Georgia sets dates for hunting duck

Georgia's waterfowl seasons have been set for the 1986, 1987 season. The duck hunting season is Nov. 27 to 29, and Dec. 13 through Jan. 18.

Bag limits are four daily, not to exceed more than two wood ducks; three mallards, only one of which can be a hen; two pintails; one black duck; two redheads; and one fulvous tree duck.

The season is closed for canvasbacks. These seasons and bag limits will apply to the Georgia portion of Fort Benning.

For more information call 544-6120.

Winners announced in ladies golf tourney

The Ladies Golf Association of Fort Benning sposnsored its annual championship tournament Sept. 23 through 25.

The winner of the tournament was Sequel Wood; Diane Benton was runner-up, with second place to Mavis Hill and third to Sandy Casey.

In the second flight, Marion Beck was first, Mary Magner was second, and Jean Manderson was third.

Helen Harper clenched the third flight, followed by Erin Ggarland and Dottie Newberry.

George Cliff, the pro at the Follow Me Golf Course, awarded the prizes at a luncheon following the tournament.

Fall Tennis Classic set for Oct. 15-19

The 1986 Fall Tennis Classic sponsored by the Fort Benning Officers' Club and Main NCO Club will swing into action Oct. 15-19.

The tournament is open to all military, retired military, and civil service personnel and their families.

The deadline for entry is Oct. 13 at 5 p.m.

For more information contact Betsy Hayden at 687-4516.

Safety Office giving Oct. hunting classes

The Safety Office will offer a hunting safety class Oct. 20 and 21 from 7 to 10 p.m. in Building 4, Classroom 22.

All persons born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, must complete the class in order to hunt in Georgia and on the Fort Benning reservation.

For more information, call 545-3267.

Small arms shooters to meet Nov. 10-14

The U.S. Army Infantry Center Small Arms Championship Matches are scheduled for Nov. 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

A mandatory marksmanship clinic will be conducted at the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Nov. 5 through 7 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The clinics and the matches will be at Phillips Range for M1911 pistol; Easley Range for M16 rifle and McAndrews Range for M60 machine gun.

Persons interested in participating should call Capt. Woody or SFC Farmer at 545-4252.

Infantry Museum Race scheduled for Oct. 25

The 6th Annual National Infantry Museum Road Race will be Oct. 25 at 8 a.m. at Doughboy Stadium.

The race, conducted on what is described as a "flat and fast" five-mile course, starts and finishes in the vicinity of Doughboy Stadium.

Individual, team and formation awards will be given. A minimum of 50 people are required to qualify for a formation award.

Pre-race registration is being conducted in the National Infantry museum on Baltzell Avenue Tuesday through Friday 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and will continue through Oct. 24; also in Briant Wells Field House, Building 933, Oct. 24, from 5 to 9 p.m. and on Oct. 25, from 6:30 to 8:45 a.m.

Deadline for entering is 8:45 a.m. on the morning of the road race.

Proceeds from the race will go to the National Infantry Museum, which last year received more than $11,500 as a result of the event.

The road race is one of the largest in the Southeast. Last year more than 2,000 runners participated in the event. A starting field of 3,000 runners is expected this year.

The 1st Brigade, Army Training Center, won last year's National Infantry Museum five-mile race from a field of 22 formations.

The U.S. Army School of the Americas also won in a field of 48 teams, each consisting of five runners.

'Zero Day' tomorrow at post's Easley Range

The Fish and Wildlife Advisory Council will conduct its annual "Zero Day" tomorrow from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Easley Range.

The purpose of the day is to give people a chance to zero their personal weapons in time for the upcoming hunting season.

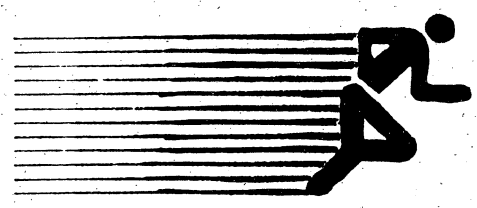
Zero Day is open to military and civilian personnel.

Post facilities set holiday hours

The Commissary will be closed Monday in observance of Columbus Day.

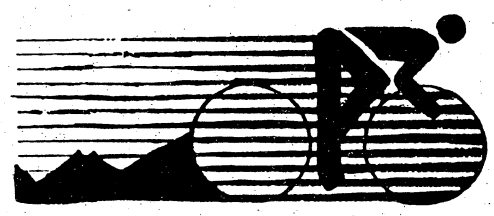
There will be no trash pick-up Monday. Trash pickup will be moved back one day for Monday and Tuesday.

For more information, call 545-5036 or 545-4749.



The following post exchange retail stores and food concessions will be open normal hours: the main store, mini mall, Custer Terrace outlet, Sand Hill Mall, Kelley Hill Troop Store, the Clothing Sales Store, Baskin Robbins, the mall bowling alley and the main post bowling alley.

All theaters will operate at their normal hours.



Service stations will follow a holiday schedule, with the mall service station opening from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and the main post service station operating from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The mall snack bar will open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.; the Hot Dog House from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.; the mini mall Pizza Pub from noon to 8 p.m.; the Sand Hill Snack Bar from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m.; the Burger King from 7 a.m. to midnight; the Kelley Hill Snack Bar from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and the Airborne Snack Bar from noon to 10 p.m.

All other retail, food and concession facilities will be closed.

Fort Benning's 10K/Biathlon

The Martin Army Community Hospital Biathlon is planned for Nov. 8. The biathlon consists of a 3-mile run, followed by a 30-mile bike ride. The 10 kilometer race will begin after all bikers are on the road.

The biathlon begins at 8:15 a.m., and the 10K follows at 9 a.m.

Courses begin and end at Martin Army Community Hospital, and will be mostly paved roads.

Competitors may enter the biathlon as individuals, members of a relay, or a three-person team. Relays can be made up of all men, all women, or a mixed group but relay members will not be eligible for individual awards.

Team members will compete separately, and their times totaled to determine the winner. Team members are eligible for individual awards.

Runners may enter the 10k race as individuals or as members of a three-person team. Their three times will be totaled to determine the winner. Team members are eligible for individual awards and will also compete for the top team trophy.

T-shirts will be given to all participants who preregister. Awards will be presented to the top three overall male and female finishers in the 10K and biathlon, the top male, female and mixed biathlon relay team, and individual age group winners.

Preregister by sending the completed entry form to: 10K/Biathlon, Box 642, MACH, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-6100, and enclosing the appropriate registration fee. Make checks payable to The Association of the U.S. Army. Preregistration deadline is Oct. 31.

Team members must submit a separate registration form for each person and submit them together with the team fee.

You can also pregister at the Physical Therapy Clinic at MACH.

Fees are: Biathlon — Individual, $10; Relay, $18; Team, $30. 10K run — Individual, $7; Team, $21. Late registration fees are: Biathlon — Individual, $13; Relay, $24; Team, $39. 10K — Individual, $10; Team, $30.

Late registration will be from 7 to 8:15 a.m. the day of the race.

For more information, call Johanna Gabbard at 544-3308 or Mark Connelly at 544-3968.

Corley Exhibit to be donated to museum

Mary B. Corley, wife of the late Brig. Gen. John T. Corley, will present the Corley Exhibit to the National Infantry Museum Oct. 21 at 11 a.m.

The ceremony will be in the James W. Woodruff Auditorium. Principle speakers for the event will be post commander, Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., retired Maj. Gen. Albert Smith and retired CSM Ted Dobol.

Corley graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y in 1938. In 1939 he was assigned as a platoon leader in the 26th Infantry Regiment. While serving with that unit he filled every position up to battalion commander and was awarded every decoration for valor except the Medal of Honor.

He was the director of the Ranger Department here from 1958 to 1960. In 1963 he was promoted to brigadier general and retired in 1966.

His decorations include the Distinguished Service Medal, eight Silver Star medals, four Bronze Star medals with "V" device, two awards of the Dinstinguished Service Cross, two awards of the Legion of Merit, the Purple Heart and the Soldier's Medal.

Group has accomplished much in bringing communities together

The Civilian and Military Council celebrates its 40th anniversary today. Past and present members of the influential group plan to meet over lunch and share the memories of the council's last 40 years.

Organized in October 1946 under the guidance of then Maj. Gen. John W. O'Daniel, the council was called the Citizens-Military Council. O'Daniel, who was the commander of Fort Benning, believed a requirement existed for a group that could eliminate some of the friction between the military and civilian communities in the aftermath of World War II.

His decision, aided by concurrance from Maynard Ashworth, a retired Army officer turned newspaper man, and spurred on by a War Deprtment directive, became a reality when the group met Oct. 11, 1946.

The council was organized as an advisory body, designed to deal with the relations between the soldier and civilian populations. The early council members also hoped the group would be able to help settle potential difficulties arising out of misunderstandings.

The group's membership has always been comprised of top officials from Fort Benning and the local communities who can take positive action necessary to prevent any rupture in the civilian-military relationship.

Renamed the Civilian and Military Council in 1968, the group has earned the deep-rooted support of many local citizens through its actions over the years.

In its early years the council concerned itself with such issues as recreational facilities for soldiers in the local community, beautification of the highways leading to and from Fort Benning, and under the heading of general good relations, a wide variety of issues were addressed and tackled.

The council was directly involved in an Army Day — a predecessor to today's Armed Forces Day celebrations. Its members also actively sought solutions to the problems facing the peacetime soldier of the late 1940s. In 1949 the council developed a program to welcome foreign dignitaries to the tri-city area.

At the outbreak of the Korean conflict, there was a severe housing shortage in the tri-city area. With the influx of great numbers of troops and families, more off-post housing became a necessity. The council took matters in hand and within a few months, a short-term solution had been reached.

Through the Columbus Ministerial Alliance, whose president is a member of the council,

Tri-cities residents with foresight responsible for successful council

by Paul Timm
Ledger/Enquirer military analyst

It was 40 years ago that men with foresight in Columbus, spurred on by a War Department directive, conceived the Citizen and Military Council of Columbus, Fort Benning and Phenix City. It was a fortuitous decision spearheaded by Maynard Ashworth, publisher emeritus of these newspapers and long time supporter of the American military establishments.

It was at the end of World War II when much of the civilian emphasis on and interest in the military establishment began to wane as it had in all wars past — and probably will in the future. Once again signs began to appear in yards: "Dogs and soldiers keep off!"

Camp followers, a phenomena that dates from before the days of Caesar Augustus, did nothing to help the military image in communities like Columbus and Phenix City when hordes from Atlanta and Birmingham came to the banks of the Chattahoochee on military payday like rain falling during a summer downpour.

The oft-told but untrue tale that Gen. George Patton pulled his 2nd Armored Division tanks up to the Dillingham and 14th Street bridges and threatened to blow Phenix City off the map if his tankers weren't treated better was told and retold. It got better with the retelling, but it never happened — quite.

It was before the days of the Department of Defense, a throwback to the War Department days of Newton D. Baker (he held sway long before World War II) that the first realistic efforts to improve military/civilian relationships became policy.

Maj. Gen. John W. (Iron Mike) O'Daniel received the War Department directive and made perhaps one of the smartest moves ever consummated by a commanding general of Fort Benning. (The days of Chief of Infantry were five years past and 30 some odd years before revival.) He called upon his longtime friend Maynard Ashworth, a lieutenant colonel during World War II, to lay the groundwork for the Civilian and Military Council mandated by the Secretary of War.

That directive was not targeted at Fort Benning alone but was nation-wide in scope. The War Department recognized that with the cessation of hostilities, a deterioration in the support of the military was bound to occur. Military and civilian leaders in Fort Benning, Phenix City and Columbus were determined to see that it didn't happen here.

Forty years ago this month the Civilian and Military Council was formed with 16 members pulled from the whole spectrum of people — elected officials, ministers, bankers, journalists, public school officals, Chamber of

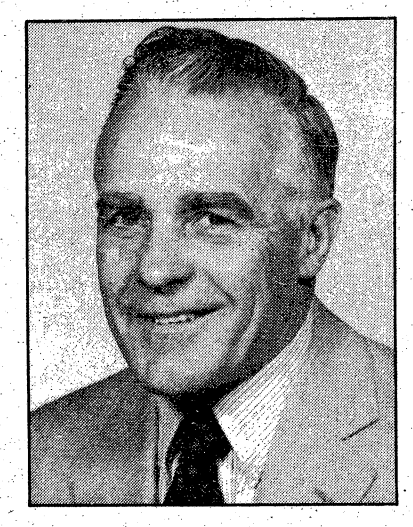
Various voices



In light of the Civilian Military Council's 40th anniversary, some of the group's long-time members took a chance this week to share their impressions of the council. The Bayonet salutes the Civilian Military Council and all of its members from over the years.

Jane Gullatt, Phenix City Mayor — "The fact that the group is celebrating its 40th anniversay indicates its staying power and importance to the community. One of the big benefits has to do with the liaison it provides in bringing together the civilian and military people of the tri-community. It gives them a better understanding of each other and gives them an opportunity to work together to solve problems."

John Gause, Member for 25 years as the Deputy Public Affairs Officer, Fort Benning — "I think the CMC is the single strongest organization in the area which can assure continued good relations between our communities. Its membership is made up of decision makers and people truly interested in the military and the community. And these people can make things happen when needed."

Robert Sullivan, Chairman Military Affairs Committee, Columbus Chamber of Commerce, Chairman Civilian Military Council — "I was a member in 1968 and 1969 when I was the public affairs officer at Fort Benning. I saw the real significant things that happened as a result of the council in the tri-city area. Many times as the PAO I saw things come up that the commanding general was concerned about that got solved quickly as a result of that council. It was really a privilege for me to come back."

Glenn Vaughn, President and Publisher Ledger and Enquirer Newspapers — "The Civilian Military Council may well be the most important, effective organization in our community. It's effective because it has the full loyalty, support and active involvement of the uppermost leadership in the Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning community. Simply getting together on a regular basis affords these top leaders an opportunity not only to know and understand each other, but to recognize and deal with potential problems before they become problems."

Charles Daley, Member at large — "It has been a wonderful community asset to keep feelings between Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City always on the best level possible. It has helped the commanding general at Fort Benning deal with problems looming down the road before they became problems. There haven't been any problems in recent years, but when the Civilian Military Council was first organized there were some that the council helped solve. I have had the privilege to serve as chairman of the council on two different occasions."

CMC formed as clearing house for problems

Planners hoped exchanging ideas would create harmony in community

Editor's note: The following editorial was written by Maynard R. Ashworth in 1946, shortly after the Citizens-Military Council had its first meeting. It appears here just as it did in the Ledger/Enquirer that Sunday morning.

by Maynard R. Ashworth

Major General John W. O'Daniel, Commanding General, Fort Benning, recently appointed a Citizens and Military Advisory Council, whose members are charged with considering, and effecting a solution, if possible, of special problems of mutual interest to military authorities and the citizens of this area, including Columbus, Muscogee County, Phenix City and Russell County. This council will act as a clearing house for all of the military or civilians, where either group can be of assistance to the other.

The War Department directed that this council be appointed, and thereby set a pattern which is to be followed wherever a military post is located close to a populated area. Administrative problems constantly arise, affecting both the military and civilian, when soldiers and citizens are living in close proximity. Establishing these councils should enable a qualified group to explore fully these problems as they arise and arrive at equitable solutions, thus preventing misunderstandings. Better understanding all around should be the result. It is obviously a step better to dove-tail thinking by the military and civilians. Interests of both are in many respects the same; the last war there was too little understanding by either.

Men and women in the armed forces are citizens of this country just as much as any civilians; they pay taxes, raise families and have homes (although not for long in any one place).

The only difference is they wear a uniform, though even this is not mandatory off post. From now on out we are going to find that there will be many more of our citizens in the armed forces than prior to the war and we are going to see and hear a lot more about the armed forces.

Practically every family in this nation has had some direct contact with the armed forces through a member or relative having served. We have all had a good schooling in the military. A good relationship has been built and must be maintained. Close coordination through these military-citizens councils will do much to keep this friendly feeling and spirit of cooperation alive.

Some of the remarks which General O'Daniel made at the initial meeting on Friday, Oct. 11 are quoted; "The object of these meetings will be to see that the good relations which now exist between Fort Benning and surrounding communities will continue and be improved as they need improving. We, at Benning, appreciate cooperation from the Police of Columbus and Phenix City and Muscogee and Russell Counties. We have seen marked improvement in relationships with these policing authorities and feel confident any exisiting irregularities will be corrected.

The policing situation is getting better and better all the time. My attitude is one of extreme sincerity with the desire to get the best out of my command at all times.

I want all to like the soldiers and realize that if this is to be accomplished, my soldiers must bring it about through their own actions. I am extremely interested in my job." (General O'Daniel need not have told us this fact as it is very evident — his sincerity of purpose and alertness are evidenced by his enthusiasm and energetic approach to all problems.) "Our peace-time program at Benning is equally as strenuous and tough as during wartime — in some instances more so. Benning is to be the Infantry center of the Army. Its population will remain as large as now, probably larger — it will not fall off. The housing situation is causing considerable trouble. From 2,000 to 3,000 families are now living in and around Columbus. Recently a survey of housing within a radius of from 50 to 75 miles disclosed room for only 100 families. I am particularly interested in recreational facilities for colored troops. We have around 7,000 colored troops and we need more places of recreation in Columbus and all of this area."

Meetings of the Citizens-Military Council will be held on the second Friday of each month, the next one is in Columbus. This invitation was extended by Ralph I. King, a member of the council, representing the Chamber of Commerce of Columbus. The third meeting will probably be in Phenix City.

General O'Daniel feels the enlisted men are not given the consideration they should be given when entertainments are held by civilians for Benning personnel. The enlisted man very often feels rankled with Columbus because he is left out of the picture on these occasions. It was suggested by a civilian member that the civic clubs might each have a barbecue or party for possibly 100 enlisted men. This would enable a large number to get better acquainted with Columbus people. This plan might be adopted by the American Legion and other servicing organizations to good effect. General O'Daniel wants more discipline among his troops when they are in Columbus. An officer from each installation at Fort Benning has been assigned to enforce uniform regulations when the men are off post. General W.M. Miley wanted to know where Beechy Howard's place was since many of his men seemed to get in trouble at this place.

a Columbus church offered space to be used as a billeting office that keep a list of vacancies. Newspapers and radio stations, all of which are represented on the council, cooperated by appealing to individuals with vacancies to list them with the referral office.

As the members of the Civilian Military Council look over the last 40 years today, they will reflect on a lot of accomplishments. Because of the nature of the group, its members will almost certainly also look ahead to another 40 years of equally successful work in the tri-city area.

Many of the council's members have said over the years that the group is not necessarily valuable for what it has done, but instead is valuable for what it is capable of doing, should the need arise. The records, however, show that the need has arisen in the past and the council was there to take matters in hand and resolve a quick and workable solution.

Original member says council positive effect over years

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Things were different back then.

Maynard Ashworth Sr., respectfully call "The Colonel" by his friends and associates, said the tri-community has changed much since the Civilian Military Council was formed in 1946.

"There were so many rough joints back then. A lot of the joints were in Phenix City, but the roughest place of all was in Columbus on 5th Avenue. Most places we left the gun in the car, but when we went in this place we took the gun with us," he said.

As an Army captain at Fort Benning, Ashworth had the chore of visiting these "joints" from time to time with the post provost marshal.

"There were so many of those kinds of places, that at 3 in the morning we were still making the rounds," he said. "They catered to soldiers, particularly jumpers, because jumpers got paid $50 more each month and those businesses wanted that $50."

Ashworth said that the council was formed as a means to help deal with the variety of problems that soldiers suffered as a result of these type of opportunist businessmen.

"There were many problems at the time and soldiers were getting mistreated. They were being roughed up and robbed all the time, and being punished twice when they got in trouble."

This type treatment of soldiers was widespread and things were getting out of hand, Ashworth said. "Then (Maj.) Gen. (John W.) O'Daniel became post commander, and he was a two-fisted kind of guy who wanted to do something about this situation, so the council was formed, he said. "It was called the Citizens and Military Council when it began. It was made up of people with influence in the community, who came together to solve any problems that came up. If soldiers weren't being taken care of or were mistreated, they'd take action."

Ashworth explained that one of the first problems the council dealt with was doing something about this double punishment. "They'd be punished by civilian authorities and then by military authorities, and one of the first things we did was help work it out so that civilian authorities would turn over soldiers to Fort Benning's MPs for punishment," he said.

Top leaders in the community were on the council, the movers and shakers who had the power to effect changes, he explained. But it was different from other organizations.

"It was friendly in a way," he said. "It was agreed that everything that was discussed there should be kept within those four walls, whatever we did or said would go no further. This rule has been strenuously observed and as far as I know nothing every went beyond those walls, even when news men were members."

Over the last 40 years, the group has dealt with a variety of problems that run the gamut.

"We've seen three big wars here and the buildups always created problems. Most of it was petty stuff, but that's what most people live by," he said.

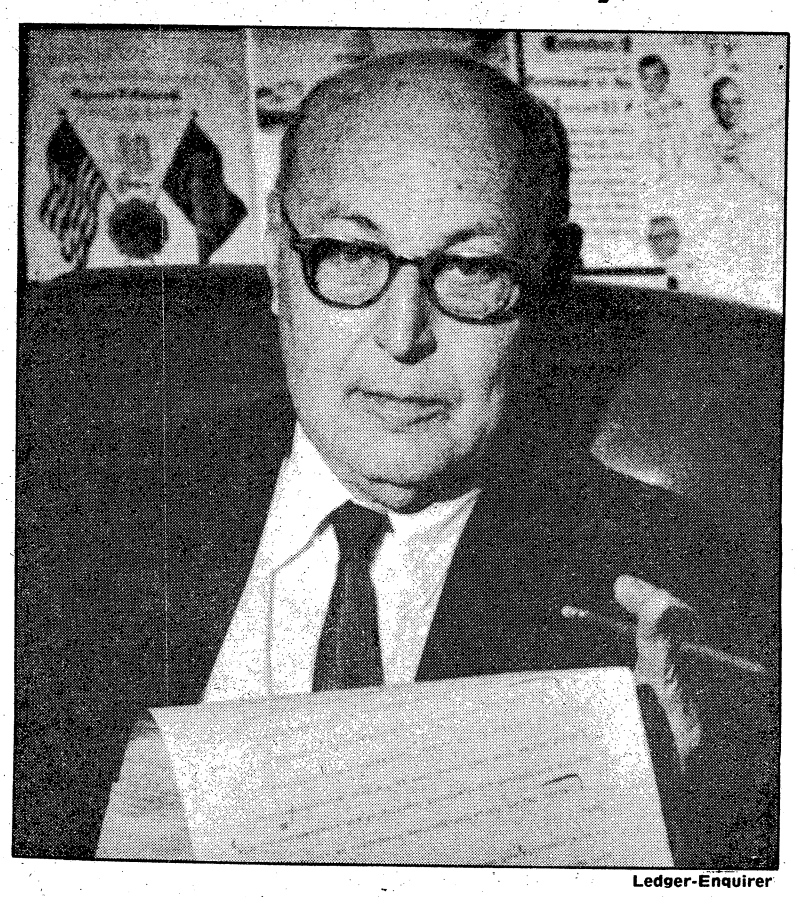
"For example, during the Korean War, we found out that 35 G.I.s were living in a large house downtown that had no bathroom or kitchen facilities and only had a small grill to cook on. You can imagine the problems people would have trying to live there.

"On top of that, the soldiers were being charged way too much rent for such shoddy merchandise."

Ashworth said that by setting up a meeting between the involved parties, the council "greased the wheels" to finding solutions to this kind of problem.

From the beginning, the council was oriented towards helping Fort Benning. "Benning is a tremendous operation, managing an enormous population, spending millions, and servicing these people, and retirees, there's bound to be some friction sometimes," he said.

"A soldier is here for only a short time and doesn't have any roots, he's inexperienced and this makes him prey for those type people who want to take advantage of him."



Ashworth gave the CMC major credit for the positive relationship enjoyed by the community and the post. "We've got a good feeling here between civilians and soldiers, and it's because of this organization. Columbus is a town where the military is looked upon as a friend," he said. "The CMC has created an atmosphere of friendliness and readiness to help. It all adds up to a mutual respect and a readiness to give aid to soldiers."

"CMC has been a sort of insurance for this community for 40 years and has served it well," he said."

Because of the success of the program at Benning, other posts in the Army established similar councils throughout the world, but Ashworth said he's heard from commanders that the group at Benning is the best in the Army.

While the council hasn't been a highly visible force, it's been effective at getting things done for soldiers.

"We haven't been obtrusive, we haven't tried to tell anyone what to do; we've been there to help when it was needed, wherever our troops were worldwide."

Ledger-Enquirer

Maynard R. Ashworth looks over newspaper copy in 1965.

About Maynard R. Ashworth: Maynard R. Ashworth, president emeritus of the Ledger and Enquirer Newspapers, and a charter member of the Civilian Military Council, has long been a supporter of Fort Benning.

He received the Spirit of Fort Benning Award in 1985, which was established to honor civilian leaders who demonstrate extraordinary friendship and support for Fort Benning and the American infantryman.

Ashworth enlisted in the Army in 1917 and was recalled to duty as a captain in 1941. While assigned to the Office of Public Affairs at Fort Benning, he initiated publication of The Bayonet, which has been published each week continuously since 1942.

After World War I, Ashworth taught school in Oklahoma and Minnesota, worked in a department store in Pennsylvania, and in real estate in Pennsylvania, Florida and California.

In 1927 he entered the newspaper field with the Ledger-Enquirer, ultimately becoming president and publisher. He served in that capacity until 1976, when he was made president emeritus.

Ashworth was a charter member of the Chattahoochee Valley Association of the U.S. Army. In 1985, the national AUSA presented Ashworth with the "Gen. Creighton W. Abrams Medal," in recognition of his long and dedicated support of the Army.

Commerce (including the junior edition) and other business leaders as well as key military men from Fort Benning.

The thrust of the council was to solve any differences, real or imagined, between the military at Fort Benning and the civilians in the surrounding area. Nothing was to be left to chance.

The meetings continue to be held monthly and while members of the media are vital voices in the Civilian and Military Council, the proceedings thereof have been kept off record - more by gentlemen's agreement than anything else.

While that original War Department directive went to all military installations from coast to coast, none has achieved the success of that recognized in the Columbus/Phenix City/Fort Benning environment.

It is due in great measure to the CMC that Columbus and Phenix City have become synonymous with being good Army towns." The same cannot be said for other places in the United States where the military and the civilian communities must coexist for better or for worse.

Were proof of that to be needed one only has to check the record — more than 30,000 retired military and family members live within a 50-mile radius of Fort Benning, most of whom are residents of the area by choice rather than by birth.

The Civilian and Military Council is a viable and strong bond between two segments of local American society.

A great debt of gratitude is owed to Gen. Iron Mike O'Daniel and his close friend, Col. (he deserves the rank) Maynard Ashworth now into his 93rd year of enjoying a civilian-military relationship for which he is, in large part, responsible.

Lieutenant gets 'hard knocks' in first week of Airborne School

Editor's note: This is the first in a three-part series that will allow our readers to follow one student through three weeks with Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry. The story of the U.S. Army Airborne School will be told by a newly commissioned second lieutenant bound for the Medical Service Corps.

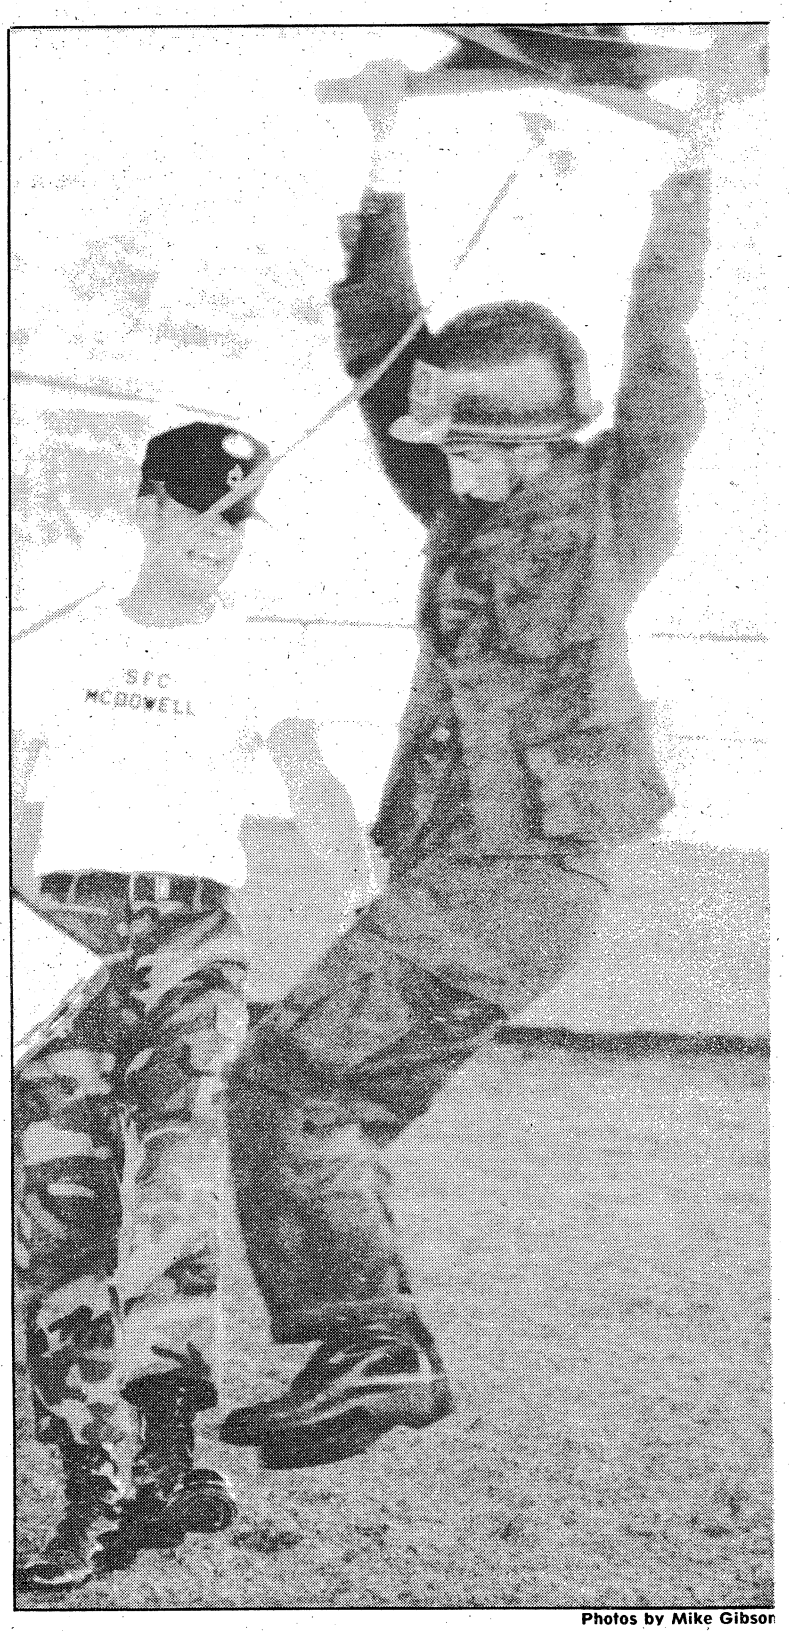
It was called "treatment shock" for a new second lieutenant like myself. Having just come on active duty after an extended summer leave, the U.S. Army Airborne School was a harsh way to begin my Army career.

"Get down Maam," . . . "Get up Maam," . . . "Push Georgia into Alabama Maam!" shouted the Black Hats, or Airborne instructors to the "dirty, nasty Legs" as we are called.

"Airborne Class 48-86, Devils in Baggy Pants," reported with 412 students on day one at Ground Branch. Tension ran high and nerves were on edge as we were continually reminded that some of us would not be here next week. We quickly got used to hearing the expression, "You can't be a motorcycle, a bicycle or a tricycle — Do you want to be a recycle?!" Recycle took on a threatening and despicable connotation.

At the beginning of the week you think nothing of being a "leg", someone who is not Airborne-qualified. But, by week's end, you've grown to despise the nickname and "sucking up the pain" and "driving on" is preferable to being a "leg" for life.

The Black Hats believe it is their duty to keep all students humble throughout training and therefore need little encouragement before they command you to drop and assume the "front-leaning-rest" or push-up position. (I did more push-ups the first two days of training than I had in my entire life prior.)



Additionally, Ground Week emphasizes the instruction of the parachute landing fall, and the method of exiting the aircraft. The PLF is practiced in varying forms in a large sawdust pit. Gradually you move to a two-foot wall and eventually to the lateral drift apparatus. To me, jumping off the wall was more frightening than the LDA because the momentum of the cable system aids the rolling and enables you to more easily hit your five points of contact, versus attempting it from a stationary position.

"Tuck your chin," "Keep your knees and ankles together!," the Black Hats shouted continuously. I had a great deal of difficulty keeping my ankles together until my instructor placed a sheet of paper between my ankles and instructed me to "Keep it there, . . . or I'd be sorry . . ."

In order to overcome the fear of heights, the 34-feet-high tower is used to simulate exiting the aircraft properly. Wearing a T-10 parachute and a reserve chute, each student exits the tower dropping approximately 20 feet before being caught by the risers and cable system. The objective is to spring up and out upon exiting in order to ensure that you clear the aircraft. Most though, like myself, were scared enough initially that we ended up just walking out the door. Needless to say, we also had to keep repeating the process until our exits had improved.

By Friday of Ground Week we had lost 60 because of injury and recycling. Although they still shouted, it was obvious that the Black Hats were proud of the students that remained. (We'd not only survived the rigorous training but also their poor jokes . . .) Humor interjected more liberally by week's end made the training more endurable. Jokes abounded about the benefits of the "Fort Benning Fitness Program," complete with sun, surf and exercise as we rolled through the showers in the heat of the day and watched Navy Seals bark their way through the puddles. Once wet, we practiced our PLFs in the sawdust pit, emerging as giant granola bars swatting the ever-present gnats.

By Thursday of Ground Week, I really felt the pride and excitement associated with my progression in Airborne School. Everyone was able to stand taller, "pop and snap" faster and shout louder with more enthusiasm at the thought of being one week closer to joining the ranks of the proud and mighty Airborne.

Wives, kids break up monotony for armor soldiers during exercise

Armed with platters of homemade cookies and other treats, family members of soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade, went to the range last week.

However, their mission was one of support to husbands and fathers who are in the field to complete the Battalion's annual tank gunnery qualification.

Soldiers and family members from Companies B and C recently celebrated Family Days on Fort Benning's Hastings and Carmouche Ranges. The family members were invited to see what the armor soldiers do, and learn about the Battalion's M60 and M1 tanks.

"My husband never brings his work home, so I don't know much about his job," said Bev Chambers, wife of SSgt. Stan Chambers, a tank commander from Co. C. "I'm not so worried about his safety after seeing the tanks and meeting the guys on his crew."

The companies in the Battalion have been rotating to the gunnery ranges. They began the tank gunnery early in October, testing the individual and crew skills of the armor soldiers.

The Battalion began section level qualification this week and will wrap up the month-long tank gunnery with platoon battle runs on Fort Benning's Hastings Range.

"All of the companies in the Battalion wanted to invite the wives and families out here to see what we do," said Capt. John Blasser, Co. C commander. "The Family Day breaks up the time that we spend in the field."

Army reactivates 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment

by Kathryn B. Potter
Company C, 1-507th Parachute Infantry

The reactivation of the 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment was hosted by the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Sept. 25 at Fryer Field.

On Oct. 23, 1985 the 505th was organized as a brigade with only two battalions. With the recent addition of the third battalion, the reactivation of a regiment that has established an impressive record as a combat unit became possible.

The 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment received its colors in September 1942 at Fort Benning from Brig. Gen. George P. Howell, Commanding General of the 1st Parachute Infantry Brigade.

According to a Oct 8, 1942 issue of The Bayonet, "Lt. Col. James Gavin was credited in military vital statistics with having been presented with a brand new baby:" the 505th.

At that time, the regiment was the youngest full strength regiment in the Army. Even in 1942, the Army had great expectations for the 505th. The 1942 issue of The Bayonet said "It doesn't matter whether the men of the 505th are standing in the door to jump, attacking dummies with bayonets, marching in review, or just plain walking down the street — they put an extra something in it, which is the difference between just a man in uniform and a man who firmly believes that whatever tradition the 505th will one day have is up to him."

The 505th lived up to these expectations as a part of the 82nd Airborne Division in combat action in World War II, Vietnam and most recently in Grenada.

In World War II, the 505th as part of the 82nd Airborne Division under British Operational Command took an active part in Operation Marketgarden in September 1944.

Operation Market was by far the largest and most ambitious airborne operation ever carried out by any nation up to that point. A total of 34,876 Airborne troops were flown in by plane, glider or as paratroopers.

Operation Market's mission was to capture and hold the crossings over the canals and rivers on Second Army's main axis of advance from Eindhoven to Arnhem.

Operation Garden's mission was to place the Second Army, including Airborne forces, astride the rivers Maas, Waal and Neder Rijn and to dominate the country between the Rhine and the Zuider Zee, thus cutting off communication between Germany and Holland.

The 505th's outstanding contributions over the course of history have made it a model for the Airborne fighting spirit. The 1-507th is honored to have hosted the reactivation of such an elite regiment.

Sept. 17, 1944

Division parachute elements in 482 C-47s and a serial of 50 gliders left airports in the area of Grantham, England between 9:50 and 10:40 a.m. All drop patterns were excellent and assembly was the best in the history of the Division.

The 505th dropped after the Pathfinders at 1 p.m., seized Groesbeck, occupied its area of defensive responsibility from Kamp southeast to Mook, cleared its area of enemy and contacted the 504th Parachute Infantry at the Maas-Waal canal bridge near Heuman. All initial missions were accomplished by 8 p.m.

Sept. 19, 1944

The 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment, less the 2nd Battalion, maintained its sector of responsibility on the south of the Division area throughout the day.

Sept. 20, 1944

The 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment, less 2nd Battalion, r pelled sharp enemy attack Horst and Heikant during mor ing. From 1 to 8 p.m. the 505 repelled enemy attack of an i fantry regiment strongly su ported by artillery after attac had penetrated Division perim ter to a depth of 1,000 yards on 1,000-yard front. Division perim ter restored at 8 p.m. Regimer reinforced with attachment of 1 glider pilots.

Sept. 21, 1944

The 505th held the defensiv sector.

Sept. 22, 1944

The 505th reestablished roa blocks at Mook.

Until D Day plus 30, the Div sion continued on its missio maintaining this same front.

Summary of Sept. 17 to Oct. 1 1944 action:

Parachute lift — 482 plane committed, 430 dropped on c within 1,000 yards of drop zone, 5 failed to drop within 1,000 yar of drop zone.

Around Fort Benning

Editor's Note: "Around Fort Benning" is a new column that will appear in the Bayonet each week. Its purpose is to highlight the actvities of various post units.

Input is welcome from all sources and should be submitted to the Editor in Room 601, Building 4 by 11 a.m. Monday. All input must be typed, double-spaced with the name and specific unit of the writer and should be limited to two pages. Submissions will be subject to standard editing and condensing.

High quality black and white photographs will also be considered for publication in this column.

A special team of soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery has been using a new system to determine the map location of a target.

The Positive Azimuth Determining System has brought the accuracy of a computer to the artillery.

Normally, te PADS is mounted on a jeep for mobility. However, the Battalion operations section recently used the PADS mounted on a OH58 observation helicopter to pinpoint target locations on Fort Benning's Ferguson Range.

Many of the same targets will be used for the battery qualification later this month. This will aid the Battalion in evaluating an artilleryman's ability to determine the map location of a target.

"PADS is extremely accurate," said Capt. Steven Geise, 2-10th Field Artillery fire support officer. "It can collect survey data over a vast area and eliminate the error factors of conventional survey techniques. It also determines a target to a 10-digit grid coordinate." — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade Public Affairs Office.

USARSA

A group of Pacelli High School students, currently in their third and fourth year of Spanish language study, visited the U.S. Army School of the Americas Oct. 10.

The intent of their visit was to conduct studies on certain Latin American countries and to establish a story hour in Spanish for dependent children of Latin American guest instructors and students at USARSA.

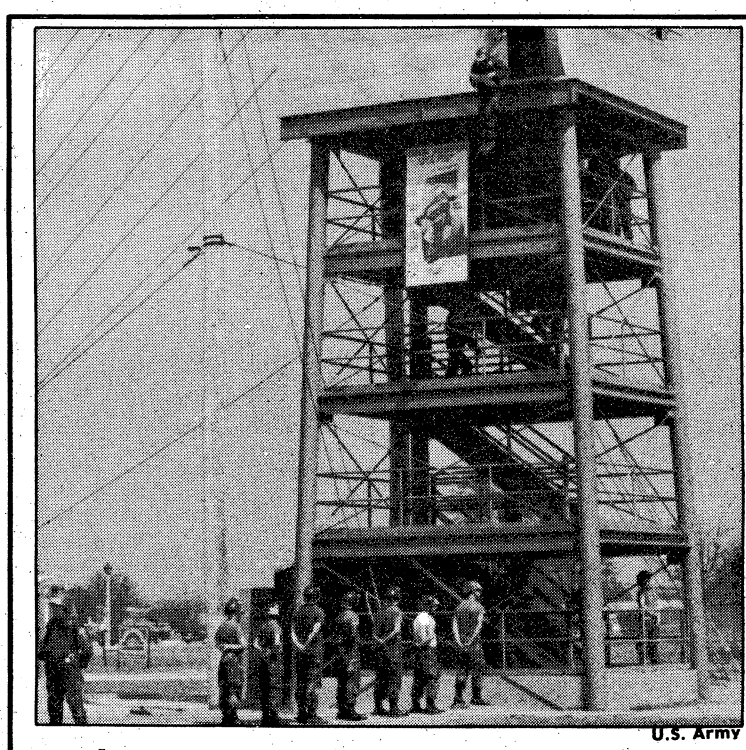
The story hour begins Oct. 25 at 2 p.m., and will feature stories in Spanish, games, songs and crafts. Scheduled as a monthly event, this month's theme will center on Halloween.

Parents who need more information on this program should call the USARSA library at 545-4631. — Laurie Batten, U.S. Army School of the Americas.

36th Engineer

Recently the 533rd Transportation Company and the 361st Trailer Transfer Detachment underwent an annual Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program.

The ARTEP was conducted under a fictional wartime scenario that pitted two U.S. corps against an enemy that had seized the city of Savannah and held most of Southeastern South Carolina. The U.S. forces were advancing to the east across Georgia throughout the ARTEP.



As non-divisional, corps assets, the 533rd Trans. Co. and the 361st Trailer Transfer Det. were alerted and deployed to the area in the vicinity of Leyte heliport on Fort Benning. The units had orders to establish a bivouac and be prepared to receive line haul missions within eight hours.

Within eight hours and 20 minutes, the 67th Trans. Bn. (notional) had already committed the 533rd to its first line haul mission.

The 533rd and 361st received almost constant sniper fire and small unit probings on their perimeters.

As the advance and attack on Savannah unfolded, the 533rd was required to displace its company headquarters and one platoon to Fort Stewart, Ga. and establish operations under the 3024th Transportation Battalion. The approximately 225-mile convoy was conducted flawlessly and after a recon of the area, the unit established a bivouac.

The six-day exercise concluded when the Fort Stewart element converged on the unit motor pool and linked up with the stay-behind platoons redeploying from Leyte heliport. The two units drove an accumulated mileage of 9,574 miles during the ARTEP. — Jeffrey Davis, 533rd Transportation Company.

Similarly, to assure the timely arrival of mail into the continental United States from overseas locations, it should be mailed to arrive at United States gateway points — New York, Miami, San Francisco and Seattle — by the following dates:

Destination	Priority	Letters	Parcels: Airlift Space Available (PAL)	Parcels: Airlift Space Available (SAM)
Gateway Points	12 Dec	12 Dec	8 Dec	24 Nov.

Parcels will arrive at their intended destination in good shape if you follow a few simple guidelines:

❑ Cushion. Make sure contents are well cushioned and there is no empty space in the box. Use crumpled newspaper around the item — including all sides, the top and the bottom.

❑ Don't overwrap. Just use your carton. Brown paper and twine are not necessary. Paper can rip, and twine can become entangled in mail processing equipment.

❑ Seal properly. Close your parcel with one of the three recommended types of tape — pressure-sensitive, nylon-reinforced kraft paper or glass-reinforced pressure-sensitive. Don't use cellophane tape or masking tape.

❑ Position addresses properly. Put the recipient's address in the lower right portion of the package and your return address in the upper left corner. And put them on only one side of the package. It's a good idea to put a slip with the address and return address inside the parcel.

❑ Use ZIP codes. Be sure to include the ZIP code in both the recipient's and your address. Remember, wrong ZIP codes can delay the mail.

❑ Time it right. Mail early in the month and early in the day.

'Uncle Sam' gives troops early Christmas present

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

More than 150 Fort Benning soldiers will get an early Christmas present courtesy of Uncle Sam.

The troops, scheduled to be released from the Army Dec. 3 through Jan. 2, have been issued amended orders with early release dates beginning Dec. 2.

According to Mary Howard, chief of the Separation Transfer Point, Adjutant General Division, the voluntary early release program's main purpose is to do soldiers a favor.

"It's solely for their convenience that they are released early. This way they can get home for the holidays early," she said.

Soldiers with an expiration term of service date that falls within the affected period automatically receive the amended orders. If they want to take advantage of the program, all they have to do is pack their bags and clear post by the amended date, Howard explained.

The majority of soldiers like the program, Howard said. "I'd say in the past, we've had 99 percent positive responses from the soldiers. Not too many want to stay here when they can go home."

If they don't want to get out early, then they have to sign a statement to that effect. Soldiers assigned to the 197th Infantry Brigade can do this at Building 9000, while all others should go to Building 2608 on main post.

"Soldiers do need to know that they will lose a little bit of pay, since their pay will be figured according to the new ETS date," Howard said.

While most of the soldiers who benefit from the program are enlisted, some officers are also affected. However, officers may be retained on active duty until their release date when operational needs dictate.

Some personnel are not eligible for the program, Howard said. Reserve component soldiers undergoing special training programs or fixed tours on active duty in support of reserve components; officers who have a Department of the Army approved release from active duty date or resignation date; officers being involuntarily relieved from active duty on a specific date as directed by DA, other than early release; soldiers scheduled for retirement and soldiers with actions pending under Army Regulation 600-31.

If you think you might be eligible for the program but have not received orders, call 545-1879. Soldiers at the 197th should call 544-3277.

Students encouraged to plan holiday vacation now

U.S. Army Military Personnel Center

The holiday season is fast approaching. It's time for college students whose Army families are stationed overseas to make their plans to go home for winter break under the Funded Student Travel Program.

According to Thomas E. Gray, traffic management specialist at the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center, approximately 1,000 students used the program over the past year. About 700 of them traveled during the winter holidays, with the remainder scattered thoughout the rest of the year.

"Sponsors need to get requests for travel in early," Gray said. "We recommend applying as early as possible, but not later than 60 days before the desired date of travel."

Gray went on to caution that air service to and from many college towns is limited or very strained during the holiday period. Also, travel during December to some places in South America, the Far East and Europe is almost impossible to arrange after mid-October.

"Desired travel dates on the student's orders are merely a starting point for us," Gray continued. "We work with each student in arranging the best possible itinerary. However, we do need an accurate telephone number at which the student can be contacted. The lack of a good telephone number really slows things down."

Funded student travel covers one trip per 12-month period from college to the family's overseas location and back. The student may ship 225 pounds of unaccompanied baggage.

To be eligible for the program, a student must be less than 23 years of age and enrolled in a college in one of the 50 states or District of Columbia, pursuing an undergraduate degree. The sponsor must be permanently stationed outside the U.S., serving a command-sponsored accompanied tour.

"The sponsor applies for funded student travel at the supporting personnel office," Gray said. "The sponsor has to present documentation showing that the student meets program requirements."

The overseas command reviews the information and issues travel orders, which are transmitted to MILPERCEN. Travel Procedures Branch then contacts the student to arrange travel and baggage shipment.

Gray recommended that sponsors call their children after they apply and give them the MILPERCEN student travel telephone number. Students can call if they have not heard from Travel Procedures Branch within a few days — in case their paperwork is delayed or doesn't have their correct phone numbers.

"Our toll-free number is 800-582-5552," Gray said. "Students in Virginia should call 202-325-7783 collect. We can answer questions and help with travel and packing arrangements.

"However, we have only four people to answer phones," he cautioned. "The line can get tied up when we have so many students to assist. Please keep trying if you get a busy signal."

Once they have gotten in touch with a student, the people in the Travel Procedures Branch make complete reservations from the student's school to the parent's overseas duty station. Reservations are based on the student's schedule and the availability of flights. By law MILPERCEN must use Military Airlift Command flights if they are available. If none are available, students fly commercial.

Once travel arrangements have been made, students need to be sure that they have their ID cards, and any required passports, visas and records of immunization. Students should also have a minimum of $100, preferably in travelers' checks, to pay for food or lodging enroute caused by delays.

DOL temporarily 'taking in laundry'

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning started the new fiscal year short one laundry contractor, leaving the Directorate of Logistics with a dirty problem.

Without a contractor, customers of Fort Benning's laundry service can expect a longer wait for getting their uniforms cleaned.

That's the official word from Dale Ellis, director of logistics, whose office is responsible for providing laundry services to Fort Benning. Negotiations to let contracts for the service fell through in late September, leaving DOL no alternative but to provide the service itself until a suitable contractor can be found.

Just what happened to the laundry contract boils down to two things: little contractor interest and high costs.

"When we offered this year's service for bids, we broke it down into two separate services; Martin Army Community Hospital's laundry and all other laundry," Ellis said. "We received only two bids and one firm bid only on the MACH contract."

That bidder, Wade's Laundry of Columbus, was awarded the MACH contract. The other bid was rejected because it was too high.

The contract was opened for bids again and bids submitted were again too high, leaving DOL to find an alternate means of getting the laundry done until a suitable contractor can be found.

DOL personnel have been borrowed from other offices and temporarily assigned to work as counter and delivery people and truck drivers.

"Customers can still turn in and pick up laundry at Building 2500," Ellis said. "Laundry for new soldiers at the Army Training Center will still be picked up and delivered as it has in the past."

Laundry is big business at Fort Benning. Last year, the post paid in excess of $1.2 million to the contractor, in exchange for the cleaning of all government owned sheets, towels, blankets, MACH linens, and uniforms.

Ellis said the biggest part of the contract is the cleaning of uniforms for soldiers at the ATC, who benefit most from the service.

"New soldiers pay $2 per week to get up to 26 items laundered weekly," he said. It costs considerably more to get the items washed, about $5.50 more per soldier per week, but the Army picks up the tab. "That's just another benefit for soldiers," Ellis said.

Since Oct. 1, Fort Benning's laundry has been trucked to Fort Gordon, Ga., where it is cleaned by that post's contractor, then trucked back to Benning for return to customers. Despite transportation costs, it's still cheaper to do it this way than it would have been to go with one of the high bids offered, he said.

Ellis said that the present system will continue through December, when hopefully, a new contractor will have been found.

"We have the contract out for bids right now," he said.

In the past, the laundry contract has been limited to small businesses, but this restriction was lifted to allow for greater competition. Part of the problem with using small businesses was that they simply didn't have the facilities, or the capital to expand to be able to handle the large volume of laundry Fort Benning generates, Ellis said.

With the temporary service, soldiers can expect to wait five or six days to get their laundry back, compared to the three to four day wait under the previous contractor. But DOL is in the process of hiring additional temporary workers, which should speed up the turnaround time, Ellis said.

Soldiers who cannot wait that long can opt for one-day service, at a cost of $2.20 for each battle dress uniform.

Laundry service is still in the same location, Building 2500, which is open from 6:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. weekdays, and from 8 a.m. to noon on Saturdays.

Both cash payment and payroll deduction customers can turn in laundry at this location. Payroll deduction customers can turn in laundry twice each week and are still authorized up to 26 pieces a week including the laundry bag.

Organizational laundry such as sheets, pillowcases, blankets and other government owned items may be turned in at the receiving section from 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Pickup and delivery of payroll deduction patron's laundry and organizational laundry will continue for the Army Training Center and the Officer Candidate School.

"Our main goal is to provide the best possible service at the most reasonable cost to our customers," Ellis said.

Reenlistment bonus program reflects Congressional moves

Army News Service

In an effort to retain soldiers who excel at their jobs and get promoted the Army has changed its Selective Reenlistment Bonus (SRB) program effective Sept. 29. These changes are also an effort to get soldiers in to the critically short military occupational specialities.

Changes include paying the SRB based on the soldier's MOS, pay grade and zone, said Maj. Allen Deutsch, SRB program manager. We are doing this to recognize those soldiers who make the effort to improve themselves.

A change to the Bonus Extension and Re-training program, said Deutsch, is that the soldier will have to re-enlist upon completion of his re-training at the school site. Qualified initial termers with unserved periods of up to two years of extended obligated service will have their remaining term of service waived when computing the SRB, said Deutsch. "Before this change, we had soldiers who re-trained but were unable to receive the maximum bonus possible for their new MOS."

The maximum initial SRB payment remains at $10,000 (50 percent) instead of rising to $15,000 (75 percent), said Deutsch. Congress has not made a final decision on this issue yet, he added.

Deutsch explained that two-year enlistees who are otherwise qualified for re-enlistment in the pay grade of E-4 and above will receive an SRB computed at zone A (21 months to six years) SRB multiplier is listed for sergeants.

Retiree Open House expanded to include Job Fair, golf tourney

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Approximately 15,000 Army retirees and 11,000 retirees of other service branches residing in portions of Alabama, Georgia and Florida, are being invited to Fort Benning for the sixth annual Military Retiree Open House, Oct. 23 to 25.

This year an additional day, Oct. 23, has been added to the Open House, in order to make way for a Retiree Golf Tournment and Job Fair.

The Tournament gets underway at 8 a.m. at the Follow Me Golf Course. Also at 8 a.m. shuttle buses will begin loading behind Theater No. 1 for the Job Fair site. They will run throughout the day every half hour until 5:30 p.m.

National companies and organizations as well as international corporations are expected to attend the Job Fair. Representatives will talk with retirees, active duty personnel and family members. Those attending should bring copies of their resume.

The Fair is being hosted by the Commanding General's Retiree Council to assist those seeking employment or wishing to broaden their horizons.

A retirement ceremony is also scheduled for Oct. 23 at 4 p.m. on York Field.

Regular Open House activities begin Oct. 24, with 7 a.m. registration at Theater No. 1. A $1 fee will be charged to help defray some of the cost.

Included in the day's agenda will be static displays of infantry, armor and artillery equipment, a demonstration by the Fort Benning Military Police dog team and a tour of the National Infantry Museum.

As in the past, military retirees are being invited to Fort Benning for the purpose of transacting personal business related to their rights, benefits, privileges and entitlements.

Representatives from federal, state, local and post activities will be available to counsel retirees Oct. 25 during the various sessions in Infantry Hall. Tables will be set up in a "county fair" atmosphere.

A "Tactical Aerial Demonstration" is set for 2 p.m. at York Field along with static displays of aircraft.

Also scheduled are demonstrations by the Rangers and "Silver Wings" Free Fall Demonstration Team.

For more information on the open house activities contact the Retirement Services Office, P.O. Box 2373, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905 or telephone (404) 545-5369.

VA Q&A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I filed a claim for compensation about three months ago and have had my exam. I have not heard anything from the VA. How can I find out the status of my claim?

A — Initial claims often take longer than three months to process. You should wait a little longer before checking on your claim. If you are concerned, however, you may call the local VA regional office to check the status of the claim.

Q — Do the VA's eligibility assessment provedures apply to veterans age 65 and older?

A — The means test applies to all nonservice-connected veterans regardless of age.

Q — Does a widow whose VA benefits were restored after termination of a remarriage regain her veterans preference for civil service?

A — No. Civil service preference is not restored after the remarriage is terminated. Questions about this may be addressed to the Office of Personnel Management which is responsible for preference certifications.

Q - I am the wife of a veteran who receives VA pension benefits. If I go to work will this affect my husband's benefits?

A — If your husband established entitlement to pension benefits prior to January 1, 1979, and continues to receive benefits based on the law in effect at that time, your earned income would not be a factor. If he receives benefits under the current pension law (PL 96-588) your income would be a factor in determining the amount of his pension. If your joint income reaches a specified level his pension would be discontinued.

Q — What does VA consider as a veteran's income for purposes of the new eligibility assessment procedures?

A — Social security, including supplemental security income; U.S. Civil Service retirement; U.S. Railroad retirement; military retirement; unemployment insurance; any other retirement; total wages from all employers; interest and dividends; workers' compensation; black lung benefits; and any other annual income for the calendar year preceding the veteran's application for care including income of the spouse and dependents. Personal property is excluded.

Q - I am the wife of a veteran who receives VA pension benefits. If I go to work will this affect my husband's benefits?

A — If your husband established entitlement to pension benefits prior to January 1, 1979, and continues to receive benefits based on the law in effect at that time, your earned income would not be a factor. If he receives benefits under the current pension law (PL 96-588) your income would be a factor in determining the amount of his pension. If your joint income reaches a specified level his pension would be discontinued.

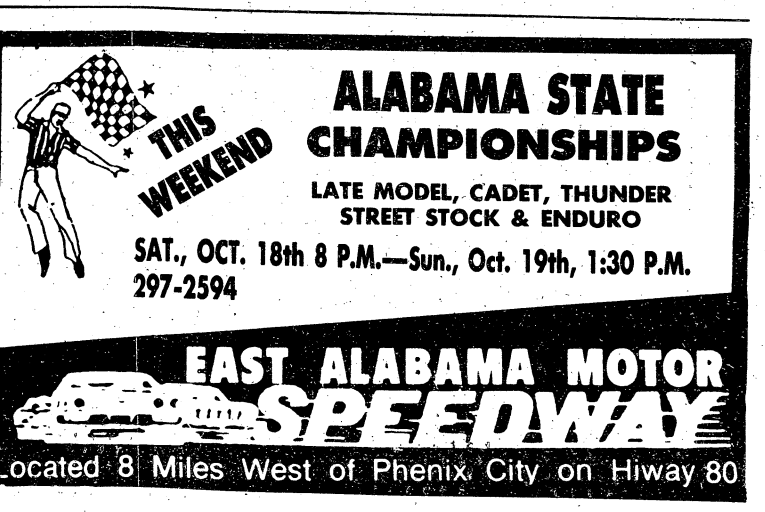
Q — What rating must a service-connected disabled veteran have in order to receive additional compensation for a wife, child or parent?

A — The veteran must be rated 30 percent or more disabled.

Q — My husband died in a Veterans Administration medical center. Will the VA help with burial expenses?

A — Yes. In addition to a burial allowance, VA will pay the transportation charge to the place of burial.

Q — When the new Improved Pension was first enacted I was advised that it was not to my advantage to switch. Is it possible that it might be to my advantage now?



A — It may be. The income limits have increased steadily and are tied to social security increases. You should check with your nearest VA regional office.

Q — If a member of the military is medically retired, but has never applied for a service-connected disability rating from the Veterans Administration, will his surviving spouse receive VA Dependency and Indemnity Compensation (DIC) benefits upon his death?

A — The surviving spouse is not automatically entitled to DIC benefits. An application for DIC must be filed with the VA and benefits would be payable only if the VA found the cause of the veteran's death to be service-connected.

Q — Do veterans with service-connected disabilities have to pay a funding fee for VA guaranteed home loans?

A — No.

Fort Benning 'pulls out all stops' for Energy Awareness Week

by Shawn Bryson
The Bayonet staff writer

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing is going the limit to promote the Armywide Energy Awareness Week that kicks off Sunday and continues through Oct. 25.

Each year the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command gives Fort Benning, the largest of its installations, an energy conservation goal. In the past this goal has not been met. However, this year Fort Benning personnel can take pride in their contributions because for the first time, the post met its energy conservation goal.

According to Rodney Carroll from the Energy Office, awareness of the need for energy conservation and preventative maintenance of equipment and buildings were key elements in helping Fort Benning attain its goal.

Just meeting this year's goal was amazing considering the fact that during the first quarter, Fort Benning used 13.1 percent more energy than it was budgeted, Carroll said. Also, "Georgia's summer-long drought and record-breaking temperatures were not much help," Carroll said. Nevertheless, the goal was met.

According to Carroll, one of the reasons for the successful conservation this year is the new energy program conducted by DEH.

The program promotes not only the Armywide Energy Awareness Week, but also one of its own, which is in the spring.

Next week's schedule is a full one, according to Carroll. The week is geared toward four different groups of people — students, families, soldiers, and civilians.

The more than 3,500 students in Fort Benning schools can look forward to a unit study of conserving energy and many handouts including light bulb-shaped erasers, Sniffy pencils and six-inch rulers. Students will also view films concerning energy conservation. Pre-schoolers will receive DEH mascot, "Energy Buster," T-shirts. Energy Buster is also scheduled to make personal appearances at each school.

Unit Commanders and activity chiefs will receive an energy letter including an energy checklist, jar opener, energy survey and a family housing bulletin. DEH will also have an energy conservation reminder on one of the cable television stations.

The commanding general has already distributed his comments acknowledging the efforts of Fort Benning personnel and the achievement of this year's goal.

The main mall, Building 4, Martin Army Community Hospital and Building 35 will be the sites for solar energy, nuclear energy and energy conservation displays throughout the week.

The Energy Resource Group is planning to distribute pens, calenders and cups in support of Energy Awareness Week.

Everyone is encouraged to keep an eye out for posters and banners around the post and for Energy Updates in The Bayonet.

Commander's comments

Energy Awareness Week is set aside each year to reaffirm our commitment to become responsible energy consumers. The availability of abundant, affordable and secure energy supplies is vital to continued national security and economic prosperity. We remain dedicated to promoting a better understanding of the need for continued development of all the energy resources and technologies in order to assure greater energy security for America.

Fort Benning continues to make progress in the wise and efficient use of our energy resources. By reducing energy waste and abuse, we met our TRADOC goals for the first time in this fiscal year. We have been working toward the goal for 10 years. I commend everyone for their efforts. With your continued support, we can meet our energy goals every year. This will ensure our ability to perform our mission and provide for the soldier and his family.

The experience we gained in energy conservation helped us to weather the worst drought in history and record high temperatures this summer. This same combination will work equally well during the upcoming heating season. As these practices become second nature to us we will have little trouble meeting our future goals. With your help we can continue to set the example for responsible energy use.

Women needed to fill key drill sergeant slots

U.S. Army Military Personnel Center

The U.S Military Personnel Center is looking for about 450 women non-commissioned officers who have the mental and physical ability and sincere desire to be trained as drill sergeants.

"Almost 10 percent of Army drill sergeant authorizations are for females," said SFC Charles L. Nunley of MILPERCEN's Drill Sergeant Team. "However, just 4 percent of drill sergeant strength is female."

Women drill sergeants are authorized at 23 Army Training Centers and the U.S. Army Correctional Activity Center at Fort Riley, Kan. Of the 23 centers, women are needed most at Fort Jackson, S.C., Fort Dix, N.J. and Fort McClellan, Ala.

Army Regulation 614-200, paragraph 8-17, contains the qualifications for Drill Sergeant School. Application procedures are in Department of the Army Pamphlet 600-8, procedure 3-34.

"Interested female NCOs should contact their local personnel offices for details and assistance," Nunley said, "or call us at AV 221-8070, commercial 202-325-8070."

Fort Benning teachers attend workshop, learn to enhance students' self concept

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

One quarter of the Fort Benning teaching staff spent Sept. 26 and 27, participating in a workshop that provided strategies for enhancing student self concept.

Dr. Rasamma Nyberg, a school principal in Miami, Fla., presented over 50 different ways that teachers can respond to children in the classroom to enhance the way that children feel about themselves.

Nyberg is an educator and human relations specialist with extensive experience in working with classroom teachers. She has also worked with children of many ability levels and personality types; for years she was the principal of an alternative school, working with adolescents who had exhibited severe behavior problems. Under Nyberg's direction the school was commended by the Florida State Board of Education as an exemplary program in alternative education. Nyberg is currently principal of a magnet school for gifted children in Miami's inner city.

During the workshop she contributed more than her expertise in teaching and working with children; an artist and musician, Dr. Nyberg brought to the teachers her own rich background from her native India and her experiences in the United States and England. She was able to bring together diverse ethnic and cultural values for a better understanding of today's multicultural classroom.

Nyberg found the Benning educators to be extremely responsive to the individual needs of children. She frequently commented that she was impressed with programs that are already in place in the Benning schools and with teacher abilities to promote strong learning environments.

Though most staff development course work offered by the Fort Benning School System is conducted after hours on weekdays, teacher response to Nyberg's weekend workshop was overwhelmingly favorable.

Student self concept is a major focus for the Fort Benning Schools this year. Dr. Nyberg's workshop is only one component of that focus. A system-wide self concept committee made up of educators from each of the eight schools provides practical theories and current research on self concept to teachers. Each of the eight schools has an on-going commitment to enhance student self concept, believing that children learn more when they feel good about themselves.

Cocaine...

Trends in drug use 30 days before responding to survey

Decrease in some types of drugs used

1985 Worldwide Survey of Alcohol and Non-medical Drug Use

DoD lowers drug tolerance levels

by Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

In an unprecedented move, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs William E. Mayer announced a major crackdown against one drug: cocaine. He directed the services to include testing for cocaine in all urine tests beginning Oct. 1. Current rules require that only marijuana used be checked.

Furthermore, the tolerance level for the urine tests — the amount of drug byproducts needed to confirm drug use — will be lowered for cocaine and marijuana. So, it will be possible to confirm drug use with lower amounts of the drugs.

Screening tests, the first step in military checks for drug abuse, will not be changed. The change will be in the confirmation — the retesting, which is done on much more sensitive, sophisticated and accurate equipment than that used in screening tests.

Under the new tolerance levels, cocaine will be detected in the urine longer after use. Because it does not remain in the body as long as marijuana, cocaine use is less likely to be detected in random screenings.

Mayer said the change in testing should enable the military to catch the 10 to 20 percent of drug users whose urine contains a detectable drug byproduct in amounts lower than the current minimum exposure levels.

Said John F. Mazzuchi, the principal director for professional affairs and quality assurance in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs, "We did not lower the tolerance until we were sure we could do so without compromising our reputation for 'no false positives.' We want to press testing technology to the limit, but not go past it. We have no tolerance for false positives."

Only 2.4 percent of military people admitted to using cocaine in the 30 days prior to answering the recently released 1985 Worldwide Survey of Alcohol and Non-medical Drug Use. But, Mayer commented, "The 2.4 percent . . . still represent over 50,000 military personnel. Over 90,000 are represented by the 4.2 percent who report having used cocaine in the 12 months prior to the survey."

Since the first worldwide survey in 1980, the percentage of service members reporting use of cocaine during the previous year dropped from 11 to 4.2 percent. But Mazzuchi noted that recent reports from law enforcement agencies and the National Institute on Drug Abuse indicate a significant increase in cocaine use among the population from which the military draws recruits.

Furthermore, cocaine use among the military has not decreased as significantly as marijuana use. Cocaine use in the 30 days before the survey decreased by 17 percent from 1980 to 1985, while marijuana use decreased by 60 percent from 1980 to 1985.

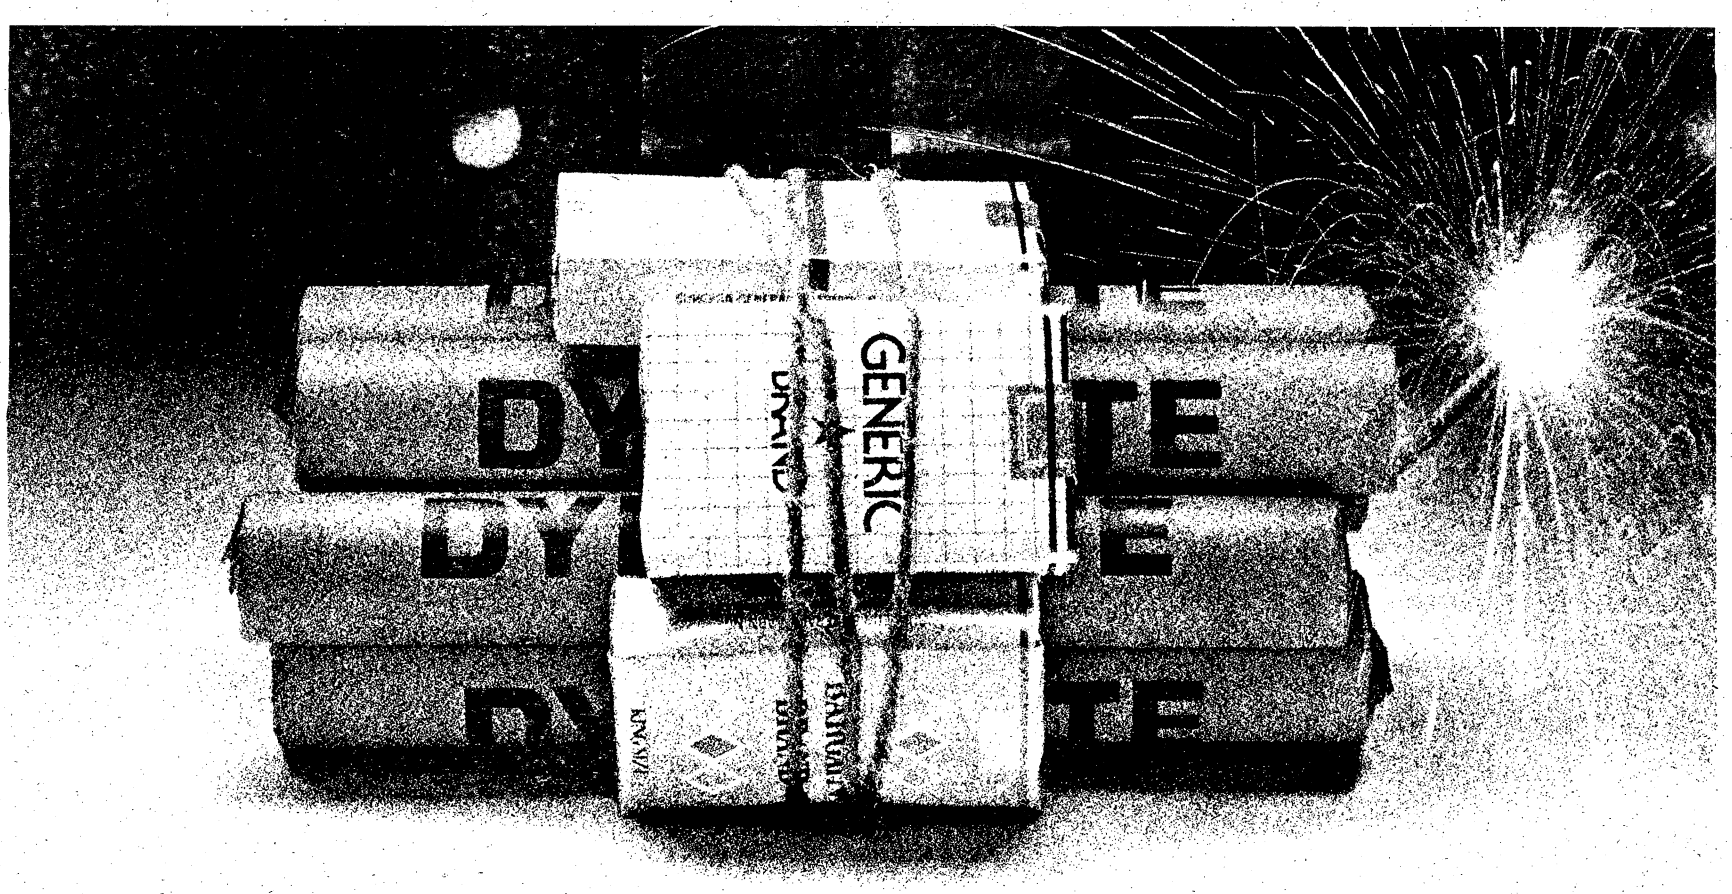
National problem prompts warnings, action

by Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

The increased availability of "crack," an extremely addictive form of free-base cocaine, is one of the concerns that led Dr. William Mayer, assistant secretary of defense for health affairs, to issue a warning about cocaine and to start a department-wide crackdown against its use.

In a recent memorandum on cocaine use in the military, Mayer said, "The ease of administration, the powerful and sudden 'high,' quickly followed by an intense craving for more, and the relatively low cost of 'crack,' all point to a serious problem with devastating potential, particularly among young people."

Crack is 95 to 97 percent pure cocaine. Large doses of cocaine can cause heart or respiratory failure or a rapid increase in blood pressure. A person with an already weakened blood vessel in the brain could have a stroke induced by the high blood pressure.



A crack "high" lasts only about two minutes, but the rush is said to be more intense than that from any other drug sold on the streets. The high is usually followed by a deep depression — thus the intense craving for more to recreate the high and take away the depression. This makes the drug highly addictive, so much so that some people report becoming addicted within weeks.

Users prefer crack to unprocessed free-base cocaine because crack is already in a smokable form; no volatile substances are required. It is usually smoked in a glass water pipe, but can be smoked in a cigarette. There are reports that heroin addicts are switching to crack to avoid catching AIDS from dirty needles.

A vial containing one or two crack "rocks" sells for $10 to $20 in New York City, a price low enough to make it attractive to the very young. In fact, the National Cocaine Hotline (800-Cocaine) reports callers as young as 12 seeking help.

Colonists win fight for liberty, deliver 'mighty blow' to Brits

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

The Battle of Yorktown was over; America had struck a mighty blow against the British Empire.

On the British side, 156 soldiers had been killed, and 326 men wounded. The Americans and French had a combined death total of 72 troops, with 190 wounded.

Gen. George Washington reported to Congress that 7,247 British soldiers and 840 seamen were captured or had surrendered by the end of the battle.

Yorktown was the decisive blow the colonists had needed to show the British, indeed the world, that the fight for liberty was one the America was determined to win.

Yet despite the surrender of Cornwallis on Oct. 19, 1781, it would be more than a year before the Preliminary Articles of Peace were signed.

King George III was not convinced by the American's victory. "I have no doubt when men are a little recovered of the shock felt by the bad news, and feel that if we recede no one can tell to what degree the consequence of this country will be diminished, that they will then find the necessity of carrying on the war, though the mode of it may require alterations," the King wrote in a letter to Lord North.

The King still viewed defending the American colonies as his sacred duty to England. But sentiment in the House of Commons was greatly influenced by the defeat at Yorktown, and in 1782 the Commons voted to authorize the king to make peace with America.

On Nov. 30, 1782, the Preliminary Articles of Peace were signed by the commissioners from both countries, and on Sept. 3, 1783, the definitive treaty was formally ratified.

It would take another four years before the fledgling nation's representatives could meet and after much argument and discussion, pen a constitution at the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia. That constitution was finally approved Sept. 17, 1787.

It would be another four years before the Bill of Rights became an official part of the Constitution, two years after Washington and John Adams were elected president and vice president respectively.

But the fighting had done what the original signers of the Declaration of Independence had sought; won freedom for the people of the new world.

On the 50th anniversary of America's independence, Thomas Jefferson wrote that he was gratified that the citizens still approved the choice the signers had made.

"May it (the Declaration of Independence) be to the world what I believe it will be, the signal of arousing men to burst the chains, under which monkish ignorance and superstition had persuaded them to bind themselves, and to assume the blessings and security of self government. The form which we have substituted restores the free right to the unbounded exercise of reason and freedom of opinion. All eyes are opened, or opening to the rights of man. The general spread of the light of science has already laid open to every view the palpable truth that the mass of mankind has not been born, with saddles on their backs, nor a favored few booted and spurred, ready to ride them legitimately, by the grace of God, these are grounds of hope for others. For ourselves, let the annual return of this day, forever refresh our recollections of these rights and an undiminished devotion to them."

Ask the 'judge'

Editor's note: These are questions the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be considered a substitute for advice from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

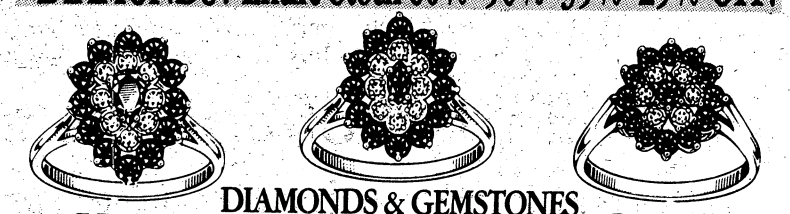
Legal Assistance

Q. I have been receiving many telephone solicitations to buy this or that product. What legal areas should I be concerned about?

A. Many people have a hard time saying "no" over the phone. Always beware the telephone solicitor and follow these rules:

- Never give your credit card number over the phone unless you initiate the call.
- Be cautious if the caller says an investment, purchase or charitable donation must be made immediately.
- Ask who is in charge of the company or organization represented. Get specific names and titles.
- Check with your state and local consumer protection offices and Better Business Bureau to see if any complaints have been filed against the organization.
- Be wary of offers of free merchandise or prizes. You may end up paying handling fees greater than the value of the gifts.

Q. I've been thinking about joining a health club but have heard people getting "ripped off." What should I look for?



A. Check out the health club carefully. Visit during hours when you would normally use it to see if it is overcrowded during that period. Check whether the facilities are well maintained and clean. Ask when you will be able to use the club.

It may be open all week, but limited to men or women on certain days. Ask what qualifications or training the employees have. Read the fine print in all contracts or special offers. You may be committing yourself to a long-term contract.

Make sure that spoken promises are made in writing. Find out if there is a clause under which you can change your mind and get your money back ("cooling-off" period).

Ask also about the refund policy on cancellations. Ask your state or local consumer protection agency or Better Business Bureau if they have received any complaints about the club. Find out also if you have any protection under state law should the club close unexpectedly.

Court report

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Three career non-commissioned officers will be discharged in lieu of court-martial pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 10, Army Regulation 635-200.

Sgt. Raymond E. Nazario, Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment/Weapons Department, was absent without leave June 19. The next day he robbed a Columbus bank and then fled to Florida and Panama. He returned to Columbus on July 11, when he was arrested by Columbus police while casing the same bank for a second robbery.

Nazario was convicted in federal court of bank robbery and sentenced to 10 years in prison. He was charged with AWOL from the time he departed his unit without authority until a date after his sentencing in federal court.

SSgt. Guy L. Fields, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment/Weapons Department, was charged with wrongful appropriation and unlawful entry in connection with his unlawful borrowing of a friend's video cassette recorder. Fields, in need of money to attend an Atlanta concert, went to a friend's barracks July 12 to borrow money. The friend was not in her room, so he entered without permission, took her VCR, and pawned it.

The next day, Fields went to the friend's room and told her he took the VCR. Three days later, after payday, Fields got the VCR out of pawn and returned it to the friend.

SSgt. Howard W. White, Company E, 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, was charged with two violations of USAITC Policy Letter Number 15 by accepting gifts from trainees.

White was the platoon sergeant of an One Station Unit Training platoon. During the summer of 1985, White was presented with a buck knife worth more than $100 by members of his platoon on the eve of their graduation. Then, during the summer of 1986, White received another valuable gift from members of his OSUT platoon in the form of an expensive watch.

White hinted to the members of the first platoon that he would welcome a gift and he did not bother to tell either platoon that gifts of any form from trainees to drill sergeants ae strictly prohibited.

All three of these NCOs will be discharged under conditions "Other Than Honorable," which will effectively deprive them of all VA benefits.

Fields has more than 15 years in service and White has more than 10 years in servie.

White is the sixth drill sergeant in the past year to be discharged under the provisions of Chapter 10, AR 635-200, for violations involving some form of trainee abuse. Four others have been tried and convicted by courts-martial.

Credit cards offer options as most drop interest rates

by Glen H. Mitchell
Virginia Cooperative Extension Service

Believe it or not, interest-rate charges on credit cards are becoming more competitive.

Consumers wonder why interest rates on cards didn't come down at the same time other rates declined.

Interest on credit cards doesn't vary like the prime rate on Treasury bills. It is more complex. For instance, only about 40 percent of a credit-card organization's budget is used to pay for the money it uses. The remaining 60 percent is used to cover other expenses such as filling, salaries, and the cost of credit-card fraud.

Rates are now coming down somewhat. But before jumping at lower rates, consumers should consider all aspects of each card, not just finance charges. First, decide what kind of credit-card user pattern you fall into.

Convenience users are people who use a credit card for purchases, but pay the monthly balance on their bill before a finance charge is assessed. For them, credit is a convenience. They don't have to carry cash or write checks.

Other consumers use credit cards to maintain a pattern of revolving debt. They don't pay their balance every month — they pay only a portion of it each month. These credit users ae assessed interest charges on the money they owe.

According to a recent survey, 47 percent of credit-card holders always pay up their balances every month before interest is charged. Another 26 percent usually pay the monthly total before interest is charged.

The remaining 27 percent of credit-card holders use the cards primarily for revolving debt, and are charged interest.

If you pay your balance every month and usually don't incur an interest charge, then the amount of interest the company assesses is probably not that important to you. Instead, you should consider the "grace period" the company allows before interest is levied.

Some of the lower-interest-rate cards also have shorter grace period, and would not necessarily be advantageous to a "convenience" credit-card user.

Revolving-debt credit-card users would be interested in a lower interest rate. But they should check other factors, as should all credit-card users. Is there a yearly service fee, and how much is it? Annual fees can vary from $0 to $250, with most "bare bones" cards costing $15 to $25 a year.

So-called prestige cards,which often carry the higher annual fees, offer other services such as free traveler's checks to their card holders. Before paying the higher fee, ask yourself if you will use the services often enough to warrant the cost.

In addition to bank credit cards, oil companies and major store chains also offer credit cards with varying services and fees.

In fact, there are so many credit cards available to the American consumer that there are now three cards owned for every person in the country.

Consumers can choose from a variety of credit cards. In the near future, there will probably be even more choice, as more and more companies offer credit cards.

Be certain to read all the fine print and to compare the features of the card with the services you need before collecting more cards or switching card companies.

Annual 'flu shot' best defense against getting influenza virus

by Mark W. Bonneville, M.D.
Martin Army Community Hospital

That's right, the "flu season" is coming again. "The flu" is a term that has been applied to many different illnesses throughout the years, but in actuality it is one specific disease: that caused by influenza virus. Many of you may have had "the flu" in the past and many of our forefathers have died from it.

Since the 17th century, there have been approximately four worldwide epidemics each century, the worst resulting in 10 to 20 million deaths in 1918. The epidemic of 1962 and 1963 boasted 80 million cases with 70,000 deaths. Flu is a highly infectious disease seen mostly in the winter months and is transmitted by coughing and sneezing. Symptoms begin two to three days after coming in contact with a flu victim.

The people most at risk for getting the flu are children and young adults in which it is a short term illness of less than three weeks.

Symptoms are similar to a very bad cold: chills, fever up to 104, muscle aches, cough, sore throat, headache, nasal stuffiness, and generally feeling bad. Treatment is not much better than what mom can provide (which may be better).

Adequate fluids, bed rest, Tylenol, and cold or cough medicines should be given as needed. Antibiotics are of no help.

Amantadine is a controversial medicine that is sometimes helpful and used more in the elderly and people with chronic diseases (diabetes mellitus, anemia, lung disease, heart disease, kidney disease, and cancer). These people are at much higher risk for suffering complications of the flu such as pneumonia and possibly death.

The influenza virus is highly contagious. One way to prevent spread is by not coughing and sneezing on others. Our best defense against the flu is prevention by way of the annual flu shot (influenza vaccine).

Although the vaccine does not guarantee prevention, it is 70 to 80 percent effective. The vaccine will be available after Oct. 1 at Martin Army Communicy Hospital, the Family Practice clinics, the Reception Station, and the troop medical clinics.

This year, because of the potential of different strains of the flu virus, two vaccines will be given. The second vaccine will become available after Dec. 1 and will only be given to people under age 35. Those over age 35 will be given only one vaccine. People with egg allergies should not receive this vaccine.

Side effects in the past have been greatly blown out of proportion. The most common side effects are discomfort from the injection itself (in 30 percent) and 24 to 48 hours of generalized muscle aches and low grade fever (in 1 to 2 percent).

The vaccine is required for all active-duty soldiers and strongly advised for anyone in the high risk categories mentioned above. If you are healthy and under age 65, it is up to you whether to get vaccinated or not (but not necessary).

Army scientists wage war on malaria

Army News Service

Army scientists are waging war against malaria, and they're winning.

Medical researchers revealed their weapon — a genetically engineered vaccine — in an award-winning paper presented at the 1986 Army Science Conference at West Point, N.Y. The year's theme was "Technology for Soldiers."

"A successful vaccine against malaria would significantly improve military preventive medicine, and would offer enormous benefits to world health," said Lt. Col. Wayne Hockmeyer, chief of immunology at the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research in Washington, D.C.

Malaria poses a severe health threat to nearly one-third of the world's population, attacking such areas as Africa and Central and South America. Some one million people die from malaria each year, and another 200 million are afflicted with its symptoms of muscle aches, fever, headaches and chills. Since malaria no longer is endemic in the United States, its impact on U.S. citizens has been felt primarily by soldiers, foreign service personnel and travelers, Hockmeyer said. Historically, the military has seen many more casualties from malaria than from battle. In its initial engagement in combat in Vietnam, for example, the First Cavalry Division sustained 712 battle casualties and 1,128 disabling cases of malaria.

Because of such heavy losses, America has spent decades searching for a way to control the disease. Insecticides and drugs that once were considered breakthroughs in controlling malaria lost merit as new strains of resistant mosquitoes evolved. As a result, malaria's prevalence began to increase in areas such as Asia, where it previously had been considered to be under control. Because of these setbacks, scientists have increasingly been turning their attention toward developing vaccines to prevent or control the disease, Hockmeyer said.

Development of a vaccine has been slow because researchers have had a difficult time trying to fully understand the life cycle of the mosquito-borne parasite, he said.

The parasite develops in the mosquito as thread-like, one-celled organisms. When the mosquito bites a human, the organism, called a sporozoite, is injected into the blood and travels to the liver, where it changes form. The more circular merozoites that result begin multiplying and attack the body's red blood cells, causing fever and chills.

Relatively modern techniques in molecular biology such as gene cloning have again raised the hopes of researchers. These techniques have made it possible to identify and clone the genes that produce an antibody that attacks the disease-causing parasites. This cloning makes it possible to produce large amounts of the antibody, Hockmeyer said. This antibody has produced immunity to malaria in laboratory animals in preclinical trials, Hockmeyer added.

Although the concept of an immunization against the sporozoite stage of malaria was pioneered largely by researchers at the New York University, the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research now is working on a vaccine in collaboration with the National Institutes of Health and the Navy Medical Research Institute in Washington, D.C., and the Smithkline French Laboratories in Philadelphia, Pa.

Based on their studies, the Federal Drug Administration has approved an application for an investigational new drug and phase-one clinical trials have begun, he said. These studies are designed to evaluate the safety and effectiveness of the vaccine at five different doses in a small number of human volunteers (primarily researchers) from Walter Reed and the National Institute of Health.

"The progress made over the past several years has been dramatic and encouraging," Hockmeyer said. "However, if we have learned anything from the history of malaria, it is that the parasite has been remarkably adept at subverting man's best attempts at prevention or control."

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

A frequent question of newly assigned personnel at Fort Benning concerns our system of morning and evening traffic flow.

Traffic circulation is adjusted in the mornings to accommodate the large influx of people coming to the installation. Changes to normal routes are in effect from 7 to 8 a.m. The biggest change provides for one lane of outgoing Benning Boulevard to be used for incoming traffic.

For those attempting to exit the installation by the main gate, there are some major changes during this time:

- There is no exit through 10th Division Road. This is used for incoming traffic only.
- There is no left turn from Vibbert Avenue onto Lumpkin Road. To get to Lumpkin Road from Main Post, traffic must use Wold Avenue.
- There is no left turn onto Marne Road from the outgoing portion of Benning Boulevard.

Traffic patterns in the afternoon from 4:15 to 5:15 p.m. are adjusted to accomodate the heavy flow of exodus traffic.

- Both lanes of outgoing and one lane of incoming Benning Boulevard are reserved for exiting traffic.
- Incoming traffic must turn onto 10th Division road to get to Main Post.
- Traffic wishing to exit by way of South Lumpkin Road must stay in the inside lane of coming Benning Boulevard. Traffic will automatically be directed to South Lumpkin Road from this lane by the MP traffic control point at the intersection of Custer Road.
- There is no left from Custer Road onto incoming Benning Boulevard during this time. The best way to get to Main Post from Custer Road is to use the Lindsey Creek By-pass (I-185).

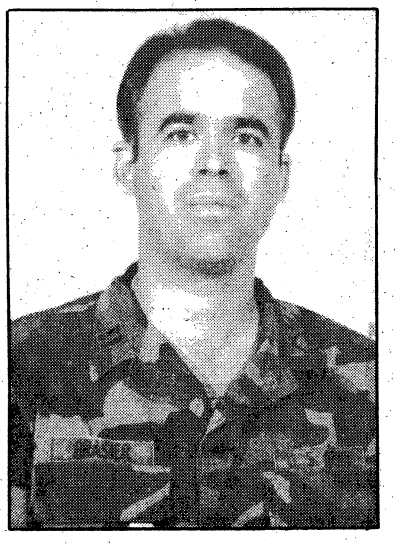
Please take note of these changes to normal traffic flow. These changes are necessary to accommodate the heavy traffic flow during peak hours on Fort Benning.

Crime Watch

Provost Marshal

The following is a breakdown of crimes reported to the Fort Benning Military Police from Oct. 1 through 9:

Custer Terrace had one domestic disturbance, one damage to private property and one animal bite. Davis Hill/Bouton Heights had one domestic assault, one threatening/harassing phone call and one runaway.



South Main Post had one housebreaking/burglary. Indianhead Terrace had one assault on a child under 16. Battle Park had two housebreaking/burglary.

Let's take time out to look around our neighborhood and report unusual activities to the Military Police. Together we can make our homes safer and take a bite out of crime.

Planning makes overseas employment possible

Army News Service

Family members of soldiers or civilians preparing to move overseas might improve their chances for employment there if they plan ahead.

Preparations for job hunting should begin long before family members arrive at the new location, said Cheryl Jacobsen of the Army's Civilian Personnel Directorate at the Pentagon.

As soon as they decide they would like to be considered for jobs at the new duty location, family members should develop or revise a standard form 171, Federal Job Application and gather supplemental documents. Many Army activities offer 171-writing workshops that could provide valuable tips, she said.

Current federal employees or previous employees eligible for reinstatement consideration should supplement their SF 171 with the following:

- An SF 50, Notification of Personnel Action. Applicants should be prepared to provide a copy of the latest SF 50 received from their current or former position. This document gives information about the kind of job and appointment the applicant held and helps the personnel office give the applicant proper consideration.
- A copy of the most recent performance appraisal. Most vacancy announcements require submission of an appraisal with the SF-171 before consideration will be given.
- A copy of an SF 75, Request for Preliminary Employment data. Only current employees must submit this form. It is available from the current personnel office. It gives information that is needed to appoint an applicant after selection.

Those who have never worked for the federal government should also prepare an SF 171. In addition, they should obtain a "Notice of Results" from the Washington, D.C. Office of Personnel Management. Any local Civilian Personnel Office can provide the Washington OPM address. The "Notice of Results" is a formal letter prospective federal employees receive from OPM after they have accepted and rated the application. OPM assigns a government service (GS) rating based on the applicant's work and education experience. If applicable, eligible veterans may claim preference for an initial appointment to a federal position.

All applicants should be prepared to give additional information about education, training, special licenses, and other knowledges, skills and abilities that relate to the job vacancy.

No matter how much they prepare, however, prospective applicants won't be any better off if they pack the job information among their household goods. The information should be packed separately and hand carried to the new location so that applications can be submitted immediately after arrival, if they had not been submitted earlier.

Once they find out where they'll be moving to, family members can call or visit an Army Civilian Personnel Office at their current location and ask for a job information sheet for the area to which they will be moving. The information sheet provides specific information regarding the types of jobs most frequently filled and application procedures.

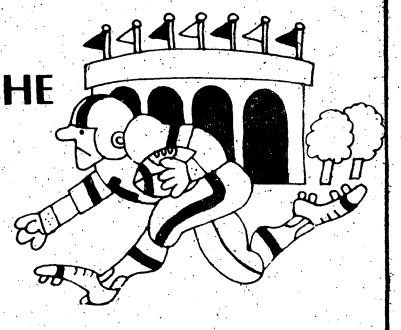
"Do as much as you can ahead of time," Jacosen suggests. "Find out everything you can. Be ready to act. Don't wait until you reach the new location."

Once current employees with status determine when they'll be leaving, they should request to be put on leave without pay. Army policy requires that supervisors allow a minimum of 90 days of leave for family members with status who accompany a sponsor to a new geographic location. This leave keeps them in the personnel system, preventing a break in service. Employees then have the option of requesting an extension from the last supervisor.

Upon arrival at the new location, family members should visit the Civilian Personnel Office or Employment Information Center, Jacobsen said. Here, they can learn about employment opportunities in the federal and local governments as well as those in the private sector.

In overseas locations (excluding Hawaii) family members of soldiers and civilian employees at grades GS-8 and below, are given hiring preference over other applicants who are not family members.

Family members should not overlook volunteer work as an option, Jacosen said. Civilian Personnel Offices give volunteer experience the same weight given to experience gained through a paying job. To earn credit, however, the experience must be included on the SF 171.



Jacobsen offers this advice for ultimate success in the job hunting effort: "Don't sit back and wait for things to happen to you. You have to go out and make them happen."

Tomorrow night we have Two-for-One Steak Night, Disco in the Ballroom, Latino Disco in End of Hall Lounge and the Donna Hopkins Band in the Golden Touch Lounge.

Join us Sunday for bingo at 2 p.m. and try for that $5,000 jackpot (couldn't we all use that for the upcoming holidays?) and remain for the prime rib special at 6 p.m. in the Garden Room.

And bring your boss tonight for Bosses' Nite at 5 p.m. until. There will be a fabulous free food buffet.

Arts and Crafts — An overglazing seminar for pearl, lusters and gold is scheduled for tomorrow from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Arts and Crafts Center. Bring your own glazed item.

Free pouring is being offered for the last time this year next Wednesday through Friday. Come by and take advantage of this offer.

The Arts and Crafts Center Photo Lab is offering you a chance to get that baby picture made on Oct. 24. Pictures are 8 x 10 black and white for only $2. For more information see Mason in the Photo Lab.

Recreation Centers — You don't want to miss out on the "Big Auction" tomorrow at the Kelley Hill Rec Center. The facility opens at noon and the first item goes up for bid at 1 p.m. Many different yard-sale-type items will be sold to the highest bidder.

This auction could be the perfect place to locate that hard-to-find unique item you've been searching for.

Physical Activities — The Outdoor Recreation and Ticket Office has advance tickets for sale for the annual Tuskegee University against Morehouse College football classic tomorrow at Municipal Stadium. Tickets are $6 and may be purchased at Building 247, Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

There will be a Fort Benning Orienteering Meet Director's Clinic Wednesday from 10:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. at the Fort Mitchell Training Area (V-3) (follow the orienteering signs to the bleachers, approximately one kilometer from 82nd Airborne Division Road).

All individuals involved in organizing or administering of any Fort Benning Orienteering Meets are eligible to participate in this clinic. This clinic will provide instruction and first-hand experience in all phases of organizing and directing a Class "B" Orienteering Meet.

Pre-registration is important. For detailed information call the Orienteering Director (Linda Ferguson) at 545-7519/2332; after 5 p.m. call 322-0760. The deadline for registration is today so call now to enter a worthwhile program.

The U.S. Armed Forces will compete in the 1987 CISM ski championship from March 1 to 7 1987 in Autrans, France. Eligible athletes must have competed in National or International Level Ski Competition in 10 kilometer women's, 20 kilometer men's biathlon, men and women's Giant Slalom and 15 kilometer men and 10 kilometer women's Cross Country. Application for consideration is open to active duty military. Contact the Post Sports Director for details at 545-5777/2332. Applications must be received at Department of the Army no later than Dec. 10.

Season's Greetings

Volunteer Air Force elves at Eielson Air Force Base, Alaska, will again this year conduct their Santa's Mailbag Prgram to send letters from Santa Claus to children throughout the world.

Members of all services are welcome to use the program. The letters must reach Eielson no later than Dec. 3, 1986.

Anyone who would like a child to receive a letter from Santa postmarked "North Pole" should first write the letter they want their child to receive from Santa Claus.

Then, the letter plus a stamped envelope addressed to the youngster, both meeting current postage requirements, should be mailed to: Detachment 2, 11th Weather Squadron, Santa's Mailbag, Eielson AFB, AK 99702.

10th Mountain's troops get experience in exercise

The Bayonet staff

Soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division's 2nd Brigade, recently completed their first Army Readiness Training and Evaluation program since reactivation.

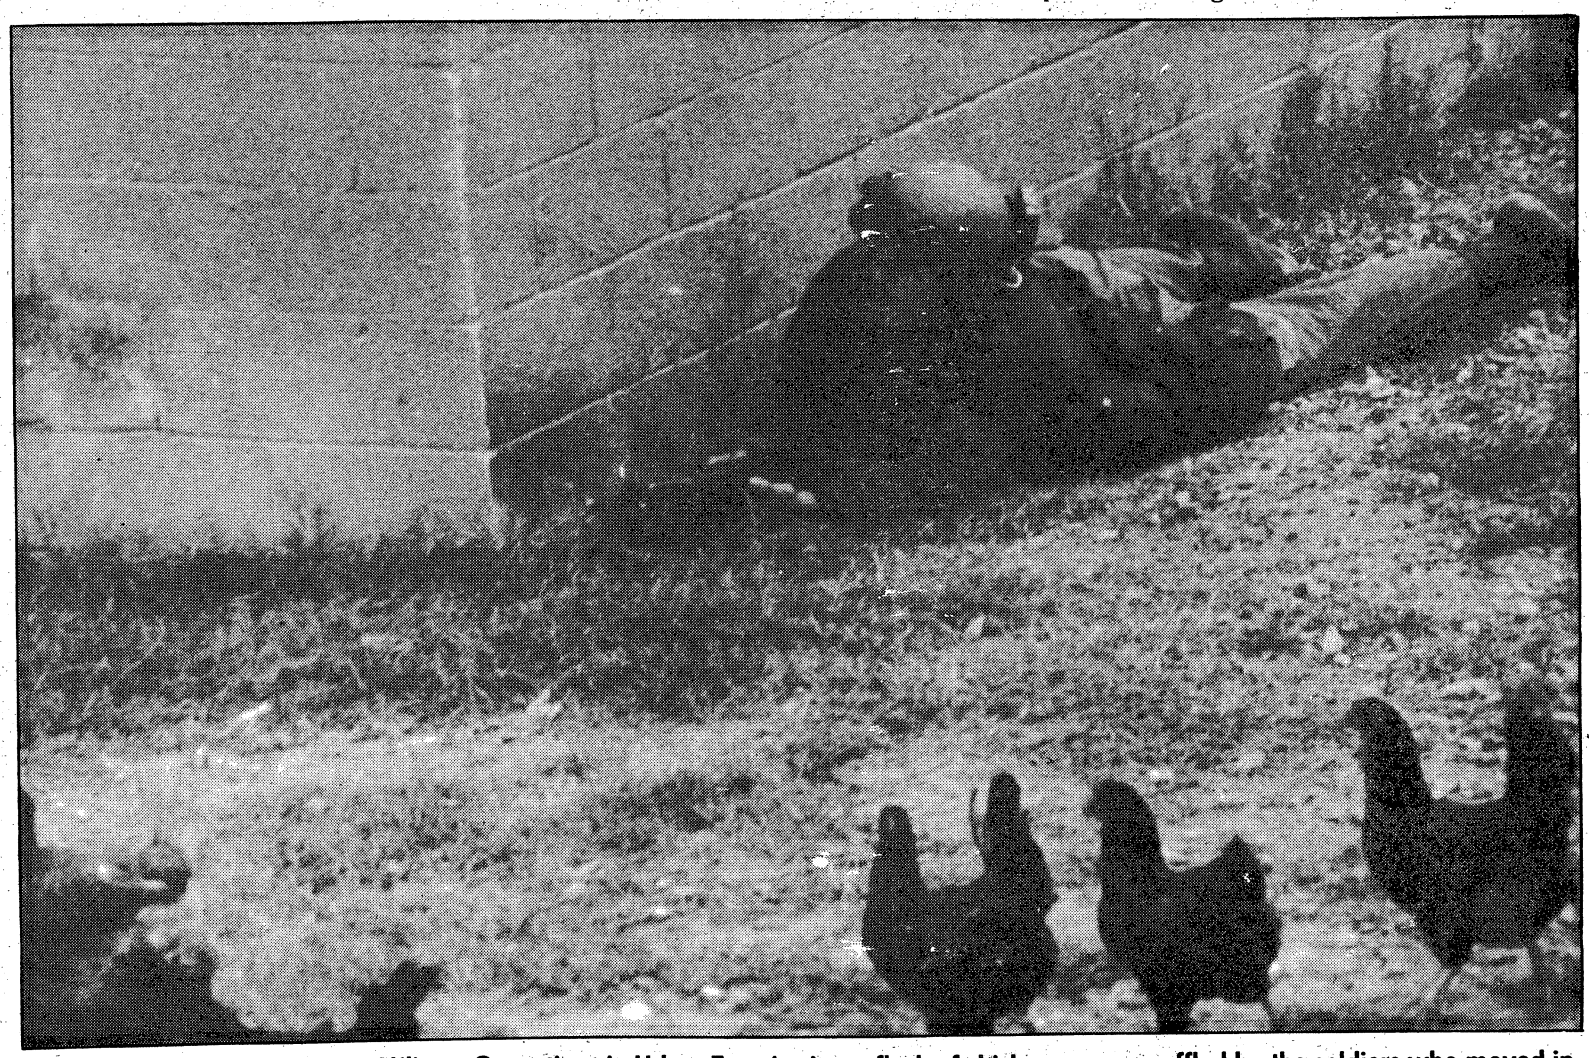
The light infantry soldiers from the 2nd Battalion began the field test Oct. 8 and wrapped it up earlier this week.

According to Capt. Philip A. Scibelli, operations officer for the 2nd Brigade, the total project involved between 1,300 and 1,600 troops.

"The 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry helped us with opposing forces and evaluating support," Scibelli said.

The first day of the ARTEP found the 2nd Battalion soldiers going through the alert sequence. The calls were made, the soldiers reported and the unit was closed off to outsiders — just as it would be in case of a real world deployment.

As part of the "battle" scenario, paratroopers from the the 2nd Battalion, 325th Infantry, 82nd Airborne Division out of Fort Bragg, N.C., jumped onto Lawson Army Airfield and seized control of the airstrip. The mountain soldiers then moved in to provide their support by closing off the area and maintaining control of the airstrip.



Working together, the troopers from the 10th and the 82nd established a hasty defensive perimeter and completed an area reconnaisance. Then the paratroopers flew back to Fort Bragg.

The 10th Mountain soldiers also siezed Decker Airstrip, near Fryar Drop Zone, in a similiar operation to successfully complete the first phase of the ARTEP.

Over the next week, the mountain troops practiced a variety of missions testing their combat readiness. Equipped with Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System gear, they engaged the opposing force soldiers in numerous mock battles.

A highlight in the overall exercise was the assault on the Military Operations in Urban Terrain site. The opposing force from the 3-14th provided a strong defense of the site. It wasn't enough to stop the 2nd Battalion force, however, as the MOUT site became ablaze with gunfire, flares and smoke grenades. Within minutes the enemy was on the run and the 2nd Battalion had secured its objective.

The Brigade leadership believes the exercise was a success. "The battalions responded to all the missions very well and the ARTEP went well," said Capt. Michael Chambers, 2nd Brigade.

The full-time inhabitants of the Military Operations in Urban Terrain site, a flock of chickens, are unruffled by the soldiers who moved in temporarily during the recent exercise.

Stereographs provide fun way to view pictures

This Airborne training stereo pair is mounted left to right for transverse (cross eyed) free viewing in three dimensions. To see these pictures in 3-D all you need to do is master a simple trick. Look at the left image with your right eye and the right image with your left eye, as shown in the diagram. If you do this correctly, you will see three images — the center one should stand out in 3-D.

For those who have throuble fusing the images, here is a helpful hint. Hold a magazine well away from your face and look at the photos as you normally would. With your other hand hold a pencil in your line of sight. Keep looking at the pictures and you will see two images of the pencil, although that image will prabably not be very sharp. Move the pencil back and forth until the tip seems to be at the same point in the stereo pair (the helmet of the soldier in the foreground makes a good target). Now, without moving, look at the pencil.

If you do this correctly, you'll see the 3-D image right behind it. This technique may not work the first time, so try again.

This stereograph is one of thousands made by Bill Walton, a seasoned photographer whose work has been published in the Army Times and Soldier's Magazine. Walton, who retired from the Army as a chief warrant officer 4 after 30 years of service, has been with the U.S. Army Infantry Center Public Affairs Office for almost six years.

He has been making stereographs for nine years and is a member of a stereo society where the membersexchange their work and share their ideas.

Walton says anyone who is interested can call him for more information at 545-3512.

Troops ask questions about Army's new field meal

Army News Service

Although it's been around for six years now, the Meal, Ready-to-Eat, Uncle Sam's new way of feeding people on military maneuvers, is still a mystery to some.

Food management assistance team members from the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency, headquartered at Fort Lee, Va., travel the world asking soldiers their opinions on various aspects of the Army's food service program.

Based on comments FMAT members have received from the field, here are the most commonly asked questions about MRES:

Q: Why is the meal bag so hard to open?

A: The bag that contains the meal was designed to protect the contents and guard it against insects that bore. To meet these requirements, the package must be puncture- and tear-resistant. Tear notches on the border of the pouch are designed for easier opening.

Q: Why is the spoon so short?

A: You're right; the spoon is too short for use with the MRE pouch. The spoon used is the same one for the Meal, Combat Individual. A longer spoon is in the works and is scheduled to be introduced in 1988.

Until then, two sets of tear notches in the MRE pouch make the contents more readily available as you eat your way to the bottom of the pouch. Use the first tear notch to open the pouch. After you've eaten part of it, rip off the additional material at the second tear notch. These notches were added in answer to requests from the field.

Q: Why do some pouches "cling" to the food inside the pouch?

A: Pouches that cling are vacuum-packed. The air is pulled out of the pouch, and then the pouch is sealed. This is done to reduce the amount of oxygen allowed to react with the food. For crackers, cookies, brownies and dehydrated patties, the oxygen combines with the fat and may cause the food to become stale or rancid.

The food is still edible but doesn't taste, look or smell as good as it should. If the package isn't clinging to the food items listed above, eat them as soon as possible.

Q: Why do the plastic bags containing dehydrated patties leak?

A: Each pattie is placed in a plastic bag after dehydration to keep small pieces from breaking off and interfering with the pouch sealing process. The bag also makes it easier to slip the pattie into the pouch. Small slits are cut into the plastic bag to get the air out of the pouch before it's sealed. When dehydrating the pattie, use the pouch and not the plastic bag.

Q: Why do some items come in cardboard boxes?

A: Cardboard cartons are used for all cooked, wet-packet items. The carton does two things: it protects the pouch from punctures and tears, and it limits the amount of flexing of the pouch. To prevent accidental damage, the pouch should not be removed from the carton until mealtime. Flexing the pouch could cause cracks in the aluminum foil layer and significantly reduce shelf life. Though glue was initally used to hold the pouch in place inside the carton, this was discontinued this year.

Q: How are meals (menus) selected?

A: The U.S. Army Natick Research, Development and Engineering Center, Natick, Mass., develops items for approval by all the services (Army, Air Force, Marine Corps and Navy).

For the Army, personnel from the Troop Support Agency sample the meals and approve them for further evaluation.

Menus are then tested in field situations by military units; declared acceptable by the soldier, they're adopted. Menu have also been modified as result of reports from the fie For example, dehydrated fru will be removed from the MI starting this year because negative comments from t field.

Hatch Act limits federal employees' political activity

by Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

Each federal employee has the right to cast his vote in an election and is strongly urged to do so. However, attempts on their part to influence the votes of others is a different story.

The question of political activity by federal employees was first raised by Thomas Jefferson. But it wasn't until 1939 that Congress passed what is known as the Hatch Act, legislation that limits the political activities of federal employees, employees of the District of Columbia and certain employees of state and local government. Its premise: political activity by certain government employees had to be limited for public institutions to function fairly and effectively.

Who is covered under the Hatch Act? Generally, all employees in the executive branch of the federal government including part-time and temporary employees. The Hatch Act restrictions also apply when covered employees are on annual leave, sick leave, leave without pay, administrative leave or furlough.

There are exceptions, but they apply mostly to appointed officials in government, including the heads of the military departments.

The following list shows both permissible and prohibited activities for employees covered by the Hatch Act.

Covered employes MAY:

- Register and vote as they choose;
- Assist in voter registration drives;
- Express opinions about candidates and issues;
- Participate in campaigns where none of the candidates represents a political party;
- Contribute money to political organizations or attend political fund raising functions;
- Wear or display political badges, buttons and stickers;
- Attend political rallies and meetings;
- Join political clubs or parties;
- Sign nominating petitions; and
- Campaign for or against referendum questions, constitutional amendments and municipal ordinances.

Covered employees MAY NOT:

- Be candidates for public office in partisan elections (an election is considered partisan if any candidate for an elected public office is running as a representative of a political party whose presidential candidate received electoral votes in the last presidential election.);
- Campaign for or against a candidate or slate of candidates in partisan elections;
- Make campaign speeches or engage in other campaign activities to elect partisan candidates;
- Collect contributions or sell tickets to political fund raising functions;
- Distribute campaign material in partisan elections;
- Organize or manage political rallies or meetings;
- Hold office in political clubs or parties;
- Circulate nominating petitions; and
- Work to register voters for one party only.

The minimum penalty for violating provisions of the Hatch Act is a 30-day suspension without pay. The maximum penalty is removal. Questions concerning the Hatch Act should be sent (in writing) to: Office of the Special Counsel, U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board, 1120 Vermont Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 2419. Or call: 202-653-7188.

The latest edition of a pamphlet designed to help service members and their dependents locate uniformed services medical and dental facilities in the United States and overseas is now in distribution. Called "Uniformed Services Medical/Dental Facilities Worldwide (1986 Edition)," it lists facilities by state and contains a map pinpointing hospitals in the United States.

Telephone numbers are provided for hospitals; only the location is given for medical clinics and dental facilities. A new feature of this edition is the addiion of complete mailing addresses to aid patients and medical administration personnel in obtaining or transferring medical records.

Telephone numbers for the health benefits advisers at some facilities are included. These advisers provide assistance and answer health care questins from service members and their families.

The pamphlet's introduction provides information about eligibility for care at military medical and dental facilities and how priority of care is determined, plus a brief description of the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services and the Defense Enrollment and Eligibility Reporting System.

Copies of the pamphlet are available through your service's distribution channels.

Procurement violations big gripe with callers to Defense Hotline

by Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

A senior military officer is found to have used airline frequent flyer certificates, earned through government-sponsored travel, for personal use.

Just before retirement, a former senior DoD official is found to have approved the award of a contract to his new boss, a DoD contractor.

These are just two examples of the 4,472 queries received by the DoD Hotline in the six month period ending March 31.

Many of those calls and letters resulted in investigations and corrective actions that stopped wrongdoing or saved the government money.

The Defense Hotline program, according to its chief, Benjamin J. Simon, is a highly visible avenue for reporting waste, fraud and mismanagement in DoD. He said the kind of wrongdoing that is consistently reported, not only to the DoD but to the General Accounting Office, the military services, the defense agencies and other DoD components, includes matters such as overpricing, misusing authority and government property, and falsifying official documents and records.

Still, Simon encourages military people and civilians alike to report instances of fraud, waste or mismanagement to their installation inspector generals after having exhausted the remedies available through local or command channels. "People tend to get a much faster resolution to their inquiries at the local level," said Simon. "Chances are, that's where the problem will be handled anyway."

And although each Defense Hotline caller is first asked, "Have you reported this situation to your local inspector general?" Simon said there are instances where the Defense Hotline staff will become involved instantly. "We will investigate immediately any calls that involve criminal matters," said Simon. "We've found in the past that many people wish to remain anonymous and that there is a tendency not to recontact us."

In cases that involve complex or technical allegations, the caller will be asked to put the pertinent facts in writing. "That means the who, what, when, where, why and how of the incident," said Simon. "Individual investigations of incidents," cautioned Simon, "are not encouraged. That is the responsibility of the inspector general system."

Investigations will not be initiated, according to Simon, on queries where the caller isn't willing to provide all the necessary facts. "We can't take seriously calls that amount to 'There's a lot of waste at installation so-and-so, go down and see for yourself.' We don't have the time or the personnel to go on fishing expeditions." Simon also said the Hotline staff prefers not to receive calls relating to incidents that have already been published in the news media, since active investigations on those charges are probably already under way.

Most investigations initiated by Hotline calls are performed by the service or agency involved. "In the case of two or more services, DoD will usually conduct the investigation," said Simon.

Simon said he encourages those who believe they have legitimate fraud, waste and mismanagement complaints to immediately use one of the many avenues available to them, again stressing the efficiency of the local authorities.

Leading CID one more challenge for Army's 'top cop'

by D. Michael Cheers
Troop News Service

On Jan. 12, 1984, the body of Maj. Gen. Robert G. Ownby was found hanged by the neck with a hemp rope in a stairwell of the two-story Headquarters Building at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio, Texas.

At first, Army investigators and the FBI were baffled by the case. Ownby's hands had been tied behind his back with a belt and there was a note attached to his shirt with a safety pin. The typewritten message: "Captured. Tried. Convicted of crimes by the United States Army against the people of the world. Sentenced. Executed."

The death initially caused the Army to issue a border alert on the likelihood that the hanging was the work of terrorists, but the alert was quickly lifted and the investigation shifted to the possibility that Ownby, who commanded the 90th Army Reserve Command, may have concocted a "terrorist plot" to cloak the taking of his own life. Those hunches proved correct. Eight days after the incident, Ownby's death was ruled a suicide.

At the helm of the Army investigation unit looking into the general's death was Maj. Gen. Eugene Rufus Cromartie, who is currently the commanding general of the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command in Falls Church, Va.

Cromartie also holds the distinction of being the senior Army military police officer and the senior law enforcement officer in uniform in the Department of Defense. He is the first black Army officer to hold these positions.

"That was a hot one," says Cromartie, referring to the Ownby case, which received widespread publicity. The Ownby suicide was just one of 18,000 cases that Cromartie investigated during his first year as commander of the CID.

As head of the CID, whose counterpart in the civilian community is the FBI, Cromartie is charged with overseeing the investigation of all serious crimes committed by Army personnel as well as serious crimes committed against the Army. Serious crimes or felonies, are classified by the Army as rapes, murders aggravated assaults, robberies, suicides and drug-related offenses.

Cromartie manages a staff of 2,132 persons, and is responsible for $14.6 million worth of investigative and support equipment. He oversees a $19.3 million annual operating budget.

For the general, who has spent 25 of his 27 years in the Army in military police work, this latest assignment if just another chapter in his book of challenges. Prior to this command, his other major assignments included commanding a battalion of over 1,000 men in Vietnam. He spent four years in Europe in charge of all U.S. military law enforcement activities there. In addition, he was commander of the Mannheim Military Community in West Germany. That post consisted of 25,000 soldiers and civilian personnel.

A polished professional, hellbent on perfection, Cromartie looks like a man 10 years younger than his 48 years. He is a fitness fanatic; no middle-age stomach bulges. He is Army, complete from head to toe.

Of "humble beginnings," he grew up in Wabasso, Fla. (population: 600). "A lot of people think that I am a product of West Point Military Academy whose parents had connections" he says, "but my daddy was a common laborer with only a third-grade education, took in washing and ironing." But formed during those early years was the desire to excel. "When I was 12 years old working in those orange groves with all those mosquitoes and snakes, I said to myself, 'There's got to be something better.' "

Something better was just a few years away.

Cromartie entered Florida A&M University at age 16 and enrolled in the ROTC program. He excelled in the program and in his studies, and was elected class president each of his four years. He graduated with a bachelor's degree in social studies. He also holds a master's degree in education/guidance and counseling from the University of Dayton.

He says he became interested in military police work after viewing a military police regiment one summer at Fort Benning, Ga. "The MPs realy impressed me," he recalls. "They were really sharp with their white gloves and white bootlaces, and riding those motorcycles. I remember saying, 'Man, that looks good to me, that's what I want to go into.' "

His present command keeps him on the road two weeks a month visiting the various CID regions across the U.S., Europe and Asia. "My travels are not attendant to investigations, but are attendant to my getting out there and talking to those commanders who need support and then talking with my agents. If people feel that you care about them, they will really work hard for you," he says.

Besides his work-related travels, Cromartie spends time visiting colleges and high schools, promoting Army ROTC. "I don't care what my schedule looks like, when I have an invite to go to a high school or college, I go," he says.

Cromartie's future may be just as rewarding as his past has been. He is only two stars away from achieving four-star general status, the Army's highest grade. And, though he is only the fourth commander to head the CID, he says he does not want to stay in his present command too much longer. "Three years is the average stay," he says. "By that time I should have this command running like I want it. Serious crimes have dropped something like 11 percent over the past year, and the trend is downward."

But whatever his future decision may be, his success is assured.

"Several things drive the train for me," says. "As long as I feel that I can make a contribution and there is room for advancement, then I'll stay in the Army. Once that ceases to be, then I'm sure I can make the transition into civilian law enforcement."

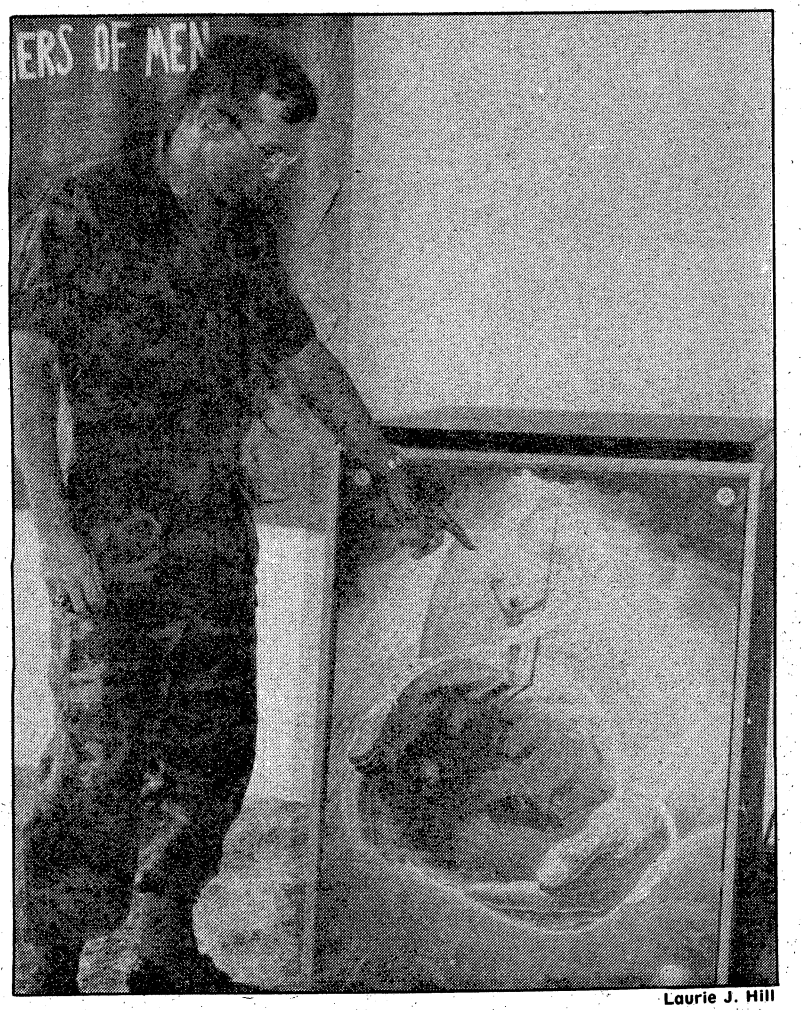
Keeping good soldiers in the Army is part of every leader's job. Whether you're an NCO or an officer, your leadership can have a powerful influence on your soldiers, especially in their decision to reenlist.

Nobody knows better than you that when soldiers are treated fairly, with respect, and with a true concern for their goals and accomplishments, they're more likely to find their Army experience a positive one. And more likely to want to continue that experience.

As you know, it takes a lot to develop a good soldier. Time, patience, and effort. But the end result is worth it. Not just for a proud soldier, or the Army, but as a credit to your ability as a leader.



Next time you stand in front of your troops, remember that they're not just in the Army, they are the Army. And they're yours to keep.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

THEY'RE YOURS TO KEEP.

Bethel Series helps Bible study groups understand lessons through pictures

USAIC Chaplain's Office

To communicate God's word in our visually-oriented culture is a challenge often faced by preachers and teachers of the Bible.

The Bethel Bible Series meets this challenge by using dramatic pictures to assist participants in understanding and remembering the content and message of the Bible. Learning key Bible verses also helps students to round out the survey.

Originally presented in 1957 by Rev. Harley Swiggum, a Lutheran pastor in Madison, Wis., the series seeks to enable mature Christians to be competent and accomplished Bible instructors. Swiggum began with a core group of Sunday school teachers, and the number of certified Bethel instructors who have completed the two-year program, has grown every since.

Fort Benning is blessed with a chaplain who holds Bethel certification. Chaplain Greg Hill is offering this program of learning and spiritual growth on post this year.

Two 20-week components, one for the Old Testament and one for the New Testament, with a session on the inter-testamental period in between, make up the series.

"The Old Testament module gets people to 'think Hebrew'," Hill said. "This helps one to fully comprehend the Old Testament message."

"And it is essential to really understand the Old Testament in order to know the New Testament well."

The New Testament module coveys basic themes and demonstrates how the New fulfills the Old Testament.

Hill, the protestant chaplain of The School Brigade, said, "The Bethel Series is an in-depth Bible course. To the serious student of scripture, it offers a rich reward of knowledge and insight for the significant commitment of time and effort it demands.

"Everyone, regardless of denomination or tradition, is welcomed. There are Jewish Rabbis who are certified Bethel instructors and who said that they learned a lot from the series."

Father Leo Martineau, Catholic Chaplain at TSB, said, "The Bethel series is valuable as a learning experience; but equally important is the closeness which develops among believers participating in this intense course. This is fertile ground with which God's spirit can work."

The Bethel group will meet on Tuesday evenings, beginning Oct. 21 in the TSB Chapel. Each two-hour session begins at 7 p.m.

Call Chaplain Hill at 545-1314 for more information and registration.

Chaplain's advice is: when all else fails, read instructions

by Richard G. Quinn
1-58th Infantry Chaplain

Like most people, I've fallen prey a thousand times to the advice, "If all else fails, read the instructions."

It must be innate within me, this feeling of being able to assemble and operate any gadget on the market proficiently without the assistance of the designer or manufacturer.

A couple of years ago, I bought a personal computer at a close-out sale. I carried my prize home with all the excitement of a kid at Christmas. I pulled it out and set it on a little table and began wiring wires and plugging plugs.

Much to my dismay, the user's manual looked like a New York City telephone directory and I was a computer illiterate.

I managed to type my name on the screen, but not much more. After picking out a paragraph here and there in the manual, I was able with a little trial and error to play a video game. No one else was the loser but me.

Either because of my fears, arrogance, laziness, lack of time, preoccupation or growing boredom, I never became proficient with the manual and consequently never became proficient with my computer. Like many, I mocked the slogan "user friendly" and my prize collects dust in the closet.

All of us have been given something far more important than a computer: our own lives. Along with the gift comes an operator's manual from the designer and manufacturer. Unfortunately, we often wait until all else fails before we read the instructions. Millions of books have been written as supposed guides to improving our lives; but no book tells it like "The Book."

Of course, I'm talking about the Bible. II Timothy 3:16, 17 says, "All scripture is inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for training in righteousness; that the man of God may be adequate, equipped for every good work."

More than just stories of people long ago, the Bible is God's guide book for maximizing life's operation. The problem is, many of us try to operate our lives like I do my computer. We may pick a paragraph out here or there, but we never become proficient, and consequently limp through our earthly existence. We know we should read it; but we don't. We want to read it; but we won't.

Ephesians, Chapter Six, says the Bible is our sword. Unfortunately, some swords are lost, rusted, or in the possession of the unpracticed.

The common reasons people give for not reading the Bible are: "I don't have time," and "I don't understand." Let's look at these briefly.

Bible reading must be a matter of priority. We find time to do what we want to do. It's amazing how many folks who say they don't have time to read the Bible — even 15 minutes a day — have time to watch hours of television

Beetle still a bumbling private 36 years after being drafted

by Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

He was a college student, drafted into the Army during the Korean War. Thirty-six years later, he's still in basic training and still a private with little chance of promotion.

Yet millions of Americans are entertained each day by the antics of Beetle Bailey.

Mort Walker, Beetle's creator, unashamedly admits that he hasn't made an effort to keep up with changes in the military since Beetle Bailey's 1950 debut. He knows uniform changes have taken place, but doesn't reflect them in his strip. He's visited dormitory-style military housing at Fort Dix, N.J., but still houses his characters in old World War II barracks. He once spent a week at Fort Knox, Ky., but thinks a tank, drawn the way a tank really looks, just isn't funny.

"I'm a little afraid to update it and use modern technology and modern weapons, modern thinking and new language because I would mystify most of my readers."

So what is it that has kept Americans captivated by Beetle Bailey and his cohorts at Camp Swampy?

Walker said a psychiatrist who analyzed the strip concluded it is a sense of nostalgia. "People read it, and it reminds them of their experiences," he said.

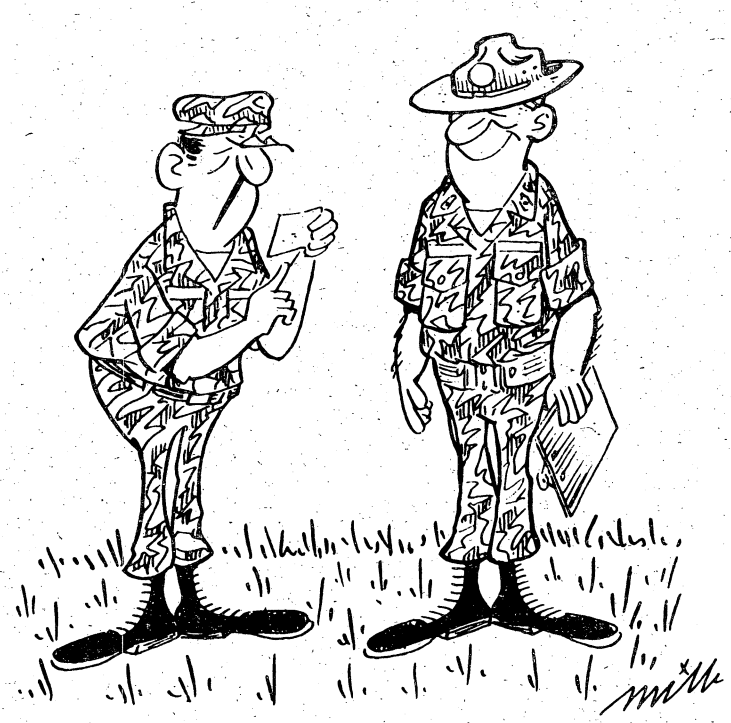
For, despite a military setting and miliary themes, Beetle Bailey is really a commentary about people — military and civilian people alike. And the funniest way to comment on people, Walker said, is to focus on their foibles.

Comics editor Bill Yates of King Features Syndicate said getting people to laugh at themselves is what newspaper comics are all about. "It is the human qualities of these characters that we remember for years, not the specific gags or clever artwork," he said.

Readers relate to their favorite character's faults, exaggerated as they might be.

There's Beetle's laziness and lack of discipline. Sarge's frustration at never being able to "militarize" Beetle, his occasional use of violence, his obsession with food, his uncanny ability to end up on the wrong end of any embarrassing situation. There's Genral Halftrack's fumbling, his desire to chase every pretty woman who comes along in spite of advancing age that keeps him from doing anything about it. And Lt. Fuzz's gung-ho belief that he can single-handedly "save" the Army.

Since World War I, the military has become a rich source of comic material, not only for comic strips like Walker's, but also for television series and full length movies. Among them are "Gomer Pyle U.S.M.C.," "McHale's Navy," "M*A*S*H," "Private Benjamin," "Stripes" and "Tank."



Like the Bailey strip, these programs share an anti-authoritarian theme. They focus on military people who can't (or won't) keep in step with the military establishment. Yet, through fumbling or ingenuity, they always end up three steps ahead of their peers.

PFC Gomer Pyle was too naive and easygoing to adapt to Sgt. Carter's by-the-book style. Lt. Cmdr. Quniton McHale and his torpedo were too independent to follow Capt, Binghamton's questionable leadership.

"Much of their appeal stems from the ingenuity with which they circumvent military rules to maintain their standings as civilians in a world run by professional soldiers," theorized Brian Walker, co-founder of the Museum of Cartoon Art in Protchester, N.Y.

Beetle "represents the little man who is never completely militarized and never will be," Walker said. "It really is the American personality, I think, to challenge authority. It's almost part and parcel of democracy. Just because a man is a mayor or a policeman doesn't make him right. So, they are constantly tested and it makes them a better mayor or policeman, I think."

So when Beetle Baily or McHale or Hawkeye Pierce defy the military establishment, it's enough to get a chortle and guffaw out of just about anyone — miliary and civilian alike.

"See if I have this right, sarge. Officers are addressed as 'sir,' warrant officers as 'mister' and enlisted personnel below the grade of E-3 as 'hey you '."

Armed forces' top soldiers laugh at military humor too

by Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

"We need to be able to stand back, realize that some of the things we in the military do are humorous, and laugh at ourselves."

That's what Master Chief Petty Officer of the Navy William H. Plackett, the Navy's top enlisted man, thinks of comic strips, television shows and movies that depict the military in a humorous light.

Plackett isn't alone in his view. When asked what they think of the ribs and barbs the miliary regularly takes in newsprint and on the screen, the top enlisted members of the Army and Air Force agreed that the effects are as much positive as negative.

SMA Glen E. Morrell gives the Beetle Bailey comic strip and unhesitant "thumbs up." He said Beetle Bailey isn't that far off base from Willie and Joe, the widely popular creations of World War II infantryman and cartoonist Bill Mauldin.

Chief Master Sergeant of the Air Force Sam E. Parish doesn't necessarily agree. He said Mauldin had a knack for getting his readers to laugh with, not just at, Willie and Joe. Much of today's military-related humor, he said, leaves the readers simply laughing at the military.

However, Parish said this humor is basically harmless because it's so far from reality that there's little risk of having it accepted as such.

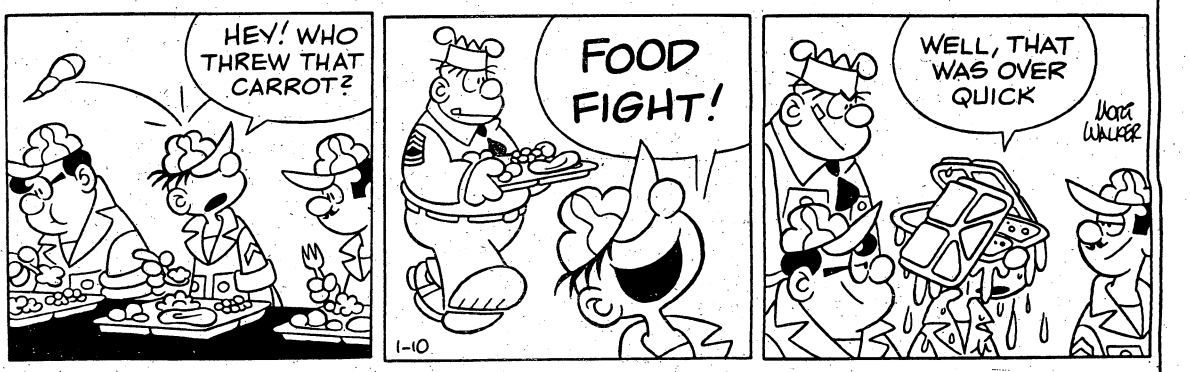
Plackett agreed that the old "McHale's Navy" television show was funny, "but certainly so farciful that nobody could possibly accept it as a portrayal of reality."

That's not to say the top enlisted service members always agree with the way their fellow service members are depicted by cartoonists and television writers. Plackett said he sees red when the target of this humor is the stereotypical "drunken sailor." Morrell said the the movie and television show "Private Benjamin" takes a cheap shot at the capabilities and accomplishments of female soldiers. Parish said he sometimes resents humor that always targets enlisted people.

"But there comes a point and a time when you need to see the humor in what you do," Morrell said. "And everyone, whether they're in the miltiary or not, needs to be able to take criticism."

Plackett said his philosophy is to "take your job very seriously, but don't take yourself too seriously."

Birth of a Comic Strip



Concept and first draft or idea sketch. This rough pencil sketch is done on napkins, envelopes, anything that's handy when the cartoonist feels funny and inspired. This draft was based on a gag originally just jotted down in an idea notebook.

Smithsonian News Service Art by Mort Walker with permission of King Features Syndicate

Pencil drawing. This second draft is done in pencil. Here Mort Walker has done his drawing on Bristol board and put the dialogue in its traditional space in the top third of the panels.

The finished product. The figures and letters are inked over and the pencil lines erased. Tools used by many cartoonists include felt tip pens and mechanical pencils. Peel-off sheets of tiny black dots, known as ben day, are added to some strips to give the appearance of gray tones. The date and cartoonist's signature are added at this stage.

Hunters have more rules to follow when taking gun in hand this year

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

Hunters who have set their sights on a prosperous deer season, opening Oct. 25, should not enter the woods half cocked.

Those who have permission to hunt on Fort Benning are responsible for familiarizing themselves with the U. S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-2, and both state and federal laws.

There have been several recent changes to the USAIC Regulation.

A major change to post hunting will be the requirement for an Area Access Permit.

The permit will be used to assign hunters to areas. The goal is to have no more than one hunter in each 25 acre radius.

The Area Access Premit Office, located near the Harmony Church deer check station will be open daily from 5:30 a.m. to 9 p.m.

Hunters must check out of the assigned area no later than 9 p.m. by personally appearing at the Area Access Permit Office, returning the Area Access Permit and retrieving their State Hunting License and Installation Hunting Permit.

Youth has it's advantages also. When a special permit is not needed, persons younger than 15 years old are not required to posssess a hunting permit. Hunters 12 through 15 must be accompanied by a sponsor to hunt on the reservation. If born after Jan. 1, 1961, proof must be provided indicating completion of an approved hunter education course.

Persons 10 and 11 may accompany a sponsor while hunting, but are not authorized to carry firearms.

Also among the changes are the number of guests that may be sponsored. Only two guests may be sponsored on a daily basis.

So, with the new rules clearly in your sights, good hunting. For more information on the specific hunting laws, call or stop by the Outdoor Recreation Office, in Building 247 on Ingersoll Street.

Georgia sets dates for hunting duck

Georgia's waterfowl seasons have been set for the 1986, 1987 season. The duck hunting season is Nov. 27 to 29, and Dec. 13 through Jan. 18.

Bag limits are four daily, not to exceed more than two wood ducks; three mallards, only one of which can be a hen; two pintails; one black duck; two redheads; and one fulvous tree duck.

The season is closed for canvasbacks. These seasons and bag limits will apply to the Georgia portion of Fort Benning.

Hunting on the Alabama portion of the reservation will be in compliance with Alabama State Law regarding seasons, bag limits, and special state licenses.

For more information call 544-6120.

Infantry Museum Race scheduled for Oct. 25

The 6th Annual National Infantry Museum Road Race will be Oct. 25 at 8 a.m. at Doughboy Stadium.

The race, conducted on what is described as a "flat and fast" five-mile course, starts and finishes in the vicinity of Doughboy Stadium.

Individual, team and formation awards will be given. A minimum of 50 people are required to qualify for a formation award.

Pre-race registration is being conducted in the National Infantry museum on Baltzell Avenue Tuesday through Friday 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and will continue through Oct. 24; also in Briant Wells Field House, Building 933, Oct. 24, from 5 to 9 p.m. and on Oct. 25, from 6:30 to 8:45 a.m.

Deadline for entering is 8:45 a.m. on the morning of the road race.

Proceeds from the race will go to the National Infantry Museum, which last year received more than $11,500 as a result of the event.

The road race is one of the largest in the Southeast. Last year more than 2,000 runners participated in the event. A starting field of 3,000 runners is expected this year.

The 1st Brigade, Army Training Center, won last year's National Infantry Museum five-mile race from a field of 22 formations.

The U.S. Army School of the Americas also won in a field of 48 teams, each consisting of five runners.

Small arms shooters to meet Nov. 10-14

The U.S. Army Infantry Center Small Arms Championship Matches are scheduled for Nov. 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

A mandatory marksmanship clinic will be conducted at the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Nov. 5 through 7 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The clinics and the matches will be at Phillips Range for M1911 pistol; Easley Range for M16 rifle and McAndrews Range for M60 machine gun.

Persons interested in participating should call Capt. Woody or SFC Farmer at 545-4252.

A mandatory team captains' meeting will be conducted Oct. 20 at 9 a.m. in Room 642, Building 4.

2-69th soldiers win softball tournament

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor won second place in the Georgia State Softball Playoffs recently.

Members of the winning team are SSgts. Leonard Beech and Robert Walker, 1st Lt. Ken Fisher, Sp4 Johnny Schwartz and SFC Franklin Shuff.

The team played at Warner Robins Air Force Base, playing five games and beating out two post champions.

every day. If it is a priority, we will make time to read the Bible.

Those who don't understand the Bible usually are reading an old Bible translation or from an obscure place in the Bible. There is a big difference in English between 1611, the date the King James Version Bible was translated into English and the English of 1986. If the language is a problem for you, try reading from any of the recent translations.

The other problem, reading from an obscure place, is exemplified by the person who resolves to read the Bible and starts in Genesis determined to read it through. By Leviticus, the reader is hopelessly lost.

New readers should begin in the New Testament gospels — Mark is the shortest and most action-packed — and then vary reading between various other parts of the Bible and the gospels.

Won't you begin reading the instructions, God's word, today and see how well life works?

Catholics to share 'good news' Sunday

Sunday, Catholics at Fort Benning will observe World Mission Sunday.

Pope John Paul II said, "On World Mission Sunday, the entire church is once again called with the power of the same words that the Lord Jesus addressed to his Apostles at the end of his earthly mission: 'Go out to the whole world; proclaim the good news to all creation'."

World Mission Sunday is an opportunity to spiritually join ourselves with mission priests, religious, and lay catechists who speak and live their faith in Jesus with the poorest of our human family.

Our financial sacrifices on his day become the sustenance of those who labor in the far parts of the world we call "the missions" or in mission areas of our own country.

The designated offering at all Catholic celebrations this weekend will directly support the worldwide evangelical and service effort of the church.

Prospective couples must attend seminar

A pre-Marriage seminar will be offered Sunday at 1 p.m. in the Religious Education Center.

Participation in this program is required for all who wish to celebrate marriage in the Catholic Church.

For information and registration call 545-2771.

Fort Benning's 10K/Biathlon

The Martin Army Community Hospital Biathlon is planned for Nov. 8. The biathlon consists of a 3-mile run, followed by a 30-mile bike ride. The 10 kilometer race will begin after all bikers are on the road.

The biathlon begins at 8:15 a.m., and the 10K follows at 9 a.m.

Courses begin and end at Martin Army Community Hospital, and will be mostly paved roads.

Competitors may enter the biathlon as individuals, members of a relay, or a three-person team. Relays can be made up of all men, all women, or a mixed group but relay members will not be eligible for individual awards.

Team members will compete separately, and their times totaled to determine the winner. Team members are eligible for individual awards.

Runners may enter the 10k race as individuals or as members of a three-person team. Their three times will be totaled to determine the winner. Team members are eligible for individual awards and will also compete for the top team trophy.

T-shirts will be given to all participants who preregister. Awards will be presented to the top three overall male and female finishers in the 10K and biathlon, the top male, female and mixed biathlon relay team, and individual age group winners.

Preregister by sending the completed entry form to: 10K/Biathlon, Box 642, MACH, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-6100, and enclosing the appropriate registration fee. Make checks payable to The Association of the U.S. Army. Preregistration deadline is Oct. 31.

Team members must submit a separate registration form for each person and submit them together with the team fee.

You can also pregister at the Physical Therapy Clinic at MACH.

Fees are: Biathlon — Individual, $10; Relay, $18; Team, $30. 10K run — Individual, $7; Team, $21. Late registration fees are: Biathlon — Individual, $13; Relay, $24; Team, $39. 10K — Individual, $10; Team, $30.

Late registration will be from 7 to 8:15 a.m. the day of the race.

For more information, call Johanna Gabbard at 544-3308 or Mark Connelly at 544-3968.

Lemon lot closes for construction

The parking lot adjacent to the Transportation Motor Pool on Edwards Street on Main Post that presently accommodates the Lemon Lot will be closed beginning Monday for construction.

The Fort Benning Military Police are asking that anyone who has a car for sale on the lot move it before Sunday. The parking lot behind the Main Post Theater has been identified as the temporary Lemon Lot.

Schools to observe Vets Day Nov. 11

Fort Benning schools will be closed Nov. 11 to observe Veterans Day.

Parents should note that this is a change to the school calendar, which moves the holiday from Nov. 10 to 11.

School will be in session Nov. 10.

Contributions for the annual Combined Federal Campaign topped $100,000 Tuesday, according to campaign officials.

Unit project officers are urged to turn in collections frequently and no later than mid-afternoon each day.

Project HOPE was inadvertently omitted from the list of agencies receiving assistance. Hundreds of medical volunteers train health care personnel in developing countries.

Dental clinic moves

Beginning Monday, the Department of Dentistry, Martin Army Community Hospital, will move for approximately four months to the 2nd floor of the hospital, Room 211, 544-2158.

Corporals replacing 'acting sergeants'

Army News Service

• Effective immediately specialists four will no longer be authorized to be appointed as "acting sergeants" by their commander. The rank of corporal will replace "acting sergeants" or "acting jacks."

The appointment of specialists four to corporal applies to those soldiers assigned to sergeant positions.

Before a soldier can be appointed to corporal by his commander, he must meet these requirements: serve in the NCO position for 60 days and successfully complete the Primary Leadership Development Course, or serve in the NCO position successfully for 120 days, said SGM Dennis Smith, personnel policy integrator, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel in the Pentagon.

Current regulations allow for specialists filling sergeant positions to be appointed as "acting sergeants" by their commanders, for the time the soldier spends in the sergeant position, said Smith.

However, with this change, the commander may only appoint the specialist four laterally to corporal. The soldier then remains a corporal whether he moves to another position, or another unit, said Smith.

Soldiers currently in the possession of acting sergeant stripes will see them disappear immediately and be replaced with corporal stripes provided the commander approves the appointment and the soldier meets the prerequisites, said Smith.

This change is being made because acting sergeants do not have the same status under the uniform code of military justice as NCOs have in regarding such matters as disobeying an order or disrespect to an NCO, said Smith. This change should eliminate these problems.

Editorial

Is it 'fall back, spring forward' or 'spring back, fall forward?'

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

The end of daylight-saving time and the resumption of standard time is just around the corner. Sunday we "spring forward and fall back" or is it "spring back and fall forward?" I never can get that straight. Do we lose an hour or gain one? What's all the ruckus about? Why can't we just leave the clocks alone?

Confusion abounds around this time of the year over the "changing of the clocks." Congress cannot decide whether we should or not or if we should, when we should.

As with anything controversial, daylight-saving time causes most people to stutter and stammer and fall over themselves trying to figure it all out. Also, as with controversial subjects, there are advantages and disadvantages.

Under the new law signed by President Ronald Reagan in July, standard time still resumes at 2 a.m. the last Sunday in October. However, daylight-saving time starts earlier next spring — on April 5.

The issue of lengthening the number of weeks of daylight-saving time has been debated since the United States began experimenting with the concept during the energy crisis in 1974 and 1975.

My preference is to have daylight-saving time become standard time. That is to say, lets have more hours of daylight all year long, not just in the summer months.

I like it when the sun rises later in the morning and stays up later into the evening. It doesn't bother me at all to drive to work in the dark. I'm not usually awake at that time of the day anyway. I get into my Bronco II, set the controls for autopilot and eventually end up standing in the PT formation.

According to a 1974 study by the U.S. Department of Transportation, which controls this whole issue, increasing the number of months of daylight-saving time is preferred. The study found:

- Daylight-saving time saves energy. Based on energy consumption figures for 1974 and 1975, observance of daylight-saving time in March and April of those years saved the equivalent of 100,000 barrels of oil in energy each day — a total of 6 million barrels in each of the two years.
- Daylight-saving time reduces motor vehicle accidents, fatalities and injuries by enabling more people to travel home from work and school in the daylight, which is much safer than darkness.
- By enabling people to get home from work and school and complete more errands and chores in daylight, daylight-saving time seems to reduce people's exposure to crime, which is more common in darkness than in light.

Think about it from this point of view: with more hours of daylight in the evening you can get more work done around the house after work.

What about the farmers who have enough problems without this question of number of hours of light in a day? They need as much time as they can get in order to get all of their work accomplished. It isn't a matter of going home from a day's work at 5 p.m. and popping the top on a cool one. Their day isn't over until the last cow has been milked or the last row of wheat has been harvested. Theirs is a long day — regardless of the season.

So, even though next spring we will enjoy longer days sooner, we will still have to "fall back" when October rolls around. I think it's time our lawmakers do something that makes sense and adopt daylight-saving time as the standard time.

Various voices

Sunday we set the clocks back one hour to resume standard time. What do you think are the advantages or disadvantages ?

Stuart Atkins, Civilian employee —"I always feel more motivated in the daylight and the change in time allows me to accomplish more things around the house."

SFC Samuel A. Barkley, 608th Ordnance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group —"I think that morning physical training will be much safer in the daylight rather than in the dark."

PFC Lynette Ford, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group — "I like the change because I'm a busy person and the extra daylight gives me a chance to do more after work."

Op-Ed

'Black Hat' instructors lead by example, show professionalism

by Mike Gibson
Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment

At the U.S. Army Airborne School here the Airborne Instructor ("Black Hat") takes a vested interest in the Basic Airborne Course student.

The Black Hats are aware that one day in the future they might be called upon to serve in combat with any of the 23,000 airborne paratroopers trained here each year.

The Black Hat is, and always will be, the epitome of a soldier. The quality and level of professionalism of the non-commissioned officers here are surpassed by none. Here is where we take the best non-jump qualified personnel from the armed forces of the world and mold them into potential Airborne paratroopers, ready to advance forward in training.

"We sincerely believe that being a paratrooper is not just a job but a profession," said SSgt. Michael Peay, a instructor. Peay believes without reservation that being a professional soldier, NCO, and a United States Army paratrooper is a great way of life and it is the only way of life for him.

The BAC students are taught the finer points of performance in the art of jumping out of an aircraft while in flight, which the BAC student must master prior to earning an opportunity of "putting his feet and knees into the breeze."

He is given intense instruction on the proper execution of a Parachute Landing Fall, proper exit procedure from an aircraft while in flight (using a 34 feet high tower) and proper wear and use of various parachutes. During his training he must also maintain a high level of motivation, discipline and appearance or he may be removed from the course.

Airborne training is physically and mentally demanding and it's our job to take a young soldier and start from scratch and within the first five days train him to the level of performance that will enable him to safely execute a PLF and exit a mock tower.

Sometimes it can be very frustrating for the BAC student, but nevertheless, at the end of the first week we see the same student who had difficulties and overcame them, go forward. That makes it worthwhile to us.

The Black Hats acquire a vast amount of experience and knowledge over the years that they effectively use to their advantage to train the potential paratroopers.

Those who wear the coveted silver wings upon their chest set themselves apart from the rest of the military by displaying to the world that they belong to a prestigious minority group — Airborne paratroopers.

It's a truly rewarding experience to be a part of the Airborne community, its heritage, and its outstanding officers, NCOs, and enlisted ranks.

When you see a paratrooper, you should see a proud soldier, a confident soldier and a professional soldier.

Dear Editor:

I have hunted on Fort Benning for more than 30 years, so each year as the hunting season arrives, I am not surprised by the things that I am required to do to be able to hunt on post.

However, this year with the new hunting regulations requiring hunters to be assigned an area to hunt and to be checked in and out each time they go hunting has gone too far.

What can be safe when you require hundreds of hunters to speed out to the check station to be first in line at 5 a.m. on a cold, wet morning?

Not only is this an unnecessary inconvenience to the hunters but I don't think the Army really knows what a problem it has caused itself. Checking in and out thousands of hunters will turn

29th Infantry Regiment helps NCOs get promoted

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment correspondent

Apparently, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment is the place to be if you're looking for a promotion.

Recently, the Battalion ranked second, behind 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, in numbers of sergeants first class selected for promotion to master sergeant.

As documented on the new list, nine of the 68 soldiers selected are from 2nd Battalion. Included are: SFCs Dewayne Chapman, Joe L. Cummings, Naponelia Kennard, Joseph D. Hardison, Curtis E. Hickman, Dudley G. Jones, George E. Powell III, Daniel A. Renois and Willie J. Young.

Only, 1st Bn., TSB, had more soldiers (13) selected from any one organization.

What does this mean?

Well, it means that 2nd Bn. is helping to put a common perception to rest that Table of Distribution and Allowances units don't do as well as Table of Organization Effectiveness units in promotions, says Lt. Col. Roy W. Turgeon, 2nd Bn. commander, and a former member of a master sergeant selection board.

It also says that 2nd Bn. is doing something right to help its senior non-commissioned officers, progress in their careers, Turgeon added.

He pointed out that board members consider the type of job assignments a soldier has had and well-rounded career positions when making their sections.

2nd Battalion, which has many different jobs, operates on the concept of cross-training its soldiers.

According to Turgeon, "Our NCOs move around to different positions for professional development."

The Battalion houses some 53 platoon sergeant positions, 90 squad leader positions, 30 operations and training NCO jobs, and numerous instructor positions.

As an instructor, the NCO may teach different levels of students — One Station Unit Training, Advanced Non-commissioned Officers Course, Infantry Officers Basic Course, Infantry Officers Advanced Course, and Commanders Course — as well as teach several different subject areas during his tenure.

Further, Battalion NCOs, via their instruction, greatly influence Army readiness, says Turgeon. "In our teaching, we use the small group instruction concept. A method whereby the NCO instructor stays with the same group of soldiers throughout the training period and teaches the student everything he needs to know about that particular area of training."

SFC Curtis Hickman, principal instructor at Pierce Range, says he has done a "little bit of everything" for the Battalion since it formed two years ago.

"It used to be that we were thrown out of the system . . . excess personnel . . . just because we were instructors.

However, Hickman added, "I don't have any regrets about being a part of the 29th. In fact, I plan to retire here."

SGM Academy needed before CSM promotion

Army News Service

Senior non-commissioned officers with their eyes on becoming command sergeants major need to complete the United States Army Sergeant Major Academy resident or non-resident course prior to appointment.

Soldiers on active duty selected by the Department of the Army board for CSM will be required to complete either the resident or non-resident course prior to being appointed to CSM, said Maj. William W. Boehm, personnel policy integrator, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel in the Pentagon.

Soldiers who are non-graduates (enrolled but were removed from the course prior to successful completion) of the USASMA or the USASMA corresponding studies program are not eligible for CSM consideration, said Boehm.

Soldiers selected for CSM after Oct. 1 and are not graduates of USASMA may not be frocked.

Soldiers selected for CSM after Oct. 1 will be graduates of USASMA when they are appointed, said Boehm.

The reason for this change, said Boehm, is to further link progression through the NCO ranks with attendance at Non-Commissioned Officer Education System courses.

Earlier this month Task Force Bravo from the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group deployed to Clarks Hill Lake on the Georgia and South Carolina border.

The task force, made up primarily of soldiers from Company B and augmented with troops from the Battalion's other four companies, is constructing four gravel roads, a seven-level observation tower, a 350-feet long wooden bridge and an earthen dam in support of the Savannah District Corps of Engineers resources management of the area.

Additional ongoing construction projects include the electrical and plumbing hook-up of some 20 recreational camp sites as well as possible squad size projects for boating ramps and fish cleaning stations.

While they are staying at the Fort Gordon Recreation Center, the troops are performing minor repairs and maintenance on the buildings there. In return, Fort Gordon is providing the engineers with chow, clean laundry and supplies. Although the maintenance support for high echelon repairs continues to be shuttled by tractor trailer from Fort Benning, furhter coordination for parts at Fort Gordon and with the Corps of Engineers has allowed the task force equipment to operate with only a few evacuations.

A platoon from Company D, 92nd Engineer Battalion at Fort Gordon was attached to the task force to offset the platoon of Co. B troops that stayed behind at Fort Benning to complete a special project. The Fort Gordon soldiers round out the task force by providing carprentry, electrical and plumbing skills. The platoon is directing its efforts toward construction of the 350-feet long bridge and the campsite hookups. — Steven G. Wabnitz, Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

The Army Training Center record for Basic Rifle Marksmanship is a fragile thing these days. Just last week, a company from the 1st Infantry Training Brigade set a new record. That same afternoon, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 2nd ITB, shot up the range with a 30.61 company average, breaking the record set that morning.

The record did not withstand the test of time. A week later, Company D, 8th Battalion, 2nd ITB, nudged out Company C with a new record. Right now the new ATC record stands at 30.71.

SFC Carmon Holley, senior drill sergeant of Company D, said, "We didn't do anything different this time teaching BRM. We stuck to the basics and also spent a lot of time cleaning our weapons, and it paid off because we had less weapons malfunctions."

The Company took all 120 soldiers to the range that day and 119 qualified with the M16 rifle. "That is what is really important to us," Holley said. "We don't train to break records — our goal is to have everyone qualify." — Robert Schmidt, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

36th Engineer's aviators prepare for deactivation

by Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

They're not dead yet, but soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group Aviation Section consider themselves part of a dying breed.

According to Capt. Richard G. Banks, section leader, his group will be deactivated in two years. "The Army is trying to consolidate all the aviation sections and activate a separate aviation brigade," Banks said.

Banks said his section and the 10th Mountain Division Aviation Section are the only two on Fort Benning. As such, the 25 soldiers at the 36th Group hangar at Lawson Army Airfield stay busy.

"Our basic mission is to support the 36th Engineer Group," Banks said. "We really don't do one sort of mission. We do most of our work during field training exercises," he added.

The section provides transportation and supplies for the unit and also flies reconnaissance missions.

The section also flies convoy cover. According to Banks, "We'll take someone up in a helicopter to watch the convoy. It's not tactical, but it makes the convoy go smoother." Banks explained that this manuever provides a bird's-eye view for any vehicles in the convoy that suffer mechanical breakdowns.

In addition, the helicopter can provide a view for officials to see that the vehicles are maintaining the proper distance. "In the case of a breakdown we can fly the helicopter back to get a needed part and it saves a lot of time," Banks said.

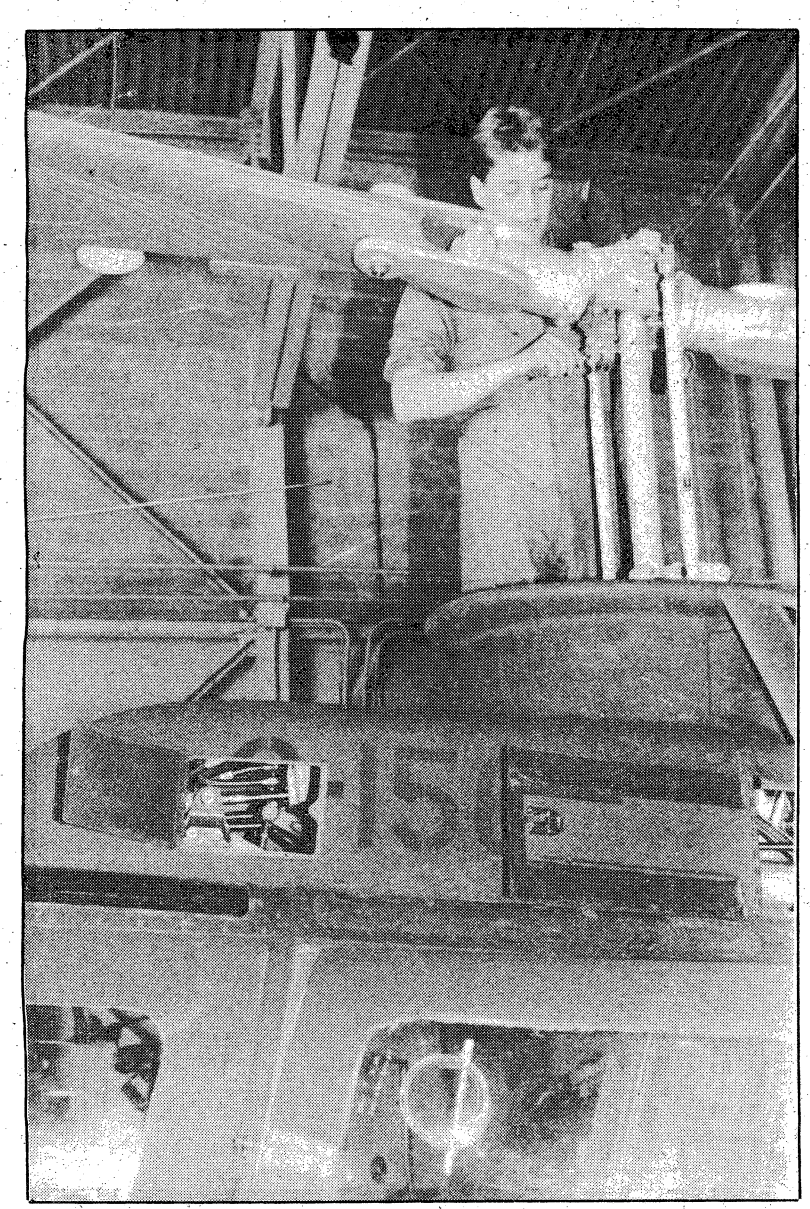
Another important mission for the aviation section is support for the 36th Enginner Group's Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Programs.

"During testing we'll provide simulated attacks on convoys for just one of the ARTEP tasks," Banks said.

"They supported the Headquarters and Headquarters Company (field training exercise) in Fort Rucker, (Ala.) in August and the aviation support was excellent," said Maj. William H. Ward, executive officer for the 36th Engineer Group.

The aviators also practice night tactical missions to maintain proficiency

"Since Capt. Banks took over (the section) in August, there has been a recognizable tactical orientation. Now it's not unusual to see the Hueys coming in with machine guns in the doors and tactical night flying is common," Ward said.



In addition to the three UH-1 Hueys, the section also has two OH-58A Scouts. There are eight crewchiefs assigned to maintain the helicopters. Also among those assigned are seven co-pilots, two clerks, and two avionics repairman who work on the aircraft radios.

"I think the most memorable mission was when we went to Honduras for three months (during the summer of 1985), because of the treacherous terrain and austere conditions," said WO 1 Steven Bossio, a pilot.

Bossio believes that the consolidation of the avaition sections Armywide will enhance pilot training.

"I think it's a good idea that their phasing us out. Because we're such a small section, maintaining our proficiencies in a lot of areas will be easier," Bossio said.

Although the soldiers at the 36th Engineer Group Aviation Section may be part of a dying breed, their motivation should help to keep them from extinction.

GETTING OUT? YOUR ARMY BENEFITS CAN BE MORE THAN MEMORIES.

It's probably hard to say what you'll miss most about the Army if you've decided to return to civilian life. For some, it's the camaraderie. Others miss the travel and excitement. Still more miss those money-saving Army benefits.

Joining the Army Reserve can help you retain some of those great benefits. Like your PX and commissary privileges. Space-available air travel. And low-cost life insurance.

You'll earn a good extra income, too. Over $2,000 a year, in some cases.

ARMY RESERVE. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

New pride comes out in week two of Airborne School

Editor's note: This is the second in a three-part series that will allow our readers to follow one student through three weeks with Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry. The story of the U.S. Army Airborne School will be told by a newly commissioned second lieutenant bound for the Medical Service Corps.

by Kathryn B. Potter
Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry

The "Black Hats" shouted, "What are you this week?" We bowed our heads and shamefully replied, "We're dirty, nasty legs." "But what will you be next week?" The Black Hats asked. Proudly we raised our heads and shouted: "Super dooper paratroopers!"

Tower Week - week two, of Airborne School began with the hopeful expectation that physical training would be easier and the harassment less. Neither of these proved to be true. Additionally, while Ground Week consisted primarily of practicing parachute landing falls from a three to four feet height, Tower Week promised to be more dangerous using the infamous "slam dunk" apparatus (swing landing trainer) and the "suspended agony" (suspended harness).

Tower Week also included the encounter with "The Great Ungawas", the glowing red monsters in the midst of tower branch (250 feet high towers visible from all points on Fort Benning).

When Tower Week began we had 359 students in Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment. By week's end we had 341. Over the course of the week, we lost several people because they were unable to complete the runs around the tower branch track.

With Geronimo, our boxer, the company mascot, leading the way, the three platoons ran daily around the track. I was pleased that I could keep up with the men and never ran with the women at a slower pace. By Friday, I realized that the men respected my ability "to hang" and keep up with them. Even my "favorite" Black Hat was pleased with my performance and proved this by allowing me to do even more push-ups.

At this point, I will share that I had a difficult time keeping a straight face throughout the training. This habit proved to be "detrimental" to my well-being and resulted in additional opportunities to demonstrate my physical prowess.

Training mid-week was easier as we worked on recovery techniques, mass exits from the 34 feet high tower and how to react to "midair misfortune." While confident that our chutes are quite dependable, all airborne students are trained extensively in order to respond to midair collision, entanglement, contact with wires or the ever-dreaded partial and complete malfunction of one's equipment. This instruction gave our mission a true sense of danger and importance. Finally we realized that after exiting the aircraft, even the Black Hats could not help us. A safe landing was literally in our own hands.

All airborne students fear one aspect or another of training more than any other. I was terrified of the swing landing trainer. Because the instructor has control over the height from which you drop, I feared he might subjectively drop me from an unusually high height. It almost felt like an impending hanging as I mounted the platform and was hooked into the harness. Surprisingly, it was much easier than even the lateral drift aparatus used during Ground Week.

The encounter with "The Great Ungawa" is the culmination of tower branch training. Each jumper is elevated to 250 feet where his chute inflates and he freely drifts to the ground. This is as close to being airborne as the students experience before exiting the aircraft during Jump Week. I really enjoyed the 250 feet tower, landing softly in the sand base below.

We were told, however, that "anybody's grandmother could have done it", and that the true test would be next week when our five points of contact hit the hard and indelible earth on Fryer Drop Zone.

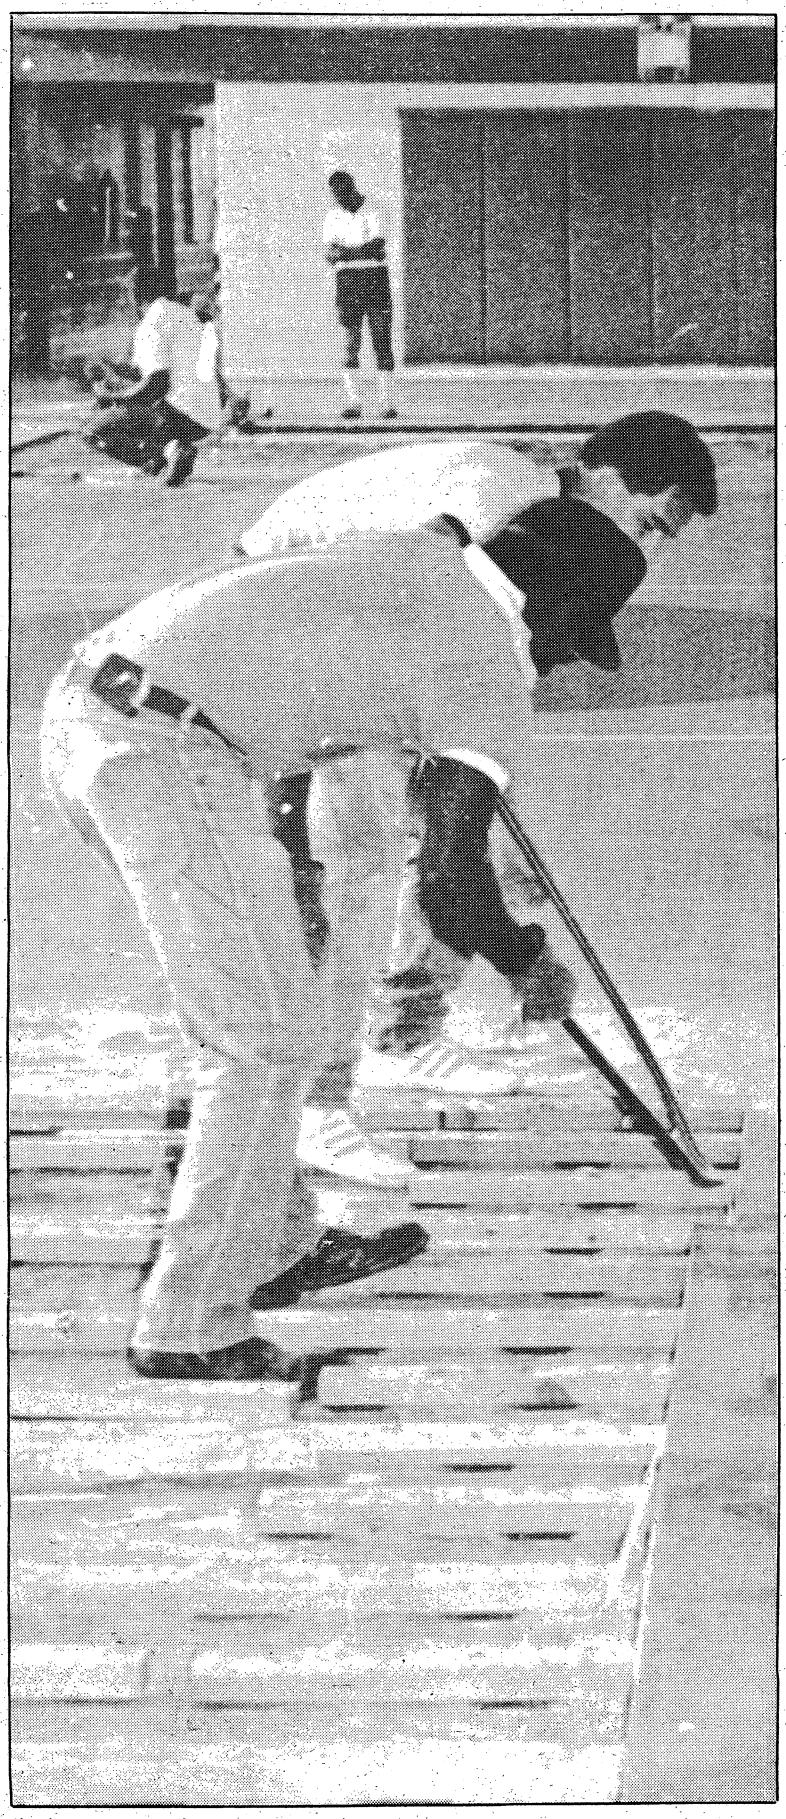
197th troops help selves improve area

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Soldiers in the 197th Infantry Brigde are seeing some big changes at many Kelley Hill facilities. Thanks to some hard work provided by both enlisted soldiers and officers, Kelley Hill is becoming a better place to live and work.

Through the Directorate of Engineering and Housing's Self-Help program, units can draw materials to do such jobs as painting, replacing floor and ceiling tiles and landscaping. The units provide their own labor and get the job done.



"Self-Help allows units to take pride in their facilities," said 1st Lt. Karl Landsberg, from the 197th Infantry Brigade Engineer Section.

The 72nd Engineer Company used Self-Help materials to refurbish a building that had been empty for several months. Now the building sees a lot of traffic every day as it houses several of the Brigade Headquarters special staff sections.

The 197th Support Battalion is presently cleaning, painting and repairing Building 9025 on Kelley Hill. This is now the Support Battalion and separate unit's medical aid station. When the project is finished, the aid station will serve as the clearing station for all soldiers in the Brigade.

"This will be a tremendous improvement over our old facility," said SFC Danny Clemons, non-commissioned officer-in-charge of the aid station. "We are repainting the building inside and out and refinishing all the doors. The 43rd Engineer Battalion provides the skilled labor to put in new light fixtures and DEH is doing the plumbing work."

Enlisted soldiers and officers helped remove damaged sections of the wooden gym floor at the Kelley Hill Fitness Center so DEH workers could sand and refinish the floor.

Gunners end training with live-fire exercise

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Tank companies from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade, recently made their presence well known on Fort Benning as the units wrapped up a month of tank gunnery exercises with live-fire gunnery qualification.

During the Battalion's annual Tank Gunnery Qualification, M60 and M1 tank crews trained at several post locations.

The gunnery began with individual and crew level training at Laeh Field and culminated in the live- fire qualification at Hastings and Carmouche Ranges.

"Tank gunnery is an important time for the Battalion," said Maj. Louis Bartok, operations officer. "It's a time for the troops to get out and put to use what they do all year."

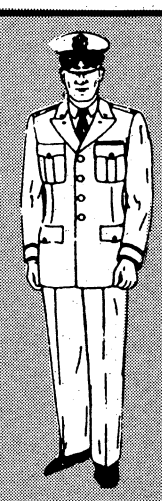
Bartok explained that the gunnery consists of 12 tank tables, or levels of proficiency. Tank Tables I through VI test the individual skills of each crew member and ensure that the fire control system is zeroed, or aligned correctly with the target, he explained.

Once the individuals have completed these tasks, the actual qualification begins. The soldiers face different scenarios of day and night operations in defensive and offensive modes. They maneuver gunnery courses firing all of the tank's weapons, including the main gun and .50 caliber machine gun, at moving and stationary targets.

Each phase of the qualification consists of a dry-fire practice run, followed by a live-fire on the same course for qualification.

For example, each tank crew of about four soldiers will first complete Tank Table VII, performing all the missions without actually firing the weapons. Then the crew will maneuver the same course, only this time, actually firing at targets for qualification on Tank Table VIII.

"On the dry run, the crew is only trying to master the fire equipment and the fire commands," said Sgt. William Paulus, a Company C platoon sergeant. "Then they run the same course for qualification."



The same is true for Tank Tables IX and X, tank section qualification. A tank section is two tanks, maneuvering the course simultaneously, working together to knock out the targets.

Finally, Tank Tables XI and XII are platoon battle runs. Each tank platoon consists of four tanks. In actual combat, a tank platoon would maneuver and perform the missions as one unit Paulus said.

During the month-long gunnery, the Battalion also sponsored several occasions for family members and other visitors to come out to the gunnery ranges and see exactly what the armor soldiers do. The companies had family days to give wives and families a chance to visit the units that have spent so much time in the field.

The unit also invited the battalion commanders and other leaders in the Brigade and other members of Fort Benning's leadership to visit the ranges.

The last company to finish the qualification returned to Kelley Hill today.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

With Halloween 1986 almost here, particular attention should be given to making this time as safe and incident free for our children as possible.

Halloween means different things to many people. For our children, it means fun, mystery and festivity. To parents, it's a time of anxiety and concern.

The following list contains numerous prevention techniques that can assist the entire community in having a safe, fun-filled Halloween:

- Effective neighborhood watch programs.
- Encourage parents to discuss "Trick-or-Treat" with their children (emphasis on a pre-planned, well-lighted route).
- Parents, or another responsible adult, should accompany children on their Halloween route. The hours of "trick-or-treating" on post will be from 6 to 9 p.m.
- Costumes should be made of reflective, flame resistant or retardant material. Masks should afford a clear field of vision for the wearer.
- Parents should inspect their children's treats for pills, fruit and candy that appear damaged. Any suspicious looking items should be reported to the Fort Benning Military Police immediately.

The military community, which includes military families living in civilian communities, must be cognizant of potential crimes and accidents that can occur at Halloween.

The military police community will make every effort possible to ensure that this festive time is not marred by tragic and senseless incidents by increased patrolling in housing areas on this night. Therefore, we urge your full support in making Halloween safe at Fort Benning.

Succot Festival provides time to renew faith in God

by Craig L. Allen
Jewish chaplain

"You shall dwell in booths seven days . . . that your generations may know that I made the Israelites dwell in booths . . ." This biblical commandment (Leviticus 23: 42-43) is the basis for the observance of Succot (tabernacles) which Jews throughout the world finish celebrating on today.

It is one of the three major ancient piligrimage Festivals (the other two are Passover and Shavuot) corresponding to the three major harvest periods of Israel.

In Biblical times a portion of each harvest was taken to Jerusalem where a portion was dedicated to God at the temple and a portion consumed at a festival meal.

One of the central features of the celebration is the Succah (booth), a temporary structure in which observant Jews even in our day will both eat and sleep for an entire week. Not only does dwelling in he Succah fulfill the biblical commanment; but it also enables the Jew to internalize the desert experience followin the Exodus from Egypt in which the Jewish people experienced forty years of nomadic, transient wanderings. The attempt to personally identify with that collective historical experience enables one to arrive at a higher spiritual awareness of God's purpose and continuing protective presence. All too often we are illusioned into a false sense of security as we life within our brick wombs, unaware that God is the real source of our well-being. The festival of Succot enables us to confront our own vulnerability and renew our faith in and dependence on God.

Another ritual of this holiday centers around what are referred to as the "Four Species". In Leviticus 23:40 we read: "you shall take the produce of hadar trees (citron), branches of palm trees, boughs of leafy trees (myrtle), and willows of the brook, and you shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days." Integrated into the daily worship services during Succot is a colorful and somewhat mystical ceremony in which these four species (all indigenous to Israel) are held together and waved in six directions (up, down, north, south, east, west). The six directions symbolize God's omnipresence. The four species symbolize for basic human characteristics. Just as the citron has both taste and fragrance, so there are people ho are both learned and of good deeds; as the palm branch, whose fruit has taste but no fragrance, so there are those who are learned but without good deeds; as the myrtle has a pleasant ordor but is tasteless, so there are men of good deeds who are not learned; as the willow is neither edible nor of pleasant fragrance, so there are those who are neither learned nor possess good deeds.

In binding the species together, we assert the unity of humankind, recognizing that true unity must include all segments of society with each receiving due consideration.

The beauty of a garden is in its diversity. So, too, is the strength of society. This is all the more true in the military. Person and mission are not mutually exlusive. By making individual soldiers proud of their uniqueness (religious, cultural, ethnic, etc.), they are much more likely to contribute to unit goals.

By keeping in mind these universal biblical and military values, we will, with God's help, each make a positive impact on family, friends and country.

Reading Bible improves spiritual life

To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven. — Ecclesiastes 3:1

by Andrew J. Bullard III
67th Maintenance Battalion chaplain

I recently returned from a hardship tour in Korea. I was assigned to a unit that had a reputation for being tough and hard. The unit's name, "Rock of the Marne," didn't help matters much, because soldiers tried to live up to it by simply being hard.

Life in this unit was filled with long physical training runs, road marches, field training exercises, Team Spirit and a three-month patrol mission on the demilitarized zone.

Aside from being in a demanding unit, I also realized that I was thousands of miles away from home, family, friends and loved ones. I was in a strange country with people of a different race, background and culture. Any free time that I had was spent either resting or shopping in the nearby Korean stores.

I made some discoveries. I discovered that chapel services were well attended by soldiers stationed in Korea. We also discovered and attended, once a month, a "Back Home Hour" in which soldiers from different camps came together for worship.

Even though Korea was not my home, I discovered and experienced a sense of belonging and love with the soldiers in my chapel, unit, and Korean nationals on the installation. Hard times have a way of bringing people closer together.

I thank God for these discoveries and experiences in Korea. Now I am able to truly appreciate being back home in the United States and here at Fort Benning.

I've made a new discovery here too. I've discovered a new sense of belonging and love with the 67th Maintenance Battalion. We are a support unit and our unit motto is "Strength through support." We not only support the overall mission at Fort Benning; we also support each other.

In the midst of all our responsibilities and missions, we take time for worship and followship. In the book of Ephesians the Lord speaks to us about being wise in our daily use of time. Time is a gift too precious to be wasted. Each moment holds an occasion for prayer, for kindness, or for growth.

It is a good thing to be committed to the job, and sometimes this calls for us to devote a lot of time in accomplishing out daily mission. We should not forget to include God in our day. In other words, we should never be too busy to allow God to have a little portion of our time each day. A writer once said, "Don't just mark time; use time to make your mark." Do this and see what you discover.

Benning troops stand out as professionals

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning, Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the Association of the United States Army sent 53 of its members to the association's annual meeting in Washington, D.C. Oct. 12 through 15.

The 47 soldiers and six civilian members participated in four days of briefings by such people as Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., Army chief of staff; U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Commander Gen. Carl E. Vuono; the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Health Affairs) Honorable William Mayer and the commander of the Reserve Officer Training Corps, Maj. Gen. Robert E. Wagner.

The meeting also included a sergeants major conference, defense industry and Army exhibits, workshops, receptions and final remarks by retired Gen. John W. Vessey.

The president of the local chapter, Lenora Smith, said she believes that the Benning contingent made a good impact in the Capitol this year. "The soldiers that went to the meeting were outstanding in their personal appearance and their demeanor. They took advantage of the professional portion of the meeting as well as the social affairs."

Smith said the Fort Benning hospitality room was a great success and that many former Fort Benning commanders and friends stopped in.

"I think the high point, overall, was the Fort Benning soldiers. They looked and acted like soldiers," she said.

Corley exhibit includes weapons, decorations of World War II hero

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Mary B. Corley, wife of the late retired Brig. Gen. John T. Corley, presented the new Corley Exhibit to the National Infantry Museum Tuesday.

The exhibit is dedicated to Corley, who some say was the "Infantryman's infantryman."

The exhibit, consisting of three display cases, contains Corley's graduation sword from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y.; a sword and pistol surrendered to him by the German commander of Aachen, a city Corley and his unit captured during World War II; Corley's decorations, his general officer's belt and stained glass facsimiles of the units Corley distinguished himself in: the 24th Infantry Regiment, the 26th Infantry Regiment, the 1st Infantry Division and the 25th Infantry Division.

"My husband would be very proud of this exhibit, since he was dedicated to the infantry and this is the home of the infantry," said Mrs. Corley.

Assigned to the 26th Infantry Regiment as a platoon leader in 1939, after graduation from the USMA, Corley filled every command position up to battalion commander with the unit and was awarded every decoration for valor except for the Medal of Honor, fighting from Sicily through Europe to Germany during World War II.

When the Korean War started in 1950 Corley was one of 21 infantry commanders personally requested by General of the Army Douglas MacArthur as a battalion commander.

After the Korean War Corley directed the Ranger Department at Fort Benning from 1958 to 1960 and, in 1963, Corley was promoted to brigadier general. He retired in 1966.

The noted military historian, S.L.A. Marshall, called Corley "One of the boldest young fighters in the Army..."

Retired CSM Ted Dobol, of the 26th Infantry Regiment, said "He (Corley) gave invincible courage to his troops because he was always in the front with the attacking element."

Corley's decorations include the Distinguished Service Medal, eight awards of the Silver Star Medal, four awards of the Bronze Star with "V" device, the two awards of the Distinguished Service Cross, two awards of the Legion of Merit, the Purple Heart, the Soldier's Medal and the Combat Infantryman's Badge with one star.

Red Demons down Blue Dragons in Youth Activities soccer action

The Bayonet sports writer

It was fire fighting fire in the Youth Activities Scoccer League as the Red Demons burned the Blue Dragons, blanking them 2-0 in Saturday's war.

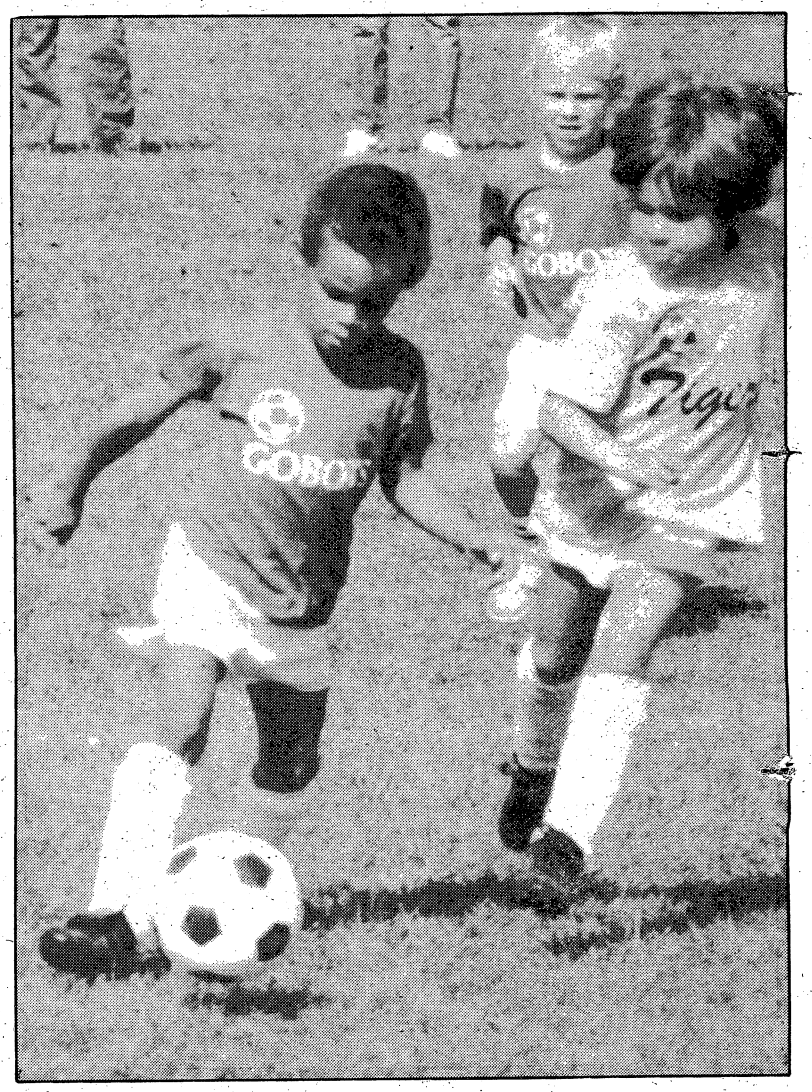
The two Demon scores were provided by Francisco Davila and Scott White, assisted by the great passing of Anthony Lane.

Responsible for the Demon defensive stand was Carrie Schmacher, Vicente Campodonico, Brent Roy and Goalie, Matthew Nahas.

The Red Demon defense continually kept the Blue Dragons out of scoring range. When the Dragons did get an occasional shot past the line Nahas was there to make the super saves keeping the Dragon team scoreless.

In another shutout, the Destroyers annihilated the Firehawks, 5-0.

Goals were scored by John Quinn, Johnathan Carnagay, Billy Wilson and Charles Carde.



Wilson and Carnagay shared the high scorer role, each pulling in two goal in the winning effort.

The Firehawks were chained offensively by the defensive play of Charlie Wells, Daniel morris and Jason Mercer.

Highlighting the day's soccer activity was a war in the Mighty Mite Division, where the Tigers edged out the Gobots in a 3-2 mishap.

The two teams traded goals throughout the first half and went into half time tied 2-2.

The Gobots, Brandon Hollings provided his team with the two first half goals, while teammate, Kevin Shaw provided the third goal, which was credited to the winning Tigers.

Tiger forward, Jenny Hollingsworth, defends as the Gobot's top scorer, Brandon Hollings, moves down field in Saturday's contest.

Dolphins best Cougars in 16-0 shutout

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The Dolphins caged the Cougars in a 16-0 shutout Saturday, when they claimed their first win of the Fall Youth Activities Football League.

The Dolphins scored early in the first quarter as Edward Sessom swept 20 yards around the right side to cross the goal.

The defense held solid, lead by Carlyon Johnson, seven tackles, Scott Keenan, four tackles, and Anthony Maggio, with two sacks.

It was Maggio who deflated a pass in the second quarter, that resulted in a Johnson interception and touchdown.

The second half saw both teams in a defensive battle.

The Dolphins squad was held together by Stalin Smith, Luther Livingston, Richard Sweeting, Edward Sessom, Robert Taylor, Carlos Armstrong and Antuwn Cheeks.

Though the Dolphin defense was hitting hard on the line, Cougar running backs, Duke Duplesis and Bryant Sheppard, rushed for over 100 yards.

The Cougar defense, the Purple People Eaters, yeilded less than 80 yards in their losing effort.

Callaway plans tennis tourney

The Callaway Gardens Doubles Tennis Championship will be Nov. 8 and 9. Tournament play will be in men's and women's doubles and mixed doubles.

There is a 16 team limit per event, and each player may enter only two events. The $20 entry fee includes tennis balls and beverages. Each event must have a minimum of six entries. Registration deadline is Nov. 5.

Awards will be given in A and B levels. First place winners in level A each receive a $50 gift certificate, with second place finishers taking home a $25 gift certificate.

To register, call Bill Champion at 404-663-2281, ext. 145.

Georgia sets dates for hunting duck

Georgia's waterfowl seasons have been set for the 1986, 1987 season. The duck hunting season is Nov. 27 to 29, and Dec. 13 through Jan. 18.

Hunting on the Alabama portion of the reservation will be in compliance with Alabama State Law regarding seasons, bag limits, and special state licenses.

For more information call 544-6120.

Small arms shooters to meet Nov. 10-14

The U.S. Army Infantry Center Small Arms Championship Matches are scheduled for Nov. 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

A mandatory marksmanship clinic will be conducted at the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Nov. 5 through 7 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The clinics and the matches will be at Phillips Range for M1911 pistol; Easley Range for M16 rifle and McAndrews Range for M60 machine gun.

Persons interested in participating should call Capt. Woody or SFC Farmer at 545-4252.

A mandatory team captains' meeting will be conducted Oct. 20 at 9 a.m. in Room 642, Building 4.

National Wildlife Refuge planning youth deer hunt

The Eufaula National Wildlife Refuge is sponsoring a Youth Deer Hunt Nov. 1 and 2, to help reduce the deer population.

Youths ages 12 through 15 who have completed an approved hunter safety course can apply for a permit to participate in the special event. Youths must hunt with an adult supervisor.

There is a limited number of permits available, so call Dean Rundle at 205-687-4065 today for an application.

Spencer winner in close contest

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The Spencer High School football team edged past the Kendrick High Cherokees 8-7 in the homecoming victory at Doughboy Stadium Friday.

With just more than three minutes remaining in the game, Larry Dukes powered six yards over the right side to break the plane and bring about a crucial Spencer decision.

Kendrick had gone ahead minutes before the half and held on to the 7-0 lead throughout the night.

Faced with the option of kicking the extra point, to tie the game, or searching the endzone for the two-point play, Spencer choose the latter with Keith Gardner finding the open man.

Gardner passed for 103 yards through the night, connecting with his favorite receiver, Barron Gardner on seven passes totaling 90 yards.

Dukes and Ricky Logo kept the running game alive. Dukes carried the ball 15 times and 43 yards, while the big fullback, Logo, rushed 45 yards in five carries.

"They had a good team and we were fortunate to come out with a win," said Coach Frank Matthews.

While Spencer recovered five funbles in the victory, they also lost five.

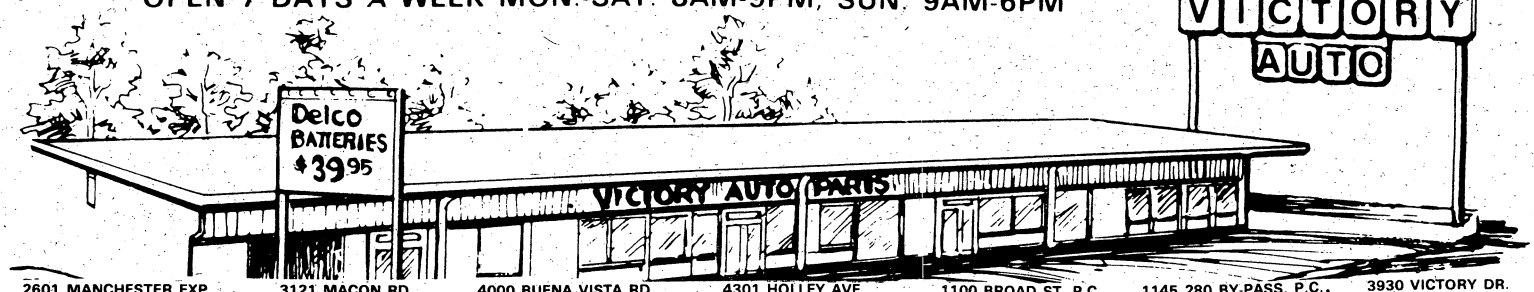
The most crucial fumble recovery came in the first half, with Kendrick threatening on the two yardline.

Spencer Linebacker William Burns, charged the line causing and recovering the fumble.

"If we had gone into the locker room 14 points down," Matthews said, "we would have had to play the second half considerably different."

Anthony Young contributed to the head-to-head hard hitting with three tackles and three assists while recovering two fumbles.

In the seven-game Regionals, Spencer holds a 2-2 record, but can control their own destiny as they face the top three ranked teams in the following weeks.



The Greenwave will face Hardaway, 3-1, Carver, 3-1, and Baker 2-1.

"We are trying to play the best we can and get better each week. If we can do that, the wins will take care of themselves," said Matthews.

29th Regiment troop finds therapy in powerlifting

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment correspondent

Powerlifting plays an important part in Clement Green's life.

In fact, it is so important that the staff sergeant from Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment considers powerlifting a friend.

He says, "When I'm down or depressed, I can work out with my weights, and before long I've mellowed out . . . down to earth, where I can deal again."

With such a close relationship, it's no wonder Green is the new military powerlifting champion in the lightweight category.

Recently, the 25-year-old soldier won the Military Open Powerlifting Championship at Fort Knox, Ky.

He dominated the 165-pound group, winning the squat, bench press and deadlift competition. His best attempts were 534, 308 and 573, respectively.

The win puts the 5-feet-6-inch soldier one step closer to his real dream.

He says, "I hope to be selected to the All-Army Interservice Team, which convenes Nov. 11. Everything else that I've done is a prep for that."

Listed among his first place wins are the Fifth Corps Championships in 1983 and 1984, and second place, United States Army Europe Championship in 1984.

Green became interested in powerlifting while stationed in Germany, four years ago.

He says, "I had this platoon sergeant (SSgt. Walter Holmes), who was a PT (physical training) fanatic. He was always doing some form of PT.

"I always wanted to lift, but I never had anyone to do it with until I met him."

However, it wasn't only companionship that led Green to the gym with Holmes. He liked and respected him and wanted to emulate him.

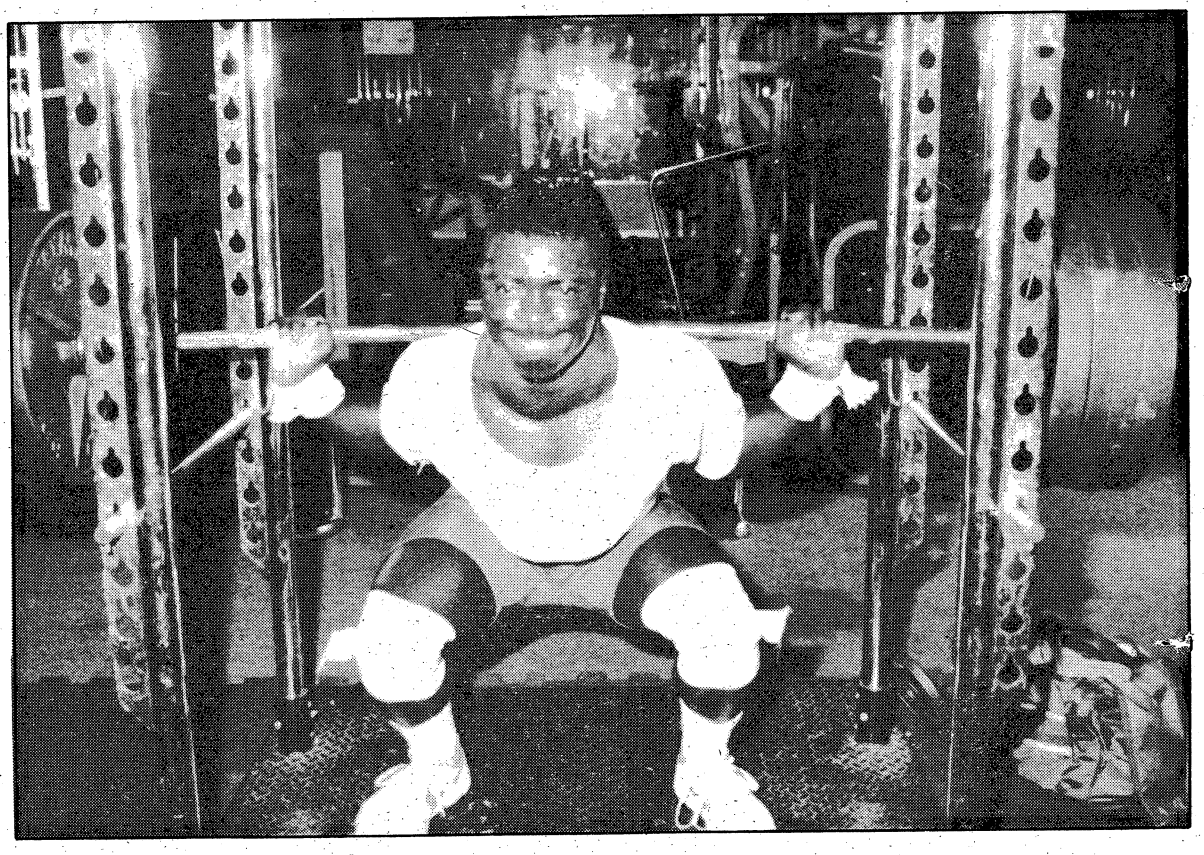
Green says, "He (Holmes) was one of those effective leaders. One of those leaders you wouldn't mind following into combat.

"He was a friend; someone I could talk to — open up to."

But, the desire for discipline, development and good overall health are what keep the young soldier working.

He says, "I enjoy having control of myself. I'm my own morale builder and powerlifting is what I build on."

Since starting the routine workouts, Green has noticed a considerable improvement in endurance and stamina. "Now when I get to work I'm not drained or tired anymore. I feel energetic and motivated."



He has also seen a change in the results of his Army PT program.

"Before I started the workouts I had problems with push-ups and running. Now that I do 30 or more push-ups as part of my warmup routine and close with 100 sit-ups, PT is a zap," he says.

As for Green's diet, he says, "Dieting is at least 75 percent of the sport.

He takes in approximately 1,500 calories a day, with meats, fish, chicken, vegetables and fruits making up the bulk of what he eats.

Yet, diet hasn't rid him of the usual nervousness that accompanies competition. He says, "I still feel butterflies when I first approach the platform. But after the first squat, I'm okay."

Readying himself for a lift during a recent workout, SSgt. Clement Green, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, gives his full concentration to the mission at hand.

Hunt

into an administrative nightmare.

The regulation states that if a hunter fails to check out by 9 p.m., he loses his permit to hunt on post. There will be times when 9 p.m. comes and there are hunters who still haven't checked out. No responsible person can just close the check point and go home. How soon does the search begin and where do the resources come from to conduct it?

The hunter may only be stuck in the mud, have car trouble, be lost or just have forgotten about checking out. Or he could have fallen from his tree stand and seriously injured himself. Until that hunter is located, some training on post must stand still. How could a unit start firing in that area or any other area close by, knowing that a hunter could still be in the area?

Fort Benning has had an excellent hunting safety record. This is due mainly to the fact that most of the poeple who hunt on post are military and have been taught weapons safety.

Before going overboard, why can't the establishment call a meeting of all the people who hunt on post? All the problems could be presented and together solutions could be worked out.

Please don't waste man power on check stations. No way will this make the woods safer for me to hunt in.

Energy Update

by Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

Energy Awareness Week continues through tomorrow, with activities designed to promote conservation.

A major focus of this year's campaign has been post schools. This is because we have found that the children take home what they learn in school, and teach the whole family the importance of conserving resources.

Each child was given a "Think Energy" magnet to put on the family refrigerator, to serve as a year-round reminder to conserve.

The "Energy Buster" has been visiting all areas of the post handing out promotional material such as calendars, thermometers and ink pens.

The Energy Resource Group, made up of energy officers of major units and activities, are also supporting the program by distributing promotional material.

Family housing residents should be receiving a jar opener, along with a letter from the Director of Engineering and Housing.

All these promotional items are designed to improve our energy awareness. The combined efforts of post workers and residents have enabled Fort Benning to meet the consumption goals set by Training and Doctrine Command for the first time in our history.

We must not let our guard down because of the lower gas prices now available. These are possible due to reduced demand for oil through conservation measures and the inability of the oil producing countries to drive prices up by limiting production.

The present situtation is only temporary as the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries work to reach an agreement on oil prices and production.

With only a 30-year supply of oil remaining, we must continue to conserve until new forms of renewable energy are available.

If we learn nothing else, this is the message we need to remember during Energy Awareness Week, and throughout the year.

Thanks to you...

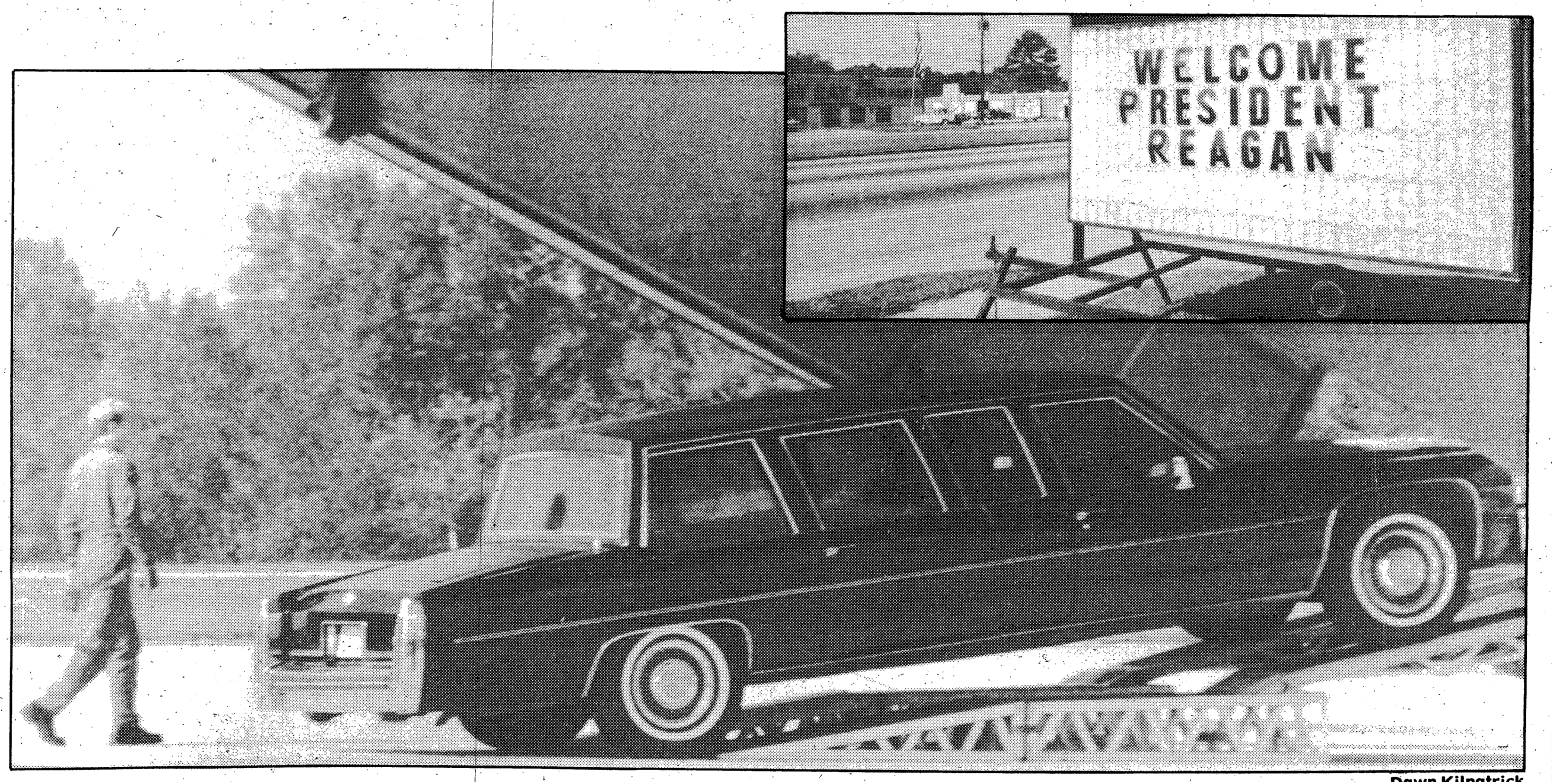
Kerosene heaters prohibited on post

The Fort Benning Directorate of Engineering and Housing is emphasizing that portable kerosene heaters are not authorized for use in family housing on post.

A U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command message and U.S. Army Infantry Center regulation 11-27 prohibit the use of the heaters because of the fumes emitted, which displace the normal amount of oxygen in a room. The displacement could cause occupants to be overcome by carbon monoxide.

Some local businesses declared 'off limits'

The following addresses and establishments have been placed off limits to all military personnel by the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board:



Columbus: Bus Stop Inn, 614 Eighth Street; 12th Street Country, 518 12th Street (formerly Moving On Club); Abandoned Rock Quarry located approximately 1,000 meters to the north of and to the rear of Bobby's Place Too, 7501 River Road; and Smitty's Lounge, 3103 Baker Circle.

Phenix City, Ala.: Richardson Lounge, 102 Seale Road.

Clinchfield, Ga.: Pen Dixie Pit, located 2.3 miles south of Bonaire, Ga., on the Old Perry Road, approximately 100 yards north of the Piney Grove Church.

Warner-Robins, Ga.: Orbit Bar, 130 South First Street.

Danville, Ga.: Stuckey's Lake, Stuckey's Road, Route 1.

Six retired generals to speak at conference

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Six retired general officers will share their battlefield expertise with Infantry Officer Advanced Course students at a Warfighting Conference set for Nov. 7.

According to Maj. Robert Maginnis, project officer, the purpose of the conference is to "reinforce the IOAC captains' understanding of warfighting in past wars and how it may likely be in future wars."

All three IOAC classes currently in progress here, will take part in the conference, including IOAC classes 4-86, 5-86 and 1-87.

The conference will begin with an introduction by Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., followed by the keynote address by retired Lt. Gen. William R. Desobry.

Then participants will divide into six groups and move to classrooms, where each general will give a short talk on his experiences in warfighting.

"Each general will look back from his perspective and say, 'this is how we fought in the past,'" Maginnis said.

"We selected these general officers for their experience in three wars," he said. "They'll be able to compare and contrast the fighting in those wars and help us draw some conclusions that can be of some use to us."

After their remarks, the session will be open for questions. "We have prepared the captains to ask questions, based on reading lists provided by each general officer," Maginnis said.

The afternoon session will begin with a Soviet doctrine presentation by Col. David M. Glantz. Glantz is considered an expert on the Soviets, and is currently on the faculty of the Soviet Studies Institute at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

After his talk, the participants will again divide into groups and head to the classrooms, where each general officer will give his views on how the American forces will fight the Soviets.

Maginnis said most of the seminar activities are open to the military public, except the social functions, which are by invitation only.

Other retired general officers scheduled to participate include: Gen. Richard E. Cavazos, Gen. Paul F. Gorman, Gen. William E. Depuy, Lt. Gen. David E. Grange Jr. and Lt. Gen. James F. Hollingsworth.

While the conference is the first of its kind at Benning, Maginnis said planners hope it won't be the last.

"We envision it to be a semi-annual event, with different general officers sharing their knowledge with the students," he said.

Anyone interested in attending the conference can call Maginnis at 545-4270.

Planning, precautions help ensure safe Halloween

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

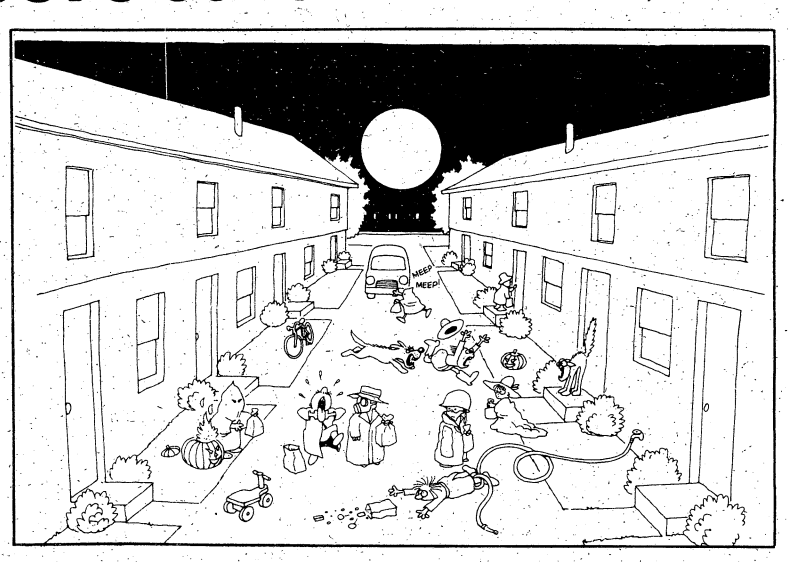
Halloween is running a close second behind Christmas in providing fun and adventure for youngsters. Make believe, dress up and general fun are all in order on this children's holiday. Unfortunately, in today's somewhat warped society, there exist cranks who would spoil the festive occasion by hurting children.

Parents play an important role in squelching potential problems and ensuring that the children have a safe and enjoyable Halloween. Plan your childrens' activities and participate yourself. If you take a few precautions, the chances of preventing tragedy can be greatly increased.

When deciding what type of costume your little ones will wear, be practical. Make certain that it fits properly and isn't too long so the child doesn't trip. Non-flammable material is also a good idea.

A little creativity can also go a long way in selecting a safe and fun costume. Use your imagination and come up with something original out of the closet or attic. Apply stage makeup instead of a mask and you won't have to worry about obstructing the child's vision. It can be more fun for a child to put together a pirate costume out of Dad's old clothes than going to the department store and purchasing the same mass produced one that 10 other kids are wearing.

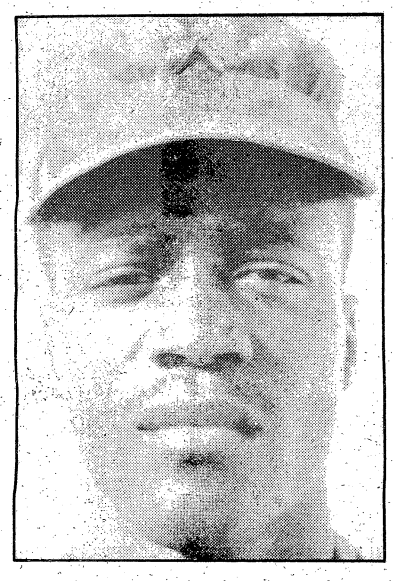
Because of the recent resumption of standard time, if your children go "trick-or-treating," it will probably be after dark. You should definitely go with them. If you can't accompany them yourself, send along another responsible adult and stress safety procedures to the children and the chaperone.



Have the children carry "glow sticks" and wear reflector tape to help make them visible to drivers. Even a good old fashioned flashlight will do the trick. Make sure the children watch for cars, other merrymakers and other possible safety hazards. Also ensure they know to stay within a predetermined area and return home at a designated time. It is important to know where the little ones are in case you end up going out to find them.

Candlelit jack-o-lanterns can also present a hazard to little goblins. Make sure your children know to watch out for their candy bags and clothes. Caution them to stay away from dark houses and not to eat any of their treats until they get home.

Once they come home with the goodies, carefully inspect all of them. Throw out any candy that is not properly wrapped or appears to have been tampered with. Wash and cut fruit into small pieces.

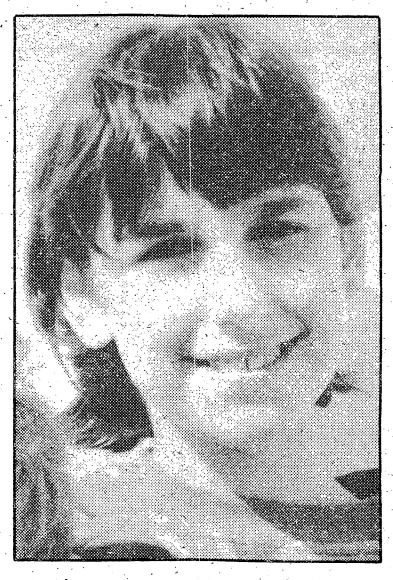


If you're staying home waiting for trick-or-treaters, leave the porch light on and make sure the front yard and walkway are free of objects.

Appoint a designated driver for your group if your plans include a party where you're going to drink alcoholic beverages. Be extra careful on the roads. Look for children and drive especially slow.

Various voices

What, if any, precautions do you plan to take to ensure a safe Halloween?



Pvt.2 William C. Chatman, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division — "My kids never go without an adult and we don't let them eat any fruit or candy that's not properly sealed."

1st Sgt. Larry R. Graham, Company B, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade — "I always go with my children on Halloween and we always inspect the candy they collect."

SSgt. German Ugalino, 215th Finance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group — "My children will be wearing reflective clothes while trick-or-treating. My wife and I will go and check the candy."

Robin Hartzog, family member — "We are going out with our parents, we'll be carrying flashlights and we aren't staying out late.

William Hartzog, family member —"We are going to wear face makeup instead of masks so that everybody knows who we are."

Op-Ed

Following common sense safety tips means happy holiday for kids, parents

Safety Office

It's time to practice your pumpkin carving skills again. Halloween arrives tonight with witches, goblins, and ghosts. There was a time when parents did not have to worry about their children being injured or in some cases killed while enjoying Halloween.

Times have changed.

Here are some safety tips to help make a happy Halloween:

- Costumes should fit well and not cause a child to trip.
- Reflectorized tape will increase visibility.
- The mask should not restrict vision.
- Be sure a flashlight is carried and used.
- Small children should be supervised by an adult.
- Trick-or-treating, should be restricted to familiar neighborhoods.
- Dark, unlighted homes, and homes of known "cranks" should be avoided.
- Children without adults should trick or treat in groups.
- Children should be instructed to not eat their treats until after they have been inspected by mom. Some "cranks" have been known to insert needles, pins, and even fishhooks in candy or fruit. Fruit should be washed and cut into small sections before eating.

Parents, you can help by taking these safety precautions:

- Light up your front porch.
- Remove obstacles from the lawn.
- Secure your dog. Even the friendliest dog can get agitated by the costumes and antics of children.
- Know where your children plan to go and insist they follow the plan.

Drivers be especially careful and alert for small, dark objects suddenly darting on to the roadway.

If you "older children" (over 21) plan on attending a party, don't drink and drive. If you do drink, use the designated driver or take a taxi.

Let's all, young and old, make this a happy night for all. Follow these simple safety precautions and Halloween will be a joyous rather than a sad occasion.

Drivers beware trick-or-treaters

National Safety Council

CHICAGO — A year of waiting will finally come to an end on Oct. 31, when children across the country take to the streets in search of goodies. Motorists are encouraged to use extra caution and be on the lookout for ghosts and goblins.

While Halloween is a cherished tradition for the nation's youth, it can be a dangerous night. The excitement of the night can make children forget to be careful of traffic. The National Safety Council urges drivers to exercise safe driving habits and be especially alert for trick-or-treaters.

- Slow down in residential neighborhoods and obey all traffic signs and signals.
- Watch for children walking on the roadways, medians and curbs. If youngsters are wearing dark clothing they may be difficult to see at night.
- Be prepared for children to dart out into the street from between parked cars.
- Enter and exit driveways and alleys carefully.
- Make sure your headlights are clean and in working order.
- If you are driving children on their trick-or-treating rounds, be sure they exit on the curb side, away from traffic.
- If you are attending a costume party, do not wear your mask while driving and avoid costumes that make it difficult to move your arms and legs.

Letters

Editor's note: The following letter was written to Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., Fort Benning commander. In an effort to recognize the outstanding service offered by a group of post employees, the writer furnished a copy to The Bayonet.

Dear General Burba:

The purpose of this letter is to compliment you and to commend the staff of the Solomon Dental Clinic at Sand Hill.

During the past three weeks, I have been undergoing treatment and have been seen on five separate occasions.

As a retiree, I am most pleased with the service that has been rendered.

All personnel in the clinic have been friendly, courteous and, above all, efficient. Everyone from the commanding officer down to the dental technicians have been most professional. The clinic itself is well kept, extremely clean and a pleasure to go to.

My observation has been that excellent treatment is always maintained at this facility. All personnel, from recruits up, are treated in the same courteous and professional manner. I know of no civilian dental facility that could compare with the Solomon Clinic.

Again I commend you and your fine dental staff for the very professional manner in which the Solomon Clinic is run. It is a first-class operation.

Richard W. McKee
Col., USA Retired

Dear Editor:

Last Friday the Fort Benning lunch bunch at a certain burger establishment exceeded it's normal brigade-size element.

Perhaps it was the sunny weather, the humid Georgia air smelling of charbroiled burgers or the laziness of any Friday that drew such a crowd.

I too, mindlessly slid past the brass barriers, plastic plants and through the fuzzy roped maze squinting at the menu knowing fully it would be the usual, a double burger deluxe with . . . etc. "May I help you please, large or small, for here or to go." A confused 16 year old with a high pitched voice screamed out my receipt number while simultaneously loading red serving trays.

I braved the soft drink line and settled into my favorite two seater — a vantage point to observe this human ant hill in operation. Soldiers representing virtually every military rank and duty position passed through, ever starring at the wall mounted menu.

In the company of a lieutenant colonel, two captains, a squad of second lieutenants, a sergeant major, and various non-commissioned officers stood a lone private.

For whatever reason (that

197th troops attack bayonet course

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Soldiers from the 197th Support Battalion put aside their shop tools, aid bags and typewriters last week to let off some steam at a bayonet assault course.

"This training develops camaraderie among our soldiers and gives them a break from the normal routine," said SSgt. Warren Doss from Company C. "This is also very physical training that teaches the importance of close combat skills."

The soldiers tackled the course at Fort Benning's Edwards Field. They scaled log walls and low-crawled through wire obstacles.

Cement tunnels had to be negotiated and styrofoam opponents had to be conquered. Each company in the Battalion took its turn at the course.

Aside from being an esprit builder and physical conditioner, the assault course also taught some fundamentals of bayonet tactics.

"This was a good way to measure our soldiers' skills in rifle bayonet fighting," said 1st Lt. Karen Danzie of Company D.

Cpl. Alvin Grant of Company B said, "It was a good learning experience for me. This was the first time I had been through a bayonet course; it was fun."

Pvt. Ronnie Lewis, also a Co. B, agreed that it "helped to work ot his frustrations."

29th Regiment team travels to train Bradley crews

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment correspondent

They talk enthusiastically about who they are.

"We are hand picked by Department of the Army.

"We specialize in all areas of the Bradley, not just one.

"Our instruction has to reach many different levels of soldiers from private to lieutenant colonel, depending on the unit."

The 29th Infantry Regiment's Bradley Fighting Vehicle New Equipment Training Team is looked upon by DA to train various units that receive the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, said Capt. Martin Neal, company trainer.

An average of three to five battalion-size units are trained yearly by NETT members.

Their assignments have taken them all over the United States. They have worked in units from the 141st Infantry National Guard in McAllen, Texas to the 155th Mississippi National Guard in Hattisburg, Miss.

While the soldiers enjoy the travel, many of them find leaving their families behind one of the disadvantages of the job.

SFC Lonny Wright, SSgt. Charles Davidson and Sgt. Donald Ladakos said "We have to live out of suitcases in hotels, motels. Eat a lot of hamburgers and sometimes we're away from home weeks to months at a time."

Wright said this can be particularly hard on the spouses left behind. "Many of them have to assume all the responsibilities of two people. They must make decisions about running the household as well as dealing with the Army."

On the other hand, there are advantages to being part of the NETT. For example, "If you're an 11 Mike (Bradley specialist) it can be an asset to career progression," said Wright.

He explained that as a NETT instructor the soldiers become familiar with everything — maintenance, equipment, operations — on the Bradley. "For the soldier returning to a line unit, this can help his chain of command."

Travel with the team has taken them many places they may not have visited otherwise.

"And we've met people all around the U.S.," Ladakos says.

Their next long assignment is scheduled for Savannah, Ga. for one year beginning in 1987.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

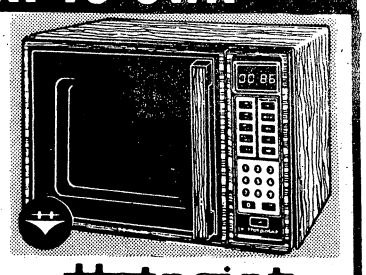
Oct. 25 through Nov. 22 has been designated Operation Identification on all U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command installations. Operation Identification is designed to deter incidents of theft of personal property from barracks, activities, post housing areas and other locations.

On Fort Benning there were 1,506 reported housebreakings-larcenies during fiscal year 1986. Many of these incidents possibly could have been prevented by using proactive identification marking procedures. Marked and recorded items can be positively identified, which means recovery of stolen property and a possible apprehension of the thief.

Soldiers who live in the barracks are required to mark property and maintain a high-value items list (DA Form 4986) of cameras, stereos, televisions, and other such items, in two copies. One copy of the DA Form 4986 is retained on file in the unit orderly room. The second copy is retained by the service member. Both copies are to be updated whenever items are acquired or disposed of. Engraving instruments should be available at each unit on the installation for marking of property.

Personnel residing in quarters are encouraged to mark their property also. Engraving instruments may be signed out for a 72-hour period from the Military Police Activity Crime Prevention Section (545-7115 or 545-7154), Building 215, for this purpose. Property serial numbers may be recorded on a DA Form 4986 or any type of list. This list should be kept in a secure location where it can be protected from theft or fire. Any property that cannot be marked, such as china, glassware, etc., should be photographed and a detailed written description made.

After your property has been marked and recorded, Operation Identification decals (DA Label 167) should be placed on doors or windows to warn potential thieves that your property is marked and recorded.



The Fort Benning Military Police urge you to protect your property by practicing good crime prevention techniques and being prepared to assist us.

Around Fort Benning

Editor's Note: "Around Fort Benning" is a weekly column that highlights the activities of post units.

Input is welcome from all sources and should be submitted to the Editor in Room 601, Building 4 by 11 a.m. Monday. All input must be typed, double-spaced with the name and specific unit of the writer and should be limited to two pages. Submissions are subject to standard editing and condensing.

High quality black and white photographs will also be considered for publication in this column.

During a recent field training exercise at Fort Hunter Liggett, Calif., Company D, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry took part in a test of the roles of the infantry in battle.

The exercise consisted of four weeks of such missions as fixing the enemy, seizing key terrain, providing overwatch, reconnaissance, breaching obstacles and conducting an assault breach, and was conducted by the Combat Developments Experimentation Center.

"CDEC wanted to see how well an infantry unit performs on the battlefield against an all armor unit; and if there needs to be any modifications to infantry training," explained Capt. Mark Sherrill, Co. C commander. "It was also to provide a better foundation for other tests."

Soldiers involved in the exercise wore 20 pounds of equipment that allowed their moves to be tracked by computers. Data was compiled on troop and vehicle movements, "casualties" and other results of battles.

"We fought a total of nine battles," said Sherrill. "At the end of each week we received feedback on how well we did."

CDEC controlled each battle and put the company through a series of trials designed to test its infantry skills. At least two trials were conducted each day. The trials were planned scenarios, or battles, against an armor company that was attached to CDEC.

"The training was worthwhile for the soldiers. I believe they got a lot out of it," said SFC Norvel Lewis. "It gave them a chance to do a lot of things they can'd do here on Fort Benning, like train against soldiers using Russian tactics." — Troy Buchanan, 197th Infantry Brigade.

A pretty amazing thing happened at the Eagle Brigade recently.

Three soldiers from Company B, 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade took the 81mm mortarmen's gunner exam and all scored perfect scores of 200 points.

Pvt.1s James Greenlee, Willard Castle and Gary Blair have mastered their MOS after only four weeks of basic mortarmen training. This is the first time that each member of the same crew has "maxed" the exam.

The 81mm gunner exam is a standardized "hands-on" test. The soldiers must put the mortar into operation, command the crew and manipulate the sights to a proper setting. Each member of the mortar crew is tested and graded when he is in command of the crew.

Capt. Ely Elefante, company commander, said, "This reflects great teamwork to max out on the exam. It is very unusual for this to happen in a front-line unit. This is quite an accomplishment for these soldirs." — Robert Schmidt, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

Lt. Col. David W. Arthur relinquished command of the 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, in a ceremony at the Harmony Church field house Friday.

Col. R.S. Siegfried, 2nd Brigade commander presented Arthur with a Meritorious Service Medal for his hard work and dedication to the Eagle Brigade.

Lt. Col. Robert A. Frizzo assumed command of the 4th Battalion. Frizzo comes to the Eagle Brigade from Fort Shafter, Hawaii where he served as Secretary to the General Staff of the U.S. Army Western Command. — Robert Schmidt, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

In last week's "Around Fort Benning" column a story appeared that cited Company C, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade as holding the new Basic Rifle Marskmanship record for the Army Training Center.

That story was incorrect. Company D, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, commanded by Capt. Eliah Thomas claims that record. — Robert Schmidt, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

Recently the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) had the opportunity to promote nine of its soldiers to sergeant.

The cut-off score for their military occupational skill -12C - had been 998, and the soldiers working to raise their promotion points thought the score would never drop as low as 712.

They had been trying to get points any way possible: by obtaining Department of the Army certificates and other awards, taking correspondence courses, attending schools, such as airborne and air assault, and taking college courses. These nine soldiers were running out of ideas as well as confidence in the belief that they could ever reach 998 points.

Several thought that reclassifying into a different MOS would be the only way to become a sergeant, but the thought of leaving the fun and excitement of being a bridge specialist, working their entire careers on the water, made it a difficult decision.

Then, unexpectedly, the scores dropped and the perseverance the soldiers demonstrated enabled them to be promoted to the ranks of non-commissioned officers.

The soldiers receiving promotions were Charles Reaves, John Scott, Kenneth Gransberry, Vincent Withers, Darryl Wesley, Charles Hamby, Michael Grogg, James Hardy and Eric Reitano.

Tradition was upheld as the nine soldiers were given their "River Rat" baptism. The cold water that soaked them as they were in the leaning rest position reminded them of the demanding new job they've earned. — Thomas A. Perry, 586th Engineer Company.

The 598th Maintenance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, underwent a grueling inspection recently.

The command inspection was the first one conducted for the company and will continue annually according to 1st Lt. James W. Brown III, executive officer.

"We had 100 pieces of wheeled-equipment and the layout covered a space of about an acre," Brown said.

The 598th, which is Fort Benning's largest company-level unit, prepared dilligently for the inspection.

"We spent three weeks in preparation and had a dedicated time of about 2 ½ days," Brown said.

In addition to readying for the inspection, the company had to continue with its usual mission.

"Our wartime and peacetime missions are essentially the same," Brown said.

That mission is to provide direct maintenance support to Fort Benning units.

"We supply repair parts for all vehicles for our customers. These parts range from light bulbs to transmissions," Brown said.

The company supports the 43rd Engineer Battalion, The School Brigade, the 988th Military Police Battalion and the 34th Medical Battalion.

"We set the standards for the entire group to emulate. On a scale of one to 10 we got a nine," said SSgt. John D. McGuff, operations non-commissioned officer in charge. — Laurie J. Hill, 36th Engineer Group.

Commo troops keep 197th talking

Troy Buchanan

SP4 Preston Coleman, a communication soldier from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, sets up the antenna for a multichannel radio.

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Shoot, move and communicate is a well-known phrase among individual fighting soldiers. But, on a grander scale, the word communicate is a key to the varied operations of the 197th Infantry Brigade.

"Good communication is important to the Brigade's operations," said Maj. William Drechsel, the Brigade communications officer. "Since we are a separate brigade, we have what is similar to a communication slice of a division signal battalion."

That slice lies within the 197th Infantry Brigade Headquarters Company. The communication platoon is a section of soldiers that maintains the communication web between the Brigade headquarters, its outlying units and its higher headquarters.

The "commo" soldiers have many missions. They install wire cable and telephones within the Tactical Operations Center of the Brigade headquarters and the Brigade Support area. They set up and operate the multichannel radio network that provides all elements of the Brigade with long range communication. They also operate several types of hard copy transmission equipment that can send printed material from one location to another.

With retransmission equipment, the commo platoon can even relay signals that are blocked by mountainous terrain.

The section also performs a maintenance mission for the Brigade TOC and Headquarters Company's radio equipment.

"The radio capabilities provided through the headquarters commo platoon provide a redundancy, or back up, within our communication," said Maj. Drechsel. "It allows commanders to carry out orders and it allows the Brigade Headquarters to interface with higher headquarters."

The platoon has nearly 90 soldiers, most of whom are multichannel communcation equipment operators, single band radio operators and wire systems installers. These soldiers run the wire and cable and operate the various radio systems.

The section maintains a variety of radio equipment, more than 20 trucks and radio vans, generators and trailers, and must be ready to move out at any time.

"When we roll out on a major field problem, we take every piece of equipment that we have," said SSgt. Patricia Guillaume, the multichannel section sergeant, "right on down to spare parts."

Students in Airborne Course face anxiety in week three

Editor's note: This is the last of a three-part series that allows the reader to follow one student through three weeks with Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry. The story of the U.S. Army Airborne School is being told by a newly commissioned second lieutenant bound for the Medical Service Corps.

by Kathryn B. Potter
Co. C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment

Airborne Class 48-86 went into Jump Week after having Columbus Day off. This made it necessary for our class to complete two jumps Tuesday, and two jumps Wednesday, graduating with our final jump Thursday.

Nerves were on edge early Tuesday morning and the unusually quiet group of students anxiously compared thoughts and fears of the upcoming week. As I asked others, I found that I was not the only one who had tossed and turned, waking up every hour to check the time.

The buzz of voices echoed my own sleepless experience. "I dreamed my chute never opened," . . . "I dreamed I froze in the door," . . . "I had the worst nightmare — I dreamed my mother was in the plane with me!"

After arriving at Lawson Army Airfield and receiving our jumpmaster briefing, we put on real harnesses, parachutes and reserves for the first time. Everything was much heavier than I'd anticipated.

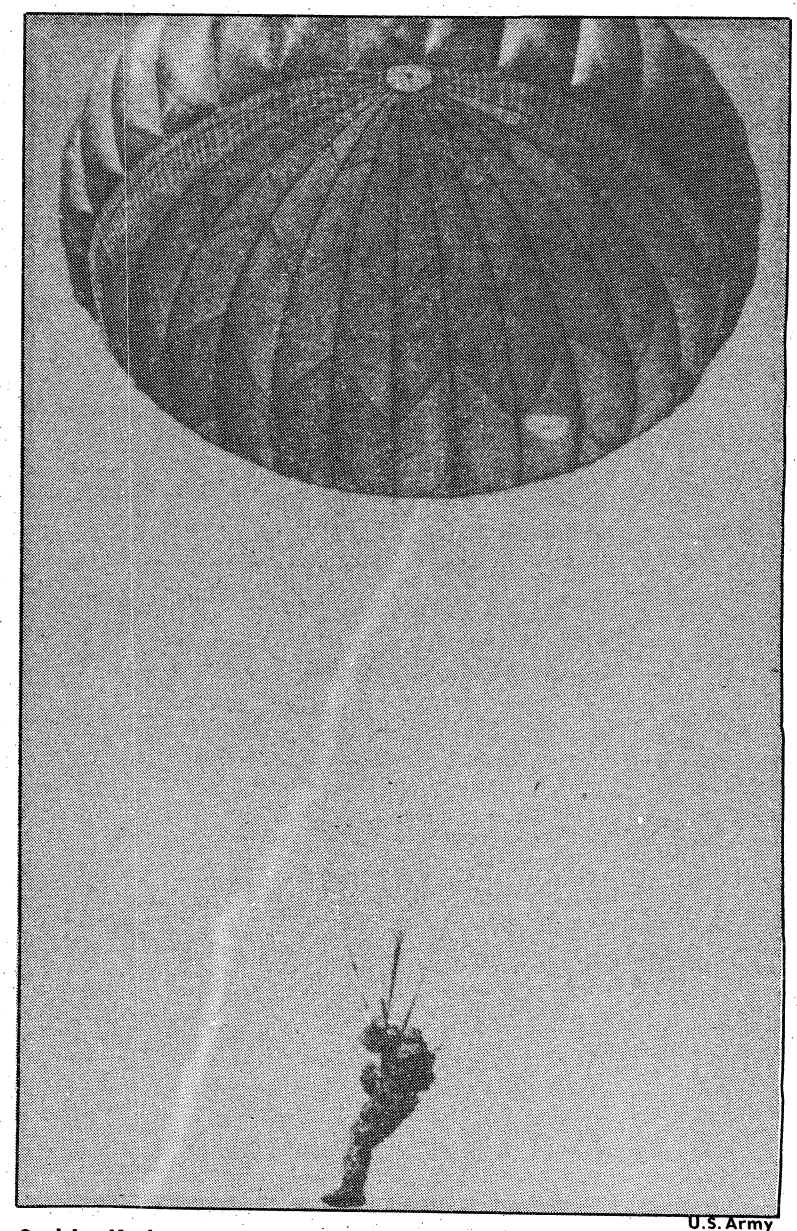
Before the first jump, lunch was served — to my surprise. I ate very little in order to ensure a more comfortable flight, which was to commence just 30 minutes later. My first jump was from a C130, an aircraft that holds 64 jumpers. I was in the seventh student pass, which meant that I had to ride for almost 1 ½ hours before jumping. I was glad I hadn't eaten much.

Having practiced perfecting the parachute landing fall during the two weeks prior, I was disappointed to find that I felt totally out of control exiting the aircraft, as if I were just sucked into a whirlwind.

Everything happened so quickly that I had little time to do anything before the parachute automatically opened and I felt the reassuring jolt upward of my inflated canopy.

Panic struck me momentarily as I looked up and found that my risers were completely twisted. I quickly "bicycled" out by moving my legs until the risers had unwound, and I gained canopy control.

At that point my emotions ran the gamut from sheer relief to the exhilaration of being initially airborne, free from earthly constraints and floating across the countryside. I found that I talked myself to the ground and commenced praying at about 200 feet. The first landing was the hardest of my five jumps as I felt like I hit and slid into home base, continuing to be dragged across the drop zone because I failed to activate one of my canopy releases.



Later in the same afternoon, we made our second jump and followed the next morning with a third jump in combat equipment. The combat equipment consists of a ruck sack and an M-16 weapons carrying case. I found the additional weight to be almost unbearably heavy. (My shoulders really hurt that night . . .)

On my fourth jump, I was lucky enough to be the first jumper in my pass over the drop zone. I stood in the door for about 30 seconds as the rush of wind blasted through the door. Below, the Chattahoochee River and the green fields looked like minatures on a train set. On this jump, I finally landed like I had been taught to — executing a "picture perfect PLF." It was a true sense of achievement to hit and roll when it counted, like I'd learned.

Everyone was in high spirits Thursday morning before our fifth and final jump. We knew that we were only hours from being "all we could be — superdooper paratroopers!" The weather was cool and sunny, a perfect day for Airborne Class 48-86's graduation. After hitting the ground the last time, I was overcome by a sense of thankfulness for having escaped injury and a strong sense of accomplishment and pride in completing my qualifying jumps.

Airborne School tasks the individual to go beyond preconceived limitations, mentally and physically. It stretches the potential and expands the possibilities we each have ahead of us. U.S. Airborne paratroopers think they are the best and the toughest — because they are. I share the Airborne pride and spirit now and understand the excellence expected of each Airborne paratrooper.

About the author — 2nd Lt. Kathryn B. Potter graduated from the Basic Airborne Course here Oct. 16. She received her commission through the Reserve Officer Training Corps program at William and Mary in Virginia. She is presently undergoing the Medical Service Corps Officer Basic Course at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. Airborne, ma'am!

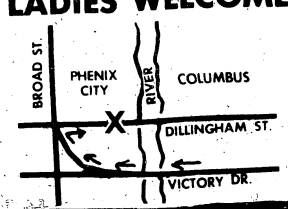
USARSA gets protocol NCO

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Dignitaries and other visitors to the the U.S. Army School of the Americas won't find anything unusual about the "red carpet" treatment they receive because it remains professionally superior.

They will, however, receive that same treatment through the protocol office and management of a newly-assigned non-commissioned officer who is no stranger to USARSA.



A 14-year Army veteran, SSgt. Efrain Sanchez arrived at USARSA this month from Fort Knox, Ky. Sanchez served with USARSA from 1980 through 1984.

"It feels great to be back at USARSA," Sanchez said, having completed his stint at Knox as an administrative supervisor in the 75th Support Group, 194th Armored Brigade.

A native of Trujillo Alto, Puerto Rico, Sanchez' new job as protocol NCOIC entails a variety of tasks that require much attention-to-detail and patience. The USARSA protocol office manages and is instrumental in all formal events which play an important role in USARSA's mission. These events include incoming class receptions, graduation, special ceremonies and coordinating for visiting VIP accommodations and transportation.

One of Sanchez' many duties will include sending out thousands of invitations throughout the year for various social events.

Brigade chemical team wins readiness award

SP4 Gregory Stival, assistant NBC non-commissioned officer from Company B, 197th Support Battalion, inspects protective masks in the unit NBC room.

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

A Nuclear, Biological and Chemical Defense Team uses its experience and training to protect soldiers in the event of an NBC attack. However, maintaining a well-trained defense team requires a lot of work from the team members.

Soldiers in Company B, 197th Support Battalion, have taken the time to put together an effective NBC program. The Co. B Defense Team was recently recognized as the best in the Brigade.

"Bravo Support came out to the evaluation with a real 'Forever Forward' attitude," said SFC Edward Merrett from the Chemical Section. "They showed total enthusiasm to their missions."

The Brigade Chemical Section oversees the annual NBC Defense Team Evaluations and ensures that each company's team leaders are well-trained in the defense team's missions.

"Through the DTE, we take a look at how well-trained each defense team is," Merrett said. "We want to see how well they can do their jobs."

Co. B's trainers were Sgt. Paul Joseph and SP4 Gregory Stival, who man the company's NBC section.

"We had excellent support from our chain of command," said Stival. "This company is very keen on maintaining a good NBC program."

The trainers and team members worked their training in with an already heavy load of commitments, company training and their normal medical duties.

"Each month we would train with a different section of the team," Stival said. "The experienced team members would assist in training the newer soldiers."

Each defense team consists of six sections, each having a different mission. Evaluators from the Brigade Chemical Section scrutinize how each team performs its missions.

Merrett said the control party oversees the complete NBC operations for the company. They receive warning reports from Brigade headquarters, plot and predict NBC problems, advise the company commander and ensure that the other team sections perform their missions.

The survey team preceeds the company into a designated area to determine how much, if any, contamination is in the area. Alarms are set up around the units perimeter to warn in case of an NBC attack. Other special equipment is used to determine what kind of agent is in the area.

In the event of a nuclear attack, a monitoring team uses M-174 equipment to monitor the area a unit is occupying to keep track of radiation levels.

"During the DTE, we develop several chemical and nuclear attack scenarios that the teams must complete within established time limits," Merrett said. "Teams that fail to meet the standard have 60 days to be retested and meet the requirements."

Merrett added, "In the future, the defense teams will only be notified bewtween 48 and 72 hours prior to the evaluation. This should help the units maintain a well-trained team."

Co. B is the first unit in the Brigade to have its name engraved on the Best NBC Defense Team plaque. The medics will retain the traveling trophy in their unit until next year when the Brigade units will have another opportunity to challenge them for the title.

"We feel that we set a precedent by winning the award the first time it was presented in the Brigade," Stival said. "We're definitely going to try to live up to it and maybe we'll take it again next year."

Ghostly figure haunts Torch Hill Road travelers

by Shawn Bryson
The Bayonet staff writer

It was one of those nights when a person might have been wise to stay indoors.

The sky was black and an occasional break in the clouds allowed the three-quarter moon to shine its light on the slightly foggy landscape below. A strong wind from the northwest tossed the half-bare trees. They hummed a tune that would make one's hair stand on end.

With autumn in full swing, the ground was covered with a blanket of leaves struck down from the afternoon storm. By dusk the storm had faded to a light drizzle with a flash of lightning every now and then.

Such was the atmosphere, legend has it, one night, long ago, when Fort Benning was still quite young.

Torch Hill was the next patrol area for the motorcycle military policeman cruising his normal beat that night.

Aside from the foul weather, things had been calm during the MP's patrol. He was looking forward to "topping off" his bike, turning it in and going home.

Torch Hill was usually a routine area for the soldier. However, while driving slowly in respect of the road conditions, he was startled when a shadowy figure shot in front of him from out of nowhere.

It was gone as quickly as it came. Puzzled, the curious MP decided to look around. He found nothing. The moon faded in and out as a hound dog began to howl. Suspecting that what he had seen might have been lightning or the reflection of his bike's headlight on the fog, or even a fatigued imagination, the MP finished his beat without any other disturbances.

The next night the same soldier was patrolling his normal beat again. The weather was similar to the night before but there was no fog or lightning. Having rested up, the MP had forgotten the mysterious incident that had left him only temporarily confused.

Nearing the end of his shift, he cruised Torch Hill. Things were quiet as before, until, from behind a cluster of trees, the ghost-like figure that had spooked him the night before, darted across the road in front of him.

The MP was instantly sure that this was no illusion. The air was clear and he had a better look at it. The soldier was positive he had seen a ghost horse and rider.

However, he knew he would have problems explaining what he'd seen. The desk sergeant at the MP station acted as would be expected. The next night Torch Hill had a new patrolman.

The new patrolman of the Torch Hill area turned in his motorcycle after the first of his patrol. He made it a point to stop by the desk sergeant's office. The two laughed hysterically as the MP reported that not a ghost was stirring in the Torch Hill neighborhood.

However, on the second night of his new patrol, the MP had a change of mind. He also encountered the unexplained apparition. The terrified soldier rambled off that he had almost been run over by a ghost horse and rider.

For some time, the MPs received several reports from people claiming they had seen the same kind of ghost. As with many ghost stories though, time passed and fewer reports were called in. Eventually, the sightings faded altogether.

At the time when the ghost was the most prominent, people had talked about who the ghost might be. Some claimed that it was the ghost of a British colonel.

The suspected colonel was John Tate. He had been campaigning in Georgia and Alabama during the Revolutionary War in the late 1770s. He died of 'cramp colic' and was supposedly buried on Torch Hill by locals. It is believed that he is buried on what is now the grounds of the quarters where the commandant of the Infantry School lives.

Who can explain what happened so many years ago? Believers in ghosts might want to beware this Halloween. The ghost of Col. Tate may ride again.

Chain of command vital in keeping troops informed

by Shawn Bryson
The Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers learn in basic training the importance of using the chain of command when trying to solve problems or get information.

According to 1st Sgt. Paul C. Rock, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, the chain of command is used to keep control of situations and provide a constant flow of information, both up and down the chain.

Rock said that the chain of command is an effective tool in preventing unnecessary misunderstandings and chaos.

There are however, weak points in the chain that need to be recognized and avoided if possible, Rock said.

"There are times when information needs to be passed down to the lower levels of the chain and it isn't," Rock said.

"Then you have a situation with lower ranking soldiers finding things out through the grapevine with little time for reaction to the news."

Another problem in some chains of command is not the actual flow of information, but the speed at which it flows, the first sergeant said. "When the information is passed on slowly, the soldiers just don't have the time to react to the message once again. That is when you get the unnecessary chaos."

It is also important for soldiers to use the chain of command to schedule appointments with the first sergeant, commander and other kinds of appointments, Rock said. Sometimes soldiers go directly to the first sergeant with a problem or concern instead of going through immediate supervisors first, Rock said.

"Many of the problems with the chain of command happen at the squad level," Rock said. "Too often outstanding specialists get promoted to sergeant at a young age and aren't really experienced enough to handle all the problems in their squad.

"Instead of referring difficult problems to a higher level, the squad leaders try to solve them without help. This usually causes more problems. Squad leaders should never be afraid to elevate a difficult problem."

According to Rock, some squad leaders are younger than the members of their squad and this can also cause problems. The chain of command is jumped many times because of the age difference and the squad members don't have confidence in the younger squad leaders.

Many people make a common mistake in assuming that the first sergeant is a part of the chain of command, according to Rock. "The first sergeant is a part of the support chain of command but can have an influence on what happens in the chain of command."

"Although the chain of command has some small problems, it actually works very well," Rock said. "It is important, however, for those people in the higher levels to see to it that information makes it to the squad level."

Council liaison between customers, Officers' Club

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Officers' Club Council acts as a liaison between the club and its members.

According to Col. William Hartzog, president of the council, how well the Officers' Club meets the needs of its members is directly related to the input the council gets from them.

"There's nothing too small to deal with," he said. "We put all sorts of things on the table."

For example, he said that this summer, the council was informed that young officers wanted a place to go get a drink in an informal setting where bathing suits could be worn. Hartzog said the council found a way to grant this request, without offending other customers.

Hartzog said satisfying the customer is more difficult at Benning than at other Army posts. "Our club serves a more varied clientele than any other post. We have a mixture of people who work at the training center, other units, the schools, retirees and families, and it's a difficult business to make everyone happy," he said.

Another problem is that the facilities are all located in one small area, making them less accessible to members who live and work in outlying areas of the post.

The club strives to provide service and entertainment that customers want. As a direct result of customer input, the club recently began serving breakfast. Another popular service is Sunday brunch at the Supper Club.

"Prices are lower at the Officers' Club because we don't have to make a profit. A good prime rib dinner with all the trimmings will cost diners less than it would locally, with just as good a quality," he said.

Hartzog said the council acts as a conduit to find out what customers want and desire from the club, and the body that can make it happen.

"We examine the issues as a group and present our findings to the commanding general, who makes the decision, based on our recommendations," he said.

Hartzog said the council gets suggestions from the Suggestion Box at the club, periodic questionaires and surveys of customers, but the best input comes from the person to person contact between customers and unit representatives.

The council has four committees that address specific areas of club management. These are entertainment, sports, house rules and food and services. "These committees investigate the needs and wants in their areas and present suggestions to the council as a whole," he said.

"The Airborne Course is rugged and the training is challenging. But those who complete it are better soldiers."

The words of SSgt. Frank Jaks, a "Black Hat" instructor from Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, resound in the ears of the more than 500 students assembled in the bleachers on Eubanks Field. Between 50 and 100 students will not complete the course and will not experience the feeling of becoming a "better soldier."

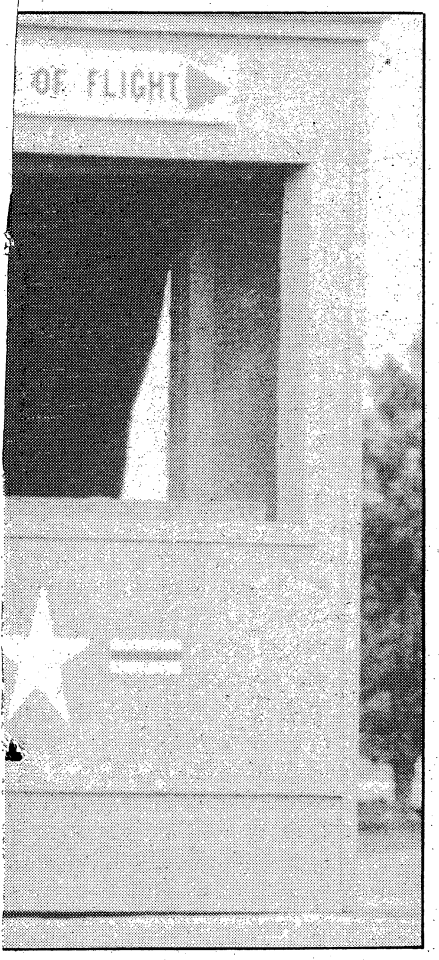
Jaks is the primary instructor for the Airborne 5,000 demonstration that students in the U.S. Army Basic Airborne Course experience on their first day of training.

"The Airborne 5,000 is intended primarily to orient the students on what Jump School has in store for them," said MSgt. James W. Washington, master trainer. "But, we can also provide an overall view of the Airborne community through the demonstrations."

In addition, Washington said the demonstration serves to get the students "fired up" or motivated to tackle the grueling course.

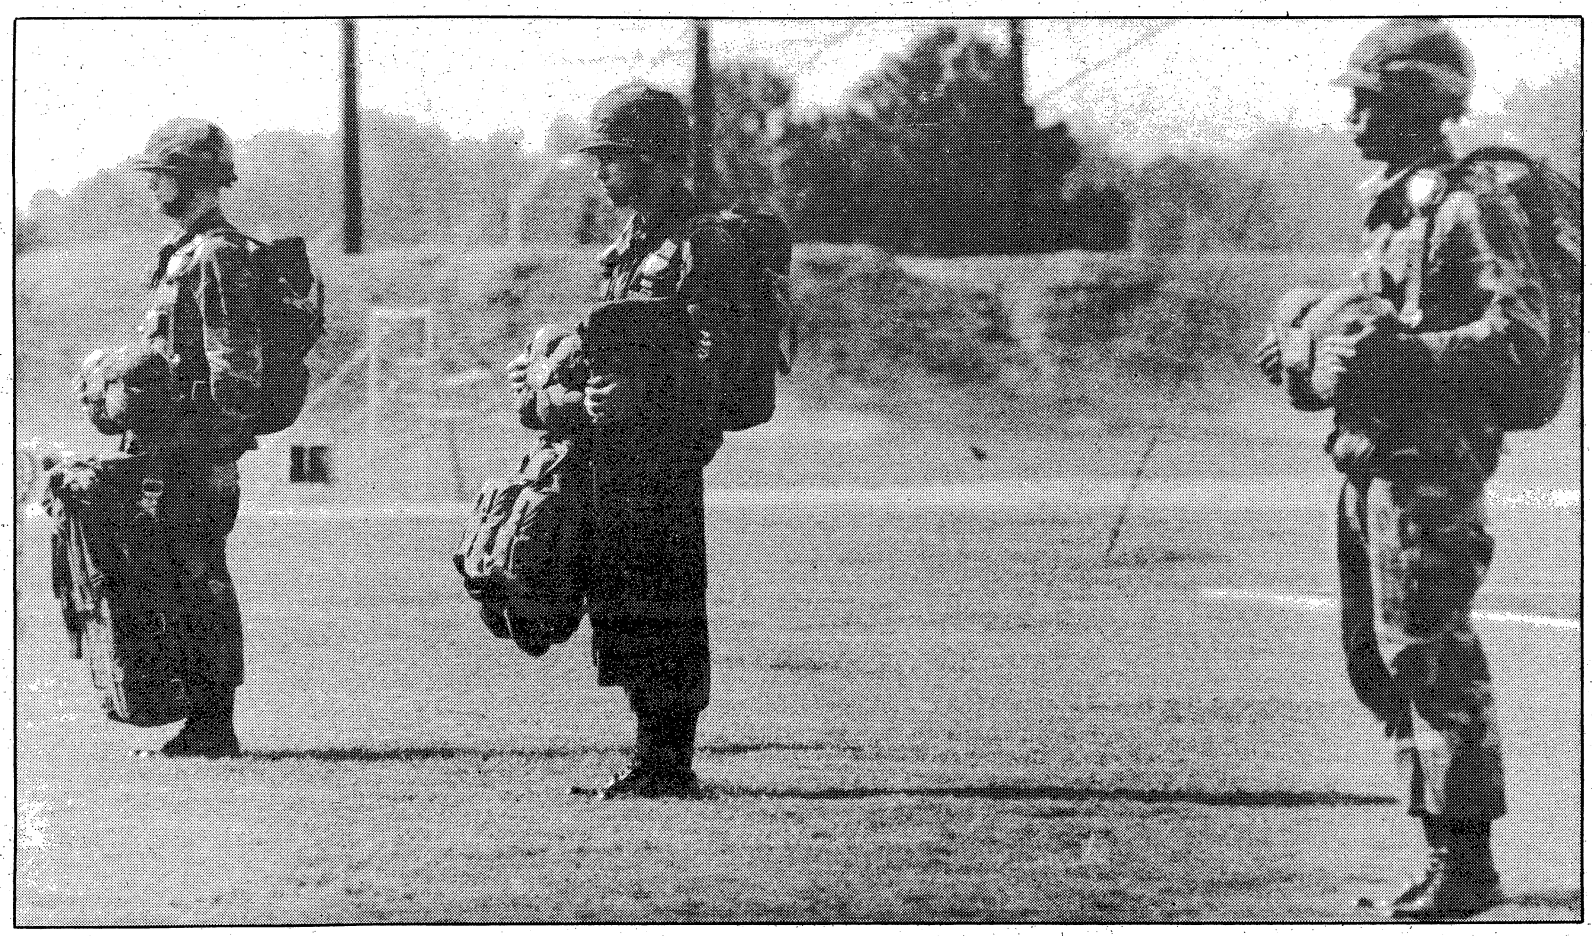
In a spectacular opening guaranteed to wake up even the sleepiest second lieutenant, the Silver Wings, the 1-507th's command exhibition parachute team, perform. Stepping out of a helicopter at 5,000 feet above the ground, the skydivers demonstrate freefall parachuting.

"The Wings' demo is intended to show the students some of the other aspects of the Airborne community," Washington said. Among those advanced techniques is high-altitude, low-opening or HALO parachuting used by Rangers and Special Forces teams.



"Even though they will never have the opportunity to do that type of jumping here, it makes them aware that the possiblity is out there in the elite units," Washington added.

Things don't get much more exciting following the skydiving demo, but the momentum continues as Lt. Col. Jimmie F. Holt moves in to offer a sort of "pep talk" that the students can carry with them throughout the three weeks of Airborne School.



Freshly scrubbed faces full of desire focus on the battalion commander as he shares some predictions. "There will be times when you will have to reach deep down inside yourself to find the courage and motivation to continue," he tells them. "There will be times when you feel like quitting and you'll have to rely on something inside to get you through it."

After all the flash, Jaks and two assistant instructors get down to business and discuss the equipment, events and state of mind necessary to make it through the course.

They begin by demonstrating the opening sequence of the parachute,

"How the Tax Reform Law Affects You," a free two-hour seminar, will be presented at the Kelley Hill Rec Center Nov. 13 at 6:30 p.m.

Mrs. Lymon Clark, a military tax expert, says that there are many changes soldiers need to know now in order to plan for the 1987 tax year.

After the seminar, Clark will answer questions from participants.

Make your plans to attend this informative seminar. For details call 544-3079 or 544-1721 after noon, Wednesday through Saturday.

Thought of losing a few pounds? Have you discovered you're eating for the wrong reasons — when you're tired or bored, mad or sad, when you really aren't hungry at all. Then join others with the same food problems and talk it over.

Support can change everything, even your eating habits. Visit Overeaters Anonymous every Thursday evening at 7:30 p.m. at the Kelley Hill Rec Center. One hour a week can make a big difference!

If you would like more information, call 544-3079/1721 after noon Wednesday through Saturday.

The Kelley Hill Rec Center is sponsoring an "Introduction to Computers" hands-on class Nov. 18 and 20. The class is four hours and will be taught in two-hour segments from 6 to 8 p.m.

The introduction class is great for those who want to start from the very beginning. The cost for this course is $25. Spaces are limited and payment must be received in order to guarantee a slot.

The second step after "Introduction to Computers" is the six-hour class "MS-DOS," which is taught in two-hour increments on Nov. 17, 19, and 21 from 12:30 to 6:30 p.m. Cost for his six-hour class is $35. This class is a must for all serious computer students.

Payment or DD Form 1556 must be received prior to start of class. Call the Rec Center for details, Wednesday through Saturday after noon.

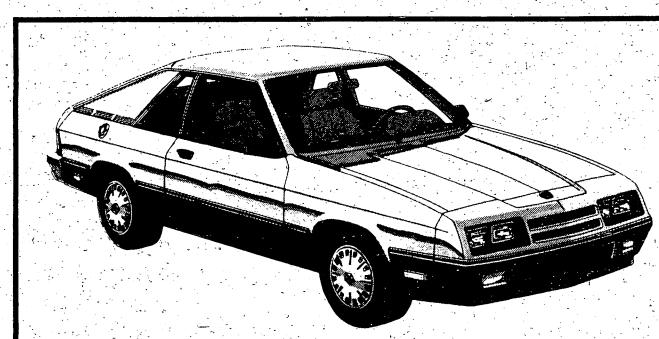
Officers' Club — Start your morning with our "All-you-care-to-eat" breakfast buffet for only $3 (10 percent discount for members) Monday through Friday from 6:30 to 8 a.m.

Sunday Brunch now features a piano player. Come and join us at the "All-you-care-to-eat Sunday brunch" for only $8.50 (show your membership card and receive a $2 discount).

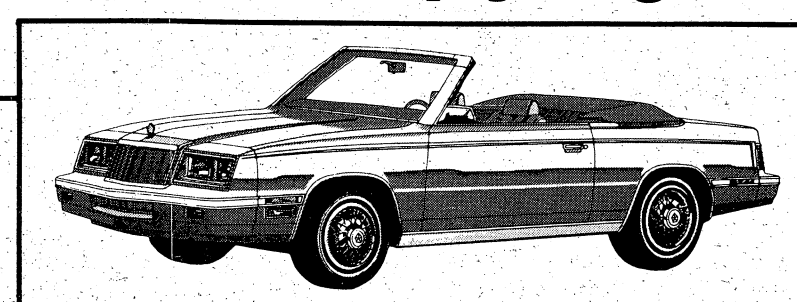
The Family Health Center now offers three separate aerobic classes with Pilar Cobb providing prenatal and postpartum classes, Maria's "Battle of the Bulge" and Lynda's aerobics.

NCO Clubs — Ghouls and goblins will abound tonight at the great Halloween Party at the Main NCO Club. Get out your best costume as prizes will be awarded for the most imaginative in the men's and women's categories.

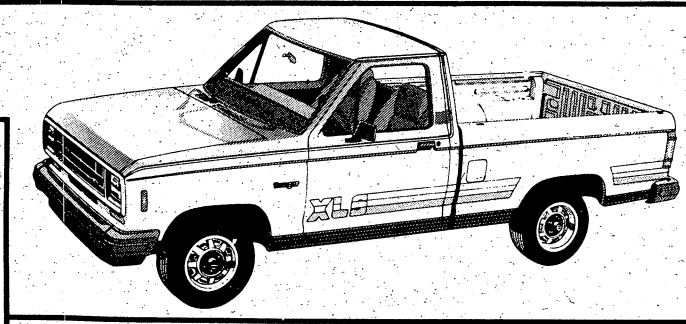
Santa's Castle — Santa's Castle, a private organization on post, was opened June 12. This organization provides a year-round collection and repair program for toys to ensure as many children of Fort Benning soldiers as possible receive a visit from Santa on Christmas morning.



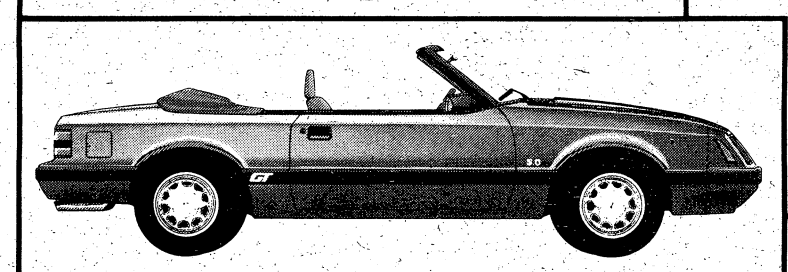
But we still need your help! Collection boxes are provided at the Main Post Exchange and Army Community Services collects toys whenever Santa's Castle is not open.



Distribution will take place during the first weeks of December.



Please look through your closets today and bring your unused toys by Building 2639 and if you're bored and have some extra time, your spirits will be lifted by volunteering that extra hour to help some child have a Merry Christmas.



Recreation Centers — The Cartel, a local computer users group, is sponsoring a free computer show at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center Nov. 8, from 1 until 6 p.m.

Kids 'read' with fingers using Braille alphabet

Fort Benning Schools

"I couldn't believe that I could read the letters in my name by feeling dots," said fifth grader Tanya Taitano. Tanya and her classmates in Melody Murray's room at Richard G. Wilson School recently finished a unit on braille that they developed after reading a book about Helen Keller.

When Murray's students learned about Helen Keller they wanted to know more about how she had learned to communicate. One of the class members brought in a book on Louis Braille, and Murray began reading the book to the students for a few minutes each day when they returned to their classroom from lunch.

As the interest in braille developed, Murray borrowed a braille writer, a typewriter-like machine used to print in braille for visually impaired and blind persons. She also brought in braille books and alphabet cards. With a demonstration to the class on use of the braille writer, various classroom activities and projects followed.

Students learned how the six-dot braille cell is used to write letters of the alphabet and words. As they became familiar with the braille cells the students began to write messages to their friends using the dot formations, and they made nametags for their desks using the braille writer. Some of the students even read portions of a book written in braille.

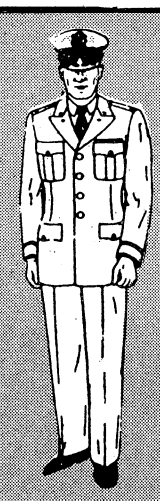
As the class studied braille writing, Murray emphasized spelling, capitalization, and punctuation, so the unit extended into every area of the language arts program.

"As we studied braille, then came mobility and the use of the other senses when vision was impaired, the students exhibited a remarkable sensitivity," said Murray. "The children were able to better understand problems related to blindness and impaired vision and the possibility for eliminating many of these problems by learning to use the other senses."

Dexter students learn from nature during outdoor education program

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Forty-three Dexter fifth graders spent two days and a night at Harmony Church participating in Dexter School's outdoor education program.



This is the second year that Dexter's fifth graders along with their principal, teachers, and counselor have left their classrooms to engage in specifically designed units of outdoor study. Students participated in outdoor art using items gathered during nature study. They studied soil conservation, tree identiication, first aid/CPR, mathematics related to nature, and orienteering.

"Our Dexter teachers have contributed so much to the effort, and having both soil conservationist, Glen Jackson, and CWO2(P) George R. Vaillant for first aid/CPR again this year has allowed us to add these additional instruction units to our program," said Del Hicks, principal.

Though the students rotated through eight different classes during the daytime, there were many opportunities for recreation. A campfire with toasted marshmallows, games of charades, songs, and star gazing ended the day's activities.

Teachers say that they see the results of the outdoor program throughout the year as they watch relationships grow and become stronger because of the shared experiences at Harmony Church.

"We plan to make the outdoor education program an annual fifth grade event," says Hicks.

Episcopalians invite community to join them for worship service

2nd Battalion, 69th Armor

The Episcopal congregation meets every Sunday at 9 a.m. for Holy Eucharist at the Kelley Hill Chapel. Chaplains Lee Dudley and Bob Reese provide pastoral care for Episcopalians at Fort Benning.

Being an Episcopalian is a way of being a Christian, a Christian with a special set of tools.

The Bible, being our principal written source of religious information for all ages is complemented by the "Book of Common Prayer" and the "Hymnal." Add the custom of commemorating the events and words of Jesus in the liturgy (worship order) of the church year, and a pattern or outline for a curriculum in Christian education emerges. This approach is our unique heritage; and we happily offer it to other believers.

"The Book of Common Prayer" is a manual for worship, and; as such, is both the statement of what we believe and our call to ministry. It presents a flexible format for present-day worshipping communities to express their faith, yet links us securely to our history and tradition, approximately 95 percent of the "Book of Common Prayer" is taken from God's word.

"The Hymnal" is a book containing the musical elements of our tradition, and is a rich source for inspiration in our celebrations.

The Episcopal congregation at Fort Benning welcomes all to come and be part of this rich worship experience.

Laiety takes over Kelley Hill Chapel

197th Infantry Brigade

Kelley Hill's Protestant congregation swapped roles with the ministers Sunday when the chapel celebrated Laity Sunday.

Chaplain (Capt.) Lee Dudley from the 197th Infantry Brigade explained that Laity Sunday is a yearly event designed to get the congregation more involved in the service.

"This is a chance for the lay person to lead the service," Dudley said. "They planned it, led it and performed all of the duties normally performed by the chaplain."

Among the participants was Col. William Hartzog, 197th commander, who preached the sermon to the group. His sermon focused on the importance of prayer and how, without dialogue with God, our lives are missing a vital resource.

"He did a good job," Dudley said. "The commander reminded us that a healthy prayer life is not just reserved for public worship but is a component of all areas of spiritual growth."

SSgt. Sam Oliva and Beth Dudley led the service, while SP4 Kenney Phelps and Diane Vigent served as ushers. The families gathered afterward for a meal in the chapel activity room.

Marriage seminar teaches couples vital skills for relationship building

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment correspondent

With one of every two marriages today ending in divorce, the need exists for something to help couples reach their goals in marriage, says Capt. Lee Dudley, chaplain for approximately 900 soldiers of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade and Troop A, 15th Cavalry.

That "something" is marriage enrichment training, says Dudley.

Recently, the chaplain organized a Marriage Enrichment Seminar for couples of the 29th Infantry.

The training spanned over a day, and Bill and Doris Hartley of a local marriage counseling agency conducted the seminar in the 1st Battalion motor pool area.

The training was in answer to many of the marital issues raised by soldiers. It also gave the chaplain a chance to minister to many of the soldiers he seldom sees, says Dudley.

The Hartleys presented the training in two segments: morning discussions and group interaction and afternoon role playing of real marital conflicts.

The instruction covered the skills necessary for a successful marriage.

They opened with, "The idea of marriage has changed."

"No longer do we marry to carry on the family name, or for economic unity, or to keep the human race going.

"Today, we marry because we love each other and want to be happy."

On that note the Hartleys introduced seven positive relationship-building skills worth building on. They said, before you can be a partner to anyone, you must first have the ability to value yourself. Secondly, you must be able to give love in order to receive love. Thirdly, you must be able to make and sustain a commitment. To carry on a healthy, mature and positive attitude about sex. To share your feelings openly. To maintain balance between love, work, play and religion. And finally, you must have the ability to communicate.

"It was an excellent presentation," Dudley says.

"And the couples said it was positive, informative, and they learned a lot," he added.

Today, 7 p.m. — Main Post Catholic Chapel; Saturday, noon — Main Post Catholic Chapel; Saturday, 5 p.m. — Main Post Catholic Chapel, The School Brigade Chapel and Reception Battalion Chapel; Saturday, 6:30 p.m. — 1st Infantry Training Brigade Chapel; Saturday, 6:30 p.m. — Harmony Church (2-10th Battalion Chapel).

Congregations support World Mission Sunday

Catholic congregations on post observed World Mission Sunday on Oct. 19.

A check for $1392.24 was sent to the Society for the Propagation of the Faith to support the worldwide service and evangelistic efforts of missionaries.

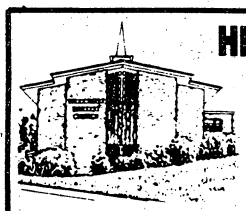
Protestant women extend invitation

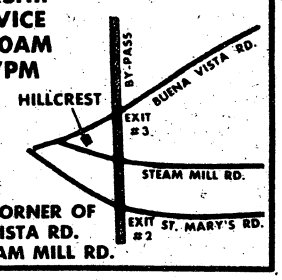
The Protestant Women of the Chapel invite all women on post to join them Thursdays at 9 a.m. for fellowship and Bible studies.

An on-going variety of Bible studies is offered to the ladies. A special "Christian Activity" schedule has been added to the nursery. All children, ages 15 months to 5 years, will be offered the opportunity to hear Christian childrens' music, see filmstrips related to home and church, and listen to Bible stories.

For more information or transportation assistance, call 545-2050.

Post helps help line





CONTACT, the 24-hour telephone ministry, appealed to Fort Benning personnel for support.

This year's response, received on Sept. 7, nearly doubled that of last year. Chaplain Mathis presented a check for $4483.72 to the organization to help meet their operational expenses.

Brooks claims second victory in Infantry Museum Race

Story and photos
by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

In a race where more than 4,000 runners streaked through the mist, Robert Brooks blazed to a first place finish Saturday, claiming his second consecutive National Infantry Museum Benefit Run victory.

Dropping his record time by three seconds, Brooks' steady stride broke the tape in the 5-miler at 25:35.

His closest competitor, Lloyd McDonald, raced to a second place finish at 26:12.

Saturday was not the first time the two speedsters have matched competitive spirits.

"We recently ran the Association of the United States Army 10-miler in Washington D.C.," said Brooks, "and Lloyd was on my heels all the way".

A first-time competitor in the Museum Run, Gaye S. Milling, claimed the win in the Women's Division with a 31:42 finish. Milling was more than a minute ahead of second place finisher, Karen Ammons.

Milling has been a competitive runner for more than 16 years. A relative newcomer to the tri-cities, she was impressed with the course. "It was smooth, flat and fast," she said.

A light shower during the race posed probelems for some, but proved to be less than an insurmountable hindrance for the winners.

"At one point, I had to make myself concentrate. But, after a while, the rain really felt good," Milling said.

The first place finishers are looking forward to the Infantry Marathon in January.

Brooks, formerly of Fort Benning and currently assigned at Fort Gordon, Ga. will soon be on his way to Germany.

"This may be my last chance to run in the marathon until I return to the United States," he said. "So, I look forward to the competition.

The Rotating Fort Benning Award was presented to the first place Headquarters Company, 1st Infantry Training Brigade team.

The 3rd Battalion, 1st ITB team topped the Army Training Center team competition, while the Staff Judge Advocate team locked in on the small unit victory.

The women's team title was claimed by the "Fearless" 50th Company, 5th Student Battalion, The School Brigade.

Individual winners are:

Open Division(male): 1st—Robert Brooks, 2nd—Lloyd McDonald, 3rd—David Van Etten.

Open Division (female): 1st—Gaye Milling, 2nd—Karen Ammons, 3rd—Dawn Reed.

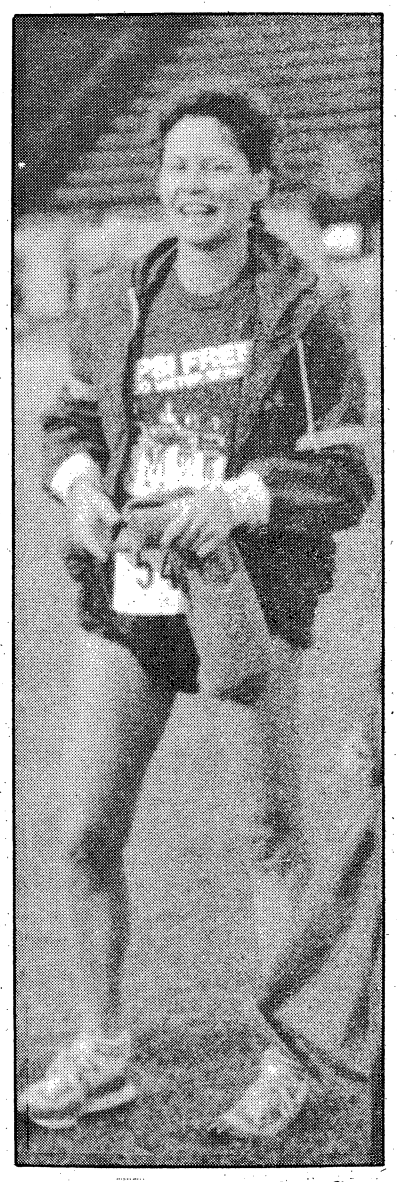
Age 14 and Under (male): Timothy Brooks; (female): Kristina Ashley.

Age 15-19 (male): Michael Kershaw.

Age 20-24 (male): Ronald K. Dixon; (female): Kelly Michalak.

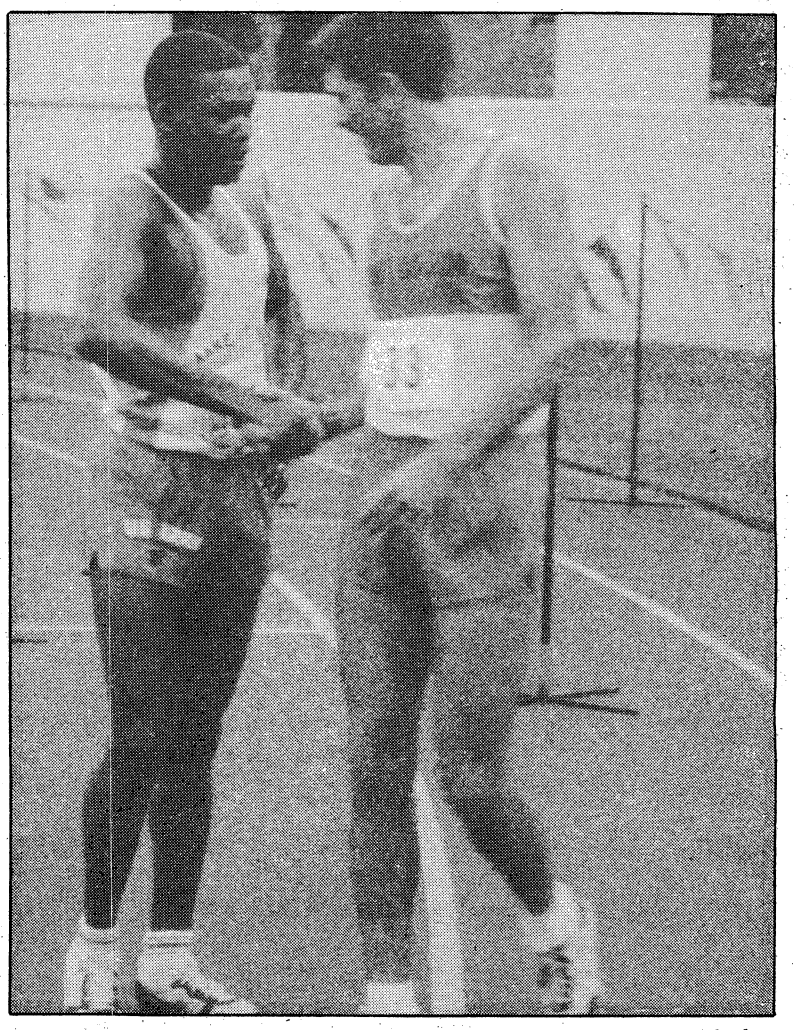
Age 25-29 (male): J. Votel; (female): Monica Gorbandt

Age 30-34 (male): Miguel Martinez; (female): Melissa Hill.



Age 35-39 (male): James Evans; (female): Cindy Maestos.

Age 40-44 (male): Jim George; (female): Cynthia Deaderick.



Age 45-49 (male): Fred Dyer.

Age 50-54 (male): Ronald J. Jebavy.

Age 55 and over: Earl Taylor, age 63; 2nd—Mark Sternberg, age 76.

Gaye Milling enjoys her first-place victory.

Lloyd McDonald(l) congratulates Robert Brooks, winner of the Museum Run, after Saturday's contest.

Broncos trounce Bears in YA ball

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The awesome ground attack of the Broncos led them to a 22-6 victory as they caged the Bears in Youth Activities Football action Saturday.

The Broncos rushed for 149 yards steered by Johnathan "The Beast" Beasley, who had 24 carries for 134 yards.

Quarterback Ernesto Berber also got into the running game as he powered through the goal line on a quarterback sneak.

Berber added an air attack to his offense, hitting wide receiver Mike Porter on a 12-yard touchdown pass.

The Bronco defense tamed the Bears, holding them to minus three yards.

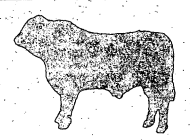
Jason Smith held the defensive whip close at hand, recovering four fumbles.

The Bronco hard hitting also provided Charlie Harris with two fumble recoveries.

The Bears were not safe anywhere, as Alex Rodriguez returned an interception 22 yards, while Smith and Beasley combined for seven tackles.

The Bronco defense also provided a score when the Bears quarterback was hit in the end zone while attempting to pass. An alert Mike Belch, recovering from his defensive end position caught the ball in the air for an easy six points.

The only sunshine for the Bears came when Ricardo Bowen turned a five-yard pass reception into a 45-yard touchdown play.



The Packers held onto championship hopes as they blanked the Redskins 8-0 to share first place, setting up a showdown to decide the conference championship.

The Packers went into Saturday's matchup one game down. But, the defensive muscle of Michael Collins and a Henry Delgracia touchdown pushed the conference tie.

Kevin Rashaad's two interceptions kept the Redskins from crossing midfield.

The victory was the second consecutive shutout win for the Packer club headed by Coach David Thomas.

Couger quarterback Jason Gardner completed six of eight passes to his favorite targets, Bob Dejuses and Duke Duplesis in a 6-8 lossing effort against the Bears of the Grasshopper Division.

Hunters facing new regulations

The Bayonet sports writer

With the opening of deer hunting season on Fort Benning last week came much discussion concerning the new policies for post hunters.

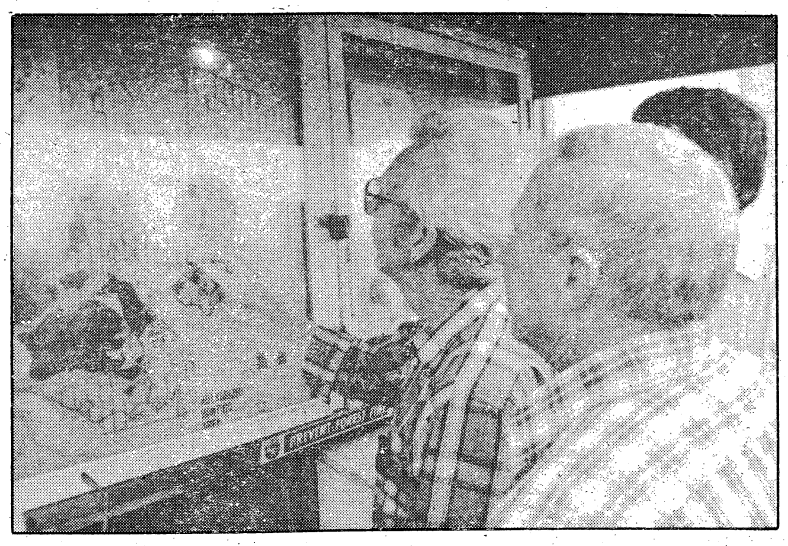
Hunters are required to abide by the laws of Georgia and the U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-2.

The regulation includes the bag limits in accordance with the laws of Alabama and Georgia.

The legal weapons that may be used are muzzle-loading rifles .44 caliber or larger, and center-fire rifles using an expanding bullet .22 caliber or larger. Shotguns must be 20 gauge or larger, loaded with rifle slugs only.

There are, however, exceptions to this rule. The use of the .218 Bee; .22 Hornet; .25-20, 256 Magnum, guns using Army Carbine cartrides, .35-30, .32-49, .357 Magnum, .38 special, 38-40 or .44-40 is not permitted. Handguns are not legal for deer hunting on Fort Benning.

Big game seekers should also be aware of the areas available for their use.



According to the USAIC Regualtion, at no time will anyone discharge firearms within 50 feet of main roads, buildings, or posted troop training areas.

Area Access Permits will be used to assign hunters to areas with a density of approximatly 25 acres.

The Area Access Permit Office, located near the Deer Check Station in Harmony Church, will be open from 5:30 a.m. until 9 p.m. daily.

Permits may be obtained after noon the day prior to hunting or on the hunting day.

● See HUNT, page 29

Hunters gather around the area maps at the Harmony Church Deer Check Station, checking available hunting areas for opening day.

Fort Benning's 10K/Biathlon

Fort Benning's 10 K/Biathlon is planned for Nov. 8. The biathlon consists of a three-mile run followed by a 30-mile bike ride. The 10 kilometer race will begin after all of the bicyclists are on the road.

The biathlon begins at 8:15 a.m., and the 10K follows at 9 a.m.

Courses begin and end at Martin Army Community Hospital, and will be mostly paved roads.

Competitors may enter the biathlon as individuals, members of a relay, or a three-person team. Relays can be made up of all men, all women, or a mixed group but relay members will not be eligible for individual awards.

Team members will compete separately, and their times totaled to determine the winner. Team members are eligible for individual awards.

Runners may enter the 10k race as individuals or as members of a three-person team. Their three times will be totaled to determine the winner. Team members are eligible for individual awards and will also compete for the top team trophy.

T-shirts will be given to all participants who preregister. Awards will be presented to the top three overall male and female finishers in the 10K and biathlon, the top male, female and mixed biathlon relay team, and individual age group winners.

Preregister by sending the completed entry form to: 10K/Biathlon, Box 642, MACH, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-6100, and enclosing the appropriate registration fee. Make checks payable to The Association of the U.S. Army. Preregistration deadline is Oct. 31.

Team members must submit a separate registration form for each person and submit them together with the team fee.

You can also pre-register at the Physical Therapy Clinic at MACH.

Fees are: Biathlon — Individual, $10; Relay, $18; Team, $30. 10K run — Individual, $7; Team, $21. Late registration fees are: Biathlon — Individual, $13; Relay, $24; Team, $39. 10K — Individual, $10; Team, $30.

Late registration will be from 7 to 8:15 a.m. the day of the race.

For more information, contact 1st Lt. Johanna Gabbard at 544-3308 or Capt. Mark Connelly at 544-3968.

Biathlon proceeds benefit combat medic museum

by Mary Jo Corbett
Dental Activity

The second annual Fort Benning 10K/Biathlon is set for Nov. 8. The proceeds from the event, which is being directed by the Medical Department and Dental Activity, will be donated to the Army Medical Museun at Fort Sam Houston, Texas in commemoration of the combat medic.

The 10K course is a 6.2-mile loop on flat to rolling paved roads with approximately one mile off road along the Follow Me Golf Course.

The biathlon run is an out-and-back course on Davis Hill Road with the transition area at the MACH parking lot.

The bike course is a 30-mile loop over rolling hills and contains several long climbs.

Aid stations will be set up along the courses to provide water, food and encouragement.

Protective headgear, water bottle and bike inspection are required for all cyclists. Inspection before race day can be performed at Mike's Bikes at the Airport Plaza or Arnold's Bike Shop at 4613 Warm Springs Road.

Several biathlon training opportunities are sceduled prior to the race. Among them are:

- The Steeplechase Country Tour Nov. 1. Registration for the 61-mile ride over rolling scenic terrain begins at 7 a.m. at Main Street Village, Hamilton Road. The fee is $10. The ride begins at 8 a.m.

- The Chattahoochee Cycling Club is planning a two-stage race and bicycle clinic Nov. 2. The initial event will be a seven-mile time trial. In this individual event, the cyclist will race seven miles against time without assistance from fellow riders or vehicles.

Following the time trial, a clinic discussing safety, fitness and maintenance will be conducted. After the clinic a 40-mile road race is scheduled. The race course is out-and-back and is mostly hilly to flat.

The race and clinic will be at the Lawson Army Airfield maintenance building parking lot on Dixie Road. Registration will be at noon and 12:45 p.m. The entry fee is $2 for C.C.C. members and $3 for non-members.

The 25-acre area allows hunters ample room to explore, But exploration in any type of off-road vehicle is prohibited.

ORVs are defined as "any motorized vehicle designed primarily for, or capable of, cross-country travel on or immediatly over land, water, marsh, swampland, or other natural terrain."

There is a total bag limit of three deer, one of which must be antlerless. No one is allowed to take more than two bucks during the entire season. Because of the limits, the rules for tagging deer are important.

Except for Fort Benning soldiers who are residents of Alabama and carry a hunting license from that state, it is unlawful for any person killing a deer on the Georgia portion of the reservation to move the deer until the tag from the Big Game license is attached to the carcass.

On the Alabama side of the installation, Fort Benning military members who possess a Georgia hunting licence must tag the carcass of the deer with a tag from the Georgia big game license.

Thanks to you...

Ask the 'judge'

Editor's note: These are questions the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be considered a substitute for advice from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

Legal Assistance

Q: I have been told that it's always best to have Servicemen's Group Life Insurance beneficiaries determined either "by law", or by your will. Is that right?

A: No. Though a "by law" election on the SGLI election form is appropriate for some people, it depends upon your circumstances. SGLI should never be paid in accordance with your will. If you indicate that you want your SGLI to go by the provisions of your will, it is almost certain to cause a significant delay of receipt of the funds by your beneficiaries.

SGLI provides $50,000 worth of life insurance to all active duty armed forces personnel. It is available at extremely low cost ($2.80 per month). Though you could get less than $50,000 worth of SGLI, or refuse it altogether, SGLI is one of the best bargains around. It would be foolish to limit or refuse it.

A "by-law" election for SGLI will provide adequate protection for many soldiers' families. However, if you have no close living relatives, or do not desire to have SGLI go to them, then you need to consider creating specific beneficiaries.

If you enter "by law" on the SGLI election form (VA Form 29-8286), your surviving spouse would be the primary beneficiary. If you had no surviving spouse, then your children would be primary beneficiaries. Each child would get an equal share. Each child would take "with right of representation," meaning that if your child died before you, your grandchildren by that child (if any) would equally share the portion your child would have otherwise received. If there were no grandchildren in this case, then your remaining children would receive his share.

If you had neither spouse nor children, then your parents would be primary beneficiaries. If your parents were also dead, then the executor or administrator of your estate would be the primary beneficiary.

Finally, the insurance would go to your closest other living relatives, according to the laws of your home state (domicile).

Once you leave the military, you may apply for Veteran's Group Life Insurance for a period of five years, under similar terms to SGLI. This is something you should make arrangements for while outprocessing. VGLI can be converted to commercial insurance when it expires. If you remain in the National Guard or Reserves, VGLI can be extended indefinitely.

Energy Update

by Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

Energy Awareness Week came to a successful conclusion last Saturday, so now is a good time to take stock of the Fort Benning energy program.

Even though it's not official yet, preliminary figures indicate we will finish Fiscal Year 1986 approximtely 5 percent below the Training and Doctrine Command Energy Goal.

This is the first time ever that we have met our target. This reflects the efforts of many people to insure energy is used wisely and efficiently.

Several steps are being taken to see that this become the norm and not the exception. The first step is the permanent staffing of the Energy Office. This will insure that measures necessary for an effective energy program are being performed.

Two good examples include energy inspections and metering of facilities. Another tool we are preparing is a clear, concise energy plan for the installation. This will clarify the responsibilities required in the energy program.

We are presently between air conditioning and heating season. This is the time of the year when substantial energy savings occur and we should extend this period as long as possible.

According to U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 11-27, heating systems will not be put in operation until the average outdoor temperature falls below 60 degrees Farenheit for three consecutive days, using hourly readings from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m.

After this criteria is met, the commanding general will decide when the heating season begins.

At this time, family and troop housing will receive first priority during start up. Historically, this has occurred during the month of November.

Marshal's viewpoint

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

A Medical Department Activity soldier was sentenced to 60 days in jail, a bad conduct discharge and a $1000 fine following her recent conviction for larceny and forgery.

Evidence presented at the trial established that PFC Paulette V. Pressey entered the room of a fellow soldier in her barracks and stole a checkbook, driver's license and military identification card on July 11.

Pressey then forged 12 checks both on and off Fort Benning to obtain cash and other items. The victim testified that she had suffered extreme hardship and was no longer permited to cash checks because of Pressey's forgeries.

Both Pressey's company commander and first sergeant testified that Pressey was a barracks thief and had no rehabilitative potential and should not be retained in the Army.

In response to counter evidence that Pressey allegedly forged the checks because she was in dire financial straits, the prosecutor presented evidence that Pressey purchased clothes, curtains and a new bedspread with the forged checks and took a trip to Hawaii right after forging the checks.

SP4 Delmar S. Walls and PFC Frank L. Lambert, both soldiers assigned to the 608th Ordnance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, were tried by a special court-martial Sept. 30 and on Oct. 19, respectively, for stealing car parts from other soldiers' cars while they were impounded.

The military judge, after heading all the evidence, sentenced Walls to be reduced to private, to be confined for 45 days, to forfeit $426 per month for two months, and to be discharged from the Army with a bad conduct discharge. Lambert was sentenced to be confined for 45 days, to be reduced to private, to receive a $1000 fine, and to be discharged from the Army with a bad conduct discharge.

The Bayonet

Vol. 45, No. 8 Published in the Interest of the Fort Benning Community Nov. 7, 1986

Post facilities set holiday schedule

Fort Benning soldiers and civilian employees will observe Veterans Day Tuesday with a day off from work. Some facilities are changing hours in observance of the holiday and schedules follow.

Rebabe Trash Company employees, the firm that picks up garbage on post, will also take the day off. Tuesday's normally scheduled area trash pick-up will be collected Wednesday.

Martin Army Community Hospital clinics will be closed. Emergencies should be referred to the hospital emergency room. All troop medical clinics will be closed with the exception of TMC 5 at Sand Hill. It will operate from 7 a.m. to 10 a.m.

The MACH Pharmacy will operate from 8 a.m. to noon and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. The Main Mall Refill Pharmacy will be closed.

The commissary will be closed. However, post exchange retail and food facilities will observe the following hours: Main Store, Mini Mall, Center Terrace, Sand Hill, Kelley Hill Troop Store, Robin Store, Robin Hobbies, Main Mall Bowling Alley and Mail Post Bowling Alley will operate normal hours.

The Main Mall Service Station will operate from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. The Post Service Station 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., Mini Snack Bar 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Hot Dog House 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., the Pizza [illegible] noon to 6 p.m., Sand Hill Snack Bar 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., Kelley Hill Snack Bar 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., and the Airborne Snack Bar noon to 10 p.m.

Rangers to get new bayonet first

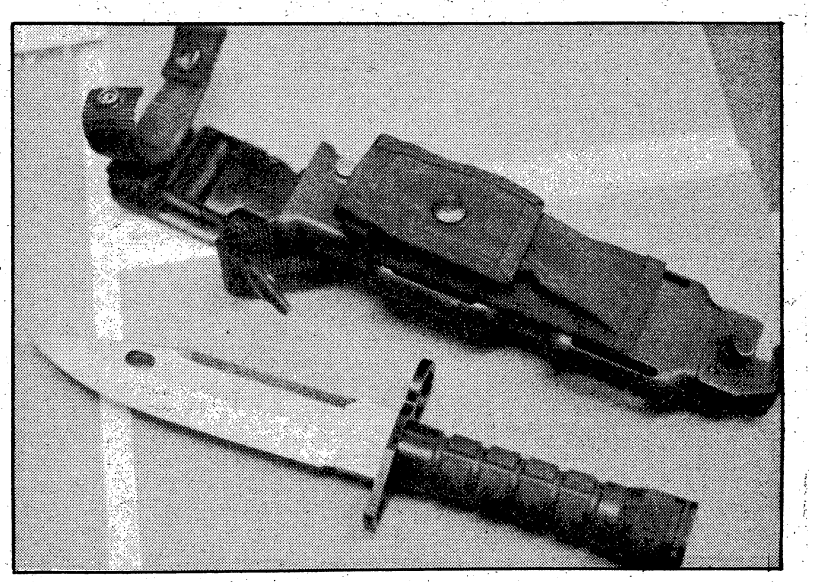
The Bayonet staff writer

The U.S. Army, always on the cutting edge of new technology, is steeling itself for another new development. A new multi-purpose bayonet, the M-9, is scheduled to hit the streets in the spring.

"The infantry decided about 18 months ago that it needed a new bayonet to replace the M-7 bayonet currently in the inventory," said Maj. George Birdsong, bayonet task force leader from the Directorate of Combat Developments.

"We've got that replacement now and it will initially be issued to the 75th Ranger Regiment in March 1987. The M-9 will then be fielded, in a standard issue, to all infantrymen, Special Forces and combat engineer soldiers.

"We bought a first class piece of equipment for a very reasonable price. We bought the best system, not the cheapest," Birdsong said.



Costing about $49.60 a copy, the new bayonet is definitely an improvement over the current M-7, according to Birdsong.

"The M-7 is not a knife, it is not multi-functional and it has been breaking at the Bayonet Assault Course. We wanted a bayonet that was a bayonet, a combat knife and a wirecutter," Birdsong said.

"Out of the six different candidates tested, the M-9 was far superior and did not fail any of the tests," he added.

The M-9 looks like a field knife, is single-edged, and has a built-in sharpening stone in the scabbard. The blade, seven inches long, is notched along the rear of the top edge, for sawing.

It also has a hole near the tip of the blade that, when attached to the scabbard, can be used as a wire cutter. The knife serves as one arm of the cutter and the scabbard as the other. Soldiers can use it to cut regular barbed wire, concertina wire and metal banding on ammunition crates. The scabbard has a "quick release" from the device that holds it on the pistol belt for fast use as a wire cutter.

The new bayonet and its scabbard are shown together. The 75th Ranger Regiment here will be the first unit in the Army to begin receiving the multi-purpose bayonet in the spring.

Birdsong said the infantry now has a better fighting knife, a better bayonet, a wire cutter and a field craft knife, all in one package.

"If you tried to buy a similar system downtown it would cost more than $100. The Army got a real bargain," Birdsong said.

The M-9, built by a California firm, will be bought in a 315,600- piece inventory initially with an Army option to buy more.

Community plans events honoring veterans

The Bayonet staff

Several activities are planned in the local area to commemorate veterans in observance of this year's Veterans Day.

The Chattahoochee Valley Veterans Council has several activities planned.

A memorial service is scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Tuesday at Riverdale Cemetery on Victory Drive.

A military equipment display may be seen in the Howard's parking lot on the 280 Bypass in Phenix City during daylight hours.

The annual Tri-City Veterans Day parade is set to begin at 4:30 p.m. The parade will start in Phenix City, Ala., at the intersection of Broad and Dillingham Streets, proceed up Broad to the 14th Street bridge, down Broadway in Columbus to 9th Street and end at 6 p.m.

Any group or person wishing to take part in the parade should call Larry Norrell at 297-4440.

Awards will be given for the most patriotic entries.

Organizations scheduled to participate include veterans groups in Columbus and Phenix City, local high school bands and the U.S. Army Infantry Center Band.

In Atlanta, a parade dedicated to women veterans is scheduled to begin at 9 a.m.

Individuals interested in participating should be at the Civic Center MARTA station parking lot by 9 a.m.

A reception for women veterans is scheduled for 2 to 6 p.m. at the Pierremont Hotel, 590 West Peachtree Street.

A movie concerning women prisoners of war will be shown and information will be available on benefits for women veterans.

All women veterans are invited to attend.

Maintaining motivation key to successful lifestyle

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Motivation is a key element in successful soldiering. Actually, if the truth were known, it is a key element in a successful life.

Common sense would tell us that if we are not enthused about a task at hand, we probably won't perform said task to the best of our ability. It is always easier to get "fired up" or excited about something that we find interesting.

Occasionally everyone gets bored with their daily routine. Boredom causes us to become lethargic and apathetic about our work.

So, what can we do to keep our level of motivation up? Well, different things work for different people.

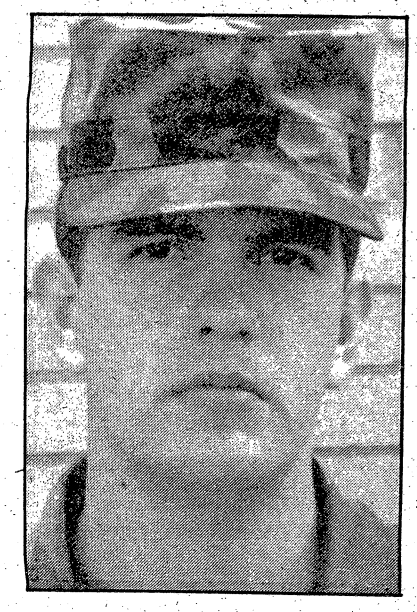
A lot of people like to work out frustrations or depression through physical exertion. Lace up the running shoes and hit the streets. It could be the time alone, the fresh air, the sweat, that makes long, strenuous runs theraputic. Whatever it is, it helps.

A quiet evening at home surrounded by family members can also work to help get your perspective. The realization that others love you and need you can have an amazing affect on your entire approach to life.

In the same vein, a weekend away in the mountains or at the beach may be just what the doctor ordered. Very often, enjoying the simple things life has to offer can impress upon us the value of what we work for each day.

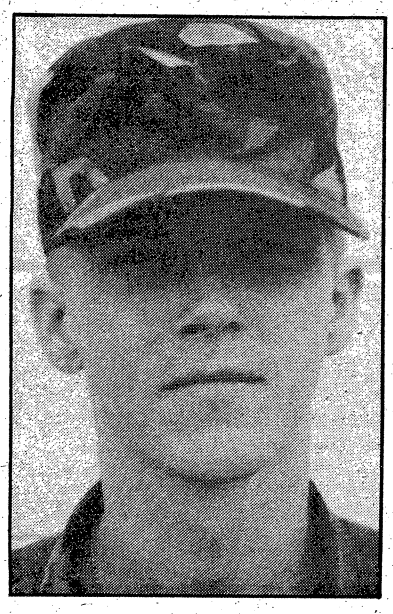
At the other end of the spectrum are those who can only get motivated by throwing themselves into work. Special projects or extra jobs become their therapy and if things slow down, they become depressed. The answer here is to maintain a level of challenge in everything you do if this is you. Striving for excellence is especially rewarding when you achieve it. There is nothing like success to get the blood pumping.

I am able to keep my motivation up to an acceptable level through a combination of all of the above techniques. Achieving a balance among work, relaxation, family and physical exertion is paramount in establishing a favorable routine.



Think of the cycle like this: You work hard all week, applying yourself to every minute detail of the mission and by Friday you are ready for the weekend with the family. You go home anticipating a relaxing couple of days with no demands. Well, what you get, in reality, are demands of a different type. But, it still works to help you unwind because it is different. Sunday evening rolls around and somewhere between "60 Minutes" and "Murder, She Wrote" you find yourself looking forward to going back to work.

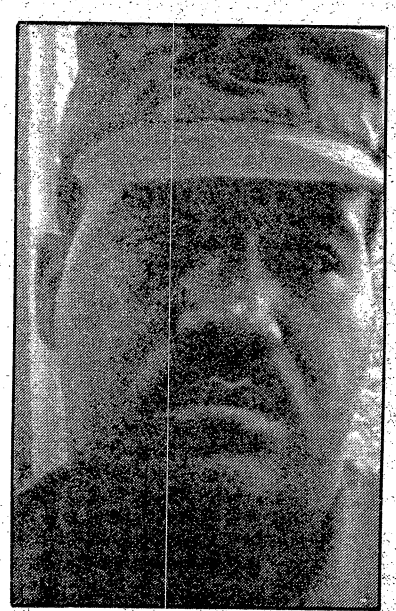
This says that you have accomplished that sought-after balance. You enjoy work, but you value your time away. Your family provides necessary therapy but you crave the challenge of the work week.



And so, with Monday morning PT formation, the cycle begins again.

Various voices

When you get depressed about work, what do you do to improve your motivation?



Pvt. 2 Mark D. Rushing, 586th Engineer Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group —"I think that best thing to do when I get depressed is some type of physical activity. I also like to go bowling with my wife because it takes my mind off work."

Pvt. 1 Timothy R. Childers, Company A, 1st Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade —"I'm still in basic training and it gets depressing sometimes. But all I do is think about my wife and son and how they are counting on me."

Lt. Col. Roger Hewitt, Directorate of Training and Doctrine, United States Army Infantry School —"I like to get out of the office and work out at the gym. If something is depressing me I put it aside for a while and work on somthing else."

SSgt. Fred Moore Jr., Company C, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade — "When I get depressed I like to do a lot of running. It helps me relax and get back into a good frame of mind."

Maj. Ken Branch, 3rd Ranger Company, The School Brigade —"The best thing I can do to get remotivated is to remember that I have a mission and that mission is to train soldiers.

Veterans Day, 1986
By the President of the United States of America
A Proclamation

Veterans Day gives all Americans a special opportunity to pay tribute to all those men and women who, throughout our history, have left their homes and loved ones to serve their country.

Their willingness to give freely and unselfishly of themselves, even their lives, in defense of our democratic principles has given our great country the security we enjoy today. From Valley Forge to Vietnam, through war and peace, valiant, patriotic Americans have answered the call, serving with honor and fidelity.

On this special day, our hearts and thoughts turn to all the Nation's veterans. Let us reflect on the great achievements of those whose sacrifices preserved our freedom and our way of life. With a spirit of pride and gratitude, let us recall their heroic accomplishments and thank them for their unselfish devotion to duty. They are indeed worthy of the solemn tribute of a grateful Nation.

I invite all Americans to join me in observing Veterans Day — through appropriate ceremonies, activities, and commemorations on Nov. 11.

In order that we may pay fitting homage to those men and women who have proudly served in our armed forces, the Congress has provided that Nov. 11 of each year shall be set aside as a legal public holiday to honor America's veterans.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, RONALD REAGAN, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Tuesday, November 11, 1986, as Veterans Day. I urge all Americans to recognize the valor and sacrifice of our veterans through appropriate public ceremonies and private prayers. I also call upon federal, state, and local government officials to display the flag of the United States and to encourage and participate in patriotic activities throughout the country. I invite the business community, churches, schools, unions, civic and fraternal organizations,and the media to support this national observance with suitable commemorative expression and programs.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this twenty-third day of September in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighty-six, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and eleventh

Ronald Reagan

Remember those who served

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Forty years ago, people stopped everything at 11 a.m. on Nov. 11 and took a few minutes to ring the churchbells.

It was a day for celebrating the signing of the armistice that officially ended World War I. Later the day was changed and became a time to honor veterans of all wars.

Nowadays, nothing short of a presidential visit gets people that excited.

Last week, flags were flying and people turned out in droves for President Ronald Reagan's visit to Columbus. The crowd overflowed the memorial stadium, and lined many parts of the president's route down Victory Drive. Parents brought their children along to help them catch a glimpse of the motorcade.

That display is in marked contrast to the ceremonies planned for this coming week.

Tuesday is Veterans Day, but no memorial service is planned at Fort Benning. Military and civilian employees will have the day off, so empty office buildings will be our "memorial" to the millions who fought and died for America in past wars.

A few soldiers will be doing their part to remember. They'll be working in color guards and bands at area services. But the vast majority of the nearly 38,000 military and civilian workers on post will be using the day off to go fishing, cook out or catch up on household chores.

It'll probably be a big day for area retailers, who'll be offering Veterans Day sales, and children who'll be enjoying a day off from school.

Some people will find it easy to remember what Tuesday is. They are the parents who lost sons and daughters; wives who lost husbands; fighting men who saw buddies die beside them. Some children will also remember — children whose only memory of their fathers is a picture on the mantel. They will remember and mourn the fathers who didn't get the chance to watch them grow up.

Several activities are planned locally to commemorate the event. There will be a memorial service at Riverside Cemetery on Victory Drive at 10:30 Tuesday morning. Local veterans groups will be marching in a parade starting at 4:30 p.m.

If you're not much for organized events, there are other things you can do. If you've got an American flag, fly it. And if nothing else, at 11 a.m., stop and spend a few minutes in silence, to honor our veterans.

Do it for the millions of American service men and women who died defending freedom for all of us.

Veterans preserve freedom for all

On this Veterans Day, we pause to honor the men and women who have served and those who continue to serve in the armed forces of the United States of America.

The fact that we are at peace today is due in no small part to the patriotism, dedication, and sacrifice of this distinguished group of Americans and their families.

Throughout our history, the rights and freedoms that form the foundation of our great nation have been secured by soldiers, sailors, airmen, and marines who have served and fought around the world and all too often died.

America's democratic principles are constantly at risk and must resolutely be defended. This has never been more true than it is today.

On this Veterans Day, therefore, it is entirely appropriate for all Americans to acknowledge the debt owed to veterans who have met the challenges and passed on a strong nation to future generations.

It is also appropriate to thank today's men and women who now bear the torch and stand ready to meet new challenges.

On behalf of the Department of Defense, I want to express my deepest gratitude to all veterans and assure them that they have well earned the nation's gratitude.

Holiday full of meaning to some

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

To many people, Tuesday is just a day off courtesy of Uncle Sam.

But to the nearly 28 million veterans still living who served, the day has a lot more meaning.

Recently, members of American Legion Post 35 talked about what Veteran's Day means to them.

"It makes me think back on all the years . . .the people who gave 100 percent . . .their lives. I usually start off by lighting a candle in church," said Johnny Wall, a retired soldier.

Wall recalled his childhood in Brooklyn, N.Y., where parades honoring war veterans drew large crowds. "I remember going to them with my father, who was crippled in World War I." His father died when Wall was 8 years old, but not before instilling a love of country strong enough to steer Wall into a career in the Army.

Will Powell put in 24 years in the Army before retiring in 1971. He voiced the general consensus concerning the date the holiday is observed.

"I'm glad to see it back to Nov. 11. The World War I armistice was signed on the 11th day of the 11th month, at the 11th hour. It took away from the significance of the day when they changed the date to fit Congress' whim," he said.

Powell said it bothers him that people don't pay more attention to Veterans Day.

"I can remember when we'd have a moment of silence in school that day. Everything shut down and you'd hear whistles, churchbells, and all kinds of commotion. Now you can't even get people to toot their car horn or anything else," he said.

Marty Martinez, who saw action in Korea and during two tours in Vietnam, said Veterans Day is even more important today because many soldiers have not seen combat.

"Vets have to show the new soldiers what it means to this country. We served to keep this country free and that's their job too, to protect the American way of life," he said.

Martinez said that people don't appreciate service members unless it's wartime. "People could care less because soldiers aren't fighting for the country right now," he said.

Archie Milano, another veteran, said it bothers him to see the way today's soldiers are treated. "Back in early 1941, this town had 125,000 soldiers and they had a USO club here for them. Today people have forgotten them completely.

"It irks me to see these boys on Sundays walking along Victory Drive with no place to go. It's a disgrace," Milano said.

"We forget too quickly," said Joe Smith, who served in World War II. "Veterans Day is a reminder of things we have done in the past, and the radicals out there marching with placards, trying to tear this country down have no idea what Veterans Day stands for," he said.

"They don't know what it was to have been in Normandy, at the Battle of the Bulge. We have to remind people that it's veterans who have gotten this country where it is today," Smith said.

Citizens urged to pay tribute to gallant troops in services

Veterans Administration

"A Grateful Nation Remembers," is this year's Veterans Day theme, Administrator of Veterans Affairs Thomas K. Turnage has announced.

Turnage, who serves as Veterans Day National Committee Chairman, urged Americans to pay tribute to the nearly 28 million living veterans who have served their country in uniform, and to the more than 1 million who died during wartime service.

The 33rd annual Veterans Day Observance at Arlington National Cemetery on Tuesday will begin at 10:30 a.m. in the amphitheater with a musical prelude provided by The United States Navy Band.

A program of speeches and patriotic music and displays in the amphitheater will follow the Presidential Wreath-Laying Ceremony at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

The Blinded Veterans Association is hosting this year's activities at Arlington.

Turnage pointed out that while Arlington captures much of the national attention on Veterans Day, the rest of the nation's observances are just as meaningful.

"While the Veterans Administration is the means by which all Americans are able to express the spirit of Veterans Day year round, it is on this special day that we all can gather to voice our gratitude," he said.

To support nationwide activities, Turnage has asked all state governors to name Veterans Day chairpersons for activities in their respective states. The person appointed will coordinate the various activities throughout the state and will represent the governor in working with service organizations, military officials and communities planning parades, ceremonies and other observances.

The committee has also sent a variety of materials to state offices and to schools encouraging greater awareness of and involvement in Veterans Day.

Armistice Day time to voice gratitude

American Forces Press Service

On the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month in 1918, an armistice signed by representatives of the Allies and Germany went into effect, ending World War I. A year later, President Woodrow Wilson proclaimed Nov. 11 Armistice Day.

"To us in America," Wilson said, "the reflections of Armistice Day will be filled with solemn pride in the heroism of those who died in the country's service and with gratitude for the victory, both because of the thing from which it has freed us and because of the opportunity it has given America to show her sympathy with peace and justice in the councils of the nations."

This year, Veterans Day will be observed on Tuesday, Nov. 11. As part of national observances, a wreath will be placed at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery. By presidential proclamation, federal, state and local government officials are called upon to display the flag of the United States on all government buildings, and people are invited to observe the day in schools and churches or other suitable places with appropriate ceremonies.

197th troops practice decon skills during recent readiness evaluation

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Recently soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery conducted decontamination exercises during their Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program-based qualification tests.

"As modern warfare progresses, we are finding the need to emphasize and practice the skills needed to protect ourselves from chemical and biological hazards," explained Capt. Bernd Pielmeier, an evaluator from the XVIII Airborne Corps at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Not only do personnel and their equipment have to be decontaminated, but the vehicles as well in order to continue the mission.

"Many factors must be considered during decon operations and procedures," said Pielmeier.

Time is one very important factor; many chemical agents react within seconds of contact. Decon packets, such as the M258A1, must be applied to the skin surface in just seconds.

Chemical suits will only protect the wearer for six hours in a contaminated environment, so new chemical gear must be issued. By contacting the forces in the rear and informing them that they have been exposed to a chemical agent, proper equipment can be brought forward.

"Basically there are three types of decon," said SSgt. Willie Smith, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery chemical non-commissioned officer.

"Skin decon, personnel wipe down and operational spray down. During the training exercise the Battalion practiced all these types of decon operations."

When armored vehicles are contaminated with a chemical agent, each vehicle must be tested for its degree of contamination.

Howitzers from 2-10th went through five decon points by degree of contamination. Chemical test paper is used to measure the level of chemical contamination.

At the first point the vehicles are rinsed down with hot soapy water. Then a decontamination agent is sprayed onto the vehicle. Point three is a holding area where the howitzers wait 30 minutes as a decon agent takes effect and dries.

The vehicles are then rinsed down again with water to remove the decon agent. At point five, last phase, soldiers check for any residual contamination.

The 2-10th practiced the decontamination methods to increase their proficiency in chemical protection.

The 197th Infantry Brigade Headquarters Company Chemical Platoon supported the evaluation with chemical decontamination equipment. They also operated the stations and phases of each decontamination process.

"Classes were given to the artillery men before operations," said Sgt. Gregory Hipps, from the Brigade Headquarters Company Chemical Platoon. "Everyone worked as a team to help accomplish the mission."

'King of paratroopers' at home with 1-507th PIR

by Kathryn B. Potter
Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry

William "Red" King of Phenix City, Ala., is considered "King of the paratroopers" and a legend in his own rite by Airborne students today. As a member of the original test platoon in 1940, King was the first enlisted Airborne paratrooper in the United States.

In order to introduce Airborne training to the American soldier, Gen. William C. Lee initiated the program with the formation of a test platoon. The platoon was made up of 48 enlisted men and two officers from the 29th Infantry Regiment.

Because of the high risk involved and the experimental nature of Airborne training, only single men were selected. All were under 35 and in excellent condition. Most, like King, played on post athletic teams. King had earned the nickname, "The Spartan", because of his athletic prowess proven on the football field and in the boxing ring.

Airborne training was in its earliest experimental stages in the 1940s. No training apparatuses existed. The primary emphasis, therefore, was on intense physical conditioning.

The platoon was given one month to ready themselves for their first jump on Aug. 16, 1940. During that month, the soldiers ran five to seven miles twice a day and conducted daily two-hour physical training sessions.

King remembers well his first jumps at Lawson Field, a barren stretch at that time.

On Aug. 16, 1940, the platoon members drew straws to determine the jumping order. When the first enlisted man froze in fear in the aircraft doorway on two consecutive attempts, King, "The Spartan," stepped forward to jump into history as the first enlisted paratrooper.

The parachute landing fall taught to today's Airborne students had not been finely defined at that point. According to King, soldiers were instructed instead to land with their feet apart and hips spread, tumbling to the right or left front after making contact with the ground. This, of course, is drastically different from today's instructions to, "keep your knees and feet together!"

Reflecting on the equipment used in the early 1940's, King recalls that the chute was packed in such a large container strapped to each man's chest that it often caused broken jaws when the soldier exited the aircraft. Static lines were used at that time as well as a 28-foot canopy.

As a master sergeant, King participated in two combat jumps in World War II and two in Korea. Comparing the June 6 jump into Normandy and the Sept. 17 jump into Holland as part of Operation Market Garden, King remembers that the two jumps were as different as "night and day."

The June 6 jump being at night and the Sept. 17 jump in the daylight.

Both were similar, however, in that each man was met by enemy gunfire upon exiting the aircraft. King said that when he jumped into Korea, he thought a soldier would have been lucky if he could have found a place to land between the hills.

With his 361st jump in August 1960, King ended his jumping career.

Today he is an inspiration to the Airborne students in training. He looks on the 507th PIR as his home and is a frequent visitor in the training areas.

To today's students, King advises, "Listen to everything that you're told, and you'll come out as a winner!" Some things never change.

Soldiers, brothers cause confusion at 29th Regiment

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment correspondent

At 6-feet, 4-inches tall, approximately 204 pounds, SFC Creech should be easy to find — right?

Wrong!

The 29th Infantry Regiment has two people who fit the description; both are in 1st Battalion, and, believe it or not, they are brothers.

SFC Garry and Donnie Creech are always mistaken for each other, they say.

Yet, the two look nothing alike except for their huge, hulk-like frames and warm personalities.

Garry says, "I always get calls from people at the Infantry School about commitments for vehicles.

"After they've talked a while, I interrupt and say, 'Oh, you're looking for someone else and point them to Donnie.'"

Likewise, Donnie says, "I can't go to Building 4 or to Harmony Church without someone approaching me with a handshake and a line that starts with, 'you remember me.'

"Garry was stationed here before," Donnie says, laughing. "All they remember is the name."

There was another time the Creech name got in the way of the brothers' identities.

The two were stationed together in Germany in the same company, a front-line unit, which was against Army policy, they say laughing.

"We had this ARF (Alert Reactionary Force) exercise where we had to gear up in full combat equipment, to include flack jacket, to guard sensitive compounds," Donnie says.

"We were in different squads and each squad had to pull guard with each individual only staying on duty not longer than a 24-hour period.

"My squad had it the day before Garry's. When Garry went up the next day to be checked by the major who had to clear everyone before they took their posts, he (the major) didn't let Garry through.

"He called for the platoon leader and chewed him out for sending the same soldier on within a 24-hour period.

"When the platoon leader tried to explain we were brothers, the major didn't believe him, saying 'there's no way two brothers are in the same combat unit.'

"They had to run me down for the major to see," Donnie says, laughing hysterically with his brother and friend.

The laughter fades to a snicker as Garry begins telling another story where they pulled a "fast one" on an old first sergeant.

Garry says, "Did you hear about the duty roster?"

No, what's that one about? (Prepare for more laughter.)

"We had this old first sergeant," he says.

"Yeah, good old 1st Sgt. Ebright," the brothers say together; both squirming to hold back a loud laugh.

"You see, if he (the first sergeant) just put Sgt. Creech on the duty roster, we could and did say, we didn't know which one he meant.

"He would identify us as 'Big Creech' and 'Little Creech' on the duty roster.

"And he called us in to his office and told us that he wasn't going to go through this job of arguing with us everytime. He said 'Big Creech' was Donnie and 'Little Creech' was me." At the time Donnie weighed approximately 220 pounds and Garry, was at 200.

Still another platoon sergeant who got them confused a lot identified them by their Military

Ordnance soldiers conquer fear, face death daily

SSgt. Harris A. Nelms, 89th Ordnance Detachment looks over a suspected live mine. It was later determined to be a training mine.

36th Engineer Group correspondent

"Tick, tick, tick" was the only sound the soldier could hear. But he could feel the beating of his heart, threatening to pound through his ribs.

He had to move slowly, that he knew. Any sudden movement or jolt and his life would be history. He walked slowly toward the door. He wondered if the sweat on his palms would cause him to drop the cargo that separated him from death.

The soldiers at the 89th Ordnance Detachment (Explosive Ordnance Disposal), 67th Maintenance Battalion face this type of situation almost daily.

The EOD soldier's mission is demanding. As testimony to the elite quality of the unit, there are only 11 soldiers assigned.

"Our situation is unique here because we are a tenant activity attached to the 67th Maintenance Battalion and the 507th EOD Control Center at Fort Gillem, Ga. We're at Fort Benning but we work for a guy in Atlanta," said Capt. Wayne King, detachment commander.

The EOD soldiers work for others as well, however.

One of the unit's primary missions is to support the U.S. Secret Service, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and the Georgia Bureau of Investigation.

Because the Secret Service has no bomb squad, EOD is one of its major sources of support.

"Wherever the president goes, we go. We also travel with anyone who gets Secret Service protection," King said.

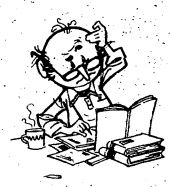
"With the election year coming up, I estimate our troops will be on the road about nine months this year," King said.

Although King is careful to safeguard EOD techniques, he is quick to cite examples of situations that justify hazardous duty pay.

"We never release details on how we deal with an item. The fewer folks know the safer we are. We never discuss procedures," King said.

Another mission, and an important one to Fort Benning, is for EOD to provide disposal for unserviceable ammunition.

During fiscal year 1985 EOD had more than 250 calls for ammunition-related instances, according to King.



"For example if someone fires a mortar round and it gets stuck in the tube, we get called out to handle it," he said.

King said some of the most memorable missions he's been on involved removing rounds from a 4.2 inch mortar. "We've been called for just about every type of ammunition that's used on post," King said.

EOD also assists the local law enforcement agencies. "We provide technical assistance to civilian law enforcement in my area of operation. That area consists of 44 counties in Georgia and five counties in Alabama," King said.

The Detachment assisted the Columbus Police Bomb Squad in removing a booby trap from a building recently.

"It takes nerves of steel and a lot of guts," said Sgt. William L. Carpenter, a technician.

Energy Update

by Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

As we approach the coming winter season, the subject of weatherproofing takes on special importance.

We have talked in the past about the many benefits of weatherproofing, including saving energy and providing a comfortable place to live and work.

This can be accomplished by caulking around windows and doors, placing a layer of polyethelene over windows, changing filters on heating systems and a number of other items.

There is a simple test you can use to determine how many air leaks you have in your home and where they are. This do-it-yourself detection system requires only a box fan and a stick of incense to help you smoke out some of the air leaks in your home or office. Here's the procedure:

- Tightly close all windows, doors and dampers. Tape over exhaust fans and turn off heating units.
- Set a large fan in a centrally located window (set to blow out of the house.) Use plastic sheets and duct tape to seal off the rest of the window area.
- Turn the fan on to begin "depressurizing" the building. The rapid exit of air will make any incoming drafts stronger and easier to find.
- Beginning with the outside walls of rooms, slowly pass a burning incense stick along the edges of windows, doors, baseboards, ceiling attics, doors and any corners or seams where two surfaces come together.
- Ask a friend to take notes while you look for blowing smoke. Where smoke from the incense stick simply hangs in the air, no leaks exist. But if smoke blows to one side or another, you have a leak.
- Do something about it. This is where weatherproofing will ensure energy savings and maximum comfort for you and your family.

The Self-Help Issue Point, located in Building 466, is the best place to begin preparations. A variety of materials are available to help you prepare your home or office for winter. Plastic and masking tape serves as a good temporary storm window. Door and window stripping will eliminate air infiltration and heat loss. Self Helpwill also provide you with caulking for exterior applications, but you must furnish the caulk gun.

If each of you would take advantage of this service and invest a little effort it will ensure that you and your family have a comfortable winter and also conserve energy.

For more information, call the Energy Office at 545-4652.

Even if the day is 5 or 10 years away, you need to plan for it today.

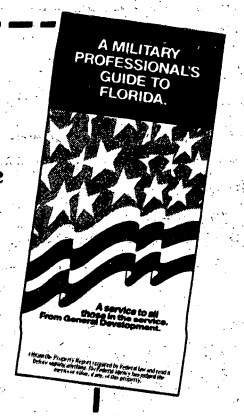
Time doesn't wait, and those military years pass quickly. Before you turn around, you'll be wanting to start living that life of leisure – and you'll want it ready and waiting for you.

That's why we suggest you begin to plan your tomorrows today.

General Development has been helping military families find their place in the sun for more than 30 years. And we can help you – just as we've done for over 12,000 service people.

How? By giving you the right questions to consider and the right answers to look for.

For example: 1) Do the people you're dealing with have special financing plans tailored to your military income? 2) How reliable are they? 3) What's their past record of performance? 4) Does the community you're interested in have full shopping, recreational and cultural facilities? 5) Is there a military base nearby? (Hospital, commissary and exchange privileges can mean big savings.) 6) How about location? Is it overcrowded or is it so isolated that you would feel shut off from civilization?



As you're well aware, military families have special needs. If you want to meet them in all the years to come, send us the coupon. And let us show you the way to a great Florida future.

On Oct. 7 the Bradley New Equipment Training Team, received new offices to come home to as 1st Platoon, Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion finished renovating two World War II buildings.

When 1st Platoon arrived, one building was an abandoned auditorium, and the second was an old arms room that was being used for storage.

1st Platoon took over the project from a Navy Seabee Unit that had been on post earlier this year as a part of their annual reserve training. The Seabees had just begun the project and 1st Platoon eagerly took over and saw it to completion.

The job entailed building some offices and tiling the floor in the auditorium and a total renovation of the storage building. They built walls, insulated the building to insure energy efficiency, installed a new ceiling, wired the building and tiled the floor. The only thing left to be done before the Bradley NETT team could move in was painting.

These types of construction projects provide valuable training to the platoon's 51 series MOSs, provided the unit's soldiers a real sense of accomplishment and gave the post a new facility to work in. — Francoise Gamble, 43rd Engineer Battalion.

Carpenters and electricians from 2nd Platoon, Company D, 43rd Engineer Battalion have completed an upgrade project to the Cub Scout Hut on Fort Benning.

At the request of Cubmaster, SSgt. Rob Wilkerson, the soldiers were dispatched to complete interior remodeling and wiring.

The work included the construction of storage areas, the completion of finished walls, installation of a dropped ceiling and the installation of windows.

According to Wilkerson, the Cub Scout pack cannot draw materials from the Self-Help Program and would not have the manpower to complete these tasks.

The soldiers provided a service to the cubs that can be appreciated each time the building is used.

The 43rd Engineer Battalion is the sponsoring unit for the pack. — Henry H. Himstedt, construction officer.

To many people on Fort Benning, Building 260 can be remembered as the Canvas Repair Shop. The building now houses the Maintenance Supply Division and the 43rd Engineer Battalion was called upon to renovate a portion of the warehouse into office space.

U. S. Army

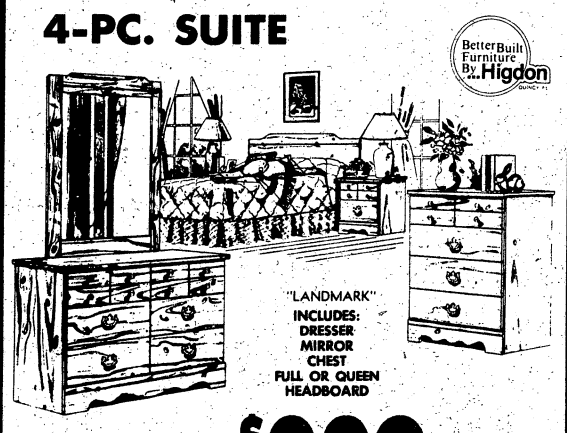
PFC John Sullivan installs a window at the Cub Scout Hut.

The idea for the offices was to consolidate the Supply Division and streamline the flow of repair parts. The engineers were tasked to renovate eight rooms into a modern office center that will house management personnel for the division.

Compay D was tasked to plan and execute the construction. When the planning was completed, it was estimated that 43 days would be needed to complete the renovation.

The Directorate of Logistics requested the project be completed by Oct. 1 to facilitate the installation of computers.

The project proved to be one of the largest of its type in terms of time and materials. SSgt. Ronald Hall, project non-commissioned oficer, quickly organized a small platoon of 10 soldiers into a productive workforce that was able to complete the plumbing, carpentry, and electrical requirements.



The project was also an excellent vehicle for soldiers in several military occupational specialities to hone their skills. Through the diligent effort of all the soldiers the project was closed on the required completion date. — by Henry Himstedt, 36th Engineer Group.

Infantry Board tankers practice MOS skills

by Shawn Bryson
The Bayonet staff writer

Anyone who has been a soldier for very long realizes the Army's need for soldiers familiar with and able to properly use their assigned weapons and equipment.

Soldiers are required to take several tests each year to satisfy the Army's interest in readiness. Such tests include qualification testing on weapons ranging from M16 rifles to tanks.

However, there are occasions when some soldiers do not get the opportunity to frequently train and qualify with their Military Occupational Specialty-related weapons because their primary mission does not afford them the time.

Such was the case with the Manned Evasive Target Tank crew of the U.S. Army Infantry Board.

According to Maj. George Bowling, chief of Heavy Weapons Test Division, the mission of the Infantry Board is to plan, conduct and report on operational tests of infantry-related weapons and equipment.

Bowling further explained that the primary mission of the METT section is to operate non-firing modified tanks that serve as targets for the firing of inert missles. The weapons used include Light Anti-tank Weapons, Tube-launched, Optically-tracked Wire command-linked and the Dragon.

Shortly after assuming command as president of the Infantry Board, Col. Harvey D. Watson expressd his concern for all soldiers assigned to the Infantry Board being able to maintain proficiency in their primary MOS while still supporting the Board's overall missions.

Watson directed that training programs be established to support this policy.

SFC Don Sanks, chief of the METT section, coordinated with Capt. Martain C. McCleary, commander of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade for the METT section to train and qualify with the tank crews from his company.

Sanks formed a tank crew out of the METT section with himself as the tank commander, Sgt. Billy C. Evans as the driver, Sgt. Timothy H. Keefer as the gunner and SP4 Robert D. Houser as the loader.

According to Sanks, the crew practiced for the first time together in an M60A3 tank Oct. 4 and 5 and qualified Oct. 8 and 9. The METT crew qualified with 15 other tank crews on the Tank Commander Practice Course, which offers 10 different live-fire engagements.

Despite the minimum training as a team, the METT section qualified as a superior tank crew with a score of 868 out of a possible 1,000 points.

Watson and Bowling said that they were proud of the METT team for attaining such a high level of proficiency in such a short period of time.

Both officers also expressed their admiration and gratitude for the outstanding cooperation and assistance provided the METT team by McCleary and his company.

Artillerymen zero in on targets

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Several Fort Benning field training areas were alive with the thunder of heavy artillery fire recently as the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery completed Army Readiness and Training Evaluation Program-Based qualification tests. The batteries performed nearly 60 live-fire missions during the three-day evaluation to successfully complete all the gunnery tasks.

"The purpose of the ABQT is to certify that we are able to do our part in the combined arms team of infantry and armor," said Capt. Tom Lynch, assistant Battalion operations officer.

Lynch expained that the accuracy with which the sections of the gunnery team perform their missions is a very important aspect of the evaluation.

"The forward observers must locate the targets report the data to the Fire Direction Center," he said. "The FDC must properly compile all the firing data so the gun crew can put 'steel on target' in a timely manner."

However, several other areas of the Battalion's operations, such as maintenance and the Tactical Operations Center are also evaluated.

"The evaluators rated the TOC's ability to plan and coordinate the command and control of each mission," Lynch said. "There must be consistant interaction between the Battalion headquarters staff sections in the TOC, and coordination with the batteries."

Nuclear, Biological and Chemical hazards were also put into the battle scenarios. Soldiers had to carry on wearing mission oriented protective posture gear and properly decontaminate their skin and equipment.

Maintenance was also an important part of completing the mission.

"We rolled out with 18 M155 howitzers and returned with 18 howitzers," Lynch said. "This shows the time and effort put in by all soldiers."

The exercise was supported by several other 197th Infantry Brigade elements. The 72nd Engi-

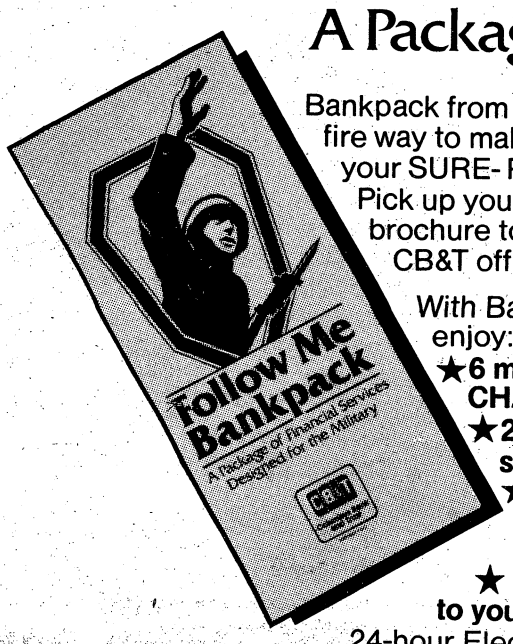
What Specialist Hales has been aiming for during his off-duty time.

Specialist Four Jason Hales has been aiming for the best. As a soldier, and as a student. He's an Infantryman at Fort Myer, Virginia, as well as a B.S. candidate in Mechanical Engineering at Park College. And he's just one of the over 100,000 soldiers who are building brighter, smarter futures through the Army's Reaching for Excellence education program.

It's a terrific opportunity that's available to each and every soldier, at virtually every Army post around the world. Reaching for Excellence covers everything from basic educational skills and technical skill development to undergraduate and graduate studies at the college level. And it's a chance to have at least 75% of your college tuition paid for by the Army.

Continuing your education is a commitment that's fully supported by the Army leadership. You can start taking advantage of this commitment at your post's Education Center. There, you'll find a professional education counselor who can help you set short- and long-range goals which fit both your educational and career plans.



Drop by your Education Center and find out, as Specialist Hales did, how you can turn some off-duty time into a lifetime of rewards. If you want to get ahead, now's the time to get started.

ARMY EDUCATION. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Engineer troops have 'fun in sun' at resort

Story and photos by Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Most soldiers would agree that Army life is not all fun and games. But for 11 soldiers stationed at the U.S. Army Recreation Center in Destin, Fla., there is a certain amount of fun in everyday duties.

The soldiers are from the 43rd Engineer Battalion and are assigned special duty at the center for six months.

"The 197th (Infantry Brigade) used to run it (the center) then the 36th Group got it," said SSgt. Larry W. Mabe, non-commissioned officer in charge.

The soldiers help run and maintain the center using engineer skills.

According to Mabe, the 11 soldiers who are trained as electricians, plumbers, carpenters, mason specialists and heavy equipment operators, have been able to assert their proficiency by maintaining the buildings and grounds of the center.

Since taking over the center the engineers have painted the cottages and picnic tables, repaired electrical problems and paved paths on the grounds.

"We take care of the general maintenance and upkeep of the place. Anything we can repair, we do," Mabe said.

Most of the repairs done to the 15-acre center are done from October to May because that's when business is the slowest.

"Our busiest time of the year is from May to October," said Sgt. David Munn, supervisor of the boat house and a heavy equipment operator.

Munn said that during the summer season the soldiers spend most of the day signing out equipment to the active duty military, Department of the Army civilians and military retirees who use the center.

According to manager Robert L. Walden an average of 150 people use the center each day during the season. Sometimes that figure can jump as high as 250 a day if one of those days is a holiday.

"We've been so busy that there were times when we rented out everything we have, like on Labor Day and the Fourth of July," Munn said.

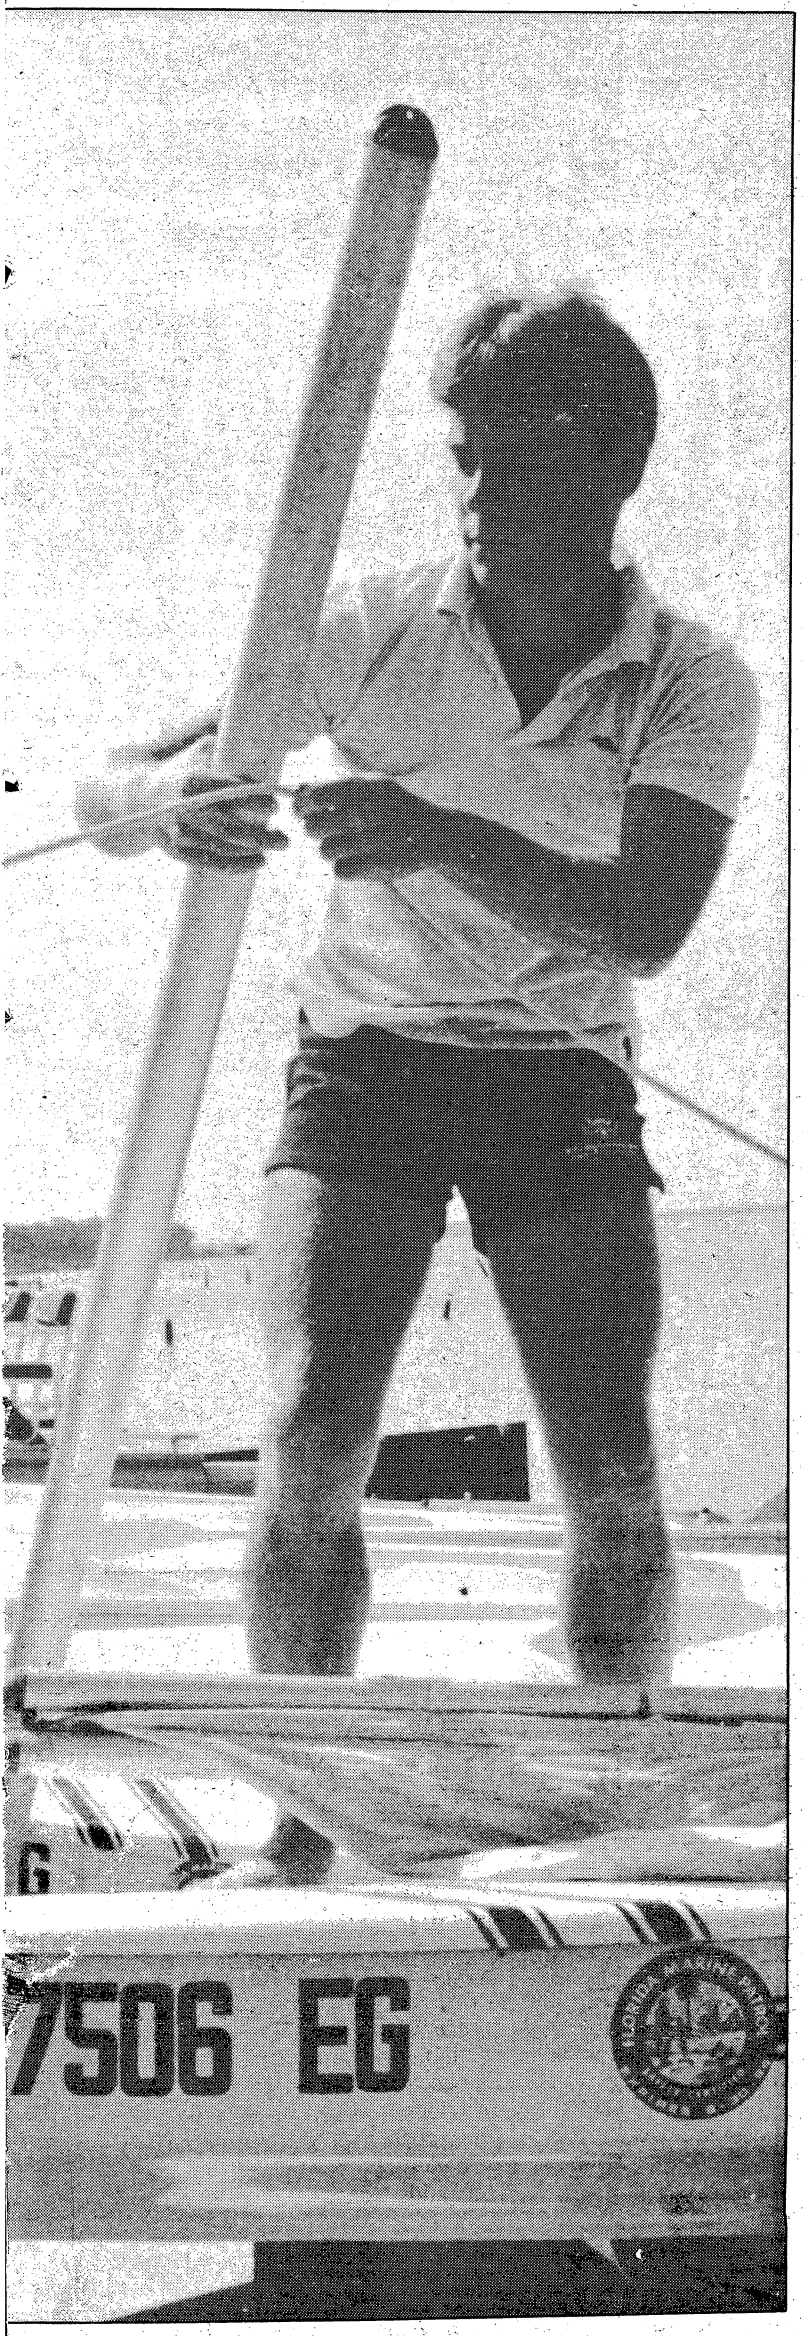
The Recreation Center caters to the military by setting rates according to the pay grades of their visitors. The center, nestled in a bay, has something to entertain everyone on vacation.

"We have sailboats, paddleboats, Jet Skis, a long pier to accommodate the fisherman, and a sandy beach," Munn said.

"We also have 63 campsites and 13 cabins," Walden said.

In spite of the work, the soldiers seemed to enjoy the job.

But how does a soldier manage to get such an illustrious assignment?



"By being a good soldier," Munn said. "My squad leader recommended me.

"I call it a paid vacation. You do your work but you still have a good time while doing it," Munn said.

The soldiers all agree that meeting the visitors is intersting.

"You get a chance to meet a lot of different people," Munn said. "That, by far, is the best part."

Off-duty

Directorate of Personnel, Community Activities

Officers' Club — Did you know that doing 500 sit-ups daily will not get rid of that flabby stomach, but can actually increase its size? You have to combine those sit-ups with some type of aerobic activity.

Join "Maria's Battle of the Bulge" aerobic exercise class for a fun way to obtain those results. For more information and a schedule of all classes, call Maria Ratio at 687-2616.

NCO Clubs — On Nov. 14, the Main NCO Club offers Latino Disco in the End of the Hall Lounge, Soul Disco in the Ballroom, and the Mitch Goodson Band in the Golden Touch Lounge.

The next two Saturday nights are Ribeye Steak Nights with trimmings at $5 each and the Urge Band in the Golden Touch Lounge.

Bingo is still played five times a week at your NCO clubs with $5,000 and $3,500 jackpots!

The Sand Hill NCO Club presents the Ultra Flash Review, a dance show, tomorrow night. There will be two shows, 8 to 10 p.m. and 10 to 12 p.m. Admission is only $1.

On Nov. 14 at 7:15 p.m. until 1 a.m. a cultural exchange (Discovery of Puerto Rico) will be presented by USARSA. Features are a good buffet and a Folkloric group, Le Lo Lai II. Music will be provided by "La Attraccion." Contact SFC Nieves, 545-4402 or 689-9574 for information on tickets.

Post Exchange News — The PX has increased personal check cashing limits — customers may now cash checks for up $150 daily, subject to availability of funds.

The new Army physical training uniform is now available in all CONUS military clothing sales stores and main stores supporting Army troops.

Available by late November at your PX, will be a $14.50 motorcycle vest which meets the Army's reflective material requirements — designed to be easily seen by motorists.

Your PX is offeing a new service for customers. Gift certificates are now available at cashier's cages in main stores. Certificates can be redeemed in any exchange retail facility — a great idea for farewell gifts or unit awards.

Kelley Hill Rec Center — The Center has several events coming up you won't want to miss. Tomorrow "The Cartel," a local computer user's group, will conduct a free computer show from 1 until 6 p.m. This fun, informative event will feature an assortment of computers running a variety of programs and games. The whole family will enjoy this afternoon.

A free seminar entitled "How the Tax Reform Law Affects You" is set for Nov. 13, at 6:30 p.m. The speaker will be Mrs. Lymon Clark, a specialist in preparing tax returns for active duty and retired personnel. She will discuss tax plans you need to make now in order to prepare for the coming year.

A question and answer session will follow the lecture portion of the seminar. This program will provide valuable information and guidance at a time when new tax laws are not clearly understood.

Spruce up your culinary arts before the big Thanksgiving Day feast by learning to bake your own French bread.

An instructor will bake bread for the class to sample at conclusion. This popular class is set for Nov. 19, at 6:30 p.m. Cost for the class is only $7, which includes ingredients for four loaves of bread. Deadline for registration is Nov. 16.

The monthly USCF Chess Tournament will be Nov. 22. This tournament is open to all USCF rated players.

Call the Kelley Hill Rec Center for details on these classes and other upcoming events. The Center is open Wednesday through Saturday noon until 9 p.m. and Sundays, from 10 a.m. until 7 p.m. The phone numbers are 544-3079 and 544-1721.

English classes challenge students

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Every Tuesday morning a group of people meets to embark on an adventure. Some are soldiers in fatigues, some are mothers with little children. Most are young, although there are a few who are older.

They come from Korea, Panama, Central and South America, Mexico and Germany. There are about 35 in all, about as different as they can be. They come seeking experience and knowledge in an exploration of English and the American way of life.

They participate in a program that has been offered at the USAIC Religious Education Center for more than 17 years.

Started by Marquerite Waldrop, former Director of Religious Education, the program helps people, usually dependents of service members, learn to speak English and to adapt to American culture.

"Our program answers an important need here at Fort Benning, given the diversity of our population. It helps people to feel more comfortable and to adjust more easily," said Evelyn Treude, who directs the course. The wife of a retired Army chaplain, she has been involved in it from the beginning.

"We split students up into small groups, each at one of five basic levels. A person can come into the program at any time. And all, no matter how much they know or don't know, will fit in somewhere," Mrs. Treude states.

"Each receives a workbook appropriate to his or her level, to continue learning between classes at home. One time we had a woman who brought her daughter and her mother with her. They probably did their homework very quickly."

A corp of volunteer teachers leads the students in their adventure.

Capt. Stewart Mosby is on loan from the Research and Analysis team of the U.S. Army Infantry School. "My commander, Lt. Col. Crowley, recognizes (the classes) as a reasonable service to God and country. He releases me to teach during this time. And I love it!"

Sibylle Cavanaugh is a relatively new teacher. "I'm really glad I am involved in this wonderful program. My students are eager to learn and so it is a pleasure to teach. It is very rewarding and serves a useful purpose. I've grown to love my people and really hate to see them move away."

Mrs. Treude points out that she needs more teachers. "If the teacher-student ratio gets too big, learning is hampered. The only qualifications required for teachers are patience and desire to help."

The course is free and open to everyone. On-site child care is provided by certified attendants.

For information on the English Language Class, call Bill Putman, director of Religious Education, at 545-2366. The group meets on Tuesdays from 9:30 a.m. until 11:30 a.m. at the Religious Education Center, Building 229.

Chaplain sees God as 'lover,' one who cares about all things

by Albert J. Hartlage
Main Post Catholic chaplain

When I think of God, I think of him as a God who saves. God is interested in us and cares about all the silly little incidentals of our lives. In other words, God is a lover.

When we love people, we are interested in everything about them. Even small things such as what they like to do, where they work and live and what they have for breakfast become significant.

God is like that for us. Even the little things no one else notices, he does. We are interesting to him. And nothing makes us feel less alone than another person's interest.

But God is more than interested; he saves. His love is always redeeming. One who really loves, loves us in spite of our imperfections and sins; and so God loves us. But he, like no other lover, can and will redeem our imperfections and sins. He is the one who is always there.

We have to believe that the only one who loves us cares; but there is often misunderstanding and doubt. Because God does not reveal himself as we would like him to, we interpret the perceived absence as real absence, as not caring.

It is our own complexity that makes God complex. He is simple and means every word he utters. The non-belief is in us. We project our own and others' failures to love selflessly onto him.

If, however, we live by faith our own lives become simple, as simple as the word that God has given us. And that word if love. "God is love," St. John says, "and those who abide in love abide in God and God in them. (1 John 4:16).

Chapel Briefs

Potluck supper to honor priest

The Military Council of Catholic Women are sponsoring a farewell potluck supper for Father Al Hartlage Nov. 15, following the 5 p.m. mass.

Each family is asked to bring a main dish and a salad or dessert with enough to feed themselves and three other people. The supper will be in The Infantry Center Chapel annex.

Film focuses on shaping values

Focus on the Family, a film series by Dr. James Dobson, is being offered at the Kelley Hill Chapel Wednesday from 10 to 11:30 a.m. and 7 to 8:30 p.m.

This week's film is titled "Shaping the Will Without Breaking the Spirit," which discusses six steps for values formation in children.

Childcare will be provided. For more information, call Chaplain Wisdom at 544-2712.

Chorale to perform Christmas cantata

The Columbus Civic Chorale will sing the Christmas cantata "Hodie" Thursday at 8 p.m.

The performance with orchestra, the Columbus Boy's Choir and soloists will take place at St. Luke United Methodist Church in Columbus.

Dr. William Bullock, director of the chorale, will conduct the work.

The chorale is also slated to perform the Faure "Requiem" in March. Season tickets good for both concerts are $8. General admission for each concert is $5, $2 for students.

For more information or tickets, call the post chaplain's office at 545-2288.

Council announces planning meeting

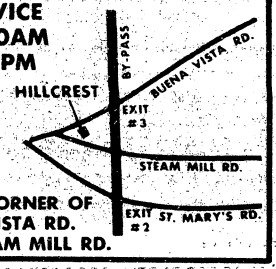
The Military Council of Catholic Women meets Nov. 7 for fellowship and to plan upcoming Advent projects.

Rosary begins at 9 a.m., followed by mass. Catch our enthusiasm — bring a friend.

For more information, call 545-1452.

Shroud of Turin subject of lecture

A lecture and slide series on the Shroud of Turin will be offered Nov. 16 and Dec. 7.



Russell Breault, who has spent 8 years investigating the shroud, will be guest lecturer.

Nov. 16, the lecture will begin at 7 p.m. in the 3rd Ranger Battalion classroom in Building 5,000. Dec. 7, the lecture starts at 7 p.m. in the Kelley Hill Chapel, Building 9023.

The lecture is free and the public is invited. For more information, call Chaplain Hash at 544-7473 or Chaplain Bjarnason at 544-3070.

Faith teachers attend conference

by David Murray
Faith School, Assistant Principal

A team of Faith Middle School teachers presented a workshop for the National Middle School Conference from Oct. 22 through 25. The conference, in Atlanta, attracted educators from all across the United States and from countries as far away as Japan. The theme for the national conference was "Inviting Success in Middle Schools."

Faith teachers, Atlena Bledsaw (social studies), Bob Greenfield (mathematics), Joann Mendenhall (science), and Anne Trawick (language arts), planned and presented a workshop that discussed how teaming is advantageous to both students and teachers.

The team also presented an interdisciplinary unit on the Greeks, covering mythology, culture, geometry, geeography, space,and space exploration. A slide how featuring students involved in an interdisciplinary unit highlighted the presentation. Using small-group work, the Faith team assisted conference participants in planning their own interdisciplinary units during the workshop.

Mrs. Trawick, team leader, stressed the importance of teaming in the basic middle school philosophy. "The hardest thing to do in teaching is to get students to understand interdisciplinary relationships," she said.

Teaming is an integral part of the middle school philosophy. The teaching teams are more than just a grouping of teachers. They correlate and plan interdisciplinary units to be used with their group of approximately 100 students. Teaming takes effort, work, planning, and cooperation.

Teachers and administrators from other Georgia school systems often visit Faith Middle School when developing and planning middle school programs for their own districts. The National Middle School Conference provided Faith teachers the opportunity to share their ideas with other educators.

Teen suicide subject of lecture

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools correspondent

Dr. David Goldstein, a staff psychologist at the Bradley Center Inc., was the featured speaker at the Don C. Faith Middle School Parent-Teacher Organization meeting Oct. 28.

More than 100 parents and teachers listened as Goldstein discussed teenage suicide, including the danger signals to look for and ways to communicate with young people who are exhibiting these behaviors.

Goldstein said that adolescents ordinarily do not have the vocabulary to adequately describe their feelings the way an adult probably could. Signals, therefore, are usually expressed through radical changes in the adolescent's behavior.

He explained that acting out behaviors involving drugs, sexual involvements, severe drops

School directorate shoots infantrymen into future

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Picture U.S. infantry soldiers going into battle in Gortex parkas, carrying new "Rambo" bayonets, and using a small arms weapon that fires three rounds at once with one trigger pull.

Bunker ahead? No problem; these infantrymen can just use an eight pound disposable tube that blows the bunker up at 600 meters.

Sound futuristic? Parts are. But the future is exactly where the Directorate of Combat Developments is leading the infantry.

"At DCD we develop the future of the infantry. We serve as the 'crystal ball' of the infantry, developing the future warfighting concepts, organizatins, weapons, vehicles, clothing and equipment in order for the infantry soldier to fight and win on the future battlefield," said Col. Thomas Seybold, chief of DCD.

"In recent years the infantry has gotten a lot of new and exciting equipment: the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, the Kevlar helmet, the Squad Automatic Weapon, the 60mm mortar, a new multi-purpose bayonet, a new squad radio and the MK19 automatic 40mm grenade launcher, to name a few," Seybold said.

The Directorate is currently working on an anti-armor effort to replace the Dragon medium anti-tank weapon, a new parachute that deploys earlier so jumpers can exit an airplane from lower altitudes. Also on the planning calendar is a new small arms strategy that is looking at exploding ammunition, salvo fire and caseless ammunition; the impact of directed energy on the future battlefield, the 120mm mortar, unmanned aerial vehicles that can look at the battlefield for commanders, field computers for enhanced battlefield management, the military motorcycle and all accessories and light vehicles for light units. Although numerous, these efforts are just a few of the many projects the directorate has undertaken.

"We influence about $550 million in research and development and billions of dollars in production programs in our attempt to continually improve the equipment for the infantry soldier," Seybold said.

"For the individual soldier, for example, we're developing the requirements for a lighter body armor and load-bearing equipment, lighter Nuclear, Biological, and Chemical (protective) suits, camouflage nets for the individual soldier, a foxhole cover, a better entrenching tool and eye protection."

DCD accomplishes its mission, according to Seybold, by using good, solid analysis coupled with sound military judgment and common sense. The goal is to develop infantry requirements that tell the rest of the Army and the industrial community what the "Queen of Battle" needs.

Seybold explained that this also involves careful planning and staff work each step of the way by the different project officers in DCD. From simulated "war games" to the evaluation of equipment in field conditions, all new systems are analyzed thoroughly.

"We ensure that a system can be operated and maintained by the soldier and can be supplied to the solider. This is tough sometimes, because there is a lot of pressure to hurry the equipment's development, production and procurement," Seybold said.

DCD is organized into five divisions, managing its workload through eight different task forces. These task forces are anti-armor, small arms, mobility, mortars, directed energy, clothing and individual equipment, battlefield management and survivability.

"While most of these task forces are self-explanatory, some may not be. Survivability is concerned with better tactics, deception, camouflage and smoke," Seybold explained.

"Directed energy addresses lasers and radio frequency technology, and deals with both the countermeasures to protect our soldiers and their equipment as well as weaponization.

"Battlefield management concerns systems that provide commanders and staffs enhanced command, control, communications and intelligence of the battlefield," he said.

"We've made a lot of progress in equipping the infantry soldier to fight and win on the future battlefield. We'll make a lot more," Seybold said.

Brothers

Occupational Specialties. Donnie says, "I was Scout Creech and Garry was Mortar Creech."

Incidentially, it was no coincidence that the two were stationed together in Germany. They planned it right down to the last detail, they say.

"Back then it was easy to divert people from their intended assignments. "Normally, a sergeant major would meet incoming personnel at the replacement company to look over their 201 files. If he wanted to, he could pull you to go some place else."

Donnie had already been in Germany for 24 months, and he had the word out to his commander that his brother was coming and they wanted to be stationed together.

As for their current assignment with the 29th, the two soldiers were satisfied being on the same post, but the Infantry Training Group — where Garry was assigned — combined with 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Incidentally, when Donnie and Garry are not stationed together, one or the other is stationed with yet another brother, Dennis, who is currently a staff sergeant at Fort Ord, Calif.

In all there are five Creech brothers — not to be confused with the Fighting Sullivans, they say.

Because their father, who fought with Patton during World War II, died when he was only 49, the Creech brothers had to fend for themselves, Garry says, with a sincere look on his face.

"We were so poor I use to lay in bed at night and see the stars through the walls," Garry says.

The Army was a "way out," he added, and "Donnie and Dennis followed suit, but they won't admit it," he says looking at Donnie.

For whatever reason, the Creech brothers have made another name for themselves at the 29th.

According to their first sergeants, they are well-liked, respected and proficient soldiers.

Suicide

in school grades, chronic withdrawal or defiance of authority will sometimes be seen. Sometimes the adolescent will seem to be making final plans by giving away items that have been treasured possessions.

While stating that mood swings and behavioral change are common to adolescents, Goldstein emphasized that the radical signals described might also be reflections of depression or of other conditions that require help that are unrelated to suicide.

Goldstein stressed the importance of active parental involvement with children. He said that though no parent wants to believe that their child might have suicidal tendencies, it is vital that parents recognize signals when they appear, react, and provide the help that is needed.

MACH doctor receives national research award

The Bayonet staff writer

Words like "caring, committed and professional" come to mind when meeting Dr. (Capt.) Ted Epperly.

The American Academy of Family Physicians recently recognized his commitment to the field when it presented Epperly its Family Practice Staff Research Award for Academic Physicians at the academy's annual conference in Washington, D.C. last month.

Dr. (Capt.) Ted Epperly discusses Travis Cobb's progress at the baby's six-months check up with mother, Pilar.

A family practice physician at Martin Army Community Hospital, the soft-spoken, amiable man becomes animated when he talks about his decision to specialize by "generalizing" in family practice.

"In medical school I was interested in everything — obstetrics, pediatrics, surgery — and I liked seeing people come back," he said.

"I guess you could say I liked seeing the whole forest instead of just separate trees. I liked the whole person, getting to know the whole family and following through on their care."

Family practice is the 1980s' version of what general practitioners used to be. Epperly said that in the 1950s, medicine became more specialized, but in the last 10 years, family practice has regained popularity. "Consumers realized they missed the doctor who saw the whole family and got to know them," he said.

Epperly believes "continuity of care" is even more important in the military health care system. "People tend to get lost in military medicine when they don't see the same physician each time for health care," he said.

Epperly is the primary care doctor for 145 Army families here, which makes him responsible for about 600 patients. While that sounds like a lot, he said the national average for a family practitioner is 700 families.

"There's a lot of strength in taking care of the whole family," he said. "If you have a husband who is diabetic, his wife might get migraines when her husband's not doing well, and this could also have something to do with their son's alcohol problem. The health of the family is interrelated in many ways."

Epperly was one of 25 finalists who presented research papers at the conference, and his paper titled "The Usefulness of Needle Aspirations in the Management of Cellulitis" was chosen for the top award.

The award is given to a family practice physician who works with a teaching program.

His research looked at whether or not it is necessary to obtain specimens and do cultures on acute skin infections.

"It's been taught in medical school that you order a culture to determine what organism is causing the infection, so you'll know which antibotic to prescribe," he explained.

"But obtaining a specimen by needle aspiration is a painful procedure for the patient, so I wanted to find out if the procedure was really necessary."

He looked at 103 patients with acute skin infections and tested all of them to find out what was causing their infections. "I found out that the majority of patients were infected with staph or strep organisms. We're taught in medical school to expect in such cases. Only 9 percent of the patients tested had a bacterial infection that would not respond to conventional treatment."

His research proved statistically that a doctor should go ahead and treat the patient with the usual antibotics that kill staph and strep, and if the infection doesn't respond, then do a culture to isolate the bacteria.

"The whole purpose of the study was to save these patients unnecessary pain and to show that this procedure is not necessary in the majority of skin infections," he said. "As doctors we want to do something for our patients, and we need to have some research to base our decisions on. I guess this was one reason the paper was so well received."

Epperly earned a bachelor's degree in biology from Utah State University in 1976, and attended medical school at the University of Washington in Seattle, where he graduated in 1980. He completed his three-year family practice residency at Madigan Army Medical Center at Fort Lewis, Wash.

He came to Fort Benning in July 1983 and said he likes the Army and plans to continue practicing Army medicine. "The staff here encourages research and professional development," he said, "And you never get bored in family practice, because you see a wide variety of problems."

Santa's Castle brings season's joy to needy

The Bayonet staff writer

With Halloween in the bag and Thanksgiving straight ahead, the holiday season is rapidly picking up speed.

It seems that shoppers are getting an early start this year in preparation for Christmas, which is right around the corner.

Unfortunately, Christmas is not a joyous occasion for all soldiers on Fort Benning. Some work very hard for a living and are able to make ends meet: But, many times, they just don't have much left over for extras, like Christmas gifts.

It was for this reason that Santa's Castle was organized in June, according to Karen Chinen of the Officers' Wive's Club.

Before Santa's Castle became a reality, the Fort Benning Fire Department handled a similar program called Toys for Tots.

Santa's Castle is a non-profit organization made up of volunteers. Some of the helpers are Army wives, retired personnel, soldiers and civilians. It was originally funded by the OWC from the Medical Department Activity, Dental Activity and a Fourth of July fund raiser.

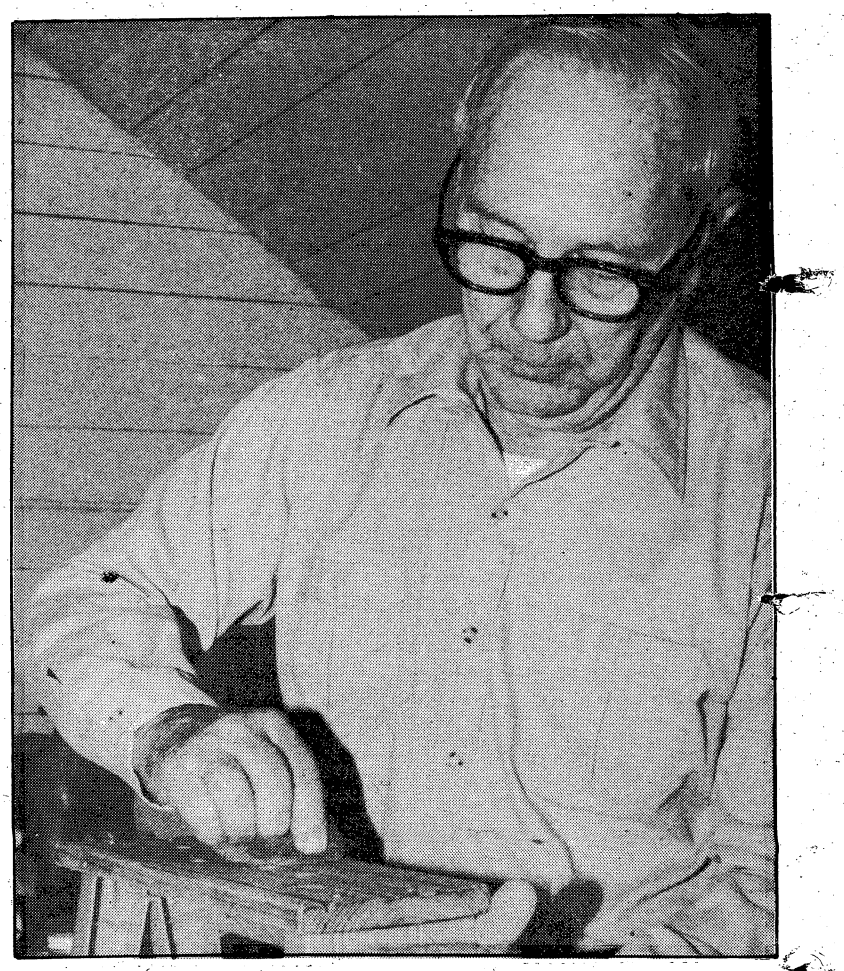
The Castle workers collect used toys, clean and repair them and redistribute them to needy military families for Christmas, Mrs. Chinen said.

"When Toys for Tots was still around the toys only reached the children on post," she said. "Our new program is designed to help all needy military families both on and off post."

"The volunteers and donators have been very cooperative and have helped to make Santa's Castle a great success so far," Mrs. Chinen said.

The Association of the United States Army, St. Ann's School in Columbus, the OWC Thrift Shop and the Fire Department have all given time and efforts generously she said.

"We presently have more than 3,000 toys ready for distribution, including dolls, bicycles, electric games and all kinds of other toys," Mrs. Chinen said.



"These toys are not in any way junk. They are good, clean toys that have been donated from Army families who prefered the toys stay in the Army family."

According to Mrs. Chinen, all first sergeants on Fort Benning recieved letters requesting recommendations for Santa's Castle services this Christmas. Those families that have been recommended will also recieve a letter with information concerning the times of distribution. The toys will be divided equally among those children whose families participate this year.

"We will have an open house Nov. 14 from 4 to 6 p.m. and everyone is invited to come see what we have here," Mrs. Chinen said.

According to Diane Gravatt, also from the OWC, many volunteers are still needed, including mechanics, carpenters, electicians, and seamstresses.

Santa's Castle is in Splinter Village and is open Monday, Tuesday and Thursday each week from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. For more information call 545-1233.

Milton Crabtree, retired officer, puts the finishing touches on a stool that will go to a needy child this Christmas.

'Dogs' advance to championships

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

In the 36th Engineer Group Football Championships, the Company C Dogs bit first and hardest, training the 598th Maintenance Company team in an 12-8 hitting seminar.

The Co. C team has progressed to the post-level competition for three consecutive years, narrowly dropping the championship to the Headquarters and Headquarters team of 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry in a 7-6 battle, which was won in overtime.

The two 36th Engineer Group teams went into the playoffs with 11 wins in their favor, with the Charlie Dogs being undefeated while the 598th suffered two season defeats.

With both teams fired up for the contest, the Dogs continually barked their motto—"We shall not be defeated, not be defeated."

The Dogs hit the scoreboard first when quarterback Lawerence Matthews connected on a 42-yard pass play to Kenneth Taylor, but were unable to score the extra point.

A shovel pass on a punt return kicked the doors in for the Dogs when Ivory Melton zipped 70 yards for the touchdown.

The Charlie Dogs met the challenge in the second half with the defensive secondary, killing the 598th's passing game.

Early in the second half Tommy High pulled in an interception on the 10-yard line, to stop an HHC drive.

The team played hard for the victory, reflecting on last year's championships.

"Last year we knocked on the door. This year we will kick it in," said High.

Though the Dogs went on to hold the victory, claiming the 36th Group championship title, both teams advanced to the post level competition which began last night.

The 1986 U. S. Army Infantry Center Championships will continue through Nov. 18 at Gowdy Field and Doughboy Stadium with kickoff beginning at 5:30 p.m. each evening.

There will be 15 teams in the trenches, digging for the championship victory.

Those represented in the playoffs are:

Ruggers down opponents, win at Peachtree Tourney

Fort Benning Flyers

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby Team travelled to Atlanta last weekend and came home with top honors in the Class B division of the Peachtree Rugby Tournament.

The Flyers faced some tough competition on the way to the championship. The first match on Saturday had the Benning squad playing a hard-hitting High Country team from Atlanta.

The Flyers struck first as Norm Dodson picked up a loose ball and raced 30 meters for a score. Neil Schule added the two point conversion putting Benning ahead 6-0.

High Country struck quick in the second half and trailed 6-4 on an unconverted try. The Flyers fought back as Schule put Benning up 9-4 on a penalty kick. High Country kept the pressure on by scoring four more points, closing the gap to 9-8. It was not enough as Schule responded to the challenge by making a 30-meter penalty kick making the final score 12-8, Flyers.

Picking up where they left off Saturday the Flyers put the pressure on the Atlanta Renegades early as Sammy Liusamoa took a Neil Schule pass for a score which Schule converted for a 6-0 lead. The Renegades were out hustled and out muscled by the Benning squad for most of the match.

The next score came from a set scrum. Roy Krueger won the ball from Atlanta and Steve Gouthro started the attack. After running into opposition Gouthro pitched inside to Steve Tennant who in turn tossed the ball to Bob Muller who crashed through three opponents for the score. Schule missed the conversion and the half ended 10-0 Benning.

The Renegades came out strong in the second half but could only manage three points.

Packers, Redskins, Termite Bears win

Shut-outs tell the story of the weekend's play in the Youth Activities Football League.

The Packers defined rushing as Lovell Trotter and Charles Pittman, who led them to a 12-0 blitz of the Bears, each carrying the ball for more than 100 yards.

The Bears could not get started due to the long punting of John "Little John" Allen.

The Packer defense continues to shutdown opponents with the outstanding play of Kevis Rashaad and Harlan Davis.

Plagued by injuries, the Redskins offense and the inspired defense came alive to defeat the Broncos 16-0.

Hodgepodge platoon claims victory in Museum Run

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The recent National Infantry Museum Run brought formations to the streets with hopes of downing the defending champions in the unit category.

The 1st Infantry Training Brigade's Headquarters Company won the event last year.

The Army Training Center's two training brigades provided more than 2,500 soldiers in a field of just over 4,000 to dominate the team competition.

But, it was a 64-man platoon, made up of runners from a variety of units that captured the Fort Benning Rotating Award.

"We had runners of all grades to participate," said Russell Medina, 1st ITB coach. "These runners, ranking from (private to lieutenant colonel) are talented and most are experienced in cross country or track and field," he said.

Though most of the runners were experienced, the ITB concept did not exclude the novice.

"If a soldier showed the desire to compete, that soldier became a team runner, possessing the team spirit needed to finish strong," said Medina.

Though unable to break the formation five-mile record of 30:28, set by the 1st ITB team, the defending champions came together at the finish at 33:25.

The 1st ITB's training provided the come-together attitude.

"In that there are a lot of variables in team competition, such as, running around formations, we worked to gain the most efficient recovery possible, being able to pick up the pace and slow it down while keeping the formation intact," Medina explained.

two touchdowns, punished Bronco defensive players at the line of scrimmage.

Quarterback Steve Murrell connected with Charlie Bolderphini for 25 yards and Rashaad Dobbs for 35 yards to ignite the Redskins in the second half.

Relentless defensive pursuit and wet field conditions caused 13 fumbles on both sides.

Ask the 'judge'

Editor's note: These are questions the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be considered a substitute for advice from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

Legal Assistance

Q. I bought a used car for my wife a couple of months ago. After I negotiated the price with the salesman, I agreed to finance the car through the used car dealer. We settled on a 12 percent interest rate.

When we signed the installment sales contract the printed interest rate was 21 percent, not 12 percent. When we asked the dealer about this, he stated "Don't worry about it — it's 12 percent." A few months later the bank informed me that it was, in fact, 21 percent. What can I do?

A. The bank, as you imply, has probably purchased the loan from the car company at a set rate. The words "don't worry about it" most of the time mean you should.

If the numbers don't match, as you think they should, there probably is a problem. If there is confusion concerning the terms of the contract, you should have either the terms written in "plain English" or don't sign the contract.

In this particular case, it appears that you are a victim of consumer fraud. Help may be available form either a private attorney instituting a civil suit or by contacting the Consumer Protection Division of your state's Office of the Attorney General. In Alabama the address is 560 South McDonough St., Montgomery, Al. 36104, phone (205) 832-5936. In Georgia the address is 210 State Judicial Building, Atlanta, Ga. 30334, phone (404) 656-3323.

Q. I just moved into the Fort Benning area. Is there any way to find out the reputation of a particular business in Columbus?

A. The Better Business Bureau office serving West Georgia and East Alabama is the office to contact.

The BBB has telephone service representatives who have reports on several thousand firms in their computer. If they don't have a report on a particular business they will send the company a business information form and contct you as soon as the company replies.

If the company is out of the area, the BBB can attempt to develop information for you or contact directly for you the BBB that covers the area where the firm is located. The BBB is located at No. 8, 13th Street, Columbus, Ga. 31901. The telephone number is 324-0712.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

One of the most significant words in our daily lives is security. No matter what situation you find yourself in, security is vitally involved. If we routinely followed good security practices, many criminal acts could be foiled in the attempt.

In a larceny of private property, to cite a common crime, the first question that comes to mind is, "Was the property really secured?"

In seven out of 10 cases, the answer to this question would have to be, "No." Even in incidents where the property was secured, we should consider the extent of that security.

Example: Someone breaks into your home and removes a gold watch from the top of your dresser. The doors and windows of your house were all locked. But, could you not have stored your valuable jewelry in a safer, less conspicuous place?

Also, were high-value items marked with a serial number or your social security number? If so, did you remember to make a written record of it and keep it in another protected location for ready reference when needed.

There is no 100 percent foolproof method for securing your home or your valuables; however, the following tips can prove to be very helpful in reducing crimes around the home.

- Mark all valuable property.
- Maintain a list of property serial numbers in a safe place.
- Ensure doors and windows are secured prior to leaving home or retiring for the night.
- Check the perimeter of your home for security before the hours of darkness.
- Be a good observer.
- Report all unusual incidents to the Fort Benning Military Police at 545-5222.

The military police are here to help you. If you have a question or problem concerning the security of your home or property, call the Crime Prevention and Physical Security Office at 545-7115/7154.

Won't you do your part to help make Fort Bening a safer place to live and work?

Upfront

Heating season officially begins

Heating season officially began yesterday, and residents are now authorized to turn on their heating units.

If you need assistance, the Work Order Section will accept requests between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Call 545-2135.

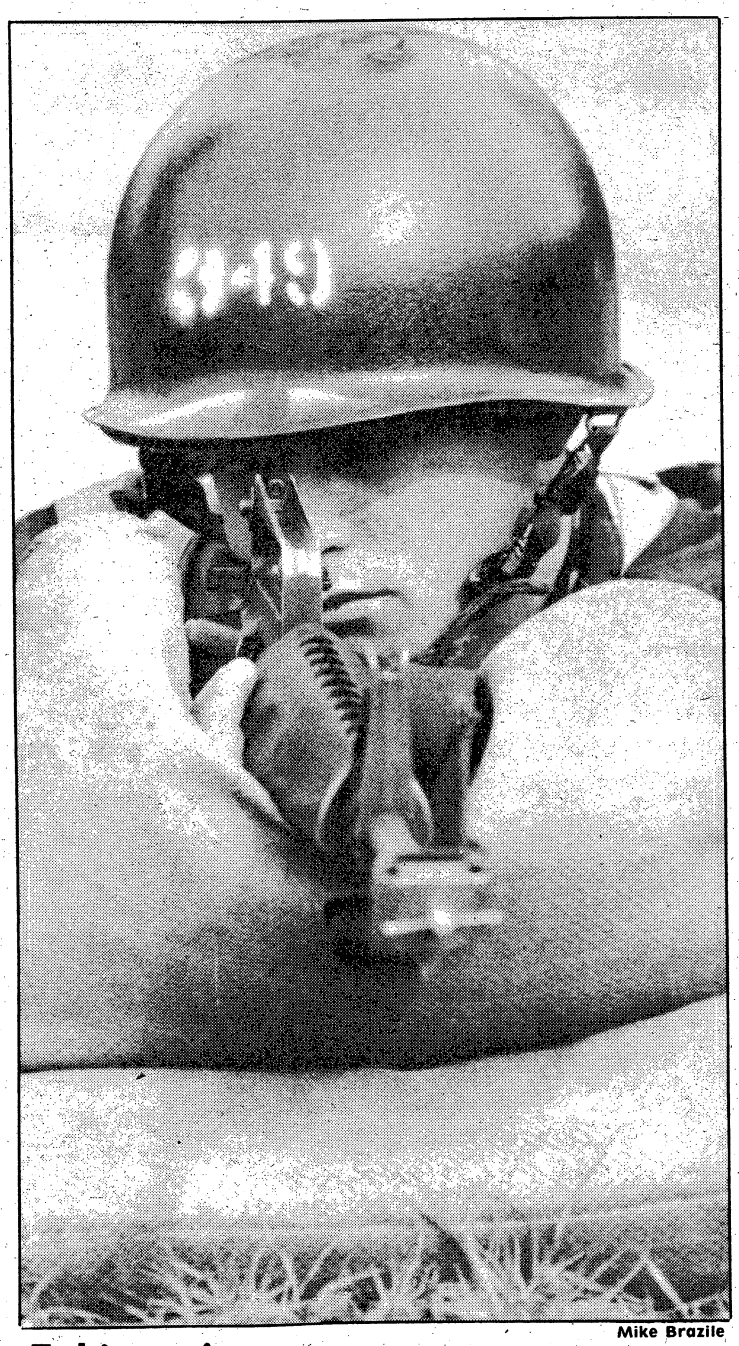
Medical facilities will receive first priority for turn on of heating systems, followed by family housing, troop billets, administrative and public buildings.

CFC nearing goal

As of Monday, the Combined Federal Campaign had received $353,021.01 from Fort Benning contributors.

Maureen Brown, a worker in the CFC office on post, said that represents donations given by 11,846 workers.

The campaign ends Nov. 31.



Parking lot to close

The parking lot around Building 35 and surrounding buildings will be closed Nov. 25.

Alternate parking will be available at the Main Post Theater and Brown Hall.

Any vehicles parked around Building 35 that day will be towed away.

If you have any questions about this, call the Provost Marshal Operations Section at 545-4412 or 545-2942.

Taking aim

Pvt. 1 Ronald Strickland peers down the barrel of his rifle during a recent training session at Malone No. 8. A story and more photographs of Strickland's comrades from Company E, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade are on pages 20 and 21.

Great Army Smokeout calls soldiers to action

□ Related stories, pages 2, 3

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers are being encouraged to throw their cigarettes away for a day Thursday, and take part in the Great Army Smokeout.

Thursday is the 10th anniversary of the American Cancer Society's Great American Smokeout, and the Army is picking up on the day as part of its antitobacco use campaign.

On "Smokeout Day," smokers agree to give up cigarettes for at least 24 hours.

Yvonne Linsenbigler, civilian program coordinator for the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program, said Fort Benning's emphasis will be on the Adopt-a-Smoker program.

"The American Cancer Society is providing stop-smoking kits to us, which volunteers will hand out at several locations on post," she said.

Tables will be set up Wednesday and Thursday in the ADAPCP office in Building 2215, outside the main post exchange and in the main lobby at Martin Army Community Hospital.

"The information will explain how you 'adopt' a smoker and provide tips on how to stop smoking," Linsenbigler said.

At the hospital location, workers will conduct lung capacity tests to show smokers the damage smoking is doing to their lungs, she explained.

On Smokeout Day, everyone tries to be especially kind to smokers who are trying to quit. It's a time of light-hearted fun. Preaching and scolding are taboo.

Never-smokers or ex-smoke who are "adopting" curre smokers for the day should offe moral support, encouragemer and incentives to help get the through the day — and hopefull longer.

The following are suggestior on how you can help a smoke kick the habit.

- Show that you care — yo have a vested interest in keepin your adoptee in good health.
- Provide him or her with survival kit of low-calorie nibble — carrots and celery, sticks c cinnamon, sugarless gum, etc.
- Don't nag or threaten!
- Try to make yourself avai able either in person or by tel phone for the entire day.
- Take your adoptee out fc breakfast or lunch, or promise special dinner at his o · her favo ite restaurant.
- Give him a specia Smokeou "quitter's sticker" to wear.
- Go public with your adoptior Enlist the help of others in givin moral support to your adoptee.
- Especially if you're a never smoker, consider giving up some thing for the day too, such a candy, desserts, or coffee.
- If you're an ex-smoker, shar your experiences rather than lec turing on the dangers of smoking What worked for you may wor for others.
- Schedule an evening activit that minimizes the temptation t smoke. See a movie in a theate that prohobits smoking in at leas one section, or try a strenuou activity like racquetball, bowlin or a swim at the local pool. O plan a party with fellow adopter and their "foundlings."

People pondering the paper will find a plethora of pertinent pieces pertaining to persisting in the non-smoking plan. That is to say, we are offering up a variety of stories this week on the advantages of joining in the Great Army Smokeout set for Thursday.

The Army's campaign parallels the American Cancer Society's 10th Anniversary Great American Smokeout. The campaign is an all-out effort by the Society and the Army to get people to "kick the habit" for one day, hoping it may lead to total abstention.

At Fort Benning the thrust of the smokeout is the Adopt-a-Smoker program. This can be helpful if the smoker being adopted really wants to quit. The idea is for the person doing the adopting to offer moral support in the smoker's effort to give up the habit for a day.

The important issue here is that the smoker must want to stop.

The American Cancer Society, the Surgeon General, the local Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Program and any other number of well-meaning organizations can publish enough statistics on the dangers of smoking to fill volumes. However, unless he really wants to stop, the information blitzes and media campaigns and smokeouts only serve to make the smoker feel bad about himself.

As a non-smoker, I become unbearable when I begin vocalizing my opinions of smokers and "the filthy habit." There are times when I believe the whole world smokes and I'm forced to live with that.

In a crowded store, someone lights up and the smoke fills my nostrils. Even though I always try to sit in the "No-smoking" section of a restaurant, it seems I always end up in close proximity to the smokers. Since I have never smoked, I have a difficult time understanding why these people would subject themselves and others around them to such a disgusting and harmful activity.

However, a co-worker recently provided a bit of insight on the subject of quitting. This particular woman was forced to give up smoking because of health reasons. It has been months since she indulged and said she is fortunate not to crave cigarettes.

It isn't so easy for most, she said. She understands how difficult it can be to change age-old habits and she said she will never become a "preaching ex-smoker." For years her friends told her she "had to quit." She said the more well-meaning friends badgered her, the worse she felt about herself and the more she wanted and needed to smoke. Human nature comes through in situations such as this and the need to rebel manifests itself.

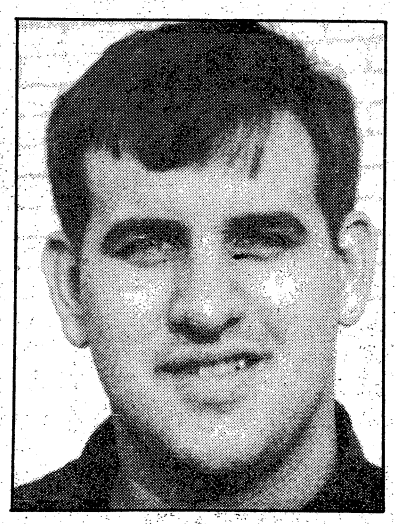
Consequently, she has vowed to let her smoking friends enjoy themselves. She never comments when people smoke around her and she is certainly aware of the dangers involved in smoking.

Her story made me realize that, in my efforts to make others, family members and co-workers, feel bad about smoking and therefore give it up, I was really only adding to their low self-esteems and encouraging them to smoke more.

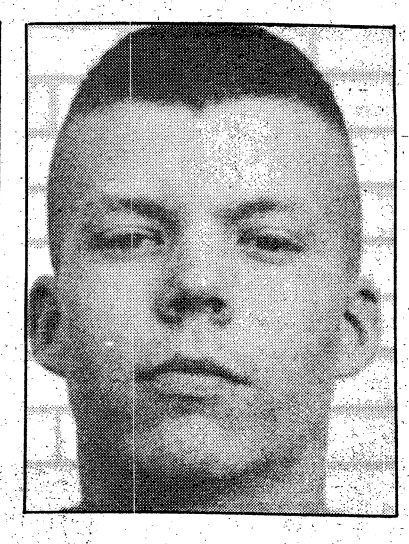
I still don't like it when I have to endure a smoke-filled room or choke on second-hand smoke. But, I can now see the importance of letting someone make their own decision. I still have trouble holding back my caustic comments when I'm exposed to a smoker's habit, but I'm trying.

My husband, who has been smoking for years and years and years, appreciates my newfound consideration. I really want him to quit, however, so it is easier for me to bite my tongue and say nothing. I just hope he comes around soon and realizes that it has to be his decision and makes that decision — difficult as it may be.

Various voices



Thursday has been named the Great Army Smokeout in conjunction with the American Cancer Society's Great American Smokeout. All over the Army and country, people will "kick the habit" for the day. What benefits do you see in stopping smoking for one day?



SFC Porter Angel, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "It seems to me if they stopped for one day they could stop for longer than that. I think it's a great idea.

Sharon Thompson, family member — "I don't think it's going to do anything. People will just turn around and smoke more the next day to make up for it."

PFC John Arnold, Company E, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade — "I think it would be healthy and people would save money. Also it would improve the health of other people who are harmed by second-hand smoke. My father tried to quit smoking for one day and he hasn't smoked since."

PFC Ian Fitzgerald, 75th Ranger Regiment — "The only benefit I can see is if even a small percentage of people quit smoking for good, then it's worth it.

PFC John Crisp, Martin Army Community Hospital — "I think it might prove a point to some people. If they can quit for a whole day, they might be able to quit for good."

Tobacco smoke full of carcinogens, Surgeon General tells Congress

by Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

A "Russian volunteer" is anyone but a Russian or a volunteer. In fact, it's a term used to describe somebody involuntarily thrown "into the breach" of a particularly difficult situation.

If you're a smoker, think of your family and co-workers — and your unborn child if you are pregnant — as "Russian volunteers." And while it may not hurt them quite as much as it hurts you, your smoking isn't doing them any good.

When a smoker inhales, researchers calculate that two-thirds of the smoke from the burning cigarette goes into the environment as sidestream smoke. Non-smokers are exposed to mainstream smoke — the smoke the smoker inhales — when he exhales it. When the smoker leaves the cigarette in the ashtray, it all goes into the air.

Surgeon General of the United States Dr. C. Everett Koop recently told Congress that of the 4,000 known ingredients of tobacco smoke, five dozen are known carcinogens.

"Many of these constituents are found in sidestream smoke in greater concentrations than in mainstream smoke. Tar, the fraction of tobacco smoke that is usually associated with the carcinogenic process, is 70 percent higher in sidestream smoke than in mainstream smoke. Carbon monoxide is 2.5 times greater, ammonia is 73 times greater, benzopyrene is 3.4 times greater and nicotine is 2.7 times greater in sidestream than in mainstream smoke," he said.

"Even if the lower figure is accepted, exposure to ambient tobacco smoke represents more cancer deaths annually than any agent currently regulated by the Environmental Protection Agency," he said.

Koop said researchers now believe that there is a link between passive smoking and heart disease. He said several studies have shown a significant correlation between heart disease in non-smoking wives and their husband's smoking.

And in a 1984 report, the surgeon general stated that children of smoking parents have an increased prevalence of respiratory symptoms, including bronchitis and pneumonia.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY
Adopt a Smoker

Adoption Papers

I, _____, as a nonsmoker, will take it upon myself to help _____ on the path to smokelessness. For my part I will provide you with constant encouragement, fruit and peanuts if need be, and a shoulder to cry on.

It will be expected that _____ will assist me by adhering to the following suggestions:

1. Hide cigarettes, ashtrays, lighters and matches.
2. Tell all your friends that you have been adopted and will not smoke on the day of the Great American Smokeout (GAS), the third Thursday in November.
3. Call on your foster nonsmoker (me!) in times of weakness.
4. Refrain from frequenting smoke filled rooms.
5. Repeat to yourself over and over "not smoking is a GAS."

I, _____, the foster nonsmoker will try to cajole the aforementioned smoker to continue on the road to smokelessness following the Great American Smokeout, but this formal arrangement will conclude 24 hours after it began.

Signed: _____ (nonsmoker) Signed: _____ (temporary smoker) Date: _____

Adoption papers will be available from the Fort Benning Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program in Building 2215 for people who want to participate in the Great Army Smokeout Nov. 20.

Cancer Society offers 'quit tips'

American Cancer Society

Now that you've decided to quit smoking, there are several things you can do to help yourself stick to your decision.

Throw out all cigarettes by breaking them in half and wetting them down. Clean out all ashtrays in your home, office or car and put them away. Discard matches and hide or give away lighters.

When the urge to smoke hits, take a deep breath. Hold it a second, then release it very, very slowly. Taking deep, rhythmic breaths is similar to smoking, only you'll inhale clean air, not poisonous gases.

Exercise to help relieve tension. Climb stairs rather than take the elevator, park the car a block or two from your destination and walk the rest of the way. At home, practice touching your toes, jog in place, do jumping jacks.

When tempted to reach for a cigarette, think of a negative image about smoking. Select your worst memory connected with the habit — the time you burned a hole in your suit or when you were left completely breathless running for a bus that pulled away. Imagine this experience for 15 seconds whenever the urge occurs.

Reward yourself with oral substitutes in the same way you may have used cigarettes. Good examples are sugarless gum, lemon drops, pumpkin or sunflower seeds, apple slices, carrot sticks, unbuttered popcorn and stick cinnamon.

Eat three or more small meals. This maintains constant blood sugar levels, helping to prevent urges to smoke. Avoid sugar-laden foods and spicy items that can trigger a desire for cigarettes.

Scramble up your day and change habits connected with smoking. Drive a different route to work; eat lunch in a new place; leave the "scene of an urge." At home, avoid your "smoking chair" after dinner, reach for gum rather than a cigarette when answering the phone.

Cleanse your body of nicotine. Drink liquids — lots of them. Six to eight glasses of water a day, herbal teas, fruit juices and caffeine-free soft drinks all fit the bill. Pass up coffee, caffeinated soft drinks and alcohol, as they can increase your urge to smoke.

Keep your hands — and mind — busy. Work on a crossword puzzle, knit a sweater, balance your checkbook, fix something around the house, or shampoo the dog.

Armor Battalion wins Surgeon's Award for outstanding service two years running

by Bryan Green and Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondents

The Battalion Aid Station of the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, recently won the 197th Infantry Brigade Surgeon's Award. The armor battalion medical aid station took top honors for the second consecutive period following inspections of the five medical sections within the Brigade.

"This award is designed to help each battalion aid station and medical platoon be proficient in training, health care and administrative tasks," said Capt. Edward Tappel, 197th Infantry Brigade surgeon. "They have to keep soldiers healthy and deployable."

The semi-annual award was instituted in 1986 by the Brigade surgeon to recognize the medical section that demonstrates excellence in all areas, from medical service to patient care.

SFC David Williams, 2-69th Armor medical platoon sergeant, believes there are a variety of reasons for his platoon's success.

"We follow a program here that stresses on-the-job training, hands-on classroom instruction and self-evaluations," Williams said.

Each platoon is evaluated on its performance in the garrison environment and field operations.

The garrison evaluation was made up of inspections of such things as the immunization program, hearing conservation program, and the over-40 physical training program.

Other areas that were inspected included outpatient health records, field sanitation teams, equipment readiness and medical alert warning tags.

"Keeping track of each soldier in these programs along with their progress is a difficult and never-ending job," Williams said.

"These programs are difficult to keep current, but we use a daily, monthly and quarterly checking system. When a soldier reports for sick call, not only do we treat him for his present condition, but we also screen his entire medical file and update."

"In addition," Williams said, "all records are screened at least once every 90 days. That way we keep soldiers up-to-date on such things as immunizations, profiles and physicals.

Medical field operations are inspected when the aid station moves out to the field with the combat elements of the battalion.

Other areas, such as maintenance, accountability of the platoon's equipment and other mission essential training are also subject to inspection.

"The award has brought renewed command emphasis on the importance of medical readiness," said Sgt. Heywood Thrash, a 2-69th Armor medic. "This has brought the level of medical readiness to new heights.

The trophy is a reproduction of the Combat Medic Memorial at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, which honors the spirit, courage and determination of the combat medic — "the savers of life on the battlefield."

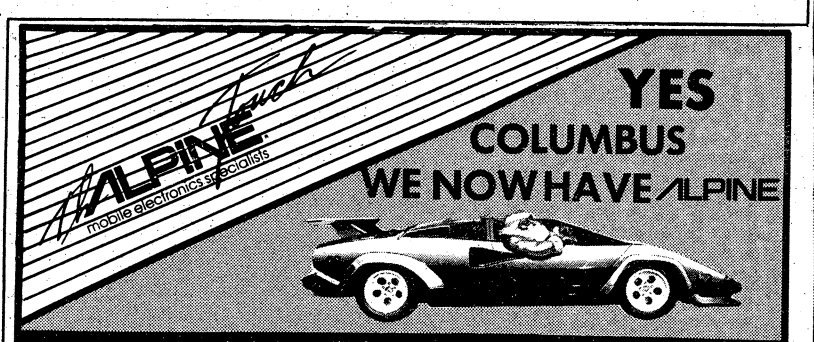
1st ITB troops run, win together

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet staff writer

The 1st Infantry Training Brigade exemplifies the saying that "the unit that runs together, wins together.

Win the 1st ITB did.

The unit's Headquarters and Headquarters Company streaked to victory Oct. 25 in the Infantry Museum Run, turning in a 33:25 time for the five-miler. The HHC harriers trampled 27 other teams in their winning effort.



In the seven-man team run, the 1st ITB breezed past 31 other pavement pounding teams to capture first place.

"Our teams started training 45 days before the race. We were definitely ready," said 1st ITB coach Russell Medina.

Race Coordinator Bernard Pfeiffer also had praise for the 1st ITB teams.

"It's really encouraging to see a group that takes its training seriously, as the 1st ITB obviously did," Pfeiffer said.

The 1st ITB is carrying on a winning tradition as they won and set a record in last year's race for the formation run at 31:48.

586th bridges Chattahoochee River, wins competition

Story and photos by Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Engineer Landing was swamped last week. Swamped with trucks, bridge erection boats and soldiers. And it was noisy.

The crowd cheered and yelled encouragement to fellow soldiers. The timekeeper could be heard across the river. "Two minutes," then, "three minutes". . . and on it went.

Such was the scene along the Chattahoochee River last week as the soldiers from the 586th Engineer Company, (Assault Float Bridge) 67th Maintenance Battalion competed in a bi-annual bridging competition.

Soldiers from Company E, 3rd Battalion at Fort Stewart, Ga., here for a field training exercise, competed with the 586th to see who could build a five float ribbon bridge in the least amount of time. In addition to building the bridge, the soldiers had to load a five-ton dump truck and take it across the river and back.

"The competition is primarily done for two reasons; one is to build a teamwork and the other is for espirit de corps," said 1st Lt. Kenneth A. Young, 586th executive officer.

The Fort Stewart soldiers don't often have the opportunity to build bridges on rivers.

"We came here because of the Chattahoochee River and the landing," said Capt David J. Bender, Co. E commander.

According to Bender his company's last FTX was on the ocean but it is not the same as river bridging.

The competition required that each company build two rafts, one for each platoon. "Of the two platoons we won both times. The best time was 11 minutes, 17 seconds," said Young. "That included building the bridge, loading the trucks, taking it to the far side and bringing it back.

"So we did really outstanding," Young said.

Soldiers from the 3rd Battalion at Fort Stewart, Ga., try to pull together two rafts to complete a ribbon bridge.

New inspection program changes 197th emphasis

by Bill Branley
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Leaders in the 197th Infantry Brigade are putting some combat flavor back into their command inspection program.

A new inspection program, used for the first time last week, forces units in the Brigade to show that they are capable of deploying and fighting as combat units. The first unit to be inspected under the new concept was the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor.

According to Col. William Hartzog, 197th commander, the previous inspection program did not have the same degree of emphasis on tactical aspects.

"Under the old program, each company-sized unit devoted several weeks of intense preparation to these inspections," Hartzog said. "It was a good shakedown of such things as barracks, equipment and garrison procedures."

The new program, however, takes a much harder look at combat systems.

The Brigade's previous inspection program called for inspectors to look at each company-sized unit in the Brigade once a year. For the inspectors, that meant more than 30 inspections each year, each of them a week-long effort.

Capt. Fred Schulze, the Brigade inspector general, explained, "For one thing it was an unnecessary burden on company commanders. Also, since the focus was on companies there were critical areas of the battalion that did not receive enough attention."

Changes to the inspection program now cause the Brigade staff to look at all critical battalion functional areas and then check the companies to verify the effectiveness of various programs.

For example, the Brigade logistics officer may look at the battalion's management of supplies and property, and then focus on hand receipt accountability at one of the companies. Each Brigade staff section — personnel, operations, intelligence, etc. — conduct its inspection in a similar manner.

The entire inspection of 2-69th Armor lasted three days. The functional areas were inspected during the first two days. On the third day each company was required to execute two tasks, or inspection modules.

The tasks included a no-notice "roll-out" of vehicles, establishing a battalion tactical operations center, preparing an operations order and several others.

The modules were designed to test the companies' preparedness for deployment, ability to deploy and ability to fight as required.

After last week's debut of the new inspection program, the Brigade plans to fine tune a few details and then use it again next month.

Computer system helps artillery succeed on modern battlefield

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Artillerymen still use ancient principles of geometry to determine the direction to a target. Some of the methods used by soldiers in the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery's survey section, such as tracking the movement of the sun to determine direction, have been around for hundreds of years. Improvements have been made, but the basic principles remain the same.

However, these modern surveyors also have a tool that would amaze the mathmaticians of old.

The Positive Azimuth Determining System is a computer that artillerymen use to determine the direction to and position of a known point.

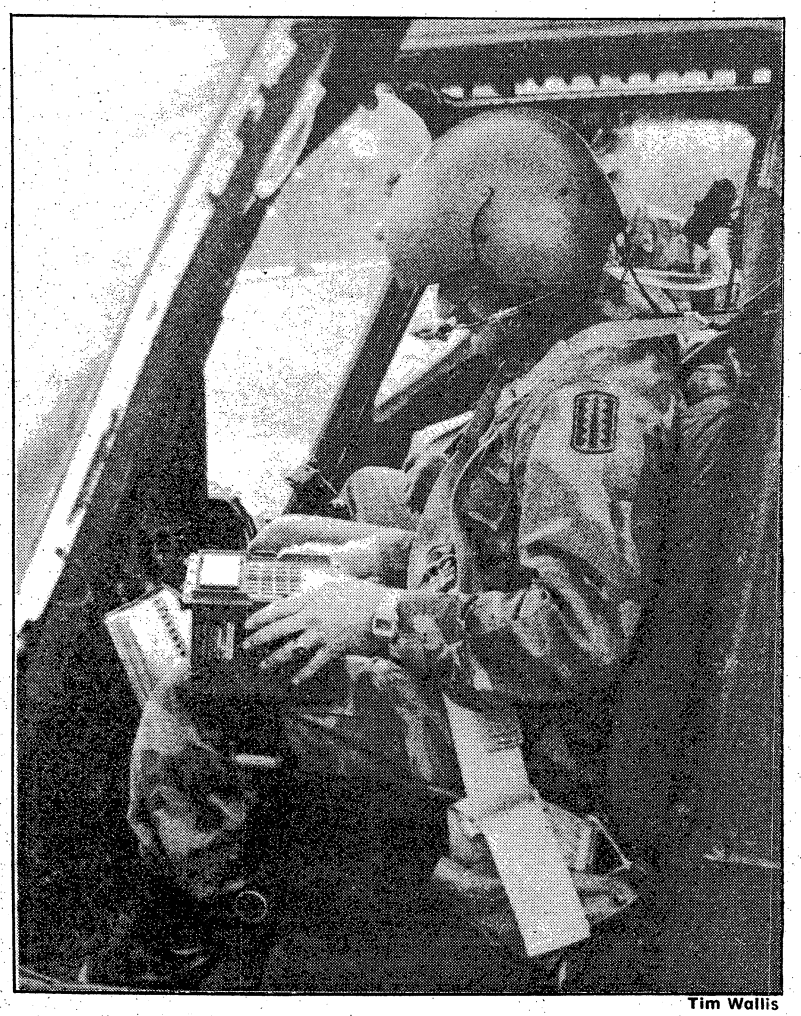
"The main purpose of field artillery is to put metal on a target," said SSgt. Bruce Roberts, the PADS section chief. "In order to do that, they need an accurate position and direction to the target. That information is provided by the survey team."

The survey section assists the batteries in positioning the howitzers correctly in relation to the targets. As the batteries "shoot and move," the survey team must adjust the survey to each new location.

"Conventional survey is accurate, but you always have a human error factor," said SFC Oliver Rosier, 2-10th survey chief. "There are several steps to getting a good survey. You don't know if you've made a mistake along the way until you're finished."

With PADS, the section completes its mission faster and with more accuracy than conventional survey methods.

"The 320-pound equipment fits into the back of a quarter-ton jeep," Roberts said. "We also use PADS mounted in an OH-58 observation helicopter."



The operator uses a Control Display Unit to enter or update information in the system. PADS can also relay information to the operator through visual display.

"The CDU can tell the operator if something is wrong," Roberts said. "For example, to operate PADS, the jeep must be stopped in a level position. If not, the system will tell the operator to find a better place to initialize the equipment."

Roberts explained that PADS will not replace the need for soldiers to remain proficient in conventional survey methods. However, it does eliminate several factors that can affect the accuracy of survey, he explained.

"The aiming circle is a magnetized instrument. Such things as an electrical storm or metal objects near the equipment can affect its accuracy," Roberts said.

"PADS is expedient, accurate and portable. I can be sure, when I stop to get a position, that it is accurate."

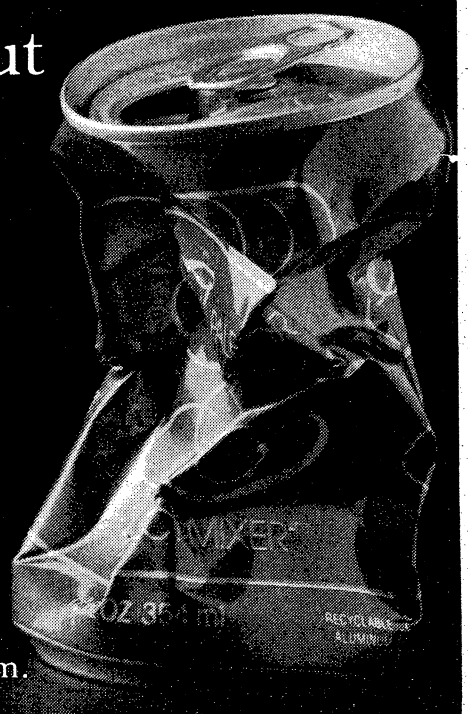
533rd Trans. Co. 'keeps on truckin'

by Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

If you think driving into work on the interstate and waiting in the traffic every morning is aggravating, you should be grateful that you don't work for the 533rd Transportation Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion.

Not only do the transportation soldiers fight traffic every day, they frequently must do it carrying live ammunition.

The company's efforts have not gone unnoticed, however.



"We won the Department of the Army Chief of Staff Maintenance Excellence Award two out of three years, said 1st Sgt. Daniel W. Connors. "The one time we didn't win first place, we placed second."

The 163 soldiers that make up the company (60 percent are non-commissioned officers) get plenty of missions that keep them qualified.

The soldiers' combined efforts average 30,000 miles a month on Fort Benning alone according to Connors.

The company provides transportation support to the 197th Infantry Brigade the 10th Mountain Division, the 75th Ranger Regiment, the Infantry School and the 29th Infantry Regiment.

Engineers assault support mission

Story and photos by Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Two words can send even the bravest soldier running in retreat. Or at the very least, they can send him to the calendar to make sure he has plans.

The two words are: cyclic support.

Cyclic support is a phase where a unit's primary mission changes, combining various jobs that pull the soldier from his military operational skill. It occurs three times each year and lasts for six weeks, casting the soldier in many different roles.

"Cyclic support is a phase that most units go through where they are totally committed to supporting the post," said SSgt. Ezzard C. Crittenden, 36th Engineer Group tasking and commitments non-commissioned officer.

"Any post has it. It's done so that when the unit is out of cyclic support, it is free of the tasks and can concentrate on training," said Maj. Tom York, 36th Engineer Group operations officer.

For a few soldiers it is a dreaded time. However, while in the midst of the mission, many say it's not so bad and they even enjoy some interesting moments.

"During our cyclic support we handle just about any kind of job that we're needed for," said Crittenden.

"Any kind" of job for the group includes funeral detail, guard duty, drivers, simulated combat aggressors, flag detail and help on ranges.

He said these duties are all the regular cyclic support missions. But, frequently a call for an unusual task may arise and this is when the support mission becomes interesting.

"We've sent cooks to Honduras and Dugway (Proving Ground), Utah as well as a marching platoon for the Peanut Festival recently in Alabama," Crittenden said.

Funeral details are quite common during the cycle and the soldiers are needed on a daily basis. According to Crittenden each company in the Group provides a funeral detail.

"On the average we have at least one funeral a day and there have been times when I have received four in a day," Crittenden said.

"If the task is not in the cyclic support time frame we'll turn it down or if it's an unusual request that we can't meet, we'll try to find someone more qualified," Crittenden said.

"We have construction engineers who have taken the responsibility of Brown Demolition Range support. Sixteen soldiers were trained to assist the Officer Candidate School students while they go through demolition training," Crittenden said.

SP4 David H. Cook, 36th Engineer Group, acts as an aggressor at the Military Operation Urban Terrain site.

Assault float bridge mechanics face unique mission

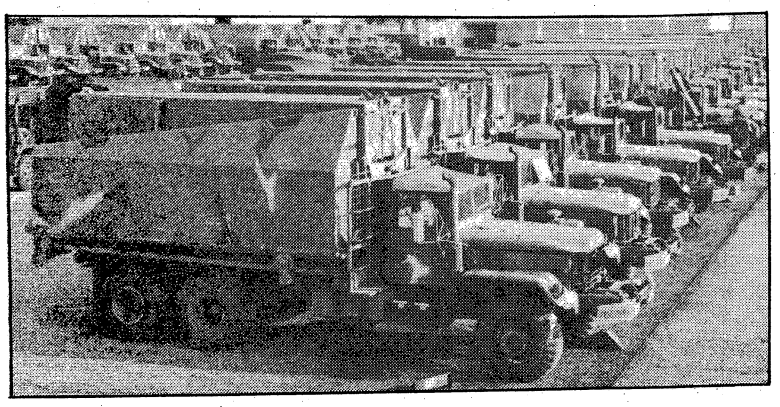
by Terry Thompson
586th Engineer Company

"What in the world is that?" are normally the first words out of a mechanic's mouth when he enters the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) motor pool for the first time.

Very few soldiers have had the pleasure of working on the type of equipment associated with the 586th's ribbon bridge. The maintenance on the equipment is not taught in any of the Army's schools, so all training for repairs is conducted on the job.



The major piece of equipment in the 586th is an M812A1 transporter adapted for the assault float bridge. In previous years, these five-ton trucks were used for hauling HAWK missiles for the air defense artillery units.

The most confusing thing about maintaining these trucks is, by Army standards, the basic truck is repaired by a wheeled vehicle mechanic, while the bridge portion of the truck is repaired by an engineer equipment mechanic. This situation has created a need for a strong cross-training program.

The pride and joy of the 586th are the 14 MK1 Bridge Erection Boats. They are powered by twin six-cylinder turbocharged British Sabre diesel engines. They are capable of provding 3,800 pounds of forward thrust resulting in a top speed of 30 knots.

One of the key missions of the 586th involves the Ranger Support Element and its ability to act as a rapid deploying support unit prepared for an alert at anytime.

To support the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment and to make the RSE deployable, the 586th spends a great deal of time prepping vehicles from the 67th Maintenance Battalion as well as from other units involved in the RSE.

The vehicles in the 586th motor pool stand ready to roll out.

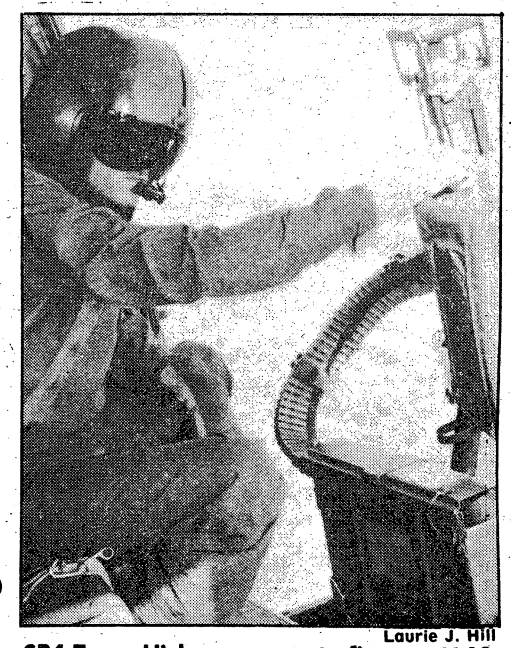
Around Fort Benning

Editor's Note: "Around Fort Benning" is a weekly column designed to highlight the activities of post units. Its purpose is to provide an outlet for brief stories, written by members of the featured unit, concerning changes of command, significant awards and some training exercises.



Input is welcome from all sources and should be submitted to the Editor in Room 601, Building 4 by 11 a.m. Monday. All input must be typed, double-spaced with the name and specific unit of the writer and should be limited to two pages. Submissions will be subject to standard editing and condensing.

High quality black and white photographs will also be considered for publication in this column.

36th Engineer Group

Soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group Aviation Section took to the air to qualify with their weapons recently.

The soldiers flew to Ferguson Range aboard a UH-1 Huey and qualified shooting live rounds from the M-60 machine guns mounted in the doors.

Laurie J. Hill

SP4 Tracy Hicks prepares to fire an M60 door gun.

The soldiers (all crew chief-gunners) first qualified on the ground ranges before going airborne.

"Considering that we're so vulnerable as door gunners in combat situations, we need all the practice we can get," said SP4 Tracy A. Hicks, crew chief and gunner. — Laurie J. Hill, 36th Engineer Group.

Engineer Field was the site for this year's organizational day for the 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group in October.

"Family togetherness" was the theme of the day as the competition among the seven companies of the Battalion began.

The soldiers competed in various events, including relay races, tug-of-war, a two-mile run, a tire change competition, horse shoe throw, and volleyball.

The first sergeants and company commanders of each unit competed with the commander and command sergeant major in an egg toss competition with the soldiers of the Battalion cheering everyone on.

There was plenty of food and fun for everyone. The day's activities came to a close with Lt. Col. Thomas A. Hooper thanking everyone for once again supporting another 67th Maintenance Battalion function. — Pamelia Banks, 67th Maintenance Battalion.

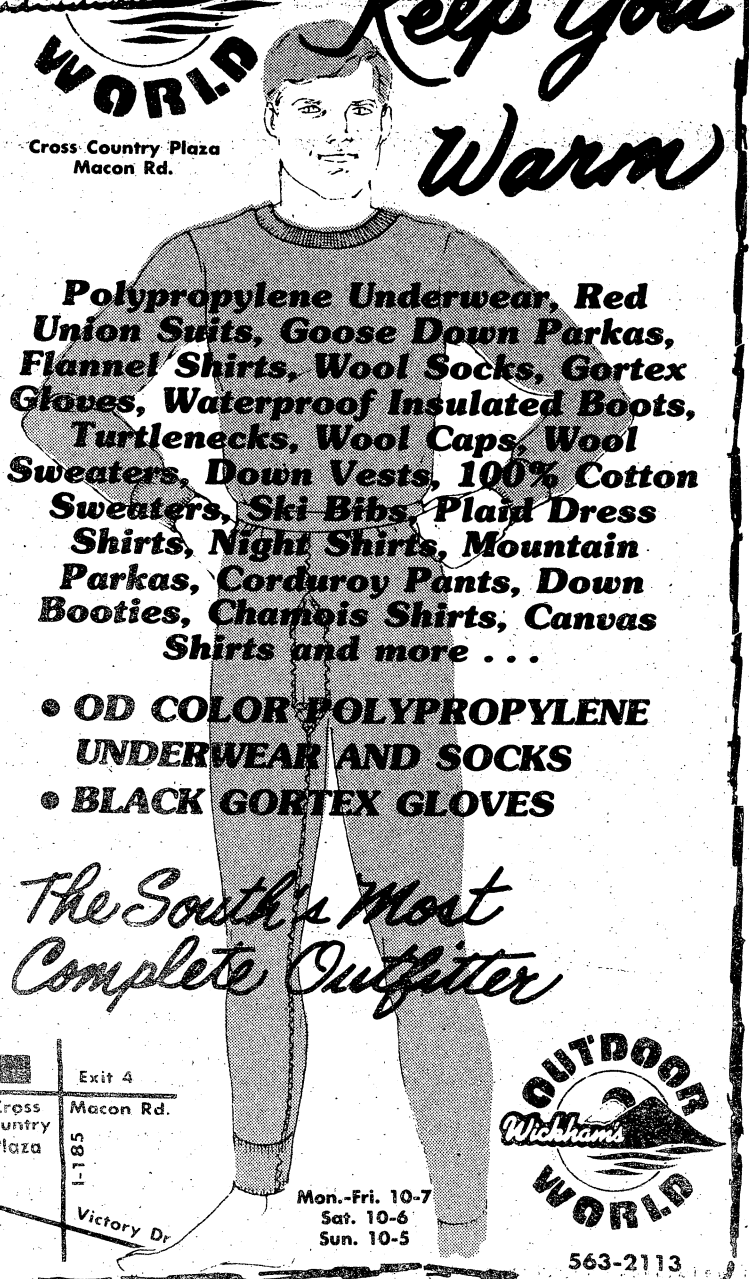
197th Infantry

Soldiers from Company D, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry recently returned from a deployment to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

Augmented by the Battalion's Scout platoon, the "Warriors" worked as part of Fort Irwin's Opposing Force during the month-long exercise.

"This type of force-on-force fighting is the best training available for a mechanized unit," said Capt. Thomas D'Alio, Co. D commander. "In addition to sharpening our basic infantry skills, we got a perspective of the battle from the other side."

The OPFOR contingent is tasked with manning M551 Sheridan tanks converted to look like Soviet BMPs and T-72 tanks. In fighting the simulated battles, Soviet tactics are used.



D'Alio explained that the OPFOR faced a Bradley and M1 tank task force from Fort Hood, Texas.

"It was an excellent opportunity to observe our technology of the future, engaged on a modern battlefield," he said. — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade.

Family health screening mandatory before PCS

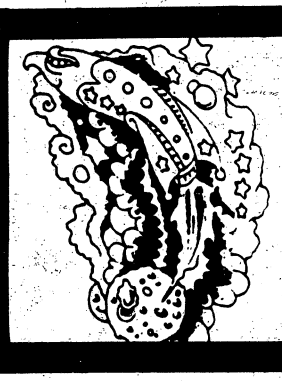
by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers scheduled for an overseas permanent-change-of-station move must have their family members screened before concurrent travel will be approved.

The health screening is done under the auspices of the Exceptional Family Member Program; however, everyone planning to take their family members overseas must have them screened.

"The goal is to ensure that family members with special problems are identified, enrolled in the program, and not sent to a duty station overseas where help is not available for them," said Helen Moore, the social services assistant who handles the initial screening.

Because the policy applies to everyone, there is some confusion. "Because it is called the Exceptional Family Member screening program, people think that if they don't have an exceptional family member it does not apply to them," Ms. Moore said. That is the way the program originally worked, but Oct. 1 it changed and the screening became mandatory for all family members.



The program was changed because family members with exceptional needs were not being identified prior to PCSing, she said.

"People requiring specialized medical care were being shipped back to the States, because it was not available in overseas hospitals," she said.

"Soldiers need to understand that if they do not come in for screening, their file will be flagged and they won't receive concurrent travel orders for their family."

Soldiers who have overseas orders should not wait until the last minute to report for screening, Ms. Moore said, because even for family members wh have no exceptional needs, i still takes at least a week t process the paperwork.

For family members who d have special needs, screenin and enrollment takes about month, Ms. Moore said.

Citizens honored for work with allies

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Sam and Donna Rice of Columbus, have been goodwill ambassadors for the Allied Student Training Detachment here since 1978. They were honored Nov. 6 for their significant contributions to the Civilian Sponsor Program by the Portuguese army.

In a presentation in his office, post commander Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. praised the Rice's for their help in fostering good relations and making allied foreign students feel at home. Burba then presented them with the Portuguese 2nd Class Medal of D. Afonso Henriques-Patron of the Army. Burba presented the award on behalf of the chief of staff of the Portuguese Army Gen. Jorge Da Costa Salazar Braga.

"The Rices have inspired other Columbus families to participate in the sponsor program and in the process have provided a home away from home for dozens and dozens of visiting allies," Burba said.

Since 1978 the Rices have sponsored 76 allied officers from 27 countries.

Look for the VIP difference.

The VIP makes the difference.

Finding the right health-care plan to protect your family is one of the most important things you'll do this year. That's why Federal Employees need to take a close look at Blue Cross and Blue Shield's Standard Option—with the VIP difference. The Standard Option with the VIP gives you the far-reaching coverage you need, plus important money-saving benefits.

Look for comprehensive coverage.

The VIP makes the difference, in many instances working with Standard Option to pay 100 percent of in-hospital charges* with no deductible. And Standard Option with the VIP also pays 85 percent of the preferred-physician allowance for doctor bills after the deductible. That means you get extensive coverage—at the Standard Option price.

To benefit from the VIP feature, choose your doctor or hospital from Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Georgia's long list of preferred providers. Use one of over 3,500 doctors and 90 hospitals statewide to get maximum coverage. Under Standard Option, even if you choose to use a non-VIP provider, you still receive excellent dollar-for-dollar, comprehensive coverage.

Look for improved dental benefits.

Blue Cross and Blue Shield's Standard Option helps pay for your dental care according to a fee schedule—with no yearly maximum and no deductible. And new in 1987, Standard Option pays an even larger portion of bills for children up to age 13.

A great value.

VIP benefits are automatically included at no extra cost. So you get great coverage, and the chance to save on your health-care dollars.

Prior planning ensures quick response to fire

by James W. Drain
Fire Prevention Branch

Cigarettes are the leading cause of accidental multiple-death fires in residental properties.

Multiple-death means three or more victims. Children 15 years old and younger account for more than half of all victims in multiple-death fires.

Most multiple-death fires occur during winter months starting in November and peaking in January. Most multiple-death fires occur between 8 p.m. and 8 a.m.

The Fire Prevention Section of the Fort Benning Fire Department has put together a puppet show that is entertaining, educational and very effective in teaching children and adults important facts about fire prevention and protection.

They have performed for more than 3,000 children and teachers at Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City. But we also need your help.

In order to control fire and reduce its devastating effects, the entire community must play a part and work together. A "team effort" is the most effective way to attack fire.

Fire protection should not be the responsibility of the fire department alone. Everyone in the community can and should contribute to fire safety.

There are some important things you can do as an individual to improve fire safety for your family and home.

Every family should have an escape plan worked out ahead of time. The plan should include knowing two ways out of every room so if the first way is blocked by heat and smoke, the second can be used.

There should also be a meeting place outside where the family can gather so you will know if everyone is safely out. Practice your plan during the year with EDITH . . . Exit Drills In The Home.

Inspect your home. Check the cords on lamps and other appliances. If cords are frayed or worn, have them replaced with new ones. If you have to use extension cords temporarily, never run them under a rug; people stepping on cords breaking down the insulation, which can result in fire.

Work to increase fire safety in your own home and in your community. Join the Fire Prevention Team.

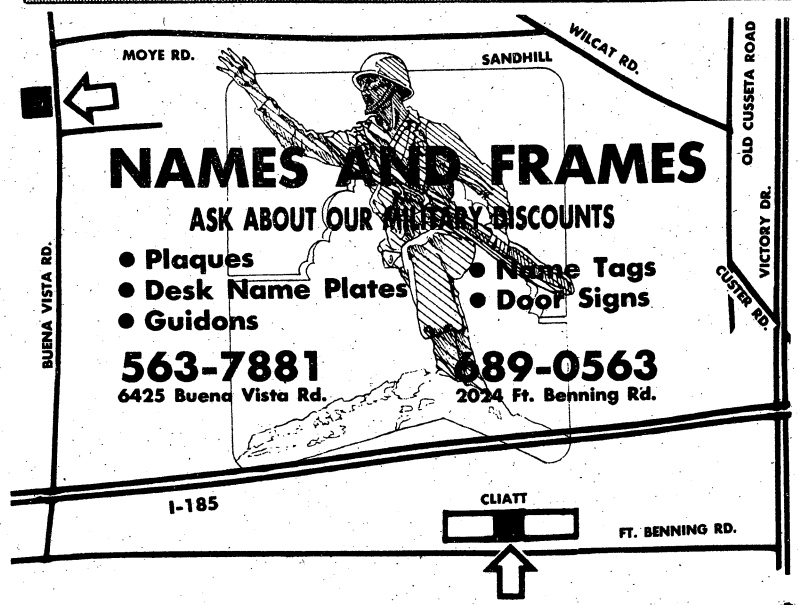
"Learn not to burn."

Education opportunities available

Army Education Center

The Army wants to sharpen and build on the skills of its soldiers. Its programs are geared to the high school graduate with the greatest potential and education is the key for unlocking that potential.

Education is a key ingredient for a professional Army. It is the strong foundation on which training is built.



American Education Week began after World War I draft boards discovered that some 25 percent of the draftees were illiterate, and about 29 percent were physically unfit.

In 1938, the Parent-Teachers Association became a co-sponsor as did the National School Boards Association in 1980. The Army began observing American Education Week in 1982.

The Army Continuing Education System Division, Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization, invites all commanders, staff members and soldiers to "sample our wares" during American Education Week, Nov. 16 to 22.

Our mission is to serve you, and we are eager to show how we are prepared to meet your needs. Visit your Army Education Center. Take an active part in shaping the future.

Hospital officer educates post soldiers about AIDS

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

The recent Congressional directive barring disclosure of information obtained during AIDS screening won't have much of an effect on Fort Benning's program, according to Preventive Medicine officials.

Lt. Col. Pitt Tomlinson, chief of PM, said he knew of no one who had been discharged solely on the basis of information shared during counseling.

"If it comes out during medical investigation that an individual is a homosexual or an (intravenous) drug user, this information cannot be used in a punitive manner," Tomlinson explained. "However, if (the individual) is later accused for continuing the activity, this could be used."

The Army wants to obtain as much information as possible from people who test positive for the HTLV III anitbody or who have AIDS, in order to help find a cure for the disease, he said.

According to Maj. Charles Boger, Environmental Science Officer, Fort Benning is still in the process of testing permanent Generals bring experience to Warfighting Conference

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning hosted its first-ever Warfighting Conference Nov. 7. The conference provided a forum for six retired general officers to share their battlefield experience with the students in the Infantry Officer Advanced Course.

The keynote speaker was retired Lt. Gen. William R. Desobry, who fought in World War II and Vietnam. The other conference speakers included retired Gens. Richard E. Cavazos, Paul F. Gorman, William E. Depuy, and retired Lt. Gens. David E. Grange Jr. and James F. Hollingsworth.

"The purpose of this conference was to bring these experienced war fighters in and allow them to sit down and interact with the Advanced Course students," said assistant project officer, Maj. Johnny Lopez.

The idea for the conference emanated from Benning's Brig. Gen. Barry McCaffrey and the project was headed by Maj. Robert McGinnis.

Each general supplied the Infantry School with a reading list prior to the conference so the students would have a feel for each general's philosophy.

"The conference was kept focused on the company and battalion level forthe captains and they loved it. About 500 captains attended the conference and we hope we have 500 captains better prepared to fight on the comapny and battalion level based on the knowledge they gained from talking with these war horses," Lopez added.

Grange, long a Fort Benning favorite, said "We should have been doing this long ago. here is so much combat knowledge in the retired community. This combat knowledge should be put to use. This conference is great."

Lopez said plans are already underway for another conference in June and he said plans called for the event to be semi-annual.

New troops take aim during rifle training

It has been said that infantrymen live or die, win or lose, based on the ability to effectively use rifles.

Soldiers from Company E, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade started training last week on the M16A1 rifle with the attitude of living and winning.

"The first few periods of basic rifle marksmanship are critical. If soldiers don't learn the basics, then they'll have problems with becoming effective marksmen," said 1st Lt. Marco Rosario, officer in charge of BRM with the 29th Infantry Regiment.

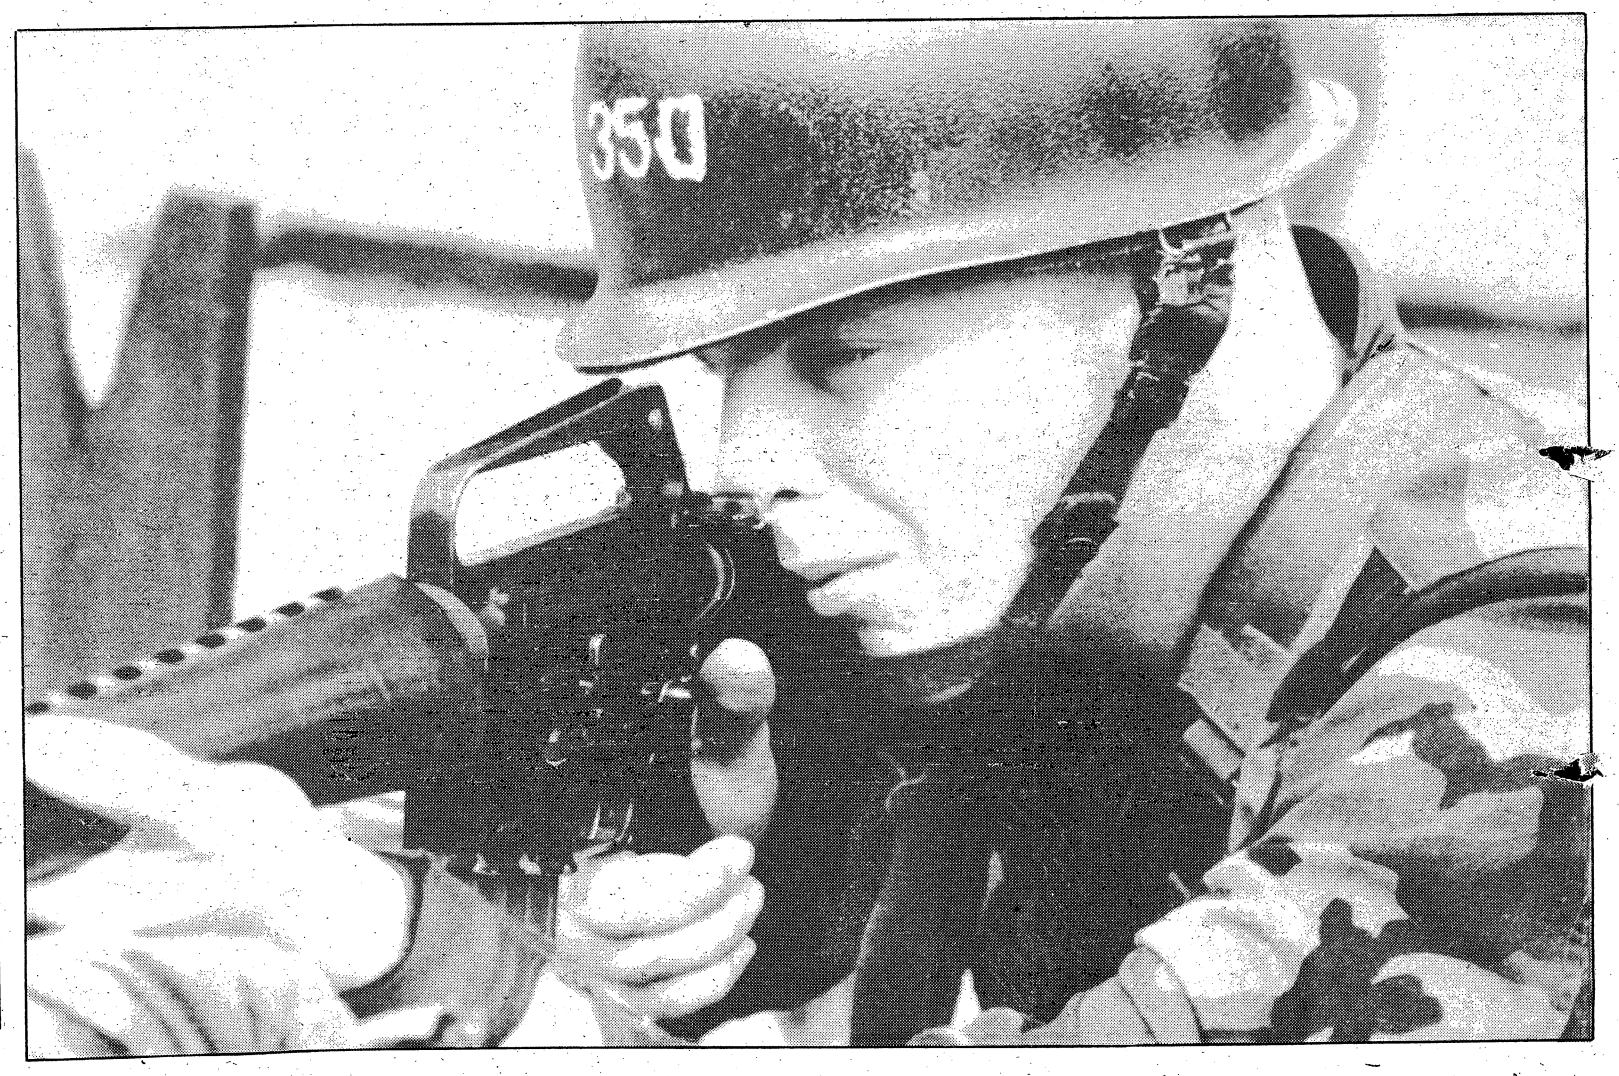
Learn the basics is exactly what the E-9-2 troopers did during the first day at Malone No. 8, a BRM range.

The soldiers initially used blank ammunition as the instructor in the range tower talked them through two firing positions — prone unsupported and foxhole supported.

Simulating a misfire, the new infantrymen practiced immediate and remedial action.

They also learned sight manipulation, sight adjustment and the four fundamentals of basic rifle marksmanship.

"There used to be eight steady hold factors. That has been changed and we now use the four fundamentals. These are a steady position, aiming, breath control and trigger squeeze," said SSgt. Ronnie Thomas, a 29th Infantry Regiment BRM instructor.



"Getting into position 'by the numbers' is sort of slow but it's the only way we'll learn this," said Pvt. 1 Jay Potter. "Besides, if this is what it takes to be an expert marksman, then I'll do it all day."

Before arriving at Malone No. 8, the company drill sergeants taught the soldiers maintenance, disassembly and assembly of the M16A1 as a building block for the BRM process.

"These soldiers usually have most of their problems getting into the firing positions correctly. But that's to be expected because it's their first time," Thomas said.

E-9-2 began using live rounds last week and will soon shoot for qualification.

"I plan to fire expert. It's part of being an infantryman," said Pvt. 1 Michael Swan.

Detachment gives post international flavor

Maj. Thomas J. Wilson, the new commander of the Allied Student Training Detachment.

The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Allied Student Training Detachment adds a decidedly international flavor to the post.

Allied students from every continent, from Asia to Europe, come to Fort Benning to experience U.S. Army infantry training and get a taste of American life.

"The mission of the ASTD is to ensure that allied students are taken care of, from the day of their arrival to the day of their departure," says the Detachment's new commander, Maj. Thomas J. Wilson Jr.

Wilson recently took formal command from outgoing commander Maj. William Sutherland.

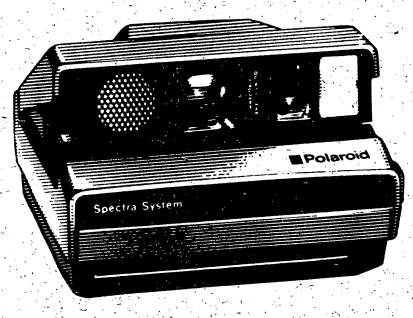
The ASTD takes care of almost 700 allied military students annually. They come from more than 100 different countries and range in rank from corporal to colonel.

The students primarily represent sub-Saharan Africa, the Caribbean, the Middle East and Southeast Asia.

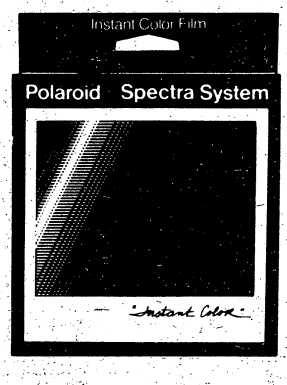
They attend almost all of the courses offered at Fort Benning, including the Infantry Officer Basic Course, the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, the Basic Airborne Course, Ranger School, Infantry Mortar Platoon Course, Improved TOW Vehicle and Pathfinder Course.

The Detachment also familiarizesthe students with 12 different facets of American life, as mandated by the Department of Defense. These areas are government institutions, the judicial system, political parties, American life, agriculture, economy, the press, women and minorities, education, public and social welfare, labor relations and human rights.

Students get training in the areas, in addition to the Infantry School courses they attend, through a series of tours to businesses, government endeavours, major industries, farms, banks and other institutions.



Students also visit Florida for tours of the Kennedy Space Center, Seaworld, the Magic Kingdom and St. Augustine.



Upon arrival, the ASTD gives each student a pre-course to acclimate them to Fort Benning and American culture. During the initial inprocessing four main areas are covered. These include, educational methods, technical-military competence, cultural adaptation and testing methods. All students must also have a basic knowledge of English because they attend the same instruction as American students.

"Ultimately, we want our allies to understand more about the American way of life so that they can take this understanding back to their respective countries," Wilson said.

OWC has served post for more than 60 years

by Regina Victor
Officers' Wive's Club

In October 1923, one of the largest organizations of its kind was formed here. The wives of dedicated infantry soldiers organized the Officers' Wive's Club.

The women of then and now have the same incentive — to provide community support to a unique group, the military family. The OWC sponsors a variety of useful and supportive community programs. The women who volunteer on the OWC's committees contribute significantly to the quality of life for all soldiers and family members on Fort Benning.

Even with many credits to its name, the OWC, until recently still had a force working against its members — their building. When the club moved in, the building was in need of repairs, however the women did not let the old structure get them down. They went ahead for the time being with their programs in their building, despite its condition.

If you've driven by the OWC building recently, you've probably noticed that it has finally gotten a much needed facelift.

The inspiration for the master plan came from the post's Chief of Staff Col. James Ellis, after the former OWC President Maggie Siegfried asked for assistance in a renovation project. After careful cosideration, Ellis saw that a major renovation would involve more than the base operations budget would allow. A $10 million cut in operations meant the renovation could not happen under normal contract procedures. The idea to use the Self-Help program had great appeal at this point, so it was decided to incorporate volunteer labor with self-help materials to get the job done.

Virtually all units on post participated in the renovation of the building. It was a total effort by the officers, working weekends and nights to complete the project. There were no injuries, except for a few blisters in exchange for a great experience and a sense of pride in a job well done.

The outcome is a building the group is proud to call home and a savings in contract work of $191,000.

On Nov. 21 at 5:30 p.m. the OWC will officially reopen its much-improved facility with an appreciation dinner for all the men who participated in the renovation project. Making this plan become a reality is an exceptional example of the military community's resourcefulness and teamwork.

The Officers' Wive's Club provides support to the entire post. The organization supports the family at Fort Benning .Its facility is used for many enjoyable and educational programs.

The OWC would like to extend a "thank you" to all who secured the future of the its building! Your results are a shining example for future Self-Help plans in the community.

party soldiers for HTLV III exposure. Part of Boger's job involves AIDS education, to teach people about the disease and the testing program.

"This is a sexually transmitted disease that they can get through heterosexual relations," Boger said, "And this is one main thing we are trying to get people to understand."

Boger regularly conducts AIDS briefings for school cadre and unit soldiers and shows an informational videotape provided by the Army Surgeon General.

He said people need to know that they can't get AIDS through casual contact. "You don't get it without sexual contact," he said.

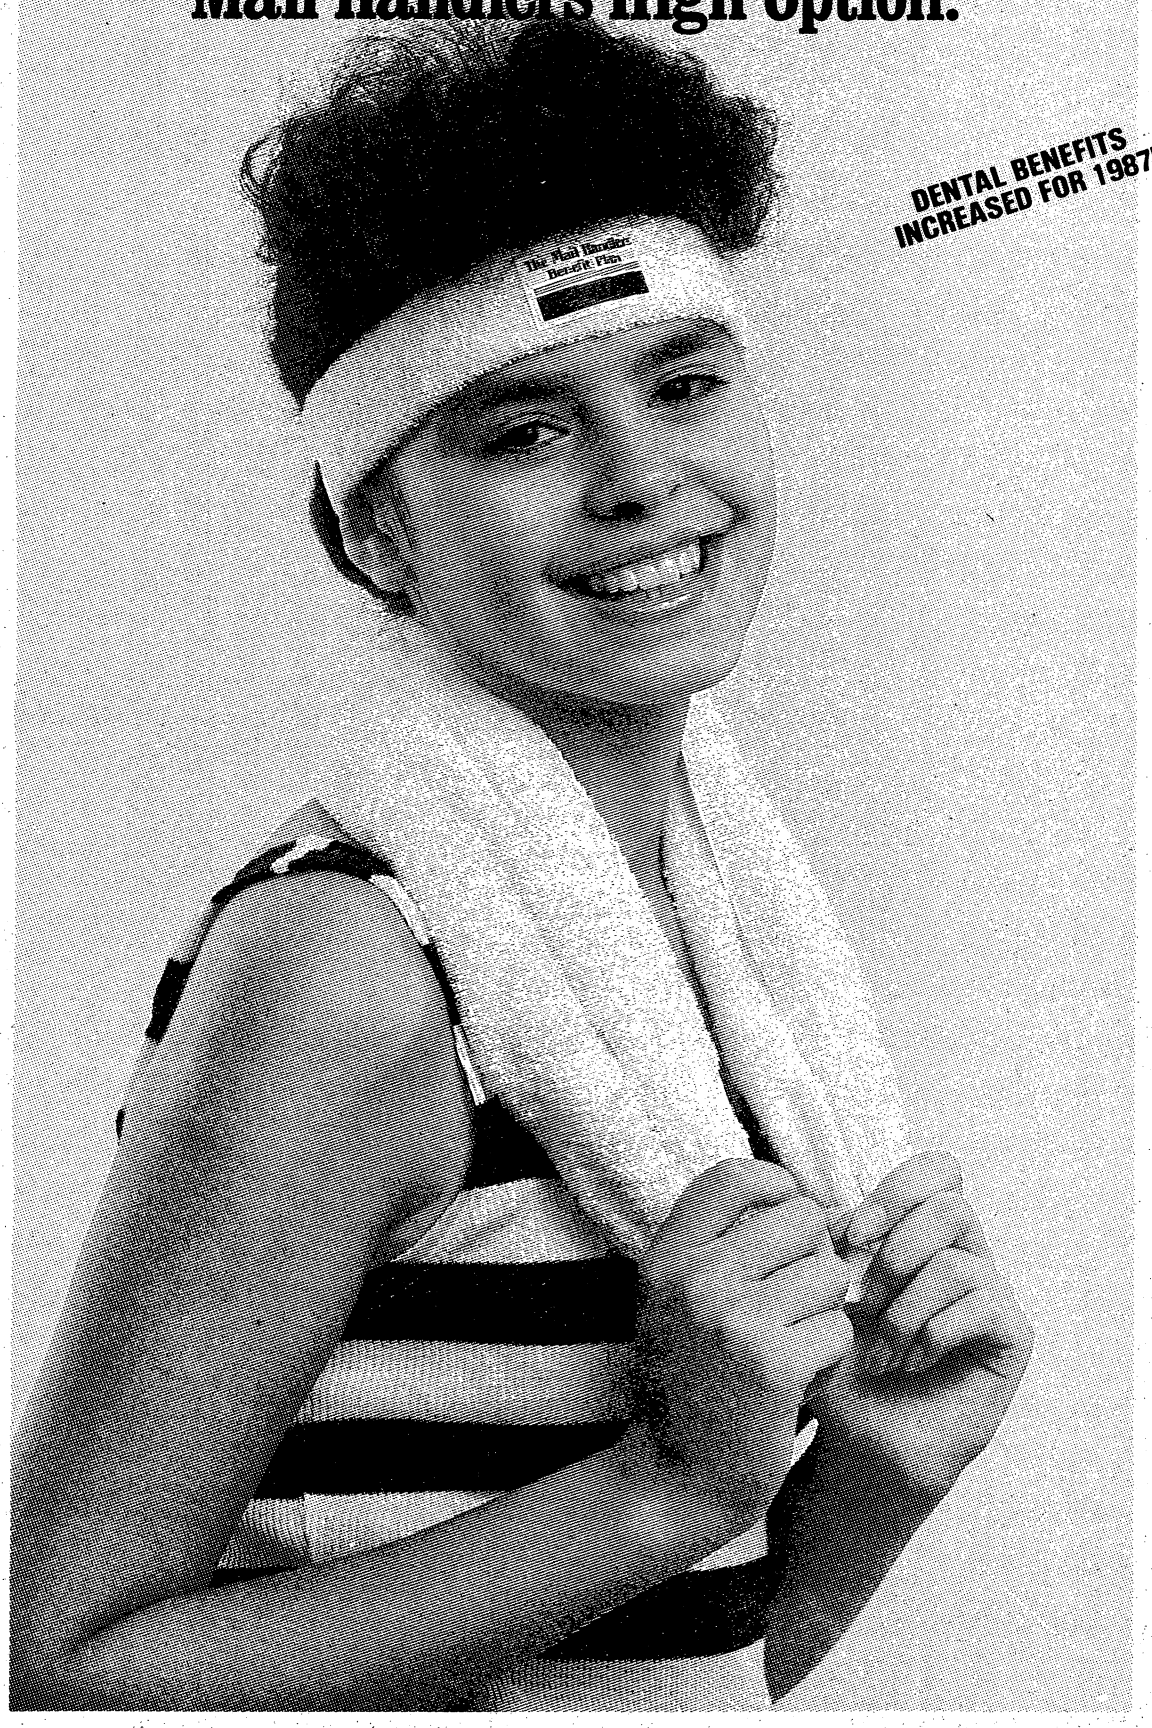
Exceptions to this are that AIDS can be contracted through blood transfusions and mothers can give it to their infants in utero or through breast milk.

A person has a 30 to 50 percent chance of catching the virus after being exposed to it, Boger said, which is about the same chance as catching other venereal diseases.

The Center for Disease Control reports approximately 15,000 cases of AIDS in the U.S. today, and predicts that the figure will double every year.

"Soldiers are being tested before being deployed, regardless of a previous negative test result," he said. Soldiers who test positive are not deployable because they cannot be given the necessary live virus vaccines. "Because of the changes in their immune system, they could have an adverse reaction to such vaccines," Boger said.

Since there is no treatment, vaccine or cure for AIDS, Boger said the education efforts focus on prevention of the disease.



He said to reduce your chances of contracting the virus, limit sexual contacts and know your partner. People who have a high number of sexual contacts are at greater risk of being exposed to the virus, he said.

Bible's survival tribute to faith of past believers

by Wayne Strohschein
36th Engineer Group chaplain

Sunday has been named Bible Sunday.

What is the Bible? Our English word Bible, derives from the Greek biblia, meaning books. The word that was derived from the name of an ancient town north of present day Beirut, Lebanon, that was the center for papyrus trading, the writing material of the ancient world. The name of the town was Gebal, which the ancient Greeks pronounced Byblos.

With the expansion of the church by A.D. 400 biblia, the word for books, came to mean "The Book," our Bible. The Bible is the most influential book in the history of the human race.

The Bible we have today is actually a collection of books that we now call a canon. The Old Testament portion is a collection of the surviving literature of ancient Israel. The New Testament portion is a collection of material about Jesus of Nazareth and the early church.

The Bible is more than a collection of old books, however. It has survived because it is a book of faith, a spiritual guide for believers across the centuries.

The faith of the people of God, from the patriarchs to the early Christians, is recorded on the Bible's pages. These words provide spiritual food for the soul and light for our own journey of faith today.

The Bible has survived because what is there transcends all limits and boundaries and obstacles. It transcends the limits of language. In whatever language one reads it, one comes to know God. It transcends the boundaries of government and politics that make divisions among people. It transcends the passage of time. In whatever century, God's word is there speaking the truth with power, with love, with grace.

The Bible has survived because it is the best of all resources. It is something that is solid and secure and dependable. No matter which of life's problems we might be facing, enduring, or challenged by, the Bible speaks to us, guides us and supports us.

The Bible has survived because it is the only book that a person can read again and again and each time discover something new.

This book of faith is as much our book today as it was of the ancient Israelites and the people of Jesus' day and the people of the early church, because this book is not simply a history book, or a science book, or a literature book. It uses such only as a means to disclose the Lord.

We discover that God has been active in history, loving and caring and guiding his people. We discover that this same God is also active in our own present moment, loving, caring and guiding his people of today.

Bibles are readily available. They come in all shapes and sizes.

But just having one won't do much. It's when the pages are opened that things begin to happen. Come to the services of God's house and hear the word of God proclaimed. And during the week, open the pages of your Bible and read expectantly.

May God's word be with you today, tomorrow and each day.

Gideons offer Scriptures to all

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Have you ever been in a motel room and found a copy of the Bible there? On the cover, it probably said that it was placed there by the Gideons.

Who are the Gideons?

An international organization, based in Washington, D.C., the Gideons take their name from the Old Testament judge, who successfully led his small army, using clever tactics to win.

Eight or more Christians, who take seriously the call to be messengers of the "Good News," are established into a camp, or local chapter. Their evangelical mission is to place the Scriptures at the crossroads of the world, wherever people pause.

Not only in hotel and motel rooms, but also in airports, schools and colleges, malls and emergency medical centers, one can find their Bibles, giving witness to the will of God.

The Gideons were founded in the early 1900s by three traveling salesmen, who got together for prayer and discerned their vocation to be witnesses for the Gospel. Soon other believers joined them. The movement is now a chain of professionals, stretching into 136 countries of the world.

Gideons are business or professional laymen, able to arrange their own schedules and pay their own way in continuing the mission. Each attends a prayer meeting weekly, a business or fellowship gathering monthly, and participates in the fund-raising effort by speaking to congregations about the Gideon ministry and reporting back to participating churches.

They also check the condition of Bibles at various placement sites and make replacements where necessary.

"We will recycle the tattered Bible to locations where people will more readily pick up a copy that looks a little used, such as in confinement facilities," says Sherman Titus, Gideons' liaison at Fort Benning.

The Columbus, Fort Benning camp has 22 members and an auxiliary, which takes care of hospitals, doctors' offices and health care specialists.

"We are always looking for new members. Our camp has a number of Fort Benning personnel in it. Our president is a captain," Titus said.

Deputy USAIC Chaplain, Jim Rogers says, "The Gideons have been very helpful to us. They have given thousands of soldiers Bibles to carry with them through training and through life. They really deserve support from Army people on Bible Sunday."

This weekend, Fort Benning chapel congregations will designate their offerings for sustaining the effort of Gideon International.

Potluck supper to honor priest

The Military Council of Catholic Women is sponsoring a farewell potluck supper for Father Al Hartlage Saturday following the 5 p.m. mass.

Each family is asked to bring a main dish and a salad or dessert with enough to feed themselves and three other people. The supper will be in The Infantry Center Chapel annex.

Shroud of Turin subject of lecture

A lecture and slide series on the Shroud of Turin will be offered Sunday and Dec. 7.

Russell Breault, who has spent eight years investigating the shroud, will be guest lecturer.

The lecture will begin at 7 p.m. Sunday in the 3rd Ranger Battalion classroom in Building 5,000. Dec. 7, the lecture starts at 7 p.m. in the Kelley Hill Chapel, Building 9023.

The lecture is free and the public is invited. For more information, call Chaplain Hash at 544-7473 or Chaplain Bjarnason at 544-3070.

Film for fathers focuses on family

The "Focus on Family" film series module for this week is on "Christian Fathering." Being a consistent, positive influence on children is the focus for dads.

Two sessions are being offered at 10 a.m. or 7 p.m. in the Kelley Hill Chapel. Call Chaplain Wisdom for details at 544-2712. Child care is provided.

Meaning of Advent subject of workshop

An Advent Wreath Workshop is set for Nov. 20 at 7 p.m. in The Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

The Military Council of Catholic Women is sponsoring the event, which will help prepare all families and individuals for the glorious Advent Season.

Father Symes will speak on the meaning of Advent and materials for making wreaths will be supplied.

Bring a dessert to share. Call 545-1452 for more information.

Arts & Crafts — The Arts & Crafts Center is offering a color printing class from 1 to 9 p.m. today for $3. Supplies needed are color paper and color negatives. For more information, please call 545-3677.

The Arts & Crafts Center Shop is offering a Glazing Seminar tomorrow from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Cost is $3.

Painting classes are being offered each Sunday. Cost is only $1; no preregistration required. Starting time is 10 a.m. and it lasts until closing.

Santa's Castle — We are still in need of a lot of toys and volunteers to repair them to help make service members' children happy on Christmas morning.

You can drop off your donations at the Main PX and the Main Post Fire Station. For more information, call 545-1233.

Kelley Hill Recreation Center — You only have a couple of days left to register for the popular french bread baking class. Deadline for registration is Sunday.

Cost for this course is only $7, which includes ingredients for four loaves of bread. The instructor will bake bread for the class to sample at conclusion. Register now before all the spaces are filled!

The Kelley Hill Recreation Center announces the following schedule of computer classes for November and December:

"Intro to Computers" — Nov. 18 and 20 from 6 to 8 p.m. (one four-hour session). Dec. 2 and 4 from 6 to 8 p.m. (one four-hour session). This four-hour course is a must for all who want to get started on the basics. Cost is $25.

"Word Star" — Dec. 9 and 11 from 6 to 8 p.m. (part one of two parts). Dec. 16 and 18 from 6 to 8 p.m. (part two of two parts). This word processing package is popular in civilian communities. Cost for this eight-hour class is $60.

"MS-DOS" — Nov. 17, 19, and 21 from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. (one six-hour session). Nov. 22 and 29 from 12:30 to 6:30 p.m. (one six-hour session). "MS-DOS" is the next step after "Intro." Cost for the six-hour session is $35.

All computer classes are open to soldiers and Department of the Army civilians. Payment for classes, either by cash, check or DD 1556, must be received prior to first class session. No spaces may be reserved by telephone; only payment guarantees slot in class.

A limited number of students may be accepted for each course, so register as early as possible. Payment must be made in person at the Rec Center, Building 9079.

The Rec Center is hosting the 18th Annual Amateur Art Show and Exhibit the first week in December. Art to be displayed is now being solicited.

This event is open to all soldiers, active duty and retired, family members (16 years of age and up), and DA civilians (including NAF employees).

Categories include oils, water colors, graphics, photography, sculptures, and open media.

Entries must be the work of the person entering and completion must fall within the past two years.

Entries will be accepted at the Center from Nov. 26 until 4 p.m. Dec. 5. All entries will be displayed until 4 p.m. Dec. 7. If you are talented and would like to share your talent with the community, call the Kelley Hill Rec Center and make arrangements to bring in an entry (or two).

The monthly Round-Robin 8 Ball Tourney will be tomorrow at 1 p.m. No entry fee is required and a trophy will be awarded to the winner.

The tournament is open to all soldiers, active duty and retired. Call 544-3079 after noon Wednesay through Saturday for details about all activities.

Energy Update

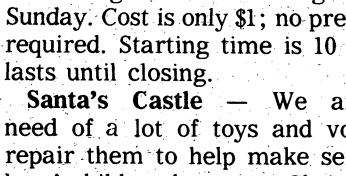
by Marion Bazemore
Fort Monroe, Va. Casemate

Your latest electric bill may encourage you to take extra steps to reduce energy use. If you practice energy conservation daily, you can reduce your monthly bill.

Heating water is second to heating and cooling a home in energy consumption. There are two avenues to energy conservation in water heating:

- Reduce the amount of hot water used and the fuel used to heat it.
- Modify the system to prevent loss and increase efficiency.

The following tips are offered to help you save in these areas:



- Don't buy a hot water heater with a greater capacity than is needed for your family size.
- The temperature of the water may be in excess of what is needed. In homes with dishwashers, 140 degrees Fahrenheit is usually recommended. However, a setting of 120 to 130 degrees Fahrenheit normally provides adequate hot water for most families.
- Take more showers than tub baths. Showers use less hot water. You can install a shower water restrictor in the pipe at the showerhead to restrict the flow of water. If you have a family with teen-agers, you'll recognize the savings potential with this. Also, don't leave hot water running in the basin when shaving or just cleaning up.
- When using the dishwasher, make sure you have a full load. An average dishwasher uses 14 gallons of hot water for each load. Scrape the dishes before placing them in the dishwasher. Rinsing is seldom necessary, but when it is, use cold water. Also, let the dishes air dry. After the final rinse, turn off the control knob and open the door.
- Wash clothes in warm or cold water and rinse in cold water. Use hot only when necessary. Presoak or use a soak cycle when washing heavily soiled garments. Wash full loads. If you must wash a partial load, select the water level to fit the load.
- Use cold water when operating the garbage disposal. Grease solidifies in cold water and can be ground up and flushed away easily.

In a nation where people love to save, wasting money is out of place. Do your part and start saving energy today!

Seminar aims to increase quality of life on post

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

It's the little things that make life enjoyable, or miserable.

Recognizing this, a Fort Benning family seminar in July brought together unit representatives and family services staffers to look at ways to improve the quality of life of people on post.

The group spent a day making suggestions and airing complaints about a variety of subjects, ranging from service at the post exchange to traffic problems.

After the seminar, the suggestions were sent to the appropriate agencies for action, and Linda McGee, Family Services director, Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities, said she's happy to report some real changes.

"What I feel good about is that representatives from all units and organizations on post had a chance to bring about real changes in the quality of life of each individual family on post," she said.

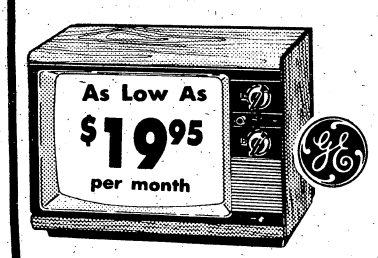
She said that too many people feel frustrated by the little problems in day-to-day living, but that they don't know what to do about them.

"People are part of the solution," McGee said. "Sometimes people don't feel they're being heard, and this seminar gave them a good opportunity to effect change."

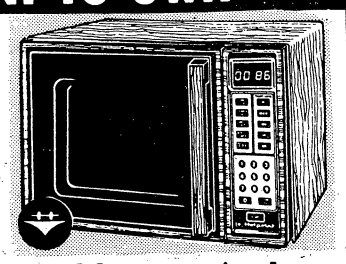
Some major changes can be expected at Youth Activities, for example. "People had many complaints about YA's programs not meeting the needs of young people on post, and as a result YA is completely revamping its programs," she said.

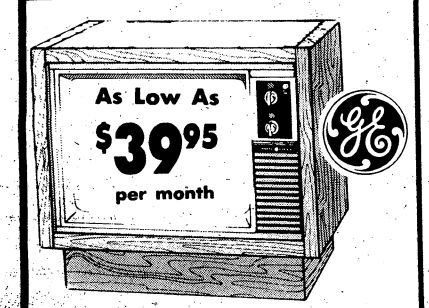
McGee said many of things that happened as a result of the seminar were already in the works, but that the seminar "helped hurry them along."

One major change is the extending the operating hours of the commissary to give working families more time to shop in the evenings. As a direct result of the seminar, the commissary is going to use a test evening schedule for the next three months, to see if customers will use it at night.

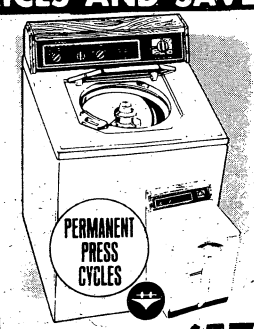


McGee said many of the issues raised are the result of poor information on the part of residents. For example, some complained about the lack of orthodontic care on post, and when she checked on it, she found that it is available here.





"That taught me that we must continuously work to keep people informed about services available to them," she said.



Another change that came as a result of the seminar concerned wearing the battle dress uniform off post. The commanding general approved wear of BDUs in fast food restaurants last month.

NCO Club's dinner theater serving up Broadway comedy

Non-Commissioned Officers' Club

A two-character comedy that one critic hailed at its opening on Broadway as a "love letter to the world," will be the next attraction at the Main NCO Club dinner theater.

"Same Time, Next Year" by Bernard Slade opens here at 8 p.m. Nov. 23 and will run for one night only.

The play ran for more than three years in New York City and broke house records in theaters all over the world.

Doris Orzano and Russell Lynne of the nationally acclaimed Alpha Omega Players will star as lovers who are married, but not to each other.

The entire action of "Same Time, Next Year" takes place in the same guest cottage of a country inn in Northern California. During the 25 years covered in the six scenes of the play, the couple spends a weekend there every succeeding year.

As the play opens, they are in bed. They met only hours earlier in the motel's restaurant. He is from New Jersey and on a business trip. She is from Oakland and on her way to a religious retreat. The year is 1951.

Slowly they become acquainted. They fall in love with each other, but not out of love with their respective mates. They decide to meet again the following year.

And so we see these two at regular intervals in their extended relationship. Both of them change drastically through the years. They have arguments, they make up, they compress into the short time they have together all the appearances of a marriage.

The laugh-laced action of "Same Time, Next Year" will be directed by Drexel H. Riley, producer and director of the Alpha Omega Players.

The meal will be served from 6:15 to 7:15 p.m. and consists of chateaubriand with sauce bernaise, asparagus with hollandaise sauce, potatoes au gratin, caesar salad, and a parfait for dessert. Cost of the dinner theater is $12.95. Reservations are requested and can be confirmed by calling 687-0600.

Tommy L. High sweeps the right side on a Charlie Dog power play.

Charlie Dogs down opponents in grueling overtime struggle

The Bayonet sports writer

The U. S. Army Infantry Center Football Championships continued this week as the 43rd Engineer Battalion Charlie Dogs pulled out a 7-6 win in an overtime struggle against the 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade team Monday night.

The two teams took the field at Gowdy Stadium in championship form, sticking to a 6-6 tie in regular play.

The game officials, without the aid of the instant replay, reversed two 5th Bn. touchdowns and one Co. C play in the endzone.

On the opening play from scrimmage, Kevin Tollefson rushed 40 yards along the left end for a touchdown, only to see it called back with offsetting penalties.

The temporary setback did not break the spirit of the ITB team. Michael Jones connected with Scott L. Warner on a 30-yard pass to the 10-yard line, only to have the next pass picked off by Dog defensive back Martin L. Fair.

The Charlie Dogs were unable to move the ball until their third possesion, when Lawrence Matthews, after receiving the punt, tossed a lateral to Ivory R. Melton, who galloped 25 yards, just short of mid-field.

Two plays later, Matthews hit Carl J. Lindsey, beating Warner on a 38-yard play, to set up Co. C's only touchdown.

With a minute remaining in the half, Melton powered through the middle, giving the Dogs a 6-0 halftime edge.

The 5th Bn. answered the call on the first possesion of the second half.

A roughing the passer call gave the ball back to the 5th Bn., continuing the drive.

Several plays later, Jones found his favorite receiver, Daryl P. Niles on a 30-yard touchdown pass.The game was then locked 6-6.

The Dogs were unable to move the ball after Melton's 25-yard run was negated by a protecting the flag penalty.

Forced to punt, the Dogs turned the ball over on the 40-yard line.

The 5th Bn. team seemed to want the punishment, as the penalty ghost once again reared its head.

With only seconds remaining, Jones again connected with Niles on a 40-yard touchdown, only to have an illegal procedure call bring it back.

The Dogs fought hungrily in the overtime for the yardage needed to claim a victory on penetration. When the dust in the pit had cleared, the Dogs were ahead 7-6.

Fort Benning teen-ager believes youth is advantage in power lifting competition

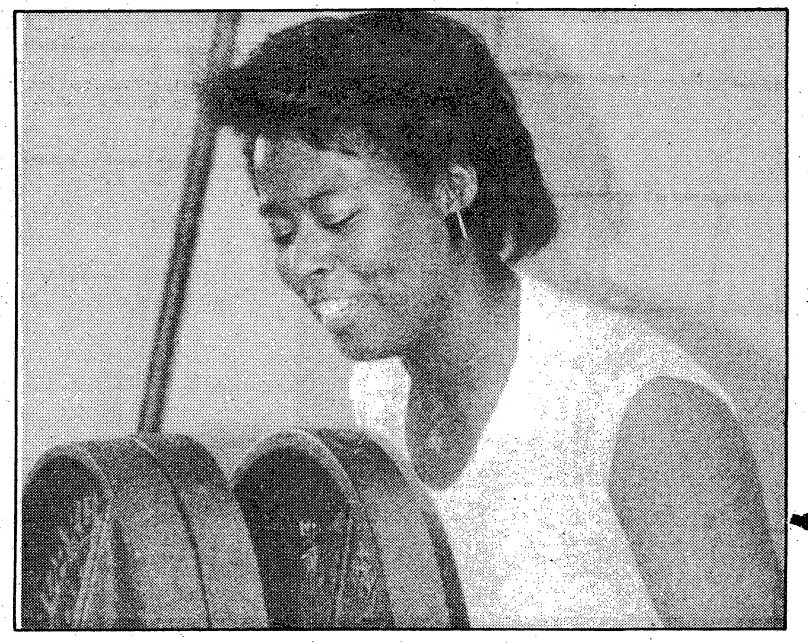
The Bayonet sports writer

It's been more than a year since Jackie Hopkins felt the competitive edge. But, it will be coming back to her Nov. 22 when she travels to Fort Stewart, Ga. to represent Fort Benning in a power lifting competition.

The 18-year-old power lifter, first competed in last year's Panama City Annual Carnival, where she bested the lifts of two veteran contenders.

The first place victory in the 132-pound class came when Hopkins benched 110 pounds, squatted 290 pounds and pulled 375 pounds from the dead lift.

Hopkins believes her age provides her with an advantage in the sport. "I have a lot of energy to use in the strenuous workout that my coach puts me through," she said.



Even with a busy training schedule, Hopkins finds time to pursue the typical activities teenagers find pleasurable.

"I enjoy reading, listening to music and meeting people," Hopkins said. "But, my favorite pastime is lifting.

Accompaning a daily four-hour workout, Hopkins sticks to a specific diet. "I combine the training in the gym with a daily run and bike ride, but maintain a diet of three square vitamin-filled meals each day.

This may be Hopkins' final opportunity to represent Fort Benning as she prepares to join the military in mid-December.

Hoping to add more than 100 pounds in each of the three weight areas, Hopkins is looking forward to the Fort Stewart competition.

Youth Activities football heats up in weekend challenges

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

A total offense of 325 yards brought the Cougars from behind to edge the Dolphins 10-8, in a Youth Activities Football matchup Saturday.

The Cougar offense rolled 236 yards on the ground while passing quarterback Jason Gardner threw for 86 yards in the victory.

It was the Dolphins drawing first blood on a first-half touchdown.

But, when John Pierson and Marlin Murrel pressured the Dolphins to a two-yard return on the second half opening kickoff, it was apparent that the "Purple People Eater" defense was not to be denied.

Duke Duplesis, leader of the sackpack, shutdown the Dolphins, allowing only one first down in the second half.

Gardner then took charge, marching the purple and gold offense 70 yards downfield using running back Bryant Sheppard and wide reciever Antoin Morris.

The drive ended in a 15-yard pass completion to tight end Bobby "Mr. Wonderful" Dejesus in the endzone. After a two point conversion by Bryant Sheppard the score was tied at 8-8.

On the Cougars' next possesion, they used power and effective ball control to move down to the Dolphin 5-yard line. But, a holding penalty caused a turnover, and the Cougars again relied on their Purple People Eater defense to hold the line.

With 1:23 on the clock, Armando Dellarosso, Sam Fowler and Dubios Wright crashed through the Dolphin offensive line to assist in the sack that was the game winning touchback.

In other football action, the Redskins skinned the Bears 14-0 with a punishing 242 yard offensive performance and tenacious, intimidating defense.

Scoring began with linebacker Sean Burke sacking the Bear quarterback seven yards in the endzone for a safety, assisted by middle guard Willey Tuiolosega.

A few plays later, Burke led the charge to block a Bear punt inside the 10-yard line. Punishing line play and artistic running by "Marcus" Allen White, resulted in a three-yard touchdown.

The Redskin ground attack was led by tailbacks Robert Beverly and White, combining for 191 yards rushing.

The surprise play of the game occurred with less than two minutes remaining on the game clock.

Sheddrick White, a leader of the vaunted "Smurf" defense, cracked the line, finding himself four yards deep in the Bears backfield. A hurried pitch to a surprised Bear fullback was casually accepted by White, who scampered 35 yards with the pigskin for another Redskin touchdown.

Football action continued, as the Packers routed the Broncos 33-0 in the season's hardest hitting game.

Charles Pittman combined with Lovell Trotter to form one of the most awesome one-two punches in a fast backfield.

Pittman rushed 130 yards and scored three touchdowns, including a 65-yard touchdown interception.

The second half of the knockout punch, Trotter, powered 150 yards, scoring two touchdowns.

The offensive line was spearheaded by tackles John "Big John" Allen and Michael Perry.

The defensive struggle that kept the Broncos off the scoreboard was lead by Phillip Kilpatrick, Harlan Dews and Kevis Rasheed.

'Infantry Magazine' victin of DoD budget constraints

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

"Infantry Magazine," will be directly affected by a 55 percent cut in the Defense Department's periodicals program.

"Based on an Oct. 31 Department of the Army message, we at 'Infantry' are publishing on an issue by issue basis," said magazine editor Albert Garland.

"In the future, all service school journals will come under a new publication program currently under development by Training and Doctrine Command. We have no idea how 'Infantry' will look or how often it will be published," Garland explained.

According to "Infantry's" editor, TRADOC is considering many different options, including a quarterly publication, as opposed to the present bimonthly. He is also anticipating restrictions on graphics, color a paper quality.

"On a personal level, this de sion hurts. Service school ma zines like 'Infantry' are v valuable tools. We are not public relations publication, bu professional forum where li minded professionals can disse inate the latest in tactics, ide and thought with regard to t infantry," Garland said.

"Infantry" has been in cont uous publication since 1920, ginning as the Infantry Sch Mailing List with a pamph entitled "Tactical Problems The only time it ever missed issue was because of a pap shortage in 1945.

"We have 66 years worth effort and evolution here. If could publish the magazine du ing the great depression, we c surely publish it now," Garla said.

Former post commander honorec

Higher education key to reaching goals

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Picture an average command sergeant major with about 20 years in the Army. He's an infantryman. That's a basic premise. He served with a Ranger company in Vietnam. The man has some impressive qualifications, obviously.

How did he make it to the level he's at in today's Army?

He probably went to a lot of schools.

One thing that many soldiers, new troops as well as seasoned veterans, don't often give a lot of thought to is education. Yes, that present day command sergeant major has seen some schools in his time.

He started out with Basic Combat Training, which has evolved into infantry One Station Unit Training — 13 weeks. He then went to Airborne School, three weeks, and Ranger School, about seven weeks. Later on down the line, he probably went to the Basic Non-commissioned Officer Course, five weeks. (Today's rising NCO would also have to attend the Primary Leadership Development Course — four weeks.) As he progressed up the ladder, he undoubtedly went to the Advanced Non-commissioned Officer Course, 12 weeks, the First Sergeants' Course and the Sergeants' Major Academy - six months.

The basic leadership development courses that make up the Army Non-commissioned Officer Education System account for about two years of an enlisted person's career. Add in a few others like Airborne and Ranger Schools, maybe Drill Sergeant School for the really motivated NCO, the jumpmaster and Pathfinder courses, . . .you get the idea . . .

The Army spends a lot of money and a lot of time to train its soldiers. NCOES courses are becoming requirements for promotion to certain grades. The PLDC is now a prerequisite before a soldier can be promoted to staff sergeant. Successful completion of the ANCOC is necessary before an NCO can become a sergeant major.

There is also increased emphasis on pursuing civilian education.There seems to be a trend toward a more educated force. Red flags are popping up in many soldiers' minds. The flags are making them stop and take notice of the importance of education. The Army's slogans: "Be all you can be" and "Reach for Excellence" are telling soldiers to seek self-improvement.

The Army joins the nation in observing American Education Week through Nov. 22. The goal of Army leadership is to increase soldiers' awareness and understanding of education's value.

"The time when we could simply finish our formal schooling and go to work is gone," according to Col. Bruce T. Battey, chief of the Army Education System in Washington, D.C. "Today, education is a lifelong endeavor. Regardless of our career intentions, we each need to take full advantage of the opportunities education offers just to keep pace with the world around us."

Counselors at Army Education Centers all over the world are helping today's soldiers keep pace. Programs are presently ongoing that target soldiers who have never explored education's many advantages. Through the combination of military and civilian education programs, soldiers can develop a plan that compliments their job and mission requirements and satisfies future career goals.

Future career goals is a key concept to understand. Even if you don't plan to stay in the Army and work toward becoming a command sergeant major, there are courses you can pursue that will help you achieve your goals as a civilian.

Whatever your future holds, whether you have designs on becoming the sergeant major of the Army, a corporate executive or a gas station owner, the more education you have, the better your chances at achieving that goal.

Majoring in fun won't give you any marketable skills

But partying memories will last lifetime

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

An education is only as good as what you choose to make of it.

When I went to college, sweet 17 and right out of high school, I had no more idea what I wanted to be "when I grew up" than the man in the moon.

So, I majored in having a good time and minored in academics. I did have a lot of fun, but now, 10 years later, I wish somebody had told me about the "fun" to be had in some of the courses I didn't take.

At the liberal arts institution I attended, the curriculum was set up to give students a choice of electives, which meant I could wrangle my way out of taking anything that sounded boring.

As a result, I didn't take art or music or philosophy, opting instead for Beginning Swimming and "Baby" math. The math turned out to be the right choice, since I never did grasp the principles of modern Algebra. But since I already knew how to swim, all I got out of that course was thinner thighs and chlorined hair.

Today I still can't tell you the difference between Beethoven and Bach, and I regret that. It is so embarrassing to get on an elevator where some classical tune is being piped in and there I am, with no earthly idea who wrote it. There's always some musical connoisseur riding with me who knows for a fact that it's Bach's fifth sonata, written before he went blind at the age of 12. I'm just not safe anywhere.

And my art expertise consists of regularly mistaking great works of art for the latest Twisted Sisters' album cover. This is really not so bad because some of their album covers do get pretty spiritual, but let's just say it limits the number of gallery openings I can attend. I mean, I even get nervous critiquing the art on display at parents' night at my daughter's elementary school.

But that's not the worst thing about my college education. The worst thing of all was that after four years, I marched across that stage and received a bachelor of arts degree that equipped me to do absolutely nothing.

Of course, I completed the requirements for graduation in my declared major (economics), but all I had was a head full of concepts and ideas that smart people had come up with before me, which I couldn't keep straight five minutes past exam time. I had no idea how to use this vast knowledge to make a positive contribution to society.

There I was, just dying to make a positive contribution (to my bank account,) and my only marketable skill was a typing class I'd taken my sophomore year in high school.

So I got a job working for the government. Gradually, through intensive and lengthy on-the-job training, I managed to pick up a few skills and learn how to do something to earn a living.

Uncle Sam took my typing skills, taught me how to keypunch, and in no time at all I was pulling down $500 a month. Of course my college tuition, room and board cost me more than $12,000, and that's not including spending money, or my time.

Don't misunderstand me. I'm not telling all the happy-go-lucky college students out there to quit partying. Your parents have already told you that your school days are the best years of your life, and you will remember the fun and good times forever. And your parents know, since those are the best years they can remember.

But, just remember that college is important. You are there for a very important purpose — to learn something useful. It may be something that will pay you big bucks in the marketplace (medicine, law, engineering), or that will equip you to pass on your knowledge to others for the good of mankind (teaching, research, journalism).

Or it may be that little bit of trivia that allows you to shine at a cocktail party, like who played first base with the Boston Red Sox during the 1938 World Series.

In any case, you will be making your education work for you, and that's what it's all about.

Op-Ed

CFC monies benefit post residents

Army News Service

Some service members who donate yearly to the Combined Federal Campaign may not know that some of that money returns to their installations' Youth Activities in the form of special grants from the nation's regional United Way campaigns. Armed with that knowledge, they might be inclined not just to continue their donations but also to increase them.

That appraisal comes from Stan Brown at The Pentagon, who administers the Defense Department's participation in the CFC effort for the national area. Part of his job is to apportion United Way grant monies to the area's several military installations that had a hand in raising CFC funds for a given fiscal year. He also arranges for similar apportioning to YA operations at overseas installations.

Brown notes that since the grant program's inception 10 years ago the amount of the grant has doubled for the national area. The fiscal 1987 amount was $70,000, representing a $5,000 increase over the previous year. "The grant is being distributed in direct proportion to percentages of total funds raised by the affected installations," Brown explained That same or similar practice prevails throughout most of the nation's 546 other CFC organizations.

The grant-sharing program for overseas installations is computed by using 6 percent of the funds raised at the particular installation, as calculated from the pledge cards processed during the campaign.

Also in existence for about 10 years, the overseas program has helped supplement revenues raised by the Army and Air Force Exchange Service for morale, welfare and recreation. The extra funds from grant-sharing allow the YA people to do a few things beyond what used to be available, Brown said.

"All the more reason for continued giving and for increased gifts. It's a double-edged boomerang effect here," he added. "By reaching out to all youth — civilian as well as military — in the neighborhood of an installation, local military officials qualify for a share of the grant. In the process of such mutual good will, they sustain a wholesome, positive image of the military community and of its potential for further support to local civilian needs. "In short," Brown said, "When everybody concerned with dependent youth shares in the collection of funds, that same 'everybody' shares in their distribution."

What better way is there to achieve such a result?

Local contributions reach $438,035

The Bayonet staff

Local Combined Federal Campaign contributions totalled $438,035 on Wednesday, almost 88 percent of Fort Benning's goal.

Approximately 15,000, or half, of the federal employees in the area have chipped in.

CFC project officers should turn in all funds and pledge cards collected before Nov. 26 before the Thanksgiving holiday. The CFC project office will be closed Nov. 28.

Although the campaign ends in early December, project officers have a deadline of Dec. 17 to complete unit coverage and turn in their collections.

The Office of Personnel Management of the executive branch of the federal government has directed that the Federal Employee Education and Assistance Fund be added as an agency eligible to receive CFC donations. The organization provides funds to federal employees, their families and survivors for retraining or outplacement in the case of reductions in force or furloughs, emergency relief and educational scholarships for employees, survivors and dependents.

Person's honesty depends on how severely it's tested

by Mary McClure
Fort Devens Dispatch, Fort Devens, Mass.

If somebody asked us, "are you honest?" we'd probably snap back indignantly, "Of course!"

What if they persisted, "Just how honest are you?"

We'd hem and haw about how we have our standards, you can't measure honesty and so on.

"Would you steal?"

"Certainly not."

"Would you steal to keep from going hungry?"

"Possibly."

"Would you cheat on a test to make an A? Would you cheat to keep from failing?"

"Would you lie?"

"Of course not."

Press far enough and it comes down to degrees of honesty.

We wouldn't cheat on our income tax — except maybe a little on charities. We would have given that much if someone had asked us, right?

We wouldn't cheat at the grocery store. If they gave us a buck too much in change, we'd give it right back, right? Unless we felt the store grossly overcharged on every item, anyway.

Everybody's got a breaking point.

I consider myself a very honest person. I don't lie, don't steal, don't cheat, don't run around with guys who do.

I've always been proud of my ethical standards and tended to have little respect for those without them.

In light of all of this, it came as quite a blow to discover that I can be bought with four sacks of salted peanuts.

A candy machine was installed just outside our office door.

I stared into the machine, agonizing between a chocolate bar and peanuts, but finally opted for a small pack of peanuts for 40 cents.

I dropped in a couple of quarters, pushed the button and watched the bag drop off the rack and plunk to the bottom.

It's always a pleasant surprise when a machine works so I happily reached in and pulled out the peanuts.

No change. I pushed the coin return vigorously. No dime returned.

I hit the button for peanuts again. To my surprise, another bag of peanuts fell down. Curious, I tried again. Another bag. When I got the fourth free bag, I realized I could probably get every bag of peanuts in the machine.

But at that point my conscience, apparently numbed by this good fortune, reared up and shouted, "No! No more peanuts."

Sitting back, savoring my salted peanuts, it occurred to me that I am a disgusting specimen of womankind: a small-time crook.

It took 30 pieces of silver to buy history's most reviled traitor.

All it takes to compromise my honor is four bags of salted peanuts.

Court report

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

SP4 Jeffery A. Johnson, a soldier assigned to Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade, was court-martialed Nov. 17, for being absent without leave from his unit and for larceny of a camper that belonged to the U.S. Army.

The prosecution introduced evidence that Johnson leased a camper from the Fort Benning Outdoor Recreation Center May 1. He moved all his family's personal possessions into the camper then departed Fort Benning for West Virginia without legal authority.

Johnson was convicted for being AWOL for 134 days and for larceny of a $1,250 camper. The military judge sentenced the soldier to be reduced to the rank of private, to forfeit all pay and allowances, to serve 18 months confinement and receive a bad-conduct discharge.

Pvt.2 Douglas Walker, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry, was convincted Nov. 10 of the wrongful appropriation of a rental car and a 55-day period of absent without leave.

Rather than obtaining emergency leave, Walker failed to return a rental car that he had rented from the Fort Benning Car Rental, and went AWOL to Gaffney, S.C. He then traveled about between South Carolina and Tennessee. The rental car broke down and was abandoned in the parking lot of a restaurant.

Walker and Pvt. 2 Barbara Major, also of HHC, 1-507th, were apprehended by the police in Wartburg, Tenn. and brought back to Fort Benning.

The judge sentenced Walker to a bad conduct discharge, confinement for 10 months, forfeiture of $400 per month for 10 months, and reduction to private.

Judge Sebert Trail sentenced Pvt. 1 Derwood P. Lilly, Company B, 1-507th PIR, to a bad conduct discharge, confinement for 20 months, total forfeitures of pay and allowances and reduction to private for writing 26 worthless checks.

These checks were written between May 4 and June 16 and were cashed at various branches of the Army and Air Force Force Exchange System at Fort Jackson, S.C., and here.

Lilly obtained more than $2,100 in cash and merchandise and at the time of trial had not made any restitution to AAFES.

Lilly had been convicted for writing worthless checks in Columbus in September and at the time of his court-martial was awaiting trial in Muscogee County Superior Court for additional charges.

Capt. Leamond Stuart, commander of Co. B, testified that Lilly had had a detrimental effect on the discipline, efficiency and mission of the unit and that he lacked any rehabilitative potential for future service in the military.

Clarks Hill projects give soldiers 'wartime' experience

by Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Soldiers from the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group wrapped up projects at Clarks Hill, Ga., recently and returned to Fort Benning.

During October the engineers, aided by soldiers from Company D, 92nd Engineer Battalion from Fort Gordon, Ga., and the Savannah District Corps of Engineers, completed many projects at the Clarks Hill Recreation Area.

"The only project we haven't been able to finish due to time constrictions is the dam and road around it, but the Corps of Engineers will have it completed after the rainy season ends," said Capt. Steven Wabnitz, Company B commander.

According to Wabnitz, the soldiers tackled a number of projects under adverse weather conditions, including the unfinished dam and the road around it to create a fishing area for Boy and Girl Scout campers. They also constructed four gravel roads, a 350-foot long foot bridge and a seven-level observation tower.

The soldiers also cleared out a 100-car parking lot, installed seven culverts and 17 electrical and plumbing hookups.

"This is exactly what we'd do if deployed to war. We build things. This was good training," Wabnitz said.

"The soldiers have really put in a lot of effort and gained a lot of combat skills. The observation tower alone was finished 13 days ahead of the proposed schedule," Wabnitz said.

Lt. Col. Charles S. Rust, 43rd Engineer Battalion commander, said, "For one month the soldiers sustained themselves and took care of their equipment. It was a super job."

Engineers set up tactical field site during exercise

Story and photos
by Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

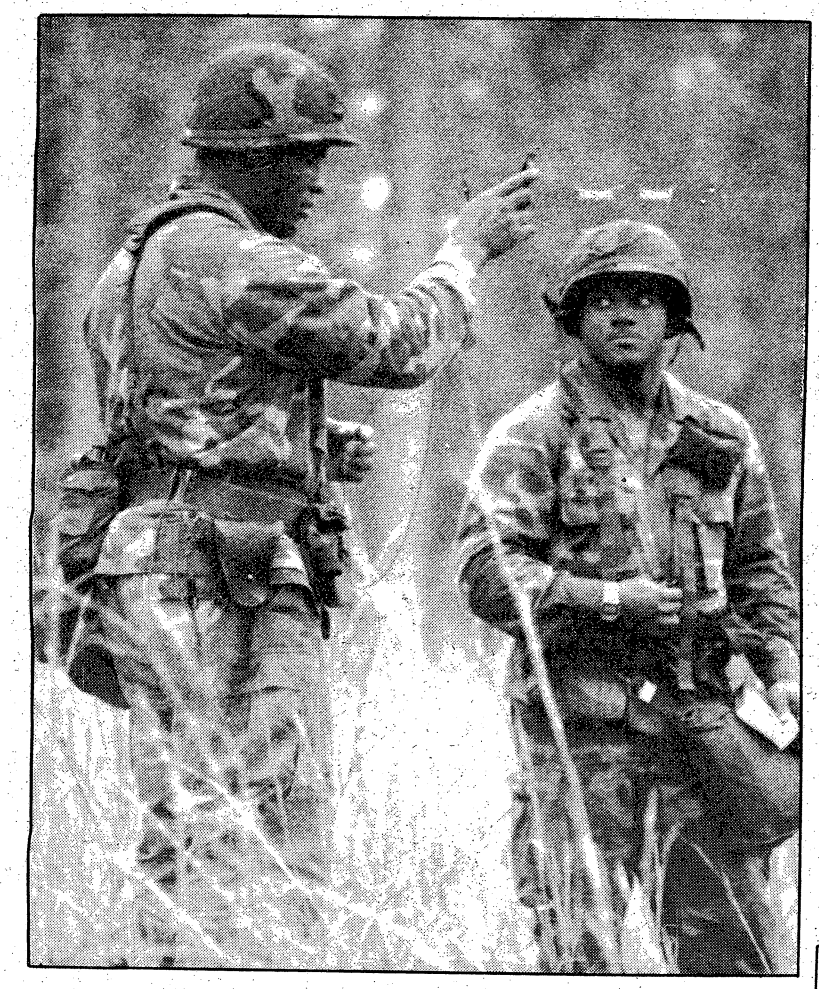
Under the command of Capt. Darrell Johnson, soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group, deployed to Fort Stewart, Ga., for a field training exercise recently in support of an Army Training and Evaluation Program.

According to Maj. Bill Ward, the Group's executive officer, the Company's main mission was to deploy and up a tactical field headquarters in support of Fort Stewart's 92nd Engineer Battalion ARTEP.

"The exercise was unique in that it was an off-post deployment," Ward said.

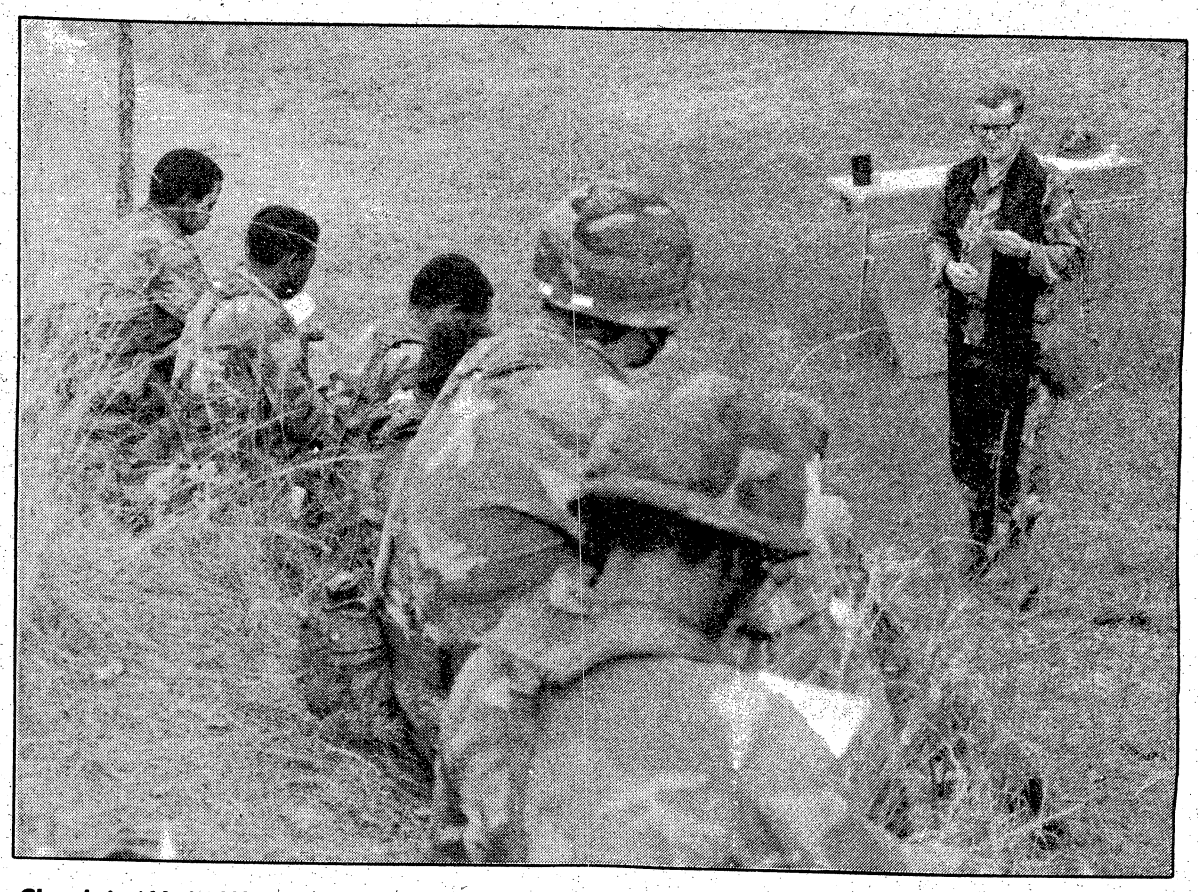
The exercise was initiated with an unannounced Emergency Deployment Readiness Exercise Nov. 12, after the Veterans Day holiday, but the company was ready to go in just a few hours.

The unit had planned a field training exercise but the EDRE and all the additional requirements it entailed was a surprise, according to Ward. The main body spent most of Friday in convoy and the rest of the day setting up the FTX site.



Like any other, the exercise was not without its problems.

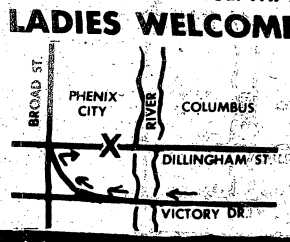
"We experienced some real-war problems during the exercise. We had no external recovery support and although we had no major breakdowns, we suffered two flat tires on trailers. In spite of that, we were able to move in, set up a tactical headquarters and serve a hot meal before dark," Ward said.



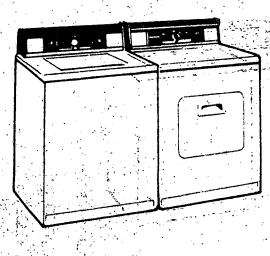
The next two days the soldiers conducted Common Task Training and worked on maintaining combat skills. In addition, the soldiers built fighting positions, conducted a six-mile tactical foot march and practiced reacting to simulated Nuclear, Biological and Chemical warfare attacks.

On Monday, the soldiers continued their training in spite of constant rain. "I can't believe it. Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings it never rains for physical training but the one time we have to crawl into a foxhole and guard our perimeter, it pours," said Pvt. 2 Susand D. Plucinski, a legal assistant.

"Just the fact that we were able to deploy the entire headquarters over a considerable distance without a major breakdown and set up a tactical headquarters on the same day demonstrates a genuine 'go-to-war' capability," Ward said.



Capt. Darrell W. Johnson checks his compass reading as Sgt. Darick E. Bowman looks on.



Chaplain (Maj.) Wayne A. Strohschein conducts Sunday worship services in the field.

Soldiers of the Bradley Basic Course observe a Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle live-fire exercise.

New soldiers see Bradley in action at Redcloud Range

29th Infantry Regiment correspondent

Soldiers preparing to enter the 29th Infantry Regiment's Bradley Basic Course recently got a preview of what to expect from the vehicle they will be training on.

Approximately 23 Bradley vehicle specialists, right out of basic training, observed the live-fire and maneuver of the M-2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle Friday on Redcloud Range.

The new introduction exercise is meant to upgrade current Bradley training, thereby producing a better qualified "11 Mike" soldier, said Capt. Steven Pinter, operations, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"It (the exercise) showed them the full capability . . . fire power, maneuverability . . . of the vehicle they will be trained to fight with," Pinter said.

SFC Jackie McGriff, branch chief to the BBC, sees the live-fire exercise as a motivator for the new soldiers.

He said, "They will probably be more geared up to learn some of the more potent techniques necessary to keep the vehicle operational."

The BBC incorporates approximately 30 different tasks. Included are safety aspects, how to perform preventive maintenance checks and services, how to use communication equipment, combat driving techniques, how to swim and fire M-231 firing port weapons.

McGriff predicted that the new soldiers will undoubtedly compare the Bradley to the M-113 personnel carrier.

"And they all will agree that the Bradley is a better vehicle to have in combat," said McGriff.

After observing the live-fire exercise, Pvt. 1 Eric Brownstein, was enthusiastic. "It's (the Bradley) unbelievable! I think it could help to prevent war." he said. "I know if I were the enemy, I wouldn't want to go up against that (the Bradley)."

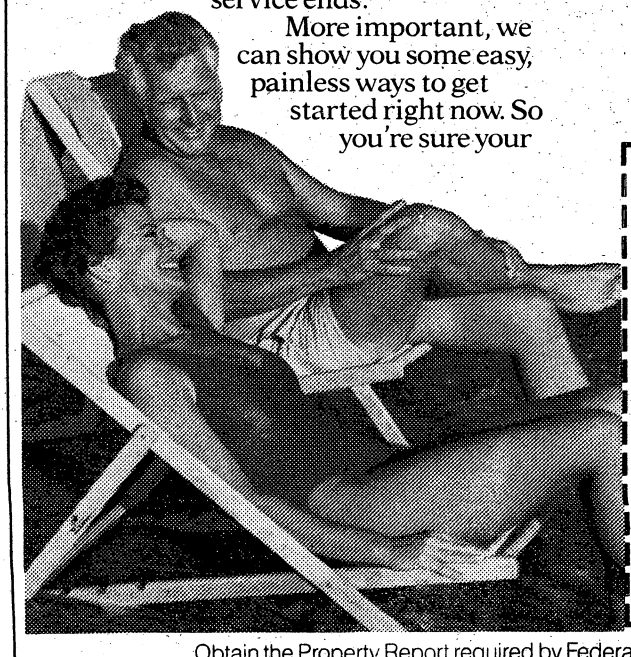
The end of November signals the beginning of the major holiday season. With the coming of the holidays, many families are preparing to visit family and friends. The Fort Benning Military Police would like to remind the community of a few tips for having a safe and enjoyable holiday season.



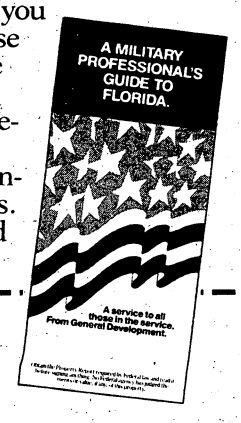
If you are planning to depart the local area, make sure all of your valuables are protected while you are gone. Check to ensure all doors and windows equipped with working locks. Account for all keys. Repair or replace borken or missing window panes.

If you're using public transportation, you can take a few precautions, also. Never carry large sums of cash; use credit cards and traveler's checks. Make sure your luggage is properly tagged and locked.

By making use of these and other precautions, you can have a safe and enjoyable holiday.

Serving those who serve proudly.

At General Development, we're as proud of our service record as you are of yours. To date, we've helped more than 12,000 military people—and their families—find beautiful, affordable places in the sun.



If Florida is part of your future, we can put nine different communities at your command. Each offering the complete, recreation-filled Florida lifestyle you dream of living when your military service ends.

More important, we can show you some easy, painless ways to get started right now. So you're sure your dream is waiting for you two, five, 10 years down the line.

We know the special needs military families have. And we have the experience and the resources to meet them.

Why not let us serve you—by giving you all the information you need to make all the wise decisions you should be making now.

Don't let that retirement sneak up on you, leaving you facing expensive last-minute choices. Send us the coupon and put time on your side.

36th Engineer Gp

The Earthmoving Platoon from Company D, 43rd Engineer Battalion literally moved mountains at Malone 22 Range recently.

With the revision of the program of instruction for the "Squad in the Attack," Malone 22 had to be revamped. The engineers were tasked to turn the rolling landscape into a series of mountains, valleys and ridges.

The roar of heavy equipment filled the air in Sand Hill during October as the engineers tackled the project with vigor. All major pieces of construction equipment actively participated in the project. Young equipment operators received valuable training on the equipment and in construction techniques.

The Earthmoving Platoon had to maximize the work effort on the range to preclude an extended closing of the facility to the Infantry School. With the engineers' dedicated effort, the range was closed a minimum time and the new facility was turned over to the Infantry School ahead of schedule. — Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion.

Sgt. Mark Carter grades a new road constructed on Malone 22 Range.

The 608th Ordnance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group change of command took place Nov. 1.

Capt. Kathleen S. Cornelius relinquished command to Capt. Carl E. Runyon.

Cornelius took command of the 608th in May 1985. During her command the unit participated in Bright Star '85 in Egypt and two rotations at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif. in support of the 197th Infantry Brigade.

The unit was also successful in satisfactorily completing its Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program and two Emergency Deployment Readiness Exercises.

Cornelius will become the 36th Engineer Group supply officer.

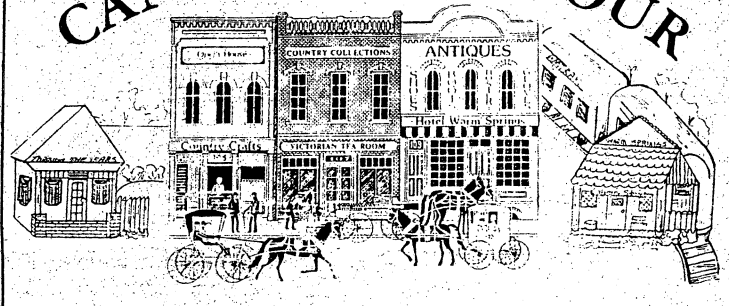
Runyon served as the battalion supply officer in the 67th Maintenance Battalion prior to taking the command of the 608th Ordnance Company. — Lana Guyton, 608th Ordnance Company.

2nd ITB

It was a muggy and humid day for the annual Marine Corps Marathon Nov. 2 in Washington D.C. Among the field of 11,322 runners was a team representing the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

The Eagle Brigade's team, consisting of Capt. German Garcia, 1st Lts. John Underwood and Mark Richards, SSgt. Lloyd McDonald and Cpl. Todd Copley, competed against some of the best runners in the country.

As a team they finished 16th out of the 35 teams in the marathon. They competed against such teams as the British Royal Navy team, the West Point Cross Country team and the Marine Corps team.



McDonald finished the highest among the Eagle Brigade runners with a time of 2:44:26, which placed him 123 overall. The rest of the team all placed in the top quarter.

McDonald said, "Our goal going into the race was to try as hard as we could and have everyone finish the race. It was a surprise to find out that we did so well.

"You figure these other teams get special duty that allows them plenty of time to train," McDonald said, "But all of us performed our regular duties and trained for the marathon on our own free time." — Robert Schmidt, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

Squad leaders try techniques at 'Sledgehammer Academy'

197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Off the beaten paths of Kelley Hill are trails dotted with wire obstacles, defensive positions and bunkers.

Camouflaged soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade can usually be spotted high crawling and low crawling through thick underbrush and open areas along the course, dubbed the "Sledgehammer Academy."

The Sledgehammer Academy is a training area for squads to practice several combat maneuver tactics. It affords squad leaders a chance to train their soldiers independently of platoon and company training programs.

"We sometimes get so caught up in maneuvers as a company or battalion that we overlook training at squad level," said 1st Lt. Joseph Osborne, a platoon leader in Company C, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry. "A company can live and die by what the squads do, so we are trying to empasize good squad and team training."

At the Sledgehammer Academy, the squad leader plays the role of the trainer. He must ensure that his soldiers properly maneuver the course. In order to train he must be able to perform each mission.

"Squad leaders need to train with their squads to gain confidence as leaders and to gain the confidence of their men," said Sgt. Alton Banks, a squad leader in Co. C. "The field manuals are only a guide to perform these combat missions. The squad really needs to get out and practice."

Banks has been a squad leader for three years. In training his soldiers, he tries to demonstrate the need to be serious and realistic.

"A squad leader is responsible for his men's actions," Banks said. "So it is important that he have the chance to teach and train with them.

"The Sledgehammer Academy gives a squad leader the chance to see how well his men do and to find their weaknesses," Banks added.

After the soldiers overcome the obstacles and reach the objective, they review the strong points and weaknesses of the operation and, if necessary, run the course again to smooth out any rough spots.

The Sledgehammer Academy opened in June and was recently expanded.

SP4 Paul Gray of Company C, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, mans a defensive position at Sledgehammer Academy.

SP4 Michael Lozon puts the finishing touches on an oil painting.

Soldier's interest in painting turns art into full-time hobby

197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

There are few hobbies that a person can be involved in that will bring both money and enjoyment. However, a soldier from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, has a talent that allows him to combine both.

Many of SP4 Michael Lozon's oil paintings are sold before he finishes them. The work that adorns the walls in his barracks room is a testimony to his talent.

"As a child I had eye surgery and was confined indoors," Lozon said. "So drawing and painting was a way of keeping myself busy."

Growing up, Lozon found that painting was to his liking, so it became his hobby throughout high school.

"I won the Montana State Fair painting contest and kept painting during school," he said. "I dropped painting between high school and the Army, so there was about a 10-year period that I did not paint."

Lozon said he usually works on four to six paintings at a time. During a month he can finish anywhere from six to eight paintings.

"Normally I could not afford to paint at this scale," he says. "But I take the money I make and use it to buy more paints and canvas."

Lozon can combine elements from several different photographs to create one finished painting.

"I used to give a lot of private lessons to handicapped children," Lozon said. "It really takes determination to put something down on canvas."

Shoplifting rises during holidays

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

Shoplifting increases sharply during the holiday season as exchanges increase security precautions. Army and Air Force Exchange Service statistics show shoplifting incidents rose 40 percent last December compared to the monthly average for 1985.

"We detected 907 shoplifting incidents last December compared to a monthly average of 646 for last year," said William Cafferty, deputy chief of AAFES' Safety and Security Division. The increase is typical in the retailing industry,and for this reason, exchanges augment regular security staffing during the holidays.

"We hire temporary store detectives — generally off-duty military or security police who can spot and detain shoplifters," Cafferty said. "And sales associates receive refresher training in shoplifting detection."

Cafferty explained that installation law enforcement officials are notified in all exchange shoplifting cases. Active duty personnel are subject to Uniform Code of Military Justice proceedings, which can involve court-martial. Civilian customers caught shoplifting are charged with theft of government property and revoke other privileges as well," Cafferty said. Shoplifters may lose access to post housing or be returned to the United States from overseas assignment, he explained.

Last year AAFES personnel detected 7,750 shoplifters stealing more than $250,000 worth of merchandise. "Shoplifters think no one is watching," Cafferty said, "but those 7,750 people were wrong."

Guidon bearer proudly leads way with 'color'

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Marching proudly before any formation, you will find the guidon bearer, carrying his unit colors. At ceremonies and sporting events, Army color guards often present the national colors.

For most of these soldiers, representing their unit or country by carrying its colors is not a duty they take lightly. Members of guidon and color guard teams put a lot of practice and effort into their duties.

Recently, four teams of guidon and color bearers from the 197th Infantry Brigade traveled to Fort Bragg, N.C. to participate in the XVIII Airborne Corps Color Team and Guidon competition. The soldiers competed against teams from other XVIII Airborne Corps units and won top honors in two categories.

A two-man team from Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, took first place in the guidon team category of the competition. SFC Clifton Kinsey, the team leader, gave the commands for movements such as present arms and other marching commands to the guidon bearer, SP4 Luis Rivera.

Kinsey has several years of experience in Army guidon and color team events. He explained that keeping up on the many changes in uniform and movement techniques can be the key to the success of the team.

Soldiers from the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, took second place in the four-man Color Team category.

"We were not sure what to expect from the competition," said Sgt. Ricky Naylor, the 3-7th team leader. "We didn't feel that we were as well prepared as other teams, but we were confident and ready to put our best foot forward."

"Graders from the XVIII Airborne Corps Non-commissioned Officers Academy inspected the soldiers' personal appearance and uniformity," said 197th Infantry Brigade CSM William Bell, who accompanied the teams to Fort Bragg. "Then the teams were evaluated as they executed several movements, such as right and left wheels, reverse colors, casing and uncasing the colors and present arms."

"The teams representing the 197th Infantry Brigade compet against the finest color teams i other XVIII Airborne Corps units," Bell said. "They all can out winners."

A color team from the 197th Infantry Brigade Support Battalion, and a guidon team from Company B, 197th Suppor Battalion also participated in t competition. These four teams were chosen to represent the 197th Infantry Brigade followir a competition among all units i the Brigade.

Canoe trip down river fun challenge for group

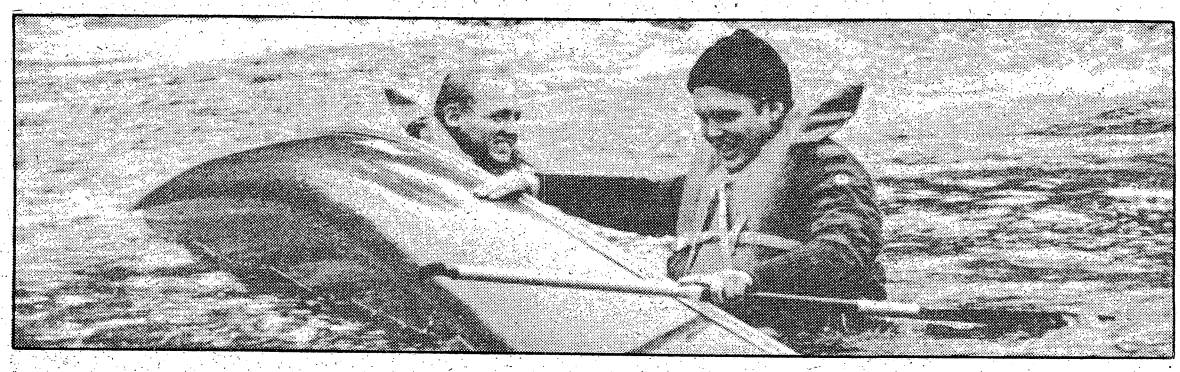
y Troy Buchanan
7th Public Affairs Office

There can be more to a canoe rip than just paddling down a iver.

When Chaplain (Capt.) John 3jarnason took soldiers from the 97th Infantry Brigade canoeing lown the Flint River last week, ıe had them compare the river to lay-to-day living.



Rocks and rapids represented obstacles that had to be over-:ome, just like those people deal vith throughout their lives.

"There are a lot of analogies nvolved here," said Bjarnason, uring the one-day trip. "Lots of things can be found to compare life to a river."

More than 20 soldiers from various Brigade units made the 10-mile trip. Bjarnason said that the rules were simple: cooperate, have fun and talk to each other.

The trip wasn't without mishap, however. More than one canoe dumped its passengers into the chilly waters of the Flint River.

Bjarnason said, "I learned a lot about canoeing. We all had fun, in spite of the cold weather. I believe it was rewarding for the soldiers and it involved some excitement and adventure.

SP4 Douglas Hale (left) and Cpl. Jerry Salisbury, both of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, take a swim after their canoe turns over in the river.

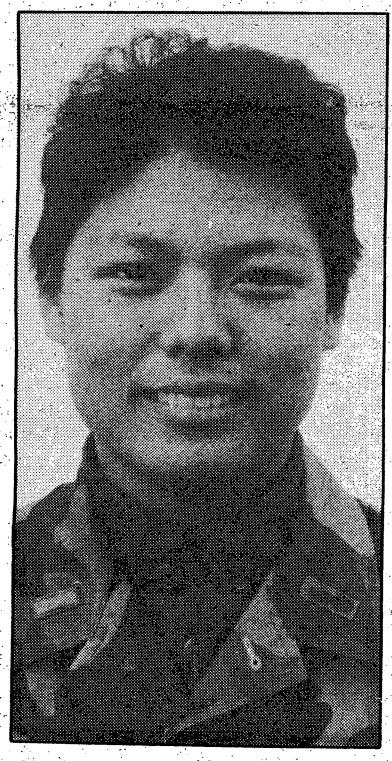
"America — land of opportu-ity."

It's a shopworn cliche for ıost people, but 2nd Lt. Hyun .im is flesh-and-blood proof that ıis country still delivers on its romise of a better way of life for ome.

Kim was born in Seoul, Korea, nd her family immigrated to the Inited States in 1975. "My father ; a mechanical engineer and he ras attracted by the opportuni-es here," Kim said.



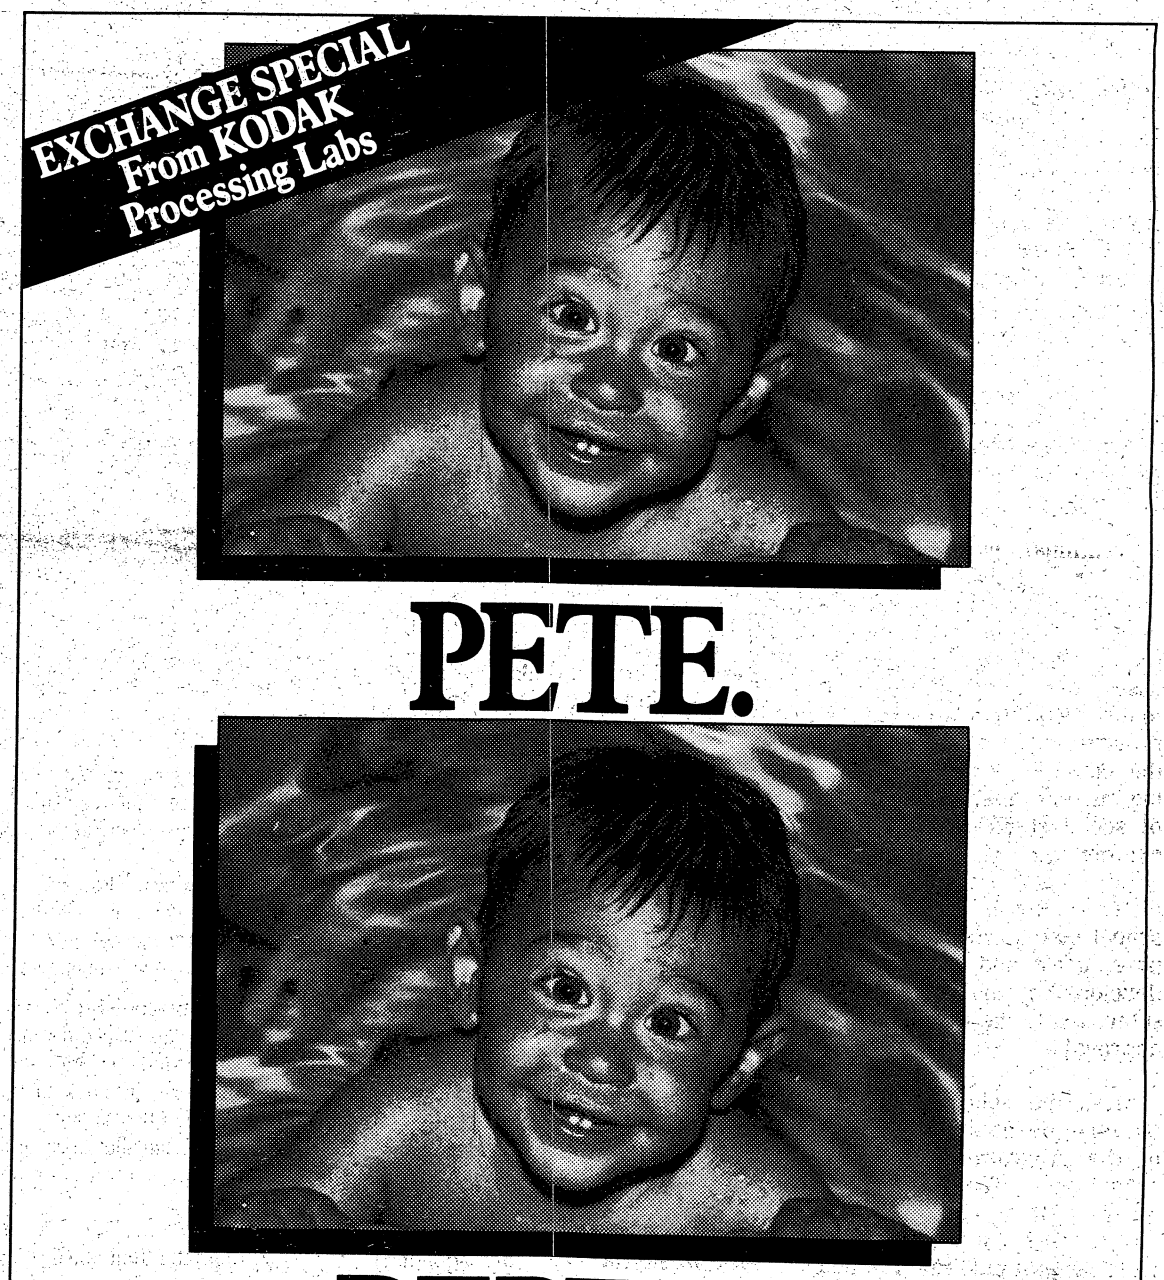
She said she became interested ı the Reserve Officer Training orps program in college, and ıe idea of competing for a cholarship challenged her. She ron the scholarship, and com-ıitted herself to serving in the rmy.

Kim recently won the William . Ryder Award as top honor raduate of Airborne Class 4-87 vith Company C, 1st Battalion, 07th Parachute Infantry Regi-ıent.

The 23-year-old Illinois native raduated from Northern Illinois Inıversity in May, with a bache-or's degree in accounting. She ras graduated from the Ord-ance Officer Basic Course at berdeen Proving Ground in Iaryland Oct. 14.

Kim said she enjoyed Airborne chool and was glad she had the pportunity to complete it. "I ıought it would be fun and a hallenge, and it sure was," she aid.

She said she was impressed vith the professionalism of the Black Hat" instructors and earned a lot from them. "Not nly about jumping, but how to ıfluence people and get them ıotivated," Kim said.



Kim

She plans to make the Army a career, which is a decision her mother has a hard time understanding. "I could be making more money as an accountant and my mother wishes I were married."

Still, her parents are proud of her accomplishments. "My father goes along with whatever I want to do," she said.

Kim said she wants to make the Army a career, "It feels good to accomplish a lot and the Army gives women that chance."

She now heads to Fort Hood, Texas, where she will be assigned to the 1st Cavalry Division, 4th Main Support. As a maintenance management officer in the Ordnance Branch, she will supervise a platoon of repairmen.

Social Studies program brings world into Benning classroom

by Suzanne Williams
Fort Benning Schools

The school, the community, the nation, the world: opportunities for learning the history, geography, governmental structure and social composition of all these areas are plentiful for Fort Benning students. Fort Benning Schools have a social studies curriculum that utilizes the many resources on post while being supplemented by a social studies textbook.

In an effort to provide current texts in each subject area, Benning schools update textbooks on a rotating cycle. This year the emphasis is on the social studies program.

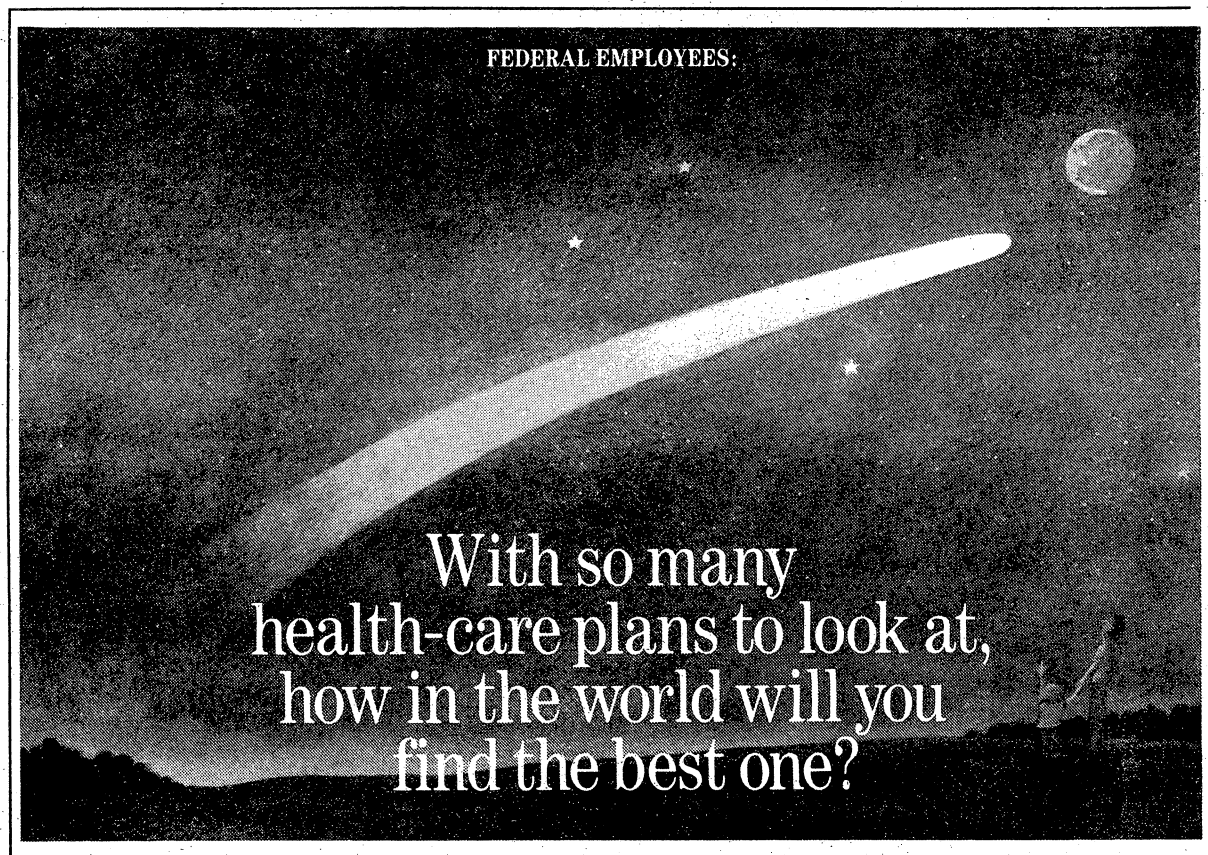
Preliminary work for the structure of a new social studies program began during the 1984-1985 school year when a committee of teachers was formed to assess the current program and make recommendations for improvement. Throughout that year the committee worked, reviewing current research in the area of social studies education and examining curriculum guides for social studies from otheinschool districts. Before the end of the school year a statement of purpose, goals and objectives was developed by the committee and submitted to the school board for approval.

After the school board's approval of the goals and objectives of the program at the end of school year 1984-1985, the committee began school year 1985-1986 carefully screening texts from several publishers to determine which programs correlated with these goals and objectives. When the field of available programs was narrowed to those the committee felt best reflected the Fort Benning goals and objectives, samples were sent to each school so that all teachers could be involved in the final selection.

After much consideration, the teachers selected textbooks from the D.C. Heath Company to compliment the guide developed by the curriculum committee. The teachers' choice was then presented to the school board for approval.

The Fort Benning Schools' social studies program provides students opportunities for learning social studies that extend well beyond the traditional classroom approach. Field trips and guest speakers highlight units of study at every level. The Fort Benning community is an integral part of social studies education. Students and teachers have toured historical spots on post and learned the interesting history of the formation and development of Fort Benning.

The Infantry Museum has contributed to this effort to learn more about Fort Benning by working with the school system on a course of study about the museum for teachers and by extending invitations for students to visit the museum. The United States Army School of the Americas has also been a very important part of the program with students touring the school and guests from the school visiting the schools to present programs. There has also been a staff development course offered to acquaint teachers with USARSA and the countries represented there.



All Fort Benning students develop a community awareness through the social studies program with visits from firemen, military police, energy conservation personnel, health professionals and other post officials.

Observance of special designated weeks takes place in the schools in harmony with the remainder of the Fort Benning community. We have celebrated Hispanic Heritage Week, Native American Week, Fire Safety Week and Army Energy Awareness Week thus far this school year.

Plans are now being made to focus on social studies during the month of February, when there is national attention to Black History Month and the observance of George Washington's birthday.

During this month, one week will be designated "Social Studies Week" in the Fort Benning Schools, and teachers and students will demonstrate their emphasis on the social studies facet of our curriculum.

Social studies is alive and well in the Fort Benning schools. A new curriculum, new texts and unlimited opportunities for learning are provided to give students the best educational experience possible in this vital area.

Look for the VIP difference.

The VIP makes the difference.
Finding the right health-care plan to protect your family is one of the most important things you'll do this year. That's why Federal Employees need to take a close look at Blue Cross and Blue Shield's Standard Option—with the VIP difference. The Standard Option with the VIP gives you the far-reaching coverage you need, plus important money-saving benefits.

Look for comprehensive coverage.
The VIP makes the difference, in many instances working with Standard Option to pay 100 percent of in-hospital charges* with no deductible. And Standard Option with the VIP also pays 85 percent of the preferred-physician allowance for doctor bills after the deductible. That means you get extensive coverage—at the Standard Option price.

To benefit from the VIP feature, choose your doctor or hospital from Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Georgia's long list of preferred providers. Use one of over 3,500 doctors and 90 hospitals statewide to get maximum coverage. Under Standard Option, even if you choose to use a non-VIP provider, you still receive excellent dollar-for-dollar, comprehensive coverage.

Look for improved dental benefits.
Blue Cross and Blue Shield's Standard Option helps pay for your dental care according to a fee schedule—with no yearly maximum and no deductible. And new in 1987, Standard Option pays an even larger portion of bills for children up to age 13.

A great value.
VIP benefits are automatically included at no extra cost. So you get great coverage, and the chance to save on your health-care dollars.

Concert first performance in OWC's Fine Arts Series

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The first in the 1986-1987 series of Fine Arts Concerts sponsored by the Officers' Wive's Club was presented for students in the Fort Benning Schools Nov. 5 and 6. The piano was the featured instrument.

Karen Ann Krieger returned to Fort Benning Schools to open the Fine Arts Series this year as a soloist. She appeared as an accompanist in one of the Fine Arts concerts last year.

An accomplished pianist with degrees in music, Ms. Krieger is a former professor of music at Columbus College. She has performed solo recitals as well as with orchestras around the country, and she will play with the Maui Symphony in Hawaii next year.

Ms. Krieger, a familiar face to many of the students even before the concerts, is news director and news anchor for WXTX-Channel 54 and was previously a weathercaster at WTVM-Channel 9.

Her skills as a television performer and her musical knowledge and ability served her well, as Ms. Krieger talked with each audience about the music that she was about to perform. Students in kindergarten through eighth grade listened attentively as she performed works by Liszt, Beethoven, and Schumann as well as works by contemporry composers.

The Fine Arts Series, which is beginning its fourth year, has featured pianists, cellists, clarinetists, violinists, harpists, and vocalists.

Benning educators believe that the series exposes students to quality performances by local musicians while providing opportunities to learn and practice appropriate audience behavior.

Program aims to help soldiers advance in higher education

Army News Service

Some 40 U.S colleges and universities have been invited by Army education officials to take part in a new program aimed at helping soldiers progress toward bachelor's degrees as they serve in various worldwide assignments.

On Fort Benning, Troy State University students can work toward a Bachelor of Science degree in business administration including computer and information services and management under the new program. For more information concerning the new program contact the Education Center in Building 2602 or call 545-3093.

Called "Bachelor's Degree for Soldiers," this latest "Reaching for Excellence" program relies on a networking system to achieve more transferability of credits gained for voluntary, off-duty bachelor's degree curriculums. The curriculums are designed mainly for non-commissioned officers and warrant officers.

The program, scheduled to start this fall, centers on those holding associate degrees. "But persons without associate degrees may participate as well," said Brenda-Lee Karasik, who monitors the program for the division of education in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at The Pentagon.

So far, the system consists of the three curriculum areas of accounting, computer studies and management. These are patterned after the networks making up the Army's associate degree program — all directly related to the military occupational specialties of the participating soldiers.

As additional network areas are developed to complement the other associate-degree networks, officials expect to achieve their objective of having at least one bachelor's-degree curriculum network directly related to each associate-degree network.

The 19 curriculum areas currently embraced by the associate-degree program range from accounting and construction to law enforcement and office management. Just as the 66 participating associate-degree (two-year) colleges agree to certain provisions for the program's universal operation, so, too, will the chosen four-year schools enter into a formal agreement. These "institutional requirements" include the following:

- Limiting academic residency to 25 percent of the total program, to be completed at any time therein.
- Accepting non-traditional sources of credit, including MOS experience.
- Executing a "student agreement" form (which becomes the official evaluation and degree plan).
- Guaranteeing transferability of credit within major-area course categories among the participating institutions.

Classes available to motivated troops

Military Personnel Center

Each year, thousands of soldiers ask, "How can I get more schooling?" Many soldiers believe they must reenlist for a school or simply be selected by Department of the Army. They are not aware that they can apply for certain schools.

The following answers to some commonly asked questions may help.

Q. Where can I find out what schools may be available to me?

A. Department of the Army Pamphlet 351-4, the Army Formal Schools Catalog, is the official source of information on courses offered at U.S. Army Schools and Training Centers.

It describes each course to include course number, title, length, location, scope of the training, prerequisites for attendance, security clearance requirements, and whether a Military Occupational Specialty or an Additional Skill Identifier will be awarded upon successful completion.

The catalog also describes interservice training courses and Department of Defense courses for soldiers.

Q. How do I apply?

A. Your unit personnel NCO and Personnel Actions Center supervisor can assist you in determining your eligibility for service school attendance. For qualified applicants, they will assist in the preparation of the DA Form 4187 used to request service school attendance.

Organization's work affects infantrymen all over world

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

An organization within the U.S. Army Infantry School impacts on the training of infantry soldiers and leaders every day. Its influence reaches out to active duty and reserve students enrolled in resident and correspondence courses. It touches soldiers participating in unit training and those taking Skill Qualification Tests.

The work done in the Directorate of Training and Doctrine is so wide-reaching that infantry soldiers in all capacities feel its influence.

Directorate head Col. James Daily explained the mission. "This Directorate has two major functions. We serve as the operations center for the development of doctrine and training products for the field and we manage the conduct of training at the Infantry School."

Staffed by 72 soldiers and 147 civilians, DOTD is broken down into seven divisions and one task force.

"Our Systems Division writes training strategies for new weapons and materiel systems to include development of all training devices. This runs the gamut from the highly sophisticated $2.5 million Unit Conduct of Fire Trainer for the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle to simple marksmanship devices," Daily said.

The Directorate's Course Development Division manages the instruction for infantry courses taught here and at other locations, including Reserve component schools. In addition, this division writes and updates all infantry correspondence courses.

The Training Divison develops soldier's manuals for infantry military occupational skills, the annual Skill Qualification Test, military qualifications standards for officers, the standards for the Expert Infatryman Badge and writes platoon-level Army mission training plans and drill for infantry units.

Preparing training schedules and arranging for all training support is the mission of the Resident Training Management Division.

The Publications Division provides the editing and graphics expertise for all field manuals, training circulars and training publications.

The Staff and Faculty Training Division qualifies all school instructors and manages the recognition programs for outstanding instructors.

Analysis and Studies Division determines what tasks to train and conducts studies on training issues identified at the School or by infantry units and leaders.

"Our Basic Combat Training Task Force just completed a two-year study of basic training. Based on this the Army will soon have an enhanced BCT program including a new Basic Rifle Marksmanship Program," Daily said.

Additionally, BCT changes will include more tactical field training, bayonet training, an infiltration course, more combatives, road marches and an improved physical training program, according to Daily.

On the menu is roast turkey with giblet gravy, Virginia baked ham, candied sweet potatoes, corn bread dressing, whipped potatoes, corn o'brien, buttered green peas, cranberry sauce, heavenly hash, full salad bar, horn of plenty with fruits, nuts and candy, assorted breads, and mincemeat, apple and pumpkin pies.

Cost is $11.95 for adults, $3.95 for children, and club members get a $4 discount.

NCO Club — Join us each Saturday night at the Main NCO Club for ribeye steak with trimmings for only $5. For the next two Saturdays we have disco in the ballroom, Latino disco in the End of Hall Lounge and Fantasy Band in the Golden Touch Lounge.

Make your reservations now for the comedy sensation, "Dinner - Theater 86" Sunday. Dinner will be served from 6:15 to 7:15 p.m., with the play, "Same Time, Next Year" by Bernard Slade at 8 p.m. Cost is $12.95 a person. Call 687-0660 for reservations.

On Thanksgiving, beginning at 6 p.m., a family-oriented dinner will be served. The cost is $3.95. Following dinner a top 40 band will perform in the Golden Touch Lounge and there will be disco in the ballroom.

Arts and Crafts — The Arts and Crafts Center is now offering a new and exciting department, the "Crafts Bin." This is Fort Benning's newest consignment shop, and it is now accepting items. The Crafts Bin will open today.

A grand opening is planned for Dec. 4 through 6 with door prizes, free coffee and donuts. Come and see what is new in crafts. For more information, call 545-3677.

The Arts and Crafts Center will be closed Thanksgiving Day, but will reopen at regular time Nov. 28.

Recreation Center — The Kelley Hill Recreation Center continues to offer computer classes at a discount rate. These classes are open to all military personnel and civilian employees.

Intro to Computers — Dec. 2 and from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Cost is $25.

Wordstar - (wordprocessing) — Dec. 9, 11, 16, and 18 from 6 to 8 p.m. Cost is $60.

3-14th troops strike at 'Avenging Serpent'

Story and photos
by Ann M. McDonald
The Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division took to the field for exercise "Avenging Serpent" recently.

The exercise was part of the unit's first Army Readiness Training Evaluation Program since its reactivation in March.

"The soldiers are really motivated," said Maj. William J. Sitler, personnel officer, "since 3rd Battalion is the youngest battalion of the brigade, there is that added incentive to do well."

Mother Nature gave the soldiers a little exercise of her making, as the weather changed from rain to extreme cold during their time in the field.

The first night, one of the coldest so far this season, temperatures dipped below 40 degrees Fahrenheit. Sgt. Louie Hough, from Headquarters and Headquarters Company's Scout Platoon said, "The weather just makes us a little bit colder and a whole lot more determined."

In spite of the additional challenge posed by the ever-changing weather, the soldiers worked with members of the 82nd Airborne Division from Fort Bragg, N.C. to accomplish the mission set forth in the battle scenario.

The 82nd dropped in a force of paratroopers that secured a field area. The Mountain soldiers then moved in and took over the mission, as they would do in an actual combat situation.

Soldiers from the 3-14th's sister battalion, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, acted as the aggressors for the exercise.

As part of their many tasks, the mountaineers seized and secured Edico Bridge, conducted air insertions, participated in a mobile bridge crossing and attacked an urban city.

Spiritual

We give thanks to Lord for many blessing in life

USAIC Chaplain's Office

As final preparations are made, food is placed on the table, and the family members gather around the table, all sing a hymn or song everyone knows (Suggestions: "America the Beautiful", "God Bless America", The Doxology, "Holy God, We Praise Thy Name".)

Then one person reads from the family Bible: Psalm 107: 1-9.

The head of the household prays:

"We thank you, Lord, for this nation which is our homeland.

Your limitless love encourages us to live as you intended.

Your generosity calls us to thank you.

May we never take for granted any gifts which you offer us, but rather use them to the glory of your name.

We thank you for this festive meal and for all that we have and are.

May these signs of your love inspire our generosity to others.

As family members take their seats and begin passing the food, all sing a brief response (Suggestions: "Amen from Lillies of the Field", "Rejoice in the Lord Always, Again I Say Rejoice", "Glory Hallelujah" refrain from The Battle Hymn of the Republic.).

Thanksgiving celebrates harvest

by Rick L. Needham
2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division chaplain

Thursday, Nov. 29, 1623 Governor William Bradford called together the residents of Plymouth, Mass. for one of the first celebrations of Thanksgiving. Bradford proclaimed:

"Inasmuch as the great Father has given us this year an abundant harvest . . . and has made the forests to abound with game and the sea with fish and clams, and . . . has spared us from pestilence and disease, and has granted us freedom to worship God according to the dictates of our own conscience; now, I your magistrate, do proclaim that all ye pilgrims . . . render thanksgiving to ye Almighty God for all his blessings."

After the lofty proclamation of one governor, now hear the simple thankfulness of children who were asked to write prayers for small blessings. The following is a composite prayer from fourth grade students:

"We bow our heads and thank thee for the sound of laughter . . .

For erasers that make mistakes disappear . . .

For colored leaves that swirl and fall in autumn . . .

For my gray playful kitten that gets all tangled up in pink yarn . . .

For God's care."

What is important in both of these quotations is that thanksgiving is not intended merely to express thanks for something, but primarily to voice gratitude to someone — the almighty God. How foolish it would be to acknowledge the gift and ignore the giver.

Psalm 100 tells us to "Shout for joy to the Lord, all the earth." Why should we praise God and give thanks to him? Verse three of Psalm 100 gives us the answer: "Know that the Lord is God. It is he who made us . . .".

We give thanks to God because he is God and our creator. We praise and thank him, "For the Lord is good and his love endures forever; his faithfulness continues through all generations". It is God who made us, really loves us, and daily sustains us, because he is our faithful God. "Enter his gates with thanksgiving and his courts with praise; give thanks to him and praise his name".

So whether our thanks be the grand oratory of an early Massachusetts governor, or a child's gratitude for life's simple things, our thanks must be directed toward God. He is the giver of all good things.

This Thanksgiving give thanks to God for all your blessings. "Instruct those who are rich in this present world not to be conceited or to fix their hope on the uncertainty of riches, but on God, who richly supplies us with all things to enjoy" (I Timothy 1:17).

Redskins claim league, down Packers in revenge assault

The Bayonet sports writer

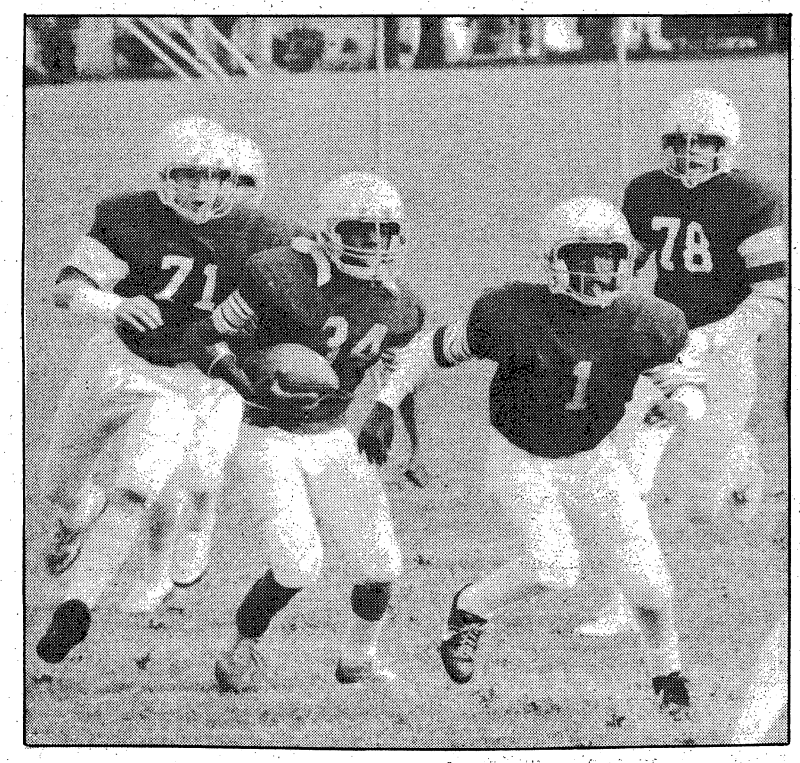
The Redskins, suffering their only season's defeat at the hands of the Packers, retaliated with vengeance as they shut down the Packer offense 20-0 in Saturday's Youth Activities Football action.

Earlier this season, the Packers edged the Redskins 8-0. But they were not ready for the defensive ambush carefully prepared in last week's Redskin assault.

The Redskin offense took advantage of opportunities created by the Redskin defenders, who have not allowed an offensive point since the second game of the season.

To lead the ground attack, tailback Robert Beverly rushed 54 yards, scoring two touchdowns.

Allen White also provided a touchdown in the battle, while driving 51 yards on the day.



The game's only extra point was scored by quarterback Steve Murrell on a 38 yard burst.

The Redskins went airborne with Brandon Milikin and Richard Hogans, combining for 163 aerial yards.

The highly respected Packer offensive machine could not get started, as Steve Sperry and Miguel "the Bull" Suarez led an assault which left the Packers 49 yards in the hole.

Also keeping the Packers under strict offensive rations were Redskin linemen Brent Gonzales, Eric Vasquez, and Sean Burke. Stinging tackles and relentless pass rushes kept the Packer offense from sustaining any momentum and allowed only two ball carriers to penetrate the line of scrimmage.

The win carried the Redskin tribe into undisputed first place, while the Packers fell into second. The regular season's final matchup promises to be explosive when the Redskins clash with the Broncos, who are coming off a win against the Bears.

A Packer running back sweeps the end as blockers lead the way.

MACH's doctor of running returns with tips for tackling marathon

by Dr. John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

The Fourth Annual Infantry Marathon is 11 weeks away.

Depending on your personal preferences, you may process this data two different ways: One is, "So what, I never have cared for running," or the other is, "It is? That's 11 weeks you say?" This is the first in a series of articles that will address both positions, with the overwhelming emphasis on the latter, to prepare the reader for this international sporting event.

Last year a similar series dealt with a potpourri of concerns common to all runners (including shoes, gear, injuries, training, and such) and enjoyed a bit of success judging by the response from readers who frequented my clinic.

This year, in an effort to reach more people, I believe a "needs assessment" may be in order. What do you, the reader, want to read about? The possibilities are numerous! Simply address your responses to: Dr. Henderson, Department of Family Practice, Martin Army Community Hospital, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-6100. If I do not respond in a column then I will respond to you personally at the return address.

To begin this series, let's jump in and work on something as seemingly simple and obvious as your plan. It will become "The Plan." As the weeks pass you will find yourself scheduling your work, social events and other commitments around "The Plan."

Here is the simple part: you are a point A, your present level of running or fitness, and you want to get to point B, your ability to run 26 ¼ miles without feeling like you've been on the Bataan Death March.

You see, sports fans, Phidipides did not have "The Plan." All he knew was that he had to blaze from the plains of marathon back home to tell the "Wim'n n chillin" of their upset victory. Then he promptly dropped dead. This is poor form. We don't want to model ourselves after some self-destructive pseudo-athlete.

Instead, let's exercise the "ol'squash" and use a little forethought. The Marathon is Jan. 24, 11 weeks away. The two previous weeks are medium mileage weeks, so the last weekend for a long training run (22 miles) would be Jan. 10, nine weeks away.

It is by this date that the runner must be able to either run 22 miles at a comfortable pace without hurting himself seriously or run for three to 3 ½ hours at a comfortable pace without hurting himself seriously. A combination of the two would give a marathon pace of 8 ½ minutes per mile with enough time to take in the water stops. This is a respectable pace and reasonable for the average person to achieve (most runners have been, are, and probably always will be over-achievers.)

The "Average" Infantry Marathon finishers over the past three years came in between 3:30 and 4:15 giving a pace range of eight and a half to 10 ½ minutes per mile. Still an admirable finish.

You will self-destruct if you don't keep the following in mind:

- This is supposed to be fun and healthful. When it stops being either one then it is time to slow down.
- Off-days are as important as training days. Two or three off days per week are helpful.
- Heed the subtle signs of over-training.
- It is easy to get wholly consumed by the spirit of marathon training.
- Keep "The Plan" flexible.

In closing, you need a plan, a committment and a realistic assessment of where you stand now. Let me know your needs in terms of what you want to learn more about. I'll see you on the roadway.

Suggested running schedule

To be able to do this as a bare minimum, the daily stable run by week nine should be about eight miles. There are a million ways to achieve this. Below is laid out one way.

Dates	Staple Runs	Frequency	Long Run
Nov. 24	6 to 8 miles	3 to 4 a week	8 to 10 miles
Dec. 1	6 to 8 miles	3 to 4 a week	10 to 12 miles
Dec. 8	6 to 8 miles	3 to 4 a week	12 to 15 miles
Dec. 15	6 to 8 miles	3 to 4 a week	15 to 18 miles
Dec. 22	8 to 10 miles	4 to 5 a week	18 to 20 miles
Dec. 29	8 to 10 miles	4 to 5 a week	20 miles
Jan. 5	8 to 10 miles	4 to 5 a week	22 miles
Jan. 12	8 to 10 miles	4 to 5 a week	12 to 15 miles
Jan. 19	3 to 5 miles	3 a week	24 ¼ miles

1st ITB, 2-14th field winners in USAIC matches

by Tommy Pool
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Members of the 1st Infantry Training Brigade swept the majority of the awards during this year's U.S. Army Infantry Center Small Arms Championships at Fort Benning's firing ranges Nov.10 through 14.

1st ITB cadre dominated the M16 combat rifle and .45 caliber combat pistol events by winning four of six team events and both overall individual championships.

SSgt. Hilario Benavidez, Company A, 3rd Battalion, scored a total of 356 out of 400 to win the combat rifle title and finished nine points ahead of runner-up, PFC Timothy Maples, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division, with a final score of 347. SFC Ronald Webb, from the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, placed third overall with 339.

Autumn lures orienteers to woods in search of 'points'

by Linda Ferguson
Fort Benning Orienteering Director

With the advent of autumn, comes the beginning of orienteering season!

What is orienteering? To some it may sound rather technical or exotic. Don't let it fool you. It's a fancy name for something many of us find a need for in our daily lives and occupations.

Primarily, orienteering is finding one's location and one's way with the aid of a map.

If you have ever used a map to find your way to or from anywhere . . . congratulations! You were orienteering.

Orienteering is one of those rare sports in which anyone can participate. Persons of all ages, conditioning, and abilities can take part. There is even wheelchair and Braille Orienteering. You can learn orienteering at your own pace and choose your own level of participation. Not all orienteers are racers. Many choose to be among the "stalking walkers," those of us who prefer a delightful afternoon in the woods with the added challenge of "stalking" those orange and white markers.

What is sports orienteering? Simply a participant, or orienteer, aided by a map and compass visiting, in a precise order called an orienteering course, a number of features (controls) marked on the terrain and on the map.

In an orienteering competition, the objective is to locate these controls in the shortest possible time. In orienteering both the speed and the navigating skill of the competitor is tested, but in a manner so that the navigational skill is the decisive winning factor.

This is a great new sport, right? Wrong! It is difficult for many of us in the U.S. to believe that the sport of orienteering isn't new. After all, you never heard of it before you went off to college or moved to Fort Benning. Besides, that guy (five-time, U.S. Orienteering Champ, Peter Gargarin) just showed up on the Wheaties box!

Our Scandinavian allies have been holding orienteering competitions since 1893 and it is considered the national sport of Sweden. It is so popular in these countries that the annual Swedish five-day meet called the O'Ringen attracts some 25,000 entrants!

Although orienteering had a brief introduction into the United States in 1946 when the first U. S. orienteering meet was sponsored in the Indiana Dunes State Park, a lack of volunteer leaders prevented it from really gaining popularity in the U.S.

Orienteering is enjoying a rebirth at Fort Benning. Although the current program is only two years old, orienteering was very popular as a training element in the early 1970s. In fact, in 1971, "The U.S. Army Infantry School Orienteering Handbook" was written by Capt. Vernon W. Humphrey and Maj. Theodore G. Stroup. A few lucky present day orienteers have copies.

During the next few months, periodic stories will appearing in The Bayonet concerning the many and varied aspects of orienteering. The primary emphasis will be on how individuals and teams can train effectively for the Fort Benning U. S. Army Infantry Center Orienteering Championships set for March 17 and 18, 1987.

Other topics, however, will range from choosing the right course level and compass to the implications of integrating orienteering into U.S. military training.

Until next time, here's to those of you who have been bitten by the orange and white bug and to those of you who'd like to try and stalk it . . . CHEERS!

Family, career make this Thanksgiving good one

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

The onset of the holiday season with Thanksgiving tomorrow, has caused me to think this week about what the last year has brought me. In looking back, I find many things for which I am thankful.

My son, 10-months-old Bradley, unequivocably tops the list. I am one of those people who always said I would never get married and "I certainly would never have children."

Many years have gone by and with them, so too have those convictions fallen by the wayside. There was a time, right after college, when I fancied myself the perfect "career woman."

I decided to join the Army and conquer the world (or at least a little part of it I could call my own). It is interesting how, as we grow older and more mature, our values change. Today, my son means more to me than any dream.

My husband and the difficult-to-grasp concept of our family wrap up what I can only describe as one of God's most perfect creations.

We are an Army family in every sense of the word. Two soldiers, dedicated to duty, honor and country, bringing up our own little soldier.

Thanksgiving conjures up special meaning for me. I'm thankful for our way of life. I'm thankful for my chosen profession, which stands by to protect our way of life.

I believe it is important to think about why we are here. Why we serve in the armed forces is a key aspect of this Thanksgiving holiday.

My family will take some time tomorrow to remember that things haven't always been as harmonious as they are now (and it's still got some rough edges). There have been times, when snowed under with more work than is imaginable and overburdened beyond belief, that we have wondered if it is really worth the effort.

Personal hardships over the years have place additional weight upon our shoulders. The most difficult period we had to persevere through found my husband transferred here while I remained at Fort Bragg, N.C. However, our faith in each other, God in his heaven and the big personnel officer in The Pentagon, we knew we would survive.

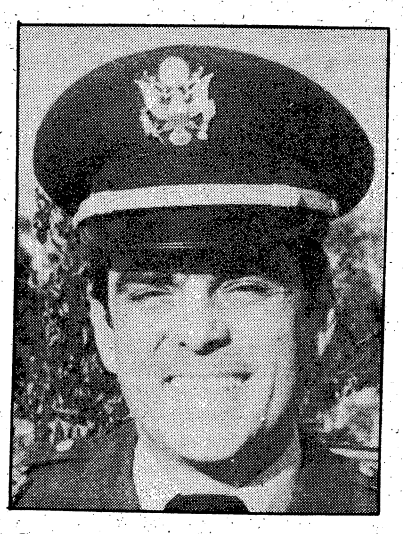
When I finally got orders assigning me to the U.S. Army Infantry Center, Fort Benning, Ga., with "1 Nov 85" as my move date, it was the answer to many prayers.

Just more than one year later, things have never been better. We work hard because the mission comes first. But, our labors are not without reward. This is true in all walks of life. Sometimes, we just have to look a little closer to find the payoff.

While we dedicate our whole selves to our work and to the Army, we also find time to share as a family, to remember why we work so hard.

For if we lost sight of why we dedicate our lives to the Army, we would defeat the purpose. We are here to protect the American way of life. We are here to ensure that our son has the opportunity to grow up and to choose what he wants to do.

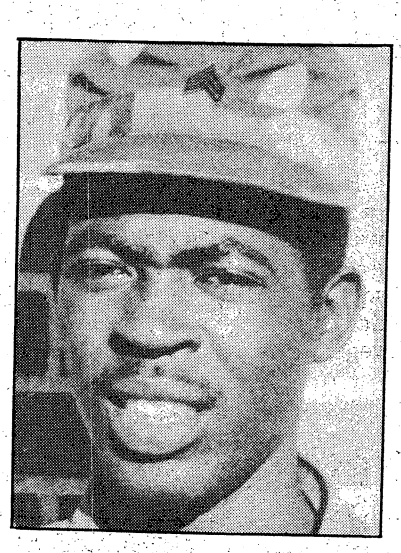
As you give thanks tomorrow, whether you're sharing your day with family and friends or if you are silently observing the holiday by yourself, remember our purpose. Offer thanks for our armed forces. Offer thanks for our way of life.



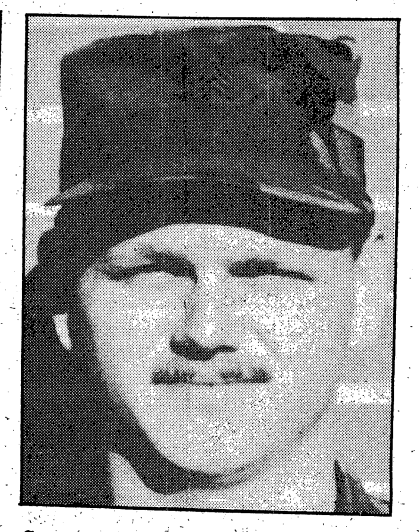
As my son toddles his way across the kitchen and babbles a few "words" of excitement, I can't help but be thankful.

Various voices

What are you most thankful for this Thanksgiving?



SSgt. Gwen Garrett, Womens Health Clinic — "I am thankful that I will be able to spend the holiday with my father and son. I have been in the Army a long time and it's rare that I get to spend the holidays with my family."



Capt. Edmond Caouette, Infantry Officers Advanced Course — "I am most thankful that the Lord continues to bless our nation with an abundance of food, clothing and shelter; things we all take for granted."

Maj. Margaret Mackinnon, MEDDAC — "I think I'm happiest for my successful children leading fulfilling lives. I'm thankful for the opportunity of being in the Army and living in sunny Georgia."

Sgt. Lernard Burrell, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry — "I'm thankful that I will be able to go home for Thanksgiving and see my loved ones."

Sgt. Micheal Kunzig, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division — "I am thankful that my brother overcame his drug addiction."

Commander's comments

Burba wishes happy holiday

Three hundred and sixty-five years ago in Plymouth, Mass., Governor William Bradford proclaimed a day of thanks for the past year's blessings. Since then, Thanksgiving Day has become an honored tradition celebrated by all Americans on the fourth Thursday on November.

Americans observing Thanksgiving in 1986, like the Pilgrims who celebrated in 1621, have many blessings for which we should be grateful.

We have greater freedoms, enhanced well-being and more opportunities than any other people in history. Those freedoms and opportunities have been achieved through personal sacrifice, rigorous training and attention to mission — by us and generations of Americans before us.

While we rejoice and feast in our abundance, let us renew our faith in the Divine Giver of all things that are good, in our nation's ability to overcome all possible dangers, and in ourselves as the keepers of peace and defenders of freedom.

Our prayers for you and your loved ones are for a safe, happy and prosperous Thanksgiving.

Edwin H. Burba Jr.
Major General, USA
Commanding

Being safe gives reason for thanks

Thanksgiving Day is a time for Americans to give thanks for the many blessings they have. It is a time for families to gather together and give thanks for each other and the many blessings they enjoy.

In past years, each long Thanksgiving weekend has resulted in hundreds of serious and fatal automobile accidents throughout the nation. Fortunately, in the past 14 years, no one from Fort Benning has been included in this toll. I hope each of you will do your best to maintain this enviable record.

Although participation in many activities may have tragic results if safety precautions are not taken, two activities, driving and hunting, account for the majority of accidents during his period.

If you must drive during this holiday weekend, keep your seatbelt fastened and practice offensive driving techniques. If you choose to hunt, always take a buddy with you and be especially careful when handling your gun.

By applying principles of safety to all your activities, you will ensure that you and your loved ones continue to have reasons to give thanks during this holiday period.

Have a happy Thanksgiving and return safely.

(25,368 pounds), mixed nuts (15,221 pounds), assorted fresh fruit (81,178 pounds) and assorted candies (20,294 pounds).

To round out the Army's largest meal of the year, diners may select mashed potatoes, giblet gravy, glazed sweet potatoes with oranges, sausage dressing, green peas, baked hubbard squash, spring salad, assorted dressings, shimmery fruit and vegetable salad, cloverleaf rolls, margarine, milk, tea, coffee and soft drinks.

Holiday meals are planned about two years in advance and the menu is distributed to dining halls about six months before the holidays so menu items can be ordered.

Commander in chief praises service members' dedication

In this Thanksgiving season, it is appropriate that we once more pause and take time to thank God for another year of peace and freedom. And as your commander in chief, I thank all of you who wear the uniform of our country for your role in preserving those blessings for your fellow Americans.

Throughout history, Thanksgiving has found Americans grateful to God that he has steered our nation's course through trying as well as tranquil times.

Our first president, George Washington, aware of the many threats to this young nation, observed with humility the "great degree of tranquility, union and plenty" Americans enjoyed and made Thanksgiving the first nationally proclaimed holiday in 1789, the year of his inauguration.

Abraham Lincoln, in the midst of the dark days of the Civil War, perceived the blessings that persued through the rage and fire of a divided nation. In spite of the devastation all about him, he saw in this country "bounties . . . of so extraordinary a nature that they cannot fail to penetrate and soften the heart." And he called on all Americans to thank the beneficient God from whom these blessings flowed.

Over the years, our nation has triumphed in many difficult contests. If we face challenges in the future, I am confident that, with the help of the almighty and with your skill and dedication, we will triumph anew.

Happy Thanksgiving to you and your families. To those of you serving on ships at sea and at isolated and dangerous posts around the globe, Nancy and I send our special thanks. God bless all of you.

Ronald Reagan
Commander in Chief

Thanksgiving carries on tradition

On Thanksgiving Day 1986, Americans everywhere will give thanks, continuing a tradition started more than three centuries ago by our pilgrim forehears.

Thanksgiving is a special time for Americans, a time to be together with family and loved ones.

For those of you on duty this Thanksgiving, separated from your families, I want you to know that your sacrifice is recognized and deeply appreciated by thoughtful Americans everywhere.

We Americans have much to be grateful for — a robust economy and the freedom to live, speak, work and worship as we choose. Peace is not maintained by merely proclaiming that we seek peace. It is maintained by the sometimes tedious, sometimes dangerous, and always necessary, daily business of remaining strong, alert and prepared.

To every soldier, sailor, airman, and marine and to all your families, I send my warmest wishes for a happy Thanksgiving.

29th Infantry Regiment awards clerk puts soldier first

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment correspondnent

If it appears that Sgt. Lucas Pino has his hands in most everything that happens in the 29th Infantry Regiment personnel shop; he does!

Pino boasts, "I do it all, personnel actions, verify Enlisted Evaluation Reports, originate and write endorsements for the commander's signature and coordinate and prepare soldier of the month and year packets for the command sergeant major's signature."

Pino is the awards clerk for approximately 1,700 soldiers assigned to the 29th.

According to the shop's leader, 1st Lt. Marshall Pilcher, "Pino is good at what he does, and he does a good bit."

Since joining the 29th from the 10th Mountain Division in August, Pino has made a significant improvement in how many and how well awards are processed from the 29th.

Pamela Thompson, military personnel clerk, post Adjutant General's office says, "Pino has consistently submitted awards on time and without discrepancies."

However, Pino has made a difference in the awards section "mainly because that's what he was hired to do," says Pilcher.

On the other hand, Pino asserts that his "good work" is directly related to his ability to interpret and follow the regulations that govern his work.

He says, "I submit awards correctly because I follow the guidelines of Army Regulation 674-5-1 and AR 600-9."

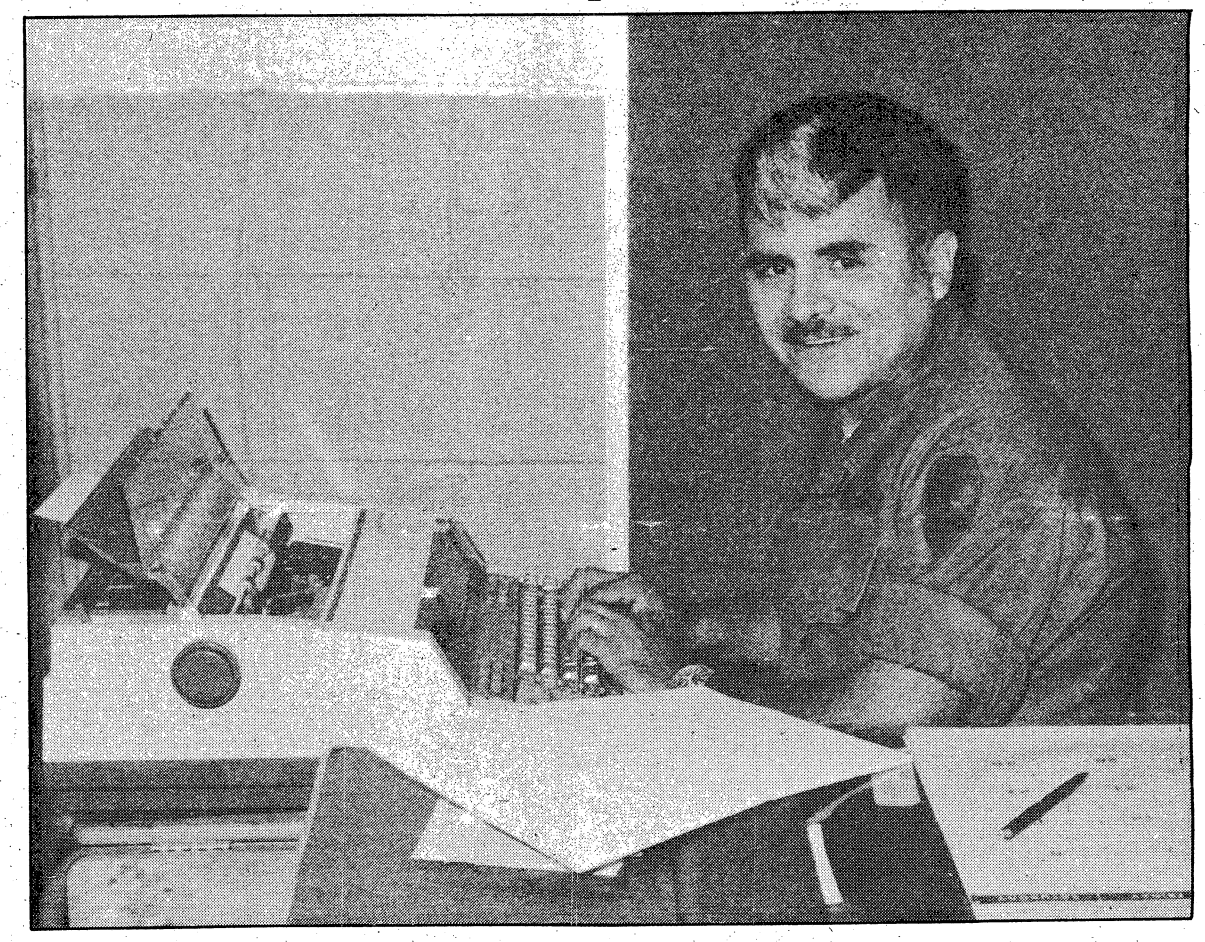
Among other things, these regulations set the standards for awards and height and weight that all soldiers must meet before an award can be granted.

In spite of what he says, however, others who know him assert that he does well because he cares about soldiers and soldiering.

Sgt. Michael Kreusch, a co-worker, says, "He's fair and just and goes out of his way to help troops."

"He takes his job seriously," says SP4 Ronnie Ray, another co-worker. "He is motivated and encourages others to do well."

SP4 Luke Cooper says, "He's 'hardcore.'"



Nonetheless, Pino's philosophy is: when work comes in — work goes out — the same day, if possible.

He says, "If someone is put in for an award, why should I hold it up or try to stop it? That what I'm here for, to process the soldier's paperwork immediately."

Urging the 39-year-old soldier's work philosophy along is his positive attitude.

The native Peruvian says, "I feel proud to wear the United States Army uniform. There are a lot of people out there who can't for some reason or another. But everytime I wear my uniform, I say, 'Thanks Uncle Sam, I give my life for my country.'"

Continuing in a patriotic voice, Pino says, "I have no regrets about joining the Army. Everything it's given me so far has been so wonderful."

Sgt. Lucas Pino works at his typerwriter processing awards for the 29th Infantry Regiment.

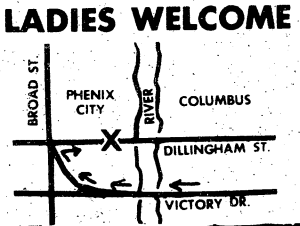
Specifically, the Army has given Pino U.S. citizenship and the ability to stay with his family.

He explains, "In 1983, immigration told me I had to leave the country because I was filling an American citizen's position." Pino was a blue-collar worker in New Jersey.

"At the time I was only a resident with a green card, which meant I would have to return to Peru to wait for my number to come up before I could return to the United States."

Instead, Pino joined the Army. Today he is an American citizen and didn't have to separate from his Puerto Rican-born wife and American-born children to get it.

When the courteous Pino is not soldiering, he enjoys "philately" and "equitation," (stamp collecting and horse back riding), he says, as if his choice of words is common to everyone.



Also, reading and photography are among his pastimes.

He is especially fond of Army literature, he says. "The Army constantly changes and I like to stay on top of everything dealing with the Army."

Around Fort Benning

Editor's Note: "Around Fort Benning" is a weekly column designed to highlight the activities of post units. Its purpose is to provide an outlet for brief stories, written by members of the featured unit, concerning changes of command, significant awards and some training exercises.

Input is welcome from all sources and should be submitted to the Editor in Room 601, Building 4 by 11 a.m. Monday. All input must be typed, double-spaced with the name and specific unit of the writer and should be limited to two pages. Submissions will be subject to standard editing and condensing.

High quality black and white photographs will also be considered for publication in this column.

197th Infantry Bde.

The 197th Infantry Brigade Headquarters now boasts the first of many new signs being installed on Kelley Hill as part of a coordinated sign plan. Kelley Hill is the first area on Fort Benning to implement the new sign look.

"This sign marks the first step in achieving U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command Installation of Excellence sign standards," said Maj. Charlton Brice, 197th Infantry Brigade engineer. "Eventually, the standardized signs will be installed post-wide."

The new signs are "national park" brown with white reflective lettering, coordinated to the post color scheme. The signs will be used to identify Fort Benning locations, such as units, ranges and other facilities. They will also be used to give directions and other information.

Brice explained that many goals will be achieved through standardized signs.

It is expected that the remaining signs for Kelley Hill will all be in place by mid-summer 1987. — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade.

USARSA

Fort Benning civilian and military personnel are invited to attend the upcoming graduation of 47 students representing nine Latin American countries in the Command and General Staff course Dec. 4 at 3 p.m., at Marshall Auditorium.

The 45-week course is considered USARSA's most prestigious course in that many of Latin America's top future leaders graduate from it every year.

Countries represented in this year's graduation include Bolivia, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Honduras, Panama, Paraguay, Peru and Venezuela. Nine U.S. students will also graduate from this course. — Marco Morales, U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Nine students representing five Latin American countries were graduated from the Engineer Management Officers course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas Nov. 19.

Representing Colombia were, Capt. German Arciniegas and 2nd Lt. Mario Gutierrez. Costa Rica was represented by Capt. Greyving Viquez. Ecuador was represented by Capt. Marco A. Gallardo.

Honduras' four graduates were: Capt. Julio Avila, 1st Lts. Freddy Pineda and Amadeo Martinez, and 2nd Lt. Marcio R. Nunez.

Venezuela had one graduate, Lt. Gustavo A. Belisario, of the Venezuelan navy.

The eight-week course trains officers in basic military engineering skills required to plan, organize and supervise engineering troops.

The expertise of four U.S. Army military engineers here on temporary duty proved worthwhile for USARSA during the course. The bilingual soldiers assured not only that the students received scheduled classroom and practical training, but also arranged for the students to tour places of interest in Columbus and the surrounding area.

Those course administrators were: Capt. Ramon Nieves from Fort Belvoir, Va.; Capt. Jose Silva from Fort Bragg, N.C.; and Capt. Alfonso Vasquez and SFC Jose Candelario from Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. — Marco Morales, U.S. Army School of the Americas.

10th Mountain Div.

Recently, soldiers from the 2nd Battalion 14th Infantry went to Fort Drum, N.Y. to act as controllers and evaluators for the 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry's External Evaluation.

Twenty-eight members of the battalion spent a week and a half evaluating the 1-22nd as it started the EXEVAL with a 25-mile road march in 10 to 25 degree Fahrenheit weather; conucted a deliberate anti-armor defense; a battalion infiltration attack in a mid-intensity environment and finally a low-intensity battalion search and attack mission.

The EXEVAL ended with an attack on the main opposing force guerrilla patrol base. The 2-14th was the first battalion in the 10th Mountain division in October.

The 1-22nd was the first infantry battalion at Fort Drum to undergo an EXEVAL. In another recent mission, the 2-14th Terminators were provided opposing forces. Soldiers and support battalion for its sister battalion, 3-14th on Fort Benning earlier this month.

As for OPFOR, the Terminators acted as guerrilles in a low-intensity environment in the southern hemisphere. It was their job to initially work in company size elements, then be degraded to platoon and squad sized elements to test the tactical proficiency of the 3-14th.

The battalion executive officer and the company conducted the OPFOR operation providing valuable second-in-charge training, which is an important concept being emphasized in the Army today. — Christian Jacques, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry.

10th Mountain Division soldiers from Fort Benning bound for Fort Drum, N.Y., where their unit is stationed, will find a new commissary waiting for them.

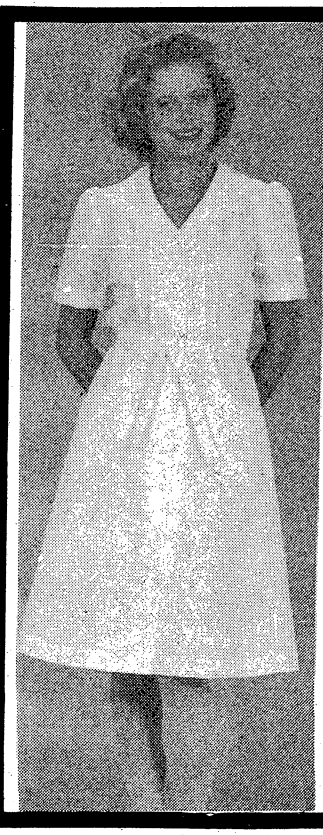
Fort Drum has been named as the site of a new $9.9 million commissary. The project currently under construction is expected to be completed by November 1987.

The commissary is being built to improve the overall conditions of Fort Drum, home of the recently reactivated 10th Mountain Division (Light). The commissary is part of a postwide improvement package that features other improvements such as new housing and innovations in health care.

The new commissary will have 82,800 total square feet, including 23,599 square feet of sales area and 21,403 square feet of warehouse space, said Bob Hunt, with the public affairs office at Fort Lee, Va. The administrative office, preparation area, refrigeration rooms, corridors and rest rooms will occupy the remaining space, he said.

The design, which was coordinated with the Troop Support Agency, includes energy saving features such as a system that reclaims heat rejected by the refrigeration system to heat the building, and multiple-parallel refrigeration compressor systems that closely regulate compressor loads, Hunt said. A subfloor air return system designed to recover cold air spill from refrigerated displays to cool the building, and energy efficient lighting will also be incorporated into the new facility, he added.

Crime Watch



Provost Marshal

The following is a breakdown of crimes reported to the Fort Benning Military Police from Nov. 17 through 23:

McGraw Manor had one domestic assault and one assault. Custer Terrace had one domestic assault, one damage to government property and one larceny of private property.

PFC Dereke Alexander from Company C, 197th Support Battalion, demonstrates the proper form for throwing a grenade.

197th troops learn ways to throw hand grenades

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Soldiers in the 197th Support Battalion learned there is more than one way to throw a grenade during training last week on Dianda Grenade Range.

The grenade training was part of an individual combat training skills program.

"They started out learning the proper throwing positions, standing and in the prone position," explained Maj. David Beining, 197th Support Battalion operations officer. "They enjoy doing this because they don't get a chance for this type of training very often."

Soldiers practiced the proper throwing techniques on a combat assault course. Different positions were used, such as fox hole positions, window targets and personnel and bunker targets.

"The soldiers had to go through the course before they went to the actual grenade line," said Capt. Mark Morrison, assistant operations officer. "We ran the soldiers through the course two or three times until they felt comfortable with it."

"We need to familiarize ourselves with these weapons," Beining said. "It's a must, to know how to use them."

Each individual soldier got a chance to throw a live grenade during the training.

"I'm really enjoying myself out here," said PFC Dereke Alexander from Company C. "It's something I haven't done since basic training and it's exciting."

Q: I've been recently divorced and I have visitation rights to my children on the weekend. However, my ex-wife will not let me see them. Moreover, I am preparing for a permanent-change-of-station move to Germany. What can I do?

A: Visitation is a right that all absent parents have with their children, unless a court would determine that such visitation is not in the best interests of the children.

If your former spouse is not allowing you visitation that has been ordered by court decree then you have the right to file contempt charges against her.

This may result in the court levying a fine against your former wife. Some courts have a system available that permits you to send child support payments to the court and the court will hold those payments until your former spouse complies with the visitation order.

Q: I went to a car dealer and found a new car I wanted to buy. I gave the salesman $100 as a deposit and signed a purchase agreement. Now I have changed my mind and decided not to buy the car. Can I get my deposit back?

A: Don't count on it. When you give a dealer a deposit on an automobile that you have agreed to purchase, the dealer is taking that car off the market and cannot sell it to anyone else. If you decide that you don't want the car, the dealer will take your deposit as damages, the logic being that if he had not held the car for you, he could have sold it to someone else.

The purchase agreement should explain that if the purchase does not occur because of some fault of the buyer, the deposit will be forfeited. Be sure to read the fine print before you sign anything, and if you have questions that the dealer cannot answer, have a legal assistance attorney review the document before you sign it.

Q: I've heard a lot about the new tax reform act of 1986. Are there any tax considerations I should think about prior to the effective date of the act?

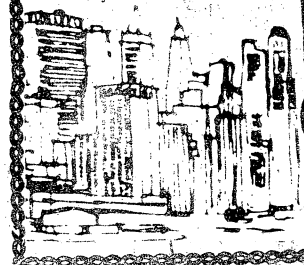
A: Yes. There are several areas of change that you should be concerned about.

Take advantage of your full IRA contribution this year. This may be your last opportunity to take the IRA deduction from your gross income. There will be income restrictions in the future limiting your deductions.

Try, if you can, to defer receipt of taxable income until next year when the lower maximum rates go into effect.

The 60 percent exclusion of capital gains ends with the 1986 tax year. Therefore it may be advisable, based upon individual circumstances, to sell long term capital gains to take advantage of the exclusion.

If you itemize, 1986 will be the last year for total deduction of consumer interest, such as credit cards.



For more on the new tax law, see page 20.

Commissaries gearing up for busy holiday schedule

Troop Support Agency

Thanksgiving to New Year's Day is a busy holiday period of fun and festivities. For most families, it's also time for visits by relatives and neighbors who can eat you out of house and home.

That's why the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency, managing commissaries worldwide, is ready to help you stock up on high-quality holiday foods at the lowest prices.

Commissary shelves and freezers will be filled with an abundance of sweets, appetizers, main course tie-ins and desserts that are perfect for those holidays gatherings. A wide assortment of seasonal candies, baking and fruit cake ingredients will be stocked and available. Special point-of-sale materials will highlight these products.

There will also be a variety of meats such as turkey, ham, duck and rock cornish hen to round out the holiday feast.

But, if you need a special cut to prepare your favorite roast, place the order 48 to 72 hours in advance so the meat department can cut and prepare it to your satisfaction.

Poinsettias and mistletoe will also be sold to make these get togethers colorful and cozy.

Don't be caught with bare cupboards. Plan your holiday meals now and plan to shop at the commissary. Your guests and your pocketbook will be glad you did.

Turkey: 'mmm, good;' make it safe too

by Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

For many people, Thanksgiving is an Olympic cooking and eating event. Turkey or other fowl, two kinds of potatoes, rolls, salads and vegetables and often two or three pies are placed lovingly on the table. Your family and guests try mightily to transfer the contents of the groaning board to their groaning stomachs on the big day, but there are always leftovers.

Unless properly handled, those leftovers could be a cause of food poisoning.

All foods contain microorganisms. Dairy products and poultry, such as that Thanksgiving turkey, for example, contain harmless amounts of such bacteria as salmonella. These harmless amounts can quickly multiply into harmful amounts unless you keep cold foods cold 45 degrees and hot foods hot above 140 degrees.

Don't leave the cooked turkey on the table at room temperature longer than two hours on Thanksgiving for maximum safety, say the food safety experts. Even though the room may seem cool, it is still warm enough for bacteria to grow.

Those experts recommend that stuffing be removed from poultry soon after cooking and placed in a separate container. The reason: Bacteria thrive in high protein, high carbohydrate food combinations, said Jody Siegel of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Meat and Poultry Hotline.

Furthermore, the warm, dark and moist environment inside the bird means that, once refrigerated, stuffing does not cool down as fast as optimum safety would require.

Cooked turkey in broth or gravy keeps for about two days in the refrigerator, sliced dry turkey up to four days. These guidelines are for optimum safety and taste, according to hotline staffers. Meat eaten past these deadlines isn't guaranteed to get you sick, but it increases the probability.

Maj. Jane Coffin, staff nutritionist with the Army Surgeon General's Office, suggests refrigerating meat whole or in large pieces and waiting until the last minute before slicing it. "The amount of exposed air surface is the key to food spoilage. Chicken salad will spoil faster than a chicken leg, hamburger spoils faster than roast beef. Refrigeration and freezing do not stop spoilage, they simply slow it down," said Coffin.

If you don't think you can eat the turkey quickly, freeze it. Cooked dry turkey keeps a month in the freezer. Turkey in gravy keeps up to six months, because freezing dries foods out, and the moisture in the gravy helps the frozen turkey retain its texture.

GETTING OUT? YOUR ARMY BENEFITS CAN BE MORE THAN MEMORIES.

It's probably hard to say what you'll miss most about the Army if you've decided to return to civilian life. For some, it's the camaraderie. Others miss the travel and excitement. Still more miss those money-saving Army benefits.

Joining the Army Reserve can help you retain some of those great benefits. Like your PX and commissary privileges. Space-available air travel. And low-cost life insurance.

You'll earn a good extra income, too. Over $2,000 a year, in some cases.

Post's 'great' families go above and beyond

Mid-life career change brings Floreks closer

Editor's note: Three families on post were recently chosen "Fort Benning's Great American Families." They are Jose and Ana Velez, Sgt. Robert and Debbie Florek, and SFC Bruce and Elaine Kendall and their children.

They will be presented award certificates today by Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., post commander. The ceremony will be in Room 642, Building 4, at 2 p.m.

The Bayonet plans to do a story on the Velez family next week.

Three years ago, the Florek family seemed to have it all.

Robert was route sales manager for a bakery company, bringing home enough money for his family to live comfortably. Debbie was busy caring for their two young children and working part-time.

"Our combined income was (more than) $36,000 a year, but I wasn't really happy with the work I was doing," Florek said. "What I really enjoyed was my Army reserve time, spending weekends in the field being a part-time soldier."

So Florek started over and reenlisted in the Army after a 12-year break in service. And despite the rough beginning, both agree that they made the right decision.

"It was hard making ends meet on a pfc's salary," said Mrs. Florek. "We had to live on the economy for eight months before we got into post housing at Fort Polk, (La)."

Now a sergeant due to make staff sergeant next month, the financial pressures have eased, but the Floreks haven't forgotten the experience.

"I think it made us become closer, and making it through it made our relationship stronger," Florek said.

The experience has also made them want to help out other young Army families, and when they get the chance, they do.

When his unit was deploying and one of his soldiers was leaving a new bride behind, Mrs. Florek stepped in to help. She invited the wife to move in, then took her around to get her ID card, and sign up for other military benefits.

"I just helped her get into the military system, which I already Working together, sharing key to happy family life

The Bayonet staff writer

A family tragedy changed the Kendall's outlook on life.

In April 1981, their 6-weeks old son, Kareum, died of Sudden Infant Death Syndrome. Because the syndrome goes undetected until a child dies, the Kendalls didn't know it ran in their family.

"It's so much harder to deal with when it is unexpected," Elaine Kendall said. "We could deal with anything as long as we knew about it, knew what to expect."

What they learned from the experience, Mrs. Kendall said, is "you never know how long life will last and the time's too short to spend being mad."

At the time, the couple's two daughters, Nina and Katie, were at demanding ages, 6 and 4 respectively, and that helped.

Bruce Kendall threw himself into his career with a vengeance, and Elaine looked around for her own outlet.

She found it with the American Red Cross, where she started taking lifesaving classes. "About a month after Kareum died, they published a study that found that in communities where there was intensive training going on in lifesaving techniques there were fewer heart attack fatalities," she said. "Later a friend told me, you're good at this, and suggested I become an instructor."

She became involved in coaching swimmers because she "didn't like the way a coach was doing the job," she said.

It has been six years and the family is totally involved in the Fort Benning Barracudas Swim Team; Mrs. Kendall as coach, Nina and Katie as team members, and Kendall as "assistant to the assistant to the assistant coach."

As the girls grew, the family became involved in scouting. "I grew up in the woods and my girls didn't have that chance. That's why I got involved in scouting," Mrs. Kendall said.

The Kendalls don't have to think long about what's important in their lives. "Our marriage. It's the plant, the roots, and our girls are our flowers," Mrs. Kendall said, as her husband nodded his agreement.

Almost everything the Kendalls do is "family time." A typical evening finds Kendall and his wife teaching a class on cardio-pulmonary respiration with Nina and Katie looking on. "They both already know much of the life-saving techniques, and are eager to get old enough to take them," Kendall said.

Vacations involve camping out — it doesn't matter where. The family has invented special camping nicknames for everyone. Mrs. Kendall becomes "Starfish," ("I'm a tropical fish because I like warm water and have to stay wet.) Kendall "Sloth," because "Daddy's li "giant old bear;" Nina is "D phin" because she loves t water and kicks so much. Katie "Hummingbird" because "s flutters, and can't stay still."

Decisions are made by t family council, where the cl drens' vote may not equal t parents', but they do have voice. "Sometimes we don't l what they say, but they get th say," Kendall said.

Early in their marriage, the Navajo code talkershelp country defeat Japan

Army News Service

"Japanese Lost the War to Indians," read a headline in the Fuji (Tokyo) Evening Herald on Aug. 15, 1981, the anniversary of the final day of World War II.

As a Marine Corps Signal Officer in charge of eight code talkers on Iwo Jima put it, "Were it not for the Navajo code talkers, the Marines would never have taken Iwo Jima and other places."

An American newspaper, the San Diego (Calif.) Union, commented in September 1945: "America found the only foolproof, unbreakable code in the history of warfare," and "for three years, wherever the Marines landed, the Japanese got an earful of strange noises interspersed with other sounds resembling the prayer call of a Tibetan monk mixed with fast American double-talk and the sound of a hot water bottle being emptied."

Who were these native American warriors who befuddled the enemy and sometimes their fellow Marines? They were men and boys in their late teens and early 20s who left the canyons, plains and mesas of their reservation homes to fight for their country during World War II.

They didn't have the slightest inkling they would play a major role in defeating the Japanese war machine with a modified version of their native tongue.

Devising a code of the Navajo language for use against the Japanese was the brainchild of Philip Johnston, the son of Presbyterian missionaries. Johnston had learned the Navajo language from his playmates while growing up on a reservation. When he was 9 years old, he served as interpreter for President Theodore Roosevelt and Navajo leader Peshlakai Etse III.

The Marines were skeptical about Johnston's suggestion until he and several young Navajos demonstrated its usefulness at Camp Elliot, Calif., now Camp Pendleton.

"The general (Gen. Clayton B. Vogel, then commander of Camp Elliot) said he wanted us to send a message in Navajo and the same message would be sent by Morse Code," said Carl Gorman, one of the original code talkers and former director of Native American Studies at the University of California (Davis). "A Navajo sent our message, and in less than five minutes it came back. The general read it, shook his head, and said, 'boy.' The other guy (the signalman) was still doing dot, dot, dot, dot. It took him almost 30 minutes before he completed the message. You had to understand and speak English as well as Navajo," said Gorman, adding that many young Navajos flunked out of training because of poor English.

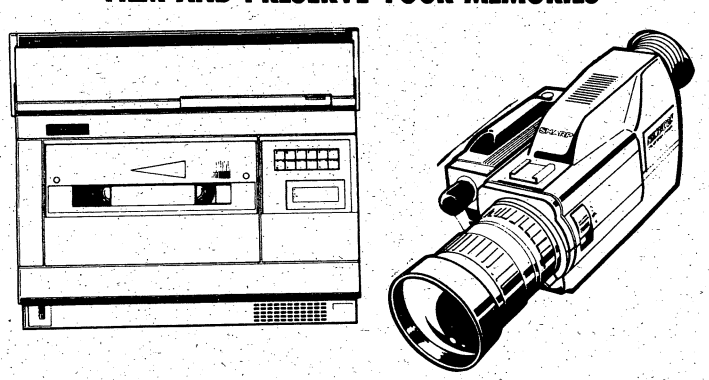
Johnston made his suggestion in February 1942, and by April, recruiters were swarming over reservation communities in Arizona and New Mexico. The first 29 recruits were placed in an all-Navajo platoon for boot camp at the Marine Corps Recruit Depot in San Diego, Calif. From there, they were sent to Camp Elliot and attached to the Field Signal Battalion to devise the Navajo code.

"They taught us every conceivable way of sending a message, including by runners," said Frank T. Thompson, 63, one of the code talkers. "We had to do more than 40 words a minute to pass.

"The only thing they didn't ask us to do was to send smoke signals," he said.

"There were a lot of military things we didn't have a name for in our language, so we had to make up words," interjected Wilford Buck, 61, who served with Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 6th Marine Regiment, 2nd Marine Division.

Teddy Draper Sr., now a school teacher on the Window Rock (Ariz.) reservation, said expressions frequently used in Marine communications were assigned corresponding words in Navajo: observation plane was "ne-ashjaa" ("owl" in Navajo), submarine was "beesh-too" (iro fish)," aircraft carrier was "tsidt-ney-ye-hi" (bird carrier), hand grenade was "nimasii" (potato), bomb was "ayzeezhii" (egg), corps was "din-neh-il" (clan), colonel was "alsah-besh-le-gain" (silver eagle), and dive bomber was transformed into "gini" (chicken hawk).



A double alphabet was also used when they had to spell out proper names, such as Mount Suribachi on Iwo Jima. The Navajos had to memorize every word and phrase, with nothing written down for combat use.

"It took them three weeks to make up a word for artillery," said Thompson. "They decided to spell it out . . . ant for A, bear for B . . . all in the Navajo tongue."

The first 29 code talkers created a special vocabulary of 234 words which was later expanded to more than 450 terms. Johnston enlisted in the Marines in October 1942 and was placed in charge of the code talker recruit-

Indians' contributions recognized

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

President Ronald Reagan and Congress declared this week a time to highlight the American Indian's contributions to America.

More than 8,000 Indians served in the Army and Navy during World War I, 6,000 of them volunteers. In World War II 25,000 American Indians served and earned 51 Silver Stars, 71 Air Medals, 47 Bronze Stars, 34 Distinguished Flying Crosses and two Medals of Honor.

Indians served in the Korean War and 41,500 shipped off to Vietnam during that conflict.

Today, there are 6,462 American Indians in the Reserves and National Guard and 13,713 in the regular Armed Forces. One of these Native American regulars is Fort Benning's and the 197th Infantry Brigade's own SP4 Dennis Hisgun.

Hisgun, a full-blooded Sioux, is a truck vehicle mechanic in the "Sledgehammer's" Headquarters and Headquarters Company. He is very much aware of his Indian heritage but does not pay primary allegiance to that Indian heritage.

"I am a Sioux Indian but I'm an American first. Myself and my Mom amd Dad, Dennis Senior and Laverne, are proud of being Indians but we're mainly just Americans," said Hisgun.

The tall, dark-haired soldier said he had lived his entire life on reservations in Minnesota and South Dakota before joining the Army.

"I joined the Army to get away from the reservation for awhile and be on my own. But when my enlistment is up I'm going back to the reservation," Hisgun said.

New GI Bill provides more education options

Army News Service

Congress recently approved an education package that changes some opportunities for soldiers concerned about gaining a civilian education after leaving the Army.

The "Veterans' Benefits Improvement and Health-Care Authorization Act of 1986," signed by President Ronald Reagan in Columbus, Ga. Oct. 28, addresses several changes to the Army's new GI Bill and Veterans' Educational Assistance Program, said Lt. Col. Ali H. Bemis from the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at The Pentagon.

For one, soldiers enrolled under the new GI Bill will find that their tax bill has shrunk this year while their benefits have remained unchanged.

Such is possible because the Authorization Act has changed the way the $100 monthly allotment is paid by soldiers enrolled under the new GI Bill. Money paid from July 1 to Dec. 31, 1985, was deducted from soldiers' base pay, leaving the total pay as taxable income.

However, since January of this year allotments are considered pay reductions rather than deductions, Bemis said. This means that, theoretically, the pay of soldiers enrolled under the new GI Bill is reduced by $100 each month. Because their $500 per month pay is reduced to $400, for example, soldiers are taxed on only $4,800 per year rather than on $6,000, as they were when the allotment was deducted.

"This change confirms the intent of Congress that these monies (education allotments) will not be refunded, since we cannot refund money to a soldier that he did not receive," Bemis said.

Soldiers receive more benefits for their money because Congress included a clause in the act that authorizes the use of new GI Bill money for apprenticeships and on-the-job training. The Vietnam-era GI Bill and the Veterans' Education Assistance Program always have covered such training, he said.

Another change under the act gives eligible soldiers who never enrolled under VEAP a second chance to earn a 2 to 1 return on their education dollars. Soldiers who entered active duty between Jan. 1, 1977, and June 30, 1985, have through March 31, 1987, to enroll.

To enroll, soldiers must start a VEAP educational savings allotment of $25 to $100 per month, make a lump-sum payment of no more than $2,700, or do a combination of both. They can do this through their local finance office.

"Soldiers who want the educational benefits available through VEAP must enroll during the enrollment opportunity period," Bemis said. "This is most probably their last chance."

Bemis emphasizes the importance of enrolling now because after the enrollment period closes no education benefits will be available to these soldiers.

When Congress approved the three-year test of the new GI Bill, which took effect July 1, 1985, it suspended VEAP. Under that legislation, VEAP would have resumed upon termination of the new GI BIll in June 1988.

However, the new legislation supersedes this ruling, calling for any new VEAP eligibility to be discontinued when the enrollment period ends in March 1987. There is no current legislation to provide education benefits after VEAP eligibility ends in March and the new GI Bill eligibility ends in 1988.

Striving for PT excellence now has added rewards

Army News Service

"Maxing" the Army's current physical fitness test can earn you more than promotion points and the praise of your fellow soldiers.

If you score at least 290 points out of a possible 300 and meet the Army's weight standards, you'll be awarded the distinctive multicolored, sew-on patch called the Army Fitness Badge.

You may retain the badge as long as you maintain a passing score on the test and stay within the weight standards.

Designed to be worn on the organizational or personal physical training uniform, the 2.5-inch-diameter cloth patch bears the slogan "Physical Fitness Excellence" in a circular pattern around the symbolic figure of an athlete on a stars-and-stripes background.

Since its approval for issuance in June, the badge has been made available for sale by the Army and Air Force Exchange Service's Military Clothing Sales Stores for those awardees who desire to buy extra copies of it for additional display.

Its wear instruction calls for placing the badge of the upper-left side of the organizational sweatshirt or T-shirt or in a similar location upon individually owned PT clothing.

Maj. Dick Hayford of the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Training at the Pentagon noted that the badge is not authorized for wear on duty uniforms other than the PT uniform.

Stronger concrete saves Army thousands of dollars

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Last week Fort Benning hosted a group of U.S. Army Corps of Engineers workers interested in the application of roller compacted concrete.

"RCC, while about 10 years old, is a new concept for the Southeast," said Cathy Burgy, a civil engineer working on the local RCC project. "It is the same as conventional concrete but, because of its makeup, RCC is stronger, cheaper and longer lasting."

RCC uses less water and more sand than conventional concrete, according to Ms. Burgy. This results in increased strength, a quicker set-up time, no need for forms or steel reinforcements and a substantially reduced cost.

"RCC is about half the cost of conventional concrete. Seven and one-half inches of conventional concrete is $22 a square yard. The same amount of RCC costs $15," Ms. Burgy said.

The RCC project at Fort Benning is in the form of a 23,600 square yard hard stand for track vehicles. According to Ms. Burgy, using RCC for the hard stand rather than conventional concrete will result in a savings of $171,000. Additionally, she said, "The 197th (Infantry Brigade) can start using the hard stand two weeks after project completion. If conventional concrete had been used it would have been a 28-day wait."

"Fort Benning was chosen as a test site for RCC to gather data to help in the application of RCC at Fort Drum, N.Y. Roller compacted concrete will be used at Drum in a major application in the building of hard stands and tank trails, among other things," said Capt. Steve Perrenot, the military assistant to the West Georgia area office for the Corps of Engineers.

Perrenot added that RCC is currently under study to improve its smoothness for use in building highways and roads. RCC in its present form has a rough surface.

Management plan to include CSM, SGM

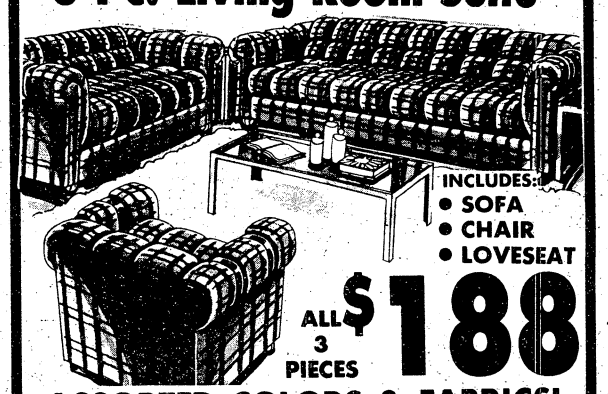
Army News Service

The Army's Qualitative Management Program has been expanded to include command sergeants major.

Beginning with the CSM/SGM selection board scheduled to convene in February, command sergeants major, as well as sergeants major, will be reviewed under the qualitative screening subprogram of the Qualitative Management Program, said SGM Dennis Smith, personnel policy integrator, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at the Pentagon.

The Qualitative Management Program, which began earlier this year for CSM/SGMs, is designed to improve the quality of the enlisted forces by denying reenlistment to soldiers who do not measure up to Army standards.

"In our continuing effort to ensure a quality NCO corps, now and in the future, we are expanding the Qualitative Management Program to include command sergeants major," Smith said. "This change in policy will ensure that all non-commissioned officers above the rank of corporal are reviewed annually under the qualitative screening subprogram of the Qualitative Management Program."



Under the subprogram, centralized Department of the Army boards review soldiers' records to determine if they have the potential for continued service.

Top NCOs gather to 'fine tune' infantry BNCOC

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

The Basic Non-Commissioned Officers Course for the infantry Career Management Field will be undergoing many positive changes as the result of a gathering here recently.

Coming from 15 different Non-Commissioned Officers Academies, the 68 representatives put their collective heads together for three days to fine tune the infantry BNCOC.

"There was a new BNCOC program of instruction instituted last July. This conference was (offered) so representives from every NCO Academy that teaches infantry BNCOC could come to the Infantry School and purify the new POI," said MSG John Franklin Jr., the NCO in charge of the Enlisted Training Branch in the Directorate of Training and Doctrine.

Sergeants major, first sergeants, sergeants first class and staff sergeants from NCO Academies as far away as Alaska, Texas and Kentucky looked at the specifics of BNCOC instruction for the entire infantry series of military occupational specialty. Subject areas included, 11B, infantry; 11C, mortar; 11H, tube-launched, optically-sighted, wire-guided missile system, and 11M, Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle training.

"As an example, we decided mounted land navigation should be a testable item for all 11Ms. We made changes in crew drills for the 11Hs. I could go on and on. We made hundreds of improvements to fine-tune infantry BNCOC," said CSM Eugene Spence, from the 172nd Infantry Brigade in Alaska, an NCOA commandant.

Additionally, representatives from Training and Doctrine Command, Forces Command, the Sergeants Major Academy and the Directorate of Evaluation and Standards attended.

"We had these representatives from different commands and the DOES so they would know how our purification of BNCOC would affect the Non-Commissioned Officers Education System as a whole. Our entire purpose is to ensure we have the best trained NCOs possible," said Franklin.

Conference sets battlefield plan for reserve units

by Shawn Bryson
The Bayonet staff writer

The U. S. Infantry Center hosted the Reserve Component Mobilization Coordination Conference Nov. 14 and 15 here.

The bi-annual conference is required by the U.S Army Forces Command and more than 170 personnel attended it this year, according to Lt. Col. Louis V. Brackett, mobilization plans officer.

He said staff representatives of various post directorates and organizations, as well as representatives from the reserve units attended the conference.

Brackett indicated that the conference is sponsored for the more than 100 Army Reserve units that mobilize at Fort Benning. Should the reserve units be needed in the event of war, they have to be familiar with the procedures for speedy mobilization, according to Brackett.

The conference was designed as a two-day work shop that included presentations, discussions, on-site visits and an evening social activity, Brackett said.

Announcements

The temperate, desert and hot weather battle dress uniforms were not designed to be pressed. To improve the appearance of the uniforms, the policy was changed to permit pressing at the discretion of the commander. This policy has not changed.

Hot head press equipment used in conjunction with washing develops holes in the pocket flaps. Recommended methods of cleaning are by dry cleaning or washing, drying and hanging on hangers. If pressing is desired, it should be done by hand.

Matchbox Toy Company announces the recall of certain voltron lions that were sold in Army exchanges. Paint on the robots, which were made in Taiwan, may contain levels of lead that exceed the legal limit.

The robot toys affected by the recall are the Voltron III Lion, Model Number 700302, and Voltron III Mini-lion, Model Number 700001. The lions are about 6 inches tall and resemble the deluxe version, but the body parts are not designed to separate. The recalled models can also be identified by a silver stick-on label that says: "C Bandai 1981, SD or CJ, made in Taiwan, or Bandai, made in Taiwan." Also, made in Taiwan is embossed on a yellow piece on the back of the torso.

There have been no reports of injuries associated with the toys, but parents are advised that there is a health risk if children swallow the paint. Toys can be returned to any exchange for a full refund.

Soldiers who lost out on their educational benefits when the old GI Bill expired now have a second chance to enroll in the Veterans Education Assistance Program.

Those soldiers who joined the service between Jan. 1, 1977, and June 30, 1985, and never initially enrolled in VEAP, can sign up now through March 31, 1987.

To take advantage of this opportunity, visit the nearest Army Education Center to apply. For more information, call 545-3093.

Now is the time for unit commanders to begin submitting requests for cold weather indoctrination classes, in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 40-24. These classes are designed to be given to staff personnel, who then do instruction at unit and company levels. For more information, call SSgt. Barnett at 545-1144.

Fort Benning depends on its volunteers. The following positions are currently open:

- Receptionist — This position is a busy job that involves greeting visitors, directing them to the proper place or helping to answer their questions. These jobs are available at Army Community Service, the Volunteer Resource Center and the Red Cross.
- Army Emergency Relief clerk — Here is a job where you will assist in filing, typing and handling telephone calls. This is a very busy and interesting job.
- Budget counselors — If you enjoy working with figures and planning and preparing budgets, this position at ACS is for you.
- Tagging and consignment clerks — The Thrift Shop has several openings available on Tuesday, Thursdays and Saturdays. You can work in the main store, Furniture Barn or Craft Cabin.
- Caseworker — These Red Cross positions assist military families who are faced with emergency or stressful situations.
- Safety instructor — Also a Red Cross opening, workers in this job learn to teach first aid, water safety and CPR.
- Tour guides — Learn to be a vital link between the curious and the "Queen of Battle" as a tour guide at the National Infantry Museum.
- Santa's Castle — If you like to "play" with toys, this is your chance to do so without getting teased. Repair and clean donated toys, bicycles, games, etc., for needy kids.

We offer free nursery care at Tot Town for volunteers. If you have a skill or interest not mentioned here, the Volunteer Resource Center will help find the right place for you.

For more information, call 545-5602 or drop by the center at 301 McIver Street.

Benning welcomes School of Americas

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Fort Benning hosted numerous VIPs from all over the world as it officially recognized the permanent stationing of the U.S. Army School of the Americas here in a ceremony on the school grounds at 10:30 a.m. yesterday.

The Secretary of the Army The Honorable John O. Marsh Jr., Gen. Carl E. Vuono, commanding general of Training and Doctrine Command, the chairman of the Inter American Defense Board, Lt. Gen. John. L. Ballantyne, and the Honorable Richard Ray were among the VIPs visiting the installation.

Although USARSA was moved to Fort Benning in December 1984, only this year was the determination made that the Home of the Infantry would become USARSA's permanent location.

During yesterday's festivities, each participating country was honored as individual nations' flags were unfurled and ceremoniously raised.

A battery from the 197th Infantry Brigade provided appropriate flourishes with a 19-gun salute, followed by an official pass in review.

Formerly at Forts Amador and Gulick in Panama, the school has trained more than 46,000 senior and junior officers, academy cadets and enlisted troops from 22 Latin American countries. The instruction and training are in Spanish and are based on U.S. Army doctrine.

Also attending the cermony was former Fort Benning commander and present XVIII Airborne Corps commander, Lt. Gen. John W. Foss; Lt. Gen. Gerald T. Bartlett, deputy commanding general, TRADOC; Maj. Gen. James R. Taylor, commanding general 193rd Infantry Brigade in Panama; and Maj. Gen. Charles W. Brown, U.S. Army Security Assistance.

Tax reform means more money for some soldiers

Army News Service

Many soldiers will pay fewer taxes under the final tax reform bill approved by Congress recently.

The decrease comes with a streamlined tax system that will eliminate the current 15 tax brackets, ranging from 11 to 50 percent, and replace them with two: 15 and 28 percent. The system will be phased in over two years, and will be indexed to inflation. For 1987, a transitional five-bracket schedule ranging from 11 to 38.5 percent will apply.

Single soldiers with an adjusted gross income of up to $17,850 should fall in the 15 percent bracket, said Capt. Herman A. Dyke from the Army's Legal Assistance Office at the Pentagon. Single soldiers with incomes exceeding that amount will be taxed at 28 percent. Soldiers qualifying as the head of household will be taxed at the 15 percent rate unless their adjusted gross income exceeds $23,900. Married soldiers filing jointly and surviving spouses will make the jump between the 15 and 28 percent brackets at $29,751. Married soldiers filing separately will be taxed at 15 percent unless their adjusted gross income exceeds $14,875.

Increased deductions

The new tax system means higher personal exemptions for most soldiers. The current $1,080 exemption afforded taxpayers and their dependents will be increased to $1,900 per person for 1987, to $1,950 for 1988 and stabilize at $2,000 in 1989.

An increase for the standard reduction will further benefit soldiers who don't itemize their federal returns. The $2,390 standard deduction currently given to single taxpayers will increase to $3,000. The deduction for married couples filing jointly and surviving spouses will jump from $3,540 to $5,000. The deduction for married couples filing separately is $1,770: that will increase to $2,500, Dyke said.

The new tax bill further salvages Individual Retirement Account deductions for some soldiers. Single soldiers with an adjusted gross income of less than $25,000 may continue to deduct up to $2,000 on their tax return even though their employer — the federal government — provides a retirement plan for them. Soldiers filing joint returns may claim the deduction if their adjusted gross income is less than $40,000.

Soldiers not qualifying for the full deduction still will qualify for a partial deduction if they are married filing joint returns and earning less than $50,000. Single soldiers earning less than $35,000 also will qualify for a partial deduction.

Interest earned on past and future IRA contributions will continue to be exempt from taxation, regardless of whether the contributions themselves are deductible.

The new tax bill allows soldiers to continue claiming interest on home mortgages even if they receive a housing allowance.

Other changes

Although the new tax bill rings some increased deducations, it will reduce or eliminate some other traditional ones.

Sales taxes, for example, will not be deductible after this year. Taxes paid on income and personal property, however, will remain deductible.

Deductions for interest paid on car loans, outstanding credit card balances and most bank loans also will become a thing of the past by 1991. While all such interest may be deducted in 1986, only 65 percent of the total payments may be deducted in 1987, 40 percent in 1988, 20 percent in 1989 and 10 percent in 1990.

Deductions for charitable contributions made after this year will be restricted to those who itemize on their federal returns.

The nex tax bill also repeals the deduction for married couples when both work. Under current law, a deduction of up to $3,000 is authorized because the taxes paid by such households are usually higher than the combined taxes paid by two single people earning the same salary.

Profits gained on the sale of stocks, bonds, real estate and the like no longer will be taxed at the lower capital gains rate. Currently, 60 percent of long-term

Legal Assistance clarifies some confusing aspects

Legal Assistance Office

The most extensive revision of the tax code in 73 years has finally become a reality. The designers of this new tax system have promised that, beginning Jan. 1, our tax system is going to become simple and fair.

It is only natural that we, as taxpayers, are curious as to how the new tax reform bill will impact on our finances. And, while the bill promises to make the tax system less complicated and a smaller burden for individuals, taxpayers are going to have to become familiar with a whole new set of rules.

A bit of clarification on some of the more important provisions in the new tax system, especially those that affect soldiers, may be helpful in understanding the changes.

Charitable contributions will only be deductible for those who itemize. This will also be true with moving expenses.

State and local sales taxes will no longer be deductible. However, income and property taxes remain fully deductible.

Consumer interest deductions will be phased out over the next four years. In 1987 only 65 percent of interest on charge cards, automobile loans, and such will be deductible. In 1988 the deduction drops to 40 percent in 1989 only 20 percent will be deductible, and in 1990 only 10 percent will be deductible.

For those who itemize, miscellaneous itemized deductions, such as professional dues and publications, and deductible uniform expenses will only be deductible to the extent they exceed 2 percent of adjusted gross income.

There will no longer be a deduction for tax preparation fees, so be sure to take advantage of Fort Benning's Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program. Specially trained unit tax advisors will be available during the tax season to assist you in preparing your federal and state income tax returns.

What do all these changes mean to the soldier?

The new tax bill should reduce federal income tax for most enlisted soldiers 10 to 22 percent, and most officers should see an 8 to 10 percent reduction. Junior enlisted soldiers can expect a tax cut of approximately 65 percent.

It's true that no one will really know how this new tax bill will affect us until tax time roles around, but from all the indications, 1987 should be a much better tax year.

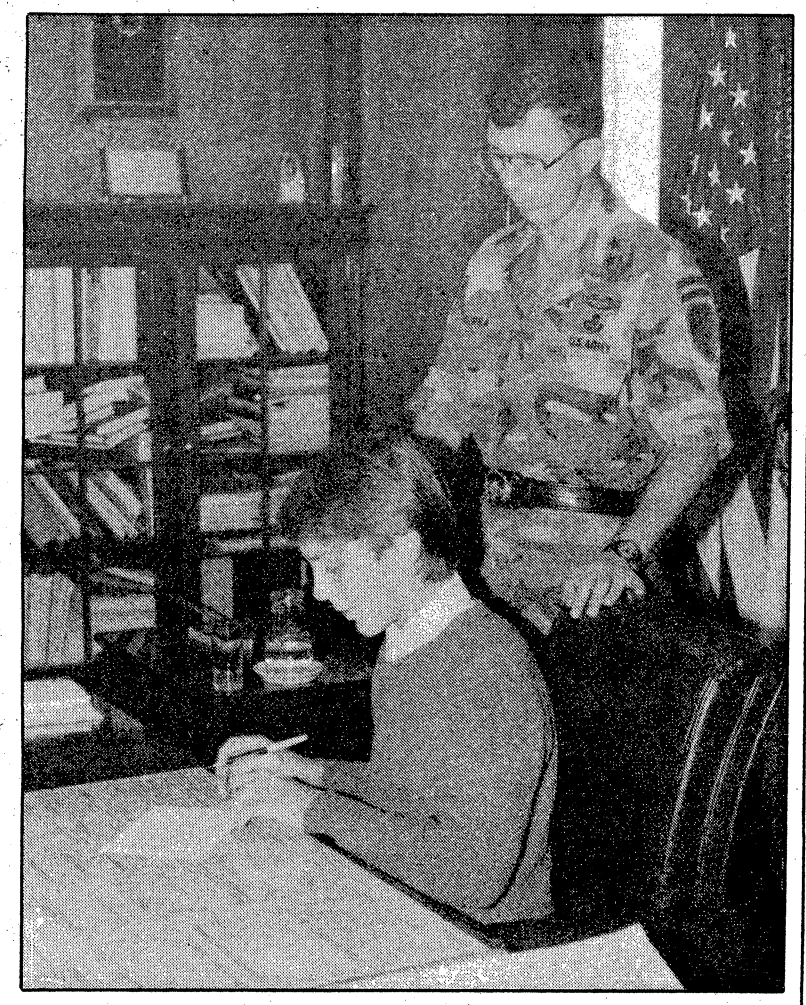
gains is excluded from taxation while the remaining 40 percent gets taxed as ordinary income.

In contrast, long-term losses could be more beneficial after Jan. 1. Under current law, taxpayers can deduct only half of all long-term losses, up to $3,000, that exceed realized capital gains for the same year. Tax reform will allow the entire loss of up to $3,000 to be subtracted against other earnings.

These are only a few of the changes that will result from tax reform. Soldiers can find out how the tax changes might affect them individually by making an appointment with their legal assistance officers. Soldiers might benefit most by talking with their legal assistance officer now. These officials can recommend courses of action soldiers should follow this year, or what strategies they should put into action for next year, to benefit most under the new legislation.

If the Tax Reform Act and House Conforming Resolution 395 are enacted in their present form, qualified military fringe benefits such as exchange shopping and health care will not be taxed.



VA Q&A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I heard that Congress passed a law authorizing special life insurance dividends for World War II veterans. I understand that veterans are entitled to this dividend even if they haven't kept their policies in force. Is this true?

A — No. The VA does not pay dividends on lapsed insurance policies. It sounds as if you were misled by the insurance hoax that has plagued the VA since 1948.

The hoax is refueled every few years by the mysterious distribution of "applications" that claim that dividends are available for the asking and that Congress has passed a law authorizing the dividends.

Christopher Harsh, winner of the "If I Were a General for a Day" contest, signs a directive during his "tour of duty," under post commander Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr.'s supervision.

'General for a day' winner declares training holiday

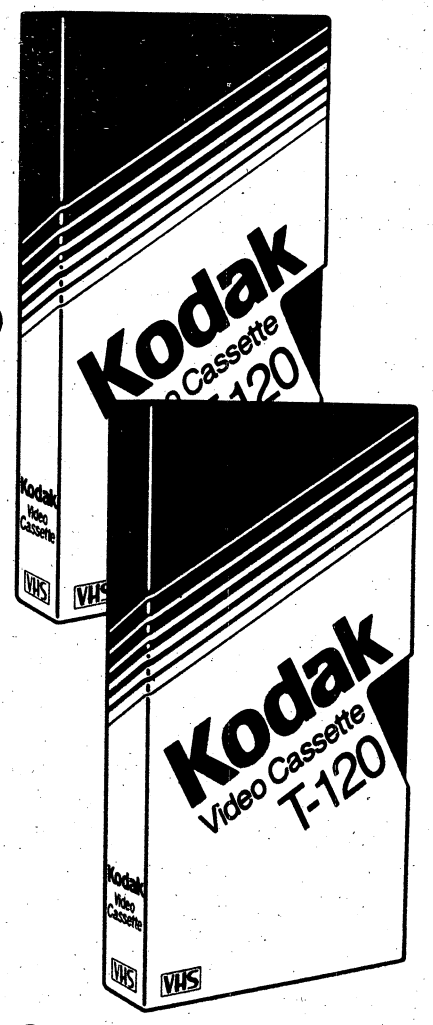
The Bayonet staff writer

Picking the right staff topped the list of tasks Christopher Harsh would set for himself if he were Fort Benning's commander.

"I would take my Dad out of work and make him my aide," Harsh said.

The Faith Middle School eighth grader "took command" of the installation for 30 minutes Monday, collecting on part of his reward for winning an essay contest.

During Harsh's command, morale was top priority as he opted to give a post-wide training holiday Friday. Harsh and Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. discussed command procedures and the boy signed directorates during his "tour of duty."



Harsh's agenda included a visit to Riverside, the commanding general's quarters, where he received a personal tour from Mrs. Trish Burba. Mrs. Burba and Harsh discussed the history of the home and its furnishings.

Lunch at a 197th Infantry Brigade dining facility was a must for Harsh. The 14-year-old student dined with his father, 1st Lt. Raymond E. Harsh of the 197th. After lunch, father and son toured the Brigade area.

Harsh's essay was selected from more than 150 entries submitted by children in third through eighth grades.

Programs put meaning in holidays for 197th

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

During the holidays we sometimes get so caught up in shopping and rushing from one place to another that we tend to forget to stop and count our blessings and remember the true spirit of Thanksgiving and Christmas.

During this busy time of year, the Kelley Hill Chapel is sponsoring several holiday services for 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers and their families.

The Holiday Outreach Program is one such event.

"We are collecting money from units and a designated offering in chapel," explained Chaplain (Capt.) Donna Weddle. "We're trying to help needy soldiers in the Brigade during the holidays."

Chaplain (1st Lt.) Christopher Wisdom explained that many families suffer financial hardships for different reasons. This program is to provide some holday cheer for these soldiers.

"The program comes at a time when it is important for the family to be able to sit down together and have a meal," Wisdom said. "I think the program gives the soldiers a sense of being cared for during the holiday season."

Each company first sergeant will collect the names of needy soldiers and forward them to the chapel. These soldiers will receive food vouchers good for grocery items at the Fort Benning Commissary.

Another program being presented this year is the Christmas Cantata.

"The Cantata is basically a story told through music," said Chaplain (Capt.) Richard Quinn. "It will be presented at the 11 a.m. worship service Dec. 14.

"We have 15 people involved in the Cantata, but we could use more," Quinn said. "I'm hoping it will be a big affair. Everyone is invited and there will be refreshments after."

A Children's Christmas play will also be presented Dec. 14 at 7 p.m.

"The basic theme of the play is that the children are toys in an old German toy store and the play takes place from there," explained Quinn. "It's a full play with action and music."

Quinn invites anyone interested in participating in the children's Christmas play or the Christmas Cantata to contact him at the Kelley Hill Chapel. There are still places for more singers and actors to be added to the programs, as well as stage hands and set builders.

Advent helps faithful learn patience

by Paul Williams
7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade chaplain

Nov. 30 is the first Sunday of Advent. Advent consists of the four Sundays that precede Christmas day. Advent is the time of preparation. It is the time of waiting and anticipation for the magic morning of Christmas day.

Advent is, for me, a time of busy hustle and bustle. It is the scurrying after presents and cards and trees and lights and decorations and cookies and . . . Advent is, for me, about the busiest time of the year.

The central meaning of Advent for me is not the "busyness," however.

Advent is the time of waiting, the time of anticipation. How well I remember waiting for Christmas morning as a boy! I could never sleep much on Christmas Eve waiting for Santa Claus to come. Every second was a minute; each minute was an hour; each hour was an eternity! How could I sleep, waiting for the presents and the surprises, full of wonder and beauty? I'm so grateful that as I got older, I realized that the greatest things in life on Christmas morning are worth the waiting time. In fact, I've discovered that the waiting is half of the fun; half of the joy.

How poor we are at waiting in our society! We like troubles solved in 28 television minutes. We like hamburgers ready-made. If ill, we insist on being made well right now. We are looking for the quick profit and the one-minute manager. We have lost sight of the importance of the ability to wait well.

Even as an adult, it is sometimes hard to wait for Christmas. It is hard to feel joy in the hustle and the hassle of the Advent season.

"God's clock is wound a different way than ours. Waiting, not hurry, is one of God's characteristics. This waiting is the appropriate posture."

Isaiah says in the Bible that: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles . . .". Do we have the maturity to wait upon the Lord? Can we wait? Can we trust in God, to see his purposes fulfilled in our lives? God's timetable is not like ours. He desires that we learn to be patient and find the serenity and joy that comes in waiting on him.

It is true of the miracles God desires to do in our difficult lives. It is true as Christians wait in these difficult times upon his second Advent. Let us take joy in waiting upon the Lord.

Chaplain's Center helps troubled families

USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Chaplains' Family Life Center in Building 2606 on Dixie Road, is a chapel program that exists to help marriages and families that suffer from relationship difficulties.

Professional counseling and pastoral care is provided. The program deals with such areas as communication skills, raising children, coping with stress, anger, relationship, etc.

Chaplain Robert White, who trained at the University of Louisville, is the director of the Family Life Center. He and his staff are available by appointment, to assist troubled families and marriages.

He is also the coordinator of the Systematic Training for Effective Parenting program. This program helps parents to be more effective. He is currently conducting a class for parents of teenagers.

The center also works in support of the unit chaplain's family life programs and workshops.

Chapel Briefs

Shroud of Turin subject of lecture

A lecture and slide series on the Shroud of Turin will be offered Dec. 7 at 7 p.m. at the Kelley Hill Chapel, Building 9023.

The lecture is free and the public is invited. For more information, call Chaplain Bjarnason at544-2712.

Catholic council to meet for mass

The Military Council of Catholic Women meets Dec. 5 for rosary, mass and fellowship. The gathering will include a gift exchange and potluck lunch to celebrate the Christmas season.

Bring a handmade or modestly priced ornament, a dish and a friend. Rosary starts at 9:15 a.m. in the main post Catholic Chapel. Free babysitting is available at the Religious Education Center.

For more information, call Marianne Tennant at 687-0451.

Program seeking adult volunteers

Adult volunteers are needed to help with a Youth Rally in March. The event is sponsored by the Religious Education Center. Call 545-5508 for more information.

Lutherans offering communion service

On Dec. 7, the Fort Benning Lutheran community will gather for the first of its monthly communion services.

Chaplain Strohschein invites all Lutherans to attend the celebration at the Sightseeing Road Chapel, Building 2820, beginning at 9 a.m.

Family focus of films

The "Focus on Families" film series continues at the Kelley Hill Chapel today at 10 a.m. and 7 p.m.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

With the growing problem of criminal activity Armywide and the rising larceny rate, it becomes very evident that precautionary measures must be taken to prevent crime. However, taking these measures will not preclude the possibility that an individual could still become a victim of a larceny.

The question most commonly asked is, "What can I do to assist the police in their investigation and recovering the stolen property?"

The best thing you can do is be able to identify your property. In order to recover your property, the military police must be able to positively identify it. If the property is not marked with a recorded serial number or an engraved number, identification and recovery are unlikely.

If you live in the barracks, you are required by U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 190-31 to have your property marked and logged on two copies of Department of the Army Form 4986.

Your company keeps one copy and it should be updated whenever you get a new piece of property. The second copy is to be kept by the individual and should also be updated when necessary.

Individuals who reside in post quarters are also encouraged to mark and record identification numbers of their property. How can you get the engraver to mark your property? Each company at Fort Benning is required to have engravers for use by company personnel. In the event your unit does not have engravers, active duty and dependent personnel living on post or in the Columbus area may sign for an engraver from the military police for a 72-hour period by coming to the Crime Prevention section in the Provost Marshal's Office, Building 215.

When marking your property, you should use an easily identifiable number. Your driver's license number with your initials at the end of the number is a good method.

The effort to stop crime is an on-going process that law enforcement officials cannot solve or achieve by themselves. Your help is drastically needed. Join the campaign to help stop crime. "See a crime — drop a dime." Call the Fort Benning Military Police at 545-5222.

Area athletes meet challenge in annual 10K/ Biathlon

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

Only seconds separated the top runners of the 2nd Annual Fort Benning 10K/Biathlon Nov. 8 that kicked off at Martin Army Community Hospital.

After kicking three miles on a fast track, followed by a 30-mile bike course of rolling hills, Tom Baker from the Macon Track Club, broke through the finish at 1:42:28.

Craig Pate rode tightly on his bumper, trailing by 28 seconds.

Rolling along just over a minute behind the leader, was John Forguer at 1:43:46.

Leading the track in the Women's Division was Lise Cote, blazing to a 1:51:40 finish.

Jean Rowan was awarded second place at 1:53:52, while Darlene Palmer held onto a third place finish at 1:55:50.

The race leaders could not put together a winning team, however, as the Fort Rucker, Ala. contingent claimed the three-member team title with John Kelsey, 1:44:22; Mike Eddy, 1:45:26; and Robert Saunders at 1:48:52.

In the second year of the biathlon, the track was open to a greater number of participants.

"We had participants from all parts of the Southeast," said 1st Lt. Johanna Gabbard, race director. "Our goals (were to have) great participation and a quality race that people will return each year to compete."

The relay times in the biathlon were only minutes ahead of the individual efforts, as the team of Roy Roberts and Greg Combs finished at 1:39:56 in the Male/Male Division.

In the Male/Female Division, Paul Marks and Susan Donnelly teamed for a win at 1:43:39.

The Female/Female Division was dominated by P. J. Connelly and Marilyn Boros with a time of 2:38:18.

From a field of 138 runners Danill Sullivan sped to first place in the 10K run at 36:49, trailed by teammate Dean Drake, finishing at 37:20.

The third place trophy went to Fernand Guth, who ran a 37:45.

Gaye Milling, who is new to the area, has placed first in the Women's Division in the two 10K events she has participated in since her arrival. After her recent victory in the National Infantry Museum Run victory, Milling smoked the 6.2 mile course at 46:51.

John Thomure combined his time of 38:47 with those of 10th Mountain Division teammates, Sullivan and Drake, to claim the 10K team title.

Individual Biathlon winners were:

'Joe Average' better running example than Rob de Castella

by Dr. John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

1st Lt. Jim Hourican from Camp Le Jeune, N.C. wrote me that he ran the half marathon last year and plans on running the whole course this time. He said his approach is not scientific and he does not subscribe to any runner's magazines. He asked for a few tips to get proper training.

Thanks for the letter, "LT." Last weeks schedule might help, and you should also keep in mind that you completed the 13 1/8-mile half marathon, you could probably go 15 to 16 miles with only a little more wear and tear. Once you can run this distance, with a rest day on each side, then the rest falls into place.

Keep in mind that in terms of pure energy expenditure there is a quantum leap of exhaustion when progressing from 15 to 16 up to 18 to 20 miles and on to the 20 to 22 mile training runs. Glycogen, the storage compound form of sugar and thus energy, is deleted through this distance range, so replace it with complex carbohydrates. Also, chronic dehydration, or water loss, develops when training is not accompanied by replacement.

Magazines and training books cause as much confusion as they do benefit. Knowing Rob de Castella's running schedule does not help me. Maybe reading how Rob gets nervous before a big race helps me realize that my jitters are normal, but I'm a big boy and not in need of a cute, shiny magazine.

I think the best way to learn how to train for a marathon is to train for 10 marathons. In lieu of this, try training with a local runner who is experienced. Find people with some common interests and goals. Running gurus are just that, gurus. "Joe Average," who has a real job everyday, other important committments, a realistic budget, a family to care for and no stock in Nike, is a fine choice.

Try a local running club or high school cross country coach. When you get too scientific you tend to lose the fun. "Since I did not run 18.4 miles today at a 7:15 pace I am a disgrace."

Use our aforementioned distance schedule. Be flexible. When running becomes boring, switch to cycling or circuit training. For the daring, pick out a day, and just "pig out" all day. (Ill-effects of this are minimal, and psychologically, it goes a long way.)

During the Marine Corps Marathon in 1983 I followed a marine unit running in cadence. Nice to watch as a spectator, but it must have been murder on the men. When "Joe Cromagnon" invented running (it was for a master's thesis at Slippery Rock State College) it was meant to be done with freedom, spirit, lilting, graceful movement, meant to set the imagination as well as the body free.

Now let's turn to some basic running problems. Starting at the bottom are the feet. These are paired in humans.

Some people wage wars with the crab grass in their lawns, some with sap drops on their freshly polished car, and then there are runners who wage war with their feet. This is preventable conflict. If a few cavets are kept in mind, most common, yet potentially catastrophic, problems can be avoided.

- Skin care is of utmost importance. Skin was designed to be a protective covering for the easily injured moving parts. Continuous moisture causes the skin the dystfunction; its layers swell, loose their nutrition and protective oils. Other than the moisture of sweat and water taken on by an occasional puddle, the feet must be kept dry. Taking a few extra seconds to dry the toes individually will have long-lasting dividends. On days when the long training run is particularly soggy, it is helpful to leave the feet naked or clothed only in cotton socks for a while after showering. Using a hair blow-dryer to get the feet "bone-dry" is helpful. Be careful not to burn your feet. As a last effort interdigital, between-the-toes, pledgets of cotton can be used. I usually don't prescribe this last treatment because the pledgets can act as soggy compresses rather than mositure wicks.

Friction blisters can be treated by emptying them through a tiny cut, then compression with a band-aid. Lubricate this area with a dollop of vaseline prior to donning socks. Thick, dry calluses can be sanded down with emery paper to decrease their bulk. Both blisters and calluses give clues about unusual wear and weight bearing patterns, heed these clues early to avoid unwanted consequences.

- Shoe care is second in importance. Now is the time to get that new pair of shoes if you've been planning since last year. Look for flexibility, sturdy heel stabilizer, ample toe box, and energy absorbing foundation. The weight, fabric, lacing technique, side logo, and endorsing athlete make very little difference. Try them out. If curved last feels weird, try straight. If flared heel feels unsteady, try regular beveled ones. When you buy shoes, buy socks. Moderately thick, absorbent, cotton-synthetic-wool blend is fine.

Remember: at mile 24, it won't really matter if Rob de Castella promotes your brand of shoes or if you wear black "Geek Socks." It's only you and the road.

Looking forward to seeing Lt. Hourican at Doughboy Stadium. See you on the road.

Redskins shut out Broncos, wrap Division championship

The Packer defense records its fifth shutout this season, as the line closes in on a Bear back.

Story and photos by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

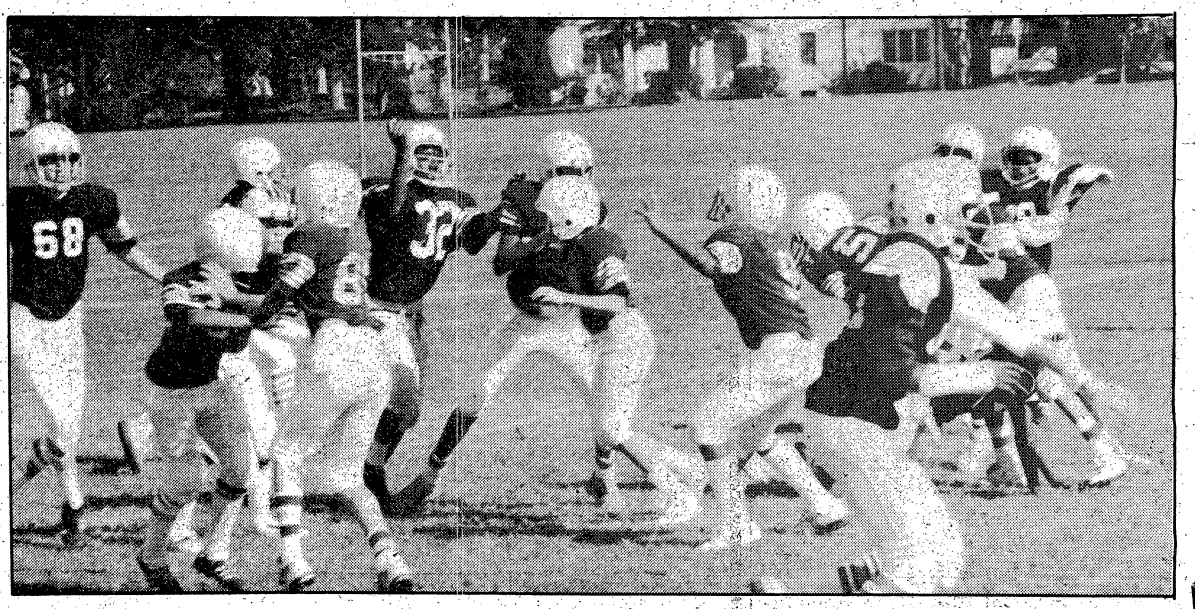
A pounding 252-yard ground assault led by quarterback Steve Murrell, gave the Redskins an 18-0 shutout over the Broncos and the championship crown in the 11 to 13 year-old Youth Activities Football Division.

In Saturday's matchup, Murrell rushed for 120 yards, scoring three touchdowns.

He also crossed the goal on two other occassions, but the plays were called back on penalties.

Murrell eluded Bronco defenders, scoring on scrambles of 43, 23 and 12 yards.

The ground attack was also aided by the combined 97 yards of tailback Robert Beverley and Allen White.



The Bronco offense, attempting an air-assault, found only the sure hands of Redskin defenders.

White's one-handed interception and another by Rahsaan Dobbs frustrated the Bronco attack.

The Bronco's problems did not end there, however, as persistent pass rushing by the tribe front four, Joshua Sperry, Miguel Suarez, Brentkl Gonzales and Eric Vasquez, kept the Bronco quarterback scrambling and accounted for four of the eight Bronco turnovers.

Murrell's aerial connections to Dobbs and Brandon Milikin kept the Bronco pass defenders leery all afternoon.

The Superbowl, dubbed "Superbout '86", pits the first and fourth place Redskins and Bears, as the National Football Conference against the awesome Packer and Bronco powers in the seasons grand finale at Doughboy Stadium, Dec. 6 at 5 p.m.

Packer defenders guard against a Bear aerial attack to close the season with a 22-0 victory.

Basketball sign up through Dec. 5

Registration for Youth Basketball is underway and will continue through Dec. 5, at the Youth Activities building on McIver Street.

Children 8 to 15 years old, of active or retired military personnel may register Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. A birth certificate or I.D. card is required and the child must be present at registration.

For more information on coaching requirements and player registration fees, call 545-3070 and 545-3913.

1st ITB turns out for Museum Race

More than 2,400 1st Infantry Training Brigade soldiers participated in the National Infantry Museum Run Oct. 25, and helped raise $6,000 for the museum.

The troops' hard work paid off, as the brigade's teams came out on top in nearly every race category.

In the 50-man formation category, the team from Headquarters, 1st ITB finished first, followed by the second place team from Company A, 1st Battalion.

In the separate Army Training Center battalion size category, Company D, 7th Battalion's 50-man team finished first. They were followed by Company E, 3d Battalion. Company A, 3rd Batattalion's team claimed the third place slot.

In the seven-man team competition, the team fielded by Headquarters, 1st ITB earned first place honors in overall competition, while 3rd Battalion, won first place in the ATC category. The 7th Battalion's team claimed the second place slot.

Waterfowl hunting dates announced

Georgia's waterfowl seasons have been set for the 1986, 1987 season. The duck hunting season goes through Friday and runs again from Dec. 13 to Jan. 18.

Bag limits are four daily, not to exceed more than two wood ducks; three mallards, only one of which can be a hen; two pintails; one black duck; two redheads; and one fulvous tree duck.

The season is closed for canvasbacks. These seasons and bag limits will apply to the Georgia portion of Fort Benning.

Hunting on the Alabama portion of the reservation will be in compliance with Alabama State Law. For more information call 544-6120.

Hunters can sign out from Building 4 now

Hunters can register for Saturday hunting areas in Classroom 20, Building 4, from noon to 3 p.m. every Friday.

For more information, call SFC Boulden at 545-1788.

Orienteers run last meet of 'A' season

by Linda Ferguson
Fort Benning Orienteering director

Just short of the 40th anniversay of the first Orienteering Meet in the United States. Nov. 24, 1946, the Georgia Orienteering Club hosted the annual 1986 F.D. Roosevelt Orienteering Meet Saturday and Sunday. The annual two-day event is traditionally the last "A" meet until March.

Thirteen Fort Benning area orienteers participated in the meet, which was attended by representatives of the Army, Air Force and Marine Reserves as well as Reserve Officer Training Corps and Junior ROTC units.

Fort Benning orienteers at the meet were: Mark Crowson, Mark Earley, Terry Fountain, Allen Gill, Tom Green, Robert Lara, Steve Lovette, Richard Lozano, Allen Maestas, Richard McCaughey and William Mitchell.

Of the 13 Fort Benning participants, four took home honors: Mark Earley, first place, Red M-21-B; Richard McCaughey, second place, Red M-21-B; Allen Maestas, third place, Red M-35-A; and Mark Crowson, first place, Green M-Open.

Other local military representatives are: Mike Platt for the Army Reserve (current U.S. Orienteering Champ), first place, Blue M-21; Don Davis, of the Marine Corps Reserve, first place, Blue M-45; Charles M. Ferguson, Air Force Reserve, second place, Red M-45 and Lt. Cmdr. Mal Harding, Coast Guard Reserve, Red M-35.

JROTC and ROTC units from all over the United States are training for the orienteering competition portion of the ROTC Ranger Challenge. Two colleges, the University of Central Florida with 20 cadet orienteers and Western Kentucky University with 12 cadet orienteers, garnered a few winning honors to take back to their units.

The most impressive young competitors, however, were JROTC cadets from Natchitoches Central High School, Natchitoches, La. Of the 12 cadets participating in the meet, 10 took home trophies. It is these superb young women and men that the U.S. Army can look forward to taking positions of leadership in the next few years.

Guide helps soldiers find temporary housing

American Telephone and Telegraph

BASKING RIDGE, N.J. — Military personnel assigned to temporary duty or moving between stations can save time finding temporary lodging by using a new, free guide provided by AT&T.

AT&T's Military Lifeguide on Temporary Military Lodging — also handy when planning a vacation — lists temporary lodging and child care facilities for most military installations in the United States. The 58-page guide is organized by state with sections for each branch of the service.

"AT&T's Military Lifeguide on Temporary Lodging is a comprehensive source of practical information — from reservation procedures to telephone numbers," said Helen McGrath, military market manager for AT&T. "We hope it makes life easier for military people on the move."

The guide also lists the addresses and telephone numbers of each military lodging facility, and the number and type of units available. Other information, such as reservation guidelines, also is included. The guide is the only free, joint services listing of temporary lodging facilities.

Also included in the guide are descriptions of AT&T products and money-saving services, such as AT&T telephone, the AT&T Card and Reach Out America.

People interested in getting AT&T's Military Lifeguide on Temporary Military Lodging or more information on AT&T services can call toll free 1-800-225-5288, extension 952.

knew, so it was no trouble," Mrs. Florek said.

Since his return to military service, Florek has complied an impressive record. He was honor graduate of his basic training class and distinguished honor graduate from the Primary Leadership Development Course. He was recommended for Officer Candidate School, but missed out on it because he was too old.

In May 1986, he was chosen Non-commissioned Officer of the Month, and later was named NCO of the Quarter at the battalion, brigade and post levels.

Florek said he spends about half his time in the field, but he enjoys being a squad leader. "I enjoy working with the young soldiers, teaching them how to survive in a combat environment," he said. Being 38 years old makes him the "old man" in the squad, he said, which is why he has a paternal attitude towards his troops.

Florek said his success as a soldier is due to his wife. "Because of Deb, I can go out on field exercises and not worry about anything," he said. "She handles all the money and is totally capable of handling any problems that come up."

Mrs. Florek recently took a job in sales, which means that she has to plan carefully to make the household function.

"You have to be very organized and be ready for anything," she said. "If something happens at the last minute, the whole plan changes."

With such busy schedules, family time is important to the Floreks. "We try to make it quality time with the children, and usually do things with them," Mrs. Florek said.

Son Chad is an active second grader who plays t-ball, soccer and takes karate lessons. Five-year-old Jennifer takes dance lessons and karate.

Although his spare time is limited, Florek worked as an assistant coach during soccer and t-ball seasons. He also procured a child-size set of golf clubs and is teaching Chad the game.

The Floreks both agree that the most important thing in their lives is the family, and maybe it's that attitude that makes their lives so successful.

They both say they made the right decision three years ago. "We represent our country, we're here to serve and we are proud of it," said Mrs. Florek.

ing and training program.

Twenty-seven members of the first graduating class were shipped to Guadalcanal to begin using the unique code in combat. The other two remained at the school as instructors and recruiters. More than 400 young Navajos became code talkers before the war's end.

After the war, most of these men returned to their native canyons, tall sandstone cliffs, scrubby desert, plains and mesas with their wartime feats unknown to the American public.

The code was blanketed in secrecy until being declassified in the late 1960s. Former code talker Clare Thompson explained the reason behind the secrecy: "If there was going to be another war, and this country needed our services, we all wanted to be ready and able to report back to duty. If we were to ever again be as effective as we were on the slopes of Mount Suribachi, we had to keep the code a secret."

"Wives knew nothing about what the husbands did in the war until 1968," said Mrs. Roy Hawthorne. "I was married to him for almost 20 years before I found out about him being a code talker."

Although they had served with distinction, the majority of them were never promoted past private, nor were they highly decorated for their efforts.

The code talkers didn't receive any recognition for their efforts until the late 1960s, when the 4th Marine Division Association invited them to attend their annual reunion in Chicago.

They were honored with a specially-minted medallion in commemoration of their service. They also received official national recognition that year when President Ronald Reagan signed a proclamation designating Aug. 14 as National Navajo Code Talkers Day.

decided Mrs. Kendall wouldn't work outside the home so she could be there for the children; a decision they both said was the right one. It makes life easier for everyone and gives them more family time. "It's like the poem about letting the dust grow," Mrs. Kendall said. "If I have a choice between cleaning the house or doing something with the kids, I choose them. I can clean later, but they are kids now," she said.

Don't think they're a family of saints, Kendall said. "We don't think we're that special, and I sometimes think I don't do as much as I should."

"We explode sometimes like everybody else," Mrs. Kendall said. "Sometimes we all mess up, but we just have to go on."

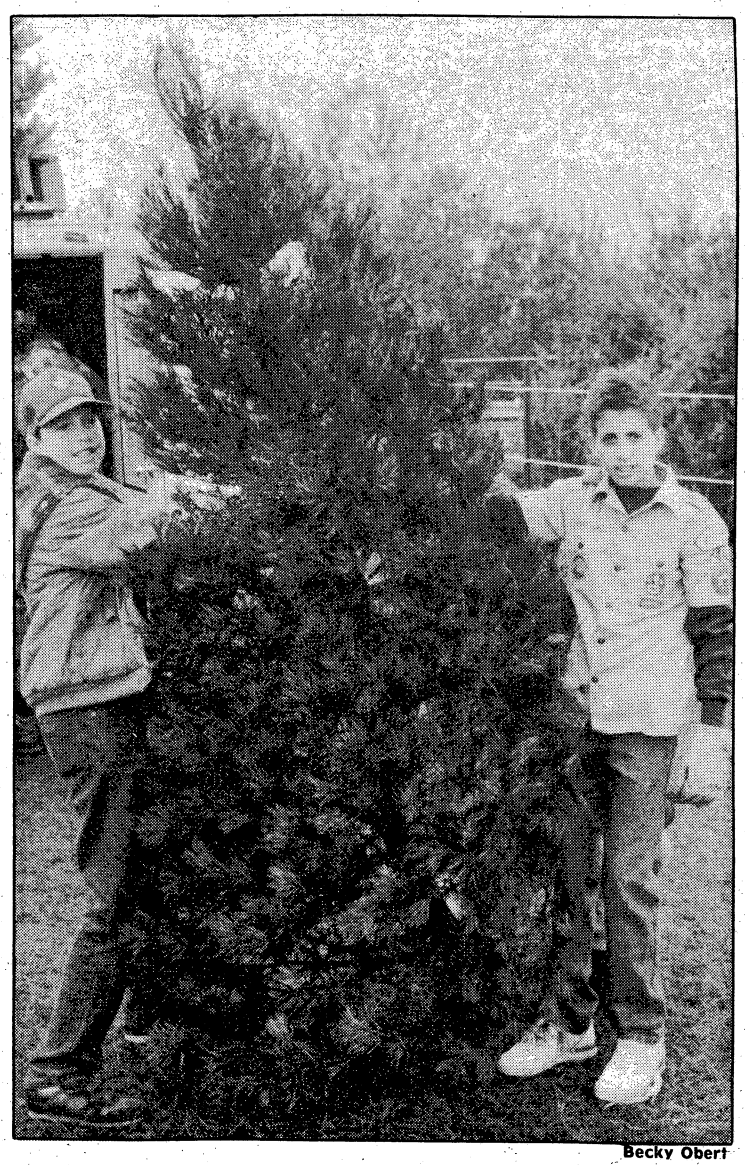
Road to close for construction

A section of Sightseeing Road will be closed to through traffic now through Dec. 15 to permit construction of a tracked vehicle crossing.

Through traffic will be required to detour via Way Street and Sightseeing Road. For more information, call Richard Chancey at 545-3725.

Holiday lighting policy announced

In a recent message from the chief of staff, the command policy concerning Christmas decorations on post was outlined.



In an effort to conserve energy, non-electric holiday decorations will be used in office and operational facilities throughout the post.

In the housing areas, lights and wreaths should be confined to the interior of the dwelling.

Precautionary safety measures must be observed in order to maximize fire prevention.

Local TV to carry Army-Navy game

The Army-Navy football game will be broadcast tomorrow by WRBL-TV 3 in Columbus. The pre-game show begins at 2 p.m., with kickoff scheduled for 2:30.

Post classrooms, billets win TRADOC awards

by Ann Keays
TRADOC Office of the Chief of Public Affairs

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — Fort Benning's classrooms and transient billets were recognized here recently as being outstanding in the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command's second Installations of Excellence Awards Competition.

Forts Jackson, Rucker, and Leavenworth took first place in their categories.

Gen. Carl E. Vuono, TRADOC commander, presented the Commander's Cups for Installation Excellence for fiscal year 1986 to the winners during the TRADOC Commanders' Conference here Nov. 16 to 20. Other awards will be made at installation ceremonies.

Vuono said he is "personally pleased" with the continuing efforts throughout TRADOC to provide facilities that attract soldiers and families who live and work on the command's installations. He noted that commander and NCO involvement in improving the quality of life is directly related to retaining quality soldiers.

Fort Jackson, S.C., took top honors in the large installation category. Fort Rucker, Ala., won in the medium category, and Fort Leavenworth, Kan., took best in the small installation category.

The Ordnance Center and School at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., won first place in the category of TRADOC schools on non-TRADOC installations.

The Commander's Cup is awarded to the installation that has the highest standards for overall appearance.

TRADOC installations are evaluated in several areas during the annual competition. TRADOC evaluators assess the exterior of general facilities, the interior of specific facilities, and the exterior and interior of special-interest facilities.

TRADOC installations are grouped into three categories for evaluation: large, medium, and small, based on active-duty population. In addition, a fourth category recognizes excellence on non-TRADOC installations that host TRADOC schools.

Forts Rucker and Leavenworth also took top honors in their categories in last year's competition. Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., won the large installation category for Fiscal year 1985.

Objectives of TRADOC's Installations of Excellence Program include creating installations which attract and retain skilled and motivated people, building pride and esprit-de-corps in the force, and releasing the constructive potential of peer competition.

In addition to the formal Installations of Excellence competition, there are on-the-spot awards to recognize individuals who have contributed to an installation's excellence. As TRADOC evaluation team members encounter such individuals who deserve an instant award, they present a blue baseball cap inscribed with "Excellence Starts Here."

'Professionalism' good topic for next Army theme

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Over the last few years the Army's leadership has set a theme for each year with the intent of focusing attention on a certain aspect of military, more specifically Army, life.

One year we concentrated on the historic Battle at Yorktown. The emphasis placed on the important event was successful in raising soldiers' awareness of its significance.

1984 was declared the Year of the Army Family. Many strides forward were made in realizing the valuable part a soldier's family plays in the accomplishment of the mission.

Leadership was our theme last year. Through many different mediums, the message was sent that a clear understanding and execution of good leadership is paramount to success.

As 1986 draws to a close, the Army prepares to lay aside another theme that has served well. As was the intent, none of the themes are forgotten when a new one is announced. Each year the themes are meant to tie together and be carried on. 1986's Values theme may be a difficult one to follow. So all encompassing, values has meant many things to many people.

All of our respondents in the "Various Voices" this week have suggested good ideas. Army leadership solicits these ideas in an effort to select a theme they believe is relevant to the soldier.

My suggestion, to add to those fine ones already mentioned below, is Professionalism. It would tie into Values well and it wouldn't hurt any of us to stop and take a good hard look at the concept of professionalism.

My old friend Webster defines a professional as someone who does something with great skill. Hopefully, every soldier in the Army strives to perform his mission with great skill. There are many variables here.

Professionalism is open to interpretation to a certain degree. However, one aspect that is not debatable is to be a professional, one must be dead serious about the job he strives to accomplish.

A soldier's mission, regardless of military occuaptional specialty, is to protect the American way of life. This means, again MOS immaterial, to be ready to defend our country. Yes, to fight on the battlefield. I don't care if you're a man or a woman, white or black, clerk or cannon cocker, you better be prepared to engage the enemy.

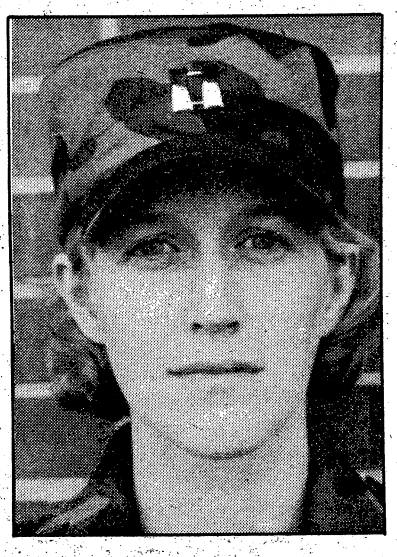
I believe the best way to remain STRAC (skilled, tough, ready around the clock) is to set high personal standards. If a soldier maintains high standards in all areas, personal and professional, he will, more than likely, be able to receive a mission and drive on with it.

The area of standards brings me to a pet peeve. (You knew there had to be one, right?) Is it important for a soldier to have shined boots, a regulation haircut and a neat uniform in order to go out and lay his life on the line for his country?

You bet it is!

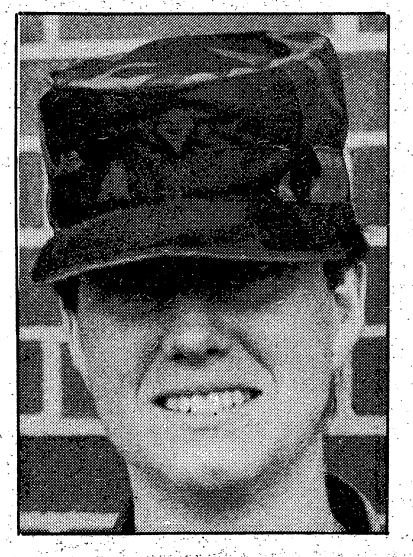
Think about it because I'm sure many of you would argue. But, before you do, think. If you see a troop who exhibits a shoddy appearance — scuffed up boots, hair scraggly and hanging over his ears (or a woman who attempts to put her's up but a "few wisps" cascade down her back), his uniform "looks like he dug it out of the bottom of his duffle bag," he's 30 pounds overweight and is sitting down to an all-you-can-eat lunch — would you trust him with your life? I certainly wouldn't!

You see my point. Naturally some of you may disagree. That is one of the main reasons I believe the concept of professionalism would make a good theme for 1987.

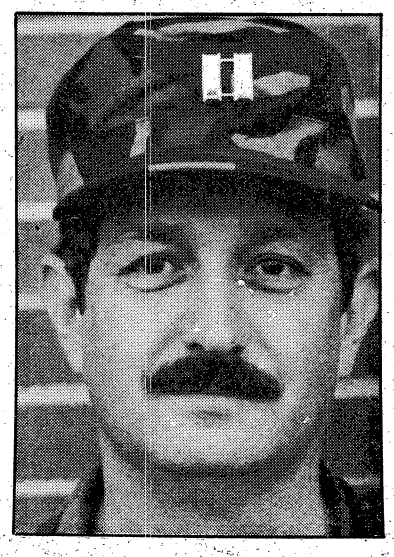


Most importantly, however, such a focus will bring professionalism to the minds of today's soldiers and that's the reason we have such themes.

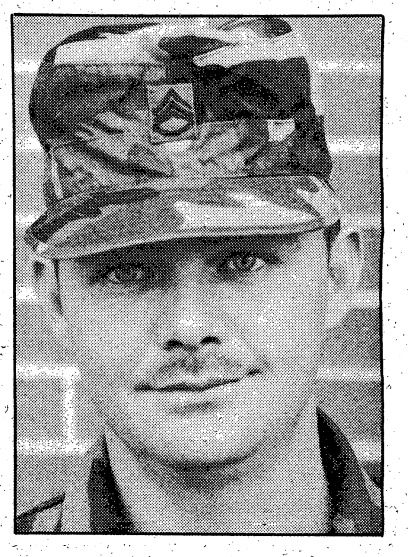
Various voices



As 1986 comes to a close, Army leadership will be looking for a new theme for 1987. What concept would you like to see recognized as an official theme?



SFC Pilar Murufo, Advanced Non-commissioned Officers Course — "I think the year of the soldier is appropriate. I don't think that enough emphasis is placed on the individual soldier."



Capt. Mary Ward, 197th Support Battalion — "Loyalty to our leaders would be an interesting theme. I think we need to stand behind our leaders 100 percent."

SP4 Leslie Alford, Training Support Center — "Women in the Army would be a good theme. In this day and time soldiers are kind of typecast in the "Rambo" image and that is not what women do."

Capt. Jerry Pierce, Infantry Officers Advanced Course — "I like the year of the soldier. With the all-volunteer Army of today, if more emphasis was put on the individual soldier it would give him more incentive to achieve his maximum potential and he would stay in the Army longer.

SSgt. David Smith, Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Getting back to the basics would make a good theme. As we progress in our careers, we tend to forget about the basics that are the foundation of the Army."

Op-Ed

You can help Santa give to kids on post this Christmas morning

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

There is nothing more disappointing for children than waking up on Christmas morning to find that Santa Claus "forgot them."

When I was growing up on a farm in the mountains of North Carolina, there was not much money for gifts at Christmas time.

No, this isn't another one of those "I walked 40 miles in the blinding snow to go to school" stories. (It was more like a quarter of a mile and when we got to our stop, we stood in a kindly neighbor's barn to get out of the wind.)

For my mother, struggling to raise four children on her salary as a spinner at a local textile mill, it wasn't a question of budgeting properly so there would be enough money for Christmas toys.

Momma earned enough to provide the basics. We ate good, thanks to the vegetables we grew in our garden every summer, and we had shoes on our feet and clothes on our backs, though they were hand-me-downs from friends and relatives.

We had plenty of coal for the heater and quilts for the beds to keep away the cold during the mountain winters, and come summer we had lots of creeks to dam up and trees to climb.

What we lacked in material things was more than made up for by the warm, secure feeling that just the sight of Momma kindled in all of us.

But she was the practical sort and believed that presents were nonessentials. She didn't believe in charge accounts, so if she didn't have the money, she didn't buy Christmas gifts.

Now that I am a parent, I understand the financial hardships my mother endured.

Still, I will never forget the disappointment of waking up Christmas morning to find that all Santa Claus left for me was something I needed, like socks or underwear.

Now, don't all you good people run out and buy me presents because my sharing this personal experience just makes you want to do something. I assure you that the Obert kids, myself included, will have a dandy time opening the truckload of presents Santa brings this year.

However, you can help make sure that no military child has to suffer the same disappointment this year.

Santa's Castle is a volunteer organization on post that provides toys to needy military kids at Christmas. According to Karen Chinen, one of the volunteers, the shop currently has more than 3,000 toys in stock, and still needs more, especially gifts for teenagers.

Chinen said good gift items for teens are records and tapes, posters, hair dryers and jewelry.

More than 150 volunteers have been working for months, collecting and repairing toys, and Chinen said everything in the shop is in excellent condition.

You can leave your donation at the drop box in the post exchange, at the main post fire station or at Santa's Castle. The shop is in Building 2639 on Collins Loop in Splinter Village.

Soldiers who need this help just need to talk to their first sergeant or chaplain and be referred by them. Parents will be given an appointment time to visit Santa's Castle, where they can pick out five toys for each of their children, free of charge.

It really won't put much of a dent in anybody's wallet if everyone gives just a little. And think of the joy it will bring to some child to discover that there really is a Santa Claus.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

Every day some drivers on Fort Benning make it easy for thieves to steal their cars.

Let me quote a car thief with more than 25 years experience: "Any car I see on a dimly lighted steet, with the door unlocked or a window open belongs to me if I want it."

Another veteran thief remarks, "You'd be amazed how easy people make it for me. I've stolen — been given is a better term — cars with keys in the switch and even some with titles and gasoline credit cards in the glove compartment."

These old pros in the car theft business offer some hints to help keep you from making a gift of your car to anyone who wants it.

- Lock your car. This is no absolute guarantee against theft, but at least by locking your car and taking the keys, you will slow the thief down and complicate his work.
- Park on a well-lighted street. A well-lighted street in a busy section will often discourage a thief.
- Avoid parking lots that require keys to be left in the vehicle. These lots are great favorites of car thieves. Avoid them whenever you can — even if it means walking an extra block or two. If you do park in one of these lots, leave only your ignition key. Take time to remove your house or office keys. It's a simple process to have duplicates made, and burglars can obtain your address through your license plates.
- Place items of value in the car's trunk. There are thieves who specialize in stealing items from your car rather than taking the car itself. In the auto theft business, these people are called "car boosters." At restaurants along interstate highways or turnpikes, they wait for you to come along with your car loaded with luggage. When you go inside to eat, the thief goes right to work, confident he'll have half an hour or more to do his job. He simply applies a tire iron to your car window and, before you know it, the luggage and anything else inside is gone — sometimes before the waitress in the restaurant has even taken your order!

The "booster" generally steals only what he can see. If your valuables are out of sight in your car trunk, he may pass you by.

- Know your license plate number. Thieves also take license plates to use on stolen cars. Sometimes, they swap "hot" license plates from a stolen car for your good plates. A few drops of solder on your car tag bolts will help safeguard them.

If a professinal car thief really wants your car, he'll probably get it. However, only a small percentage of stolen cars are taken by real pros — most go to "joyriders," one-timers, or amateurs. Don't make it easier for them.

In order for the military police to help ensure you don't become a victim of auto theft, we urge you to take a bite out of crime by securing your vehicle.

For more information on protecting your car and other valuables, contact the Military Police Activity, Crime Prevention Section, 545-7115 or 545-7154, or stop by Building 215, Room 216.

Two paratroopers lead 'dogs' lives' at 1-507th

by Lee Stuart
Company B, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry

The grueling pace of Airborne School leaves most students "dog tired" at the end of the training day. Two paratroopers in the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, however, are "doggone" happy to lead a "dog's life" with the gung ho unit.

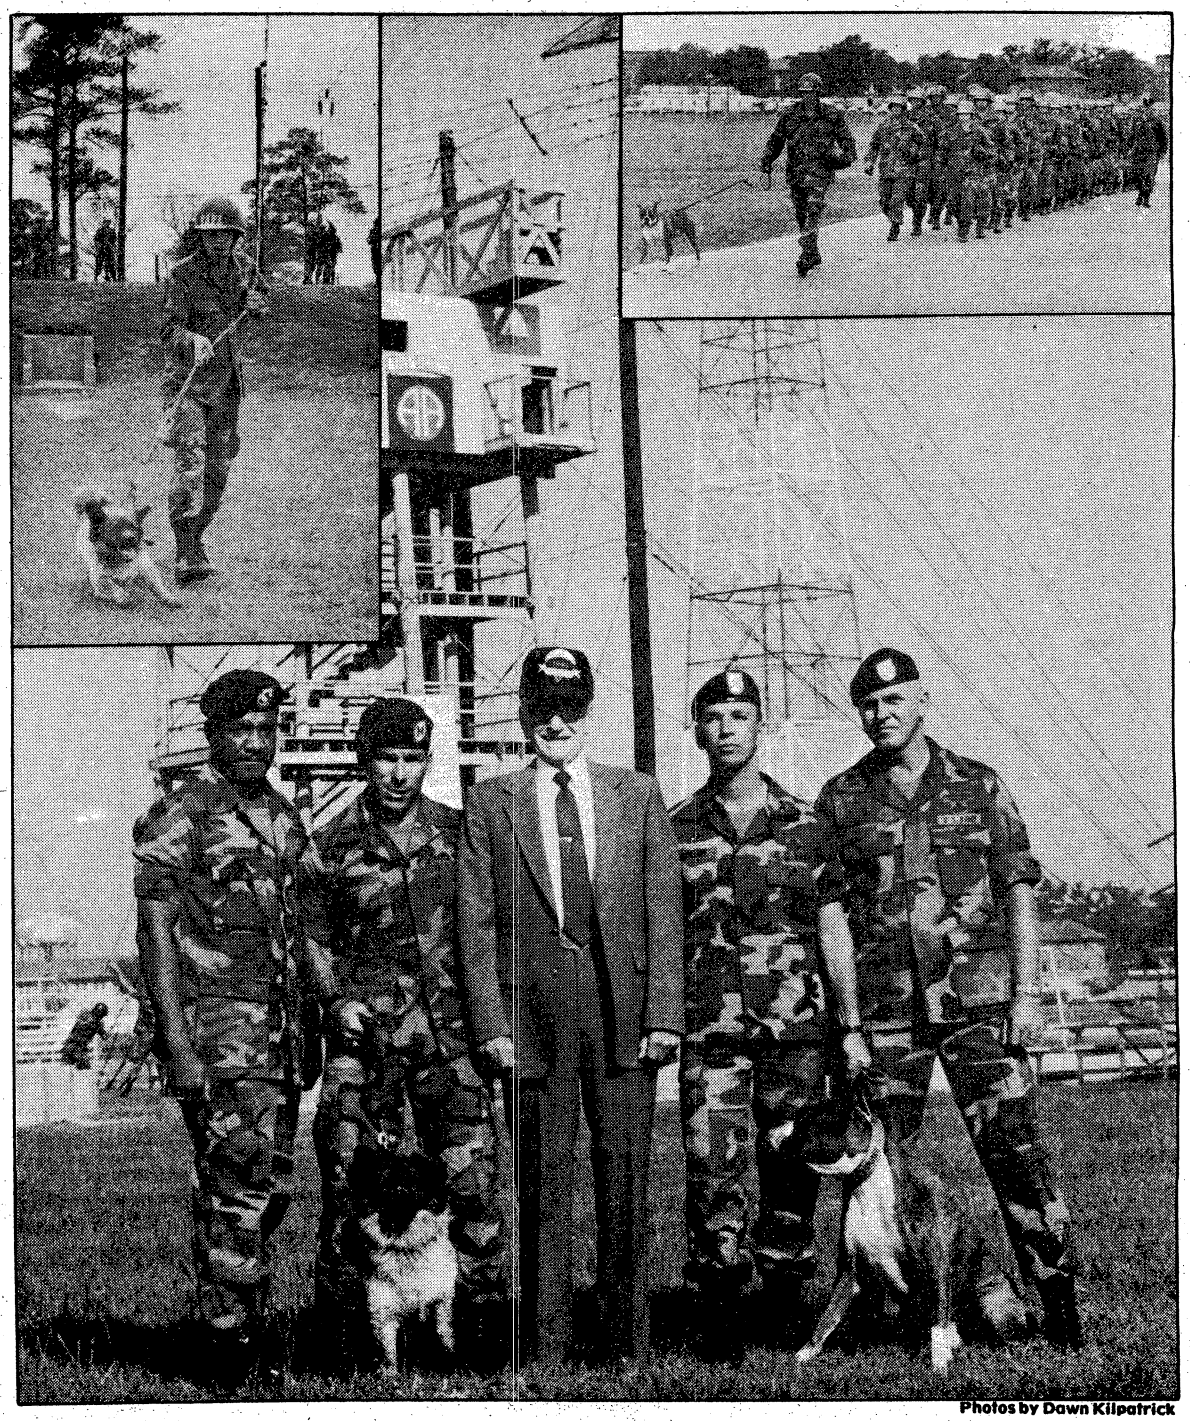
"Geronimo," a boxer assigned to Company C and "Sampson," Company B's mixed breed, are carrying on a long standing tradition of mascots in airborne units.

Over the years, airborne soldiers have historically displayed bravery in battle and have courageously and consistently won the highest honors and awards. However, little attention is paid to the first parachutist.

Dating back as early as 1785, French balloonist Jean Pierre Blanchard took a small dog aloft in his balloon. The suspicious canine wore a harness that was securely fastened to a prachute apparatus. After reaching an altitude of several hundred feet, Blanchard, with the parachute in his left hand and the dog in his right, released the dog. The dog and the parachute functioned flawlessly and "man's best friend" became history's first parachutist.

Like the first parachutist, many proud, hardworking "troops" were to follow.

On April 4, 1943, soldiers of the 507th Parachute Infantry thrilled 25,000 spectators as they jumped in a 23 mph wind in Omaha, Neb. Immediately following the mass jump demonstration, one of the paratroopers, a German shepard named "Geronimo," received his silver wings and was promoted to sergeant. The dog was the original mascot of the 507th. Since 1943 the Regiment has had various canine mascots as well as goats, coyotes and pigs.



Today, Sampson and Geronimo work hard at upholding the tradition set by their predecessors. Both lead the way for their respective companies during daily physical training. According to their commanders, neither has ever fallen out of a run, thereby demonstrating the true airborne spirit.

Both mascots accompany the students through every phase of Airborne School. On any given day Geronimo can be seen authoritatively keeping watch over "his" students, while Sampson likes to lend a "hand" by helping out the rope man at the 34-feet-high mock tower.

Sampson likes to take an active role in the daily training and enjoys practicing his parachute landing falls and exits from the mock door during the first week. He's also mastered the swing landing trainer and the 250-feet-high tower in week two. He greets the students as they come off the drop zone during jump week and stands all of the inspections. Demonstrating his true Airborne attitude, Sampson earned his parachutist's badge in August 1984 when he jumped with then company commander Capt. Bruce Wozniak.

Geronimo, on the other hand, prefers the supervisory position where he can sit back, relax and make sure everyone stays

During the most recent Field Training Exercise, the soldiers of the 215th Finance Support Unit, with the support of soldiers from the 533rd Transportation Company, conducted different scenarios covering their technical wartime mission.

Soldiers from the 533rd Trans. Co. provided several different types of pay complaints in the scenarios set up during the FTX.

The soldiers of the 215th FSU not only perform field tactics and combat skills required to survive in combat, but perform the many technical responsibilities that finance soldiers are called upon by their wartime mission.

The wartime mission of the 215th FSU is to deploy and provide financial support. They provide pay support for commands and units stationed in and passing through their area of responsibility.

Finance support involves: providing combat payments to soldiers; servicing soldiers' pay accounts; supporting and paying local procurement requirements; cashing negotiable instruments; replenishing impress funds; preparing and paying travel vouchers; funding Class A agents for military pay, foreign national payrolls, change funds, local procurement payments; maintaining internal controls.

All finance transactions must be handled manually by the finance soldier in his wartime environment. Since the Joint Automated Computer System is not deployable, pay problems have to be handled somewhat differently by the finance soldier in the field.

The completed finance forms are sent from the theater of operation to a location designated as the JACS support site to allow all the pay transactions to be transmitted to the Finance and Accounting Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Ind. — Steven M. Seyfried, 215th Finance Support Unit.

Fort Benning found itself well represented during the recent Commander's and Command Sergeant's Major Seminar conducted by the Sergeants Major Academy at Fort Bliss, Texas.

On hand for the event, which featured participants from Army posts throughout the United States, were Col. Paul Y. Chinen, commander of the 36th Engineer Group and his Command Sergeant Major, James G. Brown.

According to Academy Command Sergeant Major, Larry J. Hampton, "the seminar is designed to provide commanders and command sergeants major from the field and our students the opportunity to discuss the topic of command relationships in an informal atmosphere."

The primary focus of the two-day seminar was on a CSM's and SGM's relationship with various levels of command, from the commander on down through key staff elements.

"These seminars," said Hampton, "are most important to our program of study at the Sergeants Major Academy. We are extremely grateful to have such fine representatives from Fort Benning assist us in preparing our senior NCO students for positions of greater responsibility." — U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy.

The dining facility staff of the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery is preparing to meet the challenge of the Training and Doctrine Command Phillip A. Connely competition.

According to SFC Edward Gill, dining facility manager, most of the preparation is just "business as usual."

"In being chosen to represent Fort Benning, my staff has been through several inspections by Brigade and Fort Benning food service personnel," Gill explained. "They've done everything right to get this far so all they have to do is keep it up."

The dining facility will represent Fort Benning in the small mess category of the competition. TRADOC inspectors will visit the dining facility from Dec. 15 to 17 to judge the quality of food service at all levels.

The dining facility must maintain high standards in such areas as administration, food preparation and storage, training, sanitation and maintenance of equipment.

"They will check all the paperwork I do from the sign-in sheets for meals to the food and equipment that we order," Gill said. "They will check that we have all the food stored in a certain way and rotate the older products to the front of the shelves.

"They will also evaluate a meal through its preparation, setting up the chow line and then they will pay for a meal and eat here," he said.

Gill explained that a strong spirit of competition among his cooks helps the dining facility maintain its high standards.

"The Brigade Chef of the Quarter competitions really give these cooks a chance to shine," he said. "They choose their own menus and work hard on how the food is displayed. That means a lot and it shows up in their everyday duties."

34th Med. Bn.

The 690th Ambulance Company conducted its dining-in recently. The special guests were the 34th Medical Battalion Commander, Lt. Col. Robert D. Deaderick and the Battalion Command Sergeant Major Roy W. Needham.

The formal dinner was at the Battalion's dining facility and was served by the cooks in an outstanding manner.

The attendees enjoyed a choice of battered shrimp or cordon bleu, both with all the trimmings. Deaderick followed dinner with an inspiring speech concerning Army leadership and tradition. — Anthony J. Intrepido, 34th Medical Battalion.

On a recent Saturday, 20 or so officers of the 34th Medical Battalion volunteered to work 4½-hour shifts, in order to replace the roofing on the Officers' Wives' Club Craft Cabin building.

After donning overalls and work gloves, about 15 officers worked the morning shift, which consisted of tearing the old shingles off and replacing some of the boards. The afternoon shift hammered down the tar paper followed by the new shingles. Many of the officers ignored their calluses and blisters and worked both shifts.

This month the officers will continue their renovation on the building by replacing the ceiling. The work was coordinated and was shared by the officers of the 34th Medical Battalion and members of the U.S. Army School of the Americas. — Anthony J. Intrepido, 34th Medical Battalion.

Production problems cause delay in battle dress uniform's fielding

The Bayonet staff

Production problems have caused a delay in the possession date for the fielding of the hot weather battle dress uniform. The new possession date is Oct. 1, 1987.

As a result, the wear out dates of several other uniform items have been extended to Sept. 30, 1987. These items include OG 107 hot-weather jungle fatigues, the female OG 107 cotton poplin shirt and slacks and the unisex OG 507 durable press utility uniform.

Women must possess a second set of AG 344 slacks and skirt by Oct. 1, 1987. The Army green pantsuit slacks and skirt may be worn as part of a "Class B" uniform until Sept. 30, 1987. As of Sept. 30, 1986, the Army green pantsuit jacket and uniform coat are no longer authorized for wear.

Other items no longer authorized for wear are the OG 107 cold-weather coat (field jacket) and the OG 109 green undershirt.

Jungle boots are now authorized for wear by all soldiers, except when uniformity in appearance is required. Jungle boots will be available at clothing sales in the future. Items now available at clothing sales are the combat vehicle crewman uniform, physical training uniform and light weight (BDU) military uniform.

The Department of the Army has approved the wear of the Parachute Rigger Badge as a "Group Five" special skill badge. All of these uniform changes are listed in the current update to Army Regulation 670-1.

C-9-2 soldiers set firing record

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

The soldiers of 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade knocked down targets and post marksmanship records during their Basic Rifle Marksmanship record firing Nov. 14 through 20.

Company C set, and currently holds, the new Fort Benning BRM record after posting a company average of 33.92 targets hit out of a possible 40. However, the 9th Battalion's other companies were hot on the heels of Charlie when they fired.

"Company E fired first, scoring 32.12, which set a new post record. Then Company A fired, beating Echo and setting a new post record with a 32.15. Company B shot and grabbed another Benning best with an aggregate score of 32.55. Charlie fired fourth and set the last and final record," said Capt. Paul Agosta, the Battalion operations officer.

According to SFC David Wilmot, Charlie Company's senior drill sergeant, the success of his company and the battalion as a whole is based on "total concern by the chain of command from the Battalion commander down to the drill sergeant and soldier level that the soldiers fire well.

In establishing this latest and "final" post BRM record, Charlie Company produced 87 expert firers, 87 sharpshooter and 30 marksmen. The company also had 100-percent first time "gos" for its BRM record fire.

197th simulates battle during 'Caber Dragon'

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

How can you fight a battle without troops? During a recent eight-day training exercise, soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade did just that and more. The Command Post Exercise, called Caber Dragon, was at Fort Bragg, N.C.

"Caber Dragon included personnel from all the primary and assistant staff sections," explained Capt. Mark Klaczak, of the Brigade's operations section. "A CPX of this nature is done inside a building."

Each section simulated working in a battle environment. Keeping track of friendly and enemy forces on a giant map board was just one of the many tasks they had to complete.

Telephone hook-ups were used so that planners could actually simulate talking to troops in the field.

"This type of training helps staff members at both brigade and battalion levels," Klaczak said. "The training is in the preparation of orders and overlays."

The staff tasked Brigade units for different missions. They also kept the forces updated on the enemy's size and strength.

"This is a valuable exercise because it lets us do our real function, but without actual troops," said Klaczak. "No external evaluations were done; it was just a training exercise designed to improve the operating ability of the staff during battles."

Members of the 197th worked with representatives from the 82nd and 101st Airborne Divisions during the exercise.

"We got to see how the 82nd and 101st Tactical Operations Centers work," said Klaczak. "So we got to observe how light infantry units operate as compared to a heavy mechanized unit."

Army surgeon defends MREs

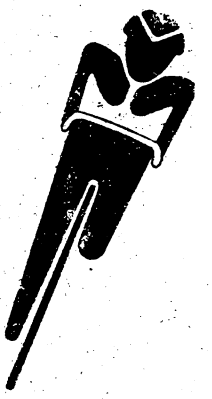
Army News Service

"Today's MRE can be eaten by the soldier with confidence that it is safe and nutritious," said Lt. Gen. Quinn H. Becker, the Army's Surgeon General. "Its development began more than a decade ago and it is continuously being evaluated and improved."

In response to test results and soldier comments, researchers at the Army Research, Development and Engineering Center in Natick, Mass., have made several improvements to the Meal, Ready-to-Eat, including the following:

- Entree size will be increased from five to eight ounces to provide the additional calories soldiers need in the field.
- Nine new entrees have been developed and are currently being tested. These are: pork in barbecue sauce, corned beef hash, chicken stew, ham omelet, spaghetti with meat sauce, meatballs with rice, tuna with noodles, chicken with rice and ham with escalloped potatoes.
- "Wet-pack" fruit will be added and dehydrated items will be completely eliminated to lessen water requirements and improve taste (thereby encouraging consumption).
- Powdered drink mixes have already been added to the MRE to encourage soldiers to increase their intake of fluids.

Because of their popularity with soldiers, cocoa beverage powder, cookies, peanut butter and cheese spread will remain part of the MRE menu.



Many soldiers are having a chance to try the new MRE before supplies of the original version are depleted. Soldiers can look forward to an entire new menu, which should reach the field during the next 2 ½ years.

Court report

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

SP4 Willie J. North, Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was convicted by a special court-martial on Nov. 24.

On April 14, North received a field-grade Article 15 from his battalion commander for dereliction of duty. His punishment included a reduction from sergeant to specialist four and restriction to the battalion area for 45 days.

North was very upset about his punishment and proved to be a frequent disciplinary problem during the ensuing months.

In September, Capt. George Lennon, North's company commander, offered North an Article 15 after North was disrespectful to his platoon leader. North turned down the Article 15 and charges were preferred.

Contrary to his pleas, North was convicted by Maj. Donald Rogers, military judge, of disobeying or being disrespectful to his company commander, platoon leader and squad leader.

Judge Rogers sentenced North to be reduced to private, to forfeit $659 each month for six months, and to be confined at hard labor for six months.

North has already been sent to Fort Riley, Kansas to serve his sentence.

Had North chosen to accept his Article 15, rather than demand trial by court-martial, the maximum punishment his commander could have imposed would have been only reduction from specialist four to private first class, forfeiture of $198, extra duty for 14 days and restriction for 14 days.

On Nov. 25, Sgt. Freddie Kemp was sentenced to 60 days restriction and forfeitures totaling $2,400 for dereliction of duty.

Maj. Donald Rogers, military judge, heard evidence that Kemp fell asleep while performing duty as Charge of Quarters for Battery C, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, Sept. 24.

Although Kemp denied sleeping on duty, Capt. Michael Alexitch claimed that he discovered both Kemp and the CQ runner asleep when he arrived in the battery area. Alexitch was the battalion staff duty officer at the time and was making his morning rounds.

As a result of Kemp's failure to stay awake, Alexitch was allowed to wander through the battery area unimpeded for approximately five minutes. Kemp was later relieved from CQ duty.

During the sentencing phase of the trial several individuals from Kemp's chain of command provided testimony concerning his duty performance.

Their testimony indicated that Kemp is a poor soldier and shows little potential for future valuable service as a non-commissioned officer in the Army.

Ask the 'judge'

Editor's note: These are questions the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be considered a substitute for advice from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

Legal Assistance

Q. I have an appointment with a legal assistance attorney, were do I go and what do I bring with me?

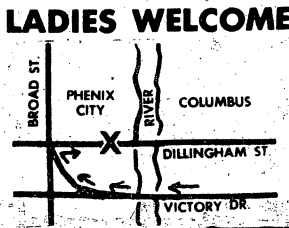
A. Appointments with legal assistance attorney's are in the legal assistance division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, in Building 5 on the corner of Sigerfoos and Vibbert Avenues across from the Main Post Chapel.

During your interview, it is important that the attorney have any and all paper work that may be related to your case. Therefore, bring anything related to your problem.

Q. I leased a Nissan 300ZX last year. Recently, I received levy notification for an assignment to Korea. What can I do with the car?

A. Leasing an automobile is usually cheaper than buying a car over a monthly basis. However, for soldiers and their family members, leasing may bring more problems than its worth.

Because soldiers PCS every three years or so, leased automobiles may sometimes have to be shipped overseas. Sometimes the leasing company will not allow the vehicle to leave the continental United States.



More often, the leasing company will not care where the car is, but the car will be shipped at the soldier's own expense. The reason for this cost is that the vehicle does not belong to the soldier, he is only renting it. As a result, he is not entitled to have it shipped at government expense.

Q. My husband and I are having marital problems. He has a child from a previous marriage. If I leave him, do I still get support and an ID card?

A. Army policy assures family members that soldiers will support them. If you are not living in government quarters, your husband is required to send you an amount equal to his Basic Allowance for Quarters at the "with dependent" rate. However, if he is obligated to support other family members, you may be entitled to only part of that amount.

For example, if you and your husband's child are the only two family members, then you each would be entitled to half of the amount of BAQ. But if there were a court order or separation agreement that obligated your husband to support payments, then you would be entitled only to an amount equal to the difference between the BAQ at the "with dependent" rate and the amount in the court order or separation agreement.

Six engineers qualify at combat lifesaver course

SP4 Oscar Carillo grades the task as Sgt. Prince Grant talks with "patient," PFC Brad Rinehart during the combat lifesaver testing.

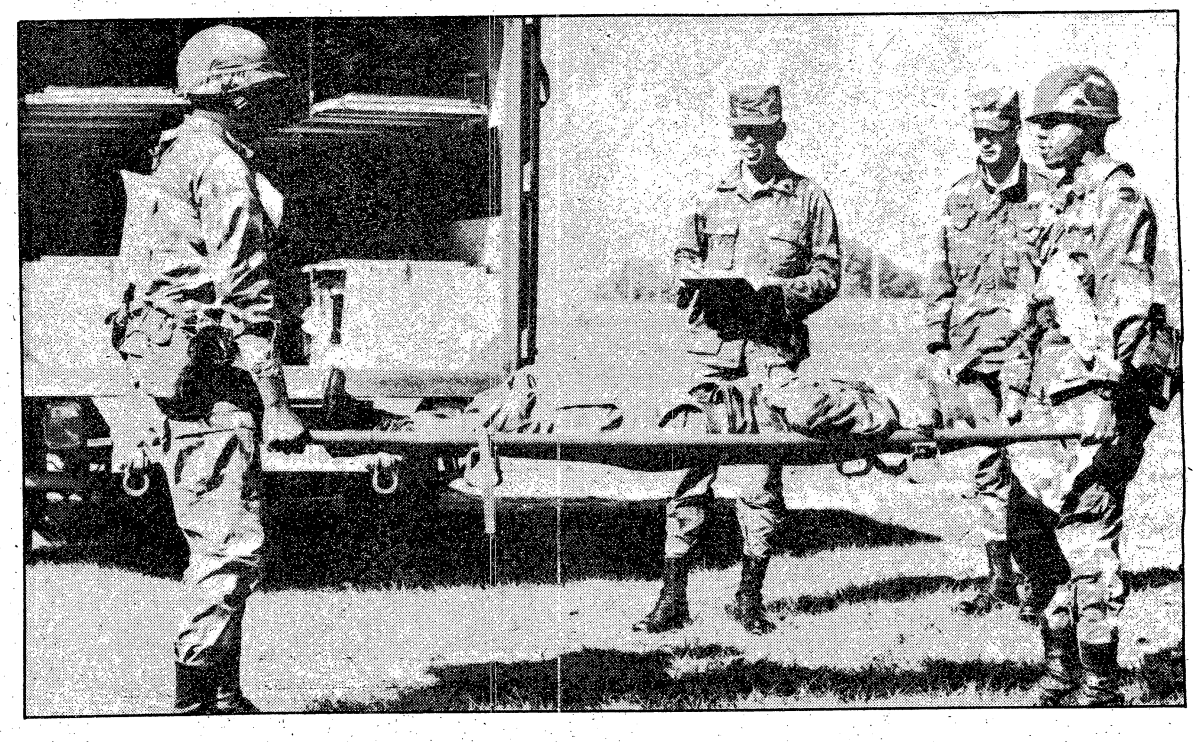
Story and photos by Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Six soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group were recently qualified in the first Armywide Combat Lifesaving Course conducted here on Fort Benning.

The course, which ran from Nov. 3 to 21, ended with a 12-mile road march and final testing of the newly aquired lifesaving skills.

The soldiers who participated in the 60-hour course were non-commissioned officers selected from the 43rd Engineer Battalion and the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge), 67th Maintenance Battalion.

Implemented by the Army Medical Department Activity, the course is designed to train medics for combat situations.



"(The combat lifesaver) is an extension of the company medic in a combat or field environment," said SSgt. James C. Gibbons, medical section NCO for the 43rd Eng. Bn.

"The Army Medical Department (Activity) forsees a widely dispersed battlefield in our next conflict. Due to this they also see a shortage of medical personnel. The combat lifesaver will be an extension of medical help," said Sgt. Jack D. Wissmiller, a medic and the director of the course.

"This course will be taught quarterly unless mission dictates less than that," Gibbons said.

The course helps the students to become proficient at evaluating casualties, measuring pulse and respiration, treating for shock, burns and other wounds and managing combat stress. The soldiers also learn how to initiate an intravenous infusion and different ways to transport the casualties.

When they graduated, each soldier was awarded a certificate of completion and an "Aid Bag" with all the tools needed to save a life, according to Wissmiller.

Sgt. Prince Grant (left) and Sgt. Jeffely Pargo carry PFC Brad Rinehart on a litter, while SP4 Oscar Carillo grades them on the task.

Infantry platoon leader 'moonlights' as magician

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Bob Croskery is an infantry platoon leader in the 197th Infantry Brigade. He's involved with the Boy Scouts, is a family man and he is also a magician.

"I've been practicing magic since I was 7 years old. I lived down the street from Norm Nielsen, a professional magician. He also owned a magic shop and I learned a lot of magic from Norm," Croskery said.

Starting off with simple, standard "close-up" magic that consists primarily of card and coin tricks, the 30-year-old magician began doing magic shows at schools, Chistmas parties and churches. He honed his skills by reading volumes of magic books and from practice, practice, practice.

"The key to being a successful magician is hard work and practice. For every one minute on stage, a magician has to put in hours and hours of practice," Croskery said.

At 18, Croskery, whose stage name is "Forsythe," learned how to do tricks with the linking rings. The rings are solid steel hoops that the magician passes out to the audience for examination to ensure the entire circumference is solid. The magician then proceeds to link the hoops together and unlink them, making various configurations.

As Croskery demonstrates a variety of tricks, the only explanation he offers for disappearing objects and ropes that change length is: "it's magic."

"Professional magicians never reveal their methods, how a trick works. It shouldn't matter to an audience how a trick works but only if it works and if it is entertaining," said the 23-year magic veteran.

Part of that 23 years was spent making his magic doing one night stands. When the soldier-sorcerer was 19 years old he bought a motorcycle, a backpack to carry his magic gear and personal effects, and he hit the road, going west from Ohio to New Mexico and Texas.

"I went as the spirit led, doing magic shows in bars and restaurants. I learned and practiced a lot of magic and saw a lot of places. But it wasn't exactly financially rewarding," Croskery said.

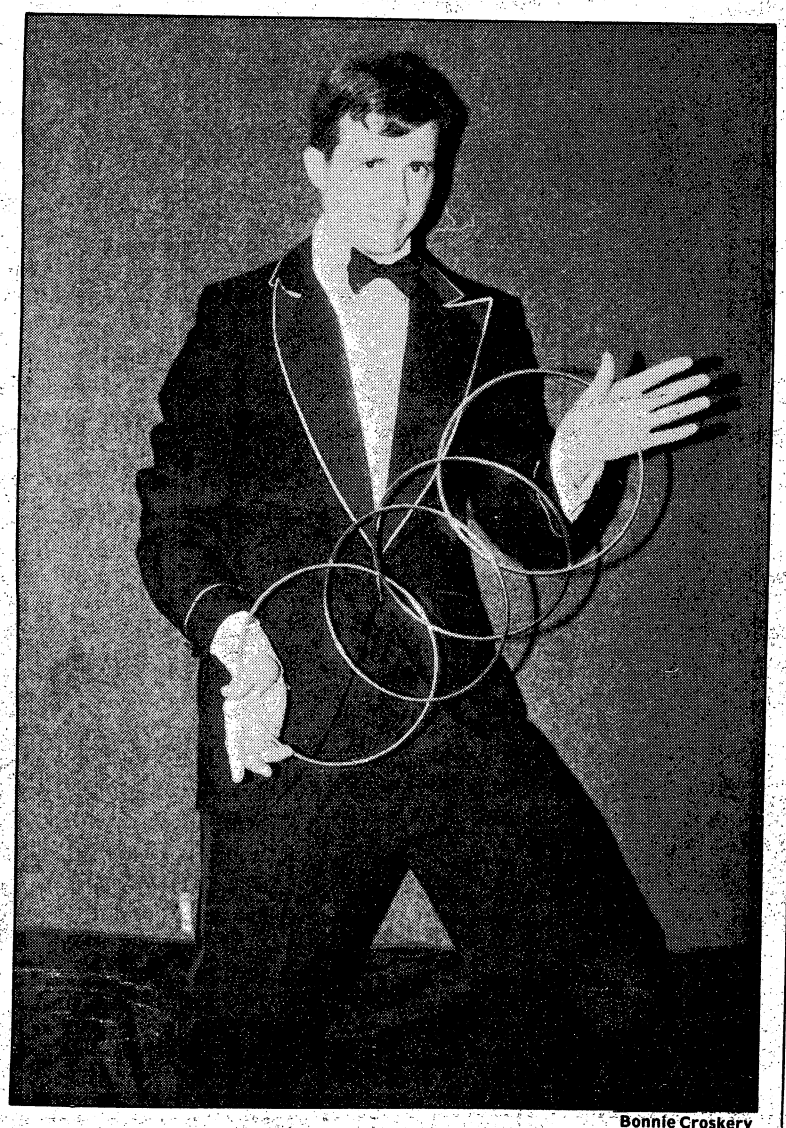
To see more of the world and make a little more money, Croskery enlisted in the Army, working in air defense artillery and practicing magic on the side during his tour in Germany.

"As a pfc I did a lot of shows with my first sergeant. He would play Santa Claus and I would do a 20-minute magic show during Christmas," Croskery said.

Enjoying the Army, Croskery went on to earn a commission, while improving his magic skills.

"Forsythe," a member of the American Society of Magicians and the International Brotherhood of Magicians, is trying to start a branch of the International Brotherhood here.

The magician performs at a lot of birthday parties, charity shows and has done promotional exhibits for local businesses.



"When I do a big stage show my wife, Bonnie, assists me," Croskery ex-

His most complex trick, reserved for stage shows only, is the Big Illusion. A trunk is brought onstage for the audience's inspection. Randomly selected audience members then tie Croskery's hands and feet securely and put him inside the trunk. The trunk is then locked and chained. Croskery's wife takes a curtain, steps onto the top of the trunk, hides herself behind the curtain and counts to three.

"At the count of three the curtain drops. I'm standing on the trunk and my wife is brought out of the trunk, tied up," said Croskery.

How does he do it?

Forsythe just smiles and says "It's magic."

Army means college funds to 197th troop

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Like many soldiers, PFC Stephen Robinson decided to postpone college to join the Army. The Army's educational programs were a tempting benefit for serving a stint in the infantry.

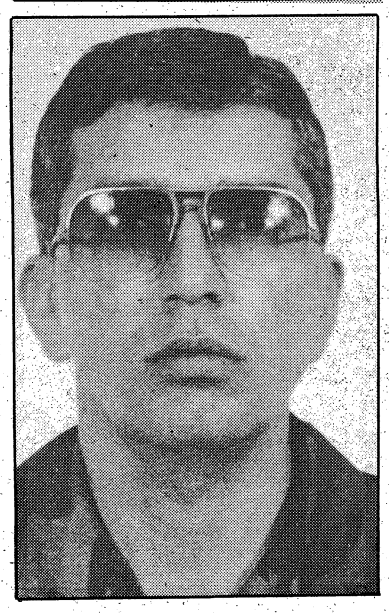
But now Robinson, who is assigned to Company D, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, is striving towards a goal that may lengthen his military career while he gets his college education.

Robinson explained that he chose an infantry Military Occupational Specialty because it offered a cash bonus as well as a college fund.

"I wanted to build a financial foundation," he said. "Serving my country was well worth the educational benefits I would get."

In following up on his goals to begin his college education, Robinson discovered a way to do two things at once.

"I had wanted to become an officer," Robinson said. "I went to the education center to check into possible ways to do that."



In order to qualify for these programs, Robinson will gather such things as his General Technical score on the Armed Forces Classification Test, Scholastic Aptitude Test results and letters of recommendation to forward.

If Robinson's efforts pay off, what began as a stepping-stone to college may pay off as a career in the Army.

'Soldier of Quarter' sets sights on illustrious Army career

by Marsha Santiago
Army Training Center correspondent

A processing clerk at the Reception Battalion's Initial Receiving Branch has been named Fort Benning's Soldier of the Quarter.

SP4 Savannah Frasier won the award after only one year of active duty. She plans a career in the Army and has set her sights on becoming the first female sergeant major of the Army.

While Frasier may be new to active duty, her interest in a military career is not new. "I always admired all my uncles who were in the service," she said. "And I was in the Reserve Officer Training Corps Program for three years in high school."

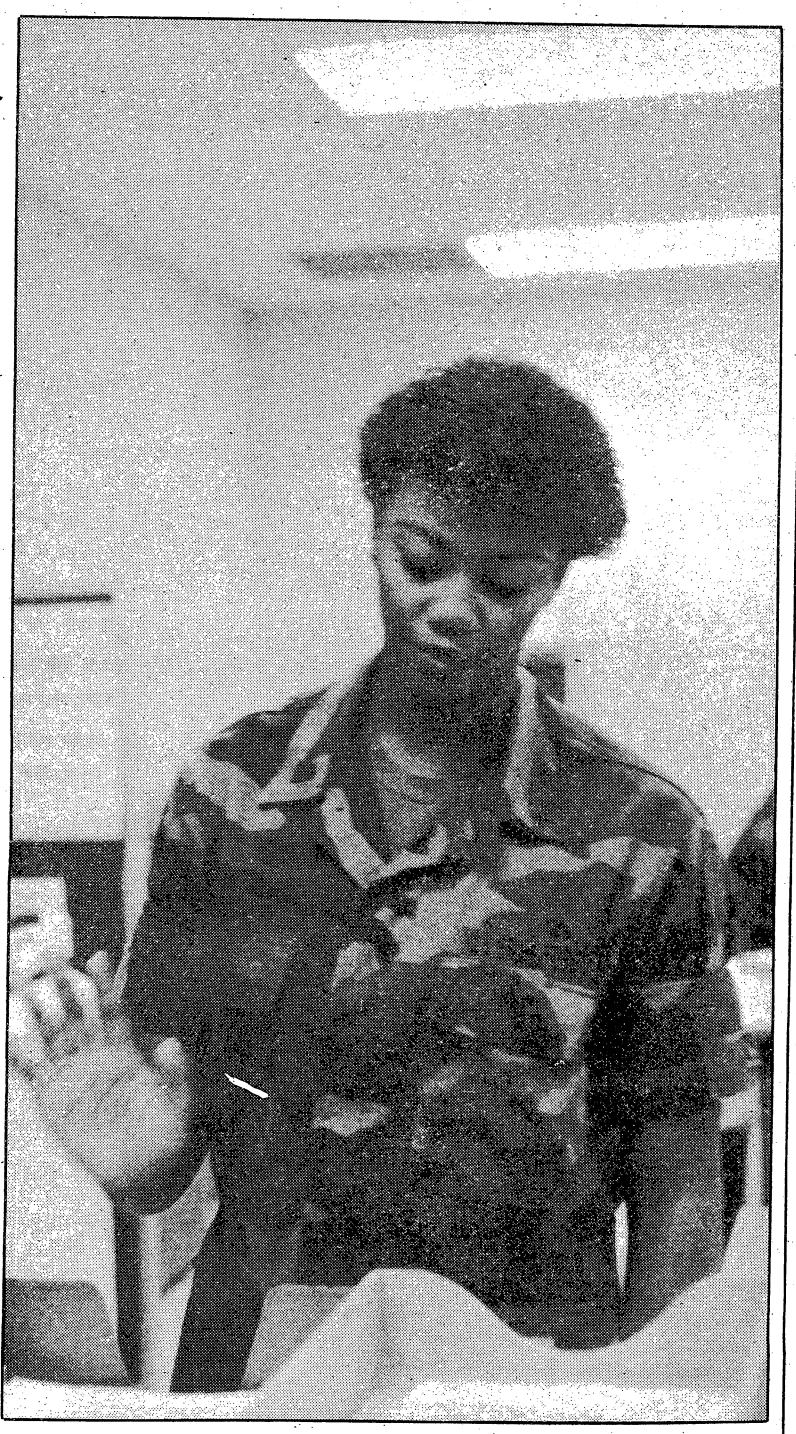
A 1984 graduate of Southside High School in Memphis, Tenn., she joined the Army Reserve immediately after graduation, but active duty was always her goal. "When I graduated I found out the Army was a good way for a young person to get some job experience."

Frasier arrived at Fort Benning in September 1985. Assigned to the Reception Battalion since October of that year, Frasier has processed over 27,000 new soldiers. "My job is to get new soldiers processed as easily and expediently as possible," she said. "Also, we prepare the new soldier for what he is about to enter into."

Preparing the new soldier comes easily for Frasier, who has definite ideas about what makes a good soldier.

"I believe with a good chain of command you can build a good soldier. I am lucky to have a good, strong chain of command," she said.

"A good attitude is always important. Be willing to work and study hard, be willing to go for a goal. And always be prepared for the unexpected," she said.



On winning the award, Frasier said, "I felt relieved, excited and disappointed. Relieved it was over, excited because of the honor and disappointed that I will not be here to compete for Soldier of the Year."

Frasier will be transferred to Germany and will be leaving post soon. Her disappointment was not only personal, but also for the Reception Battalion. She is the unit's first soldier to win the award and wanted to try and become Soldier of the Year.

The move to Germany has changed other plans for Frasier. She said she believes in putting hard work and goal-setting into action and her short term goal is to obtain as much military and civilian education as possible.

Her enrollment in college courses, to obtain a degree in personnel management, has been temporarily delayed because of the move. However, she plans to enroll again as soon as she arrives.

Frasier is married to Sgt. Theodore Frasier, who is also assigned to the Reception Battalion.

SP4 Savannah Frasier sorts through some work at her office at the Reception Battalion.

Ghanaian native finds freedom reason to be grateful this holiday

by Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

It was his first Thanksgiving feast. In fact, the 34-year-old soldier said it was the best turkey stuffing he'd ever tasted.

So SP4 Emmanuel K. Puplampu and his wife ate two turkey meals last week.

"My wife and I went to the chow hall where we had turkey for lunch, then went to some friends house and had turkey again for dinner," Puplampu said.

Currently a fuel supply specialist for the 36th Engineer Group Aviation Section, the Ghanaian native came to the United States three years ago.

"I was born and raised in Ghana, West Africa. My father was a warrant officer in the Ghanaian army but he died when I was very young," he said.

He speaks slowly, weighing his words carefully, his accent barely noticable.

In Ghana, the school system differs from the United States in that the children attend school for 15 years and then must be selected for college, Puplampu said.

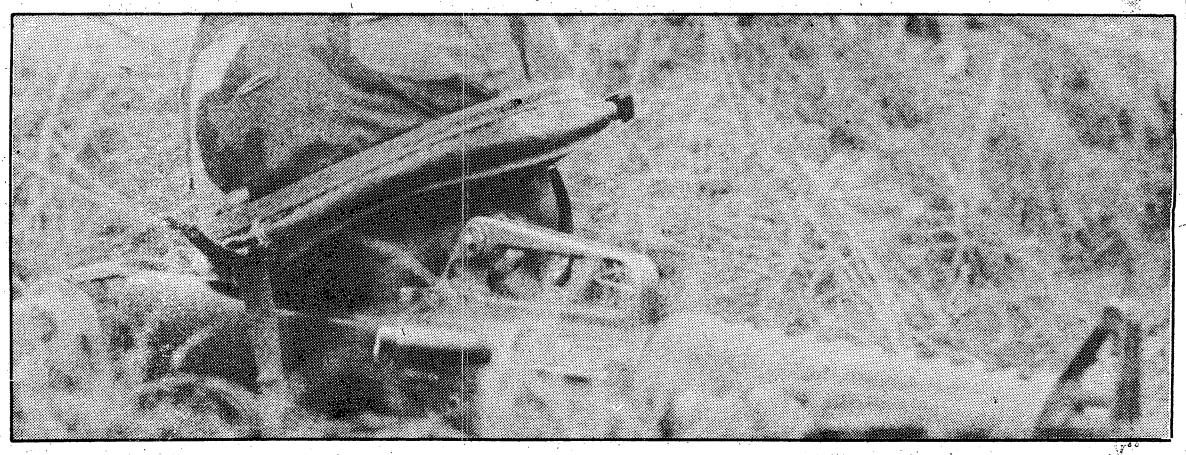
"I was selected for college and attended the University of Benin in the neighboring French speaking country of Togoland," he said.

There he learned to speak French and English. He returned to Ghana and served four years in the Ghanaian army until the government was overthrown in 1979.

"I was offered a scholarship from the French government at the University of Bordeaux, so in 1980 I went there and studied," he said.

Little did he know that his move would ultimately bring him to the United States.

"One of my sisters lives in Atlanta so when I finished school I came to visit her," he said.



Due to the affairs in Ghana and the freedoms offered in the United States, Puplampu decided to stay in America and join the Army.

Today he is happily married to an American woman and attends school part-time, working on his master's degree. He enjoys tennis, table tennis, reading and movies in his spare time.

Puplampu is a pilgrim in the 20th century, with dreams and visions not unlike those who fled British oppression during America's early days.

"Usually people come to America with dreams. This is the land where they can be obtained," he said.

"He said his goal is to become a diplomat. Someday I would like to be named an ambassador," Puplampu said.

SP4 Emmanuel K. Puplampu zeros in on his target during common task training recently.

New weight restrictions imposed on household goods shipments

Army News Service

Senior soldiers making permanent-change-of-station moves to Germany after March no longer will be entitled to the full weight allowance for their household goods.

Beginning April 1, accompanied soldiers in pay grades E-7 through E-9, W-4 and O-4 and above will be authorized shipment of only 25 percent of the full weight allowance for their pay grades, said Rodney K. Brown, a housing management specialist with the Army's Office of the Assistant Chief of Engineers.

The restriction puts into effect a policy approved by the office of the Secretary of Defense in March 1983. Under that policy, a limited weight reduction was imposed for accompanied soldiers making PCS moves to Germany.

Because the Army lacked the necessary quantity of furniture to support all qualified soldiers immediately, the leadership developed a two-tier system. Under that system, the policy immediately covered lower-ranking soldiers while allowing senior soldiers to continue bringing their own furniture until the service was able to support all qualified soldiers.

"This policy doesn't affect allowances for household equipment — such as washers, dryers, ranges, refrigerators, wardrobes and kitchen cabinets — which routinely are provided by the Army to soldiers stationed in Germany," Smith said.

Soldiers who relocated to Germany before April 1 will be unaffected by the policy change, Brown said.

Soldiers 'on target' with Weaponeer training

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

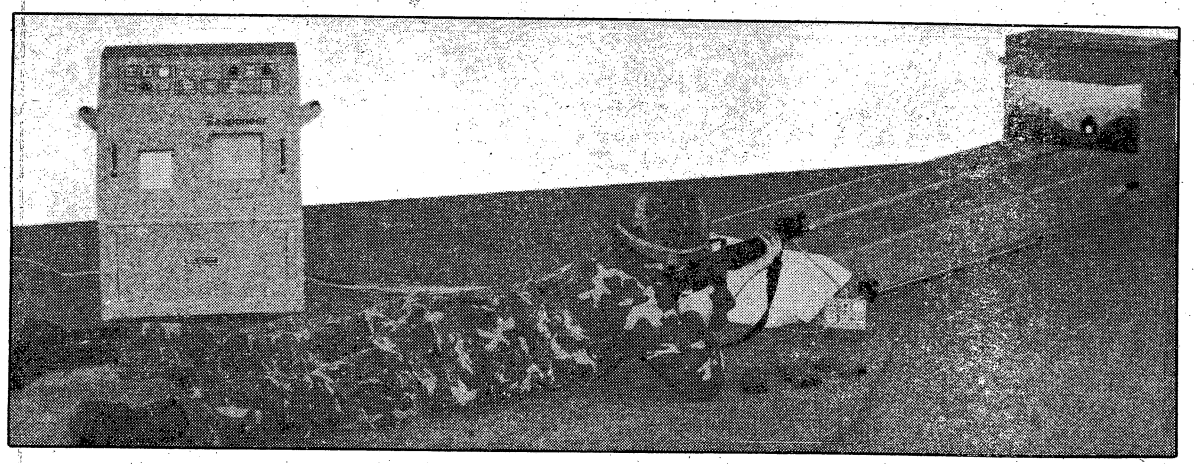
Soldiers in One Station Unit Training here are using a "video" game-type device to improve their marksmanship skills.

Resembling an arcade shooting machine, the Weaponeer has an inert M16 rifle with a laser attached to the end of its barrel. A long, padded ramp about 2 feet wide and 6 feet long serves as the platform for the training device. At the end of the ramp is a three-dimensional hill and tree target area with hidden pop-up targets scaled at ranges of 100 and 300 meters. There is also one target set up for zeroing. When a shooter takes up a sight picture, he sees the same target as he would at an actual firing range.

A console attached to the device allows the controller/coach to raise or lower targets for the shooter to engage with his laser "bullets." The console automatically records hits and misses, where the "bullets" hit the target and a cumulative score based on total target hits. In addition, the console simulates recoil and the sound of an M16 firing.

"The Weaponeer is very good for teaching and reinforcing Basic Rifle Marksmanship training for soldiers. It also teaches and reinforces how to zero a weapon and how to engage pop-up targets," explained SFC J.R. Ochs, a controller/coach for the Weaponeer.

"When I used the Weaponeer I saw my firing pattern," said PFC Daniel Fullem, an OSUT soldier with Company C, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. "I could see what I was doing, like pulling to the left or whatever. I corrected my mistakes and ended up firing expert."



The Weaponeer can be set up for either the foxhole supported firing position or the prone unsupported firing position. According to Ochs, the device is invaluable for learning how to zero an M16 rifle.

"We use the Weaponeer for zeroing practice a lot. If we can get a soldier to start grouping three rounds in a tight shot group that soldier will know how to zero when he goes to the firing range for the real thing. If the soldier gets a good zero, he's going to shoot much better," Ochs said.

"The Weaponeer certainly helps soldiers fire better. Whe weak firers have been identified the Weaponeer really comes i handy in helping these soldier become better shooters," sai SFC David Wilmot, the Senio Drill Sergeant for C-9-2. "I've ha shooters who could only knoc down eight or 10 targets. Afte these same soldiers received re inforcement training at night o the Weaponeer, they went bac to the range and qualified, man shooting expert."

Ochs added, "The only thin the Weaponeer can't do is sen live rounds down range. But i soldiers train on the device prio to going to the firing ranges, the can get an idea of what it's like t zero and engage pop-up tar gets.

"The Weaponeer helped me t learn how to use my weapon. had no problem zeroing m weapon because of the Weap oneer. I fired expert, 40 out of 4 targets," said Pvt. 1 Julian Puck ett, from C-9-2. "The Weaponee helped me get those 40 tar gets."

A soldier sharpens his firing accuracy on the Weaponeer.

Post vet nurses injured hawk back to health

The Bayonet staff writer

Capt. Mark Martinez, a veterinarian here, was contacted late one Friday night in early October by the Fort Benning Military Police. He thought the call was about a problem with one of MP's working dogs. Meeting the MPs at the Veterinary Clinic, however, Martinez was presented with an injured red-tailed hawk.

"The MPs found the hawk on a range. Its left wing was drooping very low and it couldn't fly. I took care of it for the evening and then called a couple of our clinical people the next day to assist me with the hawk," Martinez said.

Martinez and the veterinarian specialists anesthetized the injured bird and then x-rayed the sleeping hawk.

"We developed the pictures at Martin Army (Community) Hospital and found no broken bones, which was a good sign. The hawk's left wing was still drooping, though, so we put (the hawk) in a large cage where it could rest," Martinez said.

Calling the Auburn University Veterinarian School's Director of Raptor (bird of prey) Rehabilitation Program, Martinez described the bird's injury and was told that it was probably ligament damage and a sprained joint.

"We've been treating the hawk very conservatively and it is showing a marked improvement. We feed it mice and chicken backs and it gets plenty of exercise in the cage. 'Alfonso,' nicknamed by one of the staff members, will probably stay with us a few more weeks and then be ready to be turned loose," Martinez said.

A red-tailed hawk dubbed "Alfonzo" by vet service staffers recovers at the Veterinary Clinic on post.

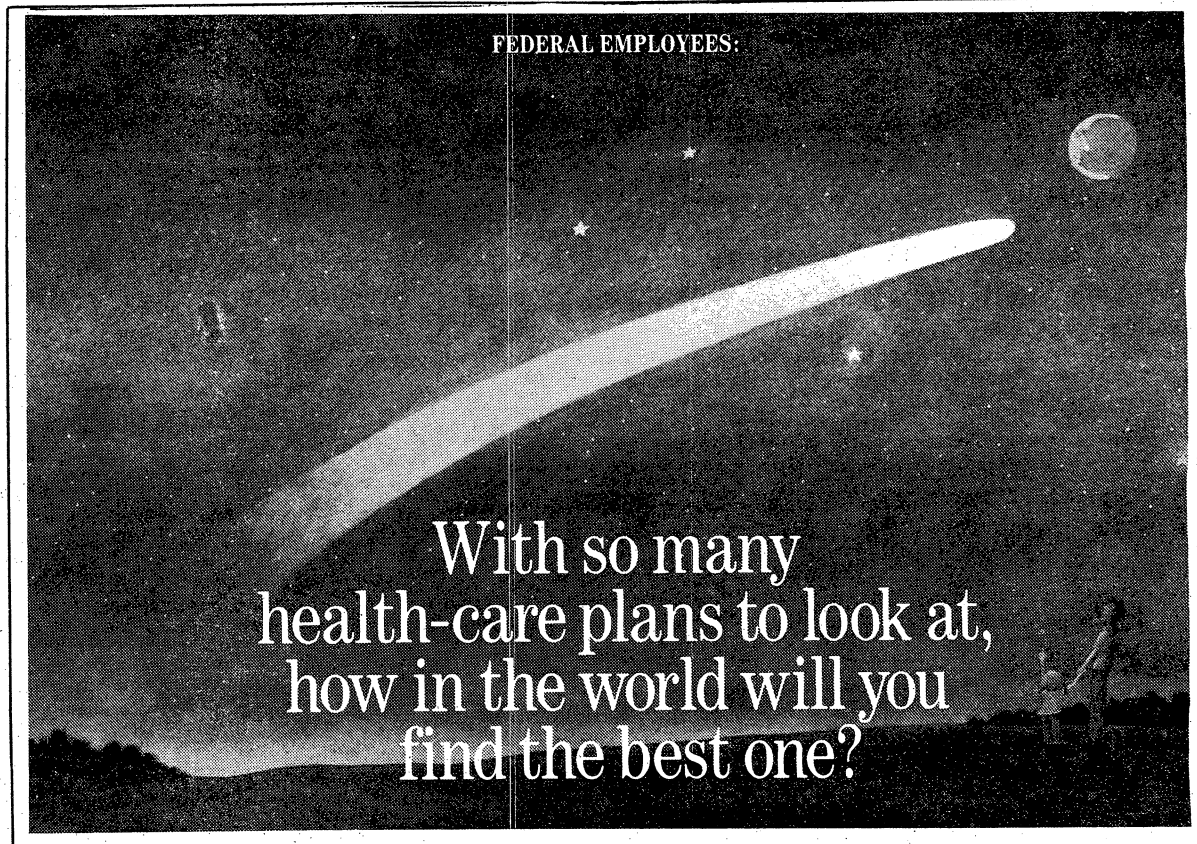
Magistrate's Court processes civilian crimes, traffic violations

by Shawn Bryson
The Bayonet staff writer

The Uniform Code of Military Justice is the official guide for people involved with the legal system of the Army. However, it is not designed to deal with incidents such as traffic violations and crimes committed by civilians on post.

The office of the Magistrate handles all cases on post involving traffic violations according to Capt. Jane Winnand, post Magistrate. "We also handle all crimes committed by civilians on post," she said.

Winnand said most of the cases handled by the Magistrate are traffic violations rather than civilian crimes. She also said that many of the people who get tickets from the Fort Benning Military Police don't fully understand the options they have.



When a person is pulled over by an MP and given a ticket for a minor traffic violation, he is also given a choice according to Winnand. If the person realizes that he is guilty of the offense, the MP will give the amount of the fine and where it should be mailed, in order to avoid unnecessary court appearences Winnand said. If the person feels that he is innocent, he has the right to go to court and present his side of the story.

However, if a person is given a ticket for a major traffic violation, such as excessive speeding or wreckless driving, the MP will inform the offender that he must appear in court the Magistrate said.

"We also do all the charging for soldiers accused of driving under the influence of alcohol," Winnand said.

When someone is stopped for DUI, he is given a court date and, according to any previous record, a substantial fine. "If a person is accused of DUI and convicted, a fine of $300 to $1,000 is given. However, if that person has been convicted of the same offense with in the last five years, the minimum fine increases," she said. "The maximum penalty for the first offense is one in prison as well as the $1,000 fine."

According to Winnand, court dates for soldiers as well as civilians are scheduled for every third Friday. She said it is important for a person who gets a ticket to get all of the necessary information from the MP and consider each option rationally.

Look for the VIP difference.

The VIP makes the difference.
Finding the right health-care plan to protect your family is one of the most important things you'll do this year. That's why Federal Employees need to take a close look at Blue Cross and Blue Shield's Standard Option—with the VIP difference. The Standard Option with the VIP gives you the far-reaching coverage you need, plus important money-saving benefits.

Look for comprehensive coverage.
The VIP makes the difference, in many instances working with Standard Option to pay 100 percent of in-hospital charges* with no deductible. And Standard Option with the VIP also pays 85 percent of the preferred-physician allowance for doctor bills after the deductible. That means you get extensive coverage—at the Standard Option price.

To benefit from the VIP feature, choose your doctor or hospital from Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Georgia's long list of preferred providers. Use one of over 3,500 doctors and 90 hospitals statewide to get maximum coverage. Under Standard Option, even if you choose to use a non-VIP provider, you still receive excellent dollar-for-dollar, comprehensive coverage.

Look for improved dental benefits.
Blue Cross and Blue Shield's Standard Option helps pay for your dental care according to a fee schedule—with no yearly maximum and no deductible. And new in 1987, Standard Option pays an even larger portion of bills for children up to age 13.

A great value.
VIP benefits are automatically included at no extra cost. So you get great coverage, and the chance to save on your health-care dollars.

If you are interested in a Santa suit, call 544-3079 during operational hours for the details. Only a limited number of suits are available and they are being booked fast, so call today!

December computer classes — The following computer classes are being taught at the Kelley Hill Rec Center, Building 9079. All computer classes are open to active duty military, family members and Department of the Army civilians. No telephone registrations will be accepted.

Payment or DD 1556 must be received to reserve a slot. Spaces are very limited so early registration is strongly suggested. Call 544-3079 Wednesday through Saturday from noon until 9 p.m. or on Sundays from 10 a.m. until 7 p.m. for information on any computer class.

"WORDSTAR" — Dec. 9, 11, 16, and 18. 6 to 8 p.m. each night. $50 for the eight hours.

"LOTUS 1-2-3" — Dec. 3, 5, 10, 12, 17, and 19. 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. each night. $75 for the 12 hours.

"MS-DOS" — Dec. 6 and 13. 12:30 to 6:30 p.m., one afternoon, $35 for the six hours.

The Rec Centers have the capability to conduct a "SUPERCALC 2" computer class if enough people are interested. "SUPERCALC 2" is an electronic spreadsheet that combines the columns and rows of an accountant's worksheet with the data storage and processing power of a microcomputer. The result is a powerful decision-support tool. For more information on the above activities, call 544-3079.

Students learn demolitions at Brown Range

'Buddy Row Kudzoo' performs, adds laughs to demonstration

Story and photos by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Students in the Infantry Officer Basic Course Class 1-87 got to meet a "good old Georgia boy" at Brown Range recently.

"Buddy Row Kudzoo" entertained and informed the soldiers during an advanced demolition techniques class taught by SFC Victor Foster.

Kudzoo, aka Capt. Chris Irwin, and Foster are both instructors with the Mobility, Countermobility Branch, Combined Arms and Tactics Division, The School Brigade.

All dressed up in overalls and a cowboy hat, Kudzoo acted as Foster's assistant during instruction on the basic types of military demolitions, "hands-on" training in attaching blasting caps and a demonstration as the smoke flew while various types of explosives were detonated.

For many of the students, it was their first look at explosives, so the class concentrated on the basics.

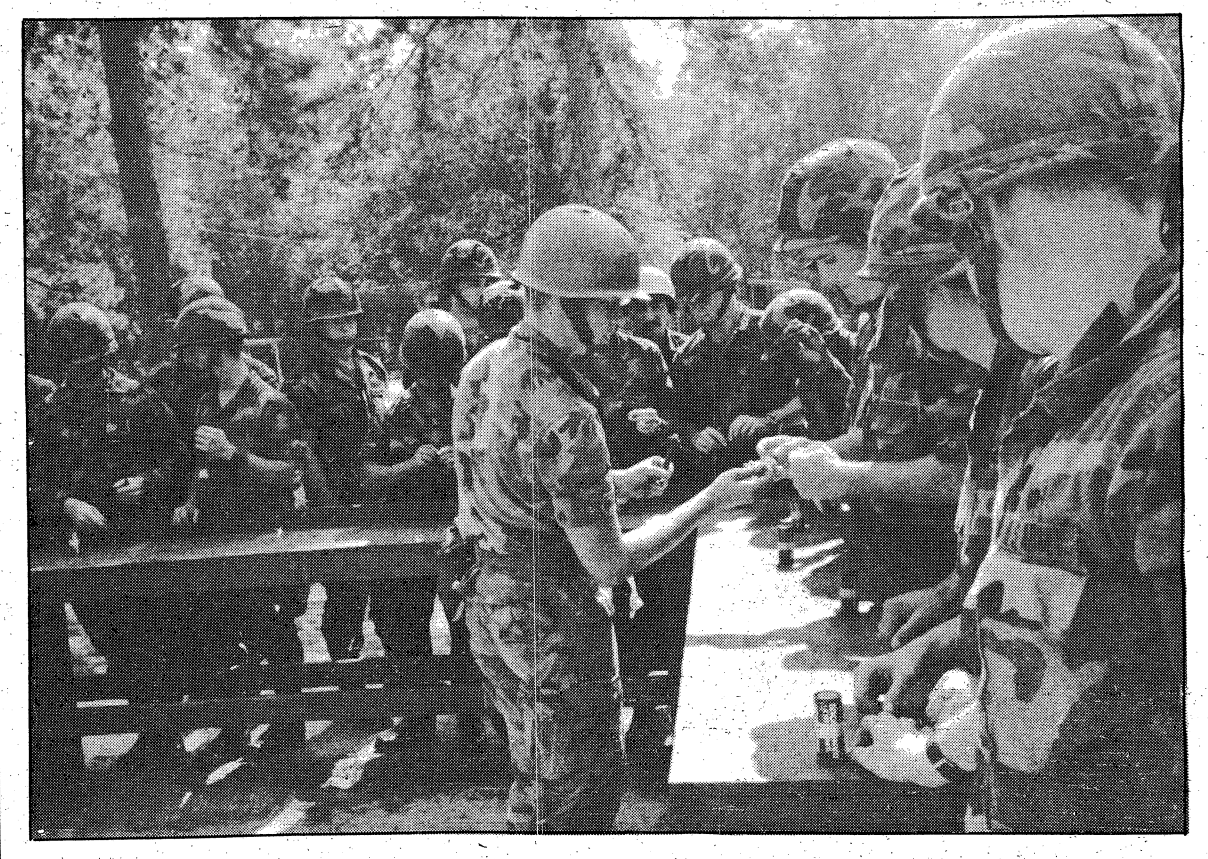
They learned about the three basic types: dynamite, TNT and C4, a plastic explosive, and how to use them to do different jobs.

Dynamite is used mainly for quarrying operations, while TNT and C4 are used for cutting steel, timber, and a wide variety of military applications, Foster explained.

He pointed out that although many people fear explosives, the types used by the Army are very stable and won't explode accidentally unless they are mishandled.

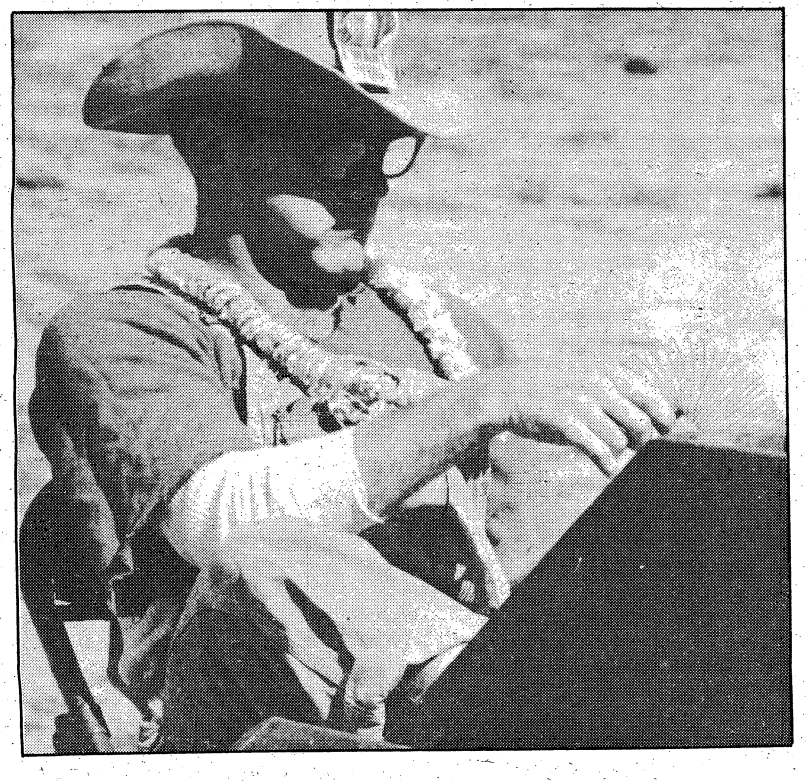
He set fire to a piece of C4 and a stick of TNT, to show the students the importance of the blasting cap and fuse in demolitions.

Cadre from the 586th Engineer Company, 36th Engineer Group, and the 72nd Engineer Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, served as additional instructors during the hands-on and round-robin training that followed the introductory lecture.

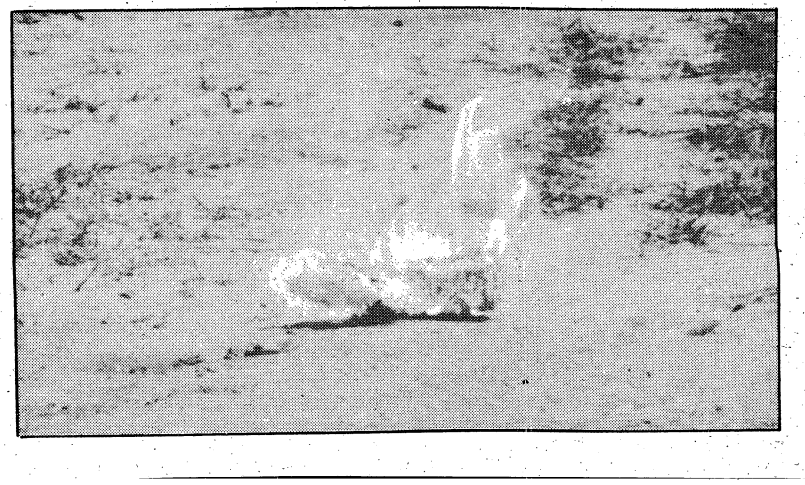


1st Lt. John Kelleher, range officer in charge during the class, said they don't expect to turn out demolition experts at the end of the four-hour class.

"It's more for familiarization and general knowledge, so they'll know what the types of explosives can do in the field," he said.



Buddy Row Kudzoo adds humor to the long lecture, sparking the students' attention and keeping them interested, Kelleher said.



A soldier sets a live charge at a safe distance from the bleacher area.

Infantry Officer Advanced Course Class 1-87 students get hands on training preparing charges.

An instructor demonstrates the safeness of C4 explosive by setting it on fire.

Army activates new command in Panama for southern forces

Editor's note: The formation of a new Major Army Command in Panama will affect Fort Benning units that routinely rotate to the Jungle Operations Training Center there. The 10th Mountain Division's 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry is presently going through the three-week program.

Army News Service

The Department of the Army activated a new Army Major Command, United States Army South, in Panama yesterday.

The activation will result in the formation of an Army Headquarters for U.S. Southern Command. USARSO will be formed from assets of the 193rd Infantry Brigade (Panama).

The activation will result in better Army Support of USSOUTHCOM and a more streamlined chain of command for Army elements, while not increasing the number of soldiers in Panama.

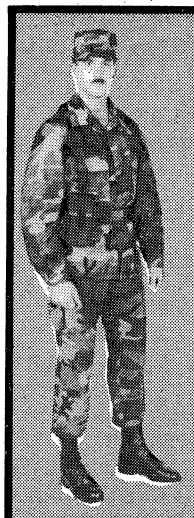
The commader of USARSO will be Maj. Gen. James B. Taylor, currently the commander of the 193rd Infantry Brigade (Panama), and the commander of the 193rd Infantry Brigade will be Col. R.L. Stephens Jr., currently commander of the Brigade's Task Force Bayonet.

The 193rd Infantry Brigade is currently USSOUTHCOM's Army component command. As an infantry brigade, it is neither organized nor staffed to fulfill its planning, programming and support responsibilities to a unified command such as USSOUTHCOM. The 193rd Infantry Brigade (Panama) will however, remain in Panama as a subordinate element of USARSO.

As a Major Army Command directly subordinate to Headquarters, Department of the Army, USARSO will be organized to command and provide administrative and logistical support. In addition to its role in defending the Panama Canal and supporting responsiblities in the region, USARSO will be better equipped to support USSOUTHCOM with planning and programming support. The new command will be the parent unit of the 193rd Infantry Brigade and will assume the brigade's functions in support of USSOUTHCOM.

In 1941, the Caribbean Defense Command was established as a unified theater command to bring Army and Navy forces in the Caribbean area, including the Panama Canal Department, under a single command.

In 1947, the Panama Canal Department was inactivated and redesignated the U.S. Army, Caribbean, which was separate from the theater command formed following reorganization of the Army, Navy and Air Force components in the then Canal Zone into the Caribbean Command.



The old headquarters, U.S. Army Forces Southern Command, was disestablished as a Major Army Command in 1974 as a result of worldwide Army reorganizations. Prior to that, however, the Army had an established separate major headquarters in the Panama Canal area since July 1917 when the Panama Canal Department was formed as a small, separate geographical command with headquarters at Quarry Heights.

In 1963, the U.S. Army Caribbean became U.S. Army Forces Southern Command at the same time the Caribbean Command was redesignated as the U.S. Southern Command.

With the inactivation of U.S. Army Forces Southern Command in November 1984, the 193rd Infantry Brigade (U.S. Army Forces Southern Command's major subordinate and tactical unit) assumed status as the Army component of USSOUTHCOM and reorganized as an installation under U.S. Army Forces Command.

Headquarters for USARSO will be located at Fort Clayton, Republic of Panama, which has been the headquarters of the 193rd Infantry Brigade (Panama).

The initial intention concerning this reorganization was announced in Washington Jan. 30, 1985.

New procedure targets career needs in assignments

Military Personnel Center

Changes are coming for non-commissioned officer assignment procedures. Beginning this month, enlisted career advisors at the Military Personnel Center will put two professional development assignment recommendations for each NCO in the Centralized Assignment Procedure (CAP III) special instructions.

The new procedures will be tested Armywide under a pilot program, according to Lt. Col. Allan A. Hesters, chief of MILPERCEN's NCO Studies Implementation Team. They will be limited at first to the assignment of sergeants first class and master sergeants.

"The CAP III special instructions will show the career development needs of each NCO," Hesters said. "The two recommendations will conform to standard duty titles for the NCO's military occupational specialty.

"The special instructions will include whether the NCO should be considered for table of organization and equipment or table of distribution and allowances unit duties," he continued. "They will also recommend a level of responsibility, such as major command, division or battalion."

Putting professional development recommendations in CAP III should give the strength management officer in the gaining command more management tools to help preassign soldiers. Under the current system, there is no way for the gaining command to know the soldier's career development needs in advance.

"Preassignment decisions are often limited to matching MOS and rank of an NCO with known or projected vacancies," Hesters said. "With these new procedures, strength managers will be aware of an NCO's career development needs and can consider them during the preassignment process."

Since the final duty assignment is often determined at battalion level, professional development recommendations should be sent through each management level that makes assignment decisions. Commanders or their command sergeants major need to have this information.

"If possible, a non-commissioned officer should be assigned to one of the duty positions in the CAP III special instructions," Hesters explained. "However, unit readiness requirements may cause an NCO to be assigned to another duty position. The unit commander will continue to have final say on the assignment."

The goal is to use the assignment system to recommend to commanders those types of assignments that will expose NCOs to the full range of duty responsibilities in their MOSs. This will enhance MOS competency and job proficiency.

"In support of this initiative," Hesters said, "NCOs should ensure that their personnel qualification records are accurate. They should also have current enlisted preference statements reflecting their assignment wishes on file at MILPERCEN."

These procedure changes are the first step in modifying the assignment system to support the professional development needs of non-commissioned officers. Future automation enhancements will increase the ability of personnel managers and commanders to access personnel data on inbound soldiers, and so improve the capacity to fine tune assignments.

Survey seeks families' opinions

Army News Service

Spouses of soldiers will have an opportunity in January to tell the Army's leadership what the Army should do to support their families.

About 20,000 spouses of active duty soldiers worldwide will be asked to participate in what is to be an annual survey of Army families. According to Emily Cato, Army Family Survey project officer, this is the first comprehensive survey of spouses conducted by the Army.

The results will be used by Army leaders to assess the status of efforts taken to improve the quality of life for Army families. Many of the recent efforts have been identified by the Army Family Action plan, said Cato.

Spouses receiving the survey are encouraged to fill out and return it because their input is important for Army Family Program planning. "We are encouraging sspouses to return the survey because this is their opportunity to tell us what they think," she said.

The Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va., and the Soldier Support Center-National Capital Region are jointly conducting the survey, and the results are due out in March.

The objectives of the first survey are:

- To obtain information directly from spouses and pull out new concerns or issues that have not been previously addressed.
- Assess the status of Army Family Action Plan issues to identify progress in resolving identified issues.
- Assess the need for, use of, and satisfaction with Army family support service programs.
- Assess family member attitudes about the Army way of life as it affects families and about the quality of life for Army families and family members.
- Identify new and emerging concerns of families.
- Supplement other evaluation and research efforts designed to improve Army support of families.

After this survey is completed, the Army will conduct the survey of active duty soldiers annually in November in conjunction with activities leading up to Army Family Week. Army Family Week is usually the week of Thanksgiving.

A survey of spouses of national guard and reserve soldiers is planned for August and September of each year.

The survey marks the first time the Army will gather quantifiable data from spouses. The annual surveys will permit the Army to track trends over the years related to family needs.

Benning agencies offer assistance when violence becomes possibility

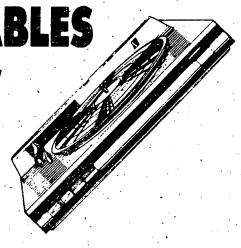
Provost Marshal

Traditionally one of the happiest times of the year, the holiday season also brings on an increase in domestic incidents. From January through November 1985 there were a total of 199 reported domestic incidents, an average of 18 incidents per month. In December 1985, there were 23 reported incidents.

The cause for an increase in domestic violence can be credited to several reasons. One of the major reasons is the additional strain to the family budget. Many families operate on a tight budget from month to month. The burden of buying presents, as well as everyday needs, can be awesome.

Another common reason for the increase is the feeling of isolation from other family members. Many military families are from homes outside the local Fort Bemnning area. Other military members may even live close to home, but their military duties may prevent them from going home.

Other reasons include disappointment in gifts received, too much alcohol in celebration of the holidays, family emergencies, work schedules and even problems with coworkers and neighbors.



We, the members of the Fort Benning community, would like to see this trend reversed. Counseling, ranging from financial to martial, is available from many agencies here on post. Personnel at Army Community Service, post chaplains, the American Red Cross and the Alcohol and Drug Control Officer, are all ready to assist you with any problems any time of the year. These agencies have trained counselors in may areas, or can refer you to other appropriate agencies.

Don't wait until it's too late — take advantage of these agencies before you become involved in what begins as a harmless disagreement and escalates into a family and career damaging domestic incident.

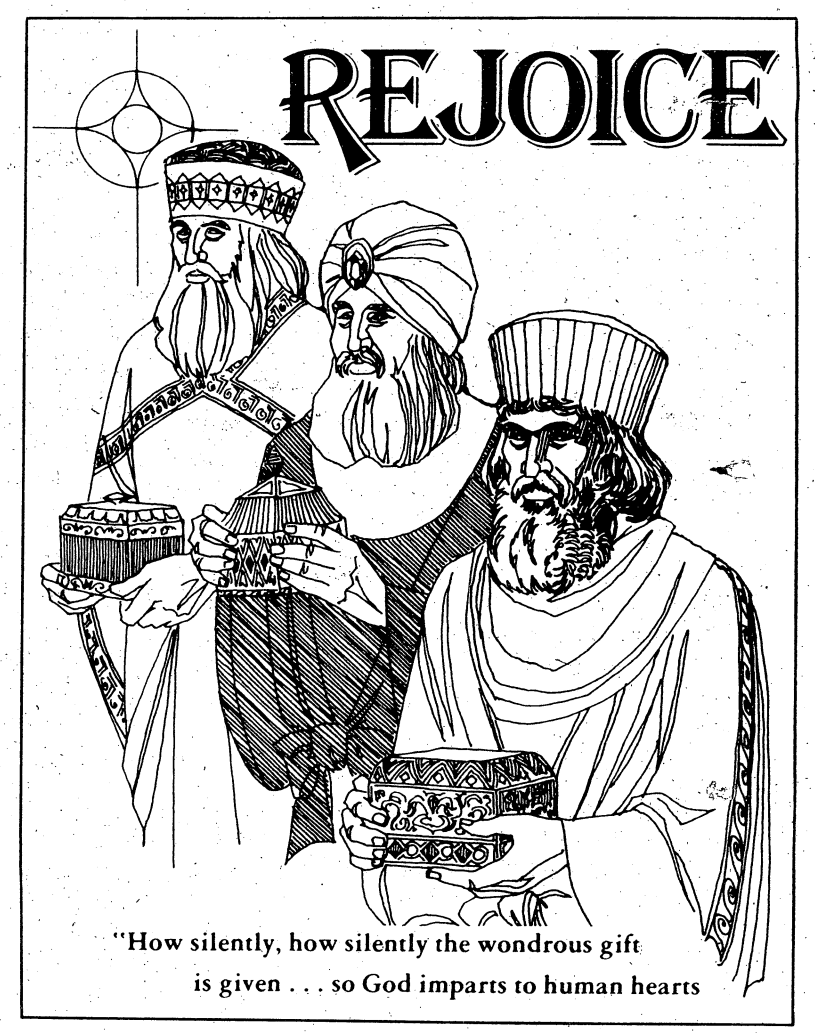
Christmas scene reminds us that God is there for everyone

by John L. Krider
2nd Infantry Training Brigade chaplain

The advent season reminds us that God came to live with us. He is concerned about our problems and daily activities.

Advent gives us a down-to-earth understanding of God. What is a more commonplace than this familiar Christmas scene: a mother, a baby and shepherds gazing into a manger bed? Here, says Christmas, God is to be found; he is near, he is accessible, and he is available to mankind. He speaks to us from within human experience.

Advent gives us a down-to-earth joy. Joy is the central mark of Christmas. On that first Christmas Day the angels proclaimed good tidings of great joy. In our carols we sing, "Joy To The World" and "Good Tidings of Comfort and Joy." Our most used Christmas greeting is "Merry Christmas." Joy and happiness are the predominant themes and moods of the season. Christmas is a time to be merry because it reminds us of God's love for us.



Christmas is the down-to-earth concern for people that the season brings. At the very heart of Christmas is the proclamation of God's love for us: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son." (John 3:16) One of the fruits of God's great act of love is to make his followers persons who have love and concern for other people. Jesus underscored this in his parable of the last judgement. His redeemed people were those who responded with loving care for "the stranger, the hungry, the thirsty, sick, naked and imprisoned." (Matt 25:34-35)

A down-to-earth faith means that the word became flesh so that God can speak to us in language we understand. The key problem of all religions is how do we get in touch with God and how does he communicate with us. The Christian claims the word became flesh; truth investing in personality.

The word became flesh to weld God and his world together. Word and flesh: God without the world is enigmatic abstraction and the world with God is a terrifying fiction. God needs people who will demonstrate his love and care for others.

Does he not need human hands to wield the instruments through which he heals, a human voice to bring comfort to the distressed and distress to the comfortable, human eyes to look in compassion on lonely and a human presence to stand beside the outcast.

During this Advent season, we are challenged to have a down to earth faith by loving each other, even as we love God.

"How silently, how silently the wondrous gift is given . . . so God imparts to human hearts

Visiting clown teaches talking without words

Story and photos
by Joann Alam
Fort Benning Schools

Edward A. White School had a visitor for two weeks who left a lasting impression without saying a word. The children at E.A. White School had the pleasure of working with Kenny Raskin, a mime and clown who works with the Artist-In-Residence Program sponsored by the Georgia Council for the Arts. "Mr. Kenny," as the children call him, spent two weeks working with small groups of children, helping them discover the artist in themselves and learn about the art form.

After Raskin's departure, the students at E.A. White School were invited to make comments on their experience with the artist. Here are some of their comments.

Mr. Kenny is:

—an artist who communicates by using his hands and imagination to talk to others. He is called a mime/clown.

—an artist who helps people talk without making a sound.

—a pantomime clown.

—a kind of clown, but he is an artist.

—a clown who does lots of tricks.

—a person who teaches people to work together.

—a great man who makes children feel good to watch him.

—a funny man.

—an artist being clown. He is also a mime.

—a teacher who does his best to give his students a good education.

—a funny mime.

—a hard working man. He doesn't work in the Army like other men. He works as a clown. — not a clown that walks around with a rubber nose but a clown that teaches you how to express yourself without using your mouth.

—a comedian that doesn't wear make-up.

—a friend to ALL of us.

Mr. Kenny:

—teaches us how to pretend.

—tries to teach us that everybody likes us whoever we are.

—makes children feel good.

—solves problems without talking or writing to others.

—teaches us how to enjoy each other with and without games.

—makes us laugh, and we have fun.

—teaches us to communicate with our imaginations.

—teaches us to express our feelings and use our body to express out feelings.

—acts like children, rides a unicycle and juggles.

—never mistreats anyone.

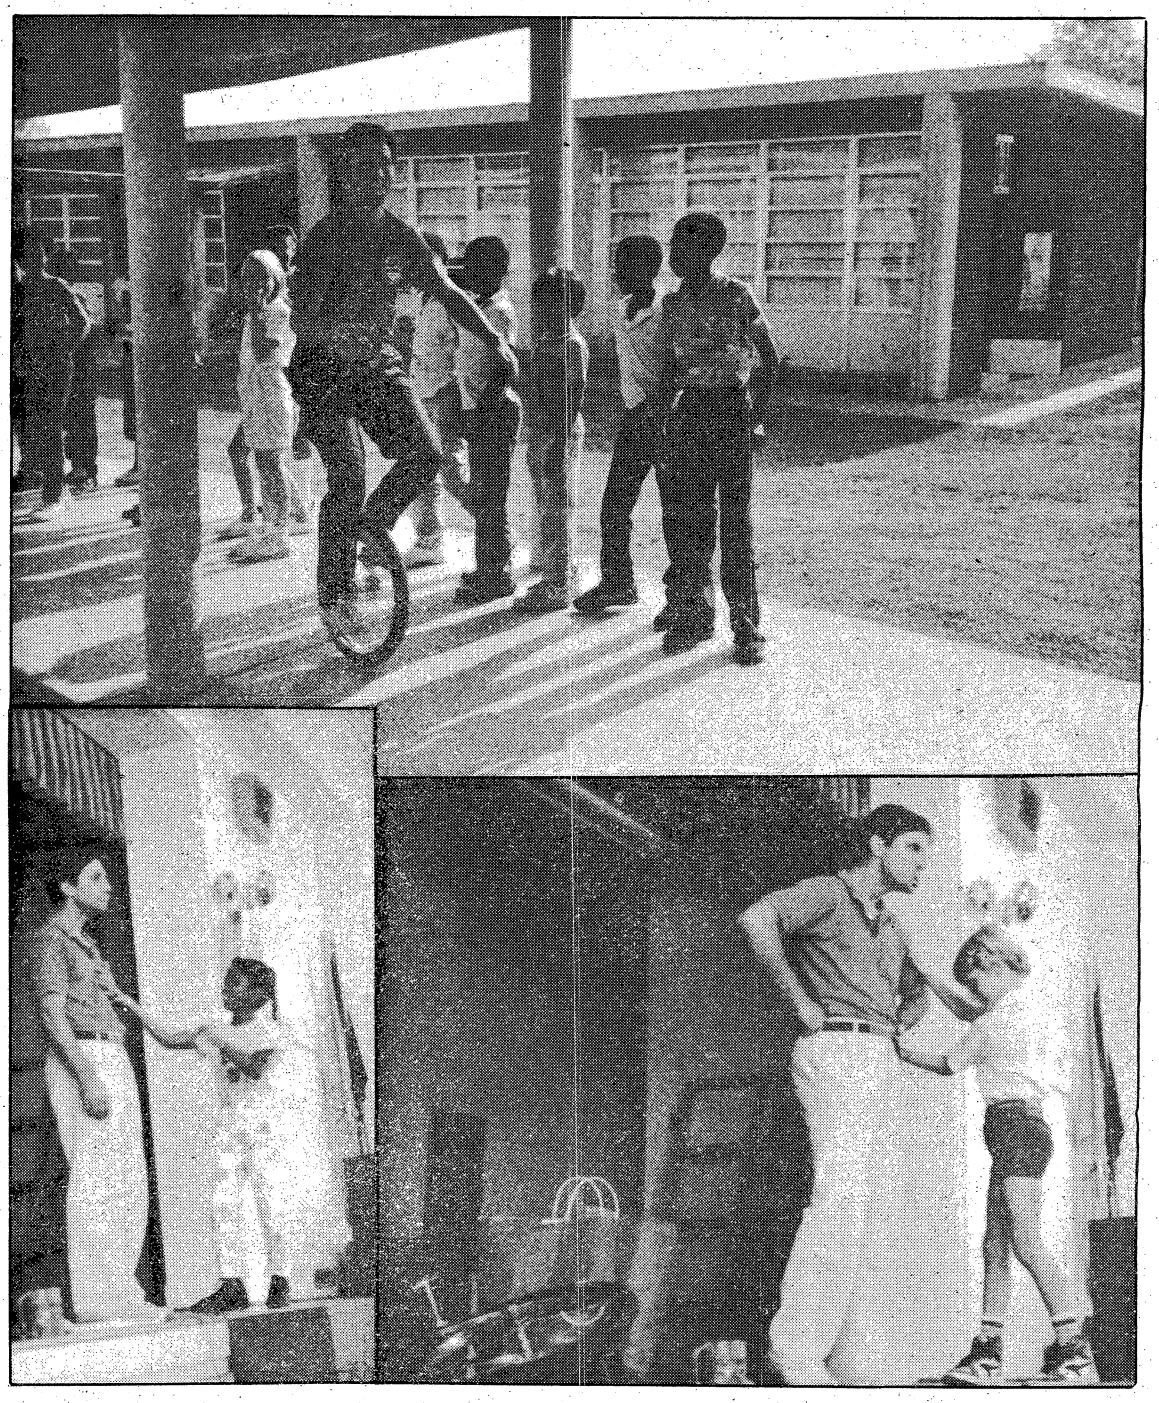
—makes you feel good even though you do things wrong.

—lets you solve problems, and I like that in a person.

—juggles and balances stuff on his nose.

—likes to see boys and girls happy.

—uses body language to make people laugh.



—showed us how to make a story without writing.

—tries to make people understand that clowns aren't only people with bright red noses and curly wigs.

—works at making people feel good about themselves.

—tries to show us we are important.

Faith race scheduled for Saturday

Fort Benning Schools

The eighth annual Faith Christmas Race will be run Saturday. The race is sponsored by the Faith Middle School physical education department, the school's jogging club, and the Fort Benning Non-commissioned Officers' Wives' Club.

The Faith Christmas Race is made up of three different runs that begin and end at Don C. Faith Middle School. The one-mile race for boys and girls 14 years old and under begins at 8:45 a.m.; the two-mile race begins at 9:15 a.m., and the five-mile race begins at 9:45 a.m. The two and five mile races are open to all age categories.

There are 19 age categories within the three races, and awards will be presented in each category at an 11:30 a.m. awards ceremony.

"Our race has grown each year," said Susan Emerson, Faith physical education teacher and race coordinator. "Participants include students, parents, teachers, other Fort Benning runners and runners from the surrounding Columbus and Phenix City area. It has become a family affair with entire families running the race together."

The race, involving 900 to 1,100 runners each year, began eight years ago as an outgrowth of the Faith physical education program and the Faith Jogging Club, which had begun that same year.

Preparation for the race creates almost as much excitement as the race itself. As part of that preparation, the jogging club and students from other Benning schools recently attended a running clinic sponsored by the Faith physical education department. 1st Lt. John Kelleher Jr., with The School Brigade, Combined Arms Division, provided many suggestions for runners including indoor and outdoor exercises to be done in preparation for the race.

All proceeds from the race will go to the Faith physical education program to provide additional equipment and incentive awards for students.

Pre-registration forms for the race are still available at Faith Middle School. Registration on the day of the race will be $4 for those 14 and under and $6 for those 15 and over.

Ending statements:

—I'm so used to using my mouth to communicate with other people, but I think I'm getting the hang of communication with other people without using my mouth because of Mr. Kenny.

—It would be fun to balance a club on your nose. He made me crack up!

—I want to be an artist sometime when I grow up and I want to make children laugh.

—I like him so much that when he comes back, I'm going to ask him for his autograph.

Entertainment

Operation Holiday offers soldiers interesting activities

Association of the U.S. Army

The seventh annual Operation Holiday will begin with a "kick-off" ceremony at the Columbus Government Center Plaza at 10:30 a.m. Dec. 19.

The mayors of Columbus and Phenix City, the commanding general of Fort Benning, the president of the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army, local businessmen, major unit commanders and soldiers representing post units will participate, marking the beginning of this year's Operation Holiday.

The local AUSA chapter designed this program to provide meaningful activities during the holiday period for soldiers who remain at the post and cannot share the holidays with their families.

Support of Operation Holiday affords AUSA corporate members and other local businesses an opportunity to express appreciation to soldiers for their contributions to the nation. Additions to this year's tours include visits to the Confederate Naval Museum and the Royal Crown facility.

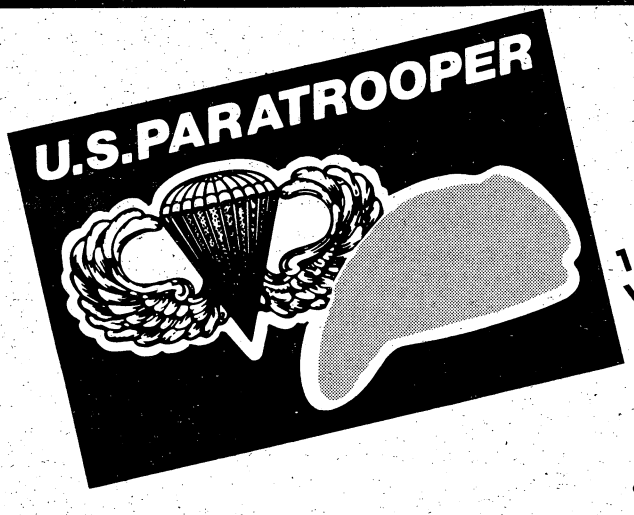
A new initiative this year is the addition of entertainment to the schedule with the booking of a magic act, "Forsythe and Dawn" and a local band, Leather and Lace.

The AUSA bowling tournament is set for the afternoons of Dec. 19, 22 and 23 at the main post bowling center.

Tickets have been provided for soldiers to attend Atlanta Hawks basketball games, the Blue Grey game in Montgomery, Ala., and the Peach Bowl in Atlanta.

Local churches have offered to welcome soldiers during special Christmas programs.

The Army Training Center is coordinating the military participation through planning meetings with unit representatives. Soldiers should contact their unit first sergeant or sergeant major if they will be in the area during the holidays and are interested in participating in the events. The schedule includes:



Dec. 19 — Kick-off ceremony, 10:30 a.m.
Bowling tournament, 1 p.m.
Dec. 20 — Atlanta Hawks vs San Antonio Spurs, 7 p.m.
Dec. 22 — Tour Pratt & Whitney, 8:30 a.m.

Troops must use excess leave or watch it disappear in 1987

Army News Service

With the holiday season upon us, soldiers need to think about planning their leave so they will not lose any in fiscal year 1987. There are only a few special circumstances where soldiers are allowed to carry over more than 60 days of leave into the next fiscal year, so soldiers must use their leave or lose it.

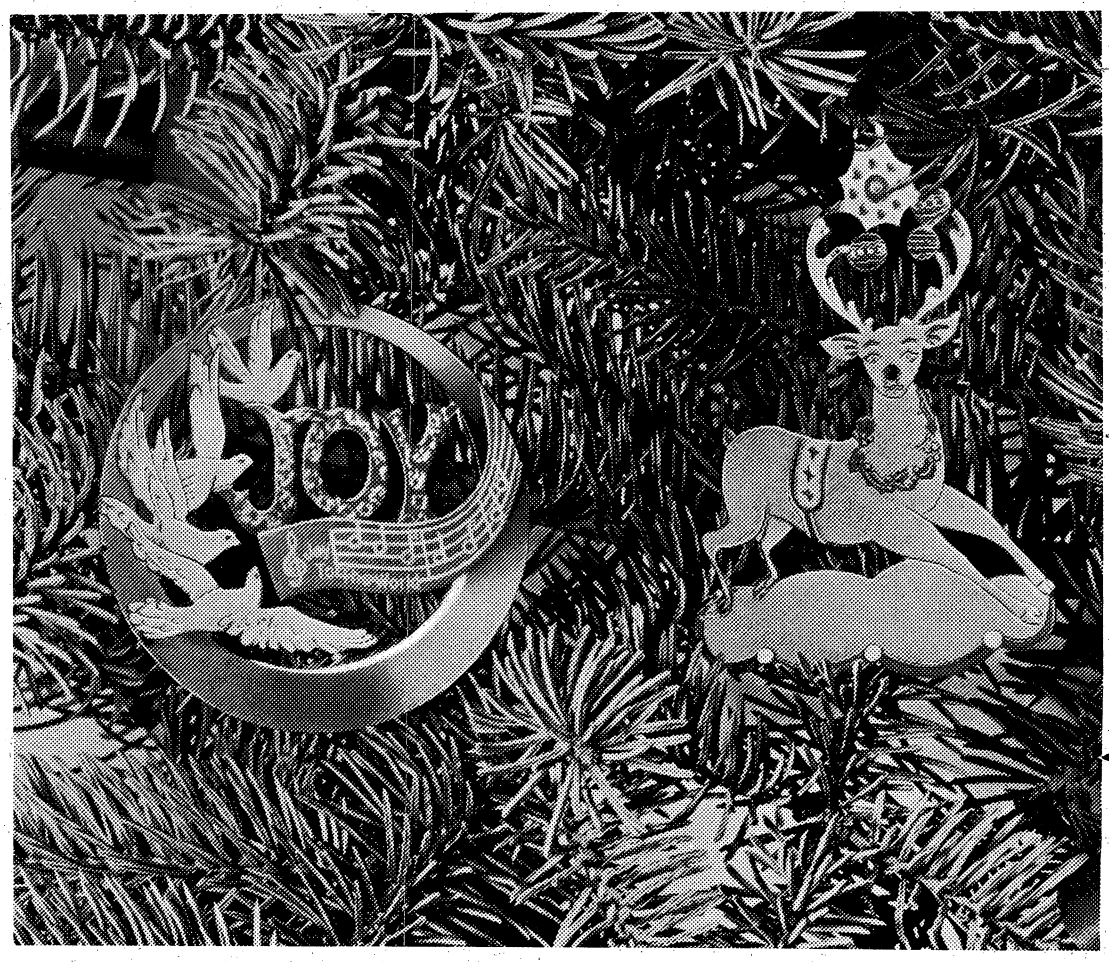
Leave policy is based on laws passed by Congress, according to Mary Anne Quintard, military personnel management specialist at MILPERCEN. The law says that a soldier cannot carry over move than 60 days of leave at the end of any fiscal year.

"The 60-day leave carry-over was enacted by Congress to protect soldiers from losing leave when military requirements prevented them from taking it," Quintard said. "Every year soldiers ask to have more than 60 days carried forward, but they do not understand the special circumstances that allow them to do that. Soldiers may carry forward 90 days of leave under just two limited circumstances."

The first is when soldiers are entitled to special pay for duty subject to hostile fire or imminent danger for a continuous period of at least 120 days.

The other is when soldiers are assigned to designated deployable ships, designated mobile units or other similar prescribed duty. Designations of mobile units or other similar duty result when soldiers are deployed to meet contingency operations of the U.S.

"These exceptions to the 60-day carry-over rule are the only ones permitted by law," Quintard said. "MILPERCEN cannot make exceptions to laws. All requests that don't fit those circumstances have to be denied, since they don't meet legal requirements.



"There are some common circumstances that may prevent the use of leave," she continued, "but special leave accrual cannot be authorized for them. Such circumstances include hospitalization, school attendance and assignment or detail to a study group.

"The purpose of leave is to provide soldiers with rest and relaxation from the hardships of military service," Quintard explained. "The program supports use of leave as it is earned, minimizes loss of leave, and reduces supports use of leave as it is earned, minimizes loss of leave, and reduces the cost of payment for unused accrued leave."

To prevent the loss of leave and reduce payment costs, commanders and soldiers should aggressively pursue the annual use of earned leave. Soldiers should program their leave to use the entire 30 days they earn each year within that year. Commanders should try to grant leave to their soldiers for the entire amount.

Commanders and soldiers should work together to meet the objectives of the leave program as established by Congress, and to plan for leave so that no one loses any this fiscal year.

Ninety teams register for intramural basketball

Story and photos
by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The Fort Benning Intramural Basketball season got underway Nov. 14, with more than 90 teams "hooping" to claim the coveted post title.

Monday's action in the 197th Green Division was dominated by Company A, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, as they bombed Company E, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 71-40.

Echo could not contain the hot hands of the three leading Alpha Company scorers. The Artillery team launched its biggest bombs in the first period, as Darryl Brown, Franklin Spell and Leroy Neal fired 10, nine and eight first-half points, respectively.

Though Co. E's Paul Corpening fought back with 11 points of his own, the barrage continued in the second half.

After ending the first half with a 33-25 lead, Co. A took the game into the paint, scoring 38 second-half points against the Co. E's 15.

Neal, the game's high scorer, dropped six second-half goals, accompanied by two trips to the free throw, giving him the game high of 22 points.

The 2-10th had four players in double figures, including Stan Miller, with 10, while Corpening was Echo's only double digit player, scoring 16 points.

Post Intramural Basketball hosts 11 divisions, including the Men's 35 and over and the Women's Divisions. But, it is Co. A, 2-10th leading the way in the 197th Green Division with a 2-0 record.

Regulation changes aim to allow more hunters on post

Editor's note: Col. James E. Mace is president of the commanding general's Hunting and Fishing Advisory Council.

by James E. Mace
1st Infantry Training Brigade

There has been a dramatic decrease in the number of hunters on post this year, which some hunters attribute to the new controlled hunting system.

Two thousand five hundred hunting permits have been issued this year, compared to 4,000 last year, which is a 38 percent decrease.

We have a dichotomy here in that we also have a deer herd that needs to be more heavily harvested. Deer on post have been losing two or three pounds each year. This leads Georgia biologists to believe there is not enough food and habitat available to provide for the size of the deer population on Fort Benning.

Fort Benning applied to Georgia this year for 500 additional deer tags but was turned down because the post does not formally allow civilians (other than government civilian employees or other guests residing 75 miles or further from post) to hunt on the reservation.

In an attempt to solve this problem, the hunting regulation was changed this year to allow authorized hunters to bring two guests each day with them. One of the guests must reside at least 75 miles from Fort Benning and the other may be a civilian friend from the local community.

With respect to controlled hunting, in past years hunters could check range maps and hunt in any area that was not closed due to training. Now hunters must check out to hunt in a specific area (which may be done the day prior to the actual hunt,) and check in when they finish hunting.

While it is an inconvenience for hunters, there are valid reasons for controlling access to post. The system was not devised to control the hunters but to have accountability of personnel in the hinterlands of Fort Benning. Fort Benning was the only military reservation in the United States that did not have controlled hunting, so it was something that was bound to happen eventually. Increased vandalism and theft of range equipment in the remote areas of the post, as well as safety considerations, forced the move to controlled hunting.

Steps have been taken to improve the check-out and in system so hunters don't have to stand in line for a long time. It is still being worked on, but the goal is that no hunter has to wait more than 10 minutes to check in or out. This process will be improved upon as experience is gained in the execution of the program.

A third location for checking out has been established in Building 4 on Fridays from noon to 3 p.m. This is primarily for the convenience of students, but anyone can sign out there. All have to sign back in at either Harmony Church or Uchee Creek.

A recent problem that surfaced was that the weekend hunting maps showed both Saturday and Sunday areas on the same map, which confused some hunters. The hunting areas on the weekend are now being posted one day at a time and the Directorate of Engineering and Housing is preparing another map board to accommodate the extra day so that hunters checking the maps can plan their weekends.

One of the positive aspects that has come out of controlled hunting is that, due to the size of Fort Bening, hunters can continue to hunt where they want to as long as the area is not closed for training. No hunter has been turned down for hunting in an open area because the area was filled up with other hunters.

It disturbs me to see people losing interest in hunting here. One of the greatest benefits active and retired members of the Army have, after medical, post exchange and commissary privileges, is our land and water resources available for recreational use.

The post has an abundant population of deer, squirrel and turkey, as well as some doves, ducks and quail. It is there for all sportsmen to enjoy.

But the bottom line is that Fort Benning, with two divisions worth of training going on, is a training post, and that's its primary mission. Hunting has to come second, and it is a special privilege we have, not a right.

Orienteering not simply navigating over land

by Linda Ferguson
Fort Benning orienteering director

First things first! Let's clear up a problem with terminology. Is it land navigation or orienteeing? It's both! Orienteering is done by setting or "orienting" a map or chart in agreement with the land and the points of the compass. The same is true for land navigation.

Anyone who has navigated across the land from one point to another has orienteered. When a distinction is made between orienteering and land navigation, it is actually in reference to teaching techniques and philosophies.

"Land nav" and orienteering were developed by the military to enable troops to move accurately and swiftly across country. The main difference between the two is, after almost a century of trial and error in training techniques, orienteering has developed with more emphasis on "reading the land" than pace and azimuth. Terrain association is at the heart of good orienteering.

To learn terrain association, just as with any other skills, the more you practice, the better. There's no practice like a real class "A" meet to help sharpen your competitive skills. But participation in a full-fledged meet is not always possible, practical or the best way to learn terrain association.

There are several exercises that can be used to sharpen terrain association skills without the hours needed to set up a meet. These exercises need little or no prior planning and can be done in groups of two or more. All that is needed is a good map with a large scale, 1-to-10,000, 1-to-12,000 or 1-to-15,000. The larger scale, such as that found on orienteering maps, provides the detail necessary to do quick terrain identification.

Memory legs

Two or more participants may rotate as the leader in this exercise. Leader one chooses a point on the map that is not to technically difficult and within 200 to 300 meters from the start. A designated orienteer is allowed to study the leg for 15 to 60 seconds, depending on the skill level of the orienteer.

The orienteer then navigates to the point by memory and without the use of a compass. Leader one "thumbs" along with the map to check the route and stops the orienteer, from going too far off course. When the point is reached, the orienteer becomes the leader, chooses the new point and a new orienteer takes over to navigate to it.

This exercise helps develop skill in: map reading, terrain memorizatio ad identification and quick route choice.

Quick pursuit

Two or more participants should alternate at being the leader. All players have maps. The starting point is identified. The orienteer chooses a point 200 to 1,000 meters away, without revealing its location to the group. The route to the point is run at a gentle job (working up to a dead run over a few weeks).

The leader navigates to the point without using a compass. The remainder of the group follows the route on their maps while keeping up fairly good pace through the woods. At any time the orienteer stops the group and each individual must show their location on the map without revealing it to the others. When the point is reached, a new orienteer takes over.

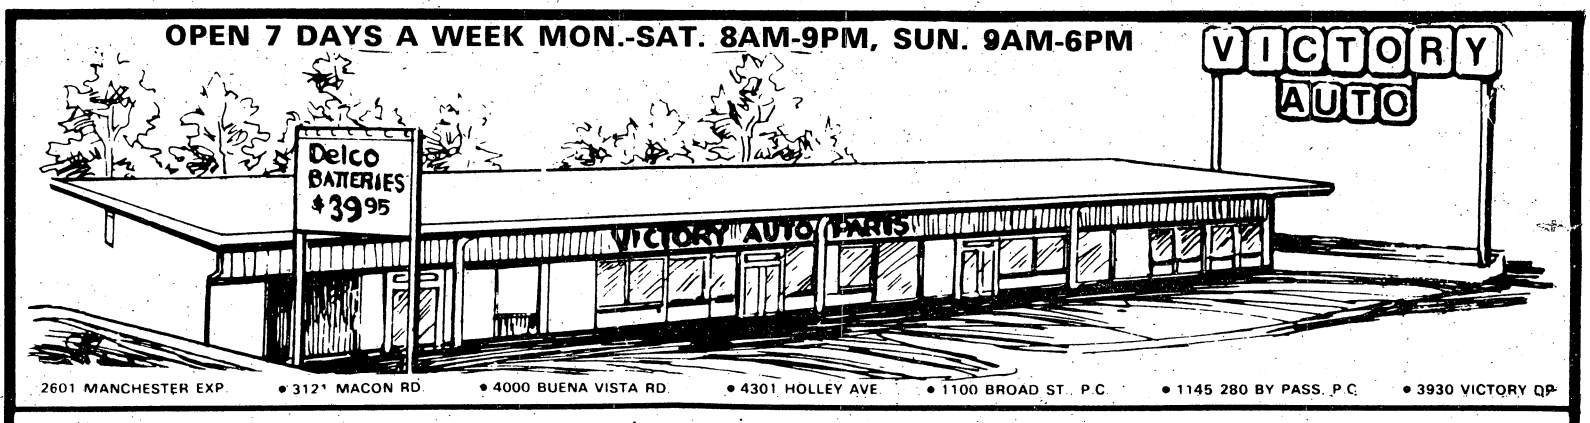
Termites beat Cougars 20-0

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

In recent Youth Activities football action the Termite Bears came out triumphant in a 20-0 victory over the Cougars.

The Cougar purple people eater defense could not stop the powerful Bear backfield, as Marcus Johnson marched the Bears down field, setting up a short run into the endzone by Lydell Beverly.

The Bears closed the half at 6-0. But, going into the second half, the Bear offense continued to power over the Cougars, with Beverly again adding another six points to the scoreboard.



Then with halfback Michael Clemmons clearing the road, Johnson, who led the Bear rushing game with 87 yards, punched into the endzone, increasing the lead 18-0.

The Cougar offense was held to a standstill by Bear defensive tackle Freddy Martinez and defensive end Clemmons, both pulling in six tackles.

Jason Martinez and Clemmons teamed to add some defensive points to the scoreboard when they wrapped up the Cougar quarterback in the endzone for the safety.

The Bears, after being the first to clench their division in the Youth Activity Football League, also boast the best defense in the league, with the defensive allowing no points to be chalked up against them.

Many post athletes make All-Army teams

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The athletes at Fort Benning have consistently proven that they rank among the top cometitors in the military, as they qualify for the Army's best teams.

A great percentage of those participating in the Army trials and those who become part of the All-Army Teams are members of the post's elite.

The "Home of the Infantry" has been represented at the All-Army trials in wrestling, track and field, softball, bowling and other sports.

Training is only the first process in qualifying for the Army trials.

Applicants must submit a packet to the Sports Office in Building 394, 30 to 90 days prior to trial dates.

Trial camp eligibility extends to enlisted soldiers on tours of duty of at least 90 days.

The requirements and guidelines for sports above the installation level are outlined in Army Regulation 28-52.

Soldiers who have competed professionally in boxing, judo or wrestling are not eligible to participate above the installation level in those sports.

Individuals are considered professional if they are not eligible to receive a current Amateur Athletic Union registration membership card.

The golf trials run July 12 through Aug. 22, with the applications being accepted no later than June. The open division is set up for 39 years and under, and seniors, 40 years and over. The women's division is open to all ages.

Tennis trials have representatives in four divisions and will get into swing Aug. 27 through Sept. 12. The deadline for entry is July 27.

Those 34 years old and under may enter in the open division. The junior veteran divison consists of those 35 to 44 years old. The "mature adult", those 45 and over, qualify for the senior divison, with women being able to enter at all ages.

Men marathon runners must meet a 2:22.0 time to qualify while women runners may quality at 2:50.0.

Marathon applicants must include a copy of a certificate of participation signed by the meet director of any sanctioned marathon.

The entry due date and trial dates for other competition are:

squared away. His energy is stored for the morning PT runs and play time with commander, Capt. Dave Johnson.

In whatever capacity, both mascots can be found each day with their companys enjoying some phase of Airborne School.

Neither is considered merely a mascot. Both are valuable members of their units. They lead and motivate the students in each class and take pride in each groups' accomplishment on graduation day. The sutdents appreciate them for their efforts. According to Johnson, "The kids love Geronimo. Some have written me letters about how much he meant to them while they were going through jump school."

Both dogs uphold the Airborne tradition of the great guard dogs of liberty and peace that preceeded them.

And if they're tired at the end of a long, hard day, neither shows it as they retire to the barracks for a night of well-deserved rest.

Gen. James Gavin (then a colonel) and Max, the parachuting dog, take a rest after a jump at Lawson Army Airfield in the 1940s.

The unit deployed within 34 hours of the initial alert to a sea port of embarkation. The SPOE was simulated by a training area at Fort Stewart, Ga. The unit deployed with no accidents or incidents for an accumulated mileage of approximately 17,000 miles.

After establishing an overnight bivouac, the Company redeployed to Fort Benning to conclude the EDRE.

Safety Cab service getting underway for holiday season

Safety Cab will begin operating in Columbus and Fort Benning this year beginning Dec. 15, and running through Jan. 1.

The free service will begin each evening at 7 p.m. and will end at 3 a.m.

Safety Cab picks up holiday drinkers at local lounges and restaurants and takes them home.

Safety Cab's telephone number is 323-0110.

Cold weather classes offered to staff sections

Commanders can request cold weather indoctrination classes for their units.

In accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 40-24, these classes are designed to be given to staff personnel, who then do instruction at unit and company levels.

For more information, call SSgt. Barnett at 545-1144.

AAFES now accepting Discover card worldwide

Army and Air Force Exchange Service exchanges in the Continental United States, Alaska and Puerto Rico are now accepting Discover cards.

AAFES exchanges in Hawaii have been accepting the credit cards since Nov. 1.

Civilian injuries skyrocket, sparking officials' concern

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Civilian injury rates on post jumped nearly 20 percent in fiscal year 1986, prompting officials to take a hard look at the workplace safety program.

According to statistics compiled at the U.S. Army Safety Center Data Base at Fort Rucker, Ala., Fort Benning had 231 injury claims filed in 1986, compared to 195 in fiscal year 1985.

The Federal Employees Compensation Act provides benefits to employees who are injured on the job. It also provides benefits to family members if an employee dies of job related injuries.

According to Carolyn Douglas, a personnel management specialist who processes FECA claims at the Civilian Personnel Office here, this type of claim refers only to injuries resulting in either lost time or medical expenses incurred or expected to be incurred.

Although Mrs. Douglas could not provide statistics on the number of hours lost or sick time used, she said that for fiscal 1986, Fort Benning paid out $134,867 in continuation of pay funds to injured employees. She said these funds are paid to employees so that they do not have to use their sick or annual leave time, in the event they sustain an on-the-job injury.

Injured employees can draw continuation of pay funds for up to 45 days, after which they can qualify for workmen's compensation, she said.

According to Fred Young, post safety officer, civilian accidents are a serious problem and a preventable one.

"Of all accidents that occur, I'd say 99 percent of them could be prevented," Young said. "In just about every case, the employee could have done something to prevent the accident."

Young said the majority of accidents reported involving civilian employees were either slips and falls or back injuries.

He said the job categories that these accident victims fall in are office workers and mechanics.

"There is a right way to lift something, safety goggles to wear to protect the eyes, and so on," he said. Young's office is primarily concerned with safety training and education. Classes are currently being offered to supervisors to help them educate their employees, he said.

Mrs. Douglas said she does not want to discourage anyone from reporting an accident. "That's what the program is here for, to help people who need it," she said.

However, fraud and abuse is always possible. Mrs. Douglas said that in cases where fraud is suspected, the Criminal Investigation Division is called in to investigate.

Supervisors who want more information on how to prevent on-the-job injuries or report them, can call Mrs. Douglas at 545-1421.

Enforcing uniform policy top priority for soldiers

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Almost everyone would do someone else's job differently and achieve what they believe to be "better" results. I'm relatively sure there are a few readers who believe they could be a better newspaper editor than I. I believe it also a fair guess that many soldiers wish they could be "general for a day" and change the way the Army does business.

The beauty of such dreams is that it is always easier from the outside looking in. Therefore, without any of the reality of what such a position entails, each of us can sit down and decide what we would do to make our mark.

So, the day when one of you comes up to my office to be The Bayonet editor for a day, I can go out and follow up on some of the command directives that I believe are important.

My priority mission would be to stop by a variety of eating establishments in Columbus and institute my plan for ensuring that soldiers are in the proper uniform at all times.

Yes, that is how I would make my mark — personally enforcing the policy concerning uniform wear.

The specific policy that is blatantly violated by an incredible number of Fort Benning soldiers is contained in Command Letter No. 23 signed by Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., Sept. 8, of this year. In part, it says:

"Other uniforms, including fatigues, BDUs (Battle Dress Uniforms), cooks' and medics' whites, and flight suits may be worn anywhere in the local area (off post) until 2000 hours (8 p.m.). In addition to using drive-through windows in "fast-food" restaurants, getting gas, dropping off or picking up cars at repair facilties, picking up basic grocery items, picking up or dropping off laundry, picking up license tags for POVs (privately owned vehicles), a soldier may now sit down in a "fast-food" restaurant or visit a mall.

A soldier may not drink alcohol or patronize an establishment that sells alcohol by the drink while in fatigues, BDUs, cooks' and medics' whites or flight suits."

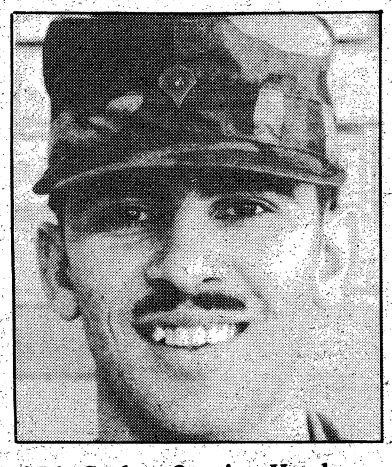
The most important point here is that soldiers cannot go into restaurants that serve alcohol — any type of alcohol — while in those uniforms outlined. Further clarification, you can't go get a pizza at a place that sells pitchers of beer if you happen to be wearing BDUs that day.

A large number of the violators of this policy may not be aware of the specifics the general's letter spells out. Somehow things are not filtering down.

A soldier new to Fort Benning can be excused for not being up to speed on all of the local policies. However, it isn't just new soldiers who are in the wrong. And neither is it lower enlisted committing the bulk of the violations. Many senior people are simply ignoring the letter or feigning ignorance, saying it is unclear. Well, it's pretty clear to me.

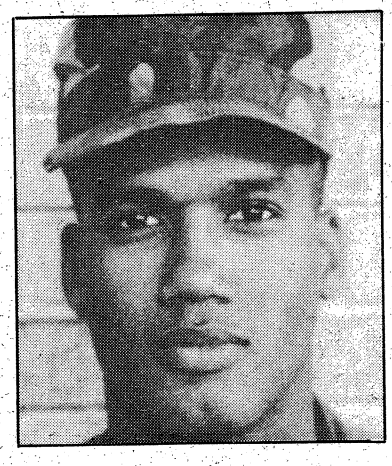
The real clincher to the commanding general's letter is the last paragraph that says: "Violations of this prohibition may be prosecuted under the Uniform Code of Military Justice."

A call to action: anyone who sees a soldier violating this command policy should issue an on-the-spot correction and follow it up with notification to the individual's unit chain of command. It doesn't matter if you're a specialist four and you see a lieutenant colonel in violation. It is your obligation as a professional soldier to right those in the wrong.



Now, if I could just get someone to take over my job for a day . . .

Various voices



If you were Fort Benning's commanding general for a day how would you make your mark?

SP4 Carolyn Williams, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 2nd Battalion, TSR — I would have a special day for all the exceptional family members on Fort Benning. A lot of times, special children get left on the wayside and I think a special day geared at their level would be fantastic.

SP4 Carlos Ocasio, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group — I would set up stricter rules against drugs and alcohol. I believe there are still far too many accidents resulting from drug and alcohol abuse.

Pvt. 1 Decater James, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Battalion — I'd step up on training. I don't think enforcement of the rules is strict enough. For instance, if a trainee is not supposed to smoke, don't let him.

SSgt. Eliseo Barrera, lst Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade — I would personally tour all of the soldiers' billets to see if they were up to par. If they weren't I would make on-the-spot corrections.

SGM Joseph Demming, Post IG — I would have more safety training. I believe repetetive training on safety or any subject causes people to use it or do it automatically.

Drinking, driving finally taboo with large numbers of people

Editor's note: This week has been designated National Drugged and Drunken Driving Awareness Week. With the holiday season in full swing, everyone should be aware of the incredible dangers associated with driving under the influence of any intoxicating substance. Over the next three weeks, The Bayonet will publish various articles aimed at making Fort Benning readers take note of the problem and encourage them to do their part in keeping the roadways safe.

Army News Service

"Let's have one for the road." "Pour another round." "Have a drink on me."

These statements, at one time or another, have been spoken without a second thought. People weren't concerned about how much a person had drunk, but with having a good time. Little thought was given to whether the drinkers would be able to drive home safely afterwards. Few people thought about remaining sober and alert so that they could safely drive a group to its designation.

Today, however, those phrases are not as popular. People are still drinking, but many of them are drinking less. When they do drink, many will no longer drive. People still like to have a good time; but now when a group is out for the evening, someone is appointed not to drink — a designated driver. This person agrees to drink only non-alcoholic beverages during the gathering so that he can safely provide transportation for the rest of the group.

The Army adopted the Designated Driver Program last year to help safeguard its club patrons. Under the program, Army clubs offer unlimited free beverages and coffee to one person in a group of two or more in exchange for their promise that they won't consume any alcohol during the evening and that they'll provide transportation for their drinking friends.

The Designated Driver Campaign is part of an Armywide "responsible use of alcohol" program designed to protect soldiers, civilian employees, their families and guests and the local community from needless accidents, injuries and deaths. By designating a drive, a group can enjoy an evening at their clubs without having to be concerned about driving while under the influence of alcohol.

The program encourages soldiers, as well as civilians, not to drink and drive. Civilians should be every bit as eager to participate in the Designated Driver Program since the consequence for them being convicted of driving under the influence on a military installation can be severe.

Once a driver has been designated, support his position. Don't try to convince him to drink. His job is difficult enough.

Remember, the country can no longer tolerate the problem of drinking and driving.

When the program is being promoted in a drinking establishment, use it. If it's not being promoted, make a pact among your friends to designate a driver. The drinkers can buy non-alcoholic beverages for the driver. Take turns. It might take time for the idea to become a part of your partying habits, but it'll be worth it. Have fun and live to tell about it.

Commander's comments

The Combined Federal Campaign has been completed with remarkable success. The credit goes to each of you — the soldiers and civilians who make up the Fort Benning Community.

Our goal this year was $500,000. You met that goal and exceeded it, digging deep in your pockets for more than $530,000.

The importance of this campaign cannot be stressed too much. Once each year we are asked to support those charitable organizations so important to the tri-city area of Fort Benning, Columbus, and Phenix City.

The challenge was yours, you met that challenge. I am proud of you!

Awareness can help prevent holdiay tragedy

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The Christmas holiday season is almost upon us and with it comes an increase in traffic accidents, larcenies, fraud and alcohol-related incidents.

In the 197th Infantry Brigade, commanders and the Brigade provost marshal are taking steps early to limit these problems.

"There are around 46,000 deaths on U.S. highways each year and alcohol is a factor in at least half of those deaths," said Maj. Robert Kyser, Brigade provost marshal. "We should educate ourselves and other soldiers on the dangers of alcohol abuse."

Drinking and driving is a concern that we should all be aware of. Not only does it effect the guilty party involved, but also the lives of innocent victims.

"Head was up; jumped up, not out . . . do it again," an instructor tells Lt. Col. Susan McCall following her first attempt at a mass exit from the 34-feet-high tower in the second week of airborne training.

'Little old lady' tackles jump school

Lt. Col. Susan McCall, a 43-year-old Army nurse, goes down the line of her squad in Airborne School with a "Black Hat" instructor, checking out the troops and making on-the-spot corrections as needed.

"When my old granny was 96, she did PT just for kicks.
When that old girl turned 97, she up and died and went to heaven.
She met Saint Peter at the Pearly Gates.
She said, 'Hey there sonny, hope I'm not late.'"

Although she's got a long way to go to hit 96, Lt. Col. Susan McCall has a lot in common with "granny." A recent graduate of the U.S. Army Airborne School with Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, the 43-year-old nurse considers herself a "little old lady trying to prove a point."

As chief nurse for the 44th Medical Brigade Field Hospital at Fort Bragg, N. C., McCall's duties include designing airborne-deployable medical equipment.

Most recently she was involved in the design of an anesthesia package that weighs about three pounds.

"There is a lot you need to know when designing these packages for soldiers to jump in (to a combat situation)," McCall said.

"An airborne nurse in the unit (44th Med. Bde.) was already working on the anesthesia package when I got there in July and all I really did was provide advice," McCall said. "After I've completed jump school, though, I'll be able to become directly involved.

"I decided if I'm going to be making these kinds of decisions, I should be Army inspires NCO of Quarter to strive for excellence in career

Story and photo
by Ann M. McDonald
The Bayonet staff writer

Sgt. Dennis Ethridge, a Mountaineer from Company C, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division was recently selected Fort Benning's Non-Commissioned Officer of the Quarter.

The Alabama native has been in the Army for four years, but has been around the military all of his life. "You might say I was inspired by the Army," he said, "I always knew I would join the military." He enlisted in the Army through the Delayed Entry Program in November 1982.

Ethridge spent three years at Fort Riley, Kansas before coming to Fort Benning in 1985. Upon arriving here, he attended and successfully completed Airborne School, an accomplishment he considers the highlight of his career.

The 22-year-old infantryman just reenlisted for four years and considers himself a career soldier. Presently he has his sights set on becoming an Army helicopter pilot. "Since I was raised near Fort Rucker (home of the Army's warrant officer flight school) I guess helicopters have gotten into my blood," Ethridge said.

Sgt. Dennis Ethridge

Even if he doesn't go to flight school, he has already started down the road to success as an NCO. He's attended the Primary Leadership Development Course and the Basic Non-Commissioned Officer Course. He has also gone through the Jungle Operations Training Course in Panama.

He believes his parents are proud of him and knows they are thankful for the job security the Army gives him.

The promotable sergeant is married to his high school sweetheart and they are expecting their first child any day now. "My wife backs my Army career 100 percent," he said.

The young NCO has one sister and three brothers. One of his brothers is also a career soldier currently on recruiting duty in Enterprise, Ala.

During his spare time, Ethridge enjoys motorcycle racing and working with wood. He is scheduled to depart for his next duty assignment at Fort Campbell, Ky., early next year.

Co-worker saves choking woman by performing Heimlich Maneuver

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

A recent lunch almost proved fatal for a Fort Benning civilian employee.

"I had just gotten back from picking up some Chinese food for lunch. I went into our break room and was running a little late and so I began eating pretty fast. I swallowed a piece of meat and it got caught in my throat. I couldn't breathe and I couldn't yell for help," explained Jacqueline Walker, from the Adjutant General Enlisted Records Section.

Collapsing to the floor, Ms. Walker began pounding on the wall. She said co-workers throught she was just kidding and paid no attention.

Co-worker Raenelle Collins heard the pounding and looked in the break room.

"She (Ms. Walker) was on the floor when I went into the break room. Her face was turning red and she couldn't talk.

"I stepped over her and pulled her up and began doing the Heimlich Maneuver. By exerting pressure on her solar plexus I was able to get the meat to go on down her throat," said Ms. Collins.

Ms. Collins learned how to administer the Heimlich Maneuver from her husband, who is a station captain with the Columbus Fire Department.

"Ms. Collins saved my life. If it wasn't for her I probably would have died. I wasn't getting any air and I was getting weaker and weaker," Ms. Walker said.

"It was a fluke that I was even there. It just goes to show you that everyone should learn the Heimlich Maneuver. You never know when someone may need your help if they're choking on something," Ms. Collins said.

Ms. Walker, smiling, said, "Needless to say, I will be learning the Heimlich Maneuver."

VA Q&A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.
Veterans Administration

Q — My husband had a Veterans' Group Life Insurance policy when he died. An attorney from a company where he owed money said they would attach the proceeds of the insurance to pay the bill. Can they do this?

A — No. Servicemen's Group Life Insurance and Veterans' Group Life Insurance proceeds are not assignable, nor are payments to beneficiaries subject to claims of creditors of the insured or beneficiary.

Q — Does the VA have an alcohol or drug dependence program for veterans?

A — Yes. The VA operates both inpatient and outpatient clinics.

Q — May a veteran with peacetime service only be buried in a national cemetery?

A — Yes, providing the service was under conditions other than dishonorable.

Field kitchen prepares for TRADOC competition

by Ronald N. Light
43rd Engineer Battalion correspondent

Cooks from the 43rd Engineer Battalion recently distinguished temselves as some of Fort Benning's best.

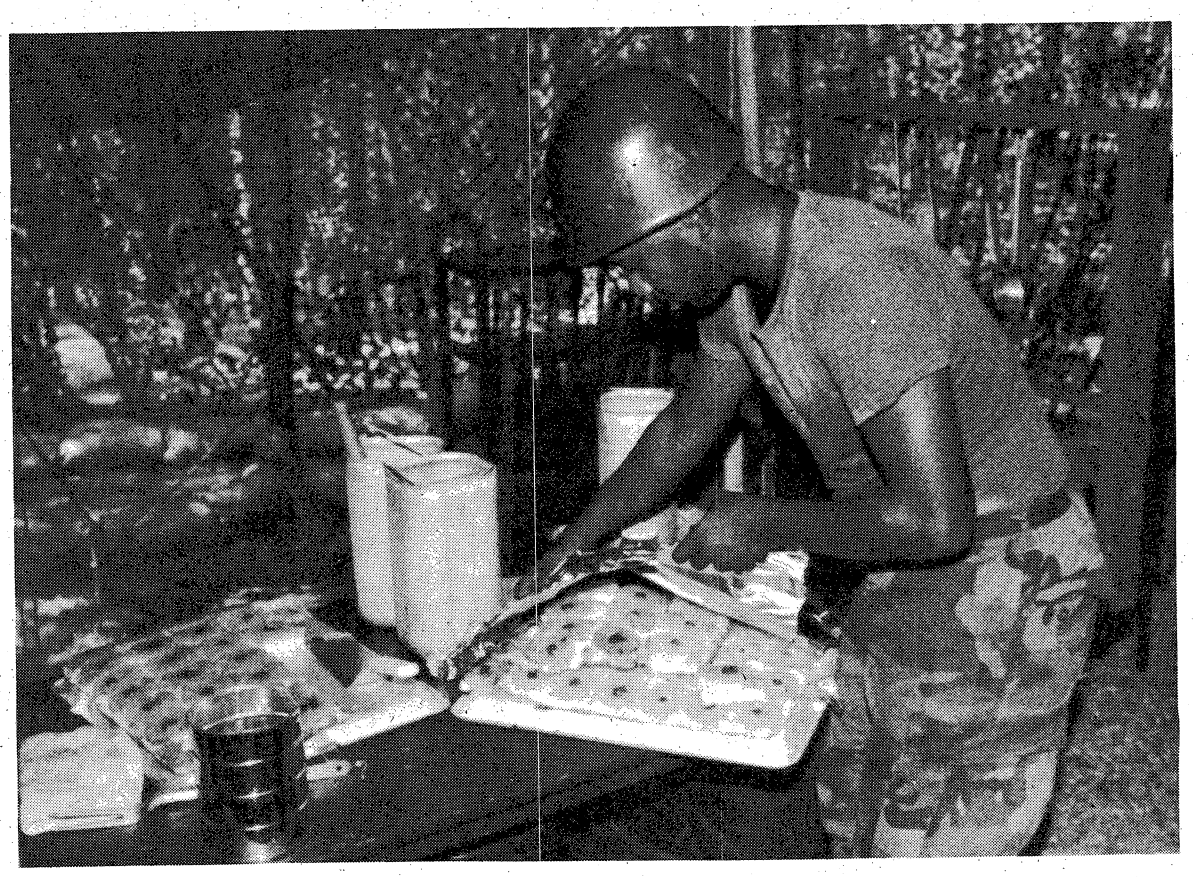
In August, the Battalion was evaluated against three other field kitchens from units all over post for the Phillip A. Connelly Awards program.

As a result, Company C won at post level and is preparing to compete for Training and Doctrine Command title this week.

At the direction of Food Service sergeant SFC Ronnie L. Wheeler, the soldiers spent three weeks preparing for the Connelly evaluation at the post level. "In the previous years as much as three months was allocated for preparation," said Wheeler. Nevertheless, he is proud of the effort the soldiers under his direction put forth.

The Phillip Connelly program has many objectives aimed at overall improvement of food service in the Army. Among these goals are to recognize excellence in food service, improve professionalism of food service personnel and provide incentives to these individuals and units to emphasize outstanding food service. The program's objectives ultimately translate into a higher level of service and quality.

The field kitchen Connelly competition requires a certain amount of spirit. Nearly 70 sets of camouflage netting, 30 tons of crushed rock (crushed by the 43rd's organic rock crusher and quarry section), countless soakage pits, hand wash and pot wash facilities, 250 meters of gravelled walkways, sand bagged headcount stations and elaborate grease traps and field latrines are woven into a tactical, fully operational field kitchen.



However, food preparation is the key according to MSG James Vaughon, Installation Food Service.

Lt. Col. Charles S. Rust, 43rd commander said: "The cooks are our unsung heros. They work as hard or harder than any other soldier in the unit but seldom receive a pat on the back.

"The Connelly competition is very important, as it provides a vehicle to recognize these soldiers who are so essential to our mission."

This week the TRADOC evaluation team will determine if Company C is worthy of the Connelly award.

Artillerymen rever Saint Barbara with special feast of remembrance

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Each year, artillerymen throughout the Army pay homage to Saint Barbara, the protectress from sudden death.

Officers from the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade recently observed the feast of Saint Barbara with a ceremonious gathering filled with age old traditions.

The Legend of Saint Barbara follows:

Saint Barbara was the extremely beautiful daughter of a wealthy heathen named Dioscorus, who lived near Nicomedia in Asia Minor. Because of her singular beauty and fearful that she be demanded in marriage and taken away from him, he jealously shut her up in a tower to protect her from the outside world.

Shortly before embarking on a journey, he commissioned a sumptuous bathhouse built for her, approving the design before he departed. Barbara had heard of the teachings of Christ, and while her father was gone she spent much time in contemplation.

From the windows of her tower, she looked out upon the surrounding countryside and marveled at the growing things; the trees, the animals and the people. She decided that all these things must be part of a master plan, and that the idols of wood and stone worshipped by her parents must be condemned false. Gradually, she came to accept the Christian faith.

As her belief became firm, she directed that the builders redesign the bathhouse her father had planned, adding another window, so that the three windows might symbolize the Holy Trinity.

When her father returned, he was enraged at the changes and infuriated when Barbara acknowledged that she was a Christian.

He dragged her before the prefect of the province, who decreed that she be tortured and put to death by beheading. Dioscorus himself carried out the death sentence. On his way home, he was struck by lightening and his body consumed.

Saint Barbara lived and died about the year 300. She was venerated as early as the seventh century. The legend of the lightning bolt that struck down her persecutor caused her to be regarded as the patron saint in time of danger from thunderstorms, fires and

Around Fort Benning

Editor's Note: "Around Fort Benning" is a weekly column designed to highlight the activities of post units. Its purpose is to provide an outlet for brief stories, written by members of the featured unit, concerning changes of command, significant awards and some training exercises.

Input is welcome from all sources and should be submitted to the Editor in Room 601, Building 4 by 11 a.m. Monday. All input must be typed, double-spaced with the name and specific unit of the writer and should be limited to two pages. Submissions will be subject to standard editing and condensing.

High quality black and white photographs will also be considered for publication in this column.

Whoever said the barracks can't be a festive place to spend the holidays hasn't visited the 608th Ordnance Company!

Recently the families and the soldiers of the 608th pulled together for a tree trimming and dayroom decorating party. Many of the wives baked cookies and Christmas music was heard throughout the building.

The company was also fortunate in that a jolly, chubby man in a red suit was able to make an appearance.

A little extra effort can really go a long way in making the Christmas season a happy and festive time for everyone. Merry Christmas to everyone from the 608th Ordnance Company. — Lana K. Guyton, 608th Ordnance Company

Eight captains and 22 lieutenants from El Salvador graduated from the Combat Officers Course Tuesday at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

This graduation represents the last graduation for USARSA this year. A total 1,200 students graduated from USARSA's menu of 19 different courses in 1986. Colombia had the highest numer of graduates with a total 540 in 1986. El Salvador had 310 total graduates for 1986 with Honduras as the third country with the highest number of graduates totaling 95. — Marco Morales, U.S. Army School of the Americas

Forty seven field grade officers representing nine Latin American countries and the United States graduated from the 45-week Command and General Staff Course Dec. 4 at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

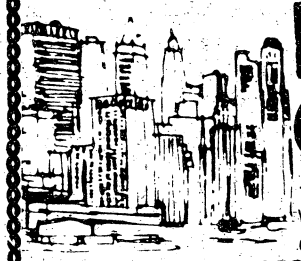
Countries and number of graduates represented were Bolivia -three, Colombia - five, Guatemala -five, Honduras - four, Panama - three, Paraguay - one, Peru - one, Dominican Republic - four, Venezuela - 11 and nine from the U.S.

The course is accredited by the Department of the Army as the equivalent to the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. — Marco Morales, U.S. Army School of the Americas

Speaking to 85 graduating cadets at their graduation ceremony Dec. 4 at Marshall Auditorium, Col. Jesus G. Contreras, director of the El Salvador Cadet Military Academy in San Salvador charged the future lieutenants with carrying on with the moral responsibilities required of officers in El Salvador.

"It is our duty to eradicate marxist attitudes in our country — to promote a pro-Christian democracy thus strengthening our moral values and ethics within our society," Contreras said.

The 24-week course is tailored after the Officer Candidate School offered here. The only difference is the course is taught in Spanish and is tailored to fit the training needs of the Salvadoran military academy.



While at Fort Benning, the cadets received most of their training from U.S. and Latin American non-commissioned officer instructors assigned to the Department of Combat Operations at USARSA. — Marco Morales, U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Three Latin American officers work together to accomplish the mission during the engineering course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Team briefs member nations on courses taught at USARSA

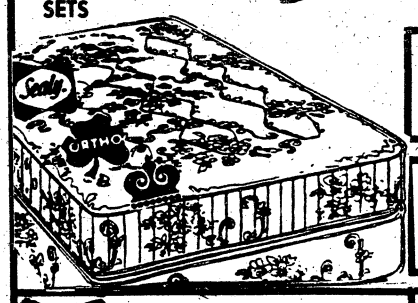
by Angel E. Pesante
U.S. Army School of the Americas correspondent

A common complaint expressed by many students in most formal military or civilian schools is that courses offered don't suit the student's needs and desires. Often, there are perceptions that an institution structured to receive thousands of students annually is careless to small group training needs and therefore becomes "lost in the shuffle."

While this is probably the case, it is not due to negligence or lack of caring by school cadre. Most schools have fixed course offerings. This results in unnecessary training for the student that is not only boring, but also lowers the motivation to learn. Furthermore, the student becomes discouraged by having to re-take mastered training.

At the U.S. Army School of the Americas, coordination teams routinely travel to each of the 15 client countries in Latin America to brief U.S. Military Group personnel and host country officials on current available courses and in many cases, to tailor or design courses to meet the training needs of a particular country.

The coordination team — composed of USARSA's commandant and representatives from the directorate of training and doctrine — usually meet with the minister of defense and the director of training of the host country army. They then identify specific training objectives and compile a list of all tasks the host country wants to accomplish.



Through several meetings, this list is refined and scrutinized to delete any training that could be conducted by the host country using their own instructors and resources. What remains is a list of specific training objectives that become USARSA's teaching scope. This list, however, must be further evaluated at USARSA to identify tasks which make up USARSA's instructional capabilities.

Upon return to USARSA, the desired training is designed by subject matter experts assigned to the course development division and the academic departments. The primary tool used to achieve this is the Modules Catalog which lists all blocks of training at USARSA. Under this system modules are formed into major instructional subject groupings such as weapons and communication.

Each module identifies the objective — prerequisites such as student skill entry level or other prerequisite modules that must be mastered by the student. Training identified as needed by a country for which classes do not already exist at USARSA can be developed following the client country's request. Additionally, because of the training module concept, even a course that has a set program of instruction can be changed to meet the desires and training needs of a particular country. This is done by adding extra modules to increase specific types of instruction.

In essence, the result is a Program of Instruction for a client country specifically designed to meet country's need. The proposed POI is then priced by the Resource Management Office, presented to the country for their acceptance and to Training and Doctrine Command for approval.

Paramount in this is the El Salvador Cadet Course and the Infantry Officer Qualification Course for the cadets of the Dominican Republic Military Academy. For example, the Dominican Republic sends its military cadets to USARSA for a five-month cadet course. This course is considered part of their commissioning process. Completion of this course is required to graduate from their military academy. As a result, more than 1,600 cadets have been commissioned as second lieutenants from these two countries. While both courses were designed to meet the training needs of El Salvador and Dominican Republic armed forces, similar courses can be tailored to train and commission officers for any other Spanish-speaking country.

Stemming from the ability to tailor courses for certain countries, USARSA has developed a characteristic making it unique among the U.S. Army TRADOC schools. It is the only Army school which serves as a commissioning vehicle for foreign army officers through their armies.

Engineers make repairs to indoor firing range

by Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

A new Military Operations in Urban Terrain building constructed by soldiers from Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion was completed last week and has since felt the blasts of Fort Benning soldiers.

About 4,000 5.56mm rounds and 225 framentation hand grenades have been blasted inside the building at Brinson Range, according to Capt. Steven G. Wabnitz, Company B commander.

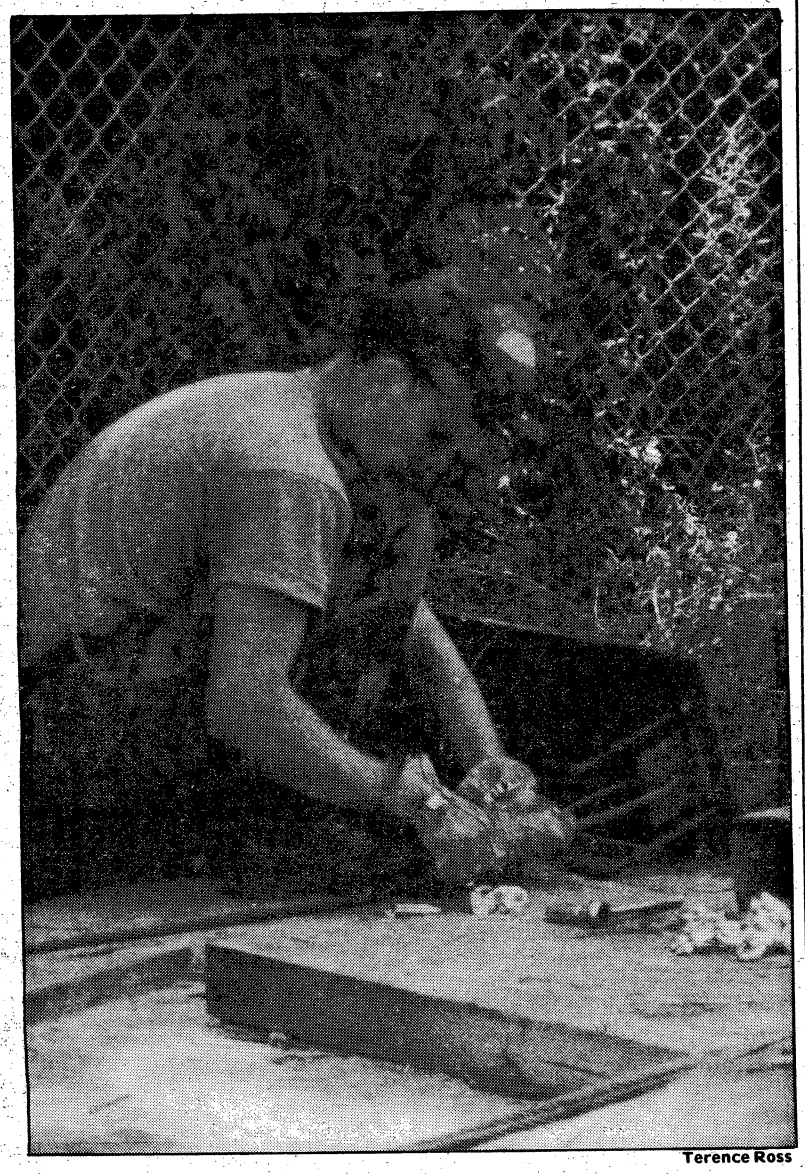
The building, designed with no roof, is made of a special cement developed by Waterways Experimental Station Army Corps of Engineers in Vicksburg, Miss.

The shock attentuating concrete was considered to be in the research stage two months ago during the buidling's construction. However, its capabilities have since been proven.

The SACON prevents ricochets and spalling while capturing rounds, according to officials from Waterways. Waterways ran the initial live-fire test and assured that the material is reliable.

To date the walls have successfully absorbed the rounds from a battalion of soldiers. But Wabnitz said the building has required some repairs.

"The building was designed to replace panels as they wore out. We were tasked to put in the replacements. So far we've only replaced one panel," Wabnitz said.



Because the SACON is cost efficient replacing, the panels are considered part of the advantage of the material.

"This (Military Operations in Urban Terrain) building is the prototype design for use by the Army worldwide. Every soldier should now have the opportunity to use it," Wabnitz said.

Soldiers can stay out of trouble, still enjoy off-duty time

by Rodney Conatser
The PENTAGRAM

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — At the end of a hard day's work, many soldiers rush to the barracks to swap their uniform for jeans and a "party-naked" T-shirt. Rushing out once again to be a part of the civilian world, they forget who they are and what they represent. That can lead to trouble.

Trouble comes in many forms, and getting in trouble off post can happen in any number of ways.

According to Capt. K. David Stafford, operations officer for the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations, Law Enforcement Division, Washington, D.C., the 10 pitfalls soldiers should particularly avoid off-post are:

● Drugs. Strictly illegal, drugs are readily available in today's society. Not only are they available, but soldiers make more money today than they did 20 years ago, so the potential for buying drugs is greatly increased, Stafford said.

● Alcohol. Stafford labeled the irresponsible consumption of it an inherent problem. When a soldier goes off-post and drives under the influence, he gets into trouble with the local authorities as well as his chain of command.

● Solicitation of prostitutes. Even though it's "the oldest profession in the world," the solicitation of prostitutes is illegal in many places. Not only will solicitation of prostitutes get you into legal trouble, but contracting diseases will directly affect your combat readiness.

● Finances. Stafford said it is the most common problem for the military, and ranges from writing bad checks to buying a new car that costs more than the soldier can afford. Getting into such a debt hurts not only the soldier's credit, but also looks bad for the military.

One way soldiers can get into trouble with their finances is going to establishments that keep allotment forms on their premises. Stafford said this type of business organization can be found near most military posts, and it sells such things as televisions and stereos. When not figured into the budget, an allotment such as this can cause problems for the soldier.

● Being unfamiliar with your environment. Stafford said this problem is found at any post that is near a large city. This could include a soldier picking a fight in a bad part of town, or a soldier moving to such an area. Even though the rent may be cheaper, it can cause more problems than it's worth.

● Compromising yourself socially. This usually refers to a soldier attending a party when he knows that some of the people there will be doing drugs or some other illegal activity. "Saying 'I was just there' isn't good enough — you've got to leave," said Stafford. "The saying that you are in the military 24 hours a day or at least representing the military 24 hours a day is true. For some reason, some people have lost that thought."

● Gambling. In some areas, it's illegal, Stafford said. It also can get a soldier into a lot of trouble besides costing him a lot of money.

● Conflict of interest. This can include many things and is covered by Army Regulation 600-50.

Conflict of interest may include trying to sell products from a civilian organization to people in your office. Stafford said it can cause problems because someone could claim a supervisor used his position to influence a subordinate's decision to buy the products.

● Crimes against people and/or property. This is the broadest category and includes everything from fighting to stealing, rape, etc.

● Contributing to the delinquency of a minor. It is against the law to purchase alcoholic beverages for anyone underage. Also, sexual misconduct with minors is a serious offense.

These crimes usually involve both the civilian and military police, according to Stafford, and can subject a soldier to punishment under civilian law, as well as under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Philippine native sees move to U.S. Army as opportunity

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Sgt. Noriel Deleon is the kind of soldier who is entrusted by his commander with many tasks. In his duties as armorer in Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, he is responsible for the accountability and security of more than 400 weapons. When the company embarks on training exercises, he fills the roles of team leader, supervisor and even platoon sergeant.

Deleon attributes much of his success to his values of self-discipline and self-confidence that he developed while growing up in his native Philippines.

As a young man, he studied martial arts and advanced to a third-degree black belt in karate in 1973. He was also a martial arts instructor to American servicemen based in the Philippines.

But, after reaching those goals, he turned his attention to his college studies, acquiring a degree in business administration, and to his ambition of becoming a soldier.

After serving as an officer in the Philippine army, he made his decision to leave his country for the United States. Shortly after arriving here in 1983, he enlisted in the U.S. Army in a chemical military occupational specialty.

"I think that life can be measured by an individual's experiences and accomplishments," Deleon said. "I enjoy the military because I am always learning."

Deleon explained that when he was entrusted with the job as armorer, he was "grasping in the dark" to learn how to perform his new duties.

"I didn't have much experience with weapons," he said. "But my commander gave me the chance to use my own good judgement and common sense, and the improvements began to be noticed. I am not comfortable in an environment that is disorderly."

Deleon's arms room demonstrates that he wishes to set the example.

"The Army puts much emphasis on training, but how can we 'win the war' if we have equipment that is not properly maintained," he said. "This is true for vehicles and other equipment as well as weapons.

"It takes self-discipline to do our daily tasks. Even though the boss isn't checking up on you every day, you have to do your work."

"I jumped at the chance to get GEICO no-hassle car insurance!"

"Finding the money to insure my car used to be a problem. But not with GEICO. I started coverage with just a low down-payment . . . and I can handle the convenient payments. That took the hassle out of car insurance for me. And I like these other GEICO advantages."

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

Due to the frequency of shoplifting during the holiday season and the devastating consequences that this offense can have on those involved, I would like to take this opportunity to share some facts with you.

Shoplifting is rarely done out of necessity. In many cases, the offenders actually have sufficient funds with them, but choose instead to shoplift.

During the 1985 holiday season(October through December), there were 37 shoplifting cases handled by the Fort Benning Military Police. So far in the 1986 holiday season (October and November), there have been 46 cases processed on post.

Soldiers convicted of shoplifting by a courts martial can receive a bad conduct discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, and up to six months confinement at hard labor.

Juveniles guilty of shoplifting are processed and then released to the Juvenile Court in Columbus. The judge usually sentences a juvenile to probation for from one to three years. During the probation period, the juvenile offender must be accompanied by a parent or guardian in order to enter a retail outlet. The loss of exchange or commissary privileges is automatic for all shoplifting offenders.

There has been a noticeable increase in shoplifting cases involving retirees and their dependents. I would like to emphasize that retirees are, in fact, subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice and the same administrative sanctions as active duty personnel. Family members, whether their sponsors are active duty or retired, will be referred to the Magistrate Court for prosecution. When you think about it, the possibility of success is not worth the reality of failure.

Sadly enough, the real victims are the honest shoppers who can't afford the cost incurred to them by the increase in prices which results from the losses sustained by the exchange system.

Store detectives, military police, and other Exchange employees are constantly on the lookout for violators, but the key to a successful crime prevention program is you, the exchange customer. If you see or suspect a shoplifting crime, report it. Don't be afraid to get involved. In turn, it will help you and your fellow servicemembers to continue to enjoy comfortable prices and services.

For more information or assistance, please call the Crime Prevention Section, Provost Marshal Office at 545-7115 or 545-7154.

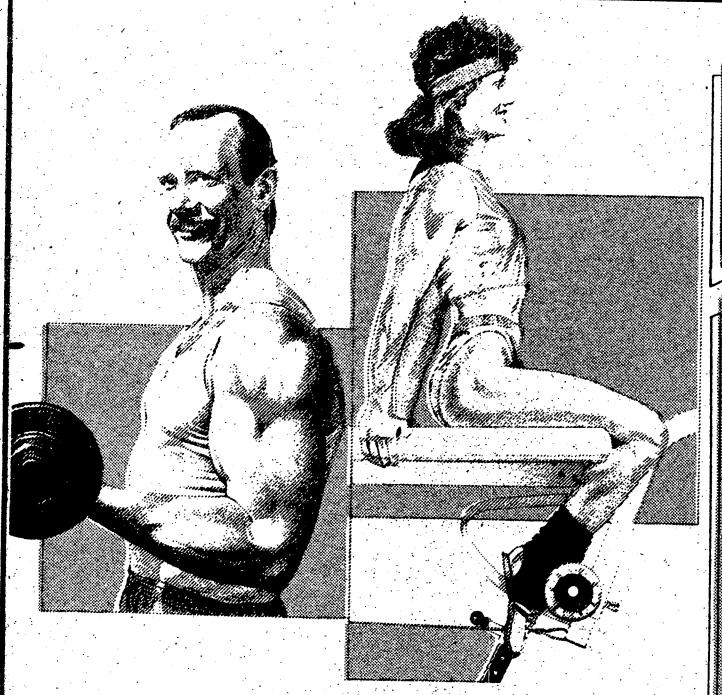
Legal Assistance

Q: Since I am in the military and move a lot, I often have trouble with my mail. I have been living in an house for eight months, but I still get calls from the tenant of my old apartment that a stack of mail for me has arrived in his mailbox. Also, I get mail about twice a week for the old owner of our house. I sometimes get checks in the mail, so this obviously gets me upset. What should I do?

A: First of all, you need to ensure that you complete postal change of address cards every time you move. These are available at the post office.

Additionally, make sure that you inform anyone that you receive mail from regularly (bills, magazines, checks) of your new address. Most business organizations have change of address notification forms that are sent out with correspondence.

However, this doesn't always work. If you have a mailman who works your route every day, talk to him about the problem. You may find, however, that your route is not run by a single mailman working five days a week, but by a different mailman every day, who never learns the route properly. Your best bet, therefore, may be to go the post office and fill out a Consumer Service Card.



If the problem continues, send a letter to the Postmaster, Certified Mail, Return Recipt Requested, Restricted Delivery, and follow it up with a phone call in about seven days. If the problem is still unresolved, you can write to:

Speeding, drinking, driving add danger to holiday traffic

U.S. Army Safety Center

Year after year, more soldiers are killed in privately owned vehicle accidents than in all other accidents in all other Army activities. The present season between the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays is a time of increased travel. The dangers of travel are greatly heightened during this time because of more people on the highway, speeding, drinking and driving, and failure to use safety belts. Most Army POV accidents, deaths, and injuries involve one or more of these factors.

Army accident records show that in most fatal auto accidents, the driver is speeding. This includes not only exceeding the posted legal speed limit but also driving too fast for road and weather conditions. The posted speed limit isn't necessarily the safe speed. Road and weather conditions, time of day, and the amount and type of traffic all have an effect on safe speed. Slower speeds give drivers more time to react, and the lower the speed, the lower the crash forces in case a crash can't be avoided.

Drinking and driving is the No. 1 cause of fatal POV accidents. Soldiers aged 17 to 25 years are most often involved in these accidents. Most of these young people are new at both driving and drinking — a deadly combination.

Alcohol not only slows a person's reaction time but also affects his judgment. Drinking drivers tend to become reckless. They lose their ability to recognize hazards. They become a threat to themselves, their passangers, and to others.

At least half the soldiers killed in car wrecks last year would have lived if they had been buckled in. More people are killed from being thrown around inside the car or being thrown out of it than from the crash. In fact, the chances of being killed are 30 times greater if a person is thrown out of the car. Accident records show that soldirs wearing safety belts are 70 percent less likely to be killed or seriously hurt than unbelted drivers. And shoulder harnesses reduce the chance of injury up to 90 percent.

Service says MREs safe, fit for Army consumers

by Lisa G. Fetterolf
Army News Service

After six months of extensive testing of the Meal, Ready-to-Eat, the U.S. Army Veterinary Service has declared that all MREs are wholesome and fit for consumption.

The MRE, which replaced the C ration as the Army's primary field ration in 1982, is a complete meal, with food items sealed in flexible pounches instead of cans.

The Army suspended use of the ration in May as a precaution after a member of the Veterinary Service discovered some leaking and swollen pouches during a routine quality-assurance inspection at an MRE assembly plant. The U.S. Department of Agriculture increased inspections at MRE processing plants and the Veterinary Service temporarily assigned additional personnel to the assembly plants, further inspection revealed holes in some of the flexible food pouches.

Use of the MRE was suspended for several months so that adequate testing could be done to confirm the integrity of the flexible pouch and the wholesomeness of the food, said Tom Milks of the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics at The Pentagon. "A team of government and industry representatives visited all MRE processing plants and determined that manufacturing and handling procedures were the oprimary contributor to the whole problem," Milks said. "Corrective measures have already been taken to eliminate these problems."

Other field rations — A rations (fresh foods that require refrigeration), B and T rations (canned foods and some dehydrated meat products that do not require refrigeration) and boxed lunches — were used instead of MREs until those packaged in 1983, 1984 and 1986 were cleared for consumption in June.

"We'd like to remind soldiers to continue to check the condition of all food items before eating them," Milks said.

CHAMPUS tests plan for home health care

Army News Service

The Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services has begun a two-year test program to share the cost of home health care for active-duty servicemembers' families in the United States.

CHAMPUS officials explain that the test program, begun this summer, includes the rendering of home health care to dependents of deceased active-duty servicemembers also.

The program aims to compare the economy of home health care with that of inpatient hospital care, said Sheila Hamrick, a spokeperson at CHAMPUS headquarters in Aurora, Colo.

In order to take part in the program, which include payment for authorized homemakers and home health aides, the prospective beneficiary must have advance CHAMPUS authorization, Hamrick said. She noted that the requests for approval of home health care that is already underway will be denied under the special two-year project.

It is the applicant's responsibility to how that all medically necessary services and supplies required by the CHAMPUS — eligible patient can be provided less expensively at home than in a hospital setting. For this purpose, a blank form is used by the hospital, in coordination with the physician and the home health care agency, to list estimates of comparative costs. Hamrick said the CHAMPUS cost-sharing for the approved care will cover only that time in which the patient would have stayed in the hospital. Also, the patient must not be covered by other health insurance for services of a homemaker or home health aide.

The approved duration for each home-care case usually would be 30 days, Hamrick said. She pointed out that "custodial conditions" are exempt from the program. Such a condition, she explained, entails long-term care, with the realization that the patient is unable to function on his own outside a controlled setting.

The test program allows all approved home health care costs, except those that exceed the CHAMPUS-determined allowable charge for physician services, to be shared in full by CHAMPUS. "Active-duty families still are responsible for their normal inpatient cost-sharing, which currently amounts to $7.30 per day," Hamrick said.

All other services, such as speech therapy, skilled nursing care and homemaker services, are paid as billed, so long as the amount doesn't exceed that charged to the general public. When durable medical equipment and repairs are ordered by a physician as necessary for treatment in the home, their cost is included in the cost-sharing process. They include such non-expendable items as respirators and specially equipped wheelchairs. Requests for funding such equipment, Hamrick said, must first consider the most economical means of acquisition — i.e., whether to rent or to purchase.

Servicemembers desiring to take part in the program may direct their requests to the following address: Chief, CHAMPUS Benefit Authorization Branch, Aurora, Colo. 80045-6900.

According to Hamrick, each request must include the following entries:

- Date of admission to the hospital;
- Date home health care will begin;
- Diagnosis and a history of the current illness;
- The patient's present condition;
- A detailed treatment plan;
- The patient's prognosis;
- Physician's estimate of how long the patient would need to stay in the hospital if home health care were not available;
- Itemized cost of inpatient care per day, versus the itemized cost of home health care per day. (All drugs, therapist, supplies, equipment needs, professional services and institutional charges must be included);
- A signed copy of the most current CHAMPUS claim form, including itemized statement of charges;
- A detailed, proposed management plan for home health care;
- Names and addresses of all providers of care and alternates;
- The make and model number of equipment and accessores that will need to be purchased; named and addresses of suppliers, also;
- The itemized cost (both rental and purchase price) of equipment and accessories that will be prchased or rented.

Persons having questions about the program may call the benefit authorization branch at (303) 361-8526.

Reserve forces plan one-day exercise to test readiness

by Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

It's not over until it's over. That's what members of the Individual Ready Reserve will find out when the services order them to active duty for one day of testing and evaluation during 1987.

The recall is expected to involve about 225,000 soldiers, 40,000 sailors, 30,000 airmen and 24,000 marines.

The Individual Ready Reserve, often inaccurately referred to as the "inactive reserve," is but one major category of the Reserve forces liable for call to active duty to augment active and Reserve forces in time of war or national emergency.

"By law, all members of the Individual Ready Reserve can be required to perform scheduled active and inactive duty training," said Air Force Col. Francis M. Rush, acting deputy assistant secretary of defense for Guard and Reserve manpower and personnel.

Historically, the Department of Defense has applied the mandatory training requirements only to the 1 million members of the Selected Reserve.

However, according to Rush, there has been a lot of concern about the readiness of the other members of the Ready Reserve within the Department of Defense and the Congress.

Rush said the Department of Defense ordered the one-day duty for members of the Individual Ready Reserve to meet the requirements of the law and regulations to ensure that they are available for mobilization and that each meets required wartime standards.

"The services also want to make sure the members know what their obligations and entitlements are as members of the Individual Ready Reserve," said Rush.

Each member of the Ready Reserve is required to make sure that all organization records pertaining to him or her reflect an accurate and current mailing address. Rush said the law also requires Reservists to inform their service of any change in their physical condition or any other factor that would adversely affect their ability to be mobilized.

Each service will have its own mobilization plans regarding how members will be notified, what will be accomplished during the screening and where the recall will be conducted. The services are preparing implementation plans for the effort.

Several services indicated the recall will be conducted at established Reserve centers around the country and that the recall would be accomplished as efficiently and cost-effectively as possible.

The Department of Defense has also left it up to the services to exclude certain members from having to participate in the recall. For example, those members who have separated from active duty within a few months of the recall date or who have performed other training during the year could be excluded.

If, on the appointed date a Reservist does not report for active duty as ordered, under law he could be considered as an unsatisfactory participant.

The services, according to Rush, will also make their own policy concerning what to do about those Reservists who do not report. One possibility is a change in the character of the person's discharge.

Rush noted that once a member is released from active duty or the Selected Reserve, he is transferred to the Individual Ready Reserve. Members are not discharged from the service until their military service obligation is completed.

Another option available to the services is recalling the member to active duty for training.

"What the Department of Defense and the services really want to do with this annual reporting requirement is make sure the members of the Individual Ready Reserve are available in case the country needs them and they knew what their status and responsibilities are," said Rush.

Avoid 'hot press' when ironing BDUs

The Bayonet staff

The temperate, desert and hot weather battle dress uniforms were not designed to be pressed.

To improve the appearance of the uniforms, the policy was changed to permit pressing at the discretion of the commander. This policy has not changed.

Hot head press equipment used in conjunction with washing develops holes in the pocket flaps.

Recommended methods of cleaning are by dry cleaning or washing, drying and hanging on hangers. If pressing is desired, it should be done by hand.

Now is a good time to remember child safety. Over the past four years, the Consumer Product Safety Commission investigated three deaths and received reports of more than 32 other deaths where children younger than five years old strangled on window cords.

Most of the children were under age two, and were in cribs that had been placed near the pull cords of window coverings. These accidents can occur when a child is alone in a room for only a short amount of time.

Cords should be tied at or near the top of the window covering and crib should be kept away from windows. A little forethought can protect a curious child from tragedy.

A Preretirement orientation will be conducted Jan. 20 in Marshall Auditorium at 8 a.m. Make plans now to attend.

If you have 18 years or more active duty time, you should be planning for your retirement, even though you may continue on active duty for the next few years, laws concerning retirement benefits change often and sometimes drastically.

This program is not intended for personnel who have already submitted their retirement application, however, you are also invited to attend.

The Army Retirement Services Program suggests that you plan for your retirement "through choice, not chance." We request that you pre-register by calling the Retirement Services Office at 545-5369 or 545-2715. Uniform will be duty uniform or appropriate civilian attire.

Role models

Drill sergeants set example for new soldiers

Story and photos by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Drill sergeant — the term evokes an immediate response from soldiers everywhere. The response may be respect, pride or fear, but troops never forget the man or woman who first taught them what it is to be a United States soldier.

Any troop can tell you, a drill sergeant knows everything there is to know about drill and ceremony, the proper wear of uniforms, the M16 — everything the new recruit must learn to become a professional soldier.

Despite what some soldiers think, drill sergeants aren't born 6-feet tall with spit-shined boots. At least at Fort Benning, they're made, at the Cadre Training Center.

"We're always looking for good soldiers to train as drill sergeants," said SFC Donald Fenton, chief instructor at the center.

Instructors at the center are excited about their jobs and the curriculum has been constantly changing to make it the best they can offer.

Fenton said the course is now nine weeks long, compared to the 11-week block it used to be, and soldiers are now taught each block of instruction at the same time. "It used to be self-paced, with students working at their own speed, but now everyone is at the same point in the program of instruction," he said.

The center graduates 10 classes a year, with an average size of 35 students per class. The shorter POI was instituted in July, and the course was changed to a 100 percent live-in school for the entire nine weeks.

Students get up at 4:30 a.m. and bed check is at 11 p.m. That makes for some long days for both students and instructors, but they use every minute mastering the course work, Fenton said. "It's demanding, but there's a reason for it," he said.

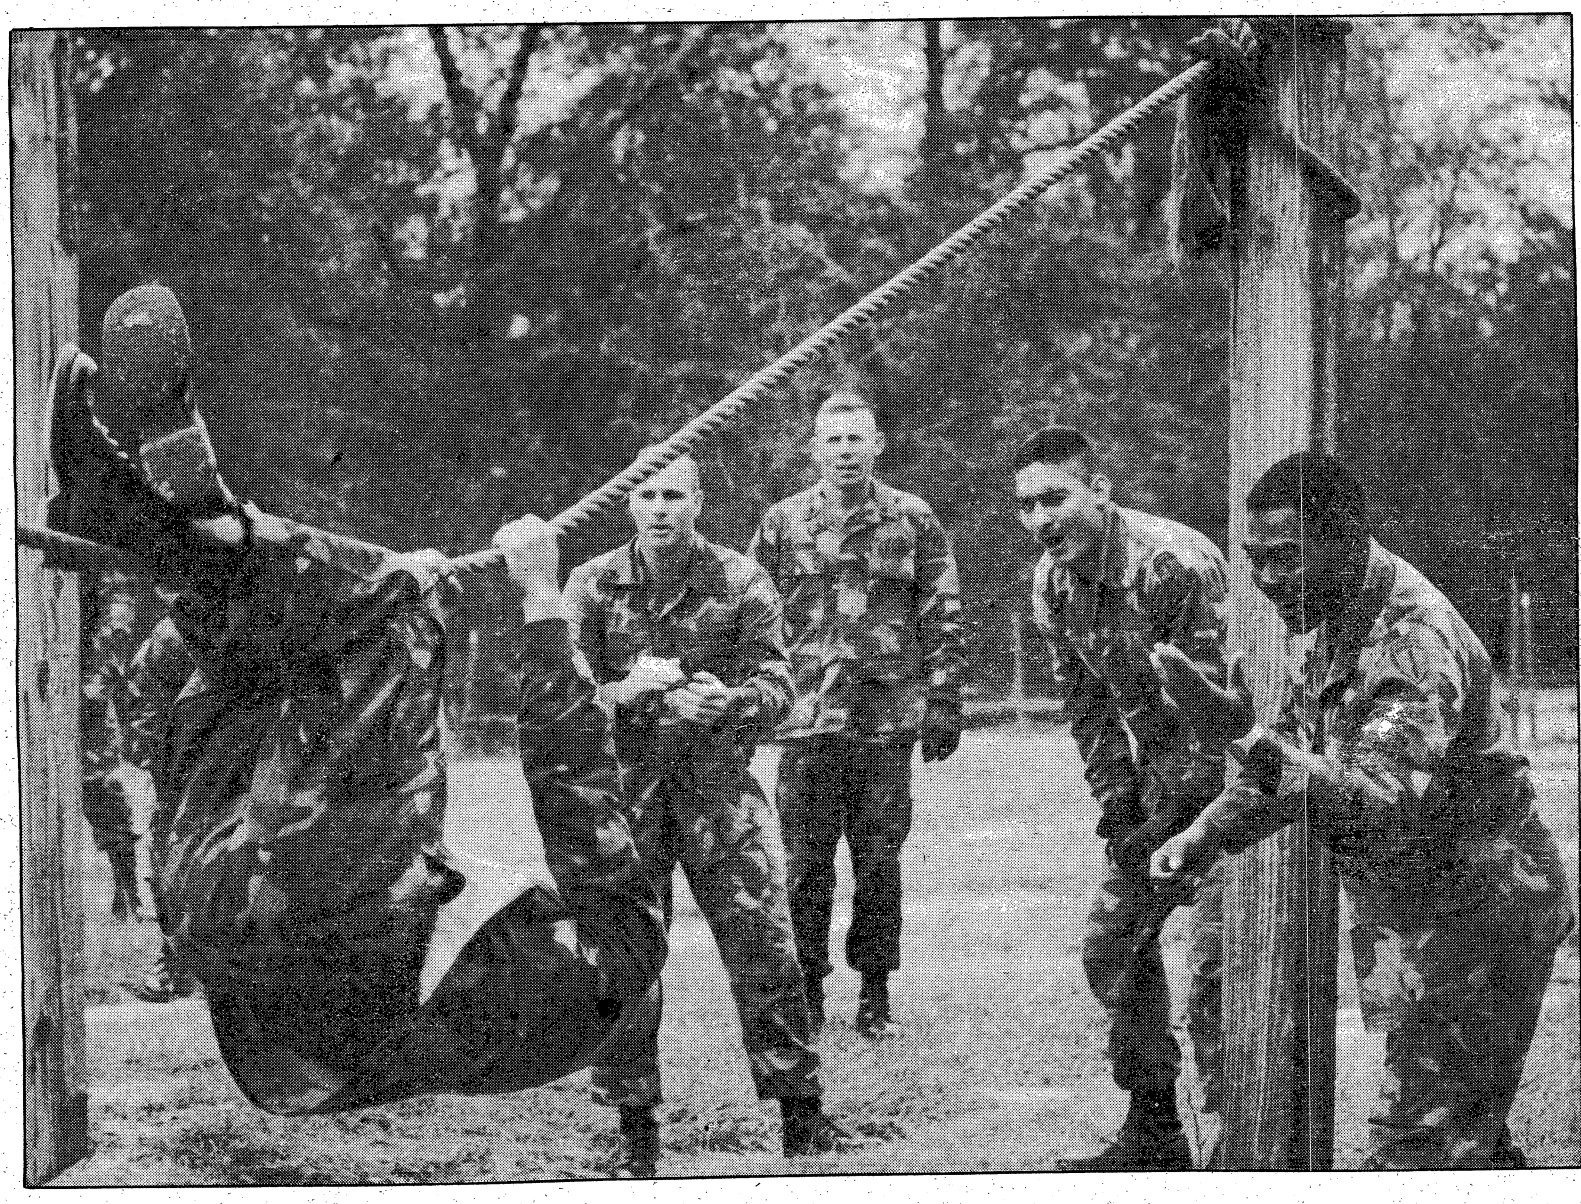
"Once our students graduate, they are drill sergeants and they are prepared to go right to work training new soldiers. Their only adjustment is finding out how the company they're assigned to does business."

The objective at the CTC is to help students master the fundamentals of individual training and handling of initial entry soldiers.

Instructors use Training and Doctrine Command's Insist/Assist training philosophy.

Fenton explained: "This means that the drill sergeants teach the new soldiers how to do a task by doing it themselves, then are right there while the soldier practices the task, offering encouragement and suggestions."

Because they are held up to the new soldiers as professionals, drill sergeants must meet strict role model standards, Fenton said.



The physical standards for drill sergeants are the same as the Army's, but students are encouraged to exceed those standards if possible. "Our goal here is that drill sergeants run five miles in 45 minutes," Fenton said. "Some of the drill sergeants in he field are doing five miles in 41 minutes."

Students who don't quite measure up to the physical standards get a chance to improve themselves. "We have master trainers who tailor a fitness program to each soldier's weak areas, and the soldier may also do additional physical training on Saturdays," Fenton said.

Students must score at least 180 on the Army Physical Fitness Test, but Fenton said the last two classes have been averaging 250. "They will still graduate as long as they meet the Army standard, but we encourage them to exceed it because of the example they will be setting once they are out there training new soldiers," he said.

Students at the center are taught how to manage stress, how to counsel soldiers, tactics; everything they'll need to pass on to the new troops. Leadership skills are

Vigil at Tomb of Unknown Soldier part of sentinel duties at Old Guard

The Bayonet staff writer

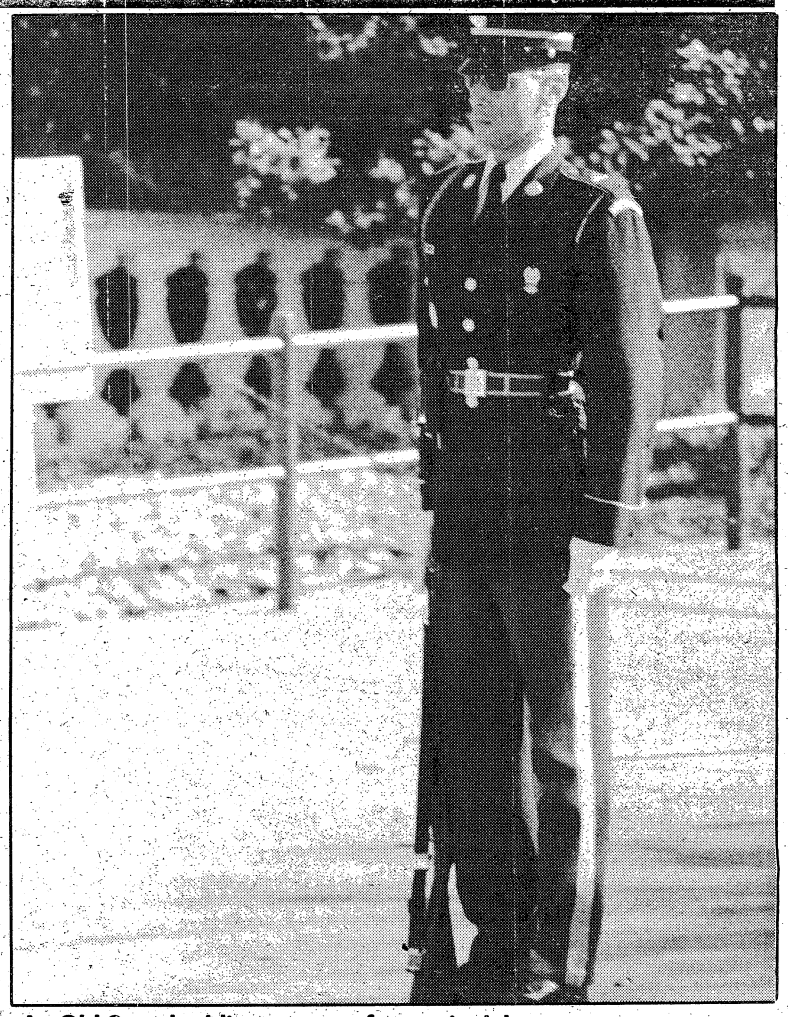
Arlington National Cemetery — 21 steps, "snap, click, pop;" the stone-faced sentinel, all spit and polish in his Army "dress blue" uniform, executes a facing movement while maintaining his 24-hour vigil at The Tomb of the Unknown Soldier; resting ground for soldiers known only to God. Buried there are unknowns from World Wars I and II, the Korean War and Vietnam.

The sentinel is a member of the "Old Guard" 3rd United States Infantry, the oldest active infantry battalion in the Army. The sentinels at the Tomb are only one of the several special units within the Old Guard.

Sgt. Eric Kirschner, an Old Guard recruiter, is currently assigned to the Reception Battalion here. His job is to sign up new troops for the unit.

Kirschner gives each group that comes through the Reception Battalion an "Old Guard" briefing. Those who express an interest in the unit are then screened individually. Soldiers have to be at least 5 feet, 10 inches tall and have a General Technical score of 100. "Our standards are pretty high," Kirschner said.

According to Kirschner, a soldier cannot have a physical profile, (except for eyes) must be a high school graduate or have a General Education Diploma, they also cannot have any record of drugs or driving under the influence, and must have at least a three-year enlistment.



The United States Army Drill Team, Fife and Drum Corps in authentic revolutionary war uniforms, and the caisson platoon, the only unit in the Army that still uses horses for military purposes, are all part of the Old Guard. The possibilities for a soldier to shine are endless.

Often referred to as "The President's Own," the Guardsman perform ceremonies all over the nation's capitol. Their home is Fort Myer, Va., with one company located at Fort Lesley J. McNair, in the heart of Washington, D.C.

Parades and funerals are the primary function of the battalion. Of the seven companies assigned, five of them have a color guard, casket team and firing party. The other companies are Headquarters and Reconnaissance respectively.

The chance for advancement into the special units gives the soldiers that added incentive to excel.

Kirschner is only recruiting new troops, but others who are interested may write: 3rd U.S. Infantry, The Old Guard of the Army, Building 249, Fort Myer, Va. 22211 or phone (202) 696-3149, Autovon: 226-3149/50/51.

Holiday tour of homes planned in Columbus' Historic District

The Bayonet staff writer

John and Miriam Lang were looking for a place to call home when they discovered the house at 745 Second Avenue in Columbus.

Lang was born in Germany and his family moved to the United States when he was 11. His parents decided to return to Germany when Lang was 18, but he wanted to stay in America, so he joined the Army. He met his wife Miriam, while on "R&R" in Australia during one of his four tours in Vietnam.

After spending 22 years traveling where the Army sent them, Mrs. Lang said owning the house in Columbus made them return here to retire.

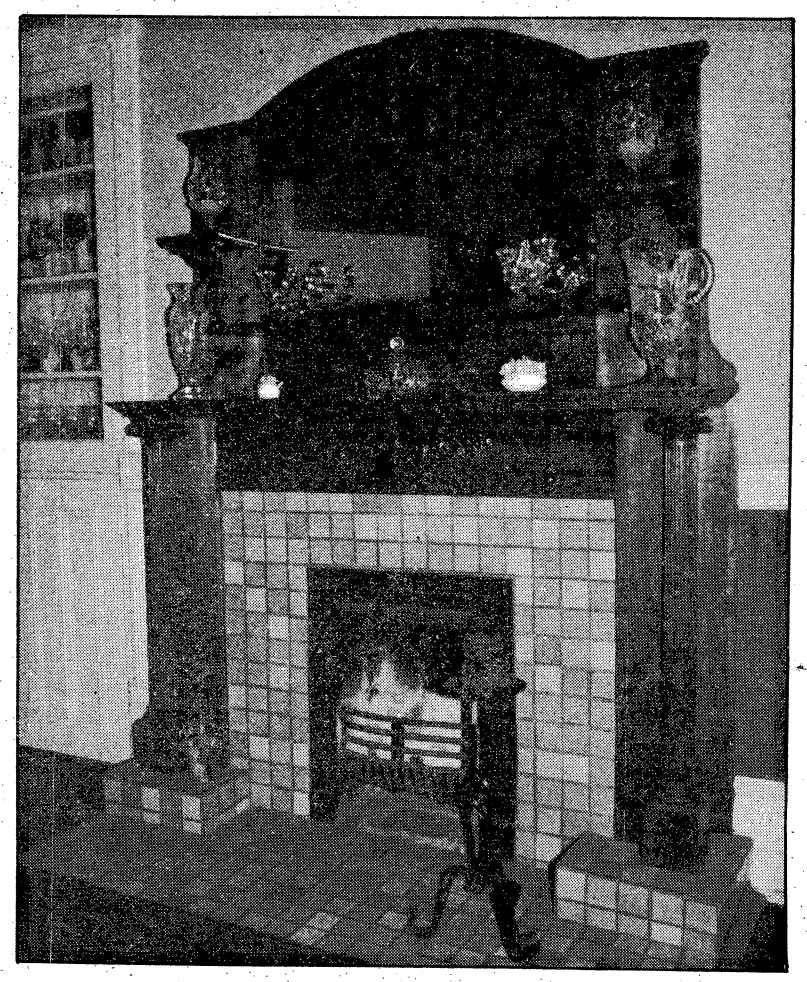
"By that time, we had so much blood, sweat and tears put into the house, and a lot of money, that we decided to stay," she said.

They bought the house in early 1981, and it took seven months of renovation before they could move in. Then the Army sent them to Germany for three years in December 1981, so the renovation project was put on hold.

Since their return to the states in December 1984, they have slowly gotten the house repaired to suit them.

Lang did some research and discovered that the house was built in 1892 by the Connor family, who owned a dry goods store on Broadway. They lived in the house until sometime in the 1930s, he said.

But it was hard to imagine how the house had looked when the original owners lived there, seeing the state of neglect it was in when they first saw it, Mrs. Lang said.



"We took out a loan for $54,000, which was just enough to make it safe to live in," she said. "That paid for a new roof, which it desperately needed, new plumbing and wiring, and new plaster walls."

The Langs are still working on the house, having just finished remodeling the kitchen this week. Apologizing for the dust still to be swept up from that work, Mrs. Lang said, "When a house has been neglected for 100 years, you can't get it together in one or two."

Mrs. Lang has furnished the home in a mix of styles, but it all works well together. In the living room a pair of Victorian style chairs flank a Victorian table. The Duncan Phyfe reproduction sofa looks comfortable beside the Italian marble coffee table.

The Lang home, along with nine others in the Columbus Historic District, will be dressed in all its finery Sunday, as residents open their doors to the public for the annual Christmas Tour of Homes.

The tour, sponsored by the Historic District Preservation Society, will begin at the old Rankin Hotel at 1004 Broadway, and will also include stops at Bludeau's Goetcheus House and the Hilton for refreshments.

The Langs discovered this Victorian style mantel in someone's garage, refinished it and installed it in their dining room.

Benning dining facilities get paise from inspection team

Judges looked at all aspects of operation

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's dining facilities have been under the professional eyes of the Food Management Assistance Team from Fort Lee, Va. for the last two weeks.

The team, comprised of one civilian and six soldiers, is required to inspect all Army dining facilities within the continental U.S. and all overseas facilities annually.

While here, the team looked at 33 dining facilities, concerning themselves with food preparation, sanitation, administration, nutrition awareness and accountability.

"Overall, the Fort Benning facilities are well-managed. The post is currently entering into a large contracting-out phase to civilian food service personnel. There are growing pains we noted. It's tough to transition, but everything looked good," said Lt. Col. Dick Gates, the team chief.

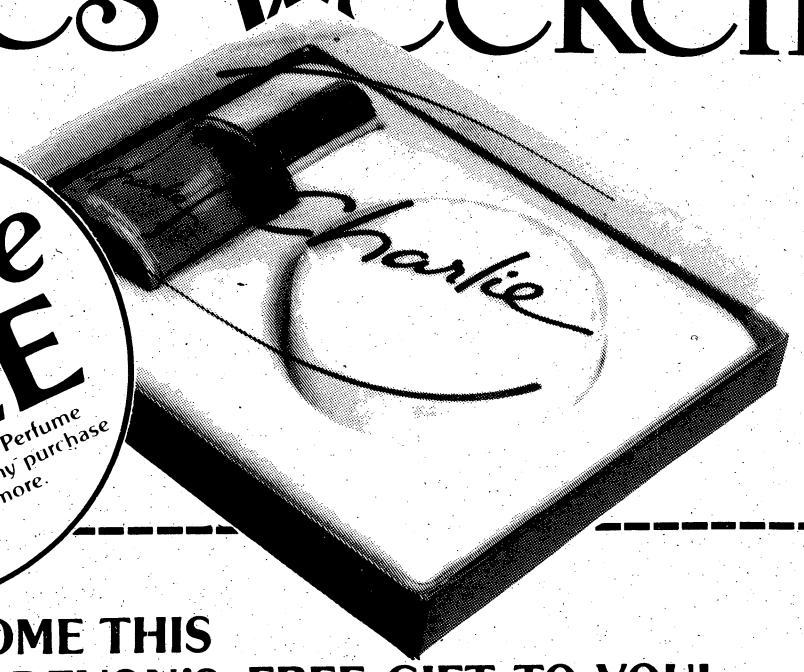
The team is broken down into two-man groups, with each group looking at different dining facilities. They spend about two hours inspecting food preparation, administration and sanitation and then conduct an outbrief with the facility manager. The team goes over any deficiencies found and what the manager can do to improve the operation.

"Right now, the big emphasis is on nutrition awareness and accountability. From what my teams have reported and from what I've seen, Fort Benning looks good," said SGM Andrew Shepherd, the team's non-commissioned officer in charge.

Shepherd also lauded the dining facility personnel for their attitudes.

"The cooks and supervisors obviously care about putting out good, quality food. They have a positive attitude, which is very important," he said.

The team, as a whole, agreed that the only across-the-board problem with Benning's food service is personnel training.



"The post needs to provide more formal and informal training for its food service personnel, military and civilian. That will be one of our major recommendations, more personnel training," said H.T. Hill Jr., the team's Food Service System's Analyst.

Follow industry safety guidelines when buying toys this Christmas

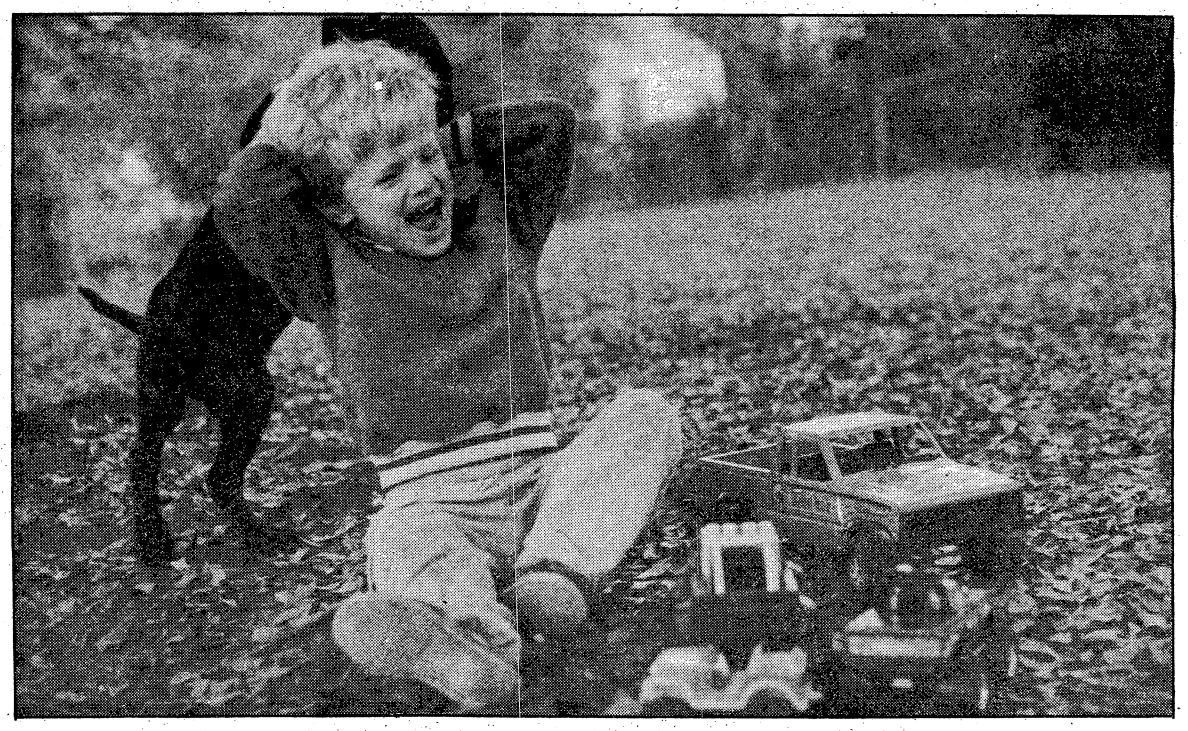
Story and photo by Ann M. McDonald
The Bayonet staff writer

Tis the season to be jolly — and safe.

Christmas is approaching fast and with it come gifts. Specifcally, it is the time to give children toys. Are the toys you're buying safe?

Many people are not aware of the guidelines for buying safe toys. According to the Texas Society for Blindness, more than 5,000 children in Texas alone, suffered from serious eye injuries last year as a result of injuries from toys.

The National Safety Council has compiled a fact sheet that offers advice to help parents choose appropriate toys for their chldren.



According to the Council, toys should be non-toxic and have smooth rounded edges. Materials that are fireproof and resist shattering and splintering are also suggested. The Council recommends that toys be well constructed so they won't come apart at the first tug and if the toy is electrical, it should have the United Laboratories marker on it.

Delores Berry, a local toy store owner said, "In our store we recommend the more traditional toys and try to avoid faddish trends."

Berry added that, in the long run, basic blocks and toys that help children use their imagination will be the ones they use most.

Another important consideration is choosing toys appropriate for your child's age. During the first year, the age of awareness the Safety Council recommends brightly colored toys that squeak

Keeping promises important to credibility, establishing trust

by Bob Reese
Martin Army Community Hospital chaplain

March 11, 1942 was a dark and desperate day on the island of Corregidor in the Philippines. Throughout the Pacific a cunning and powerful enemy was advancing and gaining momentum. Now they were marching into the Philippines, and surrender was inevitable.

The brilliant and courageous soldier, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, had only three words to say as he began his retreat from the Philippines to Australia. Those words were: "I shall return." Nine days later in the Port of Adelaide, MacArthur closed a speech with the following sentence: "I came through, and I shall return."

Two and a half years later on Oct. 20, 1944, after arriving safely at Leyte Island in the Philippines, he made the following statement: "This is the voice of freedom, General MacArthur, speaking. People of the Philippines, I have returned!"

This is an impressive account of credibility in our age of the "Credibility Gap." Unfortunately, it is a fact that we cannot always believe what we hear. People don't always do what they promise they will do. We sometimes doubt the promises and statements of public officials. Creditors and businesses often have trouble getting people to pay bills they promised to pay without a warning or a threat. Ecclesiastes 5:5 advises us: "Better not to promise at all than to make a promise and not keep it."

How good is your word? As MacArthur demonstrated, a good leader can be trusted to keep his promise; and following his example, we need to be sure that our word is as good as our bond.

For Christians, there is a more profound note. Christ has also made a promise. This great promise is recorded in the Gospel of Matthew 28:20 when our Lord says: "And I will be with you always, to the end of the age." With Christ there is no credibility gap. If he says it, you can count on it. In fact, he has never broken a single promise; and it's comforting to know that nothing in life, including death, can stand in the way of our Lord's promise to be with us and to care for us all along life's journey.

As the Christmas season approaches, we prepare to celebrate this "Great Promise" that God through Christ, will always be with us to comfort us and to fill our lives with hope. And if he says he will always be with us, you can count on it!

Chapel briefs

Public invited to tree lighting

The Fort Benning community is invited to the Christmas Tree Lighting ceremony Tuesday at 6 p.m. at the Field of the Four Chaplains.

Scripture readings, congregational singing and choir anthems will accompany a re-enactment of the birth of Christ.

Refreshments will be served in the chapel center annex immediately following the ceremony.

Afterwards, the 283rd Army Band will perform its annual Christmas concert in the Infantry Center Chapel at 7 p.m.

A nursery will be provided for both events. Call 545-2050 or 545-2359 for more information.

TIC chapel annex site of breakfast

A Christian Prayer Breakfast is planned for Tuesday at 6:30 a.m. at the Infantry Center Chapel annex.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) John Allen, post chaplain at Fort Rucker, Ala., will be guest speaker. Allen will speak about how the chaplains and religious community at Fort Campbell, Ky., responded to the air crash in Gander, Newfoundland. For reservations, call 545-2050 or 545-2359.

"This is Christmas," a Christmas cantata by John Rasley and Phyllis Michael, will be performed by the 197th Infantry Brigade choir at the Kelley Hill Chapel Sunday at 11 a.m.

Children to perform Christmas musical

The children of the 197th Infantry Brigade will perform "Super Gift, A Christmas Musical Fantasy," Sunday at 7 p.m. in the Kelley Hill Chapel.

The musical is about toys that come alive and learn about God's greatest gift to earth — his son Jesus.

Christmas program is 'party for Jesus'

The Main Post Sunday School's Christmas program is planned for Sunday at 6 p.m. in the Religious Education Center, Building 229.

The subject of the program is "A Birthday Party for Jesus."

All students and parents are encouraged to attend. For more information, call Mr. Putnam at 545-2366.

Chapel celebrates special youth day

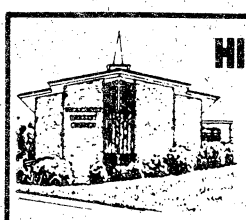
The Lavoie Manor Chapel recently celebrated an Appreciation Day for the Youth of the Chapel. The service was conducted to recognize the Youth Choir and encourage other young people of the chapel and community to get involved in Chapel Activities.

The choir was organized more than a year ago under the direction of Valerie Wedlock. Regena Ross is the present director.

Spanish Catholics celebrate Eucharist

Catholics celebrate the Feast of Our Lady of Guadalupe, the Patroness of Latin America Dec. 12. The Spanish community will celebrate the Eucharist at noon in Sightseeing Road Chapel.

Family focus of films



The "Focus on Families" film series continues at the Kelley Hill Chapel today at 10 a.m. and 7 p.m. Today's film is on "What Wives Wish Their Husbands Knew About Money, Sex and Children."

Familiar faces among winners at annual Faith Christmas Race

Story and photos by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

In its eight year, the Faith Christmas Race, which was run Saturday, brought several familiar faces to the starting lines and the winners' circles.

More than 600 competitors turned out for the race, many returning with previous experience in the Faith Run.

The opening one-mile run saw 14-year-old Hunt Dickson, last year's winner, repeat the victory finish at 5:06.

Sharing the spotlight in the one-mile female division was his sister Heather Dickson, 11, racing to a 6:09 first-place finish.

The one-mile leaders broke the six-minute mile with ease, as Jerry Hillhouse, 14, took second at 5:18, followed by Kent Bagley, 14, with a time of 5:29.

Shannon Easter charged behind Heather Dickson at 6:31, while Missy Valentino claimed third at 7:03.

The two-mile event hosted several highly competitive runners.

John Stewart, who swept last year's competition, edged Robert Brooks, winner of the recent Infantry Museum Run, by seconds, crossing the familiar plane at 9:41.

Eric Hart, an upcoming 17-year-old runner, was just off the leading pace, taking third at 10:31.

Susan Houlton smoked the two-mile female division at 11:57. The closest competitor, Jackie Phillips, was almost two minutes behind at 13:47. Close on her heels was Marcia Herbst at 13:52.

The distance run, a five-miler, again sparked a tight finish, as Stewart and Brooks ignited the course.

Once again Stewart edged Brooks by only fractions, clearing the course in 25:40 while Brooks timed in at 25:43.

The third—place finish went to John Kelleher, also a repeat top finisher, at 26:04.

In the female division, Alicia Livsey raced to a victory at 31:23 as she battled against Gaye Milling at 31:43.

Heather Dickson, after sweeping the one-miler, finished third at 34:46.

Roy Moore, a 6th Battalion player, goes in for a layup.

Reception Battalion claims win in recent intramural basketball

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Brigade, was in control Monday, as they held on to a one-point lead with 13 seconds on the clock. But, when Anthony Phillips made a bad pass, the delay offense broke down and James McGee moved down court for the easy lay-up, giving the Reception Battalion a 44-45 victory.

In its first season win, the Reception Battalion trailed through the majority of the contest, but stayed close with Anthony Stone firing 18 points in the heated battle.

The biggest lead in the game was a seven-point margin, as the 6th Bn. pulled ahead 21-14, seconds before going into a 21-18 halftime.

The Reception Battalion opened the second period of play armed with Stone extending his firing range to 30 feet, as April Elliot, the league's only woman player, kept the offensive boards clear.

The game was locked up more than seven times throughout the contest. But, with 8:40 left on the clock, McGee broke the tie, giving the Reception Battalion it's first lead of the night.

McGee scored 13 critical points in the victory.

Roy Moore, the 6th Bn.'s high scorer with 18 points, would immediately answer the Reception Battalion threat, again taking the edge.

The seesaw leads continued through the final minutes of the game as the 6th Bn. went ahead 44-43 with 53 seconds remaining.

The 6th Bn. quickly went into a delay offense. But Jimmy Wright stopped the clock at 21, fouling Festus Hayes. The 6th Bn. returned to a four-corner delay offense.

The McGee steal with 13 seconds remaining, was the crushing blow.

As seconds ticked off the clock, the 6th Bn. stood in center court in disbelief, allowing valuable seconds to beat away.

Finally stoping the clock at five seconds, the 6th Bn. took a final desperate effort to strip the Reception Battalion.

A fired up Reception Battalion defense would not allow it, however, and held onto a narrow 45-44 victory.

Fort Benning Orienteering Club correspondents

As the practice season for the USAIC Orienteering Championships advances toward March 17 and 18, more elite training methods will be needed to both physically condition the orienteer and refine skill levels. The "15x15x15" exercise was made to fill the bill.

The U.S. Marine Corps Physical Fitness Center at Quantico, Va., designed the 15x15x15 for the Marine Orienteering Team, who used this workout regularly in the early 1970s. No more is needed for this training exercise than a map and a narrow piece of terrain, which is from 500 to 1,000 meters deep, depending on the amount of contour.

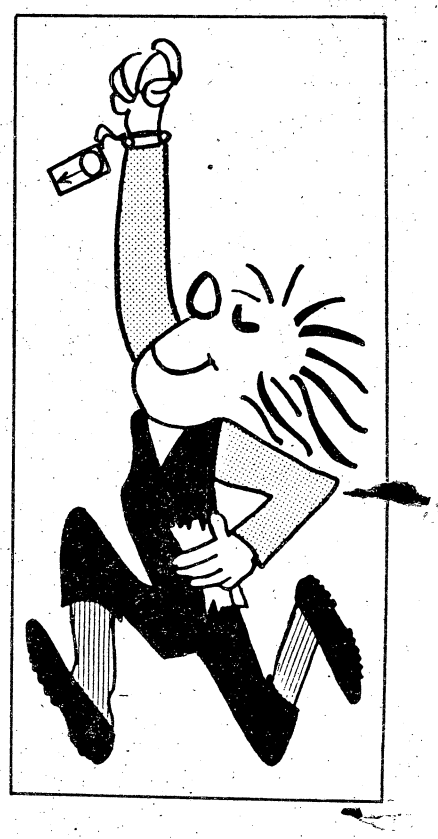
To begin, start at a known point. Run as hard and fast as possible for 15 seconds. Stop for 15 seconds, locate yourself and catch your breath. Repeat seven times going out from the start, then turn around and use the same format to return to the start. Returning will take eight repetitions since fatigue will shorten the distance run between stops. The total number of repetitions will be 15. The whole format then is: run for 15 seconds, rest 15 seconds and repeat 15 times, 15x15x15's!

What can be learned from this exercise:

- That you can run and navigate faster than you believed possible.
- That you can approximate your location by using large features, such as reentrants (draws), streams and hills.
- That keeping up with precisely where you are, throughout a run, is inefficient. (Periodic relocations are fine until you get within 100 meters of a control).
- That terrain often looks quite different when approached from another direction.

This exercise can be used by groups of five or six or by an individual for training. When in a group, take turns leading the pack . . . no matter how tired you are, you will run faster if you are out in front.

A good way to check your progress is to pick similar sections that have the same linear catching feature, such as a road, stream or powerline, and which is at approximately the same distance from the start. It may take nine repetitions to get to that feature during the first week, however, it may only take six or seven repetitions to reach the same feature at the end of the sixth week.



The USMC orienteering team used this workout regularly but only the coach carried a map. He would ask a different person to show him where they were located, at each stop.

As conditioning improved, the coach introduced "hillreps" as part of the workout. The group would divide into halves. Half of the group would take an uphill position, in relay formation, and face downhill. The other half of the group would take up the same stance about 50 meters apart, facing uphill. At the signal, the lead person in the downhill group would sprint uphill and tag the lead person in the uphill group, who would then sprint downhill.

These are excellent conditioning workouts, akin to doing intervals on the track. Since they are strenuous aerobic exercises, they should not be repeated more than once or twice a week with at least two days of less strenuous, recovery time in between.

Remember when you begin conditioning exercises, begin slowly and work up. "No pain, no gain" is a great way to spend time in traction.

Updated field manual outlines good physical training methods

The Monitor, Fort Bliss Texas

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — With the emphasis on physical fitness comes a responsibility to prevent injury. Revisions to Field Manual 21-20 have brought questions from the field about the continued use of exercises found in the old FM 21-20. A number of the old conditioning drills are considered potentially injurious. Following is a list of those exercises with a brief explanation of why they were eliminated.

The exercises in question fit primarily into four major categories relative to the potential injury site: knee, shoulder, back, and those exercises that emphasize rapid ballistic stretching.

Exercises that cause knee flexion greater than 90 degrees should be avoided. The following were eliminated from FM 21-20 for this reason:

- bend and reach.
- 8-count push-up.
- squat stretch.
- squat thrust.
- mountain climber.
- knee touch walk.

Shoulder exercises should avoid extremes of combined abduction and external rotation. Exercises that may cause shoulder problems and have thus been eliminated from the revised manual are:

- the horizontal ladder.
- war clubs.
- wheelbarrow race.

Exercises that combine rotation and flexion of the lumbar spine may cause low back pain; additionally, excessive loading of the low back can increase low back pain. Exercises of concern in this area include:

- trunk twist.
- body twist.
- lunger.
- leg circular.
- forward bender.
- straddle jump.
- V-up and touch toes.
- leg spreader.
- the inclined plane.
- rowing.
- toe touch walk.

Stretching exercises should be done slowly, using static rather than ballistic movements. The following exercises were found to be ballistic in nature:

- squat bender.
- bottoms up.
- legs over.
- squat stretch.
- toe touch walk.
- bottoms-up walk.
- toe grasp walk.
- Indian wrestling.

The new FM 21-20 includes exercises considered to be safe by the Surgeon General for inclusion in the Army physical fitness program. Commanders in the field should refrain from using exercises not included in FM 21-20 without first consulting their master fitness trainer, installation health fitness facilitator, the Soldier Physical Fitness School and/or the Surgeon General's office.

The thrust of the new FM 21-20 is to gain the maximum training effect using safe conditioning methods. In particular, the Army is concerned with developing adequate cardio-respiratory endurance and muscular strength and endurance. The exercises eliminated provided little conditioning effect to improve these areas, and had the potential of causing injuries.

The new FM 21-20 gives the unit commander great flexibility in developing a fitness program. Sufficient exercises and techniques are included that will improve the combat readiness of the unit with an acceptably low risk of injury.

For more information, contact Capt. Scoville in the Surgeon General's office at Autovon 227-2448.

For information from the Soldier Physical Fitness School contact Lt. Col. Hoffmanor or Capt. Lucoski at Autovon 699-4580.

Golf tourney attracts competitors from throughout Georgia, Alabama

The Bayonet sports writer

It was humid on the greens at Follow-Me Golf Course Nov. 18, as temperatures reached the mid-80's. But the heat did not hinder the play of Jenny Holder, who claimed the crown in the Ladies One Day Invitational with a score of 78.

The shotgun start tournament was attended by 88 ladies, representing 11 clubs. Clubs came from various parts of Georgia and Alabama. Althogether, four local clubs, Green Island, Bull Creek, Columbus Country Club and Fort Benning, competed.

Prizes were awarded to 33 winners, with Holder also receiving a special prize when hitting the longest drive on the nine-hole.

Special prizes also went to Mary Tidmarsh, closest to pin on No. 16, and to Millie Smith, with 26 putts on the course.

A luncheon was offered at the Fort Benning Country Club, where Ray Wells, pro from Perry Country Club and George Cliff, Fort Benning Pro, were invited guests.

598th Maintenance Co. claims post flag football championship

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group beat the odds, as they continually fought back to claim the U. S. Army Infantry Center Football Championship in a 1-0 victory over the Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 2nd Training Battalion, The School Brigade in the season wrap-up last month.

The 598th dropped the 36th Engineer Group Championship to Company C, 43rd Engineers, suffering their third regular season defeat.

But in the playoff brackets, the 598th team was unstoppable . . .

Until championship night, when they met defeat at the hands of HHD.

In the opening seconds of the first game, HHD scored first when Michael A. Huston stepped into a lateral pass, taking the interception 55 yards to the touchdown.

The 598th could not respond until the final drive of the half, when quarterback Ronald Bray connected with Dudley Harden just before the half.

Bray executed a perfect two-minute drill to bring the 598th within striking range.

But, the drive was kept alive by a costly HHD penalty. With no time on the clock, 598th had one more play, resulting in the Harden score.

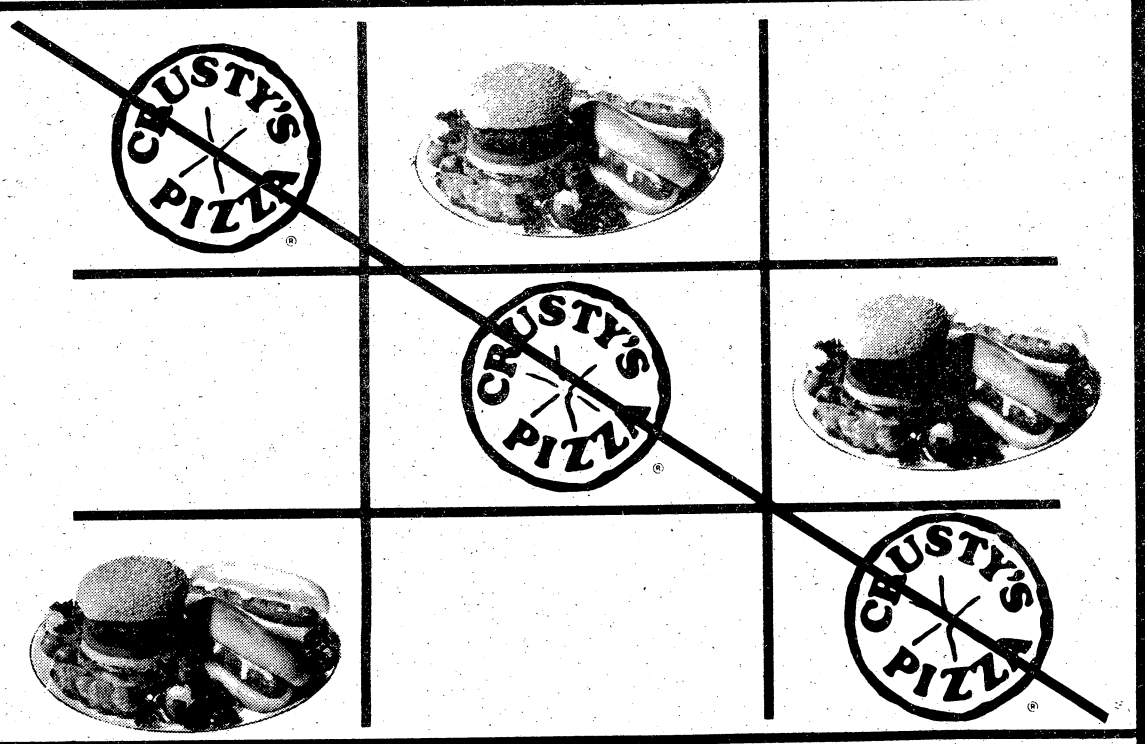
The tieing pass was broken up by Houston, with an endzone interception, sending HHD to the locker room with an 8-6 lead, a margin that would hold throughout the game.

When the teams clashed in the second half, there would be no more regular period scores for the night.

HHD had crossed the first hurdle, winning the first game 8-6.

The reprieve was temporary, as both teams took the field in the second game, armed with defensive battle gear.

The 598th generated an air attack as Bray found Calvin Deason open on three of four plays in the opening drives. When the HHD secondary started to key up on him, Bray crossed the field to pick up Arnold Benjamin.



The score remained deadlocked 0-0 through the regular period, with the defensive battle being fought out on the line and in the secondaries.

HHD took first possession on the overtime penetration, where once again it seemed that the evenly matched defenses would not allow severe penetration.

The greatest ball movement came on 598th's third posession, when Bray hit James McDowell with a short pass and had an additional 15 yards tagged on due to a HHD holding penalty.

The 598th Maintenance Company held on to rally a 1-0 championship victory.

Most backaches result from neglecting affected muscles

by Heinz H. Johnson
Air Force News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — One problem with physical fitness in America is the common backache.

It's the largest single cause of lost work-hours in business, and accounts for $1 billion a year in lost output in industry and another $250 million in workmen's compensation claims. Yet, most back pain is simply a consequence of neglected muscles.

Exercise physiologists believe that more than 75 percent of all lower back pain is caused by poor abdominal muscle tone and inadequate flexibility of the lower back. Dr. Hans Kraus, a back specialist, takes it one step further. He believes 99 percent of all back problems can be attributed to too much tension and too little activity.

Flexibility is one of the four basic components of any total fitness ad health program. Flexibility is the ability to moe body parts in a fluid-like fashion over a full range of motion without stiffness and tightness. Keeping a sufficient degree of flexibility is not only important to general health and well-being, but any successful exercise performance depends on flexibility to reduce injuries to ligaments, muscles, and tendons.

Bob Anderson, author of Stretching, says stretching is the important link between the sedentary life and active life. It is especially important to runners, cyclists, tennis players, or participants in other strenuous activities that can promote tightness and inflexibility.

Stretching is easy — but there is a right way to do it. Done correctly, it should be a relaxed, sustained stretch. It should feel good, not stressful. Unfortunately, too many people stretch to the point of pain, or they bounce up and down like yo-yos. These methods do more harm than good.

Stretching should reduce muscle tension, increase flexibility, promote circulation, prepare the body for strenuous activity, and lessen the chance for injury.

Being a skilled athlete or in top physical condition is not necessary. Here ae a few guidelines to help make stretching safe and enjoyable:

- Relax. Assume a comfortable position and do not thini of anything that creates tension or tightness.
- Stretch at a suitable pace and level. Any feeling of tension should leave as the position is held.
- Stretch slowly and steadily. Fast, jerky movements strain the muscles. Hold each stretch for 10 to 30 seconds.
- Do not stretch too far. Stretch the muscle gently, but not to the point of pain. You should feel mild tension in the muscle.
- Continue to breathe rhythmically and slowly. Exhale with each stretch.

And, regardless of the fitness activity, stretching is essential. It needs to be done before exercise to prepare the body for more vigorous activity. It also needs to be done after exercise to cool down and prevent muscle soreness.

Regular stretching should be a part of everyone's lifestyle. The more often it's done, the earlier it will be to build a healthy lifestyle on the foundation of aerobic fitness.

Airborne

airborne so I know what the requirements are," she said with conviction.

The dedication and determination it took to get McCall through Airborne School came easily for the 15-year Army veteran. "I have no doubt I'll make it," she asserted during the second week of training. "So far, it has been the most challenging and most difficult thing I've ever done in my life. But, everyone is being really supportive."

A lot of the support she speaks of comes from a mentor. Retired Lt. Col. Jake Privette, who was the commander of troops when McCall was stationed at Fort Jackson, S.C., has provided her with tremendous motivation. "Since I decided to go airborne, he has encouraged me," she said.

In the true spirit of support within the airborne community, Privette was on hand yesterday to pin on McCall's wings at the graduation ceremony on Fryar Drop Zone. "They were his first wings he got when he graduated from jump school," McCall said with a proud smile breaking across her face.

Saint sudden death.

When gunpowder made its appearance in the Western world, Saint Barbara was invoked for aid against accidents resulting from explosions — and since some of the earlier artillery pieces often blew up instead of firing their projectile, Saint Barbara became the patroness of artillerymen.

Saint Barbara is usually represented standing by a tower with three windows, carrying the palm of a martyr in her hand. Often, too, she holds a chalice and a sacramental wafer and sometimes cannons are displayed near her. On present calendars, the feast of Saint Barbara falls on Dec. 4.

During the recent Saint Barbara's Day celebration, field artillery officers in the 197th conducted a traditional ceremony during which they fired two howitzer cannons.

The officers toasted to the occasion with traditional "artillerymen's punch" during the feast. Also, the officers must strictly adhere to the traditions of the ceremony.

Tragedy

drunk," Kyser said. "Any soldier with a drinking problem should be refered to an Alcohol and Drug Education Center before his habit gets him in trouble with the law or worse."

"Crimes against property increase at this time of the year also," Kyser explained. "Christmas is a time of buying gifts to give to family and friends. While most individuals use the 'buy' program others prefer the 'no one around, no money down, steal program.'

"A favorite target is the car. If you have to store gifts in a car before mailing or presenting them, don't make the fact known that you have them in the vehicle. Ensure that the gift is out of sight and covered up."

Both buying and selling increases over the holidays, so be careful.

"Don't believe something-for-nothing offers. You get what you pay for. Be suspicious of high-pressure sales efforts," Kyser warned. "Take your time; think about the deal before you part with your money."

The 197th wants this to be a safe and accident-free holiday, so each individual soldier should be alert and responsible over the Christmas holidays.

Toys

that are heavy or that have small pieces should be avoided.

Two-year-olds are very investigative and like blocks, push-pull toys and rubber squeak toys that are washable. Toys with small pieces should still be avoided and are not really recommended until a child is older than 6.

At 3, children are more explorative and like to color. The big fat crayons are best for their small hands. Stable kiddie cars or tricycles are also good toys for 3-year-olds.

When children reach 4, they are known to be very imitative and small brooms or carpet sweepers allow them to be just like mom. Toy telephones, clothes for dressing up, and doll buggies are also suggested by the council.

At ages 5 and 6 children are very creative and modeling clay, paints and coloring books, to aid their imagination.

By age 7, children have enough dexterity to put together model airplanes. Dolls with clothes and accessories are also good for that age.

Eight-year-olds and up are specializing in their own skills or tastes and hobby materials for their particular interests are recommended.

Although good recommendations, these are not rules. Always remember, each child is different.

Center

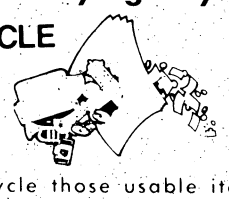
stressed throughout the entire nine weeks.

SFC Thomas Herman, an instructor at the center who spent 15 months as a drill sergeant, said he tries to share his experience on "the trail."

"It's a rough job due to the family separations and long hours required," Herman said. "And we try to help them (prospective drill sergeants) not only learn how to teach their troops, but also get them mentally prepared for the job."

He compares being a drill sergeant to having a child. "You have to teach the new soldiers everything; how to make beds and shine their shoes, the Army way," he said.

Before the new soldiers learn to run, the drill sergeant has to teach them to crawl, then walk, Herman explained. "It's important that the drill sergeant not skip things or take shortcuts, because the new soldier has to learn the Army way of doing things, by the book," he said.



SSgt. David Rodriguez, who spent 16 months as a drill sergeant, said one reason he became an instructor was to make sure "we put the right drill sergeants out there with the troops.

"The main attribute a drill sergeant has to have is the right attitude," Rodriguez said. "He has to be out there with a purpose, to train soldiers, and not see it as just another job. There has to be a dedication to the task at hand.

"It's not just another job because the drill sergeant has a lot of responsibility. He's turning civilians into productive soldiers," he said.

Local hotel complains about off-duty soldiers

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Rowdy behavior by a few soldiers during off-duty hours is causing trouble for one local business.

According to Jeff Krisan, property manager at a local hotel, there have been several incidents requiring his staff to take action.

"We've investigated guest complaints about soldiers' behavior several times," he said. "There has been no destruction of property, it has basically just been conduct, which is the hardest thing for us to control."

The conduct included soldiers cursing, whistling at female guests, knocking on room doors and being excessively noisy. Soldiers have also been reported climbing on balconies, throwing duffle bags into the pool and checking out without paying their bills.

In at least one incident, police had to be called in to assist the hotel's security staff.

"We have a duty to protect the privacy and safety of all our guests," Krisan said. "We only call the police when we feel someone is in danger."

He said it's not happening every weekend, and that the hotel has a lot of good customers from Fort Benning. "We are interested in having their business and everyone else's business," he said. "We treat all our customers the same and they all get the same chances."

SFC Gary R. Leeds, assistant operations sergeant at the Military Police Activity, said an average of four to six soldiers are picked up each weekend by Columbus police for a variety of violations.

During a recent weekend, soldiers were arrested off post for driving under the influence, drunken and disorderly conduct, criminal trespass and drinking in public. Leeds said that amounted to four arrests, which is about average. "It varies if it's a payday weekend," he said.

And troops needn't think that they can be arrested without it coming to their commander's attention. "We pick up a civilian arrest report at 2 and 4 a.m. and notify commanders immediately if their soldiers have been arrested," Leeds said.

Once a soldier goes the court, the judge assesses the fine and punishment, and then commanders have the option of taking further action under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

According to Charles Howard, a paralegal specialist at the Staff Judge Advocate's Office, commanders have a variety of actions they can take against soldiers.

"They can take administrative action as a result of a civilian conviction, in accordance with the appropriate regulations," Howard said. "The commander cannot charge them with the same thing they were charged with downtown, but there are other actions that can be brought against them."

Upholding professional image responsibility of all

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Whether we like it or not, everyone at Fort Benning represents the Army. It doesn't matter whether you're a soldier or civilian, people outside federal service tend to clump us all into one category — "the military."

But when people are talking to civilians like me, they don't always get the best picture of the military world.

Having never served in the Army, my knowledge of soldierly customs and skills has some definite gaps in it.

For example, I still confuse the oak leaves on lieutenant colonels and majors. After serving a while as a Department of the Army civilian, you'd think I would have mastered what any private learns in basic training. But those gold and silver clusters still confuse me.

It just makes more sense to me to have the higher ranking person wear gold, and reserve silver for the lower rank. Silver is cheaper; you can find this out for yourself at any jewelry store.

This is one of those "don't confuse me with logic" arguments that I've lost many times before. Because as any soldier can tell you, it doesn't matter what the market prices of gold and silver are. The Army says silver is better than gold, therefore, it is.

It's not a big thing, but it just shows you how dumb I am about some aspects of the military.

Fortunately, in my job it's an acceptable shortcoming because I'm not in the Army. Since I don't have to salute anybody, I don't need to know their rank.

But the problem is that a lot of people think I am a soldier.

The minute I say I'm from Fort Benning, people automatically assume I'm a soldier — despite the fact that I am always wearing civilian clothes and clearly identify myself.

They're always asking me where I've been stationed, how long I've been in the Army, what my rank is. Frankly, it's embarrassing to have to tell them that the most exotic place the Army has ever sent me wasn't Grenada, but Destin, Fla.

The point is that I'm held accountable as a representative of the U.S. Army.

It's a responsibility that I take seriously, for several reasons.

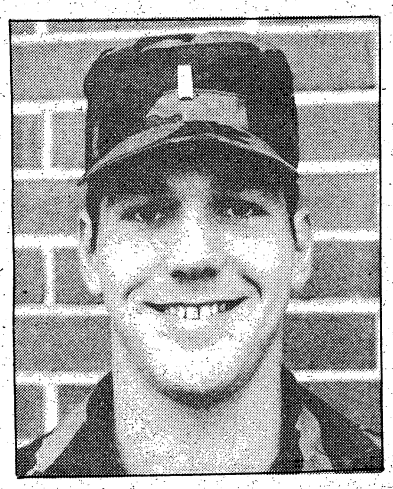
I haven't served in Grenada, Vietnam or Korea, but I know soldiers and retirees at Fort Benning who have. Out of respect for them, I believe the least I can do is project a positive image of the Army.

We all see bad representatives in the news every day. The headline never reads "Man wrecks car in drunken driving spree;" it always says "soldier" or "Fort Benning."

All it takes is a few headlines like that and the public is convinced Fort Benning is a haven for alcoholics driving death traps.

The public doesn't get to read about the 1,000 dedicated, hardworking civilian employees, they get a story about the one who was caught stealing ammunition.

Despite the multitudes of sharp, professional soldiers we train here, the one who makes the headlines is the troop caught shoplifting.

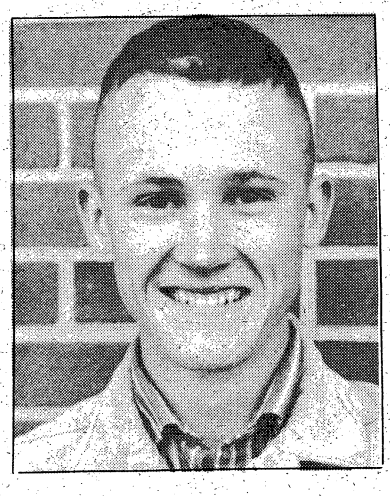


With this in mind, I always try to put my best foot forward when I'm out on an assignment. While I don't have any exciting war stories to tell people, I can refer them to soldiers who can tell the exciting stories.

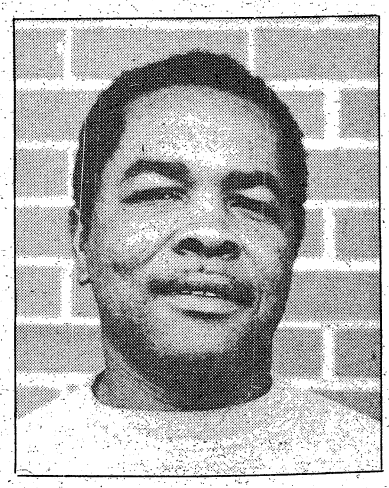
But forgive me, sir, if I don't salute you. Is that major, oh, excuse me "Colonel."

Dawn Kilpatrick is on leave. Her regular column will resume Dec. 31.

Various voices



What do you do to project a good image of the Army, on and off duty?



2nd Lt. William Roll, 22nd Company, Infantry Officer Basic Course - "I try to keep my appearance sharp and I try to conduct myself in a military manner to show that I am proud to be in the United States Army."

SFC George Quintanilla, Headquarters Company, lst Battalion, The School Brigade - "I try to maintain my professional image at all times. I am a soldier 24-hours a day and I feel I'm representing the Army every time I'm off post."

PFC John Hislop, 3rd Ranger Battalion - "Being a soldier is a 24-hour-a-day job; so, I conduct myself in a military manner at all times. I think if you set the example, hopefully other people will follow."

SFC James Townsend, 23rd Company, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade - "I always try to look neat and clean and I treat the members of the surrounding community with respect."

lst Lt. Lisa Whitehurst, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, l97th Infantry Brigade - "I ensure that I wear my uniform properly and I try to be courteous to everyone I meet."

Following safety rules makes holidays more fun, memorable

by Douglas Wakefield
Fort Benning Military Police correspondent

At this time of year, we start to think of family, friends, loved ones and having a good time. Some of us also make plans to go home for a few days. During this time of the year there are a lot of parties. We at the Fort Benning Military Police Activity want you to enjoy yourself this holiday season.

By observing a few simple safety rules, it can be a great time for you and all of the people you share the season with. If you plan to make a long trip, ensure that you are well rested before you leave and if you find yourself getting sleepy along the way, pull over and rest for a while. The short time you take out may save you a lot of time in the long run.

Remember that drinking and d driving don't mix. In adition to the possibility of becoming invovled in a serious traffic accident, there are also very stiff fines that you will receive if you are caught driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

If you plan to go out and "have a good time," and know you will be drinking, use the Designated Driver Program. Appoint one person who will stay sober and ensure that everyone else gets home safely.

From Dec. 20 to Jan. 4, 1985, there were 35 reported traffic accidents on Fort Benning, five of which were alcohol related.

If you go out and drink and don't have a designated driver, call Safety Cab. The free service is now available and will run through Jan 1 from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. daily. The phone number is 323-0110.

When you drive, always watch out for the "other guy," even if you have the right of way. He may be drunk, tired or he may not be looking where he's going.

Have a safe and enjoyable holiday season. Be careful and remember to wear your seat belt.

Drunken driving conviction not worth what offender pays

Provost Marshal

I'm sure that the concern over drinking and driving at this particular time comes as no surprise to anyone. We all know that holidays are the times when driving under the influence becomes more frequent. However, too often, we don't give much thought to the part we play.

Let's take a serious look at drunken driving, and, after taking the time to think about this, let's take proactive measures to make our roads safer and injury free.

It's no secret that a certain percentage of people drive drunk regularly and that an additional percentage, because of a lack of foresight, also drive drunk on occasion. One such occasion is the Christmas-New Year holiday season. Regardless of whether or not you drink and drive regularly, or on occasion, take heed!! The effect that DUIs have on our nation and our individual communities is tragic.

Perhaps you have lost a loved one, or know someone who has had a family member killed in a traffic accident where alcohol was involved. If so, you know the pain and great sense of loss that is felt. Spread the word. It is not a light matter!

In the law enforcement agencies, we see the devastation quite regularly. Believe me, we never get used to it. Whether it is a child or a senior citizen that is injured or killed, it is a needless waste of a human life.

If you are lucky, you will be caught before you seriously injure or kill an innocent victim. If you are caught, you can expect severe punishment.

If someone is caught driving under the influence on post and it is the first offense, he can expect to receive a one-year suspension of driving privileges, a $300 to $1,000 fine, and possible confinement from 10 days to one year. For the second offense within a five-year period, a $600 to $1,000 fine is mandatory, with a 90-day to one year period of confinement. For the third offense within a five year period, the sentence is a $1,000 fine and a mandatory period of confinement of no less than 120 days and up to one year.

A check with the Columbus Police Department reveals that driving under the influence off post in Georgia will result in the same punishments with only minor variations, which can be determined at the judge's discretion.

I'd like to leave you with this thought. If only drunken drivers were killed in our nation's traffic accidents, we probably wouldn't be as concerned.

Transportation officials offer tips for spotting dangerous drivers

Army News Service

Accidental injuries and deaths during the holiday season are as legendary as the holiday festivities themselves.

Victims of traffic accidents, for example, make the headlines so often during this period that the public almost takes the loss for granted. For this reason, one sees an increase in public-service announcements pleading for more caution and concern on the part of everyone during the holidays.

One such message comes from transportation safety officials. They offer some tips on how to spot drunken or drugged drivers and how to respond to the threat posed by their conduct. Such a driver probably is behaving in one or more of the following ways:

- Making unusually wide turns or staddling the centerline or lane marker;
- Weaving and swerving;
- Speeding excessively or travelng very slowly;
- Stopping with no apparent cause;

As you thus get involved positively in a drunken-driving situation, you not only help reduce the potential for further mishaps on the roadways but also help protect all concerned from the thoughtless, dangerous acts of such drivers.

'Fly boys' get taste of smoke at live-fire demonstration

Sensational! is what comes to mind in describing the 29th Infantry Regiment live-fire exercise conducted last week on Redcloud Range.

Approximately 277 students — representing 17 different nations — of the Air War College were there to observe.

Only the M-2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle was fired. However, the 29th, with the assistance of the 197th Infantry Brigade, made available to the students practically every weapon system in use by the modern infantryman. The M-1 Abrams and the self-propelled howitzer were included.

The event centered on the live-fire exercise presented by Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The soldiers paraded their Bradleys across the range exhibiting many of the weapon's capabilities. Some of those included were the 25mm chain gun, 7.62 coaxial machine gun, Tube-launched, Optically-sensed, Wire-guided missile system and 5.56 firing port weapons.

As if in real combat, members of the 4th platoon staged a support-by-fire mission for a Bradley company in a deliberate attack.

"Prepare to move!"

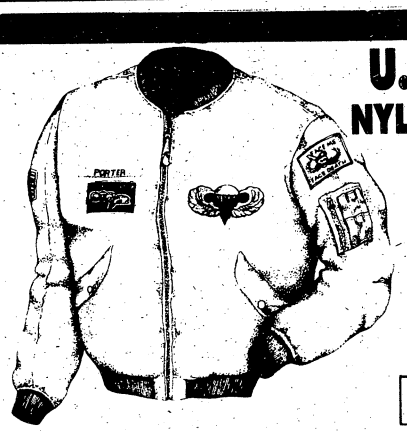
"Move now!" came the command over the radio.

One vehicle moved out, positioned itself and blasted away down range at the objective.

With barely a chance to swallow from all the excitement at hand, the company's commander, Capt. George Lennon, directed his audience's attention to more maneuvering.

Another Bradley appeared.

Upon command, it sped across range, spurting its smoke capability, hiding yet another Bradley that popped into view.



Within minutes, the exercise was over, but it left a lasting impression on its audience.

Says Capt. Richard Lampkin, project officer, Fort Benning Protocol Division, "They were impressed with the Bradley system and the lethality of the vehicle."

The students were here for one day and also received a briefing on Ranger capabilities and missions, according to Lampkin.

He added, "They were also impressed with the Rangers they talked with during the Rangers-in-action demonstration."

All services of the United States Armed Forces were represented and Japan and Israel were among other nations here.

Tankers blast away 'enemy' during recent live-fire exercise

197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The thundering boom of the M60 tank's main gun shook the trees during Troop A, 15th Cavalry's live-fire exercise at Hastings Range last week.

"We qualify once a year," said 1st Lt. Scott O'Neil, a cavalry tank platoon leader. "We also do sustainment training twice each year, that's what we're doing on this exercise."

During the tank gunnery exercise, green and red flags identify which tank is firing and which tank is the wing man. While the tank displaying the green flag is on the firing line engaging targets, the M60 tank with the green flag is waiting on line to fire next.

The tank crew with the green flag helps spot the targets for the firing tank. This is called the wing man concept.

"Each tank must engage two stationery targets," explained O'Neil. "They also fire on moving targets and make machine gun engagements."

Training heat rounds are used during gunnery qualifications. These are solid rounds that do not explode on impact.

SFC Clarence Woods, troop master gunner, controls all the tanks from his high vantage point in the range tower. By use of radios, Woods controls the movements of each tank firing for qualification.

Inside the tower is a sophisticated central control computer system. Hits and misses are recorded by the computer system.

The tower radios send information to tank crews on the firing line concerning target movement and location.

After qualifying on Hastings Range, the cav soldiers moved to Cactus Range to conduct missions with the scouts.

"On a cavalry mission," O'Neil said, "scouts are forward observers for the tank platoons. When the scouts spot enemy targets, they fall back so that the tanks can more foward and engage the enemy."

The Troop returned to Kelley Hill Tuesday.

An M60 tank from Troop A, 15th Cavalry, charges down range to engage its target.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

We've all heard the horror stories of people stranded during their vacation due to robbery, loss of funds due to negligence, and any number of reasons. This need not happen to us if we take the proper precautions.

Prior to departing on your vacation, take some time to seriously plan your trip. Determine how much money you will need and then purchase travelers checks. Never carry large amounts of cash on hand. If you do, you're just inviting trouble.

Travelers checks are just as good as cash and they are redeemable in the event of theft or loss. Always keep the copies of the checks in a separate location from the actual checks, and, if you're flying, don't put the copies in your luggage.

During your vacation, use common sense and avoid trouble areas. For example, avoid high crime areas, if possible, and frequent areas that are relatively safe. During hours of darkness, remember that no matter where you go, there are people just waiting for you to make a mistake.

If you are using air transportation as your mode of travel, secure your baggage and valuables. Pickpockets are always in the crowd, so be aware that they are professionals. All it takes is a moment of carelessness and your wallet or purse could be gone, including all of your money or credit cards.

Kelley Hill beginning to look 'a lot like Christmas'

Story and photos
by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

It's beginning to look a lot like Christmas on Kelley Hill as 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers and family members participate in many holiday festivities.

The ladies of the Brigade have been busy with "Cookie Sharing," a project to share homemade cookies and treats with soldiers who are staying at Fort Benning during the holidays. Cookies and punch will be available for soldiers to enjoy at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center throughout the holidays.

"Super Gift," a Christmas musical fantasy, was performed recently by a lively group of dolls, clowns and wooden soldiers at the Kelley Hill Chapel. Children of 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers sang and danced and told the story of the "Super Gift" from heaven.

The Kelley Hill Chapel was also alive with Christmas music as the 197th Infantry Brigade Choir performed the Christmas Cantata "This is Christmas." The choir told the story of Christmas in song.

Also, soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery showed their Christmas spirit by collecting used toys to donate to the Columbus Fire Department for their Toys-For-Tots program.

Many such activities have brought the holiday spirit to 197th soldiers and their families.

Soldiers 'skulk through woods' practicing escape, survival skills

Story and photos by Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

It was dark and damp as they moved through the woods. More than once they stopped to listen — the only sound, their own breathing or the snapping of a twig underfoot. But they continued toward the destination, being careful to keep moving and to elude the enemy.

Such was the scene last week on a remote section of Buena Vista Road where soldiers from Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion were conducting escape and evasion survival training.

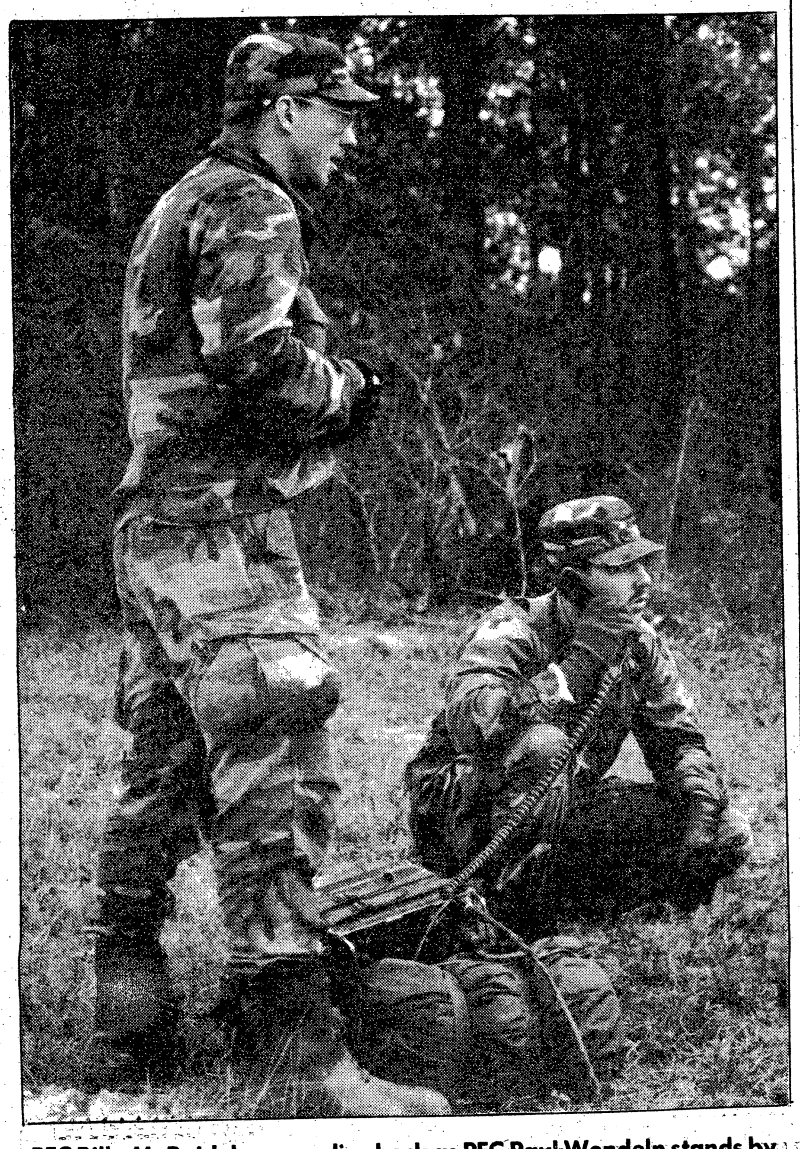
The company separated into 11 squads and cut loose for three days to avoid capture in the woods. Unarmed and equipped with only a rucksack and a change of clothes per soldier, four of the squads successfully eluded their captors.

"We had about 20 senior non-commissioned officers and cadre combing through the woods trying to capture them," said Capt. Charles H. Heaton.

"If we caught one soldier, the whole squad automatically had to come in," Heaton said. Those unfortunate soldiers were taken to a prisoner of war camp where they were held for four hours.

"We felt that the POW camp would give the soldiers good training and give them some idea what it's like to be held prisoner," Heaton said.

Within the camp's concertina-wire boundary was a makeshift confinement quarters. When a squad was captured, as many as four soldiers were put in a cage together. Occasionally, the "guard" came through to harass the prisoners, making the situation more realistic.



The soldiers, equipped with one radio per squad (for emergencies), eluded the enemy for three days in spite of increased efforts to find them.

"Tuesday night we went up in a helicopter and searched from the air with night (vision) goggles for four hours. We didn't see one of them," said 1st Lt. Dominic Macaluso, Co. A executive officer.

"I think the exercise went pretty well. They (the soldiers) weren't too happy while in the middle (of the training), but, looking back on it now they're glad they did it," Macaluso said.

SP4 Joseph E. Roberts checks the map before further movement during escape and evasion survival training.

PFC Billy M. Reid does a radio check as PFC Paul Wendeln stands by.

Staff elements hone skills fighting simulated battles

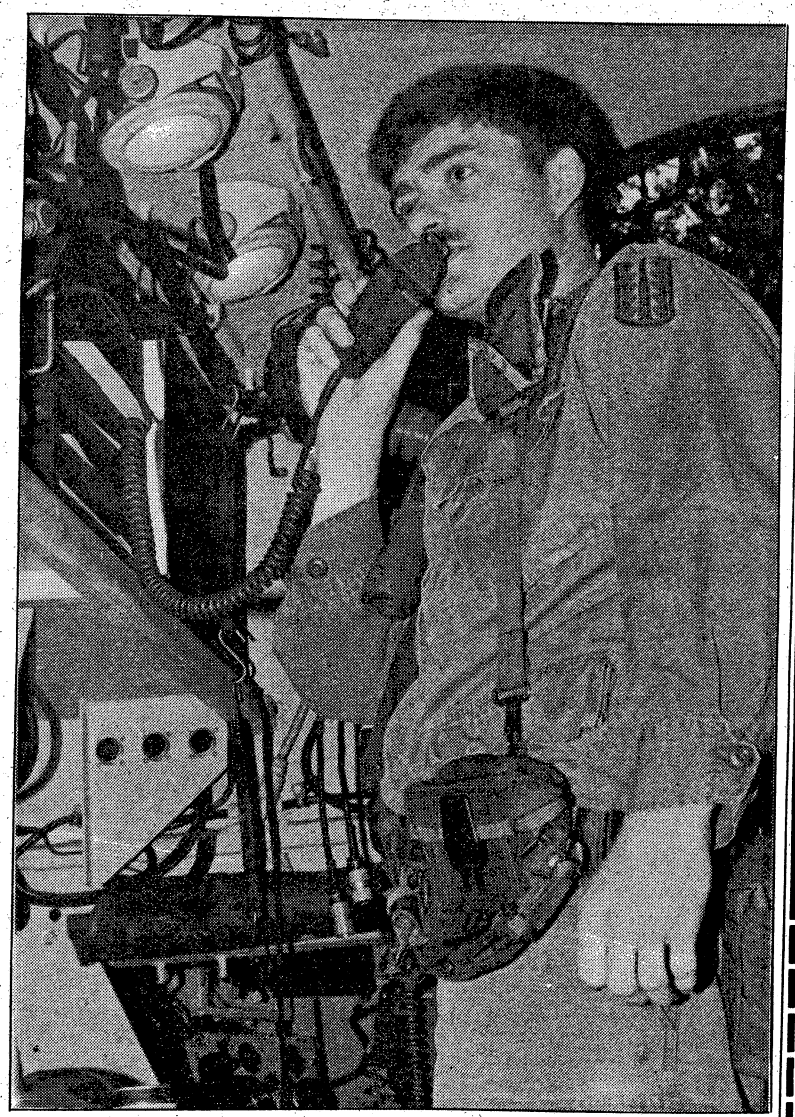
by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The 197th Infantry Brigade recently went through a four-day command post exercise in various Kelley Hill training areas.

"During the CPX, the Brigade staff sections control and participate in simulated battles," explained Capt. Stephen Jolly, fire support officer from the Brigade operations section. "We conduct maneuver scenarios in order to improve and perfect Brigade staff operations."

Tactical Operations Centers from the Brigade's infantry, armor, field artillery and support battalions, took part in the simulated battles. Soldiers in the TOCs plotted information passed down from the Brigade TOC on "battle boards," and kept track of all personnel and equipment.

A battle board displays a map of the battle location. The fighting forces are tracked and monitored on the map by soldiers in each battalion's TOC.



The battalion TOCs were also assisted by another component that played an important part in the battle simulation.

"The Brigade Mobile Simulation Cell, or Platypus, was used to represent a higher and adjacent headquarters," Jolly said. "The platypus was located near the Kelley Hill Theater during the exercise."

During the CPX, unit strength, casualties and personnel actions are recorded and reported to higher headquarters. The Brigade intelligence section also tracked the enemy forces' movements and passed the information on to the battalions.

"TOC operations must be improved in all areas," Jolly said. "Potential difficulties must be indentified in such areas as communication, so that accurate information can be obtained and processed."

The results of this CPX were compiled and after action reports were submitted to the battalion commanders.

SP4 Kenneth Johnson, Company A, 197th Support Battalion, makes radio contact with other Brigade forces.

Army career sure beats making caskets

by Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

It has been a long road from making caskets in Mesquite, Texas to "Top Shirt" in the 608th Ordnance Company. But 1st Sgt. Eugene Ashley is convinced that he chose the right path.

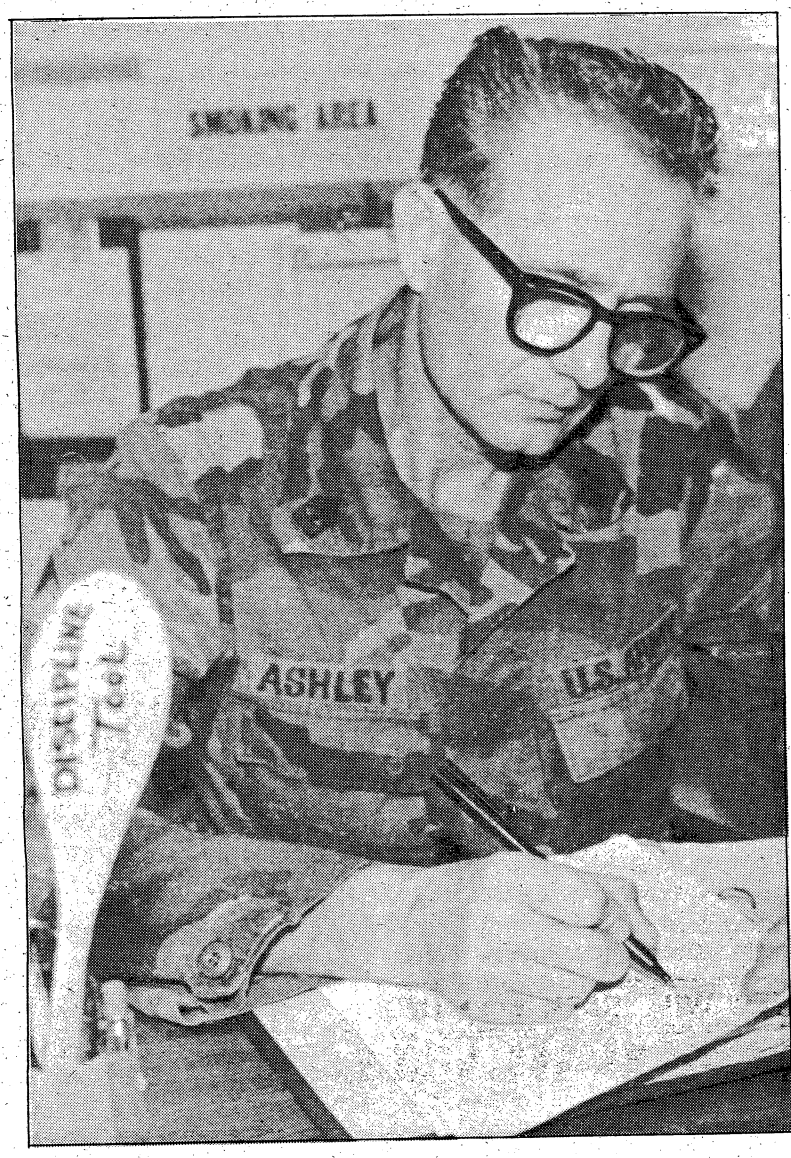
"I went with my cousin to see a recruiter and he convinced me that a big strapping boy like me ought to be in the Army, so I joined," Ashley said. The small-framed soldier speaks softly; the gruffness one expects from a first sergeant is virtually nonexistent in Ashley.

Looking back on his 27 years in the Army, Ashley said his career has been great. "The greatest esteem in being a soldier is honor to our country. If I had to do it all over again, there is very little that I would change," Ashley said. Peering through his glasses, Ashley's eyes seem magnified as he tries to remember the course of his career. "When we talk about my career, we're essentially speaking of the 608th Ordnance and the 36th (Engineer) Group," he said. Ashley said that after every overseas assignment, he always returned to Fort Benning and the 608th Ordnance.

Staying with the ammunitions'field, Ashley was first stationed in Germany, where he met his wife. She also returned to Benning with him and they now have two children.

"I had been to school here and really liked it. I had decided early in my career that I was going to make a career of the Army and that I would need a home base somewhere. I picked Fort Benning because I came to respect and admire the area. I settled my roots here in the community on-and off-post," Ashley said.

His career has been peppered with a variety of experiences. During a one-year tour in Vietnam, Ashley was assigned to logistics support in the elements of Air America Services. "I received, inspected and segregated stockage selections for air drop missions. I was responsible for the rigging, loading and securing air drop ammunitions," Ashley said.



He was then sent to Japan, where he spent 18 months X-raying fragmentation hand grenades. "It seemed that the grenades would suddenly explode for no apparent reason, so they had to be X-rayed. I looked at hundreds and thousands of grenades because Vietnam didn't have the equipment to do it," Ashley said.

In spite of other tours in Germany and one in the South Seas, each time he returned to Fort Benning to the 608th Ordnance.

Ashley feels that so far he has achieved his goals.

"I set high standards and have maintained high standards. If I do not retire I seek to become sergeant major," he said.

"In the Army I have found a place where my goals can be exercised. I am fortunate to be a member of the U.S. Army," Ashley said.

1st Sgt. Eugene Ashley works on the duty roster in his office at the 608th Ordnance Company recently.

Editor's Note: "Around Fort Benning" is a weekly column designed to highlight the activities of post units. Its purpose is to provide an outlet for brief stories, written by members of the featured unit, concerning changes of command, significant awards and some training exercises.

Input is welcome from all sources and should be submitted to the Editor in Room 601, Building 4 by 11 a.m. Monday. All input must be typed, double-spaced with the name and specific unit of the writer and should be limited to two pages. Submissions will be subject to standard editing and condensing.

High quality black and white photographs will also be considered for publication in this column.

36th Engr. Gp.

PFC Steve Barrientos Jr., was recently presented with an Army Commendation Medal for saving the life of a fellow soldier.

Barrientos, who is assigned to the 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group, saved SP4 William Bradshaw, who began choking while eating.

The accident occurred during the company's annual Army Readiness Training Evaluation Program this summer. Bradshaw began choking on a chicken bone. Barrientos quickly acted to dislodge the bone by using the Heimlich Maneuver.

According to his award citation, "Barrientos' actions are an example to all others of the effectiveness of correctly performed Army training. His exemplary performance and sincere compassion for his fellow soldier is in keeping with the highest military standards." — Matthew J. Faddis, 598th Maintenance Company

Soldiers from Company A, assisted by their colleagues from Company C and Headquarters Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion, captured the title of Best Non-Musical Marching Band recently while marching in the Birmingham, Ala., National Veterans Day Parade.

Wednesday the soldiers went to Birmingham to pick up their trophy at an award ceremony.

"I enjoyed the parade very much. It was a great occasion especially because it was a national holiday. I think it's great that we won," said PFC Steven H. Beaury, maintenance clerk for Co. A. — Laurie J. Hill, 36th Engineer Group.

On Dec. 2, the 608th Ordnance Company's field gear was inspected by the battalion commander, Lt. Col. Thomas A. Hooper.

There was 100 percent equipment accountability by the soldiers. Not only was the equipment present, but it was well taken care of and completely serviceable.

The outstanding display brought a sense of pride and unity to the soldiers. The inspection also set the standard for the other companies within the 67th Maintenance Battalion. — Dwayne E. Ford, 608th Ordnance Company

75th Rangers

There is a saying that it's better to be safe than sorry. After winning the Fort Benning quarterly safety award, the 75th Ranger Regiment is both safe and happy.

"The 75th Ranger Regiment posted a 42-percent decrease in their accident rate statistics. They cut their accident rate almost in half. That's pretty good," said Fred Young, Safety Office director.

All major units on post compete and the units of the 75th judged were the regimental headquarters and the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

"The key to our winning this award is the tremendous amount of command emphasis put on safety in this unit. This emphasis starts from the regimental commander, Col. Joe Stringham, and goes down to the fire team leader," Maj. Danny McKnight, the regimental personnel officer said.

The Safety Office uses the average accident rate of the previous four quarters and compares this figure to the current quarter in judging what unit has the most significant decrease in its accident rate. If a unit has had a fatality during the quarter being judged, that unit is automatically excluded. — Mike Brazile, The Bayonet staff writer.

1st ITB

Company E, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade graduated Dec. 5. The company had what the brigade commander, Col. James Mace, described as a "super" cycle.

The company "streamered" in all three events possible, which means that all soldiers passed on the first time. This has only happened once before in both 1st Brigade and 2nd Brigade.

Not only did the company streamer in physical training, the soldiers also set the record for the Army Physical Fitness Test under the new standards. Echo Company soldiers not only passed each event on the PT test, they set the new standards record of 255.

Echo Company's cycle was an One Station Unit Training cycle that eventually graduated 132 soldiers. It started Sept. 12. — Terry Mays, Company E, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade

Safetycab offers alternative to driving under influence

The Bayonet staff

If you drink a few too many during holiday celebrating, give yourself a special Christmas present. Call Safetycab, and let someone else do the driving.

For the fourth straight year, the Safetycab program is in place to keep drunken drivers off area highways.

Kay Denes, a spokeswoman for the program, said all a person has to do is call 323-0110 and they'll get a free cab ride home.

The Bradley Center, Ledger-Enquirer newspapers and the Association of the U.S. Army are sponsoring the program.

Last year, Safetycab received 784 calls, and provided 620 rides. Of these, 146 went to or from Fort Benning, Ms. Denes said. Officials estimate that another 10 percent of the calls came from Fort Benning personnel who did not live on post.

The cab companies that will be providing rides are Independent, Veterans, American, Columbus, Co-Op, Yellow and Crawford.

The free rides will be provided each night between 7 p.m. and 3 a.m., now through the morning hours of Jan. 1.

While the focus of the Safetycab program is keeping people from drinking and driving when patronizing local businesses, they also pick up people at private residences. "We don't care where the person is coming from, as long as they don't drive while under the influence," Ms. Denes said.

"We are also encouraging people to 'designate a driver' in their group, a person who does not drink at all so he can drive home," she said.

This year, 23 local businesses that serve alcoholic beverages are participating in the Designated Driver program. These businesses will serve free non-alcoholic beverages to the designated driver, along with a sticker to wear that reads "I'm driving."

The participating businesses are Goetchius House, Al Who's Place, Bronze Boot Lounge, Columbus Hilton Hotel, The Forum Nightclub, Holiday Inn Airport, Hungry Hunter, Jilly's the Place for Ribs, Peachtree Pub, Speakeasy, Applebee's, Celebrations in Ramada, Main Street Cafe, Bombay Bicycle Club, Dillinger's, W.D. Crowley's, Dallas Country & Western Club, Holiday Inn South, Iron Works Trade Center, Martinique Motor Inn, Malone's, Tavern on the Square and Villanova.

According to statistics provided by the Columbus Police Department, there were 144 DUI arrests last year from Dec. 14 through Jan. 1. During this time there were 34 DUI related accidents, resulting in 16 injuries and three deaths.

Infantry Museum gets Medal of Honor trophies

by Shawn Bryson
The Bayonet staff writer

Two Medal of Honor trophies were presented to Dick Grube Dec. 12, by retired Maj. Edwin Pater, a member of the World War II 503rd Parachute Infantry Regiment Association.

The original medals were awarded to Sgt. Ray Eubanks and Pvt. Lloyd G. McCarter in 1945 for their heroic performances in World War II.

On July 23, 1944, at Noemfoor Island, Dutch New Guinea, Eubanks' squad advanced under heavy fire in an effort to relieve an American platoon isolated by the enemy.

The sergeant was wounded and yet still used his damaged rifle to club four enemy soldiers to death. He was later shot and killed but his bravery enabled his company to successfully complete its mission.

McCarter was given the award for his contributions as a scout for the regiment that recaptured the fortresss of Corregidor, Philippine Islands in February 1945.

During three days of battle, McCarter exposed himself repeatedly to hostile fire in order to locate key enemy positions. He killed more than 30 enemies before being seriously wounded himself.

The trophies of their awards are now on display.

The National Infantry Museum is open to visitors Tuesday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., and weekends from 12:30 to 4:30 p.m.

Post meets energy goal for first time in 10 years

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

While they're not exactly dancing in the streets, folks at the Directorate of Engineering and Housing are pretty pleased with themselves.

For the first time since Training and Doctrine Command began setting energy consumption targets 10 years ago, Fort Benning met its goal.

According to Steve Turner, chief of the Electrical and Energy Management Branch, DEH, Fort Benning came in third in money returned as a result of energy savings, while the post was ranked fourth in actual energy goals met.

While the actual dollar figure awarded Fort Benning for its achievement is $1,002,000, he said the post has actually received twice that sum as a result of its energy conservation program.

"Our winning dollar amount was based on money saved last year, and that money was moved to other post accounts and spent during the last fiscal year," he said. "The additional money awarded by TRADOC will be used for a variety of projects."

While these projects are still pending final approval by post officials, they include plans to upgrade baseball fields, build outdoor basketball courts and upgrade playgrounds, as well as energy conservation measures, such as buying more Frequency Modulation receivers to control energy usage in post buildings.

Turner said the reason Fort Benning met its goal is simple. "We made it in large part due to DEH's efforts at controlling energy use in the central energy plants and the FM control system," he said.

While these have been in place for a few years, it was a matter of fine tuning the way the resources were used to produce the necessary energy, Turner explained. "As we use these systems, we get smarter and smarter."

The central energy plants provide steam that provides all heat and hot water in Sand Hill, Kelley Hill, North and South Main Post and Martin Army Community Hospital, to name some of the larger "customers." The FM control system moniters heating and air conditioning in other buildings on post that are not supplied by the steam plants.

Turner said the post's agreement with Georgia Power on a commercial user pricing structure did not directly affect our meeting the TRADOC goal. "Our power bill has dropped as a result of the rate agreement, but our TRADOC goal is based on BTUs used, not dollars," he said. "Certainly the rate agreement has helped us save money, which is good management any time."

Energy Update

by Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

A good source of energy savings is as close as your light switch.

Exterior and interior lights left burning after duty hours in unoccupied buildings continues to be an area of concern.

The three areas in which the lighting is justified are the burning of fire lights, safety lights or security lights. If it does not fall into these areas, the lights usually are not necessary and should be turned off.

However, the fire department requires illuminated exits signs to assist occupants in evacuating a building.

Jungle training new experience

Story and photos by Shawn Bryson
The Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division returned Thursday from three weeks of intense training in some of the most rugged wilderness the world has to offer.

Twenty-three thousand acres of treacherous jungle awaited the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry and troops from Company C, 3rd Battalion as they boarded the Military Airlift Command flight headed for Panama — "The Crossroads of the World" — Nov. 27 and 28.

The light infantry units were southbound to the Jungle Operations Training Center at Fort Sherman.

A two-hour ride on colorful buses, typical of many Latin American countries, took the troops through the beautiful, yet poverty stricken country side of Panama.

The Jungle Operations Training Center at Fort Sherman was designed to train soldiers from Ranger, Airborne, Air Assault, light infantry and Marine Corps units.

The training at JOTC is divided into three one-week phases, with each phase being the basis for the next week.

From the first day of training, the mountain soldiers began to realize they were not on a vacation. Lt. Col. Cline Williamson, commander of JOTC, gave the soldiers a briefing about the training they would receive, but barely scratched the surface of the classes and exercises ahead of them.

During the first week of training, the soldiers had a class on jungle living, plants and animals. The instructors stressed the necessity of safety while operating in a jungle environment.

Soldiers were introduced to all of the animals that can be found in the jungle, including monkeys, snakes and jaguars, as well as many others unique to the jungle. The JOTC had a zoo with one of every species of animals the soldiers might encounter. The Bush Master, one of the more popular and poisonous snakes of Central America, was the most intimidating creature dwelling in the maze of undergrowth of the jungle.

The insects are thick in Panama, therefore the mountain troops were urged to wear insect repellant in order to avoid diseases such as malaria. They also learned how to erect a hooch, a substitute for a shelter half that is constructed with the poncho as the roof and a fine mesh insect net making up the walls.

Although the weather South of the equator is great for getting a nice suntan and hanging around the beach, the troops were in training from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m., in temperatures in excess of 90 degrees Fahrenheit, in full gear. All of these factors combined to make for some long dog days.

The soldiers welcomed the daily rains, which became less frequent as the dry season approached. They were advised to drink more than 10 quarts of water a day to avoid dehydrating. With a definite need for plenty of water, iodine tablets were necessary to purify the water found in rivers, streams and ponds because all of the water in the jungle is considered to be contaminated. However, water vines, sugar cane and bamboo were also available as alternate sources for water.

Although Meals Ready-to-Eat provided necessary nourishment, soldiers learned that they could survive off the natural food supply of the jungle. To their surprise, all of the animals in the jungle can be eaten if necessary. Coconuts, bananas and papayas are also in great abundance.

After learning about all of the dangers they'd be faced with, it was time for the soldiers to get down to some "hardcore" training. The rest of the first week was devoted to rappelling, "waterborne" training, the Green Hell obstacle course and land navigation exercises.

The rappelling was not new to the light infantry troops. However, the Australian style offered a different challenge to many.

The Green Hell obstacle course offered the Panamanian jungles challenge, while beaches offer fun

Story and photo by Shawn Bryson
The Bayonet staff writer

During their recent visit to Panama, the soldiers from 2nd Battalion and Company C., 3rd Battalion, 10th Mountain Division trained hard, long hours in their quest to become jungle experts.

However, "all work and no play makes Joe a dull boy." The Jungle Operations Training Center at Fort Sherman was well equipped to satisfy the soldiers' desires to put training aside and just plain have fun.

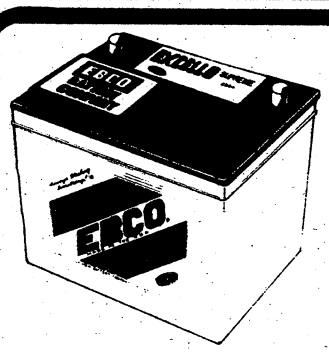
Although Fort Sherman is one of the Army's smallest posts, its location makes it a tropical wonderland of adventure.

Fort Sherman is a peninsula just north of the first set of locks of the Panama Canal. The peninsula itself juts out into the beautiful Caribbean Sea which offered all kinds of water fun.

One of the more popular activities was snorkeling along the shores of the Fort Sherman lagoon. Many of the soldiers commented on the beauty of the coral reefs, colorful fish and plants. SCUBA gear was also available to qualified divers.

Many soldiers took a shot at deep sea fishing as boats were rented at the post recreation center.

Shimmey Beach was also popular to the sun worshipers of the 10th Mountain Division. When soldiers weren't sunning or swimming, they could be found wading in the ocean looking for natural souvenir sea shells and coral.



With the tropical weather of Panama shifting to the dry season, soldiers enjoyed playing soccer, football and softball in their off-duty time.

Panama was also a dream come true for photographers and sightseers. Aside from the ocean, the jungle, with all its tropical splender and the actual training provided soldiers with pictures and memories that will probably last a lifetime.

However much fun the soldiers had in their off time, it was always back to the jungle the next morning for more training.

Pvt. 2 Floyd Rose, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division, enjoys the sun, sand and surf in Panama during some off-duty time.

Brigade gathers for candlelight service

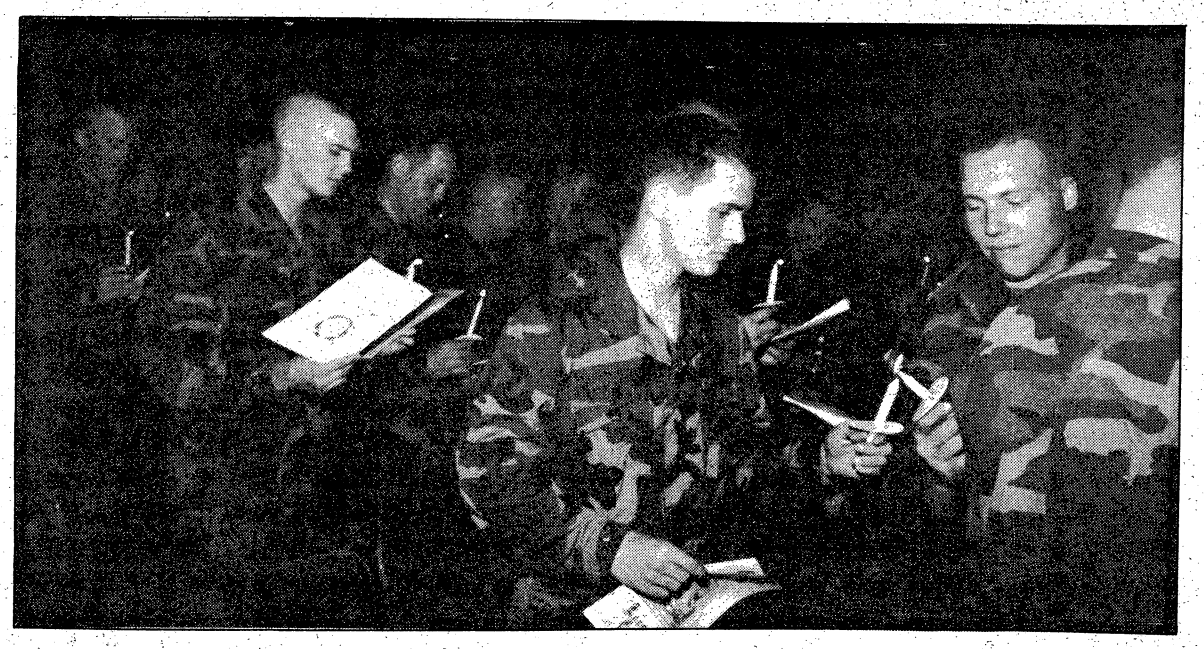
Army Training Center correspondent

The Sand Hill Theater was the scene Sunday of the 4th Annual 1st Infantry Training Brigade Christmas Candlelight Service.

According to Chaplain (Maj.) James Langford, the services, consisting of lessons from the Bible and traditional Christmas carols, have been well received by soldiers and the annual event has become a tradition in the 1st ITB.

In the clear night air, cadence calls rang out as the soldiers marched to the theater. With more than 2,000 soldiers attending the two services, the seats were quickly filled.



After Langford welcomed those attending, Chaplain (Capt.) Paul Williams presented the invocation. From the rear of the theater the processional began with soldiers carrying crucifixes and serving as torchbearers.

As the torchbearers entered, they lighted candles for soldiers seated next to the aisles. The process continued until the theater was aglow with flickering white candlelight. The torchbearers were followed by the choir, also composed of soldiers, leading the congregation in singing "O Come, O Come, Emmanuel."

Lessons were read by Lt. Col. Joel Williamson, commander, 7th Battalion; Lance Miller, Chaplain Miller's son; Capt. Millard LeMay, commander, Company E, 1st Battalion; SFC Paul Richards, 3rd Battalion; Pvt. Nathan Huckaby, 7th Battalion; Chaplain (Capt.) Gordon Miller. Chaplain (Capt.) Robert Washington provided the Benediction.

Cpl. Terry VanSky, from the Operations Office, 1st ITB, sang "O Holy Night." Kathy Shaffer, Margie Stewart, and Leslie Williams sang "Away in a Manger." The Reynolds Trio, a local singing group composed of Regney, Shayne and Vicki Reynolds, sang "Do You Hear What I Hear."

Other musical selections were "O Come, All Ye Faithful," "The First Noel," and, for the Recessional, "Angels We Have Heard on High."

Soldiers at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade's annual candlelight service share their "light."

Looking for new challenges, priest seeks out Army life

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Many soldiers look to the Army for the challenge and adventure it can offer. Chaplain (Maj.) James Bluett, who recently took over as the 197th Infantry Brigade chaplain, looked to the Army to add to his already challenging career as a Catholic priest.

The priesthood brought him from his native Ireland to the United States to work in Catholic missions. He is assigned to the diocese in Pensacola, Tallahassee, Fla.

Since joining the military in 1972, he has traveled throughout the U.S. to Korea, Panama and the Middle East.

"I really enjoy the challenge and discipline of the military," Bluett said. "I can only go around once in life, so I want to make the most of my priesthood."

Bluett explained that he originally joined the Army for only three years. He was stationed at Fort Ord, Calif., and served two years with the 2nd Division in Korea.

When he returned to his diocese in Florida, he remained in the National Guard and made time to complete jungle training in Panama while he founded a parish at Fort Walton Beach, Fla.

He returned to the Army life in 1983 and found his way to Fort Benning's 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade at Sand Hill. However, his most challenging, and heartbreaking, assignment was with the United Nations Multi-national Peacekeeping Force in the Sinai Peninsula in Egypt.

"I knew many soldiers of the 101st Airborne Division who died in the plane crash (in Gander, Newfoundland) in 1985," Bluett said. "I was still in the Sinai and had to organize memorial services and minister to the guys who remained behind. It was a very sad time."

However, Bluett explained that serving with the group was also a unique experience.

"I was impressed by the quality of the young soldier in the area," he said. "We had to interact with soldiers from other nations and cultures in this "high visibility" area."

Bluett has a visible desire and commitment to meet the challenge of being the Brigade chaplain.

"I feel that there is no greater mission within the church than to the armed services," he added. "I consider myself close to the infantry and I am looking forward to ministering in the 197th Infantry Brigade."

Birth of Jesus Christ God's most perfect Christmas gift to mankind

by Lee Dudley
2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Battalion chaplain

In the birth and life of our Lord, human nature came alive in a new way. All sorts of levels, new qualities and new heights of human nature were brought into being. And the wonder is that we didn't seek it. It was given. God took the initiative toward us. He adopted us by coming among us.

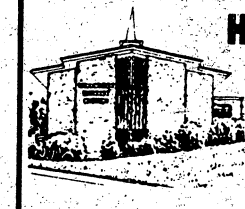
The birth of Christ did not take place in a vacuum. It was the climatic statement (word) of a god who had, through human lips, spoken again and again. Think about the true gift of Christmas for a moment, and how you fit into God's marvelous love.

The Christ is born in the stable and manger. In this forgotten place, the lowest place, the place that we do not frequent and where we would least expect him, God came to us.

Reflect on the fact that it is in the place of warmth, camaraderie and celebration that no room is found. Each image in the gospel story of Christmas drives home the awe-inspiring, self-emptying of the divine for you and me. We see the divine majesty of God in self-imposed helplessness and vulnerability — a baby, swaddled (bound), lying (dependent).

Truly, God comes to us in a special way this Christmas and all the Christmases past. Through living a life that identifies with all our cares, love breaks through and gives us the ultimate gift: abundant life in God's love.

In the birth of Jesus, God gave us the greatest gift by becoming a human being and dwelling among us. The incarnation is God's plan for redeeming his people.



May God bless you during this wonderful season.

Chaplains work around clock to fulfill needs of post soldiers

Story and photo by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Do Army chaplains just pound the pulpit and say "Hi" to soldiers? Not at Fort Benning.

Chaplain (Capt.) John Bjarnason, a former sergeant first class with the Special Forces, has been an Army chaplain for six years. He has served four of those six years with the 197th Infantry Brigade and his day starts at 5:15 a.m.

"I get up at that time and get to the unit I'm assigned to, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, and do physical training with them. I also get a little chaplain's work done," Bjarnason said.

Talking to and counselling soldiers and family members accounts for about 50 percent of the chaplain's time. Bjarnason counsels three to four people each day, with each session lasting anywhere from 10 minutes to an hour.

"We listen to a soldier's or family member's problems and then we try to present them with options for solving their problems. We also refer (them to people) or other agencies that might also be able to help or better help them than us," Bjarnason said.

When the 3-7th hits the field Bjarnason is right there, making himself available to the soldier, a practice he calls "ministry of presence."

"I bless a lot of soldiers in the field and some of my best conversations, blessings and prayers happen in the field. Our ministry of presence is one of being there for the soldier," Bjarnason said.

In addition to PT, going to the field and soldier's work and living areas, chaplains like Bjarnason have other responsibilities.

"We have chapel duties that myself and the other chaplains share. This averages out to one of us preaching about once every month," Bjarnason said.

Chaplains also minister to many families in their homes and Bjarnason visits three to five unit member's homes in the evenings each week.

Chaplains at Fort Benning have on-call chaplain duty about twice each month. They're there for anyone who needs a chaplain. During their tour of duty they also visit the hospital and the soldiers in confinement.

"Being a chaplain is not an 8 to 5 job," Bjarnason said.

Bjarnason also teaches classes concerning marital and family relationships, finances, stress management and human self-development.

Chaplains also provide memorial services and support for soldiers' surviving families.

Bjarnason stresses that chaplains have to be there for everyone.

"I try to meet people's religious needs. If I can minister to them, fine, I will. But if they need a Catholic priest then I'll do everything in my power to find them a Catholic priest. 'Chaplain' is a generic word, non-denominational. We have to respond to everyone's needs, not to our own, personal needs," Bjarnason said.

Chaplain (Capt.) John Bjarnason talks to SP4 Jeffrey Vetashick of the 197th Infantry Brigade.

PWOC announces spring program

The Protestant Women of the Chapel will begin the new year with a spring program of Bible studies and fellowship. Fellowship will be on Thursday from 9 to 11:30 a.m. at the Religious Education Center on Ingersoll Street at Dixie Road.

Bible studies will include a continuation of "Mothers of Preschoolers," "The Christian Famly," "Women of the Bible" and "Beloved Unbeliever. Three new clasess have been added, including: "1st John (Precepts)," "The Pursuit of Holiness" and "Spiritual Discipline for Weight Control."

An active outreach program, which began in the fall, will continue this spring. The women will visit Martin Army Community Hospital, a Columbus nursing home and will welcome chapel visotors on post.

Nurseries are also provided. A special Christian crafts and Bible studies program has been added to the nursery for children ages 2 to 5.

All women of the Fort Benning area are invited to join us for a warm and enriching time every Thursday morning. For more information, call 545-2050.

Catholics to give offerings to military

The offerings received during the Catholic Christmas masses at Fort Benning chapels will be forwarded to the Archdiocese for the Military Services.

Donating to the Archdiocesan Support Fund fosters the faith among all the members of our archdiocese scattered throughout the world.

Contributions help to preserve the Catholic faith among our brothers and sisters serving with the armed forces and Veterans Administration, and assist with the work of developing the Chancery of the new Archdiocese, specifically in the area of priest recruitment.

Adult Sunday School planned for January

The Main Post Sunday School will offer a new adult class beginning Jan. 4, 1987.

The class will be taught by Chaplain Huey Bridgeman, and will begin by studying lessons from the "Adult Quarterly," known to many as the Uniform Lessons.

Sunday School begins at 9:30 a.m. at Building 229. Everyone is welcome. For more information, call 545-2366.

Program seeking adult volunteers

Adult volunteers are needed to help with a Youth Rally in March. The event is sponsored by the Religious Education Center. Call 545-5508 for more information.

Planning, lowering expectations helps fight holiday depression

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

It's Christmas Eve and everyone is drinking eggnog, opening gifts and enjoying the holiday season. But you're a PFC on guard duty and there's no eggnog, no gifts and no Christmas. You're unhappy and sad.

You're off duty for four days to celebrate Christmas: no physical training, no getting up early, lots of drinking, staying up late and having fun. But after the second day you don't feel great like you think you should.

You've seen the situation comedy Christmas: husband and wife, perfectly groomed, standing by a roaring fire in the fireplace. Their Christmas tree is beautiful; the children are beautiful opening their beautiful gifts and a perfectly roasted turkey waits on the table.

But you look at your home on Christmas Day and there's not even a fireplace, much less a fire; your husband is unshaven and big-bellied, sitting in the middle of the floor playing with your son's toys, while your son fights with your daughter over one of her toys. Your house is a mess and the turkey's still frozen. This is definitely not "The Cosby Show."

Capt. R.M. Purol, a psychiatric nurse practiconeer in the Community Mental Health Activity said people have false expectations about Christmas. "They have the illusion that Christmas is really like the media portrays it and it's not necessarily that way," he said.

Purol said that many times things will happen during the holidays to make people unhappy or sad, such as being away from home or having to pull duty. These things also happen at other times of the year but their importance is magnified during Christmas. To experience this sadness is normal, he said, but is not necessarily depression.

They look at this holiday as a fantasy and they think it should be that way: everyone happy and no problems but that's not reality. As a consequence, they are left sad and unhappy many times," he said.

Purol and Baldock offered these tips for fighting holiday sadness:

Don't be alone. If you can't be home for Christmas do things with friends also staying back or make new friends.

If you have to work or pull duty during Christmas, accept the fact that it won't be your most memorable holiday.

Keep your holidays structured. Relax but don't overeat, oversleep or drink excessively. Keep up some kind of P.T. program and don't simply "vegetate."

If you're away from your family be open to new options during the holiday. Participate in church activities, unit activities, parties, etc. The holiday season is the perfect time to do volunteer work helping those less fortunate.

Be aware that sometimes being away from your family is a reality in the military and accept it.

Recognize that just because it's Christmas problems are not going to disappear.

Keep a balance between taking a break during the holiday offtime and keeping some structure to your activities.

"In general, problems are highlighted at Christmas because adults try to cash-in on their Christmas childhood euphoria and it doesn't always work out very well," Purol said.

Purol and Buldock both said that leaders should be aware of soldiers who are not going home for the holiday and ensure they inquire about these soldiers plans.

"Overall, don't be alone during Christmas. Be with other people and lower your expectations about what Christmas is," Baldock said.

New school building will be unique learning environment

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools correspondent

The new Faith Middle School, serving Fort Benning sixth, seventh, and eighth grade students, is scheduled to open before spring vacation in March, according to school officials.

The new building on Ingersoll Street had originally been scheduled for completion before the holiday break, however, the project is behind schedule and currently a mid-January completion date is forecast.

The new school is a modern facility designed to accommodate the middle school philosophy, with the building having four wings that extend from a center section. The center section includes the media center (library), the auditorium/gymnasium, music rooms, special education rooms and the administrative offices.

Each grade has its own separate wing extending from the center section, allowing students at each grade level to spend the bulk of the day within the grade-level environment. The fourth wing accomodates the cafeteria, industrial arts room, home economics room and the art room.

The school has a central computer room for student use and science laboratories in each grade-level wing. The school media center will contain not only an up-to-date book collection, but will provide children with the opportunity for individual viewing of audio tapes, film strips and video tapes. The library also has a darkroom for work in developing and printing film.

Principal Olin Harp and his staff are busy preparing for the move to the new scool. "We are anticipating a great program continuing to improve as we move to a building designed specifically with our middle school philosophy in mind," Harp said.

Supply hotline set up

U.S. Army Natick RD&E Center

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — The U.S. Army Natick, Research, Development and Engineering Center has established a user's hotline to better serve its user community, according to a Natick spokesman.

Natick Center, in Natick, Mass., is the Army's proponent for food, clothing, shelters and airdrop systems.

Calls will be monitored and the caller will receive a reply.

After Natick's duty hours, callers will reach a recorder that will provide an opportunity to identify themselves, specify equipment, and the nature of their problem.

Army issue and supply employees are encouraged to use the hotline to report, discuss or resolve problems encountered with centrally procured and issued food, clothing, individual equipment, aerial delivery equipment, tentage and rigid wall shelters.

The phone number for Natick Center's hotline is Autovon 256-5341, or commercial (617) 651-5341.

Introduce friends to new sport, give them book on Orienteering

by Linda Ferguson
Fort Benning Orienteering correspondent

If you're doing your last minute Christmas shopping, making out your wish list or you don't have any plans for that cash gift, then you might wish to consider giving an Orienteering book or asking for one.

There are some excellent texts on the market. These may be ordered from your favorite bookseller or from one of several Orienteering supply houses in the U.S.

In the line of "general" texts, there is, "Be An Expert With Map and Compass - The Complete Orienteering Handbook," by Bjorn Kellstrom and published in the U.S. by Charles Schribner's and Sons, 1976. This is considered to be the orienteer's "bible." It contains information on meet organization, training and teaching techniques, drills and maps.

Another general text is "Orienteering For Sport and Pleasure," written by Hans Bengstson and George Atkinson in 1977 and published by the Stephen Greene Press. This is really a great all-around book, covering all aspects of orienteering, including basic map making, club and meet organization, techniques and training.

The third book in this area is "Orienteering," by John Disley, an olympic medalist and one of the founders of orienteering in Great Britain. Disley's book is an excellent general text, containing a large amount of training and competition techniques.

Along the line of instructional texts, the first on my list is, Winifred Stott's "Armchair Orienteering, A Practical Guide to Reading Orienteering Maps." Mrs. Stott, a professional Orienteering instructor in Ontario, Canada, has written a self-paced workbook. It has full color maps, hundreds of illustrations and dozens of practical exercises for the novice to intermediate orienteer.

Another instructional text is "Map And Compass Fundamentals-Orienteering," written by Australians, Toy Martin and Dave Lotty, published in 1976 by A.H. & A.W. Reed Printing, Ltd., Sydney, NSW. This is another workbook with more than 70 well-designed exercises and outlines for skills progression.

An excellent book on training techniques is, Wilfred Holloway's "Modern Orienteering Training."

Published in Marlbourough, England in 1979, this is considered a landmark work. It contains instruction in training techniques for intermediate through advanced levels, including training methods and schedules, as well as the physical and psychological factors involved in training and competing.

Until next time, happy holidays and happy reading!

Research program aims to improve visual performance

Story and photo by Tommy Pool
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit correspondent

To the world class marksman there is a lot more to shooting than what meets the eye. With participation in an ongoing research project, members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit here are looking to improve their aim.

Under the guidance of Columbus optometrist, Dr. David Peed, members of USAMU are currently involved with a three-month research program designed to improve visual performance skills.

The objective of the project is to determine if various eye exercises and training objectives can strengthen a shooter's eyesight, thereby improving overall performance in marksmanship competition.

Sgt. Bruce Calkins (left) checks visual exercise by SP4 James Graves of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, during recent tests by the Army Aeromedical Research Lab.

Peed has been interested in learning ways to enhance a marksman's vision since working with members of USAMU when he was a staff member at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Peed has been named a research affiliate with Hughston Sports Medicine Foundation and recently received a grant from the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team-Sports Medicine Division, to conduct an extensive research project with members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

Members of USAMU are hopeful that the project will provide ways to improve overall shooting performance and add points to their future scores.

One individual in particular has already benefited from Peed's guidance. Gloria Parmentier, a former member of USAMU who left active service a few weeks ago, learned improved vision skills from Peed.

"I was doing well in competition but somehow felt something wasn't quite right," Parmentier said. "Now thanks to Dr. Peed, I have learned certain techniques that give me better focusing power, confidence and that certain edge."

Parmentier placed fourth in the Ladies Standard Rifle event during the 1984 Olympic Games and has won several National Women's Rifle Championships.

Peed's project began this month and will include a series of visual pretests, three months of visual skills activities, and final eye exams to determine the impact of the various techniques.

Testing will also be conducted at the Hughston Sports Medicine Foundation and will include projects for peripheral vision eye/hand reaction timing for measuring the individual's focusing time of far and near objects with a computerized video system, and for determining the individual's ability to follow moving objects quickly.

HHC, 3-14th Infantry team downs Co. A, 3-14th in intramural b-ball

The Bayonet sports writer

The 10th Mountain Division, in it's first season of the Post Intramural Basketball League, hosted a shoot out in the Santiago Gym Thursday, as the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry rocked Company A, 3-14th, 41-33.

The Company A drill, Mark Chaney, powered through the paint like Hersel Walker through an Atlanta defensive line, but continually drew the foul.

Chaney's three-point play, minutes before the half, pushed Company A to a 19-14 lead at the intermission.

Though no players were double figured in the first half, Chaney and Larry McDaniel split 14 points.

It was only three minutes into the second half, that HHC took it's first lead at 24-23.

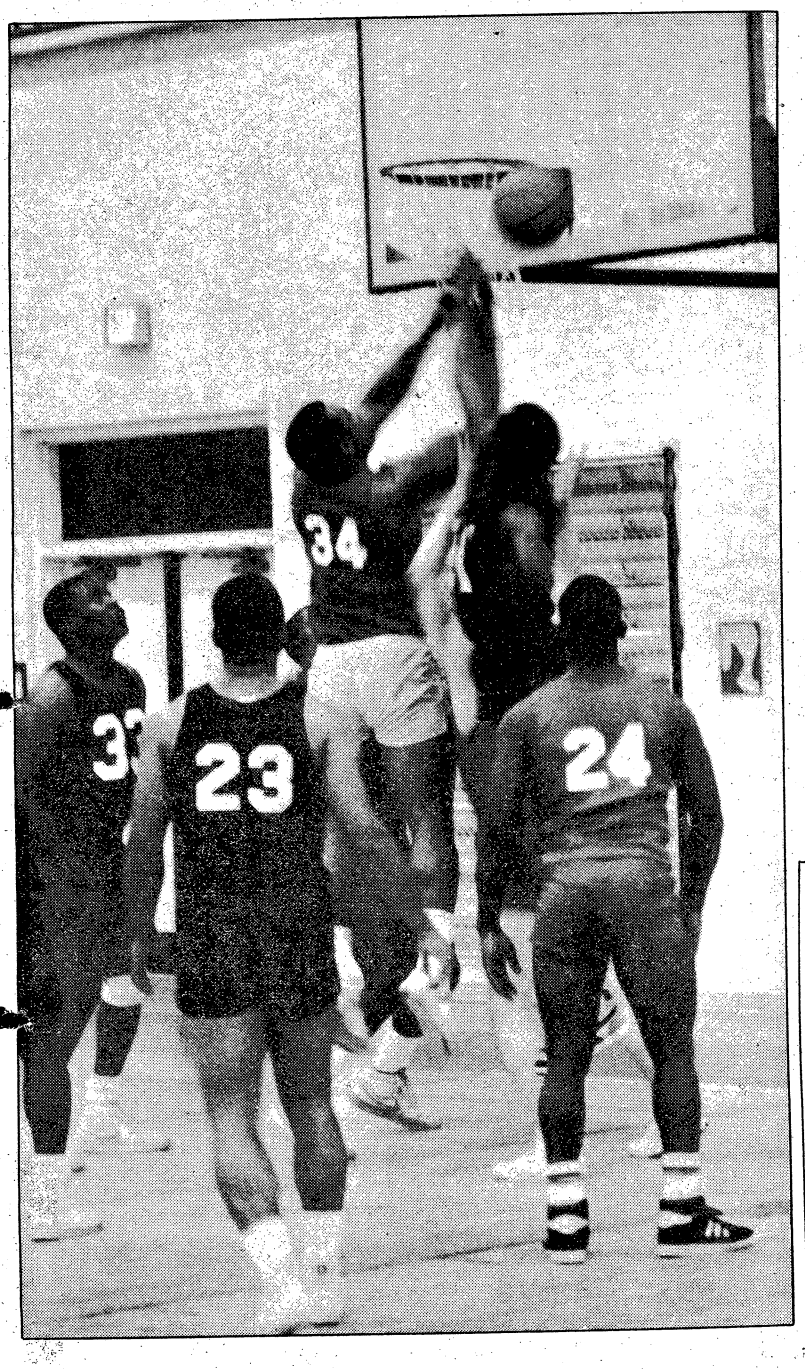
The high scorers, Victor Florence, Craig Alston and Jose Torres, took control.

The net began to burn as Florence started sinking baskets from the top of the key.

With 8:25 on the clock, HHC had traveled to a 31-25 lead.

The action was at a stalemate for more than three minutes, until Lee Shannon, Alpha's high scorer, broke the ice, pulling within three.

Company A was one shot away from getting back into the game, when Mark Chaney was charged with a traveling turnover.

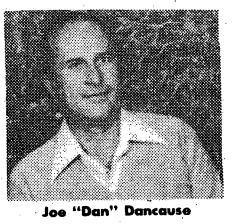


Craig Alston responded to the threat with firepower of his own.

Going to the foul line, Alston hit both shots and stole the ball on the next inbound play for the easy layup.

The quick four-point turn-around boosted HHC to a commanding 37-29 lead with only 1:55 to play.

Bennett Evans was high on the boards all night, but clenched the game with a tip-in on a missed freethrow.



HHC held onto a perfect 2-0 record in the 41-33 victory.

Mark Chaney of Company A, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, tips the ball into the hoop.

Court report

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Things took a turn for the worse last week for two Fort Benning soldiers who "rolled" a fellow soldier. Pvt. 1 James R. Routzong and Pvt. 1 Michael W. Larney, both of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, were convicted by general courts-martial for stealing $460 from a member of their unit.

Routzong and Larney were both awaiting permanent-change-of-station orders from Fort Benning after suffering injuries in Airborne School. On Sept. 27, they learned that Pvt. 1 Daniel Mixell, another soldier from the unit, had just cashed a payroll check and had secured a large sum of money in his wall locker. Routzong invited Mixell to go drinking with them at the Hidden Door Club. There, Routzong and Larney bought Mixwell numerous drinks and succeeded in getting him very drunk.

The three left the Hidden Door Club together shortly after midnight to return to the barracks. On the way back, they stopped to rest near the Airborne towers on Eubanks Field. Mixwell laid down on a bench and passed out. Larney and Routzong removed the key to Mixell's wall locker from Mixell's "dog tag" chain and returned to the barracks to steal his money. While Routzong distracted the hall guard, Larney went into Mixwell's room, opened his wall locker and removed the $460. Rutzong and Larney later divided the money.

Both Larney and Routzong were found guilty and sentenced by Col. Sebert Trail, the military judge. Trail sentenced each to be reduced, to forfeit all pay and allowances and to be discharged with a dishonorable discharge. He sentenced Rutzong to be confined at hard labor for three years and he sentenced Larney, who has received three prior Article 15's, to be confined at hard labor for 3 ½ years.

Pvt. 2 Charles P. Crenshaw, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, was convicted by a special court-martial on Nov. 26, 1986. Crenshaw was convicted of one specification of desertion, one of absent without leave and two of writing worthless checks.

Crenshaw first went absent without leave May 1. He stayed gone until July 21. While he was gone, it was learned that he wrote two bad checks to the post exchange, each for $100. Upon his return, Crenshaw was charged with these offenses.

However, before he could be brought to trial, he went AWOL again on Sept. 30. This time he stayed AWOL until he was apprehended by civilian police on Oct. 29. Maj. Donald A. Rogers, the military judge, sentenced Crenshaw to be reduced from E2 to E1, to be confined at hard labor for 60 days, to forfeit $426 per month for six months and to be given a bad conduct discharge.

include sufficient night lights to prevent accidents in stairwells and other dangerous areas. But, unoccupied buildings have no requirement for safety lighting.

But, security lighting is required where arms and ammunition are stored, hangars, motor pools and in Finance and Accounting facilities. All other unoccupied facilities require that the Physical Security Section of the Military Police provide justification.

Eliminating this unneccessary electricity consumption, will benefit all during the air conditioning season, when the demand for electricity skyrockets.

In the heating season, our demand for natural gas is three time that for electricity and offers the greatest opportunities for saving energy.

Gas consumption can best be monitored by controlling building temperatures along with weatherproffing to prevent the loss of hearted air.

For every degree above the authorized 65 degrees, an individual consumes from three to five percent more fuel.

If the thermostat will not control the heating unit, please call the Directoriate of Engineers and Housing for repair, and you too will be in touch with the energy saving program.

mountaineers another opportunity to excel. According to the instructors, it is one of the Army's toughest courses. Soldiers tackled the course in squads and were on a time schedule based on the number of members in each squad.

"The obstacle course was really a challenge, especially toward the end at the commando crawl," Pvt. 2 Russ Marshall, who was attached to Company C. "Actually, all of the training I'm receiving is great because I'm a chaplain's assistant and don't get to train like this very often," he said.

"Waterborne" training was also popular among many of the troops. They didn't even mind walking around sloshing in their boots all day. To begin with, soldiers jumped from a Landing Craft, Medium in the Fort Sherman lagoon and swam 200 meters in less than 10 minutes wearing fatigues, Load-Bearing Equipment and carrying their weapon. While waterborne, the troops also practiced launching and maneuvering Zodiac boats, constructing rope bridges and making rafts from their ponchos and gear.

The mountain soldiers also learned various jungle combat techniques, tracking and guerrilla warfare. An overnight land navigation exercise was conducted during the first week.

Week two of JOTC was dedicated to testing the skills the soldiers learned the week before. It also included two days of combat patrolling and long-range reconnaissances.

Sgt. Daryl Donnell, squad leader in the motar platoon of Headquarters and Headquarters Company said, "The jungle is tough and very thick. Even though the clicks of the land navigation exercises are not too hard to find, it seems like it takes forever to get to them." "The compass is definitely more help than the maps when you're in the jungle," Donnell said.

The third week of training was the first chance the 10th Mountain soldiers had to put everything they learned to the real test, a three-day field training exercise in the heart of the jungle.

According to Williamson, one of the goals of the JOTC is to promote the importance of squad leaders and to give them a chance to lead their squads on missions with the final authority being that of the squad leader.

The 10th Mountain squads were given ample opportunity to prove their worthiness to their leaders in their experiences at the JOTC.

Don't count gifts before opening them

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Everybody has a Christmas they single out as the most memorable. It might be the time Daddy cut his finger while carving the turkey, and the whole family ended up rushing him to the emergency room.

Or maybe it's the time Santa brought that special gift you'd been dreaming of all year long, the one that Momma said was much too expensive for the likes of you.

I'll never forget the year I wanted a fur coat from Santa.

Never mind that the silver fox I had my eye on had a price tag of $598. It was on sale and did I ever look gorgeous in it.

I dragged my 'Santa' to the fur display at Gayfers every time we went shopping, then "ooohed and aaahed" at my reflection in dressing room mirrors.

Though I'm no actress, I really believe I deserved an Oscar in the special achievement category for my performance. Nobody could have missed the clear hint I sent that year.

A week before Christmas, he brought home the gaily wrapped present, and what do you know, the box was just the right size to hold a silver fox coat.

Not only that, but when I pressed the box to my ear and shook it, the telltale rustling of fur could clearly be heard inside.

Well, that was all I needed. I promptly spread the word to anyone who would listen. I was getting a fur coat for Christmas. At work, all the girls were insanely jealous that I had such a wonderful gift waiting for me under my tree.

I tried not to act smug or snobbish, and assured everyone that they'd always be my friends, even when I wore my 'fox.'

I planned where I could wear it. That elegant fur would be perfect for a romantic night on the town atop my red silk dress, yet it was casual enough to keep away the cold at an Auburn football game.

Finally, the suspense became too much. A few days before Christmas, a girlfriend and I were shaking the box, listening to the rustle inside. "That doesn't sound like a fur to me," she said cattily.

So we carefully lifted the tape on one end and managed to steal a peak inside. What met our eyes but gray wool!

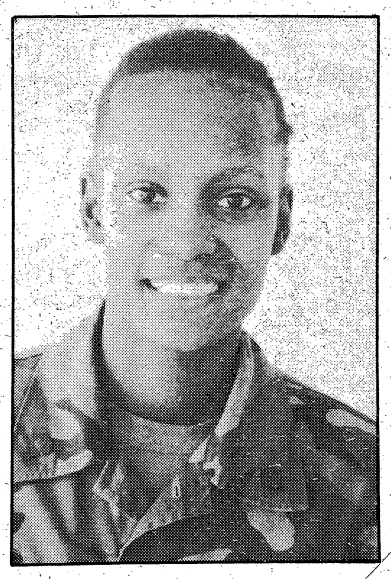
It was a coat; it was from Gayfers, but it was not my silver fox fur.

There are morals here. Don't count your fox fur before it's 'hatched' comes to mind. Don't run your mouth, lest you spend the next year living down the embarassment.

But the most important lesson is this. If you're expecting a fantastic gift, be sure and open it before Christmas. Then you'll have time to swallow your disappointment and put on a good show of delight Christmas morning.

Just be thankful you have presents under the tree and not a bundle of switches.

Various voices



Which Christmas stands out the most in your memory and why?

SP4 Eric Hill, Protocol — "I don't remember exactly what year it was, but I know I was in junior high school. My Uncle Ray took my sister and me shopping. He gave us a cart and let us get whatever we wanted."

2nd Lt. Kenneth Lewis, Hq. Co., The School Brigade — "The Christmas of 1985 is the one I remember most. I was just getting out of basic training and after being away for so long, it was nice to be back with my family."

SP4 Sharon Bass, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade - "The Christmas of 1976 will always be most memorable for me. I was adopted just before Christmas and the fact that a family really wanted me, and gave me their name, made that Christmas really special."

Lt. Col. Jack Pryor, Operations Group, Fort Irwin, Calif. - "In 1968 I spent Christmas in Vietnam. I will always remember that day. A truce was made for the holiday but it was broken and we ended up in a firefight. Someone was looking out for us that night because we all survived."

About the cover

Bill Walton, an information specialist and amateur photographer in the Public Information Section of the Public Affairs Office, prepared the front page cover.

Using a fisheye lens, he took photos of the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, Improved TOW Vehicle, UH60 Blackhawk helicopter and the High Mobility Multi-purpose Wheeled Vehicle.

Next he shot a photo of a tree with bulbs, using a 50mm lens, and then superimposed the pictures of Army vehicles onto the Christmas tree photo.

Carol Bunn, an artist in the Creative Design Department at the Ledger-Enquirer Newspapers, then touched up the photo with an air brush to make the photo look more realistic.

The Bayonet extends a well deserved thank you for their special efforts on a job well done.

Members of armed forces ensure peace, freedom for all Americans

As 1986 draws to a close and the holiday season fills the earth with the spirit of peace and joy, I would like you, the men and women of the United Staes Armed Forces, to know of my profound thanks for all you have done to enable America to enjoy another year of freedom and peace.

Believing in miracles isn't always the fashion in our Modern Age. In a world of technological wizardry in which we too often assume that the future lies totally in our control, it is almost too much for us to accept that the course of human history could be changed so suddenly as it was by the events of that first Christmas Day.

The ancient world, like our own, knew the bitter fruit of enmity between nations, and many people looked for the coming of a messiah who would rule by temporal power. But that miraculous scene that has been the theme of countless composers, painters and poets — Mary and Joseph and the Christ-child in the stable at Bethlehem — tells us by its intimacy of a different power, an inward peace, that is greater than any other.

We cannot properly see the year pass without expressing the hope once more that this message of peace and joy will someday reach all men.

Nancy and I send each of you, and your families, our warmest wishes for the holiday season, for joy in celebration wherever duty finds you, and for health and prosperity throughout the New Year.

God bless you, and God bless America.

Ronald Reagan
Commander in chief

Commander's comments

I want to thank each commander, officer, non-commissioned officer and leader, and especially every member of the Fort Benning community, including employees and family members, for accomplishing our goal of a fatality-free Thanksgiving holiday.

To mai tain this excellent record, we must continue to practice good safety habits at all times. We cannot rest on our laurels. We must not lower our gurad.

The Cristmas and New Year's holidays will offer even greater opportunity for tragedy with many more preson off for the holidays, attending parties, adding to the traffic congestion, coping with the bad weather, and traveling long distance. By keeping a state of safety consciousness in every thing we do, we can keep our fatality-free record going.

Once again, thanks to all of you for a job well done. I am sincerely pleaed to have every one of you back at Fort Benning.

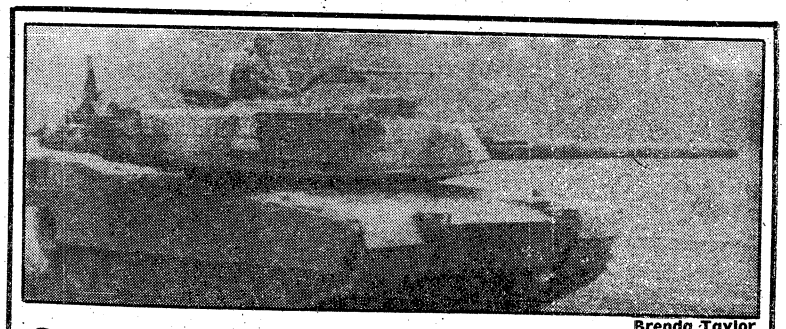
Soldiers stand guard for all at Christmas

As we approach one of the most significant holiday periods of the year, I want to extend my personal best wishes to every member of the Armed Forces and your families for a happy holiday season and a wonderful 1987.



To those of you in uniform whose duties keep you from sharing the joys of Christmas and Hanukkah with your loved ones, I extend a special thank you.

Many of you will spend this special season longing for "Christmas Past," when you were able to celebrate with family and friends. I hope you will take comfort in remembering one particular "Christmas Past," when Gen. George Washington and his ragged but brave citizen-soldiers crossed the freezing Delaware River to surprise and defeat the enemy, and turn the tide in the fight for independence.

Their selfless sacrifice, like yours, has earned America the peace and freedom we enjoy every day of the year. There is great comfort in that.

Your commitment has allowed all Americans to enjoy a peaceful "Christmas Present," and to look forward to the "Christmas Future" with faith, hope and the knowledge that America does indeed remain the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Caspar Weinberger
Secretary of Defense

'Peace on earth, goodwill among men' worthy mission

As we approach the most festive and celebrated holidays of the year, Mrs. Vuono and I extend warmest wishes and greetings to the military and civilian families throughout the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command.

This time of year is a time of peace, joy and happiness, as well as a time to renew old acquaintances, to reunite with families and to recommit yourself to those values which help improve the quality of life in America for all of its citizens.

One of the major themes promoted during the Yuletide season is peace among all men and nations throughout the world. Your working within TRADOC, whether civilian or military, is a large part of the national and international effort to maintain peace throughout the world.

Our reaffirmation to our national values which address our ability to live and work harmoniously as a nation and with our allies and neighboring countries is what "peace on earth, goodwill toward men" is all about.

As we celebrate the holiday season with religious observances, social and family gatherings, shopping and exchanging gifts, let us remember all those who have served our nation to protect our way of life.

Best wishes to you and your families for a safe and joyous holiday, and a productive and fulfilling New Year.

Carl E. Vuono
General, USA
Commanding

Alcohol, automobile dangerous combination in holiday season

During the Christmas-New Year holiday period, most of you will join family and friends in the traditional celebrations of the season. The holiday spirit can be spoiled by carelessness and disregard for the increased risks of the period.

Unfortunately, during this period, the consumption of alcohol and the number of impaired drivers on the roads increases dramatically; consequently, your chances of being killed by a drunken driver are also markedly increased.

I urge each and every one of you to use restraint and common sense to prevent you, your family and friends or others from becoming victims in a traffic accident.

While attending parties and family gatherings where alcohol is served, exercise restraint. Remember that time is the only way to become sober. Select a non-drinking member of the party to be the designated driver. Don't allow your friends to drive drunk.

Christmas is a season for thinking of others and giving. The best present you could possibly give your family is yourself free from accident.

I wish all Fort Benning personnel a joyous and accident-free Christmas and New Year.

Soldiers from the Army Training Center prepare for their journey home.

Soldiers head home for Christmas

Story and photo by Shawn Bryson
The Bayonet staff writer

Approximately 3,750 infantry trainees from the Army Training Center's two brigades are now on a two-week vacation due to the holidays.

Since 1976, Army basic trainees whose training dates include Christmas, have participated in the Exodus program, according to David Christianson, scheduling technician for the training center.

Exodus was created to help those trainees who chose to take leave during their two-week break. Scores of commercial buses crammed onto Kannel Field here, Dec. 18, to take trainees home for the holidays and to the Atlanta airport.

The trainees were all smiles as they loaded their duffle bags onto the buses headed all over the country. Pvt. 1 James Pingleton, Company D., 1st Battalion, 1st Brigade was looking very forward to break as he waited in line to board a bus going to Indiana. "I'm going to visit my grandparents for the holidays. I plan to keep myself on the same physical training program I'm on now so I don't have to start all over again when I return," Pingleton said.

According to PFC Gregory Thorson, Company B., 4th Battalion, 2nd Training Brigade, "Everyone is really glad to get out of here for a change of pace. I'm going home to Chicago and plan to do some partying, but I'm going to try to keep in shape while I'm away," he said.

"I'm in the National Gaurd and have been here for two months now so the hard part is over and I really don't need this break," said Pvt. 1 Jose Morales, Company A., 9th Battalion, 2nd Training Brigade. "However, I am looking forward to going home to Texas, being with my wife and doing some traveling," he said.

According to Drill Sergeant Jimmy Moore, Company A., 9th Battalion, 2nd Training Brigade, when some of the soldiers return from their leave, it will be like day one of basic all over again. "But I think that the majority of my trainees will return ready to jump right in again," Moore said.

Call Safetycab for ride home

For the fourth straight year, the Safetycab program is in place to keep drunken drivers off area highways.

Kay Denes, a spokeswoman for the program, said all a person has to do is call 323-0110 and they'll get a free cab ride home.

The free rides will be provided each night between 7 p.m. and 3 a.m., now through the morning hours of Jan. 1.

"We are also encouraging people to 'designate a driver' in their group, a person who does not drink at all so he can drive home," she said.

While the focus of the Safetycab program is keeping people from drinking and driving when patronizing local businesses, they also pick up people at private residences. "We don't care where the person is coming from, as long as they don't drive while under the influence," Ms. Denes said.

The Bradley Center, Ledger-Enquirer newspapers and the Association of the U.S. Army are sponsoring the program.

Auto tag office to open on post

Chattahoochee County will open an automobile tag office on post early next month, to serve the estimated 20,000 country residents who are military.

The office will be upstairs at the First National Bank building on Wold Avenue.

The present tag and tax office at the courthouse in Cusseta will close Dec. 29 through Jan. 2 while the new office is being prepared.

The office will be open from 8 a.m. to noon and 1 to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

The office will sell tags under a new system of staggered deadlines, in an effort to reduce long lines.

Persons whose last names begin with the letters A through D must buy tags in January. Names in E-K must buy tags in February. Names in L-R must buy tags in March and names S-Z must buy tags in April.

After the tag season ends, the Fort Benning office will probably be open only two or three days each week.

Chattahoochee County's portion of Fort Benning includes everything south of Upatoi Creek. If you're not sure which county you live in, call the tag office at 989-3897.

Friday declared federal holiday

Federal employees will have the day off Friday, to observe the Christmas holiday.

President Ronald Reagan proclaimed Friday an official federal holiday late last week.

No trash pick-up planned Thursday

There will be no trash pick-up in family housing areas on Christmas Day. Trash pick-up in areas normally scheduled for Thursday will be picked up today.

Post pharmacies close for Christmas

The Pharmacy at Martin Army Community, will be closed Dec. 25 and Jan. 1 for the holidays.

The Refill Pharmacy at the main mall will close Dec. 25, 26 and Jan. 1.

For more closings, see page 13.

Energy Update

RANGER, Fort Lewis, Wash.

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — You can light up your home, office, or other area during the holidays — and still lighten the energy use. Just follow some of these tips:

- Use fluorescent lights whenever you can; they use less energy than incandescent bulbs.
- Consider fluorescent lighting for the kitchen sink and countertop area.
- The belief once held that it's cheaper to leave fluorescent lights on than turn them off for a short time and then restart them has been proven false. If the light's off for a few seconds, that saves more energy than is needed to fire it up again.

Operation Holiday kicks off, full slate of activities planned

Story and photo by Ann McDonald
The Bayonet staff writer

It's official. The Chattahoochee Valley, Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army recently kicked off the 7th annual "Operation Holiday," at the Columbus Government Center.

Operation Holiday is a combination of events available to single or unaccompanied soldiers staying on post for the holidays.

The events are funded through AUSA, as well as donations from local businesses and citizens. It provides the local community a chance to express its appreciation to soldiers.

During the opening ceremony, Columbus mayor J.W. "Bill" Feighner was honored for his support of the military.

"Approximately 2,100 soldiers are participating in the events," said Capt. Thomas Johnston, Operation Holiday coordinator at the Army Training Center. "The Atlanta Hawks versus the New York Knicks basketball game on Jan. 3 seems to be the most popular event."

Distance and expense seemed to be the biggest reasn for soldiers staying behind. "My home is in Alaska," one soldier said, while another said he was from California.

Soldiers who are interested in taking part in Operation Holiday can sign up by contacting their first sergeant.

The complete schedule of events is:

Dec. 24 — Tour TV 9 and Good Day Show, 11 a.m.

Tour Little White House, 2 p.m.

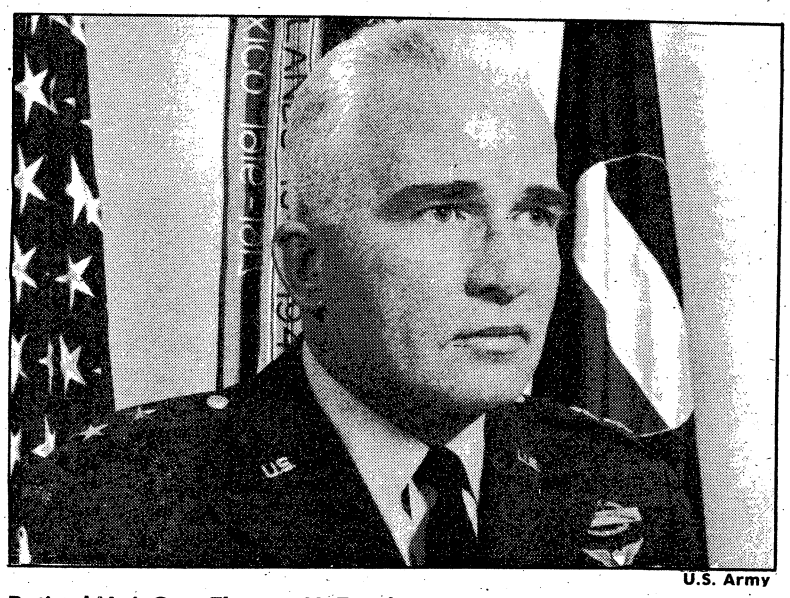
Dec. 25 — Blue Grey Game, Montgomery, noon.

Dec. 26 — Tour Confederate Naval Museum, 2 p.m.

Dec. 27 — Atlanta Hawks vs Golden State Warriors, 7 p.m.

Dec. 29 — Tour Sunshine Bakery, 9 a.m.
Tour Little White House, 2 p.m.

Dec. 30 — Tour Royal Crown, 9:30 a.m.
Forsythe and Dawn Magic Show, 1:30 p.m.
Leather and Lace (Southern rock and seasonal music), 2:30 p.m.
Tour WDAK-WSTH, 2 p.m.



Jan. 2 — Tour Dolly Madison Bakery, 9:30 a.m.
Tour Confederate Naval Museum, 10 a.m.
Tour Andersonville National Cemetery, 2 p.m.

Jan. 3 — Atlanta Hawks vs NY Knicks, 7 p.m.

AUSA Queen Daniella Washington chats with guests after opening ceremonies.

Former Fort Benning commander Maj. Gen. Thomas M. Tarpley dies

U.S. Army

Retired Maj. Gen. Thomas M. Tarpley

The Bayonet staff

Retired Maj. Gen. Thomas M. Tarpley, 64, died Dec. 18 at his home in Green Island Hills.

Tarpley served as Fort Benning's commanding general from 1973 to 1975.

After retiring from the Army in 1975, he was a vice president at the First National Bank until 1981.

Tarpley served in World War II and Vietnam, beginning his career as an Army officer in 1944 after graduating from the United States Military Academy.

After undergoing infantry training at Fort Benning, Tarpley served as a platoon leader with the 66th Infantry Division in Europe. The Army officer won his first Bronze Star in the European Theater, along with a Combat Infantryman Badge.

After his return from Europe in 1947, he served as a company commander at Fort Riley, Kan. and was sent to Turkey in 1952 as a member of an advisory team.

Tarpley served as an instructor at the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., from 1954 to 57 and then as an executive officer in Korea.

After a stint in the Pentagon and a command in Hawaii from 1963-66, Tarpley served as the commander of the 2nd Brigade, 25th Infantry Division in Vietnam.

He returned from Vietnam in 1967, having been awarded a star for his Combat Infantryman Badge, a second Bronze Star, the Air Medal with four Oak Leaf Clusters and two Legions of Merit.

He served for a short time at the Pentagon, where he was promoted to brigadier general and reassigned as the deputy commanding general of Fort Lewis, Wash.

Tarpley served as the commander of the "Screaming Eagles" of the 101st Airborne Division in 1971 in Vietnam.

In 1972, he commanded the

2/10th Dining Facility prepares for competition

SGM Edward McCurdy (left), a Training and Doctrine Command Food Service representative, watches as cooks at the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery serve breakfast to soldiers.

197th Inf. Bde PAO

This year many dining facilities will compete for the coveted Philip A. Connely award, presented to the Army's best dining facility by the Department of the Army. This year the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery dining facility is representing Fort Benning for small unit dining facilities.

"The Connely award," said Capt. Gifford Slater, dining facility officer, "gives military mess halls recognition for exellence in food service."

SGM Edward McCurdy and SGM Leo Spivey, TRADOC Food Service Representatives from Fort Monroe, Virginia, came to the 197th Infantry Brigade to inspect the 2-10 dining facility.

"We basically look over the whole dining facility," explained SGM Spivey. "Sanitation as well as administration is graded. One area does not decide it for us, it is a combination of everything."

During preparation for the inspection team, new convection ovens were brought into the mess hall the replace the old ones.

Other preparations included sanitizing the dining and kitchen areas, complete organization of the record keeping system and cook training on recipe cards.

The two inspecting sergeants major examined every aspect of the dining facility. Cooks were asked questions on general knowledge and food preparation.

"I think we did a really good job in preparing for the inspection," stated Slater. "We feel that we are winners just by getting this far."

Depending on how well 2-10 did on this inspection, they will know in February whether or not they will represent TRADOC for the award's final competition.

The Philip A. Connely award will be presented to the U.S. Army's best mess hall in Miami, Florida sometime in August.

'Santa' shows up at Christmas party

by Emory Smith
5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade

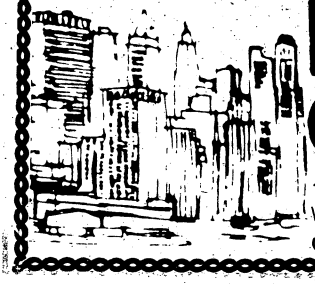
The 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade resounded with the sounds of friends gathering, merry-making and the patter of little feet. The occasion was a party to celebrate America's favorite holiday — Christmas.

There was a full schedule of events to keep everyone entertained and laughing. The first event was a spellbinding performance by Forsythe the Magician. He kept the audience mesmerized with his many feats of magic. The children were held spellbound with a live rabbit, a magic radio, rope tricks, card tricks, and other displays of magic.

Next, a chorus composed of seven soldiers accompanied by a pianist, entertained by singing all of the Christmas carol favorites. They especially created a festive mood by getting everyone to sing a joyous version of Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer.

The evening kept rolling with the next guest being the guest of honor, Santa Claus, who was none other than Michael Williams.

The next and final event was the breaking of the pinata. The pinata proved elusive for awhile but finally fell prey to an accurate swing sending children scrambling for candy.



Music, food, entertaining, the Christmas spirit and the sounds of happy children made this Christmas Party a very special 5th Battalion success story.

Around Fort Benning

Editor's Note: "Around Fort Benning" is a weekly column designed to highlight the activities of post units. Its purpose is to provide an outlet for brief stories, written by members of the featured unit, concerning changes of command, significant awards and some training exercises.

Input is welcome from all sources and should be submitted to the Editor in Room 601, Building 4 by 11 a.m. Monday. All input must be typed, double-spaced with the name and specific unit of the writer and should be limited to two pages. Submissions will be subject to standard editing and condensing.

High quality black and white photographs will also be considered for publication in this column.

DEH

While soldiers take a much-deserved break in training during the Christmas holidays, the Range Maintenance Division gears up for some extensive maintenance on ranges and training areas around Fort Benning. A vital part of the Directorate of Engineering & Housing Division is a multi-skilled shop which directly supports troop training on post.

Often maintenance and repairs cannot be performed at other times without interruption of training. Many live fire ranges such as Malone 3, 11, 12, 13, and 14, are in a constant training status and can only be serviced during the Christmas holidays, and the crew at Range Maintenance Division takes full advantage of his opportunity.

Motor graders, bulldozers, scraper pans, dump trucks, tractors, and utility trucks will be moving out of the training brigade ranges, the U.S. Army Marksmanship ranges, USAIS and USARSA ranges, and DPTM ranges to paint, grade, gravel, and make general repairs so that returning soldiers can conduct training under the best possible conditions.

Some of Range Maintenance Division's larger projects this Christmas will be repairing movers and grading and clearing on Bradley ranges. Electricians will also be busy making electrical repairs at Pierce Range and on the Malone Complex. Also, a new drainage system on Malone 22 will be completed in time for training to begin on Jan. 5, 1987.

Like all other divisions in the DEH, the Range Maintenance Division is making every effort to keep Fort Benning the best training post Army-wide. — June Weeks, Range Maintenance Division.

34th Med.

The 34th Medical Battalion welcomed the holiday season by conducting two major Christmas Parties. The first was an officer Dress Blue Formal which was held at Ramada City Center. The festive occasion was attended by over eighty officers and their guests.

The Christmas dinner consisted of turkey with all the trimmings and was served in a most traditional fashion. After dinner the battalion commander Lt. Col. Robert D. Deaderick haled the new officers and presented farewelling gifts to the officers leaving the battalion. Afterwards, the entire group moved into Ramada's Celebration Night Club for an evening of dance.

Later that week, the entire battalion held a Christmas party for its soldiers and their families. The 498th Air Ambulance Company donated the use of their aircraft hanger for the occasion. The party was attended by no other than himself, Santa Claus. Kris Kringle gave gifts to the boys and girls and patiently posed for pictures. The children also made decorations to hang on the Christmas trees at the party.

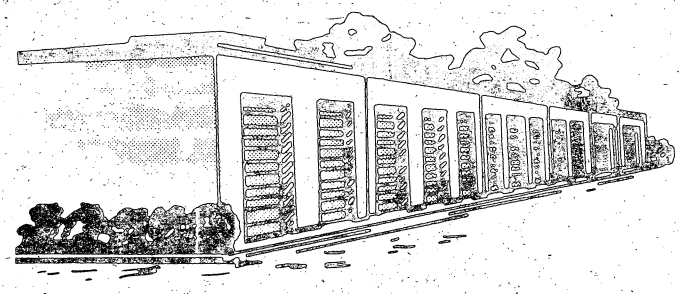
The 34th Medical Battalion also provided Christmas movies for the children to watch. Dinner was served by the dining facility staff and music was played by soldiers from the 690th Ground Ambulance Company. Dozens and dozens of cookies were baked by the oficers and senior noncommissioned officer's wives to present to the families. All and all, both occasions provided many smiles and lots of shared laughter. — Anthony Intrepido, 34th Medical Battalion.

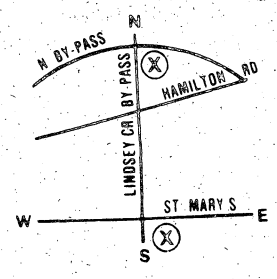
36th Engrs.

Many soldiers at the 36th Engineer Group were beginning to feel like specimens under a microscope this month.

But the troops from various units within the group all pulled through and passed the annual command inspections. "The soldiers have spent a lot of time preparing for the inspections. It's long term, over the months getting their teams together. So when there is an inspection, they're ready," said Lt. Col. Tom A. York, executive officer of the group.

The following units were inspected by Col. Paul Y. Chinen, 36th Group commander: Headquarters, Headquarters Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 215th Area Finance Service Center, the 608th Ordnance Company, the 533rd Transportation Company, the 586th Engineer Company and Headquarters Company of the 67th Maintenance Battalion.





Last week the 586th stood by while their motor pool was inspected. "We had roughly 125 vehicles inspected ranging from the Jeep to Bridge Transporters," said 1st Sgt. Henry Byrd.

"We had approximately 140 soldiers involved in the on-going preparations, but it went well," Byrd said.

Commander of the HHC, 43rd Engineer Battalion said that his Maintenance Section, including tools and vehicles at the motor pool, was inspected. "I think we did satisfactory," said Capt. Walter R. Mitchell.

York had more favorable things to say about Mitchell's Company. "Their operations have been a model for the group "They share information among the companies as they determine what the standards are and that's really teamwork. The results have been better than expected," York said.— Laurie J. Hill, 36th Engineer Group correspondent

Armor soldiers qualify on machine guns at Ruth Range

Steve Simpson

Sgt. Frank Napier (top), HHC, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, adjusts the site mechanism on an M2-.50 caliber machine gun while SSgt. Leslie Ferrell prepares to fire the weapon.

by Sally Roberts
197th Inf. Bde. PAO

Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor recently hit the range to qualify with M2-.50 caliber machine guns. The training emphasized qualification for support soldiers, who often spend more time behind the wheel of a 2 ½ ton truck than behind the sites of such a weapon.

Soldiers from the battalion's scout, mortar, staff and maintenance platoons became familiar with their weapon's functions and capabilities.

"The battalion's recovery vehicles, maintenance tracked vehicles and cargo trucks have M2 machine guns assigned to them," said 1st Lt. Gregory Burke, scout platoon leader. "This gives these soldiers a chance to learn about their weapons and fire them. They need to know how to hit a target rather than just throw rounds down range."

The training stressed assembly and disassembly of the .50 cal, maintenance and cleaning of the weapon and applying immediate action to clear a jammed weapon.

After targeting the weapons to ensure that the site picture is on the line with the weapon's site, the soldiers qualified, firing the weapons on automatic at targets with ranges from 500 meters to 1000 meters. The soldiers fired their weapons from the prone, sitting, and standing positions.

The training took place on Fort Benning's Ruth Range.

Aviators learn how to make 'deck landings'

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

An aviation crew from the 498th Air Ambulance Company learned how to land on a landing zone that moves up and down and from left to right, courtesy of the U.S. Navy and Marine Corps.

Recently, Capt. John Bukartek, CWO3 Robert Stitt, Sgt. Harlie Clark and SP4 Michael Hines trained at Norfolk, Va., in an intensive course taught by the U.S. Navy called Deck Landing Qualification.

According to Bukartek, a pilot, "Learning how to land on and take off from the deck of a ship is important to the mission of the 498th. We have a commitment for medical evacuation missions in Honduras and Panama. Evacuating patients from the mainland to a hospital ship is a distinct possibility and if we don't know how to land on or take off from a ship we can't accomplish that mission."

Stitt, who is also a pilot, said the training consisted of two parts. "First, we practiced deck landing on the ground in Norfolk. The Navy has an area painted exactly like the landing area on a ship. We practiced flight traffic patterns and landings, doing about 15 iterations each. Then we flew 15 miles out to the ship, the U.S.S. Peterson, a destroyer, for our on-board training."

The flight to the Peterson proved to be the most challenging part of the training for Clark, a crew chief. "The Army uses a single engine aircraft, versus the Navy, which uses dual engines. When you're flying over water and there's nothing else in sight but water and you have engine problems, you're going into the drink if you're in a single engine aircraft, like we were in. A Navy aircraft can get back to shore on one of its two engines. If we would have had engine problems we would have been all wet. It wasn't a pleasant experience," said Clark.

Arriving safely on the destroyer, the Army air crew immediately began its on-board training.

"The Navy put a Marine helicopter pilot who was qualified as a deck landing instructor in our aircraft. He taught and coached us through the techniques of landing and taking off from a ship," Stitt said.

According to Bukartek and Stitt, landing on a ship's deck is much different than landing on solid ground.

"The landing target is moving. That's really different. The Peterson would cruise at about 15 knots and, because of the water, waves and current, the ship moved up and down, left and right. Putting our aircraft down was difficult," Stitt said.

Besides training, the Army-aircrew-turned-swabbies also received a tour of the Peterson, an anti-submarine warfare vessel, and briefings from all major departments on the ship.

"We got in a lot of great training and we're now qualified to land on any Navy ship from destroyer on up. This gives us the ability to provide better medical care to soldiers, which is what we're all about," Bukartek said.

Artist's sculptured creations bring pleasure to eye, palate

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

CWO2 Bobby Perry is a Fort Benning artist. But he doesn't use paints or words or sculpting tools to create his masterpieces. Perry uses candy, bread dough, meats and vegetables for his artistic creations. He is a culinary artist.

"When I arrived at Fort Benning four years ago the chief of the post's Culinary Art's Team was leaving. They needed someone to head it so I volunteered and went right to the Culinary Art's Workshop at Fort Lee, Va.," Perry said.

The chief warrant officer, who is the food advisor for the 36th Engineer Group, said the two week workshop at Fort Lee prepared him for culinary arts competition.

"The workshop gave me the cooking skills I needed for competition. It refined my skills and taught me things like fancy cake decoration, how to make pastries, pates, mousses, how to do large centerpieces made out of candy and cooking and setting up buffets for competition," he said.

Perry's specialty is breads.

"I work with all types of doughs, like rye, wheat and sourdough. I use the bread to create shapes and figures. The largest piece I have ever done out of bread was a huge medieval castle with walls, turrets and windows. It took a lot of time and work," Perry said.

The 13-year Army veteran said he wanted to be a cook in the Army since high school. Since joining the Army he has gone from food preparer to food advisor. He provides food expertise to all dining facilities within the 36th Engineer Group in the areas of food preparation, food management and administration.

The Fort Benning Culinary Arts Team, which travels to Fort Lee in March for the annual Culinary Arts Competition, has won two silver and one bronze medal since Perry has led them.

US Army

CWO2 Bobby Perry won a prize for this Doughboy Statue made out of bread dough.

Perry says he would like to spend at least 20 years in the Army and then go to Europe to train as a chef.

"I was in Germany for two years and was very impressed with what the German chefs did with chocolate, beef and duck. I'd like to hire on as an apprentice chef to a German chef and learn their techniques of continental cooking," Perry said.

Besides serving as a food advisor and the chief of the Culinary Arts Team, Perry also does specialty cooking during holidays.

"I'm working on a two-tier cake right now for the Group's Christmas Party for children. I'm going to create figures showing the 12 days of Christmas on the first tier and Santa Claus and his reindeers on the top," he said.

Despite his skill, Perry said he doesn't do the cooking at home.

"My wife does all the cooking at home and she says all I do is criticize her food. When you look at and comment on food all day I guess you take that attitude home with you," Perry said.

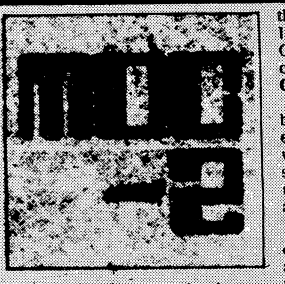
Fleming Cos. Adopt Anti-Takeover Plan

Following the example set by other publicly held companies, Fleming Cos. has adopted an anti-takeover plan.

Fleming, which has a Columbus distribution center, said the plan isn't in response "to any known effort to acquire control of the company."

For each common share held on July 7, shareholders would receive the right to buy one common share for $150 if a person or group acquired 20 percent or more of Fleming's stock. The right also would apply if a person or group initiated an offer to buy 30 percent or more of the company's stock.



Closings Won't Hurt Swift

Levi Strauss & Co.'s recent closing of three plants in Texas and Virginia will have no effect on Columbus' Swift Textiles, the world's third largest producer of denim.

Swift chairman Bob Koon said the Levi plants being closed were designed to produce women's wear and slacks, not denim jeans. They were later converted to jeans plants, but at a "very high cost," said Koon.

Levi, which is Swift's biggest customer, "will make up that production" by shifting the work to other plants, said Koon. "They will be producing the same number of pairs of jeans."

There will be "no change whatsoever," at Swift as a result of the plants' closings, he said.

Brigade wins safety award

by Sally Roberts
197th Inf. Bde PAO

The 197th Infantry Brigade was recently recognized for its high safety standards by receiving the Annual Safety Award. Maj. Gen. Edward H. Burba Jr., Post Commander presented the award to Col. William Hartzog, 197th Infantry Brigade commander, commending the Brigade soldiers for a decrease in accidents.

"Your leadership and emphasis on safety is evident by the decrease shown in the number of accidents," Maj. Gen. Burba said. "From all indications, your troops are doing an outstanding job."

The Annual Safety Award is presented to the unit which has shown a decrease in the number of accidents occuring in on-duty operations as well as off-duty activities. The statistics and overall management of Fort Benning units' records are kept by the Post Safety Office.

Mr. Fred Young, Post Safety manager said, "The award is not just based on the unit with the least number of accidents. The award is given to the unit which shows the greatest decrease in the number of accidents in contrast to their record of last year."

Safety is stressed among all Brigade soldiers while they perform daily duties, whether it be in the motor pool pulling maintenance on a vehicle, while participating in field training or while off duty. Their concious efforts have created a safer working environment on Kelley Hill

The Fort Benning Management Association is seeking applicants for a one-year graduate scholarship to Troy State University, to be awarded in January 1987.

All active duty and retired military personnel and current or retired federal employees and their family members residing within a 50-mile radius of the Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning area are eligible to compete for this scholarship.

The scholarship is intended for persons who are interested in graduate study in the field of management or business. It must be used during the winter through fall 1987 period.

Applicants should write a letter to the association, requesting consideration for the scholarship, and include highlights of their academic careers and extracurricular activities.

The letter should also explain why the applicant should be awarded the scholarship. If available, applicants should include a copy of undergraduate transcripts, a copy of a completed application to TSU and a copy of their MAT score. They must also submit three letters of recommendation with at least one, if practical, from a school official familiar with their academic work, and a statement of employment indicating name and address of employer and employee's job title.

Applications must be submitted to James Kvicala or Mary Burt in Building 4, Room 526, no later than Dec. 29.

For more information, call 545-2325.

PFC Allen Goetz stands on Yankee Road, a ribbon of red mud, and shoots an azimuth with his compass.

Checking his map and direction one more time, he steps into the dark pine tree forest, thick with undergrowth. He is looking for the first of many points on the Yankee Road Land Navigation test site. He seeks the Expert Infantryman's Badge.

Goetz and 221 other soldiers from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, road marched, ran, did sit-ups and push-ups and were tested on 40 basic soldier skills recently, competing for the EIB.

"The EIB is much more than just earning a badge. The EIB recognizes infantrymen who attain a high degree of professional skills and excellence," said SFC Joseph Thompson, the non-commissioned officer in charge of the 3-75th's EIB testing.

"It also identifies the infantryman who can expertly maintain, operate and employ his weapons and equipment, and the test itself is very challenging," he said.

To earn the EIB , a soldier must meet strict prerequisites and then pass specific tests, Thompson said.

"A soldier has to score at least 80 percent on his Skill Qualifications Test, volunteer for EIB testing and be recommended by his commander. Then he has to fire expert with the M16 rifle, score at least 80 percent on each of the three events of the Army Physical Fitness Test, complete a 12-mile road march in three hours or less and then immediately disassemble and assemble an M16 rifle. The soldier then has to pass 40 soldier skill tasks tested at 29 different stations," Thompson said.

A soldier can fail only two tasks and be retested on the failed tasks. If he passes the retests he can still qualify for the EIB. However, according to Thompson, if a soldier fails three or more tasks he is eliminated from the test.

The tasks include putting a Dragon anti-tank weapon together for firing, reducing a stoppage on an M16 rifle, searching a prisoner of war, throwing a hand grenade for accuracy and preparing a range card for an M60 machinegun.

PFC Russ Fleer, one of the EIB candidates, said that the night land navigation portion of the test was the most difficult for him.

"I felt well prepared but I just couldn't find the correct point. I hope to get it the second time around. It's the only task I missed," he said.

Fleer said he felt the key to passing the EIB test was to stay calm and take one task at a time. "You can't worry about the 39 other tasks. You have to concentrate on the one you're doing at the time and forget about the others," he said.

Thompson said there were three stations that seemed to be giving the soldiers problems.

"The tough stations seem to be the mechanical ambush using the Claymore mine, the nuclear, biological, chemical test and throwing hand grenades. It all boils down to the fact that the soldier can either do the task correctly or not. It's that simple," Thompson said.

Out of the 222 soldiers tested, 129 earned the coveted award.

Retired couple enjoys working as Red Cross volunteers

The Bayonet staff writer

There's an old saying in the Army that every new soldier learns by heart: "never volunteer." Lyle and Gertrude Bundt never learned that old saying.

Bundt, a retired Army colonel and his wife Gertrude, settled in this area in 1973 after a full Army career to live the good life. They planned on fishing, swimming and a summer home with lots of taking-it-easy. It didn't work out that way.

"After we retired we found that we had lots of things to do but not useful things. So we began volunteering," said Mrs. Bundt, a vivacious woman who is quick to smile.

Bundt, a dentist in the Army, began teaching cardio-pulmonary resuscitation for the Red Cross and currently puts in 16 hours of volunteer work weekly. He is also a member of the Harris County Volunteer Fire Department and became a member of the Audubon Society "...because I wanted to do something to preserve our environment," he said. "You can't just work your whole life and then stop. You have to do something that is useful to the community."

Mrs. Bundt recently received a 25-year service pin for her volunteer work with the Red Cross in the Blood Donor Program.

"I work in the Red Cross Hospice program now as a volunteer. I help take care of people who are spending their last days at home before they pass away. It makes me feel good to help them and makes me grateful for my life. Every day is special and I see it now working with these people," Mrs. Bundt said.

The couple also volunteer as sponsors for Allied officers assigned to Benning's Allied Student Training Detachment.

"We like having young people around and it's interesting having officers from foreign countries. We're sponsoring a captain from Belize right now. They come to our home, relax, eat and enjoy themselves," Mrs. Bundt said.

Being associated with the ASTD as sponsors allowed the Bundts to meet the president of Egypt during the Carter presidency.

"We were sponsoring an Egyptain captain at the time. Then Egyptian President Anwar Sadat was visiting President Carter in Plains, Ga., and Sadat wanted to see the Egyptain officers at Fort Benning. We got to go along as a sponsor of an Egyptian officer and met Sadat," Mrs. Bundt said.

Bundt feels everyone should volunteer and Mrs. Bundt feels the same way.

"When you retire you feel like you've worn out your usefulness, but you're needed. When I come home from volunteering and helping other people I know I'm worth my salt," Mrs. Bundt said.

VA Q&A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — Why is it necessary to have the property appraised when applying for a VA loan?

A — The law requires that the amount of the VA loan may not exceed the reasonable value of the property, construction, alterations, improvements, or repairs as determined by the VA. In order to reach this determination the VA requires an appraisal of the property by a designated appraiser.

Q — I understand that a recently passed law will subject veterans seeking care in VA facilities to new eligibility assessment procedures. Does this income-based assessment apply to VA programs such as the Vietnam Veterans Outreach Centers (Vet Centers), halfway houses and hospital-based home care?

A — Veterans receiving care in halfway houses and in the hospital-based home care program are subject to the eligibility assessment procedures. Veterans receiving counseling at Vietnam Veteran Outreach Centers (Vet Centers) are not.

Adult scout leaders recognized for their contributions

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas correspondent

The emphasis on training in any professional institution is based on strong leadership that usually results in better organization in meeting certain missions.

The same holds true for leadership training in the Boy Scouts of America.

Two adult scout leaders were recently awarded the highly cherished Wood Badge by the Fort Benning Chapter of the BSA. Jerry Asburry, Fort Benning Boy Scout coordinator and Richard Flack, unit commissioner for Troop 51, received their Wood Badges at the Annual Fort Benning BSA Recognition Banquet Nov. 5 at the Uchee Creek Lodge. The event was attended by the Fort Benning deputy commanding general, Brig. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey.

Asburry and Flack attended a one-week camp designed especially for scout leaders. The camp was attended by about 130 adult scout leaders from Columbus and surrounding areas.

"The camp put us in the same position as a new scout joining for the first time into a new pack or troop," said Asburry. "It makes an adult leader realize how much he doesn't know about being a scout leader by placing him in the boy scout's shoes, so to speak," he said.

"The object of the course is to 'learn as a boy scout learns'," said Flack. "It puts you on the boy's level and you get to do things in a camp environment with other leaders whom you haven't worked with in the past," he said.

In the Wood Badge program, scout leaders experience training at many levels beginning with an orientation, progressing through basic, advanced and supplemental training.

Wood Badge is advanced training that provides the troop leader with an opportunity to live the scouting experience over an extended period of time. It isn't intended to make counselors, managers or psychiatrists out of scoutmasters or troop leaders. "It is intended to help them develop into leaders who can plan and carry out good troop programs," Flack said.

According to Flack, the Wood Badge program begins with a plan of action. "This is a contract with yourself that outlines specific courses of action that will benefit the scouts with whom a scout leader works," he said.

Flack says that as the practical training proceeds, a scout leader will prepare his ticket following the advice and help of a coach or counselor. "At the end of the practical training, you begin to carry out a plan-work for your 'ticket'," Flack said. "A ticket committee or scout executive then works with you and monitors your progress," he said. Flack said this ticket must be completed before six months following completion of practical training, or before Nov. 30 of the second year following practical training. The final "test" is during the week-long camp.

"When a counselor agrees the terms of the ticket have been met, he recommends to the scout executive that you be awarded the Wood Badge," Flack said.

Fort Benning currently represents seven boy scout troops, ages 11 to 18, 10 cub scout packs, ages 7 to 10 and six explorer posts, ages 14 to 21.

Asburry, who is on reassignment to Camp Zama, Japan, will be replaced as Fort Benning Boy Scout coordinator by Bruce Kendall this month.

Students at special class get to refresh driving skills

by Ann M. McDonald
The Bayonet staff writer

Careless driving on Fort Benning means back to class on Saturday. Twice a month an Advanced Driver Education class is offered at Brown Hall, Building 328.

According to U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 190-5, any military member, dependant or civilian employee of Fort Benning who is cited for the following offenses must attend the class: reckless driving, driving under the influence, any "at fault" traffic accident or failure to wear a seatbelt. In addition, anyone who is cited for a moving violation twice within a 24-month period must also attend the class.

"Notification for attendance to the class is done with a disposition form from the Provost Marshals' office to unit commanders or supervisors," said Phyllis Taylor, USAIC Safety Office, "If you do not attend the class you are subject to suspension of post driving privileges."

Taylor says 10 to 15 people usually attend the 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. class. Instructors for the class are Willie Ross and Jack Oakland.

"Oakland and Ross also teach the Defensive Driving Course," she said, "But, this class is totally different. For example two hours are focused on drunken driving alone."

She added that the class is geared toward experienced drivers who have made a mistake, whereas the Defensive Driving Course is geared for younger drivers.

A 1st Infantry Training Brigade supply sergeant was recently convicted for selling marijuana, writing bad checks and stealing.

Sgt. Timothy E. Jenkins of Company A, 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, was convicted by a general court-martial and sentenced to confinement at hard labor for seven years.

Jenkins, formerly the supply sergeant for A-3-1, was charged with selling marijuana to trainees. It was also discovered that he took part in the theft of more than $2,000 of uniforms.

Jenkins was found guilty of distributing marijuana to three different trainees, possessing marijuana, stealing and selling the BDU's, and writing with intent to defraud, 27 worthless checks.

In addition to seven years of confinement, he was sentenced to be reduced to E-1, to forfeit all pay and allowances, and to be dishonorably discharged from the Army.

Spiritual

Hanukah has spiritual, historical significance

by Craig L. Allen
Reception Battalion Chaplain

At sundown Friday, Jews throughout the world begin the eight-day celebration of Hanukah.

Like all Jewish holidays, there is both an historical and a spiritual significance to Hanukah, reflecting the overriding Jewish view that God is a God of history who reveals His presence and purpose through His continual earthly involvement in the affairs of humanity. Historical events are evidence, in context, of divine order and intent.

The central theme of Hanukah is religious freedom. The festival commemorates the successful revolt of the Jews (led by Judah Maccabee) against the Syrians in 165-163 B.C.E. Antiochas, the king of the occupying Syrian Army, had forbidden the study of Judaism under penalty of death.

This act prompted the rebellion that ultimately reestablished Jewish autonomy in Palestine until the beginning of the Roman occupation in 63 B.C.E. Historians tell us that this was actually the 1st recorded war fought for religious freedom (1st and 2nd Book of the Maccabees).

A beautiful legend tells of the rededication of the holy temple in 163 B.C.E. after its defilement by the Syrians. Upon reentering the temple for the first time, the Maccabees found only enough holy oil to keep the eternal light burning for one day. However, we are told that "a great miracle happened there" and the oil burned for eight days allowing the Priest enough time to procure more so as to be able to maintain the continuous burning of the lamp as commanded in the Bible.

It is in remembrance of this event that Jewish families light a progressive number of candles in the Menorah (candelabra) for the eight nights of Hanukah.

Clearly the spirit of Hanukah served as a tangible inspiration to our American founding fathers when they wrote and established our federal constitution. Realizing the importance of "free exercise" for all religions, as well as the inherent dangers of state support of any one religion, the authors of the constitution were committed to the concept of separation of church and state. Consequently, the 1st Admendment was central to their vision of America.

It is this commitment to the U.S. Constitution that members of the Armed Forces affirm when they raise their right hand and take the oath of enlistment or commission.

Basic military and national values, such as loyalty to country and respect for its law, require that each of us continually do what we can to insure the two-fold right of "free exercise" as well as "non-obstruction" of religious freedom. The challenge is to recognize where and when problems or violations occur and to have the moral courage to act, even when such actions may be difficult because of personal emotional involvement with an issue.

School prayer is a case in point. As tempting as it would be for chaplains to favor the encourage-

Birth of Jesus good reason for Christians to celebrate

The School Brigade

"When the time had fully come, God sent forth his Son, born of woman, born under the law, to redeem those who were under the law,so that we might receive adoption as sons."

Galatians 4: 4-5

Nearly two thousand years ago, the world was prepared for the coming of Christ. The conquest of Alexander the Great some 300 years before had forced a common-language onto the peoples of the world.

Under Roman rule, the world was united into a period of peace, a time when people could listen to the voice of God, not just to their fears of war. Additionally, a great road network was established which would enable the heralds of Christ to quickly get their message to the nations.

Because there was great spiritual confusion in those days, people were searching for an answer through a variety of religious experiences. Yet, the long expected Messiah was still looked for by the Hebrews who had been scattered all over the Roman world. These people had remained faithful to God's promise that One would come. In these days, the world was made ready for the coming of the Messiah.

The time came. Jesus, son of Joseph and Mary, was born in Bethlehem of Judea as foretold by the prophets. Unlike the prior actions of God on behalf of his people, now God came to be with them in the flesh.

But this birth is meaningless unless it is seen in light of the passion, death and resurrection of Jesus which is celebrated on Good Friday and Easter. The birth of Jesus is celebrated because it points to the saving activity of God on our behalf at Easter.

The prayers of the Christian community this season are that Christmas will be celebrated by you not just as a time off from work or a time to take leave and visit family. Our prayers for you are that God has prepared you for the birth of Christ into your life so that this Christmas may be a day of experiencing the birth story in a personal way.

Making your own gifts is an excellent way to save money and give a little of yourself to someone.

And at the main post Arts and Crafts Shop, you can do it yourself and save money too.

Regina Goodman, a shop helper, said classes are offered in photography, stained glass, oil painting, cabinet making, leather working and ceramics.

The shop is open to all active duty soldiers, retirees and their families, civilian employees and reserve component personnel.

It is open from 1 to 9 p.m. Wednesday through Friday, and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on weekends.

Follow safety rules to avoid tree fires

Christmas trees. Their scent perfumes the house, and getting together with loved ones to decorate their obliging boughs is the stuff of seasonal memories. But the lovely trees could bring your holiday to a tragic end if you fail to heed a few safety rules.

- If you buy a real tree try to get the freshest one possible. A dry tree will ignite and burn faster than a fresh one.
- A fresh tree will have a strong pine or spruce scent and a deep green color. Needles should not fall off the tree at the touch, and a truly fresh one has sticky sap at the base.
- Safety experts suggest buying a tree early and getting it in a stable, water-holding stand as Saving for that 'rainy day' good idea

by Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

"You ought to get yourself $400 or $500 million in cash. Tuck it away and forget about it. It'll come in handy sometime for a rainy day."

Henry Ford Sr.'s financial advice might be good for some people. Unfortunately, the average service member or government employee needs some alternatives when it comes to saving money.

Americans seem to have an aversion to saving; we're so consumption-oriented that we save less than the people of almost every other industrial nation.

So how, you might wonder, with the rent, car payment, grocery bill and the seemingly endless list of other expenses, am I supposed to come up with extra money to save?

"When we hear people say, 'We're too broke to put money aside,' all it really means is that they've chosen to live right up to the edge of their incomes or even over the edge," advises financial expert Jane Bryant Quinn.

"If you buy a better house, another car, a snowmobile, a vacation every year, movies, dinners out, nice clothes, and then say that you haven't enough money to save for the future, I can only reply that you're having your future now," she said.

"The problem is not solely in the economic system or the size of your salary or even inflation (unless you have a fixed income), but in the way you've arranged your life."

The bottom line is that anyone can save if he really wants to. It might be just $15 a week, or less, but every little bit you stash away makes you that much more financially secure.

The best way to save, financial experts agree, is to get in the habit of putting money aside on a regular basis. It's no good to pay the bills and say you'll save whatever is left over, because there's never, or rarely, anything left over. The way to begin a savings program is to make a regular savings deposit off the top of each paycheck and to adjust spending to what's left.

Banks, savings and loan associations, credit units and even insurance companies have come up with a myriad of ideas to help you:

Payroll deductions. Financial experts say this is the best way to save. Arrange with your finance office to take a certain sum out of every paycheck and put it into your local credit union, the bank of your choice or U.S. savings bonds.

Automatic transfer from checking to savings. Arrange with your bank or credit union to transfer a specified sum from your checking account to your savings account each month. It's important to remember to enter the transfer in your checkbook each month so you don't mistakenly bounce a check.

Saving by mail. Keep a stack of bank envelopes with your current bills. Think of each envelope as a "bill," to be paid every week or month along with the rent and the electric bill. Mail your deposit to the bank as you mail your other bills.

Coupon clubs. Christmas, Hanukah and vacation club plans get you to commit to saving a specific sum on a weekly or monthly basis over a year's time. However, financial experts say they're usually not as profitable as a regular savings account, because some offer little or no interest, and some pay interest only if you complete the club.

Life insurance. Life insurance policies in which some of the premiums go for insurance and some go into "cash value," somewhat like a savings account, may help you automate your savings, but experts say they aren't as profitable as a regular savings account.

Here are some additional tips to help you save:

- After you've paid the last installment of a car or personal loan, add that amount to your monthly savings since you're already used to living without it.
- Deposit any raises, bonuses, income tax refunds of cash gifts you receive directly into your savings account.

Saving money doesn't have to hurt. The reward is a nest egg that you can turn to for emergencies, for good times or for a feeling of independence from everyday money cares.

Personnel center answers queries about enlisted selection system

Military Personnel Center

How does DA's centralized enlisted selection system work? Soldiers throughout the Army write and call MILPERCEN's Enlisted Records and Evaluation Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., daily asking questions about the system.

Here are the most asked questions with up-to-date answers:

Q. Do I, as an infantryman, compete with finance NCOs and AG NCOs for promotion?

A. No. You only compete with other soldiers in your military occupational specialty in your zone of consideration. The selection boards receive select objectives from DCSPER for each MOS. Therefore, an infantryman is only in competition with other infantrymen.

Q. How important are Skill Qualification Test scores?

A. SQT scores are a factor considered by promotion boards. When there is a select objective of five percent in a particular MOS and 80 percent of the soldiers in that MOS have maximum Enlisted Efficiency Report, SQT can very well become a discriminator. Therefore, prepare for SQT, take the test and score as well as you possibly can.

Q. My MOS has never had an SQT score, so what is the impact?

A. There is no impact because you are only competing for promotion with those soldiers in your MOS. So, no one has received an SQT score, then no one is being placed at a disadvantage. The impact is zero.

Q. What is the impact of a blackout on a microfiche?

A. Promotion boards are instructed, prior to the convening of a board, to disregard any blackouts on the microfiche. The vast majority of blackouts are normally the result of misfiled documents, duplicate documents, or camera malfunction. The boards are specifically instructed not to make any assumptions regarding the cause of blackouts on the microfiche.

Q. Why does it take so long to publish a promotion list after a board has adjourned?

A. A great deal of time and effort is required to manually verify the results of the board to make absolutely sure there are no mistakes. For example, the sergeant first class board will review the files of more than 50,000 soldiers in the zone. The list of those selected from that zone must be manually verified. That requires approximately three weeks to accomplish.

Additionally, once that list is sent to promotions branch at DA, it must be reviewed to ensure that the name of anyone who has been flagged does not appear on the list. It takes several weeks to actually print and publish the list.

Also, promotions branch must allow about 10 days to pre-position that list with selected general officers throughout the Army before release. All steps just enumerated are time-consuming and normally result in two to three months lag time after adjournment of a promotion board to the publishing of the list.

Some vets missing out on VEAP

Veterans Administration

Veterans Administration reports that more than 269,000 post-Vietnam veterans who are eligible for Veterans Educational Assistance Act schooling are failing to take advantage of the multimillion-dollar program.

While on active duty these veterans paid up to $2,700 each into the VEAP fund, but have since failed to sign up for education benefits worth more than $8,100.

To qualify for VEAP benefits, veterans who contributed must sign up within 10 years after being discharged from active military service. Veterans who contributed to the fund also can apply for reimbursement of their contribution, even after the 10-year-limit period for education benefits expires.

As of Sept. 30, some 294,987 service members were contributing to the program to qualify for schooling after discharge. By the same date, 109,513 veterans had received training through the program, 29,833 were receiving training, 542,561 had been refunded their contributions, and the accounts of 269,259 veterans were inactive.

VEAP benefits are for service members who entered the Armed Forces after Dec. 31, 1976, and participated in the contributory program. Service members have until March 31, 1987, to begin contributing to the program, which is being phased out.

Under the voluntary program, each dollar contributed by a service member is matched with two dollars from the U.S. Government for college and other educational benefits. The maximum benefit is $8,100 for up to 36 months.

The VA account containing the contributions of service members totaled $570 million as of Sept. 30. Additional funds are transferred as needed from the Defense Department to pay for matching obligations.

The amount available for refund to an individual veteran, depending upon contributions while in service, could be as much as $2,700.

New mail order catalog available in post exchanges

Army News Service

The U.S edition of the 1987 exchange mail order catalog will be available in most stateside exchanges in September. Its 280 pages contain close to 6,000 American-made products plus imported items like English china and Japanese audio equipment.

This year's new offerings include women's silk blouses, women's shoes in regular and hard-to-fit sizes and professional golf equipment by MacGregor and Spaulding.

The jewelry section now offers cultured pearls and the packaged food section now features gourmet cheeses, smoked turkey and ham.

"The catalog offer shopping convenience and a selection of items that cannot be stocked in the average exchange because of space limitations," said Ronald Rooney, assistant chief of the catalog sales division. "For example, they offer larger selections of china, silver, crystal and collectable giftware plus shoes in odd sizes and big-and-tall menswear."

"The audio, electronic, sporting goods and photography sections feature the top-of-the-line as well as the mid-range merchandise most customers buy in exchanges," he continued. "And all this will be shipped to the indicated APO, FPO or American zip code addresses."

The catalog features programs that make shopping easy and fun, according to Rooney. An item designated as a "value buy" is one customers chose most often throughout the year. "If you're having trouble deciding, look for the 'value buy' symbol," Rooney advised.

The "personally yours" items can be embossed with the owner's name or initials. "We can personalize everything from penants to grandfather clocks," Rooney said.

If an electronic item is designated as "dual voltage" it will work in at least one other electric system besides American 110/60. "Whenever possible, we offer the dual or multi voltage version of a product because our customers may spend long periods overseas," Rooney explained.

Catalog prices are comparable to exchange prices and no sales tax is charged. Some items have shipping ad handling fees which are shown in the item's description. Mastercard and visa credit cards can be used for all orders.

Soldiers soar with Hawks at Omni

Story and photos by Thad Roberson

More than 175 soldiers took part in the 'Operation Holiday tip-off,' traveling to Atlanta to watch the Atlanta Hawks play Saturday.

The Hawks defeated the San Antonio Spurs 111-96, in front of more than 12,000 spectators who turned out at the Omni to cheer them on.

The Army Training Center soldiers, unable to take a holiday break, enjoyed the play of the National Basketball Association's top ranked team, whose 19-6 record lifts them a half game ahead of the Los Angeles Lakers.

"The whole idea of Operation Holiday is great," said PFC Jon Cooper. "It gets your mind off the family and wishing that you were home."

PFC Kirk Roddie shared the same views.

"It's my first Christmas away from my family and the trip to the Hawks game really lifted my spirits," he said.

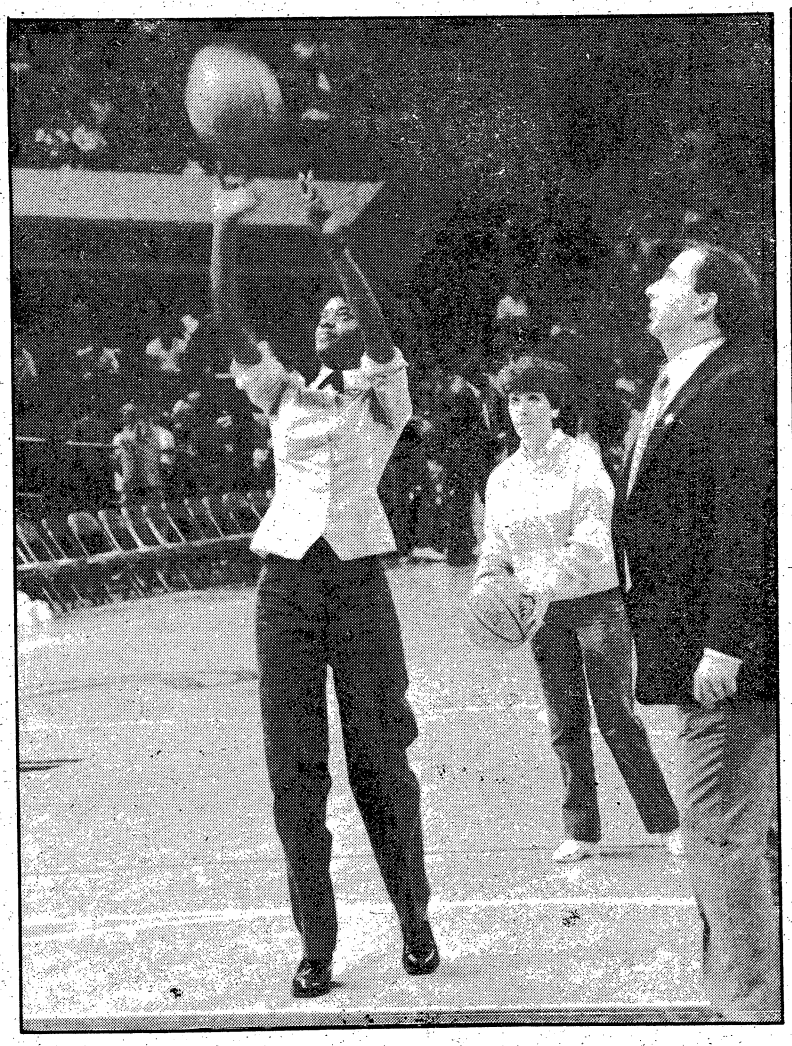
The loyalties were varied, as many Fort Benning fans had Texas hometowns.

Roddie, a Texas native, was one of the loyal San Antonio fans.

"I realized that I'd be surrounded by Atlanta fans, but my sore throat came from screaming for the Spurs," he said.

The Texas loyalty did not hold true for PFC Fred Wade of Houston, who chose to be realistic.

"I knew that I was supposed to pull for San Antonio, but they don't have anything this season, while Atlanta has it all," Wade said.



And Atlanta let it all hang out.

Dominique Wilkins, the game's high scorer with 28 points, fired the Hawks to a 59-51 half time lead.

The half time show was highlighted by a "free-throw shoot" for women 19 and over.

Though their shots fell short of prizes, two soldiers, SP4s Terry A Chamberlain and Pam Fields enjoyed the applause and screams for the military team.

There were few missed shots in the second half. The Hawk's gunner Randy Whittman was on target, firing 17 bullets from the court and hitting 12.

SP4 Terry Chamberlain competes in the women's shootoff during half-time activities.

Powerlifter claims victory in regional competition

The Bayonet sports writer

A Fort Benning soldier recently lifted a cup with weights exceeding 1,500 pounds.

It was not larceny, but definitely a steal, as Garnet Boudreau claimed the Southeastern Powerlifting Championship Cup in competition in Adel, Ga.

Discipline key to being marathon runner

by John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Lt. Col. Ken Farmer of 101st Abn Div, Fort Campbell, Ky. ran the Second Infantry Marathon in 1985 in a very commendable 2 hours 48 minutes. He told me he was not really fatigued. In the same race, Maj. Marshall Dressell of Fort Benning finished in 4 hours and 45 minutes. He told me he became fatigued at sixteen miles and had to walk much of the remaining distance.

What was so immense that it stopped one man but so trivial it didn't bother another?

Fatigue, that is, being tired, physiologically spent, in the modern lexicon "wasted".

When muscles do work they function by burning fuel, this is metabolism. Metabolism can be aerobic or anaerobic, the former is very efficient while the latter is accompanied by the accummulation of acid by-products.

As you train for the marathon you are actually training your body, the heart-lung system coupled to the blood and muscle-bone system, to push its aerobic threshold further and further. So you can run longer, faster, etc. But once you out-strip the efficiency of your metabolism to deliver and use oxygen, you shift gears into anaerobic metabolism.

So called "hitting the wall" is that severity of fatigue when "anaerobiosis" is no longer tolerable — fuel systems are depleted, maximal "PLEASE STOP THIS" messages are bombarding the brain.

The crux of elite or olympic training is the perfect blend of physical, spiritual, and mental endurance. For the common man this is an extra-ordinary accomplishment. Have you ever been in a unit that made you strive for this?

To Farmer I say, "Keep polishing your endurance". To Maj. Dressel I say, "Re-fuel, practice near the limit, push the limit weekly."

soon as possible. Before putting the tree in water, cut about two inches off the trunk — at an angle if your stand will permit. An angle cut allows maximum water absorption. Rewater the tree daily.

• Place the tree away from fireplaces and heat sources, and make sure it does not block a home's traffic pattern or doorway.

• Provide substantial support for the tree, whether real or artificial.

• If you're buying an artificial tree, look for a label stating it's been tested for flammability. Read the safety instructions that come with the artificial tree. Metallic trees bear a warning to use colored spotlights rather than string lights, for example.

• Make sure light sets have been certified safe by Underwriters Laboratory (UL) or Factory Mutual (FM). Check last year's strings for broken bulbs before plugging them in. If using lights outdoors, make sure they're designated safe for outdoor use.

• If you're using an extension cord, make sure it does not present a tripping hazard.

• Don't permit smoking near the tree or wrappings.

• Unplug lights before going to bed or leaving home.

• Supervise young children when they're near the tree. Teach them to care for it safely.

Hanukah

ment of religion in all areas of socity, we know (many of us first hand) the potential for abuse that exists when a public institution is allowed to become a vehicle for the religious expression of the "majority" religion.

This is especially true when there is mass secularization of religious holidays and rituals. Christmas is indeed a most vivid and timely example. Starting from about the 1st of November and gradually crescendoing just before the "Christmas" break, the classroom becomes the arena for plays, pageants, songs, posters, motifs and other activities that make non-christians, and in some cases non-Protestant children, feel extremely estranged.

Picture, if you will, the Muslim child who is pressured to justify his discomfort with or unwillingness to sing a Christmas Carol that proclaims "Christ the Savior is born". Even though one can quote eminent theologians of all denominations who state that sacred hymns are the highest form of prayer, and even though the Supreme Court's decisions concerning school prayer are clear, the practice of singing sacred Christmas Carols continues unopposed by "those of good will" without regard for the feelings of, or respect for, the religious minorities who have contributed so much to our society. This is just one of many examples of insensitivity. The solution is not to exempt those children who do not want to participate. That does not protect the child who feels "conspicuous" in his "absence".

The solution is, in this upcoming "Year of the Constitution", to renew our respect for the law and our faith in the wisdom of the founders of our nation. They instinctively knew that religious worship was a personal, private matter which when pursued in a public school environment, could slowly destroy the cultural and religious diversity that is one of our greatest natural resources. 2100 years after the 1st war for religious freedom the valor of the Maccabees continues to be a source of inspiration to all who take freedom seriously.

Base exercise program on your fitness goals

About the author — Heniz H. Johnson is the chief of Air Force Fitness Operations at Randolph Air Force Base, Texas. He holds a proficiency certificate from the institute of Aerobics Research for implementing exercise and fitness programs.

by Heinz H. Johnson
Air Force News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — How much exercise is enough and what type is best for developing and maintaining fitness?

That's a typical question being asked since more people are getting involved in fitness activities and the "wellness lifestyle."

The term, fitness, is composed of four major parts: heart and lung endurance, muscle strength, muscle endurance, and flexibility.

The starting point for any good fitness program should be an assessment of fitness status. By measuring the level of fitness at the beginning, a person will have a benchmark to compare progress.

The aerobic capacity, or level of heart-lung endurance, has a direct influence on how well someone functions. People in good physical condition are usually more productive at work and play.

They also normally do well on fitness assessments such as the 1.5-mile run, 3-mile walk, 12-minute swim, or 12-minute cycle tests — all of which are accepted methods that give a reliable estimate of aerobic capacity.

Any exercise activity that requires air or oxygen for a prolonged period of time, and places a demand on the body so it will improve its ability to handle oxygen, is classified as an aerobic exercise. Among these are walking, jogging, running, cross-country skiing, rowing, swimming, and cycling.

As a result of aerobic exercise, fitness levels improve and beneficial changes occur in the heart, lungs, blood vascular system, and other body tissues. Air will move in and out of the lungs easier. The blood will become better equipped to transport oxygen to the muscles and tissue where it will be used more efficiently.

These changes allow people to meet their daily responsibilities more vigorously and alertly. They are also better able to meet emergencies imposed during combat or other demanding activities, and have more energy to enjoy leisure activities.

But people should not go out and take a fitness test and put forth maximum effort unless they are under 35 years of age, in good condition, or have gone through six weeks of an aerobic starter program.

Also, a doctor's examination will be well worth the time and expense before starting a conditioning program. People should start slowly, and make sure it's a progressive exercise program. They may discover that it's one of the best things that they have ever done for themselves.

Lifter

The 207-pound powerhouse excelled in the 220-pound class, lifting a total of 1,662 pounds.

Boudreau towered above competitors when he squatted 622 pounds, hit 633 in the dead lift and 407 in the bench press.

In a contest of the strong and the mighty, Boudreau clearly bettered the weights of the other 10 competitors in his class.

"I just smoked them," said Boudreau. "The closest lifts, totaled around 1600 pounds," he said.

Even though far ahead in the competition, Boudreau made a fourth attempt to power 672 pounds, where he got the tremendous load to his knees.

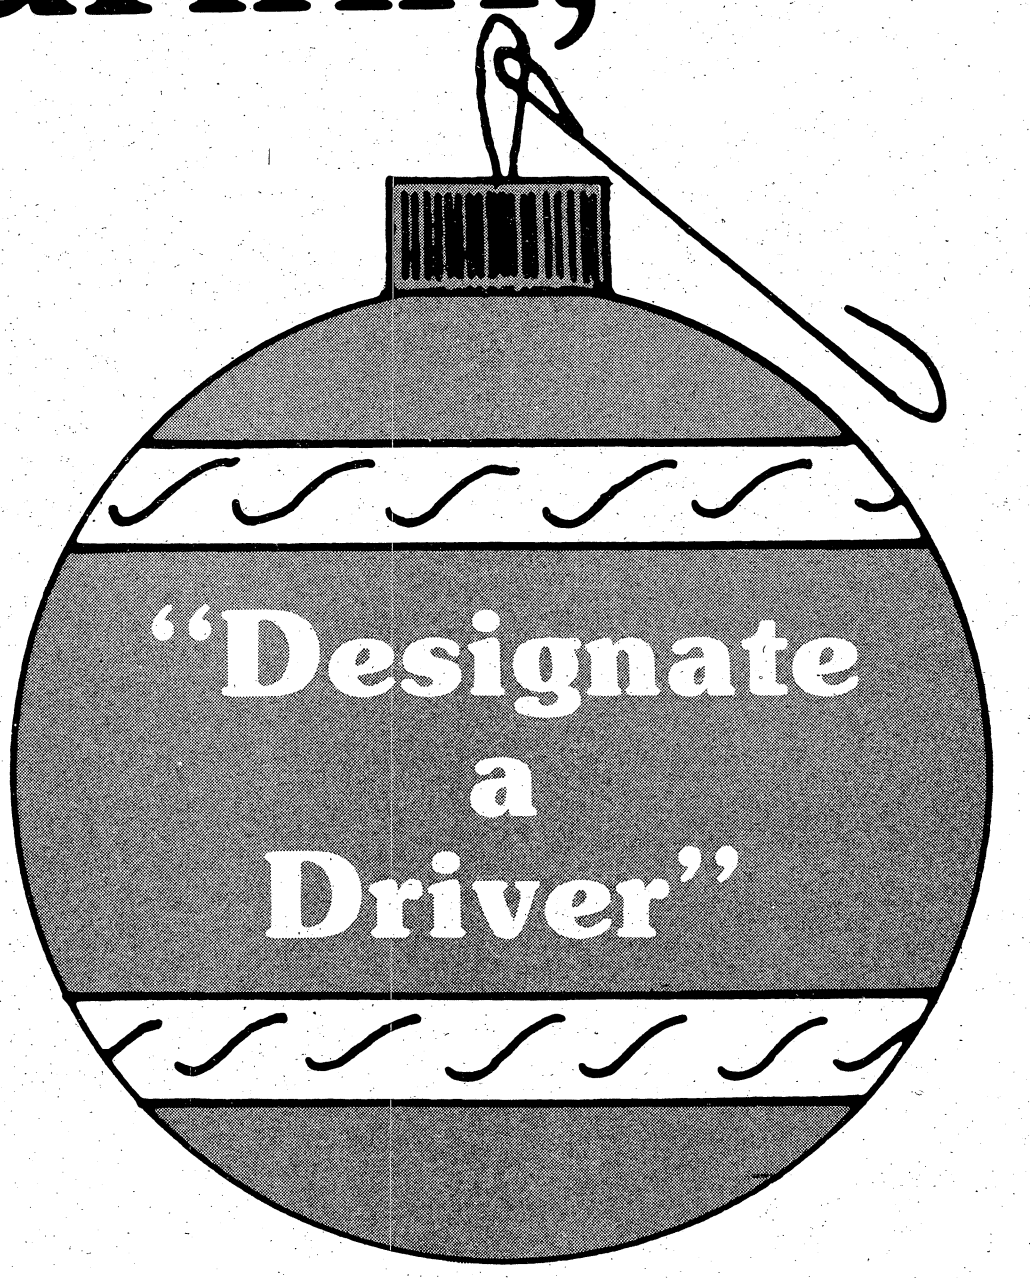
Boudreau began powerlifting in Germany where he demonstrated his might, claiming the U. S. Army 240-pound-class title in 1984. But, he did not seriously train again until September, when preparing for this competition.

At 33, Boudreau ranks among the senior non-commissioned officers. With 10 years service, Boudreau has attained the Sergeant First Class rank.

His drive and intensity comes from within, but the stimulus of his aggressiveness comes from those around him.

"My goal is to compete in the upcoming Fort Stewart contest, where I want to bench 450, dead lift 705 and squat 705," said Boudreau.

"I've got good training partners," said Boudreau, referring to Franklin and Denise Roach, "Max" Mullen and Clement Green.



Boudreau depends om their support in the next competition.

"They have aided tremendously in previous trainings, and I know that by working with tem in the future, I can attain my goal," said Boudreau.

Though Boudreau won an individual title, the Southeastern Championship Cup was a team effort.

The Bayonet

Vol. 45, No. 16 Published in the Interest of the Fort Benning Community Dec. 31, 1986

'Out with old, in with new'

Compiled by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

It was a year when dreams turned into reality for Fort Benning.

For the many involved in the vital work of training new infantrymen, it was a year full of challenges and successes.

No matter what the goal or accomplishment, it was people giving their all that made the post come alive, made it happen.

As 1986 draws to a close and The Home of the Infantry looks toward another fulfilling year, The Bayonet staff, through this recollection, is offering the final toast to a successful year. Farewell!

In January, Maj. Gen. John Foss passed command of Fort Benning and the Infantry Center to newly frocked Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr.

Burba was formerly the deputy commanding general and assistant school commandant.

Foss moved on to command America's Guard of Honor, the 82nd Airborne Division, at Fort Bragg, N.C. He later moved up, with a promotion to lieutenant general, to the top position with the XVIII Airborne Corps, also at Bragg.

Fort Benning soldiers had a chance to test the Army's new 60mm mortar in the early days of the year while the Department of Defense announced the selection of a "super boot" for the Army and Marine Corps.

"Operation Holiday," an effort by Columbus and Fort Benning to provide meaningful experiences for soldiers on post for the holidays, was deemed a great success by post officials and Safetycab provided free rides home to more than 150 Fort Benning soldiers who had enjoyed the holiday spirits.

The local community paid tribute to the memory of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in a moving ceremony in Marshall Auditorium.

The 197th Infantry Brigade practiced military operations in urban terrain exercises at the MOUT site.

The Directorate of Logistics received the Systematic Productivity Improvement Review in TRADOC Meritorious Award for outstanding work.

Using their engineering skills, the 43rd Engineer Battalion built a self-service supply room for Martin Army Community Hospital.

Getting their weapons, vehicles and other gear ready, the 197th Infantry Brigade prepared to deploy to the unit's annual rotation to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., for desert fighting training.

Bitter cold temperatures gripped the area when a front hit sending the mercury down to 18 degrees Fahrenheit.

The 586th Engineer Company built an air assault site for the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Joe Molloy, the winner of the 1985 Infantry Marathon, once again bested the crowd in 1986, turning in a blistering 2:26:46 and beating his nearest competitor by two minutes.

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit walked away with top honors in national pistol matches.

February brought near disaster for the Fort Benning school system as it faced a possible transfer to local county school systems. The plans were in anticipation of scheduled budget cuts by the federal government.

It was a good month for several post units, however, as Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment won the TRADOC award for maintenance excellence.

After 18 days of training, the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment returned from Fort Wainwright, Alaska.

The unit jumped into Alaska Feb. , marking its first-ever

1987 to be year of changes, improvements for The Bayonet

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Plans to stop smoking, lose weight, get in shape, be a better person . . .are pretty abundant around this time of year. Almost everyone sets some kind of goal for themself as one year slowly grows into another. Call them goals or, gasp, resolutions, it doesn't matter; they're a reality.

These well-intended plans, however, usually become broken promises, forgotten goals and unresolved resolutions. After many years of outlining such objectives, I've learned to deal in concrete issues. I try to stick to reality, something that is definite, that way I'm disappointed less as the months go by. More often than not, this means that New Years plans tend to involve work rather than personal life. The reason is primarily because, as we all know, work is much more defined.

With that in mind, I decided to share with you, The Bayonet readers, my plans for 1987.

During the last year, the newspaper staff and I have worked to give you the best product we can. We haven't always pleased everyone. During November we conducted a biannual Newspaper Readership Survey and many of you took that opportunity to tell us what we were doing wrong. Thankfully, some of you also used the chance to tell us what we were doing right. The purpose of the survey is to determine what we can do to make the newspaper better; we want to improve it so it suits your needs because we are here to serve you.

Although we don't have the final tabulations of all of the statistics, we have screened enough surveys to capitalize on the beginning of a new calendar year and institute some changes in The Bayonet.

The most obvious of these changes will be evident with the Jan. 9 paper. We are changing the size of the paper to make it the same as a daily newspaper. You'll still be able to pick it up from the racks at the normal locations. However, by going to the larger format, we will have more space to give you stories and photos about what is happening on Fort Benning and all around the Army.

Many people who responded to our survey voiced dissatisfaction with the amount of advertising in the paper. While the staff doesn't control the number of advertisers, we do have the capability to ensure that the reader gets a fair amount of stories and photos. Achieving this harmonious balance is one of those goals we have set for 1987. The larger paper will assist us in accomplishing that mission.

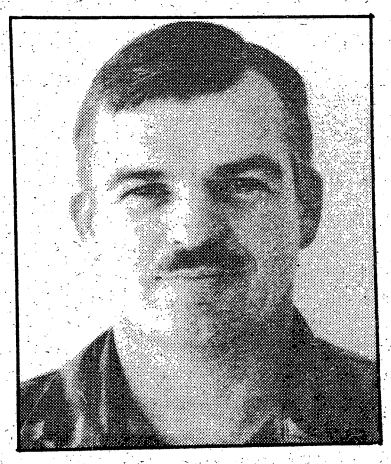
Another common opinion with the survey respondants was that the paper features little or no "real news." We want you to pick up The Bayonet each Friday and be anxious to read it; we want it to mean something to you. Therefore, over the next weeks you will begin to see more "news" in the paper. You'll get national news that pertains to the military, you'll get information from the Department of the Army level and you'll get Department of Defense news. This, however, is another area where we will strive to make certain we maintain a balance. Our primary mission is to highlight Fort Benning, its soldiers and civilians.

Another thing you'll be getting more of is quality photos and solid writing. Professional development programs for the staff are presently being instituted to make all of us better prepared to do our jobs effectively. This not only helps the staff, it gives you a better newspaper, and that's what we're all about.

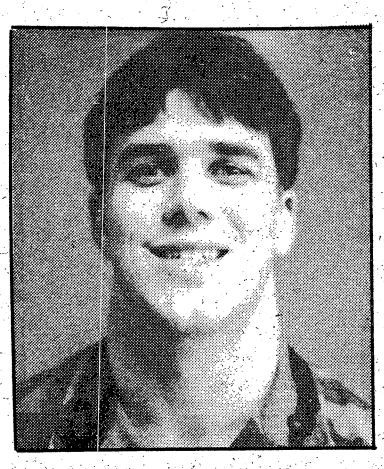
Although I've only touched the surface of what will evolve over the coming months, you should have an idea of our goals and plans for 1987. If you have any suggestions, questions or comments concerning any aspect of The Bayonet please call me at 545-2201 or 545-4622 or stop by our office in Room 601, Building 4. We want to know how we can give you a paper that suits your needs.

Happy New Year!

Various voices



What goals have you set for yourself for 1987 and what do you hope to accomplish in the coming year?



2nd Lt. James Vigotty, 25th Company, Infantry Officers Basic Course - "I want to improve my military knowledge and do the best I can at any job assigned to me. I also want to quit smoking."

SP4 Jeff Fry, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "I am going to try to get all my paperwork together so I can get accepted to the Officer Candidate School."

SFC Bradley Lawton, Directorate of Training and Development - I'd like to further advance my military career, hopefully I'll be able to attend the First Sergeant Course pretty soon."

SP4 Robert Merry, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division - "I'd like to save some money and get promoted to sergeant by the end of the year."

Capt. Jo Robinson, Security Division - "I'd like to implement some ideas I have into my workplace and I would like to get in better physical condition."

Op-Ed

Knowing signs of intoxication helps hosts save lives

Army News Service

Last year more than 23,500 families learned about drunken driving the hard way — a loved one was killed in an alcohol-related auto crash.

Traffic accidents are responsible for more violent deaths in the United States than any other cause, about 44,000 in 1985. According to statistics from the National Center for Statistics and Analysis, a division of the U.S. Department of Transportation's National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, some 20,000 of these deaths are alcohol-related. In addition, some 560,000 are injured annually in alcohol-related crashes, 43,000 of them seriously. (At least 106 soldiers were killed in alcohol-related accidents in 1985.)

During this holiday season, hosts can keep things merry by learning to recognize the symptoms of intoxication. Once they recognize that their guest is in no condition to drive, they must make other arrangements to ensure their guests arrive home safely.

Occasionally the symptoms of intoxication are mimicked by a physical or emotional condition or by medication unrelated to alcohol. For their guests' sake, it is better for the host to be safe that sorry. Many physical conditions can be worsened by alcohol or by a combination of prescription drugs and alcohol. In extreme cases, death can result.

Alcohol affects the body in a four-step sequence, according to the Department of Transportation. First, inhibitions are relaxed. Impaired judgment reveals itself next. Then, reactions are slowed. Finally, coordination markedly declines.

Any time the host, or fellow guests for that matter, observe behaviors like those described in the following list, they should take action to safeguard their friends. Don't be overly concerned about hurting their feelings, you could be saving their lives.

First stage: inhibitions

- Being overly friendly.
- Annoying other guests.
- Acting "big."
- Changing from loud to quiet or vice versa.
- Speaking loudly.
- Drinking alone.

Second stage: judgment

- Ordering doubles.
- Being careless with money.
- Changing consumption rates.
- Using foul language.
- Arguing.
- Being belligerent.
- Making irrational statements.
- Buying rounds for strangers or for the house.

Third stage: reactions

- Eyes glassy.
- Unable to light cigarettes.
- Loss of train of thought.
- Lighting more than one cigarette at a time.
- Slurred speech.
- Eyes not focused.

Fourth stage: coordination

- Unable to pick up change.
- Can't find mouth with glass.
- Unable to sit up straight.
- Bumps into things.
- Stumbling.
- Drowsing.
- Spills drink.
- Swaying or falling.

With practice, heavy drinkers can learn to control the visible signs or to tolerate alcohol better than the occasional drinker, according to the Department. But that doesn't make them any less drunk. Knowing how much alcohol the guests have consumed can be a good indicator. Hosts should trust their own judgment when deciding the extent of intoxication, not the drinker's. Hosts and friends should do everything in their power to ensure that their own special circle of family and friends isn't diminished by injury or death. Don't be afraid to show you care where impaired driving is concerned. There will always be other parties, but there is only one life.

Editor's note: composed from information released by the U.S. Dept. of Transportation National Highway Safety Administration.

To help guests control effects of liquor mix drinks yourself, serve plenty of food

by Darrell L. Johnson
Army News Service

Hosting a party carries a greater social responsibility than just making sure that the guests have a good time. Hosts must ensure guests live to tell about it.

Bar tending

Permitting guests to mix their own drinks might seem hospitable, but allowing self-mixing drinkers to rely on their own judgment — which might weaken as the evening draws on — invites trouble. People are more conscious of how many drinks they've had when someone else is mixing them.

Being stuck behind the bar all night might not be your idea of fun. But that better way is there to ensure you get around to all the guests than by having each one come to you?

Consider alcohol content

A heavy-handed bartender is neither a good bartender nor a good host. People are used to standard-sized drinks and gauge their consumption by how many they've had, not by the contents of each. Use a shot glass when mixing drinks to add a professional touch and to let the drinker know exactly what he is getting. A "lighter shot" served later in the evening will be appreciated by guests.

Remember that light beers and wines are lower in calories, not in alcohol content. Good hosts will be generous with the food, not the liquor. Food slows absorption of alcohol into the bloodstream, and gives guests something to do besides drink. Have low-calorie vegetable trays available to dieters will eat, too. Avoid thirst-causing salty or spicy foods.

Close the bar early

Close the bar about an hour before the party is scheduled to end. Make the "one for the road" coffee and desert. While coffee doesn't help sober up someone who has had too much to drink — only time will do that — drinking coffee will buy your guests the time to eliminate about one drink from their bodies. It's not enough to have much effect, but its better than having the last drink "hit" them when they're behind the wheel.

Some guests still won't be in any condition to drive, although they might not be visibly drunk. Heavy drinkers often are able to control their behavior and thus appear more sober than they actually are. What they can't control, however, is loss of coordination and slowed reflexes that don't show in social situations, but are essential for safe driving.

Anyone who drinks more than one alcoholic beverage per hour will accumulate alcohol in their bloodstream faster than the the liver can eliminate it. Gauge your guests' sobriety more by how much they've consumed than by how they act.

Don't let them talk their way out of a ride home. Your responsibility to your guests doesn't end at the front door. The party isn't over until the guests are safely home.

Artic training.

Benning Capts. John Tytla and Steve Gouthro selected to the Army Select Side Tournament Rugby Team.

In March Tytla's and Gouthro's team, the Fort Benning Flyers Rugby Club, placed 3rd in the Eastern Regional Tournament.

March also brought success for a native Korean from Alamogordo, N.M., when SFC Sang Chin, was chosen as the post's Drill Sergeant of the Year.

Chin said his success came as a result of a supportive chain of command and a caring wife.

Fort Benning officials signed a three-year contract with the civilian union in record time.

1st Lt. Fred Lancaster, of the 36th Engineer Group, was awarded an Army Commendation Medal for saving a soldier's life at a demolition range.

USAMU shooters posted a national record during March's National Indoor Rifle Championships.

Of special mention was Capt. Mary Godlove, who established a new women's record for the Smallbore Three Position event.

Because of Gramm-Rudman induced budget cuts, 60 civilian temporary workers at Fort Benning weren't so lucky in March as the government sent them home on a forced layoff.

Four new M-1 Abrams tanks were deliverd to the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor .

April saw infantry leaders from around the world converge on Fort Benning for the annual Infantry Leaders Conference, while SFC Curtis Stables, an instructor in the Pathfinder Course, was named the Senior Instructor of the Year at Fort Benning.

The Army celebrated the Month of the Military Child.

Gramm-Rudman struck again, when 87 civilian cooks lost their jobs in a reduction-in-force.

Against the backdrop of American and Canadian flags, the new Airborne Memorial Walk was officially dedicated at Eubanks Field.

The Walk was built to honor soldiers in Airborne, glider and troop carrier units and was laid out in the shape of U.S. Airborne wings.

Navy Seabees swarmed Fort Benning for training on-post.

Two Fort Benning wives became the victims, losing more than $11,000 after succumbing to a scam at a local shopping center.

Reservists from the 108th Division (Training) "took over" the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

197th Infantry Brigade soldiers were the first to help repair the Officers' Wive's Club main post clubhouse.

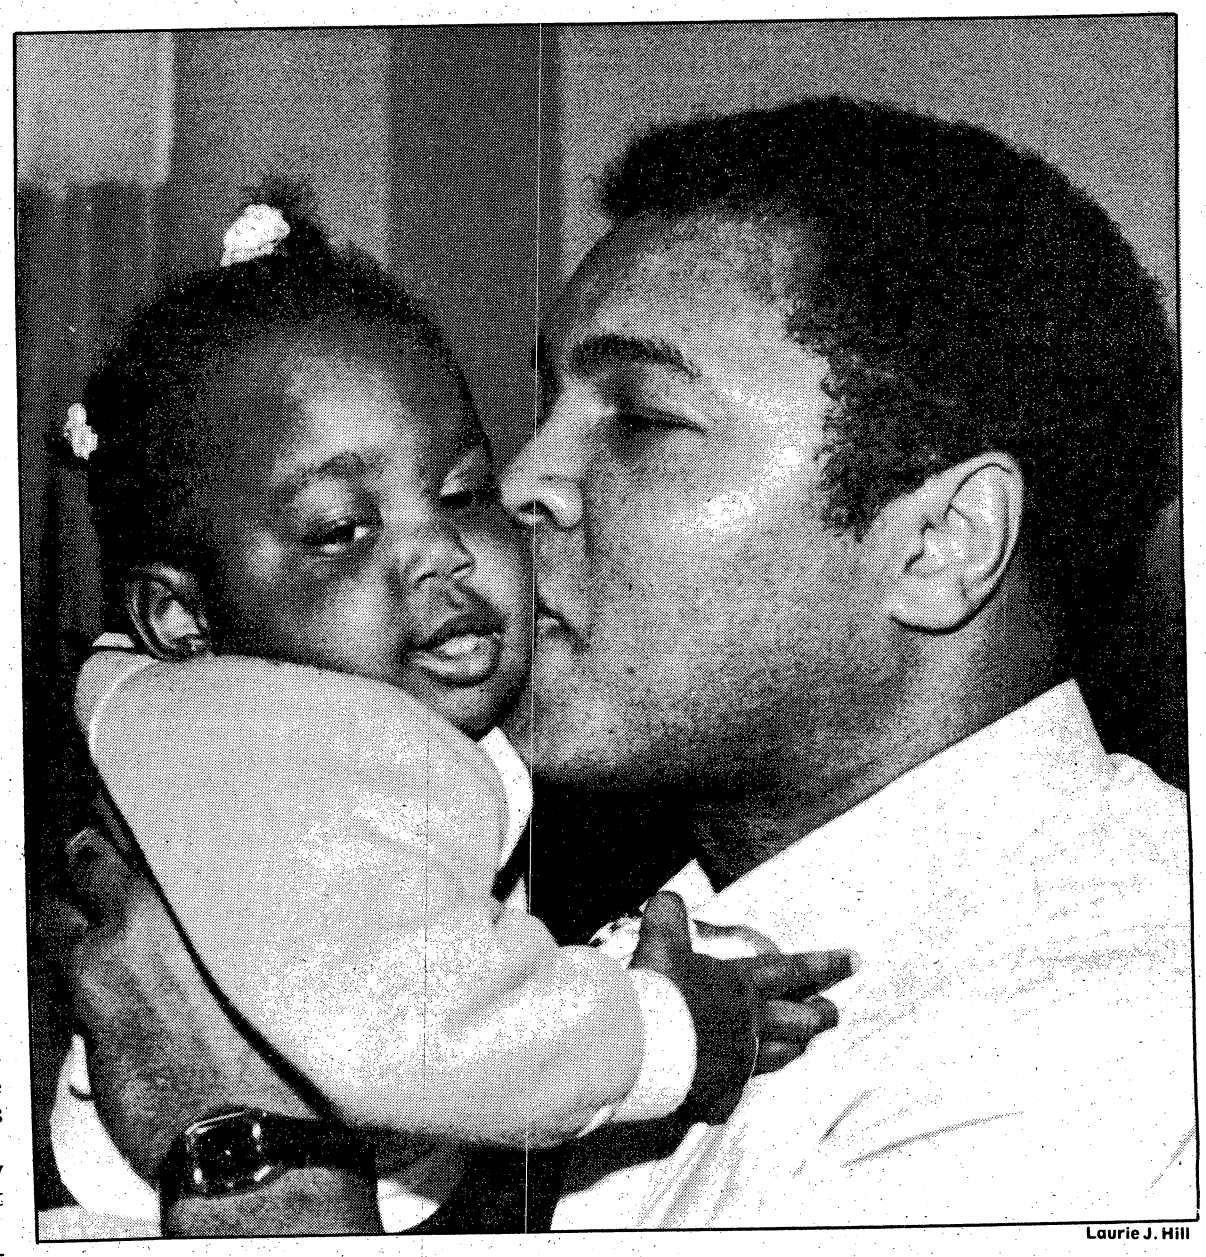
Two non-commissioned officers rose above the best to claim top honors in the 5th Annual David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition in May.

Sgts. Paul R. Scurka and Bart T. Sexton from the 75th Ranger Regiment faced tough competition in the grueling event from Ranger, Airborne and Special Forces units throughout the Army.

May marked the beginning of the softball season for Youth Activities players.

Benning experienced a severe water shortage and use restrictions were put into force.

The 67th Maintenance Battalion faced its annual challenge in the Army Training and Evaluation Program in May, while Common Task Training brought the 29th Infantry Regiment soldiers up to par.



3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade won the post volleyball championship.

Thousands of soldiers and civilians turned out for fun in the sun one Saturday in May. The annual Armed Forces Day celebration and Association of the United States Army picnic kicked off with a 10-kilometer run and the crowning of SP4 Daniella Washington from the 197th Infantry Brigade as the AUSA queen.

2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division troopers went to the Mountain Ranger Camp in Dahlonega, Ga., later in the month for some "high-level" training, while Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. visited the Florida Ranger Camp to get a firsthand look at the operations in the swamp.

The newly constructed Welcome Center at the main gate was opened just in time in June for the 1st Battalion, 507th Para-

Intense heat affected Fort Benning. Heat Category IV was reported all over post almost every day and training slowed tremendously.

Two Fort Benning shooters from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, SSgt. Matt Dryke and MSgt. Erich Buljung, escaped the scorching Georgia sun, however, as they won individual shooting titles at the U.S. Marksmanship Championships in California.

In August ground was broken for an eighth starship barracks at Sand Hill.

Peruvian soldiers were graduated from a USARSA patrolling course.

capped children, while other post kids competed in a "Superkids" triathlon.

Benning's chief of staff, Col. James Ellis, received the nomination for brigadier general in August.

Fort Benning's winningest softball coach, Al McGruder, claimed his sixth softball championship and then hung up his hat.

Columbus was selected as the site for a new military outpatient clinic.

Col. Edward Szvetecz, Army Training Center commander, retired in August after 29 years of service.

Fort Benning officials announced that civilian workers in law enforcement, aviation and drug abuse counseling would be tested for drug use. The testing should involve 66 people and officials said anyone refusing to take the urinalysis test could face transfer or dismissal.

Coming back to what he considers home, SMA Glen E. Morrell had a chance to visit with Fort Benning soldiers in September. He spoke to troops from the 197th Infantry Brigade, emphasizing the importance of strong leadership within the Army's NCO Corps.

National Hispanic Heritage Week was observed in grand style as The Columbus Hispanic Association sponsored a "Fiesta" at the Ironworks Convention and Trade Center.

Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Reigment captured to post softball crown.

Individual triumphs in September went to Soldier of the Year SP4 Tony Roughton and SSgt. Ronald Veasey, NCO of the Year.

Roughton, from Company C, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, said he was happy to be in a Ranger battalion and enjoys the close family atmosphere. He said he was nervous about the competition at first but after it started everything was okay.

Veasey, an instructor with the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry comes from a long line of soldiers and said he is accustomed to the Army way of life.

Col. Earl J. Lasseter came on board as Fort Benning's new staff judge advocate.

In a major safety move, hunting procedures and regulations were changed on post to ensure more control. It was announced in September that check-in stations would be used for each specific hunting area to monitor access.

Lenora C. Smith was officially named the president of the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army.

In October confusion abounded concerning the legal drinking age. Georgia changed its law to 21, although an individual's birth date is the deciding factor.

The Combined Federal Campaign kicked off its annual fund drive.

The Civilian and Military Council celebrated its 40th anniversary in October.

The council was organized in 1946 to eliminate friction between members of the military and civilian communities in the aftermath of World War II.

The AUSA's annual Oktoberfest was a success at the Ironworks.

The 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group deployed to Puerto Rico on an exercise designed to test the capabilities for pre-positioning of equipment.

Higher standards for the Army Physical Fitness test went into affect.

How To Prepare for Ranger School

By Dennis Davis
ARCCO Staff Writer

"Move Soldier! We've got five more miles to go before night fall." "But Sarge—" you respond. "Button your lip and MOVE!"

There you sit, drenched to the bone. You're sneezing, coughing and you have a blister on your right heel, which is the only part of your foot you can feel, due to the 10° weather. About then you wonder "Why did I ever want to be a Ranger?"

This doesn't have to be your experience. Remember the boy scout motto, "Be Prepared."? Learning from the experience of others is the best way to avoid their mistakes. To help you prepare for winter Ranger School, ARCCO is publishing the recommendations of Ranger graduates from the last several years.

This first list covers things suggested for winter Ranger School:

1. Polypropylene underwear - tops and bottoms
2. Insulated black ski gloves
3. Gloves - shells and inserts
4. Poncho w/liner
5. insulated waterproof boots
6. Jungle Boots (for Swamp)
7. Rain Jacket and pants
8. Pocket lighter
9. Heat Tabs
10. Wool Sweater
11. Wool and Polypropylene socks
12. Waterproof wrist watch

A medic who works with Ranger students told me of a recent occurence in the desert phase. One of the Ranger students was not wearing the recommended heavy weight gloves, and got frost bite on several fingers. There seemed to be a question whether or not he would keep his fingers.

The same medic said those wearing insulated boots fared much better than those wearing Jungle boots. He wears the Briarpatch "Hot Sock" from ARCCO, a thermal insulated sock equal to ¾" down in warmth retention.

A broader list covering the gear needed year round is as follows (These items are stocked at ARCCO):

- ○ 550 Cord - 50' & 100' Length
- ○ O.D. Towels & Washcloths
- ○ O.D. Socks - Tube & Issue
- ○ Insect Repellent
- ○ Camo Stick - Light Green & Sand, Light Green & Loam
- ○ Foot Powder - G.I. Issue
- ○ Patrol Caps - G.I.
- ○ Black Electrical Tape
- ○ Compass - Silva
- ○ Elephant Bags - Green Waterproof
- ○ Zip Lock Plastic Bags - Several Sizes
- ○ Pocket Knives - Swiss, & Buck
- ○ Trench Mirrors - Stainless Steel, Protective Pouches
- ○ Clips for Webb Belts
- ○ Shirt Pocket Size Notebooks
- ○ Universal Gun Cleaning Kit - Military
- ○ G.I. "D" Rings
- ○ Baby "D" Rings - For Attaching Glove etc. to Gear
- ○ O.D. Handkerchiefs
- ○ G.I. Brown T-Shirts
- ○ O.D. Jungle Fatigues - New & Used (Limited Quantities)
- ○ Weapon Cleaning Equipment
- ○ Wrist Compass - Silva with Luminus Tape
- ○ Pen Lights - Waterproof Tekna & Pilot Light
- ○ Camo Face Paint Kit - 5 Colors & 1 Mirror
- ○ Map Cases
- ○ Kiwi Cushion Insoles
- ○ Small Alice Pack Liners
- ○ Waterproof Laundry Bags
- ○ Signal Mirrors - Protective Pouches
- ○ Knife Sharpening Equipment - Buck Stones & German Pocket Steels - Buck Honing Oil
- ○ Alkaline Batteries - "AA" & "D"
- ○ Used Combat Boots
- ○ Breakfree - W.D. 40, Rustguard
- ○ Boot Laces - Black, 72"
- ○ Swiss Locking "D" Rings
- ○ G.I. Brown Jockey Shorts
- ○ G.I. O.D. Green T-Shirts
- ○ Grease Pencils - Mechanical (Black, Blue, Green, Red & Yellow)
- ○ Army Survival Knife w/Sheath & Sharpening Stone
- ○ First Aid Kit
- ○ Battery Powered Razor

Ranger School can be challenging and exciting if you are prepared for it. It also can be one of the worst experiences of your life. At ARCCO, we've been helping Ranger's stay warm, dry, and safe for a long time. If you have all the right equipment it will help you keep one more thing that is essential for Ranger School: A Good Attitude.

Legal Assistance

Q. I am moving on a permanent change of station soon and need to sell my home. I have talked with a few realtors, and they all want me to sign a listing agreement. Before I sign anything, please tell me exactly what this document is and what I need to be concerned with.

A. The listing agreement is a contract between you and the realtor you hire to sell your home. It establishes the rights and obligations of the parties.

The agreement should discuss the period of the listing. Be sure to establish a firm date for the listing to expire. Ninety days is common. It should also include the sales price of the house and the amount of commission the agent expects to receive from the sale. In this area, 7 percent commission is common, but you may be able to negotiate a 6 percent commission rate. Don't be afraid to shop around for the best deal.

The listing agreement should state the agent's committment as to the types of advertising he will use to market your home and state that you will not be obligated to pay the agent a commission if the house sells after the listing has expired.

You also want the agreement to state when the agent earns his commission, and it should state tat you will only be liable to the agent for actual damages in the event you terminate the listing agreement early.

Legal assistance officers are available to review a proposed listing agreement with you before you sign it. If you have any questions,don't hesitate to call us.

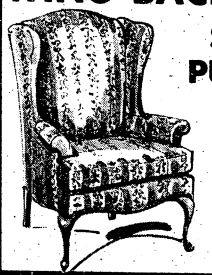
Court report

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

On Dec. 11, Pvt. John Kelly Jr., Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, was found guilty of housebreaking, wrongful appropriation and absent without leave.

According to testimony, Kelly took a key from his company's key box, used the key to gain access to a friend's barracks room, and removed a tape deck, video cassette recorder and disk player valued at more than $1,700. He then pawned the stolen goods.

Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Divsion agents recovered the misappropriated property while Kelly was AWOL from his unit.



Kelly was sentenced to reduction to E-1, confinement for four months, forfeitures totaling $1,156 and a bad conduct discharge.

The operating hours of the Veterinary Clinic are:
Monday - 8 to 11 a.m. (by appointment only) and 1 to 3 p.m. (by appointment or walk in); Wednesday — noon to 4 p.m. (by appointment only) and 4:30 to 7 p.m. (by appointment or walk in); and Friday — 8 to 11 a.m. (by appointment or walk in).

Saturday clinics are announced as they happen. The Animal Impoundment-Adoption Facility keeps stray pets found on post and unclaimed pets may be adopted. Post regulations require that all pets living or visiting on post be registered with Vet Services, and comply with all immunization and parasite control measures provided in the regulation.

For an appointment, call 545-4444; for information, call 545-1127.

Are you addicted to food? Do you go on eating binges for no apparent reason? Is your weight affecting the way you live your life? Overeaters Anonymous may be the club for you.

There are no dues, no fees and no weigh-ins. It is an adult fellowship group. (Please don't bring children.) It meets on Thursdays from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center. For more information, call 544-3079.

Tot Town Child Development Center's hours will change during the holiday weekend. The center will be closed Dec. 31 during the day and open from 6 p.m. to 3 a.m.

Children will be accepted on a prepaid, no refund, reservations-only basis. The fee of $12 for one child; $8 for each additional child will cover any number of hours until closing. Refreshments and party favors are included but no meals will be served.

Tot Town will reopen Jan. 2 at 8 a.m. and remain open until 1 a.m. Regular hours will resume Jan. 3.

Children who will be 5 years old by Dec. 31, 1987, must have a social security number for tax purposes. The child's social security number must be listed on income tax returns in order to claim the child as an exemption. This requirement will continue in future years. Failure to include the child's social security number on the return will result in a $5 penalty.

You may pick up the forms you need to apply for your child's social security number at the Legal Assistance Office.

Effective immediately, the Veterinary Clinic operating hours change. It will be open Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 8 to 11 a.m. The clinic will be closed Dec. 31 for inventory.

The main post ID Card Section has installed a telephone information recording. The number is 545-4742. This recording provides information on the location of the section and its hours of operation. It also explains what documents are needed to obtain an ID card or enroll family members in the Defense Eligibility Enrollment Reporting System.

Also provided is a toll free number that can be called to check on DEERS enrollment and a local number to call with further questions.

Soldiers who lost out on their educational benefits when the old GI Bill expired now have a second chance to enroll in the Veterans Education Assistance Program.

Those soldiers who joined the service between Jan. 1, 1977, and June 30, 1985, and never initially enrolled in VEAP, can sign up now through March 31, 1987.

To take advantage of this opportunity, visit the nearest Army Education Center to apply. For more information, call 545-3093.

The Officers' Wives' Club School of Dance offers a variety of dance classes for all military families. These include: ballet for ages 3 and up, taught by Maria Hirsch (689-4314); jazz for ages 8 and up, taught by Ida Condry (689-2031); gymnastics for ages 3 and up, taught by Susan Mann (576-5640) or Brad Godown (324-1167); motor development and basic gymnastics for ages 18 months through 5 years, taught by Janet Bivens (327-5941); karate for ages 5 and up, taught by John Touchton (682-0687); jazzercise taught by Sheri Snoddy (561-5609); Maria's Battle of the Bulge taught by Maria Ratio (687-2616) and Pilar Cobb's Get fit, stay fit class (687-9888). To find out more about the classes, call the individual instructors.

Maria's Battle of the Bulge has gone home to Spain for the holidays, but will be back to resume classes in full force Jan. 7. For a schedule of classes, call 687-3325 or 327-9850.

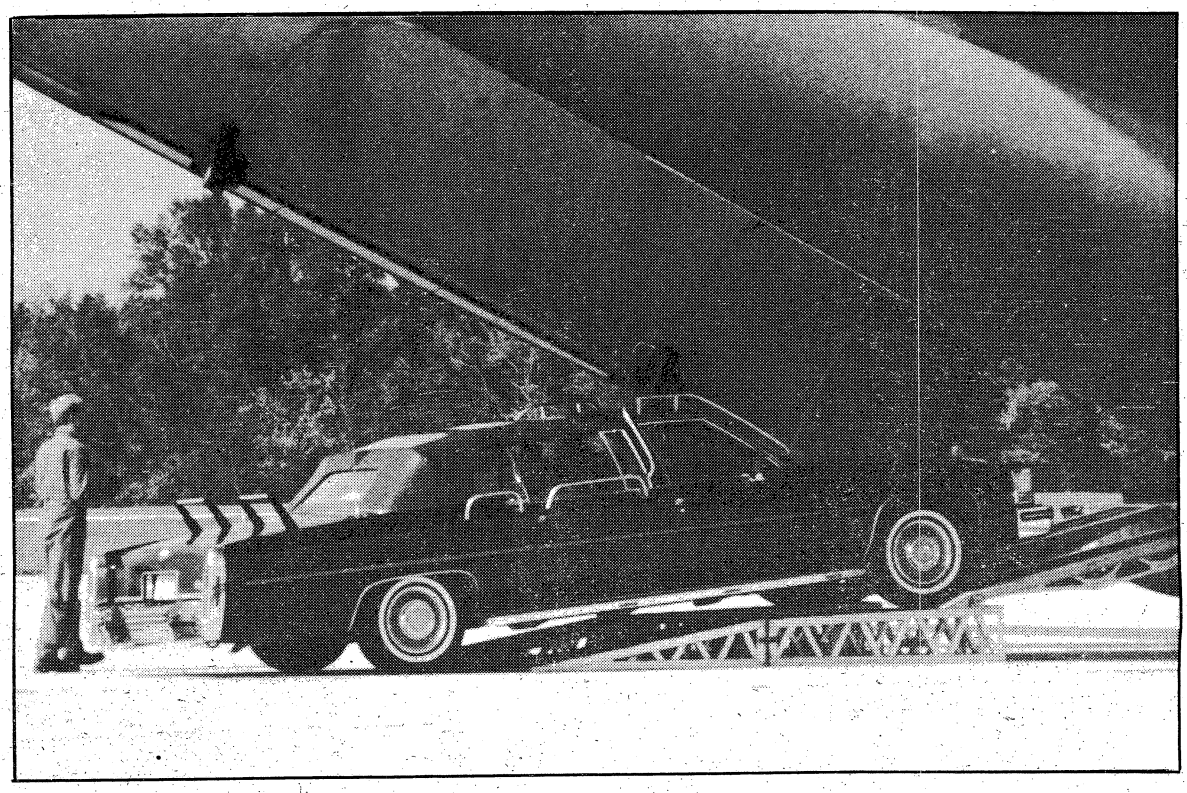
Enlisted soldiers can get free alteration and repair work done on their uniforms at the Clothing and Alterations Section, Shop 3.



The seven-member staff makes stamped name and U.S. Army tapes. They also sew on all patches authorized for wear in Army Regulation 670-1. The only thing that can't be sewn on is subdued collar rank because it is not an issued item.

There is no limit to the amount of uniforms that can be serviced but, they do not do field uniforms. Old patches should be removed prior to taking the garment in for work.

Another thing that will speed up service is to have all patches separated according to uniform when dropping off an order.

To use this service, take uniforms to Building 243 Kilgore Sfreet, behind the service station complex on main post. The hours are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday. Work is logged in according to unit.

Uniforms are usually finished in 24 hours, depending on the work load.

Lutherans invite post to communion services

USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Sightseeing Road Chapel will be the site of the monthly Lutheran Communion worship service Jan. 4 at 9 a.m.

For Lutherans, worship is dynamic. It's not a performance that spectators simply watch. It's more than an audience listening to a speaker or a lecturer.

Worship is dynamic because God comes to the individual and acts. He proclaims his word; he forgives; he renews. In turn, the individual repents, receives and responds.

Worship gives us the opportunity to praise God; to give ourselves in gratitude and humility to God. It's really a time of offering in which a person offers himself.

Lutherans believe worship is actual communion with God, in which God comes to the individual and the entire congregation.

In worship God changes human lives. As someone has observed — "When God stoops to pick up a trifle, it's a trifle no longer." That's powerful! That is the dynamic of God at work in worship.

Lutherans gather in worship to be renewed, to be refreshed, to be restored. The altar, the cross, the sacramental vessels, the paraments all aid us in this interaction with God. When we gather as God's people and share in his gift of grace in the sharing of the Sacrament of Holy Communion God does renew, refresh and restore us.

The Lutheran liturgy is a means to receive from God and to give to him in a distinctive way.

To all Lutherans on Fort Benning and to others who may so desire, you are invited to come and engage God and others in this monthly Lutheran Communion service.

For questions or information feel free to call Chap. (Maj.) Wayne A. Strohschein at 545-2169 or 545-4787.

Services planned for Feast of Mary

Catholics observe the Feast of Mary on New Year's Day, as a Holy Day of Obligation. Celebrations of the Eucharist are scheduled as follows:

Dec. 31: 7 p.m. — Main post Catholic Chapel

Jan. 1: 11 a.m. — Main post Catholic Chapel

11 a.m. — The School Brigade Chapel

11 a.m. — 1st Brigade Chapel, Sand Hill

12:30 p.m. — Spanish Mass, Sightseeing Road Chapel

PWOC announces spring program

The Protestant Women of the Chapel will begin the new year with a spring program of Bible studies and fellowship. Fellowship will be Thursdays from 9 to 11:30 a.m. at the Religious Education Center on Ingersoll Street at Dixie Road.

Bible studies will include a continuation of "Mothers of Preschoolers," "The Christian Famly," "Women of the Bible" and "Beloved Unbeliever. Three new clasess have been added, including: "1st John (Precepts)," "The Pursuit of Holiness" and "Spiritual Discipline for Weight Control."

An active outreach program, which began in the fall, will continue this spring. The women will visit Martin Army Community Hospital, a Columbus nursing home and will welcome chapel visitors on post.

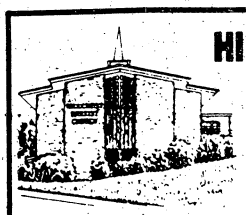
Nurseries are also provided. A special Christian crafts and Bible studies program has been added to the nursery for children ages 2 to 5.

All women of the Fort Benning area are invited to join us for a warm and enriching time every Thursday morning. For more information, call 545-2050.

Adult Sunday School forming in January

The Main Post Sunday School will offer a new adult class beginning Jan. 4.

The class will be taught by Chaplain Huey Bridgeman, and will begin by studying lessons from the "Adult Quarterly," known to many as the Uniform Lessons.



Sunday School begins at 9:30 a.m. at Building 229.

The highlight of the month for Columbus as well as Fort Benning was a presidential visit. President Ronald Reagan stopped off in Columbus on a campaigning sweep of the U.S.

Hundreds of well-wishers turned out to catch a glimpse of the top executive.

Fort Benning played its part as host to the visit when the president's limo landed at Lawson Army Airfield, complete with Secret Service crew.

Six retired general officers returned to Fort Benning for the Warfighting Conference in November. The combat veterans shared their battlefield experiences with today's up and coming leaders in the infantry, captains presently going through the Infantry Officer Advanced Course.

The post officially recognized the permanent stationing of the U.S. Army School of Americas in a gala ceremony on the school grounds. Guests from nearly all of the Latin American countries represented were in attendance as well as top officials from the U.S. government.

The tri-community Combined Federal Campaign closed the books on the 1986 drive. Total contributions tallied up to more than $540,000.

The highlight of their trip for a group of Air Force officers from the Air War College came in the form of a live-fire exercise flawlessly executed by soldiers from the 29th Infantry Regiment.

Safetycab again offered free rides home to holiday partiers who drink. In 1985 more than 140 Fort Benning soldiers used the service to get home safely.

Soldiers from the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division were airlifted to Panama for three weeks of intense training in some of the most rugged jungle terrain in the world.

"THE ALTERNATIVE ON THE STRIP"

Lack of sunlight brings on winter depression

by Dorothy Moore
"Inside The Turret," Fort Knox, Ky.

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — Leaves are falling, covering the ground with their splendor. Inside, some people are having trouble getting out of bed. Both could be suffering from the same problem — not enough light.

"This is the time of year when it is hard to get out of bed," according to Dr. Willard Whitehead, instructor of psychiatry at the University of Louisville, Ky.

"The sun is not up and the colder temperatures don't invite the person to rise. But a few are affected even more than normal.

"Some feel so slowed down that they can't do their jobs effectively, and are significantly depressed. These people might be suffering from a rare problem," said Whitehead.

Seasonal Affective Disorder was first observed in Scandinavia and other northern latitudes were the amount of light is less.

"The problem has been talked about since the turn of the century, but one of the first American formal reports came out in 1983," Whitehead said. "Dr. Norman Rosenthal, staff psychiatrist at the National Institute of Mental Health, ran that study."

The effects of SAD were explained in "S.A.D.: Shedding Some Light on the Winter Blues," in the January 1985 issue of Feeling Great.

"During winter, affected individuals feel depressed, slowed down, and generally oversleep, overeat and crave carbohydrates," Rosenthal said. "In spring and summer they are elated, active, energetic and generally function well."

Many people with SAD blame the cold weather. Some even move to a warmer climate. The seasonal depression may not stem from cold, but lack of light.

The majority of sufferers are women and the symptoms first occur in their 20s, according to the study, a family history of depression was also found in 70 percent of those studied.

Scientists think that seasonal rhythms in animals that cause hibernation can also be felt by humans. Even though only a few are extremely affected, Whitehead believes that most of us feel some of the effects.

The seasons also affect other disorders. Major depression peaks in the fall and spring. Other illnesses that have seasonal onsets include muscular dystrophy and diabetes, according to Whitehead.

SAD has been linked to the hormone melatonin, which is secreted by the pineal gland at night. It appears that higher levels of melatonin are related to the feelings of lethargy and depression. The melatonin production has been found to be inhibited by bright light.

The prescription then is a daily dose of bright lights. Artificial lengthening of daylight relieved the symptoms in two to four days for most patients in the study — but, not normal light.

The lighting apparatus used was a rectangular metal fixture containing eight fluorescent tubes behind a plastic diffusing screen. The lamps were originally used to help plants grow. They simulate the full color and ultraviolet spectrum of sunlight plus skylight, according to Rosenthal.

But, because the light it uses is 10 times the brightness of normal light, only a heath professional can use the treatment safely, Whitehead warned. Also, people should avoid self-diagnosing, and look for a specialist's help when feeling depressed.

At this time, Whithead and the University of Louisville are looking into doing research with less extreme light exposure to help prevent the illness. They are designing the research to use daily light inside the office or home.

Other studies are being done to find other factors in the cause of SAD and to examine other potential neurochemical causes.

For more information about SAD, write to the Seasonality Study, National Institutes of Health, Building 10, Room 45239, Bethesda, Md. 20205.

Girl Scouts plan annual Cookie Run

The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts, Inc., and Bank South will sponsor Cookie Run '87 Jan. 17.

The race is open to anyone who wishes to participate and consists of three events: the 1.5-mile handicapped run; 1.5-mile run and 5-mile run.

The handicapped run starts at 10 a.m.; the 1.5-mile run kicks off at 10:30 a.m. and the 5-mile begins at 11:30 a.m.

Competitors will be divided into 14 age-group designations and T-shirts will be awarded to every runner who finishes the race.

The first place overall runner in each category will receive a pizza of his choice from the Speakeasy Pub in Columbus. Trophies and cookie samplers will be the prizes for the first, second and third place overall male and female runners in the 1.5- and 5-mile races, as well as medals and a box of cookies to the first place male and female runner in each group in both races, and medals to the second and third place runners. Runners who complete the 1.5-mile handicapped race will be awarded ribbons.

Participants completing the run must stay in finish order until they receive a finish card in the chute at the finish line so they may place and receive a finish time.

If you preregister by 5:30 p.m. Jan. 17, the fee is $5 for children and $7 for adults (18 and over). You can register the day of the race beginning at 8:30 a.m. at St. Elmo School, for $6 per child or $8 per adult.

Mail registration to the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts, Inc., 1807 17th Street, Columbus, GA 31901, and make checks payable to the council.

Or drop your form by the council's office between the hous of 8:30 a.m. and 5: 30 p.m., weekdays.

Dressing properly helps runners avoid cold injuries

by John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

A National Guard Running Club from the Southwest wants to know how to contend with our chilly weather.

The past week was punctuated by several days of early morning temperatures in the low 30s. The long training runs are most enjoyable in the brisk holiday air. It is the cold morning or evening that could be a problem.

How to keep warm? After six winters away from Northwestern Pennsylvania, my blood has thinned and I'm as ready as anyone else to wimp out. A few basic tips can keep you going.

- Wear a hat. Yes, your mother was right! More than 30 percent of body heat will be lost from the head. Almost any hat will do, even a cap, but if you choose a toboggan you'll be very warm.
- Protect the neck. Because of the sensitive skin and presence of large blood vessels near the surface, cold against the front of the neck is a real bother. A simple towel wrapped here is helpful. Another trick is a T-shirt over the head but then gathered in front of the neck.
- Gloves are not really a necessity and they can be quite expensive. Above 30 degrees try just running close-fisted for the first 15 minutes, then open handed. If you feel you must cover your pinkies, an anklet works very well.
- Keeping the trunk of the body warm doesn't have to be difficult. Several companies sell sophisticated state-of-the-art heat retaining running gear. The average "Joe" on a budget cannot justify spending $40 to $75 for something used so little. Again, simple is best. A large bulky shirt with loosely crumpled newspaper does surprisingly well. A long-sleeve thermal undershirt performs well, too.
- Don't overdress in an attempt to warm those hips. Shorts can be worn with impunity down to even 20 degrees Fahrenheit. If there is a wind, and it's really —10 degrees you have problems. Cotton, rather than nylon, can be helpful material for shorts.
- Surprisingly, the feet survive most cold weather unless they are wet and cold. Hunting socks are too bulky. Two very thin socks can be used. Avoid puddles! Even in winter, the humidity in Georgia is still above 50 percent. This translates into a distinct phenomenon. Once you're wet — you're wet! Evaporation is extremely poor. So don't get wet in the first place.
- Advanced technology. How about cellulose face masks, self-contained air warmers, battery powered gloves . . .

If you want to run, then run! If it's too cold for you, then stay indoors and work on flexibility or something. Cold is the upper peninsula in Michigan where saliva freezes on the face. Cold is not the chilliness of West Central Georgia.

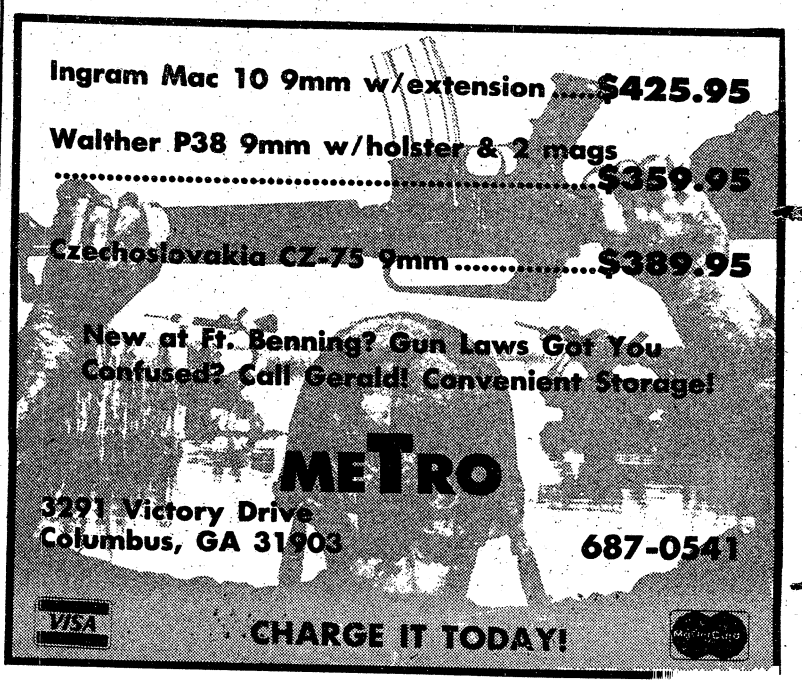
Waterfowl hunting dates announced

Georgia's waterfowl seasons have been set for the 1986, 1987 season. The duck hunting season runs through Jan. 18.

Bag limits are four daily, not to exceed more than two wood ducks; three mallards, only one of which can be a hen; two pintails; one black duck; two redheads; and one fulvous tree duck.

The season is closed for canvasbacks. These seasons and bag limits will apply to the Georgia portion of Fort Benning.

Hunting on the Alabama portion of the reservation will be in compliance with Alabama State Law regarding seasons, bag limits, and special state licenses.



For more information call 544-6120.

Hunters can sign out from Building 4 now

Hunters can register for Saturday hunting areas in Classroom 20, Building 4, from noon to 3 p.m. every Friday.
