Last month, Brooks said his office counseled 27 people who had a total indebtedness of $237,247. They ranged in rank from private to staff sergeant, with the majority being SP4s and above.

Part of the problem is that credit is too easy to get in a military town, Brooks said. "You hear and see advertisements all the time, buy this with no money down," he said. "What they don't tell you is that the interest rate is 20 to 30 percent."

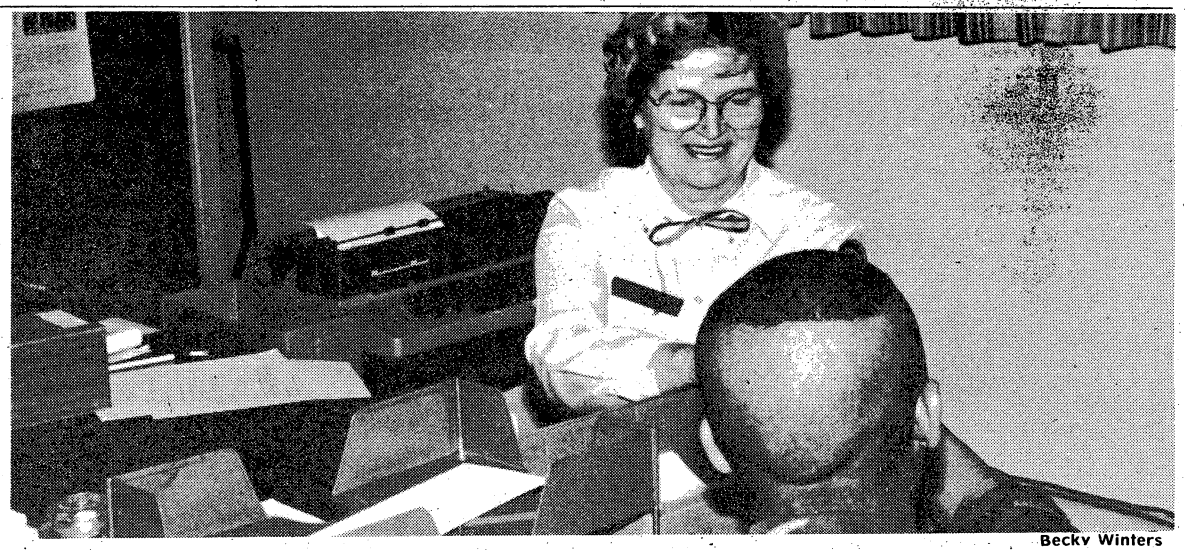
Part of the problem many people have is setting spending priorities, said Helen Walnes, a budget counselor. "So many people I see want a lot of material things, but they don't really need them."

She said instant gratification is the problem, but that a family cannot live if it has to pay out too much on installment purchases. "I tell them if they pay 15 percent of their take home pay to creditors, they're in financial trouble," she said.

Brooks said it's always better to pay for purchases in cash and avoid finance and interest charges. But if you have to finance the item, shop around for the best interest rate.

"Ask what interest rate the seller is charging, and make sure you are getting the lowest rate possible," he said.

Brooks said that while some purchases must be made on an installment basis, many others can be avoided. He said when buying furniture or appliances, use a layaway plan or save up the money.



Setting up a family budget is basically a matter of setting your priorities and then sticking to the plan, he said.

Good financial management is a must for soldiers, who can face disciplinary action if they get in trouble.

Brooks said commanders can take several actions against a soldier who is financially irresponsible. These include written and verbal reprimands, Articles 15, bars to reenlistment and promotion and discharge from the service.

While the majority of his clients are people who are already in financial trouble, the office will work with anyone who whats help in setting up a budget.

In addition to their office in Splinter Village, ACS is opening up a second location for the convenience of soldiers. The new office is in Building 9025 in Kelley Hill. To make an appointment at either office, call 545-5516 or 545-4357.

Richardson to speak at West Point dinner

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Gen. William R. Richardson will speak at the West Point Founder's Day Dinner Mar. 22 at 7:30 p.m. in the Officer's Club.

Richardson is the commanding general of Training and Doctrine Command. He is a 1951 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy, where he earned a B.S. degree in military engineering.

He also holds a M.S. degree in business administration from George Washington University.

Key assignments held recently include dual responsiblity as Deputy Commanding General of TRADOC and Commanding General of the U.S. Army Combined Arms Center at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas; and Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans at Army Headquarters in Washington, D.C.

He served in a variety of career-building assignments before assuming his most recent duties. He was assigned to Washington, D.C., as Operational Analysis Team Chief in the Force Planning Analysis Directorate, and later, as Executive in the Office of the Assistant Vice Chief of Staff.

This was followed by command of the 198th Infantry Brigade, and then Chief of Staff for the 23rd Infantry Division (Americal) in Vietnam. Returning to the U.S., Richardson served as Deputy Commanding General of the U.S. Army Training Center (Engineers) and Fort Leonardwood, Mo., and as Assistant Commandant of the Infantry School, Fort Benning, Ga.

Posted to foreign soil, he commanded the 193rd Infantry Brigade (Canal Zone) while also holding command responsibility for the Army Security Assistance Agency, Latin America

Again returning to the states, he became Director of Requirements in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans, Washington, D.C., a position held until undertaking his latest assignments.

His military education includes completion of the Infantry Basic and Advanced Officer Courses, the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College and the Industrial College of the Armed Forces. He is also a graduate of the Canadian Army Staff College.

His awards and decorations include the Distinguished Service Medal, the Silver Star (with one Oak Leaf Cluster), the Legon of Merit (with two Oak Leaf Clusters), and the Distinguished Flying Cross.

He has also been awarded the Bronze Star Medal with "V" Device (with three Oak Leaf Clusters), several Air Medals with "V" Device, the Army Commendation Medal (with two Oak Leaf Clusters) and the Purple Heart.

Badges he is entitled to wear include the Combat Infantryman Badge (two awards), the Parachutist Badge, the Army General Staff Identification Badge and the Joint Chiefs of Staff Identification Badge.

He is married to the former Mary Bailey. They have three sons: William R. Jr., David and John.

West Point cadet.

transfusions," he said. "For example, a person with bleeding disorders would receive the platelets."

Those who donate a gallon of blood to the bank receive a plaque from the American Association of Blood Banks, as well as a letter of appreciation for their 201 file from the lab.

If you can't make it to the field location on Wednesdays, drop by the hospital lab. Blood donations are taken on a walk-in basis every weekday except Wednesday, from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m.

MP's job is rear security at National Training Center

By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

The military police mission changes drastically during field exercises. Ticket pads and patrol cars are replaced with contour maps and gun jeeps.

For MPs in the 197th Infantry Brigade, law enforcement is only a part of their duties while the Brigade completes its rotation at the National Training Center.

According to Maj. Jean Kennedy, 197th Infantry Brigade Provost Marshal, the MP platoon has many missions when deployed to the field on an exercise such as Solar Ice.

"Our primary role is rear area security," Maj. Kennedy said. "We provide a reactionary force to defend against an attack on the Brigade Support Area (BSA). We also provide supply route security and real-world law enforcement."

This type of exercise gives MP soldiers a chance to perform duties they seldom do at Fort Benning.

SFC Norman Johnson, operations sergeant for the Brigade Provost Marshall's Office said. "In garrison, we are strictly law enforcement, but this exercise gives the MP's a lot of experience and hands-on training in their field duties."

"Were using weapons like M-60 machine guns and Viper Antiarmor weapons, that we don't often have a chance to use." Johnson continued, "We're also using such skills as estimating range, map reading and identifying friendly or enemy aircraft and vehicles."

Another mission of MPs in the field is to provide security for the Brigade's Tactical Operations Center (TOC). Soldiers man the TOC entrance and manage the TOC pass system. They also guard the dismount point at the entrance to the TOC compound.

Throughout the exercise, MPs might also do such things as operate a prison of war collection point or conduct a battlefield circulation mission. In a true combat situation a battlefield circulation mission involves locating disoriented refugees, local nationals or even soldiers, and directing them to where they belong.

While at the NTC, MPs also stay in touch with Fort Irwin's Provost Marshal's Office to monitor 197th soldiers who are involved in traffic or uniform violations. To help in this effort, Brigade MPs take advantage of every opportunity to inform soldiers of Fort Irwin regulations such as post facilities which have been placed off limits to rotational units. The MPs also enforce good safety practices for the Brigade.

Before and after the actu field exercise at the NTC, MF are involved in everything fro convoy escorts to manning an nesty points. The amnesty poin allow a soldier to discard prohil ited items without disclosing hi identity. Some of the MPs w travel with the trains to guai the vehicles until they safel reach Fort Benning.

CEVs make engineers' work easier at NTC

By Bill Branley

197th

While in the desert at NTC, 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers may have noticed an odd-looking vehicle that looks like a cross between a tank, a bulldozer and a tow truck.

It's actually a Combat Engineer Vehicle (CEV), one of several used by the Brigade's 72nd Engineer Company. The CEV is mounted on an M-60 tank chassis and has a main gun that fires a low-velocity round used to destroy obstacles, or even buildings. It's blade can push dirt, and its lifting boom can pull out many types of obstructions.

The CEV is just one item of a long list of valuable assets and skills that engineers can provide to combat task forces. The 72nd Engineers deployed to NTC with three line platoons of 30 men each, and an assault-and-barrier platoon of almost 60 men. The assault-and-barrier platoon contains the company's heavy equipment, such as CEVs, bulldozers, dump trucks and bucket loaders.

The 72nd Engineers were augmented during Operation Solar Ice by ten engineers from the 33rd Infantry Brigade of the Illinois National Guard. The guardsmen are members of the 233rd Engineer Company.

Capt. Mitch Hayden, 72nd Engineer commander, explains that engineers generally go wherever they are needed during combat operations.

"They were deployed in many different ways during this rotation," he says, "depending on the mission of the task forces."

Whether a combat unit is attacking or defending, engineers can be critical to a commander's success.

"In the offense," explains Hayden, "engineers may be placed behind the lead platoon of the lead company to breech enemy obstacles and prepare routes for the task force."

At other times, especially in the defense, engineers will put in obstacles and minefields to block the enemy's advance. They may also help with fighting positions for infantrymen and hull-defilade positions for tanks.

"Our guys put in some tremendous obstacle systems during this rotation," Hayden says. "The newer soldiers have never put in these kinds of obstacles. They're learning how to use terrain to complement their obstacles."

For one particular defense, engineers put in more than 1200 meters of tank ditches, wire and mines. At times, a network of obstacles can amount to even more than that in total linear distance.

"Depending on the mission," adds Hayden, "the soldiers might have anywhere from a few hours to 24 or 36 hours to emplace their obstacles."

One of the ironies of combat engineering, especially at NTC, is having to fill the tank ditches and recover mines and wire after a battle has been fought.

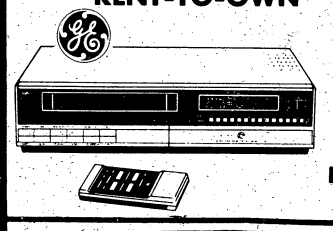
Sgt. Ronald Alford, an engineer squad leader, says, "We put 'em out, then pick 'em up. Sometimes the OPFOR starts shooting at us. We shoot back."

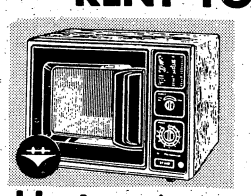
Hayden notes that all combat engineers have the secondary mission of fighting as infantrymen when required. At NTC, they often provided their own local security at work sites.

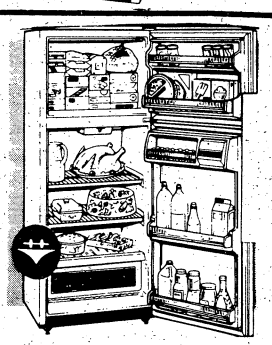
VA Q&A

Editor's note — Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — How long does a power of attorney designating a service organization to represent me in claims matters last?







A — A power of attorney does not expire. It must be revoked or cancelled. The VA treats designation of a new power of attorney as an automatic cancellation of an earlier one. You may cancel a power of attorney at any time by notifying the VA.

Q — Does a general discharge from military service qualify me for benefits from the VA?

A — Yes. Honorable and general discharges qualify veterans for benefits.

Benning soldiers dig in for attack

By Sally Toomey

197th

Furlong Ridge, Fort Irwin, Calif. — From most vantage points along this ridge a soldier can look northeast across a wide, lonely expanse of desert that Fort Irwiners call Siberia.

Some 700 soldiers from Fort Benning's 197th Infantry Brigade are firmly entrenched at the base of Furlong Ridge, waiting for an enemy who is already storming across Siberia in wide columns of tanks and other armored vehicles.

This group of Fort Benning soldiers is designed as Task Force 2-69, which is made up of tankers, mechanized infantrymen, anti-armor gunners and others. All are backed up by attack helicopters and U.S. Air Force aircraft.

The soldiers are a lot smarter than they were several days ago when the 197th began its 14-days of desert operations. Battle after battle against Fort Irwin's seasoned desert fighters resulted in some hard lessons about desert warfare. Now, the 197th soldiers want to put some of those lessons to use.

When the enemy force materializes on the horizon it is met by a wall of tank and machine gun fire. The tanks fire from behind small berms and ridges while the infantrymen take advantage of the desert floor's many natural hiding places.

One by one, yellow lights on the enemy's vehicles start blinking, indicating a "kill". Radios buzz with an endless clamour of reports and instructions. Main tank guns and automatic weapons, all firing blank ammunition, create a din that sounds close to actual combat. Tracked vehicles churning through sand fill the air with huge clouds of blinding, choking dust.

But when the dust settles after a couple of hours of fighting, the desert landscape is littered with flashing yellow lights . . . most of them belonging to the enemy.

Although battles are fought almost everyday at the National Training Center (NTC), each successive battle becomes a little more interesting as the visiting soldiers get better at what they are doing. Combat units from all over the United States rotate in and out of the NTC to gain proficiency at putting battle tactics to work against a living, breathing enemy.

While it's true the enemy is a live one, he's not exactly hostile. The enemy forces are made up of U.S. Army soldiers stationed at Fort Irwin. They wear Warsaw Pact-styled uniforms and operate Soviet fighting vehicles, such as T-72 tanks and BMPs, which are Soviet versions of our armored personnel carriers. Some other vehicles on the battlefield are American vehicles modified to look like Soviet equipment.

The key to success at the NTC is to learn something from every battle.

SSgt. Claude Moore, a tank platoon sergeant from Task Force 2-69, said after one recent battle, "It all happened so fast. They were dug in pretty good, in the open areas where they were lots of wadis (dry river beds)."

He added, "Those BMPs can hide real well and just pick off tanks."

However, the most recent battles seem to indicate that the Georgia soldiers may have learned to use the desert terrain to their advantage.

Lt. Col. Bert Maggart, task force commander, says that at Fort Benning his soldirs get the "bunch-up syndrome," meaning that the heavily wooded terrain causes tankers to become clustered in groups.

"After a few days out here you begin to realize the amount of space you have to work with," Maggart says. "You learn the value of keeping vehicles dispersed."

He added that, among other things, his unit has learned to communicate better on the radio and react more effeciently when

Battalion gets supplies to troops on front lines

By Sally Toomey

Nestled among Fort Irwin's desert mountains, units in the Brigade Support Area (BSA) didn't have daily contact with the opposing force. But, without the non-stop efforts of those soldiers, the 197th Infantry Brigade's task forces would have had more than a persistent OPFOR keeping them from their objectives.

The 197th Support Battalion had a very real mission in the "war" that took place over the hills. According to LTC John Stewart, 197th Support Battalion commander, the BSA is critical to the life of any unit.

"Our first priority is to support the Brigade," LTC Stewart said during the exercise. "We push supplies forward. This is the lifeline for the Brigade and that sustains the battles."

While soldiers worked diligently to support the task forces, evaluators from Fort Benning accompanied the unit to rate its performance.

Units in the Support Battalion provide logistical, medical, maintenance, transportation and administrative support to the Brigade. During this exercise, evaluators scrutinized those missions as well such combat missions as organized rear area defense, communications, security and set up of the BSA.

SFC William Feeney, an evaluator from Fort Benning's 34th Medical Battalion watched B Company medics set up a field hospital under blackout conditions.

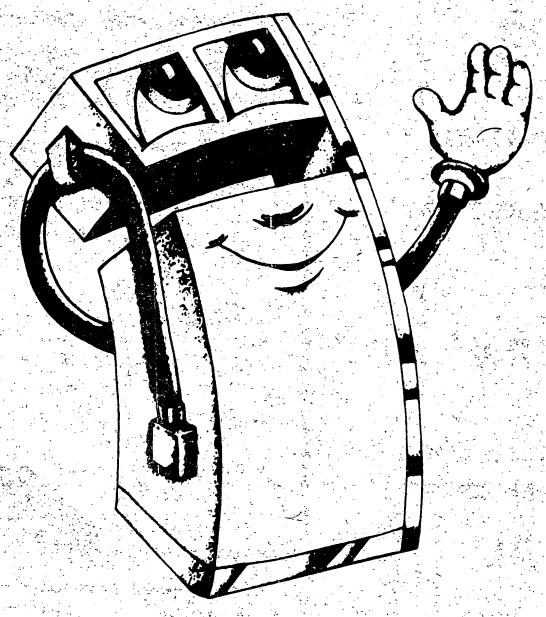
While Task Force 2-69 has been sparring with the opposition, the 197th Brigade's other task force has been engaging mechanical targets in a four-day live fire exercise.

Task Force 1-58, in a standard part of rotations at the NTC, put live rounds down range in a series of defenses and offenses. Tomorrow they begin fighting the OPFOR (opposition force) while Task Force 2-69 prepares for its live fire exercise.



Other units of the 197th are at various locations on Fort Irwin, all supporting the brigade until the exercise winds down March 11.

The Fort Benning soldiers will start flying back to Lawson Army Airfield at Fort Benning March 13.

"We checked to insure that the layout was logical for smooth patient flow, yet tactically sound," Feeney said.

The medics maintained the Brigade's field hospital and Advanced Trauma Life Support (ATLS). The unit also conducted sick call and subsequent dental or medical care for soldiers during the rotation.

"NCOs got a lot out of this," Feeney said during the evaluation. "They demonstrate, teach and watch soldiers put their knowledge to good use."

While the medics mended soldiers, mechanics mended machines. The Support Battalion's maintenance mission was carried out by D Company soldiers.

During Operation Solar Ice, the company "field tested" a new method of providing maintenance support to the Brigade Contact teams of D Company soldiers deployed with the task forces to be on hand for immediate repairs.

The unit also insured that requisitioned parts were sent forward to the task forces with a minimum of delay.

Capt. Mark Morrison, D Company commander noted, "This exercise enabled us to work in a tactical environment. We did what we do on Fort Benning, but we also had such combat missions as BSA defense and security, field communication and light and noise dicipline to perform."

The survivability of the Brigade in a tactical environment is also dependant on constant supplies of food and fuel. Bringing in these materials is the mission of Company C.

Units came to the BSA to tap Company C's fuel tankers and haul the precious cargo back to the task forces.

Battalion Food Service Sections picked up everything from ice and milk to meats and coffee to prepare and distribute to their companies.

While these units distributed the supplies, the Brigade material Management Center (BMMC), part of Support Battalion's headquarters company, monitored the supply system. They kept track of the amount of supplies needed to sustain the Brigade throughout the exercise.

For Example, SFC John Gilbert coordinated with Fort Irwin for all the fuel that Company C picked up and took back to the BSA. Early in the exercise, Gilbert estimated that the 197th and attached units would use 200,000 gallons of diesel fuel, 35,000 gallons of MOGAS and 35,000 gallons of JP4 jet fuel throughout the training.

Also, Company A utilized its Adjutant General (AG) assets to perform its mission of mail distribution for the Brigade as well as visiting units.

Stewart noted that logistics play a key role in the success of the Brigade. "The soldiers have worked hard. It was a very dedicated and professional effort. Without them, no brigade could survive because we control every aspect of supply survivability."

Employee honored for 25 years service

29th Inf

By Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment, PAO

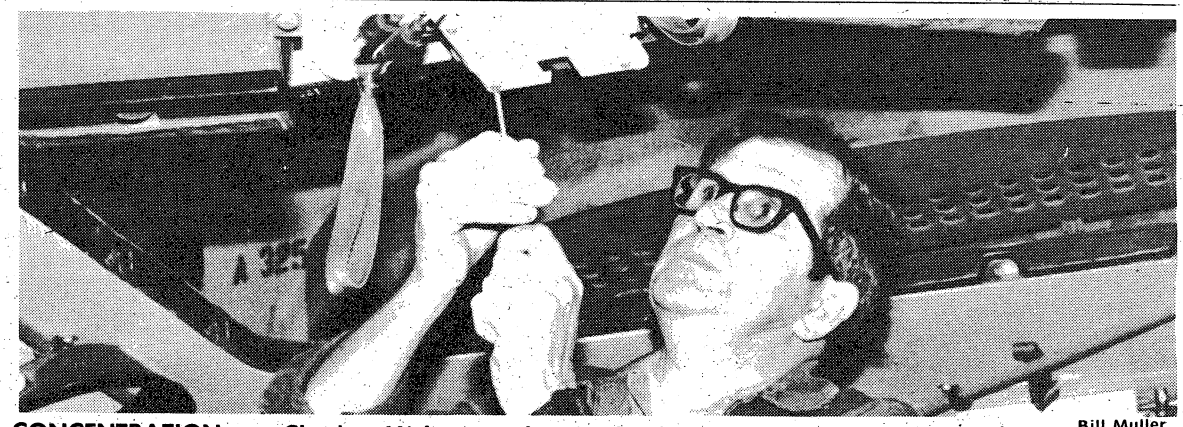
Charles Mickey has enjoyed every minute of what he has done for the past 25 years.

A three-year civilian employee at Fort Benning, Mickey was honored at a ceremony recently for having devoted a total of 25 years to the federal government.

Three years were with the U.S. Army, 1954 to 1957; 19 years with the U.S. Air Force, 1957 to 1977; and he came on board Fort Benning as a civilian employee in 1983.

Mickey, a heavy mobile equipment mechanic with 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment Motor Pool, says he worked in the same occupation while in the Army and Air Force.

"I've enjoyed my time in service," he says.



"It's been a steady job and I've travelled around the world, met different people and made new friends."

During his military service, he was stationed in England, Germany, Turkey, Japan and Thailand.

So, what's it like to be a civilian employee?

Mickey says, "My civilian job is easier. I don't have the same pressure, and there is not as much moving around."

Mickey believes that support from his wife, Martha, and his four children, Charles, Linda, David and Mark, helped him to enjoy his time in service.

Nothing heard.

When soldiers of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment can't communicate because of radio failure, they call on their communication shop.

The shop's mission is to insure that all commo equipment is in working order, says SFC George Sanks, noncommissioned officer in charge.

Sanks and his crew of 10 soldiers are responsible for 234 pieces of communication equipment, most of which is radio equipment on the M-2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle and the M-151 jeep.

Sanks says, "We do our best in order for the Bradley to do its best."

The most enjoyable part of the crew's job is to have a soldier come to them with a problem that he is unable to solve, according to Sanks.

"This is when we exercise our trouble-shooting procedure.

"It's kind of like solving a mystery," Sanks says.

At times, the crew is readily able to identify the problem if the soldier has practiced good operator's maintenance, Sanks says.

The crew is also responsible for keeping commanders abreast of equipment changes, Sanks says.

Engineers hit the field

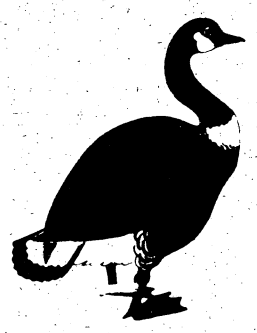
John H. Kelleher
586th Engineer Co.

The 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) of the 67th Maintenance Battalion, conducted field training exercises recently.The company-level FTX emphasized individual and platoon-level training, as well as serving as an indoctrination to newly arrived soldiers and unit leaders. While conducting this FTX the company simultaneously supported the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry Regiment by providing thirty soldiers for the Ranger's cold weather training in Alaska.

During the FTX each platoon conducted classes and hands-on training on a variety of subjects, including obstacle emplacement, placement and breaching of booby traps, individual and squad movement, tying knots and lashings and river crossing operations.



The 31st Rubber Boat Detachment gave training on the 15-man assault boat on their use during the assault phase of a deliberate river crossing.

Five-bay ribbon bridge rafts were constructed during the day and night and new soldiers learned bridging skills during this operation.

Preparations are currently underway for the 586th to deploy to Fort Bragg from March 17 through 25 for the second annual 20th Engineer Brigade bridge exercises.

B-9-2 earns all 'go's' on OSUT cycle tests

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

ATC

What do you call a one station unit training company in the Army Training Center that gets virtually 100 percent "go's" on all major tests? Bravo-9-2.

Company B, 9th Battalion, 2nd Training Brigade is setting Army Training Center unit test records on their ear.

When the company record-fired on basic rifle marksmanship, they set a record of 33.70 out of 40 shots and broke the two-year standing ATC record of 32.74.

On the hand grenade range, they scored an average of 51.75 out of a possible 60 and all soldiers scored expert with no failures.

On their mid-cycle tests, the soldiers all passed the first time, with 116 troops passing 20 test tasks out of 20.

When they went on to their military occupational specialty testing, the company again had 100 percent first time go's.

Their Army Physical Readiness Test average was 280.6 out of 300 and 99 percent passed the test the first time.

The end of cycle test again saw all 138 of the soldiers passing the first time, with 108 not missing a single test task.

"Our success was a combination of a couple of things. First, we were working with super soldiers and, secondly, the dedication and expertise of our drill sergeants was superb," said company commander, Cpt. Paul Agosta.

Battalion commander, Lt. Col. Fred Sheldon, had high praise for the unit.

"In order for Company B to do what they did, their trainees had to believe that their drill sergeants cared for them. Then they understood what the drill sergeant was after. When you have a drill sergeant who wakes his sol-

Setting high standards yields high results

Reflections

Someone once said, "The way to make people great is to expect a lot from them." The idea is that people respond to expectations.

One of the marks of a true leader is that he/she performs in a job with a lot of initiative based on an understanding of what is expected, rather than waiting to be ordered to accomplish each task.

The 1986 Army Theme of "Values" includes personal responsibility as one of the "enduring values which comprise the Army ethic." Certainly, personal responsibility is tied to one's conception of individual/group expectations.

All of us operate off of expectations either real or imagined. How many times have you done something just because it was "expected?" What is of great interest to me is that we rarely transfer our everyday allegience to expectations to our every day exercise of faith.

We would not dare be late to a formation but we do not feel a twinge of guilt about being late to a chapel program. We will not fail to even over-prepare for a class or briefing we are to give while Sunday School lessons, Bible study, even sermons, are thrown together in last minute frenzies. We would not think of insulting our superiors or friends, but often our spouse or children are ridiculed, embarrassed, screamed at when we get "home where it is safe."

This dichotomy of life experience is in part what James 2 has in mind when it states, "Even so faith, if it has no works is dead, being by itself." If Christianity appears to be lifeless or unappealing, it is not a reflection of God's impotence but our own. If a church has lapsed into a casual lingering with the Truth of God, it is because the congregation refuses to expect the Truth of God to be the Life changing Word it is! If our prayer life is empty, God is not asleep — we are.

Without exception, Biblical faith is described as that which brings expectation to life. Faith is not some religious rule of exception to life's turmoil or joys. The measure of our faith is mirrored in the lifestyle we create based on the spiritual expectations we live out on earth.

Whatever your spiritual condition happens to be, I encourage you to join with me in living up to what is expected of you. It is, very simply, "Therefore, you are to be perfect, as your heavenly Father is." Matthew 5:48

Meditation room opened at building 4 library

Students, staff and faculty members, civilian employees and visitors: the meditation room, located in the Donovan Technical Library in building 4, is a non-denominational facility open for you to spend some time in prayer and personal reflection.

Hours of operation are the same as the library.

Every Tuesday and Thursday from 12:10 to 12:30 a.m. a devotional group meets in the meditation room for prayer and fellowship.

For more information call Chaplain (Maj) David Hicks at 545-2662.

Contemporary music featured at upcoming gospel concert

Bobby Michaels will present a concert of Contemporary Gospel Music at The Infantry Center Chapel tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. The community is invited.

Michaels will also be singing for soldiers at the Reception Station, 1ITB, 2ITB, and 36th Eng. Gp, and will make presentations to soldiers in the Army Training Center and for chapel congregations on main post.

For more information, call the Chaplain's Office at 545-2288.

Program helps divorcees adjust to singles lifestyle

The Pastoral Institute will sponsor a program for divorced persons Thursday at the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Center from 7 to 8:30 p.m.

Reverend Douglas C. Turley, director of the institute, will lead a discussion on "Who am I; what do I want; and what am I willing to pay for it." The cost is $3 including refreshments.

For more information, call Rosalyn Holmes at 568-2317.

Catholic Women of the Chapel

Please join the CWOC at the home of Irene Meloy at 604 1st Division Road on March 25 at 9:30 a.m.

Free babysitting is available at 9:00 a.m. at the Religious Education Center.

There will be a special program on how to put together a traditional Easter basket for the blessing of Holy Saturday.

For more information call 545-4361 or 687-0925.

Special Bible study groups further spiritual education

In addition to the Precept Bible study classes the Protestant Women of the Chapel offer, the group also sponsors three options to the program.

First, a beginner's Bible study class is taught by Nancy McKenzie. Secondly, a study class meets and discusses the book, "The Spirit-Controlled Woman" by Beverly La Haye. The mothers of pre-schoolers program offers a third option which consists of Bible-related studies, crafts, fellowship and fun, centered around the idea that sometimes moms need a morning out.

The classes meet at the Religious Education Center every Monday at 9 a.m. and are open to everyone. Free babysitting is provided.

Van Stone is guest speaker at potluck luncheon April 2

Dorie Van Stone, author of "The Girl That Nobody Loved" will speak at a potluck luncheon April 2 sponsored by the Protestant Women of the Chapel. Van Stone's presentation will begin at 9 a.m. in the main post chapel annex. Free babysitting will be provided, but bring each child a sack lunch. Call Ms. Larabel at 689-4185 for more information.

PWOC lecture-slide series features Shroud of Turin

The Shroud of Turin will be the topic of a lecture and slide presentation March 28 at the Infantry Center Chapel. Lecturer-researcher Russell Breault will speak on the Shroud, which is reputed to be the burial cloth of Christ, at 7 p.m. Free babysitting will be provided. The lecture is sponsored in part by the Protestant Women of the Chapel.

Riverside: tour of C.G.'s quarters gives inside story

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Surrounded by stately oak trees and carefully sculpted lawns, Riverside sits imposingly on Fort Benning, remnant of an era gone with the wind but with its foot firmly in the door of modern times as home to Benning's newest commanding general and family, the Edwin Burbas.

"I never dreamed I'd live in Riverside when Maj. Gen Burba was a captain here at Fort Benning. I never thought we'd live here again," says Trish Burba, opening the door to the commanding general's quarters, now her home.

Mrs. Burba conducted an informal tour of the downstairs of Riverside, the official area of the house.

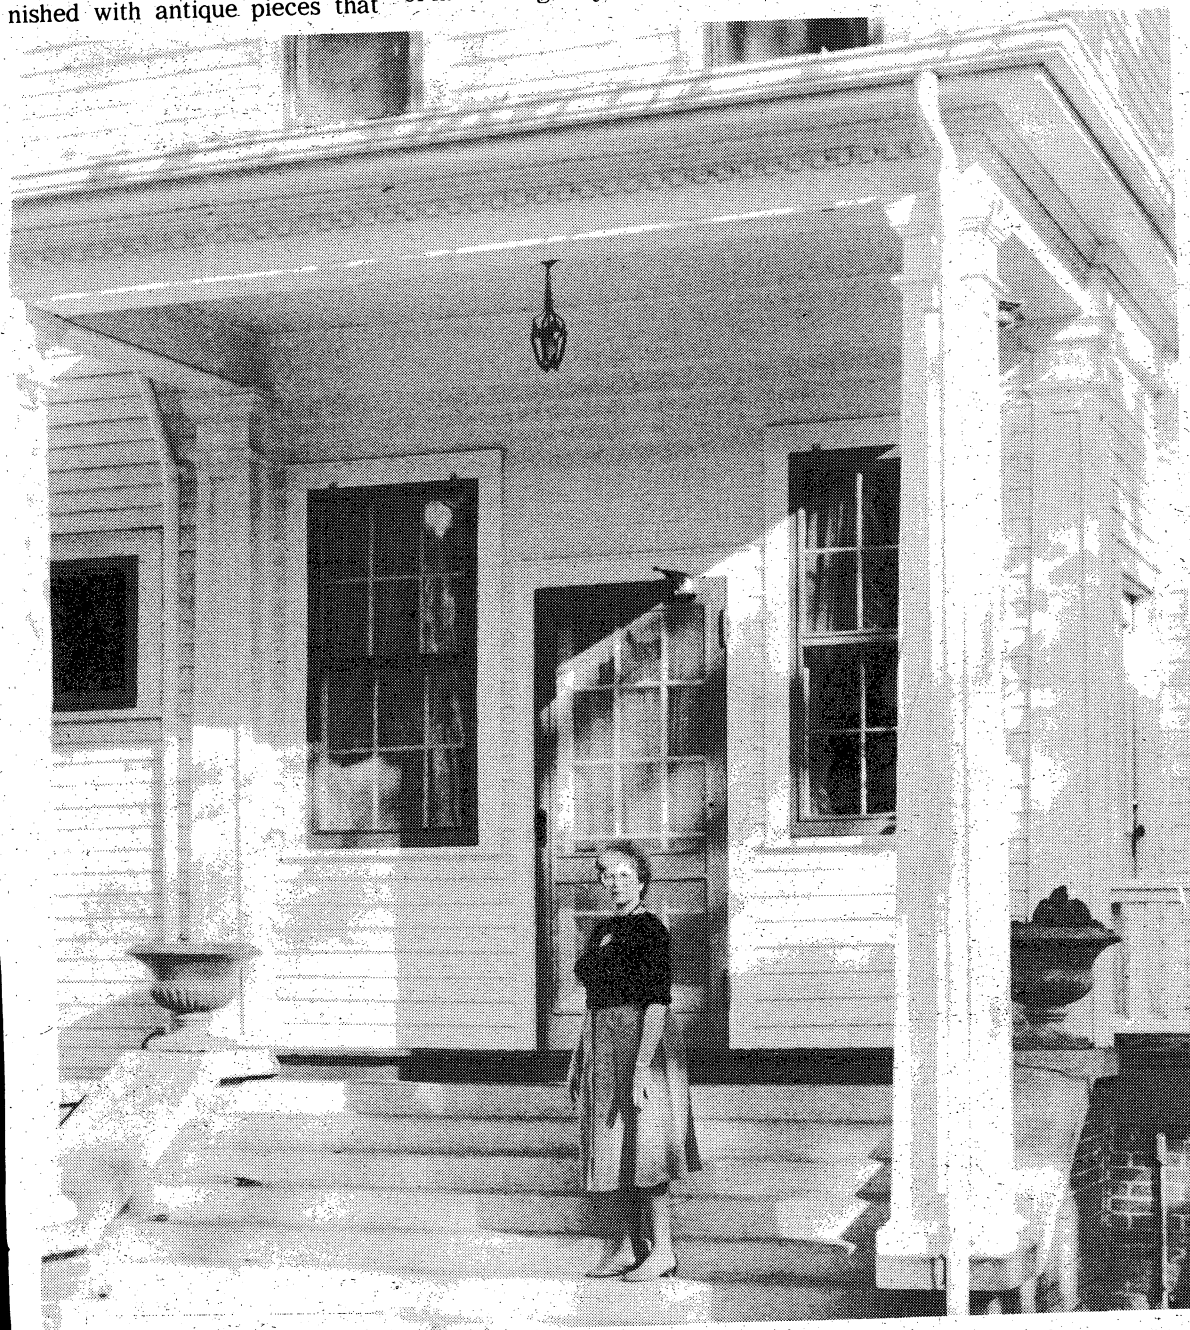
"The downstairs has three living rooms, a reception area, a formal powder room, a dining room, breakfast room, massive kitchen and a back-room utility area. It's huge," Mrs. Burba said.

The general's quarters are furnished with antique pieces that belong to the Army, mahogany china cabinets and beautiful, solid wood coffee and end tables, but the formality of the house is not the Burbas.

"When I was looking at the house with Maj. Gen. Lindsey's wife, I told her Ed and I wouldn't fit in here because all of our furniture is Danish modern," said Mrs. Burba, laughing.

The room that reflects the "Burba's," according to Mrs. Burba, is a small living room off of the main entrance. It is simply but cozily filled with her Danish modern furniture. Two armchairs and a couch face book shelves and a television set.

"This room is the Burba's. We have a very casual life style and this reflects it," she said.



When Mrs. Burba showed the wide, screened porches and the sculpted lawns she laughingly said she sometimes felt obligated to put on an antebellum costume reminiscent of the pre-Civil War South and walk among the magnolias.

Riverside was originally part of lands bought by Colonel Sowell Woolfolk in 1827, who called it Cusseta Plantation after the original Indian town by that name that was once on the land. After the Civil War the land was divided up and sold and the Hatcher family bought the Riverside area. Arthur Bussey, a Columbus businessman, purchased the estate from the Hatchers and had Riverside built in 1909 as a summer home for his family and as the center of a huge plantation.

The nucleus of the house was formed by an old meeting house moved onto the land from Lumpkin Road. Bussey added two kitchens, a bathroom, upstairs bedrooms and porches. The house, when completed, boasted two parlors and a dining room.

Purchased by the Federal government in 1918, Riverside became the comanding general's quarters for the newly moved Infantry School, previously located at Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

Riverside was renovated and has five bedrooms and three baths, in additon to the downstairs rooms mentioned.

NBC INTERVIEW — SFC Jimmey Mayo (r), Company C, 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, explains his duties to an NBC News team including photographer Charles Zachariae (l), correspondent Dennis Murphy and producer Susan LaSalla during an interview in the company barracks last week.

NBC television crew films story of post drill sergeant

By Lee L. Stockdale

"Get up men!"

"Let's move, men!"

"There's no speed limit on walking!"

With these choice words of inspiration, SFC Jimmy W. Mayo welcomes his trainees to a brand new day. Also there at the 5 a.m. wake-up is a film crew from NBC Nightly News.

Mayo is presently a drill sergeant for Fourth Platoon, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

But in November of 1982, he was with the 82nd Airborne Division in Grenada. That's where he met the members of the NBC news team who are doing a story on him now.

Susan LaSalla, the producer for the news team, remembers meeting Mayo, who was then acting platoon leader with Company C, 2nd Battalion, 505th Airborne Infantry.

Mayo's battalion commander, Lt. Col. Keith Nightingale, told LaSalla that she could get some good television footage with Mayo's platoon, and that's when the news team started following him around.

"He didn't know what to do with me," LaSalla said. "He thought women shouldn't be allowed in Grenada. But then he got used to us."

What struck LaSalla was the "incredibly special relationship he had with his troops."

The 32-year-old father of two was born at Fort Hood, Texas and raised at Army posts around the world. He joined the Army because, "It's the only thing I knew. I was born and raised Army."

"Mayo loves the Army about as much as anybody I've ever known," LaSalla said.

"Airborne soldier" rightly describes him. Since he joined the Army in 1970, he has served with the 82nd Airborne Division, the 509th Airborne Battalion in Vicenza, Italy, and with the Airborne Department here.

His goal is to go back to Fort Bragg to be a first sergeant of an airborne rifle company. The friendship that the NBC film crew developed with the soldiers they met in Grenada endured,and when they heard that Mayo was stationed at Fort Benning as a drill sergeant, LaSalla sold her executive producer on the idea of an NBC Nightly News feature on Mayo. The theme of the spot will be that one man can positively affect the lives of others. In this case, those "others" are the basic trainees.

Co. C executive officer, 2nd Lt. B.A. Smith, says, "His troops already identify with him. It's only the fourth day of training but you can already see it."

"Flamboyant," is the word Capt. Mike Parish, Co. C commander, uses to describe Mayo, "but this enthusiasm is not a cover for a lack of competence, because Drill Sergeant Mayo is very skilled and dedicated. He's a real soldier."

1st Sgt. Reed says simply, "He's a super drill sergeant!"

The NBC crew is spending three days filming Mayo and his troops on Sand Hill. They consist of producer LaSalla, a correspondent, cameraman and soundman, and they came together from Miami, New York and Chicago to work with Mayo. NBC will run the film later this month.

"I have a whole new respect for drill sergeants," said LaSalla. "The hours are incredible. I can't tell you how impressed I am. Drill sergeants are A-plus in my book, and Mayo is a whole different bag."

Why did Mayo get chosen to represent the infantry drill sergeant? "I think this is an exceptional man who really loves the United States Army," she said.

During the course of the three days, LaSalla talked to a number of Mayo's troops. She asked one young soldier, "Do you like him?" The soldier thought about the question and gave her a curious look. His answer, after thinking about it was, "I respect him!"

This young soldier gave the right answer.

diers up every morning and is there at night to put them to bed, there is a common bond forged that the soldier will always remember. The whole thing boils down to a winning spirit," said Sheldon.

Agosta had high praise for his senior drill sergeant, SFC Jack Flowers.

"Flowers was the architect of our success. He organized, organized, organized and really shaped what the company did," Agosta said.

"OUR NEW ARMY HOUSING IS NICE TO COME HOME TO. IT WAS WORTH THE WAIT."

SFC Ron Rhodes and his wife Connie.

"It sure didn't take us long to get comfortable in our new house here at Fort Polk. Connie loves the size and layout. Ronnie-Lee loves the playground. And there's even room to store my boat.

"We love our quarters. This house has been very important for us in making a good home.

"Because we're in the Army, people may not expect us to live this well. But the Army has changed a lot in the past five years. It's a good place to live, to be.

"Connie and I feel that the Army's really come a long way in housing and, you know, in taking care of its people."

The overall quality of quarters on posts throughout the Army continues to improve. And housing starts and renovations are at an all-time high. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

ARMY FAMILY.

Indian Festival & Fair set at Desoto Caverns Apr. 5-6

The 11th Annual Indian Dance Festival and Pioneer Fair is April 5 and 6 at DeSoto Caverns Park. New this year at the popular festival that benefits the Boy Scouts is the "Living History Indian Village."

Visitors will be able to see and try their hand at age old Indian crafts and skills. See how they survived and made homes for their families.

In addition to the Indian Village, there will be archery shows; a Silver Dollar archery booth at which kids can test their aim; comic "frontier" gunfights with The Bunkhouse Boys and bluegrass and country music bands.

Be sure and visit the Pioneer Arts and Crafts Fair with its wide assortment of handmade, original works including air brush T-shirts.

Bring your own picinc or enjoy the good food and specialties available on the grunds. Picnic tables surround the entertainment area.

Festival hours are 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. both days. Entry fee is $2, with children under 4 admitted free. To make reservations for camper hookups, call 205-378-7252.

The park is easily reached from Interstates 20 and 65, southeast of Birmingham, Ala., and is located on Route 1, Highway 76, in Childersburg, Ala.

Dinner theatre production of musical "By Strouse" set

"By Strouse," a hit broadway musical featuring the music of Charles Strouse, will be the Dinner Theater Production at the Fort Benning Supper Club April 4, 5, 11 and 12.

The musical contains music from Bye Bye Birdie, Applause, Golden Boy, Annie and many other Broadway musicals.

The performances are open to all ranks, military and civilian.

Dinner will be prime rib of beef. Cocktails begin at 6 p.m., followed by dinner at 6:30 and the performance begins at 8. Tickets are $11.50. For reservations, call the box office at 682-0640.

Hardwick makes Eagle Scout

By Bill Muller
29th Infantry Regiment

When John Hardwick became a Boy Scout he had one goal, to become an Eagle Scout.

Recently, he accomplished that goal.

Hardwick, son of CSM Jack Hardwick of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was presented the Eagle Scout in a ceremony last week.

"It's the end of a long, hard road," he said. "This gives me a whole new sense of responsibility."

Younger scouts tend to look to Eagle Scouts for guidance and knowledge, Hardwick added, "Becoming an Eagle Scout means you help people out and guide them toward their future."

Along with this added responsibility, are also some benefits, Hardwick said.

The Boy Scouts of America offer a scholarship to all Eagle Scouts and people tend to listen to you more when you're an Eagle Scout, he said.

It also helps when he applies for a job.

"Employers tend to hire you if you're an Eagle Scout because they know that you're responsible," he said.

To become an Eagle Scout, one has to go through six steps of scouting. First, one has to be accepted as a scout; secondly, one has to become a Tenderfoot Scout; next, a 2nd Class Scout; 1st Class Scout; Star Scout; and a Life Scout.

The requirements for becoming an Eagle Scout are extremely difficult, Hardwick says.

As a Life Scout one must receive 21 merit badges — 10 of which are mandatory; chose, plan and operate a community service project, which is reviewed by a scout committee made up of adults; and go before a board of scout committee members.

When this has been accomplished, the potential Eagle Scout sends his paperwork to the Boy Scouts of America for them to determine whether he will become an Eagle Scout, Hardwick said.

During Hardwick's preparation for Eagle Scout, he most enjoyed working on his merit badge for wilderness survival, he said.

"I learned which plants are edible and which are not. Also we were given two pieces of raw hamburger and a fire and told to prepare it in the best way possible."

It wasn't always fun for him, he said.

"We also had to build an underground food container. To do this we had to dig two feet underground and build shelves in the soil. The whole time I was doing this there was a continual down pour."

Among Hardwick's other honors as a scout, he considers being selected as a member of the Order of the Arrow, the highest.

"This is an elite group of honored scouts. Only those scouts who have proven themselves to be good are chosen for this."

Now that he has reached the pinacle of scouting, he plans to stay as active as possible, he said.

"I think everyone, at one time in his life, should become involed with scouting. It teaches you to become a member of a group, and besides, it's a lot of fun," he said.

Hardwick, a B student in his senior year at Spencer High School, is planning to apply to Northwest Louisiana University to study mathematics, to eventually become a teacher.

Support element proves vital help to Rangers in Alaska

By Bart Butler
586th Engr. Co.

A thirty-seven man detachment of the 67th Maintenance Battalion, Ranger Support Element recently deployed with the 3rd Battalion, 75th Infantry (Ranger) Regiment to Fort Wainwright, Alaska, to provide support to the Ranger Battalion during their cold weather combat training.

The Ranger Support Element detachment consisted of truck drivers, cooks, mechanics, small arms and communications repairmen, and essential command personnel. The drivers and mechanics were called upon to provide 24 hour transportation support for the entire Battalion. The drivers were responsible for the completion of over 100 support missions that encompassed over 10,000 miles of road travel. The mechanics provided the important maintenance support that the vehicles required to operate under arctic conditions.

The training plan included an eight day field training exercise, during which the RSE was required to set up and operate a field motor pool where the trucks and other vehicles could obtain fuel, water and maintenance support. The motor pool was operational 24 hours a day during the entire eight day exercise.

The icy road conditions at Fort Wainwright provided a challenge to the drivers skills and stressed the importance of safety. The drivers had to participate in two phases of cold weather driver's training which taught the proper methods for driving on snow and ice. They also had the opportunity to operate their vehicles on an ice pad where they were encouraged to make their vehicles slide to familiarize handling

The units of the 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group (Combat), that provided personnel for this detachment were; the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge), the 598th Maintenance Company (DS/GS), the 608th Ordnance Company, and the Headquarters, Headquarters Detachment 67th Maintenance Battalion.

Drill sergeants use cycle break for some vital self improvement

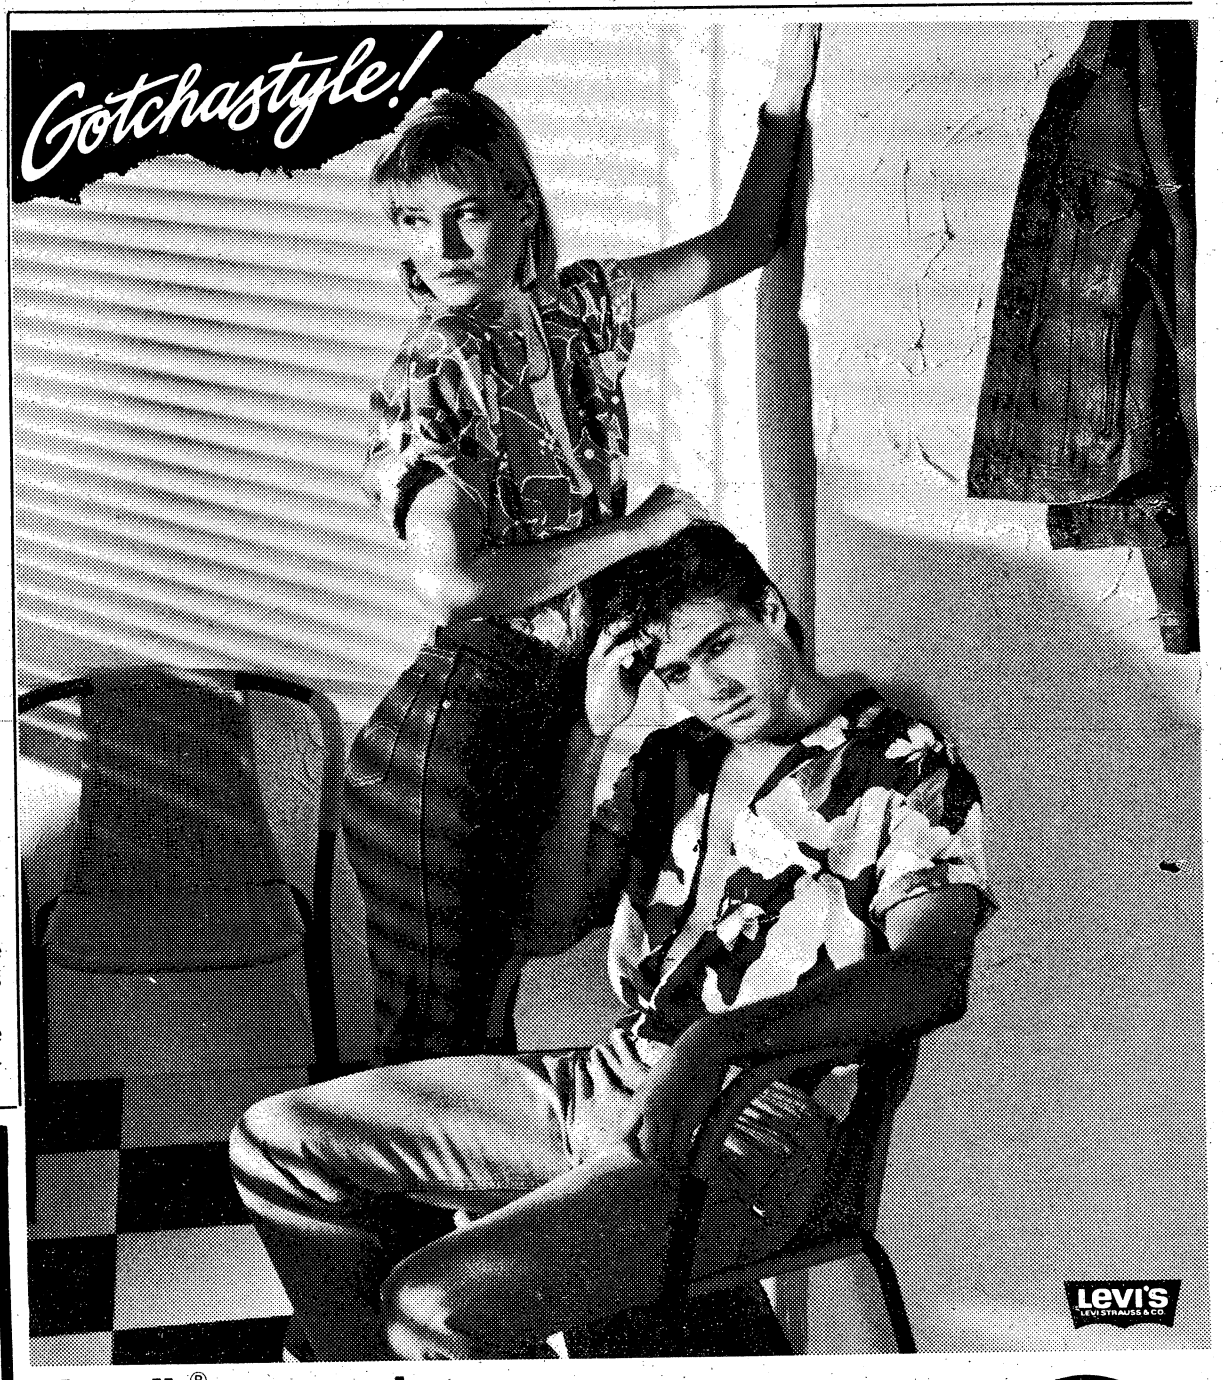
By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

What do you think most drill sergeants would do, faced with a six-week cycle break? Fish, get a suntan, go on vacation? Not the drill sergeants from Company B, 9th Battalion, 2nd Training Brigade. They're going to school, college to be exact.

"We had heard a lot of rumors about Troy State University giving on-post classes right at the unit. My company commander said do some checking, I did, and our NCO's started college," said company executive officer, 1st LT Mark Armstrong.

Troy State University will teach college classes to any unit on post as long as there are a minimum of ten people to take the class. B-9-2 easily met that requirement with 16 interested sergeants.

"It's really a good deal. Our NCO's get a two-week intro to real estate class and a two-week history class and pick up 10 quarter hours of college credit. Based on this, Troy State will evaluate their prior military training and award additional college credits accordingly. We're hoping for most of our guys to come out of this with about one year of college credit," said company commander, Capt. Paul Agosta.



"I think this is an outstanding deal. The government pays part of our tuition and we get to go to school. We owe a lot to the chain of command for letting us do this," said new college student, SSgt. Clyde Wilson.

Armstrong explained that the program had to be coordinated through the battalion commander, Lt. Col. Fred Sheldon, and that he did everything possible to let Bravo reschedule their cycle break commitments so their NCO's could go to school.

"This should be done every cycle break. This gives us an opportunity for career advancement and the education we get besides," said SFC Horacio Rodriguez.

Armstrong said that future courses were planned as long as the time is there.

"Our guys definitely have the desire," said a smiling Armstrong.

THINK SAFETY — Runners should keep safety in mind at all times.

Running safety stressed for all

By Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

Joggers are easy targets for muggers and rapists. They often run alone, at a predictable time, usually early in the morning or late in the evening when most people are at home, and in secluded areas where cries for help can't be heard.

The American Running and Fitness Association offers these tips for safety on a run:

- Run with a friend or dog.
- Run during daylight hours and avoid alleys or isolated or unpopulated areas.
- Avoid doorways, trails or sections of trails surrounded by heavy brush.
- Vary your schedule so no one can count on seeing you in a certain place at a certain time.
- Let someone know where you're going and how long you'll be gone. Have them alert the police if you don't return as planned.
- Wear identification and carry a police whistle around your neck.
- Run defensively and be alert. Listen for sounds of people sneaking up behind or beside you.
- Leave entertainment devices, including headsets and radios, at home. They block out noises you need to hear.
- Don't wear jewelry that might attract muggers.
- Avoid antagonizing motorists. Ignore verbal harassment.
- Take a course in self-defense.

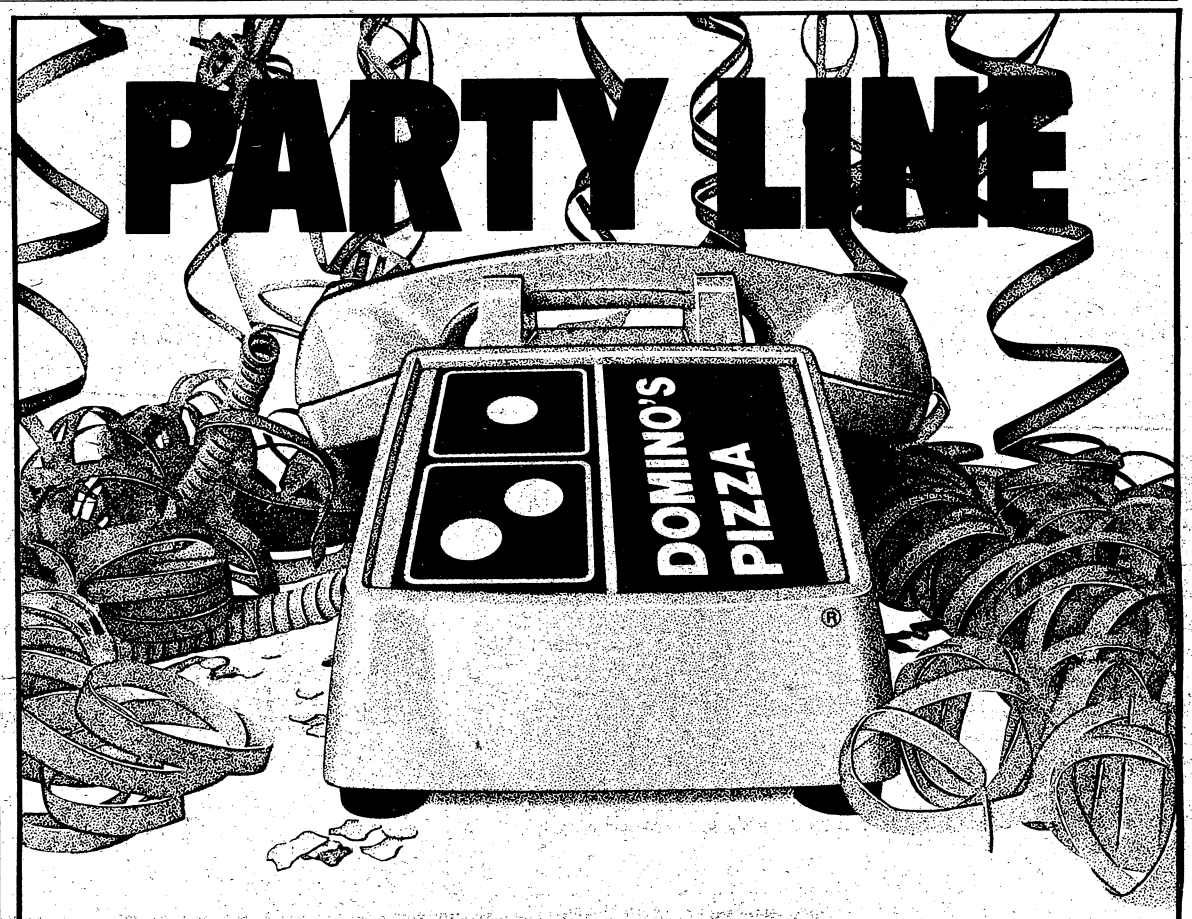
Learning center gets access ramp

By Henry Brown
17USAIC Public Affairs Office

Patients whose children are physically handicapped that are patients at the Learning Ability Center will not be inconvenienced by having to carry their children up flights of stairs at the center anymore.

Thanks to the efforts of 1st Lt. Susan J. Berry, supervisor of the center and her noncommissioned officer Sgt. Larry Roblek, a ramp for the handicapped has been built.



This ramp was offically opened at a ribbon cutting ceremony at building 316 March 6.

Prior to construction of the new ramp, Berry said, people who brought their children to the center had to park in the parking lot located across the street, walk to the building and then try to figure out how they were going to maneuver a flight of steps to get their children and wheelchairs into the building. According to Berry, this caused people to stop bringing their children.

With this new ramp, which was constructed by the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, that problem is solved.

"Parents can now drive up to the ramp and wheel their children into the center," Berry said.

Retirees and other physically disabled persons may also use this ramp to get to the physical examinations section.

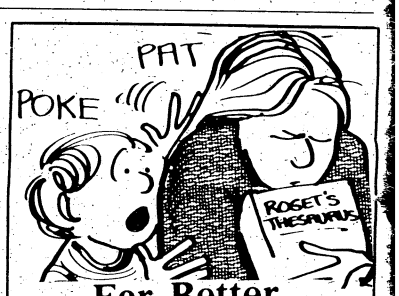
Army family named 'Great American Family' in Stuttgart

The son of a Fort Benning employee was selected as one of the 1985 Great American Families for Stuttgart, West Germany recently.



Lt. Col. Larry Raab and his family were also selected as one of the two United States Army Europe Army Great American Families who will be traveling to Washington to compete with families from communities throughout America, according to an article published in the "Stuttgart Citizen" Newspaper.

According to the article, there were three winners which were selected from nominations submitted throughout the Greater Stuttgart Military Community. And the nominations were based on each family's committment to each other and their extensive involvement in the community.

The article states that Raab volunteers his time working with the GSMC Sports Council, the Stuttgart High School Advisory Council, as chairman in the North Stuttgart Officer's Wives' Club as parliamentarian for the German-American Woman's Club of Stuttgart and as a speaker at local and regional conferences and workshops.

Raab and his wife have five children. Carry and John are attending college here in the United States. Gregg, Kim and Joshua live with their parents in Stuttgart.

Raab's mother Shirley is employed at Martin Army Hospital. (USAIC PAO)

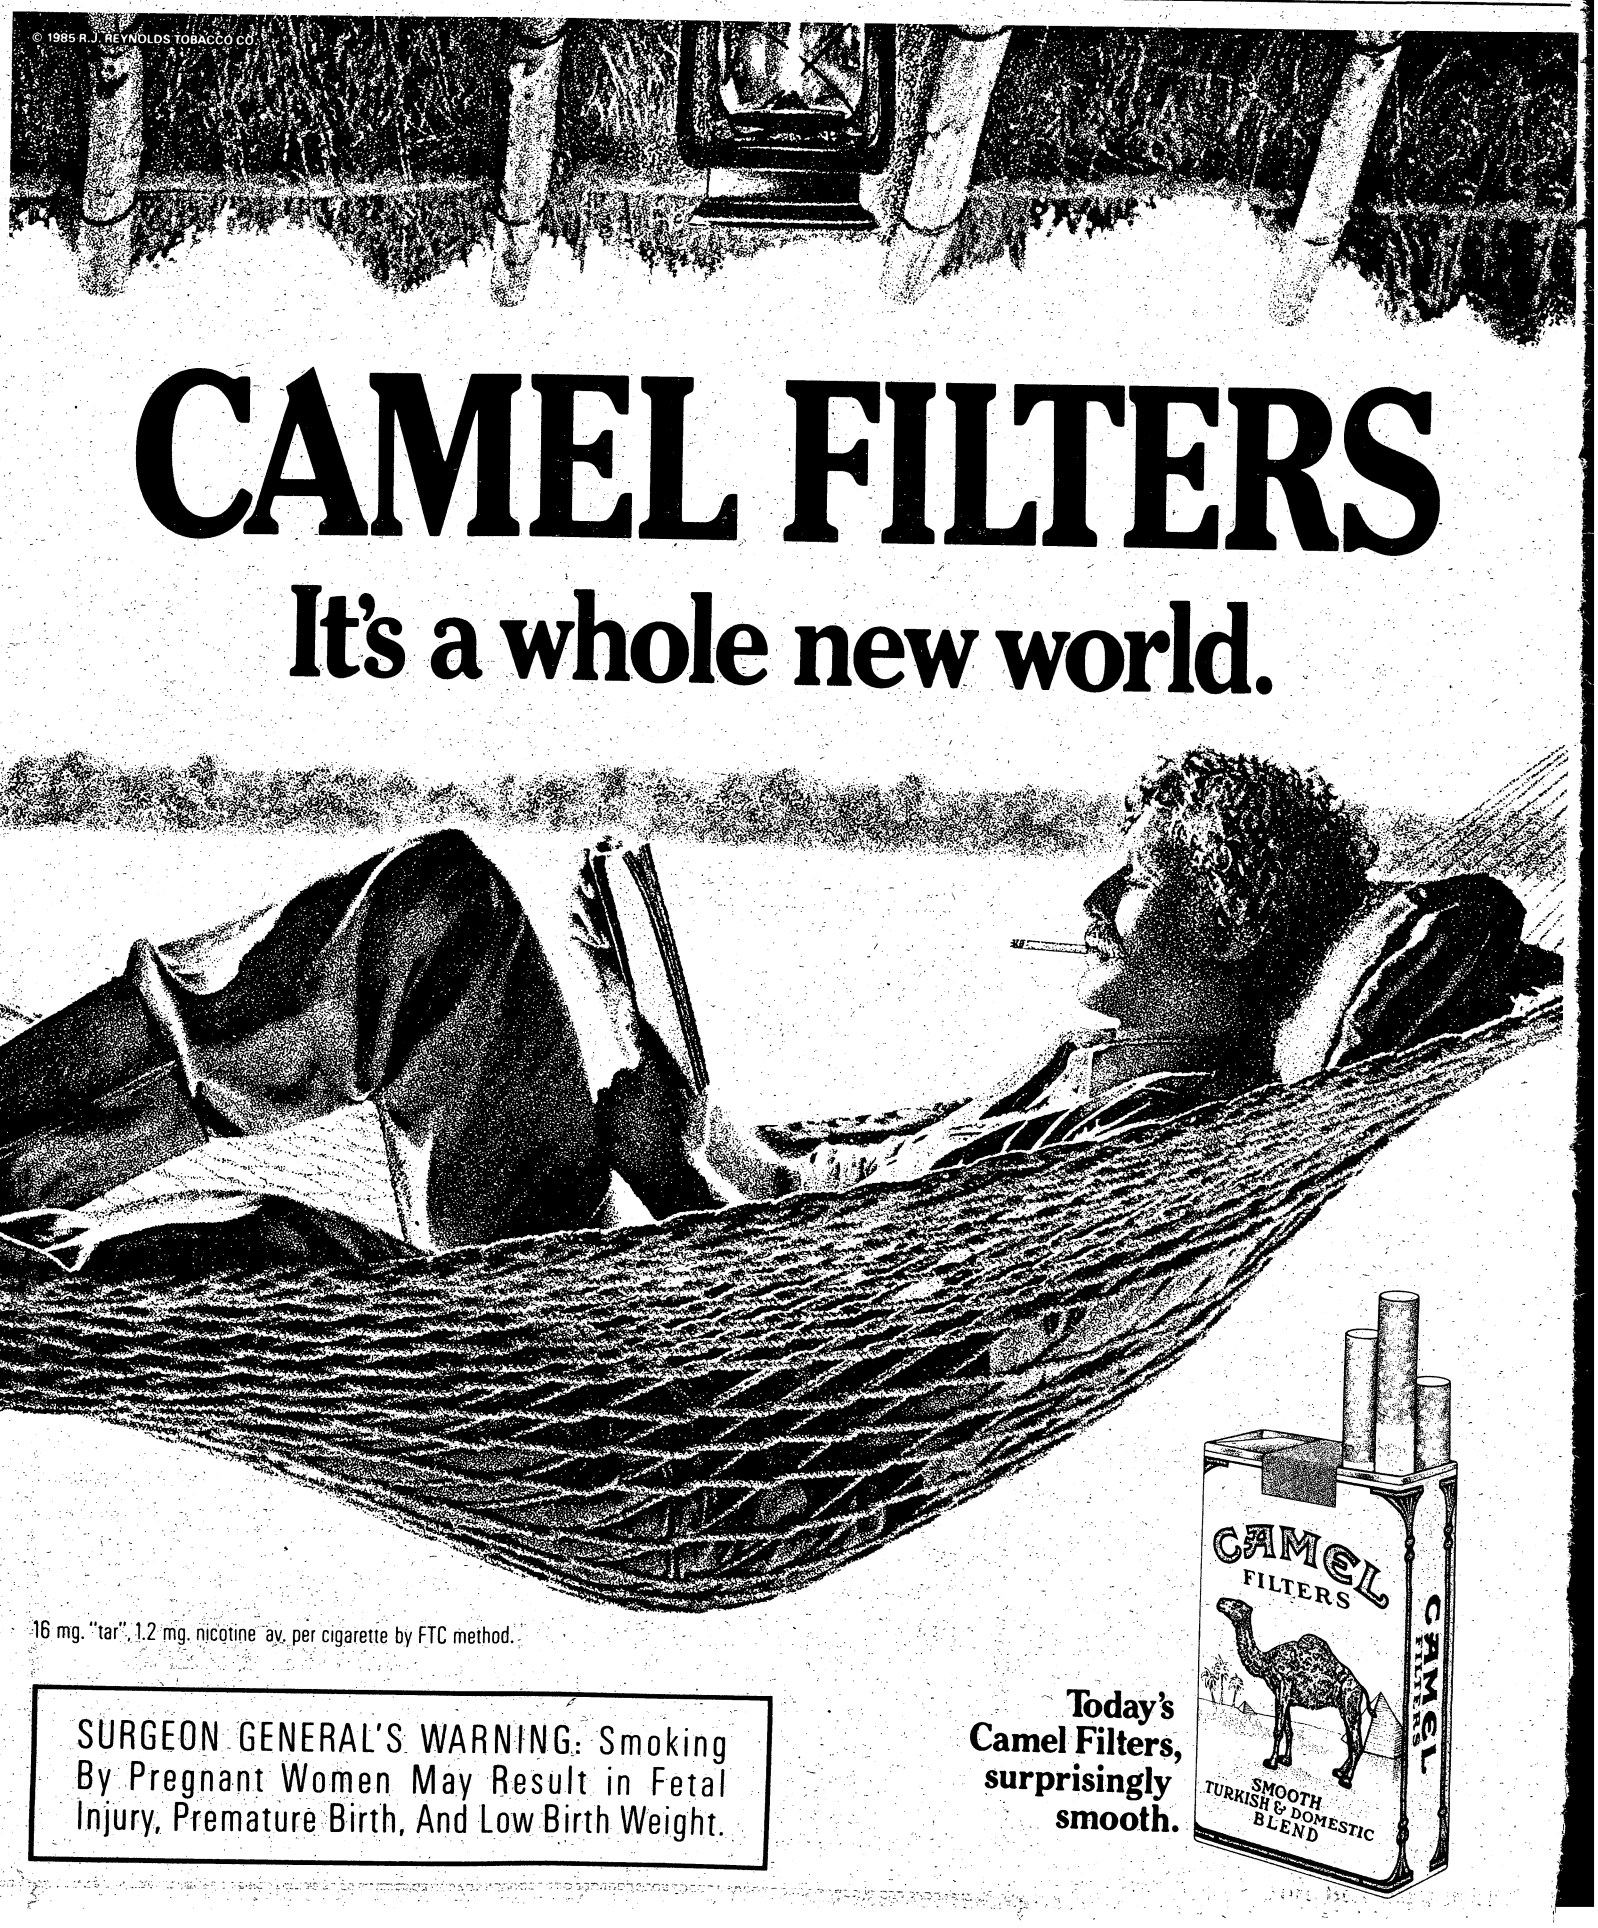
Computers classes are challenging kids in Benning schools

By Jerry Christy
Director of Computer Education

Creative, innovative, challenging, intriguing — all words to describe some of the things going on between students and computers in the Fort Benning Schools.

With each passing day, computers become more firmly entrenched into the daily school routine of Fort Benning's school students. No longer novelties, computers are the electronic marvels that are opening new worlds to the uninhibited questioning minds of young people in all grade levels.



In addition to regular computer assisted instruction, two computer clubs have been formed at Loyd School. These clubs are under the direction of teachers Michelle Sims and Sheree Glackmeyer, to give "whiz kids'"' extra time to test the limits of the technology.

Fourth graders in Sue Ann Dixon's class at White School are re-creating the rigors of pioneer days in their social studies classes with the help of a computer program that allows them to simulate the trip from Missouri to Oregon by covered wagon. The phrase "The best laid plans" has new meaning to this cadre of "frontiersmen/frontierswomen."

For the past several weeks fifth graders at Dexter School, along with their teachers, Carroll Thebaud, Melody Vaillant, and Susan Browder, have been honing their programming skills with Apple Logo. Geometry was never so much fun! But stand by — they've only scratched the surface. As time goes by they are likely to be "logoing" all over post.

Real world skills are part of the education of many Faith School students, and Tina Patrick's seventh grade science students are no exception. To augment their study of the Periodic Table of the Elements, they are using the school's computer lab to develop a data base file with all the information you could ever want on the elements. This data base will be their legacy, as it will become part of the media center inventory available to future generations of scientists. Mendeleev would be proud.

Kids, teachers and computers — a winning combination in the Fort Benning Schools.

Ratio leads aerobics classes for USARSA

By Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas

"Reach, pull — don't drop your shoulder, feel it all the way down your sides!."

These are familiar instructions for groups of women and men who join in on up-tempo beat songs while aerobisizing at the Officers Wives Club building on post.

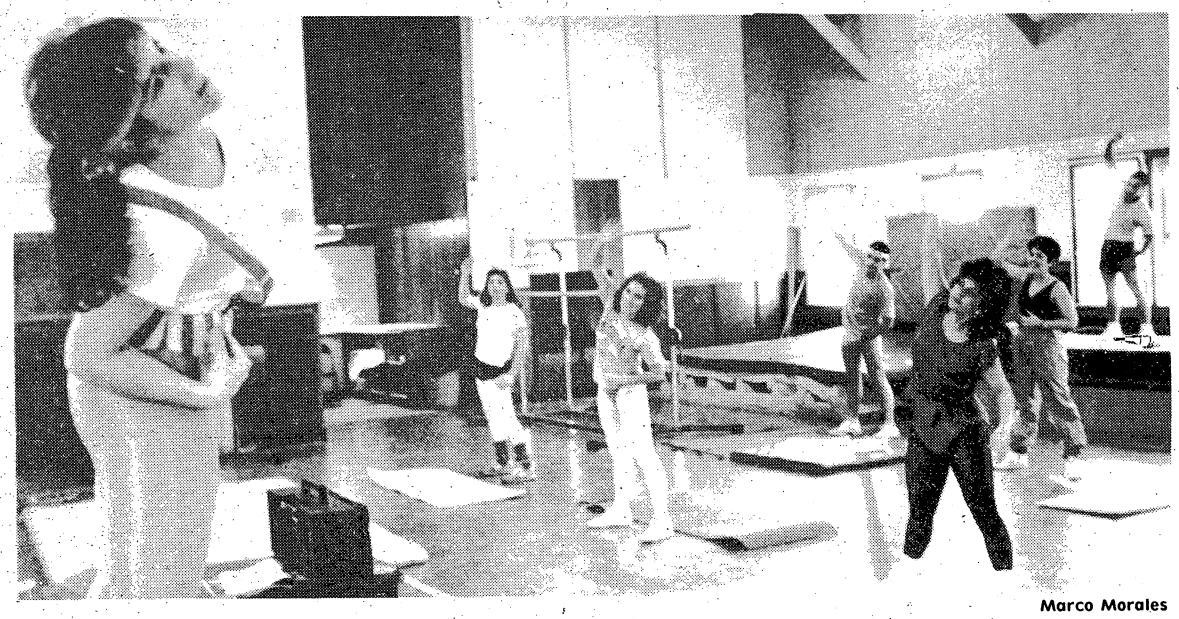
"Inhale, exhale — come on!!" yells Maria Ratio, aerobics instructor, as her class of about 25 sweaty exercisers jump, kick, and raise their drooping legs, working almost every muscle to its capacity.

"Remember, if you feel like you're tiring, take a deep breath," Ratio said.

At 24 years of age, Ratio has been conducting aerobic classes for three-and-a-half years. "I started aerobisizing as a result of boredom," she said. "It was almost by coincidence — a fluke."

Residing at Fort Lewis, Wash., before her husband was assigned here in June, Ratio substituted for a regular aerobics instructor there. She eventually took over that class.

Ratio is no stranger to dancing. "I was active in high school gymnastics for five years, danced professionally with a Spanish folk group, took ballet and even worked as a belly dancer," she said.



She says a constant exercise plan has helped her 5-foot, 2-inch frame shed 17 pounds since beginning aerobics. The energetic, dark-eyed native of Spain, currently offers two, one-hour classes; one in the morning and one in the evening, Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Ratio also has conducted physical training classes for cadets at the School of the Americas.

"The secret to aerobics is having fun," she said. "If you're going to work hard, why not have fun while doing it!"

"Maria's routines are well-planned and she stresses safety, which should be an instructor's prime concern," said Lynda Morales, a current aerobics participant and former instructor.

"This is an excellent way to prepare for the Ranger course," said Ratio's husband, Capt. Bernie Ratio, who recently completed the infantry officer advanced course here.

Marco Morales

HAVING FUN — Ratio leads an aerobics workout at the Officers Wives Club building.

"Aerobics are fun. It's a great way to stay in shape," said Marianne Tennant, another aerobic's student. "I've lost several inches around my waist and thighs. My jeans don't 'wrestle' with me anymore," Tennant said.

"Many married couples attend my class, which is unusual," Ratio said. "Generally, aerobics are perceived by the public as female-oriented."

She invites anyone who wants to participate in aerobics and have fun to attend one of her classes at the OWC building. Call 687-2616 for more information.

Fort Benning Flyers defeat High Country Rugby Club 12-10

By Joel D. Courtemanche
Special to the Bayonet

Last Saturday the Fort Benning Flyers Rugby Football Club hosted the High Country RFC from Atlanta, and won by a margin of 12-0. The victory was a hard fought one, that cost the Flyers with the loss of Team Captain Steve Gouthro to injury.

The Flyers and High Country both fielded strong teams and the game started out with both teams battling for the upperhand. Both clubs traded tough yardage in the opening minutes, neither team would yield defensively.

The Flyers gained their first score when Scott Pacelli kicked the ball through the defenders and recovered his own kick. He picked up the ball around the High Country 20 meter line, and raced in for the score. The High Country defenders were unable to catch him as he provided the Flyers with a 4-0 score.

Steve Powers added the next score for the Flyers, late in the first half. Powers caught a pass from Pacelli and dove across the try line. High Country made several futile attempts to score before the half, but the stubborn Flyer defense bent but would not break. Several score preventing tackles allowed the Flyers to gain possession of the ball and turn it upfield.

Both teams fought back during the second half in attempts to gain further scores. High Country made numerous attempts to score and failed each time.

The Benning boys countered with several attempts and came up short until Winger Billy Whitesides took a pass 20 meters down the sidelines for the final score of the day. Whitesides sprinted hard along the sidelines, broke a pair of tackles, and skillfully avoided attempts at knocking him out of bounds, enroute to the score.

During the second game, both teams battled back and forth, and the lead was exchanged three times, twice in the final minutes. The Flyers opened the scoring when Sammy Liusamoa scored twice for an 8-0 Flyer lead. Niusamoa scored off two virtually identical plays as he raced forward from his position, and pounced on the ball in the High Country try zone. His first score came from a lineout, and the second score from a broken play.

High Country rebounded for a try and extra point to cut the lead to 8-6 before the half ended. Early in the second half, High Country added another score to take the lead 10-8. The Flyers regained the lead when Sammy Niusamoa scored his third try of the afternoon. He picked up a loose ball, ducked his head, and ran through the High Country tacklers for a 12-10 Fort Benning lead. As time was running out, High Country made one last minute attempt and punched the ball t hrough for the winning score before the final whistle.

Tomorrow, the Flyers will travel to Fort Walton Beach to face the Okaloosa Rugby team in what will surely be a challenge to the Flyers winning ways.

For further information about the Fort Benning Flyers, call Capt. Steve Tennant at 545-1688.

Shooters set records at rifle championships

By Tommy Pool
USAMU PAO

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit swept the individual and team championships while setting two new records and tying another during last week's National Indoor Rifle Championships.

More than 40 competitors were on hand for the matches March 7-9. Included in the field were 17 individuals from the South Korean National Shooting Team, presently training at Fort Benning with members of USAMU.

In individual competition, Capt. Mary Godlove scored victories in both the Smallbore Three Position event as well as the 10 Meter Air Rifle championship.

Her Three Position total of 1183 out of 1200 points established a new women's record for the event, while her standing score of 388 out of 400 tied the existing record. Second place went to Lt. Col. Lones Wigger at 1177, while Capt. Gloria Parmentier finished third at 1171 after winning a tie procedure with 1st Lt. Kurt Fitz-Randolph, also at 1171.

Godlove continued her winning performance in the 10 Meter Air Rifle event as she scored a near record total of 590 out of 600 possible points. Fitz-Randolph finished a close second only one point back at 589 while Capt. Glenn Dubis was third at 586.

Also finishing at 586, were J.A. Park and H.K. Lee from South Korea along with USAMU's Parmentier.

In team competition, the USAMU "Blue" squad established a new national 10 Meter Air Rifle record. The total score of 1765 out of 1800 shattered the old mark by fifteen points. Members of the new record setting team included Godlove (590), Dubis (586) and Fitz-Randolph (589).

Both second and third place were won by teams from South Korea with scores of 1746 and 1744.

Security deposit waiver program leaving $$s in soldier's pockets

An Army family action program to reduce or eliminate costly security deposits for soldiers moving to new post housing already saved soldiers and their families an estimated $5 million.

"One of the most significant expenses associated with establishing a new residence is payment of security deposits required by landlords and utility companies," said Dr. Richard Fafara of the Army's Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va. "If a soldier has to put down a security deposit in addition to the normal first month's rent — and then must make additional deposits to the power company and the water company and the telephone company — the soldier can be put into a financial bind that may take months to overcome."

Fafara noted that permanent-change-of-station moves can pose a financial burden for soldiers, especially those serving in lower pay grades. "There are approximately 223,000 soldiers in the Army in the grade of E-5 or below," he said. "Each year, about 78,000 of these soldiers make a PCS move."

Currently, 18 Army installations have utility-waiver programs based on the CFSC's security deposit waiver program. They will be joined in April by Fort Bliss, Texas. Of these 18 posts, three also have rental-deposit reduction programs. Fafara added that Fort Ord, Calif., operates only a rental-deposit reduction program.

At 16 installations, negotiations between the Army command and local landlords and utility officials have resulted in elimination or significant reduction in security deposits for Army personnel, with no financial strings attached. Security deposits are waived or reduced in return for commanders' emphasizing to soldiers that they must pay their rent and utility bills. In addition, the Army agrees to provide utility companies and landlords with forwarding addresses for soldiers who clear the post with unpaid bills, Fafara explaind.

In cases where a financial guarantee is the only means of obtaining a deposit waiver or reduction, some installations credit unions have agreed to provide such guarantees in return for command support and a small fee from the soldiers. The fee is much smaller than the security deposit normally required for utilities. Even the small fee may be refunded to the soldier if the programs prove successful, Fafara said. The Army has two such programs, at Forts Belvoir and Eustis in Va., where the credit union provides deposit guarantees. Another is to begin at Fort Bliss in April, he said.

Most of the programs are less than a year old and are already proving their worth, Fafara said.

In harmony with the total Army family concept, programs at some installations are open to both soldiers and DA civilians. A "how to" letter recently was sent from the community and family support center to the continental United States' major Army commands for distribution to the field. The letter describes current deposit-waiver or reduction programs, illustrates problems and pitfalls encountered by other installations in getting started and encourages commanders to seek similar agreement with local landlords and utility firms.

Prospective participants in the program have several models on which to pattern their efforts, including the ones represented by Forts Belvoir and Stewart, Ga. At Belvoir, Maj. Gen. R.S. Kem, the post commander, made the following observations during the signing ceremony inaugurating the utility support club: "the club is a progressive, assertive concept that should reap great benefits for all concerned:

- "The club member will gain by not having to pay the out-of-pocket cash for electric service (minimum of $150);
- "Virginia power will gain by a reduction in uncollectable debts;
- "The credit union will gain by establishing more customers and, hopefully, more accounts in the other financial programs;
- "Fort Belvoir will gain in not having to disburse valuable Army emergency relief funds for utility deposits;
- "The Army will gain by having happier soldiers, civilians and family members, who will be more able to do their parts in contributing to our mission of training and readiness."

Fort Stewart's rental clearinghouse has also earned early praise from its managers, ho sum up its concept in these words: "Landlords help the soldiers, and te Army assists the landlords — all to our mutual benefit. Although the Army cannot guarantee payment, the tremendous command support for the program has already demonstrated that on the average, both soldiers and landlords will be better off."

The clearinghouse's project officer, 1st Lt. Charles L. Trammell, said that the nearly two-year-old program is still going strong, that its 36 members (landlords) are 100 percent enthusiastic about it and that he expects it to operate permanently. "It's so successful because it affords the members a competitive advantage — in the form of faster rentals," he explained.

The program is in direct response to the on-going Army family action plan and is an initiative of the Community and Family Support Center in its effort to help make life better for the Army family. At the installation level, the program is usually supervised by the director for personnel and community affairs, Fafara said. (ARNEWS)

Blacks

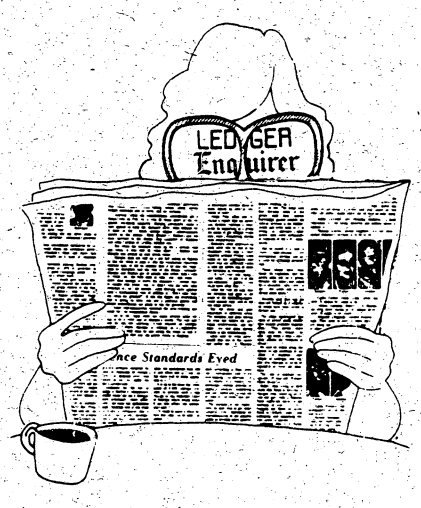
"It used to be that I was in awe of black officers in key decision-making jobs," he said. "A lot has changed in the last 20 years. Today blacks have opportunities at all levels of military management, including the scientific and medical fields."

Berthel K. Carmichael, a mathematician and analyzer of underwater acoustics data for the Naval Research Laboratory, used her scientific know-how to help open the door to another type of opportunity.

Carmichael became the first woman — black or white — to take part in an extended research cruise on board a Military Sealift Command ship. She was instrumental in charting the ocean bottom along the Mid-Atlantic Ridge and the Norwegian and Greenland basins.

Other significant scientific contributions have come from black service members who applied their talents to their military occupations.

In the mid-1950s, Sgt. Herman Roberts of the Army Medical Service Corps was working with amputees. He became interested in prosthesis, the replacement of missing parts of a living body with artificial toes. In 1956, Roberts invented an artificial hand, which was used successfully on patients and was later redesigned to include wrist movement.



Another black noncommissioned officer, Sgt. 1st Class Adolphus Samms, helped develop another kind of breakthrough — this one in space exploration. Samms worked with guided missiles and rocket designs during the mid-1960s. He developed a rocket with a detachable fuel tank to ease refueling procedures.

His most important invention, however, was the "air frame center support," which is used on multi-stage rockets and cuts out the need for the former second and third stages. Samms' new rocket was lighter, rose higher and traveled farther than earlier models.

These are just a few examples of many scientific contributions made by black scientists and inventors. Among others are such everyday objects as the traffic light, fountain pen, ironing board, elevator, pencil sharpener, fire extinguisher, curtain rod, lawn mower, clothes dryer and refrigerator. (AFPS)

AIDS

AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) destroys the body's ability to defend itself against diseases. People with AIDS are killed by infections that are usually harmless.

The virus is transmitted through homosexual and heterosexual sexual contact, blood transfusions or sharing contaminated needles. There are currently no documented cases of anyone developing AIDS through non-sexual casual contact.

The risk of getting AIDS increases through . . . .

Festival of Running re-routes post traffic

Traffic patterns will be altered in the Main Post area on April 5 to accommodate the 3rd Annual Officers' Wives Club Festival of Running.

The routes for the three and five miles runs travel over roadways including Riordon, Benjamin, Way, Marchant, Ingersoll and Sightseeing Streets. Also included are Lumpkin Road from Madden Avenue to Dixie Road, Dixie Road from Sightseeing Street to First Division Road and Collins Loop in the 2,600 area. All of these areas will be closed to traffic from 7:50 a.m. until 1 p.m.

In order to accommodate the residents and users of the Main Post area, the following locations have been designated as route crossover points: Ingersoll and Carpenter, Marchant and Gillespie, Marchant and Edwards, Lumpkin and Yeager and Lumpkin and First Division Road.

197th returns home from desert fight

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

Lawson Army Airfield was a busy place last week as some of 3,000 soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade returned to Fort Benning after three weeks of desert training at Fort Irwin, Calif.

Family members and friends of the soldiers welcomed each of the seven flights that arrived from the National Training Center.

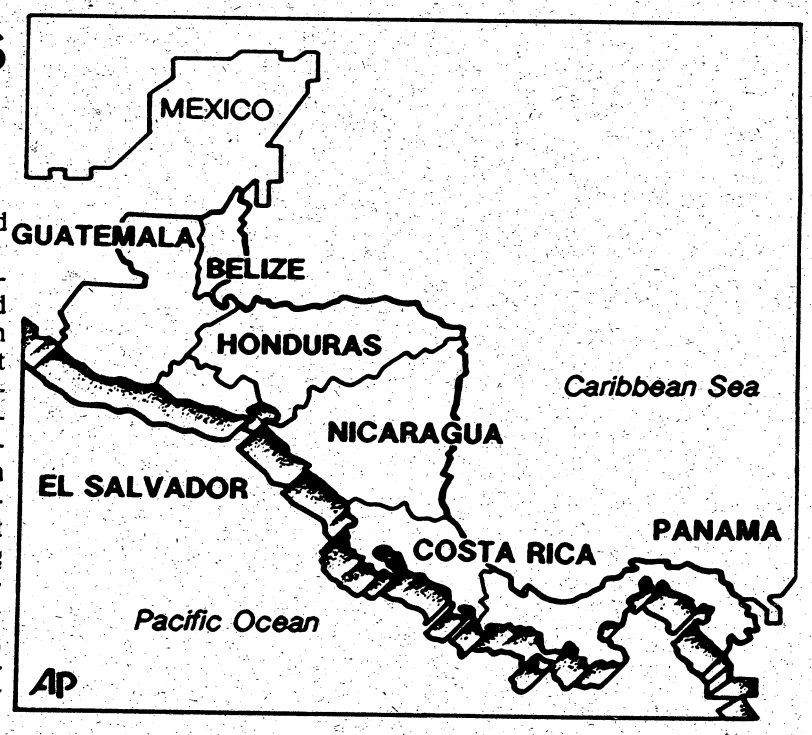
The Brigade deployed in February with two task forces of armor and infantry soldiers, artillerymen and engineers. In addition, soldiers from the Brigade's Headquarters Company, Military Intelligence Detachment and Support Battalion rounded out the task forces and Brigade Support Area (BSA).

The Brigade was joined at Fort Irwin by visiting aviation, air defense, transportation and other types of units.

The NTC rotation offered the 197th soldiers training opportunities not available on Fort Benning. During the 14 days and nights of force-on-force and live fire exercises, the task forces were challenged by Fort Irwin's desert climate, opposing forces and mountainous terrain. The NTC's 1,000 square miles of desert gave the soldiers plenty of room to maneuver vehicles and fire weapons.

According to Lt. Col. Bert Maggart, Task Force 2-69 commander, the soldiers learned a lot about vehicle dispersion. "On Fort Benning, they get the bunch-up syndrome," Maggart said.

"It took a few days on Fort Irwin to realize the amount of space we had to work with."



During force-on-force exercises, the task forces fought battles under conditions that recreated elements of real combat.

Should Nicaragua's contra rebels be funded by the United States?

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Picture this: "On the U.S.'s southern border with Mexico, a wall erected with watch towers; guards manning the towers with machine guns; a 50-yard wide plowed strip of dirt running the length of the wall, emplanted with land mines and bordered with triple strand concertina wire. Three U.S. combat divisions stay on alert, around the clock, to keep an eye on the patrolling T-62 tanks and BMP's manned by the Democratic People's Army of Mexico. From Mexico, south, through Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Panama, an armed Soviet camp. Their aim? To further project Russian imperialism into South America."

Does the above narrative sound far-fetched? I don't think so. In our current situation over funding of the contras fighting Nicaragua, we are dealing with Russian imperialism, pure and simple.

President Reagan has asked Congress to fund these Nicaraguan contra rebels so they can continue the fight against dictator Daniel Ortega. Reagan is not asking Congress to commit U.S. troops, but to fund rebels sympathetic to our country.

The President is asking for a paltry $100 million to combat Soviet aid to Ortega to the tune of more than $500 million. By the time this column is printed Congress will have voted yes or no on contra aid.

A vote of yes will signal to the Soviet Union that we will not tolerate their Nicaraugan beachhead in the Americas.

A vote of no to contra aid will emphatically tell the Soviets that our back door is open, do whatever you please.

In this contra debate I read and hear of the "communists" in Nicaragua. There are no communists in Nicaragua, just as there are no communists in Russia. Each country uses communism as a facade to hide their repressive dictatorships and expansionist policies. In both countries there are large standing armies and secret police. We are not dealing with communism in Nicaragua or in Russia, we are dealing with an historical force and challenge: imperialism.

Russian leaders kept their country closed off from the west and from new ideas well into the 18th century. When Peter the Great forced his country into the modern, western world they were already far behind the west in development and innovations in every facet of modern life. Russia has stayed behind the west and, because of this, is going through this imperialistic historical phase in her development already experienced by France, Germany, the U.S., Great Britain, the Netherlands, Spain, Italy and Japan.

Russia hides behind the facade of communism because when they tell poor, uneducated people to join their revolution, overthrow the government and join them in dividing up everything equally in a worker's paradise, the people listen and join. But that is not what happens where Russia goes. Dictatorships, poverty and war are the order of the day. The Soviet Union is the last, great imperialist power. Her historical impetus is to conquer and rule the world. Liberals scoff at this, just as they scoffed at Adolph Hitler and his imperial ambitions in the name of national socialism.

The Nicaraugan situation is simple. Do we allow Russian imperialism a foot-hold in the Americas or do we accept the Soviet challenge and protect our hemisphere from their ambitions?

I hope Congress approves aid to the contras. They have the will and the spirit to fight. All they are asking for is the means.

The contras face a 50,000 man strong Nicaraugan army, replete with tanks, artillery and attack helicopters supplied by Gorbachev and company. Shouldn't we show the Soviets we mean to stop Ortega and his Russian-surrogate force?

Make no mistake, the Soviets, using Nicaragua, want to erect a second iron curtain between the U.S. and Mexico. Congress can make the right decision now, and fund the contras, or make the decision later on how many combat divisions we need on our southern border. The thought is chilling.

Various voices

Should we fund the Nicaraguan contra rebels?

PFC Jaime Pulgar, Special Duty for the Reserve Component Support Division.

"No, we should use the money for better things than to help a country fight a war that's been going on for so long."

PFC Mark Lunsford, computer machine analyst for Headquarter and Headquarters Company, USAIB.

"No. Because the U.S. is in debt enough with their spending. If we can't get our own government out of debt how can we justify funds for supporting other countries?"

2nd Lt. Patrick Lyons, executive officer for Headquarters Company, 1st Battatlion, TSB.

"Yes. One reason is because that is what the Commander-In-Chief wants. Maybe for once it might be the thing to do, to back the little man for a change."

Op-Ed

United State's self-restraint linked directly to Soviet global advances

For 40 years, the world has been spared another global war in which principal industrial powers are locked in mortal combat.

Yet today, one of every four countries around the world is at war, Under Secretary of Defense for Policy Fred C. Ikle recently told a world affairs council.

"These are not wars, to be sure, where armies roll across borders, where hundreds of aircraft fight for control of the skies, where fleets of submarines and surface ships are engaged in battles at sea. These wars do not provoke nuclear threats, or fear of nuclear attack.

"But people get killed, tens of thousands of people, by grenades, bullets, mines, bombs dropped from aircraft — and even poison gas.

"Many of these people," Ikle pointed out, "are civilians. Indeed unarmed civilians are often the deliberately chosen targets in this kind of warfare — judges and school teachers, women tending a small farm, children in a school bus, children picking up mines disguised as toys."

This type of warfare respects no international boundaries, Ikle said. It goes on in the Middle East, Latin America, Africa and Asia.

Are these seemingly random acts of violence an aimless pattern of contemporary history?

Ikle insisted they are not, pointing toward the Soviet Union as the driving, organizing force behind many of them.

Ikle said those who think the United States should steer clear of these incidents ignore the scope of Soviet ambition and the patient perseverance of the Leninist drive for power. He cited examples from around the globe:

- The Soviet occupation forces have been fighting in Afghanistan for the past six years — twice as long as they fought against Hitler's Wehrmacht — to suppress the independence of the Afghan people.
- During the past eight years, the Soviet Union has provided more than $12 billion to Hanoi, enabling the Vietnamese to maintain their occupation of Cambodia.
- In the last three years, the Soviet Union has furnished $2 billion in military assistance to the communist regime in Luanda, Angola, and its Cuban mercenaries, to fight against Angola's liberation movement.
- In the Western Hemisphere, Soviet support to Nicaragua has increased dramatically since 1979, when the Sandinistas in Nicaragua established a totalitarian Leninist regime.

Ikle said U.S. complacency in responding to these incidents — particularly in the Western Hemisphere, as in the case of Nicaragua — sends out a dangerous signal to Moscow.

"American self-restraint will not invite Soviet gratitude and Soviet restraint," Ikle said. "It will invite Soviet advances.

"Either we openly choose appeasement of the Communists in Nicaragua, accepting the risk of a "second Cuba" on our continent — and if so, we avoid misleading our friends in the region and the American people, pretending that the democratic freedom fighters have our support. Or, we choose to support the freedom and democracy at a level sufficient so that it can prevail." (AFPS)

The Bayonet welcomes letters

In an effort to open up our pages to a discussion of issues, The Bayonet invites letters to the editor. If you disagree with a story written in the paper or wish to air your views on a topic, feel free to write us.

197th defeats 'Siberian' forces in Fort Irwin desert

Company C.O.'s learn to fight together

A tanker from Task Force 2-69 is part of an attack formation during exercises at the National Training Center.

by Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

From the Great Sandy Wash to Silver Lake Road — and at many other memorable places at the National Training Center — the tankers and mechanized infantrymen of Task Force 2-69 battled a persistent enemy.

The 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers and the opposing forces from Fort Irwin, Calif. sparred over a piece of real estate called Siberia for several days. After a series of attacks and defenses, the fighting finally climaxed with an early morning encounter in the southwest corner of the area.

Task Force 2-69 was firmly entrenched and waiting as the wide columns of OPFOR tanks and BMPs stormed across Siberia. Although the enemy was already shaken by a skirmish with some other friendly troops, he was still a dangerous foe as he bore down on the task force.

When the enemy force appeared on the horizon, it was met by a wall of tank and machine gun fire. The tanks fired from behind berms and ridges, while the infantrymen took advantage of the desert floor's many natural hiding places.

One by one, yellow lights on the enemy vehicles started blinking. Radios buzzed with an endless clamor of reports and instructions. Main tank guns and automatic weapons, firing blank ammunition, created a din that sounded close to actual combat. Tracked vehicles churning through sand filled the air with huge clouds of blinding, choking dust.

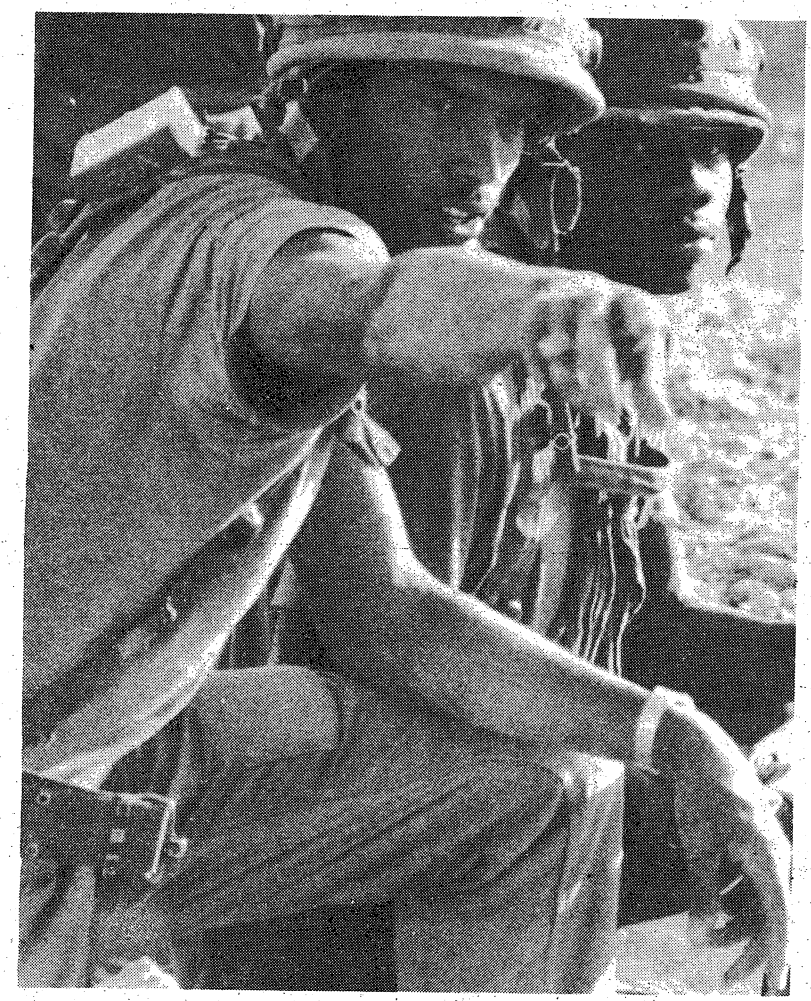
But when the dust settled several hours later, the desert landscape was littered with flashing yellow lights, most of them belonging to the enemy.

As most soldiers will point out, however, fighting the OPFOR at the NTC has its ups and downs.

After one of the previous battles for Siberia, SSgt. Claude Moore of Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, said, "It all happened so fast. They were dug in pretty good, in the open areas where there were lots of wadis.

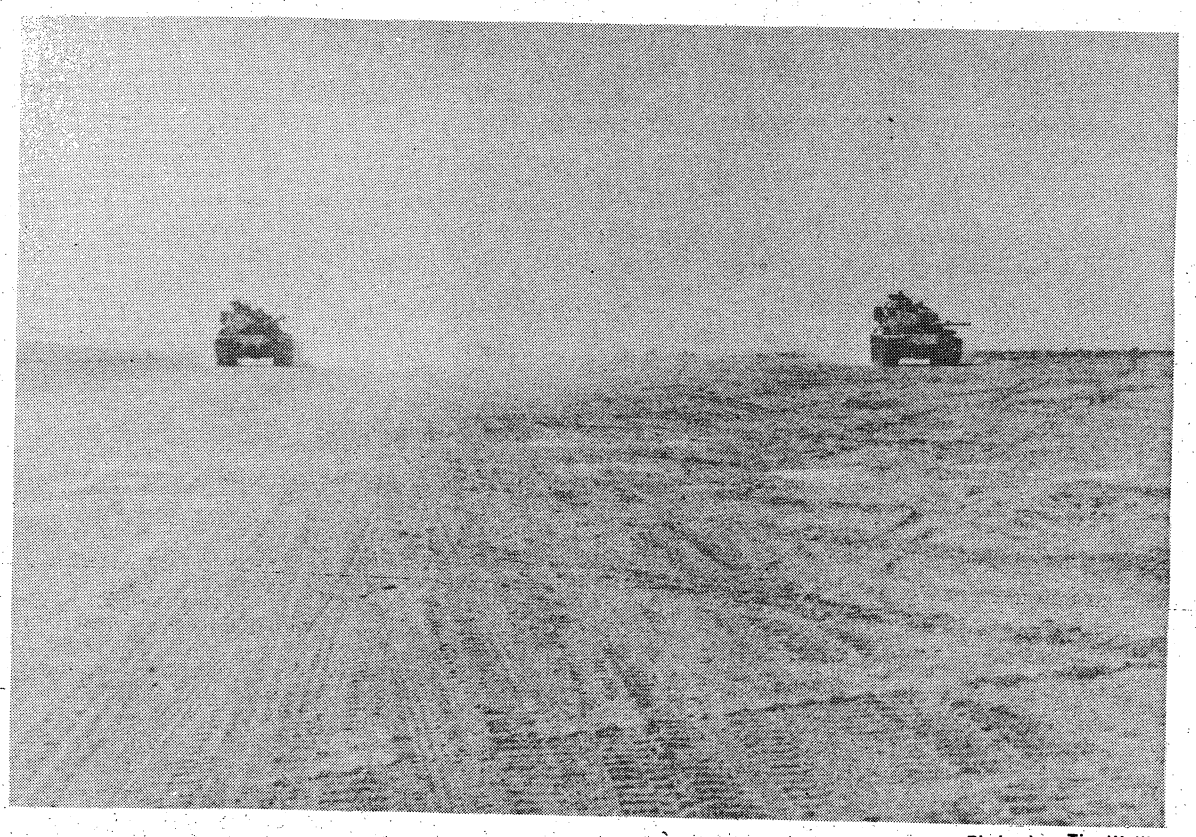
"We stopped, waiting for artillery to get them out of the wadis. Then we got hit. We weren't even on the move for 35 minutes."

The day before, Moore's platoon made it all the way to the objective with three of the four tanks it started with.



Overall, though, the Task Force 2-69 commander said that he noticed his soldiers improving in many areas after being in the desert for awhile.

"They learned a lot about vehicle dispersion," said Lt. Col. Bert Maggart, task force commander. "At Fort Benning they get the bunch-up syndrome. It takes a few days out here to realize the amount of space you have to work with."



Among other things, Maggart said that he was also noticing more interaction among company commanders.

After the force-on-force training, the task force went further north for its live fire exercise.

The maneuver units of Task Force 2-69 included Alpha and Delta Companies, 2-69th Armor, and Bravo and Delta Companies, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry. These were backed by attack helicopters, U.S. Air Force close air support, engineers, military intelligence soldiers and many others.

NCO uses pride, self-esteem to grab 'good' leader award

SSgt. Gary Roane draws his definition of a "good" leader from Army Field Manual 22-100.

He says, bluntly, "A good leader is one who displays coolness under stress. He is confident, assertive, creative, compassionate and has a sense of humor."

Also, a good leader is knowledgeable and proficient in his field, Roane says.

"He makes himself aware of the problems of his people, and knows how to listen to them with his ears, eyes and expertise," Roane concluded.

Apparently Roane, a member of Company C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, models himself after his idea of a "good" leader. Recently, he was selected Fort Benning Noncommissioned Officer of the Quarter (fiscal year 1986, January to March).

Approximately seven soldiers — rangers, airborne and drill sergeants — competed for the title. It was the first ever honor for a soldier of the 29th.

Roane attributes his win to hard work, "good old self-esteem," pride in doing what he does and support from his peers (namely, SFC James Turner and SFC Leon Smith).

He says, "It was the 'go-for-the-gusto-type attitude' of my peers that led me to the competition in the first place."

Also, self-motivation to be the best and all you can be helped, he says. "As the Army puts it, and in the Army you can really accomplish your best."

Roane was pleased to have taken part in the NCO competition. He says, "I enjoy the idea of good, clean competition, such as that you find in the Army."

Prior to winning the post-level contest, Roane was named NCO of the company, battalion NCO of the month and quarter, and regimental NCO of the quarter.

The 15-year Army veteran joined the Army in 1964. After a brief break in service — 1967 to 1974 — he reenlisted in search of job satisfaction.

He boasts, "I had several good jobs that paid well, but they all lacked what I was looking for.

"I like to teach, to be with people, and I like ever-changing conditions."

He realized this after he left the Army, he says.

Currently, Roane is a weapons instructor with the Training Support Platoon where he trains officers and noncommissioned officers.

In terms of changing conditions, he has been everything from a team leader to platoon sergeant. Additionally, he has been a drill sergeant, assistant operations sergeant and a supply sergeant.

His Army tours include Vietnam, Panama and Korea.

While he acknowledges it was support from his peers that helped to win the NCO competition, it is his family, especially his wife, Juanita, who is responsible for his success as a soldier.

He says, "Mrs. Juanita Roane is the cornerstone of everything. She has supported me all the way. She is the most wonderful woman in the world."

Also, Roane says that his five children: Gary Jr., Eric, Dwayne, Juan and Denise, at some point during his career have contributed in some way to his being a "good" soldier.

Roane will go before the NCO of Year board in either August or September. He says that he intends to study as intensely for this board as he did for the quarter board.

586th 'engineers' kudos for SSgt.'s

by Don C. Young
586th Engineer Company

Two noncommissioned officers from the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) of the 67th Maintenance Battalion were recognized recently for their outstanding job performances.

SSgt. William I. Sheridan led the company supply section through a successful Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program and an Annual General Inspection. His supply operation also won fourth place in the post-wide competition for the Chief of Staff's Supply Excellence Award. Sheridan is presently serving in his secondary military occupational specialty.

SSgt. Mark D. Burrell won the post competition for the 1985 Sturgis Award. This annual award is given by the Society of American Military Engineers to the most outstanding engineer NCO of the year. Burrell is the platoon sergeant for second platoon and serves as the Transportation NCOIC of the Ranger Support Element. Burrell provided assistance to the unit's two reserve affiliation ribbon bridge companies throughout the year. Burrell's winning packet was forwarded to the U.S. Army Forces Command for competition at that level.

Civilian of the month lauded at ceremony

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment

Ervin Caldwell, a civilian employee of 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment motor pool, walked into a surprise when he attended a Fort Benning civilian awards luncheon recently.

The retired Army staff sergeant was named the installation's civilian employee of the month for February.

"It was a total surprise," Caldwell, a prescribed load list clerk, said.

"I was there for the lunch; I didn't expect to win any award."

Even so, it was fitting for Caldwell to receive such an award. According to his supervisor, Capt. Lewis Boone, Caldwell exceeded all the requirements set for an outstanding employee.

Boone said, "He has been consistent in keeping complete accountability of all Class IX (repair parts) funds, and in requisitioning parts on time.

"Of all the inspections we've had, he was picked consistently for having a smooth and efficient PLL operation."

Caldwell is a hard worker who goes above and beyond the call of duty to get the job done, Boone said.

"He gets along well with everyone, military and civilian alike, and he has a great personality," Boone added.

Caldwell believes a number of factors contributed to his winning the award. He said, "I love my work, I enjoy working for the Army — 21 years as a soldier proves that, and I work for the best maintenance facility the Army has."

Ervin Caldwell oversees a soldier signing for a vehicle part. Bill Muller

Also, the caliber of people that he works with helps him to enjoy his work, he said.

"The entire staff is professional.

"We work together and no one leaves a job undone.

Whenever a problem arises, we handle it because everyone is proficient at what he goes."

Winning the employee of the month award serves to motivate Caldwell to continue to do well, he says.

"I feel a sense of accomplishment and achievement. It makes me want to strive harder to do my best. I would like to win again," he says.

Cheering with Caldwell to do his best is his family. He says that support from his wife, Dorothy, and his children, Eric, Gregory and Michelle, has helped him in both his military and civilian careers.

"Many times my wife has had to be both a mother and a father. She's made my job easier because I know my family is taken care of."

Wizard system whisks parts to soldiers

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

So, what's the big deal about the DAS3 and what does it mean to 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers?

Well, while soldiers waited patiently for repair parts at the end of their National Training Center rotation, they could appreciate the wizardry of the Decentralized Automated Service Support System (DAS3).

The 197th Infantry Brigade was the first rotating unit to bring this system to the National Training Center. It automated the process of ordering repair parts.

Throughout the training exercise the DAS3 helped the task forces and support units obtain repair parts quickly so they could continue with their missions. But, the overall advantages were apparent during the crucial turn-in period at the end of the rotation.

Through a multichannel communcations network, requisitions were transmitted via radio frequencies from the Brigade Material Management Center (BMMC) located at the Brigade Support Area (BSA), to the Brigade's computer near Fort Irwin's Class IX (repair parts) warehouse.

According to Capt. Pamela Venning, brigade class IX officer, the task forces and support units turned in some 6000 requisitions for parts during the rotation.

"In the past, these requisitions were done manually. That meant a lost of paperwork and travel from the BAS to main post with stacks of forms in hand."

"This time around, we did all the input through the system," Venning said. "We didn't have to bring in stacks of requisitions every day. That meant we could offer the customer more time to turn in requisitions."

There were 11 unit level logistics systems distributed to "customers" throughout the Brigade. The ULLS is a personal computer that kept track of the prescribed load list of repair parts that a company is allowed to keep in stock.

Unit PLL clerks used the ULLS to requisition the parts they need from BMMC.

SP4 Farid Hammad, a PLL clerk with Task Force 1-58, noted that the ULLS made a big difference in his job.

"We had a better view of the PLL," he said. "We knew what parts we had in stock, and the exact location of the part we needed. It also kept track of what needed to be replaced."

Capt.Deborah Godwin, of the Brigade Automated Data Processing section, noted several advantages of this system.

"The error rate on requisitions was greatly reduced because PLL clerks could see the information on the screen and catch mistakes. The system also has built in checks that won't let clerks made such oversights as putting in the wrong stock number."

Godwin continued: "The turn-around time on parts was reduced from two days to one. Also, if a vehicle was deadlined because of a needed part, the PLL clerk can do a 2406 deadline report right through the system."

The key link in this system is the medium by which all of the information travels — the multichannel radio. According to Maj. Bill Drechsel, Brigade Communications-Electronics Officer, this may be the first time a multichannel has been used for this purpose.

"As far as I know, it hasn't been done before," Dreschsel said. "We tried it first at Fort Benning and it worked. So, we decided to try it out there."

Finance troops build soldier skills that money can't buy

by Jessie Crawford Jr.
215th AFSC

The soldiers of the 215th Area Finance Support Center not only perform the many responsibilities of finance and accounting specialists but they are also tasked with performing the basic combat skills required of the infantry soldier.

The 215th AFSC has two primary missions. The first mission is to deploy as a Rapid Deployment Force-Army CAPSTONE unit to perform contingency operations. Current Army battle doctrine envisions the rear area offering very limited protection. As a result of this limited protection coupled with Soviet battle doctrine, finance soldiers could find themselves facing highly trained, elite Soviet forces as well as nuclear, biological and chemical attacks. Therefore, to accomplish its mission, the 215th AFSC must attain and maintain a high state of combat readiness while concurrently performing its installation support mission.

The second mission is to augment the United States Army Infantry Center Finance and Accounting Office, which is the daily operational mission. Almost everyone is familiar with this mission. The daily task of the 65 soldiers assigned to the 215th AFSC is to assist the USAIC Finance and Accounting Office in providing quality military pay and travel pay support to the more than 70,000 permanent party soldiers, students and trainees annually passing through Fort Benning.

In our society, the administration of pay is one of the most important functions of any organization because it affects one's ability to acquire the basic necessities of life. Finance soldiers must attain and maintain an appropriate level of technical proficiency that allows them to accurately determine pay entitlements and make appropriate input to the Army Finance and Accounting Center. Prompt, accurate and courteous service to the soldier is the goal of all finance soldiers.

Sergeant major of the Army visits Rangers

Mike Brazile

Army needs, up-to-date personnel file cited as decisive in promotion to SFC

The latest sergeant first class promotion list has been published, and now the questions start. Staff sergeants are asking, "Why wasn't I promoted?" Commanders and supervisors are wondering, "Why wasn't Sergeant Smith promoted? He's the best staff sergeant we have."

These questions have been asked before and will be asked again. Let's look at the results of the Fiscal Year 1986 sergeant first class Selection Board.

Of the total 9,106 noncommissioned officers selected for promotion, 7,659 were selected from the primary zone. Of the total selected from the primary zone, 2,532 were considered in the primary zone for the first time, while 5,127 had previous consideration — some as many as seven times — as indicated in the chart.

Two important factors impacting on selection are needs of the Army and the quality of soldiers being considered as reflected by their files.

First, the needs of the Army may change from year to year. Remember, you now compete only against those in your military occupational specialty. The number of projected vacancies at the next higher grade determines the number that are to be se-

SMA Glenn E. Morrell visited the Mountain Ranger Division of the Army Ranger School at Dahlonega, Ga. earlier this week.

The Army's top enlisted man discussed many issues pertinent to the noncommissioned officer corps and to the Army in general.

"We're hoping promotions will not be slowed down as previously reported for NCO s. We've put money back into that account and we plan to promote E-6 s through E-9 s on schedule as much as possible. We will not slow down E-5 promotions at all. This would be detrimental to retention of young E-5 s.

"I know the new retirement system being talked about is of great concern to career NCO s. This change to a 30-year retirement is being talked about at the Congressional level. If this 30-year retirement came about, we'd have to change a lot of our existing rules concerning things such as E-7 s not being retained after 24 years service. The position of Department of the Army is that there be no change in the current retirement system, leave it alone."

The career soldier explained that although the present retirement qualification of 20 years may seem generous to some, it really isn't. "You can't expect someone to stay in the Army and put up with all the hardships that entails without those people being adequately compensated," he said.

"I also know pay raises are on everyone's mind. Frankly, it doesn't look too promising. Hopefully, we'll get the four percent raise we were promised but the Congress giveth and the Congress taketh away. My personal opinion is that soldiers deserve this pay raise. I realize we need to make budget cuts but what price do you put on freedom? I don't want to see a price put on it," said Morrell.

Morrell is also concerned with the status of drill sergeants. "I don't feel an NCO is really ready to be a drill sergeant until he reaches the grade of E-6. I have nothing against E-5 s but a drill sergeant needs maturity and experience and I just don't think that an E-5 has it."

"I also think that the current length of drill sergeant school is too long. You take a person, make a soldier out of them in eleven weeks and send them to a unit. But you take an NCO in the Army, with years of experience and service, and take 11 weeks to turn him into a drill sergeant? That doesn't make sense to me. I say cut it down to five or six weeks."

"Talkng about NCO s, I also think that too many senior NCO s are away from the company level. We've got a lot of E-6 s and E-7 s and even E-8 s working at various staff positions at higher levels, we have a lot as instructors and jobs like that. These are experienced NCO s that need to be at the company level as squad leaders, platoon sergeants and first sergeants. The next war, any war, will be won at the company level and that's where the Army needs its experienced NCO s, at the company level."

The sergeant major also spoke disparagingly about criticism of Four soldiers convicted in courts-martial

During the past 10 days, four Fort Benning soldiers were tried, convicted and sentenced by courts-martial.

Desertion/sale of drugs - 57 days jail, bad conduct discharge: SP4 Stephen F. Richards, HHC, 1/58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was tried by special court-martial on March 12 and convicted of desertion, wrongful use of cocaine and wrongful sale of marijuana.

Evidence presented by the prosecutor, Capt. Jack Spradley, showed Richards had a positive urinalysis for cocaine on Oct. 14, 1985 and that he left his unit without authority on Oct. 18, 1985 and remained absent until Feb. 3, 1986 when he was arrested and returned to his unit. Spradley showed that on Jan. 21, 1986, Richards sold 4.5 grams of marijuana to an undercover CID agent at Richards' residence in Columbus.

In his closing argument, Spradley urged the court to consider the debilitating effect drug use has on the mission readiness of a unit. Spradley pointed out that Richards had apparently supported himself during his period of desertion by peddling illicit drugs to soldiers. The court sentenced Richards to be confined in jail for 57 days, to forfeit $300 pay per month for four months, to be reduced to private, and to be discharged with a bad conduct discharge.

Fraudulent enlistment - 74 days jail, bad conduct discharge: Pvt. Kenneth E. Tate, Company E, 4th Battalion, 2d Infantry Training Brigade, was tried by special court-martial on March 11 and convicted of fraudulently enlisting in the Army.

Evidence presented by Army prosecutor, Capt. Jack Spradley, showed Tate lied when he joined the Army on July 18, 1985 by falsely stating that he had never served in the Armed Forces, that he had never been convicted of a crime and by giving a false social security number. Spradley showed Tate had been a member of the 2/33d FA in Germany and deserted his unit on April 10, 1983 and was arrested by civilian police at Fayetteville, N.C. on July 22, 1983. Tate was later discharged under other than honorable conditions at Ft. Bragg. Spradley also showed Tate had a lengthy civilian criminal record which Tate had concealed from Army recruiters.

Tate testified in his own behalf that he was a motivated individual who had gotten a raw deal the first time he served in the Army but was now prepared to be an airborne/ranger.

The court sentenced Tate to be confined in jail for 74 days and to be discharge with a Bad Conduct Discharge.

27-day AWOL - 45 days jail: PFC Mark A. English, Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment/Weapons Department, was tried by special court-martial on Feb. 28, for being Absent Without Leave from Nov. 12, 1985 to Dec. 9, 1985. Evidence presented by Army Prosecutor, Capt. Jane Winand, showed English was a soldier who could not be depended upon and who required close supervision. English, who earned the Combat Infantry Badge in Grenada, testified he left his unit without authority and visited with his family in Columbus during the 27 days AWOL. Winand presented evidence through English's chain of command that English was a substandard soldier whose duty performance was one of the worst, if not the worst, in Bravo Company.

The court sentenced English to be reduced to private, to forfeit $500 in pay, and to be confined in jail for 45 days.

AWOL - bad conduct discharge: PFC Earl A. Jones, Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was tried and convicted by special court-martial for a 68 day AWOL from Dec. 5, 1985 through Feb. 11, 1986.

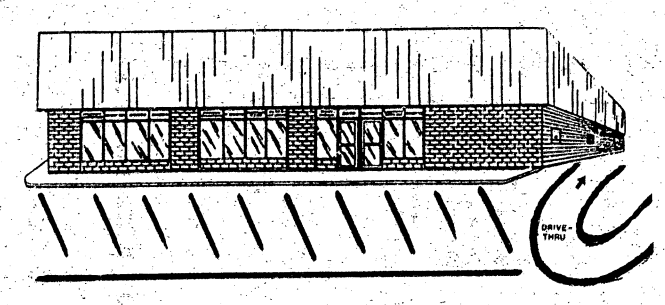
Capt. Jane Winand, Army prosecutor, presented evidence to the court that Jones, a Bradley driver, had previously received two Article 15's for use of marijuana. Winand called two noncommissioned officers from Alpha Company who both testified Jones' duty performance had deteriorated during the past year. Jones took the witness stand in his own behalf but gave no reason for his lengthy period of AWOL. The court sentenced Jones to be reduced to private and be discharged from the Army with a Bad Conduct Discharge. (SJA)

Good security foils criminals

One of the most significant words in our daily lives is security. No matter what situation you find yourself in, security is vitally involved. If we routinely followed good security practices, many criminal acts would be foiled in the attempt.

In a larceny of private property, to use a common crime, the first question that comes to mind is, "Was the property really secured?" In seven out of 10 cases, the answer to this question would have to be "No." Even in incidents where the property was secured, we should consider the extent of that security.

Example: Someone breaks into your home and removes a gold chain from the top of your dresser. The doors and windows of your house were all locked. But could you not have stored your valuable jewelry in a safer, less conspicuous place? Also, was this chain (or other high value items) marked with a serial number or your social security number? If so, did you remember to make a written record of it and keep it in another protected location for ready reference when needed.



There is no 100 percent foolproof method for securing your home or your valuables, however, the following tips can prove to be very helpful in reducing crimes around the home.

- Mark all property of value.
- Maintain a list of property serial numbers in a safe place.
- Ensure doors and windows are secured prior to leaving homr or retiring for the night.
- Check the perimeter of your home for security before the hours of darkness.
- Be a good observer.
- Report all unusual incidents to the military police at 545-5222.

The military police are here to help you. If you have a question or problem concerning the security of your home or property, call the Crime Prevention/Physical Security Office at 545-7115. Won't you do your part to help make Fort Benning a safer place to live and work? (PMO)

Health Fair proves to be robust hit with post residents

The Veterinary Services and Food Inspection booths were popular sites at the Health Fair.

USAIC Public Afairs Office

Fort Benning's fifth annual Health Fair was held at the main mall last weekend offering everyone who participated a wealth of knowledge in many health related topics.

The Health Fair, sponsored by the Medical Department Activity was designed to increase public awareness concerning health and wellness issues.

The Health Fair which opened at 9 a.m. and continued throughout Saturday, reached out to what may have been thousands of individuals, according to Maj. Lonnie Smith, chief of Community Health Nursing.

The Health Fair, involved 200 military and civilian volunteers who set up 30 booths that display information, provided hands-on testing and literature in topics ranging from Sickle Cell to post safety.

The booths were designed to inform the public of general health topics.

"The most popular booths were those where hands-on testing was given," Smith said.

Among those booths were the Blood pressure screening, the vision testing and the hearing testing.

Other booths presented such topics as Veterinary services, the Well Womans Clinic, and CHAMPUS information.

Various associations contributed booths and the information handed out such as the American Red Cross and the American Cancer Society. Included were representaives from the Georgia Lung Association who traveled from Atlanta to set up a booth.

One of the more popular booths was the Sickle Cell Booth.

"We, along with the Sickle Cell Association of Georgia, provided health education, literature and screening to interested participants," Alfreta Gibson, community health nurse for Preventative Medicine Service said.

"We took blood tests at our booths and will send the results along with counselling to the participants," Gibson said.

"The participants thought it was really interesting. The program benefited everyone in the Fort Benning community," Gibson said.

AAFES doubles money order limit to $499.99

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service has doubled the money order limit at most of its facilities worldwide.

Money orders may now be purchased for up to $499.99 for a fee of 50 cents, said Ken Boniface, AAFES chief of Information Services. Before this change, money order purchases were limited to not more than $250.

Other financial services offered at AAFES are free check cashing of up to $100 a day, check cashing at the checkout register for up to $20 over the amount of purchase. AAFES also sells Travelers Checks at most locations, provides a deferred payment plan for its overseas shoppers and accepts Visa and Mastercard in the states. Credit cards will be accepted in Hawaii, Alaska, Panama and Puerto Rico exhanges by mid-1986, said Boniface.

CIVILIAN LIFE MADE $1,700 EASIER.

If you've made up your mind to go back to civilian life, there's a way to make the financial transition easier.

Join your local Army Reserve part-time. It can really pay off for you. For instance, a former E-4 with 3 years experience now makes over $1,700 a year. Not bad for a weekend a month and two weeks annual training.

And don't forget the PX privileges, low-cost life insurance, retirement points and all the other Army Reserve benefits.

Look into it. Contact your in-service recruiter. Or call 1-800-USA-ARMY. Overseas, write Army Reserve Opportunities, P.O. Box 7717, Clifton, NJ 07015.

lected. This is called the select objective, and there is one for each MOS. With Force Modernization and changes to the force structure, the number needed in each MOS may vary from year to year.

Second, the quality of NCOs competing for selection has improved. Therefore, is your file complete? Check it yourself before the board convenes. See if all your awards and decorations are listed and that all of your enlisted evaluation reports, academic reports, and course completion certificates for resident and nonresident courses that are eligible to be on your official military personnel file are present. Make sure someone else's documents are not filed on your OMPF.

You should know better than anyone else what you are authorized or have accomplished. Do you have any old Articles 15 in your OMPF at the Enlisted Records and Evaluation Center? If you do, get them off of your file. Army Regulation 27-10 gives procedures for transferring old Articles 15 that occurred at a junior enlisted grade, and have served their purpose, from the performance portion of your OMPF to the restricted portion. The restricted portion does not go before a selection board.

Check your photograph. In your photograph, you should be standing at attention, your uniform must fit properly and it must be the right uniform. Many female NCOs have pictures where they are wearing the skirt with oxfords instead of black pumps. Other pictures show NCOs with hair too long, mustaches too long, or no brass. Make sure your photograph is correct, and that it depicts the way you want the board to look at you.

Are you physicaly fit? If you are overweight, lose it! If you can't pass the Army Physical Readiness Test, work out, get in shape and pass it!

In summary, there is no single item that will guarantee your promotion. You must be strong in all areas. Do well in all your jobs. Seek the tough leadership jobs for that extra plus. Stay physically fit. Take your SQT, if available, and score high. Keep your official records current. The opportunities for promotion are there. (MILPERCEN)

Weapons development knows no gender lines

by Carole Siler
Army Times

Although women are banned from combat, a handful of civilian and military women are working to develop bullets, tanks and other weapons.

These women work at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., 30 miles northeast of Baltimore.

At the Army's vast 80,000-acre Combat Systems Test Activity, Pvt. Laura Garland is learning the mechanics of the howitzer and the utilty vehicle called the "Hummer" (HMMWV) that is replacing the Jeep.

About 10 miles away a group of civilian women are helping to develop the machinery of war that most women soldiers, like Garland, may never use.

Garland is one of 12 women among the 200 soldiers assigned to the test programs, while 16 civilian women work alongside 130 civilian men as test directors. They supervise the testing of boots, bullets, tanks, trucks and artillery projectiles to see whether they meet armed forces specifications.

Test director Susan Whitlaw, 25, a GS-11 ceramic engineer, has been working on tests of a new anti-armor weapon system.

The Army, in its search for engineers, recruited Whitlaw at Clemson University in South Carolina where she earned a bachelor's degree in ceramic engineering. Although it sounds as if she makes pottery, a ceramic engineer deals with fireproof materials.

Although Whitlaw has been overseeing the tests, she has never fired the lightweight disposable weapon that she comfortably swings over her shoulder as she talks. She'd like to, she said, but as a test director she's the coach and not a player. Her responsibility for the people and the weapons in the program gives her little time to fire a round herself, she said.

While the test directors may not fire the weapons or drive the vehicles they test, part of their job is to determine whether the service member can use them.

Sometimes, the test directors may be better equipped to handle the weaponry than a front-line soldier. At five-foot-eight, Charlotte McCall, a GS-7, can reach the bolt that must be turned to expand a battlefield-office van. But she has to find out whether a 5-foot-2-inch soldier like Garland can do it.

"If it's the responsibility of a soldier to expand the van, you can't guarantee that he's going to be six feet tall. On the battlefield, nobody's going to bring you a stool," McCall said.

McCall and Whitlaw have been test directors for three years (the first woman was hired at Aberdeen in 1974).

They were hired with backgrounds in physics and engineering, but the women directors interviewed said they had no hands-on hardware experience prior to the job.

"I couldn't tell one (weapon) from another," said Pam Mundis. "But it sure beats being a clerk-typist." Mundis, a GS-7 and a former clerk-typist, worked her way up through the ranks to become certified as a technician engineer.

It's interesting work, the women said, because each project is completely new. But they also must spend hours on paperwork — proposing a budget, coordinating, analyzing and writing reports.

"Sometimes you have to write a money request before the test plan is written," said Whitlaw, whose budget for the weapon is around $500,000. And on something like the Army anti-tank weapon, "you know Washington is watching."

In addition to the paperwork, the directors are out on the range about half of the time observing the performance of the weapons.

While women may never be sent to the front lines, this select group has a taste of what it's like to use a weapon.

MPs want motorists to slow down at mall

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Too many cars collided at the Main Post Mall last month, according to Sgt. Joseph Cutshall, noncommissioned officer in charge of the Traffic Section, Military Police Activity.

"Traffic is heavy at the Mall all day long, and with the limited number of parking spaces, we're having problems with congestion in the area," Cutshall said. "We've tried to isolate the busiest times, but traffic is heavy all the time."

Since there is no good time of day to shop without encountering traffic problems, Cutshall's advice is to be careful.

He advises motorists to slow down and be attentive, especially when backing up.

"A lot of these accidents occur when someone is backing out of a parking space," he said. "They don't watch closely enough, and run into the car that's in the street, waiting to get the parking space."

There were seven accidents in the Mall parking lot in February, and Cutshall said any time the number rises over five, the military police consider it too high.

While the accidents are not major ones in terms of damage to persons and property, they cost everyone involved time. And a banged up fender can cost owners several hundred dollars, which is a needless expense, Cutshall said.

"People can avoid the expense and wasted time if they just pay more attention to their driving, and exercise a little extra care," he said.

Post Energy Office recognizes savers

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

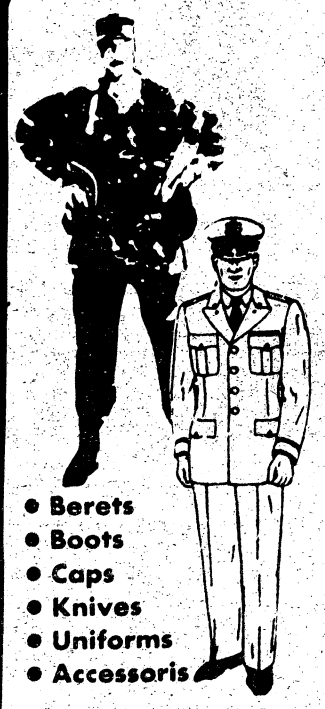
Bruce and Sandy Barlow were cited for their energy conservation efforts by the Directorate of Engineering and Housing's Energy Office Tuesday.

DEH began sending out mock electric bills in the Iron Triangle housing area in December, to help residents be more aware of their consumption. This is the first time a family has been singled out for recognition, but it won't be the last, according to Rodney Carroll of the Energy Office.

"We've decided to recognize the family that has the lowest kilowatt usage each month, as part of our continuing program to make people energy conscious," he said.

The Barlows used 397 kilowatt hours of electricity in February. The average consumption was 702, while the highest was 1,551.

The Barlows were given a letter of commendation and the "Energy Buster" stands in their yard as a symbol of their efforts.



"I had no idea a contest was going on," Sandy Barlow said. "We have really done nothing out of the ordinary to conserve electricity."

She said conserving comes naturally to her family, since they've owned homes before and had to pay electric bills. "Once you get in the habit, it just comes naturally," she said.

Mrs. Barlow said she washes two loads of clothes every day, but washes in cold water. She uses her microwave and toaster ovens when cooking many meals, but not because they use less energy.

"Many times it's more convenient to use one of the smaller appliances," she said.

Mrs. Barlow said she was surprised that her bill was the lowest. "We live very comfortably here and use whatever electricity we need to use. I don't know why our bill is so low," she said.

Army Ranger School.

"There has been talk around the Army that Ranger School standards are too high. That is pure B.S. There's not a damn thing wrong with the standards," he asserted.

"In my opinion, the people griping about Ranger School standards are the ones who couldn't pass the course. The Ranger School keeps turning out the kind of Ranger they always have - great soldiers. If Ranger School standards were lowered it would have an adverse impact. Ranger School wasn't meant for everyone. If that was true we would all have been born with a Ranger tab. The standards will not change just so the school can turn out more Rangers. We will never sacrifice quantity over quality," said Morrell.

The live fire exercise gave the task force the opportunity to practice combat missions using live ammunition. In a carefully orchestrated exercise, artillery, anti-tank, armor and infantry weapons were combined to create a realistic scenario of live fire on the battlefield.

While units in the task force engaged in daily battles with Fort Irwin's OPFOR, units in the BSA performed support missions. The BSA consisted of the 197th Support Battalion and other units that provided the task force with non-stop supplies and services such as food, fuel, ammunition, maintenance and transportation.

The soldiers returned from the desert having learned some valuable combat lessons. That newly gained knowledge, whether it is in maintenance, maneuverability or a new sense of confidence in their jobs will now be applied to home station training.

Chaplains chartered for 'care of souls;' needed in war and peace

by Chaplain Richard Quinn
197th Infantry Brigade

Some 3,500 years ago, God addressed the Jewish army through Moses with these words: "When you go to war against your enemies and see horses and chariots and an army greater than yours, do not be afraid of them, because the Lord your God will be with you.

"When you are about to go into battle, the priest shall come forward and address the army, saying, 'Do not be afraid for the Lord Your God goes with you,'" (Deuteronomy 20:1-4).

With spiritual words of encouragement such as these, the military chaplains of old inspired soldiers to greater service toward God and country as do chaplains today.

Reflections

Along with the opportunity to write this column came a suggestion to include something on the chaplaincy itself. So, I believe the following may be of interest to you.

Since the beginning of recorded history, armies have relied heavily upon their spiritual leaders for guidance. Whether it be prayers for help, meditations for the dead, reading of the stars or claims of a divine mandate by the victors, religion of some kind has played an important part in every army.

From our Judeo-Christian background, we believe the creator who created us is personally interested in the affairs of his creation, even when we are at war.

The history of the chaplaincy of the U.S. Army reaches back to the beginnings of the nation itself. The organized chaplaincy was created by an act of the Continental Congress on July 29, 1775, upon the recommendation of General George Washington. Since then, U.S. Army chaplains have provided moral and spiritual leadership to generations of soldiers in peace and war.

As God is eternal, so is our need and desire to worship him, resulting in the continual need for a chaplaincy. Chaplains were there for the conquest and settlement of Europe, sat with the Knights of the Roundtable and accompanied explorers to the new world, only to find it inhabited by Indian empires with their own "holy men."

Because of his continual need for spiritual inspiration, our Chaplain Corps, like its early British counterpart, was chartered with "the care of souls." Since that original mandate from the Continental Congress, the number of chaplains in the Army alone has grown to more than 1,500.

Over the centuries, chaplains have shed their blood while serving side-by side with their countrymen as noncombatants armed only with compassion, faith and the "Sword of the Lord."

Easter at Benning features sunrise service

Ecumenical sunrise service celebrates Easter March 30

Fort Benning's annual Ecumenical Easter Sunrise Service will be conducted March 30 at 6:30 a.m.

The service will be at the Field of the Four Chaplains, which is adjacent to the Infantry Center Chapel. If it rains, the service will take place in the chapel.

The Infantry Center Band will perform at the service and refreshments will be served immediately following in the chapel.

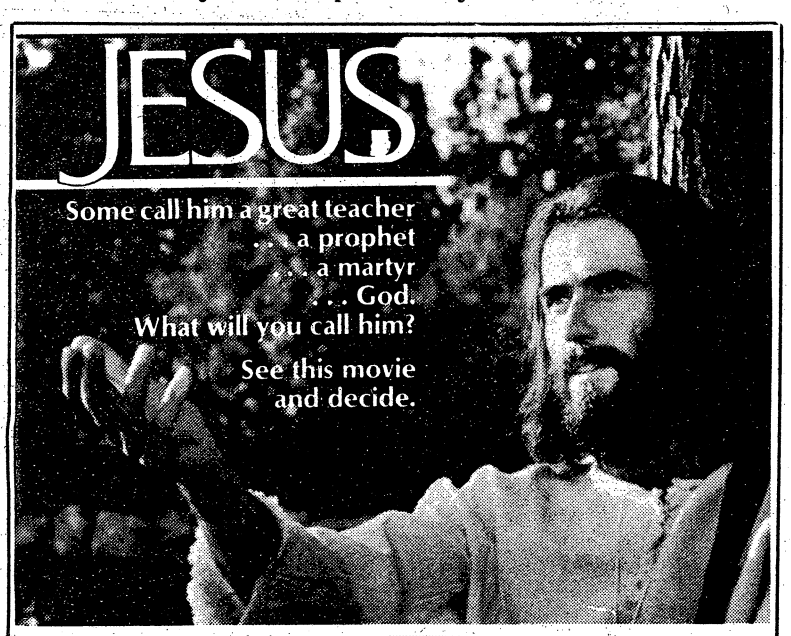
The service is open to people of all religious faiths. The general public is invited to attend.

1st ITB announces plans for special Easter services

Several Easter services are planned at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade March 30.

Protestant personnel can attend a service at 9 a.m., while Roman Catholic personnel can attend a Mass of the Resurrection at 10:30 a.m.

Both services will take place directly across from the 1st ITB Headquarters, east of the brigade duck pond.



Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Paul Cassibry, deputy post chaplain, will lead the 9 a.m. service, while Chaplain (Capt.) James Pomann will celebrate mass at 10:30. Service leaders will be the 1st ITB chaplains.

If it rains, the services will be in Sand Hill Theater No. 3.Both services are open to the general public.

Program planned for Jewish holiday

There will be a community dinner followed by a traditional Megillah (Book of Esther) reading at 7 p.m. in the Religious Education Center Monday in conjunction with the celebration of Purim.

For more information, contact Chaplain Allen at 545-1314/3715.

Alcohol ban: It is unlawful to possess alcohol in any Columbus park. A $52 fine will be levied for this offense. Service members are urged to comply.

Foreign wives, American hairdresser find common denominator

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The wives of six foreign students from post got the royal treatment recently when they visited William's at Cross Country, a beauty salon.

William and Barbara South, owners of the salon, invited the women to come enjoy the beauty services available as a goodwill gesture.

Charlotte Osterburg, allied liaison at Fort Benning, said South's hospitality was nothing new.

Hazel Garcia of the Phillippines has her nails manicured while her hair is drying.

"William invites us out every so often, asking us to come enjoy his facility at no charge to us. Some of the ladies couldn't believe it when I told them they'd get haircuts, makeup and manicures — whatever they wanted — and also lunch, for free," Osterburg said.

It is just his way of showing kindness and welcoming the ladies to our country," she said.

Mrs. South said she and her husband have sponsored allied families before, and they thoroughly enjoyed the experience. "We love Fort Benning and feel like this is a way to show our support and appreciation for the job they do," she said.

"We really get more out of a visit like this than the ladies do," South agreed. "We want to give the ladies a good feeling about Americans, to help further our relationship with other countries."

South praised his staff of stylists, manicurists and makeup people, who volunteered to come in and make it a special day for the foreign guests.

The allied wives said they were surprised at how friendly Americans are.

Despite some of the wives' "new English", communicating with salon personnel was no problem. Friendliness is easy to understand in any language, and the visitors said they were delighted with their visit to the salon.

Ingalore Schulz, wife of the German liaison officer, had her hair highlighted, shaped and styled and a manicure, and praised the William's staff. "From the first moment we felt at home," she said. "Americans are really friendly and willing to help."

Hazel Garcia 's husband is Maj. Wilfredo Garcia, who's been at Benning attending the Infantry Officer Advanced Course. She said she loved her beauty treatment. "It is so nice of them to invite us here," she said.

She enjoyed having her face made up, which she said made her feel glamorous. "I plan to make up like this every day now that I see how it is done," she said.

Brigeda Silva, wife of Capt. Wilfredo Silva, who is an instructor at the School of the Americas, said she's been surprised at the friendliness of Americans.

"When I arrived I didn't speak English very well, and every one has been very patient and helpful in trying to understand me," she said. "Americans have so many things to make life easy, so many places to go and things to do."

South praised Osterburg for her work coordinating the allied student program on post. "I think it's nice of Charlotte to find things for the visitors to do, and this is just one little thing we can do to help with the program," he said.

You don't have to be a journalist to win an Army writing award. This year a new competition, the Chief of Staff of the Army's annual writing awards, will recognize outstanding Army writing in virtually any form. The main criterion is that the writing be direct, effective and clear.

Here are contest rules:

- Eligibility: Soldiers (Active and Reserve components) and Department of the Army civilians.
- Categories: Private through corporal/specialist four; sergeant through command sergeant major/sergeant major; warrant officer 1 through chief warrant officer 2 and second lieutenant through captain; chief warrant officer 3 and 4 and major through colonel; DA civilian (all grade levels and pay plans; appropriated and non-appropriated funds.)
- Subject: Any professional or military-related subject (personal, technical, historical, etc.) that would be of interest to the military community.
- Formats accepted: Essay, letter, magazine article, research paper, story, or biography.
- Entry requirements: Typed, double-spaced, on plain paper, one side only, 10 pages maximum. Do not put your name on the entry itself. Attach a separate cover sheet with full name, rank or grade, social security number, mailing address, duty telephone number and unit of assignment. Document your sources. All work must be original. Authors must submit their own entries. Manuscripts will not be returned.

The deadline for submission is June 15. The Army Writing Office will acknowledge by post card all entries received by this deadline.

For more information, contact a TRADOC schools Communicative Skills Office or the Army Writing Office, HQ TRADOC, ATCG-W, Fort Monroe, Va 23651: AUTOVON 680-3845/3846 or commercial (804) 727-3845/3846.

Army's new writing style gets clearly to the point, stresses conciseness

by Joel D. Courtemanche
USAIS Effective Writing Office

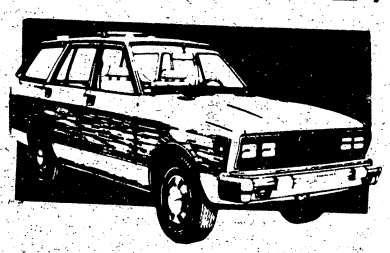
After years of ineffective writing, the Army adopted a "new" style of writing that should make things easier for the writer and for the reader. Effective Writing is writing that places the bottom line up front and is writing done in the active voice.

The Army defines the new style as "writing you can understand in a single, rapid reading, and is generally free of errors in grammar, mechanics, and usage. Good Army writing is clear, concise, organized, and right to the point."

Writers should place emphasis on writing in the active voice, and eliminate the passive voice. Writing in the active voice is much clearer because the responsible party does the action of the verb. The active voice also requires about 30 percent fewer words to state a point than the passive voice does.

In addition to putting the bottom line up front and eliminating the passive voice, the new style stresses brevity. Staff writers should try to limit documents to one page and not exceed two pages. Limiting paragraphs to the length of a thumb joint or about one inch for single-spaced typing is the preferred length.

The Army accepted a number of stylistic changes to improve the quality of writing. Personal pronounces are now ACCEPTABLE. This means that the writer can state, "I want you to . . ." instead of using the cumbersome "It is requested that your organization . . ." Similarly, clarity requires a refining of the use of the comma. Commas are required in a series before the "and" or another conjunction. An introductory phrase also requires a comma.



All new programs develop specific terms, and the new writing style has several. Terms like "Quick Screen Edit" and "Clarity Index Formula" are in vogue. Both are editing tools that help identify faults with writing. The "Quick Screen Edit" allows supervisors and reviewers to identify use of the passive voice; long words that impress, rather than express; and common spelling, grammatical, and punctuation errors. The "Clarity Index Formula" allows supervisors to identify faults like overly long sentences, and the use of long, abstract words that fail to clearly state the author's intent.

Generals Wickham, Thurman, and Richardson fully indorse the new Army writing style. Writers may resist changing their style of writing because they are comfortable with their present style. Formal instruction, at all service schools, is slowly changing this desire to maintain the status quo. All formal courses, from the Advanced NCO Course through the Army War College, teach Effective Writing. The service schools incorporated TRADOC approved Programs of Instruction for Effective Writing last year.

The USAIS Effective Writing Office first provides instruction to students in ANCOC, OCS, IOBC, and IOAC. Another mission is the teaching of Effective Writing Seminars to the staff and faculty of Fort Benning. The instructors are available to provide four-hour seminars to agencies and units and can provide assistance on an as-needed basis.

For further information about the new Army style of writing, please call the USAIS Effective Writing Office at 545-3382/3995.

Area Activities

Gardens erupt with color as blossoms spring open

Thousands of daffodils, the golden-spring harbingers, are beginning to brighten the scenic drive and woodlands at Callaway Gardens. Flowering quince in delicate shades of pink, coral and white greet the early spring visitor to the upper Meadowlark area.

More than 100 varieties of daffodils have been naturalized throughout the Azalea Trails and Meadowlark Gardens. The Meadowlark Area trails are also brightening with snowdrops, miniature narcissus and Lenten rose. Trilliums, anemones and other native wildflowers are blooming along the wildflower trail near Pioneer Log Cabin.

The arrival of Easter at the John A. Sibley Horticultural Center brings a dazzling preview of Spring with hydrangeas, Easter lilies, cineraries, pansies, hanging baskets of red and purple fuchsias and more bulbs.

The spring Azalea Festival at Callaway Gardens is only a few weeks away. Traditionally in late March and early April, the festival features not only the showing a azaleas, but live musical performances as well. Florida State University's "Flying High Circus" will also perform the weekends of April 4 and 5 and 12 and 13 at Robin lake Beach.

The walking trails at the Gardens are open daily from 7 a.m. until dusk. Admission is $4 for adults and $1 for children ages 6 to 11. Children under 6 are admitted free. Admission during the Azalea Festival weekends will be $5 for adults.

For more information, call 404-663-2281.

Gardens' passes available

The Callaway Gardens' annual pass for 1986, which provides a year's unlimited admission to the Gardens and Robin Lake Beach, is available now for $25

The passes may be used with no additional charge for admission to special events at Callaway Gardens such as the Azalea Festival, the July 4th celebration, the Masters Water Ski Tournament, the Symphony in the Gardens series and special art exhibits.

Annual passes, which expire March 31, 1987, may be purchased at the Callaway Gardens' Information Center daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Interested persons may also request an application by writing: Annual Passes, Callaway Gardens, Pine Mountain, Ga. 31822, or by calling (404) 663-2281, ext. 151. Columbus residents may call 324-2234, ext. 151.

Indian Festival & Fair set for April at DeSoto Caverns

The 11th Annual Indian Dance Festival and Pioneer Fair is April 5 and 6 at DeSoto Caverns Park. New this year at the popular festival that benefits the Boy Scouts is the "Living History Indian Village."

Visitors will be able to see and try their hand at age old Indian crafts and skills. They can also see how the Indians survived and made homes for their families.

In addition to the Indian Village, there will be archery shows; a Silver Dollar archery booth where kids can test their aim; comic "frontier" gunfights with The Bunkhouse Boys and bluegrass and country music bands.

Festival hours are 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. both days. Entry fee is $2. Children under 4 are admitted free. To make reservations for camper hookups, call 205-378-7252.

The park is on Route 1, Highway 76 in Childersburg, Ala. It is easily reached from Interstates 20 and 65 southeast of Birmingham.

U.S. Army

Callaway Gardens is alive with colors as spring blossoms bloom.

Dinner theatre production planned at Supper Club

"By Strouse," a hit broadway musical featuring the music of Charles Strouse, will be the Dinner Theater Production at the Fort Benning Supper Club April 4, 5, 11 and 12.

The musical contains music from "Bye Bye Birdie," "Applause," "Golden Boy," "Annie" and many other Broadway musicals.

The performances are open to all ranks, military and civilian.

Dinner will be prime rib of beef. Cocktails begin at 6 p.m., followed by dinner at 6:30 p.m. and the performance begins at 8 p.m.

Tickets are $11.50. For reservations, call the box office at 682-0640.

Busch Gardens zoo gets facelift

Ask what's new at the zoo at Tampa's Busch Gardens, The Dark Continent, and you're likely to learn it's a diapered baby chimpanzee, a new brood of baby alligators or a rare Lear's macaw hatchling.

The park is currently undergoing a zoological renovation, creating dramatic new exhibits for Busch Gardens' elephants, camels, Chilean flamingos, Nile crocodiles and a variety of other animals. The renovation project is scheduled for completion this spring.

Busch Gardens is located on 3000 Busch Boulevard, in Tampa, Fla., eight miles northeast of downtown, two miles east of Interstate 275 and two miles west of Interstate 75.

A single admission price of $15.50 includes all rides, shows and attractions. Children 2 years old and yougner get in free. The gardens are open from 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily except summer and selected holidays when hours are extended.

For more information, call Susan Size or Teresa Ingram at 314-982-1700.

Master's water ski tourney set for May at Callaway

The world's finest skiers will compete in the Master's Water Ski Tournament May 23-25 at Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, Ga.

Skiers will compete for $50,000 in prize money in men's and women's tricks, slalom and jumping categories. In addition, a "freestyle" category has been added to the competition.

Master's weekend begins May 23 with a day of practice scheduled. The elimination round begins May 24, with freestyle practice highlighting the afteroon's activities. May 25 the freestyle qualifying round is set, followed by the three-event semi-finals. Freestyle finals will precede the finals in the tricks, slalom and jumping events.

Historic tour each Saturday

The Heritage Tour, sponsored by the Historic Columbus Foundation, leaves at 10 a.m. from the Columbus Hilton, 800 Front Ave., each Saturday. The cost for the two-hour tour is $5 a person, $2.50 for children 7-12, children 6 and under ride free. For more information, call 322-0756.

Freshman student wins national math award

by Marco Morales
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Maria Isabel Barriga, 15, a freshman at Spencer High School, was recently nominated as a United States National Mathematics Award winner.

The award was presented to Barriga by her math teacher, Tommy Smith, due to Barriga's high level of proficiency in Algebra at Spencer.

This award is something only 10 percent of all national level mathematics students can ever hope to achieve, according to the USNMA.

"I feel very proud and honored," said Barriga about the award, adding, "Although Spanish is my primary language, I had little difficulty understanding numerical terms."

Maria is the daughter of Lt. Col. and Mrs. German J. Barriga. Barriga is a guest instructor from Chile at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

"Maria has been an excellent academic student since she's been in school," her father said.

Maria is involved in many activities at Spencer and the local community, including the drama club, honor roll society, aerobics, swimming and church activities.

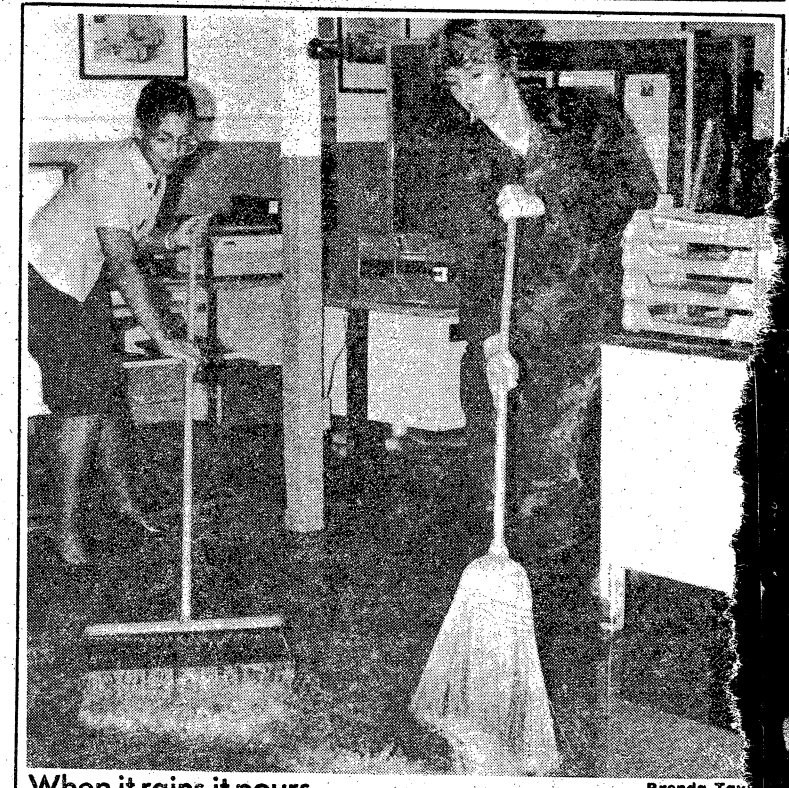
Soldiers participating in non-government fund raising events must exercise caution

Deputy Secretary of Defense William H. Taft III, in a recent memorandum, reminds soldiers of the policies on participating in or sponsoring private or non-government fund-faising or other public events.

The following restrictions found in Army Regulations: AR 600-50, AR 360-5, and AR 360-61 apply to all soldiers when they are called upon to take part in the activities of private associations or organizations.

Soldiers must avoid any action that might result in, or create the appearance of, giving preferential treatment to any person or entity. This would include, for example, a soldier involved in awarding a contract for rental cars to be used by visiting guests accepting a free rental car from the contractor to use at his leisure.

Soldiers are not allowed to engage in any practice that involves or implies Department of the Army sponsorship of a private organization and its activities, including quasi-military organizations made up entirely on active-duty or retired soldiers.



Soldiers are forbidden, by regulation, from taking any official actions that selectively benefit or endorse individuals or organizations. For example, a soldier with contracting authority choosing to "bend the rules" and awarding a contract to an association run by a former Army buddy, would clearly violate this standard.

Soldiers are prohibited from using their titles or positions in connection with any commercial enterprise or to endorse any commercial product. This would apply to guest appearances on radio and TV shows in which the guest is expected to lend his official identity to the advertising of a product or service.

Retired soldiers and soldiers in the reserve components not on active duty may use their military title in connection with commercial enterprises, provided they indicate their retired or reserve status. However, regulations prohibit the use of military titles if it in any way casts discredit on the Army or the Defense Department or gives the appearance of sponsorship, sanction, endorsement, or approval by those agencies. For example, if a retiree is running a used car business under the title Col. Joe "Good Deal" Johnson without indicating his retired status, he would be in violation of the standard.

All soldiers are prohibited from wearing their uniforms in connection with the promotion of any political or commercial interest. This would apply to such an event as the grand opening of a store in which a soldier, who works there part-time, is asked to wear his Army uniform.

All soldiers, Taft's memo noted, should be mindful of the possibility that their actions could create the appearance of official Army involvement with the organization's aims, goals, or objectives. Every soldier, regardless of rank, shares responsibilities for proper conduct under these guidelines. (ARNEWS)

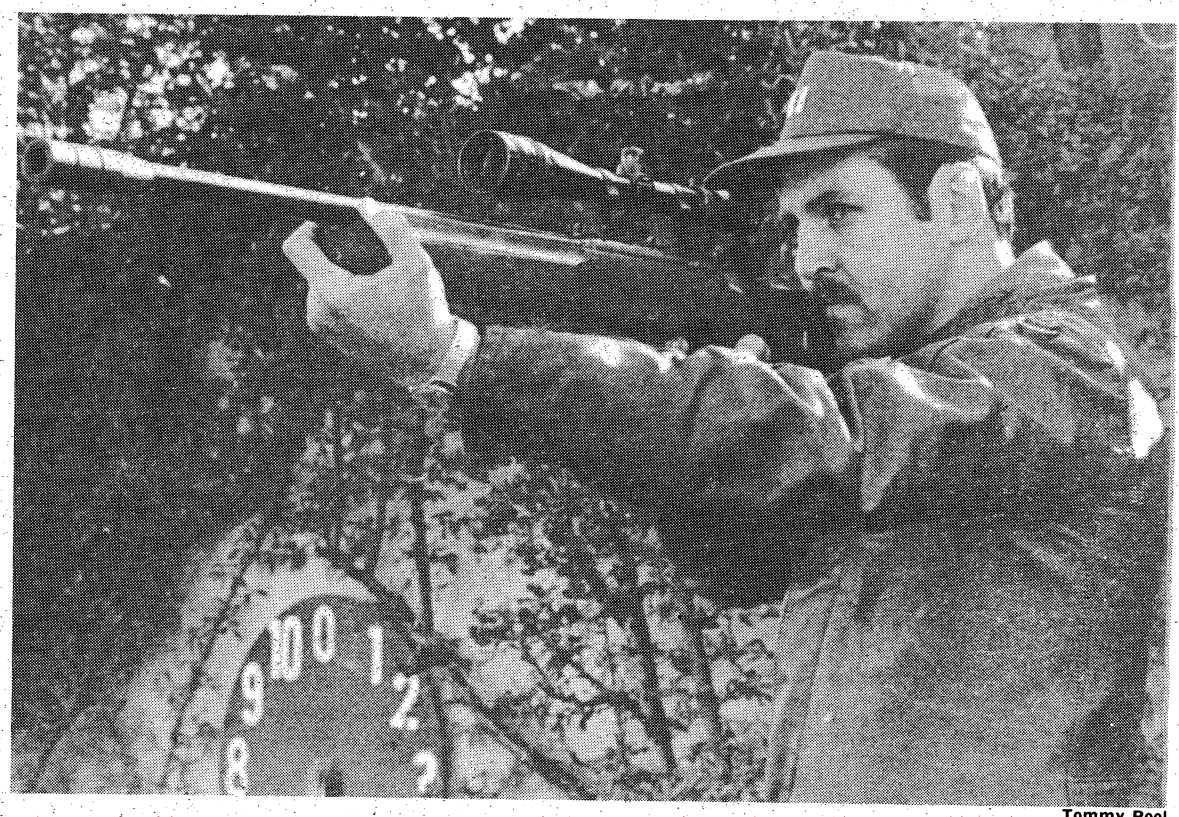
Shooters take aim at championships

by John Stevenson
U.S. Army Reserve

More than 600 Reserve and National Guard marksmen from throughout the eastern United States and Puerto Rico have been on Fort Benning's ranges this week competing against each other in the First and Second U.S. Army Reserve Components Rifle, Pistol and Light Machinegun championships.

The matches began Sunday and will close with an awards ceremony at McAndrew Range at 3:00 p.m. today.



The championships consist of national match rifle and pistol matches, combat pistol and rifle matches and M-60 machinegun competition. Combat matches differ from the national match firing in that the standard government-issue weapon must be used and individual combat gear must be worn during the combat matches. Combat match participants must successfully complete a two-mile run with their weapons and combat gear prior to firing. A one-mile run without weapons and combat gear is required of all other firers.

Shooters in the national match rifle competition fire the accurized M-14 rifle, while the combat rifle shooters use the non-modified M-16 rifle. The pistol matches are fired with the .22 caliber and .45 caliber pistol.

Statistical activities of the matches are, for the most part, automated. Personal computers are used to manage competitor information, compute individual and team score card entries, aggregate scores, determine award winners and publish daily match bulletins.

In addition to determining the top individual and team firers in each separate Army area as well as an overall champion in each category of competition, the matches also determine who will fill the slots on the teams that will represent First and Second Army in future matches during the year.

This marks the fourth straight year that the Reserve and National Guard matches have been held at Fort Benning and the 78 teams and 614 individuals here mark the largest participation ever.

Tommy Pool

Former USAMU member Randy Stewart takes aim with the USAR Shooting Team. Stewart had the early lead in this year's Interservice Running Target Championships here.

Benning's Flyers rugby team grounded by Okaloosa RFC

by Joel D. Courtemanche
Special to the Bayonet

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby team traveled to Okaloosa last weekend to challenge one of the premiere teams in Florida. They lost two games by scores of 23-7 and 20-15. The Flyers played hard and repeatedly challenged the host team.

Okaloosa opened the scoring during the first game with an early try. The Flyers countered with a Steve Gouthro penalty kick to cut the lead to 4-3. Both teams played to a standstill in a very defensive-oriented match until late in the half when Okaloosa scored two trys and an extra point kick for a 13-3 half time lead.

Okaloosa roared out for the second half and managed to prevent numerous Flyer scoring attempts. Bob Higgins carried the ball into the try zone for the Flyers, but was unable to place the ball down for the score. Both teams played tough defense until Okaloosa gained two more trys and an extra point for a commanding 23-3 lead. On the last Okaloosa kick off, Barney Morris ran the kick back 75 meters for the final Flyer score. It was a fitting farewell for Morris, who was playing his last game in the Benning blue and white colors.

During the second game, several ties occurred before Okaloosa gained the winning score at the final whistle. Larry McAnneny opened the scoring for the Fort Benning ruggers and Steve Tennant hit the extra point for a 6-0 Benning lead. Okaloosa countered to tie the score before Flyer Billy Whitesides scored. Tennant's extra point gave the Flyers a short lived 12-6 margin as Okaloosa scored to tie the game at the half.

Defense dominated the second half. Steve Tennant gave the Flyers another lead with a penalty kick. The Flyers held on to the lead until the last minutes of the game when Okaloosa scored two quick trys for a 20-15 winning margin.

This weekend, the Flyers will participate in the Eastern Military Regional Tournament, at Fort Stewart, Georgia. Rugby clubs from Fort Bragg, N.C., Fort Stewart, Ga., Camp Le-Jeune, N.C., Cherry Point Naval Air Station, N.C., and Parris Island will provide the competition. The Flyers also expect to see these teams at the Military National Rugby Tournament in May. The Flyers are still looking for interested players. For further information, please call Capt. Steve Tennant at 545-1688.

Barracudas swim well

On March 15 and 16 the Fort Benning Barracuda Swim Team competed in the Georgia BC Junior Olympics aquatics meet hosted by the Columbus Aquatics Club at the D.A. Turner YMCA.

Beth Glass paced the Barracudas as she swam four different events for eight year olds and under, establishing an "A" time for her 50-yard freestyle effort. She also placed in each of her other three events.

Kristy and Cindy Rock also placed in each of the four events they swam.

Katie and Nina Kendall, swimming in the 10 years old and under category, turned in outstanding performances.

Jennifer Bunyea and Jason Glass bested their personal times and established themselves as strong "B" category competitors. (USAIC PAO)

Budget cuts cause civilian job losses; Benning loses 60

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Due to budget cuts, 60 civiliar temporary workers at Fort Ben ning will be laid off today, ac cording to the post's Director o Resource Management, Davic Flo.

"This lay off of temporaries comes as a result of the fisca year '86 Appropriations Act and the Gramm-Rudman-Holling's Balanced Budget Bill.

"Put in dollars and cents, we were allocated $182 million foi operations and maintenance at Fort Benning for 1985. This figure dropped to $171 million for FY 86. That's an $11 million difference. This translated, in part, to a reduction in the civilian pay target, which is a limit placed on Fort Benning for expenses for the civilian work force. A decision had to be made on what was to give," Flo said.

That decision was to lay off 60 temporary workers, among other fiscal cutbacks and adjustments.

"We have had to hire quite a few temporary employees as a result of new commitments at Fort Benning, such as the School of Americas, the 2nd Brigade of the 10th Mountain Division, the 75th Ranger Regiment and the 3rd Ranger Battalion. When these cuts came about a position review was done on all temporary employees at Fort Benning and how each of these positions affected missions directly on post.

"The impact of the losses of these employees to each specific organization was also carefully scrutinized and the necessary decisions on the lay offs were made accordingly," Flo said.

Flo emphasized that Fort Benning is highly concerned with civilian personnel cuts and is constantly trying to ensure that Training and Doctrine Command recognizes Fort Benning must have an effective civilian work force to function, with regard to both quantity and quality of personnel and as dictated by mission needs.

Some soldiers face early separation

The Department of the Army has announced that enlisted soldiers whose end of terms of service falls between May 15 and Sept. 30, who do not voluntarily request an early release date or sign an intent to reenlist will be involuntarily seperated one or two months prior to their ETS date.

The early release program is a step designed to reduce the Army's fiscal year 1986 personnel budget.

Release dates of soldiers who have requested early release will not be affected, unless they request an earlier date.

In the Continental United States, those soldiers whose ETS date falls between May 15 and Sept. 30 will be separated as follows:

If your ETS date is May 15-June 14 your adjusted ETS is April 14-20.

If your ETS date is June 15-Sept. 30, your adjusted ETS is two months prior to your current ETS.

Not all enlisted soldiers whose ETS falls in this time frame will be affected. For more information, soldiers should check with their first sergeants or unit Personnel Administration Centers.

Army Emergency Relief kicks off fund drive Monday

Contributing to AER almost an obligation; money given by soldiers helps Army family

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Army is fast becoming a family of families. In moving away from the attitude described by the old adage of providing each man with "three hots and a cot," the Army provides for the needs of hundreds of thousands of soldiers and family members. The services provided cover the spectrum from housing to medical care. One important way the Army provides special care is through Army Emergency Relief.

Started in 1942 during World War II, AER now helps soldiers and their families worldwide with emergency assistance in the form of interest-free loans.

"When soldiers come to us with a bonafide emergency, we can loan them money to help them over their rough spot," says Fort Benning AER officer, 2nd Lt. Ralph Spry.

Spry stressed that AER is not a bank or credit union but an organization set up to help soldiers in emergency situations.

Typically, according to Spry, young married specialist fours/corporals are the soldiers AER helps the most.

"An E-4 gets sent to Fort Benning, accompanied by his family, and needs a sizeable amount of money for a security deposit on an apartment and all of the miscellaneous items you have to pay for when you move. They come to us, show us a need, and we loan them the necessary amount of money," Spry said.

Many soldiers seem to think that AER is a loan institution, much like a bank or credit union, but that is not true. To get a loan from AER soldiers must meet the criteria and show a definite need. Definite needs are not things such as money for an overdue telephone bill or a down payment for a new car.

Last year Fort Benning's AER loaned more than $315,000 to soldiers and family members in need.

"Last year we took in a little more than $117,000 and we hope to top that this year," Spry said.

Spry stressed that AER is for all soldiers and all soldiers should contribute.

If the Army is a family, then AER can be looked upon as the Army family's emergency fund. Families must pull together to make it together. AER is one concrete way all Army people, soldiers and family members, can help each other by giving generously during this year's fund drive. Give to the Army, to your family, for the good of all.

Various voices

Why do you think it is important for soldiers to contribute to Army Emergency Relief?

SFC Homer L. Smith, Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group — The soldiers should be supportive of the Army Emergency Relief program because it benefits them. It is a program dedicated to the soldier.

PFC Russell D. Morgan, Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Training Brigade. — "Soldiers should help other soldiers. If we did not care about other soldiers, we could not expect others to care about us.

Sgt. Willie N. Veale, Company A, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Training Brigade — "The soldier should support Army Emergency Relief. A lot of soldiers would not be able to make ends meet in case of an emergency. The lower enlisted soldier or the soldier with a large family lives on a limited income and would need support in a crisis.

Post commanding general urges AER support

Since 1942, Army Emergency Relief has provided financial assistance to Army people in time of need. AER continues to help all Army members and their families, as well as the spouses and orphans of deceased members. During 1985, the Fort Benning AER office provided more than $315,000 in loans and grants to 1,300 military personnel and family members.

AER depends on the support of all active and retired military personnel. Your contributions maintain the AER fund, thus maintaining the well-being of many of your fellow soldiers and their families. I urge you to support the AER fund campaign that will be conducted March 31 through April 15. Your contributions are needed in making the concept of "helping the Army take care of its own" a reality.

Edwin H. Burba, Jr.
Major General, USA
Commanding

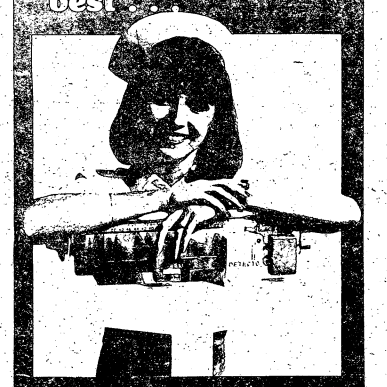
Op-Ed

Gramm-Rudman bites deeply into retiree's pay in FY 1986

The federal district court ruling that says a key provision of the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law is unconstitutional came too late to aid the first casualties of the dracoonian budget cuts mandated for 1986 or beyond. An immediate result of the legislation passed in December is the elimination of the cost-of-living allowance adjustment (COLA) for military and other federal retirees that was to have appeared in their January 1 paychecks.



COLAs for Social Security and Veterans' disability recipients are specifically protected by Gramm-Rudman, causing the four million federal and military retired people to feel discriminated against. Adding to their frustration is the fact that the federal budget for fiscal year 1987 proposes a 3.7 percent COLA for veterans and survivors who receive their payments from the Veterans Administration while recommending zero COLA for military retirees. If Gramm-Rudman is allowed to run its course, these COLA freezes would reduce the lifetime value of military retired pay to 20.5 percent by 1991.

The impact of the no-COLA provisions of Gramm-Rudman on present and future military retired people and their survivors is devastating. The average retired enlisted man, a sergeant first class with 23 years in the service, receives approximately $1,000 monthly in retired pay. Without the purchasing power protection of the COLA program, and at a minimal inflation rate of three percent per year, that would shrink to an annuity for his widow of only $270 a month in twenty years. That prospect is frightening.

These individuals and their families have paid and are still paying a high price for the privilege of serving a full career in the uniform of their country. Now it seems they are to be treated differently than other veterans with respect to cost of living adjustments to their earned entitlements.

Military retirees are veterans in every sense of the word and yet this fact seems to have been ignored by Congress. These career veterans and their survivors have earned and should receive equitable treatment with other veterans when the difficult decisions regarding federal budget cuts are being made. (AUSA)

FA red legs put steel on target for infantry

by Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

The long, smoking howitzer tubes protruded from beneath camouflage netting like the antennae of some giant insect.

One by one, the six tubes rocked violently as Battery A, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, pounded enemy positions more than 11 miles away. The land lines crackled with grids, charges, deflections and other data and the gun crews echoed as they worked.

This particular mission was in support of a live-fire defense conducted by a task force of the 197th Infantry Brigade at the National Training Center. Battery First Sergeant Kenneth Huotari explained that sustained operations such as those at the National Training Center teach his battery things they can't learn anywhere else.

"This is the most realistic training I've seen," 1st Sgt. Huotari said. "We have more ammo, more space, and the soldiers get to do what they're supposed to do — shoot, move and communicate."

During Operation Solar Ice, 2-10th enjoyed a mixture of live-fire training against targets and force-on-force training against Fort Irwin's OPFOR.

"The force-on-force is good because there's an enemy out there," Huotari said. "We were forced to pick good positions and use OPs. The enemy didn't find us, so we must've picked some good locations."

The first sergeant estimated that the battery would expend more than 900 rounds during the live fire portion of the rotation.

Tankers make 'dust bowl' history at Fort Irwin's NTC

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

For the second straight year a tank company from the 197th Infantry Brigade made dust bowl history at the National Training Center.

Although the Brigade's desert exercise at the NTC took a lot of hard work, the soldiers still had their work cut out for them before returning to Fort Benning. Before seeing the last of the desert, Brigade soldiers cleaned and repaired all of the equipment and vehicles they drew from the equipment yards at the NTC. During this process, one unit — Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor — repeated a precedent that they set last year at Fort Irwin.

Bravo Company turned in all their tanks and vehicles to the NTC within two days. The training schedule allows four days for turn-in. Last July, after 'Operation Desert Raider II,' the armored company was credited by the NTC with being the first company of all rotating units to perform this feat in two days.

Rotating units arrive at Fort Irwin with many of their own vehicles. But, they draw such vehicles as tanks and armored personnel carriers, and much more equipment, from the yards at the NTC.

This is an important part of the rotation. Supply and maintenance personnel perform technical inspections to ensure that all the vehicle's systems are working. These TIs cover mechanical systems as well as weapons and communications systems. They check vehicles thoroughly, order necessary repair parts and document problems before they take the vehicle from the yard.

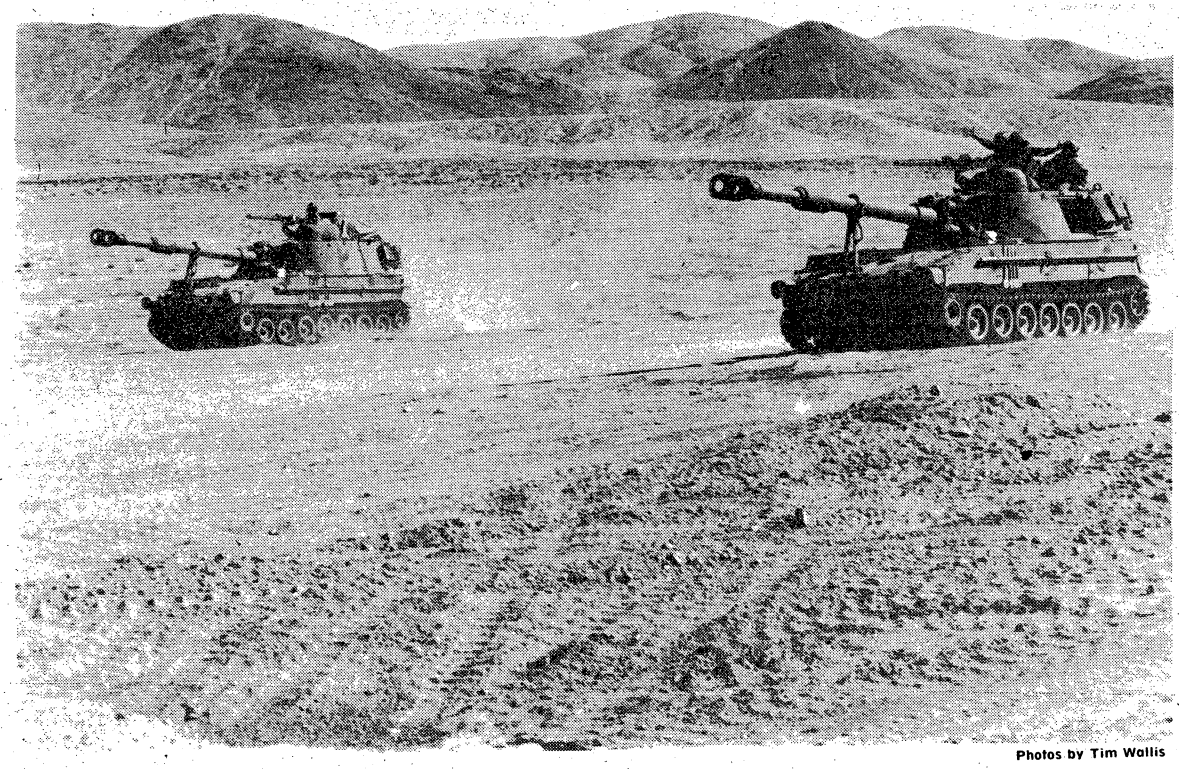
1st Lt. Doug Irwin, a Co. B platoon leader, noted "it's easy to miss things by rushing to get the vehicles out to the desert. We took our time and found all of the problems before we moved out."

Once the task force moves out to begin the two weeks of training, they must perform daily maintenance on their vehicles to keep them combat ready.

Irwin said that "steady state maintenance" was one of the factors in their successful turn-in. "We have ongoing maintenance in the field to correct deficiencies in our vehicles," Irwin said. "We also kept requisitions for repair parts updated throughout the exercise so we could get parts and make repairs in the field."

1st Lt. Gregory Burkes, Co. B executive officer, said a third factor was an institutional knowledge of the equipment issue and turn-in process by the noncommissioned officers and officers.

"We brought with us experience from lessons learned in past rotations," Burkes said. "Because of this the battalion as a whole was able to turn-to much quicker."



The armor battalion's Company D also finished their turn-in in record time, just a few hours behind Co. B.

Mech troopers gain new skills

by Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

While many 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers were ready to head back to the stables at a full gallop at the end of Operation Solar Ice, at least a few infantrymen from Task Force 1-58 were primed for more action.

Sgt. David Gallagher, a team leader in the second platoon of Bravo Company, 1-58th, said that he expected the National Training Center to be a non-stop operation.

"This was my first rotation," Gallagher said. "I thought the live-fire was great, but the force-on-force seemed to slow down at times."

Task Force 1-58 had just completed its last mission of the rotation, an attack on a pair of hilltops just north of a familiar landmark known as The Whale. The mission ended 14 days of criss-crossing the rocky desert at all hours of the day and night and in almost every type of weather.

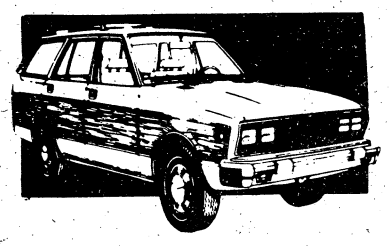
A soldier could break track in a t-shirt during the day, and be shivering behind his .50 caliber machine gun that night. During the day the sky could be blue, or black with rain clouds, or completely obliterated by sandstorms that blasted every part of the body.

The soldiers had many opportunities to gain first hand knowledge of the environment. During attacks, for example, the infantry squads generally left their tracks behind and approached the objective on foot. At other times, troops went on long foot patrols at night to recon enemy positions.

Navigating through the desert at night, whether in a vehicle or on foot, can be mystifying.

"You think you know where you are," said Gallagher, "but nothing at night looks the way it does during the day."

As is usually the case, an NTC rotation is a learning experience. 2nd Lt. Fred Noe, assistant intelligence officer for 1-58th, said that he learned a lot about his intelligence mission.



"This is a lot different from fighting other 197th troops at Fort Benning," Noe said. "The OPFOR has a different style of fighting than we do. "I learned better ways to show commanders where and how the enemy may be set up."

Like it or not, however, Task Force 1-58 concluded its force-on-force training and returned to the dust bowl to begin redeployment.

Awesome Abrams barreling around post ranges with 2-69

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Four M1 Abrams tanks come barreling across the berm, trailing smoke and firing their main guns. It's an awesome sight, and it's going on right here.

Company C, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade, is now the Abrams company. A new equipment training team from Fort Knox, Ky., left Fort Benning recently, ending more than four months of instruction on the tank.

Mechanics and mechanic supervisors spent 45 days learning how to fix the tanks before individual training started.

Next came three weeks of individual training for the tankers who function as four man teams. Each team consists of a driver, gunner, tank commander and loader. They are taught how to man the 63 tons of fighting machine to get the maximum performance from its two M240 machineguns, M2 .50 caliber machinegun and the 105 mm main gun.

The last part of their training was in doctrine and tactics, which included how to employ the M-1 in tactical situations. The crews trained day and night learning the tank's two essential missions: attacking and defending.

With a top, governed speed of 45 mph, the M-1 Abrams is capable of safely maneuvering up a 60 degree slope. According to 1st Lt. Nick Brunstein, executive officer of Company C, the tank is supposed to be able to close with and engage anything.

"It gives soldiers superior firepower and increased survivability on the battlefield," he said.

The company has 14 M-1s, which will be used to support the U.S. Army Infantry School's courses.

PFC Ronald Spates, a loader, said he likes the Abrams. "It's fast, has a lot of fire capability and is easy to operate," he said. "I thought the M60A3 was a good tank, but this one is better; it has more equipment."

Sgt. Stan Chambers, who has been an M60 tanker for five years, said adapting to change is difficult for him.

"But there are things I know about the Abrams that are good. I like the new stabilization system, and the better suspension system means a smoother ride," he said.

"I figure it'll take us about two to three months and we'll be able to use it as well as we did the M60," he said. "Anything that's got tracks and a main gun I can get along with."

Former first shirt regales 29th Inf. with old tales

WW II veteran says Army has changed

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment

"Back then," says retired 1st Sgt. Edward Harris, "a person joined the Army because he wanted a place to sleep and something to eat."

Today, soldiers are more educated and well-fed, Harris says. "They join the Army for the experience."

Harris echoed these sentiments following a monthly awards ceremony sponsored by 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

He was the battalion's special guest because of his association with the 29th Infantry from 1936 to 1941.

During Harris' assignment with the 29th, he and 20 other soldiers of Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, were called on to form the first parachute test platoon at Fort Benning in 1941.

Harris recalled, "We were easily the best unit the Army had back then. That's why we were chosen to be part of the first airborne class."

The battalion presented the 34-year-ex-serviceman with a plaque and a tour of the battalion area.

Harris shared a few stories of early Army times during his visit.

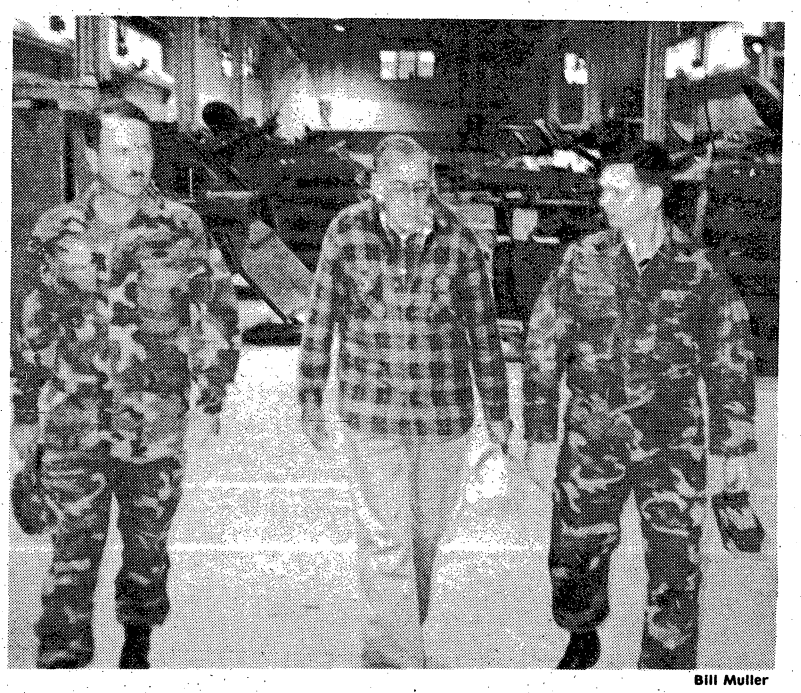
He recollected the meanest sergeant he ever met. "Lem Pitts."

"If you went on police call and missed a match stick, (Lem) would make you pick it up, road march 15 miles with it, and bury it in a hole six feet deep that you had to dig first."

He followed up with a story about the "great" 29th Infantry baseball team. "Ninety-six games, with only nine losses in one season," Harris says.

"We won so many games because we were in such great shape.

"Heck, we could've beaten the Atlanta Braves, the way they play now."



Harris' military honors include the Distinguished Service Cross, Silver Star Medal, Bronze Star Medal and two awards of the Purple Heart.

He joined the Army in 1936 and was a member of the 82nd Airborne Division during World War II and the 101st Airborne during the Korean and Vietnam Wars.

Today, Harris resides in Dalton, Ga.

His visit serves to motivate present-day members of the battalion, says Maj. Thomas Dyne, Headquarters, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"Harris told the soldiers that during the past 45 years that he has been away, the battalion continues with the same reputation: a hard working and well-disciplined unit."

'85 crappie champion not a tall-tale fish story

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

The 197th Infantry Brigade's prize winning fisherman is on the water again. SFC Robert W. Bryant, Brigade legal NCOIC is casting for a $25,000 first prize in the National Slabathon crappie tournament. Bryant and a partner took first place in the tournament last year, each winning $5,000 and a fishing boat.

The national tournament is scheduled for May 10 on Wiley Lake in Decatur, Ala. Bryant is preparing for the tournament by fishing in several of the qualifying events. In fact, Bryant and his wife, Gayle, won $1,500 earlier this month by taking first place in a tournament at Eufaula, Ala. The Bryants netted over 21 pounds of crappie in eight hours of fishing.

These qualifying tournaments are held to determine the teams who will compete in the national tournament. The teams fish during set times and weigh in twenty of the biggest fish in their catch at the end of the day. The top three finishers of each tournament qualify for th National Slabathon.

Although he automatically qualifies for the national tournament as the returning champ, Bryant is hoping to knock out some of the competition by finishing at the top in any of the preliminary events.

Bryant noted that it's not too late for other Fort Benning anglers to join the tournaments.

"Anyone could win," Bryant said. "You can get out there and get lucky on any day."

43rd engineer soldiers give range constructive facelift

U.S. Army

SSG Redmond (C, Co 43rd Eng) supervises Sp4 Adkins and PV2 Schenden during the roofing stages of the Ammunition Storage building that the company built on Young Range.

Members of Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Heavy) are currently working on Phase II of construction at Young Range (Formerly Malone 19).

Phase II includes construction of 10 feet by 18 feet ammunition storage building with a separate storage area for demolitions, blasting caps, and machine gun ammunition. Also included is the movement of a lister bag stand and a 20 feet by 40 feet range personnel building from a range no logner in use.

Co. C's vertical construction platoon is in charge of the project. Heavy equipment support is being provided by horizontal construction platoons of Charlie, Bravo, and Alpha Companies. The Charlie Company Maintenance Section fabricated several parts for the Ammunition Storage Building. Also, the 586th Engineer Company (AFB) provided a bridge truck to assist with the lister bag stand and the Ammunition Storage Building.

The project is scheduled for completion by the end of March-beginning of April time frame.

Less blade hours result in MAST cut

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Military Assistance to Safety and Traffic helicopter flights at Fort Benning have been cut back as a result of reduced blade hours.

The MAST mission is flown by military helicopters to transport injured civilians or civilians in need of immediate medical care to appropriate medical centers.

"In Army Regulation 500-4 there are three levels of priority for use of Army aircraft. The first priority is combat readiness flying; the second, support of the installation and the third is MAST," explained Maj. Tommy Mayes, commander of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) - the unit that flies MAST missions here.

"We requested 3,080 flying hours but, in the end, we were allocated 2,644 hours. Obviously, something had to give. So, we cut back on our MAST mission as a result of Army regulation's stated priorities." Mayes said.

Mayes said the only MAST missions that will be flown by his unit in the future will be emergency, on-site evacuations. These evacuations will involve such things as traffic accidents with no available ambulance and industrial accidents in remote areas. The missions that will not be flown will primarily be hospital to hospital transfers. Mayes said that these missions were 90 percent of their MAST business previously, especially transporting neo-natal infants to medical centers with more advanced care facilities.

MAST missions have been flown by the 498th at Fort Benning since May of 1974.

MAST was implemented in 1971 in San Antonio, Texas, as a result of the realization that trauma patients evacuated by helicopter proved valuable in the Korean and Vietnam wars and could be beneficial to civilian patients as well.

A 608th trooper is 'on rappell' from the mock-up helicopter tower.

Ordnance soldiers leap into helicopter rappelling exercise

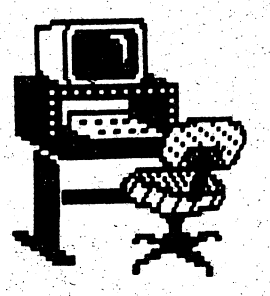
608th Ordnance Company

The 608th Ordnance Company of the 67th Maintenance Battalion enjoyed a rare opportunity to conduct a helicopter rappelling exercise at Fort Benning's Amperville Tower training area recently.

The training was completed under the guidance of Rappel Masters from the 187th Infantry Detachment (Pathfinder) using a UH-1 helicopter from the Aviation Division.

Approximately 30 soldiers from the 608th learned and practiced proper rappelling techniques, including safety procedures, commands and belaying operations. Each soldier was thoroughly trained on the 40 feet rappelling tower and helicopter mock-up before allowed to rappel out of the aircraft.

"This kind of high-adventure training teaches our soldiers valuable skills and builds self-confidence by letting them perform under stressful conditions. It also builds teamwork and boost morale in the unit," said Capt. Kathleen Cornelius, company commander.



This soldier shows how it is done during helicopter rappelling.

"OUR NEW ARMY HOUSING IS NICE TO COME HOME TO. IT WAS WORTH THE WAIT."

SFC Ron Rhodes and his wife Connie.

"It sure didn't take us long to get comfortable in our new house here at Fort Polk. Connie loves the size and layout. Ronnie-Lee loves the playground. And there's even room to store my boat.

"We love our quarters. This house has been very important for us in making a good home.

"Because we're in the Army, people may not expect us to live this well. But the Army has changed a lot in the past five years. It's a good place to live, to be.

"Connie and I feel that the Army's really come a long way in housing and, you know, in taking care of its people."

The overall quality of quarters on posts throughout the Army continues to improve. And housing starts and renovations are at an all-time high. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

OSUT soldiers strut their stuff during mid-cycle testing

A D-7-1 soldier executes the manual of arms during mid-cycle testing.

by Joel E. Roberts
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Initial Entry Training soldiers from Company D, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade tested their knowledge and skills at One Station Unit Training Mid-Cyle Testing March 20.

All OSUT soldiers are tested on their proficiency in 15 basic training tasks after the seventh week of training, (approximately half way through the training cycle). The tasks used on the test are common soldier skills and are required of all IET soldiers regardless of Military Occupation Specialty.

The Mid-Cycle Test is considered a highlight in the career of a new soldier as it marks the end of his first phase of OSUT and gives him an opportunity to demonstrate the skills he has learned. Soldiers must past 12 of the 15 tasks to receive a "go" on the MCT.

As part of an active incentive plan, D-7-1 soldiers who passed each task received an off-post overnight pass. This was their first opportunity to attain such a pass and proved successful as 3(soldiers "maxed" the test. D-7-1 also had 111 out of 112 soldiers tested pass the MCT on the first try.

Pvt. 1 Harlan Walker considered the MCT a highlight in his training because, "This test covers all that we've learned since we arrived seven weeks ago. Plus, these are tasks we'll use throughout our careers."

Pvt. 1 Brandon Greenfield said the most difficult tasks for him were those concerning first aid because of the number of performance measures for each task.

ATC names drill sergeant of the quarter

by Joel E. Roberts
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Sgt. Curtis Jarrett from Company C, 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade won the Post-level Drill Sergeant of the Quarter competition March 11. The competition was held at the Army Training Center Headquarters and consisted of a board plus scoring on Basic Rifle Marksmanship, the Army Physical Readiness test, Mid-Cycle Test and the End of Cycle Test. Jarrett will receive a trophy and a plaque for his accomplishment and will go on to compete for the Drill Sergeant of the Year award later this year.

Jarrett entered the Army in September 1979 and attended Drill Sergeant School at the Cadre Training Center here in December 1984. His last unit of assignment was Fort Stewart, Ga., where he was a section leader in an anti-armor platoon. He is married and has two children.

Jarrett attributes his success to his chain of command. Jarrett said his philosophy in accomplishing his daily duties as a drill sergeant centers around good training. "I start each day with the goal of giving my troops the best training possible."

Jarrett said his greatest satisfaction in being a drill sergeant is "being given the opportunity to train new young soldiers and watch them develop into qualified and professional infantrymen."

Alpha Asphalt troopers surface post parking lot

What's a good way to spend a warm, sunny day?

Members of the Asphalt Section of the Equipment Platoon in Company A, 43rd Engineer (Combat) (Heavy) have a unique solution — surfacing a parking area.

Recently, the soldiers surfaced a cul-de-sac in conjunction with a 36th Engineer Group construction directive.

The construction is part of the performance-oriented Infantry Qualification Test at AO Eagle on Moye Road near St. Mary's Road.

The work consisted of a drill pad, a general parking area and a visitor's parking area. The earthwork for this area was completed by members of the Earthmoving Platoon, Company D, 43rd Eng. Bn. After the earthwork was completed, the Asphalt Section took over and placed a double-surface bituminous treatment on the cul-de-sac, visitors parking area.

The surfacing was a final step in the completion of the construction directive.

IRS TAX TIPS

On Accuracy

When filing your tax return you can help yourself to a faster refund and save time and effort by:

- Attaching your W-2s from all your employers,
- Attaching all supporting documents and schedules,
- Using the pre-addressed label and coded envelope (and if you pay a preparer have him or her use your label and envelope),
- Checking your math,
- Signing the return (you and your spouse must both sign if married and filing jointly).

On Hiring a Tax Return Preparer (If You Need One)

Don't choose a tax preparer who says he or she has an "in" with the IRS or who "guarantees" you a refund.

- Don't allow the preparer to complete the return in pencil.
- Be sure the paid preparer signs and dates the return.
- Be sure the preparer gives you a copy of the completed return in addition to the copy completed for the IRS.

Soldiers needed to jump into watercraft engineer MOS

The Army transportation corps is looking for soldiers to train as watercraft engineers.

Watercraft engineers perform maintenance on Army vessls including amphibians, hovercraft, landing craft (LCU/LCM), tug boats and floating cranes, said SFC Chris Miller, career advisor with the U.S. Army Transportation Branch, Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va.

Only soldiers serving in an overstrength Military Occupational Specialty and who meet all of the following prerequisites will be considered for reclassification into MOS 61C, watercraft engineer:

- Sergeant or below;
- Not on a staff sergeant promotion list;
- Have a high school diploma or General Education Development certificate (GED);
- Have a General Technical score 100 or better;
- Have a mechanical maintenance score of 105 or above;
- Be eligible for permanent change of station by May 1986 in order to start training on June 20;
- Be a Primary Leadership Development Course/Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course (PLDC/BNCOC) Graduate. (This schooling will be scheduled if all other prerequisites are met)
- Uncorrected distance visual acuity of not more than 20/200 in each eye that corrects with either glasses or contact lenses to 20/20 in one eye and 20/40 in the other eye;
- Ability to pass the pseunoisochromatic (test for color blindness) plate set;
- And a physical profile limitation of no worse than 222221.

Possible duty assignments in this MOS include Forts Eustis and Story in Virginia, and other installations in Hawaii, Panama and the Azores.

The local military personnel office will be able to help confirm eligibility and assist the soldier with the application. Applications should be forwarded through Military Personnel Office channels to the Retention Branch of U.S. Army MILPERCEN, and must be received by April 15. (ARNEWS)

Post soldiers convicted by courts-martia

by Charles A. Coffin
Staff Judge Advocate

During the past 10 days, two Fort Benning soldiers were tried, convicted and sentenced by courts-martial.

Larceny/arson - 16 months prison, bad conduct discharge. PFC Michael G. Hopkins, Battery C, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, was tried by general court-martial March 24 and convicted of larceny, damage to private property and destruction of private property.

Evidence presented by the 197th prosecutor, Capt. Randy Hall, showed Hopkins had established a "close personal relationship" with a woman in Columbus who was separated from her husband, Air Force Sgt. Gilert Gullett, presently stationed at Eglin AFB, Fla. Hall showed Gullett and his wife were involved in a local court custody dispute over their daughter and that Gullett came to Fort Benning and stayed in the guest billets while waiting for a civilian court hearing during November 1985.

Hall proved that on Nov. 13, 1985, at about 2:30 a.m. Hopkins went with Mrs. Gullett and a soldier named PFC Baney to the parking lot of Gullett's guest billet where Gullett had his motorcycle parked. Hopkins took a pair of wirecutters and cut the ignition wires on the motorcycle in an attempt to disable the bike so that Gullett would be unable to attend court in Columbus the following morning.

When Gullett discovered the damage to his motorcycle he immediately reported it to the military police. Gullett repaired his motorcycle and drove it into Columbus in time for his court hearing. Hall showed Mrs. Gullett was furious when she saw her husband riding the motorcycle and later chastised Hopkins for not doing a better job of disabling the motorcycle.

Hall proved that the following morning, Nov. 14, 1985 at about 3 a.m. Hopkins and Baney returned to Gullett's parking lot and stole Gullett's motorcycle. Hopkins put the motorcycle in the back of Baney's pickup truck and carried it to an isolated spot by the Chattahoochee River where they unloaded the bike. Hall showed Hopkins opened the gas cap, poured out gasoline, and set the motorcycle on fire. Hopkins then took several parts off the burned motorcycle and gave them to Mrs. Gullett as souvenirs.

Hall presented evidence through Hopkins' battery commander, Capt. Donald McMillian, and platoon sergeant, SFC Donald Renfroe, that Hopkins was a substandard soldier who had no rehabilitative potential for future service in the Army. Both McMillian and Renfroe said they would never again want to serve in the same unit with Hopkins. Hopk testified in his defense that committed the crimes because his concern for Mrs. Gullet safety and wellbeing. He testi

DUI rates on the increase regardless of intent, reason

Despite repeated warnings, increased emphasis at all levels of the command and harsher punishments for violators, driving under the influence rates have continued to soar.

During this month alone, 49 people have been apprehended for DUI. Eighty-five percent of these offenses occurred off post! During one recent weekend 10 military-related personnel were apprehended for DUI.

So, why is DUI such a prevalent offense? Most people obviously do not "intentionally" commit this offense. That is, they do not think they are committing a criminal act when they get behind the wheel and turn on the ignition after having "had too much to drink." This category of DUI offender — the social drinker — either is so drunk that he does not consciously realize the extent of his intoxication, or worse, he does not care!

Also within this category is the driver who knows he is drunk, but feels that he can drive well enough to "make it home," or "make it back to the barracks." The unfortunate fact is that he often doesn't make it at all. He's either picked up by the police for DUI — or by the ambulance attendant off the highway.

The second, and larger group of DUI offenders if the "problem drinker." This individual is the one commonly labeled an alcoholic. He is responsible nationally for over two-thirds of the fatalities involving alcohol.

Usually in dire need of medical or psychiatric treatment and counseling, he presents a menace both to himself and society. However, the unpleasant reality is that this individual seldom recognizes or admits that he has a problem — and neither do his so-called friends.

Regardles of the reasons for which someone drives while drunk, it should be apparent to everyone who lives or works in this community that Fort Benning means business in its campaign against drunk drivers.

All soldiers apprehended for DUI receive, at the minimum, an official letter of reprimand from the commanding general. Also judicial or non-judicial conviction for DUI (on or off post) carries with it a mandatory one year revocation of installation driving privileges, in addition to any other penalties that may be incurred.

Penalties range from a minimum of $300 dollars for the first offense to a minimum of $1,000 dollars for the third offense.

So what can be done to decrease the number of drunk drivers on our roads? The following are some steps you can take to fight this problem:

- Don't let friends drive when they're drunk! Offer

Vaccinations combat illnesses; golden age of medicine here now

by Thomas P. Goodell
Martin Army Community Hospital

We all live in a golden age of freedom from many diseases that were a common cause of death and disability in previous generations. This has led to a complacency among us in preventing these diseases. People don't remember when measles was a leading cause of brain damage, that entire hospitals were built for polio victims and that whooping cough (pertussis) was a frequent killer of children.

These diseases didn't just go away — their decline is a direct result of the development of effective vaccines against them. These vaccines are a key element in your health care because they prevent the disease before you get sick and therefore avoid the complications.

Most vaccines are now part of regular well-child care. Each child normally receives protection against diptheria, whooping chough and tetanus with shots at ages 2, 4, 6 and 18 months and age 4 or 5 years. At the same time, the oral vaccine against polio is given. At age 15 months, protection against measles, mumps and rubella (German measles) is given and at age 18 months or 2 years a shot against Hemophilus influenza, a bacteria that causes serious infection in children, is routinely given. It would be given at age 18 months in those children that attend day-car centers or have chronic diseases because of the increased risk in these populations.

There has been a lot of controversy over the pertussis vaccine in the last few years. This vaccine has been associated with infrequent untoward reactions that can lead to brain damage. The recommendation remains to immunize all children because the risk from the complications of the disease is greater than the risk of this rare problem.

Vaccines for adults are fewer in number. Tetanus and diptheria are prevented by a booster shot every 10 years after the initial childhood series. All women of childbearing age should have a blood test for rubella protection performed prior to any pregnancy. Because rubella during pregnancy can cause severe problems with the baby, it is important to check for this protection. If needed, a rubella shot is indicated.

Older people, particularly those with heart or lung disease or chronic medical problems, need to be aware of the influenza and pneumococcal vaccines. The influenza vaccine is new each year, and needs to be repeated each year. The pneumococcal vaccine prevents a kind of bacterial pneumonia and is given only once. Both of these are of benefit because they prevent illness which can be devastating or even kill.

Now is a good time for you to look at yourself and your family — make sure that these important weapons are protecting you and your loved ones. If youare not sure or have questions, talk to your family doctor — your partner for health.

Water quality monitored by use of wells

Story and photos by Henry Brown
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Enviornmental engineers from the United States Army Hygiene Agency located at Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Md. have spent two weeks installing monitoring wells at two closed post dump sites here.

These monitoring wells are designed to help check water quality, according to 2nd Lt. Gregory S. Porter, sanitary engineer.

The wells were installed at the upgrade and the downgrade positions in relationship to the closed dumps.

Wells installed in the upgrade position monitor waste materials that may flow down from other sources that would run onto the dump sites.

Those installed in the downgrade positions monitor contaminates that wash down hill from the dump sites toward main water streams, Porter explained.

To install the wells, the engineers drilled holes into the ground until they reached the water level. Once there, they put screen tubes down into the holes.

Sand was added around the base of the tubes to support the filtering process.

On top of the sand they added a clay called Bentonite.

Finally, the filter's top was cemeted with a steel protective casing.

When water samples are taken, the examiner unlocks a lid that is mounted on top of the casing and pumps water out of the top.

New Army writing contest looking for clarity, effectiveness

by Norma Vishneski
TRADOC Public Affairs

Now you don't have to be a journalist to win an Army Writing award. This year, the Chief of Staff of the Army's Annual Writing Awards, a new competition, will recognize outstanding Army writing in virtually any form, whether it be a letter, a research paper, or a manuscript. The main criterion is that the writing be direct, effective,and clear.

The competition is part of the new Army Writing Program, and its purpose is to emphasize the importance of good writing and to reward excellence. Heree are the contest rules:

• Eligibility: U.S. Army soldiers (reserve and active-duty) and Department of the Army civilians. (Staffers at the U.S. Military Academy English Department and the Army Writing Office are not eligible.)

• Categories:
(1) E-1 thru E-4
(2) E-5 thru E-9
(3) WO 1 thru WO 2; O-1 thru O-3
(4) WO 3 thru WO 4; O-4 thru O-6
(5) Department of Army Civilians
(all grade levels & pay plans; appropriated and nonapproprited funds)

• Subject: Any professioal or military-related subject (personal, technical, historical, etc.) that would be of interest to the military community at large.

• Formats accepted: Essay, letter, magazine article, research paper, story, and biography.

• Entry requirements: (1) Typed, double-spaced, on plain paper, one side only. (2) Ten pages maximum. (3) Do not put you name on the entry itself. Attach a separate cover sheet with your full name, rank or grade, Social Security Number, mailing address, duty telephone number, and unit of assignment. (4) Use standard documentation. (5) Must be original and unpublished work.

(6) Authors must submit their own entries.

(7) Manuscripts cannot be returned.

• Evaluation criteria: How well does the paper communicate? Is it interesting? Is it thoughtful? Can it be readily understood? Is it effective? Since this is a writing contest, the writing must strike the reader's eye as well as mind. Neatness, grammar, and spelling count. The Army Writing Program promotes writing that is concise, clear, and easily read, so these factors will play a role in evaluation.

• Submit entries to: The Army Writing Office, HQ TRADOC ATTN: ATCG-W, Fort Monroe, Va. 23651

• Deadline June 15, 1986. The Army Writing Office will acknowledge by post card all entries received by this deadline.

Judging will be done by the staffs of the U.S. Military Academy English Department and the Army Writing Office. This fall, the Chief of Staff of the Army will present plaques to first-place winners in each category. Second- and third-place finishers will receive certificate. Winning entries will be published in appropriate Army publications.

For more information, contact the Army Writing Office, HQ TRADOC, ATCG-W, Fort Monroe, Va. 23651; Autovon 680-3845/3846 or Commercial (804) 727-3845/3846.

Whole system of Army-style writing changed by program

by Norma Vishneski
TRADOC Public Affairs

The basic premise of the Army Writing Program is that something as fundamental as writing style can't be changed by simply teaching classes in good communicative techniques. Rather, the whole system must be changed so that people not only learn how to write better, but also are surrounded on a daily basis with models of good writing in the Army's documents and publications. For this reason, the AWP has several facets, many of which are already in place. Here's how the program is progressing.

• Professional development classes — Sixteen or 14-hour blocks of instruction in the new Army writing style have already been incorporated into the Officer Basic Course, the Officer Advanced Course, and the Command and General Staff College programs of instruction. By summer of 1986, Training and Doctrine Command expects to have blocks of instruction in all senior noncommissioned officer courses: the Advanced NCO Course, the First Sergeants' Course, and the Sergeants Major Academy Course. By fall of 1986, the warrant officer courses are expected to be in place.

• Communicative Skills Offices — Each of the 16 TRADOC schools will house a Communicative Skills Office, headed by a major or lieutenant colonel who is required to have a graduate degree in English and experience teaching English at the college level. These writing "cells" will be responsible not only for training students in the schools they occupy but also permanent-party members at host — and nearby installations. Staffs are expected to be in place by the summer of 1986.

• Training for non-TRADOC personnel — Since the Army Writing Program extends beyond the TRADOC school house, train-

Disaster only thing between motorcyclists and road

by Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

Richard Corcoran, a Navy engineman assigned to the supply ship USS Detroit, homeported in Norfolk, Va., bought a motorcycle because it was inexpensive to operate.

Yet, that motorcycle cost him far more than he could ever imagine. Among the costs: months in a hospital bed, wondering if he'd ever have full use of his legs again.

The 24-year-old Corcoran said he had loved the feel of the wind rushing past him, the freedom a motorcycle had offered.

Now, those images have faded. They've been replaced with memories of horror — the sheer terror of being forced off the road by another vehicle, losing control of his cycle, crashing against a concrete road divider, and being flipped over the wall into the oncoming traffic.

"I remember seeing nothing but headlights, all coming at me," he said. He was hit by an oncoming car, which thrust him back against the concrete dividing wall.

"It was right then and there, as I was laying against the wall, I knew I'd never get on a motorcycle again — ever," he said.

Corcoran received extensive leg injuries. But three months after his accident, he was optimistic he would recover — maybe even completely — within the next few months.

Two soldiers assigned to a signal battalion at Fort Campbell, Ky., weren't so lucky.

After pulling to the side of a post roadway, they were struck from behind by a pickup truck, which pushed them for about 80 feet before coming to rest at a nearby intersection.

The 20-year-old female private first class, the passenger, was killed instantly. Her 22-year-old fiance fared only slightly better; he was left with severe neck, back and leg injuries.

After a lengthy hospitalization at Fort Campbell's Blanchfield Army Community Hospital, he was given a medical discharge, his dreams of an upcoming marriage and a military career destroyed.

Motorcycle enthusiasts often point to safety precautions the victims of accidents like these might have taken to avoid tragedy.

However, the story of a 21-year-old Marine Corps corporal stationed at a Marine aviation group in Pennsylvania demonstrates that no matter how controlled a situation, a motorcyclist's safety is ultimately out of his hands.

Riding along a roadway he used every day between his home and duty station, the corporal encountered an unexpected hazard — a freshly paved, but not yet smoothed, road surface.

He lost control of the cycle when, as he was rounding a turn in the road, the front tire hit a groove between the lanes. He was killed when he crashed through a fence in a residential neighborhood

• "I always wear a helmet and protective clothing." The corporal was wearing a helmet, leather jacket and long pants — none of which protected him from fatal injuries.

• "I always obey posted speed limits." The corporal was riding well below the 55 mph speed limit when the accident occurred.

"The problem with motorcycles," Corcoran concluded from his hospital bed at the Portsmouth Naval Hospital, "is that no matter how many things you have going for you, they all have a way of working against you when you're involved in an accident. When you're on a cycle, it's you and the road — nothing in between.

"I know I never listened myself (to warnings about motorcycle safety)" he said. "But fo those who ride, all I can say is you really have to know when t ride your cycle. And you reall have to know when not to — lik when you'll be in heavy traffic, o when it's raining.

"Sometimes it's just a lot safe to take a taxi and leave your mo torcycle parked at home."

The Ledger-Enquirer's Weekly business and financial news section

Now there's a new publication committed to in depth coverage of business and financial news in our local marketplace. It's The Ledger-Enquirer's new MONEY TODAY section that'll be a part of your Monday paper starting April 7.

It's a section written by people you know, such as business editor Pat Quinley, about issues that affect and concern you foremost. Expect plenty of useful advice, Columbus-area statistics and trends. In short, whether you're responsible for high finance or a household budget, it'll contain news to inform and help you.

Here are some of the features you can expect each Monday:

- TRENDS — Special reports on major sectors of the local economy. You'll see stories about banking, farming, real estate, medicine and more.
- YOUR MONEY — Columbus College's Elsie Arno answers your questions about personal finance and investments.
- INVESTING — Knight-Ridder's Dick Davis combs analysts' research reports and passes the best of it on to you.
- THE ECONOMY — Syndicated columnist Louis Rukeyser keeps you up to date on national developments.
- PROFILE — The inside information on local movers and shakers.
- INDICATORS — Numbers that mean something. Each week, you'll find mortgage and savings rates of local institutions and a potpourri of other local statistics.

Spiritual

Easter changes our lives, empowers us with hope

by Chaplain Wayne Strohschein

Have you ever had the experience of perceiving a need in your life, of doing everything that you can to answer that need, only to find that though you have done all you can do, it isn't enough? Who of us hasn't fallen short at one time or another?

Read, if you will, Mark 16:1-8. The women in this passage had that experience and the feelings that go with it. They came to the tomb with pitiful offerings to do one last thing, knowing and feeling that it wasn't enough. Their friend, leader and master was dead. He was sealed in a borrowed tomb. They were not even sure they could get to the body to perform this last gesture of honor. They are like us, we are like them. We fall short because some great obstacle stands in our way. Some "great stone" blocks us.

Notice how Mark fixes our attention on that "great stone" that is sometimes the blunt fact of certain death; the way things have always been and always will be; the undeniable power of our doubts and fears. That "great stone" that blocks us, is a symbol of problems too big for us to handle on our own.

But then did you notice that the stone was no longer there? They looked up and it was gone! How else would you handle a stone as large as that? It simply rolled away. The women entered the tomb and the messenger told them what they plainly could see — "He is not here." In silence and fear they left.

That's the end of it for Mark. There were no post-resurrection appearances for Mark. He's not interested in proving the resurrection of Jesus, but in simply evoking a sense of awe and mystery of what has happened. In a beautiful understatement Mark simply suggests that this whole business is simply God's doing. One can only tremble and keep silent in the face of such holy action. Mark brings us to the tomb where we feel in its emptyness our absolute dependence on God.

Perhaps we are never closer to the Easter celebration than in the fearful, but hopefulway in which we wait for God to move the stone that is too big for us. In the holy silence of an Easter morn, or any other morn, we know we have received yet we wait to receive; we know we have been filled yet we wait to be filled; we know a stone has been removed yet we need another stone removed. Like the women in the text, with fear and trembling we find out — God has done his thing, and yet we wait because we know that there is more to come. The day has just begun. Jesus Christ has risen, yet there is more.

Read Luke 24:13-49, the story of the travelers to Emmaus. They too had some great stones like us, great stones of sagging spirits, alarm, mourning, helplessness, fear, hopelessness, feeling at the end of the line. Cleopas and his friend had lost heart and were speaking of their hopes in the past tense. Then Easter breaks in upon them! Luke also does not let us forget that this is all God's doing.

We too will walk along the road to our Emmaus and there will be great stones along the way — Did it really happen? Did my loved one really die? Did I really lose that job, fail that test, commit that act, get passed by? We walk along the road with head down, heart heavy and shoulders drooped. Then Easter breaks upon us and we know all is not lost, we are not alone, we need not fear. There is hope, where we had none, help when we need it. For Jesus Christ is risen, God had already done His great thing. With Easter we are changed, empowered, filled with joy, expectation, excitement and peace.

And yet we wait because we know that there is more to come. Easter is not the end, but the beginning of God's new creation — for you, for me and for all of creation.

Joy to the world; the Lord has come.

He rules the world with truth and grace,

And makes the nations prove

The glories of his righteousness,

And wonders of his love.
Allelulia!

Easter Sunday services schedule

Ecumenical sunrise service celebrates Easter Sunday

Fort Benning's annual Ecumenical Easter Sunrise Service will be conducted Sunday at 6:30 a.m.

The service will be held at the Field of the Four Chaplains, which is adjacent to the Infantry Center Chapel. If it rains, the service will take place in the chapel.

The Infantry Center Band will perform at the service and refreshments will be served immediately following in the chapel.

The service is open to people of all religious faiths. The general public is invited to attend.

Protestant personnel can attend a service at 9 a.m., while Roman Catholic personnel can attend a Mass of the Resurrection at 10:30 a.m.

Both services will take place directly across from the 1st ITB Headquarters, east of the brigade duck pond.

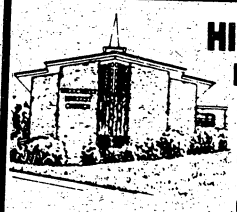
Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Paul Cassibry, deputy post chaplain, will lead the 9 a.m. service, while Chaplain (Capt.) James Pomann will celebrate mass at 10:30. Service leaders will be the 1st ITB chaplains.

If it rains, the services will be in Sand Hill Theater No. 3. Both services are open to the general public.

Callaway Gardens plans inspiring sunrise service

Callaway Gardens' Robin Lake Ski Pavilion will be the setting for a beautiful and inspiring Easter Sunrise Service Sunday at 6 a.m. The Reverend Leighton Ford will bring the morning message, "A Living Hope." The Reverend Irv Chambers, with Leighton Ford Crusades, will direct the service.

Admission to the Gardens is free for the service.



For more information, call (404)663-2281, extension 216.

During their recent survival training, the soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry of the 10th Mountain Division had to cross the Chatahoochee Rivieer to get to the training area. Once there, they set up camp, using the bare essentials.

Strongest survive

Mountain men live in wilds

10th Mountain Division

Have you ever wondered what t is really like to survive in the woods with very little provisions? f you have, you might want to ask one of the infantry soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division.

For the last three weeks squade size elements from the 2-4th have been engaging in various survival tasks. There were 15 mandatory tasks to perform. They included starting a fire without matches; maintaining the fire for 24 consecutive hours; constrcuting a solar stll for collecting water; determining direction without a compass; determining time without a watch or clock; constructing a throwing weapon able to kill a small animal such as a fox, rabbit, squirrel, etc . . .; constructing a trap or snare capable of capturing a bird; constructing a squad survival shelter; catching a fish by any means; constructing a basket capable of transporting collected foods; constructing a seven paragraph squad survival operations order; constructing a field expediant signal device; collecting plants suitable for human consumption; cleaning, cooking and consuming an animal; and constructing an implement to aid squad survival.

Now, to go along with all of these survival tasks one needs the appropriate environment. To accommodate this requirement the mountainmen from the 2-14th went to two small islands in the middle of the Chattahoochee River.

All of the survival training is part of the Light Fighters II Course that has ben incorporated by the 10th Mountain Division in its overall goals, to deploy its men anywhere in the world and emerge victorious.

aught the evening meal, fishing becomes very done for sport becomes necessary to sur-able, soldiers took the necessary actions to for the evening fire.

The mountainmen of the 2-14th take a break around the campfire to discuss the techniques of living in the wild.

A soldier takes advantage of the serenity afforded by the separation from daily routine to reflect on the mission at hand.

Getting the shelter up was the first step toward making it through the exercise for some of the troops. One man gets up in the tree to ensure everything is squared away.

Tax on saving's bonds

Interest on U.S. Savings Bonds is taxable income and must be reported on federal income tax returns, the Internal Revenue says.

Taxpayers must report the interest from Series E and EE bonds in one of two ways: 1) annually, as it accrues, or 2) when the bond is cashed or reaches final maturity.

In the case of Series H and HH Bonds, however, interest payments are made twice a year and must be reported in the year received.

Those taxpayers who buy U.S. Savings Bonds as co-owners with their children are liable for the tax on the interest earned on the bonds. Interest on U.S. Savings Bonds bought in the name of a child is income to the child, even if the taxpayer pays for them and is named as beneficiary. (AFPS) that Gullett had physically abused Mrs. Gullett in the past.

In his closing argument to the court, Hall pointed out the high dollar value ($1564.00) of the motorcycle and the hardship caused Gullett by the destruction of his only means of transportation.

The court sentenced Hopkins to be reduced to Private (E-1), total forfeiture of all pay and allowances, confinement in prison for 16 months, and a bad conduct discharge.

Disrespect - 30 days jail. Pvt. William C. Madden, Company B, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was tried by Summary Court-Martial March 17, and found guilty of disrespect to a noncommissioned officer and an assault upon a fellow soldier.

Evidence presented during the trial indicated Madden appeared at a company formation without the required gear and became belligerent when confronted by one of his NCO's. Testimony showed Madden threw his helmet down at the feet of his platoon sergeant when he was ordered to be at ease. Other soldiers testified Madden attacked a fellow soldier for no apparent reason while in the company area. Madden's immediate chain of command testified he was a substandard soldier who could not be relied on to accomplish even the simplest tasks.

Madden, who appeared at trial with a broken arm and leg sustained when he fell from the third story window of his barracks while slipping on a case of beer, testified he was a victim of circumstances and was innocent of the charges against him.

Summary Court Officer, Capt. Michael Totin, sentenced Madden to serve 30 days in jail and to forfeit $426 in pay.

Loyd School children get ready to send their balloons aloft. Henry Brown

Kids' release of balloons signals spring, new pals

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Red, white, and blue balloons filled the air while the Spencer High School band played "Up, Up, and Away" at Loyd School on the first day of spring. Each student released a helium-filled balloon with an envelope containing the student's name, school, address, and phone number and a request for return correspondence.

The releasing of balloons is in conjunction with a contest sponsored by a national children's news publication. The student who receives correspondence from the farthest distance represents the school in a national competition.

Loyd School has participated in the competition for five years. Although they have never won the national competition, Loyd School reports that they have heard from balloon recipients as far away as Virginia and South Carolina.

Wife and mother of three finds time for volunteering

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Cheryl Wedding is the wife of a soldier, mother of three children, runs a household and volunteers more than 50 hours a week for the Fort Benning community.

Wedding is a Girl Scout troop leader, a Girl Scout area coordinator for seven scout troops and is the mayor of the Indianhead Terrace community.

"When I married my husband three years ago, I knew nothing at all about the military. I heard about the Volunteer Resource Center here needing volunteers. I talked to the coordinator, Pat Sneed, and she put me to work. This gave me something to do and I really learned about the military system by volunteering," said Wedding.

Wedding also said that since becoming a volunteer she had developed many skills such as working within the bureaucracy, managing time, people and money, giving classes and working with computers.

Wedding, whose husband is currently in Korea, hopes to set up a Volunteer Resource Center at their next duty station, Fort Lewis, Wa.

"I understand Ft. Lewis has no Volunteer Resource Center such as Benning has. I feel because of all my training and working and learning from Pat Sneed, I could set up a very effective center for Ft. Lewis," Wedding said.

Wedding said the payoffs for a volunteer are not monetary.

"You get a lot of self-fulfillment out of volunteering. It's also a lot better than just sitting at home, watching television. You're doing something for yourself and for the community," said Wedding.

When asked how she managed to raise three children, run a household and volunteer for over 50 hours per week, Wedding laughed and said "If you want to do something you can do it."

Wedding said the Volunteer Resource Center always needs more volunteers and interested parties can call 545-5602.

Guidelines for gardening on post

The Fort Benning Housing Division of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing has released the following guidelines for family housing occupants who wish to plant gardens on-post:

- Vegetable gardens will not take away from the appearance of the quarters.
- No area of the lawn will be destroyed for vegetable gardens. Former garden plots in the lawn area will not be replanted.
- Vegetable gardens may be planted where flower beds are normally placed adjacent to the building.
- Vegetables planted shall be of the low-growing variety.
- Occupants may cultivate common use area (open areas) which are at least 150 feet from the building. Garden plots in these areas will not exceed 150 square feet.
- An occupant utilizing the common use area will obtain approval from the Chief, Housing Division, through submission of a letter or disposition form along with sketch/map indicating location and size of garden area.
- After vegetables have been harvested, ground will be cleared of all growth and leveled.
- Occupants desiring to cultivate large garden plots must obtain an area from their major command.
- Major command can obtain areas upon request to DEH, Building and Grounds Division. A sketch/map including location and size of the area will accompany the request.

Further information or questions should be directed to Family Housing Manager, Mr. Herb Caviness, telephone number 545-1406. (DEH, Housing Division)

Doctor says exercise away age, anxiety, tiredness

by Thomas P. Goodell
Martin Army Community Hospital

"If exercise could be packaged in a pill, it would be the single most widely prescribed and beneficial medicine in the nation," said Dr. Robert Butler, former director, National Institute on Aging.

Each year, more and more scientific evidence points to the truth of this statement. Regular physical activity can help the human body maintain, repair, and improve itself to an amazing degree.

The benefits from exercise are both psychological and physiological. The person who exercises regularly feels good, is more relaxed and therefore less irritable; is stronger and therefore less tired all the time; is better conditioned and vital and therefore more self-confident and attractive.

As to the physiological side, physical activity favorable affects most of the factors leading to heart attacks (the number one fatal disease in his country). Exercise is beneficial in controlling diabetes, lowering blood pressure, controlling weight, retaining bone strength and even relieving mild depression. It will strengthen and tone your muscles and help you move about more easily by keeping joints, tendons and liagments more flexible. Regular exercise may even assist you in quitting smoking and adopting better eating habits.

Anyone of any age can benefit from a program of regular exercise. There are organized classes for everyone from children too young to walk to people confined to wheel chairs in nursing homes.

Whatever your exercise choice, there are some general rules to follow.

1. If you are over 35 years old or have a chronic medical problem, see your family doctor first for advice and clearance to begin an exercise program.
2. Start slowly and work up gradually.
3. Learn the proper techniques and use the right equipment. Learning how to play your chosen sport correctly will prevent many injuries. So will using properly fitted and well maintained equipment.
4. Warm-up before the exercise and cool down afterwards.
5. Pay attention to what your body tells you. If you feel much discomfort, you are trying to do too much.

It is important that you select an activity that you like and that fits into your lifestyle. Remember, you want to exercise regularly on an ongoing basis — not become a "weekend wonder." The best exercise for you is the one you'll do for the rest of your life.

Developing a program of regular exercise is a major step in creating a healthier lifestyle. The desire to do this has to come from within you — not as a chore, but as a pleasant part of your day. As always, talk to your family doctor if you have questions or need help.

Spirit of Fort Benning award given for service to Infantry

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"A man of a right spirit is not a man of narrow and private views, but is greatly interested and concerned for the good of the community...and for the true welfare of the society of which he is a member." — Jonathan Edwards.

Last year, Fort Benning established an annual award to recognize a distinguished civilian leader whose personal commitment to Fort Benning and the American Infantryman set him apart from others in the community.

Clifford O. Livingston was recently announced as the second recipient of the award.

Livingston was born in Louisiana and moved to Columbus, where he worked with various companies, until founding his trucking company. He started with only two trucks but within the year expansion was in sight.

Livingston serves on the Chamber of Commerce Military Affairs Committee and is affilitaed with Allied Van Lines.

The first recipient of the award was Maynard R. Ashworth, founder of the Bayonet.

Responding to his selection, Livingston said, "I am proud and honored to be selected as the second recipient of the 'Spirit of Fort Benning Award' and to join such a distinguished citizen as Mr. Maynard Ashworth.

West Point alumni celebrate Founder's Day

The 184th Anniversary of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. was celebrated at the Fort Benning Officers' Club Saturday.

Richardson at West Point Founder's Day festivities.

Gen. William Richardson, Training and Doctrine Command commander, was the guest speaker for the Founder's Day festivities.

In remarks made to the graduates, Richardson lauded the military academy for past, present, and future service to the nation.

Also recognized during the celebration were the academy's youngest and oldest graduates, 2nd Lt. Robert E. Smith, class of '85 and Col. Earl F. Holton, class of '36.

Attended by more than 235 guests, the celebration proved to be a gala event with music provided by the U.S. Army Infantry Center Band.

Medal to honor prisoner's of war designed by services

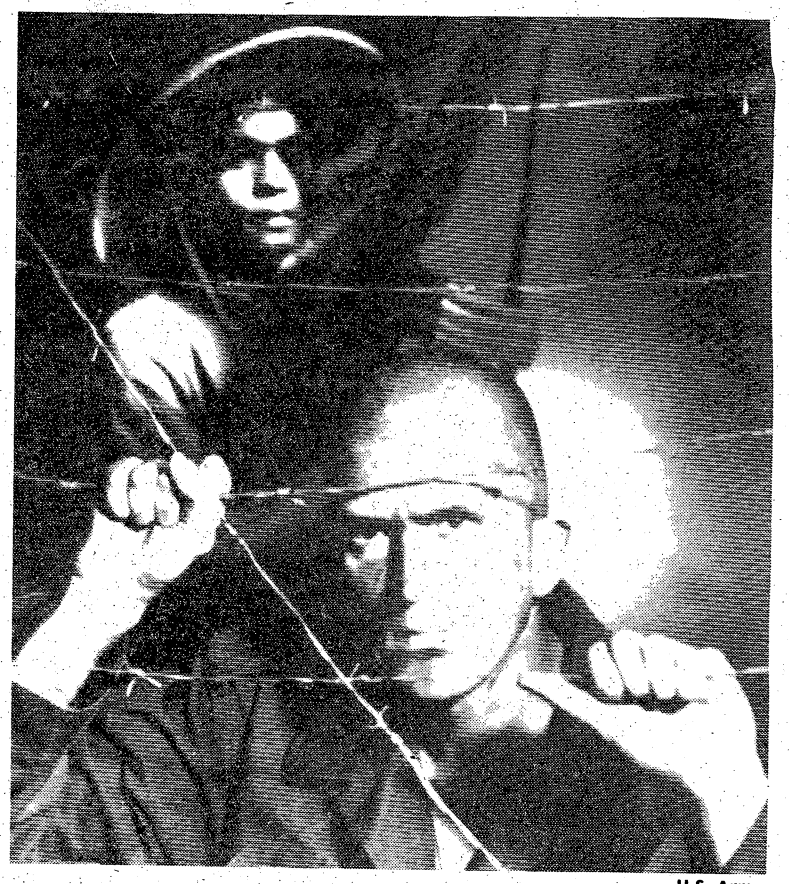
by Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

Members of all services and some 20 veterans groups have been asked to help design a new military medal recognizing prisoners of war.

The award will rank in precedence, in the language of the law, "before any other service medal, campaign medal, or service ribbon authorized to be displayed . . ."

It will be retroactive and will be awarded to former POWs still on active duty or who served since April 6, 1917, and received an honorable discharge. It also will be available to the legal heirs of deceased POWs who have served in the armed forces since World War I.

The number of former POWs eligible to receive the medal is not known. However, one defense official estimated that there would be as many as 150,000.



The idea of a medal for former POWs was approved by Congress as part of the 1986 Defense Authorization Bill. However, it could take up to two years before the medal itself reaches the military supply system.

The U.S. Army Institute of Heraldry has invited each service, the Veterans Administration and all congressionally recognized veterans groups to contribute ideas for the medal's design, according to Col. Gerald T. Luchino, institute director. A special board is expected to convene this summer to select one design.

As with all military awards and decorations adopted since 1918, the selected design will be submitted to the U.S. Commission of Fine Arts for comment.

"This medal will be a recognition by the people of the United States that the individual forfeited his freedom in the cause of freedom," said Sen. William W. Roth Jr., who introduced legislation establishing the award.

"Few members of our armed forces have suffered as greatly, both physically and mentally, as those who have been taken prisoner by the enemy in time of war. The prisoner of war medal, like other military badges, will identify the wearer as having given special service to his country."

VA reaches out to former POW's

More than half of the 142,227 American servicemen and women who were held captive by enemy forces during four periods of conflict dating to 1917 are alive today, according to the Veterans Administration.

The VA has made special outreach efforts to ensure that the more than 83,000 former prisoners of war are fully informed of their benefits. An estimated 79,000 of these veterans are over 65.

Legislative changes in 1981 and 1984 eased criteria for former POWs to establish service connection for certain disabilities. Veterans who were interned 30 days or more can have disabilities presumed to be service-connected from certain diseases.

VA Deputy Administrator Everett Alvarez, a former POW, notes that while the law recognizes that military medical records do not cover periods of incarceration, there must be some medical evidence relating the current condition to the period of military service.

Treatment is available at VA's 172 medical centers and 226 outpatient clinics nationwide. Treatment in non-VA facilities at Government expense is not authorized unless the veteran has received prior approval from the VA.

Compensation rates for service-connected disabilities were increased effective Dec. 1, 1985. The 3.1 percent cost-of-living rate adjustment increased monthly payments to $1,335 for a veteran with a disability rated at 100 percent. The 50 percent rate was increased to $388. Veterans rated at 10 percent now received $68 monthly.

Veterans rated at 30 percent or more qualify for a dependency allowance. Dependents of veterans rated 100 percent may qualify for educational assistance. Widows of veterans rated 100 percent for 10 years prior to death are eligible for dependency and indemnity compensation, as are widows of veterans whose deaths are service-connected. Amount of payment is based on the veteran's highest military grade.

Compensation entitlements apply to all service-connected disabled veterans and not just former POWs.

VA facilities have designated employees to coordinate benefits and services for former POWs. Additionally, a national hotline is available 24 hours a day to answer questions for former POWs. The toll free hot line number is (800) 821-8139. (VA)

Azalea festival opens at Callaway Gardens

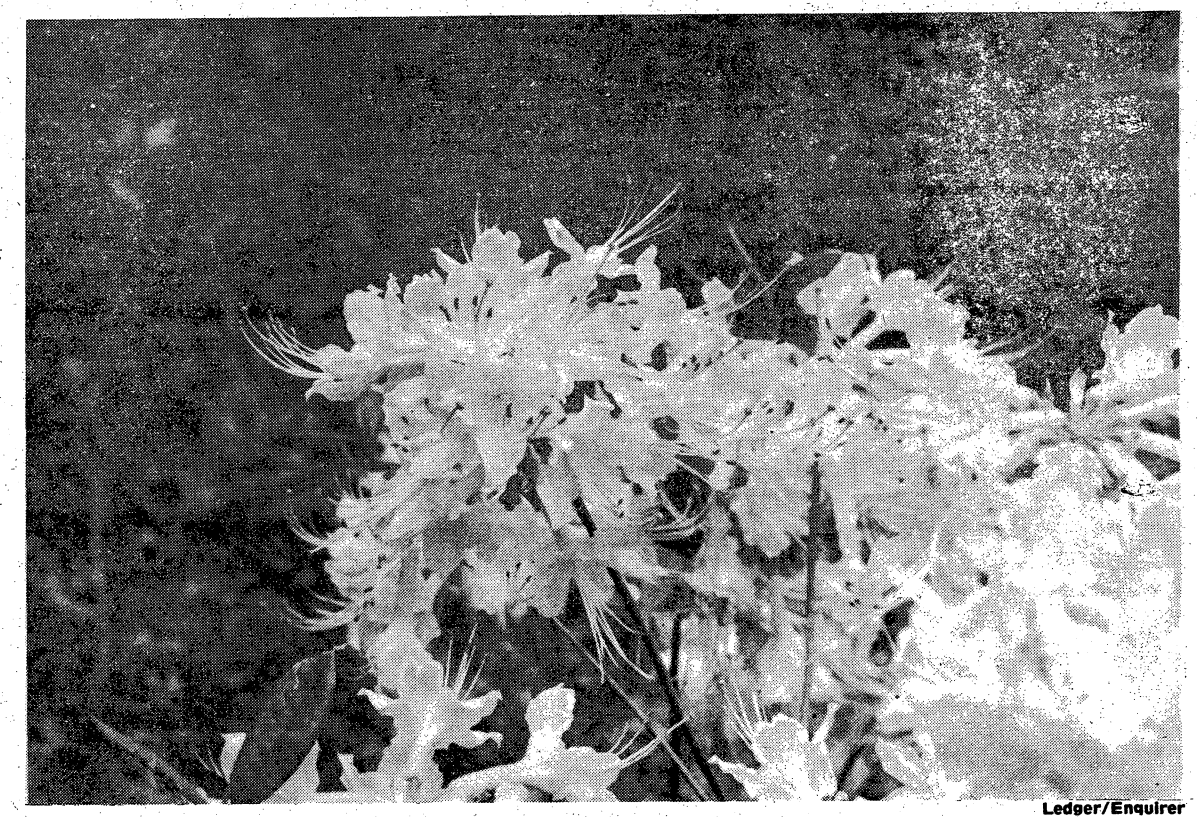
Once again the stillness of Callaway Gardens has been interrupted by the vibrant colors of azaleas and spring flowers that herald the beginning of spring in the South. And to celebrate nature's reawakening, Callaway Gardens will offer its famous Azalea Festival during the peak weekends of azalea bloom: March 20 and 30; April 5 and 6; and April 12 and 13.

During the Azalea Festival weekends, Callaway Gardens will feature an unequaled display of springtime blossoms and activities for the whole family.

Visitors can enjoy walking, riding or biking the Gardens' 2,500 acreas of scenic drives and walking trails, strolling through the one-of-a-kind John A. Sibley Horticultural Center.

The Azalea Festival begins at Robin Lake Beach where Callaway Gardens is offering free bus transportation throughout the Gardens on high-traffic weekends. Buses will depart every five minutes and run continuously, allowing visitors to enjoy each area Gardens as long as they wish.

One of the most popular stops along the route is the colorful Azalea Bowl and Trails at the Overlook Pavilion. Featuring more than 700 varieties of cultivated and native azaleas, the walking trails are filled with the sweet fragrance of spring flowers and dogwoods. Old-fashioned cloggers will be on hand to provide entertainment. Another favorite stop on the festival tour is the unique five-acre John A. Sibley Horticultural Center. This year the Sibley Center's Floral Conservatory features hydrangeas, Easter lilies, cinerarias, pansies, bulbs, and hanging baskets of red and purple fuchsias.



Admission price during the Azalea Festival weekends is $5 for adults and $1 for children ages 6 to 11. On weekdays, the regular admission price of $4 for adults and $1 for children will be in effect. There is no charge for annual pass holders and children under 5. For more information, contact the Public Relations Department at (404)663-2281, extension 191.

Springer sets play dates

The next Springer Studio Theatre, 1010 First Ave., presentations are "A Man With a Load of Mischief," April 17-19, April 24-26; and "The Shadow Box," June 12-14, June 19-21.

All performances begin at 8 p.m.; doors open at 7 p.m.

These productions are cabaret-style; guests may bring dinners and soft drinks, wine, beer and snacks are available. For information, call 324-1100.

Ledger/Enquirer

The Azalea Festival at Callaway Gardens is in full bloom this spring.

Gardens' passes available

The Callaway Gardens' annual pass for 1986, which provides a year's unlimited admission to the Gardens and Robin Lake Beach, is available now for $25 each.

The passes may be used with no additional charge for admission to special events at Callaway Gardens such as the Azalea Festival, the July 4th celebration, the Masters Water Ski Tournament, the Symphony in the Gardens series and special art exhibits.

Annual passes, which expire March 31, 1987, may be purchased at the Callaway Gardens' Information Center daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Interested persons may also request an application by writing: Annual Passes, Callaway Gardens, Pine Mountain, Ga. 31822, or by calling (404) 663-2281, ext. 151. Columbus residents may call 324-2234, ext. 151.

New Craft Cabin offers homemade craft goods

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Officers' Wives Club is making a few changes in the operation of its businesses on post, ones the club hopes will increase use of the facilities.

The Craft Cabin, formerly the Talent Tree, accepts homemade craft items to sell on a consignment basis. To consign goods, a person must have a military identification card, and pay a membership fee to use the shop. The fee is $5 per year, or $3 for six months.

The shop takes items on a consignment basis, offering the goods for sale for 60 days at a price set by the seller. According to the terms of the consignment contract, the seller can lower the price of the item at any time. If the item has not sold in 60 days, the seller must pick up the item at the shop by the 60th day, or the merchandise belongs to the OWC.

Sellers are not penalized if they withdraw their merchandise before the 60-day time period is up. In the past, sellers had to pay a five percent charge to take back their items before the end of the contracted time period.

The Craft Cabin needs consignments now, she said. "We are interested in all kinds of handmade items, and will be glad to talk to anyone interested."

All three OWC shops take consignments on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. The Craft Cabin has a layaway program, Crotty said. Any item that is priced over $10 can be put on layaway for 30 days with a 25 percent deposit.

All three shops are also open the first Saturday of each month during the OWC's monthly flea market from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

If you're interested in consigning goods, drop by the shops, located off Lumpkin Road on Yeager Avenue on main post.

Budget cuts could affect VA home loans

The Veterans Administration has announced it will continue to operate its home loan guaranty program without restrictions until it reaches the current $11.5 billion loan commitment limit mandated by 1986 deficit control measures (the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act).

VA officials expect this limit to be reached April 1; however, acting VA Administrator Everett Alvarez Jr., said he was aware of several proposals in Congress to raise the loan commitment limit and permit the program to operate without interruption until the end of the current fiscal year on Sept. 30.

"The VA fully supports a legislative remedy to this problem," Alvarez said, "providing the Congress will also allow VA to implement a 2 percent loan funding fee asked for in its fiscal 1987 budget, allowing the VA to meet its future deficit reduction goals."

The Office of Management and Budget has endorsed the VA's position.

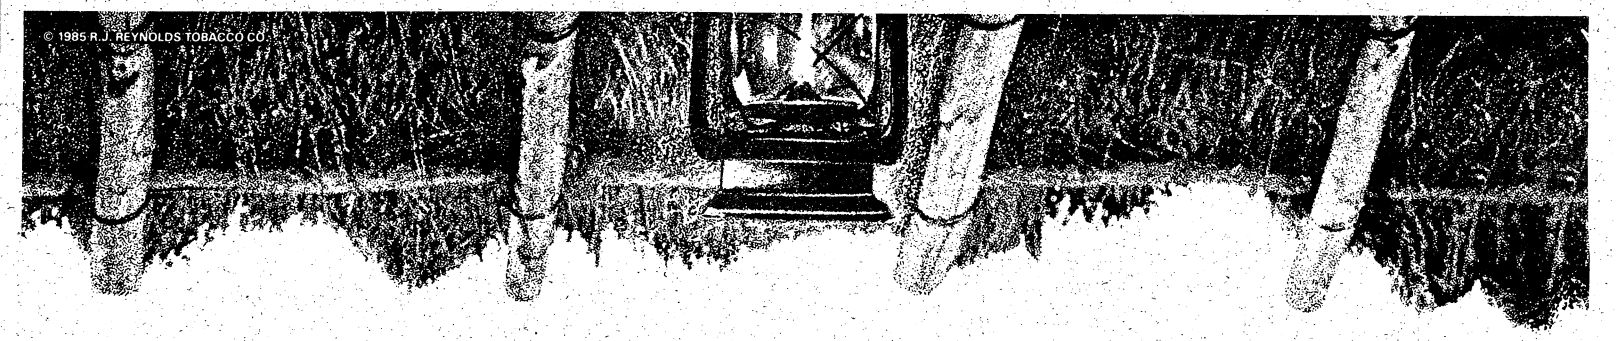
In announcing continuation of an unrestricted loan program, VA withdrew plans to impose certain loan limitations that were scheduled to go into effect March 1. These included denying requests for refinancing, for restored or partial guaranty entitlement, as well as setting a $90,000 limit on loans. "We abandoned these temporary measures," VA loan guaranty Director Robert M. O'Toole said, "once it became apparent they would not have prevented us from exceeding our ceiling." (AFPS)

White School observes Women's History Week

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

National Women's History Week was observed by students at Edward A. White School as they participated in a special assembly program entitled "The Women's Path to Fame." The program was written by media specialist, Joyce Windham, and sponsored by teachers Brenda Lynem and Saundra Martin.

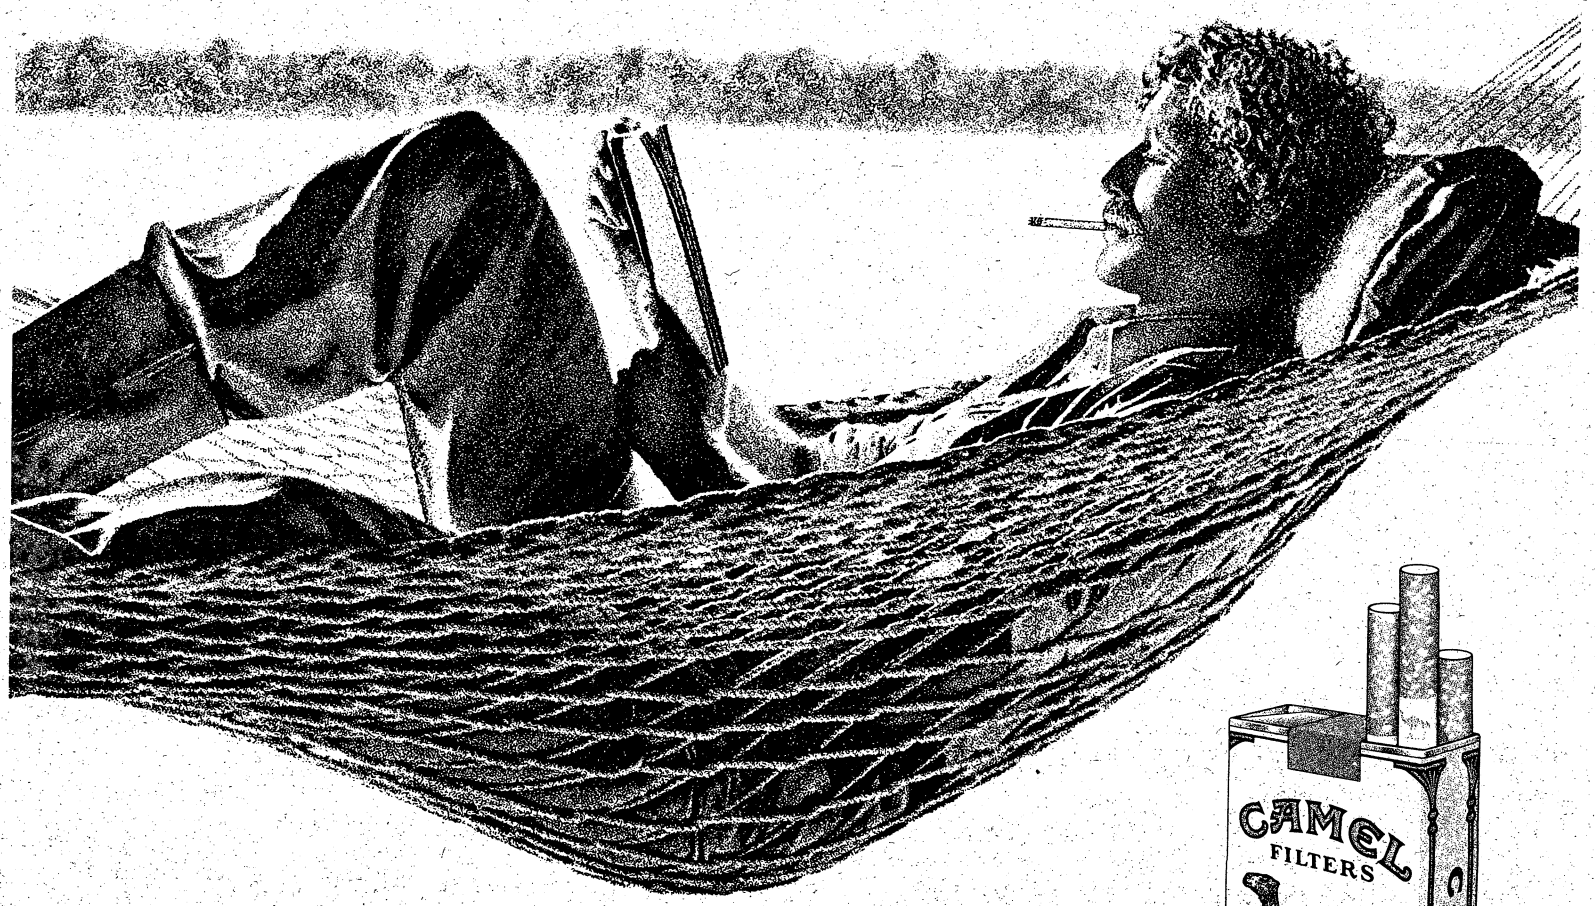
Pocohontas, Susan B. Anthony, Margaret Mead, Marian Anderson, Helen Keller, Harriett Tubman, Eleanor Roosevelt, and Coretta Scott King were a few of the women featured in student monologues. These monologues were done by second-through fifth-grade students representing three clubs at White School — Great Books, the Newberry Book Club and the Creative Writing Club.



A featured guest at the program was Col. James Ellis, U.S. Army Infantry Center and Fort Benning Chief of Staff, who read a Presidential Proclamation designating this special week and discussing the meaning of National Women's History Week.

Other featured guests at the program were the Benning Belles of the Officers' Wives' Club who presented several vocal selections that delighted the audience.

The White School Chorus, under the direction of Norma Green, music teacher, sang selections honoring women, and the entire assembly sang "God Bless America."



Special thanks were given by Dr. Joann Alam, principal of White School to the Officers' Wives' Club for a donation to Fort Benning Schools that allowed each school to purchase additional library books. White School used its portion of the donation to begin a library collection on famous American women.

Other honored guests, Lt. Col. Jo Rusin and Sgt. Jasmine Gordon of the Fort Benning Reception Center, visited several classrooms and discussed careers for women in the military.

Shooting championships fire away at Benning

by Tommy Pool
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit PAO

The 26th annual Interservice Shooting Championships began here last week with more than 60 of the military's top competitors participating.

Representatives in the year's championships include teams from the U.S. Army, Army Reserve, U.S. Marine Corps, Air Force and the National Guard.

Finals of the Running Target championships were concluded last weekend with Capt. Randy Stewart, an Army reservist from Columbus, dominating the competition.

Army reservist Sgt. Donald Nygord won the opening Interservice Free Pistol Championship with 559 out of 600 points.

Stewart, a former member of USAMU, scored individual victories in all three running targets events while setting a new national record in 10 Meter Air Rifle.

He outdistanced the field in last week's six-day event with winning scores of 1754x1800 in Olympic Runs, 1168x1200 in Mixed Runs and 1144x1200 in 10 Meter Air Rifle.

His third day total of 384 out of 400 in the Air Rifle championship established a new national record for the event, breaking the old mark of 383 set in 1984.

Other medal winners in the running target events included MSgt. Robert Partridge of the USMC, with two second place finishes in the Olympic and Mixed Runs events. USAMU's SFC Ditmar Chavez, placed second in 10 Meter Air Rifle and third in Olympic Runs.

In team competition, the Army Reserve won both the Mixed Runs and Air Rifle titles, while the U.S. Marine Corps claimed the Olympic Runs championship.

The Interservice matches continued this week with inernational pistol competition. The championships will conclude at Phillips Range today with the finals of Military Rapid Fire event.

Sparring for a fight? Boxing coach wants you in the ring

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you are "truly Mah-ve-lous" and want to show it, registration and workouts have begun for the Battalion Boxing Smoker at Harmony Church Field House April 25 to 27.

There are currently 18 boxers training for the upcoming bouts under the direction of Coach Jose A. Clausell-Pillot.

Pillot has seven years experience as a boxing coach.

"Those who are going to make it to the tournament will have to work hard," said Pillot.

Hard work is a definite part of Pillot's training program.

At a recent workout the boxers did 45 minutes of calisthenics, then shadow-boxed three five-minute rounds with a minute break between rounds.

Shadow-boxing was followed by a heavy-bag workout and rope drill. Then it was back to the calisthenics for the remainder of the two-hour abbreviated training.

"We have to keep them moving," said Lewis G. Wagner, the assistant boxing coach. "We want them loose, but steady moving."

Wagner fought three years at the U.S Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. and coached a year before joining Pillot in the training for the upcoming "Smoker."

"Endurance will be a key factor to their survival in the bouts," said Pillot. "Normally bouts are three two-minute rounds, but we are training for three rounds of three-minute boxing," said Pillot.

Several of the boxers currently in training, are "open fighters," those who have had more than five fights. However, many are in the novice category, with less than three fights under their belts.

"Though many of the fighters are novice, they are very well disciplined," said Pillot.

The April Smoker will determine who is to go on to the U.S. Army Infantry Center Boxing Tournament in June.

For more information contact your major command sports specialist for details.

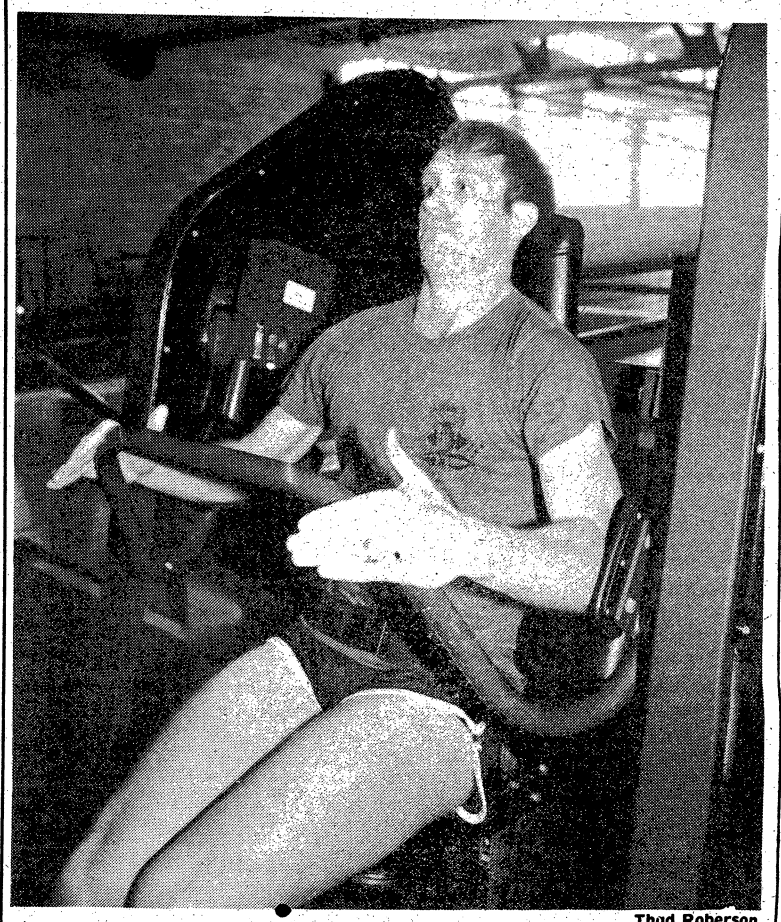
Flyer's rugby team goes 3-1; takes 3rd in Eastern tournament

by Steve Tennant
Special to the Bayonet

The Fort Benning Flyers traveled to the Eastern Military Regional Tournament and came away with a third place finish and a 3-1 record for the weekend.

The Flyers opened the tournament against Fort Bragg on Saturday. The Bragg team won a hard-hitting 4-0 match that was marked by outstanding defense by both sides.

Fort Benning met Camp LeJeune in Saturday's final match and came away with an 11-7 victory. Steve Tennant opened the scoring when he cut back against the grain, passed to Steve Gouthro, then took a return pass into the try zone. Gouthro connected on a penalty kick before the Marine team struck back to make the score 7-4 at the half.



LeJeune tied the score early in the second half, then Flyer Wing Forward Jeff Cleveland scooped up a Lew Boone kick and carried the ball into the try zone to give the Flyers an 11-7 victory in the dying moments of the match.

Sunday morning saw the Benning side matched against tournament host Fort Stewart. The Flyers jumped out in front early when Winger Sammy Liusamoa jumped on a loose ball in the try zone. The conversion was made by Gouthro, who followed with a penalty kick moments later to make the tally 9-0. Gouthro scored on a penalty play when he caught Fort Stewart napping near the goal. This followed with a try set up by Scrum Half Ariel Rivas. The rest of the match was a defensive struggle, leaving the score at 17-0 in favor of Fort Benning when the final whistle blew.

The final Fort Benning match was against Cherry Point Air Station. Gouthro scored his third try of the day by going to the weak side and diving into the try zone. Cherry point countered with a penalty kick, then Flyer Prop Jim Buchanan carried the ball in off of a penalty play. The final-score stood at 8-3 in favor of Fort Benning.

The Flyers finished with the same record as the Fort Bragg and Camp LeJeune teams, but finished in third place under the tie-breaking procedures. Individual honors abounded with six Flyers being chosen for the Army Select Side. Players on the Army team are Jim Buchanann, Steve Gouthro, Steve Tennant, Billy Whitesides, Lew Boone, and Tom Lynch. Players on the Tournament Select Side were Steve Gouthro, Lew Boone, and Tom Lynch.

Fort Benning travels to Tuscaloosa this Saturday to take on the University of Alabama. Anyone interested in joining the club is welcome. Contact Steve Tennant at 544-4853 for details.

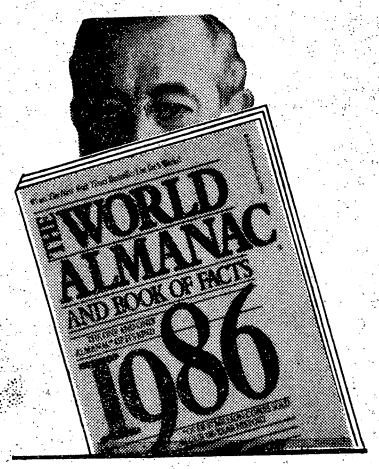
Today, the Audi 5000S becomes even easier to handle. $298 a month.*

The Audi 5000S sedan's ability to negotiate roadways crisply and efficiently is certainly one reason to admire it. That you can negotiate a lease of just $298 a month on this fine European luxury sedan is all the more reason to acquire it.

Performance aside, this 1986 Audi 5000S sedan comes with many standard features that increase comfort without altering the lease price. Electronic climate control, cruise control, power windows and door locks, AM/FM stereo cassette, and automatic transmission make this limited time offer a tempting invitation to unlimited driving pleasure.



A closer look will prove what words cannot. Come in for a test drive and complete lease details. Program ends May 31, 1986. And drive away in an Audi 5000S sedan at a lease price that is, well, easy to handle.

*This offer is available only from a participating Audi Prestige Leasing dealer through May 31, 1986 as a 60-month, closed-end lease. No purchase option. No down payment is required. First month $298 payment and $300 security deposit are required in advance. Monthly payments are based on manufacturer's suggested retail price and special lease terms extended by VCI/Prestige Leasing. Total lease payments $17,880.00 plus 10¢ per mile over 75,000. Registration, local fees, tax, options additional.

Whose face is on the $100,000 bill?

(No fair peeking in your wallet.)

According to the 1986 World Almanac®, a portrait of Woodrow Wilson adorns the $100,000 bill, used only in transactions between the Federal Reserve System and the Treasury Department.

The 1986 World Almanac is itself a treasury of more than a million fun facts! And it contains updated, favorite features such as America's Most Influential Women, Heroes of Young America and a portrait of the future by the editors of Omni magazine.

Order your copy today! You can use the handy coupon below. Or your local newsstand or bookstore will be happy to sell you one for $5.95. Just don't ask, "Got change for a $100,000?"

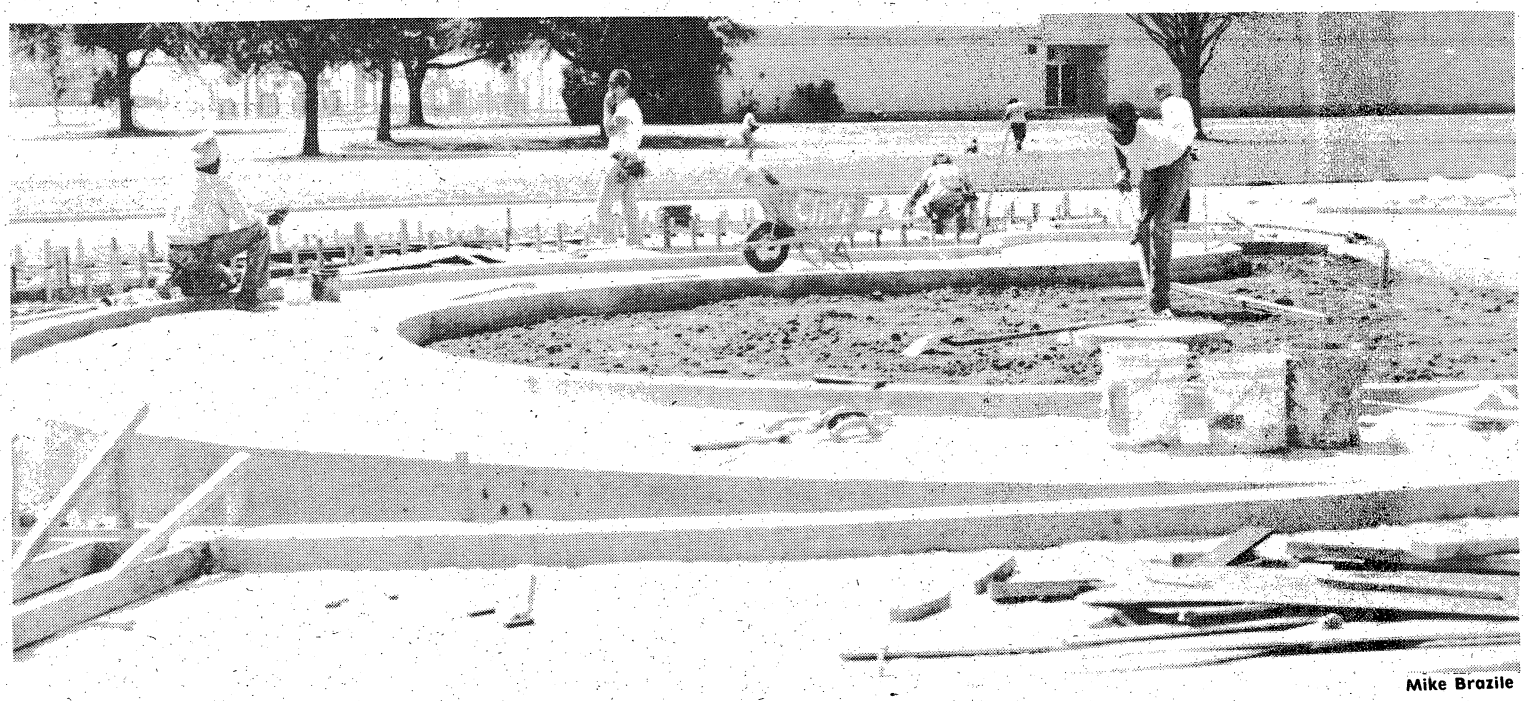
Traffic rerouted for OWC's run

Traffic patterns will be altered in the Main Post area tomorrow to accommodate the 3rd Annual Officers' Wives' Club Festival of Running.

The routes for the three and five miles runs, travel over roadways including Riordon, Benjamin, Way, Marchant, Ingersoll and Sightseeing Streets. Also included are Lumpkin Road from Madden Avenue to Dixie Road, Dixie Road from Sightseeing Street to First Division Road and Collins Loop in the 2,600 area. All of these areas will be closed to traffic from 7:50 a.m. until 1 p.m.

In order to accommodate the residents and users of the Main Post area, the following locations have been designated as route crossover points: Ingersoll and Carpenter, Marchant and Gillespie, Marchant and Edwards, Lumpkin and Yeager, and Lumpkin and First Division Road.



Support Agency replaces 'Owl' logo

Officials at the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency recently announced the birth of a new logo designed to save commissary customers money.

The new logo, a soldier dressed in a red, white and blue Revolutionary War uniform, replaces the familiar "Wise Owl" logo that has been used for years.

TMC 5 for all soldiers

Troop Medical Clinic No. 5 will now see all active-duty soldiers on sick call. This includes One Station Unit Training troops, soldiers from units on main post and those individuals assigned or attached to the 197th Infantry Brigade. Sick call hours Monday through Friday are from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. Sick call will be from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Outpatient Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital on weekends.

Airborne walk

Workers attend to the construction of the Airborne Walk on Eubanks Field. The walk is scheduled to be dedicated April 17 at 9:45 a.m. The festivities that day, hosted by the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry, will include a Problem 5,000 demonstration and an airborne operation at Fryar Field.

Incidence of DUI's high; careers being ruined

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Incidents of the apprehension of soldiers while driving under the influence of alcohol are on the rise and careers are being ruined because of it, according to deputy post provost marshal, Lt. Col. Paul Curry.

"The incident rate of DUI's is climbing at an alarming rate. In February of '85 we had 51. This February we had 71. That's bad enough in itself. The appalling thing is that 30 percent of those 71 DUI's were sergeants through sergeants major. These are the role models and leaders of our young soldiers," said Curry.

Curry said the percentage of noncommissioned officers apprehended for DUI's in November, December and January were 18, 23 and 27 percent, respectively.

"What soldiers, and especially career soldiers, must understand is that if you get caught on a DUI your career is ruined," Curry said.

According to Curry, of the 71 soldiers caught while driving intoxicated in February, 73 percent were off-post in Columbus.

"Many people don't understand the system. There are indicators that police officers look for in drivers. Let me caveat this first of all. I'm not revealing these indicators so soldiers can beat the system, but only so that they understand.

"If a soldier, or anyone for that matter, is driving downtown after 11 p.m. and he or she drives over the centerline of the street, they are going to be pulled over. If they weave, they're going to be pulled over. Any driving practices that are out of the ordinary are the basis for being pulled over. If the police officer, after pulling the soldier over, smells alcohol, the soldier is going to be tested and if he or she is over the legal limit of .10 for blood-alcohol, they will be arrested," Curry explained.

The military police officer said that once arrested, the trouble for soldiers, and especially career soldiers, begins.

"First of all, their right to drive on Fort Benning is suspended. If they are married and their wife doesn't drive, they have an immediate problem of getting to work.

"Secondly, they are fined a minimum of $350 by the police. The state where they are licensed to drive is notified of their DUI and they will start having insurance problems.

The offender is given a general officer letter of reprimand signed by Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. The letter is placed in their official file. This same file is the one that goes before all promotion boards.

"Then they are referred for alcohol and drug counselling. This could impact unfavorably on an NCO's security clearance. If you aren't able to get a security clearance, you can't advance to the higher grades of the NCO corps. Then they're subject to the Qualitative Management Program where they aren't going to look very good.

"What the whole thing adds up to eventually is an NCO is going to have wasted a bunch of years in the Army because he or she is going to be barred from reenlistment and have to get out. No retirement benefits if 20 years o service hasn't been reached nothing. It is a shame," saic Curry.

"Let me also say that if soldiers aren't concerned about themselves and their careers they should be concerned about the impact a DUI will have upon their families. When they drink and drive they are also endangering the lives of other, innocent motorists.

"In addition, once a soldier is picked up for DUI his unit and fellow soldiers have to take up the slack while he is in jail and going on his alcohol counselling sessions. The job and mission still has to be done," Curry said.

Curry wanted to emphasize, "If a career NCO is picked up for DUI he runs a very high risk of becoming an ex-soldier. Ex-soldiers have no retirement benefits at all. They're just another discharged G.I. on the streets. Most career NCO's have spouses and children. What about them and other innocent motorists?" Curry asked.

What about them?

Drinking and driving: a sobering tale

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

I was in a bar the other day having a few beers with some of my buddies. We had all downed five or six cold ones and were getting ready to go.

Beer Belly Johnson, swaying as he stood by our beer bottle-laden table, harangued us all, spittle flying, about driving home in our sodden condition.

"Listen, you bloated barfly," I told him, "the day I can't drive after a few beers is the day I have my 'Real Man' tattoo carved off my chest. I'm just gonna' drive home, for God's sake."

TRACY, Calif.-The auto veered off the road, striking bicyclist LeMoin Stille from behind. The victim, a mathematics teacher at Clover Middle School, was thrown 100 feet to the road's gravel shoulder. He died of massive head injuries. The auto's driver did not stop.

When Richard Cagle arrived home, police reports say he was confronted by his wife, who saw the damage to the car. She drove him back to the accident scene. There they were questioned by police.

According to the California Highway Patrol, Cagle conceded he had been the driver of the car involved in the accident. Tests showed Cagle's blood-alcohol level to be nearly 2 1/2 times the point of legal intoxication.

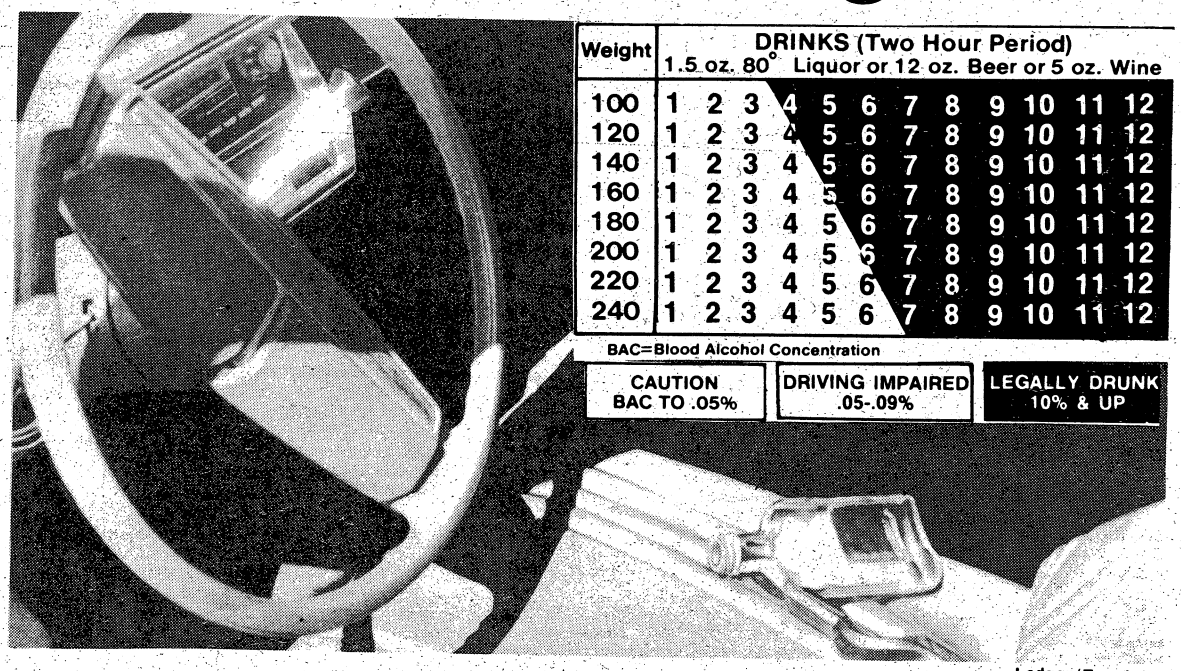
"Yeah," chimed in Cory 'Coors Slammer' McClanahan, "real men don't eat quiche or catch a cab home after poppin' a few tops."

"I'm tellin' you guys, it's a big deal. Drinkin' and drivin' just ain't done anymore," said Beer Belly, belching loudly.

"Listen, you big tub a' 'guts, when I drink and then drive I'm looser, more relaxed. I actually drive better because of the relaxin' effect the juice ah' the barley has on me," said Bubba Johnson, Beer Belly's younger, but not smaller, brother.

"Hell, let's go. Nothin' will happen. So we drank a little, so what," I said.

GAITHERSBURG, Md.-Peter Weiger was a popular high school sopohmore. He was a 4-H club member and a Boy Scout. He enjoyed parties and girls.



Then one night his parents received the visit that haunts them to this day. Your son, the police officer said, has been hit by a car. A half-hour later he was pronounced dead - the victim of a drunken driver.

Charlie Jesus Chowder, from Manhattan, not New England, brought another round.

"Here's one for the road, boys. Drink up. It's on the house," he said, smiling.

"Charlie Jesus, I think you oughta' call Safetycab or Safetytruck or somethin.' These guys shouldn't be drivin' home," said Beer Belly, watching as we all chugged the beer, racing to see who would be first.

"Hey, Beer Belly, they're just drinking a few beers. Calm down, will you," said Charlie Jesus.

Alcohol and automobiles don't mix. If your blood alcohol level is .10 or over you are considered legally intoxicated.

ST. LOUIS-Lonnie Colyer, as one police officer would say, was a loaded gun the night that he left the suburban tavern to drive to his home. Moments later, his pickup veered into an oncoming lane, smashing into a motorcycle. Two teenagers riding on the cycle were killed.

All of us staggered outside except Beer Belly.

"Hey, you guys drive careful now," said Charlie Jesus, as he picked up the empty beer bottles from the table.

"Don't worry about it, Charlie. No big deal. Beer Belly's just gettin' wimpy in his fat old age," I laughed, going out the door.

No big deal, I thought to myself, I've just downed a few brews.

WASHINGTON-Laura Lamb's expressive blue eyes scanned the people around her. The 16-month old child will never be able to use her hands or legs. Laura is a quadraplegic for life.

Her mother, Candy Lamb, recalled the afternoon when she and Laura were driving to the grocery. Their vehicle was struck head-on by a car driven by a man whose traffic record had 25 separate entries, including three arrests for driving while intoxicated, as he was when he hit the Lamb's car.

The wreck caused spinal injuries in 16-month old Laura.

Beer Belly watched us leave the bar for our cars and shook his head. We just laughed. What was the big deal? We had just had a few beers and we were gonna drive home. No harm done. Know what I mean?

How serious do your believe the crime of Driving Under the Influence is?

Sp4 Wayne M. Sease, Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "DUI is a serious crime. I got caught in April of last year in Phenix City. The cost to me was tremendous and my career suffered. After the $400 fine and Drunk Drivers Class, it was the military's turn to reprimand me. Since then, I've stopped drinking

Pvt. 2 Jesse L. Curtis, Company E, 2nd Battion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade — "Because a drunk(en) driver chances taking an innocent life, DUI is a very serious crime. A DUI charge can destroy families and the person's social life. The military and friends cannot trust the soldier who drinks and drives."

1st Sgt. Robert N. Beverley, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "DUI is such a serious crime that careers have been destroyed by it. Driving under the influence is the main cause of accidents that kill families. When a soldier is caught DUI, that soldier should receive the maximum penalty of UCMJ action.

U.S. military must have muscle to counter expanding Soviets

by Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Services

The United States military is sound but must be strengthened even more in light of real-world demands and the growing Soviet threat, cautioned Adm. William J. Crowe Jr., chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, in remarks to the Senate Armed Services Committee on the fiscal 1987 Department of Defense budget.

"While I am convinced that the current posture of the armed forces is sound, I likewise believe there is a great deal yet to be done to ensure the nation's future security," he said.

The Soviet Union's worldwide threat and the evolving military balance in which the Soviets enjoy superiority in many areas continues to be of concern, said the new chairman, in providing his assessment of the nation's defense establishment. The Soviet buildup, according to Crowe, "is unprecedented in world history and on sheer momentum will carry well into the 1990's, if not longer."

The Soviet's use of surrogates, said Crowe, results in a burgeoning terrorist threat; more small, but fierce, regional conflicts and an increasing willingness of small, anti-American regimes to challenge the United States.

Speaking on the overall war-fighting capability of the U.S. armed forces, Crowe addressed five broad areas of interest: manpower, modernization, training, sustainability and special operations forces.

Calling manpower the "heart of our force structure," Crowe reported that personnel readiness is at its highest level during any peacetime period in history. However, he added that even though fiscal 1985 was another successful recruiting year for all the services, recruiting can be expected to become a growing challenge in the future.

"Enlisted retention declined from fiscal 1984 levels for all services in all categories except for first termers in the Army," reported Crowe, adding that the Navy still has difficulty keeping sufficient nuclear officers and, along with the Air Force, continues to lose experienced pilots. Citing these and other figures, Crowe stated, "a healthy personnel structure is the first priority of the Joint Chiefs of Staff."

Turning to force modernization, Crowe said the United States has no choice but to maintain a credible nuclear deterrent.

"Unfortunately, U.S. strategic force modernization lagged far behind Soviet efforts during the 1970s," said Crowe. "We have been forced to refurbish all three legs of the triad at the same time — notably with the Peacekeeper missile, the B-1 bomber and the Trident submarine."

Crowe said in order to guard against tactical and technical surprise, "it is essential to have an updated and healthy triad which will see us into the next century."

Regarding the Stretegic Defense Initiative, Crowe said, "It is both prudent and moral for the United States to explore means for ending the dominance of offensive ballistic missile weaponry." He also called for continued efforts to develop an updated deterrent chemical warfare capability.

In his remarks to the committee, Crowe said great progress has been made in the last six years in the conventional force modernization program.

"But it should be clearly understood that we are still midstream in the modernization effort. To falter now would not only stretch out the entire process, but would erode many of the gains already made and, frankly, prove more expensive in the end. The FY 1987 budget recognizes this reality and continues the momentum."

A rigorous training program is in place and, according to Crowe, training is steadily becoming more "joint, realistic and innovative."

Citing the goal of sustainability as the "logistic support to our conventional forces from initiation to successful termination of any conflict," Crowe said there has been substantial growth in U.S. expenditures for sustainability over the last six years. "We simply must stay the course if we want a genuinely sustainable force as well as a modern and well-trained one," he said.

In conclusion, Crowe said, "Our military posture today is driven by a number of real-world demands, many of which have evolved over the last 30 years."

Parental absence hinders development of children

Editor's note: April has been declared the Month of the Military Child. In an effort to recognize this special group, the Bayonet will publish articles related to military children throughout the month.

by Robert G. Leroe
Army News Service

Family separations, because of military duty, can be extremely difficult for children. Soldiers should be encouraged to schedule pre-deployment conferences with teachers and to maintain contact with them during the separation.

A study that examined school performance of children experiencing temporary father absence showed these children were five months behind in reading and four months behind in math skills. If the absent parent is the same gender, the loss of the role influence may hinder academic growth. The study suggests this impairment may be due to an "anger effect" coloring their perceptual accuracy.

Parental absence deprives children of a model upon which to base normal gender role development. The remaining spouse may fail to encourage children of the opposite sex to engage in activities which reinforce their gender identification. Regardless of the gender or previous behavior of the remaining parent, he or she will be perceived by the children as the dominant parent.

If the oldest child is the same gender as the deployed parent, and if that parent was the dominant figure in the family unit, the elder child may assume (or be delegated) the absent parent's mantle of authority. This may confuse the child as to his or her role in the family. Once the esteem wears off, this elevated child may begin to resent the cumbersome — and often unreasonable — adult responsibilities entrusted to him or her.

Parents can defend against the problems children face with military separations. The first step is communicating prior to the soldier-parent's deployment. Children may in fact see that their part in patriotic service is sharing a parent with a needy nation.

During the deployment, children need security and a sense of continuity. Above all, children must feel free to release feelings of anger or depression.

When the parent returns, the children need individual attention. Parents should postpone dinner parties and visits and resist the temptation to send children to relatives in order to have an intimate reunion. The returning parent should schedule "dates" with each child, providing the attention they have craved and been denied for so long.

Psychologist Suzanne Ramos offers fourfold advice to families anticipating the return of a long-absent parent: "(1) Be patient with that parent's adjustment to normal behavior; (2) don't pretend, 'all's well.' Let the parent know where he stands. Talk openly about feelings — his, yours, the children's; (3) allow the returning parent to vent his feelings and to know someone cares; (4) give the returning parent privacy and time to reorient himself."

Gramm-Rudman budget cuts cause PCS curtailment

Army News Service

Soldiers scheduled for permanent change of station moves between July 1 and the end of November can plan on staying where they are for up to 90 days longer, according to Army personnel officials.

The move to delay PCS moves comes at a time when the Army is being forced to trim $263 million from its military personnel account to comply with the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

Soldiers moving to and from overseas areas and within the continental United States will be extended for up to 90 days. Soldiers serving accompanied tours in Korea will be extended up to 60 days, according to Maj. Gen. William G. O'Leksy, director of Military Personnel Management, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, in the Pentagon. The PCS slowdown could affect up to 40,000 soldiers, according to O'Leksy.

Unaffected by the PCS mandate are those soldiers serving tours of 15 months or less and those soldiers being assigned to short tour areas. Also unaffected are soldiers attending select schools, like the Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course and CAS3, enroute to a new assignment; Soldiers moving with a unit as part of a COHORT or battalion rotation; soldiers being assigned to 6th and 10th Infantry Divisions (Light) cadre; and soldiers moving to or from battalion or brigade command, command sergeant major or centrally selected product/project manager positions.

Soldiers completing initial entry training; soldiers being assigned in connection with specific force modernization actions; soldiers retiring or separating from the Army and soldiers receiving compassionate reassignments will also not be affected by this PCS initiative.

The decision to delay PCS moves became necessary when a previously announced move to slow down enlisted promotions was found to have an adverse impact on unit readiness. In order for the promotion slowdown to have achieved the necessary cutbacks, "We would have had to freeze all promotions," said O'Leksy during a March 28 briefing.

That led DCSPER officials to discontinue the enlisted promotion slowdown and initiate PCS delays.

"We were getting a lot of concern from the field on continued low promotion rates, especially in the mid-level enlisted ranks," said O'Leksy during the March 28 briefing. That slowdown was particularly critical at the sergeant and staff sergeant level. April promotions to sergeant were less than a quarter of the December promotions and only 200 soldiers were picked up for staff sergeant in April compared to 1,200 in December.

Rescinding enlisted promotion slowdowns will result in 4,000 promotions to sergeant and 6,000 to staff sergeant in May. April's promotions totalled 600 to sergeant and 200 to staff sergeant. Top five enlisted grade promotions in May will be seven times the number promoted in April. Officer promotion slowdowns, however, will continue.

The decision to delay PCS moves was the last of several alternatives available to personnel officials. Previous cost-cutting alternatives included voluntary and mandatory early release dates for soldiers leaving the service, elimination of tour extension deadlines overseas, and termination of basic allowance for subsistence for many soldiers living in the barracks.

The Army could have also cutback on newly approved family action plan programs, according to O'Leksy, but decided against cutting those programs for several reasons. "The Army's been fighting for these benefits for years," explained O'Leksy. "They're now available, if we're ready to pay the bill."

Some of those programs recently approved by Congress as part of the current fiscal year package include the doubling of family separation allowance; the addition of per diem for family members travel; the payment of temporary lodging entitlements in CONUS; the payment of travel expenses incurred by soldiers moving families before unaccompanied tours and increased household goods weight allowances for junior enlisted soldiers.

"These aren't inexpensive benefits, but they're important benefits and if we don't get them out in our system then we're not keeping faith with the soldiers," said O'Leksy.

The only alternative left was to delay PCS moves.

"We realize that this (PCS delay) is going to have an adverse impact on some soldiers," said O'Leksy. He acknowledged that moving during that time of year is difficult for some families, particularly those with children in school. These soldiers will have several options available, he explained.

One of those options will be to extend overseas tours for up to 18 months without regard to previously established voluntary extension deadlines. Soldiers have until May 31 to exercise this option.

Another option for soldiers who have received assignment instructions is to go ahead and move their families to the new assignment ahead of the soldier's actual move.

According to Army DCSPER officials, a message sent to the field outlining these PCS delay initiatives should now be in the hands of local military personnel offices for additional clarification. One point the message brings out is that soldiers will not be able to report early to new assignments in an effort to avoid these slowdowns.

Army officials caution soldiers on buying or selling homes, or making any similar commitments, until they have a complete understanding on how these actions may affect them.

Designated driver year-round program

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Department of the Army's Designated Driver Program, which became effective during the holidays, has become increasingly popular and is encouraged year round in the Fort Benning community.

The program, designed to keep drunken drivers off the road, offers free soft drinks, coffee and non-alcoholic beverages to patrons of post clubs willing to stay sober and drive their accompanying partiers home.

The clubs are encouraging participants by giving bottons that say "No Thanks" to the designated driver, therefore allowing them to be served non-alcoholic drinks free of charge for the evening. The drivers need only have a party of two or more to participate.

The program went into effect during Thanksgiving and continued throughout the holidays of 1985 and '86.

"Until recently the command recognized that we needed to continue the program after the holidays," John W. Reynolds, Community Operations director, said.

He went on to say that "People are becoming, and especially the military, much more concerned about safe driving habits and the consequences that go with DUIs and drunk driving.

Although the clubs are encouraging each group to designate a driver it seems that more awareness is necessary in the community.

According to MSgt. David J. Cameron, operations sergeant of Military Police Activity, "The people that we stop and are drunk, we have found no designated driver. A lot of times there will be a sober person in the car and it makes you wonder why they aren't driving."

"We think your safety is a serious matter and worth every effort we can make to guarantee that you get home safely."

Modern military women go from laundresses to leaders

by Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

It took nearly 20 decades of official and unofficial military service for women to advance from laundresses, cooks and nurses during the American Revolution to such high-level grades as general officers and sergeants major. Today, women occupy a wide range of professional and technical positions throughout the military services.

During the Civil War, hundreds of women volunteered as nurses with both the Union and Confederate forces. But the official history of women in the armed forces didn't begin until Congress established the Army Nurse Corps on Feb. 2, 1901. The Navy Nurse Corps was established on May 13, 1908, and its first contingent known to history as "The Sacred Twenty."

However, some women took a more active role in early American wars. Deborah Sampson and many other women masqueraded as male soldiers during the Revolution. Some served as spies during the Civil War, such as Belle Boyd, Rose O'Neal Greenhow and Pauline Cushman. The famous black abolitionist, Harriet Tubman, served throughout the war as nurse, spy, scout and guide for the Union forces.

The Navy was the first military service to authorize enrollment of women other than as nurses. This was in March 1917, when women were accepted into the Navy as clerks to free men for sea duty and ease the shortage of skilled clerical personnel on shore. The Army didn't enlist women during World War I; it employed them as civilians under contract. Many worked as physical and occupational therapists.

Jobs for women were greatly expanded during World War II, which led to the creation of the Women's Army Corps (WAC), Women Accepted for Voluntary Emergency Service (WAVES) in the Navy and the Coast Guard Women's Reserve, called "SPARs," a nickname taken from the Coast Guard motto "Semper Paratus" ("Always Ready"). The Marine Corps Women's Reserve was founded Feb. 13, 1943.

In the early 1960s, women could receive a commission only by attending an officer candidate school or by getting a direct commission. They were not allowed to participate in reserve officers training courses at colleges and universities until the 1972-1973 academic year. They were not accepted at the miltary academies until 1976.

But with the advent of the all-volunteer force, the number of career fields open to women soared from 35 percent in 1972 to 90 percent in 1976.

Even though all non-combat jobs are now open to women, female commissioned officers sometimes have problems being selected for high-level command positions.

"Command positions are limited in all branches outside of the combat arms," said Brig. Gen. Sherian C. Cadoria, director of the Manpower and Personnel Directorate, Organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. "Women feel the impact more severely than men because of the combat exclusion policy. But I think in the available non-combat jobs the opportunity is there.

"If they (women) compete against those positions, they're going to get them, because they've demonstrated they can perform outstandingly," added Cadoria, the highest-ranking black woman in the military services.

All but 17 of 99 enlisted ratings in the Navy are open to women. The Navy's 6,640 women officers serve in all specialties, except submarine warfare and special warfare (both combat exclusions).

Women in the Air Force comprise 11.2 percent of the total active force. The Air Force's 55,000 enlisted women serve in all but four career fields. The 11,000 women officers serve in all career fields, except those involving combat aircraft.

In the Marine Corps, 8,619 enlisted women and 641 officers serve in all non-combat specialties.

There are no policies prohibiting women in the Coast Guard from serving in any position, including the command of vessels. The Coast Guard is a comparatively small force of 36,000 people. They have 166 women officers, one warrant officer and 2,118 enlisted women.

Females now integral part of military after sweeping changes

by Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

- Before 1967, by law, females could comprise only 2 percent of the military. This ceiling was lifted in 1967.
- Also in 1967, ranks above lieutenant colonel and commander were opened to women. Before that, unless she was director of a component, a woman could not be promoted beyond lieutenant colonel or commander — and she held the higher rank only while serving in that position.
- In 1971, there were 40,000 active-duty women in the military — 1 percent of the active forces. By 1982, the figure had risen to 190,000, or 9 percent, and by the end of 1984, the figure was 201,210 or 9.5 percent.
- In 1970, the first women, Anna Mae Hays, chief of the Army Nurse Corps, and Elizabeth P. Hoisington, director of the Women's Army Corps, were promoted to brigadier general. Two years later, Alene B. Duerk, director of the Navy Nurse Corps, became the first woman rear admiral and, in 1973, Jeanne Holm, director of Women in the Air Force, became the first woman major general in the military. Today, 12 general and flag officers (counting three selectees are women.)
- In 1971, among all branches of the service, there were 218 women in the most senior enlisted grades, E-8 and E-9. At the end of 1985, there were 421 — 359 E-8s; and 62 E-9s.
- In 1974, the Marine Corps opened the fleet Marine forces to women.

High temperatures at Benning spell caution for active soldiers

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

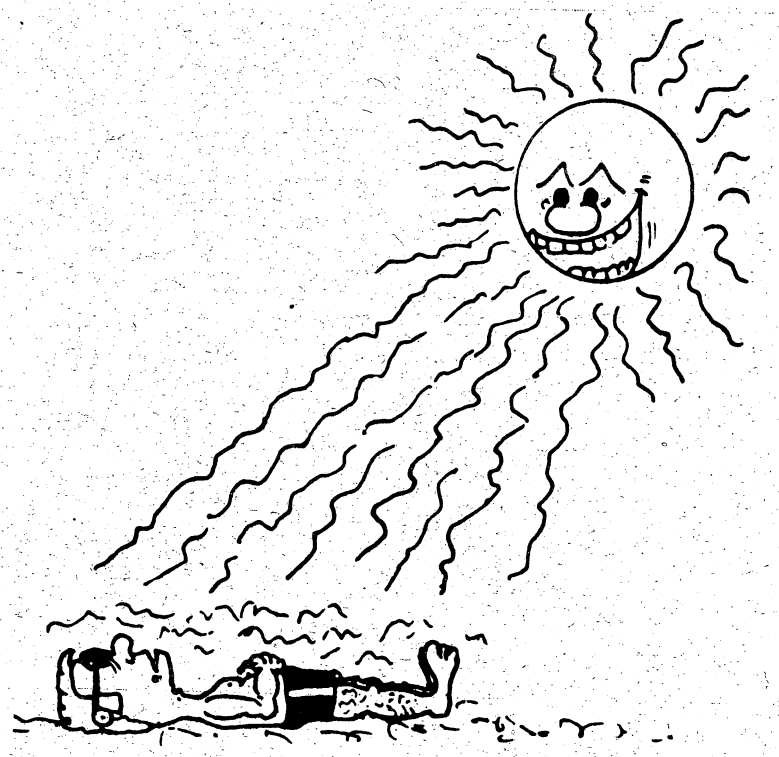
The summer sun could mean little fun for Fort Benning soldiers.

With temperatures averaging around 90 degrees Fahrenheit during the summer months, exercising safety is critical to having an enjoyable summer.

Heat injuries are not limited to sunburn, fainting and prickly heat, but may include other common injuries, such as heat exhaustion, stroke and cramps.

If you lose consciousness and the last thing you remember is having a throbbing headache, rapid pulse, being confused and disoriented and body temperatures in excess of 103 degrees, you may not wake up.

Unlike other heat disorders, heat stroke is often fatal.



A suspected heat stroke victim should be cooled down immediately. If cool water or ice is available the victim should be immersed in it. Otherwise, sprinkle water on the body and fan it to quicken evaporation.

Should you don your fatigue shirt and feel the definite "pains of the heat," it is very possible you have gotten just a little to much sun.

Sunburn is probably the most common heat injury.

Fort Benning offers some of the best summer sun, but should be taken in tolerable doses.

As the temperatures rise, material outlining the symptoms and treatment of heat injuries will be available. The Safety Office suggests that all soldiers become familiar with the procedures to ensure an enjoyable summer.

Summertime jobs still possible for family members on the move

Army News Service

Family members of military and civilian personnel do not have to give up hope of competing for a summer job with the Army if they move to a new duty station after the closing date for summer-job applications.

A civilian personnel policy introduced last February allows all applicants for jobs under the summer employment program to transfer their eligibility for competitive consideration from one geographic location to another, even when the cut-off date for the job announcement period in the new area has passed, said Cheryl Jacobsen from the Civilian Personnel Directorate in Washington, D.C. Personnel officials must consider these applicants for employment no matter how late in the summer they apply.

To be eligible for the transfer, an applicant must submit verification to the new location's personnel office, stating that an application had been properly submitted at the former location.

Another change, implemented last June by the Office of Personnel Management, has eased the hiring restrictions so that children now can work in the same agency as their parents, Jacobsen said. Previously, children of soldiers and Army civilians were restricted from working for the Army.

Under the summer employment system, applicants usually are selected in one of two ways. The personnel office might compile a list based on skills and qualifications, with the most qualified being placed at the top of the list. Under another system, random lists of all qualified applicants are used. These lists can be periodically reshuffled, making employment chances fair for everyone, Jacobsen said.

Don't get in over your head in post waters

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Now that warm weather is here, people will be heading to lakes and beaches to cool down.

But according to Philip Byrne, the best bet is to stay out of post waters for the time being.

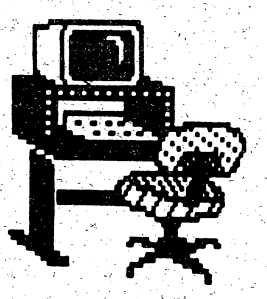
"A good rule of thumb is when the post pool opens, it's safe to swim outside," he said. Post pools are open from Memorial Day to Labor Day.

U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5 forbids swimming and wading in all streams, ponds, lakes and rivers on the Fort Benning reservation.

Two soldiers died in water related incidents last year. One was swimming at an unauthorized rock quarry, while the other was involved in a training accident.

Right now the water in this area is still too cold for swimming. "According to most experts, water temperatures should be around 70 degrees Fahrenheit before going in swimming," Byrne said.

This is also the time of year many people are on the waterways in boats and canoes, fishing or riding around enjoying the weather. But boaters as well as swimmers need to exercise basic safety rules to ensure an enjoyable excursion.



These include:

- Wear an approved personal flotation device.
- Don't boat alone.
- In case of upset, stay with the floating boat until help arrives.
- Don't operate the craft during darkness without proper lights.
- Don't drink alcohol while boating.
- Change seats only at a slow speed or when the boat is stopped, to avoid falling out or capsizing.

He said it's also a good idea to swim in areas where there is a lifeguard present. This means staying away from abandoned rock quarries and gravel pits, which have been the scene for drownings in the past.

Mortar platoon expert named 1985 instructor of the year

Editor's note: This is the first in a three part series profiling three individuals selected as instructors of the year.

29th Infantry Regiment PAO

Once again SSgt. Ernest Brown of Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment heads the list of best instructors at Fort Benning.

Last week, the mortar platoon expert was named Fort Benning's Junior Instructor of the Year for 1985.

In August, 1985, he reigned as instructor of the month.

The competition was a lot tougher at the higher level, Brown says. But several factors kept him motivated to continue his pattern of excellence.

Namely, his concept of a "good" instructor, pride in what he does and who he represents contributed to his success.

Brown says, "As instructors, we have the most important jobs on Fort Benning.

"We are looked to as the Army's subject matter experts, and we are responsible for training soldiers for field, squad, platoon and combat assignments."

Of course, the role of the mortar instructor is an important one to Brown. He says, "Inevitably, what we teach in the classroom will affect what will happen on the next battlefield.

"We must always do our best to ensure that the student is taught properly and that our message is getting across. For on the next battlefield when the infantry requests supporting fire we will have to put it there."

The 10-year Army veteran is also a believer in positive attitudes in the classroom. He says, "The instructor must always present his material in a positive manner. Or he could cause the student to not take interest in what he is teaching."

As for who Brown represents, he says that all instructors at Fort Benning are direct representatives of the school's commandant.

"If we fail to teach the student what he needs to function as a professional soldier, we have failed to represent our leader well."

With this competition behind him, Brown intends to seek additional training or competition that will help him in career advancement. He says that his goal is to some day return to a field unit and possibly, afterwards, become an instructor with the Trainer Development Program.

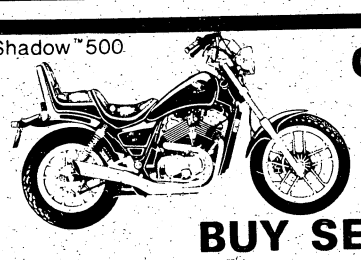
SSgt. Ernest Brown, Fort Benning Junior Instructor of th Year, 1985, explains mortar fire direction procedures to a Infantry Mortar Platoon Course student.

Infantry School's outstanding officer, NCO instructors for February named

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The United States Army Infantry School's officer instructor for the month of February is Capt. Marvin Erickson.

He is assigned to the Combined Arms and Tactics Department in the leadership committee and teaches Infantry Officer Basic Course students.



Erickson has been in the Army for over 14 years and he and his wife, Mary, have three children; Luke,12, Thane, 7 and Caitlin, 4.

The Infantry School's NCO instructor for February is SFC Edward Vuolo.

Vuolo is assigned to CATD also and instructs in the Nuclear, Biological and Chemical Branch.

He is an 11 year Army veteran and he and his wife, Deborah, have two sons, Edward Jr. and Michael.

INTERVENTION

intervention - Alcoholism and drug dependency are diseases of denial. This means that it usually takes a crisis to force a person suffering from drinking or drugging problems to accept treatment. This crisis could be loss of a job or an automobile accident. An intervention is a controlled confrontation between the patient and his or her family or employer. Good treatment programs such as the Help Unit at Cobb Memorial Hospital help employers or families intervene effectively while the chance for recovery is still good.

Finance goes to field to be fighters during FTX

by Charles McGriff
215th AFSC

The 215th Area Finance Support Center (AFSC) of the 67th Maintenance Battalion recently conducted a field training exercise. The primary thrust of the exercise was to sharpen individual common task skills and to build individual confidence.

The unit started with a convoy movement to Leyte Heliport. From there they were airlifted by UH1's to the Ampherville Field rappelling towers, where members of the pathfinders conducted rappelling/air assault training for the unit. During the rappelling soldiers of the 215th AFSC gained a tremendous amount of confidence in their ability to negotiate obstacles that required mountaineering skills.

The unit also conducted a full-pack five mile road march to their field location north of the Alabama Land Navigator Course.

Because current finance doctrine calls for the unit to send out forward area support teams, the ability to navigate is one of those critical common tasks a finance soldier must know. As a result, on the second day the unit conducted individual land navigation with concurrent first aid, M72A2 light anti-tank weapon and communication training.

After a full day of land navigation, the unit loaded up and moved to Malone 19 to negotiate the live-fire infiltration course. Upon initial viewing of the course, the soldiers underestimated the amount of effort and crawling required to move from one end of the course to the other. After participating in the dry fire training, the soldiers marched through the soggy, muddy trail leading to the ready line. Once given the command to go, the soldiers rolled over the wall and started their crawling assault of the infiltration course.

With live M60 machine gun tracer rounds firing over their heads, the soldiers needed no additional encouragement to keep their bodies as close to the ground as possible as they negotiated the wet, muddy course. At the end of the course the exhausted soldiers realized how deceptive first impressions can be.

The soldiers learned how to prepare a defensive perimeter on the third day. Multi-integrated laser engagement system equipment was used during this phase to help the troops learn how to make themselves less vulnerable. The MILES equipment also provided more realistic training.

Awaiting full darkness, still equipped with MILES gear, the unit moved to the long course on the Alabama land navigation to conduct squad-level night land navigation. Each squad was assigned a lane and given instructions that all other squads were hostile.

Their objective was to successfully negotiate the course without being killed. This provided an opportunity to integrate land navigation training while building squad confidence and esprit through competition.

The last full day of the unit FTX was used to conduct individual NBC training at the squad level.

EIB earners "go the extra mile" proving their prowess

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

The Expert Infantryman's Badge is worn by soldiers who attain a high degree of proficiency and excellence as infantrymen. SSgt. Willie Cason, of Company B, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, wears the EIB. He says "earning the EIB is a good way to show your peers that you are willing to go the extra mile as an infantry soldier."

Once a year, the 197th Infantry Brigade provides its soldiers with a chance to earn the EIB. As that time draws near, battalions in the 197th are preparing soldiers for the annual test.

Earning the EIB is voluntary. Officers and enlisted soldiers must meet the same high standards to earn the award. They must qualify as expert with an M16A1 rifle and score higher than 80 percent on the Skill Qualification Test for their infantry speciality. Officers take the skill level four SQT.

The soldiers must complete day and night land navigation courses. Cason said "land navigation is the area where most people fail. You have to make sure you put extra effort into those tasks."

Another requirement is that soldiers complete a 12-mile foot-march within three hours. Capt. Michael Curry of the 3-7th training section noted that this taxes the physical stamina of the soldier. "Immediately upon finishing the foot march," Curry said, "the soldier has to disassemble, assemble and perform a functions check on his M16 rifle within four minutes."

Earning the award also requires performing 36 EIB tasks. These tasks range from such common soldier skills as first aid and NBC to specialized infantry skills such as preparing a Dragon antitank weapon for firing. One task even requires that soldiers know how to administer cardio-pulmonary recusitation.

Training for infantry skills is ongoing at the battalion and company levels. For example, 3-7th is currently administering SQT and Common Tasks Testing. Curry noted that of the 17 CTT tasks testable, 1 are EIB tasks.

Soldiers who have earned the EIB are good sources of guidance. SP4 Robert Jackson of B Company advises soldiers not to depend on just classes and unit training. "You have to spend a lot of extra time studying CTT skills," Jackson said. "If you study hard, you can max those parts of the EIB tests."

Testing for the Expert Infantryman Badge for 197th soldiers is slated to begin in May.

Steve Simpson

SFC Heyward McBride, (l), and SP4 Bryan Rector, of Company A, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, instruct soldiers in map reading and land navigation skills that will prepare them for EIB testing.

Two Fort Benning soldiers convicted of larceny, given discharges and jail

by Charles A. Coffin
Staff Judge Advocate

During the past week, two Fort Benning soldiers were tried, convicted and sentenced by courts-martial.

Larceny - 45 days jail, bad conduct discharge. Pvt. Michelle Davis, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, was tried and convicted March 27 for stealing $450 from her barracks roommate.

Army prosecutor, Capt. Jack Spradley, showed Davis entered active duty Sept. 17, 1985 and arrived at the 43rd Eng. Bn. Feb. 15, 1986 and was assigned duties as a cook in the 43rd Eng. Dining Facility. Spradley proved that two weeks later, on March 2, Davis went through her roommate's dresser drawer and stole her 1st National Bank automatic teller card and the secret access code used to withdraw funds. Spradley showed Davis withdrew $375 from her roommate's checking account on March 2 and the following day she withdrew $75 more, for a total of $450.

The following week Davis' roommate noticed that her checks were being returned stamped "insufficient funds". The roommate contacted her bank and learned a female identified as Michelle Davis had removed $450 from the checking account. Spradley showed Davis stole the money in order to secure an off-post apartment lease.

Davis, who is five months pregnant, took the witness stand and testified her pay was "messed up" and that she needed the money to make a deposit on an apartment in Columbus. Davis said she was sorry for her criminal conduct and the inconvenience and embarrassment she had caused her roommate. Four noncommissioned officers from the 43rd dining facility testified Davis was a good worker who deserved a second chance. Spradley called Davis' company commander, Capt. Mitchell, and her first sergeant, 1st Sgt. Jordan, who both testified there was no room in the Army for barracks thieves and that Davis should be kicked out of the Army.

The court sentenced the 20-year-old soldier to be discharged from the Army with a bad conduct discharge and to be confined in jail for 45 days.

Larceny/arson - 6 months jail. PFC Steven D. Baney, Battery C, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, was tried and convicted by special courtmartial March 26 for larceny and destruction of private property.

Evidence presented by the 197th prosecutor, Capt. Randy Hall, showed Baney and his friend, PFC Hopkins, stole a motorcycle on Nov. 14, 1985 belonging to the husband of Hopkins' girlfriend. Baney and Hopkins loaded the motorcycle in the back of Baney's pickup truck and carried it to an isolated spot by the Chattahoochee River where Hopkins set it on fire, totally destroying the $1500 bike.

The court sentenced Baney to be reduced to Private E-1, and to be confined in jail for six months.

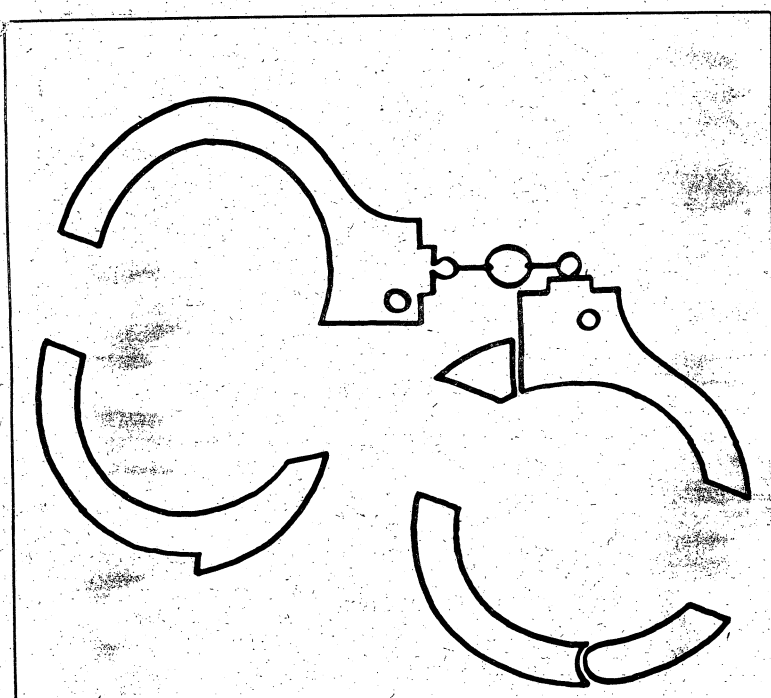
Motorists beware of thieves, secure automobiles, valuables

Provost Marshal Office

If you park your automobile on Fort Benning, beware of the parking lot thief. He is looking for anything valuable and easy to remove.

Items on or in your vehicle that may qualify include batteries, hubcaps, cassette tapes,car stereos, packages and tires. The list is endless. And last, but by no means least, the thief may wish to steal your car.



In March alone there were five automobiles stolen and $6,700 dollars worth of car stereos and other items stolen from vehicles in parking lots.

Parking your car in highly trafficked lots or well-lighted areas at night will decrease your chances of becoming a victim. However, these measures will not guarantee the safety of your vehicle. The thieves are becoming increasingly bold. Cars parked in some of the larger parking lots on post have been "hit" during broad daylight.

Although they are not foolproof, the following is a list of do's and don'ts that can decrease your chances of being the next victim of parking lot thieves:

- Don't leave keys in the ignition when car is unattended.
- Don't leave car doors unlocked or windows open.
- Don't leave packages, clothing or other tempting articles visible inside your car.
- Do keep a record of your vehicle license number and vehicle identification number.
- Do notify Military Police immediately when your vehicle or items therein have been stolen.
- Do report to the Military Police any suspicious activities or information you have concerning possible car theft incidents.
- Do mark for identification all wheel covers, batteries, and other easily removable accessories, and record them.
- Do secure high-valued items in your trunk or other secure location while the car is parked at one location for any extended time period.

The Military Police are aware that parking lot thieves are active. We are taking every possible action to apprehend them. However, the vast number of parking lots on the installation and limited MP resources make it impossible for MPs to continuously patrol each one. Therefore, it will take a total community effort to discourage the parking lot thief from "doing his thing." We urge you to be part of this effort by practicing good crime prevention habits, such as those enumerated above.

Army's Disciplinary Barracks no picnic according to social work officer by Mark F. Wise

Army News Service

I'm a social work officer and have been stationed at the U.S. Disciplinary Barracks (USDB) for nearly three years.

I hope this article jars you. I want you to review your life, to ask yourself questions like: "Am I involved in anything right now that I could go to jail for, either in the military or civilian community? Do my subordinates, peers, superiors or I need help in matters of finances, marriage, menial health, substance abuse, control of assaultive behavior or improved interpersonal relationships? Would my military career be affected if I sought help?"

I want you to join 20 inmates on their first day at the USDB. I want you to get to know some of them. The profiles of the inmates you'll meet are based on my interviews with several inmates. I've changed their names to protect their identities.

The USDB will try to return these inmates to civilian life with alternatives to crime, through vocational, educational, religious and mental health programs. But I want you to know that the scene you are about to witness could have been prevented.

Unfortunately, none of the people you'll meet, nor the other 1,400 USDB inmates and their families, thought this could happen to them:

Welcome to your new home.

Attennnnnshhunnn. The walls and floor vibrate as 20 indentically dressed men instinctively spring to their feet to assume statue-like positions. Eyes riveted straight ahead, the atmosphere momentarily takes on ominous properties. Ten seconds of forever follow, finally broken by the sound of one set of footsteps quickly approaching from the rear.

Suddenly the command "be seated" is issued in a manner that denotes both firmness and fairness.

As they seat themselves, each of the 20 cannot avoid feeling a sense of "basic training deja vu." They are not basic trainees at a reception station about to enter the military service; they are, instead, new inmates at the largest military maximum security prison — the U.S. Disciplinary Barracks (USDB) at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

They are being addressed by the USDB commandant, who, using a tone of voice that denotes firmness, concern and sincerity, advises the 20 receptionees to apply themselves to positive pursuits while at the USDB. He tells them that they have an opportunity to expand their horizons vocationally, educationally and personally; each will learn about himself.

Just who are these 20 individuals? What did they do to be there? What are some of the feelings and experiences they and their families go through as a result of their incarceration? What does the future hold for them and their families?

Bad checks

Former Air Force Technical Sergeant Charles Benson is about to begin a five-year sentence for passing bad checks. He, too, is present for the commandant's briefing, but he may not remember much of it.

He, like most of the receptionees, is experiencing a confusing mix of emotions and thoughts related to his conviction, as well as to the totally foreign environment and culture that he had not counted on experiencing.

He is scared and anxious about his own future, but more so about the future of his wife and two daughters, ages 5 and 3. They won't have a husband and daddy to support them financially, and how much emotional support and love can be given from a 4 feet by 8 feet cell? His family, too, is experiencing the trauma of separation and many related fears, anxieties, questions.

Benson begins to sob uncontrollably. He is slowly realizing the impact of his actions. He knows that he is going to be absent during the most critical years of his daughters' lives. He won't be able to continue to read them their favorite bedtime stories or take them on long walks in the park. He won't be present any more to lavish praise and thanks when they give him their works of art completed in their coloring books.

Although his wife says she is still "behind him," she has been forced to suddenly move off base, must survive financially, and has to deal with a myriad of friends' and relatives' criticism, all of this as a single parent with no job

Slide lecture given at chapel on mysterious Shroud of Turin

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

In 1978 the Shroud of Turin was displayed in St. John the Baptist Cathedral in Turin, Italy. More than three million people came to view the Shroud during the six week display. Its mystery continues to draw the curiosity of many.

The Kelley Hill Chapel recently invited Mr. Russell Breault of Columbus to present the Shroud of Turin slide lecture for 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers.

Breault explained that the Shroud is an ancient, yellowed linen cloth measuring approximately 14 feet long and 3½ feet wide. The cloth bears the faded image of a crucified man. It is believed by millions to be the actual burial cloth of Jesus Christ and has recently been the subject of an exhaustive scientific inquiry.

The Shroud first appeared in Western Europe in 1356. Its history since then has been carefully documented. But, the history of the Shroud from the first century until 1356 is based only on sketchy historical evidence.

The Shroud's existence at the time of Christ's death is mentioned in two passages of scripture. It was smuggled into Turkey from Jerusalem some time before 70 AD when the city was destroyed by the Romans. It was hidden in the fortified walls of Edessa in Turkey and forgotten.

Edessa, now called Urfa, was destroyed by a flood in 544. The Shroud was rediscovered during reconstruction and became known as the "Image of Edessa."

Four hundred years later, the Byzantine Imperial Army invaded Turkey and took the cloth to Constantinople (now Istanbul). The Shroud disappeared from there during the Fourth Crusade in 1204. It remained missing until 1356 when Geoffrey DeCharney, whose ancestors had taken part in the Fourth Crusade, revealed the Shroud in Lirey, France.

The DeCharney family sold the Shroud to the Duke of Savoy. The cloth was damaged in a fire in 1532 before the Savoy family sent it to Turin for safekeeping.

To this day, the cloth has been kept in the Cathedral of St. John the Baptist in Turin and is known as the Shroud of Turin.

Breault's presentation goes on to explain the findings of a scientific research team who was given permission to study the Shroud in 1978.

Kelley Hill Chap. (Capt.) Ray Harper said "I planned this presentation during Holy Week to focus on the sacrifice made by Jesus."

Harper added, "Mr. Breault's program is based on his extensive research. It gives the listeners the facts and allows them to draw their own conclusions about the image of the man on the Shroud."

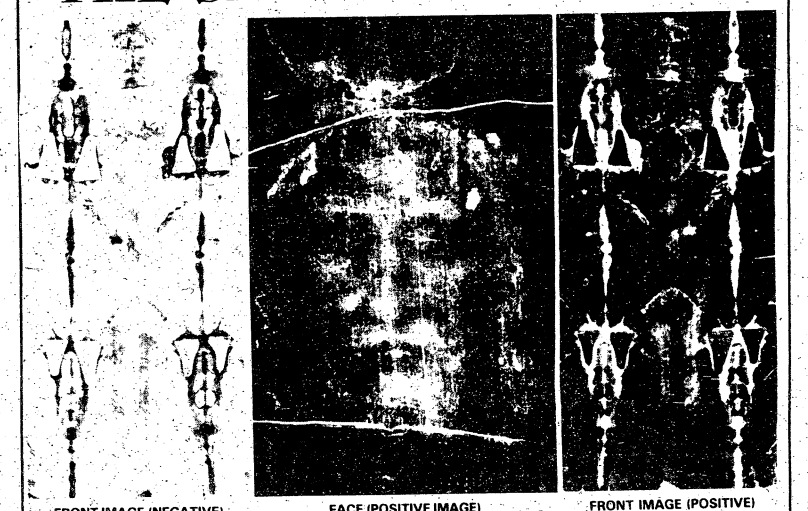
Breault has personally researched the Shroud since 1978 and has conducted over 150 lectures since 1980. He also attended the Shroud of Turin Research Symposium in 1981.

Natural laws of universe reveal unknown; disregarding them could prove tragic

Chaplain's Office

That man's sense organs are but unreliable tools to use in probing for proof of what goes on in the world will be evidenced on the Marshall Auditorium stage when Dean C. Ortner swings into his lecture-demonstration April 24 and 25 at 10:30 a.m. and 7 p.m. and April 26 and 27 at 2 and 7 p.m.

Masterminding $30,000 worth of scientific super-gadgets that he uses to supplement the lecture, Ortner makes metal float effortlessly in space, chemicals alter color at a pre-determined time, straight lines appear to bend, and a commonplace suitcase opposes the will of audience participators.



"This is not hocus-pocus; it is natural law, as discovered by science," Ortner explains.

"My purpose is not to amuse people with parlor tricks but to show that eyes and ears are such tragically feeble instruments in some realms of nature that man is reduced to the functional stature of a jellyfish in a symphony orchestra," Ortner said.

"Natural and spiritual laws we can't make. Neither can we alter them. We must discover, follow and obey them or suffer the consequences."

The upshot of the address is that science is constantly uncovering facts to indicate that there are yet untold sounds and sights of which we know nothing, that the universe is run by laws which we know only in part, and that for man to disregard these laws is simply to ask for a fatal "bump on the noggin." Much more tragic than the results that come from violation of physical laws is the risking of our eternal destiny when we do not follow God's laws for the spiritual world.

Slicing roast beef for hungry troops, 6-month cook Otis Green has been on the job since 4 a.m.

Cook's recipe for success: mix hard work, long hours

Story and photos by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Most soldiers at Fort Benning get up at 5:30 a.m. every day. That's early, but not earliest.

While most soldiers bury themselves deeper in their blankets, there are other soldiers getting up at 3:30 a.m. to be at work by 4 a.m. They're cooks.

Every morning, rain or shine, snow or sun, sick or well, the cooks at the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, like cooks all over post, fry bacon and sausage, get eggs ready, boil up huge vats of grits and chop, carve and grate their way to another breakfast.

In an almost symphonic-like blending of many different talents and skills, the end results of their efforts are the sounds and smells of breakfast: bacon sizzling and popping, eggs gurgling on the grill in hot fat, the raspy scrape of toast being buttered and the thick splash of creamed beef on toast. Juxtaposed with these sounds is the assault of smells that lazily waft through the dining facility, beckoning hungry soldiers.

"I've been a cook for three-and-a-half-years now," says SP4 Samuel Townsend

"When I first talked to my recruiter I wanted to be a truck driver, but he said there was a long waiting list for that. He said he could get me into the Army immediately, though, if I signed up as a cook. I did, but I didn't like it at first. My mind has changed about that now, though. Being a cook is a good job but a hard job, too," Townsend says

Townsend enjoys being a cook because it's different from what most soldiers do.

"Most soldiers have to do a lot of different things everyday. You know, working on vehicles today, guard duty tomorrow, something else the next day," he said.

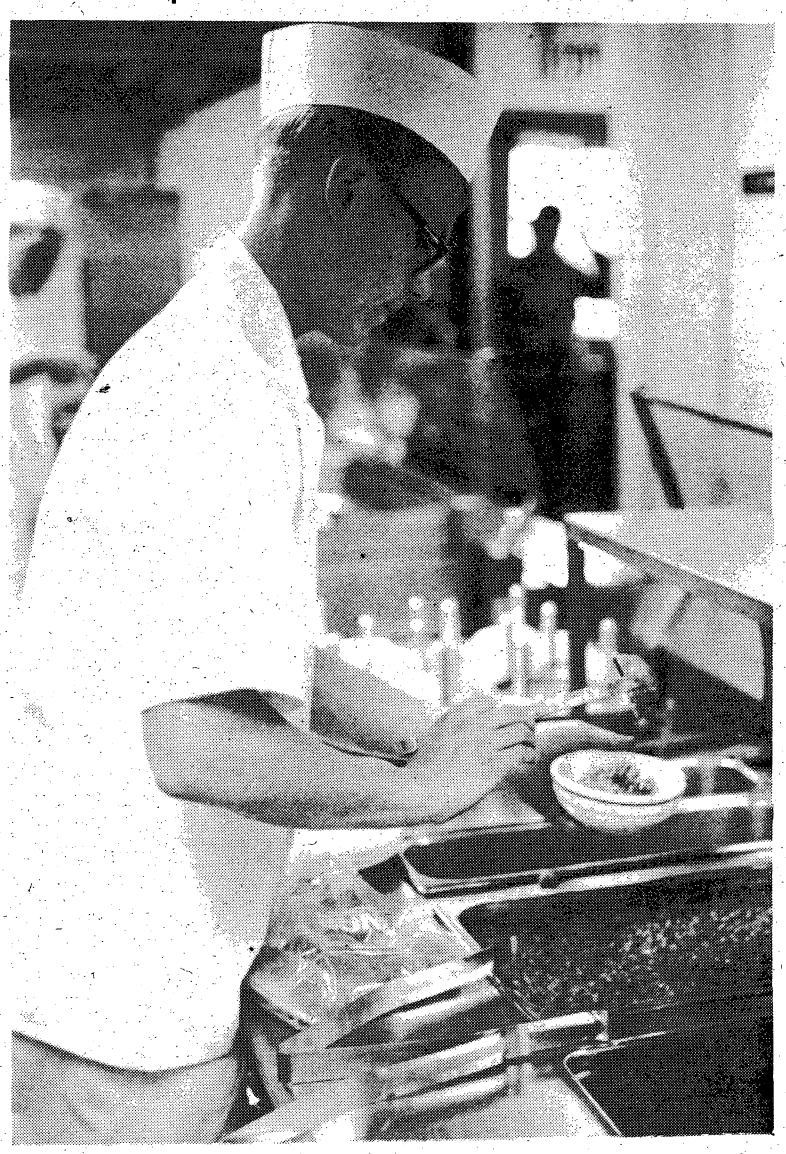
"But I know what I'm going to be doing every day: putting out the best meals that myself and the other cooks possibly can," Townsend said proudly.

"Other soldiers think we have a sham job, but that's not true. Our job is especially tough when we have to do field cooking. We constantly work out of trucks and sometimes we'll be in the middle of preparing a meal and get a march order to move. We have to load everything up and go to another position and get the meal out. That's hard work," Townsend said.

In the 197th, cooks work seven days a week for two weeks and then work for five days, getting weekends off, two weeks in a row, if the unit they share weekend duties with isn't in the field. If the unit is in the field, soldiers have to be fed and the cooks end up working seven days a week.

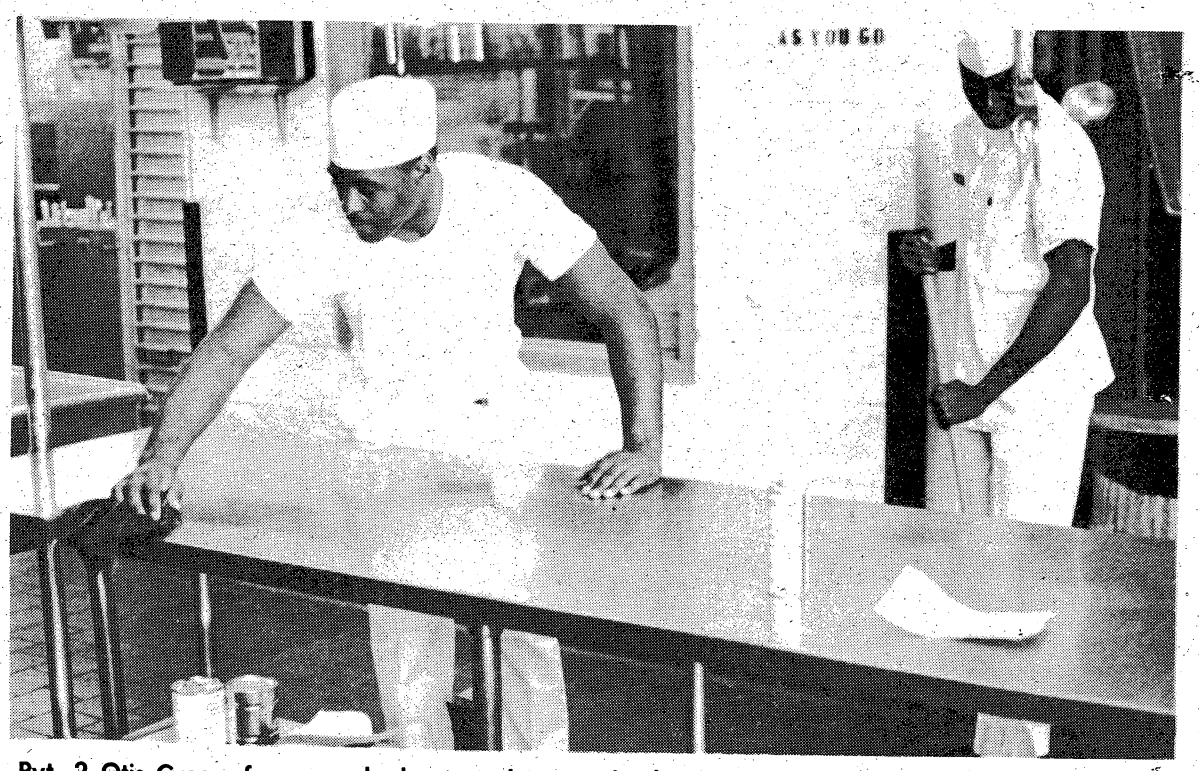
SSgt. Max Hall has been an Army cook for over 14 years. He is a trim man who smokes Camel cigarettes, wears black, Army-issue glasses and who has seen a lot of changes in the way the Army feeds soldiers.

"When I first came into the Army, the food was plain and simple in what was then called the mess hall. There were no extras and usually only one meat. If there were two meats to choose from it was usually something like polish sausage or liver. What a choice," said Hall, smiling.



"Now, we call our mess halls dining facilities. The choices a soldier has in food items have really changed from the sausage and liver days," Hall said.

"We've got a short order line, a regular menu line with a choice of at least two meats; we have a salad bar, soft drink dispensers with a variety of sodas, milk, iced tea and two or three different desserts. Things really have improved," he pointed out.



The lunch line in the 2-10th dining facility on Tuesday featured pot roast, veal parmesan, broccoli spears, mixed vegetables, brown gravy, mashed potatoes, fried chicken, tuna salad sandwiches, grilled cheese sandwiches, french fries, baked beans, three salads, a salad bar, butter scotch brownies, chocolate cake and fresh fruit.

"Army dining facilities have changed in atmosphere, also. The eating areas are more homey and comfortable. We have drapes on the windows, flowers on the tables, pictures on the wall, music and comfortable seating. We want our dining facilities to be a place for soldiers to eat and relax, a place for them to cool out for awhile," said Hall.

As the lunch meal came to a close, the cooks of the 2-10th began pulling menu cards and getting pots and pans together. Many of them had been in the kitchen before other soldiers were out of bed and many of them would be working long after other soldiers were off. Their work was just beginning. They had supper to put out. Soldiers have to be fed; rain or shine, snow or sun, sick or well.

This field artillery kitchen expert dishes up a bowl of beans for hungry soldiers.

Hospital accredited

Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital has been awarded a certificate of accreditation by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals. JCAH accreditation is evidence of Martin Army Community Hospital's efforts to provide quality health care to the soldiers, their family members and the retirees in the Fort Benning-Columbus-Phenix City area.

To become accredited, MACH voluntarily requested an on-site evaluation by JCAH surveyors who applied standards designed to further the objectives of quality patient care and the safety of the environment in which that care is provided. These national standards represent a consensus among health care professionals and are periodically updated to reflect changes in health care delivery.

The JCAH survey team, consisting of health care professionals trained to evaluate the hospital's efforts to provide quality care, arrived Sept. 18, 1985 for two days of extensive review and evaluation of MACH. The process consisted of an on-site evaluation based on realistic, nationally recognized standards. Based on this survey and review of records, the JCAH awarded MACH a three year certificate of accreditation. The news of the accreditation was forwarded to MACH in early March.

JCAH is a private, non-profit organization created by and composed of health care professionals. It is governed by a board of commissioners whose members are appointed by the American College of Surgeons, American College of Physicians, American Dental Association, American Hospital Association and the American Medical Association.

Azalea festival opens at Callaway Gardens

Once again the stillness of Callaway Gardens has been interrupted by the vibrant colors of azaleas and spring flowers that herald the beginning of spring in the South. And to celebrate nature's reawakening, Callaway Gardens will offer its famous Azalea Festival during the peak weekends of azalea bloom: Saturday and Sunday and April 12 and 13.

During the Azalea Festival weekends, Callaway Gardens will feature an unequaled display of springtime blossoms and activities for the whole family.

Visitors can enjoy walking, riding or biking the Gardens' 2,500 acreas of scenic drives and walking trails, strolling through the one-of-a-kind John A. Sibley Horticultural Center, or paddling a canoe or paddleboat across shimmering Mountain Creek Lake.

The Azalea Festival begins at Robin Lake Beach where Callaway Gardens is offering free bus transportation throughout the Gardens on high-traffic weekends. Buses will depart every five minutes and run continuously, allowing visitors to enjoy each area Gardens as long as they wish.

One of the most popular stops along the route is the colorful Azalea Bowl and Trails at the Overlook Pavilion. Featuring more than 700 varieties of cultivated and native azaleas, the walking trails are filled with the sweet fragrance of spring flowers and dogwoods. Old-fashioned cloggers will be on hand to provide entertainment. Another favorite stop on the festival tour is the unique five-acre John A. Sibley Horticultural Center. This year the Sibley Center's Floral Conservatory features hydrangeas, Easter lilies, cinerarias, pansies, bulbs, and hanging baskets of red and purple fuchsias. Classical musicians will provide music each weekend, creating the beauty of sound as well as sight.

Admission price during the Azalea Festival weekends is $5 for adults and $1 for children ages 6 to 11. On weekdays, the regular admission price of $4 for

Harp/ flute duo to perform with Columbus Symphony

The Columbus Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Harry Kruger, will present its fourth subscription concert of the 1985-1986 season at 8 p.m. April 12 at the Three Arts Theatre at 1020 Talbotton Road, with guest soloists Heidi Lehwalder - harpist, and Carol Wincenc - flutist. The concert is sponsored by American Family Life.

Lehwalder has been considered one of the extraordinary harpists of the world since her early teens. She made her concert debut with the Seatlle Symphony when she was 9 years old. At 12 she was the youngest competitor at the Tel Aviv International Harp Competition, where her remarkable gift won her a major prize. She is associated with Carlos Salzedo's Harp Colony and was fortunate to work directly with the master of the modern harp.

Lehwalder's talent and style have inspired the composition of harp concertos written for and dedicated to her.

Wincenc has joined the ranks of the country's most outstanding flutists since winning the first prize in the 1978 Naumburg Solo Flute Competition. She had appeareed frequently in all of New York's most important concert halls, was a guest soloist on Lincoln Center's "Great Performers" series for four consecutive seasons and has collaborated with such distinguished colleagues as Jean Pierre Rampel, Bella Davidovich, Jessye Norman, Arleen Auger, Emanuel Ax and the Guarneri and Tokyo String Quartets.

Lehwalder and Wincenc have performed together many times and for their appearance with he Colunbus Symphony, they are planning to perform the Mozart concerto for flute and harp. Each will also perform a solo piece with the orchestra.

Tickets for the concert are on sale in the symphony office at 208 13th Street between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. They are also availble at the Three Arts Theatre from 10 a.m. the day of the concert. The price is $10 for adults and $3 for students.

Local artists-in-residence at schools regale students with poetry, prose

by Olin Harp
Fort Benning Schools

Students, teachers, and parents celebrated nine weeks of creative writing at Faith Middle School recently by hearing stories and poems read by the artists-in-residence, Richard Keeto and Sharyn Kane.

The program marked the end of the writing residency sponsored by the Fort Benning Schools, Georgia Council for the Arts, and National Endowment for the Arts.

There were poems about alligators, beggars, the wind, and stories on topics from science fiction to losing a friend. "We've been impressed by all of the student talent here," said Kane. "There's no shortage either of imagination or ability to convey ideas effectively on paper."

Keeton added, "Our goal has been to build on the writing skills Faith's language arts teachers are developing and to stir up enthusiasm for storytelling. We've seen all of the 860 students over the past two months and are happy to say that every one of them has written something original."

The husband and wife writing team, who are also contributing editors of "Atlanta" magazine, demonstrated some of the techniques they use in the classroom to motivate students. The audience heard jazz that the students had written lyrics for, as well as seeing a reproduction of a painting by Vincent Van Gogh that inspired other stories.

Computer students typed copies of many of the stories for display in the cafeteria so that throughout the evening visitors could see a sampling of what has been accomplished.

Another highlght was a performance by a sixth grade group of singers called the Performers, directed by Mrs. Libbie Kurinec, a language arts teacher.

National Honor Society members provided dessert and babysitting for the event, which Gail Wilson, assistant principal, said was the culmination of a year of planning.

"We've been delighted with the impact the artists have had in the school," she said, "and we hope to participate in the program again with an artist from another discipline next year. Bringing professional artists into the classroom shows students how a writer works and helps them develop their own talent. There's also an advantage for teachers, who can see how people are writing full-time go about getting ideas for writing."

Vicki Marks, who volunteers in arranging community activities such as classes at Columbus College for the artists, was given a silver bowl in appreciation from the school.

School boards impact on children

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Parents of children attending Fort Benning Schools set the direction for their children's schools through an elected school board.

An 11-member elected board, made up of parents of children attending the schools, meets monthly to set district policy and provide general direction to the system. Members are elected for two-year terms, with each of the eight schools having a representative on the board. In addition to the eight school representatives, the board includes a president, a chaplain and a lawyer. Members' terms are staggered so that the board will include experienced board members each year.

School board elections will be May 20. Board seats up for election for two-year terms are the representatives from the McBride, Wilbur, Patch, Wilson, and Faith Schools, and the seats designated to be filled by a president, lawyer and chaplain. A candidate will also need to be elected to represent the White School for one year to fill an unexpired term.

To be eligible to run as a candidate for a school, an individual must be the parent or guardian of a child enrolled in the school during the time he or she serves on the board and must not be an employee or related to any school system employee.

The school board meets on the last Monday of each month at 4 p.m., in the Administrative Conference Room. The board considers school policies, approves the budget, approves personnel selections, approves curriculum changes and functions in much the same way as do school boards in civilian communities.

Current elected board members are Col. Benjamin Sims, president; Capt. William Allinder, JAG representative; Lt. Col. Donald McSwain, chaplain; Lt. Col. Carl Ernst, Faith School; Sara McCrary, White School; Celeste Battle, McBride School; Tandy Shields, Dexter School; Elaine Kendall, Loyd School; 1st Sgt. William Patterson, Wilbur School and Anne Mace, Patch School; skills.

Benson's mind again begins to whirl with questions like "will she wait for me? Why didn't I seek financial guidance before I wrote those bad checks to cover that mountain of seemingly insurmountable bills? How will I survive prison?" Benson, like most inmates, used to think of criminals as "they." Now "they" have become "I." He sees himself as a failure.

Child molesting

Inmate Lowell Brown is seated in the back of the room as the commandant speaks. He is beginning a three-year sentence for indecent acts with a child — his two daughters. Brown was an outstanding Army noncommissioned officer during his 19½ years of service. He was a master sergeant and had planned to retire and start his own business. His first day at the USDB marked what would have been his 20th anniversary of entering military service.

A detailed description of Brown's offenses and family situation is a mirror of his youth: Brown grew up in a family where he and his two sisters were sexually abused by their father, an alcoholic. His parents' relationship with each other was never close. His father worked long h[illegible] and, during the little time he was home, his mother was out "with the girls." Consequently, his father spent a lot of time alone with his children, the oldest daughter soon taking on more of a "substitute wife" role.

Eventually, he began abusing her sexually on a regular basis, as well as Brown and his other sister on occasions. These incentuous activities were kept a secret through his father's physical and psychological threats of beatings and a broken family if "mommy" were to find out.

By sexually abusing his children and making no effort to improve communication with his wife, Brown's father instilled negative self-images and poor communication skills in his children. He effectively promoted emotional distance between them and adults in general, indirectly encouraging sexual relationships with children, which was less threatening than with adults.

Rapist

Former Sgt. Thomas Reed saw himself as quite a ladies' man, and almost every Friday and Saturday night could be found at the NCO club drunk and in search of a female. Reed believed there are two kinds of women: those one marries and those one has "fun" with.

While at the club, he struck up a conversation with a female soldier whom he knew, and she agreed to dance with him. With his mind set on one type of "activity" that night, he interpreted everything she did as an invitation to sex.

The rest of the story is not uncommon. They left the club together, she liking him and under the impression that he was only going to give her a ride back to her barracks. Reed was under the impression that she, through her manner of dress and body language, was going to submit to him sexually. On the way back to her barracks, he pulled the car over to the side of the road. He kept persistng with his advances, even though she kept rejecting him.

Reed became more and more enraged, as he viewed her as going back on an unspoken but presumed sexual agreement. He slapped her, ripped her clothes off and forced her to perform oral sex on him before [illegible] made her submit to intercourse. Afterwards, he threw her out.

Musicians hit the right note with Benning school children

by Linda Dennis
Fort Benning Schools

The third in a series of Fine Arts Assemblies sponsored by the Officers' Wives' Club was presented for students in the Fort Benning Schools March 5 and 7. Dr. Ronald Wirt, Assistant Professor of Music at Columbus College, and Karen Ann Krieger, former professor of piano at Columbus College, presented the program.

Wirt plays first bassoon with the Columbus Symphony and also teaches and performs with the Southeastern Music Center in LaGrange. In the program, Wirt demonstrated the construction of the bassoon and the different range of sounds made by the instrument.

Students enjoyed a variety of musical selections which included "Grandfather" solo from Prokoviev's "Peter and the Wolf," "Sonata in F Minor" by G.F. Telemann, "Pink Panther" by Henry Mancini, "Alfred Hitchcock Theme" by C. Gounod, "Passepied" by Marcel Bitsch, and "Tarantella" by Ludwig Milde.

The fourth and last in the series of Fine Arts Programs will be the performance by a harpist on April 28, 29 and 30.

MSgt. Erich Buljung of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit scored victories in the final two events of this years Interservice Pistol Championships March 24 to 28.

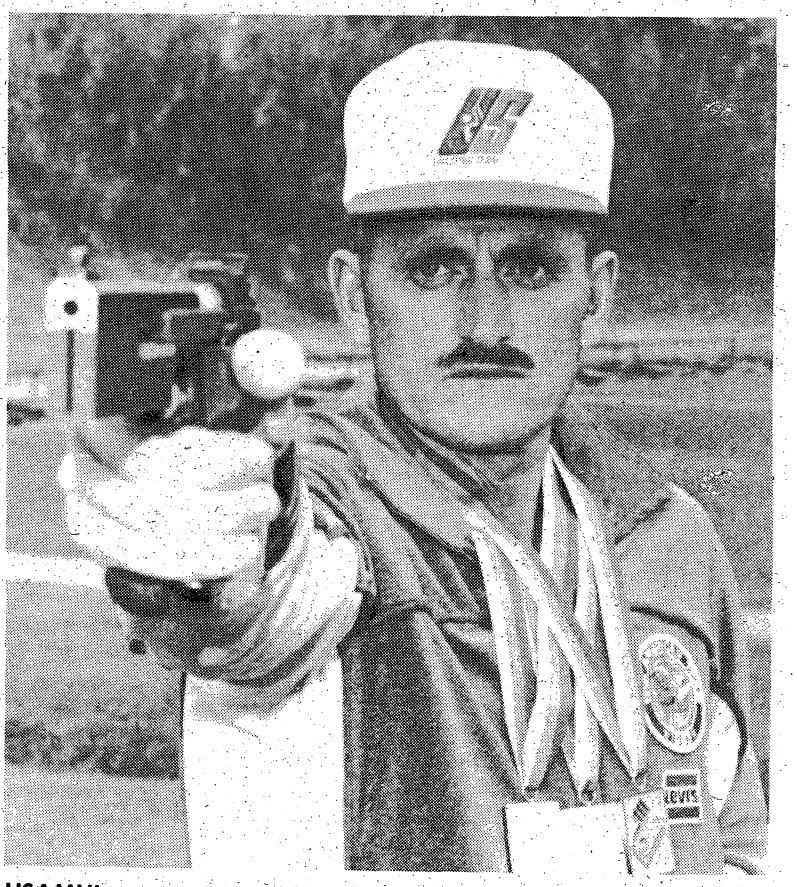
Last week's matches began with early championships taken by members of the Army Reserve and U.S. Marine Corps teams in Standard Pistol, Rapid Fire and 50-Meter Free Pistol.

After a silver and bronze medal finish in the Free Pistol and Standard Pistol events, Buljung regained his usual winning form to outdistance the field in both the Center Fire and Military Pistol championships.

His final score of 597 out of 600 in the Center Fire event set a new interservice record by three points and also equalled the current world mark. SFC Phil Krosofsky, USA MEDDAC here, placed second with a total of 590, while SSgt. Andy Moody, USMC, finished third at 589.

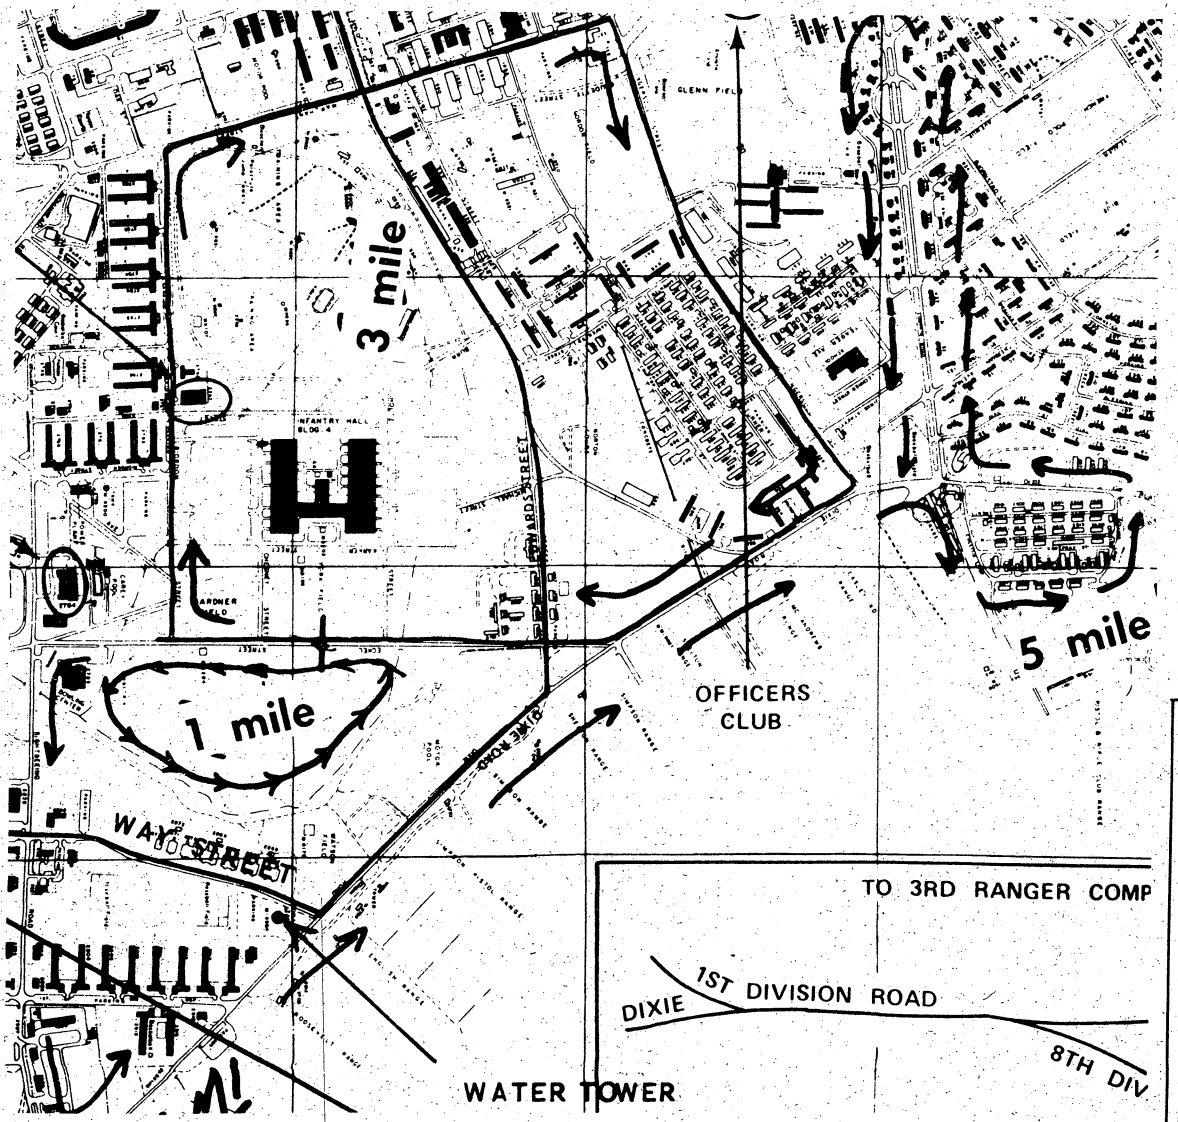
Buljung also led the competition in the Military Pistol event by a margin of 52 points with a final aggregate of 3552 out of 3600 possible points. SFC James Laguana of USAMU, placed second with 3500, while GySgt. Allen Heckart, USMC and SFC Jimmie McCoy, USAMU, tied for third at 3494.

Other medal winners from USAMU included SFC Jimmie McCoy with a silver medal in the Free Pistol championship and a bronze medal finish in the 10-Meter Air Pistol event. In Rapid Fire competition, former member Capt. John McNally, now with the 10th Mountain Division, placed second in the event after losing a shoot-off for first place. He was followed in third place and the bronze medal by SFC Wesley Vaughn of USAMU.



In team competition, the USAMU "Blue" squad won the 50-Meter Free Pistol championship by three points over the Army Reserve "Gold" squad. The "Blue" team members of Buljung, McCoy and SSgt. Gary Marsh combined for a winning total of 1656 out of 1800, while the USAR team finished with 1653. Third place in the event went to the USMC "Scarlet" team with a total of 1614.

Members of the Army's "Blue" team also scored a silver medal finish in the Rapid Fire, Center Fire and 10-Meter Air Pistol events.



The Interservice Championships were also used as final tryouts for this year's United States CISM Team that will participate in the annual CISM Shooting Championships. The 1986 matches will be August 2 - 10, in Ota, Portugal.

Those individuals selected to the U.S. Pistol team included Buljung, SFC's James Laguana, Jimmie McCoy and Wesley Vaughn, all from USAMU. Also selected were MSgt. Ricardo Rodriguez and GySgt. Allen Heckart of the U.S. Marine Corps.

The remaining U.S. Rifle team will be selected during the Interservice Rifle Championships in May, which will be here.

USAMU's current world record holder, MSgt. Erich Buljung, won two events and set another new record during this year's Interservice Pistol Championship.

Festival of Running this Saturday

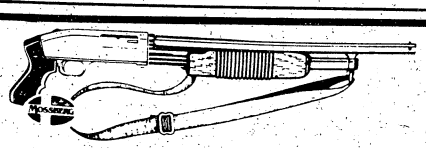
by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Runners will don the appropriate clothing, sneakers and winning spirits as they take to the streets of Fort Benning for the 3rd Annual Officers' Wives' Club Festival of Running tomorrow.

The festival will feature six different races. Individual events include one, three, and five-mile runs, while units will compete in the three and five-mile formation runs.

Also featured will be a 30-mile relay. Teams will consist of six members, each running a five-mile leg in the relay.

A special division within the one-mile run will be the 'Slogger Jogger Run' for women over 30.To qualify, their finish times must be more than 8:30.



The festival will begin and end at Infantry Hall, Building 4.

More than 475 awards will be presented, including best unit trophies for the three- and five-mile formation runs.

Those registering late can do so today from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Youth Activities Gym or beginning at 7 a.m. and continuing until 15 minutes before race start time tomorrow.

Late registration fees are $6 for runners under 15; $7 for those over 15; and $48 per team.

Unit commanders interested in entering their units in the formation runs should contact LTC Bill Hughes at 689-1934, or Maj. Tom Green at 544-2853, for details.

A 4 DAY SALE SO GREAT, IT NEEDS NO GIMMICKS.

NO GIMMICKS. JUST GREAT PRICES.

Gimmicks, False Prices and Phony Interest Rates Don't Make A Great Car Sale. Great Prices Do!!

- Just $175.00 over invoice on any 1986 Grand Prix or Bonneville

- Any 1986 Grand Prix or Bonneville can be yours for just $175 over invoice. We can't be more straight forward than that unless you'd like a 1985.

- Any 1985 new Pontiac $300 Under Invoice!!
- How grand is our selection? We have one of the largest inventories in our history, over 400 new and used cars to choose from.

- How great is our financing? We have several banks and GMAC financing. When you sell as many cars as we do, you have a lot of financing options. This means the best possible service to you.

The Sale is Friday, Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

Last Few Days of GMAC 9.9% Financing On Select Models

Special Allocation of 1986 Grand Ams

We have received the largest selection of Pontiacs. Best selling Grand Ams that we've ever had and for 4 days they will be on sale.

This is the first time in Jay Pontiac history that we've received this type of allocation and the factory says if we sell them all in April, we can have more in May. So every Grand Am in stock will be on sale. These cars are all well equipped with air, auto, stereos and many other options. Oh yes, there are loaded one's also and they will be on sale. You won't have to argue or order to get the sale prices!!!!

8 soldiers killed in Fort Stewart chopper crash

Associated Press

HINESVILLE, Ga. — Investigators began combing through the wreckage of two Army helicopters yesterday to determine what caused them to crash near one another at Fort Stewart, killing all eight soldiers aboard.

Lt. Col. James Arnold, Fort Stewart public affairs officer, said a CH-47-D Chinook helicopter carrying six soldiers and an AH-1S Cobra helicopter carrying two soldiers crashed about 800 meters apart in a remote area of the post about 9 p.m. Wednesday.

The helicopters had taken off on training flights earlier Wednesday from Hunter Army Airfield, in Savannah, about 35 miles east of Fort Stewart, Arnold said. The airfield houses all helicopters and planes used by Fort Stewart personnel, he said.

"The crashes probably were related. They were very close to each other. They happened at the same time. But how they occurred we don't know yet," Arnold said. "No landing or takeoff was involved to my knowledge.

The post began a preliminary investigation Wednesday night. The official investigation and removal of the bodies began when a team arrived from Fort Rucker, Ala., at 7 a.m. yesterday.

The identities of the eight soldiers, all from Stewart, were withheld pending notification of relatives.

Capt. Thomas Nixon said the crash site is near the Range Control building. Controllers there are in radio contact with helicopters, but Nixon said there was no immediate indication that pilots of either helicopter had reported problems.

"The helicopters were found to be somewhat intact with some scattered debris in a small area," Nixon said.

"The Cobra burned, but the Chinook did not burn. Whether or not (the Cobra) burned after it hit, or whether it burned on the way down is undetermined at this time," he said yesterday.

Infantry leaders converge on post for conference

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Army infantry leaders from around the globe converged on Fort Benning Monday for the annual Infantry Conference.

Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh attended the conference, as well as Gen. John A. Wickham, Jr., Army Chief of Staff, and Training and Doctrine Command commander, Gen. William Richardson.

The infantry leaders attending the conference were given briefings and demonstrations on the M-1 Battle Tank, the M-2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle and the concept of how to fight them together.

There were also briefings on employment of military forces in low intensity conflict, panel discussions on light infantry forces and training the infantry force and equipping it.

The highlight of the conference was a firepower capability exercise yesterday

HTLV -III test required for soldiers on PCS orders to Hawaii or Alaska

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers scheduled for permanent change of station to Hawaii and Alaska will be required to have a negative HTLV-III antibody test in their personnel jackets beginning May 16.

According to Maj. Joseph Quinn, deputy Adjustant General, this is the latest addition to Army policy on HTLV-III testing.

Since the Army announced testing of initial entry soldiers in October 1985, a personnel policy has been established to handle those who test positive.

Soldiers with less than 120 days service who test positive for the antibody are discharged under honorable conditions, for a medical condition that "existed prior to service.".

Permanent party soldiers testing positive are given a 12-month temporary profile that limits their duty assignment to the continental United States. Assignments to lst Special Operations Command and COHORT units are prohibited due to this restriction.

Soldiers already assigned overseas are being shipped back to the states and given a 12-month stabilization assignment, which is reevaluted on a yearly basis.

According to Lt.Col. Paul Weddle, Adjutant General, the Army's policy on the subject is still in the study and development stage.

"At this point, the only policy is that we're testing for HTLV-III antibody and those new soldiers testing positive aren't allowed into the Army and permanent party are stabilized for 12 months," he said.

Soldiers with more progressive symptoms of the disease are turned over to the medical department activity for evaluation, he said. If their condition warrants, they can be discharged for medical reasons. This determination must be made through the medical disability system, Weddle said.

The Army's approach to the HTLV-III antibody and related AIDS syndrome is that it is a debilitating medical condition, to be handled like any other medical problem.

Soldiers with the antibody need to be identified for several reasons.

Positive individuals could experience adverse reactions to immunizations given prior to deployment, possibly life threatening ones.

Those soldiers are not eligible to donate blood, due to the possiblity of passing the virus on to others. The Army blood supply has been tested for presence of the antibody since July 1985, making blood safe for transfusion.

While the Army policy is not to separate positive soldiers who exhibit no symptoms of progressive disease, there are certain cases where soldiers may be separated from service.

According to Lt. Col. Douglas Franklin at the Staff Judge Advocate's office, these must be evaluated on an individual, case-by-case basis.

April declared military child month: Army kids facing unique problems

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

April has been declared the Month of the Military Child and with good reason. Military children are like their civilian counterparts but they are also very different.

These differences and likenesses need to be looked at.

Just like civilian children, military kids like candy and toys, movies and skating, sports and watching television. Military kids have the same moans and groans when its time for bed, homework has to be done or the lawn needs clipping.

Little things begin to crop up, though, little differences, when you talk with a military child.

If you ask a civilian child where he vacationed last summer, you would probably get replies like "Disneyland," "The Grand Canyon" or "to grandma's house." Ask that same question to military kids and you get answers like "skiing the Zugspitze in West Germany," "visiting the museums in Paris" or "climbing Mount Fuji in Japan." Most military kids will tell you this in a rather blase fashion because they travel so much. They know all about jet lag and which airline serves the best food.

Military kids are great for teachers in history or art. These Army offspring have been to Flander's Fields, to the Parthenon in Greece, they've seen the Magna Carta in England. Because of their experiences and travelling in these countries they enrich the classroom and, in general, the world around them.

But moving around takes its toll, too.

Kids, like it or not, form cliques. You know, little groups comprised of people who don't like outsiders.

Every child wants to belong to a clique. When military kids start school they're newbies. Established cliques don't want them and they're on the outside looking in and it is quite painful for them. That invisible barrier of friendship is hard for them to cross.

Once the barrier is breached, however, and military kids make best friends, get settled into a community and become ensconced in their new surroundings, the father or mother gets orders sending them somewhere else.

As the family packs up everything in anticipation of the movers coming, the military children say goodby to their friends, teachers and their home and move on, to new cliques, new similar teachers, and new communities.

Most military kids will tell you, however, that because of loving families, understanding Army leaders and because of other military kids going through the same things, they all stand up pretty well to the anxiety and harshness that accompanies moving to a new place.

In this Month of the Military Child, local civilian children should tap the vein of rich experience military kids have within them in order to know the world better. Military kids, in turn, should seek out the friendship of civilian kids to better understand what living in one place one's whole life means. Together, military and civilian children can each profit from shared views of very similar but decidedly different worlds.

Op-Ed

Bare-bones minimum to success: work hard, get job done

by William J. Kepper University of Alaska

It has been said that the membership of an organization is made up of FOUR BONES.

1. The WISH BONES, who spend all their time just wishing that someone else would do all the work.

2. The JAW BONES, who do a lot of talking, but very little of anything else.

3. The KNUCKLE BONES, who knock everything that anyone else tries to do.

4. The BACK BONES, who get under the load and get the job done.

I have always made it a practice of closely observing persons in positions of leadership. I have found that this habit served as a means of improving my own leadership ability.

I once worked for a very fine general, the former dean of the faculty at the U.S. Air Force Academy, Dr. Peter Richard Moody. I used to seek his guidance and advice on many matters and on leadership in particular.

I remember asking Dr. Moody one day what was the single most important factor to which he would attribute his success in the military. He pondered this awhile and replied.

"I would have to say, Bill, that the key to my success has been that in every job I ever had, I always totally dedicated myself to making my boss's job as easy as possible."

But what about those common qualities of good leaders?

FIRST, most leaders have learned how to be good followers. They embrace the old adage that loyalty flows up as well as down. Regardless of your position in life, you will always have a senior. You must be loyal to that senior. You are a member of an organization. You must be loyal to that organization. I know all of you are.

SECOND, I have observed that most leaders do not try to avoid responsibility. Somebody must be in charge, and it might as well be me. They enjoy authority but do not abuse their power, and they possess the ability to get things accomplished by exercising that power. They readily accept the increased risk and accountability. They seem to be basically competitive individuals, possessing a high degree of pride, and they satisfy that pride in achieving productive ends. More simply stated, they are fighters with a strong will to win.

A THIRD quality that most leaders have is good "people sense." In other words, they are very aware of people and know how to relate well to others. They keep their pulse on the feelings of their personnel, and, in a very timely manner, take those actions that foster good morale and esprit de corps.

I have found also that most leaders maintain what I call a "people memory bank." As they progress through their careers, they make a point of keeping track of those persons who have reputations for good performance. They retain information on individuals in their people file and seek to have these people assigned with them. And that really is the key to being a successful leader. Surround yourself with good people and inspire them to do their best.

FOURTH, most leaders are highly disciplined. They set well-defined goals and are able to channel their resources to achieve their objectives. They can and do set strict priorities and resist temptations to engage in nonproductive pursuits. A particularly important type of discipline is what I call "intellectual" discipline. It i the ability to use mental skills in analyzin complex problems and in developing sim ple, logical, well-thought-out solutions.

FIFTH, it goes without saying that leac ers are intelligent. Of all terms in our vc cabulary, "intelligence" is the one mos often misunderstood. Certainly, intell gence entails possessing a wealth c knowledge, but, more importantly, intell gence connotes the ability to perceive th important.

SIXTH, I have noted most leaders pos sess a high degree of stamina — the abilit to keep themselves going for long period of time. They are seemingly tireless, abl to drive themselves

SEVENTH, they have moral courage — to know right from wrong, to possess a firm set of ethics and values, and the strength to live by those same ethics and values, and to do what is right regardless of the consequences. Good leaders realize that in any organization there must be complete truth and honesty or the organization will not function well. Good leaders live by a high standard of honor in every aspect of their lives.

Testing for HTLV-III AIDS antibody begins for active duty

Preventive Medicine

The Army is currently testing active duty soldiers for the presence of HTLV-III antibody, which is a substance produced in the body in response to invasion by the HTLV-III virus, also known as the AIDS virus. The test is not for Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS), but for the HTLV-III antibody.

A positive test indicates that at some time in the past the soldier was infected with the HTLV-III virus. It also serves as a warning that the soldier can transmit the virus to others, through sexual contact and through blood transfusion.

The virus is not transmitted by casual contact in the barracks or at work but only by exchange of body fluids, including blood, semen and possibly vaginal mucous. The virus is often spread among drug abusers by sharing needles. Soldiers are warned not to share razors, toothbrushes, or other personal items that could become contaminated with blood. The risk of transmission to others in schools, workplaces, dining facilities and hospitals is minimal. Family members of 12,000 AIDS patients were studied, and no family members, other than sexual contacts, developed evidence of HTLV-III infection.

The Army's testing program is not new. All blood donors have been checked since June 1985. Fort Benning began testing all new basic trainees in October and all soldiers with sexually transmitted diseases (STD's) have been tested since December. Since February all soldiers with Permanent Change of Station order sending them overseas have been tested and high priority, readily deployable units are now being tested. Within one year, all active-duty soldiers will have been tested.

Civilian studies have shown that most AIDS cases occur in homosexuals and intravenous (IV) drug abusers. The Army has found that a substantial number of AIDS cases occur in heterosexual males, who contract the HTLV-III virus from infected female prostitutes.

Promiscuity breeds AIDS. The HTLV-III virus can be transmitted from men to women and from women to men, as well as through homosexual contacts. Those who have sexual relations with multiple partners run the greatest risk of contracting the virus.

A soldier at Fort Benning who is found to have a positive HTLV-III test is admitted to Martin Army Community Hospital and transferred to Eisenhower Army Medical Center for complete medial evaluation. HTLV-III infection exists in six stages, Stage 1 having only the HTLV-III antibody and no sign of the disease while Stage 6 is AIDS. Soldiers in Stages 1 through 4 are returned to their units, barred from overseas assignments and scheduled for semiannual medical evaluations. Soldiers in Stages 5 and 6 receive medical discharges from the Army.

Guidelines for avoiding infection by the AIDS virus include:

1. Do not have sexual contact with persons known or suspected of having AIDS.

2. Do not have sex with multiple partners, or with homosexuals or prostitutes, or other people who have had multiple partners.

3. Do not abuse IV drugs and do not have sex with people who abuse IV drugs.

Soldiers, as well as dependents and retirees, may request the HTLV-III test at their usual medical treatment facilities. Individuals with positive tests are referred to the Preventive Medicine Service, Building 66 Main Post, for epidemiologic assessment, counselling and referral to the hospital for medica evaluation.

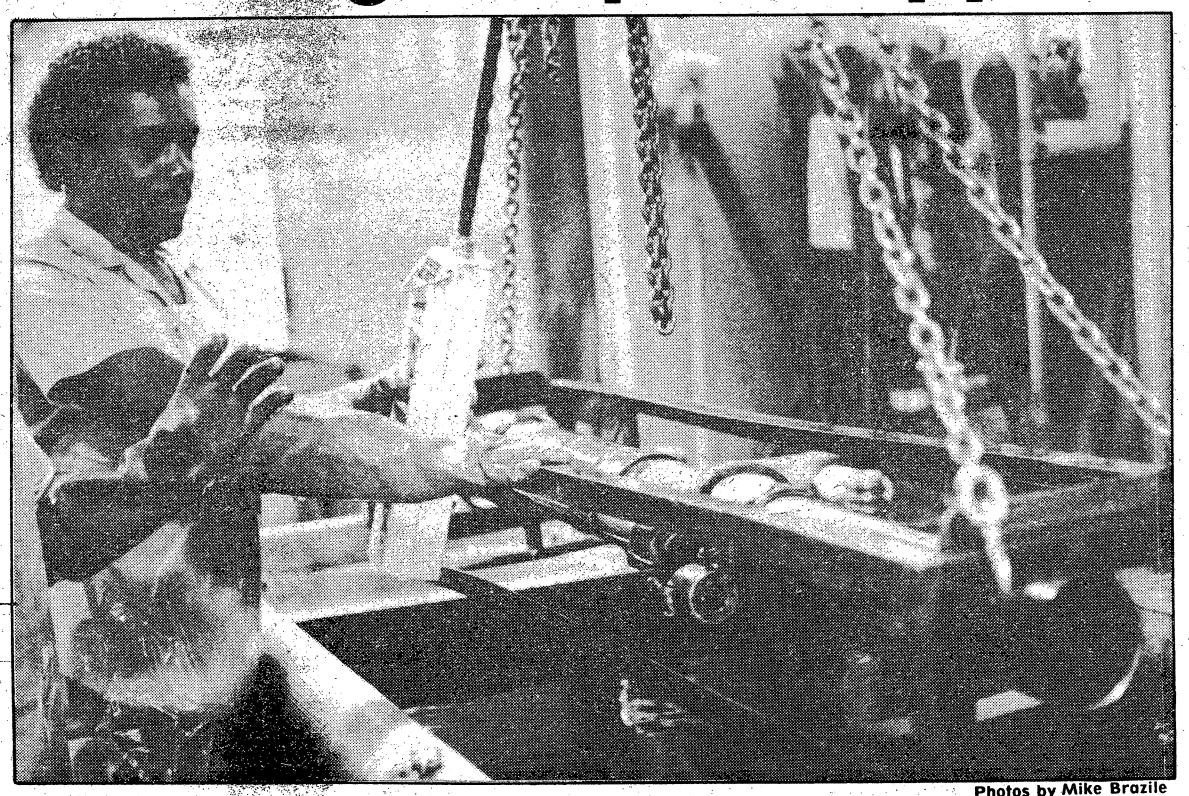
Weapons Pool right on target in post support

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

When Infantry School students need weapons to train with, they sometimes find themselves awash with rifles, pistols and machine guns from Fort Benning's Weapon's Pool.

"We have just about any type of contemporary weapon in the Army inventory available here for issue," said Mr. James Starling, Chief of Weapons Pool Branch.

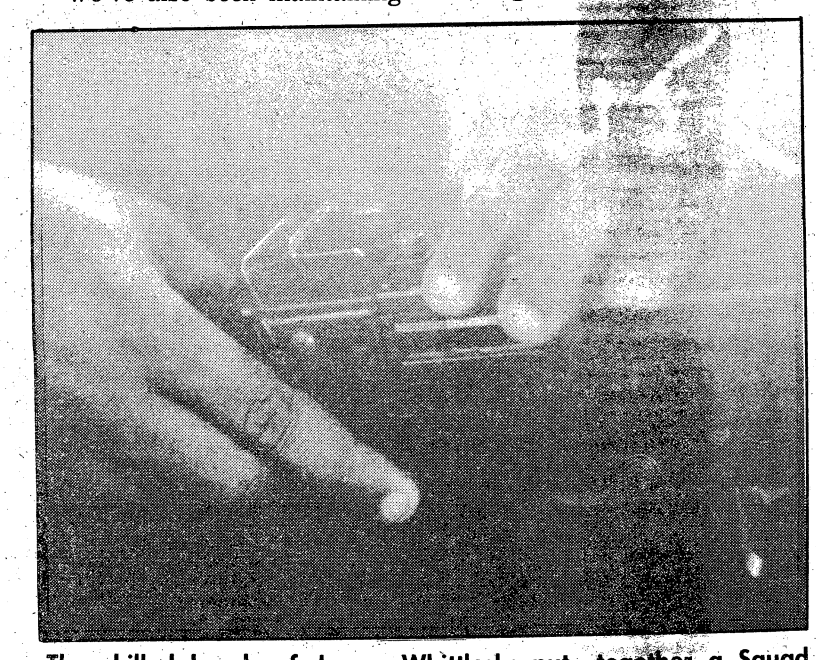
Starling said there are 65 civilians and six soldiers working at the Weapons Pool. They consist of small arms repairers, warehouse workers amnd armament workers.



They work on, clean and repair .45 caliber pistols, M16 rifles, squad automatic weapons, M60 machineguns, the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle's firing port weapons, the co-axial machinegun and bayonets. They also have the Dragon and tube-launched, optically-tracked, wire-guided anti-tank weapons.

"We've also been maintaining the 90 millimeter recoilless rifle for the School of Americas. The weapon is in many of the Latin American countries inventories so we have a few for USARSA," Starling said.

According to Starling, the Weapons Pool goes through 200 issues a week. This doesn't mean "200 weapons" but 200 different issues, with each issue being from squad all the way to company-size units.



"We run two shifts per day, from 7:30 a.m. to midnight. Our issue and receiving point is open 24 hours a day, Monday to Friday, and weekends and holidays when a unit requests it," said Starling.

The Weapons Pool chief said his operation has two priorities: safety and mission accomplishment. "Safety is always on everyone's mind. Mission accomplishment means meeting the requirements of the Infantry School. The 197th Infantry Brigade provides our guard force and they do an outstanding job," Starling said.

A Delta Company soldier gets ready to rappel.

D-7-1 soldiers 'knot' worried; learn techniques of rappelling

Story and photos
by Joel Roberts
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Soldiers from Company D, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade were given the opportunity to experience some high-level infantry training as they conducted rappelling exercises at Todd Field March 25.

The training was conducted for infantry soldiers of the Cohesive Organization for Training company, 10th Mountain Division at Fort Drum, N.Y. and was led by senior drill sergeant, SFC Robert Sackett.

The all-day exercise at the Ranger facility included a rappelling demonstration and cadre-taught classes followed by rappelling on both the 30- and 70-feet high rappelling towers. Sackett explained the objectives were for each soldier to learn proper knot-tyeing techniques, tie the rappel (Swiss) seat to his body, practice hook up to the 120-foot long rappelling rope and to rappel safely from each tower.

Pvt.1 Jeffrey Miller said the training will help him in the future because "it will make me better qualified tc enter the more difficult areas of combat; I would be able to get into terrain that would be inaccessable by conventional means."

Pvt.1 Sean Mukrdechian said the most difficult part of the training was actually exiting the rappel platform, a UH-1H helicopter mock up. "You have to be really alert and have total control of your hands and feet to step off the platform onto the skids. It takes a lot of confidence in your hookup man and a lot of courage to push off the skid to begin your descent."

Sackett said the training, which is not mandatory for one station unit training infantry soldiers, was extremely successful. "The soldiers were highly motivated and carefully followed the instructions of the drill sergeants. The training was injury-free plus we had 99 percent participation from soldiers volunteering to rappel from the 70-foot high tower."

Ammo platoon aims for zero residue problems, hits bullseye

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment PAO

Thanks to team effort, the soldiers of the 29th Infantry Regiment Ammunition Platoon recently earned a pat on the back worth talking about.

The ammo platoon was commended by the regimental commander, Col. William H. Gavan, for reaching a zero balance in property loss for the month of anuary 1986.

According to 1st Lt. Jeffrey Teune, ammo platoon leader, the unit experienced significant ammunition residue problems in September 1985.

However, since that time, a significant improvement has been reported.

Teune attributes the improvement to platoon reorganization, the development of a quality assurance program and the implementation of a new accountability record, which documents a clear chain of custody.

Prior to October 1985, the platoon operated in four squads, with each squad specializing in one area for issue and delivering ammo. This method required the ammo to pass through four different people: pre-load squad, delivery squad, pick up squad and turn-in squad, says Teune.

Currently, the platoon functions in three squads, with each squad performing all tasks, but on a rotating schedule.

"The idea was to make the ammo chain-of-custory simple," Teune says.

Still another element which helped the platoon to improve its accountability rating was the establishment of a quality assurance team.

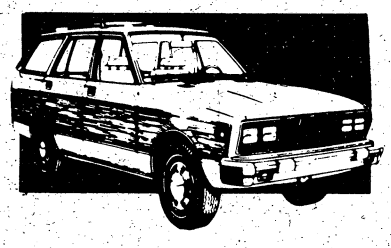
Teune says, "With the help of this team, we are more able to check and verify all issues and turn-ins of training ammunition and its packing material.

"The sole mission of the QA is to ensure that what goes out, comes back."

To help the QA team to be thorough with its duties, an accountability form was created.

According to Teune, the new document (FB Form 197, Sub-Unit Issue of Training Ammunition and Residue), is a consolidation of three separate forms previously used by the platoon.

It establishes a clear and simple chain-of-custody, Teune added.



The mission of the ammo platoon is to support all One Station Unit Training (OSUT) sites on Fort Benning through the delivery and pick up of ammunition.

The platoon is operational 24 hours a day, six days a week and the soldiers monitor more than 80 percent of Fort Benning's ammo usage.

Although the entire platoon did well in helping to improve the overall functioning of ammo operation, several soldiers distinguished themselves and were awarded Impact Army Achievement Medals.

Engineers 'bridge the gap' with parent unit

Story and photos by Thomas Perry
586th Engineer Company

Members of the 586th Engineer Company (AFB) recently participated in the 20th Engineer Brigade's BRIDGE-X '86 at Fort Bragg, North Carolina.

The objective of the BRIDGE-X was to train three platoons in the construction of standard and field expedient bridges in the Army's inventory. The exercise was an excellent opportunity for the bridge crewmen to gain the hands-on training they needed to prepare them for their upcoming skill qualification test.

The exercise began with the 18 vehicle/38 man advance party, leaving March 18 with an overnight stop at Fort Jackson, South Carolina. After reaching Fort Bragg, the advance party set up the company's tactical bivouac site in time for the arrival of the main body March 19.

The training of the 158 soldiers lasted from March 20 to 22. Each platoon rotated to various mission sites that included the construction of the Bailey bridge (single-single), medium girder bridge (single and double story), M4T6 fixed - span, the light tactical raft and expedient bridging. Construction of these bridges developed a high sense of morale through intense physical activity as the teams were constantly carrying loads of 200 to 600 pounds of bridge components.

Additional training and familiarization was conducted on the RB-15 Pneumatic Assault Boats and the Zodiac, which are used during the assault phase of river crossing operations. The platoons were also trained on the three rope bridge, the highline, a fifty-five gallon drum raft and an underwater foot bridge. Professional development classes were also conducted during the exercise, concentrating on bridge site layouts.

At each site an instructor from the host unit, the 264th Engineer Company (MGB), provided a well prepared class on the bridge components after which the platoon chain of command took charge to build the bridge and then retrieve it.

The main body returned March 24 and the trial party returned the next day. Logistical support throughout the deployment was excellent. Morale was extremely high as the training was conducted well. The benefits received from the BRIDGE-X training make it an advantageous annual deployment for the 586th Engineer Company (AFB).

These engineer troops paddle an RB-15 during training.

Troopers put a bridge in place, section by section, during their training.

Engineers "pack the heavy load" in the building of a bridge.

Transportation Company logs 82,000 miles supporting 197th

by Jeffrey J. Davis
533rd Transportation Company

How many Army units accumulate more than 82,000 miles during deployment to an exercise? The 533rd Transportation Company (Medium) did in support of the 197th Infantry Brigade during Operation Solar Ice at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

The 533rd Transportation Company, with ten members of the 608th Ordnance Company, deployed by convoy from Fort Benning Feb. 13, culminating a U.S. Army Infantry Center Emergency Deployment Readiness Exercise. The convoy, consisting of twenty-nine tractors, four commercial utility cargo vehicles, twenty-four 40-feet semi-trailers and a computer van, traversed six states while crossing country. They arrived at the NTC Feb. 19.

The unit transported forty-eight CONEXs in addition to numerous wheeled vehicles and pieces of equipment.

While at NTC, missions involved line-haul support of suplies. The 608th Ordnance Company, co-located with the 533rd Transportation Company at NTC provided an ammunition issue and storage operation that accounted for the bulk of 533rd Trans. Co. daily mission requirements. The tactical scenario dictated that the 533rd and the 608th execute an emergency displacement of unit operations to an area approximately ten miles away. Mission orders were received at 4 p.m. that required the field ammunition supply point, consisting of 30 short tons of ammunition and all equipment be clear of the area by dawn the next day. The area was clear by 5 a.m., approximately 45 minutes ahead of schedule. The entire relocation was done under simulated combat conditions with all vehicles using only black-out drive lights.

Chef of Quarter reveals successful recipe

by Joel Roberts
1st Infantry Training Brigade

"You've got to have a positive attitude toward the work, take pride in what you do and be willing to work long hours."

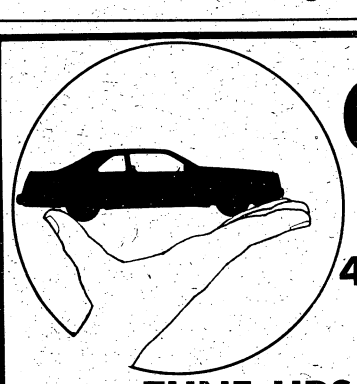
Those are the ingredients Sgt. Vicki Smith says make up the character of exceptional military cooks. Apparently she possesses those ingredients as she came away with top honors for the Post-level Chef of the Quarter competition for January through March. Smith, from the 1st Battalion Dining Facility, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, bested four competitors earlier this quarter to take top spot. She also participated in the Post Chef of the Year competition last week with results to be announced later this month.

The Chef of the Quarter competition consisted of two parts, a board where soldiers were asked questions on basic soldiering skills and food service, plus a cook-off at each participant's respective DFAC.

For the cook-off part of the competition Smith prepared a 20-serving meal of beef stew, noodles, vegetable soup and chef salad. Smith said she was prepared for the board by her recent appearance before the promotion board and that her preparation for the cook-off came through the years she has worked as a cook.

Smith entered the Army in 1983 and attended basic training and advanced individual training at Fort Dix, N.J. She has been with the 1st ITB for three years. During that time, she has been named Brigade Chef of the Quarter twice. She attributes her success to her chain of command — in particular, SSgts. Donald Houghton and Lue Brown and to Mr. Denzel Womack, the DFAC manager. However, Smith credits her husband, Pete Smith, with "teaching her the finer points of cooking."

Asked what the enjoyed most about the military DFAC Smith said, "I get a lot of satisfaction from working with a quality supervisory staff, hearing compliments from trainees on well prepared meals and doing my work to the best of my ability."



Smith checks a menu prior to a meal in the Dining Facility.

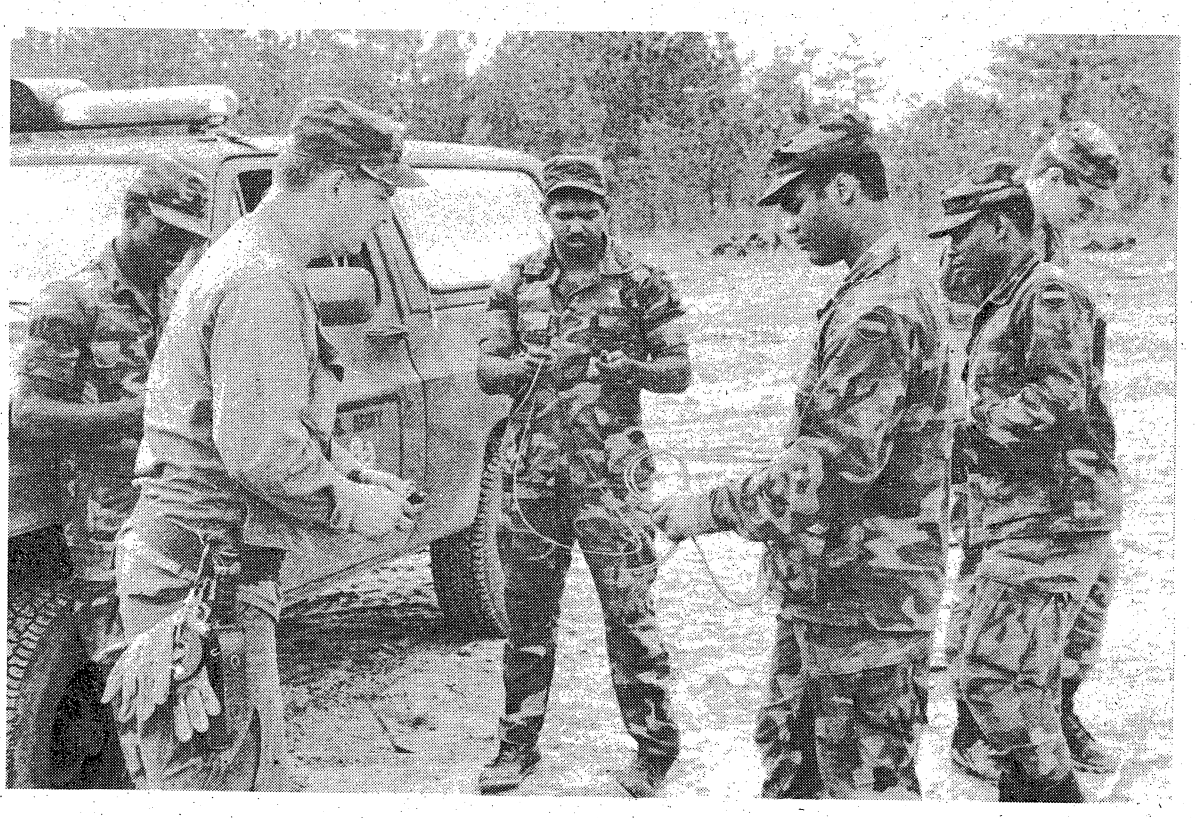
Ordnance unit doesn't fire ammo; 608th learns how to blow it sky-high

Story and photos by Bruce Doyle
608th Ordnance Company

Beginning in January the 608th Ordnance Company (AMMO) and the 89th Explosive Ordnance Detachment (67th Maintenance Battalion) combined their efforts in the destruction of unservicable ammunition.

The 608th Ordnance Company has the ammunition mission at the post Ammunition Supply Installation. The ammunition soldiers have the task of ammunition destruction in their military occupational specialty and must maintain their proficiency in this critical area.



The 89th EOD has many missions throughout the continental United Staes and occasionally in other countries. The 89th is helping to train soldiers in the 608th in the task of destruction of unservicable ammunition. Once the 608th personnel are sufficiently trained in destruction procedures, they will assume the task of destruction of unservicable ammunition. This change in missions will give the 608th personnel more ammunition disposal and allow the 89th more personnel to respond to emergency stituations.

608th Ordnance Company soldiers begin packing plastic explosives on ammunition to be destroyed.

Truck driver wins supply award

by Jeffrey J. Davis
533rd Transportation Company

Recently the 533rd Transportation Company was selected as the USAIC nominee for the Army Chief of Staff Supply Excellence Award.

The award packet symbolized the culmination of 1985 calendar year supply operations, accomplishments and hard work. This award nomination demonstrated the dedication and motivation of one individual, Sgt. Robin Marion, the 533rd Transportation Company supply sergeant.

The uniqueness of Marion's winning this award is the fact that his primary military occupational specialty is 64C, motor transport officer.

Senior instructor of the year finds Pathfinder mission fun

Editor's note: This is the second in a three-part series profiling the Fort Benning Instructors of the Year.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

By all appearances he looks like "just one of the guys."

But he isn't.

The 5'7" soldier ("That's average height by the way. Anything over 5'8" is abnormally tall," he jokes), can't believe they give out awards for something that is so much fun.

Senior Enlisted Instructor of the Year, SFC Curtis R. Stables, from the Pathfinder Branch, isn't very noticeable among his students.

In fact, if it wasn't for the black pathfinder t-shirt, it would be impossible to distinguish student and instructor.

He chews on a piece of straw as he watches his group of 11 students prepare a field for incomming aircraft.

It is apparent that he would rather talk about his students than himself as he describes why he loves his job so much."These guys aren't a bunch of dummies. They really keep me on my toes," Stables said.

To Stables, staying on his toes means working, on the average, 12 hours a day, excluding the two days and one night he spends in the field each week.

"It may be long hours but the rewards are worth it when you stop to realize that that one guy, he points to a soldier leveling dirt with a shovel, could make or break the outcome of a mission," he said.

"The average student has been waiting six years for this school. They really want to be here," Stables said.

Stables, 31 and a father of two girls, is originally from a small town outside Chicago. But he would rather consider himself from Alaska, where he spent four of his 12 years in the Army.

When speaking of Alaska it becomes clear that he is a down-to-earth person who derives pleasure from the simple things life has to offer. In fact, he seems to be a man who has been misplaced in the 1980's.

In the first days of classroom orientation his students are shocked to see him arrive to teach class completly dressed in buckskins and coonskin cap. "He comes in dressed like Naddie Bumpo, the original pathfinder, complete with his muzzle loader," said SSgt. Donald R. Mobley, who also works at the Pathfinder Brach.

"The students all like him and he has a good rapport with them," Mobley added.

Stables spends his free time attending business classes and hunting "...anything, especially squirls. But if it flies, its safe," Stables said.

He makes all his own buckskins and hopes to oneday retire in Alaska, "where I can hunt and fish," he said.

No, he's not "just one of the guys." He's one of Fort Benning's top instructors.

Stables, (kneeling), helps Capt. Donald W. Engin, a pathfinder student, with details for an aircraft landing exercise.

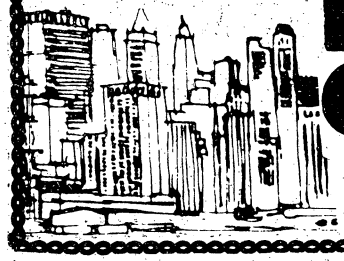
OSUT unit marches off with drill award

2nd Infantry Training Brigade

On March 29, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade conducted its drill and ceremonies competition before parents, friends and military observers.

In one of the best and closest competitions within memory, 4th Platoon emerged the winner, a scant one point ahead of the second-ranked platoon. From top to bottom, the quality of the competition was the best in recent years. Under normal circumstances, each of the four platoons scored high enough to have won this competition.

What was especially unusual about this event was that Company A had been displaced by members of the 3rd Battalion, 414th Regiment, 1st Training Brigade, 104th Division (Training) from Eugene, Oregon. As part of the Total Army Concept, this battalion replaced its counterparts in the 2nd Battalion for two weeks, including all command, staff and drill sergeants. Reserve drill sergeants led the four platoons through their paces in the competition demonstrating that if they were called upon to train soldiers in the event of a national emergency, they are ably prepared to accomplish that mission.



The drill and ceremonies competition tests recruits in their manual of arms and precision movements under the command of their drill sergeants. More than 50 movements in sequence must be learned and performed in unison. The platoons were graded on their proficiency as well as their ability to perform as a team.

INTERVENTION

intervention - Alcoholism and drug dependency are diseases of denial. This means that it usually takes a crisis to force a person suffering from drinking or drugging problems to accept treatment. This crisis could be loss of a job or an automobile accident. An intervention is a controlled confrontation between the patient and his or her family or employer. Good treatment programs such as the Help Unit at Cobb Memorial Hospital help employers or families intervene effectively while the chance for recovery is still good.

PLL clerks ensure 197th Infantry has spare parts, is ready to go

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

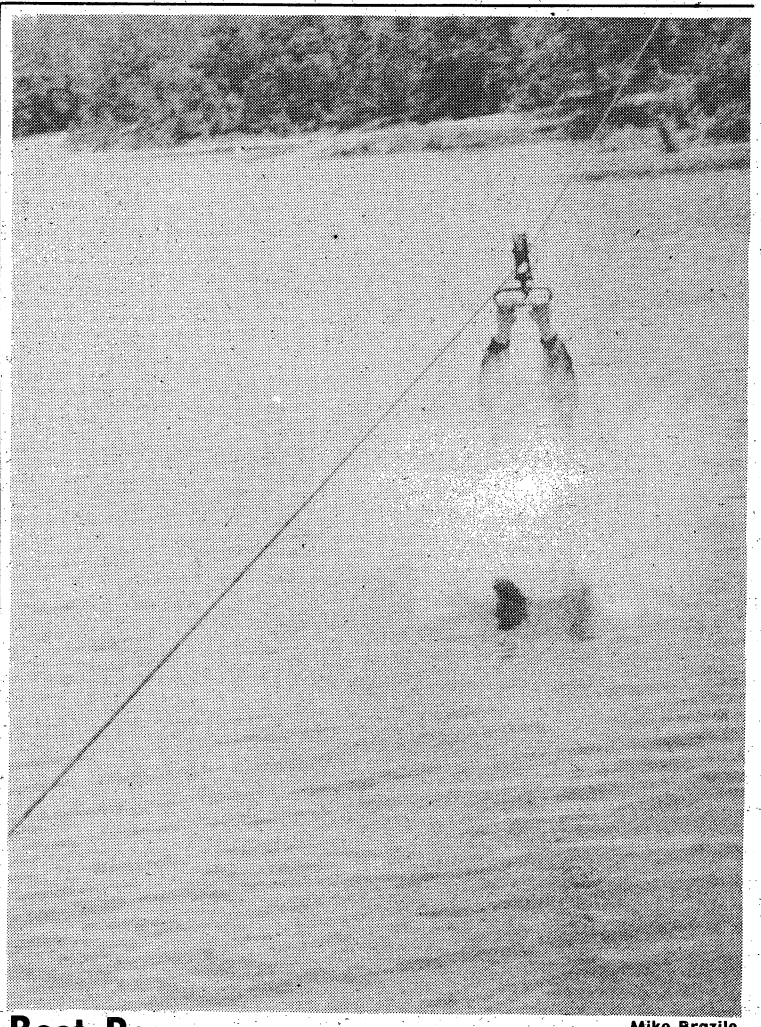
Ongoing maintenance of vehicles and equipment is an element of readiness that isn't taken lightly in the 197th Infantry Brigade. Motor pools are centers of daily activity. Nothing is overlooked in the maintenance of infantry vehicles.

In part, this means relying on the technical skills of the vehicle's maintenance team. However, a smaller group of soldiers make sure that the mechanics have all the materials they need to complete their mission.

In each battalion's motor pool, the "PLL" clerks ensure that repair parts are on hand when needed. Each company has a Prescribed Load List (PLL) of parts they keep on hand at all times. The PLL is systematically stored in a trailer at the motor pool.

When a vehicle's maintenance team requisitions a part, the PLL clerk issues it to the team chief. It's then the clerks job to make sure the part is replaced in his stock so it is on hand when someone else needs one.

According to SP4 Henry Howard, a PLL clerk for 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, that is the most important part of his job.



"When you take something out of the trailer, you have to reorder it right then and there," Howard said. "Then you don't lose control of what you're stocking, and you're always ready for inspection."

Company A's PLL covers everything from distributors and generators for tanks, to light bulbs or nuts and bolts. The PLL often changes as new items are added or others deleted so clerks always have to stay on top of things.

During the Brigade's recent rotation to the National Training Center, PLL clerks had to adapt to a change in their method of requisitioning parts from the Class IX (repair parts) warehouse. A computerized method of requisitioning parts gained the favor of the PLL clerks.

"The computer gave us a chance to order more parts than we could using the manuel system," Howard said. "In the past, we never got the chance to catch up."

Howard also noted that one thing he has learned about his job is to keep everything in order. "At turn-in time at NTC, for example," Howard said. "We had to make sure that anything we didn't have in stock, we had on order. With the help of the computer, it all turned out great."

Benning training not foreign to Latin Americans

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas

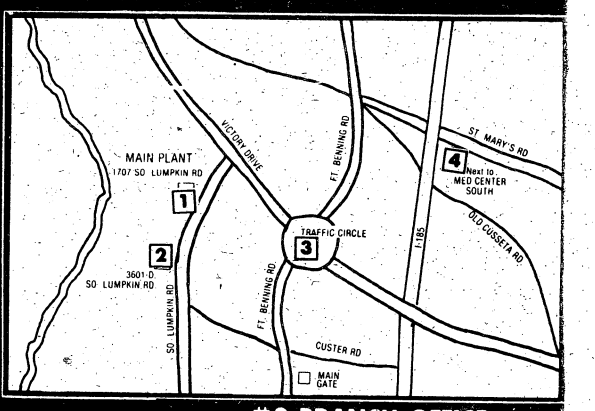
Forty-seven Latin American officers representing five countries graduated from two courses April 2 and 3 at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Graduating from the 11-week Combat Officer course were 30 Salvadoran officers. The course is designed to prepare Salvadoran company-grade officers to perform as company commanders and battalion staff officers.

Guest speaker for the graduation was Lt. Col. Francisco Elena, a guest instructor at USARSA from El Salvador.

The following day saw 17 officers graduate from the Joint Operations Course — Latin America. Countries and number of graduates represented were Bolivia four, Costa Rica one, Ecuador four and Honduras eight. This five-week course is designed for senior field-grade officers from all services of Latin America. It covers the doctrinal basics and a general orientation of joint operations.

During the final part of the course, students prepared and planned for a joint task force (JIF) operation through a map exercise called "Largo Paso" (for Long Pass).



During the exercise, the students worked in two distinct joint staffs while planning a JIF deployment. Students then submitted a concept plan, a command relationships annex, a force deployment list and a transportation requirement list to their commander.

Guest speaker for the graduation was Col. Frank N. Leon, deputy commandant at USARSA from Venezuela.

High-rise trucks cut down to size by new Ga. law

Fort Benning soldiers may not be able to drive "jacked-up" trucks on or off post as a result of a June 1 Georgia law.

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you're thinking about buying one of those flashy, jacked-up, four-wheel drive trucks with the oversize tires, think again.

Beginning June 1, a new Georgia law will go into effect limiting how high the trucks can be jacked up from the street, and many trucks currently being driven on post will become illegal.

Sgt. Joseph Cutshall, noncommissioned officer in charge of the Traffic Section, Military Police Activity, said that Fort Benning goes by state laws, so the provision will probably be included in U.S. Army Infantry Center regulations.

Cutshall said a lot of the jacked up trucks are currently being driven here and he expects the new law will have a major effect on post drivers.

Georgia House Bill 1257 spells out the limits for a truck's suspension and says that a truck weighing 4,500 pounds or less can be raised no higher than 27 inches from street level. Trucks rated up to 7,500 pounds can be no more than 30 inches from the street, while those rated up to 14,000 pounds can't be raised more than 31 inches.

According to Maj. C.T. Kirkland at the Columbus Police Department, what the new law will do is make enforcement easier.

"We already have a law that limits how high trucks can be jacked up, but it deals with manufacturer specifications, which are different for each model vehicle. The new law will make it easier for the patrolman on the street to tell if the vehicle is too high," he said.

Kirkland said safety is the major reason to limit the height of the vehicles. "Raising the truck up higher than it was designed to be shifts its center of gravity and makes it less stable, and more dangerous to drive," he said.

Another safety factor raised was that the bumpers are so high they cannot provide the protection they were designed to offer.

Violators will face up to one year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Library offers potpourri of enjoyments, not just books

Post Library

Sayers Memorial Library Main Post has recovered to a full service operation following its trauma of recarpeting. During this time some rearranging was done for the provision of improved services and comfort.

The library is a house of wonder, designed to cure unwise shopping, academic sag, professional drag, cold house parties, inquisitive minds, recreational boredom, energy waste, restless children, sour vacations, disastrous household repairs and much more. It houses newspapers representing most of the major cities across the country, including special interest papers; a magazine collection to include popular interest, news, professional, and academic; books of varied interest and reading levels, fiction and non-fiction; VHS tapes; cassette books; language tapes; a comprehensive reference service, to include inter-library loans and on-line searches; investment information; a record collection; and a children's room.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Quitting Smoking Now Greatly Reduces Serious Risks to Your Health.

NCO convicted in child sex abuse case

by Charles A. Coffin
Staff Judge Advocate

A grim reminder that sexual abuse of children is not foreign to the Fort Benning military community was brought to light with a vengeance during the general court-martial of a career non-commissioned officer Monday.

The sergeant first class was assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade and had more than 19 years of active service, including three tours of duty in Vietnam.

He was found guilty of rape, attempted rape, two counts of sodomy and three counts of indecent acts with children under the age of 16. All of the victims were his daughters.

Capt. Randy Hall, prosecutor, presented evidence that the 38-year-old soldier married his present wife in 1971 and later adopted her two daughters, then ages 2 and 4. Hall showed the couple had a daughter together in 1972.

Hall showed that when each daughter reached 11 years old the sergeant began having sexual intercourse with each child as well as engaging in acts of sodomy and other indecent acts with them.

This pattern of sexual perversion continued until Jan. 3, 1986, when one of the daughters told a neighbor and the sordid details were brought to the attention of Fort Benning authorities.

The prosecutor presented evidence that even after the sergeant was confronted with the allegations against him, he told one child that he w[illegible]ed to rape her and that he wanted "one for the road."

Hall showed that the sexual perversion of the sergeant devastated the family. The oldest child, who began abusing drugs at age 14, had two children before she was 17 years old. The middle child became an alcoholic at 13 and has attempted suicide on 15 different occasions. The youngest child, now 13, has been made a ward of the state of Georgia.

Hall called Dr. Elien Speyer, a psychologist from the Bradley Psychiatric Hospital, as a government witness. She testified the two youngest children would both require years of counselling to overcome the mental scars caused by the sexual abuse. She also testified that both children may have difficulty having a normal relationship with a man or otherwise functioning as a mother or wife.

Speyer went on to say that all three girls showed one or more of the characteristic behavioral symptoms of abused children, including alcohol and drug abuse, suicide attempts and sexual permisiveness. Speyer said the abused child is likely to grow up to be an abusive parent.

Capt. Kurt Meckstroth, assistant prosecutor, called the 16-year-old daughter to the witness stand and she testified she began having sexual intercourse with her father on a regular basis when she was 11 years old. The family lived in Mainz, Germany at the time. She said her father liked to pretend he was raping her and would warn her never to tell anyone what he was doing to her. The child said she was aware her father was having sex with her older sister at the same time he was engaging in sex with her. She said she is presently residing at the Elizabeth Sheperd Home for Girls. She was released from the Bradley Center Hospital after a two-month stay.

The 16-year-old went on to say her father's sexual perversion drove her to alcoholism at age 13 and that she stayed drunk almost contiuously until her father's arrest in January.

Civilian defense counsel, William Mason, called Dr. Bill Moughon, a Columbus psychiatrist, who said the sergeant needed to be in a hospital for treatment rather than in prison. On cross-examination, Maughon said the sergeant should not be allowed to return to his family.

Mason then called the sergeant to the witness stand and he testified he was a sick man who needed treatment and was glad he had been caught so he could now get help. The sergeant said he hoped the court would consider his family in determining the appropriate sentence.

In his closing argument to the court, the prosecutor pointed out the lives the sergeant had ruined by his actions and the sense of betrayal and guilt each of his daughter must carry with them for the rest of their lives. Hall said the children would need years of intense therapy in order to have a chance of living a normal life.

Hall went on to point out that the sergeant had robbed his children of their childhood and made "basket cases" out of otherwise normal children. Hall said the court should consider giving the sergeant "one for the road" when determining how long he should be sentenced to prison.

The court sentenced the sergeant first class to nine years in prison, reduction to private and a dishonorable discharge.

Military Police urge marking of goods to prevent becoming crooks next mark

Military Police Activity

Despite continuous emphasis and educational efforts, the military police are still finding that a large amount of property reported stolen on the Fort Benning military reservation is either not marked, or the markings/serial numbers are not recorded.

Engraving your property with unique identification markings and recording serial numbers will not prevent it from being stolen. But, taking these steps will tremendously increase the chances that stolen property can be positively identified, recovered, and the thief apprehended.

The amount of stolen property recovered from pawn shops in the Columbus-Phenix City area every week is proof in itself of being able to identify and trace individual property. It is also an acknowledged fact that thieves are reluctant to steal property which they know to be marked, as such items are difficult to pawn or "fence," and are much more likely to lead to their own identification and apprehension.

Personnel living in the barracks are reminded that USAIC Regulation 190-31 requires them to have high value property (i.e., steroes, television sets) marked and the markings and/or serial numbers recorded on two copies of FB Form 20. One copy of this form is to be retained on file in the unit orderly room and updated as new items are acquired or disposed of. The second copy is to be retained by the individual and updated as necessary. Engraving instruments should be available at each unit on the installation for marking of property.

Service members and their families residing in on- or off-post quarters are also encouraged to ensure that their property can be identified.

Engraving instruments may be signed out from the Provost Marshal Crime Prevention Section (telephone 545-7115/7154) building 215, Main Post, for this purpose.

Additionally, representatives from the Military Police Crime Prevention Section will be available to engrave property and register bicycles in various locations/communities on post on a periodic basis in the near future. Watch the Bayonet and the Benning Bulletin for times, dates and locations.

Once you have marked your property, itemize and record the property marked and the identification markings used. Maintain this record in a secure location away from the property itself, and periodically update the list.

The military police urge you to protect your property by practicing good crime prevention techniques.

Learn the law before laying out for lavish living place

American Bar Association

The purchase of a home is the biggest single investment that most Americans ever make; and, the sale of a home can result in the largest capital gains ever realized by many.

In order to make the most of this investment, buyers and sellers should be familiar with real estate procedures, financing methods, and the legal aspects of the purchase and sale.

Here are some common questions asked about real estate law:

Q: What are some of the points that a prospective homebuyer should consider about a potential home?

A: Many realtors answer that the three most important aspects of a home are location, location and location. This means the characteristics of the neighborhood; distance from schools, transportation, hospitals, police and fire protection, utilities, and shopping; quality of street maintenance; zoning; and tax levels.

Other considerations are the house's plumbing and wiring, drainage of the land; the house's location on the lot, construction of the house, and possible termite infestation.

Q: What should be stipulated in the sales contract?

A: The sales contract spells out the total purchase price and method of payment, including down payment, financing plans, closing costs and interest charges; what appliances, furnishings, fixtures and other personal property are being sold with the house; which of the parties bears the risk of loss if there is a fire or other disaster before the closing; when the responsibility shifts for payment of utilities and taxes; how taxes are to be prorated for the year which ownership shifts; guarantees of good title; provisions for either party to cancel the sale; legal description of the property; and, provision for the return of initial payment in the event the sale is not completed.

Q: Is it necessary for a lawyer to handle the sale or purchase of a house?

A: It is not required that a lawyer prepare the sales contract. However, since this agreement controls future conduct in the sale, the time to seek expert advice is before the contract is signed. If this is not possible, the buyer or sellers can insert on the face of the contract the phrase, "subject to approval of the attorneys for the parties" within a specified number of days.

In most states, only an attorney can prepare other legal documents related to a real estate sale. A single lawyer may represent both parties, with their understanding and consent.

Q: What kind of warranties on the roof, the furnace, appliances, or exterior paint should the buyer demand?

A: The seller probably will limit warranties of these items to avoid being liable for expensive repairs. However, the buyer should ask if warranties still exist on repairs that may have recently been done on new items, and ask that these warranties be transferred to him or her.

Q: What precautions should the buyer take to be sure that title is conveyed without any problems?

A: The buyer will want to assume a title that is "marketable," that is, free from all indebtedness or limitations on its use. It is up to the buyer to examine the title. This should be done before the purchase is completed through a title search or examination of the public records by any attorney, who then issues a certificate indicating the finding or supplies a written title opinion.

Q: How do I know if there are limitations on the use of my property?

A: Local governmental zoning laws or restrictions in the deeds may limit the use of your property, for example, for use as a day-care center or conversion of a single-family dwelling to a two-family home. You can determine these limitations by finding out the zoning restrictions from the city zoning board and having a lawyer examine deeds and other legal papers.

Q: What is title insurance and does a buyer need to purchase it?

A: If the buyer is obtaining a mortgage loan, the lender will require title insurance in the amount of the loan to protect itself from possible loss. This insurance, however, does not protect the new owner in the event that defects are found in the title. Owner's title insurance insures the new owner's equity in the property. It is otpional.

Q: What are the different items that contribute to the total cost of a mortgage loan?

A: • Points. The lender makes a service charge for processing the loan that is expressed in "points." It is a percentage of the amount of the loan, varying from 1-1/2 to 3 percent.

• Appraisal fee. The lender usually will require appraisal of the property, either by an appraiser of the buyer's choice whom it approves or by the bank appraiser. If the appraisal is done by the bank, the fee will be included in the loan.

• Survey cost. A survey of the property may be required by the lender.

• Escrow fees.

• Title insurance.

• Lender's attorney's fee.

Q: How should a buyer take title?

A: Title may be taken by an individual or by two or more parties in joint ownership. If the parties are husband and wife, it is common to take as joint owners with right of survivorship, so that at the death of one party, title to the entire property rests with the survivor. However, estate taxes should be considered before deciding on this form of ownership.

Q: How does a condominium differ from a cooperative?

A: In a condominium, each owner holds title to his or her unit. With respect to common areas, unit owners may be tenants in common or joint tenants, depending on state law. A cooperative means stock ownership of a multi-unit project where buyers occupy but do not own the unit. The project is owned by a cooperative, of which all residents are shareholders, and is operated by an elected board of directors.

Less money in Army means less lieutenants

Army News Service

Because of budget constraints, selected lieutenants may volunteer for early release from active duty and serve the remainder of their Army commitment with a reserve component.

Those lieutenants who were not selected for promotion to captain, (786 out of 6,122 soldiers were not recommended) will be eligible to apply for release by resigning their commission and requesting an appointment to the USAR.

Other than regular Army officers who were selected for captain by Dec. 1985, but who chose not to apply for conditional voluntary indefinite status and were not considered by the CVI board are also elegible for early release requiring they meet certain standards.

According to officials, "These selected officers must be willing to serve in a USAR troop program unit for at least one year following release from active duty. The officer should contact his in-service recruiter and obtain a tentative RC unit assignment."

Additional requirements are that the officer not have an obligation of more than four years active duty or be recipients of an ROTC scholorship.

The officer cannot be a member of military intelligence, the signal corps, quartermaster, chemical or ordinance, which are all considered shortage branches.

Aviators who have unfufilled service obligations may be considered on a case-by-case basis.

All those eligible must be willing to accept release between May 1 and Aug. 31.

Law Day special for Americans

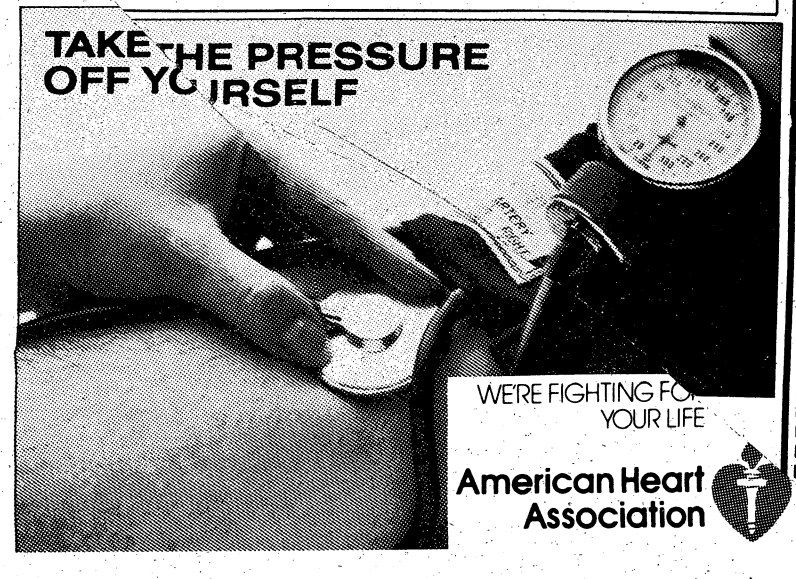
American Bar Association

Origin — Law Day U.S.A. was conceived in 1957 by Charles S. Rhyne, a Washington, D.C. lawyer who was then president of the American Bar Association.

President Dwight D. Eisenhower established Law Day by Presidential proclamation in 1958. In 1961, the first of May was set aside by joint resolution of Congress as a "special day of celebration by the American people in appreciation of their liberties and the reaffirmation of their loyalty to the United States of America."

Purpose — The purpose of Law Day is to call the attention of every American citizen to both the principles and practice of American law and justice. It is a day to reflect on our legal heritage, the role of law in our society and the rights we enjoy under the Constitution.

Theme — 1986 marks the 29th anniversary of Law Day. The theme chosen is "Foundations of Freedom."



Sponsor — The American Bar Association, the national voluntary organization of the legal profession, is the sponsor of Law Day. Seven hundred state and local bar associations, court administrators, staff judge advocates of the military services, businesses, schools, police departments, national professional and service organizations, and religious groups participate in Law Day U.S.A. programs.

Scopt — Thousands of Law Day programs reach millions of Americans annually. These programs include free legal counseling, mock trials, courtroom tours, naturalization ceremonies, essay contests, television and radio shows and pamphlet distribution.

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Red Cross had its yearly award ceremony at Riverside recently and presented three special awards to outstanding volunteers.

Linda Scorgie, head of the Red Cross, was awarded the organization's highest safety service medal for her work as an instructor of safety related courses.

She contributed more than 774 hours in five years as a volunteer instructor in water safety, first aide and CPR, giving her spare time after work and on weekends.

In presenting the award, Maggie Siegfried, station chairman, said, "Linda is always willing to volunteer her time. Any time an instructor is not available, she steps right in and provides the needed instruction."

Anita Bass, Youth Chairman, received a certificate of appreciation for her work with the Red Cross Youth Program.

"Since Anita took over as chairman, the program has been expanded from a summer to year-round program," Siegfried said. "She has been instrumental in this expansion."

A third special award was presented to Elaine Kendall, Safety Services Chairman, for her work as a safety instructor.

Forty other volunteers were recognized at the ceremony, which was hosted by Trish Burba, honorary Red Cross chairman.

Mrs. Burba handed out service pins and certificates of appreciation to individuals who had contributed from one to 22 years service to the organization.

Siegfried said the Red Cross currently has 145 volunteers working in a variety of locations on post.

"Last year, volunteers gave 14,227 hours of their time to this community," she said. "They worked in the hospital in many areas, the vet clinic, as caseworkers in the main office, in post schools, the libraries and the dental program, to name just a few."

For more information on volunteer opportunities with the organization, call 545-5194.

Reduction-in-force hits post kitchen workers

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Reduction-in-force procedures for civilian workers were changed in February, just in time for this month's RIF of cooks.

As a result of contracting out, 87 cook positions were abolished. Peggy Hawkins, chief of Recruitment and Placement at the Civilian Personnel Office, said 109 letters were hand delivered to affected employees April 2.

"We had to take all the people affected and see what they qualified for, then look at retention registers and see what jobs they were entitled to, " she said.

Retention rosters are compiled based on a worker's length of service, performance appraisals and veteran's status. The new regulations place more emphasis on performance than before.

Under the new regulation, an employee's three most recent performance appraisals will be averaged using a 20-16-12 formula, Hawkins said. "Each exceptional rating is 20 points, highly successful is 16 points and a fully successful is 12 points."

The three-year average is converted to years and added to the length of service credited to the employee. For example, an employee who started working in 1983, and had performance ratings of exceptional, highly successful and fully successful in three years, for a total of 48 points. This averages out to 16 and this figure is subtracted from his beginning employment date in 1983, making his service comp date for retention purposes 1967.

Another change in the procedure restricts the displacement or "bumping" of workers to three grade intervals. For example, a GS-7 cook could bump a GS-7, 6, 5 or 4 but not a GS-3.

Veterans with a 30 percent compensable disability are exempted from this restriction under certain circumstances. A five-grade interval limit is applied to these employees. Before the procedures were changed, RIF regulations allowed unlimited displacement rights for both groups.

Regardless of the actual grade of the position into which the employee is bumped in some cases, he can retain his pre-RIF grade for two years and a comparable salary indefinitely according to Hawkins. "This is determied on an individual, case-by-case basis," she said.

Adversely affected employees may receive special consideration under a Defense Department priority placement program. They will have priority for vacancies in higher grade positions, provided the grade does not exceed the one they held before the RIF.

Hawkins said her office anticipated that 28 workers were eligible to retire and some of the others were offered another job on post. She said at this point they don't know how many people will actually lose their jobs, because many factors are involved in the RIF process.

"Every worker displaced by the contracting out will have the right of first refusal for the cook jobs," she said. The Recruitment and Placement office will be monitoring this process, to make sure the contractor complies with this provision.

Hawkins stressed that the situation is changing every day. "This office will be doing individual counseling of every worker affected and will be doing everything possible to see that they have every opportunity to continue their employment," she said.

Army writing program stresses right way to write

by Norma Vishneski
TRADOC Public Affairs

"Your writing style is yourself in the process of thought." — William Safire, author of the syndicated newspaper column, "On Language"

If Safire is on target, then having a fuzzy, congested writing style means you have fuzzy, congested thought processes.

Maybe. Or maybe you don't allow yourself to write the way you think. Maybe you've come to believe that if you write the way you think, it won't sound "official." After all, you reason, aren't the Army's most respected and often-quoted publications — its regulations — written in a stilted, convoluted style? Isn't most Army correspondence constructed so the reader doesn't know what "the bottom line" is until he literally reaches the bottom line?

Top Army leadership believes that part of the reason Army writing isn't as clear and concise as it should be is that a certain style of writing has become institutionalized, and therefore serves as a ready model, constantly perpetuating itself.

It was with this thought in mind that Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh endorsed the Army Writing Program — a broad, comprehensive package that includes everything from teaching good communicative skills to rewriting Army regulations in simple, easy-to-understand English.

"The Army Writing Program is a very ambitious and comprehensive undertaking," said Maj. Joe Chambers, head of the Army Writing Office (located at the Army's Training and Doctrine Command headquarters at Fort Monroe, Va.)

"We realized early on that the only way we could truly change the way the Army writes is to attack the problem from as many angles as possible. So we've incorporated into the program a few new Army regulations; some new publications; a plan to rewrite Army regs in the new simpler style; a plan to publish the first real Army writing style guide; the addition of writing courses in officer, noncommissioned officer and civilian training programs; the creation of a Communicative Skills Office at each of TRADOC's schools; and a plan to train the trainers at non-TRADOC units," Chambers said.

TRADOC is the Army's executive agent for the Army Writing Program, which got underway last June.

"Good communicative skills are a plus in almost any environment," Chambers explained, "but just being 'nice to have' isn't enough to justify using scarce defense dollars and limited training time to implement the program. The program must make a significant contribution to helping the Army carry out its mission: to fight and win wars."

"Gen. Richardson (TRADOC's commanding general) enthusiastically embraced the program because he believes communicative skills are the fundamental way leaders develop and give decisions, influence their seniors as well as subordinates and exercise control over their units. He believes good communication is essential to effective leadership in both peacetime and war. His goal is to make all Army writing a logical, lucid and concise reflection of Army thinking," Chambers continued.

And there is some validity to William Safire's comment about a writer's style reflecting his thought processes, Chambers said. "Often, fuzzy writing is the result of fuzzy thinking. Writing disciplines thinking, so one of the payoffs of this program is that people will not only write more clearly, they will think more clearly. One of the exercises we have in the course is something called 'mind mapping.' It's a technique to help you organize your thoughts and capture ideas immediately so they don't get lost in the lag-time between when the thought occurs and when you're able to fully express it in writing," Chamber explained.

"You might say we're teaching them to say, 'snake' when they mean 'snake'."

The reference to "saying snake" goes back to an experience Chambers had a few summers ago when he was jogging in the pre-dawn mist at Fort Benning, Ga.

"The fog was lying heavy on the ground, so it was difficult to see where you were stepping," Chambers explaind. "A fellow jogger suddenly yelled to me, 'Snake!' I had no problem understanding that message and jumping out of the way. If he had used the old Army style he would have said something like, 'Excuse me at this point in time, Maj. Chambers, but it seems that a reptilian creature is blocking our egress.'

Bad weather spells death on Benning roads if careless

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning has suffered seven automobile traffic fatalities this fiscal year, causing concern among Army officials over the needless loss of life.

In Training and Doctrine Command, there have been 11 motor vehicle fatalities and seven motorcycle fatalities. Of the vehicle accidents, nine of the victims were not wearing seat belts. Three motorcyclist victims were not wearing helmets.

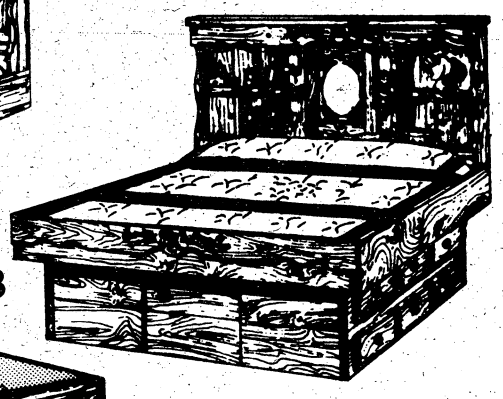
"All the accidents on post involved excessive speed, all except one occurred during bad weather, and one involved a drunk driver," said Sgt. Joseph Cutshall, noncommissioned officer in charge of the Traffic Section, Military Police Activity.

"People need to be aware that the roads on Fort Benning are extremely treacherous when wet," he said. "I think it is the way they are constructed, but whatever the reason, we've found them to be dangerous when wet."

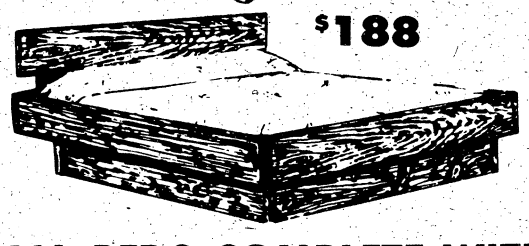
He said in the accident involving the drunken driver, a passenger in the vehicle was killed. "Obviously, people need to pay attention to the condition of the driver they are riding with, and not get in the car if they think the driver is impaired," Cutshall said.

Seat belts have been proven to save lives, and Cutshall said people should make the effort to buckle up. All persons operating a vehicle on post are required to wear seat belts, and can be cited if caught not wearing them.

"It just makes good sense to wear them, when you know that they greatly decrease your risk of suffering serious injury or death during an accident," he said.



Soldiers and civilian employees are required to wear seat belts both on and off post when operating a military vehicle or conducting official government business.



"People need to know that speeding kills, especially during bad weather," he said. "They also need to be aware of the regulations governing vehicle operation both on and off post, and make the extra effort to drive defensively."

OWC Annual Festival of Running

Runners ran for the health of it Saturday

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 4,100 runners turned out for the Officers' Wives' Club 3rd Annual Festival of Running Saturday.

Families, units and individuals flocked to Building 4 for the state's fifth largest running event.

The festival featured one, three and five-mile runs, unit runs of three and five miles, and a team 30-mile relay.

Robert McDuffie, winner of the five-mile male division run, completed the course in 26:10.5.

He was closely trailed by Lloyd McDonald Jr., who finished in 26:27.2.

In the five-mile female division, Leanne Lyon raced through the tape with a commanding lead, finishing at 34:29.

Lori Sammons claimed second more than three minutes later at 37:56.

The three-mile run meant victory for John Kelleher Jr. and Penny McLeod with times of 15:44 and 19:03 respectively.

Headquarters, Infantry Training Brigade, claimed the Commanding General's Trophy for their first place finish in the five-mile unit run, while Company C, 6th Battalion, 1st ITB and Company C, 4th Battalion, 2nd ITB, tied for the trophy in the three-mile run.

New P.T. uniforms available in summer

Army News Service

Soldiers in both the active and the reserve components will have the option of buying a commercial version of the Army's newly designed physical fitness uniform. These uniforms can be purchased from the Army and Air Force Exchange Service's Main Exchanges and from Army Clothing Sales Stores.

Army logistics officials say that initial, limited quantities will go to basic troop center installations in mid- or late May, with expansion Armywide as additional quantities are produced.

The new warmup-style, unisex uniform, developed to replace the current gold-black version, recently received approval by the Army Clothing and Equipment Board and the Army leadership. Compared to the old uniform, the new one offers a longer wear-life, said Shirley R. Bryant, a logistics management specialist in the Directorate for Transportation, Energy and Troop Support in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics.

The gray uniform consists of sweat pants selling for $12.95, hooded sweat shirt with pockets and full-length zipper that will sell for $19.95, nylon-lined shorts for $17.95 and an athletic shirt for $5.95. Both pants and sweat shirt are designed with stretchable material under the arms and in the crotch. The undergarments are a blend of 50 percent cotton and 50 percent polyester. Both the sweat shirt and the athletic shirt bear the word "Army" stencilled on the front side.

Bryant said that current Army plans call for the uniform to be a clothing-bag issue item, pending authorization by the Defense Department. If approved, it may take up to two years before troops see the issue version as a clothing bag item.

The new uniform has undergone extensive wear tests, including repeated machine washing and drying in both hot and cold water, Bryant said. As a result, the uniform is expected to be free from the problem of shrinkage, shape loss and fading encountered with the gold-black version, she added.

Junior citizens join seniors for shared joys

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Ralston Towers, a retirement apartment complex in Columbus, was again visited by Dorothy Jones and her second grade class from Loyd School. Seeing their senior citizen friends produced mixed emotions for the students because the visit was to be the final activity in the Phone Pals program this year.

Phone Pals is a program that Jones began to implement in her classroom four years ago. It establishes an on-going relationship between a second-grader and a senior citizen. Many of these relationships have continued to flourish long after the Phone Pals program has ended for the year. Several senior citizens receive correspondence for students who have moved from Fort Benning to other states and countries.

The program begins with an initial visit to Ralston Towers in the fall so that the students and Phone Palls can become acquainted.

A phone is installed in Jones' classroom during the months that the program is in effect. Once during the day, at a scheduled time, each student phones the Phone Pal. Sometimes discussions cover daily activities, but sometimes the student is assigned specific information to learn about the Phone Pals.

Classroom activities during the program are often related to the conversations that are taking place. Students write letters to their pals, discuss phone etiquette and do social studies activities related to the history that they learn as the Phone Pals describe events that have occurred during their lifetimes.

Students visit Ralston Towers again in December and finish the program with a third visit, a party in the spring.

Jones and her students greatly appreciate the Noncommissioned Officers' Wives' Club for its support in paying for the phone that is used for the Phone Pals program. They also appreciate the help of Ms. Rebecca Belk, Ralston Towers manager, who coordinates the program with Jones. Most of all, Jones and her students are grateful to the senior citizens who give of themselves as they serve as Phone Pals.

Sheree Glackmeyer

"WE FEEL GOOD ABOUT LEAVING JAMAHL AT THE DAY-CARE CENTER BECAUSE THEY TREAT HIM LIKE HE'S THEIR OWN CHILD."

SSG Ken and SP4 Jacquie Farmer

"We never really considered leaving Jamahl with anyone except a private sitter. But our first visit to the new Child Development Center here at Fort Hood sure changed our minds.

"We know our son is well taken care of. So we can concentrate on our jobs without worrying about what he's doing.

"He learns, instead of just playing. He counts, sings, says his ABC's. And they teach him to be more independent.

"Jacquie and I have peace of mind when Jamahl's at the Center. They take care of him, and he's learning, and those are the two most important things."

The Army's Day-Care programs are making modern day-care facilities available to more children each day. And the quality of the "Caregivers" who attend the children has never been higher. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

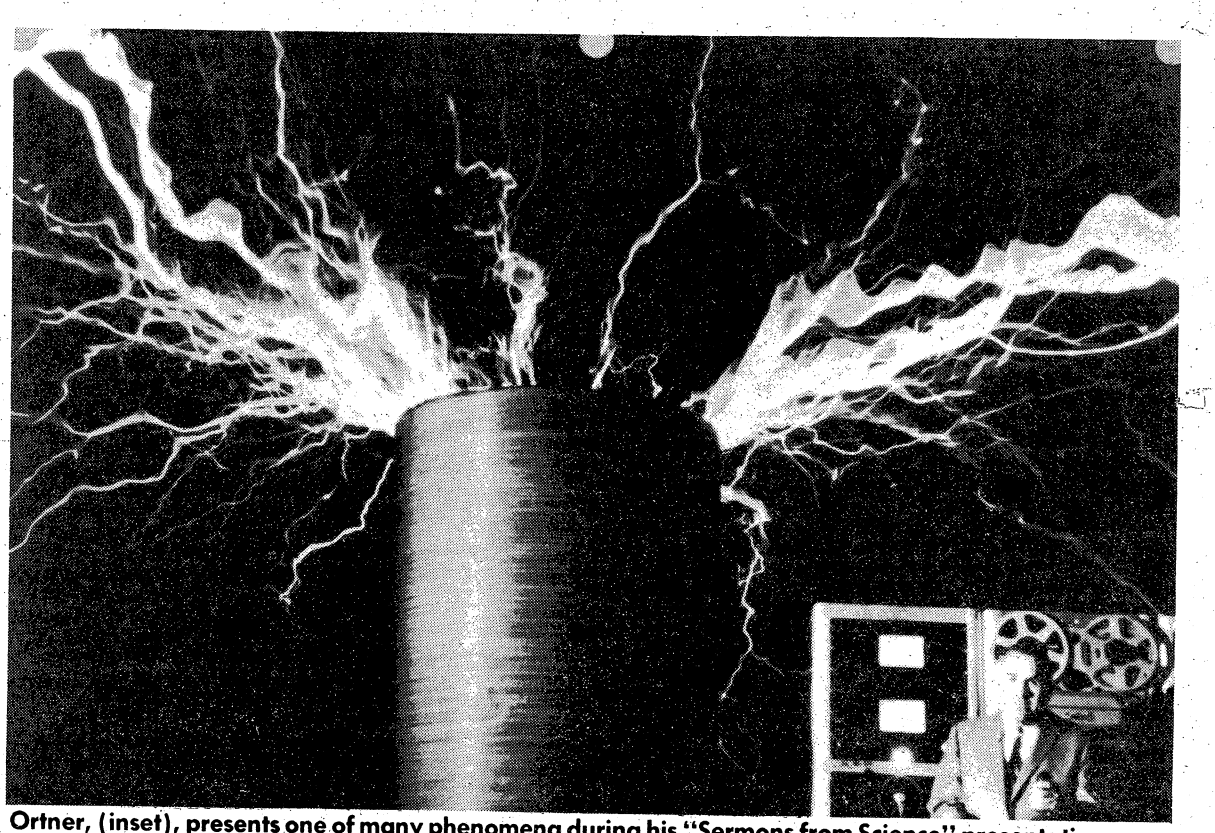
Man says program shows relevance of God

Chaplain's Office

Of the 700 exhibits at the New York Fair, TIME Magazine listed Sermons From Science as one of the best in a list of twenty. In the nine years of operation of Man and His World at the Montreal Expo grounds, the Sermons From Science program was still in the top five attractions for capacity crowds. The Marshall Auditorium will be transformed into a house of science and wonder as Dean C. Ortner starts a series of these scientific demonstrations April 24 to 27.

April 24 - 10:30 a.m. and 7 p.m.
April 25 - 10:30 a.m. and 7 p.m.
April 26 - 2 and 7 p.m.
April 27 - 2 and 7 p.m.



Admission is free and all family members and guests are invited to see this science program in action.

You will hear the voice from planet X, a cry that can shatter glass. Solid metal appears to float through space. One of the nights Ortner will allow one million volts of high frequency electricity to pass through his body and set a board on fire in his bare hand.

All of the programs are designed to show the relevance of God in this modern world. Many today are honestly confused with the tragedy of world conditions. Sermons From Science is an attempt to show that the great fundamentals of the Christian faith are urgently needed in this day.

Ortner represents the Moody Institute of Science, which produces the Sermons From Science films. These films are not only popular at military bases but are now shown in some 120 countries throughout the world.

The program, sponsored by the Chaplain's section, is basically designed for adults. Children under 14 are welcome but must be accompanied by and sit with an adult.

Chapel Briefs

Special Bible study groups further spiritual education

In addition to the Precept Bible study classes the Protestant Women of the Chapel offer, the group also sponsors three options to the program.

First, a beginner's Bible study class is taught by Nancy McKenzie. Secondly, a study class meets and discusses the book, "The Spirit-Controlled Woman" by Beverly La Haye. The mothers of pre-schoolers program offers a third option that consists of Bible-related studies, crafts, fellowship and fun, centered around the idea that sometimes moms need a morning out.

The classes meet at the Religious Education Center every Monday at 9 a.m. and are open to everyone. Free babysitting is provided.

Dial-A-Prayer "re-called" because few sought number

The Fort Benning Dial-A-Prayer service is no longer available. The Foundation for Christian Living has provided this service, free of charge, to the Fort Benning Community for the past few years.

Unfortunately, the use of the service did not justify the continuation of Dial-A-Prayer, and the Foundation determined that it was necessary to "re-call" the equipment.

'Sermons From Science' come to post April 24-27

The Moody Institute of Science has scheduled a presentation of four Sermons from Science here April 24-27. The place and time will be announced at a later date. The four demonstrations will include: light and color, including laser; resonance; testing the senses versus the laws of nature; and recording devices.

These demonstrations have been presented to standing room only crowds at the World's Fairs in Seattle, New York, Montreal, and Spokane. The entire community is invited to be a part of this experience.

Area Activities

Local area provides fun, inexpensive vacations

Ledger/Enquirer

Robin Lake, at Callaway Gardens, is a popular vacation spot that is very close to Benning.

Ledger/Enquirer

Disney World World or Gatlinburg? Myrtle Beach or the Grand Canyon?

Worthy vacation spots all.

But what if your "vacation" consists of just a few hours on a Saturday afternoon or it's a spur of the moment trip after Sunday church services?

Don't fret, there's plenty you can accomplish in an afternoon without busting your budget.

You could visit Plains, Ga., the hometown of Jimmy Carter, or Warm Springs, Ga., where Franklin D. Roosevelt lived . . . and died in his Little White House. Towns but a few miles from here, surrounded by presidential timber in the foothills of the Appalachians.

There is much to do and see within an hour or two from downtown Columbus, including these mini-vacation favorites:

Callaway Gardens: 12,000 acres of woodlands, lakes and floral displays, the Gardens is a must on any vacationer's list. The John A. Sibley Horticultural Center, the Masters Water Ski championships and two of the best golf courses in the South are other attractions. For more information, call (404) 663-2281.

Westville: A town where it's always 1850. Located outside Lumpkin, Ga., Westville is a village of relocated, authentically restored, original buildings depicting Georgia's pre-industrial life and culture in the 1850s. Open daily, from 10 a.m.-5 p.m., Sundays from 1-5 p.m. For more information, call (912) 838-6310.

Andersonville: Located 21 miles northeast of Plains, this rural town was home to one of the most imfamous Civil War prisoner camps (Camp Sumter), where 13,000 died in 1864-65. The prison and the nearby Andersonville National Cemetery have been preserved. The tiny town also boasts of a museum and welcome station. Call (912) 924-2558 for more information.

Stone Mountain Park: Another Atlanta-area landmark. The rock carvings on the side of the mountain are breathtaking but there's a whole lot more to enjoy — boat trips on the lake, running trails, firework and laser shows and acres available for picnicking and kite flying.

Six Flags Over Georgia: Set aside a whole day for this fun trip. Located on I-20, just a few miles west of Interstate 285-W in Atlanta, Six Flags is every kid's dream vacation. The "Looping Starship" is the latest craze at the park. Old favorites "Thunder River," "Wheelie," "The Great Six Flags Air Racer," "Freefall," and "The Scream Machine" still pack 'em in. The park opens full time May 25; it will be open on weekends until then. Park hours and admission prices are subject to change without notice.

Montgomery: A vacation spot? You bet. The renovated train station downtown, on the banks of the Alabama River, is a must. The symphony plays on the river bank from time to time. The Alabama Shakespeare Festival is now in Montgomery. And for the kids, there is the Montgomery Zoo. It's the closest zoo to Columbus. Take the Montgomery outer loop north to the zoo entrance where 700 animals will greet you. Entry fee: $1. Gates open at 10:30 a.m.

Lakepoint State Park Resort: This resort is 45 miles south of here along U.S. 431 on the banks of Lake George (Lake Eufaula). It's a fisherman's dream, has a completely equipped marina, an 18-hole golf course, lighted tennis courts, etc. All at reasonable rates. For further information, call (205) 687-8011.

The Little White House: The FDR Museum alone is worth the trip to Warm Springs. While there, catch the documentary movie on the late president's life. His home in Warm Springs was not elaborate; in fact it is quite small, with utility and comfort obviously stressed. The grounds are open every day from 9 a.m.-5 p.m., weekends from 9 a.m.-6 p.m. Only a couple of miles away is Roosevelt State Park, atop Pine Mountain. Cabins are available; fishing, boating, camping and swimming are the lures. Beautiful scenery. Call (404) 668-4858 for more information on this state park.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Weight rooms across Fort Benning have become a maze of sweat and muscle as bodybuilders prepare for the Mr. and Mrs. Fort Benning Contest in May.

When it comes to flexing the right muscles at the right time, Luis Guasch has proven expertise.

Guasch is co-holder of the Mr. Fort Benning title and awaits the chance to defend his title.

Guasch's second place finish in the 1984 competition was a show of true excellence in the sport, considering he began training only a month before the competition.

"I'd spent 11 days in the hospital for an appendix operation and during that stay lost 12 pounds of muscle," said Guasch.

His love for the sport drew out the pain and training began.

"I like it. Bodybuilding is my sport," said the 174-pound middleweight. "In the coming years, I can improve because I'm steadily searching for new techniques in body development," said Guasch.

Guasch started bodybuilding through a Charles Atlas course. He then added his personal weight training program to the routine.

The seven-year bodybuilding veteran advises newcomers to "cycle" their training.

"During the off-season, usually the winter months, individuals should train heavy. But in-season training should consist of less weight and more repetition to intensify the workout," explained Guasch.

The weight training program for Guasch consists of the use of "strict form" and "cheating".

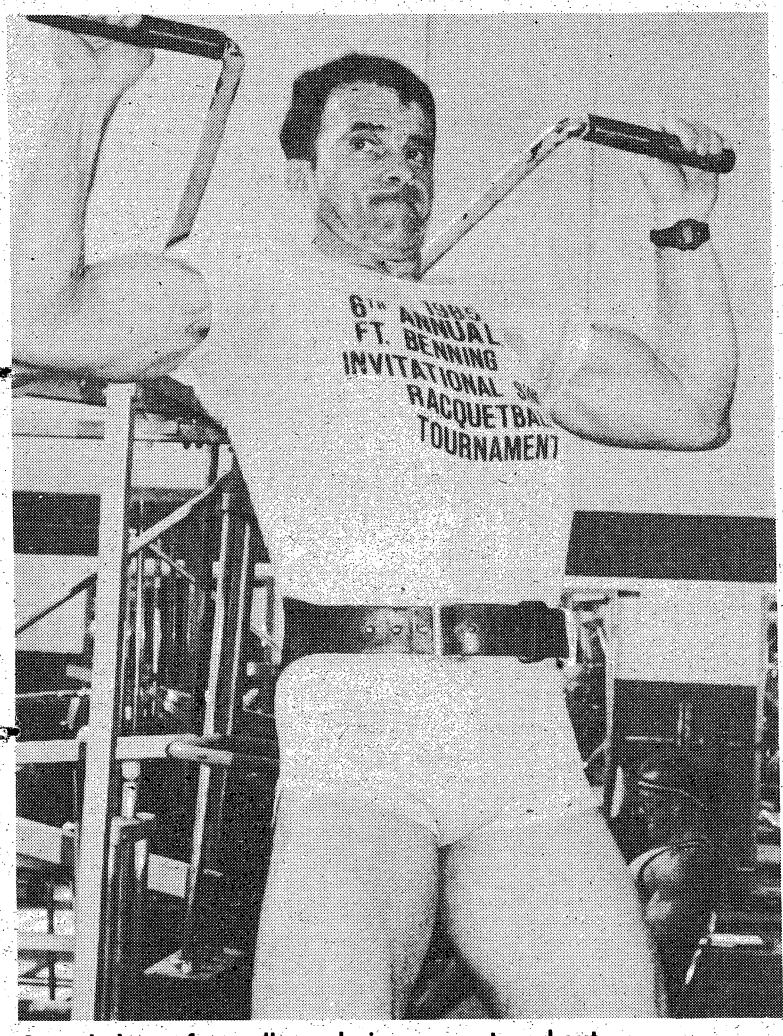
"Strict" is the rigid exactness of each exercise and each repetition, while "cheating" strays from established rules, in order to hit certain muscle parts that may not be stimulated by strict form.

"Cheating has its place in bodybuilding, but it must be creative cheating," said Guasch. "One should train for shape, not to get the excess muscle that may become 'grotesque'," he said.

Training is not the only factor in competitive bodybuilding. One must also become familiar with the stage and posing.

"It is important to get the proper 'tanning' before competition to accent the full effect of the physique," said Guasch.

Guasch is currently training for the Peach State Championship at Columbus College Fine Arts Building April 19.



As he took a short break from a few presses, Scott Higgins, also in training, approached with the gaze of a hungry lion looking over his prey.

"I surely hope you will compete in the Mr. Fort Benning Contest. It will be a pleasure to beat someone with a reputation," snarled Higgins.

"You have got a lot of work to do to beat me," chided Guasch.

The challenge was made and the stage will be set for competition.

With confidence, Guasch set his goal for the National Physique Committee Nationals in October.

Guasch does a few pull-ups during a recent workout.

Barracuda Swim Team not 'all wet' about winning

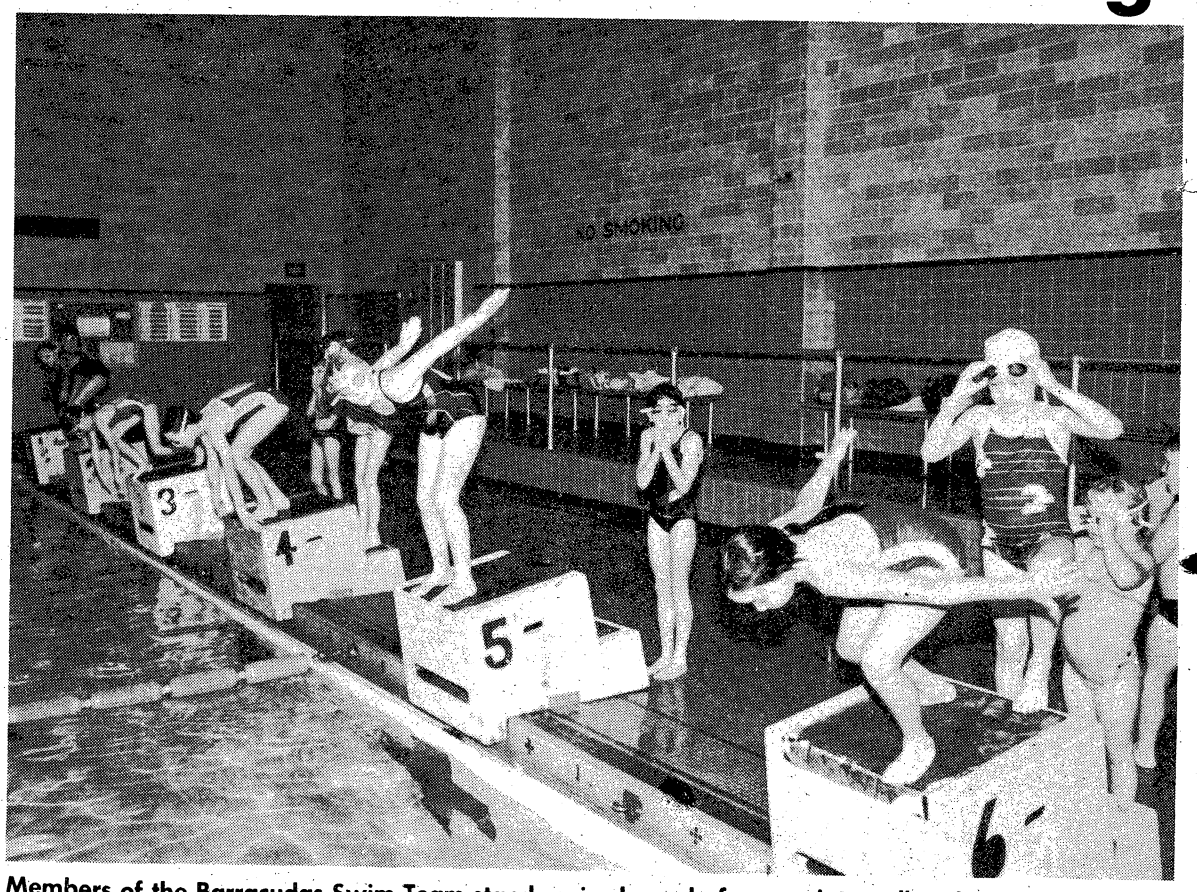
Story and photos by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

You wouldn't want to eat them, and they're more at home in chlorine than salt water, but their name fits their competitive determination.

They're the Fort Benning Barracudas, the Youth Activities swim team, and they're a determined bunch of swimmers, according to their coach, Elaine Kendall.

"We'll take any child who's motivated, but it's something the kid has to want," Kendall said. The current team is 45 strong, and the swimmers range in age from 4 to 18. It's a year 'round activity for youngsters, who practice at the indoor pool at Briant Wells Gym.

Swimming is a family affair, Kendall said. "Most of the kids come from families that swim and the team has a great deal of parental support. That's one reason it's such a successful program."



The team is divided into the competitive group, which travels to swim meets, and the non-competitors, who are still working to build their skills for competition.

Kendall said one good thing about swimming is that anybody can get good at it. "It's a learned skill, and anyone who has the stamina to hang in there and work can get good at it. Practice makes perfect," she said.

Some children practice four days a week and their drive has paid off. The team has been placing in the top five at meets, which is good for such a young team, according to Kendall. "This is the second year for the swim team, and it takes time to develop winners.

"Even if they don't make it as a competitor, being on the team is still good for the children. "Some come in here and cannot swim the length of the pool. Through practice and building themselves up, they get to the point where they can swim many laps of the pool easily, so it gives kids a sense of accomplisment," she said.

For more information about joining the team, call Kendall at 687-8958.

Public should be aware of outdoor regs

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In an effort to reduce the number of violations, the post is attempting to make the public aware of the rules and regulations governing fishing and hunting on post.

The information is contained in United States Army Infantry Center (USAIC) Regulation 210-2. Authorization to fish and hunt on Benning extends to:

- U.S. Armed Forces active-duty or retired personnel.
- Disabled veterans with service connected disability of not less than 30 percent.
- Benning civilian employees (active and retired).
- Active National Guardsmen and Reservists residing in Russell and Lee counties, Alabama and Muscogee, Chattahoochee, Harris, and Marion counties in Georgia.
- Primary dependents of sponsors and deceased sponsors and authorized guests of those previously listed.
- Guests must reside a distance more than 75 miles from Fort Benning, unless an exception is made by the Deputy Post Commander.

Post permits may be obtained from the Outdoor Recreation Branch of the Morale Support Activities Division.

A permit is no longer required for those wishing to fish on post from the banks of the Chattahoochee River. However, the person must be eligible to fish on Fort Benning and have the appropriate state fishing license. The Chattahoochee River flows through the reservatio for some 18 nautical miles.

Persons between the ages of 12 to 15 must be accompanied by a sponsor/spouse to hunt on the Fort Benning reservation.

If any of these persons are born on or after January 1, 1961 they must show successful completion of an approved hunter education course.

Persons 10 and 11 years of age accompany a sponsor while hunting but are not authorized to carry a firearm.

Any person under the age of 10 years is not authorized to hunt or accompany hunters on the Fort Benning reservation.

Sportsmen having permission to fish and hunt on Fort Benning are responsible for familiarizing themselves with and abiding by the USAIC Regulation, state and federal laws.

The hunter safety training course is mandatory for everyone who hunts on Fort Benning. For information on the next course date, call 545-3278.

Bassers get fish-braggin' rights

Bass Club

The annual Tri-Community Super Bowl Bass Tournament was held this past weekend and for the second consecutive year the Fort Benning Bass Club earned "Bragging Rights" as tournament champions.

This annual Columbus-Phenix City-Ft Benning competition was initiated in 1975 as a public relations event to introduce the local bass clubs to the public and media and foster a sense of sportsmanship, conservation and safety in boating and bass fishing.

Prominent citizens from the Tri-Community area are invited to fish as observers with members of six men teams from each of the Bass Clubs in the area.

The winning catch by the Fort Benning Bass Club tipped sthe scales at 31 lbs. 8 ozs., well ahead of the second place Dixie Bass Club's catch of 9 lbs. 2 ozs.

Third and fourth places for the tournament went to the Dolphin Bass Club and Oswego Bass Club of Columbus.

Big fish for the tournament also went to a Benning club member as Willie Goble helped anchor their winning total with a 6 lb. 8 oz. largemouth.

To go along with the "Bragging Rights" as tournament champions, the Benning Bass Club will keep the rotating Super Bowl Trophy until the 1987 competition.

©1986 Audi

Today, the Audi 5000S becomes even easier to handle. $298 a month.*

The Audi 5000S sedan's ability to negotiate roadways crisply and efficiently is certainly one reason to admire it. That you can negotiate a lease of just $298 a month on this fine European luxury sedan is all the more reason to acquire it.

Performance aside, this 1986 Audi 5000S sedan comes with many standard features that increase comfort without altering the lease price. Electronic climate control, cruise control, power windows and door locks, AM/FM stereo cassette, and automatic transmission make this limited time offer a tempting invitation to unlimited driving pleasure.

A closer look will prove what words cannot. Come in for a test drive and complete lease details. Program ends May 31, 1986. And drive away in an Audi 5000S sedan at a lease price that is, well, easy to handle.

*This offer is available only from a participating Audi Prestige Leasing dealer through May 31, 1986 as a 60-month, closed-end lease. No purchase option. No down payment is required. First month $298 payment and $300 security deposit are required in advance. Monthly payments are based on manufacturer's suggested retail price and special lease terms extended by VCI/Prestige Leasing. Total lease payments $17,880.00 plus 10¢ per mile over 75,000. Registration, local fees, tax, options additional.

Gramm-Rudman hits post housing

Because of the Gramm-Rudman Act, some Permanent Change of Station moves from Fort Benning are being delayed from 90 to 120 days. This will impact adversely on the waiting list for family quarters and will increase the waiting time up to three to four months.

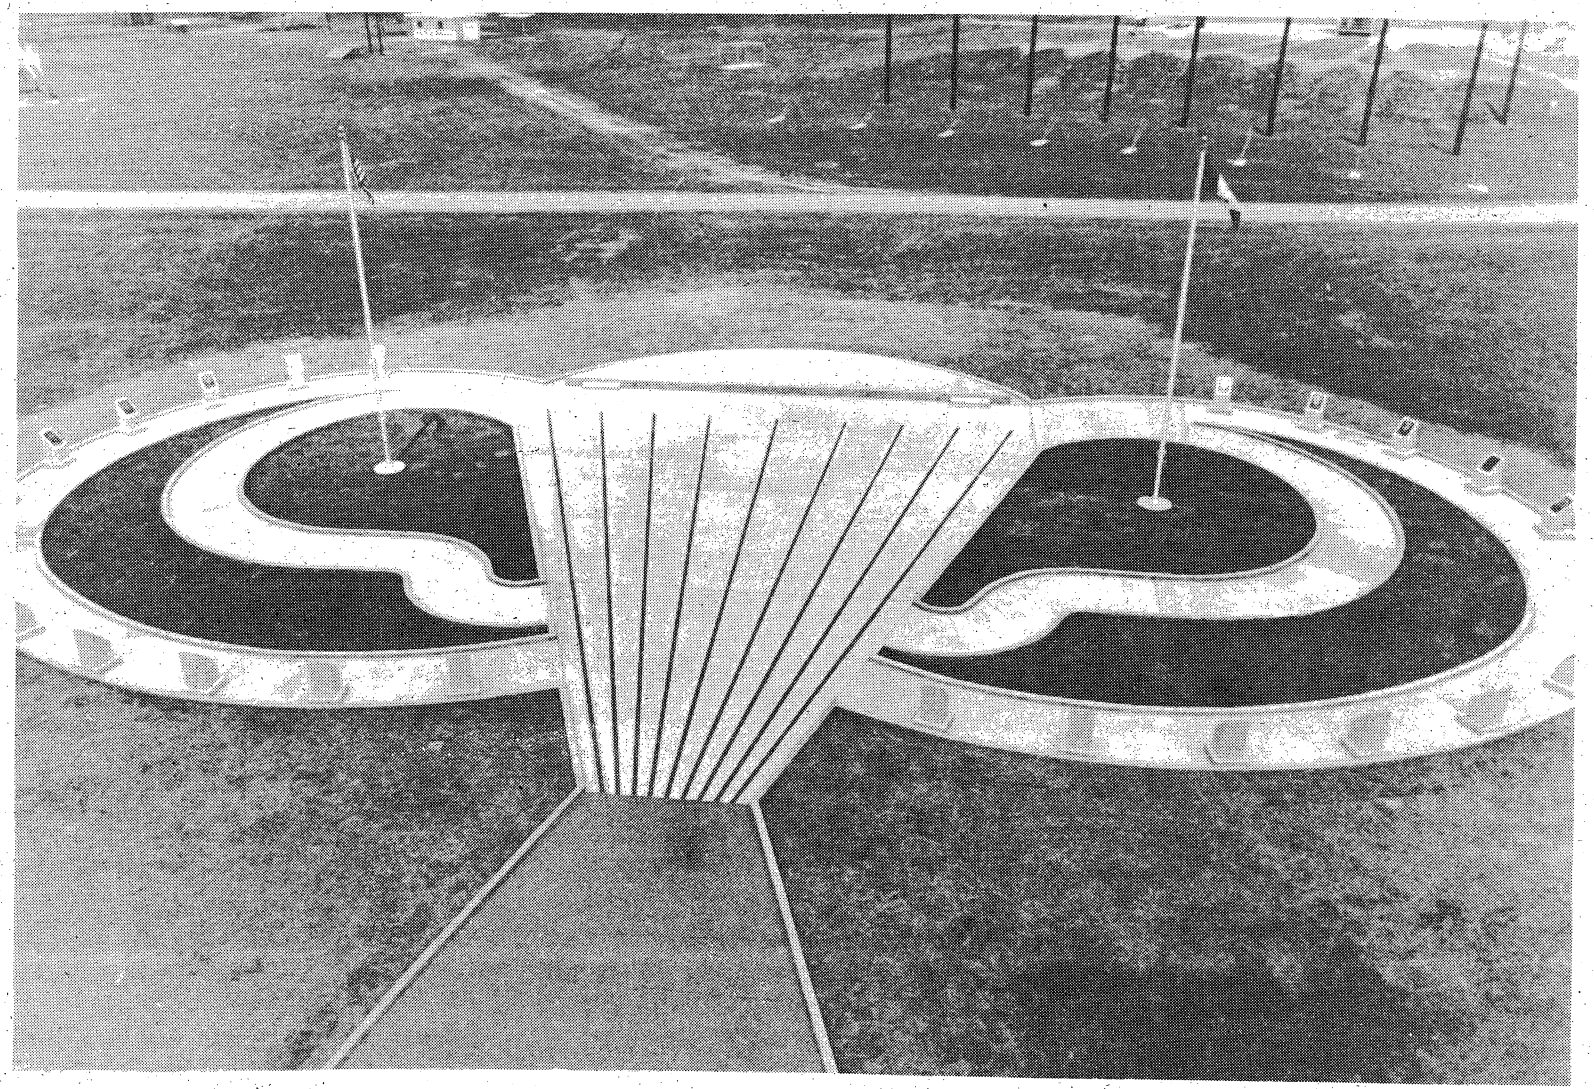
The Housing Referral Office in Building 2622 is available for assistance in obtaining temporary off-post accommodations. The Family Housing Office will continue to assign quarters as expeditiously as possible when they become available.

New fitness center open for business

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. cut the ribbon, officially opening the new Family Fitness Center at the Officers' Club Tuesday.

The Fitness Center features Nautilus equipment, a mirrored workout room and a juice bar.

It is the first center of its kind in the Army.



"It shows a new azimuth is being set in that we are heading toward the reality of taking care of our family," Burba said.

Citadel Club meeting planned for Monday

Reservations must be made by today for the Chattahoochee Trace Citadel Club cocktail and dinner party at the Columbus Hilton Monday at 7 p.m.

There will be a presentation of "The Mark Clark Story."

Cost is $10 a person. For more information, call Col. Jim Moore at 545-5121 or 687-4998 or Bob Poydasheff at 324-4792 or 327-9415.

Paratroopers' memorial dedicated

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Against the backdrop of American and Canadian flags, the Infantry Center Band and paratroopers of all ages, the new Airborne Walk was officially dedicated on Eubanks Field here yesterday by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh.

More than 800 attended the 10 a.m. ceremony, including airborne soldiers from WWII, the Korean War, Vietnam and Grenada.

Benning commander, Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., retired Lt. Gen. William P. Yarborough and the Airborne Walk Committee chairman, Henley P. Woods were also on hand for the official dedication.

Marsh used the occasion to pay tribute to the fighting prowess of American and Canadian paratroopers and to indirectly lambast the Congress for not approving $100 million in aid to Contras fighting in Nicaragua.

Marsh said: "As long as I am Secretary of the Army, there will be a place in the Army for the airborne. Paratroopers are just as important now as in WWII, they will be important in 1990 and in the future.

"We need the airborne to support our national policy. That is a policy of deterring war through strength. We have to be able to deploy that strength quickly in the world we live in today for we are engaged in a conflict. It is a conflict between the United States, a people who have a free government serving them, against the Soviets, a government which has made people servants of the state.

"The Soviet Union is the cause of much of the conflict in the world today. Nicaragua is quickly becoming Cubanized and they present a threat to the security of our hemisphere. I think the modest request by our president to aid the Contras fighting Nicaragua should be honored.

"The Airborne Walk is a reminder to everyone of the need for a strong defense and of the price of freedom."

Marsh's remarks met with an enthusiastic response from those on hand.

The Airborne Walk was built to honor soldiers in the airborne, glider and trooop carrier units.

The memorial consists of concrete pathways that form the shape of the American parachutist badge. Insignias of the 26 units in which paratroopers served are represented by bronze plaques on granite stands that form the 'wings' of the parachutist badge of the memorial.

Military budget cuts a 'slap in the face'

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two things in recent newspaper headlines stand out, vividly, in my mind: the U.S. bombing attack on Libya and the on-going Congressional talks about how to cut the military budget. Neither, taken together, make any sense to me.

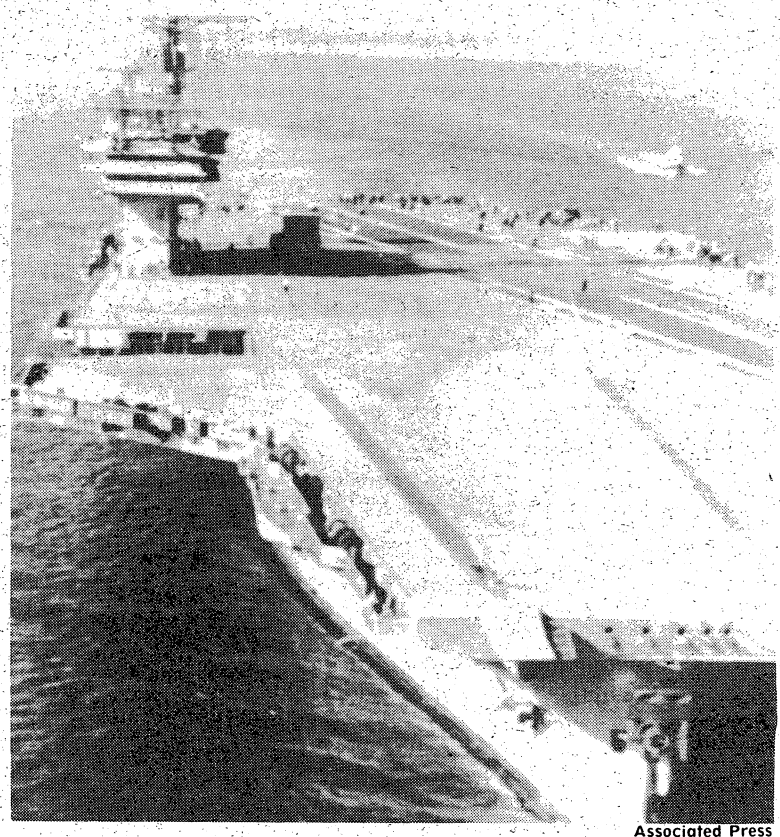
When U.S. Air Force and Navy jets attacked the five targets in Khadafy's Libya Monday morning the planes were manned by U.S. military personnel. These personnel, airmen and sailors, were suddenly, without much warning, put in harm's way. They were thrown from a peaceful situation into combat in a matter of a few hours. As of this writing, one Air Force F-111 bomber is still missing, along with its two man crew.

This Libyan action illustrates the volatile world in which we live. It illustrates the sudden change that can quickly come about for our military personnel. Hundreds of airmen and sailors carrying out their routine, everyday, peacetime missions quickly found themselves steaming and flying into the maw of war, an almost instaneous happening.

Just like those airmen and sailors, soldiers stationed right here at Fort Benning, especially soldiers in the Ranger regimental headquarters and Ranger battalion, could be thrown from the waltz of peacetime activities into the frenzied dance of death of war.

This situation also poignantly shows how military personnel must live: with the constant threat of war ever present. Modern warfare and volatile situations happen and are reacted to much quicker today than during the time of World War II or even the Korean War. With advanced weaponry and transportation, soldiers, sailors and airmen can be in battle in a matter of a few hours.

But military professionals know the score. The constant threat of war comes with the territory of being a professional servicemember and rightly so. Our military is strictly voluntary and the pay and benefits for service people reflect the kind of life they have to live. This brings to mind, however, the price one has to put on having to live with the threat of war and being instantaneously being injected into that war. What is it worth? There's the rub.

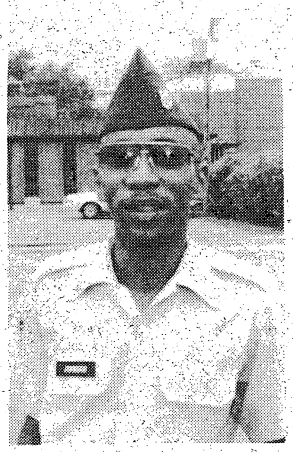


Our Congress, in its budget-cutting fervor, is finding ways to erode present military benefits. Reductions in moving allowances, promotion slowdowns, curtailment of permanent change of station, fewer lieutenants and there has even been talk of a cut in military end strength. The list, of course, goes on. Even military veterans have had their G.I. Bill education benefits slashed and all of this going on even while airmen and sailors were combatting Khadafy in the Gulf of Sidra.

The price for losing the life of a sailor, airman or soldier cannot be set. However, our leaders in Congress should, at the very least, honor the present military benefits system as a sacred contract entered into with all military personnel that cannot be tampered with. It is the very least our nation can do because, after all, aren't these same military personnel required, if called upon, to face the potential of death while doing their duty?

I think Rudyard Kipling, the British barracks balladeer, said it best in his poem, "Tommy," a work illustrating the shabby treatment afforded British "Tommy's," or soldiers, in the late 19th century:

For it's Tommy this, an' Tommy That, an "Chuck him out, the brute!"
But it's "Savior of 'is country" when the guns begin to shoot;
An' it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' anything you please;
An' Tommy ain't a bloomin' fool-you bet that Tommy sees!



Yes, "Tommy" sees and we should, all of us, feel reprehensible about what is being done to our professional military.

Various voices

Why do you believe that the public responds better to the needs of the soldier in times of crises, rather than in times of peace?

SP4 Earl H. Johnson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade — "The public knows who the soldier is in a time of crises because that is the only time that they realize that the soldier is here to protect them. But we are always here to serve, in peace, war, and harmony."

Judy Rowe, family member — "People realize that the military will defend them, and the soldier is not an immediate priority until there is a crisis. When in peace time, the public sector lives with great peace of mind, knowing that their safety is being cared for by soldiers. Many feel that there is not reason to worry about defense, until defense is threatened."

SP4 Robert E. Lamb, Service Company, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade — "They realize that our job is national defense, and with a regular paycheck we can be cast to the side until an emergency come up. Though there are a lot of non-profit organizations who are willing to look out for the soldiers well being, the general public only want taxes to go down and military spending to be cut."

Rapist gets 35 years; victims scarred for life

by Charles A. Coffin
Staff Judge Advocate

A rapist who terrorized Fort Benning residents for much of 1985 was finally convicted and sentenced at a general court-martial last week following the most exhaustive investigation conducted by the Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Division in recent years.

SSgt. Lonnie Parker, Jr., was found guilty April 10, of 14 crimes, including the rapes at knifepoint of two Fort Benning women. Parker was assigned to the Columbus Recruiting Station. He worked at the Peachtree Mall recruiting office, but lived in government quarters located at Nash Court in Bouton Heights.

Capt. Kurt Meckstroth, prosecutor, showed that during the early morning hours of July 13, 1985, Parker determined that a warrant officer residing in Custer Terrace was pulling duty and would be away from home. Parker broke into the quarters, armed with a knife, and found the warrant officer's wife asleep in the bedroom. Parker woke her up and threatened to slit her throat if she did not cooperate. Parker then raped and sodomized the woman.

Meckstroth proved that two months later, on September 24, 1985, Parker struck again. This time he selected a victim from the Bouton Heights housing area. An infantry lieutenant left his wife alone while he participated in an overnight FTX. Parker used his knife to gain access through a rear screen door. He found his victim sleeping alone in a bedroom. Again, he threatened to kill the woman with his knife before raping and sodomizing her.

Meckstroth said the CID responded within minutes after each rape was reported and gathered all available evidence from the crime scenes.

A plaster cast was made of a footprint found outside the quarters where the first rape occurred. Bedsheets containing semen stains and minute fibers were seized from the scene of the second rape. However, because Parker was so careful to ensure that neither rape victim ever saw his face, the CID lacked a suspect with whom this evidence could be matched.

Fortunately, from an investigative standpoint, Parker did not stop at merely raping the two women.

On October 31, 1985, Parker made obscene and threatening telephone calls to both of his rape victims, threatening to rape them once again. The women recognized the caller's voice as that of their rapist. The calls were reported to the CID and permission was obtained from the Office of the Secretary of the Army to place recording and tracing devices on their telephones. Parker called the victims again in November 1985. This time, he threatened to return to their houses and rape them again. Unbeknownst to Parker, the calls were recorded and traced to his quarters.

Meckstroth showed Parker was apprehended on November 13 at the Peachtree Mall recruiting office. He had in his possession a piece of paper containing the names and telephone numbers of five neighbors of the first rape victims. The top name had been crossed off. It was later learned that Parker had threatened to rape the neighbor earlier that day. It was also learned that a neighbor of the second rape victim was also threatened by Parker that morning.

After his apprehension, Parker was required to participate in an elaborate voice lineup. His voice was positively identified by both of the rape victims as that of their rapist. Parker was also positively identified during a visual lineup by Captain Robert Wrenn as the man Wrenn caught peeping in a Bouton Heights resident's window on November 11. Wrenn had confronted Parker that night and had chased him for half a mile before Parker eluded him.

Meckstroth said that once Parker had been identified as a suspect,it was possible,through state of the art scientific methods, to positively link Parker to the rapes.

A serology expert at Fort Gillem CID Crime Lab determined that the semen found on the second rape victim's bedsheets was consistent with Parkers. Another scientist determined that the fibers found in the bedsheets were microscopically the same as those found on an unusual pair of running shorts seized from Parker's home. The shoe print taken outside the first rape victim's quarters had the tread pattern as a pair of running shoes owned by Parker. Most important was the conclusion by Detective Lonnie Smrkovski, a Michigan State police officer, that Parker made the recorded telephone calls to the two rape victims. Detective Smrkovski, a noted expert in the forensic science of voiceprint spectography, was flown to Fort Benning to obtain voice exemplars from

Reader criticizes DUI story

Editor:

The intent of this letter is to rebuke an article published in the Bayonet April 4 entitled "Incidence of DUI's High; Careers being ruined.

I am an NCO who has chosen not to go underground when fired upon, and feel I have been!

I find it painfully disheartening when any leader chooses to give one-sided statistical data that collectively incriminates.

Your article on April 4 stated: "The incident rate of DUIs is climbing at an alarming rate. In February of '85 we had 51. This February we had 71. That's bad enough in itself. The appalling thing is that 30 percent of those 71 DUIs were sergeants through sergeants major. These are the role models and leaders of our young soldiers."

Are sergeants through sergeants major the only ones who drink? As a nondrinker, I realize that we have drinkers at all levels of our profession. However, I believe this article is targeted to give the perception that NCOs are the principal or perhaps only violators. What about the other 70 percent?

I believe that a closer examination of all the facts (statistics) would tend to illuminate this matter by comparing percentages on a proportional basis , e.g. E-1 through E-4, E-5 through E-9, O-1 and above. Even though one rank would be higher, this tends to fluctuate monthly (percentage wise.)

We have a national problem with alcohol and should attack it "internally" as a problem "we" have.

There are many considerations to touch upon when a soldier has a problem, because his weakness becomes a liability for us all. More education and counseling may be in order. However, the stigma planted as a result of your article definitely creates an environment of reluctance toward a superior for help.

Seabee unit building reputation during construction at Benning

by T.L. Thickstun
6th Reserve Naval Const. Regt.

Seabee s are the Navy's construction engineers and they are well represented this month on Fort Benning by the Sixth Reserve Naval Construction Regiment.

The SIXTHRNCR has four commands with personnel located in eight midwestern states. Three of these commands will be represented here during the next month.

Reserve Naval Mobile Construction Battalion Twenty with headquarters in Columbus, Ohio arrived April 6 and will leave Sunday. They will be followed by Reserve Naval Mobile Construction Battalion Twenty-Six with headquarters at Mount Clemens, Michigan and elements of Reserve Naval Construction Support Force Unit Four and Construction Hospital Unit Eighteen D, both with headquarters in St. Louis, Missouri. The evolution will end May 3.

The Seabee s are being hosted by the 36th Engineer Group, who are assigning construction projects. Some of their missions will include range support and morale and welfare.

While they are at Fort Benning, the Seabees are enhancing their military skills.

RNMCB 20 Commanding Officer, Commander Donald F. Watts, stated "We are looking forward to receiving quality military training at Fort Benning that we are unable to receive at our battalion headquarters. Being here will greatly enhance the mobilization readiness of the 20th."

1-58th Infantry sees 'red' during support phase training

by Sally Toomy
197th Public Affairs Office

Late on Friday afternoon the company area was nearly empty. The evening formation was reduced to a small group of soldiers. The absent soldiers were dispersed to all ends of Fort Benning performing the 197th Infantry Brigade's support missions for the U.S. Army Infantry Center.

Steve Simpson

PFC Greg Boyd, Company D, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, defends his position in support of an Infantry Officer Basic Course training exercise.

Fulfilling these commitments is a continuous training activity for units in the Brigade. In order to balance company- and battalion-level training while covering these commitments, the training schedule designates cycles of training.

The "red" phase is a training period in which the battalion is fully committed to support missions. During "amber" time, the unit trains intact at the company level while still providing support; and "green" is prime training time for the battalion.

Soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry have been spread out from Uchee Creek to the Infantry Museum during the battalion's recent red phase. Red phase training gives the company first sergeants an added challenge to provide soldiers for such commitments as well as keep track of the scattered groups.

Each company first sergeant does this in his own way, but 1st Sgt. Blaine Souerwine from Company C noted "once you get your soldiers out there, you have to check up on them and see that they're getting good training, and that they're fed well and getting good treatment."

The companies utilize these commitments to supplement their training. For example, a small group of Company B soldiers were tasked to support the School of the Americas training near Uchee Creek. The 197th soldiers incorporated some of their own waterborne training during downtime in their support mission.

Another group of Company soldiers were at the other end of Fort Benning defending a position against attacking Infantry Officer Basic Course students. SFC Charles Wiley, a battle drill instructor for the IOBC appreciates the support he receives from the well-motivated 197th soldiers.

"These soldiers can also learn how to clear a trench and defend it through participation in these exercises," Wiley said.

Souerwine added, "We use support missions to our benefit for training. If we are tasked to defend a hill against an attack that begins at 6 p.m., we might do short-range patrols or other training during the day."

When I-58th's red phase ended the soldiers began an amber training cycle.

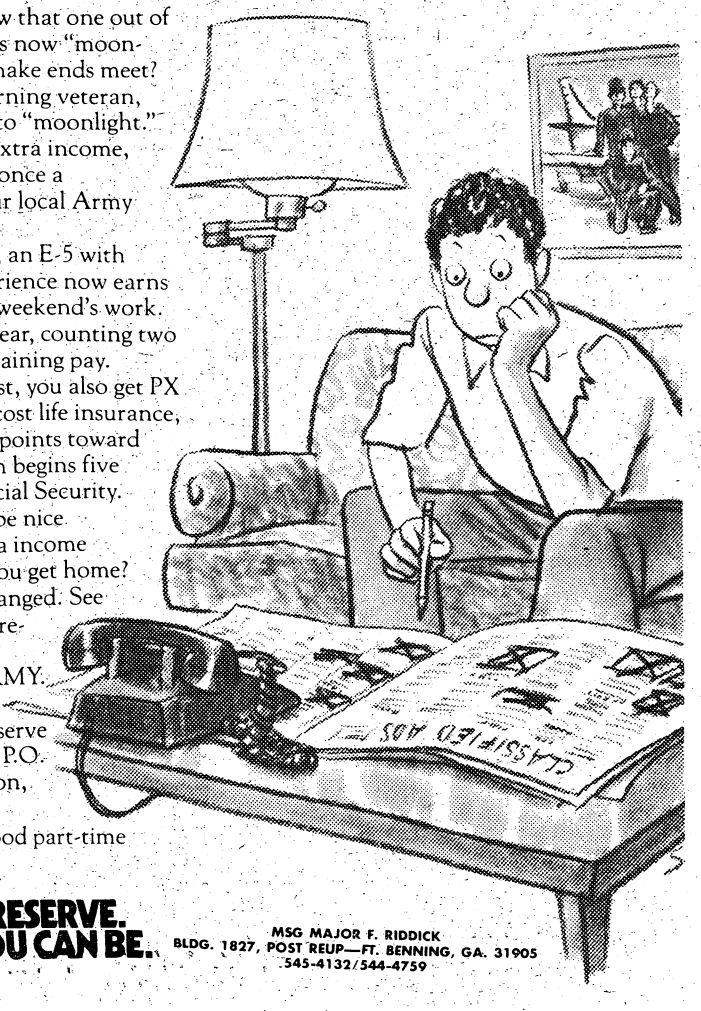
A GOOD PART-TIME JOB IS HARD TO FIND.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Did you know that one out of three Americans now "moonlights" to help make ends meet?

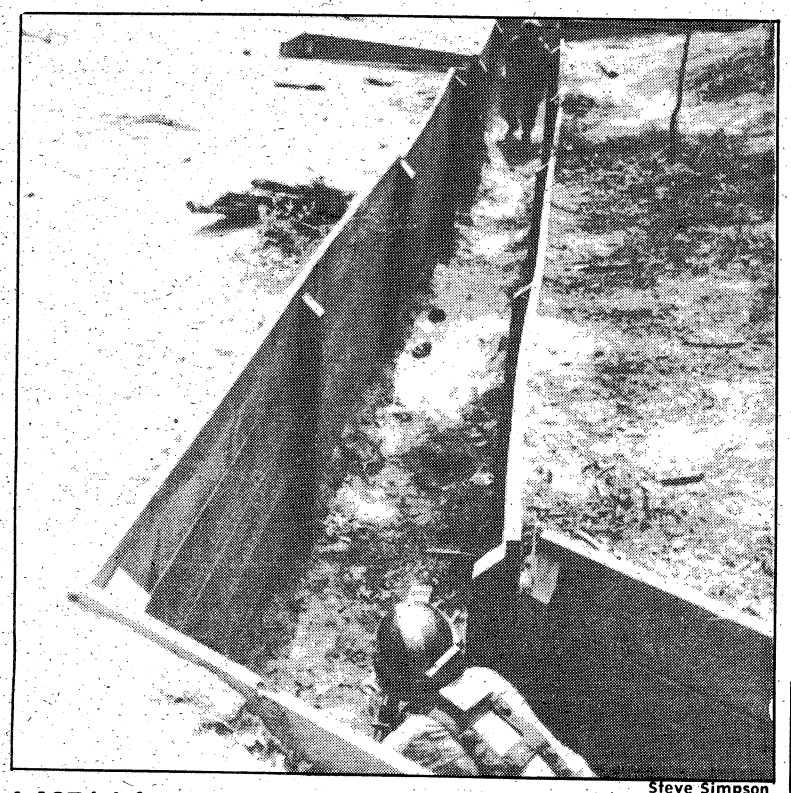
But as a returning veteran, you don't have to "moonlight." If you want an extra income, just "weekend" once a month with your local Army Reserve unit.



For instance, an E-5 with four years' experience now earns over $130 for a weekend's work. Over $2,000 a year, counting two weeks annual training pay.

As a Reservist, you also get PX privileges, low-cost life insurance, and retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have an extra income waiting when you get home?



It can be arranged. See your in-service recruiter. Or call 1-800-USA-ARMY. Overseas, write Army Reserve Opportunities, P.O. Box 7717, Clifton, NJ 07015.

Field exercise hones officers' tactical skills

1st Infantry Training Brigade

In a twist from the normal activities of ensuring the proper training for their One Station Unit Training soldiers, the officers of 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade underwent training of their own in an all-night officer Tactical Exercise Without Troops April 1.

The TEWT was done as part of the Officer Professional Development program of 3rd Bn., commanded by Lt. Col. Greg Wade, and is unique among the OPD in the 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

Wade said TEWT's are done on a quarterly basis and allow the officers to "maintain their proficiency in company-level tactics and improve their teaching skills. It also gives the officers a fun break from the OSUT routine."

The mission of the TEWT was twofold: conduct an infantry non-illuminated night attack and a night land-navigation exercise.

Classes were taught in the field by officers of the 3rd Bn. prior to the actual TEWT and included infiltration, how the Soviets defend, limited visibility attack, communication and equipment, observation devices and battlefield illumination and the company limited visibility attack. After the classes the officers conducted the night attacks from 6 to 10 p.m. and did the night land navigation exercise from 11:30 p.m. to 5:30 a.m. the following morning.

Wade said, "We like to take advantage of the rich training environment here at Fort Benning. We bring Officer Candidate School students along to intro-

SP4 Theodore Borders of HHC, 36th Engineer Group, executes the Australian Rappel.

Pathfinders help engineers go over the edge

by Kevin O. Davis
36th Engineer Group

In an effort to incorporate diverse training into the unit's weekly training program, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group conducted a rappelling exercise recently.

HHC, which is commanded by Capt. Del W. Miltenberger, consists of a vast amount of different occupational specialties. Consequently, it is a difficult task to develop training ideas that will increase unit morale while, subsequently, improving each individual as a soldier.

Initially, many of the soldiers were skeptical about rappelling off the 35-foot Amperville Tower, located behind Lawson Army Airfield. However, after receiving a very thorough block of instruction from members of the 187th Pathfinders, their confidence was intensified. Forty-three soldiers rappelled, including the 36th Engineer Group command sergeant major and the company commander.

The training commenced with instruction on how to tie the rappel ("swiss") seat. The 187th Pathfinders demonstrated the rappel from both the 35 feet wooden tower and from a mock helicopter skid. Adding adventure, they also demonstrated the Australian ("face-first") rappel off the helicopter skid. The demonstrations served as a viable tool in stimulating the soldiers' desire to execute the various rappels.

When the training finally culminated, many soldiers within the unit expressed a strong desire to be given the opportunity to rappel more often. As a result, HHC, 36th Engineer Group is already planning to have rappeling incorporated in with the unit's next Field Exercise in May.

INTERVENTION

in•ter•ven•tion - Alcoholism and drug dependency are diseases of denial. This means that it usually takes a crisis to force a person suffering from drinking or drugging problems to accept treatment. This crisis could be loss of a job or an automobile accident. An intervention is a controlled confrontation between the patient and his or her family or employer. Good treatment programs such as the Help Unit at Cobb Memorial Hospital help employers or families intervene effectively while the chance for recovery is still good.

Testing for expert medics tough medicine

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

Medical soldiers in the 197th Infantry Brigade have been busy preparing to join other Fort Benning soldiers in the quest for the Expert Field Medical Badge.

The EFMB is given to soldiers in medical and dental specialties who prove their knowledge and abilities by meeting the challenge of a test of mind and body.

Brigade medics attended two weeks of classroom and hands-on training conducted by the 34th Medical Battalion on main post. The medical battalion administered the training and the actual testing for the EFMB.

The test consists of a written portion and physical tasks. Soldiers must "get it right the first time" because earning the badge requires excellence in all areas.

CWO2 Ronald Ellyson, a Brigade physician's assistant, noted "a failure in any critical area may be disqualifying. That would keep a soldier from progressing to the next task."

To start off, the medical soldiers must meet the standards of the Army Physical Readiness Test and Skill Qualification Test. These qualify the soldier to take the written test.

Ellyson added, "The 100-question written test goes beyond the SQT test. It challenges the soldiers' knowledge of such medical subjects as evacuation procedures, field sanitation and hygiene. It also covers the Geneva Convention Code of Conduct in medical-related areas."

A soldier must score higher than 75 percent on the written test to advance to the physical portion.

The physical tests demand excellence in basic soldier skills and specialized medical tasks. The soldier must demonstrate his skills in NBC, map reading, field communication and knowledge of his weapon.

Some of the tasks are taken one step beyond soldier skills. For example, NBC skills include proper treatment of a contaminated casualty. Also, the soldier must use map reading skills to master day and night land navigation courses.

The hands-on tasks also include cardio-pulmonary recusitation , inserting an IV and other specialized medical tasks.

Another hurdle the medical soldiers must jump is an obstacle course. The soldiers must breech high and low obstacles while carrying a "casualty" on a litter.

Ellyson noted, "This course includes an overhead carry of a casualty through chest-deep water."

Last, but not least, the soldiers have three hours

duce them to the tactics they will need to master as officers and we invite Allied Officers to share the knowledge they've gained through experience in their countries."

The newest weapons available plus training simulators and Infantry School Instructors are used whenever possible. Past TEWT's have included the light infantry defense, light infantry day attack, Bradley fighting vehicle movement to contact and air assault operations.

When asked about the success of the TEWT, which is only one part of the ongoing OPD at 3rd Bn., Wade said, "I was pleasantly surprised with the night land navigation. Most teams completed the 12 kilometer course in six to six and a half hours plus we had no officers to get injured or lost."

At the completion of the exercise the officers were treated to a semi-formal breakfast compliments of the Battalion executive officer, Capt. Blake Watts.

to complete a 12-mile road march with ruck sack, weapon and other standard field equipment.

After a week of preparatory training, Pvt. Marthew Bruno, a medic from 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, felt that the most difficult part in earning the badge would be the land navigation course.

"On the written test, the land navigation questions are very hard. There is only one right answer," Bruno said. "Then, the land navigation courses are so physically tiring that it adds fatigue to what you're trying to accomplish."

However, SP4 Alphonso Gaddist, also a 1-58 medic, feels that passing the written test is the key to earning the badge.

"I learned from my experience last year that you have to get deep into your studies to pass," Gaddist said.

The written portion of the test was administered today. The medics who passed this portion of the test will go on to begin testing on the physical tasks next week.

Soldier spends 'nights on Broadway'

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

When SP4 Robert "Lee" Bryan steps out of his BDUs after a day's work in the 197th Infantry Brigade, he may step into the costume of a magician, the Ghost of Christmas Past or an Oklahoma cowboy.

These are roles that Bryan has played as an aspiring actor.

Bryan has had several roles in past productions of Fort Benning's theater group, such as Capt. Von Trapp in "The Sound of Music" last year and, most recently, "By Strouse."

Bryan noted that he wasn't able to get involved in drama until after high school because his school didn't have a drama program. But, he became involved in community theater in Richmond before coming into the Army.

Since that time, he has played in shows at Fort Carson, Colorado, his first duty station, and Fort Gordon, Georgia, while attending school there.

Since his arrival on Fort Benning in August 1984, Bryan has contributed his talents to performances in the Columbus community as well as productions on Fort Benning. He has played in shows at the Springer Opera House and Columbus College.

"Before I even audition for a show, I check my schedule at work and the duty rosters so I can make my rehearsals," Bryan said. "The director and I can usually work around my military commitments."

Bryan is an administrative assistant at the 197th automated data processing center.

Bryan enjoys his hobby on the stage and the work that goes into a production before the curtain rises.

"The applause is what really makes it worth what I've put into a show," Bryan added. "That's when all your efforts come together."

"I don't plan to pursue acting as a career," Bryan noted. "I'm presently taking voice lessons, I've taken some dance, and may take some acting classes but it's just a hobby that I enjoy doing."

In May, Bryan will play a role in Moliere's "The Miser" at Columbus College.

Dr. Thomas M. Horton has joined in an association with Dr. James I. Lopez for the continued practice of orthodontics at 1200 Wynnton Road, 324-1327.

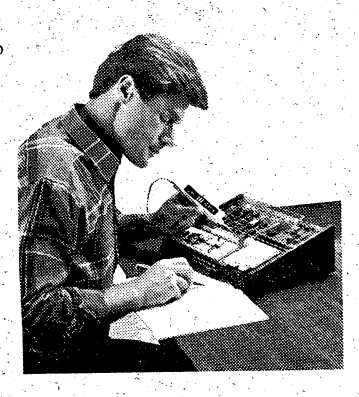
CIE MAKES THE WORLD OF ELECTRONICS YOURS.

In the service and out, today's world is the world of electronics. And some of the best jobs are electronics jobs. To get one for yourself, get the right kind of training. The kind you get from the Cleveland Institute of Electronics.

Specialized training.



You learn best from a specialist, and that's CIE. We're the leader in teaching electronics through independent study, we teach only electronics, and we've been doing it for over 50 years. You can put that experience to work for you just like more than 25,000 CIE students, over 7,500 of them in the armed forces, are doing now.

Practical training.

You learn best with practical training, so CIE's Auto-Programmed® lessons are designed to take you step-by-step, principle-by-principle. You also get valuable hands-on experience at every stage with sophisticated electronics tools CIE-designed for teaching. Our 4K RAM Microprocessor Training Laboratory, for example, trains you to work with a broad range of computers in a way that working with a single, stock computer simply can't.

Personalized training.

You learn best with flexible training, so we let you choose from a broad range of courses. You start with what you know, a little or a lot, and you go wherever you want, as far as you want. With CIE, you can even earn your Associate in Applied Science Degree in Electronics Engineering Technology. Of course, you set your own pace, and, if you ever have questions or problems, our instructors are only a toll-free phone call away.

The first step is yours.

To find out more, mail in the coupon below. Or, if you prefer, call toll-free 1-800-321-2155 (in Ohio, 1-800-523-9109). We'll send you a copy of CIE's school catalog and a complete package of enrollment information. Rangers get lineage, honors from WWII, Korea

Army News Service

Lineage and honors of the World War II Ranger battalions and the Korean War Ranger companies were transferred from the 1st Special Forces to the 75th Ranger Regiment, formerly the 75th Infantry (Ranger), in a ceremony yesterday at Fort Bragg, N.C.

The ceremony also recognized Special Forces for preserving Ranger lineage and honors for the past 25 years.

The redesignation of the 75th Ranger Regiment was approved by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., Feb. 3.

History of the Ranger units

The U.S. Army had six Ranger battalions during World War II. William O. Darby organized and led the 1st, 3rd and 4th Ranger Battalions, which served in North Africa and Italy and were known as the Ranger Force. They were disbanded in 1944. The 2nd and 5th Ranger Battalions saw action in five major campaigns in Europe after landing in Normandy on D-Day. The 6th Ranger Battalion fought in the Pacific. These battalions were inactivated in 1945 following the War. During the Korean War, elements of the former Ranger battalions were reorganized as 15 separate Ranger companies, six of which served in Korea, and activated again in 1951.

Upon implementation of the combat arms regimental system in the late 1950s, there were no plans for reactivating any Ranger units. In order to perpetuate the history of the World War II and Korean War Rangers, their lineage and honors were consolidated in 1960 with the lineage and honors of the 1st Special Service Force of World War II, a joint Canadian-American organization that fought in the Aleutians, Italy and France. Together they formed the 1st Special Forces, the parent regiment for all Special Forces groups.

Special Forces units were first organized in the 1950s. A major expansion occurred during the presidency of John F. Kennedy. Kennedy also authorized Special Forces to wear the green beret. Although only the 5th Special Forces Group was sent as a unit to Vietnam, members of other groups also served in Southeast Asia. The first Medal of Honor winner of the Vietnam War was Roger H. C. Donlon, commander of a Special Forces Detachment. The 1st Special Forces Group, stationed on Okinawa, was decorated for its support of allied military forces in the Pacific area as well as disaster relief operations in the Philippines. At the present time, there are eight Special Forces groups: four in the active Army, two in the Army National Guard and two in the Army Reserve.

When Ranger units were activated again in 1969, the 75th Infantry became their parent regiment. It perpetuated the 5030th Composite Unit (Provisional), the famous Merrill's Marauders, which operated along the Ledo Road in Burma during World War II. Thirteen companies of the 75th Infantry fought in Vietnam, and two battalions saw action in Grenada in 1983. A Regimental Headquarters and a Third Battalion were organized in 1984.

Although today's Rangers are proud of their lineal descent from Merrill's Marauders and the

CAPEX features 29th Infantry Regiment troops

Red Cloud range all fired up

Story and photos

29th Infantry Regiment PAO

Talk about excitement.

The 29th Infantry Regiment practically set Redcloud Range afire last week during a capabilities exercise designed to show infantry leaders the fire power of today's infantry soldiers.

Some 95 senior ranking officials from around the globe, including active duty, retired, Army Reserves, National Guard and Marine Corps personnel, observed the Infantry Weapons Capabilities Exercise (CAPEX).

Fired were the 60mm mortar, which is currently being fielded to light infantry units; M-2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle; 9mm pistol and XM4 Carbine (to be fielded in 1987 and 1988, respectively); M-16A2 rifle—replacement for the M-16A1—currently being fielded to the 82nd Airborne Division and the 75th Ranger Regiment; M-249 modified SAW (Squad Automatic Weapon), resumed fielding to the 7th Infantry Division; MK—19 or 40mm Grenade Machine Gun (MOD III)—replacement for MOD I—to be fielded in 1986; AT-4, M-136 Rocket Launcher, to be fielded to light infantry units in 1987; MK-153 SMAW (Shoulder Launch Multi-Purpose Assault Weapon), also called the Bunker Buster, to be fielded to select light infantry units in 1986.

According to Lt. Col. John D. Czibik, operations officer with the 29th Infantry Regiment and organizer of the event, "If there was any doubt in anyone's mind as to the capabilities of the infantry's weapons systems, those doubts should have been put to rest after the exercise."

The CAPEX was the climax of a three-day Infantry Commander's Conference, which takes place annually at Fort Benning.

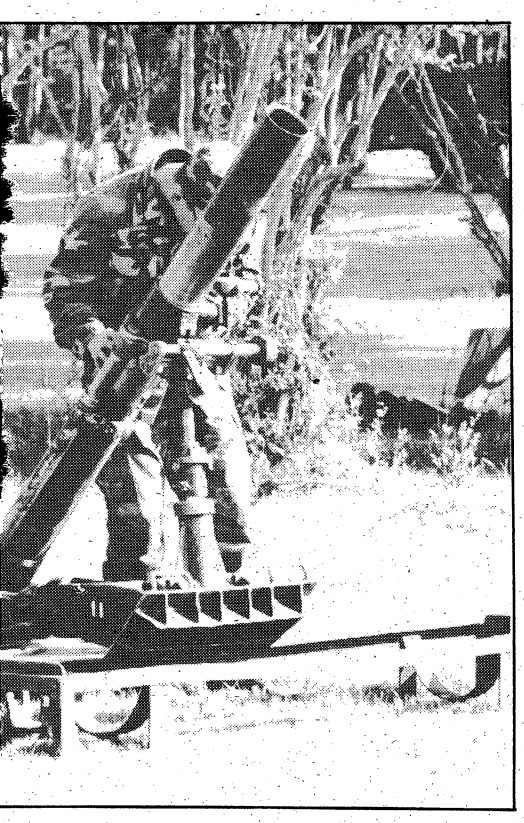
Earlier the commanders participated in several panel discussions that addressed the M-1/M-2 Combined Arms Teams; manning the infantry force; heavy force/light force integration; light forces in low intensity conflicts; and training and equipping the infantry force.

Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. opened the conference with a presentation on this year's Army theme: values.

He was followed last Tuesday, via satellite from the Pentagon, by Army Chief of Staff John A. Wickham Jr.

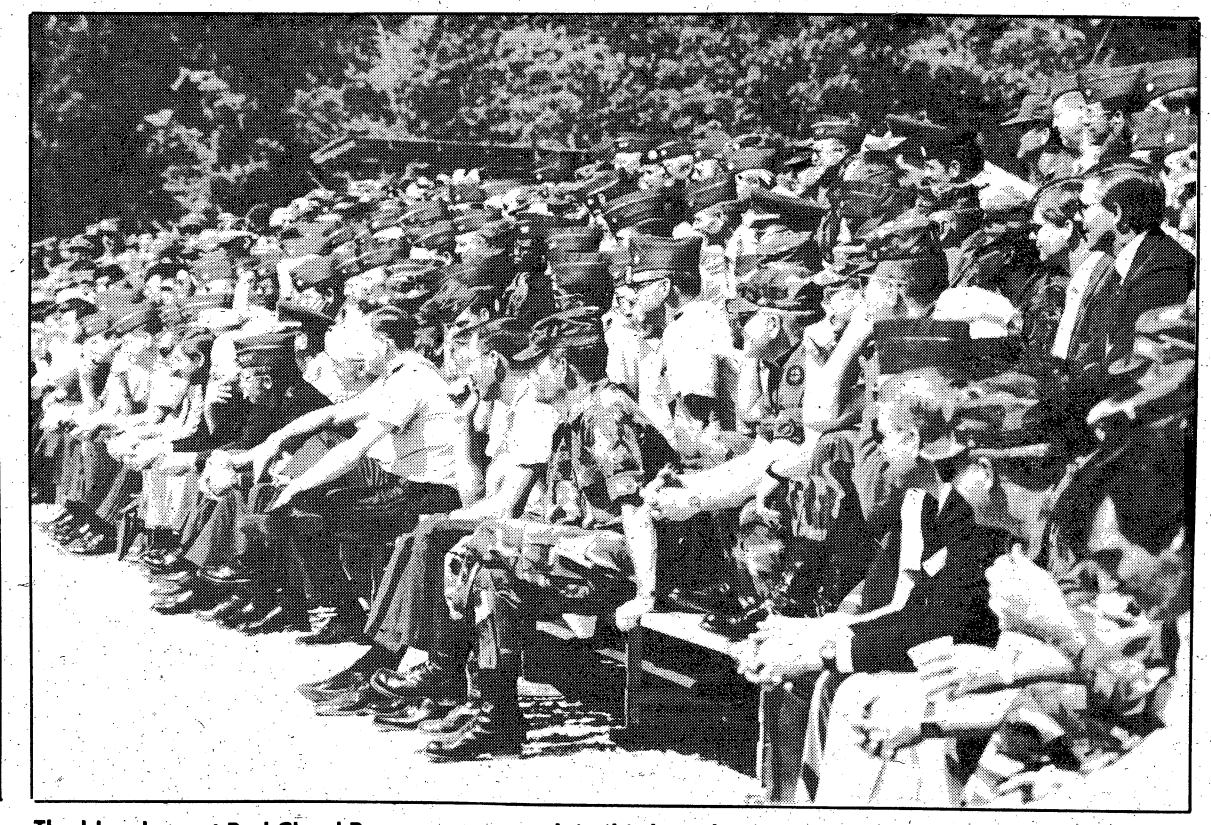
"After the entire conference, the group probably walked away with a better feeling that the infantry is in good hands," said Czibik.

More than 150 soldiers of the 29th participated in the exercise. Included were Companies B and D, 1st Battalion, and Companies B and C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.



Czibik says that the success of the CAPEX could not have been possible if it were not for the support of many others on the installation. The 197th Infantry Brigade provided a display of the M-1 Abrams and Fort Benning's Range Control Office and Fire Department also helped out.

Experts from the 2nd Marine Division, Camp LeJeune and the 9th Infantry Division, Fort Lewis also lent a hand in training regiment soldiers on the SMAW and 40mm Grenade Machine Gun.



SSgt. Matt Dryke of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit here, and current world champion in international skeet competition, as well as 1984 Olympic Gold Medal winner, lent his expertise in firing the 12-gauge shotgun and the .22-caliber rifle.

Among those attending the conference were Gen.s John R. Galvin, Maxwell Thurman, William Richardson, and retired Gen.s William B. Rosson, Robert Shumaker and Volney Warner.

After the CAPEX, the audience was invited to view various static displays and fire the weapons.

The bleachers at Red Cloud Range were awash in 'birds and stars' when the attendees at the Infantry Commanders Conference turned out for the CAPEX.

The BIFV was also on static display so spectators could get a close look at the weapon.

Rapist

Parker. Smrkovski, using extremely sophisticated devices at his Michigan lab, was able to convert the sounds of Parker's voice onto a visual graph. Meckstroth said everyone's voice forms a unique graph, just as everyone has unique fingerprints. Smrkovski was able to determine conclusively through this process that Parker made the threatening telephone calls.

After Parker was identified as the long sought after rapist, a thorough inquiry was made into Parker's record as a recruiter. It was learned that Parker was already under investigation for having offered to reveal to a female applicant the answers to an enlistment qualification test in return for sexual favors. It was also learned that Parker had seduced a female recruit in violation of a Recruiting Command regulation.

In a judge- alone trial before Col. Sebert Trail, Parker pleaded guilty to two charges each of burglary, forcible sodomy and rape. He also pleaded guilty to communicating four threats over the telephone, to being a peeping tom, and to several presentencing hearings.

In response to the questioning of Capt. Randy Hall, assistant prosecutor, one victim testified that prior to being raped, she placed a high value on her independence. She said that she used to enjoy having time to herself, but that she can no longer bear to be home alone at night. When her husband is in the field, she must either stay with a friend or get a friend to stay with her.

The other rape victim testified,in response to Meckstroth's questions, that after her rape, she too initially stayed with friends whenever her husband was gone overnight. However, she eventually tired of imposing herself on her friends, so she developed enough courage to stay alone. But she stated that she is still too afraid to go to sleep.be confined at hard labor for 35 years. This is the harshest sentence adjudged at a Fort Benning court-martial in over three years. Parker will not be eligible for parole until the year 1996.

Judge Trail sentenced Parker to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit all his pay and allowances, to be dishonorably discharged from the Army, and to be confined at hard labor for 35 years. This is the harshest sentence adjudged at a Fort Benning court-martial in over three years. Parker will not be eligible for parole until the year 1996.

Spiritual

'Joining' causes one to grow in love of God, man

by Chaplain Paul Williams
1st Infantry Training Brigade

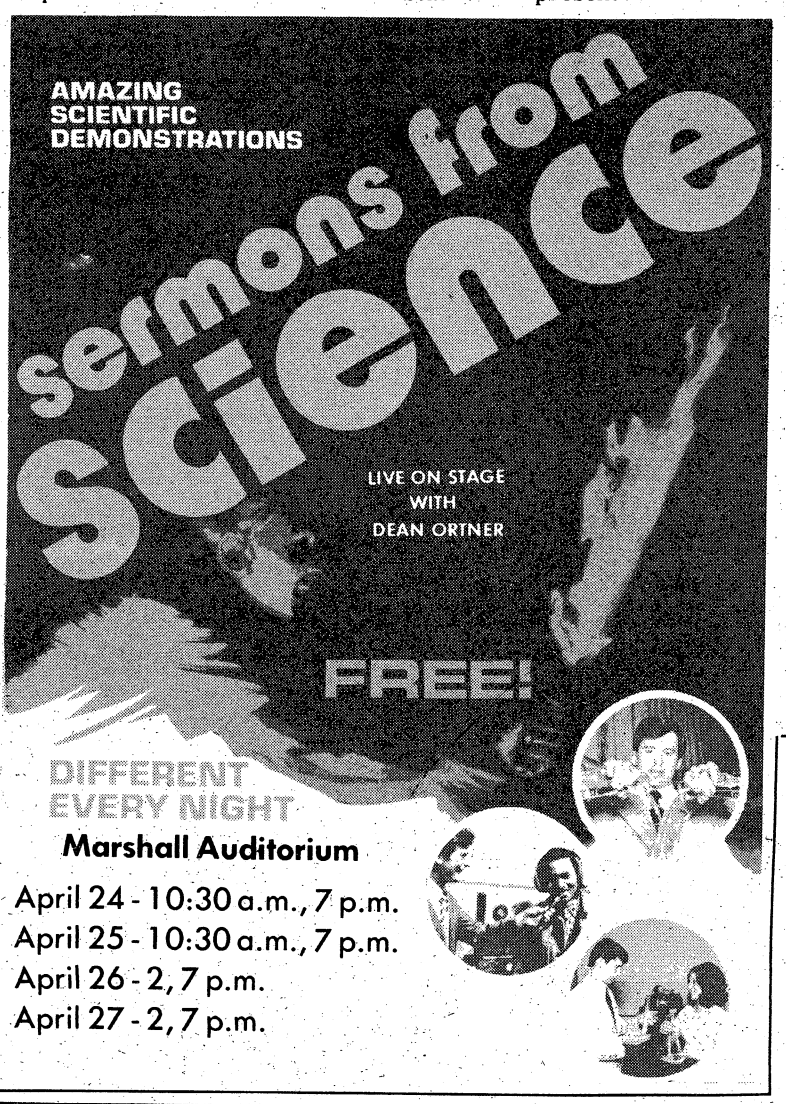
Several years ago there was a young Mormon missionary in England. He was chased and repeatedly troubled by an amorous woman who finally went so far as to have him literally kidnapped. This episode received considerable attention in the British papers. Some days later, a cartoon appeared in the press in which a long line of people is pictured extending into the foreground from a building far in the distance. A gentleman walks up to the end of the line and asks: "Pardon me, but is this where one joins up to be a Mormon missionary?"

Many years ago, not long after the French Revolution, there was a young diplomat in France. He was very interested in how democracy could work for France. He came to America to study democracy in action. His name was Alexis de Tocqueville. The results of his traveling around America were published in the still famous and important book: "Democracy in America."

De Tocqueville said that people are basically selfish. The Bible certainly tells us this! He believed that unless people's self-interests were balanced or controlled, this nation would fall either to anarchy or dictatorship. If people do not do things for the good of others, we would cease to get along; our nation would fail and what he called "the grand experiment" would fail. Based on his research, de Tocqueville said that the American experiment was succeeding because people controlled their self-interest with a uniquely wonderful practice. De Tocqueville taught two important lessons about this practice.

The first was that Americans control the danger of too much self-interest through the practice of voluntary association. He said that we are a nation of joiners. We voluntarily associate with others to accomplish worthwhile things. He said that our freely joining and participating in religious and charitable organizations or groups is essential to our national freedoms. He said that democracy depends on people giving their time and money to help good causes.

The second point was that religion is by far the most important of all these voluntary associations. There is no place like the churches where people can learn to love and care about their fellow citizens and to do important things in the unselfish service of each other. This is also certainly true today. It has always been true. In James 1:27, the Bible says: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction. . ."



Let us be signer-uppers and joiners! Let us give of our time, talents and means to the many important programs and organizations around. Let's learn to lend a helping hand in and out of church. Know that your help will be appreciated. Your presence is needed. Know that you will feel a special kind of joy in being a willing joiner in serving the good of others.

President Reagan said recently, "Voluntarism is a precious heritage of this blessed land." It is also how we celebrate our God given freedoms. Being a joiner is also essential, as de Tocqueville knew, to the preservation of the blessings of democracy.

Sermons from Science show natural wonders

Chaplain's Office

One of the more popular features of the Seattle, New York, Montreal, and Spokane Fairs will be presented at Marshall Auditorium, Building 4 next week. Armed with a stage full of electronic equipment, Dean C. Ortner of the Moody Institute of Science Staff will present a series of scientific demonstrations called Sermons from Science.

Presented at: April 24-10:30 a.m., 7 p.m. April 25-10:30 a.m., 7 p.m. April 26 - 2, 7 p.m. April 27 - 2, 7 p.m.

There will be a different program each day. You will hear music played on a beam of light . . . a bugle call played on a flashlight . . . a voice modulated on a laser beam . . . all at Sermons from Science.

Ortner has a degree in biology from Moorhead State University and served on the faculty of North Dakota State University for three years in Entomology while doing research in Bio-nucleonics.

Sermons from Science is produced by the Moody Institute of Science, a branch of the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago. This organization produces the famous Sermons from Science films that many of the service personnel around the world have seen.

Benning's new child care program big success with working parents

Story and photos by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

For families where both parents work, the biggest worry is child care. But thanks to a new Army program, Fort Benning parents can set their minds at ease.

The home child care certification program started last August, and has graduated more than 60 women to provide quality, in-home care to children. The program's success can best be seen in the end results; happy children.

For Ellen Watkins, "Miss Weddy" to her kids, the secret is love.

"I just love 'em, and I tell them I love them. When one moves, I mourn them because I've lost a loved one," she said.

Miss Weddy does much more for the eight children she cares for than just love them. Every day, activities are planned to help them learn new skills and enrich their lives.

The sandbox she built herself, bordered by handmade wood plaques of Mickey Mouse and a colorful rainbow, show that caring for her kids is more than just a babysitting job.

She talks enthusiastically about planned activities for the month, an outing at the bowling alley, a puppet show.

Her living room is decorated with pictures of the letters of the alphabet and children's art work is displayed on the piano. A child-size table sits beside the dining room table, a colorful mobile fluttering above it.

"I'm finding myself with talents I didn't know I had," Watkins said. She became interested in woodworking after being unable to find sturdy puzzles for her kids. "They had them for age 2 kids, but nothing for the 3 to 6 year old age group," she said. So she learned how to make them herself and now makes other toys for the kids.

This is the first time she has worked at home. For years she worked at full-time jobs, until a few years ago she and her husband decided that her family needed her at home. So she decided to have another child, and then got interested in home child care.

"It's really exciting — being with my child and earning extra money," she said. Watkins admits that after buying wood for projects and craft supplies, the money isn't that good. But there are other rewards.

"I put a lot in but I get a lot out of it. The parents are wholeheartedly behind me and everyone loves to be praised," she said.

Track and Field Meet gets April blood pumping

Story and photos
by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The slight wind was the highest hurdle competitors faced in the 1986 Spring Track and Field Meet that jumped off Tuesday at Doughboy Stadium.

That hurdle was easily maneuvered as the Battalion Teams hit the blocks for the opening events.

The Triple jump started the day with Darryl Davis, D Company, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, reaching out for the number one slot at 45 feet 6.5 inches.

When the winds had calmed and the bar went beyond 6 feet, George Milton of 598th Maintenance, 36th Engineer Group and Anthony Robinson, representing 1st Brigade, met in the air for the high jump competition.

Robinson caught several tough breaks at 6 feet 6 inches while Milton went on to claim the crown at 7 feet.

Events included several races, including dashes, relays and hurdles.

William Pinkston,Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, flew the high hurdles at 16.1 and was closely tailed by Lorenzo Young representing 34th Medical Battalion at 16.8.

The 440 yard relay was regarded as the top event of the meet. This event offered points toward the Commanders Trophy. The winning team represented the 197th Infantry Brigade.

Upfront

Knights need ops officer

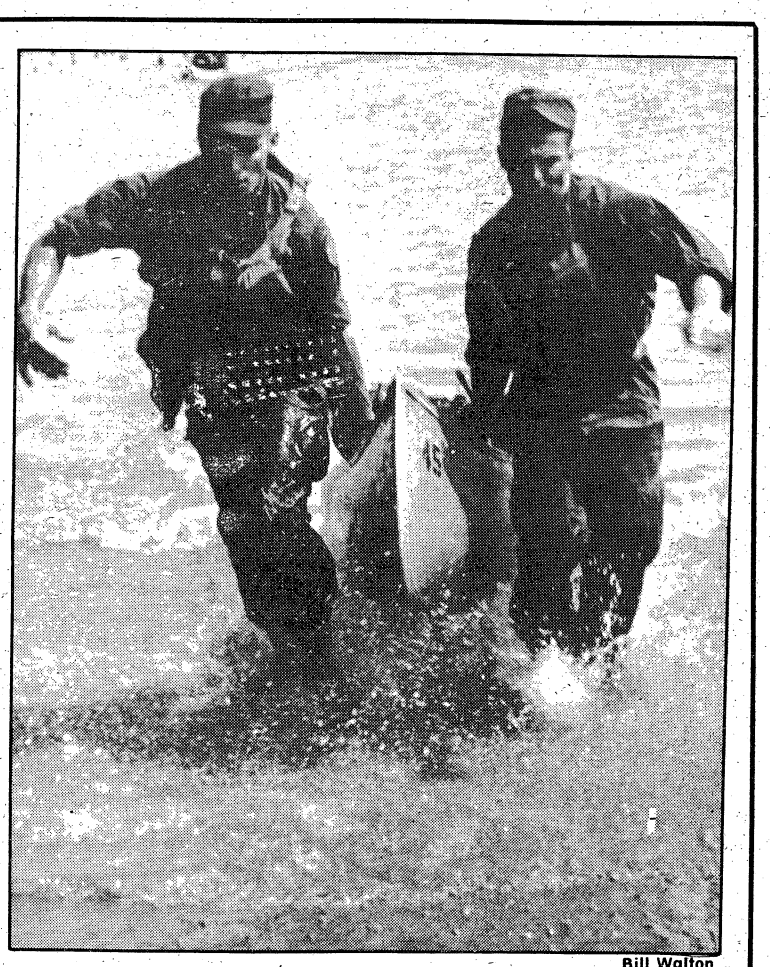
The U.S. Army Parachute Team, the "Golden Knights," is looking for an operations officer.

Branch specialty is immaterial. Applicants must be in the grade of captain, airborne qualified and possess at least a U.S. Parachute Association Class "C" license.

Applicants should have also successfully completed a company command and have previous air movement and operations experience. Battalion- or brigade-level staff experience is not required, but is considered helpful.

A letter must be submitted by May 31 stating experience and qualifications and reasons for wanting the position. Include a copy of a current DA form 2-1 and a recent official DA photograph.

Applications should be sent to:
Commander, USAPT
Attn: Executive Officer
P.O. Box 70126
Fort Bragg, N.C. 28307-0126



173rd veterans plan reunion

The Society of the 173rd Airborne Brigade is planning a full schedule for its reunion May 7 to 11.

The Columbus/Fort Benning chapter of the society is hosting the event for the former "sky soldiers" and four past commanders are expected to attend.

The group will watch airborne, Ranger and mechanized infantry demonstrations; tour the commanding general's quarters, Riverside; attend airborne and infantry graduations and enjoy a 173rd banquet.

For more information, call 1st Sgt. Cary Rutland at 544-1487 or 297-0719.

Troops save money under new program

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning soldiers, especially privates through privates first class, are saving hundreds of dollars in rental and utility deposit fees when they initially move to the Fort Benning area.

As a result of the efforts of deputy post commander, Col. Jimmy Moore, and Jan Hankins, of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, Georgia Power no longer requires a utility deposit; the management of Camellia Apartments has waived the income requirement and reduced the move-in fee for privates through privates first class; the Jordan Company, owners of Battle Park Homes, have waived their security deposit and telephone security deposits are not required if a soldier has a good paying record.

"We're hoping this is just the beginning. I think as other landlords see that Camellia Apartments and Battle Park aren't having problems, other landlords will jump on the band wagon," Moore said.

"The key to sustaining and adding to our list of landlords who will waive security deposits is the soldier. If the soldier doesn't pay his bills and demonstrate responsibility then we'll be right back to security deposits," Moore added.

Typically, a soldier coming to Fort Benning with his or her family and residing off-post must pay, in cash, a security deposit, the first month's rent and deposits to the power, water and telephone companies. As a result of Moore's and Hankin's efforts, this has begun to change.

In contacting various apartment complexes in Columbus, one complex required a $300 security deposit plus $400 for the first month's rent. Another wanted a $200 security deposit and $325 for the first month's rent.

"For a private first class with a family moving to Columbus, having to come up with $600 or $700 becomes almost an impossibility," Hankins said.

Gen. John A. Wickham, Jr., Army chief of staff, has been a moving force behind local commanders taking the initiative in setting up deposit waiver programs to help defray initial moving costs for the lower pay grades.

"The success of this program, I want to emphasize, rests with the soldier. If the soldier is responsible the program will grow," added Moore.

Two wives lose more than $11,000 in rip-off

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two Fort Benning wives are out more than $11,000 in cash and jewelry today, victims of flim flam artists at a local mall.

The victims, who were not identified by the Columbus Police Department, were shopping at Columbus Square Mall around noon Monday when they were approached by a woman.

According to Maj. Otis Gunn, chief of the Detectives Division, the woman showed the victims what looked like a billfold stuffed with cash, telling them she had found it, and asking them what she should do with it.

She was joined by another woman, and the pair convinced the victims the billfold was full of $1,000 bills. The first woman finally said she'd split the money with the victims if they "agreed to keep their mouths shut about the whole thing."

She told them she worked at J.C. Penney and pretended to go inside to check with her boss to see if the money was real. When she returned, she told the victims her boss had run the money through a machine that showed the money was real.

She told them they'd each get $20,000, but they had to put in some of their own money to show their good faith and to mix up with the money so the serial numbers couldn't be traced.

Gunn said the group drove to Fort Benning to one victim's house, where they picked up some jewelry. Then they drove to the bank, where one victim withdrew $3,900 from her savings, the other victim contributing $1,900.

They rejoined the suspects in the car and turned over all their money and jewelry. Then the suspects sent the victims into J.C. Penney to see the woman's "boss".

There was no one in J.C. Penney by that name, and when the victims returned to the mall parking lot, the two women were gone.

The victims lost $5,800 in cash, and jewelry valued at $5,500, Gunn said.

"People need to be aware that these con artists are out there, and be cautious when approached by strangers in shopping centers," Gunn said.

Daylight-saving time: what ever happened to 2:30 a.m. Sunday?

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

This Sunday, as you get ready for bed, remember what you have to do: set your clocks forward one hour at 2 a.m. It's that time of year again, daylight saving time.

The principle of daylight saving time, according to "Scientific American," is quite simple:

During part of the year, the sun rises before most people do. If the clock is advanced, sunrise by the clock will be later (as will sunset). This clock shift doesn't increase the amount of daylight, but it saves daylight in the sense that it reduces the number of daylight hours when people are normally asleep and increases the number they are normally awake.

It's quite simple until you start thinking about it, that is.

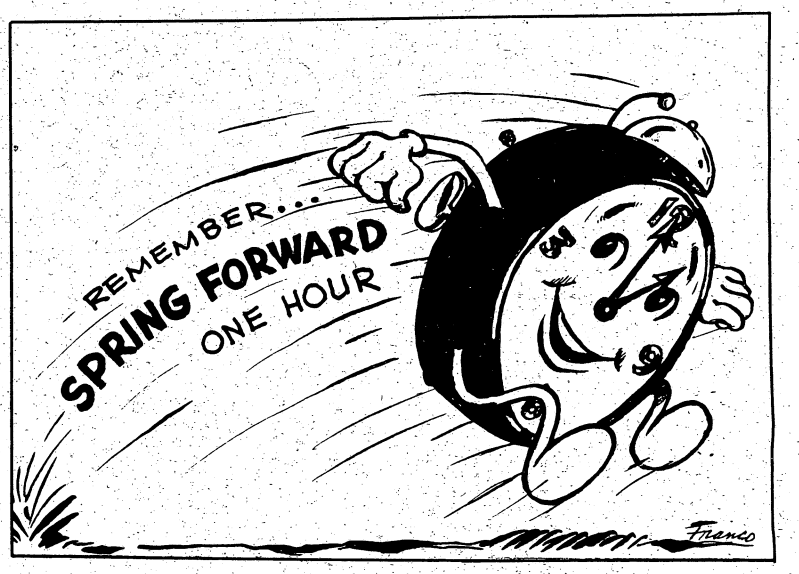
Now, for all you soldiers, if physical training is normally at 6 a.m., using the non-spring daylight saving time in use right now, and the clock is set forward one hour, that means P.T. will be at a comfortable 7 a.m., right?

Wrong. First sergeants all over post are burning the midnight oil (they have to since there's gonna' be less darkness starting Sunday) on how to get around this.

What these first shirts are gonna' do is have P.T. at 5 a.m. but call it 6 a.m. because, starting Monday, 5 a.m. will be 6 a.m. On the training schedule it'll still say 6 a.m. but it'll be a mind numbing 5 a.m. and pitch black. Mixed up now? I am.

Good old daylight saving time was the brainchild of British astronomer William Willett. In 1907 he said the benefits for setting clocks forward would be more time for recreation (I thought consenting adults had their recreation at night?), less crime (criminals don't skulk around and rob 7-11 stores in the daytime?) and a reduction in artificial light use (I suppose he's right here. Consenting adults will have to have their recreation in the daytime and most of these people like their recreation with the lights off, anyway.).

Germany adopted Willett's idea of daylight saving time in 1916, the first country to do so, to save on electricity and coal, with World War I being the impetus for their action. The rest of Europe soon followed suit.



The United States also adopted daylight saving time during this same time period but abolished it in 1919. From 1920 on, daylight saving time use was a matter of local option and was not widely used in this country. In the 1960's daylight saving time was resurrected and, after much debate and change, here we are, setting the clocks forward.

I imagine more daylight hours means, for soldiers, more time to work in the motor pool and morning formations will be earlier and recall later.

Naturally, daylight saving time will also affect the Rangers and the new light infantry.These soldiers move, ambush and annihilate during the night. I guess their operations orders will get longer with more elaborate, multi-colored sand tables and they'll have to spend more time laying in the bushes waiting for night to fall. The Rangers and light infantry don't have to worry about an earlier wake-up time, though. They never sleep. And what, really, is the difference between falling out for P.T. at 2 a.m. or 3 a.m.? It's still the middle of the night, as far as I'm concerned.

As for civilians like me, we'll be coming to work at the same time, 8 a.m., but it'll really be 7 a.m. But if we're setting the clocks forward, that would make it 9 a.m. when we come in, right? But it doesn't really matter because civilians at Fort Benning don't really start working until 10 a.m., lunch time is at 11 and by the time we're ready to plow back into our workload, it's time to go home. But don't take my word for all this, just ask Mr. Gramm or Mr. Rudman. I got this information from them.

Various voices

What are the advantages or disadvantages of daylight savings time.?

Mae Johnson, family member — "The farmers will have additional light to complete what is usually a long day. But, when my daughter's bedtime comes, she will be reluctant to go to sleep at what she preceives to be an early hour."

Melvin Daniels, family member — "During the summer months, there are a lot of outdoor activities that people enjoy. The additional hour of light gives them an additional hour of recreation."

SSgt. Gary R. Long, 598th Maintenance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group — "It will give the late workers the chance to get some yard work done."

PFC Fredrick Massey, Company A, Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade - "Since I like to play basketball, it's an advantage because the courts will have cooled off by late evening and there will still be enough light to play."

PFC Melanie A. Willauer, Company A, Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade — "There is no advantages to daylight saving time. I'm going to lose an hour of sleep, and I love my sleep.

Big words don't symbolize big talent: keep writing simple

by Bob Lonsberry
Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

Do I have a personal problem, or is most government writing hard to understand?

Could there be some contest I don't know about, in which the person who uses the strangest words in the longest sentence wins a trip to Tahiti?

In a government book about Germany, I recently found this gem:

"The (book) focuses on historical antecedents and on the cultural, political and socioeconomic characteristics that contribute to cohesion and cleavage within the society."

That string of words is verbal sewage, And misleading besides. I scoured the book and didn't learn a thing about German cleavage. Also, I'd like the guy who wrote it to give me one example of an antecedent that isn't historical.

Obviously some poor wordsmith fell for the myth that says the more complex your writing is, the smarter you must be. This guy is not alone: millions of his partners in government employ believe it, too.

How many times have you gotten a message or a disposition form written like a seventh-grader's attempt to show off for the teacher? Here at the newspaper office, people love to send us articles that read like the Old Testament in Latin. Like many of us, they equate big words with good writing.

On my desk I have a government booklet that shows where to hyphenate about umpteen-jillion words. This is a deadly tool in the hands of muddy-language users. Once they discover how to hyphenate "sorbefacient," they'll surely be tempted to use it in a sentence.

I do admit this booklet would have been handy in basic training. If only I'd had it when the drill sergeants were towering over me, yelling "Keep knocking out those push-ups until you figure out where the third syllable break is in 'noseology'!"

And, of corse, the only reason I'm not a sergeant major today is that I miss all the hyphenation questions at the promotion boards.

The worst thing about complicated, show-off writing is that it fails to accomplish the task of communication. When the goal is to get a point across, remember the KISS rule—Keep It Simple, Stupid.

Read this 'expeditiously,' utilize it for future reference

I'm about to go berserk, or at least kill someone, because of a word.

I will allow myself to print this word on this one occasion, for purposes of scolding, lambasting and otherwise dogging people who are addicted to it. And, if I ever see or hear it again after this, I won't be responsible for my actions.

The word is utilize . . . the U word.

Where is it written that things must be utilized and not used? Bad enough to have everything facilitated instead of made easier, expedited rather than done quickly, implemented but never put into effect. Why, why, why isn't anyone using things anymore?

I think the U word and others like it serve as a fancy cover-up for people who are insecure about saying what they mean. Someone told me people only use (see how easy this was?) such words in official or work-related contexts. Bosh. Directness is directness, be it in conversation, in a disposition form or on a matchbook cover.

I challenge you to find me a utilized car lot. Give me your best sob story about that old boyfriend and how you thought he loved you, but he was only utilizing you. Explain to me how we should utilize our privileges but never abutilize them. Beginning to get the picture?

Much as I hate to admit it, the U word is in the dictionary —the Random House Dictionary, to be specific. The entry reads "utilize: to put to use." I can hear all the utilizers out there now saying, "Ah-ha, it's there, so it's OK to utilize it!"

What the dictionary doesn't tell you—but what you should have learned by now—is that a word may seem to work in a particular context, but it really doesn't if a simpler word exists.

Who knows? If everyone stops utilizing things and starts using them instead, maybe we can all finally understand each other! Hey, what a novel idea!

Get utilized to it.

Letter praises rapist's conviction

Editor:

Living in Custer Terrace last year had me very concerned. Deep was my sigh of relief, knowing that Sgt. Parker was sentenced to 35 years in prison for violating two Fort Benning wives.

I read your article last week and found it very informative. Thanks for filling in the gaps.

Hurrah! Capt. Wrenn, for your determination and courage. Congratulations and my family's deepest appreciation goes to all those individuals responsible for bringing such an effective case before Judge Trail. I respect the judge's decision and regret that Sgt. Parker's family must also suffer, yet these measures are necessary. It is difficult for society, when those who abuse others freedom receive very light measures of punishment.

The article reminds me again that teamwork really does matter.

Justice was met. It is my hope that the women will not be held in bondage by memories of Sgt. Parker's crime. It would be unjust, if from behind bars, he continued to stop them from leading productive and happy lives.

Child abusers not tolerated in Army

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"If a child on Fort Benning feels he or she is being physically or sexually abused, they should not take it. They should call a neighbor, tell a school counselor or contact the military police. They shouldn't be afraid to tell," says Col. Benjamin A. Sims, of the post Staff Judge Advocate.

Fort Benning has prosecuted six aggravated child abuse cases in the past seven months. These were severe cases of child abuse that ran the gamut from manslaughter of a 5 week-old child to the rape , and sodomy of an 11 year - old girl.

In the most recent case, a Benning NCO was convicted of child sexual abuse and given a reduction to private, a dishonorable discharge and nine years in prison.

"I would say to anyone on Fort Benning contemplating or currently engaging in the physical or sexual abuse of children, to stop and seek help. If the child abuser is caught and brought before the military courts, we will do everything we can to punish them. The Army takes a very dim view of child abusers," Sims said.

The Army system for dealing with criminals, to include child abusers, is very different from civilian courts because of one primary reason. Under the military court system there is no probation. Once court-martialled, the soldier is either exonerated and returned to duty or is convicted and sent to prison.

"The civilian courts have a system called deferred sentencing. In some cases of child abuse, civilian courts will allow a board, made up of various professionals such as psychologists and psychiatrists, to recommend that the abuser be returned to his or her family and be very closely monitored. Not so in the Army. Because of the nature of the service, a soldier moving every three years would not be conducive to monitoring," Sims said.

The SJA officer emphasized, also, that justice was much swifter in the military, as compared to the civilian court system.

Sims also said that, in comparison to the civilian system, the military also had an advantage in that child abuse victims are taken care of by CHAMPUS.

"This translates into Benning child abuse victims being taken care of and counselled by professionals at either Martin Army Community Hospital or the Bradley Center Psychiatric Hospital. As an example, we expended over $18,000 on one recent child abuse victim for counselling," said Sims.

Once a child abuser is convicted and sent to prison, his dependents are taken care of, medically, by CHAMPUS while the abuser's punitive discharge is being processed through the military appellate system. Sims related that this usually takes from 14 to 18 months.

"Overall, our primary concern is to help people. But when a situation reaches the stage, such as the physical or sexual abuse of children, then we will do everything we can to get the abuser and everything we can to help the victims," Sims said.

Sims also said that he felt every child is entitled to grow up with dignity and free from the emotional and physical trauma caused by abuse.

"Every child in a military community is important and no resource will be spared in insuring that they are free from such conduct as abuse," Sims added.

Army leadership stresses preventing child abuse

Army News Service

April has been designated as Child Abuse Prevention Month within the Department of Defense, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger announced recently.

Weinberger noted that child abuse prevention will improve the overall quality of military life and will help accomplish national defense missions.

"Child abuse affects us all," Weinberger said, "and it is through our efforts as parents and neighbors, as well as members of our communities, that child abuse may be prevented."

Military families at various installations may participate in programs on how to prevent, report and treat child abuse. For example, Family Advocacy personnel at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and Fort Riley, Kansas, are conducting programs which help mothers adjust to parent life before and after the births of their children.

To further aid in the battle against child abuse, special packets have been distributed to all installations by the U.S. Army compiled at the National Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse. These packets offer effective parent training and pinpoint professional sources of prevention available to everyone. Another program available to installations includes a "Spiderman" comic book designed to help youngsters differentiate between "good and bad" touching.

Daylight

Roy Blount, Jr., writing in "Atlantic Magazine," put 'daylight' and 'time' into perspective:

Daylight is like time in that something we would like to change about both of them is: they make us look older.

But Blount's caustic comment doesn't apply to soldiers: just try to make out a face this Monday 'morning' at 5 a.m.: old, ugly or other wise, you won't be able to tell. They'll be doing their P.T. and running in the dark.

As the musical group, Chicago, once sang: "Does anybody really know what time it is, Does anybody really care?" Don't ask me. I'm still trying to figure out what time it'll really be when I go to work Monday. And say, if we have to set our clocks forward one hour at 2 a.m. Sunday morning, but have to get up at 2:30 a.m, how can we? There ain't no such time.

Clocks set forward one hour: daylight- saving starts Sunday

American Forces Information Service

Count your blessings. All you have to remember is to set your clock ahead at 2 a.m. on Sunday April 27 to get in step with Daylight Saving Time.

It wasn't always a simple matter of setting your clock forward in the spring and back in the fall, or resetting your watch once or twice as you changed time zones. In 1880, the United States had more than 100 local times. While traveling then from coast to coast, you would literally have to reset your watch some 20 times to be "on time."

When it was noon in Washington, D.C., it was 12:08 p.m. in Philadelphia; 12:12 p.m. in New York and 12:24 p.m. in Boston. Pittsburgh, Pa. had six different local times governing train departures.

The railroads took a step torward ending the confusion in 1883 when they set up the four now familiar zones: Eastern, Central, Mountain and Pacific. The rest of the world followed within a few years, and the globe was ultimately divided into 24 time zones.

Congress formally adopted the system in 1918.

No air until comfort zone criteria met

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Air conditioning cannot be turned on at Fort Benning until we meet certain criteria, according to Rodney Carroll in the post Energy Office.

"TRADOC sets a comfort zone that is made up of a combination of temperature and humidity, and until we meet the criteria, air conditioning cannot be turned on," he said.

Carroll said that historically, area temperatures reach the turn-on point around June 1. All buildings on post must follow these regulations, and the only exceptions are medical facilities and special medical exemptions.

What this means for post residents and workers is they'll have to endure a few weeks of warm temperatures before the air conditioning is turned on, he said.

To make it through this time as comfortably as possible, Carroll said the following tips can help cool down buildings.

- Close shades on the sunny side of the building and open windows on the shaded side. This keeps out the sun's hot rays, while allowing cool breezes inside.
- Dress comfortably. If it looks like it's going to be a hot day, wear cooler clothing.
- Turn off lights and appliances when not in use. Even small lights and appliances can generate enough heat to make the room temperature rise.

"By being aware of ways to keep cool, you can be comfortable in the warmer temperatures," he said.

Drill sergeants: tough, demanding professionals

by Gregory Duhon
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Images! The world is built on images. Try this image — drill sergeant.

Whether you are old enough to remember Jack Webb in "The D.I." or you think of Louis Gossett Jr., in "An Officer and a Gentleman," you have an image of a drill sergeant. You see him standing with his distinctive campaign hat and his slightly arrogant bearing. He knows and sees all. There isn't a private born who has done anything new since Hannibal trained his first elephant. The drill sergeant has seen it before. At Fort Benning, he gets a new chance to see "it" about every 15 weeks.

Infantry training is conducted in a 13-week cycle under the One Station Unit Training concept. The same drill sergeant trains a group of soldiers for more than three months. OSUT gives the young soldier continuity and stability during a high-stress period. It also offers an attitude in the drill sergeant that these are "his boys." Strangely enough, it is often this attitude that makes it possible for a drill sergeant to continue to function in a highly professional manner. He knows that everything his platoon does or fails to do is directly affected by him.

Some may ask, "What's so hard about functioning as a professional"?

The average drill sergeant arrives at work, prepared for physical training, at 4 or 4:30 a.m., six days a week. During the first three to four weeks, they work 16 to 18 hours a day; after that, they taper off to 11 to 13 hours a day.

Why so long? The technical training of soldiers takes place during normal daytime hours. The reinforcement of discipline, remedial training, counseling and teaching the fine details of being a soldier are accomplished primarily through the drill sergeant's initiative. They use slack moments in the training day and evening hours to accomplish this reinforcement. Their approaches to training are innovative and often ingenious. They constantly evaluate and revise approaches to ensure comprehension and retention.

Add to this the drill sergeant-to-private ratio. Each platoon consists of normally two, occasionally three, or sometimes only one, drill sergeants and 45 to 55 privates. These privates arrive as blissfully ignorant as a newborn babe.

Their rules for social behavior have to be brought up to acceptable Army standards. They change how they stand, walk and talk. Some young men have never made a bed, done laundry or cleaned up after themselves. Some cry openly for their mother. A few are rebellious and contemptuous of authority.

The self-restraint required to handle these soldiers is often phenomenal. The language and techniques used by movie drill sergeants are colorful and may be based on past reality, but today's drill sergeants use such tactics at their own risk.

The self-gratification of salvaging one of these men is immense, but the greatest sense of satisfaction comes from those soldiers between the two extremes. The young men with a firm grasp of reality, some old-fashioned ethical values, a good self-image and a desire to succeed — these are the ones that the drill sergeant considers "his boys." He will push himself to ensure they get the best he has to offer, hoping he is helping to improve the Army.

The stress of drill sergeant duty is felt at home by wives whose husbands fall asleep at the dinner table eating supper at 10 p.m., or they have to wake him at 3 a m. because he's too tired to hear the alarm. The husband whose only non-work day is Sunday, yet he goes in on Sunday to check on "his boys." The children who, sometimes for days, have fathers who leave before they are awake and return after they are in bed. It takes a special family not to put additional pressure on these men.

For two years, sometimes three, these drill sergeants work to make cycle after cycle of "their boys" be the best they can be. They work hard in this fast-paced, high-stress job and are very glad to see a group graduate. Graduation usually means a couple of weeks' break, doing light work and training for the next cycle.

Yet as happy as they are to see a graduation, spirits are always running highest the day new soldiers arrive. Each drill sergeant has high hopes for what he can teach this group of "his boys." After all, he does have an image to maintain.

Most people who have ever worked with their eyes focused on a video display terminal for a long time know the results can be hypnotically boring.

One such section of "super clerks" is probably the busiest of operations at the U.S. Army School of the Americas — the Language Services Division.

Although the LSD operates with less than half of its allowed personnel strength, it manages to support USARSA's constant demand for translated documents. "We plan to hire 10 more translators to upgrade our current staff of four translators and two editors," said Cheryl Watters, chief, LSD, Directorate of Support.

"With the recent emphasis on terrorism awareness, instructors of the psychological operations course offered at USARSA need additional up-to-date material translated from English to Spanish," Watters said.

Watters spends about 60 percent of her time editing translated material. "The rest of the time I'm a supervisor, counselor, prepare monthly work-output statistics, attend staff meetings and deal with people who 'needed translated material yesterday.' "

A translator at USARSA averages a little more than five pages a day. That's about 27 pages a week. To become a translator, an applicant must type 40 words-per-minute then take a two-part Spanish-English, English-Spanish written test. Each part takes an hour and is "military in nature with a lot of technical terms," Watters said.

The LSD uses word processing computers to handle the workload. "Eventually the LSD will install a computer that will tran late words from English to Spa ish and vice-versa," Watte said. The computer will handle lot of the LSD's work but it h its pitfalls.

Still, Spanish to English tran lations aren't as automatic they may sound. "A translat has to know when to use the rig tense in Spanish," said Watter who has a master's degree Spanish and French from t University of Northern Iowa.

It takes a special breed of pe son to sit for hours ponderi over a series of documents r quiring sometimes heavy editi and translation.

School of America's NCOs graduate course

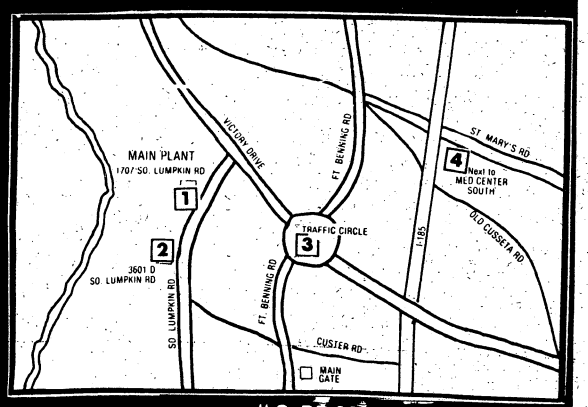
by Marco Morales
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Twenty-four noncommissio ed officers representing five Latin American countries graduated from the NCO Leadership Course Tuesday at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Countries and number of graduates represented were Costa Rica — 6, Colombia — 7, Dominican Republic — 2, Ecuador — 4 and Paraguay — 3.

The 14-week course centers on tactical employment of a platoon and its rifle squads, patrolling operations in internal defense and development surroundings, and familiarization with basic infantry weapons.

Guest speaker for the graduation ceremony, which took place at the Infantry Museum auditorium, was 1st Sgt. Regino Pizarro, NCOIC of the Directorate of Evaluation, Standardization and Safety at USARSA.



This brings to date the total number of graduates at USARSA to 2,150 from Costa Rica, 4,918 from Colombia, 1,849 from the Dominican Republic, 3,185 from Ecuador and 1,055 from Paraguay.

Since its inception in 1946, USARSA has graduated 46,378 Latin American officers, cadets and NCOs from its diverse menu of courses.

New 'Panther' commander sinks his claws into 2-69

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

In a display of men and machines, the 197th Infantry Brigade's "Speed and Power" battalion welcomed a new commander to Panther Country recently.

Lt. Col. David T. Merriam assumed command of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, in a ceremony at Essebagger Field on Kelley Hill Friday.

Outgoing commander, Lt. Col. Lon E. Maggart, passed the battalion colors to mark the end of a two-year command of the armor battalion.

Maggart designed a unique approach to command, embodied in a concept he called "Panther Country." Panther Country is a plan for accomplishing six key missions: maintenance, training, quality of life, development of the noncommissioned officer corps, professional development and fun.

During his command, the battalion — or parts of it — deployed on three rotations to the National Training Center and participated in the Brigade's deployment to Europe for REFORGER '85.

The battalion enjoyed golf tournaments, 10-kilometer runs, an organization day and other battalion functions.

Maggart's next assignment will be as a student at the Army War College.

Merriam comes to the 197th from an assignment as Deputy Commander of Community Family Soldier Support Command in Yongsan, Korea.

In an address to his new command, Merriam pledged loyalty as a commander and welcomed the opportunity and challenge of commanding.

108th Division reservists take over 2nd ITB

by Dick Stark
3rd Brigade, 108th Division

The 3rd Brigade of the 108th Division (Training) assumed complete command and control of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade for two weeks recently, during the reserve unit's two weeks annual training.

It marked the first time the 2nd ITB has turned over complete control and command at brigade level to an Army Reserve brigade. In the past, displacement of active Army units usually stopped at the battalion level.

In a change-of-command ceremony, Col. Richard S. Siegried turned over command of the brigade to Col. William C. Hindman, commander of the 108th Division's 3rd Brigade, headquartered in Winston-Salem, N. C.

At the same time, the 3rd Brigade's 1st Battalion, 485th Regiment of Concord, N. C., and Albemarle, N. C., assumed command of the 2nd ITB's 9th Battalion; the 2nd Battalion, 485th Regiment of Asheboro, N. C., and High Point, N.C., assumed command of the 8th Battalion; and the 4th Battalion, 108th Regiment from Winston-Salem, N. C., assumed command of the 2nd Battalion.

The 2nd ITB's 4th and 10th Battalions remained under the control of the active components, with the commanders reporting to Hindman during the training period.

"The 108th Division assumed our mission for the two weeks, lock, stock and barrel," said 2nd ITB CSM James R. Tidwell. "This includes complete day-to-day operations of the brigade, including authority and responsibility for administration of the Uniform Code of Military Justice. We just stepped back and let them run the brigade."

While the 3rd Brigade is at Fort Benning, 2nd ITB counterpart personnel, although serving in an advisory capacity, are free to take care of routine matters normally difficult to complete during an OSUT (One Station Unit Training) cycle.

According to 3rd Brigade CSM Johnny H. Dwiggins, the vertical deployment mission provided the unit with a realistic example of what the mobilization missions would be like.

"We handled all trainee matters and some active Army requests," Dwiggins said. "In the first few days, we interviewed drill sergeants on extension requests and handled several requests by trainees to attend Officer Candidate School."

Drill sergeants fron the 3rd Brigade conducted training in all phases of OSUT, including basic and advanced rifle marksmanship, M72 Light Anti-Tank Weapon, grenades, patrolling, U.S. mines, squad tactics and many other infantry-related subjects. Brigade and battalion headquarters personnel also assumed complete counterpart responsibilities.

To assist the 3rd Brigade in its unique annual training mission, Fort Benning and the 108th Division participated in a pre-certification program conducted during normal weekend training assemblies of the brigades and battalions at their North Carolina home stations. Under the program, drill sergeants from the 2nd, 8th and 9th Battalions visited their counterparts to pre-certify drill sergeants as instructors.

According to Tidwell, this allowed the 108th Division drill sergeants to get on the platform Monday morning ready to go. He added that in the past, it took the first three days of annual training to certify the drill sergeants.

"The pre-certification program really helped," Tidwell said. "It basically gave the drill sergeants three more days of training time."

Tidwell said that the 108th Division came to Fort Benning ready to take over. There wasn't any hesitation, he said.

"I hear comments from my drill sergeants all the time about the 108th Division," Tidwell said. "The 108th is probably, without a doubt, one of the best training divisions we have working for us."

The 108th Division consists of four OSUT brigades, a U.S. Army Reception Station, a logistics command and a training command. Its mission is to conduct infantry OSUT for new soldiers.

The 3,500-member 108th Division has units located in 34 communities throughout North and South Carolina. Division headquarters is in Charlotte, N. C.

29th Infantry boasts maintenance experts

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment PAO

With the influx of new and improved equipment making its way into the Army's inventory, the 29th Infantry Regiment Maintenance Management Division is reaching beyond its boundaries to train infantry battalions to maintain such equipment.

Recently, MMD organized a mobile training unit that is capable of deploying any place in the world, when called.

Its purpose is to provide infantry commanders, as well as other leaders of the battalion, with the latest maintenance concepts and trends as set by Army standards, Lt. Col. Freddy Harris, chief, MMD, said.

Accordingly, the Maintenance Field Training Team comprises six maintenance experts who are skilled in preventive maintenance checks and services on vehicles and weapons, Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle maintenance and battalion-, brigade- and division-level maintenance management.

Primarily, the team's focus is on the squad leader, platoon sergeant and platoon leader because they are directly responsible for training the soldier, Harris said.

Instruction for this group covers how to do PMCS properly, how to establish a training program for the unit and how to put a sustained PMCS program on line in the unit.

On the other hand, the team is qualified to teach leadership to battalion and company commanders, and battalion maintenance officers, Harris said.

Their instructions include the function of the Army of Excellence program, how it should work and how to manage it.

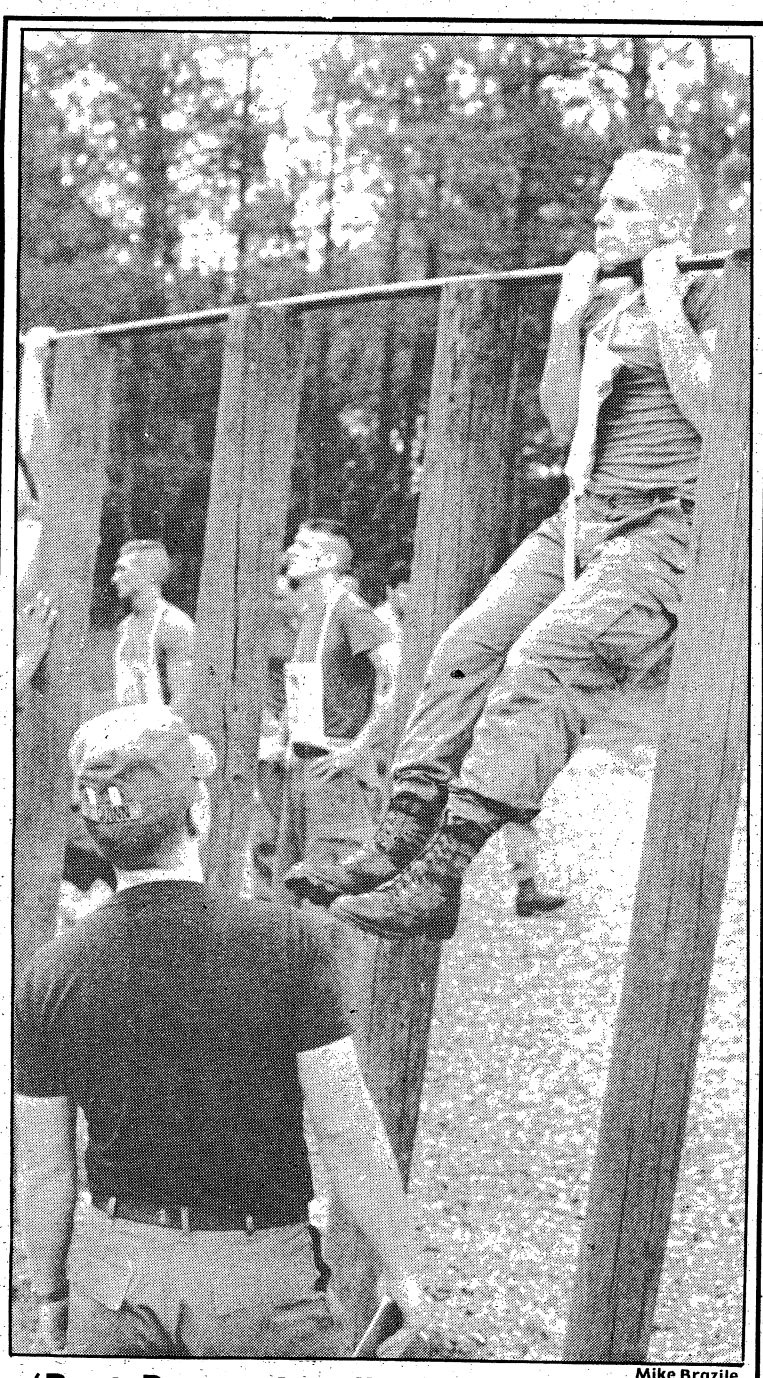
Either or both groups may receive training, depending on the needs of the battalion, Harris added.

Further, pre-tests are conducted prior to the five-day period of instruction. Harris explained that this is done to help determine the level of expertise of battalion members and to tailor the instructions to meet the battalion's needs.

To date, the MFTT has conducted training for the 5th Corps in Germany; 5th Division, Fort Polk, La.; 7th Division, Fort Ord, Calif.; 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky.; and units of the Depot Systems Command in California and Florida.

Among those listed to be trained are the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N. C.; 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N. Y.; and the 179th Infantry in Alaska.

The U.S. Army Infantry School has provided limited funding for this project. "Once these funds are depleted, we will continue our support, however, at the unit's expense," Harris said.



Battalion commanders may request the team's services by contacting Lt. Col. Freddy Harris, Maintenance Management Division, 29th Infantry Regiment, U.S. Army Infantry School, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-5910. Autovon numbers are 784-7214/7363/6366 or commercial (404) 544-7214/7363/6366.

Don't be in dark about night safety

USAIC Public Affairs Office

As a result of two recent nighttime accidents there has been an increased emphasis on safety during nighttime tactical training.

Two U.S. Army Forces Command soldiers, one killed and one critically injured, were run over by vehicles at two different U.S. Training and Doctrine Command installations in the hours of darkness.

Commanders at the unit level are responsible for their troops' safety and the orders drafted to ensure safe night operations.

According to officials, the following precautions should be adhered to:

- Personnel should sleep only in designated areas according to the sleeping policies established by their commanders.
- Any movement of a vehicle in an assembly area should first be assured of clearance by the driver or crew walking around the vehicle.
- Dismounted personnel should be protected by ground guides. If the ground guide is not seen, the driver stops the vehicle.
- Two ground guides per vehicle.
- Establish manned dismount points at the entrances to assembly/bivouac areas and restrict movement of vehicles during darkness.
- Within a tactical position, a minimum of one person must be awake at all times.
- Slow down.
- Enforcement of the above safety practices by the chain of command.

All vehicles operating during road marches at night must be lighted and keep in mind the civilian traffic. The units should be responsible for the standard operational procedure.

According to officials, "Focus on sound and realistic doctrinal training, while considering the safety of our most valuable resource, the soldier."

VA Q&A

Editor's Note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q—I understand there has been a reduction in VA education benefits. Does this apply to my educational assistance allowance?

A—The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act, which became law in December 1985, has reduced money available to pay educational assistance. As a result the VA has reduced the amounts payable for persons eligible for benefits under the Educational Assistance Allowance Program and the Dependents' Educational Assistance program.

690th Medical company treats troops training aches, pains

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Wherever you find training going on at Fort Benning you'll find medics from the 690th Medical Company (Ambulance), 34th Medical Battalion.

"We support the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced Courses, the Airborne School, the Silver Wings, the Light Leader's course and the Bradley course. Our medics also provide medical care for 75 to 85 percent of the ranges at Benning," said 690th commander, Capt. Ronnie Brannon.

According to Brannon, the unit logs more than 90,000 miles annually supporting the multi-faceted training at Fort Benning.

"We regularly have our personnel, on a daily basis, at a dozen or more different commitments, providing medical care. Due to this, accountability and unit training becomes difficult. Even when we deploy to the field as a unit we have to satisfy our post commitments," said Sgt. Richard Arthur, the company's operations noncommissioned officer.

During wartime, the 94-person strong company would treat and evacuate casualties from divisional and non-divisional units back to corps' hospitals for treatment, using their 33 ambulances.

The medics sent to provide onsite medical care basically wait with their ambulances for an injury to occur and then take action.

SP4 Michael McMullen and PFC Sean Cope were supporting ground training for the Airborne School last Friday.

"We treat things like sunburn, twisted ankles, simple things like that during ground training. When they start jumping we treat a lot of twisted ankles and sprains. We also get an occasional broken leg or back injury," related McMullen.

"When I came into the Army I thought I would be working in a hospital after my ten-week long medic's school. But I'm a field medic. It's a good job," Cope said.

SP4 Michael McMullen, (r), wraps the ankle of an airborne trainee as PFC Sean Cope looks on.

Soldier sees both sides: been enlisted, officer twice

by Dick Stark
108th Division

WINSTON SALEM, N. C.—Soldiers see both sides of the Army by serving in the enlisted and officer ranks. But few soldiers become enlisted persons and officers twice in one career.

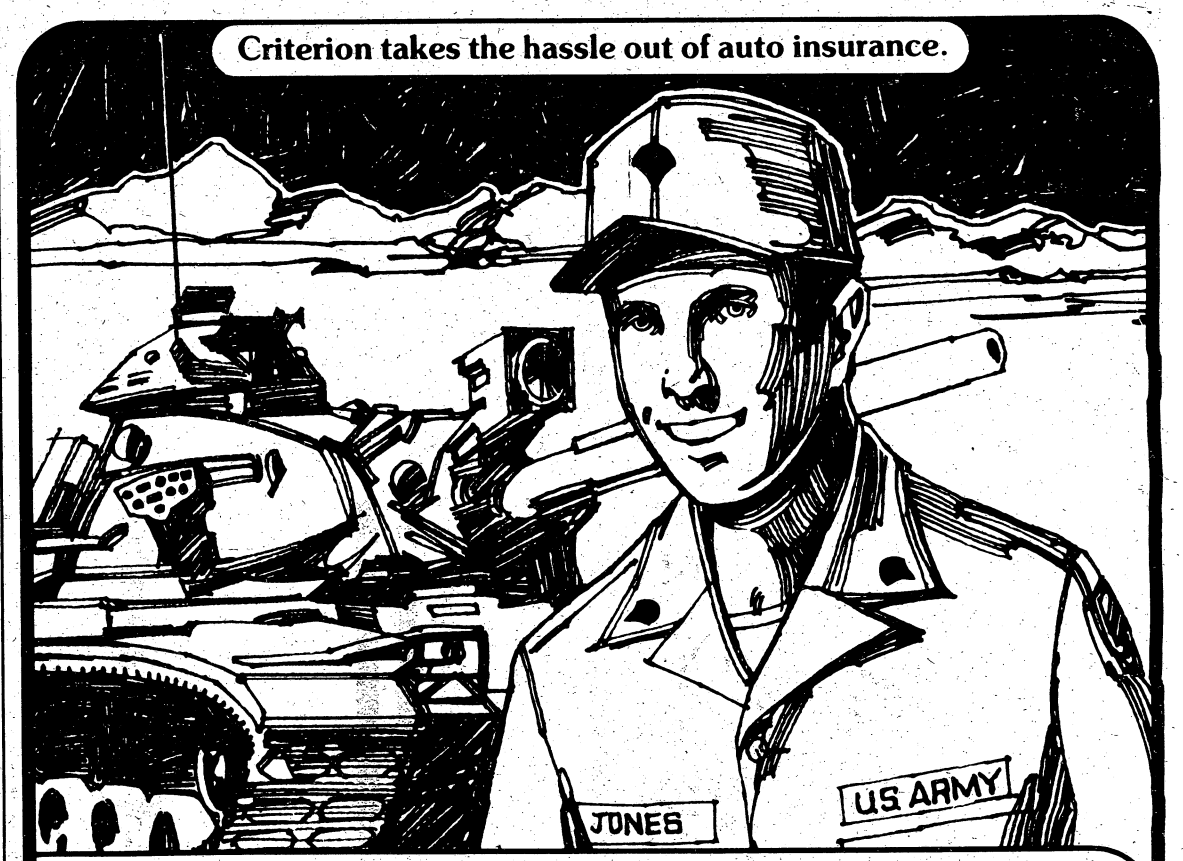
Capt. Samuel H. Jones Jr., company commander of the 108th Division's Company E, 4th Battalion, 108th Regiment, Third Brigade, in Winston-Salem, N. C. is one of a few soldiers in the Army who enlisted as a private, went to Officer Candidate School and became an officer, re-enlisted in the Army Reserve as a specialist five and then obtained a direct commission as a first lieutenant.

A resident of Burlington, N. C., Jones enlisted in the Army in 1967 and was assigned to the Army Security Agency in Arlington, Va., where he obtained top Army clearances. Two years later as a specialist four, he was boarded for Officer Candidate School at the Military District of Washington, D. C. and accepted to attend the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Ga.

Upon being commissioned in 969 as an infantry second lieutenant, he was assigned to Fort Polk, La. and later that year was transferred to Vietnam where he served in the First Infantry Division, The Big Red One. Upon returning to the states he was assigned to the 82nd Airborne Division.

Upon discharge from the active Army in 1972, Jones came to North Carolina and eventually joined the Charlotte Police Department, a position he held for seven years.

He also joined the 108th Division's Logistics Command (then known as the 500th Supply and Support Battalion) in Winston-Salem, N. C. as a Supply Officer. He left the 108th Division in 1974.



"In 1980, a friend of mine who was a 108th Division recruiter needed a warm body," Jones said. "The position he had open was an E-5 instructor in the Patrolling Committee of the 108th Division Training Group in Charlotte. I decided to re-join the Army Reserves as an enlisted person. I liked teaching and wanted to be an instructor."

Two years later, Jones' commander of Training Group recommended him for a direct commission as a first lieutenant. He thus joined Training Group's Individual Tractical Training Sub-Committee in Charlotte, as a training officer.

In late 1984, Jones became an executive officer for Company A, 2/485th Regiment, Third Brigade and in 1985 was made company commander of Company E, 4/108th Regiment, his current position.

"My experience has given me the opportunity to see both sides of the Army," Jones said. "I enjoy being an enlisted person as well as an officer but like teaching the best. Being a company commander requires a lot of hard work, but I enjoy it. It's rewarding."

After leaving the Charlotte police department in 1981, Jones served two years as Police Chief of Elon College, Elon College, N. C. In 1983, he opened Jones Security Consultants, a licensed-bonded private investigation, guard and patrol and polygraph firm in Burlington, N. C.
He has a wife and two sons, ages 8 and 10.

Armor medics wrap-up 197th excellence award

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

The Battalion Aid Station at 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor is the first recipient of a new 197th Infantry Brigade Award. In a ceremony Wednesday, the armored battalion's medical platoon will be awarded the Brigade Surgeon's Award for excellence in their medical care.

The Brigade Surgeon's Award was designed to honor the most outstanding 197th medical unit. The Combat Medical Memorial Trophy will be presented biannually to the medical platoon that maintains the highest standards.

SFC David C. Williams, 2-69th's medical platoon sergeant, attributed the platoon's success to a high level of command emphasis within the battalion.

"When the required unit level medical training is due, time is made available for the necessary classes," Williams said.

The level of medical training among soldiers in the battalion is a part of the medical platoon's evaluation. The aid station is required to conduct such training as first aid and hot/cold weather injury prevention.

Williams added, "They do spot checks of soldiers to determine that the training is being accomplished.

The level of training among the medics is also considered. The soldiers who are Emergency Medical Technician or Expert Field Medic qualified help round out the aid station's capabilities.

Another important part of the garrison requirements is maintenance of health records and such health programs as immunization and hearing conservation.

"We screen records on a daily basis to keep on top of it," Williams said. "Every 90 days we review all the health records. Each company first sergeant follows through and sends his soldiers to the aid station if they need to update their record. This keeps us up to speed with such things as immunizations, physicals and profiles."

Field evaluation is conducted when the aid station accompanies the battalion to the field. Such things as mass casualty exercises are used to rate the aid station's performance in the field.

Accountability and maintenance of equipment is conducted to determine if it is functional and up to standard.

Williams added, "We must also demonstrate our ability to deploy quickly and with all the proper equipment."

Capt. John Roser, 197th Infantry Brigade Surgeon, said, "The award came about to stress the importance of medical readiness. It is hoped that the spirit of competition will help the aid stations become even more efficient in their field and garrison missions."

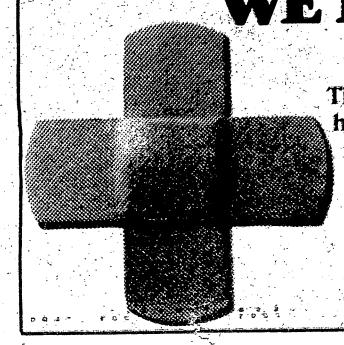
OCS cooks excellence recognized

5th Student Battalion Officer Candidate School



The 5th Student Battalion Officer Candidate School, The School Brigade Dining Facility has been awarded Fort Benning's Dining Facility of the Quarter, edging out 56 other dining facilities for the honor. The competition is judged on food preparation, presentation, administrative, and cleanliness.

Paul Edwards, Dining Facility manager, ensures that the quality of the food is high. Edwards has been in the food service business for 30 years, holding positions as executive chef at the United States Military Academy at West Point, and executive chef at Callaway Gardens. The extra care and effort applied by Edwards and his staff is the main reason soldiers leave the Dining Facility happy and full.

Col. James R. Ellis, chief of staff, presented Edwards and his crew with the award March 27 in the 5th Student Battalion Dining Facility, marking the first time OCS has won the award since 1981.

Lt. Col. Joseph A. Cercone, 5th Student Battalion Commander, OCS, commented that feeding soldiers good food is an important part of having them prepared to train hard.

Soldiers awarded EIBs in 'grand way'

by Joel Roberts
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Army Regulation 672-12 states it very plainly, "Award of the Expert Infantryman Badge is intended to recognize the soldier who attains a high degree of professional skills, proficiency and excellence as an Infantryman. It is also to identify the soldier who can expertly maintain, operate, and employ his weapons and equipment."

Seven soldiers from the 1st Infantry Training Brigade received that reccognition in grand style as the 1st ITB hosted an award ceremony that included a three mile Brigade run, with more than 3,000 soldiers participating, led by post commander Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., followed by the awarding of the coveted badge and a continental breakfast beside the Brigade Duck Pond.

The ceremony, which lasted from 6 to 8 a.m. April 19, was a fitting culmination for the planning and implementation of the EIB test that spanned a period of five months.

To be eligible to compete for the EIB, officers must have either a primary or alternate specialty skill identifier of 11. Enlisted personnel must have either a primary or secondary Military Occupational Specialty of 11B or 11C. All candidates must also qualify as expert on the M16A1 rifle and score above 80 percent on the Skill Qualification Test. The test for 1st ITB candidates took more than a month to complete with final testing being conducted by the USAITC EIB committee Feb. 11 and 15 at AO Eagle.

The test was done in six parts and consisted of M16A1 qualification, the SQT, a 12-mile foot march with full combat gear completed in less than three hours, the Army Physical Readiness Test with minimum score of 240, day and night land navigation, plus hands-on testing of more than 30 infantry-related tasks ranging from M60 machine gun maintenance, call for and adjust indirect fire, to cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

Tankers riding tall in the turret

Armor soldiers train continuously to keep their skills sharp. The Tank Commanders Certification Program is a training program that keeps a soldier's performance up to standard.

According to SSgt. Claudy Moore, a master gunner in Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade, TCCP covers everything the tanker needs to know before going through tank gunnery qualification.

"There are 18 tasks that the tankers must perform. We continually train on a few of the tasks each week to keep the tankers trained on the system," Moore said. "We also have a lot of new soldiers who need to have these skills down pat before we go to gunnery."

Moore added that the tasks cover the soldiers' knowledge of the tank's mechanical systems.

"They have to do such tasks as inspect the track and perform preventive maintenance to ensure the mechanical system is working," Moore said.

The training also sharpens the tanker's skills with the weapons systems, from the 105mm main gun to the 50 caliber machine gun. The tankers must properly sight the main gun and engage targets. The soldiers must also disassemble, assemble and perform a functions check on all the weapons systems.

Glenn Gordon, a Company D platoon sergeant said, "If the soldiers can quickly correct malfunctions during gunnery, they don't lose points by wasting time performing this task. In combat, wasted time could be fatal for the entire crew."

Moore concluded that a system of "train, test and retrain" keeps everyone on the tank crew proficient in these gunnery skills.

Paratrooper 'fraternity' descends on Benning for Airborne Walk dedication

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Andre J. Garnerin, a Frenchman, was the first person to go airborne. He jumped over Paris from a hot air balloon Oct. 22, 1797.

Since that time, techniques and equipment have changed and vastly improved but, on the most basic level, it still comes down to a person facing the open air at an incredible height and leaving the security of an aircraft. The jumper has only three things to trust in: the piece of cloth on his back, his training and luck.

To memorialize the American and Canadian forces that emulated Garnerin, an Airborne Walk was dedicated April 17 on Eubanks Field here.

The airborne fraternity met to pay tribute to jumpers who didn't merely jump out of a plane but who were trained to jump, land successfully and go into battle — paratroopers.

These types of people were what brought out Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh; Benning commander, Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba; former World War II airborne pioneer, retired Lt. Gen. William Yarborough and Airborne Walk committee chairman and veteran of the 1st Special Services Force, Henley P. Woods, to dedicate the memorial.

"We have built a first-class memorial here. It is dedicated to all airborne, past, present and future. It is fitting that the Airborne Walk flies both American and Canadian flags, as the Canadians took parachute training here in 1942," Woods said.

According to Woods, the money to build the walk came from donations from currently-active airborne units and airborne individuals from both the U.S. and Canada.

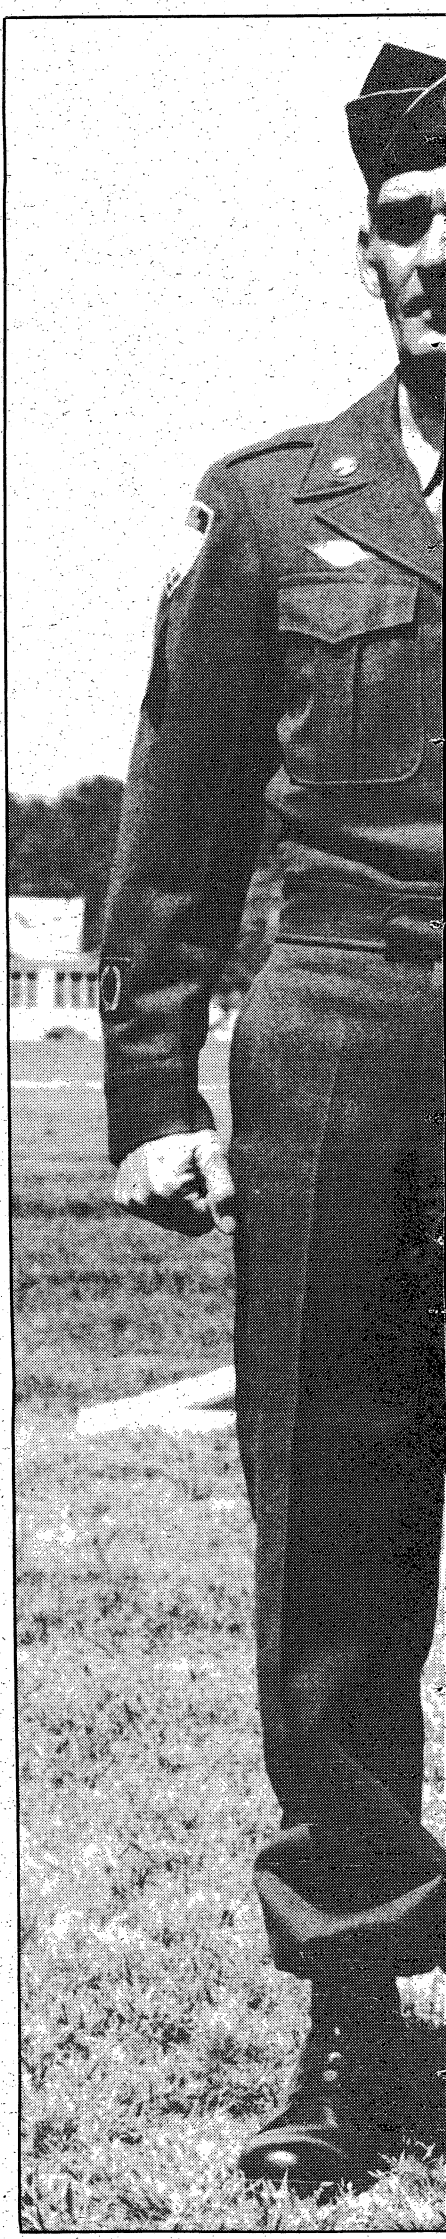
The real story, however, was the paratroopers attending the dedication. Veterans of World War II, Korea, Vietnam and Grenada airborne training and operations were proudly part of the dedication crowd.

One World War II paratrooper, Carson B. Johnson of Sperryville, Va., was present for the dedication wearing the original uniform that he wore when he was mustered out of the Army in 1946.

Johnson, who had been a member of Company C, 193rd Glider Infantry Regiment, 17th Airborne Division, fought in the Middle East, Africa and Europe, and was wounded during the famous Battle of the Bulge in Belgium.

"This is a proud day, for me and all paratroopers," said Johnson, proudly wearing his combat infantryman badge, airborne wings and a newly-presented Bronze Star awarded to him by Secretary Marsh about 40 years late.

"Jumping out of planes was brand new back in the '40s. We couldn't steer our parachutes like they can now. We were pretty much at the mercy of the wind and landed just about wherever we were blown. It was pretty hairy sometimes," Johnson said.



Another former World War paratrooper, also a member of the 17th Airborne Division, vividly illustrated the airborne spirit and state of mind.

"I was in a bar in North Africa during World War II. All of us paratroopers had been issued special brown jump boots. These 'legs' (non-airborne personnel) walked in from some headquarters outfit wearing jump boots. They had finagled jump boots some way but they weren't airborne. We went over to them, grabbed them, took their jump boots off and then beat the hell out of them and threw them into the street. Jump boots were for airborne and airborne only," laughed Ken McFarley, a large, beefy man from North Carolina who proudly sported an airborne wing belt buckle and a maroon beret.

The airborne walk consists of concrete pathways that form the shape of the American parachutist badge. Insignias from 26 units in which paratroopers served are represented by large plaques on granite stands that form the wings of the parachutist badge memorial.

The official party watches as the "keeper of the wings" returns to his post.

What Specialist Hales has been aiming for during his off-duty time.

Specialist Four Jason Hales has been aiming for the best. As a soldier, and as a student. He's an Infantryman at Fort Myer, Virginia, as well as a B.S. candidate in Mechanical Engineering at Park College. And he's just one of the over 100,000 soldiers who are building brighter, smarter futures through the Army's Reaching for Excellence education program.

It's a terrific opportunity that's available to each and every soldier, at virtually every Army post around the world. Reaching for Excellence covers everything from basic educational skills and technical skill development to undergraduate and graduate studies at the college level. And it's a chance to have at least 75% of your college tuition paid for by the Army.

Continuing your education is a commitment that's fully supported by the Army leadership. You can start taking advantage of this commitment at your post's Education Center. There, you'll find a professional education counselor who can help you set short- and long-range goals which fit both your educational and career plans.

Drop by your Education Center and find out, as Specialist Hales did, how you can turn some off-duty time into a lifetime of rewards. If you want to get ahead, now's the time to get started.

ARMY EDUCATION. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Passover celebrated by Jewish families world-wide

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Wednesday night, Jewish families all over the world celebrated Passover with a special Seder.

Passover, which began Wednesday at sundown and continues until sundown May 1, is one of three major holidays in the Jewish religion. Jews celebrate it with a special Seder for the first two nights, and synagogue services the last two mornings. They also observe the Bibical admonition against eating leavened bread during the full eight days of Passover.

"The Seder is an intertwining of a meal and a religious service where the story of the Jews' exodus from Egypt is retold," said Chaplain (Capt.) Craig Allen. "It reinforces the collective spirit of the exodus, because everyone is taught to look at it as if they were actually the ones who fled Egypt."

Allen said that in olden days, the Jews were slaves in Egypt and God ordered the Egyptians to set the slaves free.

"When the Egyptians refused, God sent down ten plagues on them. The last plague was the death of their first born sons.

"Moses told all the Jews to kill a lamb and put its blood over their front doors so the Angel of Death would pass over their homes and leave their first borns alive.

"This final act of God convinced the Egyptians to free the Jews, who left in such a hurry their bread didn't have time to rise. The slaves browned the unleavened loaves on rocks in the desert sun and ate it unleavened," Allen said.

The experience of having once been slaves is something that no Jew should forget.

"The Bible teaches that because we were once slaves, we should treat all strangers well," said Diane Allen, the chaplain's wife. "If you do that and live by the Bible's teachings, you'll be a better person."

The Passover Seder begins with a question that is asked by the youngest person present. "Why is this night different from all other nights?"

"The rest of the Seder is devoted to explaining why this night is different, through the telling of the exodus story," Allen explained. "The service is designed to teach our children this important part of our Jewish history."

The Seder is a special time to remember the exodus and teach our children the story, Allen said. "It's a family time, when extended families get together."

"It is a time to remember that given a choice betwen freedom and slavery, you should pick up and run for freedom," Mrs. Allen said. "And don't even wait for your bread to rise in the oven."

Chapel Briefs

Catholic women to meet

The Catholic women will have their monthly meeting May 2 at the Main Post Chapel. Rosary will be at 9:15 a.m. with Mass at 9:30 a.m. Conduct of business and election of new officers will follow Mass in the annex.

Col. Franklin from the Staff Judge Advocate will be the guest speaker at the meeting.

Free babysitting will be available at 8:45 a.m. at the Religious Education Center.

For more information call 687-0925.

Meditation room open at Donovan Library

The Meditation Room, located in the Donovan Technical Library in Building 4, is a non-denominational facility open to students, staff, faculty members, civilian employees and visitors to post. It is a place for you to spend some time in prayer and personal reflection. Hours of operation are the same as the library.

Every Tuesday and Thursday from 12:10 to 12:30 p.m. a devotional group meets in the Meditation Room for prayer and fellowship.

For more information, call Chaplain (Maj.) David Hicks at 545-2662.

PWOC plans production in Main Chapel courtyard

A mystery cast at Fort Benning's main post Chapel will exhibit acting skills May 7 at 9:30 a.m. in The Infantry Center Chapel Courtyard during the Protestant Women of the Chapel courtyard theatre production.

The performanace will be in conjunction with a potluck luncheon and installation of the newly elected board for 1986-87.

Free babysitting will be provided in the Religious Education Center.

For more information, call 545-2050.

Special Bible study groups further spiritual education

In addition to the Precept Bible study classes the Protestant Women of the Chapel offer, the group also sponsors three options to the program.

First, a beginner's Bible study class is taught by Nancy McKenzie. Secondly, a study class meets and discusses the book, "The Spirit-Controlled Woman" by Beverly La Haye. The mothers of pre-schoolers program offers a third option that consists of Bible-related studies, crafts, fellowship and fun, centered around the idea that sometimes moms need a morning out.

The classes meet at the Religious Education Center every Monday at 9 a.m. and are open to everyone. Free babysitting is provided.

'Sermons From Science' at Marshall Auditorium

The Moody Institute of Science has scheduled a presentation of four Sermons from Science here this weekend at Marshall Auditorium.

The shows Saturday and Sunday will be at 2 and 7 p.m.

The four demonstrations will include: light and color, including laser; resonance; testing the senses versus the laws of nature; and recording devices.

These demonstrations have been presented to standing room only crowds at the World's Fairs in Seattle, New York, Montreal, and Spokane. The entire community is invited to be a part of this experience.

Memorial service planned for holocaust victims

There will be an 11:30 non-denominational memorial service for holocaust victims at the Infantry Chapel May 6.

"The memorial service will commemorate the death of 11 million victims that perished as a result of the holocaust," said Chaplain (Capt.) Craig Allen.

Everyone is invited to attend.

Capt. Leamond Stuart conducts an informal class with students in the airborne school.

Army Vietnam combat veteran pushing airborne troops using new philosophy

USAIC Public Affairs Office

When he found out they wanted him to be an instructor, Capt. Leamond Stuart said he "kicked and screamed" to get out of the assignment.

"I wanted to be with troops, but they told me I had to do it," he said. "I decided that if I had to do it, I'd be the best one I could be."

His efforts paid off, and he was recently named the Officer Instructor of the Year for 1985.

He was cited for his work as an instructor at the Combined Arms & Tactics Divsion, U.S. Army Infantry School, where he taught airborne and air assault tactics.

"When I went there, those classes were getting very poor critiques from students. I found that one of the main complaints was that they didn't like instructors talking down to them," he said.

So Stuart decided to take a different approach in his classes. He made his classrooms more informal, encouraging student participation. Rather than teaching the material as the only way to do things, he presented it as possible techniques to use and encouraged students to share other techniques they'd learned from other experiences.

He said as an instructor he had to set a good example and earn the respect of his students.

"To me it doesn't matter what your job is, you've got to have self discipline and respect for others, respect for authority and your superiors. You earn respect by setting the example."

He doesn't hesitate to do just that. "I'd tell my students, be like me. I've done it all, been to all the schools, had all the choice assignments and could be a role model for them," he said.

The 15-year Army veteran began his career as a draftee during the Vietnam era, and served in combat with the 173rd Airborne Brigade (Sep). He stayed in the Army as an enlisted man for six years, then got out and went back to college.

Stuart was the distinguished military graduate of his Reserve Officer Training Corps graduating class from Georgia State University, where he earned a degree in pre-law.

After being commissioned in the Army, he spent a year as a reconnaissance platoon leader with the 24th Infantry. He then went to the 1st Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry at Fort Stewart, Ga. as a recon platoon leader for two years before getting into the Aviation Branch.

"Being a Ranger was good, but it doesn't give you any time for a family life," he said. So in order to be able to spend more time with wife Patti and their three children, he switched to aviation and went to flight school to become a Cobra pilot.

This led to a three year assignment with the 25th Infantry Division in Hawaii, where he was a Cobra platoon leader and later, an operations officer for an air cavalry troop.

He came to Benning in 1983 to attend the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, where he was selected for the instructor position.

Stuart has been commander of Company B, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry since July 1985. He considers his position, "the best job I've ever had."

"I like working with the 17- to 19-year-old soldiers who come here for Airborne School," he said. "For many it's the first time they don't have momma and daddy doing it for them; it's their first real sense of accomplishment because they had to do it on their own."

He sees the job as that of a motivator, a challenge he relishes. "I'm 38 years old, in the best physical condition I've ever been in, and can do the physical training right along with them."

Stuart said his values help his in his leadership role.

"Love of God, love of country, love of family; those are the important things," he said. "I used to not rank them in that order, but I think leaders have got to show them to their men."

Post hit with bell-ringer

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Bells will be ringing at Harmony Church Field House tonight, as boxers square-off in the 1986 Battalion Boxing Smoker.

First round action begins at 7 p.m.

Smoker finals will be determined on Saturday, when the remaining contenders meet at the same time.

There are those who are coming out for a good workout, while others have aspirations of going on to the Army Team and possibly the Olympics.

"I have not been in the ring since 1982, but I've got to give it one more try," said Jimmy Yow, 33-year-old super heavyweight. "I am a pressure fighter, so I have got to live with the dude for three rounds, or until he decides to move out,"said the 285-pound veteran.

A week prior to fight time, boxers were still going through intense training, led by Coach Jeff Johnson.

Johnson, a Golden Gloves Champion in 1980, has been conditioning fighters for tonight's matches.

"The fighters have had good conditioning, but in the last week of training we concentrated on pace and use of the left hand," said Johnson.

"A fighter must first know how to use and strengthen the left jabs and hooks before he is able to set up the combinations," explained Johnson.

Fighters trained by Johnson seem to appreciate the hard work and conditioning that they have received in preparation for tonight's bouts.

"I am just trying to learn as much as I can before my first fight. I am a novice, but I have listened to everything the Coach told me, hoping I can put it to good use in the ring," said Dave Bartholet, age 19.

Flyers down Eagles in close contests

by Joel D. Cortemanche
Special to the Bayonet

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby Football Club faced the Albany Eagles RFC Saturday, and won two closely fought matches by the scores of 17-13 and 8-4. Both teams fought a see-saw battle for the lead, and had several ties. The Flyers won the first game in the waning minutes, and won the second game in overtime.

Steve Geise opened the scoring for the Flyers early in the first game. He raced along the sideline for 30 meters and broke several tackles enroute to the try. The missed kick gave the Flyers a fragile 4-0 lead. The Flyers contained the Albany offense during the half and Flyer Billy Whitesides hit a 20-meter penalty kick to give the Flyers a 7-0 lead. Moments before the first half ended, Albany scored a try and an extra point to cut the lead to 7-6.

Albany opened the second half with a strong rush and scored a quick try to take a 10-7 lead. Whitesides booted another penalty kick, this one for 15 meters, to knot the score only two minutes after the Albany try. Albany countered with a penalty kick for a 13-10 lead. Billy Whitesides kicked a penalty kick from 10 meters out to tie the score again. His kick was a steep angled one from near the sideline. The score remained tied until the last five minutes of the game, when Steve Geise grabbed the ball and ran into a number of Albany defenders. He passed the ball to Tom Evans and Evans ran the final 10 meters for the winning try. The Flyer defense held on to prevent any further Albany scoring during the final minutes.

The second game was a repeat of the first game. The Benning Flyers winning 8-4.

Volunteers nail down needs, make badly needed roof repairs

by Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

The main post clubhouse used by the Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club will be getting a major face-lift in the coming weeks thanks to a hand from the community.

A group of officers and wives from the 197th Infantry Brigade kicked off the do-it-yourself effort Saturday by beginning badly-needed repairs to the roof of the clubhouse on Ingersoll Road.

Capt. Kenneth Harris, assistant director of Fort Benning's Directorate of Engineering and Housing, said, "Each Saturday a different unit will get a slice of the work to complete. We're hoping to have the job finished in less than two months."

Harris added that Saturday's effort "couldn't have gone better."

The volunteers from the 197th stripped the roof down to bare wood, replaced some rotting timber and rolled out fresh felt. DEH provided the materials though its self help section and also loaned tools for the project.

Lt. Col. David Peebles, who commands the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, was one of the volunteers working Saturday. He said, "The OWC does a lot for the community and it's a great opportunity for the ladies to get involved in things. It doesn't hurt for the community to do something in return."

Harris explained that when roof repairs are complete, work will begin on the building's interior and exterior. The OWC is still using the clubhouse in the meantime.

Martin Army Community Hospital NCO s take it all in Health Services competition

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Positive thinking gave SSgt. Elides Tarrago and Sgt. Martin Tenney the competitive edge in a recent soldiering competition.

The pair, both assigned to the Pathology Department at Martin Army Community Hospital, were recently named noncommissioned officer and soldier of the year for the Southeast region of the Health Services Command.

"I really think we did psychological damage to the other competitors because we came out of the boards high, convinced we'd done the best job possible," Tarrango said.

Tarrango was born in Cuba and came to the United States with his family to escape Castro's communist regime when he was 10 years old. He said one of his proudest moments was the day he became a citizen two years ago.

He grew up in Yonkers, N.Y., and joined the Army to get the education his immigrant parents couldn't afford to provide.

Tarrango said he enjoys the Army and has taken advantage of all the schools it offers.

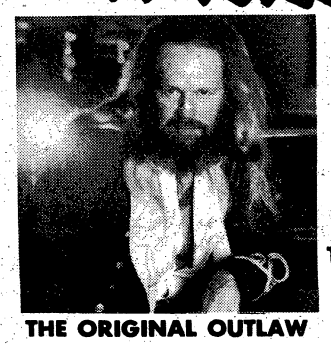
The ten-year veteran spent eight years as a lab technologist before switching to the cytotechnologist job he has now.

"The lab tech work lacked challenge after a while, as the lab became more automated," he said. "I was interested in cytotechnology because you have to use your eyes and knowledge to make a diagnosis."

A cytotechnologist is a specialist in the detection of cancer. He spends his days looking at slides and diagnosing different malignancies. The slide then goes to a pathologist who confirms the diagnosis.

Tenney earned a teaching degree in biology and general science then found that teaching wasn't for him and moved to several jobs before enlisting.

His one stipulation when he signed up was that he wanted to work in a hospital, a decision that led to his current job as a lab technician.



"I had looked into lab tech work on the outside, but without job experience I couldn't get hired," he said.

The two competitors spent six weeks studying for the regional competition, which tested their knowledge of military subjects.

"We had to go before a board of sergeants major and answer questions, and then show our hands-on ability in a round-robin test," Tarrango said.

"The judges said they couldn't remember the last time both winners came from the same hospital," Tarrango said.

Chinese veteran cashs in invitation

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"That word 'indefinite' is something like perpetual. I carried this invitation all the time. So I said, 'It's a blank check, so I'll try to cash it.' And I'm happy that before it's over I've had a chance to come back," Tsung-Chi Lee said.

And come back is what Lee did...44 years later.

While attending the Basic Officer Course here in 1942, Lee was given an invitation by the then commanding general Maj. Gen. Leven C. Allen to return to Fort Benning anytime.

He came back recently and "cashed in" on Allen's invitation for a two-day visit.

Lee has seen many other places in his 79 years.

Born in 1906, Lee is a colorful character whose life has spanned almost a century and his travels have spanned the world.

As he sits alertly in a high-backed chair, the China native speaks clearly and precisely of his homeland with an accent that only hints of his heritage.

"I was born in Yang Cho about 200 miles up the Yangtze River in China," said Lee.

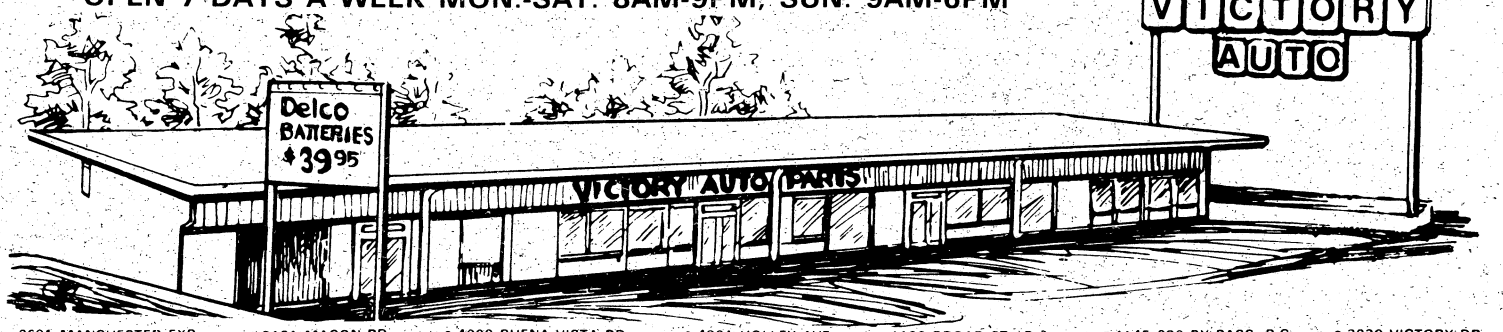
The bald man with the square brown glasses sits and speaks of his life with a subtle smile that indicates it was a happy and proud life.

Dressed in dark blue suit sporting a burgundy bow tie, his dress alludes his consciousness of present day style respectful of his later years.

He sits with a dignity that seems to command those in the room to mimic his manner.

He first came to the United States just before joining the Chinese Army, "I was sent here as a worker for Chinese Defense Supplys Inc. I came here with a tourist passport. I came as an observer," Lee said.

Commissioned into the army of Nationalist China in the 1930's,he talks of his missions as a pilot in the air corps.



During these missions he flew Vought biplanes and unsuccessfully bombed Hunan Headquarters where Mao Tse-tung was believed to be.

His son Gus Lee writes, "But my fathers best memories from his early adulthood were his days of high military comraderie at the Officers Basic Course at Fort Benning."

He went on to add, "It was clear to me as a child that his Benning experience was the revealing moment of his life. His exposure to the American infantry formed his perceptions of mission, purpose, organization, commitment, professionalism and success."

Lee

It was while at Benning that Lee decided to become an American citizen.

In 1950 he achieved his citizenship and worked as a liaison officer until retiring and settling in San Francisco as a seismographic analyst for an engineering company.

"I felt it better to come back to the engineering profession, I helped design earthquake-proof buildings," Lee said.

He speaks fondly of his family, now a continent away, his wife and four children who all reside in San Francisco.

While he was here Lee visited the exchange where he replaced a ring that symbolized what Fort Benning meant to him.

That ring was the Infantry School ring he got in the spring of 1942 during his 13-week stay at Benning.

Lee wore that ring for 40 years until a mugger in San Francisco removed it from his 5'6", 145-pound frame.

The aging gentleman considered the trip here to be the last of his journey into old age.

As his son Gus Lee states, "My father's trip to Benning has the emotional trappings of a pilgrimage to his ethical and personal foundations. This was where he became a modern man, a professional officer and the person who would leave his land of birth to become an American."

SSgt with 15 years service convicted for stealing tires

by Charles Coffin
Staff Judge Advocate

SSgt. Billy Ammons, 598th Maintenance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, a Vietnam veteran with more than 15 years of service, was tried and convicted by a special court-martial April 17 for stealing nine government tires valued at $700.

Evidence presented by Capt. Jack Spradley, prosecutor, showed that Ammons was the noncommissioned officer in charge of the direct exchange point for the 598th Maintenance Company. As such, Ammons was responsible for the accountability of an inventory of repair parts worth over $200,000. Spradley proved that Ammons stole three jeep tires on Jan. 15, 1986, three more on Feb. 16, and three more on Feb. 28. Ammons falsified inventory records to conceal the thefts. However, he and his wife were apprehended when they attempted to sell the last set of tires to FBI agents conducting an undercover sting operation.

Spradley also presented evidence that Ammons had stolen a vehicle battery from the DX point and had installed the battery in his wife's car. The prosecutor called an FBI agent involved in the sting operation, who testified that Ammons boasted that he could sell more government property if he was in the market. Capt. James Foster and SFC Thomas Taylor, both of the 598th Maint. Co., testified that Ammons' past duty performance was poor.

Spradley argued that Ammons had violated his trust as NCO. He urged Maj. Donald Rogers, the military judge, to remove Ammons from the NCO corps and to punish him with a substantial period of confinement. Rogers reduced Ammons to the rank of private first class and sentenced him to be confined for a period of two months. Ammons will be further reduced to the grade of E-1 by operation of law.

On April 15, Pvt. Tyler Alston, Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment/Weapons Department, was convicted of two specifications of absent without leave, possession of marijuana and use of both marijuana and cocaine.

Capt. Kurt Meckstroth, prosecutor, presented evidence that on Dec. 16, 1985, a bag containing marijuana was found in Alston's barracks room. Based on this discovery, Capt. Daniel Wakeman, Alston's company commander, ordered Alston to provide a urine sample for drug testing. Two days after Alston was caught with the marijuana, he went AWOL. He stayed gone until Jan. 2. Upon his return, he was placed under the control of his squad leader who began processing Alston back into the company. However, minutes after receiving his paycheck, Alston slipped out of a latrine window and again went AWOL. This time he remained gone for over two months. While Alston was AWOL, the result of his urinalysis test was received. The laboratory proved conclusively that Alston had used both marijuana and cocaine.

1st Lt. Guy Edmondson, Alston's former platoon leader, testified that Alston was consistently one of the worst soldiers in the platoon. Edmondson stated that he felt Alston had no rehabilitative potential.

Alston took the stand and testified that he was experiencing severe personal problems that prompted him to use drugs and go AWOL. He asked Maj. Donald Rogers, the military judge, to take this into account when deciding on an appropriate sentence. Meckstroth argued that most soldiers experience personal problems at some point in their careers and that Alston should not be rewarded for resorting to illegal means to deal with his problems.

Rogers sentenced Alston to be confined for a period of 96 days, to forfeit $200 per month for three months, and to be discharged from the Army with a Bad Conduct Discharge.

Did You Know That Last Year's U.S. Savings Bonds Average Rate Exceeded 9%?

Many people all over America are surprised when they hear what U.S. Savings Bonds have to offer.

For starters, Savings Bonds give you market-based interest rates—like the money markets—plus the security of a guaranteed return. This means you can earn a lot more than the guaranteed minimum rate of 7½%, but never less! To earn the higher rates, just hold your Bonds for five years or longer.

Here's more surprising news—the interest you earn from Savings Bonds is free from state and local income taxes. And you don't have to pay federal taxes on the interest earned until you cash in your Bonds.

Savings Bonds are easy to buy, too. They cost as little as $25 and can be purchased at most banks and savings and loans. Or through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.

All of these advantages are making Savings Bonds an increasingly popular investment. Last year, sales of U.S. Savings Bonds were up nearly 30%!

With all that Savings Bonds have to offer, it's no surprise they're one of the best investments in America. For the current rate, just call toll-free 1-800-US-BONDS.

U.S. SAVINGS BONDS Paying Better Than Ever

Market-based rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least five years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn market-based rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than five years earn lower rates.

1986 Audi

Today, the Audi 5000S becomes even easier to handle. $298 a month.*

The Audi 5000S sedan's ability to negotiate roadways crisply and efficiently is certainly one reason to admire it. That you can negotiate a lease of just $298 a month on this fine European luxury sedan is all the more reason to acquire it.

Performance aside, this 1986 Audi 5000S sedan comes with many standard features that increase comfort without altering the lease price. Electronic climate control, cruise contol, power windows and door locks, AM/FM stereo cassette, and automatic transmission make this limited time offer a tempting invitation to unlimited driving pleasure.

A closer look will prove what words cannot. Come in for a test drive and complete lease details. program ends May 31, 1986. And drive away in an Audi 5000S sedan at a lease price that is, well, easy to handle.

* This offer is available only from a participating Audi Prestige Leasing dealer through May 31, 1986 as a 60-month, closed-end lease. No purchase option. No down payment is required. First month $298 payment and $300 security deposit are required in advance. Monthly payments are based on manufacturer's suggested retail price and special lease terms extended by VCI/Prestige Leasing. Total lease payments $17,880.00 plus 10¢ per mile over 75,000. Registration, local fees, tax options additional.

Memorial set for victims of Holocaust

A nondenominational memorial service is set for Tuesday at 11:30 in the Infantry Chapel.

According to Chaplain (Capt.) Craig Allen, the service will commemorate the deaths of more than 11 million victims of the Holocaust.

Everyone is invited to attend.

Rangers start contest today

The 5th Annual David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger competition kicks off today with an Army Physical Readiness Test at 7 a.m. on Hall Field.

The contest will run through Sunday with an awards ceremony scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Monday at Victory Pond.

The public is invited to come out and observe the grueling test.

For more information, call 544-6768/6649/6031/7212.

Cab fare upped

Yesterday marked the first increase in taxi fares on Fort Benning since 1981.

Individuals riding taxicabs to, from or on post will now be paying slightly higher fees.

The new fares increased to $1 flag drop plus $.20 each 1/5 mile. This computes to $1.80 for the first mile and $1 for each additional mile or an increase of $.20 a mile. The new fares are the same as those charged in Columbus.

Livingston 'Spirit of Fort Benning' winner

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In an effort to "recognize a distinguished civilian leader who has demonstrated friendship and support for Fort Benning and the American Infantryman..." the Spirit of Fort Benning award will be presented to Clifford O. Livingston in a cermony at the Officers' Club Monday at 7 p.m.

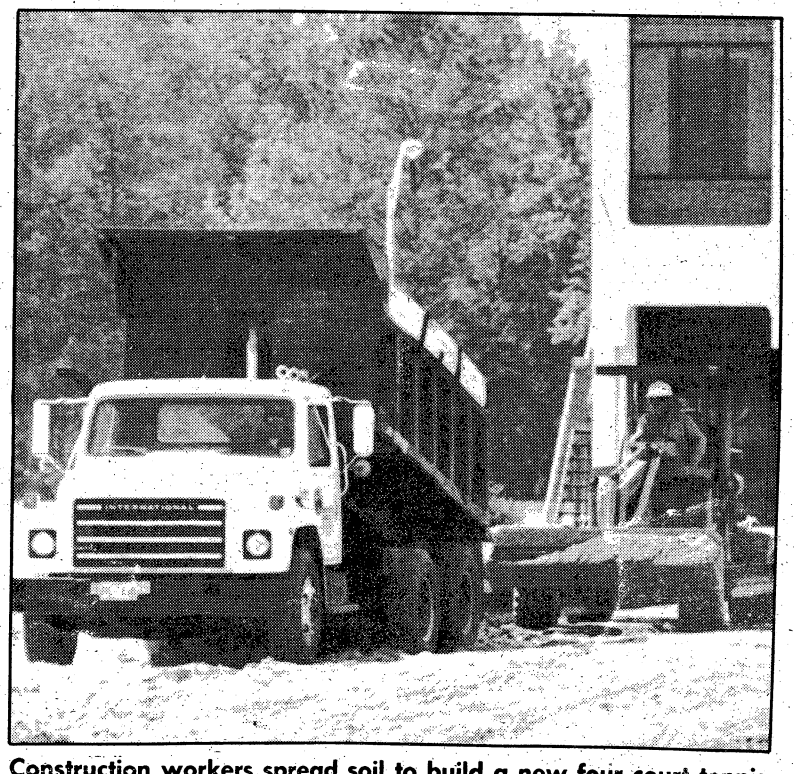
Following last year's recipient, Maynard R. Ashworth, Livingston is only the second local individual to receive the award. Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. announced the selection in March when he sent a letter to Livingston informing him of the decision.

Burba wrote: "You were selected for this award by a very distinguished panel of military and civilian representatives who are familiar with your long time association with Fort Benning."

Livingston's association with the installation began only 15 years after the War Department decided on Columbus as the site for Camp Benning.

As part of the Civilian Conservation Corps established by President Franklin D. Roosevelt, he was instrumental in the construction of the log cabin lodge at Victory Pond. The cabin is still used today. He later became involved in the construction of the Officers' Club and the Hunt Club stables.

Following World War II, Livingston and a few others established the Citizens and Military Council at the request of Maj. Gen. O'Daniel. Still active today, the council has served as a model for similar groups all over the country.



Some of his other contributions include a long time affiliation with the Association of the United States Army, including service on the board. He also joined efforts with the late Jim Woodruff Jr. and Winthrop Rockefeller in soliciting the initial funding for the National Infantry Museum.

His present-day contributions to the community include the famous oyster roast, which he hosts each year in December for Benning and Allied soldiers.

He also ensures that a large group of Allied officers and their family members are able to attend the annual Shrine Circus. In addition, he is always sensitive to the special needs of Allied families coming into the area or returning to their own countries.

Livingston's latest efforts on behalf of our Allied visitors center around the support group that is keying the drive to get the U.S. Army School of the Americas to remain at Fort Benning. He also serves as a member of the Chamber of Commerce Military Affairs Committee.

In response to Burba's letter announcing his selection as this year's Spirit of Fort Benning award, Livingston wrote: "I am proud and honored...and highly complimented on the opportunity to become associated with such a fine gentleman as Maynard Ashworth."

Construction workers spread soil to build a new four court tennis complex near the NCO club.

Members' dues will aid NCO Club renovation

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In a move that went into effect yesterday, patrons of the Noncommissioned Officers' Club are now required to pay dues and have membership cards.

The cards, which cost $1 a month, are required to enter the club except for breakfast and lunch.

According to MSgt. Raymond J. Hood, Club manager, the primary reason for starting the new system was to help pay depreciation costs of new construction and renovations. Construction and renovations include building a new four court tennis complex, constructing a roof for the patio, building a new latrine and renovating the main ballroom.

Hood said that the total cost of the projects for this year is about $350,000.

Members are allowed to use the Club, tennis courts and pool at no cost. They will also have check cashing privileges, Hood said.

Entertainment charges will remain the same, except for guests without club cards. Previously, patrons paid a $3 entertainment fee on Friday and Saturday nights. Now, however, Club members pay only $2 and nonmembers still pay $3.

Family members will be issued their cards at the same time their sponsors become members.

The renovations are expected to be complete within two months.

Foreign qualification badges: if you earn 'em, wear 'em...

by Dawn Kilpatrick
USAIC Public Affairs Office

I would like to set a scene for you. Come with me if you will for a few moments to the arid wasteland of Palmerola Air Base, Honduras.

It is September, the temperature is about 100 degrees fahrenheit, if you are able to find a shaded area. If you are subjected to the glaring, burning sun, (which most of us are) it's anyone's guess how hot it is. In an attempt to escape the ruthless heat, let's go into the Central American tropic hut that we are calling home for the next six months.

It's a cozy little spot we're sharing with seven other soldiers. We try to make it a little more comfortable by adding personal touches. We have to be careful what we set out in the open, however, because the screened "windows" provide no protection when the hot southern wind begins to stir up the sand and dust storms. When the whirling dirt gets to be unbearable we can always drop the wooden flaps in an attempt to avoid eating the gritty mess. Of course, then we can swelter in our own sweat. The decision becomes a difficult one.

Once the daily storm has settled down we think how nice it would be to be able to take a shower. But, alas, the luxury of washing when we think it would be "nice" is not a part of duty here. The two-mile trek to the shower point is only worthwhile twice daily, from 6 to 6:30 a.m. and from 7 to 7:30 p.m. Those are the times we are "authorized to utilize the bathing facility."

Okay, so the living arrangements leave something to be desired. And the temperatures are unbearable. But the Army runs on its stomachs, so, they must have really great chow here, right? Wrong. They used to, but the vet had to shut down the mess hall. Now it's meals, ready to eat...three times a day. Mmm, Mmm, MREs!

Being optimists at heart, though, we look for the silver lining in every cloud. "Impossible," you say. No it isn't.

The commander tells us all soldiers assigned to the lovely and scenic Palmerola Air Base who are airborne qualified can go to the Honduran Airborne School and earn the Honduran parachutist badge. "Yeah!" The only condition is that attendance at the school cannot interfere with the day to day duties we have at Palmerola.

No problem we all say. We don't mind getting up at 3 a.m. to be on site at 4 a.m. to attend the required training and be back on the job by 7 a.m. for physical training. It's worth it we all say. It is a sign of accomplishment and dedication to the airborne way of life to be able to wear the parachutist's badge of a foreign army. Off we go, every morning for a week.

At week's end the pride we all feel is immense. Not only have we earned Honduran Airborne Wings, we've shared in a cultural exchange with our colleagues from another country's army. The experience and the achievement was certainly worth the hardships we endured.

The pride and sense of accomplishment we felt upon completion of the course is renewed each time someone notices the foreign wings sewn on our utility uniform. We are able to relive the experience and share it with fellow soldiers, inspiring them to seek out the same types of challenge.

So, what's the point?

We earned them and we should be able to wear them. All of the soldiers who once wore the parachutist's badge of a foreign country went a step further to earn that honor. Regardless of the circumstances, we all gave a little extra, on our own accord.

And now, we cannot display the foreign award on our utility uniform.

"No one ever said things would be fair in this life." This latest move by Army leadership certainly drives that point home with stinging accuracy.

...but should soldiers wear 201 file on their shirts?

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

As the old adage goes, "You can't judge a book by its cover." Taking liberties with this phrase, you also "can't judge a soldier by his badges."

In a recent regulation, Department of the Army has decreed that no foreign qualification badges can be worn on the battle dress uniform. I say "hurray" to that and let's carry it a step further: allow no badges at all.

I know, all the "Eagle Scouts" (the soldiers who have AND wear every badge the Army ever offered) will moan and groan about having earned them and deserving to wear them. But what possible good are a lot of subdued baubles sewn all over the uniform? I'll tell you.

It's something called the "stud factor." When one soldier walks up to another each eyes the other's respective uniform to see who has the most badges.

"Let's see, he's airborne, pathfinder, scuba diver and a pilot. But he doesn't have a Ranger tab. I'm a bigger stud than he is," goes the typical mental process. Certainly, Ranger training makes a better soldier and leader, wearing a Ranger tab does not.

The real disservice badges do in the Army, however, has to do with credibility. When soldiers see a leader, be that leader officer or NCO, their first judgement is based on all the paraphenelia, or lack of, on that leader's chest.

All soldiers should be judged on their demonstrated abilities, not what's sewn on their BDU shirt. The wearing of baubles does not a soldier make; hard work, perseverance, courage, dedication and action do.

A Marine lieutenant I went through jump school with once told me why Marines don't wear a lot of qualification badges on their utility uniforms:

"A Marine is a Marine, a combat soldier, regardless of any special training or schools he's been to. Besides," he said, grinning, shifting a chew of Red Man to his other cheek, "Marines don't need to wear their 201 file on their chests like the Army does."

Let's ax all these Army badges and let our soldiers show what they can do, not what they have done.

Various voices

What are your feelings about the recent policy change prohibiting the wear of foreign wings on the battle dress uniform?

Sgt. Ernest N. Potts, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "It is ridiculous. When earned they should be worn. A person wants to display the honors that they have dedicated hard work to to achieve."

SSgt. Joseph E. Hacia Jr., 3rd Ranger Company, USAIS — "If someone earns them, they sould be able to display them. It puts more pride in the individual soldier."

SSgt. Timothy Kelley, Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry — "Even though it is a good experience to make the exchange between countries, I feel that we should not participate in the foriegn exchange if we are not allowed to wear the wings."

Op-Ed

CG touts savings bond drive

The dates May 1 to 31 have been set aside for Fort Benning's 1986 U.S. Savings Bond Campaign. I wholeheartedly support this effort.

A new market-based interest rate now sets yield on Series EE bonds, held at least five years, at 85 percent of the average return of five-year Treasury securities. That rate is calculated and compounded every six months during the life of the bond and is guaranteed not to drop below 7.5 percent. Bonds will pay 8.36 percent from Nov. 1, 1985 to April 30, 1986.

No matter what your goals — extra retirement income, college education for children, a new home — bonds can help you to reach them while helping to keep America strong. Your dreams will not come true unless you make a genuine effort to save, and U.S. Savings Bonds represent a painless and convenient way to start your own savings program.

The success of this year's campaign is contingent upon your support of the program by initially joining the plan, or by increasing your present allotment. During the campaign, a savings bond canvasser should meet with you to afford the opportunity to sign up for payroll savings.

I urge you to carefully consider this opportunity. A small payroll deduction today can help service your future, as well as the future of our country.

SAVE AMERICA. . .SAVE.

Asian/Pacific islanders honored

In recognition of Asian/Pacific Americans and our nation's ethnic and national multiplicity, the week May 3 to 10 is proclaimed "Asian/Pacific Islander Heritage Week" at Fort Benning, Georgia. This year's theme is "Asian/Pacific Americans: Ascending Force of the 80s" and marks the eighth anniversary of this observance.

All personnel at this installation and in surrounding communities are encouraged to participate in the observance through planned activities by units, staffs and other agencies.

Having played a long, distinguished told in the history of our nation, Asian/Pacific Americans have made numerous accomplishments in such areas as law, science, business, art, medicine and the Armed Forces. Their traditions and cultures are remarkable and very much a part of our society. Therefore, each individuals at Fort Benning should join with other citizens to honor Asian/Pacific Americans during this year's observance.

Character must be nurtured

by Terry Tucker
Fort Bliss, Texas

FORT MONROE, VA. (TNS)—"From values we draw purpose, direction, vitality and character."—Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh.

Moral character, ethical character, the character of one's personality, even "he's a character" —there are many meanings and connotations to the word.

In all its aspects, the concept of character is the foundation of our individual and collective norms.

For us as soldiers, it is the essence of our projected professional image, inseparable from and interwoven with what we do and what we personify.

In our selected profession, our sphere of influence is potentially global. Our character or lack of it affects not only ourselves but others as well.

We must continually work toward positive character growth in ourselves and our fellow soldiers, because the way we are perceived by others depends on the character we project.

Indifference, inaction, exaggerated importance of one's position or arrogance all contribute to negative perceptions on the part of those with whom we interact. Although they may be only small snapshots of our character, the overall negative perception is almost irreversible.

Contrary to popular belief, character is not an innate virtue, but must be skillfully nurtured over a lifetime.

If we are exposed to positive examples as we grow and mature within our families, we will model and integrate these examples into our own lives. Young people are very impressionable, and unfortunately can incorporate negative character models as well.

Like our own families, the Army has intergenerational loyalties, traditions, values and character examples for us to adopt and incorporate. How successfully we project ourselves, how positively we are perceived, will have a notable impact on generations of soldiers to come.

We are rapidly climbing the ladder of excellence. We have made great strides in technology, doctrine, tactical innovation, leadership and management.

INTERVENTION
in•ter•ven•tion - Alcoholism and drug dependency are diseases of denial. This means that it usually takes a crisis to force a person suffering from drinking or drugging problems to accept treatment. This crisis could be loss of a job or an automobile accident. An intervention is a controlled confrontation between the patient and his or her family or employer. Good treatment programs such as the Help Unit at Cobb Memorial Hospital help employers or families intervene effectively while the chance for recovery is still good.

Patton's former cook recalls 'mess hall' days

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A retired Army cook who once served Lt. Gen. George S. Patton and Gen. Omar Bradley paid Fort Benning a visit recently and remembered what it was like here in 1941.

The 70-year-old Wilburn King Sr., who was visiting his brother in the area, was given a tour through some of the post dining facilities and remembered when he cooked here.

"I was with the Food Service Group that was then known as the School for Cooks and Bakers. We ran all types of messes, one of which was the open field mess in a tent on main post. Field grade officers ate their meals there," King said.

The father of three, retired after 30 years of active duty and resides in East St. Louis, Illinois.

The medium built man looks much younger than his 70 years The laugh lines that frame his mouth and eyes are indicative of his sense of humor.

He smiles about the differences between the dining facilities of today and the 'mess halls' of the 40's. "They are a lot better today than they were then," King said.

As is still common in today's Army, soldiers of King's time also criticized the food.

"We had some apples for example, something in abundance, if we put them on the line the people would pass them up. So we would take a crate of them and put them by the door and have the soldiers believe they were stealing them. This is how I got rid of them!"

Life wasn't as easy when dealing with "ol' blood and guts Patton."

In an article written by Yvonne Samuel Major for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch King recalled serving Patton cold eggs after the general arrived two hours late from horseback riding.

"I got my first chewing out from the general, he said. King mocked Patton's very low voice: 'My grits are cold and my eggs are cold and hard. Next Sunday morning I'm sure you will have these items in a state of readiness for eating," said King.

Patton was then division commander and according to King had no desire to be post commander. "He was quite a guy," said King.

Air Force colonel tells how to use friendly skies

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A 10-man reconnaissance team is deep inside enemy territory when suddenly they're spotted. They are subjected to heavy ground fire. The radio operator calls for fire and evacuation support to get the team out — fast! In minutes, aircraft whiz overhead, quieting the enemy, while the recon team is expertly evacuated.

Air Force Col. Jay Reidel and his staff are on hand to ensure that this type of scenario has a happy ending.

Riedel is the senior Air Force representative at the U.S. Army Infantry School here, and he and his staff teach Air Force doctrine to students in the school.

"We teach them how the Air Force can support the Army with close air support, how to request it, and the most efficient way to use it," Riedel explained.

He said the Joint Chiefs are renewing the emphasis on the sister services working more closely together.

"With the new AirLand Battle Doctrine, the Army makes use of air assets much more than in the past. As the Army goes to light infantry units, the need for close air support for these units increases," he said.

Riedel said the type of support provided depends on what the threat is, the kind of weather and terrain involved and weapons used — all the factors involved in the conflict. "All have to be looked at and planned for in order to make a battle or campaign successful," he said.

Once the Army decides what it needs, it's up to the Air Force to pick the aircraft to be used, depending on the mission and availability.

The Air Force has the capability to handle all kinds of missions, including airlift, reconnaissance, close air support and fire power.

Soldier's wife balances college, politics, career, community, kids

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The wife of a Fort Benning captain has been selected as an intern for district Congressman Richard Ray and if the intern has her way, it will prove only the beginning of a promising career.

"I am fortunate to have such an intelligent, hard working and well-rounded person as an intern," the congressman said of Rebecca O'Neil.

The pretty, blue-eyed blonde began her internship in the local district office April 11 and looks forward to receiving the college credit that will put her closer to earning her bachelor's degree.

O'Neil says she "fell in love young" with her husband, Capt. Mark O'Neil, Jump Branch chief with the Airborne School, got married and had children. Now a mother of two boys, one 7 and one 9, she is ready to pursue a career and believes a college degree will improve her chances.

O'Neil is working toward a major in business management and a minor in psychology. She has attended the Texas Christian University at Fort Worth, Texas, and while stationed in West Germany she attended the University of Maryland.

She has maintained an average good enough to keep her on the Dean's List at all of the schools she's attended.

Sitting behind her desk, the 30- year-old woman doesn't resemble the human dynamo her hard-working attitude projects. Of medium build, dressed in a white sweater splashed with colors, her eyes light up and her speech quickens as she describes what her job duties will be for the next 10 weeks. "I do a little bit of everything, such as answering calls, writing reports, log the mail, read the newspapers and look for anything that might concern Mr. Ray and we talk to Washington several times a day."

She considers herself lucky to have been choosen for the much coveted internship. "Working in the local district office of a U.S. Congressman is an excellent chance to gain insight into issues, problems and concerns of the local constituents. Viewing politics from this level gives me insight into what is actually involved in the in the field of government and politics," O'Neil said.

As if her studies and motherhood are not enough to keep her busy, O'Neil also is very active in community life. She is a Cub Scout Committee member and a life member of the National Military Family Association and is also active in the Catholic church.

Rebecca O'Neil goes about her daily routine at the office of Congressman Richard Ray.

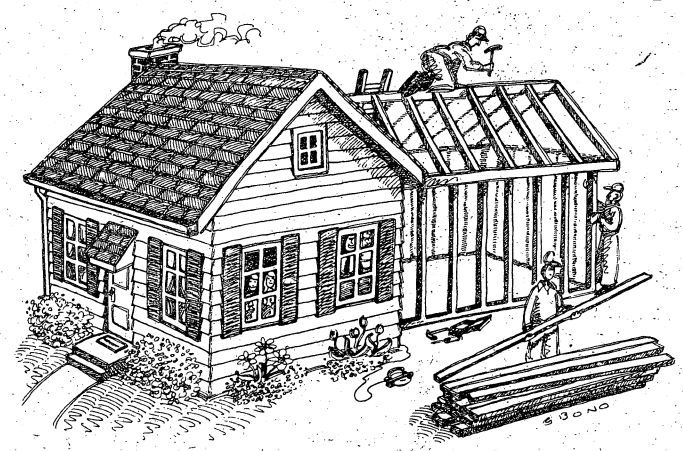
'Sky Soldiers' plan reunion

The Society of the 173rd Airborne Brigade is planning a full schedule for its reunion, beginning Wednesday and running through May 11.

The Columbus/Fort Benning chapter of the society is hosting the event for the former "sky soldiers" and four past commanders are expected to attend.



The group will watch airborne, Ranger and mechanized infantry demonstrations; tour the commanding general's quarters, Riverside; attend airborne and infantry graduations and enjoy a 173rd banquet. Other planned events include rides in the 250-foot buddy seat and jumps from the 34-foot tower.

Short-order cook fills tall bill as food specialist of year

Sgt. Marie Cook wields her magic wand over a pan of pork chops.

Want to stir up a ruckus in the Rooks household? Just ask husband or wife who is the better cook.

Right now the edge probably goes to Sgt. Marie D. Rooks, noncommissioned officer in charge of the short-order line at the 43rd Engineer Battalion consolidated dining facility.

In April, Rooks was named Fort Benning food service specialist of the year for 1985. Her husband, Sgt. Anthony Rooks, also a cook, handles rations for the 197th Support Battalion consolidated dining facility.

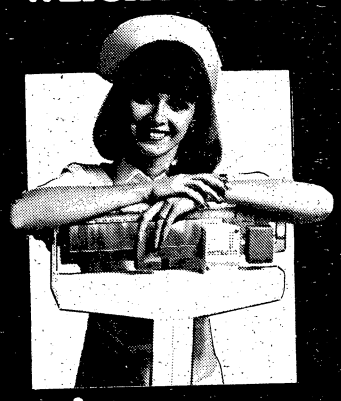
Marie is expected to receive a trophy this month from Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., commander, Fort Benning.

"I'm quite pleased to see her excel," said Anthony. "I was in California (at the National Training Center) when she told me she was nominated (for the cook of the year). I was so thrilled I told everyone."

He said that after a long laugh and a question to himself whether he should even try to answer the "Who's best" query.

Anthony had entered the competition in 1984 but "wasn't as lucky as she (Marie) was." He didn't enter in 1985.

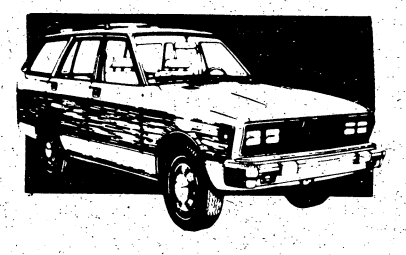
"I told him he was scared to go against me," teased Marie.



Marie admits it's hard to leave Anthony alone in the kitchen.

"He'll be cooking something and I'll say 'You didn't put that in' or 'You're not going to do that, are you?' " said Marie.

But she does consider herself lucky to have a husband who can fix meals.



"Then I don't have to put up with any excuses about getting married 'because I couldn't cook,' " smiled Marie.

Market-based interest rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least five years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn market-based rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than five years earn lower rates.

Child needs nurses' care

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two-year-old Regina Zacherl, soon to be a resident here, needs help to stay alive.

Regina was born with a rare disease of the pancreas, called Nesidio Blastosis, in which the organ secretes too much insulin. Her father, Maj. Donald H. Zacherl, said that since the condition was diagnosed shortly after her birth, she has been on a strict regimen of exact doese of food and medication.

"If she isn't fed exactly the right amounts and kinds of food through a stomach tube, her pancreas produces too much insulin, which can send her into insulin shock or produce a hypoglycemic condition. Either of these states could be fatal," he said.

The family will arrive at Fort Benning June 9 and will immediately need nurses to help with Regina's care. Right now, her father and mother share 12 hours of her care each day, and nurses are needed for the other 12 hours daily.

The family receives financial help through the CHAMPUS system, but not enough to pay what a commercial nursing service charges per hour.

"We're not looking for volunteers, but for nurses who will work for the CHAMPUS rate plus an additional amount we negotiate with them," he said.

Zacherl is presently a student at the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and will be assigned to Benning after graduation. He is programmed to become the fire support officer with the 75th Ranger Regiment.

He and his wife, Marianne, have two other children; Christina, 10, and Anna, 9.

Zacherl said the military community at Fort Leavenworth has really reached out to the family. "All the military wives there made it a lot easier for us. The military community is a very supportive culture. I don't see how people outside the military could handle this," he said.

Zacherl said Regina should outgrow the condition by the time she is five years old, although there are few chilren older than age 15 who have survived the disease.

If you're interested in helping Regina, call Jonnie Smith in the Community Health Nursing Office at 545-4041.

Kelley Hill postal clerk has mailbox full of memories

Tim Wallis

Mrs. Arloa Potter, Kelley Hill postal clerk, sells stamps to a 197th Infantry Brigade soldier.

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

In a unit like the 197th Infantry Brigade, soldiers arrive, hang their hats for a while and then move on to another assignment or to their hometowns. However, the government has managed to keep one employee on Kelley Hill for more than 15 years, and she feels right at home.

Since 1969, Arloa Potter has been the familiar face behind the post office desk on Kelley Hill. She has seen a lot of soldiers come and go, from infantry privates to brigade commanders. She has kept a passive eye on things for Uncle Sam and has seen big changes — not only in postal rates, but in the face of Kelley Hill and the 197th.

As the wife of a retired Army noncommissioned officer, she is familiar with military life. If you've got a few minutes, she'll happily tell you how it used to be.

"When I got this job, they still had the draft," Potter reflected. "This was a busy place while Vietnam was going on."

Since that time, Kelley Hill has seen a lot of changes.

"The motor pools for 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor and 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry took over what was a parade field," she said, "and the Kelley Hill Theater went up on what used to be a helicopter landing area."

Potter has enjoyed her job in the small post office branch. She is always up for a few minutes of chatter with a soldier who stops in to buy a stamp or mail a package home.

"I've always liked working with the young soldiers up here," she said with a laugh. "It helped me raise my own kids."

She raised two daughters in the Army of the 50s and 60s. The family traveled with her husband to Germany and stayed behind in the U.S. while he was in the Far East.

"While your husband was away from home, you were on your own," Potter said. "Now there is a lot more family involvement."

When the Potters, who are Midwest natives, arrived in Georgia, they decided to stay. SSgt. Potter retired in Columbus — and Kelley Hill got to keep its postal clerk,

Potter added with a hearty laugh, "It's easier for me to turn on an air conditioner in Georgia than it is to shovel snow in Minnesota."

Palm reader gives people a hand in seeing future

Story and photo by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

On the road to Cusseta, Georgia stands a large sign with a huge red palm painted on it. It identifies Miss Hope, a reader of palms for more than a half-century.

"My grandmother read palms, my mother read palms and I read palms. It's a gift," says Dorothy Mitchell, whose business name is Miss Hope.

Mitchell has been reading palms since she was 10 years old. She is 61 now.

"People come to me with their problems. I get a lot of military in here," she says, pointing to both her home and business, a large, open, modern house decorated in blue velvet and gray carpet with large picture windows.

"People come to me to relax their minds. They have problems, they don't know where to go. They come to me. But they have to believe that I can help them," she said.

Miss Hope helps them by "reading" their palms that reveal to her a person's past, present and future.

"I am gifted with this. I don't get what I do from books. No medicines, no God's power. Noboby is bigger than God," said Mitchell.

Mitchell's mother and father came to the U.S. from Rumania. Mitchell, her husband and granddaughters all speak fluent Rumanian.

"The worst problem I've had brought here was a young girl, maybe 20 years old. She was taking drugs, she was disgusted and she wanted to commit suicide. I read her palm, relaxed her mind, and told her it was a sin to kill herself. She came back to me for readings five more times and didn't commit suicide. I guess I saved her life. She listened to me," said Miss Hope.

Mitchell said typical problems that people bring to her are marriage, sickness and business but that problems about love are at the top of the list.

"Lots of people tell me that I'm evil but I don't drag anybody in here. Lots of people don't believe in my gift but that's their opinion," said Mitchell, dragging deeply on a cigarette.

Mitchell said that when she reads a palm, feelings about that person come automatically into her head. She said she can tell them of their past, present and into their future as far as a year.

"The first thing I ask anyone who comes in here is 'do you want to know the good and bad?' I have to tell them the truth and the bad can be future car accidents, when they're gonna' die or what will happen to their marriage. Some say yes and some say no," she said.

Miss Hope reads a palm for one of her customers.

She said that people who have been drinking or taking drugs cannot have their palms read.

"When they're on drugs or alcohol I can't see too clear. It just doesn't show right in their palms," Mitchell said.

One customer, waiting to see Miss Hope, praised her gift.

"I come in once a week and get numbers from her for the horse track. She's picked several winners for me," said Mike Harnois.

Miss Hope, dressed in a flowery dress with her long hair thrown over one shoulder, smiled and pulled on her cigarette.

"I' m here to help people. That's what I do."

Ranger School graduate shares trials, tribulations

by Jerry Healy
Special to The Bayonet

RECYCLE!!! It is a thought of terror that lingers in the air at Ranger School. The word itself brings an anxiety swelling to overwhelming proportions to all Ranger students suffering from the "no-gos."

So what's Ranger School like? It's like—long. Fifty-eight days and a wake-up for those other than recycles.

First phase with the Morgan team and Darby R.I.'s (Ranger Instructors) is physical training; push-ups, mule kicks, flutter kicks. Less sleep, less food and more P.T.; about two hours, one and a half meals and many sessions of P.T.

It's the mountains. Dahlonega, Ga.: beautiful and exhausting. Legs stretched weak with the strain and still we climb. It's Yona, a mountain with domes of rock and few grooves and still we climb.

Bill Walton

A Ranger School student during the Florida phase.

But it's also breakfasts. All the food you could want; eggs, potatoes, grits, blueberry pancakes, yes, with syrup and toast and coffee, too.

And hootches where you can warm up when in from the field. Squad-sized and comfortable, adorned with the engravings of past sufferers.

Then there's Florida, nasty, foul-smelling, swamp-soaked Florida. Muddy water up to the knees, mud sludge up to where the legs begin. There are feet that look like overused sponges and R.I.'s who utter the punishing "no-go" verdict with increasing frequency. Forget the reasons, nobody can survive a strict evaluator. Just better look good. Just better sound off.

Is it all pain and misery? No, there's hunger and anxiety too.

There ought to be a slide show program of Ranger School students. It ought to be shown in a very dark room.

First the darkness, then a slide of Rangers in action, more darkness as the next slide moves into place and then another action slide. Darkness, a vision of the world and more darkness, a continuing process much like a Ranger student's mind after day three in Florida.

First slide: a projection of students staring intently at a map. Click—darkness—Whirrrr, Rangers in the prone, their faces smearing camouflage on rifle butts. One panic-stricken student swinging a leg toward the boot of a sleeper, the standing Ranger's mouth open in an awkward configuration as he tries yelling in a whisper tone — motivating while maintaining noise discipline.

Click—darkness—Whirrrrr—next slide: darkness almost all around, only the bare traces of "Ranger eyes" up ahead.

Click—darkness—Whirrr, Click—darkness—Whirrr, Click—darkness—"Hey you," comes a voice from behind. Brightness fills the screen, "Hey, what, I wasn't sleeping. I'm awake. Where is everybody? " another voice responds.

Click—darkness—Whirrrrr: An RI speaks to an early morning formation, the students are all standing attentive and listening.

Click—Whirrrr: A Ranger student in the back firmly grasping his M-16, his knees are bent and his eyes are closed. He is falling. Click-darkness—Whirrr . . . falling . . .

Sleep — an average of four hours a night the guest speaker said. But in the field there's less.

Food — a meal, ready to eat and one half per day and loving every bite; candy bars, cookies, crackers and "I'll sell the Porsche tomorrow for some peanut butter tonight."

It's only 59 days long. Yes, all of 59 days long. And in the end you're left with a compulsion to eat, a greater appreciation for comfort, a little bit more self-knowledge and, of course, the coveted tab.

Worth it? Every minute of it, even for us recycles. That little bit of knowledge is no small thing.

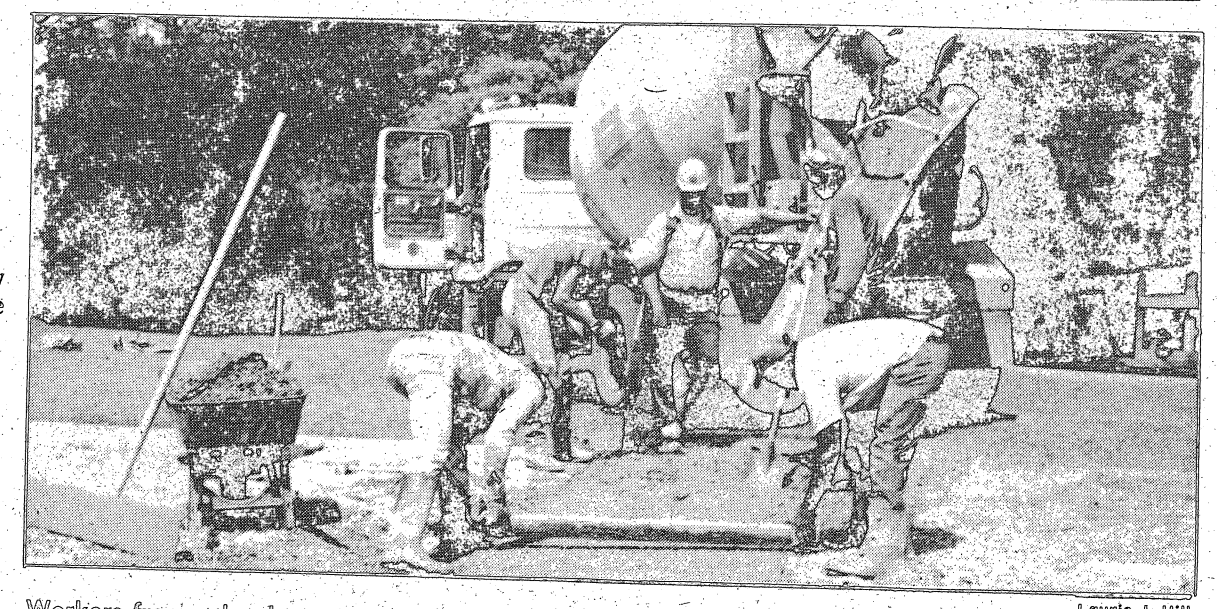
Leader's Reaction Course gets upgrading, facelift

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Leadership Reaction Course is undergoing some needed major construction this month.

The course, which was built in the late 1960s, hasn't had any major work done since the early 70s.



All of the course's 17 obstacles are in the process of being painted and the wood replaced where needed.

Also included in the improvements are new sidewalks, construction of a catwalk and painting of the bleacher site. New piping and rubber coating of the pool are also included.

"The project began on March 30 and is scheduled to be completed by June 1," SFC Vincent Jefferson, a leadership instructor said.

"If the weather holds up we may be done sooner," Ronald Baxley, vice president of the contracting company said.

The course was designed to establish leadership reaction of students of various courses here.

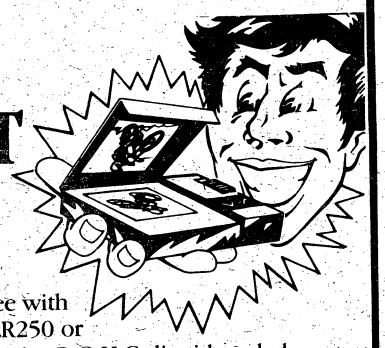
School of Americas celebrates first TRADOC year

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas celebrated its first year as a U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command school April 26 at Stewart Field.

Those attending the event first enjoyed a picnic of barbecued foods and refreshments. Later, games and other recreational activites became the focus.



Speaking to a crowd of about 1,000 USARSA staff, faculty, students and families in Spanish and English during the opening ceremony, USARSA Commandant Col. Miguel A. Garcia highlighted the year's achievements. "This year we'll train 1,225 more students from Latin America. We generated five new courses as a result of the 1983 Conference of American Armies and taught them last year.

"This year we created a Commando course and have undertaken a number of new initiatives, such as the Latin American Symposium held in April," Garcia added.

Noting that otherwise USARSA wouldn't be the highly-respected-by-Latin-American-military institution it currently is, Garcia said, "You are the people who make it happen. You write and revise lesson plans, create new training aids and build new ranges. You coordinate support and supplies to take care of our troops.

"You are USARSA. You've done a good job and I thank you," Garcia said. "Having become a TRADOC school April 16 by general order number 23 was a landmark day in our history when we assumed our rightful place among the best professionals in the world," Garcia said.

Reserve drill sergeant perfects leadership

by David Jones
4th Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 108th Division

While he was at annual training here recently, SFC Thomas Suberling of the 108th Division used the time to perfect his leadership skills. He was looking ahead to the U.S. Armed Forces Command Drill Sergeant of the Year compeition at Fort Monroe, Va., the Army's top honor for a drill sergeant.

Suberling is assigned to Company D, 4th Battalion, 3rd Brigade, which is displaced Company A, 2nd Battalion, 2nd ITB.

Named 108th Drill Sergeant of the Year in February, Suberling has been awarded many honors, including U.S. Armed Forces Individual Soldier for 1985 and Outstanding Reserve Drill Sergeant of the Cycle during annual training at Fort Benning in 1985.

The mobilization mission of the 3rd Brigde is to merge with Fort Benning and conduct infantry one station unit training, thereby freeing the active components for assignment elsewhere.

Annual Training enables the 108th Division to practice this mission as well as learn new doctrine and techniques from the active component cadre. Additionally, the performance of the Reserve units is evaluated by the active component, indicating the level of preparedness of the unit to assume its mission.

The 4th Bn. has earned a reputation of high regard with training units here where annual training has been performed numerous times since the formation of the battalion in 1978.

Additional training sites for the 4th Bn. include Fort Jackson, S. C. and Fort Bragg, N. C., but for soldiers like Suberling, these cannot hold the excitement and attraction of serving at the Home of the Infantry.

Suberling's awards and decorations include the Combat Infantryman Badge, the Purple Heart, the Bronze Star with V device and the Vietnam Cross of Gallantry. He is airborne and pathfinder qualified.

Troops build playground for handicapped kids

43rd Engineer Battalion

Soldiers from Delta Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, were recently recognized during the opening ceremony of the Easter Seals Daycare Center on Cody Road.

This project was the highlight for Delta Company's construction effort during March and April as this facility was joint military/civilian civic action to establish a handicapped daycare/playground facility in the Columbus area. Two platoons worked to meet a short suspense.

Construction began March 4 with the Horizontal Construction Platoon building a flat playground on the side of a hill. This required ingenuity to maneuver the large engineer equipment on the small playground. Vast amounts of earth was needed to level the area. Additionally it had to be compacted to stabilize the soil.

Next, the Vertical Construction Platoon began working on the heart of the project: the playground equipment. Several local retailers, with aid from state funds, donated a prefabricated wooden gymnasium system and second platoon was tasked to plan, locate and assemble these structures. A network of wooden sidewalks and bridges together with concrete sidewalks and slabs were designed to interconnect all of the structures for easy access.

Delta Company also constructed a parking lot on a adjacent lot. Soldiers engaged in the construction project gained invaluable experience. Carpenters, masons and heavy equipment operators enjoyed the 24-day task. While the project was very rewarding for the soldiers, the real beneficiaries are the special children, from the tri-city area, who will use this facility.

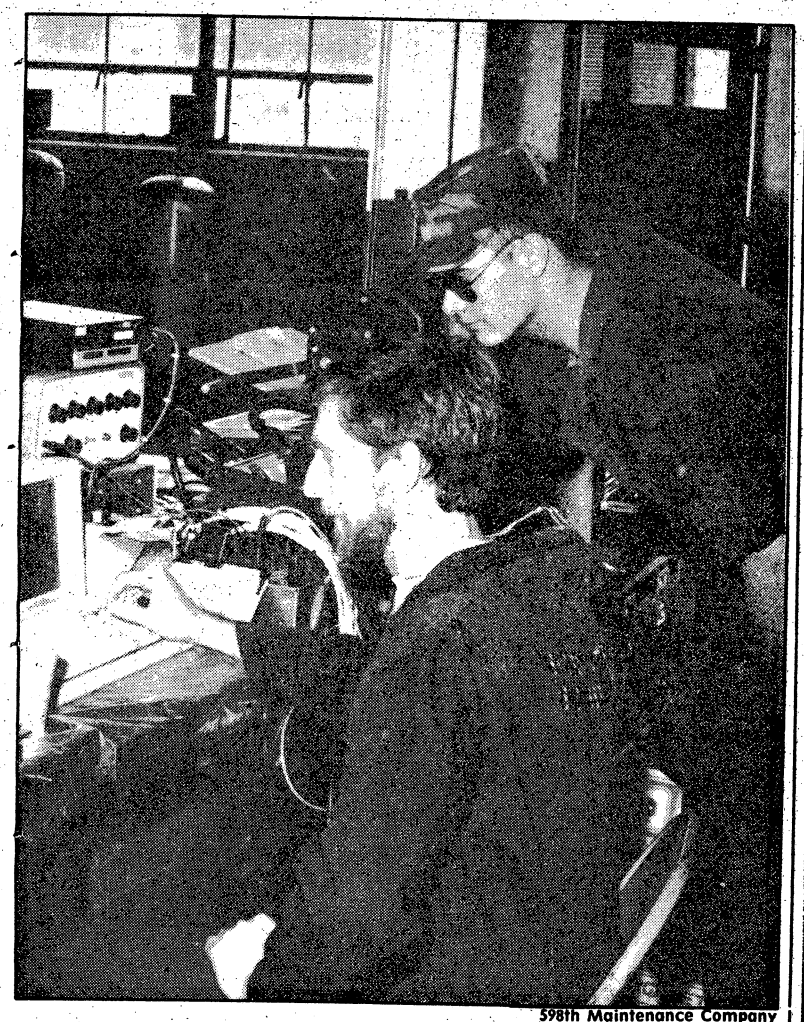
Engineer unit gets crackin,' installs mirrors in post gyms



by Terry N. Thompson
586th Engineer Company

The 386th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) consists of four platoons: a headquarters element, two bridge platoons, and an equipment and maintenance platoon.

The equipment and maintenance platoon is responsible for maintenance and support of the two bridge platoons and equipment. Encompassed within the platoon are three elements: mechanics, engineer equipment operators and the 31st Engineer Detachment.

Recently the engineer equipment section has provided support to the 43rd Engineers and the Infantry Officer Basic Course.

Members of the equipment and maintenance platoon are currently installing mirrors in the weight rooms of four gymnasiums on post. Mirrors have been installred in Audie Murphy, Bryant Wells, Harmony Church Fitness Center and are scheduled to be installed in the Kelly Hill Fitness Center soon. These mirrors will help instill an olympic-spa atmosphere for the soldiers here.

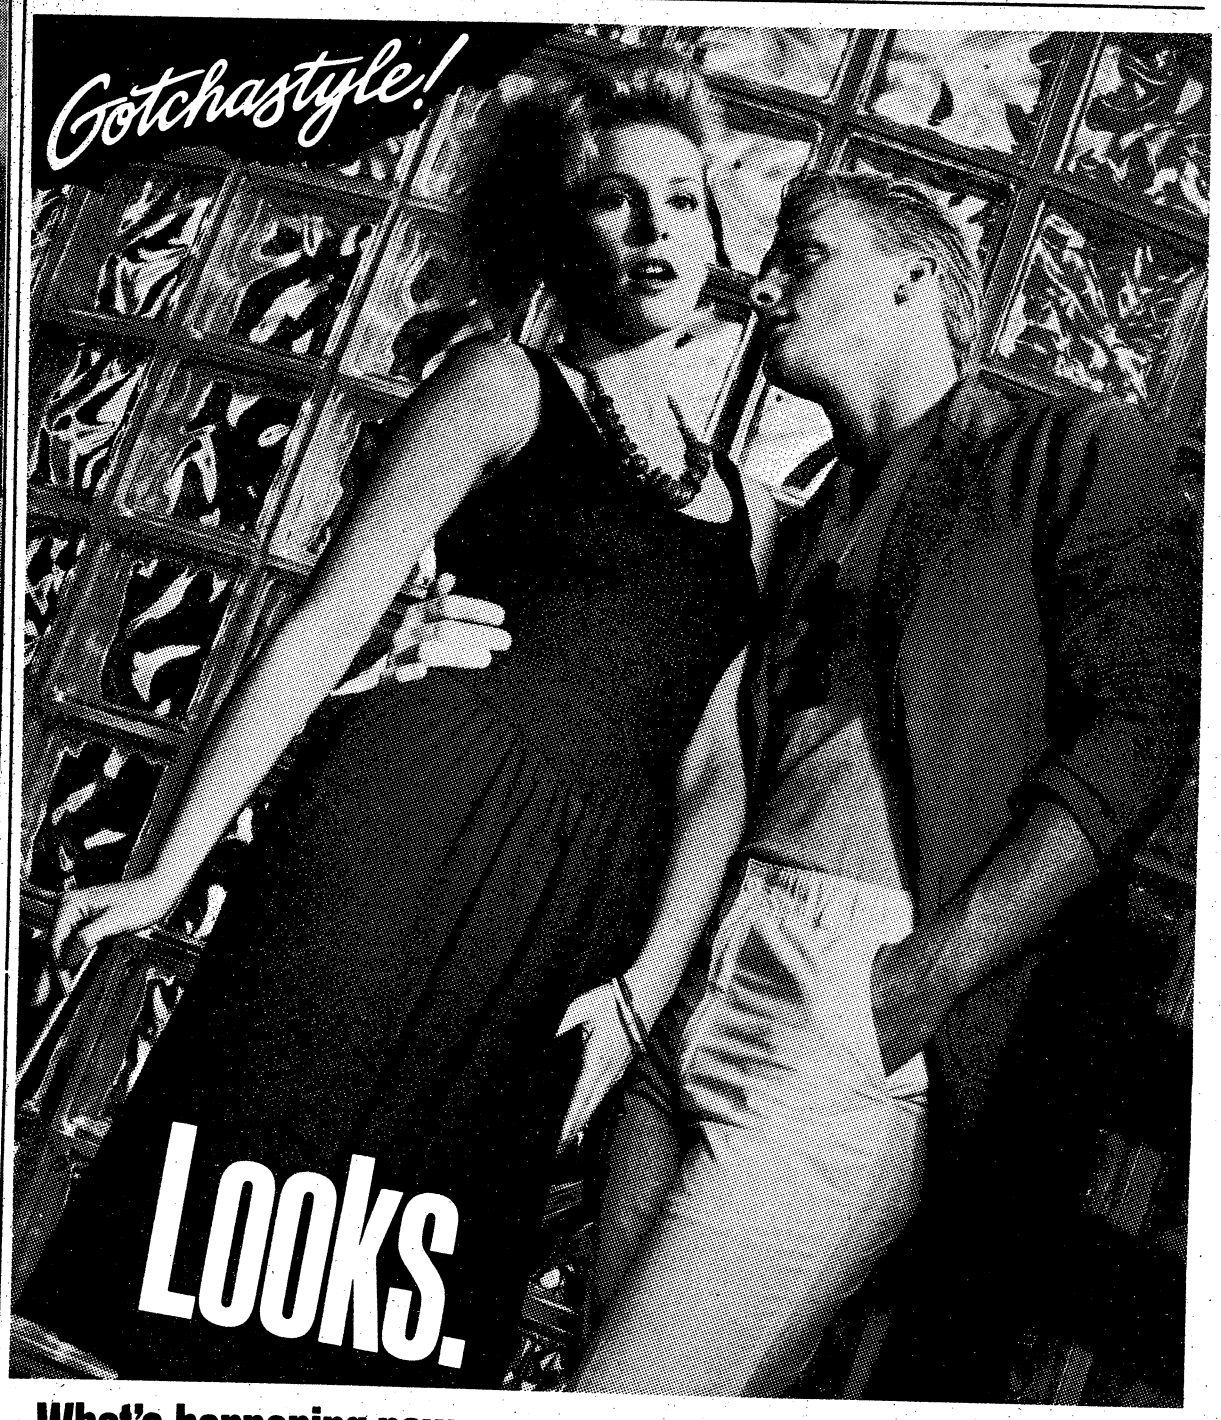
Guest evaluation team tests 598th Eng.'s five-ton trucks

by Janet Wood
598th Maintenance Company

The 598th Maintenance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion was recently selected by the U.S. Army Tank Automotive Command to be the host unit for the Simplified Test Equipment for Internal Combustion Engines-Reprogramable testing and evaluation team. The team is based in Burlington, Mass. and is part of the RCA, aerospace and Defense Automated Systems Division.

While at Fort Benning, the team tested 10 M939 series 5-ton vehicles from the 598th Maintenance Company. The initial sample test was for programming the STE/ICE-R equipment. The information was recorded on the computerized data acquisition system.



The three major tests conducted were: The compression unbalance test; the first peak series test; and the power test.

The compression unbalance test is used to measure the difference in compression between the cylinder with the highest compression and the cylinder with the lowest compression. Through this test the team was able to calculate and incorporate the limits for pass/fail of the cylinder pressures.

The first peak series tests are used to trouble-shoot the starting system determining the pass/fail limits of the battery and starter system.

The third test, the power test, provides an indication of the power producing capability of the engine for establishing the pass/fail limits for the M939 series vehicles STE/ICE-R test equipment.

The team consolidates this vital information into the STE/ICE-R test program for all the M939 series vehicles Armywide.

29th Regiment shows firepower at conference

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment PAO

The 29th Infantry Regiment conducted a weapons capability exercise last week for infantry leaders from around the globe.

Representatives from the armies of the United States, United Kingdom, Canada, Australia and New Zealand met at Fort Benning for the Quadripartite Working Group for Infantry Conference.

The conference spanned five days and included discussions of anti-armor/small arms strategies, other infantry weapons systems and equipment, training devices, a comprehensive briefing on the U.S. Army's new light infantry division, and a presentation on "Operation Urgent Fury" (Grenada), according to Keith Bissell, project officer, U.S. Army Infantry School.

The soldiers from the 29th Infantry Regiment displayed the firepower of the M-2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, 9mm pistol, M-16A2 rifle, SAW (Squad Automatic Weapon), 60mm mortar and the AT-4, M-136 Rocket Launcher.

Bissell said the group was impressed with the weapons exercise, and added, "They (can now) better appreciate what the Bradley can do.

"They were extremely pleased that they had the opportunity to see the exercise."

At the farewell ceremony for the group Friday, Rangers from the 75th Infantry (Ranger) Regiment demonstrated high altitude/low opening parachuting capabilities and the Ranger Department performed a hand-to-hand combat exercise for the group.

The QWG/INF conference is conducted every 18 months and the location rotates from country to country, Bissell said.

Fort Benning serves as the host installation every six years. The last conference to take place here was in 1980.

Among those attending the conference were: Standing Chairman Col. Ross B. Bishop, Australia; Lt. Col. Robert A. Ormston, chief, Australian Delegation; Col. Christopher Wolverson, chief, British Delegation; Col. Gabriel Zuliani, chief, Canadian Delegation, and Lt. Col. Cedric E. E. Sloan, United Kingdom, chief, Washington Standardized Officers.

Lt. Col. Eru I. Manuera was present as an observer from New Zealand.

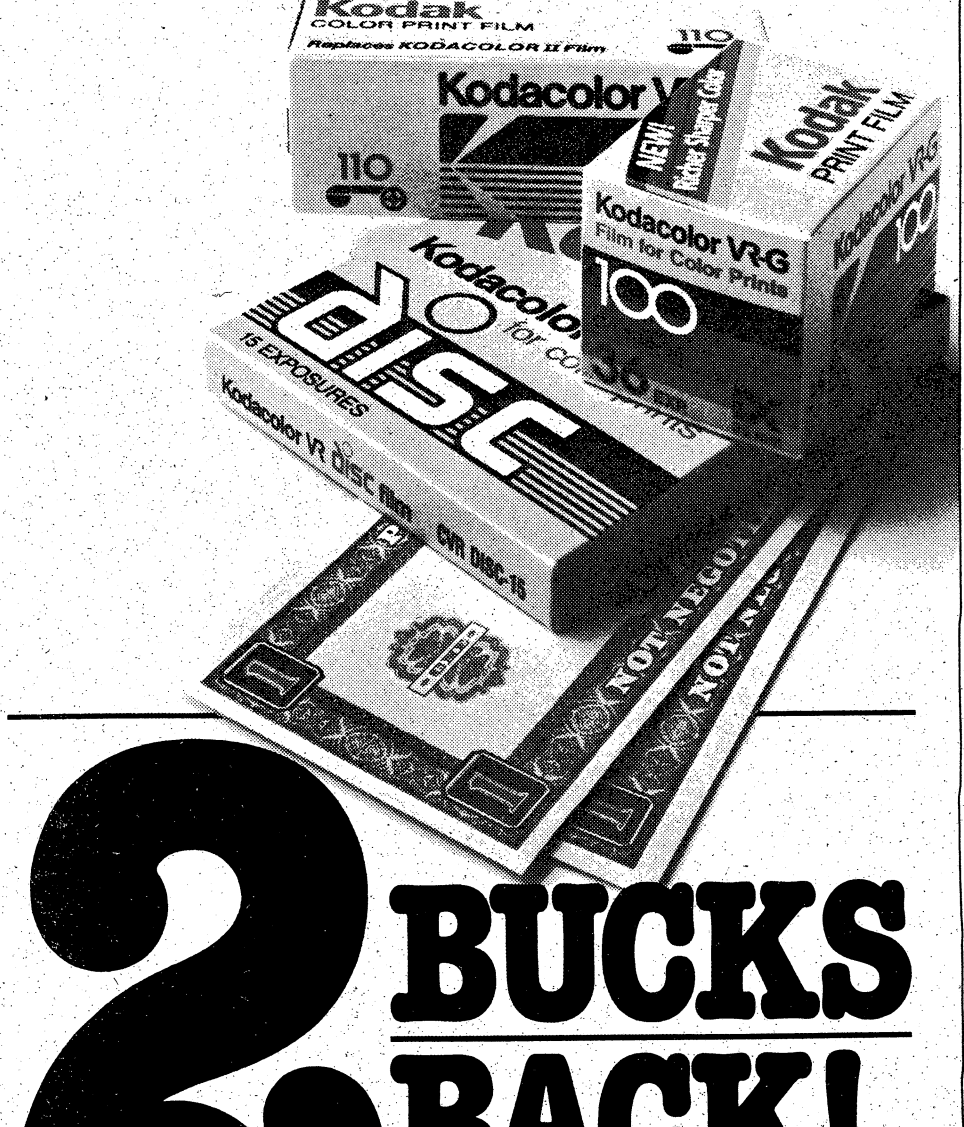
The U.S. Delegation included Col. Thomas K. Seybold, director of Combat Development; Maj. Wayne Sabo, director of Combined Arms and Tactical Department, and Edward Sayette, Department of the Army Civilian, U.S. Army Materiel Command.

Balancing career, marriage weighty problem in Army

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

Several married couples from 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Brigade, gathered at the Kelley Hill Chapel last week to share ideas and experiences in balancing their marriages with their careers.

Chaplain (Capt.) Ray Harper from the 3-7th organized the "marriage enrichment experience" and invited guests from the Counseling and Enrichment Center in Columbus to speak to the group.



The program dealt with strengths and weaknesses common to all relationships but emphasized special problems unique in military marriages.

Lt. Col. Rick Rhoades, battalion commander, also spoke to the couples and answered questions to help wives better understand their husbands' military adjustment.

Rhoades addressed the concerns of wives when husbands are away on field exercises or just working late each night in the motor pool. He also explained what the battalion has done to get the families involved in the soldiers' daily routines.

"We have family days in the motor pool or at field training sites so wives and kids can see what we do," Rhoades said. "We also have organization day celebrations that bring everyone together."

Harper concluded by saying, "We want to help couples be prepared for military separations and help them put things back together when the husband returns. We tried to demonstrate what a good healthy relationship looks like and how to build one."

197th mortarmen train hard; skills don't go down tubes

by Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

One of the challenges facing the leadership of any combat unit is keeping the force trained during high turnovers of soldiers.

SFC Dave Werner, a heavy mortar platoon leader from the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, recently conducted a live fire exercise with his platoon at Fort Benning's Hartell Observation Point.

"We almost have a brand new platoon compared to what we had at the last live fire," said Werner, whose 4.2 inch mortar platoon fires live rounds at least quarterly.

"They're not all brand new soldiers," Werner said. "Many of them reported to us from other Army units. We still have to show them how things work in our battalion."

The platoon spent a day firing high-explosive 4.2 inch rounds from ground-mounted mortar positions. The platoon usually keeps the mortars mounted on tracked vehicles during live fires. Werner explained that mortarmen must know both modes of firing.

"We try to ensure that the NCOs are strong trainers," Werner said. "This brings everybody up to the same standard."

'Days of Remembrance' honor holocaust victims

Army News Service

The 1986 Holocaust "Days of Remembrance" will be observed May 4 to 11, with a national commemoration ceremony scheduled for May 6 at noon in the capitol rotunda. The U.S. Army Band, "Pershing's Own," will provide the music.

As part of this year's observance, The U.S. Holocaust Memorial council is honoring U.S. Army units that liberated various concentration camps in the closing days of World War II, said Marcia Feldman, Director of Communications for the Council. Colors of 10 of the units involved in the liberations will be on display in the rotunda.

The Council will also present the Eisenhower Liberation Medal to representatives of some of the units who took part in the liberation effort, said Feldman.

"Days of Remembrance" are being observed throughout the Defense Department. In his memorandum to the military services, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said, "We can draw many universal lessons from the Holocaust. Let us use these "Days of Remembrance " to reaffirm our belief in the worth and dignity of each individual, and our solidarity in the face of those who hold human life less dear."

Observances remembering the holocaust are scheduled in all 50 states, some sponsored by the individual states and others by private organizations,

Civil Air Patrol trains at Benning

Civil Air Patrol

Fort Benning was a busy place on two consecutive weekends, as 13 Cadets and five seniors from the 09098 Composite Squadron, Columbus, Georgia and the Fort Benning Cadet Squadron, Civil Air Patrol, completed a 32 hour Radiological Monitoring Course conducted by the U.S. Army Infantry Center, Office of Director of Plans, Training and Mobilization, Nuclear, Biological and Chemical Branch,.

The NBC Branch instructor staff, consisting of Capt. Joseph Brumstarck, SFC Stewart Olson and Sgt. Cynthia McKinley, developed and presented the 32 hour course to train Civil Air Patrol members in the basic techniques required to conduct a radiological survey mission and to protect CAP air and ground crews operating in a nuclear environment.

To conduct air survey training the USAIC provided a UH-1 helicopter to fly practice survey missions and to conduct the air survey proficiency test. Georgia Wing, Civil Air Patrol, provided a Cessna 172 from Rome to provide training in techniques involving fixed wing aircraft.

The first 16 hours of the course consisted of total classroom instruction that included five hours on the introduction to effects, medical and biological aspects of nuclear weapons and three hours on radiological instruments, such as dosimeters, radiacmeters and the PDR-27 survey meter used to measure low-range gamma radiation and to discriminate between beta and gamma radiations. Eight hours of the first weekend were devoted to the procedures and techniques of radiological monitoring, surveying and reporting contamination information. CAP members learned how to measure radiation abosrbed dose and centigray and microgray per hour; prepare Air-Ground correlation factor data to convert reported readings taken inside an aircraft or ground vehicle to ground dose rate reading; and to record monitoring data on a report form and to construct a contamination route or area map overlay. The last hour of the first weekend was devoted to a 35 question examination cov-

About 125 parents of Loyd School students watched in delight as 4th and 5th graders presented "Sakura"—a Japanese cherry blossom festival play April 22 at Loyd's auditorium.

The play involved 38 students who dressed up in Japanese folkloric costumes and make up. The production, which ran about 30 minutes, included a realistically-decorated stage complete with pagoda architecture, lights and oriental gardens.

The children sang and danced throughout the play sometimes interpreting Japanese phrases into English for the audience.

"This type of play is an annual event at all elementary schools on Fort Benning," said Cy Dietrich, music teacher and play coordinator. "Our next presentation is scheduled for May 20 at Dexter School," he said.

The following day, about 370 students at Loyd School watched their fellow students present "Sakura".

Students take a look at a photo book of Russia to spark their imaginations.

School kids 'visit' Moscow

by Betty Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Museums, music, tea cakes, black bread and passports were all part of an imaginary visit that Wilson School third-grade students recently experienced as they studied Moscow.

The third graders had previously studied London; so they again brought out their passports for their trip to Moscow. The four third-grade teachers — Myra Cook, Julie Miller, Sharon Martz, and Dannie Andrews — as well as reading specialist, Rachel McClellon, set up a museum with McClellon serving as tour guide. The museum contained toys, books, lacquer boxes, tea cozies, a ballelaika, posters and memorabilia which four of the teachers had actually purchased in Moscow.

Students studied music by Rimsky-Korsakov ("Flight of the Bumblebee"), Tchaikovsky ("Swan Lake," "Nutcracker," "1812 Overture"), and Prokofiev ("Peter and the Wolf").

Martz and Andrews presented a slide show that featured slides that they had taken in Moscow and Leningrad.

Czar Ivan and Catherine the Great came to life as students studied the history of Russia. Later, in what teachers called a "social studies adventure," students dressed as Muscovites and Tartars and reenacted a battle along the Moscow River, complete with flags, swords, and shields.

The Wilson third graders and their teachers have shown that study and imagination can take them far from their classrooms. Their postcards have indicated that this visit had been a very meaningful one to them.

In contest, young writing wizzespen reasons on why they like to read

by Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Writing about reading made three Fort Benning children winners recently.

The Muscogee News Company sponsored an essay contest in conjunction with National Literacy Week last month. The contest was designed to encourage youngsters to read.

Heidi Wanzer, the 8-year-old daughter of Margie and SFC Larry Wanzer, won first place. The Wilson School third-grader received a $150 savings bond for her essay.

Why Reading Is Important
by Heidi Wanzer

Reading is important because you don't know if it's drugs or not in the bottle if you can't read.

Because you don't know if the sign says do not come in.

You won't know what your mom told you to buy.

You can't do math.
You can't read signs.
People won't hire you.
You won't get an education.
You can't cash a check.

You won't know what your love letters say.

You won't know how to drive.

You couldn't learn very much either.

Nine-year-old Philip Wong Won, son of Ingrid and SFC Philip Wong Won, won second place and a $100 savings bond. The Wilson School fourth-grader won for this essay:

Why Reading Is Important
by Philip Wong Won

Reading is important because through it we gain knowledge of the world, people who live in it and events.

By reading, we can learn and develop ideas which will make our lives more comfortable. Through books we can better understand ourselves and others.

Reading builds our minds and helps us to develop study habits which will be important to us as we grow older and enter high school and college studies.

By reading we can better understand the ideas of great people, the reason for their efforts and what they planned to do.

Reading, unlike television, makes us think and form our own ideas about the world we live in. Our school work improves and so will our contribution to our community.

Felicia DeAnn Miller, 11, won a $50 savings bond and third place honors for this essay.

Why Reading Is Important
by Felicia DeAnn Miller

Reading is important because it helps you to learn and to have a better imagination.

Without it the world would be lost. You should learn to read because if you don't, you couldn't pay bills or do anything else that contains reading.

For example:

1. Even if a child doesn't like to read, but wants to be an actor or actress, (they) would have to learn their parts and to learn their parts they have to read.

2. If you want to cook a meal, you need to read a recipe to make it come out right.

3. When driving a car, you need to know how to read signs and maps or you might get lost.

So learn to read for reading is important.

Schools to 'round up' kindergarteners

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools will sponsor a Kindergarten Round-up during May for the 1986-87 school year. Each school has scheduled dates and times for the round-up activities.

Children who wil be 5 years old on or before Sept. 1, 1986, are eligible to enter kindergarten in the Fort Benning Schools in fall 1986. Parents are asked to bring their child to the assigned school to complete registration forms and to receive a round-up packet of additional information.

Being careful with their "casualty," four EFMB candidates negotiate a water obstacle during the litter-carry phase of the EFMB test.

Soldiers get EFMB old fashioned way

They work for it with determination

Story and photos by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Four dirty, tired soldiers hefted the heavy litter with the wounded infantryman strapped to it and began again on their odyssey to get him to a rear-area aid station for treatment of wounds he had received in battle. During the transportation of their casualty the four litter bearers would encounter walls to climb, barbed wire to pull their litter through, simulated biological hazards to contend with and a deep body of water to cross.

This ordeal was only a part of the recent test to earn the Expert Field Medical Badge.

The Fort Benning testing for the EFMB started April 18 with a 100-question written test. Those who passed that went on to the Army Physical Readiness Test.

Capt. Randall Treiber, operations officer, 34th Medicsl Battalion (the host unit for the testing) said that 88 soldiers came out for the test. Of those, only 25 passed the written portion.

"The written test was really tough. I prepped for it by studying for about two months prior to coming out here. It was a test of a lot of soldierly skills, not just medical questions," said 1st Lt. Roberta Kearney, of the 690th Medical Company, 34th Medical Battalion.

In addition to the written exam, APRT and litter-carry, candidates also had to go through test stations such as disassembly and assembly of the M-16 rifle, land navigation, emergency medical treatment, and loading and unloading ambulances, including helicopters.

"The big test for all those candidates who pass everything else will come (today,) when the doctors, nurses, medical technicians and corpsmen have to road-march 12 miles," said Treiber.

"They have to do this with helmet, loaded rucksack, weapon and protective mask in three hours or less," he added.

At press time, 2nd Lt. John Hagen, 690th Medical Company, said the most difficult task for him had been the litter obstacle.

"You have to stay physically tough to keep carrying that patient plus you have to be mentally on your toes to react to all of the different situations they throw at you. The litter carry has definitely been the toughest test yet," Hagen said.

The end was all Kearney could thing about during the litter carry as she and her three companions had to drag the litter with the patient strapped to it under a barbed wire obstacle no more than eight inches off of the ground, in protective masks. "Where's the end. I only wanted to get to the end," she gasped."

The end for all of the candidates will be today, after the 12-mile road march.

Those who were able to tough it out will walk away from the graduation and awards ceremony witha new *sense of accom*plishment. They will know they were tough enough and knowledgeable enough to earn the coveted Expert Field Medical Badge.

do Sy, of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3-7th Infantry, is on disassembly of the M-16 rifle.

Chaplain deals with spiritual side of values

Editor's note: This article consists of excerpts from an interview with Chaplain (Maj. Gen.) Patrick Hessian, Army Chief of Chaplains, who recently visited Fort Lewis, Wa.

The purpose of Hessian's installation visits is, in his words, "to take the spiritual temperature of the military community—check with commanders and chaplains to get their thoughts and perspectives on the issues, and with the troops to see if their needs are being met, for that's the bottom line right there."

The interview was conducted by Maj. Ken Bates, Division Public Affairs Officer, 9th Infantry Division, Fort Lewis, Wash.

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — BATES: This is the year of Values in the Army. What were (Army Chief of Staff) Gen. Wickham's instructions to you, as Army Chief of Chaplains, in reference to the values theme?

HESSIAN: The Chief of Staff told all members of the Army Staff, "When you go out into the field, deal with values from your particular perspective." Mine happens to be the spiritual dimension of values.

Consequently, in my travels I attempt to stress the importance of looking at the spiritual belief structure that underlies any value we talk about.

It's important to understand that we don't start with values; we start with beliefs, and we build values on top of that.

It begins with primary beliefs, those you learned at your mother's knee. Then, you acquire beliefs just in the process of living. It's on this belief structure that your values rest.

Once values are entrenched in your being, your attitudes and motivations in life grow from them, and from those attitudes and motivations come behaviors and behavioral changes.

So, there's a clear path here of changes that start with belief structures, which are very frequently involved with spiritual things. If you're going to deal with values, it's important to understand the "why" of them—what do you believe that's causing you to want to do this or that?

BATES: The new program called Moral Leadership Training—will that dovetail into values?

HESSIAN: Right. A while ago at the Pentagon, there was a meeting on the strategy for values in the entire system this year. The commanders are responsible for coming up with initiatives, as are the chaplains. Moral Leadership Training is basically our initiative.

We'll spend a lot of time trying to help people see the spiritual dimensions of the values they have or are trying to acquire, and we've already pinned up a whole series of topics and instructions on this.

We're hoping that in every unit chaplains and commanders will work out a schedule, so there will be time set aside to deal with these topics with the troops.

BATES: I've seen some of the proposed topics. Although the program's called Moral Leadership Training, it seems to be not just about morality but also about how to deal with life.

HESSIAN: We don't get into heavy, "thou shalt not" moralizing, because we know it's counterproductive. It's not a good teaching method.

We try to say to people, "Let's analyze the behaviors we see here. How do you see this—good or bad? What would be better?" We try to guide people into alternatives that are very positive.

One of the issues addressed in the first package is suicide. There's a problem in the Army about this. People don't like to talk about suicide and its prevention. About how, for example, Specialist Jones can help his buddy who's very depressed, and how Jones can catch signs that maybe his friend is leaning toward suicide.

We want to look at what's happening right now in the Army, at the issues that need most attention, so we can write up a series on those and get them out to the field. We want to produce whatever is relevant to our people today.

BATES: As a commander, why would I need Moral Leadership Training in my unit?

HESSIAN: If you have people with good behaviors now, you want to do something to shore that up and maintain it. For people who don't have good behaviors, you want to notivate them to change.

Moral leadership courses cause people to stop and think, "Why do I behave the way I do? Is there a better way for me to behave? Is there something I can do to change my behaviors?"

To change, you've got to do something about your values. And, you have to believe it's a good thing to do.

BATES: What input will the commander have as to what's taught in the unit? Will he be able to give his perspective on where his unit is at to the individual who's teaching?

HESSIAN: Absolutely. As a matter of fact, it's part of our strategy that the local chaplain take the POI we'll give him to the local commander and say, "I'm here as a staff officer to help you with your responsibilities to teach values. Here are some topics I'm prepared to teach, but if you have others, I'll work something out for those as well."

The program has to be tailor-made for each individual unit and its needs. We're not imposing anything on anybody from Department of the Army.

BATES: Do you see this program going down to the lowest levels of command, or is it only for a certain group?

HESSIAN: Ideally, if you were, say, a battalion commander, and you decided that in your command you wanted Moral Leadership Training—then you, the battalion commander, would be the first person in the room.

You'd have your staff there, your company commanders, first sergeants, the entire organization, so that everyone together could say, "Howe can we, as a cohesive unit, work with one another better and improve the climate of our command?"

That would be my ideal

In the old days in the Army, there was a thing called character guidance. The requirement was a lecture once a month by the chaplain to all the troops E-6 and below.

What that essentially said was, the E-7 and above, the colonel, the general or whoever, were all so great and so bright and so perfect that they didn't need moral guidance.

Well, of course that's simply not true. Everybody needs a check and balance on their behaviors and their values now and then.

BATES: How do you think this training program will be received by the soldier?

HESSIAN: From the old days, this type of training was either a roaring success or an absolute wipeout, depending on the attitudinal bahavior of the instructor, the chaplain.

If you have something to say to soldiers that will better their lives, they sense it. The troops are never wrong when it comes to who is trying to help them and who's not. If they get the feeling that you really care and want to do something good for them, you've made a contact that will come back to you with dividends.

You may be walking down the company street a week after one of these training sessions, and some young soldier may stop you to say he or she has a problem and wants to talk to you some time. The soldier might never have said that, had you not been together earlier in an environment where the soldier saw you as a "friendly force."

I see all kinds of things coming out of this, where we'll help people as a result of doing these classes. Everybody needs a little look at how they're doing things from time to time, where they don't have to be defensive, where nobody is zeroing in on them, where they have a chance to absorb and think things out without any threat.

That's the environment I'd like to see, and if it's well done by the command and the chaplains, and if it's really "sold" properly, it will have a great deal of good effect.

BATES: What's the bottom line on the chaplains' role in Moral Leadership Training?

HESSIAN: The chaplain is perceived by the entire organization as the individual whose job it is to speak up on things that have a moral dimension. That's part of his role.

The chaplain is also a direct link to the commander, and the commander's advisor. When he sees a problem that he believes has some moral dimension to it, it's his responsibility as a staff officer to say to that commander, "We've got a problem down in Company B and you need to take a better look at what's going on."

From another viewpoint, the chaplain is also that unique person on a staff who's not perceived to be in the chain of command. Because of this, he can represent the commander to the troops in a special sort of way. Maybe, sometimes a more credible way.

So I guess I've described three roles. The chaplain is the moral agent, or perceived to be, for the unit. He's a staff officer who can advise the commander. And, he's that person who has a unique communication authority to people at every level of the system. Three distinct roles, very unique, all of them.

ering all classroom instruction.

The second 16 hours consisted of field practical exercises. On Saturday CAP members organized into two-person monitor teams and conducted aerial surveys using route and course leg techniques in an Army UH-1 and CAP Cessna 172. Ground survey using the route survey technique was conducted using CAP vans. Sunday of the second weekend was devoted to an aerial and ground survey techniques and procedures practical exercise examination utilizing a UH-1 and CAP vans.

CAP seniors and cadets completing this course received a high quality course equivalent to any course given to regular military personnel attending a similar course. This credit goes to the outstanding instruction given by Brumstarck and his instructor staff. The quality of training and individual evaluation received by CAP members from the Fort Benning/Columbus areas make them at least the best trained CAP radiological monitor teams in the Georgia Wing. Brumstarck and the instructor staff stated they were amazed at the quality and capabilities of the CAP cadets for their ability to grasp such a topic.

Radiological monitoring and aerial damage assessment is a Civil Air patrol mission under wartime conditions during a national emergency. These missions are in support of military and state operational missions as part of State and Regional Disaster Airlift (SARDA) and the military plan "Continental U.S. Airborne Reconnaissance for Damage Assessment" (CARDA). The 14th Air Force and the NORAD Region commander control CAP aerial flights in support of state civil defense plans and military assistance to civil authorities. Plans and trained CAP members must be ready for employment to respond to requests whenever possible.

Maj. Frank Kalakauskis, USAR, CAP reserve advisor, and Maj. Emerson E. Addington, CAP, commander of cadets for the Fort Benning and Columbus Squadrons, coordinated and assisted the Infantry Center staff conducting the course. The Fort Benning Cadet Squadron meets at the CAP Building at 313 McIver Street, near the Youth Activites and Tot Town each Tuesday from 7 to 9 p.m. Cadet membership is open to any young man or woman who is a U.S. citizen or aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residency and who have completed the sixth grade or be at least 13 years old. The maximum age for entering the Cadet program is 18. (Beyond this, a Senior Member Program is available and active military are welcome).

Outdoor Rec has wide choice for summer fun

Outdoor Recreation

Destin Recreation Area:

The U.S. Army Infantry Center Recreation Area is located on a 15½-acre beach site in the city of Destin, Florida approximately 232 miles from Fort Benning. Available at this location are completely equipped cottages of various types and sizes, trailer pads, camping sites, camper service center, snack bar, deep sea fishing boat, inshore fishing boats, jet skis, sailboats, paddle boats, outboard motors, beach area and sports equipment. No pets are allowed.

Construction of a 10-unit motel and new replacment for two duplex cabins are programmed for completion in fiscal year 1987.

Active-duty military personnel, retired military and Department of Defense civilians employed at Fort Benning are eligible to use the facility.

Information concerning cabin reservations, rental fees, camping sites and other equipment available at the recreation area can be obtained by contacting the Physical Activities Branch, Outdoor Recreation - Building 247, 45-4155.

Uchee Creek Recreation Area:

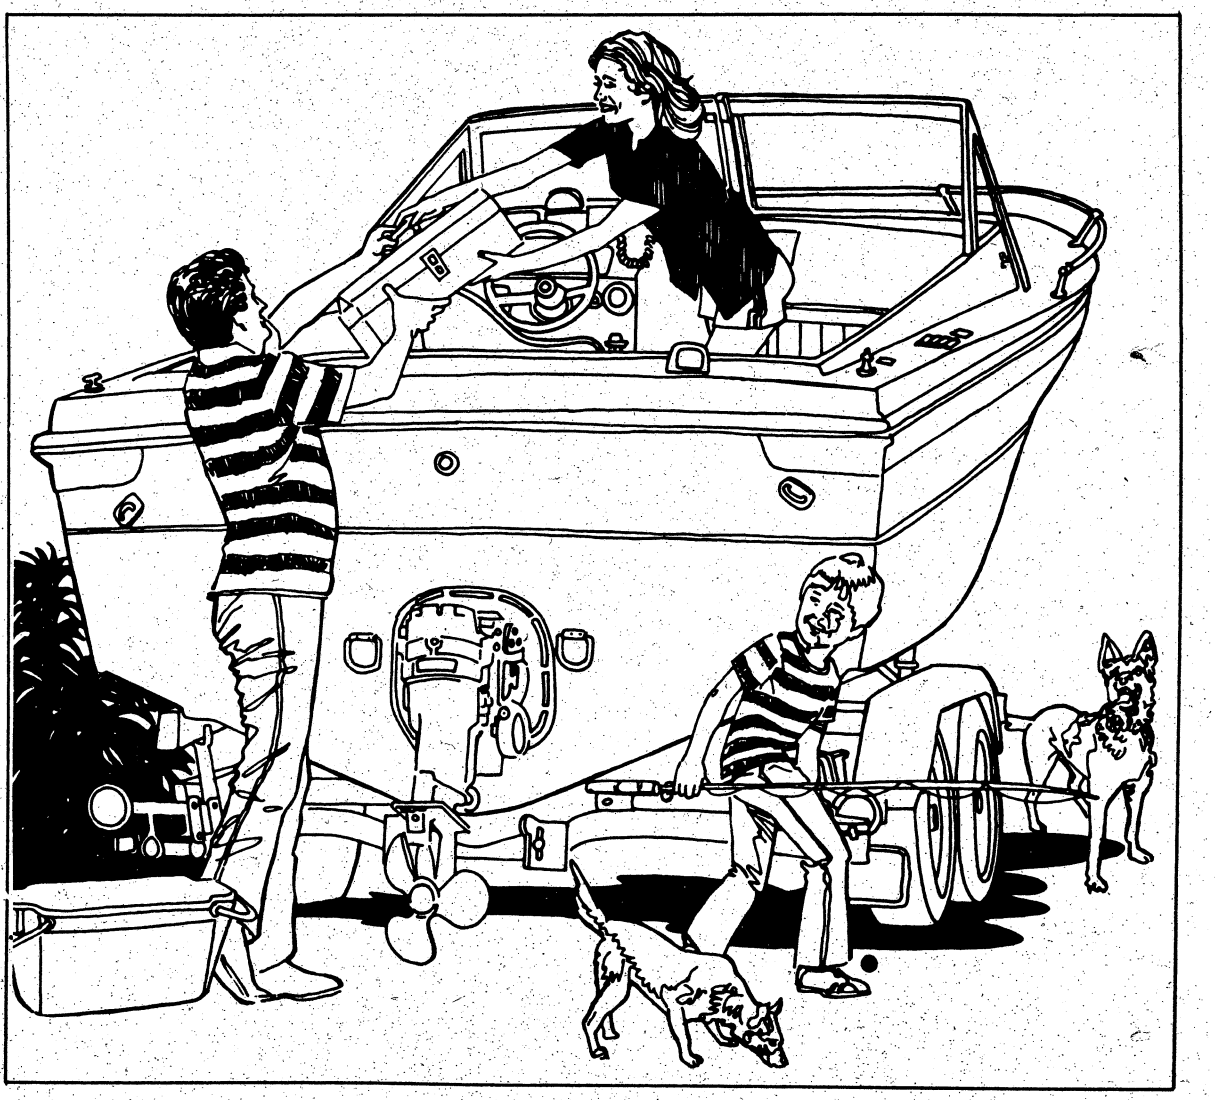
The Uchee Creek Recreation Area is located on the Alabama side of Fort Benning, approximately nine miles from main post. Fishing along the river or down the creek can turn a dull afternoon into an enjoyable day.

A boat ramp and docking facilities are provided. The bait and tackle shop also provides rental boats and motors, canoes and refreshments. Picnic tables and barbecue grills are available for family outings or unit functions.

Camp sites with water and electric hook-ups are available for rent on a daily, weekly or monthly basis. Primitive camping is also available at the recreation area at no charge.

Projected for completion in FY87 is the construction of a new bait shop. The shop will have a game room with video games, latrine and shower facilities. Horseshoes and volleyball areas will also be available in the near future.

Outdoor Recreation:



Sale of Fort Benning Hunting and Fishing Permits and Georgia State Hunting and Fishing Licenses are available at Building 247. Reservations for the Uchee Creek Recreation Lodge and the USAIC Destin Recreation Area are also taken at Building 247.

PX and commissary run by different organizations

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

Many times the questions are asked, what's the difference between the post exchange and the commissary, and why are the PX prices on some items higher than the identical items in the commissary? Here are some of the answers and the reasons!

The commisssary is the military counterpart of the civilian supermarket and primarily sells food. The post exchange is the military counterpart of the civilian department store and sells a wide variety of merchandise including convenience food items in many of their facilities.

Commissaries operate by selling goods at cost with a 5 percent surcharge added. They are supported by tax dollars to meet payroll costs, build facilities and meet most overhead expenses. Commissary prices are normally cheaper than exchange prices on like items since exchanges must pay most overhead costs. Unlike the commissary, the exchange earnings must pay for payroll cost, buildings, utilities and most other overhead expenses.

Exchanges and commissaries share a like mission in that they both provide merchandise and services to authorized customers. When the exchange system was first authorized by Congress they were also tasked with a second mission, that of making enough earnings to support the Army and Air Force morale and recreation programs. The post exchange, in addition to paying its own way, generate additional funds which are returned to its patrons in many ways to make life for the military member and their families more enjoyable.

Exchange earnings are returned to customers in the following manner: reduced prices or expanded services, new or renovated exchange facilities, dividend payments to the Army and Air Force morale and recreation programs. Dividend payments are in excess of $100,000,000 annually and amount to over $400,000 at Fort Benning alone.

Whereas commissaries provide customers with a greater stock assortment of grocery-related items, exchange convenience stores offer the customer a variety of beverages, the convenience of quick shopping, a variety of locations on large military installations, reading and stationery materials and a limited selection of automotive products.

Military personnel and their families are encouraged to shop where their dollars go farthest, however, you should also be aware of the many indirect benefits you receive by shopping in your military exchanges as well as the direct benefit you receive by shopping in the military commissaries.

Drunken driving costs lives, money

Provost Marshal Office

Each year persons who drive under the influence of alcohol or drugs (DUI) kill or injure thousands of people.

We are all affected by the drunken driver in one way or another. Drunken driving is the nation's No. 1 highway safety problem; it is also the most often committed violent crime. The devastating results are: 26,000 Americans killed each year; 1,500,000 injured; and, related economic cost approaching $25 billion dollars (this includes lost production, health and medical cost, and criminal justice and social welfare system cost).

Law enforcement agencies, both military and civilian, are already stepping up their efforts to get the drunken driver off the road and to educate the public on the consequences of drunk driving.

The rest is up to you! Here are a few measures that will sharply reduce the amount of drunken drivers on the road:

1. If you know someone who has been drinking, offer to take them home, let them stay the night or call them a cab.

2. Allow more time in between drinks.

3. Designate a driver in your group who agrees not to drink when going to a party; that individual can ensure that the group gets home safely.

4. If you observe a drunken driver, get a description and license number of the vehicle and notify the appropriate police agency.

The cost can have a big impact on the drunken driver also. The cost can include $30 dollars in towing costs, $350 dollars for bail or fine, and one year suspended post driving privileges in addition to jeopardy of careers. During the last three months, 65% of the soldiers arrested for DUI have been arrested off post. This means a drunken driving charge can result in lost duty time and further non-judicial punishment.

Stopping drunking driving is everybody's business. Help us help you. DON'T DRINK AND DRIVE!

Armed Forces Day gala event this year

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Armed Forces Day will be observed at Fort Benning May 17, in front of Infantry Hall beginning at 7 a.m.

The observance will begin with a 10-kilometer and a two-mile "Fun Run" at York and Stewart fields, followed by an 11 a.m. parade and presentation of the Commanding General's Trophy to the unit whose team of soldiers wins the post-level competition.

The team competition will be May 13 and 14 and consists of an individual skill evaluation of ten of the 17 common tasks.

In conjunction with Armed Forces Day, the local chapter of the Association of the United States Army will sponsor its annual picnic from noon to 3 p.m. on Stewart-Watson Field. A nominal fee will be charged for the lunch and beverages, as well as participation in selected entertainment and recreational activities.

Military demonstrations, exhibits, entertainment, recreational activities and individual and inter-team competitions will continue throughout the day starting at 9 a.m. and ending at 5 p.m.

Rounding out the day's activities will be the Airborne and Ranger-in-Action demonstrations and the crowning of the AUSA queen. The demonstrations will begin at 3 p.m.

The public is invited to attend all scheduled events and to enjoy the annual AUSA picnic.

Post schools conduct energy poster contest

Energy Office

During May the Fort Benning schools will conduct a spring Energy Awareness program in the form of a poster and essay contest.

Kindergarten through third grade will have a poster contest and fourth to eighth grade will have an energy essay contest. The theme for both will be "an Energy Wise Summer".

Students who participate will receive an "Energy Buster" T-shirt. The best poster or essay from first to eighth graders will receive a certificate of appreciation and a new bicycle. The contest began yesterday and the winners will be announced May 28.

The students are openminded about energy, without many of the preconceived ideas that adults have. The program will not only reach students but parents too, as students seek support and guidance in the home.

Housing area crime breakdown

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

MSgt. Roger Willis and SP4 Bret Erickson from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit scored individual victories in regional shooting competition at Fort Benning and Nashville, Tenn. April 26 and 27.

In the Tennessee Trophy Pistol Championships at Nashville, former national champion Roger Willis outscored more than fifty competitors to win the overall title.

Willis finished with a final two day total of 2,644 out of 2,700 points to finish five points ahead of Sgt. Ronald Benge, National Guard at 2,639. USAMU's MSgt. Joe Steed placed third in the event, three points back at 2,636.

In team competition, the U.S. Army "Blue" squad dominated the events by winning all three team matches. Team members included MSGTs Willis, Steed, Thomas Woods and Erich Buljung.

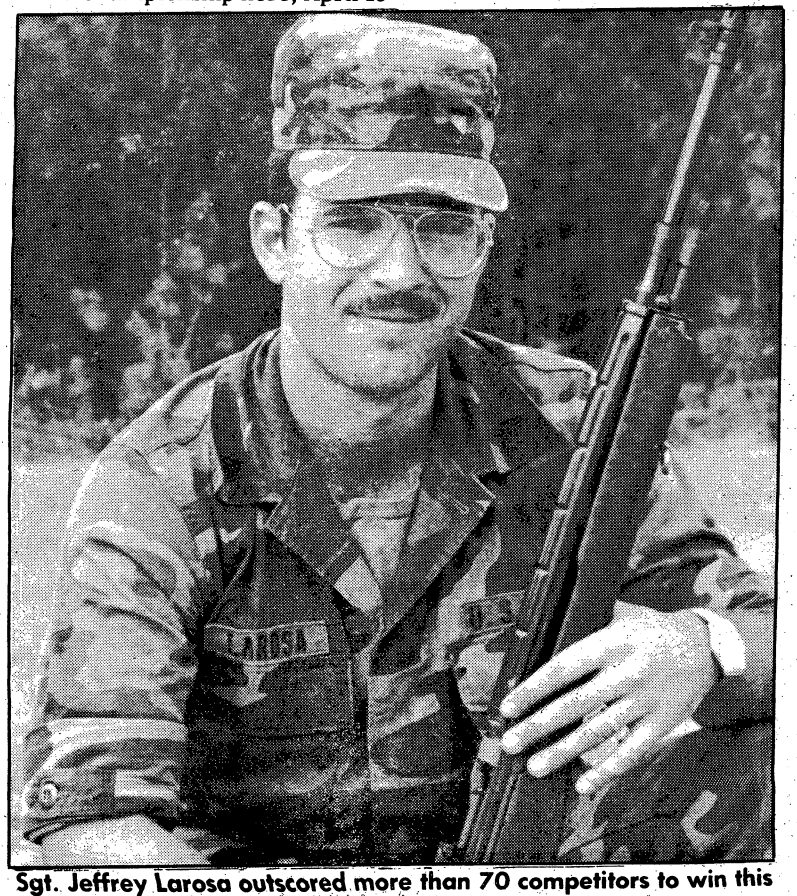
At Fort Benning's Zone III Trap Championships more than 40 top civilian and military competitors were on hand for the matches at USAMU's shotgun range.

In the individual championships, Erickson led the event from start to finish. After taking an early first day lead with 99 out of 100 targets, he fired a closing round of 95 to finish with a two day total of 194 out of 200 targets.

USAMU's SP4 Mark Graves placed second at 191, followed by civilian Paul Shaw from Canada at 189.

The High Woman award in the championship was taken by 1st Lt. Denise Morrison, also of USAMU. Morrison scored individual rounds of 86-87 for a two day total of 173 out of 200 targets.

In team competition, the U.S. Army "Blue" squad outdistanced the Army Reserve "Gold" squad by 25 targets to win the championship with 430 out of 450.



Members of the winning "Blue" team were Erickson, Graves and Sgt. Brian Ballard.

Shootist fires his way to Peach State win

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

USAMU's Sgt. Jeffrey Larosa fired the winning score in the Peach State Regional Highpower Rifle Championship here, April 19 and 20.

Larosa outscored more than 70 of the top competitors from around the Southeast area in the inaugural Peach State event that was sponsored by the Chattahoochee Rifle Club of Columbus.

Sgt. Jeffrey Larosa outscored more than 70 competitors to win this years Peach State Regional Highpower Rifle Championship.

He began the event by firing the top score in the initial 200-yard standing event with 195x200, and also winning the final 600-yard prone event with 198x200. Larosa completed the championship with an aggregate score of 977 out of 1,000 possible points.

Both second and third place in the service rifle aggregate went to USAMU members Sgt. Bruce Miller and SFC Tommy Covington, with scores of 968 and 965, respectively.

In the team championship, SSgt. David Batt coached the winning USAMU "Blue" squad with a total of 1,934 out of 2,000 points. Firing members of the winning Army team included Covington, Larosa, PFC Dann Purvis and Pvt. Timothy Jackson.

The U.S. Army Reserve placed second in the team event at 1,908 followed by the Mississippi Rifle Association at 1,860.

Shooting competition will continue here tomorrow with the Zone II Trap Championships April 25 to 27. More than 40 of the top international trap competitors are expected for the event.

The general public is cordially invited to observe all the action that will begin daily at 8 a.m. until approximately 3 p.m. The Shotgun Range is located off Dixie Road at the Hook Range exit.

Boxing smoker features smoldering firebrands hotly slapping leather

Story and photos
by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fight fans came out to see what the novice had learned and what the open fighters had perfected at Harmony Church Field House during the Battalion Boxing Smoker Friday.

The 10-bout card featured fighters from the light welterweight to the heavyweight divisions.

The card opened with the 139-pound light welterweight bout, matching David McIvor and Rob Chambers.

Both novice fighters were a bit timid in the opening round. But, McIvor began to pressure Chambers into a slug-fest in the final 30 seconds of the round.

Chambers opened the second round with flurries to the head and body. The third round meant more of the same, as Chambers delt out a series of punishing blows to McIvor, winning a split decision in the opening bout.

Fernando Cook and Frank Elmoy, both light welterweights, met in the second bout with Cook claming a third-round TKO over Elmoy.

Cook worked cautiously in the first round, but let the thunder roll in the following rounds.

Cook's sharp uppercuts slowed Elmoy's movement and caused him to drop his left.

Not until the final 30 seconds of round three did the mistake prove fatal, as Cook connected with a straight right that took the legs from Elmoy.

Welterweights, Lorenzo Young and Steven Burch collided in their 146-pound division bout.

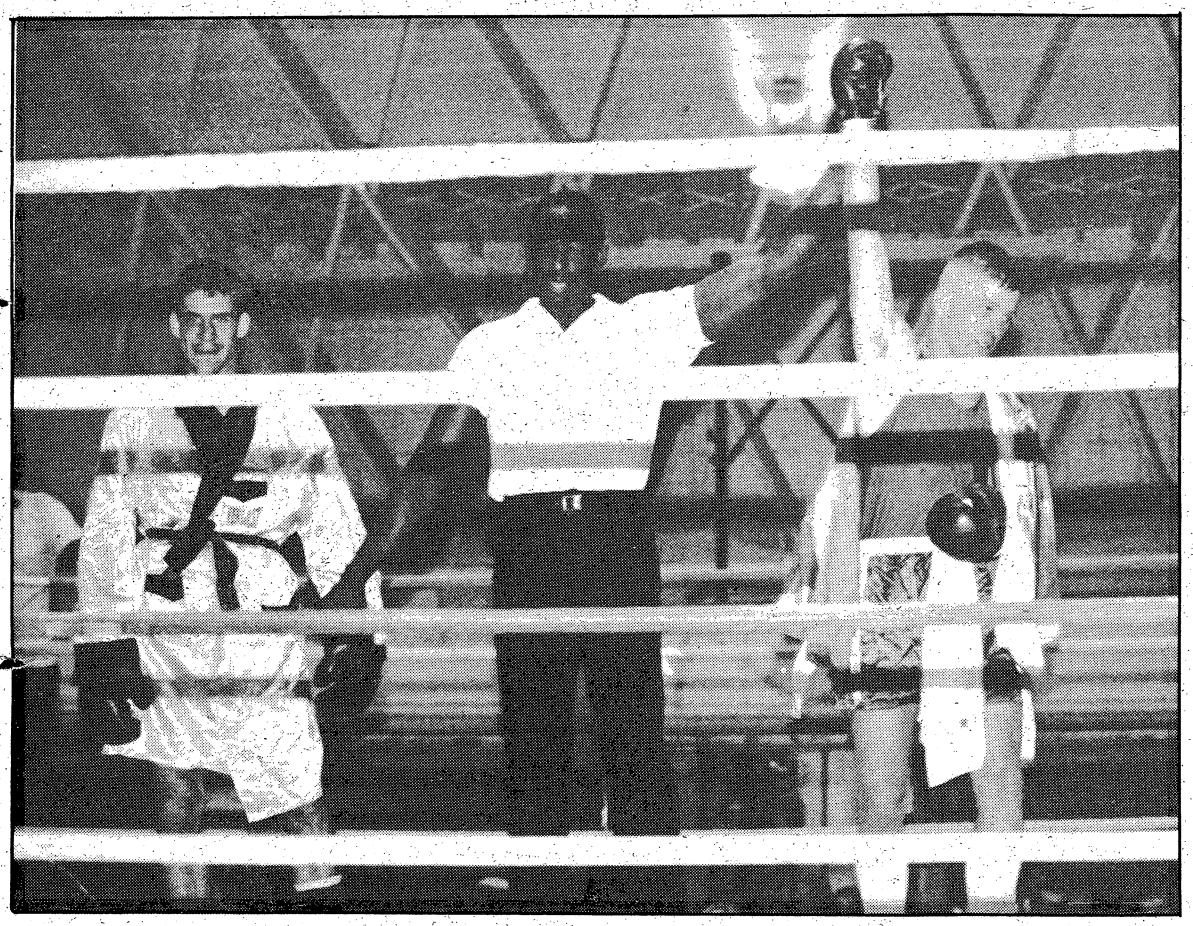
At opening bell, Young charged Burch with heavy combinations to the head, that continually backed Burch into the ropes.

Burch retaliated with rights of his own, but Young continued to march through.

In the middle of round one, Burch had a brief reprieve, as he caught Young with a hay-maker right that caused him to step back.

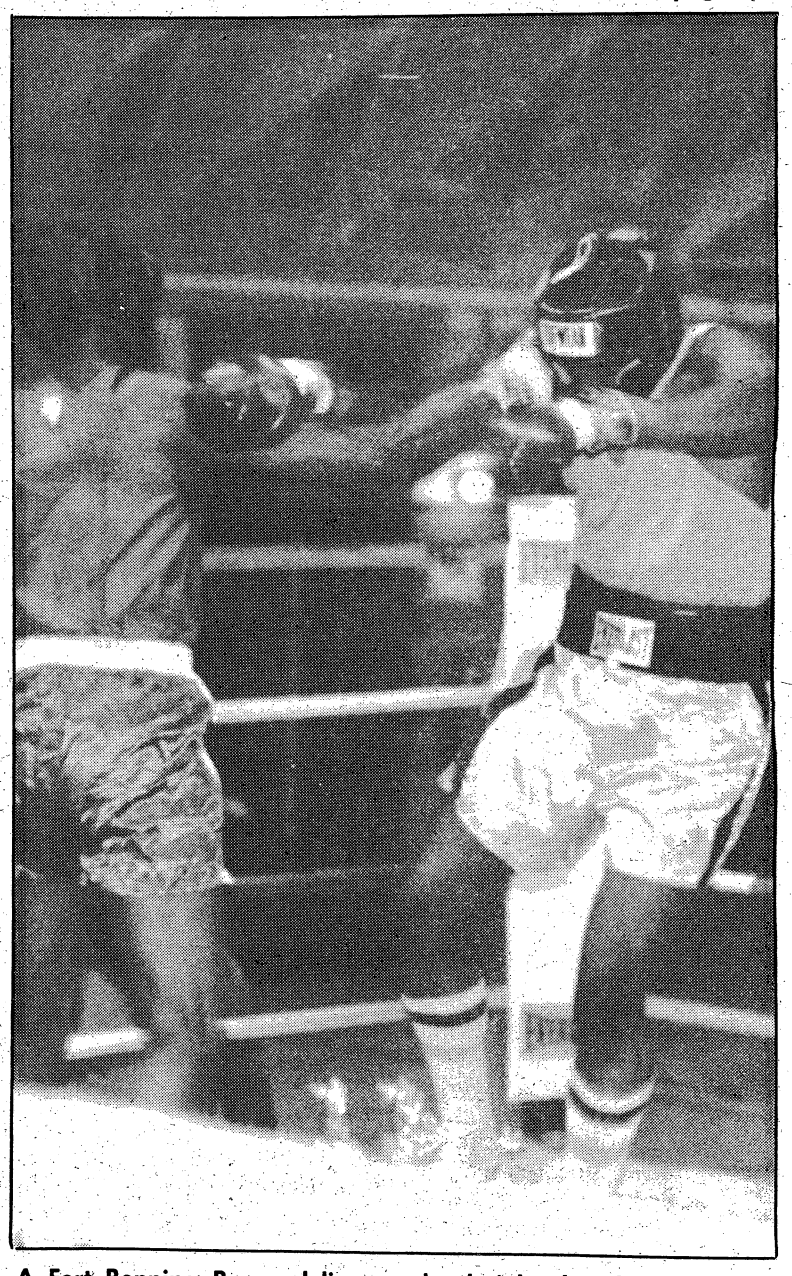
The reprieve was short and Young's retaliation was final as he again went to Burch's body and head to drop the novice in the first round, scoring a TKO.

The light middleweight bout brought more thunder from fight fans than did either novice contender, Charlie Moor and David Bartholet.



Moor came out with straight left jabs and four crisp and punishing rights, before Bartholet's trainer called the match.

Thirty seconds into round one, the bout was over. The crowd was furious, as was Bartholet.



Though decisively outclassed, Bartholet, who had trained for several months, was never hurt by the blows.

"At first I was upset, but later I realized that Coach Johnson merely did not want me to get hurt. I had been stunned but was in no serious trouble," said Bartholet.

Small arms championships big event at Benning

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

More than 800 of the top shooters from the active Army, Reserve and National Guard wil begin arriving at Fort Benning this weekend to compete in the annual U.S. Army Small Arms Championships.

1986 will mark more than 30 consecutive years that Fort Benning has served as host for the largest shooting championships next to the National Rifle and Pistol Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is responsible for the conduct and operation of the matches with additional assistance provided by the All Reserve and National Guard Shooting Teams. Troop unit support will also be provided by Fort Benning from elements of the 197th Infantry Brigade, 36th Engineer Group and the 34th Medical Battalion.

A competitor adjusts the windage and elevation on his M-60 diring last year's competition.

Because of a marked increase in participation over the past several championships, this year's event will be spread over a three-week period to better accommodate both range and billeting requirements. The Combat Rifle, Pistol and Light Machinegun events will begin Monday and last through May 8. The National Match Pistol events will be May 11 to 15.

The Army Championships will include both indvidual and team competition and will feature the top battalion teams from across the country participating in the combat events. Last year's Combat Rifle Team Champions from the 1st Battalion, 504th Infantry, 82nd Airborne Division will be out to defend their All Army title, while the 1st Battalion, 502nd Infantry, 101st Airborne Division is defending its Light Machinegun Team Championship.

Marksmanship History

Many of our nation's most famous marksmen began their careers with victories in the Army matches. Two of the top pistol shooters of all time, SGM's Huelet "Joe" Benner and William B. Blankenship, were former All Army champions. They both went on to win six national pistol titles each and two world championships.

The annual Small Arms Championships is also one of the soldier's first steps toward receiving the Army's most coveted shooting award, the Distinguished Marksman Badge. Awarded since 1884 for rifle and 1891 for pistol, fewer than 3,300 of the badges have been issued to Army personnel.

Originally made in 18 karat gold, the distinguished medal is awarded to personnel receiving a total of 30 points or more in designated rifle and pistol events. The individual must place in the top ten percent and can receive no more than 10 points at any one time.

Some individuals have been known to compete for ten to fifteen years before earning enough points to be awarded the medal. A total of 18 women have also earned the distinguished medal. Among them are current USAMU member Sgt. Rosemarie Mora, and former members Barbara Hile, Kimberly Dyer and Margaret Murdock.

A brief schedule of the shooting events and ranges to be used for this year's U.S. Army Small Arms Championships is listed below. The general public is invited to observe some of the nation's finest marksmen in action. All ranges are near the intersection of Lumpkin and Dixie Roads on main post.

Light Machinegun (Easley Range), May 5 to 8
Combat Pistol (Phillips Range), May 5 to 8
Combat Rifle (McAndrew Range), May 5 to 8
Nat'l Match Pistol (Phillips Range), May 11 to 15
Nat'l Match Rifle (McAndrew Range), May 18 to 23

Crowe named collegiate All American

The National Rifle Association

Kerry Crowe of Fort Benning, Ga., is one of 50 collegiate shooters nationwide to earn the title of 1986 NRA Collegiate All-American.

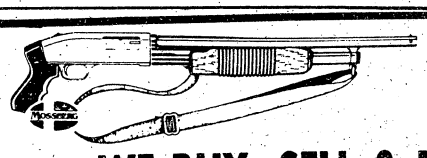
This is the highest honor of a collegian's shooting career. Crowe, a freshman at Tennessee Tech University, won this award on the basis of her smallbore rifle shooting excellence over the year's shooting season.

"In choosing the Collegiate All-Americans, we first compare season averages," says NRA's manager of Air Gun and Collegiate Shooting Activities Margaret Maurer. "If the scores are close, we then consider recommendation letters from coaches, grade point averages and leadership in other collegiate activities."

The NRA Collegiate All-American program is a tradition which began in 1936 with rifle shooting. It has since grown to include all three Olympic shooting disciplines; rifle, pistol and shotgun. Two-time Olympic gold medalist Lones Wigger and Olympic silver medalist Margaret Murdock are among former Collegiate All-Americans.

"We give the kids a good start in their collegiate shooting years," says NRA's Maurer. "We expose them to the sustained pressure of shooting high season averages and then to competing in national collegiate shooting championships. If they are successful, we then provide them with the opportunity of trying oust for the U.S. Shooting Team at the U.S. Shooting Team try-outs, scheduled this year from June 15-28 in Los Angeles."

Bass Club fishing for fun, members



BASS Club

As first light crept over Lake West Point recently , the morning silence was broken only by the sound of outboard motors and the calling of competitor's names as, one by one, members of the BASS Club of Fort Benning kicked off a day of competitive fishing.

As usual, West Point Lake begrudgingly surrendered only a small number of largemouth bass that met the 16-inch minimum limit. However, the club's current point leader, Bob Billman, boated the winning catch using spinnerbaits and worms. Second place went to Tommy Brewer, and third, fourth and fifth went to Jack Eatman,, Bill McCrary and Ken Collins, respectively.

The clubs most recent event was the 1986 "Top Six" Tournament held on Lake Eufaula April 26 through 29. This was a Georgia BASS Chapter federation sponsored event in which the six top fishermen from clubs all over Georgia competed for the honor of representing the federation in a series of tournaments that could lead to an invitation to the $100,000 BASS Master's Classic.

For more information on the BASS Club please call Bill McCrary at 545-1213 or 687-8514.

Fights

The crowd's disappointment soon dissipated as Gerald Smith steamed into the next bout, scoring a first round TKO against Robert Ranfore.

In the first bout of open fighters, Jeffery Johnson and William Smith squared-off for a furious contest.

The fighters circled and jabbed throughout the first round.

After the feeling-out round, Johnson began to put together combos that started at the body and went up to the head and met again in flurries to the mid-section.

A short powerful right sent Smith spinning. Just prior to the second round's end, Smith dropped to his knees to evade more of the tremendous rights.

Opening the third round, Smith tried to move away from Johnson's power. Johnson's speedy hands were more than Smith could evade. Just over a minute into the final round, Johnson unloaded a flurry of left and rights that sent Smith reeling to a TKO defeat.

Sanders Langburg decided he did not want to wait until the third round to drop his middleweight opponent.

Langburg took it to Ronald Baker in the opening round. In a rage, Langburg shot lefts to the head and then unloaded two bullet-rights to the head. The fight was over.

The light-heavyweights met in the card's eight bout.

Dextra Suggs and Jay Poole paired off for what started as a foot race.

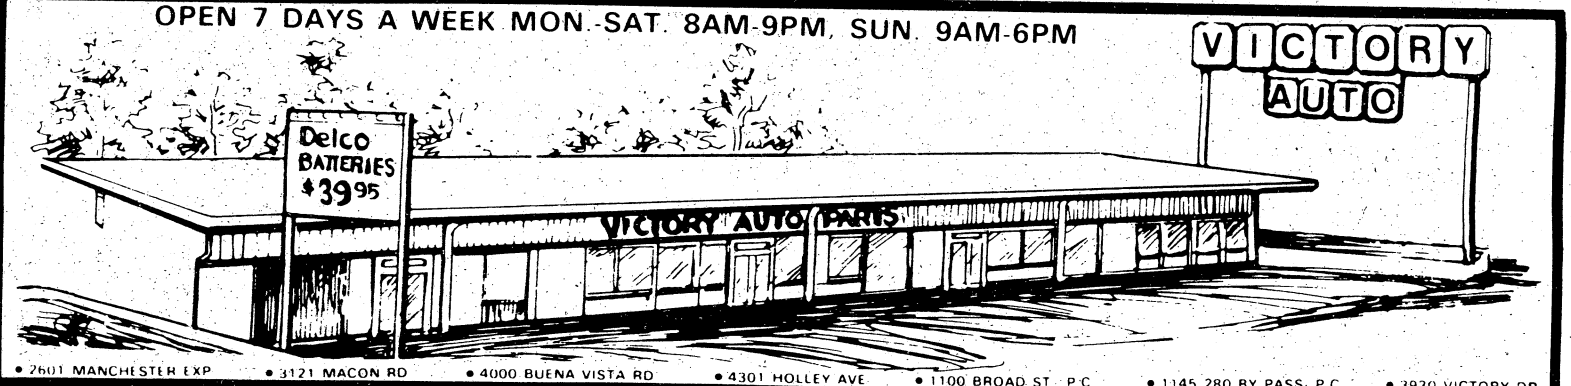
Round one saw Suggs continually looking down on the canvas in his attemps to duck Poole's powerful combinations.

In the second round, Suggs saw the light and Poole saw stars.

With his head up, Suggs pushed straight rights into Poole's face. The third round found Poole spent of energy, while Suggs still had the steam in his punch.

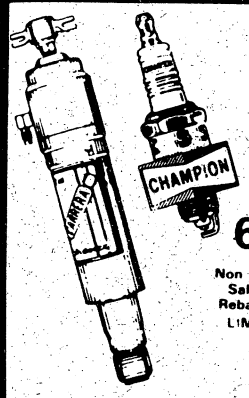
Suggs scored a TKO in the middle of the final round.

Charlie Hampton and Gregg Cumming went toe-to-toe for two minutes and 35 seconds. In a trade of heavy bombs, Cumming was caught by a chopping right that hit the button, giving Hampton a first round TKO.



The heavyweights met in the final bout, with Shelly Linders and Toloai Laloulu filling the ring.

Linders worked the body in the opening round and patiently awaited Laloulu's retaliation.



Into the second round there was no retaliation. Frustrated by a one-man fight, Linders brought smoke to the ring and fogged the eyes of Laloulu.

Linders went on to punish Laloulu until the fight was called in the second round, winning by TKO.

Leadership school needed for E-6 promotion

Army News Service

Soldiers now have another reason for attending and successfully completing a primary leadership development course. Last July, PLDC became mandatory for promotion to staff sergeant. Effective Oct. 1, all soldiers will have to successfully complete a PLDC before they can attend a basic non-commissioned officer course.

The four-week PLDC, designed for promotable specialists 4 or corporals through staff sergeants, is a non-military occupational specialty-specific leadership course. Its emphasis is on how to lead and train, and the duties, responsibilities and authority of the NCO. Emphasis is also placed on leadership in a combat environment. It is taught at NCO academies in the United States and overseas. There are 30 NCO academies Armywide.

The PLDC is the first step of the four-level non-commissioned officer education system. Level two is the basic non-commissioned officer course; level three is the advanced non-commissioned officer course; level four is the senior non-commissioned officer course, better known as the sergeants major academy.

SGM Willie C. Lewis, senior staff NCO with the institutional training branch of the office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans, said: "Although the new policy takes effect on Oct. 1, it does not mean that commanders should wait until that time to investigate which soldiers in their units need to attend the PLDC. The objective is to identify and nominate NCOs who need to go."

This new requirement is a result of findings of the Chief of Staff-directed NCO professional development study group that evaluated the existing NCO training program last year. The study group recommended mandatory attendance to ensure all soldiers receive appropriate training in a progressive, sequential manner to improve promotion potential.

Good leaders seek, pursue self-improvment, guidance

by Dawn Kilpatrick
USAIC Public Affairs Office

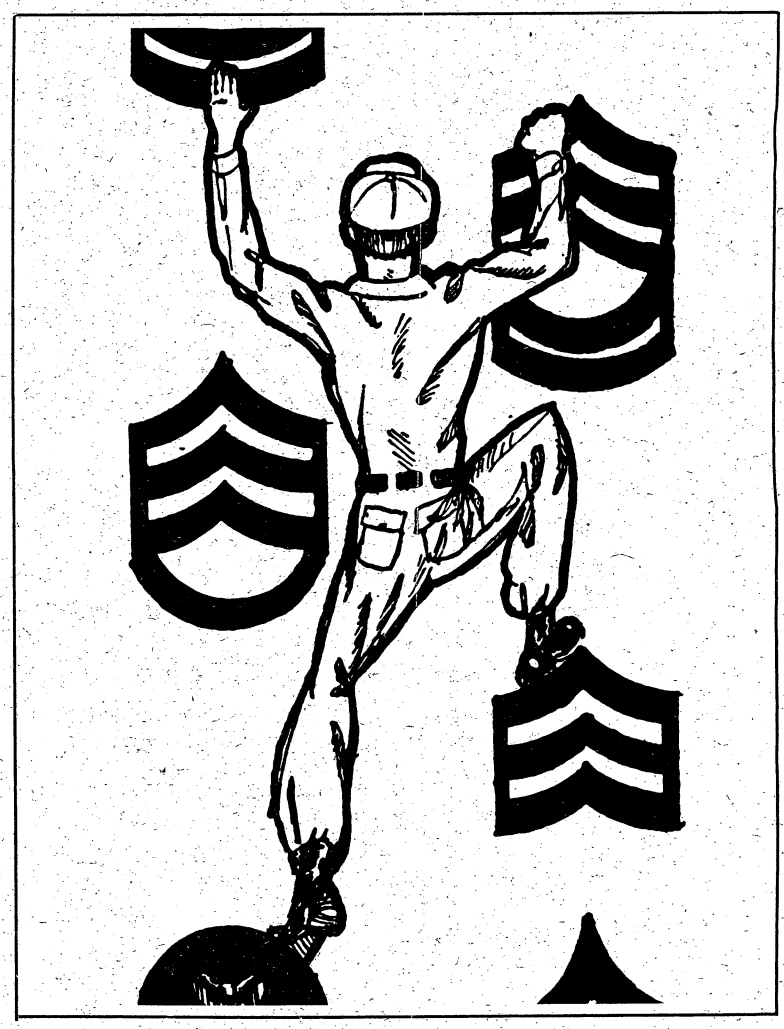
Nothing good in life is free, cheap or easily attained.

In our individual quests for the better things, whether we're talking about getting a new car, a bigger house, or simply a better lot in life, we must all be prepared to give something to get something. As the old saying goes: "He who pays the piper chooses the tune."

As a professional noncommissioned officer, I'm concerned with moving up the ranks. I'll admit it, I would like to be a sergeant major one day. However, I realize that there are certain obligations I must meet as I climb the ladder.

The first obligation is to my troops. Lower enlisted soldiers are the most important element in the Army. They must come first in everything.

My second concern is to the mission. If we don't keep our individual missions in sight and strive to accomplish them in a timely and efficient manner, we have no place in today's "high speed" Army.



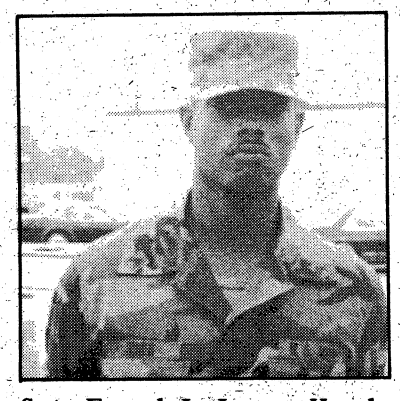
Thirdly, I need to be aware of the wishes and concerns of my superiors and keep them apprised of the situation at any given time.

Although these three thoughts may seem pretty basic, it is amazing how many NCOs lose sight of them in their day to day duties. It is equally surprising to encounter NCOs who are only concerned with themselves. These are the people who believe the Army owes them something. Well, I want to tell them to "wake up and smell the coffee."

The best place I know for a young NCO to get a grip on what he owes the Army and how to go about paying up (and thus, moving up), is the Noncommissioned Officers' Academy. There are 30 such institutions in the Army and the few that I have had an opportunity to see are bastions of professionalism.

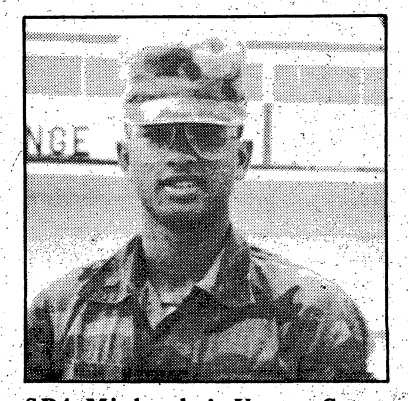
I applaud the recent move by the Army leadership making graduation from the Primary Leadership Development Course a requirement for promotion to staff sergeant. I believe this will enhance the professionalism and the espirit within the NCO corps. As an NCO who attended the Primary Leadership Course before the change was made to train combat arms and non combat arms troops together, I believe that there is much to learn within the walls of an NCO academy.

I also believe that anyone who is not eagerly awaiting a chance to attend a leadership course should not progress to the NCO ranks. We need professional NCOs in this Army. We need people who want to lead and will do whatever it takes to be the best possible leader.



Various voices

Do you think the recent policy to make the Primary Leadership Development Course a requirement for promotion to staff sergeant, is a good idea?



Sgt. David Templon, Company A, 307th Engineer Battalion, Fort Bragg, N.C. — "Young sergeants should go to PLDC, but the soldier should attend while (he is) an E-4. In that, they will be better prepared for the leadership role of the NCO."

Sgt. Evard J. Jones, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "I don't think it should be a mandatory course for promotion, but PLDC should be attended by those soldiers who prove to be dedicated and have the desire to learn."

SSgt. Dwayne L. Jenkins, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade — "Everyone should attend the course. It prepares the new noncommissioned officer for the responsibilities that come with their leadership roles."

SP4 Michael A Vega, Company D, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry — "A lot of the sergeants coming from PLDC seem more professional. It has been a positive motivation for the soldier."

Sgt. Allen W. Culbertson, Company A, 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry — "PLDC should be a requirement. But if it is a requirement, it should be improved to reflect the needs of the future leaders of the military."

Op-Ed

Leaders must have strong values

by Thomas G. Lightner
Fort Knox, Ky. ROTC Basic Camp

The "be" characteristic defines what a leader is — the beliefs, values and ethics that guide your life and in turn, guide how you perform as a leader. The be is the foundation of a leader's character, and character is the sum total of your personality traits.

It also serves as the link between your values and your behavior. Character, therefore, is a bottom-line attribute that keeps you motivated when all else fails.

A leader's beliefs, values and ethics must be closely tied to the professional Army ethic of loyalty to the nation's ideals: by being loyal to your soldiers and your unit; being selfless in rendering your service and being personally responsible for your actions.

Loyalty to the ideals of the nation implies recognition that the Army exists solely to serve and defend our nation. These ideals will guide you if personal and professional values ever conflict.

Your loyalty to the unit is demonstrated by placing the needs and goals of the unit ahead of your own personal needs and goals.

Personal responsibility means you perform what is asked of you in an honorable manner and that you stand behind your actions.

Selfless service is best defined by the Army's Military Leadership Manual: "You are not given authority, status and position as a personal reward to enjoy in comfort. You are given these so that you may be of greater service to your subordinates, your unit and your country."

In addition to these characteristics, the leader must possess strong professional character traits such as courage, candor, competence and commitment. the more you build upon these qualities, the better your leadership will become.

Courage can be both physical and moral. Whether this means overcoming fears of bodily harm or standing up for your convictions, courage will help you in the Army in peacetime or wartime, and will assist in day-to-day living.

Candor is an expression of your personal integrity. You must strive to be frank, open, honest and sincere — across the board to your subordinates, peers and superiors.

Competence means proficiency in your chosen profession as a leader of soldiers; in short, learning your duties. You build your competence by mastering a number of basic military skills that form the very foundation of leadership — knowledge.

If you "live" the "be" characteristics, you will discover an enhanced ability to cause soldiers to follow you, be loyal to you and most importantly, to facilitate accomplishment of your mission.

Army's manpower needs can't be ignored

Association of the U.S. Army

As the nation's primary landpower force, the U.S. Army must deter hostile action against our vital national interests and, should deterrence fail, be prepared to fight and win in any environment.

With the rapid growth of threats to the U.S. and allied security worldwide, the Army's commitments have increased dramatically. The spectrum of threats that the Army must be prepared to face include major war in Europe, mid-intensity conflict in Korea and the Middle East; guerrilla warfare in Latin America, Asia and Africa; and terrorism anywhere in the world.

These different threats require a flexible, strategically deployable active Army with the necessary supporting forces to move, supply and sustain it. There is a need for heavy divisions for sustained combat, light divisions for immediate global response and special operations forces for guerrilla warfare and anti-terrorist action.

Despite a clear need for additional forces to meet its growing commitments, budgetary constraints have forced the active Army to choose between modernization and increased strength levels. The decision was for modern equipment at the current strength of about 780,000, with the available manpower organized to provide the minimum essential force structure.

In view of the increasing number of possible deployment locations, the active Army must be provided with increases in strength to meet its expanding commitments. This larger force of 18 active divisions, to which the Army is now working, ultimately requires an active duty strength of 860,000 regular soldiers. Considering that Army strength has remained stable for nearly a decade, there is an urgent need for almost 80,000 additional people to fully man all existing units and activities of the active Army.

A close look at the economic and political situations around the world makes it clear that our commitments are much more likely to expand than to contract. If our dedication to those commitments is to be credible both to our friends and to those who might want to test them, the forces that give them teeth must be fully manned and truly ready. A more modern Army is not enough; it must also be larger.

Water usage restricted on post; no watering lawns, washing cars

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Recent severe dry weather has reduced the amount of water in Upatoi Creek available for processing in the water treatment plant.

We are presently consuming more water than it can supply.

Because of this, it is necessary to reduce our consumption.

Effective immediately and until further notice, watering of lawns and washing of cars is not authorized.

Unit chants echoed throughout the Harmony Church area as soldiers of the 29th Infantry Regiment vied in various matches for the commander's trophy during the regimental Organization Day Saturday.

A crowd of more than 1,500, to include family members, relatives and friends from neighboring Columbus showed up for the occasion.

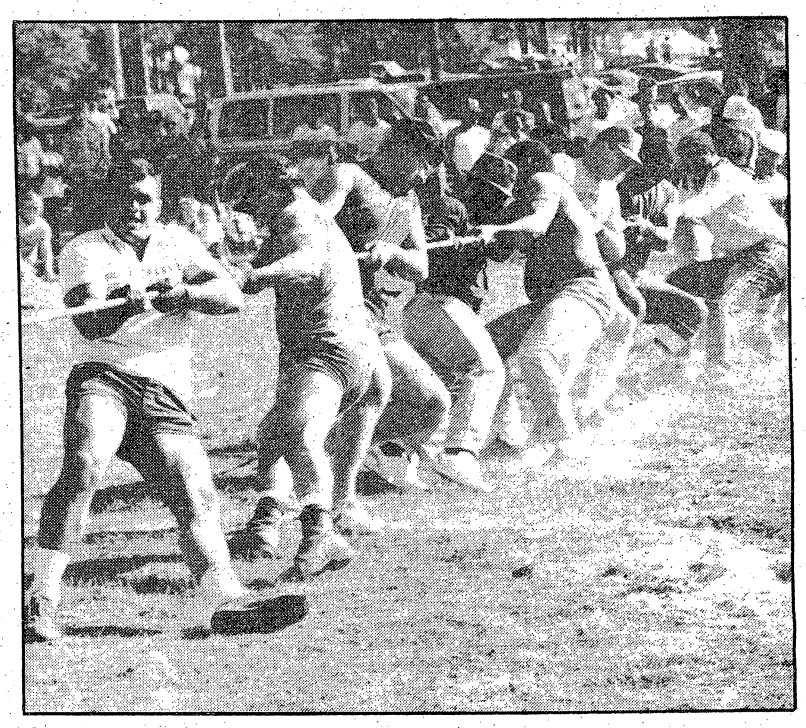
Col. William H. Gavan, commander, kicked off the festivities at 9 a.m. and concluded with an awards presentation at 4 p.m.

The regiment's operations office took care to ensure that this year's Organization Day was a success, said MSgt. Michael St. John.

There were ten different events (golf, military stakes, volleyball, egg toss, relay race, tug-of-war, horseshoes, find-a-ball, four-legged race and chicken fight).

Also, Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle specialists stood by to give rides on the BIFV.

As temperatures soared during mid-afternoon, hints from the crowd signaled the regiment commander, certain company commanders, as well as Association of the U.S. Army queen candidate, Sgt. Sheron Brimm Wright, to cool off in the dunk tank.



The colonel, Brimm and company commander Capt. George Lennon, Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment spent most of their 15-minute stints in the tank, underwater.

Several static displays were set up. Included were the Improved TOW Vehicle, small arms, mor-

Maintenance troops 'fix' training

by Matthew Faddis
598th Maintenance Company

On today's battlefield we can expect to encounter an enemy possessing weapons as powerful as and greater in number than ours. Combat units can expect to be outnumbered and suffer heavy losses.

The effectiveness of our combat units will hinge greatly on the ability of maintenance units to swiftly evacuate, repair, and return weapon systems.

Maintenance units, whether in rear or forward areas, will be faced with possible enemy armor attack, aircraft attack, artillary bombardment, attack by main bodies of troops, small unit infiltration, or nuclear, biological, chemical attacks. Maintenance units face the challenge of defending against these possible enemy attacks while simultaneously providing all echelons of maintenance repairs.

One unit facing this challenge is the 598th Maintenance Company, a vital part of the 67th Maintenance Battalion. The 598th Maintenance Company provides direct and general support maintenance and repair parts supply service for elements of the XVIII Airborne Corps, the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry, the United States Army Infantry Center and School and 32 other U.S. Army Forces Command units.

The 598th began a quarterly seven-day field training exercise March 9 to demonstrate the ability of the unit to perform its maintenance mission in the field environment.

Beginning with a 4 a.m. formation, troops quickly and efficiently received their weapons, ate chow, and loaded their gear aboard vehicles. At 5 a.m. the advance party departed the company area. The main body was broken into two serials; the first departed at 5:45 a.m., the second at 6 a.m.

Once at the field site, the NBC team checked and cleared the area. Security teams moved into position and began setting up the shop office and command post and preparing the platoon areas for the arrival of the main body began.

Approximately 30 minutes later the shop office was ready to receive work requests and the first serial arrived. Ground guides directed vehicles to their perspective platoon areas and the leadership of the company began to demand action. Less than fifteen minutes later, the second serial arrived and was also moved into position.

By 10 a.m. that morning, the 598th Maint. Co. had been completely transformed from garrison to field mode. A total of four maintenance tents and 109 mess supply command pup tents had been set up and camouflaged; 102 vehicles and pieces of equipment had been moved into position and camouflaged, 32 primary and 188 hasty fighting positions had been dug, and complete communications had been established throughout the company and on the perimeter.

During the remainder of the field training exercise the 232 personnel company (made up of five platoons: headquarters, general maintenance, tech supply, automotive and armament, and service/recovery), performed

Cavalry scouts maximize training in effort to discover weaknesses

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

The scouts from Troop A, 15th Cavalry, 197th Infantry Brigade can pack a lot of training into one week in the field.

During a recent exercse, the soldiers trained on everything from Dragon anti-tank weapons using multi-integrated laser engagement systems simulation equipment, to live fire exercises with individual and crew-served weapons.

According to 1st Lt. Patrick Sullivan, a Cavalry scout platoon leader, the scouts trained in sections on a variety of tasks.

"We conducted individual crew and section drills using all the inherent fire power of the scout section, (including) M16 rifles (and) TOWs," Sullivan said. "Later in the week we tackled a range exercise simulating what we would face against a dismounted forward regiment in wartime."

In day and night operations the scouts sent out reconnaissance patrols and moved down range to confront the "enemy". They faced training obstacles that had to be breeched or bypassed and relied on their skills to complete these missions.

Sullivan noted, "this training helps us discover our weaknesses so we can concentrate future training in those areas."

"We also have a few new soldiers in the section who haven't trained with us in the field," Sullivan added. "We rotate those soldiers into different positions on the crew so they learn the tasks they have to know."

197th Fire Support Team learns latest technolgy

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

A group of artillerymen from the 197th Infantry Brigade were introduced to state of the art fire direction technology on a recent deployment to Fort Campbell, Ky.

2nd Lt. Phillip Clark, fire support officer from Headquarters Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, said that the Fire Support Team learned to use the digital message device, a new system for controlling artillery fire.

"It's a system that lets the forward observers maintain contact with the firing batteries through digital traffic over the radio," Clark said. "The DMD isn't available to train with yet on Fort Benning, but it's in use at Fort Campbell."

Clark and a FiST deployed to Fort Campbell with Company A, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, to participate in exercises with units of the 101st Airborne Division.

Fort Campbell's field artillery units instructed the Brigade artillerymen on the DMD and gave them hands-on training. The 197th soldiers used the DMD in a live fire exercise in conjunction with the 2nd Battalion, 319th Field Artillery and 2nd Battalion, 31st Field Artillery, both from Fort Campbell.

The DMD is used by the forward observer to transmit such information as size and location of the target to the firing batteries. The battery gets the message in coded beeps that are converted into firing data.

"Digital traffic is much quicker and less likely to be intercepted by the enemy," Clark said.

Another advantage is the accuracy of the system. According to Clark, "it can compute data to an eight digit grid coordinate. Using the manuel system, we only figure down to a six-digit grid."

The FiST team returned with some valuable training and experience.

"Many of these soldiers are new to the battalion and haven't had much field training," Clark said. "This was a chance for them to get out there, observe, call for fire and see how the battle developes. They really excelled in this training."

2-10th refines skills, fires up post ranges

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

During a three-day field training exercise last week, the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, refined gunnery skills in day and night artillery missions.

According to Capt. Michael Walker, Alpha Battery commander, the training emphasized basic gunnery skills and teamwork.

"We had the entire gunnery team out there," Walker said. "The howitzers, Fire Direction Center and forward observers on the hill performed missions to meet the established standards for field artillery units."

The training scenario emphasized the interaction among sections in each battery. Forward observers locate targets and radio the necessary information back to the FDC. The FDC issues the order to the firing battery and one of its six guns fires on the target. The FOs observe the round impacting and call back data to adjust fire until the round hits right on target. Then, the entire battery musters its strength and "fires for effect" to knock out the target.

"We train to ensure we can fire for effect within standard time limitations," Walker added.

The field artillery training also gave the FOs a chance to try another technique of their trade: working as aerial observers from helicopters.

According to 1st Lt. Gregory Clark, Alpha Battery fire direction officer, "The FOs don't have many opportunities to train as aerial observers so this was a benefit to them."

"The FOs normally observe from the ground," Clark said. "Aerial observers have a vantage point and can see things you can't see from the ground."

Clark explained that the helicopters can pop up over a ridge line long enough to locate a target and then return to a safe position.

"The advantage of the aerial observers is mobility," Clark added. "They can move to different positions to observe targets and impacting rounds. The enemy doesn't know were they'll pop up next."

USARSA gets new battalion commander

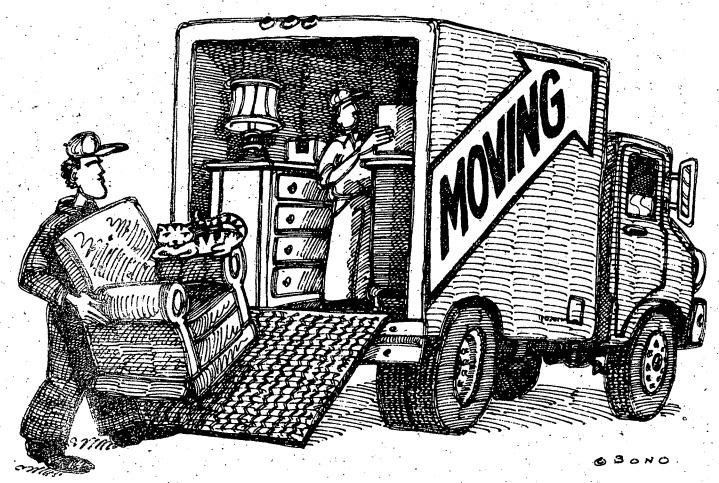
by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas PAO

The U.S. Army School of the Americas has a new school battalion commander.

Incoming commander, Maj. Julio R. Rivera accepted the battalion's guidon as USARSA Commandant, Col. Miguel A. Garcia, officially passed it to him from departing commander, Maj. Richard D. Hopkins during the change of command ceremony at Peden Field Monday.

Rivera's most recent assignment was with USARSA as chief of the administrative/logistics division, Department of Command and Staff. He has served as security plans and operations officer for the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), headquarters company commander for that Division's Materiel Management Center and as director of support for USARSA.

Hopkins will now serve as S-5 for the 197th Infantry Brigade here.



His past assignments include duty as platoon leader, company-level executive officer and as company commander, battalion S-1 and adjutant with the 2nd Battalion, 502nd Infantry, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault).

Hopkins was first assigned as battalion adjutant with USARSA in July 1982 then served as battalion executive officer.

He served as battalion commander for USARSA since February 1985.

Former football player stands by as 197th counterpart commander

by Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

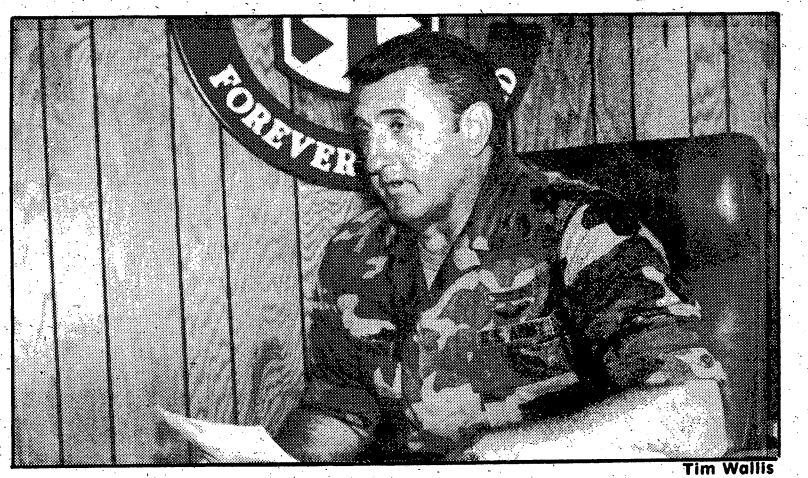
Bill Adkinson would be the first to agree that a lifelong relationship with the military is no easy thing to shake off.

From his days as an infantryman in the Alabama National Guard to his present status as a colonel in the Individual Ready Reserve, Adkinson has balanced military duties with such diverse demands as professional football and industrial sales.

Today he's the U.S. Army Reserve counterpart commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade. Adkinson assists the current full-time commander, Col. William Hartzog, with his responsibilities towards the Reserve units.

The 197th is involved in numerous training programs with the 33rd Infantry Brigade of the Illinois National Guard and the 30th Infantry Brigade of the North Carolina National Guard.

"I'm on orders to the 197th," says Adkinson, who lives in Americus, Ga. "The commander assigns my duties and I work them into my civilian job schedule."



Besides his liaison duties with National Guard units, Adkinson, an armor officer, also serves as special advisor for tank gunnery in the Brigade.

"I feel fortunate to have the best of two worlds," says Adkinson, who has earned national recognition as a top salesman in his field. "If you're creative, you can go as far as you want to in the military, just as in certain civilian jobs."

Adkinson explains that the military has always appealed to him, but when he graduated from the University of Alabama in 1962 he had football on his mind. After distinguishing himself in college football, he drew the attention of the Baltimore Colts, who hired him for the 1962-63 season as an offensive guard.

The season was barely over, however, when Adkinson was at Fort Benning facing another type of challenge — Officer Candidate School. He served a tour of duty in Germany as an infantry lieutenant, but the lure of the football field drew him back to the Colts for the 1965 season. As fate would have it, though, an injury prevented him from finishing the season.

"I always loved the military and football equally," says Adkinson, whose weighty National Football League ring serves as a reminder of his other calling. "In many ways, however, I guess I've been able to enjoy both."

School of Americas graduates classes

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas PAO

Two graduation ceremonies highlighted the list of activities April 30 at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Twenty-three officers, including one from the U.S., graduated from the Psychological Operations course.

Countries and number of graduates represented were Columbia-4; Ecuador-1; El Salvador-12; Guatemala-1; Honduras-3; and Panama-1.

The eight-week PSYOP course trains Latin American officers to act as advisors to their commanders in internal defense and development areas that support military operations and national development plans.

The guest speaker at the PSYOP graduation ceremony was Col. Manuel Granado, a consultant to the Inter-American Defense College in Washington, D.C. Granado is a veteran of the Bay of Pigs invasion.

Five non-commissioned officers and six officers graduated from the Commando (Ranger) Operations course. Countries and number of graduates represented were Costa Rica-3, and Ecuador-8.

The eight-week course, patterned largely after the U.S. Army Ranger course, develops individual leadership skills and requires a soldier to perform effectively as a small unit leader in a realistic tactical environment and under constant mental and physical stress.

Leaders practice gunnery skills

by Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

Artillery gunners maintain proficiency through constant training on their howitzers. However, in each battery, many other soldiers must be qualified to fire the weapons — from the gunnery sergeant to the battery commander.

Recently, the noncommissioned officers and officers from Battery B, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, were evaluated on their gunnery skills.

According to SFC Robert Miller, chief of the firing battery, "regular testing of the NCOs and officers makes them more proficient in teaching gunnery skills to the lower enlisted ranks."

SFC Anthony Smith, Battery B gunnery sergeant, explained that there are 12 tasks the gunners must do correctly to be qualified.

"We check to make sure the gunner understands the task and that he is within the standards in performing it," Smith said.

However, Smith added that the test has changed. "On the old test, the gunner had to perform each task in sequence and under time limitations." Smith continued, "Now, there is no time limit and the evaluator can direct the gunner on the tasks as they go along. The gunner can relax, take his time and do the task correctly."

The tasks range from getting the gun tube oriented in the direction of the target to adjusting the elevation of the tube, that ensures the round will impact the proper distance downrange.

Fort Benning drill sergeant second in TRADOC contest

Army News Service

Fort Benning's top drill sergeant, SFC Sang Chol Chin, came in second in the active component category of the Army Drill Sergeant of the Year competition recently.

Chin is assigned to Company A, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

SFC Dae K. Kim of Fort Dix, N.J., was named Drill Sergeant of the Year in the active component category after competition at Training and Doctrine Command Headquarters, Fort Monroe, Va.

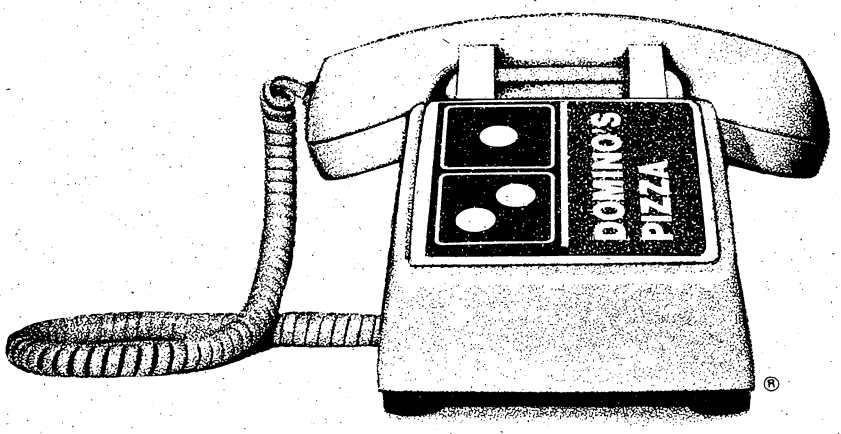
SSgt. Arnold R. Groehler, assigned to the 84th U.S. Army Reserve Division (Training) in Milwaukee, Wisc., was chosen top drill for the reserve component category.

Eleven drill sergeants from throughout the Army competed for the top honor April 21 to 25.

Before being chosen for the final stage of competition, the candidates already had won preliminary, local drill sergeant of the year events.

TRADOC officials point out that while the Army's drill sergeant population represents only one-half of one percent of the service's total strength, that percentage plays a key role in the successful training of the nearly 235,000 new soldiers who process through TRADOC training centers each year.

The first trainer a new soldier sees is the drill sergeant. By tradition, drill sergeants are highly motivated, trained soldiers from virtually all branches of the Army.



Currently, there are approximately 4,000 active-duty drill sergeants and another 5,000 in the U.S. Army Reserve.

Seat belts provide good sense protection

Army News Service

It's official: everyone — military and civilian — must wear seat belts while driving or riding as a passenger in government or privately owned vehicles on military installations. Although many individual commanders had already required all drivers to buckle up on their installations, a new directive makes the requirement DoD wide.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger issued the directive, which is effective immediately. You must wear a seat belt any time you drive a government vehicle anywhere or when you drive a privately owned vehicle on official business — on or off the installation.

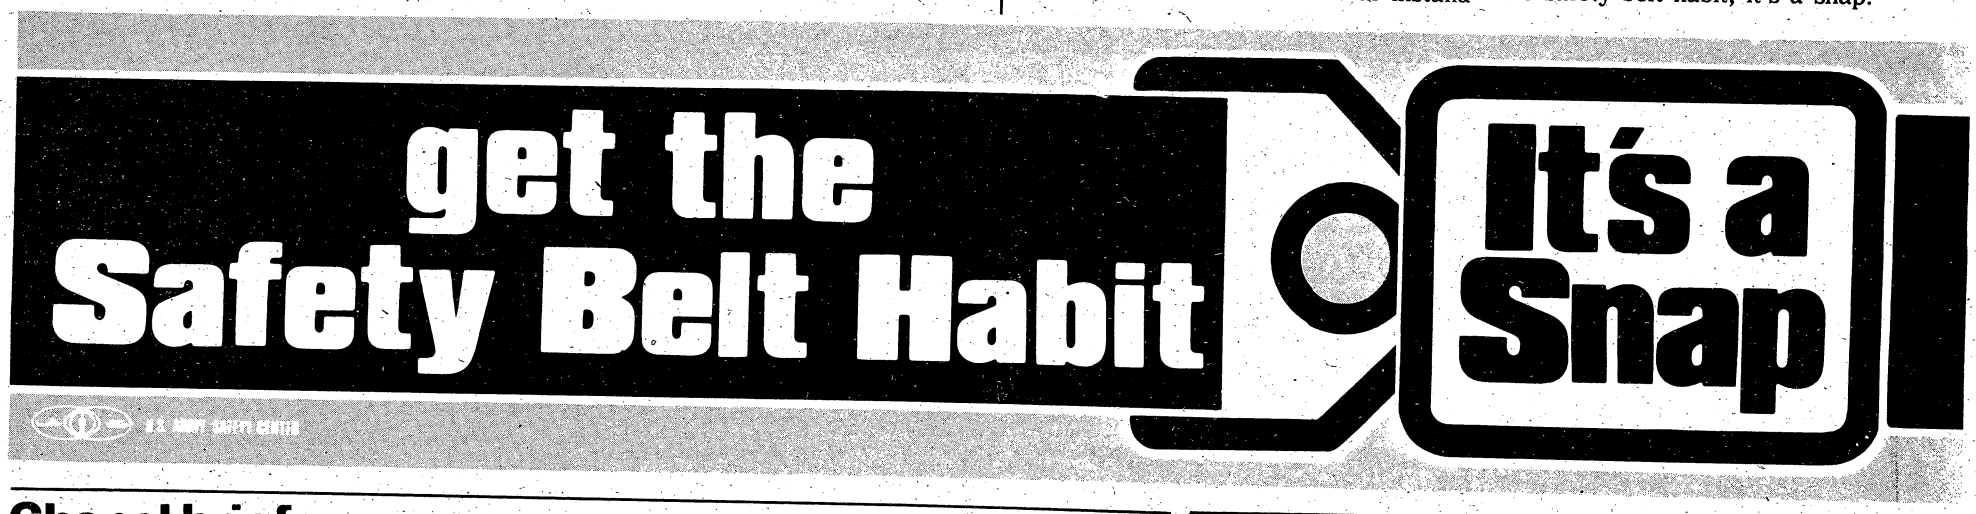
The directive also states that DoD installations will enforce state child-restraint laws and are encouraged to set up child-restraint loaner programs if they don't already have them. Of course, this is not really new, as a DoD safety policy spokesman pointed out — military installations were already required to enforce state traffic safety laws.

A new draft of the joint military traffic safety regulations provides for two "points" on the driving record of anyone who violates safety restraint rules. Individual installation commanders can choose to assess more (or fewer) than two points for the violation. With too many points, an individual loses the privilege of driving on base.

So, if statistics showing that as many as half of all motor vehicle deaths and serious injuries could be prevented by wearing safety belts aren't enough to get people to buckle up, this directive may do the trick.

Also banned by the directive: the use of portable headphones or earphones while driving, jogging, walking, bicycling or skating on roads and streets on DoD installations. Required: wearing helmets on motorcycles and mopeds.

U.S. Army Safety Center



Every year, more than 40,000 people are killed in motor vehicle crashes on our highways. Two hundred of those killed are soldiers. More soldiers are killed in motor vehicle accidents each year than all other Army accidents combined. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration estimates the regular use of safety belts would reduce the chances of being killed or seriously injured by half.

The Army is making the wearing of safety belts a requirement for soldiers and civilian employees of the Army. A soon-to-be published revision to Army regulation on the prevention of motor vehicle accidents requires soldiers to wear safety belts while driving or riding in a privately owned vehicle both on and off Federal installations. All civilian employees will be required to wear safety belts while driving or riding in a privately owned or government-owned vehicle on Federal installations at all times and off Federal installations when the vehicle is used for official business.

Under the new regulation, installation commanders will be responsible for ensuring the use of passenger and child restraint systems on Army installations consistent with state or host nation laws.

Since this revision to the regulation will not be off the press before mid-summer, General John A. Wickham Jr., Army Chief of Staff, has directed immediate compliance with the safety belt requirement.

To focus attention on the requirement for soldiers and civilian workers to wear safety belts, an Armywide campaign promoting safety belts will run from Memorial Day weekend through Labor Day. These 101 days of summer are traditionally marred by an increase in motor vehicle accidents, injuries, and deaths. The theme of this summer's campaign is "Get the safety belt habit, it's a snap."

Vacation Bible School offered on post in June

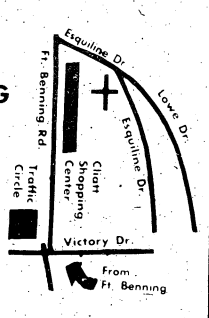
Vacation Bible School will be offered June 16 to 20 at two locations on post.

Students in the Indianhead Terrace area and those who attend Lavoie Chapel can attend at Wilson School. Students from all other areas can attend Bible School at Dexter School. Sessions will be from 9 to 11:30 a.m. each day.

Children 4 years old through the sixth grade are encouraged to attend.

Buses will pick up students needing transportation in McGraw Manor, Davis Hill/Bouton Heights and Custer Terrace. Pre-school children must be accompanied by an older brother or sister in order to ride the bus.

Teachers and other workers are needed. For more information, call 545-2366 or 545-4715.



Lavoie Manor Chapel plans spiritual stage presentation

The Lavoie Manor Chapel will present a skit titled "Will you be Ready for Judgment Day" and excerpts from the musical, "God's Trombone" by James Weldon Johnson May 18 at 6 p.m. The public is invited.

Army's elite endure grueling test of skill

Story and photos
by Dawn Kilpatrick

In competition there are always stories of victory and defeat, winners and losers.

In the 5th Annual David E. Grange Best Ranger Competition May 2 to 5, there are 38 stories of winners. Each of the hard-charging soldiers who finished the grueling three-day contest is a testimony to a winning way of life. Sgt.s Paul R. Skurka and Bart E. Sexton from the 75th Ranger Regiment here proved to be the best of the best as they went the extra step to earn first place honors in the prestigious event.

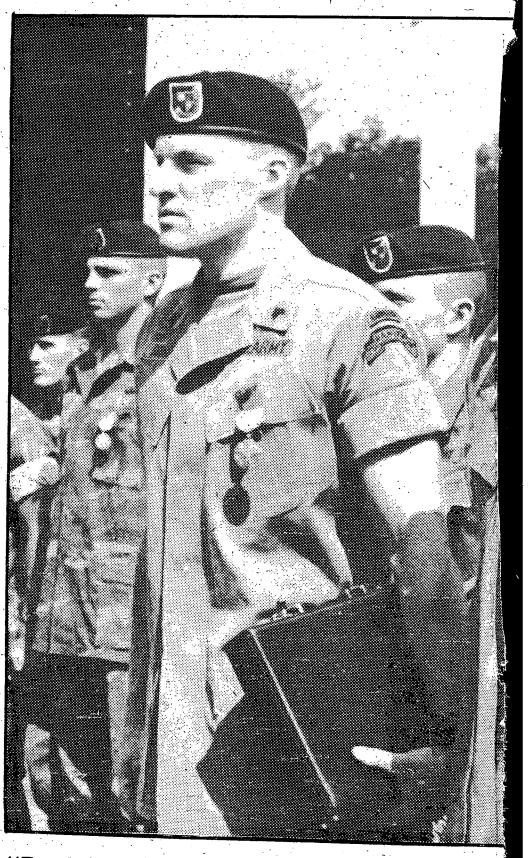
Skurka, a member of last year's winning team, said this year's competition was easier for him because the heat wasn't as intense. "Things went a lot smoother all around this year," he said.

The competitors were evaluated in 15 areas. The test kicked off Friday morning with a modified Army Physical Readiness Test, consisting of push-ups, sit-ups, pull-ups and the two-mile run.

After a short break to catch the last good meal they would see for three days, the competitors assaulted the Ranger Stakes, a pot pourri of common Ranger tasks, and the Prusik climb. Shimmying up the rope and rappelling down the other side of the tower on Todd Field in a combined time of 1 minute, 42 seconds, Sgt. Robert Hamblin and SP4 Joseph Petrone from the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry, set a new record. Unfortunately, the two were later eliminated from the competition.

Skurka and Sexton made their mark on the Bayonet Assault Course as they ran it in a record-setting three minutes, 14 seconds.

Friday night brought the night Ranger Stakes, weapons assembly and the 20-mile road march, which proved to be the downfall for six of the teams. SFC Gerald Sheridan and SP4 Julian Kinsman from the 2nd Ranger Company, established a new record when they assembled an M16A1, M60 and M1911A1 in four minutes, 36 seconds.



Those who completed the road march in a reasonable time had an opportunity to steal some much-needed sleep before they began weapons qualification Saturday morning.

The day progressed with the river navigation course and the spot parachute jump. Although there was no time for deviation, the nature of the events offered the competitors a respite from the otherwise dizzying pace they had kept to this point.

In past years, the land navigation course was probably the most dreaded event. Therefore, this year's competitors approached it with some hesitation. But, according to SSgt. Kurt Massey, 2nd Ranger Company, the course was well run and easier for the competitiors to get through.

Sunday proved to be a good day for SSgt. William Ulibarri

Staff Judge Advocate sentences four soldiers

by Charles A. Coffin
Staff Judge Advocate

During the past week, four Fort Benning soldiers were tried, convicted and sentenced by courts-martial.

Cocaine sale - 30 months prison, dishonorable discharge: Pvt. 2 Vincent J. Nystrom, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry, The School Brigade, was tried and convicted by a general court-martial May 2 for sale of cocaine and marijuana. Evidence presented by the prosecutor, Capt. Bobby Henry, showed that on Jan. 7, Nystrom went to the Hidden Door Club on Main Post with a large quantity of illegal drugs he intended to sell. Henry showed Nystrom approached two undercover Criminal Investigation Division agents and offered to sell them cocaine and marijuana.

Nystrom sold the CID agents one bag of cocaine for $30 and made arrangements to sell them additional drugs on a later date.

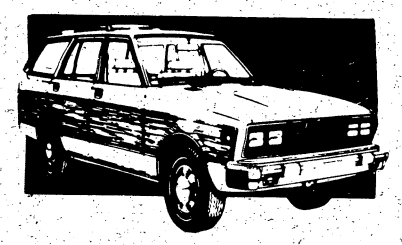
Henry proved that on Jan. 9, Nystrom met the undercover CID agents at the Burger King on Main Post and sold them a bag each of marijuana and cocaine for $180. Several weeks later Nystrom was arrested and charged with sale of drugs.

In his closing argument, Henry urged the court to consider the debilitating effect drugs have on mission readiness and the impact drugs have on the young soldiers who frequent the Hidden Door Club.

Col. Sebert Trail sentenced the 19-year-old Texas native to 30 months in prison, total forfeiture of all pay and allowances, reduction to private (E-1) and a dishonorable discharge.

Larceny - three years prison, dishonorable discharge: It is often said there is nothing worse in the Army than a barracks thief. This saying was given new meaning May 2, when PFC Walter Hough, Company A, 197th Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted and sentenced at a general court-martial.

Capt. Kurt Meckstroth, prosecutor, showed that on the evening of March 13, Hough was the company charge of quarters. Assisting him as CQ runner was Pvt. Tonya Simmons. Meckstroth showed Simmons left her purse in a room guarded by Hough while she walked down the hall to purchase a drink. As soon as she departed the area, Hough went through her purse and stole $14 in cash and an automatic teller card. Hough also found and memorized Simmons' secret bank access number.



Meckstroth proved that several hours later, Hough noticed PFC Frederick Massey leave the barracks. Hough had spoken to Massey earlier in the day and knew he had $200 in his room that Massey intended to use as a down payment on a car. Meckstroth showed Hough had access to a master key that could open any room in the barracks. Hough used the master key to unlock the door to Massey's room enabling him to steal Massey's $200 from a desk drawer.

Meckstroth said Hough took Massey's $200 and stashed it, along with Simmons' $14 in his car. Hough then drove to the First National Bank Automatic teller at the Main Mall and stole $400 from Simmons' account.

When Hough returned to his unit to resume his duties as CQ, the larcenies had already been discovered and the military po-

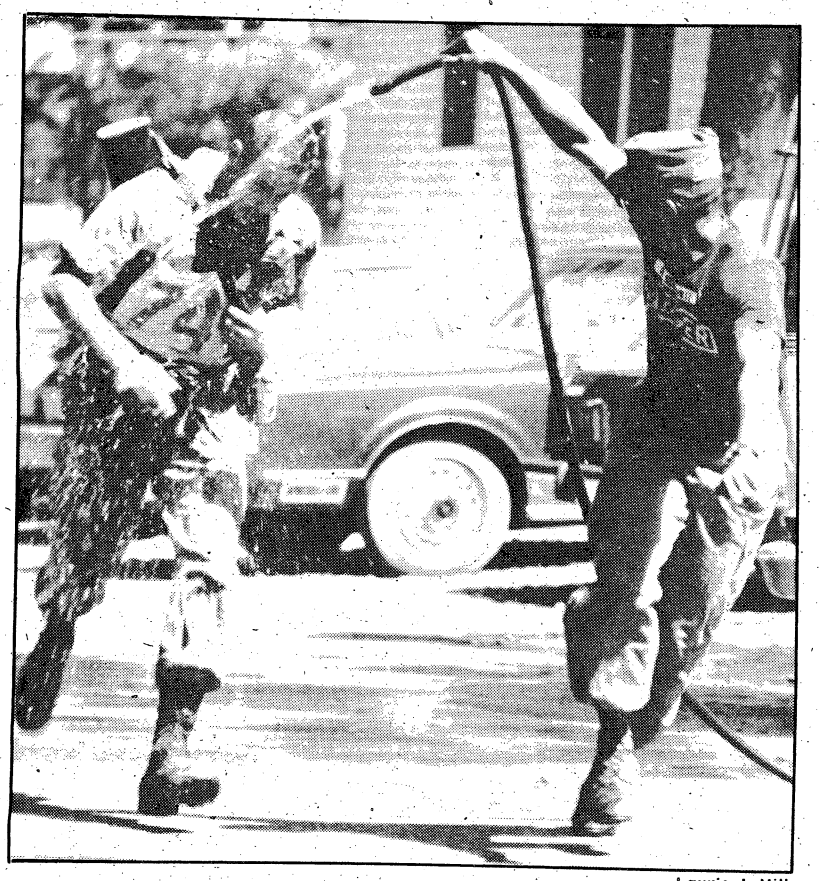
What Specialist Hales has been aiming for during his off-duty time.

Specialist Four Jason Hales has been aiming for the best. As a soldier, and as a student. He's an Infantryman at Fort Myer, Virginia, as well as a B.S. candidate in Mechanical Engineering at Park College. And he's just one of the over 100,000 soldiers who are building brighter, smarter futures through the Army's Reaching for Excellence education program.

It's a terrific opportunity that's available to each and every soldier, at virtually every Army post around the world. Reaching for Excellence covers everything from basic educational skills and technical skill development to undergraduate and graduate studies at the college level. And it's a chance to have at least 75% of your college tuition paid for by the Army.

Continuing your education is a commitment that's fully supported by the Army leadership. You can start taking advantage of this commitment at your post's Education Center. There, you'll find a professional education counselor who can help you set short- and long-range goals which fit both your educational and career plans.

Drop by your Education Center and find out, as Specialist Hales did, how you can turn some off-duty time into a lifetime of rewards. If you want to get ahead, now's the time to get started.



ARMY EDUCATION. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Another look at this year's 'Best Rangers' and Sgt. Raymond Stainback from 2nd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry as they set new records on the "Darby Queen" obstacle course and the helocast swim. The two made it through the rough terrain and obstacles of the "Darby Queen" in 15 minutes, 47 seconds. And they were out of the helicopter and on shore with their gear in a short four minutes, 96 seconds.

Kinsman and Sheridan set another record as they went up, over, down and out of Victory Pond in only three minutes, 51 seconds on the water confidence test.

In the final event of the day, and the competition, SSgt.s Bob Beck and James Ciciora ran the 2.7-mile buddy run in an impressive 19 minutes, 20 seconds.

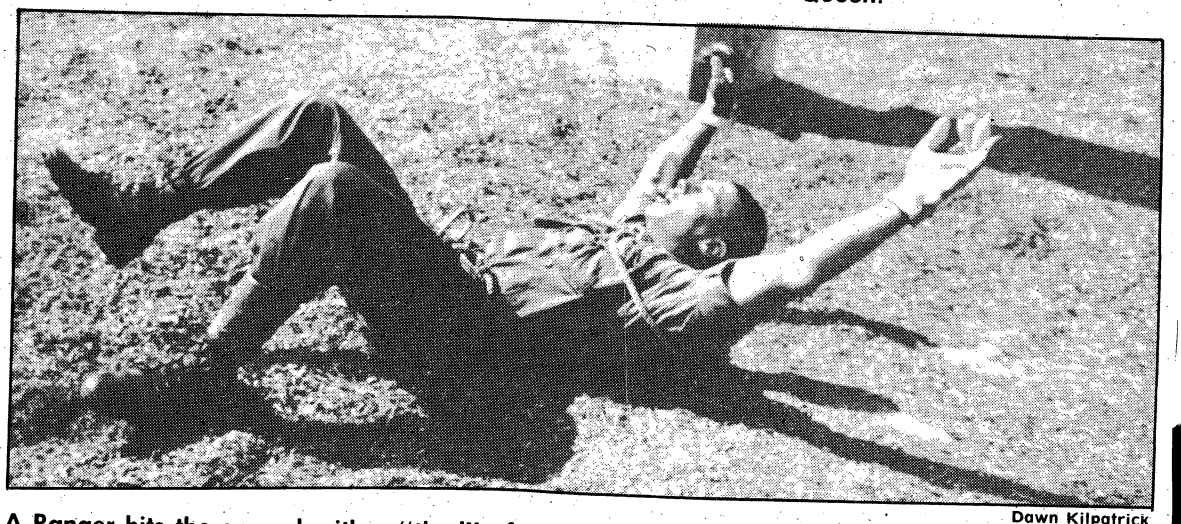
The "agony of defeat" in Best Ranger lies with the teams that were unable to complete the competition. Seven were dropped because if injuries, while one withdrew after not completing the 20-mile road march.

MSgt. Clifford Taylor, the chief instructor with the Morgan Team of the Benning Ranger Division had a bit of personal agony to deal with as he observed last week's action.

He and his Ranger buddy had been engrossed in an intense training regime since January, but were unable to compete because his buddy tore ligaments in his arm practicing the Prusik climb.

"I think we would have done pretty well," Taylor said through gritted teeth. Unfortunately, he may never know. The 14-year Army veteran doesn't think he'll be in a position to compete in next year's event.

Each team applied their own strategies concerning training for the competition. Many were fortunate to have full support from their units so they were able to devote 100 percent of their time to preparing for the grueling test.



SSgt.s Bob Beck and James Ciciora from the Flordia Ranger Division began training about three months ago.

Beck, who is a four-time veteran of the Best Ranger Competition, said the main emphasis in preparing for the contest is to stay in shape all year and intensify training as the event draws nearer.

Gala events planned for Armed Forces Day

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Armed Forces Day will be observed at Fort Benning May 17, in front of Infantry Hall beginning at 7 a.m.

The observance will begin with a 10-kilometer and a two-mile "Fun Run" at York and Stewart fields, followed by an 11 a.m. parade and presentation of the Commanding General's Trophy.

The team competition will be May 13 and 14. It consists of an individual skill evaluation of 10 of the 17 common tasks that include, but are not limited to, camouflage, weapons maintenance, sending radio messages and recognition of friendly and threat armored vehicles.

The local chapter of the Association of the United States Army will sponsor its annual picnic from noon to 3 p.m. on Stewart-Watson Field that day also.

Tickets are $3.50 for adults, $2 for children and are available at the following locations: unit first sergeants, the AUSA office in Room 602, Building 4 and various local banks. For information, call 545-2236.

Rounding out the day's activities will be the Airborne and Ranger-in-Action demonstrations and the crowning of the AUSA queen. The demonstrations will begin at 3 p.m.

The public is invited to attend all scheduled events and to enjoy the annual AUSA picnic.

Air conditioners to be turned on for pre-season functional checks

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Although air conditioning season hasn't started yet, units will be turned on beginning Monday so residents can perform system checks.

"Residents should check their units to make sure they're working properly, so when air conditioning season begins, they'll have a working system," said Rodney Carroll, an Energy Office spokesman.

Carroll said the check out procedure is designed to prevent the delays in service of previous years caused by malfunctioning air conditioners.

Beginning Monday, residents in Custer Terrace, McGraw Manor and Davis Hills housing areas can check out their systems and call in work orders for repairs.

The week of May 19, work orders will be accepted from Upatoi, McDaniel, Lavoie and Indianhead residents.

Main post residents are asked to do their system checks and make repair requests the last week of May.

But he cautions residents to try to conserve energy as much as possible during the early part of the season. "Later in the summer when temperatures and humidity rise is when they'll really need it most," he said.

Once the season begins, air conditioning units will be turned off every seven and one-half minutes of each hour by the Energy Office's computer. It will also turn off units when the outside temperature drops below 65 degrees and then restarted when temperatures go above 76 degrees.

The Energy Office asks residents to do the following system check:

- Check the unit's air filter and replace it if necessary. Filters are available at Self Help, Building 466 on Edwards Street.
- Turn air conditioner to A/C and AUTO, and make sure the power is turned on to the system at the breaker.
- Set thermostat at 78 degrees Fahrenheit. Wait until the room temperature rises above 78 degrees to see if the unit automatically turns on.
- If the unit turns on, let it run 20 minutes. Then go outside to the compressor and feel the large and small copper pipes on the compressor. The large pipe should feel cool to the touch and the small pipe should feel hot. If they don't, a work order should be called in between the hours of 9 a.m. and 3 p.m., Monday through Friday.
- When the system check is complete, turn the air conditioner off.

Benning Schools announce board elections

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

An election for nine representatives to the 11-member school board will be May 20 from 8 a.m. until 4 p.m.

The nine positions up for election at this time are the representatives for the Faith, McBride, Patch, White, Wilbur, and Wilson Schools and the "at large" seats designated to be filled by a president, chaplain, and staff judge advocate representative. Votes for the "at large" positions may be cast at any of the eight schools where parents have a child in attendance.

Positions on the board to be filled this year and current nominees for those positions are:

At Large Positions

President - Col. Miguel A. Garcia

Chaplain representative - Lt. Col. David McSwain

SJA representative - Maj. William Allinder

School representatives

Wilbur School - SFC William E. Ray

McBride School - Mrs. Mary Alice Stacey

Wilson School - SFC Anthony M. Brown, SGM Carl W. Littlejohn, MSgt. Michael J. Stranz, SFC Warren R. Thomas

Faith School - Col. Carl Ernst

Patch School - Mrs. Anne Mace

White School - Mrs. Sarah McCrary

The Dexter School Representative (Mrs. Tandy Shields) and the Loyd School Representative (Mrs. Elaine Kendall) have one more year remaining on their two-year terms of office. All eligible voters from these two schools may cast their votes for the "at large" positions at these respective schools unless they have a child in another Fort Benning School and cast their vote for those positions while there.

An absentee ballot procedure is provided for parents/guaradians who qualify. For information on this procedure you must contact your child's school(s) prior to election day.

Combat matches underway in Small Arms Championships

by Tommy Pool
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit PAO

The 1986 U.S. Army Small Arms Championships are underway at Fort Benning this week with members of the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) and Army National Guard taking the early lead.

More than 300 of the top shooters representing teams from the Army, Army Reserve and National Guard are competing in the combat phase of the matches that include M-16 rifle, .45 caliber pistol and M-60 light machinegun events.

This year's championships were officially opened by Col. James Ellis, U.S. Army Infantry Center chief of staff, Monday. The matches are scheduled to run through May 23, with more than 700 shooters expected during the three weeks of competition.

In the Light Machinegun events, members of the 101st, last year's Army Champions, have taken the early lead in the individual matches.

Sgt. Charles Livesay, 101st, scored a total of 827 in the first match of the two-day event and has a 72 point lead over Sgt. Vincent Forbus, also from the 101st, at 755.

Members of the Army National Guard have won the first two Combat Rifle matches with active Army shooters finishing close behind.

SSgt. David Mutziger, South Dakota NG, fired a winning 100-14v in the 100 yard standing event, while SSgt. Carl Peterson, Minnesota NG, scored 99-13v to win the 200-yard rapid fire match.

Combat Pistol competition will began Tuesday with individual events, and followed by .45 caliber team championships.

First day results from the 1986 U.S. Army Small Arms Championships were as follows:

M-16 Combat Rifle
100 Yards Standing

Winner - SSgt. D. Mutziger, ARNG	100-15v
2nd - SP4 S. Cerny, 101st Abn	100-14v
3rd - Sgt. B. Miller, USAMU	100- 7v

200 Yards Rapid Fire

Winner - SSgt. C. Peterson, ARNG	99-13v
2nd - Sp4 S. Cerny, 101st Abn	99-12v
3rd - SSgt. Roger Bodge, ARNG	98- 4v

M-60 Light Machinegun
Match 101

Winner - Sgt. C. Livesay, 101st Abn	827
2nd - Sgt. V. Forbus, 101st Abnh	755
3rd - SSgt. R. Hahne, ARNG	711

Watch for all the scores and final results from the Combat Rifle, Pistol and Light Machinegun phase of the Army Championships in next week's Bayonet.

The general public is cordially invited to observe all the action still going on at Fort Benning's rifle and pistol ranges. The firing will continue through May 23 and begins daily at approximately 8 a.m.

Next week's competition includes National Match Pistol events begin held at Phillips Range May 10 to 15. The following week will include National Match Rifle firing on McAndrew Range May 17 to 23.

Fort Benning Flyers take off for Nationals

by Joel D. Courtemanche
Special to the Bayonet

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby Football Club departed yesterday for Lackland Air Force Base, Texas, to participate in the 7th Annual National Military Rugby Tournament.

The Military Nationals is the show piece of armed forces rugby, and teams from all services will participate. More than 20 teams have entered this year's tournament, which will occur tomorrow and Sunday.

The Flyers expect to take approximately 25 players to the tournament. Although the team is smaller in size than last year's team, talent and teamwork abound. This year, the Flyers have more leaders. Steve Tennant, Lew Boone, Billy Whitesides, Skip Oates, and a host of other players should lead the Benning club to victory. Several team members are expected to be named to the All-Army Select Side, if the Flyers have a successful tournament.

Of course, the competition has also improved. The Flyers suffered two opening-round losses last year, and were eliminated from the championship round. They hope to improve on that record this year. Last year, the Flyers were unseeded; they should be rated high this year because of their 3-1 record at the Eastern Military Regional Tournament in March.

On May 22, the Flyers will host Columbus for the final game of the season. The teams will kick-off at 7:15 p.m., in this unusual Thursday night match under the lights at Doughboy Stadium. The intense rivalry between the clubs should provide an exciting night for all spectators, as well as a challenge for either team to win. The pubic is invited to this night of free entertainment and encouraged to come out and support the post Rugby Club in the final game of the Spring season.

Soldier bests colleagues in Boston race

by Bill Wallace
108th Division PAO

On April 21, in a race that most runners only dream about—the Boston Marathon—SSgt. Lloyd McDonald from Headquartersand Headquarters Detachment, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, surprised a lot of people by finishing 283rd out of a field of more than 4,800 runners.

McDonald's finishing time of 2:40:49 was good enough to bring him in ahead of all the other entrants from the armed forces, all of whom were more experienced than McDonald.

McDonald has only been running competitively since 1981, with most of his races being in the five to 10-mile range. He had competed in a few marathons before going to Boston, but had never faced the level of competition that the event naturally attracts.

McDonald knows what it takes to run in a race like the Boston Marathon.

"Running is a lot like working with computers-you have to program your body to the particular type race you are running. One error can take you out of the race," he said.

The Boston course is rated as one of the most difficult to run, with the infamous "Heartbreak Hill" contributing largely to that reputation.

"Heartbreak Hill" is really three hills in succession, the first beginning at the 17-mile point and the third ending three miles later at the 20-mile point.

"The strategy of the race is to pace yourself so that you have enough energy to run those three miles of hills. It tears the guts out of most runners," said McDonald.

McDonald credits his success at Boston to his coach, Billy Clark, who is the manager of Santiago Gym on Sand Hill. Clark has been coaching various sports for the past 35 years and says his philosophy on running a race is that one "goes to win or doesn't go."

Marksmanship Unit shooters take top honors in skeet match

by Tommy Pool
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit PAO

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit scored both individual and team victories during international shooting competition here May 1 to 4.

In the Champion of Champions Rifle Tournament, 1st Lt. Kurt Fitz-Randolph amassed a total of 2,316 out of 2,400 possible points to defeat more than forty top international rifle competitors.

Fitz-Randolph scored daily rounds of 1,156 and 1,160 to finish six points ahead of teammate Sgt. Brad Carnes of 2,310. Third place in the event went to Lt. Col. Lones Wigger, finishing one point behind Carnes at 2,309.

In team competition, the U.S. Army "Gold" squad of Fitz-Randolph, Carnes and Capt. Glen Dubis, scored a total of 3,452 out of 3,600 to finish six points ahead of the U.S. Army "Red" team.

Army reservist, Maj. William Beard of Indianapolis, Ind., scored a total of 1,194 out of 1,200 in the English Match event to edge both Carnes and Wigger by one point at 1,193. In the team event, the U.S. Army "Blue" squad of Carnes, Wigger and Maj. Robert Aylward combined for a winning total of 1,789 out of 1,800 points.

In the Zone III Skeet Championships, Olympic gold medalist SSgt. Matt Dryke, showed his winning form by firing a near perfect score of 199 out of 200 targets.

More than fifty of the top international skeet competitors were on hand for the weekend championship as Dryke rang up daily rounds of 99 and 100. Finishing in second place after a shoot-off, was former USAMU member, SSgt. Daniel Carlisle, an Army reservist from Corona, Calif.

Carlisle and civilian competitor George Quigley of Cincinnati, Ohio, both finished the regulation event with identical scores of 192, with Carlisle winning the silver medal following a 25 bird shoot-off.

In team competition, the U.S. Army "Blue" squad defeated the U.S. Army Reserve "Gold" by eight targets, finishing with 429 to 421. Members of the winning Army team were Dryke, SFC Alger Mullins and Sgt. Joe Dickson.

The Army duo of Dryke and Mullins also won the two-man team event with 292, while the USAR finished in second place at 285. The Army "Red" team of Dickso and PFC Roert Wilson were third at 278.

The annual Interservice International Rifle Championships will get underway here this weekend, with the top teams from the different services expected to attend.

Competition will include 50-meter, 300-meter and 10-meter Air Rifle events for both team and individual titles. All firing will be at Hook International Range from 9 to 12.

Mr. & Ms. Fort Benning hopefuls ready for tomorrow's competition

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Bodies will be filling the stage as competitors via for the Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning crown in tomorrow's bodybuilding contest set for noon at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

Expert and beginning bodybuilders will be looking to dethrone the current champions.

The Specialty Care Support Branch will be represented by its noncommissioned officer in charge, who will be competing in her first bodybuilding contest.

Blandina Stewart became interested in bodybuilding after attending the Military Fitness Training Course in January.

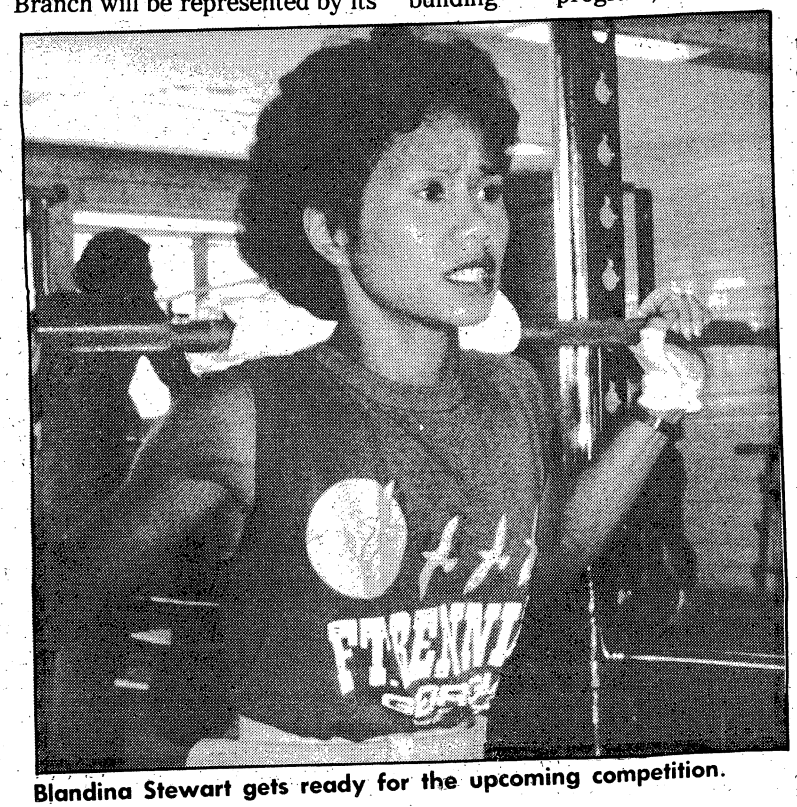
"In the MFT course, we did a lot of strength training, and it made me want to do more, so I then started working on a bodybuilding program," said Stewart.

Stewart's small frame carries 110 pounds of defined muscles.

"I've gotten my body fat down from 19.5 percent to 16.8 percent and hope to be down lower for competition," she said. "In that it is my first time, getting to a 10 percent level could be a bit dangerous," she added.

The 27-year-old competitor has been staying away from the junk food, but gets "cravings every now and then".

"My diet in the final days of training will be strictly high carbos," Stewart said.



Training has been a part of Stewart's regular routine. The Stewart family runs together, and she receives a lot of help in this department.

"My husband, Allen, is so supportive and give me tips to use in my training program," she explained.

Stewart trains six days each week. She works her entire body for two days and various muscular sections on alternate days, while keeping a strict record each day.

"I keep the record so that I will know the exact areas that are my greatest weakness and the one's that are my greatest strength," said Stewart.

One of her great strengths is the desire to compete. There will be others at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center who have been equally motivated.

Blandina Stewart gets ready for the upcoming competition.

Youth Activities throws out first ball of spring season

Story and photos by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Kids just want to have fun was their motto as the Youth Activities branch opened its T-Ball/Baseball season on Green field Saturday.

In a closely fought opening day contest, the Indian Head Cubs slipped past the Yellowjackets by a score of 11 to 9.

Strong pitching and clutch hitting by the Cubs were the reason for the victory.

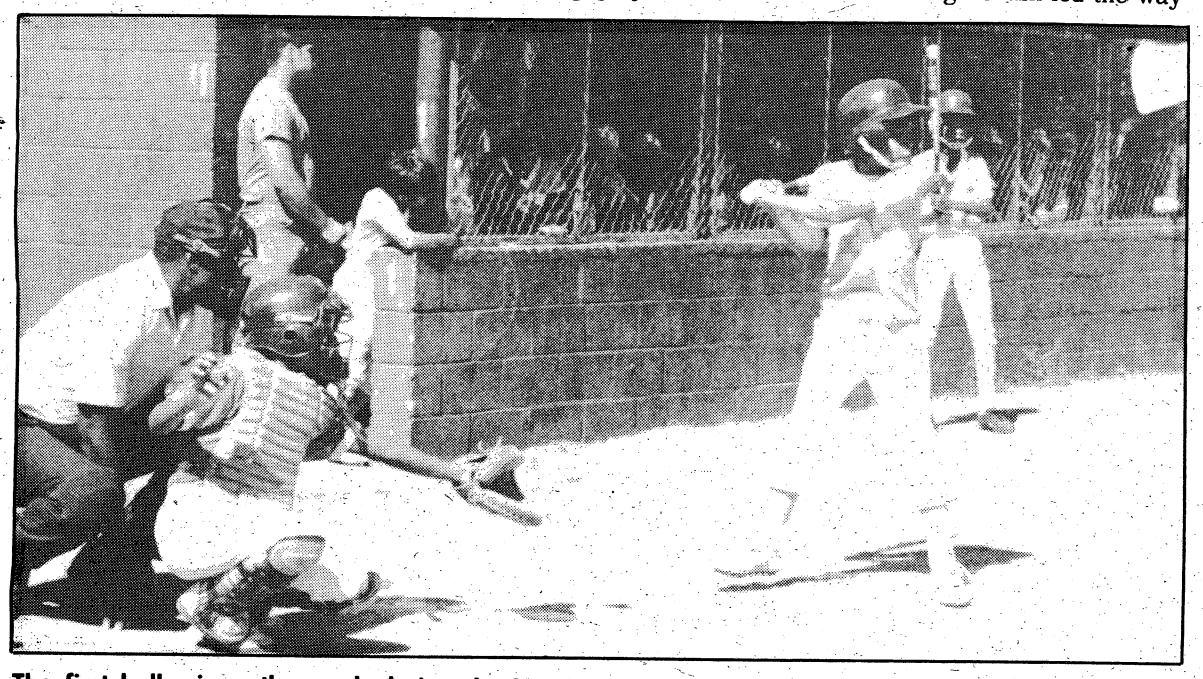
Starting Pitcher, Jeff Moore came out with seven strikeouts in three innings, followed by Donnie Fields' relief pitching, striking out five more yellowjackets.

Strong hitting by Jeff Baxley and Mike Tietjen accounted for the majority of the Cub-runs.

Tietjen brought in five runs, while batting a perfect three for three.

Edmund Thompson was named the Most Valuable Player due to an outstanding play to end the game and stop a last inning surge by the Yellowjackets.

The Firebirds narrowly escaped the clutches of the Orange Crush in a 18 to 17 victory.



Victor Renterig was the high scorer. Renterig was at bat five times, resulting in three triples and two home runs.

Other scoring runs were brought in by Marcus Johnson, Jon Johnson, and Julie Perez.

The Orange Crush led the way by a scant five runs throughout the game, until the 6th inning, when the firebirds scored to take the lead and the 18 to 17 victory.

Charles Gonzalez led the Tornadoes whirlwind attack against the Custer Cubs.

Opening day saw no first game jitters in the Braves, Blue Thunder matchup.

This well played, hotly contested ballgame saw the Braves edge pass the Blue Thunder 22 to 21.

The Blue Thunder's hot bats and stingy infield play gave them an early lead.

Fielding gems by second baseman Randall Black and pitcher, Joshua Allinder, helped hold the Blue Thunder scoreless in the third and fourth innings.

The Braves' offensive surge was ignited by Daniel Finley who hit a home run with eight RBIs.

He was assisted by Allinder, Black, and Adam Day, who were all perfect in five trips to the plate.

The game winning RBI was provided by Dietrich Stogner who singled with the bases loaded and one out in the bottom of the sixth.

Kevin Kimbrough, pitcher for the Braves had a hot hand against the Hawks in their 14 to 6 win.

Kimbrough shut down 10 batters during the game and was three for four at the plate.

Also three for four, were Michael Mann and Miguez Sharez.

The Cardinals in a hard fought game against the Dodgers, were able to hold out due to the pitching of Malcum Sanders and Michael Clemons.

Ronald Nichols scored three runs with a home run to edge past the Dodgers 11 to 10.

The Thundercats stormed past the Red Thunder 21 to 10.

Ben Lattin, Thundercat pitcher, threw seven runners out at first base, while Reggie Mobley led the scoring drive with a homerun and a double.

John Bailey, Stephanie Burton and Lattin all had doubles in the win.

The Mariners drowned the Cardinals to close the day with a 20 to 2 win.

many missions. They practiced patrolling, issued repair parts, developed perimeter defenses, repaired vehicles and equipment, defended against aggressors, and recovered disabled vehicles.

The company received and processed an above average number of work orders and performed nine emergency recovery missions for the Fort Benning area. Tactical training was enhanced by Company B, 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade and elements of the 10th Mountain Division acting as aggressors. Further tactical training was added by the 24-hour manning of the perimeter and strict adherence to noise and light discipline.

lice called. It was quickly discovered that Hough was the thief.

Hough was found guilty of burglary and three charges of larceny by Col. Sebert Trail, the military judge. During the sentencing portion of the trial, Meckstroth called SGM Jim Braswell, Hough's immediate supervisor, to the stand and he testified Hough's duty performance as an administrative services clerk was substandard. He said he immediately relieved Hough of his duties when he learned of the crimes. Braswell said that he would never trust Hough in the future and that he believed Hough had no rehabilitative potential.

Hough called a number of character witnesses to the witness stand, including his victims and several NCO's. Massey and Simmons both said they were initially upset with Hough because they considered themselves his friends, but that they were no longer angry at him. In response to Meckstroth's questions on cross-examination, Massey said he was embarrassed at having to explain to his creditors why his car payment was late. Simmons said her $414 amounted to almost a whole month's pay for her. Both victims said they did not realize the only reason they got their money back was because Hough was caught so quickly.

Sgt. Derrick Siler, the battalion reenlistment NCO, testified that, based on Hough's good military bearing and ability to operate the battalion copy machine, he would be pleased to reenlist Hough despite his conviction as a barracks thief. He said Hough deserved a second chance because Hough had apologized to his victims. SSgt. Rosetta McMurry also testified that Hough deserved a second chance. She said that whenever she had papers to copy, Hough copied them quickly while she waited. On cross-examination, McMurry admitted she would never trust Hough to the point that she would leave anything of value around where Hough could steal it. McMurry said she felt Hough's victims had enticed him into committing his crimes by not adequately securing their valuables.

Judge Trail sentenced Hough to be confined in prison for three years, to be reduced to private (E-1), total forfeiture of all pay and allowances and a dishonorable discharge.

Joy riding - six months jail: PFC James Coleman, Company D, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, was tried and convicted by special court-martial April 30 of wrongful appropriation of an automobile.

Capt. Jack Spradley, prosecutor, presented evidence that Sgt. Bryce Robinson purchased a used car from a used car lot in Columbus in January for $750. On March 20 Robinson parked his car at the Main NCO Club. When Robinson left the NCO Club he discovered his car was missing and reported the theft to the military police. Three days later a friend of Robinson's, SSgt. James Smalls, 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group, was shopping at a department store on Victory Drive when he saw an individual later identified as Coleman, drive by in Robinson's automobile. Smalls gave chase in his car and Coleman jumped out of the vehicle and ran until he was tackled by Smalls and apprehended.

Spradley presented evidence that Robinson was greatly inconvenienced by the loss of his car and that Coleman had caused $400 in damage to the car during the three days he had it. Coleman's commander, Capt. Charles Heaton, and 1st Sgt. Thomas Geralds, both testified Coleman was a below average soldier with little, if any, rehabilitative potential. Coleman's platoon sergeant, SSgt. Carmelo Diaz, testified that Coleman was an average soldier who required close supervision.

The military judge, Maj. Donald A. Rogers, sentenced Coleman to six months in jail, forfeiture of $1200 in military pay, and reduction to private (E-1).

Wife beating - three months jail, bad conduct discharge: Pvt. Gary L. Shimmell, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment - Weapons Department, was found guilty by Maj. Donald A. Rogers, military judge, of assaulting his wife, being drunk and disorderly and a 55-day absent without leave April 30.

Capt. Kurt S. Meckstroth, prosecutor, showed Shimmell went AWOL from his unit Feb. 7 and remained absent until April 2 when his wife, a former soldier, convinced him to turn himself in to his unit. They drove to Kelley Hill but when they arrived, Shimmell changed his mind. His wife then decided to turn her husband in herself. She started walking toward the barracks, but Shimmell tackled her and knocked her to the ground and proceeded to hit her in the face and chest with his fists.

Meckstroth said several soldiers saw Shimmell beating his wife. They pulled him off her and dragged him into the barracks. When Mrs. Shimmell's brother found out what had happened to his sister, he rushed over and punched Shimmell, breaking his nose.Shimmell was taken to Martin Army Community Hospital where he created a disturbance.

Judge Rogers sentenced Shimmell to forfeit $600 in military pay, to be confined in jail for three months, and to be discharged with a bad conduct discharge.

U.S. Savings Bonds

Now Paying

8.36%

U.S. Savings Bonds now pay market-based interest rates like money market accounts!

Hold your Savings Bonds for five years and you automatically get the market-based rates which change semi-annually, the first of May and November. Plus, you get a guaranteed return! You'll probably earn a lot more—but never less than 7½%.

With both money market rates and a guaranteed return, Savings Bonds make a great investment. And Bonds are still a great way to keep America strong.

Savings Bonds are easy to buy, too. Purchase them at most banks and savings and loans, or through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work. For more information, call toll-free 1-800-US-BONDS.

U.S. SAVINGS BONDS
Paying Better Than Ever

Market-based rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least five years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn market-based rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than five years earn lower rates.

JROTC competition set for tomorrow

The Chattahoochee Valley/Fort Benning Association of the United States Army and the U.S. Army Infantry Center are sponsoring the 19th Annual Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps Rifle and Drill Competition here tomorrow.

Five Muscogee County School districts and 36 out-of-town schools from Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Tennessee have been invited. About 1,000 JROTC cadets are expected.

Drill events will be on York Field and the rifle competition will be at Parks Range from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Air conditioning turned on early

Air conditioning season officially began Saturday, and Energy Office officials said the turn-on is proceeding smoothly.

Directorate of Engineering and Housing crews began turning on air conditioning in family housing, troop barracks, dining facilities and other soldier and family facilities Saturday, and office buildings Monday morning.

A DEH spokesman said residents should do a system check on their units, and call the Work Order Section for service at 545-2135.

Armed Forces Day activities set

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Units at Fort Benning and the Association of the United States Army will combine forces this year for a gala Armed Forces Day celebration tomorrow.

Kicking off the festivities will be a 10-kilometer and two-mile "Fun Run" at York and Stewart Fields, followed by a noncommissioned officer parade at 11 a.m.

Allen Horne

Two soldiers observe the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle display during last year's Armed Forces Day.

The Commanding General's Trophy will then be presented to the unit whose team of soldiers wins the post-level competition in 17 common task soldier skills.

In addition, the AUSA will sponsor its annual picnic beginning at noon, featuring barbecued chicken and pork, hamburgers, hot dogs, and all the trimmings. Cost for the picnic is $3.50 for adults and $2 for children.

Throughout the day exhibits of military equipment and weapons will be on display from major units at Fort Benning, including the 197th Infantry Brigade, 29th Infantry Regiment and 36th Engineer Group. Included in the display will be the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, the M-1 Abrams Tank and many individual weapons and personal equipment.

The observance will also feature midway, carnival-type game booths, music by bands and disc jockeys and assorted drink and food stands.

Capping the day will be a precision parachute jump by Benning's own Silver Wings Parachute Team and a Rangers-In-Action demonstration. During this time the new 1986-87 AUSA queen will also be crowned.

Free bus service will be provided for all post housing areas, running at one hour intervals, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

One bus for each housing area will provide transportation to the observance site from Custer and Upatoi Terrace, Indianhead Terrace, Davis Hills and Bouton Heights and McGraw Manor.

Exact route sheets for each respective area can be found at each housing area's community life center.

Buses back to the housing areas will pick passengers up at Way Street, the bowling alley on Sightseeing Road, the Main NCO Club, the east and west parking lots of Building 4 and the intersection of Edwards and Eckel streets.

Post residents respond well to water shortage

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

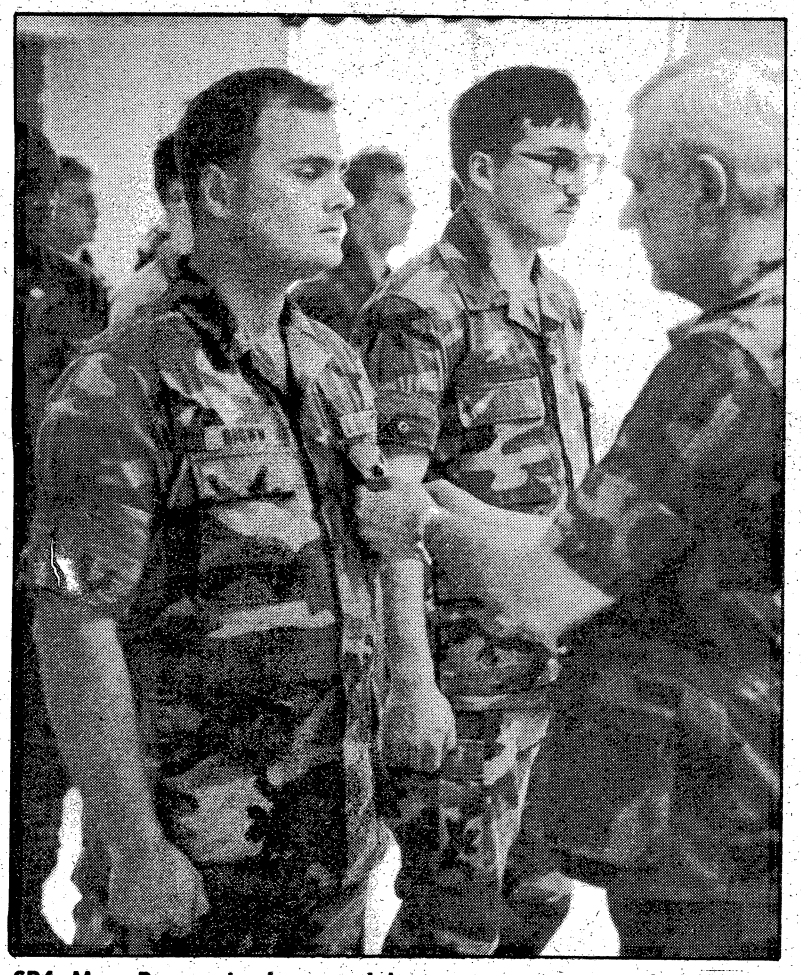
Post residents responded favorably to last week's restrictions on water use, according to Rodney Carroll in the post Energy Office.

"Water demand dropped from 13 million to 8.5 million gallons per day after the restrictions were announced," he said, "which means that people are pitching in and conserving."

Water usage was restricted last Friday when water demand exceeded the supply.

"We had only 11 million gallons of water available per day to meet the 13 million gallon demand," Carroll said. "Our treatment plant has the capacity to process the water, but because of the drought, Uchee Creek just couldn't supply enough."

Post officials banned watering lawns and washing all vehicles.



Carroll said the restriction did not include watering putting greens at the golf course, because the water for that purpose comes from another source.

The area set a record this week for the longest period with little or no rainfall. According to National Weather Service officials, one-tenth of an inch was recorded in 52 days. Forecasters predict scattered thundershowers today through Sunday.

Once we get some rain and the situation improves, we expect the restrictions will be modified," Carroll said.

Delving under surface explains why MPs saved drowning boy

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Army teaches all of its soldiers basic first aid techniques, including cardio-pulmonary-resuscitation. In time of war this first aid and CPR training could save the life of an injured soldier. But what is the worth of this instruction in peacetime? At Fort Benning, it was recently worth the life of a 7-year old boy.

As a result of CPR and first aid instruction received in basic training and additional off-duty and civilian training, SP4 Max Brown and PFC Gary Crawford of the 988th Military Police Company rescued and resusciated a drowning Eric Richards.

The bare facts are that Brown and Crawford were playing golf on the Fort Benning course May 8. At the 15th hole Brown noticed a fluttering in the waters of a nearby pond. Looking closer, the off-duty MP saw the fluttering was caused by a hand. Running to the pond, Brown splashed in and grabbed Richards, whose face was blue and whose eyes had rolled up into his head.

Assisted by Crawford, Brown pulled Richards up an embankment. Brown squeezed Richards around the diaphragm and water gushed out of the boy's mouth, but Richards still was not breathing. Brown laid Richards face-down and pulled up on the waist-area of the unconscious and unbreathing boy's pants, causing more water to be expelled. Richards revived and started breathing. The two MPs then called for an ambulance and Richards was taken to Martin Army Community Hospital, where he was examined and released.

Military policeman Max Brown is a quiet-spoken, modest young man of medium proportions; neither tall nor short, fat nor thin, and not particularly remarkable in any observable way. But within Max Brown beats the heart of a hero, albeit an unaware one.

"I had some CPR training before I came into the Army three years ago. I also received additional training in CPR in basic training and in MP school. I just saw a life-threatening situation and took action. I didn't do anything that any other MP in this company wouldn't or couldn't have done. Military police are trained and used to dealing with emergencies. We were just doing our duty. Crawford and I just dealt with the situation," Brown said.

For their efforts, Brown and Crawford were awarded, respectively, an Army Achievement Medal and a Letter of Achievement. But for both men, and especially expressed by Brown, the real reward came from the Richards' family.

"What can I possibly say that can express my feelings? 'Thank you for saving my son's life' is an understatement. My wife and I are very grateful to Brown and Crawford for the life of our son," said Eric's father, Dr. (Capt.)

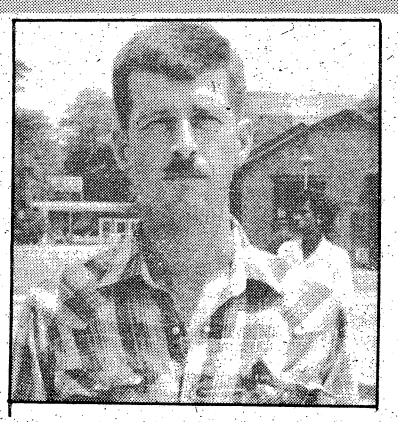
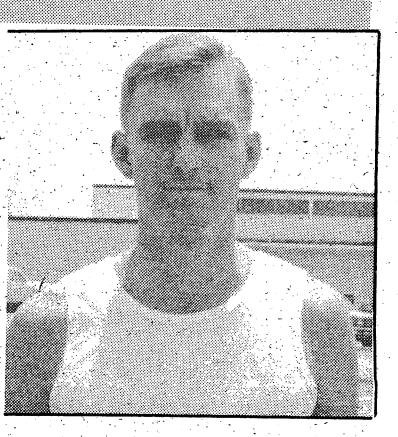
Various voices



Do you expect the Military Police to be able to handle any and all emergency first aid situations on Fort Benning?

Pvt. 1 Roland E. Lopez, Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry — "The MP should be able to handle first aid emergencies. Their training should include extensive first aid courses."



David L. Austin, Retired — "I expect them to be able to render aid in an emergency situation. From what I've seen of the Fort Benning Military Police, they are quite capable."

SSgt. John L. Hughes, Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course — "Most definitely. All soldiers should be able to administer various forms of first aid, but especially the MP, because they are usually the first on the scene."

Cynthia V. Brooks, Family member — "I realize that it is quite a task, but, I think the Military Police should be able to provide the necessary medical aid in an emergency situation."

2nd Lt. Mike C. Matuszak, Company D, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry — "Currently, I do not think it is possible. I was an MP ten years ago. They need to be better trained in this area (first aid)."

Op-Ed

Editor quits quitting

by Dawn Kilpatrick
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Quitting.

There are all sorts of catch phrases about quitting. Probably the most popular in the Army is: "A quitter never wins and a winner never quits." Or maybe it goes: "A winner never quits and a quitter never wins." But, you get the idea.

Most of us don't like to consider ourselves quitters. It simply carries too much of a distasteful stigma.

The other morning I was out running the standard two miles for physical training. I was having a pretty rough time of it and my mind (which can be pretty weak sometimes) kept telling my legs to stop. Well, the mind finally won out and the legs stopped. Just about that time, a well-meaning fellow soldier happened by with a few words of encouragement. "Don't stop," he said, "I feel like quitting too."

Quitting. I never considered it that. I was always able to rationalize it before. "I'm getting back into shape and I should take it slow," I would tell myself. "If I try to do too much at once, I could cause more harm than good," was always a pretty convincing argument to use on myself.

Well, the bottom line is, I was quitting. Plain and simple, giving up.

Sometimes we just need a word of encouragement to push a little harder. Giving that extra effort doesn't always come easy. But, the rewards when we do muster up all of our energies are so great, it becomes worthwhile.

Needless to say, I went through the rest of the day with that fellow soldier's words banging around inside my head. It did me a lot of good. I'd like to thank him, wherever he may be.

I'd also like to encourage others to really think about what quitting means the next time you try to rationalize it.

Dealing with life and death intertwined with Army values

by Donald R. Infante
Commander, Fort Bliss, Texas

The Army as a military force must deal with the realities of life and death, as well as service to country.

This requires an Army ethic comprised of four values: loyalty to country, to the Army, and to the unit, personal responsibility and selfless service.

These values must be nurtured during peace; by the time we go to war it is too late. To achieve success, we must rely on our basic building blocks of values. Whether one is a leader or a follower, the need to bolster these values remains the same.

Loyalty must be nurtured and strengthened against the temptations we face each day.

There have been many media stories about espionage, tales of American citizens and even military personnel who put their greed for wealth or position above their loyalty to this nation.

Although these may be extreme cases, they show that merely wearing the uniform and serving in the Armed Forces is not a mark of loyalty. In the end, what we do while in the uniform is what counts.

Love of our country and respect for its institutions is not a heavy price to pay for freedom. Many of our friends and comrades-in-arms have paid a much higher price.

Loyalty to the unit means soldier helping soldier. To get loyalty and support from the unit, we must first give it. Even taking a friend's car keys when he or she has had too much too drink is an example of loyalty to a fellow soldier.

Our loyalty must not, however, be blind loyalty. We shoud not enter all projects without question. It is not wrong to question "the way we've always done things." There are always better ideas, and it is our very sense of loyalty that should bring these ideas to the surface.

Constructive criticism is a part of service, as long as we remember that identifying the problem is not enough — identifying a better way is also required.

Personal responsibility is a must. This is the cornerstone value of professionalism.

The zero-defects Army is a thing of the past. We are human beings and prone to error, but we are also intelligent creatures who can learn from our mistakes if we are willing to accept responsibility for them. We must not make failure our objective, but we must give ourselves that leeway to fail and to learn.

And, we should remember that personal responsibility transcends our time in uniform. It is a must at home as well as in the shop, in the office, on the range — an all-encompassing concept.

We must respond positively to each program, each challenge, each goal. We should say, "Let's see how we CAN get that done," and "That approach COULD work this time," and "If we work TOGETHER we can make this better."

Our values mean soldier and family care above all else.

Battle Park resident critical of company

Dear Editor:

In your April 25, 1986 issue there was an article (headlined), "Troops save money under new program." You wrote in there how Jordan Company owners of Battle Park homes waived the security deposits.

Well great, but no one said anything about the rent raise we have. May the rent goes up $10, then in June $10 more; a $20 rent raise for a reroofing project.

Eighty percent of these apartments are trashed on the inside. I have talked to everyone in Battle Park homes and had a petition circulated. Out of 200 people, 176 signed, so something is definitely wrong.

Also, because of this rent raise, the rent, gas and electricity which we pay ourselves goes over an E-1 to E-3's BAQ and they don't have any choice to move into (post) housing. This is supposed to be low cost housing.

So you see, Jordan Company hasn't done anyone any favors.

Defense Secretary notes Armed Forces Day

On Armed Forces Day each year, all of us take a close and personal look at our men and women in uniform and the equipment they operate in serving our country.

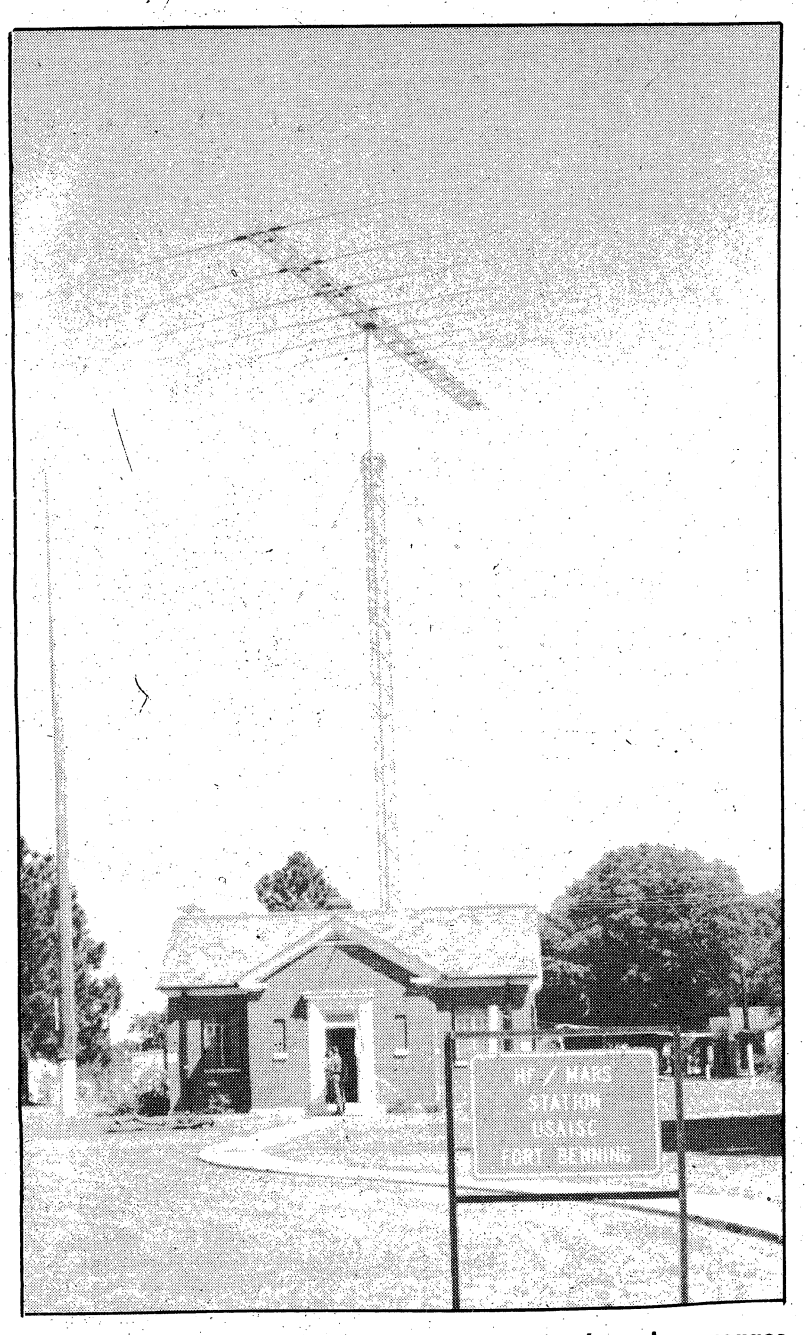
I know that most citizens come away impressed with the quality of the servicemembers they meet and the capabilities of the combat systems that American industry provides.

I know, too, that they are deeply grateful, as I always am, for your dedication and your commitment to the eternal vigilance we must maintain to keep our freedom.

On this Armed Forces Day 1986, I hope you can sense, as I do, that all Americans have a renewed pride and confidence in their armed forces and in the achievements of our men and women in uniform.

This is a tremendous accomplishment, which you yourselves achieved through sacrifice and steadfastness.

Our armed forces today are strong, capable, and ready to perform any mission in the pursuit of peace and the defense of out nation.



Not only on this one day of the year, but on all other days as well, you have the profound gratitude of our citizens and of all freedom — loving peoples.

Communication comes in all forms for Fort Benning and the Military Affiliate Radio System is busy doing its part to keep families in touch with each other.

The MARS station on post provides emergency and auxiliary communication on an international, national and local level for military and family members.

The program was originally developed by the U.S. Army Signal Corps in 1925. Its name was changed from the Army Amateur Radio System to the Military Affiliate Radio System in 1948 when the Air Force joined the system.

It later became a joint service program when the Navy and Marine Corps joined the system.

The program is a system of radio, telephone and telegram communications that allow personnel to keep contact with family members in spite of geographic location.

"We're here to primarily help with the health and morale of the troops," Elise D. Sbardella, MARS custodian, said.

The two primary modes of communications are radio messages and the MARS Gram, which is similar to a telegram.

The MARS Gram is a piece of paper with a format similar to the telegram which is picked up daily at the Infantry Hall drop-off point and hand carried to the MARS station. The operators then radio to a station nearest to the address on the MARS Gram and give them the message. The message is then telephoned to the recipient or hand carried when

Special Forces sergeant lives life to its fullest, enjoys world

USAIC Public Affairs Office

"I think the thing that rots away at a man's soul is the fact that he's human," MSgt. James M. Hughs, Special Forces Liaison, said.

In accepting his humanity, Hughs believes he's been able to grow. This is one man who's taken advantage of every opportunity the Army has offered him.

And he's had plenty of opportunity.

His office, carefully decorated with plants, also contains a computerized chessboard that orders "Queen to A—3."

He moves the queen and casually leans back in his chair. "Hmm, interesting move," Hughs remarks.

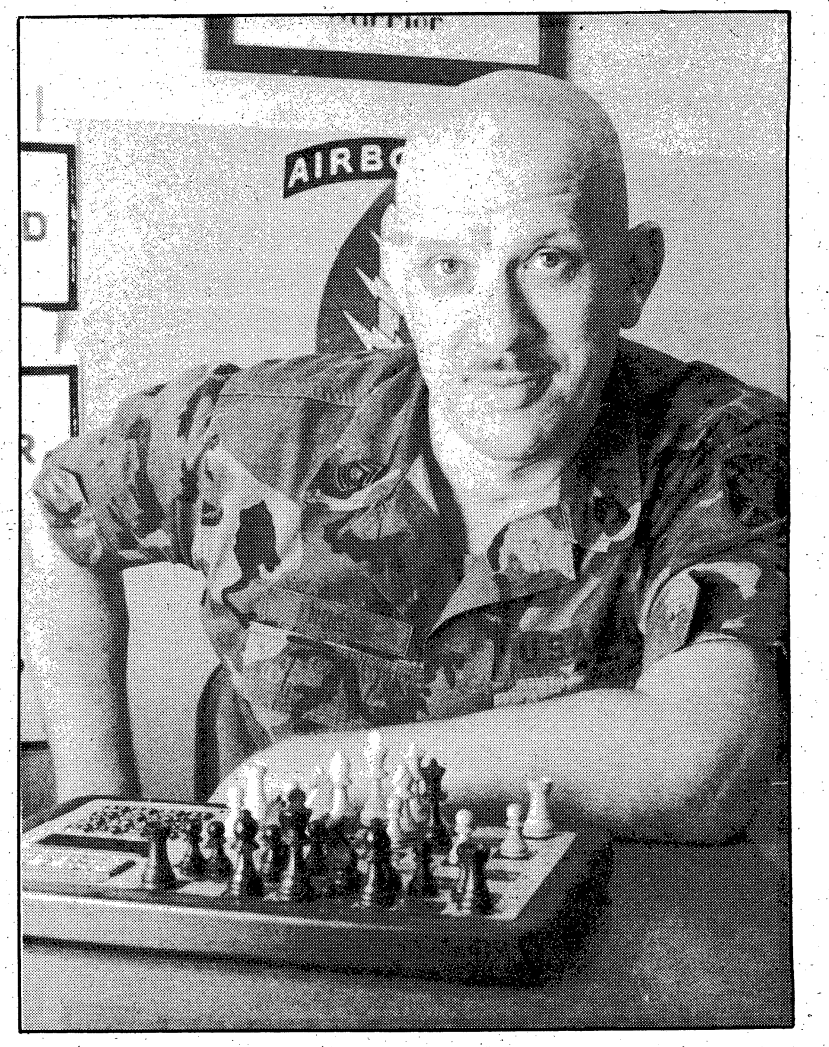
Born in Oregon and raised on the West coast, Hughs credits the Army (17 years of which were with the Special Forces at Fort Bragg, N.C.), with his varied experiences around the world.

"Every place I go, I try to get into the culture and get to know the people," Hughs said.

For example, during the two years he was in Puerto Rico, Hughs was able to explore caves there, climb the mountains, SCUBA dive, visit the Flourscent Sea and by hitchhiking around the island, he was able to meet the natives.

The "almost 50"-year-old man speaks of the time he was in Iran just before the Shah was ousted. "We so often mix up the people with the government," Hughs said. "It's when you start criticizing and putting judgments on people that you start to close doors."

Hughs' blue eyes become somwith a sense of regret, as he speaks of the friends he made in the Iranian Army. "There were some brilliant men who I don't even know what happened to after the takeover. I know of one who was executed; the others I have never heard from," he said.



Also among his travels are the mountains of Korea, which he has climbed, and the Yellow Sea, which he has surfed. "While in the mountains I had the opportunity to see the only woman alive who still dances the Shinto dance," Hughs said.

He has traveled extensivly through Mexico, and has sailed the Carribean Sea. He considers archeology one of his hobbies. When he retires he hopes to go to Mexico and help a friend relocate an Indian burial ground so they can turn it over to the Mexican government.

He sandwiches his life as a Special Forces NCO in between all of the adventure. "War is man's ultimate insanity, but it's a necessity. Just because I have the capacity to do things does not mean I have to do it."

Hughs like this area because it is "historically alive and the community is very supportive and helpful."

Humanity is an adventure for Hughs and he is a classic example of a man who lives by his own philosophy of "Whatever your goals are they are within your grasp."

MSgt. James M. Hughs awaits the computerized chessboard response to his latest move.

Soviet KGB no secret, soldiers should be wary, on guard

by Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

It all began with a game of chess in a Bangkok bar.

This is how a U.S. Army sergeant met "Tori," his chess partner and friend — a friend who led him into a 10-year career as an "agent" for the KGB.

However, unknown to Tori or Soviet intelligence, "Sgt. Smith" was actually a U.S. double agent.

During his association with the KGB, Smith studied Soviet intelligence techniques. He was particularly struck by "how pervasive, unrelenting and skilled the Soviet intellgence agencies are in pursuit of American military and government personnel to serve Soviet purposes."

"The Soviet goal," Smith said, "was for me to acquire for them the most potentially damaging classified defense information possible."

Smith's experience offers a warning to all U.S. service members and DoD civilians: they are potential targets of the KGB.

Like most initial contacts with the KGB, Smith's was surprisingly innocent. While stationed in Thailand, Smith joined in a game with Tori, a Soviet diplomat assigned to the Soviet Embassy in Bangkok.

The two began meeting frequently, and Tori spent money freely, entertaining Smith in coffee houses, restaurants, bars and even brothels.

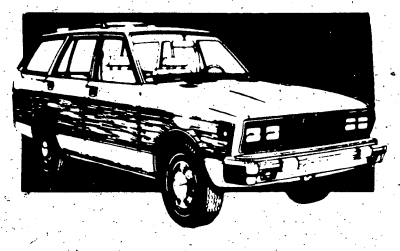
"Finally, almost hesitantly, (Tori) mentioned that a military phone book from my unit would be of use to him — and asked me to get a copy of it for him," Smith said.

Tori gladly received the phone book a few days later and insisted that Smith accept several hundred dollars for his trouble.

"And so my conditioning continued," Smith said, "as Tori next requested a staff wiring diagram and then other apparently harmless, unclassified items, for all of which I was generously rewarded. This conditioning was always low key; Tori ould mention that it would be nice to have such and such a publication. He was simply getting me in the habit of furnishing what he wanted.

"Tori never introduced himself as a Russian or a Soviet intelligence operative. He never directly asked me to be a spy. At some unspoken point all that simply became understood. His requests for material evolved gradually from simply unclassified information to finally the most sensitive classified information.

"There was never any pressure on Tori's part, never a threat or hint of coercion. Nor was there a need for cajoling, reminding me that I had doe little favors for him in the past, and this was no different. Through a combination of friendship and financial renumeration, the relationship developed smoothly and progressively."



This relationship, Smith explained, intensified as Tori provided him with sophisticated information gathering equipment and trained him in the techniques of spycraft.

Smith's relationship with Tori ended when he was reassigned to Redstone Arsenal, Ala.; but his relationship with the KGB continued.

"The message this sends out," said James Passarelli, program manager for Army security awareness and education, "is that the threat is everywhere and comes from many directions and in many forms. No American is immune to it; we are all at risk."

For anyone who has been in contact with someone they know or suspect to be a foreign intelligence agent, Passarelli advises them to immediately report their suspicions to their commanding officer or security officer.

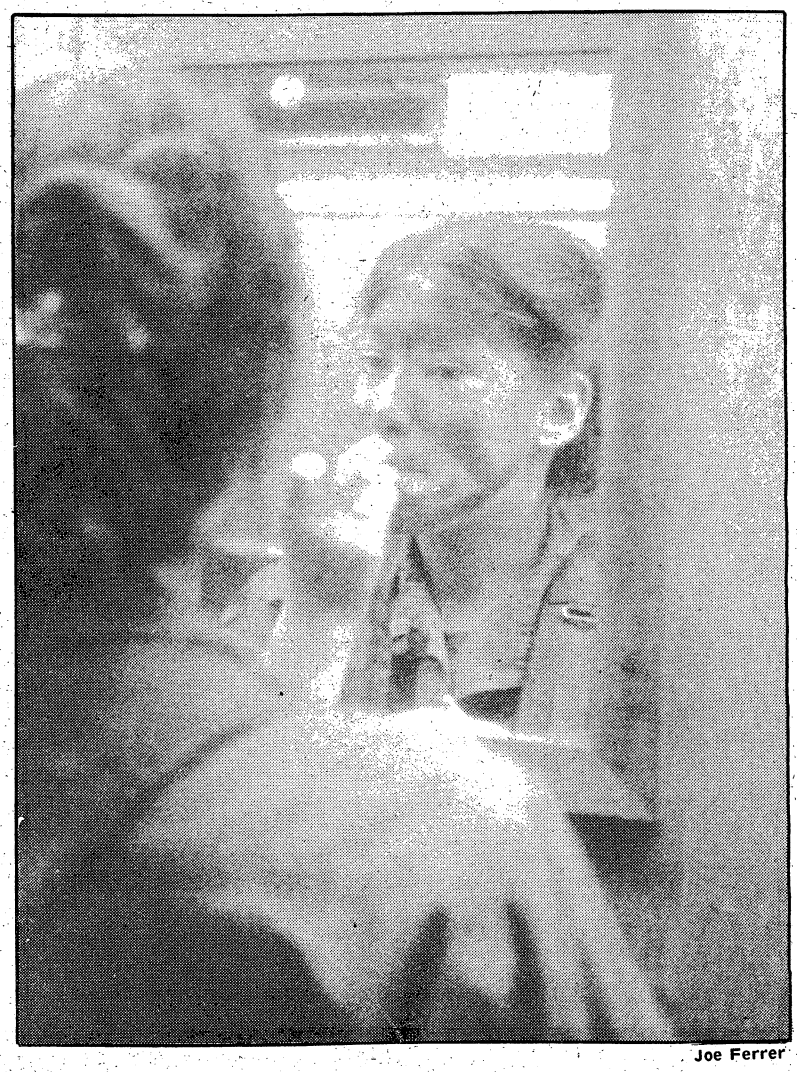
ARTEP stresses maintenance management

by Robert Davis
36th Engineer Group

Members of the Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 67th Maintenance Battalion recently participated in an Army Training Evaluation Program exercise.



The ARTEP evaluated unit-level and individual skills, including convoy procedures, Nuclear, Biological and Chemical defense and employment of weapons. The simulation of the Battalion Headquarter's maintenance management mission made the ARTEP a little different.

Previous ARTEPs emphasized basic skills and neglected the maintenance management mission aspect because the battalion's peacetime configuration made it almost impossible. Currently, the battalion provides a home to a maintenance, ordnance, transportation, engineer and finance companies, and an explosive ordnance detachment. Upon deployment, however, HHD will have command and control of seven to 10 non-divisional maintenance companies.

Lt. Col. Thomas A. Hooper, 67th Maintenance Battalion commander, wanted the ARTEP to emphasize HHD's wartime mission. The solution he proposed to Col. Paul Y. Chinen, 36th Engineer Group commander, was the ATLAS II simulation exercise. Developed by the Ordnance Center and School, the ATLAS II provides the starting information and the framework to simulate the operation of a non-divisional maintenance battalion in wartime.

Soldiers within the 67th formed player cells that acted as subordinate units of the Battalion. Orientation sessions were conducted for players, battalion staff, evaluators, and ARTEP controllers. Many hours were put into arranging material, refining rules of play and developing report formats.

The ARTEP was not merely a classroom exercise, however. The detachment deployed and set up tactically. It's performance in such areas as operations in an electronic warfare environment and NBC defense was tested by evaluators from the 197th Support Battalion. The five-day exercise was highlighted with artillery and chemical attacks, aerial reconnaissance of proposed maintenance unit locations and an airmobile assault on the HHD position.

Green berets teach anti-terrorist classes

JFK Special Warfare Center

An intensive two-week course on anti-terrorism is being offered at Fort Bragg, N.C., by the John F. Kennedy Special Warfare Center.

The Anti-Terrorism Instructor Qualification Course is taught by the Survival, Evasion, Resistance and Escape/Terrorism Counteraction Department of JFKSWC. The course has been taught at the center since 1984 and prepares its students to give anti-terrorist instruction.

Army Regulation 190-52 requires that soldiers deploying overseas into high- or medium-risk areas be provided anti-terrorist training. The course is designed to place qualified instructors in a variety of locations, thus reducing the need for instructors to travel to different posts to provide training.

Students receive an introduction to terrorism and terrorist operations, as well as instruction in hostage survival techniques and protection measures. Emphasis is also placed on developing teaching methods so they can teach others what they have learned. Besides a two-hour written examination on the anti-terrorist material, students must pass four graded classroom presentations in order to complete the course.

The emphasis on teaching techniques comes early — the first graded presentation is made on the second day of the course. Students who fail get one more chance to do it right.

Taught six times per year in residence, the course is limited to 12 students at a time, in order to maintain a four-to-one student-instructor ratio. In addition to attending classes on the material, students form workshop groups to practice presenting their newly acquired knowledge.

MSgt. Greg Reyes, senior instructor in the Terrorism Counteraction Division, says students must be able to learn quickly and apply what they learn from one portion of training to the next. "They should not be looking for a free ride," he warns. "They've got to realize they're going to burn the midnight oil."

Upon graduation, students return to their units with a set of 355 briefing slides and a packet containing lesson outlines, student advance and summary sheets, and an instructor guide. These materials and the graduates' knowledge from the course will form the basis for an 8 to 10-hour anti-terrorist briefing that they can present to their units.

Unit briefings should not be a one-time thing. Reyes points out, adding that the instructors should continue to give briefings regularly. "They will be the resident expert on anti-terrorism on their post and in the nearby area," he says. Graduates can stay in touch with the JFKSWC to keep their information up-to-date.

The course is open to all members of the military services, active and reserve components, are staff sergeants or higher or civilians GS-9 and above. Applicants need to have a secret clearance and at least 12 months retainability following graduation. Although it is not a requirement, applicants who have completed a service school instructor qualification course are preferred, since this course deals heavily with instructor techniques.

Heavy mech troops in their M-113 Armored Personnel Carriers move against Fort Campbell's light infantry.

197th's heavy mech infantrymen fight it out with Ft. Campbell's light

by Sally Roberts
197th Public Affairs Office

The barren village was guarded by mechanized forces spread out around its perimeter, the soldiers expecting an attack of air assault troops.

When the attackers appeared, the positions of heavily armed tanks and armored personnel carriers prevented the helicopters from dropping the foot soldiers safely hear the town. The troops were forced to land further away and walked to the village.

When the light infantry reached their objective, the mechanized force thwarted all attempts to pass their lines and held them at bay at the woodline.

This battle was fought during a recent training exercise at Fort Campbell, Ky. The combatants were mechanized infantrymen from the 197th Infantry Brigade and light infantry soldiers from the 327th Infantry (Air Assault), 101st Airborne Division.

The 197th was invited to assist as an opposing element during 1st Battalion, 327th Infantry's external evaluation. The Brigade soldiers teamed up with 2nd Battalion, 327th Infantry as opposing forces in the exercise.

Mechanized infantrymen from Alpha Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry led the Brigade's mechanized force. The team also consisted of a tank platoon from A Troop, 15th Cavalry, forward observers from 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery; soldiers from the 197th Support Battalion and 72nd Engineer Company. Soldiers learn how to defeat enemy, survive

by Thomas J. Bittner
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Three COHORT companies enroute to the 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry Regiment, 10th Mountain Division at Fort Drum, N.Y. recently completed a five-day field training exercise.

The soldiers, while in training with Companies A, B and D, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, were trained on basic tactical skills and battle drills during the course of the exercise.

"This was outstanding training," said SFC Gregory Rollock, Company B senior drill sergeant. "The soldiers finally got the chance to put their classroom training to use."

Soldiers from Companies A, B and D practiced squad-size situational training exercises. The soldiers dug two-man fighting positions and learned how these positions are interrelated in a squad defensive position.

"The training was better than most unit ARTEPS," said Company A commander Capt. Thomas MaKinster. "The standards in (the 1st Infantry Training) Brigade are very high. When these soldiers get to their combat units, they'll be able to hit the ground running."

During the course of the exercise the soldiers were required to navigate through squad "lanes." Each lane consisted of a series of scenarios that an infantry squad might encounter.

The scenario for each lane is an orderly progression of squad tasks. For example, the squad must first prepare for combat operations. Next, the squad conducts a passage of lines, moves tactically, crosses danger areas, establishes enroute rally points and sets up an enroute objective rally point prior to setting up a point ambush. Also included in the training was a line in which the squads were required to conduct the squad combat drills.

Before beginning each mission, the soldiers were given a warning order. The warning order would advise the troops of any new mission or changing tactical situation that they might encounter.

The soldiers were then inspected and a rehearsal was conducted to ensure each squad member understood his individual tasks.

At the completion of each scenario, the soldiers conducted an after action review. The review is designed to make each soldier aware of his individual shortcomings during the mission.

RB-15 Detachment teaches boat skills to soldiers

by Terry N. Thompson
586th Engineer Company

Recently, members of the 31st Engineer Detachment (Rubber Boat-15) trained 165 soldiers of Alpha Company, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade on the RB-15.

Members of the detachment gave classes on the care, use and maintenance of the boats. Then the soldiers were given the opportunity to use their knowledge and deployed the boats to Victory Pond.

In addition to 2nd ITB support, the detachment has supported the 2nd Armored Division at Ft. Hood, Texas; the Infantry School, Ranger School, the 10th Mountain Division and the 36th Engineer Group.

The 31st Engineer detachment (RB-15) is attached to the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge), 67th Maintenance Battalion.

Soldiers pass infantry rites of passage, join 10th Mountain

by Joel Roberts
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Soldiers from Companies A, B and D, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade completed their 13 weeks of one station unit training and joined the ranks of qualified infantrymen in a COHORT graduation held on Friday, May 2.

The outdoor ceremony, conducted at Pomeroy Field on Sand Hill, was hosted by the 7th battalion commander, Lt. Col. James A. Witter.

The 1st ITB soldiers will join the 22nd Infantry, 10th Mountain division (Light), at Fort Drum, N.Y.

Reviewing officer for the graduation was Brig. Gen. Barry McCaffrey, the deputy commanding general of Fort Benning. Also attending was 1st Brigade, 10th Mountain Division commander, Col. Jack Keane.

Distinguished honor graduates were PFC Darren Williams, PFC Roy D. Greenwood and Pvt. 2 Henry Overturf.

Each honor graduate received a plaque recognizing his accomplishment from the Fort Benning-Columbus AUSA

Everything you ever wanted to know about MREs

Army News Service

Although it's been around for a couple years now, the Meal, Ready-to-Eat, Uncle Sam's new way to feed people on military maneuvers, is still a mystery to some.

Food Management Assistance Team members from the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency, headquartered at Fort Lee, Va., travel the world asking soldiers their opinions on various aspects of the Army's food service program.

Based on comments FMAT members have received from the field, the following are the most commonly asked questions about MREs:

Q: Why is the meal bag so hard to open?

A: The bag that contains the meal was designed to protect the contents and guard it against boring insects. To meet these requirements, the packaged must be puncture and tear resistant. Other materials and opening methods are being looked at, but no immediate solution has been found.

Q: Why is the spoon so short?

A: You're right, the spoon is too short for use with the MRE pouch. The spoon used is the same one for the Meal, Combat Individual. A longer spoon is in the works and is scheduled to be introduced in 1988.

Until then, two sets of tear notches in the MRE pouch make the contents more readily available as you eat your way to the bottom of the pouch. Use the first tear notch to open the pounch. After you have eaten part of it, rip off the additional material at the second tear notch. These notches were added in answer to requests from the field.

Q: Why do some pouches "cling" to the food inside the pouch?

A: Pouches that cling are vacuum packed. The air is pulled out of the pouch and then it's sealed. This is done to reduce the amount of oxygen allowed to react with the food. For crackers, cookies, brownies and dehydrated patties, the oxygen combines with the fat and causes staling or rancidity. In the case of dehydrated fruits, oxygen feeds natural enzymes causing the fruit to turn brown and, eventually, mushy. The food is still edible but doesn't taste, look or smell as good as it should. If the package isn't clinging to the food items listed above, eat the contents as soon as possible.

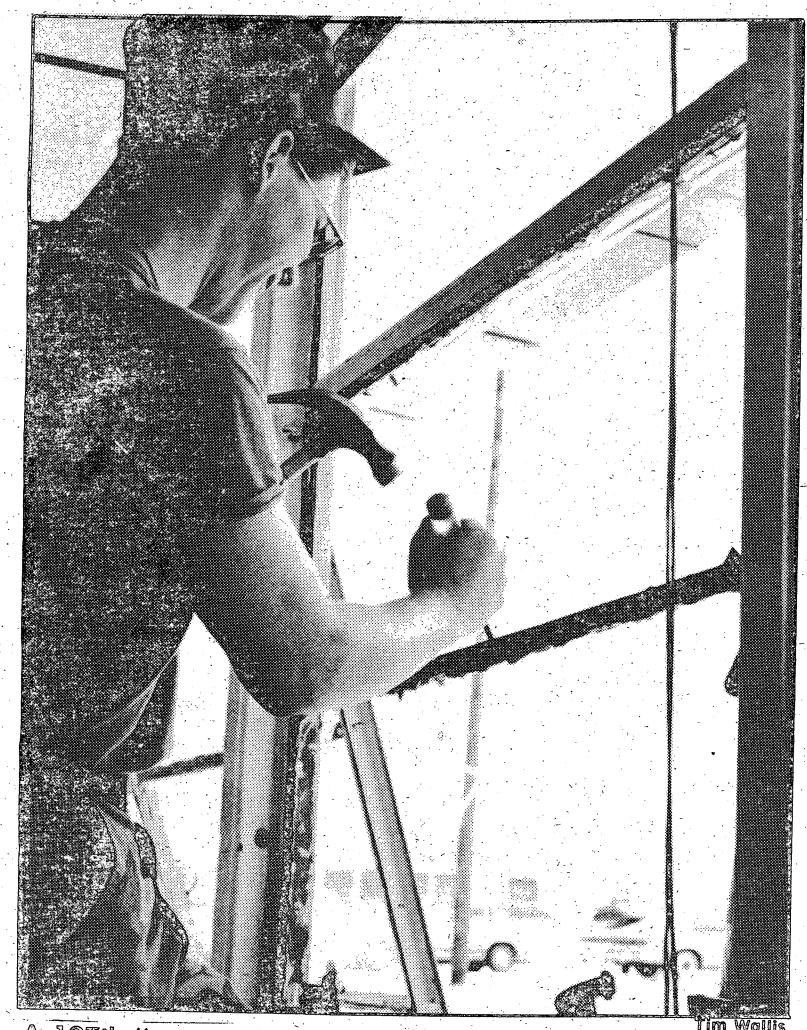
Q: Sometimes, there is oil in my cheese and peanut butter. Why?

A: Butter fat and peanut oil are natural parts of these products. Under some conditions, like high heat, the fat separates and collects in one area. Kneading the pouch will mix the oil back into the food.

Q: Why do the plastic bags containing dehydrated patties leak?

A: Each pattie is paced in a plastic bag after dehydration to keep small pieces from breaking off and interfering with the pouch sealing process. The bag also makes it easier to slip the pattie into the pouch. Small slits are cut into the plastic bag to get the air out of the pouch before it's sealed. When rehydrating the pattie, use the pouch and not the plastic bag.

Q: Why do some items come in cardboard boxes?



A: Cardboard cartons are used for all cooked, wet packed items. The cartons does two things: it protects the pouch from punctures and tears, and it limits the amount of flexing by the pouch. To prevent accidental damage, the pouch should not be removed from the carton until mealtime. Flexing the pouch could cause cracks in the aluminum foil layer which will significantly reduce its shelf life. Though glue was initially used to hold the pouch in place inside the carton, this was discontinued this year.

Q: How are meals (menus) selected?

A: The U.S. Army Natick Research, Development and Engineering Center, Natick, Mass., develops items for approval by all the services (Army, Air Force, Marine Corps, Navy). For the Army, personnel from the Troop Support Agency sample the meals and approve them for further evaluation. Menus are then tested in field situations by military units. If declared acceptable by the soldier, the menu is adopted.

Menus have also been modified based on reports from the field. For example, dehydrated fruits will be remove from the MRE starting this year because of negative comments from the field.

197th uses own skills, ingenuity to renovate former club building

Tim Wallis

A 197th "carpenter" helps renovate the former club building.

by Sally Roberts
197th Public Affairs Office

The 197th Infantry Brigade is following an old adage to give some buildings on Kelley Hill a facelift — If you want something done, do it yourself.

Utilizing the DEH Self Help Program, the Brigade is accomplishing many projects while saving time and money. One of the ongoing projects is the renovation of Building 9058, formerly the Hideaway Club. When completed, the new office space will be occupied by some of the Brigade's staff sections.

"We are repairing this building and bringing it back to good use instead of building a new one," said Maj. Donald Nye, Brigade engineer.

Through the Self Help Program, the Brigade draws materials and know how for repair projects and provides its own labor. In this case, soldiers from the 72nd Engineer Company are putting their skills to the job.

The soldiers get instruction from DEH to do such things as lay floor tiles and replace glass in windows. This helps the soldiers get the job done properly.

What this all boils down to is that the unit can get a job done quicker and at a savings by using the skills of its own soldiers.

Georgia tornado-prone area; know what to do, where to go

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Now through June is tornado season and Georgia is one of the nation's most tornado prone states.

While weather forecasters can predict when there is a possibility of a tornado forming, sightings are the most reliable method of detection.

If you are close enough to see the tornado's black, funnel-shaped cloud, you are in danger and should immediately seek shelter.

Studies have shown that tornadoes develop and touch down in a relatively short period of time, so it is important that people have a plan of where to take shelter and act quickly to do so when a warning sounds.

Residents are given a tornado reaction plan when they arrive on Fort Benning and should familiarize themselves with what to do in case of a tornado. If you don't have a copy, check with the family housing office.

Workers in post buildings should find out what their building's storm plan is and where they should take cover. They should also learn what the warning sirens sound like.

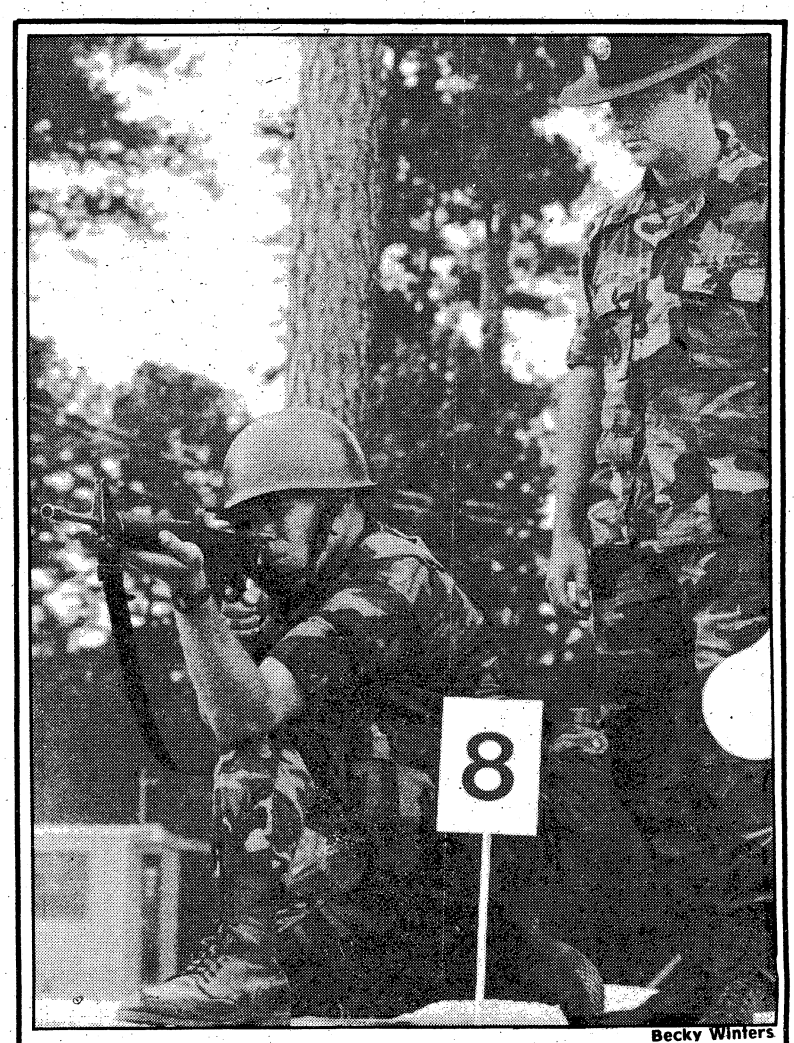
The tornado warning signal is a five-minute steady blast from the post siren system, which means that a tornado has been sighted on post and people should take cover.

The all clear signal is three two-minute blasts separated by two silent periods lasting one minute each.

The following safety tips can help you respond in case of a tornado.

- In the event a tornado watch is issued, keep a battery powered radio or television nearby and listen for the latest weather reports.
- If a tornado warning is issued, immediately seek shelter inside a basement or the center of a reinforced building and stay away from windows. Curl up with your head on your knees, back facing away from the wall and cover your head and eyes with your arms and hands.
- If you are in an office building, go to a hallway on the lowest floor or to the designated shelter area.
- In homes, the basement offers the greatest protection. Seek shelter under sturdy furniture if possible. In homes without basements, take cover in the central part of the house on the lowest floor in a small room, such as a closet or bathroom, or under heavy furniture. Stay away from windows.
- In shopping centers, go to a designated shelter area. Do not stay in your car.
- In open country, move away from the tornado's path at right angles. If there is not time to escape, lie flat in the nearest ditch or ravine.

Tornadoes are only one of the lethal aspects of a thunderstorm. Lightning associated with thunderstorms usually causes more deaths each year than tornadoes.



For this reason, stay away from electrical appliances while the storm is overhead if indoors.

If you are forced to take shelter outdoors, stay away from and lower than high conductive objects such as single trees and power poles.

Flash flooding also may occur as a result of heavy thunderstorms and tornadoes. Consider this factor when selecting your shelter.

If you live in a flash flood area, stay tuned to your radio or television station for information on flooding.

If you take shelter in a ditch during a tornado warning, be alert to rapidly rising water and move to a safer location as soon as possible.

CSM selection board convenes

Army News Service

Combat arms officers and enlisted soldiers will be able to affiliate with regiments of their choice through their local Military Personnel Offices or Personnel and Administration Centers beginning this month.

According to Maj. John A. Hamilton of the Military Personnel Center's Regimental Systems Branch, this action will help the Army meet the Chief of Staff's requirement that all career combat arms soldiers be affiliated with regiments by the end of fiscal year 1986. MILPERCEN is responsible for the affiliation program.

"Instructions on how to affiliate soldiers were published in MILPO letter 86-7, dated April 18," Hamilton said. "The letter tells the MILPOs and PACs how to process requests for affiliation, and how and where to record affiliation in a soldier's personnel record.

"The letter describes procedures that will allow a soldier to affiliate with any regiment of the basic branch or primary military occupational specialty," he continued. "There are some restrictions based on special qualification identifiers and additional skill identifiers."

The instructions include a list of all regiments, with their locations, to assist soldiers in making their choices.

MILPERCEN traveling teams have already affiliated many combat arms soldiers with the help of commanders and personnel officers. Those affiliation preferences are being fed into the enlisted and officer master files at MILPERCEN.

"The MILPO procedures will allow soldiers who were missed by the traveling teams to select regiments," Hamilton said. "They will also allow soldiers to change their regimental affiliations any time they wish."

The MILPO procedures will be published in DA Pamphlet 600-8, procedure 3-17. The target date for publication is October-November 1986.

"Regimental affiliation will be a primary assignment consideration once a soldier is affiliated and the regiment is implemented under the U.S. Army Regimental System," Hamilton said.

For more information, contact your local MILPO, your PAC or Regimental Systems Branch; Autovon 221-8615, commercial (703) 325-8615.

Benning, military police get new provost marshal

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Out with the old and in with the new.

That is the way it was April 15 when Col. Norman Kinder gave up his post as Fort Benning's Provost Marshal and Col. Thomas L. Feuerborn assumed command.

Feuerborn took over the job of managing the Military Police and law enforcement personnel on post.

Feuerborn brings with him a wealth of experience from his 20 years in the law enforcement field.

He was provost marshal at the Allied Force Central Europe Support Activity in the Netherlands for two years in the early 1970s and later served as provost marshal at Fort Richie, Md.

He has also commanded two Mlitary Police battalions in the United States and Korea.

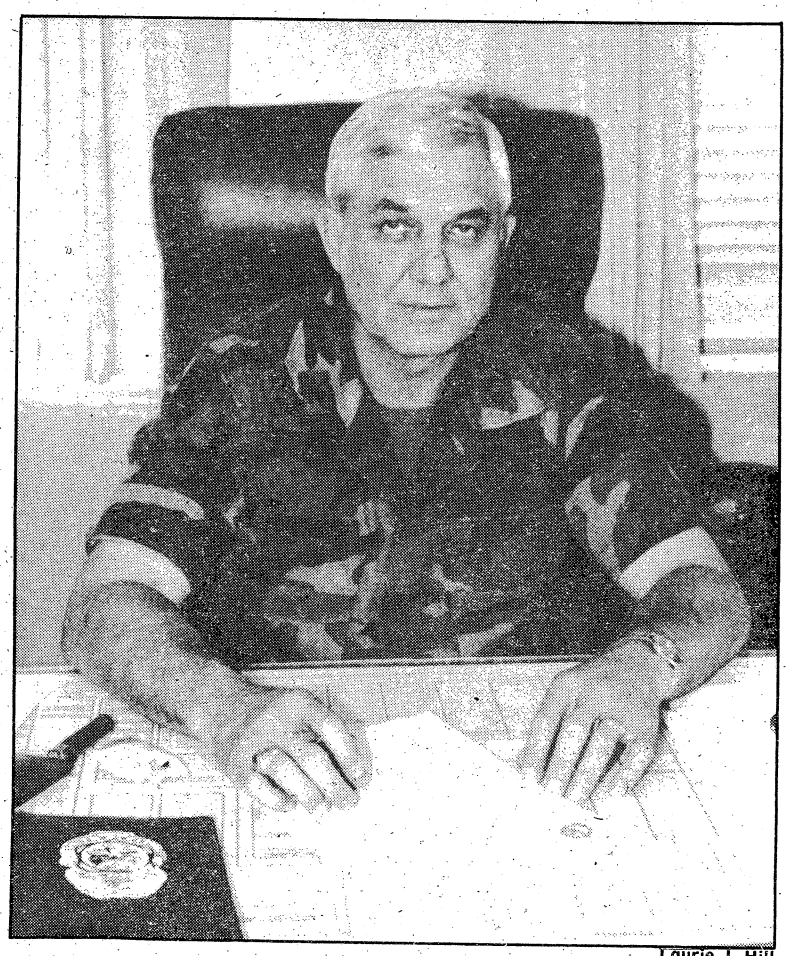
In his most recent assignment, Feuerborn served as deputy assistant commandant and director of Evaluation and Standardization at the United States Military Police School at Fort McClellan, Ala.

Feuerborn looks forward to his stay at Fort Benning. "I love it here. I find this a fascinating post," he said.

The Provost Marshal has a few changes in mind for his new command. "We're going to start making some plans to become proactive in crime prevention," said Feuerborn.

"My main purpose is to ensure that we do everything we can to work with the community and ensure that we have a safe environment so that we can do what we're supposed to do... train soldiers," he said.

In ensuring safety, Feuerborn believes working with the post housing mayors to establish a neighborhood crime watch will be instrumental.



The biggest crime problem on post at present is larceny. "Sixty-eight percent of all larcenies reported were unsecured property," said Feuerborn.

"My theme is that we are the protectors and assisters of the military family, and that also includes the civilians who work on the installation," said Feuerborn.

MPs alarmed by rapid rise of larcenies

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's military police are highly concerned about the increasing number of larcenies occurring on the reservation.

According to M.P. statistics given by Capt. Carolyn White, of Benning's Provost Marshal's Office, larcenies committed on-post total 448 from January 1 to the end of April.

"There were 135 larcenies in April alone," White said.

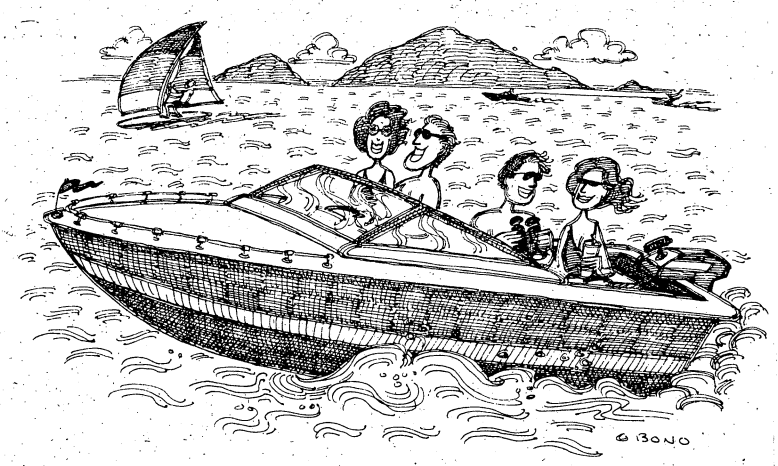
"Civilians and military at Fort Benning need to be more conscious about securing their property. This means locking their cars, placing high-value items out of sight in parked automobiles and parking, if possible, in lighted areas. Also, soldiers shouldn't put money orders or cash in their wall lockers. Lastly, everyone on Fort Benning should immediately notify the military police if they notice any suspicious people on-post," Benning's new provost marshal, Col. Thomas Feuerborn, said.

White stressed that much of the larceny on the post could be prevented if people would just take practical, common sense precautions.

"You can drive through post housing areas any time of the day and see bicycles unsecured and various other properties of high-value just laying around the yard. People are practically asking for these items to be stolen. Also, these high-value items should be marked and recorded or, if they already have serial numbers, these numbers should be recorded for later proof of identification if the items are stolen and then subsequently found," White said.

The M.P. captain also stressed that cars should be locked at all times.

"I had one of our M.P. sergeants check the cars on just one side of the parking lots at Building 4 recently. He found 41 autos unlocked, with items like cameras and stereos left in the autos. One car even had the keys in it," White said.



Both Feuerborn and White said military police officers would begin placing more emphasis on larceny prevention.

"Our M.P.'s will begin placing notifications on cars left unlocked. In addition, our crime prevention van will be on the post in different areas more frequently so residents can use our portable engraving machine to mark their items of value," said White.

Poor handling of stress main cause of assault

You're having a discussion with someone when suddenly, it changes into a heated argument. Tempers flare and before you know it, you've picked up a bottle and cracked your friend in the head. You've just committed an aggravated assault.

Depending on your victim's injuries, you could face from five to 10 years in prison, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, a dishonorable discharge and reduction to E-1.

According to Capt. Carolyn White, 15 incidents of aggravated assault took place on post during the first three months of 1986.

White is the officer in charge of the Physical Security/Crime Prevention Section, Provost Marshal's Office.

From January 1985 through January 1986, 47 incidents of aggravated assault were reported on post. Of these, 23 took place in quarters and resulted from domestic disputes and 11 took place in barracks, White said.

"Not being able to handle stress properly is the biggest cause of aggravated assault," she said. "And with warm weather, people get more heated up during arguments, leading to an increase in the number of cases we see."

According to Maj. Jerry Latta, PMO operations officer, aggravated assault is an assault in which an instrument or object is used to inflict injury, as opposed to people just fighting with their hands.

"The most common instruments used are bottles and sticks," Latta said. Alcohol is also involved in may cases. "People need to watch their alcohol consumption and that of the people around them," he said.

The best way to prevent assaults is to make sure they never happen, Latta said.

"People need to be sensitive enough to others to recognize when an argument is heating up to a dangerous point," he said. "When it gets heated, it's time for one of the parties to walk away from it."

White said help is available on post for families having trouble dealing with every day stress. "Family Advocacy can help people deal with the stress and work with them to solve their problems," she said. Plans are also in the works for company-size counseling sessions with spouses included, to help people learn how to recognize and avoid assaultive situations.

If you'd like help, call the Army Family Advocacy Program office at 545-1169, or the Social Work Service office at Martin Army Community Hospital at 545-1661.

Army taps into intel center in drug fight

Army News Service

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command recently entered into an agreement with the El Paso Intelligence Center that allows for the formal exchange of drug-related intelligence information.

Affiliation with the center, based in El Paso, Texas, is expected to enchance the Army's total drug suppression effort by giving agents direct access to the center's data base, staff, security controls and communications networks — the things that make drug intelligence of value to affiliated members, said CID agent Jerry Thompson.

An agency of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, the Intelligence Center operates a computer-based information service that coordinates data on narcotics smuggling and trafficking, organized alien smuggling rings and weapons trafficking, whether that illegal activity takes place on land, or sea, or air.

The center also stores information about subjects' habits, associates, vulnerabilities, operating methods and criminal activities. The data comes from nine federal law enforcement agencies and 50 state-level narcotics investigation agencies.

The Army will contribute to as well as draw from the data base. Based on the affiliation agreement, the CID will routinely provide EPIC a listing, with basic biographical data, of all civilian and military traffickers suspected of, or known to be, supplying large quantities of drugs to Army installations.

Information on traffickers can be entered into the epic data base even if they have never been arrested for or convicted of a drug-related crime, Thompson said.

However, the information must be based on documented fact, not rumor. Identifying information can be entered on a subject who, for example, sold drugs to an undercover agent. Information from a trusted informant might also be used as the basis for suspicion.

Although access to the data base is not expected to increase arrests of soldiers involved in drug crimes, Thompson said it will benefit the command in two ways. First, the command can keep better track of its own information because the epic data base is more sophisticated than the present CID system. Second, the data base makes information on drug-trafficking soldiers available, indefinitely, to other law enforcement agencies regardless of whether soldiers remain on active duty.

To ensure security of the information in the data base, access is limited to affiliated members only.

The affiliation agreement further limits the CID allowing only two to three people from CID headquarters and from each of its regions access to the data base. In addition, an identification system will be established.

Other affiliated members include the federal government's Drug Enforcement Administration, Immigratio and Naturalization Service, Customs Service, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, Federal Aviation Administratio and Coast Guard.

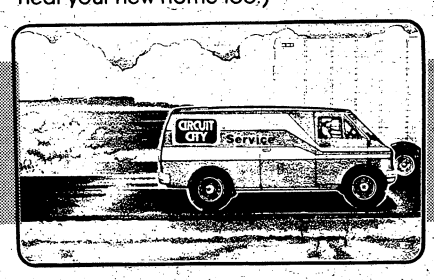
Circuit City:

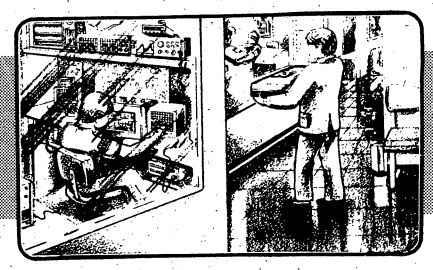
Circuit City is changing the way Atlanta buys electronics-forever. Your complete satisfaction is always guaranteed when you buy a new television, video recorder, audio system, microwave or other product at Circuit City. And complete satisfaction means that WE SERVICE WHAT WE SELL. With factory-trained service technicians in every store, we'll treat you as well AFTER your purchase as we do before it.

Service right where you want it:



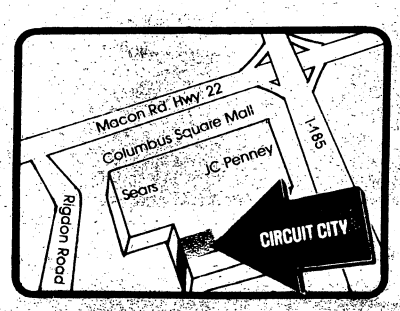
Modern electronics and appliances do wonders. But if they won't do it right, no one wants to wonder where to go for service. Too many retailers don't have their own service department. All they can do is help you locate an outside service company. At Circuit City you get all the help you need. Technicians will check out the problem. Our service department with factory-authorized service for RCA, Zenith, Tappan, Hitachi and all our other famous brands, will make any repair needed promptly. (By the way, if you had to leave our town, you'd have a good chance of finding Circuit City service near your new home too.)

Service for as long as you need it:



We hope you'll enjoy the television, video recorder or digital audio disk player that you buy at Circuit City for many years. We want Circuit City service to help you keep your purchase as good as new through all those years. Even after your warranty expires, Circuit City offers you additional peace of mind with our Extended Service Policy, assuring you of excellent Circuit City service and parts for many years to come.

Service for People, not just circuitry:



Some service companies think they're doing you a favor when they make a repair. They treat you that way too. At Circuit City, we know that your patronage is a privilege we have to earn every time we serve you. You can expect to be treated like a person whom we care about when you have a service problem. At Circuit City, serving you is more than a job. It's our commitment, and the reason you'll find CIRCUIT CITY IS UNLIKE ANY STORE ANYWHERE.

Healthy children help hospitalized youngsters through visits, reading

by Alice Martin
Fort Benning Schools

Skills learned in classrooms can be used in many ways to help students as they help others. Students in Alice Martin's and Peggy Martin's sixth grade classes at Faith Middle School are excited about their visits to the Pediatric Ward at Martin Army Hospital, where they are reading to the young children.

These visits are an outgrowth of a Red Cross project coordinated by the two sixth grade teachers; Gail Wilson, Faith Assistant Principal; Anita Bass and Kim Finger of Fort Benning's American Red Cross office; and Capt. Delois Gamble, head nurse of the Martin Army Pediatric Ward.

The project began in the fall of 1985, when groups of six to eight students began to take artwork and cards to share with the hospitalized children. As the students returned to class, they shared accounts of their visits and discussed how they had felt at times in their own lives when they had been hospitalized. Nurses began to see that the students were meeting many of the needs of the hospitalized children, so a schedule was established whereby small groups of students would visit the ward three times a week.

Martin and Martin report that their students prepare for their visits by gathering books from younger brothers and sisters and dusting off their own early childhood favorites that are short and full of pictures. They have found these books to be ideal for the very young patients. On a recent visit, one 16-month-old girl immediately stopped fretting as the sixth graders read to her and explained the brightly colored pictures. The students take more difficult materials to read to the older children.

"Super job," "well prepared," and "thoughtful" are responses from nurses and parents who have observed the students in the ward. Martin and Martin report that their sixth graders have also benefited from the program through increased reading time in preparation for the visits and through an awareness of the help that their reading skills provide to others.

9 slots open for Tuesday's school board elections

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

An election for nine representatives to the 11-member school board will be Tuesday from 8 a.m. until 4 p.m.

The nine positions up for election at this time are the representatives for the Faith, McBride, Patch, White, Wilbur, and Wilson Schools and the "at large" seats designated to be filled by a president, chaplain, and staff judge advocate representative. Votes for the "at large" positions may be cast at any of the eight schools where parents have a child in attendance.

Positions on the board to be filled this year and current nominees for those positions are:

At Large Positions

President - Col. Miguel A. Garcia

Chaplain representative - Lt. Col. David McSwain

SJA representative - Maj. William Allinder

School representatives

Wilbur School - SFC William E. Ray

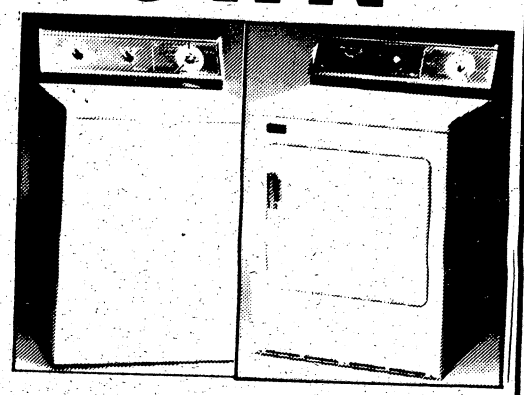
McBride School - Mrs. Mary Alice Stacey

Wilson School - SFC Anthony M. Brown, SGM Carl W. Littlejohn, MSgt. Michael J. Stranz, SFC Warren R. Thomas

Faith School - Col. Carl Ernst

Patch School - Mrs. Anne Mace

White School - Mrs. Sarah McCrary



The Dexter School Representative (Mrs. Tandy Shields) and the Loyd School Representative (Mrs. Elaine Kendall) have one more year remaining on their two-year terms of office. All eligible voters from these two schools may cast their votes for the "at large" positions at these respective schools unless they have a child in another Fort Benning School and cast their vote for those positions while there.

An absentee ballot procedure is provided for parents/guardians who qualify. For information on this procedure you must contact your child's school(s) prior to election day.

Bicycling maintenance, rules of the road keys to safe riding

Safety Office

Now that the snow is gone and spring is officially here, more bicycles will start to appear on the roadways again. Maintenance of your bicycle and knowing the rules of the road are essential in helping prevent bike-related mishaps.

National Bike Safety Week begins Sunday, and to help decrease the number of bike related injuries and deaths, Robert Heglund, an Assistant Vice President in Liberty Mutual Insurance Company's Loss Prevention department, has the following suggestions.

- Select a bicycle that fits your size and need. You should be able to reach the pedals comfortably and the saddle shouldn't be higher than your hip. Every bicycle should be equipped with a bell or horn, headlight, tail-light, front and rear reflectors, pedal reflectors, and reflective material on both sdies.
- Keep your bicycle in good working condition. Clean and grease the chain, tighten the handlebars, check tires and brakes. Have reflectors and lights in working order.
- Wear a helmet. At night wear light-colored clothing.
- Know and obey the regulations governing bicycle riding in your community.
- Ride single file on the right side of the road with the flow of traffic—never facing it. Never make a sudden change of course.
- Obey all traffic signs, signals and lights. Always use proper hand signals and always look before turning; otherwise, keep hands on handlebars.
- Liberty Mutual also advises that you give right of way to pedestrians. Slow down at intersections, look both ways before crossing. Give a clear warning (bell, horn or voice) whenever needed for safety.
- Never carry passengers.
- Watch out for cars pulling into traffic or car doors being opened suddenly.
- Never ride on express or limited access highways. Avoid practices such as hitching rides, weaving in traffic, stunt riding and racing.

Power lawn mowers can be hazardous to your health

Safety Office

As the weather becomes warmer, millions of power lawn mowers will be "fired-up" to begin the annual grass-cutting ritual. Unfortunately, this increased exposure, according to the Consumer Product Safety Commission, results in approximately 50,000 injuries every year.

Besides cutting grass rotary power mowers also cut fingers and toes with high speed blades that can also propel objects through the air with flesh-piercing velocity. Additionally, hot exposed mufflers on power mowers can burn unwary users; gasoline used in power mowers can result in fires or explosions; and electricity (which some mowers use) can shock — sometimes fatally.

Power mower accidents tend to result in amputations, cuts, burns or deep-penetrating wounds from flying projectiles. These dangers exist not only in the machines, but also in your yard and in you—the person responsible for safe usage and maintenance.

Whether you are cutting grass in your unit or in your own back yard, the following practical rules should be observed to prevent power lawn mower accidents:

- Safety shoes, eye, and hearing protection, will be worn when mowing.
- Inspect and clear the area before mowing — remove all rocks, glass, metal, foreign objects, and unnecessary personnel.
- Be sure the mower is in safe working order. All guards must be in place and all controls operable. Blades should be sharpened when needed.
- Fill the tank before starting the job. Never refuel a hot mower.
- Do not perform any maintenance with the engine running. Do not touch the blade until the spark plug wire is disconnected.
- Do not use a power mower on steep grades, wet grass or rough terrain.
- Do not pull the mower toward you or tip the mower while cutting.

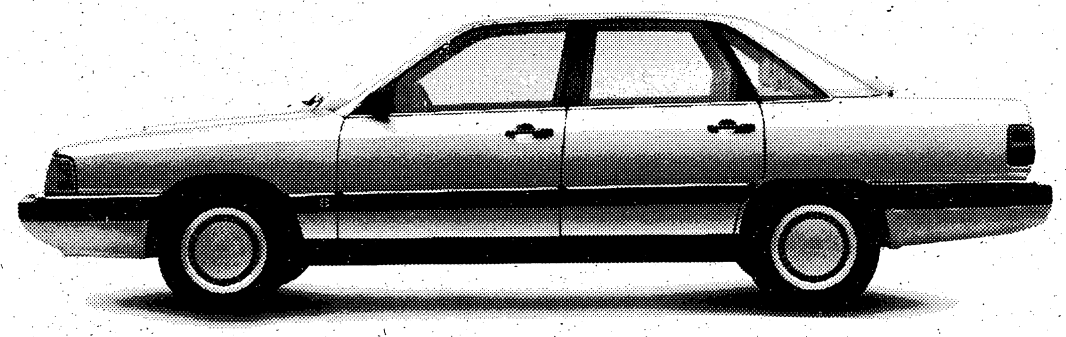
Merry month of May dangerous

Safety Office

Looking back over the accident records, the Fort Benning Safety Office determined that May is a dangerous month for post soldiers.

Fifty-one soldiers have been killed in accidents in May over the past 22 years. This message should alert all soldiers that they should be particularly careful this month.

How did all these soldiers lose their lives? By far most of them (40) were killed from two causes. One of those was that old reliable "killer," the privately owned vehicle, which accounted for 29 deaths. Drowning killed another 11. That's 40 of the 51 killed in one of two ways.



This message should give the intuitive reader three important ideas to remember. One — May is bad news for soldiers; Two — I better apply even more rigidly all those good driving tips I picked up in the Defensive Driving Course; Three — If I go near the water I'd better follow all those water safety instructions I've heard about.

Let this message be read and heeded by everyone of our soldiers. Let's get through this May without a single fatality. We've accomplished this only four times since 1963. Let's all go for a fifth May without an accidental soldier death.

NCO convicted of sexual abuse of stepdaughters

by Charles Coffin
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

The problem of sexual abuse of children was once again the focus of a general courts-martial at Fort Benning this week when a career noncommissioned officer was sentenced to nine years in prison for sexually molesting his 10- and 13-year-old stepdaughters.

The 25-year-old sergeant, a member of the 598th Maintenance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, was tried and convicted May 12, by Col. Sebert Trail, military judge, of two counts of rape of a child under the age of 16 years; one count of attempted rape; three counts of oral sodomy; three counts of indecent acts with a child under the age of 16 years; and one count of adultery.

Evidence presented by the prosecutor, Capt. Jack Spradley, showed that the sergeant met the mother of his stepchildren in California in 1977 and lived with them for five years before marrying their mother in 1982. Spradley showed the sergeant began having sexual intercourse with his then 10-year-old stepdaughter while stationed in Germany in 1983. Spradley showed the sergeant was assigned to the 36th Engineer Group at Fort Benning May 17, 1985. Spradley said that beginning in September 1985 and continuing through Jan. 7, the sergeant raped and sodomized his 10- and 13-year-old stepdaughters every Tuesday and Thursday nights while his wife was away from home attending night school classes. During this same period of time he committed an act of adultery with a 16-year-old girl living next door.

Spradley proved that the sergeant's wife noticed her daughters were behaving strangely and when questioned, they disclosed to her that their stepfather had been raping and sodomizing them repeatedly over a long period of time. The wife reported her discovery to the local Criminal Investigation Division Office and agents began an investigation into the matter that led to the charges against the sergeant.

Spradley called Dr. Ellen Speyer, a child psychologist specializing in child sexual abuse cases, as a government witness. Speyer testified the 13-year-old child was a patient at the Bradley Psychiatric Hospital and would need intensive therapy and counseling over an extended period of time in order to cope with the emotional scars and trauma of repeated sexual abuse. Speyer said the child was suicidal with a pronounced personality disorder, and suffered from deep depression. Speyer said these were common symptoms in the abused child. Speyer said the 10-year-old girl was a Bradley Center patient and suffered many of the same mental problems as her 13-year-old sister.

Spradley next called Dr. Walter Skinner, a psychologist from Georgia State University in Atlanta, who testified the 13-year-old girl suffered from an "oppositional disorder," which he described as a stunting of a child's development in maturity, personality and intelligence, and all caused by sexual abuse. He said the child required long-term therapy.

The sergeant's civilian defense attorney, William Mason, called the sergeant as a witness and he testified his father was a transexual from Long Beach, Calif., who dressed in women's clothes and worked at a pornographic bookstore. The sergeant said he was only 16 years old when he began living with his stepchildren's mother and that she was 10 years older than he was. Mason had the sergeant identify photographs that showed the sergeant's father in a dress, wearing eyeshadow, lipstick and high-heeled shoes.

In his closing argument to the court, Spradley called the sergeant a thief who had robbed his children of their innocence and youth. He said society had deplored and punished incest and sexual abuse of children. Spradley said the court should consider the emotional scars these children would carry for the rest of their lives because of their stepfather's criminal behavior. Spradley said the sergeant should be imprisoned for a lengthy period in order to pay his debt to society and also to deter others who may entertain the same criminal intentions.

Mason, in his closing argument, urged the court to consider that the sergeant had been brought up in a family headed by a father who wore dresses, high-heeled shoes, lipstick and eyeshadow. Mason said the sergeant was an abused child who had grown up to be an abusive parent. Mason said the great age difference between the sergeant and his wife prevented the sergeant from ever assuming the father figure role in the family. Mason urged the court to exercise moderation in announcing sentence.

After hearing all the evidence, Trail sentenced the sergeant to nine years in prison, reduction to private, total forfeiture of all pay and allowances and a dishonorable discharge.

Preventing heat injury can keep you out of hot water

Story and photo by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

According to Fort Benning Preventive Medicine officials, heat is the number one danger to soldiers during the summer months.

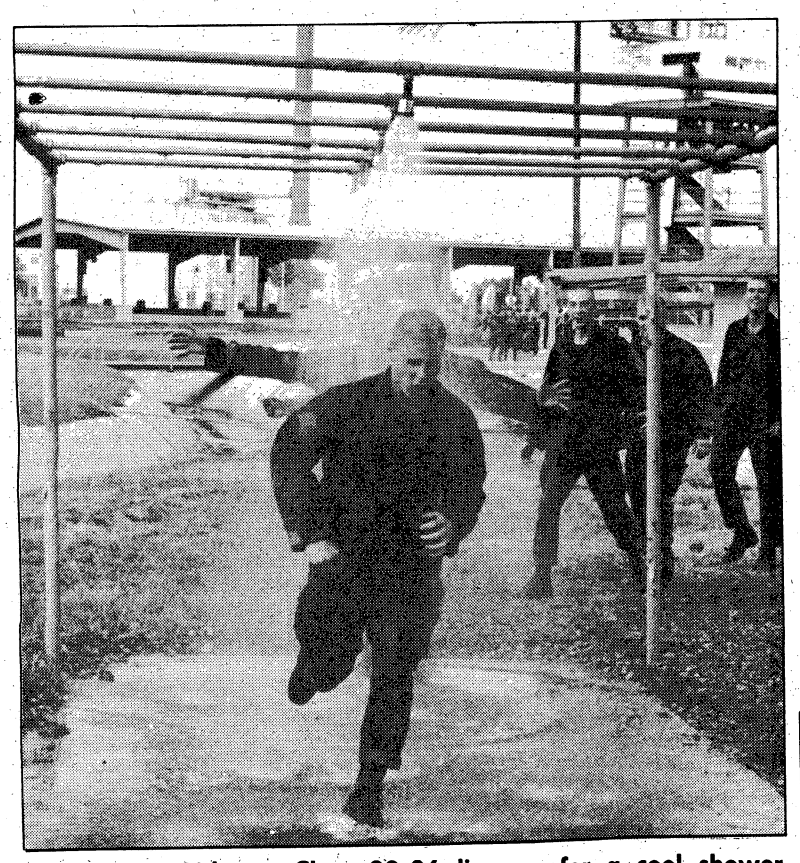
"Last year there were 268 heat injuries reported, 16 requiring hospitalization," said Maj. Anthony Aiken, environmental specialist at Preventive Medicine. "And many of these could have been prevented."

Aiken said the key to prevention lies in education.

"Commanders should ensure that units receive hot weather injury prevention classes before the onset of hot weather," he said. "In the field, they should make sure soldiers have enough drinking water that is readily available to them."

Aiken said most heat injuries at Fort Benning occur before 7 a.m. because of high humidity. These can be avoided by making sure soldiers are properly acclimated and on proper work/rest cycles.

"Reserve and National Guard soldiers are especially vulnerable to heat injuries, because they are not used to the temperatures here," Aiken said. "For two weeks they should slowly build up their endurance until their bodies get used to it before taking PT tests."



Commanders should make sure their soldiers are drinking three to four quarts of water daily.

"Soldiers get tired of drinking plain water and don't like the taste of it," he said. "A couple of swigs quenches their thirst and they don't think they need more."

One thing that makes the water much more palatable is cooling it. "If you can get ice to your troops, they're much more willing to drink water," Aiken said.

Commanders should also make sure soldiers are getting three balanced meals a day, to ensure they're getting adequate salt and maintaining the body's electrolyte balance.

Aiken said commanders decide what uniform is appropriate in the work environment, and should use common sense to decide when it's time to remove the overblouse.

Students in Airborne Class 30-86 line up for a cool shower during ground week training.

WBGT index

Fort Benning uses the Wet Bulb Globe Temperature index as its heat alert warning system. The WBGT is divided into four heat categories. The temperature readings are taken from a wet bulb, which combines the temperature and humidity and thus gives a reading about five to 10 degrees lower than actual temperatures.

Upon notification of heat category three, all strenuous physical training on post must be curtailed for unacclimatized soldiers.

Examples of strenuous training include unit runs, road marches, drill involving push-ups, sit-ups, pull-ups and timed obstacle and confidence courses. Commanders should pay particular attention to training activities that involve vigorous use of large muscle groups for more than 15 minutes without rest.

Strenuous physical activity should be curtailed for all personnel during heat category four.

Readings are taken hourly by Preventive Medicine from May 1 to Sept. 30.

Aiken said commanders in the field who are unable to call Preventive Medicine for the reading should do their own readings using the WBT (BOTSBALL) Kit.

"Even if commanders have access to Preventive Medicine's hourly report, it's still a good idea to take their own reading," Aiken said. "Bulb readings are different depending on the elevation and vegetation of their location."

Those units that don't have the kit can get one by putting in a consolidated request to the Logistics Division, Attention: HSXB-B, MEDDAC.

Types of injuries

There are four types of heat injuries that commanders and soldiers should be trained to recognize and treat.

●Sunburn is characterized by redness, blistering and peeling of the skin. It can be easily avoided by limiting exposure of the skin to sunlight and using sun screening products. Treatment of sunburn includes using skin lotions and topical anesthetics and staying out of the sun.

●Heat cramps come on suddenly and are the result of inadequate water and salt. The victim has moderate to severe muscle cramps, his skin feels hot and moist and his temperature may be normal or high. To treat, give the victim two crushed salt tablets per canteen of water. Heat cramps are easily prevented by ensuring that soldiers get adequate salt in their diets and drink plenty of water.

●Victims of heat stroke and heat exhaustion should be evacuated to a hospital for immediate treatment.

Heat exhaustion victims have clammy, pale skin, a weak, rapid pulse, and a temperature of less than 103 degrees Fahrenheit. Many victims faint temporarily. While awaiting evacuation, victims should be removed to the shade, their clothes loosened, legs elevated, limbs massaged and generally allowed to cool down. They can be given water if they are alert and conscious.

Heat stroke victims have hot, dry skin, a rapid pulse, constricted pupils, elevated blood pressure and a temperature above 103 degrees Fahrenheit. Many victims go into a deep coma. This victim needs to cool down and emergency treatment measures should include a cold water or alcohol bath, fanning and removing the victim to shade, while awaiting evacuation.

Aiken said the most important thing to do for heat injury victims is to get them medical attention fast.

"Don't try to play doctor in the field. Get a MEDEVAC and get them to the hospital immediately," he said.

The Preventive Medicine office provides briefings on heat injury prevention for post units and activities. To make an appointment, call 545-1144/3577.

Microwave ovens energizing American eats

by Anthony C. Aiken
Preventive Medicine Services

Microwaves are used to detect speeding cars, to send telephone and television communications, and to treat muscle soreness. Industry uses microwaves to dry and cure plywood, to cure rubber and resins, to raise bread and doughnuts, and to cook potato chips. But the most common consumer use of microwave energy is in microwave ovens. The use of microwave ovens has soared tremendously in the past decade.

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has regulated the manufacture of microwave ovens since 1971. On the basis of current knowledge about microwave radiation, the FDA believes that microwave ovens that meet the standards and are used according to the manufacturer's instructions are safe. The Environmental Health Section, Preventive Medicine Services, Martin Army Community Hospital, inspects all of the microwave ovens on the installation to ensure operation efficiency.

Electromagnetic power

What is microwave radiation? Microwaves are a form of "electromagnetic" radiation; that is, they are waves of electrical and magnetic energy moving together through space. Electromagnetic radiation ranges from the energetic x-rays to the less energetic radio frequency waves used in broadcasting. Microwaves fall into the radio frequency band of electromagnetic radiation. Microwaves should not be confused with x-rays, which are more powerful.

Microwaves have three characteristics that allow them to be used in cooking: 1) they are reflected by metal; 2) they pass through glass, plastic, paper, and similar materials; and 3) they are absorbed by foods.

When cooking with microwaves, microwaves are produced inside the oven by an electron tube called a magnetron. The microwaves bounce back and forth within the interior until they are absorbed by food. Microwaves cause water molecules in food to vibrate, producing frictioned heat that cooks the food. That's why foods high in water content, like vegetables, can be cooked more quickly than other foods. The microwave energy is changed to heat as soon as it is absorbed by food, thus it cannot make food radioactive or "contaminated".

Cooks differently

Although heat is produced directly in the food, microwave ovens do not cook from the "inside out." When thick foods like roasts are cooked, the outer layers are heated and cooked primarily by microwaves while the inside is cooked mainly by the slower conduction of heat from the hot outer layers.

Microwave cooking can be more energy efficient than conventional cooking because foods cook faster and the energy heats only the food, not the oven compartment. Microwave cooking does not reduce the nutritional value of foods any more than conventional cooking. In fact, foods cooked in the microwave oven may keep more of their vitamins and minerals, because microwave ovens can cook more quickly and without adding water.

Some plastic containers should not be used in a microwave oven, as they can be melted by the heat of the food inside. Metal pans or aluminum foil should not be used in a microwave oven, as the microwaves are reflected off these materials causing the food to cook unevenly and possibly damaging the oven.

Limited uses

The FDA recommends that microwave ovens not be used in home canning. It is believed that neither microwave oven nor conventional ovens produce or maintain temperatures high enough to kill the harmful bacteria that occur in some foods while canning.

All microwave ovens made after October 1971 are covered by a radiation safety standard enforced by the FDA. The standard limits the amount of microwaves that can leak from an oven throughout its lifetime. This limit is 5 milliwatts of microwave radiation per square centimeter (Mw/cm2) at approximately 2 inches from the oven surface. This is far below the level known to harm people. The standard also requires all ovens to have two independent interlock systems that stop production of microwaves the moment the latch is released or the door opened. The noise that many ovens continue to make after the door is opened is usually the fan. The noise does not mean that microwaves are being produced.

All ovens made since October 1971 must have a label stating that they meet the safety standard. In addition, the FDA requires that all ovens made after October 1975 have a label explaining procautions for use.

Human effects

Much research has been done on how microwaves might affect the human body. It is known that microwave radiation can heat body tissue the same way it heats food. Exposure to high levels of microwaves can cause a painful burn. The lens of the eye is very sensitive to intense heat, and exposure to high levels of microwaves can cause cataracts. The most common injury from microwave ovens it not from the microwave radiation, but burns associated from touching the hot containers when removing them from the oven.

At one time there was concern that leakage from microwave ovens could interfere with certain electronic cardiac pacemakers. This problem has been largely resolved since pacemakers are now designed so they are shielded against such electrical interference. However, patients with pacemakers may wish to consult their physicians.

Safety tested

There is little cause for concern about excess microwaves leaking from ovens unless the door hinges, latch, or seals are damaged, or if the oven was made before 1971. The Preventive Medicine Service tests all of the microwave ovens on the installation, and maintains records of survey results. All offices or activities that obtain a microwave oven are requested to notify the Preventive Medicine Service prior to using to ensure proper operating efficiency. Finally, the following tips on microwave oven operation are very helpful for operating a safe microwave oven:

Usage tips

- Follow the manufacturer's instruction manual for recommended operating procedures and safety precautions for the model.
- Don't operate an oven if the door does not close firmly or is bent, warped, or otherwise damaged.
- Never operate an oven if you have reason to believe it will continue to operate with the door open.
- To add to the margin of safety already built into the oven, don't stand directly against an oven (and don't allow children to do this) for long (or repeated) periods of time while the oven is operating.
- Some ovens should not be operated when empty.

Questions pertaining to the proper use of microwave ovens should be directed to the Environmental Health Section, Preventive Medicine Service, at 545-3577/3518.

Awareness is key to safe kite flying

Safety Office

Many children are killed or injured every year while engaging in kite flying. Falls while climbing to retrieve an entangled kite, running into the path of a motor vehicle while watching the kite, and burns received while attempting to "rescue" a kite from an overhead wire are just some of the accident patterns associated with kite flying.

The following measures are recommended to make kite flying both safe and enjoyable for your children:

- Fly the kite in a safe area.
- Select a level, open space where the wind has a chance to level off and blow steadily.
- Take advantage of recreational areas particularly adapted to this activity.
- Do not fly the kite from the top of buildings.
- Fly your kite only in dry weather.
- Don't climb up a tree or pole to try to get a kit from an overhead wire or roof. Also, avoid tryin to knock the kite down with stones.
- Use a safe string. It should never be of wire o tinsel cord. The cord should never be used whe wet; your kite may touch a high tension line.
- Do not fly the kite over radio and televisio aerials.
- Never purposely discard a kite to fly away t who knows where. It is hard to predict wher it will land and what unsafe condition it ma cause.
- Be aware of the area around you. Streets holes, trees, and even sidewalks become seriou hazards if you are not aware of them.
- Leave an appropriate distance between yo and other people, especially if they are kitin too. Collisions are likely to occur when runnin while looking upward.

NCOES foundation for building careers

Military Personnel Center

The Noncommissioned Officer Education System is one of the most important parts of the Enlisted Personnel Management System. Promotions depend on completing certain courses in the NCOES program.

"NCOES provides enlisted soldiers with the best professional Development to climb the promotional ladder of success," said SGM James B. Young of the Military Personnel Center's NCO Education System.

According to Young, two professional development study groups recently reviewed the program. The Army has adopted many recommendations to improve and simplify NCOES.

The NCOES program has been streamlined into four levels, with just one course at each level. They are: primary level, Primary Leadership Development Course; basic level, Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course; advanced level, Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course; and senior level, U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy.

"The Primary Technical Course and Basic Technical Course were combined and renamed the Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course," Young said.

"Also, the First Sergeant Course and other senior sergeants' courses were moved from NCOES to functional education on Jan. 1," he continued. A functional course teaches a critical skill needed to perform a specific job, such as that of first sergeant.

At the primary level, effective July 1, soldiers will have to have completed the Primary Leadership Development Course before they can be promoted to staff sergeant. Sergeants on the staff sergeant promotion list who have not completed the course as of June 30 will be removed from the list. The only exceptions will be soldiers who completed the Basic NCO Course (Combat Arms) before Jan. 1, 1986. They are exempt from this requirement.

Effective Oct. 1, a soldier must attend primary level training to be eligible for attendance at the basic level.

The basic level of NCOES has two categories. The Army major commands manage the Basic NCO Course (Combat Arms). MILPERCEN manages the BNCOC (Combat Support/Combat Service Support) under the automated Student/Trainee Management System-Enlisted Phase II (STRAMS-E2).

"Both courses provide junior enlisted leaders with the leadership and technical training they need to educate and supervise subordinates," Young explained.

The Army will discontinue the Correspondence Course Program for the Advanced NCO Course, effective Oct. 1,. Soldiers who have been selected to attend the Resident course must attend it unless they will have completed nonresident training before Oct. 1.

Another change at the advanced level requires soldiers to complete the Advanced NCO Course to be eligible for promotion to master sergeant.

"At the senior level, selection board procedures will change, beginning with the April board," Young said. "That board will select 500 primary attendees, an increase of 40, for the Sergeants Major Academy. It will also select 100 alternates, a decrease of 50, and 250 soldiers for enrollment in the Corresponding Studies Program, an increase of 50."

According to Young, the changes in the NCOES program were made through a coordinated effort by the entire Army, with feedback from privates through generals.

Army travellers should be wary of TDY 'freebies'

by Patrick Drury
Special to the Bayonet

Jack Jetsetter and Sally Freeride work for Training and Doctrine Command.

Their official duties require frequent travel within the United States and abroad. If you look carefully, you might see yourself in this "accounting" of their adventures.

The Frequent Flyer Gets a Free Ride. Jack Jetsetter spends much of his leisure time flying from resort to resort. During the past year, Jack has accumulated sufficient air miles to qualify as a "frequent-flyer" with two airline companies.

As a frequent-flyer, Jack has received a free, round-trip ticket from Eagle Airlines and a discount coupon from Air Arctic for reduced airfare. The former was based solely on his temporary duty trips, while the latter was based on a combination of TDY and personal trips.

Jack also has received cash from Eagle on three occasions while traveling TDY. He pocketed $500 when he was "bumped" from an overbooked flight, $250 when he voluntarily vacated his seat on an overbooked flight, and a $1000 prize in a lottery open only to Eagle, ticket-holding passengers.

For Jack Jetsetter, the friendly skies have just become a lot friendlier.

Champagne is a girl's best friend. Like Jack, Sally Freeride also has had a good year. She frequently stays at the Fleabag Hotel chain when TDY and, as a result, has received a half-price coupon that entitles her (and only her) to stay at any Fleabag for 25 nights at half price.

Since Sally usually rents from Crash Rent-A-Car when TDY, she also received free luggage valued at $75 and a free calendar valued at $3.99.

Her largest prize, however, came from a 10-kilometer race she entered (after duty hours) while on TDY for the government. The race was sponsored by Lindburgh Airlines and Sally won a case of champagne in a random drawing following the race. Although she found out about the race through an advertisement distributed on the flight, the race and random drawing were open to the general public.

Can Jack and Sally keep their booty? The answer might surprise you.

Losers. Jack's free fun-in-the-sun will have to wait. His round-trip ticket from Eagle and discount coupon from Air Arctic must be turned in to the government. Likewise, Sally's half-price coupon and luggage may not be retained.

Even though Jack's discount coupon was a result of both government and personal travel, a relatively recent rule prevents him from retaining it. A few years ago, Jack could have kept the discount coupon and merely paid the government for the portion of the coupon that was attributable to the expenditure of the government funds. Not anymore!

Jack is also unlucky in the lottery department. The $1000 prize cannot be retained because the lottery was open to Eagle ticket-holding passengers only, and Jack flew Eagle as a result of his TDY.

Keepers. Sally will be able to keep the calendar, however, because it is a promotional item that is valued at less than $5. Likewise, she can toast her good fortune with the case of champagne because the race was open to the general public and her participation was a personal endeavor, not official business.

If these distinctions seem somewhat baffling, here's an easy rule to follow.

If you receive a gift or benefit from a private source as a result of performing an official duty, you are required to account for it. These items are viewed as having been received by the employee on behalf of the government and are not considered to belong to the employee.

The rationale behind this rule is two-fold: to prevent double reimbursement to the employee from the government and a private source, (i.e. the employee is alrady being paid by the government for performance of official duties), and to avoid a conflict of interest.

The rules explained here can be found in paragraphs C2300 and M1200 of the DoD Joint Travel Regulations, and in Title 41 of the Code of Federal Requlations

Youth Activities: Registration for Youth Activities' Day Camp and swimming lessons begns today. Sign up will be in Building 1054 on McIver Street from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Children ages 6 to 12 whose parent is an active-duty or retired soldier may attend the day camp. Those 4 to 18 years old are eligible for swimming lessons.

Fees are $28 a child for day camp and $20 a child for swimming lessons.

Parents must show a birth certificate, identification card, medical card or passport for the child at the time of registration.

For more information, call Youth Activities at 545-3070.

Engineers meet: Reservations for the monthly meeting of the Society of the American Military Engineers must be made before noon today.

Ricke M. Jenkins, of Marietta, Ga., is scheduled to speak at the meeting set for Wednesday at the Fort Benning Officers' Club beginning at 11:30 a.m. Jenkins is planning to speak on "Earth — Coupled Ground Loops," which will include a discussion of the design, installation procedures and methods of closed loop earth water source heat pumps.

Fashion show: The Shrine Club will present its annual fund raising fashion show and disco at the Zodiac Lounge on Buena Vista Road at 9 p.m. The donation is $2.50 advance sale tickets and $3 at the door. All Shriners and the public are invited. For more information, call Sgt. Moody at 545-5359.

TOMORROW

Reservations are required and can be made by calling the Georgia Extension Service at 571-4793.

Family support group: Army Community Service sponsors a support group for military families with handicapped children or spouses. The purpose of the group is to provide emotional support, assist with problems and meet others in similar circumstances.

The group meets every Thursday from 7 to 8 p.m. in Building 2642 on Collins Loop. For more information, call Alicia Herrara at 545-1490 or 682-1377.

Announcements

Blood drives: The Department of Pathology at Martin Army Community Hospital will have community blood drives on the following dates from 8:30 a.m. to noon at these locations:

May 21, Conference Room, Building 74.

May 28, 2nd MASH dayroom, Building 2832.

Telephones monitored: The members of the Fort Benning community are reminded that all telephone calls to the Martin Army Community Hospital emergency room and ambulance section are monitored and recorded for accuracy of medical information.

Otter/Caribou reunion: The first reunion of the Army otter/caribou crew association is scheduled for August 15 to 17 in Columbus. All former crewmembers and friends of these aircraft are invited to attend. For more information, contact Sam Pinkston, 1145 Watson Drive, Columbus, Ga. 31907 or call 563-1264.

Safety classes: Beginning tomorrow, the Arts and Crafts Automotive facilities on post, Building 2843 and Building 9064, will conduct automotive safety classes. There are plans to make these classes mandatory in the future.

Car care center: The Fort Benning Car Care Center, Building 1624 on Main Post is now open for service and parts.

Certified mechanics are on duty six days a week. But, if you like to do your own work, they have all of the the necessary parts. If they are not in stock, they can usually get them the same day or overnight.

Road service and towing are available six days a week. The number to call is 682-3467.

The hours of operation are:

Sunday, 10 a.m.-4 p.m. (Parts only)

Monday-Friday, 7:30 a.m.-6 p.m.

Saturday, 9 a.m.-5 p.m.

Domestic violence: The Concern, Assistance, Resources and Education group is looking for volunteers to help victims of domestic violence on Fort Benning.

Domestic violence is everyone's problem. You can show you really care by becoming a C.A.R.E. committee volunteer. Help the Army Family Advocacy Program staff and operate the Fort Benning Battered Wives' Shelter. For information call Nancy Braye at 545-1169/7517 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Memorial Day schedule: The following post exchange retail facilities will be open normal hours on May 26, Memorial Day: Main store, Mini Mall, Custer Terrace, Sand Hill Mall, Mall Service Station.

These food concessions will be open normal hours: Mall Snack Bar, Baskin Robbins, Burger King, Mall Bowling Alley, Main Post Bowling Alley.

Troopers hone their soldier skills during Common Task Training, a test of mettle

Story and photos by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment PAO

In view of Army requirements, the soldiers of Headquarters Company and 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment are laying their basic soldiering skills on line for review.

Through May 23, as many as 700 soldiers will demonstrate their competency in 17 different tasks during Common Task Training (CTT).

And what's to be gained from the test results?

According to SFC Dan Mullens, assistant noncommissioned officer of CTT, the feedback will give company commanders some idea of their soldiers level of proficiency, as well as point out their weaknesses on various tasks.

In either case, it will help commanders to better orient future training to accommodate troop needs, Mullens explained.

So far, some 400 soldiers have been tested, and approximately 75 percent of this group has done well — receiving a "go" on their first attempt to do the task, said SFC Alvin Fondren, NCOIC of CTT.

While it is important to receive a "go," Fondren said, "it is even more important that the soldier walks away from each station knowing what he needs to know about the task."

Thus, immediate corrections are made if the soldier is graded a no-go, Fondren added.

It appears that all who get involved with CTT benefit from the training.

According to Fondren, for the soldier it is refresher training, and in the process of testing the soldier, the tester reinforces what he needs to know about soldiering.

Currently, E-7s and below are required to undergo CTT annually.

However, it wouldn't hurt to have new officers undergo the training, according to Fondren.

He said that CTT woul be beneficial to may young officers who are inexperienced in these tasks.

"CTT could help them to become better platoon leaders and commanders."

Among those skills tested this year are identify armored vehicles, send a radio message, identify terrain features, locate a grid coordinate, give a magnetic azimuth, camouflage self and equipment, put on, wear and perform maintenance on an M-17 protective mask, decontaminate skin and equipment, put on MOPP gear, identify chemical and biological hazards, react to a nuclear hazard, identify nerve agent symptoms and administer antidote, apply field/pressure dressing, treat for shock, identify and treat for heat injuries, and prevent frostbite.

Credit card use in exchanges praised all around

by Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

Some military personnel managers are concerned about people who might get into trouble by misusing credit cards in post exchanges. But the top noncommissioned officers of the four services think it's a great leap forward in quality of life programs for service members and their families around the world.

And, they don't think soldiers, airmen, sailors or Marines and their families will abuse the privilege.

Post exchanges throughout the United States started accepting Master Card and Visa Jan. 6. Overseas exchanges are expected to start accepting credit cards by midyear.

Chief Master Sergeant of the Air Force Sam Parish thinks "Congress made a tremendous move by authorizing exchanges to accept credit cards. It places our people on a par with contemporary society in being able to use credit cards in our facilities.

"If our people are not allowed to use credit cards in the base exchange, they're going to use them outside," said Parish. "We've done a pretty good job in providing financial counseling for our people, starting in basic training."

"I lobbied for credit card use a long time ago when I was statioed in Bad Toltz, Germany (1979-81)," said Sergeant Major of the Army Glen E. Morrell. "Credit cards have been around for years and we've been behind the times in establishing their use in our facilities. By prohibiting credit card use in our exchanges, we denied soldiers and their families the opportunity to make good buys.

"When soldiers go downtown to make their credit card purchases, they probably pay too much," Morrell pointed out.

"Some people are worried about soldiers overextending their budget, but after careful investigation we find that many soldiers already use credit cards within the limit of their means," Morrell emphasized.

"It is good for morale," he added. "It gives our soldiers a chance to take advantage of good buys in our exchanges and provides an opportunity for them to get a better product at a reduced price."

Sergeant Major of the Marine Corps Robert E. Cleary said: "I'm all for quality of life improvements, and this could be one if it's properly managed. The Marines and dependents should be schooled so that they understand their responsibilities."

Using credit cards in exchange sales stores "is a positive step forward and it opens new resources for our enlisted people," said William H. Packlett, Master Chief Petty Officer of the Navy. "It brings the post exchange system into sync with commercial retail stores. And it's another contribution to the quality of life."

Packlett doesn't foresee any major problems with troops misusing credit cards. "The percentage of problems should be relatively low because there are a lot of safeguards built into the system," he said. "A person who has bad credit will not be given a credit card to start with."

Defense officials selected four contractors who will provide banking and processing for Visa and Master Card credit card sales in military exchanges throughout the continental United States, Hawaii and Alaska.

Security Pacific National Bank of Glendale, Calif., was selected for the Army and Air Force Exchange System and Navy Regional Exchange systems in the San Diego and Oakland/Auburn, Calif., areas. The Chemical Bank of Jericho, N.Y., will handle the program for the remaining Navy Regional Exchange systems. Sears Payment System, Inc., of Lincolnshire, Ill., will support the East and West Coast Marine Corps Exchange systems.

The cards can be used in main exchanges, clothing sales stores and some exchange concessions and convenience stores. However, shoppers can't use them for such personal services as haircuts, shoeshines, theater tickets, meals in restaurants or to pay bowling fees.

Visa and Master Cards are the only ones approved for use in exchanges. However, plans call for adding other nationally recognized credit cards, such as American Express, Diners Club and Carte Blanche to the selection later this year.

Officials emphasized that credit cards issued by the contractors are not the only ones acceptable in exchanges. "Any Master Card or Visa will be accepted," he added.

DoD officials estimate that credit card use will add between $20 and $30 million to exchange coffers. About half of that wi be "rebated" to customer through contributions to morale welfare and recreation activ ties.

"We're not considering credi card for use on ships at sea be cause there is no way to proces them," said a spokesman for th Navy Exchange Service. "Som people might say we're penaliz ing our people aboard ships, bu we have to have an electron link to validate the credi cards."

Was God silent during Holocaust tragedy?

Editor's note: The following is the remarks made by Chaplain (Capt.) Craig Allen at the Holocaust Memorial service May 6 at the Infantry Center chapel.

On a cellar wall in Cologne, Germany where Jews hid from Nazis was found the following poem:

"I believe in the sun even when it is not shining,

I believe in love even when feeling it not,

I believe in God even when He is silent."

Silence . . .

Is God ever really silent? And if so, how do we interpret His silence? Eli Weizel was possibly the first to capture in his writing the unavoidable inner tension one feels when dealing with the Holocaust; namely, that it is an event in human history so profoundly unbelievable, so distant and yet so personal that we are simultaneously numbed into silence and yet uncontrolably and unexplainably compelled to speak. In many ways our presence here today reflects that tension.

We are here today for three reasons: To remember, to grieve, and to grow. In this case, to remember history so that we might avoid repeating it. Certainly the historical lesson is clear, that hate and prejudice, if unopposed, lead only to pain, social calamity and spiritual darkness. It has been said: "All that is necessary for the triumph for evil is for good men to do nothing." That is not a particular, but a universal lesson. As a Jew it would be easy for to personalize what the Naxis referred to as "the final solution" and, of course, to some extent that is unavoidable and I made no apologies for it. But to go solely in that direction in a forum such as this would be to completely overlook the collective tragedy of the event.

Anyone who views the Holocaust as a Jewish problem is clearly living an illusion, for the way in which a society reacts to its cultural diversity i.e. the way it treats its minorities is an unmistakable barometer of its mental health. A sick society is a national problem and ultimately the implications are universal.

I said earlier that we are also here to grieve. According to Jewish tradition, one who takes a life is as if he murdered a whole world, for not only does the individual die, but also his potential for good since man is seen as being basically good, having been created in the image of God. Hence, to take a life means to deprive the world of all he could have been as well as his offspring and their offspring. Eleven million lives! All those individual hopes and dreams that could have so profoundly influenced the course of mankind; found a cure for cancer, written a symphony or found the right words to appease an angry society. Eleven million souls deprived of the right to experience life, to enjoy a sunset or be awed by a butterfly. To destroy all those hopes and dreams is to wage war with God! Yes, we grieve today . . . and tomorrow.

But what will we do with our grief? How will be choose to respond to our pain? First of all let us never forget what happened, but also let us never become cynical about life. Man has demonstrated an unlimited capacity for good. In order to enter the main sanctuary of Yad Vashem, the Holocause memorial in Jeruselem, one must first pass through the "Corridor of the Righteous Gentile." It is a moving experience. Herein is depicted and described hundreds of individual acts of heroism; of Catholics and Protestants concealing and helping Jews, often at the cost of their lives and that of their families — men like Raul Wallenberg, Franz Jagerstatter, Alfred Delp and many others who identified evil as evil, refused to rationalize or compromise with it, and consequently often died as martyrs in Hitler's time. Not only individuals but countries as well are deserving of praise. In defiance of the occupying government the Norwegians helped thousands of Jews escape to Sweden. The King of Denmark publicly wore the Star of David and helped organize an "underground railroad" which helped funnel Jews to Sweden. Although allied with Germany, Findland's Field Marshal Mannerheim threatened to declare war on Germany if but one of Finland's 1,700 Jews were seized.

History must similarly note the heroic actions of Yugoslavia, Greece and, especially, Bulgaria whose massive public demonstrations, church involvement and military resistance finally succeeded in driving out the Germans in September, 1944.

Finally, we should never forget the Americans who lost their lives liberating the camps. I hope and pray that we Jews never lose sight of the continual presence and significance of the Righteous Gentile in our midst, upon whose basic goodness and divine inspiration we all depend and without whose support I would not be speaking today, certainly not in this forum (although let there be no doubt I would be speaking somewhere). Ultimately, if we as a nation and as a species are to move forward to grow form this collective tragedy and get on with the great work

Noncom's needed for touring Army exhibit

U.S. Army Recruiting Support Command

The U.S. Army Recruiting Support Command at Cameron Station, Virginia, is looking for qualified volunteers to join its team of exhibit-touring personnel.

Soldiers selected to be exhibit team members will tour the country 11 months of the year, manning mobile exhibits that tell the Army story and support the Army Recruiting program. The exhibits will appear at college and high school campuses, shopping malls, state and county fairs, conventions, and other public events. The normal tour of duty for exhibit team members is three years.

Because RSC team members represent the Army in close-up meetings with the public, only the most qualified applicants will be selected. Prerequisities for selection are: qualified to perform duties on extended TDY; pay grade E-5 to E-7; minimum time in service four years; outstanding personal appearance and military bearing; demonstrated physical fitness; medically fit, with no limiting profile.

Other prerequisites for selection include a de to meet the public; excellent communica skills; no record of courts-martial or recent A cle 15, financial stability; high school gradu with a GT score of 100 or higher.

Applicants for this duty must have a minimu 18 months retainability; possess a valid civi driver's license; not currently be due for an o seas tour or special assignment or have any strictive assignment limitations. Preferably, a cants will have an MOS and grade that i worldwide overage, and will not currently have ceived an enlistment or reenlistment bonus.

The final selection will be made by the Co mander, U.S. Army Recruiting Support Comma based on a records review and personal interv of applicants. Interviews will be conducted as s able applications are received.

Soldiers interested in applying for this challeng and rewarding duty should contact the RSC Ad tant, Maj. Clarence Barto, at Autovon 2 6664/6666, or Commercial (202) 274-6664.

Regrouping results in improved management

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

With the expansion of modern technology in today's Army and the need to manage it, the offices of the Information Systems Command have been consolidated for better control.

In order to control the 16 offices on Fort Benning and others Armywide more effectively, the integration under the Office of the Director began in November 1985.

"The biggest breakthroughs are not necessarily going to be in technology itself. They are going to be in how we manage technology, how we direct it, and how we use it," said Maj. Gen. John T. Myers, commander of the U.S. Army 7th Signal Command.

"It's a whole new way of doing business," Joseph W. Hawkins, director of Informations Management here said.

According to Hawkins, the new provision will save time, money and legwork by allowing those customers needing services to get those services in one office instead of going from building to building.

According to Larry Heslin, Public Affairs Officer at Fort Ritchie, Maryland, "From the Department of the Army down to every post, camp and station of the Army, this initiative will direct how information systems are managed, the driving force behind it being to unify, standardize and make efficient the processing, storage, and transfer of information. In other words, to make information available to every Army commander from the battlefield to the policy-makers in an understandable and useable form."

The Information Management controls a multitude of offices. The following offices are now under the control of the Office of the Director; the divisions of the Installation Administrative Services, the Federal Printing Plant, Administrative and Resource Management Division, Logistics, Communications and Electronics, Automation and Architecture and Plans.

The branches under these divisions are; RCA (contractor), Supply, Maintenance, Systems and Programming, Operations, Information Management Office, Telecommunication Center, Air Traffic Control and Special Operations.

According to Hawkins, customers should go about business with these offices as usual but will notice improvement in services.

"It is our goal to deliver the best possible level of information services within the resource constraints that we are all having to deal with," said Hawkins.

Holocaust

and divine partnership that remains before us, we must find a way to internalize and personalize the Holocaust, both individually and nationally.

Just as during the annual Passover festival, whose central theme is freedom, Jews are commanded to view themselves as if they personally went out of bondage from Egypt, so to must all of us here see ourselves as having personally gone out from Ausweitz or Buchenwald.

Only then will we dedicate and continually rededicate ourselves to the dignity of all life and to the preservation of the human spirit.

Perhaps nothing more fully captures the purity and worth of the human soul than an excerpt from a poem written by an unknown child from within Theresienstadt concentration camp:

"Try to open your heart to beauty; go to the woods someday and weave a wreath of memory there. Then, if the tears obscure your way . . . you'll know how wonderful it is to be alive."

VA Q & A

Veterans' Administration

Editor's note — Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q: — How long does a power of attorney designating a service organization to represent me in claims matters last?

A: — Indefinitely. You have to revoke the power of attorney or designate another service organization.

Q: — When a veteran's National Service Life Insurance endowment policy matures, must the proceeds be paid in a lump sum?

A: — There are a number of options regarding payment of proceeds. The proceeds of a matured endowment may be paid in one sum, in equal monthly installments (36 to 240), in multiples of 12, or in installments under Refund Life Income (RLI) option.

Q: — I am in the Air National Guard. How do I make an application for educational benefits from the VA?

A: — There are four forms that must be completed to establish eligibility for Reserve and Guard members. These may be obtained by calling or visiting your nearest VA regional office.

Q: — Does income from welfare or supplemental Social Security count as income to determine eligibility for a veteran to receive VA disability pension benefits?

A: — No, but it should be reported.

Q: — I am a veteran with a VA home loan under the Graduated Payment Mortgage Plan. Can I refinance my home with a level payment VA quaranteed loan and obtain a lower rate of interest?

A: — Yes. Your existing VA Graduated Payment Mortgage may be refinanced with a level payment VA guaranteed loan with a lower interest rate.

Q: — I am a service-connected disabled veteran rated 20 percent by the VA. Can I receive additional money for my dependents?

A: — No. A veteran must be rated 30 percent or higher to receive additional money for dependents.

CSM selection board convenes

Military Personnel Center

The sergeant major/command sergeant major selection board closed March 20 at the Army's Enlisted Records and Evaluation Center, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. The panel chiefs had several comments regarding the board's findings during the proceedings.

Too many senior noncommissioned officers have low General Technical aptitude area scores, although their education levels have improved since they entered active duty. The Military Personnel Center will encourage MILPERCEN look at the assignment patterns of those coming out of the Sergeants Major Academy. Many of the graduates may be reluctant to accept first and follow-on assignments because they are not troop assignments.

The panel chiefs noted that there were some trends unique to certain career management fields.

In Career Management Field II, Infantry, patterns established by NCOs resulted in repetitive tours to training centers, ROTC duties and as advisors to the Reserve components. According to the panel chiefs, such assignments do not give adequate leadership experience. MILPERCEN will closely monitor this situation.

A high number of CMF candidates declined to be considered for command sergent major. MILPERCEN will conduct a study to determine the reasons for the unusual number of declinations.

In CMF 19, Armor, the board had difficulty getting the minimum number of command sergeants major. MILPERCEN will work with the Armor School on assignment patterns and leadership opportunities to correct this situation.

The field is using too many quality Armor NCOs who are master gunner qualified on repetitive tours as master gunners. MILPERCEN will use various means of communication to publicize this problem to commanders in the field.

Suicide rate in Army increases during 1985

Army News Service

During 1985, the Army lost 116 active duty soldiers, 19 adult dependents, six dependent children, 15 Department of the Army civilians and 16 others to suicides.

While cautioning against drawing any conclusions from an apparent increase in the number of suicides, Army officials stressed that suicide is a serious Army problem.

Between 1980 and 1984, the number of active duty suicides reported was fairly constant — between 79 and 89 each year — according to Capt. Robert W. Thomas.

Thomas is a psychologist with the office of the deputy chief of staff for personnel and the Army's expert on suicide.

He said Army suicide statistics appear higher this year because they are being counted differently. For the first time, military police serious incident reports are being used in conjunction with Army casualty reports.

In addition, up until 1985, the Army only kept track of active duty suicides, said Regina McNew of the Military Police Operations Agency. This year several other categories of Army suicide were counted in arriving at the 172 total. So there is no way of knowing whether or not the actual number of suicides has increased, said Thomas.

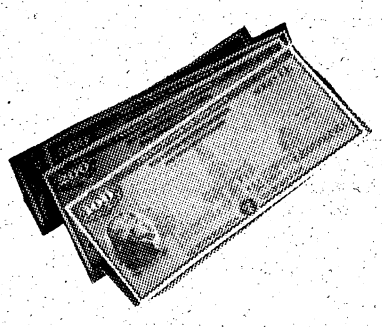
He also said he knows of no reason for an increase in Army suicides, as he does not believe Army conditions have changed significantly.

Whether or not there has been an actual increase in the number of Army suicides, the problem is a serious one. Thomas said suicide prevention is important on all levels. He stressed that leaders need to be trained to recognize warning signs and know how to react to them.

"We're hoping to encourage leaders to continue to demonstrate that the Army really cares about its members," he said.

Several steps are being taken by the Army to educate soldiers, civilian employees and family members about suicide.

In July, a videotape on how to recognize warning signs was distributed Armywide through training and support centers, and it is being heavily used, Thomas said. He said comments from the field have been positive, and that the tape is still being requested.



The tape, entitled 'Suicide Prevention CAV Production 701299DA,' is available at all installation training and audiovisual support centers.

Copies of a memorandum entitled Model Army Community Suicide Prevention Program are being distributed now to the director of personnel and community activities at each post.

The memo serves as a guide for setting up a suicide prevention task force, made up of the director of personnel and community activities, chaplain, staff judge advocate, public affairs officer, provost marshal, civilian personnel officer, alcohol and drug abuse control officer and health services employees.

Thomas said the mission of the task force is to coordinate all suicide prevention efforts and activities and to review all instances of suicide on the installation.

He said another videotape is currently in production that will teach stress management and problem solving. Thomas believes that the better an individual can minimize stress and solve problems, the less likely he is to commit suicide. Thomas expects a new DA pamphlet to be published some time in the next year, ecompassing all aspects of the Army suicide problem and programs designed to lessen it. The distribution of the pamphlet has not yet been determined, but Thomas said that plans call for it to be down to the company level.

MAC on track with Space A travel

Army News Service

Who wouldn't jump at the chance for a vacation trip — to Australia, the Caribbean, Europe, Southeast Asia, the pacific, South America or Hawaii? — for only $10 each way? With the Space A '86-'87 travel guide, active-duty and retired U.S. military personnel and their families can get full information on how to take advantage of just such an opportunity by traveling Space Available on U.S. Air Force Military Airlift Command (MAC) and U.S. Navy flights.

In Space A '86-'87, DoD personnel and their family members will find the ins and outs of regulations governing Space A flight eligibility and procedures, schedule charts for the worldwide network of military opportunity flights and firsthand accounts of the successes and pitfalls of Space A travel contributed by military travelers who preceded them on similar rates.

Complementary chapters in this greatly revised ninth edition in publisher Connie Wehrman Connor's series of travel guides for the military contain fellow travelers' firsthand reports with details on where to stay and what to watch out for in the U.S. and more than 40 foreign countries — valuable guidance for every military traveler, not just for those traveling Space A. Chapters featuring discounts on commercial airlines, trains and buses; military charter flights; hotel and motel bargains; military facilities and transient quarters in the U.S. contain more valuable tips. Listings of U.S. Embassies and Consulates and USOs will help those in need of emergency assistance aboard. Readers in search of still more information can refer to the "freebies" section for suggestions of sources of free or cheap publications, incuding foreign and U.S. State tourist organizations.

Space A '86-'87 is the newest in Connie Connor's series of travel guides. Connor, a Navy wife, has logged thousands of miles traveling "Space A" worldwide. Karen Davis, a veteran world traveler who was born and raised a Marine dependent and served a term as an Army wife, edited Apace A '86-'87 and six previous editions of Connor's guides. She is the editor of Military Travel News and has also edited Travel News, Connor's two newsletters.

You can order Space A'86-'87 from Military Travel News, Box 9, Oakton, Va. 22124, for $9.50 potage paid book rate or $10.75 first class/UPS. Get sample copies of Military Travel News and Travel News newsletters from the same address for $1.50 postage and handling.

Vietnam vet nurse writes of her war

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 11,000 women served in Vietnam, as nurses, intelligence gatherers, air traffic controllers, clerks and security personnel. Women soldiers died there, alongside the fighting men they supported.

In "Home Before Morning", Lynda Van Devanter tells what it was like to be a nurse serving in Vietnam. The day she arrived, a nurse stationed in Chu Lai was killed by a Viet Cong rocket; the first Army nurse to be killed in Vietnam as a result of enemy fire.

Van Devanter served at the 71st Evacuation Hospital in the Pleiku Province from June 1969 to June 1970. Casualties were evacuated to the hospital straight from the battlefield, and medical personnel did what they could for them before sending the patients on to Japan for further treatment.

It was medicine at its most intense, working long hours to save soldiers so shot up they had little chance of surviving. Since patients were shipped to Japan immediately after treatment at the field hospital, doctors and nurses there never knew if their patients survived.

For years she could not talk about what she had seen there, and only 10 years later, when she became involved with a veterans' group, was she able to start putting the ghosts to rest.

Besides serving as a catharsis for Van Devanter, the book is also a darn good read. It is filled with vivid details of the soldiers she treated, the people she worked with and the emotions she felt.

When the warning sirens go off and she scrambles under her bed to escape the flying shrapnel, you're right under there with her, feeling the terror.

The book raises the old questions about why Vietnam veterans were treated so shabbily when they returned from serving their country. While it doesn't provide any definitive answers, it does let us see how one soldier handled the experience.

This book is recommended reading for anyone who has forgotten the horror of war. It reminds us that there is nothing glorious about killing, suffering or being shot at.

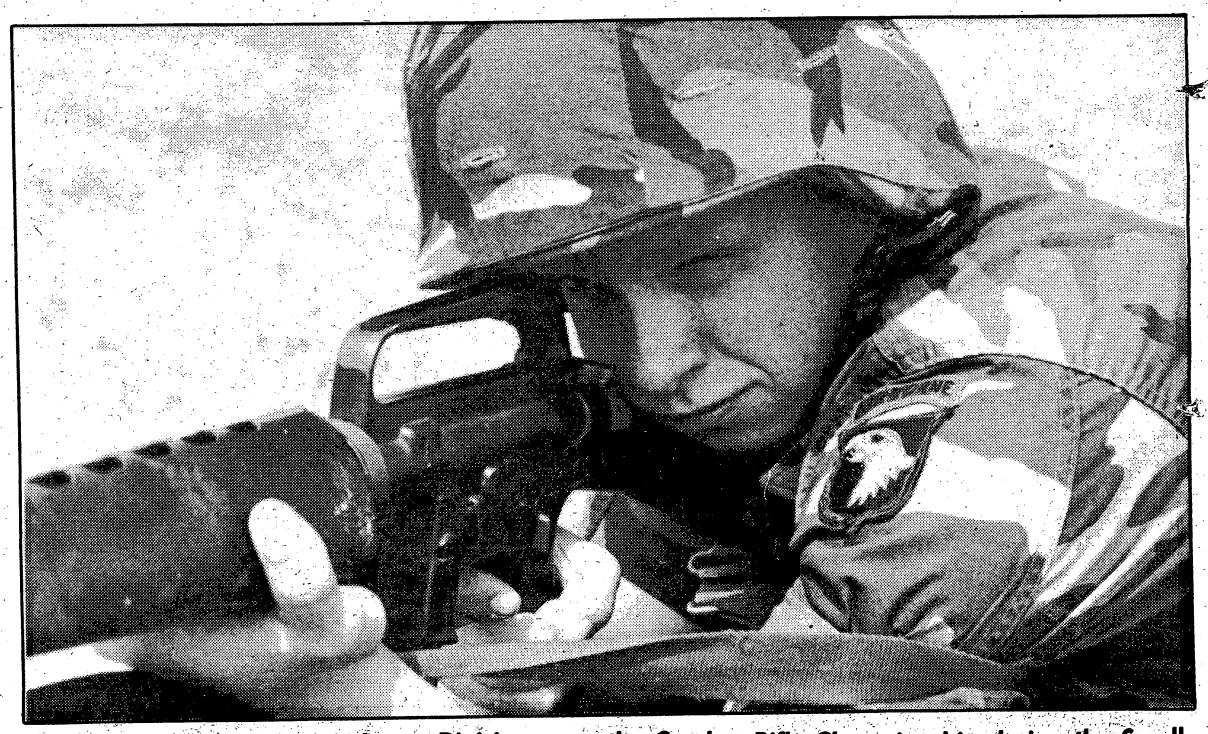
Members of the U.S. Army and Reserve shooting teams split the majority of the awards during this year's 26th annual Interservice Rifle Championships.

The matches were conducted at Fort Benning's Hook International Range May 9 to 12, with more than 40 of the top military shooters and several former national champions in attendance.

In 300 Meter Rifle competition, members of USAMU established a new national team record, while Capt. Richard Hawkins, assigned to 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade, set a new individual record.



Hawkins raised the Interservice 300 Meter Standard Rifle record by four points as he scored a winning total of 582 out of 600 possible points. He narrowly edged USAMU's Capt. Glenn Dubis, who placed second with a final of 581, while Army reservist Maj. Ray Carter finished third at 579 .

Bodybuilders muscle their way into contest

Story and photo by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 400 spectators were on hand to view the Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning Bodybuilding Contest at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, Saturday.

Bodybuilding is nothing new to the 1986 Mr. Fort Benning, Franklin D. Roach. But for Blandina Stewart, Ms. Fort Benning 1986, it is a new treat.

Roach held several previous titles. He was Mr. Teenage Maryland 1980, Mr. Maryland 1985 and Mr. Eastern Atlantic Coast 1985.

Roach began bodybuilding when he was 16-years-old, after wrestling in high school. After winning his first competition, he did not return to the stage for two years. But, the desire to compete would always be there.

"This contest was a bit short notice for me. I began training just weeks before the competition. I compete to have fun, and I had a lot of fun in this contest," said Roach.

Though Roach, a student at the Infantry Officers Basic Course, took a decisive win, the remaining positions were not so easily distinguished.

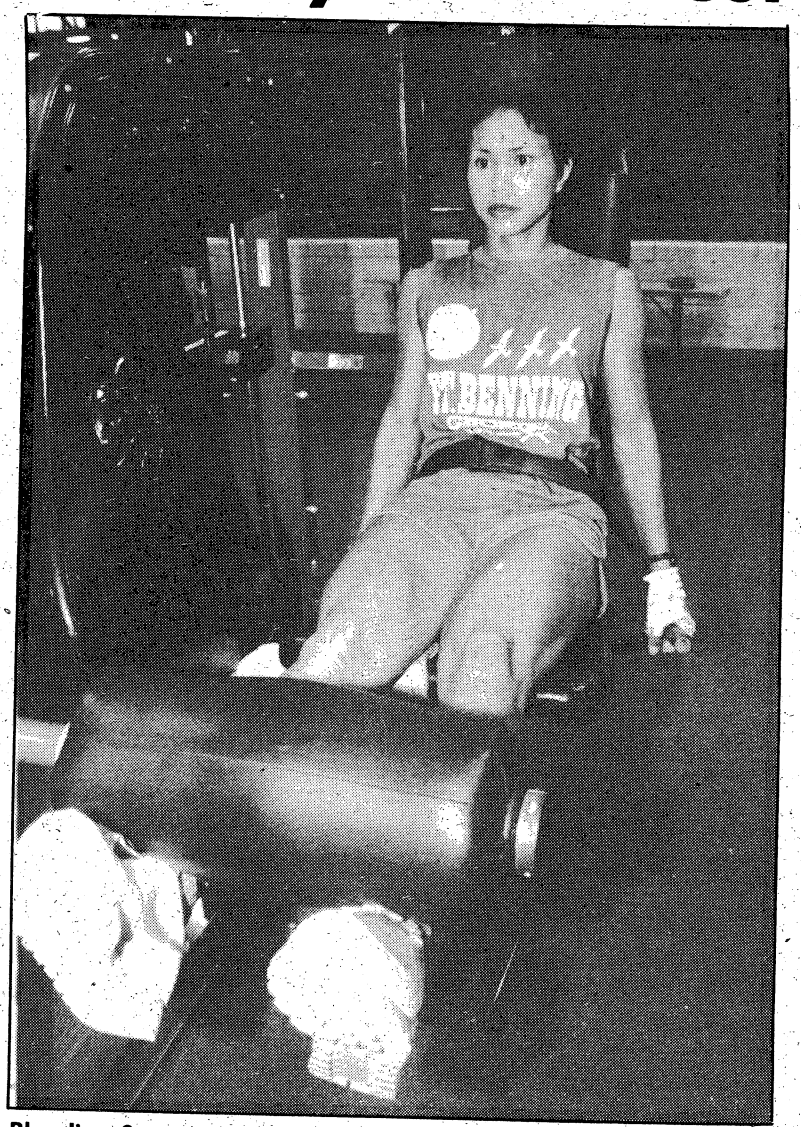
"The second and third place finishers could have come in any order," said Billy G. Wilborn, one of three judges of the contest. "There was only a half percentage point between either finishing positions he explained.

The other judges, Joseph A. Martinez and Ted Cunio saw the bodybuilding extravaganza in the same light, with Leone E. Iosefa finishing second and Luis Guasch claiming third.

The contestants were selected in three rounds of competition.

In the first round, contestants were judged on symmetry. The second round's points were awarded for individual performances in the poses and routines, while the third round was based on muscularity.

The second round was where Stewart really began to shine, dazzling the crowd and judges with a routine executed to "Object of Desire" by Starpoint.



Stewart edged out Jacqueline Gopie for the 1986 Crown.

Gopie also placed second in last years competition against Ms. Fort Benning 1985, Teresa Jones, who appeared as a guest poser during the contest.

"I will keep on pushing until I get to the top," said Gopie.

After winning in her first competition, Stewart looks forward to more contests.

"I want to see how I fare against other bodybuilders and get as much experience as possible. So, I plan to enter competitions in Atlanta, Panama City and Alabama during the summer," said Stewart.

Blandina Stewart works on her winning form prior to Saturday's competition.

3rd Battalion, 1st ITB nets volleyball championship

by Joel Roberts
1st Infantry Training Brigade

"Deal With It" — That is the motto of the 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade. The Battalion Volleyball team, led by team captain Capt. Mauro Cooper, did just that, dealt with it, and came away with the Fort Benning Post Championship on May 9th.

The championship round held at Bryant Wells Gymnasium from April 30th to May 9th fielded teams from throughout the post. The 72nd Engineers, A Company 1/29th Infantry, USARSA, 9th Battalion 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, and A Company TSB, all fell to , eventual champions, 3rd Battalion 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

The 3rd Battalion team began their season early in March, posting a 10-2 regular season, went undefeated in the ATC (Army Training Center) Championship defeating 9th Battalion 2nd ITB, and came from behind in the losers bracket to win the Post-level championship. Cooper said the team showed a lot of "moral character" throughout the long season and was able to prevail despite losing several key players to PCS moves and injuries. "The team never allowed themselves to get down mentaly, even when we fell behind on the scoreboard. Each player was totally dedicated to the concept of "team effort". And, not to overuse an old cliche, the team really fought hard and played though all season." Cooper also said the team received "outstanding" play from SSgt. Leone Iosefa, who also took 2nd place honors in the Mr. Fort Benning Bodybuilding Championship, held on May 10th.

In the championship round, the 3rd Bn lost the first game to the 9th Bn. 14-16, and came from behind 10-4 to win the second game. The championship game turned out to be no contest as 3rd Bn easily handled the 9th Bn 15-4 for top honors. It was the fourth time in five meetings this season 3rd Bn prevailed over their 2nd ITB rivals.

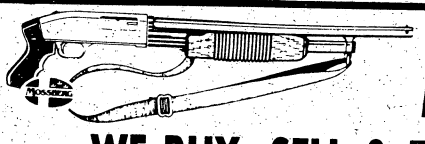
Team members are Capt. Mauro Cooper, Capt. Jerome Duncan, 2nd Lt. Richard Davidson, SSgt. Leone Iosefa, SSgt. Rex Badour, Sgt. Craig Dickerson, Cpl. Terry Vansky, and Cpl. Brandon Thomas. Congratulations on a successful season!

Races set for Armed Forces Day

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Men, women and children are preparing for the Armed Forces Day Run May 17 at Fort Benning.

The run will be sponsored by the Community Recreation Division of Fort Benning and will consist of 2.2-mile and 6.2-mile races.



Races will begin and end in front of Building 4, Infantry Hall.

In addition to the age divisions, ranging from 9 and under to 50 and over, there will be a group division consisting of 25-member teams.

The entry fee for the group division will be $90 a team.

Individuals who pre-register will pay a $5 fee. Registration may be conducted in person at Doughboy Stadium until 4:30 p.m. May 16, but mail entries must be postmarked no later than May 12.

Late registration will be accepted at Doughboy Stadium at a $7 cost.

mander of Company D, is a former national champion and a member of the winning United States CISM Shooting team in 1982 and 1984.

The USAMU "Blue" squad of Lt. Col. Lones Wigger, Capt. Glenn Dubis and Sgt. Bradley Carnes, combined for a national record setting total of 1,723 out of 1,800 in the Standard Rifle team competition.

Their winning total was nine points over the old mark of 1,714 set by the Army Reserve "Gold" team during the 1985 National 300 Meter Championships.

The 50 Meter Smallbore Rifle championship was won by two time Olympic goal medalist, Lt. Col. Lones Wigger, with an excellent aggregate total of 1,170 out of 1,200 points. This years winning score marked the 21st Interservice victory in his career, more than any other individual.

Members of the Army Reserve scored victories in the 50 Meter and 300 Meter prone championships as well as the Men's 10 Meter Air Rifle event.

In Women's competition, USAMU's Capt. Mary Godlove won the Ladies Standard Rifle position championship with 577 out of 600 points, while teammate Capt. Gloria Parmentier, fired a winning total of 392 out of 400 in the Ladies 10 Meter Air Rifle event.

The final scores and results of this years Interservice Rifle events ended with the USAR winning five individual titles to four by the Army, while the Army outscored the reserve in team competition with five championships to four for the USAR.

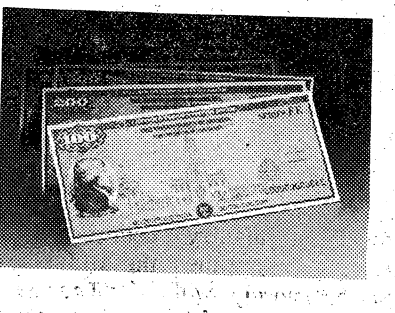
Many people all over America are surprised when they hear what U.S. Savings Bonds have to offer.



For starters, Savings Bonds give you market-based interest rates—like the money markets—plus the security of a guaranteed return. This means you can earn a lot more than the guaranteed minimum rate of 7½%, but never less! To earn the higher rates, just hold your Bonds for five years or longer.

Here's more surprising news—the interest you earn from Savings Bonds is free from state and local income taxes. And you don't have to pay federal taxes on the interest earned until you cash in your Bonds.

Savings Bonds are easy to buy, too. They cost as little as $25 and can be purchased at most banks and savings and loans. Or through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.

All of these advantages are making Savings Bonds an increasingly popular investment. Last year, sales of U.S. Savings Bonds were up nearly 30%!

With all that Savings Bonds have to offer, it's no surprise they're one of the best investments in America. For the current rate, just call toll-free 1-800-US-BONDS.

U.S. SAVINGS BONDS Paying Better Than Ever

Market-based rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least five years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn market-based rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than five years earn lower rates.

Army simplifies personnel system

Army News Service

Establishing a new Army command responsible for personnel operations is no longer being considered as an immediate solution for shortcomings in the present personnel system.

"We will not establish an additional headquarters at this time," said Lt. Gen. Robert M. Elton, the Army's deputy chief of staff for personnel. "However, we believe that major, positive improvements can be made in the efficiency and effectiveness of the personnel family."

An Army personnel command task force was established by Elton in July 1985, with a view towards establishing a new command. The concept came in response to results of studies conducted over the past 20 years that identified across-the-board deficiencies in the Army's Personnel Management System, particularly its inability to rapidly meet mobilization requirements.

However, because of the potential impact that Congress' recent balance-budget legislation could have on Army personnel programs, Elton decided not to establish a separate command at this time, said Maj. Dave Russell, task force spokesman.

Instead, Elton has directed the task force to continue its intensive review of the Army's personnel management structure, a review that already has produced the foundation for a more streamlines, functionally aligned personnel organization, Russell said. The task force presently tackles two major objectives, Russell said. The first focuses on personnel mobilization and readiness issues. The second concerns realignment and consolidation of staff relationships within the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff and its field operating agencies.

In addressing mobilization and readiness issues, the task force will analyze systems problems in such areas as personnel readiness, mobilization, recruitment, retention, distribution, community and family support, and separation.

As for simplifying the staff relationships, the tack force will continue projects established for streamlining personnel operations. "Our overall task force goal is to continue developing a streamlined organizational structure that responds more effectively to soldiers and commanders, that more completely integrates reserve component personnel, and more effectively focuses on personnel readiness in war and peace," Russell said.

they cannot get through by phone.

Phone patches are another means of communication used at the MARS Station. There are many calls comming in from Germany and the Benning station forwards these calls to families in the local area.

In 1985, MARS attempted 863 phone patches and completed 531.

"Many times no one will be home or we can't get through," Sbardella said.

"We supported the Rangers in Panama and the 36th Engineers in Honduras, so they could keep in constant contact with their families and let them call home," SP4 David A. Roberts, senior operator HF/MARS Station, said.

In addition, and perhaps most importantly, the MARS Station is always available for emergency calls and prepared to provide communications for military, civil or disaster officials.

Donn Richards.

In talking with young MPs like Max Brown and Gary Crawford, their actions in saving young Eric's life are ones that seem routine. However, routinely handled emergency situations become routine only because of intense, superior, on-going training. The actions of these two young men deserve kudos: kudos to their individual motivation and professionalism and kudos to the Army training that enabled them to save the life of a young boy. Eric Richards is a living tribute to a well deserved note of thanks from the Fort Benning community to Brown and Crawford, soldier MPs "just doing their duty."

the training standards," said 2nd Lt. Timothy Grysztar, Company A executive officer.

For example, the soldiers were critiqued on the route of assault chosen (tactical) and their individual movement techniques (technical) used to overcome the threat.

"When the soldiers are scored immediately after the scenario," said Company B executive officer, 2nd Lt. John Framer, "they are more receptive to the constructive criticism because the event just happened."

This process enables the soldiers to analyize and correct their own faults, Farmer said.

The emphasis on these Squad Tactical Exercises is the brainchild of 1st Infantry Training Brigade commander, Col. James E. Mace.

"The STX gives the soldier the confidence and know-how to overcome the various situations that they might encounter," said 7th Battalion training officer 2nd Lt. Terry Mays.

"Putting these soldiers in the field and teaching them how to survive and get rid of the enemy is the most important part of the (training) cycle," said SFC Michael Pearce, Company A senior drill sergeant.

"Teaching these soldiers how to kill the enemy and survive is the greatest benefit of the STX," said SFC Rollock. And that, said the senior drill sergeant, is what the Army is all about.

58 commander, said he welcomed the training opportunity.

"This was a chance for Fort Campbell's light fighters and a heavy mechanized force to learn from joint training," O'Connor said. "For many light infantry soldiers this was the first time they had worked closely with tanks and APCs. It was the first time many of our soldiers were exposed to air assault."

During the training, the mechanized force didn't always strongarm the light fighters. During a night exercise, 1-327th was to attack two platoon sized elements. Both platoons launched counter attacks and one did stop the attacking force.

"The second counter attack rolled right by the well-concealed light fighters," O' Connor said.

During the training, the Brigade soldiers also learned to dodge and evade a helicopter attack.

"This is something we have to know how to do," O'Connor added. "Training with helicopters and the light infantry is a mission we rarely have the opportunity to do on Fort Benning."
