NCOC served on 'H.M.S. Bounty'

"Batten the hatches and hoist the m'sail," may not find much use in the Army but for Candidate Earl Gene Quinn this vernacular was a way of life for four years prior to military service.

Quinn, a Noncommissioned Officer Candidate in the 84th Co., 6th Bn., The School Brigade (TSB), was a crew member on the "H.M.S. Bounty" exhibit which is docked in the St. Petersburg, Fla., area. The "Bounty" a reconstructed 16th Century sailing ship, was built by the M.G.M. Studios for their production of "Mutiny on the Bounty," a feature length motion picture released several years ago.

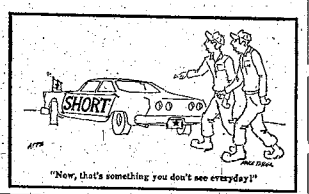
As a 'seaman,' Quinn worked on the "Bounty" maintaining her seaworthy condition and guiding tourists through the ship. The fully-rigged ship was recreated from the design of the 'original' "Bounty" which sailed the South Seas in the late 1700's.

"The new "Bounty" has 10 miles of rope, 10,000 square feet of sail canvas, and weighs 486 tons," said Quinn. "Such a large mass of wood and canvas requires constant attention and maintenance." Seaman Quinn spent much time in the hull of the ship repairing dry rot in the wooden members and pumping out excess water. The rigging also required much work and Quinn was able to learn the lost art of properly sewing the rips in the canvas so that the strong winds would not re-damage the sails.

"The original "Bounty" was under sail for Tahiti to plant breadfruit trees," explained Quinn as he recalled the historical background of the "Mutiny." "On April 28, 1789, Master's Mate Fletcher Christian and a band of able seamen mutinied against Captain Bligh. Bligh and his loyal followers were set adrift 3,600 miles from the nearest port. Naval navigational history was made when these men successfully crossed the South Seas to safe port."

Sailing a large ship is a hard job both on the high seas and in port. "I was on night-watch when a hurricane hit the Gulf Coast," recollected Quinn, "and the unfurled sails had to be lashed to the courses (cross members from which sails were hung). It was a strange experience to be 60 feet in the air fighting with the sail canvas as rain hit my face like B-B's from a rifle."

Quinn has devoted his outdoor interests to the sea and mountains. As for the latter interest, he has done extensive hiking and climbing from Florida to the wilderness of Alaska.



A degree in Anthropology is Quinn's immediate goal and he only lacks a few hours at the University of South Florida for graduation. He plans to continue his education with post graduate work and eventually become a professor of Anthropology and Archeology.

Quinn took Basic and A.I.T. instruction at Ft. Jackson, S. C., and now intends to become Airborne and Ranger qualified.

Although far from the sea, Quinn is still able to accurately remember long lists of fact and history concerning the "Bounty" that were a part of his life before joining a 'landlubber's Army.

Symphony to include five post representatives

Fort Benning will be well represented when the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, Harry Kruger conductor, opens its 1971-72 season Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. in Fine Arts Hall at Columbus College.

The Columbus Symphony draws from the entire area for its players, and this year five orchestra members are Fort Benning personnel or dependents. In the bassoon section are Karen Tripp, wife of Capt. John Tripp, and Sgt. Robert Hawkins of the 283rd Army Band. Donna Petry, wife of 1st Lt. Russell B. Petry, is principal french horn. Pat Wainwright, wife of Capt. Gilbert Wainwright, and Dianna Blankenship, wife of Capt. Joe B. Blankenship, are in the violin section.

Each year Kruger urges Fort Benning personnel who are experienced instrumentalists, particularly string players, to contact him at 563-4367 if they wish to play in the Columbus Symphony. At this time the wind and brass sections are full, but anyone interested should contact the conductor.

For the Nov. 2 concert William Stein, conductor of the Battle Creek Michigan Symphony, will share the podium with Kruger, as guest conductor. He will conduct the stirring "Prelude" and "Good Friday Spell" from Parsifal. A dynamic performance of the Khatchurian Piano Concerto will also be presented by Joyce Schwob. Kruger will lead the orchestra in the accompaniment for the concerto and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, familiar to many for the popular song "Moon Love."

Season tickets for the entire four - concert series of the orchestra may be purchased by writing P. O. Box 5361, Columbus or by phoning 323-5059. Individual tickets for this concert will be available before the concert.

Rehearsals underway for 'Thoreau'

Rehearsals are underway at the Springer Opera House, the State Theatre of Georgia, for "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail," a new comedy drama scheduled to open at the Springer Nov. 4.

The play is based on the early life of the remarkable poet-naturalist Henry David Thoreau. Although Thoreau spent his night in the Concord, Massachusetts' jail nearly 100 years ago, his wit and wisdom transcend time.

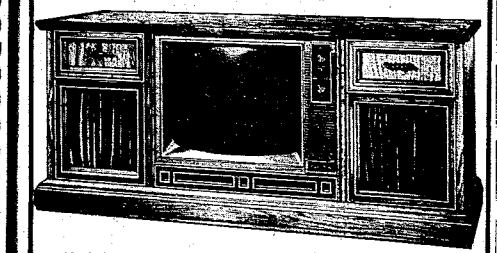
It has been said that Thoreau may have been the world's first hippie. His insistence on each person finding his own way, sounds very much like the popular phrase of today "do your own thing." Thoreau certainly "did his own thing" with his own life.

It is extraordinary for a man to attempt to live what he preaches, but Thoreau preached a life of simplicity, individuality, civil disobedience, and of personal investigation, and he lived that life.

His writings seem to speak louder of contemporary problems of environmental control and over population than any other American thinker.

The playwriting team of Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee, whose plays "Inherit The Wind" and "Mame" have been produced at the Springer Opera House in past seasons, have offered their new play to the Springer through the American Playwright's Theatre, an organization designed to foster co-operation between America's leading dramatist, and the resident community and university theatres across the nation.

This will be the 104th production of "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail" by a major regional theatre during this past year. More productions of the play are scheduled between now and Dec. 31.



The excitement of being part of this play has attracted some of the finest performers in the community back to the Springer stage.

The Springer box office (327-3688) opens for sales to the public Monday through the run of the play. Box office hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily, and one hour before curtain on performance nights.

DEADLY PREDATOR

Rare shark found in 'Blue Water'

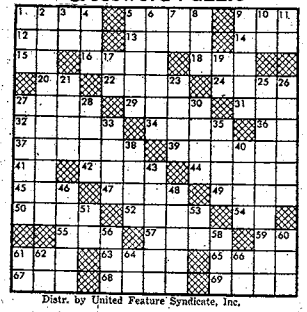
The Great White Shark is the deadliest coldblooded predator in the world, compared to other sharks it is like a Siberian tiger to a pussycat. Adventurer-film-maker Peter Gimbel's quest for this awesome and beautiful creature is chronicled in Cinema Center Films' large-than-life depiction of this around-the-world quest, "Blue Water, White Death," which opens tonight at the Beverly Theatre.

Gimbel and his crew traveled 12,000 miles in a six-month journey that spanned from South Africa and Ceylon to Australia and all points in-between, encountering the most spectacular and sometimes violent forms of marine creatures.

"The Great White is the only shark which doesn't recognize man as something different," explains Valerie Taylor, one of Australia's foremost underwater experts, who joined the expedition with her husband, Ron. "He just lumps us in with boat propellors, dead seals, rotten cows, and anything else he can get his mouth around. He is 2,000 pounds of streamlined death."

The mission of the "Blue Water, White Death" crew brought the underwater adventurers face-to-face with hundreds of sharks (Where the divers swam unprotected among the potentially deadly creatures), moray eels, giant turtles, large groupers and barracudas. The hunter became the hunted as they sought to confront the Great White in its own habitat.

"With most marine and land creatures man enjoys a place apart," Valerie says. "He is recognized for what he is and treated with respect and caution. The Great White, however, recognizes no one and nothing except his insatiable appetite. We are to him just something to be eaten and the next moment forgotten, no more and no less than a rotten fish or old carton. It is this attitude, more than his strength, that makes the White Death shark stand apart from all other creatures."



The Great White, discovered off Dangerous Reef in South Australia, was photographed from aluminum cages designed by Gimbel, which operate autonomously and are stable to allow perfect photographic recording. For several hours the Great White charged the cages where the divers were separated from death only by slender bars. It was an experience totally real, yet outside ordinary experience.

"We were simply ecstatic discovering the Great White Shark," Valerie Taylor admits. "We had searched for this creature for many months, covering thousands of miles, and the day we finally were able to discover him was a glorious unforgettable day."

Gimbel set out to photograph men and sharks in confrontation in the open sea on even terms, where, as Gimbel puts it, "Our preoccupation with finding the Great White made us at once the hunter and the hunted." Gimbel terms the Great White "the ultimate shark," and so successful is its structure that it has not biologically changed for millions of years.

"Nature has decreed, in her wisdom," Valerie explains, "that these sharks should survive from the beginning of time. The part they play on the stage of the world must be an important one, for Nature is never wrong."

Synopsis

AIRPORT (Rated G) is based on the number one best-seller by Arthur Hailey.

The story takes place at night during a seven-hour period while an international airport in the midwest is plagued by a crippling blizzard, a mired airplane that blocks a vital runway and a second jetliner trying to limp back home after surviving a mid-air bomb blast.

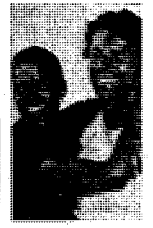
"Airport" has an all-star cast headed by Burt Lancaster, Dean Martin, Jean Seberg and Jacqueline Bisset.

THE MUSIC LOVERS (Rated R)—A musical giant, Peter Tchaikovsky's life was a living hell. He was haunted by the memory of his mother's terrible death and caught in a nightmarish marrige that remained unconsummated because of his homosexualism.

His music was bitterly assailed by the head of the Moscow Conservatoire where he taught, and his wealthy patroness, Mme. Von Meck, abandoned him when told of his background.

This complex and fascinating personality is brought to life by actor Richard Chamberlain in a fine screen biography. As Tchaikovsky's wife, Glenda Jackson is a passionate, demanding, frustrating woman doomed to madness.

SUDDEN TERROR (Rated GP)—The spine-tingling suspense of Hitchcock is combined with the contemporary excitement of "Z" to provide the "edge of your seat" thrills.



For openers, audiences will experience the heart stopping violence of a murder, its shattering impact is only the beginning of the rapid succession of hairbreadth action contained in the film.

"Sudden Terror," cast to perfection with the beautiful Susan George, Mark Lester, the young star of "Oliver" and newcomer-leading man, Tony Bonner, spreads its panic all over the island of Malta. A climactic chase at top speed over winding mountain roads guarantees to keep audiences clinging for safety.

ON ANY SUNDAY (Rated G), is an action packed motorcycle film that was produced by Bruce Brown who made "The Endless Summer."

Different forms of motorcycle racing are shown with exciting crash scenes and shots of crackups and falls. The many heart-in-mouth thrills will lift you out of your seat.

There is some genuine humor in the film and several interesting situations (some involving Steve McQueen who backed the film) which must be seen by anybody who really enjoys movies.

LOVE

Members of the combo shown in their performing "uniform." They think of themselves as 'Sheer Magic': The 'Forever Forward' Army band

BY STEVE PARTRIDGE

Decked in civilian attire, ten men stand on a makeshift platform. All play musical instruments; all are soldiers; and, most important, all are performers. In minutes the air is filled with popular sounds which beckon everyone to listen.

This is an Army band, and unlike other Army bands, they deal explicitly in modern music.

They do not march; they do not accompany marching men. Instead of performing amid a parade's pageantry and splendor, they cater to shopping centers, fairs, domestic action projects, athletic events, and occasionally, picnics.

The group is called the "Forever Forward" combo, but they think of themselves as "Sheer Magic."

A product of the 197th Infantry Brigade, the band was formed to meet two important objectives—to help the Army identify with the 17-25 age group (the group that contains the majority of potential Army recruits) and, to spread Army good will.

They do it with music.

Their hair meets Army regulations.

They wear a green fatigue uniform when on duty, but when they perform music is their only concern.

Launched by a brainstorm of a 197th Inf. Bde. soldier, and through the efforts of Capt. Perry D. Hope, former brigade S-1, a search began in early summer for the most musically talented 197th men.

Hundreds of practice hours at the Kelley Hill Service Club and a scrutinizing screening process took their toll as numerous men were rejected as performers.

In the end, Hope, who holds a college degree in music, was the final eliminator. (Continued on Page 22)

WWII pilot now chopper crew chief

By Frank Webb

He flew C-47 transports carrying fuel and supplies for Gen. Patton's 3rd Army during World War II, and now he is the crew chief on Maj. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott's helicopter.

He is SSgt. Leslie J. Byrd, a man who has spent more than 18 years flying for the Army and who has never had a scratch or an accident. His worst malfunction, in fact, was a short circuit in a small plane, and he repaired that in a matter of minutes on the ground.

Byrd, now assigned as supervisor and crew chief at the 197th Aviation Company, began his flying career in 1943 when he began training on large "Gooney Birds," the famous DC-3 transport workhorses of the Second World War. A brief stint as a cadet at Pennsylvania State University prepared him for service as a flight officer following his aviation schooling, and by early 1944 he was with the 82nd Wing, 430th Troop Carrier Command piloting a DC-3 named "The Jersey Belle."

A hint of the many disadvantages he contended with as an aviation cadet and later as pilot comes through in conversation. "When I was taking training at Penn State, we went from early morning till late at night studying and working, taking the evenings up looking at the stars, trying to identify constellations in order to learn celestial navigation." Later, he commented, "With the transport command our crew kept our aircraft flyable at all times, even though we often had to land in grassy fields or on someone's front lawn."

Not long after the war was over, and he had flown his last mission in Europe, Byrd was returned to the states where he completed his service commitment at Ft. Bragg.

He left the Army Air Corps and eventually built up his own business. But in 1955 the itch to fly had built up in him again, and Byrd, who claims he has "always been military," enlisted for Army aviation. He could not become a pilot again because he lacked college education, so he said he'd "settle" for mechanic and crew chief on helicopters.

Since the beginning of the 1960's Byrd has been flying as crew chief on helicopters carrying VIPs. Schooling in Huey and Chinook helicopter maintenance helped him make the transition from the older type helicopters of "Whirlybirds" fame on television to the new and more complex warships of the Vietnam era.

So it was that he left Fort Benning in 1965 shortly after being assigned to the 1st Cavalry Division as a helicopter maintenance supervisor. Stationed at Anh Khe, Byrd became supervisor of almost every phase of helicopter maintenance for the division.

Nine years of flying for VIP's in assignments ranging from Iran to White Sands Missile Range were the reason Byrd was assigned in February this year as crew chief on Gen. Talbott's chopper.

SSgt. Byrd's unblemished flying record he attributes to his own concern for safety that began when he was a pilot. "If you're the commander of an aircraft," he says, "your passengers are important to you." "So if one of them is injured in any way," he claims, "you feel responsible whether it was your fault or not."

As for his becoming a crew chief on may VIP aircraft Byrd states, "I like flying, and I like VIP work. Having been an officer I feel I know what they want in the way of courtesy and respect, and I think I can give that to them."

His safety consciousness he feels is partly responsible for his continuing way with VIPs and this consciousness, claims the well-traveled NCO is a result of his training. "I think," he said in a conversation, "that military pilots and crews get the best training there is."

Continuing, Byrd stated that "a smart pilot will teach his crew chief to fly the helicopter, for there have been many instances where both pilot and copilot were injured, and the chief was the only man able to fly.

"Then," he said, "even if the chief smacks it up while landing, the entire crew stands a much better chance of surviving than if he has no idea how to handle the machine."

This mechanical savvy is probably responsible for his long record of safe flying and accounts for his being able to claim, "I have flown for more than 18 years, and I can't even hazard a guess as to how many miles I've put in in aircraft around the world. But I do know that it's a lot."

After choosing his compatriots, Hope set out to mold the selected soldiers into a harmonious group of performers.

In approximately one month, the combo stood at an Americus, Ga., shopping center and performed in conjunction with a 197th recruiting display. They were scheduled to play between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. Audience response held them two hours later than scheduled.

The same afternoon the combo was invited by the Americus School Board and the Police Department to play before their high school football game to be held that evening.

Soon, the "Forever Forwards" were touring the three-state area of Alabama, Georgia and Florida with brigade recruiting teams.

Recent performances for the group included the West Alabama Fair, in Tuscaloosa, Ala., and the Southeastern Fair, in Atlanta, Ga. At the West Alabama Fair, according to Capt. Stephen E. Fitzgerald, the band's OIC (officer in charge), the people "had a hard time believing that the U.S. Army actually sponsored and produced from within its own ranks a professional group like this."

A flair for a versatile new sound keeps the group striving for perfection in its appearances. The brass section—one trombone, two trumpets, and a saxophone—complements the versatile strings of the lead, rhythym, and bass guitar. Add an organ and the drums and there beams a ray of hope that the versatile sound is not too far away.

All members of the "Forever Forward" cambo have previous musical experience. Ejaye Spaulding, the lead singer, arranger, and organist, did a stint with the famous "Archie Bell and the Drells," while stationed in Germany.

Jerome Haynes, the saxophone player formerly performed for a select set called "The Tigers." Add Phillip Torres, the bass trombone player; Winfred McKinnie and Ronald Graham, two trumpet players, all with previous playing time, and there emerges a blockbusting brass section.

James E. McNeol, Jr., formerly with "Sir Charles and the Esquires," entered the 197th combo room one day and was handed the bass guitar by Spaulding. He has been playing bass in the group since that day.

Reginald "Reggie" Seymour, the lead drummer, played in two groups, "King Arthur and the Knights," and "The Exotics." The backup drummer, Michael Gennero, performed with "Stone Deaf and the Village Band."

However radical an idea the 197th combo may seem, it is instrumental in performing a vital two-fold program. It identifies the Army with its most potential recruiting audience and, perhaps, of added importance, "It is just one more way in which the Army, specifically the 197th, is becoming a better neighbor in society," Capt. Fitzgerald said.

Four teams battle for second place

The 608th Ord. Co. has captured the first place title in the 931st Engr. Gp. flag football league and will be one of two teams representing the engineer unit in the USAIC Flag Football Tournament beginning Nov. 8.

To date, the runner-up team in the 931st league has not yet been decided.

608th completely dominated the football race this season while winning 12 games against a single loss. That loss was an upset two weeks ago by the 586th Engr. Co., a team which boasts an impressive 10-3 record.

The 608th, which capitalizes on a speedy backfield and a powerful line for its over-powering offense, hopes to capture the post championship for the engineer group in the company-level playoffs held on main post.

In second place in the league are the teams from 524th Per. Serv. Co. and 15th Fin., with ten wins apiece. Both teams have lost only two games, and both teams have just one more game left to play in the 931st league.

The outcome of those games will determine the runner-up team in the league and will decide which team participates in the post tournament with the 608th Ord. Co.

524th Per. Serv. Co. must defeat the competitive Co. C, 43rd Engr. Bn., which holds a nine wins and three losses record.

15th Fin. will face the team of HHC, 931st, in a rematch of an earlier game won by finance but ordered to be played again following an official protest. HHC's record is 8-4.

If both second place teams lose their last game, then a four-way tied for second would exist since both teams would be dropped to a 10-3 record and Co. C, 43rd, would be elevated to the same standing. The 586th Engr. Co., currently with a 10-3 record also, would round out the foursome causing a play-off series to determine who will represent the engineer group along with the 608th. Should that happen, a play-off series would begin this evening and continue next week until a winner is decided.

Whatever the outcome, league statistician Carl J. Holmes said the stiff competition that has existed throughout the league has made the 931st teams very competitive and ready for play at the post tourney. "I don't know who's going to win this race to the wire, but I'm sure the winner will be a better team because of the pressure. I don't think there's been too many easy games anywhere in this league this year. All the teams were pretty balanced," he added.

Close battle

Willie Render, right, flanker for HHC, 931st, appears to be struggling for this pass from quarterback Ray Duffy in this game with the 524th Pers. Serv. Co. HHC lost the contest, but the 524th must struggle this week to remain in contention for the runner-up slot in the engineer group league, which may end up with a four-way tie for second place. HHC could be the "spoilers," however, by emerging victorious in their match with the 15th Fin., another team in contention for the runner-up slot.

USAIC pigskin tourney slated

The 1971 United States Army Infantry Center (USAIC) Company Level Flag Football Championships will be held at Gowdy Field, Main Post Nov. 8 through 19.

The championship will de determined by a double elimination tournament. The team without two defeats at the completion of the schedule will be the USATC champions.

Major units on post will be permitted to enter teams based on current strength figures. The 197th Infantry Brigade, The School Brigade and the 931st Engineer Group will be permitted to enter two teams.

The USAIC Command, Infantry Board, Combat Developments Command, Infantry Agency and the USA Marksmanship Training Unit may combine personnel to form one team.

"Lions Shocked and Horrified," read the headlines of Monday's sports pages, as the tragic aftermath of Chuck Hughes' death took hold of the sportsworld.

Hughes, a 28-year-old reserve receiver died on the playing field of Tiger Stadium moments after he entered last Sunday's game. The cause of death was officially described as, "Arteriosclerotic coronary artery disease with acute coronary thrombotic occlusion," better known as hardening of the arteries.

Just how does a 28 year old athlete, seemingly in excellent physical condition, die of a disease that usually kills men twice as old as Hughes? "Well," said a medical spokesman, "its unusual, but not all that uncommon. He died from a thing an 87-year-old person could have died from."

Those are some answers to the many questions directed towards the team physician and Hughes' doctors that are extremely vague and only skirt the inevitable. When asked if football contributed to Hughes' death, Doctors Edward Guise and Richard A. Thompson both agreed, "playing football would contribute to stress which would raise his blood pressure. If we had known he had the disease we would have discouraged him from playing."

Thus, one must wonder just how rigid are the physical examinations football players must undergo. Many players are seen week in and week out playing with broken ribs, arms, fingers, and in some cases broken ankles. These injuries are consistently pointed out by commentators and color men bold in awe the feats accomplished by these injured, but playable, athletes.

The injured players are portrayed as heroes to the millions of viewers who watch the weekend bloodbath. Injuries are no longer considered "the breaks of the game" they have come to dominate the very game they were once only a part of. The World Champion Jets in 1969 were totally descimated by injuries, they lost 17 out of their starting 22 in a little less than a year, and I might add, the championship.

The most common ailment is the knee injury, which has taken a drastic turn for the worse with the advent of the artificial turf. In addition the knee was not designed to support six feet six inches of hulking mass in a sport which demands constant stopping and starting. The knee will not tolerate this abuse as evidenced by the hundreds of torn cartilages and stetched ligaments in recent years.

One such recipient of the knee injury was Baltimore's Mack Lee Hill. Hill underwent surgery for a common knee injury sustained in a game in 1965. He died five hours later of surgical complications.

Other deaths related to pro-football have been Dave Sparks of the Washington Redskins who died following a game with the Browns in 1954, and in 1948 Stan Maudlin of the old Chicago Cardinals died on the clubhouse floor after a game with the Eagles.

More recently, Stone Johnson, 23, a running back for the Kansas City Chiefs was injured making a block in an exhibition game last August. He died nine days later of "acute compression of the cervical spinal cord."

In the college ranks many players have died in recent years, but the most tragic was Ernie Davis, a running back from Syracuse. The Heisman Trophy winner, and first draft choice of the Cleveland Browns died of leukenia before he could appear in his first pro game. In a similar instance, Freddie Stienmark, a University of Texas defensive back, died last year of cancer of the bone.

Both Davis and Stienmark played when they should have been receiving medical attention. Certainly the constant pounding and exercise that goes with football could not have helped their tender situation, and if they had let their problems be known they might be alive today.

Something must be done to stem the tide of football and its numerous injuries. It is not sensible for man to be thrust into such a violent atmosphere and intend to survive with only a few minor injuries. I myself wonder why there are not more drastic occurrences, for when one man is pitted against another only our true animal instincts can prevail, and if this is the case, then only one will survive in the end.

We are no longer in the 1920's and the ghost of George Gipp should not prey upon the minds of today's athlete. It should have been buried and not given the chance to live again in the spirit of a Chuck Hughes.

ROD AND GUN CLUB Notes

By Bill Kloeb

The Rod and Gun Club will hold a deer hunting contest during the coming season Nov. 6 through Jan. 15.

Prizes will be awarded to the hunter taking the heaviest deer and the deer with the largest antler count. Second place awards will be made in each of these categories. First place winners will receive a Remington Model 1100 automatic 12 guage shotgun. Second place winners will receive Mossberg Bolt Action 12 gauge slug guns.

The club will also give a Remington Model 1100 Automatic 12 guage shotgun as a consolation prize. The winner of this gun will be determined by a drawing. All eligible members who register a deer at the club during the contest will have a chance to win.

Participants in the contest must be awarded to an individual in any one category. One deer may not win two prizes.

Dependents under 16 years of age must have a deer tag for juniors.

Only deer shot on the Fort Benning Reservation are eligible for entry in the contest. Fort Benning and state game laws apply to all hunting. Violators will be disqualified from the contest.

All kills must first be taken to the Post Fish and Wildlife Section (Bldg. 5883, Harmony Church) for registration and then to the Rod and Gun Club for judging. Rod and Gun Club Officials may inspect all entries and disqualify an entry if a discrepancy is discovered.

Weight of the deer will be determined after the animal has been field dressed. The liver of the animal may be included. The Rod and Gun scales are the official scales for the contest. Only those points located on the upper two-thirds of the rack will be counted. In the event of a tie for the heaviest deer the winner will be decided by one flip of a coin.

If deer with an equal number of points are tied for a prize in the antler contest the heaviest deer will be determined the winner.

Prizes will be awarded at the Rod and Gun Club on Jan. 21. The winner of the consolation prize must be present at the time of the drawing.

Small Game Contest

The club hunting committee is working on plans for a small game hunting contest to be started later in the hunting season. The problem is determining the type of contest that would be fair and interest a large number of club members who hunt. Anyone having any ideas on the subject is encouraged to contact Mike Brickner, chairman of the hunting committee (545-5851) or your unit representative on the club board of governors.

Events This Weekend

Don't forget the two events the Rod and Gun Club is holding this weekend. There will be a Turkey Shoot at the club skeet ranges tomorrow and the club will operate Brinson Range tomorrow and Sunday to give anyone who intends to go hunting this year a chance to make sure his gun is shooting the way he is aiming.

The turkey shoot will start at 10 a.m. tomorrow morning and shooting will continue until 4 p.m. Cost will be one dollar a try and the prizes will be 10 to 12-pound frozen butter-ball turkeys. If you won't have an opportunity to go out to shoot you may still be able to get one of the pieces on one of the wheels from your unit representative.

Hunters who want to get acquainted with their weapon prior to the hunting will have two days to do this at Brinson Range. The range will be open from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. tomorrow and from noon until 4 p.m. on Sunday. Experienced shooters will be on hand to help out on any problems you might have.

ANYONE who intends to hunt during the coming season is invited to use the range this weekend. It's not necessary to be a member of the Rod and Gun Club, it's not necessary to have any connection with Fort Benning, the facility is open to all hunters.

Posters and flyers have been distributed showing the location of the range on the Jamestown Road in the Harmony Church Area. In the event you haven't seen one of the posters or flyers or are not familiar with the post you can call 545-6082 and ask for directions.

The Rod and Gun Club is located on First Division Road about one-quarter mile south of Highway 27. While you are out at the turkey shoot you can join the club to be eligible for the deer contest and get all the licenses and permits you need to hunt.

Tucker dominates Tallahassee judo meet

By Steve Malze

A champion in four short months—or how 1st Lt. James H. Tucker became the over-all winner of the United States Judo Association (USJA) Tallahassee Open Tournament.

Last June ('71), Tucker, executive officer of the 44th Co., 4th Bn. (Airborne), The School Brigade (TSB), joined the Fort Benning Judo Club to learn the fine art of self-defense. Under the able direction of Coach (Lt. Col.) C. Keaton, executive officer of the USA Marksmanship Unit and a holder of the Judo Black Belt, Tucker progressed rapidly from the rank of 'beginner' to that of Brown Belt in only four months.

To achieve this distinction in such a short time Tucker had to defeat five consecutive opponents at the Florida State University promotion matches. Tucker's success in judo tournaments started with a third place in the Jacksonville AAU Judo Open, second in the Fort Benning Judo Open, and, finally, the over-all tournament champion of the Tallahassee USJA Open which took place Oct. 16.

It's obvious that athletic ability has come naturally to Tucker. At Norfolk State College, where he graduated with a degree in Political Science, he was the football defensive team captain and played as linebacker and safety. Tucker participated in amateur light-heavy and heavy weight boxing and, later at Fort Benning, refereed the 4th Bn. (Airborne) Friday Night Boxing Matches. The TSB Basketball Championship was won by 44th Co. with the help of Tucker's fine coaching and playing.

Currently, Tucker, a member of the USJA, is enrolled in the Pathfinder Course 3-72 and still manages to find time to keep up his Judo training and tournament competition.

Tucker and his wife, Mary, have two children, Jimmy and Tina, and reside in the Columbus area.

Hardgrove, Mauldin compete for Country Club Golf Championship

George Hardgrove won semi-final matches to advance to the finals of the Fort Benning Country Club Fall Golf Championship last weekend.

Mauldin and Hardgrove will play 36 holes Sunday to decide the championship.

In the second flight play Lawton Jackson advanced to the finals with a win over Stete Mazurka. He will play the winner of a match between Cal Rousch and Bill Jones.

Records topple during rifle match

Records were toppled like ten-pins Saturday and Sunday during the International Invitational Rifle matches held at Fort Benning's Parks Range where a large number of the nations best Smallbore and 300 meter Rifle competitors swapped shots in the three phase tournament.

The two-day shoulder fired matches which included competition in Smallbore Three-Position Rifle, 300 Meter Free Rifle, and Precision Air Rifle, was the occasion for establishing or tying nine national records.

In the nine individual and four team match series, Capt. Lanny R. Bassham of the U. S. Army Marksmanship Training Unit (USAMTU) grabbed the largest number of individual championships when he won two of the three sets in the 300 meter Free Rifle matches along with the aggregate. He tied the present service record with his 1156 aggregate score.

Leading the U. S. Army Reserves in their quest for victory and new records was Capt. John Writer of Clarendon Hills, Ind. who won two championships, the Smallbore Aggregate and the Air Rifle. He set a new national record in the Smallbore Aggregate with his 1165.

Writer led his reserve team into two championships which established four national records when they won the Air Rifle and Smallbore team efforts. They established both Open and Reserve records in the Smallbore Aggregate and the Reserve record in the Air Rifle while setting a new Reserve record in the English Match with their 2330 team effort but lost the championship TU led by Bassham, which to a team from the USAMset new Open and Service records with their 2382 composite score.

The ninth new record was established by the USAMTU team of Bassham, Capt. Carl Jooss, 2nd Lt. Robert Gustin and Sp4 Henry Pinnell who placed second in the Air Rifle competition but set a service record with their 1433 score.

U. S. Marine shooter Warrant Officer Jerry Boswell won the initial match of the tournament when he posted a 598 of 600 in the English Match.

In her first return to the firing line since the World Championships in October 1970, Army Reserve Capt. Margaret Murdock, her championship form not affected by the long time interval, went ahead of her 26 competitors to win the championship in the Standing 50 Meter Smallbore Match with 375.

Some NCOES now worth 42 points

Basic level Noncommissioned Officer Education System (NCOES) courses are now worth 42 points for graduates. This increase is retroactive to the first classes, begun in May. On Oct. 13 DA approved CONARC's recommendation that the number of promotion points earned by successfully completing a basic level NCOES class be increased. ACONARC message instructs service schools to review records and notify parent units of increased awards of promotion points. Changes to the appropriate regulations are forthcoming. The new change means that NCOES graduates will earn twelve more promotion points than graduates of the field army NCO academies.

Sp4 gets Silver Star

By Harry Patteson

Sp4 Thomas H. Petty, of the 609th Transportation Company, has been awarded the Silver Star for gallantry in action against a hostile force in the Kingdom of Laos while serving with the 174th Aviation Company, 23rd Infantry Division.

Sp4 Petty was a crew member aboard a UH-1H helicopter transporting news correspondents near Landing Zone Lolo when notice was received of a friendly helicopter which had been downed by hostile fire. Sp4 Petty's aircraft returned the newsmen to a secure firebase and proceeded to the crash sight.

During the flight to the crash sight, further word was received of a second aircraft being forced down also sustaining friendly casualties.

On approach to the crash sight, Sp4 Petty's ship came under intense hostile fire. Reacting immediately, Sp4 Petty engaged the enemy positions with machinegun fire. As the aircraft landed, Sp4 Petty rushed to the wounded soldiers exposing himself to enemy ground fire. Maneuvering under these adverse conditions, Sp4 Petty succeeded in placing the injured soldiers on board his aircraft and signalled the pilot to lift-off. Again Sp4 Petty supressed the enemy fire as the helicopter departed the area to take the injured soldiers to medical facilities.

Sp4 Petty is due to ETS from the Army this month.

Suggestions pay off

Soldiers around Fort Benning who have suggestions to improve their unit operations may be awarded up to $250 by their battalion commander, through the Incentive Awards Program. To insure speedy processing of the suggestions, battalion commanders have authority to approve payment of this amount for suggestions from members of their unit which the battalion implements.

"Soldiers have a chance to look critically at unit operations," said Mr. John Schultz, chief of the Incentive Awards section. "When he develops a constructive idea to improve equipment, procedures, morale, or safety we want to know about it."

Those who have suggestions may fill out a suggestion form (DA form 1045) which can be obtained in all unit orderly rooms. Extra copies of the form may be obtained hrough the Incentive Awards office, or through the post publications office.

Forms should then be submitted to the unit commander, or to the Incentive Awards section located in Bldg. 1619, near the Main Post Office.

After hours, the form may be left in a drop box behind the Civilian Personnel Office.

After the suggestion is registered with the Incentive Awards section, it may be adopted by other units, both at Fort Benning, and other posts. The individual will then be in line for additional cash awards which may amount to as much as $25,000 at the Department of the Army level.

During Fiscal year 1971, the Incentive Awards section received over 2,500 such suggestions from military personnel at Fort Benning. Of these, 174 were adopted, which resulted in awards totaling 10,000, including one award of $3,350. Total savings to the taxpayer as a result of these suggestions were $735,000.

CIB award extended to Thai liaisons

The Combat Infantryman Badge now may be awarded to qualified soldiers who have served or are presently serving as liaison personnel with the Royal Thai Army Volunteer Force (RTAVF) in Vietnam.

The authority for presenting the award to these liaison personnel is retroactive to Oct. 17, 1967.

Commanders who are not authorized to award the Combat Infantryman Badge to eligible personnel have been asked to forward an appropriate recommendation, with supporting documentation to: DAAG-PSA-BC, Washington, D. C. 20314.

Requirements for the Combat Infantryman Badge may be found in AR-672-5-1, paragraph 96.

New Army training policy allows COs more freedom

Commanders can expect greater freedom in planning training programs for their units under the new Army training policy, according to spokesmen for the Directorate of Plans and Training (DPT), USAIC.

The new policy, issued by CONARC, is designed to place responsibility for determining the types and amount of training with the unit commander. It will also reduce paperwork connected with training operations.

Major commanders are now directed to give mission-oriented instructions to commanders at the battalion and company level. The unit commander can then design the training program which will be most effective in conducting his mission.

"For many years, unit commanders were spoonfed as far as training is concerned. Now they can make a lot of these decisions themselves," said Lt. Col. Max Waldrop, director of Plans and Training.

In the past, units have been required to conduct a specific amount of training on a large number of mandatory subjects, regardless of whether or not the training was necessary to their mission.

The new policy eliminates some topics from the mandatory list and removes time requirements from others.

Additionally, only training required for personnel transferred overseas (POR training) will be mandatory.

Detailed training forms on all personnel will no longer be required. Until recently, involved training records were a major issue in IG inspections. Now only—a minimal training information has to be recorded.

The change is expected to save manpower and money by allowing units to spend more time in training—for and performing their primary responsibilities.

WRBL praises Modern Volunteer Army

In a recent editorial statement made by WRBL TV, the actions of two groups of people were lauded. One was the Voluntary Army.

WRBL attributed much of the statement to former state Senator Bo Callaway, who was in Columbus recently. As Callaway stated, "Drastic changes are making the Army a great deal more acceptable to young men." The innovations made by the Army in an effort to modernize its systems have not contributed to any disciplinary problems, and the Army is now treating young men as human beings who can be responsible and who can make their own judgments, was also noted by Mr. Callaway.

As WRBL stated, "If the military isn't completely successful in providing a full army of volunteers, this new approach should help considerably to attract many more than we have previously. It should also stimulate reenlistment so that the number of draftees can at least be cut down."

Volunteer workers around the community were also praised and given a thank you for service well done.

For many years, countless volunteers have spent many hours, without compensation, for a variety of causes.

The ladies who work at our hospitals are an especially hard-working group. These women do small chores and provide services for patients. Most of these women work on regular schedules, the year around. Some of them work so regularly that they do as much work as paid workers. So . . . to the ladies in pink or blue, or stripes, WRBL expresses a warm thank you for service well done.

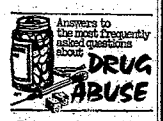
Smoke signals not past thing

Indians and their smoke signals are not necessarily a thing of the past.

Today about 35 Pima and Maricopa Indians make smoke signals in Arizona at a pace unheard of by their forefathers.

The present-day Indian-made signals, however, are quite different from those used by their ancestors for communication. These signals are multi-colored smoke grenades used by the Army for signaling or for marking targets and landing zones.

The Indians making signal grenades for the Army are employed on a 20-acre industrial site located adjacent to the Gila River Indian Reservation, Coolidge, Ariz.



Head

their Airborne unit, and told to get with it.

"The discipline of Airborne was something else. I learned I just had to do it myself, and that I could," said Bill.

"I learned a lot about living, moving around. I learned to take things as they come, if they're good or if they're bad. That's just life," said Dave. "But it took this to pull me out."

Both Bill and Dave have now completed GED and are planning to take college level work in psychology. They are also both involved in the post drug programs in their new duty assignments.

Why are so many adolescents experimenting with marijuana now?

In part this is because marijuana is "in." Peer group pressures have led many to try "pot." Some use it as an act of defiance. Some are curious. While most adolescents do not continue using the drug 5 to 10 per cent become heavy, daily users.

'Infantry' discusses the Reserves, the role of the draft in future wars

The draft is back, but it will play a much less vital role in any future conflict. The November-December issue of "Infantry" tells how the Reserves will be carrying a greater share of the load.

As more and more men and equipment are withdrawn from Southeast Asia, speculation grows about the Army of the future. An increasingly important part of that future Army will be the Reserve Components — the Army National Guard and the Army Reserve. How will they be organized? What kind of equipment will they use? What are the advantages of serving in the National Guard or Reserves? In "Reserve Components Service," Lt. Col. Charles W. Lawrence answers these and other questions about the future of the Reserve Components.

A key problem of the next few years will be maintaining an adequate level of unit training with minimal funds and training areas available. In a series of three articles on "Dynamic Training," three Infantry officers offer some tips on how to get the most training value from limited resources. Emphasizing training in both offensive and defensive operations at the squad level, the authors demonstrate that you can train your unit in a garrison environment — with a little imagination.

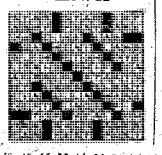
The Army today has an enormous amount of experience in jungle warfare, but how many Infantrymen have ever conducted operations in a snow-covered forest at 40 degrees below zero? In "Alaska's Husky Brigade," Lt. Col. Robert L. Bechdolt, Jr. tells what it's like to train in the Land of the Midnight Sun. Dealing primarily with the 171st Infantry Brigade at Fort Wainwright, Alaska, "Husky Brigade" illustrates the tactics and techniques the Army will be using if we are ever involved again in fighting in the Far North.

The Infantry has its lighter moments, too — even being an advisor can be fun. "SGT Ben and Buddha's Mountain," by MSgt. Bennie L. Fagan, is an example of a new type of article, Infantry humor.

These features, plus others like "Law of Land Warfare," and "Why Can't I Motivate My People," will appear in the November-December issue of Inf. Magazine, on sale at Post Exchanges and the Bookstore early next week. Together with the regular departments — "Forum," "Combat Notes," "Infantry News," "Career Notes" and all the rest — they are the latest from Infantry, "the professional magazine for Infantrymen."

Aviation soldier is a racoon hunter

What to do on weekends is a question pondered by many Fort Benning soldiers. PFC John H. Harris, of the 197th Aviation Company, has his own ideas about weekends- racoon hunting, of course.



Racoon hunting is not a new sport to Harris by any means. During the summer of 1970, he won the Southeast United States Coon-Hunting Championship and subsequently placed 16th in the World Championships held in Tennessee.

Harris became interested in this fast growing sport through a coon hunt club in the Miami, Fla. area. The club gained his interest and gave him his first dog which was a registered Blue Tick. The Blue Tick breed is considered one of the best breeds for this sport. At that time, Harris was a professional bone-fishing guide earning from $75 to $100 a day. This occupation provided plenty of the needed time for his coon-hunting.

For those not familiar with coon-hunting, the sport is an unusually interesting one, especially during a championship hunt. The competition takes place at night and the hunters carry no weapons of any kind. Points are awarded solely on the basis of the dogs' performance. Dogs may score points in two ways: by "striking" a coon's trail and by treeing the coon. Since the hunt is at night, the hunters identify their dogs by sound. The hunters know by their dog's bark when he is on a trail or has treed a coon, and they tell the score. Rarely do two hunters dispute a bark. If the dogs fail to tree the coon they are trailing, they lose the points they earned by striking the trail; and if they tree a 'possum or other animal, they get negative points. Harris' dog earned 975 points in the two nights of competition for the championship.

TIPS has answers about your VRB

FT. BENJAMIN HARRISON, Ind.—If variable reenlistment bonuses have caused you confusion, take a look at the Winter 1971-72 issue of TIPS, the Army personnel magazine. That issue will feature a special bonus attraction on the subject, which came about after a TIPS reader sent the editors a difficult question to answer.

Officers who would like to know "What's Happening to the OER" will also have an interest in the magazine's thorough look at the Revised Officer Performance Reporting System (ROPRS).

And anyone who has thought about writing to his congressman with a personnel-type complaint will find helpful "how to solve the problem" hints in an article called "Write or Wrong?"

The Winter 1971-72 issue of TIPS will be in the hands of troops in the field during the latter part of December. It will be, that is, if their units have subscribed to it—and in sufficient copies to go around—with a DA Form 12-4. DA Form 12-4 is the form which units use to order publications through the Pinpoint Distribution System.

As a matter of fact, that distribution system is also the subject of an article in the next issue of TIPS, as is a "Preview of Coming Attractions" study guide for the 71H MOS proficiency test.

TIPS is primarily a magazine for personnel specialists, but every issue features layman's language articles explaining personnel things for the people personnel specialists support. The magazine is published quarterly by the U.S. Army Personnel Information Activity at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

Boy Scouts honored in ceremony

Fort Benning has traditionally been a scouting post, and many of the younger members of the military families have achieved high ranks in the membership of the scout troop.

Recently ceremonies were held at the Main Post Chapel Annex to honor some of these young men and to present to them the insignia of their hard earned awards.

Lt. Col. (Ret.) Lemuel Thomas, chairman of the Boy Scout activities, Chattahoochee Council, Col. E. J. Murdock, provost marshall of Fort Benning and Capt. Wiley Connor, troop committee advancement chairman, made the presentations of the awards to the members of Troop 237, "THE ACTION TROOP."

Thomas presented the Eagle Award to Robert Benning, son of Maj. and Mrs. Robert Benning. The Eagle award is the highest level a boy scout can reach.

Col. Murdock presented Life Awards to Mike Overton, son of Sgt. and Mrs. Clark Overton; Ken Canitz, son of Sgt. and Mrs. Ken Canitz; Chris Hall, son of CWO and Mrs. Terry Hall, and Jeff Newcombe, son of Maj. and Mrs. Nelson Newcombe, all of Fort Benning.

Conner presented the Star Awards to Bill Ivey, son of CWO and Mrs. William Ivey, and Jerry Brunner, son of MSgt. and Mrs. Duane Brunner, of Columbus.

Lumpkin to present two events of interest in Nov.

On Nov. 5, 6, and 7 Lumpkin, Ga. will again host its outstanding annual events, the Fair of 1850 at Westville and Bedingfield Inn's Bazzar and Attic Sale.

Fall Fair time at Westville means the thrill of seeing seasonal activities such as cane grinding and syrup making. These and other activities put you back in time to the 1850's. Watch craftsmen at work, doing blacksmithing, pottery, and brick making, spinning, quilting, basket making, shingle riving, gardening, and fireplace cooking. Added crafts at Westville this fall are weaving and dyeing.

Other activities to enjoy as you tour this reconstructed village are candle and soap making, broom making, and churning. Traditional music will be featured and the whole atmosphere will be on one of nineteenth century rural fun.

Admission to the fair is the regular price of $2 adult, $1 students, pre-school free.

At Bedingfield Inn's Bazaar and Attic Sale the visitor may tour the 1836 stagecoach inn, buy fine needlework and other handmade items, eat a variety of home baked items or search out a real treasure from the attic sale at Singer's Cobbler Shop.

Specialties of this event are the "no one can bake them like they do in Stewart County" cakes, peanut brittle, and imaginative hand made gifts. Home canned goods from dewberry jelly to pepper relish will be for sale. Sandwiches and drinks are also available.

Those who haven't toured Bedingfield Inn will find a beautifully furnished and appointed restoration with the purpose of showing travel accommodations of the 1830-40 period. Tours are $1 for adults and 50c for students.

The time for both events is 10 a.m.-6 p.m. on Friday and Saturday and 1 p.m.-6 p.m. on Sunday.

A special antique auction will be held Nov. 6 at 6:30 p.m. Westville will be disposing of many extra items, furnishings and everything from Edison phonographs to Wheeler and Wilson sewing machines. The auction will be held in the old theatre building on Lumpkin's town square.

Anyone wishing further information may write to Mrs. W. B. Singer, Box 95, Lumpkin, Ga., 31815.

'Soldiers' hits race relations 'head-on' in October issue

"Nigger," "Honky" and "Uncle Tom" are terms that hurt and divide. "Soldiers" magazine hits them head-on in a no-terms-barred article in its October issue.

Titled "The Trouble With," this article covers he insights and judgments of one of the Army's instructors in race relations. He points a finger at us all and shows how we tend to avoid serious dialogue when talking with members of a race different than ours.

Overcoming more than a century of racial misunderstandings and prejudices is no easy task, but articles like "The Trouble With" help clear the air a bit.

Then you're whisked to the tundra-covered glacial valley near the Black Rapids Mountains in central Alaska. The troops are from Co. B, 1st Bn., 60th Inf. of the 172nd INF. Bde.

Race problems are far from their minds as they mount a razor back ridge that boasts a drop of more than 100 feet and in places is less than 18 inches wide.

Learning to live on glaciers has implications for the future. If the United States is ever again called on to fight in the arctic region, the ability of soldiers to travel over such terrain will be extremely important.

A skill soldiers are called on to demonstrate more frequently is marksmanship. "Shoot for a Bull" doesn't throw more of the same but shows how experts in the Army's Marksmanship Training Unit make hitting center mass look easy.

It's easy until you learn that excess coffee drinking only increases the pulse rate and therefore is a no-no. Easy until you discover that a rigorous PT program is also part of the marksmanship game. This article brings many of the marksman's tricks into view.

Another feature reveals how the Army National Guard and U. S. Army Reserve forces are participating as full and equal partners on the Army team. "Tools for the Task" tells of progress in equipping, funding and operating these units throughout America.

And in "All About You," "Soldiers" give you some practical tips to prepare your resume — a resume aimed at landing you a job after leaving the Army.

There's lots more, too. Read on and see why "What's New" and "Dateline" are both geared to keep you in the Army know. And if the food at your mess hall hasn't been all that funny lately, try "Unofficially Speaking," a menu designed to bring belly laughs.

Four flyers die in chopper crash

By Roger Pavey

Four Fort Benning soldiers were killed Tuesday when two helicopters collided in midair at Lawson Army Airfield.

The victims were:

CWO Alan Shurlow, 23, 330 32nd Ave., Columbus, survived by his parents Mr. and Mrs. Arden Shurlow of 224 Rospect St., Vassar, Mich.

The two helicopters, a UH1H (Huey) and a OH6 apparently collided during routine landing and takeoff maneuvers. First reports indicate that the Huey was taking off while the OH6 was landing when the two aircraft collided.

All four victims were licensed pilots on routine training missions at the time of the accident. There were two occupants in each helicopter. The fire which began upon impact was put out within minutes of the occurence. Henry M. Montgomery, post fire chief, said, "The victims were not burned as a result of the fire. The fire was put out before it reached the cockpit area."

According to a hospital spokesman all the victims died of multiple trauma.

The crash which took place within sight of the Lawson Army Airfield command and operations building was investigated by Army safety experts within minutes after the crash. An aviation spokesman said the UH1H was assigned to the 197th Aviation Company. The OH6 was part of the 331st Helicopter Platoon. Both units are assigned to Fort Benning.

No further details were available pending the findings of the investigation board.

'Save-A-Toy' for Christmas

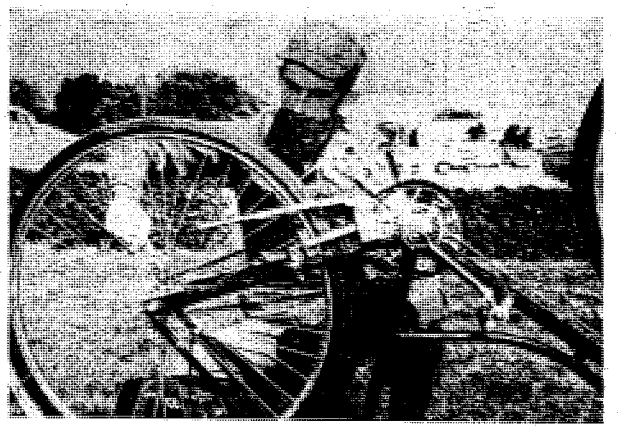
This Christmas will mark the 18th season that project "Save-A-Toy" has been in operation at Fort Benning. In this project, the Mortar Committee, Provost Marshal's office and the 4th Student Battalion, Airborne, use voluntary donations of labor, funds and materials to renovate discarded toys to provide Christmas presents for underprivileged children.

"Save-A-Toy" had formerly been operated by only one group, the Mortar Committee. However, this year the Christmas projects of the 4th Stu. Bn. and the Provost Marshal have been consolidated with the Mortar Committee's into one large group effort.

The project came into being in 1934 when SFC Christ J. Lohere, Mortar Committee range maintenance ammunition chief, tried to make an NCO's family happy at Christmas. Since then, the project has gained much recognition, and now Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning are all involved in the program.

Through years of association with the project, the Mortar Committee has established many contacts with the local businesses, the news media and relief organizations which contribute immeasurably to the project's success.

After Christmas each year, the committee begins to collect broken and discarded toys from interested individuals as well as from businesses which are clearing their toy inventories. Materials are collected throughout the year so that in the "active" portion of the year, October, November and December, they have sufficient paint, parts and other needed items to repair the accumulated toys.



At this time, both the Mortar Committee and the Provost Marshal's projects are working on an all year basis. Toys donated to each of these groups are sorted and repaired. The committee men work in their spare time painting and repairing toys while the committee wives assist in making doll clothes and repairing dolls.

All work in the Provost Marshal's project is done by stockade prisoners. Men who are in the stockade and have profiles for heavy work have volunteered their time and effort to renovate all toys given to them. No toy is discarded. Some use is made of every donation. SSgt. Troy Logan, stockade woodshop NCO, supervises all work done by these men, providing the guidance and know-how to insure maximum craftsmanship on all re-

931st gets new sergeant major

CSM James L. Runyon is the new command sergeant major for the 931st Engr. Gp. He replaces CSM Joseph Chickini who has been admitted to Brooke Army General Hospital, Ft. Sam Houston, Tex.

CSM Runyon came to the engineer unit from the 5th Bn., 31st Inf., 197th Inf. Bde., and was formerly the sergeant major of the U.S. Army Training Center from 1966 to 1968.

Before returning to Fort Benning this time, CSM Runyon was the sergeant major of I Field Force, Vietnam, from 1968 to 1969; sergeant major of the 32nd Army Air Defense Command, Germany, until 1970; and sergeant major of the 2nd and 3rd Brigades of the 2nd Inf. Div., Korea, from 1970 until 1971.

His assignments have also included not only the "Screaming Eagles" of the 101st Abn. Div., but the "Rakasans" of the 187th Abn. Regimental Combat Team during the Korean War, the 82nd Abn. Div., and the 7th and 2nd Inf. Divs.

He was filling a sergeant major's slot in 1959 with the 2nd Battle Group (Old Guard) 7th Div. in Korea. He returned to the States as a first sergeant with the 187th, then made E-9 in July, 1961, while serving as sergeant major of the 2d Battle Group, 9th Inf., 2d Div. In February of 1968, when the first increment of command sergeants major was selected, CSM Runyon's name was on the list.

In 1943 he volunteered for parachute training with the 501st Parachute Infantry Regiment, and since then he has completed more than 400 jumps — with never a serious injury.

For ecology club

CURE seeking people

By Henry Kulesza

The newly formed Ecology Club (CURE) wants people of all ages and backgrounds to become involved in environmental workshops. There are many qualified individuals on post with the skills necessary to do something about our environment. Maybe you have some technical skill. All levels and degrees of involvement will be necessary.

Many of us are only "armchair ecologists," We say, "The air and water need cleaning up." But we don't want to get our hand dirty — we don't want to get involved. Then who will clean up the environment?. Will it steadily get worse and worse? It will take time, effort and dedication. It will take hard work, hard work and a little more hard work. And maybe then we can arrest the forces of pollution and turn the tide toward a cleaner environment and a better life style.

The purpose of CURE will be to stimulate interest in ecology and the environment which reflects on our way of life. To accomplish our purpose CURE will carry on a variety of activities: formulating an appreciation of the environment, developing education and information programs, promoting ecological awareness and finally stimulating individual and group action. CURE needs a start, a beginning, a chance, and a little helping hand . . . 545-5933.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

by Bill King

After purchasing chicken, wrap it in waxed paper as soon as possible and store near the top of the refrigerator. Be sure to use it within a day or two.

It's a good week to make baked apples. Sweet eating apples should be baked in their skins, while tart cooking apples should be peeled first.

Try seviche as appetizers: marinate tiny raw scallops or strips of sole overnight in equal parts of seasoned lemon and lime juice with chopped green peppers and onion rings. The acid will "cook" the fish. Serve chilled on lettuce.

For cookie baking, use cookie sheets of smaller dimensions all around than your oven shelf. This allows for better heat circulation and more even baking.

A traditional Hungarian dish of days gone by was roast suckling pig garnished with four-leaf clovers.

What's happening Hey Freak

Written By Keith Harmon
Graphic By Bill Dolan

"Hey, Freak, what's happening" was the way most of us greeted him.

He liked that name, and even had his Mama-san embroider "The Freak" on his bush hat. He was hung up on smack, a heroin addict, and he didn't try to hide it from anyone.

When he first started his tour in Vietnam he was everybody's nice guy. As a mail clerk he'd get those "care packages" of home-made goodies sent to soldiers, who'd already gone home and pass out the chocolate chip cookies packed in popcorn to anyone who came along. He'd open the mailroom at midnight if you had mail and were unable to pick it up during the day. Everybody liked him . . . even when his habit got bad later on.

He started staying to himself a lot after he had been there a few months. After work he hardly ever came out of his room. "The Freak" quit hanging around like he used to. He was high every evening and was satisifed to sit in his hootch and talk to no one, see no one.

After a while things got worse. "The Freak" started smoking up during the day and the mail system was beginning to break down. Letters weren't being delivered on time, and a couple of days we didn't get mail at all because he failed to go to the airstrip to pick up the incoming parcels. Needless to say, "The Freak" wasn't everybody's friend anymore. Mail call was always a big thing then.

After he bombed out of a couple of other jobs, each one less important and taxing then the one before, "The Freak" got what he wanted — no job at all. He loved it, and stayed high all the time. Often he wouldn't eat or sleep for days, until finally he'd crash for two or three solid days of sleep. He lost so much weight he looked more dead than alive.

'He was everybody's nice guy'

Some of the guys talked to him. "Hey, Freak, why don't you turn yourself in, man; you're killing yourself?" But he didn't like that kind of talk. "The lifers can't be trusted to help anybody," he said, but what he meant was that he really didn't want help. Everything was cool. "This is the best high there is," he'd say.

We sometimes wondered what was going through his mind when he'd slouch on his bunk, stoned, limp and oblivious to everything around him. We'd wonder if he even felt those times the cigarette in his hand burned down to his flesh and left blisters and scars. Maybe he was thinking about home and what he was going to do when he got back. He probably promised himself that he was going to "kick" before he left, sometime when he was "short" and close to leaving.

For certain though, he thought a lot about how things were going to be when he got home, out of the Army and free at last. A lot of things had changed "back in The World." He had a lot of unanswered questions.

As far as we know, "The Freak" never found any answers to his questions. The day he left he was all smiles on the outside as he carried his duffle bag to the truck waiting to take him to Long Binh for return home. He grinned and gave us the "peace sign" as he left, his way of saying "everything's okay now, I'm going home." The last we heard, though, he never made it. He was hospitalized in Hawaii for severe withdrawal pains. At 23

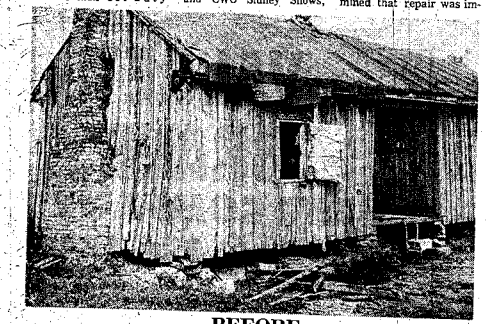
Volunteers build new house for welfare recipient



Volunteer work for welfare programs can be most rewarding and satisfying as the men of the 399th Trans. Det. well know.

The volunteer workers contribute many man hours of their off-duty time performing odd jobs for the aged and disabled persons residing in the local area. Working in conjunction with the Russell County Welfare Dept. and under the supervision of Capt. Stephen Curtin and CWO Sidney Shows, the men of the 399th just completed the construction of a house for Lewis Ingram, a welfare recipient residing in Russell County.

Upon examining the structure in which Mr. Ingram lived, it was determined that repair was impractical. With used lumber and building materials donated by the Walker Lumber Company of Hochendunkus, Ala., the [illegible] began construction of the new house on the 19 of this year.

Having no power lines in the area, only common hand tools were used in the construction. Steve Nelson drew plans that the men began to double nailed, double framed and has a double ceiling.

Credited with the 209 man hour project are: SFC Finney, SSgt. Harman, Sgt. Thornhart, Sgt. Merrell, Sgt. Cline, Spc 4 Collins, Spc 4 Wallace, Spc 4 Ewards, Spc 4 Rogers, Spc 4 Smith and Spc 4 Hildebrandt.

609th Trans. takes to the field

Leaving the comforts of garrison and moving to the field is just another phase of training for the men of the 609th Transportation Company, Operational readiness is a necessity in today's Army; and, to maintain this highly trained level, a unit must learn to utilize its personnel and resources effectively and efficiently.

Under cloudy and rainy skies, the 609th moved to an area located just off Hourglass Road for a three day training operation. From this location the 609th gave maintenance and technical support to all the aviation units within the Aviation Command. Those men required to perform duties at Lawson Army Airfield, were transported to the airfield by bus and were returned to the training site that evening.

Classes were conducted on subjects such as CBR, tactical security and tactical cover deception. Included in the training were simulated enemy attacks.

The exercise provided the 609th the second opportunity in two months to improve its tactical capability.

(Byline Bayonet welcomes questions of general interest about Fort Benning and the Army. Within space limitations all reasonable questions will be answered. Questions of a purely military nature which obviously could be answered more properly by commanders or supervisors within the chain of command will not be accepted. All questions must be signed with current unit of assignment indicated. Send questions to the Bayonet, ATTN: SFC Bob Edwards, Room 602, Infantry Hall or telephone 545-4782.)

Q — Under the Joint Uniform Military Pay System (JUMPS) what action must be taken by an individual upon reassignment to a different duty station in order to insure that his pay is not interrupted?

A — According to a spokesman from the Finance and Accounting Office the following would apply:

a. If a member is being paid by cash or by check to himself at his unit, this type of payment is suspended upon permanent change of station (PCS) and will be reactivated upon his arrival at his new station.

b. The following excerpt is quoted from Para. 3-1 (10), DA Circular 37-64: "Military personnel will find it advantageous to have their pay checks mailed on a continuing basis without regard to change of duty station, to a bank, or other financial institution for credit to their account. This can insure continuing regular payment despite periods of absence which occur on paydays, such as PCS, TDY and leave.

Q — What is Project Referral and how does it apply to a man who is retiring in the near future?

A — Project Referral is a Department of Defense (DOD) program which offers the service of a computerized skills bank for members of the Armed Forces. The system is programmed to match the skill of a military man or woman with job openings as reported by industry in the various parts of the United States. Service personnel may register in the referral program when they are within six months of retiring. If they are not immediately matched up with a job opening, their application will remain in the computer for a period of six months after retirement.

Q—How does becoming eligible for the social security medicare program affect my CHAMPUS eligibility?

A—All beneficiaries, other than dependents of active duty personnel, who at age 65, become entitled to the hospital portion (Part A) of the Social Security Medicare Program, lose their CHAMPUS eligibility benefits. This is true whether or not they are enrolled in the Medicare Program.

Q—I am being separated from the Army with a service connected disability, is there any time limit on applying for VA disability compensation?

A—For the veteran with a service-connected injury or disease, there is no time limit for application for Veterans Administration disability compensation, but in order to receive payments doted from the time of your separation from the military service, you must apply

Just deserts; spiked banannas

By John Gause

I'm happy to note capital punishment is gradually going out of style. I always did think that a clean, painless death was cruel and unusual punishment for murderers, rapists and sorts like that.

I'm reminded of Halloween, the one time of the year when little kids have the opportunity to beg goodies legally, dress up like spooks and goblins, and just be little kids. Their reward: bananas containing fishhooks, candy bars spiked with needles, apples boobytrapped with sharp and deadly plastic slivers. More starkly, it reportedly happened right here to military children.

Now who in their right mind would want to execute some fellow human being for wanting to spice up our Halloween with razor blades and dope for the kiddies? Not me. If I were the judge I would sentence such people to serve one week in minimum custody, and I would feed them well.

On a diet of their own depraved making.

The judge says

Alleged criminal may be extradited

USAIC LEGAL ASSISTANCE OFFICE — When a person charged with a felony crosses state lines, he may be extradited. After arrest in another state, a demand can be made for his return to face the charges. The arrested person is entitled to the protections of the state courts and state laws where he is arrested. He may resist extradition and the governor may refuse to grant it, if the governor has grounds for not honoring the request of the demanding state.

When a person crosses international boundaries, the rights of extradition become more complex. Treaties govern the rights and duties of the respective nations and of the persons arrested in each country. Treaties are difficult to enforce and interpret and are largely a matter of the international relations of each nation.

When a person merely crosses state lines and remains in the United States, a federal law or court may affect the accused. It may settle the rights of the states involved in the extradition proceeding.

The ease of international travel emphasizes the problem. In a recent case an American citizen, George Gringo, escaped from a Mexican jail and fled to the United States. George had been convicted of murdering a prominent Mexican official. At his Mexican trial there was no English-speaking interpreter. Despite its long history of allowing extradition, the U.S. refused in this case.

George had already served ten years in prison, was convicted without the right to cross-examine witnesses against him, was not provided a translator and other protections were denied him.

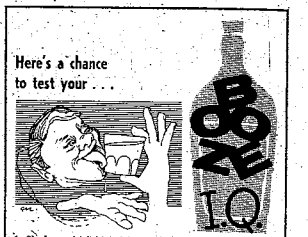
Treaties between countries vary. Not all offenses are extraditable and each treaty governs relations with a particular country.

Nations that have no treaty with the U.S have no duty to deliver any person within their borders. A person may ask for asylum, and if granted, can live in that country without fear of being extradited.

The U.S. has generally not refused extradition because of potential mistreatment of a fugitive by the demanding nation. The Constitution does not protect a U.S. citizen from unfair procedures in a foreign nation.

Criticism has merit

By Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Thomas J. Neumann



It has been said that critics are often men who have failed. A literary critic often is one who tried his hand at literature, but never quite succeeded in producing it. A dramatic critic is one who sits on the edge of the Planet No-Drama to criticize the dramas on all other planets. Not always, but sometimes, criticism is the outcome of an incapacity to produce, or a defense against one's own inferiority.

Because criticism can be disappointed ambition, it does not follow that it has no function. But it's never well to dig a hole unless you put something in it. Wise men, who are leaders, find that encouragement is often a better stimulus to improve efforts than any criticism.

Our mood today is more critical than encouraging, perhaps because no one examines his own conscience, and few, therefore, are conscious of their own faults. There is no character in the world so bad that there is still not left within it a potency for betterment. A dry stick is better for burning than a wet stick, but there does come a moment when the flames will eventually ignite it.

Encouragement, given with sincerity, can be the most effective tool of any superior. The section chief, the teacher in the classroom, the father and mother in the home, the coach of the football team will find greater success at times, by a word of encouragement that expresses confidence in the other than by severe and biting criticism.

The true critic will always fill the hole that he has dug. The false and selfish critic will leave the hole empty and no one profits from the criticism, especially the critic himself.

Survey shows growing 'indifference' to religion

The entire approach to religious education for Catholics at Fort Benning has been changed, because of findings in widespread surveys made last year.

The reason more and more adults and youngsters grow indifferent to religious education, the surveys found, is because they lack examples of Christianity in action in their daily lives.

In other words, the adults in the community either don't think about religion or don't do anything about it.

Every Catholic has a two-fold role. He is privileged to be able to take part in Christ's work. And he also has an obligation to learn more about his religion. The objective is to help his fellow man to learn more about Christ, while he is learning more.

The parish's new religious education program, CARE, is for adults, and can achieve its full potential only if most of the adults in the parish volunteer some of their time to help in the program.

There is a job for everyone in the program. Just a few of the posts that need filling are teachers, secretaries, home visitors and administrators.

You need only be a Christian, attempting to live a Christian life. That qualifies you. We can teach you all the rest. You have a duty to do something for Christ, and this could be one of the most enriching acts of your life.

There is no need to be a theologian to be a teacher. Remember what God told Moses when the prophet pleaded that no one would listen to him — "I will be with you" God said.

Commissary discussed at 'Patriots' coffee

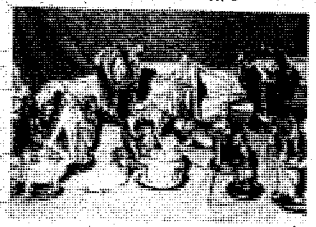
The October "Soldiers' Wives Coffee" of the 1st Bn. (Mech), 50th Inf., "Patriots," was held Oct. 21 in the battalion area.

This organization is unique in that it is open to the wives of all soldiers assigned to the battalion, regardless of rank, in keeping with the "family" concept in the battalion.

Mrs. Stephen R. Pawlik, wife of the battalion commander, called the meeting to order and introduced the guest speaker, Charles L. Canington, Post commissary officer. Canington gave an informative talk on the operation of a commissary, specifally Fort Benning's. He said, "The commissary is a service given as part of the compensation to you in the service, in lieu of cash, therefore it has become part of your pay." The commissary officer also said that the ladies were fortunate to have a commissary such as Fort Benning's, because it is one of the largest, and, is therefore able to buy at a quantity discount.

A new babysitting program was initiated and provided by the "Patriots" for the youngsters of the wives. This fully furnished nursery seemed to help the wives tremendously.

A tennis clinic, set up by Mrs. Pawlik, was next on the discussion format. Mrs. Pawlik is giving a free tennis clinic every Monday, weather permitting, for the "Patriot" wives. Equipment will be provided by Special Services. Any "Patriot" wife interested was encouraged to attend.



Hostesses for the October coffee were the ladies of "D" Co. The November coffee will be held in conjunction with a Wives' Tour of the battalion.

Oil paintings to be displayed

Mrs. Evelyn Solomon Burger will be displaying 35 paintings in oil and acrylic during her first one-man show at the Columbus Museum of Arts and Crafts, Sunday from 3-6 p.m.

Included in her display are landscapes, flowers, still life, heads and figure studies.

Mrs. Burger was born in Albany, Ga., and reared in Columbus. She has studied and painted in Positano, Italy and in San Miguel, Mexico.

Christmas bazaar slated

By Jun Smith And D'Anne Rogers
Fem-Line Staff Writers

A Christmas Bazaar, a good way to do some holiday shopping and contribute to charity at the same time, is scheduled to be held by the OWC, Dec. 1, beginning at 10 a.m.

The bazaar is open to both the Fort Benning and Columbus community and will be held in the Main Officers' Open Mess.

A variety of handmade items, ranging from Christmas oriented to year-round gifts, will be featured.

In addition, a "White Elephant" sale and baked goods sale will be held in conjunction with the bazaar.

For the past four years the OWC has held the bazaar and donated the proceeds to various charities. Last year the club donated over $5,000 to such organizations as the welfare fund, Tot Town Nursery, Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts and toward scholarships.

Newly elected president of the Catholic Women of the Chapel, Mrs. George J. Schneider, conducted her first board meeting recently, and appointed the following commission chairmen: Community Affairs — Mrs. Herbert L. Frandsen, International Affairs — Mrs. Donald R. Rodriquez, Family Affairs — Mrs. Donald R. — Mrs. Allen R. Wissinger, and Church-Community Affairs — Mrs. Edward M. Bradford.

Plans were discussed for a variety of projects for the coming year which will be presented to the members at the November meeting. Several old projects were retained, and a few new ones will be added to attain the goals set for the current year.

In addition, a committee was selected to explore the possibility of writing a more explicit constitution, and asked to make their recommendations at the earliest possible date for the board's consideration after being reviewed by Father Paul M. Dede.

During the coming year, Mrs. Schneider will be assisted by the vice-president, Mrs. Norbert W. Otto, the secretary, Mrs. Bill F. Cable, and the treasurer, Mrs. Heriberto Otero.

The OWOC meets on the first Friday of each month at Main Post Catholic Chapel at 9:15 a.m. The next meeting will be held today and all the Catholic ladies in the Fort Benning community are invited to attend.

Special Note: Free nursery service is available at Tot Town Nursery (Main Post on 1st Division Road) for the women attending this church function.

RANGER WIVES

Mod was the mood and a coffeehouse motif was the scene for the Fort Benning Ranger Officers' Wives' Club on Oct. 21, at the Supper Club.

Hostesses for the festivities were: Mrs. Dennis Boyd, Mrs. Larry Culbreth, Mrs. Powell Johnson, Mrs. James Price and Mrs. Walter Ross. A warm "thank you" was extended to the hostesses for their many hours of work and lovely decorations.

Col. David E. Grange, Ranger Department's new director, was guest speaker. Col. Grange spoke to the wives on the current goals of the Ranger Department and what they mean for their husbands.

The club welcomed, as guests, the Ranger student wives: Mrs. Robert Anderson, Mrs. William Bryant, Mrs. Michael Dunn, Mrs. Ronald Green, Mrs. James Hamrick, Mrs. Ward King and Mrs. Peter Root. Also welcomed was Mrs. Benjamin Lane, former club president.

Hats, Hats And More Hats . . . The ladies from Directorate of Plans and Training (DPT), headed by Mrs. Willis J. Adams, held an outing in La-Grange on Oct. 19.

The morning started at Newell's Hat Outlet, where the ladies enjoyed trying on most of the 5,000 hats in stock. Some even managed to find just the hat or hats they had always wanted.

For lunch the ladies sat down to home-cooked food at LaGrange's Plantation Manor. Before the trip back to Fort Benning, everyone enjoyed a browse through The Mill store.

Approximately 13 attended, including two special guests, Mrs. Clifford H. Ford and Mrs. William Bricker.

The officers and ladies of the Training Divison, (DPT), got together for dinner on Oct. 8, at Pritchett's Kitchenette in Columbus.

Approximately 23 including a special guest, Mrs. Clifford H. Ford, attended the informal meal.

Col. Max L. Waldrop, chief of the Training Division, gave a brief speech and bid farewell to Capt. and Mrs. Lowell E. Twining, who are leaving DPT. Col. Waldrop also welcomed Capt. and Mrs. Mark T. LEADERSHIP

Thanksgiving Day was the theme of Conditioning, Combatives and Drill Committee's Oct. 19 coffee, held at the home of Mrs. Jim Hunt.

The fall harvest in the cornucopia made a beautiful centerpiece and reminded the ladies that the big day to prepare those turkeys is not too far away.

Everyone spent a leisurely evening talking and laughing as they indulged in delicious chocolate pie, coffee and cokes.

Mrs. Hunt made several announcements about upcoming events and gave a progress report on the projects for the OWC Christmas Bazaar.

Next month's hostess will be Mrs. David Thompson. The coffee will be at 7:30 p.m. on Nov. 16.

Approximately 20 officers' wives from the Leadership Committee participated in a Fip to the Leadership Reaction Course at Fort Benning Oct. 18.

The ladies met at the home of Mrs. Billy E. Rutherford after the trip for a potluck lunch of salads and desserts served from a table decorated with a colorful fall arrangement of dried flowers. Hostesses for the morning were Mrs. Ralph J. Charkins and Mrs. Joseph J. Pavero Jr.

CO. OPNS.

On Oct. 26, the officers' wives of the Land Navigation Committee held a monthly coffee for the Company Operations Dept. in the Corregidor Room of the Main Officers' Open Mess.

Following refreshments, a program on the art and techniques of flower arranging was presented by Mrs. Russell Traino.

Welcomed into the group were Mrs. Michael Arida, Mrs. John Pomije, and Mrs. William Randell. Guests included Mrs. Logan Richards, mother of Mrs. Elliot P. Sydnor Jr.

AVN. CMD.

An evening get-together at Mrs. Tyrone Chamberlain's home was the October function for the ladies of the 197th Aviation Company.

Mrs. Joseph Gryder was the lucky lady chosen for the Fashion Two-Twenty make-up demonstration, while the rest of the group enjoyed the refreshments provided by co-hostesses, Mrs. Russell Maugans and Mrs. Chamberlain.

A tree branch, with favors wrapped in purple net and tied to the branches, decorated the refreshment table. Finger sandwiches, meringue chocolate-chip cookies, and a fruit cocktail cake were served along with coffee and "spiked" punch.

The Metropolitan Animal Shelter Auxiliary had contacted several ladies of the 197th to help with their next money-raising project — a bazaar on Nov. 26 and 27. Those ladies wishing to donate hand-made items, white elephants, or baked or homecanned goods should take their donations to Mrs. Jon Stillman's home by Nov. 15.

The 197th Aviation Company's next ladies function will be a pot-luck luncheon at Mrs. Jon Stillman's home on Nov. 17.

197th INF. BDE.

Mrs. John Rudd and Mrs. P. O'Lear were hostesses at a coffee for the ladies of the 2nd Bn., 10th Arty., 197th Inf. Bde., held at the Corregidor Room of the Main Officers' Open Mess on Oct. 12, at 7:30 p.m.

The decorations provided an atmosphere of autumn and Halloween. Paper pumpkins were placed on the tables and were used as name tags. The buffet table, covered with yellow cloths, was centered with an arrangement of yellow gladioli and bronze chrysanthemums in a champagne bucket. The hostesses served sausage and ham biscuits, doughnuts, muffins, nuts, fruit punch and coffee.

Mrs. James Wurman conducted the business meeting, announced several upcoming events, and discussed the progress on the Christmas bazaar projects. Special guests were Mrs. Ronald Pruitt and Mrs. James Kalis.

Frogs, food and OCS candidates were in abundance at the 51st Company OC Wives' Club bazaar Oct. 21.

After months of work, the various committees displayed homemade candles, bean bag frogs, suede belts, macrame chokers, baby bibs, wash mitts, and Santa Claus covers for bathroom commodes.

The bazaar was held in the 51st Company day room and was open to the entire 5th Battalion. Lt. Col. Donald E. Bliss, commanding officer 5th Battalion; Capt. James Ranshaw, commanding officer 51st Company; and Capt. Frank R. Vavrek, commanding officer 52nd Company and his family, attended the function.

Bazaar chairman, Mrs. Ronald G. Rada, would like to thank all the wives who worked on the bazaar projects.

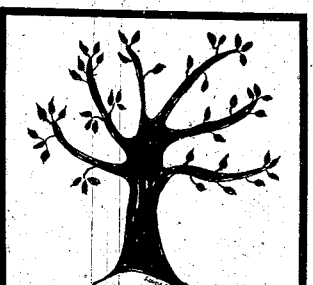
Candidates of 51st Co., 5th Stu. Bn., (OC), celebrated their intermediate status at a semi-formal party in the Officers' Club Oct. 16. This party marked the completion of the first half of the 23 week program.

Honored guests in the receiving line were Lt. Col. and Mrs. Donald E. Bliss, commanding officer, 5th Stu. Bn., and Capt. James Renshaw, commanding officer, 51st Co. Special guests included Maj. Daniel Boone, executive officer 5th Stu. Bn., Capt. and Mrs. Frank R. Vavrek, commanding officer, 52nd Co., and Capt. and Mrs. Robert F. McCredy III, commanding officer, 53rd Co.

Amid sparkling fountains of champagne and a theme of "Leaders of Tomorrow," honored guests, candidates and their wives or dates danced to the music of "The Slaves."

Three tables, stretched the width of two rooms, and hors d'oeurves were beautifully arranged buffet style. Of special interest was a karate demonstration by black and brown belt experts from the company.



The candidates presented skits concerning OCS, and the "singing platoon" gave its rendition of "Hello, Dolly."

There were other performances, and a trip down memory lane, when members of the company played hit tunes from the 1950's.

A special thank you is extended to the people responsible for the evening's success, and to the candidates from 53rd Company.

AAFES offers some deferred payments

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) offers officers and noncommissioned officers a deferred payment plan which allows certain articles to become the property of the customer immediately after his initial deposit.

One or a combination of items of military uniforms, military furnishings, accessories, insignia and military shoes may be purchased on the plan if the total retail price is $35 or more.

Customers are required to make a minimum down payment of $25 at the time of purchase, and subsequent payments of $25 per month are required. The purchases carry no service charge or interest.

Commissioned officers and noncommissioned officers of the highest five grades are eligible for the deferred payment plan if they will be on extended active duty for the life of the contract.

AIT back at Benning

For the first time since 1969, soldiers are being given Advanced Individual Training at Forf Benning.

The Central Training Command (CTC) a branch of the 197th Infantry Brigade at Harmony Church, is responsible for conducting the training in conjunction with the 197th's Unit of Choice recruiting program.

Under the program, a recruit who enlists for the 197th receives Basic Combat Training (BCT) at a training post then is sent to Fort Benning, where he receives AIT and brigade orientation from CTC. Following this he is assigned to a unit in the brigade.

The 11 week course consists of three phases, the first of which emphasizes brigade orientation, general subjects including weapons, land navigation and patrolling and adventure training.

The second phase concentrates on tactics while the third provides technical training based on the Military Occupational Specialty (MOS) of each soldier.

Fifty four men began the course this week while an average of 50 will begin in each of the following weeks.

The soldiers were welcomed by Brigade Commander Col. Willard Latham on Monday and received a briefing on their role in the brigade and their part in the Modern Volunteer Army as Unit of Choice enlistees.

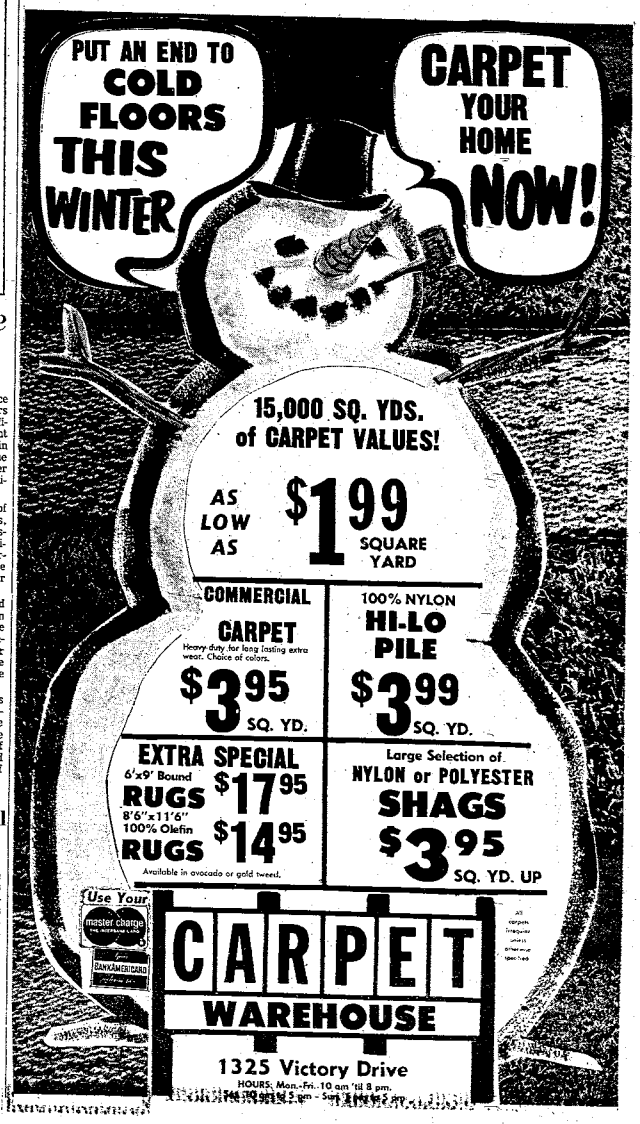
Parcel Air Lift (PAL) should be mailed between Oct. 26 and Nov. 29 to meet the Christmas deadline, postal officials said.

VA checks to arrive sooner than usual



Two million veterans and servicemen expected to enroll under the G.I. Bill this fiscal year will get their first monthly checks sooner under a Veterans Administration "package" plan.

The agency said the plan will reduce delays due to the school or individual failing to send it required information needed to pay education allowances.

Instructions on this plan, which has been tested successfully in the agnecy's PREP program for military personnel, are being sent to VA field offices, it was pointed out.

The plan calls for a veteran to submit a copy of his separation document, proof of dependency, and application for education benefits to VA at the same time, prior to enrollment. Forms for this information are available at all VA offices.

If a veteran enrolls at a school before applying for G.I. Bill education benefits, he should present these completed forms to the school and ask it to forward them to VA in one package when the school certifies his enrollment.

PFC Hugo Marcade shown at work in supply room

For PFC Hugo V. Marcade, Oct. 21 was an important date. That morning, the Valparaiso, Chile, native entered a Macon, Ga., courtroom. When he walked out of the court house doors that afternoon, he was a United States citizen.

For Marcade, a supply clerk in Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Inf. Bde., the courtroom proceedings ended a long struggle for obtaining U.S. citizenship.

After attending San Antonio High School in his native country, Marcade arrived in the United States in July of 1969 with the help of a tourist visa. While in Chile, the supply clerk thought he would "be here for about three months." His plans changed after a short stay in the U.S.

Marcade took up residence with his brother, Erick, in Los Angeles, Calif. There he obtained a job as an attendant at a garage in Beverly Hills, and also took a course in physiotherapy at a neighboring school.

The native Chilean also applied for a student visa in order to attend college in this country. He never received a response.

Taking matters into his own hands, Marcade went to the Selective Service and volunteered for the Army. There was no problem in entering the Army, but after two years of military service with another country, Marcade could voluntarily lose his Chilean citizenship.

Marcade was inducted into the Army, Feb. 11. After basic and AIT training at Ft. Ord, Calif., he was assigned to HHC, 197th Inf. Bde. While serving at HHC, Marcade awaited word on his citizenship. He never received a response.

A letter was composed to the immigration authorities in Washington, D. C. Marcade began studying U. S. History, Government, and English on off-duty time. As his naturalization tests drew closer, his friends and leaders helped him. Sgt. Joseph Fazio, HHC supply sergeant, and 1st Lt. Jesse Brokenburr, company supply officer, spent every spare moment tutoring Marcade for the tests.

All the necessary steps were taken — the tests were taken on History and English, an interview was conducted concerning the working of the U.S. Government, and finally the question of citizenship was ended Oct. 21 for Marcade and about 65 other people in the Macon, Ga., courtroom.

When his family found out about their son's decision to stay in the U. S., his mother, father, and sister moved to Los Angeles.

His father, as Marcade did before entering the service, worked with his brother in Los Angeles at the same Beverly Hills garage. His sister, Mirella, attended high school.

In January his father died, and his mother and sister moved back to their native Chile a week later. Now the support of the family rests on the shoulders of brother Erick, and the new U. S. citizen, Hugo Marcade.

Company Operations Department establishes 'hands-on' training

The Company Operations Department for the Infantry School has established a "hand-on" training method in which the Infantry School Tactics Committee presents the students of the Infantry Officer Basic Course and the Infantry Officer Candidate Course a basis for the operation of mechanized infantry.

"Hands-on" training is a method in which the students actually participate in the theories presented to them. Instead of blindly accepting the information given them, they can realize the effectiveness of it by participating in its practice.

In the problem given to the students, "The Fundamentals of Mechanized Infantry," they are in groups, taken to various stations in a "county fair" type of situation, where they must accomplish certain stated tasks, which are unique to a mechanized unit.

The six stations visited are the Tank Hunter-Killer Station, in which the students must organize and conduct an antiarmor operation; The Battle Drill Station, in which the students practice mounted, dismounted and immediate action drills; The Defense Station, at which the students set up a mechanized infantry platoon defense sector; The Communication Station which gives the students practical experience in the operation of the vehicular and portable radios; The Vehicle Recovery Station which stresses field methods of recovering armored personnel carrier (APC); and the Track Maintenance and Pre-Floatation Station which requires the students to inspect the carrier prior to waterborne operations and to replace a "dead" track shoe.

Retired officers approve by-laws, elect executive board at meeting

The Columbus Chapter of The Retired Officers Association approved by-laws and elected a board of governors during the October meeting of the chapter held in the Benning Room of the Main Officers Open at Fort Benning.

Lt. Col. Edward S. Burroughs, U. S. Army, Commander Walter J. Wright, U. S. Navy and Maj. Edward J. Neal, U.S. Army, were elected to serve one year terms.

The next meeting of the local chapter will be a "Ladies Night" in the ballroom of the Fort Benning Country Club Nov. 12. Activities will begin at 6 p.m.

The Columbus Chapter has been organized to provide retired officers the opportunity to participate in a forum for the discussion of matters of local and national importance affecting military retirees, maintain contact with the military and to promote legislation in the best interest to retirees and the nation.

All retired commissioned and warrant officers, members and non-members are invited to attend the next meeting.

Soldiers seek impartial ear in IG

By Carl King

Since the first sword was raised in battle, soldiers have felt the need for an impartial ear to which they might relate their problems.

In the military the inspector general (IG) is the "sheperd of the flock," the "referee of the gridiron," and a sort of "chaplain of the congregation." His hat is lent to varied shapes, multiple colors — and the headband is completely adjustable.

Many soldiers do not understand the role of the IG and the very special status which he alone holds on a military reservation. The IG's primary purpose is to safeguard the interests of the Army and to protect the individual man in uniform.

A common misunderstanding is that the IG has the authority to make decisions and to command action to implement those decihions. Col. A. MacDonald, the IG, says, "Our office has no command responsibility and we cannot order anyone to do anything. We hold investigations and determine the validity of accusations through testimony, both sworn and unsworn."

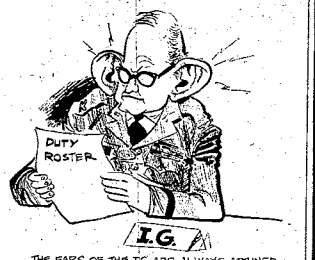
"The soldiers' testimony is privileged communication," Col. MacDonald stressed. "It is much like information between doctor and patient . . . between lawyer and client."

In addition to investigating allegations made by Fort Benning personnel, the IG sends a team out, one of their functions being to inspect duty rosters and punishment records. This is to determine whether company level commands are using discriminatory measures in levying duties on personnel and in administering punishment for like offenses.

"One complaint," remembers Lt. Col. Cornell, assistant IG, "concerned two soldiers who had committed the same offense but were given different sentences. Our investigation disclosed the fact that one of the soldiers had several previous convictions and was thus dealt with more severely than the other soldier. We term complaints like this as "unjustified" although our relentless job of investigation goes on . . . a pursuit to find the truth."

"Race prejudice" is another area of concern for the IG. 'A number of complaints have been filed regarding racial discrimination," Col. MacDonald said. "Our investigations and testimony taken have shown most of these complaints to date to be false and unjustified."

"Many other complaints are justified," Col. MacDonald added, "The soldier must understand, however, that we are forced to go back through channels to investigate most soldier complaints. And many of these complaints could have been solved right at the unit level."



Col. MacDonald and Cornell both harp on the theme, "The Soldiers's Right Without Harrassment To See The IG."

Areas not within the purview of the IG office are indebtedness, failure to support dependents, civilian-personnel grievances, and matters concerning military justice.

The IG has the right to investigate any ativity on post . . . from lumber in the craftshop to food in the commissary.

"Our offiee is the responsible agency for hearing the soldiers' complaints," Col. MacDonald emphasized. "We operate as a watchdog to guard the soldier's and the Army's rights."

"By our very presense, problems are solved," Cornell ended. "Soldiers get better attention from their commanders simply by asking to see the IG."

THE EARS OF THE IG ARE ALWAYS ATTUNED TO THE SOLDIERS PROBLEMS AND CONCERNS.

John P. Box

With a gathering of close friends present, Sp4 John P. Box bade farewell Oct. 21 to the 931st Engr. Gp. and the Army.

Box, of HHC, 931st, was an information specialist with the engineer unit until his release from active duty. Before entering the Army he worked for the Mullins Broadcasting Co. in Denver, Colo., as a reporter, news announcer, assigement editor and finally as assistant news director.

He was employed by the Denver firm in Sept. 1965, and remained on the news staff until entering the Army in March, 1970.

During his years as reporter, the broadcaster received notable acclaim in the Denver area as an "on the scene" reporter specializing in first hand accounts of local as well as national events. "I was inadvertently gassed so many times as a reporter that the CS training I went through in basic didn't affect me much. The drill sergeants wanted to make me go through the chamber again when I didn't come out coughing and choking like the rest."

At Camp Hideaway

Scouts hold training meeting

The Fort Benning District of Boy Scouts of America held a two-day Adult and Junior Leader Training conference Oct. 29-31 at Camp Hideaway.

Some 40 scouts and 14 adults attended the sessions which were designed to prepare the students for leadership positions within scouting units. Most of the students are presently or will be in the positions of Scout Master or Senior Scout Patroller.

Those attending the conference set up camp, cooked out, and underwent adventure training consisting of patrols into the woods.

After completion of the course, the participants were awarded a Training Certificate and tag for the scout uniforms.

Lt. Col. Garret V. Sidler, executive officer of the 931st Engr. Gp., said the event was "very fulfilling and most enjoyable. I think everyone had a good time and benefited from the training."

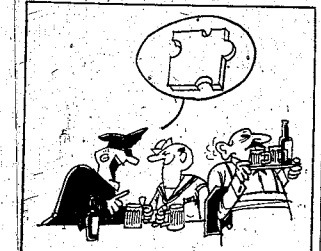
Nov. proclaimed pre-retirement month

Have you ever wondered what it's like to be retired? How much you can expect from company pensions, annuities, stock dividends and social security?



Robert E. O'Neal, district manager of Columbus social security says his office doesn't have all the answers with regard to the former. But — given a few personal statistics — his staff can tell to the dollar how much social security you can draw. To highlight this special service available to all social security retirees O'Neal has proclaimed this month NOVEMBER PRE-RETIREMENT MONTH. He invites anyone who expects to retire in 1972 to plan for it now.

Simply give your full name, social security number, date of birth, address, telephone number and total expected earnings for 1971. Armed with this information teletype operators will speed statistics to giant computers in SS headquarters in Baltimore. There an electronic brain gathers, assembles and prognosticates. Then — assuming that all material fed to the computer is correct — an exact benefit amount emerges. The whole process takes just a few days.

Besides revealing your payment in advance NOVEMBER PRE-RETIREMENT MONTH facilitates claims applications. O'Neal says eight trained technicians stand ready to brief all retirees on required evidence in advance of filing a claim. This includes proofs of age and earnings plus information needed for eligible dependents.

All necessary paper work can be cleared ahead of time. This makes for prompt as well as accurate payments, O'Neal says that claims as well as inquiries may be handled by phone. An office interview is unnecessary.

He concluded by urging ALL WORKERS WHO PLAN TO QUIT NEXT YEAR to get a jump on retirement by calling 324-5461 now during NOVEMBER PRE-RETIREMENT MONTH.

When he assembles the Loose Talk He'll have a Tight Picture!

VA helps veterans get a Guaranteed Home Loan

By Cathy Wright

FOR SALE: Three bedroom home. Good location.

The veteran who has found a home that suits his needs can get a little extra assistance to buy the house from the Veterans Administration (VA) through a Guaranteed Home Loan.

ELIGIBILITY

Servicemen with two years of active duty, whether they are currently on active duty, retired, or separated from service with other than a dishonorable discharge, are eligible to apply for a home loan guarantee. The veteran has a certain length of time following his separation from service to use his eligibility. That time period varies with length of service and period of service, so every veteran interested in a home loan guarantee should write to the nearest VA office to determine how much time he has.

BENEFITS OF A HOME LOAN GUARANTEE

While the VA does not give the veteran a loan or, make direct loans except in a few unusual cases, it does guarantee to private lenders that the money borrowed by the veteran will be repaid if he should default on his loan.

This has several advantages. First, private lenders, such as banks, mortgage companies, or building and loan associations, are more willing to lend, and lend in larger amounts, since at least a part of their investment is guaranteed. The VA will insure 60 per cent of an approved loan up to $12,500.

Additionally, the interest on a VA loan is lower than is generally available. Currently VA guaranteed loans charge 7 per cent interest. This lower interest rate is applied to the whole loan, including any amount in excess of the VA guarantee. For example, if he obtains a $30,000 loan, the VA will guarantee $12,500 of the note, but interest on the entire loan will be only 7 per cent.

Moreover, the veteran with a VA guaranteed loan, can amortize his loan over a longer time than is usually allowed. In fact, guaranteed home loans can be financed for up to 30 years. Generally, no down payment is required.

FINANCING AVAILABLE

Several types of homes may be financed under the VA home loan guarantee plan. The serviceman may buy a house which has already been built, or he may plan to build a new one. Under a new 1970 regulation, mobile homes may also be financed under VA guarantee. In each case, he must certify that he intends to use the home as his principal residence.

Home improvement loans on a home that the serviceman owns and maintains as his home are also available.

When a veteran considers buying a home, he should write to the nearest VA office for VA Form VA 26-1880. He should return the form to the VA office with a statement from his personnel officer to the effect that he has served at least two years active duty. If he is separated from service, he should mail a copy of his discharge.

The VA will then return a Certificate of Eligibility which the prospective home owner should take to a private lender. He must go through the normal channels for obtaining a loan with the lending company he chooses. They will check his credit rating, and determine if he has sufficient income to handle payments on the loan. As a general rule, lenders require that the monthly payment on the loan should not exceed one fourth of the borrowers monthly income.

If the bank or lending company approves the loan, they will send this information to the VA. The VA will then require proof that the cost of the property does not exceed a reasonable appraisal of the property. They will also check the veteran's credit rating and income. If all these things are in order, he will be notified that the loan guarantee is approved.

RESPONSIBILITY

The VA cautions the veteran that a VA loan is not a gift. The entire amount of the loan must be repaid. Consequently, the VA loan guarantee does not replace mortgage insurance in case he becomes unable to make payments.

Additionally, if the veteran decides to sell his home before the loan is repaid, he should request a release of responsibility from the VA, and make sure that the buyer agrees to assume responsibility for the note.

Further information may be obtained by calling the VA office at 324-6646.

ACTIVE DUTY OFFICERS

Until now, you and your dependents couldn't get MEDIPLUS, The Retired Officers Association's low-cost group health protection...unless retired!

The MEDIPLUS Champus Supplement Plan pays the charges, in-patient and/or out-patient, for your dependents that Champus does not pay!

The MEDIPLUS Hospital Income Plan pays up to $100, $200 or $300 a week for up to a year's hospitalization for you and your dependents.

MEDIPLUS Group Health Programs are made available by The Retired Officers Association and are administered and promoted at no cost to the association by International Group Plans, Inc. Underwritten by Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company, Hartford, Conn.

NOW, active commissioned and warrant officers of the seven uniformed services can become eligible for the MEDIPLUS Hospital Income Plan by joining The Retired Officers Association as Associate Members.

... and dependents of such Associate Members become eligible for the MEDIPLUS Champus Supplement Plan and the MEDIPLUS Hospital Income Plan.

Let's face the facts! Most medical/hospital costs are staggeringly high... and rising. As a result, you may need vital "fill-in" coverage to pay your share of civilian hospital bills. And you may need realistic emergency income. Here are the details of these plans.

The MEDIPLUS Champus Supplement Plan for active duty dependents.

Out-patient care (doctor, medicine, etc.)

Champus Pays:	You Pay:	MEDIPLUS Pays You:
For out-patient care, 80% of reasonable charges after the annual deductible is paid.	The deductible of $50 ($100 per family) plus 20% of the remainder.	20% of Champus allowable charges after you satisfy the annual deductible of $50 or $100.

In-Patient care (Civilian Hospital)

Champus Pays:	You Pay:	MEDIPLUS Pays You:
The remainder of reasonable hospital and professional fees after you pay the greater of either $1.75 a day or the first $25.	The greater of either the first $25 or $1.75 a day.	$1.75 a day or $25 for each confinement in a civilian hospital, whichever amount is greater.

MEDIPLUS Hospital Income Plan
This plan, for active duty officers and dependents, pays up to $100, $200, or $300 a week for covered conditions—depending on amount selected, from the first day of hospitalization in any hospital (Civilian, VA, or Military), for up to 52 weeks for any one period of confinement (mental, nervous and emotional disorders subject to 52-week lifetime aggregate). A weekly benefit of one-half that selected by insured members is available for their children. This benefit is doubled for hospitalization for cancer or leukemia.

Continuance and Conversion
MEDIPLUS coverages may be continued in force on your retirement or release from active duty—depending on the plan or plans for which you are then eligible.

Examples: Dependent's MEDIPLUS Champus Supplement Plan will be converted to the retiree dependent's MEDIPLUS Champus Supplement Plan. And, the MEDIPLUS Hospital Income Plan will be continued in force.

Guaranteed Insurability
MEDIPLUS, TROA's group health insurance program, is a guaranteed issue. All applicants are accepted for enrollment regardless of physical condition. However, the usual exclusions and limitations apply, such as pre-existing conditions (which may, at first, limit the extent of coverage), and injury or sickness resulting from declared or undeclared war or act thereof.

Get all the Facts
MEDIPLUS, for retirees, now covers 155,000 TROA members and dependents. This new MEDIPLUS program is designed for you—active duty officers and dependents.

Charter enrollment closes December 31, 1971.

An Ugly Animal

Striking, from behind in whispers is the most vicious animal known to mankind, the "rumor."

Like a killer plague, a rumor grows and spreads its infectious germs. Uncontrollable. Unlike a plague, a rumor has no vaccination. Science will never cure the rumor, but it's not up to science to do so. It's up to you.

No one knows where, how or when a rumor has been started. And no one understands why. To some it may be a game . . . but to the target of the rumor it can prove to be deadly.

Rumors are lies . . . perhaps started out of anger, jealousy or even spite. These lies roll from tongue to tongue like a human telegraph . . . only the lie never remains the same. It is gossip glorified, (if that's at all possible, the glorification of gossip). Rumors are no jokes, they are monsters which can ruin an individual's reputation, cost him or her his job and in extreme cases drive a person to mental instability . . . even suicide.

In the military services it can destroy morale and compromise security.

It's an ugly animal.

There's one thing worse than starting a rumor, that's listening to one. And there's one thing worse than listening to a rumor, that's believing one.

Tid-bits of news are interesting, but before you tell someone else check it out for accuracy and truth.

Call it an ecology movement to clear the air if you want, or just think of it as killing a rabid dog . . . stop rumors.

All aboard

New recruits board 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment helicopters for the hour and 15-minute flight to Ft. Lewis, Wash. Forty-two men enlisted together under the unit of choice option and will have a 16-month stabilized tour in the regiment after completing basic training at Ft. Lewis.

Most improved

Mrs. Bobbie Keirsey accepts a Golf Digest Magazine Most Improved Golfer Certificate from Howard Holbrook, golf professional at the Fort Benning Comtry Club Golf Course. Each year Golf Digest Magazine presents these certificates to golfers who have demonstrated the most improvement during the golf season.

Breaststroke champ attending OCS

Up at 5:30 a.m. and P.T. starts for all the Officer Candidates of the 53rd Co., 5th Bn., The School Brigade (TSB). Very little time is left open for the candidates but through the daily routines, O. C. Ronald Douglas Moulton finds time to remember his days at Springfield College.

Moulton graduated from Springfield College, Cum-Laude, in 1970 and his name still echoes through the minds of his coaches and fellow students. Seven times he has held the college division-All American and by his senior year he became the Division National Champion as a member of the 400 yd. medley relays. At one time or another he held three New England Records and at present no one has come close to beating his one remaining record, the 100-yd. breaststroke at a time of 1:02.4 min.

Moulton's fellow students realized that they had a champ and in his senior year awarded him with the title of Co-Captain. Besides his remaining record, Moulton shattered the following school records: 200-yd. breaststroke-2:17.6; 100-yd. breaststroke 1:02.4; and the 400-yd. medley with a time of 3:48.8.

How does one become such a champ? Moulton's theory is "hard physical training." "My swimming didn't end during my summer vacation. Under the supervision of Coach Selvias, at Pine Knoll Swim School, I was in charge of the varsity swimming team." He also added to his instruction; tennis, baseball and beginning gymnastics.

After graduating with a B.S. in physical education, Moulton went on to gather 30 additional hours toward his masters in physical education. Thesis work is all that is holding back his next degree.

After completing OCS, Moulton plans to utilize the post and hopefully start a swim club.

Callaway greenhouses provide year round floral show

A visit to Callaway Gardens is not complete without a visit to the Greenhouses. Each season creates an endless kaleidoscope of brilliant colors and blends enjoyment with education from the horticultural displays.

Many changes have occurred within the greenhouse area since the Gardens opened in 1952.

One working greenhouse and one potting shed were available in the early years and were not generally open for visitors. Following a fire which destroyed the headhouse and workroom, a new lobby and workroom with an additional greenhouse were added in 1957. One greenhouse was then converted to a display house and opened to the public.

The next display houses were added in 1965 and opened in September of that year for officially greeting the American Horticultural Society Congress during its meeting there. The covered bridge was also brought in from nearby Troup County, Ga., in the same year. The outdoor display beds had also grown in scope, but were in need of extensive changes. Plans for the future development and extensive expansion to fill the needs of the thousands of visitors to the area each year were envisioned by the Trustees who guide the development of Callaway Gardens.

In the Fall of 1968, construction was started on the outdoor display beds. Completion came in late Spring of 1969. The present parking complex and the reflecting pond under the covered bridge were also completed at this time.

The new greenhouses (60x100 ft.) were completed in 1968. The work building, which houses offices, restrooms, and library, as well as the potting and work areas, was completed in the summer of 1970. In January of 1971, work started on the new Lobby and Conservatory building, the final phase of the long range development plan for the greenhouse area.

The new facilities, following the broad objectives of the Gardens, will serve as a center for horticultural education, research and public service.

The new Conservatory Greenhouse with its two unique observation decks provide, from an upper level, views of plants seldom seen within a greenhouse. The outdoor gardens can also be seen from the observation decks. The modern clear-span design and the large size of the conservatory make it a new landmark in the Southeast. Free flowing paths provide intimate views of plants in all the display houses.

EXHIBIT LOBBY

A new feature adjacent to the greenhouses provides facilities for changing displays and exhibits of floral art by famous artists, local Georgia crafts, photographs, or dioramas interpreting nature. Speacial plants of interest in the Gardens and greenhouses will be featured.

You will enjoy frequent visits to the greenhouse area. Allow sufficient time to enjoy the simple wonder of growing things.

Bus tours stop at the conservatory greenhouse area or you can drive your car.

"The Mod Squad has joined the U.S. Navy.

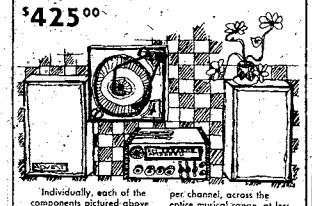
According to a recent story from Naples, "The Mod Squad" — which took its name from the ABC Television Network's series which emphasizes the young, the involved and the "now" in human drama — is the name of the 6th Fleet's Destroyer Squadron 26, the newest elite force of the U.S. Navy, currently operating in the Mediterranean.

They got their name because all the commanding officers, executive officers, and department heads of the seven destroyers are several years younger, and have perhaps only half the naval experience traditionally required to man such seagoing posts.

The idea was the creation of Adm. Elmo R. Zumwalt Jr., the 50-year-old Chief of Naval Operations and the youngest flag officer to hold the top job in the Navy.

The Mod Squad experiment is designed to give up-and-coming young officers an earlier crack at senior command posts, thus utilizing their talents sooner and providing the incentive for the brightest young officers to remain in the Navy.

Organized in January of this year the Mod Squad was deployed in July to the Mediterranean to see how well it could withstand the critical challenge, competing with Soviet fleet units.



By all accounts, Destron 26, as the Mod Squad is more formally known, has acquitted itself so well it has been adjudged the "highest readiness" of any Atlantic fleet squadron, and Adm. Zumwalt reportedly is considering setting up one or two more such squadrons.

With the success of the Mod Squad many senior officers believe that putting younger officers in command jobs will be a healthy development for the Navy.

As Lt. Comdr. Howard J. Kerr Jr., 34-year-old skipper of the USS Hawkins, a charter member of the Mod Squad, explains it.

"I think that the Mod Squad has reflected some of the new directions in the modern Navy. I think, too, that sailors like to identify with a winner, and most everyone feels that in the Mod Squad concept, the Navy has a winner."

The best "stereo value" in town:

Individually, each of the components pictured above has created a new standard of sound-per-dollar stereo value. Together, these components will provide you with more quality sound and reliability than you could have bought a year ago for over five hundred dollars.

The Smaller Advent Loudspeakers are the only speakers costing less than the now-famous original Advent Loudspeakers which can produce the entire musical range. Most inexpensive speakers cannot produce the lowest octaves of music: the lowest strings of a double bass or electric bass guitar, the lowest pipes of a pipe organ. The Smaller Advent can.

The Standard 1000A AM/FM stereo receiver has enough power to satisfy both you and the Advents. It produces 25 watts RMS per channel, across the entire musical range, at less than 0.5% total distortion (RMS is the most demanding and least flashy of the various powerrating systems.) The tuner sections will separate weaker stations on a crowded dial from their brawnier neighboring stations and receive them with an amazing fullness and clarity.

To match the quality and reliability that the Standard 1000A and the Advent represent, we recommend the Garrard Automatic Turntable with a Stanton Broadcast Series cartridge. The Garrard has a heavy platter, a convenient cueing control and comes with a dustcover and base. Come to the Sound Center this week. You'll be surprised how much quality sound your four hundred dollars can buy.

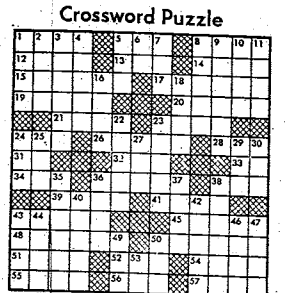
Meeting triggers antagonism in 'Kansas'

Cinema Center Films' "Kansas City Prime" was the meeting place for tough guys Lee Marvin and Gene Hackman recently when they squared off for their scenes in the contemporary thriller. Academy Award winner Lee Marvin is the Chicago mobster who is sent to collect the syndicate's profits from Gen. Hackman, who is known as "Mary Ann" and runs a Kansas City meat company as a cover up for his drug and white slavery operations.

Marvin has been long established as one of the screen tough guys — a reputation based on his hard-hitting performances in "Cat Ballou," "The Professionals," and "The Dirty Dozen." Hackman, a two-time Academy Award nominee, is now riding a crest of critical acclaim for his performance as the tough cop in "The French Connection."



When a tough guy meets a tough guy, there's usually instant antagonism which can later end in a gunfight.

The National General Pictures' release, "Kansas City Prime," is a Joe Wizan production directed by Michael Ritchie from a screenplay by Robert Dillon. The film also stars Greg Walcott, Sissy Spacek, Angel Tompkins and Janet Baldwin.

Synopsis

SCANDALOUS JOHN (Rated G) stars Brian Keith as a rip-snorting 79-year-old rancher fighting the windmills of progress with his Mexican hired hand, Alfonso Arau.

Soaked in frontier lore, whiskey, and memories of his father's daring exploits as a trail boss, Keith lives in a wild, romantic dream world of his own . . . a world filled with the glories of the Old West.

The songs and score for "Scandalous John" are by Rod McKuen.

CELEBRATION AT BIG SUR (Rated GP) was filmed at Big Sur, near the world famed Esalen Institute, along the Pacific Coast in northern California. The people who performed came just to get together in the sun after a summer of hard work.

The audience became the performers and the performers became the audience, as rock and folk merged into a community of people celebrating. Celebrate a joyous weekend of music at the "Celebration at Big Sur" . . . a loving motion picture.

Joan Baez will be there. And so will Dave Crosby . . . Steve Stills . . . Graham Nash . . . Neil Young . . . Joni Mitchell . . . John Sebastian . . . . Dorothy Morrihon and the Combs Sisters. Be there while it's happening.

A SEVERED HEAD (Rated R) is a sophisticated mixture of marital drama and amusing comedy, centering around the contemporary sexual entanglements of a sextet of upper-class Londoners.

Liberated by current society mores, they revert to basic tribal patterns and shatter established social structure.

T. R. BASKIN (Rated GP) is Candice Bergen, a small town girl from Ohio, who moves to Chicago to broaden her horizons and appease an intellectual and emotional hunger for fuller experiences and satisfying relationships.

A brief and tender encounter with Larry Moore (James Caan) brings a temporary lift to her life, but only leads to a misunderstanding and a sad Sunday with Jack Mitchell (Peter Boyle).

There is not defeat and melancholia in T.R.'s pursuit of happiness; it is painful and hopeful.

Government, GIs benefit from GI bill

Both the federal government and the veteran benefit when the GI Bill helps a former serviceman or woman get a college degree.

It may cost Uncle Sam about $6,300 to send a veteran through college, but a college graduate, in turn, will earn about $213,000 more over a lifetime than will a high school graduate. And that means more in taxes to the government — about $40,000 more over the years.

So when a veteran takes full advantage of the rights given to him under the GI Bill, both he and the government profit substantially.

PFC Predicto PICKS!

PFC outpicked by PFC

Ah yes, once again PFC Predicto prevailed over the paltry picking's of the piddling piddlers of the 13th PID. The Halloween happy halfback hopped to an over-all mark of .763 to .647 picked by the squad led by Capt. Johnson. Only one drastic PIDster outpicked my picking wit, PFC Wilder who picked all but one. The psychic seer of the stadium will score a smashing success this week as I am challenged by Sp4 Morrell and the Infantry Board. The well-oiled oracle will undoubtedly outscore the opposition in this week's grueling gridiron grudge games. You too can attempt to step the star of the stadium stats by dialing 545-4622 and phoning the fantastic football fooler of fanatical fortune. Just ask for PFC Predicto!

Rufenburg to Poole

Darrell Poole, number 22, takes a 10 yard pass from quarterback Ed Rufenburg, and runs in for the score. This touchdown came in the second half, and proved to be the winner, as Co. A Administration defeated HHC 1st Bn. 58th Inf., 12 to 6. The man throwing the block, is number 23, Art Butler, whose intercepion led to the winning touchdown. PHOTO BY PFC ALLAN BARR

HHC spoils Finance bid; 524th captures second

The 524th Pers. Serv. Co. downed Co. C, 43rd Engr. Bn., last week by a score of 6-0 to prevent a four-way tie for second place in the 931st Engr. Gp. flag football league.

The personnel specialists sailed into the runner-up slot in the 13-team league and won the right to represent the Engineer Grp. along with the 608th Ord. Co. in the USAIC flag football tournesy beginning Monday night.

Earlier the 608th club swept into the first place position by capping the Engineer league with a 12-1 record. That single loss developed at the hands of the 586th Engr. Co., which finished with a 10-3 record.

HHC, 931st, prevented a top contender from entering the post tourney by downing 15th Finance in the final game of the season. The headquarters nine upset the finance team which needed another victory to remain tied with 524th Pers. Serv. Co. for the runner-up slot. A play-off would have been necessary to decide the winner. As it turned out, HHC dumped 15th Fin. by a score of 6-0 and handed the finance clerks their third loss of the season against 10 wins. HHC finished with a solid 9-4 record, tied for fourth place with 18th Repl. Det. and Co. C, 43rd.

Resulting from the loss to HHC, 15th Fin. finished with a tie for third place with the 586th Engr. Co., with both teams sporting identical 10-3 records.

In a very close finish, Co. C, 43rd, could have been the real spoilers, causing a climatic conclusion to the battle for the league's top two positions. If Co. C had defeated 524th last week, instead of losing the contest 6-0 to the personnel clerks, a four-way tie would have existed between 524th, 15th Fin., 586th and Co. C, 43rd.

By Roger Pavey

Although only a few of the major college football teams have been upset through midseason, there have been some surprises. One is the drastic change in offensive strategy. This year more and more teams are switching to the running game and leaving the pass to the defenders of a year ago.

Texas, the daddy of the highly successful "Wishbone T", put the "T" into gear in 1969 and powered its way to a national championship. Since then Alabama, and the seemingly unconquerable Oklahoma Sooners have followed suit. The University of Houston got into the act with a little more dependence on the pass.

The reasons behind the turnabout are fairly obvious. The prime example, Oklahoma, has more than convinced this years onlookers that the running game is here once again. A mediocre team at the start of last year they abandoned the pass for their yearly encounter with Texas. Although their initial attempt proved unsuccessful the Sooners finished the season with a devastating ground attack. This year Greg Pruitt and Co. have rolled over every opponent with comparative ease. In a recent game against Kansas State they piled up over 700 yards on rushing offense alone, to set a school record on their way to scoring 10 touchdowns.

One of the main reasons for Oklahoma's switch as well as the other teams that followed suit was to minimize mistakes. By cutting down on the passing a team is less apt to lose possession of the precious pigskin. Also pass defense has become a bonafide art and todays defenders are wise to the so called "bomb" patterns, thus cutting down on the once easy six points.

Another reason is the high caliber of athlete that is put into today's defensive secondary. Now, the best high school players are being groomed for pass defense whereas a few years back they were strictly offensive backs or flankers. The most obvious case is that of Ernie Johnson of Duke, at the start of the season he was a defensive back, but due to injuries to the offensive unit he was pressed into service as a running back. Possessed with 9.4 speed he filled the vacant spot with ease and rushed for nearly 175 yards.

Many coaches also felt that too much pressure was put on a young quarterback especially if he had a bad day. It is common knowledge the passing offense rests on the arm the passer and the moves of his receivers. So when a quarterback is somewhat erratic or his receiver has trouble with the defense the offense will not click.

The weather also has a tremendous effect on the passing game. In a sport that is primarily played in winter there is a good chance of either snow or rain, thus hampering a once potent passing attack. The 1970 Peach Bowl game between West Virginia and South Carolina proved this point beyond a doubt. West Virginia descipie of the "Houston Option" ran wild over the Gamecocks defense on a mudcaked field in Atlanta. On the other hand South Carolina and their quarterback Tommy Suggs had a difficult time trying to complete a pass. Needless to say The Mountaineers were victorious and finished the season with a 11-1 record.

The results of this season speak for themselves. Cornell's Ed Marinaro is averaging over 200 yards a game and well on his way to break the 1955 rushing average record held by Ollie Matson of 173 yards per game. Marinaro has already shattered Steve Owens career rushing record of 3,883 yards and the season is just barely half over. What makes Marioaro's records so amazing is that he has set them all with a nine game season, where other runners have the benefit of 10 and 11 game schedules.

Greg Pruitt, Oklahoma's blockbusting back has set a precedent by being named Offensive Player of the Week on two successive weeks. He gained this distinct honor by running for over 400 yards in two weeks against the tough defenses of USC and Texas. To further add to his already impressive slew of statistics he rushed for nearly 300 yards in one game against Kansas State a week later.

Thus it seems that the decade of the pass has been intercepted by the year of the run, at least for a little while anyway. . .

ROD AND GUN CLUB Notes

By Bill Kloeb

Football, golf, fishing and even girl watching may take a back seat tomorrow when the Georgia deer hunting season opens.

Despite the approach of many hunters, this is not a day to take lightly. The odds are stacked heavily against the hunter who just grabs his gun on opening day and takes to the woods looking for that trophy deer.

Most experienced hunters have already spent hours in the woods reconnoitering for stands where deer are likely to be tomorrow morning, checking over their gun and other hunting gear and getting all the permits and licenses necessary to hunt on the reservation. There have been several changes in gun registration, post hunting permits and state hunting license regulations this year.

Weapons Must Be Registered

Before any hunter takes to the field he must be sure he is within the law.

Any one bringing a gun onto the reservation must register the weapon with the Provost Marshal Division. The gun's registration point is located with the vehicle registration section in Bldg. 83.

The weapon must be brought to the registration point for the initial registration. Provost Marshal personnel will check the weapon for safety and verify any serial numbers on the weapon. The gun owner will receive a registration card when the registration is completed. He must keep this card with the gun at all times. This means when he has the gun in the field he must have the card with him.

There is also a requirement to re-register weapons. The card issued now has an expiration date marked in the upper right hand corner. Weapons must be a re-registered at the Provost Marshal Office after that date. Cards issued several years ago do not have an expiration date and in all probability have expired. It is not necessary to bring the weapon to the registration office when they are registered. The expired card is all that is needed. Anyone having questions as to the validity of their weapons registration may obtain additional information by calling 545-4591.

Everyone Needs Licenses

All personnel hunting on the reservation must have a state hunting license. All military personnel on active duty may purchase a Georgia State hunting license. Civilian residents of states other than Georgia who are authorized to hunt on the reservation must purchase a Georgia non-resident license before hunting on the Georgia portion of the reservation. All deer hunters must have a Georgia big game license.

All personnel hunting on post must also have a post hunting permit. Post permits and Georgia State licenses may be obtained at the Rod and Gun Club sales counter. The club is located on First Division Road about one-quarter mile south of Highway 27.

Be sure the area you intend to hunt is open for hunting. Maps showing open and closed areas are posted daily by the Post Range Control Division. These maps are located at the Rod and Gun Club, Range Control Division (Bldg. 2621) and the Provost Marshal Office (Bldg. 215).

If you take a deer be sure to tag it immediately with a Georgia State Big Game Tag, take it to the Post Fish and Wildlife check station located at Harmony Church for inspection. To enter it in the Rod and Gun Club Big Deer Contest take it to the Rod and Gun Club. Deer will not be entered into the club contest until they have been checked by the Fish and Game Unit.

Be Careful

FINALLY, BE CAREFUL. From all indications there will be a lot of hunters on the reservation, especially opening day. Post hunting permit sales indicate the largest number of hunters ever will be out this opening day. There were nearly 600 hunters who brought their weapons out to shoot at the Rod and Gun "Sight In" at Brinson Range last weekend and there are probably twice that many people who intend to be out hunting on opening day. There will probably be as many hunters out as there are deer. So be absolutely sure it's a deer you are shooting before you pull the trigger.

Mauldin victorious in golf duel

Allen Mauldin won the Fort Benning Country Club Golf Championship Sunday in a 36-hole match with George Hardgrove the defending champion.

The match, during which neither contestant enjoyed more than a two hole lead, ended on the 36th hole where both players had putts for birdies. Hardgrove missed his twenty foot putt and Mauldin sank his ten footer to finish one up.

The players finished the first nine of the morning round all even. Hardgrove had a one hole lead at the end of the 18th hole despite loosing two par five holes on which he had birdies. Mauldin was on the par five eighth hole in two and sank a forty foot putt for an eagle. Mauldin duplicated the feat on the 15th hole where he hit a four iron onto the green and sank another long putt.

During the afternoon round Mauldin won the third hole to go one up. Hardgrove won the first hole to even the match and then won the third hole to go one up. The remaining holes of the third nine were halved and Mauldin went into the last nine one up.

The two players were even until the 31st hole on which Mauldin won with a birdie. Hardgrove then won the 32nd and 34th to even the match. The 35th hole was tied setting the stage for the win by Mauldin on the 36th.

Both players scored well but the edge went to Mauldin by his play on the par five holes. He was seven under par for the eight par five holes played during the match.

In other flight competition of the club tournament Mike Longstreet defeated Charles Swannack to win the first flight.

Cal Rousch defeated Lawton Jackson to win the second flight, Frank DiGirolomo defeated David Kolze to win the third flight, Charles Thomas defeated Raymond Wagner to win the fourth flight and Dennis Porche defeated Frank Garrison to win the fifth flight.

Prizes were awarded to all winners and runners up during a social hour for all contestants held in the Country Club Ballroom at 5:30 p.m. yesterday.

Troopin' the Line

Col. Marcus W. Coyle, a 1947 graduate of Fort Benning's Infantry OCS, a master parachutist, Army aviator and combat infantryman will retire on October 31 capping a 28 year career which included service in three wars.

Col. Coyle states that one of the high points of his service was a real life parallel to an old advance course problem, "The Life Cycle of the Infantry Regiment." He took command of the newly activated 61st Avn. Co. (Caribou) in 1962, trained the unit at Ft. Bragg, N.C., led the flight of 18 Caribous across the Atlantic, through the Middle East to Indochina and continued to command the unit in its combat support mission for a year in Vietnam.

As a participant in the Army Research and Development specialist program since 1955 and aviator since 1938, his assignments have been varied between R and D, aviation and troops.

"My most satisfying assignment," Col. Coyle said, "was probably my recent tour in Europe where intially assigned to VII Corps Headquarters I got to know the big picture in NATO, then, moving to Schweinfurt to command the 2-30th Mech. Inf. Bn. (3rd Inf. Div.), I learned the challenges at the other end of the spectrum. Later as the Division's G-2, I was able to capilize on both of the previous assignments using the background they provided to establish a realistic intelligence readiness program for the division."

Col. Coyle has been assigned to the Combat Developments Command Inf. Ag. since May 1970 as chief of the Studies Division and as a Special Projects officer.

Col. and Mrs. Coyle, who is an active Army Community Service volunteer with over 1600 hours of ACS credit, will remain in Columbus; both plan to become students at Columbus College.

Maj. Frederick F. Mayer, presently assigned to the Combat Developments Command's Inf. Ag., has been reassigned to London, England, where he will serve on the U.S. Army Standardization Group, United Kingdom (USASGUK). This nine officer group, one of the four detailed by the signatories of the 1961 ABCA Standardization Agreement (American, Briton, Canadian and Australian), is an integral branch of DA's Office of Research and Development. Its broad mission is to standardize, to maximum practical extent possible, materiel and nonmateriel (tactics and doctrine) items between the armies of the United States and Great Britain. Mayer will have many hats to wear in London. First, as Infantry Standardization Representative (SR) he will have an office in Keyslne House, the headquarters for the USASGUK. Second, as the CDSR he reports to and works part time in the British Ministry of Defense-Whitehall. Lastly, as the airborne SR he "jumps" with the British Army Paratroops as required and as time allows. Mayer departed Fort Benning with his wife, Patty, three-year old son, Mark, and seven-year-old daughter, Nina, on Oct. 29. After a short leave in Conn., they will depart for London on Nov. 8 from McGuire AFB.

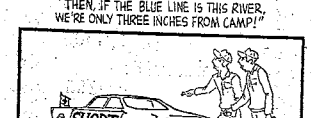
The 4th Stu. Bn., Airborne, is just entering the scene this year. Under the leadership of Capt. John H. Barr, the battalion is repairing all bicycles donated to the project. Depending on the success of the project this year, they are considering making their project a year-round function also.

Last year, approximately 50 bicylces were donated. Parts needed in order to repair bikes were scarce but, this year there is an especially acute shortage. Because of the boom in bicycle sales and popularity, fewer bikes have been donated therefor, fewer parts are available for the needed repairs.

Those parts needed, but not donated, have to be purchased with donated funds. However, funds are low so widespread support of and donations to this program are encouraged.



Army Community Services (ACS) and community assistance organizations throughout the community compile a list of needy families to whom the toys may be donated.

The inventory of toys has already begun to pile up and it is hoped that it will continue to mount. In two more months, project "Save-A-Toy" will have shown the meaning of "Goodwill towards men" and provided a Merry Christmas for some deserving youngsters.

Anycne interested in making a donation to the project can call any of the participating organizations or deliver the toys to the front or back gates of the stockade at any time. Numbers for those interested are: Stockade, 545-1967-7566; 4th Stu. Bn., 545-7016; Mortar Committee, 545-6632, and Army Community Service, 545-1233-1633.

VETERANS ASK

Q—My son received 36 months of training under the Dependents Educational Assistance Program and now has been ordered to active duty. Will he still be eligible for educational assistance under the GI Bill?

A—Yes. If your son serves on active duty at least 181 days and receives an other than dishonorable discharge, he will be eligible for additional education assistance. A veteran may use up to 48 months when he is entitled under two or more programs, but all time used under laws administered by the VA will be deducted from this maximum entitlement.

Q — I have $10,000 National Service Life term insurance which I obtained during World War II, and plan to convert to Modified Life. Is there a deadline for converting my insurance?

A — No, except that it must be converted to the Modified Life plan before you reach insurance age 61 (insurance age extends from six months before to six months after insured's birthday).

Q — Is the Veterans Administration issuing any type of insurance now?

A — Yes. If a veteran separated from service after April 25, 1951, has a service-connected disability, the VA will issue "RH" insurance, which must be applied for within one year of notice of the disability rating.

Ground Control Approach

It helps aircraft land in bad weather

"Army copter 000, you are over landing threshold, take over visually and contact tower on 123.4" is the final word from Approach Control. Ground Control Approach commonly called GCA, is one of the precision approaches that can be made by an instrument aircraft.

Although the primary function of GCA is to land aircraft safely during poor weather conditions, it may also provide other services as work load permits. GCA can alert aviators to pending hazards such as areas of precipitation, thunderstorms, and electrical jamming. GCA has the capability of providing approach surveillance and guidance of aircraft conducting other instrument approaches. Providing radar vector service and assisting lost aircraft are other services provided by GCA.

Lawson Approach Control presently handles approximately 800 instrument approaches a month which may include everything from a TH-13 helicopter to a huge C-5A jet transport.

Most approaches are conducted by students undergoing instrument training.

Normally an aircraft is handled by two GCA operators. The first operator established positive radar identification and brings the pilot within a few miles of the airfield into a traffic pattern utilizing radar vectors. The pilot is constantly told what course to fly, his position, and where other aircraft are around him. Once the pilot is in the traffic pattern, he is handed off to another controller who brings him down on a precision approach to the center of the runway.

The operator has been well trained, for he has attended 18 weeks of instruction at Ft. Rucker, Ala. If assigned to Fort Benning after completing the course, the operator still has another 4 weeks of classwork and is closely supervised for at least 100 instrument approaches.

Although every instrument approach requires professionalism and accuracy, the pilot really becomes dependent on the skills of the GCA controllers when the cloud ceiling is low.

Aviation man scores on his PMOS test

Congratulations are well in order for Sp6 Beauford Salyer, of the 197th Aviation Company. Salyer recently received a letter of commendation from Maj. Gen. K. L. Johnson, chief of Personnel Operations, notifying him that the score he received on his evaluation in Primary MOSC 67F20 (airplane technical inspector) was outstanding.

Salyer's achievement was particularly noteworthy in view of the fact that his score equaled or exceeded the highest score made by any other individual evaluated in this PMOS throughout the entire United States Army.

Salyer has accrued twenty years in the military and is from Kingston, Tenn.

New chief of staff named

Col. Willard Latham, commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade, will become chief of staff of the U.S. Army Infantry Center, succeeding Col. Jim Keirsey, who will retire from service in January.

Col. Latham came to Fort Benning in February, 1970, as a lieutenant colonel and assumed command of the 197th. He was promoted to full colonel on March 4, 1970.

He will officially relinquish his command of the 197th on Nov. 20 to Col. Edwin Kennedy, who is now VOLAR project chief at Fort Benning.

Col. Keirsey came to Fort Benning from the Combat Developments Command, Fort Belvoir, Va., in 1968 and was named commander of The Student Brigade. He became chief of staff in January, 1969.

A native of Durant, Okla., Col. Keirsey joined the Army in September, 1940, and received a direct commission in June, 1941. During World War II he served with the 45th Division in Europe.

He is also a veteran of the Vietnam conflict, having served as senior advisor to the 21st Division of the Vietnamese Army from March, 1964, to April, 1965.

Among his many awards and decorations are the Silver Star with two Oak Leaf Clusters, the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star Medal with one Oak Leaf Cluster and the Army Air Medal with six Oak Leaf Clusters.

Col. Latham was first assigned to Fort Benning in 1949 for airborne training and the Infantry Officers Basic Course after receiving a direct commission. Following assignment to the 8th Cavalry Regiment, 1st Cavalry Division, he served with that unit in Korea for two years and five campaigns as a heavy mortar and rifle platoon leader.

After returning to this country, he served tours of duty with the 82nd Airborne Division and the 31st Infantry Division as a rifle company commander, and later was with Seventh Army Headquarters in Germany.

He returned to Fort Benning in 1956 for the Infantry Officers Advanced Course and Ranger training, and then served three years as an ROTC instructor at the University of Texas.

In 1960, Col. Latham attended the regular course at the Command and General Staff College at Ft. Leavenworth, Kan., and then was assigned to the Iceland Defense Force.

Following attendance at the Armed Forces Staff College, he served as personnel management officer in the Infantry Career Management Divison in the Pentagon and later was assigned to the Office of the Chief of

A number of Delinquency Reports (DR) have been given to soldiers wearing the fatigue uniform in off-post civilian business establishments.

The situation has come about by the loosening of the uniform requirements by VOLAR. The Benning Plan for a Modern Volunteer Army lists the easing of this restriction as permitting the wearing of the duty uniform off-post. But the full explanation is spelled out in Change No. 6 of USAIC Circular No. 600-67, which says:

". . . duty uuiforms other than the Army Green, Tan, and Khaiki, may be worn off post under conditions other than only en route between off-post quarters and the installation. The intent of this authority is to allow soldiers to conduct personal business and convenience shopping between their off-post residence and the installation immediately before and immediately after the individual's duty hours. This authority pertains to all duty uniforms to include the utility (fatigue) uniform, while work uniform, field uniform (OG 108), and the flight uniform, provided and only provided that

CFC reaches 92 per cent of goal

Fort Benning military personnel and Department of Defense civilian workers have contributed $127,000 or 92 per cent of the $138,000 established as the post goal for the Tri-Community Federal Campaign, according to an announcement by James Schoonover, campaign director.

Three sections and three major units have been cited for their highly successful drives. The I. G. section, the VOLAR section and detachment 10, 16th Weather Squadron have more than doubled their individual unit goals.

The major units which have exceeded their goals by substantial amounts include The School Brigade, the 93lst Engineer Group and the Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities.

This week, Col. Robert P. Hatcher, chairman of the drive to provide funds for the operation of United Givers Organization, National Health Agencies and International Services Agencies, announced that the campaign will be extended until Nov. 22.

The extension was authorized by Maj. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott, post commander, who is responsible for coordination of the campaign among all federal civilian and military personnel in the Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City areas.

Schoonover says the campaign period was extended to provide additional time for campaign key men to bring the contributions to 100 per cent of the established goal.

Contributions may be made for distribution to all the agencies involved in the campaign, the donor may specify organizations he wishes to receive the money.

Pulling together

Fellow members of the 1st Bn., 36th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde. help members of the fifth period gym class of Central High School in Phenix City pull down vines to help clear the way for a new Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) drill field being built at the high school. The 197th Inf. Brig. is furnishing men and equipment to clear the area for the drill field which will double as an athletic field. The project is another in the domestic-action program of the 197th.

Love at first sight

It was "love at first sight" as pretty Sunken Gardens model Karen Prestock from St. Petersburg sported her raccoon skin hat to meet "Zippy", a four-week old raccoon at the Florida attraction. "Zippy" was the only survivor rescued recently from a land excavation site and is now receiving excellent care.

Grads honored

PFC Robert Hansen, Pleasant Grove, Utah., was the distinguished graduate and Sp4 Edward Woskowicz, Pleasantdale, Ohio., was the academic graduate of the Field Radio Mechanic Course 4-72, which graduated Nov. 4 at Infantry Hall.

Lt. Col. John G. Belt, chief, Combat Material Division, ODDLP, USAIS, delivered the commencement address.

The nine week course is designed to provide students with a working knowledge of organizational maintenance for radios and other electrical equipment.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

by Bill King

Avoid cooking cranberries any longer than it takes for them to "pop". Otherwise they may turn bitter.

Golden poundcake mix makes an easy dessert as is, or toasted and served with ice cream. Try substituting sherry for the water called for in the mix.

Nutrition note: keep a bowl of shelled sunflower seeds handy as a healthful energy snack for hungry teens.

If you can't clean the broiler right after dinner, sprinkle it with salt and add some water. It will be much easier to clean later.

An ancient Chinese legend, retold by essayist Charles Lamb, attributes the discovery of roast pork to a forgetful peasant lad, Bo-bo, who accidentally burned down his father's pig farm.

Communications training essential program

Integrated communications training has become an essential program of instruction in the field exercises of the Infantry Officer Basic, Officer Candidate, and Noncommissioned Officer Candidate Courses. The Tactical Communications Committee, Communications-Electronics Department is providing two officers and eight noncommissioned officers to Company Operations field training exercises to give the students "on the spot" information and assistance on communications during training. This includes; radiotelephone procedure, electronic warfare, use of operations codes, communications discipline, and operation of communications equipment found in infantry and mechanized infantry companies.

The combined talents of the departments provide more realistic training for the students. More emphasis is being placed on actual training, tactical type, with less classroom instruction. The Communications-Electronics Department is using reports from the field teams to upgrade the quality and quantity of information to the student.

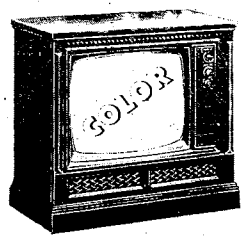
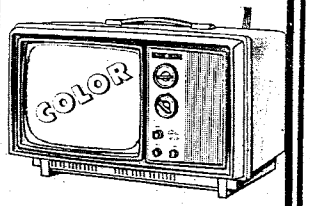
Mobile home loans discussed

Last week's Bayonet ran an article entitled "VA helps veterans get a Guaranteed Home Loan." The article was not written to include mobile homes loans, although most of the article was applicable to mobile home loans. The differences and variations follow:

ELIGIBILITY

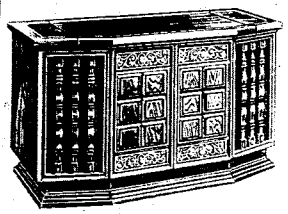




Whereas servicemen need to have two years active duty for a regular home loan, they need only have 181 days active duty to be eligible for a mobile home loan.

BENEFITS

The VA will insure 60 per cent of an approved loan up to $12,500 for a regular home and 30 per cent of an approved loan up to $10,000 for mobile homes.



Currently, VA guaranteed loans charge 7 per cent interest on regular homes and 10.75 per cent simple interest for mobile homes.

Soldier Reward Program in action

A luxury hotel room in downtown Atlanta, a meal of Filet Mignon that easily surpasses the best of any mess hall, and, in case something was overlooked, a "bonus" of $25 was included.

This weekend fare wasn't some sort of big corporation recruiting drive for young executives. Instead, this was VOLAR's Soldier Reward Program in action.

PFC and Mrs. Steven G. Maize recently traveled to Atlanta to enjoy an all-expense paid weekend. Maize, HHC, The School Brigade (TSB), was selected by his unit to participate in the Rewards Program and to give his impressions of his "vacation."

"The accomodations at the Americana Motor Hotel were excellent," said Maize. "At first, I didn't know what to expect from 'free' room and board but I was quite surprised to find my room in a luxury hotel close to just about every main attraction in Atlanta."

Roger L. Miller, chief of the Recreation Branch and coordintor of the Rewards Program, Special Services, has made every effort to insure that the participating soldiers are able to enjoy each minute of their weekend in Atlanta. "We don't interfere with the men at all during their vacation," reported Miller. "Once the room and the $25 are handed to each man the soldiers are on their own until departure time the next day. A few months ago one man was content to stay in the hotel all weekend just eating and sleeping as he pleased."

There are, of course, many things to do and see in Atlanta, especially when there is a $25 reserve in your pocket. Maize and his wife went to Underground Atlanta where there is a seemingly endless supply of unique shops and night clubs that offer every sort of item and entertainment.

If night life didn't appeal to some of the 'Reward' participants, the hotel room was a good place to spend the evening. Full facilities including color T.V. and room service make 'staying at home' a vacation in itself.

The Soldier Reward Program has been in effect since February and has sent 15 men to Atlanta each month. The group of participants is composed of exceptional soldiers from the major units at Fort Benning (The School Brigade, 197th Brigade, Headquarters Command, Aviation Unit, and the 931st Engineer Group).

"The Rewards Program is a full first-class operation," remarked Maize. "Nothing has been spared to make the soldier's stay in Atlanta a memorable and exciting time."

DECISIONS, DECISIONS. PFC Steven Maize And His Wife Try To Decide What To Eat Before Deciding What To See In Atlanta

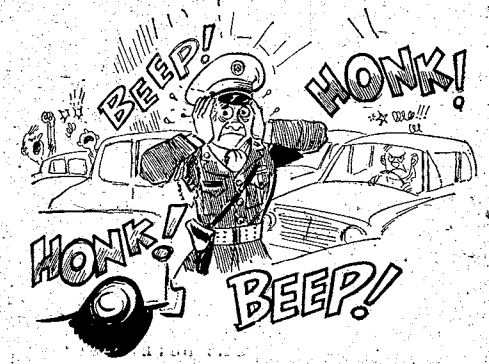
Army under secretary visits Fort Benning

Kenneth E. BeLieu, under secretary of the Army, is visiting Fort Benning for an orientation on activities of The Infantry Center and Infantry School. He arrived yesterday and is scheduled to depart from Lawson Army Air Field today at 9 a.m. BeLieu, an officer and combat veteran during World War II, and Korea was named to his present post on Sept. 22 of this year. Prior to that time he had served as deputy assistant to the President for congressional relations. He is a native of Portland, Ore., and a graduate of the University of Oregon and the Harvard Business School Advanced Management Program.

During morning rush

Escape routes open for emergencies



For the first time in years, the post now has some way of getting emergency vehicles off-post during the morning rush hours, especially to the Battle Park and Custer Terrace areas.

The recent opening of an out-bound lane on Lumpkin Road and Benning Drive provides the escape routes for emergency traffic.

"The new plan, which caused some difficulty at first, now allows all vehicles to enter and leave the post in the shortest and fastest way. It also involves less turning and fewer traffic lights," says SFC George Anderson, NCOIC of the Traffic Control Section.

"The patterns also help the new arrival on the post," commented Anderson. "Before, he got confused and really didn't know which way to go. With these more direct routes, there is less chance of confusion."

Although the plans have been in effect only a short time, Anderson believes that, in the long run, "the new plan will benefit everyone at Fort Benning."

In the Army's limpid pool of life lives an onerous ogre commonly called "race discrimination." It's heard behind closed doors, when hacks are turned . . . an attempt to keep the defamatory creature from capturing the limelight of everyday affairs.

For some reason both black and white Americans have constructed a massive grey cloud, an ornament to subtly camouflage the monster, to thwart what they feel may result in a physical confrontation.

We're taught in church to love one another regardless of the tint of our skin. Fort Benning has made bold attempts to bring racial prejudices to a low ebb by creating such groups as the Race Relations Coordinating Group. Yet it is in the heart of Americanism that we must finally strive for the answer.

Race prejudice has long been a part of our society. From the Indian Wars to the Civil War, shades of tension have been evident.

"Dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal" was said and printed more than a few years ago. Even when these words were being sanctimoniously engraved in the history books, our heart strings were far from achieving accord.

Youngsters are brought up hearing "that little nigger" or "the white trash down the street." Young minds are malleable. But, unfortunately, the impressions sometimes last into adulthood.

So why then is "Americanism" the answer? Because within "Americanism" lies a spirit, a force to pull mankind together where before there were only a number of parts searching for the whole.

Through "Americanism" we have achieved a technological nation of great strength. That strength has been through the test of two world wars and is currently being tested in Vietnam . . . andthough the bronze has been tarnished, it has always been subjected to the polishing cloth and restored to brilliance.

So too, can racial discord be severed from our way of life. Americans have had an uncommon energy to correct those situations that are disruptive to the conceptual "Brotherhood of Man."

Each of us must reach into our hearts to bring about this needed change. It is not enough that our neighbor should accept white or black skin. We must all realize the need for full acceptance. For it is in this acceptance that we might one day reach "real equality." — C. F. K.

The judge says

Contract void if against public policy

USAIC LEGAL ASSISTANCE OFFICE — Never sign a contract unless you have read what it says and know what it means. If you can't make it out, take it to a lawyer. He may save you grief later.

Take the case of Gus Gasman. He leased a gas station from an oil company. With the contract already printed Gus could either take it or leave it. Although the lease had some rather unusual terms Gus had no choice but to sign it.

One term said that Gus must hold the company harmless for any liability it incurred for anything it did on the station grounds. This would have made Gus responsible for anything the company might do while Gus ran the station.

One day an oil company man came out to fix a gas pump, and he was showing Gus how to adjust it. Instead, the repairman accidentally sprayed Gus with gas. It ignited, and burned Gus and his helper. They sued the employee and the oil company for damages and won.

Next thing Gus knew, the oil company sued him under his lease saying that he had clearly agreed to hold the company harmless for anything that might go wrong at the station. The court, however, refused to enforce that clause as "contrary to public policy." Besides, the clause was never brought to Gus' attention. He could not know of its far reaching implications.

When there is a great disparity in bargaining power between two contracting parties as was the case here, courts carefully check any terms which the stronger party demands.

Take another case. Bessie rushed her child to the community hospital where she would enter as a non-paying patient. Before the hospital would let her child in, she had to sign an agreement to excuse the hospital for any negligence by any of its staff. Later one of its nurses made a mistake which injured Bessie's child. When Bessie sued the hospital said that the agreement barred her claim.

This court ruled the contract was "against public policy." The hospital's strong position made it grossly unfair since Bessie could do nothing else but sign in such an emergency. The hospital could not exempt itself from its own negligence in this way, the court said.

Greedy people, food for pollution

By Henry Kulesza

Once upon a time there was a shephard who had ten sheep which grazed the hill of his tribe of ten other shepherds. Each shephard had ten sheep and there was enough pasture for them all. The shepherds had set up a good protection against the elements of nature and the sheep's natural enemies. At this point the tribe of shepherds were in complete accord with their environment. Each shepherd had his flock and was content. It was an ideal world, and it looked like everyone would live happily ever after.

There was one wiser shepherd who thought he could be richer than the rest of the shepherds by adding one sheep to his flock. He thought, "What is the value of adding another sheep to my herd." The value would be positive and negative. The positive value would be the profit received from selling the additional sheep. We will call this value plus one. The negative value stems from overgrazing by one more animal: However, since the overgrazing is shared by all the shepherds, the negative value costs the wise shepherd only a fraction of negative one.

Putting together the positive and negative values, the wise shepherd sees that the only sensible course open to him is to add another animal to his flock. Now the other shepherds, not to be outdone, each added another sheep and another and another. Then comes the tragedy. Each shepherd is locked into a system compelling him to increase his flock without limit — in a pasture that is limited. The sheep die off because of the overgrazing. Having lost their sheep, the shepherds are not too happy themselves. What does a shepherd with no sheep do?

This little story fits right into our lives and our environment. We, the people, are like the shepherds; but what are the sheep? The sheep are our possession — cars, houses, appliances, etc. Each of us wants bigger cars and houses and more work-saving devices — that's the way of life today. So all of us are like the wise shepherd trying for a better life, adding little sheep (possessions) to our pasture (environment). And so the story of pollution goes on and on and on. All of us blaming someone else.

This story goes on day after day; many of us hardly realizing it. This old and simple concept is called the "tragedy of freedom in the commons." This "tragedy" is present in our overcrowded cities, and explains, for instance, why many of us drive our own cars on post. This "tragedy" underlies all our problems of pollution. Man continues to pollute because the cost of cleaning the environment is put on everyone instead of the polluter himself. The endless cycle continues today, each of us polluting and not caring because we disassociate ourselves from our own pollution.

(The basis of this narriative comes from an article by Garrett Hardin entitled "The Tragedy of the Commons" in THE ENVIRONMENTAL HANDBOOK.)

Helicopter company has field exercise

Every unit in the United States Army is faced with maintaining a level of operational readiness. Recently, the 205th Assault Support Helicopter Company again moved to the field to receive more of this valuable training. The exercise extended over a period of two days and included training in all aspects of tactical operations to include door gunnery.

Aside from performing their normal missions, the men of the 205th executed a night convoy to McKenna Airfield located just off Hourglass Road. One unscheduled event occured while the advance party of the convoy was in the process of posting road guards. The party noticed several small brush fires burning unattended just off the road. Immediately, the men began extinguishing the fires with the only equipment they had at hand: field jackets and entrenching tools. The fires were finally extinguished and the convoy continued to McKenna Airfield.

The training insured the high level of operational readiness attained by the 205th in previous field exercises of this nature.

LA LECHE LEAGUE

The Columbus area chapter of LaLeche League offers an open invitation to their informal monthly meetings on the first Monday of every month at the home of Mrs. Kent Imai, 304 B Lumpkin, Fort Benning, at 7:30 p.m.

The name, La Leche, is Spanish and means "the milk." A nonsectarian, non-profit organization, the League's purpose is to help encourage "good mothering through breast-feeding." A series of four meetings will include the following topics: "The advantages of breast-feeding to mother and baby"; "The art of breastfeeding and overcoming difficulties"; "The arrival of the baby"; "The family in relation to the breastfed baby"; "Nutrition and weaning."

All women interested in nursing their babies are invited. You need not be pregnant or even have a family to attend. If you are a wife and hope some day to have children, if you are a grandmother, if you are interested . . . you are welcome. The meetings are very informal group discussions.

La Leche League began in a Chicago suburb 15 years ago, when one mother who had successfully nursed her baby, helped another who wanted to breastfeed.

This is still the basic approach, although the League is now international in scope, with more than 1,000 groups helping thousands of women in the United States, Canada, Mexico, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, and New Zealand.

ARTILLERY BALL

Mark your calenders and break out the red for the Annual Artillery Ball, Dec. 4, at the Main Officers' Club.

All Artillery officers, retired and active, are cordially invited to attend.

The evening's festivities will begin at 7 p.m. with cocktails followed by dinner at 8 p.m. Dancing to the "Metal Circus" will last until 1 a.m.

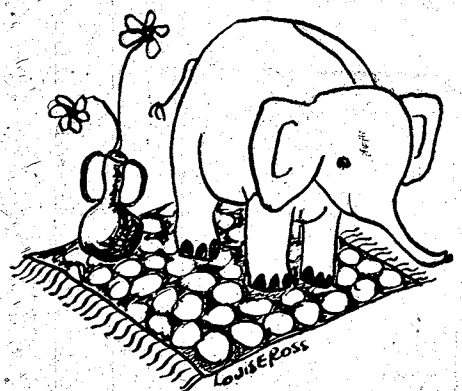
OWC

The OWC Environmental Workshop is continuing to offer programs every Tuesday at 10 a.m. in the OWC Lounge. All interested persons are invited to attend. The upcoming programs are:

Nov. 16 - Biodegradeable products.

Nov. 23 - Commissary practices.

Nov. 30 - Insecticides.



Dec. 7 - Organizational meeting.

Dec. 14 - Movie.

All officers' wives who are new to Fort Benning are cordially invited to attend a welcome coffee in the OWC Lounge, Nov. 15, at 10 a.m. No reservations are needed for this affair and there is no charge.

The lounge is located between the Thrift Shop and the Milk Bar. Phone Mrs. Richard Stoltz, 545-1945, for any other information.

Kathie Housel Bogue will be at the OWC Lounge Nov. 13 and 20 to do silhouette portraits of you or your child. Mrs. Bogue, a talented artist, will be available for appointments by phoning 544-1909 through Nov. 26.

Christmas shopping to do? Let the OWC Christmas Bazaar be your next stop. The bazaar will be held Dec. 1 at the Main Officers' Open Mess. The doors open at 10 a.m. The public is invited.

COMM-ELECT

Ladies of the Communication-Electronics Department, USAIS, assisted the American Red Cross with their weekly coffee call at Martin Army Hospital on Oct. 27.

The patients were served donuts and coffee from carts that were decorated in the traditional Halloween theme. The ladies that helped serve were: Mrs. Robert D. Sweeney, Mrs. James J. Condon, Mrs. Francis E. Mead, and Mrs. James E. McClure.

INF. BDE.

The Officers' Wives of the 197th Inf. Brigade were treated to a preview performance of the ballet "Snow White" at the Oct. 20 luncheon hosted by the ladies of the 1-58th Inf. (Mech) "Patriots."

Special guests introduced by Mrs. Willard Latham, wife of the brigade commander, were Mrs. Paul Gorman, wife of Brig. Gen. Paul Gorman, and Mrs. Bob Cooke, mother of Mrs. Latham. Mrs. Latham also introduced the battalion commanders' wives, who in turn welcomed the new arrivals in their respective Battalions.

The "Snow White" theme was highlighted by the use of black place mats and napkin rings on white linens with white china. Fresh ivy and red and white roses added to the effect. Large replicas of the masks "Comedy" and "Tragedy" were suspended over the stage. Small replicas were used as individual name tags.

"Snow White" will be presented at the Springer Theater Dec. 16-19. The Springer Ballet is directed by Terrell Paulk, who is also the instructor for the Officers' Wives' Club School of Dance. Mr. Paulk has danced with the Atlanta Ballet, the Washington Ballet, the National Ballet of Canada, and has been a guest artist with the Bolshi Ballet and the Baltimore Ballet. Tickets for the performance will be available for sale on post.

INF. AG.

The October coffee for the Infantry Agency was held at the home of Mrs. Sreve Himic. The table was centered with a witch, pumpkin and ornamental gourds.

Mrs. Robert Siegrist conducted a short business meeting following the social hour. Everyone was reminded to bring their "white elephants" for the OWC Christmas Bazaar to the November coffee.

Farewell was said to Mrs. Fred Mayer who leaves with her husband for a tour in London.

AVN. CMD.

The Officers' Wives of the 609th Transportation Company met in the home of Mrs. Irvin Travis for their monthly coffee. Delicious cakes and pies were served to the ladies. An impressive monkey pod-lazy susan filled with assorted nuts served as the centerpiece.

The ladies of the 609th welcomed Mrs. Robert Grow to their coffee. Mrs. Grow informed the girls of the opportunity to help with the addressing of Christmas cards to send to an orphanage in Vietnam.

The ladies congratulated Mrs. Victor Rose on the birth of her son, Clifton Laurence, and presented her with an engraved spoon.

Maj. and Mrs. Irvin Travis hosted a Halloween Costume Party in their home for the officers and wives of the 609th Transportation Company. CW2 Victor Rose won first prize for his costume of a viking.

Mrs. Thomas Jensen will host the next monthly coffee in her home on Nov. 17.

The Officers' Wives of the 197th Aviation Company will meet in the home of Mrs. Jon Stillman on Nov. 17 at noon for a pot-luck luncheon. The ladies are asked to bring a favorite dish to serve at least six people and to bring the recipe if they care to share it with the other ladies.

The Officers' Wives of the 931st Aviation Platoon will hold their monthly coffee in the home of Mrs. Richard White on Nov. 12.

Post exchange sales, service guaranteed

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service guarantees the merchandise it sells and the services it offers with one of the most liberal refund and adjustment policies around. At the exchange no sales are final.

"We are here to provide service and value to the military man and his dependents," an AAFES spokesman said, "with satisfaction guaranteed or your money cheerfully refunded."

Exchange policy provides for refunds, adjustments, and partial refunds. "A refund," the spokesman explained, "is reimbursement of full purchase price paid for an item of merchandise and return of merchandise to the exchange facility. An adjustment is reimbursement of a part of the purchase price with the customer retaining the merchandise. A partial refund is a 'refund prorated,' taking into consideration the amount of use obtained by the customer, with title of the merchandise returned to the exchange."

The refund and adjustment policy applies to exchange activities worldwide, including those operated by concessionaires. If possible, the customer should present a cash register receipt when requesting a refund. If a receipt is not available, the purchase price will be verified through exchange records.

65th annual Christmas Seal campaign initiated

Nov. 10 was the official beginning of the 65th Annual Christmas Seal Campaign. Actor Jack Lemmon, is the national honorary chairman for the Christmas Seal Drive which raises money for the Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Associations throughout the nation.

The Chattahoochee Valley TB and RD Association has named as its local chairman, Mrs. W. H. Young III. Citizens of Harris, Chattahoochee and Muscogee counties have already received their Christmas Seals through the mail according to Mrs. Young.

The Christmas Seal Drive supports the various programs of the TB and RD Association. These include The School Press Project on Air Pollution and Smoking, Youth Conference on Smoking and Health, COPD Seminars for medical personnel, aid and counseling for TB and other respiratory disease patients, an Emphysema Club, and health education materials and films for schools, nursing students and professionals. The association also works with the Columbus Health Department in tuberculin testing in the three-counties.

This is the 53rd year that Christmas Seals have been mailed locally and the TB and RD Association is one of the oldest charitable organizations in this area.

Mrs. Young stated that the "seals" were distributed originally in 1918 by the Public Health Nurses Association to combat tuberculosis. Mrs. J. T. Fletcher was president of the board at the time and the total amount collected was $442. Last year almost $27,000 was donated to Christmas Seals and the goal this year is $30,000.

Mrs. Young commented that the Tri - Hi - Y's at Carver, Jordan and Hardaway High Schools have participated so far in this year's drive and Boy Scouts of the Chattahoochee Council will distribute posters for the campaign. Residents of Brown Nicholson Terrace stuffed envelopes.

The St. Luke United Methodist Church Youth Choir will repeat their production "Tell It Like It Is," Sunday, at 7:30 p.m. Their first performance was so enthusiastically received that this second performance had to be scheduled.

"Tell It Like It Is" is a folk musical about God, who He is, how He reveals Himself, what He is like and some of the problems with which we are confronted when we believe in Him.

Horace E. McFarland, "Mac," will direct the performance and be assisted by John Miller, piano; Tommy White, lead guitar; Jay Deen, bass guitar; and Ben Hines, drums. Al Meadows is in charge of the lights.

Annual search now underway

Competition for the title of 1972 Military Wife of the Year is now under way at military installations world-wide.

The program focuses attention on large-scale voluntary efforts by military wives to promote better human relationships around the world through their involvement and participation in public service programs.

TSB wives attend get acquainted coffee

A "get acquainted" coffee was held recently at the Supper Club for the officer wives of The School Brigade (TSB). Approximately 60 ladies were welcomed by Mrs. A. G. Norris, wife of the brigade commander, Col. A. G. Norris.

The coffee table, covered with a yellow cloth, was decorated with a variety of carved and ceramic elephants attractively displayed among pyracantha branches and berries.

The ladies of the 1st Bn., TSB, sponsored the coffee. The hostess, Mrs. John R. Walker, Mrs. G. Norman Batten, and Mrs. Gilbert E. Hyland, planned the decorations and designed the name tags.

The reservation table was staffed by Mrs. Earl L. Myers, Mrs. John J. Puglisc, Mrs. Roger D. White, and Mrs. Mark A. Hromalk.

Coffee and tea were served by Mrs. Boyd F. Matthews, Mrs. Lonnie L. Wall, and Mrs. Grady Spry.

Dinner party held by Secretary's Office

The Main Officer Open Mess main ballroom was the site of a formal dinner party held by the officers and ladies of the Office of the Secretary, Nov. 6.

The occasion was a hail and farewell, and former members of the group who had departed within the past year were invited to return to renew old friendships.

Approximately 24 couples attended the affair. Guests returning for the evening were Lt. Col. and Mrs. Robert Orkand and Maj. and Mrs. Jon Stillman.

New arrivals welcomed were Capt. and Mrs. Rudy Bejarano and Capt. Bill Ridings, while Capt. and Mrs. Frank Burghart and 1st Lt. and Mrs. Steven Dare were given a fond farewell.

Col. Herbert Frandsen presented baby cups to Maj. and Mrs. Donald Mitchell and Capt. and Mrs. Gary Halstead.

A dinner of steak or chicken, accompanied by champagne, was served on tables adorned with autumn designs and foliage. Entertainment was provided by the Infantry Chorus who serenaded the guests from the balcony overlooking the ballroom. Dinner music and after-dinner dancing was provided by the George Corrindino Trio.

October – partytime for 'Patriots'

By Fem-Line Staff

Ghosts and goblins descended upon King's Pond Oct. 30 for the 1st Bn. (Mech.) 58th Inf., "Patriot's" October Hall and Farewell.

The event was sponsored by Co. C, who transformed the lodge at King's Pond into a Halloween setting complete with corn shucks, scarecrow, a large black cauldron, and a four-foot cake in pumpkin form.

Well-known battalion officers and their wives were unrecognizable in a variety of costumes ranging from the Frito Bandito to a group of three, celverly disguised, Chiquita bananas.

After the traditional happy hour, competition was held to determine the most original and imaginaive costumes.

The winners were; first place — three bananas, Capt. Bruce E. Parry, 1st Lt. Donald D. Whitfield and 1st Lt. Thomas F. Simcox. Second place went to Capt. and Mrs. Cecil B. Calloway, as ladybug and exterminator. An honorable mention was given to Mrs. D. W. Fulmer who came as a little old granny.

After the costume competition a buffet-style meal of turkey, ham, deviled eggs, assorted salads, and a pumpkin-shaped cake was served.

The gaiety was silenced for a moment as farewells were said to the brigade commander and his wife, Col. and Mrs. Willard Latham. Lt. Col. Stephen R. Pawlik, battalion commander, presented Col. Latham with a unique "Patriot" plaque in recognition of his accomplishments within the brigade. Col. Latham is leaving the 197th Inf. Bde. for duty at main post.

Officially welcomed into the "Patriot" organization were Capt. and Mrs. Jerry R. Collins, 1st Lt. and Mrs. Joseph S. Lahnstein, and 2nd Lt. and Mrs. Gerald R. Nail.

After the hail and farewell ceremony the guests adjourned to the dance floor where they were entertained by the Frito Bandito, Maj. Paul J. Gross, who did a Mexican hatdance.

Music was provided by the newly formed "Patriot" combo, the "Patriotic Progression," which is comprised of six battalion soldiers.

'Patriot' Mechanized Infantry don't Always ride

By Rob Fraser

When the words "Mechanized Infantry" are heard, the first thing that comes to mind is the infantryman never walk or run but always ride.

For the men of the 1st Bn. (Mech.), 58th Inf. "Patriots," the easy life is not always the case.

A rigorous and, at times, enjoyable physical training program is an integral part of the Patriots' training.

Unlike a week like basketball, football, and volleyball, this unit's entire training program is not only Mechanized Infantry unit this side of the Mississippi River.

The physical training program involves an everyday participation from each member of the battalion, from the typist to the infantryman himself.

The program includes running and team sports such as basketball, football, and volleyball.

A competitive spirit exists within the battalion at company level and at the individual level with the "Run for Your Life" program as a testimony.

The "Run for Your Life" program, for the "Patriots," is in full swing with 450 soldiers and officers involved. Of the 450, 89 have completed 50 miles and five have completed over 100 miles of running.

Once a week the battalion is formed in front of the headquarters with the battalion commander, Lt. Col. Stephen R. Pawlik, saying a few words to the men. Then, in unison, everyone sheds their jackets in preparation for the battalion run of two to three miles.

The "Patriot's" have passed the prepatory phase of "Run for Your Life" and are nearing the end of the conditioning pbase.

The benefits of a physical training program such as this are categorized in terms of fitness and character.

Sgt. Alfredo Marin, the battalion artist, a native of Puerto Rico, said, "a few of the men I know in the battalion have given up their smoking habits for physical fitness. Also, many soldiers I would never get to know in a battalion of this size become good freinds through the unity provided by the physical fitness program."

If you were to see a demonstration by the "Patriots' they would probably be in the security of their tracks. However, behind the scenes, the physical fitness concept of the "Patriots" is in practice, and it is working.

Computer link-up speeds medical care

A cathode ray tube display system will enable medical personnel in three Army clinics to retrieve and display patient information stored at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington. Seven of the systems, each with a cathode ray tube display, keyboard, control unit and hard copy printer, will be installed in the psychiatric wards of Walter Reed General Hospital. Two distant Army mental hygiene consultation clinics also will be equipped with single systems.

By providing ward personnel with direct access to the centrally-stored records, the COMPSY method will expedite routine clerical functions, including records search and exchange of patient information between psychiatrists, nurses and other medical personnel.

Psychological test evaluations will also be accelerated by automating the administration, scoring and interpretation of screening tests. Time will also be saved in preparing social histories, routine summaries and patients' reports.

Col. Robert J. Standley, Commanding Officer Of The 931st Engr. Gp., Presents Sp5 Ronnie Catoe With The Meritorious Service Medal.

By Keith Harmon

A draftsman from the 43rd Engr. Bn., 931st Engr. Gp., has been awarded the Meritorious Service Medal for "outstanding meritorious service" to his unit and the Army. Sp6 Ronnie Catoe, 24, the recipient is believed to be the first specialist five at Fort Benning to receive such an award.

The medal was presented to Catoe Wednesday in an award ceremony at the 931st headquarters by Col. Robert J. Standley, 931st commander.

Catoe, of Kershaw, S.C., was recognized for "motivating those personnel with whom he worked, maintaining a seldom equaled morale and demonstrating the utmost in professional competence."

He was graduated from Clemson College with a degree in civil engineering in May, 1969, and was formerly employed as an engineer with the Army Corps of Engineers in Charleston, S.C. As senior draftsman with the 43rd, Catoe was chiefly responsible for designing a bridge and dam the battalion constructed earlier this year for scouting organizations at the McKenzie Boy Scout Camp. He also was partially responsible for drafting the detailed specifications of the Lindsay Creek Bypass extension and the overpass at Custer Rd. where work has been begun by the 43rd.

The medal Catoe received is usually presented to persons of "key responsibility," such as battalion commanders and staff officers and NCO's who distinguish themselves in some way. However, the engineer was recognized for his assumption of a great deal of responsibility during major construction projects of the 43rd.

The personable draftsman was separated from the Army Nov. 3, and plans to return to his job as civil engineer in Charleston with his wife, Cindy, and their young son, Jeffrey.

Avn. Cmd.

Prior to reenlisting, Myers attended the Indiana College of Mortuary Science in Indianapolis, Ind., and became a licensed mortician for G.H. Herrmann Funeral Home also located in Indianapolis.

931st starts leadership program

The 931st Engr. Gp. is developing a new leadership program which will be mandatory for all E-4 and E-5 personnel who will have four months or longer remaining in the Army after completion of the course.

The 931st established the program in line with a DA directive requiring all major units in Continental United States (CONUS) to establish such a program.

The purpose of the training is to develop leadership qualities in the men and to help the Army evaluate the leadership ability of soldiers for promotion and reenlistment purposes.

The group will begin its first leadership course Dec. 6, with the course being run on a cycle basis. It will last a week with a total of 40 hours of instruction. The week's agenda is planned as follows: six hours of method of instruction, two hours of legal subjects, 11 hours of military leadership, two hours of drug abuse, four hours of race relations, four hours of physical training, five hours of drill and ceremonies, and three hours of commander's time.

Personnel attending the week course will be required to reside in barracks located near the 931st Group Headquarters.

The OIC of the basic leadership course, Capt. James Slaton, and NCOIC, SFC William F. Armstrong, along with other instructors, will be attending a seminar about the basic leadership course next week at Ft. McClellan, Ala.

The 931st leadership training will be worth two administrative points on the promotion board and is intended to help those who re-up-to become better leaders. The entire program is in line with the ideals of VOLAR, according to Armstrong.

Operation Holiday now underway

WASHINGTON — The Military Order of the Purple Heart Service Foundation, Inc., is again conducting Operation Holiday, a nationwide program to help bring a merry Christmas to wounded U.S. servicemen in military hospitals and units in the Republic of Vietnam.

The foundation encourages individuals, schools, and civic and fraternal organizations to mail individual Christmas cards to American servicemen by sending cards to Operation Holiday, FPO San Francisco 96626.

Cards should be mailed by Nov. 15 and require only stateside mail rates. Cards should contain the sender's full name and address so servicemen can reply.

Cards can also be bundled and mailed parcel post. The foundation also suggests sending small gifts to servicemen, such as paperback books, fingernail clippers, playing cards, writing paper, grooming articles, ballpoint pens, artificial Christmas trees (less than three feet tall), Christmas decorations, or any other gift that will not spoil.

Operation Holiday has arranged for distribution of all cards and gifts through the Chaplains.

DA holds alcohol, drug meeting

WASHINGTON — Representatives from all major Army commands attended a three-day World-Wide Alcohol and Drug Abuse Conference presented by the Department of the Army in Washington, D.C.

In his closing remarks to the conference, Gen. W. C. Westmoreland, Army chief of staff, stated: "The Army will be in the vanguard of our country's program to correct this national problem of alcoholism and drug abuse. Just as the Army led the nation in a massive endeavor in social welfare during the Great Depression with the Civilian Conservation Corps...just as the Army has led this nation in its undertakings to achieve a truly integrated society in which any man can advance in accordance with his demonstrated abilites. . . the Army fully intends to lead the way in meeting the national challenge of alcoholism and drug abuse."

The conference was held as part of an intensive program in the Army to combat drug abuse.

His biggest problem is alcoholism.

Billy's father is an alcoholic.

Liquor and jobs are two things he's never been able to hold. He quit drinking twice last month. And twice the month before. Maybe someday he'll straighten out. Maybe. In the meantime, his family will always come last.

The United Way provides many community agencies that can help Billy and his family. The innocent victims of alcoholism are among the people in our town who need your help. Poor people, sick people, disturbed people, old people are counting on you.

Give the United Way. Please.

THEIR BEARS' LAST ASSEMBLY

Inactivated

Photos By Gary Hudson, Allan Barr

LAST LOOK AT THE 'POLAR BEARS'

One of the Army's proudest fighting units was officially inactivated here Nov. 5 when acting battalion command sergeant major, Cleo Stevens, took the colors of the 5th Bn., 31st Inf., 197th Inf. Bde. from Maj. Donald Tapscott, battalion commander, in a ceremony at Presidential Field on Kelley Hill.

Present at the ceremony, in addition to members of the battalion, were brigade commander, Col. Willard Latham, and Maj. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott, Fort Benning commander.

A statue of a polar bear, symbolizing the unit's nickname, was brought to the field for the ceremony.

The battalion traces its origin to Aug. 13, 1916, when it became part of the 31st Infantry Regiment, created from components of the 8th, 13th, 15th and 27th Infantry Regiment at Camp McKinley in the Philippine Islands.

During the next 42 years the unit became known as "The Foreign Legion" because it did not serve on American soil until 1958.

During World War I, from 1918-1920, the regiment served in Siberia, where it acquired its nickname, "Polar Bears," while protecting the Trans-Siberian Railroad to keep it in operation.

Following the war, the unit was returned to the Philippines where it remained until 1923 when civil strife in China led to this deployment to Shanghai to protect the lives and property of American citizens during the Shanghai Incident. For its action during this period, the 31st Infantry Regiment was awarded the only battle honor ever presented to an Army unit in peacetime, the Yangtze Medal.

Also during the Shanghai Incident, the unit was presented with the Shanghai Bowl, made from 1,500 Chinese silver dollars contributed by Chinese citizens in appreciation of the unit's peacekeeping efforts.

The unit then returned to the Philippines where it stayed until it was committed as the nucleus of the first combat force ordered to quell the Japanese invasion of the Philippines at the outset of World War II.

On Bataan, the 31st Infantry Regiment fought against the Japanese until it was almost annihilated. When it was apparent that surrender was inevitable, the unit's colors and battle streamers were destroyed, and the Shanghai Bowl buried. (The bowl was recovered after the Korean conflict).

Those who survived the Japanese onslaught suffered through the infamous Bataan Death March. During this time the unit was removed from the rolls of active units in the Regular Army.

The 31st Infantry was reactivated at Kyongson, Korea, as part of the 7th Infantry Division in 1946. It remained with the 7th when the division moved to Japan in 1949, but was sent back to Korea in 1950, landing at Inchon as part of Gen. MacArthur's famous conflict, the 31st Infantry participated in the bitter fighting at Chip-Ra, the Punch Bowl and the Iron Triangle. The unit also engaged in the famous battles for Triangle Hill, Sniper Ridge and Pork Chop Hill.

In 1958, the unit was organized into the 2nd Battle Group, 31st Infantry at Ft. Rucker, Ala., and for the first time in its 42 year history, began serving on American land.

In October of 1966, the 5th Battalion, 31st Infantry, composed of a headquarters company and five rifle companies, was organized at Ft. Rucker. In December of the same year the unit was moved to Fort Benning and made part of the 197th Infantry Brigade. Its mission, from then until its inactivation ,was primarily to provide troop support for the U.S. Army Infantry School.

The unit's members will now be transferred to other units in the 197th Infantry Brigade.

'Thoreau'–'toughest to top for many seasons'

A Review
By Larry Conklin

"The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail," the second play of the Springer Theater Company's Centennial Season, is going to be one of the toughest to top for many seasons to come.

The play, written by Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee, shows that in Thoreau's time, as in ours, there was dissention against such things as undeclared wars, unjust taxes, and racial equality and freedom.

The part of Thoreau was superbly played by one of Columbus' better known actors, Wes Carr. Wes carried his role with more conviction than I have seen in a male lead at the Springer since I last saw him as Mr. Lloyd in "The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie." He was ably assisted in his cell by Mike Shepard as "Bailey the illiterate," who only wanted to learn to write his name. Mike' commanding officer of the 608th Ord. Co. at Fort Benning, made one of the best straight men in the entire play.

Ralph Waldo Emerson was played by George Gingell. George, who is one fine actor, can be seen every evening on WRBL-TV. Straight faced and sober, he brought humor and guidance to Thoreau and the audience.

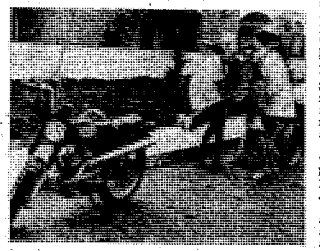
The prettiest sight of the evening was the entrance of Carolyn Miller as "Ellen," the only one that really understood Thoreau. She had the greatest conviction in the minor role.

On the weaker side was Warren Jacobs as "Deacon Ball" and Jim Norman as "John," the brother of Thoreau.

The other minor roles were ably played by Judy Gunter, as the Mother of Thoreau, Billy Hodges, as Sam' Staples, and Betty Britto, as Lydian.

Technically, I would venture to say, this is the perfect show. The set design and lighting design by James Othuse were superb. The staging, however, was a bit static in places but all in all a delight to the eye. A "bravo" should be given the Springer Theater Company for a play with a good message which I hope not everyone goes home and forgets.

If you are looking for "An evening well spent," I highly recommend "The Night Thoreau Spent In Jail."



The last two performances will be held today and tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. at the Springer Theater.

Pausing for a moment to get that extra "lift" before returning to the motorcycle track, Spring (Kathy Cannon) pleads with Domino (Dennis Redfield) to give up his life of racing which can only lead to certain death in New World Pictures' action packed drama "Private Duty Nurses," opening today at the Georgia theater.

Auburn Univ. to present 'Miser'

An Auburn alumnus' translation of "The Miser" by Moliere, will be presented Nov. 13, 17 and 20, in the Auburn University Theatre.

George R. Kernodle of Camp Hill, internationally famous for his books, "From Art to Theatre," and "An Invitation to Theatre" was once a music major in organ at Auburn.

Curtain time is 8 p.m., with all seats reserved. Reservations may be made at the Box Office, Music Building Annex, from noon to 5:50 p.m. daily. Students, admitted free upon presentation of ID cards, must also make reservations.

The French comedy, which will be directed by Dr. A. Cleveland Harrison, was first produced in 1668. The Auburn performance will set the costuming in the first quarter of the 19th century "just because it might be interesting," according to Harrison.

"Moliere's ideas were so universal it doesn't make any difference what period it is done in. It does, however, need to be removed from the 20th Century because of the formality of the language and the relationships between today's generations.

"The acting style," Harrison continues, will be representative of the Commedie Francais, in the traditional productions of Moliere and the director's preference for the lively and somewhat mannered gestures movements in this type drama."

In the cast are George E. Newman, Jr. of Guntersville as Harpagon; Jim Torbert of Murray Hill, N.J., as Valere; Lana M. Davis of Brimingham as Elise; Wayne Moore of Leeds as Cleante; Lee Jackson of Billings, Mont., as Flash; Bonnie McWhinnie of Montgomery as Frosine.

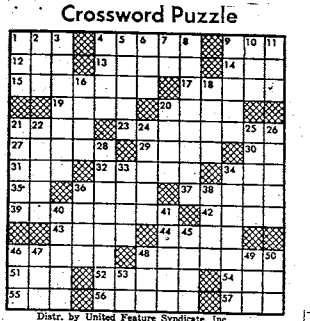
Dramatizers to enter 'Blithe Spirit' in tournament

By Cyndi Lewis

The Fort Benning Dramatizers will hold try-outs for Noel Coward's "Blithe Spirit," Dec. 2, 3, and 4 at 7:30 p.m. at the post Playhouse.

The play, directed by Dennis M. Seely, will be Fort Benning's entry in the 1972 3rd U.S. Army Tournament of Plays. The Dramatizers won second place last year with "Blues for Mister Charlie" and hope to capture the first place prize of $1,000 with "Blithe Spirit."

Each installation in the 3rd Army area presents one full-length play to a panel of judges who travel throughout the area during the contest period (Feb. 25 through March 8). The judges will select the best three productions in the 3rd Army area.



Individual awards will also be presented to the best designer, best publicity manager, best house manager, best leading actor and actress, best supporting actor and actress, best costumer, best make-up artist, best director and best lighting artist. Awards in the amount of $1,000 for first place; $500 for second place; and $250 for third place will be presented to the winning installations along with certificates of accomplishment.

Any Army installation in the 3rd Army area is eligible to enter the competition, and active military personnel, dependents, and civilians are encouraged to participate.

"I urge anyone interested in trying-out for a part or working backstage to come and help us win," stated director Dennis Seely. "All of the parts are good parts because each enables the actor to gain experience through the development of the character. Every character in 'Blithe Spirit,' both leading and supporting roles, have their share of laugh lines . . . Coward's script is very well balanced."

Dennis, who hails from San Diego, Calif., had previously directed "Blithe Spirit" at LaVerne College in California. He has also directed another of Coward's plays entitled "Fumed Oak," worked with several variety shows and directed the first 'Up With People' group in San Diego.

Synopsis

PLAY MISTY FOR ME (Rated R) — Disc jockey, Dave Garland (Clint Eastwood), receives telephone requests while on the air. One feminine voice constantly asks that he "Play 'Misty' for me."

Sometime later, Dave awakes in his bedroom to the music of "Misty" being played on his phonograph, just in time to avoid being stabbed by a crazed Evelyn who escapes.

Be prepared for the thrill-packed, suspense-loaded conclusion.

THE NIGHT VISITOR (Rated GP) — Mel Ferrer has produced a powerful Gothic suspense story. Set against a cold, brooding Scandinavian landscape, an ingenious tale of horror and revenge unfolds.

Suspense and terror gradually mount in every taut scene. Max von Sydow plays Salem, the man wrongly accused of murder who has been committed to an asylum for the criminally insane.

His method of escape from his heavily locked cell makes for incredible and fascinating watching. Trevor Howard plays the inspector, baffled by a double murder and the ingenious escape by an "Incredible Man."

I LOVE MY . . . WIFE (Rated R) — Physician Richard Burrows (Elliott Gould) is a bored and straying husband. His wife, Brenda Vaccaro, who has helped put him through medical school, has grown progressively distasteful to him and represents a trap from which he longs to be free.

He finds solace in several random affairs until he becomes smitten and deeply involved with a beautiful television actress (Angel Tompkins). His innate selfishness and irresponsibility come to the fore, however, and he rejects commitment to his new love for a continuing life of impermanent relationships.

The story presents a frank view of some very common problems that beset the institution of marriage.

EVEL KNIEVEL (Rated GP) — George Hamilton plays "Evel Knievel," America's king of the stuntmen, who hopes one day to jump the Snake River Canyon astride a jet-propelled motorcycle.

Evel is as fascinating a character in real life as he is a performer. Evel also appears in the film and is shown performing a 50-yard leap over the fountains at Caesar's Palace in Las Vegas, where he crashed on the way down and broke his back, and in a spectacular jump over 19 automobiles at Ontario Motor Speedway, which is his present record.

Evel Knievel says, quote: "Hell, I'm the best — the last of the daredevils, and my death — it will be glorious."

MAN AND BOY (Rated G) — The story takes place in Arizona in the late 1800's following the civil war between the Union and the Confederacy. Raw frontier life prevails where a man struggles to feed himself on a day to day basis, never thinking of the future which was usually a bullet in the back or a quick hanging anyway.

To this wild land comes Caleb Reevers (Bill Cosby) a tough ex-union army cavalryman with his wife Ivy and a 12-year-old rascal of a son named Billy. Just as Caleb settles down on a few acres of virgin desert to make a home for his family, trouble strikes.

Lee Christmas, wanted all over the West for murder and bank robbery steals Caleb's horse. The action explodes as Caleb and young Billy hunt down Christmas to get their horse back. Caleb tangles in a bloody fist fight with old enemy Nate Hodges, gets dragged by a wild horse, is thrown into jail by a revenge-mad sheriff and tangles with Christmas in a deadly gunfight.

The Great White Shark is the deadliest coldblooded predator in the world, and in their search for him Gimbel and his crew traveled from South Africa, Ceylon, Australia and all points in-between, coming face-to-face with the most spectacular and often deadly marine creatures that exist, including hundreds of sharks, moray eels, giant turtles, large groupers and barracudas.

Gimbel also collected a group of fascinating recipes served aboard ship during the filming of "Blue Water, White Death." A recipe for boiled shark, although not recommended for a typical Sunday brunch, can serve as a fascinating gourmet treat for some of your very special friends.

Aboard the Terrier VIII, a former whaling ship used by the filming crew, Gimbel watched the preparation of boiled shark under primitive conditions. The meals were cooked in a small square box lined with sand, with a metal disk about 2 feet in diameter serving as a heating unit, with logs used to heat the metal. The chief cook used three black iron pots, which comprised his entire kitchen equipment, with the addition of a straight round stick and a flat paddle.

In one pot the shark meat was boiled for about an hour, after which it was torn into shreds, which were washed with water. Added to this meat was "mealie," an African-type corn which forms the staple of the African diet. The corn is ground into a coarse flour which is added to boiling water. The mealie is added a bit at a time while the water is boiling. This is all stirred continuously to insure even cooking. From time to time more mealie is added to correct the consistency.

In another pot a large amount of shark liver is boiled. Shark liver looks just like beef liver except it is a bit larger and a little darker. As the liver heats, it also melts. At the same time as the liver is boiling, shreds of the shark meat are pressed into balls and added to the liquid liver and stirred vigorously until it becomes a greyish stew.

The meal is termed "Guisado de Tubarao," and if you ever want to truly surprise your guests, get some shark meat and invite your friends. The "Blue Water, White Death" crew guarantees that it'll be a meal your friends won't soon forget.

HHC edges Co. C to claim championship

HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf., is the new 197th Infantry Brigade Flag Football champion by virtue of an 8 to 0 shut-out over Co. A (Admin.), in the championship game played Nov. 1.

The only score came on a 5 yard pass play from quarterback Rob Billings to Milton Johnson. Billings then scored the extra points on an end run to the left side. The touchdown came on the second play of the second half.

The first half was all defense, highlighted by five interceptions — three interceptions coming on three consecutive plays. Co. A mounted a drive on the HHC's 20 yard line, on an interception by Ed Reifenberg; but the threat was halted as Milton Johnson made his second interception of the day, this one was on the goal line.

The game appeared over for Co. A when, with two minutes left, Frank Toles made an interception for HHC Co. A got the ball back a few plays later however, but quarterback Hank Bolding's long pass, the final play of the game, was caught 10 yards short of the end zone.

The two teams will be representing the 197th Inf. Bde. in the Fort Benning Flag Football Championship Tournament which started Monday. The tourney is scheduled to end Nov. 19th.

The 197th Bde. tournament began Oct. 26th, with an exciting opening. In that contest, Co. D Spt. Bn. won the overtime 23 to 22, for more penetration into the opponents territory.

Co. A (Admin.) dropped a decisionto HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf., 6-0, but defeated the 5th Bn., 31st Inf., 12 to 6, and HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf., by the same score and forced a rematch with HHC for the Brigade championship.

In a ceremony at the end of that game, trophies were awarded to players of HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf., and Co. A (Admin.), by Col. Willard Latham, the 197th Inf. Bde. commander.

Other tourney teams included HHC, 1st Bn., 58th Inf., and Btry, B, 2nd Bn., 10th Field Arty.

PFC Predicto PICKS!

Predico's picking prevails

Ah yes, once again PFC Predicto prevailed over the paltry picking's of this weeks piddling prognosticators. The galloping gridiron ghost guessed his way to an overall mark of .754 to the measly misfield mark of .527 picked by the poor pickers of the Infantry Board. The psychic-seer of the stadium will undoubtedly score another smashing success this week as I am challanged by the troops of Co. C, HC. Civilian sport perfect for military

"Hey? What's red, white and blue and bounces around?"

"Man, I don't know an ABA basketball or somethin.'"

"Close, but no cigar. It's the players not the ball, they jump from team to team and from league to league and never pay any mind to what color the ball is."

The ABA struggling for survival in the highly competitive basketball jungle have proven to be kings of the straw grabbers. Along with its conception they recruited a band of athletes nobody heard of or wanted. They even went so far as to sign "forbidden players," a stigma attached to such undesirables as Connie Hawkins and Roger Brown by the rival NBA.

It seemed that these players were supposedly involved in some inadvisable scandals while they were in college. The players called it guilt by association, but the NBA called it "banned for life." So with the unwanted stars, Williams, Hawkins and Brown banned together with a host of NBA castoffs and formed the "other" league which later became known as the American Basketball Association.

Those were the tough days when the games were exciting when either team broke the century mark. Now the times have changed and the ABA seems to be on the same track as the now defunct and later merged AFL. Merger talks with the NBA began over a year ago, but anit-trust hearings have stalled the inevitable, at least for a time being.

Although the leagues haven't merged yet there has, I might add, been a complete domination by the senior circuit. But the real story behind the new league has been its total lack of discipline. League president Jack Dolph has more than once bowed to the owners bidding, thus sacrificing his once supreme power.

The ABA czar chose to allow the league owners to raid the college campuses of its young and unprotected talent. Spencer Haywood, the first in a long line of so-called hardship cases was signed to a contract by the Denver Rockets before his junior year at the University of Detroit was over. As if to set a precedent the Rockets signed young Ralph Simpson, also of The University of Detroit.

Thus the war began, now both leagues were in hot pursuit of the once untapped college underclassman. The ABA had the jump, for their owners condoned the signing of these players, whereas the NBA still clung to its four year eligibility rule. This rule forbade any NBA teams from drafting a player until his college eligibility ran out or his class graduated.

This year the NBA realized it too must have a hardship draft or all the money hungry college stars would wind up with the ABA. The crowning blow must have been the signing of Johnny Neuman. Neuman, a sensational scorer in college, was wooed from his native University of Mississippi by the Memphis Pros. Neuman, only a sophomore at the time, was averaging more than 43 points a game and seriously threatening the sophomore scoring record set by Pistol Pet Maravich of a few years before. Now young Johnny is averaging over 20 points per game with the Pros. Not bad for a 20 year old kid who would only be in his junior year of college.

Not only have college players jumped to the ABA, but proven stars of the NBA as well. The most famous of which is Rick Barry, the one time scoring king of the NBA. Other stars followed suit in their quest for the multi-year million dollar contract. Such notables as Zelmo Beatty, Joe Caldwell, and Billy Cunningham were quick to cash in on the fat bankrolls of the ABA. Although Cunningham never played a minute with the Virginia Squires he was still paid for services never rendered.

In 1970 the ABA began to hold their own in the college draft, although the draft was held in secret for a month before the rival NBA's many top flight college stars inked their names to lucrative pacts. All-Americans Charlie Scott, Dan issel, Rick Mount, Mike Maloy, Artis Gillmore and Jim McDaniels, just to name a few, head the list of the fast growing but younger league.

With the signing of big name players the ABA has become much more respectable and much more competitive. My guess is that in just three short years the ABA's multi-colored ball will be all one color. Brown.

Ga., and cross country for Georgia State University, White was in pretty good shape physically for the sport. After being indoctrinated into the skills of orienteering, White went to Quantico Marine Base in Va. to attend the Marine Physical Fitness Academy and receive special training and instruction on the sport. The climax of his training occurred when he was chosen to be a member of a seven man orienteering team to represent the United States abroad. This was the first U. S. All Service Orienteering Team ever formed. The team consisted of four Marines and three Army personnel.

The competition in New Chatel, Switzerland, which involved the participation of seven other countries, was the team's highlight event of the year. The competition lasted for two days and ended with the United States placing seventh of the eight in the meet. When you consider that the other countries had been participating for years, all were quite pleased and satisfied of the team's performance.

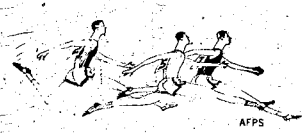
Own something better than a champion.

The Mark III Triumph Spitfire is a three-time Divisional winner and a national SCCA racing champion. It would be hard to ask for anything better.



Except that there is something better: the Mark IV Spitfire. It's everything the Mark III is, plus stronger engine bearings, synchromesh in all four gears, a new improved suspension system and a handsome restyling by Ferrari body designer Giovanni Michelotti.

Ask your Triumph dealer to let you test drive a champion Spitfire. He'll give you his best.

Joanne R. Stawski named WAC of week

Sp5 Joanne R. Stawski of the U. S. Army Marksmanship Training Unit (USAMTU) and National Women's Service Rifle Champion, has been selected by the editors of Army Times as the "WAC of the Week," it was disclosed this week by Col. Robert M. Piper, commander of the USAMTU.

Stawski, a relative newcomer to the Fort Benning scene, is a native of Wisconsin and fired her initial High Power Rifle competition in June when she competed in the All Army matches at Fort Benning. She had become interested in the shooting "game" in April and had tried out and made the Ft. Bragg, N.C. post team.

Her outstanding shooting during the All Army matches won a spot on the Army team which was selected to shoot in the National Rifle and Pistol Championships at Camp Perry, Ohio in August. In her first attempt at high level competition, Stawski compiled a winning score of 1484-203X.

Rocketing her to success in the High Power rifle division, the new star and champion is probably among the best shooters when she competes in the long range, 600 yard and 1,000 yard events. Her scores compare right along with the men.

Entering the Army in June 1969, Joanne is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Stawski of New Berlin, Wisc. Prior to coming to her present assignment with the Army Marksmanship Unit, she was assigned as a clerk-typist at Ft. Bragg, N.C.

Hofmeister wins orienteering championship

"Orienteering," a competitive sport, involves cross-country running and land navigation using a topographical map and compass. Orienteering, new to the United States, has been practiced competitively in Sweden and Scandinavian countries since the early 1800's. The orienteer aims to find as quickly as possible various control points on a set course in unfamiliar terrain. The competitor competes against nature, time, and his opponents, depending upon his own knowledge, skill and courage as he moves from control marker to control marker. The orienteer must be well-conditioned, skillful and cunning, and possess a cool head to equalize competitors. Running alone does not win in orienteering.

Hofmeister, with 16 other ROTC cadets from Central Michigan University's Counterguerrilla Unit, participated in orienteering for the first time on Oct. 9. Capt. Rubin J. Riggins, CMU ROTC cadre member and recent Infantry Officers Advanced Course graduate, Fort Benning, familiarized the cadets with orienteering on Oct. 7. Two days later, the cadets ran a 2.8 mile orienteering course at the Michigan National Guard's Camp Grayling.

On hand at the championships to give advice was the world champion Swedish team. Also competing, the Swedes won the team, senior experienced and elite women's classes.

Other cadets competing from CMU were Richard M. Wetherell, Manistee sophomore; Roy F. Mengot, Mt. Pleasant freshman; and Gail L. Morrow, Cheboygan junior.

Future orienteering plans at CMU include establishment of additional courses and preparation for local and national competition.

Hunters began registering deer in the Rod and Gun Club Deer Contest early last Saturday morning. The first ones came in shortly after sun up and before the weekend was over some hard to beat entries were on the books.

Lt. Col. (ret.) Brandt Grubbs, 2940 Luckie Street led the heaviest deer contest with an entry weighing 176 pounds. SFC (ret.) Verlin James, 4217 Murrelle Street was in second place with a 135-pound entry.

Sgt. Maj. (ret.) Jesse Hobbs, 1829 Howe Ave., had the deer with the most number of antler points. His trophy deer with nine recordable points. William Mercer and Jimmie W. Powell were tied for second place with deer counting seven points.

A record number of hunters were out the first weekend of the season and at closing time Sunday the Fish and Game Unit had registered 92 deer at the post weighing station.

The Rod and Gun Club will award shotguns to members who take the heaviest deer and deer with the most antler points during the 1971-72 deer season. Deer must be taken on the reservation.

First place winners in each category will receive a Remington Model 1100 Automatic Shotgun. Second place winners will receive a Mossberg Bolt Action Slug Gun.

Members who register a deer at the club during the season but do not win one of these prizes will have a chance at another Remington Model 1100 Automatic Shot Gun.

Rules of the contest may be obtained at the Rod and Gun Club, located on First Division Road about a quarter-mile south of Hwy. 27.

Don't Destroy Property

The coming of hunting season brings additional problems to the Range Control Division but considerate hunters can help reduce at least one of these problems.

This division, responsible for posting maps showing areas closed to hunting and areas open to hunting also coordinates the positioning and removal of road blocks to keep personnel out of firing and impact areas and other areas closed because of military training.

Permanent road blocks consisting of chain link fences, earth mounds and reinforced wooden barriers permanently emplaced in the ground are used to bar traffic from impact areas and other areas that are always off limits. These barriers should never be passed.

Temporary barriers may be made of saw horses or a metal cable or wire strung between two posts. Units using an area are required to erect these barriers and should remove them when they are no longer needed. Unfortunately the using units are not always as careful about the removal as they are the erection of road blocks and some blocks remain up after the area has been cleared at the Range Control Division.

According to Ed Burroughs, deputy chief of the Range Control Division, some people who want to use a road which has been blocked by one of these temporary barriers, are not content to remove the barrier. They seem to feel it necessary to mutilate or destroy it. The barriers can be removed easily in the same manner in which they were erected.

Units have been requested to give more attention to the removal of temporary barriers after they are no longer needed but no doubt hunters will find some of these barriers still up on roads leading to cleared areas. According to Burroughs, hunters may open these barriers if the Range Clearance Map shows the area to be open.

Before crossing or opening a temporary barrier the hunter must be sure that the area is open. This must be verified by checking one of the Clearance Maps posted daily at the Rod and Gun Club, Provost Marshal Office and the Range Control Office. Be absolutely sure an area is clear before you remove and pass a barrier. When you do remove one don't destroy it.

Turkey Shoot and "Sight In"

The Turkey Shoot and "sight in" held by the Rod and Gun Club drew more than 600 shooters. An even 100 persons won turkeys at the club Saturday. Those who worked to put on these activities appreciated the attendance.

Many people who participated in the turkey shoot suggested that the club hold another shoot before the Christmas holidays. The club has decided to try another one on Dec. 11. This time hams and turkeys will be up as prizes.

931st basketball gets into full swing

Most companies within the 931st Engr. Gp. began basketball tryouts this week as the indoor sport gets into full swing.

Several of the teams have already selected players and are conducting practice sessions.

On Friday, an athletics and recreation meeting was held at the 931st Headquarters and the guideline's for the company-level league was explained.

Company-level basketball will begin officially Nov. 22 with the first tip-off, and it is expected that at least 12 teams will compete against one another, according to Capt. Robert L. Parker, group athletics and recreation officer.

Co. C, 43rd Engr. Bn., will attempt to repeat last year's performance when they swept the Engineer league and placed second in the USAIC company-level tournament.

This year the games will be played on Monday through Thursday nights at Kimbro Gym, with three games scheduled each night.

Tryouts have already been held for the 931st group team by coach Dallas Miller in preparation of the team's Nov. 29 debut against Headquarters Command.

Radio course makes skilled electricians

Communications are a vital part of any combat unit, especially when coordination and teamwork over extended distances is necessary. The Field Radio Mechanics Course, 11th Co., 1st. Bn., TSB, has the mission of producing highly skilled electricians who are able to maintain and repair field communications equipment.

Classes for the radio mechanics span nine weeks and have an average of 76 men per class. The course is divided into two phases. Phase one introduces the students to the fundamentals and basic operation of electronic and radio systems. The latter part of the course, phase two, consists of practical application of the students' knowledge. This includes both instruction in a classroom and in field situations. According to student comments, the field practice on combat vehicles is the most helpful in learning about the different communication systems.

The instructions covers all radio and communication equipment integral to an Infantry company or battalion. This wide range of equipment includes the AN-VRC-47, AN-VC-1, and the AN-VRC-53 units.

The training received by the students of the Field Radio Mechanics Course will prepare them for an interesting and essential role in the efficient operation of an Infantry unit.

VRAA makes it easier for veterans to get jobs

There has been much publicity in recent months regarding the difficulty of veterans getting jobs. Although this maybe true in some cases, the Federal government has a special procedure for hiring recently discharged veterans.

This new development called the "Veterans Readjustment Appointment Authority" (VRAA) was organized by President Nixon in 1970 to assist the Vietnam era veterans in attaining Federal employment.

Just who is eligible? Any honorably discharged veteran who has no more than 14 years of education, and has served more than 180 days of active duty.

The veteran must also apply for the program during the first year of his separation from service or following his release from hospitalization, whichever is later.

"Most of the personnel can qualify at the GS3 level with their military service, and most of the positions of the GS 3, 4, 5 level don't require tests," says Willie Varner, VRAA consultant. Some of the jobs for grades 4 and 5 require passing a written test although these are given noncompetitively.

What kind of training or education can a veteran receive? When a Veterans Readjustment Appointment is made, the veteran and the employing agency work out a training or educational program which may include on-the-job training. The programs are set up for a particular veteran and they depend on the job involved, training or educational facilities available in the vicinity, and the veteran's own interests and abilities.

"Currently there are three veterans working here at Fort Benning under the VRAA program, added Varner, "but I think once the word gets out there will be many more."

How to apply? If you are a recent veteran and you meet the requirements contact Mr. Willie Varner at 545-1694 for applications and information about a job for you.

Turn a pusher in by telephone

A series of telephone acronyms has been formed in order to help provide information and guidance to people in the Fort Benning community who are curious about drugs or who actually have a drug problem.

The most recent addition to the list of phone numbers here is 545-PUSH, which will be available on a 24-hour basis as a part of Project TIPS (Turn In Pushers). This number will enable callers to report information about known or suspected illegal drug suppliers in and around the Fort Benning area.

People calling 545-PUSH are given the opportunity to remain anonymous. The caller will be requested to provide as much information as possible, including a description of the person, his mode of transportation and his area of operation.

In a closely contested battle between leading Service Rifle shooters during the Fort Benning Monthly Open High Power Rifle Tournament, Nov. 6 and 7, the U. S. Army "Blue" team pulled a stunning upset over a strong Quantico Marine team but dropped the individual Grand Aggregate by a narrow 6X margin after tying the score of 785.

Shooting close scores all the way, Sgt. James M. Reiber of the U. S. Army Marksmanship Training Unit (USAMTU), led the Army charge as he slammed a 198-4X into his target for a one point victory over companion shooter SFC Charles Davis in the initial match, a 200 yard slow fire event.

The "Big Bore" Marine shooters surged back upon finding the range and took the second match, a 200 yard rapid fire contest, thus tying the tourney with one match each for the Army and Marine shooters. MSgt. Eric England led the Marines and placed all 20 of his shots in the ten ring for a 200-14X. His team mate Sgt. Danny Senchez took runner-up with an equal score but six less in the X or center of the bullseye.

In the second rapid fire contest, the 300 yard match, the Marines again forged ahead when MSgt. Russell Martin from Quantico beat out Army champion shooter. SFC Charles Davis, by one point with his 199-6X. This victory gave the Quantico shooters a lead of two to one in the four match individual contest and the rapid fire sub-aggregate with Martin's composite score of 398. SFC William R. Lee of the U.S. AMTU carried the Army's banner into the runner-up spot with his 395-20X. Davis was third with 395-14X.

Smarting from their rapid fire defeat, the Army shooters zeroed in and brushed the Marines aside in the long range 600 yard slow fire match when SFC William R. Lee allowed only three shots to stray from the ten ring for a 197-7X. This was two points better than the Marines could muster when Sgt. John Byrd gained the rujner-up with his 195-5X.

This victory opened to the Army competitors their opportunity of tying the Marines in the matches at two each and gave the slow fire sub-aggregate to the Army. Davis from the Army MTU gained the fire with his composite championship in the slow fire with his composite score of 390-11 while Lee only one point back, grabbed the runner-up spot.

Then in a breathtaking race of the champions and a modern day duel between the Army and Marine superb shooters, the Grand Aggregate Championship fell to Martin when he compiled six more X in his aggregate scoring with 785-31X. Davis with an identical 785, had only 25X or that number of shots in the very center of the bullseye or ten ring. The X marks the spot on the spot on the target which used for a championship decision in the case of a tie score and the occasion was at hand for its importance.

Suring back on the second day of the matches, the Army shooters swept the boards clean in gaining an impressive victory in the four-man National Match Course. Outclassing their Marine opponents, the Army shooters marked up an easy victory with their 1893-38X, 17 points ahead of the best Marine efforts.

Leading the Army charge in their quest for the championship, SFC William R. Lee slammed the high series of the contest into his target with 481-8X, to propel his three team mates into the victory slot. The team coached by MSgt. Roy Combs was fielded by the USAMTU. Lee's team mates included MSgt. James L. McQuien the Army Service Rifle Champion, Reiber and Davis.

The U. S. Marines "Gold" team claimed the runner-up spot with 1875-40X while the third place was grabbed by another Army team, the U. S. Army "Gray" who posted 1868 of the possible 2,000 points. The team was coached by MSgt. Robert Lancaster and fielded by the USAMTU.

The U. S. Army High Power rifle shooters will compete in the Marines Corps sponsored three-day High Desert Matches at Twenty-Nine Palms, California, commencing Nov. 19, it was disclosed by Col. Robert M. Piper, commanding officer of the Army Marksmanship Unit which trains the Army competitors.

The two-day week-end tournament, fired during the final day under adverse wind conditions, was sponsored by the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club. Approximately 40 competitors entered the open atches which was predominately service shooters with only a small hand of civilian competitors.

For training

Indianapolis Scouts visit Rangers

Explorer Scouts posts 467 and 522 from Indianapolis, Ind. were recently involved with the Patrolling Committee, Ranger Dept., in exercises at which the scouts learned the fundamentals of rapelling, and then put their newly acquired skills to work.

The Patrolling Committee supplied 21 instructors to give the expert assistance needed for this rugged training, which is a fundamental course for all Ranger, OCS and NCOC candidates.

Capt. Dennis Harrison, Patrolling Committee, Ranger Dept. was the project officer.

The scouts arrived at 1:30 p.m. and were put into the training exercises immediately by watching a demonstration of helicopter rapelling by the Ranger Dept. The rapelling was done from a UHIH, which the students had a chance to look over after it had landed. All of the helicopter equipment was explained to the scouts and they left this area with a solid bases of knowledge concerning helicopter rapelling.

After this, the boys were split up into two separate groups and were lectured on the basic fundamentals of rapelling. They learned the commands, safety precautions and were given a thorough explanation of all the equipment used in rapelling. They were shown how to use the rapelling seat which they would soon put to use on the 8 foot tower.

After experiencing the eight-foot tower, which installed a sense of confidence in the boys, they were ready for the next phase, the 20-foot tower.

On this tower, the boys first went down the cliff side, using the wall to their advantage. After this was completed, the boys went down the simulated helicopter side, which gives them a pretty good idea of what rapelling from a helicopter would be like.

If, in the opinion of the Ranger instructors, a boy has achieved enough ability, he can next attempt the highest tower, a 55-foot mockup of the exit end of a Chinook. This tower demands the utmost attention from the boys and provides a fitting test for their newly acquired skills. It is here that the boys can demonstrate how well they have learned thier lessons.

After the rapelling portion of the training has ended, the boys are given a chance to undergo some of the other field training which — the Rangers are taught. The main phase of this is showing the boys a three-rope bridge which they are given a chance to walk and they then are instructed on the fundamentals of building such a bridge for use over water, gorges or other obstructions.

A brief orientation on all Patrolling Committee activities is also presented on all Patrolling Committee activities is also presented to the scouts. This includes a demonstration of smoke grenades, the difference in live and dead ammo, and other simulators.

D. F. Peck, from Explorer post 522, and Virgil Lawson, of Explorer post 467, noted that these boys have spent much of their time in the Explorer Scouts experiencing various aspects of the military life.

Lawson explained that some of the boys have attended some of basic training, taken airborne training and have also been instructed by other branches of the military services.

Peck, of post 522, said that some of his boys returned this summer from Fort Carson, Colorado, where they undertook a two week packhorse trip into the Rocky Mountains. Peck said that his post trys to visit two or three military installations each year, and in this way give the boys an overall look at military life.

Both of these Explorer Scout units are sponsored by the Hq. and Hq., 38th Infantry Artillery, United States Army National Guard, Indianapolis, Indiana. SSgt. Gilbert. Miller, who escorted the troops, is the liaison officer for scouting activities and is also the unit technician.

MOVING OUT OF TOWN?
We'll get you advance information on homes in your new community.
SELLING YOUR HOME?
Success or failure depends on how you market your property. We will provide total exposure. We are the only company in Columbus and Phenix City affiliated with RECOA, Inc., a professional organization, helping to relocate families nationally. Statistics show that over 35% of the families who move each year will relocate outside their original area. We are in contact with newcomers before they arrive in Columbus. Be sure they see your home. If your home is a good listing, we will provide it immediate exposure to our already waiting list of qualified buyers.

THANKSGIVING DAY MESSAGE

Thanksgiving is a unique and colorful holiday which gives us the opportunity to return thanks for the bounty we enjoy in this country.

Let us not forget, however, that Thanksgiving is more than a day; it is a way of life, a temper of being.

As we pause to express gratitude in a special way during this season, let us remember our American servicemen around the world, especially those who are prisoners of war. It is because of their courage and sacrifice that we can celebrate this day of Thanksgiving.

I extend best wishes to each of you and your families for a safe and enjoyable holiday.

Mosquito-resistant

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

by Bill King

Bread for poultry stuffing should be a few days old so that it will more readily absorb the meat juices and flavors from other stuffing ingredients.

Herbs are said to heal many ailments, but according to Swinburne, "There grows no herb of help to heal a coward heart!"

A tasty topping for creamed cauliflower or broccoli can be made from breadcrumbs sauteed in seasoned butter and mixed with grated cheddar.

To peel a grapefruit easily for use in salads or fruit cups, first plunge it into boiling water for about five minutes.

Panic Scene: it's just before company is due and you find your best dinner candles have drips! Pare them off neatly with a vegetable peeler.

GIs get scheduled pay increase

The President's wage and price freeze ended Saturday, Nov. 13 and the Cost of Living Council has exempted the military from 'Phase 2' guidelines.

Servicemen will now get their scheduled 15 per cent average pay raise, despite the general 5.5 per cent guide for most of the economy.

According to an article in the Columbus Ledger, the military pay raise became effective Nov. 14, and the military would have their pay figured from that date.

The bill substantially improves service attraction and will concurrently have an important impact on retention of expensively-trained, highly-skilled personnel.

First termers will find their basic pay increasing an average of 60 per cent. Basic pay for E-1 will increase 100 per cent from $134 per month to $268.

Some 50,000 junior officers and 1.4 million enlisted men on active duty will be affected by the basic pay raise.

In addiion to basic pay raises, the bill, H. R. 6531, provides an appropriate Dependents Assistance increase for some 270,000 junior enlisted personnel in pay grade E-4 and below, and provides single and married rates in much the same manner as the increases in Basic Allowance for Quarters provided for the remainder of the force.

Longevity pay will also begin Nov. 14 for those scheduled to have started receiving longevity pay during the freeze. There are no retroactive benefits of longevity pay or the pay raise to any perind covered by the Wage-price Freeze.

Command change slated

Col. Edwin L. Kennedy, until today Modern Volunteer Army project chief, will assume command of the 197th Infantry Brigade in ceremonies at 10 a.m. tomorrow. The change of command ceremony will be held at Munson Heliport in the Kelley Hill area.

Outgoing brigade commander, Col. Willard Latham, has been named to succeed Col. Jim Kiersey as chief of staff of the Infantry Center. Col. Kiersey is retiring in January.

Lt. Gen. Albert O. Connor, commanding general of the Third Army, will preside at the Saturday ceremony. USAIC commander, Maj. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott, and Brig. Gen. Paul F. Gorman, assistant commandant United States Army Infantry School, also will be present.

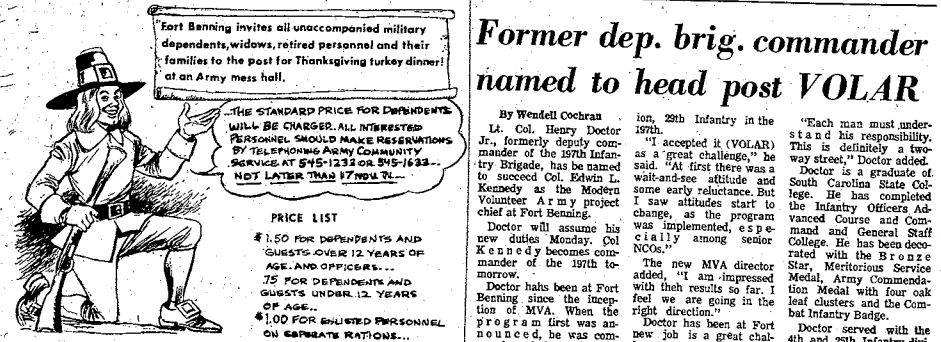
He attended the British Staff College in England.



Col. Latham took over the 197th Infantry Brigade in February of 1970. He has guided the brigade during the implementation of of VOLAR.

Col. Kennedy is a native of Waynesboro, Miss. He attended Marion Military Institute prior to entering West Point.

He is married and is the father of three children.

Former dep. brig. commander named to head post VOLAR

By Wendell Cochran

Lt. Col. Henry Doctor Jr., formerly deputy commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade, has be named to succeed Col. Edwin L. Kennedy as the Modern Volunteer Army project chief at Fort Benning.

Doctor will assume his new duties Monday. Col Kennedy becomes commander of the 197th tomorrow.

Doctor hahs been at Fort Benning since the inception of MVA. When the program first was announced, he was commander of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry in the 197th.

"I accepted it (VOLAR) as a great challenge," he said. "At first there was a wait-and-see attitude and some early reluctance. But I saw attitudes start to change, as the program was implemented, especially among senior NCOs."

The new MVA director added, "I am impressed with theh results so far. I feel we are going in the right direction."

Doctor has been at Fort new job is a great challenge. We must make sure that we continue to enforce the actions taken so far."

One key, the MVA director said, is giving each soldier a thorough orientation on his duties and responsibilities.

"Each man must understand his responsibility. This is definitely a two-way street," Doctor added.

Doctor is a graduate of South Carolina State College. He has completed the Infantry Officers Advanced Course and Command and General Staff College. He has been decorated with the Bronze Star, Meritorious Service Medal, Army Commendation Medal with four oak leaf clusters and the Combat Infantry Badge.

Byline Bayonet

One year ago today the first edition of the Benning Plan for a Modern Volunteer Army was published. During the ensuing 12 months, Fort Benning has taken tremendous strides to achieve the three objectives of MVA: enhanced professionalism, increased service attractiveness and improved public esteem.

Col. Edwin L. Kennedy, who served as MVA project chief for most of the program's first year, departs tomorrow to take command of the 197th Infantry Brigade. The success of the program to date is due largely to his untiring efforts and his unering belief that VOLAR concepts would produce a better Army.

There are, however, other important factors that played roles in VOLAR's athievements. First, of course, was the command emphasis placed on the Modern Volunteer Army by Maj. Orwin C. Talbott. Without this emphasis, it is questionable if VOLAR would have ever gotten off the ground here.

Added to this command influence there was an all-important willingness to try the program on the part of everyone, including those who disagreed with some of the concepts.

"VOLAR worked at Fort Benning," Col. Kennedy has said, "largely because it was a common sense program."

And that is true. But it also worked because everyone, from the commanding general to the private who got removed from KP, worked hard to make Fort Benning the best post in the Army.

It will not be possible, though, to rest on past laurels. If the second year of the Modern Volunteer Army program at Fort Benning is to come close to equalling the success of the first, the the same amount of effort will be requried at all levels. — W.C.

Byline questions

Q—I have some Series E Savings Bonds which have reached maiurtty. Since they have matured, shouldn't I cash them?

A—No. Your bonds are still drawing interest because all Series E Savings Bonds have an automatic 10 year extension privilege. Bonds purchased from May 1941-April 1952 have had three ten year extensions. Bonds purchased in early 1941 are now worth two and one-half times their original purchase price. In fact, no Series E bonds have stopped drawing interest.

Q—I have not received a Bond in the past two months. I don't know if they were mailed or if they were lost en route. What can I do?

A—Write to the Army Finance Center, ATTN: Allotment Section, Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind., 46216. The Finance Center will then furnish you the necessary forms to complete so that your Bonds can be traced, and if lost, replaced, with the original date.

Col. E. L. Kennedy reviews VOLAR impact after nearly a year of trial

By Wendell Cochran

"Without a question, VOLAR is working. It works better in some areas and in some respects than it does in others, obviously. But there is very little doubt in my mind but what VOLAR's had very considerable impact on life at Fort Benning, both for military and civilians."

That in a nutshell — is Col. Edwin L. Kennedy's assessment of the first year of the Modern Volunteer Army test at Fort Benning. Col. Kennedy leaves his post as MVA project chief tomorrow to take command of the 197th Infantry Brigade.

(On the occasion of his departure, Col. Kennedy granted a lengthy interview which is printed in full P. 18-19 in the Bayonet.)

Col. Kennedy said he can see considerable progress being made toward the three MVA objectives of enhanced professionalism, increased service attractiveness and improved public esteem.

"I think, without question, we've made the kind of progress that you can see. I've always been told that Fort Benning was perhaps the best post in the Army. I've never doubted it," Col. Kennedy said. "I'm sure that Benning has been a good post always, but I really believe now that you would be hard pressed to go anywhere in this Army, CONUS or otherwise, and find a better place to live and work than Fort Benning, Ga. . . . There is no doubt in my mind that we have made Benning a better place for the soldier, the officer and for the civilian alike to work . . ."

Col. Kennedy said VOLAR is "reasonably close to being a way of life at Fort Benning." He added, ". . . these things we did back in January were big news to a soldier at Fort Benning, but for a soldier who comes to Fort Benning after these changes have been made, doesn't realize that there was ever any other way. That is his way of life."

He said the program needs continued command emphasis so that the gains will not be lost. "I think we have a good program because Gen. Talbott wanted it to be a good program and he was willing to give the program the priority it took to make it work. I think the future of VOLAR, not just at Benning, but in the whole Army is pretty much dependent on the priority that the program receives at each post."

Hard work to get out of work

By William J. White

Have you ever noticed how much work it is not to work? Next time you hear someone complaining about how much work he has to do, take a closer look at whatever it is he's doing. Chances are he's spending more time and effort trying to get out of doing work than doing his job.

When you try to get others to do work that you should be doing, you're setting yourself up for a tough row to hoe. No one wants to do your work. They've got enough to do.

When people talk about cooperation, too often they think of the other guy cooperating. If you want to make it easier on yourself, think of yourself as the prime mover when it comes to cooperation. With this attitude, you will find that cooperation is contagious. Your fellow workers will soon tire of seeing you always come out on top of the heap and they'll start pulling their own weight.

Are you overworked? Give it a try: Dig in and accomplish the task instead of passing the buck. When the work is done you'll find you'll have a lot more time left over than you expended trying to get George to do it.

The judge says

Lawyer analyzes through 'case method'

USAIC LEGAL ASSISTANCE OFFICE—In court you may have heard your lawyer say that such and such a decision—Jones vs. Smith governed the case at hand. How did he find that "controlling precedent"?

Law school trains your lawyer to use the "case" method to find and analyze legal problems. The law student reads and analyzes thousands of selected cases to find out how to apply the law in particular cases.

The case method allows him to sort out people's predicaments (and to see again and again that the outcome of each case rests upon its own set of facts. This is why a lawyer has to study facts and law in your case to give you an answer. He has to get the particular facts of your case and then find out exactly how the law — as reflected in the cases — applies to them.

When you seek advice, your lawyer begins at once to sort out facts and frame the legal problem. Sometimes he can answer at once; often he has to go to the books and check out your problem.

This process may take only a few minutes. But sometimes it takes hours, days and even months. Lawyers must also double check on whether some court of appeal has overruled a decision he might be using in your case.

After all this, your lawyer can stand before the court and say "Your Honor, we believe that our case is controlled by the case of Brown vs Johnson." He then usually outlines the circumstances in the Brown case, and compares them with the facts in your case. If they fit, the judge usually makes a judgment in your favor.

In borderline cases, of course, adversary lawyers, too, may quote from other cases which they feel support their opposing contentions.

Finally, in such cases, the judge weighs the contentions of both sides and then "instructs" the jurors what law to apply in the case before them. So far as the jury is concerned, the judge's instructions are the last word. Their job is to measure the evidence given in court against the law that the judge gives them and return a verdict accordingly.

'I felt I owed them something'–Carole Newcombe

By Carolyn Ingalls
Fem-Line Staff Writer

Every Army—wife is a busy person, but how much more rewarding it is when much of that "busyness" is the result of worthwhile volunteer work. This is obviously the philosophy of Carole Newcombe, the Fort Benning Red Cross Volunteer chairman. Helping out is practically a way of life for her.

Carole first became interested in Red Cross work in 1965 while living in Wurtzburg, Germany. She had just started her on-the-job training when she received word of a death in her family at home. The Red Cross watched over her family in Germany while she was in the United States. A few months later, her husband had to return home on emergency leave and again the Red Cross came through for Carole. After these experiences, Carole said, "I felt I owed them something."

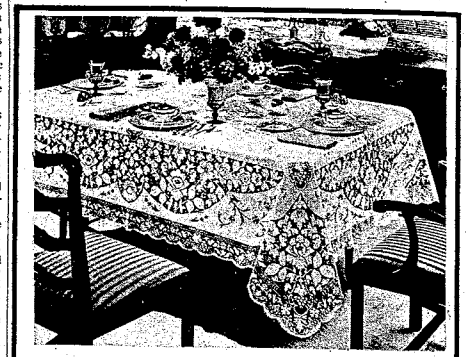
CAROLE NEWCOMBE

The first Red Cross job Carole undertook was in recreation. Since then she has worked in the blood program, the urology clinic, the orthopedic clinic, on coffee call, and the newborn nursery. In 1968, she became chairman of all Martin Army Hospital clinics and retained this position until 1970 when she was appointed Fort Benning chairman. This Carole feels, "is an easy job with the group chairmen I have, who all do their own jobs."

The primary purpose of the American Red Cross is to help military people in emergency situations. In the hospitals, the objects is to assist and entertain the bed patients. The clinic help, which the volunteers provide, Carole calls the "extra flourishes."

The fall training class consists of approximately 30 ladies, which is unusually low. Qualified volunteers are always needed but the VOLAR program has taken some of the load from this chapter's shoulders.

Carole explains that she has seen many women who are all fired up to volunteer, turn around and complain about the classes and work when they find out they are not in a glamorous service but are there to really work. She advises the prospective worker that she must put in what she expects to get out of it.



Putting in 40 hours a month as post chairman, plus extra hours in the Surgical Clinic when she's needed, takes a lot of Carole's time. However, she manages to coordinate her job so that it does not interfere with family time. "My family comes first It's not often that I'm not home when they (her four children,ages 9-16) get home from school."

Carole's husband, Maj. Nelson Newcombe, who is with the Director of Instruction, sometimes feels that she is trying to do too much, but has no complaints — except when he has to answer the constantly ringing phone.

There is a very real sense of reward for Carole. "Every place I've worked was where they really needed it. You don't get a lot of "thank yous" — they (the hospital personnel) are, too busy." But many times the patients show their gratitude and this gives a sure feeling of accomplishment.

In spite of the time-consuming work Carole does for the Red Cross, she says, "We're mainly a scouting family." Both she and Nelson are scout leaders and all four children are scouts. Carole just recently took over as the leader of Cadet Troup 169, her daughter's troup. She accepted the job because they were having difficulty finding a leader and because "my daughter thinks too much of scouting to lose it."

In her "spare" time Carole enjoys needle work and is presently embroidering eagles on the neckershiefs of her son's scout troop. To relax, Carole bowls with two different leagues a week. To fill in extra time she is secretary for both leagues.

Kiddie carnival raises some $1,000 for YAC

On Nov. 6 the Fort Benning Youth Activities Council held a Kiddie Carnival on the YAC grounds.

The Carnival served two purposes: it raised funds for the various Fort Benning Youth Activities, and introduced Fort Benning personnel and their dependents to what Youth Activities offered on post.

Under the direction of Ben Reniere, director of Youth Activities, the various teams and clubs set up booths, games of skill and food concessions. Represented were Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts, Sports Section, Swim Team, Junior NRA Team, The Teen Club and the Judo Team.

The biggest attractions were the cake sale sponsored by the Girl Scouts, the various sporting events (Football Toss, Basketball (Throw and Archery) and the Swim Teams' Duck and Fish Pond. More than $1,000 was raised for Youth Activties.

Reniere would like to thank all of the participants who made the carnival possible and the Fort Benning personnel who came to the carnival and made it a success.

TSB

Have you learned your "Party P's and You's?". The ladies of TOAC 7-71 did at their munthly class luncheon held at the Main Officers' Open Mess Supper Club on Nov. 9.

"Party P's and You's" was the theme of the program presented by Mrs. Joan Taber, home economist for the Gas-Light Company of Columbus. Mrs. Taber delighted the group with her presentation of how to prepare an appealing relish tray, using fresh vegetables that are especially plentiful in the fall season.

The autumn theme was carried out in the room decorations, which included cornstalks, scarecrows, pumpkins and gourds, all in varying colors of gold, orange, brown and green. The centerpiece on the head table was a wicker horn-of-plenty filled with artificial fruit.

Hostesses for the luncheon were the ladies of the 4th platoon, headed by Mrs. Thomas R. Wiles. Committee chairmen were Mrs. Steven J. Randelman, club committee; Mrs. Jack W. Wood, decorations; Mrs. Michael P. Peters; Mrs. Jerome E. Rudat, nametags; Mrs. James E. Schmidt, sherry table; Mrs. Timothy T. Phalen, invitations; and Mrs. Lester V. Whiddon Jr., hostess committee.

The honored guest was Mrs. Gordon Marlor, wife of Maj. Gordon Marlor. Special guests were Mrs. Waldron, guest of Mrs. David S. Jones, and Mrs. Chenault, mother of Mrs. Jerry D Forester.

MEDDAC

The MEDDAC Wives's Book Club did not think that "The Winter of Our Discontent" was one of John Steinbeck's most enjoyable works. The club met with Mrs. Perry Savage at her home on Craig Drive Nov. 3, to discuss their impressions of this book.

A review written at the book's publishing stated that it exposed a basic problem of the time. There were several opinions as to what problem the critic had in mind and some thought that somewhere in the ten years following the book's publication the "basic problem" had changed.

The women were particularly interested in the characters of Ethan Allen Hawley, his wife Mary, and Margie Young - Eunt They found the small New England town where the story took place different from any place that they were familir with; and therefore, were unable to determine just how believable the people in the book were.

The book to be read and discussed at the December meeting of the Book Club is "Death at An Early Age" by Jonatha" Kozol. This is the personal story of a young teacher in an American ghetto school.

Girl Scout news

Fort Benning Girl Scouts played an active part in the Youth Activities Center (YAC) carnival held Nov. 6 at the YAC Center. The girls ran the popcorn, sno-cone and inforation boothes and held a cake sale with an hourly cake auction. The auctioneer was Spc Bobby Holcombe, Girl Scout co-ordinator. Mrs. Barbara Fields was Girl Scout carnival chairman.

The Post Exchange Fabric and Kiddie Shop is now stocking all necessary Girl Scout equipment. This includes uniforms, handbooks and craft equipment. Because these items are sold on a franchise agreement with the National Office of the Girl Scouts of America all prices are the same as those in civilian stores.

A Uniform Exchange, which provides information on obtaining second-hand uniforms in good condition, is being conducted by Mrs. Donald Hanson, 505 Running Ave., 545-4628.

A word of thanks to the young men of Boy Scout Troop No. 237 under the leadership of Col. (ret.) Lemeul Thomas. Ken Cantiz, Jeff Newcomb, Rod Green, Bob Benning, Len Cady, and Chris Hall, all from Troop No. 237, volunteered many hours of their time to painting and cleaning the Wilson School Area Girl Scout Hut Bldg. 2101. Their work was well done and is deeply appreciated.

Girl Scouts and Brownies in the Custer Terrace area are enjoying a newly painted Scout Hut. Capt. and Mrs. Roger Renn are responsible for the new look in what had been a rather run-down meeting place. The Renns painted and provided new curtains for the Hut which is used by five troops. Thank you, Capt. and Mrs. Renn.

Mrs. Donna Young, project chairman, has announced the annual Christmas Project for the Fort Benning Girl Scouts. This year, as in the past, Brownies will make tray favors; Juniors will make stockings; and Cadettes and Seniors will provide "stocking stuffers" which will be donated to The American Red Cross for the Christmas trays of patients at Martin Army Hospital. Work on this project will begin this week.

Senior Troop No. 57 has established a new project involving historic Westville near Lumpkin. For the past four Sundays members of the troop have been traveling to the village to act as hostesses at the various homes there. The girls have been complimented by Mrs. Sam Singer of the Westville Historic Commission for their enthusiasm and graciousness in bridging the gap between the local military and civilian communities.

VOLAR marks 1st year on post

By Wendell Cochran

One year ago today, the first edition of the Benning Plan for a Modern Volunteer Army was published.

The document was printed scarcely a month after the Army Chief of Staff, Gen. W. C. Westmoreland, speaking to the annual convention of the Association of the United States Army (AUSA) had pledged an all-out effort to achieve a volunteer force by mid-1973.

Fort Benning, Ft. Ord, Calif., and Ft. Carson, Colo. were earmarked as the three VOLAR tests' posts. Each received $5 million to implement its projects. Later Ft. Bragg, N. C. and some European installations were added to the six-month test.

A month of frenetic action produced the first Benning Plan. The first step taken by the planners was a series of meetings around post to solicit suggested actions. These suggestions numbered in the hundreds and they came from colonels, lieutenants, sergeants, privates and dependents.

Then a control group, under the direction of Col. William Steele, director of the Infantry School's Leadership Department, began to meld the suggestions into a cohesive plan.

When the smoke cleared, more than 140 actions remained in the Benning Plan for a Modern Volunteer Army. Officially, the MVA test was to begin Jan. 1, but many actions were implemented at Fort Benning earlier.

Some of these included the elimination of reveille, pass restrictions and of sign-out and sign-in requirements for overnight passes.

Soldiers returning to duty after the Christmas holidays found many other VOLAR changes.

One of the most important of these was the hiring of civilians to perform kitchen police (KP). The last military person on KP at Fort Benning left the kitchen on Jan. 5. Fort Benning remains the only post in the Army that has only civilians on KP.

Later in January, the five-day work week was officially established. Other January actions included half-day off on pay day; publication of regulations permitting beer in the dayroom and barracks at Fort Benning; and reiteration of saluting requirements, eliminating the need to salute persons in civilian vehicles.

A February highlight was implementation of bus service between downtown and Main Post. This service is provided on a contract basis at no cost to the soldier.

In March, the 197th Infantry Brigade began to implement its adventure-training concept that permits small unit leaders to be responsible for the training of their units. March also saw the beginning of one-stop in-processing at Fort Benning.

One of the most important MVA action at Fort Benning got under way in early April, when the Department of Army approved funds for construction of barracks partitions. The 43rd Engr. Bn., 93ist Engr. Gp. worked double shifts to install the partitions. Post commander, Maj. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott, announced in late April, "although the final evaluation of the fiscal year 1971 test has not been completed, it is quite clear that most of the actions implemented are producing fine results. Therefore, it is my intention during fiscal year 1972 to continue and expand useful VOLAR activities."

In May, Army Community Services opened a new Welcome Center. May also brought a change in Army haircut policies.

June was the last month in the initial VOLAR test period. Many soldiers were called on to complete questionnaires outlining their opinions of the program.

A Mod Shop featuring the latest clothing styles was opened in July, as part of the Post Exchange. The 197th Infantry Brigade began to yield impressive results with its Unit of Choice recruiting option.

August saw completion of the first phase of the barracks partitioning project. Coffee houses also were opened in the Sightseeing Road Service Club and the annex of the Kelly Hill Chapel.

Renovation of the marina at the USAIC Recreation Center in Destin, Fla., was completed in September.

Stabilization was a key word in October. First term personnel re-enlisting for their present duty assignments were guaranteed a one-year stay at Fort Benning. A second barracks partition construction project began late in October.

The anniversary of VOLAR is marked this week by a change in directors of the control group. Col. Edwin L. Kennedy, who became MVA project chief last December, is taking command of the 197th Infantry Brigade. Lt. Col. Henry Doctor Jr. is replacing Col. Kennedy.

These are by no means all the actions taken at Fort Benning under MVA. For example, Martin Army Hospital implemented a wide-ranging "We Care" project to improve its health services. The Infantry School developed a new training philosophy emphasizing individual instruction and pioneered instruction in "Army Leadership in the '70s."

VOLAR has also brought Fort Benning Army-wide and nationwide attention. Such news media as The Washington Post, U. S. News and World Report, CBS News, WSB-TV Atlanta and The New York Times visited Fort Benning to report on VOLAR.

Many of the advertisements used in the Army's campaign "Today's Army Wants to Join You" were filmed at Fort Benning.

Groups from nearly all Army posts have visited Fort Benniog to view VOLAR at work. Former Secretary of the Army, Stanley R. Resor, and CONARC Commanding General, Gen. Ralph E. Haines, headed the list of distinguished visitors.

Col. Kennedy summed it up in a recent interview, "I think at Fort Benning it (VOLAR) is reasonably close to being a way of life at Fort Benning. . .It has been a very worthwhile year."

National Ski Patrol

TSB soldier member of ski club

"Pray for Snow" is a familiar greeting in the mountains of Vermont where ski conditions are as important to skiers as stock reports are to brokers. Although the weather is getting colder in Georgia, snow still seems unlikely for a while.

One man in particular has an interest in snow and slopes. PFC Andrew C. Wysmuller, HHC, The School Brigade (TSB), an instructor and member of the National Ski Patrol at one of America's most prominate ski resort areas, Stowe, Vt., is weathering out a National Guard tour in sunny Georgia.

Veteran skiers are well aware of the qualifications and distinction of being in the Natonal Ski Patrol. The standards are high and each man must be capable of saving a life.

"When I took the Ski Patrol test," recalled Wysmuller, "it was 32 degrees below zero and there was a chill factor of 60 degrees below zero. The first day session had us side stepping up the mountain, and, two hours later, we came back down the slope through the giant slalom course (a fast moving skier's obstacle course that tests ability and control). The next day and the remaining exam consisted of reaching remote areas on skis and the handling and control of an unmanned and manned toboggan (a rescue sled used to transport injured skiers).

A ski slope provides a complete 'feast' of accident. "We've had skiers with injuries of mild frost bite to serious compound fractures," said Wysmuller, who has been on the National Ski Patrol since 1967.

"One of the roughest rescue missions I had to perform involved a 250 pound man who had wound up in the woods with a sprained ankle. Just to think about skiing a toboggan down a steep mountain slope with 250 pounds pushing from behind still makes me appreciate the Stillman Diet Plan."

"The only injury I've received had to happen during the one occasion I was skiing in Switzerland. Naturally, this was the time I got a broken leg."

At Lyndon State College, where he graduated in '71 with a degree in English, Wysmuller founded the school chapter of the National Ski Patrol and competed on the school ski team.

Wysmuller's skiing began on Burke Mountain, Vt., where he worked his way up to expert status. Fine skiing, like any sport, requires much time and practice. There are those, however, who try a slope beyond their ability. "The most hazardous aspect to skiing is a beginner on an advanced slope," said Wysmuller. By skiing out of control, this person will not only endager himself but may also force others off the trails. The 'mission' of the National Ski Patrol is to prevent accidents before they happen.

SKIER'S LAMENT
Wysmuller displays broken leg received in messhall fall. It should heal in time for Vermont ski season.

Troopin' the Line

A formal awards ceremony honoring eight servicemen was held at 3:30 p.m. Oct. 28 on York Field.

Capt. Richard L. Arnold, currently assigned to brigade and battalion operations department, USAISC, received the Silver Star. While serving as senior advisor to the 2nd Bn. 47th regiment, 22nd Infantry Division, in the Republic of Vietnam, Arnold was riding in the lead helicopter during an attack. When his helicopter received a direct hit, Arnold aided wounded crew members, arranged for their medical evacuation, and then rejoined the attacking force.

Capt. Joseph E. Krohn also received the Silver Star. While serving in the Americal Division as a platoon leader, Krohn's company came under attack by a large North Vietnamese Army force. Capt. Krohn repeatedly exposed himself to enemy fire in preparing for an assault on enemy positions. He also destroyed several enemy bunkers with grenades while risking his personal safety. Krohn is now attending the Infantry Officer's Advanced Class.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Charles E. Fix was awarded the Legion of Merit for his performance as brigade chaplain, 18th Engineering Brigade, and as staff chaplain, U. S. Army Engineer Command, the Republic of Vietnam. Chaplain Fix led the engineers in the rebuilding of the Tan Binh orphanage, and is establishing drug councils for the engineering command. He is currently assigned to the Chaplain's Division at Fort Benning.

Bartlett is now assigned to the 609th Bn. Trans. Corps.

SFC Dewey C. Johnson was awarded the Soldier's Medal for his help in disrupting a burglary attempt at a local service station. Sp4 Ted M. Morgan, now assigned to the 609th Bn. Trans. Corps, also received the Soldier's Medal. While on a helicopter mission in Vietnam, several chemical canisters burst into flame. Morgan began jettisoning the canisters from the aircraft despite the sever heat and smoke.

The Soldiers Medal was presented to Sp4 Johnny C. Hyght now serving with the 609th Bn. Trans. Corps. Training offered minorities

Young minority persons who aspire to managerial careers in public and private not-for-profit organizations are invited to apply for admission to a Consortium for Graduate Study in Management program, a five-university effort designed to hasten the entry of minorities into managerial positions.

Each person who qualifies for admission to the program will receive a fellowship to pursue Master of Business Administration studies at one of the five Consortium universities: Indiana University, Bloomington, Ind.; University of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.; University of Southern California in Los Angeles; Washington University, St. Louis, Mo.; and the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.

The fellowship provides free full tuition at the university which the student attends, plus a stipend of $2,000 for the first year and $1,000 for the second year, providing the student maintains the standards set forth by the graduate school of business in which he is enrolled.

Applications will be received from college seniors and those holding bachelor's degrees from accredited colleges and universities. Those who have already embarked on other careers are also encouraged to apply. Spokesmen for the Consortium emphasized that previous work or study in business or economics or other management fields is not a requirement for admission.

On August 2nd as I, Ruby Hudson, began to make preparations for my last day at the Center, Amos walked up to me and said, Miss Hudson, I certainly have enjoyed this summer playing games and making things. I have never tasted spaghetti and beans as good as Mrs. Turner made. I surely miss all this.

We told him not to forget this winter when Tutorial Classes, Arts & Crafts, Music hour, indoor and outdoor games begin.

The Center begins to be a shelter from the rain and cold as well as a comfortable place for playing games.

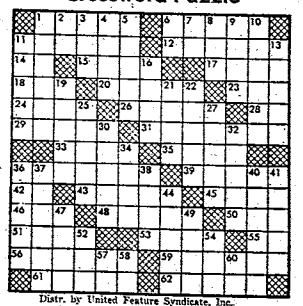
The best "stereo value" in town: $425.00

Individually, each of the components in our four hundred twenty-five dollar system has created a new standard of sound-per-dollar stereo value. Together, these components will provide you with more quality sound and reliability than you could have bought a year ago for over five hundred dollars.

The smaller Advent loudspeakers are the only speakers costing less than the now-famous original Advent loudspeakers which can produce the entire musical range. Most inexpensive speakers cannot produce the lowest octaves of music: the lowest strings of a double bass or electric bass guitar, the lowest pipes of a pipe organ. The Smaller Advent can.

The Nikko 6010 AM./FM stereo receiver has enough power to satisfy both you and the Advents. It produces 25 watts RMS per channel, across the entire musical range, at less than 0.5% total distortion (RMS is the most demanding and least flashy of the various powerrating systems.) The tuner sections will separate weaker stations on a crowded dial from their brawnier neighboring stations and receive them with an amazing fullness and clarity.

To match the quality and reliability that the Nikko 6010 and the Advent represent, we recommend the Garrard Automatic Turntable with a Stanton Broadcast Series cartridge. The Garrard has a heavy platter, a convenient cueing control and comes with a dustcover and base.



Come to the Sound Center this week. You'll be surprised how much quality sound your four hundred twenty-five dollars can buy.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is an exclusive BAYONET interview with Col. Edwin L. Kennedy. Col. Kennedy spent almost a year as MVA project chief at Fort Benning. He will assume command of the 197th Infantry Brigade tomorrow. He was interviewed recently by the BAYONET'S Wendell Cochran.)

BAYONET — Colonel Kennedy, you have been here for a year. Is VOLAR working?

COL KENNEDY — Without a question, VOLAR's working. It works better in some areas and in some respects than it does in others, obviously, but there is very little doubt in my mind but what VOLAR's had very considerable impact on life at Fort Benning for the military and for the civilians.

BAYONET — How about some specific areas?

COL KENNEDY — Specific areas — well, I think one very obvious improvement is the progress we've made toward the five-day work week. I think that's something that the bulk of the military has appreciated, although for many of the office workers the five-day work week was standard or normal anyway, to a great many others it was not, particularly in the 197th Inf. Bde. Another very obvious high profile measure was the civilian KPs. At one time we had quite a few civilian KPs at Benning. As you know, we had the cutback. But since January, Fort Benning has been the only post in the Army weekly serviced by civilian KPs. I think there has been a very noticeable and healthy desireable change in attitude all over the post in regard to services. Let's not say that we still don't have problems. As you know, the post turns over about maybe 55 per cent of its people in something less than a year, so we're sort of a never ending process. But in the PX, Commissary, finance office, any areas where services are provided soldiers, I think we have made a considerable impact.

BAYONET — Gen. Westmoreland outlined the goals of MVA including service attractiveness, you've already touched on that. How about enhanced professionlism?

COL KENNEDY — Well, as you well know, the Infantry School has taken some steps in this regard, but over and above the measures that the school has taken, literally the essence of our program has been to enhance professionalism. For example, right off the bat, we have set up a one stop in-processing center to reduce some of the burden of proocessing in and getting in and getting settled on the post. The first thing that happens is that we cut the processing time from 4 - 5 days a week to one day. A man can register his car, get an ID card for himself and his dependents, get his assignment straightened out, any attention his 201 file needs — all at one place and then the next day go to work, we hope with a more receptive attitude toward the Army, which will manifest itself in more efficient service. The five-day work week that I have mentioned has unquestionably been a morale booster; certainly happy soldiers work better. We've hired a good number of civilians to cut down on menial, non-mission related tasks that our soldiers have been required to do in the past. That puts soldiers back on soldier jobs, whether it's training as a member of a unit, or whether it's working in a personnel section. If he's not on a leaf-raking detail or if he's not pulling KP, then he's getting better at his job just because he's on the job more. We have a quality control section in our office to insure that all of the newcomers at Fort Benning are briefed by their commander, to insure that the services and facilities that we provide are provided in the most efficient manner. All in all, we have given a great deal of attention to professionalism, although as you know it's a much harder area to attack.

'We don't want . . . angry leadership'

'. . .we have made Fort Benning a better place for the soldiers, the officer and the civilian. . .'

BAYONET — The third point of the outline by the Chief of Staff is that of improving public opinion or increasing public esteem. You had the chance of making a couple of speeches around the community, specifically in the Fort Benning area. From what you've you seen, do you think we have made steps in that direction?

COL KENNEDY — I very definitely think we have. I think as it was elsewhere, initially in Columbus our program was viewed with some skepticism, and not just in Columbus, but also at Fort Benning. But after having talked to a great many groups and individuals in this area I think it's safe assessment that Columbus has been, or this part of the country has been, very fair minded about the program. They've been anxious to find out about it. They have been willing to give it a chance, to see if it would work and I think that there are a great many people in this area, civilians in town and the surrounding area, who are just as enthusiastic about the program as we are, but that's not to say everybody, by any manner or means.

BAYONET — The overall mission of the Modern Volunteer Army is to attract and retain qualified volunteers. Are we doing that at Fort Benning? Especially, are we getting qualified volunteers?

COL KENNEDY — Well, because of the upgrading of the reenlistment and the enlistment criteria over the past few months, anybody enlisting or reenlisting in the Army now is of very high quality, I am in no position, obviously, to comment on the Army as a whole in this regard, but, yes, we are getting good people to reenlist at Fort Benning, and as you well know, the Unit of Choice program at the 197th Inf. Bde. has been very successful. Because of the qualitative management program instigated by CONARC in this area of reenlistment, only the highest qualified soldiers and NCOs are eligible to reenlist now. Naturally, this cuts down on the numbers.

BAYONET — You are going to change now to a command position after running a staff office for a year. Do you feel any apprehension or do you feel better by taking over the brigade at a post where the Modern Volunteer Army has been experienced for awhile?

COL KENNEDY — Who wrote that question for you? Well as a matter fact, the units I've commanded in the past, I'm happy to say, have always done the things we have done here with exception of having civilian KP. There's very little startlingly new in this program. During my time as company commander 15-17 years ago, we did the same sort of thing, which really is just basically showing an interest in people. The different little gimmicks we use to show this interest are limited really only by your imagination, your initiative, but these are things that people have always done, most people have always done, and certainly I was not a unique company commander. I was in a company as a second lieutenant right here at Fort Benning that did many of the things we're doing right now as a matter of form. My company commander then always talked to the soldier when the soldier had a problem, not just on Wednesday afternoon from five to six o'clock, so I don't feel that I'll be going into a strange, unusual experience.

BAYONET — You have talked to some other reporters about the experience level of the junior leader non-commissioned officer being one of the problems in the Army today. How was this approached in the Modern Volunteer Army? Has it achieved success?

COL KENNEDY — I guess the only way the VOLAR program has gotten into that particular aspect has been in the field of informal education. That is, by making a matter of record, by including a certain item in the plan that this was a good thing to do. Let me back off that just a little bit. I suppose we could say the enlightened leadership class was a start, or makes the initial inroad into that area. The object being the final objective to instill a little instant experience in handling soldiers and living with each other but we have not had a special program in that regard other than what the school did with enlightened leadership.

BAYONET — Are there still misconceptions about VOLAR?

COL KENNEDY — Everywhere. Too numerous to mention.

BAYONET — How about the particular one of discipline?

COL KENNEDY — Discipline. There has been a perceived deterioration in discipline. This deterioration is perceived primarily by the senior NCOs and senior officers. This view of discipline is not shared by the junior NCOs, by the soldiers and to any great degree by the junior officers who feel that discipline at Fort Benning is good and has gotten better under VOLAR. And interestingly enough an objective evaluation of the discipline indicators such as the Article 15 rates, AWOL rates, court-martial rates, incident rates — an objective evaluation of these indicators does not support the subjective evaluation that discipline has deteriorated. On the contrary, most of these discipline indicators have remained relatively stable or improved slightly during the time of the experiment. I think there has been something of tendency in the past few years to confuse the length of hair with the status of discipline. I think the discipline problems that we have had in the Army have been with us for at least the past four or five years. They are no more related to VOLAR than was the NCO club scandal in Europe or Vietnam or wherever it was. These problems belong to the whole Army, they belonged to the Army before VOLAR and very likely, they'll belong to the Army after VOLAR. In other words, the problem has always been there. It's just been: how big was the problem at any given time? Where do you stop the train? But certainly this has been a very sensitive area. One to which we've had to give a lot of attention. There's nothing in the VOLAR program that says a soldier can't be disciplined. As a matter of fact, Gen. Talbott has gone to great lengths to publicize his views on the subject of discipline. We have said time and time again, that any soldier who violates a trust put in him by the VOLAR program will be disciplined as strongly as necessary to assure his future responsible conduct. So, in answer to your question, yes, we have had a problem. I think its natural because initially there was — People didn't know how far the pendulum on discipline would swing. Of course, the soldier was willing to push it right up against the stop, and while the ground rules were being established and worked out, there was some fluctuation. I think the pendulum on discipline has started swinging back toward the middle — I'm not sure that it's there yet but I think it's very, very close to being where it should be and I have high hopes that with the continued emphasis on this subject by the post commander through our information program that very shortly this will be a dead, dead issue.

"There has been a tendency . . . to confuse the length of hair with the status of discipline. . ."

BAYONET — Yes — VOLAR seems to be working very well. Among the soldiers at Fort Benning it's been said, and we've heard it said, that for the program to work among soldiers, officers and senior NCOs cannot be VOLARized. In other words, it demands more of their time to insure that a soldier, for example, gets a five-day work week. What we're saying here is that to make soldiers completely a part of the VOLAR program, officers, particularly the junior officers, and senior NCOs have got to be on the ground and this seems to be true in some cases.

COL KENNEDY — I don't think there is any question that VOLAR has put a premium on leadership. And in troop units in particular, this means time. Basically in our concept we have gone from imposed discipline to self-discipline and this of course was based on Gen. Westmoreland's basic assumption that in this program every man is treated as a mature individual. Well obviously every man is not a mature individual whether he's in the Army or in Phenix City or San Francisco. The only way you can find this out is by trial and error. There's no way you can look at a man and say he's mature or he's not. And in this process of trial and error it has required a maximum in persuasive leadership. There's a natural tendency when you run into a situation where you're a little bit shaky to substitute — there's a natural tendency to substitute authority for leadership. This is what we don't want to happen. We don't want to go back to the angry leadership, the authoritarian leadership, in any grades — NCOs, officer, otherwise. We have put a burden on our junior leaders. We are hoping they can accommodate their individual leadership style to the general method we think should be used and which was taught in the Enlightened Leadership class (or Army Leadership of the 70's) which was conducted by the Infantry School. Again, I think as everybody settles down and this becomes our way of life, I think maybe this situation will ease. I hope it in fact has already eased. For example, if we say there will be no reveille I'm certain that initially some companies had their NCOs out maybe not at 6 o'clock but certainly by 6:30 on the assumption that if they weren't there the soldiers wouldn't get up. Because that's our way, and we're used to that and that's the way the NCOs in the Army were brought up and that is the way the senior officers in the Army were brought up, check, check, check, check, check or something will go very wrong. Well, this concept or VOLAR concept puts responsibility on the man. 'Soldier, you're supposed to be at a certain place at a certain time.' Now this goes back to this placing responsibility on the individual and assuming he is mature enough to recognize his responsibility and perform accordingly. I'm just reasonably sure that the first morning somebody was absent from work call at 7:30 that there were many companies that said: "OK put that formation back at 7:00." And that's how we may have tended to work our leaders. I don't believe this is as pronounced as it was six, eight, nine months ago.

BAYONET — How far are we away from, as you say, this being accepted as a way of life for them?

COL KENNEDY — I think at Fort Benning we're reasonably close. I think at Fort Benning you may walk down the street by the PX and stop a soldier and ask him if he knows anything about VOLAR, the chances are he hasn't been talked to about VOLAR since early September. I don't know how many people have been assigned here in the last 60 to 90 days, but a sizeable number — probably a third of the people that are here. If you ask one of those soldiers, he may not be able to tell you very much about VOLAR, but he will tell you that he has civilian KPs, that he doesn't have to sign in and out to go to town, he doesn't have reveille formation. This may be the way of life for him. He may not know that there was ever another way. Now if you talk to a soldier that has been here pretty much throughout the program, your answer may be somewhat different. How accepted it is throughout the Army, I don't know. The posts that didn't have money to spend and could only change a few regulations, again you'll find most of these regulations were things that weren't rigidly enforced anyway. Every company had its way of handling sign out on pass. Every unit had their own pitch on reveille, and I can promise you very few of them were the same. So I would guess that short of the projects or the things that we have done that cost money, the rest of the things that go with the Modern Volunteer Army are pretty well a way of life right now. In other words, these things that wu did back in January were big news to a soldier at Fort Benning, but for a soldier who comes to Fort Benning after these changes have been made, he doesn't realize that there was ever any other way. That is his way of life. He doesn't recognize that if he'd come here this time last year he'd lived in an open bay in the barracks. Now he has a semi-private room. But he didn't see it the other way so he's got no way of comparing.

BAYONET — As you well know, there are some NCOs, particularly the senior NCOs, who feel that they have not been adequately told about VOLAR. Wherever we go we are going to find a certain percentage that won't know about VOLAR, don't support the program, and will never support the program. What percentage would guess this is right now among your senior NCOs?

COL KENNEDY — I don't know. I do know that this was a very prevalent feeling among senior NCOs last December and January. The common complaint was: 'Nobody consulted us about this big change. After all, we're the people who are responsible for taking care of the troops and nobody told us.' And that was one of those problems we ran into initially. As a matter of fact, nobody I know personally was consulted about it by the Chief of Staff when he decided to do this. And, as you heard me say many times before, I'm sure there's a very good reason for that. If Gen. Westmoreland had asked his staff to make a recommendation on whether or not we should eliminate reveille, whether or not we should eliminate sign in, sign out, he would have gotten 15 reasons why we couldn't possibly do it. At any rate, the news did come as something of a surprise, not just for the NCOs but for the officers - and a lot of the junior officers feel the same way: we're the company commanders, why didn't someone talk to us about this? I think in general the senior NCOs were a little bit sensitive about this. Now, as far as running into one from Fort Benning who doesn't seem to know anything about VOLAR, I can only say that nobody's as blind as a fellow who will not see. It's been written in the BAYONET, the Command Information program has passed out numerous fact sheets on it. Every person that comes to Fort Benning is required to get an initial VOLAR briefing by his unit. Periodic briefings are required, so for a person or NCO to come to Fort Benning and say he knows nothing about VOLAR, I think maybe has a mental block and he's just not going to know about it. In other words I don't think it's reasonable that an NCO, a reasonably intelligent person, could be stationed at Fort Benning and not know what VOLAR's about.

BAYONET — He knows what it's about, he just doesn't understand it.

COL KENNEDY — Well he may not like it, and maybe that's why he doesn't understand it. I don't really knnw how many felt this way initially, but certainly it was a sizeable number of the senior NCOs. And in fairness to those senior NCOs, I will say they have been our most conscientious supporters in the program. Because in that group, there's a tremendous reservoir of loyalty to the Army. And I can think of no instance in which they have not supported the program 100 percent. In our surveys the senior NCO group has continually given us good marks on our efforts to implement this program or that program or to improve something that was being done. Which is not to say that they always agreed with us, but I think because of their background in the Army, and because they have always supported the Army, our most loyal support has come form our senior NCOs.

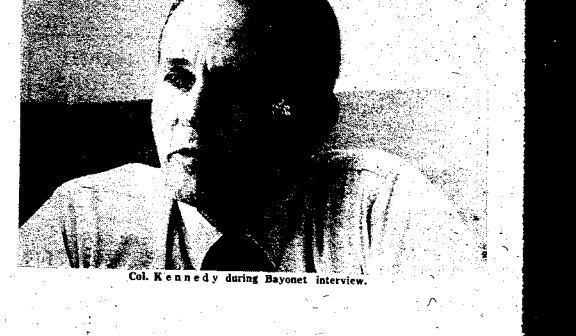
BAYONET — Now let's talk a little bit about the future of VOLAR.

COL KENNEDY — Fort Benning's VOLAR program works because of the priority placed on it by the command. If this priority does not continue, what is the future for VOLAR? In some areas I think we would get a sort of hang-on effect. In some others I think we would lose the ground we had gained, thereby making whatever effort we made fairly counter-productive. I think the best example of this is in the five day work week...If we go back to the six, seven-day work week where we work, the soldiers and the brigade 12-15 hours a day, it is no good to him to tell him you don't have to sign out to go on pass. If you've got him on a night problem every night, what does he care about signing out? There's no need to tell him about the Mod Shop if every waking moment he's on the job somewhere at Ranger Camp or at a parade or supporting school problems or policing a range or unerating ammunition. The success of VOLAR is in direct proportion to the amount of command emphasis. I think we have a good program, for the first basic reason that Gen. Talbott wanted it to be a good program. And he was willing to give the program the priority it took to make it work. I think the future of VOLAR, not just at Benning but in the Army, is pretty much dependent on the priority that the program at each post receives. And I would hope at Fort Benning, until the things that we are doing become a matter of form, habit, policy, the program keeps the priority that it's had.

BAYONET — You have told a fair amount of the nation's press that VOLAR is not a panacea for the Army's problems, particularly some of those that have received a lot of attention, such as drugs, race relations and that kind of thing. Don't you believe some of the areas that you are attacking — such as better leadership and more professionalism — won't they help in the philosophical sense solve those problems?

COL KENNEDY — Oh, without question. We can only gain in the long run by better leadership in whatever field. I don't really know how to get to that one directly. Put it this way, very few problems are really isolated. A man with a problem is generally a man with problems. Seldom would he just have one. And in working on any one of his problems, you're bound to be helping him solve his total problem. And this is true for the post and the Army: in working at one problem there is a lot of overlap into other areas.

BAYONET — There is a lot of question here. Is VOLAR working because of the programs at Fort Benning or because of the pay raises that Congress has given or what is it?



COL KENNEDY — Well, VOLAR is working at Fort Benning in the first place because it's a commonsense program. It's hard to refute just ordinary horse sense. Especially when the program is so whole heartedly endorsed by the post commander and in turn by his subordinate leaders. I'm not sure that there's any one easy way to put your finger on one reason for VOLAR working at Fort Benning. I don't mean to imply that it's an unqualified success because that's not so. We found plenty of areas that we really haven't made a lot of improvement in, but overall it is a workable program. And if there is anyone reason for it, we have to go back to the command emphasis.

BAYONET — As a professional officer, it must have been a good experience to conduct an organized program of improving the Army.

COL KENNEDY — It has been a very different sort of job. It's been an interesting job, a very challenging job, and I think a very, very worthwhile job. We have done some things that I think may fall out elsewhere in the Army. I know we've sent enough plans around, we've made enough evaluations, we've made enough written reports, enough speeches and given enough briefings that some of the good things that we've done have rubbed off throughout the Army, not just at Fort Benning. So from that standpoint, without question, it's been a very, very worthwhile year.

BAYONET — There is a definite sense of personal satisfaction in seeing your program working?

COL KENNEDY — Oh yes. You know it was a sometimes frustrating job. And initially if was a little hard to get any satisfaction because it often seemed to you and to me that progress was slow or maybe nonexistent. We were involved in changing attitudes. Attitudes take years to form, and it's very difficult to try to change an attitude overnight. I think without question, we've made the kind of progress that you can see. I've always been told that Fort Benning was perhaps the best post in the Army anyway. And I've never doubted it. I'm sure Benning has been a good post always, but I really believe now that you would be hard pressed to go anywhere in this Army, CONUS, or otherwise, and find anyplace better to live, to work, than Fort Benning, Georgia. So, if nothing else, that's a very big plus on VOLAR's side. There's no doubt in my mind that we have made Benning a better place for the soldier, the officer, and for the civilian alike to work, and that of course is very, very satisfying.

Col. Kennedy during Bayonet interview.

'Walkabout'--part of tribal initiation into manhood

A man fills his day in the vast city with his paperwork and his daydreaming while his wife does the routine house chores and their children attend school.

This is the way "Walkabout," which starts Sunday at the Georgia Theater, begins.

The man (John Meillon), his 14-year-old daughter (Jenny Agutter; and 6-year-old son (Lucien John) drive into the Australian desert. The man stops his automobile. His son climbs out and begins to play with a toy gun, disappearing behind some rocks. The girls takes the portable radio and a lunch basket from the automobile and starts to lay out a picnic.

The father is holding a pistol. Suddenly, the father aims at the boy and fires. The girl scrambles behind the rocks with her little brother. The man sets fire to the automobile and then shoots himself. The bewildered girl takes her brother's hand and leads him away across the desert.

By nightfall they reach a mountain range. In front, as well as behind them, there is nothing but the vast desert. The children are completely lost. The continue to wander, finally pausing to drink and sleep.

Continuing their journey, the children use up their small food and water supply without really knowing if they will ever reach civilization.

Looking out across the desert, the boy sees a small black figure moving closer and closer. The aborigine boy (David Gumpilil) is strong and healthy, a little older than the girl. He greets the children in his native language which they are unable to understand. He tells them he is on his walkabout, which is part of his tribal initiation into manhood. The little boy mimes their need for fresh drinking water. He leads them to water.

Soon the atmosphere relaxes, and the children begin to enjoy each other's companionship. They hunt, swim, play games and share several adventures together, gradually emerging into a small family.

The Abo leads them through the desert and over the mountains until they reach a small deserted homestead. The girl begins to set up housekeeping while the Abo takes the boy to search for firewood and food. While in the forest, the boy accidentally discovers a road.

The girl removes her blouse to wash. Suddenly the Abo appears with leaves and feathers all over his body. He begins to dance. Embarrassed by her nakedness, the girl quickly dresses. His dancing becomes more vigorous. It is now obvious that he is calling to her. The less attention the girl gives him, the more energetically he dances. The boy returns and the Abo continues dancing into the night. The children go to sleep.

In the morning, following a ritualistic practice whereby the Abo has willed himself to death, the brother finds the lifeless body in a tree trunk. This is tantamount to self-burial place so the evil spirits from below the earth cannot molest the body of the Abo. After showing his sister the body, he takes her to the road at the edge of the forest and they follow it until they come to a deserted mining town.

They discover an old man once employed by the mining firm. He sends them to the town's hotel but, like everything else, it is empty and deserted. But by now the children are certain they will be rescued.

To prove the wetness of Rise, this man shaved without using any water.
And he actually got a smooth, clean shave.
The reason he got such a clean shave is the moisture in Rise.
A lather needs moisture, needs wetness, so your beard won't dry out beneath it.
And you can't buy a lather that's wetter than Rise.
Slowly it seeps moisture into your beard and holds it there for as long as it takes you to shave.
The point we're trying to prove is this:
If our man can get a smooth, clean shave using Rise with no water, imagine what you can do using Rise with water.

Synopsis

SHAFT (Rated R) — Richard Roundtree plays John Shaft, a tough, independent, resourceful, black private detective fighting organized crime.

Hired to rescue the kidnapped daughter of a black Harlem vice king, Shaft soon finds himself in the middle of a war between the vice leader and the Mafia. The latter trying to take over the criminal territory in black Harlem, (gambling, prostitution and drugs) as a price for the daughter's freedom.

Moses Gunn is the Harlem rackets boss. Margaret Warncke, a white actress, appears in a topless love scene in the shower.

"Shaft" is a "now" film in which violence and profanity are an intricate part of the action and dialogue. This "Bogart-Bond" type thriller is definitely not for the young or squeamish. Aside from the sexual aspect, the language is of the type to offend some persons while violence will disturb others.

THE HARD RIDE (Rated GP) — Acting as an honor guard for the body of his black marine corps buddy, Lenny (Alfonso Williams). Phil (Robert Fuller), a discharged Vietnam veteran, arrives with the body and is helped by Father Marshall Reed in handling William's last requests.

Lenny bequeaths his motorcycel "Baby", a highly modified chopper, resplendent in chrome, leather and paint to Phil and requests that his old motorcycle gang led by "Big Red" (Tony Russel) attend his funeral services. Phil asks the help of Lenny's old girl friend, Sheryl (Sherry Bain), and they ride across California on "Big Red's" trail.

"Big Red" is found at a bordello and argues with Phil over Sheryl. A rival motorcycle gang abducts Phil and "Baby" which leads to a wild melee between the two gangs. One of the protagonists is killed and the next day the cyclists attend a double funeral. This exciting cycle drama contains some profanity, nudity and violence.

'Good Vibrations' hit Benning

That's right, and to show you what it's all about, the 3rd U. S. Army Soldier Show comes to you with their current production "Good Vibrations."

Set under the circus big top, you can not only hear the sounds of wild animals, see tumblers and clowns, but also listen to the added sounds of current hits such as "You've Got A Friend," "Go Down Gamblin'," and "How Do You Mend A Broken Heart."

All of the members of the show's cast, band and technical crew are from installations throughout the 3rd Army area and have auditioned for the show while it has been at their installation. You may even recognize some of the cast as former associates and friends.

From the colorful carnival opening, through major highlights, such as, Debbie McWhirter singing "Don't Rain On My Parade," John Norris singing a medley from the musical "The Man of LaMancha," Tony Burke singing "Ain't No Sunshine," Mark Bucchare singing Chicago's "Beginning," and Helen Brown singing a medley of Bachrach-David numbers, we are caught in the spell of the circus world, which climaxes in the finale from the rock opera 'Godspell."

The whole show culminates in the end by numbers from this musical which are created in the style of a foot-stomping side show that will bring you and your friends to their feet.

Don't miss the 3rd U. S. Army Soldier Show production of "Good Vibrations," a show for the soldier by the soldier, when it comes to Fort Benning's Marshall Auditorium, Bldg. 4, tomorrow and Sunday. Curtain time is 7:30 p.m.

Among careerists

White House searches for fellows

WASHINGTON — A search is now under way to find 15 to 20 outstanding young men and women to serve as 1972-73 White House Fellows — an opportunity to gain first-hand, high-level experience in how government works.

Career military personnel are eligible to apply for the program, which is open to all persons between the ages of 23 and 35, other than federal employees.

White House Fellows serve one year as assistants to cabinet officers or White House staff members, receiving a salary of up to $24,560 for the year, based on previous education, experience and earnings.

Applications for next year's program will be accepted until Dec. 1. Application forms and additional information can be obtained from the President's Commission on White House Fellows, The White House, Washington, D.C. 20500.

Among the 1970-71 fellows were Army Lt. Cols. Bernardo Loeffke, Albany, Ga., and Dana G. Mead, South Yarmouth, Mass.

DA announces new re-up standards

WASHINGTON — Under a new program, Army personnel in grades E4 through E9 will have to meet new standards for reenlistment and will be subject to quotas limiting reenlistment of career personnel beginning Jan. 1, 1972.

Quarterly quotas will be established by grade and military occupational specialty (MOS) to limit the number of reenlistments that can be made in the top six enlisted grades.

Personnel with 18 or more, but less than 20 years service who are denied reenlistment under these controls may be extended to provide 20 years' service for retirement purposes.

Following are some guildelines regarding the new program:

—A soldier attaining a score of 100 or higher on his primary MOS (PMOS) test may be reenlisted regardless of the quota ceiling. This score must have been made within 12 months of the last award-termination date for his MOS and grade.

—Soldiers with a valid PMOS score of 70 to 99 are eligible to reenlistsubject to grade and MOS restrictions.

—Individuals with a valid PMOS score of 69 or lower are ineligible to reenlist, and waivers are not authorized.

—A soldier whose MOS score is not up-to-date may be retained on active duty until he has taken his test and the score is verified. Soldiers stationed in the continental United States will not be reassigned during the period they are awaiting test results. Soldiers on an overseas command will be retained until results of the test have been completed.

Well-oiled oracle outscores opposition

Ah yes, once again PFC Predicto pervailed over the paltry picking's of this weeks piddling prognosticators. The galloping gridiern ghost guessed his way to an overall mark of .724 to the measily midfield mark of .525 picked by the poor pickers of Co. C HC. The psychic seer of the stadium will undoubtedly score another smashing success this week as I am challenged by the troops of Company Operations. The well-oiled oracle will undoubtedly outscore the opposition in this weeks grueling gridiern grudge games. You too can attempt to stop the sterling star of stadium stats by dailing 545-1622 and phoning the fantastic football fooler of fantical fortune. Just ask for PFC PRED. ICTO.

Far West invitation accepted by rifle team

The Marksmanship Training Unit (USAMTU) has accepted an invitation from the Marine Corps to participate in the 12th Annual Hi-Desert High Power Rifle Tournament at Twenty Nine Palms, Calif. tomorrow through Monday.

Nine MTU rifle marksmen led by All Army Champion MSgt. James L. McQuien along with their two coaches, MSgt. Roy Combs and SFC Paul Parker will be making the westward trip.

Marine Corps officials indicate there will be over 200 shooters competing in two points in the 1971 National Rifle matches by the UHS. Army "Blue" team will be competing along with a top civilian team, the California Hrd Holders who won the runner-up civilian honors in the Nationals and holds the national bolt gun record. The Marines will be represented by team entries from both East and West coast bases along with the "big" team from Quantico, Va.

The three-day large bore competition, hosted by the Twenty Nine Palms Marine Corps Base, will feature matches which will include the top civilian contenders along with the best military high power rifle marksmen in the nation. The All Navy Team which was narrowly defeated by the pre-Thanksgiving ture one day of long range 1,000 yard matches with aggregate champion, one day of varied 200 yard through 600 yard range competition with the final day for four-man team matches. The individual series will include a slow fire sub-aggregate, rapid fire sub-aggregate and competitive matches in three gun categories (bolt action rifles, magnums and service rifles).

Summing up the individual competition on Tuesday will be the Grand Aggregate and tournament Championship match in addition to an aggregate champion of the first days long range events.

The four-man team matches will include 2,000 rounds over varied distances of 200, 300 and 600 yard range from all three positions for each of the teams. The team firing the highest score will be awarded the prestigious Marines Corp Hi-Desert Open Team Championship trophy.

By Roger Pavey

The long awaited battle between this year's football giants is about to unfold Thanksgiving day. The Cornhuskers from Nebraska, the reigning national champions, take on the powerful Sooners of Oklahoma in what is once again being publicized as the "game of the century."

Nebraska an exceptionally balanced team has rolled over their past ten opponents with competitive ease. Their combined running and passing attack has demolished every one in their path. The offense headed by senior quarterback Jerry Tagge has averaged more than 35 points a game, while the defense has given up an average of seven. This coupled with the experience gained during last season's drive for the number one spot makes Nebraska a genuine champion.

Last years standouts, Jeff Kinney Johnny Rodgers and Jerry Tagge are back for this year as well as their brickwall defense. With such blue-chip players as these the men of Bob Devaney have perfected themselves in virtually every category. Not only do they have a high powered offense, but excellent specialty teams as well. It is a small wonder that the precision like movement of Nebraska has once again vaulted them to the number one spot.

Balance is the key to the Cornhusker's game. Just when their opponents seem to stymie one aspect of their attack the other comes through. Tagge is a proven passer, as evidenced by last weeks 20-27 and 285 yards, but won with him a year ago and feel there is no reason in the world that they can't repeat this year.

But the real key to this powerhouse is the defense. So many times have they gotten the ball back for the given more importantly a proven leader. The Huskers offense, especially when times got tough. Many rival coaches compare their defense to that of Penn State of a few short years ago. Here again they are a proven team with the experience already behind them.

But the rugged Nebraska defense has not faced the likes of the Oklahoma Sooners. The Okie's have powered the way through the defensive lines of all nine of their foes. Greg Pruit, Leon Crosswhite and Jack Mildren have utterly destroyed everyone in their year long chase of arch-rival Nebraska.

Coach Doug Fairbanks who installed the triple option in last years Texas game has marveled many opposing coaches with its success. Pruitt a 190 pound back, has averaged a little under 10 yards a carry, while challanging Cornell's Ed Marinaro for the nations rushing championship. Meanwhile Crosswhite and Mildren, have run wild when the opposing defenses attempted to key on Pruitt.

Oklahoma has set many Big Eight and school records this year, but their NCAA record of 711 yards in rush offense set against Kansas State has to be the one they cherish most of all. But records mean nothing in a game of this magnitude, for this is the whole season for both teams. After chasing Nebraska all year the Sooners are sure to be psyched up for their Thanksgiving day battle. But so should the Cornhuskers. . .

My guess is that Nebraska will win in a tight one, and mainly on the strength of their defense. Oklahoma has fumbled numerous times against much weaker defenses and so far are just seven away from another school record. One which I imagine they aren't too proud of. With an offense that relies completely on the run Mildren's precision like handoffs must be exact. The pressure of the huge Nebraska defensive line must not interfere with Mildren's concentration, or mistakes will dominate Oklahoma's offense.

Coupled with a devasting defense Nebraska's offense should capitalize on the somewhat pourous defense of Oklahoma. They have given up a little more than 20 points a game and Nebraska's highly talented offense should take advantage of this weakness. The Sooners secondary is the largest whole in their defense and the one Tagge and Co. should attempt to fill with completions.

Although on paper Nebraska seems to be the logical choice, Oklahoma can't be counted out. The only sure thing in this head to head battle for the coveted national championship is the turkey, and this year's is from Nebraska. . .

Columbus Police Dept. instructed by USAMTU

Led by Maj. M. D. Alligood, Columbus Police Patrol Major, the 16 policemen and two policewomen attended a two hour course of classroom instruction in the morning and then stepped up to the firing line at Phillips Range to put their new found theories into practice. MSgt. Laurence Mosely, NCOIC of the USAMTU Pistol Division, directed the instruction and worked the group on the firing line through the range control booth.

On the firing line, each police officer was matched with an MTU instructor, some of the best pistol marksmen in the world, who gave detailed instruction on successful marksmanship to the law officers.

Some of the instructors the police group had included such handgun experts as MSgt. Emil Heugatter, National Indoor Pistol Champion; SFC Hershel Anderson, Pan American Free Pistol Gold and Silver Medalist; SFC Bonnie Harmon, who set a new world record in Military Rapid Fire and SSgt. Barbara Hile, the present National Women's Pistol Champion.

The army pistol instructors stressed concentration on sight alignment, body positioning and trigger control. Emphasis was also placed on mental discipline and target detection.

Capt. M. Rand, veteran Columbus Police Officer of the Patrol Division, spent a good part of his time looking over the shoulders of his younger officers and adding emphasis to the Army instructors admonishments and words of wisdom.

During the afternoon, the Police Officers were instructed in marksmanship techniques regarding civil disturbances and the employment of the riot gun (shotgun). Following classroom instruction, the group shifted their shooting eyes on both the Skeet and Trap Ranges zeroing in on the fast flying clay pigeons.

197th powers rolling in USAIC football tourney

The other score came in the first half as Bolding hit Stacy Rhinehart with a 5 yard touchdown pass.

HHC, 1st Bn., 39th Inf. of the 197th Inf. Bde. romped over HHC, TSB by a 30 to 0 score in its first USAIC Flag Football Tourney game.

HHC 1st Bn., 29th Inf. scored on its first play with quarterback Milton Johnson hitting Jim Patterson with a 75 yard pass play. HHC missed this and all of its other PAT attempts. A few plays later, Frank Toles intercepted a TSB pass, which Joel Fennel turned into a second HHC touchdown a couple plays later on a 25-yard run.

The final score of the first half came when Patterson picked off a TSB pass and scampered 70 yards for a touchdown.

Essan Pyatt scored early in the second half on a 15 yard pass from Johnson. Patterson wrapped up the scoring with his third touchdown of the game, a 20 yard pass from Johnson on the final play of the game.

Both teams representing HHC also shut-out MEDDAC 12-0 in a game played later in the week. It was a combination of Johnson to Ken Flowers, and a 5 yard run by Patterson that accounted for all the scoring. Flowers first reception was good for 25 yards, and came with less than two minutes remaining in the half. He grabbed a 10 yard pass in the second half with just two minutes left in the game.

Both teams representing the 931st Engr. Gp. have been defeated twice in the double-elimination tourney.

The 608th won its first contest in the opening night by downing Co. D, Hq's Cmd, 12-6. However, that was the only taste of victory for the ordnance company, which lost its next two contests in a row. The first loss came at the hands of HHC, TSB, by a score of 7-0, and the second defeat which dumped 608th from the tourney came by a score of 18-0 in a contest dominated by Co. A (Admin), 197th Inf. Bde.

The 524th Pers. Serv. Co. tied both of its opponents in its only games in the tournament, but lost each time by the penetration rule. After tying MEDDAC 6-6 in regulation play, 524th was edged out of the victory when MEDDAC gained one yard in the penetration play and won 7-6.

On Nov. 12, Co. A, Hq's Comd., battled to a 6-6 tie with 524th after both teams failed to score more than one time. Co. A rallied in the overtime play, however, and downed 524th 12-8.

Post handgun experts shoot with nation's best

Four days of handgun shooting are underway for pistol marksmen from the Southeast United States in the Fort Benning Monthly Open Handgun Tournament. The four day series will actually include two two-day tournaments.

Starting off with two days of international fourgun competition, the marksmen will compete in International matches which include four team events. This is followed by at 2700 aggregate National three - gun series with an NRA Short Course. Then on the final day, a 900 point .45 Caliber Service Pistol "hardball" individual and National Match Course team match will be fired.

Then short course matches within the National three-gun competition will be fired over a 25 yard range with a reduced target in which the bullseye is no larger than a quarter.

The combination of competitive matches offered by the four-day shooting schedule has developed an unusually high level of competitive interest in some of the nation's best handgun personalities throughout the South and East. Teams already indicating they will participate include an Air Force team from Eglin AFB, Fla., led by superb Air Force handgunner, MSgt. John Ditmore and the All-Army Reserve team which includes record breaking shooters MSgt. Charles Wheeler, Maj. Jack Vincent and Maj. Kenneth Hall. The team presently holds four National pistol records while Hall of Las Cruces, N. M., also holds the Rapid Fire Pistol half course record.

Sponsored by the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club, each of the competitive phases, the International four - gun National Three-gun and the Service Pistol Aggregates are NRA registered matches and National Rifle Association rules will apply.

Dead center

ROD AND GUN CLUB Notes

By Bill Kloeb

The fall hunting season begins tomorrow with the opening of quail, rabbit and woodcock seasons in Georgia.

The deer, rabbit and squirrel seasons opened in Alabama last Monday and now seasons for all of the popular game except doves will be open in both states for some time.

From all indications hunting should be good this year. Those who have been scouting for quail report quite a few coveys with anywhere from eight to 14 birds. Take a ride from Main Post to the Harmony Church Area at night and you can get a good idea how many rabbits there are this year. If the numbers of squirrels in the housing areas on Main Post are any indication there isn't any shortage of squirrels. Of course the deer hunters are already off to a good start with 182 deer being registered at the Fish and Wildlife check point through the first two weekends of the season.

Members Take Trophy Deer

When nearly 200 deer are taken, there are bound to be some trophy bucks. The leading entries in the Rod and Gun Club Deer Hunting Contest are just that.

SSgt. Charles H. Wallace has registered the buck with the most antler points. His trophy had 11 countable points. Sgt. Maj. (ret.) Jesse Hobbs, 1829 Howe Ave. who held first place last week with a 10 point entry dropped back to second place.

Lt. Col. (ret.) Brandt Grubbs, 2940 Luckie Street still leads the heaviest deer contest with his 176-pound entry. SFC Verlin James who held second place last week with a 135-pound entry was moved out of second place by CWO Francis Lammers, 2046 Ramsey Rd. Lammers' entry weighed 157-pounds.

The Rod and Gun Club will award shotguns to members who take the heaviest and the deer with the most antler points during the hunting season. Deer must be taken on the reservation.

First place winners in each category will receive a Remington 1100 Automatic Shotgun. Second place winners will receive a Mossberg Bolt Action.

Members who register a deer at the club during the season but do not win one of these prizes will have a chance to win another Remington 1100 Automatic Shot Gun.

Rules of the contest may be obtained at the Rod and Gun Club, located on First Division Road about One-quarter mile south of Hwy. 27.

November Fishing Derby

Rod and Gun Club members aren't fishing or the fish aren't bitting. Its hard to believe that people wouldn't to taking advantage of the beautiful weather to fish or that the fish aren't biting at this time of the year but only one entry has been registered in the club November Fishing Derby. The catfish, weighing an even four-pounds was registered by SFC Ronnie V. McDaniel, 3rd Ranger Company. As of Monday there wasn't a single entry in the bass or bream contests. This could be a month for someone to win a $15 merchandise order with a pretty small fish.

The Rod and Gun Club holds a fishing derby each month of the year. Prizes are awarded for the largest bream, catfish and bass. The member registering the largest fish of each species gets a $15 merchandise order good at the club sales counter.

Just be sure you register for the contest at the club before you go fishing, catch the fish at one of the post ponds and bring it back to the club for weighing and registration.

Winter Hours of Operation

Operating hours for various activities of the Rod and Gun Club have been changed to provide more complete service during the winter months. The most notable change is an early morning breakfast for early rising hunters and fishermen. The grill will begin serving breakfast at 5 a.m. each Saturday, Sunday and Holiday during the hunting season. On weekdays the grill will open 8 a.m. through 5 p.m.

The sales counter will be open from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. each weekday and from 5 a.m. until 5 p.m. on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

The beverage bar will operate from 10 a.m. until 9 p.m. every day.

The club skeet ranges will operate from 2 until 10 p.m. on Wednesdays, from noon until 8 p.m. on Saturdays and from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m. on Sundays and holidays.

Brightly colored hats for hunters

Most post hunting regulations are in the interest of the hunters' safety. The one requiring that all hunters wear a bright red yellow or international orange covering during the hunting season may keep sou from being mistaken for an animal or bird.

'Jolf' popular with American servicemen

INCIRLIOVA, Turkey—A new sport known as "jolf" has gained popularity with U.S. servicemen in Incirliova, Turkey.

A combination of jogging and golf, jolf consists of jogging when not hitting the ball and vice versa.

Each player is allowed to carry only three clubs —wood, iron and putter.

The strokes and time are added for the final score. The record in Incirliova so far for nine holes is 63—43 strokes played in 20 minutes.

Sneakers, rather than regular golf shoes, are worn when playing jolf so the turf will not be torn up by the running.

Army expands housing plan

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Army has established a committee to develop a housing program for Army personnel and named a target of $700 million for housing improvement during fiscal year 1973.

The new housing program aims to provide adequate housing for the soldier and his dependents by the end of fiscal year 1975.

An estimated 135,000 additional family quarters, 110,000 new barrack spaces and 4,000 new bachelor officer quarters spaces are needed. Further, most existing barracks require alteration to meet newly established Department of Defense standards.

The committee will serve as a control center to direct and coordinate the development of the adequate housing program, develop standards for housing and consider new barracks designs.

Voice of VOLAR

- The Benning Plan for a Modern Volunteer Army is one year old today.
- Col. Edwin L. Kennedy is leaving the position of MVA project chief to become commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade. Lt. Col. Henry Doctor Jr. will replace Col. Kennedy.

First NG Wac joins

WASHINGTON — Washington State recently broke a 300-year-old tradition by enlisting the first Army National Guard WAC (Women's Army Corps member).

Spc Dora Campbell's enlistment was followed two days later with Spc Mary L. Cunningham's joining an Alaskan unit.

Congress amended a law in 1956, allowing women to become members of Guard units. Although both Army and Air National Guard units began enlisting nurses almost immediately, not until 1970 did the Air Guard sign up its first AAF (member of Women in the Air Force).

Rookie first to reach 6,000 hours

Although 64-13132, a 1964 CH-47A Chinook helicopter currently assigned to the 265th Assault Support Helicopter Company, is not the oldest helicopter in the Army inventory, she can boast being the first Chinook to reach 6,000 flight hours. For those not familiar with Army aircraft, a CH-47A chinook helicopter is a tandem rotor, medium lift cargo helicopter manufactured by the Boeing Helicopter Company.

The fact that "132" never left the United States for abroad may be one of the reasons she was able to achieve such a high hour level. Shipped from the Boeing factory in August 1965, "132" remained at Ft. Rucker until March when she became due for an overhaul. After being overhauled at New Cumberland Army Depot located in Pennsylvania, Uncle Sam made Fort Benning "132's" new home.

Aiming to improve her Chinook family, "132" participated in 500 hours of test flying to help develop a pressurized flight control system. Even today with her high hour level, "132" may also claim an accident free history.

Although not a very heroic history for an Army aircraft, every hour "132" flies will be an Army CH-47A Chinoookoo record.

GFC gives $500 to museum

Representitives of the General Finance Corporation (GFC) of Columbus presented a $500 check for the Infantry Museum Fund Drive to Col. Robert P. Hatcher, assistant post commander and campaign chairman of the Fort Benning Infantry Museum Fund Drive.

George B. Weekes, auto loan manager, and Leroy S. Clark, personal loan manager, presented the check as representatives of the GFC offices at 4th Avenue, Benning Road and their own office on 11th Street.

In SOLDIERS

'The Good, the Bad and the Soldier' is hot reading

Winter may be coming but the November edition of SOLDIERS shuns cold stuff and focuses instead on all that's hot, like "The Good, the Bad and the Soldier."

Here's an inside, first person account of the world that's just outside many Army posts. Nothing was missed. The author rapped with prostitutes and pawnbrokers, drug pushers and used car salesmen. In brief, with people who have always had a magical lure for servicemen. Read this feature and see who you're matched with when the good and the bad meet YOU, the soldier.

And if you've ever been up against it financially, catch both "It's a Long Way to Payday" and "In the Words of a Barracks Thief" for tips on keeping your money safe until Uncle Sam spreads the bread again.

Then there's "What Money Can't Buy," namely an Honorable Discharge. You wanna bet you can get a Dishonorable, Undesirable or Bad Conduct Discharge changed to an Honorable one at a later date? Read the facts in SOLDIERS and learn the kind of odds you'll be buckin'.

November also means football. "Army — All the Way" puts you right in the huddle. It's a closeup on the cadets who carry the pigskin for the U. S. Military Academy at West Point. Read it and the "big game" at Philadelphia will take on an added kick.

On yet another front there's "Pollution's Last Gasp," the story of the Army's attack on airborne pollution. This campaign isn't just slogans — there's plenty of action in many areas. Fighting air pollution means testing and discovery. For example, Army Materiel Command surveys show the extent of the pollution problem — initial studies uncovered 258 sources of pollution at 51 A M C installations. Money is a problem too — it's going to take $118 million to correct those problems alone. But funds are being requested from Congress and corrective action is underway.

If we haven't licked everything yet, read about the hairy adventures of soldiers on the Alaska Rescue Team. Pilots and crewmen of the 19th Aviation Battalion at Fort Richardson overcome wild Alaskan weather and terrain to deliver climbers who save human lives and recover bodies of accident victims. Those who have been saved think the men of the 19th and the gutsy who fly with them are just beautiful.

'My son Larry is dead'...from LSD

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — "My son Larry is dead. Killed by police bullets, the record will say. But he was not killed by bullets, he was killed by LSD," said E. Glenn Harmon.

In a written statement Thursday night, Harmon expressed his feelings about his brilliant son. The father said LSD had turned the youth into a religious fanatic who believed "Christ was an imposter."

Police gave this account of a fatal rampage by Larry, 21:

The young man entered St. Aloysius Roman Catholic church on the campus of Gonzaga University here, carrying a .22-caliber rifle and a sledge hammer.

After doing thousands of dollars damage to statues and old Italian marble altars with the sledge hammer, he shot and killed Hilary M. Kunz, a 69-year-old caretaker.

Larry left the church and fired the rifle in several directions, Michael J. Clark, 18, suffered a serious wound in the back. Less seriously wounded were Robert D. Schroeder, 17, Robert A. Fees, 63, and Thomas C. Brass, 24.

Young Harmon died a few feet from the church after being shot by police.

Larry's teachers later said he was the brightest mathematics student ever to attend high schools here. His father, a prominent attorney who considered Larry to be a budding nuclear physicist, said the youth had scored a perfect 100 points in the math portion of a nationwide preuniversity exam and finished in the top one-half of one per cent nationally in the over-all test.

Larry went to Massachusetts Institute of Technology to study nuclear physics.

"There is little doubt in my mind that, as far as the police are concerned, they had no choice but to kill Larry," said Harmon. "Were I in their shoes, I believe I would have done likewise."

"For to him life on this earth had reached the point wher he found nothing left for him to live for. He still loved his mother, his father, his little brother, Douglas.

"The rest of the world had become a place where he no longer fit, though his family fought as hard as they knew how, and with all the help medical science could offer, to undo the damage to an incredibly intelligent brain which was irreversibly damaged by LSD."

Harmon said friends induced Larry to try marijuana. Then, on his 18th birthday, "he took a half of a pill which his friends told him was LSD." The elder Harmon said Larry had "incredible hallucinations . . . a bad trip."

Harmon said Larry tried more LSD a few days later and the hallucinations returned.

"He met and talked to the devil in hell," Harmon said. Later young Harmon picked up the Bible and became fantatical about it, the father said.

Harmon said doctors held out no real hope Larry would be cured but that the youth could not be committed to a mental institution because his intelligence could be used to "make a fool of anyone . . . if he chose to do so."

"May God have mercy on his soul," Harmon said. "And may God have mercy on those who caused the deaths he brought to others.

"But, most of all, may God have mercy on a country in which such things can happen with not enough concern for others than those who are destroyed by that 'wonderful mind expanding drug' LSD."

The Air Force Museum, in Washington, has added three early lithographic prints by Maltby Sykes to its permanent collection.

Sykes, alumni professor of Art at Auburn University, executed the prints during World War II from sketches made while undergoing basic training at Sheppard Field, Tex.

On of the prints, "Chow," won awards at the Mint Museum of Art and the Art Association of New Orleans, and is included in the book "American Prize Prints of the 20th Century," by Albert Reese (American Artists Group, 1948).

Lithographic prints of recent issue by this artist were displayed during September at annual exhibitions of the Society of American Graphic Artist, in New York, and the American Color Print Society, in Philadelphia.

197th changes command

After 22 months in the position, Col. Willard Latham relinquished command of the 197th Infantry Brigade to Col. Edwin L. Kennedy in ceremonies at Munsan Heliport on Kelley Hill Saturday morning.

Lt. Gen. Albert O. Connor, 3rd Army commander, accompanied by USAIC commandant, Maj. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott, presided at the change of command ceremony.

Gen. Talbott presented the 197th's colors to Col. Kennedy. Brigade CSM James Gallagher pinned the unit's crests on the new commander's shoulders.

Gen. Talbott, in opening remarks at the ceremony, praised the officers and soldiers of the 197th for their work in achieving worldwide recognition as an efficient and spirited unit. "You, the brigade and you, Col. Latham, have every reason to be proud of what you have done and what you are," said Gen. Talbott.

"The credits and accomplishments you have received have been publicized by the press, but more importantly have been embellished in the hearts of those around you," added Gen. Talbott.

Gen. Talbott said of Col. Latham, "By your example and your leadership, you have established a record of improvement for leading the way for the rest of the Army."

In welcoming Col. Kennedy as the new commander of the 197th, Gen. Talbott termed him "a distinguished soldier," and added, "Col. Kennedy, we are proud to turn this brigade over to you and we stand ready to assist you in any way we can."

Col. Latham, in his final words to the brigade as commander thanked the brigade for its work and said, "I am being succeeded by a great man." He added, "I know that under his command you will go on to great things."

Col. Kennedy added his plaudits to the brigade, saying, "You richly deserve your reputation as the Army's finest."

Of the future he said, "Together we will be sure that the 197th Brigade is the standard by which every unit in the Army is measured."

Bulletin

Fort Benning has exceeded its goal of $138,000 in donations to the Tri-community Combined Federal Campaign according to Maj. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott, post commander. Contributions at Fort Benning have put the overall tri-community campaign over the goal of $142,000 set for all federal employes in the Fort Benning-Columbus-Phenix City area.

WACs get benefits too

The Women's Army Corps, at least at Fort Benning, is beginning to receive it's bennies under VOLAR. PFC Richard Sexton, B Co., 43rd Engr. Bn., 83ist Engr. Gp. plasters a wall at the WAC's barracks. Sexton is in a platoon of B Co. currently turning open bays into semi-private rooms. The large bays are being divided by permanent walls to provide two-woman rooms and more privacy. In addition to the partitions the Engineers are renovating the WAC Co. sanitary facilities.

The U.S. Army Material Command Infantry Research and Development Liaison Office recently presented a display of equipment and clothing in the lobby of Infantry Hall. Former Benning OCS graduate receives award

The award created in 1932 in honor of the late Secretary of War Patterson, who died in a plane crash, will be presented to Hershey, a native of Boston, Mass., during ceremonies at Fort Benning. The date of the presentation has been tentatively set for Feb. 11, 1972.

Each year the Patterson Award is presented to the most outstanding Infantry Officer Candidate School graduate selected from top graduates of all classes between Oct. 1 and Sept. 30. Hershey graduated from 53rd Co. 5th Stu. Bn., TSB on May 27.

Hershey's academic average was 94, placing him third in his class in that area. He displayed exemplary leadership ability which enabled him to attain a rating of 99 per cent in that category.

Following OCS, Hershey received Airborne and Ranger training at Fort Benning.

The award is financed by the earnings of a $16,000 trust fund established by 120 friends of the late Secretary.

Indiana scouts attempt the Leadership Reaction Course

Scouts test Leaders' Reaction Course

"Cease Work. Give me a 15 second countdown."

This oft repeated and somewhat frustrating phrase is a familiar one to all Infantrymen who have hastened through the tasks at the Leaders' Reaction Course.

It was heard again on Nov. 5 as Explorer Scout Posts 467 and 522 from Indianapolis, Indiana, visited the Leadership Department and had the opportunity to test their abilities at the Leaders' Reaction Course. This 32 man group, whose average age was between 13 and 17, attempted to accomplish combat oriented tasks requiring strength and the ability to identify the problem and find the solution using the materials at hand.

Although the course is designed to be negotiated by participants older and stronger, the scouts on numerous occasions identified the problem and resolved the solution, but were unable to complete the task only because of their size and strength. Capt. Kenneth Burns, officer in charge of the Leaders' Reaction Course, said "these young men showed as much enthusiasm as most of the office and enlisted classes who go through here."

Comments from the scouts themselves ranged from "It was kind of scary," to 'Make you think about having responsibility as a leader."

What makes this event especially significant is the fact that both Scout Posts are specializing in learning about the military. Explorer Scouting Posts have the option of voting to study and specialize in an area which is of interest to all scouts. All of these scouts train in varied military subjects and make field trips to military installations. Post (467) has visited almost every military base from coast to coast. Post 522 spent three days on an aircraft carrier, and in order to pay their own way to Hawaii, they bought a "Hush Puppy Sandwich" franchise.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

by Bill King

For the freshest brew, keep the ground coffee in its original covered container in the refrigerator, and don't store more than you can use in a week or two.

When roasting turkey or chicken in foil, remove the foil a half hour before meat is done, and brush the bird well with grenadine for a crisper, browner skin.

As an accompaniment, combine hot mashed turnips or rutabagas with twice as much hot mash white potatoes. Add margarine or butter and season to taste.

Yeast for baking rises better if it has been out of the refrigerator a few hours before use.

In many parts of Europe, until the 17th century, sugar was available only in apothecary shops.

High Mobility Wheeled Vehicle to undergo testing by Infantry Board this month

From 0 to 60 in 12 seconds — a high performance V-8 rear-mounted engine — power steering — wide stance — disc brakes — and oversized tires.

Ferrari? Corvette? Jaguar? Porsche

Wrong. It's the XR-311, High Mobility Wheeled Vehicle, scheduled to undergo Military Potential Testing by the U. S. Army Infantry Board at Fort Benning this month.

The Army has purchased 10 XR-311 vehicles, three of which will be tested for reliability, durability and maintainability, according to Col. Charles B. Thomas, president of the Infantry Board.

"The purpose of the testing," the colonel said, "will be to determine if the XR-311 can be of use to the Army as a special purpose wheeled vehicle."

Capt. Harold Crowe, test project officer for the XR-311, elaborated on the vehicle and the test:

"The XR-311, nicknamed the Dune Buggy, is decended from the Baja 1,000 mile racer. It is a gasoline powered rear engine vehicle with a four-wheel drive military chassis."

"The test vehicle has power steering, a wide stance, independent suspension, torsion-bar springs and dual shock absorbers."

"The XR-311 reportedly, can climb 60 per cent grades, negotiate 20-inch obstacles, and ford water to a depth of 30 inches."

AUSA

By Bob Barber

The Association of the United States Army (AUSA) — dedicated to the premise that a strong, mobile modern Army is vitally essential to our national defense.

CURTIN

CONVENTION VIEW POINTS

One of the Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning Chapter attendees to the Annual Convention, Spt Timothy Friend, had this to say about his stay in Washington? "To me the bulk of the AUSA Convention dealt with the problems of the enlisted man." Friend, the president of the Enlisted Men's Council at Fort Benning and a member of the local chapter continued; "Most enlisted men think that the officer, from lieutenant all the way to the general, has no idea what the soldier has to face from day to day. But this convention proved that idea to be false. I was overwhelmed to find that the 'higher-ups' not only knew our problems, but were trying to find ways to solve them. We lose track of this fact because these solutions take time to be implemented and do not always have a direct bearing on any one individual. I think that AUSA is an outstanding tool to promote and help the Army."

Friend will soon complete his tour of duty and plans to become the sports director for a radio station in up-state Ohio but says that he plans to remain a member of AUSA.

Also attending the convention as a representative of the local AUSA chapter was Capt. Thomas P. Curtin who is the assistant secretary to the registrar of the Infantry School at Fort Benning. A career officer and president of the Company Grade Officer's Council, Curtin tells what he learned about the Association of the United States Arms while in Washington: "Prior to my attendance at the AUSA convention, I had a very vague idea about the purpose of the organization. While at the convention it dawned on me that the association is no different in principle than the American Bar Association and the American Medical Association."

"The AUSA is a community of concerned professionals gathering to promote the Army as a vital organ of National Defense. It is concerned with people, both military and civilian; interested in keeping the Army's standards of personnel and equipment at its deserved high level. They do this through action in their home areas: talking to other community organizations, writing articles for the local media, and corresponding with their congressional representatives. "I'm very pleased that the AUSA came to my attention so that I can help the Army become a better organization."

Curtin was elected to the Board of Directors of the Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning Chapter of AUSA thss past June, the first company grade officer to have been included in this body.

This chapter wants all of its members, from the highest rank to the lowest and all of its civilian members, to be "in the know" as to what AUSA has, is, and will accomplish, both on the local and national levels.

NORTH POLE, Alaska — Children of military and civilian personnel can get a real letter from Santa Claus, postmarked "Santa's Official Mail, North Pole, Alaska."

During the past 16 Christmas seasons, airmen at Eielson AFB, Alaska, have mailed nearly 125,000 letters through their "letters from Santa Claus" program.

The unit has provided the following instructions for interested parents:

—Write a letter to your child, signing it Santa Claus.

—Address the letter to the youngster and affix the proper return air-mail postage from Alaska (proper postage is urged, since unit members in the past have spent much of their own money for postage to avoid disappointing the children of forgetful parents).

—Place the letter or letters in a larger envelope and address it to: Santa's Mail Bag, Detachment 5, 9th Weather Reconnaissance Wing, APO Seattle 98737.

—Add proper air-mail postage and drop it in any mailbox.

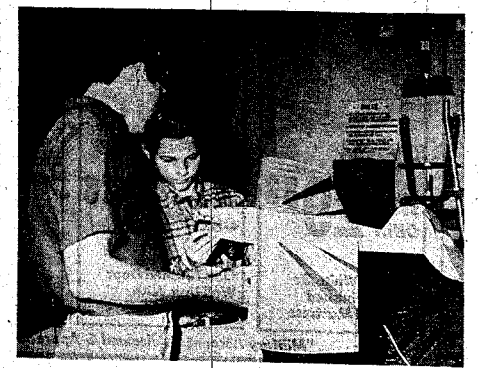
A few miles from Eielson AFB is a post office officially called Santa Claus House, North Pole, Alaska. Air Force weathermen, who have volunteered their free time for the project, will get the letter and remail it from that post office.

The child will receive the letter from Santa, complete with authentic postmark, in a few days. Letters must be mailed to the unit by Dec. 10 to permit receipt of the remailed letters by Christmas Day.

NCOs to get 260 new quarters by Dec. 17

The Directorate of Industrial Operations, Housing Division, has announced that 260 new three and four bedroom NCO quarters are scheduled for occupancy on or before Dec. 17.

The quarters are located in Bouton Heights, east of the Golf Course between Marne and First Division Roads.



For purposes of application, there are two grade categories which are allotted a specific amount of units available to them.

For those personnel who are E7, 8 or 9, there are 30, 4 bedroom units available and 38, 3 bedroom.

For E5, 6, and E4 with four or more years of service or between two and four years of active duty with a total active duty commitment of six years, there are 80, 4 bedroom units and 112, 3 bedroom units.

These family quarters will be assigned by the date of application and bedroom requirement within each grade category. Current waiting lists will be adjusted accordingly. This advance notice is for planning purposes for prospective occupants who may now reside off post.

Application should be made to NCO Quarters Assignments, Room 238, Bldg. 35, telephone number 545-3944. The DIO, housing Div. number is 545-5969.

Big Brother Program needs your help

Fun is the password into the Big Brother Program. Fun, guidance, companionship, and a figure with which to identify is what you will provide a little brother.

The Big Brothers of America need your help. The guidelines of the program are relatively simple. To become a Big Brother, you must be on active duty or a retired male member of any branch of the Armed Forces, with the final decision on participation of the applicant resting with the ACS social work officer.

The Little Brothers range from ages six to 14. They are any dependent son of an active duty, retired or deceased military member. With just a few hours of your time weekly, a little brother can have the necessary adult male attention to grow up into a mature person and a responsible citizen.

Anyone interested in participating as a Big Brother is invited to telephone 545-1233 or 545-1633 for further information.

What will be left after death?

At one point or another during your life you have probably thought of death and its consequences on the ones you love. Many persons find they have an aversion to thinking about death, especially their own, so they dismiss these thoughts quickly without considering the effect it will have on the people around them. An important factor to consider is that of your will. Every man and woman should give second thoughts to this most important matter and should seek the assistance and advice of their own attorney or a legal assistance officer.

Basically, a will is a legal document in which a person, called the testator (the testratrix, if a woman) directs the disposition of his property, both real and personal, after his death. The requirements for a valid will vary in each state. These rules are technical and strict adherence is essential. Therefore, making a will without legal advice is not recommended. Consult a legal assistance officer or lawyer who is familiar with the particular laws governing wills in the state in question.

An individual who dies without a will, or with an improperly executed will, is said to have died intestate and his personal property would be distributed according to the descent and distribution laws of that particular state where he was domiciled at the time of death. Real property or land would be distributed according to the laws of the state where the land was located.

In many cases when an individual is furnished a will by the state, which is the case of a person dying intestate, those whom you would have desired to receive your property will receive substantially less than you desire or in some cases nothing at all.

Another significant aspect is that by drafting a will you can designate a person or institution (executor) whom you know and trust to administer your estate and affairs after your death, without the necessity of that individual depositing a security.

Perhaps you already have a will; a periodical review of its contents is necessary, and this should be done with a lawyer's or legal assistance officer's help. Some events which would cause a will to become obsolete are: changes in domicile, birth or death of children, acquisition of new property, or change of marital status.

The most important factor to remember is to have a lawyer or legal assistance officer make all corrections, deletions, and-or additions. Don't hesitate another minute; if you have a will, update it; if you don't, for your family's sake have one drawn up.

Q—Does the purchase of U.S. Savings Bonds have any effect on the amount of taxes we pay?

A—Yes. U.S. Savings Bonds underwrite twenty-three billion dollars of the national debt. By participating in the Savings Bond program you are not only earning money for yourself, but are lowering taxes at the same time.

Q—I have had three address changes in the past four years. Is it possible to have my bonds held for me in some secure place rather than have them mailed directly to me?

A—Yes. You may have your bonds placed in safekeeping—for you at the Army Finance Center, Ft. Benjamin Harrison. To accomplish this, the bond allotment form DA 1341 must be completed by placing a "4" in item 15 and "FCUSA" in item 16. You may get your bonds anytime by writing the Army Finance Center.

Q—I have a $200 Series E Savings Bond. I need $75 to pay an outstanding bill and hate to cash the bond but I need the money. Can I cash only a portion of a bond?

A—Yes. A bond in a $50 or larger denomination can be partially redeemed. Example: If you partially redeem your $200 bond, you would receive a $100 Bond (with the original issue date) plus a check representing what would have been the redemption value of a $100 bond having the same issue date as the original $200 Bond.

The judge says

Hurt feelings may be grounds for action

USAIC LEGAL ASSISTANCE OFFICE — "Hurry up you think we have all day," said the bus driver to his lady passenger. The lady was shocked by the comment. In fact, she felt outraged and insulted. The remark caused her anxiety and loss of sleep.

She sued the bus company for $5,000. But the court ruled against her. Sure, her feelings were hurt. The rude driver showed bad manners. But this was not cause for court action.

No one has the right to disturb intentionally another's peace of mind. But the court will award damages only if the defendant's conduct is particularly outrageous.

In another case, a creditor's screamed insults at a pregnant woman led to a miscarriage. This was compensable. A creditor called a neighbor late at night and asked the debtor be summoned out of bed for an emergency, saying that the husband had a bad accident. When the debtor went to the phone, the creditor told her she was behind in her payments. This too was grounds for court action.

The landlord who throws out the tenant's furniture, or the practical joker who sends a lady a dead rat wrapped in a box, or the businessman who uses insulting business tactics to humble a competitor will have to pay for disturbing the other's peace of mind. There may be no actual physical harm but wrecklessness or outrageous acts causing emotional disturbances are enough.

In another case, two youngsters of divorced parents lived with the defendants. But the defendants were not strict guardians. They allowed the children to drink alcohol and engage in intimacies with friends. The children became emotionally disturbed and the parents sued on their behalf. The court ruled that there could be no recovery. There were no threats, abuse or misconduct by the defendants which caused the emotional distress. They were acts of omissions — too much permissiveness. There was no proof of intentional conduct that brought about the disturbance of the children.

Liability is more likely to be imposed if the defendant is dealing with a particularly delicate subject or person. For example making an insulting remark to a marine sergeant does not cause as much liability as making the same remark to a pregnant woman.

Liability might also be caused by unintentional but negligent acts.

Georgia professor talks about soldiers as managers

BY Carl King

Dr. Elbert T. Eggers, professor of management, Georgia State University, addressed Infantry Officer Advanced Course Students on their "Role as Managers," the address was given in Marshall Auditorium.

"11.5 per cent of the U.S. working force are in managerial positions leaving 88.5 per cent of the working force to follow," the international management specialist said.

Dr. Eggers pointed out that the 11.5 per cent figure was rising as a result of technological improvements, "especially improvements in the computer industry. This need for leadership is true in all countries," the professor said. "Indonesia, the 6th largest nation, to Barbados, a little independent nation, have markets, raw minerals to exploit, soil — but not enough leaders. It is in this market of leaders and managers that the greatest need exists."

Dr. Eggers expounded on the "Trailus Theory" which states that education, experience, getting along with and liking people, and emotional stability are the necessary ingredients for successful leadership. "This theory is false because these traits do not make a leader," professor Eggers claimed.

According to Dr. Eggers, the determinants for successful leadership and management are decision making, knowing your audience and simplicity.

DECISION MAKING

"The first thing a good manager must do is make a choice between alternatives and follow through with his selected choice," Dr. Eggers said. "Adolf Hitler was a high school dropout. He didn't like people. He was emotionally unstable. . . probably even a little psychotic. But he was willing and able to make a decision, then delegate to the people under him to bring that decision to fulfillment. The best leader is the man who does nothing by getting all the men under him to perform all tasks."

KNOWING YOUR AUDIENCE

"The greatest shortcoming of middle management is the failure to communicate effectively," Dr. Eggers stressed. "We fail in our communication because we fail to have an objective. We must keep in mind the people with whom we are trying to communicate. We must know their interests, their education level, and their experience."

Professor Eggers used several analogies from the Old Testament to demonstrate how effectively good communication achieved success years ago. "We must be very careful in the use of words," he chided. "A word like 'grip' can mean different things to different audiences. It can mean a handshake, a sickness, or, as my wife said to me this morning, "I think you're losing your grip."

"The French say Americans like statistics and ice cream. . . because they both go down so easy. I believe they are correct," the professor said. "If I had told you that 1 per cent of all Americans are in a mangerial position, you would have questioned whether I might have meant 12 per cent or maybe 13 per cent. As soon as I said 11.5 per cent, I was a qualified expert? We Americans are indeed peculiar," Dr. Eggers said.

SIMPLICITY

"Most times, symbols and paragraphs should be simple," professor Eggers emphasized. "The value of simplicity is almost embarrassing." He used the "Sermon On The Mount" to show how very significant simplicity abets understanding, and how the use of simple language best achieves a given end.

Dr. Eggers talked about some of his personal convictions. "One of the greatest flaws in management is feedback. We never know if the message we sent was received as it was intended," he stressed. "I do not belittle education or experience, but without the tools of management, there is no communication."

"Another major problem in this country is motivation, Americans seem to want to do no more than just enough to get their task accomplished. In other countries there is a built-in motivation — hungry bellies," Eggers said.

"I believe we must get ourselves more involved in the organizational structure of which we are a part. People need to think more about their responsibilities. We need to use our life. We need to get involved in our work. If is through this involvement that the seeds of happiness will grow," Dr. Eggers ended.

'Crossed Rifles' highlights luncheon

The monthly luncheon of the NRI-ROTC Department wives held on Nov. 16 was accompanied by an orientation given by Col. William R. Guthrie, department director.

The orientation consisted of an informal briefing the departments' functions and objectives. "Crossed Rifles," an Infantry Branch film designed to orient ROTC cadets, prospective commissioned officers, about Infantry life during the first two years of service was shown.

After the orientation, the ladies visited various offices for a first hand look at the job their husbands perform.

The wives and their husbands then went to the Corrégidor Room of the FBOOM for a luncheon. The luncheon motif was Autumn with an array of orange, gold, and brown color.

Mrs. William Guthrie, wife of the department director, welcomed the husbands and bachelors of the department on behalf of the wives. Mrs. Guthrie then announced that plans for the Christmas Bazaar were in the final stages.

Wife of 1972

Mrs. Norman G. (Claudette Brisson) Batten is the Fort Benning Military Wife of the Year (1972), and Fort Benning's nominee to the 3rd U. S. Army level of the Military Wife of the Year competition. Mrs. Batten is married to Maj. Batten, executive officer, 1st Bn., TSB and has a daughter, Jeanne, age 11. Mrs. Batten was the Officers Wives' Club nominee for the honor.

Hq. Cmd. keeps spirit of austerity program

The "soup line" was long at the Hail and Farewell party given by Headquarters Command, Nov. 12, at the Engineers' Lodge.

Keeping with the spirit of the austerity program (wage-price freeze), all wore their old clothes, cutting down on "conspicuous consumption." The tables were decorated with discarded liquor bottles, and old newspapers.

All newcomers were welcomed by Col. Bruce T. Fraser, commanding officer. A special thank you was given to Capt. and Mrs. Arthur Zeiske for making the part a success.

After dinner everyone participated in the hula hoop contest won by Mrs.

Retired officer chapter has party

More than 100 retired officers from the Chattahoochee Valley area, along with their wives, attended a cocktail party sponsored by the Columbus Area Chapter of the Retired Officers Association Nov. 12.

The party, held at the Fort Benning Main Officers Club, provided an atmosphere for the guests to renew old acquaintances, recall past experiences and make plans for the future.

The local retired officer chapter now numbers about 70 members. The membership is expected to triple in the next few months as plans and programs for 1972 are announced.

Plans have already been formalized for a program of interesting and informed speakers to discuss subjects to direct concern to retired officers as part of the chapter business meetings.

Social gatherings similar to the cocktail party are planned for January and April.

The Columbus Area Chapter of the Retired Officers Association has been organized to provide retired officers the opportunity to participate in a forum for the discussion of matters of local and national importance affecting the military retiree, to maintain contact with the military; and, to promote legislation in the best interest of retirees and the nation.

All retired commissioned and warrant officers of the military services, members and non-members, are invited to attend the next meeting to be held at the Fort Benning Country Club Dec. 15. Activities will start with a social hour at 7 p.m. followed by a business meeting at 8 p.m.

NCO Wives' annual tea honors wife of commanding general

LOOKS GOOD!
Mrs. Talbott Slices A Piece Of Cake During NCO Wives' Fall Tea.

The NCO Wives' Club held their annual fall tea in honor of Mrs. Orwin C. Talbott, wife of the commanding general, at the Top 5 Supper Club recently.

Approximately 30 members joined Mrs. James Dixon, the NCO Wives' Club nomination for Military Wife of 1972, Mrs. James Eason and Mrs. Theodore Cherry, co-hostesses, in honoring Mrs. Talbott during the event.

The theme of the tea was fall flowers, and in keeping with this theme, a corsage of mums and raisies was presented to Mrs. Talbott as she arrived for the tea.

Standing with Mrs. Talbott in the receiving line were Mrs. John LaVoie, wife of CSM John LaVoie, Infantry Center sergeant major, and Mrs. Henry Bilbeault, president of the NCO Wives Club.

Refreshments were served including a cake with the inscription, "Welcome, Mrs. Talbott, NCO Wives Club."

Food, beer plentiful at 'Super Supper'

An estimated 150 members and guests of HHC, 931st Engr. Gp., were entertained Nov. 17 at a company dinner and party.

The "Super Supper" was prepared by HHC's mess hall staff.

The Engineers and their guests were treated to steak, ham, spare ribs, fried chicken, roast beef, roast pork, and several preparations of potatoes and salads. Two cakes, ice cream and fruit topped off the feast.

Afterwards, free beer was served at the lodge as couples danced to the upbeat sounds of the "Reflections."

Capt. Jesse Minix, company commander, said the event was held to give HHC members and their families a chance to "get acquainted" and enjoy themselves

Deactivation dinner held by Polar Bears

The officers and ladies of the 5th Bn. 31st Inf. 197th Inf. Bde., attended a farewell dinner Nov. 6 at the Fort Benning Officers Club.

Guests were Col. and Mrs. Willard Latham, Lt. Col. and Mrs. Henry Doctor and Brigade Chaplain (Maj.) and Mrs. David Hoe.

The battalion mascot, the miniature Polar Bear, was also present. Punch was served from the battalion Shanghai Bowl. Chaplain Hoe said grace. The menu included whole cornish hen with imperial rice.

The Polar Bears were entertained by the Infantry Chorus directed by Capt. Perry Hope. The choir stirred emotions as they sang "Auld Lang Syne" and the Army Song.

Col. Latham commented on the positive spirit and manner in which the battalion has carried out its mission. Maj. Donald Tapscott, the commanding officer of the 5th Bn., 31st Inf., thanked the wives for all the support and effort they have given for battalion functions. He said it has been a pleasure commanding the battalion and that he will always remember the past months with fond memories. The battalion was deactivated Nov. 5 at Fort Benning.

The dinner was sponsored by Headquarters Company under the direction of Capt. Hubert Townley.

Special program offered to handicapped children

The Army Community Service's Handicapped Children's Committee of Fort Benning offers an opportunity for military dependent boys and girls in special education to come together in a social situation.

There are approximately 100 children in the Columbus and Fort Benning area who are invited to attend the recreation program each Saturday. However, the majority of these children live off post and usually only 25 children or less are able to attend.

The Handicapped Children's Committee needs people who will donate one hour a week or a month on Saturday afternoon to car pool a few of the children to main post or home.

The committee functions with the aid of 1st Lt. Pete Hamilton, ACS staff officer, assigned to assist the committee and volunteers, male and female, including teenagers and students studying special education at Columbus College.

Additional assistance has been given by Ben Ricci, director of Youth Activities, Fort Benning Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, the Officers Wives' Club and Officer Student wives. Various businesses in Columbus have donated goods.

In October the children swam at Briant Wells Field House pool; went to Camp Hideaway for a nature hike; and, had a Halloween party at Bldg. 1300.

The committee would like more handicapped children to be able to participate in the activities. If anyone would like to help information can be obtained by phoning Hamilton at 545-1633 or 545-1233 or by calling Mrs. Raymond E. Gunderson at 545-1708.

Academy seeks cadets among active duty soldiers

On July 1, 1973, approximately 1,000 young men will enter the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y. Four years later, they will be graduated and commissioned as second lieutenants in the Regular Army of the United States. Each soldier at Fort Benning, unmarried and 20 years of age or younger, has the opportunity to become one of those new West Point Cadets.

The history of the Military Academy has shown it is desirable that a portion of each entering West Point class consist of men with prior enlisted service. These former soldiers help maintain a link between West Point and the Army and lend a certain military leavening to the class. In order to prepare the soldier for the Military Academy, the Army has founded the United States Military Academy Preparatory School (USMAPS) at Ft. Belvoir, Va.

USMAPS assists the soldier with instruction in academic and military subjects and by physically conditioning him for the West Point entrance examination and his vigorous life as a cadet.

Minimum eligibility requirements for West Point and the preparatory school are correlated and are as follows:

A. A citizen of the United States.

B. Of good moral character.

C. At least 17 and not more than 22 years old on July 1, 1973.

D. Unmarried and not previously married.

E. A high school graduate.

F. Be medically qualified.

In addition, the soldier must have enough time remaining under his enlisted contract to assure active duty through July 1973. If an extension is necessary to cover this perioed, it will be accomplished prior to reporting to the preparatory school.

While at USMAPS, the soldier will retain rank held at time of entry and receive normal pay and allowances.

The school year at the preparatory school lasts from August to May. Classes are given in mathematics and English and participation in a variety of sports is required. The soldier's military training continues with emphasis on obedience, responsibility and initiative.

Monthly briefings are presented at Fort Benning to familiarize soldiers with the military academy and preparatory school. If you are qualified and interested, check with your unit commander or your USMAPS project officer:

WAF has procurement problem

Air Force officials have advised that until procurement problems with the women's beret are solved, WAF will be leaving basic training at Lackland AFB, Tex., without hats.

WAF who complete Basic Military Training after Sept. , will not be required to wear hats with any Air Force uniform until the beret is available in the local base exchange.

Any changes to this policy will be made later by Air Force officials.

An opinion

'I won't buy anything here again...

By Keith Harmon

During a recent session of a 93ist Engineer Group Soldiers' Council meeting this summer, soldiers voiced complaints of discrimination by local businesses against junior enlisted men. Listening to those complaints was a distinguished panel of Columbus community leaders — a city councilman, a bank president, a Chamber of Commerce member and a prominent businessman.

The meeting was just another step by commanders, soldiers and civilians in the long march towards the improvement of community relations. What the soldiers talked about was a deep-rooted feeling that junior enlisted men, especially E-3 and below, were not being treated fairly by many businesses.

They charged that a soldier attempting to acquire a loan or buy an automobile or appliance with credit is not given a fair shake unless he's at least a specialist four or five. The businessmen, they alleged, judge a soldier's ability to repay solely by his rank, or his salary, which is the same thing in the military.

The discrimination, the soldiers said, is that rank is not all there is to a man's financial status.

The enlisted men claimed that many salesmen, particularly in car lots, make it a point to find out the rank of a soldier before even discussing a product. But what if your wife works, or if you have two incomes of your own, or own a house, or have some other investment which should help to establish credit? It rarely helps, the soldiers charged, since before even discussing a purchase with you a salesman will find out your rank first, and then refuse to talk any further.

Sgt. Tim Hopkin, an information specialist in the 93ist, wanted to investigate on his own to find out if the complaints of junior soldiers were justified. Out of uniform, he went shopping for a car.

"I found the majority of salesmen to be very friendly," he said, "until I told them I was a private first class." At that point, he said, the salesmen became terse and coldly to the point. Without asking for credit references or bank balances or other possible incomes, salesmen told him to "come back when you have the money to buy with cash" or "I'm sorry, we can't finance you at all."

At one auto lot a salesman walked up to him and said before another word was spoken, "Are you in the service?" Hopkin replied that he was a private first class and asked about financing on a particular car. He was answered bluntly "It would sve us a lot of time if you come back when you had the money to pay for the automobile because we can't finance you."

At another auto lot, which displays a sign outside "E-4 and Above NO DOWN PAYMENT . . .," he finally found a dealer that would extend credit to him on a purchase. He was told that with $500 down payment on a $900 car "maybe we could finance the rest." Thanks, but no thanks, Hopkin replied.

There are a lot of reasons for it being so difficult for soldiers in the lower ranks to buy on credit. Until now, before the pay raise, businessmen have said that junior soldiers simply didn't make enough money. On prevous deals, they explained, the soldiers were unable to make payments which eventually caused the junior ranks to be lumped into a "poor risk" category.

Another reason for the poor credit rating is that businesses claim junior soldiers have a very high repossession rate on items purchased on credit.

However a spokesman for a Columbus repossession agency, disputed that allegation. "During a month's time we'll handle about 30 repossession cases and only about two of them will involve military people," he said. A spokesman for a Columbus bank also does not feel that junior soldiers are bad risks because of alleged high repossession rates.

The reasons are more complex than that. Car dealers blame the banks, and banks blame the car dealers and "fly-by-night" high-rate finance companies, who poorly manage credit programs.

Another banker offered this explanation: "Repossession of a purchase is the fault of the credit institution extending credit. If they left a man over-extend himself, and let him obligate himself over and above his income, then they are asking for these things to be repossessed."

He then added, "The high-rate loan companies are gambling on the high interest returns they are getting, and they will occasonally let people over obligate themselves."

"There is no reason that the repossession ratio in lower ranking soldiers should be any different than that of officers," he continued, "if the credit is properly investigated and the proper credit decision is made."

Hopefully, things will change with the new pay increase now in effect giving low ranking soldiers a substantial raise. Some dealers promised a definite improvement in their credit policies — others weren't as positive. One thing for sure, many junior soldiers will be anxiously watching to see what effect the pay increase and time will have on the Columbus businessmen.

In the meantime, however, PFC Jackie Plaster, HHC, 93ist, has found his own way to beat the system. Even with his wife employed, the private first class was turned down by Columbus auto dealers repeatedly when he tried to purchase a $3,000 car with financing. "I went to my home town on leave," he said, "where the salesmen looked at us as Mr. and Mrs. Jackie Plaster with such and such income, and not PFC Plaster with a GI's salary."

Plaster now has his new car, which he bought at home, serviced under the manufacturer's warranty by the same Columbus dealer that refused to sell him a car. But the experience left a bitter taste in his mouth. "They snubbed me too long," he said. "I won't buy anything here again even if things do change with the pay raise."

Cub Scout Pack 27 receives 103 awards

Cub Scout Pack 27, sponsored by the 67th Maint. Bn., 931st Engr. Gp., conducted a meeting last Wednesday at Dexter School and presented 103 awards to pack members.

After a brief inspection the scouts held a funfilled balloon blowing contest with the "most talkative" representative of each den. The winner was awarded the Windbag Award.

Later, Edward T. Moore, chief fire inspector of Fort Benning, presented a brief talk regarding fire safety in the home, which was followed by American Indian dances by the accomplished young men of Uchee Chapter of the Order of the Arrow.

During the awards ceremony 16 new Cub Scouts were awarded their Bobcat pins. They were: from Den 1, Scott Layfield; Den 3, David Conn, Robert Cuyle and Michael Sietz; Den 5, Robert Balaband, Tim Howe and Steve Parr; Den 7, Danny Draper and Russell Popin; Den 9, John Alton, Glen Davis, Robert Brown, Darryl Brown, Duane Messner and Jerry Watson; Den 11, Walter Carpenter, Regional Esco, Troy Greene, McGregor Macintosh, Mack Miller and Eddy White; and from Den 13, Jeff Hunt.

The evening was concluded as Webelos Den 2 was awarded the honor streamer for winning the inspection and Den 3 was presented the Attendance Award.

Drug lecture team deals in facts

By Keith Harmon

Before he began his address to the student body at Douglas School in Columbus, drug lecturer, Stephen Wilborne, wanted to "set the record straight."

"I heard some of you say before the program that I'm a narc, a narcotics agent," he began, "but you're wrong. I'm not here to bust anybody, so you can think of me more as a teacher than a military policeman. I just want to inform you about the drugs of our society; drugs that you'll probably come in contact with face to face; if you haven't already."

The students listened attentively to Wilborne's presentation, viewed a slide presentation, watched a movie and then enthusiastically fired a barrage of questions to the senior member of Fort Benning's drug lecture team. He answered them all honestly. "We deal only with the facts and leave out the bull," he said. "We don't draw any far-fetched conclusions and try to scare anybody, since most young people know too much about their own drug scene and can't be easily persuaded with untruths."

Wilborne and Ray Jaklitsch, of the 139th MP Co., 931st Engr. Gp., are the two lecturers of the drug team which travels throughout the Fort Benning-Columbus-Phenix City area informing soldiers, students and parents of what President Nixon termed "public enemy number one."

In addition to Douglas School, the team has addressed the student bodies of most local high schools, the sociology class at LaGrange College, the student body at North Georgia College, the Alabama-Georgia Governor's Conference, the Atlanta Businessmen's Club and the Columbus Kiwanis chapter. And they are available for almost any group that asks.

At Fort Benning, the team gives a presentation weekly to incoming personnel assigned to the 931st Engr. Gp. and makes frequent lectures to various gatherings of nearly every unit on post.

Further, they operate drug information answering services at the military reservation in which brief, informative descriptions of dangerous drugs are automatically played when one dials 545-DOPE or 545-DRUG.

The team also assists at the Columbus Halfway House, participates in panels conducted by the Columbus Police Department and assists at the Medical Center.

Their qualifications are impressive. Wilborne, 24, has a degree in criminology and one in sociology from St. Mary's College of Kansas. Jaklitsch has a B.A. degree in sociology from Greensborough (N.C.) College and a M.A. degree from the University of N.C. in public speaking and communications.

Even with their education, the two do not consider themselves experts. They gather their information from military and civilian law enforcement agencies, the National Institute of Mental Health, MEDDAC, the Dept. of the Army, the National Clearing House for Drug Abuse and various university psychology departments.

The program began 2½ years ago, and has been undergoing updating and changes ever since. Currently, the drug team has ordered an additional $700 worth of films to be used to further illustrate their message of dangerous drug abuse. Presently "under advisement" Wilborne said, is the suggestion that the team include younger persons to aid in the lectures to elementary school audiences so that younger students would have someone more their age to identify with. Another possibility the team considered was the addition of former addicts to the team, however Wilborne said that possibility also included a few problems.

Of all the groups the team has visited, Wilborne said senior audiences, such as businessmen and senior officers, usually respond the most during the lectures, because as he put it, "most of them are parents and I don't believe they know as much about drugs as young people."

"When speaking to older people," he continued, "we try to inform them what pressures their children face. However when speaking to young people we try to make them fully aware of the drug situation. Through this awareness maybe they'll curtail the use of drugs that they didn't even know about before. Possibly, this may stop them from using drugs for the first time."

"We have no measurement of success, really, and no way to measure our failures either," he added, "we just talk to as many people as we can and hope we reach someone."

Project Transition helps on way out

By Carl King

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is the first in a series on Project Transition.)

Have you wondered what Project Transition is all about? The Program at Fort Benning has become a major course of instruction for personnel with unsalable skills and other personnel who simply want to develop a skill of some kind before getting out of the service.

Four priorities have been established for men desiring to participate in Project Transition:

1. Personnel with service-connected disabilities that prevent their return to duty to include officers and warrant officers.

2. Personnel ineligible for reenlistment who do not possess a civilian or service-acquired skill that will enable them to obtain gainful employment after separation.

3. Other enlisted personnel who do not possess a civilian or service-acquired skill.

4. Enlisted personnel who desire additional training to improve civilian employment opportunities.

Within the above priorities, unit commanders have been directed to encourage service-connected disabled individuals, eligible minority group members, project 100,000 soldiers, and individuals with low aptitude area scores to improve their future employment prospects through participation in Project Transition.

Since the start of Project Transition at Fort Benning, 42,000 servicemen have completed Project Transition questionnaires. To date, 12,067 men have completed training. At the current time, there are 187 men attending classes and 40 men taking on-the-job training.

Project Transition began at Fort Benning in January, 1968, within the existing General Education Development (GED) program. The first course scheduled specifically for transition personnel began March 18, 1968 — a postal clerk-carrier course taught by the local Post Office.

The match for Project Transition was lit in April, 1967, when President Johnson directed the Secretary of Defense to provide in-service training and educational opportunities for unskilled enlisted personnel to increase their chances for civilian employment after leaving the service.

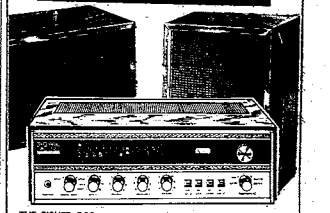
Draft calls slated to drop lower

The Department of Defense (DOD) has requested a total of 10,000 inductees from the Selective Service System for the months of October, November and December.

This quarterly draft call will bring to 98,000 the total number of inductees for 1971. According to DOD this is the lowest calender year figure since 1962 when calls were 76,500.

Melvin R. Laird, secretary of Defense, plans to make draft call announcements on a quarterly basis in the future to help reduce uncertainty, to give young men increased time to arrange personal affairs before entering on active duty and to make optimum use of training resources.



The 10,000 inductees of the fourth-quarter call for 1971 will be assigned to the Army, and the first of those men to be inducted are expected to enter the Army in mid-October.

Defense Race Relations Institute opens at AFB

A pilot session of the multi-service Defense Race Relations Institute began at Patrick AFB, Fla. Nov. 1 with 44 students. The education program is designed to prepare teams of race relations officers and noncommissioned officers to work with their contemporaries at all military installations. After RRO-NCOs complete the 248-hour course they will return to their units as instructors in race relations.

The regular six-week classes of 200 students are scheduled to begin Feb. 1, 1972.

Employing small group discussion sessions using situation-simulation films and other selected techniques, the new RRO-NCOs will lead home-base personnel in approximately 18 hours of annual training.

The volunteer students will receive instruction in history and contributions of major minority groups; psychological, social, economic and cultural factors related to race relations; and training and practice in the techniques of small group leadership.

Experience from the pilot session will be put to use in January by the staff of 25 military officers and NCOs and 19 civilians selected from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Air Force for adjustment and revision of the course.

Col. Edward F. Knise, U.S. Army, is the director of the Institute with 14 members of the staff of 44 representing a variety of the nation's minority groups.

As a result of studies in the Department of Defense and the separate military departments, and the work of a DOD task force in 1970, the institute was established to provide an educational program to help resolve racial problems that may exist within the Department of Defense.

Distinguished Service Cross

The Distinguished Service Cross, the nation's second highest award for valor, was awarded recently to Capt. Laurence V. McNamara in ceremonies conducted by Maj. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott, post commander.

Attending the ceremony were Capt. and Mrs. McNamara and their two children, Saurence V. II, 3, and Shannon, 16 months.

The citation for the award read in part, "Capt. McNamara distinguished himself while serving as A Senior Advisor to the 3rd Battalion, 22nd Infantry Div. (ARVN) during combat operations in Vietnam. As the South Vietnamese battalion neared its objective, they encountered stiff resistance from a large hostile force firing B-40 rockets, mortars, and automatic weapons. Unhesitatingly, Capt. McNamara exposed himself to the hostile fusillade as he rallied the allied troops and led them in an assault against the enemy fortifications, successfully dislodging the NVA from their first line of bunkers. During the second charge, Capt. McNamara was seriously wounded in both legs while he moved through the heavy enemy fire. Although rescue parties were unable to reach him, due to four strong NVA battalions surrounding his location, unable to walk; and despite his wounds, hunger and exhaustion, he avoided detection by the enemy forces for the next five days."

Capt. McNamara is now stationed at Fort Benning, attending Infantry Officer's Advanced Course 2-72. He and his family are presently residing in Columbus.

Prior servicemen stabilize college program

The 50th Officer Candidate Company, 5th Student Battalion (OC), commanded by Capt. William W. Jacobsen, has a unique characteristic—a preponderance of college-option officer candidates. Out of a present roster of 194 candidates, 151 are recent graduates of four years institutions from all parts of the country, large and small, famous and obscure.

The vast majority of these candidates have proceeded to OCS directly from Basic Combat Training (BCT) at Ft. Jackson.

The transition for the "college-op" from BCT to OCS has been abrupt and at times overwhelming. Many have found the statement, "OCS is a world apart from the rest of the Army" as being only too true.

For the "college-op's" the prior service candidates often lend a stabilizing influence to the atmosphere with their military knowledge, experience and bearing.

Doty is a former Special Forces light weapons team leader with two tours in South Vietnam, four years in Special Forces, and six years in the Army. He is participating in the program to advance his military career and because of the challenge OCS offers. At this stage of the program he describes OCS as being "physically and mentally demanding in order to cause individuals to perform under pressure." Once commissioned he plans to return to Special Forces combat duty.

Doty is the recipient of the Silver Star, Bronze Star with V-2, Air Medal, Army Commendation Medal, Purple Heart (11 times), Vietnamese Campaign with 4 stars, Vietnamese Gallantry Cross, the Combat Infantry Badge, United States and Vietnamese paratrooper wings, and four unit citations.

Wanke is a former sales representative for Continental Can Company, a graduate of Farleigh Dickenson University, and has served four years and four months in the Marine Corps as an aviation technician. He served with the 513th Fighter Squadron which set a Navy Marine Corps record by flying 770 combat hours in one month in Vietnam. Wanke came into the service "in order to pursue a vocation that would be both fulfilling and challenging." He feels that "by creating a challenge the tactical officers are better able to evaluate the potentials of the Officer Candidate."

Gonsalves is an E-6 with seven years in the Army. He has had tours of duty in Germany, Korea, South Vietnam. In Vietnam he was a Ranger teamleader with the 1st Co., 75th Rangers. He was the Distinguished Honor Graduate and Commandants' Inspection designee I Corps NCO Academy. He also was an honor graduate of Advance Combat Training Academy in 1969. Gonsalves is in the program to further his career and for the challenge and opportunity it offers. He feels OCS is "basically a very good course, with excellent instruction, and outstanding leadership evaluation by tactical officers."

Gonsalves also sees a need for more intense screening procedures and more prior training than just BCT before OCS.

Awards and medals won by OC Gonsalves are the Bronze Star, Army Commendation Medal with V Device (2nd award), Air Medal, and the Combat Infantryman's Badge.

These are but three of the prior service candidates in 50th Company who through their experience and leadership are helping pave the way for those seeking to uphold the "Follow Me" tradition.

Operation Friendship welcomes educators

The U.S. Army Infantry School at Fort Benning opened its doors Nov. 11 to Georgia State University President Noah Langdale and some 33 of his faculty members and graduate students.

The visit, sponsored by the Army's "Operation Friendship" program, was intended to promote "an exchange of educational ideas, experiences and concepts" between the civilian and military educators, according to Lt. Col. Charles Mendoza, organizer of the visit. Mendoza, a former staff officer at the Infantry School, is currently a doctoral candidate in education at Georgia State.

Operation Friendship is a continuing Army wide program intended to inform civic, professional, and business leaders at the local level of the diversity, readiness, and training of the modern Army. Fort Benning has played host to several such groups in the past.

Dr. Langdale's group, consisting largely of doctoral-level students in education, encompassed a cross section of Georgia religious, professional and educational leaders, including many college and secondary school teachers and administrators, according to Mendoza.

The group received briefings on educational plans and research, the Infantry School's electives program, and contemporary problems in leadership. Visited by the group were the School's "computer assisted instruction" classrooms, and the new Individual Learning Center, where students use teaching machines to advance at their own pace.

Occupational Therapy Clinic

By Roger Pavey

Have you ever dropped anything or fallen down or had a difficult time concentrating on something? Or have you ever found it hard to sit still. . .Sure, we have all experienced these things and never really given them a second thought.

But these things are all symptoms of a very serious problem that strikes almost one-third of the child population. It's not a disease or a sickness, nor is it any form of mental illness. "It's simply a dysfunction of the perceptual motor system," says Capt. Judith Linton, head of the occupational therapy (O.T.) clinic at Martin Army Hospital.

The clinic is designed for children who may have difficulties that stem from an inability to sense, percieve, or interpret their surroundings. These affected children may eventually have severe difficulty in learning to read, or distinguish left from right. The child is also easily distracted and has problems in learning as well as falling and tripping. "In short," says Linton, "these children are seriously uncoordinated and in most cases unable to play at all."

Most of the children are referred to the clinic by pediatricians, neurologists, psychologists, optometrists and teachers. "Once we get them," states Linton, "we give them a battery of tests (7-8) and derive from the results what is specifically wrong with the child."

"Most of the time these children see everything at the same intensity. So if a teacher forgets to erase the blackboard the child can't distinguish what is being taught and what has already been taught. It's as if I told you to go to the refrigerator and get a stick of butter and when you opened the door your mind couldn't tell the difference between the butter or the eggs. Its all because their mind sees everything at the same intensity," says Linton.

"We try to bombard their systems," adds Linton, "with different situations. Now they not only see circles, figures or letters but touch them as well. For instance, when we teach the alphabet the children first spell a word then step on each letter in the word. This way the child sees the letter, and touches it with his foot, and then has to use his joints and muscles to get to the next letter. So by the time he spells the word four different stimuli have helped reinforce the spelling in his mind."

One of the main points stressed during the weekly half hour sessions at the clinic is the parent-child combination. This is done so the parent can view both the child's progress as well as help him along during his home exercises. The members of the clinic staff all felt that the child/parent relationship is the most vital contribution to the changing of the child's condition.

When asked if the clinic had any easily recognizable signs of success, Linton remarked, "Not one of these kids could jump rope when they first came for treatment. Now they're really good!"

Christmas sets stage at Callaway

Christmas at Callaway Gardens, in Georgia, is a melding of traditional 17th Century Yuletide with special 20th Century sports and activities. The gardens are located in a rolling setting of abundant trees and lakes with a finesse and authenticity closely akin to nature's. That's why Christmas finds such an immediate home in this development, 70 miles southwest of Atlanta.

The holiday spirit is ushered in with the lighting of a 65-foot Christmas tree and continues for nine fun-packed days until the Southern New Years "ritual" dinner of black-eyed peas and hog jowl. There is something planned for everyone of every age and interest.

Callaway Garden's Christmas season came into prominence five seasons ago and each year more activities are added.

To set the pace for the Yuletide season, the Emory University Glee Club and Women's Chorale presents an arrangement of 17th Century English Christmas Carols at the Gardens Clubhouse. The tree lighting comes next in front of the Clubhouse along with an original version of bringing in the Yule log. The log is placed then lighted in the fireplace where it burns throughout th season.

Planned are special programs on flower arranging with a Christmas flair, bird study walks and workshops, organ concerts, and the retelling of the Christmas Story at the Ida Cason Callaway Memorial Chapel.

Guided tours are arranged through 2,500-acres of gardens which are especially spectacular at the Christmas season because of the large collection of hollies, more than 400 different varieties representing one of the largest displays in the U.S.

Trips are planned to Roosevelt's Little White House at Warm Springs, the Mill Store and Hat Shop in the textile community of LaGrange, and there's even a bicycle tour of the gardens on New Year's Day. There are interesting hikes along the nature trails, visits to a covered bridge, 160-year old log cabin, and the new Observation Conservatory Greenhouse.

The weather is so nice at the Gardens this time of year, outdoor spots attract many. The activities include golf—Callaway's 63 holes, three 18 hole courses and a nine-hole par 31. The Holiday Golf Program offers clinics, driving contests, tournaments and putting matches. There are tennis courts where tournaments and clinics are conducted, skeet and trap clinics; and fishing for the entire family on the 175-acre Mountain Creek Lake. For the hunter, there is quail hunting.

Caroling and fellowship by the guests of the Inn on Christmas Eve brings Santa Claus of his annual visit. His arrival by the pony-drawn sleigh high lights the evening for every boy and girl. Each guest receives a gift from Santa.

Synopsis

LAWMAN (Rated GP), Jered Maddox (Burt Lancaster), Marshal of the New Mexico town of Bannock, arrives in a nearby town, Sabbath, to take back seven men for the accidental killing of an old man.

Maddox tells the Marshal of Sabbath, Robert Ryan, that he wants them brought in and ready to travel by noon the next day. Ryan, a small-town Marshal, has sold out to wealthy rancher, Lee J. Cobb and says he can not go against Cobb and his men, who comprise Maddox's list.

Maddox finds himself in an alien community, with a weak and sold-out Marshal and the task of bringing back seven men who have no intention of going back freely. The worn down mainstreet of the South Western town explodes into a doomed tragedy of revenge and pride. Nobody wins.

It makes no difference to the men already in the dust. This action-packed Western shows the West as it really was, a harsh and pitiless place, where only the strong and the ruthless survived and violence was a way of life.

ROMANCE OF A HORSETHIEF (Rated DP), Malava, a small Polish border town between Russia and Germany, enjoys an economy based mainly on horseflesh in 1904. When Cossack Capt. Yul Brynner orders all horses confiscated for the Soviet - Japanese conflict, the Jewish peasants face ruin.

Oliver Tobias, son of horse dealer David Opatoshu, romances Countess Linda Veras in exchange for Arabian stallions. While Brynner is entertained by madame Lainie Kazan, Tobias and horsethief Eli Wallach remove the stallions from her borders.

The Cossacks are then visited by Opatoshu disguised as an officer ordering drastic measures to avoid an "epidemic." Brynner manages to turn his defeat into personal victory as his adversaries cross the border.

Although nude scenes are done for laughs, the sensibilities of some may be offended.

THE HAWAIIANS (Rated GP), The present story, a continuation of James A. Michener's epic novel, stars Charlton Heston as Whip Hoxworth, a man of the sea and an avid exploiter of its possibilities both illicit and otherwise.

Geraldine Chaplain plays the part of Purity, his tender wife, who is unable to understand him and denies herself to him.

John Phillip Law portrays their son Noel, who rebels against family and fortune. Supporting roles are performed by Mako, Tina Chen and Alec Mc-Cowen with a brilliant musical score by three time Oscar Winner Henry Mancini.

THE LAST RUN (Rated GP), Academy Award Winner, George C. Scott plays retired gangster, Harry Garmes, a cynical, clever wheelman for a Chicago mob who takes one last assignment that becomes a desperate race against the law and the underworld.

Scott's first job for a gang in nine years is to drive escaped convict Tony Musante, across Spain to France. Musante has Scott drive him to see Trish Van Devere, his mistress, and an attachment grows between Scott and the young girl.

When it becomes apparent that Musante's gang arranged a jail break only to kill him, Scott disposes of several of the gang and the "run" evolves into flight and pursuit over torturous mountain roads in one of the most dangerous high speed chases ever filmed.

THE RETURN OF COUNT YORGA (Rated (GP), Court Yorga (Robert Quarry) is invited to a masquerade party given by Rev. Tom Toner who runs an orphanage in Southern California. The other guests include pretty Maritte Hartley and her fiance, Roger Perry.

The best "stereo value" in town:

Individually, each of the components in our four hundred twenty-five dollar system has created a new standard of sound-per-dollar stereo value. Together, these components will provide you with more quality sound and reliability than you could have bought a year ago for over five hundred dollars.
The smaller Advent loudspeakers are the only speakers costing less than the now-famous original Advent Loudspeakers which can produce the entire musical range. Most inexpensive speakers cannot produce the lowest octaves of music; the lowest strings of a double bass or electric bass guitar, the lowest pipes of a pipe organ. The Smaller Advent can.
The Nikko 6010 AM-FM stereo receiver has enough power to satisfy both you and the Advents. It produces 25 watts RMS per channel, across the entire musical range, at less than 0.5% total distortion (RMS is the most demanding and least flashy of the various powerrating systems.) The tuner sections will separate weaker stations on a crowded dial from their brawnier neighboring stations and receive them with an amazing fullness and clarity.
To match the quality and reliability that the Nikko 6010 and the Advent represent, we recommend the Garrard Automatic Turntable with a Stanton Broadcast Series cartridge. The Garrard has a heavy platter, a convenient cueing control and comes with a dustcover and base.
Come to the Sound Center this week. You'll be surprised how much quality sound your four hundred twenty-five dollars can buy.

Try outs set for 'Spirit'

Halloween has come and past but ghosts are still lurking in the Benning Playhouse. These shades are Noel Coward's delightful characters in "Blithe Spirit." To put these restless souls to rest, Dennis Seely is directing a production of this British comedy. Tryouts will be Dec. 2, 3, and 4 at 7:30 p.m. in the Benning Playhouse.

"Blithe Spirit" will be a new experience for the Dramatizers who have leaned to musicals and dramas. Director Seely has high hopes for this production because it will be Fort Benning's entry in the 1972 3rd U.S. Army Tournament of Plays. He encourages all interested military, dependents, and civilians to come to tryouts Dec. 2, 3, and 4.

Titus Range prepared for USAIB

The 43rd Engr. Bn., 931st Engr. Gp., is busy preparing Titus Range at Fort Benning for a new Clothing and Equipment Testing Facility to be operated by the Infantry Board.

Co. C of the battalion is currently clearing land at the range for elaborate obstacle and grenade courses and widening a road leading to the facility.

Electronic instruments are being transported from a testing facility at Ft. Lee, Va., so that the facility could be relocated here.

The purpose of the test area is to provide information to the Infantry Board regarding the performance of soldiers wearing different types of uniforms and carrying various equipment.

Advanced monitoring devices, much like the telemetric systems used in outerspace research, will be installed to provide accurate information on the performance of participants.

According to 1st Lt. Norman L. Hall Jr., construction officer of Co. C, photo cells and pressure pads, among other electronic measuring devices, will be used in the facility to record the speed and effectiveness of soldiers completing the challenging courses.

The 2,000-feet test course will include man-made obstacles including jump pits and climbing structures familiar to Ranger school graduates, in addition to electronically monitored grenade ranges. Various other tests will be conducted to examine several phases of soldiering, including man's ability to dig a foxhole quickly under varying conditions.

The 43rd began work on the few facility Sept. 20 during its Operational Readiness Training Test, and resumed land clearing this month.

The Engineers will build the obstacles and structures needed throughout the testing range, including the concrete bases for the electronic sensors. In addition, the construction specialists will erect a maintenance shed and sanitary facilities.

It is planned, Hall said that the facility will be completed by April, next year.

USAIB is expanding its testing facilities

The US Army Infantry Board is expanding its test facilities as a result of the acquisition of some of the General Equipment Test Activity's test functions.

The General Equipment Test Activity (GETA) at Ft. Lee, Va., will be dislocated and its test workload distributed to several US Army Test and Evaluation Command test boards. The Infantry Board will reorganize and assume the functions of GETA's Clothing and Equipment Test Facility (CETF) along with forming a Human Factor's Branch.

The purpose of the CETF is to provide objective data regarding the effects of personal clothing and equipment on the individual Infantry soldier.

The CETF consists of seven courses designed to evaluate the performance of Infantrymen under simulated combat conditions while performing tasks essential to combat success.

Sensors currently used to monitor the Infantryman's performance in each of these tasks include photocells, pressure sensitive pads, acoustical miss distance devices, and hit transducers.

A centralized computer and data collections systems permits simultaneous operation of all performance courses and allows rapid recording and summarization of the data generated on the courses.

Construction for relocating the CETF is currently underway. The new test facility will be located adjacent to the Infantry Board's existing instrumented test facilities and will become part of the Kunzig Range Complex.

Included with the move of the CETF with GETA is a prototype of an experimental physiological telemetry system that will attempt to provide continuous monitoring of test participants under dynamic field conditions.

(Sports Sect. 2, 3, and 4)

Special Services conduct 2 basketball leagues

By Roger Pavey

The Washington "Deadskins", or so they seemed at the end of last season, have become this years' surprise of the National Football League. Buried deep in the cellar among the rubble of last seasons also-rans, the Skins, under the new direction of George Allen have turned the tables on the rest of the league.

What has been the key to success for the men of Allen? In my estimation its been the shrewedness of the ex-Ram boss. No less than 17 of the starting 22 have been obtained through trades engineered by the head Skin. Although he has traded away virtually all of his high draft choices for the next three years, he has built a winner.

Dubbed by many sportswriters as the "over the hill gang" they have reached the seasons halfway point in second place. Thus, trailing the preseason favorite Dallas Cowboys in the race towards the Super Bowl, by a half game. Although Allen has been second guessed by every "expert" in the country he has proved that a team of unwanted veterans can win, but more importantly want to win.

Allen himself, unwanted by Dan Reeves, owner of the Los Angeles Rams, took with him one-third of the Rams highly touted defense. He also picked up Billy Kilmer a much traveled and questionable quarterback in what proved to be his best move. As if he possessed ESP Allen traded for the backup man for insurance against injury to Sonny Jurgenson. And as fate would have it this was the best policy Allen could have bought, For the once inept Kilmer is the NFC's leading passer.

Other trades were made to bolster the once weak defense and Allen has molded his orphaned team of veterans into the leagues leading unit. He also traded for accomplished receivers to team with the great Charlie Taylor, this too proved to be hindsight, for Taylor also became a victim of injuries.

Although speculation ran wild during the preseason George Allen has added a new dimension to the city of Washington. Beset by tragedy and hardluck Washington was in desperate need of a shot in the arm. Staggered by the tragic death of Vince Lombardi the nation's capital mourned through much of the 1970 season. Interest in the Redskins fell off as well as their play.

The city of Washington was also involved in constant turmoil over the gage of the Washington Senators. After two years of constant baggling it was decided that they would leave the capital for the sunny lands of Dallas-Fort Worth. This untimely move brought about much speculation from the members of congress as well as the citizens of Washington. As to the very nature of professional sports. Too much emphasis on money and no loyalty in return, this was the cry of the Washington sports fan.

So with the coming of George Allen and his band of rejects the people of Washington have their first winner in many a year. Although the Redskins may not reach the Super Bowl or the playoffs; they still have revitalized a city.

In this day and age too many things are impersonal and the need for a "Cinderella" is always there. With the recent success of the Skins there lies hope for other professional teams, as well as the city in which they make their home. For George Allen has brought his team and the city together, a feat accomplished by his shrewedness, as well as his players.

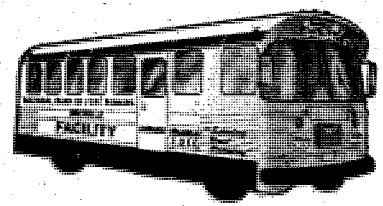
Under heavy criticism for trading his precious draft choices Allen stuck to his guns and formed a team. His team is not just a roster of people who happen to play football, but a handpicked team of winners. The pride instilled by Allen has carried them farther than the natural talent possessed by many other clubs.

Although in recent weeks the Redskins have found the going a little tougher; they proved that if a team wants to win badly enough they will. It only goes to show you that the will of a person or group of persons is stronger than the talent they are given. No, the Washington Redskins are not dead. . . they are very much alive. Just ask the rest of the Eastern Division, especially the Dallas Cowboys. And maybe, just maybe the Indians may end up as the good guys. . .

The Post Special Services Division will supervise two basketball leagues at Fort Benning and organize a post team to participate in a 3rd US Army league during basketball season scheduled to begin next week.

Post basketball players will have the opportunity to play in a company or brigade level league on post or on the post team entered in the 3rd Army league.

The company level league will be made up of teams composed of players who are assigned to one company level unit. The brigade league will be made up of players representing one of the six major units on post. The team the post enters in the 3rd Army tournament will consist of the best players assigned to post units and will compete with teams representing other installations in the 3rd Army area.



Nine teams will play in the company level league. School Brigade and the 931st Engineer Group are each authorized to enter two teams. Medical Department Activities, Headquarters Command and the USAIC Aviation Command will each enter one team. Each major command is required to conduct intra-command elimination tournaments to determine their representative in the post tournament.

The Brigade level league will be played from Nov. 29 through Feb. 10. Games will be played at Briant Wells Field House or the Kelley Hill Gymnasium on Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings.

League play will be divided into two halves. The winner of each half will be determined by the won-loss average of the teams entered in the league. The winner of each half will play a two out of three game series to determine the post championship.

The post team will play in the Western Division of the 3rd Army League. League play will consist of a series of home games and games away from home against other 3rd Army installations. Home games will be played at Briant Wells Field House on Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons. League play is scheduled to start Dec. 3. Special Services will publish a schedule prior to that time.

Interested personnel may obtain additional information from the Sports Section, Special Services Division, 545-1516.

15th Finance challanges Predicto

Ah yes, PFC Predicto is still prevailing over the paltry pickins of the post's pigskin prognosticators. Although beaten this week by the ballhawking men of Co. Ops, Predicto will once again rise to victory in this weeks mashing of the midfielders. The psychic seer of the stadium will undoubtedly score another smashing success this week as I am challanged by the men of 15th Finance. The well-oiled oracles will undoubtedly outscore the opposition in this weeks grueling gridiron grudge games. You too can attempt to stump the sterling star of stadium stats by dialing 543-3622 and phoning the fantastic football fouler of fanatical fortune. Just ask for Cocky Concector!

HHC blanks Co. A for championship

The 197th Infantry Brigade was well represented in the Fort Benning Flag Football Tournament. Both finalist teams, HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf., and Co. A, (Admin) are representatives of the 197th Infantry Brigade. The two teams locked horns Wednesday night to determine the Post Championship.

The lone score of the evening came in the closing minutes of the first half. HHC's Milton Johnson hit speedster, James Patterson, who never broke stride on a 40 yard pass pattern to pay dirt. Johnson's extra attempo flew slightly over the outstreached hands of Kenneth Flowers to put the score at 6-0.

Error-plagued Co. A couldn't get it all together the rest of the night. Everytime their offense started to move HHC would make an intereception or contain them on downs and force the punt.

Congratulations are in order to all participants of the Post Championship. Fine team spirit and sportsmanship prevailed throughout the tournament, which is a tribute to the outstanding mental and physical conditions of the team members involved.

Five handgun records established at Phillips Range

Five new National Pistol records were established during competition at Phillips Range Nov. 18 through 21, it was disclosed this week by Col. Robert M. Piper, U. S. Army Marksmanship Training Unit (USAMTU) commander.

Three of the handgun records were set by MTU marksmen when they exceeded the old marks in both the Open and Service categories in the Service Pistol team match and another Service record when they beat out the Free Pistol team mark by 18 points, previously held by the Marine Corps.

The fourth and fifth records were set when young John T. McNally, the 15 year old son of SFC and Mrs. James McNally fired a new Junior High mark in the Rapid Fire Pistol half course in International competition, and the All Army Reserve team set a record books with their 1148 in Service Pistol competition. Young McNally's father is a member of the MTU pistol team.

The four days of handgun competition included two days of an International Invitational (four-gun) tournament which was followed by the two-day Monthly Open Handgun Tournament which featured a 2700 three gun Short Course Grand Aggregate and and a Service Pistol NRA Short Course aggregate with team matches.

In the International competition, SFC Hershel Anderson claimed the Free Pistol Championship with 551, SFC Bonnie Harmon took the Center Fire Pistol with 393, SSgt. Jimmy McCauley grabbed the Rapid Fire Pistol with a near record of 592 and Anderson forged to the front of the one hundred odd competitors to take the Standard Pistol match with 581.

International competition in team action saw the U. S. Army "Blue" team take the Rapid Fire Pistol with 2326, the Standard Pistol with 2299 and set the new record in Free Pistol with 1109. The U. S. Army "Gray" posted the winning score of 2306 to take the Center Fire Pistol match. The Blue and Gray teams are fielded by the Army Marksmanship Training Unit.

SFC Hershel Anderson, after winning half of the International pistol matches, overcame the adverse elements of high gusting winds and a large mixed field of competitors to win the 2700 Grand Aggregate Championship in national competition with his 2656-12XX. He needed every X as he was hard pressed by companion shooter, SFC John Sicinski who also posted 2656 but could muster only 101 in the X or very center of the bullseye. SFC Bonnie Harmon was only two points back for third place honors.

In the National competition team events, the USAMTU "Gray" grabbed the 22 Caliber Pistol with 1172-52 and the 45 Caliber Pistol with 1178-41 while their companion "Blue" team set a new record in the Service Pistol team effort with their 1157-35 while the All Army Reserve team captured the Center Fire Pistol championship with 1169-39, one point off a National record.

The large group of competitors included representatives from Eglin and Moody AFB, Ft. Rucker, Ala., Ft. Bragg, N. C., top civilian shooters from Georgia and the surrounding area, the All Army Reserve team, a 3rd Army team and a Fort Benning post team. Top Master civilian competitor was Joseph Sargis, Columbus Director of Safety, who won his category in the 2700 Grand Aggregate when he posted a 2516.

The four days series of matches was sponsored by the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club with all the matches being registered by the National Rifle Association.

Former N.Y. Yankee, NCO candidate

It's a line drive into center field, Sanchez races to position and makes final play to end the game.

That's the way it was when NCO Candidate Anthony M. Sanchez, 81st Co., 8th Bn., The School Brigade (TSB), played baseball.

Back at Santa Ana Valley High School, Sanchez won the titles of Most Valuable Player, All League, and all County. Success did not end so soon for during his senior year he received five offers from some of the top Western state colleges: New Mexico State, Washington State, Arizona State, San Diego State and the University of Irvine. Quite a decision, yet something interfered to make the decision even more difficult, a letter from the New York Yankees requesting Sanchez to join their Farm Club.

"Opportunity knocks but once," said the star, "and this might be it, I thought. So, during the Spring of '69, I found myself advancing up the ladder to the level of playing 'triple A' ball."

After completing a good season, Sanchez' average was a sound .297 but he felt he wasn't doing such a good job and quit the team.

"Something came over me and I knew that I had to leave. I wanted very much to go into police work and operations." Sanchez spent three and one half years at Fullerton State, Santa Ana College, as a Police Science Major but he continued to be drawn back to basekball.

Sanchez found himself playing Semi-pro ball for the Los Angeles "Fonda's" during his summer vacation. "Problems at home required that I end my career as a pro ball player even though someday I hope to return."

"Just before entering the Army, I coached a Pony League team in Santa Ana and, by the way, the name of the team was the "Yankees."

Three teams deadlocked for first in Avn. Cmd. basketball play

The Aviation Command Basketball League is in full swing and off to a good start are the 609th Tran. Co., the 205th Assault Support Helicopter Co. and the Aviation Command-Headquarters each with a 2-0 record. All three teams have players with the experience to put the points on the score board. The 399th Trans. Det. and the 197th Av. Co. are next in the league standings each with a 1-1 record. Following the 399th and the 197th are the 931st Engineer Group (Aviation Platoon) and the USAIB each with three losses.

Those interested in viewing the games are reminded that they are held on every Tuesday and Thursday at the Briant Wells Field House between 2:30 and 4 p.m.

Columbus downs TSB 88-80

The School Brigade (TSB) Basketball Team got an early and fast start in the season.

On Oct. 4, the TSB team traveled to Columbus College to take on the school Varsity Team. The TSB players had practiced together only four days prior to the College game but still managed to start with a seven point lead.

As the time in the first half ran out, Columbus College mustered its strength and dropped 5 quick baskets for a 10 point advantage.

In the second half, TSB was hurt by the Columbus College fast breaks but still was able to hold the highly-organized college team to a final score of 88-80 (game-Columbus College). Max Miller was the high scorer on the TSB team with 16 points to his credit.

Coach-player of the TSB Basketball Team, is confident that with more practice the team will be a major contender in the Post Inter-unit games. Three former Firststring West Point basketball players, Doug Clevenger, Mike Ebberson, and Steve Lewis, will be among the TSB starting team. Horase Ellison and Russ Carroll will also lead the team.

TSB will open their basketball season with the 297th Brigade Team Monday. Following games will include a clash with the Auburn University Freshman Team on Dec. 4.

Make sure of targets

Hunters are cautioned that ranger type military training is conducted in Quitman, Stewart and Randolph Counties.

The military personnel will be difficult to see because of their olive drab uniform and camouflage.

Hunters are urged to be especially alert and make positive identification of targets before firing.

Hunters who fail to become familiar with Post Regulations are keeping the game wardens busy these days.

The wardens find all kinds of regulation violations. Most of the violators aren't trying to take advantage of loopholes or get away with something. The regulations most frequently violated are ones put into effect for the safety of individuals.

Wearing improper headgear, hunting in closed areas, carrying loaded weapons in vehicles and hunting along roads and trails from a vehicle are among the most common violations.

All hunters are required to wear bright red, yellow or international orange colored head-covering during the hunting season. This is a minimum requirement. A season hr anyone else in the field during the hunting season should also wear some other brightly colored outer garment to help make certain he is not mistaken for game. This type apparel won't increase your chance of getting game but it should increase our chances of being around to hunt next season.

Hunting in a closed area is just about the most dangerous thing a man can do on this reservation. Some areas are closed for the safety of troops training in the area but more frequently they are closed for the safety of the hunter. Hunters going into closed areas may meet with duds, small arms or artillery fire none of which are going to add much to the pleasure of the day.

Each day the Range Control Office posts maps located at the Rod and Gun Club, The Provost Marshal Office and Range Control Office. These maps show areas that may be hunted and areas that are off limits. Post regulations require that every hunter check one of these maps before hunting. Just remember its for your safety.

Carrying loaded weapons in vehicles and hunting from vehicles is in violation of several regulations and one of the most dangerous things a man can do on a hunting trip. A big percentage of the hunting casualties each year result from these practices. It doesn't take a very vivid imagination to visualize the many ways in chich this practice is dangerous.

All of the post regulations ar eoutlined in the literature a hunter gets when the Rod and Gun Club attendant issues his post hunting permit. All hunters must have a post permit so ignorance of the regulations is no excuse.

Rod and Gun Fishing Derby

The action is still extremely slow in the Rod and Gun Club November Fishing Derby. I can't remember when the contest has gone so far in the month without some pretty good entries in all categories.

Doris Holliman, wife of first sergeant Jerry Holliman, 197th Brigade is the top contender in the catfish contest with a six and three quarter pound entry but according to Tom McCullough, club custodian there have been no entries in the bream or bass contests.

Each month the Rod and gun club awards prizes to the members registering the largest bass, bream and catfish. A $15 merchandise order is given to the winner of each category. Contestants must register at the club before going fishing, catch the fish at one of the post ponds and bring it back to the club for weighing and registration.

With the entries being as slow as they are this month it would pay to put the shot gun aside this weekend and give the fishing tackle a workout.

Deer Hunting Contest.

According to Roy Johnson, chief of the Post Fish and Game Unit, hunters have registered 244 deer at the unit check station in Harmony Church. This is a record number for three weeks of hunting and some of the deer taken on the reservation probably didn't get to the check station.

Quiet a few not only got to the Fish and Game check point. They were also entered in the Rod and Gun Club deer hunting contest.

SSgt. Charles Wallace and Ronnie Cavins, dependent son of MSgt. (ret) James Cavin have registered the deer with the most number of points. Last week we reported that the buck registered by Wallace had 11

Dissent, addiction, racial friction, morale send chaplains back to basic

The critical problems of dissent, drug addiction, racial friction and sagging morale are sending Army chaplains back to school for "basic training" in applying psychological techniques to G.I. tensions.

Chaplains were oriented in group dynamics and individual counseling in a new approach to character guidance at a seminar Nov. 15 to 18 at Fort Benning. Twenty-four chaplains attended the seminar, the local coordinator of which was Lt. Col. Richard Nybro, of the Infantry Center Chapel.

The program was conducted by Reed and Di Salvo Associates, an organization specializing in the development of human resources in business and industry as well as in the military and various organizations.

Roland R. Reed, vice president and director of manpower development, introduced the chaplains to a group-dynamics program his organization is conducting under contract to the Army at key bases in the United States, Europe and the Far East. Seminars already have been conducted at a number of posts across the country.

Reed is a Presbysterian minister who served as a Marine Corps corporal in World War II. A psychothevist and pastoral counselor, he attempts to help individuals and groups find ways to solve their problems.

During the Fort Benning seminar chaplains heard a series of orientation lectures and participated in small-group discussions of the type that they, in turn, will conduct later among soldiers and their families.

Earlier introductory seminars were conducted in New York for the top-ranking administrative chaplains and in Washington for supervisory chaplains. The New York sessions were attended by Maj. Gen. Gerhardt W. Hyatt, the new Army chief of chaplains, who said recently th drug abuse and racial tensions are the most serious behavioral problems confronting Army chaplains in their ministry to the American soldier.

Because these and other concerns are basically human relations problems, he said, the Army is taking a new approach to training its clergy. Instead of lecturing or preaching on moral issues, as the chaplain has in the past, the general said, he is now being educated to lead his men in small-group discussions in which they try to work out their own solutions to their frictions and problems.

The work assigned to Reed and Di Salvo is part of this new approach, Hyatt said.

General Describes Dynamic Training

FT. BENNING, Ga. (ANF)—The following is an open letter from Brig. Gen. Paul F. Gorman, president of the new U.S. Army Board for Dynamic Training:

We all know that meaningful combat training, of its nature, is exciting. But it is still a great day when the U.S. Army commits itself to promoting the fun-element in soldiering. Moreover, the decentralization of training gives battalion commanders the latitude they need to devise an interestingly varied and instructive program, precision tailored for their unit's situation and mission.

Modern Volunteer Army

An essential part of General Westmoreland's drive toward exciting, meaningful training, is the formation of a Board for Dynamic Training at Ft. Benning. It is tasked to find new ways of providing better support for trainers of the combat arms at battalion and lower level.

The Board for Dynamic Training has been at work since early September. It has surveyed every division in the Active Army, and most units of the Reserve Components, to find out how it can be most useful in solving problems, or in sharing with trainers good solutions to such problems.

The Board is studying and may act in three areas: training techniques, training devices and efficient training management.

For example, within the next few months the Board expects to publish a catalog of training techniques. Through the catalog's "mail order service," the small unit trainer will be given access to the best thought on techniques of great trainers of the past, to the expertise of the combat arms schools, and to ideas of his contemporaries.

The Board wants and needs your ideas. If you have a training problem, complaint or suggestion, tell us about it. If you have conducted great training, and think others might profit from your experience, let us hear about it. If you've invented a training aid, and want to share it, let us know. We need good training documents: copies of training circulars, notes, programs, plans or blueprints.

We're interested in being helpful, and we need your help in identifying problems or flagging solutions. Write us at Board for Dynamic Training, Ft. Benning, Ga. 31905, or call us AUTOVON: 255-4515 or 255-4411.

Argentine naval officer in IOAC 2-72

Although Maj. Carlos Edmundo Sosa is a student in the Infantry Officer Advanced Course at Fort Benning, his talent, experiences and background are more than those of the ordinary soldier. The routine by being a not only does he break lieutenant commander in the Argentine Navy attending a course with Army career officers, he also boasts such distinctions as painter-artist, antique collector, swimming enthusiast, and barbecue specialist.

Maj. Sosa, as he likes to be called while in the U.S. also holds the position of senior allied officer in Infantry Officer Advanced Class 2-72, ranking over 19 other allied officers. He looks forward to being promoted very shortly to the Naval rank of commander, which is comparable to a lieutenant colonel in the Army.

The military career of this Argentine naval officer shows a variety of assignments, including professor at the Technical School, commanding officer for an infantry battalion, and later he served as an aide to the Secretary of the Argentine Navy.

Upon returning to his country, Sosa will resume his previous assignment as chief of the Department of Doctrine on the Argentine Navy staff in Buenos Aires. All total, Sosa has logged 24 years in his country's service, having graduated in 1953 from the Santiago.

Sosa's outside interests Navy Academy in Rio are also varied. He enjoys swimming, the sport in which he excelled as a young officer and won several national titles.

In the area of humanicanvas style to that of Picasso. However, he modestly disclaims any real expertise in art. If not painting, Sosa might be found in his hobby workshop where he likes to restore old furniture and antiques.

Carlos, the major's son, attends Spencer High School in Columbus as an 11th grade student. His likes, similar to his father's, run along the humanities. The major's daughter, Maria, attends Eddy Junior High School in the eighth grade. Having had intensive schooling in Argentina, both are very capable in dealing with the English language.

Elizabeth Elena, Sosa's wife, has been active in helping her family adjust to life in the United States. She plans to advance her education by attending Columbus College.

The Sosas are living in the South Columbus area. They bring warmth and friendship from their native land to the people in the United States.

The Sosas will return to Argentina next summer.

Communications is key

Communications is your key to control. Once a combat operation is in progress, your ability to communicate effects the amount of control you can exercise over your subordinate unit. In a fire fight, it usually determines the amount of support you receive, when and where you need it. The combat-leader must be able to effectively plan and employ the various means of communications available to him.

Tactical military forces in the arena of modern warfare are increasingly dependant upon communication and electronic devices for both mobility and operational control. Therefore communications is a critical factor of command and control.

GI education benefits more popular for Viet veterans than for veterans of previous wars

GI education benefits are more popular among Vietnam veterans than they were among veterans of the Korean Conflict, A. W. Tate, Director of the Atlanta VA Regional Office said on his return from a three day conference with top VA officials in Washington, D. C.

Enrollment under the GI Bill is up 39 per cent over last year Tate said, and VA officials are exploring new ways to expand it even more.

Tate met with Administrator of Veterans Affairs, Donald E. Johnson, and his Chief Benefits Director, Olney Owen, Nov. 3, 4, and 5, at Washington's Sheraton Park Hotel in meetings that brought together the Directors of VA's 58 Regional Offices, 165 Hospitals and six independent Outpatient Clinics.

More than 2.7 million veterans and servicemen already have used the current GI Bill in its just over five years of existence, Tate disclosed that he was told, and this exceeds the 2.4 million trainees under the 13 years the Korean GI Bill was in effect.

With Veterans Administration budgets increased to a record $10.9 billion for Fiscal Year 1972, the agency is deeply involved in programs of paramount national interest — such as decreasing unemployment among veterans and providing health care and other benefits for the Nation's 28.5 million veterans.

"Because unemployment is greatest among veterans with the least edueation, VA is actively encouraging veterans to take advantage of their education benefits in some form," the Regional Office Director said.

These benefits support college level study — with tutorial assistance when necessary. A veteran can draw benefits to complete high school and still have full entitlement to go on to college, or he can learn a trade in a technical school or through training on the job or on the farm. On-the-job training programs, Tate said, are being expanded in cooperation between VA and small businesses, and a program in progress only two months has already resulted in 8,000 new programs and 12,000 new job slots.

Studies presented at the conference, Tate said, bring out that education is the key factor in unemployment among veterans. The unemployment rate is highest among the veterans with the least education. For this reason, he said, VA has stepped up its effort to interest the disadvantaged in taking some form of training. Steps include predischarge counseling at military bases in the U. S. and overseas, and at least four follow-up contacts with each veteran who has not finished high school.

A fee of $40 is charged. Any dependents over 15 years of age who have a drivers license may be enrolled. Teen-agers will be given priority.

Compensation

"Compensation," VA payments to veterans and dependents for service-connected injury or death, is often confused with "pension" paid on the basis of need to veterans disabled from non-service connected causes.

Home loans

Veterans Administration home loan activities set a 14 year record high in FY 1971 with 25,000 G.I. loans guaranteed in the one month of June.

Q—Are there any income and credit requirements a veteran must meet in obtaining a VA loan for a mobile home?

A—No, there is no set income requirement. The terms of repayment of the loan, however, must bear a proper relationship to the veteran's or serviceman's present and anticipated income and expenses, and he must be a satisfactory credit risk.

Q—May a veteran who is receiving compensation from the VA arrange to pay a policy loan on his National Service Life Insurance set of this monthly benefit

A—Yes. It is a most convenient and relatively painless way to accomplish this repayment. VA Form 29-888, Insurance Deduction Authorization, available from any VA office, should be completed and sent to the office which has your insurance records.

Money available

VA says a veteran with a permanent plan G. I. insurance policy over one year old can borrow up to 94 per cent of its cash value.

In order to improve the personal financial service to the military personnel of Fort Benning, the Finance Office at Bldg., 85 will remain open from 6 p.m. to 10 p.m. each Wednesday.

U.S. Pentathlon team finishes third in world

A three-man United States Pentathlon team led by Air Force Capt. Loren Drum of Lackland AFB, Tex., placed third in the 1971 Modern Pentathlon World Championship held last month at Ft. Sam Houston, Tex. Last year's U.S. team placed fourth in the pentathlon held in Warendorf, Germany.

The five-event world athletic contest was dominated by competitors from the Soviet Union, who placed first, and Hungary, who finished second.

Individually, Captain Drum finished in eighth place and the two other U. S. members, Don Roth of Menlo Park, Calif., and Army Capt. Chuck Richards, finished ninth and twelfth, respectively.

There were 43 contestants from 16 nations competing in the tournament.

Events included riding horseback over a 1,000-meter course with a series of obstacles and jumps; fencing with an electrical epee; shooting a pistol at rotating targets from 25 meters; swimming freestyle for 300 meters; and running 2½ miles cross country.

The collective points gained by the U. S. team earned third place and a bronze medal, the first such award this country has won in world or Olympic pentathlon competition since 1964.

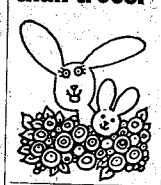
Horse show held at Benning



The 5th Annual Fall-Invitational Horse Show will be held at th Fort Benning Hunt Club on Dec. 4 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

There will be 20 western and English events with six ribbons to be awarded in each class. Entry fees are $2 per event if received by Monday and $3 per event after that date. Entry blanks are available at the Hunt Club office for those eligible to participate.

Col. Robert B. Tully is the chairman of the show and Maj. Donald L. Whitlock is the coordinator.

Ecology Bag

By Roger Pavey

A common scene around Fort Benning, now that Autumn is here, is the raking of leaves. Many Saturday and Sunday afternoons are taken up by this seemingly never-ending chore. The whole family gets into the act and Dad is forced to abandon his football games.

But there is a movement underway to change all this. And it is being started by the Explorer Scouts from Post 37 of the Fort Benning District. They, along with their sponsors from the 4th Stu. Bn., TSB, salvaged some 1,000 mattress covers and converted them into Ecology Bags.

The physical making of the bags was handled by the soldiers from the Parachute Maintenance Co. and the Canvas Repair Shop. Here they actually sewed together the bags and made them into usable containers.

Although the ecology bags were designed for leaves they can be used for almost anything from paper to trash.

Explorer Post 37 is not the only scouting post involved in the leaf pickup. They do however have all the bags, thus making it necessary for other interested scouting posts to contact them for the use of the bags. Once they receive the bags the post may inscribe their own lettering on the bag for recognition.

If the leaves are too deep in your yard and you have to watch the game don't hestitate to call the Scout Center at 545-1881 and ask to have your neighborhood scouting troop rake your leaves. The fee has been 50 cents a bag, and the money will be used for further scouting activities.

Hot soup is welcome

Although the weather is cold and wet, Airborne students of the 4th Battalion, The School Brigade (TSB), can look forward to having hot soup brought to the field to provide a little warmth and encouragement to "drive on." Soup is furnished to those men training in 'ground' or 'tower' week by their respective company messhalls.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT
by Bill King

If you're counting calories, remember that meats to be marinated can do their stint in a low-calorie dressing.

On the next cold night, serve hot tomato juice in mugs as an appetizer. Add a pinch of dillseed for extra flavor.

The French word "saute" means "jump", and refers to the method of cooking in which food is gently fried in a lightly greased skillet and turned or "jumped" over several times.

To slice Italian loaves or round vegetables such as onions, tomatoes or cucumbers, rotate the food slightly after each cut to help avoid diagonal slices.

To cook bacon for a crowd, separate the strips and place on a rack in a shallow pan near the top of a 400-degree oven until done. No turning or draining needed.

Sightseeing project ends

The men of Co. B, 43rd Engr. Bn., 93ist Engr. Gp., have just completed a three-week project designed to improve Sightseeing Road. The project involved widening the once-narrow road, clearing a 10-foot right-of-way and raising the road surface as much as three feet to prevent flooding, which, in the past, has made the road impassable.

The road surface was also made more durable.

In all, 30 men of Co. B., led by SFC Allen W. McCrimmon and SSgt. Phillip A. Heideman, moved over 18,000 cubic yards of earth and gravel from a pre-constructed borrow pit to be used on the project. Sightseeing Road is a main access route to the Leader's Reaction Course.

Capt. James A. Jarvis Jr., company commander, pointed out that in the process of improving the road an adjacent swamp was drained to help prevent periodic flooding. Jarvis also commented that the men like to work on field projects such as Sightseeing Road because, he explained, "It gives the men a chance to use their skills and to work with the equipment."

More EMs plan to stay in now

By Wendell Cochran

The Army has a generation gap all its own.

Attitude surveys indicate that more first term enlisted personnel now plan to stay in the Army than did in November 1970, when the Modern Volunteer Army program began at Fort Benning.

But, a November 1971 survey shows that more career enlisted personnel now intend to leave the service before their retirement eligibility date.

Among officers, the same trend holds true, although to a lesser extent.

The upturn in the number of first tour enlisted men who are considering making the Army a career has been steady since last November.

Then, only 1.4 per cent said they planned to stay for retirement. Now, that figure stands at 3.6 per cent.

The most dramatic rise, though, is in the number of who say they will stay for one more enlistment. Last year only 4.9 per cent of those surveyed were considering re-enlisting, compared to 10.6 per cent in November this year.

Overall, some 81.5 per cent of the first term enlisted personnel at Fort Benning planned to leave the service in November 1970. That figure has declined to 68.2 per cent.

However, career intentions of enlisted personnel already serving past their first tour, have fallen off.

Last November, 71.2 per cent said they would stay until they retired. This has declined to 66.4 per cent, according to the most recent survey.

However, 12.1 per cent of the extended enlisted personnel surveyed said they would take one more re-enlistment, compared to 9.6 per cent who said they were considering this in November 1970.

Altogether, some 14 per cent of the extended enlisted personnel now say they will leave the Army. At the beginning of the MVA experiment, this figure was 10.5 per cent.

'Beef Gilbert' to be heard on WCLS every Sunday

"This is Army Specialist Jim Gilbert, or better known as Beef Gilbert coming your way on WCLS. Today is the first Benning Sounds show, and I am coming to you lean, choice, tender and U. S. Government Inspected."

This is the way it began last Sunday when Fort Benning's newest radio program got its start. The Benning Sound is designed to better inform both the public and Fort Benning's soldiers on the happenings in and around the Phenix-City-Columbus-Fort Benning area.

The Benning Sound, which is similar to the Soul Sounds of VOLAR, got its start when WCLS station manager Charles Parish expressed a deep interest in this type of programming. The half-hour long program, which is aired every Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 9:30 a.m., features progressive rock music as well as general goings on at Fort Benning.

"Last week," says Gilbert, "we reminded the soldiers to make plane reservations early for Christmas leave. We also aired the hunting regulations and the sporting activities on post."

"As far as I could tell," added Gilbert, "the show went over pretty well. At least the station manager thought so."

Gilbert is not new to the broadcasting field. He has graduated from both the Career Academy's Division of Famous Broadcasters School and the Defense Information School, at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind. He also was employed as a program director at WFTN in Franklin, N. H.

The Benning Sound is produced in conjunction with the Radio and TV Section of Fort Benning's information office. The new program is the latest effort by Fort Benning in an attempt to inform both public and soldiers regarding activities here on post. In addition to the Benning Sound, the Radio-TV section also produces several radio news shows heard daily on the various local stations in the Fort Benning area.

Byline Bayonet

Army Aviation has experienced a rebirth during the Vietnam conflict. Not since the daring days of WWI have men and their flying machines been so publicized. Newspaper, magazine and television accounts of the Southeast Asia fighting have invariably centered on Army helicopters and the men who fly them.

To meet the demanding need for pilots, the Army trained approximately 30,000 aviators between 1966 and 1970. While the majority of the flyers were warrant officers, a large percentage came from the commissioned ranks. As the US involvement and troop strength began to decline in mid-1970, so did the need for helicopter pilots. For the first time warrants were allowed to terminate their active duty service upon completion of a short tour assignment. Commissioned officers, however, more and more were returning to the States to fill non-aviation jobs.

Thus began the hassle. Aviators with ground assignments were expected to fly 80 hours a year and renew their instrument qualification annually. Failure to comply with those guidelines meant that the aviator would not only lose his flight pay but possibly be subjected to a Flight Evaluation Board (FEB) as well, and a FEB on the record of a career officer is a blemish not easily erased.

The aviator who flew only to maintain his "proficiency" was not expected to take time from his primary job to insure that he obtained enough flying time to maintain his yearly minimums. Often times, especially in instances where the pilot is in acommon position, time is at a premium. Although weekend flying is permissible it is discouraged. Understandably, mechanics and other ground personnel who must be present when the aircraft is airborne also enjoy weekends off. There is also the problem of economics. Not only does the government have to maintain helicopters so that proficiency flights can be made, but must also pay enormous sums of flight pay to the part-time aviators.

At a time when military spending is under careful scrutiny by Congressional critics, the Army might do well to consider the Air Force method of handling its non-flying officers. When a pilot is holding a ground assignment, he is still entitled to wear his pilot's wings but does not receive any flight incentive pay. Neither is he expected to maintain his proficiency by flying a few hours here and a few hours there as is required of his Army counterparts.

If the Army can't assign all its aviators to flying jobs, it should at least give those who desire a chance to relinquish their flight pay so that meretime may be devoted to their primary jobs. The Army would then be getting an officer who could devote his entire efforts to his primary duties, thos paying a man less money to do a more professional job. (J.L.D.)

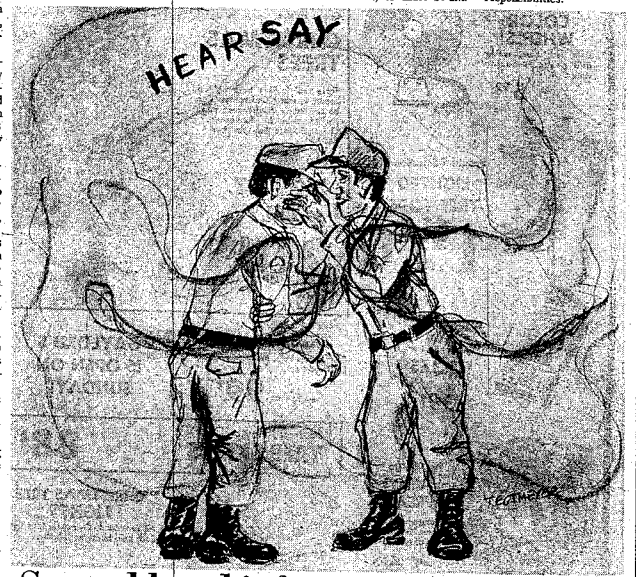
The judge says

Children of age must recognize risk

USAIC LEGAL ASSISTANCE OFFICE — The big tree in Mrs. Oakley's yard had long been a child's delight. Nearly every boy in the neighborhood had climbed it one time or another. But parts of the tree were dying, and some branches were brittle. When Tommy, age 8, climbed the tree, a branch cracked, and he fell 30 feet to the ground. Tommy was permanently injured.

Tommy's parents sued Mrs. Oakley, contending that she should have put up a fence or otherwise warned Tommy of the danger. They claimed that she was keeping an "attractive" nuisance.

The court held that Mrs. Oakley was not liable. It said that the tree was a natural part of the land, not an artificial structure, and that youngsters should know the dangers of high places. Further, the court said that an 8-year-old should know that branches might break.



An "attractive" nuisance may result in a property owner being held liable to trespassing children, but certain tests must be met:

1. The place must be one where children are likely to trespass, resulting in an implied invitation. A property owner is under no obligation to take precautions if he does not have reason to believe that children will trespass.

2. The condition must involve a recognizable risk of harm, such as a special danger which children cannot comprehend. The usual dangers, such as fire, water, and height, are understood by most children.

3. The child must not discover the dangerous condition, or must be unable to appreciate the risk. This depends upon the maturity of the child. A child of ten, for example, should know the dangers of jumping over a pile of burning leaves, where a four-year-old may not. Each case turns on the age of the child, as well as on the special nature of the risk.

In applying these tests, the courts will balance the utility of maintaining the condition against the risk to children. But the more dangerous the condition of the property, the greater are the property owner's responsibilities.

Second-hand information kills truth

By Carl King

Remember when you were a child sitting around a circle with other children? The word 'apricot' was started. After it had been passed around the entire circle, the last person stood up and said, "Apes in cots." It was a child's game . . . and everyone thought it was funny.

I've seen hearsay (second-hand information) open its cavernous mouth to enlarge erroneous information, enlarge that information till the 'beast' spread its tentacle-like arms around truth and literally choked it to death. Or, if it didn't actually kill the truth, the truth was changed until there was nothing left by distortion, abrasion and conflict.

Hearsay tends to multiply. The original story splits and several stories run out to capture untuned ears — the process goes on . . . and on . . . and on.

At Fort Benning, hearsay has been as much an enemy as elsewhere in our country. Officers and enlisted men alike find joy in the ego-inflating notion that their conception is the authority, the last word. Their search for truth never really starts. Then, they all too often find that what they thought correct had been misinterpreted. But it's too late . . .

They had passed orders to their men on blind faith, had been responsible for accepting information without testing it for validity, and thus, became embroiled in the web of confusion.

Certainly, in the heat of battle, there are obligations which don't exist during peace time. Yet, we in the military must weigh the exceptions and choose to digest only the ripened fruit. Herein, lies the cure-all for growth.

The rapid pace of our time has had its effects on the Fort Benning environment. Commanders demand immediate response; today's mission should have been accomplished yesterday.

We should take a step back, re-examine the value of our demands, and hopefully, upgrade the quality of thoughtless, casual commands. There is no place for hearsay. It is not allowed in our court system, and its existence should be removed from our everyday affairs. Remember, we're not children anymore.

Overseas servicemen can buy Christmas trees through AAFES

American servicemen in nine foreign locations will be able to purchase U.S Christmas trees again this year through the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES).

Of the 28,421 trees available for shipment overseas, most will be sent to the Pacific, with some to three offshore areas.

The Azores will receive 504, Puerto Rico 675 and Panama 3,819.

Hawaii will receive the largest shipment, with 6,966 trees. Another 4,500 are en route to the Philippines, 2,177 to Korea and 6,806 to Okinawa. Guam will receive 995 trees and Thailand 1,979.

All trees should arrive at their destinations before the second week in December.

The trees range in size from three to 20 feet, with the average tree being from five to six-feet high. Some 12-, 16- and 30-foot trees are being shipped to commands as installation trees.

Holiday travel information offered vacationers

With the Christmas and New Year's holidays not far away, installation transportation officers are planning transportation for the thousands of military personnel who will be taking leave.

The Military Traffic Management and Terminal Service (MTMTS) has been working with the commercial transportation industry to prepare for this period of heavy demand on the nation's transportation systems.

The Department of the Army has announced a holiday leave period from 7 a.m., Dec. 18, to 5 p.m., Jan. 2, 1972. For soldiers using commercial transportation, commanders have been authorized to approve departure from their duty stations at 5 p.m., Dec. 17, and return to their duty stations by midnight, Jan. 2, 1972.

To be eligible for reduced military fares, soldiers must be:

— On active duty.

— On authorized leave, pass, furlough or within seven days of discharge.

— Traveling at their own expense.

Railroads offer approximately 25 per cent reductions on both one-way and round-trips coach fares. These reductions are available on a year-round basis, with no weekend or holiday restrictions.

Furlough bus fares are limited to selected points in the eastern states and between eastern and midwestern states and apply generally to round-trip travel. These fares are available on a year-round basis, with no weekend or holiday restrictions.

Two types of fare reductions are offered by commercial airlines:

— A military standby fare permits seats remaining available after all reservations have been claimed to be offered to military passengers at approximately half the applicable fare. Standby passengers on non - direct flights are not subject to bumping at en route stops once they have been accommodated and have received a validated ticket from origin to destination. Standby fare is subject to no weekend or holiday restrictions.

To travel military standby, soldiers must be:

— Traveling in uniform.

— Prepared to present upon request a properly executed Authorization for Commercial Air Travel (DD Form 1580) to each carrier (when the soldier is traveling by air).

— A military reservation fare costs about two-thirds of the applicable fare. A military reservation is accepted in advance of the scheduled departure, and the space is confirmed similarly to confirmations for full-fare passengers. The reservation fare privilege is restricted by many airlines during peak travel hours on weekends.

— When making flight plans, the soldier should consult the airline on which he plans to travel to check for any restrictions it may place on military travel fares.

Military information desks, operating in some of the larger airports, offer the soldier information about schedules, local transportation and expirations of leave time.

USAIB

Mrs. Robert Robinson and Mrs. Frank Hearn were the hostesses for the United States Army Infantry Board (USAIB) ladies November coffee, held at the home of Mrs. Robinson. Mrs. Charles Thomas conducted a short business meeting and welcomed newcomers Mrs. Jesse Collins, Mrs. Paul Spilberg, and Mrs. Samuel Link. The group is happy to have Mrs. Hearn and Mrs. Larry Regan back in the group after their year in the Geographical Wives Club.

AVN. CMD.

The ladies of the 197th Aviation Company attended a potluck luncheon Nov. 17, at the home of Mrs. Jon Stillmore.

The ladies enjoyed sherry and conversation from noon until 1 p.m.

The buffet table was decorated with a wicker cornucopia filled with dried wheat and sea oats, cattails, and fresh pyracantha surrounded by many types of foods. Everything from a chicken-rice casserole to fresh blackberry pie; from cold green beans in sour cream, to a molded hard-boiled egg salad, was served.

The next monthly coffee of the 197th Aviation Company will be co-hostessed by Mrs. R. D. Berry and Mrs. Jimmy Edwards at Mrs. Berry's home on Dec. 15 at 10 a.m. It will be a Christmas coffee.

The ladies of the 197th are urged to bring with them any Christmas decorations which they have made. The program will feature ladies explaining how to make decorations for the homes. Everyone is cordially invited to come for some Christmas cheer.

TRANS. CO.

The Officers' Wives of the 609th Transportation Company met in the home of Mrs. Thomas Jensen for their monthly coffee. Mrs. Jensen served delicious pumpkin nut cake along with assorted nutmeats.

The business of the month included the upcoming OWC Christmas Bazaar and decorations for the Aviation Command Christmas party.

Can you cut with pinking shears on staple? Can you make an attractive Christmas decoration for the home? Then we could use your talents. Many ladies have already worked on decorations for the Aviation Command Christmas Party to be held Dec. 28. But workshops are continuing.

If you would like to help — please contact Mrs. James Miller for the time, date, and location of the workshops. And if you happen to have old Christmas cards, but are unable to attend the workshops, please contact either Mrs. Miller or Mrs. Robert Grow.

LEADERSHIP DEPT.

The Officers' Wives' of the Leadership Committee held their monthly coffee in the Fort Benning home of Mrs. Roy B. Burns. Co-Hostess for the morning was Mrs. Oliver M. Rogers. Special guests were Mrs. Nat Davis, mother of Mrs. Rogers, and Mrs. Edward Fiora Jr., wife of Lt. Col Fiora, exective officer of the department.

Welcomed to the committee was Mrs. Charles T. Ostick. A fond farewell was bid to Mrs. Michael Cogswell, whose husband is leaving the service. Mrs. Billy E. Rutherford, wife of the committee chairman, announced that Mrs. John Grand would be taking over the job as committee treasurer.

Refreshments of homemade pumpkin bread, pigs 'n a blanket, fruit cake, cookies and hot tea and coffee were served from a table decorated with copper serving pieces and a dried flower arrangement in a copper pot.

The next coffee will be held at the home of Mrs. Martin W. Heinicke on Dec. 14, at 9:30 a.m. Don't forget to bring your canned goods and an exchange gift of $1 or under.

Approximately 25 ladies from the Leadership Committee gathered at the OWC Lounge on Nov. 19, for a double baby shower. The two expectant mothers were Mrs. Alfred M. Coke and Mrs. Oliver M. Rogers.

Hostesses for the shower were Mrs. Charkins and Mrs. Humphries. Pat and D'Anne, the honorees, were judges for a baby picture contest. The only catch was, the girls had to draw with the paper on top of their heads. Everyone had a good laugh seeing the resulting pictures.

A large cake decorated with diaper pins, bottles and booties formed the centerpiece of the refreshment table. In addition the ladies enjoyed home made apple-gingerbread bars, sandwiches, nuts, mints, apple cider and hot coffee.

It's beginning to sound a lot like Christmas, or at least that is what one would think after the ladies of Headquarters, Leadership Department, held their monthly coffee in the home of Mrs. Douglas E. Emery on Nov. 16.

While the ladies sampled Karolyn's chiffon pumpkin pie, final plans were made for the Leadership Department Old Fashion Christmas Formal to be held on Dec. 17 at the Main Officers' Open Mess. From the sound of plans discussed, it is sure to be a festive evening.

Mrs. John Smith has offered to hold the next coffee in her home on Dec. 14.

There were no hails and farewells, but the couples of Headquarters met in the home of Lt. Col. and Mrs. Edward Fiora Jr., on Nov. 21 for some good old southern hospitality.

Highlights for the evening were Betsey's hors' d'ourves which varied from a cheeseball to fried water chestnuts. Needless to say everything was delicious.

WEAPONS DEPT.

The Weapons Department Officers' Wives will have a Christmas Tea which will be held Dec. 15 in the Main Officers' Open Mess.

The Infantry Chorus will entertain with songs and music of the season.

Hostesses for the event will be the ladies of the Mortar Committee.

Dec. 15 is the date for the Christmas luncheon to be held in Crane Hall at 1 p.m. There will be a social hour and an exchange of gifts among those present after lunch.

Phone Mrs. Smith, 545-2036; Mrs. Kitchens, 689-6337; or Mrs. Aldridge, 689-5663, for reservations. The reservation deadline is Dec. 10.

Everyone has been looking forward to the social event of the month. The Christmas dinner dance will be Dec. 18 at the Sand Hill NCO Club. This is free to members and $5 per couple for guests. This will be a semi-formal affair.

Cocktail hour will be from 6:30 p.m. to 7 p.m., with dinner being served at 8 p.m. Music will be provided by a live band. Plan to have an evening out with your husbands.

The December breakfast has been cancelled because it falls during Christmas week.

Ending the month on Dec. 29; the NCO Wives will again serve coffee call at Martin Army Hospital.

The NCO Wives' Club would like to wish everyone at Fort Benning, and the surrounding area, seasons greetings and may you all have the merriest of Christmas'.

TSB

The ladies of the 1st Battalion, The School Brigade (TSB), were recently entertained at an evening coffee in the home of Mrs. Gilbert E. Hyland. Assisting her was Mrs. John J. Puglise.

Two newcomers were welcomed. They were Mrs. Theodore Wright, wife of the commanding officer of 10th Company, and Mrs. James M. McBee, whose husband is the commanding officer of 11th Company.

Congratulations were extended to Mrs. G. Norman Batten, the new Fort Benning Military Wife of the Year.

CO. OPNS.

The spirit of Christmas filled the air Nov. 23, as the Ladies of Company Operations Department ushered in the holiday season at a "Christmas Ideas" luncheon.

The luncheon guests were welcomed by an oversized red and gold Christmas card, holding the name tags. Each lady received pine cones corsages created by Mrs. Tom Durham, Mrs. Albert Van Winkle, Mrs. Lee Wilson, Mrs. Roger Stallings, and Mrs. John Yarbrough.

Fresh Georgia pine, pine cones and gilded magnolia leaves garlanded the luncheon tables in the Corregidor Room of Main Officers' Open Mess. A feeling of nostalgia and a look of he "today and yester-year" was brought to mind by the hostesses, ladies of Platoon Tactics, chaired by Mrs. Duane G. Cameron and assisted by Mrs. George Cabe of Accent Gift and Florist.

Mrs. Cabe placed the many Christmas arrangements on the center of the tables. The wall sconces, the mirror and candelahra were laiden with lovely pine boughs, touches of red and gold accenting their natural beauty.

"Jingle-Bells," "Sleigh Ride," "Santa Claus Is Coming to Town" and many other songs of Christmas were played. The special Christmas music was selected, taped and installed by Maj. Lee Wilson.

Mrs. John Osteen opened the festivities of the day by extending a warm welcome to the guest of honor, Mrs. Paul Gorman. Mrs. Osteen had a farewell to Mrs. Ralph Egenmaier, who for the past two years has worked closely with the ladies of Land Navigation and the department.

Mrs. Osteen told of the forth-coming Christmas Formal to be held on Dec. 11. Company Tactics will host the event. Decorating will be done by the ladies with the guidance of Mrs. Elliott Sydnor.

Mrs. Sydnor said farewell to the following ladies: Mrs. James Muldoon, Mrs. John T. Tunison, and Mrs. Kenneth Conover.

Mrs. Cameron welcomed Mrs. Thomas Hyde, Mrs. James Markel, Mrs. Robert Hicks, Mrs. Jerry Hardin, Mrs. George Campbell, and Mrs. Jack Guenthner.

Special guests welcomed were Mrs. Frank Garrison, Mrs. Earnest Lane, and Mrs. Fred Cheverton.

Mrs. Cabe presented the program, "Christmas Ideas," showing how to use natural greens and pinecones to make a lovely arrangement.

'The Talent Tree'

"The Talent Tree" now lacks only one finishing touch for a guaranteed January opening — your artwork! Be the first to display your sculpture, painting or other personally handmade item at this newest Fort Benning project.

The boutique is located in Bldg. 1241, near the Thrift Shop. The consignment days are Dec. 6 and 13, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The projected January opening is dependent on the amount of items consigned to "The Talent Tree." Only five items per person will be accepted for consignment at one time.

"The Talent Tree" is an extension of the Thrift Shop and will retain 15 per cent of the total price. The profit will be used for welfare projects in Fort Benning and Columbus.

For more information, phone 545-ARTS during consignment hours.

Fifth annual Horse Show held tomorrow

In the mood for something different? The Fort Benning Fifth Annual Horse Show will be held tomorrow at the Fort Benning Hunt Club starting at 9 a.m.

The show, which consists of competition in 20 different classes, will end at approximately 5 p.m. The classes, ranging from a walking class to a jumping class, will be broken down by age groups.

Several difficult events will highlight the competition. Among these are the "Cloverleaf Barrel Race," the "Pole Bending Race" and the "Gamblers Choice" in which the rider and borse cover a course of nine various obstacles.

Participants must be a member of the Fort Benning Hunt Club or the Fort Benning Junior Hunt Club. Members of the Meadowbrook Riding Stable and the Midland Riding Center, both in the Columbus area, are also invited to participate in the competition.

According to a Hunt Club spokesman, 80 per cent of the contestents will be officers and NCO's children. "Six ribbons will be awarded to the top contestants in each event," McCarthy said. "A person may enter as many events as they wish."

The public is invited to view the competition. Admission is free and refreshments will be available at a nominal cost.

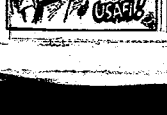
Donlon unveiles mural

Maj. Roger H. C. Donlon, former student at the United States Army Infantry School, at Fort Benning recently unveiled a mural at Ft. Bragg depicting the scenes of the battle of Nam Dong, Vietnam.



It was his actions during the battle of Nam Dong that earned Donlon his Medal of Honor. Accompanying Donlon at the unveiling was Capt. Michael Disser, currently a student in the Infantry Officers Advanced Course, Maj. Julian Olenjniczak and WO Chester Jezierski.

Both Olenjniczak and Disser fought along side Donlon at Nam Dong, while Jezierski was the man who spent six months translating their remembrances into canvas.

"What you are looking at," Jezerski, pointing to his painting, "is something that is as accurate as is humanly possible. From reading Donlon's citation and the narratives of his action that night, I knew a mural of this size (six feet) would be necessary. It was the only way to show the team action that Donlon wanted to show. To him, the team is the ultimate configuration."

Mrs. and Mrs. Batten, assisted by Chip, the cat, add finishing touches to string art

Fort Benning's Wife of the Year

By David McQueen

"If I had three wishes, I'd ask for time and more time and then even more time to do everything I'd like to do."

Mrs. Norman G. Batten, Fort Benning's Military Wife of the Year, says that she has so many interests that she sometimes doesn't know where to start.

Mrs. Batten's interests are varied. She and her husband, Maj. Batten, executive officer, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, created a piece of string art for the Officers Wives Club (OWC) Bazaar in December.

Mrs. Batten is a PTA room representative at school, and she is chairman of the dismounted drill committee for the Pony Club at the Hunt Club.

She has been teaching herself the guitar, and she and her husband are building a dune buggy at the Sand Hill Auto Craft Shop.—

Mrs. Batten was nominated for Military Wife of the Year by the Officers Wives Club as representative of the criteria set down by the Department of the Army for selection: 1) She must be a military wife active in not only base activities, but local civilian communities as well. 2) Her voluntary activities should include programs that further people-to-people relationships and objectives that serve to better mankind. 3) She should be poised and articulate and capable of speaking before large audiences to relate her story and that of the military community.

On Army posts, Mrs. Batten has been involved with the Welfare Committee for Army Community Service at Ft. Bragg, N. C.; assistant membership chairman, American Wives Club for OWC in Germany; member of the German-American Week Committee; publicity chairman for the Budien Wives Club in Germany; charter member and board member of Army Aviator Wives at Ft. Bragg; pianist for Protestant Women of the Chapel in Germany; member of the Chapel choir and coordinator of circuit Episcopal Services held every second month in Germany; and at Fort Benning, she is a PTA room representative at school; Brownie Committee mother and co-leader; member of the Hunt Club; and chairman of the Dismounted Committee for the Pony Club.

Off post, Mrs. Batten is a member of the PTA of Winterfield School, Columbus, Ga.; PTA program chairman; Library Committee chairman; school representative to District PTA meetings; member of ththe National Education Association; member of the Classroom Teachers Association; member of the Association for Childhood Education International; and a member of St. Paul's Paul's-in-the-Pines Episcopal Church Altar Guild and a Church School and Vacation School teacher.

Mrs. Batten is involved also in the Cumberland County Association for Mental Retardation; she is a Schools Preliminary Science Fair Judge for entry to the district fair; a Girl Scout Committee Mother and special projects advisor; a member of the Womans College of the University of North Carolina Alumni Association and a member of the Fight against Drug Problems program for elementary school children.

Mrs. Batten has worked in the University Nursery School where academically talented pre-schoolers were a part of educational experimental programs, and while living on the German economy, in exchange for their help with her German, taught English and explained the "strange" ways of Americans to a group of small German children she gathered around her.

While working at one teaching job, Mrs. Batten found herself in a very low socio-economic school. She could not be content to see those bright young science students miss the chance to be somebody, so with her own funds, and many hours of her own time, she worked to develop their talents through numerous science projects to be shown around the state. These student names were entered by Mrs. Batten in all educa-

Whether your taste in music is in Bluegrass pickin', or classic melodies, SSgt. Ernest E. Ferguson can provide a steady bass beat for song.

Ferguson, a TAC NCO in 81st Company, 8th Battalion (NCOC), The School Brigade (TSB), is presently the bass player with the "Kingsmen," a band contracted to the Officer's Supper Club, Fort Benning. His career as a musician has taken Ferguson from small Army bands to the 'show business' catagory of backing up such County-Western greats as Johnny Cash and Jim Carter.

Ferguson played the base horn in High School and, when the 416th Reserve Army Band, Lubbock Tex. was reactivated in 1956, he found himself with the 281st Army Band at Ft. Jackson, S.C. From here he was shipped to Germany with an Artillery unit and began playing with a band six nights a week in Munich.

While in Munich, Ferguson took part in two County-Western shows, the European Hayride and the County Music Jamboree. These performances were 25 minutes programs presented weekly by the Armed Forces Network. It was during these programs that Ferguson was able to meet Country Stars Roy Acuff, Jim Carter, and Paul Yandell of the "Grand Ol' Opry."

"On Nov. 11, 1962, I worked with Johnny Cash and June Carter," recalled Ferguson. "I was playing in Korea at that time over AFKN radio (Saturday nights) for a show called "Cavalier Grand Ol' Opry."

Hawaii was Ferguson's next duty station and was also the home of Ferguson's next group, the "Westernaires," one of Oahu's foremost Country bands in '67. He also backed the music of Marcie Lynn, Bob Watson, and Ben Pridgen on top selling Country-Western records.

Recently, Ferguson has worked in the Fort Benning NCO club system under the name of the "Westernaires," which included two members from the original Hawaiian group of the same name. During part of '70 and '71 he played beside Curley Money and can be heard backing many records recorded on the Money lable.

Today, Ferguson is with Don Rissinger's band, the "Kingsmen." Their music is not limited to Country-Western but includes everything from old favorites to rock. In addition to playing at the Supper Club the band also performs at the American Legion on Victory Drive.

With fire loss

Airborne helps a soldier

The 4th Battalion (Airborne), The School Brigade (TSB), rallied behind PFC Fred D. Abrams, an Airborne graduate from the 47th Co. Abrams, a recipient of the "Outstanding Trainee" award at his Advanced Individual Training (AIT) class at Ft. Jackson, S.C., recently came into a large dose of bad luck. While on pass to be with his wife during the birth of their new son, Abrams' home caught fire and resulted in a total loss of all of his possessions.

All was not lost, however, for through the concern and work of Abrams' commanding officer, Capt. Lionel R. Cote, a clothing and fund drive was organized within 47th Co. and the 4th Battalion. The men of the Airborne units responded with donations of money and extra military and civilian clothing that would aid the Abrams' in recovering their household.

Abrams, a top Airborne student, was an Association of the United States Army (AUSA) representative at a recent Washington, D.C. convention. Undaunted by 'a little' misfortune, he will continue his military training in the Ranger Course.

Reenlistment waiver now authorized

BY H. PARRA

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This article updates a Bayonet article printed Nov. 19.)

In a message recently received here the Army authorizes waivers for reenlistment of personnel previously disqualified under the Qualitative Management Program for the following reasons:

Primary Military Occupational Specialty (PMOS) Enlisted Evaluation Score (EES) below 70.

The message reads in part . . . " Commanders exercising General Court Martial Jurisdiction may approve requests for waiver of individuals with PMOS EES between 41 and 69 if a history of qualifying EES and other quality factors clearly warrant such action. Waivers may also be approved for conspicuously deserving individuals without a previous PMOS EES."

This message modifies the qualitative management policy where an EM with a score less than 70 is ineligible for reenlistment.

In continuing, the message states, "The Army policy of retaining only the best quality personnel remains unchanged. The intent of these policy modifications is to provide 'opportunity for service' to the maximum number of clearly deserving people."

For further information, contact your personnel officer or your reenlistment officer.

tional circles and she came up with some type of help or scholarship for these deserving children who had never dared to do more than dream of college.

Again, Mrs. Batten took a group of environmentally deprived, mentally retarded 12-year-old children when they were refused by other teachers. She worked right along with the juvenile delinquent court; went to every meeting that gathered in the area trying to learn and understand more. She spent a large amount of her own money for supplies to help the children develop their talents, providing experiences that could never be gleaned from a textbook. Once her "juvenile delinquents" had become "lambs" and model students in school, she gathered them up and took them to the capital, for many had never been out of town.

Mrs. Batten has made her home as comfortable as she could so that "anyone who visits will feel free to kick off their shoes and feel right at home." Many times, Mrs. Batten said, she and her husband and their daughter, Jeanne, seeing soldiers standing around after church, looking lost and lonely, have brought them home for dinner.

Mrs. Batten was graduated from Pembroke University with a B.S. degree in home economics. She obtained an M.S. degree in interior design and education at North Carolina University, and is currently enrolled in a doctoral program at North Carolina. She hopes to achieve a doctorate in Child Development and Family Relations.

Pilots make instrument flight

Can a pilot make an instrumented flight without leaving the ground? Yes. It is accomplished all the time in the Aviation Command's "link building." Here pilots utilize a computerized machine to simulate an actual instrument flight. This flight simulator, or "link" trainer as it is called, has a cockpit that resembles an instrumented aircraft. The nickname "link" is a carryover from the first machines made by the Link Corporation. In the cockpit, the pilot sits and "flies" his flight by interpreting his location, airspeed and altitude through his instrument readings. Outside the cockpit, the link records the pilot's flight course lines on a map while a link operator monitors all his radio and flight procedures.

The link operator is the man in control for with a simple turn of a knob, he can induce a simulated 50 knot wind from any direction. He also acts as approach control, departure control, the tower and all of the other agencies a pilot might encounter during an instrument flight.

Currently, there are four such machines at Fort Benning which are "flying" just about all the time. Sp5 Joseph J. Drago, of the 197th Aviation Company, has been a link operator at Fort Benning for training consisted of a 14 week course of instruction at Ft. Rucker, Ala., and then about four weeks of on the job training (OJT) here. His job is a particularly important one for he must not only learn to operate the flight simulator, but also know all flight regulations and procedures; and keep current with all the changes. In addition, he must be able to evaluate the pilots' flight and instruct the pilot as to what corrections should be taken.

Drago finds his MOS very rewarding and satisfying. He handles pilots in all stages of proficiency frim the novice to the "old timers." He can even remember the "old timer" who developed vertigo in the link trainer and while getting out, tripped and broke his ankle. Such events do not happen on a daily basis, but a pilot developing vertigo in the link is not a rare occurrence.

Vets should keep informed

The Veterans Administration reminds families of veterans and servicemen that it is a good idea to keep abreast of the new benefits and programs provided for them.

Citing one example, the veteran's agency says that wives and children of veterans (permanently and totally disabled because of service-connected disabilities) are eligible for educational benefits.

Also, wives and children of servicemen (missing in action or prisoners of war for more than 90 days) have schooling benefits available to them. Furthermore, widows and children of veterans (who died as the result of service-connected disabilities) are also eligible for educational help.

VA-guaranteed home loans are available to wives of missing and-or POW servicemen and for un-remarried widows of veterans whose deaths were service-connected.

VA points out that widows and minor children may receive two types of monthly payments — dependency and indemnity (DIC (if the veteran's death was service-connected), or pension payments, if his death was non-service-connected. In certain cases, VA said, parents may be eligible for DIC checks.

Wives and children, or whoever is the designated beneficiary, are entitled to the veteran's or serviceman's life insurance proceeds upon his death.

Exempting insurance payments and service-connected disability or death most VA benefits are based on at least 90 days of military service by the veteran or serviceman. Post Korean and Vietnam Era veterans and servicemen must have at least 181 days of service to qualify for G.I. home loans and educational benefits.

SAVE-A-TOY gets $300

Recently $300 was presented to Project SAVE-A-TOY by 3OAC 6-71 and 7-71. The Class commanders, Capt. Boyd B. Burkholder and Maj. David W. Kummer made the presentation to Capt. David Franson, ACS, who is post project officer for the drive. The donation will be used to purchase parts and paint for the restoration of all donated toys and bicycles.

Chopper pilots train on LINK simulators here

By Cathy Wright

Imagine driving through a fog so dense that you couldn't see which way was up, much less where the road was. That sensation is closely akin to flying helicopters without instrument training.

For this reason, Army helicopter pilots are required to pass a stringent instrument flight check each year to maintain their instrument rating. Here at the annual flight test is administered by Flight Standards an and Training at Lawson Field.

Walking into the training room, non-pilots may have the sinking feeling that they are in a room filled with Dempster Dumpsters. But as experienced pilots like CW3 Clyde E. Scott and CW4 Billy McGlothlin know, the large grey - green boxes scattered about the room are not Dempster Dumpsters, but LINK simulators.

The LINK is a small cabin fitted with a helicopter instrument panel, and connected to a gadget which traces the path the LINK operator use of the simulator, because Scottt, a morning, McGlothin was making good "flies" on a map. On this particular flight examiner was taking him up for the annual instrument check that afternoon.

"Instruments checks are especially important because flying puts the human body in a foreign environment," explained Scott.

"On the ground, the body has three ways to distinguish up from down: the skeletal system, eyesight, and the inner ear.

"Up in the air, however, you might be flying through clouds and you couldn't see the horizon. The inner ear only distinguishes motion from side to side. You can move, and after a minute or so, the inner ear re-establishes that position as up.

"Finally, the skeletal system doesn't have anything to compare with the gravitational force, consequently, you can't rely on that either."

The instruments are designed to provide the pilot with this information, as well as to let him know where he is going.

The instrument test itself consists of a written exam, and the test flight. The pilot must plan the flight, conduct the pre-flight check, and fly the helicopter solely on the basis of his instruments.

McGlothlin's test began with his flight plan. It was overcast that day, and a possibility of thunderstorms had been forecast. He was responsible for determining whether or not to go up. After last minute recheck, he decided to go.

To make sure there was no peeking, McGlothlin wore a visor during the flight so that he could only see the instrument panel. His side of the helicopter windows were also covered with cardboard.

Once up McGlothlin saw only the instruments. That, however, is a full time job. While McGlothlin concentrated on the instruments, Scott explained, "These instruments are like little kids. If you stop watching them for a sceond, they get into trouble."

The flight lasted about two hours, over parts of south Georgia and Alabama and back. McGlothlin made instrument landing approaches at Columbus and at Lawson Field. All the time he juggled numbers and radio signals and balances. They were the only things he could see.

It really came as no surprise that he passed the test. Both McGlothlin and Scott fly all sorts of aircraft besides helicopters. Both have service in U.N. as pilots. All the same, it is nice to know they keep checks on these things.

Sergeant promotes cycle racing

Stogner raced professionally in Fresno, Calif. for several years while going to college and before going on active duty here at Fort Benning.

Traveling to Columbus, and returning his interest in motorcycle racing, he put all his efforts into the promoting of local racing. His efforts have paid off too. During his year, Stogner has promoted many races, and times, he continues to promote bigger and better races.

This coming Sunday, through a lot of hard work and long hours, Stogner is presenting to the public a professional race, Scrambling type, which will include top riders such as Jim Elliot shop owner, Aubrey Rhodes. Also included with these fine racers are some of Fort Benning's own personnel.

Starting at 1:30 p.m. there will be plenty of excitement provided from three racing groups consisting of separate classifications for motorcycles.

The money classes will be from 0 to 125cc, 126 to 250 cc, and the open class, 251cc and up. For the enjoyment of the kids, there will be a minibike class competing for trophies. For the three classes, there will be $105 in prizes per class and an entry fee of $3.

The gate for spectators will open at 11 a.m. and admission will be $2. Military personnel will be admitted for $2.

So far this year, about 300 spectators have seen each race and Stogner hopes that there will be as big a turn out or better this Sunday. It is the last big race for the year, with things slowning down for the holidays.

Stogner is married to the former Judy Moore of Colorado Springs, Colo. and they have two children. Lisa is 2 years old and John is 2 months.

For more information about Sunday, or motorcycle racing to come, call 323-3202 anytime.

Army initiates complaint point

WASHINGTON — The Army is establishing a central point of contact at each Army installation in the U.S. to receive complaints from military personnel concerning price and rent violations after termination of the recent freeze.

The Army anticipates that there may be violations of the prescribed standards for price and rent increases in some areas surrounding military installations.

The Army will relay complaints to the proper civilian agencies, then follow up on the complaint.

Contact points are being determined by installation commanders, but are likely to be legal assistance offices, housing referral offices or other similar activities.

Allowances scheduled to be increased soon

Thousands of men and women in the U.S. Armed Forces overseas will soon be receiving increases in their Housing and Cost of Living Allowances (HOLA and COLA), along with increases in travel per diem allowances (TLA) as a result of a recent decision by the President's Cost of Living Council.

The Council concluded that allowances may be increased where the value of U.S. currency has dropped in relation to local currencies.

Increase of allowances as the result of normal cost of living increases is not authorized, according to officials.

Appropriate increases in these allowances may be made retroactively, effective to such a date as is equitable to both the member and the Government, but not prior to Aug. 15, a spokesman said.

The amount of increase will vary from place to place, depending upon a number of factors, officials caution.

Project Transition started with scarce facilities

By Carl King

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is the second in a series about Project Transition at Fort Benning.)

Facilities for Project Transition were scarce when the program first started in April 1968 at Fort Benning.

For lack of on-post classrooms, the County School District was contracted to provide Transition training using their facilities and instructors for courses starting in April 1968. As classrooms and shops were made available, these courses were moved on post.

All courses are now conducted on post in an area of Harmony Church. Courses taught include Auto Mechanics, Basic Electricity, Radio and Television Repair, Air Conditioning and Refrigeration, Drafting, Automatic Data Processing, Welding, Offset Printing, Law Enforcement, Cement Masonry, and Small Engine Repair.

All these courses except Drafting, Small Engine Repair, and one of the three Automatic Data Processing Courses are taught on a continuing basis by the Manpower Development Training Act at no expense to the Army.

Funds for Project Transition come from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Department of Labor.

Approximately one-fourth of the training under Project Transition at Fort Benning is on-the-job training with Army agencies such as the Post Engineers or with private industry in Columbus, Ga., and Phenix City, Ala.

In addition to the courses being offered, Project Transition vocational counselors have provided individual couseling to 38,855 servicemen. On-post job interviews by industry and law enforcement agencies, and referral of individual job applications to State Employment Agencies and to industry, are included in Project Transition services.

When personnel complete their transition training, they fill out "Follow-up" cards to determine the effectiveness of the training given them. Of those cards returned, 89 per cent of the servicemen were either employed or were attending school full time two months after separation.

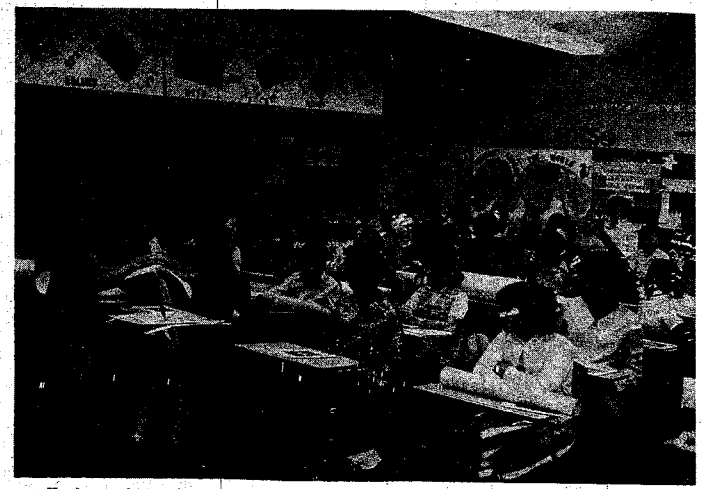
School completes drug study

By Roger Pavey



A couple of years ago a 12 year old Harlem youth died from an overdose of heroin. Since that unfortunate incident many schools have attempted to inform their students on the dangers of drugs.

It was felt in most quarters that the drug problem was only one that concerned college kids or teenagers. But the subsequent publicity surrounding this bazaar death caused a stir among the parents of many elementary school age children. The cry went out for drug classes, seminars, information, anything to halt what the parents feared most, another death . . .

Loyd School, part of Fort Benning's school system, has just completed a six month study on drug abuse. The experimental drug abuse unit was part of Mrs. Lillian Chavers sixth grade class. "Our overall objective," says Mrs. Chavers, "was to create an awareness of this dreadful evil that is a great threat to the lives of our youth as well as adults."

Currently the Fort Benning school board is waiting approval by the state board for the drug abuse unit to be included in the new curriculum booklet. Up to now the program has been very informal, consisting of tapes, films and lectures.

The new unit is designed to give the teacher a great amount of leeway in actual procedures. There are specific concepts that definitly need to be reached. In teaching these concepts the sixth graders at Loyd School were exposed to a variety of instruction.

Hands are raised as the sixth graders from Loyd School discuss drug abuse. Students from Mrs. Lillain Chavers' class have just completed a six-month study on drug abuse.

Among these were Chaplain Fraker and four former addicts, the Provost Marshal's Drug Abuse Team, school counselors the school nurse, Mrs. Mary Jones, and the student's parents.

In an effort to assist the drug abuse unit Earl L. Mylie, Asst. Superintendent for instruction and William G. Abrahamson, a school guidance counselor spent much of last year trying to evaluate a wide variety of materials of drugs. "The major difficulty," says Abrahamson, "is trying to teach others to teach drug abuse without formal training."

When asked about the overall objective of the program, Dr. Joseph T. Conforti superintendent of schools said, "children have to have the knowledge of what they are being confronted with. They must also have the material to make the right choices. We are not here to say, do this or do that, but to try to provide the material for their decisions."

The children themselves seemed extremely knowledgeble on the subject of drugs. When asked, what was the most important thing you learned in the drug abuse unit, the responses varied from one extreme to the other. Steve Cooper responded with, "the language of drugs and why people take drugs."

Byron Smith said he learned, "not to take drugs . . . it might kill you."

The kids also learned that the drug abuse class was not the only way to learn about drugs. Television and parents are also good sources.

Chaplain Fraker said the former drug users were also very beneficial to the program. Here the students heard actual accounts of what really happens within the drug world. Byron Smith recalled an incident told him by one of the ex-users, "two guys went up on a roof with a drug they thought was heroin. One guy took it, while the other watched . . . it was battery acid. I guess you never know what you're going to get when you buy drugs."

Perhaps the greatest benefit the children derived from the drug abuse unit was; what to do if they encounter drugs? All the students responded with essentially the same answer, but the overall mood of the class was best described by Jeff Borth. He stated, "We should avoid it. But we should help someone in trouble, and most of all not put him jail. Someone on drugs needs help and ending up in jail doesn't help him. The person who should be in jail is the pusher. He's nobody's friend."

The six months of drug abuse instruction has indeed made Mrs. Chavers sixth graders aware of the drug problem. Their awareness may save a life, whereas their unawareness may have cost one.

"This is no place to hide," say Tony Harrelson and Tony Roberts, as they display their drug abuse poster. The making of the posters was designed to further familiarize the students on the hazards of drugs.

A Christmas Carol

Scrooge travels with spirits on Springer stage

"They were not a handsome family; their shoes were far from waterproof. But they were happy, grateful, pleased with one another, and contented with the time." And surely we today are grateful for the legacy left to us by Charles Dickens' A CHRISTMAS CAROL, a legacy of the beautiful sentiment and warmth that was the Victorian Christmas. The Springer Children's Theatre is happy to be presenting a new, music-filled version of this wonderful story, directed by Eleanor Jones and running at the Opera House.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL will be presented tonight at 7:30 p.m. and tomorrow and Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Tickets are $1.50 for adults and $1 for children. They are available through the Springer Opera House box office. Reservations may be made by calling 327-3688.

For those who may have somehow missed a telling of A CHRISTMAS CAROL, and for those who, like Scrooge, have "forgotten with age," Dickens' tale is both a marvelous way to enter into the feeling of Christmas and to gain a truer appreciation of the season at the same time. Ebernezer Scrooge, the Cratchits, Tiny Tim, and four incredible disembodied spirits each represent an attitude — a particular depth of understanding of what Christmas can and should be. Delightful on the printed page, the characters burst onto the stage with no loss of vitality.

Scrooge, portrayed by Children's Theatre veteran Joe Thomas, is in many ways contemporary — a man not so much overtly malicious, as he is merely too concerned with acquiring abundance to enjoy the security and happiness it can provide. The appearance of the ghost of Marley, Scrooge's old business partner, sets the stage for the Christmas Eve appearances of the other ghosts — Christmas Past, Present and Future. While he initially views Marley's appearance as a figment of his digestive difficulties, he soon becomes sufficiently addled and convinced of the spectre's reality that he retires to bed wearing all his clothes.

Scrooge is then visited by the three spirits, each more unsettling than the last both in appearance and in description of Scrooge's condition. Christmas Past reveals an incident from Scrooge's boyhood, concerning his former master Mr. Fezziwig and his genuine, joyful celebration of the holiday. Christmas Present makes Scrooge aware not only of the Cratchit's undeserving poverty, but also of the possibility of Tiny Tim's death if he receives no help. And the frightening tableau of his own unmourned death in the future makes Scrooge truly repentant — and he celebrates Christmas with a sincere good will which changes his life.

But for all the story's widsom and lofty intentions, much of its lasting quality derives simply from the gaslights, striped mufflers, snow-filled streets and plum-pudding charm of the holiday season. With atmospheric set pieces by Jim Oliuse and beautiful period costuming, the stage of the Springer embodies all the best of Christmas — including carols sung both within the show and at half-hour before each performance.

'The Hawaiians' based on second half of 'Hawaii'

James A. Michener described his novel "Hawaii" as "a love story between me and a bunch of islands."

"The Hawaiians," the film based on the second half of that phenomenal best seller, continues the affair.

The Mirisch Production Company's epic drama stars Charlton Heston as Whip Hoxworth, grandson of the towering Hafer of "Hawaii," with Geraldine Chaplin as his wife, Purity, John Phillip Law as their son and the Japanese Academy Award nominee Mako, as the leper Mun Ki.

Also starred are Tina Chen as Nyuk Tsin and Alec McCowen as Micah Hale, and like "Hawaii" the film reaches the screen through United Artists, entertainment subsidiary of Transamerica Corporation. Produced by Walter Mirisch and directed by Tom Gries, it will be shown tomorrow at Post Theater No. 3, at 7 p.m. in Panavision and Color by DeLuxe. Henry Mancini wrote its music and James R. Webb prepared the Michener original for the screen.

The present story carries the islands from its era as a missionary settlement into a thriving, prosperous 20th century state as a background for its epochal family drama. Included in the vast panorama of the island's history are the arrival of the first Chinese and Japanese workers whose personal and cultural contributions to Hawaii have made it unique in the world as an outpost of racial equity. The development of the islands' pineapple industry, one of its mainstays, is traced, as is the political evolution from a weak monarchy to a stable republic. All of this is played out against the history of one family.

To justify the scope of the story (roughly during the 30 years 1870-1900) the Mirisch organization built a sprawling set representing Honolulu at the turn of the century, and as a climax to the film all of the warren-like Chinatown of 1900 was burned to the ground. Dozens of bit players and thousands of extras were used and a whole fleet of contemporary vessels were built to re-enact the bustling port scenes. Of considerable note is the reconstruction of the notorious "Kilauea" from its original plans. The ship is still regarded by many as the most infamous of the late 19th-Century leper ships. Land action was filmed on the islands of Maui and Kauai.

"The Hawaiians" marks the first major role in an American film by Miss Chaplin since her success in "Dr. Zhivago." Hollywood-born John Phillip Law will be recalled as the man who soared to stardom in "The Russians Are Coming, The Russians Are Coming" and Miss Chen is favorably remembered as Arlo Guthrie's girl friend in "Alice's Restaurant." Mako won his Oscar nomination for his work in "The Sand Pebbles."

Director Gries is a comparative newcomer to films but he has a long record of stellar achievement in television, and with "The Hawaiians" Producer Mirisch adds to his long list of cinematic accomplishments which includes besides the epochal "Hawaii" the multi-Oscar-winner "West Side Story."

Artist's montage suggests excitement in 'Hawaiians.'

Libraries' books

The Special Services Main Post Library provides informative library materials on child development. A representative number of these books are listed below:

"Early Childhood; Behaviour and Learning," Catherine Landreth: Dr. Landreth evaluates the implications and the limitations of discoveries about child development from prenatal period to the age of seven, using a rich variety of anecdotes from her own experience to highlight specific points.

"Enjoy Your Children," Lucille Heiny: The author has compiled a bonanza of activities and play ideas for children between the ages of 7 and 17. This book contains multitudes of answers to the inevitable cry — "What can I do now?" Parents and adults, who work with children, will find this book a welcome guide to making relationships more enjoyable for the child and themselves.

"Understanding Your Child," James Hymes: An informal account in dealing with children of all ages. The author favors a discipline easy to give and easy to take, but he is realistic enough to realize that in certain instances just punishment is in order.

"Guidance of the Young Cild," Louise Langford: Emphasis is on the individual child. Although nursery schools deal with groups of children, the program of a good nursery school is planned on the basis of the needs of individual children.

Synopsis

THE HORSEMEN (Rated GP), takes you to the top of the world of adventure . . . to the far reaches of the Hindu Kush in Afghanistan — to glory in a world unchanged in a thousand years.

The "Buzkashi" is the world's most dangerous sport. Elite horsemen, called Chapandaz, engage in this game. With a goat's carcass as the object of play, dozens of horsemen violently fight one another for possession and attempt to secure the carcass long enough to carry it to a distant goal.

There are no holds barred in the game and personal safety is the last concern where fierce personal and tribal pride are the motivations, with reverence and respect the fruits of victory. Whatever a player must do to win — that is the rule he lives by.

Omar Sharif, son of Champion Jack Palance, loses the "Buzkashi." This is a blow to his honor. His leg is broken in the match. Infection sets in and he eventually has it amputated in a barbaric fashion. He is determined to make a comeback and regain his honor.

Leigh Taylor-Young plays the gypsy girl Omar makes the mistake of spurning after spending a night with her. All the breakneck speed and violence of the game are captured in some of the most exciting moments of screen history in the incredibly savage contest. The relationship between father and son is strained into one of love tempered by competition.

CREATURES THE WORLD FORGOT (Rated GP), is an unforgettable world of unimaginable savagery. Photographed in the vast Namib Desert in Africa to provide an excellent background, the film stars the sensational Norwegian beauty Julie Ege as the heroine and Tony Bonner as the hero.

Costumes on the cave people are the scantiest yet, with many of the young girls going topless. Dialogue is confined to grunts and groans. They don't make them like this anymore.

See the terrifying attack of the devil gods.

See the most titanic earthquake ever filmed.

See the most terrifying ordeal of the virgins.

See the sensational new star Julie Ege. She a creature you'll never forget.

DIARY OF A MAD HOUSEWIFE (Rated R), The drama of present day malaise, the disintegration of marriage and the fragmentation of the individual is forcefully brought to the screen in the Frank Perry Film "Diary of A Mad Housewife."

The film is the contemporary story of a young husband, Richard Benjamin, a self - centered and sickeningly status conscious lawyer, and a young wife, Miss Snodgress, who is driven to infidelity by his demands upon her.

This tragicomedy of the eternal triangle contains nudity, sex and profanity which may offend the sensibilities of some.

CATLOW (Rated GP), is a violent and slap-stick shoot-em-up boasting a stellar cast with Yul Brynner in the title role.

The boisterous, tongue-in-cheek free-for-all features Indian attacks, fistfights, stunt-riding, a kerosene lantern fight, sex bouts, a trick book that shoots to kill and bullets and arrows that fly everywhere. There is seldom a dull moment in this tale about a U.S. marshal (Richard Crenna) whose unpleasant duty is to bring his long time pal Catlow, a tough and lusty cattle rustler, to justice.

An amusing friendly enemy relationship exists between Catlow and the marshal. The outlaw saves the lawman's life during an Indian attack. In return the marshal protects Catlow against Miller (Leonard Nimoy), a vicious bounty hunter. Catlow turns his attention southward to a cache of stolen Confederate gold bullion.

The outlaw steals the gold and finds himself being chased, not only by the U.S. marshal, the county hunter and an entire regiment of the Mexican Army, but by the savage desert tribe of Seri Indians as well.

Besides sex, the film includes nudity and profanity which may offend the sensibilities of some.

In assembling this "best value" stereo system we left out something very important: $52.50

Individually, each of the components in our four hundred thirty-five dollar system has created a new standard of sound-per-dollar stereo value. Together, these components produce an amount and quality of sound that would have cost at least five hundred dollars a year ago.

The Smaller Advent loudspeakers are the only speakers costing less than the now-famous original Advent loudspeakers which can reproduce the entire musical range. Most inexpensive speakers cannot produce the lowest octaves of music: the lowest strings of a double bass or electric bass guitar, the lowest pipes of a pipe organ. The Smaller Advent can.

The Nikko 6010 AM-FM stereo receiver has enough power to satisfy both you and the Advents. It produces 25 watts RMS per channel, across the entire musical range, at less than 0.5% total distorsion. (RMS is the most demanding and least flashy of the various power-rating systems.) The tuner sections will separate weaker stations on a crowded dial from the brawnier neighbors and receive them with an amazing fullness and clarity.

To match the quality and reliability that the Nikka 6010 and the Advents represent, we recommend the PE Automatic Turntable with a Stantan Broadcast Series cartridge. The PE has a heavy platter, a High Torque motor, a convenient cueing control and comes with a dustcover and base.

Come to the Sound Center this week. You'll be surprised how much quality sound your four hundred thirty-five dollars can buy.

System price: $435.00 If bought separately: $487.50

SONY STR-6065 FM Stereo/FM-AM Receiver

Unique is the best way to describe the new STR-6065 Receiver.... Only Sony engineering could have combined FM and AM tuners, professional quality preamplifier and stereo amplifier in one attractive unit. With 255 watts of power (IHF into 4 ohms) at your command, the STR-6065 has power to spare for FM and AM broadcasts, records, tapes and multiple speaker systems. The tuner portion uses Field Effect Transistors (FET's), solid-state ceramic I.F. filters and symmetrical limiting for increased sensitivity, unmatched selectivity and distortion-free tuning, even in metropolitan areas where stations abound. Pre-amplifier control features are tastefully organized for the ultimate in tonal tailoring. As for the power amplifier, its low-distortion, direct-coupled output circuits rival those of any "basic" amplifier made. Sony's new STR-6065 really lets you "hear it like it is."

Santa's postmark available to servicemen

Once again, for the 17th consecutive Christmas, military and civilian members of all the services can make sure their children get a real letter from Santa Claus, postmarked "Santa's Official Mail, North Pole, Alaska."

Following success of the past 16 years' Santa letter programs, in which a total of nearly 125,000 letters have been remailed to kids in many lands, members of U.S. Air Force Air Weather Service's Detachment 5, 9th Weather Reconnaissance Wing, at Eielson AFB, Alaska, have again volunteered to help make this Christmas a memorable one for kids around the world. These far-north Air Force weathermen will use their free time to forward Santa Claus letters to children everywhere.

Here is the way it works. You write a letter to your child, signing it Santa Claus. Address the letter to your youngster and affix the proper return airmail postage from Alaska. Proper postage is urged, since unit members have in the past spent much of their own money for postage to avoid disappointing the children of forgetful parents.

Place the letter or letters in a larger envelope and address it to Santa's Mail Bag, care of Detachment 5, 9th Weather Reconnaissance Wing, APO Seattle 98737. Add proper air-mail postage and drop it in any mailbox.

A few miles from Eielson AFB is a post office officially called Santa Claus House, North Pole, Alaska. When the volunteer AWS mailmen get your letter, they will remail the Santa letter or letters from this post office.

A few days later, your child will receive his or her personal letter from Santa Claus, complete with authentic postmark.

A deadline of Dec. 10 has again been set for mailing letters to Santa's Mail Bag, to permit receipt of remailed letters by Christmas Day.

Exchange hours

The Main Store Complex of the Post Exchange, including the Toy and Garden Store will remain open until 8 p.m. every week night until Dec. 23.

Coaches pleased with undefeated football Demons

"Satisfaction guaranteed" are the remarks of Capt. Darrell G. Spice and CWO Harry L. Davis, of the 205th Assault Support Helicopter Company, in reference to their coaching of Pony League Football.

Spice and Davis, along with headcoach SSgt. Wayne Westover, coach the Demons of Fort Benning's Pony League. Through their guidance and their efforts in training, the Demons have built up an undefeated 6-0 record.

Spcie, who played second string quarterback for Northland College located in Wisconsin, began coaching the Demons in August of this year. He thoroughly enjoys working with the kids and believes he is aiding in the development of what may be some of the great football stars in the bowl games of the future. Davis readily admits to having never played football, but claims he is learning something new everyday.

Most of the boys have had prior football experience in one of the smaller leagues such as the "Pee Wee" or "Doughboy" league. However, there are those few who come to practice who have never played football. With patience and determination, it is the coach's job to teach these boys all the fundamentals of the game. The real task, according to Spice, is to keep the novice's interest in the game and not let him become discouraged by the skills of his fellow teammates. Davis states that it is also a challenge to keep the better players from becoming complacent and skipping practice.

With at least one more game still remaining, Spice and Davis are still confident of coaching the Demons to an undefeated season.

By Roger Pavey

Mirror, mirror on the wall . . . who's the best of them all? This was the question that was supposedly answered last Thanksgiving. I myself witnessed the announcement as I watched half-time ceremonies of the Georgia-Georgia Tech game.

Surrounded by the suspense of the Oscar awards the envelope was opened and the name of Pat Sullivan appeared. As I watched the announcers I detected a sense of shock or disbelief on the faces Bud Palmer and Merle Harmon. They, like millions of other football fans, were sure that Cornell's Ed Marinaro would come away with the coveted trophy.

Like so many other things in this world of ours it seemed that even the choosing of the best football player in the country depended on who you know. Auburn, a then contender for the national championship was constantly in the eyes of the public. And here was Pat Sullivan, teamed with the Beasley's and the Schamiz's, leading Auburn to the SEC showdown against Alabama.

Sullivan had the distinct advantage of having an exceptional day against then fifth-rated Georgia, while on the very same day Marinaro University lost to Dartmouth. This must have had some effect on the voting, for surely an SEC battle carries more weight than a fight for the lowly Ivy League title.

True Sullivan is a great quarterback, but he also had the advantage of a great football team and I might add great receivers. On the other hand Marinaro had to suffer two dismal seasons before Cornell could produce a winner. He almost singlehandedly led Cornell to this year's eight and one season, their best in almost 20 years.

Thus it is my contention that the Heisman Trophy should be awarded to the best football player in the country and not the best football player among the top five teams. In the past few years the highly coveted trophy was given to the likes of Terry Baker, John Haurte, and Steve Spurrier, all of whom have flopped dismally in the pros. The award was given to these athletes on the basis of their teams performance and not solely on individual merit.

Speaking of individual merit the statistics of Ed Marinaro are staggering. The 6-2½ and 212 pound running back is the leading rusher of all time with 4,715 yards and this year he averaged 209 yards a game, also a record. But his most unheralded statistic is that he carried the ball an average of 39 times a game, which has to hurt.

Another disadvantage Marinaro faced was his lack of spectacular runs. He is not the Greg Pruitt type of runner, but the plugger, the guy who gets the yards when his team needs them. The kind of guy that a team depends on, for without him they are just mediocre.

The method of voting was also a hinderance in Marinaro's quest for the award. For he outdistanced Sullivan in three of the five regions. But the South and Southwest went with Sullivan and Musso, negating the votes cast for Marinaro. This was probably due to the television coverage of the weekly college games. It was here that the runner from Cornell lost the trophy.

The weak Ivy league had only one game televised all year and that was only in the eastern region. It was also the game that Cornell lost. So the bulk of the voters have never seen Marinaro play and I can't blame them for going the other way. But if all things were equal and the publicity roughly the same I think the outcome would have been different.

I also believe that Pat Sullivan would have been a deserving winner in any year but 1971. For his career at Auburn has been truly spectacular, and he is the leader of a top ranking football team, but to me this year was the year of run and their was no better runner than Ed Marinaro.

This was proven in last Saturday's game between Alabama and Auburn, as Sullivan and Co. were completely shut off as 'Bama dominated the game with the running of Johnny Musso. Along with the Tide's impressive victory came many doubts about the selection of Sullivan. For would you have cast your vote another way? If so the wrong choice was made, for there should be no doubt who is the best, but at least the mirror on the wall will know, if not you.

ROD AND GUN CLUB Notes

By Bill Kloeb

Quite a few hunters have been asking question about open seasons bag limits and other regulations pertaining to migratory birds.

Seasons are now open for just about all of the birds found in this area. The Gallinule season opened Nov. 7 and will run until Jan. 20. The season for Brandt opened Nov. 15 and closes Jan. 23. Ducks, Coots and Scaulp season opened Nov. 22 and closes Jan. 20.

Most people seem to be interested in hunting ducks. A Federal Duck Stamp is necessary for hunting these and just about any other migratory fowl found in this area. Stamps must be purchased at a first class post office. Normally the regulations pertaining to hunting this type game are issued at the time the stamp is purchased but this year the post offices do not have them. The Director of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife Service, Peachtree-Seventh Building, Atlanta, Ga., 30323, will issue a copy free upon request. If you can't wait the Rod and Gun Club has a copy has a copy of the Federal Migratory Bird Regulations that may be checked by anyone interested in this type hunting.

Hunting Contest Leaders

According to Roy Johnson, chief of the Post Fish and Wildlife Unit, hunters have registered 296 deer killed on the reservation so far this season. Johnson said the largest specimen was a 13-point buck brought to the check station at Bldg. 5883, Harmony Church last week.

Whoever took the big buck didn't register it in the Rod and Gun Hunting Contest. SSgt. Charles Wallace and Ronnie Calvins, dependent son of MSgt. (ret) James Calvin have both registered bucks with 11 countable antler points and lead in the largest rack department.

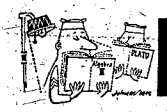
The 176-pound buck taken by Lt. Col. (ret.) Brandt Grubbs on opening day is still the heaviest deer registered in the contest. CWO Francis Lammers, who had second place last week with a 157-pound entry was topped last week end by John E. Smith, a civil service employee. Smiths' entry weighed 161½ pounds.

The Rod and Gun Club will award three Remington Model 1100 Automatic Shotguns and two Mossberg Bolt Action Slug Guns to members for deer taken during the current open season. The hunter who registers the heaviest deer and the hunter who registers the deer with the most antler points will each receive a Remington gun. Second place winners in each category will win one of the Mossberg guns. A third Remington will be awarded to some hunter who registers a deer kill at the club but does not win one of the other prizes.

Hunters interested in entering the contest may obtain copies of the rules at the Rod and Gun Club, Located on First Division Road about one -quarter mile south of Highway 27.

November Fishing Derby

Fishermen finally put a bream and a bass on the Rod and Gun Club Fishing Derby register. Both cotries came from Harp's Pond over the weekend.



With only a few hours left in the month Doris Holliman, wife of 1st Sgt. Jerry Holliman has the lead in the catfish contest with a 6¾ pound catch from Kings Pond. SFC James F. Barton, Headquarters 931st Engineer Group has an eight-ounce bream leading the bream contest and Capt. Frank Shaw, Dental Unit leads the bass contest with a nine-pound, three-ounce lunker he took last Sunday.

Rod and Gun Turkey Shoot

Plan to be out at the Rod and Gun Club Next Saturday for the club Christmas Turkey Shoot.

Shooting will begin at 10 a.m. and continue until 4 p.m. Turkeys or hams weighing from 10 to 12-pounds will be awarded as prizes.

Members of the board of governors also have wheels for sale. If you can't make it out to the club for the shoot you may win a prize by buying a part of these wheels.

PFC Predicto PICKS!

Last week marked the last appearance by PFC PREDICTO. The psychic seer of the stadium went out with a bang as he bombarded the bombers from 15th Finance. The peerless pigskin prognosticator out-muscled the opposition by picking all 12 games perfectly. This smashing success brought Predicto's overall mark to .764 as compared to an overall mark of .562 for the opposition. The medium of the midfield has brought much fame to Fort Benning's fantastic football fooler of fanatical fortune. The sterling star of the stats was stamped but once over this season's grueling gridiron grudge game. No fear but the cocky concontor will be back next year to challenge you.

Lines shrink, less waiting at clinic

By Carl King

Endless lines and waiting periods have been somewhat traditional in the Armed Services, especially for military dependents seeking medical and dental attention.

Recently, the length of the line and the duration of waiting has been shortened for those seeking dental services. This change has come about by the creation of the Dependents Dental Clinic located in Harmony Church.

Funds were made available through VOLAR to furnish this modern facility. Currently, 16 dentists are assigned to the clinic to include a pedondontist, specialist of children's teeth.

According to Lt. Col. Harold E. Plank, chief clinician of the Dependents Dental Clinic No. 6, dependents don't need an appointment. Numbers are given out at the door and dependents are examined in numerical sequence. "This is the most equitable system for everyone concerned," Plank emphasized.

Emergency dental patients are treated separately from routine patients. They are given red numbers which distinguish them from the routine patients and give them priority treatment.

Plank stated that the waiting room was not adequate for the number of patients being seen and that many times, patients were required to stand simply due to a lack of space. Col. Justin S. Zach, director of dental activities, MEDDAC, added that he is trying to get a prefabricated building added onto the clinic to serve as a waiting room.

"Our clinic gives special interest to children," Lt. Col. Plank said. "In addition to the pedondonist specializing in child denistry, we have a special program for 'exceptional' children. They require special handling and we see that they get it," he added.

Once the patient is examined and x-rays are taken, a diagnosis and treatment plan is made. Depending on the oral needs of the patient, further care is scheduled.

All active duty military dependents who live within a 30-mile radius of Fort Benning are authorized routine dental care under this VOLAR project.

"The bulk of our work is operative dentistry (filling cavities)," Plank stated. "Cases that need specialty work are referred to other dental clinics located at Fort Benning. We are fortunate to have every specialty in dentistry available at this post."

Col. Zach pointed out that Army Community Services (ACS) has done much to help build up the dental programs here. "They purchased a mobile operating hospital unit, a completely self-contained unit, that is principally used at Martin Army Hospital for the 'exceptional' children that are unable to go to the dentistry clinic. ACS has also purchased all the flouride paste and toothbrushes for our preventive dentistry programs in the schools. Additionally, ACS has given us funds to buy specialty equipment for use by the pedodontist," Col. Zach said.

On most Army posts, dependents have been unable to use dental facilities unless an emergency arose. The limited number of available dentists on these posts resulted in the oft used expression, "If you need a tooth pulled, use the string and doorknob method . . at least you'll relieve the pain."

ment within a reasonable period of time. "None of this would have been possible without the many contributions made by VOLAR and ACS," Col. Zach claimed.

During the Christmas holidays it is expected that many college students will be using the Dependents Dental Clinic. "We want to give the very best service to military men and their dependents. The increased interest being given the individual soldier through VOLAR has helped us achieve programs we would have thought impossible two years ago," Col. Zach ended.

CHAMPUS tests medical

Fiscal administrators of the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) consider good medical practice as one of their criteria in evaluating claims received from providers of care and claims for reimbursement filed by beneficiaries. Professional peer review groups are consulted in unusual cases to assure the maintenance of high standards of medicine.

Beneficiaries are reminded that there may be instances when a fiscal administrator will deny payment of a particular type of service since it is not considered good medical practice in their locale. In the event beneficiaries question the payability of a particular type of service they should query the fiscal administrator responsible for processing claims in the state where the service is received.

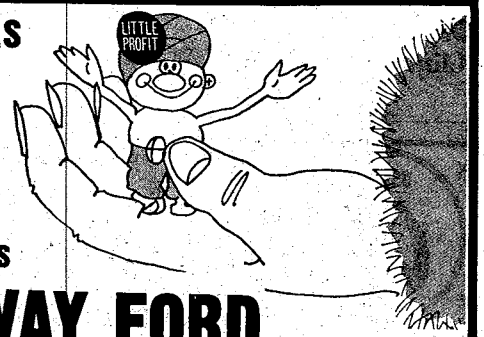
Specifically, CHAMPUS officials state that payment for injections, cost of medication and its administration may be denied if the accepted standards of medical practice substantiate that the injection is not indicated.

For example, although Vitamin B12 injections are medically indicated for specific therapy in certain anemias, gastro-intestinal disorders and acute nerve disorders and are therfore payable under the CHAMPUS, routine injection of Vitamin B12 for treatment of conditions for which there is no specific indication are not payable benefits.

Rangers sponsor Explorers

FORT BENNING, Ga. — Once again the Patrolling Committee, Ranger Dept. has been the sponsor of a scouting activity. On Nov. 27, 27 young people, both male and female, from Post 333, Fort Benning, spent the day at Providence Canyon Park, near Lumpkin, under the supervision of the Rangers.

The Explorers, 13 girls and 14 boys, spent six hours rappelling down 120 foot sand cliffs, hiking and generally having a good time.



In October, when the Explorer post had just been started, the Patrolling Committee donated its time in giving the youngsters rappelling training at Todd Field.

Clinic records room misunderstood

By Tom Tegtmeyer

Today there are very few people on post who have not made use of our complete medical facilities. To these people, the out-patient clinic records room is a frequently visited but often aggravating experience.

Unfortunately, the services of this office are very often misunderstood and therein lies the problem.

Take for example men or women trying to pick up their spouse's records. It can be done, but not without a written authorization signed by the person to whom the medical records pertain.

Many doctors do not understand this administrative practice, and tell their patients to pick up their wives' or husband's records, or tell their patients to keep their records because of very frequent visits. The crux of the matter is, the records room must at all times know where the records are. If special arrangements have been made for a patient to keep his records, the record room should be informed as to the whereabouts of those records.

Some of the frequently asked questions are simply answered and in the hope of deterring future futile trips to the records room, here are a few.

Q. Why is a medical card not as good as an ID?

A. Because a medical card is not an identification card. It is for administrative purposes only.

Q. Why do I need my dependents to have ID cards of their own if I have one?

A. To establish identification of the patient and to alleviate the possibility of crossing up other patient's records.

Q. Why can't I pick up my medical records when I ETS?

A. Because your medical records are government property and cannot be used for civilian purposes. If you are presently being treated for some affliction, you can have copies made of that portion of your records which pertain to this.

In addition to the above information, here is some extra knowledge with which you can solve some of your more common problems concerning your records.

At the age of 10, your dependents must have their own ID card. Up until that time, your ID or your wife's will be sufficient for your dependents medical card. There is only one exception to this rule. All dependents from a divorced family, i.e., legally adopted children, must have an ID card. In this matter there is no minimum age.

The upper age limit on ID cards is 21 years of age. When the person is a full time student, his ID card is good until age 23.

When picking up medical records, the minimum age is 18. To receive the records, you must present your ID and your medical card.

The records room is open for business five days a week, from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m., Monday through Friday and 8 a.m. to noon on Saturday.

ANSWERS:

1. In a here-now sunny Southwest Florida community.

This is Golden Gate, a planned community already 7,000 people strong. It's just nine miles from Naples, the commercial and cultural center of the Lower Gulf Coast. The good life? We've built it into every acre of Golden Gate. When you live here, you automatically have the privilege of joining our plush country club with its 18-hole championship golf course. You get shopping facilities. Children's playgrounds. Library. The weeks ahead? Golden Gate has been orderly. That's the way our environmental experts planned it, to avoid the problems that plague other towns.

And we took care not to disrupt Florida's natural beauty. Wide, palm-lined boulevards wind around gardens, pine trees and hundreds of handsome Florida homes.

Is Golden Gate the ultimate in community living? We let the target.

Is this the answer you're looking for?

GOLDEN GATE

2. In a planned community in sunny Southwest Florida.

North Golden Gate is off the planning boards and ready to go. It's a ground-floor opportunity for the family who must wait a few years before making the great move to Florida. Located just 22 miles from Golden Gate, this expansive planned community will be developed with the same care and attention to your needs. The need for space and beauty, as well as the basics.

North Golden Gate will be a complete community, too. We've set aside plenty of space for schools and shopping centers. There will be recreation facilities. You'll travel on wide paved roads. You'll have access to all utilities. You'll enjoy strolling through parks and green ways. And you'll share the right to join the luxurious Golden Gate Golf and Country Club.

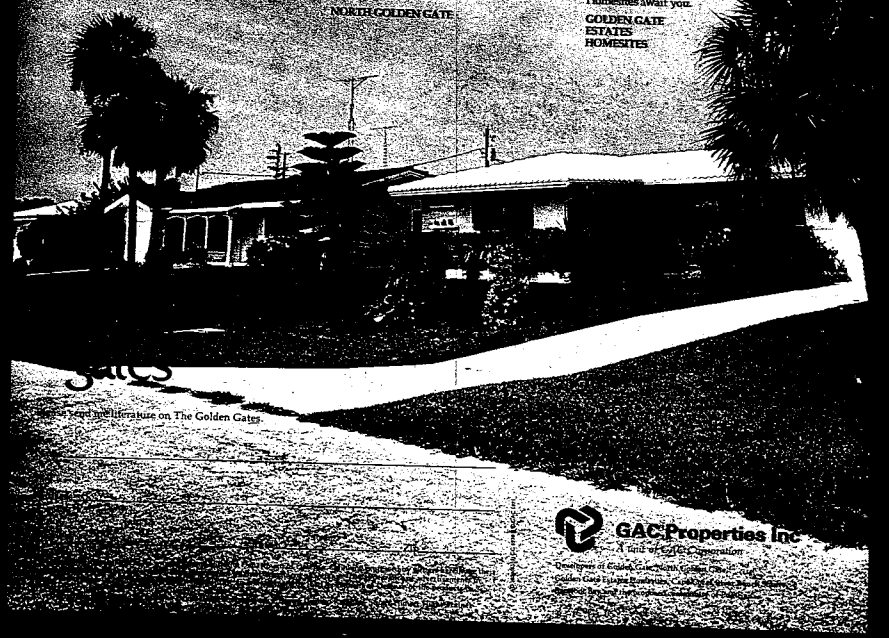
A planned community destined for better living. With you?

NORTH GOLDEN GATE

3. On your own private estate in sunny Southwest Florida.



Golden Gate Estates Homesites (units 196-203) represent a new dimension in planning. If you like the luxury of wide space around your home, this is your kind of place.

Golden Gate Estates Homesites, located in the eastern portion of Golden Gate Estates, make up a special secluded section reserved for homesites by block and lot. These homesites are a minimum of 45,000 square feet. Golden Gate Estates Homesites is a tropical suburban area. Here you can enjoy your own country-estate. Here you can live, really live, full-time or part-time! Here you can build for vacationing or for year round living.

As a resident of Golden Gate Estates Homesites, you share all the facilities and conveniences of the Golden Gate complex. Including your right to join the Golden Gate Country and Golf Club.

If you prefer country to community life, Golden Gate Estates Homesites await you.

WANT more rank and better duties while you are in the service . . . or a job you can be proud of when you get discharged? Want a man-sized paycheck, too? Then, the opportunity of a lifetime awaits you in the dynamic world of electronics.

Every year there is a growing need for electronic specialists . . . so, if you really know your electronics, the choice of jobs is wide open in this fascinating field.

What Can I Do?

Getting your training isn't as difficult as you might think. Many people feel they need a college education to specialize in electronics. But they're wrong. In fact, a high school diploma isn't even needed!

You can train right now on off-duty hours with the special courses of the Cleveland Institute of Electronics. With CIE, you study when you want ... where you want. Our step-by-step lessons make learning easier, even for men who once had trouble studying.

Since 1934, CIE has specialized in home study courses in electronics. We're "No. 1" in our field and currently have some 50,000 active students.

One sergeant received a $9,558 bonus because of his increased electronic skills. Let CIE show you how you can qualify for choice assignments and higher rank if you decide to stay in ... or a more rewarding civilian life upon discharge.

Whatever your goal, an FCC License can help you reach it faster. It opens the door to exciting jobs that pay up to $12,000 a year or more.

And CIE's home study courses can help you prepare for your License exam. They're so successful that we back our license-preparation courses with this famous Warranty: you get your FCC License upon completion of your course or we refund your tuition in full!

Toy safety urged

Phillip Reid

Mercedes Jane Hardin seems to be very happy with her stuffed animal, and rightly so. She is playing with a "safe" toy. Make sure that your children have a happy and safe Christmas by insuring that the toys they receive can cause them no harm. Jane is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Hardin of Columbus. PX may run out of some items

By Mike Keller

Shoppers who plan to go Christmas gift-hunting in the Fort Benning exchanges this year are urged to make their purchases as soon as possible.

Gilbert J. O'Brien, PX general manager, said Tuesday that many fast-selling items — such as watches and tape recorders — are rapidly disappearing from store shelves.

"We advise customers not to wait till the day before Christmas," O'Brien said, "because we probably will run out of merchandise that won't be in stock again until the New Year."

Some popular articles which the PX fell short of — men's leather jackets, for example — have been reordered from the manufacturer, however.

O'Brien said the exchange business has been particularly hectic this season, with overall sales running about 15 per cent ahead of last year's figures and toy sales about 10 per cent.

"The military pay raises are having an effect. Younger soldiers are buying more heavily than in the past — especially higher priced goods."

O'Brien also said that President Nixon's wage-price freeze has encouraged buying by holding prices relatively level the last four months.

Although the exchange has no credit system, customers can pay for an item in three installments to lighten the financial load. And customers who did not want to have presents lying around the house could pick them up the week before Christmas.

The Christmas period has always been busy for PX personnel, O'Brien said.

"In December nearly everyone on post uses our facilites, whereas during the rest of the year only 70 to 80 per cent do," he said.

O'Brien added that most retired personnel, who shop only occasionally at the PX during most of the year, use the exchanges and commissaries frequently in December. As a result the stores have been packed, particularly on weekends.

"They were so jammed last Saturday and Sunday that it was difficult to serve all the customers," he said. "And this weekend will

3-day passes earned for re-up duty

You may not know it, but you can earn passes and administrative absences in conjunction with leave by recruiting young men and women into the Army.

Paragraph 20 of AR 601-275 states that personnel on ordinary leave or those in delay status, who recruit an acceptable applicant for a three-year or longer enlistment, may be granted a three-day administrative absence in conjunction with leave or, at their option, be granted a three-day pass subsequent to their return to a duty station.

The regulation also states that recruiting main station commanders are authorized to grant administrative absences in conjunction with leave, subject to the approval of the individual's commanding officer.

If you recruit acceptable applicants during off-duty hours, you may also earn a three-day pass, but only one pass per month is allowed under the regulation.

Of course, these passes and absences depend on your commander's approval.

However, personnel assigned to or performing duty with any element of the U.S. Army Recruiting Command are ineligible to participate in this program.

HOLLEY SPREAD-BORE CARBURETOR
FOR QUADRAJET MANIFOLDS

You're looking at the big-think bolt-on of the year for Chevy owners. Holley's new Model 4165 Spread-Bore. This is the first small-primary large-secondary carburetor designed to bolt onto the stock Chevy Quadrajet manifold. The result is an economy/performance improvement without a manifold change. The Holley 4165 retains the emission-type "spreadbore" configuration on the manifold design, but delivers the improved acceleration and overall driveability formerly found only in Holley double pumpers. All this in an easy out-of-the-box carburetor bolt-on. There are two basic 4165 Spread-bore sizes: 650 CFM for small block engines and 800 CFM for big blocks and racing applications. Each offers the same basic float and metering systems, mechanical pumps and bowl designs that have made Holley the world's leader in performance replacement carburetors. You can buy the new Holley 4165 Spread-bore with the same confidence that racers all over the world place in Holley carburetors. A Holley 4165 Spread-bore will make a Chevy runners best friend.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

by Bill King

If your specialty is a thick meat or vegetable soup, try adding a tablespoon of red wine per cup of soup about ten minutes before removing from the stove.

Mocha, a town on the Red Sea once noted for its coffee, has given its name to any drink or dessert made with a coffee-and-chocolate combination.

Are you fond of fondue using meat or seafood? Remember that pieces of beef, chicken or shrimp will cook in about a minute in the hot oil. For well-done beef, add another half minute.

White wine makes a good marinade for mixed fresh fruit. Use the marinade to thin mayonnaise for dressing.

An easy way to chop raisins for holiday baking: put frozen raisins into a lightly oiled blender a half-cup at a time and blend for a few seconds. (Remove each batch before adding another.)

CFC surpasses assigned goal for '72

"The Tri-Community Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) for 1972 was an outstanding success at Fort Benning and in the Federal offices in Columbus and Phenix City," according to Brig. Gen. Paul F. Gorman, acting post commander.

The CFC surpassed its assigned goal of $142,00 by almost $9,000, with 50 per cent of the donations coming through the new payroll deduction plan. The amount given through the new plan was $73,209.75. Then per capita amount given by Fort Benning personnel was $8.38.

"This contribution will be of great assistance to the welfare agencies which benefit from this fund drive," said Gen. Gorman, "The generosity displayed by all personnel is indicative of the appreciation and understanding they have of the humanitarian roles of the participating agencies."

This year the CFC combined the United Givers, National Health Agencies and the International Service Agencies for the purpose of a single fund instead of the traditional three.

James Schoonover, secretary-treasurer, Community Activities Association and post project officer, noted that this will be the prescribed type of campaign for all government employes in the future.

Military families to receive own doctor at hospital

By Tom Teglneyer

The Surgeon General's office has announced that effective July 1, 1972, a Family Practice Residency Program will be established at Martin Army Hospital at Fort Benning.

The program is being established due to a growing trend among medical school graduates to be more civic minded, participating in the family practice area as well as a desire by the Army to give their patients more complete and personal medical attention, according to Col. H. Haskell Ziperman, commander of the Fort Benning Medical Department Activities (MEDDAC).

The specialty areas have dominated the scene in medical school for many years and now this area, which is reminiscent of the old family practitioner, is being offered in medical schools as a specialty in its own right, Col. Ziperman said.

Maj. James F. Grow Jr., the MEDDAC project officer for the program and one of the very few family practice board certified doctors in the Army, noted that although the majority of care given in a family practice is out-patient, the physician will have been trained in and have gained experience in hospital care as well and will be conversant with the use of all modern medicines.

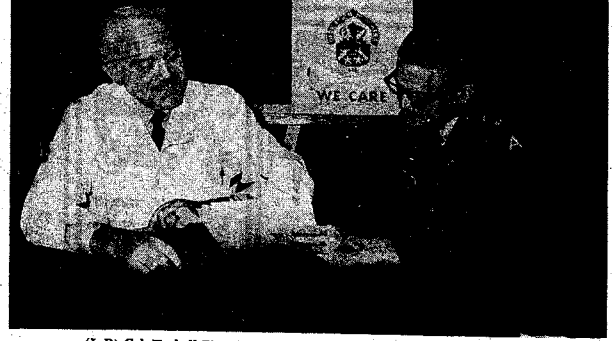
Grow stated that the family practice resident will receive training in obstetrics, pediatrics, psychiatry, internal medicine, community medicine and surgery and therefore will be able to provide total treatment of 90-95 per cent of the medical problems which his patients bring to him. He will be able to call on specialists in various areas to provide consultant assistance required by some patients.

The advantages offered through this program are many. A family, for instance, will see the same doctor, time after time, gaining peace of mind knowing that a new doctor does not have to review their records before he can treat them. Also, the records of all patients will be moved to the building in which the doctor practices. Thus, the records will be available to the doctor on short notice.

Col. Ziperman theorizes that, at least initially, there will be approximately 100-125 families per doctor, so that the families will truly receive personalized care.

When the program is initiated in July of 1972, information will be published as to how families will be chosen for this program. Presently, plans are for families to volunteer to come under the program.

This will be with the full knowledge that they will be treated by physicians in training in this program for whom supervision is provided by board certified specialists either in family practice, obstetries, gynecology, surgery, pediatries or internal medicine.



Grow said that as of now Martin Army Hospital anticipates receiving four residents in this program per year for a period of three years. In this way, after the program is in full swing, there will be 12 residents at any one time working at the Hospital Annex Complex, giving complete, individual and continuing medical care to the families. Under the present plan, at least one physician will be on call at all times thus providing around the clock service.

One of the most outstanding contributions of this progam is that it is the first such program in the Department of the Army and out of the eight to 10 Army hospitals that applied for this program, Martin Army Hospital was chosen to initiate it.

Family Practice was started as a specialty about three years ago, and presently there are over 50 such progams operating outside the Army. After carefully considering all of these programs, the Army has taken the best features of each and incorporated them into one program.

As a result of this program, it is believed that there will be more physicians attracted into Army medicine. By combining the personal contact of the family practitioner with his patient and the modern advances of today's medical training, not only will the patient benefit, but the doctor will be able to better understand the personal needs of each patient and his psychological make-up.

Col. Ziperman said that any qualified individual who would like to take part in the program should send his application to the Surgeon General's Office, Washington, D.C.

Airborne cited by Georgia Easter Seal Society

The men of the Airborne Department, U.S. Army Infantry School, Fort Benning, have been cited by the Georgia Easter Seal Society for Crippled Children and Adults for enabling nine handicapped youngsters to attend Camp Easter Seal at Kool Vargo State Park, Winder, Ga., during the past summer.

The citation, in recognition of the $1,118 contribution made by men in the Airborne Department, was presented to Col. Lamar A. Welch, director of the Airborne Department, and his men at Eubanks Field, Nov. 29, by Alton Ray, chairman of the Easter Seal Society's Division Six, a 15-county area.

Present with Ray were three of the nine sponsored youngsters who attended Camp Easter Seal: Mark and JoAnn Mills, son and daughter of SSgt. and Mrs. Russell L. Whetstone of Columbus, and Cathy Clemons, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Clemons, Midland, Ga.

When Col. Welch learned about the summer camp, and the need for camperships to help handicapped children attend one of the three 12-day sessions, he asked his men to consider the project of sponsoring handicapped campers. By the time the men had finished, they had raised more than enough funds to send nine handicapped youngsters to Camp Easter Seal.

A total of 23 Columbus area children and young adults were among 206 handicapped Georgians attending the residential Easter Seal Camping program which ran for six weeks, beginning on June 20 and ending July 30.

VOLAR goal: Professionalism

This week I took a trip through Sand Hill, one of the old basic training areas here at Fort Benning. It was an eerie feeling looking at the "ghost town" appearance of this area.

Grass and weeds are strewn about the lawns where an almost garden appearance had once prevailed. My memories of going through basic training here in 1966 are still very much alive.

Pulling "KP," having to sign in and out on weekends . . . if we were lucky enough to receive a weekend pass . . . are some of those memories. The irrational drill sergeant that made me run 50 laps around a building quoting, "This is my rifle, this is my gun"—is another memory.

In those days, not so long ago, soldiering was completely de-personalized.

Now, I am back at Fort Benning. The changes I see—vibrate through my being and make me proud to be a member of the military.

The Modern Volunteer Army (MVA) is striving to give the individual soldier a sense of awareness, an understanding of the need for professionalism. It is attempting to achieve two-way communication whereby orders are clearly explained and willing obedience is the product as opposed to blind obedience.

Clearly, much of the responsibility for the success of the MVA program lies with junior officers and senior NCOs. For it is with them that the real communication takes place.

Some soldiers contend that the race relations program here is a "joke."

I would agree that the first race relations classes, in many cases, failed to eliminate racial tension. But the program is hardly a joke. The Infantry Center set up a Moderator Training Program to take up the existing slack in the area of understanding racial problems.

This new course was set up to give designated soldiers, regardless of race or rank, the basic skills needed to improve communication among the troops.

It was felt that both rap sessions and seminars at various levels of command would be the tools needed for an effective race relations program. Students going through this five-day course are trained in the use of audio visuals, group psychology, and modern techniques of instruction.

The Moderator Training Program incorporates one of the most popular trends in modern education, role-playing. Here, officers and enlisted men are able to see themselves as others see them. The lessons learned while taking part in role-playing help to eliminate the doubts and misunderstandings that cause so much dissension and racial strife.

The race relations classes are clearly helping to solve problems that were heretofore not being solved.

Others feel that long hair and partitioned rooms are causing a double standard. They say that discipline has broken down causing a "lack of professionalism."

I say that long hair and partitioned rooms do not constitute a double standard, nor do they personify the degree of professionalism prevalent in the military. They are merely a catalyst in our contemporary society to help the soldier maintain a sense of individualism . . . and a sense of self-pride.

MVA, if anything, is making a more professional Army.

The professional military man cannot divorce himself from dependent dental and medical care, better pay and allowances and more privileges.

Along with all these changes brought about by MVA comes more responsibility . . . and more professionalism in meeting those responsibilities. (CFK)

Carelessness with old car breeds trouble

By Michael Curley

Money and transportation for the weekend are two problems young men in uniform have been striving to overcome since great grandad was a doughboy. Money will probably continue to be elusive, but some guys nowadays think they have temporarily solved the wheels problem with a "beater."

To anyone who doesn't know what a beater is, just look out in the parking lot. Do you see any cars out there that were around before Elvis shook the country? Predictably, it will have its share of dents, rust and bald tires. It's the old junker, clunker or bomb that can hold six or seven of the boys on a Saturday night, and cost the owner no more than $100. It may even be owned by more than one person.

On a Saturday night everyone piles in and it's off to town. The very nature of the beater makes the driver and the passengers a bit more careless than they would be if they were driving in a new car. The passengers don't worry about where they put their feet or their cigarettes, and the driver is not as mindful of the near-collisions. More often than not the first stop is for a few six-packs of beer.

"If it breaks down or I get into a wreck," says one of the drivers-owners, "I'll just leave it where it lies. We only paid $75 for it!"

This type of thinking can lead to trouble, and an accident can cost more than the money you paid for the car.

There are also certain legal considerations to be made. Make sure all titles and documents are in order and are easily transferable before you dish out the cash for your beater. You wouldn't want to buy a car and then find out later that you don't really own it.

Make arrangements for insurance to cover you and your clunker. No matter how good a driver you are you still need insurance. Besides, if it gets stolen you might want your $75 back.

If your state requires one and your prospective beater doesn't have one, be prepared to acquire a safety inspection sticker. The fines vary, but they are pretty stiff for the driver whose vehicle doesn't sport a safety sticker.

GIRL SCOUTS

Custer Terrace Brownie Troops 34 and 298 have been involved in a unique service project which will benefit children in underdeveloped nations through the United Nations Children's Fund.

Mrs. Patty Summers, leader of Troop 298, noticed an advertisement in the October issue of Readers' Digest which offered to exchange the trademarks or wrappers from various nationally known products for money to be given to UNICEF. These products included Kool-Aid, Birds Eye Vegetables, Welch's Jelly products and Clark's Chewing Gum.

After clearing the project with the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts in Columbus, Troop 298 and the girls of Troop 34, with the guidance of Mrs. M. Miley and Mrs. S. Renn, collected over 1,200 labels and wrappers from the products mentioned. The trade in value of the wrappers was $6. That amount of money would not provide a noticeable amount of medical care in the United States.

However, channeled through UNICEF, this same amount can provide 600 children with small pox vaccinations; or cure 120 children of trachoma; or provide 24 baby chicks to be used in an applied nutrition program. Commented one Brownie, "I didn't know Kool-Aid was healthy. Now that I know that if I drink it some one else won't get sick, I think I'll drink lots more."

As 1971 draws to a close, Fort Benning Girl Scouts are thinking ahead to the 1972 Girl Scout Cookie Sale. Mrs. B. Hall, Fort Benning Cookie Sale Chairman, has announced that the cookie sale dates are now set from Feb. 25 through March 11, 1972. Further information will be available as sale time approaches.

Mrs. M. Nordwall has been named Day Camp director for Camp Hideaway, Fort Benning's Girl Scout Camp, located on Marne Road. Plans are being formulated for the camping sessions, tentatively set for June, 1972.

The girls of Senior Troop 57 are continuing their weekly trips to the historic village of Westville near Lumpkin. They have an added incentive this holiday season as they have been requested to decorate the farmhouse in the village for the Yule Log Ceremony to be held at Westville on Sunday.

All decorations used must be authentic to the period of 1850. The girls are now researching southern Christmas traditions of the period and soon will be hunting holly berries and evergreens for their Westville project.

The Annual Girl Scout Christmas coffee will be held Tuesday at 10 a.m. at the Main Post Scout Hut. All troop leaders and assistant leaders are invited to attend.

RANGER WIVES

Beauty care and cosmetics were the topics of the Fort Benning Ranger Officers' Wives Club's Nov. 18 luncheon, held in the Supper Club. Julie Kepher and her model, Mrs. James Rogers, demonstrated how to apply and remove make-up. Special attention was directed to the means of cleansing the face before applying make-up and before bedtime. Julie Kepher gave several valuable tips to be remembered in facial care.

After the cosmetic demonstration, an announcement was made naming Mrs. Richard Epting as the new Hospitality chairman for the Fort Benning Ranger Officers' Wives' Club. Mrs. Epting will be replacing Mrs. Jack Dawson.

Collected at the luncheon were several boxes of canned goods and used clothing, to be given to needy families during the holiday season.

Decorations for the luncheon projected a Thanksgiving flavor, with cornucopia, fresh fruit, nuts, and gourds. Large stocks of corn shucks were also placed in the corners of the room. Hostesses for the luncheon were Mrs. Jerry Barnhill, Mrs. Richard Epting, Mrs. James Rogers, Mrs. Walter Ross and Mrs. Donald Turek.

Guests welcomed at the luncheon were: Mrs. Dwight Brown, guest of Mrs. Joseph Jakubowski; Mrs. Anderson, guest of Mrs. William Sweeney; Mrs. J. C. Reily, guest of Mrs. Karl Hurdle; and student Ranger wife, Mrs. Robert Savage.

New members welcomed by Mrs. Donald Hudson were Mrs. William Schraeder and Mrs. William Tangrey. Farewell was bid to Mrs. Jack Dawson.

Almost there

Volunteers are putting the finishing touches on "The Talent Tree," an art boutique scheduled to open here in January 1972. The first consignments have already been accepted, and the next consignment day is Monday. Your handmade articles and your time are needed. Phone Mrs. Richard Stoltz, 545-1845, or Mrs. Thomas McGregor, 545-226, for more information.

Children to lead singing during Yule program

A program entitled Faith and Festival at Christmas will be presented at 6 p.m., Sunday at the Infantry Center Chapel.

Participants will be children from the Protestant Sunday School and the Catholic Catechetical School. An ecumenical children's choir will sing special musical selections and lead the congregation in the singing of favorite carols and songs of Christmas.

The purpose of this service is to interpret and give new and deeper meaning to the festive aspects of Christmas which are considered by some to be purely secular.

The program is unusual in that it brings together the secular and sacred traditions of the season in a unique way, and seeks to interpret the so-called "secular" celebrations in the light of the Christian faith.

The public is invited to attend. Parents are especially urged to bring their children.

WOMEN'S NEWS

New Christmas home for a puppy

Santa Claus, in the form of little boys and girls, makes Christmas gifts for the kittens and puppies of his acquaintance.

All the little Santas need are brown boxes (free from the neighborhood grocer), a set of permanent ink markers that come in eight bright colors, plain brown wrapping paper and rubber cement.

The little gift maker cuts down the carton to fashion a snuggly bed for his little pet. He covers the printing on the carton by pasting plain brown wrapping paper all around. Now he's ready to create. He can print his pet's name right on the front. He might even draw his friend or color a Christmas tree, a star or a bell on the box.

Old blankets or pillows will be fitting "furniture" for the little pet's new colorful, Christmas home. And little Santa did it himself.

Soldiers explain explosives to children

If you happened to be at any of the grammar schools throughout the Columbus area this past week, you might have run into SSgt. Ian Cordner and Sp4 John Tolbert of the Explosive 89th Ordinance Detachment, 83ist Engr, Gp. The two E.O.D. men were giving lectures about dangerous explosives to the grammar schools in Columbus.

The lectures are part of an annual program given by the 89th in cooperation with the Columbus schools to help the children, ranging from grades one to six, recognize dangerous explosives and to know what to do if they should happen to find some.

In about 40 minutes the men covered everything from a 100-year-old cannonball, to the conventional claymore mine and from a simple blasting cap to a complex rocket. The three main points of the lecture which they wanted to get across to the children were: don't touch, get away from the object and notify an adult.

These lectures apparently came about because of the death of some youngsters who had, during a Christmas vacation, wandered onto a firing range and found some sort of explosive. The positive effect of the lectures has been evident throughout the past few years.

Todd Yates, principal of Frank Loyd School, felt that the efforts of the men of the 89th were well rewarded. "I've had children bring me old and rusty ammunition the day after they had heard the lectures and say they found it on the way to school and knew it as dangerous," he also said, "Many soldiers, after working on the range, absent-mindedly leave ammunition in their coat pockets. The children will very often get ahold of this ammunition, but they know not to play with it and will usually give it back to their parents."

When asked what he thought of the lectures, Cordner, one of the instructors, said this "Well, I look at it this way, if I had a child living here at Fort Benning, or any place around firing ranges, I would very much want him or her to hear the lecture."

Civilian Army aide tours Post

Mr. Robert O. Baker, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of the Army for the state of Minnesota, visited Fort Benning for a VOLAR tour.

Accompanying Mr. Baker were various high school counselors, newspaper writers and publicity representatives from the state of Minnesota. Their purpose was to fully investigate and gather information concerning the Army's Volunteer Program. Mr. Baker will be spreading the word of VOLAR in Minnesota through those accompanying him. High school counselors will now be able to counsel a student concerning the VOLAR program since they have seen it for themselves. since high school seniors are potential members of the Army.

While at Fort Benning, Mr. Baker and his party visited the 197th Infantry Brigade, which is an enlistment assignment option, visited the new welcome center, the airborne training area, and visited with soldiers in the barracks and mess halls for a close up view of VOLAR.

Mr. Baker's regular civilian occupation is an insurance executive. He is a retired lieutenant colonel in the Army National Guard and was appointed by President Nixon to his present post in 1970.

Mr. Baker and his party departed Fort Benning yesterday morning.

Post Office slate

The Fort Benning Branch Post Office will be open for operations from 8:30 a.m. until 5 p.m. tomorrow. Mail your packages now to avoid the Christmas rush.

Christmas rush also hits airlines

A couple of years ago Peter, Paul and Mary sang a song entitled, "Leaving on a Jet Plane." This song which has now become an "oldie but goodie" has more recently been the theme song for one of the major airlines. But this holiday season it will be more than likely become the theme song for many of Fort Benning's servicemen.

The Christmas rush, which for many years has hassled late shoppers, has also hit the airlines. Because of this mass exodus, Fort Benning's Joint Airline Military Ticket Office (JAMTO) wants to make sure that the JAMTO's regulations are understood.

Although DD form 1580 is not needed to purchase tickets at JAMTO it must be in the possession of the traveler when en route to his destination.

Military standby fares will be given on a space available basis only, and this type of fare will be good seven days a week, 24 hours a day. This, however, is not recommended during holiday travel, for the risk is high due to the limited number of seats available.

The type travel best suited for the military man is Military Reserved. Although not available from 2 p.m. to midnight Friday and Saturday it does come with a confirmed seat and at a one third discount.

Reservations for confirmed seats for Christmas leave can be made by calling the airlines direct or by contacting the JAMTO office. Tickets may be purchased at JAMTO during normal working hours 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. This weekend, however, the JAMTO will be open Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Along with possessing the DD1580 all personnel traveling by way of military fare must be in uniform. Also for the convenience of Fort Benning's soldiers, two extra planes will leave Atlanta on Dec. 17th and 18th.

Octofoil group to hold meet

A local chapter of the 9th Infantry Division "Octafoil Association" will hold its initial organizational meeting and cocktail hour at Victory Lodge beginning at 5:30 p.m., Dec. 13.

All personnel who were assigned or attached to, or supported the division since its reactivation for Vietnam duty are urged to attend.

For additional information, contact the division representative in your unit or telephone Capt. William Smith, 545-3262, or Sgt. Maj. Al Kane, 545-4454.

HEW issues new standards

A Federal limitation on radiation emissions from microwave cooking ovens has been issued by the HEW Environmental Health Service's Bureau of Radiological Health.

The limitation, issued as a standard under the Radiation Control for Health and Safety Act, requires that microwave home or commercial cooking ovens manufactured after October 6, 1971:

— May not emit radiation in excess of one milliwatt per square centimeter prior to oven sales.

— May not emit radiation in excess of five milliwatts per square centimeter throughout the useful life of the oven.

Microwave power densities measures at five centimeters (about two inches) from any external surface of the oven would determine compliance with both maximums.

The five milliwatt limit makes allowance for the possiblity that a gradual increase in radiation emissions may occur as a result of normal oven wear. This limit compares with a maximum of ten milliwatts per square centimeter which the microwave ovea industry generally bas recognized as a voluntary standard.

A government standard became necessary alter Federal, State, and local public health agency surveys showed that 20-30 per cent of ovens tested emitted microwave radiation in excess of the industry standard. Some of the ovens were leaking radiation at levels found by scientific investigation to be capable of inducing biological effects in animals. The new standard is considered sufficient to protect the public health.

Central High gets new course

Norm Langlois, coach of the Central High students, was on hand to receive a plaque dedicating the obstacle course "Patriot Field." Pawlik presented the plaque.

A demonstration by Sgt. Dale Aberle, All-Army Orienteering Champion, was made to show the students and on-lookers exactly how the course should be run. Aberle ran the course during the day to give each gym class of Central High a chance to see the course and how it is run.

The men of the 1st Bn., 58th Inf. Bde have been working on the project with the high school students since November. The construction of the obstacle course is for a new Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) drill field. The project was another in the domestic-action program of the 197th.

The obstacle field consisted of: the horizontal ladder, the low crawl, the balancing logs, belly buster, high step over, six vaults and the incline wall.

be much of the same. However, the crowds should taper off the week before Christmas when people leave for the holidays."

O'Brien said that the best time to avoid the rush at the exchanges is 10-11 a.m. and 2-4 p.m. on weekdays. The main post exchange will be open until 8 p.m., Monday through Friday, throughout this month.

In order to handle the huge influx of seasonal shoppers, the PX increases its work force by about one-third in October and November and by 40 per cent in December, O'Brien said.

Although some people make lighthearted remarks about starting the countdown on Christmas shopping days as early as June, this is no joke for merchandisers — including the PX. June, if anything, is very late.

"After Christmas, we'll start planning for next Christmas," O'Brien said. "In March the PX will have representatives at the New York "toy show" — the hub of the toy industry in this country. In April and May we'll buy clothes. In June we should be ready for Christmas."

As a guide as to what and how much merchandise to buy, O'Brien said the exchange uses last year's sales totals, watches economic trends and makes estimates based on hikes in military pay and the overall troop strength on post.

Veterans Administration urges OJT

The Veterans Administration, which promotes a 44 week on-the-job training (OJT) program for veterans in water pollution control, is also urging veterans to study the subject in 22-week college level courses now offered at nine community colleges.

The training is sponsored by the Office of Water Programs, Environmental Protection Agency. Preference is given to veterans who plan to become water plant and wastewater plant operators.

Pay for these jobs generally ranges from $5,000 to $8,500 a year, but could go as high as $15,000, depending on experience, locality, and level of responsibility.

Among 1,100 individuals engaged in government-sponsored OJT in water pollution control in November, 530 were Vietnam veterans. Another 300 veterans were taking courses at community colleges or technical institutes.

About 600 other veterans have already completed OJT programs, started after studying water technology at colleges during their last six months of military service.

Funds for the institutional and OJT training programs are provided by the Departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare under the Manpower Development and Training Act and the Economic Opportunity Act.

In addition to straight OJT and study programs in water pollution control, the Office of Water Programs administers 35 "coupled" OJT programs (classroom and plant work) around the country.

Some veterans draw checks from more than one source while taking OJT under the G.I. Bill. A veteran with no dependents, for example, receives a starting monthly stipend of $108 from VA, while the employer pays him at least half the salary of the job for which he is training. A job is usually assured after successful completion of training.

Veterans interested in water plant and wastewater plant operator training under the G.I. Bill should contact their nearest VA office.

BICYCLE SAFETY
Powell points out safety feature to Lora Nybro

Patrolman presents bike safety program

Cpl. Billy M. Powell, of the Georgia State Patrol, presented a program on bike safety at Edward A. White School at Fort Benning recently.

Powell is a safety education counselor for 12 counties for the Safety Education Division at Americus, Ga.

The purpose of the program was to make students aware of dangerous situations involving themselves and their bicycles.

Powell stressed the importance of obeying the traffic laws pertaining to bicycles and the importance of keeping a bike in good condition and repair.

A film was shown which depicted what might happen if bicycles were able to decide who would not ride, and how many activities are affected by the lack of a bike.

Job interviews scheduled for 'Careers in Georgia'

If you are or soon will be a college graduate and have or will soon complete your military obligation, then "Careers in Georgia Placement" could be for you.

On Dec. 28 and 29, the Georgia Chamber of Commerce is sponsoring two days of job interviews to be held at the Royal Coach Motor Inn in Atlanta. Various participating companies will be from the state of Georgia and representatives will actually offer specific jobs to those qualified. Jobs will be offered in nearly 30 different occupational categories. There is no charge to participating students or military personnel.

Further information may be obtained by writing to the Georgia Chamber of Commerce, 1200 Commerce Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. 3033. Give your name, address, name of college attended, and major area of study.

Holiday injuries

Christmas spirit spoiled by wrong selection of toy

By Jim Swink

It seems that every Christmas there is a not-so-popular subject that comes up during this period of good cheer. But yet despite the many warnings given to parents concerning toy-safety, hundreds of Christmases are spoiled by injuries to children by poorly selected or faulty toys. Parents must not assume that everything made and sold for children is reasonably safe. One could not be further from the truth.

Selecting toys is a surprisingly big and important responsibility. Making toys that combine fun or educational value with safety is not as easy to do as it may seem. Some of the most innocent-looking cuddly, soft, and squeaky play-things are among the most potentially dangerours.

The majority of the complaints concerning unsafe toys are about the so-called bargain toys, many of which are foreign made. The U.S. Government now has the power to test potentially harmful toys, but it lacks the money or personnel to do its work effectively. The Bureau of Product Safety has the unenviable job of policing an industry with annual sales of more than $3 billion. It cannot hope to detect all the hazards in new toys until the reports of serious injuries are received. Thus, the job of toy selection is left up to you, me, and all parents or anyone who may be attempting to make some child's Christmas a little merrier by the giving of a toy.

There is no basic rule concerning toy safety because a child can do with a toy things which may never have entered the mind of the manufacturer.

But for the baffled and concerned Christmas shopper, there are a few questions you can ask yourself when purchasing a toy.

1. Is it small enough to put into the mouth or suck into the nose?

2. Could it readily break into jagged or easy-to-swallow parts? Toys with a squeaky noisemaker inside should be carefully examined to make sure that it can not be removed.

3. Could it flave into flames? Make sure that toys containing a lot of fabric have at least beeen treated with a flame retardative.

4. Could it cause electrical shock or burn? Some experts say that parents should never buy a child a toy that uses household current. The parent, being the victim of today's high-pressure selling, should be aware of the dangers of electrical toys. In addition, extreme caution should be taken in selection of such playthings. Electrical ovens which really bake should have a "thermal interlock." This is a safety door that will not open until the temperature inside drops below a certain point. The toys should also have a safety plug — a special guard that prevents the youngster's finger from touching the prongs. The UL (Underwriters Laboratories) label indicating that the toy meets the standard for electrical operation is also important.

5. Could it explode or shoot into an eye? This would include fire works, missile launchers, lawn darts and archery sets which should all have special attention.

6. Could it stab or puncture? Play swords, daggers, bayonets and other toy weapons are best avoided.

7. Could it cause poisoning if put into the mouth? Painted toys for children who still put things in their mouths should be avoided. The paint could be toxic.

8. Could it harm the hearing? If you must buy a toy that makes a loud noise, make sure the child operates the toy out of doors. These noises are intensified in a closed room. Even if the noise doesn't seem too loud to you, it may cause damage to the more delicate ears of a child.

9. Could it be mistaken for food or candy? This applies to very young children and the reason is obvious.

There is one more point that needs to be made. In the family with more than one child, there could be the problem of a very young child handling a toy produced for an older child. A chemistry set or a BB gun might be alright for a 12-year-old, but could be very dangerous in the hands of a six-year-old — not only to himself, but to those around him.

Vets can hire tutors at VA expense

The Veterans Administration reminded veterans studying under the G. I. Bill that they can hire a tutor at VA expense, if needed, and still get the full educational allowance.

About 4,000 veterans received more than 60,00 hours of tutorial help in connection with their G.I. Bill educational studies, VA reported today.

VA officials noted that to be eligible for this benefit (established by the Veterans Education and Training Act of 1970), the veteran must be enrolled under the G.I. Bill above the high school level on a half time or more basis.

If the veteran needs tutoring to pass a required course, VA allows up to $50 monthly for a maximum of nine months to pay for it.

These tutorial fees are in addition to the regular monthly education check the veteran receives, and are not chargeable to his basic entitlement, officials pointed out.

VA urged veterans interested in tutorial assistance or education benefits to contact their nearest VA office, or local veterans service organization representatives.

Tell the MVA story

Motorcyclists tour USA to make plug for Army

The Modern Volunteer Army (MVA) has been represented in various ways. But never, has it been represented by motorcyclists making a tour across the U.S.

Sp4 Doug Reitmeyer and Sp4 Mike Speegle are doing just that. . .on motorcycles given them by Harley Davidson and gasoline supplied by Texaco.

Reitmeyer thought it would contribute to the Army's image if he could "tell the MVA story like it is." He went to his commander and in a few months he and Speegle were suited up for the journey.

Starting in New York City on Sept. 23, the duo visited local high schools attempting to communicate with young people about the Army rather than "sell" the Army. They continued to Detroit, then to San Francisco, Los Angles and San Jose.

In San Jose the trip was somewhat interrupted by a hit-and-run driver. Fortunately, neither man was seriously injured.

Heading East, the two Army specialists went through Texas and then to Atlanta. Another accident occurred there when a car ran a red light and hit Speegle. Reitmeyer jumped off his motorcycle and watched the cycle twist itself around a pole. Speegle received a severe sprain and pulled muscles in his left leg.

Visiting Baker High School here in Columbus on Dec. 1, the two men were asked if they planned to continue the excursion. "We feel that we've been very successful in our attempt to reach young people. . .and nothing will stop us from complete this trip," Speegle said. 'From here we're going to Orlando, Fla., then back to New York City," Reitmeyer added.

The 9,000-mile journey which was originally projected will cover over 12,000 miles. "It's been a wonderful experience, but we'll be glad when it ends Dec. 17," Reitmeyer said.

He's here gain, again. . .

SSgt. Lawrence A. Scott is perhaps the most permanent of the 82nd Company permanent party. After completing basic training at Ft. Bliss, Tex., and Advanced Individual Training (AIT) at Ft. Gordon, Scott entered the 82nd Co., 8th Bn. (NCOC), The School Brigade (TSB). He performed well as a student and, upon graduation, was promoted to staff sergeant. From here Scott traveled to Vietnam, served for one and a half years, and returned as a Technical Counselor-Advisor (TAC) to the 82nd Company. A reenlistment choice once again took Scott to the Far East and Vietnam. After his 2nd tour and as if from habit, he was assigned to the 82nd Company as a TAC.

Presently, Scott is responsible for the Fourth Platoon and the multitude of duties inherent in the job of a NCOC TAC.

TSB presents drug abuse skit

By Steve Maize

"I had sold all of my clothes, lost my job, and had begun to steal anything I got my hands on," testified a former drug addict at The School Brigade (TSB) Family Problems Solving Seminar. "The thing that finally made me stop was when my wife got on that plane to leave me. Then I swore I'd quit and after 14 days straight of "cold turkey" (withdrawal effects) I kicked it." So it went for one of the former heroin users who volunteered to tell his story to the audience of a seminar held on Dec. 1 at Fort Benning.

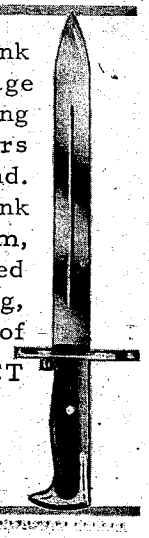
The TSB seminar was not the usual type of program. The audience was credited with the knowledge that a drug problem exists and that undesirable consequences may result from drug usage. The seminar dealt with the problems of adolescent drug usage and the frequent difficulty of communication between parents and their sons and daughters.

The most effective part of the presentation was the well conceived stage play which conveyed the case of a parent-child misunderstanding, and filtered the legal and medical facts of drug abuse to the audience without forcing the average "drug message." The skit held the audiences' attention and was not a boring repetition.

Chaplain (Capt.) Thomas R. Fraker, 4th Sig. Bn. (Abn), was the project officer and under his guidance a two-hour program was organized into two phases: the play presentation, and a question and answer period between the audience and the former drug users. Col. Robert M. Lathrop, staff judge advocate of the Infantry Center, and Lt. Col. Richard B. Stoltz, staff surgeon of the Infantry School, provided the legal and medical aspects of drug abuse.

The real impact of the evening came with the stories of the men who once had been addicted to "hard" drugs. Their explanations created an insight into the grim life of an addict and the endless search for the next "fix." Feeding their habit was expensive. One man needed $140 per day and emphasized that an addict can't meet this payment legally. The only resort was to steal from parents and, as things got worse, to rely on back-alley mugging.

"An addict will never admit he's hooked," explained one man. "A guy figures he's going to quit but reasons that he'll take just one more fix. Trouble is, there is always 'one more.'"



Some of the former users were helped by drug programs but all agreed that these often fall short of their goals. It seems that one of the most important things to an addict is having someone to turn to when he's ready to give up his habit. A significant recommendation was that former addicts should be on the staff of help-programs (Benning House, for example) for drug abusers. "Only a man who has been through the hell of drug addition can know how an addict feels when he has decided to stop his habit," a former addict pointed out.

Columbus Symphony highlights holidays with subscription concert

A highlight of the upcoming holiday season in Columbus will be the second subscription concert of the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, Harry Kruger conductor. The program will take place on Dec. 14 in Fine Arts Hall at Columbus College at 8:30 p.m.

Especially in keeping with the season, the featured work of the evening will be the magnificent "Gloria" by Vivaldi, in which the Columbus College choir, Thomas Williams director, will join with the orchestra and soloists. This inspiring work captures all the brilliance and excitement of Vivaldi's writing as well as the reverence of the mass.

The balance of the program contains three smaller works for orchestra alone. The short, but power-packed, "Second Symphony" of the Russian composer Alexander Borodin is one of the most stunningly original works of the orchestral repetoire, an amazing feat for a man who was a medical scientist by profession and who was continually harrassed while composing by pupils, family and the innumberable cats he kept as house pets.

In keeping with Mr. Kruger's announced policy of featuring outstanding contemporary works, the string section of the Symphony will present "Adagio for Strings" by American composer Samuel Barber. In the span of this brief work are heard the wide range of colors, dynamics and emotions possible with stringed instruments alone.

Rounding out the evening's fare will be "Les Preludes" by Liszt, one of the most well known of the symphonic poems. Lone Ranger fans will recognize one of the major themes of this work instantly.

Tickets for this performance are priced at $2, $2.50 and $3.50, with students and enlisted men admitted half price. Today tomorrow, Monday and Tuesday, the Symphony box office at 1100 3rd Avnue corner of 11th Street) will be open from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.. Tickets also are available at the door the evening of the performance.

Future programs of the 1971 - 72 season will be held on March 28 and May 9, 1972 and will feature Dr. Andrew Galos, violin virtuoso, performing the Tchaikovsky Violin Concherto; and Samuel Timberlake, outstanding young baritone, in favorite operatic arias. Tickets may be purchased for these events at this time also.

For information on tickets phone 323-5059. Ticket requests may also be addressed to the Columbus Symphony Guild; P. O. Box 5361, Columbus 31906.

Unforgettable creature

In a world of unimaginable savagery, Julie Ege, the sensational Norwegian beauty, stars as the heroine in "Creatures The World Forgot." The film, photographed in the Namib Desert in Africa, and featuring Tony Bonner as the hero, will be showing Wednesday at Main Post Theater No. 5.

'Snow White' ballet slated as Christmas special

By Anthony Fornaro

Another Christmas, another joyous and holy birthday celebration, and of course, another holiday presentation by the Springer Ballet Company.

This year's production will be the often told fairy tale of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs." The tale of the beautiful princess, Snow White, who must run away into the woods and hide because an evil, wicked queen is jealous of her beauty.

'Snow White' is scheduled to be held at the Springer Opera House on Dec. 16, 17 and 18 at 8 p.m., and on Dec. 18 and 19 at 2:30 p.m.

Tickets will cost $2.50 for adults and $1.25 for students and children. The box office is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. For additional information phone 327-3688.

The ballet will be an original production directed and choreographed by Terrell Paulk who is instructing at the Officers' Wives' club School of Dance. His dancing and teaching abilities are well known in this part of the country. He has conducted classes and workshops in Birmingham, Atlanta, Albany, and as far north as Chicago. Paulk is often remembered for his fine dancing performances in the Springer Theater musical production of "The King and I," "My Fair Lady," and "Aunt Mame," and "Anything Goes." Some of his ballet productions have been the "Nutcracker," "Graduation Ball," and last spring's outstanding performance of "The Four Seasons."

Dance Magazine, the national publication on dancing, described one of his works for the Southeast Regional Ballet Festival in Nashville as follows: "Paulk, an alumnus of the Atlanta Ballet, is a dancer of unusual suppleness and ease . . . His 'Valse Caprice' (Saint-Saens) was for eight performers led by Sonja Manzi and Paulk himself, who just simply danced — lightly, modestly, and best of all happily — as though they were engaged in an act of affirmation, rather than a precarious journey in artificial shoes."

The Springer Ballet is a joint cooperative effort on the part of the people of Fort Benning, Columbus, and Phenix City. The original group known as "Le Petite Ballet" was first started at Fort Benning. This group, under the auspices of the OWC, performed four full length performances of the "Nutcracker" in Marshall Auditorium, raising several thousand dollars for OWC scholarships.

Later, several dancers from the Fort Benning Group joined together with others from the Columbus and Phenix City area and the Springer Ballet, under the guidance and leadership of Terrell Paulk and Jenna Davis, was founded and established as a wing of the Springer Theater. After Mrs. Jenna David's retirement from the co-directorship of the ballet, Mrs. Sonja Manzi, wife of Maj. Ralph Manzi, assumed the duties of assistant director to Paulk. Mrs. Manzi, through her many years of professional training and performances, has made an excellent contribution to the success of the Ballet Company. She is also an instructor in the OWC School of Dance. Other fine dancers from the military community who perform for the Ballet Company are: Sara Sydnor, Mary Jo Werp, Lodner Liles, Sara White, Sandra Ortiz, Maritza Silva, Amy Manzi, Joelle Gutman, Katrina Weierick, Shirley Redmond, Annette Sagul, Peggy Welch and Diane Poole.

These dancers devote many long and hard hours to the development of their fine talents and achieving the high standards of performance demanded by Paulk.

The Springer Ballet does not present a yearly dance recital. It does present creative and professional programs of the art of dancing. The goal of the Springer Ballet is to present professional quality ballet performances for the enjoyment of all people of the Columbus, Phenix City, and Fort Benning community.

Callaway holds tree lighting

H. R. Puff 'n' Stuff, aided by three elves, represented Santa Claus at the fourth annual lighting of the Callaway Gardens 64-foot Christmas tree, Dec. 8.

A special feature of the ceremony, to which the public was invited, was the singing of the a selection of carols by the Missionary Orientation Center Choir.

Following the traditional tree-lighting event, at the Gardens Clubhouse, the choir presented a program of Christmas music inside the clubhouse.

Synopsis

GIANT (Rated G)—stars Elizabeth Taylor as the strong-willed, independent Leslie Benedict; Rock Hudson as her husband, Bick Benedict, the wealthy ruler of a vast Texas land empire; and the late James Dean as Jett Rink, an ambitious ranch hand.

Rink, a violent young ranch hand strikes oil and amasses great riches. The years pass and the Benedicts have three children who, as adults, all go against the wishes of their parents.

Their son Dennis Hopper marries Juana, a beautiful Mexican girl, to Bick's dismay. The Benedicts accept an invitaton to the elaborate opening of a hotel owned by Jett, now a millionaire. Juana is subjected to a racial slur at the hotel, Bick challenges Jett to a fight, but Jett is so drunk that Bick leaves in disgust.

MADRON (Rated GP)—On the way to Santa Fe, a wagon train composed of French Canadian nuns is attacked by a band of Apaches. Only Sister Mary Joseph (Leslie Caron) survives the ensuing massacre, continuing alone, she comes across gunslinger Richard Boone who calls himself Madron.

Exasperated by her gentle ways, Madron develops a fondness for the nun. The two are captured by outlaw Paul Smith and men, but Madron manages to kill them. Later Madron saves Sister Mary from Apache Chief Chaim Banai, who had earlier wounded Madron.

The nun and the gunslinger make love and she escapes as Madron and the Indian Chief face each other in a showdown. In the context of the plot, the film shows a nun baring her breast and making love and contains profanity all of which may offend the senibilities of some.

THE HUNTING PARTY (Rated R) — is an extremely adult western that debunks the men of the West. It shows a rough, crude, brutal men, individuals to whom killing was an every day fact of life, who often enjoyed the savagery of the violent deaths they inflicted on their enemies.

Oliver Reed leads a gang of outlaws. Reed kidnaps Candice Bergen and insists that she teach him to read. Her husband, Gene Hackman, is a wealthy, sadistic bully who is out of town at the time of the abduction. On his return he sets out to avenge the crime.

In the meantime Bergen finds herself afftracted to Reed. The hunt narrows down as Hackman follows Reed and Bergen inot the desert. Violence, sex and profanity are rampant; while nudity may offend the sensibilities of some.

LET'S SCARE JESSICA TO DEATH (Rated GP) — Zohra Lampert plays Jessica, a girl just released from a mental home, who moves to a farm near a small New England town with her husband (Barton Heyman) and a friend (Kevin O'Connor). Once there they find that a strange young girl, Emily (Mariclare Costello) has been staying in their house and, taking her, invite her to spend some time with them.

Area high schools gather for annual drama festival

Some 11 area high schools will gather at Columbus College tomorrow for the college's Third Annual High School Drama Festival in the Fine Arts Hall on campus. Registration begins at 8:30 a.m.

This year marks the largest number of participating schools and the first year that high schools outside Muscogee County are attending, Dennis M. Ciesil, assistant professor of drama at the college and coordinator for the event, announced.

Eight schools will present one-act plays for the judging by Wes Carr, award - winning performer of the Springer Theatre Company, Dr. Jack Gore, drama director at Georgia Southwestern College, and William P. Crowell, technical director and assistant professor of speech at Columbus College.

Judges are selected to represent the views of a performer, a director, and a designer or technical man.

At the end of the performances, the judges present verbal critiques of each show before announcing the four awards.

Awards are given for the best production, best actress, best actor, and best character portrayal in a supporting role. In addition to the gold cup trophies, the winning school and the runner-up school receive a full-tuition, $360 scholarship to Columbus College for a graduating senior who wishes to enroll in drama at the college.

The public is invited to attend, Ciesil said. The first play is scheduled for 9 a.m. Saturday, with the others to follow. There will be two breaks in the day-long event with the presentation of scholarships and awards to be at 9 p.m.

Those schools presenting plays will be Columbus High, Pacelli High, Newnan High, Troup County High, Hardaway High, Kendrick High, Spencer High, and Baker High. Robert E. Lee Institute in Thomaston, Taylor County Girls' School, and the Schley County Schools, John Lewis campus, will be present as observers.

Among the plays presented with be "No Exit," by Jean Paul Satre, "27 Wagons, Full of Cotton," by Tennessee Williams, "Sunday's Child," by Elizabeth Welch, "Overtones," by Alice Gerstenberg, and two original scripts.

The drama festival allows high school students and their directors a chance to learn more about drama from the critiques and evaluations of the judges, and it enables students within the Columbus area to see the facilities which the college has for drama, Ciesil said.

He also mentioned that many high school directors enjoyed the opportunity of getting together with other directors to discuss common problems. "There's a tremendous sharing process that goes on," he said.

Ciesil anticipates some 150 area high school students to attend.

Florida boys assist police

Ghetto boys riding in patrol cars in Jacksonville, Fla., are not in trouble — they are part of a team.

Some 300 Police Youth Patrols (PYP's) administer their own volunteer program to learn law enforcement and to personally assist policemen.

Macrame tree expresses children's appreciation

Hand made items made by students at Fort Benning

A macrame Christmas tree made by the students of Edward A. White School was recently presented to SSgt. George L. Freeman, platoon sergeant, Airborne Department and WO John C. McCrea, parachute maintenance officer.

Freeman has, for the last two months, donated pieces of shroud line to the Fort Benning Children's Schools to be used in macrame instruction. Macrame is the art of braiding and knotting cord to form various products.

Since he started sending cord to the schools, Freeman has donated 15 to 20 bundles and that is approximately 750 feet of cord per bundle.

Mrs. Evelyn Southwood instructional supervisor for the schools, presented the tree to the men.

In addition to the Christmas tree, the children have made belts and decorations for purses.

Citizenship class graduates 19

On Nov. 20, 19 foreign born wives of Fort Benning servicemen completed six weeks of preparatory instruction toward U. S. Citizenship. The course, one of several offered annually by Fort Benning Army Community Service, was designed to teach the basics of American history and government.

Guest speaker at the session was Capt. Steven-Lenske, SJA, of the Legal Assistance Section. He presented the current laws concerning naturalization and the procedures for applying for U.S. Citizenship.

Certificates of achievement were presented to the graduates by Maj. Donald A. Myles, chief of Fort Benning Army Community Service, and Capt. Kenneth E. Bruns, class instructor.

TSB undefeated in post basketball

Post-wide basketball began for the 1971-72 season at two sites on Nov. 29, with 931st Engr. Group beating HQ Cmd. and TSB blasting the 197th Bde. in opening games.

In a game played at Briant Wells Field House, 931st Engr. Gp. squeezed by HQ Cmd., 67-66, while at Kelley Hill Field House, TSB romped over the 197th Bde. by an 84-71 score.

High scorer in the TSB game was John D. Black of the 197th with 27 points, 20 of them coming in the second half. His performance was nearly matched by TSB's Rich Simmons who scored 24 points and pulled down over 10 rebounds.

On Dec. 1, two games were played at the Briant Wells Field House, with each game being decided by one point.

In the first game, 931st took the lead by one point after trailing by 13, but TSB won the game 81-80 with a pair of free throws in the final seconds of the contest.

The 197th led most of the way in the second game, leading by 4 points with 30 seconds remaining but MED-DAC won the game 72-71.

Dec. 2's only game was an 85-72 victory for MED-DAC over the 931st. The TSB vs. HQ Cmd. game set for Thursday, was re-scheduled because of a mix-up in the schedule.

At Briant Wells Field House on Dec. 3, TSB won a battle of the only two unbeaten teams, with a close 79-77 victory over MEDDAC.

The 197th won its first game of the season by romping over HQ Cmd., 98-62, in another game. High scorer for the game was John Black of the 197th, with 24 points.

Davis wins rifle tourney despite cold in final matches of year

By Roger Pavey

Eastern football took a drastic turn for the worse Saturday as 12th ranked Tennessee humiliated fifth ranked Penn State, 31-11. The crushing defeat ruined Penn State's perfect record and spoiled their chances at a national championship. The Vols using a fired up defense and the spectacular kickoff and punt returns by All-American Bobby Majors put an end to the Nittany Lions' 15 game winning streak. More importantly, however, the stunning upset put to rest cries from the east that Penn State is superior to any team in the SEC. From the looks of what happened last Saturday at Neyland Stadium in Knoxville, Tenn., Penn State would rank no higher than sixth in the SEC and by no means fifth in the country. If so where would that put Tennessee?

Trades Mark Winter Baseball Meetings

With the conclusion of last week's winter meetings in Phoenix, Ariz. came the end to much speculation of who would go where. The trading was fast and furious with some of baseball's superstars changing uniforms.

The Los Angeles Dodgers obtained slugger Frank Robinson and former Dodger Pete Richert from the Baltimore Orioles for four minor league ballplayers. The move as Manager Earl Weaver put it, "was to insure our future." The Birds already overflowing with young talent may have done just that, for how much longer can an aging 36-year-old last?

The Dodgers did not stop with the Robinson trade, within minutes after its' announcement they swapped vagabond slugger Richie Allen to the Chicago White Sox for southpaw Tommy John. This rocked the baseball world, for Allen seemed at last to have found a home and settled down after six years of almost constant turmoil.

The Houston Astros seem to strengthened themselves the most. They dealt second baseman Joe Morgan, good-hit-no-field Dennis Menke, so-so pitcher Jack Billingham and unheard of Cesar Geronimo to the Cincinnati Reds for slugger Lee May, Tommy Helms and utility infielder Jimmy Stewart. The trade that appears to have helped them the most is the one that brought lefty Dave Roberts over from San Diego in return for three minor leaguers. Roberts is now teamed with Larry Dierker and Don Wilson, who by the way, were a part of last year's staff that placed second to the Mets in earned run average in the National League. Roberts should only improve on last year's finish, for he placed right behind Tom Seaver for last year's individual honors.

Now, with the addition of another first rate pitcher and a top notch slugger, plus two steady infielders the Astros have traded themselves into contention, at least as far as paper goes . . .

The only other big names advanced on the trading block were Sudden Sam McDowell of the Cleveland Indians and Gaylord Perry of the San Francisco Giants and strangely enough McDowell went to the Giants and Perry ended up with the Indians. The key man, however, says Indian General Manager Gabe Paul, was infielder Frank Duffy. Duffy hit .184 last year in a reserve role and doesn't seem to be a player that singlehandedly wins pennants . . .

Maryland and UCLA Live Up to Expectations

The University of Maryland basketball team is rapidly becoming "the UCLA of the East" or so says coach Lefty Driesell. Driesell who took over the head coaching job two years ago after a highly successful reign at Davidson College seems to be living up to his prediction. Led by highly touted sophomore Tom McMillen the Terps have romped to two successive and very impressive victories. Saturday night the sixth ranked Terrapins shattered their single game scoring record by piling up 117 points against George Washington. Not bad for a starting lineup that consists of four sophs, then again as Driesell says, these aren't normal sophomores, they are cool . . .

Meanwhile, the UCLA of the west continued their dominance over the rest of college basketball by cruising past their first two opponents. Led by last year's "flop" Henry Bibby, the only senior starter, the Bruins averaged a little over 105 points a game with Bibby averaging 28 points a game. It sure would be interesting if both UCLA and Maryland reached the finals of the NCAA championships this year, headlines would read UCLA vs UCLA (EAST) and Ole Lefty might have wished he hadn't made his now famous quip . . .

Despite the numbing cold, Davis led his field of 70 plus contenders in putting the points on the scoreboard. He took the second individual match of the day, a 200 yard rapid fire event by placing all 20 of his shots in the ten ring and 11 in the very center of the bullseye, or the X, for a 200-11X.

Marksmen competing for laurels in the two day match included teams from the Cherry Point, N. C. marine Station, Ft. Bragg, N. C., Ft. Gordon, Ga., Ft. Rucker, Ala., Fort Benning post team and the U.S. Army MTU at Fort Benning.

In the third match, the 300 yard rapid fire, Davis again forged into the Lad and took the event. He allowed only four shots to stray from the ten ring for his winning 196-6X.

Only in the slow fire events was Davis beatable it seemed and then he managed to place. In the first match of the series, SSgt. Osiris Melendez of the Fort Benning post team captured the 200 yard slow fire event with his 191-7X. SFC Harry Duke, a companion marksman from the post team, grabbed the runner-up spot with his 190-5X while Sgt. James Reiber of the USAMTU was 3X back for a close third.

In the fourth stanza of the individual matches, a long range 600 yard slow-fire prone match, SSgt. Walter Cline of the Ft. Bragg, N. C. Marksmanship Unit swept into the lead with his 194-4X. He was not only beset with the bitter cold but was closely pursued by his competitors.

Davis showing his championship form to the large group of Service contenders, captured the rapid fire sub-aggregate with an outstanding 396-17 while companion marksman SFC Clinton D. Stephens was two points back in the runner-up spot.

The other sub-aggregate, the slow fire totals, was taken over by Melendez wit his 388-10X while Cline took the runner-up spot with 384-6X and Stephens was two points back for third place.

But the big prize sought by each of the large group of marksmen, the Grand Aggregate Championship, was there for Davis to seize with his relentless championship shooting. His 778, despite the adverse weather, was only two points off his winning score of the last Fort Benning Monthly contest which he won in October.

Runner-up in the total individual showing for the weekend matches went to Stephens with his 772-21X while SFC William R. Lee, also of the USAMTU, was 9X back for third overall.

In the four-man National Match Course events fired Sunday, the Ft. Bragg, N. C. Marksmen led by Cline posted a close decision to take the team championship with their composite score of 1907. This was one point better than the Davis led team from the USAMTU could muster. In third place was the USAMTU "Gray" Team.

This was the final match of the 1971 shooting season for the Army shooters and for many it was their initial competition prior to the 3rd Army Matches to be held in March at Fort Benning.

ROD AND GUN CLUB Notes

By Bill Kloeb

Weather must have kept a lot of hunters at home last week. There were only 23 deer checked into the Fish and Wildlife deer check station at Bldg. 5883, Harmony Church. The total harvest of deer on the reservation as of 1st Sunday evening was 319. That figure is still much higher than the total number taken at this time last year.

The number taken each week should increase quite a bit after Dec. 18. The doe season opens in the Chattahoochee County portion of the reservation on that date. The doe season will open on the entire reservation on Dec. 25.

According to a representative of the Fish and Game Unit there are a lot of doe on the reservation. As a matter of fact there are too many. The Fish and Game unit would like to see their number reduced quite a bit during this hunting season. Remember the doe are not in addition to the season bag limit. A hunter may take two bucks or a buck and one doe from the entire reservation. Regardless of the combination or area his total take for the season cannot be more than two deer.

All deer taken on the reservation should be brought to the Fish and Game Unit Check Point. Members of the unit examine each carcass and the entrails. This examination tells them quite a bit about the status of the deer population on post and these findings do have a bearing on future open seasons and bag limits.

Hunting Contest Leaders

There were no real trophies among the deer taken last week and the Rod and Gun Deer Hunting Contest leaders remain the same as for the preceding week.

Lt. Col. Brandt Grubbs has the heaviest deer weighing 176 pounds. The 161½-pound entry of John E. Smith holds down the second place.

SSgt. Charles Wallace and Ronnie Cavins have each registered bucks with 10 countable antler points. Ties in the antler contest are broken by the weight of the deer. This puts Wallace in first place with his entry weighing 160 pounds. The deer brought in by Cavins weighed 146 pounds.

The Rod and Gun Club will award three Remington Automatic Model 1100 Shotguns and two Mossberg Bolt Action Slug Guns to members who take trophy deer and the hunter who registers the deer with the most antler points will each receive one of the Mossberg guns. A third Remington will be awarded to some hunter who registers a deer kill at the club but does not win one of the other prizes.

Hunters interested in entering the contest may obtain copies of the rules at the Rod and Gun Club located on First Division Road about one-quarter mile south of Highway 27.

Rod and Gun Club Turkey Shoot

Plan to be out at the Rod and Gun Club tomorrow for the Christmas Turkey Shoot.

Shooting will start at 10 a.m. and continue until 4 p.m. Turkeys or hams weighing from 10 to 12 pounds will be awarded as prizes.

Participants may use their personal shotguns or weapons provided by the club.

Final Dove Seasons

The final Georgia and Alabama dove seasons open next week. The Georgia season opens Dec. 18 and runs through Jan. 15. The Alabama season opens Dec. 20 and closes Jan. 8. Hunting is permitted from noon until sunset each day. Starting time in Georgia will be governed by Eastern Standard time and by Central Standard time in Alahama.

Those hunters who were disillusioned by hunts during previous open seasons might have better luck during the coming open period. The earlier seasons were held before the birds began their annual migration. Just about all the birds in this area at that time were local birds. With the colder weather more and more doves have been moving south. This season should provide the best dove hunting of the year but don't expect to find birds on the same fields day after day. These birds are constantly on the move and if they don't move farther south you can expect them to change fields quite frequently.

Chicago footballers tour Fort Benning

On a recent weekend, the Aviation Command hosted a young and enthusiastic group of Pop Warner football players from Chicago.

The 9-13 year old ball players, accompanied by their cheerleaders and adult chaperones, arrived by bus from Hoffman Estates, (Chicago) Ill. Their participation in the annual Columbus Peanut Bowl was preceded by a guided tour of Fort Benning.

The Saturday morning tour was conducted by Lt. Col. William C. Spence, S-1 for the Aviation Command. The bus tour through main post included stops at Lawson Army Airfield, the airborne facilities, Infantry Hall and the Infantry Museum.

After lunch, the group departed Fort Benning to prepare for their two scheduled football games.

The Pee Wee division game was won 26-6 by Hoffman Estates. The Midget division game was won 13-7 by Columbus. The Columbus team has been undefeated during the past three seasons.

Father sees son fight withdrawal

SAVANNAH, Ga. — (AP) —For eight days Jack R. Thomas sat on the side of his son's hospital bed, watching his only child suffer as he fought the effects of drug withdrawal.

"Oh, how he suffered," Thomas recalled. "But we hoped that after it all he would be free from drugs."

That was more than a year ago.

Recently Jack Reginald Thomas Jr.'s parents were awakened by a noise that sounded like someone falling out of bed.

Their 18-year-old son was lying on the floor, unconscious — apparently suffering from the effects of a drug overdose, a police investigation showed. His parents rode with him in the ambulance to Memorial Medical Center, but it was too late — their son was dead.

Jack Thomas believes his son was a victim of a "society which just doesn't care."

"If people don't get together and do something about drug use, there will be more deaths in Savannah," he feels.

"We tried to help our son, and if we'd only known what to do, we'd have done it," Thomas said in an interview Friday. "But everywhere we turned, we seemed to meet a dead end."

Jack Jr. was "just like any other boy," his father said.

His son's introduction to drugs began with marijuana about two years ago, Thomas said.

"We didn't even know he had it for a long time," he said. When they discovered he was using it, they questioned their son.

"He told me they (pushers) sit outside junior high and high schools in parked cars, and they sell the drugs during the kids' recesses," Thomas said.

His parents warned him about drug use, Thomas said, "but you know how everybody says marijuana won't hurt you. But the kids start with marijuana, and then the pushers graduate them to heroin."

If he had known what to do, he'd have done it, he says. "But you can't quarantine a kid," he said.

When he and his wife discovered about a year and one half ago that their son was using heroin they changed their shifts at work so that someone would be at home with Jack almost all the time to help him break the habit.

"My wife worked days, and I changed my shift to night, and except for an hour and one half each day, we were home with him," Thomas said.

"He tried so hard to break his habit, and I know he wanted to. He must have been during that hour and one half that he'd get those drugs."

Thomas said he took him to doctor after doctor. "But it seemed no one would do anything," he said. "We tried to have him committed to an institution — we begged for that — but we were turned down."

When they managed to get treatment for their son at Memorial Thomas said he "laid off work with the railroad for eight days, and I sat on the side of his bed and praying it would work."

That hospital stay cost him $1,400, he said. "But I didn't mind that — I'd have paid $2,800 or any amount if it would have done any good."

But Jack Jr. returned to his habit.

"My son had one hope — that methadone would help him," Thomas said.

But when he and a friend went to The Center, a center for the treatment of drug-related problems, attempting to obtain methadone, an addictive substitute for heroin that some experts say allows the heroin addict to function almost normally, he was unsuccessful. No one locally is permitted under law to distribute methadone.

"He returned to The Center two or three times," Center workers said, but quit coming when he couldn't get the drug.

This week Jack Jr., who had graduated from Savannah High School in June, was to start work with the railroad. He was following in the footsteps of his dad and all of his dad's four brothers, all of whom had worked with the railroad all their lives.

3rd in series

Saleable skill is goal

By Carl King

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is the third in a series about Project Transition at Fort Benning.)

The purpose of project transition is to provide terminating servicemen with counseling, academic and vocational instruction and training which will develop or improve saleable job skills.

According to Gus W. Schlitzkus, director of Project Transition, 240 hours of training is prescribed to bring a man to the apprentice level in the skills taught. "Mechanics start off as mechanics' helpers," Schlitzkus said. "All these trades we teach have an apprentice period normally lasting about three years in regular civilian jobs. But we are able to cut this three-year waiting or 'adjustment' period for most students by on-the-job training. We actually are able to provide a 'ticket for admission' to the students," he added.

"People usually won't hire someone completely untrained," the director commented.

Of the students contacted after completing project transition training, 44 per cent were working in the trade for which they were trained. This applies to all trades.

Look out!

All personnel are urged to exercise extreme caution during the holidays to avoid the loss of property to thieves. Caution should be exercised while shopping. Don't leave purchased items unattended on counters or display cabinets. Store items should be kept out of sight when they must be left unattended in an automobile.

ROTC cadets spend 3 days at Benning

The Patrolling Committee of the Infantry School's Ranger Department was recently host to 44 Junior ROTC cadets from Georgia Institute of Technology, Atlanta.

The cadets spent three days at Fort Benning, learning the fundamentals of Ranger Department activities. Twenty instructors were on hand for each period of instruction, which included classroom instruction on the fundamentals of patrolling, field instruction and practical exercises on raid patrols at Ninninger Range and rappelling instruction at Todd Field.

Project officer for the exercises was Capt. Joseph Binoto of the Patrolling Committee.

Cost of living raise

White House asks for GI Bill increase

The Nixon administration has recommended to Congress increased payments under the G.I. Bill and other Veterans Administration education and training programs with a first year price tag of $175,000,000.

Olney B. Owen, chief benefits director for the VA, in testimony presented before the Subcommittee on Education and Training of the House Committee on Veterans Affairs, asked for cost-of-living increases approximating 8.6 per cent in allowances paid G.I. Bill trainees and wives, widows and children training under other VA programs.

Under the Administration proposal a single veteran going to school under the G.I. Bill would receive $190.00 per month instead of the present $175.00

For veterans engaged in on-the-job or apprenticeship training, the present $108.00 per month allowance would be increased by 48 per cent to $160.00 in a move to interest more employers and veterans in these types of training.

Owen presented to the Subcommittee an Administration-backed Omnibus Bill, which, in addition to boosting allowances, would authorize the payment in advance of training allowances, and would authorize the payment in advance of training allowances, and would extend on-the-job and apprentice training to eligible wives, widows and children, and extend secondary level training and correspondence training to wives and widows.

In his opening statement, the VA official noted that the basic monthly allowance for a single veteran had been increased by 75 per cent since the present G.I. Bill was enacted in 1966 — from $100 to $175 — with matching increases for dependents.

He added that a cost of living increase is needed in addition because, "the President has been greatly concerned that rises in living costs since the last adjustment in February 1970 not tip the balance adversely against a veteran's decision to enter or continue training."

"The G.I. Bill participation rate has shot upward by any index," Owen said. "In the past three years, the participation rate of Vietnam Era veterans, on a cumulative basis, has risen from 16 per cent to 35.2 per cent. There is evidence that veterans are entering training more quickly after discharge; the first year participation rate in this period has risen by 25 per cent. The enrollment of veterans in on-the-job training has risen by 121 per cent in Fiscal Years 1969-1971, from 66,000 to 146,000. The enrollment in courses below college level has risen from 330,000 to 522,000."

"Since its enactment in May 1966," Owen added, "some 2,500,000 veterans and servicemen have received education and training under the newest G.I. Bill."

Doppler System tested

Tests of the Doppler Translocation System, designed to assist the field artilleryman in pinpointing his exact location on the ground, were recently conducted throughout the southwestern United States.

A joint Army-Marine Corps undertaking, the new system uses the Navy's Navigational Satellite System. Miniature, portable radio receivers pick up broadcasts from the TRANSIT satellite as it swings in a polar orbit around the earth. With the information received, an equally small computer gives the location of the receiver on the ground very quickly and usually within ten meters.

Final test results are not in but George V. Dell, project officer of the U. S. Army Field Artillery Board at Ft. Sill, Okla., says the system may offer some real advantages to the artilleryman in determining location, especially in remote areas where accurate survey points are scarce.

USAREC adding strength to meet VOLAR demands

WASHINGTON — Special benefits have been authorized for men and women who join the United States Army Recruiting Command (USAREC) as recruiters.

USAREC is increasing recruiter strength from 3,000 to more than 5,000 to meet the requirements of a volunteer Army, and it invites men of grade E5 and above, and women of grade E4 and above, to apply for duty as Army recruiters.

Openings for Wac recruiters exist in all five Continental United States (CONUS) recruiting districts, and positions for male recruiters are available in the First Recruiting District (the northeastern states) and the Fifth Recruiting District (the upper-midwestern states).

Vacancies are male recruiters in the First District are in Baltimore; Boston; Concord, N.H.; Newark, N.J.; New York City; Philadelphia; Pittsburgh; and Syracuse, N.Y.

USAREC offers the following benefits to men and women selected for recruiting duty:

— $50 - a - month specialduty assignemtn-proficiency pay.

— Three-year initial stabilized tour which can be extended indefinitely in one-year increments, provided the recruiter meets job expectations.

— Leased housing in civilian communities (650 new units are to be leased soon by USAREC).

— Allowance for out-of-pocket expenses.

What Is Required

Applicants for receiving Proficiency Pay P-2 or P-3.

— Have excellent efficiency and conduct ratings.

— Have minimum service of three years for Wacs, and six years for men.

— Be a noncommissioned officer or specialist E-5 or above, or, if a Wac, E-4 or above.

— Have a recorded general aptitude area (GT) score of 95 or higher.

— Hold a valid Army or state motor vehicle operator's permit.

— Be a high school graduate or have received credit for high school level through the general educational development (GED) test.

— Have a favorable National Security Agency check completed, or possess a secret or higher clearance.

Waivers may be granted for efficiency ratings and time in service; approval of applications by the commanding general, USAREC, will also constitute approval of waivers.

MAH emergency readiness tested

An ambulance screeches to a halt in front of the emergency room doors at Martin Army Hospital. The driver jumps from the ambulance and opens the rear doors of the vehicle as hospital personnel rush out to help. Quickly the injured soldiers on the litters inside the ambulance are carried into the emergency room where they immediately undergo examination and are administered any treatment needed.

This was the first ambulance of many and the first of 50 simulated casualties supposedly resulting from a multi-bus accident but actually part of a training problem. The exercise assumed that four bus loads of airborne students were on their way to a training area when an oncoming semi-trailer loaded with pipe went out of control due to faulty brakes. The presumed accident resulted in a head-on collision between the semi-trailer and the lead bus with the remaining three buses plowing into the rear of the lead bus.

Sounds real enough doesn't it? This is a situation that could happen at any time. But in actuality it is a "Mass Casualty Exercise" for the personnel of Martin Army Hospital. Exercises of this type are required of the personnel every six months to maintain the efficiency of emergency readiness.

The casualties have simulated injuries, both internal and external in nature. Upon their arrival in the emergency room, the injured undergo examinations by doctors and a diagnosis is made. Special care is taken to insure as much realism as possible.

Who To See

CONUS-stationed men and women who are interested in recruiting duty can contact their career zearest recruiting main station or write to: Director of Personnel, HQ USAREC, Hampton, Va. 23369.

Soldiers stationed outside CONUS, othr than those in Vietnam, can contact their personnel officers or career counselors.

Men and women stationed Vietnam can contact their career counselors or recruiter selection teams at Long Binh or the 22nd Recruiter Battalion at Cam Ranh Bay.

Army personnel soon returning to the United States can speak with recruiter selection teams at Ft. Lewis, Wash., or Ft. Dix, N.J. These teams conduct short interviews, and such interviews will not delay a soldier's re-entry.

USAREC urges men and women who are interested in recruiting duty to have a complete 201 file including DA Form 20, when they speak with a recruiter selection team or visit a recruiting main station.

Spc4 Gary Turner: "I think it's great."

CSM William Mixon: "We're facing basically the same problem as the Army faced after Korea."

Early-outs: complete story

Fort Benning may soon feel the "pinch" of personnel as the Army continues to decrease its numbers with a new early-release program.

The new program announced by Department of the Army Dec. 10 calls for the release of about 49,000 more men and women in the 1972 fiscal year originally planned. Most of those being released, both for normal expiration of service before June 30, 1972, and by voluntary and involuntary early release, will come from the lower enlisted grades.

The number of personnel to be released under the new program at Fort Benning cannot be predicted at this time.

In addition to maintaining grade balance, the current programs will allow continued promotion opportunity for those remaining in service and, at the same time keep a trained, balanced force capable of meeting the Army's commitments in support of national policy. The plan provides for entry into the Army of new, non-prior service personnel, who after training, are eligible for

Early-releases affect Fort Benning soldiers

By Carl King

How does the new early-release program affect you? What effect will the new program have on the Army?

These are questions Fort Benning personnel were asked in an attempt to gain a clear understanding of the impact this new program will have on the Army and Fort Benning.

"It means I'm SHORT and that's good," Sgt. Jim Gregory, Co. C Hq. Command, said. "I think the Army will have some personnel problems at first but after an initial transition period the Army will be easier to manage and it will be better for the career soldier."

Sp5 Gary Turner, USAIC, DIO, says, "I think it's great. This new program enables me to go back to civilian life and continue my civilian career in marketing. In some cases, the program will have some bad effects as the Army tightens its personnel belt. But for those not making a career, I think it's really good."

CSM William T. Mixon, command sergeant major of the Infantry School, has seen the mechanics of expansion and reduction at work before . . . after Korea. "We're facing basically the same problem as the Army faced after Korea," Mixon commented. "Initially, this new early-release program will put a burden on the Army, especially on the lower enlisted grades. This period of time is generally slow for getting men into the service because of the holidays and we'll probably feel the worst effects during this period."

"In the Korean Conflict, men were promoted much faster than they were in Vietnam," Mixon stressed. "When it came time to reduce forces there were many more problems in terms of maintaining a good balance of officer and enlisted personnel. I don't believe we'll have as severe a problem this time . . .but we're certainly going to feel some strain."

See EARLY-RELEASE, Page 22

At the Fort Benning transition point where soldiers receive their final instructions and processing before separation from the service, the waiting period has been long from already existing reduction plans. "We anticipate that the lines will get longer with the new early-released program," MSgt. Albert Griffin Jr., said.

Griffin, because of the separation point functions, many hours of hard work ahead in order that personnel being discharged receive timely attention. "We're keeping this office open as many hours as it takes to get the job done," Griffin commented.

197th Inf. Bde. gets new chaplain

Chaplain Harbour was assigned to the Brigade on Nov. 20 after returning from a tour of duty in Vietnam. He replaces departing Chaplain (Maj.) David Hoh, who is leaving the Brigade to attend a training course at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

Upon graduation from Mississippi College in Clinton in 1957 with a bachelor of arts degree, Chaplain Harbour attended the New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary. He graduated from the seminary in 1961 with a bachelor of divinity degree.

He joined the Army Reserve in 1964. In 1965 Chaplain Harbour became the college student director of Northwest Junior College, Senatobia, Miss. He advised students on religious activities and the many, religious problems that college students experience.

In October of 1965 Chaplain Harbour was called to active duty. Because of his pastoral experience he was qualified to become a chaplain. While in the Army Reserve he held the position of chaplain.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

by Bill King

For a brunch or midnight supper: add chopped chives to your favorite biscuit recipe and serve covered with creamed chopped bacon and hardcooked eggs, garnished with more chives.

Wines of many different ancient varieties are mentioned in the Bible more than 200 times.

For extra nice rice, try adding a dash of powdered turmeric (just enough to yellow the rice) and some sliced black olives and pimento snips.

Fill several different sizes of stemware with striped peppermint candies, green gumdrops, mints, figs, nuts and other goodies. Cluster them on some evergreens for a buffet centerpiece.

To get more juice from an orange or lemon, first roll it back and forth on a hard surface, pressing it with your fingers.

To get more mileage from your food dollar, your best bet is

Post resident for 54 years retires

By Jim Swink

Remember when the personnel of Fort Benning lived in tents and the area between Main Post and Broadway In Columbus was all open farm land and forest? Well, maybe you don't but Wallace S. Scott who will be retiring tomorrow after 54 years of Federal Service does.

Scott came here as a soldier in the Army in December of 1920 and remained here until his retirement in 1955. Since then he has worked on the Post with his present job being in the U.S. Army Infantry School Bookstore.

Coming here as a member of the 29th Infantry Regiment, Scott remembers many cold wet nights in those tents. But with the help of the 24th Regiment, they soon had their wooden barracks. The 24th Regiment operated a saw mill at Fort Benning and supplied the wood to individual units. The units would then take the wood and build their own barracks. That was VOLAR, 1920 style.

Scott recalls that, at the time, Fort Benning, then Camp Benning, consisted of only a handful of buildings on the Main Post. Scott and his fellow members of the 29th Regiment originally pitched their tents in the area of what is today the Commissary parking lot. He also recalls that the only road which took the same approximate route that Lumpkin Road now takes. Then it was called Benning Road.

Lawson Field at that time was the site of old biplanes and observation balloons. Scott also recalls that, in 1922, his regiment hiked to Camp McClellan in Alabama. But treading on down the path of time, he recalls some of the lighter moments here at Benning. Perhaps some of you will remember the Fort Benning Doughboys football team. Scott remembers when they first started and some of the highlights.

"The Doughboys played good football and had many All-Americans on their teams," he said. "I remember the time that Notre Dame came south to play Georgia Tech. Well, they had so many players that they sent only part of their squad down here to play the Doughboys. The Doughboys won that game. I also remember when the Doughboys went to New Orleans and played Tulane. That was good football for the 1920s.

Scott can recall the construction of every building on the Main Post. Like the first cuartel in the mid '20s.

"It took them five years to complete the first one because they couldn't get the funds to build it all at once. So, they built it a portion at a time."

He also remembers when as a member of the Infantry School, they moved into their new Post Headquarters building in the mid '30s. That is building No. 35 today.

Scott is the father of four and the grandfather of ten. His retirement will bring to a conclusion 54 years of Federal Service. When asked his feelings concerning his Federal career which spans more than a half century, he replied simply, "I enjoyed it."

Civilians encouraged to take leave during holidays

During Fort Bennings's holiday priod, many offices will be closed or go on a half-day schedule.

Civilian personnel affected by the change in the work schedules will either take leave for the time that they are not working in their office, or they will be sent to an office that is working to help there.

Warren A. Wyrck, chief of Technical Services for the Civilian Personnel Division said that this leave policy is always utilized where civilian work is affected by military cutbacks during the hilody sesn. aoai

Civilians are encouraged to take leave during this period, but Wyrck said civilians cannot be forced into taking leave, but that some have excess leave which will be forfeited at the end of the leave year.

For this period, the end of the civilian leave year is Jan. 8.

Wyrck said that the responsibility for finding work for civilians during this period rests with the supervisor or officer in charge of the personnel in the holiday season.

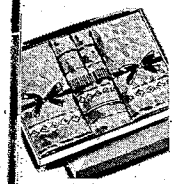
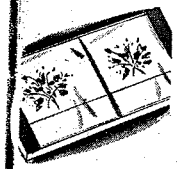
Post, 197th subject of report

CBS News Correspondent Hughes Rudd reports on the 197th Infantry Brigade and Fort Benning in a CBS News Special Report, "What's Happened to the Army," Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. on TV 3.



The agonizing problems of drugs, race relations, morale, discipline and corruption and how the Army is trying to combat them are the central themes of the broadcast.

Two other military establishments which illustrate the Army's plight — Ft. Hood, Tex., and West Point are discussed in the special.



Gen. William Westmoreland, the Army's Chief of Staff, who once commanded the Army Forces in Vietnam, and Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway (ret.) former Army Chief of Staff who commanded the American Forces during the Korean War, are interviewed.

Soldier's appearance reflects Army image

How does your uniform look soldier? Are you one of a minority of military personnel whose appearance presents an unfavorable image of the Army?

Due to a noticeable deterioration in the appearance of transient Army personnel in uniform at transportation terminals within the U. S., greater command emphasis is being placed on the problem as it exists here and elsewhere.

Spot checks at local terminals have disclosed soldiers unshaven, with improper haircuts, with neckties pulled away from collars or completely removed, with coats unbottoned or removed, and with uniforms in totally ungatisfactory condition.

As a result, commanders have been instructed to stress to the men in their units the importance of personal appearance, especially when they are in travel status and in close contact with the civilian population. At the same time, officers and noncommissioned officers have been instructed to set an example in this regard, and to use a firm and tactful approach in correcting minor discrepancies on the spot to insure that service uniforms are worn properly.

These steps, plus planned inspections are local transportation terminals, should help solve the problem, not only at Fort Benning but in other Army areas as well. If not, more stringent measures may be taken, to include return of an individual to Fort Benning for correction at unit level, even though this actionimay result in the soldier missing his scheduled transportation.

Such steps would not be necessary, however, if each individual would take pride in his appearance, and even point out incorrect dress to fellow soldiers.

Remember, the individual soldier, especially when on leave or traveling to a new duty assignment, is the Army's most credible public relations man. The appearance he presents in his contacts with the civilian community reflects not only un himself but on the entire Army.

How does your uniform look soldier? —B.W.

Georgia '72 license plates on sale

USAIC LEGAL ASSISTANCE OFFICE — Georgia's 1972 auto license tags are now on sale at the county tag office located in the Metro - Government Center located in downtown Columbus.

This year only a validating date sticker is necessary for cars already possessing the Georgia five-year auto license. For those not possessing the five year license tag, purchase of the 1972 auto license will entitle them to both the license tag and 1972 validating date sticker. Ad valorem taxes on motor vehicles are still required to be paid by all vehicle owners except non-resident servicemen.

The five-year tags must be renewed annually with the county name decal affixed to the lower front of the plate each year and the annual validating date sticker to be placed in the upper right hand corner of the tag beginning in 1972.

In Georgia, tax day for ad valorem purposes is Jan. 1; all personal property owned on that day by a resident of the state is subject to taxation and the tax must be paid by April 1 or a penalty of 10 per cent can be imposed. The ad valorem tax on vehicles is paid at the same time that tags are purchased. Servicemen who are not legal residents of Georgia can obtain tags even though they are not subject to the tax. Similarly, a person is exempt from the ad valorem tax on a vehicle that he did not own on Jan. 1 even though the person applying for the tags is a Georgia resident. If a perso, including servicemen, purchases a vehicle that does not have current registration and tags, the purchaser should insure either that the seller is exempt from the ad valorem tax because be is a nonresident serviceman or that the seller pay the tax prior to finalization of the sale. Although the new purchaser is not personally liable for the ad valorem tax, if the seller who is liable cannot be found, the tax will attach to the vehicle itself and the vehicle can be sold to satisfy the tax. It should also be stressed that only nonresident servicemen are exempt from the ad valorem tax on vehicles in Georgia of Jan. 1; dependents of servicemen who own vehicles in Georgia on the tax day will have to pay ad valorem tax at the time they obtain tags. To be exempt from the ad valorem tax in Georgia, nonresident servicemen should have the title to their vehicle either in their name or in the name of himself and his wife. When the serviceman is stationed overseas and the wife remains in Georgia, the wife can show evidence she is the serviceman's lawful dependent or use a power of attorney from her husband to obtain the tags without paying the ad valorem taxes.

Military personnel assigned to Fort Benning who are not legal residents of Georgia may purchase Georgia automobile license tags without payment of ad valorem taxes. The same is true for automobiles owned by servicemen now stationed overseas who are not legal residents of Georgia (application may be made by person holding power of attorney from or the authorized dependent of the absent serviceman.) For those desiring to purchase tags in Muscogee County, the following procedure has been established: (a) Affidavit forms may be secured from the Legal Assistance Office (Bld. 5, Room 13-A) or from Brigade legal offices. Affidavits for persons holding power of attorney or the authorized dependent of absent serviceman can be secured from the Legal Assistance Office or vehicle tag office at the Metro-Government Center. (b) For all registrations, except those done by power of attorney or authorized dependent of absent servicemen, the affidavit forms should be submitted to the immediate commanding officer of the application for her certification. (c) The complete forms should be taken to the Vehicle Tag Office in the Metro-Government Center between the hours of 9 a.m. and 5 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

The tax office will accept personal checks drawn on any local bank, as well as local charge cards, for payment of tag fees.

Post recycles solid wastes

By Robert B. Bullock

Concerned Americans everywhere, in touch with the heartbeat of our nation, are responding to the need for resource conservation. Francis Scott Keyes was not hindered by smog in his attempt to "scope out" the Colors; Meriwether Lewis described scenes of fish swimming 10 to 15 feet under the surface of the Missouri River. Washington's troops filled their water barrels from rivers and streams without fear of insidious bacteria. Bill Cody was definitely unaware of the effect his occupation would have on the environment. Fortunately or unfortunately, all these things happened some time ago. In looking back we are more than a little smug with the progress our society has made on this great continent.

"From Sea To Shining Sea" — Now that could be in reference to the seas of shiny metal automobiles left abandoned in the middle of breathtaking vistas, or piled neatly in the part of town you don't care to visit on a Sunday drive. Maybe it refers to the shining green surface of a stream or river where an artificially induced algae bloom has robbed the water of oxygen and, consequently, all animal life has died. We've all read of eutrophication due to excess phosphates in wash water or chemical wash-off from farm and factories. Remember Lake Erie. There's no doubt that the quality of the environment in the United States has been slipping — and it's our fault — and the only way to reverse the trend is to care — and Fort Benning is showing it cares.

Recycling is a simple concept. It means that given one pound, or 10 pounds, or 50 tons of solid waste, the recycling and reuse of that mass saves natural resources and stops pollution. It saves resources because the use of recycled material means that raw materials need not be mined for the end product; it stops pollution because that bulk of waste, recycled, won't end up as garbage, needing to be buried (For how long? Where?) or burned (Choke.). It also means generally expending less power than was necessary to blast the original mineral out of the soil and transform it into a finished product. Recycling may not be the ultimate solution to the waste problem, but for now — for the sake of tomorrow — we need to take action, to show we care about our environment.

Bring your recyclables to the area on Gaudette St. southwest of the Commissary Parking Lot on Main Post, where five white containers will be used as a central collection point. Proper separation will result in immediate recyclability of the solid waste and cleaning all containers at home guarantees a sanitary condition. Glass should be separated into clear and colored; metal waste into aluminum and other; paper into newspapers, cardboard and other wettable paper. Do not include magazines, paper plates, cups, napkins, and towels, paper products using laminates of plastic or foil. All glass should be clean and the labels removed. Cans should be cleaned and flattened to reduce volume.

No method is known for recycling plastic containers. This might indicate to some that plastics are not an ecologically sound investment at this time. That kind of decision is up to the individual.

If you're concerned, upset, forward-looking, an innovator, or if you've been wishing for a long time that something worthy of your efforts would come along, RECYCLE and get your neighbors to do the same. You'll be able to answer in the positive when your children ask, "Mommy and Daddy, what did you do in the War Against Pollution?"

Christmas toys move to post warehouse

By Tom Tegtmeyer

With a military escort, trucks packed with thousands of Christmas toys, moved to a warehouse on Fort Benning where they will await Santa. This is part of project SAVE-A-TOY, an effort coordinated by Army Community Service.

Rennovated toys stockpiled by the Provost Marshall's Office (PMO) and stored in Bldg. 1809 until this time, have been moved to a central warehouse from which they will be dispersed to supplement Santas visits to some families in the area.

SSgt. Loren Harris, PMO project non-commissioned officer, stated that the number of individual items sent to the warehouse is in the thousands. Four two and one half ton Army trucks were loaded with the 266 boxes, bikes and miscellaneous items for the project and given an escort by the military police out to the dissemination point.

Loading the trucks at Bldg. 1809 were men from the Mortar Committee who are gathering the toys and bikes under the direction of SFC Sixto D. Santiago, Mortar Committee.

All of the toys and bikes moved today were restored by prisoners in the stockade who have volunteered their time to work on the project. All of the work is done under the direction of SSgt. Troy Logan, woodshop NCO, PMO, who has put in many hours of his time on this project.

This year, the number of children to be sponsored has almost tripled. Last year there were about 1,500 and this year there are over 4,100.

Along the fem-line

By Carol May

Thank you for continuing to support this column by submitting your news. Realizing how busy your days are in this holiday season, we hope you will take the time to let Fort Benning women share what you are doing through "Fem-line."

The weekly deadline is Wednesday noon for publication in the Bayonet. The four typewritten copies are picked up at the Main Commissary and Custer Terrace Commissary by a "Fem-line" staff member, to be organized in what you see here each Friday. Copies may also be brought to my house at 2813-B Madden Avenue, Fort Benning, by the same weekly deadline. "Fem-line" encourages you to submit advance publicity on upcoming events on a regular basis.

Thanks from all of us.

OWC NEWS

The "Join the Bunch II" tea will be held on Jan. 12, from 1-3 p.m. in the Main Officers' Open Mess. Renew your Slim 'n Trim lessons after the holiday eating or try something new — like macrame. The OWC tries to offer an activity to please every woman. No reservations are necessary and the tea is free. A complete list of activities for 1972 will be in next week's "Fem-line."

Judo classes, taught by Marcel Carles, will be offered if enough ladies are interested. Self-defense methods may be learned by any woman willing to try. Phone class chairman, Mrs. Eric Larsen, 545-5707, if you are interested.

Instructors are needed for tole painting and candlemaking. Start the new year off right — share your talent.

The details of the OWC college dance on Dec. 28 will be announced next week in this column.

BBOD

Staff Group, BBOD wives, held their monthly coffee on Dec. 2 in the Officers' Wives' Club Lounge. Guests visiting from out of town were Mrs. Charles Powell and Mrs. Nina Coyle.

Departing members of the group were Mrs. Armand G. Decesare, Mrs. Karl L. Chapman and Mrs. David E. O'Conner, intelligence committee wives; and Mrs. Charles O. Woodson, personnel committee wife.

Hostesses for the event were Mrs. Alvin E. Walker, Mrs. Sam S. Santa Ana, Mrs. Joseph E. Benham, Mrs. Robert H. Kelly, Mrs. Leon H. Stone Jr., Mrs. Charles Heaukulani, Mrs. Harry J. Johnson and Mrs. Jerry K. Wall.

The Benning room of the Main Officers' Club was the scene of the Combat Support Group's Christmas coffee on Dec. 8. Hostesses for the event were Mrs. Paul J. Raisig and Mrs. James T. Dunn.

Mrs. Richard S. Fye, wife of the group chairman, in a short business meeting, welcomed special guests Mrs. Lawrence L. Mowery, Mrs. Guy S. Meloy and Mrs. James F. Henrionnet. She also announced the name of the new chairman of the Nuclear, Biological, and Chemical Committee, Lt. Col. James C. Jackson.

A warm welcome was extended to the new baby boy, born to Maj. and Mrs. James L. Kirsch on Dec. 5 and to the new baby girl, born to Capt. and Mrs. J. P. Ballenger on Dec. 8. Fond farewells were said to Mrs. Barney M. Jones and Mrs. Donald G. Kirby.

The next coffee will be held on Jan. 5, 1972.

TSB

No one seemed to notice the drizzling morning rain as the band played "America the Beautiful" for honored guests, wives, and senior candidates during the 51st Co., 5th Stu. Bn. Senior Status Review, Dec. 3.

Senior status signifies the end of the junior and intermediate phases of the OCS program, and the beginning of the last phase of preparation which culminates in the commissioning of second lieutenants of Infantry.

Though the rain kept exercises indoors, the senior status declaration was made and the blue banner attached to the company guidon.

Officers attending the ceremony were Maj. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott, post commander; Brig. Gen. Paul F. Gorman, assistant commandant, Col. A. G. Norris, brigade commander; SGM Lyman A. Evans; Lt. Col. Donald E. Bliss, battalion commander; Capt. James G. Renshaw, commanding officer; and tactical officers of the senior company.

That evening, 51st Co., 5th Stu. Bn. (OC) TSB, presented the senior status formal, "Thirty Years in Blue," celebrating the 30th birthday of Officer Candidate School.

A dinner consisting of crab cocktail, tossed green salad, filet mignon, baked potato, asparagus with hollandaise, hot rolls, German chocolate cake and Pinot Noir wine was served.

Col. Norris, guest of honor, made a few pertinent and amusing remarks to the group and then turned the program over to senior candidate James E. Foley for the entertainment. The Company Chorus traveled rapidly through World War I and World War II by means of a medley of tunes popular during each war, and ended with the rousing infantry song, "Follow Me."

Though music was provided by a rock band, there was another nostalgic interlude as senior candidates again played songs from the 1950's.

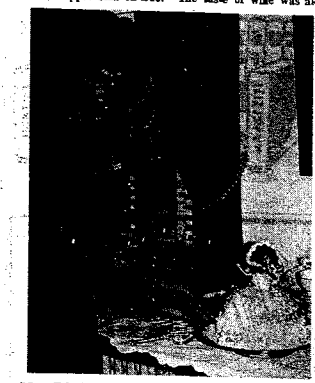
A Pre-Christmas wine and cheese-tasting party was a treat for the wives of IOAC 1-72 as they met at the Supper Club on Dec. 9. It suggested fresh gift ideas for the man in your life who "has everything." A variety of wines were available for sampling, including chablis, claret, rose', and Liebfraumilch. The taste of wine was alternated with tidbits of gouda, cheddar, and Swiss cheeses.



Decorations were pine cone Christmas trees, candles, evergreen and holly branches. A selection of Christmas songs was presented by the Infantry Chorus and the Infantry Quartet.

197th INF. BDE.

The wives of the Commanders and Staff Officers of the 197th Infantry Brigade recently held a luncheon to welcome the wife of the new brigade commander, Mrs. Edwin Kennedy.

The covered dish luncheon was held at the home of Mrs. Stephen R. Pawlik. Each wife was asked to bring her favorite casserole, and the results were most enjoyable. The theme, "Hello Dolly," was carried out in the form of a cake shaped like a Southern Belle.

Mrs. Edwin Kennedy cuts Southern Belle cake during luncheon.

58th Inf. sponsors hail, farewell social

Co. B, 1st Bn. (Mech), 58th Inf. (Patriots), sponsored the hail and farewell ceremonies held Dec. 3 in the Officers' Wives Lounge.

Lt. Col. Stephen R. Pawlik, battalion commander, presented three-foot Patriot statues to eight departing officers and greeted four new officers.

Welcomed into the battalion were Capt. Richard Harris, Capt. Wesely M. Penrose, 2nd Lt. Joseph Lahnstein and 2nd Lt. Robert Steiner.

After the evening meal Capt. MacDonald presented comical gifts to the officers present. Col. Edwin Kennedy, brigade commander, received a foot-long cigar and Sechel received a "Mr. Cool" certificate.

U.S. Marksmanship unit holds Christmas socials

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Training Unit ushered in the holiday season Saturday at the Fort Benning Officers Club with a dinner party.

This was followed Monday evening with an officer's wives meeting at the home of Mrs. Lanny R. Bassham for an exchange of gifts in their annual Christmas party.

On Wednesday, the marksmen and their wives held a unit party at the Skeet Lodge on Alamo Road. Christmas skits were presented by each of the marksmanship divisions.

At the Saturday party honored guests and newcomers to the unit, Maj. and Mrs. Gordon Horner and Capt. Boyd Goldsby, were seated at the head table and introduced during the evening's program. Horner, who recently returned from the Republic of Vietnam, is the new chief of the Shotgun Division. Familiar to international competition, the major has participated in three world events and one Pan American Game during his shooting career.

Goldsby, who recently returned from Europe, was a member of the U.S. Army Rifle team which won the service rifle championship during the national matches at Camp Perry, Ohio in August.

Guests were seated at decorated tables with crossed sabres as center pieces. Entertainment for the evening included a two-act skit by marksmen of the Rifle Division and piano music by Lt. Col. Charles Keaton, executive officer of the unit.

Check for needy

Mrs. James Eason (L) of the Fort Benning NCO Wives Club presents a $100 check to Sister Joseph of the Social Service Bureau of Columbus. The Social Service Bureau gives help to the aged and needy families within the Columbus area. The check will be used to make Christmas more enjoyable for some of the elderly families.

Benning wives arrange Christmas basket project

The 4th Platoon wives of the Infantry Officer Advanced Course Class 7-71 held a coffee Dec. 8 to organize their "Christmas Basket" project.

As a result of the project, which is co-ordinated with the "SAVE-A-TOY" program, needy family will receive a Christmas basket consisting of food and decorations.

Colorful floats, songs highlight Coral Gables Orange Bowl fete

By Ken Smith

"A Song to Remember" will generate memories for youngsters of all ages when the Junior Orange Bowl Parade rolls through Coral Gables, Fla., Dec. 29.

Well-remembered songs will be symbolized by colorful floats, voiced by singers aboard the floats and danced by troupes accompanying each unit in the 90-minute spectacle.

Some 4,000 youngsters will ride or march in the parade Dec. 29 at 1:30 p.m. and 100,000 spectators are expected to line the Miracle Mile parade route to view the 65 units.

The colorful units will perform such classics as "I Want to Be a Football Hero," "Yankee Doodle," "Little Boy Blue" and others to the delight of the crowd. Seventeen bands will provide the music.

The parade, which will have a 45-minute delayed telecast over the NBC Network New Year's morning, is only one of the sports and entertainment events planned strictly for the youngsters. Even Queen Dawn Marie Sazama, who reigns over the festival, is only 12-years old. Her float will be the last one in the parade.

The Queen remains the focus of attention that evening when the Queen's Ball is held at the Youth Center. Replacing the traditional waltz at this unique social event will be "rock" music so popular with the youngsters.

Admission is free to all events, with the exception of the Queen's Ball, which is by invitation only.

The festival got under way with six football games at the Coral Gables Youth Center Dec. 3 and 4, when local teams were matched against outstanding elevens from Louisville, Ky. and Columbus, Ohio.

After a two-week break, the Junior Orange Bowl Bowling Championships mark the start of a hectic, 13-day schedule of activities.

Now in its third year, the tournament will have 700 finalists competing in three age divisions Dec. 18 and 19 at Coliseum Lanes in Coral Gables. Boy and girl champions will be chosen in 12, 15 and 18 and under divisions, with the winners riding the bowling industry float in the Junior Orange Bowl Parade.

The focus is on tennis starting Dec. 22, when an estimated 300 junior stars will take to the courts at Salvadore Park and three other locations. Tennis competition will continue through Dec. 26, with Christmas off.

Aviation Command needs ground support vehicles

With the mere mention of Aviation Command, one's thoughts immediately focus on airplanes, helicopters and the traffic around Lawson Airfield. However; how many aircraft have you seen in front of the laundry, the post office, or the supply pickup point? Without the ground vehicles for support, the Aviation Command would be hard pressed to complete its many missions. The Aviation Command Motor Pool, at first glance, resembles any of the other motor pools located at Fort Benning. Its only giveaway is an old OH-13 helicopter sitting in one corner awaiting shipment to a museum.

Some of the men assigned to the motor pool are school trained vehicle mechanics while others carry another PMOS and are "on the job training" to be vehicle mechanics.

Servicing required and scheduled maintenance for over 100 vehicles is a task for any motor pool.

Customs booklet offered

A new "U.S. Customs Trademark Information" booklet has been issued that explains current trademark restrictions on items that international travelers might purchase abroad.

Under the trademark laws, the owner of a registered trademark or trade name may record that mark or name with the Bureau of Customs. This gives the owner protection against the importation by others of foreign merchandise bearing the trademark or trade name.

The leaflet includes a list of trademark items that tourists may bring back in limited quantities when they are for personal use and not for resale. Trademarked articles, may not be mailed to the United States.

These restrictions exist, for example, on certain well-known cameras made in Germany and Japan and perfumes from France, as well as jewlery, musical instruments, and wristwatches.

Travelers should understand and follow trademark requirements so that purchases from abroad will pass through U.S. Customs without delay or confiscation. In some cases, removal of the trademark from the item is all that is necessary.

For a single copy of the trademark leaflet write to the Commissioner of Customs, Post Office Box 7118, Washington, D. C. 20044, or contact your nearest Customs office.

Test soldier's Opinion helps in new ideas

An Infantryman adjusts his body armor, stoops lower in his freshly dug foxhole, places his weapon at ready, and waits for an anticipated "enemy" attack on his position. Neither the soldier nor his equipment is ordinary, for he is a "test soldier" and his experimental equipment may become the standard issue equipment of the American Infantryman of the next decade.

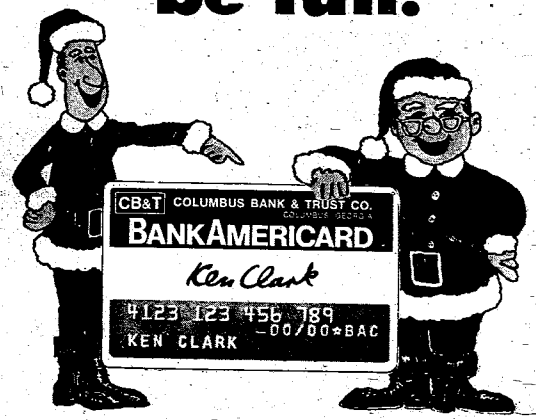
The soldier is Sp4 Jimmie L. Thomas of the US Army Infantry Board where for the past year he has been involved in the testing of equipment designed for use by the Infantry.

As a test soldier Thomas works in an environment of hit-sensitive pop-up targets, computers, T.V. cameras, weapons, sound simulators and high-speed photography.

His workshop includes not only special ranges for the testing of ammunitions and weapons, but the Chattachoochee River and the surrounding bodies of water for testing amphibious equipment and jungle-like Georgia woodlands for checking personal equipment. At times, testing proceeds under darkened night sky with only celestial light as a guide.

Test items are placed in every imaginable situation that they might be called upon in combat to perform. During a typical test of a weapons prototype, the test item might be "jumped" in an airborne suitability test, and its performance throughout would be recorded in still photography or motion pictures. The testing of all items is conducted under simulated combat conditions.

Thomas, a 21-year-old Vietnam veteran, contends that testing under simulated combat conditions on the test facilities is as close to the real thing as possible. "I've been there," he says, "and contrary to those who feel that the "playing war" atmosphere here is overdone, I believe that every detail is necessary."



Getting the individual soldier's opinion ranks high on the testing procedure at the Infantry Board where sometimes meticulous questionnaires accompany the field testing.

"They (the Infantry Board) place a lot of importance on what we (the test soldiers) think about a test item," the native of Syracuse, New York said.

"It makes you feel that your work and effort mean something," Thomas added.

Thomas, who recently "reupped" for 6 years in combat arms MOS, plans to make the military a career.

Military, Federal pay not subject to Phase II

The Cost of Living Council has decided that pay for Federal employees and the military services will not be subject to general post-freeze wage controls. Federal pay was exempted from controls during World War II and the Korean Conflict, it was noted.

The decision specifies that the Cost of Living Council will advise the "President's Agent for Federal Pay" to ensure that future Federal pay policy remains consistent with the objectives of the economic stabilization program. George P. Schultz, Director of the Office of Management and Budget, and Robert E. Hampton, Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, are designated as the "President's Agent for Federal Pay" and will continue to advise the Administration on that subject.

The delays imposed by the President on general Federal pay increases remain in effect. However, within-grade, merit and longevity increases are permitted to resume with the end of freeze.

In issuing guidelines for payment of periodic and quality within - grade step-increases, the Civil Service Commission pointed out that there will be no retroactive payments for the period from August 15 through November 13. In cases where personnel actions were affected by the freeze, the employee's pay rate will be adjusted effective Nov. 14, 1971, to the rate the employee would be receiving had it not been for the freeze on within - grade step - increases.

The Cost of Living Council announced that the following factors were major considerations in arriving at its decision:

(1) Because of particular features of Federal pay, the President had to take a number of deflationary actions with regard to Federal pay prior to the establishment of the Pay Board. These were an integral part of the Economic Stabilization Program announced August 15. In this regard, the President:

(a) Deferred Federal whitecollar pay increases six months from January 1, to July 1, 1972.

(b) Delayed for six months all blue collar adjustments.

(c) Delayed from October 1, 1971, to November 13, 1971, the military pay increases embodied in the Draft Extension Act. The largest increases are designated for enlisted men and those officers having less than two years of service. These pay adjustments lead to structural changes which will encourage enlistments and achieve the President's objective of an all - volunteer armed force.

MAH exercise has simulated multi-bus casuality accident

An ambulance screeches to a halt in front of the emergency room doors at Martin Army Hospital. The driver jumps from the ambulance and opens the rear doors of the vehicle as hospital personnel rush out to help. Quickly the injured soldiers on the litters inside the ambulance are carried into the emergency room where they immediately undergo examination and are administered any treatment needed.

A Soldier With A Simulated Injury Is Removed From An Ambulance By Hospital Personnel And Litter Bearers During Exercise

This was the first ambulance of many and the first of 50 simulated casualties supposedly resulting from a multi-bus accident but actually part of a training problem. The exercise assumed that four bus loads of airborne students were on their way to a training area when an oncoming semi-trailer loaded with pipe went out of control due to faulty brakes. The presumed accident resulted in a head-on collision between the semi-trailer and the lead bus with the remaining three buses plowing into the rear of the lead bus.

Sounds real enough doesn't it? This is a situation that could happen at any time. But in actuality it is a "Mass Casualty Exercise" for the personnel of Martin Army Hospital. Exercises of this type are required of the personnel every six months to maintain the efficiency of emergency readiness.

Pay, pension: 2 key words

Two key words for veterans and dependents, "compensation" and "pension," are often used interchangeably, but their official meanings are vastly different.

COMPENSATION, the Veterans Administration explains, is paid because of a disability or death that resulted from military service.

PENSION, on the other hand, is paid on the basis of need to wartime veterans or their dependent survivors when the veteran is totally and permanently disabled from causes not traceable to military service, or when he dies of such causes.

Project Transition

By CARL KING

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth in a series about Project Transition.)

Students in this course specialize in front end work (wheel balancing and alignment), tune-ups and electrical systems, or brake systems. Both classroom theory and actual work on automobiles prepare students to enter the field as a mechanic's apprentice.

According to James R. Burns, instructor, the course lasts six weeks. The first two weeks are classroom instruction, while the last four weeks consists of on-the-job training.

"A mechanic must specialize," Burns said. "We offer these three major specialty fields because most civilian jobs require specialty work as opposed to requiring a man to have a comprehensive knowledge of all facets of automobile repair."

New training program

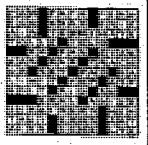
First Basic Leader Course graduates 158 men

The first of a series of three Basic Leader Courses (BLC) graduated 158 men Dec. 10 in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall. Sp5 Robert L. Robinson, "A" Co., Headquarters Command, USAIC, and Sp4 Michael J. Harvill, HHC, The School Brigade (TSB), were the Distinguished Honor Graduates of the class.

The Basic Leader Course is a newly conceived training program for prospective NCO's. The Continental Army Command (CONARC) has directed all major commands within the United States to provide a week long leadership course for men in pay grade E-4 and E-5. In order to train the eligible enlisted men at Fort Benning, three sessions of the program have been scheduled, the first of which graduated this past Friday. All classes operate out of the Non-Commissioned Officer Companies in TSB.

All E-4s and E5s are required to attend the Basic Leader Course providing they have not attended NCO Academy, Drill Sergeant School, NCOC Schlol or the NCO Advisory Course. Also ineligible are men in Project Transition or in Service or Formal Training Schools.

The basic prerequisites are that personnel be an E4 or E5 and have four months remaining in service once they complete the BLC Course.



"Leadership for Professionals," "Human Behavior and Command Application," "Fundamentals of Physical Training," and "Drug Abuse" are a few of the areas of instruction that are covered in the BLC classes. The Leadership Department, TSB, and Brigade and Battalion Operations Department (BBOD) are the contributing units which organize and present all of the material used in the Basic Leader Training.

All students are housed in NCOC company barracks and are exposed to training and conditions simular to those in the regular candidate prigrams (NCOC and OCS). Clothing and personal area inspections are common and, in addition, the prospective NCO's are tested in the leadership and legal instruction (successful completion of the course will earn two administrative points for promotion purposes).

The Basic Leader Course is designed to provide a more qualified man for the responsibilities of an NCO. The course functions as a refresher in the leadership principles as well as incorporating advice on such diverse subjects as drugs, race relations, speech and legal areas.

CSM Stephen J. Regan, 1st Bn., TSB, delivered the commencement address to the BLC Graduates.

The Browning Water-Cooled Cal. 30 Heavy Machine Gun, M1917, underwent testing at Fort Benning.

The M561 "Gamma Goat" and other Infantry Vehicles are road tested and evaluated under all types of combat conditions at the Infantry Board.

Infantry Board has probably tested it

What do pack-saddles, electric clipping machines for mules, Browning Water-Cooled Machine Guns and style shoe lace fasteners have in common with the new man-portable antitank weapon system — the DRAGON; the XR-311, High Mobility Wheeled Vehicle, nicknamed the DUNE BUGGY; and the powerful, light antitank weapon — the LAW?

All are items that the US Army Infantry Board at Fort Benning has tested during its 68 years of service to the Infantryman.

Although the board is actually 68-years-old, it is observing its 52nd year at Fort Benning, making it one of the oldest tenants.

Whether he wears it, shoots it, drinks from it, or rides in it, the American Infantryman can be sure that it has been tested and approved by the Infantry Board.

During the years since its inception the board has been known by many names. It was established, here, in December 1919 to determine whether new weapons, clothing and vehicles are suitable for Infantry and Army-wide use.

Prior to the board's existence, there was no permanent agency whose sole function was to test and evaluate material vital to the Infantry.

More than a half century has passed since its origin, and US Infantrymen have fought in Africa, Europe, in the Pacific Islands, Korea, and Vietnam. It has been the mission of the board to insure that the best weapons and equipment be developed for use in combat.

This inspired the board's motto: "ONLY THE BEST FOR THE FINEST."

Many distinguished Infantrymen have served as Infantry Board members including General Omar Bradley, George C. Marshall and Courtney Hodges.

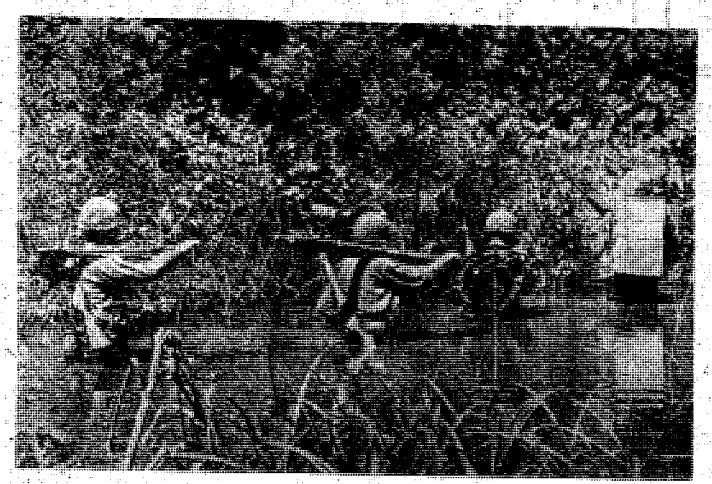
As a subordinate activity of the U. S. Army Test and Evaluation Command, the Board tests developmental material under realistic tactical conditions to determine its suitability for use. The Board also provides advice to materiel developers during the development of the equipment.

The board is concerned with the comfort and well being of the foot soldier as well as the quality and effectiveness of his equipment.

The Infantry Board occupies a unique position at Fort Benning. Its 34 officers and warrant officers, its 133 enlisted men, and its 48 civilian employes work at the post but are otherwise a separate unit.

Col. Charles B. Thomas is the current President of the Infantry Board and Lt. Col. Billy A. Arthur is the board's executive officer.

Col. John Milton heads the board's test division. The test division is divided into branches which are responsible for different categories of the Infantryman's equipment.



The Small Arms Test Branch, headed by Lt. Col. Santiago A. Garcia, tests all individual and crew-served direct-fire small-arms weapons and their related munitions, accessories and equipment: grenades and grenade launchers, night sighting devices for small arms; and weapon launched and handheld signalling devices.

Supporting Weapons Test Branch tests Infantry weapons (other than those assigned to the Small Arms Branch) to include mortars, recoilless weapons, their ammunitions and fire control equipment; antitank and antiaircraft missles and range finders, communications and surveillence equipment, night sight devices (other than those for individual weapons). Lt. Col. Donald L. Smith is the chief.

The Field Equipment Test Division under Lt. Col. Larry S. Mickel gets all clothing, equipment and protective devices for the individual soldier; rations, cooking and messing equipment, chemical weapons and munitions; tentage, antipersonnel mines, wheeled and tracked vehicles; and miscellaneous equipment for individual and small units.

The Methodology and Operations Division, headed by Lt. Col. Nathan C. Sibley, has the mission of supporting all test projects to insure high quality results. This division includes both officers and enlisted personnel with advanced degrees in engineering and the sciences who continually develop new test methodology and more sophisticated instrumentation.

Some of the more important tests to be conducted this year at the Infantry Board include service testing of the XM47 Surface Attack Guided Missile System — the DRAGON, military potential testing of the XR-311, High Mobility Wheeled Vehicle, nicknamed the DUNE BUGGY, and expanded service testing of LINCLOE, a system of Lightweight Individual Combat Clothing and Equipment.

Project Transition training is also being affected by the new early-release program. According to Leonard S. Oxley, director of education, most men now taking transition training are elegible for release under the new program. They may choose to complete their transition training if they desire.

Due to the new 179 days early release for AUS and first term enlistees with adjusted dates of January '72 (from July 72) through June 72 (from December '72, these men are now eligible for Project Transition Training. In order to schedule classes, PROJECT TRANSITION QUESTIONNAIRES MUST BE COMPLETED BY ALL SERVICEMEN WITHIN THE ABOVE ETS DATES. Questionnaires are available at all Education Centers and should be completed prior to the Christmas break.

Counseling, except when requested, will not be required for these initial servicemen concerned.

Other offices and facilities may also be feeling the squeeze as the Army continues to reduce its forces.

Early - outs

overseas duty. This is necessary to furnish vitality to the service.

The total early-release package now looks like This:

. . .Four-month Early Release of Obligated Officers. Applicable to Officers serving their initial obligated tour except officers of the Judge Advocate General, Chaplain, Medical and Women's Army Corps.

. . . .Voluntary Withdrawal from the Officer Voluntary Indefinite Program. Officers who entered on commissioned duty in 1969 and 1970 were asked if they wanted to leave the service before finishing the obligatory three-year tour. The first losses under this program will occur in January, the last in May 1972.

. . .Involuntary Release of Selected Reserve Captains, Lieutenants, and Warrant Officers. Selection is being made by the Department of the Army Active Duty Board. About 4,000 officers Army wide must be released from active duty no later than 90 days after receipt of notification, which begins in January, and all losses will occur before June 30, 1972.

. . .179 Day Early Release for AUS and First Term RA Personnel (Except RVN and Europe). Except for those serving in Vietnam and Europe, AUS and first term RA (those serving an initial three or four year enlistment in the Regular Army) enlisted personnel whose expiration of term of service (ETS) occurs on or before Dec. 31, 1972, will be separated not more than 179 days early. Those whose original ETS is between Jan. 1 and June 30, 1972 will be released not later than Jan. 31. After that, those originally scheduled for release between July and Dec. 1972 will get a 179-day drop.

This program will not be applicable to those for whom early release would be an undue hardship if the commander in the grade of colonel or above so determines. Nor will it be applied to aliens whose citizenship rights would be adversely affected, to those under flagging or investigative action, to those sentenced to bad conduct or dishonorable discharge prior to completion of appellate review, or to those soldiers who desire to reenlist.

. . .Early Release AUS and First Term RA Personnel Reassigned to CONUS.

Those reassigned to CONUS before June 30, 1972, who have less than 179 days until ETS will be separated by the transfer station serving the aerial port of debarkation.

Personnel returning from Vietnam who have more than 179 days but less than 12 months until ETS may be voluntarily released at the port. Under this option, those eligible must sign a statement that they understand that it takes 18 months or more active duty time to qualify for the full 36 months veterans educational benefits and that persons with less time get 1½ months credit for each month. They also must acknowledge that they understand they will not be permitted to reenlist within 90 days following separation.

. . .150 Day Early Release Program for AUS and First Term RA Personnel in Europe. Those serving in Europe whose ETS is between Jan. 1 and May 31, 1972, will be separated not later than Jan. 31, 1972. After that, those with an ETS between June and Nov. 1972 will be released 150 days early.

. . .Reserve Components In-Service Recruiting Program. AUS personnel who agree to serve one year in an active National Guard or Reserve unit may be released from active duty 60 days early.

Three year first termers stationed in CONUS who will have completed two or more years of service by June 30, 1972, may be released immediately if they apply to and are accepted by an ARNG-USAR unit and agree to serve a minimum of one year or until their original ETS, whichever is greater.

RA first term personnel in CONUS who have completed a tour in Vietnam and who have 18 or more months of service by June 30, 1972, also may be released under the same agreement to serve in a National Guard or Reserve unit.

. . .Release from Medical Holding Detachments. Unless desiring and eligible to reenlist, those with an ETS date of Dec. 31, 1972 or earlier who are released to duty from medical holding detachments after 90 days or more of hospitalization who have 179 days or less time in service remaining will be separated.

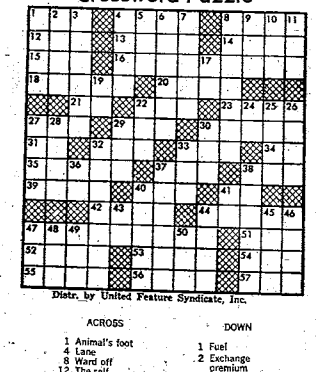
. . .Involuntary Release of Retirement Eligible Enlisted Personnel. All retired recallees, regardless of normal release dates, are programmed for release by Feb. 29, 1972. Those on whom this would work a hardship will be allowed additional time, but all releases will be accomplished by June 30, 1972.

Enlisted personnel, regardless of normal separation date, who will have reached a grade and active duty service combination of 20 or more years for E-5, 24 or more years for E-6, 27 or more years for E-7, and 30 or more years for E-8 and E-9 (except for command sergeants major) will be involuntarily retired not later than June 30, 1972. about 4,000 will be affected by this program.

. . .Release of Personnel on Compassionate Assignment. Draftees and RA first-term enlistees who are on compassionate assignments, and whose period of stabilization meets or exceeds their normal separation dates, will be separated as soon as possible, but not later than June 30, 1972. Retirement eligible personnel on compassionate assignments will be permitted to serve until completion of the stabilization period (one year) or request earlier retirement.

Those now assigned under compassionate conditions or receiving such assignments will be counseled by local commanders. After the compassionate assignment, they will be subject to worldwide assignments, and must either accept or request a hardship discharge (or retirement if appropriate). None will be separated under this program where the release from active duty will further compound the problem.

Each of these early release programs will be completed by June 30, 1972.



The projected Army strength figures for June 30, 1972 represent a total loss of over 42 per cent from the 1968 peak strength. They also represent a 27 per cent cut in officer strength. The loss of 51,000 officers and 566,000 enlisted men since FY 68 will be accomplished with relatively few involuntary releases.

Examination of the Army figures shows that only one of every 12 officers and one of every 141 EM leaving the Army early will be doing so involuntarily. Although there are precedents for the involuntary release of both officers and EM, the current programs were adopted only after other efforts to meet the imposed maximum Army strengths were used.

The goal at Fort Benning, as elsewhere in the Army, is to retain the best qualified. Selection of those to be involuntarily released will be based on an inverse order of merit. Those who are just above the minimum performance of duty standards will be the first to be released. Thus, officers and enlisted men whose efficiency ratings are high are less vulnerable. At the same time, the small number of involuntary releases required means that most career enlisted men and reserve officers will be allowed to stay in the Army until retirement.

The achievement of a properly balanced grade structure is absolutely essential to the Army's efforts. The reduction in force actions now being taken are designed to retain the most qualified personnel and provide for continuing promotion opportunities and satisfying professional development of those who remain.

Sean Connery returns in new gem

BOND BACK

James Bond, Surrounded By His Beauties And Gadgets, Foils Another International SPECTRE Plot In His Latest Escapade.

Sean Connery is James Bond. After a brief one picture absence Connery packs his Walther PPK 38 pistol into his shoulder holster for his sixth time, as he sets out on the trail of a fortune in smuggled gems that fail to reach the black market, in "Diamonds Are Forever." The picture will open Dec. 25 at the Georgia Theatre.

Surrounded as usual by a bevy of luscious and lethal beauties, James Bond shares the action, both amatory and predatory, with two gorgeous female co-stars, red-haired Jill St. John and brunette Lana Wood, the 25-year-old bountifully endowed younger sister of Natalie Wood. Jill plays Tiffany Case ("I was born there. On the first floor where my mother was looking for a wedding ring."). Lana Wood portrays the casino camp follower, Plenty O'Toole, who samples highballs and hijinks with 007.

"Diamond Are Forever" is the seventh in the successful series of entertainments based on Ian Fleming's supercool hero James Bond and produced by Albert R. Broccoli and Harry Saltzman for release by United Artists. This time his adventures are being captured for the screen by director Guy Hamilton on American location sites in the gaming capital of the world at Las Vegas in Palm Springs, Los Angeles and abroad an off-shore oil rig in the Pacific Ocean. Locations were also set in Amsterdam, Holland; Frankfurt, Germany; in Nice in the South of France and around London and along England's South Coast at Dover and Southampton.

No James Bond film would be complete without 'M', the gadget expert 'Q' and Miss Moneypenny. Maintaining their unbroken record of seven successive films in their respective roles are Bernard Lee, Desmond Llewelyn, and Lois Maxwell.

To prove the wetness of Rise, this man shaved without using any water.
And he actually got a smooth, clean shave.
The reason he got such a clean shave is the moisture in Rise.
A lather needs moisture, needs wetness, so your beard won't dry out beneath it.
And you can't buy a lather that's wetter than Rise.
Slowly it seeps moisture into your beard and holds it there for as long as it takes you to shave.
The point we're trying to prove is this.
If our man can get a smooth, clean shave using Rise with no water, imagine what you can do using Rise with water.

Synopsis

WHEN EIGHT BELLS TOLL. (Rated GP) stars Anthony Hopkins as a Naval frogman and espionage agent assigned to break a ring hijacking ships for the gold pullon on board. With the aid of Corin Redgrave, his Intelligence Service buddy, Hopkins pits his anti-authoritarian and unconventionally violent methods against the better judgment of his superior, Robert Morley.

Hovering suspiciously nearby the area is the luxury yacht, Shangri-La, whose occupants are Jack Hawkins and his bored wife, Nathalie Delon. Hopkins would like to know why such an unlikely husband and wife duo so obviously cannot stand the sight of each other.

The answers involve multiple (and messy) murders. There are action scenes aplenty, above and below the waters, in secret caves, in helicopters, and inside and beneath a Scottish castle.

NIGHT OF DARK SHADOWS (Rated GP) — The first night after arriving at his inherited estate, Collinwood, with Kate Jackson, artist David Selby dreams of the grim past of the Collins family. The ghost of Lara Parker, who was hanged as a witch and adultress in the 9th Century, still haunts the house.

Benning Dramatizers

Help wanted—no experience needed

By Edith Simmons

Looking for something different to do over the holidays? Then come to the Benning Playhouse. The Dramatizers will be there working on "Blithe Spirit," Fort Benning's entry in the 3rd U.S. Army Tournament of Plays.

If you're interested in theater, this slack period is the perfect time to drop by. Much help is needed in planning and building sets, designing and making costumes, developing makeup, and doing publicity. Experience is not necessary.

As a little theatre group, the Dramatizers want to develop and train talent as well as use previous experience. If you can hammer, saw, push a broom, or push a pencil, come and visit.

The Playhouse is located behind the Infantry Museum and will be open every day except for the two holiday weekends. Phone 545-5057 for additional information.

Ariz. Memorial open most holidays

The USS Arizona Memorial at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, will be open to the public on all national holidays except Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's Day, according to a new policy announced by Rear Admiral Thomas B. Hayward, Fourteenth Naval District commandant.

Admiral Hayward said he established the new holiday rule to better serve the public, particularly "local residents who work on weekends and may not have an opportunity to visit us except on holidays."

The Arizona Memorial, which is normally closed on Mondays, will now be open on five Monday holidays observed under the new "Monday Holiday Law." They are Washington's Birthday, Memorial Day, Labor Day, Columbus Day and Veterans Day. In addition, the Memorial will be open on the Fourth of July.

In protective service jobs

VA records reveal 46 per cent increase

Veterans Administration records reveal a 46 per cent increase in the last fiscal year in veterans training under the G.I. Bill for policemen, firemen or related "protective services" occupations.

VA officials report 38,000 veterans took such training last fiscal year, compared to 26,000 a year earlier.

Of the 38,000 veterans who pursued protective services training in the last fiscal year, officials noted, 17,500 took policemen-firemen on-the-job training (OJT). Another 8,500 enrolled in college level police science, criminology or fire protection courses, and 10,000 others trained below college level.

Also included in the 38,000 protective service trainees were nearly 2,000 veterans who sought skills in other than policemen-firemen fields, such as game warden and bailiff.

VA officials said the agency encourages veterans to enter OJT in areas of public service as recommended early last year by the President's Committee on the Vietnam Veteran.

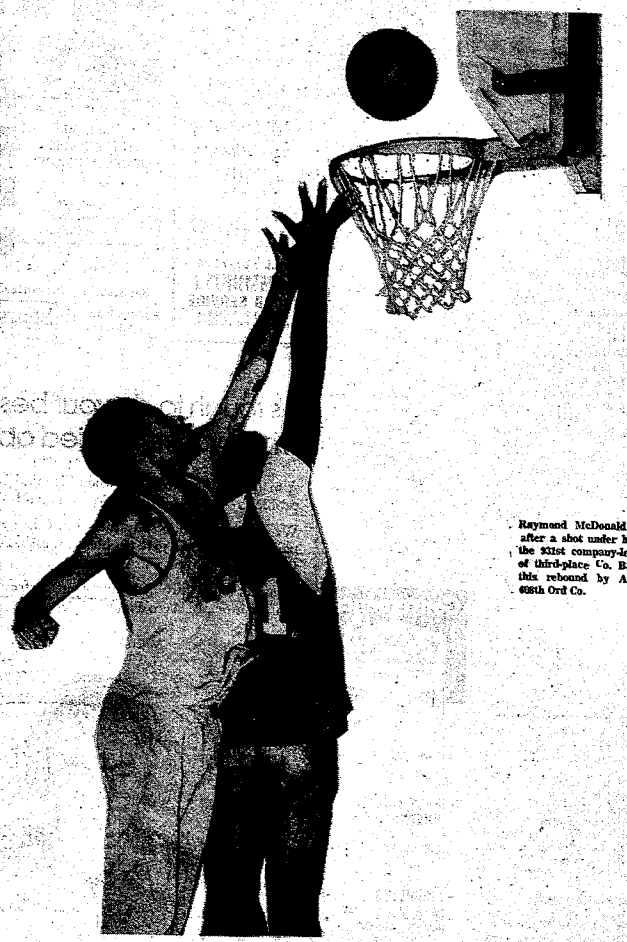
4 teams undefeated in 931st league

Four teams are undefeated after the first two weeks of play in the 931st Engr. Gp. company-level basketball league.

Leading the charge of winners in the 12-team league is Co. C, 43rd Engr. Bn., which now has three wins against no losses. Close behind with two wins and no defeats are the teams from 139th MP Co., 606th Ord. Co. and the 586th Lt. Maint. Bn.

Co. A, 43rd Engr. Bn. and the 586th Engr. Co. share the second place, slot with even records of one and one.



Two transportation companies and one Engineer company share the third place honors so far, with identical slates of a single victory against twin losses. They are the 533rd Trans. Co.; Co. C, 56th S and S Bn.; Co. B, 43rd Engr. Bn. and Co. D, 43rd Engr. Bn.

18th Repl. Det. and HHC, 931st, are the only winless to date with two defeats.

The last six games played in the Engineer league, three on Dec. 7 and three the following night at Kimbro Gym, Sand Hill, found most of the teams evenly matched.

The 606th Ord. Co. five squeezed past Co. B, 43rd, in the opening game Dec. by a score of 31-29. That game was followed by a 586th Lt. Maint. Co. victory over HHC, 931st, 49-39, and a win by Co. A, 43rd, over 18th Rep. Det. by 44-35.

The following night Co. C, 43rd, downed the 586th Engr. Co. in a 42-32 battle; Co. C, 56th S and S, whipped Co. D, 43rd, with a score of 58-45; and the 533rd Trans. Co. edged out Co. B, 43rd, 36-31.

Raymond McDonald (43) goes up after this rebound after a shot under his team's goal at Kimbro Gym in the 931st company-level basketball league. McDonald, of third-place Co. B, 43rd Engr. Bn., is challenged for this rebound by A. Vismale (12) of the first place 606th Ord Co.

SPORTS

By Jim Swink

The middle of December brings with it not only the holidays, but the college bowl season as well. This week the action gets started with the Sun Bowl in El Paso, Tex. This game will be the inauguration for the bowl and brings the number of major bowls to ten. This year's total bowl picture looks more exciting than it has in many years with all the top ten rated teams participating in bowls.

LSU—TENNESSEE

In this year's Sun Bowl, Louisiana State (8-3) will take on Iowa State who is also 8-3. LSU should really be much too strong for Iowa State on any football field. The LSU Tigers who lost to Colorado, Alabama, and Mississippi finished the season with a more than impressive win over Notre Dame. The LSU defense was the only one able to hold Alabama to 14 points.

In the Liberty Bowl on Monday night, Tennessee (9-2) will match wits with Arkansas (8-2-1) in Memphis. Liberty is the key word for Arkansas as they will be attempting to liberate themselves from the Vols' defense which has given up more than one touchdown in a game only once all season. Arkansas boasts one of the best passing games in the nation this season but the Tenn. defense is one of the best in pass defense with All-American safety Bobby Majors and All-American linebacker ackie Walker spearheading the Volunteer defenders. Tennessee's former sputtering offense has seemed to jell as they won six straight games coming down the stretch. This will be the first meeting in the history of these two schools but Tenn. should thoroughly convince the Razorbacks from Ark. that this year's Liberty Bowl is truly "Big Orange County".

GEORGIA-OKLAHOMA-PENN. ST.

The Gator Bowl presents an interesting match up between Georgia (10-1) and North Carolina (9-2). This contest between the Atlantic Coast Conference and Southeastern Conference should result in another SEC victory. Georgia has a powerful running game spearheaded by sophomore quarterback Andy Johnson. Give this one to the Bulldogs.

One of the top bowl attractions this year will be in the Sugar Bowl where two powerful offenses will get together. Oklahoma (10-1) will take on Auburn (9-1). Oklahoma led the nation in scoring during the regular season and didn't seem to have that much trouble moving against Nebraska, the only game that the Sooners lost. The offense led by Jack Mildren and Johnny Rogers possess one of the most awesome scoring machines in the country at the rate of better than 40 points per game. On the other hand, Heiseman Award winner, Pat Sullivan and Gerry Beasley combine to form one of the most explosive combinations in the country. Don't count Auburn out too early in the game. With a little momentum they could do it, however, Oklahoma should be just too much muscle for the small Auburn defense to handle.

The Cotton Bowl is somewhat disappointing this year. In fact, some people are asking how Texas got into the bowl after being soundly defeated by Arkansas. Well, it's another one of those conference rules that did it. At any rate, they will be taking on Penn State (10-1) who will prove themselves quite worthy of being in Dallas. Texas is always tough in their own Cotton Bowl, but head coach Joe Patterno and his Penn State team should turn the trick.

MICHIGAN-TIDE

In Pasadenn, the Stanford Indians (8-3) are back again. This time they will be going against the Michigan Wolverines (11-0). However, Stanford is lacking this year two importaut factors — Jim Plunkett and a defense. Michigan is stronger this year than it has been in several years. The Big Ten Champions will prevail and come home with the Rose.

After the Super Bowl last January, Miami has landed the College Super Bowl this January. The Orange Bowl will match Nebraska (12-0) and Alabama (11-0). So far as I am concerned, this game is more or less a toss up. The Cornhuskers have proven themselves tough both offensively and defensively. On the other side of the coin, no one has stopped Alabama all year and I see no reason why the Tide won't roll again. This game could very well be decided by a break. But somehow, I can't help but feel that Coach (Bear) Bryant has something he has been hiding all year long for just a situation like this. Whatever the outcome though, the winner will be the national champion. But what if they tie?

609th cagers lead Avn. Cmd. league

By defeating the 205th Assault Support Helicopter Company, the 609th Transportation Company maintained its undefeated lead in the Aviation Command Basketball League.

Headquarters Command remained in second place by defeating the 399th Transportation Detachment.

Recovering from a slow start, the USAIB team scored two more victories—one by beating the 197th Avn. Co. in a very close game.

609th leads the league boasting a 5-0 record. Headquarters Command follows next with a 4-1 record. Tied for third are USAIB with a 3-3 record and 197th with a 2-2 record. Tied for the next spot are 399th and 205th both with 2-3 records. The 931st Engineer Group (Aviation Platoon) follows next with a 0-6 record.

Those interested in viewing the games are reminded that they are held on every Tuesday and Thursday at the Briant Wells Field House between 2:30 and 4 p.m.

58th represents Benning at Blue-Gray Classic

By John Davis

Fifteen soldiers and four vehicles from the 197th Infantry Brigade's first battalion 58th Infantry will represent Fort Benning in the 34th Blue-Gray Football Classic Dec. 28 in Montgomery, Ala.

A four man color guard, two armored vehicles, two towed artillery pieces and an 11 man escort party will be included in the hour long pre-game parade. The theme of this years march and halftime show is "God Bless America". Representatives from all branches of the service have been invited to participate in the military oriented program, and the parade participants will attend the football contest as guests of the Montgomery Lions Club, sponsors of the annual all-star grid clash.

Since its inception in 1939, the Blue-Gray Classic has brought together 1,487 college seniors in 33 all-star games. This army of talent has represented 155 colleges and universities. Many of the modern day standouts of the National Football League use the Blue-Gray Classic as a stepping stone to the pro ranks. Included are quarterbacks Bart Starr, Green Bay; Fran Tarkenton, New York Giants; Gary Cuozzo and Norm Snead, Minnesota; and Len Dawson, Kansas City.

Ecology is a word that covers many things. The dictionary says it pertains to the relationship of things with other things and of things with people. We can use the word whenever we refer to anything that affects us — the air we breathe, the food we eat, the water we drink, clothes we wear, the buildings we live in and all the things that make up the environment around them.

In the last few years our ecology has become more and more important and has received more attention as more people realize the damage our way of living has done to our environment. Everyone wants to get into the act and "experts" have grown up all over the place. The trouble is they can't agree on a coordinated plan of action. One group thinks one plan of action is good but others feel that plan is actually detrimental. This has resulted in a lot of wheel spinning and not much forward movement.

One of the biggest ecology problems is littering. Unfortunately this is a problem that is not difficult to detect. We can see the results all over. The solutions aren't too difficult to figure out either. The first is "don't throw it." The second is "pick it up." If the first solution is followed, the second isn't necessary. Here again its unfortunate that we have a requirement for the second solution at the pond sites and surrounding areas on the reservation.

Some of the people who use these areas haven't been too careful about the police after they have enjoyed the facility. Its amazing how much trash can build up in a year. It was about this time last year that the Infantry School inititated a project to clean up all the trash around the pond areas. They even used Rod and Gun Club boats to remove all the bottles, cans and other trash floating in the ponds. At the beginning of the year these areas really looked sharp but in the last twelve months their appearance has slipped quite a bit.

With the Christmas holidays and an academic holiday at hand some of the school personnel might be interested in taking on the police of some of the ponds again. The elementary and high schools also are due for a holiday. Some of the scout troops might want to participate also. The whole project might be coordinated by the Post Environmental Management Group.

It would be great if the post could start the new year with all the recreation areas in top shape. Maybe the people who use them will make New Years resolutions to keep them clean next year.

Christmas Turkey Shoot

The Rod and Gun Club gave away 78 turkeys and 18 hams at the turkey shoot held at the club skeet ranges last week. Shooters kept the ranges busy during the entire day. Even those who didn't win a prize seemed to be enjoying the companionship and refreshments. The club board of governors thanks those who worked at the shoot and those who came out to help make the shoot a success.

Rod and Gun Deer Contest

The deer harvest on the reservation was small again last week. There were 14 deer registered to bring the annual total to 333. The unusually warm weather probably had a lot to do with the small number of kills. There are still plenty of deer to be taken. Starting tomorrow morning the doe season opens in the Chattahoochee County portion of the reservation and next Saturday the season will be open in all parts of the reservation. The number taken each week should take a big jump next week.

There were no trophy types taken during the week and the Rod and Gun Deer Hunting Contest standings remained the same.

Lt. Col. Brandt Grubbs has the heaviest deer weighing 176 pounds. The 161¾ pound entry of John E. Smith holds down second place.

SSgt. Charles Wallace and Ronnie Cavins have each registered bucks with 10 countable antler points. Ties in the antler contest are broken by the weight of the deer. This puts Wallace in first place with a 160-pound entry. The deer brought in by Cavins weighed 146-pounds.

The Rod and Gun Club will award three Remington Model 1100 Automatic Shotguns and two Mossberg Bolt Action Slug Guns to hunters who take trophy deer during the current hunting season.

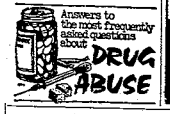
TSB downs 197th, 84-79 to remain undefeated

TSB remained undefeated in the post-wide basketball league with an 84-79 victory over the 197th Inf. Bde. at Briant Wells Field House, Dec. 8.

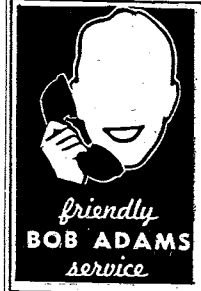
In Dec. 8's final game, MEDDAC beat HQ, Cmd. 85-76.

Monday night action saw the 197th Bde. avenge an earlier one-point loss to MEDDAC with a 101-72 romp at the Kelley Hill Field House. The 101 points is the highest point total in a game this season.

197th had three men in double figures: John Black with a game high 31 points, Halverson with 16 and Weaver added 12.



Meddac was unable to score in the first 5½ minutes of the game, while the 197th built up a 16 point lead. It was 48-30 at the end of the half. The 197th broke the game open with 30 points in the last period to clinch the victory.



Monday's other game was much closer with the 931st Eng. Gp. defeating Hq. Comd. 77-71.

A one day turkey tournament will be held at the Fort Benning County Club Golf Course tomorrow.

The dogfight type tournament will be played on the Pine Side Course.

Entry fee is $3. Participants may organize foursomes of their choosing and obtain tee times at the golf course pro shop.

Orienteerers go 13 miles

The Fort Benning Orienteering (land navigation) Team participated in a 13-mile mini-marathon Dec. 4 and 5 in Atlanta, Ga. Although this was just a preparatory meet for next year's Orienteering season, PFC Don Kennedy placed first over a hilly, wet, and snow covered course.

Kennedy's over-all time was 69 minutes and 16 seconds with an average 5 minutes, 30 seconds per mile. Sgt. Dale Aberle finished eighth, while other Fort Benning orienteerers, Sgt. Kevin Krazeski, Capt. John Nolan, Sgt. Dave Kelley, Sp4. Don Stanley, and newcomer PFC John Greco contributed to Fort Benning's fine over-all finish.

The competition was rough for the runners as they competed against some of the finest long distance runners in the southeast. Some of the well known track clubs represented were the Furman Track Club, Florida Track Club and the Atlanta Track Club.

Although the Orienteering season doesn't officially open until March, Fort Benning's squad has been running up to 30 miles daily in preparation for next year's season. "Our progress has been improving steadily," says Capt. Ed Strable, a member of the team. "Last month we finished second in the team competition in the North American Championships, with all-Army champ Dale Aberle finishing fourth."

The team has also scheduled the Peach Bowl Marathon in December and the Mardi Gras Marathon in February to continue their off-season training.

Players and coaches are needed to fill vacant positions on the Post Basketball Team.

The Benning team plays teams from other installations in the 3rd U.S. Army Area. Games have been scheduled on a home and away from home plan.

Interested personnel may obtain additional information from Bill Harrell or Billy Dove at the Special Services Sport Section, 545-1516.

CTC scheduled to graduate in Jan.

By William Bala

The first class of Advanced Individual Training (AIT) students who enlisted under the Army's Unit of Choice Enlistment Program for the 197th Infantry Brigade is expected to graduate Jan. 14 at the 197th's Central Training Command (CTC) main classroom.

The 54-man class is the first to take AIT at Fort Benning since 1969. The class began training Nov. 1 with subsequent classes beginning each Monday thereafter. The first graduating class will become members of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry.

CTC, a branch of the 197th located at Harmony Church, is responsible for training the men who enlisted for the Brigade under the United of Choice Enlistment Program.

The 11-week course consists of three phases, the first of which concentrates on educating the students on general subjects including weapons, and navigation, patrolling and adventure training.

The second phase is concerned with teaching the student military tactics while the third phase provides technical training based on the individual's Military Occupational Specialty (MOS).

For their first experience in adventure training the AIT platoon from Delta Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, marched approximately 43 miles from Buena Vista to Americus, Ga. The march took four days to complete because the students were attacked both day and night by a mock "enemy force." The attacks were made to simulate actual combat fighting.

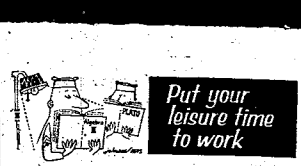
According to Lt. Richard Beauchamp, the students platoon leader, the young volunteers "marched between 10 and 15 miles a day."

In the future, more units of the 197th are planning to have AIT exercises.

Columbus College offers new program

Columbus College has been designated an official testing center for the College-Level Examination Program (CLEP).

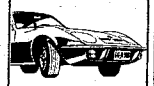
The examination enables those taking it to receive up to two years of college credit for what they already know and can do, a college official explained.



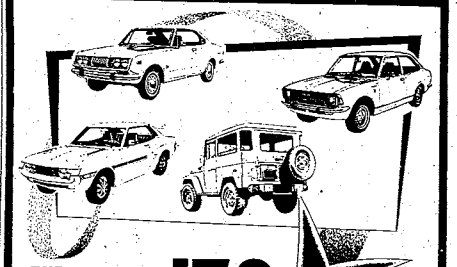
The test will be given on the third Friday and Saturday of each month, beginning today and tomorrow. The college is offering this service on Saturday to accommodate those who hold full-time jobs during the week.

"This is an excellent opportunity for adults who have not been to college before but would like to have academic credit for their self-education and work experience," according to Dr. W. Lindsey Mock, director of student services at the college.

"Until Columbus College became a test center, residents of the Columbus area had to travel to Atlanta to take the test because Georgia State University had the only testing center in the state," he said.



The CLEP consists of a battery of five tests lasting for six hours.



Those interested may register for the examination by contacting Dr. Mock, who has application blanks, at 561-5134, ext. 222.

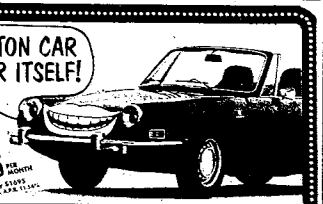
Carbon Monoxide one of winter's dangers

Winter driving holds many hazards, but the most treacherous menace is carbon monoxide poisoning. Inhalation of this gas causes more deaths than all other toxic gases combined, and the death toll is steadily climbing each year.



The perils of carbon monoxide may be ignored here in the South because of the relatively mild winters. Many of us are guilty of keeping our car motors running while waiting for someone. With car windows shut, a death trap is set and a leak in the muffler or manifold will trigger the trap. Before the occupants realize they are in danger, they are overcome by gas fumes.

Remember this, a new car can have a leak in the connections, so don't assume this can happen only to people with older cars.

Pure carbon monoxide is an odorless, colorless, tasteless, nonirritating and most of all, lethal gas. Carbon monoxide is, however, usually mixed with other gases with an irritating odor which warns people of the impending danger. However, when the irritants are absent, there is no warning to the driver or his passengers.

The safety director asks people to avoid the dangers of carbon monoxide by keeping the exhaust system of their car in good condition and by not following too closely in bumper to bumper traffic. It is wise to keep car windows open a little for ventilation.

If anyone sees a vehicle in a parking lot with the windows up, the motor running and the occupants slumped over, he should rap on the window, immediately open the doors, remove the occupants and start artificial respiration. Have someone call an ambulance.

Rewarding experience

Senior Aviator Badge awardee is deserving

One of the most rewarding experiences an aviator can undergo after graduation from flight school is the awarding of the Senior Aviator Badge. To receive the award, an aviator must have been rated for seven years, have at least 1500 hours of flight time to his credit and have a current Standard Instrument Ticket.

Recently, the Senior Aviator Badge was awarded to CWO Harry L. Davis Jr. of the 205th Assault Support Helicopter Company. CWO Davis, who claims Greenville, South Carolina as his home, began his aviation career in February, 1964, when he was selected to attend flight school. Since that time, CWO Davis has accumulated over 3,300 flight hours.

Currently, CWO Davis wears two hats for the 205th: one as the company's Standardization Instructor Pilot and the other as the company's Assistant Operations Officer. In both positions, CWO Davis puts in many long hours insuring that the missions are completed in the safest and most expedient manner.

Here's the woman

Alexandra Hay strikes an innocent-seductive pose to match the role she plays in her latest film, American International Pictures' "1,000 Convicts and a Woman." The move also stars Sandor Eles, Harry Baird and Neil Hallett.

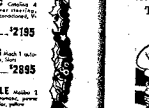
School rule set in Korea

Military and Department of Defense civilian employes stationed in Korea on unaccompanied tours, who have transported their school-age children to Korea at their own expense, may enroll them in service-operated schools there on a space-available, tuition-free basis beginning in the 1972-73 school year.

Up to now, such dependents were authorized space-required, tuition-free education.

Under Office of the Secretary of Defense and service directives, entitlement to space-required, tuition-free education in service-operated schools overseas for dependents who are not authorized transportation at government expense was discontinued after June 30, 1971. Space-required, tuition-free education then became space available, tuition-free for this category of dependents.

Due to the large number of such dependents in Korea who were affected, their entitlement of space-required education was extended through the 1972-73 school year. However, no further extensions will be allowed.



It is anticipated that school space for non-government sponsored dependents in Korea will be unavailable after school year 1971-72. Construction of about 300 new family housing units is planned by the U.S. Army in the Seoul area. The children of the families assigned to these units are eligible to attend service-operated schools on a space-required basis. They will therefore have first priority for occupying available school space.

Aliens must register

Federal Law requires each alien in the United States, on January 1 of each year, to report his address to the United States Government.

Failure to comply can mean serious penalties according to the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

To report an address, obtain an address report card at the nearest Post Office or Immigration and Naturalization Service Office.

AIR FORCE LEGEND—Itazuke Tower, its niche in Air Force history assured by Oscar Brand's bawdy ballad of the Korean War, is no more. The 62-foot, orange and white checkered control tower at Itazuke Air Base, Japan, has passed from U.S. control to Japanese operators who have taken full command of the air base and its famed tower.

All aliens outside of the United States on the first of January do not have to report their addresses at this time, but must do so within ten days of their return to the United States.

Persons stationed in Alaska, Guam, Puerto Rico, Hawaii and the Virgin Islands are considered to be in the United States for reporting purposes.

Sgt. Floyd Pellchet, a US Army Infantry Board test soldier, with a flick of the wrist activates the instant-release feature of the medium cobat.

Infantry Board tests load carrying equip.

"Too big and bulky. Too many straps. The thing is too heavy, the straps are too tight, and it hurts my back." These comments on loadcarrying equipment might have been uttered by an ancient Roman Legionnaire who carried an 80-pound load while marching on the smooth Roman Roads, or two-thousand years later, by an American Infantryman coming ashore on D-Day as he carried a much heavier load.

The Infantryman today is faced with the same sort of problem and the Army is attempting to do something about it.

The US Army Infantry Board is currently conducting an Expanded Service Test of Lightweight Loadcarrying Equipment, one item in a system of Lightweight Individual Combat Clothing and Equipment (LINCLOE) which is designed to lighten the foot soldier's load.

The Army originally developed specific requirements for LINCLOE in 1965.

The items to be developed and tested under the LINCLOE concept include a new helmet, lightweight poncho, lighter intrenching tool, body armor, combat boots, load-carrying equipment, hot and cold weather sleeping equipment, temperate zone individual clothing and CB protective equipment.

Since the requirements for LINCLOE were established, several items have been tested and accepted into the Army's inventory including a lightweight collapsible intrenching tool and a new lightweight poncho.

Maj. I. E. Stefaniw, test officer for the project elaborated in the test loadcarrying equipment.

"The concept of using a pack frame with three different size packs is the major departure form current loadcarrying equipment. This aspect, together with the numberous quick-release features of the equipment provide the soldier with options he hasn't had before. He can tailor his load as required by the situation at hand, and he can drop everything with a flick of the wrist if need be. Throughout the test emphasis will be placed on thorough evaluation of the innovations."

Testing will be conducted over a 6-month period, evaluating such aspects as troop acceptance, durability, maintainability, reliability, and human engineering characteristics.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

by Bill King

Cranberries of the traditional North American variety have close cousins in Russia, where cranberry juice is a staple with dinner and cranberry tarts accompany many meat dishes.

If the recipe calls for clarified butter, heat unsalted butter on low heat until foam. Gently pour off the clear butter. (Use the sediment for vegetables.)

A large chicken or turkey will be juicier if wings and drumsticks are tied tightly to the body. By the way, dental floss is great for the purpose!

Chocolate mousse and similar desserts should be removed from the refrigerator about ten minutes before serving to bring out the flavor.

"I'd give the gift of love..."

By Carl King

Elizabeth Hubener, fifth grade teacher at Edward A. White school, posed the question, "Can you think of a person or group of people who are in a certain circumstance and need a special gift this Christmas season? If so, what would you give them and why?"

Perhaps the sharing of these thoughtful and unselfish expressions of concern for their fellow man might help all of us to experience and enjoy the true meaning of the Christmas season.

Here are the students' suggestions:

"The gift I would give is love, and I would give it to the Prisoners of War and Missing in Action families. I would give them this gift because I think they need it at Christmas time. They really must feel terrible because they don't know if their husbands, fathers, sons are alive or not. I feel sorry for them and that is why I'd give the gift of love." Ann Osteen, daughter of Col. and Mrs. John Osteen.

"I would like to give a gift to the people in Vietnam. It is full of love and peace. I am giving it to them because I think it might stop all the fighting and killing, and maybe it will bring the countries together and so they can live in peace." Dave Harbour, son of Chap. (Maj.) and Mrs. Willis Harbour.

"A friend of mine is very sad so I will try to give her all the spirit of friendship in my heart." Cassandra Lumsey, daughter of SFC and Mrs. Gorden Lumsey.

"I would give the gift of love and company to an old woman I know, because her husband died and her daughter hardly visits her. She gets lonely. If I gave her the gift of love and company she wouldn't be lonely." Patty Carpenter, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Walter Carpenter.

"I would like to give a gift to my Aunt Betty, because she lives all alone. She used to live with my grandpa but he passed away.

"The gift I would want to give to her is a dog. I want her to have a dog because she would have someone to live with and to love, and to protect her from any snoopers." Art Zieske, son of Capt. and Mrs. Arthur Zieske.

"The gift I would want to give is to the Doctors. It is the gift of thanks because they save so many lives in the world and they are nice people." Denny, son of Maj. and Mrs. Donald Hudson.

"If I could give anything in the world to anybody, you know what I would give? Love!

"If I could give lots of people love, I would give it to them, but if I could give just to one person, I would give it to a child in Vietnam who has lost his or her parents. Children with parents already get love from their parents. A child without parents can't get love from them. So this is what I would give and why." Elizabeth Arthur, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. James Arthur.

"If I could I would give the prisoners of war their life because they may have a family, they may have a loved one and they may have been coming home. They may be sick and hungry. That is the one gift to give — Life." Cindy Neitzel, daughter of SFC and Mrs. Clarence Neitzel.

"My gift would be for the Orphan children because I know how it feels to be a Orphan because we adopted one and she never had a real birthday or real loving care. That would be my gift to give." Kevin Barber, son of Lt. Col. and Mrs. Lerry M. Barber.

"I want to give a gift to a child in the Philippines. I would like to send her a box of sweets and sweet meats.

"I think she would enjoy it very much and it would quench her hunger!" Allison, daughter of Asst. and Mrs. Thomas Hope.

"I would like to give a gift to my grandparents in Cleveland, Ohio. The gift I would like to give is love. Because they would have to fly or drive from there and I wish everything was free of charge. I almost never see them plus I love them very much." Todd Hann, son of Capt. and Mrs. Daniel Hann.

"The gift I'd like to give is intangible.

"It is love for my dog.

"He needs someone to take care of him. Paddy is the best dog I've ever had in my life. Huff was another dog of ours. I wish he could have had the gift of being happy; but Huff lost his mother too early." Roger, son of Maj. and Mrs. Peter Gray.

"The gift I would like to give is a home to a little girl or boy who is motherless and fatherless in Viet Nam. With the war going on many children are seen starving to death without their parents." Teresa Lopez, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Cesar Lopez.

"If I were to give a gift to someone it would be to the poor people of the world. I would give them money because they need it badly to buy food and clothes. And I would go around the neighborhood looking for old things and I would put them in a good will box." Alan Phillips, son of Maj. and Mrs. Alan Phillips.

"I would give my friend Dennis in Virginia a father because his got killed in a fire where he worked about a month ago." Barry Collins, son of MSgt. and Mrs. Robert V. Collins.

"I would give money to the Salvation Army. Some people don't even bother to think about other people. Even rich people don't think." Rodney Womack, son of SFC and Mrs. Joseph Womack.

"I would like to give a gift to Santa Claus because he never get any presents. He delivers all the toys. And I'd like to thank him." Elaine Hicks, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. Roland Hicks.

Elaine Hicks

"I would give my great grandmother the ability to live forever. She comes to our house once a year. She always makes us a cherry pie when she comes. She is so very, very nice also death draws very near her." Jim Wurman, son of Lt. Col. and Mrs. James W. Wurman.

"The gift I would like to give an orphan child is a good home because this person would need someone to love and be loved." Tim Williams, son of Maj. and Mrs. James D. Williams.

"One Gift to Give.

"This gift I would like to give is tangible. I would like to give clothes to the orphans. The reason why is because some orphanages can't afford clothes for the children." Donna Squier, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. Jack E. Squier.

"One Gift To Give."

"I'd like to give a gift to my uncle Kevin. He needs some love. He's always gone. Last summer we went to Massachusetts for a vacation. He came to get some gas and eat because we were having a family reunion. When we finished, he was gone. He's always on the road and we never see him. That's why I think he needs that gift." Theresa Williams, daughter of Lt. Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Williams.

"One Gift to give is love. That is what love means, to be with someone like your grandfather and mother. That's what loves means to you and me and to the whole world." John J. Andrade, son of SFC and Mrs. Rudolph H. Andrade.

"My dog has to stay out in bad weather such as rain and a really cold winter. He is scared of the lightning and thunder and most of all fire and gun shots. I'm going to build a dog house for him to sleep in." Eddie, son of SFC and Mrs. Eddie Motes

Human tree

Sgt. Tim Hopkin, 321st Engr. Gp. headquarters, wanted something a little different from the conventional Christmas cards this year, so he decided to have relatives in the California homeland see himself photographed as sort of a "human tree" with the help of a steel pot and little local flora. He plans to send color pictures of himself to friends.

'Rover Junior' can give a rough ride

The Aviation Command has begun a pre-holiday campaign to save lives on the road. "Rover Junior" was set up in front of Lawson Field Operations, Bld. 2485, to demonstrate the importance of safety belts. The demonstration machine, Rover Junior, allows the rider to experience the effects of a sudden stop from a speed of between 7 and 8 miles per hour.

The "Rover Junior" is available on unit loan from the Post Safety Office. The demonstration for the Aviation Command was supervised by the 609th Transportation Company and more than 150 individuals were taken for a ride.

Unable veterans

Veterans unable to visit Veterans Administration Headquarters in Washington to present claims for G.I. Bill benefits may do so before travel boards which visit their state VA regional offices.

Christmas Eve spoiled by booze

Have you ever spent Christmas Eve in jail? Probably not. It hasn't happened to many people. Even thinking about it is unpleasant.

Thoughts of this type were far from the mind of a man I know as he left a club on post, got into his car and headed home last Christmas Eve. He was feeling good. It wasn't just the Christmas spirit that made him feel that way. Earlier he had taken on a few drinks at a unit party and then had joined some friends for a few more at the club. He realized he shouldn't have taken those last few drinks but Christmas comes only once a year and it should be celebrated properly.

As he drove along he was thinking of the things that had to be done that afternoon. He and his wife had to pick up those "lay-away" present for the kids and of course he had some last minute shopping to do.

Halfway home those last drinks took full effect. He began to feel sleepy and that center line just wouldn't stay together anymore. No matter how hard he stared, it insisted on dividing into two lines. He became so intent on getting the line into one piece that he failed to notice a car pulling out from an intersection and despite a last minute effort, his car struck the other car.

He wanted to settle the problem immediately but the other driver insisted that the police be called. When the police came they decided he had too much to drink to do anymore driving. They didn't like to do it on Christmas Eve but they had to take him in.

By the time his wife arrived to take him home the stores were closed and the kids "lay-away" presents remained at the store for Christmas. It was too late to do any of that last minute shopping.

The wife was unhappy; the kids were unhappy and disappointed. It wasn't a happy Christmas.

It's a sad story. Christmas ruined for the entire family. What makes it more sad is that it didn't have to happen at all.

He could have had someone drive him home. There are almost always some non-drinkers around who are glad to drive for someone who has had too much to drink. If there isn't, the managers at clubs where drinks are sold on post will find or detail someone to do it or you can call the desk sergeant at the Provost Marshall Office (545-5222). The Provost Marshall says to call any time, day or night. That last solution isn't a "put on." The Military police aren't interest in how much you drink but what you do after you drink. Preventing accidents is their business.

The Christmas and New Years holiday period is traditionally a time for parties and celebrations. A lot of people drink as part of these activities. Some over-indulge. If you become one of them get someone to drive you home. Embarrassing? A little, but nothing compared to the possible results from driving under the influence. (B.K.)

WAS IT WORTH IT?

The judge says

Public often confuses vehicle regulations

USAIC LEGAL ASSISTANCE OFFICE — Most Americans own private vehicles — automobiles or motorcycles—but few Americans understand the basic laws dealing with title, tag and taxes on their vehicle. This article is meant to outline briefly the laws of Georgia in regards to proof of ownership and proper registration.

The state of Georgia requires all residents who own vehicles to register the vehicle within three days after purchase and every year thereafter by April 1. Registration must also be accomplished within three days after a person who owns a vehicle becomes a resident of Georgia. Nonresidents, excluding servicemen, who are in Georgia for 30 days must at the end of this period register their vehicle and obtain Georgia tags. Servicemen, who are not legal residents of Georgia, are exempt from registration in Georgia so long as their vehicle has valid plates from their home state. Nonresident servicemen may, however, register their vehicle in Georgia and obtain tags if they so desire. Failure to register the vehicle within the proper time results in a 25 per cent penalty plus a $1 fee.

When a vehicle carrying Georgia tags is sold, the seller must transfer the tags to the purchaser. This transfer is accomplished by following the form found on the back of the registration certificate given to the seller at the time the seller obtained the tags. The signature of the seller must be notarized. Once the transfer form on the registration certificate is properly completed, the purchaser must apply for a reregistration of the vehicle through the Tag Office and pay a fee of $1. Tags cannot be transferred from one vehicle to another and it is illegal for a person to use a tag that is registered in the name of another person.

Since 1963, almost all vehicles that are registered in the state of Georgia must also be titled in Georgia. When the vehicle is purchased new, the dealer applies for the title in the purchaser's name and the title is forwarded to the financing company, if the vehicle is financed, or to the purchaser, if the vehicle is paid for in full. At the time the original purchaser sells the vehicle, the title must be transferred to the new purchaser but if the title is not transferred, the new purchaser has no rights of ownership in the vehicle.

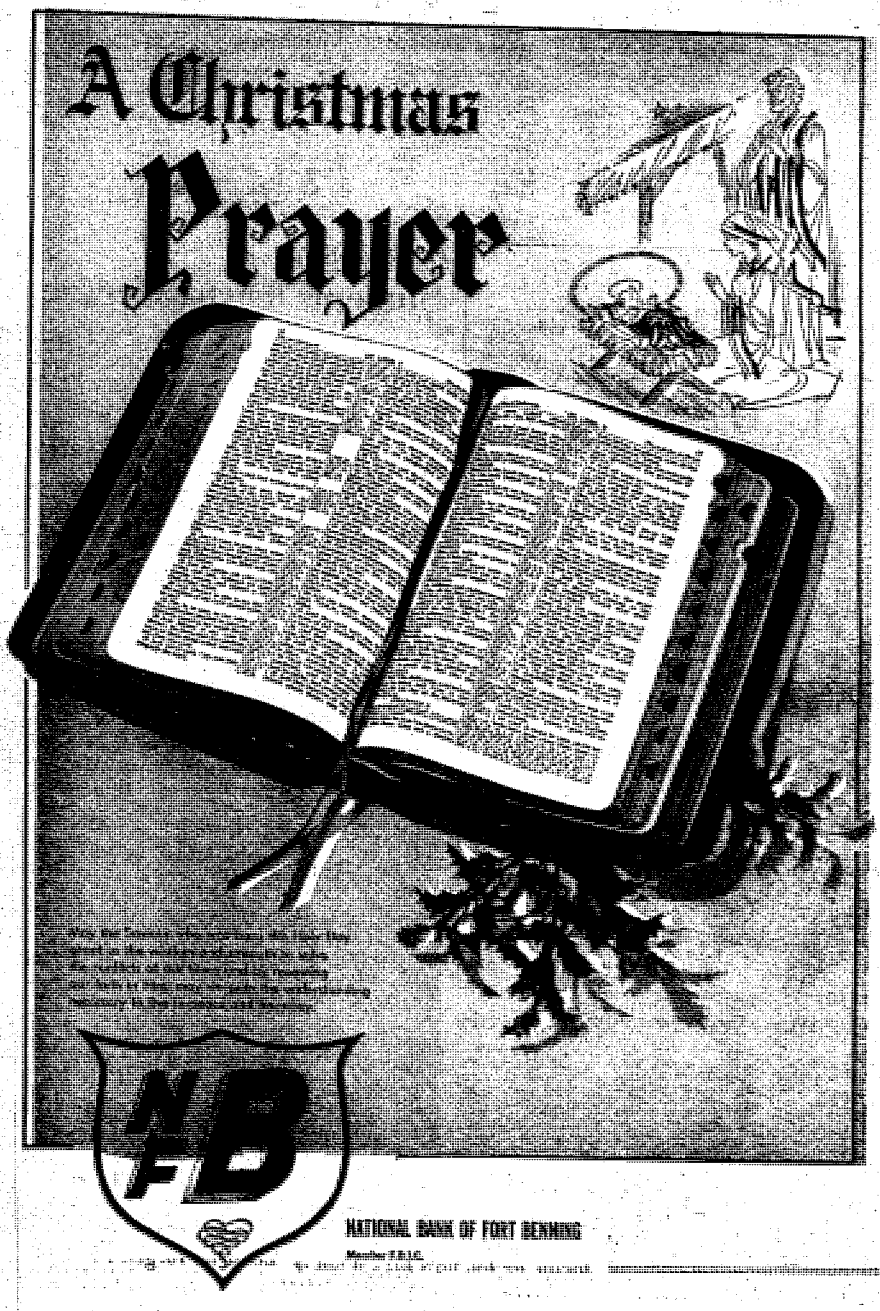
Transfer of the title is accomplished, if the vehicle is paid for in full, by the seller completing the form on the back of the title and having his signature notarized. The new purchaser must promptly apply for a new title for which a fee of $1 is charged. Each successive purchaser must obtain a title in his name otherwise he has no title to transfer when he decides to sell or trade-in the vehicle.

If the vehicle is not fully paid for, the parties to the sale should either pay off the amount owed on the vehicle so that the financing company will release their interest and give the title to the seller who can then execute the form on the back of the title, or the parties to the sale should enter into a Transfer of Interest Agreement with the concurrence of the financing company. One document executed in the Transfer of Interest Agreement is a power of attorney to the financing company to permit the company to sign the name of the original purchaser and thereby have the title changed to the new purchaser's name.

It is important that the above procedures be followed because the title from the previous owner is the only acceptable proof of ownership and unless the person has title to the vehicle, the person cannot sell the vehicle. For vehicles with model years prior to 1963, a bill of sale from the previous owner is sufficient to transfer ownership of the vehicle.

Servicemen who are not legal residents of Georgia are not required to obtain a Georgia title if the vehicle is properly titled in his home state. A serviceman may if he wishes, however, title the vehicle in Georgia.

No ticker-tape parade for these vets



By Rob McIlvaine

Amid the glitter and gaiety of the holiday season, somber thoughts sound pontifical, at best incongruous. After all, there should be at least one time each year when fun and merry-making prevail, not seriousness and the harried pace of the workaday life. Yet there's one thought — an all inclusive one, really — that should be expressed, especially now: A thought for all of those men still bound to that faraway conflict, Vietnam.

Now Vietnam has become a highly unfashionable topic; it bears bitter memories for some, broken hopes for others. And there's still a dedicated minority who still hope that the final verdict won't be "futility." Putting politics and predjudice aside (as those who serve there must), the fact remains that there are still many Americans over there. They're doing a job which appears thankless at this stage in time. For them there'll be no ticker-tape parades nor triumphal welcomes, only a shrug and from some a jeer.

Yet those of us who've been there and back remember. We can't forget the heat, the poverty, the sensuous beauty of the country; the recurring suffering, and despite all, the pride of its people. We remember from over there, how an American came to be defined by a lot more than a penchant for flag waving hysteria and bumper stickers. We remember all of this, especially now when our own thankfulness and happiness are most poignant. We wish the best to all those who must endure and not yet remember.

Least we forget. . .

More post servicemen eligible for project transition

Due to a change in the priorities of eligible personnel desiring Project Transition, more servicemen may now take part in this program.

Priorities listed by the Department of the Army are as follows:

1. Disabled officer and enlisted personnel assigned to medical holding units or hospitals and those processing for physical disability discharges or retirement.

2. Enlisted personnel ineligible to reenlist or continue on active duty other than personnel to be separated for disciplinary reasons.

3. Enlisted personnel with combat arms military occupational specialties.

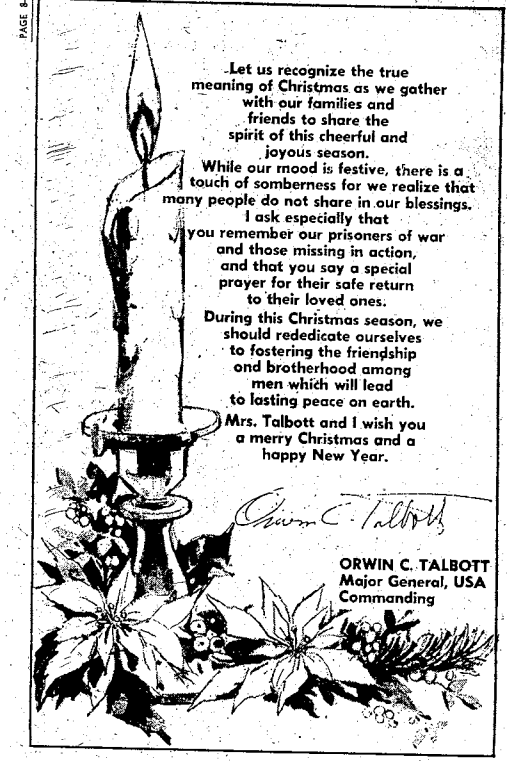
4. Enlisted personnel with previous experience and training having limited application in civilan life.

5. Personnel with a marketable skill or trade.

Length of Transition Training is authorized as follows:

1. There are no limitations on Transition training during duty hours for Priority 1 personnel.

2. Personnel in Priority 2 are eligible for up to 490 hours of on-duty training.



3. Personnel in Priorities 3 and 4 are eligible for up to 240 hours of on-duty training.

4. Personnel in Priority 5 are not eligible for on-duty training.

5. There is no limitation on off-duty participation for any personnel, so long as such participation does not interfere with primary duty.

Due to the new 179 days early release for AUS and first term enlistees with adjusted dates of January '72 (from July 72) through June 72 (from December 72), these men are now eligible for Project Transition Training. In order to schedule classes, Project transition questionaires must be completed by all servicemen with the above ETS dates. Questionaires are available at all Education Centers and should be completed as soon as possible.

Of the Project Transition training follow-up cards returned, 88 per cent of the servicemen were either employed or were attending school full time two months after separation.

Let us recognize the true meaning of Christmas as we gather with our families and friends to share the spirit of this cheerful and joyous season.

While our mood is festive, there is a touch of somberness for we realize that many people do not share in our blessings. I ask especially that you remember our prisoners of war and those missing in action, and that you say a special prayer for their safe return to their loved ones.

During this Christmas season, we should rededicate ourselves to fostering the friendship and brotherhood among men which will lead to lasting peace on earth.

Mrs. Talbott and I wish you a merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

Cheyenne exceeds requirements

The Army's AH-56 Cheyenne attack helicopter, which has now completed 1,570 hours of testing in 2,450 flights, is meeting or exceeding all of its flight and weapons performance requirements, at Yuma Proving Ground.

During the more than two years of flight and weapons testing, Cheyenne two firing, including recent night target hits at distances up to and including maximum range, have exceeded Army required accuracy by more than 20 per cent. The 30 mm cannon's accuracy has been 10 per cent better than specification requirements.

A Lockheed spokesman said that the Cheyenne's effective weapons delivery is associated with the accuracy of the aircraft's navigational system which has been 40 per cent better than required.

The Cheyenne has been flown at speeds of 266 miles per hour by Lockheed test pilots.

Army test pilots from the Army Aviation Test Activity at Edwards Air Force Base and from the Army Aviation Test Board at Ft. Rucker, Alabama, are now conducting a series of performance and weapons systems evaluation tests at the Yuma Proving Ground. Research and development acceptance test — tests in which Army evaluation is verified in aircraft carrying the appropriate set of weapons and avionics systems were initiated September 27. By the time the acceptance tests have been completed six Army test pilots will have flown the Cheyenne for approximately 200 hours.

Students learn to freeze

By Carl King

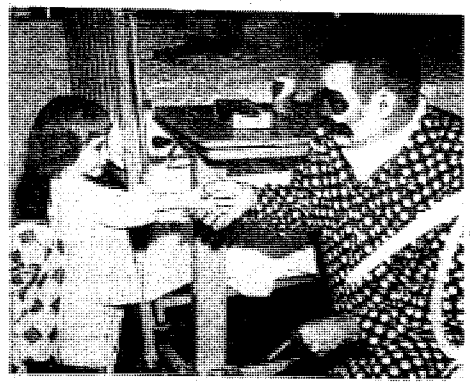
(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fifth in a series about Project Transition.)

One of the most rapidly expanding Project Transition courses at Fort Benning is the Air Conditioning and Refrigeration Course.

This course prepares a man for trouble shooting and repair of refrigeration and air conditioning systems. It includes instruction on electric circuits, motors, and installation of equipment. Servicing equipment is another facet of the course.

Increased usage of refrigeration has resulted in numerous job opportunities in this field. According to Leslie Coddington, instructor, pay is better in this field than most like civilian fields.

"This six-week course has been a great success," Coddington said. "Most of the students I get have a basic understanding of tool use before they get here. This makes my instruction easier as I can devote more time to actual on-the-job training."



"We want to prepare these fellows to continue their education once they leave here," Coddington emphasized. "The course has virtually eliminated students going to vocational school and 'dropping out.' They have a good idea of what air conditioning and refrigeration are all about when they leave here . . . and they generally enroll in vocational school only if they've developed a sincere interest in this type of work."

"In the Spring, we repaired over 250 window air conditioners," Coddington added.

SP4 Garza learns the ins and outs of air conditioning and refrigeration during on the job training.

Holiday feast is planned

Fort Benning mess halls will have enough food to literally feed an army when they offer their traditional culinary spread to Christmas Day diners this year.

Post food service officals anticipate more than 5,000 persons will be on hand to enjoy the meal, which features roast turkey and all the stuffings. As in the past, servicemen are invited to bring their dependents and guests to the dinner.

More than a ton and a half of turkey has been ordered for the occasion as well as 1,750 pounds of mashed potatoes, 1,100 pounds of candied sweet potatoes, 600 pounds of shrimp cocktail, 450 pounds of cranberry sauce, 500 pounds of chef's salad, 470 pounds of peas with mushrooms, 450 pounds of green beans, 550 pounds of waldorf salad, 2,800 pounds of fruit, 500 pounds of fruitcake, 500 pounds of assorted candy and nuts.

The Officers' Wives of the 205th Aviation Co. met in the home of Mrs. William Pepin for their monthly coffee. The Christmas theme was carried out in the decorations, centerpiece and the refreshments. Beautifully decorated cookies and candies were served.

Mrs. George Twiggs welcomed Mrs. Charles Bracken to the group. The new business consisted of appointing Mrs. Ruford Fowler as hospitality chairman and Mrs. John Breier as hospital chairman for the ladies of the 205th.

The ladies also discussed the organization of their group bowling on the first Tuesday of every month. In addition to group bowling, the ladies of the 205th are planning to meet occasionally for pinocle. Mrs. James Davis is in charge of these activities and should be contacted for more information.

Mrs. Stephen Curtin will sponsor the next monthly coffee of the wives in her home.

NCO WIVES

Members and guests of the NCO Wives' Club enjoyed a delightful day of fun and shopping on an all day trip to Atlanta, Dec. 7.

Trailways bus service chartered by the club awaited the ladies at Crain Hall NCO Club at 7 a.m. for the departure to Rich's Department Store.

The ladies were given tickets which treated them to lunch, a tea and a chance to view beautiful fashions available for purchase from the various shops throughout the store.

A box lunch and a chance to rest from lugging their heavy shopping bags filled with Christmas gifts were awaiting the ladies as they gathered in the department's luncheonette from 11:30 a.m. until 1 p.m.

After breaking for lunch, groups of ladies toured various places of interest to include "Underground Atlanta" on Old Alabama Street. Other groups visited friends while in the city. Members on the trip returned back to Rich's 6th floor Plaza Room at 3:30 p.m. for tea, refreshments, and viewing of the fashions at which time various clubs including the NCO Wives were presented door prizes by their ticket number. One of the Clubs' newest members won a prize.

Excited and tired from the day's activities, the ladies boarded the buses at 5 p.m. for the trip home. The ladies topped off the day of fun by singing on the ride home. Arriving at Fort Benning at 7 p.m., the ladies were met by their families. See you again next year, wives.

Anyone wishing information on joining the wives' club may contact any member or they may call Mrs. Henry Gilbeault, club president at 689-2991 or the membership chairman, Mrs. Betty Callachio, 545-5620. Mrs. David Aldridge is in charge of planning the clubs' programs. She may be contacted by calling 689-5563.

GOLD STAR WIVES

A Christmas cocktail party at 7 p.m., Dec. 15, was held at the Supper Club of the Main Officers' Club. Hostesses were Mary Hall, Renee Hart, Connie Bazler and Nina Radcliff. There were entertainment, substantial hors d'oeuvres, punch and a pay-as-you-go bar with happy hour prices.

Hq. 4th Student Bn., TSB sponsored a party for the kids with buddy seat rides, Santa and the works, Dec. 11 from 1 to 4:30 p.m. It was held in Bldg. 2196, behind the Chapel at Lawson Airfield.

Project chairman Angeline Cole and volunteers decorated the pediatric ward at Martin Army Hospital for Christmas.

A very successful and rewarding non-denominational Gold Star Bible study groups has been meeting ever Tuesday evening for the last two months. They will resume meetings on Tuesday, Jan. 4 at the home of Roselyn Jackson, 3743 Meadowlark Drive. (687-7434) in Holly Hills. All members are invited to attend.

DPT

On Nov. 11 the ladies of the Directorate of Plans and Training (DPT) met at the home of Mrs. Raymond H. Robinson for a "Pot Luck" luncheon. Approximately 20 ladies attended, each of them bringing one of their favorite foods. The wide range of dishes varied from delicious home baked bread to an exciting Vietnamese shrimp dish. Donations from the ACS food locker also were brought to Mrs. Robinson's home.

The luncheon concluded after Mrs. Robinson discussed the latest OWC news and the upcoming Christmas bazaar, for which some of the ladies volunteered their services.

MEDDAC

"Death At An Early Age" is the true story of a white teacher in a predominately black school in the Boston public school system. This book by Jonathan Kozol was chosen to be read and disussed by the MEDDAC Wives' Book Club at their Dec. 8 meeting. Mrs. Rocco Venuto was the hostess at her home, 101A Running Ave.

The group, including teachers and parents, was able to relate this book to their experiences with schools in all parts of the country. Some felt Mr. Kozol was harsh in his criticism of the school and his fellow teachers, whereas others felt he was justified.

The Boston School Committee had no admirers among the Book Club members. It was suggested that one reason for the popularity of "Death At An Early Age" was the publicity that one of its members was getting at the time of the book's publication. There was much discussion at the meeting as to how such a board should be chosen.

There also was discussion as to why Jonathan Kozol as well as other teachers fail to act when they see injustice in their schools.

Carson McCuller's "The Member of the Wedding" will be the January selection of the MEDDAC Wives' Book Club.

The Officers' Wives' Club of MEDDAC was delightfully entertained the Columbus High School Girls Ensemble under the direction of Cy Dietrich at their December luncheon. The sixteen voices of the group sang favorite Christmas songs and traditional carols.

The luncheon was held at the Supper Club on Dec. 10. The officers' wives of the Department of Clinics and Dental Clinic No. 2 were the hostesses. Mrs. James Grow and Mrs. Edmund Cavazos were the chairmen. The ladies were seated at round tables in the center of which were red Christmas stockings filled with candy canes and wrapped packages.

The new members welcomed by Mrs. Cesar Lopez were Mesdames Bernard Balabsn, Girard DiPietro; Sam E. English II, Alan Gordon, Larry Ritter, James Puckett and James Huff. A good-bye was said to Mrs. Philip Romans.

USAMTU

The ladies of the USAMTU enjoyed a delightful Christmas coffee at the residence of Mrs. Lanny R. Bassham. Approximately 15 ladies attended the Dec. 13 event.

Name tags of Christmas stockings filled with a candy cane were worn by each lady. Conversations were shared and two games with Christmas themes were played.

Mrs. Lanny Bassham, hostess for the evening, served coffee, punch and a cake she had cleverly fashioned in the shape of a Christmas tree. Also finger sandwiches, nuts and mints were served. A Santa mobile hung over the table.

Gifts were exchanged as the group formed a circle and sang "Jingle Bells." Everyone shared in the gaiety, glow and warmth of the Christmas spirit.

ARTILLERY COMMITTEE

"While visions of sugar plums danced in their heads..." This thought crossed many ladies' minds when they attended a Christmas tasting coffee for wives of the Artillery Committee, BBOD.

The holiday event took place Dec. 16 at the home of Mrs. Paul J. Raisig on First Division Road. Her co-hostesses were Mrs. Henry DeMerritte and Mrs. Thomas P. Ross.

Everyone brought a sampling of their favorite Christmas taste treat and the serving table was stocked with delicious things to eat: cookies, candies and hors d'oeuvres. The party ended with an exchange of gifts. These gifts were Christmas decorations, many of them handmade.

$8,000 netted in post bazaar

The Officers Wives' Club bazaar netted almost $8,000 this year, all profits going to the OWC welfare fund.

Benefiting from this fund in the past have been scholarships for Fort Benning and Columbus students, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, the Listening Eye School, the Douglas School and many organizations outside Fort Benning.

Bazaar chairman, the OWC second vice-president, was Mrs. John L. Jones. She and Mrs. Joel Bell, project chairman, began organizing the event in June and were helped by officers' wives in all units at Fort Benning. Mrs. Duane Cameron was the pricing chairman for the bazaar.

Termed "the best ever" by Mrs. Jones, the OWC ladies get a brief rest before thinking about the Christmas bazaar, 1972. To the women who so liberally donated their time to charity, a sincere "thank you" from the bazaar committee.

Flu shots

Flu shots are administered at the Immunization Clinic, Bldg. 396 each weekday except Wednesday from 8 a.m. until 11 a.m. and from 1 p.m. until 4 p.m. and on Saturdays from 9 a.m. until 11 a.m. Each person vaccinated must have his or her individual immunization record (From PHS 731).

The ladies were entertained by music from the Infantry Chorus. Selections included both popular hits and Christmas carols.

Room decorations included a Christmas tree and garlands of holly. Suspended over the stage were glittered letters spelling out "Noel". The centerpiece for the head table was a decorated basket filled with fruit. Red ornamental Christmas trees adorned the remaining tables, as did a gingerbread chapel and gumdrop tree arrangement.

Honored guests were Mrs. Orwin C. Talbott, wife of the post commander; Mrs. Paul F. Gorman, wife of the Infantry School assistant commandant; Mrs. A. G. Norris, wife of the commander of The School Brigade; Mrs. Jules C. Bailey; name tag and place card committee, Mrs. Charles McKenra and Mrs. Robert L. Seymour; programs and invitations committee, Mrs. Buron R. Shields and Mrs. James E. Schmidt; sherry table committee, Mrs. Roger C. Damo; doorprize committee; Mrs. Michael Peters; program and theme committee, Mrs. Richard J. Meadows; and hostess committee, Mrs. John C. Waltner.

The women shared memories of early childhood, Christmas weddings and Christmas seasons spent in far away places and exchanged gifts. Afterwards, refreshments were served by Mrs. G. Norman Batten and Mrs. Lonnie L. Wall.

'Talent Tree' on way

Preparations for the grand opening of "The Talent Tree" are rapidly being completed. Volnnteer workers have spent inumerable hours laying carpets, making curtains and painting. Consignment days bring not only lovely handwork but also permanent volunteer workers to staff "The Talent Tree" when open for business.

Additional consignment days are Jan. 3, 10, 17 and 24. Hours are 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on these days in Bldg. 1241 near the Thrift Shop. Operating under the same by-laws as the Thrift Shop, "The Talent Tree" will retain only 15 per cent of profits.

Make this holiday season really great — handcraft your favorite item and bring it to "The Talent Tree." Call 545-ARTS for more information.

CTC class graduates

The first class to attend the newly organized 197th Infantry Brigade Leadership Course were graduated December 10 at the 197th's Central Training Command (CTC) main classroom.

The 34 men are the first class to take the Leadership Course. The class began its training on December 6 with subsequent classes beginning each Monday thereafter. The members of the class will proceed back to their assigned units.

CTC, a branch of the 197th Inf. Bde. located at Harmony Church, is responsible for training the men.

Australian is top grad

SSgt. Thomas A. Smith, an instructor with the NCO subcommittee of the Infantry School's Platoon Tactics Committee, was named distinguished honor graduate of his 86-member ITC class this month. According to ITC records, he is the first allied EM to "turn the trick."

"I don't know how I did it, unless my Australian accent put me over," Smith said jokingly of his accomplishment. "I had no idea I was doing so well until my instructor told me in the final week of the course."

Smith, who is "on loan" from the Australian Infantry Center where he was an assistant instructor, termed ITC "very rewarding" and said it brought him up to date on developments in the School's teaching methods compared to those used in his own country.

Advertising emphasizes pay raise

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Army is conducting an extensive advertising campaign which describes the new pay scales and associated benefits which took effect Nov. 14.

The significant salary increases are expected to make the pay of first term soldiers competitive with civilian wages and attract the type of individual needed in the Army today.

However, although the basic pay is the same for all the military services, surveys of 17- 21-year-old youths show that potential volunteers believe that the Army pays less than the Air Force, Navy and Marines, in that order.

The Army advertising campaign is designed to overcome that misconception and to inform that age group of the increased pay by delivering the message to at least 60 per cent of all households in the U.S. and by reaching at least 78 per cent of the adult population.

The Army's campaign for advertising the pay raise is making use of newspaper ads in the top outdoor displays and public-service radio and television spots. It includes:

—One- and two-page newspaper ads in the top 300 population markets. The ads are being run on three successive weeks. The first week's ad is a general one saying "Your Army representative wants to talk to you about a terrific raise." The second week's ad features the new starting salary. The third week's ad describes the total benefits of Army service. Advertisements are also being run in 77 newspapers throughout the nation.

—Two-page spreads in "Life" magazine and "TV Guide."

—Classified advertising in newspapers outside the top 300 markets.

—Extensive use of posters and window displays.

—Radio and TV spots for public-service advertising delivered to all radio and TV stations nationwide.

Now the Army starts you at $268.50 a month.

And you may not even have to spend it.

$268.50 a month is just about double our old starting salary. But that's only the beginning.

Training and education. Today's Army is the world's largest school, offering training in hundreds of skills. Mechanical, medical, electronic, you name it. You can also get your high school certificate in the Army. Or work towards a college degree, often at colleges and universities near your Army post.

Free medical and dental care. No more doctors' bills. No dental bills. No charge for eye care or glasses. And no hospitalization premiums to pay.

Free meals. Army food is good food. Tasty, nutritious, varied. And you get as much as you want.

Free housing. Living quarters are comfortable and getting better all the time. And if you're married and live off post, we pay you a housing allowance to help take care of your rent.

30 days vacation. That's four weeks with pay your first year, and every year after that. And if you're stationed overseas, in Europe or Hawaii, you can take your leave there too.

Retire young. You get a lifetime retirement after 20 years, while you're still young enough to enjoy it. In civilian life, you would have to pay about $180 a month, or invest almost $43,000 to match an Army retirement.

These are some of the benefits today's Army has to offer. Earned by the kind of individual our country needs. Professional. Committed. If you'd like to serve yourself as you serve your country,

Today's Army wants to join you.

Fort Benning family shares Christmas spirit year round

By Tom Tegtmeyer

Mrs. Patrick D. Tisdale, president of the An Lac Orphanage, Inc., Saigon, Vietnam, was the guest speaker at the December luncheon meeting of the Ft. McPherson Officers' Wives Club. Mrs. Tisdale is the wife of Col. Tisdale, chief of pediatrics at Martin Army Hospital, and chairman of the An Lac Orphanage.

The Tisdales have assumed the tremendous responsibility of providing approximately two thousand dollars each month for the orphanages operating expenses. Madame Vu Thi Ngai, a 68-year-old Vietnamese who fled North Vietnam when fighting broke out between the French and the Viet Minh, is the An Lac manager. She founded An Lac, which means "Happy Place" as a result of the hungry, confused, and bewildered children, some with crippling wounds, she gathered, sheltered, and fed during her flight to Saigon.

In addition to the 400 children at An Lac, Col. and Mrs. Tisdale, the former Betty Moul of Pittsburgh, Pa., have eight children. The Tisdales, who were married only two and one half years ago, met while both were doing volunteer work at An Lac. Col. Tisdale, a widower, already had five sons, Patrick, Sean, James, Neil, and Danny (adopted in Hawaii), ranging in age from 7 to 14. During the past eighteen months, the Tisdales have adopted three Vietnamese girls from An Lac — Lien Maria, 5, Mai Lara, 2; and Thuvan, 6 months, who arrived from Vietnam on Dec. 11, 1971.

Mrs. Tisdale used slides to illustrate her story of An Lac Orphanage. She says her story is a story of children which goes back to 1959 when she was personal secretary to Senator Jacob K. Javits in New York. She became inspired by a book written by the late Dr. Tom Dooley, a young Naval officer who was helping the people, especially orphans, in Southeast Asia. She met Dr. Dooley in 1959 while he was a patient in Memorial Hospital in New York City and volunteered to help him answer his voluminous correspondence. She was influenced by his strong desire to help the people in Southeast Asia. After his death at the age of 34, in 1961, she made her first trip to the areas where he had worked. She saved money from her job to pay for trips there each year after that and spent her vacations working in the orphanages, especially An Lac. It was on one of these trips that she met Dr. Tisdale, who was spending his spare time caring for the sick and wounded at An Lac. On these trips Mrs. Tisdale not only assisted the doctor in caring for the children, but taught them to speak English and to sing such American songs as "Jingle Bells."

Even though the Tisdales are busy with their large family, they find time to collect monies, clothing, food, and miscellaneous items for An Lac. Everything they receive is sent directly to the orphanage. Mrs. Tisdale spends much of her time speaking to groups and has appeared on such television programs as "The Today Show." She says she feels strongly about the many needs of the children and receives many donations by telling their story. In her attempts to keep the orphanage operational, she stated she has become quite a "scrounger." She says that with the withdrawal of troops from Vietnam, the number of military personnel volunteering to assist at An Lac has also decreased. Many units have adopted An Lac and worked there in their spare time as well as making monetary contributions.

After hearing about Mrs. Tisdale's work, the Atlanta Council of Camp Fire Girls began collecting items for the orphanage. They presented 16 boxes of baby shirts, powdered milk, clothing, diapers, and a sewing machine to Mrs. Tisdale at the Ft. McPherson luncheon.

Mrs. Tisdale is asking for Betty Crocker coupons and S and H Green Stamps to purchase a stove and refrigerator for the orphanage. Green Stamps were used to purchase a jeep last year. Donations to An Lac can be sent to Col. and Mrs. Tisdale at Box 1977, Fort Benning, Ga.

Remember when Mom and Dad did this?

By Keith Harmon

Now it's two days before Christmas and the headaches of shopping are probably over for you, for another year at least. But lest you're inclined to forget, photographer Ray Bassett recorded some of the dilemmas of the greatest time of year.

What headaches, you ask? You know.

—Like the time you bought an eight-foot tree and tried to fit it into your foreign economy car.

—Or the time you abandoned your shyness and got up enough nerve to shop for a sexy negligee, only to be freightened away when the female clerk behind the counter asked if you needed help.

—Or the time you bought a sweater for your girl friend or wife, and had to point to a woman shopper because you didn't know what size to buy.

—Or the frustration of shopping for the person who already has everything, remembering how last year your gift was the first to be exchanged for something else.

Alas, and alack, it's all over this year, thank goodness. And things may never really be as bad as they seemed. After all, it's the thought that counts anyway. Isn't it? Merry Christmas.

There goes Santa

Easy come, easy go.

Oh! My aching back

—Gee, I thought it would fit.

In a ceremony held recently at Fort Benning, Mrs. Marie Hagan of 985 2D St., Monticello, Fla., accepted the Bronze Star Medal with "V" device and second Oak Leaf Cluster, the Air Medal and the Purple Heart, awarded posthumously to her brother, Sgt. Richard Russ Jr.

Col. Malcolm R. Baer, Fort Benning adjutant general, presented the awards to Mrs. Hagan Nov. 29.

Russ was awarded the Bronze Star Medal with "V" device for distinguishing himself by "Exceptionally valorous actions" while serving with Co. B, 1st Bn., 6th Inf., 3rd Inf. Div. as a rifleman in the Republic of Vietnam.

The citation read, in part,

On Sept. 2, 1971, Sgt. Russ was leading his unit to their night defensive position, when they came under intense enemy fire. Reacting immediately and with complete disregard for his own personal safety, Sgt. Russ placed a devastating volume of suppressive fire on the aggressor's position allowing the remainder of his unit to gain protective cover.

During this action Sgt. Russ was fatally wounded.

The Bronze Star Medal, first Oak Leaf Cluster was awarded to Russ for distinguished service with the 23rd Division from Nov. 19 to Sept. 2, 1971.

The Air Medal was awarded posthumously to Russ for ". . . meritorious achievement while participating in aerial flight."

During the period from Dec. 3, 1970, to Aug. 10, 1971, Russ participated in more than 25 aerial missions over hostile territory in support of counterinsurgency operations.

Russ was awarded the Purple Heart for wounds received in action against an armed enemy force.

Prior to his death, Russ had been awarded the Army Commendation Medal, the National Defense Service Medal, the Vietnam Service Medal, the Vietnam Campaign Medal, the Combat Infantryman Badge, the Expert Badge with automatic rifle and pistol bars, the Sharpshooter's Badge with machine gun bar, and the Marksman Badge with grenade-launcher bar.

Synopsis

FOOLS' PARADISE (Rated GP) — Three inmates of a West Virginia prison — a killer who served 40 years, a bank robber and a young convict — are released in 1935. The killer, played by James Stewart, has a check for $25,000 with which he plans to open a store with his two friends. With dynamite strapped to his chest, Stewart walks into the bank at Glory, W. Va., and threatens to blow it up if David Huddleston, the crooked town banker, doesn't cash the check. In the meantime, George Kennedy, a sadistic prison guard, pursues the three ex-convicts, scheming to get the check.

THE GREAT WHITE HOPE (Rated GP) — From the prize-winning play, James Earl Jones stars as Jack Jefferson, the world's first black heavyweight boxing champion, who flaunts both his wealth and his white mistress to the fury of the Establishment. After a futile attempt to defeat contender Jefferson in the title bout, he is convicted unjustly on a Mann Act charge and flees the country while free on appeal.

DEEP END (Rated R) — Fifteen year old John Moulder Brown quits school to take a job as mens' attendant at a public bath house in London. The manager assigns 23 year old Jane Asher, the ladies' attendant, to show the youth his duties. She advises him they can switch sections to earn extra tips. Before long, John falls deliriously in love with Jane and follows the girl and her fiance throughout the city to skin flicks and discotheques.

RIO LOBO (Rated G) — Big John Wayne heads the cast as a tough, brawling ex-Civil War officer who frees a Texas town of carpetbaggers and settles an old score with a wartime informer. All the usual ingredients of a Wayne picture — lots of hard riding, a train robbery, gun and fist fights — are part of the script.

THE HELLSTROM CHRONICLE (Rated G) — One can say that there are a few "bugs" in this movie as it is a photographic spectacle on the insect world. African driver ants — ten million strong — are filmed eating alive lizards in their path, forming bridges with their own bodies and sacrificing themselves for the rest of the colony. Other sequences show a caterpillar changing into a butterfly, a black widow spider spinning its web, a locust invasion and mayflies, whose life cycle is only a few hours, in courtship.

'Bond of Frontier' stars in Italian-made western

In what is being hailed as the fastest-moving and most action-packed of Italian produced westerns, that 19th Century James Bond of the American plains, Lee Van Cleef, returns to the screen with "Sabata," a stirring tale of frontier terrorists and how they were brought to justice. The film comes to the main post Theatre as a release from United Artists.

"Sabata" was produced by Alberto Grimaldi, famous for the lavishness and eye appeal of his pictures, the latest of which was "Fellini Satyricon." Its director was Frank Kramer, often referred to as "the George Simenon of Motion Pictures," a veteran of 28 major motion picture productions and the screenwriter of twice as many.

There's always a girl in the case and in "Sabata" she is the shapely Linda Veras. Her emergence from a bathtub in the film with little more than soapsuds on her is described as — well, as a highly artistic triumph. Sharing the screen with Van Cleef and Miss Veras is William Berger, an American actor who scored in the Broadway stage production of "Who's Afraid of Virginia Wolff?"

"Sabata" was filmed on the plains of Spain which are similar to those of the Dakotas.

Re-created town to close Dec. 24

Sounding out Christmas

Alan Barr

The "Forever Forward" combo performs during a 197th Infantry Brigade Christmas party at the unit Hideaway Club. Partygoers also were treated to refreshments and the dancing of "go-go girls" from a local night club.

Christmas reminder posted

"From our past experience, it is extremely difficult to get people to think about safety during the holiday period because of the great number of concurrent activities. People are preoccupied with many other aspects of the holiday season and competition from other sources is keen," said a spokesman for the Fort Benning Safety Office.

Interest in safety during this season declines, but the accidents do not.

No family wants a holiday marred by needless accidental injury or death. Even the most safety-conscious families are temporarily off-guard during the holiday periods when general hustle and confusion are always present.

Christmas trees, decorations, the increase in food preparation, as well as cold weather and other factors result in an increased number of hazards in and around the home. Added to these hazards are the excitement, confusion and other holiday conditions that could easily contribute to an accident. Careful planning for all holiday periods, can help eliminate some hazards, will reduce confusion, last minute rushing, strained emotions, and will make for a safer house.

It is never too late to inject interest from the standpoint of safety and accident prevention into areas such as safe toys, fire resistant decorations, safe trees, and preparation of food. Families should be reminded that the types of accidents related to holidays are not always unusual ones but such common ones as increased number of falls and slips, fires, poisoning, suffocations and firearm accidents.

There is the ever present problem of the motor vehicle, and this problem is greatly increased over the holiday period. Much has been said in this area in the past, but much more needs to be said, and there will be no let up by safety personnel until such accidents no longer happen.

"We are in the midst of one of the most exciting, in fact probably the most exciting season of the year," the safety officer continued. For children, it's a time for fun and unparalleled joy. The holiday season for adults means baking and preparing foods, last minute shopping trips, gatherings of family and friends, tree trimming, wrapping of packages and a constant state of busy and frantic preparations.

Oil rig sets stage for Bond finale

A 20,000-square-foot offshore oil rig takes its place alongside an Alpine peak, the interior of a Japanese volcano, Fort Knox and several Caribbean isles as the latest spectacular setting for a fight-to-the finish between British agent James Bond and his enemies.

The rig, located four miles off the Southern California coast at Oceanside, figures in the climactic scenes of "Diamonds Are Forever," once again starring Sean Connery as 007. The picture will open Dec. 25 at the Beverly Theatre.

Similar in detail to the other rigs that line the California coast, the massive structure included several extras. Such as plush dressing rooms for films stars Connery, Jill St. John (Seen as Tiffany Case), Charles Grey, (the villain, Blofeld), director Guy Hamilton and other key members of the crew. Furthermore, it served as a landing platform for the helicopters and water taxis used to take cast and crew back and forth to the mainland.

197th rebuilds shoreline

By William Bala

Nine men of the 72nd Engineer Co., 197th Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade went to Tampa, Fla. November 30 to improve a recreation area at a local Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) post.

2Lt. Dale D. Kays, officer-in-charge of the project, stated that "the VFW post is positioned on a peninsula." The men rebuilt the area around the post by extending the shoreline approximately 40 yards. While rebuilding the shoreline the men encountered an old rotten barge. They took the barge and placed it under the structure of the post to add more of a foundation. The foundation had to be built up six feet and was extended 20 feet. This was done to keep the water from rotting the original foundation and destroying the building.

McDill AFB, located near Tampa, Fla., helped the 72nd Engineer Co. by furnishing a grater and a crane to edge and smooth out the rebuilt shoreline. The 72nd Engineer Co. was the only unit in the area that provided man-power for the reconstruction of the VFW post.

Sp4 Roger V. Swesey was one of the few men that was kept busy. He operated not only the front end loader, furnished by the 72nd Engineer Co., but also the Air Force grater. Kays mentioned that Swesey was "very industrious and eager to do the job efficiently."

After leaving Tampa, Fla. the men went to Gainesville, Ga., and helped the Boy Scouts of the locality. The bulldozer was unloaded and used to remove a concrete block that was impossible for the boys to remove. The area was cleared of all debris and the area is now used as a recreation area for the boy scouts and the public.

Two teams hold to 1st place

For many years now, the argument as to which major college athletic conference has the best brand of football has continued. I think the answer can be found if you look at a conference as a whole and not just considering one or two teams.

For the fourth year in a row, the Southeastern Conference led the major college conferences in winning interconference games. In addition the SEC established a new major conference record by winning 37 while only losing 7 games with teams from other conferences. Yes, other conferences turn out strong football teams, but in recent years the SEC football teams have more less set the pace in overall strength.

For example, this year the SEC has six of its ten teams in the Top 20 and four of these are in the top major post-season bowls which is also more than any other conference. In these six bowl games, SEC teams will be facing opponents from three other conferences and one independent team. Also in these bowl games, SEC teams will clash head-on three times with foes from the Big Eight Conference — Alabama against Nebraska in the Orange Bowl, Auburn verses Oklahoma in the Sugar Bowl, and LSU meets Iowa St. in the Sun Bowl.

In the first weekend of bowl action, the SEC's record is perfect with two wins in two outings.

SEC football teams produce not only an exciting brand of football but a variety as well. From the high powered rushing offenses of Alabama and Georgia, to the explosive passing game of Auburn to the tough defensive squads of LSU and Tennessee, SEC teams are the most sought after teams of any conference for post season action.

So the arguments go on between supporters of the different conferences. Hopefully, in the future there will be much more inter-conference play. But for certain, the SEC consistently turns out good football teams and this year it can not be denied that the SEC has more than adequately proven its strength over other conferences.

Pro Playoffs

Well, the NFL playoff slots have finally been filled, but not without excitement and controversy. It took the entire 14 game schedule to do it, but the San Francisco 49's did it for the second year in a row. The Forty-Niners defeated the Detroit Lions to clinch the Western Division title of the NFC and they will go against the Washington Redskins this Sunday. The winner of this game will face the winner of the Dallas-Minnesota game for the National Conference championship and a spot in the Super Bowl.

In the controversy column, the Baltimore Colts lost their final game to the Patriots to give the Eastern Division title to the Miami Dolphins. Baltimore, who clinched a playoff berth last week, has been charged with deliberately losing to New England. The loss means that the Colts will now face the Cleveland Browns in their first playoff game instead of the Kansas City Chiefs. As an avid sports fan, it is hard for me to believe that any athletic team could purposely blow a game. However, in view of the fact that the Colts had Oakland and Miami in back to back games and Baltimore was assured of a playoff spot, the Colts were more than likely guilty of a mental letdown.

The Colts have had a good year. Their defense has performed superbly and their offense under Johnny Unitas has had flashes of the Colts of the early 1960s.

In the National Conference, Dallas has been playing championship ball for the past seven or eight weeks. The offense has jelled with Roger Staubach at the controls and Calvin Hill and Duane Thomas in the backfield. As usual, the Dallas defense is tough.

This year's pro playoffs are tough and any of the eight teams participating are capable of going all the way. However, it would not be difficult to visualize a rematch between the Colts and Cowboys in the Super Bowl.

Co. C, 43rd Engr. Bn. and the 139th MP Co. are the only two remaining in first place in the 93ist Engr. Gp. company-level basketball league.

Two were dropped from the leading slots in last week's action. The 586th Lt. Maint. Co. lost its first game of the season to the 139th MP Co., 65-48, and now clings to a 3-1 record. That record gives the maintenance company solid possession of second place.

The other first place team, the 618th Ord. Co., dropped all the way to a tie for fourth place by losing two games last week. The first loss came at the hands of 18th Repl. Det., 38-30, and the second defeat came from struggling HHC, 931st, by a score of 47-27.

Ray Emmett

Co. C and the 139th still remain undefeated, however, with both teams sharing the first place position with four wins apiece.

In other action at Kimbro Gym, Co. A, 43rd, downed HHC, 931st, on Dec. 13th by a landslide, 50-29. That was HHC's third loss against one victory, and Co. A's record is now even at 2-2.

On Dec. 14, Co. C and Co. D of the 43rd battled each other, with C Co. reigning victorious, 50-24. The 586th Engr. Co. squeezed past Co. B, 43rd, 31-29, after trailing at half-time 17-12.

The 598th Lt. Maint. Co. picked up another uncontested win in the last contest of Dec. 14 when Co. C, 56th S and S Bn., failed to show for its scheduled game. C-56th now joins four others teams in the bottom ranks in the league standings all with 1-3 records. They are HHC, 931st; B and D Companies, 43rd; and the 533rd Trans. Co.

On Dec. 15, the 533rd dropped a close game with 18th Repl. Det., 35-28. At the midway point, the transportation company led, 17-16, but could not hold onto its lead in the final stanza.

Later that night the 139th romped over Co. A, 43rd, 71-28, and HHC, 931st, picked up its first win over the 608th Ord. Co., 47-27.

As of Dec. 17, there are 8,019 active participants in the "Run For Your Life" Program. Of these, 117 have completed 500 miles, 169 have completed 400 miles, 228 have completed 300 miles, 327 have completed 200 miles, 745 have completed 100 miles, 3,873 have completed 50 miles, 37 have completed 500 miles, and 12 have completed 1,000 miles of running.

ROD AND GUN CLUB Notes

By Bill Kloeb

Hunters took 30 doe in the Chattahoochee County portion of the reservation last Saturday and Sunday, the first two days of the doe hunting season. The total deer count for the entire reservation for the period Dec. 13-19 was 44. This brings the annual harvest to 379 for the current season.

The doe season will open Dec. 25 in the Muscogee County and the Alabama portion of the reservation. The season for all deer will close on the Georgia portion of the reservation on Jan. 1. The doe season will close Jan. 1 in the Alabama portion of the reservation and the season for bucks will end Jan. 15. Awards will be made to winners of the Rod and Gun Deer Hunting Contest at the club on Jan. 21. Ridley Bell, host of the Sportsmans Lodge television program aired by WRBL-TV-3 each Saturday afternoon, will make the presentations.

There were no trophy deer registered in the hunting contest last week and the leaders look to be more secure in their top places as each week goes by without changes in the standings.

Lt Col. Brandt Grubbs has the heaviest deer weighing 176-pounds. The 161 and three quarter pound entry of John E. Smith holds down second place.

SSgt. Charles Wallace and Ronnie Cavins have each registered bucks with 10 countable antler points. Ties in the antler contest are broken by the weight of the deer. This puts Wallace in first place with his 160-pound entry. The deer brought in by Cavins weighed 146-pounds.

The Rod and Gun Club will award two Remington Model 1100 Automatic Shotguns and two Mossberg Sluggons to members who take trophy deer during the current hunting season. The member who registers the heaviest deer and the hunter who registers the deer with the most number of antler points will each receive a Remington gun. Second place winners in each category will receive one of the Mossberg guns. A third Remington will be given to some member who registers a deer kill at the club but does not win one of the other prizes.

Small Game Hunting Contest

Every hunter isn't a deer hunter. Some are strictly small game hunters. The Rod and Gun Club will hold a hunting contest for these hunters during February.

Nine prizes worth a total of about $500 will be awarded. To qualify for one of these prizes hunters must register 12 quail, 6 rabbits or 8 squirrels at the club during the month of February. All the animals need not be turned in on the same day.

Three prizes will be awarded for each type animal. First prize will be a Remington Model 870 Pump Action Shotgun. Second prize 10 boxes of shotgun shells of any type specified by the winner and the third prize will be a $25 Gift Certificate for merchandise.

Additional details on the hunting contests may be obtained at the Rod and Gun Club.

Uncooperative Weather

The unusually warm weather seems to have messed up the normal habits of game so far this year. Quail hunters are not very happy with their season. The first few days it was too dry, then too windy. After some rain that would have brought the birds out of the bottoms it turned warm and they apparently decided to stay put for a while. There are plenty of birds this year but without a good cold spell along with some wet weather they may stay in the bottoms during the entire season.

So far the last part of the two-state dove season have failed to produce many birds. Some say they have moved farther south already and others say the warm weather has kept them up north. The dove hunters aren't very happy but this isn't the first year. Previous years were pretty bad too.

Rabbit hunters are unhappy because they can't use dogs until the deer season is finished. There are plenty of squirrels on the reservation but they all seem to have collected in the main post area where they can't be hunted.

One group of hunters seems to be pretty well satisfied with things. There are plenty of migratory duck coming through and the local woodduck population has increased considerably due to the nesting places the Post Fish and Wildlife unit has made available.

Doughboys conquer Eagles twice to move into second place tie

The Fort Benning Doughboy Basketball Team handed the Ft. Campbell Eagles two defeats in 3rd Army League games held at Briant Wells Field House last weekend.

The Doughboys won the first game played on Friday evening by the score of 104 to 89 and the second game played Saturday afternoon by 92 to 86.

In the first game the Doughboys had five players who scored in double figures. John Black, 197th Brigade scored 20 points, Dick Simmons, The School Brigade and Dallas Miller, 93ist Engineers each scored 19 points. Jim Sturdevant, Medical Department Activities had 14 points and Bill Russell of the 93ist had 13.

Black was also the leading scorer for Fort Benning in the Saturday game. He accounted for 22 points. Other leading scorers for the Doughboys were Tarrants with 21, Russell with 14, Sturdevant with 14 and Simmons with 12 points.

The wins placed the Doughboys in a tie for second place in the Western Division of the 3rd Army League. Benning and the Redstone Arsenal team now have three wins and three losses; Campbell and Ft. McClellan are in a tie for first place with four wins and two losses.

The games last weekend were the last to be played by the Doughboys this year. The next series will be played here against Ft. McClellan on Jan. 7 and 8.

Several places have become open on the post basketball team. Interested players may obtain additional information from SSgt. Emmon at 545-4303.

TSB leads post basketball league at holiday break

The 93ist Engr. Gp. basketball team came from behind in the closing moments of play to whip Hq's Cmd., 82-71, Dec. 13 at Briant Wells Field House.

Trailing most of the game, the Engineers stunned Hq's Cmd. with a full court press with just eight minutes to play. The 93ist five quickly rattled their opponents with the man-to-man press, and proceeded to pick away at the Hq's Cmd. lead. The Engineers outscored Hq's Cmd. 18-6 in the last four minutes of play.

Coach Dallas Miller praised his squad for never quitting, as they trailed most of the game. At halftime, Hq's Cmd. led 46-42.

Scoring for the Engineers was, as usual, big Gun Miller who dumped in a sizzling 29 points, his high for this season. Also in double figures, Dwight Moon and Jerry Dennison with 12 apiece and Espanolla Brooks with 11. Contributing to 93ist offensive attack was Denny Walton, Tony Protho and Elbert Tarrants.

The Post-wide Baksetball League had four games in two nights at the Briant Wells Field House before its two week Christmas vacation, which ends on Jan 2.

On Dec. 15, the 197th Inf. Bde. brought its record to 4 wins and 2 losses with 97-92 win over the 93ist Engr. Gp. The victory enabled the 197th to overtake MEDDAC for second place. High scorer for the game was John Black of the 197th with his second 31 point performance in a row.

Black got 27 points in the first half with David Weaver's 20 point half sparking the 197th to come back from a 49-47 halftime deficit. Weaver had 26 points on the night, his highest performance of the season.

In an almost unexpectedly tough game, once beaten TSB won over winless HQ Cmd, 80-78.

Dec. 16, was the final night of action before the holiday break. The first game was tightly contested battle between the 93ist and MEDDAC, with the Engineers squeezing out a 95-93 victory.

The second game was only close for the firs period, the 197th took a 47-25 lead in at halftime over HQ Cmd. and went on to win 82-39.

The high scorer was HQ Cmd's Robinson with 23 Cmd's George Robinson with 23 points. John Black, who leads the 197th in scoring with a 24 poiots per game average, only had 7 points in the first half of the game, and was rested in the second half because of the large lead.

The standings thus far have TSB in first place with 1 loss, which came as a resul of a forfeit to the 197th because it had an ineligible player playing in the Dec. 8 game at Briant Wells Field House. TSB had won that game 34-79

The Florida portion of the Braves' Spring Training schedule has been announced and includes 16 games in the Sunshine State, eight of them at home in West Palm Beach, and it ends three weeks later on March 30, against Montreal at West Palm Beach.

Fourteen of the Braves' spring games will be played at West Palm Beach's Municipal Stadium with the remaining six on the road. The road games include trips to Vero Beach, Ft. Lauderdale, Pompano Beach, Cocoa, Miami and Orlando.

The most frequent opponent on the Florida schedule is Montreal, which shares the West Palm Beach training facilities with Atlanta. The Braves and Expos play five times, while the Braves also play Dallas-Ft. Worth four times, the Dodgers, Yankees, Expos and Orioles twice, and the New York Mets one time.

Nine of the Spring Training games in Florida will be on weekends and the remaining 11 on weekdays.

There are 16 day games and four night games with all day games starting at 1:30 p.m. and night games at 8 p.m.

In addition to the Florida portion of the Spring Training Schedule, the Braves will also play several games in a barnstorming tour prior to the start of the regular season. These games will be announced at a later date.

The Braves finished last year's Spring Training play with a 15-11 record, second best in the National League's Western Division and fifth best in the major leagues.

How To Kill A Tank

Female dentists in Army scarce as hen's teeth

FT. DIX, N.J. — Capt. Mary Zelanis puts her arms around more guys in a week than most girls do in a year.

Assigned to Ft. Dix, N.J., Dr. Zelanis is one of the two female dentists presently on active duty in the U.S. Army.

The 24-year-old native of Paterson, N.J., received her Doctor of Dental Medicine degree from the University of Louisville, Ky., in May.

She decided to enter the Army to gain experience and continue her education in the dental field. "I want to be a good dentist and you can only get so much out of four years of dental school," she explained.

"Indirectly, I've been involved with the military for a little more than seven years. I was a United Services Organization (USO) hostess in Louisville and I attended a lot of dances at the Officers Candidate School at Ft. Knox, Ky. This, along with my desire to meet people, aided in making up my mind on whether to enter the Army or not."

Dr. Zelanis came on duty in September and was commissioned as a captain.

In contrast to a few disadvantages, Dr. Zelanis has one advantage over her male counterparts. "I don't have to ask my patients to open their mouths. They are so shocked with disbelief, they just sit there and stare with their mouths open," she said. "After I am finished, they get out of the chair in that same daze, say "Thank you' and walk out. During the whole time they seem as though they want to ask me if I'm really a dentist, but they never do."

Scientists mark 25th year of Space Age

The 25th anniversary of the scientific "Space Age" was quietly reached this Fall without any fanfare.

Although several groups had been organized at a number of institutions earlier in 1946 to develop programs for upper air research with the aid of captured German V-2 rockets, a handful of scientists from the Naval Research Laboratory became the first to obtain astroomical observations by launching a physical instruemnt beyond the atmosphere on October 10th of that year.

They photographed the far ultraviolet spectrum of the sun on this historic date, thus raising the hopes of all space scientists for a new era of outer space investigations. The successful flight marked the beginning of a continuing program of solar studies that eventually unfolded the entire spectrum to its x-ray limit with high resolution.

Dr. Herbert Friedman, Chief Scientists at NRL's Space Science Division, E. O. Hurlburt Center, said: "Quasars, pulsars, and x-ray sources were hardly dreamed of a few years ago. Every range of the spectrum that we have searched has brought unexpected and fascinating surprises. . .and the potential has barely been scratched."

NCOES courses offer training for careerists

WASHINGTON — The Noncommissioned Officer Education System (NCOES) is a three-level education program of professional development training for career noncommissioned officers.

Consisting of three progressive levels known as basic, advanced and senior, the program is patterned after Army officer career-development training.

Basic-level courses in 54 military occupational specialities are programmed for NCOES in fiscal year 1972. The basic-level courses prepare soldiers in grades E4 and E5 for duties at the four-skill level (E5, E6, E7.)

Upon approval from their commanders, all E4s and E5s are eligible to attend basic courses in their career fields. The average basic-level course lasts 12 weeks.

Promotion points are earned by graduates, and, if applicable, the top graduate of each class is promoted to E5.

Advanced-level courses will begin during the third quarter of fiscal year 1972. The advanced-level course provides professional NCO development for soldiers in grades E6 and E7 in preparation for duties at the five skill level (E8 and E9).

The senior level of the NCOES is still only in planning. It is intended to train selection NCOs for key assignments at division and higher headquarters, or a joint or combined command.

Prerequisites for NCOES courses may be found in CONARC course announcements.

VA psychologist comments on schizophrenia

The common factor in schizophrenia appears to be a peculiar way of taking in and understanding — or misunderstanding — information, a Veterans Administration psychologist has reported.

This "specific process of receiving and encoding information, referred to as an input deficit," also is shared by many mentally healthy but "schizotypical" people, Roy M. Hamlin, Ph. D., of the Danville, Ill., VA hospital said.

"This may snowball, leading to general intellectual deficit, to social breakdown, and to psychosis," he explained.

Dr. Hamlin said the finding, from his series of studies underway since 1949, has great implications oth for treatment of schizophrenic patients and education of "schizotypical" children.

"We may need to reshape and change our methods of therapy and education and adapt techniques, material, and use of teaching machines to new concepts in visual and auditory perception," he said.

Recovery in chronic schizophrenics and maintenence of mental health in schizotypical children depend on strengthening the unusual "symbol system" processes through which these people receive information, according to Dr. Hamlin.

"They have difficulty processing messages when two or more symbol systems are involved," he said.

"They can handle words or numbers, but not both at once. They can understand speech or facial expressions, but only one at a time. They can comprehend the literal or the metaphorical, but not simultaneously."

Dr. Hamlin said the schizotypical person who does not develop schizophrenia apparently has adapted by learning to handle simultaneous messages involving more than one symbol system, primarily by relying on a single system.

"He becomes expert in one symbol system and reduces all observations to his favorite system," Dr. Hamlin explained.

"For example, he may become expert in mathematics and translate any game he watches into a mathematical theory of games."

According to Dr. Hamlin, the paranoid schizophrenic person may have resolved his input deficit by "handling everything he observes in terms of a well-practiced system of delusions.

In some non-psychotic schizotypes, however, their individual style of information processing may be an asset. Dr. Hamlin observed.

"Much of the time, by long-established habit, these people are thinking in other categories,' a phrase that summarizes one definition of creativity," he said.

Hunters reminded of game laws

American sportsmen visiting Canada or Mexico, or elsewhere abroad to hunt or fish must comply with the game laws of the host country as well as with applicable U.S. laws, Commissioner of Customs Myles J. Ambrose has reminded hunters and fishermen.

Wildlife taken or killed in violations of the laws of the native country, including state and provincial regulations, is prohibited entry into the United States. Certain game may be lawfully exported from Mexico or Canada only under permits issued by the host government.

In addition, the Commissioner cautioned that U.S. law prohibits entry of specimens of certain endangered species of fish and wildlife native to Mexico or Canada, including the Mexican grizzly bear, Sonoran pronghorn and Central American tapir, the Canadian Northern kit fox, Black footed ferret, and wood bison, as well as some species of Mexican and Candian wild birds, amphibians, and reptiles. U.S. law also makes unlawful the importation of any specimen of the bald or golden eagle.

Lawfully taken Canadian or Mexican game or game trophies may enter the United States in legal quantities at any Customs port of entry when the individual declarant submits Customs Form 3315, "Declaration for Free Entry of Game Animals or Birds Killed by U.S. Residents". Game animals (including birds and fish) killed abroad and imported for non-commercial purposes are duty free.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

A pinch means as much of a dry ingredient—herbs, spices or salt—as can be held between the thumb and forefinger.

Stuff large pitted olives with cheese and wrap each in a piece of bacon. Secure with toothpicks and broil until bacon sizzles. Nice with cocktails.

When you cut up French or Italian bread for cheese, fondue dipping, make sure each piece has a crust.

Leftover turkey? Alternate layers of stuffing and sliced turkey in a casserole, adding gravy thinned with canned broth if necessary. Bake in a moderate oven until hot, and serve with tossed greens and cranberry sauce.

On New Year's morning in Japan, the family assembles to drink a cup of wine to honor departed ancestors, whose spirits are said to revisit the house for the occasion.

In some cases...

In case you've noticed that some of the "E-4 and Above" signs have changed in Columbus recently, don't get excited. Credit policies haven't really changed due to the recent pay raise, businessmen report, but rather the billboards have simply been changed to read "E-3 and Above." Several businessmen report that they've changed their signs because they felt the "E-4" stipulation was misleading, since E-3's could purchase inexpensive automobiles "in some cases." Not all the signs have changed, however, and several businesses still hold steadfast to their refusal to extend credit for purchases to junior enlisted men below the rank of E-4. Before the pay raise businessmen said junior enlisted men were not making enough money to qualify for credit when buying automobiles and large appliances. Now, however, a PFC makes $311 a month base pay, and a married PFC makes more than a single E-4 used to make before the pay increase. In spite of that, there appears to be no adjustment made in the local credit policies.

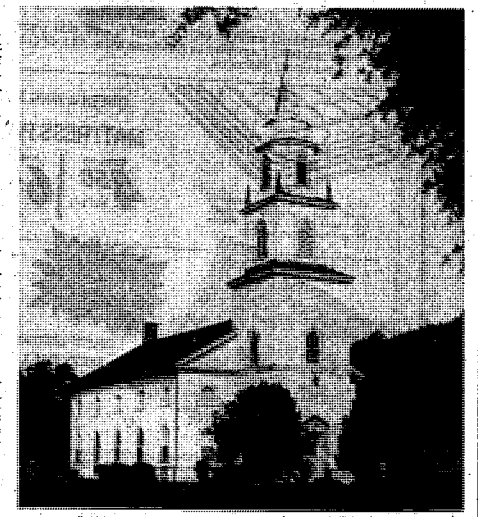
Columbus USO in limbo!?

After Dec. 31 USO activities at 14 W. 11th St. in downtown Columbus will be suspended pending completion of a new home.

The new facility will be located at 3rd Ave. and 10th St. directly east of the new downtown firehouse. Construction is expected to begin sometime in 1972 after necessary funding for continued operation has been completed.

"At the moment, insured survival, not expansion, is the policy," stated Mr. Wade H. Stokes Jr., executive director of the present USO. The United Givers Fund of Columbus has pledged its support for the facility's continuation once the new 10th Street building has been completed.

The temporary closing has been forced by the sudden withdrawal of the USO's national affiliation with the Armed Services Department of the National Board of YMCA since this affiliation entails its financial support, the USO cannot survive in its present form.



In order to preserve the USO, a new corporation, the Columbus Armed Services Association, Inc. (CASA), was recently formed. CASA will assume responsibility for all recreational, social, and community activities for Armed Forces personnel in the Fort Benning-Columbus area.

The new 3rd Ave. and 10th St. location has already been purchased and cleared for construction. The 150- by 150-foot site is being provided by the City Council of Columbus; it was acquired by the council for $132,000. The $200,000 projected cost of the new building itself has already been raised, thanks to the efforts of interested individuals, corporations, and agencies in the Columbus area.

The 10th Street facility will be planned with a built-in expansion potential so that additional features can be incorporated into the basic design. Initally, Phase I, as it is appropriately called, will be a one-story structure and will house a layout similar to the one found at the present USO on 11th Street. It will contain a spacious lobby, music and listening room, TV lounge, game room and a general recreational area.

Recognizing the greater awareness of today's serviceman, the new facility will encourage a closer affinity with the Columbus community by stressing involvement in local projects and activities. CASA hopes that there also will be a closer alliance with Fort Benning for the purpose of planning large scale projects on-post and in community centers downtown. In short, a freer, more imaginative spirit and greater sense of participation is expected to characterize the 10th Street location.

Hopefully, the enormous popularity that typified the present facility will be inherited by its successor. Mr. Stokes keynoted that popularity by quoting the total "door-count" of visitors to the 110-year-old hardware - seed - feed - grain building. Since its inception in 1940 as an Army-Navy YMCA, through October 1971, a total of 8,986,290 servicemen have used the facility. To dramatize the USO's interplay with military life in the area, Mr. Stokes observed that, "Fluctuation of 'Door-count' on a month-to-month basis has been in almost direct proportion to the military strength reports at Fort Benning." For example, the USO records an all-time high of 1,153,961 visitors in 1940 as opposed to a low of 77,583 in 1960. Not surprisingly, 1968, the high point of the Vietnam build-up, saw 267,694 visitors.

One of the many chapels on post to be offering New Year's day services is the Infantry Center Chapel. It is a sacred place where resolutions can be made and last year's misgivings forgotten, while lingering in thoughts of the new year's tiding.

Resolutions require determination

In just a few hours people all over the world will begin celebrating the beginning of a new year. Everyone has high hopes that the coming year will be a better one than the one just completed. For some anything would seem to be an improvement. They are thankful to have lived through the one just completed and will be happy to live through another no matter how bad it gets.

Others had a pretty good year and have great hopes for the one coming up. At this time its customary to also make plans and promises for self improvement. All kinds of good resolutions are made. Some are faithfully kept during the new year and become an accepted way of life for the individual. Others last for a few days, a few weeks or maybe a little more than a month and are forgotten until the next year rolls around again to become another new years resolution to be broken in another short time.

Most resolutions fall in the physical improvement category. To stop smoking, exercise daily, diet to lose weight or to cut down or quit drinking completely. All of these are worthwhile goals but difficult to accomplish with a simple resolution. Success depends on a definite plan of attack of the problem. It also requires a lot of determination and self discipline.

If a man smokes, drinks and eats too much he is going to be a sure loser if he tries to remedy all of these conditions at one time. This has always been my problem. I try to take a bigger bite than I can chew.

This year I'm not going to make any resolution that I'll probably break in a short time. I plan to try to live according to the following short prayer.

"God grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change. Courage to change the things I can and the wisdom to know the difference."

To accomplish everything involved in these words would give me a perfect way of life but I'm not shooting for that. I'm just going to try to keep the thoughts in mind as much as I can. No matter how successful or unsuccessful I am I won't have a guilty conscience from a broken new years resolution.

Hope I'm around next year to let you know how it comes out. In the meantime Happy New Year and good luck with your resolutions. (B.K.)

Leaving Uniform Soon?

Don't forget that . . .

You've Got a Friend!

Uncle Sam offers Unemployment Insurance

You're determined to leave the service when your hitch is up? Don't worry, this isn't a pitch to keep you in uniform (as sound as the idea may be in these hard times). On the contrary, your Federal Government has some information that may help you over some rough times, once you hit civvy street. It's called Unemployment Insurance for Ex-Servicemen.

THE PURPOSE of the program is to provide a weekly income for a limited period of time to ex-servicemen who qualify, to help them meet basic needs while searching for employment.

BENEFITS ARE PAID by the States, through more than 2,400 State employment service and unemployment insurance claims offices, from funds provided by the Federal Government. No payroll deductions are made for unemployment insurance protection. Claims may be filed in every State, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

TO FILE A CLAIM go to the nearest State employment service office or unemployment insurance claims office. Register for work. If a suitable job is not available, apply for UI benefits. You will need your separation form DD-214 and your social security card. Benefit rights are determined under the law of the State where you first file your claim after separation from military service.

FEDERAL LAW REQUIRES that you have had continuous active military service for at least 90 days (fewer, if separated because of a service-incurred injury or disability); were separated under conditions other than dishonorable; did not receive a bad conduct discharge; or if an officer, did not resign for the good of the service.

ALL STATE LAWS REQUIRE that you have qualifying earnings during a past period specified by the law; register for work, file a claim, report regularly as directed; and are able to work and available for work.

THE WEEKLY BENEFIT amount and the number of weeks benefits may be paid are determined by State law based on your pay grade and allowances when separated from active military service. Some States increase the weekly amount by allowances for dependents. Most States pay a maximum of 26 weeks. When unemployment is high and you have received all of the regular benefits to which you are entitled, you may become eligible for up to 13 additional weeks of extended benefits.

INCOME WHILE UNEMPLOYED may affect your eligibility for unemployment insurance. In some States benefits are reduced or denied if you receive pay for unused leave or severance pay, or if you are receiving pension or retirement pay. Benefits will not be paid in any state while you are receiving certain educational assistance or vocational subsistence allowances from the Veterans Administration.

DENIAL OF BENEFITS for a period specified by State law will result if you quit a job without good cause, are fired for misconduct connected with your work, or refuse a suitable job without good cause. Fine and imprisonment may result if misinformation is given intentionally, or if facts are withheld to obtain benefits falsely. If you discover any mistake was made when filing your claim, notify your local office immediately.

APPEAL RIGHTS are provided by law if you are denied benefits. If the denial is based on a military service information, you may request a review by your branch of the Armed Forces or by the Veterans Administration. An appeal or request for review must be filed within legal time limits.

YOUR STATE Employment Service is ready to help you find another job, in line with your abilities and interests, locally or in another part of the country. Information about training to upgrade your job skills is also available. All services are free.

FOR MORE INFORMATION, contact any local office of your State employment service; or write directly to Manpower Administration, U.S. Department of Labor, Washington, D.C. 20210.

Are you putting me on?

President Nixon signs two bills to assist veterans, dependents

Legislation embodying a new sliding formula approach to veterans and dependents pension and compensation benefits was signed into law by President Nixon. According to A. W. Tate, Director of the Atlanta VA Regional Office, the two bills will have a massive impact on over two million disabled veterans, widows, orphans and dependent parents who will benefit immediately from its provisions as well as countless others who will come on the VA rolls in years to come.

The overall cost comes to $195 million. The force of the legislation will be felt first by a million-and-a-half pensioners who would have suffered a reduction in their VA pensions beginning Jan. 1, 1972 when Social Security increases take effect. More than 16 thousand VA pensioners would have lost their pensions entirely.

Tate said, however, that "The greatest long range effect of these bills is the future protection for VA beneficiaries provided in the formula approach." This replaces the fixed tables of payment rates and income limitations established in present law. The formula, he said, will better allocate VA payments to need and will avoid disproportionate reduction of payments when outside income increases.

One measure provides cost of living increases averaging 6.5 per cent in nonservice-connected disability and death pensions paid by VA to nearly 2,000,000 veterans, widows and children.

The increases are effective Jan. 1, 1972.

Another provision of this law also increases, effective Jan. 1, 1972, income limits by $300 for all pensioners. The existing annual income limit of $2,300 for a veteran or widow with no dependent goes up to $2,600, with the present limit of $3,500 for a veteran or widow with dependent being raised to $3,800.

Pensioners covered under an earlier law are also included in the raised income limits, with the present ceiling of $1,900 for a veteran with no dependents going up to $2,200, and the $3,200 limit for a veteran with dependents increasing to $3,500.

The met significant feature of this new law is the innovative "formula approach which will relate VA pension payments directly to the beneficiary's income, in lieu of the present table of payment rates with its $100 increments, and income limitations.

Tate said he believed this approach will minimize future concern about the adequacy of the veterans pension program. It will affect primarily older veterans widows who, for the most part, have limited incomes, thus qualifying them for nonservice-connected pensions from VA.

The second law signed by the President also becomes effective Jan. 1, 1972. It provides a 10 per cent increase in dependency and indemnity compensation benefits for 176,000 widows, a five per cent increase in these benefits for 46,000 children, and a 6.5 per cent increase in benefits for 68,500 parents of servicemen who died because of service-connected disabilities. The new "formula" approach also applies to and will benefit these parents who are receiving dependency and indemnity compensation payments.

Girl Scouts visit 'Christmas past' to decorate house

By Jo Mader

In these days of multiple Santas and carols by Muzak most people wonder how Christmas was celebrated in an age when life was less frenetic.

Members of Fort Benning Senior Girl Scout Troop 57 had a unique opportunity to explore a Christmas of the past thanks to an invitation from Mrs. Sam Singer of Lumpkin, Ga.

Mrs. Singer is a member of the commission responsible for the establishment of Westville, a village south of Lumpkin. As decorations chairman for the 1971 Yule Log Ceremony at the village — which is reminiscent of 1850 — Mrs. Singer asked the girls of Troop 57 to decorate the Westville farmhouse as it would have looked in 1850.

The original farmhouse, a log cabin, was built about 1830. By 1850 the building had been expanded to include a frame structure holding four rooms. Connecting the cabin and frame building is an open porch or "dog trot" comparable to a modern day "breeze-way."

With Mrs. Mary Askew, the troop advisor, the girls researched Southern Christmas traditions. They found that all decorations of the period were handmade and generally consisted of scraps of cloth and ribbon combined with greenery natural to the area.

Both holly berries and landanum berries were used. Magnolia leaves arranged on a base of spagnum moss formed wreaths. Homesick Northerners longing for snow often used white wash, cotton balls or flour sprinkled on wet greenery to achieve a snowy look. Garlands of ivy or smilax were as common as ropes of pine. Stacks of fruit such as apples and pears were used as table decorations.

Carrying what seemed to be miles of ivy, baskets of holly, bits of ribbon and a few clove-studded oranges, five girls from the troop drove to Westville on Dec. 11.

Wearing long dresses in 1850 style to help "get the feel" of an old-fashioned Christmas, the girls spent the day climbing ladders, pounding nails and arranging greens. The next day others guided visitors through the house and explained the history and traditions of a Georgia country Christmas.

Gifts for needy

Members of Fort Benning Ranger Officers Wives Club recently applied the spirit of Christmas by donating boxes of clothes, food and toys to local churches for distribution to underprivileged persons. (L-R), Mrs. Victor Arndt, chairman of the club's Community Helping Hand; the Rev. Rudolph Starling of the Georgetown Methodist Church; the Rev. J. L. Brown of the Lumpkin First Baptist Church; Mrs. Donald Rabel, who spearheaded the collection of the presents; and Capt. Walter Ross of the Ranger Patrolling Committee.

Officers, wives of 931 Engr. GP. has holiday fete

The officers and wives of the 931st Engr. Gp. held their Christmas party Dec. 18 at the Main Officers Club.

The event was organized and sponsored by the 43rd Engr. Bn.

The attire for the formal affair was dress blues and, for the ladies, long or short formal wear.

The receiving line began at 7 p.m. and was followed by dinner at 8:15. The meal included filet mignon, shrimp cocktail, green salad, baked potato, green peas with mushrooms, desert and wine.

After the meal the guests danced to the music of Hard Rock, an instrumental group.

Red Cross schedules basic orientation course

A new basic training class for Red Cross volunteers will be held January 24, from 8:45 a.m. to 1 p.m.

All military wives or other dependents 18 years of age or older are urged to take the course and become qualified as Red Cross Volunteers.

After an orientation in the operation and philosophy of the American Red Cross, the volunteer is scheduled for a skills course and on-the-job training depending on the requirements of her work area. Among the places at Fort Benning at which Red Cross volunteers work are the clinics, wards and offices of Martin Army Hospital and Outpatient Annex as well as the labs, pharmacy and patient recreation. The dental clinics, post veterinary clinic, Red Cross field office and dependent schools also need volunteers.

Persons who are unable to work immediately after the training still are encouraged to take the basic training class now and be qualified when they are ready to begin volunteer work. When a Red Cross volunteer moves to another area, her eligibility remains valid.

A preliminary interview is necessary for all volunteers. To make an appointment and for further information, call 545-2122, 689-7653 or 689-8289. Interviews will be held at the Red Cross Field Office at the corner of Ingersoll Street and Vibbert Avenue, Jan. 14 and Jan. 15-17 between 9:15 a.m. and 2 p.m.

Army mess goes Italian

Spicy aromas, bright red table cloths, soft candlelight and live background music generated an atmosphere of something super.

Having a "super dinner" was the idea of SFC Jimmy Vaughn, mess steward. He felt that since Ft. Belvoir soldiers have to travel so far and pay so much for a nice restaurant meal, the mess hall could prepare a really special meal once a month.

For the present, Vaughn plans to cook a special dinner each month. Soldiers are encouraged to bring their girl friends, wives, folks or friends. The first "super dinner" featured an Italian menu with antipasto and minestrone soup, spaghetti and meat balls, lasagna, rigatoni with mushroom sauce and shrimp marinara.

Vaughn has other "cuisine nights" in mind. They include German or Spanish dishes and American favorites such as lobster or steak.

The price is one of the best parts of the meal. Soldiers can take advantage of the opportunity by simply signing the head-count sheet. Visitors need only sign the cash collection sheet and pay 65 cents.

Off limits areas

All named ponds on the reservation are off limits for duck hunting. This includes an area within 200 meters from the edge of the pond.

Ducks may be hunted on streams, creeks, beaver ponds and the portion of the Chattahoochee River within the reservation boundaries.

Organizations join drug fight

The American National Red Cross (ANRC) and the United Services Organization (USO) are joining hands with the U.S. Army in efforts to prevent and control drug abuse.

Realizing the important contributions to be made between civilian and military communities alike, personnel from ANRC and USO have asked to participate in Army education and training programs on drugs on an individual basis and at no expense to the government.

Through their numerous affiliations the ANRC and USO can provide additional channels for drug information, referral services and an extension of the military drug abuse prevention program outside the military community.

Troopin' the Line

Two former members of the 197th Infantry Brigade are recent additions to the U.S. Army Infantry Center's (USAIC) staff.

Maj. Lee C. Smith Jr., Chief, Plans and Operations Devision, Directorate of Plans and Training for the USAIC and Maj. Phillip Jarrell, now assigned to the USAIC Provost Marshals' office were honored Nov. 19 at a 197th "Bosses Night" ceremony. Both officers were awarded plaques for their significant work while working in the 197th Inf. Bde.

On Nov. 27, 1968 Smith was assigned to the brigade as executive officer of the 1st Batallion, 21ith Field Artillery. He later was appointed commander of the unit, which had been activated in May of 1968 and attached to the 197th for training and preparation for combat. His other positions in the 197th included assignments as Brigade S-4, Brigade S-3, Brigade Executive Officer, Brigade Deputy Commander for External Affairs and Brigade S-5.

In his last position with the 197th Smith revitalized the Unit of Choice Recruiting Program with new and bold concepts. These new cnncepts have given the 197th more recruits than any other unit within the Continental U.S. (CONUS).

Maj. Jarrell arrived in the 197th Inf. Bde. in April of 1969. He spent 32 months with the 197th as the Brigade S-2. Holding a brigade staff position for 32 months in the 197th is somewhat of a record. Many of the officers in the Brigade headquarters have left and others have returned from other tours of duty in the time that Jarrell spent as security officer.

While serving as the Brigade S-2, Maj. Jarrell contributed many improvements to the security and Volar systems. The statistics sbow that the crime rate in the brigade has dropped to an all-time low. This improvement also shows that Jarrell has helped the Volar program by cutting the crime rate.

Drug education specialist informs of dangers

By Keith Harmon

Sp5 Albert Coakley, HHC, 931st Engr. Gp., listens to soldiers when they speak. He has to. He's headquarters company's representative to the 931st Soldier's Council, the company's drug education specialist and HHC's drug "exemption" representative.

Coakley, a former Atlanta policeman, has recently been appointed to the role of drug information specialist in a move designed to improve drug information channels at the company level.

In that role; Coakley will set up a program to disseminate the wealth of information the Army is now distributing regarding drug abuse. He said it is his job to inform soldiers at the company level about the dangers of drugs, advise them on the legal aspects of illegal drug use and keep the company commander informed about the drug situation in general.

The communications center specialist said he will take advantage of the commander's information class time to discuss with the soldiers any new information he receives about drugs. Coakley hopes that a better awareness of the dangers will minimize drug abuse.

Closely related to his task as drug information Cakley also has the responsibility to counsel soldiers who desire treatment for thir habits and exemption from punishment.

"Sp5 Coakley has the authority to discuss the amnesty program with any of you seeking help," company commander Capt. Jesse Minix said in a recent command information class, "and he also has the right to keep everything that is said confidential. That is, he doesn't have to tell me what is said, and he doesn't even have to let me know if any of you are seeking drug help. And I have every reason to believe that he'll keep everything confidential. He's a good man for the job and he wants the program to work."

Coakley who enjoys his role in the drug program, is equally concerned about the 931st Engr. Gp. soldier's council. His concern is that he doesn't feel the council is working as well as it was designed.

"The problem," he said, "is that not enough soldiers bring their complaints to the council representatives. The council is a great program where the soldiers can air their complaints, by way of council representatives, and be assured that the commanders will listen. It's apparent, though, that not enough interest in the council has been generated."

At a recent basic leadership course, attended by a cross section of E-4's and 5's throughout the 931st Engr. Gp., Coakley said only two soldiers out of 66 raised their hands to indicate they knew the name of their soldier's council representative in their respective companies.

Coakley admits that the soldier's council has fallen short of its own goal for success, but blames that failure on the lack of participation by soldiers. "The guys just are not coming to us with their gripes. Consequently we spend a lot of time around the conference table talking about individual problems, are not complaints that represent any sizable group," he related. "I think the council could do a lot," he added, "if it was given the right support at local levels."

Wheeler recommends legislation for Ga. vets

ATLANTA — Georgia Veterans Service Director Pete Wheeler appeared this week before a joint meeting of the senate and house committees on defense and veterans' affairs, and announced several recommendations which he said has developed as a result of Governor Carter's 'Goals for Georgia' meetings.

One of Wheeler's recommendations is for legislation providing "lifetime honorary fishing and hunting licenses to any honorably discharged veteran who is a legal resident of Georgia."

Wheeler said that the Department of Veterans Service could determine a veteran's eligibility similar to the procedure now followed in issuing of lifetime drivers' licenses to Georgia veterans. Georgia has provided its veterans with free drivers' licenses since 1949.

Certain severely disabled veterans receive a grant (the current amount is $2,800) from the Veterans Administration for the purchase of a specially-equipped vehicle. Wheeler wants legislation passed that would exempt veterans in this category from all state sales taxes on such a vehicle.

Wheeler also is recommending legislative action to provide for exemption of all ad valorem taxes on vehicles for which eligible veterans receive the familiar red, white and blue HV (Handicapped Veteran) license tag, which is issued to a veteran who has lost, or lost use of, an eye or a limb as a result of his military service.

Wheeler also wants an existing law updated so that Viet Nam veterans who meet certain disability and income requirements would be eligible for an exemption certificate on business licenses.

Recalling that legislation enacted in 1969 changed Veterans Day from the traditional Nov. 11 to the fourth Monday in October, Wheeler said, "There are more groups continuing to celebrate Veterans Day on Nov. 11 than there are observing the new date."

INFANTRY Magazine. . .the shape of things to come

Do away with brigade?

Not the wistful product of a battalion adjutant's daydream, the idea of eliminating the brigade echelon of command is discussed in the January-February issue of INFANTRY Magazine. Maj. Paul J. Kirkegaard discusses the present and probable future methods of command and control that may pay off in the elimination of this part of the chain of command.

A new rifle squad TOE?

Maybe so. Mech commanders will be pleased to see a command vehicle for the platoon leader is also part of the recommendations. It's featured in "1RUS—Recommends New Rifle Squad for 1976-75." Written by Lt. Col. Robert J. O'Neil, the article deals in depth with a special organizational study to determine the best makeup of the rifle squad and platoon—Airborne, Mech, Airmobile and Air Cavalry.

Can we do better with what we have?

"Kiss Off the dreadnaught," say authors Maj. John Baggett, Capt. Vernon Humphrey and Capt. Richard Sinclair III. Weapons now in the inventory—and on their way out—can easily be adapted to boost the firepower of the MECHANIZED battalion. A main point of their thesis is that the old reliable M113A1 is good enough to keep around. Add the old M2A1 "Duster", and a track-mounted quad fifty section to the battalion combat support slice, they say, and do away with all the gimmickry being considered for mechanized infantry.

The coming INFANTRY also has articles on Army pathfinders, an argument for a vectored-thrust flying platform for battalion-level units and below, information on the Army Comptroller Program, an article on mortar training aids, and up-to-the-minute information on officer and enlisted career tips.

For professional Infantrymen, the January-February issue is "must" reading. As the Army pulls back and prepares for its ongoing mission, the magazine has been changing too, following recent changes in force development and doctrine, theory and practice. It's your mirror and forum, to bear what other qualified people have to say and to give you a chance to put across your own ideas. INFANTRY Magazine will be available at the Bookstore and most Post Exchange branches beginning next week. Pick up a copy and find out what's happening in the Infantry.

Hammers fly as men from the 43rd Engr. Bn., 931st Engr. Gp., work to complete Phase Two Volar construction by mid January.

Volar partitions near completion

Phase Two of Volar partition construction in barracks by the 43rd Engr. Bn., 931st Engr. Gp. is drawing to a close as the engineers work through the Christmas holidays to complete construction by mid-January.

Phase Two began on Sept. 27 with construction plans to build partitions in 44 barracks here on Fort Benning. Companies B, C, and D of the 43rd have been working constantly to finish up the project by January. With only 11 more barracks to go the engineers have slacked up in manpower due to the holidays. Currently there are approximately 90 people working on the project.

The partitioning off of barracks is part of the New Modern Volunteer Army (VOLAR) which will enable the individual soldier to have more privacy in his living quarrers. Prior to the building of partitions the men were living together in open bays with little or no privacy at all.

The engineers are now working in the Harmony Church area. When the partitions are completed there they will move on to the Airborne area and then on to Sand Hill, which will complete the construction on Fort Benning.

Year of the young soldier

By Mike Keller

For the young soldier, it was when the pots-and-pans man exchanged olive drab fatigues for cooks' whites.

For the old line NCO, it was when he returned to the classroom to learn that bellowing voices and shrill whistles have no place in the "new leadership." For the raw recruit, it was when he opened his paycheck and found twice as much money as the month before.

For the low-ranking trooper it was spending off-duty hours in the post Playboy Club or coffeehouse rather than blacking boots in the barracks. For the terminologist, it was when "military music" might have meant the rhythmic marching beats of the 263rd Army Band — or the jive sounds of the 197th Infantry Brigade's "Forever Forward" combo.

It was 1971 at Fort Benning. A year in which the Modern Volunteer Army progressed from the planning board to a variety of specific programs. A year that aptly could be tagged "The year of the young soldier." And for the sake of history and nostalgia, here is a nutshell recap of the top 20 events at Fort Benning in 1971, as featured in the Bayonet:

1. KP ENDS FOR SOLDIERS

The Army doesn't make New Year's Resolutions, but if it did a pledge to eliminate kitchen police would be at the top of the list. This is exactly what Fort Benning did when, in January, it became the first post to completely relieve soldiers of mess hall duties. The unpopular chore was transferred to 500 civilian employes. The project, which was financed through VOLAR funds cost more than $1 million and enabled about 270 soldiers each day to prform their regular military duties. Other annoying details that were turned over to civilians included post police and "ash and trash" (garbage collection).

2. FIVE-DAY WORK WEEK ESTABLISHED

A sergeant glaced anxiously at the names on his company's weekend duty roster, then muttered unhappily when he saw that he was slated for charge-of-quarters. A specialist beside him laughed: "You know how it is. The Army pays you 24 hours a day, seven days a week. They expect you — if necessary — to work the same."

In January, Fort Benning jettisoned this idea by eliminating most Saturday duty requirements and authorizing compensatory time to soldiers who had weekend work. Most sections adjusted easily to the new VOLAR policy, although the Infantry School — where Saturday morning classes were common — had to cut hours from many of its courses.

3. ECOLOGY BUG BITES BENNING

While on a proficiency helicopter flight, a Fort Benning officer noticed an oil slick on the Chattahoochee River. He reported it to the post's new Environmental Management section, which was formed in June to combat pollution on the installation. The section notified Columbus authorities, who located the tank causing the leak — and its owner. This is just one example of the surge of interest in ecological matters at Fort Benning by both the command and residents.

In 1971, Fort Benning became the first post to issue a regulation outlining problems of environmental control, prescribing sanitation standards and assigning responsibility for enforcing them. The Infantry School added a unique, two-hour "environmental quality" class to its curriculum. Explorer scouts converted 1,000 mattress covers into leaf-and trash-gathering "ecology bags," and 500 scouts of all kinds, participating in a special "Ecology Day" in June, conducted beautification operations throughout the post and collected refuse from post residents who were willing to sort their trash for re-cycling purposes.

Not to be outdone by the younger generation, inhabitants of an area in Custer Terrace which had been criticized as "an eyesore" held a massive clean-up campaign of their own. The Fort Benning ecology spirit even went beyond the boundaries of the military reservation. Members of the 197th Brigade's 58th Infantry spent three days tidying up 25 miles of shoreline at Lake Eufaula, Ala. And members of the 586th Eng. Co. (Float Bridge) provided men and boats three times last year to Georgia conservationists to assist river-based environmental studies.

4. Barracks Partitions, Free Quarters Cleaning Approved

Those long barracks bays with neat rows of bunks and lockers squeezed tightly together became a thing of the past here when the Department of the Army approved funds in April for the construction and installation of partitions. The partitions are designed to give barracks dwellers at least partially-private living conditions. DA also authorized free quarters cleaning to permanent party personnel leaving post. One unit which conducted a particularly aggressive billets-building effort was the 43rd Engr. Bn., which constructed 73 barracks with 2,038 semi-private rooms. Maj. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott, post commander, symbolically completed the project by driving in the final nail.

5. New Pay Hike Biggest in History

Servicemen got their biggest raise ever when President Nixon signed a bill in September extending the draft for two years. Attached to the measure was a provision raising military salaries across the board by a record $2.4 billion. Although four-star generals also got an increase, most of the money went to lower enlisted men and officers. First-termers averaged a 60 per cent jump in pay, while the pay of E-1s doubled. About 50,000 officers and 1.4 million soldiers were covered by the hike, which went into effect Nov. 18 after the end of the first phase of the wage-price freeze.

6. Soldiers Get Early Releases

"It means I'm SHORT and that's good," Sgt. Jim Gregory said to news that the Army will involuntarily release him from service six months early. To Gregory —and many of the other 49,000 military personnel affected by the drop policy announced earlier this month — it seemed like an early Christmas gift. To others, however, it meant hardship. The post's transfer point, already loaded with work as a result of previously-announced drops, glumly predicted that the waiting lines would get even longer. Although Fort Benning ultimately may feel the personnel pinch as the Army continues to slash men from its roster, post officials were reluctant to predict just how low the troop level would fall.

7. Race Group Sponsors Program to Ease Tensions

The white NCO pounded his fist on the table angrily.

"What platoon sergeant is an Uncle Tom," he shouted. "I can't be black with that dude breathing down my neck."

What ordinarily would be a strange scene was just an ordinary event at a meeting of Fort Benning's Race Relations Coordinating Group which uses such role-switching games to tell members of both races how it feels to be "the other guy." This is part of a Moderator Training Program, sponsored by the council, designed to ease racial tension on post. The goal of the program — the only one of its kind in the Army — is to break down the communications gap between black and white troops and encourage members to regularly conduct racial seminars and rap sessions in their units.

8. MAH Sponsors "We Care"

One of the major criticisms of the military's medical service program has been the lack of personal attention a patient gets from a physician. Martin Army Hospital answered such complaints this February with the "We Care" program. A "come-when-you-want" sick call policy was set up at two medical clinics, senior NCOs and officers were allowed to make appointments and two additional phone lines were added to the hospital's central appointment system which handles 1,300 calls a day. And starting next year, hospital will experiment with a policy of allowing military families to "reserve" their own doctors.

9. Army Secretaries Resor and Froehlke visit Benning

Secretary of the Army Stanley Resor and his successor, Robert F. Froehlke, visited Fort Benning in January and August respectively. Secretary Resor addressed a graduating Officer Candidate class in which his son, Charles, was a member. Noting Fort Benning's role in VOLAR, the Secretary said that no Army policy is so sacrosanct that it could not bear constructive re-examination. Secretary Froehlke, a member of the Infantry OCS Hall of Fame, made this post his first stop on a tour of military installations. He described Fort Benning as vital to the nation's security and predicted that its strength levels would not go down. The secretary also said that even if the Army does not achieve it's all-volunteer goal, improvements made for the soldier under VOLAR would stay. Other prominent figures who visited the post this year included Adm. Thomas A. Moorer, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; Gen. William C. Westmoreland, Army chief of staff; former Secretary of State Dean Rusk; and Mrs. Iris Powers, U.S. Army consultant to the next of kin of personnel captured or missing in the action in Southeast Asia.

10. Museum Drive Nets $80,000

The Fort Benning phase of a national drive to raise $6 million to build a new Infantry Musenm, held from January to March, netted more than $80,000 — 80 per cent of its goal. The new museum, which will house 12,000 artifacts and have 73,000 square feet of display space in addition to a library and auditorium, will be 10 times larger than the present one. The drive differed from past fund raising efforts in that it used a peer solicitation system and allowed donations to be made by pledge and credit card.

11. CBS Show Features 197th

A CBS television documentary, "What's Happened to the Army?", spotlighted Fort Benning's 197th Infantry Brigade. In his report, correspondent Hughes Rudd reviewed the 197th's performance in handling troop morale, discipline, drug problems and race relations.

12. Four Flyers Die in Post Crash.

Four Fort Benning soldiers were killed when two helicopters collided during routine landing and takeoff maneuvers at Lawson Army Airfield in February. The accident was the worst tragedy at Fort Benning in 1971. One of the greatest property losses of the year occurred when a fire destroyed Stryker Hall, home of the Airborne Department's Pathfinder Committee and one of the two original hangers at Lawson Field. The blaze caused more than $1.25 million in damage and wiped out an irreplaceable collection of Pathfinder souvenirs.

13. Jumps Brings Pay Twice a Month

Fort Benning soldiers who found themselves short of cash at the end of each month under the old pay system were delighted when the Army instituted the JUMPS pay system this year. Under JUMPS a soldier has the option of being paid either once or twice monthly.

14. AUSA Holds Benefit Ball

The local chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army held a Washington's Birthday Benefit Ball in February at the main post officers club. Proceeds from the event — which was open to military persons of all ranks and to civilians — were used to financially support ROTC scholarships for local youths, the annual ROTC rifle drill meet, soldier of the month and Infantry School honor graduate awards.

15. Post Copter Crews Aid Apollo Launch

When Apollo 15 astronauts blasted on a 12-day mission to the moon and back in July, two Fort Benning helicopter crews from the 197th Aviation Co. had a front row seat at the event. The two, three-man crews were on hand to provide emergency support to airlift any spectators or NASA personnel at Cape Kennedy who could not be evacuated by ground in the event of an emergency. The six men — three of whom had attended the takeoff of Apollo 14 earlier in the year — were the only Army representatives at the launch.

16. VOLAR To Continue in 1972

VOLAR passed its first exam when Gen. Talbott announced in April that MVA would continue after the end of the first test period. In his evaluation Gen. Talbott lauded VOLAR as a "step in the right direction" and said "it is my intention during fiscal year 1972 to continue and expand VOLAR activities. At the time of his report, more than 140 actions had been implemented under the Benning plan.

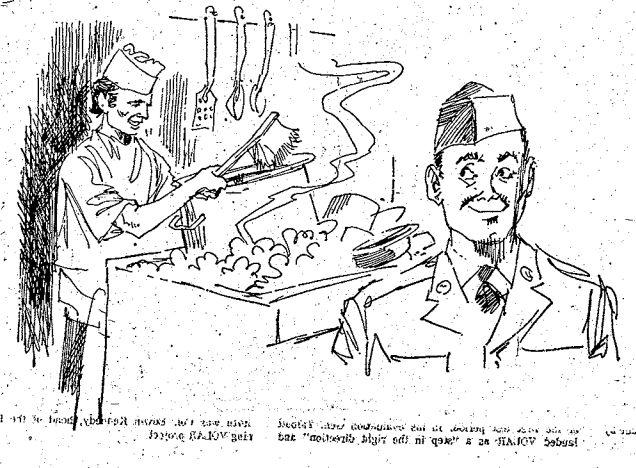
17. Cadets Attend Ranger Training

Few ROTC summer camps give their students a chance to rappell off Georgia cliffs, live in Florida swamps or survive on one can of C-rations and two hours sleep a day. However, 240 specially selected ROTC cadets got this opportunity when they volunteered to undergo Ranger training instead of the usual camp. Those who went the full route received the Ranger tab. Of the original number only 140 did.

18. 197th Troops March 100 Miles

About 50 soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade symbolized the endurance of the organization they were backing when they marched from Columbus to Atlanta during May in a gesture of support for the Boy Scouts of America. The 100-mile trip took four days. Upon completion of the hike, the soldiers presented a scroll to Ivan Allen III, former Atlanta Mayor, at the site of the regional Boy Scout Jamboree.

One month earlier, 29 other brigade troops from Co. D, 91st Bn. took a 200-mile "cruise" down the Chattahoochee river to the Gulf of Mexico in four raft pontoons. It was believtd to be the first time a company had attempted such a journey, which lasted a week.



19. Benning Orienteerers Win All-Army Event

Orienteering, a Swedish-created sport that combines fast running with the techniques of land navigation, caught fire at Fort Benning in 1971. Sufficiently enough, anyway, for a team from this post to become all-Army champs in competition at Fort Belvoir, Va. Fort Benning also placed three men on the Army team that will compete in the Intra-service finals.

20. Gen. Carley Promoted, Leaves for 'Nam

Maj. Gen. John T. Carley, assistant commandant of the Infantry School, having donned a new star, left Fort Benning in July for an assignment in the Republic of Vietnam. Gen. Carley had served as assistant commandant since June 1970. He was succeeded by Brig. Gen. Paul F. Gorman, a former member of the U.S. delegation to the Paris Peace Talks.

In another major command change at Fort Benning in 1971, Col. Willard Latham, commander of the 197th, was named post chief of staff, succeeding retiring Col. Jim Kelsey. Taking over for Col. Latham at the 197th was Col. Edwin Kennedy, head of the Fort Benning VOLAR project.

Play asks, 'Who you callin' boy, Pig?'

WASHINGTON (ANF) — There is nothing very entertaining about the play, "Who You Callin' Boy, Pig?," because there is nothing entertaining about people hating each other.

The training production, produced and presented by soldiers of V Corps in Germany is realistic. It mirrors life as it is. It says take the cotton out of your ears and open your eyes. Listen.

"Whitey says that all men are created equal; only thing is, some of us are more equal than others."

"Did you ever see the way they walk around, jitterbuggin' along like they're all hung together by string? They can't walk regular like a human being. They all kinda. . . jitterbug along. You know what I'm talking about? Must be the natural rhythm we always hearin' about."

"Dig this. Here's this grey dude. He's got this cowboy hat on and a shirt with tassels hangin' from the sleeves, like he was Gene Autry or something. And he's even wearing some cowboy boots. Now this dude has the nerve to tell me what I look like."

"I think it's the hair. I can see anything but the hair. It's outlandish. Why some of them have to set their hats way up on top of their heads like a cherry on a sundae."

Does any of this sound familiar?

One of the remedies to the all-too-apparent problem of understanding is a test by V Corps in the guise of the V Corps Training Road Shows. The shows are currently dealing with the areas of drug abuse and race relations.

The training production on race relations, written by former Sp5 Bruce Bernhard and adapted for the stage by Sp4 Mark Herron, Sp5 James Mason and Sp4 Michael Richards, does not try to solve the race relations problem, but presents a play about people, different kinds of people.

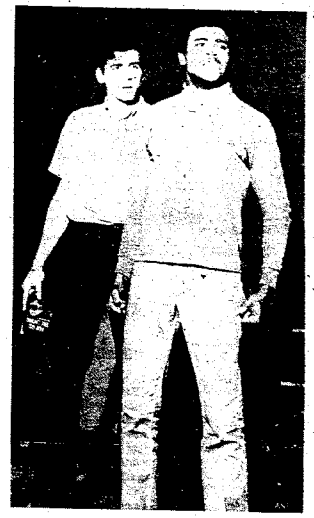
The play definitely has a message. Sp4 Hamilton Parks, a black, befriends a white, Sp4 Mike Barrett. The brothers are not exactly cool on the friendship or on Hamilton's feelings toward white-black relations.

The brothers want to start a black discussion group but receive nothing but reprimands from their first sergeant. They want to include only blacks in their group but Hamilton doesn't agree.

"Why don't you concentrate your efforts on trying to establish some type of communication line between the white dudes, instead of shutting them out?" says Hamilton, "I think they could understand our life styles and know how we feel about things it could help break down some of the barriers."

Hamilton gets no response, but his feelings are prevalent throughout the play.

The trouble really begins when Hamilton is passed over by a promotion board where his only competition is a bigoted white. Disgusted, Hamilton leaves and goes to rap with his brothers.



The scene changes to the club where both blacks and whites have met. After a few too many drinks and wisecracks, trouble starts. During the ensuing battle Barrett is killed.

Hamilton kneels over the body of his white friend and says, "This didn't have to happen... it could have been anybody. . .hate has no color. . .we don't have time for it. . . we've got too much already to straighten out. . . you all think about it."

That's the message of the play — hate is futile.

Gen. Michael S. Davison, commander U.S. Army Europe and Seventh Army, recently attended a command performance of the training production.

During the intermission, General Davison said, "There was a lot of truth in what was just witnessed on this stage. There was a message for each and every one of us. We as older soldiers are going to have a greater problem understanding the problem than the younger."

"I was all set for your Robert E. Lee history and your blue-eyed current events . . . but they had to get into the questions about my people this and my people that."

Band meets Soupy

Comedian Soupy Sales, dressed in a light sports shirt, appears with members of the 197th Infantry Brigade's "Forever Forward" Combo on the "Today in Georgia" television show in Atlanta.

Moon car makes hit

Expected to draw as much attention as the personalities in "Diamonds Are Forever" is a vehicle that rivals James Bond's world-famous Aston-Martin sportscar.

It is a mile-a-minute moon machine which Bond commandeers at an astronaut's simulated lunar testing ground and drives on a wild chase across Nevada desert dunes to escape pursuing SPECTRE agents. Bond's Aston-Martin sportscar is also seen in a brief role while showing off its new bonnet-mounted rockets.

The picture presently is appearing at the Georgia Theatre.

To create one of the wildest automobile chases ever on the screen, 53 cars were purchased, all for the purpose of demolition or destruction. Stunt drivers crashed them through the streets of Las Vegas and 24 were totally destroyed.

Synopsis

ESCAPE FROM THE PLANET OF THE APES (Rated G)—Plenty of monkey business is on tap when the first family of gorilla-kind — Cornelius, Zira and Baby Milo—visit America in another episode of ape adventure. At first the self-proclaimed space travelers are welcomed as heroes, featured on news shows, lodged at exclusive hotels and paraded before the public in fancy automobiles. But events suddenly get "hairy" when the President's military advisors declare Baby Milo a menace to the survival of the human race and order him captured. The film stars veteran "apes" Roddy McDowall and Kim Hunter.

SOMEONE BEHIND THE DOOR (Rated GP)—Anthony Perkins portrays a young brain surgeon who treats amnesia-victim Charles Bronson who was found wandering on a beach. After taking Bronson home, Perkins goes to the beach and finds evidence that a woman has been brutally murdered. When Perkin's two-timing wife runs off to Paris with a lover, the jealously-maddened doctor performs a "memory transplant" on Bronson's mind by showing him a nude photo of his wife (Jill Ireland) and a passionate letter from the boy friend. Bronson, who is led to believe that he killed Miss Ireland on the beach, is stunned to learn that she is still alive. 7 HORROR OF FRANKENSTEIN (Rated R) — Young Ralph Bates, taking over as Baron Frankenstein, quits school to dabble in his family's traditional art: monster making. The ingredients include the head of a highwayman, pieces of bodies supplied by a grave robber, and the damaged brain of a professor whom the baron has personally killed. After all the anatomy is in place and a timely electrical storm produces enough power to jolt the hideous creature to life, Bates sends his creation on a rampage of death. But the foul play around the castle soon brings the police on the scene.

LITTLE FAUSS AND BIG HALSY (Rated R)—Halsy Knox, a fast talking con-man and loser, has built his life around the lie that is is a motorcycle racer. Little Fauss, a goofy, awkward mechanic, joins Halsy because he believes the latter can teach him a lot about racing and life. Halsy is played by Robert Redford. Little Fauss is Michael Pollard.

Personnel receive incentive awards

Christmas gifts are exchanged all over the world, but some rather large gifts were exchanged at Fort Benning in a ceremony Dec. 3.

Cash awards totalling $9,700, were given for incentive award suggestions saving the government $382,748 annually.

Mr. Charles H. Brettelle, Adjutant Geenral Division Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities, was presenfed an award of $1,000 for an adopted suggestion proposing that a review of all maps printed by the Army Field Printing Plant be made and that multi-color printing be restricted to essential items only. Adoption of this suggestion provided adequate support without impairing the quality of training literature and resulted in an estimated annual savings in map printing of $67,669.

CWO Bryce J. Gordon and SSgt. Joseph L. Gendreau, 605th Transportation Company, U.S. Army Infantry Center Aviation Command, were presented an award of $500 each for an adopted suggestion proposing the fabrication of a mock-up to replace the AN-ASN15 console programmed for instruction in the Airmobile Command and Control simulator used by the Infantry School. As proposed, utilizing low cost components and through the fabrication of expensive or nonavailable items, a mock-up console was fabricated and equipped with four student operator positions, allowing for more efficient use of training systems, precluded procurement of essential military items and resulted in an estimated annual savings of $60,725.

SSgt. Calvin E. Eddings and Mr. Julius F. Blum, Command Maintenance Department, US Army Infantry School, were presented an award of $500 each for an adopted suggestion proposing the elimination of live track vehicles used as a training aid in support of instructions of the electrical systems of combat vehicles and that an electric component mounted mock-up be used in lieu thereof. Adoption of this suggestion enabled the class to clearly view each component when taught, eliminated engine noises and exhaust fumes effected release of essential equipment for reissue and resulted in an estimated annual savings of $60,083.

CHAMPUS rejects thousands of claims monthly

CHAMPUS fiscal administrators reject thousands of claims each month because the annual outpatient deductible has not been met.

Officials of the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) are reminding beneficiaries that they can help prevent the rejection of these claims and expedite processing and payment by accumulating enough bills and receipts for outpatient care to satisfy the $50 individual or $100 family deductible before submitting their first claim each fiscal year. It is not necessary that these bills be first paid before being used to satisfy the outpatient deductible. An itemized bill reflecting a legal obligation to pay is sufficient.

As soon as sufficient charges are incurred, the beneficiary should complete his portion of the claim form and send the form with the itemized bills or receipts to the state fiscal administrator, who will issue a deductible certificate. After the deductible is satisfied, beneficiaries are encouraged to submit claims every two or three months or more frequently when the value of the receipts or itemized statements exceeds $25 to $30.

Legislation establishing CHAMPUS requires program beneficiaries to meet a deductible each fiscal year (1 July -30 June) for authorized health care or services received under the outpatient portion of the program. The amount of this deductible is $50 when only one beneficiary uses the program and $100 if two or more members of a family are receiving civilian health care.

Reimbursement claims for inpatient related care may be submitted at any time without regard to the outpatient deductible.

Benning hunters took 46 deer on the reservation last week. This total included 24 does bringing the total doe harvest to 54 for the season. The total deer count registered at the Fish and Wildlife check station in Harmony Church now stands at 425 considerably short of the 492 taken on the reservation last year. With the season ending in Georgia tomorrow and in Alabama on Jan. 15 it is not likely that the harvest this year will match that of last year.

None of the deer taken last week were trophy type. The standings in the Rod and Gun Club Deer Hunting Contest remain the same as for the previous week. They look better as each day passes.

Lt. Col. Brandt Grubbs still has the heaviest deer with a 176-pound entry taken on opening day. The second place entry in the heaviest deer category belongs to John E. Smith. Smith's entry weighed in at 161-pounds.

SSgt. Charles Wallace and Ronnie Cavins have each registered bucks with 10 countable antler points. Ties in the antler contest are broken by the weight of the deer. This puts Wallace in first place with a 160-pound entry. The deer brought in by Cavins weighed 145-pounds.

The time is running short but there is still a chance to top these entries. The Rod and Gun Club will award two Remington Model 1100 Automatic shotguns and two Mossberg Bolt Action Slugguns to members who take trophy deer during the current season. The member who registers the heaviest deer and the members who registers the deer with the most antler points will each receive one of the Remington guns. Second place winners in each category will be awarded one of the Mossberg guns. A third Remington will be given to some member who registers a deer kill at the club but does not win one of the other prizes.

Club Will Be Closed

The Rod and Gun Club will be closed on Jan. 1 and 2 for an annual audit and inventory. With the opening on Jan. 3 the club will be offering some bargains in membership fees. The fee for regular members will be reduced to $2, the fee for dependents will be 50 cents and the limited membership dues will be reduced to $4. These memberships will be valid until Mar. 31 when all 1971-72 memberships will expire.

Deer are Plentiful

The Fish and Wildlife people are a little concerned over the unusually warm weather we have been having during the current hunting season. This summer type weather has dampened the enthusiasm of many hunters and reduced the number who have gone hunting. As a result the deer harvest is not as high as was expected. There are plenty of deer but apparently not enough hunters. The wildlife unit would like to see more taken. Doe especially are plentiful. As a matter of fact the doe population needs to be reduced quite a bit to keep the population in line with the amount of habitat available on post. Too many deer will have a detrimental effect on the herd during the coming year.

Non-hunters and those against the sport can't or refuse to understand. The wild animals have to be harvested to keep their numbers compatable with the amount of living area, food and water available. If allowed to multiply unchecked they create a situation which leads to their extermination.

Game laws are predicated on the theory of reaping only the surplus, leaving enough so that reproduction will keep each species in balance with its surroundings.

The taking of this harvest furnishes millions of Americans with billions of hours of vigorous, wholesome outdoor living while they are actually performing a service to the deer, turkey, quail, rabbit, squirrel and other wildlife they pursue under a scientifically planned program.

Game biologist and others who make a life study of our natural wildlife resources claim there are more deer in this country now than there were at the time the first settlers came to the original colonies. Programs financed by money provided from hunting and fishing fees and the taxes paid on the equipment purchased by sportsmen made this possible. Without interference planned programs will continue to improve the habitat and the propagation of wildlife in this country.

Happy hunting and fishing during the coming year.

Bryant tags Nebraska game, 'greatest ever'

By Jim Swink

MIAMI (AP)—Alabama's Paul "Bear" Bryant has coached in some big ones, but he calls the Tide's Orange Bowl battle with Nebraska the "biggest college game there's ever been."

The second-ranked Crimson Tide arrived Sunday to prepare for the New Year's Night showdown with No. 1 Nebraska as the Cornhuskers were undergoing their third workout in the wintertime heat of Miami.

Despite Bryant's "greatest ever" tag on the game, the legendary Alabama hero said he played ones that were personally more important during the early days of his 27-year history as a head coach.

"I don't think Alabama will fire me if we lose," he said. "When you're playing for your job . . . now that's a big game for a coach."

Alabama, 11-0, went immediately to the practice field at Miami Military College while the defending national champion Cornhuskers, 12-0, sweated it out at Miami-Dade North Junior College.

"Nebraska is probably the best team we've ever played," said Bryant, who has an incredible 14-year record of 119-27-7 with the Tide. "Their defense is simply great and the offense has wonderful balance."

Not all of the Alabama team arrived on the chartered jet from Tuscaloosa. Some came to Miami individually after taking a five-day Christmas holiday.

"The weather was so pretty back home during Christmas," said Bryant in his super-bass tone, "that it made me wish we were out there practicing instead of home eating turkey."

Bryant's 1965 national champs outscored Nebraska 39-28 in the Orange Bowl and his 1966 team battered the Huskers 34-7 in the Sugar Bowl.

"This team is better . . . by far," he said of Nebraska.

The Tide averaged only eight passes a game in its perfect regular season. Asked if he anticipated a pickup in aerial action, Bryant said, "Sure do."

The 58-year-old coaching genius said his team's physical shape is "the best it's been all year," then sort of backed into a prediction that Saturday night's game might become a high-scoring war.

Bryant's great runner, Johnny Musso, beat his coach to the punch by saying, "I feel it will be high scoring," but the Bear uttered much the same with, "I wouldn't know about how it'll go . . . but I don't see where either team has had much trouble in scoring points all season."

Ga. Tech favored over Ole Miss

ATLANTA (AP) — Georgia Tech Coach Bud Carson is unhappy at rumors saying his Yellow Jackets have no business meeting Mississippi in the Peach Bowl.

Carson said he had heard reports that folks in Mississippi felt Tech's 8-5 mark couldn't stack up against the Rebels' 9-2 record.

"That may be the talk of the town over Mississippi way," Carson said. "And if it's true, it's ugly, unfounded and completely contradictory. I agree that Ole Miss is a powerful team, and I know that the Peach Bowl has a balanced, evenly matched bowl, good any of 'em."

But Carson said some oddsmakers had installed the Jackets as favorites. "Why, that just contradicts all the talk," he said. "We're supposed to win by 2½ points and yet we're unworthy. That's the only item I agree on — we shouldn't be favored, not over a team with a 9-2 record."

The Tech coach said of his team that he had never been associated with a more courageous bunch of players.

"This is a comeback team," he said. "They showed a lot of guts turning things around. We have 10 major bowls, and the bowls match the top 20 or 25 teams. That's their purpose.

"Well, down the stretch, and at the end of the season, I know we could play with any team, look 'em in the eye and take 'em on jaw-to-jaw, chin-strap to chin-strap."

Tech rallied from an early 2-4 record to win four in a row, then lost a 28-24 heartbreaker to nationally ranked Georgia on national television Thanksgiving night.

You can bet Ole Miss' Coach Billy Kinard isn't taking the Jackets lightly.

"Tech represents our most difficult assignment since LSU, then Georgia and Alabama," he said.

LSU was beaten 24-22 by Kinard's young team, with the Tigers favored by 19 points in the Oct. 30 game.

USAMTU looking ahead to next year

The U. S. Army Marksmanship Training Unit ended one of its most successful shooting seasons this year and approaches the 1972 competitive season with some of the most outstanding marksmen the unit has ever assembled.

These potential world champions, some of the best rifle, pistol and shotgun marksmen fo the U. S. are preparing shooting campaigns which will carry them in crisscross patterns across the U. S. and into Panama and Europe during the 1972 shooting season.

Outlining one of the busiest training and shooting seasons of marksmanship history, Col. Robert M. Piper, U. S. Army Marksmaship Unit Commander, said, "We can not rest on the laurels gained in the 1971 competitive season. We know that every top shooter in the nation and the world will be gunning for the records we have established this year."

"We have instituted training programs which I expect to reflect upon our scores and improve our records of being the World's best marksmen. Of course, to do so, will require the conscientious and continuous effort of every individual shooter, coach and team member," the colonel explained.

Piper stressed the importance of local, state and regional matches and explained that this competition gives our shooters the necessary match confidence, the opportunity of employing proven techniques and gaining the experience required of a champion.

"We need competitive practice to prepare for the fierce competition which I know we will face in the Olympic trials at the U. S. International Championships, National matches and the Olympics," the colonel added.

Leading off the shooting events for the 1972 season will be the NRA Sectional Indoor pistol matches at Fort Benning, Jan. 21 through 23.

"The Sectional will be our first real test in 1972," said MSgt. Laurence Moseley, NCOIC og the USAMTU Pistol Division.

Mosely added, "The pistol team will follow the indoor matches with a 4-gun National NRA Short Course series and then compete in an International Pistol tourney. These three events, each one following the other, will be completed on Jan. 25."

"This five day marathon of shooting, Mosely added, will be followed by our pistol team entering the Florida circuit of Mid-Winter Handgun Tournaments."

Early in February, the rifle division will conduct a shooting clinic in Panama for rifle teams representing American and South American countries. This annual event is the warm climate of Panama serves as one of the best examples of Good-Will Ambassadorships and National Neighborliness. Sponsored by the U. S. Army Forces, Southern Command, the USAMTU shooters serve Rifle teams and Pistol matches held each year at the Pan American.

In March, the Service as instructors and coaches teams will be competing in the Pre-Third Army matches and Third Army matches which will be held at the Infantry post from March 22 through April 1. This will include two days of International Pistol competition, two days of National Three Gun competition and two days of High Power Rifle matches in the Pre-Third Army Matches through Mareh 25 and on the 26 the Third Army Matches will commence for both rifle and pistol competition.

In April, there will be further competition in the Interservice International matches held at Fort Benning; closely followed by the All Army Matches in May also at Fort Benning.

During the month of June, the National Trophy group of shooters will be participating in two different four-gun handgun matches and one High Power rifle match in preparation for the National Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio in August while the shooters selected for participation in the Pre-Olympic team trials and 13th United States International Shooting Championships will be seeking slots at Phoenix, Ariz. on the 24 man Olympic team.

Running Boar, Skeet and Trap teams will not be idle during this time. These competitors are intensifying their training efforts, improving their work schedule and are enthusiastically preparing for the World Moving Target Championships to be held in San Antonio, Tex. and Vandalia, Ohio. Foremost in their minds, however, are the Olympic trials held at the 13th U. S. International Shooting Championships, offering two Olympic berths in each of the Moving Target Games; Trap, Skeet and Running Boar.

Preparing to defend their successes of the past year, International Rifle shooters will be getting down to serious contention seeking membership on the four-man rifle team to tte Olympics; two of these are the Smallbore position and two are for the 300 Meter Free Rifle.

Regardless of the intermediate matches being fired, Col. Piper explained that the big goal and focal point for marksmanship competition during the 1972 shooting season will be the Olympic Games." The team will be conducting preliminary tryouts for the Olympics during the spring with the final selection to the 14 man United States Squad being made in June at the 13th U. S. International Shooting Championships held at Phoenix, Ariz. This team will include four riflemen, four handgun shooters and six moving target marksmen. "Here the shooters will be representing the United States as well as the Army. It's a berth worth shooting for, bringing prestige, honor, frame and personal satisfaction."

Current national champions are increasing their endeavors as they prepare to defend titles and become members of the big team this year. SSgt. Barbara Hile, National Women's Pistol Champion will seek to renew her title while Sp5 Joanne R. Stawski, National Women's Service Rifle Champion will be defending her title for the high power rifle crown.

At the same time, National Indoor Pistol Champion, MSgt. Emil Heugatter will be attempting to extend his claim on the national title while Capt. Lanny R. Bassham, the National Smallbore three-position Champion will be defending his title and seeking to represent the nation in the Olympics. Another Champion, SFC Herschel Anderson, Pan American Free Pistol Gold and Silver Medalist, will be endeavoring to claim the Olympic honors for the United States.

"The schedule is a busy one," the colonel said, "with but one thought in mind, 'shoot to win'."

The Army teams have plenty of talent; coupled with physical and mental discipline and the courage and high spirit displayed during the past year's shooting season, it should add up to victory for both the Army and the United States.

First post baby gets $100 bond

The first baby born in the new year to a military family will receive a birthday present of a $100 savings account, compliments of the National Bank of Fort Benning, the bank announced.

The baby must be born to the wife of an officer of the active military at Martin Army Hospital or one of the Columbus area hospitals. In the event of multiple births, the first child born will be the winner. In the event two are born at the exact same time the prize will be split.

Expectant fathers who think his baby will be born during the new year should contact Ronald Rice or Cody Smith at the advertising offices of The Bayonet, Building 6, Ledger-Enquirer Building in Columbus, Ga., 324 10th St. by Jan. 7. The father should bring a doctor's certificate to verify the actual time of birth.

Benchcraft welcomes you. Warmly, with pecan solids and pecky pecan and figured pecan veneers. Comfortably, with unassuming trace. Beautifully—and that's the wonder of Benchcraft. This is furniture in the treasured Shaker manner. Perfect function was their goal in 1820—and what they also achieved was beauty for today! Interpreted in fruitwood, or selected accent pieces in Shaker colors—blue, red, green and spice. All tops are super—finished to resist stains. The drawer and storage space seems to expand at your command. Workmanship the Shakers would have been proud to claim. All this beauty and function from Drexel for all rooms. . . .and all budgets!
