney World as well as appearing in the Rose, Orange, and Cotton Bowl Parades.

Free tickets for the TRADOC Band's performance may be obtained at the Columbus College Fine Arts Department or Military Science Professor or at Fort Benning's Public Affairs Office, room 604, Infantry Hall.

NCOA plays role

In the interest of fairness, the Jan. 5 news item, "Cash BAS Approved for Enlisted on TDY," printed in the ARMY TIMES should have given credit also to the Noncommissioned Officers Association of the United States Army. It too played an active role in the passage of equitable per diem payments to officers and enlisted.

Hubcap thieves haunting post lots for wire wheels

Prime target for thieves

Continuing thefts leave many soldiers here riding without their hubcaps.

The thefts, which occur on almost a daily basis, are directed at mostly wire wheel hubcaps on late model cars and are particularly prevalent in large parking lots such as at Building 4 and the hospital, but have also occurred at smaller parking lots at post clubs and units.

A military police spokesman has some advice for drivers who wish to keep their hubcaps where they belong. "Don't leave a car in an unlit area for a long period of time," he said, "and mark the hubcaps someplace with your name and Social Security number. This will help in recovering them in the event they do get stolen. If your unit supply doesn't have an engraver for you to use for this purpose, the military police do. We would be happy to let you use it."

Other advice from the MPs is to park in driveways in the housing areas where possible and to report any suspicious activity. "Try to get a good description of the suspicious person and a license number if possible," the spokesman concluded.

Reservists sought

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--Soldier leaving active duty will soon know a lot more about their opportunities in the Reserve Components (RC). Beginning this month, active Army units will give soldiers getting out of the service facts about opportunities offered by the Army National Guard (ARNG) and Army Reserve (USAR). The initial briefing will be given at battalion and company level about 60 days before a soldier's separation date. Previously, this information was provided mostly at Separation-Transfer Points.

Strengthening the link between active Army and Reserve units is one of the policy change objectives, say officials. In-service these recruiters are full-time active duty RC members who enlist, transfer or refer soldiers leaving active duty into USAR or ARNG units.

At present, there are 23 ARNG and 32 USAR ISR personnel at 25 posts in the continental United States. There are also five ARNG and 13 USAR ISR personnel in Europe. By the end of February, the number of USAR in-service recruiters will increase to 20. Additional ISR personnel are being assigned to Europe and Korea to support the program as it expands Army-wide.

Unit reenlistment personnel will receive additional information about RC options from the mobile retention training team, say officials. Specific information on RC benefits and options will also be sent to units. In addition, the reenlistment NCO course will be expanded from three and a half to five weeks to include instruction for RC units.

Counseling

personality, how they live their life, relate in the marriage and adapt to the military aspects of the marriage. However, they use the catch-all, "I can't take military life anymore."

Fritch explained, "I ask them what their goal is, what they want to accomplish during the separation and who can help them. This builds in a sense of accountability so they plan a way of working to get it together. We try to set realistic goals, we don't ask them to reach for the moon. In the end, it's what they do, not what we counsel, that decides whether or not they work out their problems."

Although Jake W. advised a trial separation before a legal separation to see if the couple really want to get divorced, both chaplains strongly disagreed. Fritch said, "A lot of people have this misconception that a trial separation will help them get it together, as though it's the answer to all their problems. We've found that people separate to give acceptability to the eventual divorce, theorizing or rationalizing that they tried a separation, tried counseling and nothing worked, so the divorce is warranted."

Canada added, "They're just pushing the responsibility off themselves and on to someone else. Separation, especially legal separation, is a copout. They don't know what they really want. Legal separation is the same as a doctor telling a cancer patient they have one year to live. A court is telling the couple that their marriage has a certain amount of time before it dies."

When the separation becomes a reality, Fritch said, "We try to help the soldier figure out who they are and what direction they are going in. It takes a lot of self-perception to gain a self-image and decide if they will be able to go it alone. The marriage offered a sense of security and they found the routine very comfortable, even with the problems. Suddenly they're without the routine they were used to."

Canada added, "It also comes down to how they can help and how they view themselves, instead of just letting fate decide."

Fritch summed up his views on separation by saying, "Don't separate just for the sake of separating. Make it an accountable, responsible and decisive time in your life that accomplishes something instead of destroying something. It's only you who can decide what to do."

Canada added, "I want the individual to take responsibility if the marriage doesn't work out. I was just there to challenge, assist and make the initiative. A counselor isn't their parent telling them what to do."

Grief sets in

By Tim Boivin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

One of the philosophies that Chaplains (Capt.) Mark Fritch and (Capt.) Charles Canada follow when counseling soldiers going through separation is the Kubler-Ross finding on death.

Fritch likened the feeling a soldier who is going through a separation to the feeling a cancer patient has when told they have only six months to live, only it's the marriage that's dying instead of the individual. Kubler-Ross researched people who were dying, the close relatives and friends around them and what feelings they went through after finding out either their life or the life of someone close to them was in danger of ending.

Kubler-Ross found that people go through different stages called anticipatory grief:

- Denial that is happening to them.
- Anger, usually spread around, over the situation. They blame anything and everything. A question often raised during this time is "Only if..." When it came to separations, the chaplains said the anger could be directed toward themselves, their spouse, other people, such as supervisors who make them work late, the Army or the system as a whole.

• Bargaining may also come into play. As a divorce appears more and more imminent, they may bargain children and property. The chaplains also explained that there is an emotional or spiritual bargaining stage in which a lot of fencing is done between the parties involved.

• Depression is the stage where they begin to take things within themselves. Signs of depression may include such things as becoming inactive, lethargic, they may not go to work, lose sleep or sleep too much.

• Acceptance is the stage in which they are finally able to deal with the problem. A lot of stages overlap and there is not a set order in which they will come. The chaplains explained that certain stages help them in counseling because they can tell people that they are normal and advise them on how to deal with them.

Airborne players toughen up for the First Beret Bowl while Mike Williams, one of the coaches, helps out. They'll face the Rangers Feb. 15 in Doughboy Stadium to see who wins the beret. Admission is free.

Teams prepare for football game

Rangers, Airborne battle for beret

By Jeffrey M. Frazer
Airborne Department writer

Although Brent, Phyllis, and Irv have already forwarded their regrets for the Beret Bowl, some of the Philadelphia Eagles may want to come after the way they played on Sunday. According to some of the Ranger and Airborne Instructors, the big game on Feb. 15 will see some harder hitting in Doughboy Stadium than occurred in the Superdome.

Rangers have assets

Jerry Fields and George Ponder of the Ranger Team made it very clear about the way they felt the game would be played.

"We'll run right at them up the middle and break through whatever defense that they might have," said Fields. "We will win this football game because we have a faster offense, a stronger defense, and lightning execution. Bob Simons, our quarterback, has had a great deal of experience in the backfield at West Point and will prove to be a big asset for us. Very simply, we have more talent than they do."

Ponder agreed and cited motivation as the key to winning. "The competitive spirit of the Ranger Department breeds the intense motivation to win. Duane Cameron, the Department Director, has been at every practice and this has really motivated the team. The beret that has been bronzed and will go to the winners is black and we will not give it away to anyone. We have a lot of friends in the Airborne Department and we have all the respect in the world for them but I can tell them one thing right now; we will not lose this game."

Airborne has teamwork

Butch Campbell and Terry Hildebrand of the Airborne Team made some quick comments on the outcome of the game.

"We may be just a little behind the power curve right now but by game time, we'll be ready," said a confident Campbell. "With morale and esprit de corps in this Department, we will be more than ready. The Rangers had better have all the help they can get if they expect to keep it close."

Hildebrand added, "I feel that the Airborne Department will win this game through its professional pride and teamwork. The Rangers can't win with just a show of brute force. The precision of our execution and the extent of the complexity of our plays will totally out-manuever the entire Ranger Team."

Kick-off time is 2 p.m. but you should arrive early to get a good seat. The Silver Wings will be jumping into the stadium and other entertainment is planned. Concessions will be available. Admission is free.

Football training starts

The Fort Benning Doughboys football team will begin weight training for their 1981 season Feb. 16 at Briant Wells Fieldhouse.

Anyone interested in joining the team should come by the fieldhouse at 6 p.m. or contact Head Coach Ralph Santaliz at 545-5777.

Post level players

Awarded scholarships

By Becky Bulgrin

Sportswriters usually report the normal things that go on with post teams like how many games they've won, who they defeated and what the score was. Individual players are profiled, but there is often one thing that is overlooked as far as individuals on teams like the Doughboys are concerned. That is the benefits these players can get.

For example: The Fort Benning Doughboys football team plays against college-level teams. This gives a good player the necessary experience if he would like to further his career by playing football. Lawrence Anderson, a soldier from Company B, Headquarters Command, is one such person. Doughboy head coach Ralph Santaliz is in the process of getting Anderson a scholarship to one of four colleges or universities, including the University of Florida.

Twenty-year-old Anderson hails from Tampa, Fla. and has been playing football since he was 13-years-old, the last two years with the Doughboys. "I played for my high school, but it wasn't a big school and we didn't get much notice," remembers Anderson. "I've learned a lot since playing with the Doughboys, but I'll be getting out of the Army soon and plan on going to college."

Players college material

Santaliz knew this. He also knows that Anderson is college material. He won the Coach's Award his first season and a trophy for "Best Tight End" last season. "Since he's kind of shy and doesn't like to tout his playing abilities, I approached him about getting a scholarship," said Santaliz. "He's also very coachable, wants to learn and worked hard throughout the season. Anytime we (the coaches) see athletes like this, we work to get them scholarships or other aid."

Anderson isn't the only post-level player the coach has helped. Mark Toney played for the Doughboys last year and is now attending Tuskegee Institute in Alabama on a grant and aid. Ron Hilliard is now on a scholarship at Carson Newman College. Football isn't the only sport players have received scholarships for either. Charlie Jackson, who played for the Doughboy basketball team two years ago, is now attending Columbus College on a basketball scholarship, thanks to Santaliz.

Discipline, maturity help

"College coaches jump at this type of player," said Santaliz. "They aren't just out of high school, they've been in the military, have more discipline and are more mature. That's besides their extra experience."

People like these may not have been recognized for their playing abilities because they were too small, didn't have enough experience or maybe their small high school was overlooked by colleges offering scholarships. These same people join the service for job experience, travel, a career or other reasons. They then join a post-level sports team for which they practice on their own time, along with working their normal job, and find they may have a chance for the opportunity of a lifetime — to continue their education by playing a sport they love. A chance they might not have otherwise had if not for joining the service and playing on a post-level team.

Boxers go to tourney

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"I'm going to FORSCOM with two things in mind," said Fort Benning boxer Larry Golden. "One - I have no friends in the ring, and two - I'm coming out a winner."

Golden is one of the twelve Benning boxers now in training for the upcoming tournament at Fort Campbell, Ky. Feb. 9-13. He started boxing in 1977 at Fort Stewart, Ga. and says he's come a long way since then through a lot of hard work and dedication. Golden now has a 61-8 record, but has only fought with Benning twice so far. He lost his first bout, but turned around and won the second by knocking his opponent out in 42 seconds.

"FORSCOM is only two weeks away and the training we're going through isn't getting any easier," said Golden, who'll be fighting at 119 pounds.

Training started two weeks ago and the boxers have been getting time off from their units to work out six hours a day. They started out with running, calisthenics and "punching the bags" and are now into sparring.

Middleweight Larry Brown hasn't fought with the team yet because he couldn't get time off and says he'd like to thank Post Commander Maj. Gen. David E. Grange Jr. for the time off for preparation for the tournament.

"Working all day then trying to come in at night and train would completely wear us out and it would be hard to train the next day," he explained. Brown has a lot of boxing experience and says he'll be ready for FORSCOM. He has fought in Korea twice, Japan and the Philippines.

Dennis Miller has only been here for two weeks, but when the 5'1", 106-pound boxer found out the team was looking for a flyweight, he told roommate and fellow boxer, Rodrick Williams, that he was interested. Miller fought while stationed in Korea and says, "I'm going to give 150 percent at FORSCOM and I'll be a definite problem for my opponent."

Williams has fought with Benning 14 times and only lost two of his bouts. He has four years of experience and will be fighting at 125 pounds. "We're just trying to be the best; that's what the coach tells us to strive for," he commented.

Twenty-year-old Dwayne "Scrap Iron" Edwards has taken five of the 14 bouts he's fought with Benning during their season. "Three of those times were to the same person and I'm looking to get him at Fort Campbell," said Edwards. The Newport, R.I. native has been boxing since he was nine-years-old and has competed in the New England Golden Gloves and Southeastern Golden Gloves tournaments. Edwards will be fighting in the 139-pound weight class.

Light heavyweight Willie J. Shiver last fought in 1978 at Fort Stewart. "It's been a long time since I've boxed but I'll be ready," said Shiver. "The training's been hard and a lot of sacrifices have been made, but I'm out to do my best."

According to boxing coach Anthony Stoddard, the team's progress has been very good, especially because of the time they're getting for training. "We appreciate the cooperation of the unit commanders and we expect to leave Fort Campbell 'looking good,'" he concluded.

Doughgirls lose to experience

Benning shot down by 76ers

The Fort Benning Doughgirls' second attempt at the Paper Machine 76ers from Atlanta failed when the much-more experienced 76ers rolled over Benning 93-53 Saturday at Audie Murphy Gym. The Doughgirls previously played the Paper Machine earlier in the season and took an 87-52 loss.

Although the Doughgirls took a steep loss, Coach Perry Graves said they still played well. "The 76ers have four college-level players and are very experienced, while the Doughgirls are still learning to play together as a team."

Lisa Myers was game-high scorer, putting in 21 for the Doughgirls. Teresa Irving followed with 12 and Shirley McCoy and Gail Payton added eight each.

The Paper Machine only had nine players throughout the game and all of them scored. A. Powell led the 76ers with 18 points and Brenda Singleton and R. Hamilton were close behind with 17 each. Cynthia Hughes added 13 and P. Arnold put in 10.

Fouls were plentiful for both teams. The Doughgirls ended with 37 and four players fouled out of the game in the second half. The 76ers had a total of 27 fouls and three players fouled out.

The Doughgirls will face the Fort Rucker Flyettes this weekend at Fort Rucker. Friday's game starts at 6 p.m. and Saturday's action gets underway at 2 p.m.

Many people find different kinds of hobbies during the winter months to help pass the time away. Three young ladies from Fort Benning, who are members of a local figure salon, decided to try something different.

To their surprise, Kuwik placed second, and Motton and Smith each placed third in their age groups. A hearty congratulations goes out to these three ladies for a job well done.

AMU's Joe Steed finished in third place at 2,641-75x to complete a sweep of the top three awards. Woods also won the International Center Fire match with 592 points out of 600 while Erich Buljung scored 560 points out of 600 to win the Olympic Free Pistol style event.

Charles McCowan was high individual in the Standard Pistol match at 572, while John Kailer, Ken McNally and Waymond Alvis tied for first in the 25 meter rapid fire event at 585. Alvis was declared the winner on the basis of the last ten shots (97) while Kailer finished second (96) with McNally (94) third.

Next week, the national indoor rifle sectionals will begin with some of the top teams and individual competitors in the country scheduled to attend. Two-time Olympic champion Lones Wigger, the pre-match favorite, will make his bid for a record sixth indoor national title.

Erich Buljung of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit scored 560 points out of 600 to win the Free Pistol event in competition held here last weekend. The Free Pistol match is considered the most difficult of all international pistol events held in Olympic and World Shooting Championships.

Doughboys' win streak ends

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Doughboys annihilated their six-game winning streak last weekend by losing three straight games against two teams from Columbus.

Thursday's game against the Columbus YMCA 85-82 was lost on the free-throw line, according to Coach Oliver Green. "We outscored them on the court, but they scored 30 points on foul shots, while we only scored eight," said Green.

The Doughboy's luck didn't get any better as they faced Cascade Wines from Beallwood Heights Friday and Sunday. "We beat Cascade once at the season's start, so the team was a little overconfident this time," Green said. Cascade rolled over Benning 111-93 the first game.

Mike Mack was the Doughboy's high-scorer with 24 points, and Robert Thomas was close behind with 21. Harry Lyons added 20 and Nate Harris put in 11.

Gary Wilson led Cascade with 35 points. Leonard Hill added 19 and Sam Billins and Willie Lawrence added 11 each to their victory.

Cascade nipped a 76-74 win over the Doughboys when they came back to Briant Wells Fieldhouse Sunday. The Doughboys weren't so confident after the first loss and played much better this game, according to Green. "We kept up with them this time, but toward the end the balls put up just wouldn't fall."

The Doughboys came out on top at the half with a 44-41 lead and kept it until the clock read 9:10 in the second half. That's when Cascade tied the score 67-all. After taking the lead on the next shot by Wilson, Cascade didn't lose it and drove on to victory.

Harris led the Doughboys with 29 points. Lyons put in 22 and Mack added 17.

Wilson came back as Cascade's high-scorer with 27 points. Lawrence added 19 and Hill added 18.

The Doughboys next two games will be Feb. 6 and 7 when they travel to Moody Air Force Base in Valdosta, Ga.

How About That?

By William Erbach, Sr.
36th Engineer Group Chaplain

Once there was a big black dog named Nero who was a very popular dog in our neighborhood. All the children liked to play with him because he was gentle and ran after them or came when he was called.

Instead of having one master he responded to everyone; a super friendly mut. Even the mothers and fathers liked him because he was a reliable dog.

But Nero had a very silly trick. He would chase his tail. Now I'm sure you've seen a dog do this, or even a cat, but here was Nero who was almost addicted to it, for he would chase his tail around and around until he practically dropped from exhaustion. Around and around he would go, but he would never get anywhere.

There are a lot of people who spend most of their lives chasing around like Nero. Around and around they go, never getting anywhere. Some folks are so busy making money or building up a reputation that they never stop to consider where they are going or the true worth of the things they seek.

John D. Rockefeller, that man of much money, admitted that in the first few years of his life he was too busy making money to enjoy himself and for the next few years he was too busy trying to keep his money. He spent the last few years trying to find a doctor who could help him enjoy food. This rich man said, "I'd give all I have to enjoy a good meal!" How About That?

Most of you are in the early to middle stages of your lives. What has been the sum total of your chasings? Do you have the Nero complex of chasing rainbows and piling up things, around and around but getting nowhere? Or have you examined your life and its goals, which should include doing things for others outside the circle called yourself and finding peace and satisfaction in a job well done?

Breakfast slated

Approximately 250 Fort Benning personnel will take part in an annual National Prayer Breakfast Thursday at 6:45 a.m. in the Top Five Noncommissioned Officer Club.

The observance is in conjunction with the Presidential Prayer Breakfast begun in 1953 during Dwight D. Eisenhower's term.

Its purpose is to bring together the leadership of the United States in recognition of the moral and spiritual values upon which the nation is founded.

The pastor of the First Baptist Church, Rev. Robert Potts, will be the guest speaker and Brig. Gen. Edward L. Trobaugh, deputy commander Fort Benning, will be the host.

This week's WFBG brings tax help, Spectrum

By Bill Powell
 WFBG broadcaster

WFBG-TV has many different programs to entertain and inform. If there are other programs you'd like to see just write us at The Fort Benning Public Affairs Office, Bldg. 4, Room 601, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905 or call 545-2201. Following are programs highlighted from next week's schedule:

- "The Benning Report" interviews people making news and takes a look at sports. If taxes are foremost in your thoughts then a visit by Capt. John Phelps of the Legal Assistance Office to talk about the tax assistance available on post should be something to cure that headache April 15th's deadline generates.

- "Big Picture-Bridge at Remagen" takes you back to 1945 when American troops established the first bridgehead on the Rhine River and the effect it had on the war in Europe.

- "Reflections on History", with host Dick Grube, Curator of the National Infantry Museum honors the Infantry and its contributions to the nation.
- "Jesse Owens Returns to Berlin" is stirring look at the late Jesse Owens and how he acted while he was in the so-called "Nazi Olympics of 1936". Owens points out the equal opportunity principle that applied in both the Olympics and the Armed Forces.

- "Spectrum" is WFBG-TV's four hour music and information program.

Loose pets cause post problems

Animals are once again causing problems on Fort Benning. Or perhaps it would be more accurate to say that the owners of animals are causing themselves problems.

According to SFC Homer H. Haracourt, the chief game warden here, there were 80 pet complaints during the month of December. Complaints ranged from pets making excessive noise to stray pets, inhumane treatment of pets and people not cleaning up yards after their pets.

Haracourt said 26 dogs and seven cats were impounded in December. So far this month, there have been about 25 dogs and two cats impounded and one complaint about a 10-foot snake living in one house.

According to a message sent out by the Assistant Commander recently, wild animals such as squirrels, rabbits, skunks, foxes, raccoons, monkeys and snakes are not allowed to be kept in government quarters. This does not include small caged pets such as gerbils, white mice, guinea pigs or fish.

In some cases exceptions can be made. Such requests for exception can be sent to the Assistant Commanders office; ATTN: ATZB-ACO. In any case, if the exception is not obtained the occupant of quarters is in violation of the regulation and could be directed to move off post.

In the last few months there have been 28 letters of warning issued and eight pets have been directed to be removed from post.

Haracourt went on to say that, since mid-January, Fort Benning has had a full time dog catcher who remains on duty in the housing area throughout each day. "There will be a more concentrated effort to impound stray animals," he said.

In order to help catch strays a tranquilizer gun that knocks the animals out for six to eight minutes is used. The post has also ordered some live animal traps to help catch the wild domestic cats living in the woods and sewers around the post.

The first time a pet is picked up the owner receives a letter of warning. If it happens again the owner is directed to remove the pet from post. Pets involved in an unprovoked scratching or biting incident will also be immediately removed from the post.

Original Star Wars still heroic

By Bill Powell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If there is anyone in the U.S. who hasn't heard about "Star Wars" I don't know who it is. "Star Wars" is the most successful movie to date in the U.S. and overseas. It's spawned many space toys, posters and numerous other items, not to mention lots of space movies trying to copy "Star Wars" success.

The story is space cowboys and indians. The hero of the story is Luke Skywalker (Mark Hamill), the son of a Jedi Warrior. He seeks to learn the powers of "The Force" and how to make it work for him. The person seeking help is Princess Leia (Carrie Fisher), daughter of the king of the oppressed peoples of space that Darth Vader and his forces of darkness seek to destroy.

The story is totally heroic and very satisfying, made the way movies used to be. The acting is believable and even. The special effects are great and no expense has been spared to make this movie the best.

"Star Wars is a totally enjoyable outing and is a great way to spend an evening even if you've seen it before. The rating could be no less than Four Stars*

His father, assigned to Company B, 3rd Battalion, 5th Special Forces Garrison, at Fort Bragg said, "I've been waiting for this for 20 years. My wife, Donna, and I are very proud of our Airborne son and will be even prouder when he gets his Green Beret." Young Recod is a graduate of Ried Ross High School in Fayetteville, N.C. and is the second of five children.

197th Soldiers test fire Viper

By Gil Carlon

197th Infantry Brigade
Public Affairs Office

Three Fort Benning soldiers recently became the first to fire a new weapon system developed for today's Army. This weapon system is called the Viper and was designed and developed by General Dynamics.

The Viper is a shoulder-fired, short range, anti-tank weapon which is an improvement over the M72A2 Light Anti-tank Weapon (LAW). PFC Michael F. Miller, Pvt David R. Wright, and Pvt Wendall L. Perry, all of Company C, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry (Mechanized), 197th Infantry Brigade, were the first soldiers to test fire the Viper.

A total of 50 soldiers test fired the Viper here, stating that the Viper had no significant recoil. They also felt that the weapon's sighting was much better than that of the LAW.

The Viper was tested to determine its effect on the firer's hearing. Fifty healthy soldiers with normal hearing wore acoustic protection while firing and determined that there is no significant hearing loss when proper protection is used.

These soldiers were selected from volunteers who had excellent health, less than 5 years in service and who were between the ages of 18 and 45-years-old. The volunteers had to give their consent in writing to participate in the test.

Backdated to Nov. 5

Hiring suspended

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--Some civilians who thought they were safe from President Ronald Reagan's recent freeze on federal government hiring face the prospect of no job this week.

In a surprise move Jan. 24, the new president backdated his tough hiring freeze to Nov. 5, the day after he was elected president.

The new policy affects thousands of people who were promised federal jobs over the past two months and were waiting to be put on the payroll. Except in a few cases now, most of them will not be hired.

Former Pres. Jimmy Carter had imposed a partial hiring freeze last March which allowed the filling of only one of every two federal job vacancies. Reagan promised during his campaign for president to extend the freeze and issued the order within hours of his inauguration. However, his decision to make the freeze retroactive to Nov. 5 was unexpected.

The hiring limitation applies to all types of appointments, to include temporary and permanent, part-time and full-time, intermittent, direct and indirect hire. However, it does not apply to executive-level jobs and noncareer positions in the senior executive service. Also, emergency jobs that protect life and property may be exempted from the freeze by the Secretary of Defense.

Further, the President's new policy allows the Secretary of Defense to approve the hiring of temporary workers for traditionally seasonal jobs within the Department of Defense.

Officials at the Office of Management and Budget, which will oversee the freeze, have indicated some exceptions to the policy may be granted in cases where "hardship" to a prospective employee can be proved. Any action along these lines, however, will be made on an individual basis.

Responsibility breeds re-enlistments

By Gary Jones
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Perhaps the highest priority in the Army today is "Manning the Force," because without soldiers, all else becomes unimportant.

Much has been done to increase both enlistments and re-enlistments. Both enlistment and re-enlistment bonuses have increased; recently the Army's tuition assistance program increased by 75 percent of education costs to 90 percent for active duty E-5's and above (who are under 15-years time in service); the recent 11.7 percent pay increase was a definite plus for soldiers, as well as the variable housing allowance, which is an extremely valuable benefit for military families living in high cost areas.

All these factors are extremely attractive to a soldier considering re-enlistment, but in my opinion the highest factor for any potential re-enlistee is job satisfaction. It is vital! If a soldier is unhappy on a day-to-day basis with his job, a negative outlook will loom over all the outstanding benefits the Army can offer.

"I'm now working as a supervisor/worker over four other soldiers," explained one specialist four from Headquarters Command. "I will be re-enlisting soon. It was a hard decision for me."

"I guess what really made me decide to stay in was the fact that in the Army, I've worked my way up the ladder of success in only four years, to a level that would have taken me several years to reach in the civilian job market," he said. "After earning the responsibility and respect I now hold in the Army, there's no way I could get out and start over again at the bottom."

For this newly decided career soldier being granted responsibility and authority helped breed re-enlistment. "Job satisfaction" was the determining factor. However, this specialist four was in a somewhat unique situation. Many of his peers hold jobs that make them feel "like overpaid privates," explained another soldier.

Unfortunately, often leaders are reluctant to give a corporal/specialist four or below much responsibility because they feel the job won't get done. In other words, they are allowing their past experience with a FEW bad lower enlisted soldiers to stereotype their opinions of the majority. Times have changed. With the draft no longer with us, young men and women don't have to join the Army and if they aren't satisfied with their jobs when they do join, they certainly won't stay in. Soldiers today won't tolerate being thought of or treated like "brainless laborers."

It isn't so much that "soldiers today want too much too soon". They simply want to be treated as responsible adults, be given responsibility and penalized accordingly if they prove they can't handle it. For example, often lower EMs are given such missions as "clean the hallway" while on unit detail. Then they are humiliated by having an NCO come back and tell them "sweep it first, then clean out your mop and use a small amount of soap in the water as you mop the floor before using the buffer to get the black marks up, etc."

Any soldier who completed basic training knows how to clean a floor, so really the only command that was needed was the original "clean the floor". If the soldier didn't complete the task satisfactorily, then it would be appropriate for the NCO to give detailed instructions-not before! The same holds true in a soldier's day-to-day job. However, the most important thing is to be given the opportunity to TRY and more often than not to succeed.

The old standard operating procedure, of judging the majority for the actions of the few, just doesn't hold. Knowing that you are important, having the respect of both peers and supervisors is the most important ingredient in establishing job satisfaction and thus, increasing re-enlistments to better man the force.

Visits good!

To the Editor:

Superintendent Richard Coss, Benning's new School skipper, promised Post teachers at the first district meeting that he'd personally visit each classroom, sooner or later. And when the school chief enters the classroom, it's never like having an ordinary visitor. As one teacher quipped, "I don't know which is more dreadful: the superintendent being in your classroom, or you being in his office!"

But teachers don't actually fear superintendents as such, but may view their regal visits with some justifiable misgivings. For example, a teacher may be preoccupied with such anxieties as, "It'd just be my luck for something to go wrong the minute he steps into that door, I'm sure hope that Little Willie doesn't start acting up while the superintendent is here," "The very day he sets foot into that door, I'm going to be at my worst self-I can just feel it!" etc.

So on Jan. 12, the descending sand in my hourglass ran out. I looked around, and there stood Dr. Coss, scintillating through a smile that lit up the classroom. I has met and talked with Dr. Coss on several occasions, but never in the classroom. Within minutes he made me feel more at ease then than at any previous time. It wasn't long before the students had accepted him as part of the class. They were eager to perform (or show off) for him-even the shy ones.

Letters to the Editor

When I realized that Dr. Coss' scheduled visits to the classrooms were predicated fundamentally on positive notes of assistance and encouragement-not on criticism and intimidation-I felt free enough to exchange philosophical views with him about education. Dr. Coss made two fundamental observations against which few would argue:

-- Concerning the difficult task of beginning teachers, he said that the success of the beginner is determined by the college she attended, the school system in which she works, and her supervising principal.

--Concerning the difficulty inherent in teaching today's youths, Dr. Coss mentioned that the long hours children spend before television has taken its toll, adding that T.V. has deprived children of the initiative to think for themselves, and has robbed them of the attention span necessary to be successful academically. We both agreed that teaching methodology today must be tailored to compensate for the sinister forces of television over which teachers have no control.

From an educational view point, Dr. Coss shines from inside out. He can be as modern in his outlook as the youngest of teachers, and as traditional as the oldest of veterans-and with the resiliency to wedge himself anyplace in between.

Soldier's year topped by trip

By Tim Boivin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A trip to Hawaii culminated a long string of surprises for Sgt. Philip G. Johnston recently. After being asked to appear in front of a soldier of the month board on short notice by his company, Johnston went all the way to become Soldier of the Year at Fort Benning.

Johnston, a tech inspector with Company D, 197th Support Battalion, was accompanied on the week long vacation (paid for by TRADOC) by his wife Gail Doreen, a local secretary. The Johnstons stayed at the Armed Forces hotel, Hale Koa, on Waikiki Beach and enjoyed luaus, a windjammer cruise and visiting Diamond Head and the north beach where the world class surfing takes place.

Johnston, a Louisville, Ky. native, said, "What time was left after all that, we spent shopping, sightseeing and laying out on the beach. When I got back, soldiers in my company wanted to know how they could get involved in the program."

The types of questions most soldiers were asking, Johnston explained, "Mainly consisted of what kind of recommendations they needed, what do they look for and what kind of questions were asked. They also inquired if they had to go in front of boards."

Johnston's road to Soldier of the Year for the entire post wasn't exactly a smooth one. He explained, "The first board I appeared before was just a type of 'Hey you, you're available. Appear before the board for us will you?' Each time I went before another board there was more pressure."

Johnston was quick to add, "Just because there was more pressure with each passing board didn't mean the entire process was tough. It just meant sacrificing television a couple of nights in favor of shaking off the boots, brushing them and doing a little studying."

Johnston concluded, "Everybody said how hard it's going to be. For just that little bit of extra effort on my part the rewards are great. I ended up getting promoted, receiving an ARCOM from Maj. Gen. David E. Grange Jr., a cash bonus, exemption from the duty roster and a trip to Hawaii."

Are you 65 or over?

Elderly could lose CHAMPUS

Are you 65 or over? Do you have a spouse in this age group? Is a member of your family disabled or suffering from chronic kidney disease?

By law, retirees, spouses and children of retirees, and spouses and children of deceased service members (active duty or retired) lose eligibility for CHAMPUS when they become entitled to Medicare's Hospital Insurance (Part A).

CHAMPUS eligibility continues for any active duty member or dependent who becomes entitled to Medicare, but Medicare becomes primary (first) payor and CHAMPUS secondary payor.

Medicare is the Social Security Administration's health insurance program for people 65 years of age or older and for some people under 65 who have a disability or chronic kidney condition.

Medicare's Hospital Insurance (Part A): If you are entitled to Social Security cash benefits you get Part A automatically and there is no premium. Also, at this time you lose eligibility for CHAMPUS, unless you are the spouse or child of an active duty member.

Medicare's Medical Insurance (Part B): Part B covers physician's services and other expenses not covered by the Hospital Insurance. There is a premium for Part B and anyone who becomes entitled to Part A is automatically signed up for Part B unless the individual notifies Social Security in writing that he/she does not wish to sign up for this part of Medicare. If an individual chooses not to sign up for Medicare Part B when initially eligible, he/she may subsequently sign up but only during the annual open enrollment period and there is a premium penalty.

Detailed information about Medicare can be obtained from any local office of the Social Security Administration. There is a CHAMPUS Fact Sheet available on this subject, which can be obtained from the Health Benefits Advisor at a Uniformed Service medical facility, or by writing OCHAMPUS or the CHAMPUS Fiscal Intermediary serving your area.

PFC Frederick Thompson

Some heat is needed where I work. We need special classes to update the changes coming out such as the changes in training manuals. We also need more hands-on training.

Sp4 Karen Rainey

We need more classes on combat arms. I see signs saying 'Think Combined Arms' everywhere and I don't know anything about combined arms. I don't think half the people on post know much about combined arms.

Sp4 Dennis Rudd

More training in NBC areas is desperately needed. The Russians train every day and we train once every two or three months. We also need more field training because the Russians train consistently everyday in a real combat situation. Russia's total mission is warfare and still we're spending most of our time in the shop instead of the field.

Sp6 Jack Huggins

A lot of times we do the training but it's useless because the skills aren't being used. Instead we're doing the mundane things. We should be able to use the skills we've been trained in.

Sgt. Kenneth Denton

We need to have more realistic training instead of just generalized training. The training needs to be made as realistic as possible.

Sp4 Ann Byas

We need more interesting presentations. Last week we had an officer who gave us a class and he kept the class loose and tuned in to the subject he was talking about. He got the point across and it was interesting.

Legal Assistance offers free help

By Becky Bulgrin

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Many people in the military who may have some type of legal problem aren't aware that free help is available on post for many different cases.

The Legal Assistance section of the Staff Judge Advocate's (SJA) office handles legal matters ranging from wills to divorce.

However, many people have the misconception that the Legal Assistance section handles Article 15s or courts-martials, according to Capt. John Phelps, chief of Legal Assistance.

Exactly what does and doesn't Legal Assistance offer, and who can get assistance?

Active duty military personnel of all services, their dependents, and retired military personnel and their dependents are eligible, other than in connection with private business activities.

The many services available include advice and assistance (but no appearances or representation in court) on matters concerning personal problems of a civil nature such as marriage, divorce, adoption, civil damage actions, insurance, indebtedness, contracts, paternity actions, non-support, repossessions, leases, changing names, simple wills without trusts, notarized papers, powers of attorney, and tax matters.

Since it is now time for filing income tax returns, Phelps said that state and federal forms are available at Legal Assistance.

"But we do not complete forms for active duty personnel," he added. "If they need help in filing, they should contact their unit tax officer, who is trained for the job. If something in the return is too complicated for the tax officer, he may then make an appointment with us for help. However, retirees may make appointments for assistance on completing their return."

Services not available at the Legal Assistance section include representation in court, advice on military justice or administrative matters such as interpretation of regulations, problems with finance or personnel or claims against the government. While household goods claims aren't handled at Legal Assistance either, they can be taken to the Claims Office at SJA.

Veterans share in record $619.7 million

GI insurance dividends increase

Nearly four million veterans who have kept their GI life insurance policies in force will share in a record $619.7 million dividend during 1981, Administrator of Veterans Affairs Max Cleland announced today.

Because of higher interest rates earned by insurance funds, the amount to be paid to policy holders during 1981 is $53 million above the 1980 figure.

Policy holders will receive varying amounts depending on the type of policy, the amount of insurance in force, the insured's age at issue or renewal and time the policy has been in force.

The average amount to be paid to the 85,700 World War I veterans with current policies is $296.

World War II veterans will receive an average payment of $168 on their active policies versus the

The Trial Defense Service at SJA is the place to get advice and help concerning military criminal matters.

According to Phelps, if someone needs a private attorney, he is referred to the yellow pages in the phone book or to the Georgia lawyer referral service which has a toll-free number in the book. He added that if someone requires an attorney in another state, he is assisted in locating one.

The Legal Assistance section is located in Room 16 of Bldg. 5 on Main Post, at the corner of Sigerfoos Road and Vibbert Avenue. Appointments are necessary for all services except powers of attorney, notarizations or emergencies such as being served with court papers. Call 545-3281; hours are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

"We see a very large number of people here, and a constant variety of problems are handled," said Phelps. "We recently took in 50 powers of attorney in one day."

Sp6 Ken Rush, NCOIC of Legal Assistance, says his job is very demanding at times because of the number of people who come in.

Both Phelps and Rush stressed the importance of people making an appointment at Legal Assistance before signing any contract, lease, or other such agreement. "We'd be more than glad to answer any questions concerning these matters because this may prevent a legal problem before it happens," concluded Phelps.

New Secretary of Army speaks out on priorities

"It is a great honor for me to be chosen to serve as the Secretary of the Army. Obviously, I will be spending the next few days and weeks becoming more familiar with our nation's soldiers — their strengths — and what we can do to help them to be even better prepared to perform their mission.

During peace, the Army's primary mission is deterrence — being so well trained, equipped, and led that no potential adversary would mistake our nation's ability and resolve to defend our interests. The challenges that confront the Army are complex. But I do not intend to allow that complexity to dilute the Army's readiness — In fact, I hope to improve its already considerable capability.

We have thousands of fine soldiers who are ready — and eager — to do whatever is necessary to defend our country. My task, as I see it, will be to give them the additional support — pay, training and material — that they must have to perform at top efficiency.

The life of soldiers never has been easy. But none can devote their attentions to training and working if they are worried about the welfare of their families. I will give this area my personal attention.

We have a fine Army. I intend to devote my energies to making it even better."

Pilot trainee to get Patterson Award

Second Lieutenant John S. Emmerson, a helicopter pilot trainee at Fort Rucker, Ala., has been selected to receive the 29th annual Robert P. Patterson Award.

Emmerson will be presented the award Thursday, at 11 a.m. in the Marshall Auditorium by Mrs. Patterson, wife of the late Secretary of War, for whom the award is named. It goes annually to the person who is selected as the outstanding graduate of the Branch Immaterial Officer Candidate Course (BIOCC) during the previous year. The selection is based on qualities of leadership, academic efficiency, aptitude and character.

Emmerson attended BIOCC from Nov. 1979 to Feb. 1980. He was ranked number one in a class of 164 persons and scored 497 points out of a possible 500 points on the final advanced physical fitness evaluation.

Following graduation from the Infantry Officer Basic Course here, Emmerson was assigned to 64th Company, 6th Battalion, 1st Aviation Brigade at Fort Rucker.

Emmerson entered the Army in July 1976, received basic training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and advanced individual training here. Following graduation from Airborne School, he was assigned to 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry, 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C. He served with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 82nd Airborne Division Command Section, until Nov. 1979, when he entered BIOCC.

Emmerson, 24, is a native of St. Louis, Mo. He graduated from Lincoln High School in Warren, Mo. He attended the University of Missouri-Columbus and also took night classes at Fayetteville, N.C. University while stationed at Fort Bragg.

The Patterson Award was established in 1952 to honor the late Secretary of War, who served in the Army during World War I as a captain.

The award consists of a certificate, .45 caliber service pistol and a check.

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--Soldiers will get a $600 bonus for enlisting or reenlisting in the Individual Ready Reserve (IRR) or the Inactive National Guard (ING). The program began Jan. 2.

The payments are authorized for eligible active, reserve and prior service enlisted personnel who have completed their military service obligation. They must have less than 10 years total service (waivers considered) and enlist for three years in the ING or IRR.

Active duty soldiers can apply for enlistment and bonus eligibility within 90 days of scheduled discharge or separation.

To be eligible for the bonus, service members must remain as enlisted personnel during their period of enlistment. They must possess and be qualified in a primary or secondary MOS specified for the bonus. All specialties except band are initially eligible. Individuals may not change their MOS unless reclassified by HQDA.

The first payment of $300 will be made upon enlistment or reenlistment.

One hundred dollars will be paid each of the next three years completed satisfactorily. Additional bonuses may be paid for future reenlistments if the soldier continues to meet requirements.

Active duty soldiers may get more information through the reserve recruiter at their supporting installation or nearest reserve activity. Members of the IRR or standby reserve should contact their personnel center as follows: Commander, U.S. Army Reserve Components Personnel and Administration Center, ATTN: AGUZ-RCR, 9700 Page Boulevard, St. Louis, Mo. 63132, or call toll free (800) 325-1869.

VA accepts certified statements Documents not essential

Don't let lost documents prevent you from seeking veterans benefits, the Veterans Administration today reminded veterans and their dependents.

A VA spokesman said, "We have found that some veterans who cannot locate birth or marriage certificates don't apply for benefits because they believe these documents are essential."

VA will accept a certified statement instead of an original birth or marriage certificate when needed to establish eligibility. In the case of a marriage this policy applies only to the first marriage for each partner and there must be no contradictory information on file at VA.

In years past, VA required formal documentation to support claims for compensation and education benefits for veterans, widows and orphaned children.

Now, however, VA will accept a certified statement regarding the birth of a veteran's child or as proof of age and relationship in disability cases, the spokesman said.

VA urged veterans and their dependents with eligibility questions to contact the nearest VA regional office or a representative of one of the national veterans organizations.

Languages tie American tongues

Courtesy of READER'S DIGEST

The United States, to its very serious detriment, is virtually tongue-tied when it comes to foreign languages, a condition that is damaging our productivity, our balance of trade, and our diplomatic relations.

In diplomacy, the U.S. inability to communicate in any tongue other than English is shocking. Critics claim that the life of Adolph Dubs, the U.S. ambassador in Afghanistan, could have been saved

Cigarette addiction due to nicotine

Now that scientists have conclusively proved that the nicotine in cigarettes is an addictive drug, it is easier to understand why so many smokers find it difficult to quit — even when they desperately want to.

Paradoxically, the drug that keeps smokers hooked may be the very substance that enables them to break their habit. Walter S. Ross explains in the February Reader's Digest:

Unlike heroin addiction, where a heroin-blocking drug reduces addiction, nicotine-blocking chemicals actually cause smokers to smoke more.

"What does reduce smoking is giving smokers nicotine in some form other than cigarettes," Ross writes. An experimental chewing gum containing a form of nicotine has been developed in Sweden. It produces a blood level of nicotine similar to that produced by smoking a high nicotine/tar cigarette.

Similar results have been found in England and in Canada, where the gum is available as a prescription medicine.

The gum is not yet available in the U.S., although studies are being run at the University of California, Los Angeles. It is not a cure-all, warns Nina G. Schneider, a psychologist at U.C.L.A. "We use it to wean the smoker off nicotine while he or she kicks the psychosocial aspects."

However, if it goes on the market as a prescription drug, it would make it easier for physicians to help their patients quit smoking and much less painful for smokers themselves.

had more embassy staffers trying to negotiate with his kidnapers been fluent in Dari, the official Afghan language. The State Department does not require knowledge of a foreign language for its incoming Foreign Service officer candidates.

In the world of business, according to Nick Thimmesch, who writes in the February Reader's Digest, there are an estimated 10,000 English-speaking Japanese businessmen hard at work in the United States capturing markets here, while fewer than 900 of the U.S. businessmen in Japan can speak Japanese. "Last year this imbalance was one factor helping to push Japan's trade surplus vis-a-vis the United States to $6 million," he states.

Worldwide, Thimmesch continues, Americans are competing with their counterparts from other nations who are often multilingual. At a time when one of every eight American manufacturing jobs depends on world trade, U.S. exports stagnate, and large import surpluses drag down the dollar. Meanwhile, West Germany's exports rose from one-sixth the U.S. figure in 1949 to near equality now. Japan, too, is close on our heels.

The de-emphasis on foreign languages came about during the campus unrest of the late '60s and early '70s — administrators invoked the euphemism "individualized curricula."

To reverse this trend, the President's Commission on Foreign Language and International Studies has made 130 recommendations, which will cost some $178 million. Among them:

- Language requirements should be reinstated for both college admission and graduation.
- Federal and foundation money should be used to upgrade skills of foreign-language teachers.
- Up to 60 language and international-studies high schools should be set up in major cities. Business schools should require language courses.

Rep. Leon Panetta (D., Calif.), a member of the Presidential Commission, drafted an important step when he wrote an amendment to the International Development Cooperation Act requiring that key U.S. foreign-post positions be filled only by persons knowing the language and culture of an assigned country. "We've been guilty of laziness," Panetta says. "We've assumed that the rest of the world would speak English for us. Well, it won't."

Many benefits in career program

TSA, FORT LEE, VA.—Interested in a professionally rewarding job with an opportunity for training, travel and other benefits? The Commissary Career program may be the answer.

Personnel officials from the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency want individuals to work in the Army Commissary System and its 142 commissaries worldwide.

The majority of individuals in the career program enter through the Commissary Management Career Intern Program. A Job Opportunity Announcement advertises the job and individuals who meet the minimum education and experience criteria for entrance level may apply.

Requirements are a bachelor's degree with a major in food industry, food marketing or distribution, marketing, business or public administration, business or commercial law, economics or finance. Three years experience in merchandising, market research, sales promotion or advertising, accounting, administration and distribution of supermarket goods and services or any equivalent combination of education and experience is acceptable.

Applicants from outside the federal government who have a bachelor's degree must pass the Professional and Administrative Career Examination which is administered at area Offices of Personnel Management annually. OPM forwards names of qualified individuals to installation civilian personnel offices which provide a list to TSA. A minipanel is held at TSA to select commissary interns.

After completion of the two-year intern program and a year of on-the-job experience, individuals are considered careerists and are eligible for jobs as commissary officers, deputy commissary officers, meat, grocery or produce department managers or commissary specialists in other areas of experience.

Other benefits include 2½ to 5 weeks' annual, paid vacation, a retirement plan, health benefits, life insurance and sick leave.

The Commissary Career Program needs qualified, dedicated professional workers. Can you meet the challenge?

For further information, write Commander, U.S. Army Troop Support Agency, ATTN: DALO-TAB-C or call Mrs. Joan Way, AUTOVON 687-3790/4740 or Area Code 804-734-3790/4740.

Keep eye on kids

TSA, FORT LEE, VA.—Do you know where your children are — while you're shopping in the commissary?

Customers are urged to keep children with them and under control while shopping in any Army commissary. Small children must ride in shopping carts so that they won't be tempted to handle or damage merchandise.

The installation commander decides if dependent children should be allowed in Army commissaries. They usually are. However, those at least 1-year old must have an identification card. The commissary officer may exclude a child from the commissary for improper behavior.

To avoid embarrassing situations and to ensure that services are equally available to all shoppers, make sure your child is near you and behaving properly while you're shopping.

Urban terrain operation demonstrated by soldiers

By Brian Adams
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Reserves, ROTC Cadets, and even infantrymen receive various types of training when they attend the different infantry courses taught at Fort Benning by the Infantry Training Group and others.

One of these courses takes place in a small town located either on Malone Range or in the 5400 block of barracks in Harmony Church. It is called Military Operations in Urbanized Terrain (MOUT).

Recently, members of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade (Support), were sent in as demonstrators for this special technique of taking and securing towns.

"We do it twice a month," explained Sgt. Stanley Thorton, one of the NCO's in charge of the demonstration unit. "The time spent at the site depends upon the the size of the class," he said.

"This class didn't take very long because there were only 67 men in it."

"But," he explained. "A class of 200 people could take as long as eight hours because we have to demonstrate to individual groups."

"I love it!" exclaimed Sp4 Eric Haywood, one member of the demonstration unit. "I'd rather do this than some of the other commitments that we have to do."

"We support the Ranger School," commented Thorton. "We act as aggressors most of the time but they aren't the only school we support."

According to Thorton, Haywood and other members of the team, they also give support to The School Brigade, the U.S. Army Infantry Center, The Infantry School, Officers Candidate School and others.

Today's soldiers are getting the training they need, whether it be MOUT, jungle warfare techniques, or simple rifle qualification from the units on post that care for it best.

Ignore your soldiers and they'll go away.

The hardest part of a commander's job isn't training soldiers. It's keeping them after they're trained.

Because the strength of the Army depends on those who make a commitment to it. But even the best motivated soldiers need an incentive to stay.

Yet a reason many soldiers give for not reenlisting is that they think the Army doesn't care about them.

In fact, they feel ignored. And when people feel that way, they definitely don't feel like staying.

That's why the job of talking with your soldiers about their reenlistment opportunities should begin when their training does, not when it's too late.

Keeping good soldiers in the Army is as much your job as training them. Let them know they're wanted. Or else they'll go away.

Earned income credit can help

By Michael P. Bist
Legal Assistance Office

The earned income credit is available to low income workers who maintain a household that is the principal place of abode of the worker and a dependent child or children. If the credit is larger than your tax, or even if you owe no tax, you are entitled to a refund of the difference.

If your earned income and your adjusted gross income are each less than $10,000.00, you may be entitled to a refund of up to $500.00. To see if you may be eligible for the earned income credit, answer the questions below: (NOTE: If you answer no to any of the question on this checklist, you probably are not eligible for the earned income credit.)

- Is the amount of your adjusted Gross Income (including your spouse) less than $10,000.00?

- Did at least one of your children live with you in the United States for all of 1980, except when he or she was away at school or on vacation?

- If married are you filing a joint return? (If not married leave blank)

- If not married, did you pay at least half the cost of keeping up a household this year? (If married, leave blank)

- Did you include in gross income all income that was earned in the United States, in United States possessions, or in foreign countries?

- Did you claim an exemption for a child who lived with you, or do you qualify as a head of household because of an unmarried child who cannot be taken as an exception? (A yes to either question is sufficient)

Remember, you must live in a home in the United States for the whole year, that is the main home for you and your dependent child (or if you file as a head of household, your unmarried child must live with you, but does not have to be a dependent).

To determine if your adjusted gross income is within the $10,000 limit, simply complete Form 1040 through line 31 or Form 1040A through line 11. However, to determine earned income, you must include all employee compensation, even nontaxable items. Earned income includes wages, salaries, tips, net earnings from self-employment, disability pensions you received, and your housing allowance or the rental value of the parsonage you get as part of your pay for services as an employee.

You figure your credit by using the Earned Income Credit Worksheet included in your Form 1040 A or Form 1040 instructions. Remember, to receive the credit, you must file a tax return. For further information, see your unit tax officer.

"WHEN YOU'RE A CIVILIAN AGAIN, AN EXTRA $1,400 A YEAR SURE COMES IN HANDY."

"I got out of the Army in February of 1977, right when all the prices were going up. Food. Clothing. Gas. You name it and it went up.

"Fortunately, when I was out-processing, someone asked me if I wanted to make some extra money with a local Army Reserve unit, and I said yes.

"It's good I joined right away, because it took me a couple of months to find a good full-time job.

"Even with a regular job, the extra $1,400 I earned with the Reserve came in handy. It was the difference between barely making ends meet and being able to put a little money away.

"By going direct from Active into the Reserve, I was also able to keep my rank of E-4. I'm now an E-5, pulling in over $1,600 a year. Not bad for a weekend a month and two weeks annual training.

"I'm also taking advantage of some other benefits.

I buy a lot of my auto supplies at the PX. I carry low-cost government life insurance through the Reserve.

I also think the retirement package is a good deal.

"A side benefit that's helped me is the additional training I've picked up in the Reserve. I was an MP on active duty but have become an Accounting Specialist in the Reserve. Right now, that's helping me with the business degree I'm working toward at a local college.

"So I can recommend the Army Reserve to anyone coming off active duty. The extra income is good, and it's nice being with people who can appreciate what you achieved in the service."

How About That?

By William J. Erbach, Sr.
34th Engineer Group Chaplain

Can you imagine living to be one hundred and seven? It does happen now and then, but more than likely we will never meet such a person.

I read of a lady who did. To everyone she was Miss Mary. She was a wonderful gal. When she was one hundred and three she would talk about things she had done in her childhood — back when she was eighty. Strangers hearing Miss Mary talk this way would give her funny glances — certainly this old woman had lost her senses. But she was serious, for to her back when she was eighty seemed like her own childhood.

Miss Mary taught school until she was seventy-five. Then, because others thought she was too old to teach school, she retired. As she spoke of her life she would say, "After I retired, I loafed until I was eighty. Then I got tired of being an old lady the people wanted me to be." She went to Switzerland and explored the Matterhorn. She studied Russian so she could travel freely in that country.

When she was one hundred and five her best friend died. It was the responsibility of her minister, a young man still in his twenties, to inform Miss Mary of the loss. He was properly sobered by the task. But this dear old lady destroyed the grave mood as soon as he had delivered the message. With a twinkle in her eye, Miss Mary said, "I always told that old woman I'd outlive her!!" How About That?

This grand old lady had all the hurts and aches, the sorrows and pains, that other people had, only multiplied by the length of her life. But she never let them defeat her. She could easily have become the old, grouchy woman she was expected to become, but until her death she remained happy in spirit and a girl at heart.

Too many of us have allowed circumstances to overcome us even while we are young and our whole lives have become old and grouchy. Given the basic goodness of life itself, anything beyond that is all a bonus and we should be happy with it and grateful for it.

34th Med Battalion recognized

Two 34th Medical Battalion soldiers were recently awarded the Army Commendation Medal for meritorious achievement.

Sgt. Marcus G. Garza, 676th Medical Detachment, was recognized for his performance as the noncommissioned officer in charge of the readiness of both personnel and equipment while assigned to the Fort Chaffee, Ark. refugee center from May 12, 1980 to June 24, 1980.

Sp4 Joseph T. Ingle, 690th Medical

Company, distinguished himself as a medical specialist while administering life saving aid to a fellow soldier who had been critically injured in a vehicle accident.

Several 34th Medical Battalion soldiers received the Humanitarian Service Medal for participation in the Cuban refugee resettlement at Fort Chaffee, Ark. during May and June.

They were: SSgts. Eliel Charneco, Sammie Savage; Sp5s Larry Birgans, Darryl Johnson, John Smith, Michael Sullivan; Sp4s Enrique Calo Jr., Donel Mott, Gail Archibald, James Clayton; PFCs Omar Graham and Quirino Villa.

Brownshoe days remembered

By Terry Ragan

Special to the BAYONET

COLUMBUS, Ga. — With brown, rough leather boots on the way back into the Army, three former infantrymen recently recalled a bygone time when "brown shoe" meant something more than brown-colored boots and shoes.

For instance, there were the leggings soldiers used to wear. There was only one right way to wear them — the Army way.

But as an eager new recruit, Galen Morey couldn't wait to try on his new Army leggings; so he tried his way.

He hooked them up and looked proudly at his handiwork.

"What I didn't know," said Morey, who is now a program coordinator at Columbus College, "was that the hooks went on the outside of each leg. I put mine on with the hooks inside.

"The first step I took locked the hooks together," he chuckled at himself remembering his folly. "I might as well have been a tree falling. I couldn't separate my legs to prevent myself from crashing down. I couldn't do anything. Down I went."

'It'll Stain My Uniform'

Charles Reidenbaugh, 60, and Eugene Murdock, 58, both retired full colonels, recalled a "brown shoe" concept that probably will never return — the striker.

A striker was a soldier who was personally assigned to an officer, usually an officer in command position. The striker shined the officer's brass, took care of his leather equipment and poured his drinks. The striker was, in effect, an orderly.

During wartime the striker erected the commander's tent, unrolled his sleeping bag and generally kept the CO's mind free for commanding.

"I remember so well a time-worn phrase of those days. A commander could often be heard telling a new striker, 'Don't get the polish on the wrong side of my Sam Browne Belt or it'll stain my uniform!'"

Reidenbaugh also remembered that the room located in the basements of all the officer family quarters on nearby Fort Benning were built for the striker. "It was an honor for a man to be a striker in those days," he insisted. "There was keen competition for the position. And for the striker who had a family of his own, the two families lived together."

Murdock, who like Reidenbaugh worked his way up through the ranks, said, "Strikers had been around since the Civil War. The use of them went out of the Army forever at the end of World War II. The Doolittle Board brought in a lot of 'reforms.'"

Reidenbaugh chomped on his ever-present cigar, "I'd hate to see the practice come back into the Army. And it never will. But there was a good reason why we had strikers and why the practice was so universally accepted in the Army of our day. In those days we had training every single day, always in the morning. In the afternoon soldiers maintained equipment and got things prepared for the next day's training "To break up the day, there were assorted special details. Being a striker was one, and it was extraordinarily good for morale. Strikers were not merely for officer's welfare. He emphasized his point with a sharp nod of head.

Ill-fitting uniform unlikely

"There were other special details, like unit tailor. Believe you me, there was no such thing as an ill-fitting uniform when I was in the service as a young enlisted man," said Reidenbaugh, who, although now bound to a wheelchair, still radiates the intensity and love of battle that helped him climb from buck private to bird colonel.

"And I'll tell you something else. When a man left the Army, there were fights over who would buy his uniforms. They were kept that well. Everyone took care of his uniforms because the pay wasn't that good and there was no clothing sales store to drop in on when you ripped your pair of pants.

"Some of the major units even had carpenters," said Reidenbaugh, a master carpenter himself. "The 29th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning (a unit still headquartered at the "Home of the Infantry") had gardeners who tended a special 'farm' on a plot of land near unit headquarters. Members of the unit had fresh vegetables any time they wanted.

"Such measures were a great help, especially considering the low pay a soldier earned," he said of the self-sustaining Army of yore.

"And here's one for you," Murdock said, interrupting his old comrade-in-arms. "No one, but no one, went into the dining room with fatigues on. You ate in the uniform of the day. Fatigues were strictly for work, and no one ate in a dirty uniform.

"And when the mess sergeant said you could be seated, you sat. And woe be unto the man who reached for food. He asked that it be passed to him. And he said please and thank you.

"That was part of his Army training. It was meant to be a break in the routine of Army life," the veteran observed.

"Ever heard of target cloth drapes?" Reidenbaugh asked rhetorically. "Army families couldn't usually afford drapes. Someone came up with the idea of using the backing from Army targets — of course that is before soldiers loaded them with bullet holes. It was cotton muslin, and wives dyed it to make great-looking drapes.

"All recreation was in-house," he says. "On Saturday nights, officers and NCOs wore formal wear to the post theater. Enlisted soldiers were waiters at all the clubs. Everyone danced to tunes played by regimental bands."

"Up to as recently as the mid-1950s, officers wore tuxedos to boxing smokers," Murdock recalled. "I can remember plenty of nights when I went home with blood on my mess jacket."

Reidenbaugh picked up the reminiscences, saying "Soldiers didn't rotate in those days. Units did. You stood a good chance of enlisting and retiring with the same unit. So all those extra duties were good for the unit in that they kept the unit alive."

Soggy Campaign Cure

Probably one of the greatest reminders of the old "brown shoe" Army, the one most people recall even if they've never been in the military is the campaign hat. For Reidenbaugh, the hat holds special memories.

"Our campaign hats were made by Stetson. When you first got one, it was stiff and looked great. But after that hat had been out in the rain a few times, it started looking a little droopy.

"To restore the stiffness, we made a solution of thick sugar and poured it onto the hat. We then ironed the solution into the felt. Presto a hat with a brim as stiff as a board."

"Right!" interjected Murdock. "Then, the first time it rained, you had syrup running down the back of your neck." He laughed warmly remembering the unpleasant experience.

Most of the "brown shoe Army" is forgettable, Reidenbaugh allows. But there are some features of that not-so-long-ago-Army which are worth retaining, he claims. In his opinion, some are features which might help define the problems today's Army is confronting.

"Human beings haven't changed," he asserted, "only the equipment."

"At one time, a soldier had a watchword. The company commander walked on the right hand of God. His voice began to thunder as his eyes flashed brightly through his rimless glasses. "As long as you did what the CO told you to do you stayed out of trouble."

"Out of that grew a tremendous respect for values, like personal initiative."

Warming to the subject, Reidenbaugh pushed on, "Everyone wanted to be a bugler when I first joined the Army. I wanted to be one too. Why? Because the bugler rode a horse. That's great incentive for a foot soldier."

"There was no problem with VD or syphilis in the 'brown shoe Army.' Having it meant six months in jail, forfeiture of two-thirds pay for those six months, and reduction one grade — Period."

"One aspect of the 'brown shoe Army' that would improve the modern Army tremendously is the restoration of the authority of the unit commander and the first sergeant. And stop promotions from some huge, general roster. Give the power to promote and demote back to the commander," he snorted with indignation.

In his 36-year tenure with the Army, Reidenbaugh has seen as much change in the Army as any soldier could ever expect to see. He served from 1938 to 1974.

He and Murdock, who served from 1940 to 1974, believe passionately that older solutions could help solve what they hold to be major, modern-day problems for the service

"Brown shoe" to these "old soldiers" meant more than the color of leather. It was a way of thinking, a way of getting things done and a way of life.

Conditions exempt troops from SQT

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — Soldiers are exempt from taking the Skill Qualification Test (SQT) under certain conditions, according to personnel officials.

Soldiers working outside their Primary Military Occupational Specialty (PMOS) for more than 90 days are exempt from taking the SQT. These soldiers are considered to be performing "special duty" work in a unit other than the one they are assigned to, officials say. Also, in order to be exempt, the job they are doing must have no relationship to their PMOS.

In addition, soldiers whose assignments are made under special instructions from Headquarters, Department of the Army are exempt from the SQT while in that assignment.

However, soldiers are eligible for the SQT 90 days after ending their exempt status.

Korean tour ta

By Tim Boivin

"Congratulations, Tim! You're going to the land of the Morning Calm!" That was how I found out I would be going to Korea in May. My major calling me while I was laying out the paper just before Christmas.

The apprehension faded away within a couple of days when I talked to people who had been there. With the exception of one soldier who said the drinks didn't agree with him, everyone was totally positive about going. One was even trying to reenlist so he could go back to Korea.

What is this stigma that is attached to Korea that makes it so interesting. To prepare before going I read pamphlets that were available on Korea such as DA pamphlet 698-15, "Assignment Korea: Facts You Need to Know", DA pamphlet 360-405, "Serving your Country Overseas", a publication put out by Eight Army Public Affairs titled "Korea: Your New Destination" and the KORUS newspaper. But reading alone wouldn't help me understand what I was getting into.

That is where the Overseas Levy Section at Fort Benning comes in. When initial word comes down that a soldier is being assigned to Korea, an appointment is set within one week to let them know what needs to be done before final outprocessing. This includes shots, finance appointments and what records that have to be in the soldier's possession when they go through final outprocessing.

In addition to making sure soldiers know what they need to have in their possession, the Overseas Levy Section finalizes the departure date for Korea. Soldiers are asked whether they want to leave early in the month or later. Leave time needs to also be taken into consideration when putting a soldier's date.

The biggest help the Overseas Levy Section to a soldier is the levy orientation overseas. The highlight of the briefing is a video covers transportation, adjutant general's office, education and finance in Korea. A film, entitled 'Going Our Way,' deals with what to do when the soldier moves through the port of embarkation. The port of embarkation has changed from Travers Air Force Base to Fort Belvoir, Mo.

Sp5 Danny Garner, who gives the levy orientation overseas briefing, said, "If a person is on the West Coast and wants to fly to Korea, they need to have their orders and pay for appropriated commercial travel."

Garner went on to add, "One of the things that has been occurring over and over recently is that a soldier being informed they have a levy orientation. When a soldier receives orders saying they are going overseas, they need to check with the Overseas Levy Section periodically to find when a levy orientation is scheduled."

If a soldier misses a levy orientation, Garner explained, "All they are doing is hurting themselves because they'll get to the port of embarkation and not know what to do. Then they'll get to the port and be lost, not knowing where to go to get their orientation. The orientations can only help the soldier and certainly don't hurt them at all."

Garner showcased about five sheets of names from major commands here that only about 10 percent of the names crossed out since they had attended a briefing the previous day.

After the orientation the soldier has from 5-10 days clearing when they are about to leave post. Then, it's on to St. Louis for the flight overseas.

With places like Chunchon, Pusan, Inchon and Seoul looking forward to my one year visit, the preparation the Fort Benning Overseas Levy Section gave me is putting me that much closer to the 38th Parallel. I just hope I can stomach the infamous Soju drink once I get there.

Korea is not all work and no play. One of the highlights of a tour to Korea is an inevitable visit to the capitol of the Land of the Morning Calm, Seoul.

Privileges lost

Medical care one of few benefits

By Tim Boivin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers who make the decision to take their dependents to Korea even though they aren't command sponsored may face some startling news—they aren't eligible for the same military privileges as they were in the United States. According to a recent Army Times article, there are more than 2,000 dependents living in the 2nd Infantry Division alone that aren't command sponsored. Unless a soldier (usually master sergeant or above) has an accompanied tour of two years, dependents are not command sponsored.

Although non-command sponsored dependents are entitled to many privileges, some crucial privileges are taken away. Among those are no post exchange or commissary privileges and not being entitled to enrollment in Department of Defense (DoD) schools.

Non-command sponsored dependents are entitled to postal services, medical facilities nearest the residence and appropriated and nonappropriated funds support activities such as clubs, theatres and churches.

The only way a soldier can have command-sponsored dependents accompany them to Korea is if they are going to, according to a spokesman in the Overseas Levy Section, a designated slot for an accompanied tour. When going to process at the overseas levy section here, a DA form, 4787, for dependent travel must be submitted. It is forwarded to Korea and, if it is returned approved, orders are amended for dependent travel.

The only other method a soldier can have dependents accompany them on a command sponsored tour in Korea if not in a designated slot is to have a special exemption from Department of the Army

Lighting alters lives

Progress aside, scientists are beginning to think that newer isn't necessarily better. Lowell Ponte, writing in the February Reader's Digest, reveals that artificial light can upset a host of delicate natural balances: that it can affect the ability of the body to absorb calcium, that it can heighten a person's susceptibility to skin cancer and even produce the biological changes similar to those caused by physical stress.

"Unnatural light may already have altered the lives of millions of women throughout North America and Western Europe," Ponte observes. "Girls in these lands are now reaching sexual maturity months or years younger than their grandmothers did."

Richard J. Wurtman, director of the neuroendocrine laboratory at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, says, "Little has been done to protect citizens against potentially harmful or biologically inadequate light. Both government and industry have been satisfied to allow people to serve as the unwitting subjects in a long-term experiment on the effects of artificial-lighting environments on human health."

And yet proper use of light can enhance health, prevent disease and even heal, Ponte writes. "Herpes can be treated with low-intensity white fluorescent light. Blue light can help cure one kind of jaundice in premature babies. And psoriasis can be remedied by giving a patient a drug that increases his sensitivity to light and then exposing the skin to special ultraviolet radiation."

Ponte suggests that individuals and society should take certain protective steps:

- The public should be informed of the potential hazards of artificial light. Since the Food and Drug Administration has determined that radiation from fluorescent lamps can increase the risk of skin cancer in sensitive individuals, the government could require warning labels on these lamps and recommend measures to reduce the hazard.

- Offices, factories and schools could minimize the risks by using broad-spectrum fluorescent lamps which more closely resemble sunlight, rather than the narrow spectrum "cool white" most commonly used. A mix of fluorescent and incandescent lighting will reduce light stress, especially if it is combined with natural light.

- Finally, people should take it upon themselves to spend some time every day in natural sunlight. "Until we have thoroughly researched the influences of man-made light, we should remember that we have been shaped for a million years by sunlight. In that sense, we are all the sun's children and depend on its subtle light more than we know," Ponte concludes.

Boxers gear up for Campbell

By Becky Bulgrin

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's boxers are packing up their gear today to head for Fort Campbell, Ky. to compete with more than 300 boxers in the Army-wide FORSCOM tournament.

According to boxing coach Anthony Stoddard, this is the first time TRADOC has sent a team to the Army championships, which take place Monday through Friday. TRADOC is paying for the trip for the twelve Benning boxers who will face teams from all over, including Europe, Panama and Alaska.

"We're going into the tournament wholeheartedly and we're going to give it all we've got," said Stoddard.

Light welterweight William Gonzalez said, "I'm ready!" The 20-year-old boxer had his first fight last July and now holds a 13-3 record.

"I met Coach Stoddard in Hawaii and trained a little there, then I came here and found out he was here, too. I looked him up, joined the team and fought my first fight," said Gonzalez. "Since I don't have as much experience as some of the other boxers, I've been training on my own on weekends and I even worked out through the holidays."

Gonzalez explained that boxing is 60 percent endurance and he pushes himself to the limit, reaches his peak, comes down, then back up again.

Team captain Willie Thompson has been boxing for five years and has an 81-14 record. Before joining Benning's team last June, the 23-year-old Florida native boxed in Germany and Florida. "I'm in excellent condition for the fights and have a good chance of coming out number one in the 156-pound weight class, and I hope to do it," he said.

Jeff Johnson, a new member of the team, took the 1980 Golden Glove Championship for the state of Georgia in his weight class. The 19-year-old Macon, Ga. native will be fighting in the 147-pound weight class and says he's "ready for his first fight with the team." He now has a 7-0 record.

Twenty-one-year-old Gregory Staten says he's looking forward to seeing a lot of different styles and people at the tournament. He has an 11-4 record and has been boxing with Benning since July.

"The training's been very severe, but if you don't train hard, you won't fight hard," he said Staten will be fighting in the 139-pound weight class.

Leonard C. Moody has been boxing for five years, but this will be his first fight with Benning. The Mississippi native fought in the Golden Gloves and took the south Mississippi title. He then fought at Fort Sill, Okla. where he won the post tournament two years straight in 1979 and 80.

Twenty-two-year-old Moody will be fighting at 119 pounds and says, "I usually fight at 125, but at 119 I'll be stronger and feel I can take the title in that class."

"The training's rough, but it's what you need to win," said 20-year-old Eric Mills. He has been with the team for seven months and has a 7-4 record. Mills fought as a civilian in New York before joining the Army and says he's looking forward to coming out a winner in the 147-pound weight class.

Anthony Morris said his goal is to "go all the way" and has been working out constantly. The 23-year-old Mississippi native has been boxing with Benning since July and will compete in the 156-pound class.

The team has been working out six hours a day, sometimes more, and Stoddard concluded that he's sure they'll come home with a few champions. Results of the tournament will be published in a future BAYONET.

Spencer students never miss shots

By Karyn Langhorne
Spencer high school correspondent

They're bold, they're brave, they're the Spencer High School Rifle Team and they never miss a shot.

Under the supervision of 1stSgt. (Ret.) Gordon J. Burke, the members of the rifle team have won seven matches. They shoot against the other high schools in the Columbus area and are ranked first in Muscogee County.

"I never thought I'd be doing something like this," says Burke. "I was working with young people near the end of my time in the Army and when I retired, a former boss asked me to take this job. I did, and I've been with Spencer for thirteen years."

The eight young men and one young woman who compose the team practice three days a week, at the school and on Fort Benning. Though equipment for the team's use is supplied by the Post, most of them own their own guns and targets.

"I got interested in the rifle team when I was in eighth grade," Harold Mullins, son of SSgt. and Mrs. Alger Mullins. "But I've been around guns all my life. It's sort of a family thing."

Other members of the team are: William Haracourt, Daniel Griffith, Martin Edmondson, Christopher Valentin, Timothy Walker, Valerie Willis, Gary Stephens, and Edward Canino.

The ROTC program at Spencer provides students with an exciting preview to real Army experiences. Two days a week, the team studies in the classroom. Many subjects are covered, including weaponry and first aid. Each ROTC student has a rank and on Thursdays they all come to school in complete uniform for inspection.

Burke and the rifle team have a very special goal this year: they hope to become state champs. With the skill and spirit they've shown so far, they should have no trouble attaining it.

Doughgirls edge 57-56 win

Lisa Myers slipped in an overtime free throw to lead the Fort Benning Doughgirls to a 57-56 victory over the Fort Rucker Flyerettes Friday night.

The Doughgirls traveled to Fort Rucker for a rematch against the Flyerettes, who had defeated Benning earlier in the season.

"It was a heartbreaker for Rucker to be defeated by us, but we worked hard for the win," said Doughgirl Coach Perry Graves.

Benning was down by 12 points with only six minutes left in the game before they tied and pushed the game into overtime. Gail Payton was high-scorer for the Doughgirls and Teresa Irvin followed with 12. Myers, Shirley McCoy and Joyce McCullen, a new player, added 10 each.

The Doughgirls faced Rucker again Saturday, but this time the Flyerettes overcame the Doughgirls 57-49.

Although the Doughgirls lost, Coach Perry Graves said it was probably the best game they ever played. "We had a seven-point lead with seven minutes left in the game and did our best to hold our own," he explained. "And in those last seven minutes, two of our players had to be taken out because of injuries."

Payton again led the Doughgirls with 12 points and Irvin followed with 11. Myers put in 10 and McCoy and McCullen added eight each.

The Doughgirls are traveling to Moody Air Force Base in Valdosta, Ga. this weekend for two games.

Battle of berets

By Don Rhodes

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Visualize the scene on Feb. 15 at Doughboy Stadium when the red berets clash with the black berets. It will probably be something like this.

ANNOUNCER: The quarterback is back to pass, he's staying nicely in the pocket. His offensive line is holding up well, keeping the defense out and giving him a chance to throw the ball . . . wait . . . now the line is folding and one of the big defensive linemen has broken through.

He's growling fiercely, he's salivating wetly and his eyes gleam at the thought of wrapping his huge arms around the quarterback and breaking him in half. Now the quarterback panics: He hands the ball to the big lineman and the lineman is lumbering down the field toward his goal. BOOM! Oh no! It wasn't the ball the quarterback gave him, it was a hand-grenade.

Rules decided beforehand

Maybe it won't be quite that bad. I'm sure the two teams will get together beforehand and decide what is and what isn't legal to do to each other. I have some ideas that might help.

First, give the referees armored vehicles from which to call the game.

Can you imagine making a bad call on the Rangers? Kick! Gouge! Stomp!

Or telling an Airborne receiver that he was out of bounds when he caught the pass? Crunch! Munch! Burv!

Next, it should be illegal for anyone but the players to be standing along the sidelines. When a player from one team runs through the other team's "kill zone" we don't want any innocent bystanders hurt from the backblast of the claymores.

Third, the MP's should be made to keep a 24-hour guard on the stadium for at least a week prior to the game. They should stop anyone trying to get into the stadium. Especially if the person trying to get in is carrying a shovel and some bamboo sticks. If a ballcarrier suddenly disappears into a pit on the two yard line, we'll know the security didn't work.

Any person wearing a red or black beret and sitting high in the bleachers with a radio, binoculars and a plotting board should be considered a suspicious person.

Spectators beware

I also have some ideas for the people with enough guts to be spectators.

Wear flakjackets and helmets.

Be sure your insurance is paid up and that the proper beneficiary is listed.

Kiss the kids goodbye before you go to the game.

Some say I have self-destructive tendencies and maybe I do, but I'll tell you I'll looking forward to being at this game. I'm sure both teams will conduct themselves like the warm, gentle people they really are, but if one team or the other calls in an arclight, I'm leaving.

Flyers split matches

By Becky Bulgrin

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Rugby Flyers started their spring season Saturday facing Georgia Tech in two games at Stillwell Field here.

The Flyers' A team lost the first game 24-14, but the B team came back with the help of Geoff Clark, who made two tries, to take a 22-0 victory over Tech.

Rugby is an old English game and it gave us our version, football. A total of six points can be made when scoring. Four points are given for a try and two points are given for the kick after.

The game Saturday consisted of two 40-minute halves with only a five-minute break in between. The second game was lowered to 30 minutes per half.

The Flyers are still looking for players and are currently practicing at Glenn Field (behind the Officer's Club) on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays at 6 p.m. Anyone interested in joining the team can come by the field or contact Jack Mundstock at 689-5608.

The Flyers' next game is tomorrow at Lakebottom Park in Columbus against the University of Georgia. Action gets underway at 2 p.m.

Analysts psyche up Beret teams

By Jeffrey M. Frazer
Special to The BAYONET

Just a few weeks ago, every college football analyst across the country asked himself the rhetorical question, "How 'bout them Dogs?" With the Beret Bowl just a little more than a week away, a lot of football fans at Fort Benning are asking, "How 'bout them Rangers?" and "How 'bout that Airborne team?"

As the flurry of excitement increases and predictions of the outcome of the game abound, a couple of analysts who are both very close to the game of football and to their teams made statements to "psyche up" their players for the upcoming clash.

Jerry Wall, the Deputy Director of the Airborne Department, made some hard, cold assertions about the game.

"Because of the intense respect between these two teams, this will be one of the hardest fought games ever seen in Doughboy Stadium. Both teams are evenly matched as far as motivation, loyalty, and esprit de corps. The difference is going to be the ability of the Airborne Department to play smart, errorless football. We will be able to maintain our composure regardless of how the game goes in the early stages. We will win because we will outlast the Rangers." Wall went on to say that breaks in the game will play a vital role in winning it. "The Airborne Department will capitalize on these breaks. It is impossible to see who will get the most breaks but since I am convinced that we will make the fewest mistakes, this game belongs to the Airborne."

"Our defensive play is going to be a big determining factor because it will force the errors that control play. A strong, quick defense will always run rampant over a smaller, slower offense."

"The Rangers have more at stake in the game because they are the challengers for the championship. Therefore, their players will be under far more pressure which leads to game-losing mistakes. As they get further and further behind, the additional pressure leads to additional mistakes but because of the respect we have for the entire Ranger Department, we do not intend to bury them completely. We'll just play hard enough to win."

Don Munson, the Deputy Director of the Ranger Department, had few words but he expressed absolute certainty that the Rangers would emerge victorious.

"The Rangers are ready to play today. After my discussions with some of the players, I have told them that they must maintain their perspective. They must insure that they don't overemphasize the significance of this game but merely to keep in mind that their friends and fellow soldiers in the Airborne Department intend to humiliate them in front of their families and neighbors. This upset the Ranger players. And there is nothing any more dangerous on earth than an upset Ranger."

Halftime entertainment will consist of performances by the 283rd Army Band and the Colonial Band, both highly praised for both their music and precision. Additionally, the Rangers will rappel the Beret Bowl Trophy in during halftime from a Huey.

The Silver Wings will jump the game ball into the stadium to start the game and both teams boast highly professional cheerleading squads.

The Beret Bowl is Feb. 15 with kick-off time scheduled for 2 p.m. Because of the level of interest this game has generated, it is recommended that you arrive early to get a good seat. Concessions will be available. Admission is free.

Airlines urged to continue discounts

The Association of the United States Army has urged those U.S. commercial airlines now granting 50 percent military furlough discount rates to continue those rates past the tariff expiration date of 31 March 1981 and has also asked those airlines not currently granting a military furlough discount to consider doing so.

In a letter to the top managers of the airlines, AUSA Executive Vice President, Major General Robert F. Cocklin (AUS, Ret), said, "Not only does it (the discount) save our soldiers, sailors and airmen money, but it has the further virtue of recognizing and expressing appreciation for those who are in the military service of their country."

General Cocklin pointed out that military compensation has fallen so far behind the inflation curve that the availability of the furlough discount is crucial to the ability of service personnel to make long furlough trips home. These long trips, he said, are only made feasible through the use of air transportation.

AUSA, with a membership of more than 114,000, is the Army's professional association and is composed of active duty, reserve and retired military personnel of all ranks as well as civilian employees of the Army and individual citizens concerned about national defense matters. The Association is a non-profit, educational organization.

Airlines now granting the furlough discounts but for whom the tariff will soon expire are: American, Western, United, Northwest, Pan American, Trans World, Eastern, Piedmont, Braniff International, and Continental. USAIR also grants the discount but its tariff does not expire with the others. Airlines not now granting furlough rates are: Ozark, Republic, Delta, Texas International, Hughes Airwest and Frontier.

Maybe it's not a lemon; maybe it's . . .

CAR NEGLECT

Ever wonder why the family car seems to break down when you take the wife and offspring on a weekend outing? The neighbor across the street never seems to have any problems with his car and it's the same year as yours.

You may say you have a "lemon"—or just bad luck with cars. The same problems came up with the last one you had.

Regardless of the make of automobile, these following items, if kept in mind prior to extensive driving, could mean a safe and less expensive trip:

TIRES—Air pressure should be checked every two weeks. Too little air will cause excessive wear and make tire hydroplane when roads are wet. Too much air causes rapid wear on the center rib, and reduces handling and braking capabilities. Check your tires according to the tire manufacturer's recommendation.

IGNITION—If the car is hard to start, a worn ignition system is usually at fault. Regular tuneups between 12,000 and 15,000 miles can eliminate the problems, and increase the gas mileage. To make your battery last longer, check the fluid level frequently.

COOLING SYSTEM—Hoses and belts wear out, and usually at the most inconvenient time. Hoses usually last about two years or 24,000 miles. Some last longer, but don't count on it. Check the thermostat once a year, and insure that the radiator pressure cap seals properly and the valve is sound.

FILTERS—Cleaning and replacing various filters is a must. Abide by the manufacturer's time change and check schedule.

LUBRICATION—When the manufacturer's lubrication schedule is neglected, a fitting can freeze up mechanically and cause much more damage than the cost of a lube job.

BRAKES—Trying to get too many stops out of old linings may score the brakedrum and cost you extra on your next brake job. At the regular service intervals, check the master cylinder for adequate fluid level and leaks.

SHOCK ABSORBERS—Worn shocks cause cars to sway dangerously on curves and during lane changes. They usually wear out at about 30,000 miles.

EXHAUST SYSTEM—Check when car is on the rack. Replace mufflers and tail pipes when holes are discovered. Prevent carbon monoxide from causing you problems.

Elvis Presley Story to be aired on Benning's WFBG

By Bill Powell
 WFBG broadcaster

Entertainment is something WFBG-TV brings every week. If you like World War I or World War II history, or history of any sort WFBG probably has it. Programs that explore social issues such as marriage or child abuse fill the schedule to help make life better. WFBG has the sporting events that happened in the 50's for a look back on how sports have changed. Following is a list of the programs highlighted in next weeks's schedule:

•Spectrum" features an hour special of Elvis Presley's music and details of his life during the four hours of musical entertainment.

•"The Benning Report", WFBG's news and information program, features a look at Fort Benning's history. History as remembered by Lemeul Pitts, a member of the original Airborne test platoon, should be of interest.

•"A Day in the Life of America" answers the questions what makes America great. The people and the character they have are exhibited in the story of a day in the United States.

•"Youth Drug Scene" looks at the reasons a 20-year-old turns to drugs-family reaction, friend reaction and how he feels about this addictive habit.

•"The Big Picture-Payoff in the Pacific-Parts 1 and 2" covers World War II in the Pacific theater of operations from the beginning at Pearl Harbor to the surrender on the battleship Missouri. Consult your BAYONET for times and dates of scheduled programming.

One hour special

Who will fight for America?

"NBC Reports- Who will fight for America?" is scheduled to be aired tonight at 10 p.m. EST on all NBC stations. The subject of the one-hour special is the retention problem facing all the military services. The program includes interviews with top government and military officials, including General Edward C. Meyer. Although currently scheduled to be aired, such news shows are always subject to preemption.

'Empire strikes' fancy

By Bill Powell

WFBG Broadcast Journalist

"The Empire Strikes Back" is the latest in the "Star Wars" epics. The biggest question presented by the movie is, can even the hardiest fans wait a full 14-years more for the story to be completed?

The first movie represented a modest effort by unknown actors and a skillful storyline, plot weaving and special effects to present a simple story of the triumph of good over evil.

Looking at "Empire," heroism is still in great abundance and the story is still designed to keep the audience on the edge of its seats. Luke Skywalker (Mark Hamill) comes off a little more flawed as a character this time. He doesn't seem the perfect inheritor of the mystical "force" which is supposed to be always with him. A new character is introduced that is supposed to teach Skywalker how to become a Jedi Knight. His name is "Yoda" and he looks more like a space age muppet than a great teacher of the knowledge of the "force."

The Princess and Hans Solo still continue their love-hate relationship with different twists and turns which keep the picture flowing along with the usual levels of excitement and thrills for the viewers.

The effects and sets are done with great attention to detail and great care.

If you go to see "The Empire Strikes Back" you'll enjoy yourself. In serializing "Star Wars," however, "Empire" leaves a number of loose ends to bring you in to see the third movie in the series. As with "Star Wars," "Empire" is a movie you can take the whole family to see. What you see will give you the feeling that no "Star Wars" sequel could be bad if the moviemakers put the same effort into each segment. I rate "The Empire Strikes Back" as Four Stars ****

*.....Almost as bad as weekend duty. Ugh!
 .....Better but still ranks with post police
 .....Good, but don't borrow money to see it.
 *.....As good as a four day pass.

Next week has been proclaimed as National Crime Prevention Week. The military police will be paying particular attention to housing areas and unit parking lots. Quarters and vehicles will be checked for security and friendly reminders will be left where items are found unsecure. Each reminder card list what violations have been found, such as: unlocked doors, windows down, keys in the ignition or packages or other valuables in plain view. These reminders are not tickets but merely part of an awareness program designed to making Benning residents more security conscious.

Col. Ward
Provost Marshal

During National Crime Prevention Week, Infantry Hall will feature a static display on crime prevention provided by the Provost Marshal's Office. A crime prevention forum will be held at the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Center for Continuing Education, Columbus College, at 7 p.m. on Monday. The public is invited to hear the commissioner of the Department of Rehabilitation speak and there will be a question and answer period following the talk.

It is emphasized that crime prevention is not limited to a specific week or month, but should be practiced every day. Persons living in the post housing areas should practice the good neighbor policy and watch out for suspicious activities throughout their neighborhood. Nothing lets a thief know that a set of quarters is unoccupied more than a pile of newspapers in the front yard or a set of quarters left with no light on.

Everybody's business

Created by Debbie Lowen

Every individual, together with the military police, has a responsibility to be security conscious; no one can do the job alone. Through a team effort of people working together to prevent crime, everyone will benefit. Remember. . . . CRIME PREVENTION IS EVERYONE'S BUSINESS.

NCOs lead troops

By Robert D. Bowman
197th Infantry Brigade
Public Affairs Office

NCO's took command of 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery during training recently.

The entire battalion was in the field conducting live firing training when all the officers returned to garrison to attend a 197th Infantry Brigade Officers Call with the Commanding General.

Range regulations require an officer to be on a live firing point but this absence of officers did not slow or interrupt the training pace at all. The battalion was placed in a no fire status and CSM Harry Swim, battalion command sergeant major, took charge of conducting a battalion displacement to new firing positions. This included issuing warning orders, having battery first sergeants conduct reconnaissance, selecting firing positions and routes, as well as preparing and issuing an operation order. After receiving commanders guidance from CSM Swim.

SFC Robert D. Boman, the battalion operations sergeant, was responsible for writing the necessary orders and issuing them to all battery first sergeants. The move was over a distance of approximately 16 miles and involved all of assets of the battalion. The battalion was to resume live firing from the new positions upon the return of the battalion's officers.

The officers were away for nearly four hours and there was no doubt that upon their return the battalion would be in order and ready to fire.

These NCO's can certainly stand proud because the officers did find the battalion in the new positions with all the cannon laid, camouflaged and prepared for firing. All other positions had also been established and prepared for action. The battalion began live firing one hour after the officers returned. The key NCO's of the battalion responsible for making the move a complete success were:

CSM Harvey Swim, command sergeant major

1st. Sgt. Wilford M. Ward Jr., Headquarter, Headquarter Battery

SFC James Collins, Battery A

1st. Sgt. Ralph E. Peeler, Battery B

SFC Franklin D. Wiggins, Battery C

1st. Sgt. Donald H. Davis, Service Battery

Those are the leaders, but all of the NCOs and men can be proud of their outstanding abilities that were clearly demonstrated on this battalion move. This exercise provided them with the opportunity to be truly "in charge." It tasked their thought proceses and decision making abilities.

Perhaps most important is the fact that this allowed them to demonstrate to their soldiers that the philosophy of "Senior man takes command" is a workable solution, and officers need not always be present to ensure mission accomplishment.

The 2/10th FA intends to continue this type of training. It builds confidence and provides meaningful opportunities for NCO'S to exercise abilities that otherwise remain untapped. The 2/10th FA depends on its fine NCO Corps to get the job done; they are the backbone of the "Rock's Support."

File W-5 form now

Want to receive advanced EIC?

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)--Now is the time to file your Form W-5. If you wish to receive advanced Earned Income Credit (EIC) payments for 1981, say officials at the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center (USAFAC), Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

Advance EIC allows qualified soldiers to receive up to $41.67 from the government each month for maintaining stateside family homes.

Presently only those soldiers serving stateside tours are eligible to receive the advance payments. Officials note eligible soldiers serving unaccompanied tours overseas but maintaining family homes in the United States may soon be able to receive the payments also. Army officials are preparing to make that determination now, officials say.

To be eligible for the advance EIC payments, soldiers must meet the following requirements:

- Adjusted Gross Income for the year (including that of the spouse, if married) must be less than $10,000;

- An exemption must be claimed for a child who lives with you full time as a dependent or you may qualify as an unmarried head of household under certain circumstances;

- If married, file a joint return. If not married, pay at least the cost of keeping a household;

- At least one of your children must live with you full time except when the child is away at school or on vacation.

The amount of advance EIC a soldier receives changes according to regular pay entitlements, officials say. Payments begin after the information on the Form W-5 is posted to the master pay file at USAFAC.

At the end of the year, soldiers must file a Form 1040 or 1040A. The total amount of the advanced EIC payments received during the year will be shown on the W-2 Form.

A new Internal Revenue Service W-5 Form must be filed if the soldier's eligibility changes or to stop the advance payments.

Soldiers who receive advance EIC and later find they are ineligible will have to pay it back when they file their annual income tax returns.

THE BAYONET

Vol. 39, No. 22

Published in the interest of Fort Benning personnel

February 13, 1981

"The hip bones connected to..."

"If that drill sergeant told me once, he must have told me a hundred times, 'after your head, your rifle is the best thing you have and it won't operate unless it is clean.'" Pvt. Tom Marshall, Company C, 1st Battalion, 1st Infantry

Training Brigade, makes doubly sure his M16 rifle is clean before tackling the individual tactics problem in the Malone complex here. He is from Beverly, Mass. and is currently in his eighth week of initial entry training.

ARTEP closes Buena Vista Rd.

Approximately 1,500 soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade will participate in an Army Readiness Test Evaluation Program (ARTEP), Wednesday through Feb. 24, in an area off Buena Vista Road.

During this period, traffic on Buena Vista Road from Cactus Road to Red Arrow Road will be monitored by military police. Motorists are asked to use alternate routes to avoid armored personnel carriers, tanks and other military vehicles that will be moving in the area day and night.

Units participating in the ARTEP are: the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry; the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; 72nd Engineer Company and the 298th Signal Detachment.

Delta halves fares

WASHINGTON—Delta Airlines is offering a 50-percent discount fare to active duty military personnel traveling on leave or pass, according to officials at the Military Traffic Management Command (MTMC).

The news is particularly important to air travelers going via Atlanta, Ga.

Republic Airlines, which also flies in the Southeast, began offering the 50-percent discount on Feb. 1, 1981. Previously, many military travelers couldn't take advantage of the 50-percent savings 12 other airlines offer because most of these carriers didn't fly routes connecting in Atlanta, explain MTMC officials.

Republic has fixed no expiration date for the reduced fare. Delta set March 31, 1981, as its cut-off date. Both airlines offer the discount on all domestic routes with no restriction on dates of travel.

Other airlines offering the reduced fare are Air Midwest, American, Braniff, Continental, Eastern, Northwest, Pan Am, Piedmont, TWA, United, US Air and Western Airlines. A 25-percent discount is still available on routes where the 50 percent discount doesn't apply.

When husband and wife both work, plenty of adjustments need to be made.

Windows, buildings shot by thoughtless hunters

By Dave Bristow
USAIC Public Affairs Office

They're not hunters!

No true sportsman would ever fire a weapon while hunting just for the sake of expending rounds. However, there are amateur hunters who do.

If they don't find any game, they riddle range training targets and safety signs just for the heck of it. Not only does this thoughtless act cause significant damage but anyone who happens by at the time unfortunately has to take their chances.

These self proclaimed hunters not only turn their shotguns on training targets and safety signs in the outlying areas but on Main Post as well.

One highly traveled intersection here has a "Caution troops passing" sign so shot up its hardly recognizable. Luckily no one was shot by mistake during this thoughtless individual's moment of glory.

Capt. Larry Owen, Land Navigation Course OIC at Yankee Road, exclaimed. "For the past two months we have had to use two of our NCO's to pickup and replace most of our land navigation target signs. Some of these signs are almost irreplaceable. They have to be hand drawn by an army artist. This can take months. We get excellent support in replacing equipment but that can only last for so long. Somebody has to see these guys and should report them.

"Each student has to pass our compass course in order to graduate. Command Tactics Doctrine department who instructs land navigation must insure the day before an exam that the signs are in place. Overnight some one has target practice and the day of the exam some signs are already shot up and missing."

The instructor's shed at Yankee road range has its windows shot out. Its not the first time.

Windows shot out at Yankee road range.

Pellets went into the shed and ripped through the back wall. Fortunately no one was inside. Engineers replaced the window one week and the next week it was shot out again. Another building close by houses the map solution board to the navigation course. Someone has shot holes through the numbers on the map using a .38 caliber pistol. The board is priceless to the navigation instructors. They may never get another one.

Yankee Road is not the only outlying training area being shot up. There is destruction at the Fort Mitchell land navigation range. The shed is always having its door repaired. Someone kicks it in. Nothing can be stored in the shed. It now appears to be a hangout for beer drinkers because instructors are always having to clean up bottles before the building can be used.

At Tri-color range a building used for safety briefings is riddled with bullet holes. No one knows why.

Fort Benning personnel can help. Anyone seeing someone shooting signs or destroying property should contact the Provost Marshal's office. Guns in the wrong hands can kill and remember that next stray round may have YOUR name on it!

Motor oil recalled

WASHINGTON--Soldiers who purchased Quaker State Oil between Nov. 15, 1980 and Jan. 9 may be in for a surprise. A problem exists with Quaker State's 10-W-40 Deluxe and 10-W-30 Super Blend Oils sold during that time, according to officials at Quaker State Oil Refining Company.

If soldiers have already changed the oil, AAFES service stations will drain the engine, change filters and add new oil at no charge. Claims for engine damage will be processed through the Travelers Insurance Company (TIC), according to officials at Quaker.

The additive used in the oil during this production period thickens when temperatures fall below zero degrees fahrenheit and prevents lubrication of internal combustion engines. The stocks of these particular oils have now been removed from sale at Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) retail stores and service stations.

AAFES customers in the Continental United States who experience engine trouble resulting from oil bought and used between Nov. 15, 1980 and Jan. 9 can call toll free, 1-800-243-3840, to get the telephone number and address of the TIC office in their area. Customers in Alaska may report claims by placing a collect call to TIC, Seattle, Wash., offices, 206-464-3400. For those living in Hawaii, the Honolulu TIC office will accept collect calls at 808-521-5685.

Personnel who purchased the oil are entitled to a refund, according to AAFES officials. If a full case of the oil was purchased, the customer should check for production numbers appearing either on the top or side of the carton. Production numbers for the defective oil are 8110-30 and 8120 01 through 8120-23. Cases bearing these numbers may also be returned to the place of purchase for a refund.

Soldiers and family members in Europe and the Pacific should report claims of engine damage to their local AAFES auto parts store. The customer's name and address and the year and make of the automobile will be relayed to the Quaker Company. The company will send a representative to process the claim within 48 hours. (ARNEWS)

Accept responsibility for holiday safety

The Washington's Birthday holiday presents a special challenge to all of us at Fort Benning. While our personnel enjoy a holiday weekend, many in the surrounding communities will be conducting business as normal. This mixture of holiday activities and "business as usual" existing side by side requires special emphasis on safety.

As we pause in our activities to pay honor to our first American President, let us also pause to reflect upon our obligations to our families and fellow man. I enjoin each of you to spare everyone the heavy burden of suffering and sorrow which results from accidents by accepting and discharging your responsibility to act safely during all your holiday pursuits.

Enjoy your holiday and remember, while working or playing, think safety today and everyday.

Glad you asked

What do you think of the military shuttle bus service here?

Pvt. 2 Sean Ford

Headquarters Company, Headquarters Command

As a frequent user of the buses, I find them to be constantly late, frequently not following the routes and are many times overcrowded. There aren't enough buses running on the routes.

PFC Michael S. Patterson

Headquarters Company, Headquarters Command
197th Infantry Brigade (Separate)

If it was more on time it would be much better. It's handy for when you don't have a car.

•••

Sgt. Glenn Petty

Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion

It's a good program for the single guys in the barracks and others who want to save gas. If everybody rode the bus it would cut down on traffic and conserve energy.

Sp4 Jeffery Wilson

A Troop, 15th Cavalry

It's alright. It's not perfect. I don't like changing buses at the Main Mall. They should add some more buses which would go all over post.

PFC Nancy Strock

Headquarters Company, 197th Support Battalion

It gets me where I'm going. Sometimes I have to wait and other times I don't. The drivers have been very polite and helpful in letting me know which is the right stop.

Sgt. Russell D. Ruhland

Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion
1st Infantry Training Brigade

I think it's an outstanding service for the soldiers, especially the AIT soldiers who don't have any other way of getting around.

SFC Richard Thompson

Company B, Noncommissioned Officers School of Infantry

I think it's outstanding for the guys here to get to the hospital, commissary and all over post. Once in a while, the kids start playing on the bus but most of the time it's OK.

Moving costs tax deductible

By Michael Bist
Legal Assistance Office

If you had a PCS move to Fort Benning during 1980, you are entitled to claim moving expenses on your 1980 federal income tax return. Moving expenses may be claimed even though you do not itemize deductions and would normally file a "short form" return. Thus every soldier who had moving expenses can take advantage of this money saving deduction.

The following definitions will help you determine if your move qualifies as a permanent change of station:

- A move from home to the area of the first post of duty
- A move from the last post of duty to home or a place in the U.S. that is closer to the last post of duty; if you moved within 1 year of ending active duty, or within the period allowed under the Joint Travel Regulations, or
- A move from one permanent post of duty to another.

Also, if a member of the armed forces dies, deserts, or is imprisoned, a permanent change of station for the spouse includes a move to the place of enlistment, to the home of either the member, the spouse or the dependent, or to any nearer place in the U.S.

Moving expenses furnished in kind by the military and those for which you are reimbursed by the military are not deductible. You do not include such reimbursements, allowances and the value of moving and storage services furnished by the government in your gross income. However, if the reimbursements or allowances exceed the actual moving expenses, the difference is included in income. Only the unreimbursed moving expenses you incurred are deductible.

Subject to the dollar limits explained later, your moving expenses may include:

- Travel expenses for you and your family including meals and lodging,
- The cost of moving household goods and personal effects to your place of employment (this includes the expense of hauling a trailer, parking, crating, intransit storage and insurance,
- The cost of househunting trips before you move (includes travel, meals and lodging) after receiving orders.
- The cost of temporary quarters (meals and lodging) at the new location during any period of 30 consecutive days after reporting for duty.
- The cost of disposing of your former home and getting the new one.

The dollar limit (the total deduction) is limited to $3,000.00 overall. If you are married and file separately, the above limitations are $1,500.00 and $750.00 respectively, if you live together and both begin to work in the new location.

The limitations are increased if you move from the U.S. to a foreign site or from one foreign site to a second foreign site. The dollar limit goes up to $6,000.00 overall. For married persons filing separately the limitations are reduced to $3,000.00 and $2,250.00 respectively, if they live together and both begin to work at the new location. Additionally, the cost of temporary quarters may cover a period of any 90 consecutive days after reporting for duty.

Basically, what all this means is that if you are required to move by the military, you may be able to claim deductions within the dollar limit, for expenses which are not paid for by the military. However, just as in all deductions you claim, you must be able to document these expenses, as approximations and estimates are not sufficient.

You should maintain a current record to substantiate these expenses in a diary or statement book. These expenses should be recorded at or near the time of the expenditure, in order to maintain accuracy. You should have receipts to support all lodging expenditures and any other expenses of $25.00 or more, except for transportation charges when such evidence is not available.

Moving expenses deductions should be computed on Form 3903, or Form 3903F if overseas, and entered on Form 1040. These forms may be obtained from the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Office, Bldg. 5. If you need assistance or have questions concerning moving expenses or other tax problems, see your unit commander for the name of your tax assistance officer.

Dates back to ancient custom

Arbor Day ceremony slated

An Arbor Day ceremony to be held Feb. 20 at 10 a.m. at Patch School will be highlighted by Mrs. Lois Grange, wife of the commanding general. She will kick off the festivities by planting a tree.

Five-hundred dogwood seedling trees will be distributed to units on post. In Georgia, Arbor Day is celebrated the third week in February. The tradition of planting a tree to commemorate an event dates back to early civilization and reflects man's responsibility to regenerate nature.

Arbor Day in the United States was started by J. Sterling Morton. A year after he was graduated from Union College in Michigan in 1854, he settled in the Nebraska Territory. Land erosion from blizzards and wind storms on the treeless plains caused him to realize the need for trees. As editor of the Nebraska City News, he promoted the cause. When he later became involved in state and national politics, the issue of planting trees was not forgotten.

In 1872 his work paid off when a resolution was passed by the Nebraska Board of Agriculture. On April 10 of that year the first Arbor Day was celebrated. By 1885 Arbor Day was declared a legal holiday in Nebraska. In recognition of Morton's work, Nebraska set the holiday's date on his birthday, April 22.

Another part of the Arbor Day tradition is the legend of Johnny Appleseed. The early colonist planted orchards to offset the lack of fruit trees found in America. John Chapman, a New Englander, traveled through Pennsylvania and Ohio in 1797 planting apple trees. He later became a legend.

New rules out for free meals

New guidelines for free and reduced priced meals for students have been released, announced the Fort Benning Dependent School Board.

Local schools will use the size of the family and the family's income to determine the children's eligibility, said Calvin T. Roush, schools officer.

The guidelines for free meals are:

Family Size	Yearly Income	Monthly Income	Weekly Income
1	$ 5,700	$475	$110
2	$ 7,220	$602	$139

7	$14,850	$1,238	$286
8	$16,370	$1,364	$315

The guidelines for reduced priced lunches are:

Family Size	Yearly Income	Monthly Income	Weekly Income
1	$ 8,350	$696	$161
2	$10,730	$894	$206
3	$13,110	$1,093	$252

7	$22,620	$1,885	$435
8	$25,000	$2,083	$481

Each school's principal will review the applications for free or reduced meals already on file and notify the parents if there are any changes in the child's eligibility. If the parents are not satisfied with the change they can either call the principal or the schools officer. Write to the Schools Officer Calvin Roush at Bldg. 880-A, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905. Illegal drug lethal

WASHINGTON--Use of a new illegal drug has been reported in the Western United States, say officials of the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) in Los Angeles.

The new drug, "China White," is 80 times stronger than morphine and is being sold for about the same price as heroin. DEA warns there may have been several deaths caused by the drug because of its strength. An overdose results in immediate respiratory arrest.

"China White" is available in a white powder and is believed to be made in laboratories located in Southern California.

Because its arrival on the drug scene is fairly recent, DEA authorities cannot comment on methods used to package or market "China White."

Local commanders, Law Enforcement officers, Alcohol Abuse Control officers and other appropriate agencies should be aware of this illegal, possibly fatal drug, cautions DEA, as use may spread to other areas of the country. (ARNEWS)

High blood pressure's a silent killer

By Gregory H. Blake, M.D.

Family Practice Clinic
Martin Army Community Hospital

Why should I take those pills, since they make me feel bad? But food doesn't taste good without salt on it! You mean I must take medicine for the rest of my life? Can't I just miss a few and be OK? Have you ever heard of any of these questions or comments from a friend or relative? They are all related to the medical disease of hypertension.

Hypertension is the raising of blood pressure above normal levels. It is estimated that one out of every six Americans is plagued by hypertension. Since hypertension often has no symptoms, it can go undetected for many years. Hypertension is a serious problem, often leading to a stroke, heart attack, blindness, or kidney failure. For this reason, it is important to make the diagnosis and begin treatment.

While doctors don't know the cause of hypertension, they have noted several related factors. Hypertension will often run in families. People who are "hyper-reactors" in response to events occurring in their lives may develop hypertension. Some studies suggest that the trace metal cadmium, which is found in the air, many foods and some beverages may be related to hypertension.

The nicotine in tobacco is known to raise blood pressure. Diets high in fats or salt may contribute to hypertension. The combination of any of these or other still unknown factors may produce hypertension in the patient.

The diagnosis of hypertension can be difficult. Your blood pressure varies considerably during the day. It rises when you are under stress, are doing exercises, or become excited. It lowers while you're asleep or relaxed. It is for this reason that your doctor may want to follow your blood pressure for several weeks before beginning therapy.

Once hypertension is found it can be treated in several ways. Regardless of your weight, it may be recommended that you limit the type of fats in your diet and decrease your sodium intake. Mild exercising, such as walking and light jogging, may be suggested to help lower your blood pressure. It may be strongly recommended that you quit smoking.

Many medications are known to lower blood pressure. A diuretic (water pill) which washes excess water and salts from the body is a part of most regimens. Other medications are available which relax the blood vessels directly or block the nerves going to blood vessels.

When your doctors tells you that you must take your medicines for life, you must adhere to the recommendations in order to avoid hypertension complications. If you're told to limit the salt intake, lose weight or quit smoking you should do so. Yes, these medicines have side effects, but these may be preferable to a stroke or heart attack. In order to gain benefit from your medication, it must be taken regularly as prescribed.

While hypertension can't be cured, by adjusting your lifestyle and taking medications you can control the disease and lengthen your life.

Every Friday at the Main Mall from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m., the Community Health Nurse will conduct a blood pressure screening program. Health Education information including films and handouts on hypertension and related topics are also available upon request. See Head Nurse Family Practice Clinic, Martin Army Community Hospital, 544-4170, or call Community Health Nurse at 545-4041 for details.

New doctor decorated chopper pilot

By Betty Zimmerman
USAIC Public Affairs Office

How many times do you see a doctor with a chest full of medals, even an Army doctor in an Army hospital? There's one at Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH), a captain in his first year of family practice residency.

His good looks and pleasing personality are enough to turn most women's heads, but when you see the three rows of battle ribbons, including a Distinguished Flying Cross, even the men have to take a second look.

Joe Glenn Blankenship grew up wanting to be a soldier. Although a native Virginian, he went to San Marcos Military Academy in Texas. However, personal reasons caused him to leave school earlier than anticipated and he enlisted in the Army in 1963 at the age of 17.

He spent nearly three years as an enlisted man, served a year in Korea and reached the rank of Sp5 before going to Officer Candidate School in 1966.

As a 19-year-old airborne infantry officer, he went to Germany and progressed from a platoon leader to company commander of a mechanized infantry unit within a year. By July 1968, he had made captain and earned the Expert Infantryman Badge.

With his chosen career well on the way, he elected to take helicopter pilot training and was graduated from the Fort Rucker, Ala. flight training program in 1969.

His first assignment as a pilot was with Company A, 4th Aviation Battalion, 4th Infantry Division, Vietnam. And once again he was in a unique position — he was executive officer of a combat assault helicopter company at the age of 23.

While in Vietnam, Blankenship earned all the usual medals plus the Bronze Star, Purple Heart, 15 awards of the Air Medal and an Army Commendation Medal for Valor. He was also awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross (DFC) for heroism while saving the crew of a downed helicopter.

He was returning to base camp after a day of flying, when he monitored an emergency call from another helicopter that was forced down deep within enemy territory. He realized the crew was in danger because of the unsecured area, approaching darkness and deteriorating weather, so he decided to go after them despite a shortage of fuel. They found the downed chopper and spent several hours transferring enough fuel for the return trip from the crashed helicopter to his in a small water container. His brave actions resulted in a successful rescue.

He survived Vietnam and returned to attend the Infantry Officers Advanced Course at Fort Benning in 1970. He also attended the Instructor Training Course and Infantry Mortar Platoon Course before becoming an instructor at the U.S. Army Infantry School. He seemed to have his career as a professional soldier well in hand.

Then in September 1973 — the bomb fell! Capt. Joe G. Blankenship, outstanding record, combat decorations and all, was out — RIFed — because the Army had too many captains and he had no college education.

Naturally, the first response to a hopeful professional soldier, who has had his career dashed, was bitterness. Then comes confusion and despair. After more than 10 years military service, he asked himself, "Now what do I do?"

Well, lack of college caused his downfall, maybe he'd give it a shot. After all, he did have the GI bill. He returned to his home state of Virginia and enrolled at Averett College in Danville.

During his sophomore year, while working for a bachelor's degree in biology, his professors asked him why he didn't go to medical school. The science courses were very easy for him and they thought he had a natural aptitude for a career in medicine.

His leadership abilities and maturity, no doubt tempered by military service, paid off when he was selected for many college honors and awards. Although older than most medical students, he was accepted to the Medical College of Virginia.

He had not given up on the Army though. He had maintained his commission while attending school, by serving as a gunship pilot in the Virginia National Guard. In fact, he went to medical school under the Health Scholarship Program which requires him to complete his side of the obligation by serving in the Army.

Much to his delight, he was accepted to attend the U.S. Army Aviation Medicine Course certifying him as a flight surgeon during his fourth year of medical school. He was one of the first to attend this school while still a student.

Upon graduation from medical school, Dr. Blankenship was accepted into the Fort Benning Family Practice Residency program.

tive duty, this former infantry captain was a Medical Corps physician.

Dr. Blankenship feels his chosen specialty best meets his desire for diversity in medicine. He believes in the concept of serving the family as a unit and enjoys relating to his patient's problems as part of that unit.

Upon retirement, he plans to become a family practitioner in a rural community. His current military goals are in some way to combine his former aviation expertise with his current medical career.

Dr. Joe G. Blankenship, MD, is the son of Dr. and Mrs. C.E. Blankenship Sr., associate pastor of Marietta Baptist Church and administrator of Marietta Christian School in Marietta, Ga. His wife, the former Terri Slemp of Sugar Grove, Va., is a registered physician therapist and is employed with the Rehabilitative Services of Columbus.

Gaps raise energy costs

Even if you have already insulated your attic to the recommended level and have caulked around the doors and windows, there are many gaps you may have overlooked.

A small gap which lets in cold air can add dollars to your heating bills. Some of these gaps can be closed at a small expense to you and for a substantial return in lower utility bills. Four of the most commonly ignored areas are outlined below.

It is not uncommon to find a gap of an inch or more in a fireplace whose damper is closed. This can create a major air leak when the fireplace is not in use since the chimney itself encourages a strong flow of air.

One way to stop the leak is to cover the opening with a board. The board obviously must be removed before the fireplace is used. In a cold climate, you can take this simple, low-cost step and save an estimated $45 a year with electric resistance heat, $20 with gas heat and $30 with oil heat.

It is common to find large openings leading from the living area of a house into the attic. These occur where pipes and ducts are cut through the attic floor.

These can be stuffed with insulation for a saving of between $25 to $80 a year in heating costs. Do not cover recessed light fixtures with any type of insulation; it is a fire hazard.

Another major attic bypass is the gap where the furnace stack meets the wood framing of the house. Closing this gap is very important because it often creates a kind of mini-chimney effect which carries all the way from the basement to the attic; a regular river of heat.

Fireproof insulation (do not use cellulose) can be stuffed between the wood frame and the wall of the furnace stack.

The attic trapdoor itself usually has no insulation on it. To save as much money as possible, the door back should be covered with a batt of foil-faced insulation. The edges of the door should be weather-stripped so that air from the living area of the house cannot escape into the attic.

This measure alone can save up to $20 with electric heat, $8 if you have gas heat and $12 for oil heat. In addition, in the summertime it can save on air conditioning costs

PX changes with times

The Post Exchange has come a long way from the vagabond sutlers who preyed on soldiers during the Civil War. The PX here is a modern mall offering as many conveniences for the soldier as any in the "outside" world, and if the plans of PX managers continue, it's going to get better.

"We're soon going to begin extensive remodeling of the PX," said manager Jerry Robertson. "The new carpeting, cube and chrome decorations should change the image of the PX to more of a modern department store."

With more than seven million customers worldwide, the entire PX system competes with many national department stores. While it may be in competition with the stores, the prices overall are 21 percent lower than prices on the civilian market according to a customer survey of 17 installations in five regions in 1979. One result of the survey was the lowering of prices on 59 items.

In the past year the PX here has gone through many changes such as opening the mall area to small business stands and the opening of a plant nursery in the garden shop. "By having the stands in the mall we can offer the customers items we couldn't offer, like the wooden roses, handmade jewelry and other special items," said Robertson.

"When we opened the nursery we didn't have much information on running one. But we learned and we'll be opening the nursery again this year," he added.

While many people first think of the mall or the mini-mall as the PX, it also includes the post theatres, the Running Chef, gas stations and other facilities.

Prices in the post theatres run between one and two dollars, quite a savings over the cost of off-post theatres, where the price is usually $3.50.

Another area that isn't often considered when thinking about the PX system is the optical shop. Recent surveys show a savings of 37 percent over off-post prices, added an official.

As the national inflation rate continues to hurt many household budgets, more customers are taken advantage of the PX's lay-away plan, according to Robertson. "We have seen a substantial rise in the number of those using the lay-away plan. Some days we have to work extra hard to keep up with the lay-away orders," he said.

Recently, a Commander's Exchange Council meeting was held for the southeast AAFES region. Representing Fort Benning was Norm Williamson, chief of Personnel Services Section, DPCA. "Some of the subjects discussed at the meeting were the problem of shoplifting, setting gas prices and stock assortment at the PX," he said.

"One of the changes we are looking forward to is taking over the clothing sales from the Quartermaster's stores, which will probably happen this fall," he continued.

He added that one important change which has happened here is the reconstitution of an exchange council. "The council will act as a forum for a cross-section of PX customers and PX management," he concluded.

David Anthony, an artist who has set up shop in the Main Mall here, adds some finishing touches to a portrait as eight-year-old Vanessa Schwitz poses. Anthony, from Galesburg, Tenn., is one of the many vendors who have set up shop in the Main Mall. Vanessa, the daughter of Ima Jean and Donald Schwitz, hails from Evansville, Ind.

History has role models for youth

Viewing Black history in the United States, one can identify several aspects of it that can be considered good role models; not just for the youth, but for the entire American population.

These role models refer to both individuals and organizations who have contributed to America's growth and who have produced beneficial trends throughout our history.

An example of these institutions is the church. Religion has always been an important aspect of Black history. It was through the church that most education, economic, political and social guidance was received or disseminated. The church also served as a champion for the people, taking up causes and focusing public attention on them. Most of the Black leaders of the past have been affiliated with the church in some form or fashion.

During the last decade some of the historical functions of the Black church have been taken up by society's institutions. Education was one of them. It is noteworthy that the church continues to have a strong influence among Black citizens. The Black church continues to operate to a great extent in the same fashion as it was modeled during times of slavery.

There are many role models in science and technology also. Among the ranks of our top scientists we have Norbert Rillieux, the inventor of the refinery process that is used in the sugar industry; Jan E. Matzeliger, who invented the machine that made mass production of shoes possible; Granville T. Woods, inventor of "telegraphony;" Garrett A. Morgan, inventor of the gas mask and the traffic light; George W. Carver, discoverer of many uses for peanuts, potatoes, pecans and many other farm products' Daniel H. Williams, the first surgeon ever to enter the chest cavity and operate on the heart' and many others. They were all Black. They all left their mark in our history.

In the political arena there are other role models for Blacks. Many of our cities are being led by Black mayors such as Tom Bradley (Los Angeles), Coleman Young (Cleveland) and Maynard Jackson (Atlanta). Locally, we have names like Frank Chester and Fred Franklin, councilmen for the Columbus Consolidated Government' Dr. Robert Wright, a political consultant and former city councilman; Gordon Kitchen, civic leader and broadcasting executive.

At the national level we have Andrew Young, former U.S. representative to Congress from Atlanta and ambassador to the United Nations; Edward Brooke, former U.S. Senator' Thurgood Marshall, Associate Justice to the Supreme Court and others. Here again the mark is being made. The examples are being set.

The list is endless. The many areas in which Blacks are making their mark and establishing new roles for generations to come could go on and on. Music, art, literature and sports all are included. All we need to do is look around and we'll see those examples being set. This is encouraged here too.

These role models of today came from the role models of yesterday, from our history. The pace setters were born, raised and died long ago, but their contributions and examples are the legacy for our future.

Garret A. Morgan (1877 - 1963)

Inventor, Pioneer in safety. Morgan's most important invention was the safety hood, later to become known as the gas mask. In his application for patent, he referred to it as a "breathing device". This device was intended for use by firemen who were required to enter houses filled with smoke and suffocating gases. Morgan also invented the traffic-light signal system which is now used all over the World. His genius was not confined to any one area. He also invented a hair straightener, a woman's hat fastener, a round belt fastener, and a friction drive clutch.

Slogan contest announced for aviation safety

"DPT Aviation has a record of over 33,000 accident free flying hours and we intend to improve on that," said Lt. Col. Lott Lawson.

Lawson, who recently assumed command of the DPT Aviation Division at Lawson Army Airfield, is a staunch advocate of aviation safety and professionalism. One of his first official acts after taking command was to initiate a SAFETY SLOGAN CONTEST.

Lt. Col. Lawson

"I want the entire Fort Benning Community to be involved in aviation safety. Not only those who work with aircraft," said Lawson, "I mean the people we support, too."

The contest for the best aviation safety slogan started Feb. 1 and will end Feb. 28. Anyone with a good idea is eligible to enter but the contest is primarily directed toward aviation personnel. Those who wish to enter may do so by dropping their entry in a collection box located in the lobby of Bldg. 2485 (Lawson Airfield Operations).

If you're superstitious, you're out of luck today

By Rick Kiernan
Executive officer
1/29th Infantry Battalion

For years, even centuries, man has lived in mortal fear of the arrival of the 13th day of any month falling on a Friday.

The reasons for this superstition are many. First, it must be considered that it is a "double" superstition. This means that historically, Friday is not the luckiest day of the week, and numerically speaking, you can do a lot better than choosing "13" for your battle cry! So it seems reasonable to cringe when the phenomena cross on the calendar.

Let's look first at the intrigue which surrounds the number "13" since historically it pre-dates the impact that Friday has had on significant events and omens of bad luck.

The fear of the number is at least 2,000 years old. The common theory to explain the origin of the superstition is that there were thirteen present at the Last Supper, Judas being the "odd man out". H.G. Wells takes it back to the New Stone Age, when man, beginning to count, noted the triangularity of the three, the squareness of four and the fact that some quantities could be divided so easily, came to look upon 13 as an incorrigible number. Dislike grew into fear, and fear became frozen in superstition. Wells may have had a point but the origin of this, as with most customs, goes far back into historical obscurity. That it is older than Christianity, is suggested by several facts.

Fear of the figure is found in Norse mythology. It stems from the fable about a banquet held in Valhalla, to which 12 gods had been invited. But Loki, the spirit of strife and evil, gate-crashed, making the number 13 and as a result Balder, the favorite of the gods, was killed.

Additionally, the Turks so dislike and fear the number, that the word has been eliminated from their vocabulary. In France you can never live in a house of that number. It just does not exist. Italian lotteries never use the number either. Even in America, many office buildings skip the number when designating floors and apartments. After No. 12 follows "12a" or no floor designation and then immediately No. 14.

Man, alone among all animals, is able to count. Every circus boasts of its educated animals (ever see Trigger use his hoof?) but this too, is only possible through a human trainer. There is really nothing mysterious about numbers. They are no more arbitrary, but fixed, words and symbols whereby we are able to express certain actions and make discriminations in counting and measuring.

Friday

Our ancestors made generous use of both fingers and toes in working out their arithmetic problems—usually in blocks of five and ten. This might account for the present popularity in binary and decimal systems.

There is a less superstitious and more rational explanation which says that statistical surveys shows insurance companies that of any random group of thirteen persons, one will die within less than twelve months. Evidently, our own forefathers were not impressed nor inhibited by the "13" mystique. On the Great Seal of the United States there are 13 stars and 13 bars; an eagle, with 13 feathers in its tail, holds in its left claw 13 arrows, and its right an olive branch bearing 13 leaves and 13 olives; and the motto, of 13 letters—"E Pluribus Unum."

What About Friday?

Paganism considered Friday the luckiest day of the week. It was ruled by the planet Venus, whose influence was thought to be most fortunate. Originally named in honor of Freya, Goddess of Love, it was a lucky day for newlyweds. But for Christians, the day has always had gloomy implications according to Old and New Testament references.

It was on a Friday that Adam and Eve were said to have eaten of the forbidden fruit, thus bringing sin into the world. They also died on a Friday. Jesus was crucified on a Friday and since that time, every Friday has become a memorial of that "first" Good Friday.

The calendar itself went through many revisions so the significance of Friday would not simply be written of as happenstance. The Hebrews dated their calendar back to the creation of the world which they calculated had occurred 3760 years and three months before the birth of Christ (B.C.). The sports-minded Greeks keyed their calendar on the first Olympic Games held in 776 B.C., while the Romans chose the foundation of Rome in 753 B.C. as the start of their chronology. It was Julius Caesar who revised this calendar in 46 B.C. and it was the one followed by the early Christians for five centuries until its formal adoption in 530 A.D. (Anno Domini or Year of the Lord).

For centuries, sailors refused to leave port on a Friday and the reluctance may be traced to origins within the British Admiralty. Determined to meet the superstition "head on," the keel of a new British vessel was laid on a Friday, and she was named H.M.S. Friday, she was launched on a Friday, and on her first voyage she was commanded by Captain James Friday. Everything went well to this point. The ship sailed. Nothing has since been heard of her or her crew for over a hundred years!

To add insult to injury, any amateur historian need only look to some "other" Fridays not so long ago. Abraham Lincoln died on Good Friday 1865 and John F. Kennedy died on Friday, November 22, 1963.

If you have any particular superstitions, do not feel embarrassed. You are not alone. Recently, a survey revealed that only 26 percent of the Harvard faculty could truthfully state that they were entirely without superstition about anything. As with any long-held custom or tradition, superstition is reinforced each time an event supports the folklore. As for me, today looks like my lucky day, after all it's Saturday, the 14th!

As society moves at an increasing pace and frustrations and tensions mount, child abuse increases. Unfortunately, the Fort Benning community is no exception.

Child abuse knows no social or economic boundaries and manifests itself in many forms: physical, verbal, emotional and sexual. It ranges from active mistreatment to neglect, and its effects are severe: emotional or physical handicaps; changes in behavioral patterns; even death in some cases.

Often, parents abuse their children in reaction to past or present problems or stresses with which they cannot cope. Immaturity, lack of knowledge, unrealistic expectations, drug or alcohol problems and poor childhood experiences may all contribute to this stress. Every parent has the potential to abuse a child at some time. Most abusive parents are "normal;" relatively few are "criminal" or mentally unbalanced.

Child abuse is a tragedy that effects us all. The abused child and family can seldom help themselves. They are entangled in a vicious circle usually passed on from generation to generation. To break the abuse circle, the community ... you ...

Col. Ward Provost Marshal

must be aware of how serious the problem really is. You can help recognize child abuse and see that it's treated. Some signs of abuse are: repeated injuries, neglected appearance, disruptive or passive withdrawn behavior, parents who are "super-critical," and families that are extremely isolated are all indications which may point to child abuse.

We all have a moral and in some cases a legal responsibility to see that child abuse is reported to the people who can help. In an April 1980 letter to the military community our commanding general, Maj. Gen. David E. Grange Jr. directed all members to report such suspected abuse.

The Army has established a Child Advocacy Program to identify, report, and manage cases of abuse and neglect Armywide. This is accomplished through a child protection and case management team on each installation. This team meets once a week to discuss cases and form treatment plans for abused victims and their families. Last year, the team received 170 reports of child abuse by military families who live in the Fort Benning-Columbus area. Of the 170 reported cases, 125 were confirmed. These cases ranged from a mere slap resulting in an injury to one reported death.

Suspected child abuse should be reported to the Military Police, Martin Army Hospital, ACS, or to the Columbus Department of Family and Children Services. They will know what to do. If you report a suspected abuse case, your name need not be

“You have to be flexible . . . we don’t have any set roles, we just do what needs to get done” . . . Maj. Robert Adams

Two paycheck families new roles, flexibility

Art courtesy Training Aid Support Center

es call for and trust

By Tom Sabel
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Dagwood running out of the house while Blondie chases after him with his pants is a familiar scene in the comic strips. Once, the Bumstead household was typical of American households. Dagwood went off to earn the daily bread while Blondie stayed home taking care of the house, the children and the dogs.

With inflation damaging more family budgets and the effects of the women's movement, a more modern scene would have both Dagwood and Blondie running to catch the bus to work. Working wives are rapidly becoming more common.

With two paychecks coming in, families find it easier to pay the bills on time and have a few luxuries they wouldn't have in a single paycheck household. The women's movement has given many women a new way of looking at themselves, causing them to question their family roles—should they be full time mothers and housekeepers, seek careers or try and balance both careers and household duties?

Some families have trouble adapting to these changes; for others, there is little adapting when both members of husband-wife team work. Trust, cooperation and flexibility are three ingredients found in successful two-paycheck marriages.

Sharing the cooking

"We trust each other to the hilt," confessed Sgt. Jim Pittman, a sergeant with the 43rd Engineer Battalion. Ann, his wife, works part-time at the Columbus Women's Health Organization as a licensed practical nurse. She averages 20-hours a week.

They share responsibility for the cooking, cleaning and raising of their two children. However, Ann reserves the shopping chores for herself. "Jim really doesn't know the difference between a head of lettuce and a head of cabbage," said Ann.

"I made a bacon, cabbage and tomato sandwich. I didn't know the difference," Jim said with a smile.

Whoever gets home first usually makes dinner, each having their own specialties. "Jim makes the best cheese omelet this side of heaven," said Ann. Despite their own differing schedules they try to eat as a family as often as possible.

Child care is also shared with Jim baby sitting on Saturday, one of Ann's normal work days. "I don't get much fishing in on Saturday," commented Jim, the avid sportsman.

"It nearly killed him when deer season came in," added his wife.

Eye on career

Keeping flexible is the key to Maj. Robert and Capt. Ellen Adams' marriage. With Ellen a nurse at Martin Army Community Hospital and Robert a fixed-wing and helicopter pilot, planning around a fixed schedule is more wishful thinking than anything.

"We play by ear. We make plans as if everything is routine. When something comes up we either cancel out or replan," said Robert.

"We keep on going and try to ignore what will probably happen. We're lucky that most of our friends are either in the military, ex-military or at least understand the military. They're very supportive," added Ellen.

Being in the military has proven to be an advantage to the Adams'. We were both in the military when we married and we've planned to use it to our advantage," related Robert. "Her branch has been very good in getting us assignments together."

Like the Pittman's, cooking and other household chores are shared on a more or less equal basis. "We have one rule— whoever cooks doesn't clean up the kitchen," said Ellen.

Housecleaning chores are taken care of easily. Since they are relatively well off financially, they have a professional cleaner come in twice a month. Ellen handles most of the shopping while Robert takes care of the financial side of life.

There is no discussion over Ellen's career. She will remain a nurse, either in the military or out of it. Robert knows how important her career is to her and gives as much support as he can.

Take time for child

Extra income is the prime reason Cindy Powell works as a teacher with the Stewart County schools. "I consider teaching secondary to being a mother and wife to Bill," she said. Sp5 Bill Powell, Headquarters Company, Headquarters Command, has a sharing of household chores in common with the other two couples.

The Powell's home is more traditional than the other two. Cindy does all the cooking and a larger share of the cleaning. Bill helps out with the shopping and cleaning.

Their evening's are usually planned around Kelly, their two-year old daughter. Since Kelly spends most of the day with the baby-sitter, the three-and-a-half hours spent each night with Kelly are very important hours of love, caring and education.

Trouble creeps in

These three families have learned to adapt to the times. For many families, trying to change can put undue stress on the marriage.

The problems arise when the wife starts a job and they try and keep the traditional roles of an American family. "When the wife works and is expected to come home and do the cooking, cleaning and laundry she may resent that she's doing more than the husband," explained Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Max Burgin, Clinical Pastoral Education supervisor. "Some men consider household chores to be women's work. The problems come from couples where the men still have the attitude that they should still have their meals served and the house cleaned," he added.

"There is another problem when the wife brings home a bigger paycheck than the husband. The man may then feel that he can't take care of his family and this creates a lot of anxiety. They first resent the wife going out to work and when the wife brings home a larger paycheck, he feels emasculated, that he is less than a man," added Chaplain (Capt.) Jim Langford, Clinical Pastoral Education.

The problems don't fall totally on the men, though. The wife may try and become a "superwoman" who tries to be a complete homemaker, wife, mother and career woman, said Carol Nichols, one of the counselors at the Custer Terrace Community Life Center.

Women's feeling of guilt about working may also surface. Not women feeling guilty about having to work, but because they enjoy it so much. "They may question themselves with, 'Hey, how come I enjoy being out of the house so much, happy to give up that penned-up feeling of being in the house all the time.' Many of today's women who have good educations and good minds are challenged by more than keeping the house and raising children," explained Burgin.

There is agreement among many of the family counselors here that the solutions to these problems are more easily solved when the family roles are redefined to fit the new situation.

The words of Maj. Robert Adams make a loud whisper. "You have to be flexible or you'll go nuts from frustration."

Custer road area next on post survey agenda

A 100-percent door-to-door survey of the occupants of the Custer Road Housing Area will be conducted February 23-27 to confirm occupancy/use of government quarters and to collect data useful to installation management.

Sponsors are requested to make arrangements to be present or have an adult member of the family present in quarters at the time scheduled for the survey. Individual letters will be sent to each occupant and will include a schedule of the dates and times when quarters are expected to be surveyed and a blank copy of the survey form. Applicable portions of the survey forms should be completed by occupants prior to the team's visit.

Commanders are requested to insure that members of their units who reside in Custer Road are notified of the survey and that they are permitted to be present in quarters during the scheduled time of the survey.

Members of the survey team will be dispatched in two-person teams and will be uniquely identified as described in letters sent to occupants.

Data resulting from this housing survey will be analyzed, refined and used to improve installation management and to survey the remaining post housing areas at later dates.

Parks in the Historic District offer relaxation and beautiful scenery practically any day of the year.

Oldest house 153-years old

Historic homes highlight downtown

One of Columbus's featured attractions for many residents of Fort Benning is the Historic District downtown.

The Historic District occupies most of what was the original town of Columbus laid out in 1828. Except for a few modern apartment buildings, the 205 houses were built between 1828 and the turn of the century.

Many of the restored buildings remain as private home. Others, under the direction of the Historic Columbus Foundation, are period museums displaying furnishings of the period when the building was built. Some have been converted to professional offices for lawyers, real estate agents and the like.

Highlighting the district are "the Folly," the Walker-Peters-Langdon House, the Pemberton House and the Goetchiuss House.

"The Folly" is a unique double octagon house built around 1854. The house has been listed with the National Register and named a National Historic Landmark by the Department of the Interior.

The Walker-Peters-Langdon house is considered to be the oldest building in Columbus. The small federal style cottage was built in 1828. It has been restored as a historic house museum with furnishings of that period.

The inventor of Coca-Cola, Dr. John Styth Pemberton, invented the internationally known beverage at his small cottage, 11 Seventh Ave. The kitchen and the apothecary shop of his Pemberton House have been made into a museum belonging to the Historic Columbus Foundation.

The Goetchiuss House was built in 1839 by Richard Rose Goetchiuss for his bride. The large white building is styled after certain houses in New Orleans and is now the site of the Goetchiuss House Restaurant.

Though not in the formal Historic District, the Springer Opera House is an important part of historic Columbus. Named in 1971 as the State Theater of Georgia by then Governor Jimmy Carter, the theater showed its revitalization was complete.

Much of the work in the district has been done by the Historic Columbus Foundation, founded in 1966. The foundation works to preserve sites and structures of historical and architectural importance to the heritage of Columbus.

The Historic Columbus Foundation is a member of the National Trust and the Georgia Trust for Historic Preservation. It keeps in touch with preservation efforts throughout the country and the state.

Heritage tours through the Historic District are available on Wednesdays and Saturdays. The tours leave the Georgia Welcome Center on Victory Drive at 10 a.m. The cost is $5 for adults and $2.50 for students and active duty military.

Local sites offer plenty to do

By Tim Boivin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

How often do you hear soldier's bemoaning the fact, no matter where they are in the world, that there isn't anything to do.

In the tri-community area of Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City, there is plenty to do without having to hop on a bus and escape to Atlanta or drive down to Destin or Panama Beach.

To do an article on all the places to go around Fort Benning could, and would, take up this whole newspaper. The Welcome Center on Victory Drive provides useful information on all of the places to see and things to do in the area. These are the most interesting sights to see and places to go.

The first area to pursue is that which is closest to the soldier, Fort Benning. Fort Benning has become the most internationally influential infantry center in the world with soldiers from around the world attending the Infantry School here. The biggest attraction, to soldiers and civilians alike, is the Infantry Museum, located on Batswell Avenue.

Visit Infantry Museum

Easily accessible by on-post buses, the museum traces the evolution of the American Infantryman from a musket-carrying minuteman to a highly-trained, sophisticated soldier carrying the ultra-modern M-16A1 rifle. On display are weapons, equipment and uniforms used by the Army Infantry soldier over the past 200 years.

A special exhibit honoring the Airborne soldier is under construction and is expected to be finished soon. Also, a General Store is featured with a tape-recorded history segment. Admission to the museum is free and it is open Tuesday through Friday 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and weekends 12:30 to 4:30 p.m. The museum is closed Mondays, Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Statues and monuments abound on Fort Benning in memory of soldiers, and in one case, of animals of days gone by. Among the statues is the Doughboy Statue in front of Bldg. 35, the Calculator statue at the rear of the building and the Infantrymen Statue in front of Infantry Hall (Bldg. 4).

The Doughboy Statue was unveiled in 1958 in front of Bldg. 35, which served as both post headquarters and headquarters for the Infantry School until the opening of Infantry Hall in 1964. The statue, cast in bronze, is a monumental memorial to the American Infantry soldier. The statue is a replica of one that still stands in Berlin.

The Calculator Statue, located at the rear of Bldg. 35, is dedicated to a dog that roamed Fort Benning in the 1920's. The dog became a kind of mascot for the troops here until its death by poisoning in 1923. The Infantry School News, a now-defunct paper, sponsored a drive after Calculator's death to raise 1,000 to build the memorial to Calculator.

The Infantryman Statue at the entrance to Infantry Hall was built at a cost of $2,000 by two enlisted soldiers in the late '50s and early '60s. The statue, built by Sp4's Manfred Bass and Karl Von Krog, shows the infantry squad leader as always, the dominant and decisive figure on the battlefield.

Other exhibits in the lobby of Infantry Hall feature international gifts to the Infantry School from nations who have sent their soldiers to train here. A list of generals who have commanded the post along with their pictures is also featured in the lobby.

Many parks available

Columbus, the second largest city in Georgia, has a lot to offer besides Victory Drive. Recreation, history, sports and conventions are among the many things going on in Columbus each day.

When it comes to recreation, there are three parks that deserve a special mention. First is Flat

The Goetchius House, built in 1839 by Richard Goetchius for his bride, is now a popular restaurant located in the downtown Historic District.

Rock Park, located off the Manchester Expressway on Flat Park Road. The park features a rolling brook over rock formations and is a drive through some of the most scenic forestry around. It's a wonderful place to spend a lazy day on a picnic. For those of you who don't like to pack a picnic basket, there's a refreshment stand in the park.

One of the launching ramps for Columbus' annual Raft Race is Rotary Park, just down Victory Drive on the way back to Fort Benning from the Welcome Center. Boats can be launched into the Chattahoochee River in the park, which also has picnic benches for riverside lunches. The park is open until 10 p.m. daily.

The last park is next to the Iron Works Trade and Convention Center. Called the Chattahoochee Promenade, it is reminiscent of the park in the musical "The Music Man". The promenade is one of two in the city, the other being the Liberty Bell Promenade in the median on Broadway.

The Liberty Bell is one of only 100 exact replicas of the original bell which stands in Independence Hall in Philadelphia. It's just down Broadway from the Historic District (see accompanying story).

Historical sites worth seeing

For Civil War buffs, the Confederate Naval Museum next to the Georgia Driver's License Bureau is a must. Featuring displays of the South's valiant effort to maintain superiority at seas despite losing three of their four shipyards, the museum houses the CSS Chattahoochee gunboat and the ironclad ram CSS Jackson/Muscogee. Both boats were burned and sunk the final months of the Civil War in 1865, not to be raised from their river grave for another century.

The Columbus Museum of Arts and Crafts, located at 1251 Wynnton Road, features Yuchi Indian materials and paintings, a children's museum and prehistoric Indian artifacts.

Columbus is also a city of drama. The Springer Opera House is one of the most historic opera houses in the nation. Among the stars who have graced the Springer's stage with their brilliance are Oscar Wilde, John Philip Sousa, Irving Berlin and George M. Cohan, not to mention Franklin Delano Roosevelt and William Jennings Bryan.

The next scheduled productions will not take place until February but tours can be arranged through the Historical Columbus Foundation on Broadway Avenue. Tours are conducted on Wednesdays at 10 a.m. and Sundays at 3 p.m. Special group tours may also be arranged.

Columbus College also puts on dramatic shows. Performances of Peter and the Wolf will be held tonight at 8 p.m., tomorrow at 2 and 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m. For ticket information, contact the drama department at Columbus College by calling 563-3801.

In the Historic District, next to the Chattahoochee Promenade, is the Iron Works Trade and Convention Center. This site is one of the proud representations Columbus has of both its past and its future. This showcase is attracting tourism to Columbus through trade shows and conventions while providing a link to the past in its own history.

Across the river in Phenix City, the Phenix City-Russell County Library is a historical landmark located in the Old Post Office Building across from the County Courthouse downtown.

For sports buffs, the Southern League's Columbus Astros sponsor special nights for soldiers and dependents to come out and watch a team that finished second in 1980 after topping their division in 1979. Among the special nights is Engineer's night, Youth Activities night and 1st Infantry Training Brigade Night.

Phenix City is the host each year of the Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl. The game decides the Division III NCAA football champion each year in Municipal Auditorium. Phenix City holds its annual Christmas Parade before the game. This year Dayton whipped Ithaca 63-0 for the title.

These are just a few of the things to do in the immediate vicinity of Fort Benning. As you can see, there's something for everybody. Fort Benning, just like anyplace else in the world, is what you make of it.

Rangers, Airborne set to go

The Rangers dish out some hard hitting during a recent practice in Doughboy Stadium. They're getting ready for the big game against the Airborne which takes place Sunday at 2 p.m.

By Jeffrey M. Frazer
Special to the BAYONET

What does South Carolina State University have in common with the Beret Bowl Sunday afternoon? Just a few years ago, Stafford Brown and Christopher Jenkins were roommates at South Carolina State and both were prominent figures on State's football team. On Sunday, they will take to the gridiron again but Brown's jersey will flash the Silver Wings of the Airborne while Jenkins will don a jersey which boasts the super-imposed image of a Ranger tab.

Since Brown is an offensive guard and Jenkins is a receiver, it does not appear that they will face off against each other personally but both will see plenty of action and with their experience in collegiate football, they could both prove to be very key players to each of their teams.

In this final week of preparation some of the coaches and players offered some last minute observations, promises, and assertions for the play of the game.

--Assistant Coach Bob Willis (Airborne), "The Ranger Team has the experience of already playing one game as well as having quite a few players from the college ranks. They are about three weeks ahead of us in organization and possess strong lineman and backs. Some of our key offensive players have experienced injuries during practice and our depth is limited by the thirty-man roster restriction. Our quarterbacks are inexperienced and our passing game will be limited but our running game is our bread and butter and with the tremendous pride this team has shown, we're all in for one great game."

--Assistant Coach Milt Ortiz, Jr. (Rangers), "We have a huge offensive line, a lethal defensive line, receivers who seem to have molasses on their fingers and backs who are so fast that we have to keep fire extinguishers on the sidelines to put out their trails. The assistant coaching staff has also been superior throughout the training. This team is just great."

--Fletcher Walker, Defensive Tackle (Airborne), "I've got a message for the Ranger quarterback. Try to get some foam rubber installed in the Ranger backfield because I'm a pretty nice guy and I hate to throw you down so many times on that hard Doughboy Stadium turf. If you can't get any, I'll limit my sacks to twenty."

--Assistant Coach John Redmond (Rangers), "I will take an All-American offensive line to keep these Rangers out. We will stack up the runs at the line of scrimmage and dominate the Airborne offensive attack. Our pass defense is good but since the Airborne Team can't throw, it doesn't have to be superior. We will breeze to a ten point win."

--Rufus Jordan, Defensive End (Airborne), "We know how to sack the quarterback and with our average size on the defensive line at 6'4" and 220 pounds, I'm sure glad I'm not the Ranger quarterback. After the game starts, the Ranger quarterback will wish he wasn't the Ranger quarterback."

--Bob Simons, Quarterback (Rangers), "The game is the Ranger's opportunity to come out of the woods and profile like the Airborne always does."

--Frank Gearing, Safety (Airborne), "Both teams

● See BERET BOWL, page 2

are going to get out there and fight and the best team is going to win. I'm very happy to say that the Airborne is the best team."

--Jack Hardwick, Defensive Tackle (Rangers), "That Beret Bowl Trophy will sure look good at Harmony Church."

--Chuck D'Amico, Nose Guard (Airborne), "Hey, this game is already in the bag. Do you know anyone who wants to buy a '78 Suzuki 400, new paint, nice chrome, a real cream puff, just $795, excluding sales tax and . . ."

--Rich Hagan, Cornerback (Rangers), "As long as the Airborne quarterback keeps the ball less than two seconds, he won't have a thing to worry about. However, the 'statistician' may need a calculator to keep track of the number of sacks of the Airborne quarterback."

In spite of some of these claims, I have made an unbiased attempt at analyzing the strengths of both teams to get an indication of what can be expected on Sunday afternoon. The results are truly amazing.

Size of the offensive and defensive line -- virtually equal right down to each man.

Agility and execution -- Rangers have the crispness; Airborne has the speed.

Defensive reaction -- Both timed to split-second equality.

Head coaches -- Swackhammer (Rangers), Sly, brilliant, cunning, calculating, bold. Hester (Airborne), cunning, sly, brilliant, bold, calculating.

Morale -- Both teams pushing 10.5 on the Richter Scale.

Conclusion - The people who miss being in Doughboy Stadium Sunday afternoon are going to miss the premier game of the year.

Kickoff time is 2 p.m. and the game ball will be jumped by the Silver Wings. Entertainment at half-time will be provided by the 283rd Army Band and the Colonial Band. Concessions will be available. A heavy turnout is anticipated and early arrival is recommended for best seating. Admission is free.

Company-level sports give much satisfaction

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It almost seems as if people are born to compete.

First they try hard to win mom's attention away from dad or vice versa. Then, as they grow older, they try to bring home a better report card than brother or sister.

They are usually introduced to the fun of competitive sports at an early age. The older they get, the more fierce the competition becomes, but it doesn't lose its fun or excitement.

Soldiers here, like many others, love the excitement of team competition, but sometimes can't play on the post-level teams here because of the lack of free time, talent, experience, etc. And with a post this size, it's impossible for every talented player to be able to make the team and play all the time at post level.

So, instead of trying out for the post team, many soldiers turn to their company teams and receive the same satisfaction of competing - maybe more!

Competition more fun

Don Dukes, a soldier from Company A, Headquarters Command, says, "The competition is between people you see everyday, which makes it more fun."

Michael Carter, Company B, Headquarters Command, considers himself an all-around sportsman. "We're getting more support this year; more people are coming to see the games. That makes me feel good and playing really helps me. I'd probably stay in the barracks if I wasn't on the company team," he explained.

While watching one of the games, Thomas Harding, 586th Engineer Company, said he just arrived here from Germany, otherwise he'd be playing. "I played in Germany and I really find it relaxing," he added. "Playing eases the tension of work. It's also good exercise and helps build up my wind for those long PT runs."

Company sports fill void

Luckily, Fort Benning has a large company-level sports program to allow soldiers a chance to compete, while at the same time, have fun and keep in shape. Of course, post-level sports serve almost the same purpose, but with a few differences. The players receive more notice, play some college teams both at home and on the road but unfortunately, there isn't room for everyone who's interested to play at post level.

Everyone may be born to compete but unfortunately not everyone is born a natural athlete with the ability to compete at post level. Company sports fill the void and allow all soldiers with the competitive desire to enjoy the glory of team competition they might otherwise not have.

After all, it's often better to be a big duck in a small pond than a small duck in a big pond.

Company A tops USAIB

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Company A, Headquarters Command, finally claimed the lead for good with 1:29 left in Monday's game to edge out a 43-38 win over the United States Infantry Board (USAIB).

Alpha started slow and was behind through the first half, down by six at the half 19-13. The pace quickened in second half action with the lead bouncing back and forth. After Alpha's Darnell Aiken tied it at 25-25 with 10:59 on the clock, USAIB's Theodore Demps came back 13 seconds later to regain the lead with a quick shot from the field. Chauncy Brown poured it on with back to back 25-foot plus bombs to reclaim a 29-27 lead for Company A.

USAIB fought right back to tie at 29. Then Donnell Frink hit nothing but net at 1:29 to take the lead for Alpha for the rest of the game.

According to Company A's coach, Clifton Willie, his team played a very sluggish game at the start but came through in the clutch thanks to Brown and Leon Cunningham.

Cunningham was the game's high scorer with 14 points. Don Dukes added nine and Brown put in six for Company A.

Ralph Milliken and J.C. Foster led USAIB with 10 points each and Robert Jones added six.

Company A is tied for second place as of Monday with an 8-2 record and USAIB is 3-8.

Other team's standings in the Headquarters

Command basketball league are: 139th Military Police Company, 10-2; 988th Military Police Company, 9-3; Headquarters Company, 7-4; B Company, 3-8.

The 36th Engineer Group has finished their league play and are now into tournament play. They were divided into two divisions and season standings are as follows:

Division 1 - D Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion ended with a 6-0 record and took the division championship; C Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 5-1; 586th Engineer Company, 4-2; Headquarters, Headquarters Company, 43rd Engineers, 2-4; A Company, 43rd Engineers, 2-4; Headquarters, Headquarters Company, 36th Group 1-5; B Company, 43rd Engineers, 1-5.

Division 2 - 608th Ordnance Company ended with a 5-1 record and took the division championship; 598th Maintenance Company, 5-1 in a one game playoff; 533d Transportation Company, 3-3; 524th Personnel Services Company, 3-3; 15th Finance, 2-4; Headquarters, Headquarters Detachment, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 2-4; 444th Transportation Company, 1-5.

In the 36th Group division playoffs Monday, Company D, 43rd Engineers, defeated the 598th Maintenance Company 40-29 in Division One play. Company C, 43rd Engineers defeated the 608th Ordnance Company 56-43 in Division Two.

Director sparks YA sports programs

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Would you like to go downstairs to the cafeteria to talk?"

"Whatever's comfortable," replied Martha Duncan, who took over as the Youth Activities Sports Director just short of three months ago.

All eyes remained on the attractive 28-year-old as we headed for the elevators. I did receive some evil looks for wanting to interview her downstairs, but we had some important things to talk about - like what she planned to do as the new sports director.

"I want to increase the program and get it back to where it should be for a post this size," said Duncan with an assurance of someone who knew what she was doing.

I'm sure my eyebrows raised as she named off the many activities that she wanted to incorporate into the program. Martial-arts, track and field events, gymnastics, golf lessons, boxing, even a Martha Duncan who knew what she was doing.

Superstar Competition, to name some of her ideas.

"Of course, these things can't all happen at once, but I would like to see them in the future," said Duncan. "Soccer is getting ready to start and the decision was recently made to have a post league instead of going downtown. I'll be able to establish some credibility by preparing the program; I'll be doing the whole nine-yards and the program should be a good sized one."

As we continued to talk I realized she knew exactly what she was doing and that if anybody could build up the dependent's sports program, it was her. The Panama native's list of accomplishments and experience is so long I desperately wanted to ask where she got all that energy and if she ever slept. I contained myself and continued to listen, thinking that the way the energy generated from her, it might rub off.

Duncan worked as the Sports Specialist for the 193rd Infantry Brigade in Panama from 1977 until coming here. Her primary duties included programming, planning and seeing the execution of all the sporting events for the brigade.

Is it much different working with young dependents than the older soldiers you are used to?

Duncan, who holds a Masters Degree in Health and Physical Education, related that she has worked with younger kids before, including being program director for the Amador Youth Center (Panama), where she programmed and coordinated all the 13 to 19-year-old's social activities from September 1976 to April 1977. "One difference when working with the soldiers is that when they had a complaint, they couldn't go home and tell mom and dad," she laughed. "But the same enthusiasm exists, and the little ones get so excited they'll violate all the rules of the games without really meaning to."

Duncan concluded that the biggest difference is that this is a more volunteer setup. "As far as coaches and assistants go, we need to go out and recruit these people," she explained. "A lot of this comes out of personal interest of the parents. They play a big part in a successful program and I want them to know that we do have one and I'm going to work hard to build it up."

While not performing her job, the YA Sports Director gets into her own physical activities like running, working out in the gym, riding bikes and swimming. Her high energy level doesn't seem to let up as she also enjoys scuba diving, playing guitar, singing, reading and cooking. Would she have the time and energy to do all these things if she were married?, I wonder to myself. Probably, but for now it seems she'll do one heck of a job for Youth Activities.

Lones Wigger fires perfect score

By Tommy Poole
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Lones Wigger and Randy Stewart, of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, dominated all the action last weekend in marksmanship competition held here.

In smallbore rifle competition, two-time Olympic gold medal winner Wigger scored a perfect 800 of 800 points to win the 1981 National Indoor Sectional Championship. Wigger defeated last year's champion Karen Monez of Fort Worth, Texas, and formerly of USAMU, by two points at 798.

David Cramer, Army Reserve of Alquippa, Pa., rounded out the top three places with 797 points.

In 10-meter air rifle competition, Earl Ellis fired a winning score of 579 out of 600. The team of Ellis, Wigger, Ernest Vande Zande and Jim Meredith established a new national team record of 2,301 out 2400 points.

The Georgia State Running Target Championship was won by Randy Stewart, his sixth consecutive victory in as many matches with 584 points out of 600. Teammate James Reiber placed second with 569 points followed by Robert Partridge, USMC, at 565. Stewart also walked away with the Mixed Run Championship with 384 points out of 400.

The U.S. Army squad of Randy Stewart, James Reiber, Robert George and Wesley Vaughn swept all team titles over the USMC with scores of 2,256 to 2,173 in Standard Runs and 1,491 to 1,452 in Mixed runs.

In the final event, Robert George established a new national record when he won the 10-meter air rifle event with 368 points out of 400. Randy Stewart finished second in the event at 362 and James Reiber placed third with 344.

Doughboys, Doughgirls go to Moody AFB

Overtime fight earns victory

By Becky Delgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Nate Harris led the Doughboys with 35 points pacing them to a tough 108-103 overtime win over the Moody Air Force Base team Saturday in Valdosta, Ga.

Benning and Moody were tied 93-all at the end of regulation time. Darrell Smith couldn't seem to find his range throughout the game until overtime when his points were crucial and helped the Doughboys to victory.

Harry Lyons was the Doughboys' second high-scorer with 27 points. Mike Mack added 14 and Robert Thomas and Silas Anderson put in 12 each.

According to Doughboy Coach Oliver Green, Moody's good outside shooting team is what kept them in the game.

The Doughgirls also traveled to Moody Air Force Base but came home without a victory. Moody's girls managed to grab a 49-43 win over Benning. They were led by game-high scorer Vicki Baldwin with 23 points.

Shirley McCoy was the Doughgirls' high-scorer with 19 points and Teresa Irvin and Joyce McMullen added eight each.

According to Doughgirl coach Perry Graves, the team started cold after having to play ten minutes after finishing a four and one-half hour bus ride. "We were down by as much as 12 at times, then we'd catch up, but we couldn't keep it going."

The Doughgirls are taking a Valentine's break this weekend, but will come back Feb. 21 and 22 to face the Atlanta All-Stars at Briant Wells Fieldhouse. Saturday's game starts at 6 p.m. and Sunday's begins at 1 p.m.

Fishermen on board

Two members of the Fort Benning's B.A.S.S. club were recently selected as directors by the Georgia B.A.S.S. Chapter Federation, largest of the 37 states federations, to represent the 75 affiliated chapters of the federation.

Thomas L. "Skip" Ray and Harry E. Hall, retired lieutenant colonels, were elected to the 12-member board. Ray was then elected as Secretary of the Federation, the number two position, whose duties are similar to those of a chief of staff. Hall was reelected to the board and again appointed as the Federation Tournament chairman, a position he has held for the past four years.

The Benning club feels considerable pride in having two members on the board of directors, the only club in the state that does, according to a member.

Fort Benning's club has done well the past three years having placed third, fourth and third in the six-man team contest. During each year, the team fished in competition against 39 of the best teams in the state.

The club consists of many fine folks who really enjoy fishing and meets the second and fourth Tuesday of each month. Anyone interested in joining the club should come by Crain Hall at 7:30 p.m. on meeting nights.

Claudia Feinen takes aim for a strike at the Main Post bowling center. The seventh grader was one of 520 Faith School students to take part in the four-week bowling program coordinated by the school's Physical Education Director, Dalton Oliver, and head of the post's bowling centers, Jim Cantrell. Claudia is the daughter of Sgt. Maj. Klaus and Inge Feinen.

YA soccer starts

Fort Benning's Youth Activities Spring Soccer season is just around the corner and registration is now taking place through Feb. 20 for ages 6-18.

Practice begins Feb. 27 and the opening game is scheduled for March 14. Coaches, both men and women, are needed!

Anyone interested should sign up at the Youth Activities Bldg. 1054 (across from the Infantry Museum) from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call YA Sports Director Martha Duncan at 545-3070.

Those were the days! Private Richard F. Pittman, fifth man on the table's right side in this picture, eats the noon meal with his unit, Headquarters Company, 123rd Infantry Regiment.

By Bill Walton

For wounds received in World War I

62 years later, Purple Heart given

The word is out! If you want to know what is happening in Smiths, Ala., ask Richard Pittman, owner-operator of a Smiths' grocery store since 1932.

Pittman received a 62-year overdue Purple Heart Medal in ceremonies at the Smiths High School at 8:30 p.m., Thursday. The medal, for wounds received in France during World War I, will be presented by Fort Benning officials during the Ruritan Club meeting. Pittman is a charter member of this club.

He was born July 28, 1900, in Carrville, Ala. After enlisting in the U.S. Army at Opelika, Ala. in September 1917, he took basic training at Camp Gordon, Ga.

His training sergeant, a dedicated infantryman and veteran of nine years in the German Army, felt his sole purpose was to train good infantry soldiers using whatever means required.

Pittman recalls the sergeant telling the company, "You may be cussing me now, but when you get overseas, you will be glad I taught you how to do all these things that are necessary for your survival." A statement, Pittman later found to be very true.

After six months basic training, he was assigned to Headquarters Company, 123rd Infantry regiment, in a camp near Macon, Ga. as a private in the signal platoon. His monthly pay, after deductions, at that time was $11.75 and he said he always managed to have some money left at the end of the month.

He and 108 other men in his unit were selected to go to Europe to fight with the infantry. He joined Company E, 58th Infantry Regiment, 4th Infantry Division, in France in February 1918. He took part in several battles that year and remembered, "It all seemed to run together, we sometimes weren't sure where we were, but we did what we were supposed to and got the job done."

On Aug. 4, 1918, during the fighting at Chateau Thierry, he was sent out on a nine-man patrol to pinpoint the location of some enemy three-inch artillery pieces that were causing havoc with the American troops. After they found the enemy position, the enemy spotted them and directed their artillery on the patrol. Pittman was severely wounded in the left leg and the other eight men were killed.

After passing through several hospitals, he ended World War I in a hospital in Brest, France. When he returned to the United States, he spent another year in military hospitals before being discharged from the Army as a private in January 1920.

Following his military service, Pittman went to preparatory school and studied textile engineering at Georgia Tech for two years. But then, his war wound gave him so much trouble that he was forced to drop school.

He moved to Phenix City, Ala., in 1933, and worked for various grocery stores. He married Alice Thelma Jinnett of Phenix City in August 1925 and they were together some 54 years before she passed away in 1979.

The Pittmans moved to Smiths, Ala. in 1932, and he has been operating a grocery store since that time. He is considered a pillar of the community and if anyone wants to know what has happened to the Smiths' area during the past 50 years, they ask Pittman.

He receives a veterans disability pension for the World War I wound, and was eligible for the Purple Heart Medal. For some reason, no one took the necessary action to get him the medal. And, he didn't bother with it for all these years. About four months ago, he had a change of heart and decided he wanted the medal after all. He then contacted the office of Senator Donald Steward of Alabama and he took the necessary administrative action to obtain the Purple Heart for Pittman.

Although an octogenarian, Pittman is in touch with current events and day-to-day happenings in Smiths. He is a lifetime member of the American Legion and an active member of Post 135, Phenix City. He keeps up with politics, such as watching the consolidation efforts to make Smiths a city, a major issue in the area now. He has definite ideas on this matter and says, "I am against consolidation because I don't believe it will help Smiths at this time."

On post cable station presents military facts

By Bill Powell

USAIC Public Affairs Office

It's been said that things remain the same, only the people involved change. True or False? You can be the judge as you view various programs on WFBG-TV from the past.

"Sportsreel" has sporting events that took place as recently as the 1950s. Tune in "Sportsreel" and find out if fashions, sports and even people have changed that much since the '50s. Following are programs that are highlighted from next week's programming:

- "The Benning Report" takes a look at how the Army has changed from the wives' point of view when Frances Moore, retired military wife, talks about her experiences as a military wife. Sgt. Maj. Floyd Clark is also featured during sports with perspective on why he gave up a promising rodeo career for the Army.

- "The Big Picture — Famous Generals — George G. Marshall" looks at the career of General Marshall including his post military assignment as Secretary of State.

- "The Big Picture — A Nation Sings" features music by the Army Band and Chorus from the Civil War era.

- "Take Ten — Saving Gas" has a subject that is near and dear to the budget conscious person. This program brings ways you can save gas by changing driving habits or by doing various things to your car.

- "The First Forty Days" is an historical film taking the viewer into Korea for a look at the first forty days of operations after the Communist invasion from the north.

- "Army Total Force Story" examines and explains the Army's planned expansion of the divisions within cost and maintenance guidelines.

- "West Point — The Army Challenge" shows future officers readying themselves for service to the United States.

- "Spectrum," WFBG's four-hour music and information program, brings you a two-hour concert recorded live. The artist is Kenny Loggins, formerly of Loggins and Messina.

Check your BAYONET or Benning Bulletin for times and dates of programs scheduled.

'Smokey Two' lacks fire

By Bill Powell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

When my wife said "Let's go see Smokey and the Bandit Two" while we were discussing movies to see one evening I said, "Sure, why not?"

Right then I should have remembered that with a "two" in the title that the movie had to be a sequel. Sequels aren't necessarily bad. "The Empire Strikes Back" is a recent example of a sequel that was as good as the original movie. In most circles if the follow-up story is almost as good or half as good people will probably go to see it and be satisfied for the most part. However, "Smokey and the Bandit Two" is a picture that missed by a fair amount.

Anyone who saw "Smokey and the Bandit" remembers it as the story of a daredevil-showoff called "Bandit" who used the citizen's band radio to find out where the "smokies" (state police) were so that he and the truck being driven by his old buddy Cletus Snow could make it back to a truck rodeo with a load of beer in an impossible amount of time. Impossible, unless they were speeding that is.

Singer-Actor Jerry Reed played Cletus and Jackie Gleason portrayed Sheriff Buford T. Justice, the "Smokey" mentioned in the title trying to catch the merry band of lawbreakers.

The sequel is basically the same story and all of the main characters are back. As a matter of fact Jackie Gleason plays the part of himself and his brothers. But this time, for some reason, you just don't get the same feeling. Burt Reynolds played the part of "Bandit" in the original and reprises the role in "Bandit Two." In the original movie Reynold's portrayed a very likeable hero, egocentric as heck but still likeable. In "Bandit Two" the "Bandit" is not very likeable. He has turned into an intolerant, humorless, drunk who has to be coaxed into taking the challenge of moving a pregnant elephant for a bet. "Bandit" has a lot of growing up to do as a fallen folk hero. There is quite a difference between a load of beer and a pregnant elephant and his don't care attitude tinges the feeling throughout the whole picture.

The writers didn't do as well their second time around with the same characters. The laughs aren't as numerous and the story seems slightly disjointed. True, there are still car crashes and the usual stuff that goes on in this type of movie but it seems slightly strained and really hard to believe at various points. "Smokey and the Bandit's" original appeal was that it was not out of the realm of possibility.

"Smokey and the Bandit Two" was a disappointment to me and I'm sure it will be for others. As a fan of Reynold's I always hope he'll get a movie he deserves, as it was "Smokey and the Bandit Two" was a movie no one really deserved.

For the acting and the car smashups lots of people like I rate "Smokey and the Bandit Two" from one to two stars.

How About That?

By William J. Erbach Sr.

People who live on the Canadian and Mexican borders have some advantages which the rest of us can't enjoy.

If you lived in Detroit and liked jams and pork pies, you would be fortunate to simply drive through a tunnel and over a bridge and you could indulge yourself. Those who enjoy fish and chips on a typical "English" street can have that delightful experience eating in Windsor or Ontario, Canada.

Prayer breakfast

The 28th annual National Prayer Breakfast was held here in the Main NCO Club last Thursday. Reverend Robert J. Potts, from the First Baptist Church in Columbus presented the sermon. In it he said, "Believe in the ideas of every human being. Despite our differences we can share by bring people together with opportunities and freedom. This is our heritage."

There are a number of places where United States and Mexican cities are only separated by a fence and it is a simple matter to pass from one country to the other. In the Mexican border towns there are any number of wonderful things to buy and all sorts of special foods to eat.

Of course each town is so close to the other it is strongly influenced by the other because there is a natural flow of the cultures. This is not as noticeable between Canada and the United States as between Mexico and the United States. The reason is probably because we share a common mother tongue with the Canadians.

But visiting two border towns as Mexicali and Calexico is really fun. One of the most interesting things is watching the people. Clerks in the stores and checkers at cash registers are bilingual, that is they can speak both Spanish and American. As you approach them, they need only to glance at you and tell which of these languages you use. It's uncanny. They never seem to make a mistake. How About That?

Did you ever stop to think that how you act speaks for you before you even open your mouth? There are two old sayings that come to mind; "Actions speak louder than words" and "Your actions speak so loudly that I can't hear what you are saying." Just looking at a person and what they are doing tells a lot about them. Also, you can speak very loudly about a subject, but as you act contrary to it, you really destroy what you are saying.

Your personal appearance also speaks for you. Take a look at others and then remember that you are being judged by much of the same standards.

Adopt me

Loneliness is not just for human beings. A lost or forgotten animal gets lonely too. Concerned people have been adopting the many good cats and dogs from the post's Veterinary Clinic. Thirteen dogs and three cats were adopted from Jan. 20-29. You can take a pet home from the clinic for $7 to cover the cost of vaccinations and blood test.

Truck traffic regs strictly enforced

Fort Benning officials have announced that regulations dealing with through truck traffic on post will be strictly enforced in the future.

Provost Marshal Col. William Ward said the decision to restrict commercial and private truck traffic is necessary to reduce the possibility of accidents and to prolong the life of the post road system.

"In the future," he said, "truck traffic on the installation will be allowed only to those trucks that have official business on post. These," he added, "will include those trucks representing firms and contractors who are delivering or picking up supplies and materials, or have valid contracts with the government for other services.

"The restriction is designed to prohibit the use of post roads and throughways by commercial and private trucks as a shortcut either from Georgia to Alabama or vice versa," he said. "It is necessary because of the hazards created by slow-moving military equipment and troop columns on the roadways."

Ward said, "Post officials are particularly concerned with logging and pulpwood trucks which have been observed speeding or causing traffic congestion on heavily traveled post roads. In some instances," he added, "overloaded trucks have caused damage to roads and streets."

According to Ward, signs redirecting through truck traffic away from post have been erected on the Lindsay Creek By-Pass, Highway 27, and other roads leading into the installation.

Ward said that military police have been instructed to verify the official business status of all trucks on a regular basis and that, initially, truckers just driving through will be issued traffic warnings and instructed to leave the post. Future plans for the enforcement of the truck restrictions include roadblocks and vehicle weigh stations.

"After an interim time period for public awareness and education, military police will cite violators if warranted, and violations will be forwarded to the U.S. magistrate for prosecution," Ward said.

He added that repeat offenders will be subject to exclusion from the post for an indefinite period.

Trees to be planted

Arbor Day celebrated

Five hundred flowering Dogwood seedlings and three flowering Japanese Cherry trees will be planted today by designated units and activities including the dependent schools in cooperation with the Georgia Forestry Commission during this year's Arbor Day observance here.

Mrs. Lois Grange, wife of Maj. Gen. David E. Grange Jr., assisted by Mr. Floyd Cook from the Forestry Commission and Fort Benning foresters, will plant one of the flowering Japanese Cherry trees in a ceremony at Patch School at 10 a.m.

Arbor Day is observed in Georgia on the third Friday in February each year. According to a Facilities Engineer Directorate spokesman, the Forestry branch has already planted approximately 212,000 pine seedlings on 470 acres here during Fiscal Year 1981. The spokesman said the Forestry branch plans to plant 400 to 800 acres per year over the next five years with approximately 500 seedlings per acre.

Black women forgotten in history

By Leann Hines

Public Affairs Office
Fort Lee, Va.

WASHINGTON--Throughout the history of blacks in this country, black men have been acclaimed for laying the foundation for the black heritage. Though the mass of contributions were men, black women also played vital roles in shaping the destiny of black heritage.

Even in pre-civil war days, black women stood at the head of the struggle for freedom from slavery. They also pursued recognition for women as citizens and co-partners with men in areas of medicine, education, the arts and the military.

Some black women leaders of the past may be familiar -- Harriet Tubman, conductor of the "underground railroad", nurse and union spy; Mary McCleod Bethune, educator and Phyllis Wheatly, famous black female poet -- are perhaps among the best known.

But mostly the roles of black women were portrayed as that of childbearer, nursemaid, cook or cleaning woman. There is very little mention in the history books of the black women whose lives paralleled those of their male-counterparts.

Ida B. Wells, crusader against lynchings, advocators of women's rights and an influential journalist, was such a woman. Born on July 16, 1862, in Holly Springs, Miss., to the parents of slaves, Ida's life under slavery was shortlived. The emancipation proclamations brought about changes in Mississippi which allowed blacks to become lawyers, politicians and wealthy.

Ida's childhood was secure and happy and it was easy for her to believe that blacks were equal as well as free. But in the 1880's as black voters were driven from the polls and black lawmakers lost their seats in southern legislatures, the guarantees of equal rights were fading too. This was brought home forcefully when in 1883 the Supreme Court ruled that the Civil Rights Act of 1875 was unconstitutional.

"The colored people of the United States feel as if they had been baptized in ice water," wrote T. Thomas Fortune, a prominent journalist.

This sort of discrimination prompted Ida to begin writing articles for Free Speech, a black Memphis newspaper. Detailing "outrages and discrimination," deploring "the contemptuous defamation of black women" and criticizing "the so-called leaders" of her race, earned Ida the nickname "Princess of the Press." She soon became a renowned public speaker, campaigning against lynching throughout the United States and Europe while continuing to use journalism as a tool until her death at age 68.

Another black woman most probably unknown to modern day Americans -- blacks as well as whites -- was Mary Church Terrell.

Mollie Church, as she was called, became the first President of the National Association of Colored Women and the first black woman to serve on a Board of Education in the United States (Washington, D.C.)

Like Ida Wells, Mollie's early childhood was free of racial discrimination for a while. She was graduated from Oberlin College in 1884, one of three black women to receive a B.A. degree from the college that year.

Some of her accomplishments included co-founder of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; delegate to the International Congress of Women at Zurich, speaking on the conditions of black Americans; director of Work Among Colored in the East, an appointment made by the Republican National Committee. With honorary degrees from three institutions, she waged a successful fight to open membership in the American Association of University Women to Minority Women. Through her efforts as head of the Coordinating Committee for the Enforcement of D.C. Anti-discrimination Laws, the Supreme Court ruled that D.C. restaurants must serve all.

Mary Church Terrell was not concerned with whether something she wanted to do was proper or prudent but only whether it was right. So instrumental was she in defending the rights of her people that on her ninetieth birthday, 700 guests were on hand to honor her.

There are many other black women whose multiple interests and activities are a reflection of concerns that have been common to blacks on every social, political and economic front from the days of chattel slavery to the present.

As Americans continue to celebrate black history month let us not forget the trials and tribulations and contributions of the black woman. (ARNEWS)

Complaining? You are the Army

By Antonio Palomino

Public Affairs Office
Langley Air Force Base

During my long career, I have heard the comment, "The Army did this to me" over and over again. It happens when somebody doesn't get paid on time, gets an unwanted assignment, or whenever things aren't going right.

At first, it seemed this Army was inefficient but when I took a closer look, I discovered that there is no such thing as "the Army" because I am the Army!

I am the Army when I work as a commander deciding when and how things must be done to get my unit ready to do its job. I am the Army when I drive a tank or when I get ready to go on a forced march.

I am the Army when preparing or serving food at the dining facility, or pulling maintenance, processing personnel actions, typing orders or guarding an area. I am the Army when I do any of the thousands of jobs needed to keep it operating.

If I know what my job is, do it professionally and with the knowledge of its consequences, everyone will get paid on time and that assignment will come to the right person to get the job done correctly. Of course, some mistakes will be made and they all affect someone. But if we know we've done our best, then we can handle those mistakes and even accept their consequences.

All installations activities have reputations carved out by their members -- not by a few errors, but by the results of daily, routine actions. Each of us is "the Army" from the four star general to the basic soldier, from Pentagon to the guard on the DMZ in Germany or Korea. There is no unimportant job. What I do and how I do it will eventually affect somebody else. If I do my job properly, the Army will do its job. If I don't . . . So you see, there is no such thing as "the Army" because I am it.

Loose pets big post problem

The number one problem in housing areas according to recent surveys is dogs running loose. The surveys, conducted in two housing areas, showed a total of 113 complaints about loose dogs.

"We have lack of cooperation and adherence to policy. People are letting their animals run loose on the post," commented Col. Bobby J. Harris, chief of staff. "Dogs running loose present a safety problem to small children," he added.

The survey showed that more than half of the dogs have not been properly registered on post.

"This is a problem we've been trying to deal with in a low key manner," said the chief of staff. "We've had the dog catcher out picking up the dogs as they have been reported or as he sees them running loose. The owner is then warned to keep their dogs under control. We have even caught the same animal a second and third time. Now we are going to have to take more positive action. That has been too much action for one dog or cat," said the chief of staff. He elaborated that post regulations are very specific—pets on post will be controlled at all times.

"We are going to have a more positive and pressing program to get control of these animals," said the chief of staff. "We are just trying to forewarn everyone to get into the act and get their pets registered," he added.

Care of pets is another problem. "One out of five animals I've caught look like they've been living in the woods. You can count every rib in their bodies," reported Sp4 Ray Spurlock, one of the post's game wardens.

Many of the animals caught have no collar or rabies tag and they end up in the dog pound. According to Spurlock, half of these animals go unclaimed and are put to sleep.

Custer Road area to be surveyed

A 100-percent door-to-door survey of the occupants of the Custer Road Housing Area will be conducted February 23-27 to confirm occupancy/use of government quarters and to collect data useful to installation management.

Sponsors are requested to make arrangements to be present or have an adult member of the family present in quarters at the time scheduled for the survey. Individual letters will be sent to each occupant and will include a schedule of the dates and times when quarters are expected to be surveyed and a blank copy of the survey form. Applicable portions of the survey forms should be completed by occupants prior to the team's visit.

Commanders are requested to insure that members of their units who reside in Custer Road are notified of the survey and that they are permitted to be present in quarters during the scheduled time of the survey.

Members of the survey team will be dispatched in two-person teams and will be uniquely identified as described in letters sent to occupants.

Data resulting from this housing survey will be analyzed, refined and used to improve installation management and to survey the remaining post housing areas at later dates.

New illegal drug proving fatal

WASHINGTON--Use of a new illegal drug has been reported in the Western United States, say officials of the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) in Los Angeles.

The new drug, "China White," is 80 times stronger than morphine and is being sold for about the same price as heroin. DEA warns there may have been several deaths caused by the drug because of its strength. An overdose results in immediate respiratory arrest.

"China White" is available in a white powder and is believed to be made in laboratories located in Southern California.

Because its arrival on the drug scene is fairly recent, DEA authorities cannot comment on methods used to package or market "China White." (ARNEWS)

Field day builds morale

By Brian Adams
1st Infantry Training Brigade
Public Affairs Office

Combine sports such as basketball with military skills like M16 field stripping and you have unusual competition.

Combine them is exactly what the 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, did as they conducted the third field day of the year for their soldiers and dependents Monday at the Harmony Church Field House.

The mini-olympics began early in the morning and consisted of about 16 activities pitting company against company for individual awards and the exalted title of "The Best in Battalion".

The soldiers participated in such events as basketball, volleyball, football and pool. While their teammates were playing traditional sports other soldiers were competing in events centered around the military skills that are basic to their training such as push-ups, sit-ups, M16 field stripping and even a 2.5 mile combat run (full field gear with gas mask).

Those soldiers who didn't participate in any of the sporting events practiced their own style of relaxation by writing letters home, watching television, conversing with friends or just watching the action.

"It's a great morale builder," commented many of the soldiers about the field day. "It's also a great way to encourage spirit or fire people up."

"It's designed as a break in training for them," explained SFC Edwin A. Bevier, a cadre member of the 5th Battalion. "More or less a morale builder," he commented. "Something for them so that they can relax before they go back into training."

At the end of the day, Company A was on top, having placed first in all but four of the events, Company E was second, Company C was third and Company D had come in last, but despite where they placed in the competition everyone enjoyed it.

Engineers Honor 197th CDR

36th Engineer Group held its first group level retreat ceremony at York Field last Friday. The ceremony gave the Group's soldiers a chance to honor Col. Michael F. Spigelmire, commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade, before he departs Fort Benning, in appreciation for what he has done for the Engineer Group. The colonel received a certificate and plaque from the soldiers.

Patterson Award honors top grad

"And now here it is... a magnificent service pistol, beautifully inscribed in silver, in honor of your character and achievements. I place it in your hands knowing well your restraint, courage and competence."

These were the words of Mrs. Robert P. Patterson last week, as she presented a prized 45 caliber service pistol to 2nd Lt. John S. Emmerson, 29th recipient of the Robert P. Patterson Memorial Award, during ceremonies at Benning's Marshall Auditorium. A most prestigious award, the Patterson award is presented annually to the year's most outstanding infantry officer candidate graduate. Additionally, Emmerson received a monetary award.

The award was established in 1952 to honor the late Secretary of War, and Judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, who served as an Army captain during World War I.

Special guest of honor for the ceremony was Maj. Gen. Robert A. Sullivan, Chief of Army Public Affairs Office, who on behalf of the Secretary of the Army presented the Patterson Memorial Award Certificate to Lieutenant Emmerson.

Each year the judge's widow comes to Fort Benning to personally congratulate the officer for his outstanding accomplishments which led him to winning the award. Looking into the face of Lieutenant Emmerson, the gracious lady exclaimed, "My husband would have been impressed by your achievements. Your ratings and academic scores would have meant a great deal to him and he would value the leadership you will develop, in each assignment. You will be well served by your background as an enlisted man now that you have become an officer responsible for a number of human beings who serve under you. My husband would want me to tell you something you may not realize. Which is that your experience as a junior officer is like none you will have in later life. As your men are carried along together with you in the course of duty, they will become closer to you than could happen in the humdrum years to come. During this period when you are all so full of life, you will test these men and find that most of them are good. Then somehow, when the worst happens you will be surprised at the depth of their instant loyalty and helpfulness."

Emmerson, a 24-year-old native of St. Louis is currently a helicopter pilot student at Fort Rucker, Ala. He attended the officer candidate course at Benning from November 1979 to Feb. 1980.

Sheriff's Target

With the continuing turnover of personnel here, it is apparent that there is always someone who hasn't "gotten the word."

The results of some recent on post housing area surveys and the questions that are asked on almost a daily basis indicate that there is a general lack of understanding concerning the requirements for the registration of vehicles, weapons, and household pets. My comments this week should assist in clarifying these requirements.

Col. Ward Provost Marshal

The privately owned vehicles of personnel, either (military and civilian) who reside or work here must be registered within three working days after being brought onto the installation. A valid state operators license, a valid vehicle registration certificate, proof of ownership (title or registration), a current state inspection certification, and a signed statement verifying a minimum insurance coverage are necessary for the registration of all privately owned vehicles. Satisfactory completion of the USAIC Defensive Driving Course is required for E-5's and below.

Vehicles may be registered at the Provost Marshal Office, Bldg. 215, Mondays from 1 p.m.-4:30 p.m. and Tuesdays through Fridays from 7:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m.. A Fort Benning temporary vehicle registration certificate will be issued if circumstances preclude immediate permanent registration.

The permanent Fort Benning privately owned vehicle decal received upon registration of the vehicle must be displayed on the left side (driver side) of the front and rear bumpers. Motorcycle decal are to be placed on the left front fork of the bike. Decals may be placed on a metal or other nonporous plate and then securely attached to the front and rear of those vehicles which are equipped with small, narrow, rubberized, or painted bumpers. However, the plate must be clearly visible at all times. The display of decals in vehicle windows is not currently authorized.

Personnel residing here must register all of their privately owned weapons. This registration is also accomplished at the Vehicle Registration Office in Bldg. 215. A description (make, type, length, serial number, caliber, gauge, model number) of the weapon must be provided. It is not necessary to bring the weapon with you to register it.

There have been several recent incidents reported to military police involving larceny of privately owned weapons out of vehicles. You are reminded that the transport of any loaded firearms in privately owned vehicles is prohibited. It is also a violation of regulations to carry or transport weapons in privately owned vehicles anywhere on the reservation except when proceeding to or from skeet shooting, authorized target shooting or authorized hunting.

Although not mandatory, we do encourage the registration of privately owned bicycles. This can also be accomplished at the Vehicle Registration Office. At the time of registration you must provide information on the make, model, color, and serial number of the bicycle. You will then be issued a Fort Benning bicycle decal. A record of this information will be maintained at the Provost Marshal Office in the event of loss or theft.

All uncaged pets over three months of age and maintained on the installation must be registered with the Post Veterinarian at Bldg. 265. Pets must be present for the registration. A tag will be issued and must be securely fastened to the collar or harness of the animal. Remember, all pets, when outside, must be leashed or under voice control and within sight of a responsible individual.

Loose animals will be picked up by the military police and taken to the Post Veterinarian for disposition. Keep this fact in mind when your cute little pet is allowed to run loose throughout your housing area, it probably will become a nuisance!

Student makes band

An eighth grade student at Faith School was recently selected as a member of the Georgia Junior-High All-State Band.

Jim Erbach, son of Chaplain and Mrs. William Erbach, auditioned with the tuba at the competition held in Macon, Ga.

Five other Faith School students were selected for the Georgia All-State Chorus. Deena Wigger, Elizabeth Matsui, Sophia Brown, Carlos Aldarondo and Rachel Entlich were selected after two auditions.

Moving telephone poles takes a lot of muscle.

Scouts from Troop 27 helped handle the workload.

Eagle bound scout builds amphitheater

Find one boy scout working on his Eagle award to plan the project and lead other scouts with strong backs and determination who are not afraid of hard work.

Add a willing adult to supervise for safety and in two cold, wet weekends you too, can have an amphitheater behind your school for outdoor classes on those nice warm summer days.

In this case the scout is 16-year-old Danny Kruger, a junior at Pacelli High School and son of Capt. and Mrs. Anthony F.

Kruger, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group. The other scouts involved in the project are from Fort Benning Troop 27.

Planning and coordinating the project took Danny six weeks. The telephone poles and wood planks the scouts used to build the amphitheater were donated by Property Disposal and elementary school engineers. The Amphitheater is behind Lloyd School.

With the completion of the project, Danny is 3 badges short of his Eagle award.

Danny's calibrated eyeball kept the chainsaw on course.

A strong arm is always needed.

Voila, an amphitheater! Danny's satisfaction upon the successful completion of the project is evident.

Scout leaders awarded Silver Beaver

Two Fort Benning District boy scout leaders were honored with the Silver Beaver award Feb. 5 at the Annual Appreciation Banquet, Chattahoochee Council.

Mrs. June Jones and Lt. Col. Bobby J. Maynard received the highest award for volunteer service given by a local council at the banquet held at Callaway Gardens.

The Silver Beaver award is presented for noteworthy service of exceptional character to youth by registered scouts, cub scouts and Explorer leaders within the council area. Those nominated need to be involved with other community projects.

Mrs. Jones has served 14 years in the scouting program, including time in Conow, Germany and the Sukuran Riukyus Islands. For the past seven years she has worked as a craft instructor and program chairperson in Cub Leaders Pow Wow and Cub Day Camps. She is currently a den leader and den leader coach for Pack 120. She holds the Den Leader and Den Leader Training Award and Woodbadge Beads. She received the Fort Benning District Award of Merit in 1979.

Maynard served as a scouting coordinator, committee member, scoutmaster, assistant scoutmaster and cub master in the last nine years. He is presently scoutmaster of Troop 237 and has served as District Chairman for the Fort Benning District. He holds the Scouter's Training Award, Scouter's Key and Woodbadge Beads.

"WHEN YOU'RE A CIVILIAN AGAIN, AN EXTRA $1,400 A YEAR SURE COMES IN HANDY."

"I got out of the Army in February of 1977, right when all the prices were going up. Food. Clothing. Gas. You name it and it went up.

"Fortunately, when I was out-processing, someone asked me if I wanted to make some extra money with a local Army Reserve unit, and I said yes.

"It's good I joined right away, because it took me a couple of months to find a good full-time job.

"Even with a regular job, the extra $1,400 I earned with the Reserve came in handy. It was the difference between barely making ends meet and being able to put a little money away.

"By going direct from Active into the Reserve, I was also able to keep my rank of E-4. I'm now an E-5, pulling in over $1,600 a year. Not bad for a weekend a month and two weeks annual training.

"I'm also taking advantage of some other benefits.

I buy a lot of my auto supplies at the PX.

I carry low-cost government life insurance through the Reserve.

I also think the retirement package is a good deal.

"A side benefit that's helped me is the additional training I've picked up in the Reserve. I was an MP on active duty but have become an Accounting Specialist in the Reserve. Right now, that's helping me with the business degree I'm working toward at a local college.

"So I can recommend the Army Reserve to anyone coming off active duty. The extra income is good, and it's nice being with people who can appreciate what you achieved in the service."

Fumble decides defensive struggle

By Becky Bulgrin
USATC Public Affairs Office

Doughboy Stadium was filled almost to the hilt Sunday when football, Ranger and Airborne fans finally got to see what was billed as "the premier game of Benning's football season."

Berets are worn by both the Rangers and the Airborne and that's just what they were battling for when the Airborne team pulled through to take a not-so-easy 12-6 victory over the Rangers in the first Beret Bowl to win the Bronzed Beret.

"The game turned out to be just what I expected, a lot of hard hitting," said Airborne coach John Hester. "We capitalized on their mistakes; our defense won the game."

The way assistant Ranger coach Milt Ortiz saw it was that it was a lucky "break" for the Airborne that won the game.

The break for the Airborne came early in the third quarter with the game tied 6-6. The Rangers had the ball on a fourth down with two to go, and it popped into the air.

Airborne's Ernest Scott grabbed the ball out of the air and raced 70 yards up the right side to score what was to be the winning touchdown with 11:28 left in the period.

The Rangers had started the game strong with quarterback Robert Simons Jr. running around right end for a touchdown on the Rangers' seventh play.

The Airborne lost its chance at a first-quarter touchdown when they failed from the 15-yard line, dropping the ball twice in the end zone.

Airborne tied the game with 3:13 left in the first half after a 42-yard Ranger punt and a nine-play drive.

Quarterback J.B. Brown scored from 3 yards out on a keeper around left end after his 7-yard gain and fullback Otis Griggs' 6-yard gain put the ball at the 3.

That set up Scott's second-half heroics as the Airborne defense controlled the final 30 minutes.

Airborne almost scored again late in the third period when Jasper Hurst took a 28-yard pass from Brown, but pass interference cost Airborne the touchdown.

The near-capacity crowd not only saw a rousing game but also was treated to the Silver Wings' (Airborne's exhibition parachute team) jumping the game ball into the stadium, performances by the 283rd Army Band, the Colonial Band, and the Bronzed Beret being brought to the playing field via "slide for life" from the top of the press box to a waiting vehicle at midfield, by SSgt. Frank Roy Finan, Jr. The idea for the "Bronzed Beret" started with the Ranger Department director, Col. Duane G. Cameron who donated his beret to be used for the trophy and the local chapter of the Non-commissioned Officers Association (NCOA), who furnished the plaque and handled the job of having the beret bronzed and mounted.

Cameron's old beret was sent to California, where it had a Ranger tab and Master Jump wings attached to it prior to being bronzed and mounted, according to Charles Riddle, resident counselor for the local NCOA Service Center. "Our counselors donated the trophy that the bronzed beret was mounted on to support the event," explained Riddle.

Riddle presented the trophy to Maj. Gen. David E. Grange Jr., post commanding general. Maj. Gen. Grange then presented the first "Beret Bowl" trophy to Col. Eugene D. Hawkins of the victorious Airborne Department.

197th champs named, playoffs begin

Headquarters, Headquarters Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery won the 197th Brigade Basketball Championship recently by defeating the 2nd Engineers 61-45. Two players from the HHB Blazers won special honors: Albert Jenkins was awarded Most Valuable Player of the Game; Victor Jones was recognized as the Most Valuable Player of the Season.

The 72nd Engineers were leading in the opening minutes of this championship game. Earlier, however, the Engineers had competed in two hard-fought games and won. They faced the 2/10th Field Artillery for their third straight game and couldn't quite keep pace. Roy Burney Jr. and Edward Moore coached the 2/10th Blazers to play a tighter defense and a more patient offense. These techniques paid off for the champs.

Company C, 197th takes first win

Post B-ball tournament starts

The USAIC post basketball championship playoffs began Tuesday night and Company C, 197th Support Battalion took their first victory when they out-classed Company C, Infantry Training Group, 61-53.

ITG still has a chance to advance in the playoffs since this is a double elimination tournament. They won the ITG basketball championship and came into the post playoffs with a 6-1 record.

The 197th was ahead from the start of the game until ITG's high-scorer with 14 points, Tony Reece, put in two at 5:36 to tie the game 22-22. Reece then connected with a long 20-foot side shot to take over the lead at 5:15.

The 197th held on and kept scoring until Kenneth Lewis' layup with 29 seconds left in the first half gave them the lead again 30-28. ITG came back with 11 seconds left to tie 30-all. With only two seconds remaining, Marvin Williams 197th's high-scorer with 17 points, put in two to take a 32-30 halftime lead. They never gave up their lead for the rest of the game.

Other high scorers for the 197th were Lewis with 16 and Ralph Wesley with 15. John Wesbee added six and Ernest Starks put in four. ITG's other leading scorers were Lonnie Parker with eight and Barry McAllister with seven. Kenneth Owens, Ernest Gunn, James Jones and Raymond Robinson added four apiece.

In other playoff action Tuesday, Airborne defeated Company C, 36th Group 61-52.

Hype, support create success for all events

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Streamers were flying from the goal posts, cheerleaders screamed and three out of four parachutists from the Silver Wings exhibition team landed on their feet while jumping the football into Doughboy Stadium, much to the delight of the people in the packed stands.

The first Beret Bowl between the Rangers and the Airborne Sunday turned out to be a great success and the Rangers even maintained their cool after losing 12-6.

Even the threat of rain didn't dampen the fans' spirit nor did the few drops leaking from the clouds hurt the cameras of the many photographers buzzing around to "snap the action." There was a T.V. camera there, too and good action was televised Sunday night. The game was played up big, and I mean BIG! But why not? That's how it should have been. After all, it was the first clash between the teams and the Airborne and Rangers are well-respected soldiers. The big play-up most likely had a lot to do with the great turn-out and the event's success.

Hype-up other events

Wouldn't it be neat if other events on post were built up like that? According to a source who's been in the Army for a while, that's how it used to be. People got involved and a lot of support was given. Of course, the first Beret Bowl was a unique event which helped in generating a lot of interest. But if other events were hyped-up like this one, people might say, "Hey, that sounds like it would be fun," or "I think I could learn something from that," or even if it's just "Well, I really don't have anything planned that day," or "There's nothing else to do."

I've always loved being among a crowd and watching others have a good time. Every time football season rolled around there'd be a distinct fresh smell in the air and I could just feel that it was "that time of year again." When only a small crowd of people showed up for a game, I'd feel down and some of the excitement and anticipation would vanish because people are what make things happen, on and off the field.

Support means much

Think about the people who are on the field. They're not out there busting their butts for self-satisfaction; they want to put on a good show for their fans and if their fans don't show up, how do you think they feel? Ask a player on any team if fans' support means a lot to him or her and I'll bet you 10 to one, you'll hear a definite yes.

Well, the first Beret Bowl has come and gone, the Airborne won, but who really came out on top? I think all who participated did, the players and supporters, because it was something to be enjoyed and that's what it's all about.

Boxers shine at tourney

By Becky Bulgrin

USAIC Public Affairs Office

For a first-year boxing team that entered its first-ever FORSCOM tournament Feb. 9-13, Fort Benning's team came home with a bundle of surprises — two of the 12 boxers were named to the All-Army boxing camp and two brought home trophies for making it to the semifinals. On top of all that, they placed seventh out of the 23 teams that participated in the tournament at Fort Campbell, Ky.

"The team was in real good shape for the fights and looked good," commented boxing coach Anthony Stoddard. "The All-Army sports director, Billy Dove, said it was the first time he ever saw a first-year team come in and perform the way we did."

Welterweight Jeffrey Johnson won his first fight to put him in the quarterfinals. He then fought the number one rated boxer in the nation for his weight class and lost by a close decision. According to Stoddard, the outstanding boxing he displayed is what's giving him the chance to attend the All-Army camp.

Rodrick Williams was also selected for the

All-Army camp. The featherweight won his first bout, putting him in the quarterfinals, but lost in the second by a split decision.

Dennis Miller fought in the 106-pound weight class and brought home a semifinals trophy for winning his first two fights. This was the 5'11" boxer's first fight with the team and he joined the team just a short time before the tourney.

Light heavyweight Willie Shiver hadn't boxed since 1978 when he was on Fort Stewart's team. He took his first two bouts and also came home with a trophy in semifinal action.

Larry Golden, a boxer who's been showing a lot of promise on the team, took his first two bouts and lost his third by a 59-58 decision. "Golden 'just be' him' the first two rounds, but 'got happy' in the third and took a standing eight count," said Stoddard. "After that, he started staying away from his opponent which cost him the close decision."

The tournament was Larry Brown's first fight with Benning's team. The middleweight took his first bout, but was defeated in his second.

Dwayne Edwards was recognized for his "outstanding boxing abilities," according to Stoddard. He fought in the 132-pound weight class and won his first bout.

Former Benning boxer closer to nationals

Pruitt takes state Golden Gloves

By Becky Bulgrin

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Sean Pruitt, a former Fort Benning boxer, not only captured the Georgia State Golden Gloves championship Feb. 7 in Atlanta's Omni, but was named Outstanding Boxer of the Tournament. This is the second year in a row he has taken both titles.

Pruitt, the son of Lt. Col. and Mrs. Ken Pruitt, of the Directorate of Training here will go on to represent Georgia in the Southeastern Regionals March 24 in Knoxville, Tenn. and his next step could be the national boxing championships.

To take the 147-pound state title, Pruitt connected with a left hook and floored Carrollton's Freddie Parham for a second-round knockout.

The 20-year-old boxer has represented the United States in two international fights since the Golden Gloves, and although he was defeated by Olympic silver medalist from Yugoslavia and a boxer from Kenya, Pruitt says he's looking forward to the regionals and "expects to go all the way to win the nationals."

To keep in tip-top form, Pruitt works out six days a week. He runs four-miles before 8 a.m. then works for nine-rounds (one round is three minutes) with the heavy bag, speed bag, jump rope and shadow boxing at noon. He works out nine more rounds at 6:30 p.m. and adds sparring to the routine then does three rounds of exercise.

Pruitt has been invited to represent the United States Feb. 28 in Rapid City, S.D. against a boxer from Hungary and also to take on a Venezuela boxer at Fort Bragg March 14.

Sean Pruitt works out on the speed bag.

Schweitzer's life shown

By Bill Powell
 WFBG Broadcast Journalist

Humanitarians are people of great kindness and compassion. They can be found, but they are few and far between.

Albert Schweitzer was one such person. His dedication and devotion to the people in French Equatorial Africa was a story of inspiration to people around the world.

In the program "Africa and Schweitzer" commentator Lowell Thomas narrates the story of Schweitzer's early life, background and his work in Africa. This program is just one of many highlighted on WFBG-TV, Channels 5 and 13, here. Other highlights of next week's programming include:

• "Green Scene #15" reports on junior NCO travel entitlements outside of CONUS, training overseas with an Army Reserve Unit, and the Berlin Wall Patrol.

• "Big Picture - Tigers on the Loose - Pts 1 and 2" features a look at the 10th Armored Division in World War II, focusing on fighting around Metz until the push to Brenner Pass.

• "The Benning Report" features Janis Moore of the Transportation Office to talk about how you may be able to move yourself to a new assignment and get paid for it. During Sports Coach Perry Graves of the Doughgirls Basketball team will look at his team and talk about outstanding players and games. Consult your BAYONET or Benning Bulletin for days and times of scheduled programming.

How About That?

by William Erbach, Sr.
6th Engineer Group Chaplain

Each American Indian tribe has many interesting legends and customs. In one western tribe, each name is given at least two names. The first one is given by the parents. This one was usually determined by whatever the boy's father saw when first emerging from the child's birthplace. He might be called Full Moon, Bright Star, Twisted Twig, or any one of a hundred different things that you could imagine.

A boy's most important name was given to him by the tribe to indicate what kind of man he had become, or what he had accomplished. This could be Big Bear to indicate his meanness, Swift Arrow to suggest how fast he could run or Lazy Bones to show his indifference to work. How about that?

What about your name? Did you know that you each get three? There is the name that your parents gave you. Why? Was it the name of some favorite relative or friend, or the same as your grandparents? A little girl born in Massachusetts was called Gale because her father, a lobster fisherman, was out on the ocean in a storm when she came into the world. This first name is your legal one.

Then there is the one that your friends call you, normally a nickname. Usually this is taken from some feature of yours, Red for your hair, Bones for your thinness or Shorty for your stature. Husband and wife usually have some affectionate or not so affectionate term for each other not usually their given one.

But the most important name that we acquire is the one that is attached to who we are or what we have done. Maybe it is a professional one or more importantly one that just describes who you are, like friend, buddy, pal, or honest, kind, trustworthy. These have to be earned and some are pretty hard to come by. What is your name, what do your friends call you, and what is the name you are called in the final judgement?

Simplified rating form soon available for NCOs

WASHINGTON—The Army's Non-commissioned Officers Corps soon will be rated on a simpler and easier-to-read evaluation form, according to officials at the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center (MILPERCEN) here.

The simplified form, the Enlisted Evaluation Report (EER), will replace the Senior Enlisted Evaluation Report (SEER) form starting Oct. 1, 1981. Officials say the new form will be distributed to the field during the summer months.

The new form, officials say, have been developed for easier preparation, copying and filing. The Army decided that, with the new form, the current EER system could be effectively maintained and improved without having to shift to a new and untried evaluation philosophy. Officials comment the 5-year-old EER system has served the Army well in meeting the needs of individual soldiers, commanders, career managers and promotion boards. They said the revised report form is designed to further improve and stabilize that system.

Because of long-standing problems with the current form, including difficulty in processing the mark-sense portion of the form in computers, MILPERCEN had little trouble producing the new version.

For the new form, the mark-sense blocks have been removed from the format. Also, the contents have been reorganized to provide a better picture of the rated soldier's professionalism, duty performance and potential, the narrative blocks have been expanded to encourage complete duty descriptions, specific comments on performance, and more detailed recommendations on schooling, assignments and leadership potential, officials add.

Also, the scored portions of the report have been changed slightly. However, officials maintain, the total possible report score still adds up to 125 points. This constant will allow the simplified EER form scores to fit into the Army's EER Weighted Average system. (ARNEWS)

The play's director, Peter Hajduk, and its scenic director, Patric Mann, both hail from New York City.

Infantry's job

Fire and maneuver, cover and concealment, suppress the enemies' fire, are all an integral part of an infantryman's training. Here a soldier from Company D, 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade moves out on the Infantry Squad Tactics range, while his buddies provide suppressive cover fire.

AER starts fund drive

The Army Emergency Relief (AER) here conducted its "kick-off" meeting Monday for the 1981 Annual Army Emergency Relief Fund Drive which will be held Army-wide Sunday through July 1. Colonel Dennis J. Harron, assistant post commander, opened the meeting and functions as the Campaign Chairman.

Army Emergency Relief is a private, nonprofit organization established to assist Army members - active and retired - and their dependents, in times of financial distress. Spouses and orphans of deceased Army personnel are also eligible. Last year alone, the local AER section assisted Fort Benning personnel with more than $279,000 in non-interest loans and grants. With the current economic trends, military personnel will see a steady increase in this assistance in the future.

AER financial assistance is available world-wide. Assistance is provided when military personnel have a valid emergency such as food, rent, utilities, required travel, essential car repair, medical bills, essential dental care, funeral expenses and essential personal needs when pay is not received or funds are lost. Educational assistance for dependent children may also be provided.

AER relies primarily on the generous contributions and support from the Army community. This support is vital if AER is to maintain its function of helping the Army "take care of its own."

The 1981 Fund Drive is being conducted here from Monday through April 16. This year, contributions can also be made through the allotment system. Although no goal has been established for this year's drive, all military personnel, active and retired, are asked to be as generous as their means will allow.

Anyone in an emergency situation should go to his unit commander, AER Officer, nearest Red Cross Chapter, nearest Air Force Aid Society or Navy Relief Society Office. For educational assistance, contact your AER Officer.

The Army Emergency Relief Section is located in Bldg. 83 at the yellow archway, Room 112. For more information on the AER program or Fund Drive, call 1stLt. Susan Rosbeck, AER Officer, at 545-4043 or 4679.

Error in allotments

Due to an administrative processing error at the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center, some pay actions effective for February may not have been processed. Even though the affected servicemembers have been notified, commanders and first sergeants should caution their soldiers who had a pay option change for February to carefully read their leave and earning statement (LES) to insure that payment was sent to the correct bank account before writing any checks.

Quality of life-civilian vs. military

By Dale Wilson
Public Affairs Office
Fort Knox, Ky.

There's a battle being fought to bring military salaries in line with the pay checks earned by civilians -- to bring about "comparability." It's a battle that's been going on since the creation of the all-volunteer force.

But it is, I fear, a battle that can never be won. The champions of comparability are in search of the Holy Grail. They're dreaming an impossible dream.

Let's face it -- no matter how you cut it, there's no way you can compare military life with civilian life.

Granted, some jobs may be similar. An IBM 360 computer works the same for a civilian operator as it does for a military computer specialist. But how often does the civilian get tapped for 24-hour CQ runner duty or post police on the weekend?

Have you ever heard of a civilian computer operator boning up on individual chemical protective measures -- just in case someone from a competing firm decides to employ a little nerve gas against him? Or sharpening his marksmanship skills so he can protect his data center if the receptionists, who form the first line of defense against the public, should ever be overrun?

The soldier must also deal with lengthy family separations, uncomfortable field training and keeping himself psychologically prepared to go to war.

He may, as many of his predecessors have done, be called upon to sacrifice his life.

You can't put a dollar value on that.

No society has ever been willing -- or able -- to adequately compensate its soldiers for the sacrifices they've been willing to make in its defense.

And with that in mind, those of us wearing Army green today must look inside ourselves for motivation to serve.

I see my occupation not as a job, but a responsibility. Although many people fail to see the need for maintaining a standing Army, someone must be willing to sit in the saddle if and when "the balloon goes up."

I don't expect to get rich as a soldier -- I'm definitely not a "soldier of fortune." My only expectations is to be able to live so I don't have to worry about where my family's next meal will come from, to know that wherever I may be sent for whatever purpose, my country will provide for them.

Against rules to shop in fatigues

By Bill Powell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Rules were made to be broken." Is that your attitude? Hopefully not. But if you wear fatigues off post for more than just a quick stop on your way home, then you're breaking the rules.

Soldiers have been seen seen at shopping centers, restaurants and many other places where fatigues shouldn't be seen.

Understand, the regulations allow convenience stops at places such as grocery stores and dry cleaners to pick up needed items. You can even stop at a fast food restaurant but you must take the food elsewhere.

Let's face it, fatigues don't really look good to wear in public like the Army greens and tans. It's against regulations to wear fatigues off post other than to and from work or to those quick and needed convenience stops.

What would happen if the command decided to discontinue the convenience stop privilege? Remember, if you abuse it, you just might lose it.

Why?

Soldiers hurting soldiers

Maj. Gen. Grange

Soldiers of today's Army are better than ever. They're smarter, stronger, and more technically proficient than any soldier in the nation's history.

These men and women know how to take care of each other, too, much like their fathers and grandfathers bragged about in their day. Knowing this about our soldiers makes it awfully difficult to understand how we tolerate those rotten apples within our ranks who don't meet our standards -- those who steal in the barracks, throw garbage on the roads, destroy property.

A case in point. This past weekend, while soldiers were in the field, some hoods slashed tires on more than a dozen cars belonging to soldiers. Vandals such as these don't belong in our Army or on this post. We must identify them quickly, for if we don't certain unpleasant actions are predictable. For one thing, guard posts will have to be increased to include parking areas. This means more guard details for soldiers who should be training or less freetime on weekends and holidays. We shouldn't have to hassle all our people because of misfits who don't belong.

Soldiers should take care of soldiers. It's difficult to understand how vandals can operate openly in a parking lot without someone seeing them at work.

It's also difficult to understand why someone would litter the roadway, knowing full well he or his buddy will have to police it up and the barracks thief must also be exposed.

If we are serious about keeping our Army the way we want it to be, we must weed out the misfits. Soldiers deserve to live with people they can trust. And not someone who steals and destroys their property or time and privilege.

Enlisted scholarships available

WASHINGTON—A new Army Reserve Officer Officers Training Corps (ROTC) scholarship program is offering two-year scholarships to college students who agree to join the ROTC and serve as officers in the reserve after graduation.

Possible candidates for the awards include Reserve enlisted soldiers and members of their families. However, students now enrolled in the advanced ROTC are not eligible for the scholarships.

Students selected for the scholarships will receive full tuition, as well as the cost of books, laboratory and other educational fees. They will also draw $100 monthly in subsistence allowance during the school year and about $500 while attending the six-week ROTC advanced camp.

To be eligible for a scholarship, applicants must be U.S. citizens and enlist in the Army Reserve for six years. If already enlisted, students should have at least four years left to serve or extend their enlistment before enrolling in ROTC. After graduating from college, they will be commissioned as second lieutenants in the Reserve.

Overall, 50 scholarships will go to students slated to graduate from college in June 1983. Each major

U.S. Army Reserve Command (MUSARC) and the Senior Reserve Commanders in Alaska and Hawaii will award one scholarship to qualified applicants in their area.

Persons interested in applying for an ROTC scholarship under this program should contact local college ROTC officials. Professors of Military Science at Army ROTC host colleges will begin accepting applications March 1. All applications will be forwarded to the MUSARC's by March 16. Scholarship winners will be announced in early June by the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command Headquarters, Fort Monroe, Va. (ARNEWS)

Mother's poem for airborne sons

By Tom Sabel
USAIC Public Affairs Office

After 2nd Lt. Matt Chandler made his graduating jump from Airborne School and was seated with the rest of the graduating class he was surprised to hear his mother reading a poem dedicated to him and all the other Airborne students.

Mrs. Marcia Chandler, a published poet, was first inspired when Chandler's twin brother, Mark, went through Airborne training last December. Inspiration jelled while she was driving, "Suddenly, the poem began to take shape in my mind. Then I saw flashing blue lights in the rear-view mirror. I was speeding and didn't even know it." She sent a copy of her poem, "Earth Be kind (A mother's prayer)" to Col. Eugene D. Hawkins, Airborne Director, for his consideration. After reading it, he invited her to read the poem at her son's graduation. It is also scheduled to be included in the Airborne yearbook.

This is the poem which many thought beautiful:

*Earth Be Kind
(A Mother's Prayer)
"Airborne!" they cried,
And took tremendous pride
In this, their dream come true.*

*So we stood, your father and I
In the Alabama field
(Known to you as the "DZ")
And we watched the huge C-141 soar overhead
To sprinkle the sky with sons.*

*All week I had prayed;
"Sky, be kind to him,
Cradle his shock from aircraft to sky
And bear him like a feather
From sky to welcoming earth."*

*The pride we have in you
To achieve the noblest achievement
Of the wings of man....
To defeat the undefeatable
And glide—free and proud To earth.*

*Green canopy, blue sky, grass and turf,
Elements of my body, my God, be kind!
Be kind, oh earth!*

Program pushes job equality

By Betty Zimmerman

USAIC Public Affairs Officer

Employment at Fort Benning comes under the letter and spirit of federal policy guaranteeing equal employment to all persons without regard to race, color, religion, sex, age, national origin, or physical or mental handicap.

Three employees that are acutely aware of this policy are: Linda Deppe, a firefighter; Willie Boston, an electronic repairman; and Jody Shirley, a computer specialist. They represent the entire scope of equal employment opportunity's (EEO's) reach - from the bottom to the top of the ladder.

For members of minority groups and women, equal employment opportunity includes an affirmative action program. This program means essentially that all elements of the personnel management system are to be used to reduce underrepresentation of minority groups and women in all occupations and at all levels of the workforce. Their goals must be realistic, but challenging. They try to insure continuing and measured progress toward employment of these groups.

Two important elements of the new plan are the analysis of occupations for underrepresentation, and the special recruiting strategies to help correct this problem. But an important fact to remember is the EEO has no involvement in the selection process. All applicants must qualify on their own merits as did the three following examples.

Starting out

Linda Deppe, a 36-year-old receptionist at Martin Army Community Hospital, said she was tired of office work and never really liked it anyway.

When she first saw the announcement for a firefighter trainee opening, she jokingly said to her husband, "Now this would be more my type of work." To her surprise, he told her to go ahead and apply for it.

Willie Boston, electronic repairman

Now she is Fort Benning's only woman firefighter trainee and reported to be the only one in Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC).

The mother of two, an 18-year-old girl and a nine-year-old boy, started her training at the main post fire station in October 1980 as a GS-3.

She left for firefighter's school at Chanute Air Force Base, Ill. on Feb. 3. When she finishes the six weeks of formal training, she will become a full-fledged firefighter and a GS-4.

One of the reasons she wanted to change fields was the promotion opportunities. The progression ladder now open to her is: driver, GS-5; crew chief, GS-6; and station captain, GS-7.

"I had been in the clerical field for nine years and was getting nowhere," she explained. "I am thrilled about getting this opportunity and I plan to make the most of it."

Her placement caused a little resentment among her co-workers, more from their wives, but she handled it by letting them know right from the start. "I'm here to learn and work the same as you and I intend to stay however you treat me."

The petite, 114-pound, Phenix City, Ala. native, contends that she can handle her share of the physical chores and in fact, practices the firemen's carry with her 150-pound husband.

She had to have her hair cut short for safety reasons and she'll sleep at the fire station just as the men do. Her shifts will be 24 hours on and 24 hours off. Of these, eight hours will be work, eight for standby and eight for sleeping. But she's looking forward to being a fulltime firefighter and appreciates the unusual opportunity.

Starting over

Willie Boston retired as a master sergeant in June 1980 and was looking for work in the electronics field.

The Portsmouth, Va. native signed up for a civilian service position, but didn't have much hope, even though he was well qualified with his Army experience in military communication equipment repair.

He started taking classes at Chattahoochee Valley Community College while he waited and in December 1980, civilian personnel called him about a WG-11 position as an electronic mechanic.

Soldier left med school for military

By Brian M. Adams
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Moving, training and even creating new units requires a lot of prior planning from a lot of soldiers.

SFC James A. Wadsworth

One such soldier is SFC James A. Wadsworth, Operations sergeant, Plans and Training (S-3), 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

Born in Richmond, Va. the son of a school teacher, Wadsworth came into the Army in March 1966. "I dropped out of college to join the Army," he said. "I was studying medicine at the University of North Carolina, at Chapel Hill at the time."

After a tour in Vietnam with the Military Assistance Command Vietnam and a tour to Korea and Germany, Wadsworth came here for the first time. "I worked in the Leadership Department section, of The School Brigade from 1971 until 1974," he said. "Then I went to Rome, Ga. as a recruiter until I went back to Germany."

Returning here from Germany in 1978, Wadsworth was assigned to the 1st Infantry Training Brigade S-3 shop. "Since I've been here I have accomplished many things," he said. "I was NCOIC for Exodus and the holiday Return Operations for the last three years. Right now I'm working on the Allowance Table (TDA) for the Brigade and the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade scheduled to be activated this year," he explained.

His work doesn't always get him recognition, but for his part in the well organized Exodus Operation, he earned his first Army Commendation Medal in the 15 years he has been in the Army.

Others responsibilities, besides his career, are his wife Carolyn and his daughters Ashlea and April. "I've been married just about as long as I've been in," James commented. "And I enjoy doing everything that I can with them."

Reading and studying being an important part of his job, Wadsworth has become an avid reader in his spare time too. "I love to read," he said. "I also enjoy coin collecting and motorcycle riding as well as walking for fun."

As far as his career goes, James says it like this, "I don't know whether or not I'm going to retire at 20 years, but wherever I go or whatever I'm assigned to do, it doesn't really matter to me, because I'm just as good anywhere as I am here."

Beside the ARCOM he just received, Wadsworth also has the Bronze Star, the Good Conduct Medal, National Defense Service Medal and the Combat Infantry Badge.

Committee forming for special kids

The Army Community Services (ACS) Special Kids Committee needs information in order to get the ball rolling on activities for the post's handicapped children.

The committee will have an information booth in the Main Mall tomorrow to find out how many "special kids" are on post and what kind of activities the parents and children desire. A questionnaire will be available for the parents to fill out. According to Sp5 David Fleming, ACS social worker, the committee is trying to provide Saturday activities and field trips for the kids. The information is needed to determine where the community's needs lie.

A trip to Six Flags in Atlanta, sponsored by the President's committee on the Employment of the Handicapped, is scheduled for April 11 and all handicapped individuals in the Columbus/Fort Benning area are welcome. The Mayor's Committee of Columbus will provide chartered transportation, food, drinks, and chaperones. The cost of the trip is $6.75 which includes admission, rides and all shows.

Eight buses are being provided and two are already filled. Parents wishing to go with their children must provide their own transportation. All applicants should register by Thursday, however, late registrations will be accepted until March 13. For those who cannot afford the trip, ACS can arrange for free tickets. There is a limited amount available.

Interested Fort Benning personnel should contact Lynn Hamilton or Sp5 David Fleming at ACS, 545-1233, or Special Education, Fort Benning Dependent Schools, 545-5520 for more information.

Going our way? Catch a hop

Soldiers here often miss out on a good thing when they use commercial airlines for transportation home on leave or pass.

If they had checked first with the Operation's Desk at Lawson Army Air Field, the soldier might have saved a lot of money through some prior planning around a military hop to their destination.

SEC Eddie McAdams of Operations said, "A lot of times these planes leave here with just the crew members on board. When soldiers are planning to go home on leave, they should call us to see if a flight is going their way. We might not get them all the way there but as far as we get them is gravy and less money out of a troop's pocket."

When going on a military hop, soldiers need to have the following items:

- Either a DA Form 31 or a copy of their pass authorization.
- They must be in Class A uniform.
- They must have an ID card and dog tags in their possession.

Although all flights are subject to change, soldiers can call on a daily basis to find out the status of a trip. McAdams said, "We don't have round trips but once someone gets to a destination they can check there to see if one is coming back this way on the day they're planning to come back. We can also assist on getting hops out of Maxwell and Robbins Air Force Bases which aren't too far away. However, dependents are not allowed to fly on our hops."

Once a soldier gets down to the Operations Desk on the day of the flight, they will not be bumped, regardless of rank. Even with airlines cutting prices, military hops are a great way to go some where inexpensively.

The following are the flights scheduled for the month of March:

Sheriff's Target

Last week I mentioned the vast turnover of personnel here resulting in some lost information to newcomers. Another frequent question to new arrivals in our system of morning and evening traffic flow.

Traffic circulation is adjusted in the mornings to accommodate the large influx of people incoming to the installation. Changes to normal travel routes are in effect from 7 a.m.-8 a.m. The biggest change provides for one lane of Benning Boulevard going off post out the main entrance to be used for incoming traffic.

Col. Ward
Provost Marshal

For those attempting to exit the installation by the main gate, there are some major changes during this time:

- There is no exit through 10th Division Road. This is utilized for incoming traffic only.
- There is no left turn from Vibbert Avenue onto Lumpkin Road. To get to Lumpkin Road from main post, traffic must use Wold Avenue.
- There is no left turn onto Marne Road from the outgoing portion of Benning Boulevard.

Traffic patterns in the afternoon from 4:15 p.m. to 5:15 p.m. are adjusted to accommodate the heavy flow of exodus traffic. All lanes of incoming and outgoing Benning Boulevard from Main Post to the MP outpost are reserved for exiting traffic.

Incoming traffic must turn onto 10th Division Road to get to Main Post. If you wish to exit by way of South Lumpkin Road, stay in the inside lane of outgoing Benning Boulevard; at Marne Road, turn left and stay in the inside lane of incoming Benning Boulevard.

You will be automatically directed to South Lumpkin Road from this lane at the MP outpost. During this time period there is no right turn from Vibbert Avenue onto Lumpkin Road. The best way for people to travel from the Custer Road area to main post is to use the Lindsey Creek By-Pass (I-185). There is no left turn from Custer Road onto incoming Benning Boulevard from 6:15 to 7:15.

Please take note of these changes to normal traffic flow. There have been over 225 traffic accidents on post already this fiscal year. An alarming number of these were caused by careless and preventable mistakes. Improper backing, failure to yield right of way, following too closely, inattentive driving, improper turning, and improper passing along have accounted for 130 of these accidents. Let's make Fort Benning a safer place to drive.

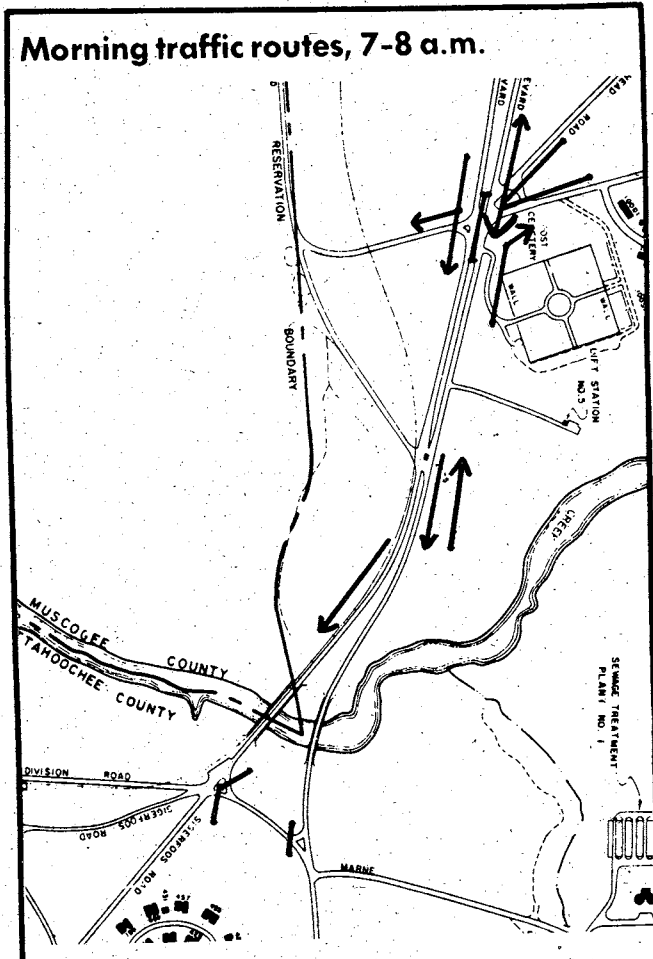

Community involvement stops crime

As part of the installation-wide program to decrease crime and recover stolen property, a list of identifiable property will be published weekly in the BAYONET. Below are items that were stolen here since Jan. 1, 1981.

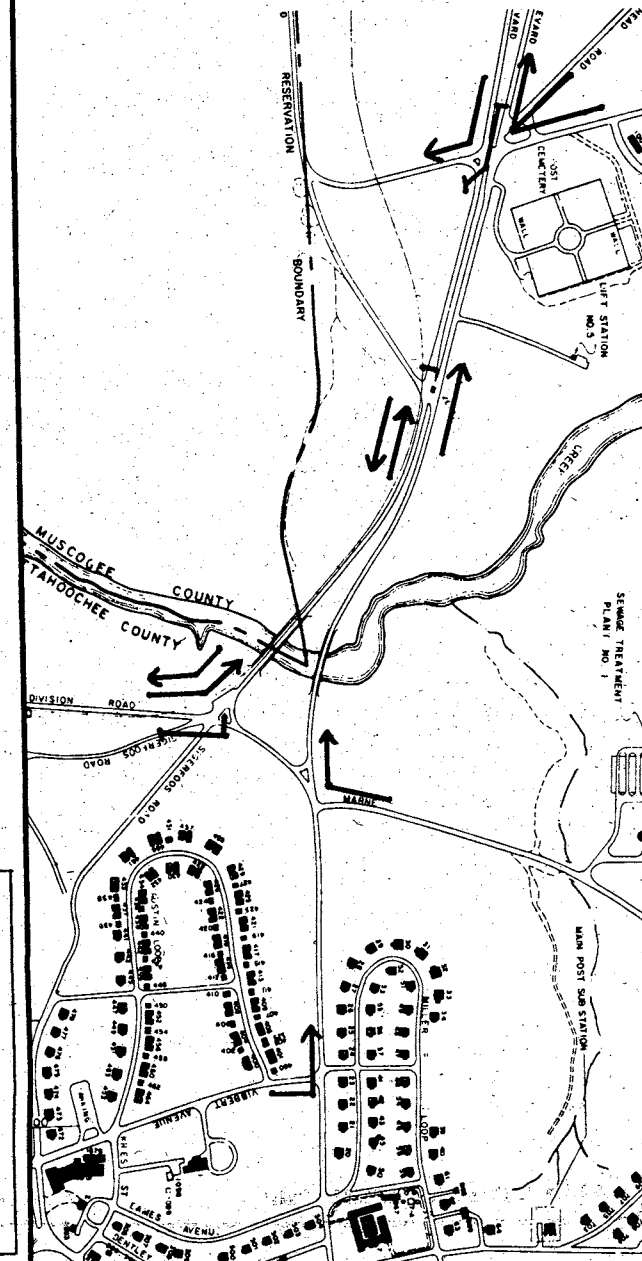

If you have any information on the following items notify the military police immediately at 545-5222. Your cooperation will be greatly appreciated.

Shuttle bus service has free rides for car-less

How, in these times of inflation and high gas prices, can soldiers get around a 280-square-mile installation without going broke driving their cars? And what about soldiers who don't have cars? How do they get out to Kelley Hill from Main Post to visit a friend?

The answer is provided by the Transportation Division of the Directorate of Industrial Operations. They run the post-wide shuttle bus service.

Shuttle buses are provided mainly for soldiers to travel between troop billets and their place of duty. They are also for use by all employees on official business during normal duty hours.

There are some rules the Transportation Division must follow while providing the bus service. For instance, while military dependents are allowed to ride the buses on the regularly scheduled routes as long as space is available, no special routes may be set up solely for them.

Home to work transportation is prohibited except for enlisted persons living in troop billets, therefore buses cannot be routed through the housing areas during the hours personnel normally travel to and from work. During past deployment exercises an exception to this was made in an attempt to help dependents of deployed sponsors travel to the commissary, PX and hospital. The service was not successful because of extremely low use.

On an average day the buses serve approximately 1,800 riders. The buses operate on three round-robin routes Main Post, Sand Hill and Harmony Church. The transfer between routes is the Main Mall. The Sand Hill and Harmony Church buses both run through Kelley Hill, therefore a rider can get to any point on post by using the shuttle bus system. It's a simple matter of transferring at the Main Mall from one route to another.

On any route the maximum travel time between two points is 45 minutes. If a rider transfers from one route to another at the Main Mall and perhaps has to wait for the other bus, the maximum travel time is one hour and 45 minutes.

The buses run every 30 minutes on Main Post and every hour at Harmony Church and Sand Hill, therefore the maximum travel times are exceptions not rules. On weekends and after duty hours the Main Post bus runs every hour.

At times when buses or drivers are not available the bus service may be delayed or even suspended. The Transportation Division's main mission is to support training. Their goal is to cancel shuttle bus service only as a last resort and only after informing people about it.

There are incidents occurring at night when the driver's observation is limited that makes riding the buses uncomfortable for some riders and endangers the continued operation of the service after normal duty hours. Misbehavior such as cutting seats, breaking windows, fighting and obscene language is frequent, at other installation's courtesy patrols have had to be used during non-duty hours.

With everyone's support this misbehavior on buses here can be stopped without having to create an extra detail for soldiers or canceling a worthwhile service.

Defective water heaters need fixing

RICHMOND, Va. — The manufacturer of "Unitrol" fuel control mechanisms, used on certain liquid propane gas water heaters, is renewing its efforts to publicize and correct a potential defect. The potential defect may cause severe burn injuries and deaths resulting from explosion and fires.

Since 1954, when the fuel controls first were sold to hot water heater manufacturers, there have been at least 48 deaths and 89 severe burn injuries from explosions of water heaters equipped with these gas controls.

The program to replace the old gas controls with new ones is being conducted by Robertshaw Controls Company of Richmond, Va., in cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission. The manufacturer also is reissuing a national alert to warn consumers of the severe risk posed by continued use of water heaters equipped with the controls.

The warning covers the "Unitrol" model 110 and model 200 gas controls used to regulate the flow of LP (liquid propane) gas to water heaters. These controls, manufactured by Robertshaw's Grayson Controls Division of Long Beach, Ca., about 25 years ago, contain a potentially defective valve which can cause a gas leak and subsequent explosion and fire.

Approximately 1,000 of the potentially defective controls still are believed to be in use nationwide. Many of these controls may be found on water heaters located in rural areas, such as in homes, on farms, in vacation or weekend homes, or in hunting or fishing camps. (LP gas commonly is used to fuel appliances in rural areas due to the unavailability of natural gas lines.)

The potentially defective controls were sold to approximately 110 water heater manufacturers from December, 1954, through February, 1957. The controls include Unitrol models 110 and 200, showing any date code with includes the letters W or X, or the letter combinations LV, AY, BY or CY.

Consumers can identify the affected units by looking for "Unitrol 110" on the face of the control, or for "Unitrol 200" on the temperature dial on the front of the control. The controls are located near the bottom of the water heater. Date codes are stamped next to the gas pilot outlet which is located on the bottom side of the control and to the right. Use of a small mirror will aid consumers in reading the date code more easily.

In 1974, Robertshaw notified CPSC of the potential defect in the gas controls, and subsequently instituted a program to repair the devices.

Consumers who own LP gas water heaters should check the heater control to determine if a Unitrol model 110 or 200 with a date code mentioned above has been used. If so, consumers then should contact Robertshaw at its toll-free number 800-421-1130. In California call 800-262-1173. Following a free inspection, the firm will install new controls if appropriate.

Anyone wishing to verify the model numbers or the brand name should contact CPSC's toll-free Hotline at 800-638-8326; in Maryland, 800-492-8363; and in Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, 800-638-8333.

Girl Scouts celebrate a special day

It was a special day for 400 local girl scouts Saturday. The girls were celebrating "Girl Scout International Day" with song and dance routines at the NCO club on Main Post.

The annual event, known to the girls as "thinking day," gives the scouts a chance to reflect on what scouting means and to think about other girl scouts around the world. The girls, dressed in costume performed dances representing seven countries.

Performing at the club were scouts from Lavoie, troops 102, 258, 34, and 81 who put on a skit representing Kenya. The troops from Main Post, (troops 136, 263 and 161) shared a game with the girls while representing the Philippines. Troop 20, 23 and 104 did a Mexican dance.

Girls from Bouton Heights and Davis Hill, Troops 289, 177, 65, and 32 sang songs, representing Greece, while troops 12, 67 and 96 showed the group some of their craft work and Custer Terrace troops 298 and 47 demonstrated craft work representing India.

With a hand above her head and one on her hip Lynn Brannon does a little hoochy-koochy as she twirls around and around. Seven-year-old Lynn, of Troop 17 Magraw Manor, is performing a dance representing Peru.

Eight-year-old Windy Porter, a Brownie Scout from Lavoie Troop 258, anxiously awaits her turn to participate in a skit representing the country of Kenya.

The C-130, carrying Maj. Gen. David E. Grange Jr. and members of the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, is the first plane to land at the recently dedicated Dekkar Assault Airstrip.

Dramatic landing highlights opening

One of the few assault airstrips in the country was officially dedicated Tuesday at Dekkar Air Assault Strip here by Maj. Gen. David E. Grange Jr., post commander.

"It is fitting that we put this facility here because the training that the young people will do here today and tomorrow will keep us in peace," said the post commander.

The general flew in on a C-130 airplane with members of the 43rd Engineer Battalion in a dramatic entrance to the dedication ceremony.

Members of Company B, 43rd Combat Engineers, 36th Engineer Group built the dirt runway. They began the project in July 1980 and finished it in January. They will also maintain the runway in the future.

"I was out here this summer when this project was ongoing. This was one of the hottest summers in history, and they gave it all they had. We can be proud of the 43rd Engineers," said the post commander.

In building the airstrip the engineers had to rely on talents dating back to the founding of the 43rd Engineers. "The 43rd Engineer Battalion started as a forestry battalion in 1917. They used part of this skill again to clear part of the north and south ends (of the airstrip) to get the required glide angles. This required chain saws, axes and a lot of sweat," commented Col. Fredrick Bittl, 36th Engineer Group commander.

The airstrip will be used jointly by both the Army and the Air Force. Pilots will be able to get the necessary training of landing on an air assault strip while soldiers are training, loading and unloading the aircraft under combat conditions, said Lt. Col. Jerry Casey, U.S. Air Force.

He added that they expect to run three to four missions a month soon and later increase the number of missions.

Commissaries' prices reflect cost

By Flo Dunn
Public Affairs Office
Troop Support Agency

FORT LEE, Va. — Army commissaries do not operate to make a profit according to U.S. Army Troop Support Agency officials.

All grocery items are sold at cost which means that an item purchased for $.85 is sold at the same price. Pricing meat and produce items is more involved. While meat and produce items are sold at cost there are slight cost differences to account for the loss in necessary trimming.

The commissary has to recover what it pays, so if it buys $10,000 worth of beef and cuts it up into retail portions, sales of the retail cuts must total $10,000. If the loss in trimming off fat and bone amounts to $800, about $200 is recovered by selling the waste parts to contractors. The net amount of $600 is recovered in the selling price of individual cuts. The most desirable cuts cost more because they are in shortest supply and greatest demand. That's why a T-bone steak costs more than stew meat.

Selling prices for produce are based on the invoice cost. For example, if a case of oranges cost $13.20 and there are 88 oranges in a case, customers will pay $.15 an orange to reimburse the commissary for the original purchase price.

Some customers believe that commissary prices increase near payday and decrease later in the month. There are reasons for this. It's true shoppers may see more increases at the beginning of the month, but that's because many vendors provide price quotes at the beginning of the month. These prices include inflation factors which cause prices to fluctuate.

Also, many shipments are received around payday, because business is heaviest then. In some commissaries any of these shipments could cause a price change because commissaries price from the invoice for these shipments. When prices change, merchandize on the shelves is marked at the new price as soon as the change occurs. This is what probably gives the appearance of intentional increasing of prices on payday.

Brother, sister make it

Mutually pin on Airborne wings

Natasha pins Airborne wings on her brother Brenten while he does the same to his sister.

She had always wanted to do it, but thought she couldn't. He had always wanted to do it, and knew he would.

They are brother and sister and not only did they both finally "do it," they did it together. Sgt. Natasha and PFC Brenten Wilson recently went through three weeks of rigorous Airborne training as members of Class 13 in the 45th Company, 4th Student Battalion, The School Brigade. They made their final jump Feb. 20 and proudly pinned each other's wings on at the graduation ceremony afterwards.

Twenty-two-year-old Natasha has been here for almost three years and works as the supply sergeant for the 45th Company, TSB. "When Brenten came here to go Airborne, I thought if he can do it, I can do it," Natasha related. "I also thought it would be a lot of fun to go through it together."

Brenten has been in the Army for 19 months. The 19-year-old infantryman will be using his new skills as a member of the Fort Bragg, N.C. 82nd Airborne Division. "Everybody should be Airborne," said

Brenten. "It's a lot of hard work that was, to me, more mental than physical, but it's worth it."

Natasha agreed that the training was mentally hard but said it was just as physically hard for her. "But it made me feel good afterwards; like I really did something."

The Jamacia natives said they are the first in their family to go Airborne and are especially glad they "did it."

Post celebrates Arbor Day by planting trees

Under a bright sunny sky Friday (Arbor Day), soldiers planted Dogwood and Cherry trees that will be here to beautify Fort Benning long after they are gone.

Some of these soldiers may return on another equally bright sunny day in years to come to see the fruits of their labor blossoming and be able to say, "I had a hand in planting these trees."

Arbor Day traditions are rich with the legend of Johnny Appleseed (John Chapman), the early colonist who planted orchards to offset the lack of fruit trees found in America. Chapman, a New Englander, traveled through the Pennsylvania and Ohio countryside in the late 1790's planting apple trees thus earning his nickname.

The soldiers who planted trees on Arbor Day here carried on that richly rewarding tradition.

197th Brigade gets

By Tom Sabel
USAIC Public Affairs Office

When the 197th Infantry Brigade goes on its annual ARTEP members of the brigade can be expected to be hit with just about anything that they could expect in combat.

In this year's simulated combat situation they were nuked, sprayed with chemical agents and gased. But the main result of the ARTEP was how it will affect next year's training, according to the brigade training officer.

The four units being evaluated, 1/58th Infantry Battalion, 2/69th Armor Battalion, 72nd Engineer Company and the 298th Signal Detachment, exchanged companies and platoons for more realistic training. The 1/58th Infantry Battalion and the 2/69th Armor Battalion each traded a company and both received an engineer platoon from the 72nd Engineers.

"The ARTEP was absolutely magnificent. The soldiers performed in a manner which is the best I've seen in my last two years of command. I'd be willing to take these soldiers into combat anywhere in the world," commented Col. Michael F. Spigelmire, 197th Infantry Brigade commander.

The management of the 2,500 people and 500 vehicles went well. "There were no major accidents or mishaps," said the brigade training officer.

plenty of action

Supporting the ARTEP were elements of each unit at Valley Hill, as well as the 586th Engineer Battalion, 179th Military Intelligence Detachment, and the Aviation Company, 34th Medical Battalion. Supporting sorties for the event were the 9th Air Force, 55th Tactical Air Support Squadron and the 1st Operations Wing. Reserve and National Guard units which participated were the 397th Detachment, from Atlanta and the 425th and 463rd Detachment from Panama City and Panama, Fla.

Appearance and hygiene are of primary importance, even in the field. SFC Herman Garrett, supply sergeant, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade, finishes his morning cleanup in the company assembly area during the ARTEP.

Overtime gives MEDDAC win

By Becky Bulgrin

USAIC Public Affairs Office

MEDDAC finally edged out a 67-64 victory after five minutes of overtime against Company D, 197th Support Battalion Monday night in the post basketball playoffs.

However, both teams remained in the running of the double elimination tourney since neither had a loss prior to the game. The playoffs ended after press time last night but the results of the championship game will be published in next week's BAYONET.

Delta almost slid by with a narrow win, when they were ahead 60-58 with 12 seconds left in regular play. Then, without warning and with only three seconds to go, MEDDAC's game-high scorer with 20 points, Ken Warren, slipped in a 15-foot jumper to tie the score 60-all.

Delta again had a chance for victory before overtime play when MEDDAC was called for a technical, but Lester Hayes fell to his knees when he didn't connect.

The score remained deadlocked until 3:09 into overtime play when Delta was called for a foul and MEDDAC's Silas Anderson hit one of two free-throws to take a one-point lead. Delta then came back to take their turn at the foul line and Hayes made good this time to give Delta a 62-61 advantage.

MEDDAC's Oscar Grant turned the tables again 15 seconds later when he connected with a lay-up to give MEDDAC the lead 63-62. Delta fought back and tried to hold on when Arthur Alston made his only field goal of the game with 45 seconds left to put Delta only one behind with a 65-64 score. But MEDDAC's Warren didn't give Delta a chance to take over again when he put in two back to back baskets, the last one with four seconds left.

MEDDAC had come back to take their victory after being behind throughout the first half.

Other high-scorers for MEDDAC were Grant with 14, Anderson with 19 and J. C. Foster with 10. Leading scorers for Delta were Leroy Benson with 17, Hayes and George Bass with 15 each and Omester Collins with eight.

In other play-off action Monday night, Headquarters, Headquarters Battery, 2/10 Field Artillery, defeated Company D, 43rd Engineer Battalion 53-48 and IOAC 5-80 took a 47-44 victory over the 139th Military Police Company.

 Armchair Sports

Unladylike? Not anymore

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"You can't do that! It's not ladylike!" That's just what many people years ago used to think when women started to compete in sporting events. But women have come a long way since the days when they only played sedentary sports and are fast moving up in the world of sports.

They've even competing against men — and beating them. On Sept. 30, 1973, well-known female tennis star Billie Jean King performed in what was billed as "The Tennis Match of the Century." She faced 55-year-old Bobby Riggs and outmatched him three straight sets 6-4, 6-3, 6-3 before a capacity crowd in the Houston Astrodome as millions watched on T.V.

Riggs had said, "She's a great player for a gal. But no woman can beat a male player who knows what he's doing. I'm not only interested in glory for my sex, but I also want to set women's lib back 20 years, to get women back into the home, where they belong."

I'm not trying to say that all men think that way, because surely they don't. Many men stick by sportswomen and want them to excel. I recently had a conversation with Doughgirls basketball coach Perry Graves and he said, "I think my girls deserve just as much coverage as the guy's team because they work hard and should be noticed for what they do." I agreed with him. Not because I happen to be a woman but because it's true.

Women who play sports in the military may not get as much notice as the men because, of course, there are a great many more men in the military, so they have more players and therefore, more teams. But the number of women in the military is still growing so it seems sports for the women should grow along with it.

Many women may play a sport as well as some men, but there are many who would rather compete against their own sex so they'll get a better chance to play. When I got here almost a year ago, softball season was starting and I wanted to play. I found out my company had a team, like the other companies on post, so I decided to try out.

It just so happened that I was the only girl to try out for the team, but none of the men cared and they gave me an equal chance to play for them. I was reluctant at first to play on an all-male team, but some of the guys said not to worry, that they'd help me out. They did, and I did OK. Another girl joined the team and she was good! While they put me as catcher, which I didn't mind because they could help me out in that position, they put her right out in the field and she showed them that she could play along with the best of them.

Well, the TRADOC basketball tournaments start here next week and both the Doughgirls and Doughboys will be competing against other post's teams. I intend to give both teams equal coverage, and I think they should get equal support from their fans. Softball season will be starting soon and, hopefully, women players will get out there and get equal time with the men.

Doughgirls lose by six

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Doughgirls put up a good fight against the LaGrange All-Stars last Friday at Audie Murphy Gym, but took one on the chin 56-50.

According to Doughgirl coach Perry Graves, the absence of team captain Teresa Irvin who just graduated from the Primary Leadership Course, hurt the team some, but improved playing by other team members accounted for the close game.

"Our fouls were also a lot lower than usual," said Graves. "Not like sometimes where we give a game away by fouling." The Doughgirls ended up with 15 fouls and the All-Stars finished with 13.

Lisa Myers led the Doughgirls with 18 points and Joyce McCullen was close behind with 17. Shirley McCoy added nine and Gail Payton put in six.

The Doughgirls' season play has been preparing them for the TRADOC tournaments which take place here Friday through March 9, at Audie Murphy Gym and Briant Wells Fieldhouse. Graves said the team is looking good and are ready to play some good ball in the tournament.

Lisa Myers is a Pleasantville, N.Y. native and has eight-years experience playing basketball, including four-years in high school. The 5' 7 1/2" guard says she thinks the team will do well in TRADOC.

Valerie McGill, a 5' 6" guard and forward, hails from Dayton, Ohio and has six-years experience, including two years on the Morristown College team in Tennessee. "I think we'll go all out this year and take it all," she said.

Guard and center Carnetta Rountree has been playing basketball for four years. The 5' 4" Omaha, Neb. native played during junior high and high school and also while in Advanced Individual Training at Fort Lee, Va. "I enjoy a lot of sports and basketball is one of my favorites," she said. "I'm looking forward to taking the championship in the tournament."

Gail Payton says she feels the Doughgirls will come out on top overall, although they have a couple of inexperienced players for organized basketball. The Albany, Ga. native has six-years experience including high school and one-and-1/2-years with the 8th Army in Korea. Payton, 5' 8", will be playing center and forward.

Joyce McCullen is an Elizabeth City, N.C. native and has been playing basketball for nine years. The 5' 5" guard-forward says she wants to win this year's tournament and thinks the team can do it.

A new member of the team, Bobbie Wilson, is only 5' 1" but the coach says she can play ball. She has three-years experience playing high school basketball and is a guard for the Doughgirls. The Greenville, S.C. native says the Doughgirls play with teamwork and she's glad to be part of the team.

Forward Shelia Brunson has three-years experience, including two years on a college team. The 5' 7" New Haven, Conn. native plays forward for the team.

Guard Carolyn Cato is 5' 3" and hails from Albany, Ga. She has two-years experience, including one year on her high school team.

Before their first game in the TRADOC tournament which takes place March 6 at 2 p.m. in Audie Murphy Gym, the Doughgirls will take on the Moody Air Force Base team in two games here this weekend. The games will take place at Briant Wells Fieldhouse with the first one tonight at 6 p.m. and the second tomorrow at 1 p.m.

Season ends

Tourney starts soon

The Doughboys' regular season play is nearing its end before the team participates in the 1981 TRADOC A Men's Division Basketball Championship to be held here Thursday through March 9.

They'll play three games this weekend and one Tuesday before the tournament play begins Friday. The Doughboys will take on the Moody Air Force Base team tonight at 7 p.m. and tomorrow at 3 p.m. in Briant Wells Fieldhouse.

Then they will face a team from Maxwell Air Force Base Sunday at 1 p.m. at Briant Wells. The Doughboys will play Maxwell again Tuesday at 6 p.m. when they travel to the Air Force Base in Montgomery, Ala. Game results will be published in next week's BAYONET.

400 expected to celebrate

Shooting team hits quarter-century

On March 1, the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) will celebrate its 25th organizational anniversary. More than 400 past and present members of USAMU are expected to be at Fort Benning this weekend to recognize the event.

Many of the USAMU's shooting greats of the past will join with the unit's present champions, including retired Sgt. Maj. Joe Benner, USAMU's first Olympic gold medal winner and three time World Pistol champion.

Also expected is retired Sgt. Maj. William Blainkenship, six-time National Pistol champion and the 1966 World Pistol champion; retired Maj. Verle Wright, two-time World Rifle champion; and retired SFC Barbara Hile, many times National Women's champion with both rifle and pistol, to mention just a few.

Activities for the occasion include a unit "Open House" and tour today, followed by shooting demonstrations, marksmanship displays and a cook-out tomorrow.

SYMBOL OF EXCELLENCE

In the brief history of USAMU, the unit has turned out no less than eight Olympic gold medal winners, more than 30 world champions, at least 400 national champions and established countless national shooting records reported to be well over 1,000.

Winning in competition is not the unit's only mission.

Training the FORSCOM soldier in marksmanship is an increasing responsibility. Last year alone, USAMU conducted more than 200 marksmanship skill enhancement classes including, "How To Do It" clinics, basic marksmanship, college and ROTC clinics, the National Small Arms Firing School and similar marksmanship oriented instruction totaling more than 40,000 student man-days.

USAMU has also been deeply involved with writing training material dealing with marksmanship, weapons improvement and development, and development of various training aids aimed at improving the overall standards of marksmanship Army-wide. USAMU was the prime developer of the M-21 sniper system used with great success in Vietnam. The unit still runs sniper/counter-sniper training courses primarily for marksmanship instructors, law enforcement personnel and military units with sniper/counter-sniper missions.

In the 1959 Pan American games, then corporal Gary Anderson won his first gold medal in 300-meter Rifle Team competition. He went on to become one of USAMU's greatest champions, winning two Olympic Gold Medals and seven World Championships. (U.S. Army Photo)

YA basketball finishes season

By Martha E. Duncan

Youth Activities Sports Director

The Youth Activities basketball season ended Feb. 21 as six teams met at the Youth Activities to receive their runner-up and champion awards.

Paul Sharkey, League Commissioner, made the awards presentations. In the Termite Division, the runner-up awards went to the Bullets with the 76'ers taking the crown. The Blazers took the runner-up awards, in the Midget Division, with the Blue Devils taking top honors.

Leading up to the ceremony an "if" game was played in the Pee Wee Division between the 76'ers and the Warriors. The Warriors were keyed up for the game and kept a good lead throughout the game, to also take the championship with their 40 to 27 win.

The final games may have been the highlight of the tournament, but there were some exciting games leading up to the championship.

The tournaments got underway on Feb. 17 at the Youth Activities and Lavoie Gyms.

The Termite Divisions (8-10 year olds) opened the tournament at 6 p.m. Lavoie Gym. The 76'ers faced the Hawks in a thrilling game. The score remained close throughout the first half with the 76'ers taking the edge. During the third quarter, the 76'ers spread the score gap to a comfortable lead. Into the last quarter, things closed up again and the winner was undecided until the final minute of the game when the 76'ers pulled off a 28-26 victory. At the Youth Activities Gym, the Trail Blazers couldn't keep the trail clear as the Bullets kept in the winner's circle with a 25-14 win.

The evening's second games had the mighty Pee Wees (11-12 year olds) take the center stage. At Lavoie Gym, the 76'ers displayed a great deal of talent as their shooters showed good aim for a 51-20 win over the Eagles. The Red Devils faced the tough Warriors at the YA Gym. The Warriors had their top scouts on the war path as their 56-7 victory sent the Red Devils to the loser's bracket.

The evening's final game had the Midgets (13-15 year olds) take the court. At Lavoie Gymnasium, the Blazers and Panthers gave it their best. Throughout the game, the Blazers maintained the upper edge on the scoreboard. Both teams were aggressive and displayed good court tactics. The final outcome had the Blazers stay in the winner's bracket with their 67-52 win.

At the YA Gym, the Spirits and Supersonics played a good game. Offense and defense were apparently matched as the closing score gave the Spirits a slight edge to take the game 67-64.

Games resumed on Feb. 18 with equal enthusiasm displayed on opening night.

At Lavoie Gym, the little Termites were busy at work. The Hawks and the Trail Blazers scurried up and down court trying for baskets when the distance looked reachable...and sometimes it wasn't. The Trail Blazers cut the opening trail for a 10-2 lead at the half. The Hawks couldn't soar high enough until the final two minutes of the game when they began gaining speed. The game was an exciting one as the buzzer went off just as a member of the Hawks had the ball airborne. The ball rolled round the rim and then off, giving the Trail Blazers a 14-13 win.

Another close encounter in the Termite League took place at the Youth Activities Gym. The 76'ers and the Bullets had a tough confrontation to determine who would remain in the winner's bracket. The game had a lot of fast action and both teams showed good teamwork. As the final seconds ticked away the 76'ers captured a 28-22 win.

In the Pee Wee Division, the Warriors did battle with the 76'ers at the Youth Activities Gym. The score see-sawed throughout the game but the final outcome had the Warriors advance to the semi-finals with their 34-29 win.

In the Midget Division, the Spirits played the Blue Devils' who obtained a bye on opening night. The Blue Devils were springing high as they had good control of the boards. The Spirits couldn't score the points to close the Blue Devils' scoring gap. At the close of the game, the Blue Devils moved along to face the Blazers as they outscored the Spirits 62-34.

At the Lavoie Gym the Panthers and Supersonics played hard to remain in the tournament. The Panthers took the upper edge and kept it throughout the game to close with a 62-40 victory.

On Feb. 19 the tournament's competitiveness grew, as did the teams's anxiety.

Col. Carmen J. Cavezza will assume command of the 197th Infantry Brigade (Separate) Monday at 2 p.m. during a change of command ceremony on Combined Arms Field at Kelley Hill.

Col. Cavezza will replace Col. Michael F. Spigelmire who will become operations officer for VII Corps in Stuttgart, Germany.

In 1969, Col. Cavezza was assigned to the 25th Infantry Division in Vietnam. When he returned, he was named commander of the District Recruiting Command in Richmond, Va.

After attending the U.S. Marine Corps Command and Staff College at Quantico, Va., he was assigned

Following basic officer, airborne and ranger training at Fort Benning, he was assigned to Germany for more than four years, serving in company and division level positions, and with the Special Forces.

After completing the Infantry Officer Advanced

Course here he was assigned to Vietnam, where he commanded Company C and was battalion adjutant of the 2nd Battalion (Airborne), 8th Cavalry, 1st Cavalry Division. An instructor's tour at Benning was followed by another assignment in Vietnam as a district senior advisor.

He attended the Command and General Staff College and Georgetown University before being assigned to the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and subsequently to the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff in Washington, D.C.

Returning to troop duty, Col. Spigelmire was executive officer of the 2nd Brigade (Blackjack) and commander of 5th Battalion, 7th Cavalry and 1st Battalion, 5th Cavalry (Brigade 759 of the 1st Cavalry Division at Fort Hood, Texas).

How About That?

By William W. Erbach
36th Engineer Group Chaplain

Today I want you to do something for me. While you are reading this article I want you to stop and stretch out your hands to the person nearest you. Go do it, right now. Join hands with your neighbor or co-worker.

Alright, now what happened when you were holding hands? After the questioning look each one of you smiled. It was so automatic, you probably didn't know that you were doing it, but you smiled.

Stretch forth your hand. It seems to me that these four words will never go out of style. They radiate the spirit of friendship. Think of what a wonderful place the world would be if everyone stretched out his hand to others in friendship.

Think what miracles might happen if bosses stretched out a hand of friendship to the people that work for them. And what might happen if each race on this earth stretched out a hand of friendship to every other race.

When nations, religions and races stretch out their hands in friendship, wars will stop and the world will be at peace. You may wonder how all this concerns you. The peace of the world rests with each individual. We have to have friendship in the family before we have friendship in the community before we have friendship in the nation. We have to have friendship in the nation before we have friendship in the world. How About That?

All this friendship begins with the individual, you and me, and it takes two. But don't wait for the other person to step forward and offer you his hand, you start it. To have a friend, be a friend. Stretch forth your hand.

Milage rates raised

More travel money for TDY

WASHINGTON—Service members can now get more travel money when driving their Privately Owned Vehicles (POV) while on Temporary Duty (TDY), say Department of the Army (DA) personnel officials.

In a change to the reimbursement rate under the Monetary Allowance in Lieu of Transportation (MALT) program, service members are now repaid at the rate of 16 cents per mile. Before the change, which went into effect January 13, the rate was 7 cents per mile for members using POV's while traveling under official TDY orders.

Last September, the Military Manpower Management Act containing the Nunn-Warner Amendment lifted the 7-cents-per-mile ceiling for the MALT reimbursement rate. However, the decision as to how much reimbursement was fair and equitable was left to the military service's secretaries.

The Department of Defense Per Diem Committee recommended the MALT rate be increased from 7 to 16 cents per mile. According to a personnel official, the new rate is equal to the cost to the SER/ICEE per air passenger mile when a service member uses a transportation request for air travel. (ARNEWS)

Reasons for war shown

By Bill Powell

WFBG Broadcast Journalist

The events that led to World War II were not momentous or earth-shattering. The path to war usually isn't.

The buildup to a global conflict builds up by degrees and suddenly escalates into war. What was it that led up to World War II?

You can find out by watching WFBG-TV, Channel 13 on Alert Cable, next week. The story of what led to World War II will be aired in four episodes on the "Big Picture - The Army in Action." Following are highlights of next week's programming:

•"Green Scene #19" looks at the XM2 Infantry Fighting Vehicle, Army Reserve Training and CHAMPUS.

•"It's Your Money" considers the problems of finance. Problems discussed include pitfalls that lead to indebtedness, guidelines to avoid high interest in credit buying and requisites for good personal financial management.

•"It's Your Move" outlines the entitlements and allowances available from the Army to personnel who are moving to new duty stations.

•"The Army Chaplaincy" features a chaplain talking about the chance for informal contact and discipleship while out in the field, at P.T. Tests or on the range. Check the BAYONET or Benning Bulletin for times and days of scheduled programming.

Bus station razed

Ever notice how something can be gone for some time and you may not notice it. Sometimes it may be something small like a clock removed from its familiar spot on the wall. Other times it can be something large like a bus station on Main Post.

A bus station? Now wait a minute, bus stations don't just vanish one day. The bus station had been there for years.

During its day, hundred of thousands of troops moved through the old station. Who knows what kind of memories were held in the old walls -- a frightened young kid just into the Army, a soldier anxious to get home for Christmas leave.

In later years, the station fell to ruin. Much of the interior had been vandalized and defaced, said an official at the Real Estate Station, Directorate of Facilities Engineers.

Part of the bus station, the open air covered shelter, remains and will be refurbished and new lighting may be installed, said Jim Carmody, chief of master planning, DFAE.

A pre-fab metal shed has also been scheduled to replace the old station. The concession patio will, according to Charles Orr, DFAE, be moved inside this new station.

The menu of the evening will offer a choice of entrees at a "split cost" ranging from $9.50 to $13.50 per person. Entertainment for the evening features the collective voices of the Long Gray Line, a skit for ole times sake, and the harmonious voices of the Officer Candidate Chorus.

Airborne 5,000 giving shows to directorates

By Brian Adams
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The different directorates here will soon receive invitations, asking them to attend one of the weekly Airborne 5,000 demonstrations.

"It's basically to show these people what we do and what they are supporting," said Col. Eugene D.

Hawkins, Airborne Department director. "It's also one way for us to say thank you for the support."

The hour long demonstration, designed to show what is taught to the airborne volunteer, begins with what is taught in the ground week portion of the school and ends with a sky diving exhibition by the 'Silver Wings' parachute team.

Such exhibitions as the mock door, the 34-foot mock tower and the 250-foot free towers are shown to the visiting parties. Also a part of the demonstration is the various commands, visual and verbal, used to aid the soldier in exiting safely from an aircraft in flight.

"Stand-up," commands SFC Robert L. Dunstan, Airborne Department, using both visual and verbal commands.

Tour length may change

WASHINGTON--An effort is underway to improve the turnaround time between overseas tours for all soldiers, according to an Army personnel official involved in reviewing Army stabilization policies.

What the Army is looking at, the official says, is reducing the number and length of stabilized tours in the Continental United States (CONUS).

A study by the Army Cohesion and Stability Team (ARCOST) has determined that if the length of stabilization for CONUS organizations were not more than 24 months, a significant improvement in the turnaround time for all Army members between overseas tours would be achieved.

The Army staff is receiving input from Major Commands (MACOMS) on the effect such a change would have on unit performance, cohesion and other mission-related activities. Also, the official stated, the MACOMS have been directed to rejustify the present stabilization policies listed in the current regulation (AR 614-5). They are doing that, the official commented, with the knowledge that DA is looking at making 24 months the guaranteed period for enlisted soldiers. Eventually, the Army wants to allow soldiers to spend at least 3 years in CONUS between overseas tours.

"It should be noted," explained the personnel official, "That this reduction in the stabilized period does not mean that all enlisted soldiers will move after 24 months. It means, if an Army requirement exists and a soldier is assigned to a stabilized unit or position, he or she could be moved after 24 months on station. This would increase the pool of soldiers available and would ultimately serve to increase the turnaround time for all soldiers."

The personnel official commented that there are three types of stabilizations covered by the basic regulation: Unit/Agencies/Activities; selected TDA/TOE positions; and name cases approved for special study groups or the like.

The elimination of or reduction in CONUS stabilized tours, the official offered, will especially impact on those enlisted specialties which are critical to the Army today and which have a shortage of trained personnel to fill existing needs. (ARNEWS)

Lower airfare date extended

WASHINGTON — Three airlines have extended the cut-off date for a 50 percent discount fare program, say Military Traffic Management Command (MTMC) officials.

The program offers reserved-seat, half-priced air coach fares for active-duty military personnel traveling on leave or pass. Delta, Republic and USAIR are the first of 15 participating airlines to extend the program.

Republic and Delta have fixed no expiration date for their furlough fare and offers the reduced fares on all their domestic routes with no restriction on dates of travel.

USAIR has set Feb. 28, 1982, as its cut-off date and will offer the reduced fares on all domestic routes with no black-out dates.

"The announcement by these airlines to continue offering the program is definitely a boost to the morale and welfare of military personnel everywhere," said Maj. Gen. John D. Brue, commander of MTMC. "We are determined in our efforts to convince the other participating carriers of the mutual benefits that can be derived by continuing the program," he added.

Other airlines offering the reduced fare are Air Midwest, American, Braniff, Continental, Eastern, Northwest, Ozark, Pan Am, Piedmont, TWA, United, and Western.

Army's European readiness strong

WASHINGTON — The Commander in Chief of the U.S. Army in Europe has told a Senate subcommittee on preparedness that his soldiers are well-equipped, well-trained and qualified to perform their mission.

"I believe also that these forces can fight successfully," stated Gen. Frederick J. Kroesen during his appearance before the subcommittee of the Senate's Committee on Armed Services. "They are manned, equipped and professionally prepared and capable today, and even at their peacetime strengths they can engage successfully in combat operations."

The general said he resents attacks on the soldiers' dedication and motivation.

"I am convinced personally that soldiers in Europe are today equal to the task," he declared, "And I deplore the attacks being made on their competence and their quality for such attacks can undermine their confidence in themselves and in each other."

Gen. Kroesen admitted difficulties in keeping equipment operational that is old and out-dated. It does "not represent the modern technology with which American soldiers who might have to go into combat should be equipped."

He also said that training isn't what it should be, because of limitations on money available for ammunition, on hiring of civilian personnel, in improving local and major training areas in Europe.

Gen. Kroesen appealed to the subcommittee to support efforts to upgrade the combat service support structure. Without improvements, "sustained effectiveness cannot be guaranteed," he said. "Sustained operations require forces in being, installations in operation and functioning systems in place before combat begins . . . we do not at this time have the system equipped, stocked, and prepared sufficiently to guarantee success in extended combat operations."

Gen. Kroesen concluded with his assessment of living and working conditions, "The subject of greatest concern to command in U.S. Army, Europe."

"The inadequacies of troop housing, the shortage of family housing, the makeshift, unsatisfactory, unhealthy working conditions for large segments of the command, the exorbitant backlog of maintenance and repair projects all contribute to a cancerous drain on the morale and commitment of the force as a whole."

He said that although soldiers do not mind hardships, "They are discouraged by what appears as a lack of concern that consigns them indefinitely to living and working in a second-class status."

Improvements are needed now, he pointed out. "After years of neglecting the (Army in Europe's) physical plant, we owe our soldiers nothing less." (ARNEWS)

Claims Lavoie turning into ghetto

To the Editor:

After nine months of living in Lavoie Housing Area, I have observed this area slowly deteriorating from a good living area to a ghetto. Not only that I have observed individuals in their quarters disregarding the request of the Post Commander, when he advised them to save on electricity by not using more than what was required and to avoid leaving their porch lights on.

Well, sorry to say, but it is a shame when at many hours of the day, I observed individual's quarters with their outside lights still on and not only that but the individual is right there in the house and is too lazy to flip two switches in the off position. Sometimes it makes me believe that some of these individuals just don't give a who. My second gripe is about animals, dogs and cats, and whatever else you may have. I love animals and I don't blame them for what they do.

I have to blame the owner for leaving them loose in the neighborhood and allowing them to go into everybody's trash cans and it seems to me that they know when trash is to be collected because they sure tear into every plastic bag leaving a terrible mess by the areas. And who has to pick that trash up? Well no one but the poor soldier who is here to train and who has to go around cleaning everybody's mess. And it is not the animal who is to blame, but the owner who leaves the animal hungry and turns them loose on trash collection day.

In addition, the same animals, dogs and cats and whatever else decide to get into the neighbors yards where kids are playing and decide to do their business. Can you picture your child coming into your living room with pants or shirt full with dog --- or cat ---, and then you stop to realize that you don't even own an animal? Well, I have seen this happen and much more.

The solution is simple and I'm very sure that everybody who reads this article can simply solve these problems. We are to understand the problem and do something about it. Don't let another individual make your decisions, because it may be costly.

Medic wins post honor

Sp4 Douglas Riemer, Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade (Separate), was recently named as the Post Soldier of the Quarter.

Considered a "Good man," by his first sergeant, Riemer competed in five boards and against about 100 other soldiers on his way to the post title.

Desiring to work in the medical field since his high school days at Willmar Senior High, Minnesota, Riemer said, "I started working in the hospital after school and I began to enjoy it.

"I chose medic, because of the work I did in the hospital and I chose the Army because I like the lifestyle and the people I meet," he said.

An honor graduate from 91B Medic School at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, Riemer has been on active duty since July 6, 1978. "I spent 2-years with the Minnesota National Guard before coming on active duty," he said.

"While I was assigned to the National Guard, I attended truck driver school at Fort Dix, N.J. and infantry training here at Fort Benning," he commented. "They made sure that I had a secondary MOS."

The son of Al and Lorraine Riemer, Douglas has two older sisters Janice and Beverley and a younger brother named Richard.

"As far as what I've won," he said. "I don't know yet, they haven't told me yet."

Riemer is presently working in the medical clinic on Kelly Hill with the 197th Infantry Brigade (Separate).

Benning earns dining awards

By Debbie Harrison
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Last week three dining facilities on post won the TRADOC Philip A. Connelly award, the Army's top food service award. Sometime in May, TRADOC will reinspect the dining facilities for the worldwide competition. This is the first time that one post has captured all three awards.

For so long Army mess halls were thought as Beetle Bailey's cooks in the famous comic strip. Connelly, a leader in Food Service management, was the former President of the International Food Service Executive Association. In 1968, the Philip A.

Connelly Award was started to honor the excellence in Army Food Service. Connelly wanted the Army's mess halls to be recognized for their excellence and hard work like the commercial food services.

The units are: Headquarters, Headquarters Detachment, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group for the large category (serving 201 or more), Headquarters, Headquarters Detachment, 197th Support, 197th Infantry Brigade, for the small category (serving 200 or less) and Headquarters, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade for the Field Kitchen category (serving food service to active Army units in the field).

Center aids children

By Pat Heeter
Occupational Therapist
Marlin Army Community Hospital

A grade school child lags behind the rest of his classmates in school. He writes his letters and numbers backwards, has difficulty reading and has a behavior problem. Although this child is of average to above average intelligence, his teacher and parents feel he has definite learning problems.

Where can an evaluation be done to find out if there is a specific (dysfunction) problem which interferes with the child's normal learning process?

At Fort Benning, children can be evaluated and treated at the Occupational Therapy Learning Abilities Center located at Patch school and directed by 2nd Lt. Pat Heeter.

The Learning Abilities Center helps children develop their maximum abilities in intellectual, physical and social skills through early identification of perceptual, sensory and developmental problems. It provides special training programs to improve areas where children are having problems. It helps parents in developing knowledge of the child's problem and learning techniques to aid in remediating these problems.

The majority of children have been referred to the clinics for an evaluation by physicians, teachers or parents who detect difficulties such as poor writing ability, letter or number reversals, inability to copy from a blackboard, forgetting visual and auditory information, restlessness and/or clumsiness among others. To emphasize the importance of early identification of learning problems, a successful screening program has been initiated for all children here entering kindergarten through fourth grade. The purpose of the screening program, which is conducted as part of the schools physical examination process, is to identify developmental lags which may interfere with the child's ability to learn and function in a classroom setting.

If, after an extensive evaluation, specific perceptual or sensory defects are detected, the child and parent are enrolled in weekly treatment sessions directed toward remediating the child's individual problems.

The Learning Abilities Center consists of two therapy areas. One is designed to deal with problems in coordination, balance and postural development. The second is designed to deal with auditory and visual perceptual problems.

The deal with coordination problems, equipment such as balance beams, jump ropes, scooter boards and barrels are used. such activities aid in increasing the child's motor planning skills as well as his self-confidence, enabling him to progress fine motor activities such as writing.

Auditory and visual perceptual problems require separate treatment areas equipped with tape recorders, slide projectors, puzzles, memory games and writing activities. These activities aid the child to correctly sort out messages his brain receives from various sensory stimuli.

Since the majority of children with learning problems experience a great deal of failure and peer

Some allowances not taxable

By Capt. Michael Bist and Capt. John T. Phelps II
 Legal Assistance Office

Generally, payments you receive as a member of a military service are taxable. However, certain allowances, including veteran's benefits are not taxable.

You must include in your gross income: basic pay, incentive pay, special pay (such as — foreign duty pay to enlisted members, amounts received by certain medical and dental officers entering active duty, and proficiency pay to certain enlisted members, lump-sum payments upon separation or release to inactive duty and any reenlistment bonus. These items are considered wages and are shown on your W-2 form.

The "rainy day blues" of a tax audit can be avoided if you see your unit tax officer. He can keep the tax man from your door. Ask your Commander for his name and see him today.

There is, however, a substantial amount of compensation you receive as a member of the military, which is not taxable. Examples of items not included in gross income are: subsistence, uniform and quarters allowances (BAQ and BAS); moving and storage reimbursements for actual expenses for moves under military orders; family separation allowances because of overseas assignment; benefits under Servicemen's Group Life Insurance; death gratuity benefits; forfeited pay (but not fines); and veteran disability retirement pensions (if you joined the military on or before Sept. 24, 1975). Also, if you live in government quarters, the rental value of living there is not taxable.

Finally, there is a unique military deduction which you may benefit from. The cost and upkeep of some uniforms may be taken as a deduction under miscellaneous deductions if you itemize. The cost of rank, branch and unit insignia, arguilletes, badges, ribbons, military buttons, and braid may be deducted.

The purchase price of the Class A and Class B uniform cannot be deducted as they may be worn off duty. However, because Fort Benning regulations prohibit the off duty wear of the fatigue uniform, the purchase price and upkeep costs of the fatigue uniform can be deducted.

Those soldiers who itemize deductions should also be aware of another tax savings deduction affected by their military status. As previously pointed out, BAQ and BAS are not taxable income. However, if a soldier itemizes he should include these items in his income when the standard sales tax deduction is included. By including them in the computation the amount of the deduction will be increased.

For more information and assistance in preparing tax returns soldiers should contact their unit tax officer. Federal and state tax forms may be obtained from the Legal Assistance Office, Bldg. 5.

Stress workshop open

By Sally Entlich
Army Community Services

Identifying and defining personal values within the framework of the military lifestyle was the challenge of the participants in the first workshop of the OWC Army Life Series.

Getting to know other people in your battalion, your work group or even just in your neighborhood can often take a very long time. Usually we don't discuss such serious issues as responsibility, ambition or helpfulness but instead talk about the number of children, where you've lived, what you serve for dinner, who you work for and the like. This data doesn't really tell you which ideas and values are actually important to that person nor, in the local jargon, "where they are coming from."

In a rather short time, however, the workshop participants ignored biographical data and experienced some mutual learning, acquired some self-knowledge and established stronger friendships as a result of a values clarification survey.

Interested individuals may register for the Stress Management workshop by calling 689-3401, Sally Entlich.

Chaplain Henry A. Haynes and Lt. Col. Richard C. Moore baptize a soldier.

Soldiers baptized in Victory Pond service

Ever since there have been soldiers, armies and combat there have been religious services held in the field in all parts of the world. Last Sunday one such service was held here.

Not because an army was in combat, but because 14 soldiers from the 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade had asked to be baptized. The battalion chaplain, Chaplain (Capt.) Henry

A. Haynes chose to hold the service at Victory Pond.

More than a few fishermen were probably wondering what was going on when about 60 soldiers, the battalion commander, Lt. Col. Richard C. Moore and his family and other officers and NCOs from the battalion arrived at the pond. The Protestant service began at 11 a.m. and ended with the baptisms performed by Haynes and Moore.

How About That?

By Chaplain William W. Erbach

36th Engineer Group

How many of you like sauerkraut? How many of you have ever tasted it? Some people think that it makes a mighty good meal. The Bible has a group of verses called the Beatitudes and one of the verses begins, "Blessed are the peacemakers." Now you are probably wondering what sauerkraut has to do with peacemakers, but I have a story to share.

Once there was a man named Capt. Cook. He was a famous explorer who sailed the seas discovering new lands. Capt. Cook had a serious problem. His sailors kept getting sick. In those days doctors knew that sailors sometimes got a disease called scurvy when they didn't get enough vitamin C, the vitamin that is found in oranges, grapefruits and cabbage. Sometimes he was at sea for several months at a time. He couldn't carry enough citrus fruit and cabbage to last the trip. Then he had an idea.

Sauerkraut was made from cabbage and it could be stored for a long time. On his next voyage he brought along several barrels of sauerkraut, but his sailors hated it. He then had another idea. He asked the ship's officers to pretend that they liked sauerkraut, but at the same time he served none to the sailors. The officers were the only ones to receive it and even after a time of pretending, they actually got to like it.

At last the sailors started to complain. They felt that they had been slighted; maybe there was something about the sauerkraut they hadn't noticed at the first taste. They demanded sauerkraut; were they not as important as the officers? Capt. Cook must have smiled a bit to himself as he saw the sailors gobbling the sauerkraut, but his problem was solved. How about that?

Capt. Cook was a peacemaker. He could have ordered his men to eat the sauerkraut and risked having a mutiny on his hands, but he was smart. He thought of a way to make his men want to obey. It's important for all of us to be peacemakers. See if you can find a peaceful answer to the problems of life that you face. Blessed are the peacemakers.

Feelings, decisions course topic

By Tom Sabel
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Waiting to see her first sergeant her knees began to shake. The young soldier knew she was in trouble and she was prepared to get chewed out. She had heard rumors that the first sergeant was against women in the Army. Thinking about that only added more butterflies to her stomach.

She went into his office and nervously reported. When it was all over she didn't feel like she had been raked over the coals as she had expected. She knew what she had done was wrong and now she was determined not to do it again. However, "TOP" was surprisingly fair toward her. She was glad.

What happened?

The first sergeant did indeed think it was wrong for women to be in the military. His feelings on the subject were strong but after attending the Human Resources Management Course here he learned to understand his feelings about women in the Army and how to change his behavior. The course had taught him not to let his feelings get involved with his command decisions.

Understanding yourself and your gut feelings is the key to the course, said Maj. Jack M. Cherry, Equal Opportunity OIC in describing the week long course for first sergeants, E-8s, 9s, commanders and staff officers. By teaching learning theory, ways to open channels of communications and cultural differences, the course's intent is to learn and understand interpersonal relationships.

With the Army becoming more minority oriented, including women, blacks, Hispanics and Orientals, there is a need to understand the different cultures and how the members of those cultures express themselves, said Cherry. "Even though the course is being run by the Equal Opportunity office it is not another race relations class," stressed Cherry. "Most of us have some prejudices about other people," he said. "But understanding that we have those feelings can help us to relate with others."

Classes held in small groups

The classes are conducted in small groups which can become very involved. There are times when emotions are vented which have lain dormant for some time.

Even though the group tends to teach itself, research has shown that each group tends to follow the same schedule. During the first day the students wait for information to be given them, much like any other student on the first day of a class. As the week progresses the class begins to change, until at the end of the week, the students are basically teaching themselves, explained Cherry.

"When we know how we feel about something, we can't change those feelings but we can change the behavior which results from those feelings," said Cherry.

These activities help build his self-confidence along with his skill level allowing the child to feel more competent and willing to accept greater challenges.

A vital part of the treatment program at the Learning Abilities Center is the role of the parents. Their attendance and participation at each weekly session is required, as they act as "co-therapists" for their children.

Closely monitored by Lt. Heeter, the parents are taught similar activities that can be done at home to stimulate improvement in the problem areas.

A special note of gratitude is to be extended to the Officers' Wives Club. The generosity of these wives, through their donation of much of the equipment in the Learning Abilities Center, is greatly appreciated.

Cavalrymen of today, soldiers from A Troop, 15th Cav, pass in review during their brigade commander's change of command ceremony. Following close behind is 1st Lt. Kenneth R. Lee, representing the cavalryman and his horse, in days gone by.

Change in command

Welcomes new boss

Hundreds of 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers in full combat gear marched before the reviewing stand on Kelley Hill Monday afternoon to bid a final farewell to their former commander for the past two years, Col. Michael F. Spigelmire, and to welcome their new commander, Col. Carmen J. Cavezza.

The brigade's 11 units, six battalions and five separate companies, were all there for the special change of command ceremony, along with some of their military hardware. The 2nd battalion, 69th Armor had three of its M-60 tanks roll before the reviewing stand. For the 1st battalion, 58th Infantry it was their armored personnel carriers. The 1st of the 29th Infantry had their Improved Tow Vehicles and the 2nd battery, 10th Field Artillery provided three 105mm Howitzers towed by five-ton trucks.

Other units of the Bullet's, 'Forever Forward' soldiers also had jeeps and scout vehicles. A static display of tactical and support vehicles were all visible for the occasion. The 283rd Army Band highlighted the ceremony.

Lt. Gen. Marion C. Ross, deputy commanding general of FORSCOM, receives the 197th colors from departing brigade commander, Col. Michael F. Spigelmire, to give to the brigade's new commander, Col. Carmen J. Cavezza.

Col. Carmen J. Cavezza, newly appointed 197th Infantry Brigade Commander, is all smiles as he departs the brigade's change of command ceremony with his wife, Joyce, after being formally welcomed by 197th soldiers. Mrs. Cavezza, along with Col. Spigelmire's wife, was presented a dozen red roses during the ceremony.

Benning lady attends staff college

Very few women have been selected for long term career development training in the past. It's usually reserved for GS-14s and up, and there aren't many women at this level.

But Jody Shirley, a computer specialist dealing with systems analysis and programming with Combat Developments, USAIS, was chosen with the help of Benning's Affirmative Action Program.

Although she was only a GS-12, her branch chief, Lt. Col. Jim Graham, and division chief at that time, Col. Dennis Harron, highly recommended her for attendance at the Armed Forces Staff College in Norfolk, Va.

She joined 19 other civilians and 257 high ranking military in the Aug. 4, 1980 to Jan. 16, 1981 class. There were only nine women — six military and three civilians in the class.

Ms. Shirley's job is to develop and run computerized combat simulation models. She analyzes data by use of computers and takes part in requirement studies for improved infantry equipment and organizations.

Ms. Shirley has a bachelor's degree in mathematics from Oklahoma State University and 13 years in civil service. She began as an intern (GS-7) in the Scientist and Engineer Training program at White Sands, N.M.

Although New Harper, Kan. is her home, she has been at Fort Benning since 1971.

Jody Shirley, computer specialist, is a perfect example of where ambition, training and competence can take a woman willing to work for it.

Sheriff's Target

The Department of the Army has designated March as Rape Prevention Month, kicking off the Rape Prevention Campaign which will last through this summer. Traditionally, the spring and summer months have been the period when sex crimes are highest.

The number of reported rape offenses committed against female military personnel, dependents and civilians at Fort Benning rose to 25 during 1980. Although 14 of these offenses were later unfounded (apparently reported because of the victims' desires to attain sympathy or special attention), the campaign's goal is to reduce the number of rapes altogether. This campaign will not only focus on the female as a rape victim, but on a number of other aspects of the problem as well.

Col. Ward
Provost Marshal

For example, males must also be targeted and educated as to the psychological aspects of rape myths and "macho" attitudes, and reinforcing the moral ramifications of sex-related offenses. The Rape Prevention Campaign will include the following articles throughout the month:

- Providing women with preventive measures they should follow to reduce their chance of becoming rape victims.
- Presentation of male myths and other supportive attitudes which contribute to the commission of rape-related crimes.
- Presentation of facts why women make false rape complaints.
- The UCMJ and rape.
- Child rape.

During previous articles, informative guidance has been presented; some of this will be restated in this article to officially start off the Fort Benning Rape Prevention Campaign. According to the FBI

Stop crime at Benning

"Crime Clock" for 1979, rape is committed in the United States approximately every seven minutes. The next victim could be your mother, your daughter, your sister, your friend or you.

Rape is a sexual act forced on a woman who is not willing. It is a crime of anger in which sex is a weapon. Sometimes it is forcible sexual intercourse; often it is repeated intercourse plus other sexual abuses. It is almost always accompanied by verbal abuse and psychological humiliation.

Rape knows no color, no ethnic grouping, no age limit. It does occur most often to young women. Some men assume that a woman who is dressed seductively is "looking for action." Seductive dress could be an invitation to a rape attack. Skimpy or scanty or even tight fitting clothing may mark you as a possible target.

There are measures that you can take to decrease your chances of becoming a victim of a rape attack:

- Never hitchhike, or accept rides from strangers, or enter a vehicle with a group of males unless you know them well.
- If possible, never walk alone — there is safety in numbers. If you must walk alone, be alert and take the following precautions:
- Walk in well lighted areas.

• Keep your hands free and never overload yourself with packages.

• When driving, always keep your car locked and look in the back seat before entering. Keep your windows rolled up, if possible.

• If your car should break down, raise the hood and remain in the car. If a motorist stops, ask him to call the police or a tow truck. When help arrives, ask to see appropriate identification before unlocking the door or rolling down the window.

If you are a rape victim, report it immediately to the military police (545-5222/5223). It is especially important that you report the crime because if you don't, he may rape again. Remember these preventive measures. They can decrease your chances of becoming a rape victim.

Throughout the Rape Prevention Campaign, the Provost Marshal's Office will offer Rape Prevention Briefings to unit and related/sponsored organizations on the installation. Arrangements can be made by contacting the Project Officer at 545-5915/7055.

YOUR BEST MOVE COULD BE NO MOVE AT ALL.

Some people spend all their lives looking for a job they'll like but never find it. You might have found yours already — in the Army. Listen to what Sgt. John Jackiewicz has to say about staying in.

"The Army's just like any other career — if you like it, you stick with it. A lot of guys get out and within a year they're right back in. They just don't realize all the benefits they had until they start paying for them.

If you've got something good going, stick with it."

You don't have to leave the Army to get ahead.

Your Reenlistment NCO has all the facts on how you can advance in your present MOS or cross over into something you've always wanted to do.

If you're going to make any move at all, make it a walk to the office of your Reenlistment NCO.

KEEP A GOOD SOLDIER IN THE ARMY. REENLIST.

Referral office gives advice

So you are just arriving in the Columbus-Phenix City area and have been assigned to Fort Benning. You have your family with you and need a place to live. In July 1967, the Department of Defense directed that an office be established to assist you, the military member and your family, in locating housing in the community. This service is available to you at no cost.

There are several companies in this locality that charge a finders fee of $40 for locating housing.

When you consider that an Off-Post Housing Referral Service is provided free, it is foolish to spend money to find a place to live. In addition to the assistance provided by the Housing Office, it would be better to use the local newspapers for locating housing rather than be subjected to paying a fee and be bound by a contract. The net saving for such a transaction would be at least $39 which translates into more money for food, rent and utilities.

Since freedom of choice is with you, the military, you must make the decision of either using the service provided by an office established with you and your family in mind, with no fees, or dealing with a fee-charging rental agency and paying the $40 required. Check out every aspect of this matter before you sign the contract. Regardless of the way you elect to locate off-post housing, you are still required to process through the Housing Referral Office prior to making any commitment for off-post housing.

The Housing Referral Office, located in Bldg. 83, Room 124, not only has listings from local real estate companies and mobile home facilities, but also has listings which were provided by individuals.

A 1/29th infantryman rides his Improved Tow Vehicle during the 197th Infantry Brigade's change of command ceremony Monday.

The heritage of the "Pioneers" is reflected upon by today's soldiers.

The 1/29th Infantry Battalion soldiers still wore leg wraps and doughboy steel pots until World War II.

Pioneers

By Rick Kiernan

1/29th Infantry Battalion

The Pioneers of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry are celebrating their 80th Birthday this week. The Battalion has played an instrumental role in the training support of the U.S. Army Infantry School since the school opened its doors. The unit's motto, "We Lead The Way," has been synonymous with Fort Benning's mission of training Infantry leaders. The unit has more than 400 officers and men organized into three company-size elements: Headquarters Support Company, which is primarily wheeled vehicle support; Company A, which is mechanized and provides mortar support; and Company B, which consists of a TOW Platoon, Improved TOW Vehicle (ITV) Platoon and a Ranger Platoon.

The unit was the first to be issued steel pots and M-1 rifles as World War II preparations began. This was followed by the highly touted Airborne Test Platoon who were volunteers from Company B. These Pioneers participated in the Army's first parachute drops.

Began in 1901

The history of the present 29th Infantry dates back to Feb. 2, 1901, when the Congress of the United States authorized the War Department to organize the 29th Infantry Regiment. That authority was carried into effect by General Order Number 9, War Department, Washington, D.C. The actual organization, however, took place on March 3, 1901, at Fort Sheridan, Ill., and the latter date is recognized and celebrated as the birth of the 29th Infantry.

Col. W. M. Vanhorn was the first Regimental Commander. During 1901, the regiment was stationed at Fort Sheridan, Ill. and Columbus Barracks, Ohio, where it performed routine garrison duties.

One year after its organization the 29th Infantry Regiment was alerted to the Philippines. The regiment was alerted to the Philippines on April 1, 1901. The regiment was transferred to Manila, Panay and Negros. Major General Woodburn L. Garrison, who was in command of the Philippines was ordered to be done in stopping the bandits and carrying on banditry.

The regiment returned to the Philippines in 1902. The regiment performed duty in Arizona, returned to the Philippines for a peaceful tour during 1903. The regiment was stationed at various posts in the Philippines during World War I.

After five years in the Philippines, the regiment was ordered to Panama in 1914, where along with the 1st Cavalry Division had the arduous and dangerous task of building the great canal until 1915.

In March 1919, the 29th Infantry was stationed at Camp Shelby, Miss., where it was demobilizing units returning from the Philippines.

At Fort Benning

The 29th Infantry was stationed at Fort Benning, Georgia, in October 1919, at the U.S. Army Infantry School. The school was then teaching student officers in the field on having a unit available to execute those things that are realistic in the school.

For 24 years following the establishment of the 29th Infantry at Fort Benning, the regiment was established. Fort Benning was the home. Through participation in various parades and demonstrations.

Then Lt. Col. George Marshall (2nd from right) was a member of the U.S. Army Infantry School staff.

Fort Benning where it assisted in the task of training troops returned from Europe.

It came to Fort Benning in 1917 when the U.S. Army Infantry School was founded. In the scheme of things, prime value was placed on the ability of all times to demonstrate in correct manner in which to conduct the Infantry

Since its arrival at Fort Benning, the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry has served as a demonstration unit at Fort Benning as its traditional participation in the development of new infantry tactics, organizations and techniques, the 29th Infantry adopted the motto "We lead the way."

When the United States entered World War II, the 29th Infantry left its home for Europe. It participated in "Operation Overlord," the stock piling of equipment and supplies in England to maintain the effectiveness of the D-Day punch against Germany.
In mid-December the regiment deployed to France where it performed security tasks in the Advance Section of the Communications Zone. One of its most important assignments was the security of the "Red Ball Express" highway, the supply route from Northern France to the combat zone.

With the outbreak of the "Battle of the Bulge," the regiment was moved to the vicinity of Namur and Liege and given the mission of securing and defending river crossings along the Meuse River. It participated in combat against numerically superior forces in the vicinity of Jemelle and Rochefort, Belgium.

Korean conflict fighting

The 1st Battalion of the 29th Infantry Regiment was attached to the 24th Infantry Division during the Korean conflict from July 24 to Aug. 3, 1950. From
Aug. 4 to Sept. 4 they were attached to the 25th Infantry Division. They were engaged in some of the heaviest fighting of the Korean War in the vicinity of Chinju and Masan and suffered heavy losses while the United Nations Forces were consolidating their positions in the Pusan Perimeter.

On Sept. 5, 1950, the 29th Infantry Regiment returned to Okinawa where it remained as part of the security forces of the United States Army Forces, Far East, until its return to Fort Benning on Nov. 20, 1954.

Today

Today the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry serves as a proud unit attached to the 197th Infantry

Brigade (Separate) and is still fulfilling the missions as a demonstration unit in support of the U.S. Army Infantry School and the U.S. Army Infantry Center.
The present battalion came to be when the 29th
Infantry Regiment was deactivated on May 25, 1957, becoming the First Battle Group, 29th Infantry. The 1st Battle Group, 29th Infantry was deactivated in October 1962 to form the 4th Battalion, 29th Infantry and the 1st Battalion, 39th Infantry. In order to preserve the unit history and colors of the 29th
Infantry here, it was recommended that the 4th Battalion, 29th Infantry and the 1st Battalion, 39th Infantry become the 1st and 2nd Battalions of the 29th Infantry. This became a reality on Feb. 1, 1963.

With a history of more than 50 years as a demonstration and support unit, the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry remains the "instructor" of the infantry of the United States — The Regular Army, the National Guard, Organized Reserves and ROTC units. Student officers come to the U.S. Army Infantry School from throughout the United States, and the 29th Infantry demonstrates how things should be done. The students return to their stations to pass on the knowledge that they have gained and as practically all new ideas are given out to the infantry in this manner, the role of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry as a demonstration and support unit is vital.

Today, the unit supports more than 1,200 school commitments annually for the 20 resident courses presented at the USAIS. They average 100 soldiers and 50 vehicles at 10 different training sites on any given day of the year. Next week, the Infantry Fighting Vehicle will join the battalion's varied vehicle inventory. And so it continues for the Pioneers as they complete their first 50 years of USAIS support. They press on for 50 more as they continue to "Lead the way."

Housing survey shows problems

The housing survey results for Lavoie Manor are in and the survey revealed that a high percentage of privately owned vehicles, weapons and pets were either reported as unregistered or that the registration was not on file at the Provosts Marshal's office.

The survey also showed that 434 service members with 1,455 dependents live in the 458-unit housing area.

The most frequent written comments made by residents of Lavoie Manor were: slow response to maintenance work orders, sewage problems, pets running loose, vandalism, inadequate parking, speeding vehicles, desire for more MP patrols and more recreation facilities.

Several staff actions have already been taken or are in the planning stage that will help to alleviate these complaints by the residents. More than 40 percent of Lavoie Manor resident's comments concerned service and repair of quarters. The Director of Facilities Engineering is in the planning stage of establishing a quick response emergency repair team which will increase the responsiveness to work order repairs. New telephone and computer systems have been implemented for receiving and processing work order requests. These improvements have increased their abilities to process many more work requests in less time.

A complete turnover of kitchen equipment repair personnel has recently occurred in DFE. This new force is more specialized and more proficient and has already reduced their backlog by 400 percent in the past month. The Family Housing Division, DFE, reported 686 parking spaces are available in Lavoie Manor while 673 were reported during the survey.

A Family Housing Improvement Project for Lavoie Manor in the amount of $1.7 million has been submitted to higher headquarters for approval. Included in this project are requirements for additional parking spaces, resurfacing and widening drives for improved parking. The requirement to replace some sewer lines and a sewerage pump station is also included. Additionally, $47,700 of the project is to fence recreation areas and install additional playground equipment.

Lavoie Manor

- The choir anniversary celebration will be on March 15 at the Infantry Center Chapel at 3 p.m. In honor of the Lavoie choir, the Greater Atlanta Choral Group has been invited as the special guest choir. Mrs. Brenda Holmes will be honored as the guest choir director. The public is invited.

Numerous complaints made

Results of survey presented

Housing survey results were the main topic at the quarterly area coordinators meeting held Tuesdays afternoon in Infantry Hall.

Some of the main problems voiced by residents in the survey of the post housing area were loose dogs, slowness of having repairs made and vehicles speeding through housing areas.

Col. Dennis J. Harron, assistant post commander, addressed these issues saying that the facilities engineers are beginning a new emergency repair

- Spiritual Renewal Services will be held at the Lavoie Manor Chapel Sunday at 11 a.m., Monday at 7 p.m. and Tuesday at 7 p.m. The program will be conducted by the Reverend Al Hanner from Columbia, Maryland. The public is invited.

- Wilson School is being vandalized more frequently than any other school on post. A $25 reward is now being offered for the identification of persons damaging the school. For further information call 545-7642.

team; that a full-time dog catcher is now on patrol catching stray animals and that more radar units are being used by the MPs to catch speeders.

"We are coming up against the wall for housing money," said Maj. Gen. David E. Grange, Jr., post commander to the assembly. He added that residents need to cut down on utilities. "Utility costs are staggering. I need your help to cut energy costs. It's getting down to whether we cut costs or not have playground equipment for the children."

However, it must be recognized that a project of this magnitude requires Congressional approval and must compete for priority and funding with other military installations throughout the Department of Defense.

Approximately one-fourth of the occupants' comments complained of poor control of the 289 pets reported in Lavoie Manor. In order to concentrate more effort to control loose animals, the Law Enforcement Command established a full time dog catcher in January. This military policeman remains on duty in the housing areas throughout each day. The return of 40 Military Police has increased the number of MP Patrols on post.

Increased use of radar units (day and night) went into effect late February and will enhance the enforcement of speed limits throughout post.

Another desire of residents is to increase the hours of operation for the Lavoie Community Youth Center. This gymnasium is a responsibility of the Community Life Program and is dependent on volunteers to staff its operation.

Surveys of McGraw Manor and Main Post Housing Areas have been completed and the results will be reported in following issues of the BAYONET. A survey of Custer Terrace concluded Feb. 26 while Bouton Heights/Davis Hills is scheduled for next week.

MP's rout medics in championship

The 139th Military Police Company fought back from the loser's bracket to claim the post basketball championship, winning two games against MEDDAC 69-49 and 52-47 Feb. 26 at Briant Wells Field House.

"The first game was fairly tight until they went into a man-to-man defense in the second half which allowed us to open it up," said Carlton Rand, 139th's starting forward. Rand shared high scoring honors in the first game for the MPs with Stuart Roberts. Rand pumped in 23 points and Roberts added 18. MEDDAC's leading scorers were William Roundtree with 16 and Kenneth Warren with eight. Other high-scorers for the MPs were Charles Freeman and Richard Williams with 12 each.

MEDDAC enjoyed a three-day break before facing the 139th in the finals thanks to their perfect record in the playoffs to that point. The added rest worked to their advantage in the second game as the 139th started to show the effects of the night before's hard fought win over the Infantry Officer Advanced Course 5-80 team 54-45. IOAC 5-80 was the only team to beat the 139th in the playoffs.

"After playing hard the night before and then playing tough through the first game we were really drained," explained Rand who was again high scorer for the MPs with 21 points. "We were standing around too much on offense and were really sluggish on defense." Although tired, the 139th managed to keep it close through the first half of the final game to only be down by five points at the half 25-20.

The 139th commander, Capt. Katherine Riddle and 1st Sgt. Joseph Lherbier gave the team a pep talk at the half. "They told us that we could have the next day off if we came through with a win," explained Rand.

The pep talk really worked wonders as the 139th came back in the second half, looking like a revitalized team, playing a quick motion offense and applying a sticky pressure defense. "We were really confident that we would win," said Rand.

Despite the 139th's spirited comeback, the tough MEDDAC team fought them all the way to the wire, keeping the score close and the screaming fans on the edge of their seats. With less than two-minutes to go, the 139th only led by one point. Then Charles Freeman, who finished with 12 points for the victorious MPs, put the game on ice, hitting five freethrows in the final minute to clinch the win. Other leading scorers for the MP's were Roberts with 15 and Williams with 10. MEDDAC's high scorers were Silas Anderson with 13 and Roundtree and Warren who added eight each.

Cadet bridges gap -- reaps success

Olin Jackson
 Staff Writer to The BAYONET

DAHLONEGA, GA. - He was a "talk-on" in every sense of the word. David Lavender has always been interested in college sports and he'd always been an Army cadet, the son of MSgt. Clarence Pack, who retired here in 1976. But it was as close as he had come to the real world. David Lavender knew he would have to prove himself in both, the Army and North Georgia College in Dahlonega became his "proving ground."

Now in his senior year at the college, the Columbus, Ga. native looked back on a career liberally dosed with success... success that came from hard work.

As Georgia's senior military college and one of only four recognized senior military colleges nationwide, North Georgia College (NGC) provided the best of both worlds for David. Its basketball team had a winning tradition in the tough District 25 of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics and David wasted no time in trying to get on the team.

Basketball has always been my favorite sport and that's how I learned to play at North Georgia College in the first place," said Lavender. My coach at Baker High School in Columbus knew my family's military background and how I loved basketball, so he told me about North Georgia. I went up to the school for a visit and stayed then and there that I wanted to stay."

I will have to admit though, it was a tough fight at first," he remembered. "As a talk-on, I didn't have a scholarship like a lot of the other players. Naturally, my chances of earning a spot on the team didn't seem too good at first. On top of that, basketball players at NGC have traditionally not been members of the Corps of Cadets because it's difficult to keep up with the training requirements of both the Corps and the basketball team. Players have usually been Army veterans or commuters to campus and as such, exempt from the requirement that they participate in the Corps of Cadets.

Lavender wasted no time in turning this drawback to his advantage however. He worked hard his first year at NGC and earned one of the coveted positions as company commander in the Corps of Cadets. He was one of the first basketball players ever to be so honored.

He not only bridged the gap between player and cadet, but transcended the limitations of each. During his sophomore year, he was selected as a squad leader in his platoon for his work. That same year, this small squad which he had organized out of the basketball players earned him the honor of "Outstanding Squad Leader for 1978-79."

Lavender worked just as hard on the court and it too paid off. Each year, the players on the team vote on a "Hustler Award" for the player who contributes the most to the team effort. David won the award easily in both 1979 and 1980. He also was named co-captain on the 1980 team, was the second-leading free-throwing scorer in the entire District 25 in 1980, and has been named captain of the team this year.

He was no slouch academically either. The highest honor a cadet may receive from North Georgia College is to be named as a "Distinguished Military Student." The award is based on academic achievement, leadership ability and future potential. David has not only recently received this award, but has also been named to "Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities," an honor conferred annually upon outstanding student leaders.

Doughboys stop post champs

The Doughboys came from three-point underdogs at halftime to defeat the 139th Military Police Company 85-74 in basketball action at Briant Wells Field House Friday night.

The Doughboys challenged the post company level basketball champions after their games against Moody Air Force Base were cancelled.

In early first quarter action, the 139th showed the Doughboys why they were the post champions by taking control of the courts and establishing a 6-0 lead.

Although the Doughboys were caught off guard, they made a comeback and ended up trading the lead back and forth with the MPs until the end of the first half. The MPs were on top 39-36 when the buzzer sounded ending first-half play.

At the beginning of the second half, a more determined Doughboys team came out on the court to play ball. Passing the ball back and forth between each other, the Doughboys slowed down the action and controlled the game. The MPs were now forced to play a Doughboy game which was the beginning of their downfall.

Although the Doughboys forced the MPs to play their style of game, and make a lot of errors, they had problems of their own. They forced four of the 139th players to foul out, but couldn't capitalize on these fouls. The Doughboys, anxious for blood, could not keep still on the key during penalty shots, thus nullifying a lot of the points that could have been added to the final score.

Behind the accurate shooting of high scorer Nate

Harris with 23 points and Harry Lyons with 22, the Doughboys dominated the second half.

High scorers for the 139th were Richard Williams with 17 points and Stuart Roberts and Arthur Merrell with 12 points each.

Ready for TRADOC

The Doughboys regular season is over and they'll play in the opening game of the TRADOC Men's Division Championships today at 2 p.m. in Briant Wells Fieldhouse. They'll be going into the tourney with a well-rounded team and a 10-4 record.

Nate Harris, the 5'6" fireball who has pulled through with many high-scoring games this season and was the Doughboy's high-scorer last season, will be a starting guard. He's a former All-American Conference player from the Staten Island, N.Y. Junior Community College.

The Doughboys are definitely not lacking in height with Ken Warren at 6' 5" and guard-forward James Taylor, a new addition to the team, at 6'3".

Harry Lyons, 6'4" forward, is another Doughboy leading scorer. He has played with the Fayetteville, N.C. Methodist College team and has looked good throughout the season.

Tallahassee, Fla. All-Star Robert Thomas is 6'1" and a Doughboy guard.

Forward Mike Mack has played in the FORSCOM tournaments at Fort Riley. The 6'5" forward was also a leading scorer during the Doughboys' winning season.

Added to the team's list of "big men," with even more of a height advantage, are 6'7" forward Robert Hooper and center Samuel Powe, 6'8".

A little smaller, but no less of a powerful player, is guard Clem Williams at 5'8". He played high school basketball in Norfolk, Va. and played on military teams in Panama and Germany.

The Doughboys' Robert Thomas (r) releases a pass as Richard Williams gets ready to block it for the 139th Military Police team.

Doughboy forward Harry Lyons (12) goes for a layup as a 139th MP team member tries to thwart his attempt.

Armchair Sports

Too much sports? What do you think?

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Are the people here tired of seeing sports reported in their newspaper? Their newspaper meaning this newspaper, of course. I'd like to find out and, hopefully, you can help. The reason being - a military survey showed that the second thing people least liked seeing in their newspaper was sports. Needless to say, I was shocked.

I learned this interesting bit of information while attending a Department of the Army newspaper seminar last weekend in Atlanta. The information weighed heavily on my mind and I was anxious to come back to see if I could find out if it were true here.

97,000 surveyed

The survey was given to 97,000 people. It asked them to review the 12 most commonly seen topics in newspapers and pick the one they liked seeing the least. While the number one answer (27 percent said awards and ceremonies) didn't shock me a bit, the number two answer did since, after all, it is my domain. Twelve percent of the respondents named sports. When I heard that, a gasp escaped from my throat and I shook my head in disbelief. Was it really true?

The speaker explained that people see so much sports coverage on T.V., throughout the whole weekend, and everyday in other newspapers, that they pick up the post paper and think, "More sports?!" He said it was called overkill.

I know, of course, that the people who play sports on post pick up the paper to see if they were mentioned for their last-minute basket that won the game, their grand slam homerun, or their 70-yard touchdown run. Their friends and family most likely read it as well. But I'd like to think that other people out there who like sports, but don't play on a team for one reason or another, still like to keep up on what's going on in the post's "world of sports."

While the Big Three in sports (football, basketball and baseball) are always covered in sports sections, fans of other sports may look to see if their sport is getting any notice.

The BAYONET tries to cover a variety of sports including boxing, running news, tennis and bowling, among others. We also try to give notice to the coaches, directors and outstanding players, along with those who do those unique things associated with sports such as rodeoing.

Readers speak out

While it would be hard to do a formal survey here about whether the people like to see sports coverage, how many people like to see it or what sports they do like to see, I invite anyone to write or call me (preferably write) who's interested in expressing their opinion on the subject - negative, positive or otherwise.

Any new ideas on sports stories, including anything associated with sports in any way, are welcome. This is your paper and your interest in what counts. Call me at the sports desk, 545-2201, or send by any means to the BAYONET, Rm. 601, Bldg. 4, ATTN: Sports Editor.

Doughgirls downed by 2

The Doughgirls traveled to LaGrange, Ga. Feb. 26 for a rematch against their All-Stars, who defeated Benning here the week before by six points. The All-Stars nipped an even closer win over Benning's girls and they came home with a 78-76 loss.

Doughgirl coach Perry Graves said, "We played them mostly for the experience before TRADOC and we know they're a team we can beat."

The game remained close throughout, with the Doughgirls trailing three behind at the half 47-43.

The Doughgirls leading scorers have been continually raising their scoring game and Lisa Myers put in a game-high 24 points. Gail Payton followed with 20 and Joyce McCullen put in 16. Team captain Teresa Irving fell short of her usual high-point game and added 10 to the near-victory.

The two games scheduled with Moody Air Force Base last weekend were cancelled, so LaGrange was their last game of regular season play before TRADOC started today.

Graves said the girls have done a little reorganizing and are ready for the tourney. "We've got our center, Minerva Brenning, back with us and she'll be a big help," he commented. "I think we have the same chance to win as everyone else."

Self-moving saves

By Bill Powell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

World War II was a devastating and destructive era in world history. Allied forces worked together to overcome the threat of a world dominated by Hitler, Tojo and their allies. The story of the connection between services and molding of other countries' forces into one that could overcome the Axis powers is possibly one of the most compelling to date. "The Big Picture" on WFBG-TV, Channel 13 on Alert Cable, will bring you the story of country against country in a struggle that would reshape the world. "The Big Picture" is but one of the highlights on WFBG-TV next week. The others are:

* "The Benning Report" brings you a look at the Do-It-Yourself or DITY move. Janis Moore of the Transportation Office explains how to move your own household goods and make money for yourself instead of the commercial movers.

* "Green Scene #13" updates the Enlisted Promotion Merit System.

* "Youth Drug Scene" tells the story of a young man who turns to drugs; the reasons, parental and family reaction and how he gets away from drugs.

* "Opportunity of a Lifetime" describes the Army's career management program.

* "It's Your Money" discusses the pitfalls of credit buying and how to get out from under a debt burden. Consult your BAYONET or Benning Bulletin for times and days of scheduled programming.

Disappointing comedy

Simon film not worth seeing

By Bill Powell

USAIC Public Affairs Office

When I heard that Goldie Hawn and Chevy Chase were involved in a Neil Simon movie, "Seems Like Old Times" I thought that it had to be uproariously funny. With two comedy masters like Hawn and Chase and a great writer like Simon I expected great things. I was very disappointed.

It wasn't so much the acting or direction as it was the story. I have seen every Neil Simon movie that's come out. I was never disappointed by what I saw. The hallmark of Simon plays for movie and stage is fast pacing, funny lines, humorous situations and good plot development. "Seems Like Old Times" had a fairly humorous situation. Chase portrays a guy who is kidnapped, forced to rob a bank and then hide out with his remarried ex-wife. Funny premise, right? The plot was good to an extent but the dialogue fell flat. There are a few good laughs but they are much too few and far between.

As to the acting it was good considering what the actors had to deal with. Goldie Hawn is suitably worried and upset about her ex-husband's situation. Her husband (Charles Grodin) is long suffering and just about the most genuinely good actor in this movie. Chevy Chase was basically Chevy Chase. His acting is good but he still relies on the pratfalls and stumbling he became known for in "Saturday Night Live." He doesn't need to do that anymore.

Basically, "Seems Like Old Times" had everything going for it but a good script. But without that all you have are actors and directors trying hard but failing to make up for this shortcoming. Neil Simon is called "Doc" by his friends and associates and as a friend through watching his work I've often called Simon "Doc". But in the case of "Seems Like Old Times" I think the good doctor would have been well advised to get a second opinion. I rate "Seems Like Old Times" as two stars.

Red Lobster Lobster.

Treat yourself to the seafood lover's first love.

We know how seafood lovers feel about a lobster dinner. So we take sweet, juicy lobster, broil it just so, and serve it steaming hot with plenty of rich melted butter.

And we don't stop there. We give you a choice of a tossed salad or cole slaw, and potato or rice pilaf.

If that sounds good, why not fall in love all over again tonight?

Lightning ... it can kill you!

By Anita Langford
Fort Benning Safety Office

Fort Benning is located in a one hundred mile corridor which runs from the southern coast of South Carolina west through Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana known as "lightning alley." In this area, thunderstorms occur approximately 70 days out of each year. With such high exposure it is not surprising that Fort Benning has had more than its share of lightning fatalities and injuries. In one eleven year period, 13 personnel were killed by lightning. In July 1976, 19 soldiers were injured during a lightning storm on a firing range. Although several were injured, no one died during this incident due to the quick and proper action by the unit commander.

Thunderstorms build up tremendous electrical charges in the clouds, while on the ground below opposite charges of equal potential gather. When the attraction between these opposite charges is strong enough to overcome the air resistance between them, a lightning strike results. The dual character of lightning — it carries currents of up to one million volts and produces destructive thermal effects — makes it doubly dangerous.

To help you save your life when lightning threatens, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has developed the following safety rules to keep you from being the next victim. Don't wait to apply these rules until you have seen the first stroke of lightning ... most people are killed or injured during the muggy lull which precedes the storm.

- Stay indoors, and don't go outside, unless absolutely necessary.
- Stay away from open doors and windows, fireplaces, radiators, stoves, metal pipes, sinks and plug-in electrical appliances.
- Don't use plug-in electrical equipment like hair dryers, electric toothbrushes or electric razors during the storm.
- Don't use the telephone during the storm — lightning may strike telephone lines outside.
- Don't take laundry off the clothesline.
- Don't work on fences, telephone or power lines, pipelines or structural steel fabrication.
- Don't use metal objects like fishing rods and golf clubs. Golfers wearing cleated shoes are particularly good lightning rods.
- Don't handle flammable materials in open containers.
- Get out of water and off small boats.
- Stay in your automobile if you are traveling. Automobiles offer excellent lightning protection.
- Seek shelter in buildings. If no buildings are available your best protection is a cave, ditch, canyon or under head high clumps of trees in open forest glades.

yon or under head high clumps of trees in open forest glades.

• When there is no shelter, avoid the highest object in the area. If only isolated trees are nearby your best protection is to seek low ground and crouch in the open, keeping twice as far away from isolated trees as they are high.

• Avoid hilltops, open spaces, wire fences, metal clotheslines, exposed sheds and any electrically conductive elevated objects.

• When you feel your skin tingle or your hair stands on end, drop to the ground immediately. Lightning is about to strike.

Observing these rules will greatly reduce your chance of being struck by lightning. If, however, you are called upon to perform first aid on someone who has tried to beat the odds, keep these facts in mind as explained in the "Annals of Internal Medicine." Persons struck by lightning receive a severe electrical shock and may be burned, but they carry no electrical charge and can be handled safely. A person "killed" by lightning can often be revived by prompt mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, cardiac massage and prolonged artificial respiration. In a group struck by lightning, the apparently dead should be treated first; those who show vital signs will probably recover spontaneously although burns and other injuries may require treatment. After emergency treatment is performed, all victims should be taken immediately to a medical facility for observation and further treatment.

Many people are killed by lightning each year because they think these are freak accidents that can't happen to them. Lightning is not choosy, it will strike anyone foolish enough to ignore the simple safety precautions outlined above. It can and will kill you!

'Marijuana and your child'

Millions of American families must cope with the probability that their teenage children are being confronted with the growing hazard of marijuana use and abuse. Federal figures show that 17 percent of young Americans ages 12 to 17 are current users of marijuana. Of those 18 to 25, 40 percent are users. The problem is not without solution, however. The Columbus Ledger touches upon problems and solutions in an informative 10-part series that begins Monday, March 9. It's must reading for every concerned parent.

Family Practice Clinic taking new applications

The Family Practice Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital will again be taking applications from active duty military families on March 25 at the clinic.

Enrollment is limited to only 150 new families on a first come-first serve basis, said hospital spokesman Capt. James A. Hazelrigs, chief of the Ambulatory Care Support Branch.

March 25 is the first time in 18 months this medical privilege has been offered here. Family Practice is a hospital service which assigns one doctor to a soldier and his family throughout their stay here.

Interested parties must report to Family Practice Team A in the new clinic wing to be briefed and interviewed, by SFC Franklin Alford, Administrative NCO for the clinic. Either the soldier or spouse may apply.

Capt. Hazelrigs said a large crowd is expected to apply for the 150 openings. He suggests that children and other family members do not attend.

Some singles get BAQ

WASHINGTON — A new housing policy now allows single service members in the grade E-7 and above to live off-post and draw basic allowance for quarters (BAQ). The policy was proposed in the Military Fair Benefits Act last May and signed into law December 23 by the president.

Army officials say the BAQ/HOUSING option allows single career or career-oriented soldiers in the senior enlisted and officer grades more freedom of choice in living accommodations. Soldiers who choose to live off post will receive BAQ at the "without dependents" rate and the new Variable Housing Allowance in areas where it is allowed.

All permanently assigned bachelor soldiers, to include PCS students and reserve component soldiers on active duty for more than 20 weeks, are included in the new policy. It excludes, however, TDY personnel, soldiers on field duty or sea duty for more than 90 days, and those promotable E-6's.

Also, the new policy does not apply to personnel assigned to dependent-restricted areas. These soldiers will continue to live on post, unless government-owned or operated quarters are unavailable. Officials explain the Army will deny soldiers the option to live off post when it would "adversely affect military discipline or military readiness."

The right to live off post may also be denied by an installation commander when this action would adversely affect—

- Operational readiness,
- Unit discipline,
- Law and order on post,
- Health and safety requirements,
- Military discipline or military readiness of the command.

Soldiers now living in government quarters who decide to move off post under the new policy must pay for their own moving expenses, officials note. Also, after the move, they will no longer be allowed to store their household goods at government expense. (ARNews)

Repairs finished gas station opens

The Main Post Service Station will re-open Monday. The service station has been closed for several weeks because of an electrical problem which has now been corrected. Operating hours are Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. - 5 p.m.

While the Main Post Service Station was being repaired, the Mall Service Station had adopted new hours in order to fill the void. However, starting Monday, new hours for the Main Mall Service Station will be Monday through Friday from 9:30 a.m. - 5:30 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from 11:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.

Discipline changed since '55

By Jan Wood
Fort Belvoir CASTLE

WASHINGTON — When MSgt. Walter Dunkle first came in the Army, PFCs were "sirred" by new recruits. Soldiers did what they were told without asking "why." Soldiers could boast of being paid $50 a month. And anyone who blinked an eyelash at the wrong time was recycled into another 10 weeks of grueling basic training.

The year? 1955.

"Our day started at 3 a.m. and ended at 2400 hours," Dunkle reminisced. "Between those hours you never even touched your bed.

"I remember one day the troops were out training and I was left behind as barracks guard. I rushed around cleaning up the barracks and making sure everyone's brass was shiny until everything was spotless. Then I lay down against the door and napped . . .

" . . . I spent the next 15 hours in a grease pit six feet wide, six feet long and six feet deep."

The grease pit, in those days, was a hole in the ground located outside the mess hall where the cooks left their grease drippings. Sarge went on, "It was March and colder'n heck. I was waist high in water and grease. But I knew

I had messed up, and I learned a lesson. Even to this day, I have never gone to sleep on duty."

Dunkle, Chief of Post Reenlistment at Fort Belvoir, Va., is one of many sergeants who enlisted in the Army when discipline was at its harshest. Many, like him, feel that today's discipline is not harsh enough.

To illustrate the changing times between 1955 and 1962, Sarge told another story. Three years after discharge upon his first tour of duty, he came back in. Although he had to go through basic training again, he was delegated as platoon sergeant because of his prior service.

"One day, Top came to formation and said to me, 'I caught one of your troops asleep. Do you want to send him to the commander or would you rather handle it yourself?' I said I'd handle it on my level. I took the young soldier to the pit of grease, which was located across the street from the commander's office.

"I told him to roll up his sleeves and pants, take off his boots and socks, and jump in. Just then, the CO came running across the street, shouting, 'What are you doing?' I told him about the incident years ago when I had learned not to sleep on duty. He said, 'Fantastic. But, remember, only 15 minutes or he has an IG complaint.'

"I told the soldier to put his boots back on and forget his punishment."

Today, putting a soldier in the grease pit would be totally unheard of. Some NCOs claim the changing times have refined discipline to an art of deciphering between punishment and actual discipline.

"Discipline today can be defined as 'corrective training,' a mixture of straight discipline and actual training," says Capt. Bruce Kasold, a Belvoir military lawyer.

"For instance," explains Kasold, "if a soldier is consistently late for formation, the NCO can give him corrective training in the evening or after duty hours as long as it is related to that problem area. Such a soldier may be required to report to the CQ every 15 minutes for the next two hours. That would be considered corrective training."

This version of discipline, however, has been called oversimplified by some NCOs. Comments such as, "DA policy has restricted NCOs so much that they practically have to tuck their soldiers in at night" reflect their frustration.

Good leadership still remains the key to preventing disciplinary problems among soldiers, retorts CSM Thomas T. Tucker, 2nd Battalion, Fort Belvoir. The 29-year veteran says soldiers aren't any different now than they were 10 to 20 years ago. "They will accept an order and they will perform duties, but they want the individual issuing the instructions to be a leader."

He continues, "Discipline will not prevail if the NCO lacks a proper haircut or uniform, or has been seen coming out of the NCO club drunk, or has been caught DWI. If he doesn't have these moral traits, he can't expect soldiers under his command to respect him."

Discipline in the Army has never actually been defined by law. But, today's policies have been standardized to give protective rights equally to the junior enlisted soldier and the NCO.

Dunkle sees things in terms of the future for the Army. He says about today's soldiers and discipline, "The Army will be run by these people someday. I'd hate to come back to see I trained my replacement wrong." (ARNews)

Letters to the Editor

Military Police help

To the Editor:

A few nights ago I had an appointment on post. The directions given me were not exactly explicit and being new to the Fort Benning area, I soon became very lost. My husband was still in the field, so I couldn't call him for help. Although I had left our apartment in what I thought was plenty of time, I noticed I was going to be late if I didn't find the place soon. I had stopped and asked many people but no one seemed able to help me. I became frustrated, upset and I felt the entire situation was pretty hopeless. Adding to my frustration was the fact that the place of my appointment had no phone with which I could call to explain tardiness, and

I was so lost that I didn't even know how to get home! Then I saw the military police sign. I followed it, walked in the main entrance and asked for help. A young MP by the name of Tom Terivilliger not only explained the way, but he actually got in his jeep and showed me the way as it turned out, I was only a few minutes late for my appointment thanks to the kindness and courtesy shown me by Terivilliger.

The incident so pleased and impressed me, that I felt I should write you a letter. I've met many considerate and helpful members of the military police, but none as polite and helpful as this gentleman.

Thanks to Terivilliger, I was very impressed with Fort Benning and the military police here.

Lavoie neighbor saves child

By Dave Bristow
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Rose Garza is the kind of friend you wouldn't mind having for a neighbor — she's a real life saver!

Rose, a licensed practical nurse, lives in the Lavoie Manor community here. Last week she prevented a neighbor's child from choking to death.

She used life saving steps to revive two-year-old Robin McLean after she had stopped breathing due to a piece of hard candy lodged in her throat.

Robin's mother, Ruby McLean, explained what happened.

"I was cooking in the kitchen while Robin was in the bedroom with her sister Tammy. My husband was at the barracks. Tammy started hollering from the bedroom. I heard the baby coughing.

"Robin had gotten into my purse and had a piece of hard candy stuck in her throat. I grabbed her and tried to hit her real hard on the back to see if that would do any good.

"I saw the candy wasn't coming up and she had started throwing up. She had never thrown up like that before and that's when I panicked," explained Mrs. McLean. "Usually when she has something in her throat it comes right on out. She started twisting and turning and it looked like she was turning colors. I knew I had to do something."

There was no telephone in the house. The McLeans had moved in only the day before. So Ruby did the only thing she could think of. She ran out into the street screaming for help. Neighbors came to her aid. One of them was Rose Garza.

"When I got to the child she was going into seizures," said Mrs. Garza. "I held her tongue down and got her breathing again. The seizure had subsided. We wrapped the baby in a blanket.

"On the way to the hospital in a neighbor's car Robin went into cardiac arrest. She stopped breathing twice on the way to the hospital.

"She kept passing out and going into convulsions but my greatest concern was when she would stop breathing," said Garza. "I kept her stimulated and breathing on her own."

Once arriving at Martin Army Community Hospital a doctor at the emergency room took over. The hard piece of candy had practically dissolved. Emerald Robin-Lynn McLean was safe due to the fast instinctive reactions of Rose Garza who knew how to save a life.

Mrs. McLean commenting on Rose's professional help said, "Robin could have died without her help. I was so thankful for her. She told me what to do when I was so upset. All I could do was hug Rose's neck after it was all over. I was so relieved."

According to Mrs. Garza, there used to be life saving classes involving Cardio Pulmonary Resuscitation (CPR) at the Lavoie community gym. She'd like to see them return.

"You never know when your neighbor might have a cardiac arrest. Everyone should know basic life saving steps," she said.

Men nabbed by MPs

Two men were apprehended Monday afternoon at 2:55 p.m. by the military police while they were allegedly removing a spare tire from a pickup truck in the east parking lot of Infantry Hall.

The men, both civilians from Columbus, were transported to the military police station and charged with larceny of private property.

Both men were also issued ejection orders from Fort Benning. If caught back on post they could be charged with criminal trespass.

The FBI has assumed jurisdiction of the investigation.

Top-notch soldier sought for award

Fort Benning is looking for a candidate for recommendation to the Outstanding Military Citizen of Georgia Awards Program.

This program is to recognize, on behalf of the people of Georgia, outstanding members of the Armed Forces, active and reserve, serving in Georgia who have helped make their community a better place to live.

In all, 12 awards, one to the outstanding representative of each branch of the active services, the reserve services and the Air and Army national guard will be presented during a luncheon in Atlanta in May.

All major commands on post have been asked to nominate one individual for consideration as Fort Benning's nominator to the program.

The selection criteria include good character and reputation, good military conduct and a significant contribution to the community in which the nominee lives.

Resources award earned for saving

The fourth Commander's Resources Management Award was presented Wednesday morning by Maj. Gen. David E. Grange Jr. during his weekly commander's conference.

George Heberling, Director of the Directorate of Resources Management, accepted the award on behalf of his directorate which was selected as the winner.

The directorate had a total of six management improvement actions implemented or approved during the period July through December 1980, resulting in a first year's savings of $32,413.

The award is presented bi-annually to the unit or activity which demonstrates the greatest involvement in the reduction of Fort Benning resource requirements.

Stamp cost hiked

Anyone planning to mail a letter in the near future should be prepared to tack on three cents more to their current 15-cent stamp.

Effective March 22, the price of the 15-cent postage stamp will raise to 18 cents.

According to Dennis Slocumb, branch manager of Fort Benning's Main Post Office, 18-cent stamps are available here, but they aren't the new ones. "We've had 18-cent stamps here for a long time, but the new ones probably won't be available until the latter part of this year," he explained.

Slocumb added that letters mailed with a 15-cent stamp after midnight March 21 will require the person receiving it to pay the difference.

'Tis no sin not to be Irish— just a terrible, terrible shame

CLEVELAND, Ohio — Of all religious feast days observed by ethnic groups, the feast of St. Patrick, patron saint of the Irish, seems to be the one most universally celebrated by people of different ethnic backgrounds.

While March 17 is often marked with parties and parades involving once-a-year Irishmen, the feast of St. Patrick is still a day of deep religious significance to millions of Irish Catholics throughout the world.

"The true seriousness of the day to the Irish is reflected in the fact that the majority of our St. Patrick's Day cards have a religious, rather than humorous, theme to them," said Richard Connor, senior vice president for creative and merchandising at Cleveland-based American Greetings Corp.

Connor explained that industry sales of St. Patrick's Day cards this year will be about 20 million, with at least 60 percent of these bearing cute, traditional, sentimental or religious messages. He added that studies conducted over the years show that nearly 70 percent of all St. Patrick's Day cards are purchased by Irishmen.

The religious cards recount the exploits of St. Patrick, who was born in England and at age 16 was carried off by a band of Irish marauders. During his six-year bondage, he had religious visions which led him to escape.

Following his escape, St. Patrick took religious training and eventually was ordained a deacon of the Church. In the fifth century he returned to Ireland to convert the Irish to Christianity. Legend has it that he used the three-leaf shamrock to demonstrate the idea of the Trinity to the Irish.

Connor said that other ethnic groups get in on the St. Patrick's celebration just for the fun of it, and for many people the revelry is a way of celebrating the end of winter and the coming of spring. It's a welcome break during the solemn period of Lent for Irish Catholics.

"Even the fairly recent upheavals in Northern Ireland have not diminished the celebration of St. Patrick's Day," he added.

He added that both the Irish and those who wish they were are the big buyers of the light humor and studio cards. Also popular is the line of accessories in the new Blarney Boutique, which includes green derby hats, garters, pins, ties and desk signs that proclaim "Irish is Beautiful!" Relief Act provides protection

By Vincent Reilly

Public Affairs Office, U.S. Army Intelligence and Security Command

Imagine you are involved in an auto accident in Mt. Nowhere, USA.

The driver of the other car is injured and hospitalized for several days. You are pending reassignment overseas. The day before you leave you are served with notice of a suit brought against you by the driver of the other car for property and personal injury damages.

You go to your new assignment, get involved in your new job and forget about the notice of suit. The next time you hear about the case is when your unit commander receives a letter from the other driver's attorney and a copy of a court judgment informing him that the court has entered a default judgment ordering you to pay damages to the driver or the other car.

Frequent moves

This hypothetical situation is an all-too-frequent occurrence to many servicemembers. Divorce, child custody and child support actions are other typical areas in which servicemembers may be served with notice of a suit. Many times, the servicemember is already overseas, is about to move, has the misconception that he is automatically protected by the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, or doesn't understand the legal papers he received and fails to take any action. Under the circumstances of this hypothetical situation, are there any legal protections available?

One area of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act which can help you concerns default judgments. A default judgment is one based on the nonappearance of the defendant.

The Act outlines certain procedures to be followed by a plaintiff (the person who brings the action) and the court before a judgment based on the nonappearance of the defendant is entered. If a defendant fails to appear, the plaintiff must file an affidavit showing whether the defendant is in military service. The obvious basis for such a procedural rule is a recognition that servicemembers are subject to frequent moves and it would not be fair to render a judgment against a servicemember who fails to appear through no fault of his own. What constitutes an appearance before a court is difficult to say in every instance; but basically, it is any act before a court by the defendant himself or his retained attorney.

This does not mean that a defendant must be physically present, only that the defendant has taken some step by himself or through his attorney, if one has been retained, which would constitute a submission to the court's jurisdiction. An example of an appearance is the filing of an answer to a complaint. If a servicemember appears before a court, the protections of the Act do not apply. They only apply when the servicemember fails to make an appearance.

If an affidavit is not filed, or is filed showing you to be in military service, the court must appoint an attorney to represent you and protect your interest. (Again, these provisions only apply if you have failed to make any appearance.) The court-appointed attorney is charged with the responsibility of representing and protecting your interests. If you are geographically and militarily able, you may cooperate in your defense; however, if you are overseas it is unlikely that this would be possible. The role of the appointed attorney, then should be to obtain a stay (temporary suspension) of the proceedings until you are can be present.

The appointed attorney cannot give up any of your rights or bind you by his acts. The only time you are bound by the acts of the appointed attorney is if you authorize him to act for you. If you want to reserve the right to reopen a default judgment, you should not authorize any actions by your attorney.

The Act provides that a servicemember may request a stay of the proceedings. If you or your counsel requests a stay of the proceedings, the court must determine whether your ability to conduct a defense is materially affected because of military service. There are numerous factors to be considered in deciding whether military service affects your ability to defend against an action.

Default judgment

One is your availability. Can you get leave? When will you return from overseas? Were you acting in good faith? Did you try to be present for the proceedings? The courts will also look at the nature of the action (divorce, child custody, suit for personal injury, damages, etc.), which may indicate whether your personal appearance is essential, and the effect that a delay in the proceedings would have on all parties concerned.

What if no attorney was appointed to represent you or you didn't file an affidavit concerning military service? Can a court enter a judgment? Without getting into detail about the circumstances in which this may occur, the answer is yes. Can you do anything once a judgment has been given? The Act also allows you to reopen a default judgment if the following conditions exist:

- The default judgment must have been rendered during the servicemember's period of service or within 30 days thereafter.

- The servicemember or his legal representative must make application to reopen the judgment while still in service or within 90 days thereafter.

- The defendant-servicemember must not have made an appearance in the action. In order for the servicemember to be successful in his application to reopen a judgment, he must prove that he was prejudiced by military service in his ability to defend himself and that he has a meritorious or legal defense. (For the servicemembers overseas, the fact of being overseas by itself has been held to support a finding of prejudice to the servicemember.)

The Act, therefore, does provide you some protection. You may be able to reopen a judgment. This, however, is not the best solution. A judgment exists which may not be void (has no legal effect) but only voidable (may be avoided). In other words, you must go back into court and attempt to straighten out matters with the burden resting on you.

If, when you received notice of the suit, you had placed the court and the driver's attorney on notice that you were in military service, the protection of a court-appointed attorney could have been made available. By allowing the appointed attorney to ask for a stay of the proceedings and placing the court on notice of military service, you can fulfill your military duties without having to worry about a judgment being entered until you are in a position to properly defend yourself.

Each situation different

Even if the court denies your request for a stay, you would be in a more advantageous position to have the judgment reopened. Remember, requesting a stay of the proceedings does not constitute an appearance before the court. Once you make an appearance before a court, the Act and its protection does not apply.

Every situation is different, and there are many variables which can affect the steps you would take. The one step, though, which applies in every situation is to seek the advice of a legal assistance officer as soon as notice of a suit is received.

The Army recipe for oxtail soup begins — take one 1,200-pound ox and remove the tail . . . Just ask the three dining facility managers who won all three of the Training and Doctrine Command division's Philip A. Connelly Awards. They are SFCs Joe Harvey, Ronald Black and Larry Stephens (l to r). Here they team up to stew their specialty.

Field grade promotion considerations change under new zone policy

WASHINGTON—The upcoming promotion selection boards for field grade ranks will operate under a revised secondary zone policy, according to Department of the Army (DA) personnel officials.

The policy change resulted from the recently passed Defense Officer Personnel Management Act (DOPMA) and a review of existing procedures by the Army's Cohesion and Stability Team (ARCOST).

The new secondary zone policy will allow one consideration from below the primary zone for promotion to major and lieutenant colonel, and two to colonel. According to the personnel officials, the maximum selection opportunities will be 5 percent, 10 percent and 10 percent to major, lieutenant colonel and colonel respectively. There are presently no provisions for below-the-zone promotions to captain or lieutenant, officials comment.

Previous secondary zone policy allowed two considerations for selection from below-the-zone to each field grade. Also, the maximum selection opportunities was 5 percent, 10 percent and 15 percent to major, lieutenant colonel and colonel, respectively.

Under the new policy, lieutenant colonels will continue to receive two below-the-zone considerations for promotions to colonel. However, officials say, the maximum selection rate has been changed to 10 percent to meet the provisions of the DOPMA.

In the future, majors and captains will receive only one consideration but will have the same maximum selection rates of 10 percent and 5 percent respectively, as before. Previously, officers shared a given year's promotion opportunity with officers of another year group also being considered. Now, they will compete only with members of their own year group for below-the-zone selections.

Personnel officials say the primary reason for this change is to allow officers more time to gain experience and develop professionally in the early field grade years. (ARNEWS)

First rate treatment for soldiers due

Developed from story John Glass
European STARS and STRIPES

WASHINGTON — Soldiers and their families can look forward to increased benefits and a better quality of service life, according to a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee (SASC).

In an interview published in the European edition of "Stars and Stripes" (S&S) in February, Sen. Roger W. Jepsen, chairman of the committee's Manpower and Personnel Subcommittee, stated, "People in the military are going to get first-rate treatment. It doesn't matter what happened in the past."

Jepsen, from Iowa, was on a fact-finding session to Europe to learn how military members were faring, according to S&S. The article went on to say the trip, according to the senator, reinforced his notion that many service members want to remain on active duty but are faced with severe problems.

The Manpower and Personnel Subcommittee, Jepsen said, plans to do what it can to improve the lives of service personnel. "We are currently looking for ways to reward people who are going to stay in the service," Jepsen reportedly said.

"Some of the proposals now being considered include new GI Bill legislation, and I'm fairly certain that some type of new GI Bill will be passed during 1981," he concluded.

The S&S article also reported Jepsen's view on related legislation sponsored by a member of the House of Representatives. If passed, that bill would give a tax break for career military people. "I think that this is a good sign for the men and women in uniform because Congress is becoming concerned and more aware of the services. I think that it is long overdue," he said.

Jepsen pointed to the need for improved housing for the single soldier, and added that treatment of unmarried service members needs review. (ARNews)

Learning infantry

By Brian Adams
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Good Afternoon," said the Infantry Training Group instructor. "This afternoon prior to going to the live fire range you will be sharpening your skills on the dry fire or blank fire portion of this range."

The formation of soldiers was listening intently to the instructor as he explained what was to be expected of them as they trained on Malone 27, the Individual Tactics Training Range.

"As you move up the range you will be moving in pairs," explained the instructor. "There will be an 'A' man and a 'B' man."

"It is important that as you move, you communicate," he said. "You must let your partner know what you are doing and where you are at all times. This way you won't get each other killed, or you won't kill your partner."

"At each established position, the forward man will cover for the rear man," he explained. "This allows him to move up and take another position so that you are always advancing on the enemy's stronghold."

"At the last position you will find some dummy grenades," the instructor commented. "When both men have reached these positions, they will take turns throwing one grenade."

"Do not cook off the grenade, but throw it, watch where it lands, then get back into the prone position and yell grenade. This will inform your buddy that you have thrown yours and that he needs not provide suppressive fire anymore. Then switch roles."

"Remember, and I can't say this enough," emphasized the instructor. "Communicate with the partner as you move along the range, its the most important thing you can do. MOVE AND COMMUNICATE."

With this in mind the soldiers move to the firing line and prepare to take the high ground.

Benning site of Indian battle

By Bill Walton
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Chateau Thierry, Rhine River, Pork Chop Hill and Dak To are household words to many Americans. These World War I & II, Korea and Vietnam battles where Americans fought and died, received extensive news coverage and thus are remembered.

But how many people who drive Benning Boulevard on a daily basis are aware of the battle of Hichiti, the only actual armed fighting to take place on the Fort Benning reservation. It was fought by the Creek Indians and the Georgia Militia at the mouth of the Upatoi Creek in 1836.

The Battle of Hichiti took place in late January 1836. The Macon Messenger of Feb. 4 reported the battle as follows:

"There has been considerable excitement for a week or two past at Columbus and the vicinity, from apprehension of hostile intentions on the part of the Indians of that neighborhood, and rumor has thrown in its usual contributions in making up all that was lacking in fact. On Thursday of last week, it was understood that 500 Indians had crossed the Chattahoochee at Bryant's ferry, 15 miles below Columbus.

"A detachment of 22 men, headed by John Watson, proceeded to the place to ascertain particulars. They found 40 armed Indians, who were returning to the ferry, who took cover and commenced firing. After some firing on both sides, two white men, Josiah Johnson and Mr. McBride, were killed, and two wounded, and the whites then left the field, and the Indians probably returned home.

"From all that we can learn from people well acquainted with the Indians, we should not judge that there was a hostile disposition on the part of those Indians generally, but there are outlaws and marauders who are ready to rob and plunder principally for provisions and to fight whenever it becomes necessary. This we believe to be the fact, both with regard to these Indians and those residing below."

John H. Martin, in his book "Columbus, Ga. 1827-1865," wrote that he had learned verbally from an old citizen that the Indians were retreating when the whites came up and rashly fired upon them. The Indians took cover under a bluff, and being thus protected fought with great advantage on their side.

Research did not uncover the source of the name for this battle. However, as Hichiti was one of six languages spoken by the Creeks, the group involved in this firefight possibly spoke Hichiti, hence the possible connection.

This battle, in addition to two other historical events, is commemorated with a bronze plaque mounted on an old flagpole pedestal at the corner of 1st Division Road and Lumpkin Road. The other two plaques identify the location of Kashita Indiana village, peace town of the Lower Creek nation. And it pinpoints the place that Lafayette passed during his America visit in 1825.

All three historical plaques were presented to the Infantry School in 1926 by members of three Columbus chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution; the Button Gwinnet chapter, the Oglethorpe chapter and the George Walton chapter.

Records indicate that the site of the Indian Village of Kashita is the area where the Commanding General's quarters, "Riverside," presently stands. There were 47 tribes among the Creeks, and the Kashita was one of the dominant tribes. The term "peace town" meant that no war chiefs could live in the town and that no plans for making war could be made within the town.

Lafayette, the last living general of the American Revolution, visited the United States from France in 1825. In April, he traveled along the Old Federal Road that had been built in 1811, through the site of Fort Benning and crossed the Chattahoochee River.

In addition to the plaque on Lumpkin Road, an additional plaque was dedicated by the Army during the Bicentennial celebration in 1976. It is at the site of the river crossing on 82d Airborne Division Road.

Venereal illness hurts millions

By Terri Moon

Public Affairs Office
Walter Reed Army Medical Center

"Hello, Alice? This is Bruce. Listen, I don't know how to say this, but I saw my doctor today...I've, uh, probably got some kind of venereal disease. You're the only girl I've been with...my doctor wants you to see him. You might have it, too.

Because Bruce sought immediate medical attention as soon as he noticed an abnormality, his chances of a rapid and complete recovery are excellent. So are Alice's, since -suspecting she was infected, as well- he notified her.

Today, gonorrhea and syphilis are only two of the venereal diseases (VD) that "typically" affect the U.S. population. In fact, however, there are some 20 types of VD, or as they're more commonly referred to today, Sexually Transmitted Diseases (STDs).

Just what are the "sexual diseases"? While gonorrhea alone victimizes some 1.6 to 2 million people in the U.S. every year, a similar number contract urethritis (inflammation of the urethra) or cervicitis (inflammation of the cervix) caused by growing lists of bacteria or viruses.

Millions infected

Trichomoniasis is contracted by another 1.5 million victims in the U.S. and those who get syphilis total 80-85,000 every year. Several million other Americans get genital herpes (HSV) infections. Herpes is considered "incurable" and frequently recurs in those who contact it. Every year, 200,000 to 500,000 new cases of Herpes are recorded.

Recent estimates claim that some form of STD strikes one in every 20 Americans. Complications from these diseases vary as much as the type of STDs that are contractable. They range from local discomfort to infertility, ectopic pregnancy (taking place in the Fallopian tube), chronic disabling diseases and pregnancy complications, like stillbirths and neonatal deaths (newborn deaths).

According to sources in the Preventive Medicine Activity at Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Washington, D.C., gonorrhea still tops the list as the most frequently reported STD seen there. Herpes is the second most common STD and is followed by syphilis.

Gonorrhea is caused by a bacteria that needs a dark, moist, warm and carbon-dioxide rich place to live. Contrary to rumors, gonorrhea is impossible to "catch" from a toilet seat or doorknob.

Men usually begin to see evidence of gonorrhea two to seven days after having sex with an infected partner. They will probably experience a greenish-yellow discharge and a burning when urinating. In about 20 percent of the cases, however, gonorrhea has no symptoms. Complications for the male include epididymitis, arthritis and sterility.

As for women, gonorrhea may be without symptoms in up to 80 percent of the cases. Symptoms that do occur, in the other 20 percent, include vaginal discharge, menstrual irregularity, painful urination and lower abdominal pain. The pain can indicate more serious complications like inflamed Fallopian tubes, pelvic inflammatory disease, arthritis and sterility.

Herpes is painful. The male may find blisters on the shaft of his penis and can have burning urination. A female may experience a vaginal discharge, external blisters and a swelling in the genital area, often accompanied by painful urination.

Herpes Simplex Type I symptoms may show up as fever blisters around the mouth; however, this is not necessarily an STD. Type II-symptoms show up in the genital areas when the disease is transmitted by sex.

The Herpes symptoms will most likely disappear in one to two weeks, but as the virus become "inactive," symptoms can recur.

Highly contagious

What to do? First, abstain from sexual intercourse and consult a physician. Remember that while Herpes is not considered contagious when in the inactive stage, medical authorities still know very little about the "carrier" stage. When active, Herpes is highly contagious. The symptoms may disappear, but don't think the disease will vanish. In fact, you could have Herpes and not show any symptoms at all.

Primary syphilis is a cup-shaped painless sore that appears pimple-like (chancere). It usually disappears in one to two weeks whether treated or not. Sores can be found on any part of the body contacted through intercourse-the anus, tongue, lips, fingers, etc., as well as the genitals.

Secondary syphilis symptoms can arise six weeks to six months after initial infection and can last for two to eight weeks. This stage can disappear without treatment, but don't be fooled. A person can have several relapses with secondary syphilis.

The third stage of syphilis is the "latent" stage - the early stage - usually lasting for four years - relapses can affect any organ and produce serious clinical illnesses including blindness, insanity, hearing problems, paralysis-and eventually, death.

Resistant strain

STDs have grown in numbers and probably continue to do so. A new type of gonorrhea, resistant to the usual forms of treatment, has emerged since 1976, causing concern for the treatment and control of the disease. Evidence for these strains were first identified on American military bases and in surrounding cities in the Phillipines. Since then, other countries have reported the disease. They are: Australia; Belgium; Canada; Denmark; England; Ghana; Hong Kong; Japan; Netherlands; New Zealand; Norway; Phillipines; Republic of Korea; Singapore; South Africa; Sweden; Switzerland; and the United States.

From March 1976 through December 1979, 38 cases of this gonorrhea were identified in 38 states, the District of Columbia and Guam. Interviews with its victims suggests that a significant number of cases were related to the importing of infected partners from Southeast Asia or the West Coast of Africa.

Some authorities say the misdiagnosis of STDs, along with less than sufficient lab work and the subsequent treatment of victims keep the incidence of STD high. The spread of sexual diseases can be reduced by better efforts to identify and treat those with known symptoms, as well as their sexual partners.

With any form of STD, it is imperative to consult a physician once the symptoms are noticed. No "suspected" cases should be ignored. Also, the sexual partners of those who have STD symptoms should seek medical attention immediately. The symptoms may not be there, but if an STD is present, it will make itself evident sooner or later.

Hypertension needs fast diagnosis

By Gregory H. Blake, M.D.

Family Practice Clinic
Martin Army Community Hospital

Why should I take those pills, since they make me feel bad? But food doesn't taste good without salt on it! You mean I must take medicine for the rest of my life? Can't I just miss a few and be OK? Have you ever heard of any of these questions or comments from a friend or relative? They are all related to the medical disease of hypertension.

Hypertension is the raising of blood pressure above normal levels. It is estimated that one out of every six Americans is plagued by hypertension. Since hypertension often has no symptoms, it can go undetected for many years. Hypertension is a serious problem, often leading to a stroke, heart attack, blindness, or kidney failure. For this reason, it is important to make the diagnosis and begin treatment.

While doctors don't know the cause of hypertension, they have noted several related factors. Hypertension will often run in families. People who are "hyper-reactors" in response to events occurring in their lives may develop hypertension. Some studies suggest that the trace metal cadmium, which is found in the air, many foods and some beverages may be related to hypertension.

The nicotine in tobacco is known to raise blood pressure. Diets high in fats or salt may contribute to hypertension. The combination of any of these or other still unknown factors may produce hypertension in the patient.

The diagnosis of hypertension can be difficult. Your blood pressure varies considerably during the day. It rises when you are under stress, are doing exercises, or become excited. It lowers while you're asleep or relaxed. It is for this reason that your doctor may want to follow your blood pressure for several weeks before beginning therapy.

Once hypertension is found it can be treated in several ways. Regardless of your weight, it may be recommended that you limit the type of fats in your diet and decrease your sodium intake. Mild exercising, such as walking and light jogging, may be suggested to help lower your blood pressure. It is strongly recommended that you quit smoking.

Many medications are known to lower blood pressure. A diuretic (water pill) which washes excess water and salts from the body is a part of many regimens. Other medications are available which relax the blood vessels directly or block the narrowing going to blood vessels.

When your doctors tells you that you must take your medicines for life, you must adhere to their recommendations in order to avoid hypertension complications. If you're told to limit the salt intake, lose weight or quit smoking you should do so. Yes, medicines have side effects, but these may be preferable to a stroke or heart attack. In order to benefit from your medication, it must be taken regularly as prescribed.

Federal paychecks can be garnished

WASHINGTON-In the old days - say, back in the fifties - it was unheard of for a federal employee's salary to be garnished by his employer for the satisfying of a debt. But today, with the government's heightened sense of social responsibility, there's little chance that a delinquent payer of alimony/child support can escape the long arm of garnishment.

Lately there's even less chance . . . for the U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM) has issued its final regulations on the uniform processing of garnishments for ensuring payment of alimony and child support. The regulations, based on the updated social security act, apply to service members as well as the federal civilian work force. In general, they provide that a delinquent's salary or annuity can be garnished, and that other government-controlled assets not payable for personal services are exempt from garnishments.

Under the regulations, persons seeking to bring garnishment actions must first obtain garnishment orders from local courts or through other procedures established by state law. The court order should name the delinquent's employing agency, or the agency that pays the worker, as garnishee. The original garnishment order, along with specific identifying information about the debtor, if known, should be sent by registered mail or "certified mail - return-receipt-requested" to the appropriate agency.

As applied to Army personnel, this means that for civilians the court order should be sent to the payroll office that services the individual; for all soldiers, it should be mailed to the Commander, U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center, ATTN: FINCL-G, Indianapolis, IN 46249.

The newly issued regulations resulted from a year's worth of revision and review, say OPM officials. One of the changes broadens the definition of "party" to include not only former spouses, but also state and local agencies that provide welfare or family assistance and that have been assigned for rights to child support or alimony payments.

A copy of the regulations appears in the federal register for July 22, 1980. (ARNEWS)

How About That?

By Chaplain William W. Erbach
36th Engineer Group

How many of you have ever listened to a music box? How many of you have ever had music boxes in your homes? I'm sure most of you have. We wind them up, they perform and then they wind down and stop. If we wish to have them perform again we simply wind them up.

I had a friend who sort of made a hobby of collecting these things. At first it was a liking of a certain kind and then became a full blown hobby. As the hobbie grew it became more and more difficult to even listen to some of them because it took so much time to wind them all up. Now, some of the pretty music boxes with their lovely tunes are lost, because no one winds them up.

Have you ever thought about winding a person up? We joke about a little child who is very active, or an adult who is particularly talkative— "who wound him up?" But how do you wind a person up? If a person is in fact run down maybe all they need is some sleep, or maybe a special diet, or maybe some special medicine like the stuff for tired blood. Sometimes a person may just need appreciation.

Have you ever tried very hard to do something and had nobody notice? Maybe you even did that something very well, but still nobody noticed. How did you feel about what you have done? Did you feel sort of like the music box that had done its thing and then wound down? On the other hand have you ever done something and out of the clear someone comes by, and compliments you. That feels good, it kind of winds you up and makes you want to do more. How about that?

I think that is the way it is with everyone. Everyone likes to be appreciated. It winds them up. Try an experiment. Make believe you are a key and see how many people you can wind up by showing them a little appreciation for what they are doing. The effort will be worth it and the music you bring to the world will be heavenly.

Save lives, use Heimlich Maneuver

Once again it's time for your unit's annual picnic. Volleyball nets are in place, hotdogs sizzle over burning coals, and sounds of laughter and merry-making fill the air. It looks like a fun day for everyone!

But suddenly, you notice a small child choking on his hotdog. He gestures frantically at his throat, unable to speak. His skin turns blue and he starts to collapse.

Just what do you do?

The first thing to remember — DON'T PANIC! If you panic, or even take the time to phone for help, chances are that child could be dead by the time help arrives.

If anything's going to be done, you or someone else nearby will have to do it, and quickly.

The answer to this unexpected situation is the Heimlich Maneuver, named for the doctor who developed it a few years ago. Almost anyone can learn this maneuver, and it helps the choking victim expel whatever is blocking the windpipe.

No equipment is needed, just some knowledge and a calm head. This maneuver can be used on either adults or children, but you must first determine that someone is actually choking. Just because a person starts coughing doesn't mean they're choking.

Three signs of real choking are:

- not being able to speak or cry out;
- skin color turns blue;
- the victim collapses.

If you notice any of these signs, act quickly, or the person will die within four to six minutes.

If you're with someone who begins choking, use the Heimlich Maneuver.

Here's how it works:

•Stand or kneel behind the victim and place one fist, with thumb side in, against the victim's abdomen, below the rib cage and slightly above the naval. Reaching around with your other hand, grasp your fist firmly. You'll now have both arms around the victim from behind.

•Press your fist in to the victim's abdomen with a quick, firm upward thrust.

•Repeat the action, if necessary, to force out the object causing the choking.

The Heimlich Maneuver uses air from the lungs to push foreign objects from the windpipe. Remember, you don't hug, punch or squeeze the victim. Use your fist to quickly press inward and upward on the abdomen. Don't squeeze with your arms, or injury could result.

This method can also be used if the victim is lying on his or her back, or is an infant. Just place the heel of your bottom hand (two fingers for an infant) on the abdomen below the rib cage and above the naval, and make a quick inward thrust.

If you're alone and begin to choke, and no help is available, you can even use the maneuver on yourself. Lean against the corner of a table or chair (be sure it's a rounded corner, or internal injury could result) with the corner piece, chair arm or whatever, against your abdomen where the fist would normally be, and force the "fist-substitute" inward and upward with a rapid motion. It won't be a comfortable feeling, but you might consider the alternative.

Once breathing has been restored to the choking victim and the object is dislodged from the throat, be sure he or she gets medical attention to be sure no complications develop because of the choking or emergency treatment.

The Heimlich Maneuver may mean the difference between life and death. And with only four to six minutes to act, it's important that each one of us remember this treatment.

Who knows, it may be your child who's choking.

Sheriff's Target

Precautions aid in avoiding rape

Rape is one of the fastest growing violent crimes in the United States. While the increase within the Army has been much less than that reported by civilian communities, it is still quite disturbing. Fort Benning experienced 11 rape incidents last year. As a continuing series of articles that will be presented during the Rape Prevention Campaign, this article will focus on preventive measures women should take to guard against this heinous and violent crime.

Drive with car doors locked. During the previous year, incidents were reported when women riding alone were followed and sexually harassed by unknown men. There is always the danger while waiting at a stop light of having one or more men step off the curb or from another car and grasp the door handle on the passenger's side. This can happen to you day or night. Usually, after their surprise at finding it locked and realizing that they can't leap right in, they bang on the window and ask to be let in. All you have to do then is shake your head and move out when the light changes.

Be security conscious about your residence. If you live in quarters that have sliding glass doors and are alone during the day or night, block the track with a long bar or pole. Put fasteners on windows that cannot be locked, even those on the second floor. Install deadbolt locks on front and rear doors.

Refuse to work alone in a deserted building. Overtime pay may come in handy, but a woman working alone in an empty office building is in a vulnerable situation even in the daytime. Unless the building is small enough so that you can lock it and be sure that no one else enters without your knowing it, the overtime pay may not be worth the risk.

Take a self-defense course for women. Such a course will not only give your pointers regarding the most effective means of breaking away from an attacker, it will also give you the confidence to do so. Don't choose exotic sounding ones like Judo, Ti-kwan-do, or Kung Fu; you don't need a black belt to get the job done. The course you take should be brief enough so that you can make full use of it within a month or two of enrolling. It should teach you which parts of a man's body are most vulnerable, and how you can quickly deliver a blow to them without endangering yourself. It should teach you how to escape from various types of holds that may be used and what to do in common emergencies of this type.

If you suspect a potential rapist following you, scream or run. If a woman believes she is being followed by a potential rapist, she should take positive, aggressive action. As discussed in a previous article, carrying a whistle or other noise-maker may be a viable option. If you believe you are in danger, yell for help, break a window, or use any other similar means of attracting attention.

Remember, if attacked, keep your head, take whatever action you are capable of executing, and do whatever is necessary in order to save your life. Always have a plan of what actions you would take if you became the victim of an attempted or actual sexual assault.

Involvement stops crime

As part of the installation-wide program to decrease crime and recover stolen property here, a list of identifiable property will be published weekly in the BAYONET. Below are items that were stolen recently here. If you have any information on the following items, notify the Military Police immediately at 545-5222. Your cooperation will be greatly appreciated.

RAPE, all women potential

There were 25 reported rapes here last year. Fourteen of these were later unproven.

Nationwide, rape is the fastest growing violent crime, having increased 103 percent from 1968 to 1977 and up 35 percent in the past five years. According to the FBI "Crime Clock" for 1979, one forcible rape happens every seven minutes, or 205 rapes each day.

While young women are statistically more likely to be rape victims, there have been victims as young as five-years and some were more than 80-years-old.

The statistics only tell part of the story. A number of rapes go unreported due to the victim's feelings of embarrassment or are simply afraid to tell anyone. These victims may be the most unfortunate of all rape victims. The violent act may prey on their minds for years, leaving emotional scars which may never heal. And the rapist is free to rape again.

Rape is an act of violence with a purpose of humiliating the victim. Rapists come from all walks of life, ages, race and occupation.

Contrary to popular myths, the average rapist is not a deranged psychopath wearing a ski-mask and wielding a large knife. The average rapist defies definition; there is simply no such thing as a typical rapist.

Rape is defined by the Uniform Code of Military

Justice as the commission of an act of sexual intercourse by a person with a female, not his wife, by force and without her consent. It may be committed on a female of any age. Any penetration, however slight, is sufficient to complete the offense.

Penalties for rape can be severe. It is punishable by death or other punishment directed by a court martial.

Rape is a crime of opportunity. However, there are some things a woman can do to lessen the chances of being the victim of a rape attack.

- Never hitchhike, or accept rides from strangers or enter a vehicle with a group of males, even if you casually know them.

- If possible, never walk alone — there is safety in numbers. If you must walk alone, be alert and take the following precautions:

- Walk in well-lighted areas.
- Walk in the middle of the sidewalk.
- Avoid dark alleys, doorways or isolated areas.

- Do not respond to catcalls, whistles or remarks.

- Keep your hands free and never overload yourself with packages.

- When driving, always keep your car locked and look in the back seat before entering. Keep your windows rolled up, if possible.

- If your car should break down, raise the hood and remain in the car. If a motorist stops, ask him to call the police or a tow truck. When help arrives, ask to see appropriate identification before unlocking the door or rolling down the window.

If you are a rape victim, report it immediately to the military police. It is especially important that you report the crime because if you don't, he may rape you or someone else again. The next time you may not be lucky enough to live through the experience. When you report a rape to the police there are certain things you must do:

- It is important that you do not douche or wash.

- Do not wash or destroy clothing.
- Report all details of the attack.
- Describe the attacker.

The military police will see to it that you receive immediate medical care. Medical treatment is important not only for your well-being but also to collect evidence. You will be examined and treated for bodily injuries.

When the police apprehend the suspect, you will have to be a witness in a court proceeding. You will be asked detailed questions which you must answer to the best of your ability. Always keep in mind that this is necessary in order to keep the rapist from attacking you or others again.

... survival may depend on you

There is no single definition of a rapist. He can be a total stranger or an acquaintance. He may be drunk or sober, high or straight. At the time of a rape there is only one thing for certain, he is attacking.

For the woman who is attacked there are two options available for her. She can fight back either physically or mentally. Either way, survival is the name of the game.

If she fights back physically, she should not try to defeat her attacker, just delay him so she can get away as fast as she can. There are some improvised weapons easily accessible which she can use to ward off her attacker.

- A plastic lemon filled with ammonia can be used to spray ammonia into her attacker's eyes. It will spray up to 15 feet.

- An umbrella can be held in both hands and jabbed towards his neck or stomach. Don't swing the umbrella wildly.

- A hat pin can be easily concealed and can be used to strike in the area of the face.

- Keys can be held between the closed fingers of a fist and be used to rake across the eyes.

- A woman can always use her natural weapons. She can kick the attacker in the knees to throw him off balance. She can scream to attract attention; bite, scratch or punch at the attacker's eyes, nose, mouth and ears.

- But remember, never try to defeat him, just get away as fast as possible.

Fredrick Storaska, author of the book, "How to Say No to a Rapist," suggests a more passive, mental approach in handling an attacker. He offers five tips to women which can also be used to save their lives.

- Retain or regain your emotional stability. You have to keep your cool. You are dealing with an emotionally unstable person. You have to be aware to pick up on clues that would help you slip out of danger.

- Treat the rapist as a human being. It's not going to be easy to treat someone who is trying to assault you as a human being. Consider this: "Treat someone like an animal and he will be glad to attack like one." You also have to remember that the attacker is not stupid, just irrational.

- A lit cigarette can be smashed into the face or hand of the attacker.

- Gain his confidence. Storaska emphasized that few women realize it but, in general, the rapist is just as frightened during the assault as his victim. Until he is gone away from you, you are a tremendous threat to his security.

For your own safety, you have to ease his fears. Make him believe that you are no possible threat to him.

He added that many women have defeated their attackers unharmed by gaining their confidence.

- Go along until you can safely react. Give the attacker the impression you are going along with him. This will give you time to retain stability and get a handle on the situation. This will also give you a possible chance to get away safely.

- Use your imagination and your good judgment. This comes into play when a standardized technique will not meet the situation. You have to rely on common sense and improvising.

If you become a rape victim, CID officials suggest that you try to get a good look at the man and to remember all details possible about him. When possible, record information such as where the attack took place and the car license number.

- Notify authorities immediately.

- Do not bathe, douche, or comb hair.

- Preserve the clothing worn when attacked, particularly underclothing. Don't change or wash clothes.

- Do not disturb the scene of attack. Make sure not to touch anything the attacker may have touched.

"It is very important that they do not disturb any evidence of rape. You have to remember that rape crimes usually have no witnesses, so physical evidence is necessary," a CID official noted.

McGraw Manor survey tells about resident's concerns

The second housing area selected for the Commanding General's directed door-to-door survey of government quarters was McGraw Manor.

The survey was conducted Jan. 19-23 and revealed:

- 891 service members with 2,230 dependents residing in the 952 unit housing area.

- Nearly one-fourth of the privately owned weapons were either not registered or not on file with the Provost Marshall's office.

- 207 of 378 pets owned by McGraw Manor residents unregistered with the Post Veterinarian.

The large number of occupant complaints about pets running loose appears to be directly related to the high percentage of unregistered pets. Consequently, individual pet owners can assist their neighbors and themselves by registering their dogs and cats with the Veterinary Clinic and controlling them as they are supposed to by post directives.

Letters from the Assistant Commander requiring immediate corrective action will be sent to the owners of unregistered vehicles, weapons and pets and to those members whose registration could not be verified.

Although the overwhelming majority of McGraw Manor residents comply with the requirements governing their responsibilities, some violations were noted. These violations have been passed to the applicable agency for action. Overall, personnel residing in McGraw Manor are to be commended for their candor, cooperation and courtesy while participating in the housing agency.

Major concerns

The most frequent written comments reported in the McGraw Manor survey were:

- dogs running loose
- poor insulation around windows and doors
- slow response to maintenance work orders
- inadequate parking
- desire to change one way streets
- desire for shuttle bus service
- painting of quarters
- speeding vehicles
- desire for more M.P. patrols
- need for street lights
- pest control

Actions to alleviate the problems with pet control, work orders, speeding vehicles and M.P. patrols are:

- a full-time dog catcher has been established by Law Enforcement Command.
- a new telephone and computer system have been implemented by the Directorate of Facilities Engineers to increase responsiveness to work orders

- day and night use of radar by MPs began last month and more MP patrols became available in December when heavy off post commitments terminated.

Energy program

The Family Housing Division, Directorate of Facilities Engineering reports that bids on a 3.3 million dollar Energy Conservation Investment Program project to install storm windows and weather stripping around all exterior doors will be opened late this month.

Included in this project are all McGraw Manor family housing units. Units that have thermalpane windows installed upstairs will not have those windows replaced. Installation of the storm windows and weather stripping is expected to begin early this summer.

One thousand seventy two parking spaces are available in McGraw Manor for the 1065 privately owned motor vehicles, boats and trailers. A Family Housing Improvement Project for the McGraw Manor in the amount of 5.4 million dollars has been submitted to higher headquarters for approval.

Included in this project are additional parking spaces, street lighting and playground equipment. A project of this magnitude requires Congressional approval and must compete for priority and funding with other military installations throughout the Department of Defense.

Regulations restrict painting of quarters to once every three years. Painting cannot be accomplished strictly for cosmetic purposes but is intended to preserve the quarters in a sound condition.

Traffic survey

A comprehensive traffic survey of all streets on post will be conducted in the near future by the Military Traffic Management Command (MTMC), Newport News, Va. The one way streets in McGraw Manor will be reviewed by MTMC and their recommendations implemented.

Family Housing also reports that a shortage of funds has terminated spraying quarters with insecticide between occupancies. Entomology service is being provided to family quarters but will be performed only at occupant request.

Children learn not to go with strangers

Play tells of safety

Children from Frank Lloyd Elementary School have come up with a way to tell other kids what parents have been trying to explain for years.

"Kids Don't Ride With Strangers" is a musical skit designed to tell other children that getting into a car with someone that they don't know can be very dangerous.

Performed by members of the first and fourth grade, the children use songs and props to stress that children should not go anywhere with strangers. This particular theme was emphasized because it has been a problem for many years and is a very timely topic.

Directed by Jane O'Hern and Bernice C. Butterfield, the play has also been performed for the student's parents at Lloyds school at a recent Parent Teachers Association meeting. Teachers also got involved by portraying the part of the strangers.

Alimony tax deductible

People paying alimony to a former spouse are allowed to deduct it on their tax return. This is an adjustment to income and does not have to be itemized in order to claim the deduction. To claim this deduction, the person must be paying alimony due to a court order and making payments periodically.

and have the entire building sprayed at the same time.

The formula of the insecticide used by post engineers is the formula required by Army regulation, and the initial treatment will normally destroy adult insects. However, it is recommended that second treatment of insecticide be applied to rid the young insects that have hatched since the initial treatment.

Regulations prohibit the use of government transportation between domiciles and places of employment. They specifically state: "scheduled activity bus service will not be provided from quarters to work areas for - (1) officers residing in assigned quarters (bachelor officer quarters or family type). (2) Enlisted personnel residing with their families in family type quarters or other quarters converted for this purpose." Shuttle bus service will be provided to military dependents on scheduled routes when space is available and will be at no cost or inconvenience to the Government. It cannot be set up solely for dependents.

In a recent report to higher headquarters regarding the Federal Ridesharing Program, this installation recommend that regulations be revised or deviations be authorized to permit shuttle bus routes to include housing areas.

The information received from the housing survey has identified several areas where improvement is needed in order to provide Fort Benning families the safest, most satisfying assignment possible.

Advance pay aids PCS move

WASHINGTON--Soldiers going on a permanent change of station (PCS) may find they have additional expenses and not enough money to cover them. Both advance pay and advance travel allowance money can help personnel facing a PCS move.

Advance pay gives the soldier money to help meet added expenses caused by the move. Personnel are eligible to draw the pay when they receive PCS orders. It's limited to three months of base pay after deductions, according to Army finance officials. These deductions include taxes and Soldiers' Home and Soldiers' Group Life Insurance.

First, soldiers can get one month's pay at their old duty station and two month's at their new duty station.

Or, personnel may draw one month's while in transit to the new duty station and two months' on arrival at the new duty station.

Finally, soldiers may receive three months' at their new duty station.

Advance pay must be paid back within six or 12 months. The 12-month payback applies to either CONUS or overseas PCS moves when large expenses are involved or when repayment over a 6-month period would cause hardship.

Unit commanders can approve the 12-month collection period for overseas and for CONUS high-cost areas. Other areas need approval of the major command.

Personnel may also receive an advance travel allowance for the same PCS move. Only the service member can draw advance travel. Travel expenses of family members are reimbursed upon arrival. A soldier can receive the allowance only for the Permanent Change of Station. The advance allowance is paid by the losing duty station and is based partially on the distance between the losing and gaining units. As a rule, the allowance will be paid no earlier than 10 days before travel begins. (ARNews)

Shop foreman wears two hats

By Bill Walton

USAIC Public Affairs Office

"You get a good feeling when you help someone," says Charles Piper, Maintenance Division, Directorate of Industrial Operations, as he sums up his feelings about his role as an Equal Employment Opportunity Counselor (EEOC).

He is one of 18 EEOCs here, and in terms of service, one of the oldest, having performed this vital function for approximately 10 years.

The purpose of the EEOC is to establish an open and sympathetic channel through which employees may raise questions, discuss grievances, get answers and, on an informal basis, get resolutions of problems connected with equal employment opportunity.

The tasks of EEOCs are performed as additional jobs by full-time civilian employees throughout the post. They are normally appointed by the different directors for a minimum service of two years. According to Piper, it takes at least one year to become a qualified counselor.

After being selected as an EEOC, an individual receives one week's training in the basic counseling course in Atlanta. During the second year of counseling he or she receives another week's training in the advanced counseling course.

"The key to being a successful EEOC," says Piper, "is complete involvement in the problem just as soon as it surfaces." He has handled all types of complaints; age, sex, race, even a language related one. The majority of complaints that come to him are a reflection of the current economic situation and deal with promotions.

When he receives a complaint, he immediately talks to all concerned, from first-line supervisors to departmental directors, in an attempt to solve the individual's problem. He uses the whole chain of command at Fort Benning, if necessary, to find an informal solution to the complaints. Only after everyone in the chain of command has had an opportunity to resolve the problem, with negative results, is a formal complaint filed.

He was more than a bit apprehensive when notified that he had been selected to be a counselor. But as he gained experience, he realized what a good service he could provide to his fellow workers and really enjoys the counseling now.

The hardest thing to learn about being a good counselor was learning to "really listen" to another's problems, he said. The only real difficulty he has is that counseling sometimes interferes with his normal maintenance job and this makes it doubly hard. But he realizes that other employees like the

When you are repairing something as important as an electronic weapons system, a second opinion is often wise. idea of being able to explain a problem, real or imagined, to a fellow worker, so he does his best on each and every complaint.

Piper takes great pride in both his jobs at Fort Benning, electronics shop foreman and EEOC. He figures that counseling takes about 20 percent of his regular work hours. He averages six or seven complaints a year and has had an excellent success rate. Only five complaints that he has been involved with in his 10 years of counseling have not been resolved to the satisfaction of all concerned and required a formal complaint.

His primary job is electronics integrated systems foreman. He supervises 17 civilian and six military personnel who service and maintain electronics and missile equipment of Fort Benning, its satellites and selected Reserve units.

His personnel are divided into two distinctive groups, the electronic mechanics and the integrated systems mechanics. The first group services and repairs televisions, radios, communication systems at Martin Army Community Hospital, cameras, photo processing equipment, Beseler Cue/See Film Strip System, etc. The second group services and maintains the TOW, DRAGON and Red Eye missile systems, field artillery computers and the ground radar systems assigned to Fort Benning.

The most complicated line item his section works on is the M18 gun computer. They use some of the most modern equipment in the Army to work on these electronic weapons systems. It includes the Land Combat Support System, a computerized maintenance van used for trouble shooting and verifying functions.

As foreman, Piper is required to be "up to snuff" on all phases of electronics repair and this sometimes necessitates burning the midnight oil to stay abreast of developments in the electronic field.

He lives in Columbus with his wife, Lucile, and two daughters, Kecia, 15, and Pamela, 10. His hobbies include golf, he says he is a chronic slicer but has learned to live with it, and carpentry. He left the Army in 1966 after spending nine years as a radio repairman, giving him a good background in military equipment maintenance.

He started working as an electronic mechanic journeyman in maintenance division two years after his discharge from the Army and has been there since.

AER passing goals

The Army Emergency Relief fund drive is really making tremendous headway in the amount of contributions compared to last year.

With one sixth of the drive completed a total of $7,621 has been contributed. This reflects over 25 percent of last year's total.

According to Susan A. Rosebeck, AER officer here, this increase is due to service members being allowed to use payroll deductions through the allotment system for the first time. Active duty and retired personnel are now able to use this method. If you decide to make out an allotment, a minimum contribution of $3 is required - $1 per month for three months. However, smaller contributions are welcome and may be made by either cash or check to your unit AER officer. Your generous support is both encouraged and appreciated.

Doughboys bounce back to victory

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Doughboys, upset by the Fort Sill Cannoneers 77-76 victory in the first game of the finals, bounced back with a 79-60 victory to win the TRADOC Men's A Division basketball championship.

The Fort Gordon women's team shared honors with the Doughboys when they claimed the Women's Division championship going undefeated through the tourney. Gordon's girls defeated previously unbeaten Fort Jackson 69-36 Sunday and then went on to grab the title in a rematch with Jackson Monday, 59-48.

Fort Benning hosted this year's TRADOC Men's and Women's Division A championships March 6 through Monday and competed against teams from Forts Bliss, Dix, Gordon, Jackson, Knox, Leonard Wood and Sill.

Things didn't look good for the Doughboys during their first game against Sill. The Cannoneers dominated the boards in first-half action, taking a 41-34 halftime lead. The Doughboys fought hard for a comeback and in the final minutes of the second half, almost pulled through. Nate Harris, who led the Doughboys with 24 points, hit on a layup with 1:59 on the clock to put them only two points down, 69-67 before Sill came back to take a bigger margin on the free-throw line.

Then with 10 seconds left, Doughboy Mike Mack's layup narrowed the lead to only one point, 75-74. Sill was fouled and increased their lead by two on the charity line. Ken Warren's basket with one second left couldn't save the Doughboys. Other high-scorers for the Doughboys were Harry Lyons with 13 and Mack with 12. Also leading the Cannoneers was Ron McDaniel with 15.

According to Doughboy Coach Oliver Green, his team came out flat and overconfident in the first game. "But we got our heads together for the final game and came out with more determination," he commented. "It was a great effort and we hit the boards harder than we had during the whole tournament."

Going into the final game, the Doughboys' determination showed and they came out of the first half with a 35-32 lead. More of the players were connecting on their attempts and they never lost their lead; they just built it up to make it hard for Sill to catch up.

Harris again led the Doughboys with 19 points. Lyons remained in second high-scoring position with 16 and Mack put in 13. Robert Hooper and Ken Warren added 11 each to the victory. Fort Sill's high scorers were Ragland with 25, McDaniel with 18 and Layton with 10.

Fort Sill had come back to take second place after being defeated in their first game of play against Fort Bliss 88-84. While that was Sill's only loss until the finals, Bliss was downed their next two games to lose their place in tournament play. They were defeated by Fort Gordon 107-105, then by Leonard Wood 104-89. Fort Leonard Wood had defeated Fort Knox earlier 101-99 but were knocked out of the semi-finals by Fort Sill after losing 70-59.

Fort Gordon hung on until the semifinals when they were defeated first by the Doughboys 71-60, then by Fort Sill 88-64. Gordon has rolled over Fort Dix in their first game 103-70 and nabbed their second straight win 107-105 over Fort Bliss.

The Doughboys' loss to Sill was their first and last. They opened the tourney with a 91-78 victory over Fort Leonard Wood, then went on to defeat Fort Jackson 81-77 the next day. In semifinal action, the Doughboys defeated Gordon 71-60 before facing Sill in the finals.

An awards ceremony was held after the finals in Briant Wells Fieldhouse. Brig. Gen. Edward L. Trobaugh, assistant commandant of the United States Infantry School, presented the awards to the first and second place teams.

Fort Gordon's Karen Lindsey drives down court with the ball as Alicia Bell (14) guards a Fort Jackson player. Gordon defeated Jackson for the TRADOC Women's A Division basketball championship Monday.

Doughboy Nate Harris gets ready to pass while Fort Sill's Mike Layton watches closely. Harris led the Doughboys to a 79-60 victory over the Cannoneers to claim the TRADOC basketball championship.

Doughgirls lose in semi-finals

Although the Doughgirls didn't do as well as the men, they came back after losing 67-53 to Fort Knox and pulled out a 71-49 victory over Fort Sill. Benning's girls then missed their chance at semi-final action after being defeated by Fort Bliss 77-54.

In the game against Fort Sill, the score was tied 31-31 at the end of first half play, then the Doughgirls poured it on in the second half. They took the lead at 19:52 on the clock when Lisa Myers, game-high scorer with 25 points, snuck in a layup. From there on out they remained in control and didn't give up the lead.

Also leading the Doughgirls to victory were Gail Payton with 22 points, Shirley McCoy with 14 and Teresa Irving with 10. Sill's high-scorers were Deborah Washington with 18 and Patricia Jackson with 13. The game was Sill's second loss after they were defeated by Fort Jackson in the women's opener 78-36.

Women champs Fort Gordon made it to the finals after defeating Fort Leonard Wood 66-54, Fort Bliss 58-57 and Fort Jackson 69-36. Jackson faced Gordon again after defeating Fort Sill, Fort Knox 56-53 and Fort Leonard Wood 65-52.

In the championship game, both Gordon and Jackson started out slow on the scoring. Gordon's playing was a little more aggressive and they came out of the half with a 26-15 lead. Gordon never gave up their lead and Jackson's fouls were a big help. Alicia Bell connected on seven out of eight free-throws for a 13-point total second half and a game-high 15 points.

Other high-scorers for Fort Gordon were Gloria Snodgrass with 12 points and Gail Jackson with 10. Anita Jones added nine, including three for three on foul shots in the second half.

As years roll by things don't change

By Becky Bulgrin

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Talk about change! Not to mention the feeling that the years are flying by and age is catching up.

The feeling hit me with full-blown force as I remembered my first roller skating experience when I was a mere 10-years-old.

There I was with the rest of the Girl Scout troop, all of us giggling as we put on our skates and tried to stand up. Most of us got the hang of it rather quickly and by our fifth or so lap around the rink, managed to go around without holding onto the rails or falling on our knees. While my confidence for staying atop the little wheels grew, my bashfulness subsided and I shyly accepted an invitation from an equally shy boy for a "couples only" skate.

The music flowing from the speakers became a little softer and slower but my nervousness increased as I wished the song would hurry and end before I embarrassed myself by falling on my rump.

I was ready for a rest when an announcement was made that it was time to do the Hokey Pokey. Everyone formed a big circle in the middle of the rink. "The Hokey Pokey on skates!" I said to myself. "That sounds like fun." And I rolled onto the floor to join the rest of the crowd.

"You put your right foot in, you put your right foot out. . ." and on and on until we had shaken nearly every part of our bodies. It was surely one of the best parts of the adventure, but by the time we took off our skates I was certain I needed a new pair of feet and ankles to connect them to. Talk about swollen!

Now, 13 years later, I would be in for a big surprise.

As I walk into the skating rink the pulsating music alternating between disco and rock pounds through my head. "Was I in the right place?" Lights are flashing and the people look as if they're dressed for a night on the town. The man behind the counter hands me a pair of metallic gold skates and as I look at the people flying around the rink - twisting, turning and gyrating to the music, I'm ready to head for the back door.

"Hey baby, would you like to boogie?" Caught off guard, I nearly fall off my skates as I swing around and come face to face with a John Travolta look-a-like. "But, but, I came here to skate," I reply nervously. "Sure, that's what we're going to do," he laughs while turning circles on his silver metallics. Taking another look at the people bumping and bouncing on the rink, my knees begin to tremble and I hold onto the rail. John grabs my arm. "But I can't do that!" I squeak. "Sure you can. Remember Linda Blair in 'Roller Boogie?' Or how about the girls in 'Skatetown USA?'"

"No, I haven't seen either movie," I reply and wait for him to ask if I saw Linda Rondstadt's album where she's posing on skates and pouting prettily.

Finally out on the floor, I feel like I should be in the movie "Kansas City Bombers" as I try to dodge the other skaters. I breathe a sigh of relief as the night finally ends and while taking off my skates, I realize one thing. Not everything has changed. My feet are more swollen than ever and I need a new set of ankles!

Boxers back with wins

Fort Benning's boxers are still going strong after returning from the recent FORSCOM tournament at Fort Campbell, Ky., where they placed seventh out of 23 teams. The team traveled to Fort Stewart last weekend and brought home six victories, including a first-round knockout. Benning faced boxers from Jacksonville, Fla., Fort Stewart, Fort Gordon and Richmond, Va. in 11 bouts.

This was Henry McRae's first fight with Benning and he ended with a knockout. The 165-pounder put his Jacksonville opponent to the floor in the first round. Also "walking away" with victory in his first fight with the team was light-heavyweight Bruce Hollis.

Another first-time fighter for the team was Charles Terry at 119-pounds. He lost his bout by the judges' decisions. Boxing coach Anthony Stoddard said the fight was a conditioning experience for Terry.

According to Stoddard, Larry Golden displayed great boxing technique against Ulysses Martin, one of the best fighters in the Southeastern Conference.

Golden fought at 132-pounds and took a victory over Martin.

Winning by close decisions for Benning were Leonard Mooday at 125-pounds and flyweight Eric Mills. Greg Staten won his bout easily by using his reach, according to Stoddard.

The coach had to stop two of the Benning's bouts because of injuries. "I stopped William Gonzalez' fight in the third round because he had a bad bruise on his right eye," explained Stoddard. "I also put an end to Willie Shiver's fight in the second round because of an injury he received during workouts."

Benning's Jeffrey Johnson and Dwayne Edwards lost by close decisions. "Edwards' bout could have gone either way until his opponent threw him a blow which put a bad cut over his right eye," Stoddard explained.

The team will travel to Eufala, Ala. March 20 to face boxers from Eufala, Dothan, Ala. and Fort Rucker. The fights take place at the Lake Point Resort area at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $6 and $8 at the door.

Turkey season opening

Hunters will need permits

"Gobble, gobble."

Boom, whoosh, crack.

Shotguns, arrows and muzzle-loaders will soon be heard in the woods here again when spring turkey season opens later this month.

There is something new that hunters must have besides a Georgia big game license and a Fort Benning hunting permit. This year all hunters are required to obtain a Fort Benning Turkey Permit and Hunter Report from Morale Support Activities in Crain Hall (Bldg. 229).

The purpose of the permit-report is to collect data on the wild turkey population, number of turkeys harvested and number of hunters. All hunters over 16 years of age must have this permit-report in their possession while hunting and they must return them to morale support within 14 days after the season ends.

Hunters are reminded that 1980-81 post permits and Georgia licenses expire on March 31 this year.

Dates, limits and weapons

Turkey season opens in Alabama on March 20 and in Georgia March 21. The Alabama season ends April 25 and the Georgia season ends May 3.

The bag limit is one bearded gobbler per hunter for the entire reservation.

Shotguns with number two shot or smaller, muzzle-loading rifles, long bows and compound bows are the only weapons hunters may use to hunt turkeys.

Hunter conduct

Before hunters enter any area on post to hunt they must be sure to check the range clearance maps at Range Control (Bldg. 2621) or the Provost Marshal's office (Bldg. 215) or the Fish & Wildlife Branch (Bldg. 5884) to be sure the area that they want to hunt in is open for hunting.

Care should be taken to close gates and not to knock down fences.

Hunters must always be safety conscious and conserve the preservation of the place they hunt.

Signs and buildings are not to be used for target practice. Anyone caught doing so will lose post hunting and fishing privileges permanently.

Title song Oscar bound

Comedy features Dolly Parton

By Bill Powell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Nine to Five" is a story about a chauvinistic, egotistical, conniving, thieving, womanizing boss of a corporation department and the people who work for him, especially the secretaries. Lilly Tomlin portrays a senior administrative assistant whose efficiency doesn't lead to promotion. Dolly Parton portrays the boss' secretary and ungrateful recipient of his amorous attentions. Jane Fonda plays the new secretary in the office seeking to find herself after her divorce. All have one thing in common, they've all been messed over by the boss.

After one particularly bad session with the boss all three go to Parton's apartment for a pot party. And by pot I don't mean Tupperware. After they've gotten their highs they tell their fantasies about how to get even with the boss.

The problem begins when one thinks she's accidentally carried out her fantasy of poisoning her boss the next day.

"Nine to Five" features credible acting and direction. It's the story that provides the problems. It was just too unreal to believe. Ignoring that the story is improbable, it is quite enjoyable. Lilly Tomlin proves she can handle any material with very little problem. Jane Fonda was a major actress before this movie, but of the three she wasn't really as good as the others. I saved Dolly Parton for last because she did the best job of acting and was the high point of the movie. Her acting was unaffected and down to earth.

"Nine to Five" is a fun movie if you don't look for reality in a story. The animation in the fantasies was good and the title song is nominated for an Academy Award for Best Song. I give "Nine to Five" three stars.

Marijuana weakens body's defenses

PLEASANTVILLE, N.Y. — Acute chest pains, certain respiratory conditions and short-term memory loss — symptoms normally associated with middle and old age — are being reported by youngsters smoking marijuana.

Dr. Ingrid Lantner, a pediatrician in Cleveland, Ohio, is one of the specialists quoted in a marijuana alert published in the November Reader's Digest: "Many pediatricians, and I am one of them, are convinced marijuana is the single most dangerous health hazard facing American youth today."

And American youth is heavily involved with pot. Peggy Mann, author of The Digest article, writes: "The latest (1979) National High School Senior Survey shows that not only does one out of 10 12th-graders smoke pot daily, but these daily users now average 3½ joints a day, and 13 percent of them smoke more than seven joints daily. Of the 51 percent who smoked pot at all during their senior year, 43 percent said they usually stay high three to six hours or more."

One problem is the complexity of the chemical structure of pot. Most drugs of abuse — LSD, cocaine, alcohol, etc. — are single chemicals. Mann reports that there are 61 cannabinoids in pot that have been identified so far, of these, only a handful have been studied. "Recent research documents that marijuana smoking is harmful to the entire pulmonary tree, ranging from the sinus cavities to the deepest recesses of the lungs," she writes. "(It) may be even more injurious to lungs than tobacco smoke and its symptoms may strike faster."

Can pot cause lung cancer? A 1971-74 study compared an unfiltered cigarette with a marijuana joint. (At the time, the potency of street pot was much lower than it is today.) In many respects the contents were similar, but some carcinogens were present in marijuana smoke in amounts 50 to 70 percent greater than in the tobacco counterpart.

In addition to affecting the pulmonary apparatus, marijuana overstimulates the heart, increases blood pressure and weakens the heart muscle's pumping action. Chief of cardiovascular research at the University of California at Irvine, Dr. Wilbert S. Aronow, has been studying the effect of pot on heart patients. "Not only could marijuana precipitate a heart attack or cause sudden death in patients with known coronary disease," he concludes, "but people who might have subclinical heart disease — without symptoms — could also be taking a risk."

Marijuana also weakens the body's defense system. A study conducted at Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons tested pot smokers against two groups with known depressed immune systems: kidney transplant patients, who receive medication to suppress the immune system, and cancer patients. While the kidney-transplant patients showed the highest impairment of body defense response, pot smokers ran neck and neck with the cancer patients in terms of their inability to resist disease.

Sex offense study points out dangerous situations

By Don Rhodes
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Criminal Investigation (CID) unit recently completed a study of sex offenses here.

The results of the study, if heeded, may help women reduce their chances of becoming victims by steering clear of dangerous situations.

The sex offenses analyzed happened during a 24-month period from Jan. 1, 1979 to Dec. 31, 1980. Sex offenses analyzed were rape, attempted rape, indecent assault and bigamy - adultery.

According to the report, during 1980 there were 23 sex offenses, an increase, compared to the 16 in 1979.

Reasons for the increase are not really clear but according to the report, could be due to a greater awareness and willingness to report incidents to the military police because of an increased crime prevention effort.

Population increases may also have some influence on the increase, according to the report.

Statistics reveal that about half the victims met their assailant just hours prior to the criminal act, and had in most cases, voluntarily accompanied their soon to be assailant.

In most cases the victim met her assailant in a public location off post and was transported on post where the assault occurred.

A little more than half of the assaults took place in remote areas on post or in public areas, and a little less than half occurred in government quarters or billets.

The report also showed that the majority of sex offenses occurred between midnight and 6 a.m. on Saturdays, Sundays and Mondays during spring and summer months.

The average age of the victims was 22. But the report adds that the victims ranged in age from a five-year-old child who was indecently assaulted to a 41-year-old woman.

The victims were military family members, service members and some were civilians with no connection to Fort Benning other than they were transported here where the offense then took place.

According to the report, weapons, forcible kidnapping and strong-arm methods were used in some of the assaults.

The majority of assailants and their victims were not using drugs or alcohol at the time of the offenses according to the report.

A law enforcement agent here said that indecent assault can range from tearing off a woman's clothes to touching her indecently without her consent.

According to CID officials there were a high number of false reports during 1980 but each reported case was thoroughly investigated.

The report states that the false complaints were made by the "victim" with the intention of gaining sympathy or arousing jealousy in a spouse or boyfriend.

According to CID officials, the increase in sex offenses took place in the first nine months of 1980. Figures for 1981 show that there have been two indecent assaults so far.

The Fort Benning Hunt Club offers recreation at a relatively cheap charge for people looking to enjoy themselves after work or on weekends. For information on how you can enjoy a leisurely ride through the woods of Fort Benning, see the story on page 16.

Burdens learned from history

WASHINGTON — The 120th anniversary of one of America's most important historic events will be celebrated next month. It was on April 12, 1861 that the Civil War began when confederate artillery bombarded Fort Sumter in the harbour of Charleston, S.C.

Thus began a bloody war which claimed more than 600,000 lives. The figures don't seem large compared to the losses suffered by all sides during World War II. But the population of the United States was only 33 million at the time.

Today, we have a population almost 7 times as large as we had 100 years ago. If 600,000 is multiplied by 7, the result is 4.2 million. This helps put the tragic losses of the Civil War — or war between the states — into perspective.

The wounds of the Civil War were slow to heal. In fact, it has taken about 120 years for the scars to disappear. This is not to say that we don't have regional rivalries, but the differences today are not likely to lead to armed conflict. We have made peace with ourselves, which is no small accomplishment for our Nation-Continent.

The Civil War lasted more than 4 years, but the nation survived to rebuild its cities and repair its moral foundations.

It would be inappropriate to say that the war was a good thing for the nation, but we cannot overlook the monumental sacrifices Americans made to defend their sacred values.

The lesson is that our generation must shoulder the burdens that were carried by our fathers and earlier generations. It is a privileged burden.

Many of our military installations in the United States are near battlefields of our earlier wars. It is not a bad idea to visit these battlefields. After all, a portion of those battlefields belong to each of us. It is a good idea occasionally to look at the land now ours to defend.

Soldiers overseas have a similar opportunity. A free world is a healthy thing to behold. (ARNews)

Self defense can protect women

To the Editor: In response to the Sheriff's Target article on rape in the March 13th BAYONET, I would like to say that it was a good article until I read where the article said not to choose an exotic sounding self defense course like Judo, Tae Kwon Do, or Kung Fu.

That statement really shows how much people know about the Martial Arts, and that statement is typical.

First — What is so exotic sounding about Judo, Tae Kwon Do, or Kung Fu (correct spelling is Gung Fu)?

What does the name of a martial art have to do with choosing a form of self defense? It's not the name that counts, it's what the martial art has to offer someone and the aim of the art. The name means nothing.

To do what was suggested, to take a "course" that should be brief enough to make "full use" of it within a month or two, is totally assinine. How can anyone learn self defense well enough in a month or two when it took years and years to develop?

How can anyone learn within a month or two where and how to strike, how to use techniques against someone who has grabbed them from behind or from the front, in a choke, pinned against a wall or ground, against multiple attackers, with a weapon, etc? To learn a technique is easy, but to master it, to be able to use it just on reaction is hard.

Usually, a technique used on the street is the result of reaction. If one has to think about what to use on the street to defend himself or herself, it will probably be too late to use.

To be able to respond in any given situation with any technique takes practice, practice and practice, and it can't be done in one or two months.

To learn self defense properly, there is NO shortcut. I have been teaching martial arts for 20 years and hold three black belts in Judo, Karate (Shito-Ryu) and Aikido. Many times on the streets I just had to react in a situation. I didn't have time to think what I was going to do. It was just there when I needed it.

If someone takes a one or two month "self defense" course, they are probably throwing away their money, time and possibly their life should they ever have to rely on their "knowledge" of the Martial Arts in a self defense situation.

To take a "quickie" course, one will be taught quick, learn quick and forget quick on the street. Time and practice are essential in learning and developing any worthwhile technique.

If Judo sounds "exotic," come to my class at Kimbro Gym, 6:30-8 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays and you'll see how exotic my class is.

At Kimbro Gym on Tuesday and Thursday there is also Chinese Goju classes from 6:30 - 8 p.m. too.

Check us out if you really want to learn self defense the right way, not quick.

Prevention, priority for ITB units

A large American chemical corporation's television commercials proclaim that its workers are safer on the job than at home. Factories and companies frequently employ safety officials who work full-time to protect workers from accidents or injuries.

The Army is no different. In fact, most installations and posts have more than one safety officer.

Here, six civilian post safety liaisons share their post-wide responsibilities with numerous unit safety officers.

Lynn C. Clements, one of the safety liaisons, and 1st Lt. William E. Wood, 1st Infantry Training Brigade safety officer, can be proud of their safety accomplishments.

The 1st Infantry Training Brigade, which includes 110 square miles, over 9,500 soldiers, 39 training companies and a headquarters company, recorded only 20 injuries in the first quarter of fiscal year 1981.

During the same period, 24 companies in the 1st Infantry Training Brigade and two whole battalions, the 3rd and the 8th, were totally accident free.

On March 12 the two battalions and 24 companies each received Department of the Army certificates for their excellent safety records. Clements also received a certificate.

The awards were presented for outstanding performance in brigade safety and accident prevention programs.

1st Lt. Wood said safety is one of the top priorities in the 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

"We have monthly inspections. We check the training programs and go to the training areas. We make certain the obstacles are sound. Frayed ropes are replaced and exposed or hazardous nails are removed," he said.

"We also have annual safety inspections. Some of the items we check for are faulty electrical outlets, water on floors and in doorways. Another reason we had an accident-free slate is our very strong cold weather and heat casualty prevention program. We even hold classes for our cadre so they can spot potential hot weather injuries."

DEERS pushes enrollments here

The Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System (DEERS) enrollment office here is starting an intensified push during the last few weeks in March.

The push is to ensure all eligible family members of active and retired servicemen are enrolled in the system.

Retired soldiers and surviving spouses of deceased soldiers should have received enrollment packets in the mail by now. Those who haven't received packets and those who haven't enrolled their family members should check with the enrollment office at 545-1227 or stop by the office in Bldg. 83.

The Infantry Board has enrolled 100 percent and the Medical Department Activity has enrolled 96 percent at last count, according to the DEERS enrollment officials.

On guard

Duty trains soldiers for future fears

Story and photos By Brian Adams
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Imagine yourself in a foreign country in the middle of a war. You are in a rear echelon unit not involved directly in combat.

Imagine you're a company clerk with an Adjutant General company and you've just been put on guard.

It's 2 a.m. and you have just replaced the first relief. Will you remember what to do?

"I sure hope the relief gets here on time," your buddy says as you make your way around the ammo dump.

"What do you mean," you ask. "We just came on duty 20 minutes ago and the third relief isn't due for another two hours."

"I know," comes the reply. "But this place gives me the creeps, besides, I haven't been able to get any sleep since we arrived in this country."

As you round the corner a noise off to the left freezes your conversation and movement.

"Halt, who is there?" you say in a voice only the unknown person can hear. No answer comes from the darkness as both you and your buddy freeze in your tracks.

Halt, Who is there?" you say a second time.

"Friend!" says the voice in the darkness.

"Advance to be recognized," you say.

As the unidentified person nears you, you again command him to "Halt!" But he isn't stopping.

"Halt!" you say for the third time. Still no reaction.

"Get into the prone position," you say.

In a low clear voice you say - "Boston" - challenging the man you now realize is Sgt. Black, the sergeant of the guard.

"Rainbow" comes the reply.

Sgt. Black picks himself up from the prone position after being told to do so and comes toward you.

As the sergeant of the guard it is his responsibility to check on the sentinels and their performance while on duty. You wonder, "Did I do it right?"

Satisfied with the results Sgt. Black moves on toward the next guard position to see if there might be a security violation there.

"Boy what a trip," says your buddy. "And this is supposed to be the rear area."

"Isn't that the truth," you reply. "Gee, if it's this bad on the inside, I wonder how Charlie is doing on the outside with that exterior roving patrol?"

"I know," says your buddy. "Just think, he has another seven hours left out there before he gets relieved."

In war, the role of guard, interior or exterior, is to be the lookout, the sentinel, the vanguard of those that dwell within the walls of the security provided by them.

In peace it is necessary to practice and continue to be proficient at what we do when it comes time to use our basic military knowledge, i.e. "Guard Duty."

A soldier insures his weapon is clean before going on guard duty.

Sgt. Rivera, assistant sergeant of the guard, inspects soldiers of the 43rd Company, 4th Student Battalion, The School Brigade, prior to a formal Guard Mount.

11 airlines extend discounts for troops past March 31

WASHINGTON — Several of the nation's airlines are doing their part to support national defense by giving soldiers an extended break.

The program of 50 percent discount furlough fares, due to end March 31, 1981, has been extended by 11 airlines. And, Air New England, a Boston-based airline serving New York, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine and Ohio has just joined the program, according to an official of the U.S. Army Military Traffic Management Command.

Republic, Delta, Eastern, Aspen, Western, Braniff and Piedmont have extended their discounts indefinitely. TWA, Continental and Ozark have extended theirs to Sept. 30, 1981, and U.S. Air has chosen Feb. 28, 1982, as its cut-off.

Continental and Braniff discounts apply to selected routes only, but the other airlines offer the rate on all domestic flights.

Airlines not taking part in the program continue to offer the standard 25-percent military discount.

To qualify for the discount, soldiers must be on leave and traveling at their own expense within the continental United States. Discount fares are available only to active duty personnel with green identification cards; they exclude family members, reservists, National Guard members and retirees. (ARNews)

Korea commissaries open to all ranks

WASHINGTON — Life as a low-ranking soldier in Korea is hard enough without being told you can't shop at the commissary.

Now, thanks to a recent policy change, all ranks of military personnel soon will be shopping at commissaries throughout the eighth U. S. Army.

Previously, shopping privileges were limited to E-7's and above plus E-6's and below with command-sponsored family members. This was due not to any form of class distinction but instead as an adjustment to the realities of limited size and number of existing facilities.

Plans are underway to change all that, say

Department of the Army (DA) logistics officials.

It'll take time, of course — because of the sheer magnitude of serving 20,000 troops and some of their families. In the 2nd Infantry division alone, there are over 2,500 non-command-sponsored family members. The long travel time to the main commissary in Yongsan poses an added hardship.

But relief is on the way. A program of annex construction and main-store alteration will see full commissary privileges for all ranks.

The first phase — the sales of cigarettes to all personnel — began on March 1. Customer response has been highly favorable.

If all goes well between now and the end of June, Camps Edwards, Stanley, and Casey will see the opening of annexes.

Officials caution that the new annexes will have limited stockage and limited operating hours. Items most in demand — e.g., health/beauty aids, snacks, soft drinks, tobacco products — will be the basics for the annexes.

For the junior enlisted soldier with a family, the new open-door policy represents "another step toward improving the quality of life for those on Korean assignment," a DA official commented. (ARNews)

Heat season ends

The heating season officially ends today. Air-conditioning in quarters will be delayed to help conserve energy. The date will be announced later in the BAYONET when the air-conditioning season will begin. Until then people are allowed to use any air-moving or ventilating equipment, such as fans.

Overseas troops get more money

WASHINGTON — Soldiers stationed in Korea or Europe now have another reason for staying there a little longer. Besides enjoying a favorable exchange rate for the dollar overseas and having the chance to live and work in a foreign land. Certain soldiers who choose to lengthen their stay now are getting more money from the Army.

Service members who extend their oversea tours for at least one year beyond their normal tour length and work in certain specialty areas can now be paid a special extension incentive bonus, according to Department of the Army (DA) officials. The special pay and rest and recuperative absence program, which began March 1, also allows these soldiers the option of either of two R&R absence provisions in place of the extension bonus money.

DA officials say the new program is part of legislation passed by Congress last year. Public law 96-579, formally known as the Military Pay and Allowances Benefits Act of 1980, also includes a program of optional basic allowance for quarters for senior non-commissioned officers, warrant and junior commissioned officers. It also allows service members on long operational deployment tours to save up to 90 days' leave time.

The special program, officials say, is designed to improve personnel retention by providing longer turn-around time in the United States between oversea assignments. The program will also promote stabilization of personnel stationed in the U.S. and should improve the state of unit readiness, add officials.

Eligible soldiers who extend their normal oversea tour for at least a year can choose one of the following options under the program:

- $50 per month for the period of extension;
- 30 days' R&R absence; or
- 15 days' R&R absence and space-required travel from the location of the extended tour of duty to the nearest CONUS port and return.

Officials explain the 15-day or 30-day R&R absence options must be taken in consecutive days. Also, if the service member is eligible for all three options, he must select which option is wanted at the time the extension request is submitted.

Under the program, a soldier stationed in Korea or Europe would be eligible if he —

- Is entitled to base pay;
- Has a specialty that is included in the program;
- Has completed a tour of duty in either Korea or Europe; and
- Signs an agreement to extend that tour for a 1-year period or more.

Deaths, injuries result

Wires on kites shock children

A boy was knocked unconscious for 15 minutes, his hands burned and all because he used a fine radio wire as a string for his kite.

Two small children were burned attempting to "rescue" a kite from an overhead wire. These are typical cases as recorded by the National Safety Council.

Kites have been around for centuries. Some of its various uses have been to raise weather instruments in the air, to measure humidity and wind speed for weather observations. Kites have also been used to carry lifelines to sailors aboard ships in distress and to carry suspension cables across rivers.

Today, kites are very popular to both children and adults. Unfortunately, many youngsters are killed and injured every year by trying to retrieve their kites from trees and utility poles. This doesn't have to happen.

Service members who meet eligibility requirements for the program and were serving on an extension as of Dec. 31, 1980, are also eligible for the extension incentives benefits, but with certain differences. Soldiers in this category should contact their local military personnel office for detailed information, officials say.

According to officials, here are the 37 military occupational skills presently included in the program: 05D, 05H, 05K, 12E, 15D, 15J, 16B, 16D, 16E, 21G, 21L, 22N, 23U, 24G, 24K, 24U, 5L, 26R, 26V, 31T, 32D, 32G, 34C, 34E, 34F, 34H, 35F, 35H, 45N, 46N, 55G, 55Z, 72G and 98G. (ARNews)

When flying a kite select an open area such as a park or school yard, away from electric wires, streets and buildings. Only fly kites in dry weather and when the winds are not too choppy, so you are able to control it.

To make a safe kite, first draw a sketch of the one you plan to construct. Sketch out its size, shape, length of sticks, cover, bridle (the top portion of the kite that controls the movement) and decorations. Advance planning helps to achieve a well-balanced, high-flying kite and keeps you and your kite out of trouble.

Use materials of sufficient strength, such as a color plastic sheet and cellophane tape. Never use metal in place of wood or plastic sticks. Use string, never wire or tinsel cord.

Kite flying can be fun, but only when you use safety.

Project COHORT strengthens union of unit soldiers

WASHINGTON — It's hard to break strong bonds — and the Army wants to make it even harder.

Under a new stick-together approach called "project COHORT," the Army hopes to strengthen the bonds between soldiers and their units. In Army terms, "COHORT" stands for cohesion, operational readiness and training.

Plans call for soldiers in selected companies and batteries to take basic, advanced and unit training together and be assigned as a unit to a division based in the Continental United States (CONUS).

Several of the "COHORT" units will see duty overseas when they finish their CONUS tour.

In its formative stages the project was called the Company Replacement Package (C-REP), according to Department of the Army officials.

The first "COHORT" unit becomes reality Wednesday at Fort Knox, Ky., when 61 tankers begin three years of training and service together. The remaining 18 test companies will form between March 1981 and February 1982. Officials will be looking at the project to see if this new approach in forming units can and should be expanded.

Seeds of life can't be rushed

By William W. Erbach
36th Engineer Group chaplain

I want to tell you a story of two young kids who participated in an experiment. I don't know if this story is true, but like the parables in the Bible it has a point to make and therefore is worth hearing.

Jill and Kevin were given a couple of seeds to plant, I think they were bean seeds. Each had a box at the school and they were to water and tend the seeds to see how long it would take them to grow. They prepared the soil, planted the seeds, watered them well and then came the hard part. They had to wait.

Now Kevin and Jill could hardly wait to see the seeds sprout. They ran to the boxes several times the first day to see if they had sprouted, but nothing happened. During the night Kevin just knew that his had sprouted and even before school started he was there to see what had happened overnight. Jill's box was the same so he just sighed. Waiting was hard. Now on the third day, Kevin decided to poke in the pot to see what was happening under the dirt. He tried to talk Jill into doing the same thing too, but she wouldn't do it.

On the fourth day Kevin dug up his seed again. It had split open and when he poked at it broke off the tiny green shoot that was trying to come forth. Quickly he buried the seed and again he tried to talk Jill into digging up her seed. No go. On the fifth day they all looked and sure enough out of Jill's box several green shoots were seen, but there was nothing from Kevin's. On the sixth day more and more would show, but still nothing in Kevin's. By the seventh day all of Jill's beans were up, but none of Kevin's and he knew why, because he had been impatient. How about that?

Many of us are like Kevin. We are too impatient to have our way about things. We go poking around where we shouldn't and don't give things enough time to develop and run their course. Some things can be and should be hurried, like in an emergency, but very little in our lives are emergencies. Patience is a virtue which seems to be in rather short supply.

Expected to fill specialty shortages

Reserve recall program approved

WASHINGTON — A voluntary recall program for Reserve Component officers has been approved by the Secretary of the Army, according to U. S. Army military personnel center officials.

The program is an exception to the policy of AR 135-210, which bans recalling RC officers who cannot complete 10 years' active commissioned service by the time they complete 20 years' active federal service.

The program is expected to fill the Army's specialty shortages in the rank of captain, officials say.

RC officers are eligible for reactivation provided they—

- Hold the rank of captain in either the U. S. Army Reserve or Army National Guard;
- Have completed an extended active duty tour as a commissioned officer;
- Are qualified in a selected specialty shortage; and
- Are otherwise eligible for recall.

RC officers may apply for active duty under this program in accordance with AR 135-210. Applications should be submitted to: Commander, MILPERCEN, Attn: DAPC-OPP-P, 200 Stovall St., Alexandria, Va. 22332.

Applicants should state that the application is an exception to the 10/20 rule.

Officers recalled will be kept on active duty beyond mandatory release dates to complete 10 years' active commissioned service, unless separated for other reasons.

Applicants may not apply under the program for initial appointment with concurrent active duty.

Officers with no previous EAD commissioned experience are also ineligible. Retired military personnel are also excluded from consideration.

The program will end on Sept. 30, 1982, officials say. More information is available at local military personnel offices.

Awards program

A new awards program has begun to recognize outstanding instructors at the United States Army Infantry School.

Each month an officer, a senior NCO and a junior NCO will be selected as Instructor of the Month. These instructors will go on to compete for Instructor of the Quarter and Instructor of the Year. The winners will receive certificates of achievement and plaques.

This program, which has lain dormant for some time, is being reinstated under the direction of Maj. Gen. David E. Grange Jr., post commander.

"The departments nominate the instructors and they are then evaluated by TRADEP, Training and Development Program," said Capt. James D. Moudy, TRADEP.

The Instructors of the Month for January were Capt. Thomas P. Ryan, Weapons, Gunnery and Maintenance Department, SFC Thornton Pratcher, Airborne Department, and Sgt. Michael E. Lovell, Weapons and Gunnery Maintenance Division.

The instructors for February are Capt. Michael L. Wolfe, Command and Tactics, SFC Paul Cfhaney, Weapons and Gunnery Maintenance and Sgt. Rnny L. Carter, NCOSI.

USACC reenlistments

Maj. Neil Young, a Reserve Officer from Springfield, Minn., on active duty for training with USACC-Fort Benning reenlisted two USACC service members on March 5. Sp4 Steven S. Kennedy, and Sp5 James A. Estes each reenlisted for six years. Both service members had recently been promoted, and Maj. Young presented them promotion certificates. Lt. Col. Edward Lee, the Commander and only commissioned officer assigned to USACC-Fort Benning was on leave and unavailable to administer the oath of reenlistment.

Male myths contribute to rapes

PFC Joe is a 19-year-old armorer assigned to the 11th Field Support Company here. He is intelligent, hard working, respected by his superiors and due for promotion at the end of the month. Joe has been dating Sp4 Mary, the unit's clerk, for the past couple of weeks. She is 20, cute, dresses seductively when off duty and is tagged as a "tease." Joe knows that she likes him and can't understand why she won't let him do any more than kiss her. Last night, on their fourth date, Joe drank one too many beers and forced himself on Mary by threatening her with a pocket knife. Mary reported the rape and Joe was apprehended by the military police this morning. Everyone in the unit is shocked: Mary was always "asking for it," she wasn't "hurt" so why is she picking on "good old" Joe?

I'm sure you have heard stories similar to this before. Most of what you have heard has been based on myths about rape which many males believe, but which are just plain wrong. This week's article will focus upon traditional male sexual myths that contribute either directly or indirectly to the occurrence of rape.

Act of sex. Rape is not an act of sex but an act of violence in which a sex act is used as a tool by the rapist to hurt and humiliate the victim. Rapists usually do not like or respect women; they instead regard them as objects, second class citizens, and inferior.

Impulsive act. The myth of rape as an impulsive act by a male uncontrollably excited by a woman is built out of the idea of rape as a sex act. Most rapists plan the rape. The victim is merely in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Col. Ward
Provost Marshal

Clothing. The clothes a woman wears does not contribute to her being a victim when the clothes are considered by some to be "provocative." A rapist looks for a vulnerable, passive victim without regard to the "provocativeness" of her attire.

Brutality and rape. In the past, a woman had to prove she had been beaten into submission in order to prove her claim of being raped. The old myth still persists that a woman cannot be raped if she really fights it. Although brutality can be a part of rape — coercion and fear are equally effective in accomplishing a rape. The difference in conditioning of men and women in our society is often not considered. The presence of a weapon, the threat of death or just the intimidation of a person who has been conditioned to believe she is weaker than the male can terrify a woman into becoming a victim of rape.

Most rapists are strangers to the victim. Most rape victims know their attackers, and it is believed most rapes that go unreported are of this nature. These rapes are especially hard to prosecute since the victim realizes that the validity of her accusation will be questioned when it is established that she knew the rapist. Sometimes the acquaintance will be a casual one, in which the woman becomes just trusting enough to allow the man into her apartment to "use the phone," or "get a drink of water." Or it may be a man the woman met at a party or bar, and who seemed very "nice" prior to the attack.

'Rape is impossible unless a woman wants it.' A gun placed to the head or a knife to the throat by an individual who is twice as big or strong can get anyone's attention.

Other myths include: 'she asked for it'; 'only stupid or loose women are raped'; 'women like pain, being dominated and secretly fantasize about rape'; and 'she's a teaser who deserved what she got.' If a man asks and the answer is 'no,' it is better to believe it and not push the matter than to end up sorry later on.

The penalties for rape can be very severe. Rape can be punished by death. Assault with the intent to commit rape may be punished by forfeiture of all pay and allowances, confinement at hard labor not to exceed 20 years, and a dishonorable discharge.

Support the Rape Prevention Campaign here. Take a stand on the position that rape is a crime of violence, and that neither rape nor sexual assault have any place in the military community. Remember the commanding general's guidance in last week's BAYONET, "Soldiers should help Soldiers".

Courts martial

Pvt. 2 Morris L. Wilson, Battery A, 2nd Battalion, 10th Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, was tried on March 12 and found guilty of one count AWOL. He was sentenced to confinement at hard labor for 45 days, forfeiture of $250 a month for two months and detention for six months.

PFC Sylvester Prioleau, Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, was tried on March 11 and found guilty of one count larceny (he stole two boxes of grenade ammunition.) He was sentenced to confinement at hard labor for three months, forfeiture of $334 a month for three months and reduction to E-1.

Childhood experiences help top MP

Robert Howard wasn't a little monster when he was growing up on the streets of Indianapolis, but he wasn't a little saint either.

Now, as a Military Policeman (MP) working in the juvenile section of the Provost Marshal's Office here, his childhood experiences help him relate to the kids of Fort Benning.

"I used to be just like they are," he said. "I used to go out and break windows and I was even involved in shoplifting." But that all ended for him when he got caught.

"I saw the look on my mother's face when she came to pick me up," he said. "After that I went the opposite direction."

His trip down the right path landed Robert in the Army about six years ago.

"I didn't go to school for the MOS," he said. "I learned most of what I know through correspondence courses."

After On the Job Training in his new MOS, Howard went to Korea.

"I did road work with the Highway Patrol," he said. "After that I returned here and went to Dog Handlers School."

"After dog School I chose the juvenile section, because I like working with kids. I see a lot of things. I'm not trying to be a kid's father, but I can recognize many things that parents don't do for their kids," said Howard.

Recently selected as the Military Policeman of the Year, Howard believes that the problem comes from a lack of concern on the part of some parents.

"You know they say to the kid, Hey go outside and have some fun," Howard said. "So they go out on the streets and do just about what they want to. There's a big problem with that on this post. We often find kids out doing various things they aren't supposed to."

Howard is the son of Mr. Albert and Geneva Howard of Indianapolis. Howard is single and recently started preaching the gospel.

"I want to get married; I want a son," he said. "But a preacher's wife has to be strong. I believe the good Lord will provide me with a wife when the time comes."

He became a preacher last September after attending church for a few months with a friend.

For being named MP of the year, Howard received a Certificate of Achievement from the post commander and the Law Enforcement command, a Letter of Commendation from Maj. Gen. David E. Grange, Jr. and a plaque from the Law Enforcement Command.

He was also treated to a dinner at the Columbus Exchange Club where he and other Law Enforcement members were given plaques and a check for $250.00.

Rape isn't just women's problem

Despite what some men think, no woman wants to be raped. Too often, rape is thought of as strictly a woman's problem.

There are several reasons for this misconception. Since rape victims are women, men may not feel personally threatened and thus not personally concerned.

A number of locker-room myths, long disproven, continue the fiction that rape is often stimulated or welcomed by the victim. Rape, physically and emotionally painful, is among the most feared of all violent crimes. Only in dirty movies, sleazy magazines and in the minds of rapists and those who tolerate rapists do some women want to be raped.

Suspicious that the victim may be in some way guilty, often leads to the false assumption that it's her problem by many men. The victim however, may not have put up strenuous resistance because she is afraid, not because she consented. Traditionally, women have been cautioned against violent resistance because of the risk of death or serious injury.

Statistics do show, however, that rape attempts are completed less often when the woman does resist. While the risks should not be ignored, there is no longer unanimous agreement that strenuous resistance results in death or serious injury.

A woman does not bring rape on herself. There is little connection between seductive dress or behavior and a woman's selection as a rape victim. The rapist is often driven by hostility, not sex appeal.

Even in these modern times too many men still hold distorted attitudes about a man's right to a woman's body. Both legally and morally, a woman has the right to say no, regardless of anything that has gone on before.

You don't have to be a rapist to be part of the problem. By repeating these old stories — secretly every woman wants to be taken by force; or by telling tired jokes about rape — such as when the rape is inevitable, lie back and enjoy it — you help continue the misconception that rape is something other than what it is, a brutal, violent crime.

A tolerant or apathetic attitude toward rape can provide a setting that makes rape more likely to occur and the rapist is more likely to go unpunished.

Rapist

'Typical' sex offender doesn't exist

The main thing to know about the "typical" rapist is that he doesn't exist.

A rapist might fit the popular stereotype—being obviously abnormal, crouching in a dark alley, wearing a ski mask—but it's more probable that he looks like the man next door.

Studies consistently find that the average rapist does not differ much from the average non-rapist in appearance or everyday actions.

Common stereotypes often paint the typical rapist as obviously "sick," as driven by an unsatisfied sex urge, or as an overly masculine, domineering individual.

In reality, he may be none of these. Sick, yes — but he is rarely the wild psychopath imagined in popular belief. Most rapists have access to regular sex relations. Many of them are even married.

Rapists are frequently overly-aggressive men, but they are more likely to have problems of social or sexual inadequacy than they are to be extremely masculine. The urge they satisfy with rape is a need to dominate, hurt, and humiliate.

Sex is only the weapon, not the controlling drive.

Horse fever catches on

By Dave Bristow
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Beautiful horses — a Tennessee walker, a morgan, arabians and even an appaloosa — are galloping along as their riders take the horses for their daily exercise.

You might think this could only take place in the green lands of Kentucky or somewhere in Texas, but it takes place here almost every day.

Horseback riding enthusiasts have a place to enjoy their sport while stationed here, the Fort Benning Hunt Club. Presently, the horse club is home for 50 privately owned horses and 14 rental horses.

Open to active and retired

The horse lovers at the hunt club are active military, retired persons, and family members of both officers and enlisted. Most of them come to ride, but many can be seen grooming their horses, exercising them, or cleaning out their horse's stable.

Rosemary Ammons is one of the many riders who've discovered the Hunt Club. She and her husband Col. David Ammon, the club's stable officer, have three horses of their own stabled there.

Mrs. Ammons leads a very busy life. She's a homemaker and mother of three children, works at the education center in Sand Hill, but still finds time to tend to her other true love, her horses.

Full-time job

"Owning horses is a lot of work. When I get off from work everyday after 5 p.m., I come here to my horses. It's a full-time job and a big responsibility," she said.

"The horses need exercising. I'm usually here until dark. You have to really love it. I'm here all day Saturday and then again Sunday after church. Sometimes I even picnic here. You can't just be a weekend cowboy."

Many soldiers go riding on the weekend at the Hunt Club even if they don't own a horse. That's what the 14 rental horses are for. Lenis Ingram, in charge of the Hunt Club, explains:

"Many soldiers will be honest with you and say they've never ridden a horse before. We won't give them just any horse. We show them the rental horses we have. We tell them to get the feel of the horse.

"You learn how to handle the horse, but out on the trail it's at your own risk, Ingram said. "There are no trail guides but the trails are marked and we tell them where to go. The graded trail runs for over two miles but the main trail is graded out all the way and makes one complete circle. There are also other trails running off the graded trail people can use."

Horses for rent

A person does not have to be a member of the club to ride a horse. Horses may be rented for $5 per hour. If a person wants to become a member there is an initial charge of $10 and then dues of $7 a month.

Membership enables any member of a family to ride whenever they want. Members pay an hourly rate of $3 per hour.

English riding classes are available to anyone. A non-member pays $7 for a group lesson. Members pay $5.

Stabling a horse at the Hunt Club averages around $66 a month. This covers the cost of the stall, feed, membership and maintenance fee. Presently there are horse stables available.

Children can ride

Concerning children riding, the average age for children beginning to ride at the club is 8-years-old. However, some of the instructors have had their children riding at 6-years-old.

Fort Benning's Hunt Club is located at the intersection of Stonewall and Marne Roads.

Occasionally, a horse will be for sale at the club. Presently there are two. Sometimes a person will 'lease' out their horse to another individual but this is strictly up to the owner.

Phyllis Stephenson, a long-time member of the Hunt Club and a teacher, is shown here with her horse. She is leasing the horse to her neighbor Mary Morin.

David Nathan can't resist stopping for a moment to feed a friend he ran into while exploring Benning's Hunt Club.

Help a pet

Everyone needs a friend. The animals at the post veterinarian's are no exception. Adopt one of the dogs or cats found there for a long-time friend. There is a $7 fee for vaccinations and blood tests.

Youth Activities celebrates a first

By Martha Duncan
Youth Activities correspondent

Youth Activities (YA) soccer enthusiasts are enjoying a first this year.

Opening day ceremonies Saturday kicked off the first time Fort Benning has sponsored its own YA soccer league. Fourteen teams representing three divisions lined up on Gordon Field to participate in the spring season's opening day activities.

The divisions include the Termites (ages 6-8), the Pee Wees (ages 9-10) and the Midgets (ages 11-13).

Fort Benning Youth Activities also sponsors two teams which will play in the Columbus Youth Soccer League. These teams, coached by Charles Butler and James Hallums, promise to be two of the top competitive teams in this year's spring season.

Termite Division results

In Termite Division action, the Eagles were led by John Latorre's three goals as they flew over the Chiefs 6-1. Coached by Thomas Lucas, the Eagles' Daniel Chamberlin added two and David DeProspero kicked in one. Coached by James Fricke, the Chiefs' only score came from Adam Cassidy.

Game two for the Termites had the Tornados, coached by Charlie Holloway, whirl around the Bullets, coached by John Vantine, 3-0. Eric Vogel, Angelito Bernier and Mike Gortered, scored one point each.

Pee Wee Division results

In the Pee Wee Division the Red Devils took a 5-2 win over the Demons. Coached by Joe Andrade, scorers for the Red Devils included Carlos Oteiza with four goals and Chad Holter with one. Coached by Raymond Melnyk, the Demons' Jason Bargewell and Adam Helmbold made one goal each.

The Cougars pounced on the Bob Cats 3-1 in the Pee Wee's second game. Coached by Ronald O'Neal, the Cougars Ronald O'Neal had two points and Terrance Kimball made one. Vince Eberhart coached the Bob Cats, Jim Sutherland kicked in their only goal.

Midget Division results

In the Midget Division, game one showed the Cosmos outscored the Rebels 5-3. Coached by William Duffy, scorers for the Cosmos included Darrell Grogan with two points; Anne Cassidy assisted by Lance Gulbreth for one point; Mark Vogel and Missy Arellano with one point each.

Coached by Patrick Valentine, the Rebels' Todd Valentine kicked in two while Bryant Bargewell added one.

The Demons, coached by Randy Price, shut out the Hustlers, coached by John Bradford, 3-0 in the Midget's second game. Scorers for the Demons included Piet Hoebeke with two goals and Jeff Christensen with one.

The day's final game was between the Saints, coached by Justo Scott, and the Panthers, coached by Francis McDevitt.

Both teams hustled throughout the game but the Saints had the upper hand on good offensive kicks as they closed out the game with a 6-0 victory.

Scorers for the Saints were Raymond King, Denise Kierman, Robert Gilstrap and Jason Entlich each with one point, with Thomas Longhorn scoring two.

YA free throw winners crowned

By Martha E. Duncan
Youth Activities Correspondent

It took 14 coaches and their assistants two weeks to determine the preliminary winners in this year's TRADOC Free Throw Contest.

Twenty-six anxious youths representing three housing areas here came to the Youth Activities Gym for the start of the finals competition on Feb. 8.

Paul W. Sharkey, Youth Activities' basketball league commissioner, presented plaques to the winners and runners-up.

Winners in the girls' divisions included Stephanie Brinkman, Terri Isbell and Simone Reyes; with Andea Johnson tapping a runner-up award.

In the boys' divisions, winners included Jeffery Kroeger, Jason Bargewell, Spencer Reeder and Adrian Foster. The runners-up were Matt Lopez, Kevin Price, Frank Glover and Jason Shatterly.

For those of you wondering what a free throw contest is, it's attempting to successfully make the best possible number of baskets per prescribed age division.

Armchair readers voice their views

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

After being staggered by the feedback I received from the column that appeared here two weeks ago, I still find it hard to believe people don't like to see sports in their newspaper.

When I say "staggered" I don't mean hundreds of people called or wrote to say they didn't like sports. The fact is, the response wasn't that great. But I want to thank those who did reply - it was greatly appreciated.

One man wrote in and had a lot to say. He feels that too much space is devoted to sports, especially to one with such a small following as basketball versus football fans.

He added that he constantly sees in this publication, as well as others, separation and identification of females and minority subjects. He explained that we are supposed to be equal in the Army—of one color (O.D.) and one race (soldier), related to one nationality (American). He also said he was tired of seeing the endless running news, and closed the reply with, "How about some space for us plain ordinary people?"

I thought he had some very good points. However, separation and identification are often needed simply to let others know who the "ordinary" people are. Also, women are getting more notice lately because their presence in the military is ever-increasing and it should be known that they're as much a part of the Army as men.

Endless running news

As for the "endless" running news, I'm sure there are many who feel the same way, just as there are plenty who enjoy seeing it because running is a big thing to many people here. In fact, two readers who replied said they especially liked the running news.

It's true that there weren't many fans at the basketball games this year, but there were quite a few at the football games. The people who play these sports practice long, hard hours and should be noticed equally for what they do.

I especially liked his closing comment and I definitely agree that "ordinary" people should get space in the paper. He was talking about the people who play racquetball, tennis, lift weights, etc. in their spare time to keep in shape or just for fun.

However, are the people who ride bucking bulls, race motorcycles or play on the post football and basketball teams supposed to be 'unordinary'? Of course not, they're just doing something they enjoy.

Two other replies came from men and they both said they didn't believe the people here were tired of seeing sports. Well, I agree with them, but the only way I'll get a better idea of if it's truth is to get more response from the readers. So please write!

The offer still stands for anyone wishing to reply about their feelings on sports coverage to do so. All comments and any ideas are welcome. Those interested should write to the BAYONET, Bldg. 4, Room 60I, ATTN: Sports Editor, or call 545-2201.

Field Dog Trial Starts

The Fort Benning Field Dog Trial Club is presently holding a Field Dog Trial on Lee Field (one-mile southwest of River Field).

Sponsored by the Fort Benning Fish and Wildlife Advisory Council, the trial started yesterday and will continue through Monday. The event is free and open to the public. Activities start every day at 8 a.m. and continue through most of the day.

According to Lyle Brown, secretary of the Fish and Wildlife Advisory Council, approximately 200 Quail birds will be used and some of the finest quail hunting dogs in the country will be competing.

Spectators are welcome to ride on the "dog wagon", a hay-filled wagon pulled by a tractor, to watch the activities. People may also bring their horses to ride around and observe what's going on.. Two dogs will be put on the ground at a time for 30 minutes and will be graded by the judges on how well they track the quail, ect.

According to Brown no birds will be killed during the event. "But after the trial is over, the birds will be released on the field and hunters can then use the field for hunting," said Brown.

Signs are posted at all major intersections to direct people to the field. Refreshments will be available. For more information call Brown at 545-7387 or Mike Brickner, secretary of the Field Dog Club, at 545-4914.

Hunters must pass test

WASHINGTON — Do you enjoy fishing or hunting? If you receive orders for Germany, you'll have an excellent opportunity to do both.

The variety of game and fish make it a worthwhile pastime, and seasons are exceptionally long.

German law requires hunters to pass a test before getting a license. But it's a simple one. Rod-And-Gun clubs throughout Germany offer instruction to help interested persons pass the test.

Some of the large game available are red deer, fallow deer, roebuck, mouflon sheep, chamois and boar. The smaller game includes pheasant, partridge, hare, rabbit and fox.

Germany's lakes and streams hold many kinds of fish. Permits are available to soldiers and their families for a small fee. U.S.-controlled areas like Grafenwoehr and Hohenfels have outstanding fishing programs. (ARNews)

USAMU wins Interservice titles

Matt Dryke of the US Army Marksmanship Unit defeated more than forty competitors to win the 1981 Interservice Skeet Championship held here last weekend. This was his second Interservice title in three years. Dryke was also selected to last year's US Olympic Shooting team.

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit USAMU members, Matt Dryke, Erich Buljung and Kenneth McNally, all won individual titles during the 1981 Interservice Shooting Championships held here last weekend.

Dryke put together daily rounds of 98-99-97 for a total of 294 out of 300 to win his second Interservice Skeet championship in three years. Team-mates Alger Mullins and Dean Clark finished second and third with 287 and 285 respectively. Albert Leverett had to win a 25 bird shoot-off against Carl Poston, USAR, to take fourth place with 284. The four man team of Dryke, Clark, Mullins and Leverett totaled 576 out of 600 to defeat the US Air Force at 547, while the US Navy squad finished third at 501.

In pistol competition, McNally and Buljung both had to come from behind to win their events over early leaders. McNally scored a narrow one point victory in 25-meter Rapid Fire Pistol competition with rounds of 588-586-593 for 1,767 to 1,766 by Terry Anderson, USAR.

Buljung trailed early leader Don Nygord, USAR, by as much as four points in 50-meter Free Pistol competition before winning on the final day by two points at 1,675. Buljung's daily scores were 555-562-558. Jimmie McCoy of USAMU, finished third with 1,657 points.

This weekend, the 1981 Interservice Clay Pigeon (Trap) Championship will be conducted at Hook (shotgun range) Range Complex. More than forty competitors representing the USAF, USN, Army and Army Reserve will be on hand for matches with several past Interservice and National champions competing. The general public is cordially invited to observe the competition which is similar to the trap events held in Olympic, World and other major international competition. Shooting will take place from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Friday through Sunday.

Survey shows guns, cars, pets unregistered

Main Post was the third major area selected for the Commanding General's directed door-to-door survey of government quarters.

Included in the survey were three subhousing areas defined as McDaniel and Norton Courts (enlisted housing) and the remainder of Main Post designated as officer housing.

Other than numerous comments by occupants (13 written, several phone calls and oral comments during surveys) complaining of an invasion of privacy, there were no significant problems identified. The area was well maintained and the occupants were generally courteous and cooperative.

Results of the survey revealed the following:

•At the time the survey was conducted 787 questionnaires were completed out of 822 sets of quarters. Thirty-two units were vacant and three families were on TDY. (These quarters will be surveyed at a later date.) Sponsors of nine families were assigned to overseas units.

•Out of 1,319 privately owned vehicles reported, 49 were not registered with the Law Enforcement Command (LEC) and 36 were reported registered by owners, but could not be verified with LEC records.

•Sixty-one weapons out of a reported 856 were not registered with the LEC and 99 were reported registered by owners, but couldn't be verified with LEC records.

•Of 569 pets reported, 112 were not registered with the Post Veterinary Activity. Thirty-four were reported registered by owners but couldn't be verified with Veterinary Activity records.

The most frequent written comments reported by occupants in the survey were:

- dogs running loose
- poor insulation and air drafts through windows and doors

- slow repair of facilities
- quarters in need of painting
- need for sod; street lights
- need for recreation facilities for children

Based on survey results, the following actions are planned:

•Listings of the names, units, etc. of members whose privately owned vehicles, weapons and pets are not registered or weren't verified with LEC/Veterinary Activity records during the survey.

•Letters to owners of unregistered/unverified vehicles, weapons and pets will be dispatched, suspended and controlled by LEC and MEDDAC as applicable.

•Comments identified by residents pertaining to maintenance, painting, insulation of quarters, playground equipment, street lights and the request for sod will be passed to DFAE for necessary action.

•Occupant comments concerning pet control and speeding vehicles will be passed to LEC for necessary action.

Handicapped aided

WASHINGTON--If a beneficiary seeks benefits under the CHAMPUS Program for the Handicapped, the law requires all public resources be considered and used before applying for CHAMPUS benefits. If an individual is receiving assistance from a public source, in the same manner as any other resident, CHAMPUS benefits cannot be extended.

When applying for CHAMPUS coverage for an eligible handicapped dependent, an active duty sponsor must submit a public official's statement to the Director, OCHAMPUS, Aurora, CO 80045, certifying that public facilities or funds are not available or are not adequate to meet the needs of the handicapped individual.

For example, such a statement would be obtained from the superintendent of the local public school system when special education for a handicapped beneficiary is required. In each case, a statement is required from a public official of the agency providing the service, and it is the appropriate agency and official. In the case when the school official determines that facilities/services are adequate and the sponsor does not agree, appeal recourse is to that school system, not CHAMPUS.

The Education for All Handicapped Children Act requires that statements from local officials certifying that special education is not available from the local school system must, under federal Law, show why such education is not available.

Other services for the handicapped are often available through state and local government agencies that deal with vocational rehabilitation, human resources, social services, and public health. Officials in such agencies may determine and certify availability of public resources.

If a sponsor changes duty station, a new statement must be obtained. The sponsor is required to determine within 60 days from the date of reporting whether public facilities or funds are available to meet the needs of the handicapped individual at the new location.

Congress established the CHAMPUS Program for the Handicapped as a source of financial assistance for active duty dependents in instances where they could not meet local residency requirements and therefore would not have access to public programs of assistance to the handicapped. Yes Pops! They still use swords in the Army. An old tradition meets with a new, when Officer Candidate Students from the 51st Company, 5th Student Battalion, The School Brigade, stack their ceremonial swords in with the basic weapon of today's Army.

Fire burns home

By Becky Bulgrin

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fire damaged on-post quarters recently after a soldier violated a post regulation by storing a motorcycle inside the quarters. Damages will probably cost more than $5,000 to repair, according to Assistant Chief of Fire Prevention and Protection, George D. Perry.

Perry said he arrived at the home of Sp4 David L. Duncan, 815 B, Terry Dr., to find the quarters engulfed in flames.

"Occupants of other parts of the quarters were trying to put the fire out with a garden hose," said Perry.

Upon further investigation, a motorcycle was found inside the laundry/storage room. According to Perry, the occupant allegedly attempted to move it outside or to another location when the fuel line ruptured.

"As it cracked or pulled loose, gas poured on the motorcycle and onto the floor," said Perry. "The vapors from the gas apparently came into contact with the water heater, causing ignition. It was evident by the Char pattern on the wall of the room that it was a POL (Petroleum oil lubrication) type burn."

Perry added that after the fire was put out, it was determined that the most probable cause of the fire came from the motorcycle.

According to Perry, Duncan was asked if he was aware that he is not allowed to park a vehicle anywhere inside a house (TRADOC supplement to AR 420-90 prohibits parking of vehicles in government quarters).

"The occupant replied that he was not aware of this and that where he comes from, it's done all the time," said Perry. "I then instructed him never to park any motor vehicle inside the premises."

Perry added that all incoming personnel are told about the post regulation during a briefing when they arrive on post.

Duncan was released to his unit, Company B, 129th Infantry Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade, for appropriate action due to the violation.

Georgia tag dead line nears

The deadline for people purchasing Georgia motor vehicle license tags is Tuesday. People who haven't bought their tags by then will be penalized.

Soldiers are eligible for an ad valorem tax exemption if their home of record is other than the state of Georgia. Soldiers can pick up ad valorem exemption forms at their unit or the Legal Assistance Office, Bldg. 5. The forms need to be signed by the unit commander.

The spouse of a soldier stationed overseas can also receive a tax exemption provided their Home of Record is not Georgia. In order to get the exemption, the soldier must have given the spouse Power of Attorney. The spouse must have the completed Power of Attorney form to be able to apply for the exemption.

Soldiers and their families eligible for an ad valorem tax exemption pay $8 for car or pick-up truck tags, or $5 for boat, trailer or motorcycle tags. To buy tags you should bring either a pre-bill (registration) or last year's tag receipt and the name of the insurance company with you.

Tags can be purchased at the Government Center located at 100 10th St. in Columbus and several service stations in Columbus near Fort Benning.

Those eligible for the ad valorem exemption who miss the deadline will have to pay the $5 or $8 fee plus 25 percent of the cost of the tags purchased under the exemption ($11 total.) Anyone missing the deadline without an exemption will have to pay the normal tax on the tag plus an additional 10 percent tax on the original amount of the tax.

Letters to the Editor

Let's go by rank, not grade

"What rank is that soldier?" asked Sergeant Smith. Major Brown answers, "He is an E-7."

How foolish an answer.

Do you say about a government worker, "What is his rank?" "Why he is a 5 step 10." No. You say, "Boiler-maker."

Why not call a soldier by his rank, not his pay grade?

Is it so hard to say sergeant or sergeant first class? Let's get back to the old Army ways and call a man/woman by their rank. Not their pay grade, or first name or last name.

A soldier earns his rank and should be called by it. Jones is not Jones. He is Corporal Jones, Sergeant Jones, Lieutenant Jones or Captain Jones. (This happens in the commissioned ranks (last names) also.) Let's put some pride back in the ranks, forget pay grades and call a specialist a specialist.

Can you remember when you made private first class and sewed those stripes on your sleeves, and how proud you were? Let each soldier keep that pride and call him by his rank, not his pay grade!

Need picnic area

To the Editor:

Despite the cold, wet and generally gloomy weather we have been having, pleasant weather is not far off.

Wouldn't it be nice if the people who work in Building 4 — particularly those who bring their lunches — could look forward to enjoying that pleasant weather (nine month's worth) by being able to eat their lunches in a delightful outdoor setting near the building?

As it is now, all they can look forward to is eating their lunches at their desks or taking their lunches out to the bleachers that front York Field.

I can't believe it would take too much money or effort for the PX system or our facility engineers to come up with such an outdoor area. A little positive thinking on someone's part at the proper level is all that is needed.

Support Dramatizers

To the Editor:

Friday evening my husband and I were fortunate enough to attend the Fort Benning Dramatizers performance of "The Fantasticks" — a play we've seen several times and always enjoyed. We were baffled, however, at the number of empty seats in the theater.

It couldn't have been the price of admission that kept people away, for there was no charge — a gift to the community, free for the asking.

Nor could it have been for lack of a talented cast, for everyone gave a performance to remember. The sets were sparse, almost nonexistent, but that's the way the play was written. It's past Super Bowl time and too soon for summer vacation, so the timing should have been right. The music was lovely.

We can only conclude that in spite of fine pre-publicity the public still doesn't know about it, so we'd like to let everyone know that "The Fantasticks" will be presented again this week, Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. Give these gifted performers a full house and do yourself a favor at the same time.

Trying to keep it all together?

If you feel like you're being pulled apart by your bills remember, you still have a big advantage over many Americans. You're in the Army!

Several proposals now before congress are designed to aid soldiers troubled by high prices. However, even without these military families don't have to worry about strikes or layoffs, receive yearly pay raises, have excellent travel opportunities as well as the best health care plan available anywhere.

The Army offers security and takes care of its own in times of need. Such programs as the Army Community Services (ACS), Army Emergency Relief fund and the Combined Federal Campaign bear witness to the fact.

Can you afford not to stay in?

New budget expected to bring raise

WASHINGTON — A proposed 5.3 percent military pay raise that would begin July 1, in addition to the regular October pay raise, is included in the revised Defense Department (DoD) budget requests revealed recently.

The proposed budget revisions were announced by Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger at a Pentagon news conference March 4. The budget request changes, which would add on to the DoD budget requests submitted to Congress earlier, call for an additional $6.8 billion for fiscal year (FY) 1981 and another $25.8 billion for FY 82.

The additional monies would bring the total FY 81 defense budget request to $178.0 billion in total obligational authority (TOA). The Army's share of that budget would be $43.6 billion.

According to Army budget officials, TOA means those funds previously authorized by Congress for DoD use plus any new spending authority added during the current fiscal year.

The FY 82 DoD budget request is being increased to $222.2 billion, officials say. The Army share of the FY 82 budget would increase to $52.6 billion.

Secretary Weinberger explained the budget changes are designed to increase readiness, improve the services' ability to recruit and keep service members, modernize the forces and ensure Naval supremacy.

The request for a 5.3 percent, July 1 military pay raise is included under the quality of life area. Officials comment this raise would be in addition to the regular October pay raise presently pegged at 9.1 percent. Other quality of life areas earmarked for increased spending include improvements to living and working facilities, a cost-of-living allowance for single personnel on overseas tours, and bonuses to keep service members with special skills and experience. The Army would receive an increase in this area of $130 million.

An increase in the FY 81 DoD budget of $2.3 billion ($362 million going to the Army) is included under another area, referred to as "fact of life" changes. Among other things, these changes cover such items as fuel cost increases, buying-costs growth, force deployments and operations that were unplanned at the time the original budget was prepared.

Other major budget changes call for increased funds to improve maintenance; reduce the shortfall in badly needed wartime reserves, supplies and munitions; increase training; and buy items such as protective masks, desert camouflage uniforms, medical supplies and mobility support equipment.

Specific Army items targeted for increased funding and production include the UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter, Roland Air Defense System, Division Air Defense (DIVAD) System, M-1 Abrams tanks and Infantry Fighting Vehicles.

The need for added manpower is also addressed in the revised DoD budget requests. An added 10,000 DoD active military slots are being requested for this fiscal year; another 25,900 slots are being sought for FY 82. This added manpower is for improving readiness directly by increasing combat unit manning and, indirectly, through increasing personnel assigned to technical training and maintenance activities.

Civilian personnel increases requested by the Defense Department for FY 81 total 19,600. Another 30,000 DoD civilian slots are being requested for FY 82. The increases will allow for expanded use of civilian employees in jobs that will free up military personnel for return to combat and combat-related duties. (ARNews)

Expert Field Medical Badge—the sign of professionals

Training for badge

Story and photos
By Bill C. Walton
USAIC, Public Affairs Office

The Expert Field Medical Badge (EFMB) has the same standing among medical personnel as the Expert Infantryman's Badge does among infantrymen, according to Lt. Col. G. O. Bowen, 34th Medical Battalion commander.

It is recognition for Army medical department field organization members who attain a high level of technical skill and proficiency while performing field medical functions.

The 34th Medical Battalion will conduct the EFMB test for all eligible medical personnel at Fort Benning, April 13-17.

Candidates from the 197th Infantry Brigade, 34th Medical Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, Medical Department Activity and Dental Department Activity are expected to compete for the coveted medical badge. Letters have also been sent to nine other Army posts inviting their medical personnel to come here for the test.

An intensive EFMB training program to prepare these soldiers for the test will be conducted by 34th Medical Battalion personnel from now until April 4, at various Benning sites.

Subjects to be covered during this training include land navigation, communications, transportation of sick and wounded, emergency medical treatment, field sanitation, camouflage, rifle assembly and disassembly, mines and booby traps, military intelligence, and nuclear, biological and chemical training.

For specific information regarding times and subjects, contact the training section, 34th Medical Battalion, 545-1712.

Enlisted soldiers sought for military prep school

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS)—The U.S. Military Academy Preparatory School (USMAPS), Fort Monmouth, N.J. is now accepting applications for the 1981-82 class which begins in August 1981. Application deadline for the class is May 1, 1981.

USMAPS is an Army school which helps selected enlisted personnel to qualify physically, academically and militarily, said USAMAPS officials, because admission to USMAPS is very competitive. Last year, 1,200 Regular Army soldiers applied for the 170 vacancies available at USMAPS.

The basic eligibility requirements call for an applicant to be:

- A citizen of the U.S., or able to become a citizen before entering the USMA.
- At least 17 and not more than 21 years of age on July 1 of the year he or she enters USMAPS.
- Unmarried and have no legal obligations to support a child or children.
- In good health

Let me tell you about Equal Opportunity! 2d Lt. Carmen MacCammon, Headquarters, Headquarters Company 197th Infantry Brigade, uses the fireman's carry to practice patient transport with Pvt. Gilberto Martinez, Headquarters, Headquarters Battery 2/10 Artillery. Expert Field Medical Badge Test training is now underway in the 34th Medical Battalion.

'Stunning' natural gas finds may bridge crisis with America's energy

PLEASANTVILLE, N.Y. — Six years ago it was generally agreed that the nation's reserves of natural gas would run out by the end of this century. Today, thanks to new developments in detecting gas fields, geologists are considerably more optimistic.

"Stunning new field estimates — from the Rockies, the Appalachians, the Gulf Coast, several other areas — indicate that the United States may possess truly gigantic supplies of natural gas," James Nathan Miller writes in the April Reader's Digest.

In the past, geologists were unable to look for oil or gas below 15,000 feet; their instruments were "blind" beyond that level. Today, however — thanks to computer-assisted seismometers — they are able to "see" gas deposits far below that depth. "During the '70s," explains Miller, "as scientists made computer programs more and more discriminating, their maps became clearer and clearer — and they were able to see deeper and deeper, today down to 40,000 feet."

This new ability has raised the curtain on a vast new world of energy. Thus, while it was previously thought that the country was in grave danger of depleting its energy resources before technology to harness solar energy could be put in place, it now appears that natural gas can serve as a clean and abundant "bridge" to the energy technologies of the 21st-century.

Experts differ on the extent of these new gas reserves. The Exxon Corporation, which is heavily invested in alternate fuel paths, insists that the supply is limited and that the country will have to begin decreasing consumption in the 1980s. On the other hand, the Potential Gas Committee, whose membership includes representatives of pipeline companies and producers, says the country has so much natural gas that at our present rate of consumption we still have a 60-year resource.

More and more experts tend to agree with Charles Mankin, Oklahoma's state geologist, who heads the National Academy of Sciences' Board on Mineral and Energy Resources. Says Mankin: "I'm very optimistic that we can maintain our gas supplies for a very long time — well into the 21st century and possibly even to the end of it."

Reye's Syndrome mystery disease

By Tony Adams
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Reye's Syndrome. If the name sounds familiar, but you just cannot place what the disease is, do not feel alone. Most people do not really know what the disease is. As a matter of fact, the disease is so mysterious, even researchers do not know exactly what causes it or what a possible cure could be.

Reye's Syndrome, a very rare, frequently fatal disorder, claims two people out of a million victims, according to Dr. David E. Johnson of Martin's Community Hospital. Such is the case with 5-year old Davy Snellen, son of Capt. David Snellen here, who recently contracted Reye's Syndrome.

Davy was first taken to Martin Army Community Hospital. Numerous tests were run on Davy and it was determined that the hospital did not have the full knowledge to treat the mysterious disease. Davy was then transferred to the Eggleston Hospital for Children in Atlanta, where the constant attention and treatments of Dr. Daniel Caplin and Dr. Peter Ahmann finally paid off. The treatment consisted of blood transfusions, respirators and various drugs to reduce the swelling of the brain. Luckily, Davy is back home preparing to finish kindergarten.

Others that have contracted Reye's have not been so fortunate. Many victims end up with permanent brain or liver damage, which can range from moderate to severe. Both drastically affect the lives of the victim as well as their loved ones.

To prevent the development of permanent brain or liver damage due to Reye's, symptoms have to be recognized. Reye's Syndrome basically comes in five stages.

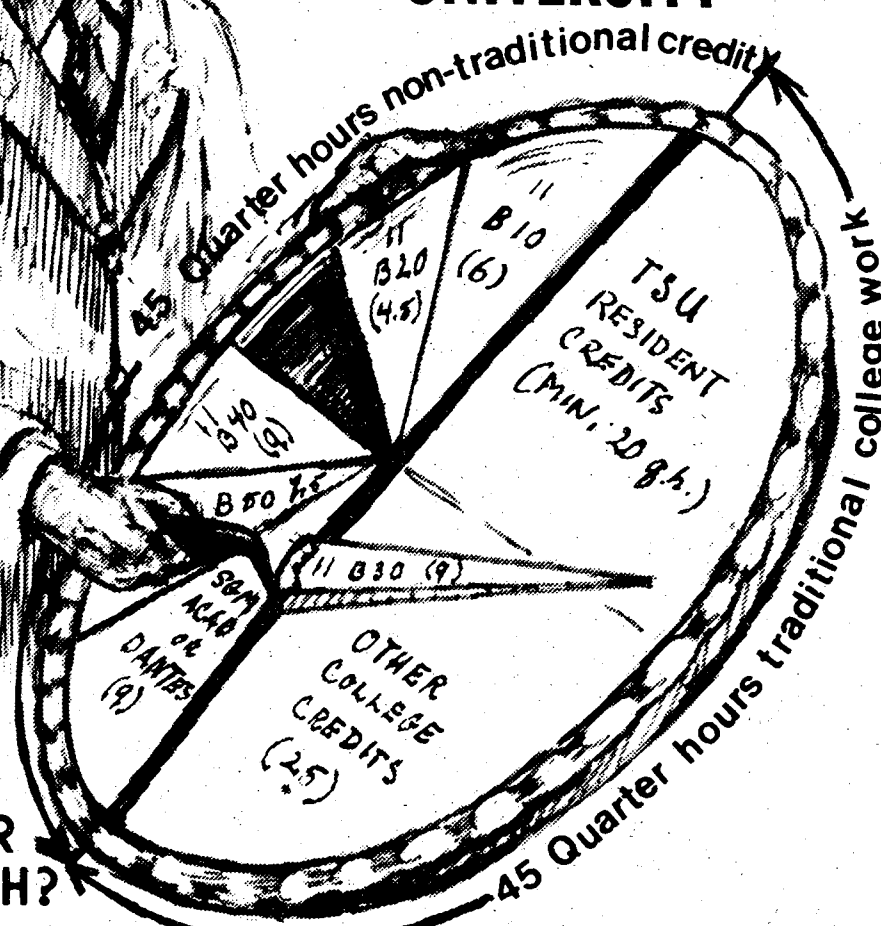

- nausea, listlessness, disorientation
- combativeness, deep breathing, hallucinations
- numbness, stiffness, possible coma
- deep coma
- no reflex, not to breath by oneself

According to Dr. Johnson, Reye's Syndrome really has no known cure. There are the various treatments to aid recovery, but there is no absolute cure-all. Try to remember this the next time you hear the words, Reye's Syndrome.

Georgia tornadoes frequent

By Anita Langford
Fort Benning Safety Office

Georgia ranked in the top 10 states having tornadoes in 1980. In fact, since 1916, 586 Georgians have lost their lives and millions of dollars due to the damage and destruction caused by tornadoes.

Fort Benning isn't exempt from this violent form of natural disaster. Tornadoes can be a real danger here too, their warning signs should be heeded.

Tornadoes normally occur in conjunction with thunderstorms. They are often characterized by a loud roaring noise similar to the sound of speeding trains, caused by winds estimated to be as high as 300 miles per hour. Tornadoes are usually funnel-shaped clouds that rotate in a counter-clockwise direction on a vertical axis.

When a tornado approaches, immediate action may mean the difference between life and death.

- Immediately seek inside shelter such as a steel-framed or reinforced concrete building of substantial construction. Stay away from windows.

- In schools and office buildings, whenever possible go to an interior hallway on the lowest floor. Avoid auditoriums, gymnasiums or other structures with wide, free-span roofs. If a building is not of reinforced construction, go quickly to a nearby reinforced building.

- On receiving a tornado in shops, workers should move quickly to the section of the shop offering the greatest protection in accordance with advance plans.

- In homes the basement usually offers the greatest safety. If a home doesn't have a basement, take cover under heavy furniture in the center part of the house. Keep some windows open, but stay away from them.

- Mobile homes are particularly vulnerable to overturning during strong winds. Trailer parks should have a community shelter. Appoint a community leader responsible for constant radio monitoring during threatening weather or during watch periods.

- In open country, move away from the tornadoes path at a right angle. If you can't escape, seek shelter in a ravine or ditch. Do not stay in your car.

- Keep listening. Your battery-powered radio will broadcast the latest tornado advisory information.

- Remember, a tornado WATCH means tornadoes are expected to develop. A tornado WARNING means a tornado has actually been sighted.

Detachment 10, 5th Weather Squadron, is an Air Force unit assigned here to provide support to this installation. This includes the responsibility to determine the severity of weather conditions that may be hazardous to life and property here.

If a tornado is sighted in the Fort Benning area call 545-5628. Ten emergency sirens are located throughout the post.

A steady sound of five minutes duration shall indicate the Weather Squadron has sighted a tornado which may endanger Fort Benning. Seek shelter immediately. Three steady two-minute sounds interrupted by two one-minute silences indicate all clear.

The National Weather Service at Columbus Airport has responsibility for providing weather support to the Columbus area, excluding Fort Benning. If you site a tornado in the Columbus area call 327-0746.

Early detection of a tornado accompanied by immediate action can and save lives.

When a tornado alert is sounded, stay tuned to your local radio and television stations for updates and further bulletins.

Rape victims need support

Rape is a terrible experience for the victim — and for her friends and family, too. If you know a rape victim, you may notice that she seems to act differently for a while — withdrawn, afraid or unsure. You may feel hurt, angry or upset.

What can you do? First, show the person that you care. Give her your support by being available to spend time with her — have dinner, go to a movie or go shopping. Your friend may be afraid to be alone. Let her talk about the crime if she wishes.

Many women feel guilty or ashamed after a rape.

They may feel that they didn't fight hard enough. They blame themselves for being in the wrong place at the wrong time. You should let the victim know she did the right thing, just what she had to do to survive.

One final thing. It's important that the victim contact the police and, if the rapist is caught, that she go through with the trial. The support of friends and family members can help her through this difficult time.

GETTING AHEAD DOESN'T HAVE TO MEAN GETTING OUT.

You've been in the Army long enough to know exactly what you'd like to do. If another job has a greater appeal, you don't have to leave the Army to get it. You can take advantage of the time you've still got left to see if you can change your MOS. SP4 Olivia Cunningham did just that.

"After your first enlistment, the Army gives you the chance to change your MOS. I'm going to become an Equal Opportunity NCO. That's something I always wanted to do. I think the opportunities in the Army are fantastic."

The Army has a lot of ways for you to get ahead. You can change MOS, duty stations, even get an assignment overseas. But you've got to take the next step. And that means talking with your Reenlistment NCO. You'll get all the facts on how you can get ahead by staying in.

Cemeteries reveal buried past

By Bill C. Walton
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Cemeteries and their listings are an important source of information for many genealogists. In fact, they are often the only remaining record that an ancestor ever existed.

The study of genealogy is an interesting and consuming pastime. America's bicentennial celebration five years ago further increased the interest in this national hobby. Genealogists, both professional and amateur, are constantly searching for family ties in far away places.

The 59 old cemeteries scattered throughout Fort Benning, maintained by the Buildings and Grounds Division, (DFE), offer a source of exciting information to both genealogists and historians. Those seeking knowledge of families who lived and died in those parts of Georgia's Muscogee and Chattahoochee counties and Alabama's Russell County, acquired by the Army in 1918, 1941 and 1942, have an informed source available here.

Many of the cemeteries are the last reminders of the settlements that were located on the reservation. Settlers traveled from as far away as Pennsylvania, North and South Carolina, Virginia and Rhode Island to settle in this area. Descendants of these settlers have called in to add some of the history of the old settlements.

The cemeteries have numbers and, in most cases, names, using a family name of one of the individuals buried in that cemetery. Cemetery 10, Midway Church, containing some 200 graves, is the largest on post and there are several small plots that contain only one grave. Many well-known local names such as Schley, Lightner, Parkman, Ginn and Pate appear on the markers.

The military history of the United States is recorded on these tombstones. John O'Quin, Revolutionary War soldier, lies in the O'Quin cemetery off Red Diamond Road. He was buried in 1836 in Fort Benning's oldest identifiable grave. There are at least 19 Civil War veterans on the cemetery listing, including James M. Sizemore whose great-grandson, James T. McKenzie of Columbus, obtained a tombstone from the Veterans Administration in July 1980 to mark his grave in cemetery 44. The listing also includes veterans from the Spanish American War and World War I.

Thomas J. Brown Jr. became Chief of Buildings and Grounds Division, DFE, in January 1963. He soon realized the importance of the old cemeteries and therefore increased the emphasis on their maintenance.

At that time there were only 25 cemeteries recorded at Fort Benning and literally no record of individuals buried there. Through the efforts of engineer personnel, hunters, fishermen and soldiers, the number of recorded cemeteries has increased to 59; 18 in Muscogee County, 39 in Chattahoochee County, and two in Russell County, Ala.

There are approximately 3,000 gravesites in these cemeteries. The exact number is hard to determine, according to Brown, because many of them have no tombstones and several cemeteries have depressions which may or may not be gravesites.

Elsie Hight, Buildings and Grounds Division clerk, is the engineer's chairwoman of the cemetery project. An inventory and record of all the individuals' names buried in the old cemeteries began in 1969. This was to be their Bicentennial project with a planned completion in 1976. However, the final entry was not made until February 1977.

She established a recording system, listing the names, numbers and location of all the cemeteries. To this she added a list of the names in each cemetery and a master alphabetical list, cross referenced to the other two.

A copy of these lists along with a map showing the location of all the cemeteries was given to the Bradley Library in Columbus and the National Archives branch in East Point, Ga. The cemetery lists are now being prepared for binding and then will be presented to the Fort Benning Main Post library and the Infantry School library for their reference files.

Hight became so interested in the project that she worked many hours of her own time, inventoring, compiling and recording the names. Working with

Old cemeteries take tender, loving care

By Bill Walton
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Retired SFC John Zebreski, of the Grounds Maintenance Branch, OFE, has the enormous task of clearing the lots, taking the inventory of both marked and unmarked graves, and maintaining all Fort Benning cemetery grounds.

His normal duty assignment is as a tractor operator, the cemetery maintenance is performed as an important, but secondary, duty.

When he started, it was difficult to tell where some of the smaller, out of the way cemeteries started and underbrush ended. With the help of other engineer personnel, he has completely renewed the old cemeteries.

Maintenance of the plots includes clearing the underbrush, erecting fences and gates, cleaning and sometimes repairing the crumbling old headstones.

The stone used a 100-years-ago is different from today's and it requires a "soft touch" to repair it. All of this is a labor of love with Zebreski and he has taken it upon himself to add trees and shrubs to improve the appearance of several barren plots.

The maintenance of the 59 cemeteries is performed in a continuous cycle with visits to each cemetery at least once each six weeks.

His main problem, other than mother nature, is vandalism and theft. Vandals broke tombstones, stole fencing and almost destroyed one of the cemeteries several years ago.

He uses a pickup truck, with a trailer to haul his mowers while doing his maintenance tasks. Once, enroute to a remote cemetery, he was followed into the woods by military police who stopped him and questioned his reasons for having a trailer full of Army mowers in the middle of nowhere. He explained he was on his way to take care of cemetery maintenance, a story they didn't really believe.

After he insisted they followed him a bit further into the woods, until the cemetery came in sight, and were then quite apologetic, although they were only doing their jobs to.

Retired SFC John Zebreski tends one of the many historical gravesites.

Cemetery

Army cemetery listings has rubbed off on her civilian activities as she and her husband, Bob, have taken it upon themselves to refurbish a previously neglected private cemetery in Whitesville, Ga.

She received the first genealogical query in September 1960 from Richmond, Tex. To date, she has received more than 500 separate queries regarding individuals buried here. Realizing how important this information is to those asking the questions, she gives each query personal attention.

Through her efforts, people have been able to establish contact with other previously unknown family members. And, as everyone interested in genealogy knows, this is a tremendous help because it usually opens up several new chains of communication and helps bring to light many new facts.

She keeps extensive notes and records on all the genealogical queries that are received and these files reflect highly on the work done by the engineer section. One of the many thank you letters received came from Laura Pixlie of Boise, Idaho.

"... I appreciate so much the time you spent in gathering data for me on my Massey line. You have really helped me a great deal ... I have searched the 1860 Chattahoochee County census but it wasn't that much help to me. Your material that was sent me has been my greatest help and I shall always be grateful to you for your kindness in taking the time to care."

She makes extensive use of two local history-books, "Columbus, Ga., 1827-1865" by John H. Martin and "History of Chattahoochee County" by N. K. Rogers, to tie in with the cemetery listings and to provide answers to genealogical queries.

Interested persons desiring information on the old cemeteries are encouraged to write to: Commanding General, U.S. Army Infantry Center, Attn: ATZB-FE-BG, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

Jitters leave on rifle range raw skill takes over," according to drill sergeant, SFC Tommy Gaspard of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

At this command, young student soldiers of the 1st

Proving themselves on the M-16 range is not only a requirement to graduate, but it also becomes a matter of pride for the new soldiers.

The drill sergeant realizes this, and challenges them to do their best, shouting numerous commands as they take their positions on the firing line.

There are two basic firing positions taught here. The first is the foxhole position. As the soldiers prepare to lower themselves into a foxhole, they check for any furry little creatures that might have ventured into it during the night. Then they get into a "good foxhole firing position," take aim at the silhouette targets, and begin firing.

By the time the inexperienced soldiers are finished firing from the foxhole, they are much more relaxed.

"Their concentration is taking over," explained Gaspard.

The soldiers are told to work themselves into a "good prone firing position." They lay flat on their stomachs in front of a foxhole, look down range, aim, and resume firing.

Once finished, the anxious young soldiers look at their scorecards to learn if they qualified. All the previous training the soldiers received has taken shape.

The soldiers have proved themselves and can take pride in their new-found ability. THEY HAVE QUALIFIED!

Night goggles turn darkness to light for helicopter pilots

Imagine yourself as a soldier trying to surprise the enemy by using darkness for cover. All of a sudden you hear a helicopter, but you cannot see it. Your platoon leader fumbles with a light to pinpoint your location and report to headquarters by using a poncho to shield the glow from his flashlight. All at once artillery begins pounding your area. What happened? How were we detected?

This scenario shows how Night Hawk/Night Vision Goggle (NVG) can be used. The Night Vision Goggles are currently part of an ongoing training program for FORSCOM aviators. The program requires four weeks of training to qualify on the NVG. There are two weeks of classroom training under Night Hawk conditions (use of night vision to fly with minimum lighting) and two weeks of flying under Night Vision Goggles conditions.

The 121st Aviation Company of the 34th Medical Battalion has conducted extensive training for night flying so that pilots are capable of supporting ground units 24 hours-a-day. CWO3 Don McCoy initiated this training for the "Soc Trang Tigers" in July 1980 with assistance from CWO3 John Boler.

The NVG program for the 121st Aviation Company met with immediate success. CWO3 McCoy and CWO3 Boler each flew with students at Dekkar Strip with air traffic control provided by the 187th Pathfinder Platoon (Airborne). The training began with approximately ten hours of Night Hawk flying. Where the pilot must adapt his eyes to the night environment. Because the horizon is often difficult to distinguish, it is easy to become disoriented. Therefore it is imperative that the pilot select good ground reference points and pay strict attention to his instruments inside the aircraft.

When CWO3's McCoy and Boler feel that their students are qualified in Night Hawk flying, they are allowed to begin flying with the Night Vision Goggles. Flying with the Night Vision Goggles is extremely challenging because the pilot's depth perception and peripheral vision are greatly reduced. In conjunction with executing numerous approaches at Dekkar Strip, the pilots also fly Nap of the Earth (NOE) which is flight as close to the terrain as possible. Although many pilots are apprehensive of the Night Vision Goggles at first, they eventually become "believers." Just recently the 1st Flight Platoon of the "Tigers" had the opportunity to use the goggles on a tactical mission while providing aviation support to the 197th Infantry Brigade (Separate) during their ARTEP. An Infantry company was tasked to conduct a night raid on an enemy position and four "HUEYS" from the 1st Flight Platoon were designated to insert infantrymen into the landing zone about 800 meters south of their objective. Because the illumination was minimal that night and the landing zone was very small, it was decided that the pilots in the lead aircraft would wear goggles so navigation would be easier. The mission was a complete success and could not have been accomplished without NVG.

The flight under NVG conditions must be carefully planned or be conducted in a familiar environment. The use of goggles allows the aircraft to fly close to the ground at night to avoid enemy detection and use of anti-aircraft weapons. Missions never before possible can now be accomplished because of NVG equipment.

The 498th Medical Company started its Night Vision Goggle program March 6. CWO3 McCoy and CWO3 Brown from the "Dustoff" company will combine forces to train aviators from the 498th Medical Company simultaneously.

"WHEN YOU'RE A CIVILIAN AGAIN, AN EXTRA $1,400 A YEAR SURE COMES IN HANDY."

"I got out of the Army in February of 1977, right when all the prices were going up. Food. Clothing. Gas. You name it and it went up.

"Fortunately, when I was out-processing, someone asked me if I wanted to make some extra money with a local Army Reserve unit, and I said yes.

"It's good I joined right away, because it took me a couple of months to find a good full-time job.

"Even with a regular job, the extra $1,400 I earned with the Reserve came in handy. It was the difference between barely making ends meet and being able to put a little money away.

"By going direct from Active into the Reserve, I was also able to keep my rank of E-4. I'm now an E-5, pulling in over $1,600 a year. Not bad for a weekend a month and two weeks annual training.

"I'm also taking advantage of some other benefits.

I buy a lot of my auto supplies at the PX. I carry low-cost government life insurance through the Reserve.

I also think the retirement package is a good deal.

"A side benefit that's helped me is the additional training I've picked up in the Reserve. I was an MP on active duty but have become an Accounting Specialist in the Reserve. Right now, that's helping me with the business degree I'm working toward at a local college.

"So I can recommend the Army Reserve to anyone coming off active duty. The extra income is good, and it's nice being with people who can appreciate what you achieved in the service."

Can't get pomegranate trees from planting bean seeds

By William W. Erbach, Sr.
U.S. Army Chaplain

I heard a silly story the other day that was being told to a little kid, but you know there was so much wisdom in that story that I thought you would like to hear it too. One day the teacher was handing out seeds for the kids to grow plants. Probably the most fertile of seeds is the bean seed, one has really to do something drastically wrong to not get a plant. So it was a good choice on part of the teacher. But one of the kids didn't want it to be a bean plant, he wanted it to be a pomegranate, and so when he took it home he told his parents that it was a pomegranate seed. Of course the parents were mystified as to where he would get such a seed, but he reassured them that he had read about a pomegranate tree in the Bible and so he wanted to raise a pomegranate tree.

began to sprout and obviously the plant showed signs of being a bean plant. No matter how badly that boy wanted something else he couldn't change it. He was, of course, disappointed and he then told his teacher his story. She didn't laugh as his parents had, rather she simply said that now you have learned that if you plant a bean seed you will get a bean plant, and that if you want a pomegranate you need to plant a pomegranate seed. How about that?

The Bible says basically the same thing: "As you sow, so shall you reap." And if you use your imagination you can imagine all sort of things as being seeds. If you plant smiles, you get smiles in return. If you plant frowns and scowls, you get frowns and scowls in return. That's the way life works. So be careful what you plant as you live your life. Plant only the things that you want returned to you.

Well, as time went on the seeds

Sergeant Jacobs had to share a bed with one brother in a room with two other brothers before joining the Army at age 18. He knew the military offered many benefits, and when he was placed at his permanent duty station, he realized he was getting something he never really thought of. Although Jacobs had a roommate, for once in his life he had his own bed and a place for his clothes.

Specialist Terry came from a family who lived in a $100,000 home. He never liked the idea of sharing a room, but knew it was part of the deal if he wanted to make it on his own and get the higher education offered by the Army.

Even though these soldiers came from entirely different backgrounds, they both wanted the same things — a chance to see the world, get more education and prepare for the future. But most important to make it on their own. The benefits offered by the Army could help them reach their goals, but first they had to know just what was offered, then take advantage of these benefits.

Jacobs joined the service before Jan. 1, 1977, so was lucky to get educational assistance from the GI Bill which he could use while on active duty or after getting discharged. Under the GI Bill, the Army pays the soldier's tuition cost while in and when he gets out, he'll receive an amount depending on how many dependents he has and if he's going to school part or full time.

Terry joined after 1977 when the GI Bill was eliminated, so he took advantage of the new Veteran's Education Assistance Program (VEAP). He could allot part of his monthly paycheck ($25, $50 or $100 maximum, or in multiples of five in between these amounts) to save towards his education after discharge. The best part was that the Army would match him $2 for every $1 he saved if it was used for education. He could pay in a maximum of $2,700, so if he paid $75 for three years, the allotments would stop and his education savings fund would be filled. If he decided not to use the money for education, Terry would be refunded what he put in.

The Army would also pay 75 percent of his schooling while on active duty through the Army's Tuition Assistance Program. However, if Terry makes E-5, he would then get 90 percent paid. Effective December 1980, the Army will pay this increase to all E-5s and above with 15 years or fewer years of service.

If Jacobs or Terry had not finished high school prior to joining the service, they could receive a high school diploma or GED (equivalency to diploma) through free classes. If they wanted to sharpen particular skills before taking college courses, free classes are available to do so. Or, if they're fairly knowledgeable in certain areas, free College Level Examination Program (CLEP) tests can be taken to receive college credits before entering college. The Army also offers continuing education courses for promotion points.

For more information on education benefits, call an education counselor at Bldg. 35 at 545-3093.

More benefits

While continuing their education, Jacobs and Terry are receiving their basic pay, which increases through promotions, more time in service, annual pay raises and sometimes cost-of-living raises. Along with base pay, they receive a clothing allowance for maintaining uniforms and clothing. They don't have to pay rent (unless they get permission to live off post) or for food. Not having to worry about medical and dental bills, which are also paid by the Army, is another big help. The Post Exchange cuts down the high prices of personal items, clothing etc., and the Commissary saves on many food items and cigarettes. While these may seem like small benefits to some, they would certainly add up if used. These soldiers need a break now and then and are glad they have 30-days leave a year to visit their families or to just get away.

More benefits for a family

Jacobs fell in love and got married. More planning for the future was needed and he had to update his military records. The Jacobses decided to live off post rather than wait for on-post housing, so Jacobs started receiving two more allowances in his paycheck — Basic Allowance for Quarters (BAQ) and Basic Allowance for Subsistence (BAS).

The amount of BAQ paid is related in amount to a soldier's pay grade and whether he has dependents. A big plus is that BAQ and BAS are nontaxable.

A year after they were married, the Jacobses had a baby girl. Jacobs had been saving money by putting it into a bank account on his own for emergencies. He now felt it was time to use the allotment system to be able to better provide for his family. He requested that X amount of money be automatically taken out of his check and put into the bank for that purpose. Later, he would use allotments to purchase U.S. Savings Bonds.

For detailed information on allotments, consult your unit personnel officer or your finance or pay officer.

Terry had also been saving on his own until he found out about the Credit Union. They are located at almost all duty stations and some you can belong to no matter where you are assigned. All Terry had to do was fill out an application, pay a small entrance fee and purchase at least one share, usually valued at $5. Purchasing shares from then on is like depositing money in a bank, except that savers at a credit union are also its owners. Interest paid on deposits vary, but usually pay a little more than six percent or as much as seven.

Besides being able to save regularly, Terry's membership afforded him other financial advantages, including loan privileges at relatively advantageous interest rates, life insurance in an amount equal to shares owned (up to a specified maximum), and loan protection insurance. Terry could also use the allotment system to buy his shares.

Two years after he was married, Jacobs found out he was going to be separated from his family. He was undergoing a permanent change of station (PCS) to a place where his family could not go. Although he didn't like the thought of being separated, he found out he would receive a Family Separation Allowance (FSA II). This allowance is an amount set by law and not related to basic pay or number of dependents. To be eligible, a soldier previously had to be an E-4 (with more than four years' service) and above with dependents. However, as of Sept. 8, 1980, E-4s and below with less than four years' service are also eligible. Besides being on a PCS to an unaccompanied location, a soldier can also be on temporary duty (TDY) for a continuous period of more than 30 days (without his dependents).

Allowance eases hardship

Another kind of FSA may be paid under certain circumstances. If a soldier is serving overseas where dependents aren't permitted and where government bachelor quarters are unavailable, he may receive FSA I to help cover his living expenses. Although BAQ, FSA I and FSA II are not related, specific circumstances qualify a family or military member for each. All three can be paid depending upon existing circumstances.

Also available to many soldiers (E-4 and above with more than two years' service) is a Dislocation Allowance. This amount is equal to one month's BAQ when the service member has dependents entitled to transportation in connection with a PCS, whether or not the member is being assigned to government quarters at the new station.

With certain exceptions, dependents get their transportation paid for by the government when a soldier is ordered to make a PCS move. The member must be an E-4 or above with two or more years' service, but does not apply if the soldier is assigned as a student at a course less than 20 weeks long.

If a soldier is assigned overseas and his dependents aren't authorized to travel at the same time or if he's assigned where dependents aren't permitted, the dependents can be moved to any place desired in the U.S. at government expense. Certification must be made that they will reside at the designated place.

Household goods may also be shipped by government expense under the same conditions that apply to dependents' transportation and which meet certain weight limitations. Packing, crating, unpacking and temporary storage are also taken care of.

Home loans available

When the Jacobses' child reached the age of four, they decided to buy a home. Two loan programs are available to active duty members for that purpose. The Federal Housing Administration (FHA) home loan insurance gives soldiers the opportunity to build or buy homes on reasonable terms and with small down payments. The FHA must appraise the house and members must have two or more years' active duty, be on full-time active duty, establish their need for a home and obtain a certificate of eligibility (DD Form 802) for a loan. They must also meet FHA standards for approval on the basis of credit, income and financial responsibility.

The Army will pay one-half of one percent mortgage premium required monthly by FHA while the member is on active duty. When the member is discharged he will then pay this charge.

For details on obtaining a certificate of eligibility for the FHA home loan program, see your comin the family can be a heartbreaking time. Only for the survivors, if the deceased was on duty or is retired military and died as a service connected disability there are benefits available.

What some people think, there are now more benefits available than ever before," said Sp5 Sharff, Fort Benning Army liaison for area

Benefits are handled through three different agencies, Social Security, Veterans Administration and the servicemember's military service.

Like most other workers in America, are covered under Social Security. These benefits are available regardless of wartime service or nature of service. If after military service a person continues to work under Social Security, he continues to receive survivor protection for the family. A survivor benefit program can help the family when the servicemember has died.

If a soldier dies while in service or of a service connected cause after separation, the surviving spouse could be eligible for a monthly payment called Dependency and Indemnity Compensation (VA). Primarily a benefit for the surviving spouse, this payment can be made for life if the spouse does not remarry, according to VA officials.

Monthly payments can be made for the surviving unmarried children under 18 and between 18 and 23 if attending VA approved school.

The benefit is payable if death is the result of a service injury or aggravated in line of duty while on active duty, active duty for training or inactive duty or the result of a disability which is not compensated for by VA.

The monthly amount which the surviving spouse receives depends on the pay grade of the servicemember at the time of death and ranges from about $100 to $1,000. Spouses, children or parents may be eligible for this benefit. However, this is not a lump sum benefit. It will be automatically paid to the family of every servicemember or former servicemember. If the servicemember was in good health at the time of separation or retirement the chances of the servicemember dying of a service connected cause are not great, stressed VA officials.

There is also a VA pension available for survivors of wartime veterans, including the Vietnam Era. The death need not be service related, but the survivors must have a limited income following their death. The current income limit is $2,989 a year, said the officials.

VA loans are available to surviving spouses whose spouse died in service or from service connected causes. This benefit is identical to the servicemember's.

An allowance for up to 45 months of full-time education can be paid to children and spouses. Although there are some exceptions, including special courses for handicapped children as young as 14, an eligible child can begin receiving payments at age 18 or at any later age up to 23. The child then has eight years to use the 45 months of allowance. For a full-time student at a college or university these payments can be as high as $311 a month, added the officials.

If the soldier dies on active duty or from service connected causes within 120 days after separation, the spouse or eligible survivor may be entitled to a lump sum death gratuity, said Sharff. He added that pay and allowances due the servicemember at the time of death will be paid to the eligible survivor.

Other benefits the survivors may be entitled to are moving expenses to a permanent home, installation privileges at the commissary, PX and other facilities the post may offer and legal assistance.

Sharff added that many states also give benefits to survivors but these need to be checked out with each state.

"Any benefits don't come automatically," said Sharff. "The survivors have to notify the VA, Social Security and their military service to get the ball rolling. Then, and only then, can they see what benefits they are eligible for."

Facilities join forces to battle ignorance

Students, researchers and others at Fort Benning seeking information on a variety of subjects will have an easier time of it now that the USAIC Library and Individual Learning Center in Infantry Hall have combined their resources.

As well as official publications, the facility offers books, magazines, videotapes and TEC tapes. The recent addition of two computer terminals has helped to make service more complete. The Defense Technical Information terminal has access to more than a million reports and studies. After brief instruction from the library staff, customers can use the terminal themselves.

The Lockheed dialog information retrieval service offers more than 100 data bases for searching information. The information available in the Lockheed system includes historical abstracts, political science papers and others. The librarians will have to search out this information for the customers since they cannot use it themselves.

While military subjects make up the bulk of the material, there is also a collection of national and foreign affairs, management, social and political science, American and world history.

The Individual Learning Center (room 236) is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and the library (room 101) is open until 6 p.m. Both are closed on weekends and holidays.

Betty J. Collins, chief of technical services in the USAIC Library, shows Sgt. Wade Walton, TRADOC system manager for fighting vehicles, how the Lockheed DIALOG information system works.

Rape defined by UCMJ

The Fort Benning Rape Prevention Campaign is well underway. The Rape Prevention Display which was set up in Infantry Hall last week will be displayed at the Main Mall, April 6-12, 1981. Everyone is encouraged to pick up the free Rape Prevention Literature and read it. This week's article focuses on "Rape and the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ)."

Article 120 of the UCMJ defines rape as the commission of an act of sexual intercourse by a person with a female not his wife, by force and without consent.

To complete the crime of rape, several elements of the crime must be present. A discussion of what constitutes these elements is necessary for a full understanding of the offense.

First of all, the law requires only the slightest penetration of the female sex organ — male emission is not a requirement. Next, the element of force may be either actual or constructive. The force itself need not be physical, but may be present in the form of a threat of serious bodily harm. Constructive force involves a real fear of a dangerous consequence on the part of the woman if she does not comply with her attacker's instructions.

Although the victim's consent may negate the crime, the UCMJ requires that the consent be freely and voluntarily given. Consent induced by fear or fraud is nonconsent in the eyes of the law. Likewise, a woman mentally incapacitated by drugs, intoxication, insanity, etc., cannot give consent to the act.

The force and nonconsent elements may be manifested in the form of resistance, but words of resistance are not enough to substantiate this offense. The safest approach in explaining the amount of resistance required to establish force is that the victim's resistance must have been genuine, active and in good faith.

Closely associated with rape is the offense of statutory rape, which is carnal knowledge of a female under a stated age, with or without her consent. It differs from rape in that in statutory rape, the resistance, force and consent ingredients are missing. It requires only sexual intercourse with a girl under the stated age, which is 16 in both the military jurisdiction and most states. A honest belief, or even being informed that a female is over 16 is not a defense.

Another crime relating to rape is assault with intent to commit rape. The elements of this offense are: an assault, with specific intent to have sexual intercourse, with a woman not the wife, by force and without her consent. The distinguishing factors in this offense are that there must be an assault and there must be the intent to have intercourse. The assault can be accomplished without even touching the female such as by threats with a knife.

Penetration is also unnecessary, for it is the mere intent which is the crime. For example, an assailant is guilty of assault with intent to commit rape although he stops before the act, or because he is driven off or frightened away. The same requirements and restrictions regarding consent apply to this offense as in rape.

The penalties for these sex crimes can be very severe. Rape is punishable by death or other punishment directed by a court-martial. Assault with the intent to commit rape may be punished by forfeiture of all pay and allowance, confinement at hard labor not to exceed 20 years, and a dishonorable discharge. Carnal knowledge may be punished by forfeiture of all pay and allowances, confinement at hard labor not to exceed 15 years and/or dishonorable discharge.

We urge you to support the Rape Prevention Campaign here. You can help make others aware of the problems of rape and its consequences. In turn, you will be helping to create a safe and healthy post for everyone.

Boxers win big in Eufaula

"After giving the boxing team a good father-to-son talk, letting them know that becoming a winner is not merely enough — they have to be dedicated — they were ready to put on a good show," said coach Anthony Stoddard.

And that's just what the Fort Benning Doughboy boxers did when they traveled to Eufaula, Ala. last weekend to fight against teams from Eufaula, Dothan and Fort Rucker, Ala. They came home with a stunning 12 wins out of 13 bouts.

"We had a chance to let our conditioning work for us since the team has been putting in some long hours in the gym and some tough miles up and down hills," said Stoddard.

"The work proved to be fruitful, the soil was rich and the crops were ripe. The only thing left was to harvest the crops and that's exactly what happened. It was a fertile night for us."

Stoddard described the victories and defeat of the night:

Leonard Moody dropped his opponent twice in the first round before finishing him off in the third with a knockout.

Allan Richmond, who is back with the team after a long break, knocked his opponent out in the second round with a combination to the body and a sharp left hook to the head.

Jeffrey Johnson, selected to attend the All-Army training camp, knocked his opponent out after only 56 seconds into the first round. He floored his rival by throwing a straight right to the head.

Charles Terry had a tough time because of his height but, because of his endurance, managed to pull out a win in the last round.

William Gonzalez took an easy victory; his conditioning really paid off.

Gregory Staten started out slow, but once he got going, he couldn't be touched. Using his long jab and moving from side to side, Staten evaded his opponent's aggressiveness to take the bout.

Eric Mills had a good night with his hooks and straight right hands. He defeated his opponent by the judges' decisions.

Dwayne Edwards ended in victory after he proved too strong for his opponent and his opponent just gave up.

Larry Golden once again displayed great boxing techniques, jabbing and moving, and throwing beautiful combinations.

Willie Shriver won easily and, with his boxing ability, made it impossible for his opponent to touch him.

Anthony Morris, "the life of the boxing team," finally got his second win after a great number of tries.

Kelvin Green, voted outstanding boxer, battled with his opponent who was in great shape. But his opponent couldn't get around Green's combination.

Defeat came to Henry McRae in the eighth bout of the night. He tried for a quick knockout, but was caught by his opponent with an overhand right in the last round.

The Doughboys are now preparing for the Georgia State Amateur Athletic Union fights to be held April 6-11 in Atlanta's Omni.

Turkey season already started

It's a long way until Thanksgiving, but Spring Turkey Season has already started. Alabama's season started March 20 and will run through April 25. Georgia's season started March 21 and ends May 3.

Turkey hunters should be aware of a few rules they must follow before heading out on a big "turkey hunt."

There is a bag limit of one bearded gobbler per hunter for the entire reservation. Weapons that can be used are shotguns with a number 2 shot or smaller, muzzle-loading rifles, long bows and compound bows.

Anyone 16 years of age or older hunting on Fort Benning must have a valid Fort Benning Hunting Permit and a Fort Benning Turkey Permit and Hunter Report (FB (ENG) Form 10).

Hunting permits are issued by Morale Support Activities (Bldg. 229, Crain Hall) to eligible individuals having a valid state license. FB (ENG) Form 10 will be issued to all turkey hunters without charge. Also, a big game license is required by Georgia for hunting turkeys. Hunters who have 1980-81 post permits and Georgia hunting/big game licenses should be reminded that they expire on Tuesday.

The use of recorded calls or sounds, or recorded or electronically amplified sounds or imitations of calls or sounds to hunt any game bird or game animal is prohibited.

Clearance to enter areas for hunting purposes will be followed as outlined in USAIC Regulation 210-2, Hunting and Fishing Regulations.

Completed hunter reports (FB (ENG) Form 10) must be mailed or returned to Morale Support Activities within 14 days after the close of the season.

Dog field trials

The hunting dog points his tail because he smells a quail, while David Grandstead tries to flush the quail out of the release pen during the Field Dog Trials held here last Thursday through Sunday. Dogs from around the country were judged on their ability to track the birds. The overall winner of the event was Wayne Strickland of Statesboro, Ga. and his dog Joe. Grandstead, from Macon, Ga., and his dog placed second on Sunday. See Armchair Sports for more about the event.

Dog days at Benning

By Becky Bulgrin

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Being a sportswriter isn't always easy, but sometimes it can be quite an adventure.

Sunday afternoon on Lae Field here, another reporter and I were taking pictures of the Field Dog Trials sponsored by Fort Benning. Although I had an idea of what was to go on during the trials, I wasn't prepared for what we went through to get pictures of the event.

Hunting dogs were brought in from around the country to be judged on their ability to track quail. The birds were set up in different parts of the field.

When we arrived at the field, we were told to hop on the back of a truck. It was filled with cages of hunting dogs. We chose a seat on top of the cages with the judge, some of the dogs' owners and their children.

Unfortunately, it rained hard the night before and mud puddles surrounded us. Since the others had been to trials before, they came prepared with boots and appropriate clothing. However, we weren't! The mud splattered us as we bumped along the trails holding on to the cages and each other.

I couldn't believe the way the truck made its way through the ruts. "It's a four-wheel drive," the others told me, "it's made for this kind of thing."

"Hold on!" said the driver. "We're going through the roughest part of the trail."

As we struggled through, bobbing and weaving, we almost lost a dog and his cage off the end of the truck and lucky me, it was the one I was sitting on!

However, I was grateful for one thing. The other reporter was gung-ho. He didn't hesitate to jump into the mud when the truck stopped to let the judge and driver off to get a closer watch on the dogs. When the dogs smelled a quail, they'd actually point them out with their tails, I was told. But rather than jump into the mud myself, I took their word for it.

While these guys and their dogs seemed to be having a good time, the whole thing wasn't exactly my idea of fun. I may be open to new experiences but, actually, I couldn't wait to get off the bouncing truck.

"She's never eaten quail," said one young boy to his friend.

"You don't know what you're missing!" said the friend.

"How about quail eggs; ever have those?" the boy asked.

"No, those neither," I said.

He couldn't seem to believe it and gave it one more try. "Quail egg poundcake?"

"Nope," I said, and had to laugh.

I was relieved to see that we were heading toward the starting point. Going right past the starting point, I wanted to jump off the truck.

The truck stopped up the road and the driver asked, "Ready to go again?"

"Uh, no thanks," the other reporter and I replied as we headed toward our vehicle.

We were invited to come to the next Field Trial that's being held here in the future. If I do happen to go, I'm making sure of two things. I'll be prepared and I'll have eaten some quail — even if it's only quail salad!

Young kickers in action

By Martha E. Duncan

Youth Activities correspondent

After opening day jitters and a week of practice, the Youth Activities soccer teams were back in action Saturday. Game one in the Termite Division had the Tornados lose their gust to the Chiefs 6-3. High scorer for the Chiefs was Adam Cassidy as he kicked in three of the goals. Ryan Yates scored twice and Mark Cascolan added one. Defensive standouts included Chuck Porter, Clifton Messer and Eric Gerkin.

Eric Vogel scored twice for the Tornados and Angelito Bernier added one. Defensive standout was goalie Cathie Helmbold.

The Termites' second game had the Bullets and Eagles play a super defensive game as the Bullets' Todd Walker managed one goal against the Eagles, defeating them 1-0. Offensive standouts included the Bullets' center forward Joseph Allen and wing Slade Vantine. Defensive standouts were halfback Cindy Jansco, fullback Melanie Hallums and goalie Danny Rexford. The Eagles had their "sweeper" David Deprospero display great defense.

Another close encounter was the action seen on the Pee Wee Field. The Demons only managed one goal to take the win over the Cougars 5-4. High scorers for the Demons included Jason Bargewell and Adam Helmbold with two goals each and Mike Dinkens with one. George Bailey was their defensive standout.

Ronald O'Neal Jr. and Terry Kimball each scored twice for the Cougars. Justin Winter was the team's sweeper who had a great day. Six teams saw action in the Midget Division. The Saints swept the Hustlers 3-1. Saint scorers were Thomas Longhorne with two and Raymond King with one. Defensive standouts included Gregory McCann, center back, John Rose, right defense, and Robert Gilstrap, left defense.

The Hustlers' only score came from Kurt McLeod. Their defensive standouts were Peter Diebold and Paul Nichols.

The Panthers pounced on the Rebels 6-4 in game two. Chris Andrade and Tim Sanders scored three each for the Panthers. Defensive standouts for the Panthers included goalie Vincent Pruitt, center halfback Pam Danielski and left fullback Rod Brown. The Rebels could only get four goals past the Panthers' tough defense. Todd Valentine kicked in two with Steve Genetti and Jeff Britton each contributing one. Defensive standout was halfback Brant Bargewell.

The day's final game was between the Cosmos and the Demons who tied 1-1. The game had both teams display aggressive offensive and defensive tactics. The Cosmos scored the first goal and kept the Demons from scoring until the game's final two minutes when Piet Hoebecke managed a high kick over the Cosmos' goalie.

The Cosmos' scorer was Tom Williams who got an assist from Mike Saliba. Their defensive standouts were fullback Andrea Johnson and goalie Bill Sells. Theresa Parker showed outstanding defense for the Demons as she controlled the center of the field, continually advancing the ball. Games resume tomorrow at Gordon Field at 10 a.m.

Custer Terrace

A Card Night for adults is being held tonight from 7:30 to 11 in the Community Life program room (located behind the Post Office in the Community building). Different card games will be played and admission is 25 cents.

Survey results show concerns

The Commanding General's directed door-to-door survey of Custer Terrace housing showed that two of the main concerns of the families were safety and security and problems with repair and maintenance.

More than half the families surveyed included written comments and the two other most frequent replies were about family housing improvements and community living.

The Custer Survey was conducted Feb. 23-26 and revealed:

•974 service members with 2,280 dependents were residing in the 1,045 unit housing area.

•Approximately one-fifth of the privately owned vehicles and 15 percent of the privately owned weapons are either not registered or registration was not on file with the Provost Marshal's Office.

•Of 371 pets owned by the residents, 138 were not registered with the Post Veterinarian.

The large number of occupant complaints about pets running loose is directly related to the high percentage of unregistered pets. Letters from the Assistant Commander requiring immediate correc-

AER passes last year's contributions

Contributions of $45,248 have been collected toward the 1981 Army Emergency Relief (AER) fund drive as of Tuesday.

This exceeds last year's contributions of $28,400 by 59 percent with three weeks left on the drive, according to Maj. Charles H. O'Dell, chief of Fort Benning's

Army Community Service.

AER is a private, non-profit fund to benefit Army members, both active duty and retired, and their families in emergencies. Fort Benning's response to the AER fund drive is an excellent example of the Army's belief in 'helping take care of its own'.

managing or personnel officer.

Active duty members are also eligible to participate in the Veterans Administration (VA) home loan program. Members with at least 181 days of continuous active duty have full entitlement for the VA home, mobile home and/or lot, and condominium benefit. VA guarantees a loan made by a private lender for this benefit, which includes repairing, altering or improving a home. It also applies to a farm residence that a service member intends to occupy as a home. VA establishes the maximum permissible interest rate which is coordinated with the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

An important advantage of this program is that, in most cases, lenders do not require down payments. In some areas where private capital is not available, VA may make loans directly to active duty members. Those interested should contact their local regional office for details.

The first step in processing any VA loan is determining the service member's eligibility. Personnel officers can provide details about how to get a certificate documenting eligibility.

Also, soldiers who have already used the VA loan benefit may be able to reuse entitlement if the requirements can be met. The local VA regional office can supply details. Soldiers considering either loan program may want to get complete details on both to determine which will be more to their advantage.

CHAMPUS helps medical bills

Jacobs' child was five-years-old when she had to go into a civilian hospital. He didn't worry too much about the bills since medical care provided to soldiers' dependents is known as one of the major advantages of military service. About 20 years ago Congress approved a plan in which the government would pay part of the cost of supplemental medical care for dependents of active duty members in civilian medical facilities. Called the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS), the plan has been continually expanded and now covers retired members, their spouses and children, surviving spouses and children of deceased active duty and retired members.

Outpatient (care in a doctor's office or clinic) or inpatient (hospitalization) care can be obtained and the government pays a large portion of the cost of reasonable charges for medical care received. A nonavailability statement is usually required when someone wishing to use CHAMPUS for non-emergency inpatient care lives within 40-miles of a Uniformed Services hospital providing this care. This requirement should be checked out before dependents enter a civilian hospital for non-emergency inpatient care.

CHAMPUS can also be used in overseas areas. All military hospitals have a full-time CHAMPUS advisor for more information. Advisors are also located as needed in other military medical facilities or in commands that don't include medical facilities.

The Army has many other benefits to take care of its own. If recent legislation put before Congress passes, there may be other new benefits to help soldiers.

Survey

tive action will be sent to the owners of unregistered vehicles, weapons and pets and to members whose registration was not verified.

The majority of Custer Terrace residents were very cooperative and eager to improve their neighborhood and maintain their quarters in very good overall condition.

Approximately one-fourth of the comments identified problems with repair and maintenance. New systems and procedures have been implemented by the Directorate of Facilities and Engineering (DFAE) to improve response time for work orders for repair and maintenance.

Faulty plumbing is commonly caused by occupants flushing paper towels down commodes and pouring grease down kitchen sink drains.

Quarters are painted on a three-year cycle as restricted by regulation. The paint used meets minimum government standards. Cracks in walls and ceilings are normally caused by the settling of the building. These cracks are repaired when units are painted unless extensive enough to require work order repair.

A recurring contract to repair floor tile will begin in early May. Custer Terrace units were reroofed in 1973 with a 15-year life shingle. Very few leaking roofs have been reported and repair is fast.

Due to funding limitations, quarters are sprayed with insecticide only when requested by occupants. Best results are achieved when all units in a multiple occupancy building are fumigated at the same time and a second treatment is applied six weeks later.

Collection of trash is regularly scheduled on either a Monday and Thursday or Tuesday and Friday basis. However, manpower shortages occasionally make strict compliance with the regular schedule impossible. In the event trash is not collected on a Monday due to manpower shortage, the pick up will be rescheduled for Tuesday. Wednesday is used as a "catch up" day. Occupants are also reminded that no trash is collected on federal holidays. If trash has not been collected by late afternoon, occupants are advised to take trash back inside to prevent the garbage from being strewn throughout the neighborhood by animals, wind, etc. Trees killed by pine beetles are in the process of being removed from wooded areas in Custer Terrace.

A line item Family Housing Improvement Project for Custer Terrace in the amount of $2.6 million has been submitted to higher headquarters for approval. This project, if approved and funded by Congress, would provide additional parking spaces, street lights, increased capacity in storage and additional playground areas. A work order has been submitted to post engineers requesting that parking spaces be marked off for the Custer Terrace residents.

One-third of the comments concerned uncontrolled pets, speeding vehicles and a need for additional Military Police (MP) patrols. Dogs running loose are a special danger to children and are responsible for much of the litter and mess in some areas. Aggressive action by the Law Enforcement Command is designed to bring this serious problem under control. Two MP patrol units have recently been added to the night shift which will increase the patrol activity in housing areas.

Benning hams help Hurtsboro

by Tom Sabel

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Disaster struck nearby Hurtsboro, Ala. when a tornado devastated the town. The communications were gone. People wondered if their relatives living in the town were alive or dead.

If it weren't for a dedicated group of ham radio operators, many of them would be wondering still. The more than 70 amateur radio operators were activated by the Civil Defense emergency communications network to make sure vital information was getting into and out of Hurtsboro.

Three of the operators are soldiers and they set up a radio station in their office, the Tactical Communications section of the Command and Tactics Department in Infantry Hall.

According to SFC Edward Willoughby, the Civil Defense network was officially activated at 4:26 Wednesday morning, but he had been on the radio an hour earlier.

"We work through the Columbus Civil Defense control center at the national weather service station at Columbus Airport," said Willoughby. "We've been relaying weather information, some official messages and health and welfare information." Health and welfare information is letting friends and family know whether their friends or relatives in Hurtsboro are alright or injured, he explained.

Willoughby, who goes by the call sign of WB4TOM, Capt. Eric Wooster, KA4IUP, and MSgt. Jack Wood, WD4PQW, have been taking turns monitoring the radio coming out of Hurtsboro. Since their station is on post the Emergency Operations Center here has been listening in.

"Most of the air traffic has been health and welfare reports," said Wooster.

Willoughby explained that ham radio operators are often the only communications out of a disaster area during the early moments.

"There are four hams in the Hurtsboro area. Two of the most active are K4OTA and N4BJZ." By working with Civil Defense they are also authorized to set up emergency communications.

"When the power goes out, like it did in Hurtsboro, the ham's mobile radios may be the only communications in the area," said Willoughby.

"We do anything we can to decrease property damage and save lives," added Wooster. "We do our little part to help."

SFC Edward Willoughby monitors the radio immediately after the Hurtsboro disaster.

Thieves convicted of stealing tire

The two men caught stealing a spare tire from a parked pick-up truck in Infantry Hall's parking lot on March 9 were recently convicted in federal court.

The two men were sentenced to three months in jail and nine months probation by Judge William L. Slaughter, U.S. magistrate.

The men, both civilians from Columbus, were caught in the act by military police. After charging them with larceny of private property, the men were issued ejection orders.

Today's soldier not dumb, misjudged

By Cathe Franklin

Fort Gordon Public Affairs Office

I am not dumb. Nor do I feel my peers are. Yet, I've read numerous newspaper and magazine articles containing statistics that state we are.

As a Private First Class, I feel it is an unjust accusation to claim that the majority of the Army's enlisted soldiers are 'misfits from society who could not find employment elsewhere.' Not only have we been labeled as misfits, but supposedly we have extremely low 'mental categories.'

These two stereotypes have long been accepted as fact and it is high time we innocent take a stand to correct those not only reading the articles but writing and publishing them also.

This standardized mental picture, held in common by many, represents an oversimplified opinion and has been tritely expressed. So much emphasis has been placed on this issue that many of our soldiers are 'conditioned' to believe this of themselves, which accounts for low morale and a lack of self-confidence.

Presently, a total of 51,718 enlisted soldiers have some college credit (13 percent of total strength). Approximately 10,400 enlisted soldiers have Bachelor degrees and 8,155 have Associates degrees, not to mention the better than 600 enlisted soldiers who graduate from Officers Candidate School yearly.

For the enlisted soldier, Army GT scores have been the ruler with which our mental capabilities have been measured. This score is comprised of combined scores from nine military fields — Field Artillery, Clerical, Skill Technique, Mechanical Maintenance, General Maintenance, Surveillance and Communication, Operator Food Service and Electronics.

Basically, your aptitude is placed from Category I (high) to Category V (low). But, since the GT score is comprised of the score from the aforementioned fields, it is really impractical and wrong to state that a Category IV recruit is not capable of performing successfully in his Military Occupational Speciality.

It is quite possible for a recruit to score superbly in a certain field and practically flunk another field, which would bring down his overall GT score.

Myself as an example — I've always enjoyed writing and English classes, so I naturally loaded my high school schedule with these subjects and took the minimum requirements in subjects such as math and science. Today, I add with a calculator and only found out recently that a periodic table was not J. C. Penney's new line of dining room furniture.

But there is no reason for me to know what pi squared is or that C, the speed of light, is equal to 186,000 miles per second. You see, I am a journalist, 71Q. Rarely will this information be used by me and it certainly isn't on my SQT test.

Some of my peers scored higher than average on their GT tests and some scored lower. But is a test a fair way to judge training capabilities? Just because a recruit scores a D on a test does not mean he scores a D as a soldier.

The world's smartest person would be of no benefit to the Army if he could not grasp and adjust to military customs and standards.

Take that Category IV soldier we spoke of earlier; he's not a brain, but let's say that he enjoys fixing things and is handy with tools. Send him to Advanced Individual Training School to educate him in a mechanical field and the Army will have not only a happy soldier but a beneficial one.

Much more profitable than the Category I soldier who remembers the victors of the War of 1812 but cannot remember to place his weapon on safe during inspection arms. Now, who's dumb?

As for the other stigma that rides today's recruit: reasons for entering the military. I do not think there are very many soldiers who can honestly say their sole reason for entering the military was to serve their country. Uncle Sam takes good care of his people.

There is no other employer who is willing to offer you and your dependents free medical and dental care, housing (which includes free utilities), educational benefits, discount stores and other benefits . . . then feed you, clothe you and pay you. The Army is not a last resort for today's soldier, the Army is security. Why are you here??

Of course, the military has some 'misfits' — if you will — and some soldiers who aren't very intelligent, but to prejudice today's entire lower enlisted ranks is wrong and unprofessional.

Judge me as a soldier would be judged; do I know my MOS? how capable am I on the firing range? do I practice military customs and courtesy? do I follow lawful orders? can I march? (Reprinted courtesy of the RAMBLER)

Watch for motorcyclists

It is so easy to suddenly find yourself a KILLER. You are driving along the highway observing the driving safety rules as is your normal custom. You stop at an intersection to make a left turn, look both ways, see a clear opportunity, and then start your turn.

Suddenly you are struck broadside by a motorcycle rider whose motorcycle struck your car, and then his body struck your car. After your initial shock and surprise, you openly admit that you did not see him. YOU SIMPLY DID NOT SEE HIM!

Because you did not see him you now have to carry the burden of responsibility for someone's death on your conscience for the rest of your life.

American drivers are not tuned psychologically to the presence of motorcyclists in the traffic stream. Consequently, what frequently occurs is that motorists do look to see if the road is clear, but if they do not see an automobile their mind tells them the road is clear. The presence of a motorcycle is all too frequently not noticed.

A collision between a 500-pound motorcycle with a 160-pound rider and a 3,000-pound automobile almost always has devastating consequences for the motorcyclist.

More and more drivers are using motorcycles in an effort to save gas and money. The image of the motorcyclist as the black leather jacket gang member has changed completely. Look around you; the motorcyclist of today is your friend, your next door neighbor, your associate at work.

Motorcycles are here to stay. Automobile drivers must get used to this. As they drive they should think motorcycle. Motorcyclists have the same rights on the road as car drivers. Don't be a killer. Be on the alert for motorcycles, especially at intersections.

VA budget requests cut

The Veterans Administration's budget authority request for fiscal year 1982 has been reduced from $24.9 billion to $24.2 billion or 3.2 percent.

The net reduction of $744 million from the request sent to Congress in January has been achieved primarily by lowering overhead and personnel costs.

President Reagan's request for veterans' programs, which is five percent above fiscal year 1981, asks Congress to appropriate $22.7 billion and to enact legislation that would cost $806 million. Funds already available for FY82, $720 million, would bring the total budget authority to $24.2 billion, for a net increase of $1.3 billion over the combined amounts for FY81.

The stated goal of the revised budget request is to reduce the rate of increase in spending from fiscal year 1981 to 1982.

General operating expenses for the agency were scheduled to increase in the earlier budget proposal, for example. In the revised budget, they will drop by $38.2 million from the 1981 level and average employment will drop by 1,903 from the 1981 revised level.

Savings in construction were achieved through the cancellation of two new hospitals, one in Baltimore and one in Camden, N.J., by deferring other construction projects.

Savings in personnel will be achieved by combining the functions of the VA data processing centers at St. Paul, Minn., with other similar centers and by reorganizing the field structure of the Department of Veterans Benefits to consolidate claims processing and loan guaranty functions into fewer locations.

Other savings would be achieved by:

- proposed legislation which would place restrictions on travel reimbursement for veterans receiving treatment for non-service connected medical problems;
- tightening eligibility requirements for non-service connected dental care; and,
- limiting bonuses paid to VA doctors to 12 percent of the cost of base salaries.

The restrictions on travel reimbursement and dental care were proposed in the Carter budget, but for a later effective date.

For compensation, the budget requests an appropriation of nearly $8.7 billion, an increase of $74.4 million above FY81 and proposed legislation for an 11.2 percent compensation rate increase. The 11.2 percent rate increase, to be effective Oct. 1, 1981, will cost $946 million in FY 1982.

Pensions are estimated at $4.1 billion with an automatic cost-of-living increase of 11.2 percent included.

Burial benefits and miscellaneous assistance will require $204 million, up $5 million over 1981 requirements.

Enrollment in education programs is expected to continue to decline in 1982 reducing the request for readjustment benefits to nearly $1.7 billion. This is $381.8 million below 1981. The Reagan budget, like the January budget, requests the elimination of flight and correspondence training, but with an earlier effective date, July 1, 1981, rather than Oct. 1, 1981.

The medical care appropriation request for 1982 is $6.7 billion, an increase of $348.9 million over the revised request for 1981 and $330 million under the earlier budget submission for 1982.

No change is anticipated in the number of hospital patients treated.

The medical and prosthetic research appropriation request of $145.7 million is $7.5 million higher than the revised request for FY 1981 although $9.7 million under the earlier 1982 budget submission.

Funding for outpatient medical visits by non-service connected veterans will be lower than 1981. In addition, the 91 readjustment counseling centers for Vietnam Era veterans, for which the legislative authority expires on Sept. 30, 1981, will not be continued.

New programs for which funding is requested include:

- improved management and collection of VA's overpayment debts;
- new data files on Agent Orange exposure; and,
- redesign of automated payroll and personnel records system.

Cars drug bust targets

Did you know that your car can be "busted" for drugs? It's true, an automobile, boat or aircraft may be legally seized by the Government if illegal drugs (including marijuana) are found in it or on any person in the car. This applies also where the car is used to facilitate the possession, transfer or sale of these illegal substances.

For example, a car owned by Specialist Four Trusting and loaned to Specialist Four Dazed could be forfeited if Dazed did any of the forbidden acts. The vehicle is legally forfeited at the time the offense occurs. When a vehicle is to be forfeited the car is seized and a federal civil lawsuit filed against the car itself.

A recent case illustrates this: United States versus One 1975 Mercedes 289S, etc. In this case, the car became Government property because of four marijuana cigarette butts in its ashtray. The Government must show only "probable cause" that the vehicle was involved in the improper events. Probable cause is a reduced standard of less than that required in order to convict someone before a courts-martial. This burden then shifts to the car owner to come forward to show that the Government did not have facts exhibiting probable cause.

Lack of knowledge by the owner of the illegal activities is normally not enough to get the car back.

Although harsh, the law is designed to deter illegal drug or marijuana possession, transfer and sale. It applies to automobiles, vessels and aircraft, on or off-post. It is immaterial if the amount of drugs or marijuana possessed is relatively small. Some actual cases will illustrate the law:

•A car was forfeited where a passenger without the knowledge of the owner was committing a crime relating to narcotics. MAKE SURE YOUR PASSENGERS DO NOT CARRY ILLEGAL ITEMS AND DO NOT TRANSPORT THOSE PASSENGERS IF THEY DO. US v. Addison, 260 F. 2d 908.

•A car was forfeited when one car was changed for another in order to enable a secret transfer of drugs to take place while evading policeman's surveillance. US v. One 1971 Chevrolet Corvette auto, serial number 1943715121113, 496 F. 210.

Letters to the Editor

Patient praises care received at Martin Army Community Hospital

To the Editor;

Devotion to duty, efficiency, professionalism and concern for others.

These are words that are very seldom used together, but in this case they do go together like "Love and Marriage" in describing a very select group of people that I had the good fortune to be associated with at Martin Army Community Hospital.

I have heard many conflicting accounts of the service rendered at MACH, but I am a firm believer of the Golden Rule.

"Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Treat other people with respect and the rewards will be self-evident.

Recently while I was a patient at MACH for an emergency operation and recovery period, I had the honor of becoming associated with a highly trained group of the people who demonstrated the traits mentioned above. Devotion to Duty, Efficiency, Professionalism and Concern for the welfare and wellbeing of others.

I want to take this opportunity to commend this group for a job well done. Starting with the personnel in the Emergency Room and the quick, efficient way they diagnosed my case, the anesthesiologist Dr. Barnett. This woman is fantastic and the best in her field of endeavor, the urology clinic headed by Lt. Col. Wilson and his very reliable physicians assistant (PA) Warrant Officer Candidate Mr. Brick. I especially want to thank and commend these people for being the professionals that they are, the personnel that work in the Recovery and Intensive Care Unit (all 3 shifts), who go about their duties most efficiently.

In my case "My wish was their command." I personally do not believe that there are any more aggressively trained personnel to be found in any hospital anywhere.

After my stay in "Recovery and Intensive Care" I was moved to ward 7A for the remainder of my stay. Here once again I doubt if the service could have been any better. I commend chief nurse Major Gumbert and her subordinates (all 3 shifts) for a job well done. Keep up the good work.

Once again as an ex-patient I say "Thanks one and all." You are all now and forever tops in your profession with me and my family.

Cheers for post vet

To the Editor:

This letter should have been written three years ago. I would like to compliment Dr. Gwendolyn McCormack of the Fort Benning Animal Clinic.

Ever since she has taken charge the clinic projects a love for the animals through the cleanliness and "sweet, bearable smelling" atmosphere. It really is a joy to take our family dog there for her annual shots, and because the way the appointment system is set up there is virtually no waiting period.

Thanks again, Dr. McCormack. I'm sure there are a lot more people singing your praises but, like me, have not taken the time to express them.

Lower airfares cut TDY costs

Are you going on Temporary Duty (TDY) anytime soon?

If so, you should plan to pay more to travel by air because airline fares, like other costly items today are on the rise.

"However," according to Mary H. O'Conner, chief personnel movements branch, Transportation Office DIO, some airlines are offering discount fares for round trip travel at a greatly reduced cost.

"Only a few seats are available under these discount fares," she said. "So it is very important that reservations be made as far as possible in advance of TDY to take advantage of the 20 to 25 percent savings.

"Reservations can be made prior to issuance of the TDY orders and can be made as far as 90 days in advance of travel.

"In order to qualify for the discount fares, the round trip may not exceed 60 days and tickets must be purchased a minimum of 14 days in advance of travel. The traveler must also remain over a Friday.

"As soon as firm travel requirements are known," she said, "you should contact the Transportation Office, Bldg. 18, at telephone number 545-1223.

"You should request orders directing TDY travel be issued and furnished to the Transportation Office a minimum of 20 days prior to your date of departure from this installation," she said.

"This is so the office has enough time to prepare the necessary documents and purchase the tickets."

Because of the limited funds and harsh conditions imposed on this command, it is necessary for all concerned to pay close attention to these guidelines, according O'Conner.

AER fund rising

Contributions of $58,850 have been collected toward the 1981 Army Emergency Relief (AER) fund drive as of Wednesday.

AER is a private, non-profit organization to benefit Army members, both active duty and retired, and their families during emergencies. Fort Benning's response to the AER fund drive is an excellent example of the Army's belief in "taking care of its own."

The drive ends April 16.

Active duty soldiers who fought in WWII sought by military

Are any of you active duty enlisted soldiers a World War II veteran?

If you are, the Army is very interested in you. In a recent screening of Master Personnel Files at Department of the Army level, the computers failed to single out any World War II vets in the enlisted ranks who are still on active duty.

At any rate, the Army would appreciate some feedback on any man or woman who served in any service during World War II.

Please call the BAYONET at 545-2201/2202 for any further information about how to get in contact with DA about your services.

Ambulances restricted to post

Martin Army Community Hospital has three ambulances which are used to provide transportation to the hospital on an emergency basis only.

Of the three vehicles, normally two are operational at any given time with the other one having maintenance being performed on it.

Lately the emergency vehicle section has been receiving requests for ambulance service for injuries that are not life threatening or limb threatening. They actually received one call for an ambulance to make an emergency run for someone who was constipated.

According to Mr. Allen Garner, shift leader of the section, they receive at least a half dozen phone calls each week requesting an ambulance when an ambulance is not needed. Some of these calls come from service members who live downtown.

"Even if it is a case where an ambulance is needed we cannot make a pickup off the reservation," Garner said.

If a medical emergency exists in the local community, a request should be made to one of the local ambulance services listed in the yellow pages of the current telephone book.

Costs reimbursed

In case of active duty military personnel, the cost of emergency ambulance service from the local community to Martin Army Community Hospital or direct from place of injury to a local civilian treatment facility will be paid for by MACH when the bill is received from the ambulance company.

Family members of active duty military personnel, retired military personnel and their family members under the age of sixty-five years old may submit ambulance bills to CHAMPUS on a cost sharing basis.

Authorized persons over the age of sixty-five and those under age sixty-five that are disabled for a period of two years may qualify for reimbursement for ambulance service if the ambulance's equipment and personnel meet Medicare requirements. Medicare payments are also on a cost sharing basis.

Retired military personnel who have been awarded disability by the Veterans Administration due to a service connected disease or injury may obtain reimbursement for ambulance service.

A medical statement proving that the ambulance service was a medical emergency must be submitted with the respective medical bill at the time reimbursement is requested. Statements will not be issued for non-emergency ambulance service.

"Each time we get a call for an emergency vehicle we try to screen it as best we can to be sure it's a real emergency," Garner said. "Whenever we make a run that is not really necessary we stand the chance of not being able to respond when someone needs us badly."

Commanders have the responsibility to get soldiers to a medical facility if the injury doesn't threaten life or limb. When it is determined that an injury does threaten life or limb the number to call is 544-3911. If for some reason that number is out of order the emergency room number, 544-3102 or 1502, can be used.

The point of contact for CHAMPUS beneficiaries is the CHAMPUS Advisor, Patient Administration Division, Martin Army Community Hospital. In case of Medicare patients, the point of contact for reimbursement for emergency ambulance service is the Social Security Administration, 1520 3rd Ave., Columbus, Ga. The point of contact for assistance in processing a medical emergency ambulance bill for service connected veterans administration beneficiaries is the Georgia State Veterans Service Officer, Cross Country Plaza, Columbus, Ga.

Bring along fun

By William W. Erbach, Sr.

36th Engineer Group Chaplain

If there was a picnic and you had to plan what to take there would be certain things you would automatically place on your list: sandwiches, soda, chicken, eggs and, of course, a blanket and pillow.

If I were to tell you to report for work at my house to plant flowers there would be a certain list of things that would pop into your head to bring: a shovel, hoe, wheelbarrow, coveralls and maybe a sunbonnet, or hat if you prefer.

The important thing is to be prepared when you get there because you are too far away from your resources to go back for what you forget, and you really can't count on someone else to bring things for you.

No matter how hard you plan there always seem to be something that gets left behind, and that is what I want to mention today. What is often left behind when we go to work, school or even on a picnic? We often forget to take our good times with us.

Once on a picnic I overheard a small boy running up to his dad and say, "I'm not having any fun."

I was interested in the response this very wise father gave. He didn't get excited, he didn't drop what he was doing to entertain the boy, he didn't give him money to buy happiness on a cone. He merely said, "Maybe you forgot to bring your fun with you."

The child looked surprised for a minute and then smiled. I guess it was something they had talked over sometime in the past, because without any hesitation he said, "I guess I'll get the kids together and play a game."

A wonderful idea to remember is to bring your good time with you. Maybe you can't always carry a game with you or be instantly prepared for a picnic, but you certainly can carry interesting thoughts in your mind.

Think about the wonderful things you have wondered about. Leaves, for instance. How many kinds do you suppose there are? Everyone likes to hear a good story. There is no reason for you ever to say you are not having fun. The way to have fun is to decide to be happy and take your good times with you wherever you go.

Evaluation important to career

"I'm sorry, but you can't clear post without a SEER sergeant," explained the clerk in the SEER section.

"But, I've got to leave post today," said the disgruntled NCO, "my plane leaves for Germany tomorrow." Similar scenes happen frequently to soldiers trying to clear post, according to SSgt. Johnnie Everett, NCGIC, of the Senior Enlisted Evaluation Report (SEER) section here. "One of the main problems is people coming to the Adjutant General (AG) Compact trying to clear post without a SEER."

"When a soldier comes to the Enlisted Personnel Management Branch to clear without a SEER we called their unit PSNCO and tel him that the soldier can't clear without one," said Everett. "If the unit can't get a SEER completed on the soldier that day, then the only alternative is to have a Disposition Form (DF) signed by the PSNCO explaining the reason and date the report will be forwarded. However, this does not insure a SEER will arrive after the soldier leaves. This will cause the soldier future problems.

According to Everett, "Many people think that a SEER is automatically kicked out of the system to cue them that a report is due, but it just doesn't happen this way in many cases." It is very important that a soldier who needs a SEER has the initiative to keep checking with his rater (immediate supervisor) to insure that his SEER is completed, he explained. The Army places great importance on a soldier's SEER score because this score, along with other qualifications, are used as a basis for such personnel actions as promotion, school selection, assignment, military occupational specialty (MOS) classification, command sergeant major (CSM) designation, and qualitative management actions. The SEER is designed to provide a brief, clear assessment of the rated soldier's past performance and potential for the future. It is obvious to see how much impact the lack of a report would have, explained Everett.

There are many instances besides a PCS move where a soldier needs a SEER completed. Under the present system, soldiers in grade E-5 through E-9 need to have a SEER annually or anytime their immediate supervisor changes. For newly promoted E5s, an initial report is due 90 days from the date of promotion.

Another problem facing the SEER section, according to Everett, is units not getting their soldiers' SEER back to AG Compact within the suspense date.

"There units, for the most part, are completing the SEERs correctly. Some common errors in preparing SEERs are: For instance the incorrect beginning and end months, incomplete job descriptions, cross referencing of low scores, unauthorized enclosures and signing annual reports prior to the first day of the month following the ending month.

"However, they are missing their suspense dates too," said Everett. "When we identify the need for a SEER we send it down to the unit, giving them at least a month to complete and return it. When the units miss a suspense to us, it makes it extremely difficult to get the SEER to Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. by the required date. They must be in Fort Harrison no later than 60 days after the end of the close-out."

Unit commanders are a vital part of the SEER system, according to Everett. It is the responsibility of the commander to insure that official rating schemes are published by name and duty position and posted in the unit so that each soldier knows his rater, endorser and reviewer.

It is also important for commanders to insure that each rating official is fully qualified to meet his responsibilities and knows whom he is responsible to rate. Commanders must also make sure that reports are prepared only by the individuals designated in the published rating chain.

In order for the SEER system to work as it is designed, each rated soldier must be provided with a copy of his completed SEER and be given any assistance he requires (if requested) in preparing or submitting appeals.

A soldier's immediate supervisor should counsel the rated soldier about his SEER when it is prepared in order to insure that all the rated soldier's question are answered. This helps the rated soldier to understand his short comings so that he knows where improvement is needed.

SEERs are very important to every soldier's career. Right now the biggest step that could be taken to improve the SEER system here would be to make sure that required suspenses are met, says Capt. Shields, O.I.C. SEER section. Raters must know when a report should be completed on every individual he or she rates. Soldiers also have a responsibility to make sure that their SEER is initiated and completed prior to their departure from the installation, said Shield. (ARNews)

'Doughboys', mysterious nickname

By Al Method
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Who, what and why a nickname of "Doughboy?"

Most of the old "brown shoe army" troopers may know that "doughboy" was a nickname for soldiers, more specific infantrymen, during the World War I era before the nickname GI became popular.

The question would probably never come up in modern times, except on Pillsbury commercials, had not the term been preserved at Fort Benning by using it for the name of the football team and home stadium.

The question did come up when a VIP visiting Fort Benning asked, "who, what and why doughboy?" causing a real crisis when it was discovered that the origin of doughboy was not common knowledge here, of all places, at the "Home of the Infantry."

This startling discovery should really be no reason for embarrassment for today's infantrymen, for getting at the bottom of how the nickname "doughboy" originated has intrigued and frustrated researchers for as long as the term has existed.

In fact, the efforts of the Infantry Advanced Course class of 1921 ended with similar results as this account in their yearbook indicates:

"The Origin of Doughboy?"

"In an ambitious attempt to solve this mystery of long standing for the benefit of our readers, we went to no less an authority than Lt. Col. James G. Hannah, director of the Department of Research, and an officer of long service.

"My boy," said the Colonel sadly, "you ask me the only question this department has never been able to solve satisfactorily by the critical research method. In my youth I, too, was intrigued by this mystery and spent many long hours pouring over musty tomes of military lore, delving deep into the official records of our Army back to Revolutionary days, but never have I encountered an explanation that would really explain this perplexing question. This department can only commend your worthy purpose and wish you success in the task you have set yourselves."

"Some say the Cavalrymen started it, sort of making fun of us, I guess, because we have to plod along through the mud, and I suppose that's as reasonable as for us to call them "Yellow Legs."

And so it was all along the line. About all our investigation established was that, as regards this question, there are two major schools of thought, one of which adheres to the origin stated by Sgt. Hill just quoted, while the other contends that "doughboy" is a corruption of the word "dough ball," used to describe a certain type of button worn on the infantry overcoats in the early part of the nineteenth century.

Still another theory comes from the use of pipe-clay (familarly known as "dough") to whiten the trouser stripes of the dress uniform. And here we are forced to rest, leaving the solution.

The 60 years that have passed since this article with its challenge have not provided that master mind who could clear up the questions, but have added to the mystery by introducing more theories.

• Doughboy was apparently first used among the federal soldiers about 1862, during the Civil War, suggested by the large globular brass buttons of the infantry uniform which resembled dumplings or "doughboys" a small round doughnut cooked in soup. This theory is the most accepted origin of doughboy as a nickname for the infantry.

• Some currency has been given to the unlikely theory that infantrymen were called "doughboys" because the flour which they used as a substitute for "pipe-clay" to whiten their uniforms, turned to dough when it rained.

• Another theory is that "doughboy" may have arisen from the word adobe applied by Spaniards in the Southwest to army personnel presumably because of making "dobe" for the construction of their forts and barracks.

Badges honor Airborne history

"Where is the Prince who can afford so to cover his country with troops for its defense, as that 10,000 men descending from the clouds, might not, in many places, do an infinite deal of mischief before a force could be brought together to repel them?"

Benjamin Franklin
1784

Airborne! Highly trained troops descending from the sky. The mystique and romance of airborne forces has stirred the imagination of men through the ages.

In recognition of the skill and daring of paratroopers, the U.S. Army developed badges to honor these troopers.

The history of the coveted "wings" of the U.S. paratrooper began after the activation of the 501st Parachute Battalion here on Oct. 1, 1940. It soon became apparent that an isignia was needed to identify the members of this unique organization. The Chief of Infantry suggested a design, on a light blue background, similar in appearance to the badge of the Air Corps pilots.

Parachutist

The War Department General Staff referred the matter to the Office of the Quartermaster General (OQMG), who was to determine if the design was suitable. OQMG suggested that parachute troops be identified by a qualification badge rather than a shoulder sleeve isignia. The Parachutist Badge was formally authorized on March 10, 1941.

During World War II, the 82nd Airborne and the 101st Airborne Division used Pathfinders teams to a great extent. In the early morning hours of June 6, 1944, Pathfinders became the first American troops to touch French ground in the Normandy Invasion.

Soon after the invasion these units adopted as isignia for the individuals who had participated in Pathfinder missions during combat. Never specifically authorized for wear, it became standard for organized Pathfinder teams and graduates of the Pathfinder course at Fort Benning to wear the isignia.

The isignia was chosen from a number of designs submitted by the members of the original Pathfinders. It consisted of a flaming torch of gold, red, and dark blue connected to a single gold wing. This was mounted on a dark blue background and was worn on the right sleeve immediately above the overseas bars.

From 1948 until 1964 several requests for authorization of the Pathfinder isignia were made to Department of the Army. In 1964 the isignia was adopted by DA. The nomenclature was changed to badge and the Commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School, was authorized to award the Pathfinder badge to any person who had successfully completed Pathfinder training.

Pathfinder

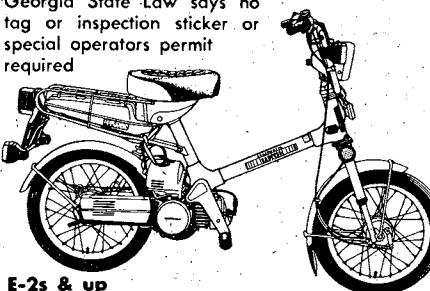

This badge differed somewhat from the originally worn, in that the background was black, suggestive of the night operations come to Pathfinder units.

In October 1968, Department of the Army announced the replacement of the cloth badge with a metallic badge which was to be worn on the left breast pocket, in the same manner as the Parachutist Badge. Subdued sew-ons were authorized, and a subsequent message announced that the Pathfinder and Parachutist badges could be worn side by side, with the Parachutist badge to the wearer's right.

How does this country honor its Airborne forces? With three emblems of distinction and history; the Parachutist Badge, the Pathfinder Badge and the Gilder Badge.

Nightmare precedes CQ duty

By Tim Boivin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Being known as the perpetual CQ around our company (ie. someone insane enough to always say yes when asked to take someone else's duty) and based on my past experiences, here is a recurring nightmare I have the night before going on duty.

The nightmare revolves around a simple white sheet of paper with black lines; the dreaded CQ log. It starts out simple enough with the log twirling round and round until it finally stops and comes in focus.

First entry reads like this; assumes duties at 0800 Saturday from Sgt. Harvel Schnard, who leaves with black scuff marks every 24 inches down the hallway. Immediately get a buffer, start stripping out marks and then buffing floor out. At duty's end recall this as high point of duty.

0900 Get first phone call while on duty. Someone named Sgt. Hellfire of the Symbionese Liberation Army wants to know if you understand the proper method for receiving a bomb threat. Heart sinks to heels until someone starts chuckling on the other end before hanging up.

1000 Immediately above the CQ desk is second floor latrine. Noticed when assuming duties it sounded like someone was taking a shower. On first inspection find out someone was flushing all four toilets simultaneously...for two hours. Entire second floor is covered with two inches of water that seeps down through the ceiling into the television room behind the CQ desk. Ends up being three hours of sweating, mopping and wringing. Couldn't think of a better way to spend a Saturday morning. Beats the pants out of watching Mr. Playthings and Friends.

1300 Washing machine in laundry room sounds like C-130 taking off. After rushing to see what's wrong, slide three feet on floor and fall flat on back before noticing the water hose that came loose. Changing clothes and sweat, mop and wring some more; three hours more.

1600 Just before leaving for dinner in dining facility, three soldiers come in and say they think they're victims of food poisoning. Their faces are as white as Lon Chaney on the late movie. So much for dinner, wasn't really hungry after all.

2000 Hunger pains start to strike stomach area. Remember coupon in wallet for two dollars off any pizza. Pizza arrives two-and-one-half hours later. Condition of pizza is serious. Anchovies are still swimming around, grease drips from crust onto uniform, pizza is cold and soda is warm and flat. By the way, coupon expired yesterday.

2400 Clock strikes midnight and full moon rises from behind clouds, just like the horror movies. First soldiers return from payday night out and begin to dismantle dayroom when beer machine is discovered dry. Can't figure out the moon connection but soldiers finally go upstairs, falling one step for every two. Weird canine howls follow them up the halls as moon fades back behind clouds.

0400 Decide to keep busy and stay alert by polishing boots. SDO arrives just after finishing boots and has three things to say. He really likes the shine on my boots, it has begun to storm and a police call is needed in the muddy field behind the company. But he really does like my boots, even if they are shiny for just 10 minutes as I get my poncho.

0845 Replacement arrives 45 minutes late. Doesn't offer any explanation for tardiness and I'm too tired to ask. He does ask, "How was your night? I hope it was pretty quiet."

Suddenly I feel someone grab my arm. I wake up in a cold sweat and my roommate is standing over the bed, saying, "It was only a dream, Tim. It was only a dream."

Sometimes I wonder.

"Even with a regular job, the extra $1,400 I earned with the Reserve came in handy. It was the difference between barely making ends meet and being able to put a little money away.

"By going direct from Active into the Reserve, I was also able to keep my rank of E-4. I'm now an E-5, pulling in over $1,600 a year. Not

I buy a lot of my auto supplies at the PX. I carry low-cost government life insurance through the Reserve.

"A side benefit that's helped me is the additional training I've picked up in the Reserve. I was an MP on active duty but have become an Accounting Specialist in the Reserve. Right now, that's helping me with the business degree I'm working toward at a local college.

Laundry saves money

By Tim Boivin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Remember doing the laundry last summer in the barracks? How stifling hot it was in that sweatbox known as the laundry room? You can avoid all of that this year by using the services of the Quartermaster Laundry.

The Quartermaster Laundry is across Marchant Avenue from the Airborne snack bar. According to Ruth Drinkard, plant supervisor, the Quartermaster Laundry can serve practically any and all of a soldier's laundry needs except for dry cleaning.

Drinkard said, "You can't get better service than we have here for the money spent. What we charge is less than half of what it costs downtown."

Soldiers aren't the only ones this service is for. It is also open to retired soldiers and dependents.

Clothing can either be turned in at the Quartermaster Laundry building or through company supply sergeants. The various services include:

- One-day laundry service — If the clothing is turned in by 8 a.m. it can be picked up at 4 p.m.

- Payroll deduction plan — $8 is taken out of a soldier's paycheck per month. For this charge the laundry does 26 pieces per week. Drinkard added, "This averages out to about 13¢ per set of fatigues. They come back on a hanger just like any other laundry."

- Hanger service — This is for people not on the payroll deduction plan. It costs approximately 80¢ per set of fatigues.

- Pickup and delivery service is provided for 1st Infantry Training Brigade soldiers twice a week. Daily pickup and delivery service is available for soldiers in Officer's Candidate School (OCS).

- Two-day service for Airborne students instead of the usual three-day service.

- Three-pound 50¢ service — This is for whites, such as underwear, and color-fast items, such as towels. The three-pound bundle is washed for 50¢ and fluff dried.

Second oldest building a surprise

By Bill C. Walton
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Riverside," the commanding general's quarters on Vibbert Ave. is the oldest building here. But if you ask, "What is the second oldest building on post?" You'll get responses that range from bldg. 35 on Main Post to building 303, one of the original hangers at Lawson Army Airfield.

Historians may disagree, as they are prone to do, but research done by Gloria O. Dixon, secretary to Col. Earl F. Lasseter, staff Judge advocate, indicates that Bldg. 5, where she works, is the second oldest building here. Her research project was completed in connection with celebration of Law Day (May 1) 1980.

Records covered by her research go back 150 years, to the time when the lands were purchased by Col. Sovell Woolfolk in 1827 and 1828 - the same year that Columbus became a town. The land had been opened up by lotteries after the Creek Indians had moved by treaty to Alabama in 1825. Plantation size holdings were acquired by combining lotteries and buying up adjacent land. The original name of the Woolfolk place was Cusseta (various spellings) taken from the Indian town located here.

After the Civil War, the estate was broken up and sold. In 1883, Martha Hatcher, wife of Benjamin Hatcher of Columbus, purchased approximately 1,782 acres adjoining the Chattahoochee River.

Arthur Bussey bought the property from the Hatcher family in 1907. He named the place Riverside Plantation and began building of the home that was to become the commanding general's quarters here. Bussey was most noted for his creamery business in Columbus known as Riversid Dairy.

In or about 1917, he decided to move the creamery to his plantation and constructed a new modern building of common brick for this purpose. He was a pioneer in sanitary dairying. The newly constructed creamery had the most modern facilities in use at the time.

When the government purchased the land from Arthur Bussey in 1919, numerous buildings, including "Riverside" and the creamery building were acquired. Fort Benning history shows that various tenants of the creamery, designated and identified as bldg. 5, included the quartermaster's office, post headquarters and the office of the staff judge advocate.

A more convenient location for post headquarters could not be imagined since the commander's office was a short walk from his quarters. Records in the Real Estate Branch, of the Directorate of Facilities Engineers, still show bldg. 5 as post headquarters.

After bldg. 35 was completed in 1935, portions of the post headquarters moved there, with offices of the Staff Judge Advocate, 2nd Judicial Circuit, Region II of the U.S. Army Trial Defense Service (USATDS) and the USATDS Fort Benning Field Office. The courtroom in this building, dedicated to the late retired Col. Robert M. Lathrop was the scene of the early 1970's case of the United States vs Calley.

ACS becoming more important

WASHINGTON — That growing phenomenon known as the junior enlisted family will receive greater attention and support if a recent workshop at Colorado Springs, Colo. bears fruit, according to Department of the Army (DA) officials.

Army Community Services (ACS) representatives from around the world gathered to discuss the scope of their challenge, to hear Army officials pledge their support, and to plan new ways for delivering needed services. The workshop, was the first such major exchange of ideas and programs among ACS workers in many years.

Along with ACS volunteers and volunteer consultants came active duty ACS officers, non-commissioned officers, DA civilians and representatives from the Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps. The participants heard presentations on such topics as management techniques, interoperation with other community agencies, and family advocacy.

The speakers included Sergeant Major of the Army William Connelly, who discussed the changing nature of the Army and today's society, noting the importance of ACS to the enlisted family.

"ACS," he said, "has taken on an importance that goes beyond morale and welfare . . . it's a part in building the cohesion necessary to keep our units together under stress — the overall environment our soldiers live in. By its nature, the Army society is set a little bit apart from civilian society, and a sense of togetherness in the Army community tends to help us build the cohesion necessary in our units. ACS volunteers underscore the sense of people in the Army hanging together and supporting each other. It is a very real contribution," he added.

The Army's top enlisted man also recognized the difficulty of becoming a volunteer ACS worker, observing that "It is just tougher to be a volunteer these days. Economic conditions mean that many of our Army wives have to earn a salary."

Maj. Gen. John Hudachek, commander of nearby Fort Carson and the 4th Infantry Division (Mechanized), addressed the conference as host. He quickly outlined the need for ACS services locally. "Why is ACS important?" the general asked. "In the 4th Mechanized Division, 25 to 30 percent of our privates through specialist four are married and have children. Sixty percent of our E5 and E6's are married and have children. Eighty percent of all these families live off post and have significant needs that our ACS strives to meet."

Hudachek noted that the ACS supplements and even performs many of the helping services previously provided to single soldiers by their units. "ACS is more important as the one way of tying things together for Army families," he said, adding that the increased number of families in the Army has serious implications toward an installation-to-family human services relationship instead of the unit-to-family situation of the past. Does this mean that ACS will not be cooperating with commanders? Not according to Hudachek. "The ACS director and his or her staff must cooperate with the commander. The two must operate together, as the commander has resources and they (ACS) provide much needed feedback to the commander."

He further emphasized this new role by posing the prospect of a total mobilization of a division. In this case there must be an established structure to provide services to soldiers' families remaining in the home area.

Hudachek related several instances and programs at Fort Carson that he believes contributed to maintaining readiness and retaining good soldiers in the Army. High on his list was the immediate reception and placement of new families, financial counseling, food lockers, child services and emergency assistance. "Just recently four Fort Carson families were burned out of their apartments downtown. ACS immediately picked up on this and got them moved to the Ivy Inn (post guest quarters) on post. They helped get three of these families back into their homes and assisted in getting the fourth family, whose home was destroyed, relocated successfully. The unit was not able to do this as they were in the field."

Col. Richard Iverson, director of community support for the adjutant general's office at DA, lauded Fort Carson for their support of the workshop. He said that attendees repeatedly had approached him with positive remarks on its benefit. "Those attending will be able to better see that we recognize their importance in this program. And — just as important — they'll see the significance of ACS in keeping the Army family strong and the Army ready."

Officials say that ACS volunteers and workers throughout the Army should be seeing some positive results from the workshop, since it served both to train the participants and to determine new directions and initiative to help the Army family wherever it is. (ARNEWS)

Ballroom dancing comes alive

By Dave Bristow
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Consuelo Valentine Roberts is a woman with a lot of spirit. She admits to being a senior citizen but doesn't look or act her age.

While many people her age are slowing down and taking life easy, she devotes all her time and talents to teaching the art she loves — ballroom dancing.

Since she began teaching in 1960 she's taught a lot of Fort Benning's officers and enlisted people the art of moving in rhythm to music. At her home in Columbus, which also serves as her dance studio, time stands still. Dances from the "Big Band" era come alive for couples who probably weren't around when they first became popular.

"I've taught many officers and enlisted folks how to dance. Some of them learned their first dance steps here."

One of Fort Benning's couples who take lessons from Mrs. Roberts are Bill and Cindy Powell. Bill, a broadcaster on Fort Benning's TV station, learned his first dance steps from Mrs. Roberts.

"I thought it would be difficult to learn dance because of the coordination you need, plus a good memory. But after Cindy and I started I felt better and really started enjoying it. I realized after the first lesson that it would take work, but all things worthwhile do," said Bill.

"I took ballroom dancing as a physical education subject in college but didn't really learn much," said

Cindy. "I always enjoyed seeing people dance that way in old movies and I thought it would be fun to learn. So we came to Consuelo and she's taught us."

Dances people have only seen in old movies are taught by Mrs. Roberts. The Foxtrot, Waltz, Tango, Cha Cha and Rhumba are only a few of the older dances she teaches. Additionally she knows the latest western dances like Cotton-Eyed Joe, Texas Swing and the Texas Two Step. She also teaches disco and even belly dancing if one desires. "When she told me she took a belly dancing class I could hardly believe it," commented Bill. "How many people do you know who are younger that have the stamina to belly dance?"

Mrs. Roberts' favorite dances are the Tango and Texas Swing. "The western dancing is putting the disco to shame. You see a lot of it being done on the Lawrence Welk Show these days," she commented.

She is proud of the autograph she received from Myron Floren of the Lawrence Welk Show, as she is of the many dance certificates she has hanging on the wall of her studio attesting to her expertise in dance.

Mrs. Roberts has many fond memories of Fort Benning and the dances she's attended with some of her students back when she began teaching. She misses the music of the "Big Band" era. "Not many places offer the right kind of music anymore. I wish there were more places where young people could do ballroom dancing. It seems headed back. I think the hustle has helped to bring it back. Unfortunately, there is not enough of the big band sound in Columbus. I'm puzzled why more is not sponsored."

Mrs. Roberts continues teaching the art of dancing to whoever's interested. Commands of "arms higher" or "feet closer together" are gently but firmly spoken in her quest to make her students the best they can and further the art of dancing.

Bill Powell shows dance teacher Consuelo V. Roberts what he's learned at a dance at a local American Legion Post.

Harassment — a two sided

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Not another article on sexual harassment!"

This statement, which came direct from a woman soldier here, probably summed up the feelings of a lot of people who think all the hype about sexual harassment, discrimination, etc., etc. is being carried a bit too far.

The comment, from a legal clerk at the Staff Judge Advocate Office, Sp6 Cheryl Arnold, may have come more readily from a man because most articles dealing with the subject seem to concern the harassment of women. However, while women may be harassed in more forms than men, before continuing this article, ask yourself:

- "Do I really know all that the term sexual harassment involves?"
- "How widespread is the problem?"
- "What about men - are they as equally subject to sexual harassment as women?"

Sexual harassment comes in many forms, including verbal abuse, profanity, physical abuse, improper sexual contact, indecent actions and gestures, coercion (using one's official position to get sexual favors from subordinates), and sexual favoritism.

Judge individually

Sexual favoritism? How can that be considered harassment? Well, that's where the men come in. For example:

MSgt. Joseph Demming, Directorate Personnel and Community Activities, Personnel Services Division, related experiences he had while serving as a first sergeant in the 524th Personnel Services Company.

"There were a lot of females in the company and when they'd come into my office for a four-day pass or something, I'd make sure the clerk walked in and out because of the things some would try to pull.

Different talents

"They'd say, 'My section said it was OK if I took a four-day pass.' While sometimes they had never even talked to their section, it wasn't what they said, it was how they said it and how they acted while saying it."

Demming explained, "They'd talk real sweet and use definite body language, like sitting with their legs in a certain way. I've talked to other first sergeants who told me about females who would actually proposition them to get something."

He pointed out that some female soldiers may yell "sexual harassment" if they're caught doing something wrong and get into trouble for it.

While women who use body language may not get the "sexual favoritism" they are after, another example could go something like this:

A female soldier is continually late for duty and has been AWOL, along with a couple of other offenses. She has received counseling statements from two different platoon sergeants. Her current platoon sergeant wants appropriate action but does not give her an Article 15; he only warns her to stop.

A male soldier in the same company goes on leave and has problems with his car. He calls before leave ends and explains his problem to his platoon sergeant. The soldier says he'll be back the day after his leave is due to end. He is, and although he has a clean record before this happens, he receives an Article 15 for his first offense.

A male soldier here recalled a few times he had been on company detail.

"The girls on detail were given light jobs like typing, while the guys had to do all the heavy work, like cutting the grass, trimming hedges, etc. One time a girl spoke up and said she was a soldier just like the rest of us and asked why she wasn't out there with the men. I really respected her for that, and I felt more women soldiers should have the same attitude."

Who determines sexual harassment?

Who determines what is and isn't sexual harassment? Many people said it should be defined by the people involved. A total stranger making a complimentary remark to someone may be taken in a different way than if they are acquainted with each other or work together.

Demming, along with many others, said that men and women are different and it's a man's nature to want to compliment a woman with no harm intended.

"Complimentary remarks are OK," said Demming, "but some men take it to extremes. Some make remarks that would make a woman want to crawl under a rock - like mentioning some part of her body."

Demming added that newcomers to the Army should be educated about this type of thing and that the oldtimers need to be re-educated.

"They need to learn that they can't say things to females like they're used to doing," said Demming.

An article on sexual harassment in the February-March 1981 COMMANDER'S CALL, by Lt. Col. J. W. Blades, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Department of the Army, said of the several different types of sexual harassment, verbal harassment is likely to be the most used form. This can range from "Hey honey" and catcalls to cursing or very obscene language yelled from barracks windows, etc.

Indecent, insulting or obscene acts communicated to a female or child under the age of 16 is punishable under the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ), as is conduct that brings discredit to a soldier.

According to Maj. Lewis Thompson, chief of administrative law, Staff Judge Advocate, it may be difficult to prosecute under this.

Nothing in UCMJ

"There's nothing in the UCMJ directly stating sexual harassment," said Thompson. "Most of the time, a conviction for sexual harassment usually involves assault. Also, depending upon what you're talking about - a PFC talking to an NCO could be charged with disrespect or contempt under the UCMJ."

"It obviously depends on what's said and in what context," continued Thompson. "Taking it a step further, sexual harassment could also become an adultery offense under UCMJ."

Article 133 under UCMJ applies to commissioned officers of either sex, cadets or midshipmen and is punishable as "using insulting or defamatory language to another officer in his presence or allowing him to other military persons."

The COMMANDER'S CALL article also stated that physical training (PT) is an activity which has the potential for creating a high incidence of ved coin

abuse. It said the problem is worse if some of the comments and "jody" cadences are initiated or condoned by NCO and officer PT leaders.

Chap. (Maj.) Aaron D. Michelson of the 36th Engineer Group said a female came to him after she was insulted while running PT one day.

"She said she was running past a formation and, under the direction of the person leading them, the whole formation made remarks that really hurt her feelings. Can you imagine a whole formation yelling out to her?" said Michelson.

Arnold said that women who use profane language are trying to compete with the guys.

"They think they have to act and sound like them by causing, etc., then turn around and expect to be treated like a lady," said Arnold. She offered a solution.

"During nine years in the military I've never had anyone continually cursing around me because I conduct myself like a lady at all times. If anybody starts cursing around me, I say, Look I don't curse and don't expect you to curse around me. So they respect your opinion and stop." Most talk of sexual harassment revolves around soldiers, but what about government civilian employees?

According to a recent survey by the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB), one of every four

• See HARASSMENT, page 22

Harassment

civil service employees reported some form of sexual harassment over a 24-month period. The survey was the first to define the extent of sexual harassment within the Federal government and was sent to 23,000 employees.

About 85 percent of the surveys were returned and, while responding to the question, "Have you ever left, considered leaving, or lost a Federal job because someone was bothering you sexually?" Seven percent answered yes. While that doesn't seem like much, the survey results show that seven percent of all federally employed women represents more than 50,000 women.

'He kept bugging me'

A female GS-4 who works in Bldg. 4, where there are many civil service employees, reported that a male soldier who works on her floor would stare at her constantly and it really bothered her.

"Then one time I was on the elevator and he stayed on it with me and asked me when we could go out," she said. "I told him I was dating someone and he said so, he was too. He glares at me in a way that really scares me and still keeps bugging me to go out with him. I get this feeling that I'd hate to get caught somewhere alone with him."

This may sound like a normal case of a guy being persistent about getting a date, but a female soldier reported that the same guy treated her the same way.

"But he's made some lewd comments to me, too," she said. "And he just won't take no for an answer."

The soldier said she didn't want to report it because she was afraid of the guy and the civilian said she didn't want her name mentioned because of the same reason.

According to SSgt. Wilma Green, an Equal Opportunity (EO) NCO on the post's Equal Opportunity staff, the EO office hasn't been receiving any formal complaints about sexual harassment, but they know there is some going on here.

EO gives two courses which contain sections dealing with sexism and sexual harassment - the Human Resources and Management Course and the Unit Discussion Leadership Course.

"The courses, which concur with DA's policy on sexual harassment, are given to officers, NCOs and civilians. The intent is to make personnel aware of sexual harassment and how to deal with it," said Green.

Green added that if someone does want to come to them with a complaint, the door is always open.

"If people are afraid of going through their chain of command or if they don't receive satisfaction by doing so, they can come to our office or go to their unit EO representative," said Green.

According to Chaplain Michelson, he doesn't think an overwhelming number of people go to chaplains with complaints.

"However, sometimes when I'm talking to a female about something else, she'll bring up something about being sexual harassed," he said.

Hot Line available

"I did have one female come to me saying that someone had tried to take liberties with her despite her discouraging him," he continued. "She said that when she made a complaint to her commander, she was informed that both sides of the story had been heard and that no action could be taken since it was the male's word against hers."

According to Demming, the post's Hot Line has a list of 36 different categories that calls come under and that one of the categories is sexual discrimination and sexual harassment.

"Tabs are kept on all calls and in the 8 months I've been working here, no calls about sexual harassment have come in from either men or women," said Demming. "However, if someone is afraid of going through his or her chain of command for one reason or another, a Hot Line call can be made and appropriate action will be taken. All calls are confidential."

A hand on an employee's shoulder can be sexual harassment. Although this scene was staged, problems like this do exist.

Loans help veterans

There aren't many things that last a lifetime, but a GI home loan can serve a veteran's changing needs throughout life if he pays attention to Veterans Administration eligibility requirements.

The term "GI home loan" is a bit misleading. According to Atlanta VA Regional Office Loan Guaranty Officer Ralph Franks, it is actually a "VA guaranteed loan." That means the federal government guarantees a portion of the veteran's mortgage. This protects the private lender and eliminates or greatly decreases the veteran's downpayment. Franks noted that the interest rate on a VA guaranteed loan was generally set below current market rates and that repayment time is generally longer than with rates and that repayment time is generally longer than with conventional home loans.

Franks directs the GI home loan program throughout Georgia. Veterans must establish their eligibility with any VA regional office which then issues a certificate of eligibility showing the amount of the veteran's loan entitlement.

"A veteran's current full entitlement is $25,000," Franks explained. "That means we can guaranty up to $25,000 of a mortgage. A general rule of thumb is that most lenders will lend up to four times the amount of the guaranty."

The entitlement limit has been raised periodically over the years and this means many veterans who used their original entitlements to buy homes prior to October 1978, the last entitlement increase, now have additional entitlement with which to obtain another GI home loan.

"Suppose a veteran bought a house in 1960 with a $12,500 loan, $7500 of which was guaranteed by VA," Franks said. "Now, since the present entitlement has risen to $25,000, the veteran still is entitled to a guaranty of $17,500. He could secure another VA home loan, even though he already had bought his first home with a VA guaranteed loan."

Like any loan, the GI home loan must be repaid. Franks noted that many veterans mistakenly believe their liability to VA and the federal government ends when they sell their home.

"The veteran remains liable to the government for the unpaid balance of the VA guaranteed loan even after the sale unless he seeks, and receives, a release from liability from VA."

The release of liability means the VA will not attempt to collect from the veteran should the buyer later default on repayment of the VA guaranteed loan. Without the release, said Franks, the VA could hold the veteran liable long after the house was sold.

The loan guaranty officer advised veterans selling houses with unpaid GI home loans to apply to VA for a release of liability before signing the contract to sell, or include a clause in the contract making sale conditional of receipt of that release. The VA regional office which processed the original loan will then determine the credit worthiness of the new purchaser to justify the release.

"You don't have to sell to a veteran to be released from liability," Franks stressed. "The VA guaranty continues on the original loan regardless of the purchaser's veteran status."

He also noted that a release of liability does not automatically restore the veteran's full $25,000 loan guaranty eligibility.

The Veterans Administration will restore your entitlement in the following ways: (1) If your loan is paid in full in connection with the sale of your home. If the loan is assumed by the purchaser and later repaid in full, entitlement will also be restored. (2) If you sell the property to an eligible veteran with sufficient loan entitlement who agrees to assume your loan and substitute his or her loan entitlement for yours. Substitution of Entitlement can only be granted on the first transfer. The assumer must also meet VA income and credit requirements.

"The main thing to remember when selling a house purchased with a GI home loan is that you are still legally liable to VA unless we formally release you from liability," Franks said. "And release of liability doesn't automatically restore your loan guaranty liability." (ARNews)

Sheriff's Target

Speeders stalked with MPs' radar

Fort Benning has a very serious problem of vehicle speeding throughout the installation.

Recent traffic surveys show that 50 percent of all drivers here exceed the speed limit at one time or another. Statistics further show that during the period of Dec. 1, 1980 through March 15, 1981 13 percent of all traffic accidents on the installation were caused by excessive speed.

The military police are heavily enforcing the violation of the speed limit here primarily using "radar"

One of the most common questions asked and excuse is:

How could he tell if I was speeding; his equipment could have been wrong; and what about the other cars?

Col. Ward Provost Marshal

First of all, patrolmen using radar here have been trained by the Georgia Police Academy. Many have also attended courses at the Traffic Management Institute at Northwestern University.

The equipment currently used for speed detection here is calibrated by the manufacturer on an annual basis and is calibrated by the military policemen on a daily basis prior to going on patrol.

Even though radar is the primary means for speed detection, it is not the only factor for issuing a speed citation.

Before a patrolman pulls a vehicle over for speeding, there are several other factors that are considered and checked. These items are:

- Visual estimation of the target's speed by comparison with the normal flow of traffic.
- Verification that the vehicle is in the radar beam and by using a manual lock, following the reading of that vehicle through the flow of traffic.

Once the identity of the vehicle has been established, the military policeman will lock in the speed of the vehicle on the radar unit.

• Audio signals of the radar unit which are directly related to vehicle speed; the faster the vehicle travels, the stronger the audio sound. In addition, the signal increases to a pure shrill as the vehicle approaches and stops once the vehicle has passed the radar beam, confirming the identity of the vehicle being clocked.

• Comparison of visual and audio data with the radar readout. All three checks must correspond with one clocked.

This system is equally effective for determining the speed of a single vehicle or one of a group of vehicles.

Reminders and warnings have been placed throughout the installation in the forms of speed breakers and speed signs.

Obey the laws. Don't be a statistic. The Army needs you . . . ALIVE.

Get Right with the LORD, nothing in this world is worth eternal separation from GOD.

Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. HOW IT FEELS TO HAVE A HEART ATTACK

The way a heart attack feels can vary. So how can you be sure that what you're feeling is really a heart attack?

By remembering this:

If you feel an uncomfortable pressure, fullness, squeezing or pain in the center of your chest (that may spread to the shoulders, neck or arms) and if it lasts for two minutes or more, you could be having a heart attack. Severe pain, dizziness, fainting, sweating, nausea or shortness of breath may also occur. Sharp, stabbing twinges of pain are usually not signals of a heart attack.

Your survival may depend on getting medical attention as quickly as you can. Call the emergency medical service immediately. If you can get to a hospital faster in any other way, do so.

Don't refuse to accept the possibility that you are having a heart attack. Many heart attack victims do just that. They say it's indigestion or tension. They worry about embarrassment. They often wait three hours or longer before getting help.

But before those three hours are up, one out of two is dead.

Remember what you've just read. The time might come when your life will depend on it.

Speeding vehicles one of problems

The final housing area on post to be surveyed was Bouton Heights/Davis Hills.

The survey showed that some of the most frequent comments of occupants were problems with children not being supervised, speeding vehicles and improvements needed to the landscape.

The survey was conducted March 9-13 and revealed:

- Seven hundred eighty service members with 2,437 dependents were residing in the 815-unit housing area.

- Twenty-nine percent of the vehicles and 19 percent of the weapons are either not registered or registration was not on file with the Provost Marshal's Office.

- One hundred sixty-seven of 452 pets owned by Bouton Heights/Davis Hills residents are either not registered or could not be verified with the Post Veterinarian.

The large number of occupant complaints about pets running loose appears to be directly related to the high percentage of unregistered pets.

Because of this, individual pet owners were encouraged to assist their neighbors and themselves by registering their dogs and cats with the Veterinary Clinic.

Letters from the Assistant Commander requiring immediate corrective action will be sent to the owners of unregistered vehicles, weapons and pets and to those members whose registration could not be verified.

Although the majority of Bouton Heights/Davis Hills residents comply with the requirements governing the responsibilities that go with occupying government quarters, some violations were noted.

These violations have been passed to the applicable agency for action. Overall, personnel residing in Bouton Heights/Davis Hills are to be commended for their cooperation and courtesy while participating in the housing survey.

The most frequent comments reported in the Bouton Heights/Davis Hills survey were:

- dogs running loose
- slow response to maintenance work orders and contractor problems

- not enough recreation facilities for children
- stricter rules for trash collection (i.e., cans left on curb for 2 days, set out 2 days in advance)

- poor drainage and the need for more MP patrols.

Staff actions to solve problems with pet control, speeding vehicles and MP patrols have been put into action. A full-time dogcatcher has been established by the Law Enforcement Command; a new telephone and computer system has been set up by the Directorate of Facilities Engineers to increase responsiveness to work orders; day and night use of RADAR by MPs began in January and more MP patrols became available in December when heavy off post commitments terminated.

The following staff actions based on comments made by occupants of Bouton Heights/Davis Hills are as follows:

Maintenance and repair of family quarters in Bouton Heights/Davis Hills are accomplished by a civilian contractor. The contractor is required to accomplish routine maintenance and repair within eight hours and emergency repairs within two hours. The Family Housing Office will investigate each complaint and insure corrective action taken.

Improved and additional tot lots and basketball courts are planned for the Bouton Heights/Davis Hills area. However, on Jan. 31, the Office of Budget and Management (OMB), on instruction from the President, imposed a moratorium on obtaining certain equipment.

Included in the moratorium is all recreational and athletic equipment. Based on this moratorium, work other than minor repair can be accomplished on playgrounds.

Family Housing currently has an on-going contract to correct the drainage problem in the Bouton Heights/Davis Hills area. Upon completion of the contract the drainage problems should be corrected. Landscaping problems for Bouton Heights/Davis Hills occupants are evaluated by Grounds Maintenance, DFE, on an individual work order basis and may be referred to the contractor for resolution.

BAYONET sports commentary

No losers here, everyone special

by Martha E. Duncan
youth activities correspondent.

One of the most beautiful sporting events I've ever seen was hosted by Fort Benning last Saturday at Doughboy Stadium.

Two-hundred and ten athletes were included in the crowd of people who came out to celebrate Georgia's Area Ten Special Olympics.

The occasion was a festive one as the opening parade was headed by the USAIC 283rd Army Band. Following the band were athletes representing Russell County, Phenix City and Columbus. These "special kids" participated in such events as softball and frisbee throws, running and jumping.

As the parade assembled on the field, three members from the Fort Benning Silver Wings landed in front of the reviewing stand to present the Special Olympic flag to post commander Maj. Gen. David Grange, jr.

Once the flag was posted, the Color Guard from the 2/69th Armor Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade presented the flags as the 283rd Army Band played the National Anthem. The Invocation was given by Capt. Roy Ward from the Salvation Army.

As the Color Guard departed, the Special Olympic flame was run into the stadium by John Allen Corbin from Columbus's Baker High School.

To see the Olympic torch ignite was to feel a glow of renewed hope and courage. At the conclusion of speeches given by the dignitaries, the release of hundreds of balloons and pigeons provided by Mr. Wetstone from the Columbus Pigeon Club, added to the increasing enthusiasm.

The band concluded the music and a somber note followed as the Special Olympic Oath was read:

"Let me win, but if I cannot win, let me be brave in the attempt."

All participants of the Special Olympics were winners. Here are some the results:

Small crowd doesn't dampen kids' spirit

By Becky Bulgrin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Special Olympics held here Saturday turned out to be a gala affair — almost.

More than 200 "special kids" from around the area showed up to compete in track and field events, which included a softball throw and a frisbee throwing contest. But if it wasn't for the volunteers and the others who worked at the event, these kids may as well have been out there by themselves.

Support lacking

Spectator support was very low, and that included many parents of the special kids. A lot of people I talked to during the event, and even afterwards, commented on the lack of support. One comment was that, "Well, the kids had a good time, anyway."

This was probably true, because from what I saw, they all seemed to be having a great time. One young boy got very excited during the softball throwing contest that he won. He threw the ball the furthest — right into a van parked on the stadium's track! Just about every kid there participated in the event.

Frisbee contest a hit

When Martha Duncan, the Youth Activities sports director, told me about the Frisbee throwing contest, she laughed, "About eight kids signed up for the contest, but when it was ready to start there were 30 of them out there ready to go!"

The stadium had been decorated very nicely by volunteers and workers and everything seemed to go smoothly. Even when two schools that weren't expected showed up for the event, adding 50-60 more kids, it didn't upset the schedule. They just joined in and enjoyed the activities.

For anyone who didn't get the chance to watch these kids running, jumping, etc., you really missed seeing something special. Even though they were handicapped, which might prevent them from doing things most youngsters do, they gave it all they had, proving they can enjoy activities the same way as others.

One of the best parts of the whole event was that everybody who participated got something; whether they placed first or fourth, they all went home with a ribbon proudly pinned on their chest.

Volunteers commended

All those who volunteered and those chosen to work at the Spring Special Olympics should be commended for a job well done. The kids could not have had the good time they did if it wasn't for them.

The Summer Special Olympics is now in the planning stages and hopefully, those who didn't get a chance to watch these "special kids" do their thing will be able to do so then. Not only will you be treated to a rewarding experience, it may make you more thankful for what you have.

Robert Harmon, 45th Company, The School Brigade, was selected as the alternate. He had a 183 average and a 3297 total pinfall in the roll-off.

According to Jim Cantrell, manager of the post bowling centers, this is the first time here a husband and wife team has been selected to compete in TRADOC.

Marksmen defeat opponents

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Correspondent

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit won a total of six Interservice Championships in competition held here last weekend.

They were competing against the top representatives of the U.S. Air Force (USAF), U.S. Marine Corps (USMC), U.S. Navy (USN) and U.S. Army Reserve (USAR.)

Close games top soccer

By Martha E. Duncan
Youth activities correspondent

Competition for 14 Youth Activities soccer teams was fast and exciting at Gordon Field Saturday.

In the Termite Division's first game, the Tornados and the Eagles ended in a 1-1 tie which occurred during the last two minutes of play. Angelito Bernier scored the Tornados' goal. He was backed up by defensive standouts Justin Jones, Stacie Stafford and Chris Monds. For the Eagles, David Deprospero scored the goal.

Game two for the Termites was also close as the Bullets managed just one more shot across the Chiefs' goal for a 2-1 victory. The Bullet's big shooter for both goals was Joseph Allen. Aiding Allen on the offense were forwards Jeffrey Saliba and Todd Walker and halfback Curtis Mayew.

Protecting the Bullet's fort were defensive halfback Cindy Jansco, and fullbacks, Melanie Hallums and Anthony Colon.

The Chief's big scorer was Adam Cassidy. Keeping the Bullets to a low score were the Chief's goalie Aaron Fricker, and halfbacks Alyssia Winter and Brad Bagshaw.

Moving to the Pee Wee Division, the first game had the Demons place an 8-2 curse over the Bobcats.

Scorers for the Demons included Jason Bargewell with four, Adam Helmbold with three and Sam Byrd adding one. Defensive standouts included George Bailey, Steve Cook and Mark Munson.

Robert Quinn and Herman Johnson scored one goal each for the Bobcats.

Close action was seen on Field Two as the Red Devils scraped past the Cougars 4-3. Red Devil's scorers were Carlos Benson with three goals and Jason Andrade with one.

Terrance Kimball kicked in two for the Cougars with Ronald O'Neal adding one. The Cougar's defensive standouts included Johnna Saugh, Justin Winter and Dustin Duvall.

Game one in the Midget Division had the Hustlers scurry over the Panthers 7-1. Big scorer for the Hustlers was Kurt McLeod with four goals and Chris Bradford, Kenny Sienicki and Pat Riccinto with one each.

The Panthers Chris Andrade kicked in their only goal assisted by Pam Danielski and Darryl Powell.

The Midget's second game showed the Saints take over the Cosmos 4-1. High scorer for the Saints was Raymond King with two and Ronald MacIven and Kyle Abbott with one each. Defensive standouts included Gregory McCann, Denise Kiernan, John Rose and James Walker.

The day's final game had the Rebels edge past the Demons 4-3. Scorers for the Rebels were Todd Valentine with two, Ray Jansco assisted by Jeff Britton for one and Brant Bargewell with one.

Piet Hoebecke kicked in two for the Demons and Bill Cassidy added one.

More YA soccer action can be seen tomorrow on Gordon Field. Games begin at 10 a.m.

WFBG highlights

Perfect drug leads to bad trip

By Bill Powell
 USAIC Public Affairs Office

Colors and images float before his eyes. He feels calm, relaxed and mellow. In the next moment the image and colors change from beautiful and rosy to dark and ugly. The mellow feeling is replaced by fear and horror. What is happening? It's just another drug-induced trip searching for the perfect drug, the perfect high, the perfect feeling. It, like all the others, has turned bad and he begins to wonder if there is such a perfect drug. Is there a perfect drug? Find out by watching "The Perfect Drug Film" on WFBG-TV, Channel 13 on Alert Cable. You'll also find a variety of programming by tuning in WFBG-TV that informs and entertains. Following are highlights of next week's schedule:

- "Big Picture - The Spirit of Fort Benning" describes the largest and most comprehensive infantry training center in the free world.
- "Why Daddy?" shows the common causes of fire and what you can do to protect your home.

• "The Eye of the Storm" deals with the subject of prejudice and how children are shown what prejudice is by discriminating against members of the class on the basis of eye color.

• "Take Ten - Drinking Myths," the subject of drinking and the truth about it.

• "I am the Infantry" presents the epic poem about the proud history of the Infantry and its service to our nation.

• "The XM-1 Tank." The abilities of the newest tank in the Army's arsenal are demonstrated.

• "Spectrum" features the musical specials of country music star Roy Clark and disco star Donna Summer, as well as other musical variety programming from the Army Information Radio Service and TRADOC's Public Affairs Office. Consult the BAYONET and Benning Bulletin for times and dates of scheduled programming.
