1985 a good year for soldiers; 1986 ushers in a hope for same

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Someone once said "perspective is all important when assessing anything."

Certainly, perspective, or one's point of view, is all important if you assess 1985 as being a good or bad year.

From the American farmer's point of view, 1985 was a very bad year, full of foreclosings and losses.

From car manufacturers' point of view, 1985 was a banner year, breaking all records for car sales.

1985, as viewed from the perspective of Chicago Bears' football fans, has been a great year while Atlanta Falcons' fans would not feel the same way.

Different perspectives render decidedly different points of view.

When most people look at 1985 they call it good or bad because of monetary gains or loses, if the product they sell sold or if their particular football team won or lost. But ask a soldier about 1985, especially an infantry soldier, and you are likely to get a very different point of view, a point of view not influenced by football teams, profit and loss statements or money.

Ask any infantry soldier or any soldier for that matter stationed on the demilitarized zone (DMZ) in South Korea, with one of the Ranger battalions, on the West German border, or with a unit deployed in Central America: was 1985 a good year?

Their answers won't involve won-lost records or profit and loss statements. No, that young man or young woman standing by on one of our country's bases that serve as deterrents against the Soviet empire, those soldiers ready to go at a moment's notice would tell you, unequivocally, that they are alive, they are still here, that they are not at war. For soldiers, any year that is a year without war is a good year.

Certainly, the year was fraught with terrorist incidents and accidents that ended in tragedy for the military but there wasn't a declared shooting war. Unlike 1916-1918, 1941-1945, the early 1950's, 1965-1973 and 1983, this year, nineteen-hundred and eighty-five was, indeed, a very good year for American soldiers. I am sure they hope 1986 will be just as good. I certainly hope, for their sakes, that it proves to be.

What is your resolution for the 1986 new year?

Sgt. Bruce R. Brown, D Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. — "I plan to work harder on raising my scores for promotion. In that my wedding anniversary is also the first of the year, I will continue to work hard toward another successful year of marriage."

Beverly V. Francis, Follow Me Golf Course. — "I plan to work hard on losing a little weight. I also plan to be a much happier person this year. To aid in that resolution, I will devote 1986 to making amends with my baby's father."

Sgt. Hillard O. Hahn, D Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry. — "I will resolve to make 1986 a better year than 1985 for both my family and myself. 1985 was pretty much the pits."

Benning commander tapped to lead 82nd

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Department of the Army announced recently that Maj. Gen. John W. Foss will assume command of the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C. Jan. 10.

Foss has served as the Chief of Infantry and Fort Benning commander since March 1984.

In a recent interview, the general said it is difficult to leave Fort Benning, a post he considers to be one of the finest in the Army.

"It's always hard to leave people, but I think it's a reflection of the way it is in the military," he said. "There is always the pain of leaving, coupled with the anticipation of taking on a new job."

Looking back on his stay here, Foss said he is most proud of the way the entire post responded to all the additional missions it acquired during his command.

"When we got the 75th Infantry Regiment and 3rd Battalion (Ranger), the U.S. Army School of the Americas and the 10th Mountain Division, everybody had to give something up," he said. "Post support organizations were spread thinner and office and building spaces reassigned, but everybody on post responded in a favorable manner, including civilians, soldiers and officers."

He's also proud of the way the Infantry School and the Infantry Center responded to changing missions and taking on the light infantry, including developing the light leader's training.

Foss said the things that were accomplished during his tour here were possible only through the joint efforts of the civilian and military personnel.

"It's what everybody here at Fort Benning accomplished," he said. "All the people here did it, became a big part of the changes, participating fully and working to make things happen. It would have been easier for most of them to say 'it's too hard' and not put out the special effort."

His reaction on learning of his selection as commander of America's Guard of Honor was one of "Total surprise."

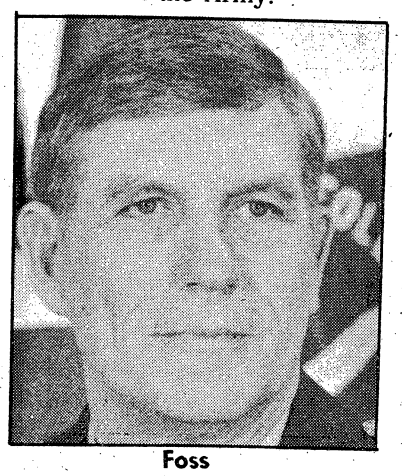
Foss said he considers it a great honor.

The job probably won't have any more pressure than he's used to at Benning, he explained, but he'll be spend more time with units and soldiers and be more deeply involved in the basics of unit training. "It's a job that will let me get deeper into some things, such as training on a day-to-day basis, which I couldn't do here," he said.

The 82nd Airborne Division's mission will define his role as commander. "It'll be different in the sense that in a unit you live for today and on very short notice," he said. The Division has a worldwide, quick-reaction mission and must be ready to deploy to anywhere in the world within 18 hours.

Foss traveled extensively in his role as Chief of Infantry said his travels for the 82nd will be of a different nature.

"I'll be going to observe exercises and training. At Benning I worked with a wider spectrum of time and training than I'll be concentrating on at Bragg," he said.



There are many things still to be done at Benning, Foss said. "I didn't get a chance to complete the marksmanship or sniper programs, and didn't get to do the things in NCO training and development such as improving the Basic and Advanced NCO Courses."

He said he appreciates the support he received while serving here.

"It was a period of great change for the infantry and Fort Benning. It was exciting for me to participate in it and it was exciting to watch the soldiers and officers grow when faced with the challenges."

He said it was also gratifying to see the way the people of Columbus and Phenix City support the military community.

"The relationship between the post and the civilian community is more open, honest and supportive than you could find in many locations in the Army."

Burba

Burba picked to fill Foss' boots at Ft. Benning

Brig. Gen. Edwin Burba Jr. has been named to succeed Maj. Gen. John W. Foss as the Chief of Infantry and commander of Fort Benning.

Burba will assume the rank of major general before accepting the new command in a ceremony on York Field Tuesday at 10 a.m.

He was nominated for his second star in July 1985.

Burba arrived at Fort Benning in August 1983.

The general has served in a variety of staff and command assignments. His past positions include platoon leader and battle group training officer with the 82nd Airborne Division, company commander at the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center and battalion S-3 and brigade S-2 with the 1st Cavalry Division in Vietnam.

His staff assignments include a tour as chief, Field Training Branch, U.S. Air Force Academy, personnel management officer at the Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va., and team chief and later director of the Battalion Training Model, Army Training System in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Training at Training and Doctrine Command, Fort Monroe, Va.

Burba was graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in 1959 with a bachelor of science in engineering. He also holds a master's degree in international affairs from George Washington University. He attended the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced Courses, the Armed Forces Staff College and the National War College.

In June 1962, Burba attended the Chinese Mandarin Course at the Defense Language Institute in Monterey, Calif., and was subsequently assigned as a psychological war officer and detachment commander with the 7th Psychological Operations Group.

He has also served with the 1st and 5th Special Forces Groups in assignemnts that took him to Okinawa, Vietnam, Korea and Thailand.

His decorations include the Silver Star, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star Medal, Meritorious Service Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster, Air Medals, Army Commendaion Medal, Air Force Commendation Medal, Purple Heart, Combat Infantryman Badge, Master Parachutist Badge and Ranger Tab.

New Inf. School assistant commandant comes to Benning from 9th ID

By Paul Timm
Ledger/Enquirer Military Analyst

Col. Barry Richard McCaffrey, 43, will be promoted to brigadier general and will report to Fort Benning as assistant commandant of The Infantry School Jan. 17.

A brigade commander with the 9th Infantry Division at Fort Lewis, Wash., he will replace Brig. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., scheduled to get his second star and take over as Fort Benning commander and Chief of Infantry Jan. 7.

McCaffrey comes to Fort Benning with tremendous company grade credentials. As a lieutenant, he served as a rifle platoon leader with the 2nd Battalion, 325th Infantry, 82nd Airborne Division in the Dominican Republic.

As a captain between 1966 and 1969 he was an advisor to an airborne battalion of the 2nd Vietnamese Airborne Division and a company commander with B Troop, 2nd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 1st Cavalry Division.

Twice he has been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, second highest medal for valor — one while serving with the Vietnamese, once while serving with the Americans. He also has earned two Silver Stars and four Bronze Stars for valor. He has three Purple Hearts to attest to his combat experiences.

From 1976 until 1981, he was staff officer and battalion commander with the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) in Germany. Since 1982 he has been staff officer, chief of staff and brigade commander with the prototype and innovative hi-tech 9th Infantry Division (Motorized) at Fort Lewis.

A native of Taunton, Mass., he was graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. in 1964. He returned there eight years later as executive officer and assistant professor in the Department of Social Sciences. He also has a degree in civil government from American University.

McCaffrey has earned the Combat Infantryman Badge, the Parachutist Badge and the Ranger Tab.

A son of Retired Lt. Gen. and Mrs. William J. McCaffrey of Alexandria, Va., he is married to the former Jill Ann Faulkner of Ashland, Ore. They have three children: Sean, 21, Tara, 17 and Amy 13.

MI unit shares knowledge shows Soviet equipment

By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

197th

Much of what goes on in a military intelligence unit is usually kept secret. But the 179th Military Intelligence Detachment is willing to, and frequently does, share some of its knowledge with fellow soldiers.

This seperate unit of the 197th Infantry Brigade houses a small arsenal of Soviet weapons in its arms room. According to SSgt. Dean Kjosa, 179th MID armorer, units use the weapons for familiarization, training or displays all over Fort Benning.

"We have loaned weapons to reserve units as far away as Birmingham, Ala. They used them for a recruiting display," Kjosa said.

The unit also conducts briefings to explain the capabilities of these weapons as well as Soviet vehicles.

SSgt. Wayno Sanchez of the 197th Infantry Brigade intelligence section conducts many briefings on Soviet weapons.

"It is important for soldiers to have hands-on training with these weapons," Sanchez said. "If a soldier finds a Soviet weapon on the battlefield, he would have the knowledge to use the weapon effectively."

Sanchez teaches soldiers how to fire, disassemble and assemble about 20 Soviet weapons in the collection; including AKM assault rifles and an RPG-7 antitank grenade launcher.

A second goal of the briefing is to teach soldiers Soviet tactics. Sanchez noted in a briefing to visiting ROTC cadets, "The Soviet soldier is trained to be aggressive." As an example he displayed an FPK sniper rifle and explained that "The Soviet sniper gets extensive training using this weapon with a scope. He will not miss a shot at 800 meters."

The military intelligence soldiers also offer a wealth of knowledge on Soviet vehicles. The unit published an Equipment Identification Handbook and uses it as a teaching aid for classes on Soviet Vehicles.

Tim Wallis

Soviet sniper rifle - Sanchez shows soldiers a Russian weapon during a recent class given by his MI unit on the Soviets.

"We try to inform soldiers of the type of equipment they will be up against," said Kjosa. "If we know what these weapons are capable of it may give us a better idea of how to defend ourselves."

In vehicle identification classes, Kjosa stresses several things that a soldier can use to distinguish enemy vehicles from friendly, such as the shape of a turret or its location on the chassis of the vehicle.

"Soldiers don't always see the need to identify vehicles by name rather than just friendly or enemy," Kjosa said.

"The soldiers on the ground are our best source of information. If they can provide specific information about vehicles they see, we can determine what type of unit is out there."

In addition, Kjosa noted "the right information may help commanders decide what action to take and may result in saving lives."

Language students practice Spanish skills

It was community relations at its best.

Twenty Lakeside High School students from Eufaula, Ala. and three teachers visited the U.S. Army School of Americas (USARSA) Dec. 3, touring the School's headquarters in Building 35, the dining facility and Salvadoran cadet training.

The students, currently enrolled in second-year conversational Spanish, began the tour after receiving a briefing on USARSA by Maj. John Taylor, the School's public affairs officer.

"This visit has given us a chance to actually meet and talk with young U.S. natives," said one Salvadoran cadet.

The students observed the cadets conducting patrolling operations at the "Panther Base" training area on Fort Benning. While there, they were briefed by Capt. Charles Busick, assistant chief of the Patrolling Division at USARSA.

"We have to speak slowly and distinctly, but we're communicating," said a Lakeside High School student.

Fire - An "11 Charlie" turns away from his mortar tube after hanging and "firing" a round during crew drill training.

New mortarmen learn the ropes on 60mm weapon at Malone 24

Gunnery and safety stressed in training

By Bill Muller

29th Inf.

For new soldiers training to be mortar specialists, advanced mortar training, taught at Malone 24, is one step away from the final "11 Charlie" military occupational specialty test.

The new soldiers train primarily on the 60mm mortar. They are taught how to mount the 60mm mortar, how to manipulate the weapon system and how to acquire targets, both large and small.

"This is challenging to new soldiers because it is often the first time to do this," said SSgt. Tyler Williams, an instructor.

With the first portion of training completed, they tackle a subject that is near and dear to every "11 Charlie's" heart, Williams said. Preventive maintenance on both the mortar and its sights.

Safety and pre-fire checks follow the maintenance class. In this block of instruction the soldiers are taught things that will keep them safe while using the 60mm.

Boresighting, the process of lining up the barrel with the sight, and the proper technique of getting the mortar round to go where one wants it to go, are the next steps in the mortar specialist's progression.

Also, the soldiers learn to remove the mortar round in case of a misfire. Safety is strongly emphasized during this block of instruction.

Closing this eight-hour day, the soldiers are taught how to construct a mortar position. The future mortar specialists learn the process of hiding themselves and their equipment.

Everyday the instructors at Malone 24 reaffirm their motto: "Excellence in mortar training starts here," Williams said.

USARSA cadets, U.S. officer hopefuls enjoy day of camaraderie, competition

By Marco Morales

As the 44th anniversary of Pearl Harbor was quietly commemorated throughout America the morning of Dec. 7, another category of history unfolded on Fort Benning's athletic fields.

One hundred eighty-five Officer Candidate School (OSC) students and 185 U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA) Salvadoran cadets prepared to participate in "OCS Sports Day".

"Since both organizations were training during the same time frame, USARSA and our staff agreed this would be a unique experience for these future leaders to participate in joint athletic events as a means of exchanging their abilities, leadership techniques and friendships," said Lt. Col. Joseph A. Cercone, 5th Student Battalion commander (OCS).

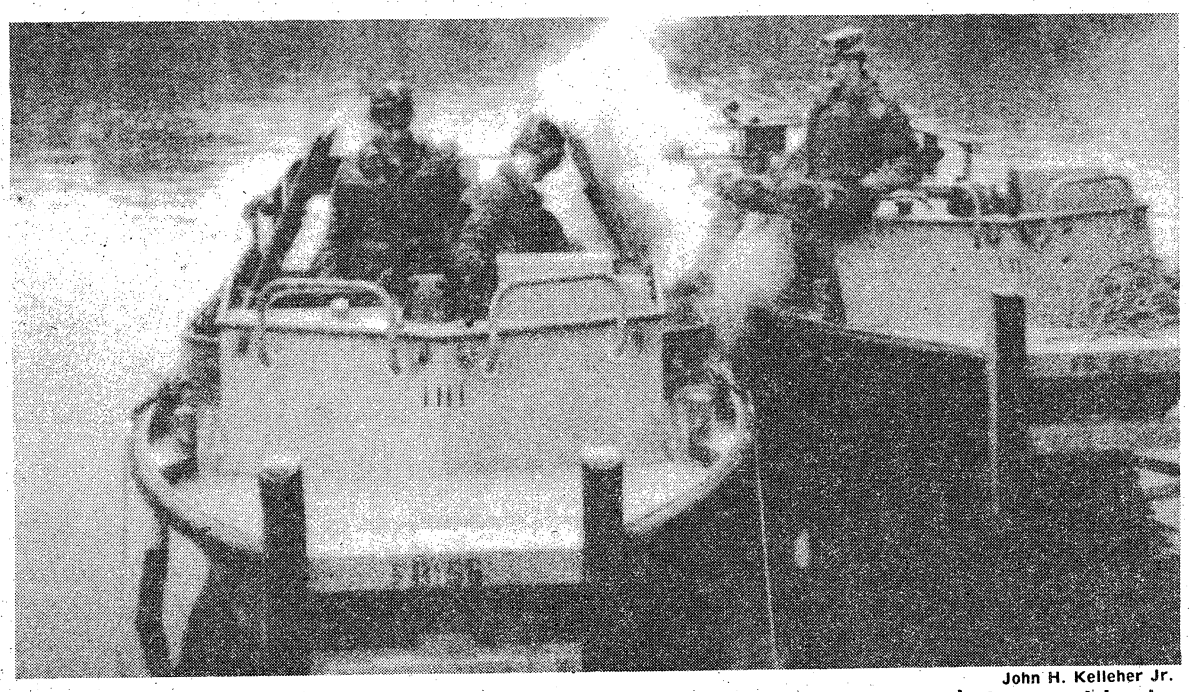
There were local perceptions, at first, that OCS students were being pitted against Salvadoran cadets.

"This is the type of competition where there are no 'winners or losers'," said Capt. Gary Dalton, operations officer, 5th Bn. "We teach OCS students the basics of being a leader in this type of environment — to work together as leaders for a common goal. As a result of combined teams, they were all winners," he said.

The interunit competition included softball, soccer, volleyball, inverted crawl races, track events, wheelbarrow races tug-of-war events. Both organizations were divided into eight teams that rotated to compete in each event.

"The cadets really enjoyed the competition," said 1SG Ralph F. Hart, El Salvador Cadet Course (ESCC) first sergeant, USARSA. "This was one of very few times they had a chance to take part in U.S.-oriented sports," he added.

The cadets played better in soccer competition. "Some cadets said they wanted to play basketball. They did real well in soccer team play," Hart said.



With help from OCS-ESCC cadre, both organizations managed to communicate with each other throughout the competition.

River rats - Members of the 586th Engineer Company rev up their twin British Sabre Turbo diesel engines on their combat support boats.

'River Rats' bridge waters for Benning

By John H. Kelleher Jr.
586th Engineer Company

The "River Rats" of the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) support the U.S. Army Infantry Center here and other units in the Southeastern United States with bridging and rubber boat assets. Additionally, the company serves as the Ranger Support Element for the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry.

During normal garrison operations, the unit reserves every Wednesday as their river training day and can be seen at Engineer and Bradley landing with their ribbon bridge bays and 14 combat support boats.

These boats serve as the primary mover in the water for the company and assist the bridge crewmen in the construction of various sizes of bridges and rafts. The boats are powered by twin British sabre turbo-diesel engines with 424 combined horsepower. The engines produce 3,600 pounds of thrust in the forward direction and can come to a complete stop from their top speed of 30 knots in less than 30 feet.

Army astronaut relates recent 'out-of-this-world' ride

By Rhonda Scott
Fort Sill Cannoneer

Future space shuttles will need people aboard who can communicate the feeling of being in space, said the Army's first astronaut recently.

After logging nearly 200 hours outside Earth's atmospheric boundries, Col. Robert L. Stewart thinks it will take poets, artists and journalists to express what the earth looks like from space.

Stewart

"It's like seeing a pristine, wild world from up there," Stewart said as he described the view of our planet in space as the Army's first astronaut.

Seeing the view of Earth from space was the best part of his astronaut experience, Stewart said. "It's like that's where God intended us to see it from."

He and a Navy captain on the mission were the first astronauts to walk in space without being tethered to a spacecraft.

"Turning loose from the space craft and knowing the real meaning of being 'alone' was my most memorable experience," Stewart said.

Stewart began his aviation career as a combat helicopter pilot in Vietnam and later became a test pilot. He's flown 38 different aircraft, including some of the military's most advanced, to log more than 6,000 hours. He was a soldier for 14 years before launching his Army career with NASA seven years ago.

Stewart feels man is destined to have a future in space.

"We will eventually step off this planet and colonize in other planets," he said.

"With space technology, man has the ability to manufacture things that we couldn't before." For example, the digital watch is just one result of the driving force of space, he said.

"We've said we will have a space station by the mid-1990s. We could beat that if we really put up an engineering effort," he said.

Going to space for the first time was not a revelation for Stewart. He said the training is so well done that there are no surprises.

"You're not sure you're really going into space until that first rocket lights. The ride is so rough you wonder how the shuttle can stay together, but you just know it will." Once the fuel rockets dropped off, he said, the ride was "smooth as silk."

"Realization that we were in space didn't hit me until the Earth passed by the shuttle window."

It was a rather dim view through the dirty spacecraft portholes, he said. But once he stepped outside, untethered in space, "things stood out much crisper," he said.

Getting out into space felt good to Stewart after being jammed in the close environment of the shuttle.

Military missions aren't all that Stewart goes on. Stewart said he's scheduled to fly a space shuttle mission next September to make scientific observations of Earth's environment. He showed slides from space taken with a regular snapshot camera that pictured earthquake faults, land erosion and other terrain features that pose problems to man's existence on this planet.

"From space we can document what's happening to our land and air. It's more clear from up there that we're not an infinite globe — we can exhaust our resources."

Following the news conference, Stewart talked to an audience of field artillery officers.

He pointed out that the Army has led the way in the space program by launching the first satellite and providing rockets for later missions.

"Right now the Army is a spectator deciding whether it wants to be a participant in space," said Stewart explaining the Army's future involvement in the space program.

"Space is just another place where the Army could operate," Stewart said. "We have to look at that as a possibility for the future."

ADCO supports military, civilians during their needs

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

you drink a lot of beer, you drink a lot."

So says the poster distributed by the Alcohol and Drug Control Office here, and Yvonne Linsenbigler, the civilian program director at the ADCO, said it's an important message.

"Many people think they aren't really drinkers because all they drink is beer," she said.

"We try to get the message out that one 12 ounce beer has as much alcohol by volume as one shot of liquor or one four ounce glass of wine."

Linsenbigler wants civilians to know she's here and ready to help them.

"Nobody's been in this job for over two years and people may not be aware that Department of the Army or nonappropriated fund civilians and their family members can get help here," she said.

Besides helping people with drug and alcohol related problems, Linsenbigler also counsels and refers people who are having other problems that affect their job performance. "If I cannot help them, I know someone downtown they can call," she said.

Soldiers are automatically referred to the program when they test positive for illegal drugs or are charged with driving under the influence. Commanders are required to refer soldiers who get a DUI to the program and have the option of referring drug abusers.

If the soldier fails to rehabilitate, the commander then has the option of eliminating the soldier from service through Chapter 9 proceedings.

At the end of November, 392 people were enrolled in the program, 15 of them civilians, according to Dr. Tom Tennent, post ADCO.

He'd like to see the number of civilians increase. "Supervisors need to know we're here for civilians. Right now they don't know where to refer a civilian employee with that kind of problem," he said.

He said his staff works under rules of strict confidentiality when working with civilians, and the only way they will talk to a person's supervisor is if the patient requests it.

"The only exception to this is if a civilian gets a DUI during duty hours on post," he said. In which case the supervisor is notified and the offender is required to attend the program.

When a person enrolls in the program, a team of trained personnel review the case and recommend a treatment goal. Depending on the problem, the goal might be that the person stop using drugs or alcohol, reduce their consumption or just stop drinking and driving.

There are two different tracks of treatment available. Track I consists chiefly of education and couseling and can last a minimum of 30 days. Track I is designed for people with minor problems.

Track II can last up to 360 days and is for people with serious problems. Linsenbigler said some people move from Track I to Track II as they study their problem and find it is more serious than originally thought.

The goal for people in Track II is total withdrawal from drugs or alcohol and total abstinence forever. If they are diagnosed as being alcohol dependent, it may be necessary to admit them to a residential treatment facility for four to six weeks treatment.

The Army has two facilities for such patients and civilians can go to local hospitals that are covered by insurance. There is no cost at government facilities for active-duty and retired Army personnel.

Additional duties remain; C.O.'s to pinpoint more

Additional duties and additional duty orders are a thing of the past.

In recent years there has been an increase of "additional duties" required by Army staff agencies at all levels, said Lt. Col. Earl Thompson of the Army Comptroller's Office. In many cases, the duties are sporadic requirements that can be accomplished without the official designation and the administrative burden of preparing appointment orders. The practice of "throwing a person" at a perceived and often undefined problem and considering it solved is finished, Thompson said.

A recent Army policy letter eliminates the term additional duty and allows commanders more flexibility in using their people to accomplish missions. "The duty requirements will still exist," said Thompson, "But they can be tasked to the appropriate staff section or specific individual. However, we are not telling the commander how to do his job. How he does his job is up to him. The term 'additional duty' will be replaced with phrases like — 'This function is the responsibility of the G-1' or 'This task should be assigned to the chemical officer,'" said Thompson.

In an effort to provide commanders guidelines for managing those duty requirements previously covered by additional duties, internal control review checklists will be placed in the back of appropriate regulations. These checklists will be the new tool to ensure appropriate attention is given to these special emphasis areas. However, this does not stop the commander from using titles like "physical security officer" or "reenlistment NCO" to identify individuals who execute a given program.

Beginning Jan. 1, special emphasis area requirements will be written in regulations so that each requirement will be directed to a specific, standard staff organization rather than to a specific individual. Agencies writing regulations will relate special emphasis requirements to specific staff organizations as identified to Army Regulation 5-3, installation management and organization, and Field Manual 101-S, staff organization and operations. (ARNEWS)

CFC collections go over $500,000 mark; hard work by post personnel applauded

By Henry Brown
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning is exceeding its goal for the 1985 Combined Federal Campaign by about 112 percent according to Col. Jimmy R. Moore, deputy post commander.

Moore said the goal of $450,000, which was the same as last year's, has reached over a half million dollars for the second straight year.

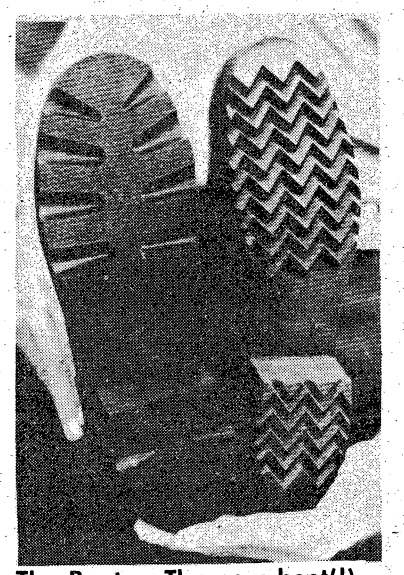
At the close of the campaign this year, contributions were totaled at $503,749. And donations are still coming in, he explained.

Last year, Benning collected $500,135 in voluntary donations to the CFC.

"The great thing about it, is that we exceeded last year's amounts and this year we increased the number of contributors," Moore said. "Last year, we had 17,412 contributors and this year, we've had, 19,331 so far."

The success of the campaign was due to the great efforts displayed by the people who got out and pushed the program. There were many major commands and staff directorates that exceeded the amounts that they contributed last year. In some cases, some of those directorates had fewer people than what they had last year."

Moore praised the soldiers for their contributions because, he said, "the post community will get a portion of its donation back."



In figures released by Jim Schoonover, custodian of the Community Activities Association, from 1971 until 1984 had recieved $959,750 from the United Way to support the various youth and service activities. Fort Benning has an approved budget for fiscal year 1986 to support 17 post activities.

New 'super' boot to be ready for issue by this summer

The Boot —The new boot(l) and old boot(r) are compared.

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

Some 1,200 soldiers and a like number of Marines trekked more than 280,000 miles through mud, water, sand and clay, up and down hills, in ravines, across mountains, over fallen logs and through dense underbrush during a recently completed "walk-off" to find a new "super" boot replacement for the combat boot now in use.

Those 4,800 tramping feet tested six boot entries, four from commercial firms and two from DoD.

One DoD boot, developed by the U.S. Army Natick (Mass.) Research and Development Center, won the grueling "walk-off."

And a super boot it is, featuring:

- moisture management — which means it keeps water out, dries quickly, and prevents excessive perspiration buildup;
- rapid donning and speed lacing — slips on quickly and can be laced or unlaced rapidly; special speed-lace barrel-shaped loops are rust-proof and non-abrasive to the boot lace;
- long-lasting soles and heels, resistance to rips and tears, and sturdy seams and eyelets;
- super traction and self-cleaning soles;
- softer and more comfortable upper leather, with the highest degree of water resistance through silicone saturation;
- sole compound with three times the abrasion resistance of recent standard issue boots;
- replaceable heels; and
- padded collar for maximum comfort.

"These boots are for the Army and Marine Corps only," said a spokesman for the Defense Personnel Support Center in Philadelphia, Pa., the agency that's handling the contract for the boots. "The Air Force has a special safety boot — non-sparking — that's used around flight lines."

The new boots are slated to be on the shelves of clothing sales stores next summer. The Defense Personnel Support Center has ordered more than 1.5 million.

But soldiers and Marines who want to be in vogue early will have to invest nearly twice as much as they now pay for combat boots. A pair of the new boots will cost $52.57, compared to $29.09 for the current shiny black combat boot.

"That's a big increase, but we expect the price to come down in the future," said a Defense Personnel Support Center spokesman.

"They will come in 111 different sizes. We've added 22 new sizes, mainly to accommodate people with smaller feet and with narrower heels," he said.

New recruits will be issued the current through December 1987, or until the present supply has been depleted.

Army and Marine Corps officials have not yet settled on a mandatory wear date for the new "super" combat boot.

The 'eyes' have it in new drunken driving test to be used

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

A new test that relies on involuntary eye movement is being used around the nation and in the armed forces to help identify suspected drunk drivers.

The procedure, called Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus (nystagmus: the regular back and forth movement of the eye), requires suspected drunk drivers to follow an object with their eyes in much the same way they would during an eye examination.

Dr. Arol Augsburger, clinical associate professor at Ohio State University's College of Optometry and vision consultant to the Ohio State Highway Patrol, said that the test, when used in conjunction with current roadside sobriety procedures, will correctly identify individuals with blood-alcohol levels above .10 percent with 90-plus percent accuracy. A blood alcohol reading of .10 percent or more is considered evidence of drunkeness in most states.

After a suspected drunken driver has been administered the standard "walk and turn" and "one-leg stand" tests, he is asked to look at an object (usually a penlight or a pencil) held 15 inches from his face. As the officer moves the object from side to side, he concentrates on the subject's eye movement.

Augsburger said there is a dramatic change in the eye movement of people with blood-alcohol levels above .10 percent. "Normally, eye movement is very smooth," he pointed out. "As the blood-alcohol level increases, eye movement becomes jerky."

The officer will then move the object horizontally 50 to 60 degrees, causing the suspect's eyes to move as far to the side as possible. "At that point, there is a marked jerky movement in the eye that is completely involuntary when blood-alcohol levels are above .10 percent," said Augsburger.

If jerkiness of eye movement is seen before the eyes reach a 45 degree angle, there is a good possibility that the suspect has a blood-alcohol level above .10, said Augsburger. If the jerkiness begins after the eyes have reached 45 degrees, the chances are less.

Augsburger said Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus has an advantage over other field sobriety tests in that one cannot practice to beat the test. "You can't fake, because the breakdown in the smooth movement of the eyes is completely involuntary," he said. He also pointed out that the test is fair to those who might not be under the influence.

The procedure is beginning to be used by the services. Said Maj. Robert Baldwin of the Office of Army Law Enforcement, "The procedure will become standard in the Army. We are actively working to designate time in the curriculum at the Military Police School to train our people in the procedure."

Capt. Tamara Bradley, chief of the Police Operations Branch, Headquarters, Air Force Security Police, reports that only one to two percent of Air Force people are trained in the procedure. "We are implementing the procedure into our regulations and showing law enforcement personnel how to do it," she said.

Video display terminals can cause pains without proper precautions

By Donna Bolinger
American Forces Press Service

Video display terminals, or VDTs, have become as familiar in the office environment as typewriters and file cabinets.

The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health estimates that more than seven million Americans use these television-like devices in their work. Clerical workers, typesetters, bankers, librarians, air traffic controllers, reporters, editors and computer programmers, as well as a myriad of other professionals, use them.

That doesn't count the number of people who use these terminals at home for everything from balancing checkbooks to keeping an inventory of household items.

Video display terminal popularity has hit the Defense Department as well. Defense officials estimate that nearly 200,000 are used by service members and DoD civilians.

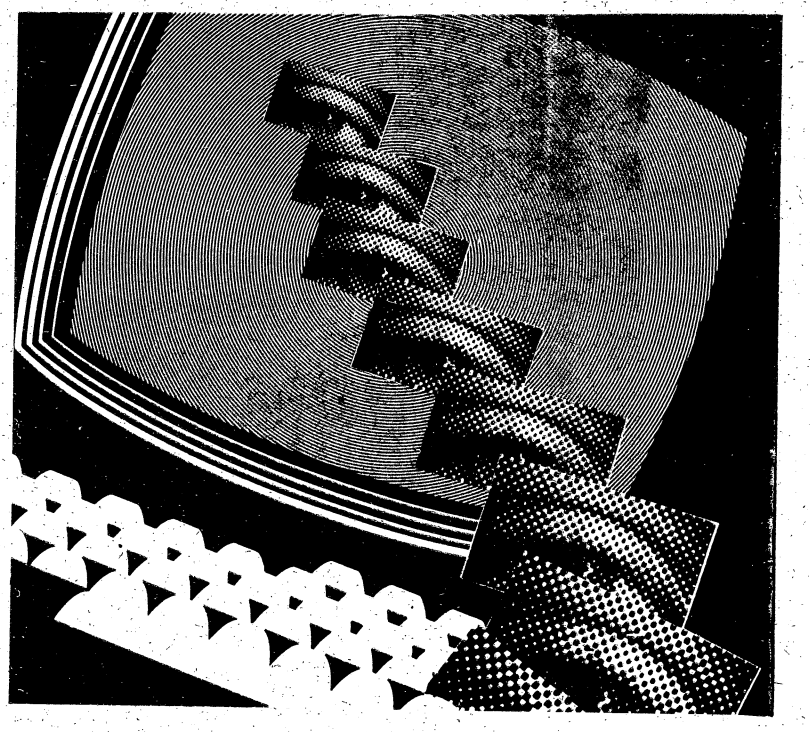
As common as video display terminals have become, indications are they're only going to become more so. One computer company anticipates that the number in use today will increase tenfold by 1990.

This success comes from the increased productivity brought about by video display terminals. They speed the storage and retrieval of information, greatly reducing the need for files, paper, pens and other materials. Letters and documents can be updated or rewritten without being fully retyped.

But just as quickly as the number of video display terminals has increased, so have the number of complaints that the devices can be a "sight for sore eyes" — and a real pain in the neck.

Workers who spend a lot of time in front of video display terminals frequently complain of eyestrain, double vision, itching and burning eyes, color perception difficulties or flickering sensations in their eyes, according to Dr. Harold Coleman, chairman of the American Optometric Association's Environmental and Occupational Vision Task Force.

Others complain of stiffness of the neck, upper back, arms and shoulders, as well as physical or emotional stress.



A two-year study by the American Academy of Ophthalmology recently confirmed that video display terminals can cause discomfort and fatigue, but found no evidence that they damage workers' vision.

Another study, conducted by the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, also ruled out fears that video display terminals emit dangerous radiation levels. This study showed that radiation levels of such terminals are actually below those of fluorescent lights.

"The VDT itself is not some sort of evil monster," said Bob Stout, industrial hygienist for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineer's Safety and Occupational Health Division. "Studies show any highly repetitive job will have the same results."

The American Academy of Ophthalmology's study showed that many problems blamed on video display terminals are actually caused by job frustration, cramped or inadequate work space design, or the failure of some terminal operators to wear eyeglasses if they need them.

For workers whose jobs require long hours in front of video display terminals, Coleman offered these tips:

- Turn to another form of work activity for 10 to 15 minutes for every two hours of continuous video display terminal work. This gives the eyes a chance to rest.
- Adjust the screen to prevent glare from windows or overhead lights.
- Adjust room lighting to the type of work being performed. If workers look at the video display terminal screen most of the time, room lighting should be relatively low. If they read from a document, the lighting should be brighter. Low room lighting with a brighter light above the paper is recommended if the eyes travel back and forth regularly.
- When referring to reference material, place it as close to the screen as possible to avoid frequent large head and eye movements. This also keeps eyes from having to refocus from one distance to another when moving from the reference material to the screen and back.
- Use adjustable chairs, which can be positioned so the user sits at a comfortable angle to the screen. Generally, the top of the screen should be no higher than eye level, and the screen should be 14 to 20 inches from the user's eyes.

Resolve to make 1986 a crime free year

PMO

Christmas is gone and the New Year is here.Everyone knows there are certain traditions that are associated with Christmas and the New Year.Christmas is a time to exchange presents,put up decorations and hang the stockings.

The new year is the time people start making New Year's resolutions. Some of the old standbys are to quit smoking, lose weight, get to work on time or stop procrastinating.

It takes a substantial amount of intestinal fortitude, perseverance and determination to make a resolution and keep it and many people don't succeed.

This year the Provost Marshal's Office suggests that residents resolve to help make the community safer and free of crime.

This takes just a few simple resolutions, such as the following:

- I will secure my property.
- I will engrave my property so if it is ever stolen and recovered, the police will know to whom it belongs.
- I will maintain a list of my valuables and update it as new property is acquired.
- I will report suspicious people or vehicles in my barracks or housing area.
- I will help keep a surveillance over my neighbor's property.
- I will participate in the Neighborhood Watch Program.

ENABLER

en•a•bler - A relative, spouse, or close friend of someone suffering from alcoholism or drug dependency who covers-up, condones, or accepts the problems that come with drinking or drugging, usually because they care about the person but don't understand that alcoholism is a disease. The enabler means well but is caught up in the situation as much as the alcoholic or addict. Enabling behavior only makes the situation worse.

Army 'line-of-duty' determination not a 'Catch-22'

A soldier, highly intoxicated, leaves the club and finally finds his car in the parking lot. As he speeds past the entrance, two of his friends run down the steps yelling for him to stop.

He disregards the calls and pushes down harder on the accelerator. He's heading home. He doesn't make it because a large tree gets in his way, and instead, he arrives at a hospital with a broken back, paralyzed from the waist down.

Since the accident happened while he was on active duty, will the Army take care of him financially?

That depends on the "line of duty" determination — the LOD.

The LOD investigation is the means of determining who gets pay and benefits — and who doesn't — as the result of an injury, disease, or death. It's not an Army "Catch 22" — it's a federal law and Army Regulation 600-33, "Line of Duty Investigations", contains guidance for making determinations.

Unfortunately, many soldiers and their families wrongly believe that pay, medical care and benefits for survivors will continue unless the injury, disease or death happens while the soldier is absent without leave or in a deserter status. The law does hold that soldiers who are AWOL or deserters are not eligible for "in the line of duty" status.

But there's another part of the law that soldiers and their families seem to know very little about — the part that says the "in the line of duty" status is not met if the injury, disease or death is the result of the soldier's intentional misconduct or willful negligence.

There are several situations where a finding of "not in the line of duty" can be made.

One of the more common examples involves those injuries that are alcohol- or drug-related. Blood-alcohol tests, for example, done as part of a routine investigation of an automobile accident, can be considered evidence that may support a finding of "not in line of duty."

Another example would be injuries — or even death — as the result of a fight. If a soldier participates in a fight, it may result in the loss of pay and benefits, in addition to punishment under Article 15 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice or a court martial. Also, seeking a "thrill" or acting as a "dare-devil," or being involved in any other activity that shows disregard for personal safety could result in a "not in the line of duty" finding.

In cases involving injury, the soldier may not get paid for time lost from duty, and might have to reimburse the government for the cost of medical treatment. If the injury is serious enough to make the soldier unfit for continued military service, the soldier will be discharged. Here, the soldier may lose rights to disability pay or pension, or for Veterans Administration benefits.

Officials at the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center, Alexandria, Va., process about 20 appeal cases each month. These appeals are from soldiers who want to rid the records of "not in the line of duty" findings so they can collect benefits they would otherwise have gained. Survivors of deceased soldiers must appeal through the Army Board for the Correction of Military Records.

"It's tragic," said Lt. Col. Reginald C. Winstead of the Casualty and Memorial Affairs Operations Center, "to see a young soldier permanently disabled with little potential for gainful employment and no entitlements to medical treatment or compensation for the condition."

"It is equally tragic to see the family members of a deceased career soldier deprived of the financial security they had counted on.

Winstead points out that the laws are written to protect the soldier and line of duty determinations may not be used as a means of punishing a soldier.

"The burden of proof is on the Army to show that the injury, disease or death is not in the line of duty," he said.

Investigating officers are appointed for those cases where there is a possibility that the injury, disease or death was not in the line of duty.

"At first glance, the system may appear harsh in certain circumstances. In other cases, the system may seem too lenient. But each case is judged on its specific facts, and when evidence establishes that the soldier's misconduct proximately caused the injury, disease or death, there is no entitlement to benefits," Winstead said. (TNS)

Military families protected after divorce

Soldiers who get divorced need to visit their local Military Personnel and finance offices to update their files as soon as the divorce is final.

The soldier must bring a copy of the divorce decree and identification cards belonging to the ex-spouse and any children who are in the custody of the ex-spouse, said SSgt. James Foster, assistant noncommissioned officer in charge of the Personnel Assistance Unit in the Pentagon.

If the ex-spouse gets custody of the children, soldiers will be issued new I.D. cards for them, even those under 10 years old, entitling them to medical care, post exchange and theater privileges, said Foster. If the soldier gets custody of the children their I.D. cards need not be brought in.

Soldiers will need to fill out another emergency data (DD Form 93) and Servicemen's Group Life Insurance Forms (VA Form 29-8286) because these forms are the basis for determining the soldiers death beneficiaries, said Foster.

Ex-spouses will be deleted from the Defense Eligibility Enrollment Reporting System (DEERS) unless they are covered by the provisions of the Unremarried Former Spouse Act. Ex-spouses will receive limited medical benefits if they were married for 20 years or more to soldiers who served 20 years or more, of which 15 years of the marriage were spent in the service. Full medical benefits are provided for the ex-spouse ho was married 20 years or more to a soldier who served 20 years or more, of which at least 20 years of marriage were spent in the Army, said Brenda Butler, a military personnel relations technician at the I.D. Card Policy Office at Department of the Army.

Soldiers will also need to visit the local finance office. According to SSgt. Raymond Sweetsir of the Military District of Washington Finance Office, soldiers need to bring in divorce decrees to determine if action should be taken to adjust quarters allowance, variable housing allowance and separate rations. (ARNEWS)

Military to explore final frontier

Ninety years ago, the British scientist Lord Kelvin predicted that "heavier than air flying machines are impossible."

Since that time, some of the wildest predictions of scientists, science fiction writers and futurists have turned into simple reality.

Space-based systems are vital to such everyday defense operations as warning, communications, command and control, navigation and weather forecasting. In wartime, they would be critical to battlefield commanders and strategic operations.

"Space is already essential to national security," Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger said recently.

Preparations for an increased use of space for U.S. national defense are well under way. Among these are:

- activation of the joint U.S. Space Command this fall;
- development of the Consolidated Space Operations Center;
- use of the space shuttle in support of defense missions;
- completion of the Vandenburg Air Force Base launch complex; and
- increased investment in satellite control and tracking facilities.

"And the most amazing thing about space, Weinberger said, "is that we have just scratche the surface of its potential."

He pointed to the diversity of America's interes in space — and the almost endless opportun ties a strong space program offers. Space, Wein berger said, represents:

- a place for defense — offering the ultimat high ground for military missions;
- a unique location for research and develop ment — providing an environment that can not be achieved in any terrestrial institution;
- a laboratory for scientiic investigation – furnishing an unobstructed view of the galaxy an the earth; and
- a site for industry — yielding opportunities fo new manufacturing processes and techniques and advanced telecommunications.

"Space is also a place for alliances — offerin opportunities for stronger mutual defense and benefits of international cooperation in scientifi investigation — as the space shuttle's most recen mission demonstrated," Weinberger said.

"Our future is intimately tied to space," Wein berger said. "In actively and vigorously pursuing our space expectations, we are in league with the future — and the future will be a secure one for us and for our allies." (AFPS)

Ranger School grads to reach sergeant early

Beginning Jan. 1, certain graduates of Ranger School may be promoted to sergeant without meeting monthly cut-off scores for military occupational specialties.

In a recent message to the field, Lt. Gen. Robert M. Elton, the Army's deputy chief of staff for personnel, announced that specialists 4 and corporals who graduate from Ranger School may be promoted on the first day of the month after being placed on the promotion list, rather than wait until the third month following recommendation by the local promotion board, provided they meet the following criteria:

- Meet minimum time-in-service requirements of 36 months, or 18 months with a waiver;
- Meet minimum time-in-grade requirements of eight months, or four months with a waiver;
- Be recommended for promotion by the unit commander and promotion board; and
- Attain at least 450 promotion points.

"Ranger School graduates who are now on the sergeant promotion list and are still qualified for promotion will be promoted on Jan. 1," said SGM Dennis Smith of the Enlisted Programs Branch of DCSPER.

"This change in promotion policy is to recognize the arduous training these soldiers go through," Smith said. "If they make it through the Ranger course, they're ready to be sergeants, they're ready to be good, small-unit leaders."

Board to meet, consider JAG majors for promotion

A Department of the Army selection board will convene Jan. 7 to consider active-duty majors in the Judge Advocate General's Corps for promotion to lieutenant colonel, Military Personnel Center officials announced recently.

The zone of consideration will include all eligible majors with dates of rank of Dec. 1, 1980 through April 30, 1981. Above-the-zone consideration will include those with dates of rank of Nov. 30, 1980 and earlier. Below-the-zone consideration will include majors with dates of rank of May 1 through Dec. 31, 1981.

Eligible officers may write letters to the board on their own behalf. Letters should be addressed to President, Lieutenant Colonel (JAG) Promotion Selection Board, Attn: DAPC-MSB, 200 Stovall St., Alexandria, Va. 22332-0400. Letters must arrive by the board's convene date.

Majors eligible for consideration should review their records to make sure that they are correct and up-to-date and that they contain a current photo and record of physical exam.

Officers can get copies of their Official Military Personnel Files (OMPF) and Officer Record Briefs (ORB) at no cost by writing to Commander, USA MILPERCEN, Attn: DAPC-MSR-S (Selection Board Processing Unit), 200 Stovall St., Alexandria, Va. 22332-0400. Include social security number and correct mailing address.

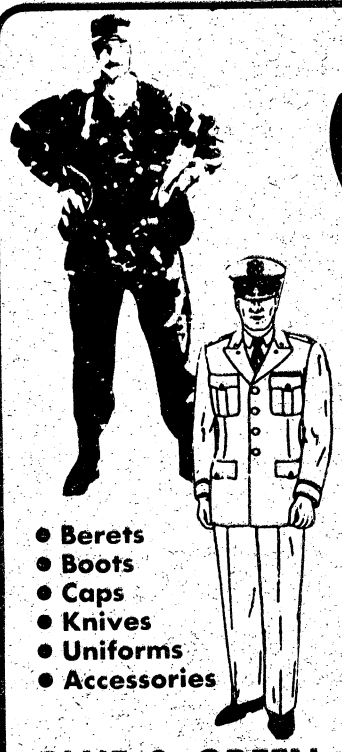
Forward any corrections or additions to the OMPF and ORB through the supporting Military Personnel Office so they arrive at MILPERCEN by the board's convene date. (MILPERCEN)

Medical personnel system revamped

The Army Medical Department's Personnel Support Agency (AMEDPERSA) became the Health Services Division at the Military Personnel Center Nov. 1, as the records of more than 17,000 officers and warrant officers were centralized into the Army's Personnel Management System.

The Health Services Division will continue career management activities, under Col. William J. Simpkins, from its location at Buzzards Point, Washington, D.C., until space is available in the Hoffman complex in Alexandria, Va., the home of MILPERCEN.

The medical department's personnel support agency, organized in 1974 as a field operating agency of the Surgeon General's Office, has had responsibility for nearly all medical department officer personnel programs.



Under new organization, the Surgeon General will keep final approval authority for the assignment of medical department officers as well as the management of offices governing non-military education and training.

Medical department strength for fiscal year 1985 numbered 17,282 officers and 641 warrant officers.

Elements integrated at MILPERCEN include: the Army's Medical Corps-5,312, Dental Corps-1,766, Nurse Corps-4,923, Veterinary Corps-440, Medical Service Corps-4,997, and Medical Specialist Corps-469.

In the Warrant Officer Corps there were 499 physician's assistants, 55 food technicians, and 87 bio-medical maintenance technicians.

Also included in the integration is the Personnel Services Division; the medical department's secretariat and related data support activity; the Incentive Pay Branch, and a new central data base for medical credentials and licenses. (MILPERCEN)

Army implements new safety plan to reduce accidents

A new five-year Army Safety Plan has been designed to improve safety and reduce accidents.

The first five-year plan of its kind, "SAFEARMY 1990" is intended to be used to reduce vehicle and ground accidents and personal injuries by three percent annually, and reduce aviation accidents by five percent annually, according to Col. Terence M. Henry, deputy director of Army Safety and the commander of the Army Safety Center, Fort Rucker, Ala.

Increase training

"This program will affect everyone in the Army, from the privates to the generals to the civilians," Henry said. SAFEARMY 1990 has been specifically designed to avoid creating new resource demands and administrative requirements.

"The focus of SAFEARMY 1990 is to build safety into training and operations so that we do things in a disciplined, smart, safe way," Henry said. "As a result, we'll be able to perform better because we're going to eliminate or reduce some of the risks associated with operations by looking at the projected operation from all angles."

"We plan to integrate SAFEARMY 1990 into readiness, leadership and deployability," Henry said, "So we are better able to perform and increase combat readiness by reducing needless losses of equipment and personnel.

"Safety will be integrated into the deployment plans and operation procedures, especially those related to the prepositioning of and deploying exposives, POL (petroleum, oil and lubricants), equipment and troops to minimize accidental losses and mission disruption," Henry said. A key to any deployment is the safe movement of explosives, anything from M-16 rounds to 8-inch Howitzer rounds to grenades.

"We're also becoming more involved in system safety engineering," Henry said. "For example, new pieces of equipment coming on line have had potential safety hazards removed, such as the Black Hawk helicopters coming into the Army inventory. This is another way we are helping to eliminate accidents in the Army."

To eliminate other safety risks, commanders are encouraged to conduct safety training. This includes training on how to move heavy items so soldiers won't damage their lower back, or ensuring that helicopter pilots get adequate training to perform missions under difficult situations such as carrying a sling load in a formation at night. "We do not want our soldiers operating in a high risk environment without making sure they are properly trained," he said.

"We want our commanders to train their soldiers to be aggressive. But at the same time, we want our commanders to train them to have enough self discipline so they can take the positive things from their training with them in their POVs on a weekend," Henry explained.

"We are hoping for a positive habit transfer, like requiring soldiers to wear seat belts. This is a positive carry over that can save lives," Henry said. Nationwide, there was a 16 percent decrease in vehicle fatalities among 18- to 25-year-olds between 1980 and 1983. The Army had a 22 percent reduction in vehicle fatalities between 1981 and 1984.

Since fiscal year 1982 there has been a steady decline in aviation accidents. In 1982 there were 186 accidents, but the 1986 goal set as part of SAFEARMY is to have no more than 132 accidents. The five percent reduction goal in 1990, is to have a maximum of 104 accidents.

Personnel injuries, on the other hand, have increased from 12,690 accidents in 1982 to 14,589 in 1985. The goal for 1986 is to have fewer than 11,548 accidents. To reach the three percent reduction goal by 1990, officials want no more than 10,025 accidents to happen.

"We must continue to train and minimize our losses," Henry said.

Initiatives

"The safety center is designing a training package so the unit safety officer can get safety training," Henry said.

Initiatives to improve Army safety in 1986 include improved driver training and support materials to reduce tracked vehicle accidents. Major commands will be provided examples and models of proven accident prevention programs as performance standards to be used in developing their own safety programs.

Another initiative in 1986 is to take explosive safety management a major function of each major Army command.

A key action for 1987 is to evaluate the possible use of new communication technologies, such as televideo, to promote innovative accident prevention methods more quickly to safety personnel and Army leaders.

Key actions for 1988 include assuring that 90 percent of necessary safety personnel are trained in explosive safety, and that safety skill training for leaders is being taught in all Training and Doctrine Command schools.

A major action for 1989 is to have all active and reserve component divisions using model accident prevention procedures.

"SAFEARMY 1990 is a road map to how we can go from now to 1990 and be better trained, be more ready and have more of us and our equipment there when we reach it," Henry said. (ARNEWS)

Winterize your house now; snuggle up worry-free later

You've done a great job of taking care of your house all spring and summer. It's no fun thinking about winter's chill — especially after the ones we've had recently. But that's all the more reason to take some extra precautions. The following tips will help prepare your home and yard for the cold season.

- Tour your property and move to out-of-the-way places jars and other objects that could cause injury if you accidentally step on them. You're protecting yourself and visitors by removing such potentially dangerous objects from places where you or others frequently walk.

- Bring indoors all those paints and chemicals — like house paint, stain and driveway sealer — that shouldn't freeze. If you are not sure whether freezing will cause damage, check the label or ask at your hardware store.

- People usually remember to winterize their cars, but most forget to winterize their power tools. Check the owner's manual for instructions on storing your lawn mower, power edgers, sweepers.

- Have your gutters and downspouts cleaned. Clogged gutters can cause ice to back up, putting extra weight on your roof. Clogged and frozen downspouts may burst and make trouble when they fail to carry off the spring thaw.

- Check the condition of your roof and that of your garage, if it's separate from your house. You'll want to know the capacity of your roof to hold ice and snow if you live in an area that gets heavy and acculating amounts.

- Be especially careful in your use of ladders. Ladder falls are a major cause of serious injury around the house. Plant the ladder securely on the ground. Test it out for firmness before climbing, and have someone hold the ladder while you climb. Do not, under any circumstances, try to reach beyond an easy grasp while you are on a ladder. No one likes to consider it, but fatalities occur from ladder falls either because the ladder itself is not safe or because the user was thrown off balance by reaching too far.

- Finally, have your furnace cleaned and checked and do the same for your chimney. These jobs should be done by experts.

Sound like a lot of work? It shouldn't take more than a few hours, ad it will leave you with the secure feeling that your property is ready to weather almost anything winter may bring.

Some soldiers liable in draft registration

Some men who are now serving or have served on active military duty or are members of the National Guard or reserve must register with Selective Service.

All men 18-to 25-years-old who have not yet registered should register promptly to avoid prosecution and/or loss of federal benefits employment, said Joan Lamb, the assistant director for public relations at the Selective Service System in Washington D.C.

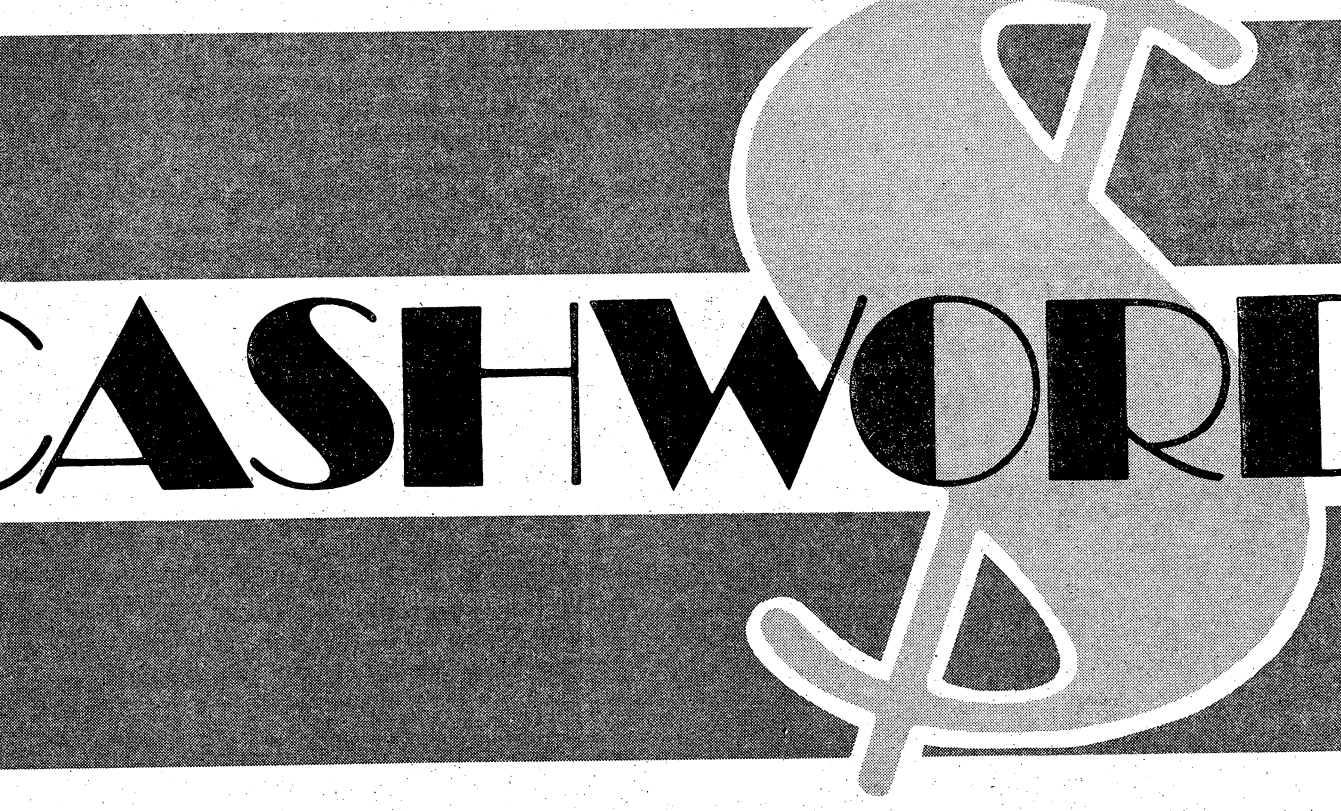
Failure to register is a felony, punishable by a fine of up to $250,000 and/or up to five years imprisonment, said Lamb.

Lamb said that registering now takes on increased importance to all young men in light of a recent law signed by President Reagan. Under this law, men who fail to register will forfeit their right to certain federal college and vocational education student loans and job training benefits under the Job Training Partnership Act. They also forfeit their opportunity for federal employment, both permanent employment with a federal agency or department and temporary summer employment, she added.

Soldier benefits under the G.I. Bill, however, will not be affected, said Veterans Administration spokesman Ozzie Garza.

"The person we're really trying to reach is the male soldier who may not realize he is not registered and whose enlistment expires after his 26th birthday. As the law now stands, this young man will not be protected just because he served on active duty," she said.

"Men born in 1960 will reach their 26th birthday in 1986. It is most urgent that these young men are aware of their responsibility to register before reaching their 26th birthday. After that, selective service has no authority to accept their registration," Lamb said.



Registration in the United States takes only five minutes at any post office, she said. Overseas registration is handled by the 245 U.S. Embassies and the Department of Defense Dependent School System. The embassies can delegate registration authority to the military installations, she explained.

More than 15 million men, age 18 through 25, have registered with selective service since President Carter initiated registration in 1980. (ARNEWS)

Energy conservation targets are changed

The following is an excerpt from a recent letter concerning energy conservation written by Col. James R. Ellis, Fort Benning chief of staff.

"New energy initiatives at Fort Benning have been primarily directed towards young students and family housing residents.

We must now focus on the two large energy users on post, administrative and troop housing. These two areas represent 83 percent of natural gas consumption and 67.4 percent of electrical consumption. The potential for saving energy and meeting our Training and Doctrine Command goals is very substantial.

The new Energy Operations Office will use inspections and metering of facilities to monitor energy consumption and spot trouble areas. We must assign responsibility for consumption if we are to gain control of our energy use.

The inspectors will use an Energy Conservation Checklist. The goal is to achieve an average score of 95 percent on the inspections. A courtesy inspection will be conducted and areas of deficiency will be noted.

During the first phase, meters will be installed in facilities equipped with meter baes. The "Iron Triangle" area of main post will be metered starting in December and occupants will receive an "Energy Record Card" in January for the previous month.

Also in phase one, the existing capability of the EMCS in troop housing and thermal plants will be repaired. Portable meters have been puchased and will be installed in administrative buildings and troop housing. A comparison of similar buildings will again track consumption and help spot trouble areas.

These measures will allow us to gain overall control of our energy consumption. A united effort on the part of all will ensure that we reach our goals without a particular segment of our people carrying an unfair part of the load."

Lifestyle quiz can determine potential problems with health

By Thomas P. Goodell
Martin Army Community Hospital

The American Academy of Family Physicians recently designated October as "Family Health Month." In keeping with this, 1986 could be an appropriate time for each of us to stand back and take a good look at ourselves.

The following quiz will help you rate your lifestyle.

Exercise and Nutrition

1. Do you engage in vigorous exercise for 20 to 30 minutes regularly?
At least three times a week (5 points)
Once a week (2 points)
Once a month (1 point)

2. Do you main a desired weight?
Yes (5 points)
No, I am overweight or underweight by 5 to 20 pounds (3 points)
No, I am overweight or underweight by over 20 pounds (1 point)

3. Do you eat a balanced diet and limit your intake of foods with fat, cholesterol, salt and sugar?
Always (5 points)
Usually (3 points)
Seldom (1 point)

Smoking, Alcohol and Drugs

1. Do you smoke tobacco?
No (10 points)
Yes, I smoke cigars, pipes or less than 10 cigarettes per day (0 points)
Yes, more than 10 cigarettes per day (minus 5 points)

2. How many alcoholic drinks of any kind do you consume in an average week?
0 to 7 (4 points)
8 to 14 (2 points)
Over 16 (1 point)

3. Do you use illegal drugs?
Yes (0 points)
No (3 points)

4. Do you carefully follow directions for taking prescription and over-the-counter medications and avoid taking unnecessary drugs?
Yes (3 points)
No (0 points)

Personal Health and Safety

1. Do you often experience periods of depression?
Yes (1 point)
No (3 points)

2. Do you feel you have satisfying ways to relieve stress, such as discussing problems with friends or family?
Yes (3 points)
No (1 point)

3. Do you see your doctor for regular physical examinations and follow recommendations for health care and preventive measures such as blood pressure control and self-examination?
Yes (5 points)
No (0 points)

4. Do you wear seatbelts when driving or as a passenger in a motor vehicle?
Always (5 points)
Sometimes (3 points)
Never (0 points)

5. Do you ever take a drink of alcohol before driving, or drive when your ability may be affected by drugs?
Never (5 points)
Occasionally (1 point)

6. Do you follow safety rules at work, at home and while participating in sports?
Regularly (5 points)
Occasionally (2 points)
Never (0 points)

7. Are you familiar with first aid procedures and CPR?
Yes (3 points)
No (1 point)

Scoring	Excel	Fair	Poor
Exercise/Nutrition	13-15	8-12	3- 7
Smoking, Alcohol, Drugs	16—20	11-15	4-10
Personal Health/Safety	24-29	16-23	4-15

If your scores are poor, you are taking poor care of yourself. Recognizing this and wanting to do something about it are the two biggest steps you can take. You may someday remember "Family Health Month" and 1986 as the time that your health turned for the better!

Dial-a-Prayer disconnected

The Fort Benning Dial-a-Prayer service is no longer available. The Foundation for Christian living has provided the service, free of charge, to the Benning community for the past few years.

Unfortunately, the use of the service did not justify the continuation of the service. The foundation determined that it was necessary to recall the equipment.

Apologies to those who used the service and received a spiritual lift from Dr. Norman Vincent Peale. We also wish to express our gratitude to the Foundation of Christian Living for permitting us to use the service in the past.

Need help? Call CONTACT

There is a group that cares and is available to help 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Call CONTACT, at 327-3999.

The Fort Benning community is very much a part of CONTACT, for there is always a representative from Fort Benning on the governing board, and some of the volunteer staff are retired military personnel or family members.

2nd ITB NCO honor grad

SSgt. Shelton Williams, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, was the honor graduate from his Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course at the U.S. Army Chaplain Center and School at Fort Monmouth, N.J.

Williams is the NCOIC of the 2nd Brigade Chaplain Section

He will leave Fort Benning in March for an assignment with the instructional staff of the Leadership Department at the Chaplain School.

Newcomers' mass planned

The Catholic Women of the Chapel are planning a newcomers' mass and coffee Jan. 3 at 9:15 a.m. at The School Brigade Chapel annex.

For more information, call 687-0925 or 544-1452.

Bible study begins Jan. 6

The Protestant Women of the Chapel winter Bible study, "Sermon on the Mount," will begin Jan. 6 at 9:30 a.m. in the Religious Education Center on Ingersoll Road.

For more information, call 682-2813.

PWOC plan Jan. 8 meeting

Complementing the Protestant Women of the Chapel's 1985-86 theme "Jesus is the Light of the World," Denise Murray will speak about "Light vs. Darkness," during the group's Jan. 8 meeting.

The meeting will be at 9:30 a.m. in The School Brigade Chapel annex. Free babysitting will be provided.

For more information, call 689-3301.

Expectant parent's class set

An expectant parent's class will be held Jan. 8 at the Martin Army Community Hospital second floor conference room at 7 p.m.

Classes will be held for four consecutive weeks. For more information, cal 545-4603/4041.

When is man seen most worthy when looked at in God's eyes?

By Chaplain Ray Harper
197th Infantry Brigade

Isaiah 6:8 "Here am I, Lord, send me."

These words were spoken by Isaiah, the prophet, even though he felt unworthy to become God's spokesperson to a nation of unfaithful and unworthy people.

I remember as I struggled with the decision to become a minister of the gospel how I felt. I felt tht I was not worthy of such a high calling. Surely, God would not want me representing him! When I shared this concern with my local church pastor he said something I will never forget: "It is when we feel the most unworthy that God can really use us because we are open to the Lord's will for our lives."

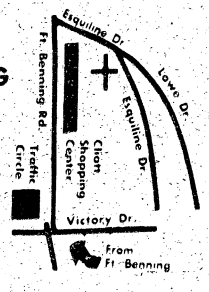
Lest we forget that God may use whomever he chooses, let us remember some of those who have led the way in God's battle for our souls.

Remember father Abraham, who passed his wife, Sarah, off as his sister because he didn't trust God to protect them while among foreigners. Yet Abraham became the father of a great nation.

Remember Moses, a Hebrew raised by the Egyptian King's daughter. He murdered an Egyptian guard who was severely abusing a fellow Israelite. Then he fled into the wilderness where God hand picked Moses to lead the Israelites out of slavery into the promised land.

Remember David, a rebel, a murderer and adulterer. He became the greatest military strategist and king of the Hebrew nation. David was one of the few leaders who was able to unite the tribes of Israel into one nation under God.

Remember Peter, a liar. He promised before God to stand by Jesus his master unto death, yet in the crisis he readily denied knowing his Lord. But Peter became one of the key pillars of the early Christian church.



Remember Paul, in his zeal to purge the followers of Jesus Christ from the face of the earth, he hunted them down, persecuted them, hauled them into jail and even witnessed their deaths. Yet God changed him and made him the apostle of the gentiles.

As we begin this new year, 1986, let us remember that no matter how unworthy we think we are, God can still use us to accomplish his purposes.

Guide helps travelers find temporary lodging

Military personnel on the move may find it easier to locate temporary lodging by using a new guide provided by AT&T.

The 80-page AT&T Guide to Temporary Military Lodging lists temporary lodging facilities and child care facilities for most military installations in the U.S. The book is organized by state with headings for each branch of the military.

The guide is provided free by AT&T Communications. It includes addresses and telephone numbers of the facilities, as well as the number of units available and other appropriate information, such as reservation details.

The guide is available by calling a toll-free number 1-800-551-3131, extention 660.

Lions and tigers and bears! Zoo has something for all

The Atlanta Zoo has something for everyone. It's located in Grant Park on I-20 and Boulevard Avenue. It's open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. The price of admission is $2.50 for adults, $1.25 for kids 4-11, and free for children 3 and under. Tours are available to groups on request. For more information, call 624-1235 or 658-7059.

Stone Mountain offers much for history lovers

The world's largest mass of exposed granite is the focus of the 3,200-acre Stone Mountain Park.

The carving on the north face of the mountain features Jefferson Davis, Stonewall Jackson and Robert E. Lee. A railroad, skylift, antebellum plantation, inn, restaurants, riverboat, antique auto and music museum, 18-hole golf course, carillon, mini-golf, tennis, bike rentals, 500-site campground, swimming, canoeing and paddleboat rides are all offered.

The park, located at the Stone Mountain exit off U.S. 78, is open from 6 a.m. to midnight. The attractions are open from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. The fee is $2.50 and $1.50. Annual vehicle parking permits are available for $15. The daily permit is $4. For more information, call 469-9831 or 498-8000.

Take up horseback riding at Fort Benning Hunt Club

The Fort Benning Hunt Club, on Marne Road, has several services available. Steady horses can be rented for $7 per hour daily from 9:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. Experienced instructors are available for lessons in English riding for $7 an hour plus horse rental.

Stable and open paddocks are also available for your horse. Fees are reasonable and include twice daily feeding, if required. Membership costs $18 per month and entitles you to rent horses at half the normal rate. The club has two Shetland ponies that can be rented for $2 a half-hour and are good with young riders.

Historic District tours offered

The Historic Columbus Foundation at 700 Broadway sponsors two-hour tours of the Columbus Historic District Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 a.m. Prices for the tour are $5 for adults and $2.50 for students and military personnel.

No advance reservations are necessary except for organizations, conventions and student classes. Group reservations should be made several days in advance by calling the foundation at 322-0756 on weekdays between 9:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. Special arrangements can be made for groups unable to take the tours Wednesday or Saturday.

The tours depart from the Georgia Welcome Center on Victory Drive at U.S. Highways 280 and 27.

Halleys Inbound Preview at Callaway Gardens

Callaway Gardens' Education Department is sponsoring a special Comet Halley Inbound Preview Saturday, Jan. 11. Jack Horkheimer, director of the Miami Space Transit Planetarium will be the guest lecturer. Horkheimer is featured on the PBS program, STAR HUSTLER. An entire day of activities is scheduled including bird walks, tours, lectures, Halley video programs, ending with Halley observation.

The program includes a session on comet making at the Sibley Center by Shaw High School teacher, Skip Joiner, from 11 a.m. to noon. Dr. John Tucker, Assistant Superintendant of the Muscogee County School District gives tips about telescopes from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. at the Sibley Center. Lectures about Comet Halley by Drs. Ernest and Dutchie Riggsby, professors at Columbus College and Jack Horkheimer are scheduled at Azalea Hall at 2:30 and 3 p.m. respectively. Halley observations begin at Robin Lake Beach at 5:30 under the direction of Horkheimer and Dr. Carole Rutland of the Muscogee County School District. A food concession will be available after the evening observation.

Callaway annual passes $20

The Callaway Gardens' annual pass for 1986, which provides a year's unlimited admission to the Gardens and Robin Lake Beach, is available now through Feb. 28 for the preseason price of $20.

Beginning March 1, passes will cost $25 each. Annual passes may be used with no additional charge for admission to special events at Callaway Gardens such as the Azalea Festival, the July 4th celebration, the MASTERS Water Ski Tournament, the Symphony in the Gardens series, and special art exhibits.

Highlights for a Gardens; visitor in 1986 include spectacular floral shows at the John A. Sibley Horticultural Center, the newest innovation in greenhouse/garden display, and previews of the latest in vegetables, fruits, and flowers at the three-season, 7½-acre Mr. Cason's Vegetable Garden and Victory Garden South.

Annual passes, which expire March 31, 1987, may be purchased at the Callaway Gardens' Information Center daily from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. Interested persons may also request an application by writing: Annual Passes, Callaway Gardens, Pine Mountain, Ga. 31822, or by calling (404) 663-2281, ext. 151.

WW II watercolor paintings on display at Andersonville

The watercolor paintings of World War II former prisoner of war Curtis Davis are now on display at the Andersonville National Historic Site in Andersonville, Ga.

Davis, of Webster, N.Y., painted three watercolor posters more than 40 years ago when he was a prisoner of war. In 1982 he donated these posters to Andersonville, and they were sent to a conservation center for preservation. The paintings have now been returned to Andersonville for display.

Davis was an 18-year-old from Toronto when he enlisted in the Army in Oakland, Calif., in 1941. A machine-gunner, Davis was captured when Corregidor in the Phillipines fell to the Japanese in May, 1942.

The Japanese captors put Davis and 2,000 other captured Allied troops on a freighter for five weeks. "The rumor was we were going to Japan," Davis recalled. "We didn't know where we were going."

Davis, 10 other Americans, and 41 British prisoners were assigned to work at a Tokyo steel mill. They worked 12 hours a day for 10 yen (the Japanese equivalent to a penny) a day. With 70 yen they could buy 10 cigarettes, he said. Prisoners traded clothing, cigarettes and items in Red Cross packages for other goods from the Japanese. Davis traded for watercolors and paper.

With the materials, Davis painted three posters on heavy graph paper. He painted them in the middle of the night when Japanese guards were not watching.

American bombings became so severe in the summer of 1945 that the prisoners were transferred to copper mines near Asia in the Japanese mountains. They were released Sept. 4, 1945. As for the posters, Davis brought them home "rolled up in a bag."

The park is open from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. daily, including weekends, untill Jan. 8.

For more information, call (912) 924-0343.

South's history comes alive at Savannah Exposition

Two and a half centuries of Savannah's history comes alive through thousands of artifacts, replicas and memorabilia displayed in the Grand Museum Hall of The Great Savannah Exposition, Georgia's newest tourist attraction. The exposition also features two multimedia theater productions that retell Savannah's history in a new and entertaining way.

The Great Savannah Exposition, located at 303 West Broad Street, is open daily to the public from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Admission is $5.50 for adults and $2.75 for children, ages 4-11. Group rates are available on request.

Commissary to renovate meat market and checkstands

AIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Commissary will undergo several renovation projects during the January/February 1986 time frame.

Electrical contractors will be initiating the work on installation of a new cash register scanning system.

In order to install the system and new checkstands, the commissary will be closed Jan.28 and 29 and Feb. 16 and 17.

Also scheduled for renovation, will be the meat market processing room.

During the meat market renovation, scheduled for Jan.6 through 27, the commissary will not have access to the meat market area or processing equipment.

At that time the commissary will be receiving pre-cut beef and pork selections, selling at prices comparable to those downtown, according to Jose Fantauzzi, commissary officer.

Special orders during the renovation cannot be processed.

"In order to give individuals an opportunity to stock up on quality, less expensive commissary processed cuts, the meat market will increase production through Jan. 5, Fantauzzi said.

The sales area is also included in the renovation. The commissary will begin tiling the sales floor Jan.6.

"Completing these projects while the facility remains open will undoubtedly create some temporary, minor inconveniences," Fantauzzi said.

"At the completion of this work I am very confident that we will all agree the improved shopping environment will generate a new pride in our commissary," Fantauzzi said.

Spencer High adds new key club members

Tips for staying warm during marathon

● Part of a series
By John M. Henderson
Special to the Bayonet

Only three Saturdays remain in your training schedule before the 3rd Annual Infantry Marathon. You must use the available time to the most benefit. Long runs (15 to 18 miles) and rest recovery days are important, but the "staple runs" need to be substantial (eight to 10 miles).

The cold, crisp weather that arrived two weeks ago has fortunately persisted; and cool weather strategy must now be adopted.

Clothing. Many expensive GORTEX and GAMEX running suits are available ($70. and up) but are not absolutely necessary. What else can you do? A simple and cheap solution could be to layer a few light pieces of cotton clothing. You could also stuff crumpled newspaper inside your sweat shirt. As you run and warm up, the newspaper can be discarded (in a recepticle).

Wear a hat. Quite a lot (33 to 50 percent) of body heat is lost through the ol' noggen. Even with all of the orifices closed, this route of loss is great. A simple knit cap is fine. Don't forget to cover the ears and to remove a sweat-soaked cap. Almost forgot the neck, it looses heat too, so cover it as well.

Cover your hands. An old pair of socks will do fine.

Pants? Personally I have run in weather down to 20 degrees Fahrenheit with no problem. But, beware of wind-chill effect. Wearing an athletic supporter is somewhat protective. Lining the jockstrap with a thin cotton or lambs wool square is helpful (actually, life-saving).

Footwear. Regardless of constant foot motion, the foot can sustain cold injury. So, it is important to keep the feet as dry and lubricated as possible. It is truly worthwhile to go around pools of water. Jumping over puddles may make you feel like a ballet dancer, but for endurance running could strain muscles and sinews and lead to premature fatigue and spasm.

Skin. Lubricate all friction and exposure areas. Vaseline petroleum jelly is an all around good lubricant, as are lanolin and wool fat. The longest toe, the heel cord area, the upper inner thigh, the armpits and the groin area are all high-friction areas.

The face. The cheeks and lips become dry and painful if allowed to dry out. These minor problems become enormously exaggerated at 22 miles; and the last four and a half miles can be misery. Just don't grease up your forehead because when mixed with sweat (and you will sweat despite wind-chill) it will run down into your eyes, causing unnecessary discomfort. Also, if you wear contact lenses, despite the wind-chill, they will not freeze on your eyeball. It is, however, worthwhile to make sure they are exquisitely clean and rubbed wit lots of wetting solution.

Food and drink. This should not vary much from your usual pattern. Keep in mind hat although coffee, hot chocolate and bouillon do make you feel good, these war liquids can set off a natural reflex in the gut to loosen sphincter tone and increase bowel activity. When you get to the airfield, you fo not want to feel this.

Shelter. Now is the time to practice running the course. When does the wind hit you as you exit the protection of the buildings along Vibbert Avenue? Can you coun the pines along Sunshine Road for much help? Can you angle your shoulers to catch the power of the wind?

There is no doubt in my mind that the very best, most meorable, most accomplished feeling runs in my modest career have been on the most inclement days (and nights), in the breath-stinging cold or tidal wave like rain storms. These are the kinds of runs in which you summon the last morsel of energy tucked away in those far recesses of emotional black holes and whisper in a savory drawl, "You gotta' love it!"

Editor's note — The annual U.S. Army Infantry Marathon and Half-Marathon will be Jan. 25, 1986 at Fort Benning.

Entry for this composite event is open to both civilain and military personnel running as an individual entry and/or as a member of a five-man team.

For more information, call Capt. Robert Jones at 544-ICAN/IRUN/IWIN or Autovon 784-ICAN/IRUN/IWIN. Or you can write him at P.O. Box 2558, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

Post marathon set for Jan. 25

The annual U.S. Army Infantry Marathon and Half-Marathon is set for Jan. 25, 1986 at Fort Benning.

Entry fee for this composite event is open to both civilian and military personnel running as an individual entry and/or as a member of a five-man team.

Miss Georgia, Samantha Mohr, will sing the national anthem.

For more information, contact Capt. Robert Jones at 544-ICAN/IRUN/IWIN or Autovan 784-ICAN/IRUN/IWIN. Or you can write him at P.O. Box 2558, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

Cookies, trophies, pizzas up for grabs at Cookie Run

The sixth annual Cookie Run is planned for Jan. 18 at Weracoba Park in Columbus at 10 a.m.

The 1.5 and 5 miles races are sponsored by Bank South and the Concharty Council of the Girl Scouts.

Runners will be competing for cookies, trophies, medals, ribbons and pizzas. Individuals completing the race will receive a T-shirt. There will be 14 age group catagories.

The theme for this year's run is "Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Girl Scout Cookies." A portion of each runner's entry fee will be donated to the restoration of the Statue of Liberty.

The registration fee is $5 for youth under 17 years of age and $7 for adults. Early registration is encouraged to ensure a T-shirt on race day.

Entry forms are available through the Columbus Girl Scout Office at 1807 17th Street in Columbus, branch offices of Bank South, and at local athletic stores.

Fort Benning units are welcome to enter the run. There will be a special discount entry fee of $5 per person for units of 25 people or more. Units need to pre-register before Jan. 17 at the Columbus Girl Scout Office.

For more information, call 327-2646.

Hunter safety class a must

All personnel desiring to hunt at Fort Benning (except authorized guests) must attend the USAIC Hunting Safety Class or produce evidence of completion of any state or German hunting safety course.

The Fort Benning Hunter Safety Class will be offered at Brown Hall, Building 328, each Friday from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m. until the conclusion of the deer season Jan. 14.

Georgia law requires that hunters born on or after Jan. 1, 1961 attend the six-hour Georgia Hunter Course.

Bass club needs members

Are you interested in the pursuit of the ever elusive "Micropotus Salmoides," also known as the the "Bucketmouth," "Hog-E-John," or "Black Bass"?

If so, come meet with the Fort Benning Bass Club every second and fourth Tuesday of the month in the dayroom of Building 2836.

No matter what your level of bass fishing experience you'll find the club activities informative, educational and a great place to exchange "one-that-got-away" stories.

For more information, call Bill McCrary at 545-1213 or 687-8514.

Karate classes offered

Classes in the Goju style of karate are being conducted by the Officers Wives' Club, building 1234 at Yeager and Ingersol Avenues.

There are separate classes for adults and children. All military personnel, civilian workers (GS7 and above) and their family members are eligible to participate.

For more information, call Capt. John Touchton at 682-0687 after 6 p.m.

About Bulls & Bears & Savings Bonds.

According to people in the stock market, bulls are good and bears are bad. But if you're buying U.S. Savings Bonds through the Payroll Savings Plan, you don't have to worry about missing a ride on the bull or being devoured by the Wall Street bear.

When the bull is dominant in the market and rates are high, you'll share in those higher returns because Bonds now have a variable interest rate.

And that means there's no limit on how much you can earn.

But if the bear takes over and rates decline, you're protected by a guaranteed minimum of 7.5%. And that's only minimum. Chances are you'll do a lot better over time.

All you have to do is hold your Bonds five years or more and you can ride the bull and beat the bear.

Take stock in America.

GENERALS SALUTE — Maj. Gen. John Foss and Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba salute the flag during Tuesday's ceremony.

Foss passes post command to Burba

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Maj. Gen. John Foss passed command of Fort Benning and the Infantry Center to newly frocked Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba at a ceremony on York Field Tuesday.

Burba, formerly the deputy commanding general and assistant school commandant, was frocked to major general shortly before the change of command.

Foss has been tapped to command the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, North Carolina.

In remarks made to the many guests, soldiers and civilians present, Foss expressed his thanks to the Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City communities for the help during his 21-month tenure as chief of infantry and commanding general at Benning.

"A change of command is not the place to go over all of your past accomplishments. It is the place to thank all of your superiors, peers, subordinates and friends who helped you along the way. To all of you goes my heartfelt thanks in helping me to make Fort Benning the good place it is," Foss said.

Burba related that, due to all of the dynamic changes taking place in the Army and, especially in the infantry, that he was very excited to be given the job of chief of infantry.

"This is obviously a great day for me. To me, being the chief of infantry is the quintessence of soldiering. Infantry is at the cutting edge of our defense posture. We have an awesome armada of infantry throughout the world and Benning is at the core of all that happens in the infantry. I pledge to all of you to keep the azimuth on course," Burba said.

The change of command included representatives from all commands on post and the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery fired a salute. The post parachute team, the Silver Wings, jumped onto York Field and presented a baton to Foss and roses to Mrs. Burba and Mrs. Foss, which concluded the ceremonies.

Soldiers enjoy AUSA program during holiday

Many take advantage of 'Operation Holiday'

The sixth annual Operation Holiday bid a fun farewell to 1985 and a spirited welcome to 1986.

Fort Benning soldiers participated in a variety of activities,sponsored by the local chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army, during the two-week holiday period that began Dec. 20.

Eight busloads of soldiers attended Atlanta Hawks basketball games, while six more buses went to the Blue-Gray game in Montgomery, Ala.

Soldiers also attended the Peach Bowl, in which Army rode past Illinois.

Tours of local historical sights including the Little White House in Warm Springs, Ga. and Andersonville Cemetery offered something of interest for everyone.

Operation Holiday coordinators, said the the local community was really interested in the operation. Local businesses opened their doors to tours for the soldiers and were enthusiastic about planning activities for the soldier.

This year's participation was dropped which indicated that more individuals were able to go home for the holidays.

A new soldier attending the Peach Bowl, said that he has never had a better New Year's welcoming. (USAIC PAO)

Soldiers should be proud of Army values

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Secretary of the Army and the Army Chief of Staff have chosen "values" as the Army theme for 1986.

In a joint statement released last week they stated that the Army ethic is comprised of four enduring values: "...loyalty to country and the Army, loyalty to the unit, personal responsibility and selfless service."

All armies of the world demand of their soldiers loyalty to their respective country, army and unit. Other armies also demand selfless service. However, I cannot imagine other armies of the world asking their soldiers to subscribe to a recognition and abidement to personal responsibility.

Certainly, the Soviet army and all of its surrogate "democratic people's armies" demand personal responsibility of the sort to follow any and all orders to the letter, period. This can be seen in Afghanistan where Russian soldiers matter-of-factly murder the citizens of a sovereign nation.

Personal responsibility, to the Soviet soldier, is blind obedience. Not so in the American Army.

All successful armies must have discipline, meaning soldiers adhering to orders, but not blind adherence. In the American Army obedience to orders is tinged with the personal responsibility that the Secretary and Chief of Staff of the Army wrote about, personal responsibility of the sort that is a basic part of being human.

This human personal responsibility is in the form of a U.S. soldier being told by a superior to falsify a document and the soldier refusing and being backed up by the chain of command because he is right.

Human personal responsibility in the form of U.S. soldiers in combat not killing innocent civilians, not shooting prisoners of war, not attacking and destroying non-military towns and homes and businesses.

This personal responsibility boils down, in our Army, to conscience and that is the difference between us and the Soviets, the Khadafy's, the Arafats, and the Khomeinis. Our Army has a conscience in that we don't murder innocent civilians, we don't take hostages in order to support natinal policy and we don't cram our way of life down other countries' throats and then thumb our nose at the rest of the world.

The Army value of personal responsiblity has always been an integral part of our Army, personal responsibility in the form of soldiers fighting and winning but not killing innocent civilians or performing acts abhorrent to human nature.

Ours is a loyalty based on morality and respect for all people and their rights as human beings.

In this era of totalatarian governments propped up by unthinking armies it is refreshing to see the leaders of the largest freeworld army call for personal responsibility from their soldiers. Our Army follows orders but each and every soldier has a personal responsibility to see that those orders comply with the Geneva Convention and accepted norms of humaneness. We can expect no less from the American Army and neither can the rest of the world.

U.S. Army

AMERICAN VALUES — Throughout history, American soldiers have always displayed the highest of values.

Secretary of Army highlights 'values' as Army theme for '86

Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. and Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr. have announced "Values" as the Army's theme for 1986.

"Values" is the sixth area of emphasis since themes were designated in 1981. The other themes have been "Yorktown — The Spirit of Victory," "Fitness," "Army of Excellence," "Year of the Family" and "Leadership."

"Values will be the Army theme for 1986. We are proud of the progress made in the past year to strengthen leadership, the theme for 1985, throughout the total Army. Previous themes have developed into a solid flow of ideas and programs, each building on the preceding ones. As a result, we have strengthened the Army's winning spirit, physical fitness, excellence, families, and leadership.

"Now we turn to the fundamental values of our military profession. From values we draw purpose, direction, vitality, and character — the bedrock of all that we do in the total Army. To the extent that we can strengthen the values of our soldiers, civilians, and families, the Army will be a stronger institution and will be far more ready to fulfill the missions entrusted to it as we face the broad spectrum of threats to our national security.

"The values to which we subscribe spring from, and even transcend, those of the society we serve. They become the framework for the lifelong professional and personal development of our soldiers, leaders and civilians. Our profession involves matters of life and death, and matters of public trust for the responsible care of human as well as materiel resources provided to us. In times of danger, it is the ethical elements of soldierly conduct and leadership which bond soldiers and units together enabling them to survive the rigors of combat. In peacetime as well as in times of danger, rock solid, ethical underpinnings help us to resist the pressures to compromise integrity, to cheat, to shade the truth, or to debase patriotism for material gain.

"The Army ethic comprises four enduring values: loyalty to country and the Army, loyalty to the unit, personal responsibility, and selfless service. It is beneath these overarching values that our soldierly and ethical standards and qualities — commitment, competence, candor, courage, and integrity — and nurtured and given opportunity for growth. This has to happen in peacetime because in war there is no time.

"Values are the heart and soul of a great Army. We ask each of you, as members of the total Army, to embrace these values and make them a part of your personal and professional lives. We urge you to find ways to temper them like steel. By strengthening the values of our profession each of us in our own way can make our Army better, and by so doing contribute to the health and security of our great nation." (ARNEWS)

Main post exchange now accepting credit cards

Added convenience to shoppers cited as major reason for change

By Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Shoppers at Fort Benning are now able to charge items at the Main Post Exchange.

PXs throughout the United States began accepting Mastercard and Visa Monday.

Use of the cards is not limited to the main PX. They can also be used at the Main Post Mini Mall Exchange and the Sand Hill Exchange, according to Carl Lofstrom, exchange manager.

Two post service stations are also accepting the cards. "Though gasoline cannot be charged, accessory items such as tires and batteries can be charged at the Main Mall Service Station and the Main Post Service Station," Lofstrom said.

Also operating on a charge-it system is the Military Clothing Sales Store.

"Our front line will be credit-card free to continue speedy service through the lines," said Shirley Armstrong, store supervisor.

"The main exchange operates under a computer system that will aid in the charge processing. We are not experiencing any problem with the checkout system," Lofstrom said.

> "The main exchange operates under a computer system that will aid in the charge processing."

The credit cards are not accepted at Army and Air Force Exchange Services food facilities, post theathers, beauty shops, or barber shops.

Those stores honoring Mastercard and Visa will carry a display advertising the cards that will be accepted.

Soldiers who wish to obtain a credit card must apply at a financial institution that offers Mastercard or Visa accounts to the general public.

The exchanges will not issue or approve credit card applications.

Reader says changes needed in post housing policy

Letter

Editor, the Bayonet:

In the Dec. 20, 1985 issue of the Bayonet, a reader asked why senior NCOs weren't allocated more quarters. My husband and I agree with the reader that the allocation of quarters at Fort Benning should be reviewed and changed to accommodate every one on an equal basis.

My husband is a staff sergeant with five years in grade and we have two boys, ages 11 and 13. We were assigned a three-bedroom house upon our arrival here. I noted the rationalization of personnel on the three-bedroom waiting list being moved to the four-bedroom list when they are available. The article did not mention how many two-bedroom quarters are available at Fort Benning, which some residents of our block should be in.

I resent that in my housing area there are many lower-ranking personnel who have no children, or only one child having three- and four-bedroom houses. We noted this shortly after our quarters assignment and its continuation during our 18 months here. My husband's basic allowance for quarters is not much more that a sergeant's allotment, but it's much larger than a specialist four's allotment.

We could definitely use an additional room and feel it is unfair that lower-ranking personnel with no children or only one child should have more living space that we do.

I would like the Housing Office to review and adjust the equality of the quarter's assignments of this nature.

Susan G. Winkler
McGraw Manor

Editor's note — Fort Benning Directorate of Engineering and Housing officials told the Bayonet they would reexamine housing allocations and they would make changes if warranted.

CG's message

King had lasting influence on nation

On Jan. 20, Fort Benning will commemorate the birthday of the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. On this day, we should recognize and be reminded of Dr. King's lasting influence on American society. It is a time to reflect and rededicate ourselves to the principles for which he lived and died . . . a dream of dignity for all.

In recognition of Dr. King's many lasting contributions, a commemorative service is planned for 9:30 a.m. Jan. 20 in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall. All members of the Fort Benning and Columbus community are encouraged to join in this service.

Soldiers swarming center; use self-paced programs to improve academically

By Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

The good news from the Kelley Hill education center is that, last year, 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers earned more than 1,400 semester hours of college credit through testing at the center. Another 626 soldiers attending local colleges earned more than 2,000 hours of credit.

Mrs. Aurie McCray, chief of the Education Center, explained that more and more soldiers are responding to the Army's emphasis on education. The Army goal, according to Army Regulation 621-5, is for noncommissioned officers and warrant officers to have at least an associate's degree by their 15th year of service. Also, new soldiers entering the Army without a high school diploma must earn at least a high school equivalency certificate before the end of their first term.

"I've gotten great support from the unit," McCrary says. "Most of the companies have education NCOs and officers who check and update education records of their soldiers. They make an effort to determine who needs what."

Once a soldier knows what he needs in order to meet Army standards, or simply for self-improvement, the education center can provide some valuable resources. For example, a variety of self-paced educational programs teach reading, writing and math skills.

These programs come under the general heading BSEP (Basic Skills Educational Program) for junior soldiers, and CSEP (Career Soldier Educational Program) for NCOs. There are two versions of CSEP, one is designed especially for NCOs preparing to take NCO educational system courses.

With a better grasp of basic skills, soldiers can raise their General Technical and Skill Qualification Test scores. The GT score can only be raised by retaking the Armed Forces Classification Test.

"Many soldiers who come through here are interested in officer candidate school and warrant officer school," says McCrary. "They need a GT score of 110 for those schools. Some want to go to the Military Academy prep school, which requires a GT of 115."

Other soldiers improve their GT score in order to qualify for an Army specialty that may require a GT score higher than what they already have.

A high school diploma or equivalency certificate is another key to success in, or out of, the Army. Many soldiers take the General Educational Development test to earn the certificate. The test is offered through the Kelley Hill education center at no charge.

"Many soldiers acquire enough knowledge for BSEP to take and pass the GED," McCrary says. "We had more than 130 soldiers earn their certificates last year."

The Kelley Hill education center is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays. All of the self-paced programs, such as BSEP and CSEP, are offered in 16 half-day sessions. Interested soldiers should make arrangements through their chain of command to visit with an education counselor.

"Some units arrange for classes to be taught in the unit area," McCrary explained.

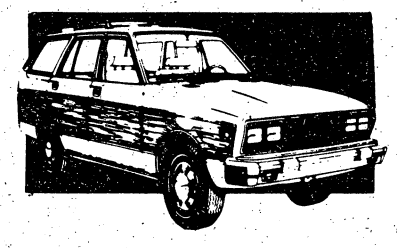
Two companies win guidons for perfect test scores

Company A and Company C of the 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, have something in common. Both companies received guidon streamers for their outstanding success in testing given at AO Eagle.

Company C received a streamer for the mid-cycle test. Given during the seventh week of training, the MCT signals the end of the basic training phase for the One Station Unit Training soldier.

Each soldier is tested on the same tasks learned in basic training Armywide, including a variety of skills including marching movements and employing a Claymore mine. As an extra, they are tested on five additional infantry skills. If they fail the initial test, the soldiers must be retested the same day.

ATC



Company C soldiers, however, not only achieved a 100 percent pass rate, but the entire company passed on the first attempt, winning them the AO Eagle streamer for their guidon.

Company A received its streamer for the end of cycle test the same day Company C was awarded its streamer. Also given at AO Eagle, the EOCT streamer is awarded to the company that achieves a 100 percent pass rate on the tests.

Awarding two AO Eagle streamers in one day is unusual. Giving it to two companies in the same battalion has never been done before, according to 5th Battalion executive officer, Capt. Robert Lara. (1st ITB)

Legal assistant has strong case in 'love for law'

By Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment

Common in her vocabulary are words like litigation, investigation, legal procedures, judicial proceedings and disciplinary action.

Williams

She frequently refers to the Uniform Code of Military Justice and Manual for Courts Martial to guide her in research.

To many, she appears dedicated, loyal and knowledgeable. "These are the ingredients needed to operate a good legal shop," she said.

Laura Williams, military justice assistant for the 29th Infantry Regiment is happy about what she does. "A declaration few people can make," Williams asserts.

The 31-year-old civilian employee attributes her contentment to three factors: her boss; her love for of the law; and her past experience.

Williams serves as a liaison between the regiment commander, his battalion staff and Staff Judge Advocate personnel.

Her duties require research into personnel files and police records to compile background information on individuals pending legal action.

Also, she functions as a counselor; providing necessary technical assistance to the appointed record during various administrative boards.

Williams claims she is able to enjoy her work because she works with people who trust and rely on her. She says about her boss, "He gives me the opportunity to do my job without standing over my shoulder."

In return, she gives 100 percent all the time, she says.

Also, Williams claims to like her work because she works for a commander who cares about his soldiers. "He preaches fundamental fairness, and he practices what he preaches," Williams says.

In addition to these reasons, Williams' content attitude is also the result of her "love for law." She says, "I've always been an inquisitive person. I've always wanted to go to law school because I hate being ignorant to anything.

"I've found that law satisfies my curiosity.

"Being an MJA helps to satisfy my investigative appetite — the Recreation center offers something for everyone

197th

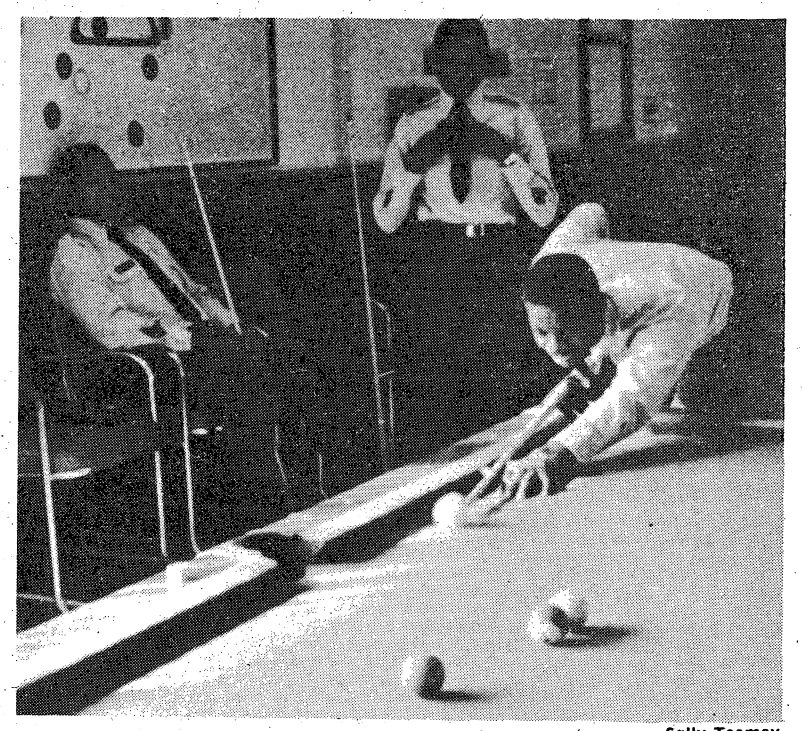
By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

Another dull weekend? Still 25 more days until payday? There's always one place to go that has a lot to offer at a price that can't be beat — the "rec center."

The Kelley Hill Recreation Center offers many activities for soldiers of the 197th Infantry Brigade and the rest of the Fort Benning community.

According to Julia Smith, center director, soldiers, family members and retirees can take classes, join tournaments and use a variety of facilities available at the center.

The rec center has game rooms where you can play pool, ping-pong and foosball. A weekly pool tournament every Thursday night draws many of the brigade's "pool sharks." The rec center also sponsors a spades tournament every Sunday afternoon.



Even if tournaments become noisy, soldiers can listen to music in soundproof booths or create their own using one of many musical instruments available at the center.

Through a branch of the main post library, individuals can choose from a variety of books such as best selling novels, nonfiction and reference materials.

"If we don't have it here, the librarian can request materials from the library on main post," Smith said.

In the past the center has offered classes on such things as quilting, weaving and soft sculpture. Suggestions and new ideas for upcoming classes are welcomed by the center director.

The rec center is presently installing computer equipment. When the installation is complete, classes will be offered in basic computer skills such as word processing.

Oklahoma reserves 'take over' Army Training Center battalion

Reserves

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

To vividly illustrate the one-Army concept, Lt. Col. Fred Sheldon temporarily passed command of his record-setting 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade to Lt. Col. Jim Stanley of the 1st Battalion, 378th Regiment, 95th Division (Training), U.S. Army Reserve Jan. 6.

"Army Training Center commander, Col. Ed Szvetecz, my brigade commander, Col. Steve Siegfried, and myself strongly believe in the one-Army concept.

I am still the battalion commander, but my role for the next eight weeks will be as chief evaluator to point out any areas the Army reservists need to improve on," Sheldon said.

This "take-over" of Sheldon's battalion by the reservists will last for eight weeks, with Stanley and three other battalion commanders getting hands-on experience. Sheldon will evaluate the four different commanders, who will rotating in every two weeks, and then reassume command.

When a battalion comes in they replace their active-duty counterparts. This includes the battlion commander, the battalion staff, all company officers, drill sergeants and all support personnel.

The reservists, who are based out of Chicaksha, Okla., have a mission to train infantry soldiers and, with continuity support from the active-duty cadre, run the battalion.

The mobilization mission of the 95th Division and, more specifically, the 2nd Brigade which the 1-378th is a part of, is to deploy to Fort Polk, La. and set up an infantry training base and train infantry soldiers, freeing up the active-duty Army to go to combat units. The ATC commander strongly feels that to be ready for their real-life, mobilization mission, the reserves must get actual, hands-on training.

"The best way to learn is to do. You will get training on how to train and, in effect, by giving you the responsibility for the running of this battalion and for training infantry soldiers, you're going to learn how to train by doing," Szvetcz said in remarks to Sheldon and Stanley.

"You will run the training programs, you will actually be out there, making the decisions and actually performing your mobilization mission. We're asking you to take charge and run the show. Ultimately, you will get good training experience and we will see that you are trained to mobilization standards," said Szvetcz.

The Army Reservists have a real challenge in training the 9th Battalion soldiers. Sheldon's unit has set ATC and post records, some never before awarded, for basic rifle marksmanship and Army physical readiness test scores.

"This provides a real challenge for us. We're prepared and ready to train. I have a great bunch of staff personnel and drill sergeants. A big plus in this whole concept is that we get hands-on, real-life training," said Stanley, a civilian public accountant from Norman, Okla.

Stanley said his men have to work very hard at staying current with new developments in the Army and that it involves more than one weekend a month.

"My staff and I train about three weekends per month on review and reinforcement training. In addition, the drill sergeants are constantly training at different schools and on unit missions. It's a misconception that the Army Reserve just trains one weekend per month," Stanley said.

Legal

more I research, the more I learn."

Williams explained that her duties do not qualify her to argue cases, or go before a judge in the capacity of an attorney. She says, "That's one of the first things that a good MJA learns — never to pass yourself off as a barred attorney. You're only acting in a subordinate role to an attorney who's available to give guidance at all times."

An MJA is free to act as a paralegal, however. Williams says, "Research is the backbone of any law office. An MJA does the leg work for the attorney. We help to lay the foundation for the legal procedure or legal action to be conducted."

In this respect, an MJA frees the attorney to prepare for actual litigation of a case, Williams says.

Her first opportunity with legal research came in 1980, when she was recruited by Fort Rucker, Ala., to work as a paralegal intern specialist.

She was selected from among 70 candidates, and her duties focused mainly on a consent decree — a case whereby a group of people in a similar situation, be it race, creed, or handicap, join together to bring legal action against the government.

Williams says, "It was at Fort Rucker that I gained most of my experience as an MJA. I worked in all aspects of law — claims, administrative, trial defense and labor law."

The consent decree required extensive research into regulations and civilian personnel conduct, Williams says. She was awarded Honorary Assistant Attorney General by Alabama for her dedication and research on this case.

Williams has a goal of attending law school some day. Her first serious thoughts about law school came in the '70s when civil rights was the big thing on many college campuses. "I was influenced by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. prior to that. He started me to thinking why is it this way?" she says.

Williams, after toying with college in 1972, became convinced a year and a half later that she was predestined for law studies. She says, "Initially, I started out studying education. I thought I wanted to be a teacher. But after a while, I changed my major to criminal justice. I got to thinking, there are enough teachers out there. I need to know something that will help me protect myself."

She eventually obtained a baccalaureate degree in criminal justice in 1979. Williams believes her degree and the paralegal intern training helped to open doors for her current job, MJA at the 29th.

Wizard 'wows' kids at battalion Christmas party

ATC

Its motto is "Show the Way," and 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade prides itself on living up to that motto during the day-to-day business of providing intensive infantry training for One Station Unit Training soldiers.

But, 5th Battalion showed the way in sharing the holiday spirit at a Christmas party recently for cadre and family members.

Because Christmas is so special to them, the children were given special treatment at the celebration. More than 100 children were "wowed" by "Wow the Wizard," with dozens of youngsters participating in the magic show. One happy child even wore a miniature wizard's costume.

The battalion cadre, their families, and the OSUT soldiers spent long hours decorating the tree and the classroom. The festive spirit of the season was enhanced by the OSUT soldiers' singing traditional Christmas carols, and partygoers contributed their voices in a singalong.

When the chorus burst into "Here Comes Santa Claus," the tune served to announce the arrival of the jolly elf himself. As the children sat in excited awe, Santa called the names of the children, presenting each with a special gift. Two teenage family members acted as Santa's elves and helped deliver the presents, but it was SFC Marvin Murphy, a Company D drill sergeant, who was such a natural in his role as St. Nick.

Cpls. John Valledor and Stephen McKenna were on hand to take pictures. And just when it seemed as though the party couldn't be more successful, Pvt. 2 Gloria Scott, who had joined the battalion only four days earlier, showed up with a Santa Claus pinata. Battalion executive officer, Capt. Robert Lara, and Training Management Activity chief, 1st Lt. Glenn Steffenhagen helped each blindfolded child take a swipe at the pinata until, at last, it burst and rained candy on everyone.

Everyone revelled in the spirit of genuine caring. (1st ITB)

Soviet expert will address AUSA membership meeting

Retired Lt. Gen. Samuel V. Wilson will be the guest speaker at the next general membership meeting of the Association of the U.S. Army next week.

The meeting is Jan. 16 at the Columbus Ironworks Convention and Trade Center beginning at 6:30 p.m., followed by a buffet dinner at 7:30 p.m.

Wilson completed the Army's Foreign Area Specialist Training Program (Russian) and Columbia University's Russian Institute of the School of International Affairs. He served a variety of tours in this area, assigned to the Diplomatic Pouch and Courier Service at the State Department, as an intelligence officer for the Army General Staff, as a consultant on Soviet affairs in the Office of the Secretary of Defense and a three year tour with the Central Intelligence Agency.

Tickets are $13.50, and can be purchased at major local banks in Columbus, from unit first sergeants or in the AUSA office, Room 601, Building 4.

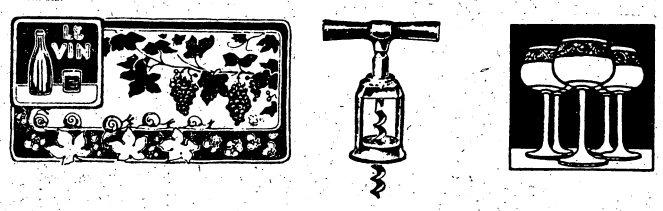
Many activities planned on post for King birthday

In observance of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, Fort Benning will have a commemorative service at 9:30 a.m. Jan. 20 in Marshall Auditorium in Building 4.

Retired Lt. Col. Tyrone Fletcher, the director of Admissions at Morris Brown College in Atlanta, will be the guest speaker. Fletcher, who holds a bachelor's degree in psychology from Florida A&M and a master's degree in community leadership from Central Michigan, has been listed in Who's Who in Georgia, Who's Who in Black America and Outstanding Young Men in America.



The public is invited to attend the ceremony. Attendees should be seated 10 minutes prior to the beginning of the service.

In other activities relating to King's birthday, a Fort Benning color guard will participate in a memorial service at the Columbus Government Center at 4 p.m. Wednesday.

The Infantry Center Band and a post color guard will also participate in a parade in Columbus beginning at 3 p.m. Jan. 18.

Civilian employees and nonessential military personnel will take a holiday Jan. 20 as Fort Benning celebrates King's birthday. (USAIC PAO)

Energy efforts not new; post had program in '52

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Energy conservation is nothing new at Fort Benning. Ralph Meyer said the post had an active conservation program in 1952 when he was stationed here.

"The main emphasis back then was on saving heat, lights and water," he said. "We didn't have air conditioning in most buildings so that wasn't a factor then."

Then a master sergeant, Meyer served as conservation noncommissioned officer for the Transfer Point, the installation outprocessing center. "Back then we were located in Building 17 and people outprocessing stayed there for five to seven days," he said.

Inspectors came for announced and unannounced inspections and checked such things as lights on in unoccupied rooms, dripping faucets and windows left open when the radiator was on.

Wanting to make sure conservation was constantly in his soldiers' minds, Meyer came up with the idea of having energy cartoons posted around the building as reminders.

"There was a troop outprocessing who was good at drawing, so I told him what I wanted and he drew some cartoons that reminded troops to save on lights, heat and water," he said.

The transient nature of the population living there did not prove to be a problem in their conservation efforts.

"Everybody was conscious of their energy use and there was a big push to get no gigs on inspections," he explained. His building seldom got anything but a perfect inspection, an accomplishment Meyers is still proud of.

Meyer served in the Army for 20 years, retiring as a captain, and spent an additional 20 years working for the Georgia State Employment Office before retiring three years ago.

He said the things he learned in the conservation program at Benning stayed with him, and he still tries to conserve resources in his home.

"It's the kind of thing that stays with you and rubs off in your every day life," he said.

SAFETYCAB success during holidays

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

SAFETYCAB was a resounding success for Fort Benning this holiday season, according to traffic statistics.

Military police reported no fatalities in the area due to driving under the influence, although there were 21 people arrested for DUI during from Dec. 13 through Jan. 1.

"We're just sorry these people arrested didn't call us instead," said Diane DeCaesar, director of community relations and marketing at The Bradley Center, one of the sponsors of the SAFETYCAB program.

Of 784 calls received, 620 rides were provided, DeCaesar said.

"Since about one-fourth of our riders went to or from Fort Benning, we feel we helped the post have a safe holiday season," she said.

DeCaesar said the discrepancy between calls received and rides provided was due to the fact that either the caller didn't want to wait for the cab, or else the driver could not find him at the pick-up location.

She praised the military police for their help in publicizing the program. "Col. Kinder and Lt. Col. Curry were tremendously helpful in working with us, and I think this contributed to the program's success on post," DeCaesar said.

The tri-city area had no fatalities during the holidays this year, compared to three fatalities during the same time period in 1984.

"We're proud of this statistic, because it proves the success of the program," she said.

Ceremony to honor McCaffrey

An honor guard ceremony for Brig. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey, new assistant commandant of the Infantry School, will take place Tuesday at 4 p.m. on York Field.

McCaffrey comes to Benning after serving as commander of the 3d Brigade, 9th Infantry Division (Motorized), Fort Lewis, Wash., a position he has held since March 1984.

He graduated from the U.S. Military Academy with a bachelor's degree in engineering and holds a master's degree in civil government from American University.

He attended the Basic and Advanced Infantry Officers Courses,the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College and the Army War College.

In the event of bad weather, the ceremony will move to Marshall Auditorium in Building 4. (USAIC PAO)

Unit tax officer trained to provide aid

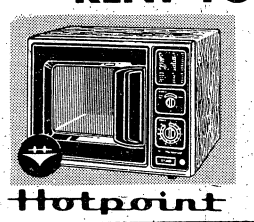
By Michael V. Totin
Installation Tax Officer

As January draws to a close, soldiers and their families will receive their W-2 forms and begin preparing their federal and state income tax returns. If a soldier needs assistance in preparing his tax forms, his first stop should be his unit tax officer.

Each unit at Fort Benning will have an officer or noncommissioned officer appointed to assist members of their units. If the unit tax officer cannot solve the problem, he can refer the person to the Legal Assistance Office or the local Internal Revenue Service Taxpayer Assistance Office at 307 15th Street in Columbus.

The unit tax officers took part in a five-day training seminar conducted by the IRS Jan. 6 to 10. They received extensive training in the preparation of 1040, 1040A, 1040EZ and other tax forms and schedules. As part of the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program, the assistance is provided to the soldiers and their family members free of charge. Information divulged in preparing the tax return is kept in confidence.

From time to time, the Legal Assistance Office will run tax tips for soldiers to aid them in the completion of their forms. This week's tip concerns the use of the Leave and Earnings Statement as a substitute for the W-2 forms.



The most recent information from the IRS indicates that a tax form filed with an LES will not be credited with any withholding. As a result, taxpayers entitled to a refund may not receive one. More importantly, those owing taxes, will likely end up owing substantially more tax.

Taxpayers who have already filed using their LES should contact their unit tax officer to correct their filing.

Schools

The husband and wife writing team of Sharyn Kane and Richard Keeton will be coming to Faith Middle School Jan. 20 to March 21, and that means students will get a double dose of artistic stimulation and fun.

"We believe that everyone has creative potential and consider it our job to help students find theirs if they haven't already," Keeton said. "We like to say, 'If you can talk, you can write.'" "We try to show that writing is just talking on paper. That takes some of the mystery and fear away and then the imagination can run free."

By combining music, mime, dance, and the visual arts, with help from visiting artists and using their own plentiful bag of tricks, the team intends to offer something of interest for every student. "This will be our first experience on a military base, and we're looking forward to drawing on the students' varied interests and experiences," Keeton said.

Sponsored by the National Endowment for the Arts, the Georgia Council for the Arts, and the Fort Benning School System, their residency will be coordinated by assistant principal, Gail Wilson and teachers, Judi Ebert and Anne Trawick. Vicki Marks will be the artists' liaison to the community.

The writers have been working together full time for more than seven years, a rarity in the highly individualized field of freelance writing. They also write and teach separately, and will divide their time while at Fort Benning between teaching and writing. "The chance to write without deadlines and stimulated by all that's happening in the classroom is a big drawing card of the Artists-In-Education Program for us," Kane said.

Both Kane and Keeton have over 15 years of professional writing experience, and have published hundreds of stories. Currently, they are contributing editors for ATLANTA Magazine.

Kane is a journalism graduate of the University of Georgia, while Keeton earned a journalism degree from the University of Texas and a masters from Johns Hopkins University.

For additional information about the residency program, contact residency coordinators: Gail Wilson, Judi Ebert or Anne Trawick, 545-2802 or Community Coordinator: Vicki Marks, 682-2969. (USAIC PAO)

Fitness training units helping new recruits meet PT standards

All newly recruited soldiers unable to meet minimum physical fitness standards are being diverted for as much as three weeks from initial entry training to shape up before returning to their basic training units.

The standards, developed by the Soldier Physical Fitness School at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., are being enforced by "fitness training units" at the Army Training Centers across the nation.

"Army training officials have found that too many recruits fail basic training because of insufficient upper body strength," said Lt. Col. Robert Hoffman, a staff officer at the Fitness School. "So the fitness training units take charge of any male recruit who does fewer than 13 push-ups, and any female recruit who can't do a push-up and can't hold herself at chin level on the pull-up bar for at least two seconds in the 'flexed-arm hang test.

While assigned to the fitness training units, the trainees develop physical conditioning and learn basic military skills, the latter designed "to give these otherwise low-level performers an edge over their contemporaries once they return to the mainstream," Hoffman said.

"Whenever the men are able to do 20 push-ups and the women seven, they'll join a regular unit to begin initial entry training," he said. If after the maximum of three weeks they still fail to measure up, they can be considered for discharge. The final decision is up to the commander on a case-by-case basis.

Hoffman said the fitness training units' cadres, consisting of as many as 11 soldiers each, have been specially trained at the Fitness School. Training for the FTU cadres covers such areas as the proper techniques for strenuous exercise, knowledge of muscle groups and psychological motivation. (ARNEWS)

AAFES taking hard line to stop shoplifting

PMO

From July through December 1985, 52 people were apprehended for shoplifting on post. The profile of the suspects were from various catagories, including active-duty military, retirees, wives, children, and employees of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service.

Everyone has the potential to be a shoplifter. It's a sad truth, but you and everyone you know are suspects who come from all walks of life, ages, professions, and family backgrounds.

AAFES is taking shoplifting very seriously. They're getting tough. Tighter security and more sophisticated detection devices have greatly increased the odds of getting caught. AAFES is taking action against shoplifters no matter what the size or price of the item stolen and regardless of the race, color, creed, sex, age, or military standing of the offender.

So, what's all the fuss? Maybe you didn't realize that shoplifting nationally amounts to losses of $20 million a day. That's an $8 billion crime annually. In fact, shoplifting is the single largest monetary crime in our state and nation.

If the big bucks don't impress you, look at it this way. Since AAFES operates on a non-profit basis, shoplifting takes away dollars that are used to enhance the military's way of life.

The sad thing is that when someone is apprehended for shoplifting, they usually have the money to pay for the item. The few exceptions are children who are caught shoplifting candy, toys, etc.

If you think shoplifting is a cheap thrill or a way to get something for nothing, you'd better think again. What you steal in one moment may haunt you for the rest of your life. Shoplifting can give you a Federal criminal record that can never be erased. (Provost Marshal)

Veterans life insurance may add incentives to combat competitors

Soon Army retirees may be able to pay future Veterans Group Life Insurance (VGLI) premiums by allotment and soldiers may be able to apply for coverage before they become veterans.

Stephen Wuriz, chief of the Program Administration Section of the Veterans Administration (VA) Insurance Center in Philadelphia, expects a decision from the Department of Defense in the next couple of months for a program that would allow retirees to pay premiums by allotment, and for permission to test VGLI enrollments during soldiers' separation processing.

Due in part to competition from commercial companies, VGLI enrollment has decreased in recent years, Wurtz said. The intent of the changes in enrollment policy is to double the existing VGLI enrollment of about 160,000 Army vets, he said.

At present, veterans must pay their premiums by check each month and active-duty soldiers must wait until after separation to apply for a VGLI policy. According to Wurtz, the VA should be able to offer a substantial first-year premium discount to soldiers who apply for VGLI upon separation from the service. Wurtz expects the insurance center to save in administrative costs and pass the savings on to enrollees.

The VGLI Program, an extension of the Servicemen's Group Life Insurance (SGLI), allows former soldiers up to 120 days from date of discharge to apply for low-cost VGLI term coverage, regardless of their physical condition. They have an additional year beyond that to apply, but they have to meet good health standards. While active-duty soldiers are automatically enrolled in the SGLI Program unless they elect otherwise, veterans must apply for a VGLI policy.

Common sense tips help avoid accidents

By Thomas P. Goodell
Martin Army Community Hospital

Last year accidents in the United States led to some frightening and disturbing statistics. More than 100,000 Americans died in accidents. Another 300,000 suffered permanent disability. Another 9,500,000 people had to deal with painful temporary disability. Accidents were the fourth leading cause of death.

Half of these accidents happened to motor vehicles and another quarter occurred in and around the home.

Each year, the Army family contributes more than its fair share to these numbers. This happens because the Army is composed mostly of young healthy people — the group at highest risk for accidents.

The important thing is that many of these accidents could have been prevented or prepared for. It is much better never to have an accident, and to stay healthy, than to hope that you and your family will survive.

Now some tips:

Around the car

● Don't drink and drive. Even small amounts of alcohol impair your coordination and result in tragedy. If there is any doubt, let someone else drive. Remember also that the penalties for driving while intoxicated are severe and becoming more so.

● Use your seat belt. Fort Benning now requires this as the result of a series of traffic deaths — accidents that the people would have walked away from had they been wearing their seat belts. It's a good rule and just common sense for you and your family.

Health

● Drive carefully. Obey the speed limit and reduce your speed if the lighting or the weather is bad. Watch for units running in the early morning hours.

Around the home

● Protect your family from fire. Teach your children about fire safety and don't let a fire burn unattended. Smoke is the leading killer in fires — smoke detectors are inexpensive and give you early warning of a fire (time to save your family). Go over how to get out of the house with your children, especially from a second floor.

● Avoid poisoning. Medicines, garden products and household chemicals should all be stored in safe and secure areas. Never store them in food containers. Know the telephone number of the emergency room in case an accident happens. Each home should have a bottle of 'syrup of ipecac' to cause vomiting (this is done only after talking to a doctor) as this needs to be done early to help.

● Treat firearms with respect. The weapons and ammunition should be stored separately and both be locked up. Teach your children about firearm safety.

● Keep water fun safe. Children should either know how to swim or wear flotation devices — never just floating on a raft. Supervision is essential.

Your efforts can prevent needless injury to yourself and your family. It's a way of saying "I love all of you and want you to be safe." Show them that you care.

This year's flu bugs will be milder than last year's deadly strains

It starts with a mild headache, followed by a runny nose, fever, aches, pains and general malaise. You've probably got the flu, but that should be confirmed by medical authorities.

In general, the recommended treatment is bed rest, plenty of fluids and a mild pain reliever. Some flu victims need more treatment, others need less. Flu usually runs its course in a week.

We are presently right in the middle of the flu season, which runs through April, according to Lt. Cmdr. (Dr.) Joel Rosenstock, assistant professor of preventive medicine and biometrics and assistant professor of medicine at the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences, the nation's only military medical school.

Fortunately, this year's flu season is expected to be mild, because the same strains of flu that were here last year (A-Philippines, A-Chile and B-USSR) are expected to return. That means a lot of people have built up some immunity. But it doesn't mean you don't have to be vaccinated; vaccine protection wears off during the year.

Although a case of the flu is generally not worrisome to people from 22 to 30.

"A major complication is primary viral pneumonia," said Rosenstock. "The flu invades the lungs and causes pneumonia. Ten to 30 percent of those who contract pneumonia will die."

An older person with the flu is in a weakened state and open to a "super infection," a situation in which bacteria invades the lungs, resulting in bacterial pneumonia.

With bacterial pneumonia, the flu sufferer has the common symptoms associated with the flu. The sufferer then begins to feel better for a couple of days. "When the second infection sets in," Rosenstock cautioned, "it will be accompanied by fever, chills, shaking and a cough. If the bacterial pneumonia is not diagnosed and treated, the pneumonia could be fatal."

Dial-a-Prayer disconnected

The Fort Benning Dial-a-Prayer service is no longer available. The Foundation for Christian living has provided the service, free of charge, to the Benning community for the past few years.

Unfortunately, the use of the service did not justify the continuation of the service. The foundation determined that it was necessary to recall the equipment.

Apologies to those who used the service and received a spiritual lift from Dr. Norman Vincent Peale. We also wish to express our gratitude to the Foundation of Christian Living for permitting us to use the service in the past.

Precept Bible study Monday

The precept upon precept Bible study, "Sermon on the Mount," will begin lesson one Monday at 9:30 a.m. in the Religious Education Center, Building 229.

PWOC offers bible studies

In addition to the Precept Bible study classes that the Protestant Women of the Chapel offer, they also sponsor three options to the program.

First, a beginner's Bible study class will be led by PWOC president, Nancy McKenzie. Secondly, a study class will be offered about the book, "The Spirit-Controlled Woman" by Beverly La Haye. Thirdly, is the mothers of pre-schoolers program, which offers Bible-related studies, crafts, fellowship and fun, centered around the idea that sometimes mom needs a morning out.

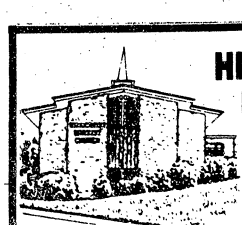
All programs begin Monday at 9 a.m. at the Religious Education Center.

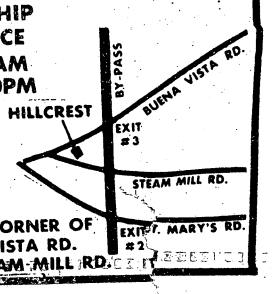
Dinner after fellowship

A potluck dinner and Christian fellowship is planned for Jan. 25 from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

The guest speakers will be Costell and Mia Oglice, a couple expelled from Romania because of their Christian faith.

All attendees are required to bring a main dish and either a vegetable or a dessert. For more information, call Bill Geasa at 689-4210.





Need help? Call CONTACT

There is a group that cares and is available to help 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Call CONTACT, at 327-3999.

The Fort Benning community is very much a part of CONTACT, for there is always a representative from Fort Benning on the governing board, and some of the volunteer staff are retired military personnel or family members.

Pride key to making it through Jump School

Grad says 'when you're Airborne, nothing and no one can touch you'

By Cordelia Ann Chater
Special to the Bayonet

It seemed as though I had been holding my door position for hours, but it was only seconds since I had thrust my sweaty static line into the hand of the jumpmaster.

The ground, 1,250 feet down, tilted at a strange angle; it didn't really look like the ground at all. My body was tensed like a rubber band ready to snap as the screaming wind threatened to suck me out of the aircraft. I looked down to make sure my scuffed boots were in the right position, anything to keep from looking at the green light; it seemed so final. So, I just waited for the slap that would toss my body into the boiling prop blast.

For months I had been listening to airborne school horror stories — after I had finally decided to go, I had asked everyone I knew who was even remotely airborne what would it be like, would I make it, was it scary? The various answers were enough to keep me awake at night and turn me into a virtual basket case.

But that didn't daunt me. Even after a friend of mine, with a vicious glint in his eye, held up a pen and let it fall to the ground, complete with a vocal "Splat!" I was still going to do it. The months of waiting had turned my going to jump school into a matter of proving something, not only to my chain of command, but to myself.

So I ended up at Fort Benning expecting the worst: five-mile sprints up vertical hills, sets of push-ups that would make my elbows bleed, "black hats" who would reduce me to a shivering mass of jello. I was ready: I had the intestinal fortitude (and the ulcers, probably) to conquer any torture I was put to.

After a weekend of paperwork, endless waiting and miserable chow, me and more than 400 other "legs" double-timed over the ground branch. All morning we had laughed too loudly and said it would be no problem: we had airborne desire.

The airborne horror stories came back to haunt me: I was going to come into contact with my first "black hats." These were the meanest, coldest and hardest people in the Army; they probably had to chew nails and spit out map tacks just to be considered for the job.

But when I saw them for the first time, they basically looked like people — yeah, maybe they snarled a lot and had a tendency to scream, but other than that, they looked like your average sadists.

The first day was a real milestone: after becoming quite comfortable in a garrison environment at Fort Bragg, I got reacquainted with a training regimen that was worse than basic training. That first day also held the big test: "break area procedures."

"Break area procedures" turned out to be a fancy name for a physical and mental harrassment session, the sole purpose of which was to "weed out the weak" by getting people to quit.

Around my 200th side-staddle hop I started to get sick. Like a panther to a wounded animal in the herd, I was leaped upon by "black hats." Pulled out of the group, I got personal attention by two instructors who got right up in my sweaty face with insults and commands to quit.

Quit? Why would I quit? Even though I'd only been in airborne school for an hour, I'd already been through too much to throw it away. As the cadre had us saying to the forever-posed question, "Wanna quit?" "Hell no, sergeant, airborne!"

The next day I discovered the gig-pit: a neatly-raked pit of dirt and sawdust used by people who had some discrepancy during morning inspections. Mine was "failure to follow instructions" (I had a rubber band in my hair). The cadence sung there while we sweated and groaned was a constant source of amusement to us: "Wah, wah, wah/ you wanna go home/ to your momma/ bake some cookies/ some chocolate-chip cookies/ do your laundry," etc. However, it's hard to laugh while low-crawling with a throat full of sawdust.

During ground week, I did more parachute landing falls than the Army has forms. My calves were peppered with pebble-sized bruises; my entire body was covered, filled and caked with sawdust. At first, I had such difficulties as landing with my feet apart, with my elbows stuck out or slamming my steel pot-clad head into the ground.

It was the 34-foot tower that became my nemesis. We students were told that 34 feet was the psychologically proven height that would determine whether we would be able to jump or not. The height didn't bother me, but when, on my first exit, the jumpmaster had me believing I wasn't hooked up and would plummet to my serious injury, I got a little nervous. After 29 times of having my body ripped apart by the harness, running in the afternoon heat back from the mound, up 34 feet of stairs and continual harrassment ("Get down, 13" or "Beat your boots, 13!"), I couldn't get my body position right. So I got recycled: condemned to be called a "golf." (Everyone wears a roster number on their helmet; there are no names. If a student gets recycled during ground week, a G is put after his roster number; if it happens in tower week, he gets a T. Thus, I was known as 13G).

I was devastated — not only was I going to have to go through ground week all over again, miss work for another week and get moved to another company, I felt like a loser. How hard could it be? I thought. Even the most uncoordinated people were qualifying. I felt like such a leg.

Being a "golf" wasn't such a bad way to go through airborne school. With the G on my helmet, the "black hats" recognized I had already shown the necessary guts to make it, so they spent their energy on non-golfs. That gave me the chance, in a way, to watch them work from the sidelines. I got to see that beneath the "black hat" facade there beat a human heart. They were doing a job they had volunteered for and had a lot of pride in. A tough job — it's hard to be nothing more than a parallel to someone who works in a fast-food restaurant: uninvolved, moving fast and by rote, detached, when, every week, more than 400 students have to become confident in themselves through your instruction. But they do it, and while it may seem cold, it works.

And if you discover they are just normal people with families and pets after all, don't ever let them know you know that. When one student thanked an instructor for help, the "black hat" turned

Center helps soldiers with professional development

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you need to prepare for an upcoming Skill Qualification Test but can't find the manuals, check out the Learning Center in Building 4.

Located in Classroom 56, the center is staffed by two training technicians who can find the manuals you need and offer suggestions on other materials available.

Robert Theis, chief of the Learning Center, said the center uses a multimedia approach to training, providing videocassettes and manuals on a wide variety of subjects.

"We are set up for a kind of reinforcement training of basic soldier subjects as well as being a resource for the core curriculum of the school," he said.

Theis said he tries to have all training materials available for low density military occupational specialties. "These are specialized fields with few people in them and not a lot of training materials readily available," he said.

The center's clientele includes U.S. Army Infantry School students, faculty and staff. They also assist retirees, civilians, other active-duty soldiers and their family members. "We're here for the general population with emphasis on the school," Theis said.

The center has approximately 12,000 volumes of printed material and 4,000 audiovisual cassettes. Included are Army regulations, field manuals, training manuals, supply catalogs and bulletins, training circulars and any other kind of printed material that supports training done here.

Theis can also order anything else a person needs if it is not available at the center.

Most study and research must be done at the center, because there is a limited amount of material available for checkout. "The videocassettes must be viewed here because we have the three-quarter VCR, which is not readily available to the average soldier," he said.

Theis and his assistant help soldiers by showing them what's available and helping them research the subject they're interested in.

There are three other learning centers on post; one on Kelley Hill, Harmony Church and at the 36th Engineer Group Headquarters.

"Our main purpose is to help soldiers be better at what they do by helping them develop professionally," Theis said.

The center is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information on material available, call 545-3460 or 545-2318.

on him, ice-blue eyes ready to sear flesh, and said, "Don't ever thank us! It's our job to teach you! I would rather have AIDS and six months to live than be thanked by a nasty leg like you!"

In airborne school, there's nothing worse than being a "leg." Even convicted murderers, if they're airborne, rate above a leg; it's all part of the airborne attitude.

And "black hats," no matter the strength of your logic to the contrary, were never legs. Thus, the "black hat's" story:

"I've always been airborne. My momma was the first woman to go through jump school, but they didn't allow women in back then. She was pregnant with me at the time, so she wrapped an ace bandage around her belly and cut her hair real short so they couldn't tell. On her first jump she had me, so she rigged me up in a poncho liner and threw me out the door. A few days later my daddy, who was a Ranger, came by on a patrol and picked me up."

You see, the ultimate goal of jump school may be the preparation for combat insertion, but more than that, it's a shaping of your outlook. You've got to be proud and show it; when you're airborne, nothing and no one can touch you.

The forming of this attitude also built a strong bond among the students. We were all going through a deeply personal experience in a group; we all knew what the others were going through. We were all tired, sore and proud; we were fighting for our silver wings.

I qualified on the tower right away in my second session of ground week. But I still had to do millions more PLFs, all the PT and all the runs. I slept all that next weekend, hoping those two days were long enough to let my body heal.

Tower branch rolled by like a four-knot breeze. The PT got tougher, but the general attitude got more relaxed: it was now a matter of serious instruction and not so much a test of our ability to hang in there.

Unfortunately, our class never made it to the 250-foot free tower, and there were arguments both ways on why this was fortunate or not. I said I needed all the practice I could get, while others said they would be pressing their luck ("Maybe I'm only meant to make five jumps . . . if I make six I might really screw something up, like my leg.")

I hated the swing landing trainer more than anything else: some Spanish Inquisition-dated torture device that slammed your body into the ground like a watermelon off the Empire State Building. Actual landing, so far, has never been like that.

All weekend before jump branch I was scared. I knew deep down my canopy wouldn't open; when I pulled my reserve a pillow would fall out; I would get towed behind the aircraft like Sylvester Stallone in Rambo. I called my mom for comfort and only succeeded in scaring her, too.

Piling into the cramped, warm and dark C-130 with the rest of my plane load, my stomach hurt. When I heard "Six minutes!" my palms started to sweat. When I heard "Hook up!" my knees threatened to give out. But when I stood in the door (I was lucky enough to get a door position on my first jump) all the fear went away. What replaced it was confidence in my equipment, my instruction, and, ultimately, myself.

The slap came and I jumped out, body position perfect. My eyes were closed until I felt the sudden stop of my canopy opening. I looked up and saw the most beautiful thing in my life: olive drab, wonderful, full-of-air, gorgeous silk.

I floated through the sky seemingly for hours, watched the aircraft fly away while tossing out other jumpers into the air and then the ground — bumpy, pock-marked, rock-strewn Alabama rushed up to meet me like a long-lost lover. I landed in a bed of velvety green and brown cotton. As I lay on my back and laughed up at the sky, oceans of green silk floated down around me.

All the hardship, all the heartache and all the pain was worth that moment. I had done something so tremendous, so monumental and so damn scary that all I could do was laugh because it felt so good.

The next four jumps never came close to it; they just got harder and scarier than the one that came before. Even graduation, when my best friend pinned on my wings telling me how proud she was of me, was nothing compared to my first jump.

Now I wear my wings and feel like I have a great secret. I, alone, have done something that no one could ever understand, no matter the depth of my descriptions. Maybe someday, when I'm old and gray, I'll tell the "black hat's" story to my grandkids while they pass around my silver wings, almost being able to hear them think, "I guess the Army isn't so bad, after all."

Callaway Gardens sponsoring preview of Halley's comet

Callaway Gardens' Education Department is sponsoring a special Halley's comet inbound preview tomorrow beginning at 11 a.m.

Jack Horkheimer, director of the Miami Space Transit Planetarium will be the guest lecturer. Horkheimer is featured on the PBS program, "Starhustler."

An entire day of activities is scheduled including bird walks, tours, lectures, Halley video programs, ending with Halley observation.

The program includes a session on comet mar king at the Sibley Center by Shaw High School teacher, Skip Joiner, from 11 a.m. to noon. Dr. John Tucker, assistant superintendant of the Muscogee County School District gives tips about telescopes from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. at the Sibley Center. Lectures about Halley's comet by Drs. Ernest and Dutchie Riggsby, professors at Columbus College and Jack Horkheimer are scheduled at Azalea Hall at 2:30 and 3 p.m. respectively. Halley observations begin at Robin Lake Beach at 5:30 under the direction of Horkheimer and Dr. Carole Rutland of the Muscogee County School District. A food concession will be available after the evening observation.

The Callaway Gardens' annual pass for 1986, which provides a year's unlimited admission to the Gardens and Robin Lake Beach, is available now through Feb. 28 for the preseason price of $20.

Beginning March 1, passes will cost $25 each. Annual passes may be used with no additional charge for admission to special events at Callaway Gardens such as the Azalea Festival, the July 4th celebration, the MASTERS Water Ski Tournament, the Symphony in the Gardens series, and special art exhibits.

Highlights for a Gardens visitor in 1986 include spectacular floral shows at the John A. Sibley Horticultural Center, the newest innovation in greenhouse/garden display, and previews of the latest in vegetables, fruits, and flowers at the three-season, 7½-acre Mr. Cason's Vegetable Garden and Victory Garden South.

Annual passes, which expire March 31, 1987, may be purchased at the Callaway Gardens' Information Center daily from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. Interested persons may also request an application by writing: Annual Passes, Callaway Gardens, Pine Mountain, Ga. 31822, or by calling (404) 663-2281, ext. 151.

Springer to present 'Vanities'

The next Springer Studio Theatre (1010 First Ave.) presentation is "Vanities," Feb. 20-22 and Feb. 27-March 1. Other productions are "A Man With a Load of Mischief," April 17-19, April 24-26; and "The Shadow Box," June 12-14, June 19-21. All performances begin at 8 p.m.; doors open at 7 p.m.

These productions are cabaret-style; guests may bring dinners and soft drinks, wine, beer and snacks are available.

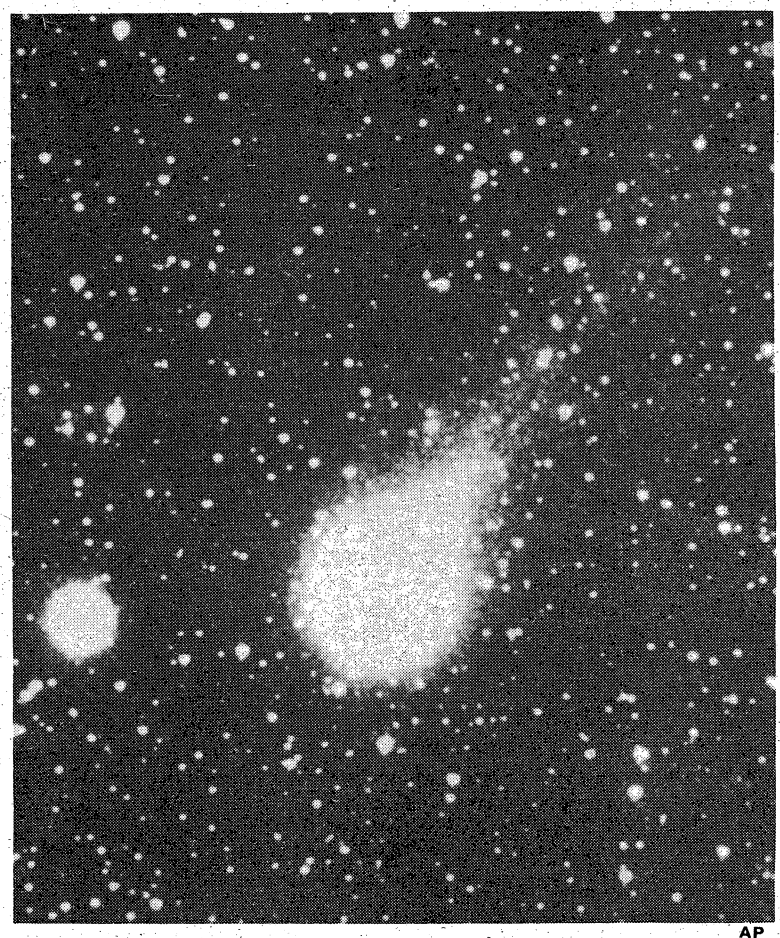
Tickets are $6. For ticket information, call 324-1100.

South's history comes alive at Savannah Exposition

Two and a half centuries of Savannah's history comes alive through thousands of artifacts, replicas and memorabilia displayed in the Grand Museum Hall of The Great Savannah Exposition, Georgia's newest tourist attraction. The exposition also features two multimedia theater productions that retell Savannah's history in a new and entertaining way.

The museum's collection, valued at more than $3 million, is arranged according to historic period so that visitors can journey through history as it happened. There are large exhibits — a turn-of-the-century "iron horse," a flashy red race car, one of two from the era of the Great Savannah Races — and there are small displays of fine detail — buttons from the Revolutionary War uniform of a Scottish soldier; a wooden mortar and pestle used to hull rice grown in Savannah's lowlands. All combine to bring the evolution of this charming city into sharp focus.

The Great Savannah Exposition, located at 303 West Broad Street, is open daily to the public from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.



Admission is $5.50 for adults and $2.75 for children, ages 4-11. Group rates are available on request.

Stone Mountain offers much for history lovers

The world's largest mass of exposed granite is the focus of the 3,200-acre Stone Mountain Park.

The carving on the north face of the mountain features Jefferson Davis, Stonewall Jackson and Robert E. Lee. A railroad, skylift, antebellum plantation, inn, restaurants, riverboat, antique auto and music museum, 18-hole golf course, carillon, mini-golf, tennis, bike rentals, 500-site campground, swimming, canoeing and paddleboat rides are all offered.

The park, located at the Stone Mountain exit off U.S. 78, is open from 6 a.m. to midnight. The attractions are open from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. The fee is $2.50 and $1.50. Annual vehicle parking permits are available for $15. The daily permit is $4. For more information, call 469-9831 or 498-8000.

Interest brightens as comet becomes visible to human eye

All eyes are to the sky these days as earthlings prepare for the once in a lifetime opportunity to see Halley's comet.

The comet, which appears once every 75 to 76 years, is named for Edmond Halley, the English astronomer and mathematician who charted the comet's orbit around the sun in the late 1600s.

Beginning this month, the comet — which scientists say will measure up to 100,000 miles in diameter and have a tail 50 million miles long — will be visible with low power telescopes, binoculars and perhaps even to the naked eye.

Interest in the comet is so great that the U.S. Naval Observatory has installed a hotline with a three minute recorded message telling its status. The number, 900-410-USNO, was installed to handle some 300-plus calls about the comet deluging the observatory each day. There is a nominal charge for this call.

Interest is expected to increase through March and April, the best viewing period. Although the comet is expected to be at its brightest in February, it won't be visible for most of the month while it circles the sun.

Because this year's Halley's occurrence isn't expected to be nearly as dramatic as some previous sightings, you'll have to know what to look for so you don't miss it.

Comets don't streak across the sky like meteors do. Rather, they are first visible only with powerful telescopes, but slowly brighten until some can be seen by the naked eye.

Comets are commonly described as a head with a long, flowing trail of hair. In fact, the word "comet" comes from the ancient Greek word "kometes" — which means "hairy."

Scientists say viewing will be best in the southern hemisphere. From most vantage points in the northern hemisphere, the comet will appear low in the sky, and viewing will be best away from the lights of populated areas.

The U.S. Naval Observatory, DoD's official observatory, is tracking the comet closely from its stations in Washinton, D.C., Arizona and New Zealand. (AFPS)

Guide for Halley's comet watchers

Early January — Visible with the naked eye 10 degrees above the western horizon during evening twilight.

Late January to February — Comet at its brightest, but can't be seen from Earth as it circles the sun.

Feb. 24 — Reappears just before sunrise, a few degrees above the eastern horizon.

March 6 — Visible, perhaps with a small tail, five degrees above the eastern horizon at dawn.

March 26 — Visible 10 degrees above the southeast horizon just before dawn; its tail may reach up to 20 degrees or more.

April 10 — Visible 10 degrees above the southern horizon at dawn; comet should be at the brightest stage within eyeshot of earth.

April 11 — Comet begins its solar orbit away from the earth.

April 12 — Visible before dawn in the southwest and after sunset in the southeast.

April 17 — Visible seven degrees above the horizon after sunset in the southern sky.

Late April — Fades from view with the naked eye. (AFPS)

VA Q and A

Editor's note - Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I am a widow of a veteran. Prior to my husband's death we planned to adopt a child who was supported by and lived with us. My husband died before we were able to do this. I receive Dependency Indemnity Compensation. Can I claim this child as a dependent?

A — A child living in the veteran's household at the time of his death, who is adopted by the surviving spouse within two years after the veteran's death, can be established as a dependent of the veteran.

Q — If I send original documents to the VA will they return them?

A — Yes. The VA will make a copy and return the original to you. Please identify the document as an original and request its return. Please include your VA claim number with any correspondence.

Q — I was released from active duty in 1970. My entitlement to education benefits expired. Will my home loan entitlement also expire?

A — No. Your home loan entitlement is good until you decide to use it. (VA)

BATTLE ON THE BOARDS — Benning and Maxwell players battle for a rebound.

Doughboys break even during double-header

By Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning split a double-header last weekend when they meet teams from Maxwell Air Force Base, Fla., and Fort McPherson, Ga.

Friday's opener was won by Maxwell as they slipped to a 91-90 victory over Benning.

The lead switched continually. The first half ended with Maxwell leading 41-40.

The second half of play was dominated by Maxwell. But, in the final minute of the game Benning began to drop unanswered baskets. With 30 seconds remaining on the clock, Benning pulled within one, 88-89, only to have Maxwell slip in the final basket for a 91-90 win.

Sunday's matchup against Fort McPherson brought Benning's run-and-gun offense to the top of the boards, as they broke the clock with a final score of 101-58.

James Lewis led Benning to a 15 point lead at the intermission. Lewis scored 12 points in the first period to give Benning a 45-30 lead at the half.

Benning scored 56 points in the second half and had six players in double figures.

McPherson's total offense amounted to only two more points than Benning scored in the second half.

Second half play was an offensive struggle for McPherson as Robert White dropped 15 of his 17 game-high points in the second half for Fort Benning.

Fort Benning's Eric Freeman scored 12 game points, but his only basket of the second half put the Doughboys scoreboard into triple figures. He was followed by White, who hit a free throw to break the clock at 101 to 58.

Infantry Marathon just around corner; planned for Jan. 25

The annual U.S. Army Infantry Marathon and Half-Marathon is set for Jan. 25.

Entry fee for this composite event is open to both civilian and military personnel running as an individual entry and/or as a member of a five-man team.

Miss Georgia, Samantha Sue Mohr, will sing the national anthem.

For more information, contact Capt. Robert Jones at 544-ICAN/IRUN/IWIN or Autovon 784-ICAN/IRUN/IWIN. Or you can write him at P.O. Box 2558, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

Cookies, trophies, pizzas up for grabs at Cookie Run

The sixth annual Cookie Run is planned for Jan. 18 at Weracoba Park in Columbus at 10 a.m.

The 1.5- and 5-miles races are sponsored by Bank South and the Concharty Council of the Girl Scouts.

Runners will be competing for cookies, trophies, medals, ribbons and pizzas. Individuals completing the race will receive a T-shirt. There will be 14 age group catagories.

The theme for this year's run is "Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Girl Scout Cookies." A portion of each runner's entry fee will be donated to the restoration of the Statue of Liberty.

The registration fee is $5 for youth under 17 years of age and $7 for adults. Early registration is encouraged to ensure a T-shirt on race day.

Entry forms are available through the Columbus Girl Scout Office at 1807 17th St. in Columbus, branch offices of Bank South, and at local athletic stores.

Fort Benning units are welcome to enter the run. There will be a special discount entry fee of $5 per person for units of 25 people or more. Units need to pre-register before Jan. 17 at the Columbus Girl Scout Office.

For more information, call 327-2646.

Discounts available for fight

Military discount tickets are available at the Outdoor Recreation Office, Building 1707, for the "King's Dream" heavyweight championship fight at the Omni in Atlanta Jan. 17.

Tony "TNT" Tubbs and "Terrible" Tim Witherspoon will battle for the WBA Heavyweight Championship.

Military discount tickets are not available at the Omni. For more information, call 545-7978.

U.S. looking for top skiers

The U.S. Armed Forces is searching for soldiers to compete in the 1986 CISM Ski Championship Feb. 24 to March 3 in Ruhdolding, Germany.

To to considered for the U.S. CISM Ski Team, individuals must have competed in national- or international-level ski competitions on 10-kilometer (men), 10-kilometer (women), 20-kilometer biathlon (men), giant-slalom (men and women), and 15-kilometer (men and women) cross-country courses.

For more information, call the Fort Benning Sports Office at 545-2332/5777.

Jazz it up at exercise class

Jazzercise classes are being offered by the Physical Activities Branch of the Community Recreation Division.

Classes are given Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Registration is $12 a month. The classes are given at Audie Murphy Gym from 9 to 10 a.m.; Building 4 Fitness Center from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m.; and Santiago Gym from 7 to 8 p.m.

Interested individuals must register for the first class of every month. For more information, call, 545-2332.

Bodybuilding contest May 10

The third annual Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning bodybuilding contest is planned for May 10 and contest officials urge participants to begin preparing now for the event.

Only military personnel assigned to Fort Benning are eligible to compete. For more information, call Speedy Austin at 544-1747.

Fishing tourney planned

The Shriners Hospital for Crippled Children Bass Tournament will be March 8 and 9 on Seminole Lake.

First- and second-place winners will receive fully rigged bass boats.

The event is being sponsored by the Hasan Shrine Temple of Albany, Ga. Funds raised in the tournament will be donated to various Shriner's hospitals around the nation.

The lucky angler winning the tournament will receive a 17-foot bass boat, with a trailer, 120-horsepower motor, a trolling motor, techsonic depth finder, and pH meter.

The second-place finisher will receive a 14-foot aluminum bass boat, with a trailer, and a 40-horsepower outboard motor.

The tournament will have a payoff through the first 40 places based on an expected 400 entries. The entry fee is $100 per angler.

New signals a green light for motorists

Splinter Village signals will be operational soon

In an effort to better control traffic on Dixie Road during the morning and afternoon rush hours, the traffic section of the Fort Benning Military Police Activity hopes to have two sets of recently installed traffic lights operational within two weeks.

Positioned at the intersections of the 2600 Splinter Village area and Dixie Road, the lights will replace military police, who presently control the flow of traffic in the heavily congested area.

According to Sgt. Joseph Cutshall, noncommmissioned officer in charge of the traffic section, post engineers are scheduled to complete the road markings during the next two weeks.

Cutshall said the new lights will be controlled by weight pads in the road, allowing free-flowing traffic on Dixie Road. "The only time the light on Dixie Road will turn red is if someone is waiting to come out of the Splinter Village area," he said. "And when it does change, it will only be for 30 to 40 seconds - enought time to let one car out."

Cutshall said the decision to intstall the traffic lights was made when a large number of activities began moving into the area and it became clear that a potential traffic problem existed. "We are hoping to curb the traffic problems once the lights become operational," Cutshall said. (USAIC PAO)

SECURITY — Capt. Lee Stockdale from The School Brigade talks to Ca-trina Scott, the new member teller, about Sure-Pay options.

Soldiers urged to use Sure-Pay

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

As part of an ongoing effort to encourage soldiers to take advantage of the Army's Sure-Pay program, classes will be offered later this month to train command-level project officers.

The classes will be taught by finance and financial institution officials. They will include instruction on the overall program, checkbook maintenance, banking services and the family spouse program.

Each unit on post will be required to send representatives to the classes and bring the knowledge back to the soldiers in their company.

The program's main emphasis will be placed on the checkbook maintenance. "There still are a lot of people who are afraid of checking accounts. Some feel that as long as they have checks in their hands they have money," said Capt. Steven Seyfried, executive officer for the post Finance Office.

Sure-Pay describes the concept of restructuring the current Army pay options so that soldiers will be paid via the Direct Deposit/Electronic Funds Transfer (DD/EFT) System of the Treasury/Federal Reserve.

Since Oct. 1, 1985, all new soldiers have been required to sign up for the Army's Sure-Pay program.

Seyfried said participation on post has improved dramatically since the program was first implemented in 1982.

Soldiers can get more information about the program from their unit first sergeants.

McCaffrey assumes new post duties

School asst. commandant welcomed to Fort Benning

Fort Benning welcomed its new Infantry School assistant commandant, Brig. Gen. Barry McCaffrey, in a ceremony on York Field Tuesday.

McCaffrey

Commanding general Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba Jr., praised McCaffrey, 43, as a soldier who has "paid his dues" in the trenches and at the highest levels of the Army. McCaffrey is a "marvelous trainer" and a courageous soldier who was decorated with multiple awards each of the Distinguished Service Cross, Silver Star, Bronze Star and Purple Heart for service in the Vietnam War, Burba said.

McCaffrey pledged to do his best as administrative head of the Officer Candidate, Airborne, Ranger and other training activities on post.

McCaffrey is a graduate of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. He served with the 82nd Airborne Division in the Dominican Republic, and with the 1st Cavalry Division and as an advisor to the Vietnamese Airborne Division during the Vietnam War. (Ledger/Enquirer)

Holiday pays tribute to a great American

By Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment

Editor's note — On Nov. 2, 1983, President Ronald Reagan signed into law a bill establishing the third Monday in January, beginning in 1986, as a national holiday commemorating the birthday of the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Fort Benning will observe this day with a commemorative service at 9:30 a.m. Monday in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall.

Many years have passed since the assassination of Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., April 4, 1968. Yet, I recall vividly certain things about him as if he were alive today.

King chose to stand against a system of hatred and injustice in order to bring about change in how minority Americans were treated in this country.

He didn't dwell on the consequences that such a stand could bring to his own life, although he wanted to live a full life like everyone else. Instead, he dwelled on "better serving others." He wanted to do what he felt was God's will.

He used a nonviolent approach to change the ingrained and bitter prejudicial practices of many white Americans. For 14 long years, he suffered insensitive and cruel treatment in the hope that those who brutalized him would someday come to terms with their own morality.

Dr. King lived and died for humanity and the issues that arise when humans are unable to pursue their dreams.

Thus, I find it fitting on his special day that I, as an American, pay tribute to such a great American.

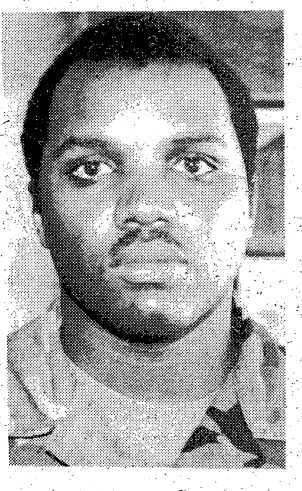
WELCOME FOR KING — Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. grasps the outstretched hands of a welcoming crowd in Baltimore in 1964, four years before his assasination.

Various voices



In the many years since Reverend Dr. Martin L. King Jr.'s death, what are some of the accomplishments made toward realizing his dream?

Vivian S. Dodson, chief, USAIS Learning Resources Division — "The physical aspects of segregation have been 'legally' eliminated; Job opportunities have improved for minorities, even though there is still a great need for improvement in the management area of the work force."

Maj. Patrick H. Downing, Infantry Pre-Command Course — "It was said that everyone was equal when I came into service more than 25 years ago, though many may have cause for concern. A lot of the equality and opportunities for advancement in the service, not only for black soldiers, but for all, were brought about by Dr. King's efforts. Today, the soldiers coming in service, have the same opportunities for advancement."

Sgt. Larry D. Morris, 498th Medical Co., 34th Medical Battalion — "A lot of opportunities have been opened to minorities due to Dr. King's efforts in bringing the stench of discrimination to the forefront of society. No longer do the White Only/Black Only signs exist; no longer is there open segregation, due to Dr. King's efforts."

New commander shares philosophy during interview

Editor's note — Staff writer Mike Brazile conducted the following interview with Fort Benning's new commander, Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba, Tuesday:

Bayonet: As the new commander of Fort Benning, what do you see as your primary goal for the post in 1986?

Burba: "We're going to continue on the same azimuth we've been on. That means serving the equipment, doctrine, organization and training needs of all eight of our infantrys.

Many people don't realize that we have eight infantrys but there's the airborne, air assault, light infantry, Ranger, Bradley mech, M113APC mech, the motorized infantry at Fort Lewis and the straight infantry in Korea.

Serving the needs of these soldiers is a challenge because of the remarkable modernization the Army is currently undergoing. A great part of the Army's equipment, organization and doctrine is changing."

Bayonet: What is your personal guiding philosophy as chief of infantry?

Burba: "I'm here to service the needs of the infantry soldier. As the chief of infantry I'm involved in personnel issues and logistical and in-service school missions. My philosophy is to take care of all of those things."

Bayonet: 1986 is a new year. Is the new light infantry concept on track and where it should be?

Burba: "The training strategy for the light infantry was started here about two years ago and has been very successfully executed. It has been remarkably effective from the highest levels in Washington to the grass-roots infantry soldier. We're very proud of that.

Also, we here at Benning were heavily involved in the execution phase of light infantry which entailed writing all of the doctrine and beginning and sustaining the Light Leader's Course. Everyone that I know of who has been out to Fort Ord and seen the 7th Division's light concept has been astounded at the high morale and combat readiness of the soldiers. So, there's no question that the light infantry is on track. The proof is in the pudding."

Bayonet: Do you believe the light infantry concept has affected the other seven infantrys?

Burba: "First of all, light infantry is the essence of soldiering. But all eight infantrys, regardless of how they are interjected onto the battlefield; parachute, APC, forced marching, helicopter, they will all fight as light infantry ultimately.

The basic skills emphasized in light infantry and its high visibility has been very positive in that it has reinvigorated the entire infantry with reference to basic infantry skills. I would also say, however, that it is a mistake to say that the focus of all of our attention is on light infantry. We work day and night supporting all eight infantrys."

Bayonet: What do you say to the critics of light infantry?

Burba: "You can't explain the importance or validity of the light infantry concept in a sentence or paragraph. I say to the critics that if they would come to Benning and get a briefing on the light infantry they would clearly see its merits. The critics need to understand, if they are truly interested, that our Army must be balanced in order to meet any threat or contingency. The light infantry gives us the proper balance."

Bayonet: What are differences between the infantry you entered in 1959 and the infantry of 1986?

Burba: "There are two basic differences. One is the impact of technology and how we fight. The weapons, vehicles and equipment are more sophisticated and, precipitately, cause a more sophisticated approach to battle. The second big difference is the new doctrine of AirLand Battle, which is a doctrine of maneuver warfare, which we didn't have in 1959.

Bayonet: On the subject of maneuver warfare and new equipment, did the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle come about as a result of maneuver warfare?

Burba: No. The Bradley and Air Land Battle came on-line together. The two have to be complementary. You cannot have a doctrine of maneuver warfare based on mobility, agility and firepower if you don't have the equipment to support it."

Bayonet: What is your response to critics of the Bradley?

Burba: "First of all, many of the critics of the Bradley were the same critics who, ten years ago, said our Army wasn't maneuver oriented. We now have maneuver doctrine and a superb maneuver vehicle but these same critics are down on the BIFV. They're talking in circles. There are two problems these critics don't understand. Survivability is not totally a parameter of rolled homogeneous armor. The ability to move quickly, shoot on the move and to correctly employ tactics, that spells survivability. I like to draw an analogy between the Bradley and the F-15 aircraft. The aircraft is vulnerable to any projectile shot at it. But its survivability hinges on speed, agility and firepower and so it is with the Bradley. To succinctly put it, the Bradley is a winner in all field tests and computer wargames. With the Bradley, our Army wins. Without the Bradley, we lose, It's as simple as that."

Bayonet: As chief of infantry what do you say to company level leaders in the infantry?

Burba: "We in the infantry probably have the most challenging readiness mission of any of the other branches. Our leaders must be ready to fight any time and any place in the world and at any level of intensity. This is a remarkable challenge given the sophistication of the levels of warfare. Even in low intensity conflicts, the export of modern weapons to third world countries by the Soviet Union, makes warfare at the lowest level a complex and dangerous endeavor. Company-level leaders must study hard and train hard if they are to be successful."

Allen Horne

FOUR STARS — Maj. Gens. John Foss and Edwin Burba stand at attention during last week's change of command ceremony.

CG's message

Burba urges safety during holiday

On Monday, Fort Benning joins the nation in observing the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Traditionally, a three-day weekend results in tragedy for many Americans.

We can avoid the accidental loss of any among us by refraining from alcohol, driving only when well rested, and at a speed no faster than road conditions permit.

It is especially important this time of the year to consider the road conditions; ice and fog, as well as rain, can make a four-lane interstate and a country lane equally dangerous.

I hope each of you will enjoy this holiday fully and return to work safe and sound on Tuesday.

Edwin H. Burba Jr.
Major General, USA
Commanding

Apology

In last week's Insight column the West German, French, Canadian, Korean and British armies were not included as armies subscribing to a policy of personal responsibility with regard to their soldiers. Of course, these countries do subscribe to such a policy and the Bayonet apologizes.

MOUT training a family affair for 197th

3-7th Inf. soldiers tackle course as family members cheer them on

By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

In the midst of the Georgia pines and rolling hills of Fort Benning is a small village. No one lives there, but its streets are often filled with rushing soldiers, exploding grenades and bursts of machine gun fire.

The soldiers of 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade occupied the village last week for Military Operations in Urban Terrain (MOUT). The battalion added a special twist to the field exercise by inviting family members to the MOUT site Saturday.

More than a hundred family members watched as the battalion staged a competition to determine which squads could best perform the urban fighting skills they had learned during the previous week of training at the MOUT site.

The family members cheered on husbands and fathers as they maneuvered from one building to another clearing the village of "enemy" soldiers. As the soldiers progressed through the village they also had to pass through common task stations. In each building, soldiers were tested on different skills, including nuclear, biological and chemical, vehicle identification, first aid and land navigation.

The family members were then invited to try their hand at some of the MOUT skills, such as rappelling out of a second-story window.

Training at the MOUT site teaches soldiers the special skills needed to fight in cities. According to Maj. Doug McCreight, battalion operations officer, "There will be more fighting in cities as urbanization increases worldwide. We came out here to learn the unique skills this fighting involves."

While fighting in cities, techniques of movement, cover and concealment differ from those used on open battlefields. Buildings offer many places for the enemy to hide and extra alertness is required to enter and clear buildings.

"A city is easier to defend than it is to attack and take," said 1st Lt. William Wood of the battalion operations section. "It will save a lot of lives if the soldiers are skilled in urban fighting."

15th Cav soldiers scout new mission as tankers

Units deploying to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., prepare for the grueling desert exercise in a variety of ways. However, at least one unit in the 197th Infantry Brigade is having to prepare for NTC by learning a whole new mission.

Troop A, 15th Cavalry, will deploy to NTC next month as a tank company rather than as a scout and reconnaissance unit, its typical role.

"There is no scenario for a cavalry troop at NTC," says Capt. Tommy Thompson, troop commander. "So, we turned most of our two scout platoons into a tank platoon."

The cavalry troop in the 197th normally consists of five platoons: one mortar platoon, two scout platoons, and two tank platoons. Soldiers from the scout platoons were trained to become tankers and formed into a third tank platoon. Once the troop deploys to NTC, it will become a tank company belonging to Tank Force 1-58 (1st Battalion, 58th Infantry).

"Although the scouts hold scout MOSs (19-D), our NCOs with tank experience trained them up on driving and maintaining tanks," Thompson said.

In addition to teaching soldiers new skills, the troop will draw additional tanks at NTC to bring its tank strength from nine up to 14, the standard number for a tank company.

The troop spent two days in the field last week rehearsing tank company missions and teaching leaders to adjust their thinking to the troop's new role.

The unit split up into friendly forces and opposition forces during last week's exercise. A series of attacks, defenses and other missions provided the troops with a solid workout on tank company missions. To increase the training value of the exercise, some of the missions were coducted in full chemical protective gear.

Gas! Gas! Gas! With that warning, soldiers of the 197th Support Battalion donned protective masks and began another work day — in Military Operations Protective Posture — level four.

According to SFC Roger Cook, Support Battalion operations section, the unit conducted a MOPP drill to prepare for its rotation to the National Training Center with the 197th Infantry Brigade in February.

"We don't get to train as often as the line units," Cook said, "because we are always tied up in our support missions."

The Support Battalion's units provide the brigade with medical, administrative, transportation, maintenance, and logistical support. The exercise was intended to show soldiers they can do their jobs in full MOPP gear.

Battalion evaluators went to the work sites throughout the morning to see how the soldiers were functioning. They were also looking at fatigue factors that the soldiers experience while wearing the confining MOPP gear.

"Just walking up and down stairs becomes an effort," said Capt. James Lenihan, Company A commander. "You don't realize how much you take for granted, like getting a drink of water."

The exercise was also designed to determine equipment shortages and servicability," Cook said.

The soldiers performed their duties as usual in the motor pools, dining facility and offices. Bravo Company conducted a medical exercise in MOPP gear and Company A adjutant general soldiers learned to type while wearing protective masks and gloves.

"We wanted to show the soldiers that they can function in MOPP gear, weather it be operating vehicles or working in an office," Cook said. "The exercise proved that they may be hindered to a point, but not disabled or unable to do their jobs."

Seventy-seven field artillery officers, assigned to Fort Benning and the U.S. Army School of the Americas, attended the recent Honorable Order of Saint Barbara dining-in at the Officers' Club.

The legendary Saint Barbara is known worldwide as the patron saint of artillerymen.

Six officers, three from the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery and three from USARSA were inducted into the honorable order. From the 2-10th, they were: Capt. Charles Cox, CWO4 Jacob Prince and CWO2 Willie P. French. From USARSA they were: Lt. Col. Marino Gutierrez (Colombia), Maj. Luis N. Bareiro (Paraguay), Capt. Pedro E. La-Torre (Colombia), and Maj. Sandord Wong (U.S.).

"The order of St. Barbara is almost like a fraternity for an elite group of artillerymen," said Capt. Robert Heather, battalion adjutant, 2-10th. "These soldiers are highly recommended for the selection by a commander," he said.

Instructors teach soldiers how to fight an urban war

29th Inf.

By Bill Muller
29th Infantry Regiment

"The Army will probably fight the next war in urban terrain," said SSgt. Alexander Clark, an instructor of Military Operations in Urban Terrain.

The training, which is conducted by Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, is a totally new concept, according to Clark.

"We teach the basic fundamentals of city fighting," Clark said. "They learn what they need to know to stay alive."

Incorporated in this training are the basic techniques of maneuvering in urban terrain, locating hasty firing positions, the techniques of entering a building from both the upper and lower levels and the proper way to clear a building of booby traps and obstacles.

The soldiers are taught safety tips unique to fighting in an urban environment, SFC Robert Sanders, senior instructor, said.

Safety is stressed throughout the day of training, "whether it's the proper way to safely enter a building or the proper way to go safely under a window," Sanders said.

"In city fighting you have to be aware of the unexpected," Sanders said. "You could become a casualty at any time."

level entry drills. Utilizing grappling hooks and knotted ropes, they worked in squads to enter the structures through second story windows.

Once inside, the soldiers have to ensure that each room is clear of enemy soldiers and booby traps. The room is marked clear so following soldiers know it is safe to enter.

"In upper level entry, the average time for the first man to get into the building is 50 seconds," McCreight said. "One squad from Echo company got three men up in that time."

But, when push came to shove, it was Bravo and Charlie companies that took the honors in the battalion's best squad MOUT competition. Plaques were awarded to the best squads by Lt. Col. Rick Rhoades, battalion commander. First place went to 3rd squad, 3rd platoon, Charlie company. Second place was taken by 1st squad, 2nd platoon, Bravo company and third place honors went to 2nd squad, 1st platoon, Charlie company.

Kathy and Jenny Rodriguez cheered on their dad, SSgt. Isreal Rodriguez of Charlie company as he ran the course with his squad. "They were anxious to come out here to see him," Mrs. Rodriguez said, "because he has been gone all week."

After their families had gone home, the battalion stayed for three additional days of training. The exercise culminated in a battalion task force attack of the village. Echo company occupied and defended the buildings while the remainder of the battalion attacked.

608th Ordnance performs sling-load training

By Bruce E. Doyle
608th Ordnance Company

The 608th Ordnance Company of the 67th Maintenance Battalion enjoyed some valuable sling-load training during the last quarter of 1985.

The sling-load training was part of a test the company was doing of a Missing Training Plan for the Ordnance Ammunition Center and School. The MTP, if implemented, will outline platoon-level training that will eventually be used by all types of units.

The 608th had more than 50 soldiers participate in the exercise. Every troop got to either package the sling assemblies, guide the aircraft during the sling-load operations or hook the sling assemblies to the belly of one of the UH-60A Black Hawk helicopters used during the operation.

The operation took place on Sergeant Major Field. During the whole exercise, soldiers gained some valuable experience and good training. "It was outstanding hands-on training for the troops," said Capt. Kathy Clark.

"Besides testing the MTP, our objective was to help them perform better in their Ammunition Handlers Military Occupational Specialty and square them away for their upcoming Skill Qualification Test."

Mortar range receives honors

29th Inf.

By Bill Muller
29th Infantry Regiment

The Mortar Firing Range, Malone 25, was recently selected as 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's range of the quarter.

The battalion-level award is given to the range with the best instructors, appearance and training aids.

Malone 25 proved to have all of these qualities, according to Lt. Col. Benjamin Koerselman, 1st Battalion commander.

"They've done a tremendous job improving this range with a limited amount of resources," Koerselman said.

The Mortar Firing Range is the only facility were One Station Unit Training soldiers fire live mortar ammunition. The new soldiers prepare the ammunition and fire using the 81mm and four-duece mortars.

The Range of the Quarter Award was previously held by Brittin Range, where Nuclear, Biological Chemical Warfare is taught.

Koerselman praised all 14 of the battalion's ranges. "The competition was very keen," he said.

Battalion continues record-setting ways

Lynnette Spratley

HONOR UNIT — Army Training Center commander, Col. Edward Szvetecz, awards a BRM Record Streamer on Capt. Paul Agosta's B Company guidon.

ATC

By Lynnette Spratley
USAITC

Breaking records is getting to be a habit at the 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

Streamers already adorn company guidons for excellence in the Army Physical Readiness Test, Basic Rifle Marksmanship 100 percent qualification, and the end of cycle test. And just before the Christmas holidays, 9th Battalion added yet another achievement to its list. During a record-smashing two-week period at the Army Training Center, Company B scored an average of 33.7 on BRM, breaking the 32.75 record set by Company A, 1st Battalion, 1st Infantry Brigade only days earlier.

The last unit to fire on Malone 16 before it closed, B-9-2 had 157 soldiers firing with only two first-time failures. Ironically, A-1-1, which had 100 percent first-time qualifiers when it broke the old BRM record, served as scoring officials for B-9-2.

"What we have is a BRM reinforcement program that starts prior to BRM," said Capt. Paul Agosta, Co. B commander. "We use the dime/washer exercise, target box exercise - the weapon is held stationary and the target is moved until the soldier achieves the same sight picture each time - and BB guns for practice."

The company has three foxholes for practice purposes, according to SFC Jack Flowers, Co. Bsenior drill sergeant, and the foxholes are used extensively from the beginning of the One Station Unit Training cycle for reinforcement of supported and unsupported position firing.

"There are five Weaponeer II systems we use for reinforcement," Flowers said. "The weak firers went there for reinforcement a couple of hours a night."

The company paints the front sight posts on their weapons bright colors - this cycle they were yellow - so the soldiers can more easily differentiate between the black and white targets and the sights on their M16s, Flowers said.

Agosta says that unlike many other ATC companies, B-9-2 does not go out on bivouac during BRM.

"This is the first cycle we've done that," Flowers said. "We don't know yet if that helped, but we think getting up in a warm barracks and eating a warm meal before going to the range helped morale if nothing else."

VA Q and A

Editor's note — Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I receive a protected pension from the VA. My wife recently died; does that mean my benefits will be reduced?

A — Usually the VA is required to reduce payments when a veteran's spouse dies. In some cases, however, the payment will continue unchanged. Report your spouse's death immediately so that the VA can review your claim and decide whether an adjustment is necessary.

Q — I was denied reimbursement for a privately purchased headstone because I purchased it prior to my husband's death. Is this correct?

A — Yes. Reimbursement may only be paid for a headstone or marker purchased after a veteran's death. If a headstone or marker was purchased prior to a veteran's death, an allowance may be paid for separate charges for engraving the existing headstone or marker following the death.

NIGHT CLASSES
For Your
HIGH SCHOOL DIPLOMA

WHY FINISH HIGH SCHOOL?

Listed below are a few of the many reasons why you need at least a high school education.

BETTER JOBS. Men and women who have completed high school find it easier to get ahead in life. Your high school diploma can help you to move up to a better job, with more pay, and added security.

ARMED FORCES. High school graduates are much preferred. Once you are in, your chances for extra training that will help you in later life are greatly increased if you are a high school graduate.

PEACE OF MIND. The high school graduate will never be embarrassed by being labeled a drop out. The personal satisfaction alone is well worth the effort required to earn your diploma.

YOUR CHILDREN. Someday your children will perhaps face the decision of either continuing school or becoming a dropout. Your influence and your arguments for earning a high school diploma will be much more persuasive if you yourself are a high school graduate.

YOUR FUTURE. Regardless of what you are doing now, all available information and experience verifies that your future could and should be much more secure and your opportunities for advancement much greater after you have earned your high school diploma.

Rough and ready Ranger now writing teacher

Courtemanche Mike Brazile

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affaris Office

Capt. Joel Courtemanche is an infantry, airborne-Ranger, rugby-playing soldier and his job at Fort Benning is teaching infantry leaders how to write. You can color him an English teacher.

Courtemanche, well over six-feet tall and solidly built, does not fit the stereotyped movie-image of an English teacher, a crabby, old woman with gray hair in a bun reading poetry to uninterested students.

"I, four other captains and four civilians work in the Effective Writing Office at the Infantry Center, teaching the officer advanced and basic courses, the advanced non-commissioned officers' course and Officer Candidate School (students) how to write. We teach a clear, concise style that is simple and easily understandable," said Courtemanche.

The writing program came about as a result of the Training and Doctrine Command identifying the need for company-level officers and NCOs to be able to write clearly and simply.

"Leaders above the company level read a lot of writing in the form of reports, surveys, studies, things like that. It was found that in the process they were having to read a lot of gibberish that was sometimes undecipherable. That's what we're here for, to teach and improve company-level leaders' writing skills," Courtemanche said.

Courtemanche and the other instructors stress to their students that they will, like it or not, be doing a lot of writing during their military career. They point out that the students must be able to express themselves clearly on paper if they are to be effective as leaders.

The new Army writing style is defined as "writing you can understand in a single, rapid reading and is generally free of errors in grammar, mechanics and usage. Good Army writing is clear, concise, organized and right to the point."

Courtemanche said the use of short words and short sentences is stressed. He also said that they insist that the "active" rather than the "passive" voice be used, as the passive voice lets the writer avoid responsibility and is vague and confusing.

Courtemanche also explained that the Effective Writing Center is available to any commander on post who would like to contact them about teaching their personnel how to write more effectively. For more information, call 545-3382 or stop by Room 354 in Building 4.

Post workers get day off for King birthday

On Jan. 20 Federal employees will celebrate a new federal holiday. The birthday of Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. will be observed on the third Monday in January beginning this year.

With the establishment of the holiday in 1984, King became the first American who was never president to be honored with a national holiday. King's birthday, which actually falls on Jan. 15, is the first U.S. federal holday established since Columbus Day became a federal holiday in 1968. In addition, 42 states, the District of Columbia and two territories have passed legislation making King's birthday a state holiday. At least three other states are in the process of establishing the day as a state holiday.

King was assassinated in 1968.

Post laundry offers soldiers good, inexpensive service

By Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Getting your laundry done doesn't have to be a major hassle. The Payroll Deduction Program for Laundry Service provides a program where soldiers can have their clothes washed and pressed at a minimal charge.

The program offers permanent party personnel the opportunity to have 26 pieces of military and civilian clothing washed and pressed weekly, for a fee of $8 a month.

Students can sign up on a weekly basis with a service charge of $2 per week.

The service to permanent party and students is a three-day service program, in that, soldiers will get their laundry back in three days.

Trainees receive their laundry back in two days, and may launder 36 pieces per week at the same cost.

"We almost have 100 percent participation in the training center," said David Frank, deputy chief, Services Support Division.

To enroll in the program, soldiers need to fill out a DA Form 3799, which is available at unit supply rooms.

"Many unit supply sections take in the laundry and deliver it to the post laundry facility," Frank said.

For those who wish to drop off laundry themselves, the post laundry is in Building 2500.

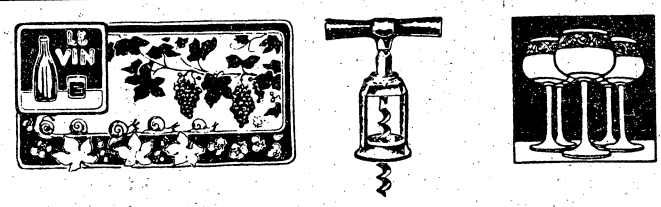
MACH CAT Scan now operational

Patients at Martin Army Community Hospital don't have to go downtown to the Medical Center or a Computerized Axial Tomography Scan anymore.

The X-ray Department has a new General Electric CAT Scan that has been in operation since Jan. 6. The machine cost approximately $1 million but its benefits to doctors trying to diagnose illnesses far outweigh the cost, hospital personnel said.



Dr. Teofredo Aranas, a radiologist at MACH, said the CAT Scan is a diagnostic tool that's capable of looking at the body from a better view than a regular x-ray.

The scan produces a multi-dimensional picture of a cross-section of the body, the size of which can vary from 1.5 centimeters to 15 millimeters. This allows technicians to focus in on specific organs and body parts to search for tumors or abnormalities.

"The CAT Scan shows a lot more structures than a normal x-ray does," Aranas said. "It shows the texture of muscles and organs, and masses if there is one."

The machine also allows the radiologist to zone in on a specific trouble spot. (USAIC PAO)

Lt. Col. Fred Schulz, West Germany's liaison officer at Fort Benning, is elated to be here because of the changes taking place in the U.S. Army infantry.

"My background is in mechanized infantry in the German army. I worked extensively with our infantry fighting vehicle, the Marder. It is exciting for me to be here when the U.S. is fielding the Bradley IFV and the tactical doctrine for it is being defined," Schulz said.

The German officer had high praise for the Bradley and dismissed its critics.

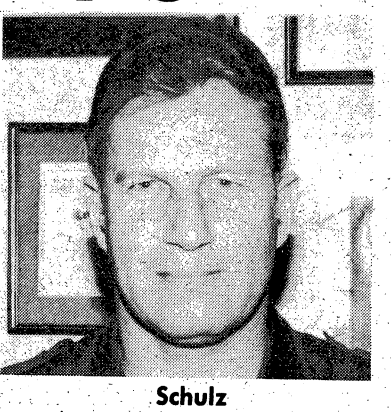
"The Bradley is the most sophisticated and lethal IFV in the world today. I think of our army's Marder as the father of the Bradley. The Bradley is better than the Soviet BMP and criticism of the Bradley is not justified," he said.

"The Bradley is not a tank. You can't get an IFV with the Bradley's weapons and transport capability and its mobility and expect to also get the same protection as in a main battle tank. I think the U.S. Army and the design engineers have found an excellent compromise between firepower, mobility and protection," Schulz said.

Schulz said the German army's strength lies in a combination of mechanized and armored highly mobile forces. This allows the army to conduct a flexible, mobile forward defense close to the border of the Warsaw Pact.

"We can't accomplish a successful forward defense alone. We can only be successful if our NATO allies work with us, shoulder to shoulder," he said.

The infantry officer, who was commissioned through a program similar to the U.S. Army's officer candidate school, has served in a variety of jobs, including platoon leader, various staff positions and company commander. He has also held command in two different panzergrenadier battalions.



"When I was in command of the "281" Battalion my unit had a very close partnership with the American Army's 1st Battalion, 26th Infantry. Their nickname was "Blue Spaders" and I am, very proudly, an honorary Blue Spader," Schulz said with a smile.

Schulz and the second half of the German liaison team here, MSgt. Thomas Westhoff, are both members of one of 10 German liaison staffs stationed at all major branch schools of the U.S. Army. The Benning team's job is to work together with the Infantry Board and School on tactical doctrine, training, and weapons and equipment in reference to interoperability and standardization between the North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies, and especially between the U.S. Army and the Bundeswehr.

"Working on interoperability and standardization in NATO is a very special task to me. Central Europe, particularly West Germany, has to be defended by NATO forces. The main body of troops comes from the land forces of the U.S. and German armies. Since, in time of war, we will fight together, it is in the interest of both of our armies to have and use very similar tactical doctrine and standard operating procedures and to practice these procedures in peacetime," Schulz said.

The German army is comprised of three corps, made up of 12 divisions, which translates into 50 percent of the NATO land-force strength in Europe. Germany uses a draft consisting of a 15-month service obligation on active duty for conscripts. Of the 495,000 members of the German armed forces, 345,000 are in the army. This peacetime strength of 495,000 would swell to over one million in time of war.

The German system of filling their officers' corps is distinctly different from the U.S. Army. After graduating from high school, young men join the army as privates. They go through basic and advanced training.When they join a unit, they receive training in team, squad and platoon tactics and operations in both field and non-field branches.

After three years of training the officer is certified as a platoon leader and then goes to either Hamburg or Munich to a Bundeswehr university. Majoring in economics, engineering, business management, education or computer science, these student officers have a minimum of 3 1/2 years and a maximum of four years to complete a master's degree, going to school for a full year, with no breaks.

Upon graduation the officer returns to a field unit as a platoon

Host families needed for exchange students

Host families are needed for 15 foreign high school students for the upcoming high school year.

ASSE International, a non-profit, public benefit organization, sponsors the youngsters, who come from Germany, Holland, Switzerland, Spain, Canada and Scandinavia.

The students are fluent in English and are screened by the organization, so only the best and brightest come to this country. They range in age from 16 to 18 years old.

The exchange students arrive from their home country shortly before school begins in late August and return at the end of the school year in June. Each student is fully insured and brings his or her own spending monev.

Families may select the nationality and youngster of their choice from extensive student applications, family photos and biographical essays. Students and families are encouraged to begin corresponding prior to the student's arrival.

ASSE is also seeking North American high school students in the same age group interested in living with a European or Canadian family and learning about their culture.

Students should have a good academic record, references and a desire to experience a different culture and language. Programs are available for the school year and summer.

Energy inspectors find temperatures too high

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Building temperatures on post are running from 75 to 90 degrees, despite Army regulations requiring thermostats be set at 65 degrees Farenheit in all buildings.

The problem was realized in a recent energy conservation inspection of office and troop buildings on post conducted by Carroll's office.

"Energy monitors are not doing their jobs in regulating the building temperatures," said Rodney Carroll of the Energy Operations Office.

These monitors represent a weak link in our conservation efforts. They're just not doing their job," Carroll said.

The office is sending out journeyman-level heating technicians to do the inspections, and they evaluate the heating systems and can tell monitors if the system is operating properly. If the system is malfunctioning, monitors should put in a work order with post engineers to get necessary repairs.

Carroll said there is no way to tell how much energy is being wasted in this manner, but that it was definitely a significant amount.

"I went into one room in troop housing, and the guy had a window air conditioner running and the windows open because he said the room was too hot," Carroll said.

In an effort to help consumers remember to conserve, the office is sending out "SWAT simulated electric bills" to some residents in family housing whose homes are metered.

The bills show the highest number of kilowatt hours used in the area, lowest used, average and the resident's usage, as well as the cost of electricity, based on power company rates.

In one main post housing area, electricity bills ranged from $110.35 to $37.20. Energy officials hope that residents with high electric bills will work harder to conserve electricity.

If you want assistance in finding ways to conserve, call 545-SWAT.

Special exercise program helps pregnant women stay in shape

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Pregnant soldiers don't have to wait until their child is born to resume a program of physical training. In fact, even though their waistline may be expanding, they will find staying in shape during the pregnancy will make it easier to return to their normal routine after the delivery.

In an effort to help pregnant women maintain a degree of physical fitness during their pregnancy, an exercise program is available on post.

Open to military and civilian women, the program is offered four times a week by Pillar Cobb at the Officers' Wives' Activity Center on Ingersol Street.

Cobb, 26, now in her fourth month, developed the program as a result of her pregnancy.

Previously involved in aerobics as a certified instructor, she didn't believe it would be wise to continue such a strenuous program. Since she couldn't find an existing program designed for pregnant women, she decided to start one.

Cobb combined her enthusiasm for physical exercise and the knowledge of 1 1/2 years experience as an aerobics instructor and came up with her present program.

"I didn't have enough willpower to work out regularly, so I decided that if I taught it I would have to do it," she said.

The program is designed to "strengthen mostly the abdominal area, hips and thighs." The exercises are aimed at easing labor and delivery and improving stamina, according to Cobb.

"The exercises are also designed to help circluation and strengthen the back to help the birth process," Cobb added.

One soldier in the class was happy that such a program is now available."I plan on taking these classes throughout my pregnancy," said Sgt. Wanda Gonzalez a dental assistant with the Fort Benning Dental Activity.

Dr. (Maj.) Margaret Mackinnon, a staff obstetrician at Martin Army Community Hospital agrees that exercise is important. "It's just good health habits. But don't wait until you're pregnant to exercise, start at least a year before becoming pregnant," she said.

If you are interested in taking the classes or just want more information, contact Cobb at 687-9888.

Military wives confront tough time in job market

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A young infantry sergeant and his wife arrive at Fort Benning for a three-year tour. They have one child, a son, and, while the sergeant makes a liveable income, they need for the wife to work so they can afford the "extras." She begins looking for a job but, after many interviews, gives up. It seems no one wants to hire her.

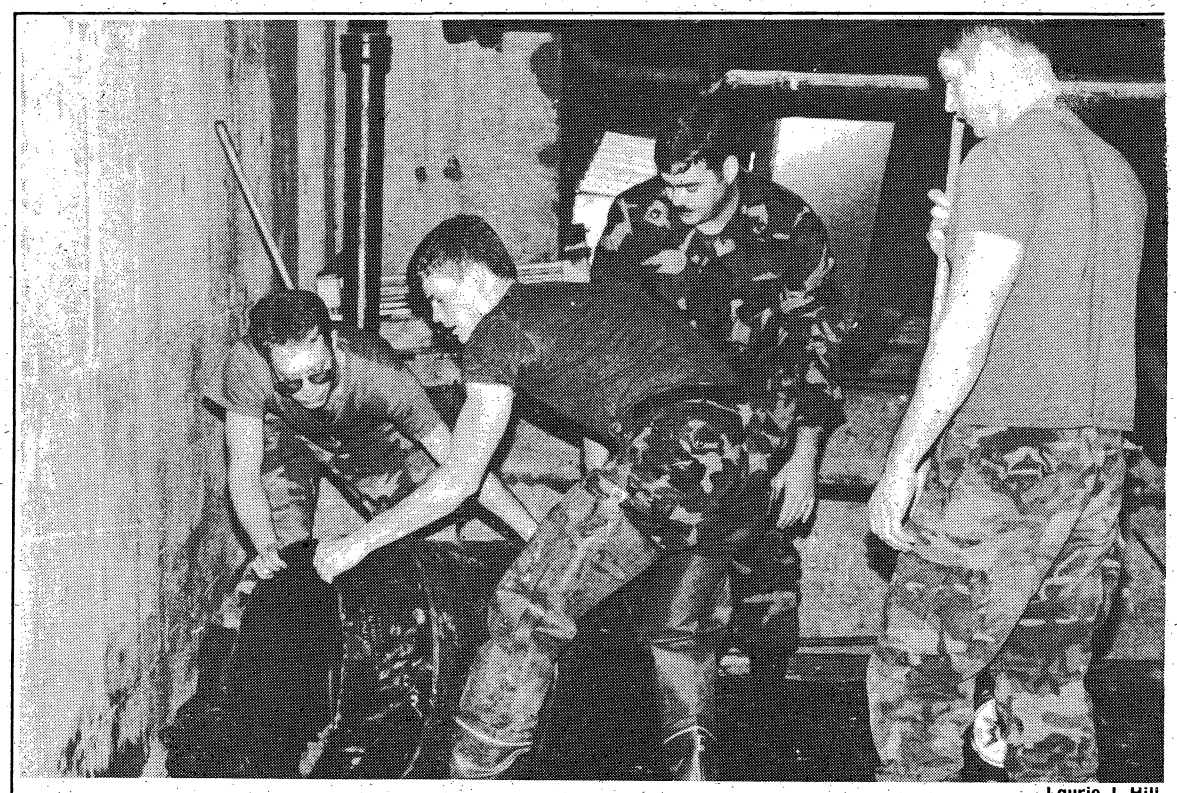
Another wife and her husband, a lieutenant colonel, have two grown children who are at college. She has a degree in education and decides to reenter the workforce as a teacher, as the bills for a freshman and sophomore in college continue to mount. She is honest during all of her job interviews and tells each principal that she will probably only be here for two years at the most. She waits at home for a call from one of the schools she interviewed at but the call never comes.

A captain's wife presents herself, resume in hand, to the personnel officer of a large hotel chain. She honestly tells the personnel officer that, while she is a military wife and will only be in Columbus a short time, wherever her husband is sent there will probably be one of the chain's hotels. This, she tells the personnel officer, could be a big plus for his company. She also has good references and, because she presented a positive side to moving every two to three years as a military wife, she is hired as an auditor for the hotel.

In talking with military wives whose husbands are stationed at Fort Benning, many expressed frustration and bitterness concerning what seems to be a fruitless effort in finding jobs in Columbus. A few talked of successful techniques in gaining employment but most seemed very skeptical about ever getting a job here because their husbands are active-duty military.

"I went to an employment service and they told me that many employers listing jobs with them said for them not to send military wives for interviews. It is really discouraging. I have good job skills and I want to work but potential employers know that I'll be moving after two or three years," said one disgruntled officer's wife who, like the other wives talked to, asked not to be named.

Another military wife told a similar story:



"My husband and I have been here since September. I have a bachelor's degree in marketing management and I've worked in banks for five years. When we came here I really expected to find a job in banks or marketing. The personnel officers I interviewed with seemed prejudiced-because I am a military wife. I went to one interview for a teller's position and they told me I was overqualified and I didn't get the job. I finally went to Kelly Services and got a job as a temporary. I work 12 hours per week. The pay is poor and it's difficult to monitor your income. I guess if military wives really need work their only real hope is to find a temporary job."

Mike Henry, of Columbus' American Family Life Assurance company, presented a different view.

"We employ quite a few military wives. We're always looking for good people with skills. Of course, we'd like to have people who will stay with us over the long term but sometimes people have to move. It's unavoidable," Henry said.

A spokesperson from Dynamic Employment of Columbus, a private employment agency, spoke realistically of the situation faced by military wives in Columbus: "Like it or not, military wives are not permanent. A company will hire and train a military wife

Directorate of Logistics named top SPIRIT winner

By Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Systematic Productivity Improvement Review In TRADOC Meritorious Award was presented to the Directorate of Logistics family in a ceremony at Infantry Hall Tuesday.

Five individual SPIRIT awards were also presented to DOL personnel in the ceremony.

The awards are presented to individuals and activities that have demonstrated their effectiveness in utilizing labor and equipment.

Dale Ellis, Directorate of Logistics, accepted the SPIRIT Meritorous Award presented by Col. James R. Ellis, chief of staff, for the DOL family.

"The DOL has been a leader in mission accomplishment, especially in stationing actions for USARSA, 75th Rangers and the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division and in supporting the expansion of the Light Leaders Course and other school programs while at the same time contributing to economies and efficiencies through the SPIRIT program," said Ellis.

During fiscal year 1985, DOL's new initiatives resulted in more than $4.3 million annual savings.

Several individuals' innovative ideas were recognized in the ceremony.

Lawrence A. Cooper received an award for designing and fabricating a barrel remover and installer fixture that enabled replacement of a gun barrel in half the time previously required. As a result of his action, more than $24,000 will be saved annually at Fort Benning.

An individual SPIRIT award was presented to CWO3 Arthur D. Miller for his management improvement action to record shop numbers on weapons. This significantly reduced the time required to assemble tallies of weapons for issue and will result in annual cost avoidance savings of $36,281.

Roland Newsome received the award for his suggestion to fabricate an image transfer guide for the image transfer assembly of the improved tube-launched, optically-tracked, wire-guided missile vehicle. As a result of his suggestion, image transfer assemblies can now be repaired rather than replaced.

"The DOL has been a leader in mission accomplishment."

More range training time will be available for training on the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle as a result of a proposal made by Russel L. Rhea. He received the award for his suggestion to provide protection of sensitive electronic equipment during lightning storms.

Charles R. Carpenter was presented the award for his proposal to install hour meters in the motor generators on UH-1 helicopters. His suggestion was adopted worldwide.

and then they move. Also, many of the employers have reported back to us that they sometimes get very little notice when military wives quit a job. A big problem expressed by some businesses who list jobs with us say that some military wives aren't honest with them. They'll take a job, knowing that they'll be leaving in a short time, but tell the employer their husbands are here for a three- or four-year tour," the spokesperson said.

One Columbus businessman who employs more than 50 people summed up his feelings about hiring military wives: "Let's be honest. We're not going to hire someone, train them extensively, which involves an investment of time and money on our part, and then let them work two or three months and then leave. It's not fair to the wife but it's also not fair to us," said the businessman, who also asked not to be named.

Is there a solution? Many of the employment services and personnel officers talked to had some general suggestions for military wives seeking employment.

"My advice to military wives trying to get a job is to take a temporary position first, get some exposure and prove themselves. According to the needs of the company they're working for, most supervisors will find a place for a top-notch employee who has done an outstanding job," said Sharon Porter of Personnel Concepts, a private employment agency.

Porter also stressed that, to get a job, military wives should have good, solid job skills and, ideally, experience in secretarial work, such as typing, keypunch or switchboard.

Mike Henry offered these suggestions:

"The key for military wives seeking jobs is they have to sell themselves at the job interview. They shouldn't dwell on the fact that they're only going to be here for a short time, but they should be honest. Military wives trying to get a job should also highlight their willingness to work and, also, how they can help the company. Crucial to any job interview is for the person trying to get the job knowing about the company they want to work for."

It seems both sides, military wives and Columbus employers, have valid sides to present. As one personnel specialist from Dynamic said: "The whole situation is too bad."

Knowing CHAMPUS coverage vital when seeking treatment

By Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Though military hospitals attempt to service all the medical needs of the service family, there are times when treatment at an off-post facility is necessary.

To aid in that treatment, family members may be referred to the office of the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services.

CHAMPUS is a Defense Department health benefits program for service families.

Active-duty members are not eligible, although their families and military retirees and their families are entitled to the health benefits.

These benefits are also available for the surviving family members of deceased active or retired personnel, and the families of reservists who are ordered to active duty for more than 30 consecutive days.

CHAMPUS helps pay for most of the medical care one receives when using civilian hospitals or doctors, if they cannot get the medical care needed from the nearest military hospital, or if they live too far away from it to go there for treatment.

It is the individual's responsibility to find the doctor or hospital of their choice, but it is recommended that they seek one that accepts the CHAMPUS allowable charge as the full fee for the care provided.

CHAMPUS decides what is a reasonable fee in each state for the services one receives. The patients are responsible for any charges over that prescribed amount, in addition to their normal share of the bill.

After receiving the needed medical care a claim must be filed with CHAMPUS.

Some hospitals and doctors will file the claim and CHAMPUS will pay them directly. In other cases, the individual pays the bill and is reimbursed when they file the CHAMPUS claim.

Those eligible for CHAMPUS must be enrolled in the DEERS program to have the claim paid.

For more information contact the Health Benefits Advisor at Martin Army Community Hospital at 544-3461.

Seat belts anchor passengers during automobile accidents

Have you ever wandered through a junkyard looking for used auto parts? You'll find some nasty looking carcasses to be sure, but one part of the car's anatomy stays reasonably intact, no matter how battered its outsides might be — the car seats.

Anchored to the car's frame and spaced several feet from the dashboard, most car seats manage to survive crashes. If more passengers were anchored to the frame, like the car seats, most people would survive crashes. And if people used their safety belts, they would be anchored to the frame. It's a matter of simple physics.

The name of the game is to remain with the car seat because, if you're in an accident, the safest place to be is inside the car. In a crash, forces of impact can hurl bodies right through the windshield or heave them out the doors or windows.

Airborne, people maintain momentum as they sail, but without the option of parachuting to a landing of their choice. And while it's treacherous enough to smash into a dashboard or windshield, it's murder to be "thrown clear."

Thrown clear of what? Oncoming traffic, when you're too injured to get up and run? Telephone poles or trees? Rough lacerating cement surfaces? Passengers launched from the car in a collision are 25 times more likely to die. (Safety Office)

JAG adds new magistrate slot anticipating increased caseload

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A position as special assistant U.S attorney has been created in an effort to prepare the Judge Advocate Generals Office for an increased workload expected later this year.

Capt. Jane M. Winand will work as co-magistrate with the current magistrate Capt. Bobby G. Henry.

Winand's responsibilities as court magistrate will be to prosecute the defendants and present the evidence to the court.

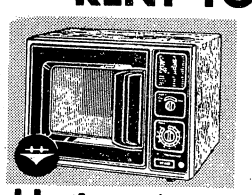
The magistrate court currently only handles traffic offenses and hunting and fishing violations committed on post by civilians.

Soldiers suspected of committing the same violations are presently seen in Columbus before Judge William L. Slaughter.

Once Congress makes the final appropriations, Slaughter will come to Fort Benning every two or three weeks and hear the soldiers' cases at the JAG office.

Henry said the changes will be implemented within a few weeks after the appropriations are made.

Mary Walden will also join the JAG staff as the U.S. magistrate court clerk.



Her position was created to accommodate soldiers paying their court costs and fines at Fort Benning instead of in Columbus.

Filing early with only LES will delay your tax refund

To file correctly, IRS says use W-2 form

By Michael V. Totin
Installation tax officer

Every individual who earned income in 1985 in which taxes were withheld should file a federal income tax return. Even if the individual doesn't owe any taxes he or she should file an income tax return in order to receive a tax refund from the Internal Revenue Service.

Some people have the misconception they can obtain an early refund by filing their Leave and Earning Statement in place of their W-2. The IRS has issued a proclamation that any return filed with an LES will be delayed until after April 15 when the IRS can confirm withholdings with the Finance Center. So, file early and do it correctly with your W-2 forms attached.

Taxpayers must understand the difference between taxable and nontaxable income. Taxable income is income the Internal Revenue Service requires you to report. This income includes the following: alimony received, capital gains, distributions from individual retirement arrangements, dividends, estate or trust income, gain from the sale of your home, interest except on certain state or municipal bonds, pensions, and annuities, prizes and rewards, tips, wages, salaries, bonuses, and other assets.

Nontaxable income is income that isn't required to be reported. This type of income includes the following: child support received, dividends on Veterans Life Insurance, gifts, inheritances, bequests, insurance damages for personal injury and medical expenses, most life insurance proceeds paid upon death, Public Assistance payments, railroad retirement benefits, social security benefits, Veteran's disability benefits and workmen's compensation. The bottom line is don't pay more taxes than you are obligated to pay by reporting nontaxable income.

If you have any questions about this article call or talk to your Unit Tax Officer today.

Abusing check cashing privileges can put a bad stamp on your career

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you write a bad check on Fort Benning, you could be facing some pretty stiff penalties.

Violators of check cashing privileges can look forward to not only having those privileges suspended but also having the reputation of a violator follow them throughout their career.

According to Judy Gofsha, installation check control clerk with Personnel Actions, "Several hundred bad checks a month come through here.

"We're talking about active duty, family members and retirees from the tri-city area. We get most of them from the Post Exchange."

The penalties are serious for writing bad checks and the punishment increases with the number of offenses. The penalties are as follows:

First offense: If the check is paid within a seven- to ten-day grace period, a file is started on the violator at Personnel Actions. If the check is not paid in time, the violator's identification card is stamped (overstamped), making it known that the person's check cashing privledges are suspended for six months.

Second offense: If the check is paid in time the violator's ID card is overstamped for three years.

Third offense: The violator's ID card is immediately overstamped for three years whether or not the check is paid in time.

Reputations follow those who repeatedly write bad checks.

"We control what we call a bad-check roster. It goes to all major commands here on post," said SFC Suzanne Seagers, noncommissioned officer in charge of Personnel Actions.

The files are kept for one year at Personnel Actions.

Shaking bad habits can help prevent 'silent killer'

Health

By Thomas P. Goodell
Martin Army Community Hospital

High blood pressure, sometimes called "the silent killer," is one of the most common medical problems in the United States. Correcting it can be as simple as removing the salt shakers from the table or as complicated as the necessity to take several medicines for the rest of your life. This article is designed to answer some of the questions about this common problem.

How do I know if I have high blood pressure, also known as hypertension? Unlike a lot of diseases, high blood pressure often is silent — causing no pain or other problems — until late in the process. Then the effects in the heart, kidneys and brain cause symptoms. The only way to tell your blood pressure is by having a doctor or nurse check with a blood pressure cuff.

Is one check of my blood pressure enough? No — you need several blood pressure readings to tell if you have hypertension or not. If your blood pressure is increased on one occasion, you would need to return for more blood pressure checks to confirm the high blood pressure.

If high blood pressure doesn't hurt me, why worry about it? While hypertension does not cause you pain or other symptoms you can see or feel, it does work silently on your body by overworking the heart and blood vessels. This extra work leads to heart attacks, kidney failure and strokes, all frequent and leading causes of death in the United States.

What can I do about high blood pressure? There are three ways to reduce an elevated blood pressure — lifestyle changes, such as weight loss, salt restriction and stopping smoking, behavioral changes, such as reducing stress and increasing regular exercise and finally through medication prescribed by a physician.

Why should I do this? The reward for keeping blood pressure normal is reducing the chances of a heart attack or stroke. This can add many happy years to your life. The earlier that high blood pressure is found and treated, the less the complications. Preventing the development by making the lifestyle and behavioral changes mentioned about may help even more.

But you have to take the first step. Have your blood pressure measured, and if it's elevated, talk with your family physician. It's the only way to know if you have "the silent killer" or to prevent it before it develops.

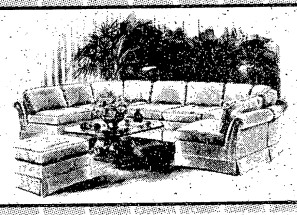
Kodak offering camera, coupons with exchange

The Eastman Kodak Co. is offering customers a new disc camera, coupons worth $50 or a share of Kodak stock in exchange for their Kodak instant cameras.



Kodak must stop producing instant cameras and instant film because of a federal court decision concerning infringement of patents owned by the Polaroid Corp. The options for instant camera owners are a new disc camera and two rolls of film, a book of ten $5 mail-in rebate coupons redeemable after Kodak purchases, or one share of Kodak common stock.

The company will accept any Kodak instant camera, regardless of when it was purchased.

To take advantage of the offer, Army and Air Force Exchange Service customers in CONUS should call Kodak toll-free at 1-800-792-3000. A representative will explain the options and send customers an option selection letter and a mailing container for returning the camera.

AAFES has stopped selling Kodak instant cameras but will sell Kodak intant film until further notice. (AAFES)

Book reveals Army's role in Manhattan Project

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Book review

In a recently published book that is a part of the Army's multi-volume World War II series, Army historian and author Vincent Jones reveals the instrumental role the Army played in the Manhattan Project: the production and use of the first atomic bomb.

Jones

Jones, who has a doctorate in history, has been on the staff of the Army's Center of Military History for more than 30 years. His initial fascination with the Manhattan Project grew into this book.

The author uses a chronological approach in his writing but he focuses on, with extreme clarity, why the nation needed the bomb (because it was felt Germany was close to producing the weapon and we had to have it first, obviously) and why the Army was chosen to oversee the project (President Roosevelt and other leaders felt that only the Army could provide the oversight, security, military planning and liaison services critical to the successful completion of the project).

In particularly interesting sections, Jones illustrates for his readers the colossal undertaking of the Army. A useable atomic bomb based on a theory that, at that time, had not been practically proven, had to be produced. This undertaking would require the Army to acquire scarce materials and manpower in an ever-shrinking pool because of the logistical and personnel demands made by the war. The Army also had to protect this giant undertaking from espionage and sabotage. All of these efforts rested upon a mere theory that had never been tried before.

Jones concludes that, without the Army, the bomb would probably have never been produced in the short three years that it was. Some critics, after the war, felt that civilian science and industry could have produced the bomb alone but through Jones' clear, meticulous writing and his concise presentation of the facts, he proves that, without the Army, Germany might well have beat us to the bomb that would have resulted in a very different end for World War II.

Feb. 15 application deadline for WOs seeking extensions

The fiscal year 1987 warrant officer Conditional Voluntary Indefinite (CVI) and Final Voluntary Indefinite (FVI) boards will convene March 4, Military Personnel Center officials announced.

All other than regular army (OTRA) warrant officers with an expiration of obligated service date or completion of CVI probationary period date between Oct. 1, 1986 and Sept. 30, 1987, are within the zone of consideration for CVI or FVI status.

Eligible OTRA warrant officers who wish to remain on active duty in career status must submit a request for consideration for CVI or FVI status. Make the request on DA Form 4187, request for personnel action. Send it through the immediate commander to Commander, MILPERCEN, Attn: DAPC-OPW-P, 200 Stovall St., Alexandria, Va. 22332-0400. MILPERCEN must receive requests by Feb. 15.

MILPERCEN will treat non-submission of an application as a request for voluntary release from active duty at the end of the officer's service obligation. However, eligible warrant officers who do not wish to remain on active duty beyond their obligation dates may submit requests for non-consideration. They should also use DA Form 4187, and forward requests through their commanders to the above address.

Officers wishing to be considered for CVI or FVI should review their Official Military Personnel Files (OMPF) and Officer Record Briefs (ORB) for accuracy. They can get free copies by writing to Commander, MILPERCEN, Attn: DAPC-MSR-S, 200 Stovall St., Alexandria, Va. 22332-0400. Forward corrections or additions to the OMPF or ORB through the servicing Military Personnel Office to MILPERCEN as soon as possible.

Warrant officers requesting consideration should enclose a current official photograph with the DA Form 4187. The photo is not mandatory, but could be crucial in the selection process.

AIDS no big problem; but an important one

y Rudi Williams
merican Forces Press Service

"We don't think AIDS (Acuired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) is going to be a big probem in the military; but it's an nportant one," said Air Force t. Gen. Edgar A. Chavarrie.

Chavarrie, the Department of)efense's chief of military manower and personnel policy said, People who have AIDS or test ositive for the HTLV-III Human T-Cell Lymphotropic 'irus Type III) antibody will be reated with the utmost compasion and care, as would anybody vith any kind of serious medical roblem."

He said DoD and the services re developing procedures that re designed to prevent "sensiive and private" information bout AIDS victims and antibody ositive service people from eing released to the public.

Asked if DoD expects morale o deteriorate in units where IDS victims or virus carriers re found, he said: "I think the ervices are going to work hard o prevent morale problems. /e'll have a system to avoid any ind of undue panic. We have to ait and test people and see what appens.

"Because there's so much misnformation out today on the subect of AIDS, there's going to be very intensive education proram," Chavarrie said. "We ave to prepare an education rogram that tells everybody hat the facts are . . . tells them ow to avoid contracting AIDS . . tells them what we're going o do about it . . . tells them the ind of care they can get . . . the ircumstances for someone who as AIDS . . . the circumstances f someone who has only the antiody present.

"If there is a bottom line, it's hat we can't do anything about he AIDS disease itself, but we an certainly do something about nsuring that all of our people ave the correct facts," Chavarie said.

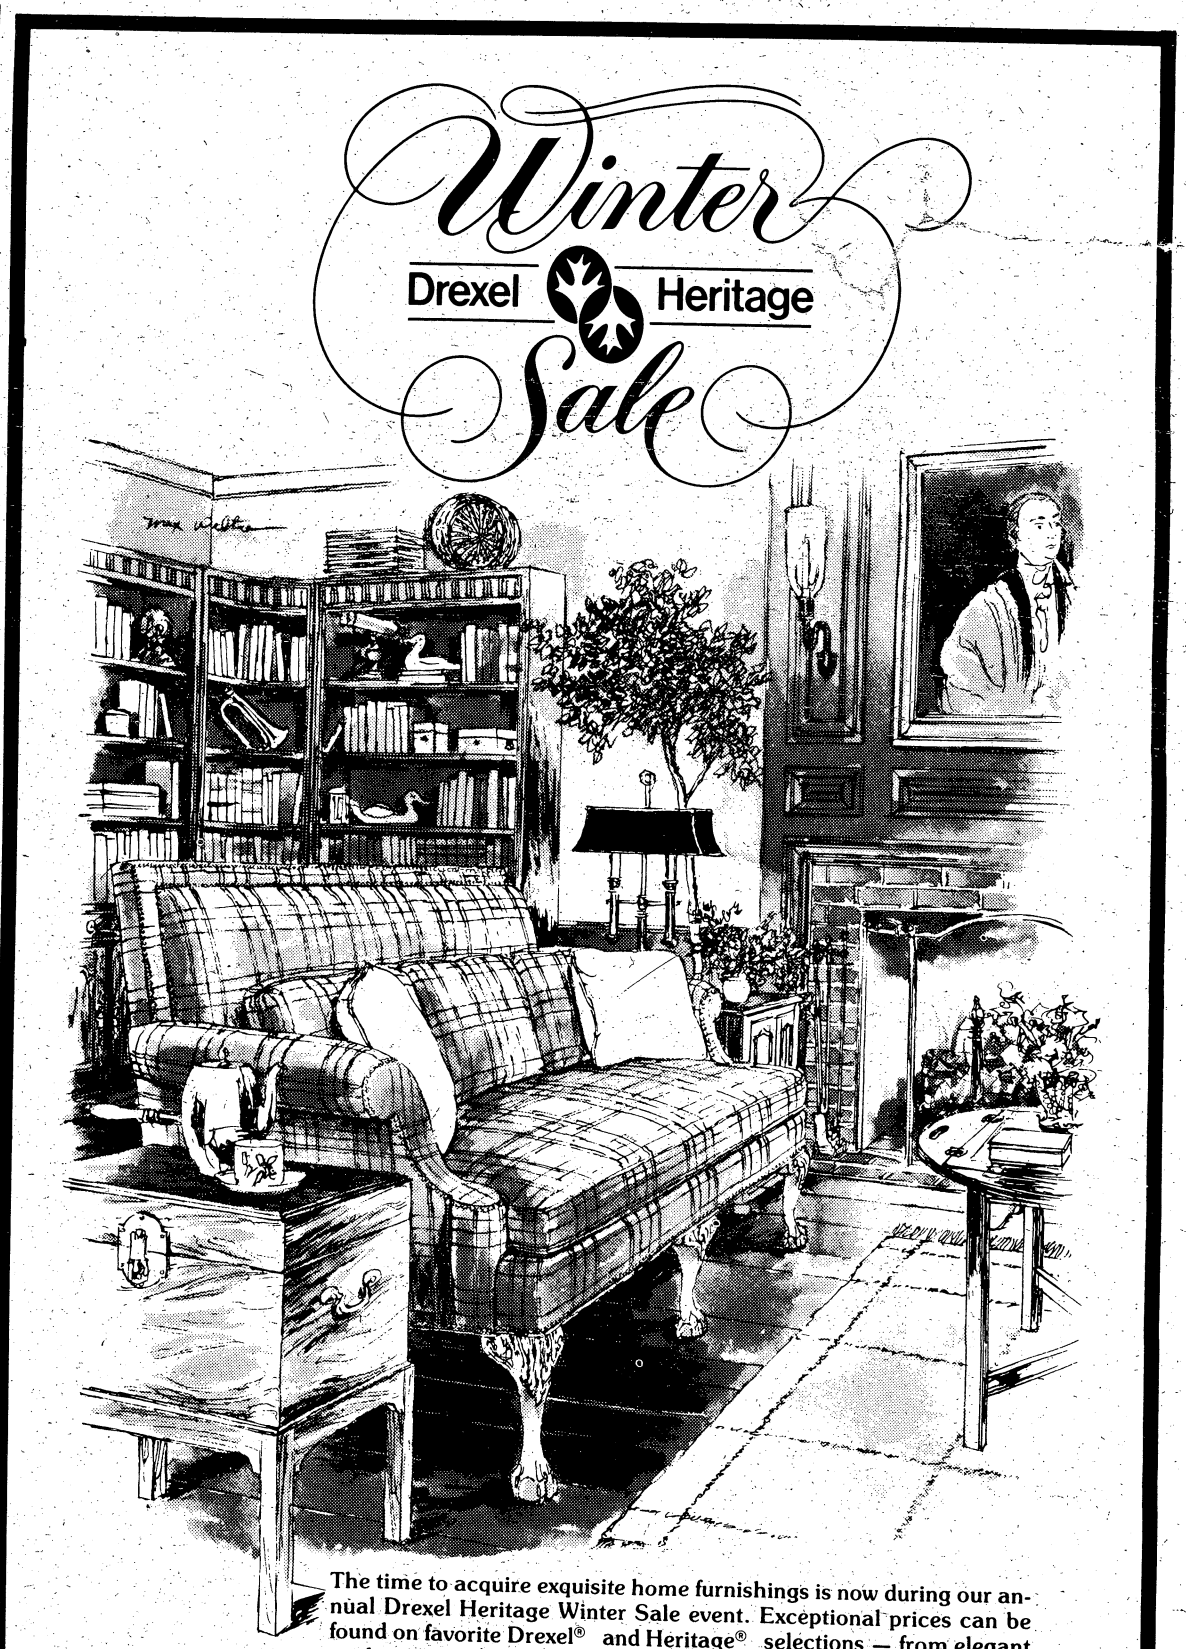
"And, I dare say our program vill tend to be a model for the est of the country, because ve're the first group that will ave been tested," he said. "If ve do a good job, I think we'll be oing society as well as the miliary a service."

The bottom line for the miliary, Chavarrie emphasized, "is o be ready to fight. So our first riority is having a ready force. he second priority is having a orce that's healthy, young and igorous, where the quality of life s good . . . this is all part of qualty of life."

Since all service members are oing to be tested for the HTLVII antibody, some service members are wondering if civilians working in military dining and medical facilities, on the maintenance work force or even sitting at the next desk will also be tested. And they are asking about testing spouses, children and other dependents of military people.

"I think testing dependents falls in the category of the civilian employees," he said. "There's a lot of discussion about it, but we haven't established any policy, yet."

Will promotion chances be lessend for people who carry the AIDS antibody?



"No," said Chavarrie, "I think the promotion policy is a sensitive subject within each service. We're going to treat AIDS-related information on a sensitive and very, very closely guarded dissemination basis. I don't see how promotion chances would be lessened, particularly for someone with the antibody. The information won't be known very widely. If the person is not debilitated in any way, if he's performing his mission, he should be judged on his performance just like anybody else."

No matter what a person's rank is, colonel, first sergeant or private, they will all be treated the same in AIDS or AIDS antibody (carriers of the AIDS virus) cases, he emphasized.

According to the Oct. 24, 1985, DoD policy memorandum on AIDS:

- The service secretaries have been given broad latitude to implement the overall DoD AIDS policy as best suited for their particular service. However, there are some binding rules.
- Those who develop AIDS (the disease) will receive a physical disability discharge or retirement. They will have all the rights and Veterans Administration benefits as any other honorably discharge veteran.
- Those with the AIDS antibody, or HTLV-III (Human T-Lymphotropic Virus Type III), who have no signs of illness or immunological deficiency will be allowed to remain on active duty. However, they may be subject to limited assignments as determined by their service.
- If a service member has a positive reading on the antibody test and admits being homosexual that person will be administratively separated from the service for the convenience of the Government.

Disciplinary or administrative action can be taken against homosexuals and intraveous drug users who admit to crimes outside the HTLV-III antibody testing program.

Bad conduct discharge carries many penalties

By Hal Haskins
American Forces Information Service

Even with a bad conduct discharge, you can get a license in most states to clean septic tanks, auction off cattle or tell fortunes. On the other hand, if you want to work as an accountant, barber, doctor, engineer, lawyer or teacher, that license could be a lot harder to come by. Most states have strict licensing approval requirements and they don't usually include people with bad conduct discharges.

Of course, a lot more goes with a bad conduct discharge than simple licensing problems. Veterans benefits can be lost or jeopardized, and the label of "convicted felon" may follow for a lifetime.

Like its more serious twin, the dishonorable discharge, the bad conduct discharge can be awarded only by a court-martial (special or general) and results from convictions for such crimes as stealing, dealing in drugs, and being absent without leave. Accordingly, these discharges are called punitive and they are intended to inflict punishment.

Following are some facts, a few of them misunderstood or not so well known, about bad conduct discharges.

Upgrading

A "barracks lawyer" rumor is that bad conduct discharges are automatically upgraded after six months. This is false!

Upgrades of bad conduct discharges rarely occur. Only about 1 percent of applications to a discharge review board (where special court-martial convictions may be appealed) have resulted in upgrades. Actions of a board for the correction of military records, the method through which a general court-martial conviction may be appealed, have resulted in an even smaller percentage of upgrades.

Each service maintains a discharge review board as well as a board for correction of military records. Their experiences in rates of discharge upgrading are similar.

Veterans Benefits

A person with a punitive discharge cannot be paid for accrued leave; be reimbursed for transportation of dependents and household goods to a home of record; gain admission of the U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home; be buried in a national cemetery; or receive a headstone marker.

All VA benefits — such as compensation for service-connected disability or death, vocational rehabilitation, medical and dental services, civil service preference, etc. — are lost when the bad conduct discharge is issued by a general court-martial; however, people convicted by a special court-martial may or may not qualify for VA benefits, depending on a special determination made by the VA based on the facts of each case.

Other Penalties

Veterans benefits aren't the only thing lost as a result of a bad conduct discharge. Any claim to unemployment compensation is also lost.

And many states have statutes that seriously restrict a convicted person's ability to work for a state government. Fifteen states specifically restrict or exclude from government employment any person who has a criminal record or who has been guilty of "notorious" or "disgraceful" conduct. In 21 states, employment is based on such factors as character, reputation or personality. The effect is to leave broad discretion to the individual doing the actual hiring to reject people with bad conduct discharges because they do not meet character or reputation requirements.

The federal government has a policy of considering rehabilitated offenders for employment. But each applicant is subject to a special investigation to determine suitability for the particular job sought. Factors considered are the nature of the offense and success of the rehabilitation efforts.

As one military spokesman said about bad conduct discharges, "Since the threat of a bad conduct discharge is meant to have a deterrent effect and thus prevent future crimes, people should understand what it means before getting into trouble, not after."

Guidelines suggested for HTLV III carriers

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

People who have a low risk of contracting AIDS, but have positive test results for the Human T-Cell Lympthotropic Virus Type III (the AIDS antibody) should not donate blood, sperm or body organs, says a report by the American Medical Association Council on Scientific Affairs.

Low risk individuals are defined as those with repeated positive results who are not members of known risk groups, have no signs or symptoms of immune deficiency disease, and have normal results on physical and laboratory examinations, according to an article in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Nine guidelines have been recommended for low-risk individuals with repeated positive test results:

- The risk of developing AIDS is small, based on a positive antibody test alone.
- They should not donate blood, sperm or body organs.
- With no known risk factors, a broad restriction on sexual relations is unwarranted, but advice should be individualized.
- Regular sexual partners should be tested for the antibody to clarify true positive status.
- Pregnancy need not be postponed, although individual circumstances need to be assessed.
- Physicians and dentists should be informed about the positive test results.
- There is no need for restrictions on employment, education or other social contacts.
- Additional counseling or referral is available.
- They should seek medical follow-up assessment within six months to identify any potential changes in medical status or recommendations.

Persons in the high risk groups should observe stricter precautions regarding body fluids that could be exchanged through intimate sexual contact or by sharing toothbrushes, razors, needles or other implements that could become contaminated with blood.

The American Medical Association also recommends six-month medical evaluations with attention to AIDS-like symptoms and screening of sexual partners and of children born to women at high risk.

People in the high risk category for contracting AIDS include all men who have had sexual contact with another man, intravenous drug users, hemophiliacs and other persons who have had sexual contact with someone with known or suspected exposure to HTLV-III.

Tests for the antibody to HTLV-III are now routinely used to screen donated blood, and all blood that is antibody-positive is discarded, according to the American Medical Association.

"WE FEEL GOOD ABOUT LEAVING JAMAHL AT THE DAY-CARE CENTER BECAUSE THEY TREAT HIM LIKE HE'S THEIR OWN CHILD."

SSG Ken and SP4 Jacquie Farmer

"We never really considered leaving Jamahl with anyone except a private sitter. But our first visit to the new Child Development Center here at Fort Hood sure changed our minds.

"We know our son is well taken care of. So we can concentrate on our jobs without worrying about what he's doing.

"He learns, instead of just playing. He counts, sings, says his ABC's. And they teach him to be more independent.

"Jacquie and I have peace of mind when Jamahl's at the Center. They take care of him, and he's learning, and those are the two most important things."

The Army's Day-Care programs are making modern day-care facilities available to more children each day. And the quality of the "Caregivers" who attend the children has never been higher. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

Assistants now part of Chaplain's Branch

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Army chaplain's assistants worldwide are pinning on new brass insignia this month, marking the reorganization of the 71M military occupational specialty under the Chaplain's Branch.

Since the MOS was established in 1909, the Adjutant General Division has been the proponent for chaplain's assistants.

Chaplain's assistants on post gathered at the main post chapel Monday to receive the new brass insignia and watch as Chap. (Col.) Michael Ortiz, post chaplain, pinned the new insignia on MSgt. Michael Stranz, sergeant major for the Fort Benning Chaplain Division.

Stranz said the Army has been working on a separation of the MOS from the AG Division for about 10 years.

"It was sometimes confusing because AG didn't know where and what the 71M was needed to do," he said.

The Army concept is one of a unit ministry, Stranz said, with the chaplain and assistants working as a team.

"Ideally, the 71M is the same religious faith group as the chaplain he works for and it was sometimes difficult for AG to keep up with because chaplains were moved around by the Chaplain Branch. AG did the best they could, but it was confusing," he said.

Chaplain's assistants work primarily in religious support, which includes setting up services, weddings and funerals. They also provide administrative support.

The new insignia depicts a chapel with open doors, surrounded by a tulip-like border encircling the chapel. The open doors symbolize a welcome to all who wish to enter and the border signifies the hands of chaplain's assistants supporting the chapel program.

The proponency change was effective Jan. 1, and Stranz said it will mean more organized and efficient assignment and administration of the chaplain's assistants.

PWOC plans country dinner

The Protestant Women of the Chapel will have a Country Valentine Dinner at the main Chapel annex, Feb. 7 at 7 p.m

The dinner will be catered by Country's Barbecue. Call Ms. Larabel at 689-4185 for reservations. Free babysitting will be available.

CWOC to have luncheon

The Catholic Women of the Chapel will meet for their monthly luncheon Jan. 24 at the Mandarin House Restaurant on Airport Thruway in Columbus.

Free babysitting will be available. For more information, call 682-2327 or 545-3461.

Regis to speak after mass

The Catholic Women of the Chapel will celebrate first Friday mass Feb. 7 at the main post Catholic Chapel. Rosary begins at 9:15 a.m., followed by mass at 9:30 a.m. After mass, Sister Frances Regis will lead a discussion of interest to young mothers. Free babysitting is available. For more information, call 682-2327 or 545-3461.

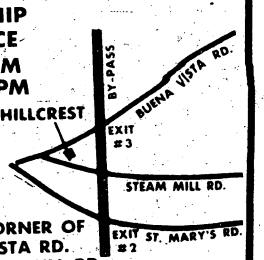
PWOC offers bible studies

In addition to the Precept Bible study classes that the Protestant Women of the Chapel offer, they also sponsor three options to the program.

First, a beginner's Bible study class will be led by PWOC president, Nancy McKenzie. Secondly, a study class will be offered about the book, "The Spirit-Controlled Woman" by Beverly La Haye. Thirdly, is the mother's of pre-schoolers program, which offers Bible-related studies, crafts, fellowship and fun centered around the idea that sometimes mom needs a morning out.

This week's groups will meet Tuesday at 9 a.m. at the Religious Education Center. Free babysitting will be provided.

Dinner after fellowship



A potluck dinner and Christian fellowship is planned Jan. 25 from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

The guest speakers will be Costell and Mia Oglice, a couple expelled from Romania because of their Christian faith.

All attendees are required to bring a main dish and either a vegetable or a dessert. For more information, call Bill Geasa at 689-4210 or call the chapel at 545-2050.

Callaway Gardens offering wide variety hobby workshops

Callaway Gardens' Education Department is offering a wide variety of workshops in February, March, April and May for people who want to learn more about gardening, flower arranging, photography, canoeing and other hobbies.

The one-day workshops will give participants an opportunity to explore the subjects in depth.

Instructors will be Callaway Gardens staff members and area experts. Most workshops will be conducted at the Garden's Overlook Pavilion.

Each workshop costs a nominal fee which includes all supplies and materials. Pre-registration is required.

For a complete listing of workshop dates and topics, call the Education Department at Callaway Gardens at 404-663-2281, extension 153.

Callaway annual passes $20

The Callaway Gardens' annual pass for 1986, which provides a year's unlimited admission to the Gardens and Robin Lake Beach, is available now through Feb. 28 for the preseason price of $20.

Beginning March 1, passes will cost $25 each. Annual passes may be used with no additional charge for admission to special events at Callaway Gardens such as the Azalea Festival, the July 4th celebration, the MASTERS Water Ski Tournament, the Symphony in the Gardens series, and special art exhibits.

Highlights for a Gardens visitor in 1986 include spectacular floral shows at the John A. Sibley Horticultural Center, the newest innovation in greenhouse/garden display, and previews of the latest in vegetables, fruits, and flowers at the three-season, 7½-acre Mr. Cason's Vegetable Garden and Victory Garden South.

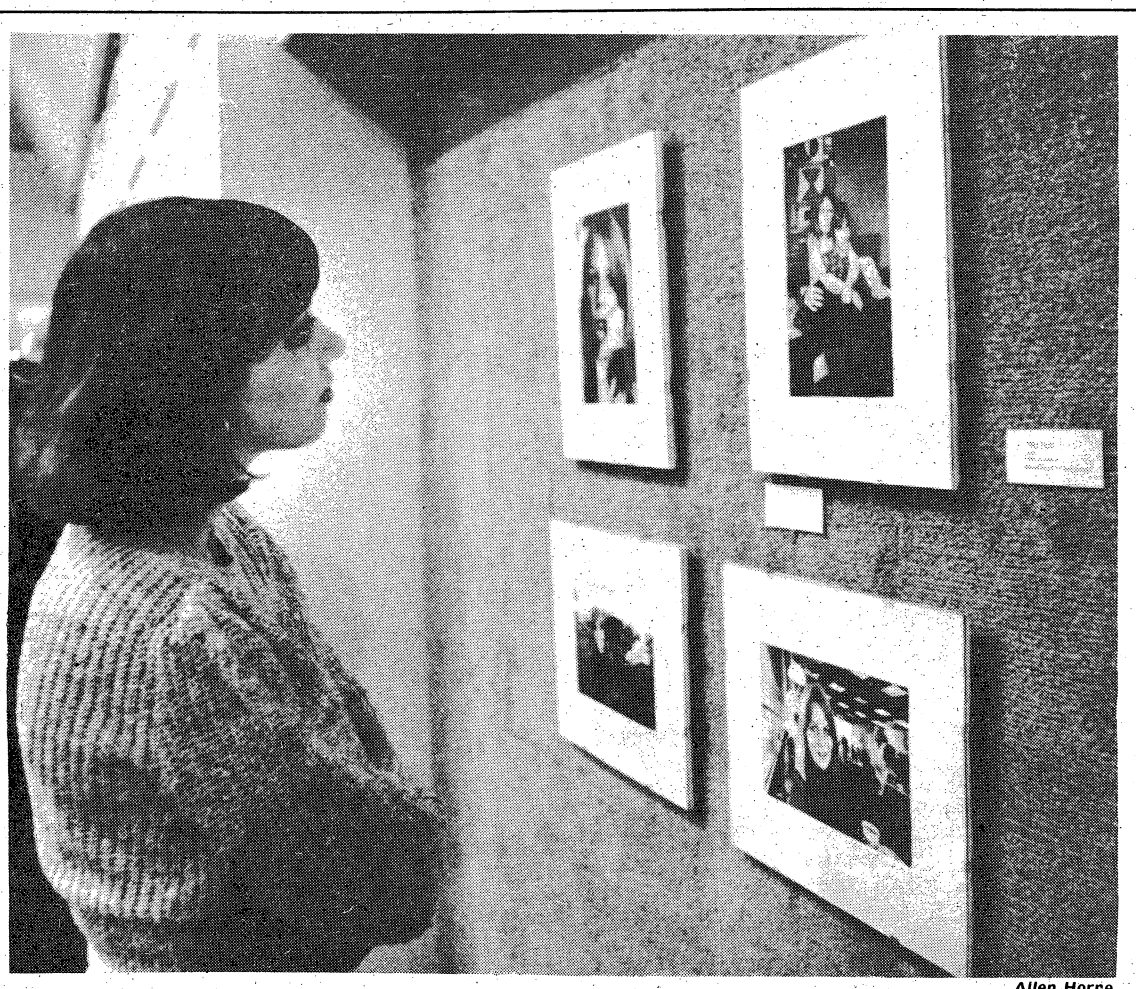
Annual passes, which expire March 31, 1987, may be purchased at the Callaway Gardens' Information Center daily from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. Interested persons may also request an application by writing: Annual Passes, Callaway Gardens, Pine Mountain, Ga. 31822, or by calling (404) 663-2281, ext. 151.

Springer to present 'Vanities'

The next Springer Studio Theatre (1010 First Ave.) presentation is "Vanities," Feb. 20-22 and Feb. 27-March 1. Other productions are "A Man With a Load of Mischief," April 17-19, April 24-26; and "The Shadow Box," June 12-14, June 19-21. All performances begin at 8 p.m.; doors open at 7 p.m.

These productions are cabaret-style; guests may bring dinners and soft drinks, wine, beer and snacks are available.

Tickets are $6. For ticket information, call 324-1100.



South's history comes alive at Savannah Exposition

Two and a half centuries of Savannah's history comes alive through thousands of artifacts, replicas and memorabilia displayed in the Grand Museum Hall of The Great Savannah Exposition, Georgia's newest tourist attraction. The exposition also features two multimedia theater productions that retell Savannah's history in a new and entertaining way.

The museum's collection, valued at more than $3 million, is arranged according to historic period so that visitors can journey through history as it happened. There are large exhibits — a turn-of-the-century "iron horse," a flashy red race car, one of two from the era of the Great Savannah Races — and there are small displays of fine detail — buttons from the Revolutionary War uniform of a Scottish soldier; a wooden mortar and pestle used to hull rice grown in Savannah's lowlands. All combine to bring the evolution of this charming city into sharp focus.

The Great Savannah Exposition, located at 303 West Broad Street, is open daily to the public from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Admission is $5.50 for adults and $2.75 for children, ages 4-11. Group rates are available on request.

Photo exhibit

Sherry Adams of Columbus ponders a photographer's view of life during the opening of the "Two Southern Photographers" exhibit at the Columbus Museum Uptown, 1202 Front Ave. Ledger-Enquirer staff writer and photographer Charles Nix and local documentary photographer George Mitchell teamed up for the exhibition. It will run through Feb. 16.

Guide helps travelers find temporary lodging

Military personnel on the move may find it easier to locate temporary lodging by using a new guide provided by AT&T.

The 80-page AT&T Guide to Temporary Military Lodging lists temporary lodging facilities and child care facilities for most military installations in the U.S. The book is organized by state with headings for each branch of the military.

The guide is provided free by AT&T Communications. It includes addresses and telephone numbers of the facilities, as well as the number of units available and other appropriate information, such as reservation details.

The guide is available by calling a toll-free number 1-800-551-3131, extention 660.

Teams to educate troops on regimental system

The Army's Military Personnel Center has scheduled three regimental affiliation implementation teams for early 1986, according to Maj. John A. Hamilton, chief of MILPERCEN's Regimental Operations section.

Team members will affiliate combat arms soldiers assigned to Alaska, Hawaii, Europe and the Far East. Dates and locations for the team visits are:

Jan. 13-28 Alaska, Korea, Hawaii

Feb. 17-March 12 Europe (V Corps area)

March 5-28 Europe (VII Corps area)

The affiliation teams will take with them regimental battalion rosters and will brief personnel managers, personnel staff noncommissioned officers and brigade and battalion adjutants on affiliation policies and procedures.

"Our mission is to affiliate all combat arms soldiers by Oct. 1, 1986," Hamilton said. "We felt that personal contact by representatives of this office would be the most effective way to explain the regimental system and issue the instructions needed to give soldiers their regimental preferences."

For questions concerning the status of the Regimental System, contact the Regimental Systems Branch, autovon 211-8615 /9011, commercial 703-325-8615/9011.

Tips can help you deal with obscene phone calls

Since October 1985, the military police have received 18 complaints of obscene and harrassing telephone calls.

Southern Bell publishes a "Bell Tel News" and mails it to customers in their telephone bills. The last edition contained some information that should be helpful to residents on post.

The following are suggested ways to handle obscene and harrassing callers.

- Say "hello" only once.
- Don't talk or listen. It doesn't help to ask, "Who is this?" or "Why are you calling me?"
- Hang up gently. Don't let the caller know if you're upset.
- Jot down the date and time. This record will be useful for investigation if the calls continue.
- If the problem continues, call your Southern Bell service representative. You'll find the number in the Customer Guide section of your telephone directory. Explain the problem and the service representative will assist you.
- If you receive calls that threaten your life or property, call the military police immediately at 545-5222. (PMO)

Senior raters play key role grading officers' potential

So, you are now a senior rater. What does it mean?

When officers reach the rank of major, they become eligible to be senior raters in the Officer Evaluation Reporting System, and the Military Personnel Center sends them a letter explaining senior rater responsibilities.

"We want to highlight some of the issues impacting on the senior rater process and provide some key points to be understood in preparing correct, meaningful evaluations," said Maj. Ward B. Nickisch of the Military personnel Center's Evaluation Systems Office.

"Evaluation of the performance and potential of our officers is among the most critical of our professional responsibilities," Nickisch said. "The Officer Evaluation Report (OER) measures the quality of the officer crops and largely determines the selection of our future leadership. Accurate, meaningful OERs are therefore vital to the Army's long-term success."

The senior rater focuses on potential more than performance, and provides the capstone evaluation of an officer.

Three components made up the senior rater's portion of the OER: the box check, the profile and the narrative. All three elements must be considered together to correctly interpret the senior rater's portion of the OER.

The most prevalent method for selection board analysis of the senior rater box check-profile relationship is to look at the box check in relation to the profile's "center of mass."

"The center of mass is more often than not the most frequently used box in the profile," Nickisch said. "Those marked in the center of mass are clearly considered to be successful, competitive officers. The box check is then looked at in relation to the center of mass — is it above , in or below it?"

"As you become more familiar with your rated officers, adjust your list throughout the rating period," Nickisch said. "When the time comes to senior rate, you will be in control and better able to communicate your officers' potential to selection boards."

The ability to communicate to selection boards distinguishes a "good" profile from a non-credible profile, and the following profile analysis criteria were published in 1984 based on that premise. "Look at each grade or grade grouping separately. If more than 50 percent of the ratings are in the top box, or the top box is unmistakably the most frequently used, then serious consideration should be given to restarting the profile in that grade and adopting a more credible senior rating philosophy."

Senior raters may discuss their responsibilities or their profiles with the Evaluation Systems Office, Autovon 221-9659/9570, commercial 703-325-9659/9570.

Record dividend due veterans with GI life insurance

The Veterans Administration has announced that more than 3.3 million veterans who have kept their GI life insurance policies in force will share a record high annual dividend distribution in 1986 totaling $905 million.

VA administrator, Harry N. Walters, said the higher dividend payout is due to lower death rates among policyholders and high interest earnings on the insurance funds investments. The figure is $106.2 million more than that paid out in 1985, when policyholders shared an annual dividend of $798.8 million.

Each policyholder will receive the 1986 dividend in the month of the anniversary date of the individual policy. No application is necessary. Although there are several methods of payment, most policyholders prefer a dividend check.

Government life insurance has been issued through various periods starging Jan. 1, 1919, through May 2, 1966, to veterans of World Wars I and II and the Korean Conflict. The only VA-administered program now open to new issues is Service Disabled Veterans Insurance. It is available, without dividends, to veterans with service on or after April 25, 1951, who have a service-connected disability.

During 1986, the 56,485 holders of United States Government Life Insurance (USGLI) will receive an average dividend of $260 out of a total distribution of $14.7 million. These policies were issued mainly during World War I.

Some 2.8 million World War II veterans who kept their National Service Life Insurance (NSLI) in force will receive an average $283 dividend. The total dividend distribution on these policies is $784.8 million.

The newer Veterans Special Life Insurance (VSLI) will pay out a total of $69.7 million to 340,358 policyholders, for an average dividend of $205.

The Veterans Reopened Insurance (VRI) program will pay $35 million in dividends to 135,573 policyholders averaging from $243 to $504 depending on the policy issued. In addition to the regular dividend, $800,000 in termination dividends will be paid to VRI policyholders whose policies terminate in 1986 due to death, maturity, or cash surrender.

Dividends for individuals covered under each program will differ according to age, plan selected, and length of time the policy has been in force.

In a German officer's 7th year of service, a decision is made whether he will be allowed to stay in the army as a career officer or have to get out in his 12th year of service. This selection process is very competitive, as only 20 percent of eligible officers are chosen to remain in the army.

Infantry Marathon only one week away

By John M. Henderson
Special to the Bayonet

Only one more week available for training for the third annual Infantry Marathon slated for Jan. 25 at 9 a.m.

This amount of time is a spit in the ocean in regards to training. By now you are on the verge of "peaking." What is "peaking?" I know what it is for Alberto Salazar. But, I'm not a Ferrari; I'm a Ford. Not quick, but I finish.

Most of us "Joe Averages" are Fords. For us, "peaking" is just as pleasurable and gratifying; we get through a training run of 18 to 20 miles with a little muscle soreness, but recover easily over a day. We "speed" through a 10 to 12 mile run at a 7:15 to 7:30 pace. We "feel" the course and are able to anticipate it. This is such a grand time!

An extra 1,500 to 2,000 calories are in the diet just to maintain weight. Even though I glommed a fruitcake, a mashed potato and cream cheese casserole and a dozen or so sour cream biscuits, I can still keep my belt a couple of knotches in. I still have thinned out facial features and prominent pelvic bones.

A few axioms are in order while we are hurdling toward what we'll remember as one of the milestones of 1986:

● Don't waste energy. As endurance increases, so do energy stores. Just prior to a long training run, or the marathon, is no time to over-exert yourself doing yardwork, housework, late-night dancing or drinking tournaments. Another tease is another new sport just prior to the marathon. It's not worth it, so try to curb that new burst of ambition.

● Don't "over" dress just because the air is cooler. Yes, you must keep warm, but remember this crude rule of thumb: look at the thermometer, consider the wind chill factor, pause a minute, then add 20 degrees. For example; the air temperature is 40 degrees Fahrenheit, with the windchill, it feels like 30 degrees Fahrenheit (to the spectators). But, since you're going to be burning up 100 calories per mile, it will feel like 50 degrees Fahrenheit.

● New shoes? That's fine if you buy a pair of Hush Puppies to knock around in. But, if you do buy a new pair of running shoes, do NOT plan to wear them on Jan. 25. You'll be miles ahead, literally, wearing those tattered shoes. (A friend of mine has logged many, too many, miles in a pair of flimsy and torn Nikes. Better this than wearing his rigid, brand new Tigers. He has learned the advantages of flexibility and fit over aesthetics and cleanliness.)

● "I gotta' run!" No, you don't. You will not lose your training effect. Repeat, you will NOT lose your training effect. It takes several weeks of slothinliness to become an unfit sloth again. So, if your family has something planned; your unit needs to work late readying for an exercise; a neighbor is in need; or Uncle Ned visits from the Dakotas — go on. Do what you know is right, not what you believe would be best. That extra day of running is not really that worthwhile.

In sum, be prudent; be foressighted; be practical — and try to keep in mind why we're doing this. Fitness, fun, for a "whole" life.

Run carefully. See you on the far side of the airfield!

Editor's note — The annual U.S. Army Infantry Marathon and Half-Marathon is set for Jan. 25.

Entry fee for this composite event is open to both civilian and military personnel running as an individual entry and/or as a member of a five-man team.

Annual Cookie Run set for tomorrow at Weracoba Park

The sixth annual Cookie Run is planned for tomorrow at Weracoba Park in Columbus at 10 a.m.

The 1.5- and 5-miles races are sponsored by Bank South and the Concharty Council of the Girl Scouts.

Runners will be competing for cookies, trophies, medals, ribbons and pizzas. Individuals completing the race will receive a T-shirt. There will be 14 age-group catagories.

The theme for this year's run is "Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Girl Scout Cookies." A portion of each runner's entry fee will be donated to the restoration of the Statue of Liberty.

The registration fee is $5 for youth under 17 years of age and $7 for adults. Early registration is encouraged to ensure a T-shirt on race day.

Entry forms are available through the Columbus Girl Scout Office at 1807 17th St. in Columbus, branch offices of Bank South, and at local athletic stores.

For more information, call 327-2646.

Racquetball lessons offered

Racquetball lessons are being offered on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 9 to 11 a.m. at the racquetball center, Building 305. Speedy Austin is the instructor.

Fishing tourney planned

The Shriners Hospital for Crippled Children Bass Tournament will be March 8 and 9 on Seminole Lake.

First- and second-place winners will receive fully rigged bass boats.

The event is being sponsored by the Hasan Shrine Temple of Albany, Ga. Funds raised in the tournament will be donated to various Shriner's hospitals.

The lucky angler winning the tournament will receive a 17-foot bass boat, with a trailer, 120-horsepower motor, a trolling motor, techsonic depth finder, and pH meter.

The second-place finisher will receive a 14-foot aluminum bass boat, with a trailer, and a 40-horsepower outboard motor.

The tournament will have a payoff through the first 40 places based on an expected 400 entries. The entry fee is $100 per angler.

Interested anglers can get entry forms from the following: Secretary, Hasan Temple, P.O. Box 1885, Albany, Ga., 31708, telephone (912) 432-1011; James Harrell, P.O. Box 2435, Bainbridge, Ga., 31717, (912) 246-6575; or Jack Wingate, Route 1, Box 1571, Bainbridge, Ga., 31717, (912) 246-0658.

Bass club needs members

Are you interested in the pursuit of the ever elusive "Micropotus Salmoides," also known as the the "Bucketmouth," "Hog-E-John," or "Black Bass"?

If so, come meet with the Fort Benning Bass Club every second and fourth Tuesday of the month in the dayroom of Building 2836.

No matter what your level of bass fishing experience you'll find the club activities informative, educational and a great place to exchange "one-that-got-away" stories.

For more information, call Bill McCrary at 545-1213.

Unit looking for shooters

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit at Fort Benning is asking soldiers in the rank of staff sergeant and below who have had competitive shooting experience with a rifle, pistol or shotgun to apply for assignment to the unit.

Applicants should be highly motivated and have a winning spirit, a clean civilian and military record and proper military appearance. To apply, interested soldiers are asked to send a resume of their shooting experinnce, including scores from matches, if available; a recent photo; and a copy of their DA Forms 2 and 2-1 to the Commander, USAMU, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

Benning rubgy team flies into new season on Feb. 8

By Joel Courtemanche
Special to the Bayonet

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby Team is preparing for the spring season which starts Feb. 8.

The Flyers have enjoyed several winning seasons in a row and are anxious to continue their winning ways.

New club officers have been elected, with Steve Tennant selected as the new captain. Tennant helped develop the Fort Campbell Rugby Team and is looking forward to improving the Fort Benning program.

The team began practice Thursday and will practice every Tuesday and Thursday from 6 to 10:30 p.m. at Stilwell Field.

The Flyers will have an inter-squad scrimmage at 10:30 a.m. Feb. 1. They will host the Kennesaw Rugby Football Club at 2 p.m. Feb. 8 in their first season match.

Their season schedule is as follows:

Feb. 8
Kennesaw RFC at Benning

Bodybuilding contest May 10

The third annual Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning bodybuilding contest is planned for May 10 and contest officials urge participants to begin preparing now for the event.

Only military personnel assigned to Fort Benning are eligible to compete. For more information, call Speedy Austin at 544-1747.

Martial arts tourney set

A martial arts tournament is planned for Feb. 8 at Santiago Gym in Sand Hill.

Sponsored by the 1st Infantry Training Brigad, the tournament is sanction by the U.S. Chung Do Kwan Association.

The day-long competition will be divided into four areas: Forms (a display of power and technique), sparring (controlled fighting), weapons (a display of weapon's techniques), and breaking (wood or concrete). Men, women and children will compete in separate divisions of rank, age and size.

The entry fee is $15. Admission for spectators is $2 for adults and $1 for children under age 12. All proceeds will go to the Fort Benning Morale Support Activities Division's Youth Activities Branch.

Participation fees can be mailed to: Installation Morale, Welfare and Recreation Fund, Community Recreation Division, Physical Activity Branch, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

For more information, call Lt. Col. Jim Henkel at 544-2607/4112.

Youth rifle club to meet

The Fort Benning Youth Activities Junior Rifle Club will conduct their first meeting of the spring basic course for new members at 4:30 p.m. Jan. 28.

Classes will be at the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit indoor range behind the Infantry Museum on Bergen Street.

Anyone 12 years or older interested in joining should contact MSgt. Hyder or Lt. Col. Wigger at 545-2343.

The cost will be $30, which includes the annual membership dues.

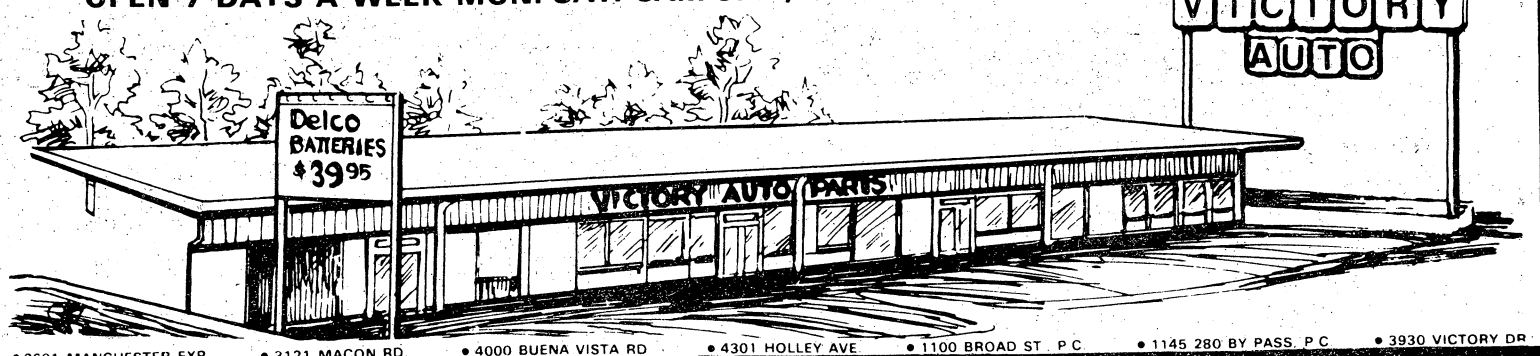
Army trivia

Author Edward Burke has written a book entitled Army Trivia. Army Trivia aficionados can try samples of Burke's brain teasers below.



1. Name the Army units that participated in the combat jump onto the island of Grenada.
2. What unique weapon did a horse-cavalry soldier carry?
3. Where did the first U.S. Army airborne assault in WW II take place?
4. Name the Civil War Union unit whose 864 members each received the Medal of Honor.
5. In what year did the U.S. Army end its occupation of Germany after WW I?

Answers

5. 1923.
4. The 27th Volunteer Infantry Regiment of Maine. However, a 1916 Congressional review board found that the medals werein properly awarded and the recipients' names were stricken from the Medal of Honor list.
3. Sicily
2. The sabre.
1. The 75th Rangers.

Whose face is on the $100,000 bill?

(No fair peeking in your wallet.)

According to the 1986 World Almanac®, a portrait of Woodrow Wilson adorns the $100,000 bill, used only in transactions between the Federal Reserve System and the Treasury Department.

The 1986 World Almanac is itself a treasury of more than a million fun facts! And it contains updated, favorite features such as America's Most Influential Women, Heroes of Young America and a portrait of the future by the editors of Omni magazine.

Order your copy today! You can use the handy coupon below. Or your local newsstand or bookstore will be happy to sell you one for $5.95. Just don't ask, "Got change for a $100,000?"

Infantry Marathon set for tomorrow

Mark Cummings

AND THEY'RE OFF — Runners begin last year's half marathon.

By Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Runners are making last minute adjustments in their psyches in preparation for the third annual Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon to be held at Fort Benning tomorrow.

As of Wednesday afternoon, more than 135 people had registered for the marathon and more than 450 runners were registered in the half marathon.

Late registration will be accepted for the marathon until 8:15 a.m. and the half marathon until 8:45 a.m. at the Briant Wells Field House.

The marathon is scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. and the half marathon is planned to start at 9:30 a.m.

The race course is a paved roadway, flat and fast with few turns, double-looped for the marathon and single-looped for the half marathon.

"If the weather holds at 40 or 50 degrees as predicted, we expect the course to be very fast paced, said Capt. Robert L. Jones, race director.

The course is sanctioned and certified by the Athletic Congress and is an official qualifier for national records and for the Boston Marathon.

Runners will be competing against last year's winning marathon time of 2:30:27 set by Joe Molloy.

The female winner was Gay Schendel with a time of 3:13:01.

In the half marathon Carl Rowe took the male category at 1:09:11 while Toni Gariano won in the female category with a time of 1:23:20.

"This year's race results will be handled by computer to preclude any problems in runners times and places," said Jones.

Tim Edwards of DATAWAY Computer Services, Florida will provide the completely computerized service.

DATAWAY has been involved with many local and regional races, such as the Navy Open Triathlon, the Blue Angel Marathon, and the Bayou Hills Run.

Distinctive trophies will be awarded to the first three overall individual finishers in both the male and female categories.

The first three overall teams will also re-

Fort Benning ceremony honors slain civil rights leader

By Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment

More than 1,000 people gathered in Marshall Auditorium Monday to honor slain civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

The commemorative ceremony, organized by the post Equal Opportunity Office, marked the first national holiday to honor a black American.

Retired Lt. Col. Tyrone P. Fletcher, director of admissions at Morris Brown College in Atlanta, Ga., was guest speaker. He praised officials for recognizing the importance of King's life to our country by designating a national holiday.

"No other holiday serves...(to) encourage improved race relations and human relations," he said.

He spoke of the milestones that took place during the struggle for civil rights and King's philosophy in working for social change.

"American's are blessed that King chose the path that he did in dealing with the racial crisis in this country," Fletcher said.

He suggested that Americans use the holiday to focus on the work that remains to be done in order for America to be a role model for the rest of the world.

Fletcher also said that Americans should remember that equality of opportunity must always be at the cornerstone of our democratic society.

He suggested that people make the King holiday more than just another day off from work.

"Let this be a day of action, and as you depart...let your conversation center on what you can do to prevent violence in our homes, our communities, our nation and in our world," he said.

Critics once again blasting away at the Bradley

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Critics once again are blasting the Army's new Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle.

In a recent Congressionally ordered test, Bradleys were loaded with full complements of armor, ammunition and fuel, parked on a test range and fired at with anti-tank weapons.

Quite naturally, just as the Army knew they would, the Bradleys blew up after taking direct hits from such weapons.

This reminds me of Gen. Killus Maximus of the Roman Army. It seems the general wanted a new catapult to use in his upcoming campaign against the hordes from the east.

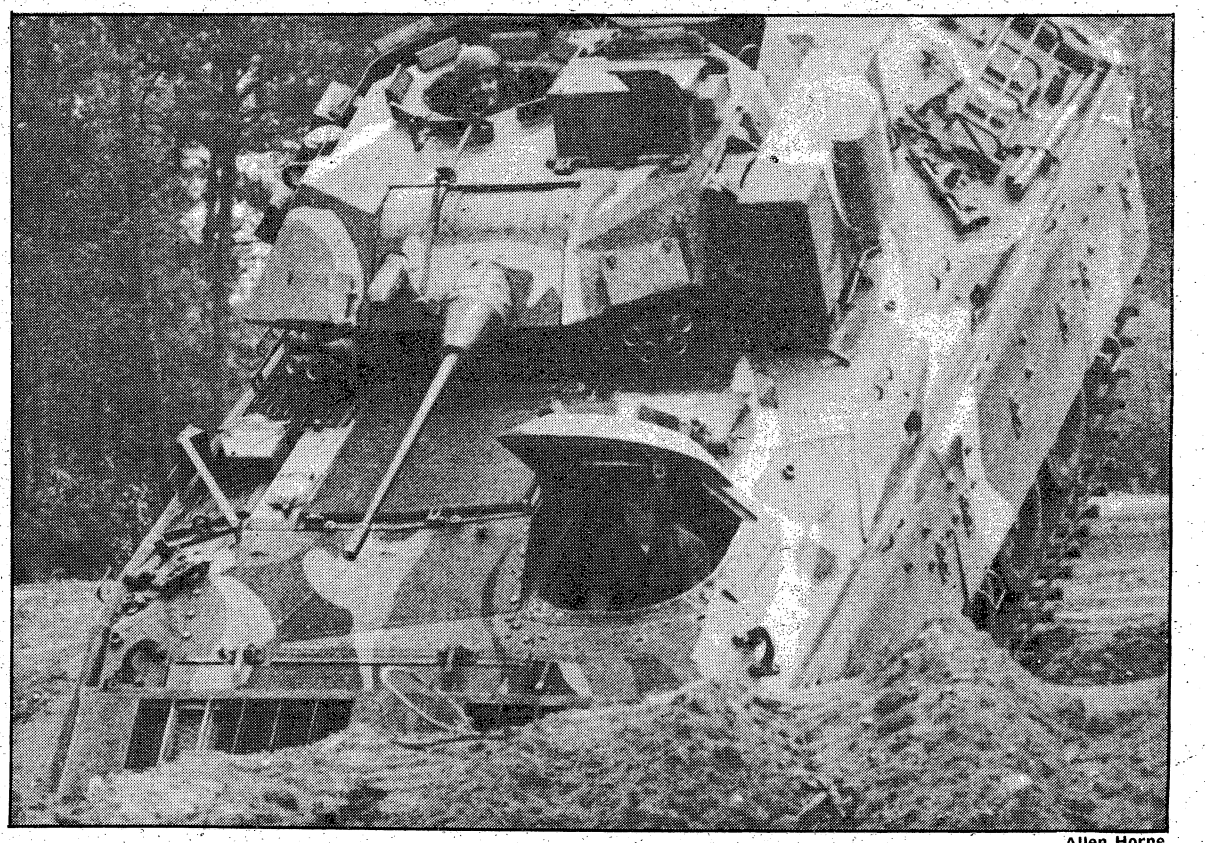
He got his research and development boys together and, based on the army's needs, sent them to the designing boards to create a new catapult.

The general told them his army needed a catapult that had increased range and could fire two rocks at once. He asked for greater mobility using steel-reinforced wheels rather than all-wood ones. He needed a barricade built on the front of the catapult to protect the crew and supporting infantry, but light enough that it wouldn't interfere with the weapon's mobility.

The catapult would also have to be fire resistant and able to negotiate rough terrain.

The catapults were built to Killus' specifications and, after exhaustive testing, the new catapult performed exactly in line with his specifications.

The army pronounced it fit for combat duty and mass production of five catapults was started. However, between their bacchanalian orgies, the Roman Senate demanded their own tests. The senate had the catapult put in an open field and their tests were begun.



First, soldier-archers fired 1,000 flaming arrows into the wooden catapult and it caught fire.

The senate then had soldiers armed with giant meat-axes, chop away at the wooden barricade that protected the catapult's crew and infantry. After two days of chopping, the axemen had an opening big enough for a man to get through.

The esteemed lawmakers then found through firing tests that the catapult could not fire three rocks at once, but only two.

Finally, after consuming vast quantities of Lambrusco wine, they pushed the catapult over a high cliff and found that, upon impact with rocks, the catapult splintered into hundreds of pieces.

The senators were outraged. Why, here was a new army catapult that burned when set on fire, that's protective barricade could be chopped through, that could only fire two rocks at once and splintered into hundreds of pieces when pushed over a cliff. They immediately formed a committee to investigate whether the Roman Army really needed a new catapult or not.

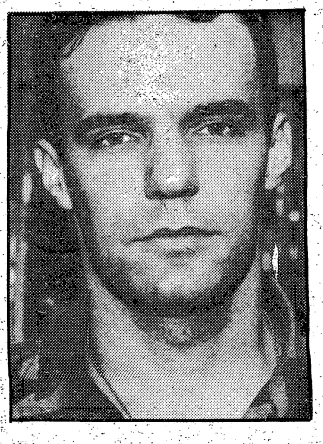
Allen Horne

UP AND OVER — One of the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle's strong points is its ability to maneuver in rough terrain.

Maximus tried telling the senate that the catapult could accurately fling two rocks at once, was fire resistant, could provide good protection against most weapons such as swords, arrows and spears, was as rugged as could be expected in negotiating rough terrain and was very mobile as a result of its steel reinforced wheels.

He told them it was a great improvement over the old catapult and his army needed it to win. Without it they would lose. But the senate wouldn't listen and kept conducting tests even as the hordes from the east sacked Rome.

The story of Maximus is ludicrous, just as ludicrous as the criticism hurled at the Bradley because, after being hit with an anti-tank missile, it blows up.



The Bradley is not a tank. It is an infantry fighting vehicle that can support the infantry through accurate, sustained fire from its 25mm chain gun and 7.62mm coax machinegun.

It can defeat enemy tanks with its TOW anti-tank missile and can provide as much protection for

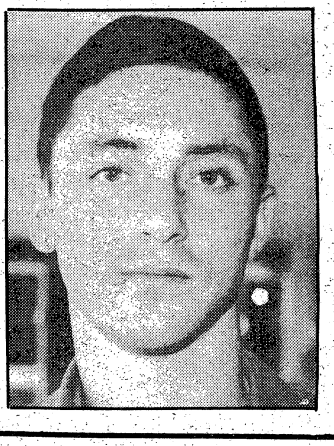
Various voices



Do you feel that the criticisms about the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle are fair?

1st Lt. John P. Rehberger, 25th Company, Infantry Officer Basic Course — "In that the Bradley is not a tank, it should not be tested as such. Regardless of what vehicle you test, it will not be the equipment inside the vehicle that determines it maximum effectiveness, but the people inside the vehicle."

1st Lt. Stephe M. Badger, 25th Compan Infantry Officer Basic (urse — "The Bradley ca ot be a tank, and it canm be an Armor Personnel C rrier. It must be a mixture. The Bradley is a good combination of fire power and armor and these tests will reflect that."

Capt. Steven L. Brown, 12th Company, Infantry Officer Advanced Course — "Test should be set up for what our vehicles are designed for. I cannot help but wonder if the M-113, Armor Personnel Carrier, is being tested the same as the Bradley. In comparison to the M-113, the Bradley and its testing is far more superior."

U.S. history reflects our role as world leader

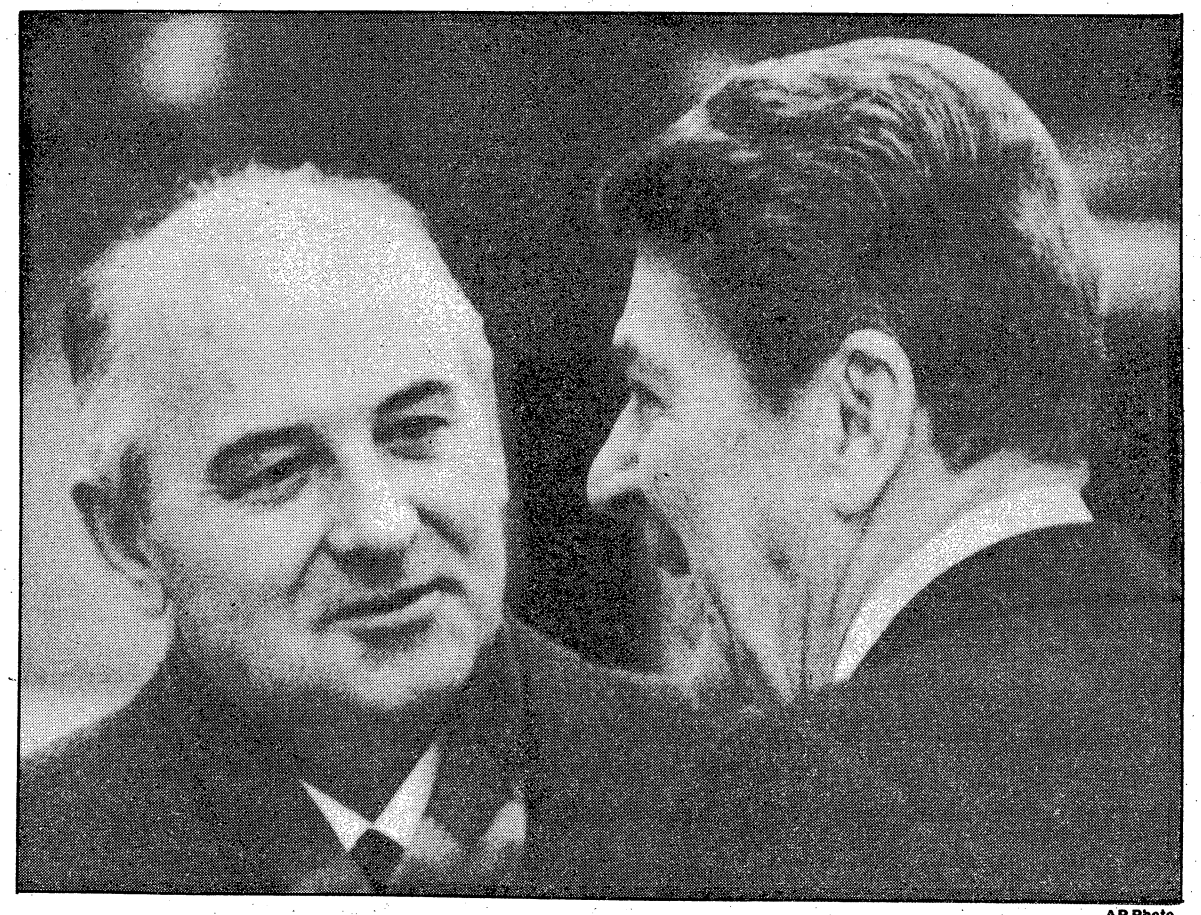
We remain committed to NATO; ready to help allies repel attack

By Bruce K. Bell
Special to the Bayonet

This past year the Army theme has been "Leadership." As Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., and Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., have frequently commented, these Army themes are not discarded at the end of a given year; they become a part of the fabric of Army life.

The Army will continue to examine various aspects of leadership just as we have continued to stress our historic spirit of victory, symbolized by the Army's victory at Yorktown. We have continued to emphasize physical fitness as evidenced by the new, more strenuous standards for the Army Physical Readiness Test; in every forum we continue to tell the Army story, a story of excellence in our personnel, training and equipment; the Army family has become a valuable part of our vocabulary and, more importantly, a vital part of our thinking and planning. Each Army theme rolls up with each of the previous themes and creates a richer climate for the soldier, his fellow soldiers, his civilian counterparts and his family.

The role which America has accepted in the western world during the post-World War II era illustrates some of the qualities of leadership which are essential to the Army leader. These qualities include genuine concern, commitment and communication.



Following the Allied victory in World War II, America was viewed as the greatest power in the world. No other nation had the industrial might or the economic superiority of the United States. We read of nations throughout history with a similar strength that used their might to subjugate other countries. We were different. We used our great resources to rebuild a shaken world, and our efforts were not limited to our friends. Enormous amounts of money were spent to assist Germany and Japan, our former adversaries, along with huge sums to aid our Allies. Under the Marshall Plan, the U.S. extended some $12 billion over a four-year period to aid Europe. America was powerful, not only economically, but morally.

The concern exhibited by this country after the war was genuine. Such care must be at the heart of every leader. It is inadequate to pay lip service to concern for soldiers without putting that concern into practice. Soldiers sense when a leader truly cares about their welfare and that of their families, and they will give greater effort for such a leader.

Military leaders must be committed to their soldiers, demonstrating a mutual trust. The United States has demonstrated such a commitment in its alliance with our European Allies.

In August 1949, the United States and Canada formed a mutual defense pact with 10 European nations, an alliance that we know today as NATO. In signing that agreement, we committed ourselves to our alliance partners with the pledge that an attack against any member of the alliance would be considered an attack against all. Those nations who had been recipients of American concern after the war now saw evidence of our commitment to deter future war.

We remain committed to our NATO allies. This commitment keeps our forces in Europe today, and has in large measure been responsible for the peace that has remained in Western Europe since the end of World War II. The original alliance of 12 member nations has grown to 16, yet the basic premise remains — the full might of the United States stands ready to aid and protect our European friends.

AP Photo

EAST MEETS WEST — Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and President Ronald Reagan during their recent Geneva summit meeting. Reagan represented both the U.S. and NATO as the leader of the free world.

Commitment in the Army means the dedication to carry out all unit missions and to serve the values of the country, the Army and the unit. The leader must do everything possible to help soldiers develop professionally and personally. The leader must sacrifice self-interest in order to protect the interests of others.

After President Reagan met with Secretary General Mikahil Gorbachev last November, the world awaited news of their discussions. Concerns about arms control, the Strategic Defense Initiative and human rights had been discussed for months in the media. Immediately following his meeting in Geneva, the president addressed the NATO allies on the progress at the summit just as when he met with the Allies prior to his discussions with Gorbachev to learn their opinions and feelings, he directly communicated with them his assurances as well as his observations of the Soviet leader.

Moreover, the strength of NATO has always been as a forum for free and open discussion. As the political leaders meet in the North Atlantic Council or the Defense Planning Committee in Brussels, the military consults with one another in the military committee. Luxembourg, with an armed force of some 700 people, has as much a right to be heard as does the United States or the United Kingdom. Even while our country is acknowledged as the leader of the free world, we do not dominate the consultative process.

A military leader is responsible for communicating with soldiers in the unit. Whether that leader is at squad or platoon level, or at brigade or division, communication is one of the most essential elements of leadership. Control of units in both peace and war is dependent on effective communication.

As the leader of the west, America has accepted the responsibilities that go with that leadership — genuine caring for the people of the world, a great commitment to peace through a series of security arrangements such as NATO, and good communications with our Allies on all vital issues.

The Army leader is expected to demonstrate these same qualities.

Bradley

its soldiers as can be expected without giving up its speed and mobility for more protective armor.

If an anti-tank missile is fired at a stationary Soviet BMP it will blow up, as will the German Marder, the British fighting vehicle or any other infantry fighting vehicle for that matter.

Our nation is a republic and Congress, representing the citizens of America, is responsible for insuring that our military equipment is the best possible. But when assessing this equipment, Congress should be realistic.

The Bradley has its strengths and weaknesses, but its strengths far outweigh any weaknesses.

Just as the catapult could fire two rocks, the Bradley can perform its mission. It is a winner.

Let's hope Congress will test it more realistically in the future and continue to get the Bradley to our soldiers who need it. I don't want our "Rome" to be sacked by those hordes from the east, do you?

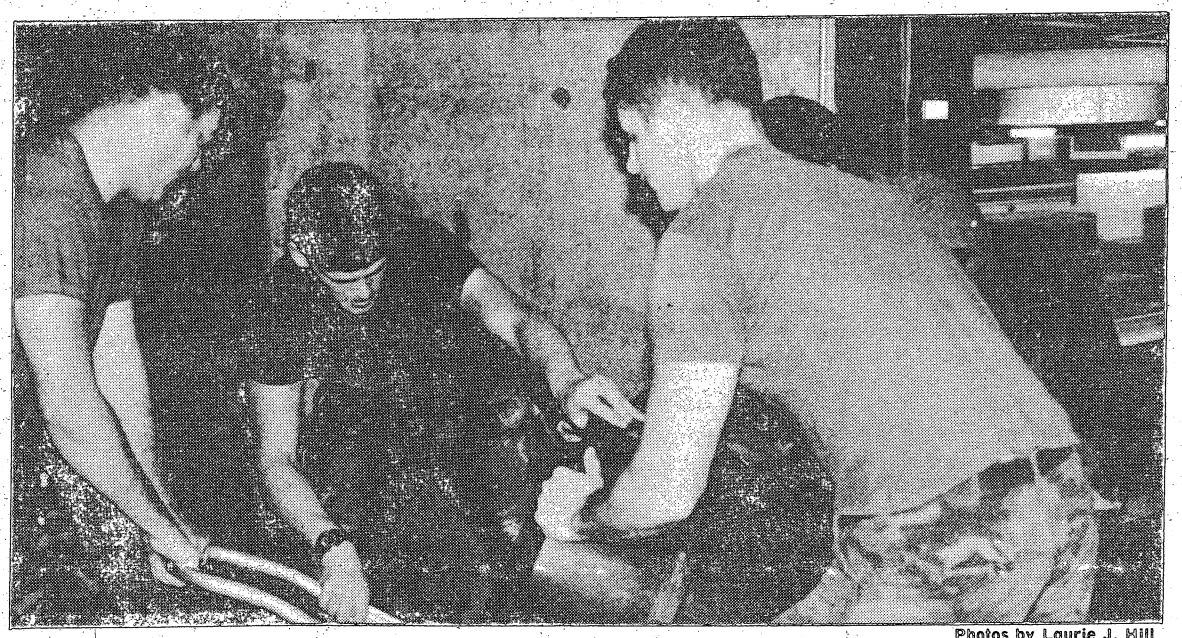
Engineers practice renovation skills at MACH

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Pubic Affairs Office

Recently the 43rd Engineer Battalion took on the challenge of building a self service supply room in the basement of the Martin Army Community Hospital.

Thirteen men from the 34th Engineers began the project in an effort to save the hospital time and money by side stepping civilian contractors.



The project which has been planned for a year was originally estimated at $30,000.

"When we received the cost estimates, we decided to approach alternate means, so we asked the 43rd Engineers. They were willing but at the time they were heading for Honduras which delayed the project for six to eight months," Capt. Steven L. Lord, medical supply officer said.

The project consisted of taking a crawl space in the basement of the hospital and turning it into useable space to store office supplys.

The Engineers used their ingenuity to haul cement from the back entrance to the project, by large barrels. Due to the fact that the project was hidden in a small corner of the supply room this was the only way to approach the project.

Presently the hospital sends someone over to the main post self service store to pick up supplys but with this new room the supplys will be only a few steps away.

NBC exercise lets soldiers practice chemical warfare skills

Many common soldier skills now get added emphasis as troops build on basics, learn what's new in weapons

By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

197th

When the 197th Infantry Brigade deploys to the National Training Center in February, many of the battle scenarios will include a nuclear, biological or chemical threat.

According to 2nd Lt. Angela Atchison, assistant brigade chemical officer, "In order to counter the chemical threat, soldiers have to be skilled in the use of NBC equipment."

Common soldier skills, such as recognizing NBC hazards and signs of contamination are learned early in a soldier's career. As methods of warfare change, soldiers need to remain well informed of the chemical threat.

The brigade's chemical section provides the units with information that will help soldiers survive an NBC attack.

Units in the brigade conduct NBC exercises to familiarize soldiers in the wear of MOPP gear and the use of NBC detection devices. Unit defense teams train utilizing equipment such as an M8 alarm system that sounds off when it detects any trace of chemicals in the area.

Soldiers are tested regularly on common NBC skills and tasks such as protective mask maintenance. Units also are implementing NBC training into daily tasks. The 197th Support Battalion recently conducted a MOPP exercise that had soldiers at their work sites in MOPP four, whether it be at the motor pool or in an office.

The focus of all this training is to stress survivability. "Many soldiers believe they cannot survive a chemical attack," said SFC Edward Merrett of the brigade chemical section. "With the proper training, it is probable that we can survive."

The brigade chemical section offers a one-hour threat briefing to units in the brigade. The briefing is designed to inform soldiers of what the Warsaw Pact nations are capable of and how to survive should they ever be required to perform their duty in a chemical environment.

Field exercise prepares 197th for NTC

By Sally Toomey

197th

The 197th Infantry Brigade's armor battalion deployed on a field exercise last week at Fort Benning to reinforce tasks that they will be evaluated on at the National Training Center in February.

The scenario emphasized weaknesses in tactical and operational tasks that 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor discovered during its Army Training and Evaluation Program Exercise in December. Some of the tasks the tankers performed were obstacle construction and breeching and reaction to chemical and nuclear attacks.

"At NTC, they have every obstacle imaginable," said Capt. Christopher Patterson of the battalion's operations section. "We conducted two days of training in breeching obstacles."

The battalion's engineers constructed an anti-tank ditch, reinforced with concertina wire and simulated mines. The companies conducted a "round robin" training exercise to breech the obstacle.

If time is limited, a hasty bypass would be done. The element would clear a path around the obstacle of mines or booby traps. They would then mark both sides of the entrance and exit to direct the unit through the cleared path as well as any following elements.

"You can assume that the area is protected by enemy artillery, troops or a vehicle in an overwatch position," Patterson said. An assault team would move ahead of the unit to clear away whatever is protecting the obstacle.

Because many of these obstacles may be reinforced with gas mines, the battalion also incorporated nuclear, biological and chemical training into the exercise.

Another NTC scenario that the unit simulated was reacting to a nuclear strike warning. A strike warn is a warning of a friendly nuclear attack.

Upon receiving the warning, the tankers would take precautions such as moving away from the target area and directing the front of the vehicle, the heaviest and thickest part, toward the blast. The tankers would automatically go into MOPP four and wait inside the vehicle for as long as it takes to get an all clear sign.

'Westward ho!' is the cry as battalion prepares to deploy to Fort Irwin

The 197th Infantry Brigade's armor battalion deployed on a field exercise last week at Fort Benning to reinforce tasks that they will be evaluated on at the National Training Center in February.

The scenario emphasized weaknesses in tactical and operational tasks that 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor discovered during its Army Training and Evaluation Program Exercise in December.

With another trip to the National Training Center just around the corner, soldiers in the 197th Infantry Brigade are busy preparing for the grueling desert foray.

Located about halfway between Los Angeles, Calif., and Las Vegas, Nev., the NTC at Fort Irwin provides units like the 197th with the opportunity to test their skills in a simulated combat environment.

Two task forces, the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, and the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, will represent the brigade during the upcoming rotation in February.

Supporting the maneuver forces will be a brigade headquarters; the 197th Support Battalion; the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery and a host of units from other Army and Air Force installations.

As veterans of past NTC rotations point out, it takes more time to prepare for the training than it does to actually go through the three-to-four week cycle.

Maneuver units, drawing on lessons learned from past NTC visits, plan field training exercises to strengthen combat skills. Logistics planners begin ordering supplies and equipment they know will be needed in the desert.

Leaders at all levels begin intensive training months before deploying. Although much of it occurs on Fort Benning, some leader training actually takes place at Fort Irwin in the form of a Tactical Exercise Without Troops (TEWT). Leaders also attend a special training session organized by U.S. Army Forces Command (FORSCOM).

In addition, logistics planners go to NTC for a Logistics Exercise (LOGEX) to help them better prepare for the actual NTC rotation.

The 197th Infantry Brigade's last deployment to NTC was in May 1985. This will be the brigade's third deployment in less than two years.

Motor pool wins award for maintenance excellence

By Bill Muller
29th Infantry Regiment

For the second straight year, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's motor pool is the winner of the Training and Doctrine Command-level Chief of Staff Army Award for Maintenance Excellence.

Capt. Lewis Boone, the battalion's maintenance officer, attributes this year's win to several reasons: strong noncommissioned officer leadership; the soldiers' desire to learn and interest in their jobs, as well as the support they get from the Direct Support Unit.

The NCO responsible for leadership in the shop area is MSgt. William Friend.

"Without a doubt, he is one of the finest maintenance NCOs in the Army," Boone said. "He is the single main reason why we have done so well in maintenance competition."

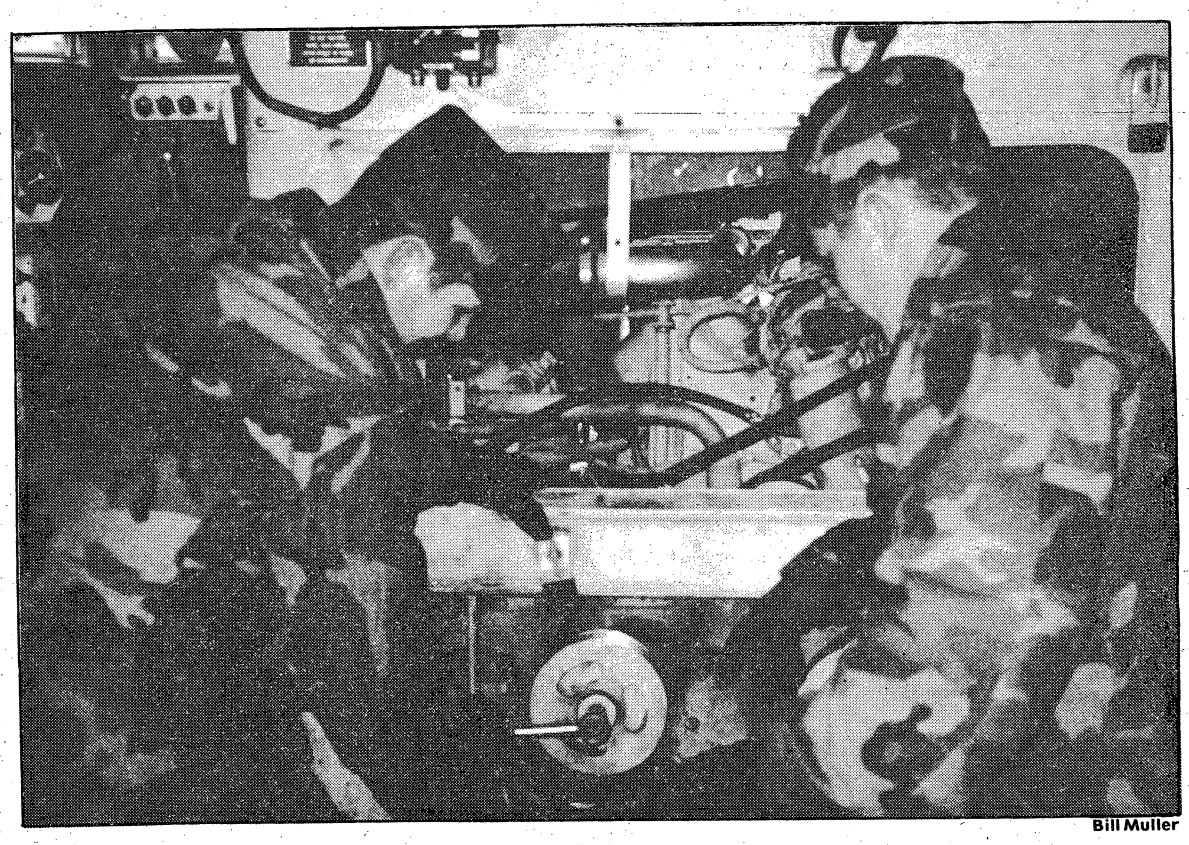
Also responsible for the soldiers' motivation are SFCs Frank Farias and William Covington.

Covington said the soldiers are motivated because they like what they are doing.

"They know that if they have a problem or a question about something, they can come to one of us (NCOs) and we'll help them," he said.

The soldiers are sometimes on call 24-hours a day, seven days a week, servicing approximately 150 vehicles on a daily basis.

Also playing a key role in the motor pool doing well in the maintenance competition is the staff's relationship with DSU.



"The people there are outstanding. It seems they bend over backward to help us complete our mission," Boone said.

He added that the four civilians working at the 2/29th motor pool made a substantial contribution to its success. "I couldn't begin to describe the job they do in support of us."

Winning the TRADOC competition allows the 2/29th motor pool to compete in the Department of the Army-level competition.

Last year, the group finished second in the Department of the Army competition.

"This year we hope to win it all," Boone said.

Reenlistment NCO credits success to job satisfaction

By Bill Muller
29th Infantry Regiment

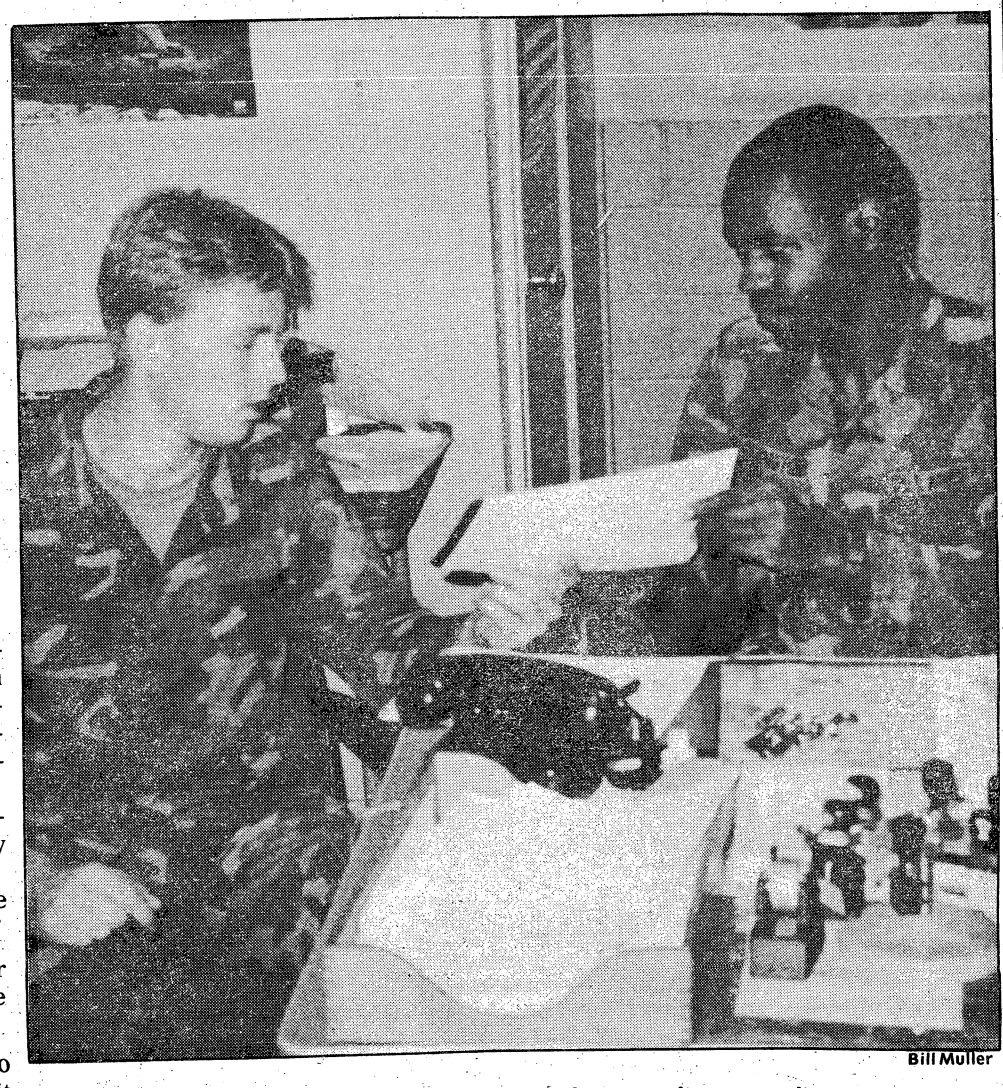
Their jobs are to make sure that those who want to stay in the Army known what is available to them, says SFC William Lee, reenlistment noncommissioned officer (NCO) for the 29th Infantry Regiment.

Lee, SFC Steve Hagy, reenlistment NCO for 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, and SSgt. Roosevelt Washington, reenlistment NCO for 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, says there is a lot of job satisfaction in what they do.

"To be a good reenlistment NCO you have to like what you're doing," Lee says.

"I enjoy talking about the Army," he says. "I especially enjoy getting a soldier exactly what he or she wants from of Army."

Talking about the Army and what it has to offer is what the reenlistment NCOs jobs are about. "I talk to them about their benefits," Hagy says. "I ask them what they plan to do and what their needs are."



Each of the NCOs came to their jobs with different backgrounds. Lee was on recruiting duty in California, Hagy was a welding instructor at Aberdeen Proving Grounds and Washington was an instructor at squad tactical training at Fort Benning.

Having varied backgrounds help the reenlistment NCOs to understand the problems that many soldiers have.

By understanding their problems, they are more qualified to find solutions, Washington says.

The reeenlistment process starts when a soldier decides that he or she would like to stay in the Army.

"When you know that you've helped somone to get exactly what he wants out of the Army, it makes you feel pretty good about yourself," Hagy says.

JAG attorneys proud of conviction rate in child abuse cases

By Charles A. Coffin
Chief, Military Justice

The problem of child abuse in the military community was once again evident during a Fort Benning court-martial last month in which a Fort Benning soldier was tried and convicted for sexually abusing his four-year-old stepson.

This was the fourth successful prosecution of a Fort Benning soldier for child abuse during the past six months. Each case has resulted in either a dishonorable discharge or bad conduct discharge and a substantial sentence to prison.

In the latest child abuse case Sgt. Eddie Harris, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted by general court-martial on Dec. 4 for assault on a child under the age of 16 years.

Evidence presented by the prosecutor, Capt. Randy Hall, showed Harris had been drinking on the night of Sept. 5 and had an argument with his wife.

Harris sent his wife out of the house and then sexually assaulted his four-year-old stepson.

When Harris's wife returned home later that evening, she noticed her son was walking funny and crying. She made an examination of her child and discovered blood in his underwear. Mrs. Harris rushed her child to MACH and reported her husband for child abuse.

In his closing argument, Capt. Jack Spradley, assistant prosecutor, praised the courage of Mrs. Harris in reporting the sexual abuse of her son and stated it was an example for others to follow.

The court sentenced Harris to be reduced to the pay grade of private (E1), to forfeit $375 per month for 14 months, to be confined in prison for 14 months, and to be discharged from the Army with a Bad Conduct Discharge.

In other cases tried at Fort Benning during December and January, the following soldiers were tried and convicted:

Drugs - 6 months jail, BCD — SP4 Montgomery B. Walker, Medical Holding Company, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, was tried by special court-martial on Dec. 19 for selling cocaine and using marihuana.

Evidence presented a trial by the prosecutor, Capt. Bobby Henry, proved Walker sold 1.1 grams of cocaine to an undercover agent of the CID on May 16 in his off-post quarters in Columbus.

Henry also presented evidence which showed Walker was smoking a marijuana cigarette during the cocaine transaction.

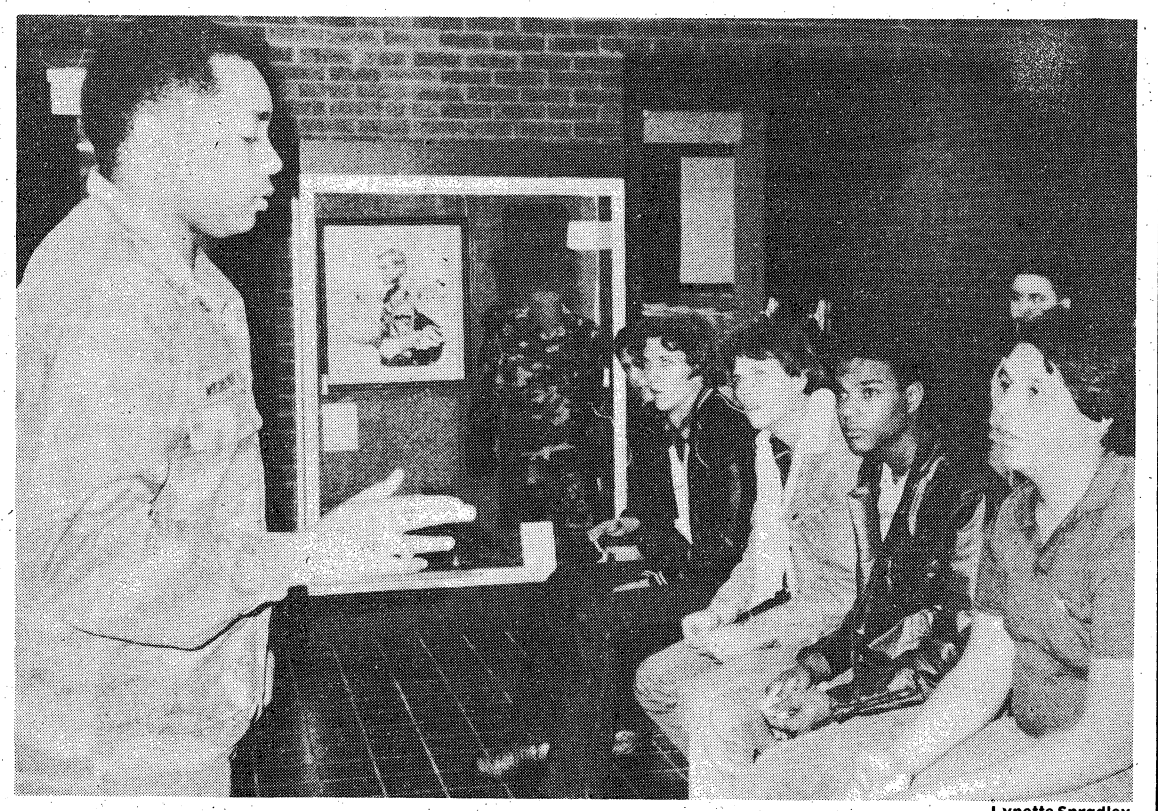
The court, consisting of officers and one-third enlisted members, sentenced Walker to the maximum punishment allowed by law at a special court-martial; reduction to private (E1), forfeiture of two-thirds pay for six months, confinement at hard labor for six months, and a Bad Conduct Discharge.

Forgery, larceny - 26 months prison, BCD — On Jan. 9, PFC Stacey V. Gray, Company A, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, was tried and convicted for stealing his roommate's checkbook and forging the checks which he used to steal $900 from an automatic teller machine at a local on-post banking facility.

In his argument to the court, Army prosecutor, Capt. Bob Henry, urged the court to consider the negative impact a barrack's thief has on unit morale. Henry emphasized that soldiers who are required to live in barracks should have the same security for their personal items as those soldiers who live in government quarters or off post.

The court sentenced Gray to be reduced to private (E1), total forfeiture of all pay and allowances, 26 months in prison, and a Bad Conduct Discharge.

AWOL - four months jail, BDC — On Dec. 12, Pvt. 1 Jerome Bryant, HHC, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment/Weapons Department, was tried and convicted of three counts of Absence Without Leave (AWOL).



Army prosecutor, Capt. Kurt Meckstroth, presented evidence which showed Bryant first left his unit without authority on July 1. He remained absent until Aug. 13 when he voluntarily returned and reported to his platoon sergeant.

The next day, however, Bryant again went AWOL and remained absent until Sept. 25 when he once again voluntarily returned to his unit.

The unit placed Bryant under the control of the Charge of Quarters while preparations were made to place him in pretrail confinement. Bryant slipped away from the Charge of Quarters and went AWOL for a third time. He remained absent until Nov. 18. Bryant was absent from his unit without authority for a total of 137 days.

Meckstroth, prior to sentencing, urged the court to consider the severe impact AWOL's have on a unit's morale and disci-

Officials say temperatures too high

Recent inspections by the Energy Operations Center have found temperatures in many post buildings set from 75 to 85 degrees — well above the authorized limit of 65 degrees.

Center officials say the energy waste is tremendous. They say it takes a three percent increase in energy to raise the temperature each degree above 65.

The Energy Policy and Conservation Act of 1975 implemented the Emergency Building Temperature Restriction (EBTR) effective in July 1979. The EBTR was designed to control building space temperatures for heating to a maximum of 65 degrees and for cooling to a minimum of 78 degrees.

Each person responsible for a building must insure that it complies with the regulation. That person must appoint a building monitor to evaluate the building space use. They must also become familiar with the user controls for heating, cooling and hot water systems in each building and be able to operate the building within the EBTR.

Energy Center officials say if the post controls the building temperatures and use common sense in keeping windows and doors closed while the heat is on, we could reach our Training and Doctrine Command energy goals. (Energy Operations Center)

Don't be fooled by lure of 'instant tax refunds'

IRS says it's best to just file early

By Michael V. Totin
Installation Tax Officer

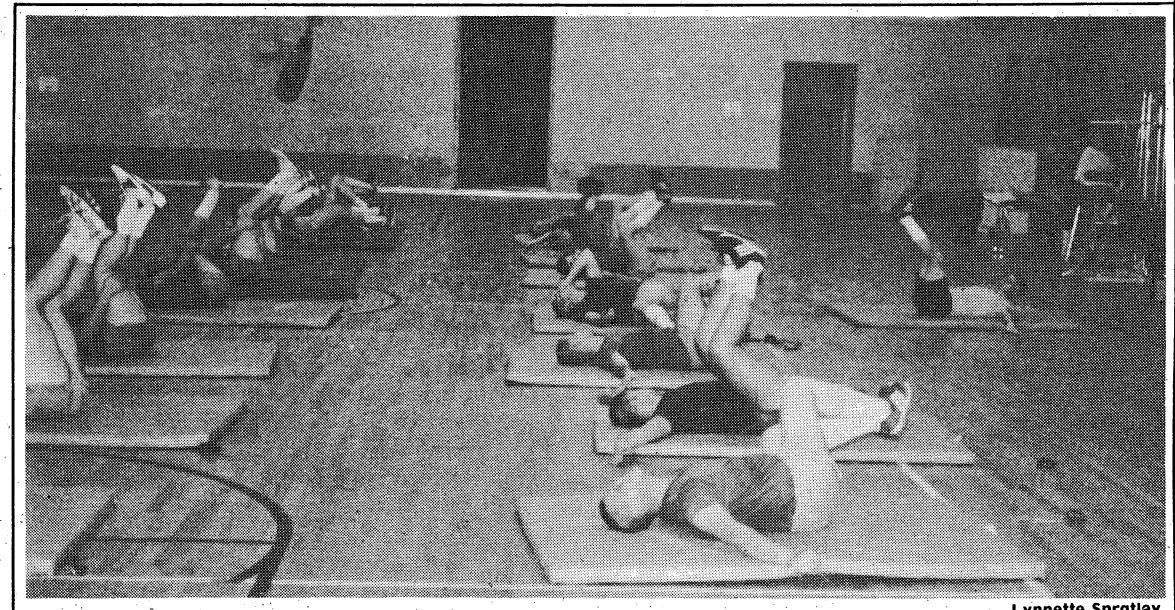
Now that the income tax filing season is upon us, unscrupulous individuals who prey on the financial difficulties and ignorance of soldiers will begin to appear. These persons are know as "tax refund discounters."

Tax refund discounters advertise that they will give immediate cash for assignment of income tax refunds on fully prepared returns. They often prepare the returns in addition to discounting the refunds for immediate cash.

Frequently, business, such as auto dealerships, take assignment of refunds for down payments on purchases. In each of these situations, what the taxpayer does is execute a power of attorney to the discounter giving him the right to receive and cash the refund check. The discounter substitutes his address for the address of the taxpayer, and the refund check, when received by the discounter, is cashed or placed in the discounter's bank account.

The discounts received on the refund checks range from a minimum of 20 percent to more than 50 percent. For example, a soldier is to receive a refund check of $700. He receives a cash payment of $350 from the discounter in exchange for assigning the refund check to the discounter. After the return is filed, it takes from five to 10 weeks for the discounter to receive the check. What the soldier is doing in effect is borrowing $350 for five to 10 weeks an paying an annual interest rate of approximately 400 percent.

Refund discounting is not only bad business for you, the taxpayer, it is illegal. Assigning a refund check to someone before you receive it violates federal law.



It also interferes with the administration of the tax laws in that the Internal Revenue Service receives only the discounter's address and not your address. The IRS reviews the list of refunds frequently. If the IRS locates several refunds going to the same address, the refunds will be held while the IRS investigates to see if refund discounting is involved. The refunds may be held for several months, during which time you will be harassed by the refund discounter seeking his money.

Refund discounting is unnecessary. If you file within the early filing season, you can expect to receive your refund within five to six weeks. This leaves more money free for those purchases you may want or need to make.

Don't be taken in. The obvious "tip off" is the rumor that a certain preparer will guarantee a big refund.

At the very least have your taxes checked by your unit tax officer. He is trained and it will not cost you anything.

Above all, do not sign a blank tax form or a form with computations that you do not understand.

PE is 'no time to be bored'

Faith physical education program offers variety

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning School System

Three Faith Middle School teachers addressed the Contemporary Elementary and Middle School Physical Education Conference in Atlanta, Ga., last week.

Scott Denney, Jimmy Cochran and Sandra Rodgers presented a program on the Faith physical education program.

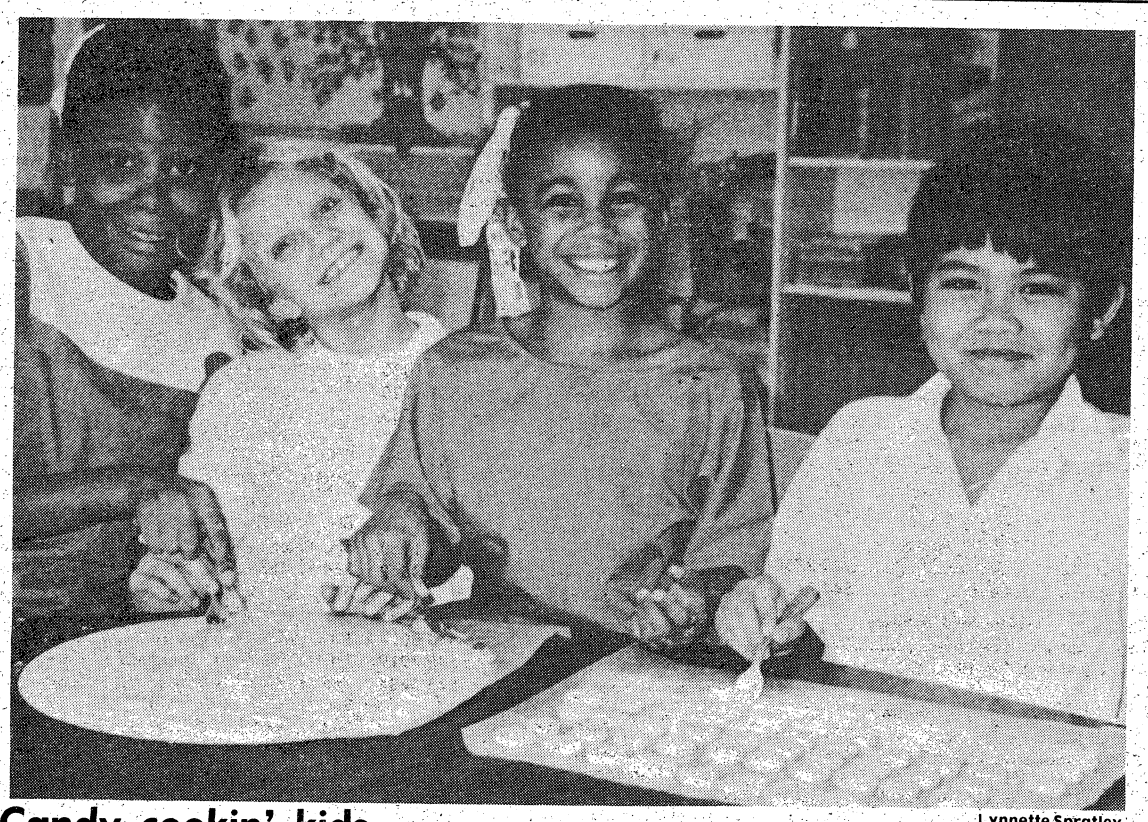
All three teach PE at Faith.

The national conference was held at Georgia State University and featured speakers from throughout the United States and Canada.

The Faith School teachers presented a program entitled "No Time To Be Bored." The presentation explained the physical education program at Faith School and the middle school philosophy on which the program is based.

The Faith physical education program offers a variety of activities for students including gymnastics, golf, tennis, bowling, jogging, swimming, volleyball, soccer, basketball, field hockey, track and field, archery and wrestling.

Schools



"Our objective," said Cochran, "is to expose students to several different activities each year. We introduce skills that are developed as students move through our program."

Faith physical education teachers have also presented a similar program for teacher education courses at Auburn University. The trio will soon be contributing authors to Principal, a national publication for school principals, as they present an article describing the Faith School physical education program.

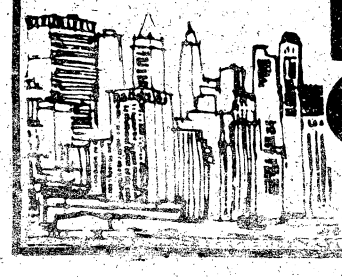
FAA increasing inspections of military charter airlines

Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole has directed the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) to "immediately conduct special accelerated inspections of airlines operating under military charter."

Dole said that "We want to assure ourselves and the public beyond a shadow of a doubt that these carriers are operating with the highest standards of safety."

According to Dole, the program is "over and above the ongoing inspection program that these military charter and all certificated airlines would routinely receive." The FAA will make a comprehensive operations and mainenance inspection of all Military Airlift Command (MAC) contract charter airlines and all domestic air carriers that get a significant amount of business from moving military troops, according to Dole.

The Department of Defense supports Dole's views, and had announced that the Military Airlift Command will increase inspections, in addition to the steps being taken by the FAA, according to Assistant Secretary of Defense for Public Affairs Robert B. Sims.



Sims said that MAC will conduct five times as many spot inspections at MAC bases beginning immediately, and that formal surveys will be conducted on anual basis, rather than periodically. "The number of MAC range riders (personnel assigned to fly aboard chartered aircraft to ensure that the carrier is meeting contractual obligations) will be increased," Sims added. (ARNEWS)

Soldiers can attain scholarly pursuits while at Benning

Every phase of educational development can be obtained by the soldier right here on post.

For active duty soldiers interested in furthering their education, the Education Center of Fort Benning offers counseling and programs to earn the General Equivalency Diploma and college degrees.

For those soldiers wishing to acquire a GED it can be as easy as taking a test.

According to Chester Alderfer, chief of main post Branch Education Center, GEDs are easy to obtain.

He said 96 percent of today's soldiers already have their high school diploma or GED. "If they don't have it, advancement in the military and civilian world is difficult," Alderfer said.

To get the GED, the soldier's first step is to visit the counselors at the Education Center on Dixie Road. While there, a counselor will then set up a pretest for the soldier which will determine if he is weak in any of the reading, writing or mathematic skills. If the soldier does well on the test he will be scheduled to take the once a week GED test. If it is apparent that the soldier is weak in any of the skills, he can sign up for the self-paced classes to improve those areas.

The cost for the GED is free to all active duty personell. "Civilans and dependents may check with the Muscogee County School District, which has a program for the High School Diploma and the GED," Alderfer said.

The GED can be just the beginning for those soldiers in the learning mode. If they are interested in working towards an associate or bachelors degrees there are colleges in the area offering programs at the under-

NIGHT CLASSES
For Your HIGH SCHOOL DIPLOMA

WHY FINISH HIGH SCHOOL?

Listed below are a few of the many reasons why you need at least a high school education.
BETTER JOBS. Men and women who have completed high school find it easier to get ahead in life. Your high school diploma can help you to move up to a better job, with more pay, and added security.
ARMED FORCES. High school graduates are much preferred. Once you are in, your chances for extra training that will help you in later life are greatly increased if you are a high school graduate.
PEACE OF MIND. The high school graduate will never be embarrassed by being labeled a drop out. The personal satisfaction alone is well worth the effort required to earn your diploma.
YOUR CHILDREN. Someday your children will perhaps face the decision of either continuing school or becoming a dropout. Your influence and your arguments for earning a high school diploma will be much more persuasive if you yourself are a high school graduate.
YOUR FUTURE. Regardless of what you are doing now, all available information and experience verifies that your future could and should be much more secure and your opportunties for advancement much greater after you have earned your high school diploma.

New AIDS policy goes into effect next month

By Thomas G. Surface
Chief, Army News Service

Beginning in February, screening for the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome-related virus HTLV-III will start for all active duty soldiers.

Family members worldwide and Army civilian employees working overseas who are authorized medical care at U.S. medical facilities may also be tested under certain conditions, according to the recently approved Army AIDS policy.

The Army's policy, approved by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. on Dec. 23, is based on the current understanding of the natural history of HTLV-III infection. The policy addressed the risks to individuals because of military service, methods of transmission of the virus and the safety of the military blood supply.

Protecting soldiers

"The Army is taking action to protect soldiers, their family members and our civilian employees by first testing for the presence of the HTLV-III atibody and establishing appropriate follow-up procedures," said Lt. Col. Gary M. Quay, a personnel staff officer in the office of the deputy chief of staff for personnel in the Pentagon.

According to the Army's policy, soldiers who test antibody positive but who demonstrate no clinical evidence of the illness and can continue to perform their assigned jobs will not be separated solely for having the AIDS antibody. Also, presence on the HTLV-III antibody cannot be used as a basic for disciplinary actions under the uniform code of military justice or as the sole reason for giving a soldier a less than honorable discharge. Soldiers who test positive will be considered temporarily non-deployable, he said.

"HTLV-III antibody-positive soldiers will not be deployed overseas and those currently assigned overseas will be reassigned to the United States as soon as possible regardless of PCS rules," Quay said.

Limited duty

Additionally, soldiers infected with the HTLV-III antibody will be limited to stateside duty assignments. For this purpose, Alaska and Hawaii are considered stateside assignments. "These soldiers will receive a temporary profile limiting their duty assignment to the U.S. Their profile will not exceed 12 months but may be reissued upon medical review. As long as the soldier meets the medical retention standards in Chapter 3, AR 40-501, soldiers confirmed to be HTLV-III positive may reenlist or transfer to new duty assignments within the U.S." Quay said. He added that information relating to assignment limitations will be kept in the soldier's medical files and will be provided to personnel authorities for assignment preparation.

The new policy specifies that soldier who test positive will not be assigned to Ranger units, special operations units or to CO-HORT units scheduled for overseas rotation.

Six stages

Quay explained that HTLV-III infections have been medically categorized into six stages indicating the degree of severity. Stage 1 is an early stage, indicating the presence of HTLV-III antibody but with no symptoms or clinical evidence of the disease. Stage 6 is the most serious when the victim's ability to fight off simple infections is destroyed.

Quay explained that an initial screening text, known as the Elisa test, will be done on blood samples drawn from all active duty soldiers. Those testing positive on the Elisa will have another, more conclusive test called the Western Blot. Those soldiers testing positive on the first Western Blot test will be retested uing a new blood specimen.

Individuals will be informed of the test results and counselled on the significance of the test and methods to prevent possible transmission of the infection. Quay stressed that medical and command personnel will take all the steps necessary to safeguard information on test results from unauthorized individuals. "Our intent is to protect the confidentially of that information as best we can," he said.

All individuals wishing to join the Army will continue to be screened for the HTLV-III antibody and if they test positive will not be accepted into the Army or, if tested during initial active duty training, will be separated. This includes officer, warrant officer and enlisted applicants, for both the active and reserve components, he added. The provision also applies to students of the U.S. Military Academy, Reserve Officer Training Corps cadets and candidates going to Officers Candidate School, he said.

Quay said that family members of active duty soldiers will be offered the test if it appears that they are at some risk of having acquired the infection. Consent for testing must be given by the family member or by the parent or guardian. Ordinarily, all household members of HTLV-III antibody-positive soldiers will be offered the test, although current medical knowledge indicates that casual and non-sexual contact does not increase the risk, said Quay. He added that family members may, at any time, voluntarily request to be tested on a space available basis.

Family members

The new policy allows family members confirmed to be HTLV-III antibody positive to accompany their sponsor overseas. The soldier, however, may request deletion from orders or, if already overseas, a compassionate reassignment. "A soldier won't get an automatic PCS based solely on a family member being HTLV-III positive," he added.

The Army's civilian employees will not be required to be tested for the HTLV-III antibody but civilian employees working overseas and authorized to use U.S. Army medical facilities may request to be tested on a voluntary, space available basis, said Quay. Test results will be confidential and will not be used to terminate the individual's employment. "Existing civilian employment policy provides guidance relating to appropriate action when an employee is no longer physically able to perform his or her job," he added.

Quay emphasized that information obtained during medical testing and follow-up assessment pertaining to a soldier's personal drug use and consensual sexual activity may not, as a general rule, be used against the soldier in disciplinary actions. Nor would the information normally be the sole basis for a less than honorable discharge, Quay said. He added that the only two cases where this information could be used are physical disability separations or separations for the convenience of the government after a hearing by a board of officers. The latter instance requires the approval of the Secretary or Assistant Secretary of the Army.

Club members can earn pilot's license for less

TRAINING PLANE — One of the Cessna planes used as a trainer at the Benning Flying Club awaits its student-pilots.

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Flying Club offers a chance to earn that flying license that you always wanted but didn't have the opportunity to get.

The club offers instruction leading to private, commercial and instrument rating licenses.

Located in Building 2416 at Lawson Army Airfield, club membership is open to active duty soldiers and their dependents, retirees, and civil service employees.

The club, which presently has 55 members, is an activity of Morale Support that teaches flying to the beginner as well as the advanced flyer on a individual basis.

It boasts two planes (a Cessna 150 and a Cessna 152) which are used as trainers. They also have four other planes which can be rented on an hourly basis.

For the beginner eager to get his private pilots license, 20 hours of flying with an instructor and 20 hours of solo flying must be completed.

For begining lessons there is a $27 per hour fee for the plane and a $12 per hour fee for the instructor.

"Total cost for a private pilot's license is approximately $2,000, which is considerably cheaper than in Columbus," Stewart Whisnant, Flying Club manager, said.

Initial fee for membership in the club is $35 with a $15 monthly dues. The club members meet for a required safety meeting quarterly.

The court sentenced Bryant to be confined at hard labor for four months, to forfeit $426 per month for four months, and to be discharged from the Army with a Bad Conduct Discharge.

AWOL - four months jail — On Jan. 15., Pvt. 1 Stephen King, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was tried by special court-martial for two periods of Absence Without Leave (AWOL), totaling 30 days.

After King was found guilty of these offenses, Capt. Jane Winand, prosecutor, presented evidence on sentencing through King's platoon leader, 2nd Lt. Peter Wooten, and his platoon sergeant, SFC Leon Smith, that they had gone to great lengths to counsel and encourage King to shape up but that their efforts had met with negative results.

They both testified King was a substandard soldier who lacked the motivation to perform even the simplest tasks.

In her closing argument, Winand stressed the importance of personnel accountability to guarantee a ready fighting force to meet any threat or emergency. Winand argued that King, by his actions, has indicated that he places his own personal needs above those of his unit and the Army as a whole.

The court sentenced King to confinement at hard labor for 130 days.

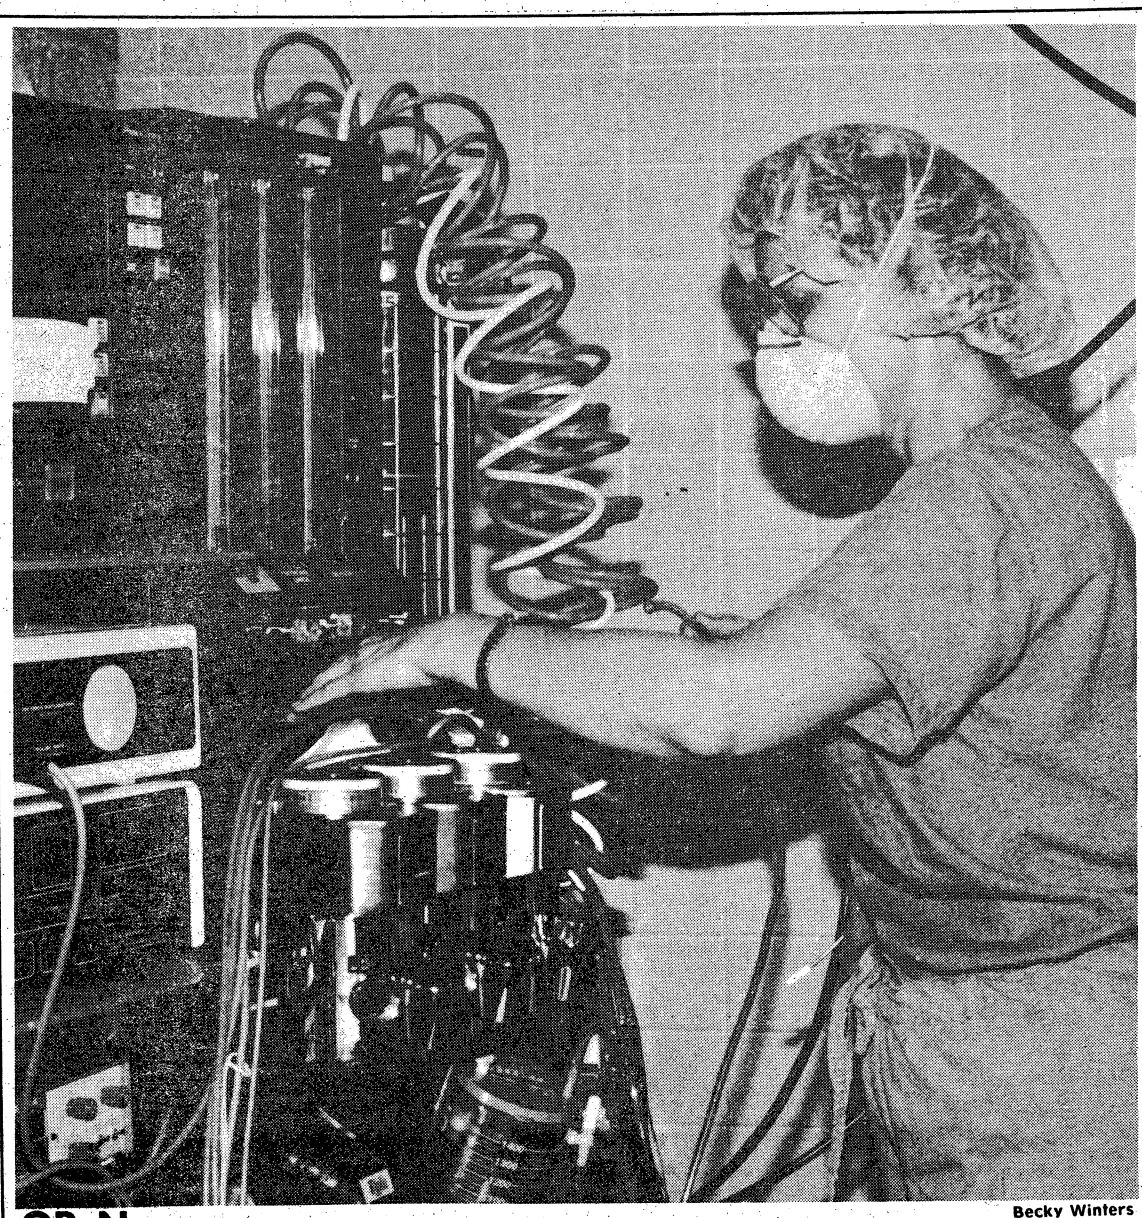
Shopping around for credit cards can save money in the long run



To some young people a credit card may seem like something that comes with middle age. It seems only the "over-30" set can convince a financial institution that their credit is good. But all financial institutions are not alike — and neither are all credit card applicants. "Banks and credit unions set their own standards concerning credit card customers," said Martin Handel, comptroller of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES). "They all have their own scoring formulas for screening applicants. This means a poor credit risk at one bank could be a prime candidate for credit at another."

Before issuing credit cards, institutions look at the applicant's income level, employment record, financial obligations, credit history and length of time spent living in the community. But each institution weighs these factors differently, according to Handel. "A bank that's looking for credit card business may have a lower income level requirement than one that isn't," he explained. "And a credit union that deals with a lot of military customers may not see frequent moves as a negative factor."

Some banks and credit unions have "starter programs" for young people applying for their first cards, Handel said. Under these plans, institutions issue credit cards. Some large banks mail applications to potential customers. "But just because an institution accepts you, that doesn't mean you should accept them," Handel cautioned. "Each institution sets its own terms for credit card service." Many charge interest on the unpaid balance from the prior month, with interest rates ranging from 14 to 24 percent annually. Some charge a flat annual fee ranging from $15 to $40. Others charge a fee plus interest on the unpaid balance. Still others charge a percent of the purchase cost when the card is used. "Finally," Handel said, "some banks and credit unions require you to open an account with them." But credit cards offer shopping convenience. A credit card holder can shop when prices are low instead of when cash is available.

"Now that exchanges accept Mastercard and Visa, card and holders have more freedom to take advantage of low exchange prices," Handle states. "AAFES prices average 20 percent lower than commercial stores and they're even better during sales. And the sales tax break in exchanges means a lot on high-ticket items like computers and stereos or when you're stocking up on sale merchandise," he added. Handel thinks flexibility and convenience make a credit card worth having. So do the more than 50 percent of exchange customers who already have cards. A 1983 Navy survey of military members showed that 80 percent of E-5s and above and 13 percent of E-1s held cards. "Credit cards can save you money if you know how to use them," Handel concluded.

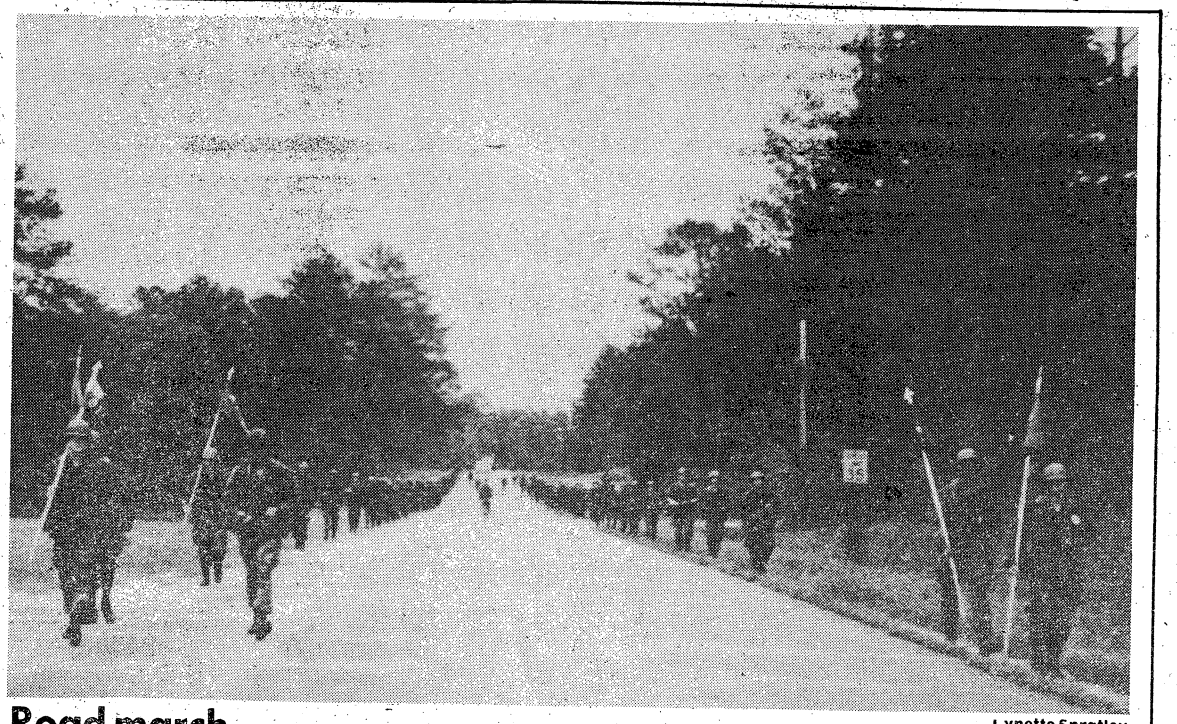
New recruits seem to like the new GI bill's benefits

It's been almost six months since the Veterans Educational Assistance Program was replaced for new recruits by the new GI Bill. So far, the report card for the new system reads a solid B+.

Active duty recruits who elect to use the new GI Bill pay a non-refundable $100 a month for 12 months ($1,200). In return, they receive $300 a month for 36 months ($10,800) when they've completed at least three years service and are ready to go to college or vocational school.



Education-minded recruits seem to like the bill, which went into effect July 1, 1985. Army recruits like it best, with 69 percent enrolling.

Recruiters say the bill makes their job easier. As one of them put it, "A lot of people come in here every day asking about the program. It's a good deal. Where else can you put in $100 a month and get back $300?"

In addition to active duty recruits, the new GI Bill provides benefits for Vietnam-era GI Bill participants and members of the Selected Reserve serving in troop units or individual augments or active Guard and Reserve programs. Selected Reserve personnel can also participate in the program. Signing up for a six-year obligation entitles them to up to $140 a month for 36 months — $5,040.

In addition to attracting the kind of high-quality individuals who are interested in further education, service officials are hopeful that the new GI Bill will be one more tool in Uncle Sam's kit for improving retention. However, service officials agree with Rear Adm. Cecil J. Kempf, director of the Naval Reserve, who told Congress, "The new G.I. Bill must not be viewed as a panacea for all our recruiting and retention problems."

Although recruiters and officials are generally pleased with the new bill, some feel there is still room for improvement. Maj. Gen. Winfield S. Harpe, USAF, director of personnel programs, suggested in recent congressional testimony that program participation would be even greater if the monthly payments were reduced and stretched out over a longer period. He added, a member's contribution should be refundable if the member decides to drop out of the program before receiving any benefits, and recruits should have 30 days to consider entering the program. At present, new recruits must make their decision within the first two weeks of basic training. (AFPS)

Communities should pull together to stop crime

Provost marshal

A community is a group of people living in close association in the same locality and sharing similar interests. One of the common ties within a community is the desire to have a safe and secure place to live. For the most part, the community tends to leave this job to law enforcement agencies.

The major task of protecting all life and property through the entire community has been designated as a function of the police.

All too often, however, the police learn of and respond to crimes only after their commission. Following the initial response, police become busy seeking to recover stolen property, conducting investigations, writing reports and sometimes appearing in court.

You may say that this is the policeman's job. Not so! The primary job of the police is to protect life and property, but, working on crimes that have already happened takes up a large portion of their time.

What can be done to turn this situation around? We, the residents of the Fort Benning community, can take steps to prevent crime.

The most important step is for all members of the community to get involved. Participate in neighborhood and barracks watch. Report suspicious activity and strangers in the area. When this is done, the Military Police are able to react quickly and prevent or stop crimes before they are committed.

Being a new neighbor and meeting new neighbors is a frequent experience for all of us. We should each make a positive effort to establish supportive relationships with our neighbors and get involved in community life.

(Provost Marshal)

McGruff

There were only three housing areas that reported incidents during Jan. 13 to 19.

McGraw Manor had five incidents: two domestic assaults, one aggravated assault, one larceny of private property and one report of damage to private property.

Bouton Heights/Davis Hills had four incidents: one assault on a child under the age of 16, one report of an obscene phone call, one unlawful entry report and one report of damage to private property.

C.U.B. Village had three incidents: two domestic assaults and a one report of damage to private property.

Announcements

Dental records: All soldiers on active duty for training periods of 30 days or longer and all soldiers deploying overseas must have dental records including an identificaion panographic radiograph. This record must be on file with the appropriate dental facility approved by the Army commander or state adjutant general prior to TDY or PCS travel.

Dental records will not be taken on TDY trips regardless of duration. Upon PCS, a duplicate panographic radiograph will be kept on file by the losing dental facility. This radiograph will be filed prior to the soldier's completion of outprocessing and annotated on the outprocessing checklist.

Personnel responsible for final clearance must insure that the dental section on the outprocessing checklist is annotated by the servicing dental clinic. For more information, call the DENTAC sergeant major or executive officer at 544-3954.

Aerobics class: The Officers Wives'Club will offer aerobics classes every week for people who want to slim down. Classes meet on Tuesday and Thursday from 7 to 8 p.m. and Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. Classes are taught by certified instructors. ATC soldiers tackle bayonet training

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Amid yells of "Kill" and "Stick-'em" soldiers from Company A, 1st Battalion, 1st Training Brigade learned the finer points of how to use a bayonet last week.

The new infantry soldiers were taught how to assume the attack position, the slash, the parry and the thrust.

The soldiers were also taught that, when fighting with the bayonet, there were only two types of people: the quick and the dead.

The troops will get a total of seven hours of bayonet training to insure that they are the quick and not the dead.

Few surprises are in store for taxpayers this year

No major surprises face civilian and military individuals and families overseas as they prepare and file their 1985 individual income tax returns. What follows is a summary of significant tax law changes, filing tips and availability of assistance prepared by the Internal Revenue Service.

The foreign earned income exclusion remains frozen at $80,000 through 1987. It is not available, however, to military personnel or other employees of the federal government. In that regard, individuals who work in military non-appropriated funds activities — clubs and commissaries, for example — are considered U.S. government employees and as such are not eligible for the exclusion benefits.

To claim the exclusion for any year beginning with 1984, an original return must be filed within one year of the due date. Therefore, for example, a 1984 return must be filed no later than April 15, 1986.

The "base housing amount" by which reasonable foreign housing expenses subject to the housing cost exclusion must be reduced is $6,868. This exclusion also is not available to the military and civilian federal government employees.

Indexing is now part of the taxation system as a means of offsetting the effects of inflation. The zero bracket amount — standard deduction — is raised to $2,390 for a single person and $3,540 on a joint return. The personal exemption increases to $1,040. The income threshold of each tax bracket is increased by about 4 percent.

Simplified rules make it easier for divorced or separate parents to determine who may claim the dependency exemption. The parent with custody of a child now is entitled to an exemption no matter which parent provides more than one-half the support.

There are two exceptions: when the parent with custody waives the exemption in writing, or when an existing pre-1985 agreement gives the parent without custody the exemption and that parent provides at least $600 of support per child. In addition, each parent may claim any medical expenses paid for a child. Support provided by the spouse or a remarried parent is considered as if provided by the parent.

Alimony payments continue as a deduction for the payer and as income for the recipient. Payments designated as child support cannot be treated as alimony. To qualify as alimony, payments now must be in cash, not be designated as other than alimony, result from a divorce or separation agreement, generally [illegible] six years unless either parent dies or the receiving parent remarries, and not be contingent on the status of the child.

Alimony is considered as income for purposes of Individual Retirement Account contributions. An important addition for compliance purposes requires that the person paying alimony must list the name(s) and social security number(s) of the individual(s) receiving payments.

Other new compliance-related information required on tax returns includes listing the names of dependents who don't live with the taxpayer claiming them and any tax exempt interest earned by social security recipients.

The deduction for contributions to qualifying U.S. charitable organizations for taxpayers who do not itemize is 50 percent of those contributions. In addition, the mileage rate for use of an auto in charitable work has been increased to 12 cents a mile.

The mileage rate for business use of a personal auto is up to 21 cents a mile for the first 15,000 miles and remains at 11 cents thereafter.

The availability of tax credits for making a home more energy efficient through insulation, weatherstripping, storm windows and the like ended Dec. 31, 1985.

Military personnel overseas who sold their home after July 14, 1984, are given additional time to reinvest the proceeds into a new principal residence in order to defer tax on any gain from the sale. The total replacement period is extended from four to no more than eight years.

Up to half of social security benefits received in 1985 may be taxed if other income is substantial. Generally, benefits will n[illegible]

Youths are on religious mission

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Delynn Bradshaw and John Wegener aren't the Blues Brothers but they are on a mission from God: they're Mormons in Columbus on a two year mission to educate people about the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

"All young men and women in our church are urged to go on a mission after they reach the age of 19. It's not mandatory but most of us want to go on a mission," said Bradshaw.

Bradshaw, a 20 year old native of Shelley, Idaho explained that the Mormon Church doesn't compensate their missionaries in any way. The young men and women have to earn their own money to support themselves while on their mission. Wegener, 19, from Gunnison, Utah, said that his parents started a mission fund for him when he was very young and he uses that money to support himself.

Both young men expressed very deep feelings about what they were doing.

"Basically, we're here to convert people to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. We don't use hard-sell tactics, though. We go door to door telling people that we have a message we'd like to share with them. If they're interested, fine, if they're not then we respect that and move on. We're also here to educate people on our church and beliefs," said Bradshaw.

"There are many misconceptions about our church. We're not a cult and we do believe in Jesus Christ. Some people think we deify our church's founder, Joseph Smith, but that's just not true. We believe in Christ and we're waiting for his second coming," said Wegener.

The missionaries have a strict regimen they follow everyday that begins at 6:30 a.m. They eat, study and pray until 9:30 and then go from house to house talking with people until 9 p.m.

"The toughest thing about being on a mission is being away from my family. Once we leave on a two year mission we can't visit our family until the end of the two years," said Wegener.

The Mormon Church, according to Wegener and Bradshaw, look upon the family as the basic unit upon which their church is built.

"If the family unit is strong then the church will be strong," said Wegener.

Services Sunday honor POWs

By Chaplain James Pomann
Reception Station

The Army family will join the National League of Families in recognizing and honoring all Americans who are still held prisoner, or are missing or unaccounted for in Southeast Asia. The special observance will be Sunday.

At Fort Benning, all religious services will include a particular emphasis on prayer for soldiers who are still missing, and for their families, who continue to endure uncertainty about the fates of their loved ones.

As Congressional teams meet with Vietnamese officials in order to resolve the status of POW/MIA personnel, prayer for the success of their efforts is also in order.

I followed a National Public Radio series in which the memoirs of an American POW pilot and his wife were read. I also had the honor of meeting and listening to the experiences of another man who was a POW and managed to arrange the escape of himself and a number of his fellow Americans.

Not only are these service members true heroes, but the faithfulness of their families is inspiring as well.

They teach us the meaning of the Army values we focus on in 1986: loyalty, personal responsibility and selfless service. These patriots help us realize that these fundamental qualities of the military profession are essentially spiritual.

"OUR NEW ARMY HOUSING IS NICE TO COME HOME TO. IT WAS WORTH THE WAIT."

SFC Ron Rhodes and his wife Connie.

"It sure didn't take us long to get comfortable in our new house here at Fort Polk. Connie loves the size and lay-out. Ronnie-Lee loves the playground. And there's even room to store my boat.

"We love our quarters. This house has been very important for us in making a good home.

"Because we're in the Army, people may not expect us to live this well. But the Army has changed a lot in the past five years. It's a good place to live, to be.

"Connie and I feel that the Army's really come a long way in housing and, you know, in taking care of its people."

The overall quality of quarters on posts throughout the Army continues to improve. And housing starts and renovations are at an all-time high. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

ARMY FAMILY.

Astronaut Ride downplays gender's importance in career

By Norma Vishneski
TRADOC News Service

She's been called the best-known American astronaut since Neil Armstrong — and with good reason. In 1983, Sally Ride captured global attention when she became the first American woman to fly in space.

While the press had a field day focusing on the female aspect of her role as astronaut, Ride steadfastly held the attitude that her gender was irrelevant. In countless interviews she stressed that she didn't want people to think she was picked for the flight because she was a woman. And she maintained her wit and good humor when the press wanted to know if she would wear lipstick and powder for TV transmissions from space and asked if she "weeps" when she has a problem.

In the two years since Ride's historic flight, a great deal has changed. Ride now shares the astronaut sisterhood with ten other women, seven of whom have flown in space. And Ride has gained the added distinction of being the only woman with two NASA missions under her belt. (Astronaut Judi Resnik is scheduled to make her second flight Jan. 22.)

The two years have also provided time for Ride to reflect on her experience and draw some conclusions about leadership, success, and breaking social barriers. In a recent interview for the Army's Training and Doctrine Command, Ride was asked how she managed the delicate task of gaining acceptance into the domain of the Super Male — the test pilots and fighter pilots who made up the astronaut corps before the ascendancy of the "mission specialist" over the pilot. With characteristic modesty and directness, Ride explained how the leadership of NASA officials and her fellow astronauts helped successfully integrate women into the space program.

"The astronauts had been involved in an all-male program, but they were told that NASA was going to be hiring female astronauts and were given a short period of time to adjust — a couple of years to get used to the idea," said Ride. "And by the time we (the female astronauts) appeared on the scene they were perfectly willing to give us a chance to show that we knew what we were doing, that we were reasonably intelligent and that we were enthusiastic about the space program. And if we demonstrated those talents then they were perfectly happy to accept us right away, and did. We never felt excluded, or like second-class citizens, or even left out of day-to-day conversations. And I think that's a real tribute to the male astronauts in the program. It takes a fine person to be able to accept people they might not have been brought up to accept."

And according to media reports, the idea did take some getting used to. A Time magazine article reported that "some old hands in the brotherhood," like Moonwalker Al Bean, who instructed the newcomers, doubted that women could tackle such "male things" as space craft and computers. But, according to Time, as Ride and the other women demonstrated their mettle, Bean had a change of heart.

As well he might. Ride, now 34, graduated from Stanford in 1973 with a B.S. in physics and a B.A. in English. Though a nationally ranked amateur tennis player, she decided to quit the sport and go to full-time graduate studies in astrophysics at Stanford. In 1978 she got her doctorate and a slot in the astronaut corps as well.

Sally Ride would prefer the world not view her achievement as being a "giant leap for womankind," but rather as simply one individual's striving for excellence. Be that as it may, many do regard her as a powerful role model. Molly Tyson, an old Stanford roommate, told a Time reporter: "I've never seen Sally trip, on or off the court, physically or intellectually."

Defense Hotline tips help DoD fight fraud, waste of tax money

A Defense Hotline tip from a service member led to a reduction in the price of an adapter torque tool from $1,037 to $244.87 per unit. The total savings: $19,782.

A criminal investigation uncovered a cost mischarging scheme by an engineering firm that had netted the operators about $300,000. The corporation and its president pleaded guilty to seven counts of a 19-count indictment under the false claims, false statements and mail fraud statutes. Although the defendants are awaiting final sentencing, the company has so far made restitution of $186,000; and the parent company, two corporate affiliates and five company officials have been barred from receiving government contracts.

Contract auditors obtained a $59 million cost recovery plus a $15 million interest payment for the government when they found that the cost charged to the government over a seven-year period for workman's compensation was substantially higher than the amount actually owed and paid.

These are just a few examples of DoD's continuing efforts to check fraud, waste and abuse that are outlined in a Defense Department report to Congress. Audit, inspection and investigative activities that save money and improve the management of Department of Defense operations are summarized in the report.

During the reporting period (April 1, 1985, through Sept. 30, 1985), 11 separate DoD internal audit and review organizations issued 9,062 reports with potential monetary savings of $1.1 billion.

On the contract audit side, the Defense Contract Audit Agency and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers issued 35,232 reports and questioned more than $16.8 billion worth of pre-award and post-award costs. Net savings from the 9,042 reports closed during the period amounted to more than $5 billion.

Criminal investigations during this period resulted in fines, penalties, restitutions and recoveries of more than $88 million — a significant increase over the previous six-month reporting period figure ($37 million). The Defense Criminal Investigative Service, the Army Criminal Investigation Command, the Naval Investigative Service and the Air Force Office of Special Investigations together closed 8,304 cases. The result: 502 convictions and indictments and 346 contractor suspensions and debarments from doing business with the government.

The Defense Hotline Program continues to be an important avenue for reporting fraud, waste and mismanagement. During the reporting period, the Hotline staff received 5,214 calls and letters, of which only 752 were considered "non-substantive." Significant Hotline cases dealt with overpricing, misuse of authority and government property, and falsifying official documents and records. (AFPS) be taxable unless your income plus any tax exempt interest, the married couple deduction, excluded income earned in a foreign country, U.S. possession or Puerto Rico and one-half of the social security payments total $25,000 for a single person; $25,000 for a married person who files a separate return, but did not live with their spouse at any time during 1985; $32,000 for a married couple filing a joint return; zero, if married, filing separately and lived with his/her spouse at any time during the year. Form SSA-1099, mailed to U.S. citizens, and Form SSA-1042S, sent to non-resident aliens, will indicate the amount of social security benefits received in 1984. Social security benefits from a foreign country are fully taxable unless specifically exempted by a tax treaty.

The itemized deduction for medical and dental expenses, including drugs, is limited to the amount exceeding 5 percent of adjusted gross income. Deductible drug expenses are allowed only for prescription drugs and insulin. Lodging expenses of up to $50 per night can now be deducted by a patient and accompanying individual if the trip is primarily for, and essential to, medical care.

All contributions to an Individual Retirement Account now must be made no later than the due date for filing the return (April 15, 1986, for most taxpayers for 1985), even if the individual has an extension to file.

The itemized deduction for a casualty and theft loss is that amount which exceeds 10 percent of adjusted gross income after reducing each loss by $100 and any reimbursements.

Foreign community-property laws are no longer recognized. Non-resident alien spouses residing in foreign community property jurisdictions can no longer split their income for U.S. tax purposes.

Property transfer made between divorcing spouses since July 18, 1984, generally will be treated as gifts and are non-taxable at the time. When the property transfer because of a divorce settlement occurred on or before July 18, 1984, the new rule may be applied if both former spouses agree to it.

Military personnel should visit their legal office for tax information and assistance.

Processing problem

Well-publicized problems made 1985 a particularly difficult year at Internal Revenue Service return processing centers. A breakdown of new computer equipment accompanying software, and staff inexperience combined to cause subtantial and unfortunate delays with processing returns, issuing refunds and responding to taxpayer inquiries.

All major problem areas have been identified and steps taken to correct them. For example, hardware capacity is increased by 50 percent faster, the Internal Revenue Service has more than a year of experience with the equipment and staffing is up as much as 50 percent at the centers.

The performance of the Internal Revenue Service should be vastly improved in 1986. (AFPS) graduate level. Among those schools are Troy State University, Columbus College and the Chattahoochee Valley State Community College.

For soldiers taking classes on a full time basis it would take approximently two school years, consisting of 90 quarter hours or 60 semester hours to graduate with the associate's degrees.

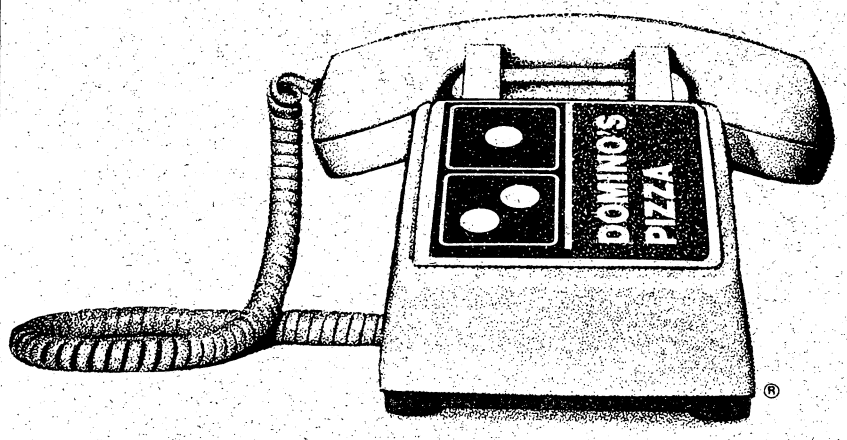
For part time classes Alderfer says , "If an individual works dilligently it would be reasonable to say he could complete his associates degree in three to four years."

The bachelors degree takes considerably longer. An individual taking full-time classes can expect to go to school an additional two years after recieving his associate's degree

On a part time basis, the time involved in working for the bachelor degree would vary also. But one should expect to obtain the degree in three to four years.

In spite of the time involved working for those degrees it would seem that while on active duty status is the best time financially to acquire an education.

For soldiers E-1 through E-4 the army will pay 75 percent of the cost for the classes. For those E-5s and above with less than 14 years of service, the Army will pay 90 percent of the bill.



Officers taking classes can expect the Army to pay 75 percent of the tuition costs.

It is becoming increasingly important to have an education. With more people improving their education, the harder it will be for the uneducated to compete in the job market.

The Army encourages the soldier to take advantage of the programs available by giving promotion points for classes, helping with financing and by encouraging new enlistees to get their High School Diploma.

Gilstrap's 10th ranked Spencer team blows past Jordan Red Jackets 78-50

Spencer basketball coach Speedy Gilstrap and his team each presented the other with a pleasant surprise Tuesday night.

Gilstrap had worried about Jordan, which has struggled but lost some close games. But the Greenwaves stunned even their coach in blowing out the Red Jackets 78-50 at Spencer.

Then came the other surprise. Gilstrap informed the Greenwaves that they were ranked No. 10 in Class AAAA by The Atlanta Journal-Constitution.

"I told them in the third quarter that I had a surprise for them if they held on," said Gilstrap.

Somehow, "held on" doesn't seem quite right. Taking the Jackets for a ride is what they did, outscoring them 29-13 in the fourth quarter.

"You can say I'm darn surprised," said Gilstrap. "Dang, they've (Jordan) got good players."

In girls' action, Jordan whipped Spencer 59-42.

The Spencer boys raised their record to 13-2. The Greenwaves lead Region 2-AAAA at 6-1. Interestingly, though, both of their losses were to a regional school, Kendrick. The first was in the Shaw Christmas Tournament (which doesn't count in the standings) and the other was less than a week later. Since then, Spencer has been on a roll, winning six in a row.

Although Spencer has yet to even establish that it is No. 1 in the city, Gilstrap believes his team is deserving of the ranking.

"Yeah, yeah, it's kind of nice. We might lose to Columbus High Friday night but we'll have a nice day at school tomorrow."

Jordan fell to 4-10 overall, 3-5 in the region.

David Harrison scored 30 points for Spencer and Daryl Ransom added 22.

"That's the first time I've ever scored that many," said Harrison. "Daryl and Marvin (Woods) were just getting the ball to me on the corners. They never went out to pick me up so I just made the shots."

Ransom had seven assists, Woods six. Woods also had six steals.

"Fifty-two points from two players is just what the doctor ordered," said Gilstrap. "We've got a lot of people hurt and sick.

"I also thought Donnie (Harris) and Tyrone (Mims) did a super job defensively on Tommy (Brown). They just kept him from getting his shots. He had 34 the other night and 31 one other game so I thought they did an excellent job."

Brown scored 16 points and had a powerful dunk that bent the rim.

"It's a good selling point," said Gilstrap, "for collapsible rims."

Cassandra Kegler scored 17 points and Tiwauna Dixon had 16 to lead the Jordan girls.

"They did an effective job on Tiwauna," said Jordan coach Jim Creek. "But then we went to Cassandra. They fouled her and she stepped up to the line and made the free throws."

Kegler made 11 of 14 free throw attempts. Dixon had 10 rebounds.

JORDAN (59) — Warren 2, Powell 9, Dixon 16, Jeffries 4, Bolden 1, M. Kegler 6, C. Kegler 17, Griffin 4.
SPENCER (42) — Palmer 9, Gibson 7, Foye 2, Lewis 12, Broadnax 6, Ransom 6, Mosely, Filmore.
Halftime — Jordan 27-16.

You can go the distance in tomorrow's marathon

• Last in a series
By John Henderson
Special to the Bayonet

Today you are perched upon one of the minor milestones of your life. Tomorrow afternoon you may feel the marathon was actually an anti-climax, a let-down, kind of like Christmas afternoon.

Really though, tomorrow you will discover "you can." You will run more than 26 miles. You can do it! Who cares how long it takes.

Once you finish you will have accomplished something that only a few thousand of our 204 million Americans have ever done.

Does that make you elite? Not really. But you are one of that singular breed who is able to plan, organize, perserve, execute, and achieve.

But what is really important here? No, running marathons will not give you immunity from heart disease. It is the heathly life style you have adopted that will give you a longer life.

Tomorrow when you hit the wall (and you will at some point) you have to be able to make yourself remember a few things:

- Marathoning is voluntary.
- You really did do everything possible to prepare.
- You really did not over carbo-load last night.
- You really do not look as pathetic as you feel.
- There really is a finish line (6 or 8 miles ahead).
- You really do not hate running, and yes, you will run another marathon next year.
- You CAN finish.

Of course this is based on these presumptions: You did volunteer — and you aren't doing this because your commanding officer is doing it; you did train well — and you aren't doing this on a wish; you did not pig-out — because pigs don't run marathons; you do not act pathetically — because hapless marathoners truly do look pathetic; you are headed toward the finish line — and you're not lost; you like to run — and don't consider it to be torture; and that you can finish emotionally, physically, and spiritually — otherwise you better pull out.

I do love to run, and so I say all to all those who ask why? My only recourse is "You gotta love it!" See you at the stadium.

Martial arts tourney set

Registration is from 8 to 11 a.m. and matches begin at 11 a.m.

The day-long competition will be divided into four areas: forms (a display of power and technique), sparring (controlled fighting), weapons (a display of weapons' techniques) and breaking (wood or concrete). Men, women and children will compete in separate divisions of rank, age and size.

Entry fee is $15. Admission for spectators is $2 for adults and $1 for children under age 12. All proceeds go to the Fort Benning Morale Support Activities Division's Youth Activities Branch.

Participation fees can be mailed to: Installation Morale, Welfare and Recreatio Fund, Community recreation Division, Physical Activity Branch, Fort Benning, Ga. 31095.

For more information, call Lt. Col. Jim Henkel at 544-2607 or 544-4112.

Hunters must turn in permits

Deer hunters must turn in the Fort Benning Deer Permit, FB Form 48, within 15 days of the close of deer season. Permits can be turned in at the Outdoor Equipment Rental Office in Building 1707 or in the drop box at the Deer Check Station, Building 5883, Harmony Church. All permits not received by Jan. 31 will be delinquent. For more information, call 544-6120.

Youth rifle club to meet

The Fort Benning Youth Activities Junior Rifle Club will conduct their first meeting of the spring basic course for new members Jan. 28 at 4:30 p.m.

Classes wil be at the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit indoor range behind the Infantry Museum on Bergen Street.

Anyon 12 years old or older interested in joining should contact MSgt. Hyder or Lt. Col. Wigger at 545-2343.

The cost is $30, which includes annual membership dues.

Arctic cold front sends shivers through post

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning struggled against Old Man Winter and freezing temperatures Monday, but was determined to continue with business as usual.

Treacherous driving, an increase in energy consumption and slight changes in some routines were the only indication that Fort Benning was experiencing inclement weather.

Sunday night precipitation covered post roads only to freeze from subzero gusty, northwest winds by Monday morning.

"Snow in the form of snow showers fell, and melted on the sidewalks and streets. The temperature dropped between 5 and 6 a.m. to 18 degrees because of a mass of cold air," Air Force Col. Jerry Scott, commander of the weather detachment at Lawson Army Airfield, said.

Drivers coming to work from homes off post were asked to delay reporting to work until 10 a.m. so that the roads could be sanded to make driving less hazardous.

Traffic on Interstate 185 and Dixie Road was backed up for miles as cars inched their way onto post.

"Traffic was built up due to poor road conditions and accidents but everything was cleared up by 10:30 a.m.," SSgt. Kevin Christophe, assistant operations sergeant for the military police, said.

According to Christophe there were a total of 18 reported traffic accidents, one of which was an ambulance that turned over returning from a call. There were no reported injuries.

TRAFFIC TIE-UP — The icy conditions Monday caused many traffic tie-ups on post. Allen Horne

Directorate of Engineering and Housing reported an early start Monday at sanding the roads with their five dump trucks to alleviate the icy conditions.

In addition to the DEH trucks, the 43rd Engineer Battalion also helped out.

The engineers supplyed trucks for sanding which delayed some of their construction projects.

The School Brigade reported a delay in some training but no major changes. According to Lt. Col. Dennis Harrison, deputy commander of TSB, "All field exercises did continue, but were not affected. However, in the evening we did bring the troops into common areas around warming (fire) barrels to prevent cold injuries."

In spite of the minor changes, more fuel and energy was used during the freeze. Rodney Carroll, a spokesman for the Energy Operations Office, said there was a 10 percent increase in electricity use.

In addition to electricity, fuel oil consumption was increased by 150 to 200 percent over normal usage.

"This increase is largely due to the fact that when it gets colder we have to switch from natural gas to fuel oil to generate steam heat. This keeps us from exceeding our natural gas supply," Carroll said.

Despite the cold, Fort Benning displayed amazing resiliency.

When asked to comment on hope for better weather in the future, Scott said, "At least spring is coming, that we can be sure of!"

Deaths epitomize changing face of space travel

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Seven pioneers died in a fiery explosion in America's Challenger spacecraft on Tuesday. Their deaths epitomize the changing face of U.S. space travel from blasting military men into the heavens to sending men and women from very divergent backgrounds into space to harness it for the good of all.

Astronauts of the old school were practically deified in author Tom Wolfe's book on the space program, "The Right Stuff." They were macho fighter pilots who lived for the thrill and danger of flight. These men were needed to blaze a trail for others to follow and their efforts were the deeds of heroes. But new heroes are filling their shoes.

Three of these seven pioneer-heroes in Tuesday's mishap were military men: Ellison Onizuka, Navy, and Francis Scobee and Michael Smith, Air Force. The four others were civilians, two being females: Sharon McAuliffe, a social studies teacher, Ronald McNair, a doctor of physics, Judith Resnik, a mission specialist trained on the delicate shuttle robot arm and Gregory Jarvis, an engineer. These were men and women from decidedly different backgrounds with a single aim: to further the efforts in harnessing space for man's use.

The question haunting this nation now is whether civilians should be included in space travel and exploration. Should our personnel in the space program be limited to military pilots, men who have "paid their dues" and are trained for the rigors of flight? Soldiers and sailors and airmen understand, upon joining the military, that there is a possibility they might die in the performance of their duties. But civilians dying?

Men, and if the legends are true, macho men, were the first to plunge forward into the frontier lands of America. These men found and perfected the routes into the then unknown wilderness that was once the major part of this country and mapped it and helped to make it safe for others. Progress marched on and these first pioneers were followed by doctors and lawyers, blacksmiths and farmers, builders and businessmen and the married men were joined, shoulder-to-shoulder, with their wives. The wilderness was transformed into a land that now feeds the better part of the world and is the mecca for those who want success and to better themselves. All of this goodness was bought with the blood, sweat, tears and even deaths of those pioneers, men and women alike, whose unique contributions were needed.

Military personnel, alone, cannot make space habitable. Space will only be made habitable and useable for everyone by our present-day male and female pioneers. Just as the conquerors of yesterday who forged a new nation, some of our conquerors of space will die, the teachers and physicists, the engineers and doctors, civilians and military, men and women.

Tuesday's accident was a tragedy. It was a tragedy for the seven pioneers aboard, their families, their nation and the world. Space, like the land and sea wildernesses, is there, waiting to be conquered, controlled and used for the good of all. Scobee, Smith, McAuliffe, Resnik, Onizuka, McNair and Jarvis are the Daniel Boone's, the Columbus', the Lewis' and Clark's, the Magellan's of our time.

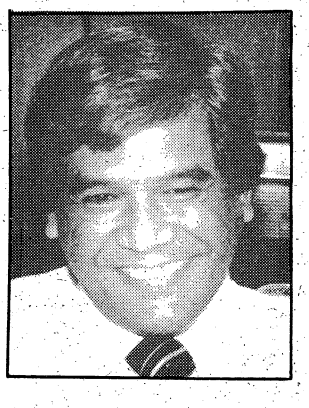
Various voices



Should civilians be allowed to be on-board members of our manned space flight program?

SP4 Terry Bridges, 10th Co., 1st Bn., TSB — "Yes. Under certain conditions. Just allowing a joyride would be improper conditions. The teacher going up would have allowed her to broaden other's horizons on space travel. To make the general populace understand what the space program is all about will take civilian participants.

Frank Kalakauskis Training Division, Tech Branch — "Yes. They should be involved if the military doesn't have that particular expertise. First priority should be with military requirements and aspects. Civilians should be involved in our space program if the military can't fill that specific need that a civilian can."

Pete Bush Training Division, Tech Branch — "Yes. I don't think the tragedy should stop civilians from being in the space program. It allows the common man to be involved. All they really know is what's on TV. By seeing a civilian going up into space people feel more involved."

1-58th mortarmen add 'twist' to live-fire exercise

By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

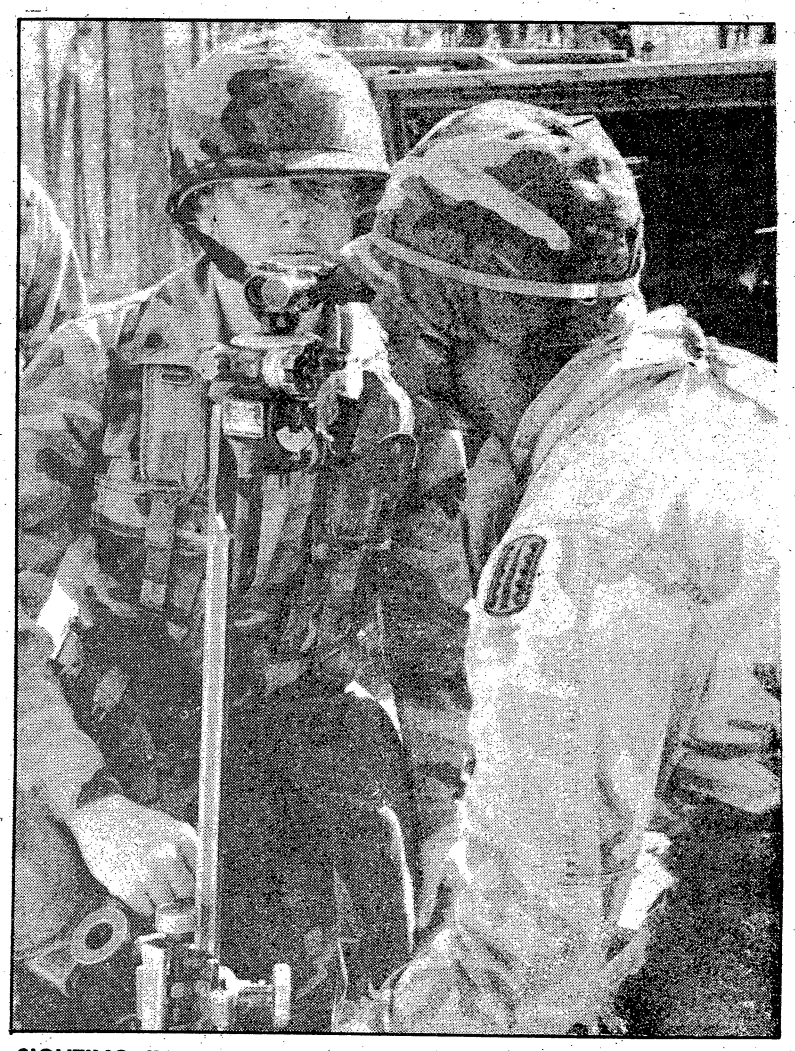
Mortarmen from the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade added a new twist to an otherwise routine live fire at Fort Benning last week.

The heavy mortar platoon headed to Ferguson Range for ground mounted live firing. As part of the exercise, the platoon fired several illumination rounds for Air Force pilots flying night missions.

According to 1st Lt. Ernest Davis, mortar platoon leader, the mortarmen normally support their battalion with indirect fire against enemy targets and rarely get to rehearse night illumination.

"It happened by chance that we had already planned the exercise," Davis said. "This offered a chance for more realistic training and helped out the Air Force as well."

The exercise was good practice for the upcoming deployment to the National Training Center, Davis said.



"When the 197th deploys to the National Training Center in February, the mortar platoon will be providing illumination for night offensive attacks," he said.

"We use 20 of the 40 illumination rounds we are allot ed per year on this exercise, to insure that we will provide the right formation for illumination."

Interrogators offer classes on questioning foreign soldiers

By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

Editor's note — Security reasons forbid identifying the interrogators by name or publishing photos of them.

While standing in line at the dining facility, you overheard the laughter of two soldiers standing ahead of you. Unfortunately, tuning your ear to their conversation won't let you in on the joke . . . unless you understand Polish.

Chances are that these soldiers are trained Army interrogators. The 179th Military Intelligence Detachment has nine interrogators whose responsibilities vary from providing units with classes and training, to providing them with interrogator skills during field training exercises.

The section has language capabilities in Arabic, Polish, Hungarian and Spanish.

"Our language capabilities can change depending on the personnel we have," said an Army warrant officer in charge of the interrogators. "We pick up or lose languages as soldiers come and go."

The MI soldiers provide support to the 197th Infantry Brigade in several ways. For example, they conduct Geneva Convention briefings to inform soldiers of their rights under the Geneva Convention should they be detained or captured. The information also covers how soldiers can and can not treat enemy POW's.

Also, the interrogators can provide units with area briefings about the cultures and politics of a particular country. This information is important to a unit when it deploys to a foreign nation.

When the soldiers aren't busy with their commitments they direct their energy towards maintaining their language abilities.

"The Army is aware that language skills are perishable," the OIC said. "The biggest problem in maintaining a language is having the opportunity to utilize it. It's hard to maintain proficiency if you don't have anyone to talk to."

To remedy that, the soldiers use tapes and written materials to practice. They also capitalize on opportunities to go TDY for training. Three of the interrogators will be attending a two-week seminar at Brigham young University in Salt Lake City, Utah.

The MI soldiers noted that it is important to maintain their interrogator skills as well. An interrogator can work at a tactical level as a translator while working with foreign soldiers. On the other hand, the soldier could be providing translations of written documents and information at a strategic level.

Exercise prepares engineers for FTX

By Leslie Butler
586th Engineer Company

36th Eng.

The 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) recently conducted a four day platoon training exercise.

The objective was to strengthen the weaknesses discovered during or Army Readiness Testing and Evaluation Program exercise last October, and to prepare the two bridge platoons for the upcoming company-level field training exercise in February. This PTX was the first of a series of Platoon and Company-level exercises.

They are geared toward increasing individual proficiency in Skill Qualification Tests and Common Task Testing, as well as increasing unit performance in collective ARTEP tasks.

The bridge platoons conducted route and river reconnaissance missions to determine a main avenue of approach and a suitable position for a Class-60 Ribbon Bridge on the Chattahoochee River.

Additionally, they placed obstacles, consisting of a 25meter triple standard concertina wire obstacle and a 30 by 60 meter hasty protective minefield, along a suspected enemy avenue of approach.

The two platoons then performed rafting and bridging operations under various conditions. They conducted daytime rafting operations at Engineer Landing using a five-day, Class 60 Ribbon Bridge Raft. ARTEP standards require the raft to be assembled in 20 minutes.

Both platoons surpassed the standard time by approximately five minutes.

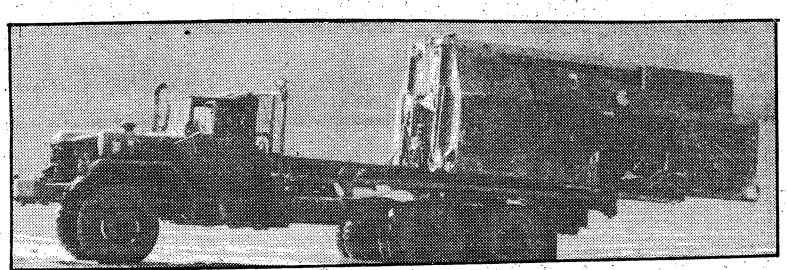
During the night-time operations phase, 1st Platoon installed a Class 60 ribbon bridge across the Chattahoochee River at Bradley Landing.

The following night 2nd Platoon conducted rafting operations at Engineer Landing, using a five-bay Class 60 raft.

Night operations bring a different aspect to bridging and rafting. Safety becomes a critical factor, because the assembly crew and the boat operators' vision is impaired due to limited visibility.

ARTEP standards allow 50 percent more time to accomplish the missions during limited visibility periods. Both platoons were able to surpass the standards on the night bridging/rafting operations.

This PTX was an example of the "Power Down" theory, in which training is planned down to the lowest level.



It concentrated on squad and platoon level training incorporated with individual training. The entire PTX was an excellent learning experience for everyone involved and was considered a successful training exercise.

The 586th Engineer Company (AFB) is part of the 67th Maintenance Battalion and 36th Engineer Company (Combat).

Capt. Davis assumes command of 533rd

By Joe F. Ferrer

The 533rd Transportation Company (Med Trk) changed unit commanders on Jan. 17.

Capt. Shelley A. Richardson relinquished command to Capt. Jeffrey J. Davis after thirteen months as the company commander.

Unit soldiers were standing tall during the ceremony, which was sponsored by the 67th Maintenance Battalion Commander, Lt. Col. Thomas A. Hooper.

The 533rd Transportation Company began as a quartermaster truck company. Constituted on February 10, 1936 as Company A of the 48th Quartermaster Regiment, it was not until June 30, 1947 that it was redesignated as the 533rd Transportation Company (Med Trk).

Assigned to the 67th Maintenance Battalion in September 1968, the unit presently provides line-haul transportation support to the United States Army Infantry Center and School and numerous installations and activities nationwide.

Recent awards include Army Chief of Staff's Maintenance Excellence Award for 1983 and FORSCOM Maintenance Excellence Awards for 1984 and 1985.

"I've really been looking forward to this day," said Davis. "I feel very fortunate and honored to command the only Transportation Truck Company on Fort Benning and one of the best in the Army."

586th builds air assault site for Rangers

By Thomas A. Perry
586th Engr. Co.

The 586th Engineer Company (AFB) provided a vast array of support through its Ranger Support Element (RSE) section for recent Ranger ARTEPs.

The RSE built a mock-up rehearsal site, while providing transportation to the Ranger companies on a 24 hour basis.

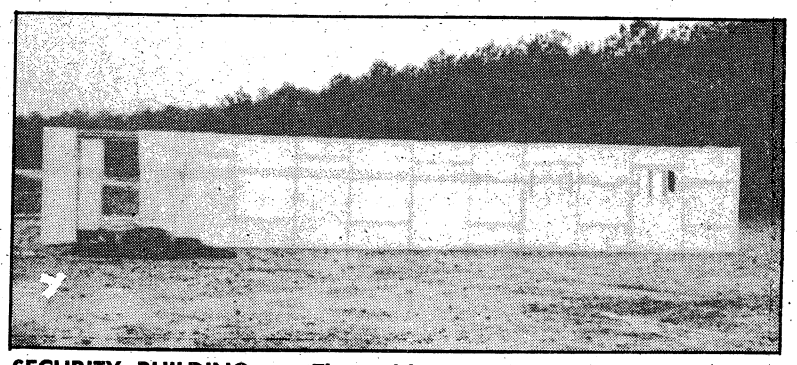
In preparing for the ARTEP, the Rangers called upon the 586th's RSE to build a security compound at Todd Field to be used as an air assault rehearsal site during the training period.

The site consisted of 40' x 30' security building, two 20' observation towers, and three 8' x 10' bunker entrances. Before these buildings were constructed, a D7 dozer was used to clear away timber and shrubbery in an area equivalent to three football fields.

Through the RSE's technical competence and vast knowledge of basic engineering skills, the site was completed in one day.

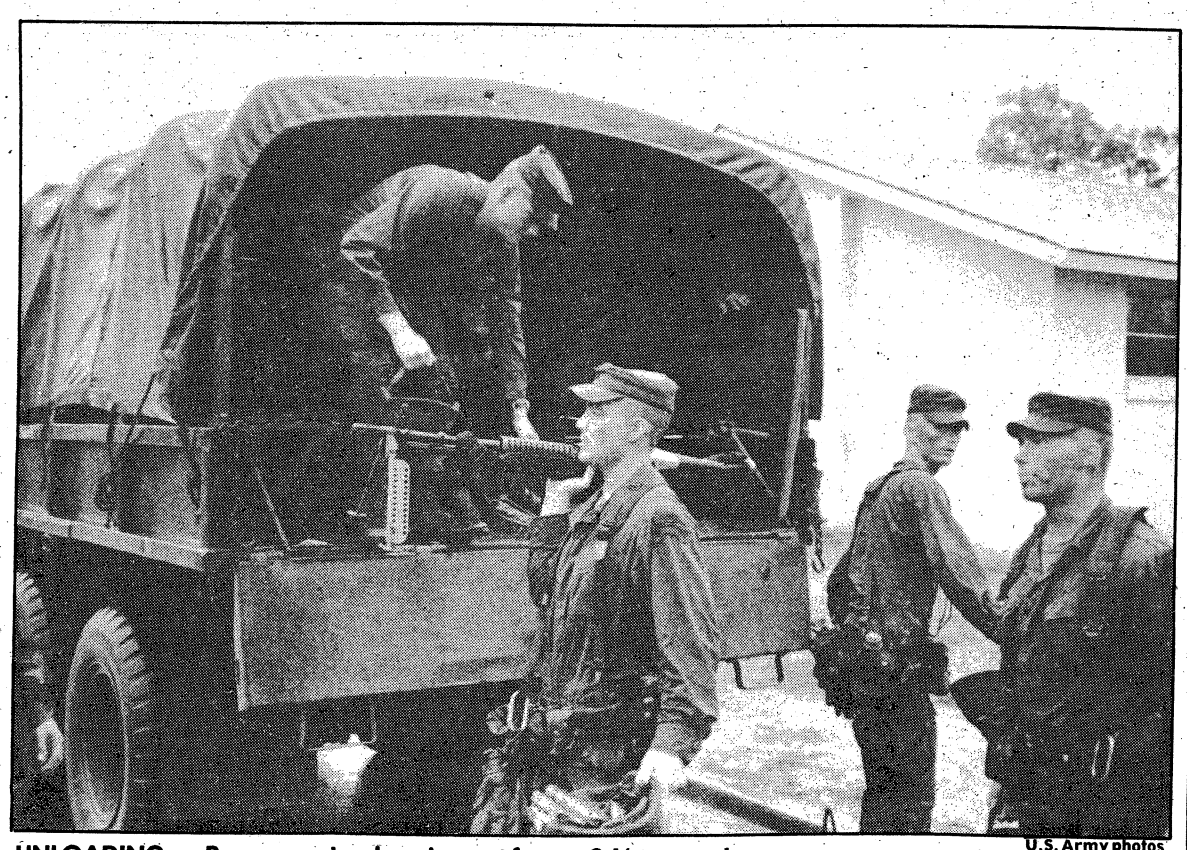
During the actual ARTEP time frame, the RSE provided transportation to the various training and evaluation sites. Sixteen 2 1/2 ton trucks from the 67th Maintenance Battalion were used.

36th Eng.



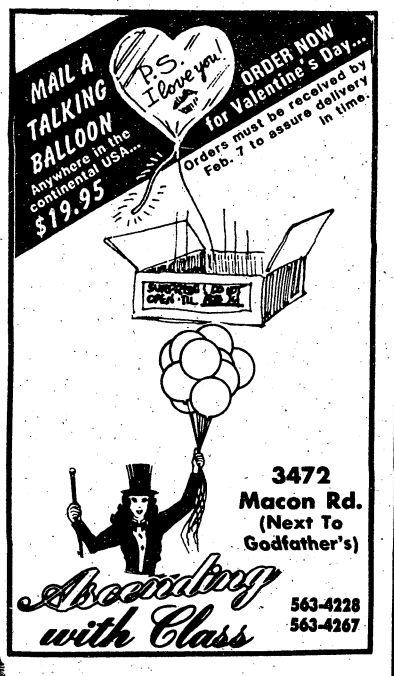
Throughout this week's long support mission, the 2 1/2 ton trucks were on the road by 7 every morning. A normal day of support found six vehicles at live fire ranges from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m., while another truck was shuttling platoons through the security compound rehearsal area at Todd Field.

The remaining eight trucks would be waiting at Fryar Drop Zone for airborne missions until 3 a.m. hours the next day. One vehicle always remained behind, without commitment, in case another vehicle broke down.



Over 40,000 accident-free miles were driven in support of the Ranger Platoon ARTEP. The hours of support were long, cold and demanding, but once again the 586th Engineer Company "made it happen" and helped the Rangers conduct a productive and successful ARTEP.

FRAME UP — The wooden frames acted as a simulation of a bunker entrance which was to be assaulted by Rangers.



SECURITY BUILDING — The soldiers from the 586th Engineer Company built this security building for the air assault rehearsal site.

UNLOADING — Rangers unload equipment from a 2 ½ ton truck.

'Seabees' find ample training opportunities on post

By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

197th

What can sailors do for training in land-locked Columbus, Ga.?

For one thing, the Reserve Naval Mobile Construction Battalion (Seabees) provide skilled labor for many construction projects at Fort Benning and in the Columbus area.

Presently, the Seabees are helping Detachment 4, 507th Tactical Air Control Wing complete the remodeling of a motor pool and offices that the detachment will soon occupy.

The detachment now works out of offices at the 197th Infantry Brigade and has motor pool facilities at the brigade's Headquarters Company motor pool.

According to Maj. Nicholas Sahm, the 197th Brigade Air Force liaison officer, the move to the motor pool in Harmony Church will be a more convenient location for the unit because in addition to supporting the 197th Infantry Brigade, the detachment also provides support to the 2nd Battalion, 10th Mountain Division and the 3rd Battalion, 75th Rangers.

The buildings at the motor pool, unused since about 1963, need a lot of updating and remodeling before the airmen can move their operation to the site.

"We could have gone through Army channels to get the repairs done," Sahm said, "but it wasn't very high on the priority list."

So at the suggestion of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, the Air Force sought the help of the Navy to get the necessary repairs done.

According to Petty Officer Tim Ellerbee, assistant officer in charge of the Seabees unit and a civilian employee at DEH, these projects provide meaningful training for the Seabees while contributing to the needs of the military.

For projects such as the Air Force's motor pool, Ellerbee said "the funding is available for the materials, but to get the labor they go on a waiting list at DEH. The Seabees can provide the labor and a way to get the job done sooner."

The reservists' skills include carpentry, wiring, plumbing, and heavy equipment operations.

"If a project is justified as meaningful training and is within our capabilities, we'll do it," Ellerbee said.

The bottom line is that the Seabees, by offering their skills to such projects, spend their monthly weekend drills doing productive work. In addition, the group that tasks the reservists gets a job done well by professional, skilled workers.

Ammo NCOs provide support wherever needed in USARSA

By Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas

USARSA

An ammunition supply NCO's job requires much coordination, flexible hours and safety awareness.

On a daily basis, supporting training at the U.S. Army School of the Americas could mean distributing ammunition to five classes at different locations throughout post ranges.

"We distribute ammo to classes at different ranges conducting consecutive training, which justifies having an assistant," said SSgt. Pedro Delgadillo, weapons and ammunition section NCOIC, USARSA.

Delgadillo and assistant, Sgt. Jerry Moore, provide ammunition support for all training at USARSA. Working for the director of support, Delgadillo maintains a certain sense of pride in his work.

"As an arms room sergeant in Panama, I used to put in some long hours, sometimes working until 1 a.m. When I have to be at a range here to deliver ammo, working from 5:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. and sometimes on weekends, no big deal," Delgadillo said.

"We provide USARSA weapons coordination and ammo support during training on some 25 ranges," he said.

Working in a bilingual environment comes easy for the Dominican Republic native. "A language barrier doesn't exist working with multi-national instructors and students," he said.

Among Delgadillo's other duties are giving ammunition safety and handling classes to instructors. These munitions include blasting caps, smoke grenades, claymore mines, mortar rounds, simulators and the Light Anti-tank Weapon (LAW).

67th Maint. dining facility vies for Connelly

Thad Roberson

SLICE ABOVE—Sp4 Scott Wilson makes precision cuts in preparing lunch at the 67th Maintenance Battalion Dining Facility.

By Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Competition for the Phillip A. Connelly Award is currently underway with 67th Maintenance Battalion Dining Facility representing Fort Benning in the large dining facility category of TRADOC level competition.

Winners at the TRADOC level will move on to army-wide competition.

Preparing for such competition is an on-going experience rather than one week of hard work.

Inspections are an important part of the 67th's mission to prepare the culinary delights that are served on a daily basis.

Sgt. Laura M. MelBorne, food service personnel, said that "Numerous inspections are conducted on a quarterly, monthly, and daily basis. However, our biggest inspector/critic is 1st Lt. Mina Fagan, Food Services Officer.

Fagan tastes the food daily to ensure that all products are of high quality and within standards established by the Department of the Army.

The food service personnel of the 67th Maintenance Battalion combine their natural talents with years of experience to create the quality products served in their facility.

"We have the people and experience necessary to win the Connelly Award. The only thing we must do is maintain our motivation and put our job knowledge to work," said Sgt. Gerald A. Gross, food service personnel.

Post driving privileges can be revoked

Army Regulation 190-5, Motor Vehicle Traffic Supervison, specifies that "the operation of a privately owned vehicle on a military installation is a conditional privilege extended by the installation commander." As a privilege, it is subject to either administrative suspension or revocation for cause by an installation commander or his representative.

While such action is normally based on the accumulation of traffic points for a series of violations, the point system "is not intended to interfere in any way with the reasonable exercise of an installation commander's prerogative to issue, suspend, revoke or deny installation driving privileges for cause without regard to point assessments."

Whenever individuals demonstrate a total disregard for safe driving habits, they can expect to have their privileges withdrawn.

Under the provisions of U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 190-5, Vehicle Traffic Regulations, suspension of driving privileges is also appropriate for individuals operating vehicles without a valid drivers license, post registration, insurance or defensive driving card.

The Military Police may not be able to get the violators completely off the road, but at least we can and will get them out from behind the wheel.

To drive or not to drive, that is the question. (PMO)

Securing property can prevent theft

The following incidents were reported in the housing areas last week.

Bouton Heights/Davis Hills had one housebreaking and one obscene phone call.

McGraw Manor had one report of prowler curfew violator.

Custer Terrace had one domestic-assistance rendered.

North Main Post had a report of prowler.

Keep up the good work crime fighters. Making sure your property is secured can make it a good year for Fort Benning and a bad year for the bad guys. (PMO)

Outdoor Rental Shop has cure for the blues

Laurie J. Hill

CAN YOU CANOE? — Canoes are just one of the items available at the Outdoor Equipment Rental Shop.

Variety of recreation equipment means there's something for all

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Outdoor Rental Equipment Shop has something for anyone suffering with a case of the boredom blues.

The shop located in Building 1707 on Gillespie Street has a wide variety of recreational equipment for everyone.

Tim Brown, manager of Outdoor Recreations said that "The four acre lot is full of rental items such as 16 foot campers, motorcycle trailers, barbecue grills and tents of all sizes, just to name a few."

"Our most popular rental items are our boats and motors. We also take care of a lot of hunting licenses," Brown continued.

The equipment is available for all active duty, retired and civil service personnel.

"We have tickets for the Atlanta Hawks basketball games as well as discount tickets for the Columbus area movie theaters. Come visit us and see all that we have to offer," Brown invited.

ENABLER

en●a●bler - A relative, spouse, or close friend of someone suffering from alcoholism or drug dependency who covers-up, condones, or accepts the problems that come with drinking or drugging, usually because they care about the person but don't understand that alcoholism is a disease. The enabler means well but is caught up in the situation as much as the alcoholic or addict. Enabling behavior only makes the situation worse.

A GOOD PART-TIME JOB IS HARD TO FIND.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Did you know that one out of three Americans now "moonlights" to help make ends meet?

But as a returning veteran, you don't have to "moonlight." If you want an extra income, just "weekend" once a month with your local Army Reserve unit.

For instance, an E-5 with four years' experience now earns over $130 for a weekend's work. Over $2,000 a year, counting two weeks annual training pay.

As a Reservist, you also get PX privileges, low-cost life insurance, and retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have an extra income waiting when you get home?

It can be arranged. See your in-service recruiter. Or call 1-800-USA-ARMY. Overseas, write Army Reserve Opportunities, P.O. Box 7717, Clifton, NJ 07015.

Act fast. Good part-time jobs are scarce.

ARMY RESERVE. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Civil War guns on display at post museum

By Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Our guns are the kind of guns to have. I have got as good a gun as there is and I can hit a man three-quarters of a mile with it."

This was the pride displayed by J. C. Nobel when referring to his 50 Caliber Sharpshooters Rifle which is currently on display at the U.S. Army Infantry Museum.

Nobel, of Albion, N.Y., was a member of Company G, 1st Battalion, New York State Sharpshooters from August 1862 to June 1865.

Included in the collection is the bullet mold and powder flask that Noble used and six letters he'd written during his military service.

These letters continually reflect his pride in the thirteen-pound weapon.

In a letter to his wife in November 1862, he wrote, "We are the only company in the Regiment that has got telescope rifles."

To view the Union Sharpshooter's 50 caliber rifle, "the kind of gun to have," the Museum hours of operation are Tuesday thru Friday, 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.; Saturday and Sunday from 12:30 to 4:30 p.m. and open Mondays for special tours only.

MILPERCEN explains change in method of promoting SSgts

Beginning March 1, 1986, the Army will change the way non-commissioned officers are promoted from staff sergeant to sergeant first class, according to a Military Personnel Center spokesman.

In the past, promotion boards selected SSgts for promotion and the selectees were placed on a standing list which was sequenced solely by seniority in current grade. Every month a number of promotions to SFC were made based on the sequential order of the standing list.

The MOS of the soldiers promoted from the list had no bearing on the order in which they were promoted — the order depended only on their sequence number.

In the future, each MOS will have its own sequence list, and promotion to SFC will be announced by MOS-unique sequence numbers.

"This change in policy was made to more effectively perform the function of "Force Alignment" by putting the right people into the right place to meet the Army's needs," the spokesman said.

For the last several years the Army has been selecting soldiers for promotion according to projected vacancies in each MOS. However, each promotion board has to select soldiers for vacancies projected to occur over a 12 month period.

Some MOS's which have projected vacancies late in the 12 month period may actually be overstrength at the time that promotion of soldiers selected by the board begins, the spokesman said. Since past lists were not sequenced by MOS, the senior SSgt was promoted the first month the list was used, regardless of whether a need existed in his/her MOS at that time.

This situation resulted in MOS's which were balanced becoming overstrength. Since the Army is limited to specific strength levels for each grade,every promotion in a skill which has no current vacancy results in a shortage in another skill.

The new policy will allow promotions to SFC to be allocated on a monthly basis by MOS. For example, if the first vacancy in a particular MOS does not occur until the eighth month the results of a board are used, the first promotion in that MOS will not occur unil the eighth month.

Since MOS selection objectives are calculated to fill projected vacancies for a specified period of time, each MOS selection list should be exhausted by a predetermined month. Exceptions would only occur if authorizations changed after the objectives were set or if projected losses do not materialize.

Psychologist suggests ways to build child's self-esteem

Growing up is hard enough, but in a society where beauty, brains and wealth are praised, frequently children can think they're unworthy and put themselves down.

Psychologist James Dobson says there are strategies by which a parent can instill confidence and self-worth — even in boys and girls who are under siege by their peers.

Dobson outlines key methods for helping your youngsters trust themselves:

- Make sure your children know you value and respect them. Be careful not to criticize in front of them and take the time to play and talk with them.
- Teach them a no-knock policy. Children who feel they don't measure up for some reason will admit it freely. "I'm dumb" or "I know I'm stupid" are common comments. "If you put your feelings into words, they become solidified as fact in your own mind," Dobson cautions.
- Because it's a competitive world out there, your child must learn how to compete, and it's the parent's job to help teach that lesson. By the same token, you can instruct your youngster of the true values of life: love for mankind, integrity and truthfulness.
- It does the child's self esteem no good if you don't discipline him when it's needed. "Parents are the symbols of justice and order and a child wonders why they let him get away with doing harmful things if they really love him," the psychologist points out.
- Keep an eye on the classroom to make sure your efforts at building self esteem are reinforced, not counteracted.

Study cites ways to improve NCO development system

A study of the professional development of noncommissioned officers has resulted in numerous findings and recommendations, many of which the Army chief of staff already has approved for implementation.

A study group convened last June at the Direction of Army Chief of Staff John A. Wickham Jr.

The group evaluated the NCO professional development system by identifying its strengths and weaknesses based on the present and future needs of the Army, according to the group's charter.

Professional development consists of three complementary elements: training, education and experience.

Results from the study indicate that, on the whole, the NCO corps remains strong, with a basically sound professional development system. "Our message is basically a good news story," said Brig. Gen. William Ganey, one of the group's co-directors.

"The NCO corps is in great shape: connfident, professional, competent and committed. And I might add that they have the potential to get even better with the input of bright youngsters who have been recruited in the last five years. They are tomorrow's NCOs."

The study group was unique in that it was co-chaired by a general officer and a combat arms sergeant major and staffed primarily by combat arms, combat support and combat service suppot NCOs assigned on temporary duty.

The group achieved four major accomplishments, said CSM Oscar L. Barker, the group's other co-director. First, by evaluating the entire NCO professional development system against the Army's needs, they were able to decide how best to prepare NCOs to meet those needs.

Many of the recommendations resulting from this evaluation were developed to be effective during the 1986-2000 time frame.

Second, the group created an awareness about NCO professional development throughout the Army by contacting senior commanders, NCOs and enlisted personnel worldwide and gathering informaion concerning the subject. The very existence of the group caused soldiers in the field and at higher headquarters to assess the system and their role in it, said Lt. Col. Clifford Bernath, a spokesman for the group.

The group's third major accomplishment was to create a mechanism for continuous evaluation of NCO professional development. That mechanism, which has been approved in concept by the chief of staff, is expected to take the form of a Department of the Army NCO professional development committee to be co-chaired by deputy chief of staff for personnel and the deputy chief of staff for operations. The sergeant major of the Army also will serve on the committee. All three have major responsibilities for professional development of soldiers.

Finally, the study group provided a formal means for keeping professional development on track. That "architecture" for the future consists of an NCO professional development philosophy that bases professional development on the needs of the Army. It also consists of all the group's recommendations, to include formation of the Department of the Army NCO Professional Development Committee.

As part of the study effort, the group reviewed Army regulations, field manuals and other documents that direct, define and imply NCO duties. Based on that research, the group developed a list describing what the Army wants its NCOs to be and what skills, knowledge and attributes they need to perform their duties. (ARNEWS)

Boy Scout code of conduct parallels teachings of Jesus

By Chaplain James L. Langford
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Sunday, Feb. 2, 1986, is Boy Scout Sunday. This affords us an opportunity to try and understand what life was like for Jesus during his adolescent years.

"Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." (Luke 2:52). We've heard a great deal about Jesus, the man. How he lived. What he preached. The miracles he performed. But what about Jesus, the boy! What was he like? What kind of things did he do and enjoy?

The Bible doesn't tell us much about these young years of his life, but we can be assured he was all boy. He loved life and I'm sure, did many of the same things other boys his age did. He would run, play games, compete with his peers, try hard to win and many times did win, other times he might come in second, third or even last.

Jesus knew you can't always be a winner, but that you can try to do your best, give it your all. In a real sense, that makes you a winner; you participated, did your best and in your heart know and have the satisfaction of having self-worth.

If there had been such an organization as Boy Scouts in his day, I feel sure that Jesus would have been a part of it. Jesus was a strong, rugged individual who lived most of his life outdoors.

One nine-year-old boy was complaining to his father. He said, "I'm tired of always being told what to do, someone is always giving me orders." "Well", replied his father, "that's the way life is. When you are young, it's your parents, then your teachers in school, then your employer where you work, then your wife after you marry and there is always the law, which you must obey or suffer the consequences for not obeying. In short, son, that's the way life is and it's something you must face, accept and adjust to."

The boy thought for a moment and replied, "If that's life, then I've had it." That young boy expressed a feeling that many have experienced at various stages of life. It begins early, therefore, it is important to beome realistic about life.

Life is real and must be lived one day at a time and somehow, we must learn to put into practice the well known prayer that teaches us to accept and adjust to that which we can't change, change what lives within our power to change, but seek wisdom that enables us to know the difference.

The four areas of development for Jesus applies to all of us. That is, he grew in stature (physically), he grew in wisdom (intellectually), he grew in favor with God (spiritually), he grew in favor with man (socially). These qualities are necessary for a well developed life. There is no better time in life to realize and understand this than while you are young and maturing.

NCO youngest master sergeant in German army

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Thomas Westhoff, the German Army's liaison noncommissioned officer at Benning, is a typical infantryman at the home of the infantry, except for one atypical fact: he's a master sergeant at the ripe age of 29 and has held the rank since he was 25.

"Most NCOs in the German Army are in their mid-thirties before they are promoted to master sergeant. I was told that I was probably the youngest one in the Germany Army," Westhoff said.

Westhoff arrived here July 4, 1983 and will be here until the summer of 1987. He serves as the NCO half of the German liaison team officered by Lt. Col. Fred Schulz. Schulz was Westhoff's battalion commander in Germany and hand picked the young sergeant for the job of liaison NCO.

"I take care of all administrative duties in the office and, of course, fill in for Lt. Col. Schulz when he is away from the office," Westhoff said.

The master sergeant said the German Army's enlisted rank structure is different from the U.S. Army's.

"We have nine enlisted and NCO ranks. Like your army, we have E-1 through E-4, which are the enlisted ranks. But our corporal is an E-5, unlike your E-4 ranked corporal. Our E-6 is a staff corporal and E-7 is a sergeant. The rank of E-8 and E-9 are like your army's, though, being master sergeant and sergeant major," he said.

Another difference is the German way of training and schools concept.

"For infantry, we have a 12 week basic and advanced training cycle. The first six weeks are basic infantry skills. The second six weeks the infantry soldiers go to their companies and the company cadre give them all training during this time.

"The soldiers and cadre stay together after graduation and serve together as a unit during the soldier's entire period of service. This is much like your Army's COHORT concept," he said.

Westhoff stressed the fact that this training concept really bonds the soldiers and leaders together.

"The cadre know exactly what each soldier is taught and, this way, the soldier knows exactly what is expected of him," Westhoff said.

Westhoff feels the German Army gives its NCOs a lot of responsibility. "A sergeant (E-7) is the commander of our Marder Infantry Fighting Vehicle. He has to lead an E-5 or E-6 rifle team leader and seven enlisted soldiers.

"The sergeant-commander makes the decision on whether to stay with the vehicle during an operation when the infantry stops to fight or to lead the dismounted element," he said.

"In addition, in an infantry company there are three platoons. One platoon is led by an officer. The other two platoons are led by NCOs who have the same platoon leader resposibility as officers," Westhoff said.

Westhoff, who has been in the German Army since October 1973, was trained as a mechanized infantryman. He said one of the highlights of his career was going through the U.S. Army Airborne School, where he was the honor graduate.

"The course was very physically demanding. I can't describe the feeling of hanging under a parachute. It was great," he said.

Westhoff

Westhoff is at Fort Benning with his wife, Claudie, and their 2 and one-half year old son, Sebastian. They live on post and enjoy being involved in community affairs.

An avid runner, Westhoff was last seen in action last Saturday, finishing the 13.1 mile Infantry Half Marathon.

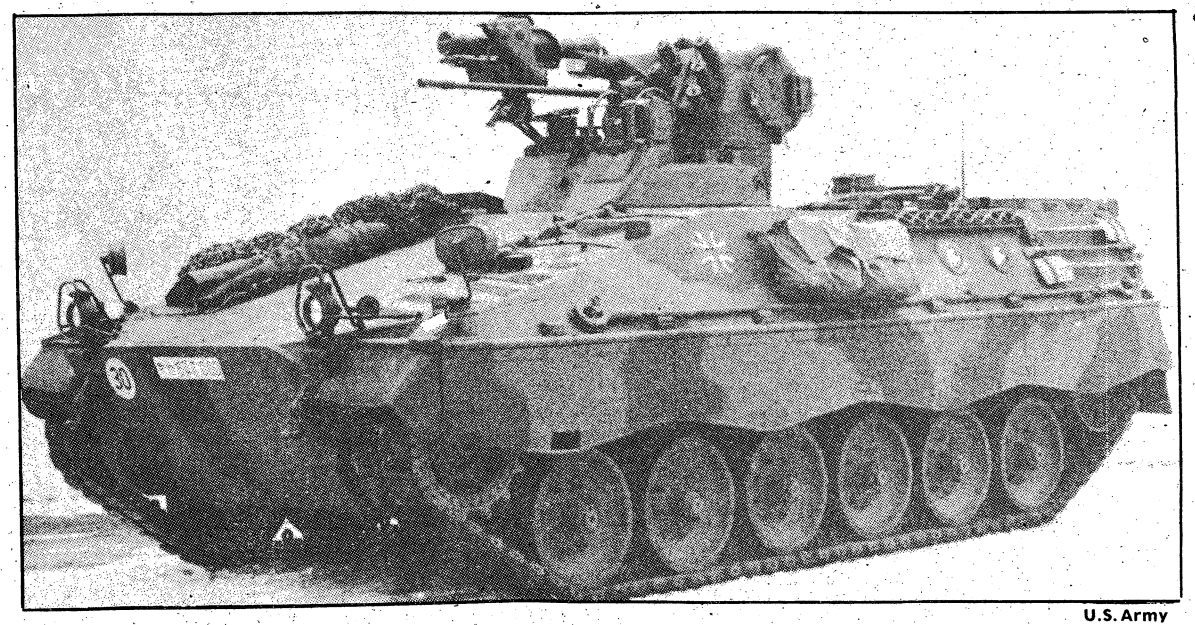
Marder means firepower, high mobility protection

By Fred Schulz
and Thomas Westhoff
German Liaison Office

Editor's Note: The following article was prepared by the German Army liaison office for the Bayonet.

The Infantry Fighting Vehicle Marder is the combat vehicle of the German "Panzergrenadiers."

It provides firepower, high mobility and collective protection against nuclear, biological and chemical contamination. Because of this protection, its structure of welded armor and its night fighting capability the infantry squad has a high rate of survivability. The German Army is equipped with 2,136 IFV Marders.



The Marder carries a crew of nine men, composed of an E-7 vehicle commander, an E-5 or E-6 squad leader and 7 enlisted soldiers. The vehicle weighs 28.9 tons and has a maximum speed of 47 miles per hour. The Marder has a cruising range of 320 miles with a fuel capacity of 172 gallons.

Armament on the fighting vehicle includes a 20mm chain gun, one PARS MILAN anti-tank missile, two coaxial machineguns, five 9mm submachine guns, five 7.62mm rifles and one 44mm light anti-tank weapon.

In the attack Marder units fight mounted as long as terrain and enemy situation permit. In wooded areas the IFV's accompany dismounted mech infantry to support the infantry's attack with automatic weapons or cover forest lanes and open terrain. In built-up areas the mechnized infantry dismounts for attacks with assault groups while IFV's provide the covering element for reinforcement forces.

In the defense the IFV Marders support the rifle teams to wear down the enemy at an early stage. Their positions are located forward of, next to, between or behind the prepared positions of the dismounted element.

The German Mechanized Infantry fights in all types of combat. Rapid alternation of mounted and dismounted combat characterizes its employment. It always fights with the support of its infantry fighting vehicles.

Molloy races to second Infantry Marathon victory

By Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If winning is contagious, runners may consider staying close to Joe Molloy, winner of two consecutive Infantry Marathons held at Fort Benning, Ga.

Molloy bettered his marathon time by a minute as he crossed the finish line of this year's 26 mile course at 2:26:46 less than two minutes before Jeff Lanydon who finished at 2:28:02.

In a close race Molloy overtook Lanydon at the 23-mile marker and extended that lead within the last mile.

In a race where over 179 people participated, Virginia Yates claimed first place in the female category of the marathon with a time of 3:11:51.

She had placed second in the previous two years.

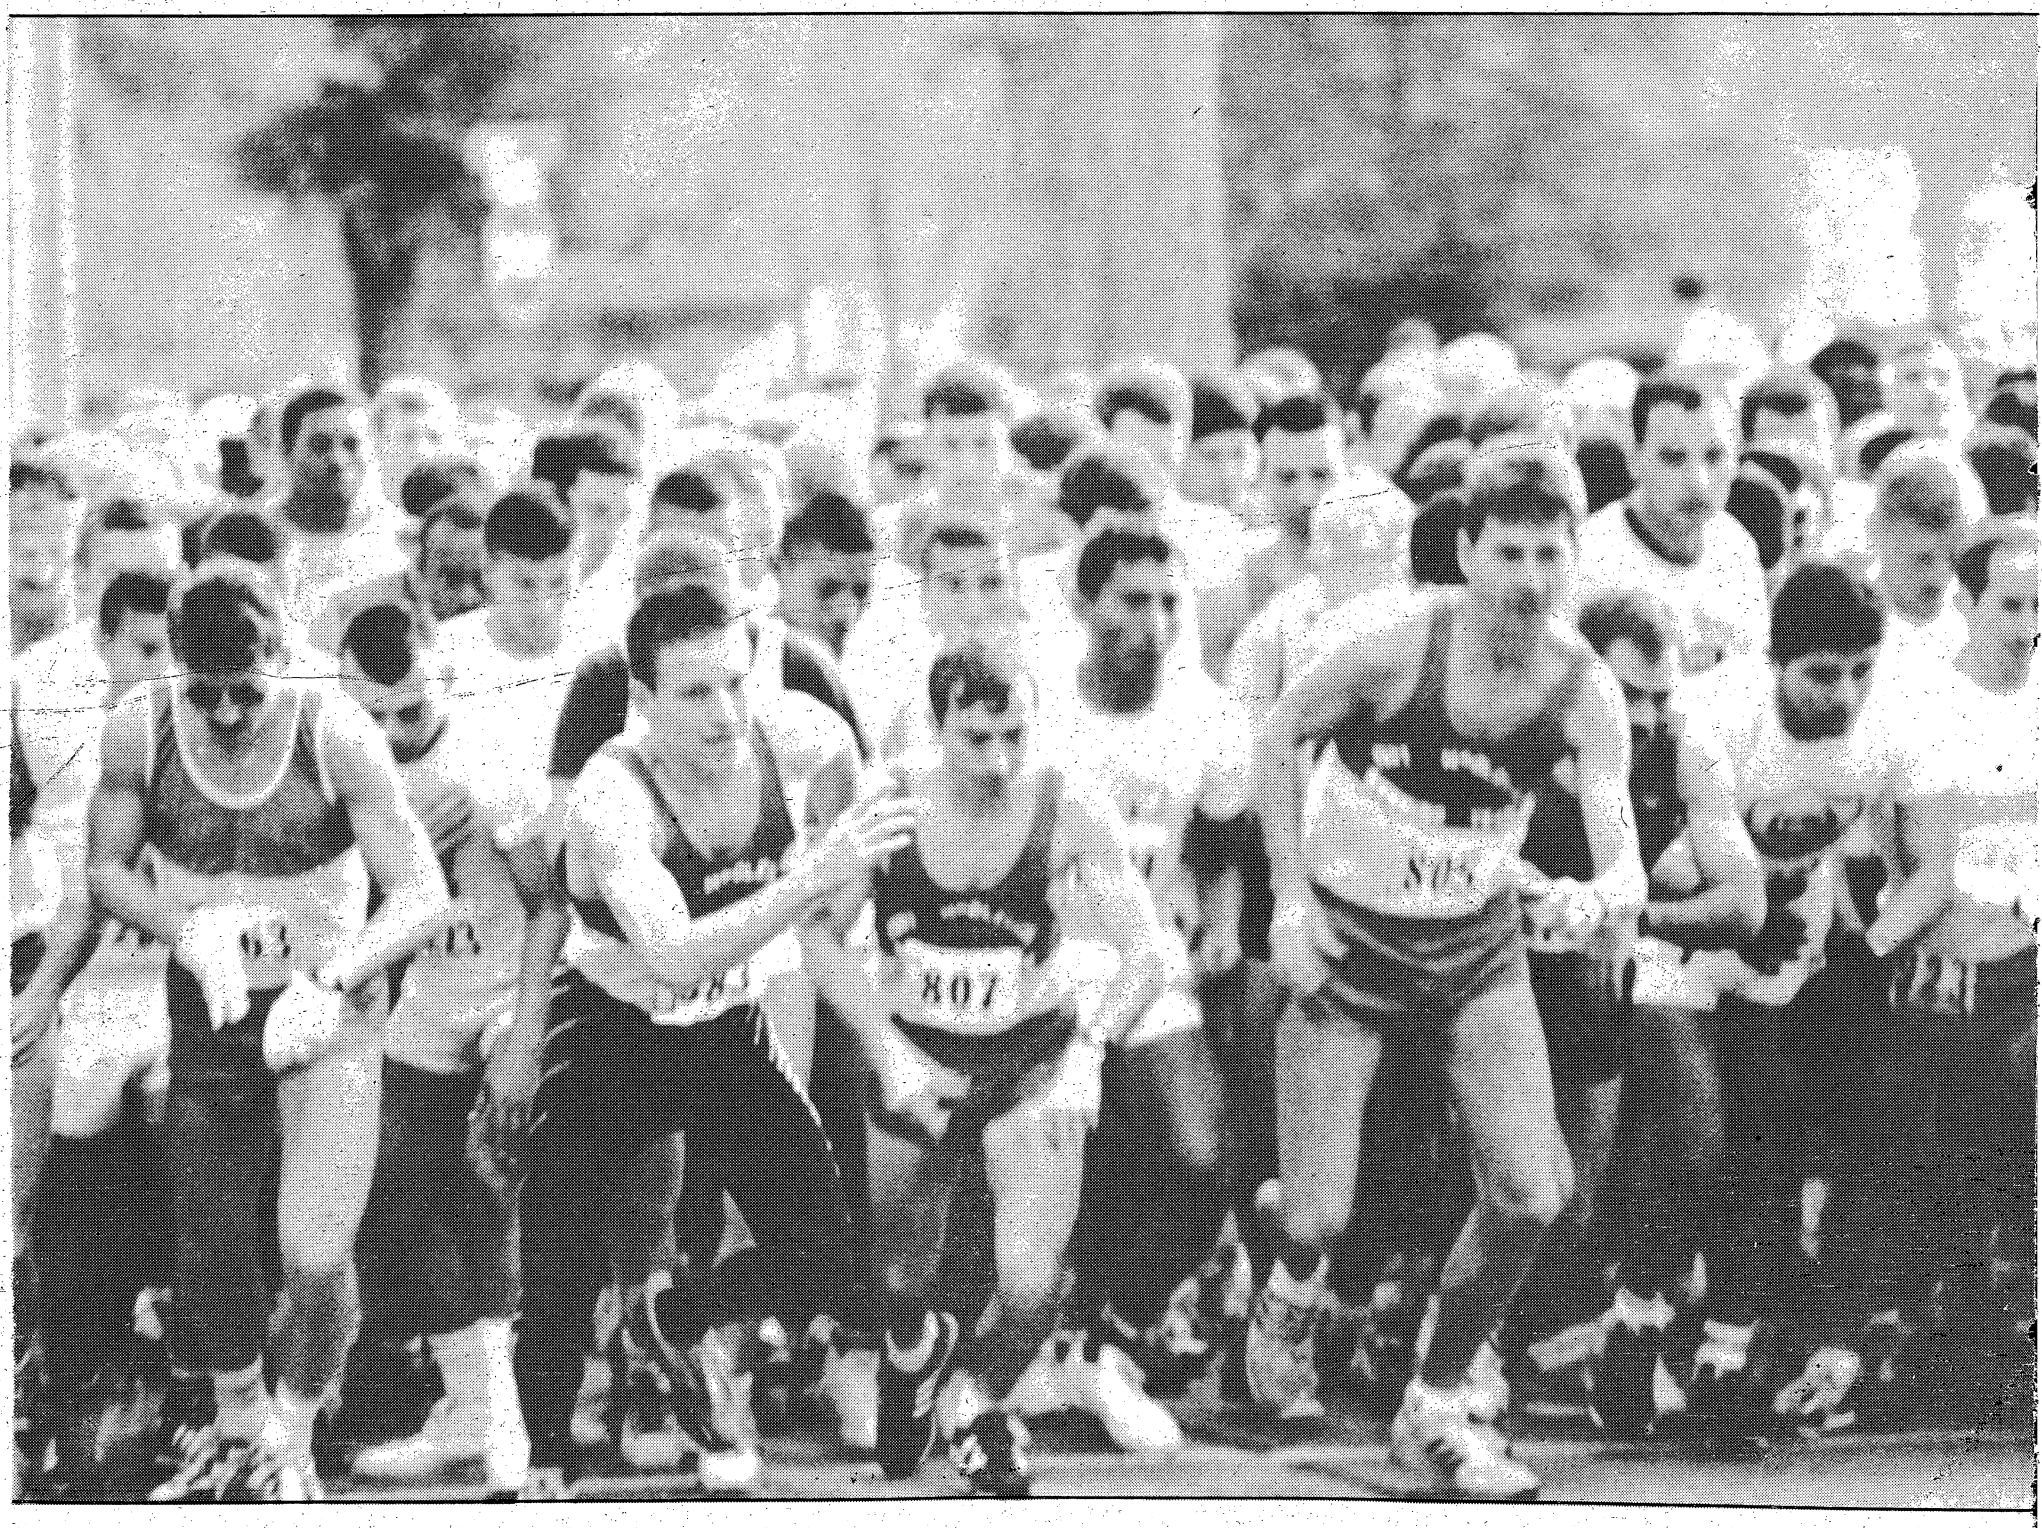
Molloy is currently assigned at Fort Hood, Tx., while Yates is serving at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., though both look forward to a place in the Boston Marathon.

"I was trying to run under the 2:40 mark by pacing myself according to the 'split times' I had taped to my shirt," said Molloy.

Steve O'Connell squezzed past Robert Brooks in the half marathon with just over a minute gap as he broke the tape at 1:08:53, followed by Brooks at 1:09:55.

O'Connell, who is assigned to the U.S. Army Recruiting Command, New Haven, Conn., placed third in the two previous Infantry marathons, but was determined to glow in the first place spotlight.

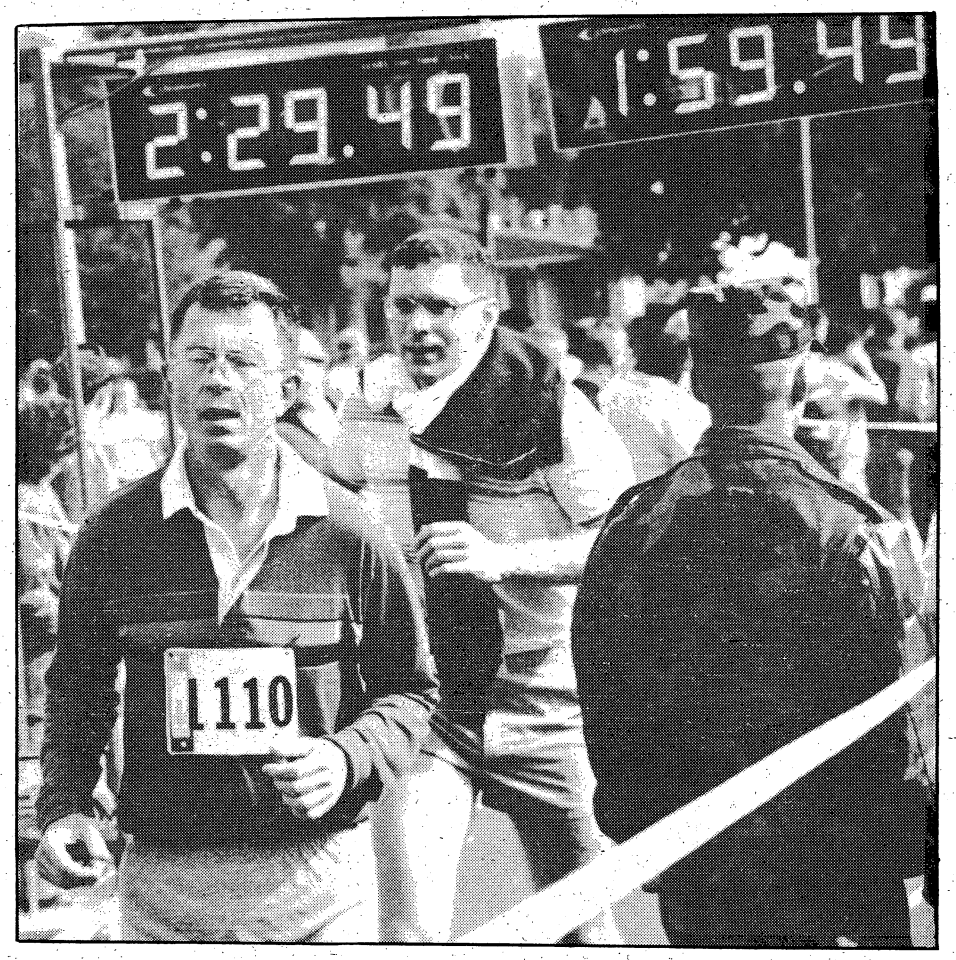
Mauree Ainnebush was the victor in the female category with a time of 1:26:36.



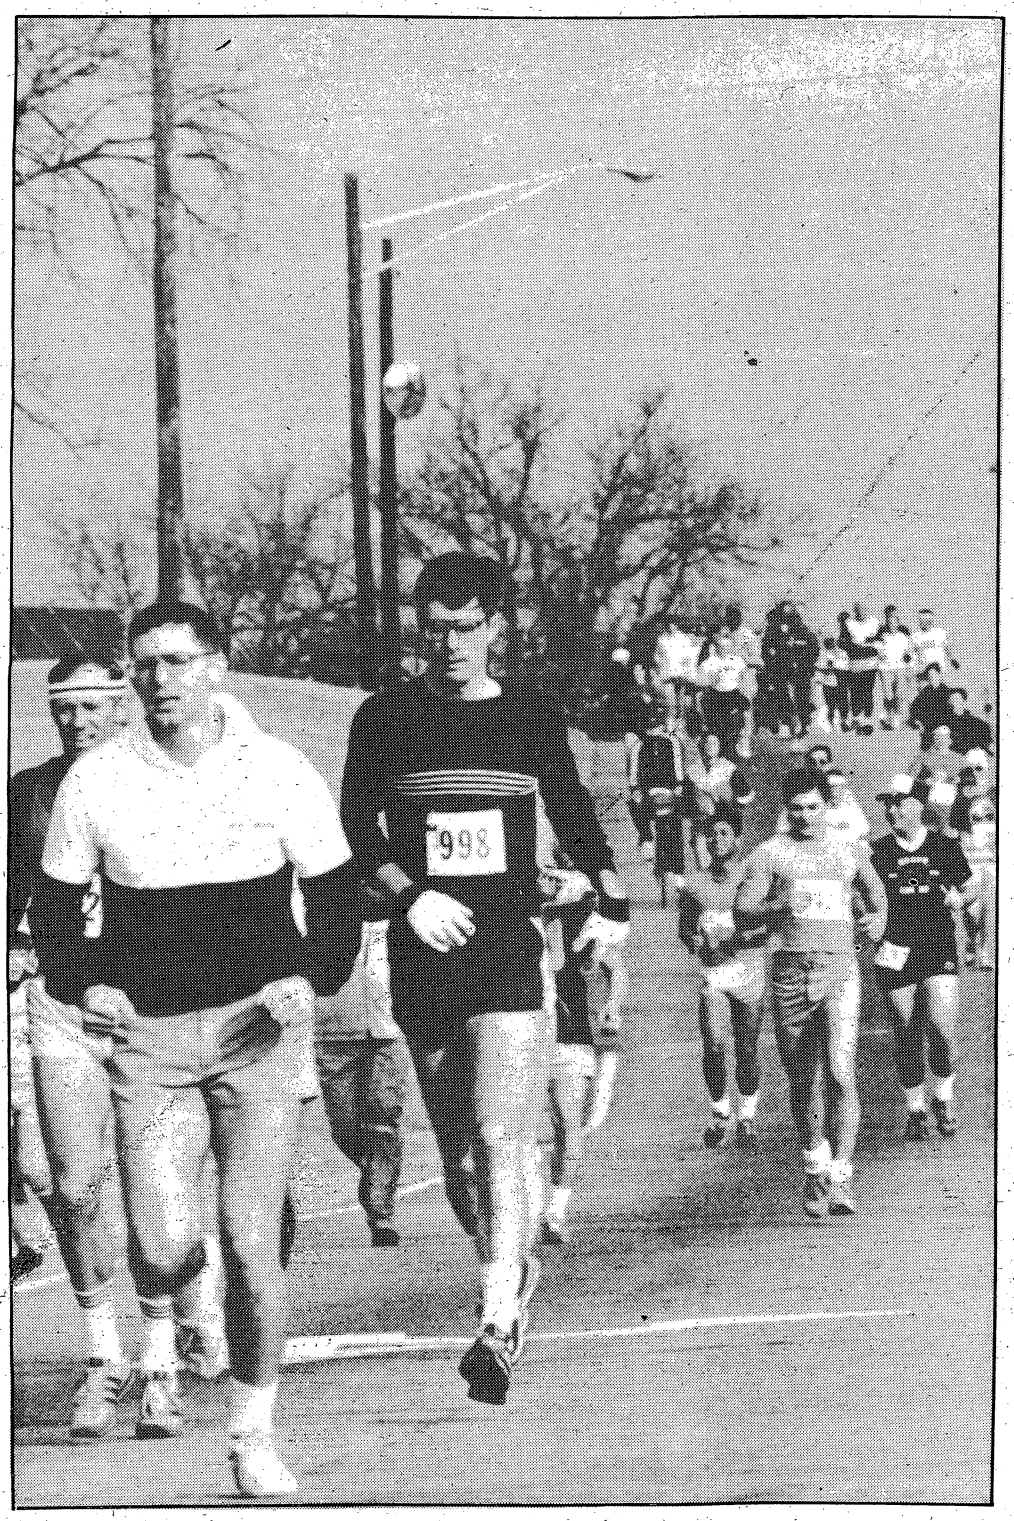
More than 530 runners competed in the half marathon, with 820 runners registered in the race combination.

Team competition in the full marathon saw 1st Calvary, 312 Military Intelligence Battalion, Fort Hood, Tx.

In the half marathon, Falcon #1 of Fort Bliss, Tx., took the top honors in team competition.



THE START — Pos start of the race!



AND THEY'RE OFF — Runners start their 26-mile journey.

Concert series in post schools is music to kids' ears

Bess Middlemiss

MAKING MUSIC — Marcia Riley and Rexford Whiddon, both of Columbus College performing in concert at Wilbur School recently.

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning School System

Students are learning appropriate audience behavior while being exposed to a fine concert series through the Fine Arts Assembly series.

Four times a year, professional musicians present concerts in each of the eight post schools. Pianists, cellists, clarinetists, vocalists and violinists have performed in solos, duets and trios.

Students in kindergarten through eighth grade have heard the works of composers such as Beethoven, Schubert, Haydn, Bach, Ravell, Prokofieff and Copeland.

Teachers and students prepare for each concert by discussing the instrument to be featured and the composer's music to be performed. During the concerts, performers pause to explain about the instruments, composers and the music itself.

So far this school year, students heard clarinetist Ed Riley, and cellist Marcia Riley, both accompanied by pianist Rexford Whiddon.

The next performance will feature bassoonist Ronald Wirt Feb. 26 and 28.

The Officers' Wives Club sponsors the series.

"This fine arts program has enriched the lives of our students by providing quality performances by outstanding local musicians," said Suzanne Williams, deputy superintendent.

Retiree group announces plans for anniversary

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the Retired Officers Association is celebrating the 27th anniversary of their founding.

The 500-member strong organization is made up of retired military officers and warrant officers from all branches of service.

The chapter is involved in community affairs, such as the Salisbury Fair, volunteer work at area hospitals and nursing homes and various support projects for Army Community Service.

The association also provides scholarships for deserving high school students attending Columbus College and Troy State University. Also, the organization recognizes outstanding high school and Columbus College reserve officers training corps program students and outstanding soldiers in OCS and the School of Americas.

All active duty and retired officers are invited to join and can contact Col. Wallace Veaudry at 571-1135 or 323-8291 or Maj. Roy Leggett at 561-2256 or 545-5171.

You might save money by itemizing on income taxes

While the Internal Revenue Service encourages as many taxpayers as possible to use the simpler 1040A and 1040EZ forms, there will be millions of taxpayers who will find it to their advantage to itemize deductions on the 1040 form.

Generally, you will benefit from itemizing deductions if you paid interest and taxes on a home you own, had unusually large uninsured medical and dental expenses during the year, made large contributions to qualified charitable organizations, or had major uninsured casualty losses. What this means is that you will probably have itemized deductions totalling more than the zero bracket amount for your filing status.

Taxpayers who itemize deductions reduce their adjusted gross income by their excess itemized deductions. Excess itemized deductions is the amount by which total itemized deductions exceeds the zero bracked amount. For example, a married couple filing jointly, with itemized deductions of $5,640, would substract their zero bracket amount of $3,540 from the $5,640 in order to determine their excess itemized deductions of $2,100.

The adjusted gross income is reduced by the excess itemized deduction over the zero bracket amount. This amount is already incorporated into the tax tables and the tax rate schedules.

Itemized deductions are non-business deductions. If you itemize your deductions, you must file Form 1040 and fill in Schedule A (Form 1040). Schedule A provides space for listing deductible medical and dental expenses, charitable contributions, taxes, interest paid, casualty or theft losses, and miscellaneous items such as union dues.

If you itemize, you should keep a record of your deductible items, including cancelled checks and receipts. This will verify your expenses should the IRS examine your return. It will also help you determine whether your itemized deductions are greater than your zero bracket amount.

Taxpayers who itemize can take advantage of many deductible expenses. Here is a brief explanation of some types of deductions available.

Charitable contributions

Generally, you may deduct contributions given to any qualified organization established and operated exclusively for charitable, religious, educational, scientific, or literary purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals; to certain organizations that foster national or international amateur sports competition; to fraternal organizations if the contributions are used for charitable purposes; to veterans' organizations; or, to governmental agencies that will use the gifts exclusively for public purposes.

This means you may deduct contributions to most religious organizations, communicy funds, Boy and Girl Scouts, the YMCA, the Red Cross, the American Cancer Society, CARE, Veterans of Foreign Wars, etc. You may not deduct contributions to civic leagues or chambers of commerce.

If you donate property other than money, you must base your deduction on the fair market value of the property, that is, the amount you could reasonable charge if you were selling the property.

Bear in mind a contribution is only a contribution at the time of its delivery. Pledges are not contributions until you make payment. Also, if a contribution results in a personal benefit, all or part of it may not be deductible. For example, if you buy a $50 ticket for a church benefit and receive a meal at the function worth $15, you can only claim $35 as a charitable contribution.

Medical Expenses

You may deduct the medical expenses you paid during 1985 to the extent that they exceed five percent of your adjusted gross income. If you were reimbursed by insurance or otherwise, that amount must be subtracted from your medical expenses.

Payments for the diagnosis, cure, prevention, or treatment of a physical or mental illness are deductible as are payments for the purpose of affecting any structure or function of the body.

Deductible medical expenses include your payments to doctors, dentists, psychiatrists, etc.; payments to hospitals for service, laboratory fees, x-rays, etc.; and payments for eyeglasses, hearing aids and parts, dentures, crutches, etc.

Things not allowed are trips taken to "get away from it all," even if advised by a doctor, health club dues, maternity clothes, and diaper services.

Expenses for transportation essential to medical care — such as getting to and from a doctor's office — may be included in medical expenses. This includes taxi, bus, train, or plane fares.

If you use your car, you may deduct the actual out-of-pocket expenses, such as gas and oil, or nine cents for each mile you use your car for this purpose. In addition, you may deduct parking fees and tools. Be sure to keep track of your expenses and mileage.

As of 1984, the one percent limit for drugs no longer applies, and deductible drugs will include only insulin and drugs that are obtainable with a prescription.

Interest

Interest paid during the year on a debt for which you are legally responsible is deductible.

This includes such debts as a car loan, a bank loan, an educational loan, or a mortgage of your home. However, if in 1985, you prepaid interest allocable to any period after 1985, you can only deduct the amount of interest allocable to 1985 on your 1985 return.

If you buy such things as clothing, a radio or TV set, furniture, or household appliances on an installment plan, budget charge account or credit card that lists a finance charge, you may treat the finance charge payment as interest.

In general, interest deductions must meet the following tests: the interest must result from an actual debtor-creditor relationship; the interest must be based on a valid obligation to pay a sum of money; and, the debt must be one for which you are legally liable.

Taxes

The following state or local taxes you paid during the year are deductible: state or local income tax (including tax withheld or paid as estimated tax during the year), real property tax, personal property tax, general sales tax and contributions to certain state disability benefit funds. The 1985 Optional State Sales Tax Tables are a convenient reference for determining the amount you may be able to deduct for sales taxes.

Remember, the sales tax on certain major purchases — a car, motorcycle, motor home, truck, boat, plan, home (including mobile or prefabricated), materials purchased to build a new home — can be deducted in addition to the sales tax table amount. Personal property taxes assessed by some states, especially on cars, may be deductible if they are based only on the value of the personal property and are imposed annually.

Generally, no federal tax is deductible on your federal income tax return. (AFPS)

Weinberger speaks at warfare conference

Editor's note — Capt. Thomas G. Surface is the Chief of the Army News Service in Washington, D.C.

By Capt. Thomas G. Surface

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — "The world is at war," said Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger in prepared remarks opening the Department of Defense-sponsored conference on low-intensity warfare at Fort McNair in Washington, D.C.

The war Weinberger was referring to is not global and not waged between fully mobilized armies. Rather, the wars are smaller conflicts, limited to certain geographic regions and usually waged to achieve specific political or social results. Nicaragua, Afghanistan, Angola and El Salvador are but several current examples of this face of warfare.

Known as low-intensity warfare, low-intensity conflict, insurgency, guerrilla war and terrorism, the objective of these conflicts, Weinberger said, is not liberation of the people, but subjugation.

He continued by explaining the circumstances which lead to regional conflict and addressed U.S. response, both militarily and economically.

Weinberger traced most of these conflicts to the struggle for freedom and self-determination of emerging third world nations but the Soviets and their allies, he feels, wish to promote their own ambitions at the expense of citizens of the infant nations. They do this by suffocating their economy and creating an atmosphere of discontent among the population and feed this discontent with the tolls of insurrection, bullets and bombs. "It is not a nation's military structures that are targeted, but its clinics and classrooms, its power and transportation systems, its possibilities, and its hope for a better future. The object is to instill fear . . . to rob men of their manhood, and make survival the ultimate value," Weinberger explained.

"For 25 years we have considered how to prevent the voices of freedom from being stilled. We cannot abandon that obligation," he said.

Weinberger used the occasion of this conference to point out that U.S. military response must not just supply the means for countries to defend themselves but must help to build upon the foundations of freedom present.

The role of our military is to preserve freedom, he said. But to do this it is essential that they have not only the support of the government which commits them, but the support of the people of this country because the military is being asked to risk their lives for all of us, said Weinberger.

"The military," he said, "must only be committed when it is our (the nation's) intention to support them until they have won, and never commit them again when it is not our intention to win."

"There is a place for power in responding to low-intensity conflict. What is important to understand is the role of the military force, and of the role of other responses and how these fit together," he said. The skills and support capabilities found chiefly in the special operations forces of each service are essential in responding militarily to low-intensity conflict.

Although each service contributes according to the mission and level of conflict involved, Army special forces bear a very large share of the burden. "They are trained to instruct others in providing for their own defense," said Weinberger. Their mission, he explained, includes knowing the language and culture of the host nation as well as familiarity with the weapons found in that country. Besides providing training in the use of those weapons, they also give instruction in tactics, reconnaissance, communications, field medicine, escape and evasion and equipment maintenance, he explained.

But that remains only one part of the military's required response. Providing the people with the opportunity and assistance to build their own future is vital in waging a successful low-intensity campaign.

Most of the U.S. assistance to lesser developed nations is non-lethal, economic aid. "We can compete with hovels and win. Our adversaries require guns," he said. The Soviets, according to Weinberger, provide relatively little economic assistance for building an economic base for the country to grow because this would not be advantageous to fueling the fires of insurrection.

Weinberger warned against the foolishness of subsidizing governments produced by communist insurgencies. Some of these are supported in part by various international financial institutions and agencies of the United Nations, he said. The U.S. must object to this type of support. "We must surely not ask our own military to go in the way of guns indirectly paid for through our own financial assistance," he said.

Weinberger acknowledged that public opinion, here at home, plays a critical role in developing a response to low-intensity war. There is still the obligation to distinguish right from wrong. Criminal force as a means to power cannot be tolerated because once accepted, it is soon preferred. Adjustments and sacrifices must be made when considering using the military in a low-intensity war, he said.

Army Surgeon General outlines plan to fight venereal disease among soldiers

"Venereal disease today is a more serious problem than ever before."

With that observation recently conveyed to the Army's secretary and chief of staff, the Army Surgeon General has begun an intensive campaign to address the problem.

Part of the campaign involves instilling in Army people an increased awareness of how the problem has evolved over the past several years.

According to figures compiled by Dr. (Lt. Col.) Ernest T. Takafuji, the Surgeon General's disease control consultant, the problem involves dealing with the number of reported VD cases geographically and trends in new strains of infection, variations in transmission and adjusted requirements for treatment and prevention.

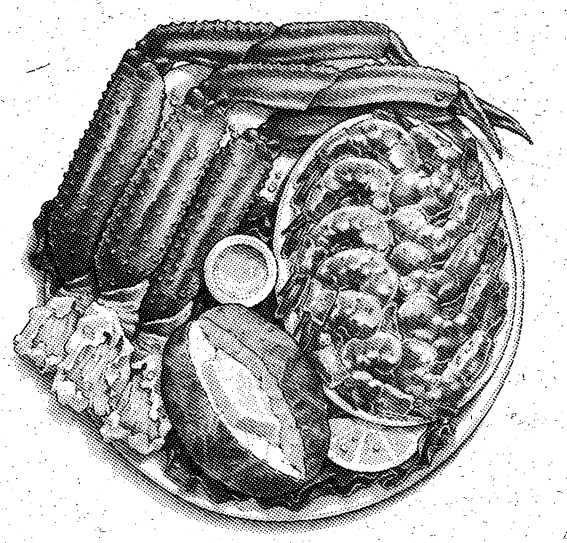
Takafuji's report notes that since 1981, there has been a gradual decline in venereal disease among soldiers worldwide. But the latest picture shows that while the incidence rate of such classical diseases as gonorrhea is falling, the reverse applies to non-specific urethritis, genital herpes and AIDS. Recent statistics also reveal that a number of drugs traditionally used in treating certain sexually transmitted organisms are less effective in treating those organisms. As a result, the medical community is finding it necessary to develop new drugs and to increase surveillance monitoring to detect drug-resistant disease strains.

Takafuji points out that some of the infections may occur simultaneously — for example, gonorrhea and non-specific urethritis, AIDS, hepatitis B and genital herpes. That prospect, he says, renders treatment more difficult and requires follow-up evaluation of patients.

The problem of sexually transmitted diseases entails more than just their being a public health nuisance. In some cases, they can lead to chronic or terminal illness. Takafuji cites the following examples: genital herpes passed on to the newborn; HTLV-III viral exposure resulting in AIDS; non-specific urethritis causing sterility in women; Hepatitis B leading to chronic active Hepatitis, cirrhosis and liver cancer.

His report outlines a number of requirements that must be met if the problem is to receive adequate attention:

- AIDS education materials;
- Standardization in evaluating and counseling of affected patients;
- Increased community and leadership involvement in responding to the challenge;
- And, new approaches in preventing the diseases.



Instructional material produced for VD education throughout the Army's service schools, medical courses and unit education classes also is being reviewed and scheduled for appropriate revision within the next few months.

The Surgeon General's plan of attack includes establishing, at the Academy of Health Sciences at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, a special course for communicable-disease counselors, which will be a required course for certification for all sexually transmitted disease counselors.

What can the community do to help the process? For one thing, it can enlist the aid of school administrators, teachers, nurses, peer-group leaders and managers of youth programs. It can volunteer to help local medical officials devise new approaches to prevention and health maintenance. This effort is expected to involve experimental programs at selected installations over the next several months.

For the long term, Takafuji emphasizes that the problem can be reduced more readily if commanders promote prevention through "an individual sense of responsibility necessary for maintaining good health." That approach, he said, must be introduced during basic training and reinforced throughout one's mili-

USARSA cadre, students battle on soccer field

By Cory Loomis
U.S. Army School of the Americas

One of the School of the America's missions is to expose its students to American customs, our way of life.

However, sometimes it works the other way around.

MSgt. Luis Alonso-Sanz, a guest instructor from Brazil at USARSA, brought with him a love of football that is contagious. His brand of football is not what you see on Sunday afternoon or on Monday night, because in Brazil, like most of the world, football is played with the feet, and to "gringos" it is better known as soccer.

Alonso-Sanz has organized his fellow instructors into a cadre team that regularly challenges USARSA students to weekend games. They play on Peden Field, near the USARSA barracks, and use standard soccer goals, but the boundaries are currently unmarked except by running trails.

Also, although one man was chosen to referee during the last game, no fouls were called. In short, the game is played according to "jungle rules" — "survival of the fittest."

No matter. The competition, though fierce, is friendly, and each game provides welcome recreation as well as a chance for student-cadre interaction outside the classroom.

This Saturday's game, the first of the new year, was no exception. Fourteen cadre and 17 students turned out to play in a hard-fought contest of skill.

All of the students were from the Noncommissioned Officer Development course, a program for senior enlisted soldiers from throughout Latin America.

A small cheering section also braved the leaden skies to watch the action.

And action there was.

As anyone who has watched or played well knows, soccer is a game of continuous action, demanding a high level of fitness and agility--like a basketball game played with the feet, but with far less scoring.

In the first half, the NCO course team started strong and dominated the ball until Sgt. Rafael Villegas (Costa Rica) scored. The cadre took over then, and after a failed drive, they pressed in again, and Sp4 Gerardo Munevar (U.S.) scored on a pass from 1st Lt. Adlaberto Garcete (Paraguay). Another excellent cadre shot was saved by the NCO course goalie, Sgt. Jose Silva (Paraguay).

HERE IT COMES — The NCO Course goalie attempts to block a scoring attempt.

Cory Loomis

On the goalie's kick, the NCO course mounted a drive that was thwarted by Sgt. Nelso Acosta (Honduras). The cadre took over and showed great finesse, scoring in a three-man pass set-up from Sgt. Luis Allan (Ecuador) to Acosta then to Garcete. The half ended with a score of 2-1, cadre's favor.

The second half was like a mirror image of the first in terms of scoring, but neither side scored for a while. Finally, after a skillful offensive, Allan scored for the cadre.

This was followed by a goal by Sgt. Severiano Jacquet (Paraguay) for the cadre, and a final goal by Sgt. Adrian Soto (Costa Rica) for the NCO course. Final Score: Cadre 4, NCO course 2.

The cadre team's performance bodes well for USARSA's participation in any post soccer league, but more than anything else, the team, representative of so many nations, is a symbol of the school's motto, "Uno para todos y todos para uno", (One for all and all for one).

It is that sort of international solidarity that makes USARSA a unique and special place to work.

Educational specialist setting records in swimming events

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Chuck Gantner is a man with a balanced life. He works as an educational specialist at Benning, is a member of the Alliance for Battered Women, the Columbus Kiwanis Club, the Georgia-Alabama chapter of Mensa and is a world class record-holder in Master's swimming competition.

Gantner

"I swim as a way to relax and keep in shape. Life is an adventure and swimming is only a small part of everything I do. I like to keep a balance in the variety of activities I participate in and my career," said Gantner.

Master's swimming is an international organization for people between the ages of 25 and 90 who competitively swim on a national and international level. Master's competition encompasses many sports besides swimming, such as running, table tennis, sailing and kayaking. The Master's held its first international competition last year in Toronto, Canada and the 40 year old Gantner participated.

The swimmer and former combat Infantry officer swam to first place in the 50, 100 and 200 meter backstroke and the 50 meter butterfly in the August 1985 meet. In addition, Gantner holds the world record in the 100 meter backstroke.

"Swimming is a sport that I enjoy and compete in. I want to stress, though, that Master's competition offers a sport for almost everyone. It's a great way for athletes over 25 to compete with others from around the nation and the world," said Gantner.

The next international Master's competition will be held in Tokyo, Japan this summer and Gantner plans to be there.

USAMU shooters begin season on winning note

By Tommy Pool
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

MSgt. Erich Buljung won two individual pistol events as members of the US Army Marksmanship Unit began the 1986 shooting season on a winning note in competition held at Fort Benning last weekend.

In the National Indoor Sectional Pistol matches held on Jan. 23-24, USAMU's Buljung and MSgt. Roger Willis dominated all three events by placing first or second in each championship.

Buljung won both the Free Pistol and Standard Pistol events with scores of 557 and 570 out of 600 points respectively, while Willis placed second at 550 and 566. Willis came back to win the Conventional Pistol Championship, however, scoring a total of 887 out of 900 possible points. Buljung came in second at 881, while John Farley of Americus finished third at 578.

The US Army "Blue" team won all three indoor team events, with the US Army "Gray" squad finishing second and the U.S. Military Academy "Black" squad placing third.

Members of the "Blue" team included Buljung, SSgts Gary Marsh and Wesley Vaughn in the Free and Standard Pistol events, while the winning Conventional Team was composed of Lt. Col. Ralph Talbot, MSgts Thomas Woods, Erich Buljung and SFC James Laguana.

USAMU's Woods also made the winner's circle, as he won the Fort Benning Outdoor Pistol Championship held on Saturday, Jan. 25.

Woods, the 1985 All Army Pistol Champion, put together rounds of 886 in .22 calier, 883 in Centerfire and 887 in the .45 caliber matches to finish with a winning aggregate of 3656 out of 2700 points.

Second place in the championship went to Laguana with a total of 2650-115x's, while Roger Willis finished third at 2650-108x's.

Hunters must turn in permits

Deer hunters must turn in the Fort Benning Deer Permit, FB Form 48, within 15 days of the close of deer season.

Permits can be turned in at the Outdoor Equipment Rental Office in Building 1707 or in the drop box at the Deer Check Station, Building 5883, Harmony Church.

All permits not received by today will be delinquent. For more information, call 544-6120.

Martial arts tourney set

A martial arts tournament is planned for Feb. 8 at Santiago Gym in Sand Hill.

Sponsored by the 1st Infantry Training Brigade, the tournament is sanctiond by the U.S. Chung Do Kwan Association.

Registration is from 8 to 11 a.m. and matches begin at 11 a.m.

The day-long competition will be divided into four areas: forms (a display of power and technique), sparring (controlled fighting), weapons (a display of weapons' techniques) and breaking (wood or concrete). Men, women and children will compete in separate divisions of rank, age and size.

Entry fee is $15. Admission for spectators is $2 for adults and $1 for children under age 12. All proceeds go to the Fort Benning Morale Support Activities Division's Youth Activities Branch.

Participation fees can be mailed to: Installation Morale, Welfare and Recreation Fund, Community recreation Division, Physical Activity Branch, Fort Benning, Ga. 31095.

For more information, call Lt. Col. Jim Henkel at 544-2607 or 544-4112.

U.S. looking for top skiers

The U.S. Armed Forces is searching for soldiers to compete in the 1986 CISM Ski Championship Feb. 24 to March 3 in Ruhdolding, Germany.

To be considered for the U.S. CISM Ski Team, individuals must have competed in national- or international-level ski competitions on 10 kilometer (men), 10-kilometer (women), 20-kilometer biathlon (men), giant-slalom (men and women) and 15-kilometer (men and women) cross-country courses.

For more information, call the Fort Benning Sports Office at 545-2332 or 545-5777.

Bragg hosts race March 7

The 17th annual Longstreet Race, hosted by the 1st Special Operations Command (Airborne), will be run March 7 at Fort Bragg, N.C.

The race will start at 9 a.m. and will be conducted on a 20-mile certified TAC course. The couse begins at Lee Physical Fitness Center and ends at Hedrick Stadium.

Registration deadline in Feb. 17, with a fee of $3. Late registration fee is $5.

For more information, call Scott Grancsay at Autovon 236-2385 or 236-7612 or commercial (919) 396-2385 or 396-7612.

a week now, swimming one to two miles a day. I swim freestyle, butterfly, backstroke and breast stroke. One big thing that helps me is that I can use the Briant-Wells indoor pool during my lunch hour," said Gantner.

The part-man part-fish stressed that Fort Benning is a great place for civilians as well as military in regards to athletic facilities.

"Civilians can use the weight room at building Four, Briant Wells gym, any athletic facility on the post for that matter. It's like having a free health club membership."

Gantner, whose father, Charles, was an Olympian and world record-holder in the breaststroke in the 1940's, has been an active swimmer since his high school years. At Piscatawny High School he was an All-American swimmer and held world-class ranking. Swimming on the U.S. 400 meter freestyle team that included future Olympian Don Schollander, the team broke a world record. Gantner missed qualifying for the 400 meter individual medley Olympic team by only one second.

Going on to West Point after high school, Gantner was an all-American in the 200 yard individual medley and later, at North Carolina State University, he qualified as a Southern and Eastern Intercollegiate champion.

"The Tokyo Master's will be held July 12 thru the 16. I'll swim the 50 meter butterfly, the 50, 100 and 200 meter back and the 200 meter individual medley. I'm just proud to be going," said Gantner.

Bodybuilding contest May 10

The third annual Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning bodybuilding contest is planned for May 10 and contest officials urge participants to begin preparing now for the event.

Only military personnel assigned to Fort Benning are eligible to compete. For more information, call Speedy Austin at 544-1747.

Time to point out some everyday savings in The Ledger-Enquirer

Two things most people never have enough of are time and money. You might be surprised to find that by taking the paper every day you will save on both. In fact, in a month's time you usually can find and use enough money-saving coupons and sales bargains to save more than what you'd pay for a month's subscription. And by spending a few minutes looking through your daily papers, you can find merchandise at the best prices before you even leave your house on those shopping excursions. Think of the time, and fuel, you'll save by eliminating all that extra running around. You'll save time, too, by having the paper delivered to you, instead of you having to go out of your way to get it.

Patterson ceremony Wednesday

The 34th Annual Robert P. Patterson Memorial Award Ceremony will be held at 11 a.m. in Marshall Auditorium Wednesday.

This year's Patterson Award winner is 2nd Lt. Floyd Z. Light Jr., of Ballenger, W. Va. Mrs. Patterson, wife of the late Secretary of War for whom the award is named, will make the presentation.

Patterson served as a captain in the U.S. Army during World War I and glorified his soldiering career as the recipient of the Distinguished Service Cross, Distinguished Service Medal, Silver Star and Purple Heart.

The Patterson Award goes to the officer selected as the outstanding Infantry graduate of Officer Candidate School during the previous year. The award is based on qualities of leadership, academic effectiveness, aptitude and character.

Light will also receive a Department of the Army Certificate signed by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., an engraved .45 caliber pistol, a check for $1,000 and a Follow Me plaque.

Light is assigned to the 1st Special Operations Command, Fort Bragg, N.C.

He has completed OCS, the Infantry Officers Basic Course and pathfinder school.

Schools may change to local control

The Fort Benning School System faces possible transfer of the on-post schools to local school systems as a result of legislation recently passed by Congress.

As a part of the Military Construction Act of 1986, Congress required that the Department of Defense submit to the Armed Services Committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate a plan which provides for the transfer of those federally operated on-post schools in the United States to local school districts.

In the case of Fort Benning, any plan would probably call for the on-post schools to be operated by either Muscogee County, Chattahoochee County or by both county systems. If both systems operated post schools, those children living in Muscogee County would attend schools operated by that system and those living in Chattahoochee County would attend schools operated by the Chattahoochee County Schools.

The transfer of the on-post schools to local control has been considered from time to time since the schools came under federal control in 1950. Past efforts to transfer the schools have not reached a Congressional level due to reluctance by the local schools to assume responsibility for Fort Benning elementary school children.

An additional factor precluding local operation has been the location of Fort Benning housing in two county school systems, Muscogee and Chattahoochee. The current effort to transfer the school to local districts has surfaced and is being considered by Congress.

PLAYTIME — Schools have been operating on post under Army auspices since 1921. Ledger/Enquirer

Col. Bejamin Sims, Fort Benning Schools board president and Fort Benning staff judge advocate, said the legislation passed by Congress does not require that on-post schools cease operating under federal control but rather requires that a plan for transfer be submitted to the Congress. He said that the plan, which must be submitted by March 1, is required to provide for a transfer of the schools by not later that 1990.

The law does not, however, require that the plan be implemented, thus further legislation would be required to bring about implementation of the plan, according to Sims. "Schools have been operating on post under Army auspices since 1921 and I would expect considerable study and perhaps debate before the Congress moves the schools from federal operation to operation by the local systems," he said.

The Fort Benning School Board, in a special meeting to discuss the legislation, took action this past week to form a parents' advisory committee to study the ramifications of a change to local operation of the schools. The committee will collect information, study the factors, and interview officials of the involved school systems and will report back to the board in March. The advisory committee will be chaired by Ann Mace.

Parents having any questions regarding the current legislation are urged to call the school superintendent at 545-2915.

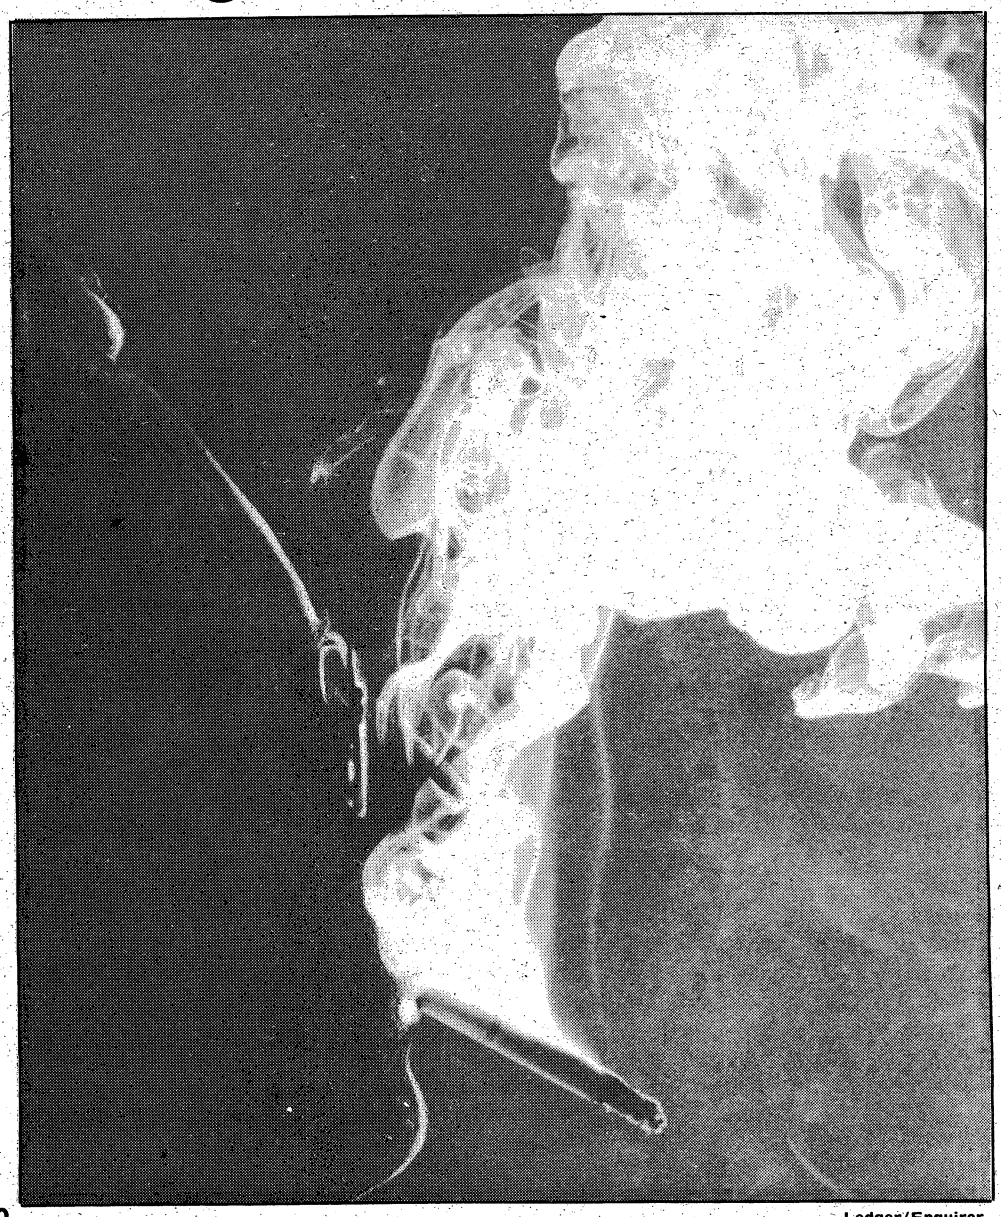
Should cut-rate cigarettes be sold on military posts

Statistics make answer obvious for non-smoker

By Mike Bruzzle
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Congress and the military establishment are pondering whether military posts should sell cigarettes at a cut-rate to active-duty men and women. Inherent within this question and, more importantly, is should service members be allowed to smoke at all?



The Army set a precedent when they imposed weight standards and tougher physical fitness requirements for its soldiers. This precedent sprang from the fact that soldiers who are physically fit and who weigh what they should make better fighters. Should the same approach be taken towards smoking? Do non-smokers make better fighters, better soldiers?

After you cut through the "smoke screen" thrown up by the U.S. tobacco industry that says nothing has really been proven, some sobering facts emerge.

Taken from a study conducted by the American Council of Science and Health and published in the April 1984 issue of Consumer Research Magazine, the facts were:

- Cigarette smoking is the most important single cause of death among preventable diseases in the U.S.
- Four out of five of the leading causes of death are related to cigarette smoking.
- One in every six deaths in the U.S. is smoking related.
- Six times as many people die from smoking-related causes annually than from car accidents.

Ledger/Enquirer

Smoker knows that habit is not an easy one to quit

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Army Surgeon General recently suggested that cigarettes should not be sold on Army posts because of the health hazard they present.

The health side of the issue is certainly clear; cigarette smoking is bad for you.

But is this a decision that the Army should make for people?

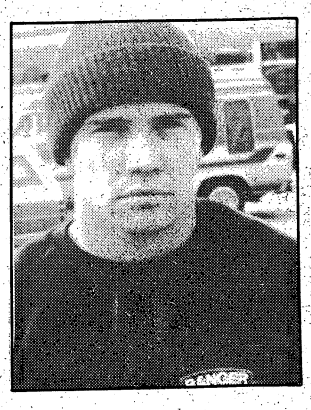
Soldiers are used to being told what to do and how to do it. Uniforms must be worn a certain way, hair cut a certain length and jobs performed to rigid Army standards of perfection.

The Army wants its soldiers to be physically fit, so it requires regular physical training, sets height-weight standards and mandates periodic physical fitness testing.

Many factors influence a soldier's job performance and his ability to meet the Army's standards. Too many sweets are bad for the figure, as are too much pasta or potatoes. Drinking alcohol in excess is bad for anybody, and a hangover will definitely interfere with a soldier's duty performance.

The commissary and exchange sell lots of foods that are fattening and plenty of alcoholic beverages. Does this make the exchange responsible for obesity and alcoholism?

Despite the obstacles, soldiers have to strive to do the best job they can for the Army. They know they must keep in shape, maintain a certain weight and be able to pass the PT tests, or risk being put out of the Army.



● See HABIT, page 20

Various voices

Do you feel that the military should put more restraints on soldiers who smoke?

2nd Lt. Bobby Lee, 25th Company, Infantry Officers Basic Course — "Though smoking is a personal choice, smokers should respect the rights of others. There really are no restraints that can make a person stop smoking. Our only avenue is to educate the soldier on the dangers of smoking."

Sgt. Martin L. Miller, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment — "Smoking should not be allowed in public areas. But as long as soldiers are able to meet the physical standards of the military, there should be no other restraints on them.

PFC Roland T. Sulit, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment — "I am a smoker who has tried to quit. It is a hard habit to break. But, there should be some limits as to what smokers can do. Everyone must breathe the air. Smoking areas should be decided by the people in the work area.

Army's young leaders should strive to set example for fellow soldiers

By John E. Bushyhead
Special to the Bayonet

As junior officers and junior noncommissioned officers, we will inevitably be placed in a situation where we will have to apply our learned wisdom and judgment.

That wisdom should be based on "applied morals." That "common sense" judgment should be based on what we honestly feel in our hearts is right. A soldier's career may be enhanced by the wisdom and judgment we apply.

An old infantry colonel once told me, "We should always do what we honestly feel in our hearts is the right thing to do at that time. And we should never have to look back and be ashamed of it."

A young soldier's perception of the Army is often based on the contact they have with junior officers and junior NCOs. We should not demand dedication and loyalty, we should earn it. We can earn it by living up to high standards. We, as young leaders, shouldn't expect other soldiers to live up to standards we don't meet ourselves.

How many times have we all seen a fellow soldier with his hands in his pockets, a messy uniform, boots unshined, long hair or with his head gear kicked back or worn indoors.

In today's Army we constantly strive to keep up with modern technology and basic administration, but we can't lose sight of basic leadership and professionalism.

When a leader eyes a soldier in need of correction, that leader should make that correction whenever possible. Both the leader and the soldier should then pause, reflect and learn. Making a uniform correction can be a humiliating and embarrassing situation for the soldier being corrected, so how and where the correction is made is important.

We shouldn't just exist in the Army. We should have a purpose. We should have a message for fellow soldiers. We should make a statement by the way we wear our uniform. That same old infantry colonel also told me, "Cream will rise to the top." We as junior leaders must set a good example and generate results.

"We have to shy away from the attitude "superior by virtue of rank" and become "superior by virtue of performance."

Will Rogers once said, "I never met a man I didn't like." Perhaps he was referring to the fact that no matter what walk of life a person comes from, we can all find something likable about him or her. In the Army we can truly find people from all walks of life.

A good soldier is not necessarily one who doesn't make mistakes, but a good soldier is one who doesn't make the same mistake twice. We should learn from our mistakes and drive on. We must also never forget when we judge others that we are all human and are subject to the same universal human fallibilities. Humiliation is not in any soldier's job description. Heartfelt compassion is a very necessary leadership trait.

Leaders should come out from behind their desk and sit down and talk to the soldier on a human level. The soldier will respect that gesture.

To earn respect we must lead by example. The dedication, loyalty, respect and one's willingness to sacrifice and give one's all will flow naturally to leaders like this. Men who epitomize leadership like the Champoux's, Hitchcock's, and Hallum's whom I have had the privilege of working for in the past make the Army the best thing going.

We should try to positively influence all the soldiers we come into contact with. There is no place in the Army for self-serving individuals. Those who lack intrinsic motivation should do all fellow soldiers a favor and find another profession. This great country and its way of life as we know it today should not be taken for granted. The nation has entrusted its faith for survival in every new officer and NCO in uniform.

Reader questions contracting out

Letter

Editor, the Bayonet:

The problems and questions relating to "Contracting Out" have been too numerous to fathom in a short-subject story such as this; but, I think the subject needs to be addressed over and over again.

I've heard that the taxpayer isn't really going to be spared in the long run under the contract system. Since there are so few people who really know anything about the system . . . and yet, we are all going to be footing the bills that the contractor charges the government for whatever type performance is given; I guess we will just have to ask the folks in Commercial Activities just what has made this "Contracting Out" such a grand idea?

Taking a glance at the laundry system of this installation as an example: There has probably been more clothing and equipment damaged (requiring replacement) than what the old Quartermaster laundry system damaged over the period of 10 years running.

Maybe we could get a response to this issue from Commercial Activities or even from one of our local representatives (Sam Nunn or Richard Ray) since they may be more knowledgeable about what Congress, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, and the rest of these highly paid folks really think is going to happen to our economy.

I can imagine the other taxpayers and what they are trying to figure out about this system, and what the outcome will be. The way it looks to some of us right now, it is not going to be a timesaver, and will certainly not be a moneysaver for the taxpayers. This is strictly my opinion.

CG's message

The Tri-Community Combined Federal Campaign has been successfully concluded.

Since the consolidated fund drive inception 15 years ago, the enthusiastic participation by personnel at Fort Benning and other federal employees in this area allowed us to achieve our goal each year.

This year's objective of $450,000 was surpassed by over $53,000, a new record in charitable giving.

The concern and support for others demonstrated by you in this combined effort are in keeping with the true American tradition.

The over one hundred agencies, including 14 here at Fort Benning assisted by this fund, received direct benefit from your contribution, so vital to the continuation of humanitarian programs.

You can all be proud of your achievement in this campaign. I am deeply grateful for the unselfish generosity of those who gave.

Project officers, key persons and campaign volunteers throughout the tri-community area who contributed their time and talents to the success of this fund drive are especially commended.

My personal congratulations are extended to all the Fort Benning team for your outstanding support of this most worthy cause.

Master gunner instructors take job seriously

By Bill Muller
29th Infantry Regiment

29th Inf.

Their mission is to train selected noncommissioned officers as Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle master gunners.

The instructors of the Instructor Detachment, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, take their job of training master gunners seriously.

"Master gunners are a highly sought after commodity," SFC Edward Tilson, principal instructor of the training said. "When (soldiers) leave here they will know everything there is to know about the Bradley."

During the 60-day training period, the students are taught maintenance of the Bradley and its weapons systems. And all aspects of gunnery, Tilson said.

"The subject matter taught in this course is constantly (changing) in doctrine and equipment," he said. "It takes a smart soldier to make it through this course."

The standards are extremely high. On the written examination, soldiers must maintain an 80 percent average. "If they fail a hands-on test, they get one retest and after that they are subject to dismissal," Tilson said.

According to SSgt. Elmer Davis, an instructor, the soldiers' mission is an important one.

Once a master gunner returns to his unit, he is responsible for training other members of his unit to be effective gunners, Davis said. "He is the commander's right hand man."

Although gunnery is stressed during the course, maintenance is also important, Davis said.

"If the vehicle and the weapons systems are not well maintained, the system isn't as effective," he said.

For the soldiers who successfully complete this course, there is a newly defined sense of purpose, said SSgt. Michael Reynolds, a master gunner student.

"I'm in this course because there is a definite need for people who know the Bradley completey," he said. "I'm here because I want to be that person."

Master gunner students must become Bradley experts, according to Tilson.

"(They) will be constantly giving information to the commander," Tilson said. "(They) must have confidence and credibility to do this."

"When these soldiers complete this course, they will know what to do in any situation," Tilson said.

29th Infantry unit snares maintenance excellence award

By Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment

29th Inf.

The Training and Doctrine Command's best company-level light density unit is right here at Fort Benning.

Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment was recently awarded. Chief of Staff Army Award for Maintenance Excellence in the light density category.

According to 1st Lt. David Rurup, executive officer, D Company, the unit was cited for having the best overall maintenance posture during the period Jan. 1 to Sept. 30, 1985.

The areas judged were operation readiness, safety, prescribed load list, cost effectiveness, unit personnel strength in relation to Army mission and personnel training.

The company had no maintenance related accidents during the year, maintained a lower operation cost during fiscal year 85 than FY 84, managed a "good" personnel training program all year and operated with only 60 percent of its authorized maintenance staff, Rurup says.

"Despite the high rate of vehicles used to support the U.S. Army Infantry Center, Delta Company maintained a high operation readiness rate," Rurup said.

The unit is charged with the upkeep of the M-2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle and the M-3 Bradley Cavalry Fighting Vehicle. It is also responsible for several different wheeled vehicles and the M-88 recovery vehicle.

Rurup attributes the overall efficiency of the company's performance to team effort. "The dedication, initiative and professionalism displayed by unit- and battalion-level personnel is reflected in the unit achieving an overall 85 percent operational readiness rating," he says.

The Chief of Staff Army Maintenance Excellence Award completion is conducted annually. Winners of the TRADOC-level awards ae selected to compete in the Department of the Army-level competition.

The TRADOC categories include light, medium and heavy Table of Distribution and Allowance units.

Course prepares guest USARSA instructors for duties

By Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Guest instructors at the U.S. Army School of the Americas are assigned here to do just that — instruct.

However, before assuming platform duties at USARSA, each instructor must graduate from the Facilty Development Program course.

The two week self-paced course covers 14 modules, all of which may be completed in Spanish or English.

Currently experiencing a turnover in instructors, USARSA has its FADEP course in full swing.

"Since many guest instructors left in December and January, we're teaching new instructors the techniques used in presenting a class," said Gary Miskovsky, training technician at FADEP.

Instructors are taught principles of the learning process and performance-oriented training. The course also trains instructors in writing performance training objectives and using different testing methods.

Instructors learn communication and motivational skills and how to formulate effective instruction using visual aids.

There are currently 97 U.S. military instructors and 44 Latin American guest instructors assigned to USARSA.

The FADEP division, which is part of the Directorate of Training and Development at USARSA, has 40 cubicle-type learning centers.

"FADEP's individual learning center features color TVs, videocassette players and slide projectors," Miskovsky said. FADEP also offers instructors more than 500 pre-recorded video tapes that supplement video-taped presentations. During the playback critique, instructors can review their presentation and improve on their weaknesses.

The instruction modules use the "empirical design process" and when completed, students prepare and give three presentations of five, 20 and 50-minutes using guided discussion and demonstration techniques of discussion, according to Miskovsky.

"The course follows the Training and Doctrine Command's System Approach to Training guideline," Miskovsky said. "We emphasize performance-oriented training in all our modules."

While Miskovsky mainly assists instructors on proper audio-visual equipment use, FADEP's training instructors also run a full-time operation.

Ann Davidson, Vilma Kyle and Antonio Cartagena all training instructors and evaluators, also run a language lab. They conduct Spanish language classes for U.S. instructors at the school.

They also evaluate how in-

USARSA

structors present a class in Spanish using standardized military jargon.

"For example, 'mayor' in one country could mean 'comandante' in another, but at USARSA they both mean major in Spanish," Miskovsky said.

The FADEP course gives the instructor immediate feedback tailored to that instructor's particular needs. This is done through personal interviews with training instructors, according to Miskovsky.

Miskovsky, who is bilingual as a result of being raised in the former Panama Canal Zone, said he likes his job. "I get along great with all incoming instructors and students. Sometimes I learn things from them, because they conduct training somewhat differently in Latin America. This is a great place to work," he said.

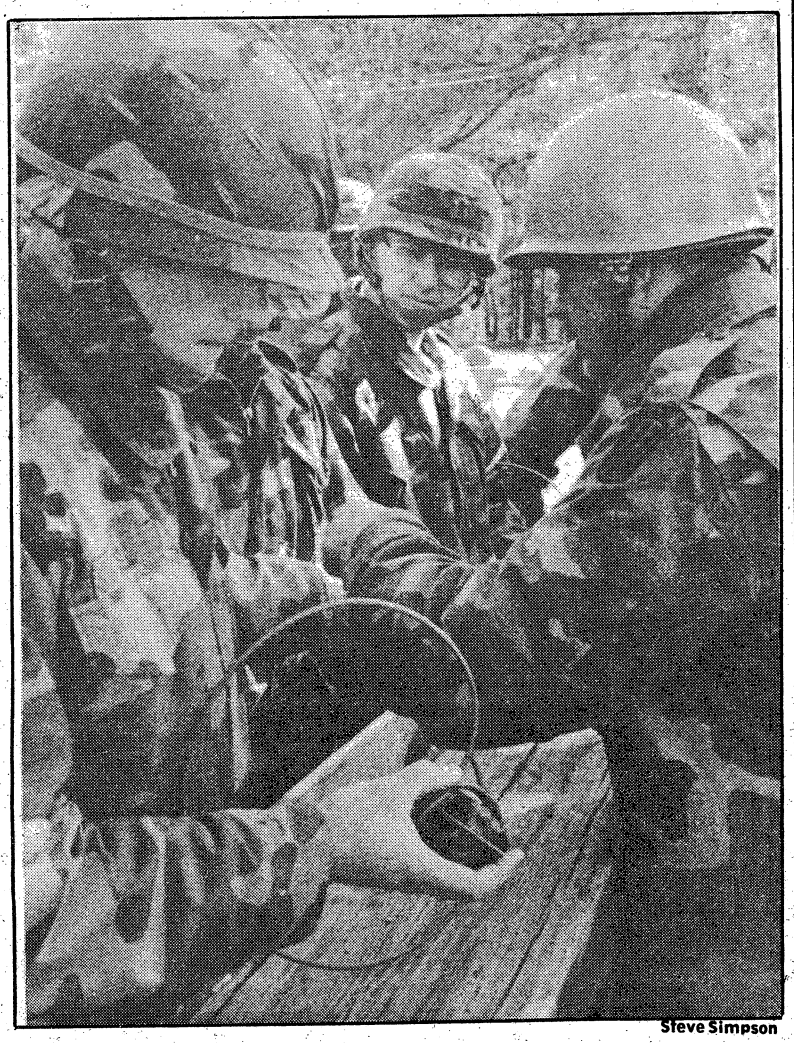
72nd Engineers do booming business supporting Brown Demolitions Range

By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

A regular stop for many students going through the U.S. Army Infantry School is Brown Demolitions Range on Fort Benning.

There, most soldiers have their first glimpse of such things as TNT and concertina wire.



When USAIS conducts classes at Brown Range, the 72nd Engineer Company, 197th Infantry Brigade is usually on hand to help teach them combat engineer missions.

According to SSgt. Mike Spakowski, an engineer platoon sergeant, the unit helps USAIS instructors train students in skills such as demolitions and building and breeching obstacles.

For example, Infantry Officer Basic Course students receive a block of instruction in demolitions. The students break into small groups for hands-on instruction under the watchful eyes of the 72nd Engineers while they learn to prime a block of TNT using detonation cord or electric firing systems.

But, before the engineers can assist in this support mission, they receive special instruction in demolitions. Once demolitions qualified, the soldiers act as assistant instructors, insuring that students learn how to correctly handle and utilize explosives.

The engineers provide assets to support other USAIS classes. The Infantry Officer Advanced Course and the Advanced Noncommissioned Course students learn to build and breech obstacles on an obstacle course on Brown Range.

Steve Simpson

RANGE SUPPORT — PFC Lance Strange (r) assists Infantry Officer Basic Course students in demolitions training on Brown Range.

"We set up obstacles such as tank ditches and concertina wire obstacles, and provide armored personnel carriers for breeching demonstrations," Spakowski said.

The 72nd engineers view this mission as training for their soldiers as well.

"Supporting the school is good training for our soldiers," he said, "because it's an opportunity for hands on experience in the combat engineer Military Occupational Specialty rather than just unit level training."

VA Q and A

Editor's Note — Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — My ex-husband receives disability compensation. Our 10 year-old son lives with me. Can I receive some of the compensation for my son?

A — You may apply for an apportionment of your ex-husband's compensation by contacting your nearest VA regional office.

Q — I am a veteran enrolled in college and I am having trouble with certain subjects. Can I get tutorial assistance? What are the requirements?

A — Veterans and other eligible persons may receive supplemental assistance for tutorial assistance if attending school on a halftime or more basis and have a deficiency in a critical subject.

Q — I own a manufactured home on a rented lot. I would like to purchase a lot for it. Can I do this using the VA guaranteed loan program?

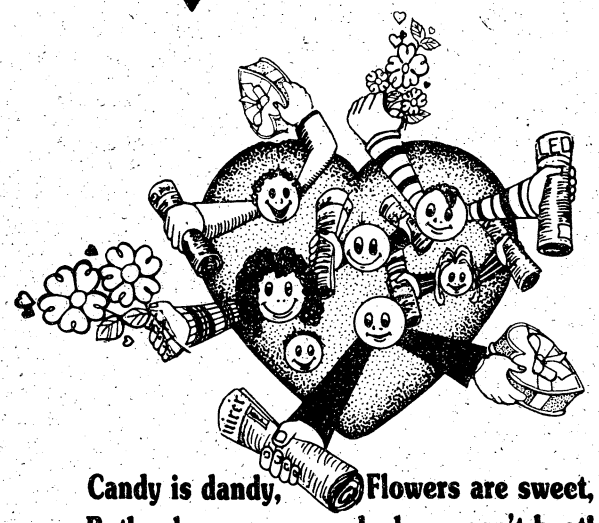
A — Yes. A VA guaranteed loan my be used to buy and improve a lot on which to place a manufactured home you already own and occupy.

Q — May a veteran who is eligible for education benefits under two different laws receive benefits concurrently for the game educational program?

A — No.

Q — While a patient in a VA medical center I received a small amount of money for participating in a work therapy program. Will this affect my income limit for receiving VA pension benefits?

A — Yes. Earnings from VA sponsored compensated work therapy or incentive therapy programs constitute income for VA pension purposes.



Q — Is income from an annuity or endowment insurance considered income for VA pension purposes?

A — Yes. Gross amounts of an annuity or endowment will be considered income as received.

Q — Can I use my VA home loan guaranty to purchase a duplex?

A — Yes. One veteran's entitlement may be used to purchase up to a maximum of 4 family units, one of which is to be occupied by the veteran. Two eligible veterans may combine their entitlement to purchase up to a maximum of 6 units. (VA)

197th plots strategy in preparation for NTC

Bill Muller

PLOTTING — 1st Lt. Paul Lombardi plots information reported by units during last week's CPX.

By Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

197th

For several tense hours last week, the 197th Infantry brigade was at war. But not a shot was fired.

In fact, most of the Brigade's soldiers did not even leave their garrison duties to go and fight the war. It was fought on a large game board and was one of the many ways leaders in the 197th have been preparing for their upcoming rotation to the National Training Center (NTC) at Fort Irwin, Calif.

Last week's command post exercise (CPX) involved the Brigade headquarters; 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry; 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery; 197th Support Battalion; and many other units deploying with the Brigade to NTC this month. Each of the elements manned a fully operational Tactical Operations Center (TOC) located on or around Kelley Hill while company commanders hunched over the game board.

Captain Reuben Maynard from the Brigade S-3 section explained, "This type of exercise allows company commanders to fight battles at company level. It also forces them to generate most of the same reports they'll be using at NTC."

Capt. Maynard and other Brigade officers controlled the day-long CPX while commanders at each level received and issued orders to set the game in motion. The troops that fought the battles were represented by numbers on maps and charts. It was, for the most part, a mental exercise to get leaders into an NTC frame of mind.

29th Inf. motor pool expands service area

By Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment Motor Pool extended its service area by two acres during a recent ribbon-cutting ceremony.

The nine-month project concluded with the construction of a new maintenance facility wing that will enable personnel to service as many as three times the volume of vehicles it now handles, said Capt. Mark Galle, battalion maintenance officer.

Also, the motor pool mechanics will be able to provide a lot better service to the Infantry School, Galle said.

Col. James Ellis, U.S. Army Infantry Center Chief of Staff, cut the ribbon dedicating the new building.

in•ter•ven•tion - Alcoholism and drug dependency are diseases of denial. This means that it usually takes a crisis to force a percon suffering from drinking or drugging problems to accept treatment. This crisis could be loss of a job or an automobile accident. An intervention is a controlled confrontation between the patient and his or her family or employer. Good treatment programs such as the Help Unit at Cobb Memorial Hospital help employers or families intervene effectively while the chance for recovery is still good.

Community Life Program still striving to improve the quality of life on post

By Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Improving the 'quality of life' for the soldier has been a concept adopted by the Army since the creation of the Community Life Program.

The CLP was established at Fort Benning in 1973. Due to its success, the program was implemented Army-wide.

"The objectives of the program are to create and foster an atmosphere of mutual cooperation and to create a formal line of communication, to identify and resolve community issues," said Capt. Robert G. Swofford Jr., Assistant Community Life Officer.

The Community Life Office was formed under the Directorate of Personnel and Community Actions. Also established were the Community Life Centers.

"We are an action office, said Swofford. When the community voices a concern, generally through the Mayors, we then channel available resources through the proper agencies to ensure that those voices are heard."

Mayors serve as the principal community volunteers responsible for developing and implementing projects that will improve the quality of life for the residents.

Recently the Community Life Centers, with the aid of the Chaplains and Fire Departments, made the holiday season a more enjoyable one for several families. Families were provided with food, toys and special gifts of concern.

"We want to assure the community that Fort Benning helps it's own," said Swofford.

The Community Life Centers coordinates the post distribution of milk and cheese to those families who qualify.

In addition, community problems are addressed in the Adolescence Advisory meetings.

These meetings deal with the community youth who may have gotten involved in mischievous activities.

Recommendations are made, according to the severity of the incident, as to what type of community work the youth must do for the neighborhood.

Fort Benning has been divided into six communities, each having elected a mayor responsible for representing that neighborhood.

There are many volunteers in the Community Life systems who are concerned about improving the 'quality of life' for the Fort Bennning soldier.

Strategy

For several weeks leaders from all of the Brigade's units have maintained a hectic schedule of events designed to prepare them for the three-week NTC rotation.

Many of the units conducted a wide variety of classes, field training exercises and other events. 2nd Lt. Ted Jensen, 1st Bn, 58th Infantry, explained that his battalion held a series of classes on tactics, maintenance and Nuclear, Biological, Chemical (NBC) topics.

"We had some MILES experts come out and show us better ways to install our MILES equipment," said Jensen. "If we can obtain a better zero, we hope to become more accurate."

Other units planned activities as well. For example, 2nd Bn, 69th Armor, planned a three-day seminar for all of their E-7s and above that covered topics ranging from offensive measures to cold weather hints.

Aside from the events scheduled by units, leaders took part in more formal training events that included actual trips to the desert.

Battalion commanders and S-3s went to Fort Irwin for a program sponsored by U.S. Army Forces Command. This oriented the leaders to the environment and gave them a chance to visit with commanders from other installations who were going through a rotation.

Colonel William Hartzog, 197th Grigade commander, explained that the mixture of training events was to get leaders to focus their attention on one piece of the operation at a time. Hopefully, they'll be able to put it all together in the desert.

It's the stress, however, that many feel toughens soldiers and leaders. Col. Hartzog feels that a productive training period at NTC is one where leaders "stretch themselves more than usual, seeing mistakes and correcting them. But we're going to accomplish that in a safe manner."

Last week's CPX was wrapped up with a final briefing during which leaders discussed those things they wanted to improve on at NTC.

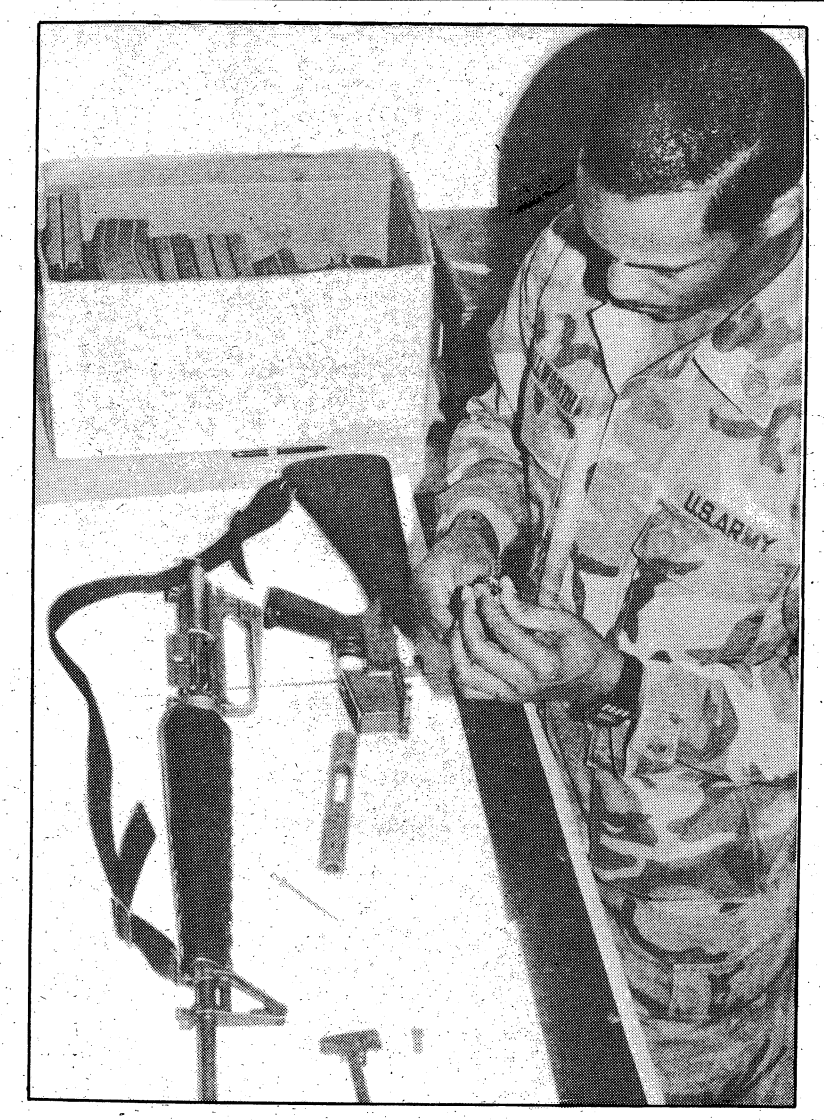
Service Battery supply sergeant's main duty is securing unit weapons

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

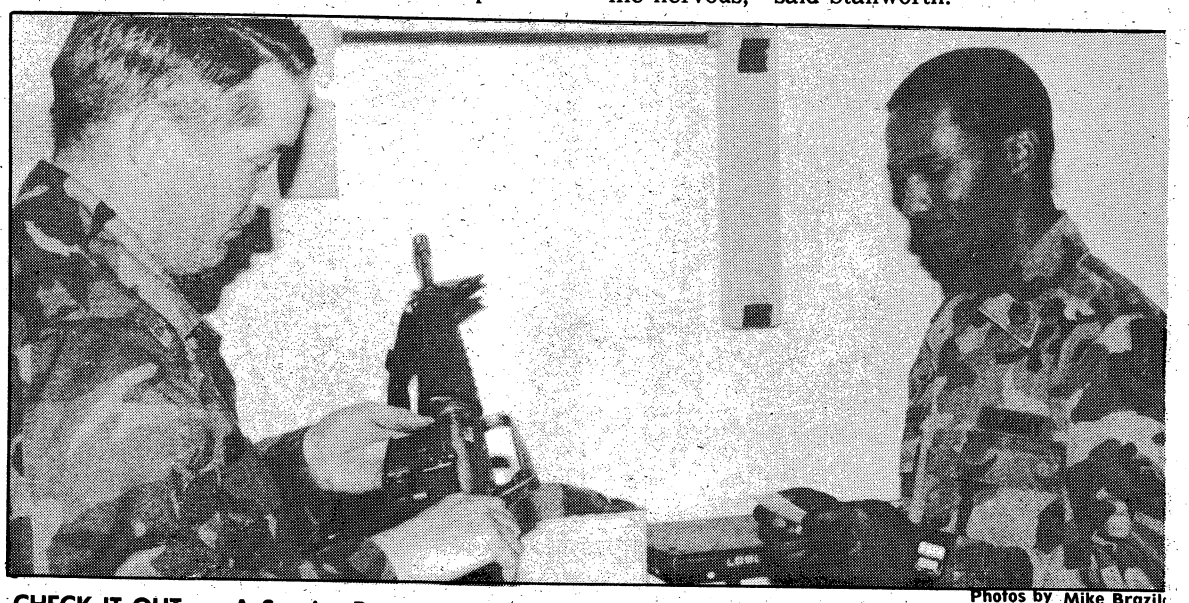
SSgt. Harold Stallworth is the keeper of the guns for Service Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery.

"I'm a supply sergeant and one of my duties is taking care of the arm's room," said Stallworth.



Stallworth has 68 M16 rifles, five .45 caliber pistols, four M3A1 grease guns, two .50 caliber machineguns and five M60 machine guns.

A battery armorer's primary responsibility is accountability and security of the unit's weapons. The armorer must also ensure that all operator's maintenance is performed in a timely and correct manner.



"I have to pull a daily physical inspection of all weapons. My primary concern is security. You can't have 'almost all' of your weapons accounted for. It's either 100 percent or I'm in trouble," said Stallworth.

The armorer related that he and his battery commander recently conducted a 100 percent inventory. Stallworth said his hands were sweating during the entire inspection.

"I was sure they were all there but it still made me nervous," said Stallworth.

DENTAC has mouthful of activities planned for Dental Health Month

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

In conjunction with National Childrens Dental Health Month the folks from Dental Activity have something for the children to sink their teeth into.

The DENTAC of Fort Benning has a month full of activities planned to carry the message of dental health and proper hygiene importance.

"We are doing public awareness types of things like visiting schools and putting up posters," Karen Wetherell, the Community Health dental hygienist said.

Representaives from DENTAC will be conducting presentations, showing films and conducting puppet shows to interest the students in proper dental hygiene.

Wetherell said that they will provide information on flouride, nutrition and dental hygiene to the elementary and middle schools.

The representatives will do a general screening exam of the children and send home notices of their mouth and health status.

1986 is an important year for voters; soldiers should check their state's slate

Although 1986 is not a presidential election year, it remains an important year for voters because one-third of the members of the Senate, all House members and numerous state and local officials will be elected, said Caspar W. Weinberger Jr., in a recent defense Department memorandum.

This year's general election will be held Nov. 4. Listed here are the dates of scheduled elections by state and territory:

There are seven states holding primary runoffs, if necessary. Runoff elections are held when noe of the candidates has a majority of the votes. For example, "if there are three or more candidates from the same party and one receives 40 percent of the votes, another 38 percent, and the third receives the balance, then no one candidate has a clear majority," said Henry Valentino, director of the Federal Voting Assistance Program.

Your unit voting assistance officer can give you more specific details and instructions to apply for absentee ballots for yourself and eligible family members. (ARNEWS)

Reg spells out energy conservation program

The USAIC Regulation 11-27 provides the polices and procedures for conducting the installation energy conservation program and efficiently managing energy resources. It applies to all units and activities located at Fort Benning. It also provides for the personnel to implement and carry out the program.

The Energy Conservation Officer (ECO) of each unit or activity is the single point of contact to coordinate and expedite actions on energy matters. The ECO will appoint a building monitor to make daily temperature checks in his building to ensure compliance with the Emergency Building Temperature Restrictions (EBTR).

Each unit will also have a CAT Team (Conservation Assistance and Training). These individuals should be familiar with the latest methods and techniques of utlilities conservation.

All of the above energy comnservation personnel must receive the two-hour training course conducted by the DEH Facilities Training School. They will be issued a Certificate of Training upon satisfactory completion of the course. If these people perform their duties, Fort Benning will accomplish two goals: Energy awareness and TRADOC energy targets. (Energy Office)

Taking care of post visitors is just one of Protocol's many responsibilities

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Staffers in the Protocol Division never know what foreign visitors to post will do next.

"Once some Australian cadets had this rubber duck that they put in various places, like under a car tire, and took pictures of it to make postcards to send home," said PFC James Plants, a driver for the office. "They played football with the duck, right out on the front lawn of Building 4. It was really funny."

According to Ann Hill, chief of the division, Fort Benning played host to about 4,000 VIP visitors in the past year."Some come as individuals, some in groups as large as 250," she said. "It's just one of our missions to plan itineraries and see that the visitors are comfortable. We're also responsible for official hosting and entertaining."

Besides taking care of the Marshal House and Green Hall guest houses, "We extend invitations, arrange meals, take care of flags and a lot of little details and support requirements," Hill said.

Protocol arranges for security and even entertains the wives of visitors. "We tailor the itinerary to the needs and desires of the visitors. While the men are doing official stuff, we take the women around," Hill said.

Taking the women around usually consists of a tour of the Columbus Historic District which Hill feels is representative of the south.

"Many times the visitor will only have two weeks to see the whole United States, so this is always nice to do," Hill said.

Time is crucial to the 16 Protocol personnel who must maintain a high degree of flexibility and patience to meet the changing needs of the visitor.

As the weather changes, so do the needs of the visitors. "The changing weather causes more problems than anything else. I may have 200 people scheduled for outdoors at the Jones', but if it rains everything changes. We always have an inclement weather plan," she said.

Changes in the status of the escorts (who go with the drivers and show the visitors around) can also alter plans.

Probably the most frequent problem, excluding weather, is visitor cancellations.

"VIPs can change plans anytime. It takes as much to cancel a visit as it does to set it up. Everything that is set up takes just as much effort to take down," Hill said.

"They may cancel just one visit on the itinerary list and the whole schedule will have to be changed," SP4 Irwin Pope, a Protocol driver said.

But the staff adapts to the changes and has learned to expect the unexpected.

Many people help make a visitor's time here special."We deal with every unit, command and agency on this post. What we do impacts on every one of them. We really depend heavily on everyone to get our job done. It takes a massive effort from everyone on post and they do it well," she said.

Hill has met a variety of VIPs, from multi-starred generals to movie stars. She has also been on hand to greet Presidents Carter and Ford and well as President Reagan while he was a presidential candidate.

A frequent visitor is John O. Marsh, Secretary of the Army.

"He is one of our biggest fans. He has very close ties here through OCS (Officer Candidate School) and Airborne," Hill said.

It's not a job for everyone."The pace is so fast and very demanding. If you don't like what you're doing you shouldn't be doing it, and if its not fun you're doing it wrong," Hill said.

MEDAL — McNair presents the medal to Mrs. Williams as her husband looks on.

Parents of deceased post soldier receive son's posthumous award

SP4 Andrew E. Williams Jr., who died last September in a car accident at Fort Benning, was posthumously awarded the Army Commendation Medal here recently.

The Rev. and Mrs. Andrew E. Williams of Hampton, Va. accepted the award for their son from Maj. Gen. Carl H. McNair Jr., the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command chief of staff.

Their son was a physical fitness specialist in C Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery at Fort Benning.

The award was presented for "exceptionally meritorious service from Oct. 24, 1984 to Sept. 20, 1985," and cited the younger Williams for "outstanding initiative, creative imagination and untiring dedication" in his job.

Ash Wednesday, season of Lent remind us sins can be forgiven

By Chaplain Robert Washington
5th Bn., 1st ITB

Ash Wednesday, which falls on February 12th this year, marks the beginning of Lent on the Christian calendar. The name Ash Wednesday comes from the practice of imposing the ashes of a burnt palm on the forehead. As the ashes are applied the words, "Remember, Man, that thou art dust, and to dust thou shalt return," are spoken.

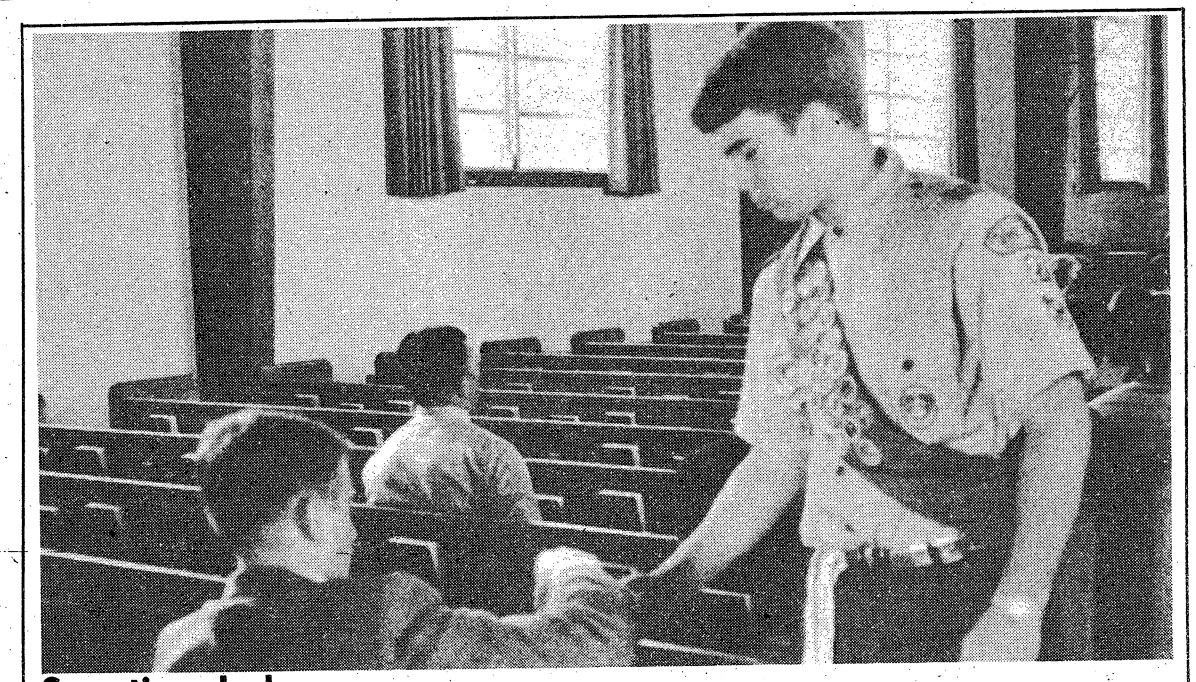
As early as the fourth century the season of Lent was observed as a season of penance for those who had committed serious public sins or scandal.

For a period beginning on Ash Wednesday and ending on Holy Thursday the penitents were barred from church and forbidden to take Holy Communion. They went barefoot and abstained from certain foods. They were not allowed to talk with other people and were separated from their families. The penitents were not allowed to bathe or cut their hair. They slept on the ground or on straw mats.

Their time was occupied with prayers, manual labor, and works of charity. On Holy Thursday the penitents were absolved from their sins and admitted to Holy Communion.

To some of us, immersed as we are in a society which places a high premium on the pursuit of happiness and personal pleasure, these early observances seem strange and harsh.

But perhaps they can teach us a valuable lesson. A wise old preacher once said, "To everything here is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven . . . A time to weep and a time to laugh; a time to mourn and a time to dance."



You may recognize those words from the Book of Ecclesiastes in the Bible. The writer of another book in the Bible, the Book of James, used even stronger language: "Be miserable and mourn and weep. Let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to tears." (James 4:9)

The explanation for these Biblical exhortations to misery and mourning and weeping is found in an old fashion word, sin. Most of us would admit that we are less than perfect: that we are thoughtless, careless, and sometimes even cruel in our dealings with other people; that we are neglectful of our duty, irreverent, and at times downright rebellious in our dealings with out God.

Jesus said in the Sermon on the Mount, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." He described the godly as those who mourn over their sin.

One of the most beautiful passages of Scripture is Isaiah 61:1-3: "The Spirit of the Sovereign Lord is on me . . . to comfort all who mourn, and provide for those who grieve in Zion — to bestow on them a crown of beauty instead of ashes, the oil of gladness instead of mourning, and a garment of praise instead of a spirit of despair." Those who are affected by their sin to sincere sorrow and remorse find divine forgiveness to be truly "the oil of gladness instead of mourning, and a garment of praise instead of a spirit of despair."

The first step in the process of divine forgiveness is coming to a sincere sorrow for our sin. Ash Wednesday and the season of Lent which follows can serve as a reminder that those who go through the process of mourning over their sin can be forgiven, can be given "a crown of beauty for ashes."

Annual prayer breakfast is set for Feb. 11

By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's annual prayer breakfast is planned for Feb. 11 in the Officer's Club. The event is part of a nationwide fellowship symbolized by the National Prayer Breakfast in Washinton, D.C.

Military installations world-wide hold similar gatherings to observe the event.

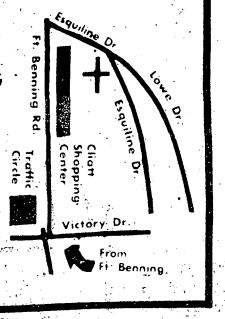
At the 197th Infantry Brigade however, a prayer breakfast is more than just an annual event. The brigade chaplains conduct an ongoing program throughout the year.

According to Chaplain (Capt.) Ray Harper, the focus of the program is to remind soldiers of the need for spiritual development in their lives. The prayer breakfast offers them a framework to do that, he said.

The chaplains share ideas and coordinate efforts to insure that the program's success continues. Chaplain (Capt.) Lee Dudley said the program offers soldiers a chance to get together in a different setting away from their daily routine.

"A prayer breakfast builds unit cohesion," Dudley said. "It also offers soldiers a chance to participate in planning the event and it's a good way to start off the day."

Often, the breakfasts offer guest speakers who share thoughts on a variety of subjects. Soldiers of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor listened to the 197th Brigade Commander Col. William Hartzog address the unit at a recent prayer breakfast.



Last week, nearly 30 soldiers of the 179th Military Intelligence Detachment gathered at the 197th Brigade's Separate Units Dining Facility for a prayer breakfast. Chaplain Harper addressed the group on the subject of responsibility.

1st Lt Debra Graham, executive officer of the detachment, said that the group comprised more than one half the entire detachment.

"Everyone enjoyed getting together for this," Graham said, "and the comments shared by Chaplain Harper were very pertinent to the soldiers lives."

Waiting Wives group: Army Community Service sponsors a Waiting Spouse Support Group to meet the needs of family members whose spouse is on an unaccompanied tour. The purpose of the group is to provide information, assist with problems and meet others in similar circumstances. The group meets the first and third Sunday of each month at 1 p.m. in Building 2642 on Collins Loop. For more information, call Mr. Duggins at 545-1233.

Tax assistance: Military retirees, their family members and widows can get help preparing their income tax returns at Army Community Service. An appointment is required. Call 545-5516, or stop by the ACS office in Building 2634 in Splinter Village.

Pet registration: According to post regulations, all pets must be registered within 14 days of arriving on post at the Veterinary Facility, Building 265 on 10th Division Road. Call 545-4444 for more information.

Applicants wanted: The Military Personnel Center announces the reopening of the Warrant Officer Flight Program for in-service personnel. The following non-waiverable requirements must be met to qualify: a minimum GTscore of 110; a minimum of 90 on the Flight Selection Test and candidates must be age 30 or below upon entry in the flight training. Candidates must pass a flight physical and complete an acceptance interview with a field grade aviator. For more information, call Ms. Horne at 545-1402.

Scholarship available: The Society of American Military Engineers is soliciting applications for a $600 scholarship. Applicants must use the scholarship in an approved two, three or four year curriculum leading to a degree and live within a 150-mile radius of Fort Benning. Students in engineering or advanced ROTC will be given priority consideration. Application deadline is March 31. For more information, call George Perdue at 545-1932 or George Kennedy at 545-2804.

Pre-school spaces available: A Small World Pre-school on Custer Road has openings available. For more information, call 544-1623 between the hours of 9 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Dental records: All soldiers on active duty for training periods of 30 days or longer and all soldiers deploying overseas must have dental records including an identificaion panographic radiograph. This record must be on file with the appropriate dental facility approved by the Army commander or state adjutant general prior to TDY or PCS travel.

Dental records will not be taken on TDY trips regardless of duration. Upon PCS, a duplicate panographic radiograph will be kept on file by the losing dental facility. This radiograph will be filed prior to the soldier's completion of outprocessing and annotated on the outprocessing checklist.

Personnel responsible for final clearance must insure that the dental section on the outprocessing checklist is annotated by the servicing dental clinic. For more information, call the DENTAC sergeant major or executive officer at 544-3954.

Child care spaces: Spaces are now available on post for child care in certified homes. Caregivers are trained and inspected before being allowed to keep children in their home. For more information, call Becky Carroll at 545-3328.

Volunteers needed: The Volunteer Resource Center serves as a clearinghouse for all volunteers on post. Some current volunteer positions open include receptionists, AER relief clerks, buget counselors and Thrift Shop workers. The Red Cross needs caseworkers and safety instructors. The National Infantry Museum needs tour guides. Trainers are needed to serve as facilitators in many areas. Training and babysitting is provided. For more information, call Pat Sneed at 545-5602, or stop by the office at 301 McIver Street.

Aerobics class: The Officers Wives' Club will offer aerobics classes every week for people who want to slim down. Classes meet on Tuesday and Thursday from 7 to 8 p.m. and Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. Classes are taught by certified instructors. For more information, call Barbara Sims at 682-9780.

Taxpayers tend to make same mistakes each year

Each year there are some predictable trouble spots with federal income tax forms, according to the Internal Revenue Service. These are areas where large numbers of taxpayers make incorrect entries and thereby slow the processing of tax forms.

These trouble spots fall into two broad categories: problems that recur each year, such as taxpayers selecting the incorrect figure from the tax tables; and problems that stem from changes in the tax laws and forms from one year to the next, such as the addition of a new line to a form or the shift of an existing line to a new position on the form.

Not surprisingly, the largest percentage of errors is made on Form 1040, the so-called long form. To assist filers of this form, IRS has compiled the following list of problem areas to double-check:

● Medical Deductions. This item is not entered on Form 1040, but on a related Schedule A. Because Schedule A was redesigned last year, this item will probably be one of the leaders on the list of last year's most common errors. Due to rule changes on medical deductions, IRS expects problems again this year. Be sure to check the limitation on medical expenses.

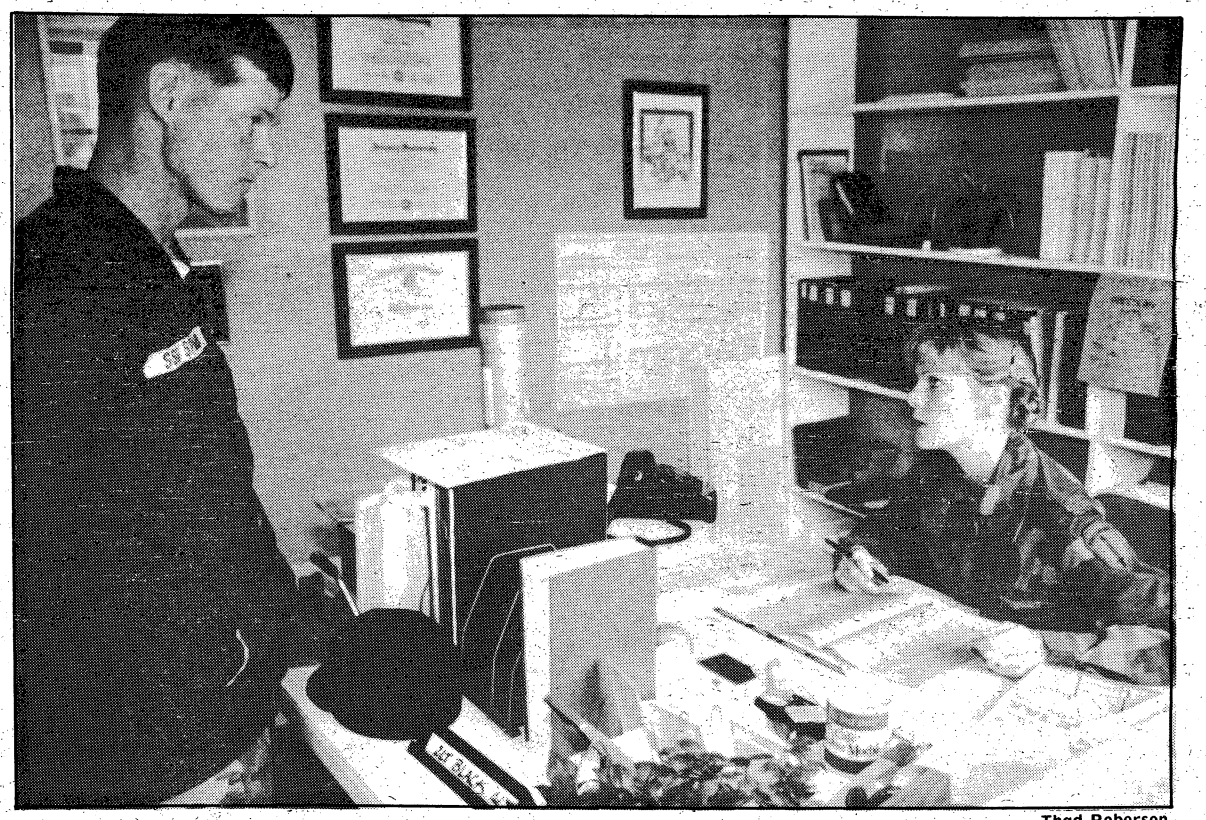
● Unemployment compensation. Double-check your figures on the worksheet in the tax instruction booklet (page 10), and make appropriate entries on lines 20a and 20b.

● Child Care Credit. Read instructions carefully and double-check your computations on Form 2441, Credit for Child and Disabled Dependent Care Expenses. Enter the figure on line 41 and attach Form 2441 to your return.

● Balance Due/Refund. This important item usually makes the list of most common errors. If your total tax (line 56) is larger than your total payments made (line 64), enter the difference on line 68, Amount You Owe. Follow the instructions for remitting payment. If the reverse is true, enter the difference on line 65, Overpaid. Enter on line 66, Refunded to You, the portion of the line 65 overpayment that you want refunded to you.



● Earned Income Credit (EIC) Not Claimed. If you are a working parent and have at least one child living with you, and if your adjusted gross income (line 32) is less than $11,000, you probably qualify. See page 16 of the instructions.

● EIC Error or Not Qualified. Make sure you are qualified. Certain expectations must be met, and you must have a dependent child living with you and you must have worked during the year. Follow the instruction carefully and enter on line 59.

● Dividends. You must complete and attach Schedule B if you have over $400 in dividend income. Enter your total dividends on line 9a; your exclusion (up to $100 for individual filers, up to $200 for married filing jointly) on line 9b; and enter the difference (subtract line 9b from 9a) on line 9c.

● Income Computation. This is an outgrowth of item 8, since the taxpayers who miscompute their dividend income will have an error on line 23, total income. Double-check these figures.

TAX TIPS — 2nd Lt. Deborah Black, The School Brigade's tax officer, answers tax questions for SSgt. Michael Spann of HHC 1/507th Parachute Infantry.

Income tax Q and A

The Internal Revenue Service has prepared the following questions and answers to help military personnel better understand the requirements for deducting moving expenses.

Q. I recently received orders to report to a new permanent post of duty. What are the deductible moving expenses I may claim?

A. You are entitled to claim certain unreimbursed expenses incurred in moving your possessions, traveling to your new home, looking for a new home before moving, living temporarily in the new area, and selling and buying a home.

Q. What qualifies as a permanent change of station?

A. A permanent change of station includes the following:

● A move from your home to the area of your first post of duty when you begin active duty;

● A move from your last post of duty to your home or a nearer point in the United States, if you move within one year of ending your active duty or within the period allowed under the Joint Travel Regulations; or

● A move from one permanent post of duty to another.

Q. How do I report my moving expenses?

A. Moving expenses to a home within the United States or its possessions must be reported on Form 3903, Moving Expense Adjustment. If you moved to a home outside the United States or its possessions, use Form 3903F, Foreign Moving Expense Adjustment, to report your moving expenses. Attach the appropriate form to your Form 1040. You deduct nonreimbursed moving expenses from gross income to determine adjusted gross income on Form 1040. (AFPS)

Strong offense is best defense against illness

By Thomas P. Goodell
Martin Army Community Hospital

It's winter now — the season for colds and flu. There is no specific cure for either and often sufferers do not know what they have and what to do about their symptoms.

For either one, the best defense is a good offense. This means keeping yourself in tiptop shape through proper diet, exercise and rest.

Both colds and flu are caused by viruses and treatment for both of these is similar. Of the two, flu can be more serious with a longer recovery time and a greater chance of complications, such as pneumonia.

The term "cold" refers to an infection of the upper respiratory tract caused by any of 150 different viruses. Common symptoms include a runny nose, watery eyes, sneezing, slight elevation in temperature, sore throat and a feeling of being chilled. Colds come on gradually and usually resolve in a few days.

Unlike colds, flu developes very suddenly. Like a cold, it causes many of the symptoms listed above, but in addition usually causes a high fever (up to 103 degrees), body and joint aches and a feeling of fatigue and malaise. Flu takes longer to resolve and, in some cases, can be complicated by pneumonia.

Because both colds and flu are caused by viruses, antibiotics are not effective. The treatment for both is rest, increased liquid intake and aspirin or acetaminophen (Tylenol, Panadol) to reduce the fever and relieve pain.

While there is no cure, there are numerous medicines available to relieve the symptoms and help the patient feel better. These medicine are available over-the-counter at a store or by prescription from your doctor. For victims of the flu, a medicine to shorten the disease course (amandatine) may be helpful.

Health

● Smokers are 70 percent more likely to die prematurely than comparable non-smokers.

● Male smokers were found to have lost 33 percent more work days than those who have never smoked and, in female smokers, the rate jumped to 45 percent.

● Lung cancer kills more Americans each year than any other form of cancer.

● 80 percent of all lung cancer deaths are caused by cigarettes and 72,000 smokers died in 1982 as a result of cigarette-caused lung cancer.

● One of every ten Americans alive today will die prematurely due to cigarette-related heart disease.

● It was found that a typical smoker who had been using cigarettes regularly for 20 years and then stopped became healthier after quitting. Within 12 hours after having quit smoking the levels of nicotine and carbon monoxide in the smoker's body declined greatly. The smoker lost his "smoker's cough" and he demonstrated increased physical endurance.

Those are the facts, facts that we've all seen at some time or another. The one glaring fact that stands out in my mind is the 72,000 dead as a direct result of lung cancer caused by smoking.

If the trend just holds at the same mark as 1982, it means this country lost 288,000 people as of 1985 because those people couldn't keep themselves from inhaling tobacco smoke.

Another inferred fact stands out to me also: if you smoke, your chances of having se physical problems and of pre turely dying are multi greatly with each puff you tak

Physically crippled and soldiers can't fight. If the A is to be truly "fit to fig selling tobacco to soldiers at rate prices has no place in Army. Does the act of smo have a place, either? For me answer seems obvious.

Habit

Alcoholism and obesity both interfere with a soldier's performance of duty, but what about smoking?

Smokers regularly pass the PT test, right alongside their non-smoking buddies. A person's level of physical fitness has more to do with whether or not he passes the PT test than if he smokes or not. A smoker who runs every day, lifts weights and exercises, is maintaining his physical readiness.

He may even surpass his non-smoking counterpart who does not spend as much time or place as much emphasis on maintaining a regular exercise program.

So do we ban cigarettes because they are bad for your health?

Unfortunately, soldiering itself can be very bad for one's health. Witness soldiers who died in World Wars I and II, Korea, Vietnam and Grenada. Soldiers know their chances of dying prematurely are higher than an insurance salesman's are. It comes with the territory.

Much as physicians would wish it, good health habits cannot be mandated by law. What we can do is educate people about the risks.

The alternative is to ban everything that is bad for people, including sweets, alcohol and too much sour cream and butter on a baked potato.

Banning the sale of cigarettes will not keep people from smoking, it will just inconvenience smokers who have better things to do with their time than drive offpost to pick up a pac cigarettes.

The key to a soldier's perf ance is his motivation and to achieve. I don't think it anything for anybody's mora have to make a major erran of buying a pack of cigarettes

And making them hard t is certainly not going to people quit smoking.

MPs need your help in crime investigations

Provost marshal

You're walking along and you notice what looks like someone's leg sticking out from under a bush. You walk closer and see that it is a person and there is blood on their forehead

You can see that the grass is crushed down as though someone had been rolling around on the ground. You also see a spilled bottle of beer. It's 2 a.m., and there's no one else in the streets. Something has happened — but what? Now ask yourself: What do I do.

Situations like this happen over and over and people are always faced with the same questions.

This is what you should do if you come upon this type of situation.

If the person has been injured, provide whatever first aid you can. This may be nothing more than trying to make them as comfortable as possible.

If there is someone else nearby, send them for help. If not, then you should leave and get help. It is important to summon assistance as soon as possible since time may be of the upmost importance.

You should try to notify the police first. Many police stations have direct lines to emergency centers which can prevent valuable time from being wasted in looking up numbers.

After summoning help, you should either return to the scene or have the police pick you up where you are.

You will need to explain to medical personnel the condition in which you found the victim and what actions you have taken, if any.

The police will question you as they investigate the incident. This is where your assistance may really count. People who think that the police ask a lot of unnecessary questions may not understand their importance. Any information is useful, and the more the better. You should try to remember:

● The time sequence — when you arrived, when you went for help, when the police arrived.

● What you did — loosened the injured person's clothing, applied first aid, moved the victim to a lighted area.

If you touch or move anything, make sure you let the police know. (Provost Marshal)

Sports

Winter running can be safe, fun if you follow some simple rules

Exercising or competing in the cold can be a safe, pleasant and invigorating experience, provided you follow a few simple rules:

- Dress adequately so that your clothes will help you retain body heat.
- Pay particular attention to protecting your fingers, ears, toes and nose.
- Eat heartily. It takes calories to keep you warm in cold weather.
- Know the warning signs of impending frostbite — a burning and stinging of the skin, redness, numbness and poor hand and foot coordination.

What to wear

Proper winter wear is a must. Sports that require continuous exercise, such as cross-country skiing and running, do not require as much clothing as sports in which the exercise is frequently interrupted, such as downhill skiing, sledding, skating and ski jumping.

While participating in sports, your body produces heat continually — so much so that you sweat profusely. When you stop exercising, you will be covered with sweat and your heat output will decrease. As a result, you will feel cold. This happens commonly to downhill skiers, who generate a great deal of heat as they ski down the slopes. They feel cold when they stand around waiting for the ski lift to carry them back to the top.

In effect, skiiers need two types of clothing: light clothing when they come down the slopes and well-insulated clothing to warm them while they are waiting for the ski lift. For this reason, all participants in stop-and-go sports should layer their clothing.

Multiple layers of clothing trap air between each layer, and air is one of the best insulators. Also, the outer layers of clothing can be added and discarded as needed.

Cotton should be worn next to the body because it carries your sweat away from your skin and keeps your skin from cooling.

Wool is the best material for your outer layer of clothing. Even when it is wet, it will not draw away your body heat. Wool dries from the inside out. Thus, the dry inner part of the woolen jacket still maintains its insulating properties. You won't want to wear wool against your skin. Not only is it itchy, but it also won't carry the sweat away from your skin surface.

A windbreaker may also be worn, but most athletes won't use them because they block the passage of air and increase sweating.

Mittens are superior to gloves because all the fingers warm each other in one compartment. Down is preferred lining because it traps air. The circulating air also allows the mittens to dry between wearings, thus resisting molding.

A woolen cap that covers the ears protects the head best. In frigid weather, a scarf or collar that can be raised to cover part of the face will be useful.

What to eat

The best foods for winter fuel contain carbohydrates and fat. In cold-weather training, eat waffles, oatmeal, pancakes with butter and syrup, raisins, nuts, bread and fruits. More than 60 percent of the calories you burn during winter exercise end up heating your body.

Acclimatizing to cold

Have you noticed that you're bothered more by freezing temperatures during the first few days of a skiing trip than you are after a couple of weeks? There's a logical explanation. Your body acclimatizes to the cold by producing more heat. One must exercise in the cold to become accustomed to the cold.

Post rubgy players make service team

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two Fort Benning rugby players have been chosen as members of the Combined Services Rugby Team that will travel to England to play later in the year.

Capt.'s John Tytla and Steve Gouthro, an armor and field artillery officer, respectively, were members of the Army Select Side Tournament Rugby Team. This team won the First Interservice Select Side Tournament at Fort Hood, Texas, beating the Air Force and Marine Corps. Their outstanding play and winning team earned them both berths to England to represent the U.S.

Gouthro has been playing rugby for almost nine years, beginning in the fall of 1974 at the U.S. Military Academy. Playing at West Point for four years, he went on to play with teams wherever he was stationed, including Benning, Fort Sill, Fort Bragg and on a civilian team in Munich, West Germany.

The tall, muscled officer plays position number 8 in scrum and says he enjoys playing the game for two reasons.

"I enjoy rugby for the overall conditioning it gives me. I also like it because it's a simple game. It doesn't require a lot of equipment," Gouthro said.

Tytla began his rugby career in 1980 when he was stationed in West Germany.

"I was originally a football player but there was no football to be played. I started playing rugby in Nuremberg because a sergeant kept asking me to come out for the team. I started playing and enjoyed it because of the exercise benefits and it was at least close to football," said Tytla.

Tytla went on to say rugby takes more endurance to play than many other sports and that it requires a player to be more aerobically fit.

"The best part of rugby is going out and banging heads with other players and then partying with them afterwards," said Tytla.

Both players agree that you don't have to be big and brawny to play rugby.

"I've seen players slow and fat tall and skinny, every shape an size. There's 15 positions on rugby team and there's just about one for anybody," said Gouthro.

Both players invite anyone interested in rugby to call 544-3616 for more information.

Hunters must turn in permits

Deer hunters must turn in the Fort Benning Deer Permit, FB Form 48, within 15 days of the close of deer season.

Permits can be turned in at the Outdoor Equipment Rental Office in Building 1707 or in the drop box at the Deer Check Station, Building 5883, Harmony Church.

All permits not received by today will be delinquent. For more information, call 544-6120.

Martial arts tourney set

A martial arts tournament is planned for tomorrow at Santiago Gym in Sand Hill.

Sponsored by the 1st Infantry Training Brigade, the tournament is sanctioned by the U.S. Chung Do Kwan Association.

Registration is from 8 to 11 a.m. and matches begin at 11 a.m.

The day-long competition will be divided into four areas: forms (a display of power and technique), sparring (controlled fighting), weapons (a display of weapons' techniques) and breaking (wood or concrete). Men, women and children will compete in separate divisions of rank, age and size.

Entry fee is $15. Admission for spectators is $2 for adults and $1 for children under age 12. All proceeds go to the Fort Benning Morale Support Activities Division's Youth Activities Branch.

Participation fees can be mailed to: Installation Morale, Welfare and Recreation Fund, Community Recreation Division, Physical Activity Branch, Fort Benning, Ga. 31095.

For more information, call Lt. Col. Jim Henkel at 544-2607 or 544-4112.

Bragg hosts race March 7

Benning Bass Club awards top anglers at annual banquet

The Bass Club of Fort Benning capped off 1985 with their Annual Awards Banquet and recognition of the club's "Fisherman of the Year."

The 1985 "Fisherman of the Year" was Bob Billman. Bob has coupled his skills and expertise with a little luck to win this award nine times in the past eleven yars.

This award goes to the club member with the highest point total for the tournament year. Points are accumulated for attendance at the bi-monthly meetings, tournaments fished, weight of fish caught in sanctioned tournaments and fish released alive.

He said "fishing is 40 percent skill and 60 percent luck and many times we just happen to put the right bait, in the right place, at the right time and catch a winner."

Also recognized were the remaining top ten fisherman for 1985: (2) Ben McGuire, (3) Jake Tibbs Jr., (4) Willie Goble, (5) Skip Ray, (6) James Stutts, (7) Don Kimbrough, (8) Russ Sharff, (9) Bill McCrary and (10) Tom Brewer.

As the club's annual banquet closed the door on 1985, they opened the 1986 tournament season with a very challenging January fish-off at Lake Eufaula. High winds, dipping temperatures and a radical barometer change all combined to provide the toughest climatic conditions a bass fisherman faces.

The club's vice-president won first place honors while second place went to club newcomer, Jessy Waugh.

Third place and big fish honors went to SFC Dave Moore who anchored his catch with a 3 lb. 5 oz. largemouth.

The February tournament will be held at Lake Martin, Ala. and anyone interested in club membership can contact Bill McCrary at 545-1213 or Ben McGuire at 568-0699. (USAIC PAO)

Did You Know That Last Year's U.S. Savings Bonds Average Rate Exceeded 9%?

Many people all over America are surprised when they hear what U.S. Savings Bonds have to offer.

For starters, Savings Bonds give you market-based interest rates—like the money markets—plus the security of a guaranteed return. This means you can earn a lot more than the guaranteed minimum rate of 7½%, but never less! To earn the higher rates, just hold your Bonds for five years or longer.

Here's more surprising news—the interest you earn from Savings Bonds is free from state and local income taxes. And you don't have to pay federal taxes on the interest earned until you cash in your Bonds.

Savings Bonds are easy to buy, too. They cost as little as $25 and can be purchased at most banks and savings and loans. Or through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.

All of these advantages are making Savings Bonds an increasingly popular investment. Last year, sales of U.S. Savings Bonds were up nearly 30%!

With all that Savings Bonds have to offer, it's no surprise they're one of the best investments in America. For the current rate, just call toll-free 1-800-US-BONDS.

U.S. SAVINGS BONDS Paying Better Than Ever

Market-based rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least five years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn market-based rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than five years earn lower rates.

Light wins award

2nd Lt. Floyd Z. Light Jr., 28, of Ballenger, West Va. received this year's Patterson Award. Mrs. Patterson, wife of the late Secretary of War for whom the award is named, made the presentation Wednesday.

The award goes to the officer selected as the outstanding Infantry graduate of OCS during the previous year.

The Patterson Award is based on qualities of leadership, academic effectiveness, aptitude and character.

A Department of the Army Certificate signed by the Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., an engraved .45 caliber pistol, a check for $1,000 and a Follow Me plaque were presented to Light during the ceremony.

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., presented the Robert P. Patterson Memorial Award Certificate and the Follow Me placque.

Light, currently assigned to the 1st Special Operations Command, Fort Bragg, N.C., entered the Army in June 1975 and completed advanced individual training at Fort Polk, La. in October 1975.

From September 1984 until December 1984 he attended OCS and the the Infantry Officers Basic Course from December 1984 until June 1985.

He is married and has three childred. His hobbies include working with the Boy Scouts of America and church activities.

Child care businesses in post quarters now regulated by post agency

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Family housing residents who keep children in their quarters for pay may face eviction from post, according to Becky Carroll, Family Child Care Director.

"The problem is that too much unauthorized care is going on in post quarters," she said. "At one time there were no other choices because certified care was not available, but that is no longer the case."

Carroll's office is in charge of training and certifying home caregivers, as well as reporting violations.

Two Army regulations prohibit full time babysitting in post quarters. AR 210-50 states that government housing will not be used for commerical endeavors. AR 608-10 says that no one can provide child care in their quarters on a regular basis in excess of 10 hours per week.

Carroll's office began offering certification classes for home caregivers in August 1985, and by the end of this month, will have 70 certified homes available for post children, she said.

Certified caregivers spend many hours in formal tra ng, and their homes are inspected by post fire, safety and preventive medicine personnel.

Carroll said there's an important reason why the certification process is so strict and takes so long to complete.

"The Army pays for liability insurance coverage on children who are kept in a certified home," she said.

Carroll said that she finds out about unauthorized caregivers from their neighbors, who call and complain about a home in their housing area that is swarming with kids. And sometimes, people turn in someone because they don't like them and hope to get them in trouble, she said.

Whatever the motivation, Carroll checks on the home to find out if unauthorized care is being given. If so, she explains to the person that the care must stop because it violates Army regulations.

She also tells them to notify the parents of the children they are keeping so the parents can make other child care arrangements.

"We are drafting a letter to people doing unauthorized childcare, asking them to come in and talk to us. If they don't contact us we will turn them in to the post Housing Office," she said.

While slots are available for children in certified homes on post, it's not a parent's only option.

"Parents do have a choice. They can go to an off post day care facility or hire a person to come into their home," she said.

At present, Fort Benning has as many certified homes as Carroll's office can handle, so no more classes will be given until some slots open up. "My office is required to inspect every certified home at least once a month to make sure caregivers are providing quality care," Carroll said. "At this point, we have as many homes as we can monitor on a monthly basis."

Ken Hankins, chief of the Housing Division, said that while the post commander has the option of evicting residents who violate the regulations, it's a rare occurrence.

"I don't think we've ever had to evict them. Most of the violators were ignorant of the requirement to get Housing's approval," Hankins said.

His Army hitch finally up, Bayo editor says goodbye

Robert McClain

Today is my last day as the editor of the Bayonet, and my last day as a soldier in the U.S. Army. My four-year hitch is finally up.

I have been editor of this Army newspaper for the past three years, one month and 14 days. (No, I haven't figured it out to the hour and minute yet.)

I take with me many wonderful memories and I'm sad to be leaving the paper, but it's time to move on. I plan on returning to college to obtain my degree. In addition, I've accepted an editing position at the Columbus Ledger/Enquirer. I start there next week.

I came to Fort Benning in September of 1982, fresh out of the Defense Information School in Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. My first assignment at the Fort Benning Public Affairs Office was as a reporter for the Bayonet.

I was a 19-year-old PFC, and I knew nothing about the Army and the "Infantry" except for what I was taught in basic training.

But I learned fast. During those first few months as a reporter, I wrote stories and took photographs on just about every subject on post, from the Officers Wives Club to field training exercises.

In January of 1983, I was promoted to editor of the newspaper. Maj. Gen. R.L. "Sam" Wetzel was still the post commander.

Things at Fort Benning and the Bayonet have changed a great deal since then, too many changes for me to even attempt to convey in such limited space.

I will always remember all the people I worked with over the years.

Some of you may remember people like Lt. Col. Wayne Andrews, my first Public Affairs officer; Betty Zimmerman; SP4 Rick Russell; Maj. Don Rhodes; SSgt. William Reynolds; SP4 Mark Cummings; and Sgt. Connie Dickey.

I'm especially sad to be leaving my current staff: Becky Winters, Mike Brazile, SP4 Thad Roberson and PFC Laurie Hill.

I want to give special mention my current bosses, Public Affairs Officer Lt. Col. Tony Caggiano and Deputy Public Affairs Officer John Gause. I have learned much from both of these men and I will carry the lessons they have taught me throughout my life.

The Bayonet is published by the Ledger/Enquirer and though I'll be working for them, I can't write this farewell column without thanking some of them.

The LE staff has been a great help over the years. People like Allen Horne, Jack Swift, Bobbi Miller, Paul Timm, Lawrence Smith and Tom Kunkel have all been tremendous assets during my time as editor of the Bayonet.

But three Ledger/Enquirer staffers have been of invaluable assistance to me. Florence Booker, our typesetter, and Frances Moore, our liaison, and Joyce Oliver, night composing room supervisor, have always been there when I needed them. They gave me guidance and helped me grow as a person. I think I would have been lost without them.

The people I'll miss the most though are you people reading the Bayonet. Over the past three and a half years I have got to know so many of you. And I'll miss you all.

Each Bayonet I put on the streets had you, the readers, in mind. I tried to give you the best newspaper about Fort Benning my staff and I could produce. I hope I accomplished that mission.

Show you care on Valentine's Day

By Gid Pool Jr.
The PENTAGRAM

February 14 is St. Valentine's Day. A day for love. Our customs include giving candy in heart-shaped boxes, flowers by the dozen and diamonds on a chain.

I can remember when I was in grade school a teacher had us make boxes in which we all put Valentine cards to our special friends. And the day before Valentine's Day we had a party complete with punch, cookies and candy.

You would think that it would rank as one of the favorite days for a fifth-grader. But it wasn't. In fact, it was that fifth-grade party that gave me a better understanding of love and of caring for another.

Having come from a very small town, my classes in school were never large. That allowed for easy division between the "in" and the "out" group. Randy was a member of the "out" group. At least, that's how we treated him. Oh, it wasn't his fault, he just didn't take part in any of our activities. During recess he would play alone. During lunch he would eat alone.

Randy was from what we kids called the "country" crowd. It's hard to think of someone from a town of 6,000 in Kentucky calling anyone else country, but we did. I suspect it made us feel important or something.

On the day of the party we all brought our Valentine cards to school and placed them in the box with our friend's name on it. I gave cards to Peggy, Sue, Marilyn, Rose, Don, Raymond, Norman, Earl, Pat and several more. I did not give one to Randy.

I got cards from Peggy, Sue, Marilyn, Rose, Don, Raymond, Norman, Earl, Pat and several more.

I also got one from Randy.

As the party got underway, we started to open our cards. Randy had only a couple in his box. I don't know, even to this day, why I started watching him open his cards. But sitting there, I began to realize something was wrong. We were all just a bunch of kids in school, trying to make it to the next higher grade. Yet, most of us had slighted Randy for no reason at all.

As Randy finished looking through his box. I noticed a small tear coming out of one eye. He was crying.

It was at that moment I began to hurt for Randy.

It was my first lesson in caring and it was bitter. It was also one learned well.

I would like to be able to say that Randy and I became good friends. I can't because the next year his family moved and Randy was gone. Gone, if you'll excuse an old phrase, but not fogotten.

If there is a lesson to be learned in all of this, I suppose it concerns the "why" of our actions.

Why do we slight someone for no reason?

Why do we never bother to make friends with someone we see everyday?

Why are we so thoughtless during special times of the year?

I could give you a thousand whys. But the truth remains. There are a lot of people in this world that need love. Not the total emotional wrap-around-the-body type, but the "I care" kind that makes everyone feel better. Love that you and I can give. Give without losing anything.

So, the next time you run across a Randy in this world, just remember, it takes so little to show you care and the returns can be boundless.

It's not a good feeling to see a Randy cry and know you are part of the problem.

Post honors three 'Great American Families'

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Officials honored three "Great American Families" at Fort Benning Friday, part of a national campaign to recognize the Army family's contribution to the military community.

The families honored were:

Maj. Michael and Sharon Barron and their children, Mark, Kimberly, Kathleen and Jennifer;

Chaplain (Capt.) Herbert and Nancy Strange and their children, Anne, John and Mark; and, Capt. James and Brenda Burke and their children, Kevin, Sean, Edward and William Deaton.

Barron is assigned to the 75th Infantry (Ranger) Regiment. Strange was formerly assigned to the 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group and has since moved to the U.S. Army Chaplain Center at Fort Monmouth, N.J.

Burke is assigned to the 2nd MASH, 34th Medical Battalion.

Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba Jr., post commander, presented each family a certificate. Burba praised the families for their contributions to the community.

He also announced that the Burke family has been selected as one of three Training and Doctrine Command families whose nomination will be forwarded to the Department of the Army for the next level of competition.

Nine families will be chosen for special recognition later this year at an award's luncheon hosted by First Lady Nancy Reagan.

Exchange Club honors MP of Year

Sgt. Ira F. Sellers has been chosen Military Policeman of the Year for 1985 by the Columbus Exchange Club.

Sellers

Sellers is a crime statistician and assistant noncommissioned officer in charge of the USAIC Military Police Company, Military Police Activity.

He will be honored tonight at the club's annual Crime Prevention Banquet at 7:30 p.m. at the Columbus Hilton, along with other top area law enforcement personnel.

The six year Army veteran began his military career as a correctional specialist at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas and served 18 months with the 277th MP Company in Sandholfon, Germany.

Since coming to Benning, Sellers developed and instituted an improved method for compiling crime statistics which greatly improved the accuracy of reports.

He speaks to many community groups on crime prevention and writes two articles each week for the post paper to keep residents informed and educated about crime.

Sellers will receive a $250 check and a plaque at tonight's presentation. (USAIC PAO)

Drive defensively during holiday

Washinton's Birthday presents us with another opportunity to improve our safety record.

Trips should be planned so that all travel is begun and completed during daylight. Road conditions are still frequently bad, and bad road conditions plus night driving can equal disaster.

Defensive driving becomes more important than ever over a three-day holiday period. The safest way to cope with the increased traffic is to increase your vigilance and awareness of the other vehicles on the road as well as road conditions — this is defensive driving and it will help you avoid situations that may produce accidents.

Have a safe and enjoyable holiday.

Officers Wives Club seeks applicants for college scholarships

The Officers Wives Club is seeking applicants for its college scholarships.

The group awards several scholarships each year to the most qualified high school seniors from the Columbus and Fort Benning area. Applicants must be dependents of active duty or retired military personnel.

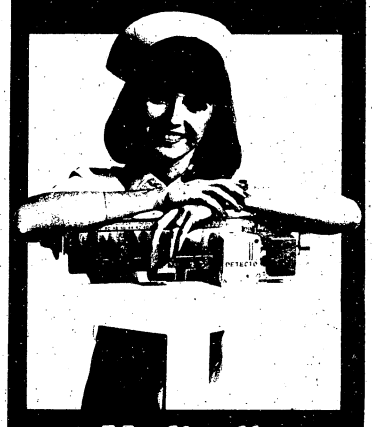
Scholarships are awarded on the basis of merit, and selection is based on the applicants' grade point average, SAT score, leadership abilities, extra-curricular activities, personal references and a written essay.

Through community fund raising projects, the club has raised approximately $11,000, which it plans to award to deserving students to further their educations.

Members of the Officers Wives Club may also apply for one of two $500 scholarships to be awarded to club members in good standing who wish to continue their education. These scholarships will be awarded on the basis of community involvement, financial need and a written essay.

Selection will be made by an independent panel consisting of local educators, officers, OWC members and a representative of the U.S. Planning Association. The association awards an additional $1,000 merit scholarship, using the same criteria and eligibility requirements.

Ten $1,000 scholarships will be awarded to students seeking a bachelor's degree from an accredited college or university.



Application packets will be available in the office of the OWC building Monday through Thursday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., or by calling Karen Chinen at 687-1674.

The deadline for submitting an application is April 7. Selections and notification will be made by May 16. (USAIC PAO)

Competitors vie for win at martial arts contest

The 1st Infantry Training Brigade sponsored its first ever martial arts competition Saturday at Santiago Gym.

Participants came from as far away as Garden City, Mich. and Lakeland, Fla. to compete in the event.

Billed as 'The Battle of American Warriors,' the day-long competition attracted 101 entrants, ranging in ages from 7 to 44,who competed in four competitive areas:

- Forms — A display of power and technique.
- Sparring — Controlled fighting.
- Weapons — A display of weapons technique.
- Breaking — A display of actually breaking wood or concrete.

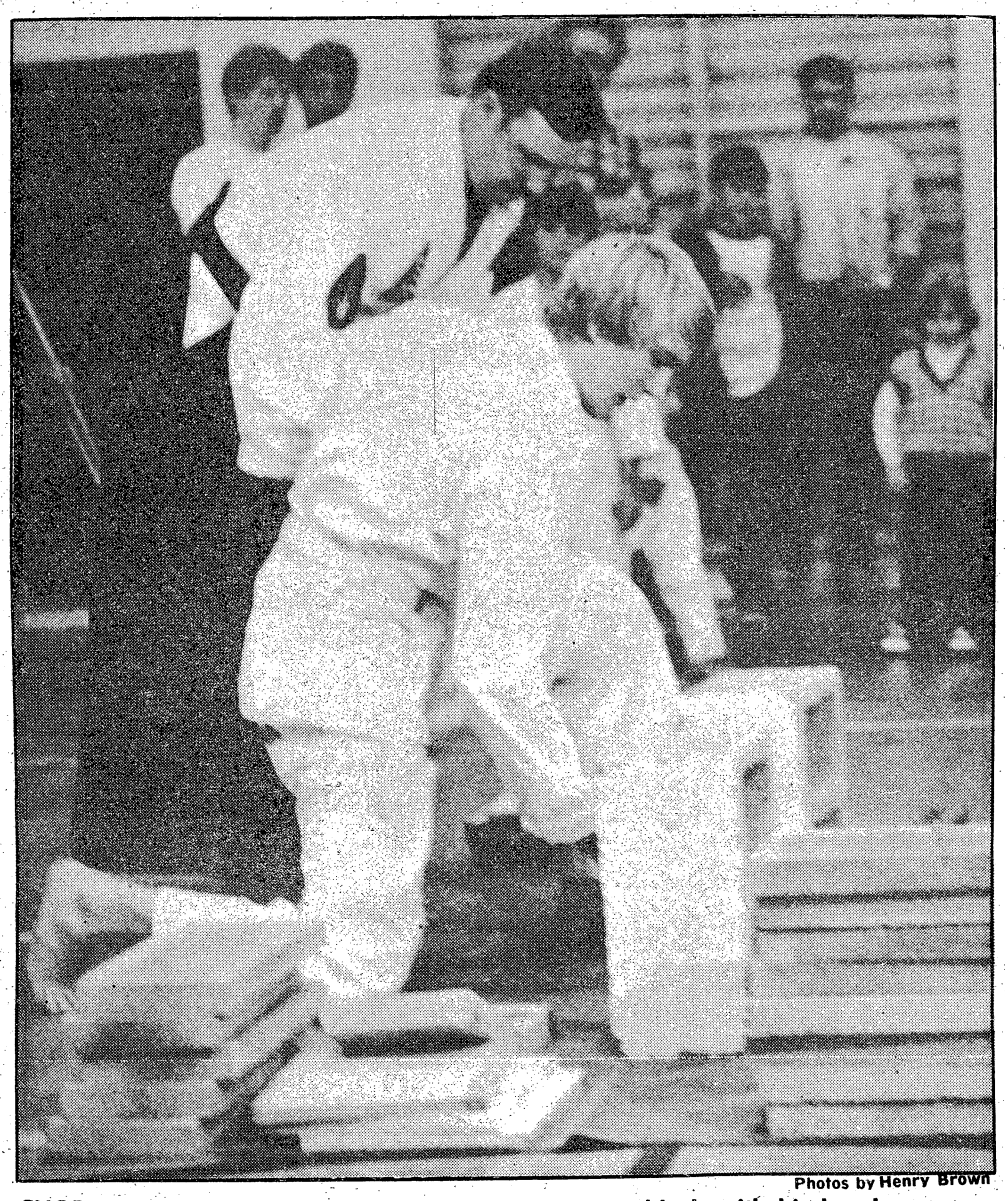
Each of these competitive areas was divided into divisions separated by belt (rank). Awards, first through fifth places, were given in 108 divisions.

Overall winners by category were:

Best White/Yellow Belt: James Watts of Bushido School.

Best Green Belt: Timothy Atkins of Fort Benning Tae Kwon Do.

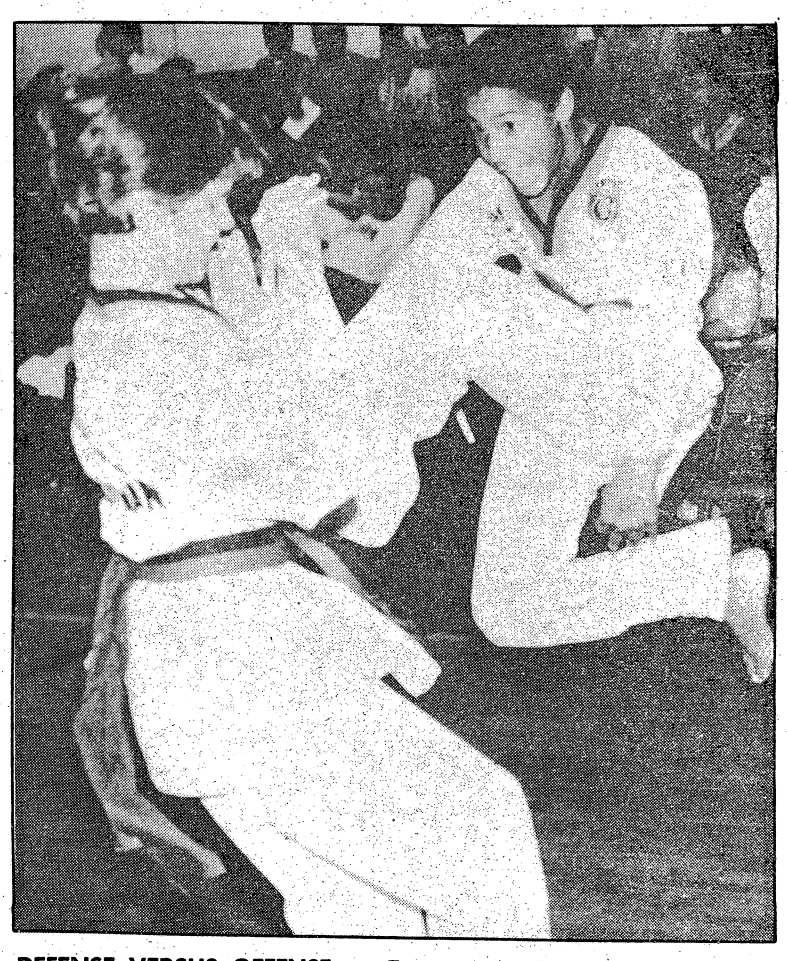
Blue Blue Belt: Jamie Bolles of American Karate Academy and Romona Redden of The American Karate Academy.



Best Brown/Red Belt: Glenn Spence of Fort Benning Tae Kwon Do.

Best Black Belt: Ronnie Sell of Florida Karate Academy.

Black Belt Grand Champion: Mike Nacinie of Fort Benning Tae Kwon Do.



The First Infantry Training Brigade donated over $2,000 to the Fort Benning Morale Support Activities (Youth Activities) from the event. The Cub Scouts of Pack 555 provided a concession stand for the event and earned several hundred dollars to go into pack projects.

Three 29th Infantry soldiers earn Airborne wings

By Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment

They talk of airborne training as if it were easy.

They claim all one has to do is want airborne wings bad enough in order to get them.

PFC Dwain A. Canevari, Pvt. 2 Allan P. Ray and SP4 Jerry N. Wachtel, members of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment, vied for airborne wings with hundreds of other soldiers in Airborne Class 12-86.

The soldiers graduated Jan. 23.

They had no doubt they would graduate, for they entered the training with a "do or die" attitude.

The trio said neither cold, rain nor snow mattered.

"I wanted it so bad, had it flooded, I would've gone swimming down that cable," Ray said.

They were grouped together with roster numbers 332, 333 and 334, Canevari, Ray and Wachtel, respectively.

It helped to be members of the same platoon (2nd Platoon, 3rd Stick), the soldiers said.

"Just knowing that someone was there that I knew and could talk to if I needed to, or run with was good for me," Wachtel aid.

On cold mornings, it was especially helpful to be together, Wachtel said. "We slapped each other around to stay warm."

Canevari reaped the benefits of having his buddies with him during the three-mile runs. He said,

29th Inf.

"I had a hard time running, but I couldn't fall back when I had them helping to motivate me"

It was difficult for the paratroopers to describe what being airborne means to them. The most they could say is they've found a new sense of pride in soldiering.

Canevari said, "I don't know how to put it into words, but as a soldier I feel more secure.

"Now I want to do my job better because I've accomplished something that I really wanted."

Since airborne training, they see themselves as "better soldiers all around." They strive to look sharper, to be more disciplined and to be more professional in their jobs.

Ray believes their improvement has to do with "the airborne image."

"If I slack off or mess up, people will look at me and wonder, is he really airborne?"

Also, their improvement is the result of association with the Black Hats, airborne instructors, whom they learned to respect for their dedication, professionalism and honesty, they said.

Currently, the regiment soldiers have returned to their regular jobs, Watchel is a distribution clerk and Canevari and Ray are drivers.

They want to jump again someday, as members of the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg and the 101st Air Assault Division at Fort Campbell.

TRACKING TARGETS — Soldiers from Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment track targets during company gunnery training.

Gunners polish skills at Caramouche Range

By Bill Muller
29th Infantry Regiment

29th Inf.

Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, conducted company gunnery training at Caramouche Range last week.

The company serves as the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle demonstration unit, and conducts many live fire exercises for visiting dignitaries to post.

Company gunnery skills serve several important purposes, according to D Company's master gunners, SSgts. William Mitchell and B.J. Wells.

Mitchell said that probably the most important purpose it serves is emphasizing teamwork.

"How well they qualify in gunnery is determined by their crew commands and the ability of the crew to work together," he said.

"The Bradley commander and gunner work as a team in order to acquire targets," Wells said. "They must work together to be a cohesive unit."

Another purpose of company gunnery training is to identify potential problem areas in the copany, Wells said.

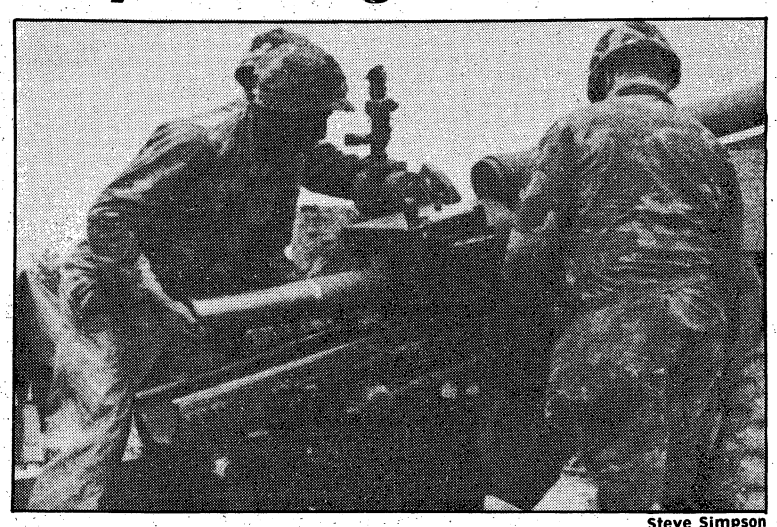
"We need this training in order to identify areas that need to be worked on. Our job is to let the company commander know what these areas are," he said.

Soldiers learn how to call in the artillery at Ferguson Shoot

By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

197th

Watching the field artillery fire its weapons is something like watching fireworks on the Fourth of July, only a lot louder. As a howitzer explodes, it sends its round toward a ridge on the horizon. A grey puff of smoke appears in the distance before the sound of the impact reverbrates back to the firing point.



Such fireworks are commonplace at Ferguson Range on Fort Benning. Students from the U.S. Army Infantry School go there to learn about artillery fire. Who can better provide the special effects for these demonstrations than Fort Benning's only field artillery battalion, the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade.

Several types of rounds are fired to give the students a basic understanding of the artillery's fire power. High Explosive (HE) rounds can be used to disperse schrapnel on the enemy. White phosphorous and smoke-type rounds can be used for signaling or screening the movement of friendly troops. Also, a special capability of the 105mm howitzer is appropriately known as a 'beehive' or anti-personnel round. This round pelts the enemy with some 8000 steel points at a 60 degree angle.

But, the 'Ferguson Shoot' goes beyond providing a show for the students. After the demonstration and blocks of instruction on adjusting artillery fire, the artillerymen help the students perfect their skills by firing rounds for them to adjust. This means calling in directions to place a round on a precise point. On a battlefield, the forward observer acts as the eyes of the gun crew to insure rounds hit their targets.

Providing support to the Infantry School also gives 2/10th's gun crews a chance to polish gunnery skills. The batteries in the battalion share the responsibility of USAIS support and rotate quarterly.

According to Capt. Don McMillian, C Battery commander, the Ferguson Shoot offers the unit an opportunity to train on additional weapons systems and enhances the proficiency of the gunnery team. "Through this, the Fire Support Team, Fire Direction Center and Firing Battery can continue to provide timely and accurate fire," McMillian said.

Reserve brigade takes over training at 1st ITB

By Norman Beatty
4th Brigade, 80th Division, USAR

1st ITB

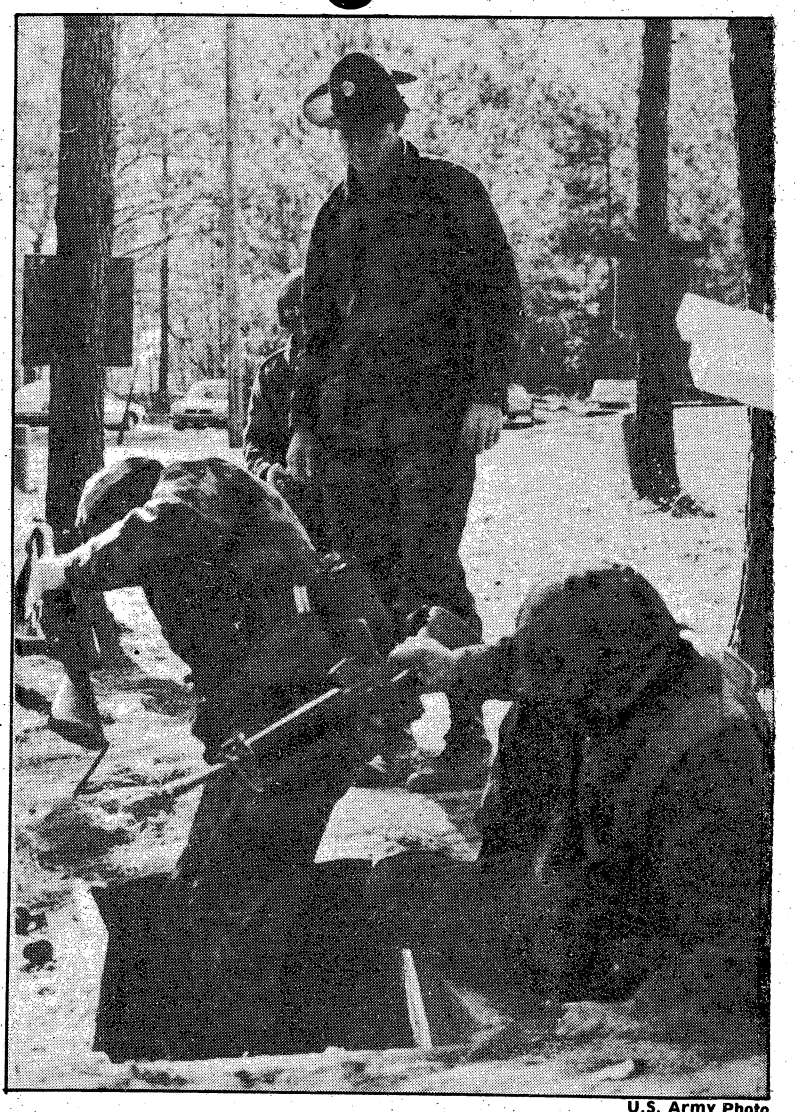
The 4th Brigade, 80th Division (Training), USAR, Headquartered at Fort Story, Va., arrived Jan. 17 and has been performing the mission of the 1st Infantry Training Brigade at Sand Hill for 18 training companies.

Known as "vertical displacement," the 4th Brigade is conducting infantry training for approximately 2,500 initial entry soldiers who are in all phases of training. Reservists, from brigade commander down through the ranks to company clerk, have replaced their active Army counterparts.

The purpose of the exercise, is to prepare the reservists to establish and operate an army training center during mobilization. Pending the results of this exercise and a second "vertical displacement" by a grigade of the 108th Division (Training), USAR, at Fort Benning later this year, the concept may be implemented at training centers Army wide.

"Vertical displacement" represents a progression that began a number of years ago when reserve units performed "satellization" missions of only assisting their active Army counterparts. More recently, reserve units performed "horizontal displacement" missions wherein reserve battalions sequentially displace a single active Army battalion over a total period of eight weeks. The 4th Brigade performed a "horizontal displacement" mission with the 6th Battalion, 1st ITB Last year.

In preparation for the current mission, 1st ITB sent small teams of drill sergeants in mobile training teams to 4th Brigade home stations in Virginia for the past several months to work with reserve drill sergeants.



Col. James E. Mace, commander of the ITB and his reserve counterpart, Col. Charles W. Higgins Jr. agree that the "vertical displacement" mission has several advantages over previous missios.

They specifically cited the fact that displacement of an entire brigade occurs over a two week period, rather than an eight week term. This is especially important at Fort Benning were there are critical billeting and scheduling constraints. There are eight Army reserve training divisions with some 24 training brigades vying for infantry training at Fort Benning with either the 1st or 2nd Infantry Training Brigades.

They also say the "vertical" mode is easier to plan and schedule, requires only 15 days of active duty for the reservists since there is no reserve unit-to-reserve unit handoff period, and that reserve unit integrity can be preserved from brigade headquarters down.

The exercise "is working great," said Higgins. "The cooperation of the 1st ITB, the Army Training Center, and Fort Benning has been super," he said. "We arrived on the Friday before a three-day weekend and there were units in the field on bivouac or FTX's. Our drill sergeants went directly to the field and took over, and we've been in charge since," he said.

Mace said the reservists "hit the ground running.

MACH Optometry clinic earns accreditation

MACH

The Optometry clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital, Fort Benning, Ga., has been accredited by the American Optometric Association's Council on Clinical Optometric Care.

The four-year accreditation signifies that the martin Army Community Hospital Optometry Clinic meets the council's standards for the delivery of optometric care.

It was awarded following an extensive review of a self-study survey and an on-site visitation by the council's field representatives.

The Council on Clinical Optometric Care was established by the American Optometric Association to accredite optometric facilites in order to maintain the quality of optometric care delivered throughout the United States.

INTERVENTION
in•ter•ven•tion - Alcoholism and drug dependency are diseases of denial. This means that it usually takes a crisis to force a percon suffering from drinking or drugging problems to accept treatment. This crisis could be loss of a job or an automobile accident. An intervention is a controlled confrontation between the patient and his or her family or employer. Good treatment programs such as the Help Unit at Cobb Memorial Hospital help employers or families intervene effectively while the chance for recovery is still good.

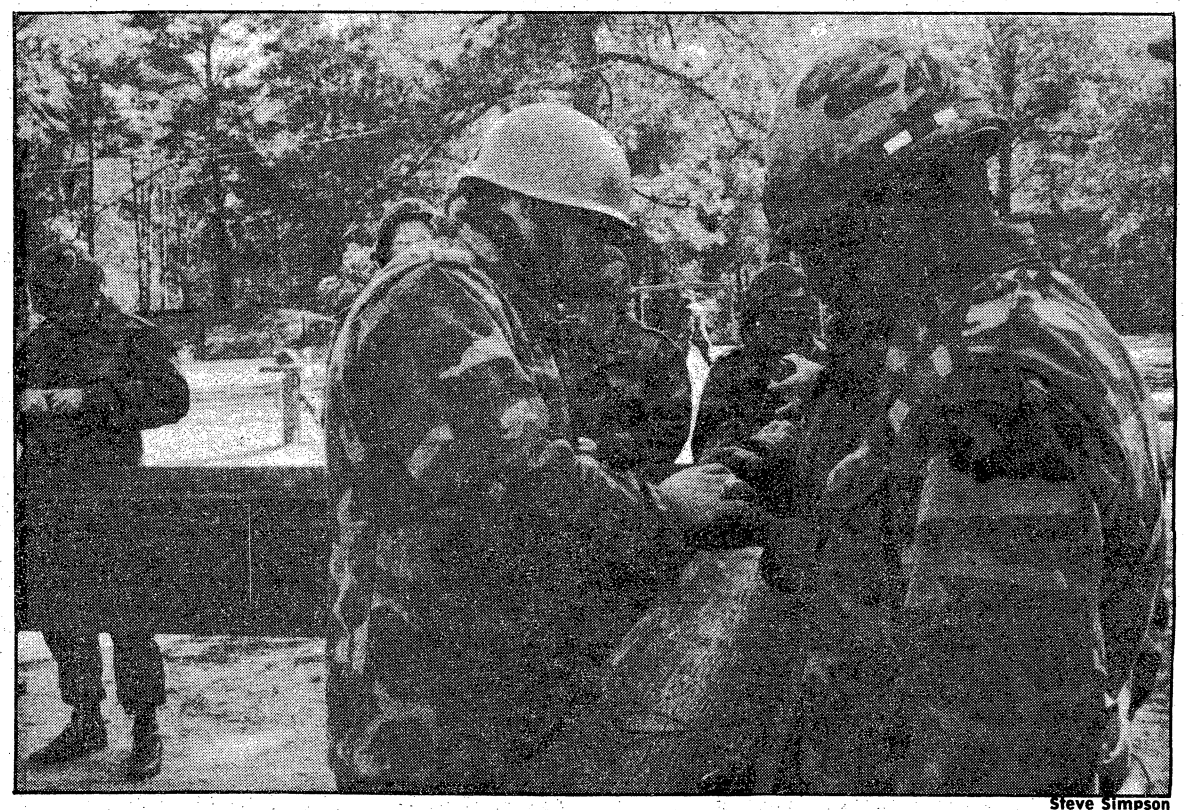
Engineers get realistic explosives training

36th Eng.

By John H. Kelleher Jr.
586th Engineer Company (AFB)
on Brown Demo Range



The 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) spent two days recently getting realistic training and experience using military explosives. The training devised by SFC Jerry A. Brown, was designed to teach the soldiers basic principles and then allow them to apply these principles to larger problems. It was conducted at Brown Demolition Range.

On the first day of training the soldiers were familiarized with the basic components common to military exposives. Then the soldiers got hands-on training with the three common types of military explosive: C-4, TNT and dynamite. The soldiers constructed electrical and non-electrical firing systems, and also learned how to prime a system using detonation cord.

The second day's training focused on larger explosives available to military units: bangalore torpedoes, cratering charges and shape charges. During this day of training, the soldiers also learned how to cut steel using C-4.

Training was conducted in a to station fashion, allowing each soldier to get hands-on training with each type of explosive as they did on the previous day of training. Soldiers cleared wire obstacles using the bangalore torpedoes, created a road crater using shaped charges and cratering charges, and cut steel varying in thickness from ½ to 2 inches.

The 586th Engineer Company conducts demolition training quarterly to maintain the soldier's proficiency in their Military Occupational Specialty and other related Combat Engineer tasks.

Road builders gain experience working on road to Jocon

36th Eng.

A cloud of rock and dust rises over the Honduran countryside, followed by a thunderous burst causing the earth to tremble. The end result of many laborious hours in preparation are consumated in a split second.

For thirty-three consecutive days, Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Heavy) conducted rock drilling and blasting operations to support construction of the road to Jocon during Exercise Cabanas 85.

The drilling team performs the first step in the operation. After removing the soil that is covering the rock by bulldozers, the track drill is maneuvered into place. A three inch hole is then bored into the rock to the depth required which allows for the placement of the sufficient amount of explosives.

As the drilling is completed the demolitions team arrives on site. Each hole must be allowed to cool for at least one hour to prevent spontaneous detonation of the explosives. This gives the team adequate time to prepare both their low and high grade explosives.

As the individual charges are connected together, using detonating cord, personnel clear the surrounding area of animals and civilians for obvious safety reasons.

After the area is cleared and blocked off, the demolitions team completes its task, and connects the blasting caps. The cry of "fire in the hole" echoes down the valley and in a matter of minutes, the valley trembles as more rock is cleared to create the road to Jocon.

During the entire drilling and blasting operations, Honduran engineer soldiers trained with A Company's quarry section. Using drilled, over tamped and breaching charges these soldiers received invaluable training and experience while providing "Power for Service" on the road to Jocon. (43rd Engrs.)

Don't be fooled by low gas prices

By Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

A big item in the news these days is dropping oil prices. Gasoline is less than $1 a gallon at many locations and supplies are plentiful. Many people are again showing interest in large automobiles and hoping the days of cheap oil have returned.

It's easy to forget about embargos, skyrocketing prices and shortages. However, it simply isn't realistic.

Even though OPEC members are cutting each other's prices, we must keep some basic facts in mind. Domestic oil is being consumed three times as fast as new reserves are discovered.

Half the oil we consume is imported from countries that have little if any concern for the United States. The billions of dollars we spend overseas are used to buy our technology and investments while we burn up the oil. The known reserves will last only 30 years at today's consumption rate.

Add to all this a supply line that can be broken by a religious revolution, a sunken tanker in the Persian Gulf or even a pipeline accidentally busted by a bulldozer, and you see that the situation is temporary at best. Until we find new sources of energy we must continue to practice conservation.

We must not allow ourselves to be lulled into thinking that everything is rosy because the thorns can be painful.

Mike Brazile

PRICES DROP — Don't be fooled by dropping prices; energy conservation is still necessary.

CID needs help to solve recent crime

The Fort Benning Civilian Investigation Division is offering a $1,000 reward for information leading to the apprehension and conviction of the person(s) responsible for the destruction of 40 Jeep tires and four spark plug wires at the 988th Military Police Motor Pool.

The event occurred between 11:30 a.m. and 5:45 p.m. Dec. 14 to 16. All the destroyed tires and spark plug wires were on the Military Police jeeps at the time of the damage.

The reward will terminate on Jan. 14, 1987. For more information, call CID at 545-7950/5064/1518, or the Military Police at 545-5222/5223.

Mensans expand horizons

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Mensa has a way of expanding people's horizons. When Mensans meet there are fresh insights offered, new ways of looking at things come out," said SGM Riley Miller, a member of Mensa and the operations NCO for 75th Ranger Regiment.

Mensa, an international organization of people who have scored in the upper two percent on recognized tests of intelligence, has many Fort Benning members in the Georgia-Alabama Chapter and Miller was urged to join by Maj. Steve St. Clair of the 197th Infantry Brigade.

"Mensa isn't a lot of egghead intellectuals, sitting around and talking about philosophy. Mensans are normal people doing normal things who want just a little bit more out of life," said Miller.

The Georgia-Alabama Chapter has more of an impact upon society than any other Mensa organization in the world because of Community Consulting Services.

"Chuck Ganter was the driving force behind Community Consulting Services. Instead of just having brunch on Sundays and playing Trivial Pursuit Chuck wanted us to do something a little different and more in the way of a community service," said Celine Hice, another Benning member and the editor of the Ga.-Ala. Mensa newsletter.

Gantner conceived Community Consulting Services as a think-tank that could brainstorm any and everything to provide different points of views and ideas on how to solve problems.

"We've worked with the Columbus Department of Education to help provide for "latchkey" children after school, developed a marketing scheme for a high-tech insulation company and we put together a fund-raising program for a mental health care center," said Gantner.

Gantner stressed that the group has no political ties and any ideas offered are free of charge and can be accepted or not accepted.

"We're here to give people new ideas," he said.

To qualify for Mensa membership interested people must score in the top two percent of the population on I.Q. tests.

'Designated driver' plan will be in clubs Army-wide come March

Some patrons of Army clubs will be receiving free soft drinks and specialty non-alcoholic drinks, beginning in March.

Individuals who make the decision to give up alcoholic drinks for the evening so they can drive their friends home safely will be served these non-alcoholic drinks courtesy of the club management, said Dick Belgrano of the leisure sales and services division of the Army Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va.

The designated driver program is an armywide effort aimed at saving lives and preventing personal injury and grief to members of the army family.

All officer, non-commissioned officer and enlisted clubs in the army system will participate in this program, said Belgrano.

There is a need to change social behavior among members of the army family, so that drinking and driving or accepting a ride from someone who has been drinking is automatically rejected as abnormal behavior, said Belgrano.

When a group of patrons enters an army club, they will be greeted by a server wearing an "Ask Me About Our Designated Driver Program" button, who will tell them what the club's non-alcoholic specialty drink, or mock-tail, is for the day. The server will explain that the designated driver for the group will receive a complimentary mock-tail and free non-alcoholic drinks for the evening. An individual who volunteers to be his group's designated driver is asked to wear an identifying button, which he may be asked to return at the end of the evening, Belgrano said.

Army officials are not concerned about the fact that a few non-drinkers may volunteer to be designated drivers in order to get free beverages, according to Belgrano. They expect the program to make members of the army family more conscious of the dangers of drinking and driving and encourage them to act responsibly and safely.

NCO Club gets facelift

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Main NCO Club is undergoing renovations to make more room for patrons.

"We're doing a facelift in the main ballroom to provide more space. It currently has a seating capacity for about 350 but after the renovation we'll be able to accommodate over 500 guests," said MSgt. Ray Hood, the club manager.

Hood also said the Golden Touch Lounge would undergo an enlargement to provide more seating and additional restroom facilities are also slated to be built.

During the past two months the club's patio has been covered and plans call for it to be screened in. The club will also have tennis courts built in the next 3 or 4 months and a family health center is planned for 1988.

In all, $460,000 worth of renovations are planned for the main NCO club. Construction of the tennis courts and family health center will cost $1,000,000.

Hood stressed that the club is trying to focus more on family-oriented activities. Along with the tennis courts and family health center, this family-emphasis comes in the form of low-cost buffets for the Wednesday Family Night and food specials for Friday and Saturday nights.

"The Friday and Saturday specials are things like lobster night, seafood buffets and two-for-one steak specials. We really want the club to be for the entire family,"said Hood.

The NCO Club is also trying to increase unit participation in the club for such things as dining ins and unit parties.

New court will process traffic tickets

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning is bringing the U.S. Magistrate's Court to the soldier beginning March 21.

"When soldiers were given tickets on-post for traffic or hunting violations, their offenses were handled administratively by the Army. Now, under our new system, the U.S. Magistrate judge from Columbus will come to Fort Benning about every three weeks.He will hear these cases if the cited soldiers want to appear in court or they can just pay the fine," said Capt. Jane Wynan, the Magistrate Court Liaison Officer out of Benning's Judge Advocate General's office.

Beginning February 18, all traffic and hunting violation citations given to soldiers will fall under this new system. Upon receipt of the citation soldiers can either pay the fine through the mail or request to appear in court, also done through the mail. Once notified of his or her's court date, the soldier will appear before the court to present his case.

"This system has been in effect at other posts for a long time. Fort Benning has just been waiting for funds to implement such a system. By using this system, commanders and others involved in administrative actions against soldiers for traffic and hunting violations can now use this time for other things," said Wynan.

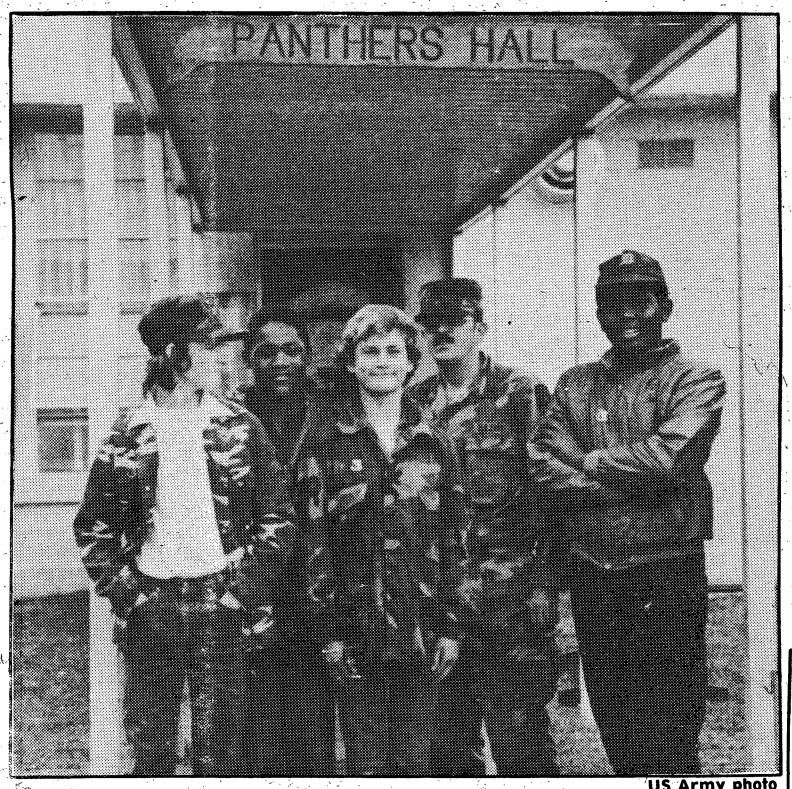
Woodall School students tour brigade

By Marilyn Balzarini
197th Infantry Brigade

Teamwork and cooperation are heavily stressed concepts at the Woodall School in Columbus. For Rocky Miller and Cathy Dowdy, two Army wives who teach at the Woodall School, showing their students an occupation that employs these qualities was easy. They arranged for some of their junior high boys to visit the 197th Infantry Brigade, where their husbands work.



Rocky's husband, SFC Robert Miller, a platoon sergeant at B Company, 2-69 Armor, served as tour guide for the group. The boys were shown 2-69 Dining Facility, where they were given a tour of the kitchen during meal preparation.

Later, the 197th Physical Fitness Center provided an example of what Brigade soldiers do for recreation after working hours. This was followed by a visit to the Kelley Hill Troop Medical Clinic.

A special treat was a demonstration of the M60A3 tank given by members of SFC Miller's platoon. During the demonstration the Woodall students were given a chance to sight on a target through the tank's optical system and rotate the turret under power.

When asked what the boys enjoyed the most, SFC Miller replied "Definitely the tanks. We just about had to drag the kids off of them."

Mrs. Dowdy summed up the field trip to the 197th as great vocational exposure for her students. Adding that "Outings of this kind also give our kids an opportunity to see how teamwork and cooperation are applied in real life situations."

Schools

There's music in the air at the Edward White School on periodic Tuesday afternoons and the sound is not that of children's voices. The music comes from the Fort Benning Schools' faculty chorus, a group of teachers who meet monthly to sing together.

The group was formed a year ago when an invitation was extended to Fort Benning teachers to come together to sing. After the third session, sixty educators had joined the group, representing a little under a third of the total teaching staff.

Led by music teacher Norma Green, the group rehearsed monthly and performed at a year-end retirement ceremony.

The chorus is again preparing for a May performance for colleagues. Finding a rehearsal date which does not conflict with meetings, parent conferences, or extra-curricular activities is difficult, according to Green. She said her singers were an unusually capable group and they would be ready by the May performance date.

Displays highlight Black history month

February is Black History Month and Fort Benning is observing the month with various displays and activities.

Units with static displays include the 197th Infantry Brigade; 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division; 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade and the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

The National Infantry Museum will have a display in the lobby of Building 4 beginning today through Feb. 21.

The display's theme is "Black History Month: Exploring a Rich Cultural Heritage." It features African art and numerous pieces of carved ivory, wood carvings and a limited number of fabric pieces. (USAIC PAO)

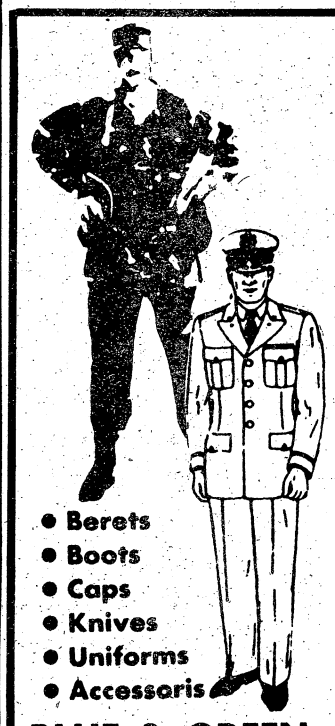
Law adds one year to veterans program

President Reagan has signed legislation extending for one year Federal veterans job training programs for certain unemployed Vietnam Era and Korean Conflict veterans.

The law also authorizes an additional $65 million for the program in fiscal year 1986. However, additional legislation would be required by the VA.

Under the new law, veterans may apply to participate effective February 1. The applicaton period would end Jan. 30, 1987. The measure also extends, until July 31, 1987, the deadline for eligible veterans to be enrolled in approved training.

To participate in the program, a veteran must have been unemployed for at least 10 of the last 15 weeks immediately preceding the date of his or her application. Eligible veterans are furnished a certificate of eligiblity by the Veterans Administration to be presented to an employer offering a job training program that meets specified requirements.



The job training program, which is jointly administered by the VA and the Department of Labor, has put more than 37,000 veterans back to work since it became operational in November 1983. Employers may be reimbursed 50% of a veteran's starting hourly wages, up to $10,000. The program provides a maximum of 15 months of training for certain service-disabled veterans, and up to 9 months for other participants.

The program also allows employers to enter into agreements with educational institutions and to provide vocational instruction under approved GI Bill training programs. VA)

Post youth rescues mother, infant from burning home

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Billy Ray Trammell, the 15 year old son of a Fort Benning first sergeant, saved the lives of a mother and her baby by pulling them from their burning house on December 10, 1985.

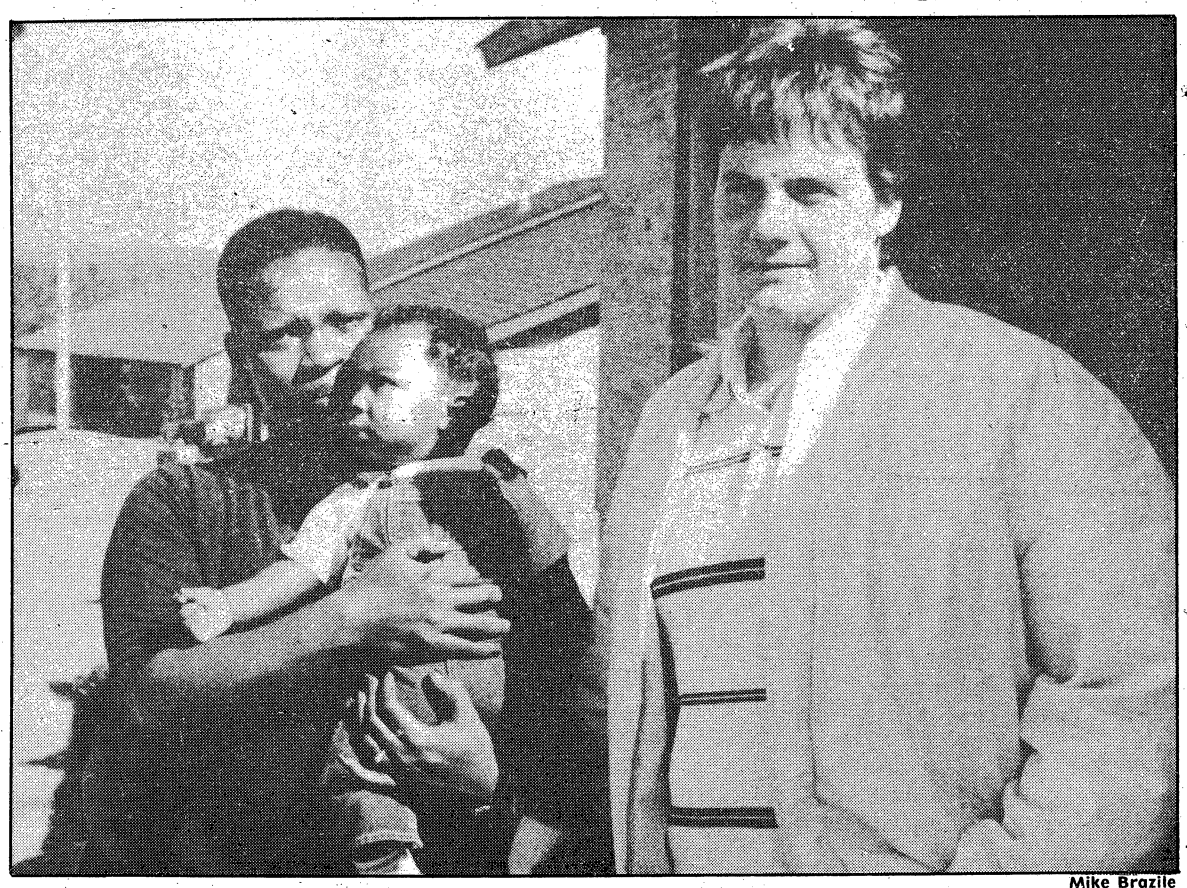
At 8 p.m. the young Trammell went to his neighbor's house, the Morris', to return a toy. Hearing screaming and crying in the house, he banged on the door and three of the five Morris children ran from the house yelling "fire."

"I heard Mrs. Morris and her baby crying. My adrenalin was flowing and I just did a job that had to be done," said Billy.

Entering the burning house, Billy found Mrs. Morris and her 2 month old son in the kitchen, hysterical. Grabbing them, he guided them through the flames to safety.

"If it hadn't been for the assistance from Billy Trammell my children and I could have been seriously injured," said a smiling Mrs. Morris.

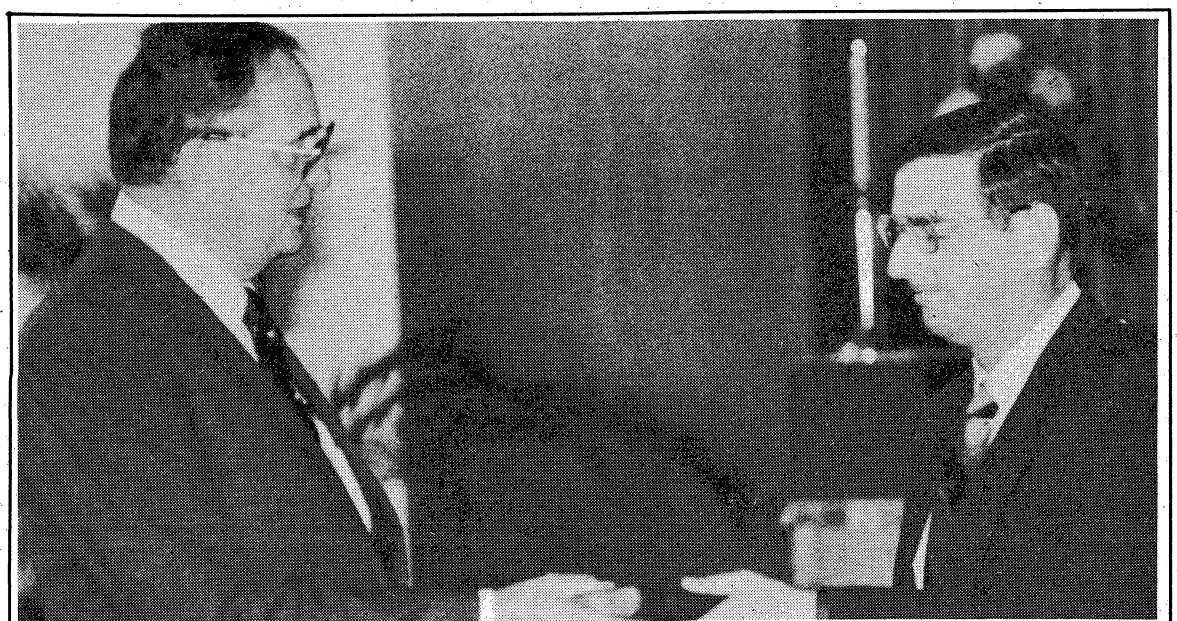
After getting the mother and baby to safety, Billy prepared to reenter the flaming, smoke-filled house but was stopped by his father, who went in and rescued the three year old Morris son from the house.



Learning of the incident, Billy's scoutmaster, SSgt. Scott Gates, initiated an investigation into Billy's exploits. Finding that Billy met the criteria for the Boy Scout Honor Medal, Gates put him in for it and it was approved.

"Billy met the criteria exactly. He demonstrated unusual heroism in saving life at the risk of his own," said Gates.

Mrs. Morris' husband, who was in Dugway, Utah with the Ranger School when the accident occured, summed up his feelings about Eagle Scout candidate Billy.



"If it wasn't for the assistance of Billy Trammell my family could have been seriously injured. I'm glad I have neighbors like the Trammells."

The young Trammell, who is a student and football player at Spencer High School, was awarded the medal at the Boy Scout banquet Tuesday evening.

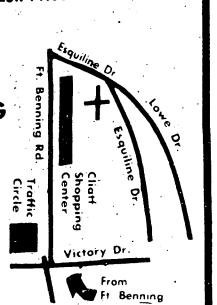
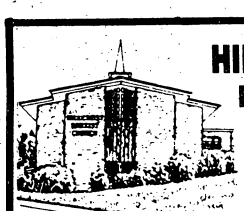
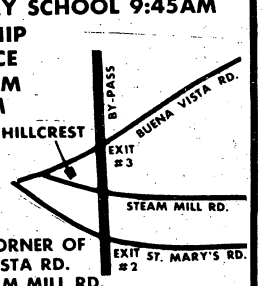
Air Corp vets get free tombstones



The Veterans Administration has added "U.S. Army Air Corps" to the list of inscriptions for veterans' gravemarkers placed in national and private cemeteries, which the VA provides at no charge.





Prior to the change, personnel who served in the Army Air Corps were identified as having served in the U.S. Army since the Army Air Corps, established in 1926, and the Army Air Force in 1941, were elements of the U.S. Army. The U.S. Air Force was not established as a separate service until 1947.

VA Administrators, Harry N. Walters, said the change was made since the organizations involved eventually became a separate branch of service. He emphasized, however, that the new policy is only for future requests and would not be retroactive to existing markers. (VA)

OSUT soldiers fight for honors in unit exercise competition

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The skies were overcast with impending rain but the soldiers of Charlie Company, 10th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade remained motivated for the first Iron Vanguard competition.

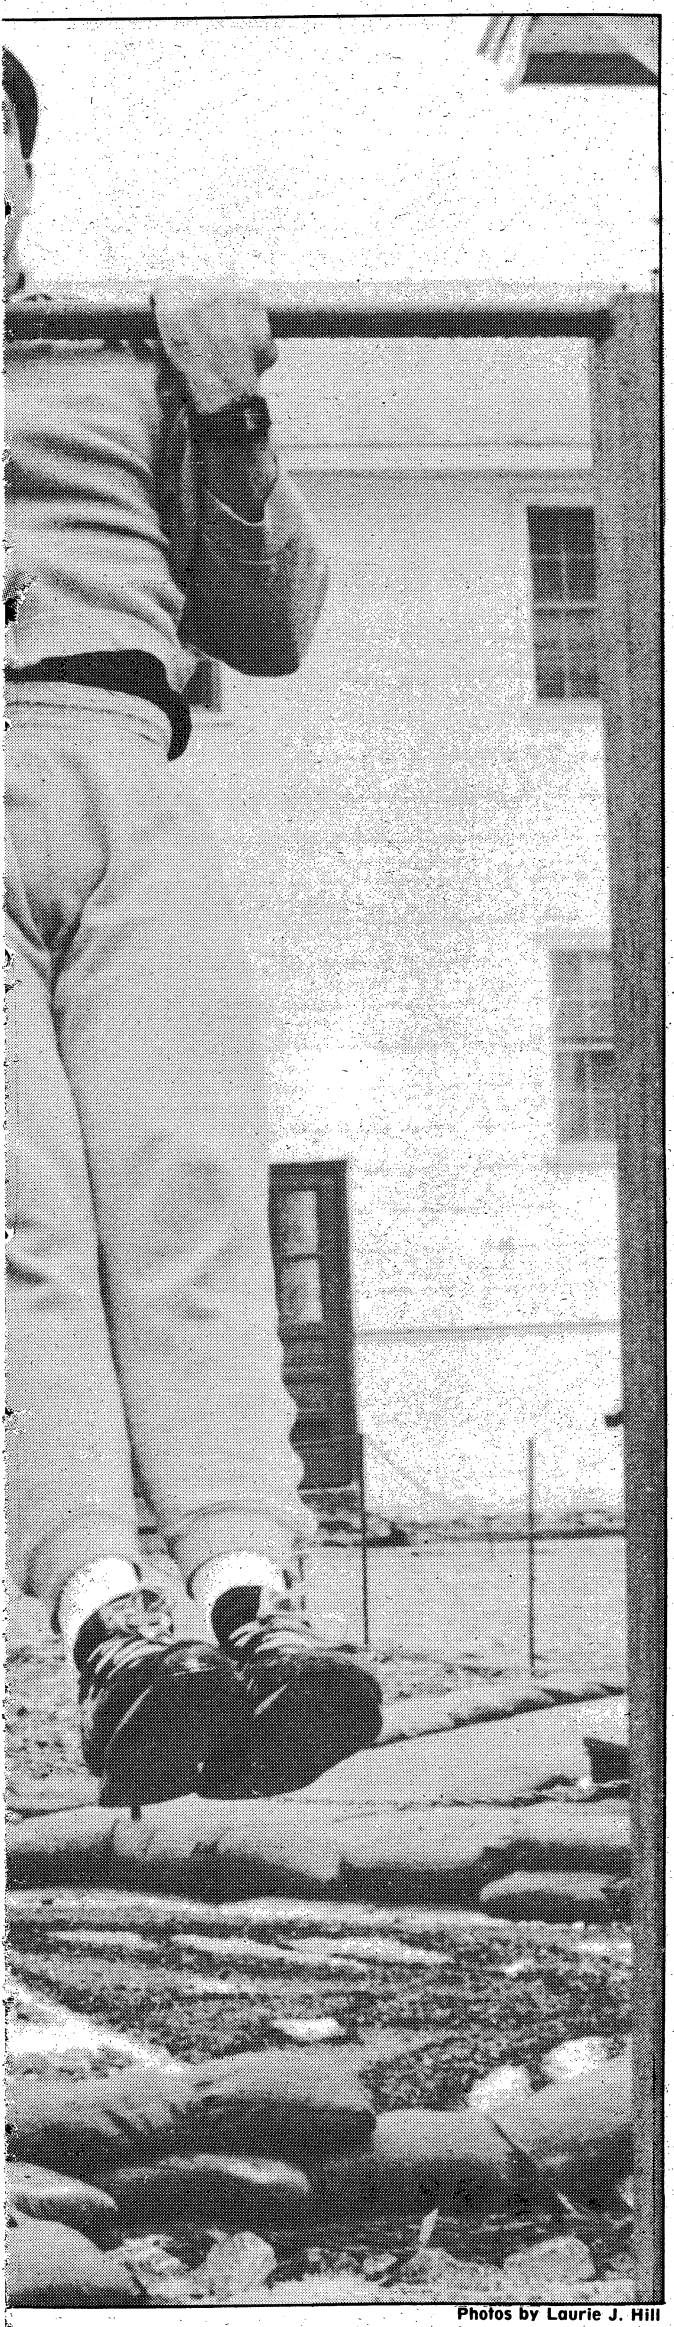
The One Station Unit Trainees (OSUT) competed voluntarily in 12 man teams Saturday for letters of commendations, T shirts, and medals.

"The competition was designed to instill motivation among the soldiers," said Capt. Richard Stalbaum, commander of C Company, 10th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

"C Company competed against themselves and a few idividuals from A Company joined in on the grueling events for the fun of it. They were the only ones in this phase of training (final week) with the time to do so," said 1st. Sgt. John Snape of A Company.

The contest was in two phases, the first of which was the Army Physical Readiness Test (APRT). This phase consists of the push-up, the sit-up and the two mile run. A total of 300 points are maximum and were applied to the points accumulated in phase two.

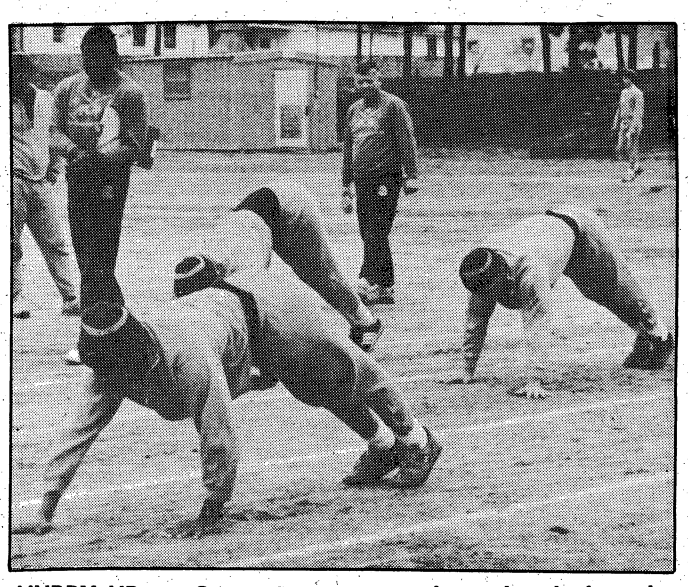
The second phase is the endurance phase. During this time the soldier strived to gain points in eleven additional events.



These events consisted of the 100 pound bench press, the inverted crawl, the push up, the sit-up, the high crawl, the bottoms-up walk, the hobble hop, the one mile run, the pull up, the five mile run and the low crawl.

According to Stalbaum,"In order for an individual to win first place in the competition he must score a 300 on his APRT. This is to demonstrate that the Army mission must be accomplished before the unit mission can be complete. Phase II is the endurance phase and demonstrates the stamina and motivation of the soldier participation.

The winners of the contest were Pvt.1 Reginald Thomas in first place, Pvt.1 Wayne Brown, in second place and Pvt.1 Kenneth Smith in third place.



"It was electrifying, that was the first day of the rest of my life. Alot of my friends said I could win but all I wanted to do was finish. It took alot of energy but it drew me closer to my friends," Thomas said.

"Every soldier who completed all events received a letter of commendation to remind them that they have the never quit attatude that is so valuable to the Total Army Team and that they truly have displayed a total commitment to excellence." said Stalbaum.

Waiting Wives group: Army Community Service sponsors a Waiting Spouse Support Group to met the needs of family members whose spouse is on an unaccompanied tour. The purpose of the group is to provide information, assist with problems and meet others in similar circumstances. The group meets the first and third Sunday of each month at 1 p.m. in Building 2642 on Collins Loop. For more information, call Mr. Duggins at 545-1233.

Tax assistance: Military retirees, their family members and widows can get help preparing their income tax returns at Army Community Service. An appointment is required. Call 545-5516, or stop by the ACS office in Building 2634 in Splinter Village.

Pet registration: According to post regulations, all pets must be registered within 14 days of arriving on post at the Veterinary Facility, Building 265 on 10th Division Road. Call 545-4444 for more information.

Applicants wanted: The Military Personnel Center announces the reopening of the Warrant Officer Flight Program for in-service personnel. The following non-waiverable requirements must be met to qualify: a minimum GTscore of 110; a minimum of 90 on the Flight Selection Test and candidates must be age 30 or below upon entry into flight training. Candidates must pass a flight physical and complete an acceptance interview with a field grade aviator. For more information, call Ms. Horne at 545-1402.

Scholarship available: The Society of American Military Engineers is soliciting applications for a $600 scholarship. Applicants must use the scholarship in an approved two, three or four year curriculum leading to a degree and live within a 150-mile radius of Fort Benning. Students in engineering or advanced ROTC will be given priority consideration. Application deadline is March 31. For more information, call George Perdue at 545-1932 or George Kennedy at 545-2804.

Pre-school spaces available: A Small World Pre-school on Custer Road has openings available. For more information, call 544-1623 between the hours of 9 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Dental records: All soldiers on active duty for training periods of 30 days or longer and all soldiers deploying overseas must have dental records including an identificaion panographic radiograph. This record must be on file with the appropriate dental facility approved by the Army commander or state adjutant general prior to TDY or PCS travel.

Dental records will not be taken on TDY trips regardless of duration. Upon PCS, a duplicate panographic radiograph will be kept on file by the losing dental facility. This radiograph will be filed prior to the soldier's completion of outprocessing and annotated on the outprocessing checklist.

Personnel responsible for final clearance must insure that the dental section on the outprocessing checklist is annotated by the servicing dental clinic. For more information, call the DENTAC sergeant major or executive officer at 544-3954.

Child care spaces: Spaces are now available on post for child care in certified homes. Caregivers are trained and inspected before being allowed to keep children in their home. For more information, call Becky Carroll at 545-3328.

Aerobics class: The Officers Wives' Club will offer aerobics classes every week for people who want to slim down. Classes meet on Tuesday and Thursday from 7 to 8 p.m. and Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. Classes are taught by certified instructors. For more information, call Barbara Sims at 682-9780.

ACS volunteers: Army Community Service needs volunteers to work as budget counselors, on the reception committee and the relief committee. No experience is necessary, volunteers will be trained on the job. For more information, call Wanda Campbell at 545-5516.

Movie tickets: The Outdoor Recreation and Ticket Office, Building 247, now has discount movie tickets available for purchase. Tickets are for all Columbus movie theaters and are $3 each.

AIDS referral: The Red Cross is providing information and referral on AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.)The service takes advantage of the neutrality of the Red Cross and maintains strict confidentiality. For more information call 545-5117 or 545-5194.

Learning Center: The Learning Center has moved from Room 236 to Classroom 56 in Building 4. For more information, call Robert Theis at 545-3460.

DEH work: The Directorate of Engineering and Housing will have crews doing maintenance and repair work in the Davis Hill/Bouton Heights area for the next several months. Projects planned include replacing siding, landscaping and replacing and repairing roofs. Questions concerning work in your area can be answered by calling 545-5044.

Volunteers needed: The Volunteer Resource Center serves as a clearinghouse for all volunteers on post. Some current volunteer positions open include receptionists, budget counselors and Thrift Shop workers. The Red Cross needs caseworkers and safety instructors. The National Infantry Museum needs tour guides. Training and babysitting is provided. For more information, call Pat Sneed at 545-5602, or stop by the office at 301 McIver Street.

Flying lessons: The Fort Benning Flying Club offers the first flying lesson free to all pre-solo students who enroll. For information, call 687-0254.

Parents Without Partners: The Parents Without Partners organization is a worldwide, self-help group of single parents who realize the difficulties encountered in bringing up children alone or having to live apart from them. It is not necessary for single parents to have children living with them to be members of PWP.

The Fort Benning-Columbus-Phenix City Chapter meets at members' homes and various restaurants. On the first Monday of each month at 7 p.m., the group holds an orientation for all interested prospective members at the Bonanza Restaurant on Manchester Highway. For more information, call the following numbers after duty hours: 298-3137 (Phenix City) or 687-1348 (Columbus).

Alcoholics Anonymous: If you have a desire to stop drinking, you are not alone. Stop by the club on main post in Building 2214, Eckel Street, Mondays and Thursdays at 8 p.m., or call AA at 327-6078. There are no dues or fees.

Alcohol ban: It is unlawful to possess alcohol in any Columbus parks. A $52 fine will be levied for this offense. Service members are urged to comply. For further information call 545-7154.

Expectant Parent Class: The Expectant Parent Class will begin on March 4, at the Martin Army Community Hospital in the second floor conference room. Classes will be held four consectutive weeks, 4, 11, 18, and 25 March at 7 p.m. For more information or to register for classes call 545-4603 or 545-4041.

Craft films: The Arts and Crafts Center, Building 2783, is now showing video tapes on painting ceramics on Thursday and Sunday each week. Times are noon and 4 p.m. Sundays and 1:30 and 6 p.m. on Thursdays, and each film lasts 30 minutes. The center is also offering a class on brush strokes in conjunction with the film series. Times are noon to 4 p.m. on Saturday and 1 to 3:35 on Sunday. Cost is $3. For more information, call 545-3677.

Special provisions apply to divorced taxpayers

If you're divorced or separated, there are special tax provisions you should know about before you prepare your tax return, according to the Internal Revenue Service. There are tax rules if you are paying or receiving alimony, tax breaks if you qualify for "Head of Household" status, tax credits if you pay someone to watch your child so you can work, and an earned income credit that returns money to you if you have a low income.

If your divorce has been declared final during this tax year, you are generally considered to be in the "Single" tax status. However, you can save money on your taxes if you can qualify for the "Head of Household" tax status. If you qualify as a head of household, your tax rate will be lower than the rates for single people.

To qualify for head of household status, you had to be unmarried on the last day of the year. To be considered unmarried, even if married but living apart, you must file a separate tax return and your spouse cannot have lived in your home during the last 6 months of the tax year. In addition, you also must have paid more than half the cost of maintaining a home during the year for: an unmarried child who does not have to be your dependent; for a married child whom you can claim as a dependent or whom you could claim as your dependent except that the non-custodial parent will claim the exemption for the child; or for any other relative whom you may claim as a dependent. Except for your parents, any of these relatives for whom you maintain a home must live with you more than half the year.

If you pay someone to care for your child so you can go to work or look for work, you can save money on your taxes as well. The credit for child and dependent care expenses allows you to take a tax credit of up to 30 percent of the money you pay for child care each year. Your child has to be under 15 years old or be unable to care for himself or herself for you to take this credit. If your adjusted gross income is $10,000 or less, you may take a credit of up to $720 if you have one child, or up to $1,400 if you have two or more children being cared for. The maximum credit decreases for higher incomes.

It is important to remember that you may claim this credit only if you have child care expenses to allow you to work or look for work. You can claim a credit for the expense of having a pre-school child attend a day care center or nursery school during the day. However, the regular costs of schooling for a child in the first grade or above cannot be considered for the credit. Care for the child before and after school hours can be used to figure this credit. You may also claim a credit if you're paying somebody to care for your child in your home.

For divorced or separated parents, the parent who has custody for a longer time during the calendar year can claim the credit. Generally, a person who is married at the end of the tax year must file a joint return to claim the child care credit. A person who is legally separated under a decree of divorce or separate maintenance is considered unmarried and may claim the credit on a separate return.

Special tax rules

However, if you are married, living apart but not legally separated, you can claim the child care credit on a separate return only if your child lived with you for more than half the year, you paid more than half the cost of keeping up your home for the year, and your spouse did not live in your home for the last six months of the year.

People who are divorced should know the relationship between alimony and taxes. If you are paying alimony or separate maintenance payments, you may be able to deduct these payments from your income. You may deduct alimony from gross income to find your adjusted gross income. You may only deduct the amount of alimony payments specified in the court decree or written separation agreement. If you deduct alimony or separate maintenance payments, you must include your spouse's or former spouse's social security number, of your return for the year payment is made. If you do not include this social security number on your return, you may have to pay a $50 penalty. Your spouse or former spouse may have to pay a $50 penalty for refusing to give you the social security number. Any additional amount of money you pay to your former spouse is not deductible.

You are not allowed to deduct child support payments. Of note to taxpayers required to pay child support payments is the offset of tax refunds to cover outstanding child support payments due in states that have asked the Department of Health and Human Service to help collect on these delinquent payments.

To find out more about tax rules and benefits for divorced and separated people, you can order the free Publication 504, Tax Information for Divorced or Separated Individuals, Publication 503, Child and Dependent Care Credit, and Employment Taxes for Household Employers, and Publication 596, Earned Income Credit, by calling or writing the IRS. (AFPS)

Chapel briefs

PWOC offers Bible studies

In addition to the Precept Bible study classes the Protestant Women of the Chapel offer, the group also sponsors three options to the program.

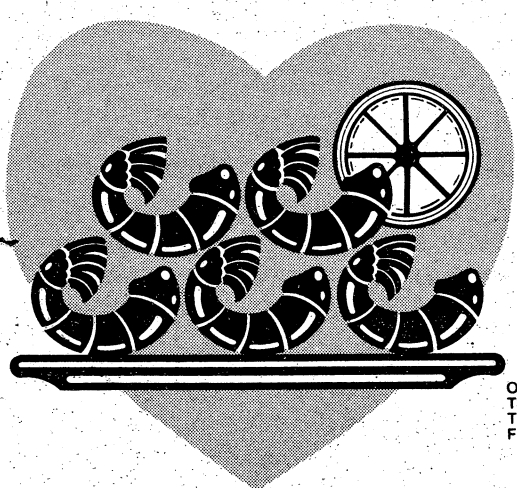
First, a beginner's Bible study class is taught by Nancy McKenzie. Secondly, a study class meets and discusses the book, "The Spirit-Controlled Woman" by Beverly La Haye. The mothers of pre-schoolers program offers a third option which consists of Bible-related studies, crafts, fellowship and fun, centered around the idea that sometimes moms need a morning out.

The classes meet at the Religious Education Center every Monday at 9 a.m.

Conference theme is 'hooked on marriage'

The Georgia Association of Couples for Marriage Enrichment's state conference is March 7 and 8 at the Columbus Iron Works and Convention Center. The theme of the conference is "Hooked on Marriage" and a variety of workshops will be offered.

For more information, call Miranda Jones at 324-2488.



Program will help families deal with death of a child

The Columbus Chapter of Compassionate Friends and St. John United Methodist Church will sponsor a program entitled "What Happens to a Family When a Child Dies," Feb. 18 at 7:30 p.m. at the church, 6507 Moon Road. Mary Cleckley, co-founder of Compassionate Friends, will be the speaker.

Filing damage claims now easier than ever

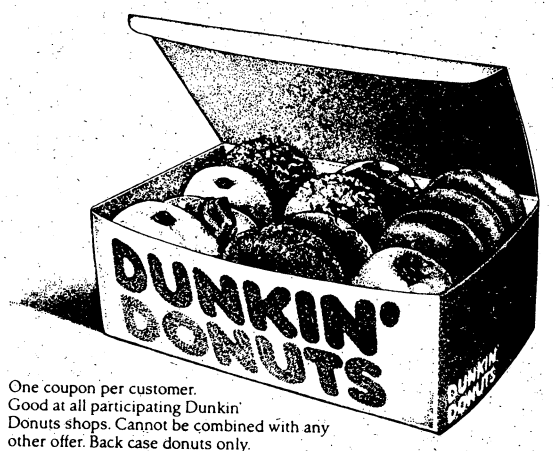
By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

One reason you joined the military was to see the world, and you've been doing just that. So have your belongings, which don't always survive the move as well as you do.

Like those pieces of your fine china that now lie shattered on the floor of the packing crate.

The Military Traffic Management Command is taking some of the sting out of these experiences by making claim filing procedures easier and more responsive. The new procedures are being included in contracts with carriers and warehouses worldwide and are expected to be in full force this month.

At the time of delivery, you can list loss and damage to your shipments on DD Form 1840, "Joint Statement of Loss or Damage at Delivery." Three copies of this form will be supplied by the mover. You have until 70 days after delivery — the old rules gave you only 45 days — to inspect your property more thoroughly for loss and damage.



During the 70-day period, service members have only to fill out the reverse side of the DD Form 1840 and send it, with appropriate records, to the local claims office. The "appropriate records" should include the bill of lading, which provides the weight of the shipment and the shipper's name.

The claim's office will notify the carrier of all loss and damage and will advise you about filing a claim. (The old procedure required a trip to the transportation office before proceeding to claims.) Although you must notify the claims office of your loss within 70 days, you have up to two years to file a formal claim.

If your claim is supported by such records as moving inventories and repair estimates, you will not need a government inspection report in most cases. You should have an original receipt or bill of sale for expensive items, as these not only establish the validity of your claim, but save the government time in determining how much money you are owed.

1986 Income tax information

Only certain income is taxable for military

Payments received by members of the military generally are taxable except for allowances.

Military payments considered taxable income include:

- active duty pay;
- Reserve training pay;
- reenlistment bonuses;
- armed services academy pay;
- amounts received by retired personnel serving as instructors in junior ROTC prorams;
- lump-sum payments on separation or release from active duty; and
- military retirement pay based on age or length of service.

When reporting military retirement pay, taxpayers should not include in income the amount of reduction in retirement or retainer pay to provide a survivor annuity for a spouse or children under the Retired Serviceman's Family Protection Plan or the Survivor Benefit Plan.

Allowances not considered taxable income include subsistence, uniform and quarters allowances, or the value of quarters or subsistence provided in kind.

In addition, housing and cost-of-living allowances for the extra cost of quarters and subsistence while on permanent duty outside the United States are not included in income. This is true whether the allowances are paid by the U.S. government or by the government of the country in which a person is stationed.

Other expenses not included in taxable income include moving and storage expenses, family separation allowances provided because of certain overseas assignments and forfeited pay. (AFPS)

Those requesting extension must still pay tax due on time

Form 1040 or 1040A filers can request an automatic 4-month extension of time to file their tax returns, the Internal Revenue Service said.

Taxpayers filing Form 1040EZ or those requesting the IRS to compute their tax are not eligible for an automatic extension.

To obtain the 4-month extension beyond April 15, 1986, a taxpayer must complete Form 4868, "Application for Automatic Extension of Time to File U.S. Individual Income Tax Return," and forward it to the service center processing tax returns for his or her state. Form 4868 must be filed on or before April 15, 1986, the IRS said.

The extension to file the tax return is not an extension of time to pay any tax due, the IRS stressed. It also no longer extends the deadline for IRA contributions, which must be deposited by April 15, 1986, to be applied to the 1985 tax year.

On Form 4868, one must make a tentative estimate of the year's taxes and submit any balance due with the form. Upon filing the tax return, if the unpaid tax is more than 10 percent, there is a penalty for late payment unless the taxpayer can show reasonable cause for not paying the tax when due. The penalty is one-half of one percent per month on the unpaid balance, up to a maximum of 25 percent. Interest is also assessed on any unpaid balance. (AFPS)

IRS says to check return for accuracy, attach W-2s

To those expecting a tax refund this year, the Internal Revenue Service says a quick check for accuracy can help avoid mistakes which might slow tax return processing. Carefully prepared, easy-to-read returns can be processed faster, the IRS advises. Once the return is completed, the IRS suggests that taxpayers consult the following check list:

- Have you attached all your Forms W-2, "Wage and Tax Statements"?
- Have you attached all the supporting schedules to your Form 1040?
- Is your arithmetic correct?
- Are all of your entries on the proper lines?
- If you rounded your numbers, did you round consistently?
- Is your handwriting legible?
- When you used the Tax Table, did you follow the line across to the correct column for your filing status?
- Did you sign and date your return? Remember, if it's a joint return, your spouse must sign too.
- Did you use the peel-off label, and is the information on the label correct?
- Have you retained a copy of your return for your records?
- Did you remember to put a stamp on the pre-addressed envelope? If the return has several attachments, additional postage may be required. (AFPS)

Keeping complete records makes preparation easier

Keeping accurate and complete tax records makes tax return preparation easier, the International Revenue Service advises.

You should keep the necessary records to prepare a complete and accurate income tax return for as long as their contents may be material in administering any Internal Revenue law.

Records that support an item of income or a deduction should be kept until the statute of limitations for the return expires (generally three years from the date the return was due or filed, or two years from the date the tax was paid, whichever occurs later).

Copies of filed tax returns should be kept even after the cancelled checks, receipts and other records are disposed of since they may be helpful in preparing future returns.

Additional information on maintaining records is contained in IRS Publication 552, Recordkeeping for individuals and a List of Tax Publications, available free by using the mail-order form in your tax package. (AFPS)

IRS'll figure your taxes if you request the service

Form 1040EZ and Form 1040A filers and certain taxpayers filing Form 1040 may request that the Internal Revenue Service figure their taxes for them.

Those desiring this assistance must fill in certain items on the return, attach Forms W-2, sign the return, and send it in before the April 15 deadline, according to the IRS.

To qualify for this service, taxpayers must have an income of $50,000 or less, not itemize deductions and not use Schedule G, "Income Averaging," or Form 2555, "Foreign Earned Income."

The agency will figure the tax in the way that benefits the taxpayer the most, IRS stressed.

If a refund is due, the IRS will figure the amount and send it to the taxpayer. If additional tax is owed, it will be computed and a bill sent for the balance. (AFPS)

Following simple safety tips ensures safe run

At 5 a.m. your clock goes off, and it's out of bed and into your favorite running clothes. You're on the street by 5:20 a.m. and ready to run.

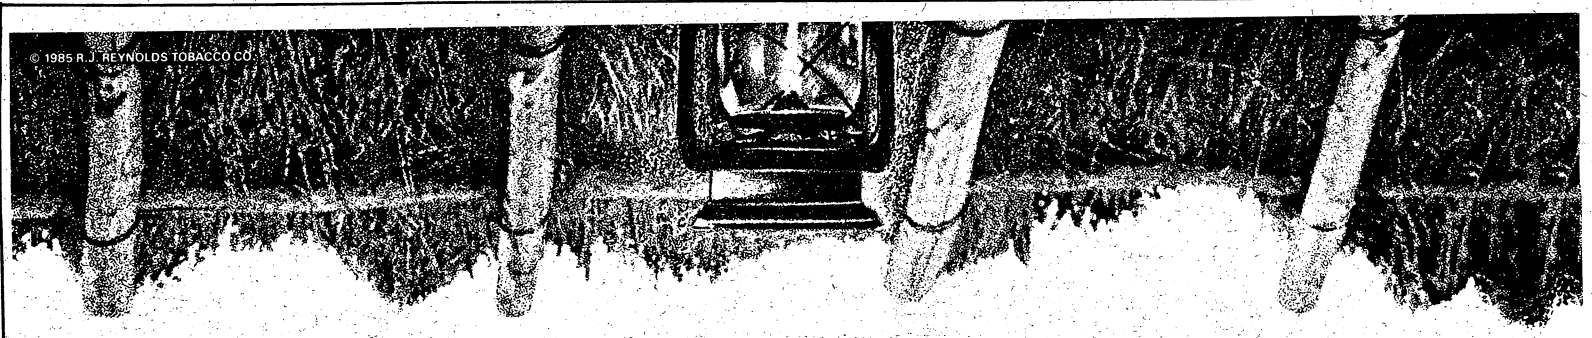
It's cool, a little humid, and dark! (Some people really love to run in the dark, maybe so they can't see how far they have run!) You turn onto Dixie Road to run on that long, open stretch. You're thinking you don't have a care in the world.

However, your troubles may be just beginning, unless you exercise some routine safety precautions:

- Always run facing traffic and wear some type of reflective clothing.
- Don't run on the roadway, stay on the shoulder of the road.
- Never challenge moving vehicles for the right of way. You may be legally right, but you could end up "dead wrong".

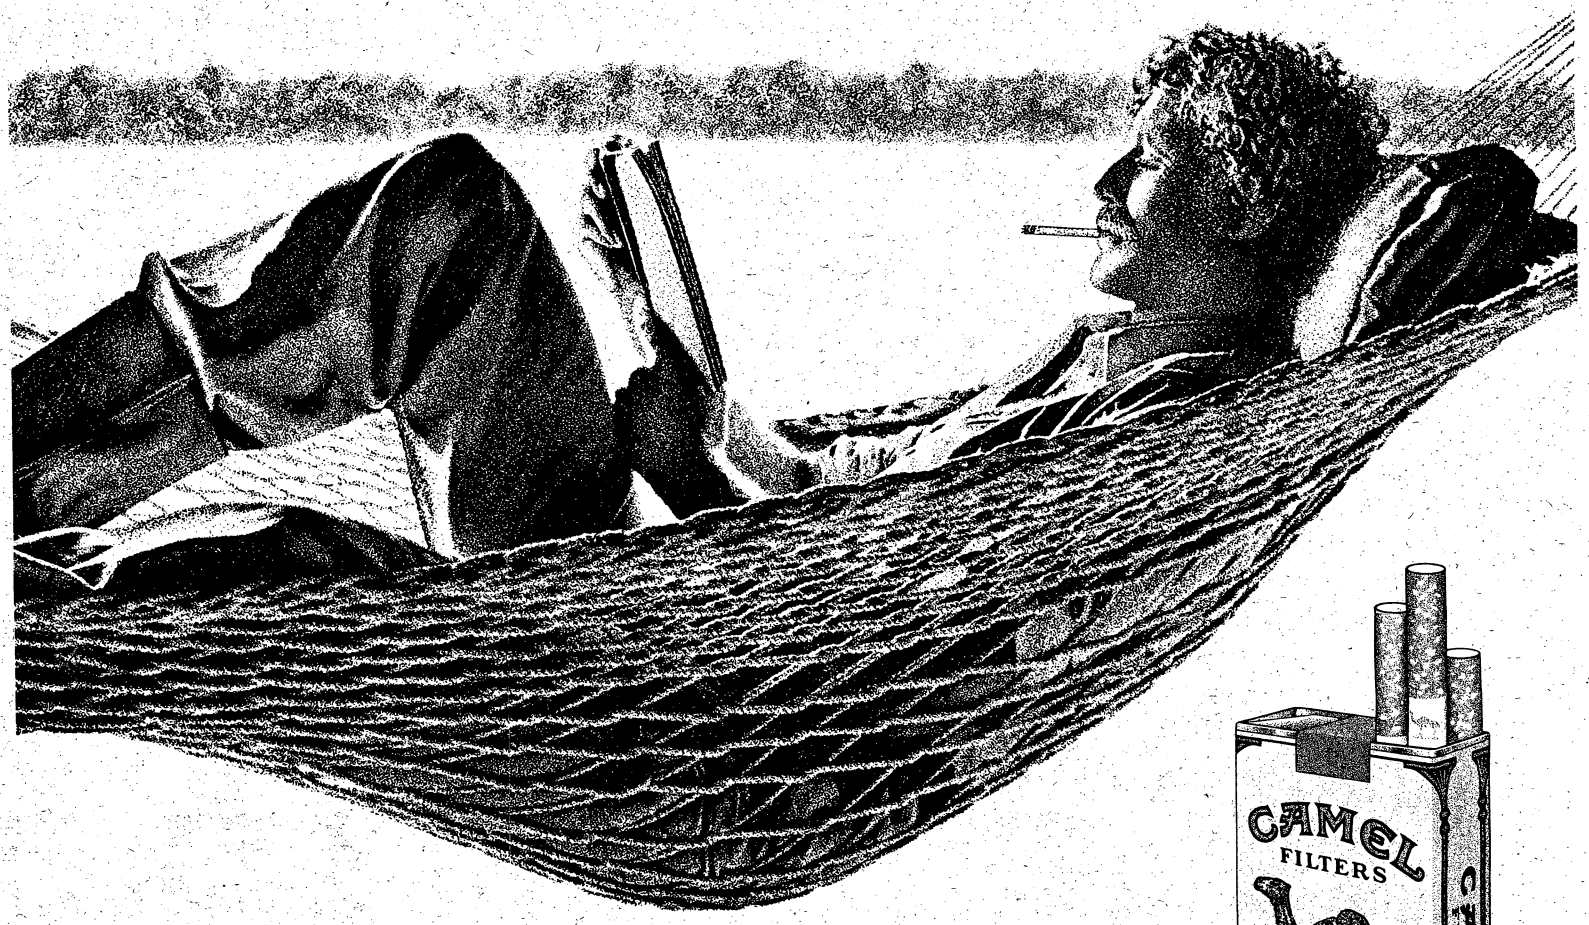
Provost marshal

- Try to avoid running during peak traffic hours or in congested areas. Avoid main thoroughfares like Dixie/1st Division Roads and Benning Boulevard/10th Division road.
- Carry some type of identification. Most running clothes don't provide pockets, but there are commercially produced pouches available for attachment to runner's shoes or waist. Information should include your name, address, phone number and any medical alert information.



There are also some definite "don'ts" for running on Fort Benning. Runners are subject to the same regulations as walking pedestrians. They must avoid impeding traffic and creating a traffic hazard or run the risk of being cited by the military police. Examples of citable offenses and unsafe practices are:

- Running on the roadways (other than in unit formations).
- Any act which could reasonably be expected to create a potentially hazardous situation.



Running is a means to improve your health. Don't be counterproductive and needlessly endanger your life while you run.

Soldier says diet, workouts major factors in his success

By Bill Muller
29th Infantry Regiment

SFC Luis Guasch is the Southeast Armed Forces body building champion.

For Guasch, a mortar instructor at the Maintenance Management Division, 29th Infantry Regiment, the road to success wasn't always easy.

"I was very skinny when I was young, and people used to tease me about my size," Guasch said smiling. "The wind could have blown me away."

At the age of 17, he weighed 96 pounds at five feet six inches tall. Now, at 41, he weighs 173 pounds and is five feet eight inches tall.

Guasch credits his comeback to a lot of exercise, a good diet and a man named Charles Atlas.

"I read an article about Charles Atlas and his program and sent away for the catalogue and equipment," Guasch said. "That was the best $10 I've ever spent.

At the start Guasch lifted weights to increase his weight and to improve his stamina.

It wasn't until he got to Fort Benning that he started to take body building seriously.

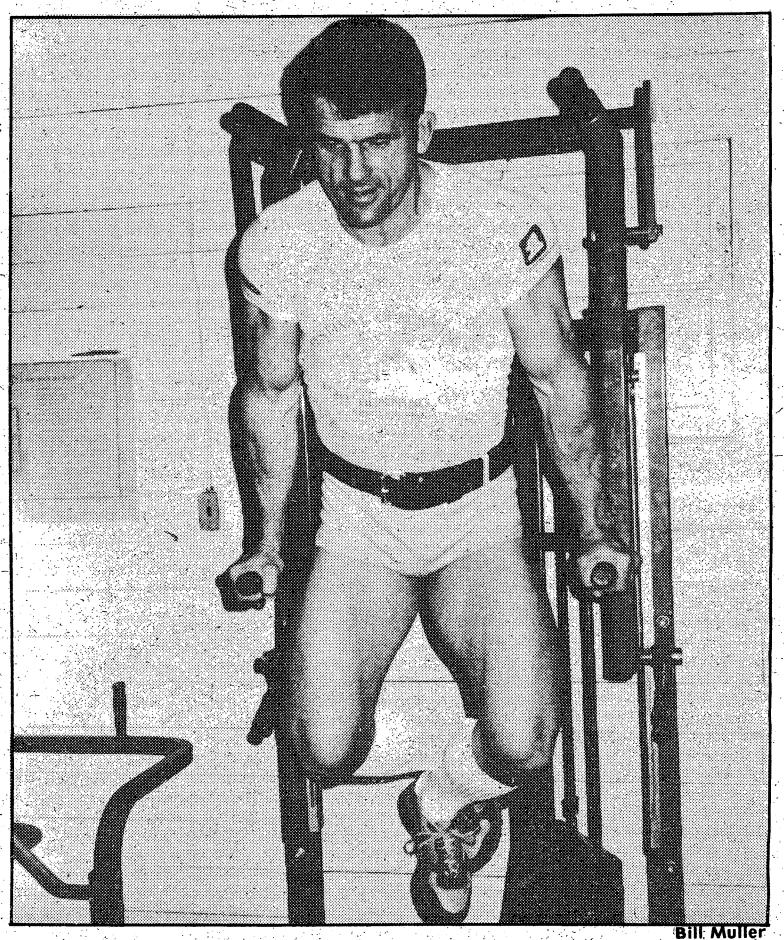
"Because the gyms are so close I could work out more often," Guasch explained. "I didn't have time to do serious training at other posts."

Guasch begins his workout before reporting to work, then works out at lunch time and completes his workout after work. He does this six times a week.

Guasch credits his diet as a main factor in being able to maintain such rigorous workouts. He suggests that everyone maintain a healthy diet.

"Your body is like a car engine," he said. "If you don't give it the proper fuel it won't perform properly."

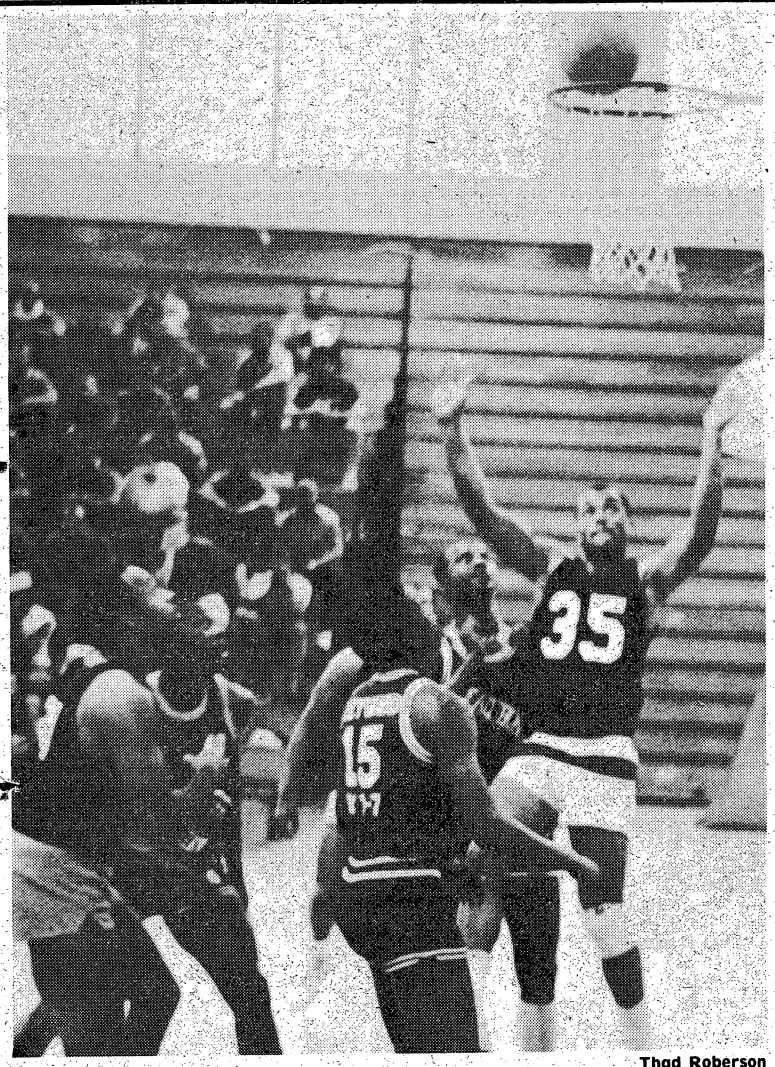
One of Guasch's main concerns is setting a good example.



"I try to set a good example for the people who work around me," he said. "If you're an instructor you don't only have to have knowledge, you should also be in shape."

Guasch said he will continue to lift weights until he can't do so any longer.

"I've been learning by experience," he said. "The more I practice the more I learn, and the more I learn the more competitive I become."



Although competing is only a small part of body building, Guasch says that he likes to compete and is competitive by nature.

"When I compete and win it makes me feel like I've accomplished something," he said. "That's the biggest reward I get out of this sport."

Redeyes triumph over Headhunters

By Sally Toomey
197th Brigade Public Affairs Office

In a come-from-behind victory, the Redeyes of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade took the gold in the brigade basketball tournament at the Kelley Hill Fitness Center last week.

The champs triumphed 47-45 over the "Headhunters" of HHC, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry.

The Headhunters were up 26-16 at the end of the first twenty-minute half of the high scoring of SSG Eddie Smith. Smith scored 18 of his total 22 game points in the first half.

But, it was in the second half that the Redeyes rallied their scoring drive and took advantage of free throw opportunities to close the gap. Jackson led the Redeye team in scoring with 20 points followed by SP4 Patrick Batten, who scored 11.

Also held last week was the 197th Infantry Brigade Officers Basketball Tournament. The officers of 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery were victorious in the championship game over 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry.

Former Oakland Raider now gives advice at post gym

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

He dosen't look like he's from Mars. He isn't even green. His massive six foot, five inch frame seems to blend into the room. Otis Sistrunk, 40, sits behind his desk casually looking beneath the brim of his Los Angeles, 1984 Olympics baseball cap.

Sistrunk, who once played professional football with the Oakland Raiders, now resides in Columbus where he was born and raised.

He also works on Fort Benning.

Sistrunk began work at the Santiago Gym on Sand Hill in December 1985. He offers his expertise as a sort of jack of all trades. "I advise Physical training. If somebody needs help in the weight room I'll work with them, or if someone wants I'll give them tips on how to lose weight." Sistrunk said.

The onetime superbowl star sits relaxed, an obvious seasoned interviewee, as he reminisces of his football days.

"I was first drafted by the Rams after High School. I had originally wanted to play basketball. Football was my second choice." Sistrunk said.

Sistrunks stay with the Rams was a brief 5 weeks before being traded to the Raiders. He remained with Oakland for the duration of his football career where he became known as the "Man From Mars".

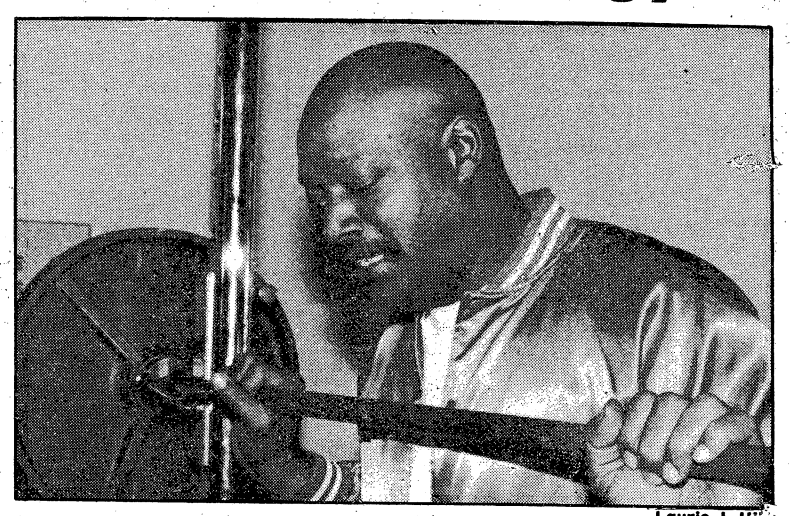
"Alex Karris came off the field one day with his head steaming and he said that I looked like the man from mars. Thats how I got the name," Sistrunk said.

The media quickly picked up on the new nickname. "It made me known in the NFL (National Football League), and my bald head became my trademark," he added.

Sistrunk achieved what every football player dreams about but only a few accomplish. In 1974 he went with the Oakland Raiders to the Superbowl.

"You never seem to remember the losers," Sistrunk said. And to refresh the readers memory, Oakland beat the Minnisota Vikings in that particular game.

As if speaking for himself he tells of how much pride is involved in possesing the superbowl ring. "For most guys the ring is more important than the money won," and explains that the absence of the ring from his immence hands is because he is working.



Sistrunk took advantage of his fame to reach children and became involved in programs to influence them in a positive manner.

He made anti-drug and drinking commercials as well as a multitude of personal appearances at schools.

The voted all-pro player never forgot his roots as he returned to Columbus during the off-season to be with his family."Playing pro football you're in the fast lane, so off season you just want to get away from it all." Sistrunk said.

And life seemed to move pretty fast for Sistrunk. During his career he found enough time to act in four movies, one of which was "Car Wash", and a number of commercials which ranged from famous brand watches to razor blades. "Yes, the razors actually have real blades in them, and we really did shave with them 10 times!" he said.

Upon retirement, Sistrunk moved back to Columbus where he volunteers for various functions.He looks forward to working with children again. He expresses hope in getting a childrens program started on Fort Benning. "Kids look up to professional athletes. A lot of them like to pattern themselves after them," said Sistrunk.

Laurie J. Hill

STILL STRONG — Otis Sistrunk displays his weight lifting capabilities at the Santiago Gym.

There is a slight sadness in his eyes when asked if he misses football.

"When you get out of the Army you have to prepare yourself for civilian life, it's just the same with pro football," Sistrunk said.

He frequently stays in contact with old friends such as fellow football star Gene Upshaw. "We have a way of keeping up with the guys through the retirement union," he said.

He dosn't work out much anymore but carries his 275 pounds well. He walks with a slight limp indicative of old football injuries.

"I don't have to kill myself anymore," he answered when asked if he still plays.

Otis Sistrunk, all pro retired defensive end and tackle has lot of expertise to offer any sports program.

AUSA treats soldiers to college game

On Saturday, February 1, 63 soldiers and family members were the guests of Columbus College for the annual Old Timer's Basketball Game and the regularly scheduled game that followed between Columbus College and La Grange College.

Arrangements were made by The School Brigade, Follow-Me Chapter of the Association of the United States Army.

"The AUSA board decided that we wanted to host some activities for the soldiers. We wanted to show them that AUSA is for all of them," said Col. Fred Peters, the sub-chapter's senior military advisor.

The game, a close, tough loss for the Columbus College Cougars, was enjoyed by everyone and offered soldiers something different to do on a Saturday night.

The sub-chapter is planning other activities in the future such as an open membership meeting February 14 with refreshments, basketball and softball tournaments and trips to Atlanta to see the Atlanta Hawks.

Peters thanked the Columbus College athletic director, Coach Herb Greene, and Kathy Bass for their help and support in bringing about this pleasant event.

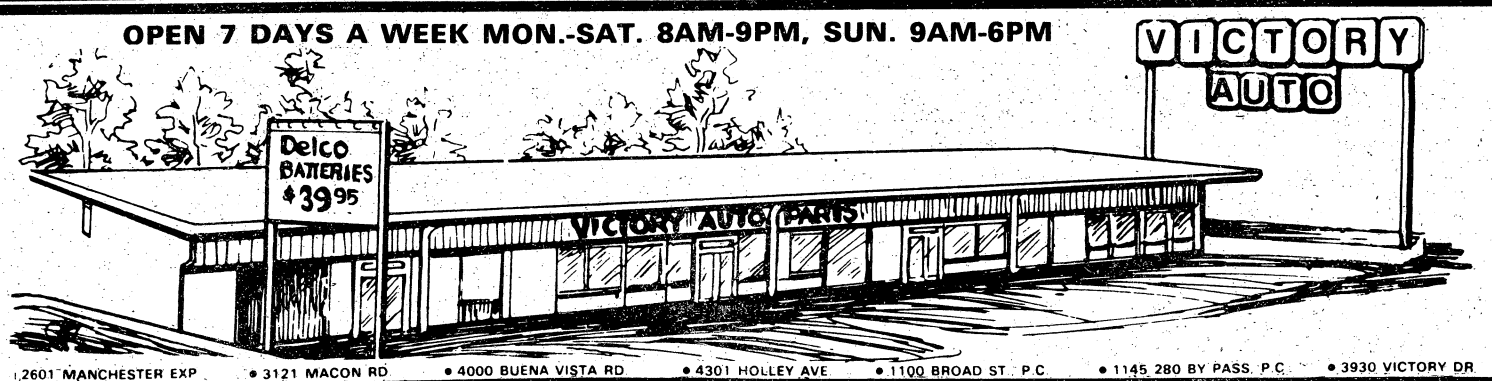
Engineers roll their way to top in tournament

By Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affais Office

The bowling team from the 608th Ordinance Company, 36th Engineer Group rolled their way to the 1985/86 Company Level Bowling Championship on February 3 and 4.

Captained by Sgt. Bryan Sherman, the team scored 5415 points to outdistance their closest opponents, the second place team from B Battery, 2/10 F.A., 197th Infantry Brigade, by 125 points.

High Series Women was won by Sp4 Cecilia Ramos with a 466 and she also took the High Game Women with a 185.



Lt. Col. Bob Madayag swept the High Series Men and High Game Men with, respectively, a 284 and a 250.

There are 40,001 good reasons to read this ad.

One reason is simply* because you are among those fortunate enough to be able to read.

The other reasons? 40,000 of your Columbus-area neighbors are not able to read.

For whatever the reason, they never learned how to read. But they want to.

Functional illiteracy has become an epidemic locally and nationally, affecting one out of five Americans. It robs them of a decent living; it robs them of self-respect; it robs them of the simplest of human pleasures like reading a fairy tale to a child.

The problem is being recognized, however. And The Ledger-Enquirer is joining efforts to attack illiteracy on our home front.

You can help.

We are lending our support and assistance to organizations like the Muscogee Area Literacy Association and Muscogee schools' Adult Education Program. They teach people to read. But they need more tutors to do the teaching. The organizations routinely have waiting lists of people who want to learn but there just aren't enough tutors.

Here's Where You Come In.

To become a tutor, you would need to take about 12 hours of formal instruction. Once trained, you'll be asked to commit some 90 minutes a week to tutor a student, plus an hour or so of preparation. It's an investment of time, but well worth the reward of someone learning to read.

If you're interested in helping, call the following numbers: The Muscogee Area Literacy Association at 323-5518 or 322-2475, The Adult Education Program at 689-6755, The Turner Center at Columbus College at 568-2023. The next training session is scheduled for March.

THE BAYONET

Vol. 44, No. 22 | Published in the interest of Fort Benning, Ga. personnel | FEBRUARY 21, 1986

Storm plan to be tested on post this Wednesday

Fort Benning will conduct the yearly test of the United States Army Infantry Center Storm Plan Wednesday.

This year's test will be held concurrently with a statewide tornado drill conducted by the Georgia Emergency Management Agency and the National Weather Service.

Should there be severe weather on the day of the test, it will be rescheduled by Ft. Benning for February 28.

Columbus Symphony tuning up to perform at Benning tomorrow

Fort Benning's Marshall Auditorium will be thundering in a euphony of music tomorrow evening as the Columbus Symphony Orchestra presents its annual Benning concert beginning at 8 p.m.

Admission to the concert is free and the doors will open at 7 p.m.

Selections to be played range from the Amparito Roca March to the Pink Panther and Songs of the Beatles. Also, in a tribute to School of the Americas, many Latin tunes will be featured.

According to symphony conductor Harry Krueger, the orchestra will have 75 of its musicians on-stage for the event.

Program uses public to help solve crimes

In an effort to cut down on the unsolved crimes in the Columbus area, local police have started a CRIME STOPPERS program.

The program, which began Feb. 3, uses the news media to publicize descriptions of criminals and crimes, in hopes that someone may come forward with information that might help police catch the suspects.

People who call with information do not have to reveal their identity, but if they do, they can collect reward money in some cases.

"People can earn as much as $1,000 if there is an arrest or indictment in a crime," said Sgt. Stan S. Sweeney, CRIME STOPPERS coordinator for the Columbus Police.

Sweeney said he knows the program really works. "In just the short time we've been active, there are several phone calls a day, several arrests and property already recovered," he said.

The program originated in Albuquerque, N.M., in the 1970's and has since spread to 600 cities internationally, including cities in Canada, Britain and Puerto Rico.

"Fort Benning can help the program by reporting suspicious activity and crimes to the Military Police or Columbus Police, who work closely together," Sweeney said.

Watch for CRIME STOPPERS in upcoming issues of the Bayonet.

Ambrose visits

Undersecretary of the Army James Ambrose (2nd from r), accompanied by Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba Jr., post commander (c), talks to soldiers from Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment during a recent visit to Red Cloud Range. Ambrose visited Fort Benning last week to see an M-2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle life-fire exercise, which was conducted by Company D.

Changes in VHA predicted under new program

By Carmen M. Finstad
Army News Service

Variable housing allowances will be calculated under a new formula when the Army converts to the new "VHA Offset" Program March 1.

Under the program, mandated by Congress in the 1986 Defense Authorization Act, VHA payments will be calculated individually for each soldier by comparing actual housing expenses to housing entitlements (basic allowances for quarters plus VHA), said Kenneth L. Kielman from the Army's Finance and Accounting Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

The new payments will equal that amount of the VHA paid under the current formula minus an amount equal to one-half of the amount by which the soldier's entitlements exceed the actual expense.

Monthly housing expenses consist of mortgage or rent payments, liability and personal property insurance, and lot or berthing fees for soldiers claiming a mobile home or house boat as a residence, plus a standard utility/maintenance expense based on tables prepared by the per diem travel and transportaion allowances committee

Volunteers provide valuable service to community

Special people provide services vital to many military families

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Sgt. Harry Highspeed, his wife, and two children arrive at Fort Benning from Panama. They were told by their finance office there that they would be paid upon arrival at Fort Benning. Sgt. Highspeed finds, however, that his records have been misplaced and he cannot get paid in full but will have to make-do with a partial pay.

He and his wife find that they have enough for an efficiency apartment but no money for food.

The Highspeeds have no savings to draw upon because they didn't have a budget set up.

They are also worried because their household goods have been sent to Fort Benjamin Harrison instead of Fort Benning and they have no linens, silverware or pots and pans.

On the flight from Panama to Atlanta their luggage was lost and they have no clothes except what they are wearing.

Mrs. Highspeed gets a job to earn extra money but can't find a reliable babysitter to take care of their children.

One of the Highspeed children is an exceptional child and needs special care and activities and the Highspeeds are worried that they can't get the child needed help.

Sgt. Highspeed's commander tells him to call the Volunteer Resource Center and when he does he is told to go to Army Community Services for assistance.

At a double-time, the Highspeeds are given a loan to pay for groceries from Army Emergency Relief and they see an ACS budget counselor who helps them set up an emergency and long-term budget.

Since their household goods have been sent to the wrong place they are loaned everything they need from ACS's Lending Closet and they are told to check the Thrift Shop for any clothing they may need until they get theirs.

Mrs. Highspeed is able to start her job as their children will be taken care of by Tot Town Nursery.

Their exceptional child is enrolled in the Exceptional Family Member Program and both children are signed up for Youth Activity soccer teams.

It seems everything will work out for the Highspeed family.

The Highspeed's story is, of course, a hypothetical one, but bits and pieces of it happen every day at Fort Benning. The people who work at Army Emergency Relief, budget counseling, the Lending Closet, the Thrift Shop,the Exceptional Family Member Program and the Youth Activities have one thing in common: they are all unpaid volunteers. These people, giving freely of their own time, play an integral part in helping Fort Benning soldiers and family members in times of need.

According to Pat Sneed, the Installation Volunteer Coordinator, there are 1100 volunteers at Fort Benning. Together, they fill over 2500 jobs, some working more than one volunteer project at a time. These volunteers put in 200,000 plus hours of work in 1985 that would translate into, if they were paid minimum wage, over $700,000. In this era of budget cuts, these volunteers served vital programs in the Benning community that cost the taxpayer nothing.

"Without volunteers, needed programs at Fort Benning would be simply done away with. Most of these programs are vital to soldiers and soldier's families," Sneed said.

The volunteer network at Benning comprises an internal structure of help for people that, if torn down, would leave soldiers and families left to fend for themselves in the resulting debris made up of everyday problems that are unique to the military.

"The typical volunteer puts in six to eight hour work week but there are some who work 40 hours every week in volunteer projects. We also have volunteers who have a career that do volunteer work on the weekends," Sneed said.

Laurie J. Hill

RECEIVES AWARD—Wanda Campbell (r) presents Helen Walls (l) with an award for her volunteer services while Theresa Forbes looks on, in a Volunteer Award ceremony given at the NCO Club Friday.

She said that most volunteers are motivated to do volunteer work because they simply care for other people and want to help. Others work as volunteers to acquire new or improved job skills to enhance their ability to get a paid position.

Sneed, who is a civil service employee but who has 20 years of volunteer work under her belt, says that her job was created to better use volunteer resources.

"I interview each new volunteer to see what they're interested in and where their skills lie. I then try to place them in a job they'll enjoy. That way they're happy and the job is being done by a person really interested in it," she said.

In addition to the already mentioned activities that volunteers operate, they are also heavily involved in Red Cross functions and serve as tour guides at the National Infantry Museum.

"Without volunteers the quality of life at Fort Benning would really go downhill. We all need volunteers here and we have a lot to offer anyone interested in helping other people," Sneed said.

Anyone interested in volunteering can call the Volunteer Resource Center at 545-5602.

'Caring' key word for increasing productivity

By Lorine Kennedy
Interface Magazine

It seems that we are asked to do more and more with less and less. Perhaps doing more with nothing is the new wave of the future. Having enough manpower and dollars is a thing of the past, and motivating employees to be more productive is fast becoming a top priority for top management.

Army managers frequently speak of the 80-20 law: 80 percent of the work is done by 20 percent of the people. That is frightening. Accurately measuring output in nonproduction and service jobs is difficult, but can you imagine the cost of this unproductivity if dollars were applied to the 80-20 law?

Questions about productivity are being voiced more and more by American taxpayers. They have made it clear that they are dissatisfied with the size and performance of the government.

A leading industry specialist told one government agency that high value work will be difficult to obtain "when there is pride, greed, corruption, ignorance, blind adherence to old ways, adamant attitudes, carelessness, wasteful habits, bureaucracy, insecurity, fear of personal loss or lack of motivation."

Managers of top-rated corporations in Japan and America attribute their success to a variety of factors. The highest ranking factor, however, is the treatment and handling of people at all levels.

One characteristic common to all successful organizations is the loyalty displayed by employees. This loyalty is based on mutual trust — the supervisor and subordinate who have faith in each

Dear Editor:

I'm writing in reference to your Jan. 31, 1986 issue of the Bayonet.

You ran the article "Artic cold front sends shivers through post" on page one. I feel the front page should have covered news about the deaths of the seven American astronauts.

While the news on the cold front was important, it was not as important as the deaths of these great Americans. Their loss affected the lives of every living person in the world.

Last week's story on child care said it is against regulations for people to keep children in their homes for pay on a regular basis. It should have said that keeping children regularly, with or without pay, is against regulations.

VHA

for each locality, pay grade and dependent status, Kielman said. BAQ entitlements will not be affected under the program.

For example, a major, with dependents, assigned to Washingtn, D.C., receives a VHA of $262.34 and a BAQ of $519.90 for a combined allowance of $782.24. If his total housing costs are $871, his VHA payments will remain the same because his total expenses exceed his allowances.

In another case, a master sergeant, with dependents, assigned to the same area receives $232.02 in VHA and $412.50 in BAQ payments for a total allowance of $647.52. His housing expenses total $535. Because his allowance exceeds his total expenses by $112.52, that excess is divided in half ($56.26) and subtracted from the full VHA of $232.02, resulting in a VHA offset payment of $175.76.

To comply with the program, all soldiers receiving VHA must submit to their unit commander a DA Form 4187 (Personnel Action Form), which outlines housing expenses, plus documentation that establishes rental or ownership payments.

Kielman said he realizes that documentaion for many soldiers might not be processed before March 1. He explained that the VHA will continue until DA Form 4187 has been processed. Once processed, however, VHA offset will become retroactive to March 1.

This means that soldiers who have been receiving VHA payments above the offset amount will have to pay back the difference, he said. So, soldiers gain nothing by delaying submission of the paperwork.

As documentation, renters must furnish a copy of their lease or, if none was signed, copies of rent receipts or cancelled checks. Personal property and liability insurance can be substantiated by copies of premium bills or cancelled checks.

Owners must furnish evidence of expenses for allowable mortgage payments including principle, interest, taxes and insurance. A mortgage payment schedule and a statement of escrow payments could be used to document these payments. If taxes on insurance are paid separately, copies of the bill or statement must be furnished.

The program also contains provisions for calculating VHA payments to soldiers falling into several categories where living arrangements might differ from the norm, Kielman said.

An example of such a case is the soldier entitled to one VHA payment who maintains two residences. When soldiers and their dependents live apart, expenses for both residences can be combined to figure the offset VHA rate. However, the standard utility/maintenance expenses for the soldier's location will be used in the computation.

A procedure also has been established for calculating payments for soldiers maintaining two residences and entitled to two VHA allowances. When soldiers assigned to Alaska or Hawaii are entitled to VHA at the "without dependents" rate established for their permanent duty station there, and to an additional VHA at the "with dependents" rate for family members living elsewhere, expenses for both residences will be used in calculating the offset rate for each of the VHA payments.

The VHA offset calculation also will consider the number of people sharing a residence, Kielman said. Under the program, "sharers" are defined as members of the uniformed services entitled to VHA or an overseas housing allowance; federal civilian employees entitled to a living quarters allowance; and individuals, excluding the soldier's dependents, who help pay the housing expenses. The amount a soldier who is sharing a residence can claim for rent or ownership expenses is derived by combining the allowable expenses and dividing that sum equally by the number of sharers. The utility/maintenance payment will be calculated by dividing the "with dependents" rate for that soldier's pay grade by the number of sharers.

Soldiers who do not have legal custody of children and are paying child support can only claim housing expenses associated with their residence

Also, single soldiers living on the economy who receive BAQ at the "with dependens" rate bacause of child support will only be given VHA at the "without dependents" rate. Soldiers who receive BAQ solely for child support and live on post no longer will receive VHA payments.

Documentation furnished by soldiers to establish their housing expenses will be closely monitored by unit commanders, Kielman said. Soldiers knowingly submitting false claims to defraud the government run the risk of prosecution.

Regiment soldiers support IOAC FTX

29th Inf.

By Bill Muller
29th Infantry Regiment

The Infantry's Officer's Advanced Course Field Training Exercise IOAC FTX is geared to benefit everyone, said 2nd Lt. Walter Parker, platoon leader, Alpha Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The training is not only designed for IOAC students, but for support personnel as well.

Recently, Alpha Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment and Delta Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment benefitted from their support of an IOAC FTX.

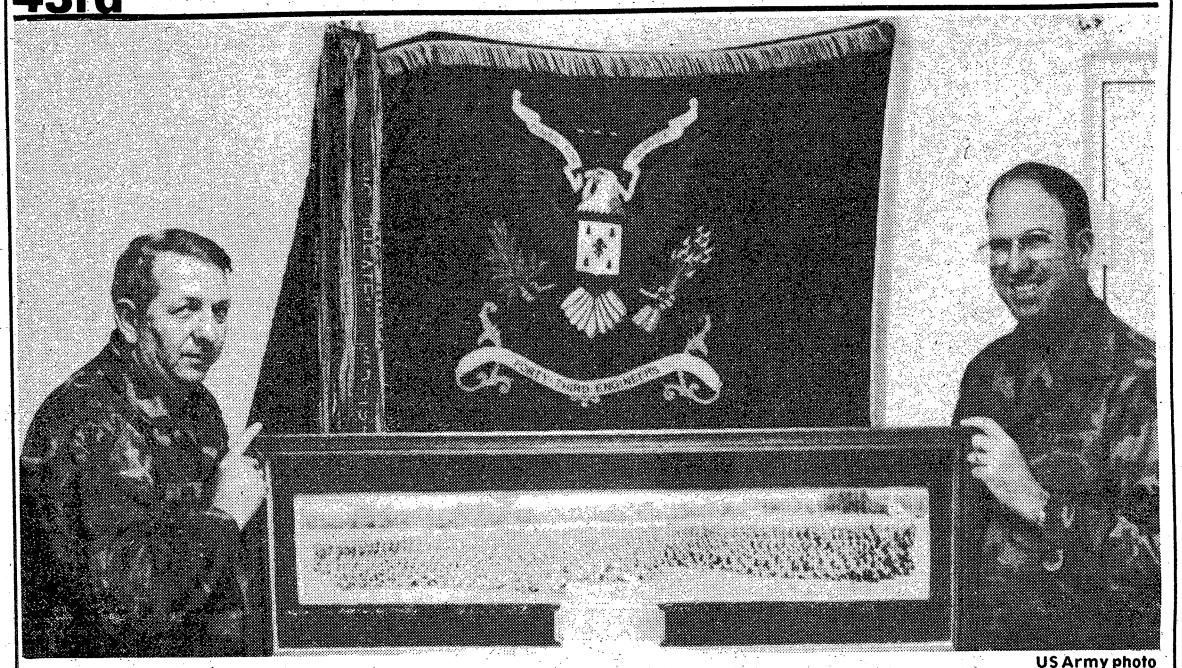
The regiment soldiers served as drivers and supported tactical and logistical operations, Parks said.

According to Capt. George Lennon, Delta Company commander, the soldiers had the opportunity to observe the way battles are conducted and the way tactical manuevers are planned.

"This is an opportunity for soldiers to see the stress and demands put on a company commander," Lennon said.

Also, the soldiers participate in basic formations, defensive positions and delay tactics.

There is a lot of hard work, according to Parker. And at the end of the day, the drivers must perform maintenance on their vehicles.



Lennon said, "When the IOAC students are finishing for the day, our soldiers are just getting started."

Some soldiers get involved with making map overlays and planning tactical operations, also.

Alpha Company supported the FTX with 45 personnel and 30 M-113 Armored Personnel Carriers.

Delta Company furnished 111 personnel and 34 M-2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicles.

Historical find

Lt. Col. Robert Bean, (l) a reservist with the 37th Engineer Battalion, came across this military photograph in a pawn shop in Fort Missola, Mont., and decided to buy it and research the unit's origins. It turned out to be a picture of the activation of the 43rd Auxillary Forestry Battalion, taken May 17, 1918. He discovered that the unit was now an active duty battalion redesignated the 43rd Engineer Battalion (Combat)(Heavy) at Fort Benning, Ga. Bean contacted Lt. Col. Richard Shuler, the 43rd Battalion's commander, and arranged to return the photograph to the unit. The picture now hangs in the battalion headquarters as a reminder of the unit's colorful heritage.

COHORT soldiers fly off to Rucker for training

By Henry Brown
USAIC Public Affairs Office

COHORT soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade under went some unique training last week.

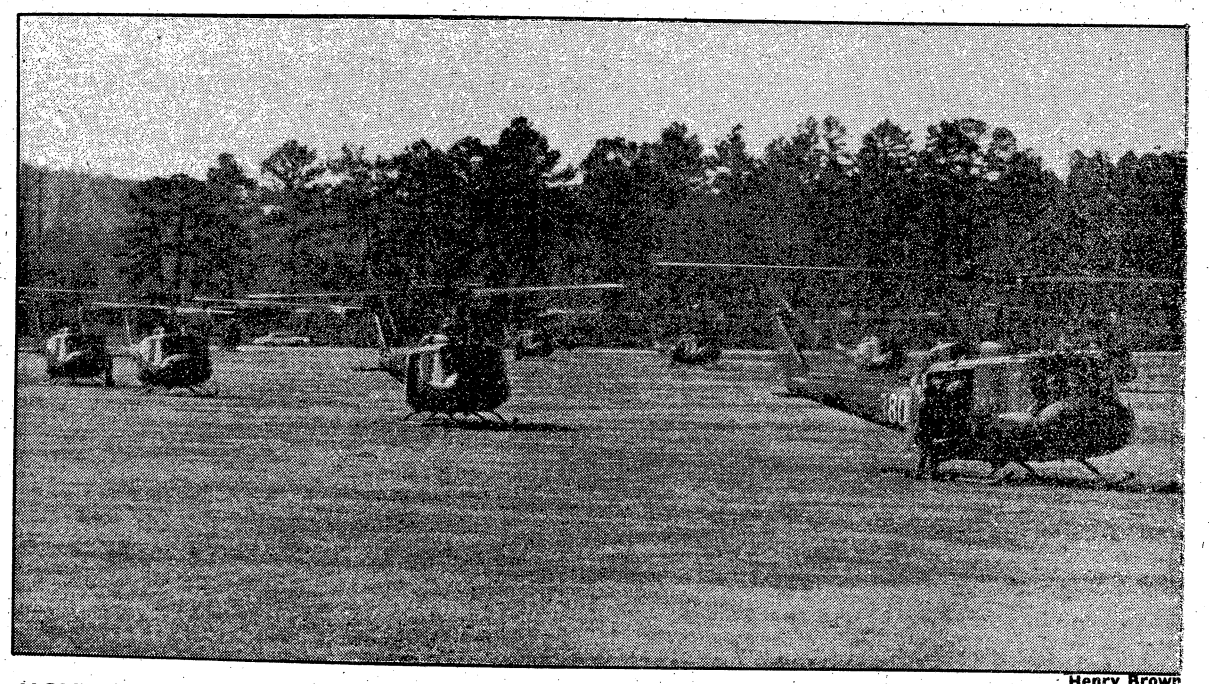
Companies A, B and C were airlifted by UH-1H Helicopters to Fort Rucker, Alabama for a five day field training exercise.

The operation started last Thursday when 101 soldiers and cadre from Bravo Company boarded 25 helicopters to make the hour and fifteen minute flight.

"After we landed, we went on a five mile road march to the bivouac and spent the rest of the day setting up a hasty defensive position"'said Capt. Carl E. Cornelius, Jr., commander of B Co.

The second day was spent digging-in.

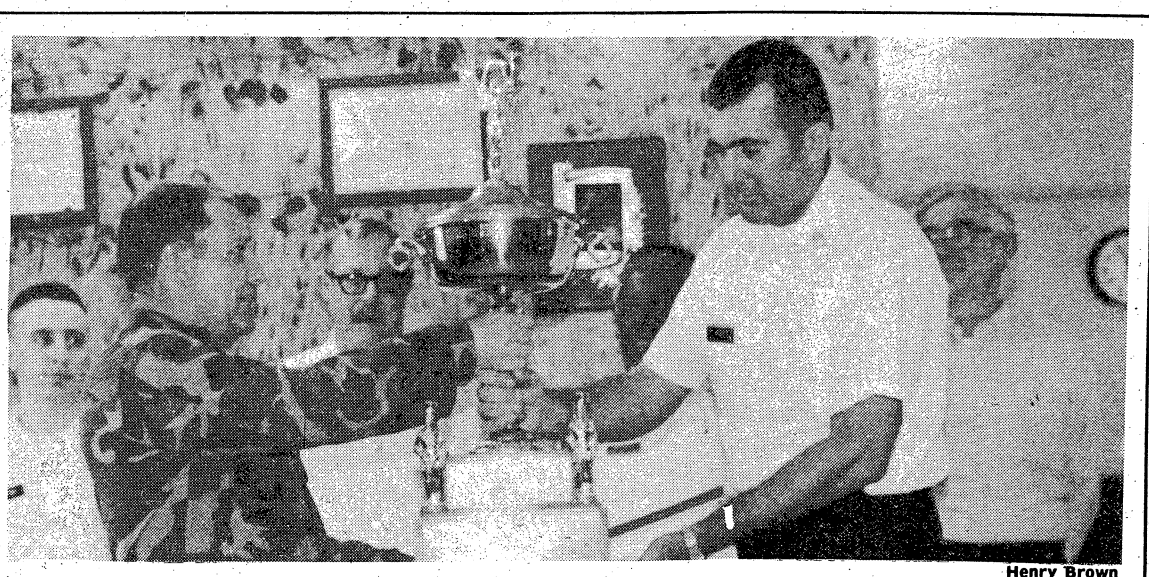
Saturday's training included movement to contact and reaction to sniper, artillery and enemy contact, Cornelius explained.



Cornelius described his soldiers as being highly motivated.

"We shot well this cycle. The company scored a 31.11 average out of a possible 40 on Basic Rifle Marksmanship, they missed maxing the mid cycle test by one no go, they got the Physical Training streamer for averaging 275 out of 300 on the PT Test and missed the end of the cycle test by one no go again," Cornelius said.

When these soldiers graduate from One Station Unit Training they will become members of the 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division (Light Infantry) which is stationed here.



Cornelius said the exercise ended on Monday with a seven mile tactical road march to the pick up point where the unit was airlifted back to Fort Benning.

INTERVENTION

in•ter•ven•tion - Alcoholism and drug dependency are diseases of denial. This means that it usually takes a crisis to force a percon suffering from drinking or drugging problems to accept treatment. This crisis could be loss of a job or an automobile accident. An intervention is a controlled confrontation between the patient and his or her family or employer. Good treatment programs such as the Help Unit at Cobb Memorial Hospital help employers or families intervene effectively while the chance for recovery is still good.

Engineers go west for 'Operation Hell on Wheels'

By Terry N. Thompson
586th Engr. Co.

The 31st Engineer Detachment (Rubber Boat-15 Man) deployed to Fort Hood, Texas, recently to participate in Operation Hell on Wheels I. The divisional level exercise was from Jan. 6 through Jan. 30, 1986.

During this time, the 31st Engineer Detachment (RB-15) supported Company E (Mobile Assault Bridge), 17th Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Heavy), 2nd Armored Division.

Members of the detachment assisted in Assault River Crossings using the 15-man rubber boats and trained other soldiers in the care, use and maintenance of the boats. The detachment participated in over 30 day and night missions throughout the exercise.

Additionally, they gave over 25 classes to various units. Battalion-level river crossings were conducted on several occasions

The 31st Engineer Detachment (RB-15) is attached to the 586th Engineer Company (AFB), 67th Maint. Bn. Future exercises include a deployment to Ft. Bragg, N.C., with the 586th Engineer Company (AFB), to participate in the 20th Engineer Brigade Exercise from March 17- , 1986.

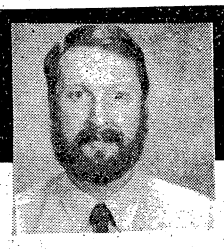
other work well together. If trust abides in an office, the group works as a team. All members cooperate toward the main objective — productivity.

Caring is a key word for influencing productivity.

Productivity improvement depends on the supervisor's management style. Too many "no" answers on the following checklist probably mean danger! Too many "yes" answers may mean that you're kidding yourself. Answer the questions on this checklist to see where your style fits in.

1. Do I truly trust my subordinates?
2. Are my employees capable of doing the tasks assigned to them?
3. Do my employees fully understand our goals and objectives?
4. Are my employees being trained to keep up with this hi-tech era?
5. Am I providing incentives and challenging work assignments?
6. Am I encouraging my employees to think? Do I allow employee participation in making decisions?
7. Could I establish job rotation to help diversify work assignments?
8. Are my employees' personal problems and needs a part of my concern for them?
9. Do I transmit positive expectations - express praise when deserved?
10. Do I reject shoddy or lazy work? Do I challenge my employees to do their best?
11. Do I improve working conditions whenever possible?
12. Have I established a plan to periodically evaluate my organization's productivity in order to improve it?



The Code of Ethics for Government Service includes productivity. As a government employee, you are expected to give a full day's labor for a full day's pay, with earnest effort and best thought to the performance of duties.

Both managers and employees should seek and implement more efficient and economical ways of accomplishing tasks. Productivity does not mean speedups, layoffs or management pressure.

It does mean effectiveness, efficiency, responsiveness, timeliness, and cost-effectiveness in providing products and services to your customers.

Productivity simply put is working together.

As you can see, we are all in this together working toward the same goal — that of improving the productivity level of Training and Doctrine Command offices.

E Company soldiers win end of cycle test streamer

Mike Brazile

CONTINUED KUDOS — ATC commander Col. Edward Szvetecz adds another ATC streamer to the guidon of Echo company commander, Capt. Jerald Gatlin.

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade has a company commander whose soldiers are making a habit out of breaking training records.

On February 11 Capt. Jerald Gatlin's Echo Company was awarded the Infantry Training Center's End of Cycle Test Streamer by ATC commander Col. Edward Szvetecz.

The award has been presented only five times and is earned when a One Station Unit Training company achieves 100 percent first time "go's" on their end of cycle test. To achieve an overall go, a soldier must pass at least 14 out of 15 basic training tasks, four out of five tasks common to his military occupational speciality and four out of five tasks specific to his MOS.

In addition, the company has also taken an ATC Basic Rifle Marksmanship streamer for 100 percent first time "go's" in rifle qualification and the ATC Army Physical Readiness Test streamer for a company average of 284 out of 300.

2nd ITB

"Capt. Gatlin is a hard-charing ing, dynamic, quintessential commander who sets the standard for training infantry soldiers," said 9th Battalion commander, Lt. Col. Fred Sheldon.

Sheldon also had high praise for Echo's drill sergeants.

"This company has some very dedicated, concerned, caring drill sergeants. Young people today do good things when they have good leaders. Echo's cadre fits the bill," Sheldon said.

Gatlin also praised his leaders and soldiers.

"We have a great combination this cycle. The troops really want to be infantry soldiers and the drill sergeants want to make them infantry soldiers. That results in outstanding performance by soldiers and cadre," he said.

Both Sheldon and Gatlin had high praise for the reserve drill sergeants and officers currently serving with the 9th Battalion. The reservists are from the 2nd Brigade, 95th Division out of Oklahoma.

Rangers Department now issuing special rain gear to students

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

There's a new fabric being issued that could help make soldiering a lot more comfortable.

Gore-Tex is now being used to make everything from gloves to "gators" (calf high leggings that cover boots).

The fabric is designed to keep out moisture in the form of water but will allow perspiration to evaporate from the inside.

The clothing comes in lightweight and heavyweight camouflage sets.

Although it is not warm it will keep the wearer dry and offers some insulation if worn in layers with other clothes.

The Ranger Department began issuing heavyweight Gore-Tex equipment to their students about eight months ago.

The heavyweight is issued to the Ranger students for the desert phase which frequently involves snowy mountain training.

Gore-tex is not available for standard issue to the average soldier, but it can be bought through civilian stores. The jacket runs from $120 to $200 and the pants begin at $80 at military clothing stores.

Women drinkers can get help

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

As if the stigma of alcoholism is not enough, the alcoholic woman has many problems which are unique to her gender.

In the battlezone of active drinking, and the journey back to recovery, the female alcoholic is faced with situations and problems unique to her gender.

Dr. Sidney H. Levine, clinical director of the Army's Alcohol and Drug Treatment Program on post said, "One factor is that society is still dealing with the fact that alcoholism is a disease not just a weakness in personality."

Research indicates that one out of 10 Americans who drink alcohol are alcoholic and that 2.25 million are women with alcohol related problems.

"We venture to say that there are almost as many women alcoholics as there are men," said Levine.

Women of all social and economic backgrounds and ages are victims of alcoholism. Research indicates that the problem is growing at a faster rate than that of men.

"It's being more identified, because more women are in the work force and because of the pressure, women in the work force are drinking more," Yvonne Linsenbigler, civilian program coordinator of Civilian Counseling Service said.

In spite of the many women in the work force, there are a large amount of alcoholic women working within the home.

"Many women whose work area is in the home center, find it's easier to drink at home and be hidden. There aren't as many eyes watching her," said Levine.

The female alcoholic carries a stigma with it that delays a woman from seeking help voluntarily. Many women who are brought in by family members and husbands are usually in the later stages of the disease due to this stigma.

"Men have a hard time believing that the hand that rocks the cradle is the same hand that holds the bottle. It's inconsistant with our image of a mother. She's the homemaker, caretaker and nuturer. She's infallible." Levine said.

The stigma of society is but one problem exclusive to the alcoholic woman.

"Women in the work force are subject to sexual blackmail, meaning that they won't be turned in if certain favors are met," Levine said.

Furthermore, "There is some evidence that women with high consumption of alcohol have become rape victims based on impaired judgement," said Levine.

The horror of alcohol abuse does not stop there. The alcoholic wife may become the victim of spouse abuse due to her lack of self-esteem and powerlessness over her situation.

"If she is not able to maintain the home and take care of the children, she may enrage the husband and he may strike out in frustration," Levine said.

Another factor, not exclusive but common to the woman alcohol abuser is the combination of pharmaceutical drugs and alcohol.

"You would find more women on prescription drugs like Librium and Valium. Many times a doctor will prescribe them without knowing she has a drinking problem," said Linsenbigler.

But there is relief from the nightmare of addiction. "That hope is for anyone who truly desires to stop drinking," said Ann, a recovering woman who wishes to remain anonymous.

"In most aspects the woman is not that different from the male when it comes to the recovery process. Of course we have biological differences and many of us have children we are usually raising alone but that doesn't seem to slow down the recovery process if a woman really wants to get better," Ann added.

According to Levine, treatment centers have recognized that recovering women have different needs and they have formed women's groups to meet these needs. He went on to say that although only 5 percent of those active duty who are being treated in the program are female, there is a 80 to 85 percent overall success rate.

"The most surprising thing for me, when I finally sought treatment, was that there are alot of women who have the same feelings and problems that I have. It was nice to know that I wasn't all alone." Ann said.

There are a number of places where anyone experiencing a problem with alcoholism can go for help.

There are counselors available at the Alcohol and Drug Control Office on post in Building 2212. An appointment can be made by calling 545-4821 or 545-2742.

Physicians can be of great help as well as hospitals and health clinics.

Also available is Alcoholics Anonymous whose answering service can be reached at 327-6078.

Service members should get annual compensation statement soon

Soldiers will receive their annual statement of military compensation later this month or in March from their units, according to an official at the United States Finance and Accounting Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

This statement, issued annually since 1983 at the direction of Congress, shows soldiers the various forms of compensation recieved for their service in the army.

The three-part statement shows direct compensation that is reflected in the soldier's Leave and Earnings Statements and W-2 Forms and additional benefits.

These additional benefits are represented by travel and living allowances, retirement and survivor's benefits, medical care and social security. Additional considerations such as job security, state and local tax advantages, bonuses, commissary and post exchange privileges and education programs are also figured in the statement.

Research done at USAFAC shows that these additional benefits can add as much as 15 to 19 percent in purchasing power to the amount soldiers actually receive on payday. (ARNEWS)

Post teachers hone skills at special workshops

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

While students enjoyed a day of vacation on Feb. 7, Fort Benning teachers, administrators and secretaries were actively involved in workshops on post and at selected sites throughout the state of Georgia.

Benning educators had a choice of 23 presentations to attend during the three morning sessions. Presentations were made on teaching creative writing, student self-concept, working with students who have English as a Second Language, previewing computer software, first aid for the teacher, using video taping to enhance classroom activities, mathematics strategies,maximum utilization of the school library, new trends in educational theory and several other subjects related directly to increased effectiveness in working with students.

"We have an extremely strong teaching staff here at Fort Benning Schools, as evidenced by the fact that our own staff members conducted the majority of our morning workshops," Mrs. Suzanne Williams, Deputy Superintendent, said.

"One of the ways that we believe we stay current is by continually examining how we work with children and by keeping abreast of the latest educational trends and materials. We hold workshops throughout the year related to specific topics, but our professional development day gives us the opportunity to meet together as a school system."

While most of the Fort Benning educators were involved in the morning sessions at Faith School, teachers at Dexter School were involed in workshops at Dexter School that dealt with improvement of student handwriting, utilization of their library,and the positiveeffects that the counseling program has in the elementary school.

Physical education teachers from Faith School and from several of the elementary schools spent the day at the Hughston Medical Center. They toured the facilities, which include the hospital, clinic, education center, and fitness center. The Committed Fitness Center is designed to advise and direct clients toward wellness and fitness programs, which are closely related to the goals of the physical education staff.

Special education teachers spent the day in Atlanta attending a workshop sponsored by the Psychoeducational Network. Topics included child abuse, children of divorce, how to be a positive advocate for children, and the socially maladjusted child.

School secretaries spent the afternoon in a computer workshop sharpening their skills in word processing and data base management. They also reviewed a new attendance program available to each school.

The White School faculty spent the entire day together as Dr. Donald Lueder from Tennessee State University in Nashville, Tennessee, conducted a workshop using the Myers-Briggs Personality Inventory to look at diversity within people. Dr. Leuder explored different ways people make decisions and what tht means when interaction with others. The workshop was designed to help White School professionals appreciate their individual differences and to use their respective strengths to work together in multi-grade groups next year.

Tony DiPaolo, a nationally known educator and speaker, addressed the rest of the Fort Benning teaching and administrative staff in an extensive afternoon session. This session covered a broad range of topics which included challenging the gifted child, the use of music and art in the classroom, improvement of student self-concept, and several motivational methods to be used with students.

While many Fort Benning educators regularly participate in after-school staff development coursework and/or graduate college programs as individuals, the Professional Development Day presented opportunities for the entire school system to explore and discuss current educational trends and topics.

Hall of fame inducts ten at Wigle Hall ceremony

Ten former Officer Candidate School graduates were inducted into the OCS Hall of Fame in a ceremony at Wigle Hall last week.

Among those inducted was Congressman Elwood H. "Bud" Hillis, of Indiana's Fifth District.

Other inductees were: Brig. Gen. Wayne C. Knudson, Col. Ralph L. Hagler, Col. Phillip Kearns, Col. (Ret) Joseph W. Lewandoski, Col. Herbert J. Lloyd, Col. Karl H. Lowe, Col. (Ret.) Henry H. McKee, Col. Larue R. Rosengrant and Col. Robert P. Walters.

Wigle Hall, which houses the Hall of Fame, was dedicated in June 1958 to honor graduates of the Infantry OCS program who have distinguished themselves in military or civilian pursuits.

It is named for 2nd Lt. Thomas W. Wigle, a 1943 graduate of OCS who received the Medal of Honor posthumously for his courageous actions on Sept. 14, 1944, that resulted in the capture of 36 enemy soldiers and the seizing of an enemy strongpoint. He was the first Infantry OCS graduate to be awarded the Medal of Honor in World War II.

Selection of Hall of Fame candidates is based on the following criteria: the officer must have been commissioned Infantry from the Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning or the Ground General School at Fort Riley, Kansas, or any other Department of the Army recognized officer candidate school, and accomplished one of the following.

The candidate must have been awarded the Medal of Honor (regardless of rank), attained the rank of colonel while serving on active duty or duty in a reserve component, been elected or appointed to an office of prominence in national or state government, or been recognized and recommended by the commandant of the Infantry School for outstanding service.

Special CHAMPUS form must be filed in cases when insured's injuries are caused by third party

CHAMPUS/CHAMPVA beneficiaries who have been in auto accidents, or who have become injured or ill in some other way, may need to complete a new form in addition to the regular CHAMPUS claim form. It's the CHAMPUS Form 691 (Statement of Personal Injury — Possible Third Party Liability), and it's to be used if there's a possibility that someone else was at fault.

The Form 691 replaces the old DA Form 1863-5, which collected information about the involvement of third parties in accidents, injuries or illnesses inclurred bv persons who are eligible for CHAMPUS/- CHAMPVA.

Here's how it works: When a claim is filed, the CHAMPUS-CHAMPVA claims processor examines it for potential third-party involement. If such a possibility exists, the processor will send a CHAMPUS Form 691 to the beneficiary, asking that it be completed and returned as soon as possible. The claim won't be paid until the form is returned — and if it isn't returned within 35 days of the processor's request, the claim — and other claims associated with the same episode of care — will be denied.

If the beneficiary knows that a third party is involed, he or she can speed processing of the claim by obtaining a copy of the Form 691 and submitting it along with the claim. The forms can be obtained from Health Benefits Advisors (HBAs) at military activities.

Once the completed Form 691 is returned tothe claims processor, it will be evaluated ad referred to a uniformed service claims officer, if appropriate. If the beneficiary has other health insurance or medical coverage, claims must be submitted to the primary insurer for payment before they are submitted to the CHAMPUS/CHAMPVA claims processor. If the CHAMPUS/CHAMPVA claims processor pays a claim on which a primary health insurer is either liable for payment or has made payment, the processor will be required to get back any resulting overpayment.

tutions and goals — besides the routine military experience. According to Army Regulation 12-15 on security assistance, "the IP further increases the student's awareness of the U.S. commitment to the basic principles of internationally recognized human rights."

"This tour proved to be very enlightening," said Maj. Tomas Castaing, a C&GSC student from the Dominican Republic. "I had no idea that the originator of the formula for Coca Cola, Mr. Pemberton, first discovered and developed this worldwide soft drink here," he said.

The students were briefed by Carol Embry, Historic Columbus Foundation.

Psychological operations new MOS offered by Army

The Army has begun a new MOS producing course that gives soldiers in-depth training in psychological operations.

Graduates of the "Psychological Operations Specialists Course" earn a 96F Military Occupational Specialty from the 11 weeks of resident instruction at the Army's John F. Kennedy Special Warfare Center, Fort Bragg, NC.

The course is designed to equip soldiers to perform psyop duties within specified units. It covers such areas as basic psyopdoctrine and procedures, along with deployment, production and dissemination of propaganda, said Maj. Robert A. Murray, chief of the enlisted training branch of the psychological operations department at the center.

Previous to this course, the Army's psyop specialists had to be drawn from the ranks of intelligence analysts (MOS 96B). Experience showed that this specialists psyop training was too limited in depth to meet current requirements. Because of this, army officials decided to create a seperate, but related, specialty based on added training in such critical task areas as awareness of cultural differences in attitude and behavior. Also included in the instruction are the types of media available in foreign countries and how they impact on the local population.

"Because of the overlapping of specialties, the new psyop training includes material from 96B instruction." said Murray.

He noted that the combination training means that the psyop specialists could also serve in intelligence-analyst assignments throughout the army. "Otherwise, it would be a 20-year tour at Fort Bragg, because in the active army there is only one psyop group, the 4th Psychological Operations Group."

Fort Bragg became the course's home because of the availability of the assets of the 4th Group, Murray explained. He added that active army graduates go straight to the 4th, thus keeping the movement of soldiers and the shipment of household goods to a mininum.

Soldiers interested in applying for the course will find its prereqiuisites outlined in Army Regulation 611-1. Basically, this means the grade of E-1---E-9, with eligibility for secret clearence (top secret with background investigation for E-6 and above); Normal color vision; Ability to speak and understand English and possession of a Defense Language Aptitude Battery Score of 89 or higher and a GT or ST score of 105.

The course is open to soldiers in all army branches. (ARNEWS)

Army offers early out option

An early release program announced recently at the Pentagon invites soldiers to voluntarily separate up to 60 days early, without penalty, if they are due to leave the Army this fiscal year.

The Army developed the program in response to the defense department's FY 86 budgeted strength requirements. Through the program, the Army must save $43 million in personnel funds, said J. Alvin Holdaway, from the enlisted programs branch of the Army's personnel office at the Pentagon.

Under the program, enlisted soldiers of all grades whose current expiration of term of service date is Sept. 30 or earlier may apply for release from active duty 30 to 60 days early. Requests for early release should be submitted to the unit commander on DA Form 4187 before March 22. Terminal leave can be used in conjunction with the early release program provided the local unit commander gives approval. The leave might not be approved in cases where it would cause a severe impact on unit readiness, Holdaway said.

In addition, some non-commissioned officers might be able to retire one or two months early depending on their service obligation. Holdaway recommends that NCOs eligible for retirement on Oct. 1 or earlier consult their retirement counsellor.

Several provisions included under the program ensure soldiers are not disadvantaged by participating in the early release program, Holdaway said.

Under the program, soldiers who meet the announced cut-off scores for promotion to sergeant between March 1 and September 1 could be promoted regardless of any remaining service obligation.

Conversely, sergeants who meet the announced cut-off scores for promotion to staff sergeant but do not have one year remaining in service will have to extend or reenlist, as in the past, to fulfill the one-year service obligation obtained from the promotion. Sergeants with permission to separate under the program who later meet the cut-off scores for promotion to staff sergeant will be permitted to reenlist or extend in order to accept the promotion.

The program also allows soldiers who separate under the early release program to keep their enlistment or reenlistment bonuses. Soldiers returning from overseas assignments are given credit for a complete tour. Soldiers participating in the veterans' education assistance program will be counseled at the local level regarding the effect early separation might have on their total VEAP benefits.

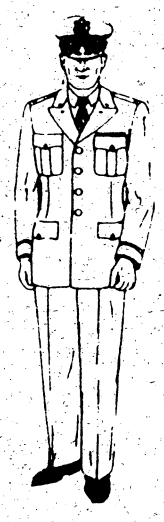
Unit commanders are authorized to approve separation requests under the program, Holdaway said. The first general officer in the chain of command can disapprove them. Disapproval should be based on critical operational necessity, such as deployment of a unit to the National Training Center, Holdaway said. The intent of this program is to enable as many soldiers as possible to separate early. (ARNEWS)

Beginning in April, new soldiers to receive 'Buddy-aid' training

Soldiers entering Basic Combat Training after April 1 are due to undergo 16 hours of hands-on instruction in what Army medical officials call "Self-AID/Buddy-AID."

This is a portion of the "Far-Forward Medical Care" currently being fielded by the army medical department as part of the army's airland battle doctrine. The training entails soldiers' becoming proficient in 10-life saving skills, said Capt. Keith Dixson, the program's monitor at the U.S. Army Academy of Health Sciences at Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

The decision was made to increase individual medical training because army training officials consider these skills critical to survival on the battlefield.



The kind of first aid represented by the self-aid/buddy-aid program takes into account the need for greater self-reliance by every soldier, Dixson said. He cited a recent medical study showing that uncontrolled bleeding causes about 50 percent of all combat deaths. If those victims were to receive early application of simple first-aid techniques, he added, nearly 40 percent of them would survive at least long enough to be evacuated to a medical facility.

The medical training is devised so that these combat-critical tasks will be taught and tested to soldier's manual qualification standards during basic combat training. The 10 life-saving skills are as follows: Evaluate casulity; Clear an object from the throat of a conscious victim; Perform mouth-to-mouth resuscitation; Put on a field or pressure dressing; Put on a tourniquet; Prevent shock; Splint a suspected fracture; Administer nerve agent antidote to self; Protect self against heat; and protect self against cold.

Five of those skills will be tested at the end of the training cycle. Those who fail the test will be allowed to retrain and retest.

Spiritual

God's greatest gift to man is wisdom

Reflections

By Chaplain John P. Hash

Albert Einstein's genius was so unique that his name has become synonymous with intelligence par excellence. On one occasion he was on a lecture tour where he discussed his theory of relativity. Einstein did not drive, so he had a chauffeur who drove him from place to place. As they were driving along one day his chauffeur said to the scientist, "You know, I've heard this lecture so many times now that I could do it myself." Einstein accepted the challenge. "The people at the next university have never seen me," said Einstein, "so they won't know who I am. You put on my clothes and I'll wear your uniform and cap. You introduce me as your chauffeur and I will introduce you as Dr. Einstein.

The lecture went as planned. The chauffeur delivered the speech flawlessly. Einstein enjoyed it immensely. Then, something happened that the two had not planned on. A mathematics professor asked a complicated question the chauffeur did not understand. Nevertheless, the chauffeur had the practical wisdom to respond: "Sir, the solution to that problem is so simple that I am really surprised you would even ask me to answer it. Anybody can answer that simple question. To prove it, I am going to have my chauffeur come up and answer it."

The need for wisdom, both intellectual and practical, has never been more urgent than it is today. We are faced with daily decisions that we must make which will greatly affect our lives. From another person whose name is synonymous with wisdom, Solomon, we can gain some insight into what real wisdom is.

Imagine the situation. The God who owned the cattle on a thousand hills, who held the whole world in his hands, said to Solomon, "Ask what you wish me to give you." This is another way of saying, "What is the most important possession in life that I could put in your hands?"

How would you answer that question? 1 King 3:11 says some would ask for long life, some for riches, some for power. Position in life is important, but it is not the ultimate goal for living. Experiencing the affirmation of God is! And supreme among the

Using tobacco biggest preventable cause of early death

By Thomas P. Goodell
Martin Army Community Hospital

The use of tobacco, in all of its forms, is increasingly being recognized as the single greatest preventable cause of illness and early death in the United States. While this article will talk about smoking for the most part, the use of tobacco in any form — cigar, pipe, cigarettes, or chewing tobacco — is unquestionably bad for your health.

In Georgia alone, over six thousand deaths were due to smoking in 1981 (the last year for which data is available). This represents 14% of all deaths in the state — 21% of all eaths due to cancer and 37% of all deaths due to lung disease.

Let's go over what smoking does to you:

Your Respiratory Tract. The irritation and tars in the smoke greatly increase the risk of cancers of the mouth, throat, and lung (70% of all lung cancer deaths are directly related to smoking). It increases the risk of respiratory infections and leads to the chronic lung diseases, bronchitis and emphysema.

Your Heart and Blood Vessels. The nicotine and carbon monoxide in cigarette smoke cause smokers to have two to three times the risk of heart disease of non-smokers. People who smoke more than one pack a day are three times more likely to have a heart attack.

Your Body. The effects of smoking are felt throughout your entire body. Cancers of the pancreas and urinary bladder, stomach ulcers, and other illnesses are all increased.

Your Family. The smoke doesn't end when it leaves your body — it goes out to affect every member of your family ("passive smoking"). Children from homes where a parent smokes contract respiratory infections more often and take longer to get well. The spouse of a smoker shares the increased risk of cancer.

The scientific data in the health effects of smoking have only been available since the 1950's and led to the labeling by the Surgeon General present today on all cigarettee packs. While this has resulted in decreased smoking in some groups, the increase in women smoking and the disturbing rise in teenage smokers has just shifted these health problems to a new group. The message about the hazards of smoking needs to reach all groups to have any affect.

What good does quitting do? The human body has an incredible ability to repair itself — all it needs is a chance. For example, if a person quits smoking, the risk of heart disease drops to that of a non-smoker after just two years.

The first step you need to take is to look at yourself and decide to quit smoking. No one can do this for you — you have to take the first step to a healthier life.

Next Week: Quitting Smoking

Army's Dental Corps celebrating its 75th anniversary this year

The U.S. Army was born in 1775, but for 136 years it did not have a Dental Corps. This month it is celebrating the 75th year since its founding.

It wasn't until the Spanish American War which resulted in the acquisition of far-flung territories, that a need was seen for providing dental care to soldiers in remote locations. The first legislation providing dentists to serve in the Army was enacted on Feb. 2, 1901. This bill authorized the employment of 30 dental surgeons on a contract basis.

Ten years later, on March 3, 1911, the Army Dental Corps became a reality. Congress enacted a bill allowing the commissioning of dentists after a three-year probationary period. The rank of first lieutenant was given to contract dental surgeons already on active duty.

Then with the signing of the National Defense Act of 1916, the Corps' status was elevated. The probationary period for dentists was eliminated and future commissionings were immediate.

The Dental Corps continued to create new educational opportunities with the establishment of the Army dental internship program in 1939. This program evolved into the advanced educational program in general dentistry, a one year course which has graduated some 1,800 dentists.

Then came World War Two. More than 15,000 dentists were called to active duty during the war; 116 were killed. In addition to the treatment of dental disease, these officers were instrumental in development of prosthetic eyes, hearing air adaptors and tantalum plates for skull injuries.

In 1946 Congress granted the permanent rank of major general to the chief of the Dental Corps. Maj. Gen. Thomas L. Smith was the first to hold this permanent rank in the Dental Corps. The current chief of the Dental Corps is Maj. Gen. H. Thomas Chandler, OTSG.

Conflict arose again with the Korean War. Peak strength of the Dental Corps during this conflict was 2,641. Three Army dentists died as a result of the war.

These programs continued during the Vietnam conflict in which four dental officers were killed. The end of the war resulted in a decrease in size of the Corps from its high of 3,000 in 1969. The expanded use of dental assistants helped maintain productivity despite the smaller Corps.

The 1980's have reflected increased emphasis on the twin goals of productivity and readiness. On Nov. 8, 1983, the Surgeon General directed that training be provided dental officers to prepare them to assume alternate wartime roles.

Today the United States Army Dental Corps looks to the future with purpose and conviction based upon 75 years of excellence in service to the nation.

Wisdom

values of life is real wisdom.

Where can this wisdom be found? Real wisdom comes from God. James made this promise in his epistel: "But if any of you lacks wisdom, let him ask of God ho gives to all men generously and without reproach, and it will be given to him (James 1:5, NASB).

The ultimate result of wisdom is described in the Proverbs: "Wise men store up knowledge, but with the mouth of the foolish, ruin is at hand (Proverbs 10:14, NIV).

Soldier learns the hard way about drinking and driving

By Deborah McFarland
Driver Magazine

John Doe had not been pulled over by either the Military Police or Polizei when he got his DWI, and he did not appear drunk to the police at the time. He had gone to a German festival for a leisurely night out. He did not have to work the next day, so he wanted to relax and have a few beers.

On the way home at 3:00 a.m., John swerved to avoid hitting another auto and his car got stuck just off the road. The police who stopped to investigate tested John for DWI even though he did not appear or feel drunk.

He passed all of the sobriety tests, but his blood alcohol test results read 1.7, more than double the legal drive limit of .8.

"When I found out the test results I thought something must be wrong that I was at 1.7 and did not feel anything. I felt impaired earlier, although not drunk, and I waited to drive until I felt okay," said John.

John is very candid about his punishment. He was an E4 promotable. He received a suspension to E1 and E2 for 180 days; all favorable actions have been flagged for 180 days; he lost $400 in pay; he was assigned extra duty for 45 days and lost his driving privileges for 12 months.

"Plus, if I do any little thing wrong in the next six months, I'll be reduced to E1 and with my ETS date this September, I'll need a waiver from the Company Commander to re-enlist," John said.

"I do have career intentions," he said. "But this one incident has set me back behind the people I worked so hard to pass up. Now I see people who don't work as hard as I do but are above me because of this incident. In some respects it's not fair, but I did it (DWI) so now I'm paying for it."

John said that the DWI has made him want to work even harder to get back to his former position.

When asked what he would tell other people about drinking and driving, John replied, "Don't do it! Don't drive to a club or party, take a bus. If you do drive and then end up drinking, leave your car and get it the next day. I even waited to drive after drinking but it still didn't help because I had the alcohol in me. I just didn't feel it.

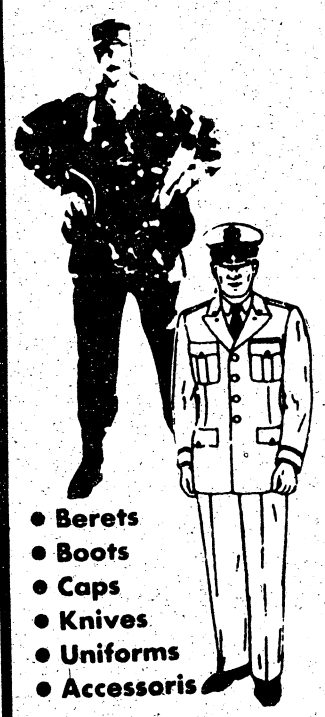
"I agreed to tell my story to help open other people's eyes," he said.

Saving energy should be tops with everyone

By Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing has many far ranging responsibilities.

Examples range from wildlife management to fire protection. However all the responsibilities of the DEH have one goal in common — service to the customer.



Recent efforts have been directed to increasing service, at the same time budgets are shrinking. For instance, we want to provide air-conditioning and heating when needed to everyone that lives and works on Fort Benning.

We are also responsible for the energy conservation program required by AR 11-27. This means providing services without exceeding energy goals established by TRADOC. We are convinced this is possible if we eliminate waste of energy. In the past, failure to meet energy goals resulted in the minimum amount of air-conditioning and heating.

A recent example of waste will prove our point. The lights on Glenn Field were not turned off one evening, but burned all night up until 1400 hours the next day. The key to the switch could not be located and DEH finally cut the power to the field to kill the lights. The power wasted during that time period could operate the average home central air unit for 1120 hours. This is equal to 75% of the power required for a complete air conditioning season.

If everyone at Fort Benning turned off a 100 watt bulb for 10 hours a day every day, that savings would run all air-conditioning on post for over a month. That same saving would have put us four points under the TRADOC goal for last year.

If everyone does their part in stopping energy waste we can easily provide the services and meet our energy goals.

Three More Ways CB&T Serves The Military

Introducing CB&T's Military Banking Team

Because we think you deserve the best in financial services, we've opened a Military Banking Department at our Fort Benning Branch. This new military department is staffed by a team of dedicated professionals all with prior military experience. Robert Anderson, Wayne Andrews, and James Smith understand the unique banking needs of the military. And they know how to help.

Nobody serves the Fort Benning community better than CB&T. From Electronic Banking Center, to a full-service branch at Fort Benning. From no-charge checking with BANKPACK to this special Military Banking Department, CB&T proves that we are the "Follow Me" bank.

Staff sergeant sentenced to prison, discharged for forgery

Crime doesn't pay

During the past two weeks, four Fort Benning soldiers were tried, convicted and sentenced by courts-martial.

SSgt. Robert A. Jackson, Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment was tried by general court martial on Jan. 31 for forgery. Capt. Jack Spradley, Army prosecutor, presented evidence tothe court which showed Jackson found the military I.D. card of a fellow noncommissioned officer and used this identification to open a checking account in that name at the main post branch of CB&T Bank.

Jackson then proceeded to write 21 checks at the main post exchange totaling over $4,000. Spradley presented evidence showing that Jackson bought stereo speakers, personal clothing and gold jewelry with the checks. The court found Jackson guilty on all 21 counts of forgery and sentenced the 11-year Army veteran to 30 months confinement in prison, a bad conduct discharge, total forfeiture of all pay and allowances and reduction to E-1.

SSgt. Samuel J. Davis, Company A, 197th Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade was tried and convicted by special court-martial on Feb. 12 for two counts of AWOL and two counts of disobeying lawful orders from a commissioned officer.

Evidence presented at trial by the defense counsel showed that Davis was a Vietnam veteran with over 16 years service.

While in Vietnam, Davis was wounded and promoted to staff sergeant prior to rotating back to the states. Evidence showed that upon receiving orders for a second tour in Vietnam in 1968, Davis went AWOL and remained in a deserter status until he was arrested by the FBI seven years later in 1975. He was tried by a general court-martial in 1975 and sentenced to reduction to private, nine months in prison and a bad conduct discharge.

Davis served his time in prison but the bad conduct discharge was suspended so as to allow Davis to remain in the Army. He worked his way back up to the rank of staff sergeant and was allowed to remain in that rank even though he received an Article 15 in 1981 for another AWOL.

On Aug. 13, 1985, Davis stopped reporting to work. When his company commander called to check on him, Davis said he was ill and had been placed on quarters by a doctor at Martin Army Community Hospital emergency room. When Davis had not reported back to work by Aug. 26, his unit became concerned and checked on his medical condition, which met with negative results.

On Sept. 3, his company commander called Davis at home and ordered him to report to the unit immediately. Davis failed to report to his unit, and on Sept. 8, he was arrested by the Muscogee County Sheriff's Department and they returned him to his unit.

Davis went AWOL again from Oct. 25 through 29. During the trial, defense counsel called medical experts who testified Davis suffered from an adjustment disorder which caused him to stutter and have difficulty handling stress. However, the medical experts indicated Davis was sane, knew what he was doing and could conform his conduct to the requirements of the UCMJ.

The cout sentenced Davis to a bad conduct discharge and reduction to E-1.

PFC Michael Margolin, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group (Combat), was tried and convicted by special court-martial on Jan. 28 for being AWOL from July 22, 1985, through Jan. 28, 1986.

The prosecutor presented evidence that Margolin was a cook whose long AWOL aggrevated a difficult situation in the mess hall where he was assigned by causing a shortage of cooks.

Other cooks in his unit were called upon to pull Margolin's duties as well as their own because of Margolin's dereliction of duty. The defense presented evidence tht Margolin was homesick and missed his wife and six children who were in Texas.

The court sentenced the 28-year-old soldier to 45 days in jail, a bad conduct discharge and reduction to E-1.

Pvt. 1 Leonard D. Noisette, Battery A, 2/10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, was tried and convicted by special court-martial Feb. 13 for disrespect to a commissioned officer and three counts of disobeying the orders of superior noncommissioned officers.

Evidence showed Noisette refused to go to his place of duty and laughed in his battery commander's face when given a direct order to report for work at his place of duty.

Noisette testified that he did not want to stay in the Army and that he wanted to be a civilian. Evidence presented showed that the accused, who had been in the Army only eight months, had received $5,000 of a $6,000 enlistment bonus.

The court sentenced Noisette to 70 days in jail and a bad conduct discharge.

Sexual harassment is misconduct that is unwelcome in the workplace

PMO

Sexual harassment is defined as unwelcome, sexually-related, obscene or suggestive language, gestures, coercion, humiliation, embarrassment or physical contact directed towards a female. The term "unwelcome" is determined by the recipient of the harassment.

Sexual harassment is a form of misconduct that undermines the very integrity of relationships between soldiers. Therefore, all soldiers must be allowed to live and work in an environment free from unwanted and unsolicited sexual overtures.

Sexual harassment can occur at almost any place on Fort Benning — PX, clubs, commissary, theaters, barracks, work areas, recreation facilities and dining halls. It can occur on a continuous basis, day and night, whenever female soldiers are present. All women can be targets of sexual harrassment. It is likely to increase significantly if the woman is young, attractive and alone. Sexual harassment tends to escalate after duty hours when the chain of command isn't around.

Sexual harassment can be stopped on the spot by setting the offender straight with words directly to the point. If this fails, a formal complaint should be surfaced with the chain of command. It may not be easy, but harassment will continue unless positive action is taken. Everyone must act as a competent, professional soldier at all times and treat their fellow soldiers (male or female) with the respect they are due.

Domestic assaults top crime list last week

McGruff's

The follow is a breakdown of incidents that were reported from 10 February thru 17 February 1986:

Custer Terrace had two domestic assaults, one breaking and entering, and one disorderly conduct.

McGraw Manor had one domestic-assistance rendered, one larceny of private property and one unattended child.

North Main Post had two larcenies of private property, and one failure to maintain control of a pet.

South Main Post had one damage to private property, and one housebreaking.

Upatoi Terrace had one domestic assault.

Bouton Heights/Davis Hills had one assault, one domestic-assistance rendered, and one obscene phone call.

GETTING AROUND CAN BE EXPENSIVE.

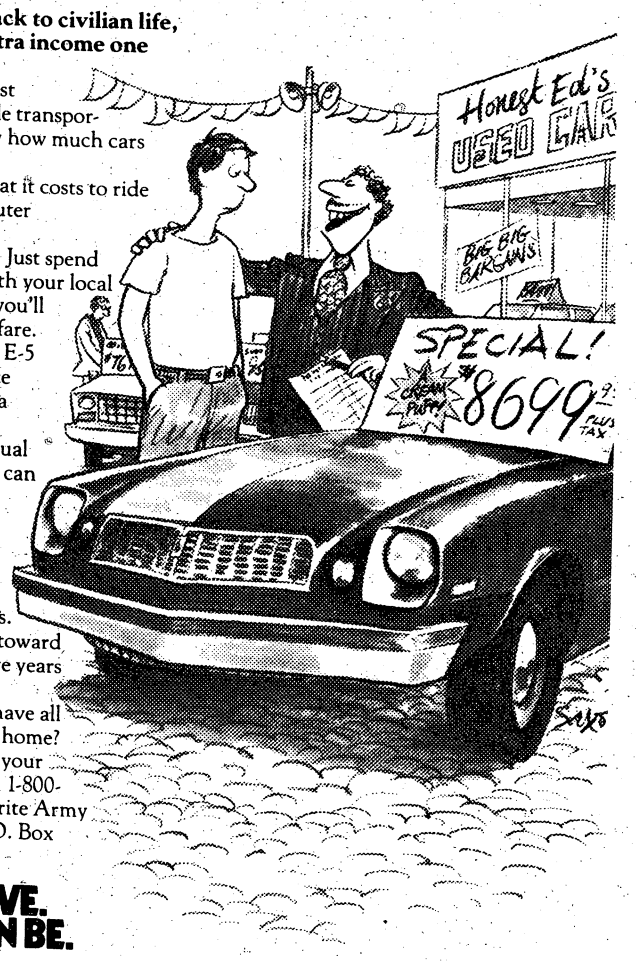
If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Unlike the Army, most civilian jobs don't provide transportation. You already know how much cars and gasoline cost.

But wait'll you see what it costs to ride subways, buses or commuter trains these days.

There's a way to cope. Just spend one weekend a month with your local Army Reserve unit, and you'll earn a lot more than bus fare.

Did you know that an E-5 with four years' experience now makes over $130 for a Reserve weekend?



Add in two weeks annual training pay and the total can easily top $2,000 per year.

You can also continue to save by buying tires and other auto accessories through the PX. Reservists get PX privileges.

Plus retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have all that waiting when you get home?

It can be arranged. See your in-service recruiter. Or call 1-800-USA-ARMY. Overseas, write Army Reserve Opportunities, P.O. Box 7717, Clifton, NJ 07015.

ARMY RESERVE. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

197th soldiers load up rail cars, head for National Training Center

By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

In what has become a familiar routine for many members of the 197th Infantry Brigade, more than 450 soldiers departed Fort Benning Wednesday for a trip to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, California.

The group was the first of some 3,000 soldiers who will deploy by air for a three-week training exercise at the desert post.

Preceding the deployment were many weeks of hustle and bustle on and around Kelley Hill. Units conducted last-minute training and briefings to insure that soldiers were prepared to meet the OPFOR at Fort Irwin. Motorpools became centers of activity as soldiers performed additional maintenance and preparation of vehicles. Also, unit supply rooms attempted to keep up with an unending demand for everything from OD green spray paint to plywood.

As the date for the deployment drew near, the momentum of the Brigade's preparation hifted into high gear.

Brigade soldiers at the Sand Hill railhead on Fort Benning worked diligently to load more than 750 pieces of equipment such as conexes, vehicles and trailers onto trains headed for Fort Irwin. Freshly camouflaged vehicles varying in size from quarter-ton jeeps to M109 self-propelled Howitzers and other equipment were taken by covoy to Sand Hill and carefully secured on the trains.

Meanwhile, soldiers filed through the Kelley Hill Fitness Center's gymnasium where other soldiers armed with typewriters, personnel and medical records and fingerprinting materials insured that all personnel in the Brigade were ready for deployment. Special attention was paid to the soldiers deploying to NTC.

By the end of last week, equipment and soldiers were ready to head west. The 217 rail cars had departed Fort Benning with the Brigade's equpment for the five-day trip to the desert to await the arrival of the Brigade's soldiers.

Disabled veterans get COLA increase

A 3.1 percent cost-of-living increase in Veterans Administration compensation benefits for service-connected disabilities will be reflected in checks issued March 1, the Veterans Administration has announced.

The rate boost, effected Dec. 1, 1985, was signed into law by President Reagan on January 13.

VA Administrator Harry N. Walters said the checks will include retroactive amounts due for the months of December and January.

More than 2.2 million veterans currently receive compensation totaling more than $8.2 billion a year. The rate adjustment means an increase from $1,295 to $1,335 per month for a veteran with a disability rated at 100 percent. Veterans with a 50 percent disability will receive $388 a month, up from $376, and those with a 10 percent rating will get $68 a month, up from $66.

In addition, the law provides a 3.1 percent increase in dependency and indemnity compensation (DIC) rates for surviving spouses and children of veterans who died in service or of service-connected causes. (VA)

Two Benning Boy Scouts join Eagle Scout ranks after completing projects

Two post Boy Scouts joined the ranks of Eagle Scouts in a ceremony here recently.

William Jason Glass, son of Capt. and Mrs. James L. Glass, joined the scouting program as a cub in September 1979. Since then he has earned 23 merit badges, the God and Country Award and successfully completed Project COPE.

Glass' service project was to collect and distribute clothing to needy families. With the permission of the Edgewood Church of Christ, Glass prepared publicity, organized and encouraged donations, collected clothing, inventoried it, organized a store room, and supervised the giveaway on Oct. 19, 1985. Over 1,000 articles of clothing were given to 327 needy people.

Glass is a member of the Barracudas Swim Team and made the Georgia Recreational State Swim Finals in August 1985. He is in JROTC at Spencer High School, where he is a freshman.

Daniel L. Cook, son of Col. and Mrs. Donald M. Cook, started scouting in May 1981 in Frankfurt, Germany. Since then, he has earned 26 merit badges, the God and Country Award and the World Conservaion Badge. He currently serves as the Junior Assistant Scout Master.

Cook's service project was to organize a 900 volume library for the English-speaking civilian community in Germany. The project included cataloging and shelving books, obtaining furniture and cleaning and decorating. American and British civilians were not authorized the use of military libraries and had asked for assistance in opening a lending library in the area.

Cook is an honor student at Spencer High School. He is vice-president of the Sophomore Class, and belongs to the Key Club, Beta Club, Math Club, Science Club and Model United Nations. He is a varsity letterman in cross country track and wrestling and is a Governor's Honors semi-finalist in social studies.

Civilian employee gets appreciation certificate for support of Guard

Eugene Williams, manager of the Airline Ticket Office at Fort Benning was presented the department of defense certificate of appreciation for support of the National Guard at Opelika, Alabama.

Capt. James G. Thomas presented the award on behalf of the national committee for employer support of the guard and reserve. Williams was nominated for the award by Thomas, an employee of the airline ticket office. The award is part of a national program to recognize supportive employers of guardsmen and reservists.

Toddler wins GA pageant

The daughter of a Fort Benning employee recently won the Columbus edition of the Miss Georgia Sunburst and Sunburst Baby Pageants.

Rachel Monique Watters, three year old daughter of Terry and Cheryl Watters, won first place in the pageant held Jan. 25, at the Ironworks Trade and Convention Center.

Cheryl Watters is an employee in the Translation Division, Directorate of Support, U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Article clarifies facts about AIDS disease

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, AIDS, is on the minds of civilian and military personnel alike. Who, exactly, is safe and what are the possibilities of contracting the deadly virus?

In an article by Janice Hopkins Tate in "Reader's Digest," facts and myths on AIDS were examined.

Tate says that medical authorities she interviewed agreed that AIDS is not easy to catch. They all agreed that the key to containing AIDS lies in two areas that are not casual or easy contact by any means: sex and sharing intravenous drug needles. Statistics show that 90 percent of AIDS' victims today are drug abusers and male homosexuals. These are two areas which can be controlled.

What about accidental encounters with the AIDS virus: a handshake, a sneeze, touching a doorknob or if the cook in your favorite restaurant has AIDS? Can you catch the virus?

Tate reports that, based on research, worries like this are unfounded. The AIDS virus has been found, so far, in high concentrations in blood and semen and, in a few cases, in low concentrations in saliva and tears. A substantial quantity of the virus must enter the victim's bloodstream to cause the disease. This can happen during sexual intercourse when the AIDS virus in a man's blood or semen enters his partner's bloodstream through tiny abrasions or tears in mucous membranes. Drug users who use the same needle to intravenously inject drugs into themselves face the same situation: the infected blood from one user is passed on to the next.

The virus, called by the medical profession HTLV-III/LAV, invades white blood cells called helper T-cells and turns them into factories that produce greater quantities of the AIDS virus. The virus eventually kills these T-cells which results in a breakdown of the body's immune system against illness.

People seem to be most worried about getting AIDS through casual contact. Part of the problem is "words." Doctors and researchers are taught to never say "never" because there's no such thing as being 100-percent sure in research. Consequently, researchers say things like "There's no evidence of the casual spread of AIDS." Not understanding the semantics of doctors and researchers, the public is very skeptical and suspicious. What are the facts?

In the past five years not one AIDS case that has been reported has been a result of sharing a schoolroom, an office or a residence.

Friends and family members caring for AIDS patients have not come down with the disease.

Health-care workers who cared for AIDS patients before researchers discovered the disease have not developed AIDS.

Dentists, barbers and others have developed techniques to ensure that common bacteria and viruses, many hardier than the AIDS virus, aren't passed from patient to patient.

Ear piercing done by non-medical people may not be more risky. If you have your ears pierced insist that a disposable needle be used or have your doctor do it.

In the "Journal of the American Medical Association" its editor, Dr. George Lundberg, said "People who do not want to get AIDS must adjust their life-style so as to live defensively. This is a great time to practice sexual monogamy."

Gopie wins big in racquetball tournament

Sally Toomey

DOUBLE WINNER — Sgt. Jacqueline Gopie of Company B, 197th Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade, accepts her award for winning the brigade racquetball tournament from Col. William Hartzog, brigade commander. Gopie placed first in the doubles and open singles competition.

By Sally Toomey
197th Brigade Public Affairs Office

Lookout, 197th Infantry Brigade raquetball hopefuls, the Kelley Hill Fitness Center's courts are being dominated these days by Sgt. Jacqueline Gopie.

A medic in B company, 197th Support Battalion, Gopie took first place in the doubles and open singles competition of the Brigade's raquetball tournament beating several of the Brigade's best male players to claim the title.

But, Sgt. Gopie's athletic abilities are not limited to the raquetball courts. She has pursued individual as well as company level activities such as volleyball, marksmanship and running.

Although her interest in sports goes back to before she enlisted in the military, Gopie says she was never a runner until she came into the Army. But, one of her first running accomplishments came when she was only eight months into her Army career. She ran in the 26-mile Pikes Peak Marathon while stationed at Fort Carson, Colorado.

"I barely finished the race," Gopie said. "When I got in, all the people and the finish line were gone but I finished."

Before coming to Fort Benning, Gopie was stationed with the 25th Infantry Division at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii. She noted that many different events such as 10K runs and relay team events were offered by the military as well as civilian communities. She also continued playing raquetball and came to Fort Benning twice for All-Army competition.

One event that she participated in while in Hawaii was a "Tinman" competition. This event, consisting of a one-half mile swim, 10K run and 25 mile bicycle race, is similar to the "Ironman" competition.

Since Gopie has come to Fort Benning, she has continued to excell in such competitive events. She took second place in the 1985 Mrs. Fort Benning (body building) Contest and plans to compete again this year. Gopie also placed fourth in the women's biathlon on Fort Benning last year.

As an asset to her unit, Gopie has assisted in several events such as coaching the company's rifle team which placed first in the rifle team match of the Fort Benning Post Championship last year. When the unit returns from the National Training Center in March she will coach a volleyball team in a Brigade league.

Many sports available to women on post year-round

By Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

For female athletes, Fort Benning is the place to be. There are a number of organized team and individual sports available to women year-round.

Team sports available are basketball, volleyball, softball and orienteering, and one is always available for females interested in participation throughout the year.

As if that's not enough, there are also many unorganized sports available.

The programs, organized and conducted by the Physical Activity Sports Section of Morale Support, are offered to all active duty military, family members, Department of the Army civilians and retirees.

In the team competitions, the players compete against other post teams and teams in the neighboring Columbus area with no fees charged.

In addition to these team sports there are a number of team sports available at the command level.

"Track and field and golf are available at the brigade and battalion level," Will Dunham, Fort Benning sports director, said.

He went on to say that battalion level golf tournaments are also held on post for league play teams.

For women who lean towards the less structured sports and enjoy competing one-on-one, there is a wide variety of sports to choose from.

In the gyms on post there are raquetball courts, table tennis, badminton, squash, and weightlifting, and there are 14 tennis courts on post.

For women who like to stay in shape but have no desire to compete, there is aerobics, nautilus and swimming in the Bryant Wells pool on main post.

Albert McGruder, a recreation assistant, said, "Fort Benning has a great athletic program for women, all they have to do is come on out."

U.S. Savings Bonds

Now Paying 8.36%

U.S. Savings Bonds now pay market-based interest rates like money market accounts!

Hold your Savings Bonds for five years and you automatically get the market-based rates which change semi-annually, the first of May and November. Plus, you get a guaranteed return! You'll probably earn a lot more—but never less than 7½%.

With both money market rates and a guaranteed return, Savings Bonds make a great investment. And Bonds are still a great way to keep America strong.

Savings Bonds are easy to buy, too. Purchase them at most banks and savings and loans, or through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work. For more information, call toll-free 1-800-US-BONDS.

U.S. SAVINGS BONDS
Paying Better Than Ever

Market-based rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least five years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn market-based rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than five years earn lower rates.

Energy criteria level reached

The Training and Doctrine Command crireria for shutting down heating systems was met on Friday.

This was the third day with average temperatures above 60 degrees. Heating systems will be turned off during a transition period of approximately three weeks. Priorities will begin with motor pools and warehouses and be followed by administrative and public buildings. Next will be troop housing, family housing, medical buildings and day care centers.

As a result of forcasted cold front for the coming weekend, heating systems for housing and administrative buildings will not be shut down until the expected front passes.

Rangers return from Arctic training

Laurie J. Hill

POP'S HOME - An impatient youngster runs to hug his father.

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 3rd Battalion (Rangers), 75th Infantry recently returned to Fort Benning after deploying to Fort Wainwright, Alaska, for 18 days of Arctic training.

They jumped into Alaska Feb. 4 and spent six of the next seven days on cold weather indoctrination to prepare for going to the field. Since it was the first time the battalion had deployed to an Arctic environment, the Rangers trained hard to prepare for the field.

Capt. David Bongi, S-5 and public affairs officer for the battalion, said indoctrination teaches the Rangers soldier skills in extremely cold environments. Training covered such things as personal hygiene, first aid for cold weather injuries and maintenance of equipment and weapons.

"Not everything works as well as normal in cold weather, so soldiers are taught how to maintain equipment and weapons to get top performance out of them in the Arctic cold," Bongi said. "If the weapons are properly cared for, they won't malfunction in the cold environment."

Indoctrination also included erecting a 10-man tent and loading of Ahkios. Ahkios are large equipment sleds the soldiers pull behind them during missions. Each squad has one and, fully loaded, it weighs about 250 pounds.

The soldiers were issued full cold weather gear, including vapor barrier boots, overwhites for camouflage, and snowshoes, and practiced maneuvering in the special gear. Some missions required cross country skiing, so soldiers also got a quick skiing lesson.

Once indoctrination was completed, the Rangers headed for seven straight days in the field, conducting both day and night training missions.

"The focus of training was at the individual, crew, squad and platoon level, with a training goal of developing the capability to shoot, move and communicate with confidence in the Arctic environment," Bongi said.

The Rangers conducted squad and platoon level operations, worked on squad movement, hostile action skills and conducted forced marches using skiis.

The Rangers were given a scenario for each mission. For example, a platoon would be given the mission of ambushing an enemy convoy or troop movement in a specific area, within a

Army families to receive increased benefits under new funding

Passage of the 1986 Defense Authorization Act means increased benefits for military family members.

"The act, signed into law by President Reagan in November 1985, contains a package of pay and benefit provisions intended to improve the morale and welfare of military families," said Chapman Cox, assistant secretary of Defense for Force Management and Personnel at the Pentagon. Some of the initiatives fall under Title VIII, popularly called the "Military Family Act of 1985".

"The delay in implementing many of the programs delayed enactment of both the authorization and appropriations act," Cox said.

Some of these initiatives took effect when the President signed the authorization bill on Nov.8. Others are retroactive to Oct. 1 when the fiscal year began and to Dec. 19, 1985, the date of the final continuing resolution authority.

Still others will become effective when regulations addressing them are developed and approved. Cox said he cannot predict what effect the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act might have on these initiatives.He did say however, that at present, the initiatives are laws and will be implemented.

Several of the act's key initiatives address allowances for travel and permanant-change-of-station moves. Cox said that moving rates for soldiers using privately owned vehicles to move between duty stations, for example, have been revised entirely. The new rates are set for 15 cents per mile for one person, 17 cents for two, 19 cents for three and 20 cents for four or more persons traveling in the same vehicle.

In addition, a soldier accompanied by dependents is authorized a per diem of up to $37.50 for each famly member 12 years of age or older and up to $25 for those under 12. The dependants per diem is in addition to the $50 per diem now paid.

Soldiers traveling with family members during PCS moves also are entitled to temporary lodging expenses of up to $110 per day to cover actual expenses for a maximum of four days. Payments are limited to four days for a stateside move and two days when traveling stateside for overseas moves.

"Junior enlisted soldiers through the rank of specialist four/corporal with less than two years prior service have gained

Integration and equal rights nothing new to Army since Korea

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Black History Month, February, has come and gone. Fort Benning had various static displays and some dining facilities had ethnic meals but, for the most part, Black History Month wasn't highlighted with a lot of hoopla.

Black Americans have become such a viable force in the military today that referring to "black" soldiers or "white" soldiers is no longer relevant. In today's military, soldiers are soldiers but it wasn't always so.

In the Korean War era during the 1950's our military and the Army was segregated. Segregate means to impose separation of a race or class from the rest of society. Black soldiers were in all-black units, officered primarily by whites. President Harry Truman put a stop to this segregation by ordering and enforcing total integration within the military. Though long overdue, this action by the President served as an example to the rest of the country and the world that America should be equal for all. Truman's controversial decision helped fuel the struggle by black Americans to gain full and equal rights outside of the military. Blacks marched, King spoke and led, they demanded their rights, and they got them, with the military having served as an example of integration at work. Making the military equal for all came fairly easily because of two reasons: military life and war.

Like it or not, when you're in the Army, or any military organization for that matter, everything is done as a team. You live with your fellow soldiers, eat with them, pull kitchen police with them, dig foxholes with them, in short, you work together to successfully complete your mission and you even share your free-time together with them. You learn to respect and get-along with those around you so the job, whatever it may be, gets done. If your vehicle won't run and you need a motor pool mechanic, you don't care about the color of the mechanic but whether he or she can do the job.

I have never experienced war, but in talking with many combat veterans a truism can be put together: "War is the great equalizer." One Vietnam veteran related to me of being caught in a vicious ambush, men being shot all around him. He knew an M-60 machinegun needed to be brought to bear on the enemy and began shouting for a machinegunner. At a fast low crawl came a soldier, pulling his M-60 along beside him. Opening up with the weapon, he methodically began reducing the enemy position. The man who called for the machinegun lived, as did the machinegunner and many other soldiers. The machinegunner was white, the man who called for him black. Was their respective colors relevant? The combat vet I talked to said color never crossed his mind, surviving did. In war, soldiers who can do their jobs are what count, not skin color.

In today's Army the slogan, though over-used, is very apt: "Be all you can be." A colonel commanding a brigade earns his rank and position because he is all of the things the Army needs in a commander, the pigment of his skin does not enter into the decision. Infantry squad leaders have to be able to lead men, period. Being white or black or even purple will not help or hinder that squad leader. In the Army you can be anything you aspire to be. Jim Crow is truly dead.

And what of military children? Go into any housing area and you see chidren of races and colors that run from one end of the spectrum to another: Asians, Hispanics, blacks, whites, and on and on. They're friends and confidants, not opposing races, segregated and wary.

Where has this meandering dialogue led to? Just this: while the Army at Fort Benning honored Black History Month it did not dwell on it. This Army doesn't need to play a lot of lip service and brass bands honoring our black soldiers. Without black soldiers this Army couldn't operate, just as it couldn't operate without its yellow soldiers and brown soldiers and white soldiers. The Army doesn't riotously celebrate Black History Month or any other event honoring different ethnic backgrounds. This Army quietly and consistently lives equal opportunity for all 365 days per year.

Internal Revenue Service answers tax queries on commonly held misconceptions

By Michael V. Totin
Tax Office

When a taxpayer for one reason or another, fails to pay the full amount of federal tax owed, the Internal Revenue Service will collect the delinquent tax in one of several ways. To answer questions about its collection process, the IRS has prepared the following:

Q. I thought I had paid my taxes, and now I've received a notice from the IRS saying I owe more. How can that be?

A. There may be several reasons. You may not have had enough tax withheld from each paycheck, or perhaps an error was made in the preparation of your tax return. If you are self-employed or had other income not subject to withholding you may have missed making the required quarterly estimated tax payments.

Q. The IRS says I owe more tax, but I don't agree. What can I do?

A. If you think that the bill is wrong, notify the IRS immediately by writing to the office that sent the bill. Be sure to have available any records which support your claim, such as cancelled checks or tax returns.

Q. Do I have to pay the entire amount of delinquent tax immediately?

A. If possible. The employee handling your collection case will review financial information which you provide to the IRS and determine whether the full amount can be paid at once, or if you qualify for an installment payment plan.

Q. What if I don't pay the IRS after they notify me that I owe delinquent taxes?

A. When an individual owes more tax, a bill is sent with payment due within 10 days. Several more bills and a telephone call may also follow. If a taxpayer neglects or refuses to pay taxes or to make satisfactory arrangements for payment, a levy may be issued against the taxpayer's salary, wages, bank accounts, or commissions. During the levy process, if the tax bill is paid in full or an acceptable installment agreement is reached, ordinarily the levy will be released.

Q. Where can I get more detailed information about the collection process?

A. More information is available in IRS Publication 586A, The Collection Process (Income Tax Accounts) available free by using the mail-order form in your tax package.

Q. I received a bill from IRS for some additional tax and paid the amount in full. However, I found documents to verify that I owe less tax. What can I do?

A. If your records now show that you overpaid your tax you should file an amended return. Form 1040X, Amended U.S. Individual Income Tax Return.

Defense secretary says erosion of U.S. industrial base not good

When the Soviet Union launched Sputnik 1 in 1957, the United States responded with full-scale emphasis on math and science in the schools. That effort, combined with other concerted moves toward scientific advancement, brought about an unprecedented surge of U.S. technological growth.

Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger recently pointed to an educational shift away from these scientific disciplines and the impact this shift could have on national defense. He outlined the facts:

- With twice the population of Japan, the United States educates 10,000 fewer engineers than Japan;
- Last year, almost 60 percent of engineering doctoral degrees granted by U.S. universities went to citizens of other nations;
- In the last 10 years, the number of doctoral degrees awarded to U.S. citizens dropped by 57 percent; and
- About 60 percent of America's Ph.D students studying manufacturing are non-U.S. citizens.

Weinberger warned a DoD technical advisory group that this shift threatens a fundamental principle of U.S. defense strategy — that this country's technological superiority deters aggression by numerically superior armies.

"The nation that dramatically and boldly led the world into the age of technology is failing to provide its own children with the intellectual tools needed for the 21st century," he said, quoting a finding of the President's Commission on Excellence in Education.

The problem of manpower shortages in technical fields is aggravated, Weinberger said, by the defense industry's failure to employ advanced technology in manufacturing.

"The years of neglecting manufacturing technology have taken their toll on our industrial base," he said. "We see this in the higher productivity rates of some of our allies, in the loss of America's reputation for quality around the world and in lost market shares.

"Those years of neglect also show up in some military systems, in costs that are higher than they need be and in quality that is sometimes lower than it should be."

The result, Weinberger summarized, is that the United States risks having too few people skilled in building the country's industrial base and little capability for that industrial base to rapidly expand in response to a national emergency.

"Too frequently, we in defense — and that includes industry — let our daily concern with cost, profit, the product-at-hand, and other pressing management problems obscure the real reason that we are concerned with manufacturing technology," Weinberger said.

"And that is, we must have sufficient industrial capacity to meet the immediate, future and emergency defense needs of this nation." (AFPS)

Protect purse against thieves

PMO

If you shop in the Post Exchange facilities or the Commissary, beware of the PX/Commissary thief. He is looking for anything of value that is an easy target to steal.

Ladies handbags are one of the easiest items to steal. Why? Because most women seldom keep their purse in their hands when they use a shopping cart, expecially if they have young children.

The handbag is placed inside the cart for convenience. The shopper feels secure because the cart is kept nearby and she may or may not have a child in the cart. This is a false sense of security. All it takes is one to three seconds, while your back is turned, and your purse is gone.

The best policy is "if you can't see it and touch it, secure it", and the easiest way to do that is to hold onto your purse, either in your hand or on your shoulder.

If a theft does occur contact the Military Police immediately, don't waste time trying to locate the property or the thief.

Be a part of our team against crime, and secure your property.

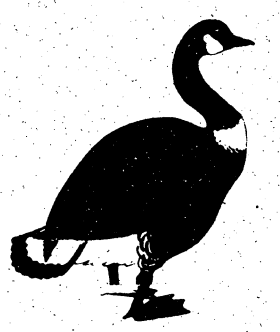
McGruff's

The following is a breakdown of incidents that were reported from 18 February thru 23 February 1986:

Custer Terrace had two domestic assaults, one domestic assistance rendered, two housebreakings, and one larceny of private property. McGraw Manor had two domestic assistances rendered, one domestic assault, one burglary, and one larceny of private property. Battle Park had one domestic assault. Bouton Heights/Davis Hills had one obscene phone call, and two damages to government property. South Main Post had one larceny of private property and one damage to private property. North Main Post had one domestic assault and one housebreaking.

Reasons for post vehicle registration questioned

Letter



Editor, The Bayonet:

Perhaps the Provost Marshal or the Safety Director could enlighten us about something that has been biting into my chest for quite a while. Understanding that this (Fort Benning), is an OPEN Post, and that people from just about any place in this country, or any other, for that matter, can run through this reservation without a question, my question is this: why is it such a big deal to have our vehicles registered on this installation, when we can look at the vehicles parked right next to our's at just about any location on this base, and find they are not showing a post sticker. Then, we have a situation where an individual gets his insurance and registers the vehicle, gets the post sticker and cancels the insurance because it is too expensive. I've followed and passed vehicles on all locations within the base, and many of them do not have their vehicles registered with the Provost Marshal, yet they have been on this post since November 1985, and probably a lot longer. Is this vehicle registration really doing any good for the individual or the post, or the other vehicle owners, who may have legitimately registered their vehicle, and continue to pay for the required insurance coverage? I've been paying for other peoples' accidents for about 50 years, (I say that with a bit of humor, I have been driving cars since the age of 13 years). Now, you will say, "Just because you've been driving since before the Ice Age, doesn't mean that you are a good driver". And you are perfectly correct in that statement. I've had three accidents in my driving years, and a few very close calls that I am glad to say did not result in damage.

When the people who are responsible for this requirement can show that it is necessary and that it is a control for whether or not the vehicles that are registered are safe, then I will have become a believer. In the meantime, I am very skeptical and question the reasoning behind this requirement. I will continue to keep my vehicles legal and in good running order (to include lights, fenders, bumpers, windows that are not marred by cracks and dirt, and current insurance coverage). I realize that we are only human and humans have a tendency to try to bend/break the rules at times, but, no matter how foolish this may seem, I have been in compliance sine November 1951 at this installation, with a few breaks for wars and other overseas assignments. This is my opinion, of course.

Vaccinations key in disease prevention when still young

By Thomas P. Goodell
Martin Army Community Hospital

MACH

We all live in a golden age of freedom from many diseases that were a common cause of death and disability in previous generations. This has led to a complacency among us in preventing these diseases. People don't remember when measles was a leading cause of brain damage, that entire hospitals were built for polio victims and that whooping cough (pertussis) was a frequent killer of children.

These diseases didn't just go away — their decline is a direct result of the development of effective vaccines against them. These vaccines are a key element in your health care because they prevent the disease before you get sick and therefore avoid the complications.

Most vaccines are now part of regular well-child care. Each child normally receives protection against diptheria, whooping cough and tetanus with shots at ages 2, 4, 6 and 18 months and age 4 or 5 years. At the same time, the oral vaccine against polio is given. At age 15 months, protection against measles, mumps and rubella (German measles) is given and at age 18 months or 2 years a shot against Hemophilus influenza, a bacteria that causes serious infection in children, is routinely given. It would be given at age 18 months in those children that attend day-car centers or have chronic diseases because of the increased risk in these populations.

There has been a lot of controversy over the pertussis vaccine in the last few years. This vaccine has been associated with infrequent untoward reactions that can lead to brain damage. The recommendation remains to immunize all children because the risk from the complications of the disease is greater than the risk of this rare problem.

Vaccines for adults are fewer in number. Tetanus and diptheria are prevented by a booster shot every 10 years after the initial childhood series. All women of childbearing age should have a blood test for rubella protection performed prior to any pregnancy. Because rubella during pregnancy can cause severe problems with the baby, it is important to check for this protection. If needed, a rubella shot is indicated.

Older people, particularly those with heart or lung disease or chronic medical problems, need to be aware of the influenza and pneumococcal vaccines. The influenza vaccine is new each year, and needs to be repeated each year. The pneumococcal vaccine prevents a kind of bacterial pneumonia and is given only once. Both of these are of benefit because they prevent illness which can be devastating or even kill.

Now is a good time for you to look at yourself and your family — make sure that these important weapons are protecting you and your loved ones. If you are not sure or have questions, talk to your family doctor — your partner for health.

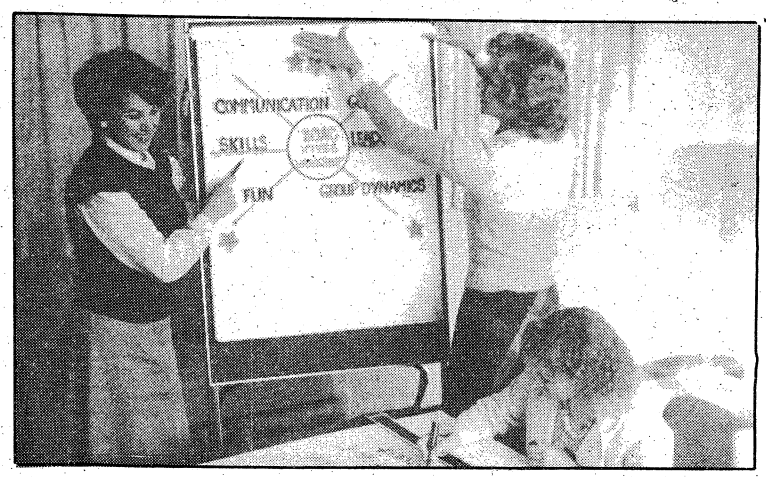
Future commander's wives aided by seminar in being CO's spouse

By Ginger Pearson

"Army Family. Be All You Can Be." The Army seems totally committed to the support of the Army family. We see it all the time, in newspapers, on billboards, in magazine advertisements. But it's not just a slogan thought up by some advertising agency on Madison Avenue in New York City — at least not any more.

The School Brigade here at Fort Benning believes in the Army family too — and they're doing something about it. In September 1985, under the direction of then Brigadier General Edwin H. Burba, Assistant Commandant of the Infantry School, the School Brigade undertook the planning of a program to support the spouses of Infantry Officer Advanced Course (IOAC) students. The result: a pilot program of structured educational seminars for IOAC wives. At the core of the program is a three day workshop on "people" skills that can help the IOAC wife prepare for family support group leadership in her husband's eventual company-level command. The workshop covers values formation, leadership styles,and communication abilities — all facets of group dynamics that will help the IOAC wife to better understand and relate to other Army wives in her husband's command.

"IOAC Wives' Workshops" resulted from concerns expressed by student wives to Trish Burba, "veteran" Army wife of a General Officer. "Wives were constantly coming to me expressing great concern over being able to properly support their husbands in a company command. They were very unsure about what their role as the 'CO's Wife' really was." The program fell into place when two more "veteran'' Army wives, Jackie George and Donna Williams volunteered their services and skills. George and Williams co-direct IOAC Wives' Workshops and are both wives of Lt. Colonels stationed here at Fort Benning. The two have a combined experience of over 40 years as "Army Wives." Both directors hold masters degrees and have considerable teaching and practical experience that have prepared them for the task of bringing such a program together.



"The workshop we offer, while structured around the 'military', will be useful to the participant in any group situation she might find herself in," Williams commented in a recent interview. "And the workshop is constantly evolving as we learn the needs and concerns of todays young officer's wife," added George.

And indeed it is. Recently, IOAC Wives' Workshops has started offering a supplemental workshop on "Stress Management and Problem Solving" dealing with some systematic ways of handling the stress and problems associated with life in the military. The program also sponsors other educational opportunities such as a recent one-time weeklong seminar entitled "Investment in Excellence," a self-development/motivational program offered by Fort Benning's Equal Opportunity Office.

The wives' program has proved so successful thus far that IOAC Wives' Workshops is now instituting a "Train-the Trainer" program to help wives whose husbands will be staying at Fort Benning become trainers for the seminars. It is hoped that the new training program will help IOAC Wives' Workshops continue into the future and at the same time reach more wives. Terri Fowler, an "in-training" wife of an Army Captain stationed here at Fort Benning, wishes she had had the opportunity to go through such a program last spring while her husband was attending IOAC. "I've learned so much from being involved with IOAC Wives' Workshops. It's a great educational opportunity for wives like myself whose husbands face the command challenge in their next assignments," she stated.

"We're trying to make the IOAC experience a positive one for the wives," Williams said. "Army moves are difficult at best, but when you know you'll be moving on again within a few months they can be particularly discouraging. The School Brigade is doing everything it can to alleviate some of the pain associated with such moves, and give student wives an opportunity to learn more about the Army, their husband's careers, and themselves. IOAC Wives' Workshops is glad to be a part of that."

For more information about IOAC Wives' Workshops, how you could become involved, or how a group you are involved with might take advantage of the types of learning experiences they provide for IOAC wives, please call Donna Williams or Jackie George at the IOAC Wives' Workshops office in the TSB Chapel during office hours from 9:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon, Mondays and Thursdays, at 545-1936.

SEMINAR SEMANTICS - Donna Williams (l), Jackie George (r), and Terry Fowler, seated, go over an upcoming Infantry Officer's Advance Course Wive's Seminar. Fowler is the groups graphic artist and George and Williams are co-directors.

Ginger Pearson is a free-lance writer and wife of an Army Captain currently attending Fort Benning's Infantry Officer Advanced Course.

VA Q and A

Editor's Note — Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I previously received a monthly pension check for $18 from the VA. I have now been notified that I will receive quarterly payments of $54. Does this change affect all VA pensioners?

A — The change affects only pensioners entitled to less than a $288 annual pension. Quarterly payments will be made when the annual pension is $144 or more, but less than $288. Those entitled to less than $144 annually will be paid semiannually or annually, depending on the available pension amount.

Q — I selected an endowment at age 65 plan on my NSLI in April 1966. I will turn 65 years of age in January 1986. When can I expect the proceeds of the matured endowment policy?

A — You will receive payment in April 1986, the first anniversary date of your policy after your 65th birthday.

Q — If a veteran enlisted in the Ready Reserve for a 6-year enlistment prior to July 1, 1985, will he be eligible for benefits under Educational Assistance for Members of the Selected Reserve?

A — No. A veteran must have enlisted or extended his enlistment for at least 6 years, during the period July 1, 1985 through June 30, 1988.

Q — I would like to review my VA claims folder. What should I do?

A — Use VA's toll-free telephone service to reach the nearest regional office. The number is in your local director, under U.S. Government. A counselor will schedule an appointment to review your foler.

Q — I was discharged from the United States Navy in 1968. Can I be buried in a National Cemetery?

A — Yes. Any veteran who was discharged from the service under conditions other than dishonorable can be buried in a National Cemetery as long as space is available.

Q — I would like to refinance my current VA home mortgage to get cash out of the refinance. Do I need entitlement under this procedure?

A — Yes. On a VA refinance, where the veteran is receiving cash from the transaction, the veteran must have sufficient entitlement remaining to guarantee the loan to the lender's satisfaction.

29th puts units under scrutiny during inspections

By Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment

If you're operating under the realm of the 29th Infantry Regiment — PREPARE YOURSELF — you're about to be inspected.

Recently, the regiment formed an inspection team solely to give the commander an in-depth look at how well his organization is functioning, says Capt. Thomas P. Gwiazdowski, S-1, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Accordingly, the team is made up of subject matter experts in the areas of administration, logistics, legal, training and maintenance management.

Thus far, five units: Companies B and C and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment; Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment; and Headquarters, Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment have been inspected.

It is projected that by year's end, all of the remaining companies will be inspected, Gwiazdowski says.

There is no particular order in choosing who will be inspected next, and policy dictates that all units be notified at least two months in advance that the team is coming.

Team members have been received well, Gwiazdowski says. "The commanders have been positive about our visits. They are pleased because we were able to give them more insight about their companies."

The intent is to help the commander, not to burden him with deficiencies. Therefore, on-the-spot corrections are made before the regiment or battalion commanders receive a status report, the S-1 says.

Capt. Richard Monaghan, operations officer, Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, commented, "The inspection team highlghted areas we felt we excelled in, such as caring for soldiers. Also, it obviously showed us areas we needed to place more emphasis on to make us a better company.

"The team's ability to make on-the-spot corrections allowed soldiers to learn and to fix areas that might otherwise been left deficient."

Next to be inspected is the Bradley Detachment, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Regiment's soldiers 'shoot-em-up' during live-fire exercise

By Bill Muller
29th Infantry Regiment

A recent Combined Arms Live Fire Exercise (CALFEX), proved to be a good training exercise for more than 100 soldiers of Companies B and D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The CALFEX was part of Infantry Officers Advanced Course (1-86) Field Training Exercise.

"Delta Company soldiers received tactical training they wouldn't normally get," SFC Edmund Crivello, Company D platoon sergeant said.

The soldiers used platoon fire commands and fire control, and they workd as a team, Crivello said.

For the Company B soldiers, the CALFEX provided an opportunity to live fire; something they don't ordinarily do as mortar instructors, 2nd Lt. Stanley Green, platoon leader said.

"This was an opportunity for them to put rounds down range. It really motivated them," Green said.

Company B supported the CALFEX with 18 soldiers and six 4.2-inch mortar system. Company D provided 88 soldiers and eight M-2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicles.

Also supporting the CALFEX were Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; Compay C, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery; 72nd Engineers; and the Air National Guard of Fort Rucker, Ala.

School of America's program stresses understanding U.S. by foreign visitors

USARSA

While a great majority of U.S. citizens watch with interest as a nightly new show broadcasts souring international relationships, most of that same viewing audience probably wonders why.

Some perceptions would point to lack of diplomacy, communication or even cultural understanding. Whatever causes nations to become bitter with other nations remains undoubtedly an interesting question.

Perhaps one way to counteract growing misconceptions about certain countries is to seek one-on-one communication with someone from a foreign country.

At the U.S. Army School of the Americas, newly-assigned guest instructors and students of the command and general staff course are introduced to the "American" way of life by an ongoing Sponsorship Program (SP).

Most of these instructors and students are in the U.S. for the first time. It is important they understand America as it really is — not just from things they have heard or read. The importance of this was recognized by President John F. Kennedy.

"There is little question that the reception and treatment of foreign visitors coming to the U.S. will have an important effect upon the attitudes of other peoples toward the U.S. Dedicated Americans in international exchanges will help us to achieve our common hopes for a durable and just peace," Kennedy said.

The SP is a hospitality program designed to provide guest instructors and students at Fort Benning a chance to get familiar with life in the U.S.

Initially, a family from the local area agrees to take a genuine interest in an instructor or student and his family and help them know and understand the American people by giving them an opportunity to participate in home and community activities.

Latin American families will interpret America to their countrymen in terms of the sponsor's family. A friendly relationship can be far-reaching in the effort toward international understanding and world peace.

USARSA currently has 40 guest instructors. Thirty-one of them are here with their families. Nine either don't have their families here or are single. Guest instructors represent Argentina, Brazile, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Peru, Panama, Paraguay and Venezuela.

There are 38 command and general staff course students from Latin America. Twenty-nine of them are here with their families until December this year. Nine students either didn't bring their families or are single.

The C&GSC students represent 10 Latin American countries.

"A lot of people believe that sponsoring a Latin American family means having a thorough knowledge of the Spanish language and Latin America," said Capt. Cory Loomis, USARSA public affairs officer. "This isn't true. We welcome anyone who wants to sponsor a family. In fact, most guest instructors and students want to learn English," he said.

Individuals or families interested in sponsoring a Latin American family or student assigned to USARSA should contact the USARSA Public Affairs Office at 545-1548/2576/1820.

Ecuadoran general tours Fort Benning weapons live-fire demonstration done

By Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment

Fort Benning welcomed the chief of staff of the Ecuadorian Army, Lt. Gen. Manuel Albuja, for a one-day visit last week.

The general's trip included a live-fire exercise, Rangers-in-Action and Silver Wings demonstration, and a briefing on the School of the Americas.

Two companies of the 29th Infantry Regiment, Company D, 1st Battalion and Company C, 2nd Battalion, took part in the live-fire exercise.

The companies conducted firing of the M-2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, 60mm mortar, M-60 machine gun, squad automatic weapon, .45 caliber pistol and the M-16 rifle.

According to Capt. Victor Mason, Fort Benning Protocol Office, the general was here at the request of Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr.

During last week's Light Fighter I training, the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry of the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division practiced individual infantry skills including weapons qualification. The soldiers also rappelled, road marched, negotiated the obstacle and confidence courses, practiced air mobile operations and conducted a night defense.

Maintenance unit trains for war soldiers infantry and mechanics

598th

By Linda Daniels
598th Maint Co

The 598th Maintenance Company of the 67th Maintenance Battalion, recently accomplished a successful field training exercise on January 22 to 28, where they practiced their war time mission.

This mission was in preparation for an upcoming Army Training Evaluation. During the FTX, the 598th Direct/General Support Rapid Deployment Force-Army unit w/CAPSTONE missions successfully accomplished their daily operational and tactical mission.

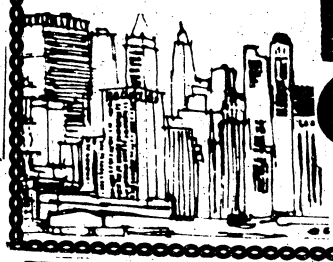
The 598th Maintenance Company must maintain a high state of combat readiness, while simultaneously performing support missions. The schematics of today's modern battle arena shows the rear area offering limited protection to Combat Service Support units. These support units, such as quartermaster, transportation, and maintenance, face the possibilities of level one, two, and three threat forces, as well as nuclear, biological, and chemical attack. Therefore these units must train to defend themselves and be able to pack up and move out very quickly, or die.

The transformation from garrison to the field was relatively smooth. While in the field, the company, comprised of five platoons; general maintenance, tech supply, automotive, and service/recovery, were able to maintain a high state of readiness.

While repairing vehicles and equipment and issuing repair parts, an increase in morale and confidence was obtained.

The uniqueness of the 598th is that they provided Direct Maintenance support to 33 customer units (including elements of the XVIII Airborne Corps; 75th Rangers) while simultaneously manning fighting positions for 360 degree defensive perimeter.

In addition, each platoon was issued a warning order to patrol or conduct squad and platoon tactics.



The 598th Maintenance Company reaffirmed that in order to survive on the battlefield, they must play a dual role. It is essential that they be able to defend themselves, patrol, employ land mines and trip flares, recover disabled vehicles, repair vehicles and equipment, and issue repair parts. They must be maintenance and infantry.

Medal awarded to 197th soldier 15 years late

By Sally Toomey
197th Public Affairs Office

In June, 1970, SP4 Rodney Kennedy was serving with Company E, 1st Battalion, 20th Infantry in the Republic of Vietnam.

While on a reconnaissance patrol, his platoon came under enemy fire. The enemy assault pinned down the patrol in an open area and left two of the American soldiers seriously wounded. With this in mind, Kennedy went into action.

He maneuvered toward the enemy's flank, exposing himself repeatedly to enemy fire. Kennedy reached a strategic hilltop position and layed down suppressive fire until the hostile force was routed from the area.

For this act of valor, done more than 15 years ago, SP4 Kennedy was awarded a Bronze Star Medal with "V" Device (First Oakleaf Cluster). But, it wasn't until last week that Kennedy, now a sergeant first class with Company B, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade was actually presented with his medal.

197th

In an award ceremony at the Kelley Hill Theater last week, Lt. Col. David Peebles, battalion commander, presented SFC Kennedy with his long-overdue medal. The ceremony was attended by Co. B 1-58th soldiers, Kennedy's wife, Bonnie, and their five children.

The Bronze Star Medal is awarded for heroic or meritorious achievement of service in connection with military operations against an armed enemy. Kennedy had been presented with his first Bronze Star two months earlier in 1970 when he volunteered to cross a minefield in search of enemy documents.

When he returned to the United States in November 1970, Kennedy received the orders for his second award but wasn't presented with the medal or certificate.

Over the course of an impressive 14-year military career, this oversight was forgotten amidst Kennedy's many other accomplishments. When he came to Fort Benning from Fort Campbell Kentucky last year, it was discovered that he hadn't received his award and measures were taken to see that Kennedy's act of heroism was properly rewarded.

Families

some additional benefits when it comes to moving their families and household goods," Cox said.

Their dependents now will receive the same travel and per diem allowance as other dependent moves within the continental United States.

On top of that, the limit on stateside household goods weight allowance has been increased to 5,000 pounds for junior enlisted soldiers with dependents and 1,500 pounds for those without dependents for CONUS and overseas moves.

Previously, these soldiers all received only a 225-pound weight allowance and no travel or per diem expenses for family members moving within CONUS.

Finding a job for family members once they reach the soldier's new duty station also might be easier thanks to an initiative affording spouses hiring preference for all defense department jobs above grade GS-07 (or its equivalent). A previous DOD directive gives them priority for overseas positions at the GS-08 level and below.

Dependent students also are covered under the authorization act. Students taking authorized annual trips to their sponsor's duty station now will receive travel and transportation allowances for the CONUS portion of the trip. Previously, Congress only allowed funding for air transportation from the member's overseas duty station to the nearest port of entry in the United States.

Round-trip transportation also has been authorized for survivors. Spouses and children (or parents when soldiers have no dependents) will now receive travel expenses to and from the soldier's burial site. In addition, they can claim per diem expenses of $50 a day to cover two days of a stateside trip or the applicable rate for an overseas location.

A dental insurance plan for family members will become a reality under the act. Soldiers participating in the voluntary, cost-shared program will pay a monthly premium through payroll deduction. The plan will provide full coverage for many preventive, diagnostic and emergency services and 80 percent coverage for fillings and denture repair services. This plan is not expected to begin before Sept. 30 because funding for it is included in the 1987 appropriations bill, Cox said.

Soldiers or family members who think they might be entitled to a retroactive payment should visit the finance office at a local installation for confirmation and filing instructions. (ARNEWS)

January is the time to register your vehicle in the state of Georgia. However, there is no hurry.

Unlike most states, Georgia allows their residents to drive on 1985 registration until April 1, 1986. Keep in mind that other states may not be aware of this law. You may be ticketed for failure to register your vehicle in another state.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Relief Act of 1940 exempts non-resident soldiers from paying the property tax on their motor vehicles in the states of Georgia and Alabama. In order to take advantage of this exemption, soldiers should come to the Legal Assistance Division of Building #5 for ad valorem forms.

These forms are color coded and therefore cannot be reproduced. The forms must be presented to the Department of Motor Vehicles along with a copy of a soldier's "LES" form to verify his out of state residence.

Soldiers who lease vehicles in Georgia are not eligible for the ad valorem exemption as provided by the Soldier's and Sailor's Civil Relief Act of 1940.

The cost of that property tax and the cost of registration of the vehicle is usually included in the cost of the first year of the lease.

Further information on this subject may be obtained at the Legal Assistance Division of the Staff Judge Advocate's Office.

Female brigadier general overcomes adversities

Cadoria

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Services

When she was three years old, she picked up to 50 pounds of cotton a day in the fields of a central Louisiana farm. As an eighth grader, she wanted to be a nun. Today, Army Brig. Gen. Sherian G. Cadoria, 46, is the highest-ranking black woman in the military services.

As director of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Manpower and Personnel Directorate, she is responsible for coordinating policies that affect more than 3.1 million active duty and Reserve members of the Army, Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps.

Cadoria uncannily predicted her rise to general officer at the age of 16 when she told her mother, "If I go into the service, I won't get out until I become an admiral." She wanted to follow in the footsteps of her brother, who joined the Navy at the age of 17.

"I said, 'you'll never get to that point...but she did,'" said her mother, Bernice Cadoria, 72, of Marksville, La. "As a child, she was very intelligent...always had a big mind," said Mrs. Cadoria.

A petite, soft-spoken woman with a courtly Southern demeanor, Cadoria is the first woman from the Military Police Corps to achieve general officer rank. She was the Army's "top cop" during a one-year tour as chief of the Law Enforcement Division in the Pentagon-housed Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

Before that, Cadoria spent two years (May 1982-July 1984) as commander of the First Region, U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command, Fort George G. Meade, Md.

In her present job, she deals with policies that include pay and allowances, benefits and professional education. Additionally, Cadoria administers the manpower survey team and provides input for the Joint Chiefs of Staff internal military and civilian personnel program.

Since her promotion to brigadier general last August, Cadoria has become one of the most sought after speakers in the Defense Department by military and civilian organizations around the country.

"I accept most of the engagements because it's good public relations," said Cadoria. "It's telling the armed forces story. It's being with our citizens and letting them know that this is a good place for their sons and daughters to be."

Her message to young men and women is, "Don't hesitate about coming into the armed forces. And don't be hesitant about going after the tough jobs."

"Everything won't be Utopia," said Cadoria, a devout Catholic. "There will be hard times, but not every day. I have a saying, 'This too, shall pass, and you'll go on.' But don't be hesitant about tackling the tough jobs."

Cadoria, who joined the Army in 1961, says she has managed her military career by seeking and fighting for the tough jobs...jobs that no other military woman had held...jobs that were reserved for men. She says she took plenty of knocks, bangs, bruises, insults and rejections along the way.

"I joined the military police because I wanted to work with troops...I wanted to command troops," she explained. "The MP Corps was the closest to combat arms that a woman could get in those days."

In 1967, after serving a year as administrative officer for the Army Provost Marshal in Vietnam, Cadoria sought a job as protocol officer with the Qui Nhon Support Command. The colonel who interviewed her said women couldn't escort VIPs because they couldn't carry the luggage. Cadoria told him about her days in the Louisiana cotton fields carrying sacks weighing nearly 100 pounds by the time she was nine years old.

"He said the only reason he was talking to me was he was forced to," she said.

The strong-willed general refused to give up. She eventually convinced the colonel and got the job. "I was given the title of 'the northernmost WAC (Women's Army Corps) in Vietnam,'" she laughed heartily. "That area wasn't approved for women. Saigon, Long Binh and Cam Ranh Bay were the only places women were assigned at that time.

"Shortly after I arrived there, we went into the 1968 Tet Offensive," she recalled.

The horrors of the war rekindled her thoughts of becoming a nun. "I did a lot of volunteer work at hospitals and leper colonies with the Dominican nuns working in the area," said Cadoria.

She told the general for whom she worked of her intentions. "He said, Sheree, you've been affected by what you've seen. But I think God's choice for you was to be a soldier."

Still determined to enter a convent after returning stateside, Cadoria began counseling with a priest. After a few months, the priest told her, "You have to work with the gifts that God has given you. And He's given you a very, very special gift. You already have a vocation. And your vocation is to work with soldiers..."

Writers-in-residence inspire post youngsters to put pen to paper

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning School System

Sharyn Kane and Richard Keeton are professional writers visiting and teaching in Faith Middle School for nine weeks. Their stay is sponsored, in part, by the National Endowment for The Arts and the Georgia Council for the Arts.

Their job, as they see it, is to fire youngsters with the joy and excitement which is true artistic endeavor, as well as to reinforce the basic rules they learn in school. In the process, students hitch a ride on the best magic carpet going — imagination unleashed. To get the journey started, they use many techniques — from juggling to games, from music to mime.

The following stories are just a small sample of what Kane and Keeton have seen in response, an outpouring of words — touching, lyrical, witty and fun. They state that the caliber of talent revealed is primarily a tribute, not to them, but to the unsung heroes of the school, a talented and tirelessly dedicated faculty.

FLASHBACK
By David Bjarnason
8th grade

As I walked through the murky darkness, my pace quickened. I knew that soon I would leave the twilight zone and enter a realm of total darkness, a place where the inky blackness could not be escaped.

I heard a sound to my right. It was the dripping of water, building up the stalactites of tomorrow. I glanced behind me. There, hundreds of feet away, I saw a speck of light, the entrance to the cave. But that light was growing rapidly dimmer, and soon it was swallowed up fast as the light from my flashlight had been.

Suddenly, images began to swirl around me. My home, my work, even my wife cascaded around my head like planets in the solar system. I saw things I dare not convey to you; I witnessed the beginning of time and the end of the universe. Then, it was over in a spectacular flash of light.

I stumbled on for hours, until I found this pad of paper and pen, and the light by which I write. My light grows dim now, and soon I must leave in search of my goal. But I shall never forget my encounter in The Twilight Zone.

THE BARN
By Carol Wells
8th grade

It was a nice color of red, not too bright, and yet now it seemed it made a cruel snicker, as I pushed open the blood-red, swinging door. I looked in the corner where he used to run and leap upon the bales of hay and I remembered how he rolled on the ground with a cheery laugh that only a child has.

Why? I kept asking myself. Could it be that I knew I had let it happen. A glistening tear rolled down my dirty cheek. A part of me had flown away, as if he had snatched my heart and run, leaving me alone, again. He was so young.

I picked up the rusty knife and cursed it. It had been there many months. It was the reason why. The hideous gleam from it bit into my soul, ripping at my innards. I dropped it and fell on my knees. I grabbed the sand from the floor, sand that he had once walked on. I sobbed deeply now. And — the barn laughed.

It was his haven, and I left knowing he would be there still.

Arbor Day celebrated by tree planting at Frank Loyd School

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Arbor Day was celebrated Friday at Fort Benning's Frank R. Loyd School. An annual Arbor Day Program was held in which crepe myrtle, dogwood, and red maple trees were planted by students on the school campus.

Hazel Scudder, Superintendent Emeritus of the Fort Benning Schools, was guest of honor at the Arbor Day Celebration. Mrs. Scudder told the assembly about the growth of the Fort Benning System from one school to eight during the years from 1950 to 1969 in which she was superintendent.

Steve Smith, of the Georgia Forestry Department, was on hand for the second Arbor Day celebration and participated in Loyd's celebration again this year. Smith discussed trees in Columbus and Fort Benning; he explained that the area is designated an official Tree City because citizens of the area have followed established procedures for care and maintenance of their trees. Smith also told Loyd students and teachers that a summary of Loyd's last year's Arbor Day Celebration had been sent to the Forestry Department's national magazine for publication.

Loyd School has its own Arbor Day Song composed for the Arbor Day Program last year by Cyrus Dietrich, Loyd School music teacher. Dietrich sang the Arbor Day Song at the celebration this year as students in the audience sang along with him.

The ceremony then moved out onto the campus where several students recited poetry about trees. Mrs. Scudder assisted in planting a crepe myrtle tree that was planted in her honor.

Arbor Day activities were completed as students and teachers moved to designated areas of the Loyd School campus. Each class planted a tree and made plans to take care of that tree for the remainder of the school year.

World War II surgeon writes of exploits as combat doctor

Book review

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Forward Surgeon: The Diary of Luther H. Wolff, M.D., Mediterranean Theater, World War II, 1943-45, is the diary of an Army surgeon who served in the first surgical hospital to land on the beachhead during the Sicilian campaign.

Wolff served with the Second Auxiliary Surgical Group, first as a doctor in a surgical team, and later as a chief surgical officer in charge of the teams.

Writing in a concise, understated style, he conveys the horrors of war through the eyes of medical personnel responsible for trying to repair the ravages of war.

Given the state of Army medicine in the 1940s, we watch many soldiers die from gas, gangrene and other infections that they didn't have medicine to cure, while other soldiers died from a lack of proper medical equipment needed for treatment.

As has been chronicled in countless other books on the second World War, the Army supply system had its shortcomings, and Wolff tells of the ingenuity of doctors in the battlefield, borrowing jeeps and going on foraging missions to round up vitally needed surgical equipment, and inventing makeshift equipment to get the job done.

Despite the conditions which they were forced to work under, the doctors and their surgical teams performed complicated life-saving operations on the American G.I.s, many times working 18-hour days, stumbling to a muddy foxhole for a few hours sleep, then back again to work 18 more.

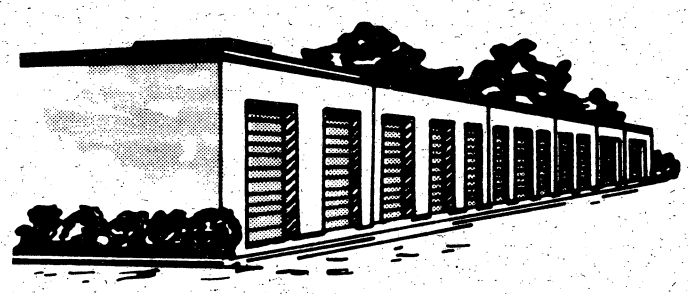
The men and women Wolff knew here, with few exceptions, do not complain of the hardships. They perform their vital job under horrific conditions — trying to save lives.

Wolff learns early on to dig a foxhole inside his tent, and he and his tentmates become accustomed to diving inside it as the shells fly around their tent. Because the field hospitals operated far forward in the division area, they were in many instances located only a few miles from the front line, so they were constantly exposed to German shelling.

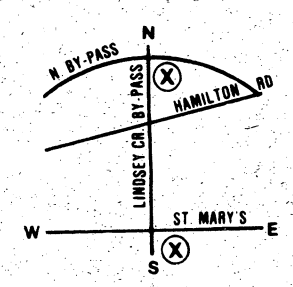
The author makes us feel the joy of getting letters and food packages from home, witness the destruction of the countryside, and share the beauty of a cathedral still standing amidst the rubble. We see the Italian countryside through his eyes, the darkeyed children begging for "caramelli," the crystal clear water of Lake Guarda in the Italian mountains, and the weary Pope greeting tourists at the Vatican.

The book is illustrated with snapshots of people and places Wolff meets and visits. Also helpful to history buffs are maps of the areas discussed in the book.

Wolff recalls the death of Col. William Darby, founder of the Army Rangers in World War II, who dies near Modena, Italy, killed by a stray shell.



If the book has any faults, it is that it does not tell us enough. Surgical procedures and cases really would have benefitted from footnotes. For example, he cites an "abdominal case with a large infected subhepatic hematoma." A footnote explaining just what this is would have been helpful.



Despite this oversight, this book is required reading for anyone interested in the Italian campaigns during the war, and any one interested in the state of Army medicine in this time period.

Editor's note: Luther H. Wolff, will be at the main post exchange March 8 from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. for an autograph session.

No promotion freeze for soldiers in FY 86 according to Pentagon

By Joann R. Rechtenbach
ARNEWS

Army officials at the Pentagon recently announced that despite severe budget cuts there will be no promotion freeze for the remainder of fiscal year 1986.

However, active duty enlisted promotions, captain through colonels and CWO 3 and CWO 4 promotions will be slowed effective March 1.

This slowdown is not a result of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollins Act which is aimed at reducing the federal budget deficit. According to Maj. William Boehm, of the Enlisted programs Branch in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. This promotion showdown results from changes in the Army budget that cut about $27 million from the officer portion and about $65 million from the enlisted portion of the Army personnel account.

"Monthly promotions are constantly monitored. We will continue to promote as many soldiers as we possibly can considering the money we have available and the Congressionally mandated end-strength we must meet," said Maj. Tom Wilson of the Officer Programs Branch in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"Those soldiers already on the promotion list will still be promoted, but they will have to wait longer to wear the new grade," said Wilson.

Promotion to sergeant through sergeant major will be slowed down during the March through September period. "This slowdown will result in an average delay of about two months," said Boehm. "We will continue to add people to the promotion list during the March - September time period. But, as it stands right now those soldiers will just have to pin on their stripes later on, around the end of the fiscal year," he said.

"Field grade officers on the Army promotion list will be required to wait on the average two to three months longer for promotions. However, there will be very little impact on any officers in the special branches, such as Medical Service Corps," said Wilson.

"Because we will be promoting fewer officers each month the point in time at which a captain on the APL is promoted will lengthen from three years six months to four years of active federal commissioned service (AFCS)," said Wilson. "The AFCS for majors will change from 10 years 11 months to 11 years, whereas lieutenant colonel will remain at 17 years AFCS. The AFCS for colonel will extend from 21 years 11 months to 22.5 years," he said.

Wilson added, that the current promotion lists for CWO3 and CWO 4 originally projected to be exhausted on May 1, will continue until July 1.

According to Wilson, the Army periodically will project the number of officers to be promoted by grade, captain through colonel, by competitive category. Prior to March 1 the Army will project the probably AFCS anniversary date on which officers can expect to be promoted.

In addition to a longer wait on the promotion list for enlisted soldiers, new time-in-service requirements have also been established.

The primary zone for advancement to specialist four has been extended from 24 months to 26 months time in service. Soldiers with 12 to 25 months TIS will require a waiver for advancement to specialist four. There is no change to the time in grade requirements for primary zone advancements or the TIS/TIG requirements for secondary zone advancements, said Boehn.

INTERVENTION

in•ter•ven•tion - Alcoholism and drug dependency are diseases of denial. This means that it usually takes a crisis to force a percon suffering from drinking or drugging problems to accept treatment. This crisis could be loss of a job or an automobile accident. An intervention is a controlled confrontation between the patient and his or her family or employer. Good treatment programs such as the Help Unit at Cobb Memorial Hospital help employers or families intervene effectively while the chance for recovery is still good.

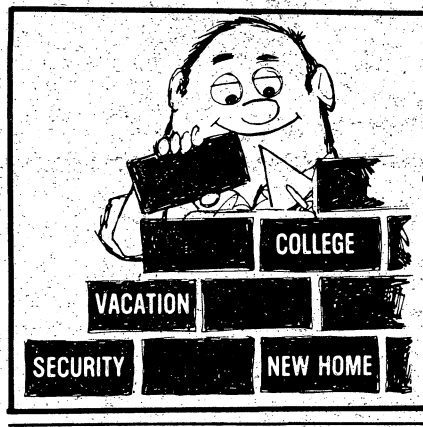
Kicking cigarettes tough but not impossible if smoker committed

By Thomas P. Goodell, MC
Department of Family Practice
Martin Army Community Hospital

Last week, we talked about all the bad effects that tobacco has on your body and the role that quitting smoking has in leading to a healthier life. We know that 90 percent of all smokers have wanted to quit at one time or another — they just needed some help.

There are several different ways to quit smoking. Some involve groups of people (like Alcoholics Anonymous) all quitting smoking at the same time. Some are commercial plans (you pay a fee for their assistance) while others are sponsored by the Lung Association or a hospital (often free or at very low cost). However, 95 percent of all people who quit smoking do it on their own. The key ingredient to success in any program is the FIRM desire to quit and the resolve to remain a non-smoker.



One popular four step program suggested by the National Cancer Institute is listed below:

- First Week. List all of the reasons you want to quit smoking and read the list daily. Wrap your cigarette pack with paper and rubber bands. Each time you smoke, write down the time of day and the reason. Remember to rewrap the pack.
- Second Week. Keep reading the list of reasons for quitting. Keep your cigarette pack wrapped and store it some distance away. Stop carrying matches. Try to smoke fewer cigarettes each day.
- Third Week. Keep doing everything listed above. Only buy a new pack when the old one is empty and never buy a carton. Change brands twice this week, each time choosing a brand lower in tar and nicotine.
- Fourth Week. Time to stop smoking entirely. Increase your physical activity and do deep breathing exercises when you feel an urge to smoke. Avoid situations associated with smoking and find a substitute for cigarettes.

There are two common questions that come up as people prepare to stop smoking. First, many people want to know about nicotine gum. This gum is meant to be used by those people who have difficulty breaking the chemical addiction of tobacco. It is not a substitute for smoking but is available to those who need it. For more information, talk to your regular physician.

The second common question is related to weight gain. Some people do gain weight when they quit because they use food as a substitute for tobacco. That is why other substitutes need to be recognized, such as exercise and deep breathing exercises.

In these two articles, we've tried to outline the bad effects of tobacco on your health and one of the ways to quit smoking. The most important part of the process is YOU — without your desire to live a longer and healthier life, nothing can be accomplished.

"I accepted that, and decided to make the military a career," said Cadoria.

Cadoria said one of her proudest achievements was her tour as Chief, Office of Army Law Enforcement, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Department of the Army. Her work there, she said, helped "set the future course for the Army Military Police Corps, out into the 1980s, 1990s and, hopefully, beyond. And the opportunity to provide a positive concern and care and leadership to the men and women..."

Another thing she's proud of is having borrowed an armored sedan in 1981 from the West German Minister of Interior just two weeks before terrorists tried to assassinate Gen. Fredrick J. Kroesen, then U.S. Army Europe and Seventh Army commander. The armored car is credited with saving Kroesen's life. "I thank God I was there to push that...and get it done," she said.

Before the incident, Cadoria could not get approval to purchase armored vehicles. "Following the attack, we were able to obtain 32 armored vehicles," said Cadoria, who was then serving in the U.S. Army Europe's Provost Marshal's Office as chief of physical security. She was also responsible for nuclear, chemical and conventional security and the anti-terrorism operations center.

Where does the name "Cadoria" come from? "It's a Spanish derivative," she explained. "My ancestral background is mixed with the Indian, Mexican, black, white and Spanish; just like so many of us are mixed. But I'm black."

Wear of unauthorized decorations punishable by UCMJ, criminal court

Are there soldiers who wear unauthorized awards on their uniforms? Yes, and according to MILPERCEN officials, some even have the awards entered on their personnel records.

"This is a dangerous practice," said LTC Harrison Lobdell, who heads up the Military Awards Branch, "because fraudulent award cases can lead to elimination from the service, courts-martial, article 15s and letters of reprimand."

Most of the instances of unauthorized wearing of awards, false record entries and falsification of documents come to light by accidental discovery. At present, there is no systematic review to detect all cases. Typically, a selection board may question why a photograph shows the soldier wearing a decoration, badge or tab, when there is no order in the official military personnel file.

An assignment officer or NCO screening a file might question the authenticity of a document of entry and refer it to the Military Awards Branch at USAMILPERCEN, for verification and resolution. Anonymous notes or tips are sometimes forwarded from the field. In each instance, the Awards Branch administratively reviews all awards being worn, claimed or appearing on the records of these soldiers.

"Many sources of information outside of the official military personnel file and military records jacket may be used in the verification process," Lobdell said. Service schools retain records of graduates who have been awarded badges and tabs. Record copies of permanent and general orders ae retired and may be retrieved and searched. Interviews can be conducted with past supervisors and commanders, he added.

"A soldier should never wear any award if the slightest doubt exists as to his or her entitlement to the award or without having written authority. A decoration or badge must be properly documented with orders and each soldier should ensure that an award order is contained in the official personnel file," commented Lobdell.

Orders are not necessary to establish entitlement to service medals and unit awards. If a soldier believes that he or she has qualified for or has been awarded a badge or decoration, but does not have orders or other valid instruments, the soldier should request assistance in obtaining written confirmation from his chain of command or MILPO. IN those cases where the circumstances prevent local verification, Military Awards Branch can help.

When an administrative inquiry initiated at the request of someone other than the individual concerned is completed, and if unauthorized awards are confirmed, the soldier's commander is notified. Commanders must correct the personnel records, have the soldier take a new photograph wearing only authorized awards and advise the soldier to refrain from wearing unauthorized awards in the future.

Any commander, MILPO or individual may obtain assistance in verifying award entitlements by writing to the following address: Commander, US Army Military Personnel Center, ATTN: DAPC-ALA, 200 Stovall Street, Alexandria, Virginia 22332-0400.

Military families functioning pretty well problems for some do occur, says expert

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Dr. Dennis K. Orthner spoke to a group of Fort Benning and Columbus educators at a seminar called "The Military Family: Their Unique Emotional Needs," last week at the Bradley Center.

Orthner, who holds a doctorate in sociology from Florida State University, has been studying Army, Navy and Air Force families for the last ten years.

"By and large, military families are doing pretty well, functioning very well," he said. "But a minority are having some problems, and a very small minority are having serious problems."

In comparison to civilians, he said military families have a lower divorce rate and their marital quality is as high or higher than that of civilians.

Most parent-child relationships are in good shape, he said. "Most military children are functioning and adapting well to their lives. These children have many skills that help them adapt better than their civilian counterparts."

In survey military families, he found job morale to be equal or better than that of civilian counterparts.

Orthner said that since he began studying military families ten years ago, the military has come farther towards improving programs for their families than any private corporation he's studied.

"When I began looking at military families ten years ago, there was an absence of support systems in the entire military community. Now they've responded with all kinds of programs to meet the needs of families."

He said management policies have dramatically improved in that time. "In 1977, the Navy was thinking about kicking out single parents, because they had the image that all single parents were black, female, unmarried, uneducated and in the low ranks. I did a study for them and found that most single parents were single fathers who were doing quite well raising their children."

He said he found more dual career families in the military than in any civilan firm he's ever studied.

"One out of five people in the armed services is a service member married to another service member, and this is causing personnel people fits," he said.

Also, he found that 60 to 70 percent of women in the middle ranks of the military are married to other service members.

Orthner said that while the military services are better at taking into account the needs of spouses, there is much more that should be done in this area. "They're enlisting singles but keeping married people, and this is an important fact they have to take into consideration," he said.

While the majority of families are doing well Orthner said one in five families is not doing well, by their own response to survey questions. These problems effect the mission performed by the service member, and should be better addressed by military managers.

Family violence is a problem at Fort Benning, as it is nationwide. Orthner said that in half the military families that reported low marital quality, family violence, usually spouse abuse, was also reported.

He said a typical problem family is a low ranking young soldier married to a young wife. "The wife married at age 16, and now has three young children at the age of 22. It's children raising children, and the wife often looks on the Army as 'Daddy Sam,' expecting it to take care of the family when the soldier is away on training missions."

Orthner said supervisors can help by being more understanding of a military family's needs.

He said because of the tremendous amount of instability in the community, many people don't form a sense of being part of the community. Supervisors can help foster this sense of community by showing they care about the soldier and his family's needs.

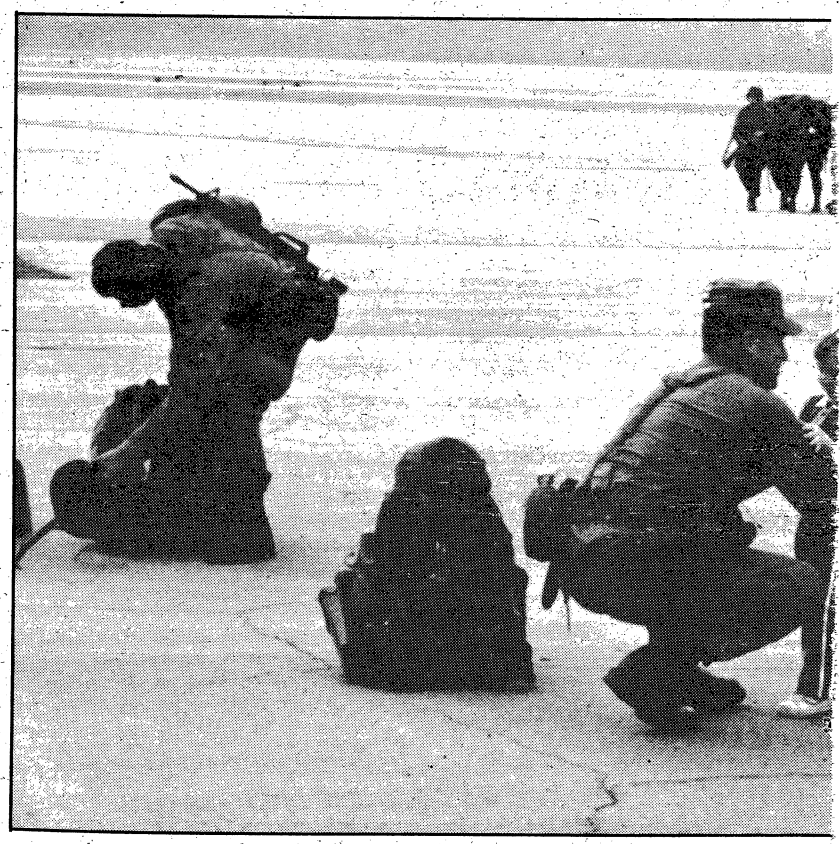
certain amount of time. Several missions began with air insertions and included live firing at stationary targets.

Six airborne operations were conducted during the deployment, Bongi said. Before leaving Fort Benning, the battalion jumped onto Fryar Drop Zone as a practice exercise. Then they jumped into Fort Wainwright when they arrived there, and jumped back into Benning on their return. Three missions conducted during the deployment also required jumps, so the Rangers had plenty of opportunities to use their parachuting skills.

All jumps were done with full equipment, Bongi said.

Given the number of jumps and number of missions performed, he said it was outstanding that the Rangers had no injuries of any kind during the deployment.



The Rangers stayed in the field for seven days, sleeping in cold weather tents. Temperatures ranged from a high of 10 to 20 degrees Farenheit during the day to lows of -5 to -10 degrees Farenheit at night, but Bongi said the weather did not cool the Rangers' enthusiasm for the deployment.

"The soldiers said it was a great experience for them," he said. "They said they gained a greater understanding of operating in extra cold weather conditions and enjoyed the training."

The purpose of the training was to ensure that the Rangers are ready to operate in a cold environment. "Rangers are deployable anywhere in the world, so consequently, they have to train for all types of weather," Bongi said.

The last two days in Alaska were spent preparing for redeployment. The Rangers jumped back into Benning Feb. 21.

Bongi said Arctic training will be conducted every 18 months.

Worship God at particular time, place

By Chaplain (Capt.) Duncan

A soldier was out on an ARTEP in a forest when a storm came up. Looking about for shelter from the rain, he found and crawled into a hollow log, which fitted quite snugly. The rain lasted for hours and soaked through the wood. The log began to contract. When the storm was over, the soldier was unable to get out. The log held tight and, finally exhausted, the man gave up, knowing that he would starve to death. His life flashed before him. Suddenly he remembered that he had not attended the Chaplain's Bible Study as often as he should have done. This made him feel so small that he was able to crawl out of the log without difficulty.

Theodore Roosevelt once said, "You may worship God anywhere, at any time, but the chances are that you will not do so unless you have first learned to worship God somewhere in some particular place, at some particular time."

The chapel's & Religous Education Center's of Fort Benning offer you particular places and times, as well as supportive fellowships within which to worship God. As you will find when you go to worship there, our religious centers are alive with the spirit of God, as well as love, caring, understanding, and the values that have made our country great. Perhaps there is something there for you and your family also?

One chaplain stopped in a PX coffee shop the other day and sat at the counter next to a soldier reading the newspaper. He glanced at the chaplain and then wanted to know where he preached as chaplain. When he mentioned the Main Post Chapel, the man said, "Why, that's the chapel I go to myself."

"Isn't that strange?" the chaplain replied. "I've been preaching there for eleven months and I don't believe I have ever seen you."

"Come on now chaplain" he shot back. "I didn't say I was a fanatic!"

All of our chapel's welcome even "fanatics" into our fellowship. We hope that you will take advantage of the many church school opportunities for children & adults as well. There are youth groups and musical groups for all ages. Many chaplains offer Bible study classes, and every month there is at least one prayer breakfast on post. Both the Protestant & Catholic women have meetings each month.

So join us this coming Sunday, worship at the chapel of your choice. Support the religious and moral development of our armed forces, and enrich the lives of your families at the same time.

Army concerned about suicide rate

By Barbara Baldwin
OCPA, HQ TRADOC

A game of Russian Roulette. Two players take a calculated risk for reasons known only to themselves. The bullet edges closer to the firing chamber and the tension mounts as each breathes what may be his last. Time seems to stop as climactic moments end in the harmless click of a trigger.

An explosion suddenly destroys the perfect stillness of a suspended moment . . . and then there is one.

A soldier asphyxiates inside his car — and a family member jumps from the second story of a building in one of many attempts to injure himself.

A macabre game? An accident? A plea for help?

There were 28 suicides at TRADOC installations from October 1984 to September 1985. Twenty-eight lives taken by bullets, nooses, carbon monoxide gas, drugs, and razors, and the majority of them did not take place during the holiday season — a time traditionally thought to depress those who were already unstable.

Unfortunately, the stigma involved in may of these cases causes them to be incorrectly or improperly classified, so we may never know the true circumstances that drove these people to become unwilling players in the game of life.

"It's a very similar to the alcoholism issue," says A. Wallace Hunt, Chief, Alcohol and Drug Abuse Branch of the Training and Doctrine Command's Personnel, Administration and Logistics Office. "Although doctors see diseases caused by alcohol consumption . . . like corrhosis of the liver, peptic ulcers and heart attacks that are alcohol precipitated, they don't want to 'stigmatize' the suicide victim by saying that alcohol consumption was apparent. (In the same way), they don't want to stigmatize the suicide victim by saying he died at his own hands."

The case involving Russian Roulette was not immediately identified in the follow-up report as a suicide, and Hunt says he wonders how many similar cases have occurred in the past.

Concern over the high number of suicides in the Army has reached the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of the Army — and the Training and Doctrine Command distributed a pamphlet titled "TRADOC Suicide Prevention Planning Guide — Caring Leadership" at the end of the last year in an effort to deal with the problem.

Suicide prevention training will be provided to all TRADOC officers and NCOs by the trainers in the school house, according to Hunt. By institutionalizing the training rather than identifying it as a specific block devoted to suicide prevention, Hunt says they can avoid an undesirable "red flag" effect.

Human services providers such as alcohol and drug abuse counselors, bartenders, club service personnel, and financial counselors are also being educated to spot suicidal behavior signals as they begin to unerstand the nature of depression, says Hunt. Trained financial counselors, for example, could sense serious depression in someone seeking special financial assistance.

Weekend

See what's new at Busch Gardens

Ask what's new at the zoo at Tampa's Busch Gardens, The Dark Continent, and you're likely to learn it's a diapered baby chimpanzee, a new brood of baby alligators or a rare Lear's macaw hatchling.

The park is currently undergoing a zoological renovation, creating dramatic new exhibits for Busch Gardens' elephants, camels, Chilean flamingos, Nile crocodiles and a variety of other animals. The renovation project is scheduled for completion in the spring of 1986.

Busch Gardens is located on 3000 Busch Boulevard, in Tampa, Fla., eight miles northeast of downtown, two miles east of Interstate 275 and two miles west of Interstate 75.

A single admission price of $15.50 includes all rides, shows and attractions. Children two years and under get in free. The gardens are open from 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily except summer and selected holidays when hours are extended.

For more information, call Susan Size or Teresa Ingram at 314-982-1700.

Master's competition May 23-25 at Gardens

The world's finest skiers will compete in the Master's Water Ski Tournament May 23-25 at Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, Ga.

Skiers will compete for $50,000 in prize money in men's and women's tricks, slalom and jumping categories. In addition, a "freestyle" category has been added to the competition.

Master's weekend begins May 23 with a day of practice scheduled. The elimination round begins May 24, with freestyle practice highlighting the afteroon's activities. May 25 the freestyle qualifying round is set, followed by the three-event semi-finals. Freestyle finals will precede the finals in the tricks, slalom and jumping events.

Warm Springs concerts set

Roosevelt Warm Springs Foundation Concert Series sponsors two more concerts in the Roosevelt Auditorium at the Roosevelt Warm Springs Institute for Rehabilitation.

The last two performances are College Jazz Band conducted by Paul Vander Gheynst, Sunday, March 9; and College Orchestra conducted by Patricio Cobos and College Choir conducted by William J. Bullock, Sunday, April 27.

All concerts will be at 3 p.m. and will be followed by a reception. Tickets for individual concerts are $4 and are purchased only at the door, subject to availability.

For ticket information, write to the Roosevelt Institute Concert Series, Box 1000, Warm Springs, Ga. 31830, or call Gail Robertson, Roosevelt Institute, 404-655-2022. The Roosevelt Institute is on U.S. Highway Alternate 27, one-quarter mile north of Georgia Highway 85.

Garden's passes available

The Callaway Gardens' annual pass for 1986, which provides a year's unlimited admission to the Gardens and Robin Lake Beach, is available now through Feb. 28 for the preseason price of $20.

Beginning March 1, passes will cost $25 each. Annual passes may be used with no additional charge for admission to special events at Callaway Gardens such as the Azalea Festival, the July 4th celebration, the MASTERS Water Ski Tournament, the Symphony in the Gardens series, and special art exhibits.

Annual passes, which expire March 31, 1987, may be purchased at the Callaway Gardens' Information Center daily from 9 a.m.-5 p.m.

Interested persons may also request an application by writing: Annual Passes, Callaway Gardens, Pine Mountain, Ga. 31822, or by calling (404) 663-2281, ext. 151. Columbus residents may call 324-2234, ext. 151.

Historic tour each Saturday

The Heritage Tour, sponsored by the Historic Columbus Foundation, leaves at 10 a.m. from the Columbus Hilton, 800 Front Ave., each Saturday. The cost for the two-hour tour is $5 a person, $2.50 for children 7-12, children 6 and under ride free. For more information, call 322-0756.

Use of credit cards in post exchanges leap forward for military

By Sgt. Maj. Rudi Williams, USA
American Forces Information Service

Some military personnel managers are concerned about people who might get into trouble by misusing credit cards in post exchanges. But the top noncommissioned officers of the four services think it's a great leap forward in quality of life programs for service members and their families around the world.

And, they don't think soldiers, airmen, sailors or Marines and their families will abuse the privilege.

Post exchanges throughout the United States started accepting Master Card and Visa on Jan. 6, 1986. Overseas exchanges are expected to start accepting credit cards by midyear.

Chief Master Sergeant of the Air Force Sam Parish thinks "Congress made a tremendous move by authorizing exchanges to accept credit cards. It places our people on a par with contemporary society in being able to use credit cards in our facilities.

"If our people are not allowed to use credit cards in the base exchange, they're going to use them outside," said Parish. "We've done a pretty good job inproviding financial counseling for our people, starting in basic training."

"I lobbied for credit card use a long time ago when I was stationed in BadToltz, Germany (1979-81)," said Sergeant Major of the Army Glen E. Morrell. "Credit cards have been around for years and we've been behind the times in establishing their use in our facilities. By prohibiting credit card use in our exchanges, we denied soldiers and their families the opportunity to make good buys.

"When soldiers go downtown to make their credit card purchases, they probably pay too much," Morrell pointed out.

"Some people are worried about soldiers overextending their budget, but after careful investigation we find that many soldiers already use credit cards within the limit of their means," Morrell emphasized.

"It is good for morale," he added. "It gives our soldiers a chance to take advantage of good buys in our exchanges and provides an opportunity for them to get a better product at a reduced price."

Sergeant Major of the Marine Corps Robert E. Cleary said: "I'm all for quality of life improvements, and this could be one if it's properly managed. The Marines and dependents should be schooled so that they understand their responsibilities."

Using credit cards in exchange sales stores "is a positive step forward and it opens new resources for our enlisted people," said William H. Packlett, Master Chief Petty Officer of the Navy. "It brings the post exchange system into sync with commercial retail stores. And it's another contribution to the quality of life."

Plackett doesn't foresee any major problems with troops misusing credit cards. "The percentage of problems should be relatively low because there are a lot of safeguards built into the system," he said. "A person who has bad credit will not be given a credit card to start with."

Defense officials selected four contractors who will provide banking and processing for Visa and Master Card credit card sales in military exchanges throughout the continental United States, Hawaii and Alaska.

Security Pacific National Bank of Glendale, Calif., was selected for the Army and Air Force Exchange System and Navy Regional Exchange systems in the San Diego and Oakland/Auburn, Calif., areas. The Chemical Bank of Jericho, N.Y., will handle the program for the remaining Navy Regional Exchange systems. Sears Payment System, Inc., of Lincolnshire, Ill., will support the East and West Coast Marine Corps Exchange systems.

The cards can be used in main exchanges, clothing sales stores and some exchange concessions and convenience stores. However, shoppers can't use them for such personal services as haircuts, shoeshines, theater tickets, meals in restaurants or to pay bowling fees.

Visa and Master Cards are the only ones approved for use in exchanges. However, plans call for adding other nationally recognized credit cards, such as American Express, Diners Club and Carte Blanche to the selection later this year.

Officials emphasized that credit cards issued by the contractors are not the only ones acceptable in exchanges. "Any Master Card or Visa will be accepted," he added.

DoD officials estimate that credit card use will add between $20 and $30 million to exchange coffers. About half of that will be "rebated" to customers through contributions to morale, welfare and recreation activities.

A book fair and children's essay contest will be held March 7 through 21 at the main mall post exchange.

A highlight of the fair will be the presence of the Reading Rainbow Express, a 12-foot long train/book case display, which is a colorful eyecatcher designed to spark the interest of youngsters.

According to Ben Gocheski, manager of Muscogee News Company, the fair and contest are part of a nationwide effort by book distributors to encourage reading.

The company is sponsoring the book fair and contest.

"We're concerned about the literacy problem in the United States, with many students dropping out of schools and never learning to read. It's a growing problem that concerns the future of this country, and this is a way we can help solve it," he said.

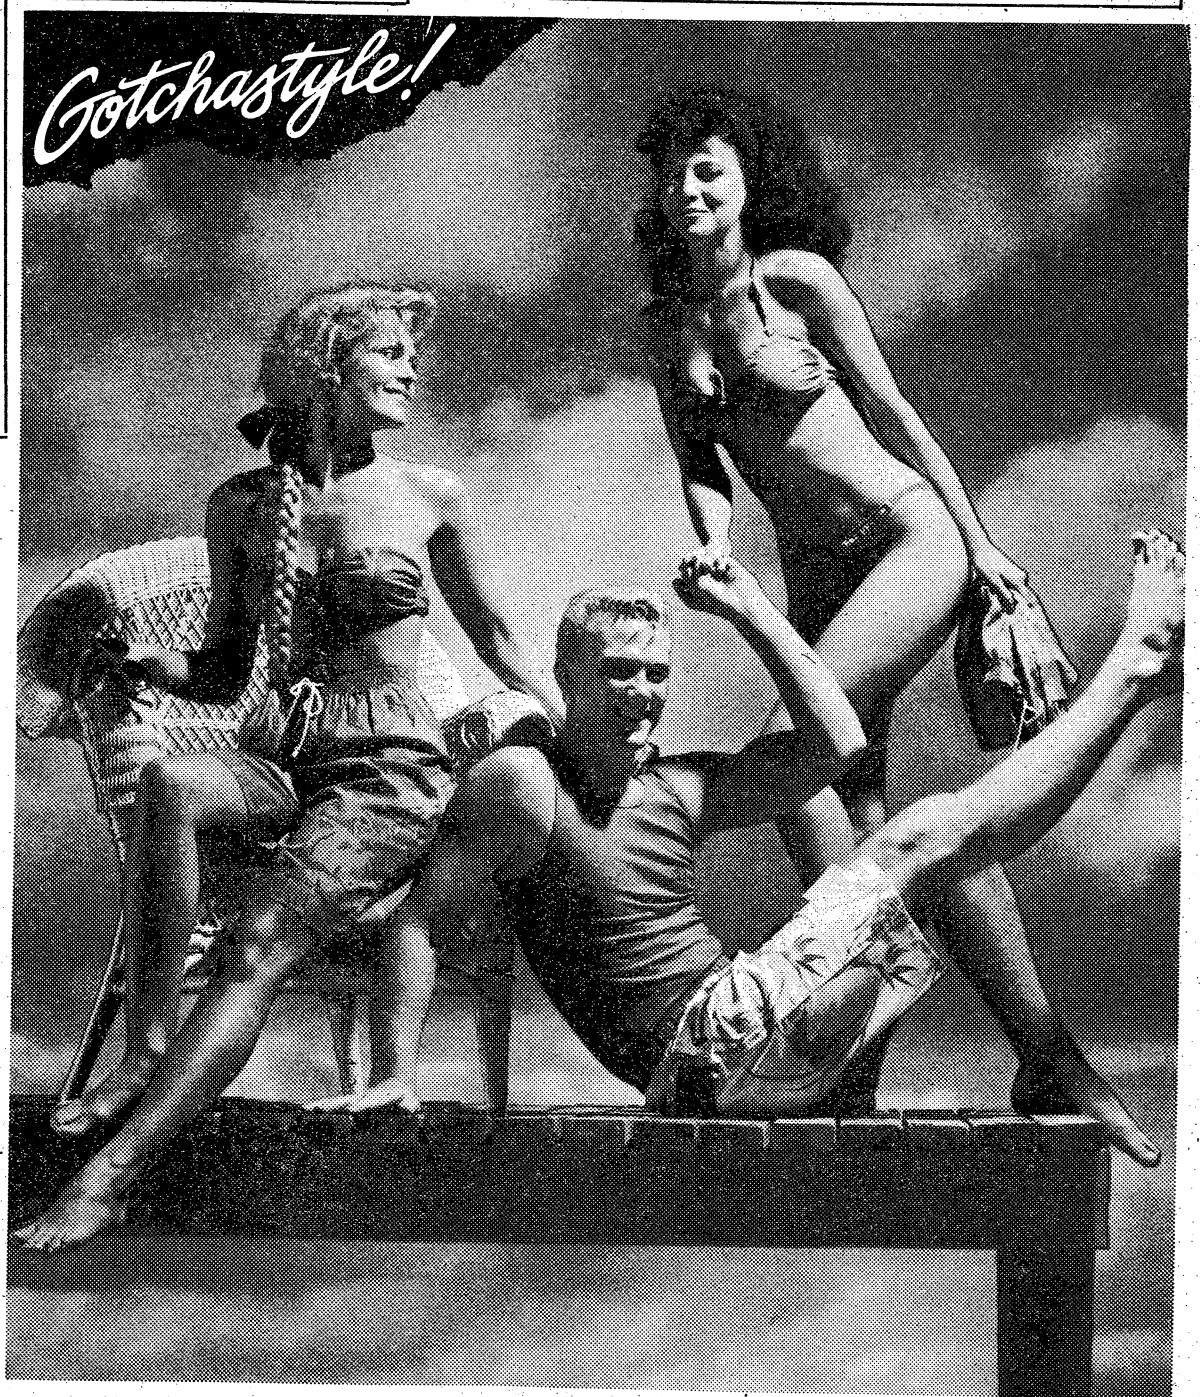
The program aims to encourage parents to read to their children, which in turn will interest them in learning to read.

The Reading Rainbow Express Essay Contest is open to children ages 7 to 12. They must submit a 150 word or less essay on the subject "Why Reading is Important." Essays can be turned in at a drop box located adjacent to the book fair in the main post exchange any time from March 7 through 21.

Official entry blanks can be obtained at the book fair, or a child can make their own by including his name, age, address and telephone number on the essay.

First prize is a $150 savings bond, second prize is a $100 savings bond and third prize is a $50 savings bond. Winners will be announced within a few weeks of the fair's end, Gocheski said.

While the fair's main thrust will be children's books, there will also be adult hardback and paperback books available on a variety of subjects, he said.



One half of the profits from book sales at the fair will be donated to the Muscogee County Literacy Coalition, an organization which is involved with teaching adult education in Columbus, Ga., Gocheski said.

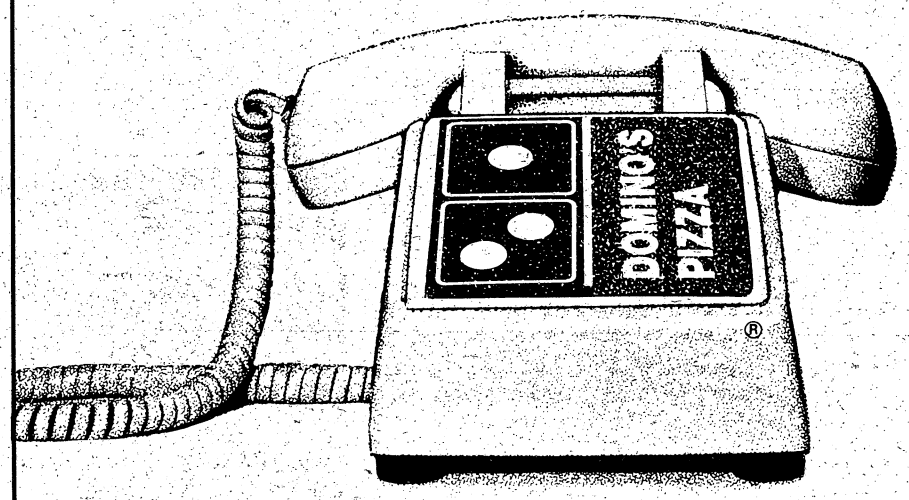
Future budget cuts detrimental to Army

The Army's top two leaders cautioned Congress not to cut the Army's proposed 1987 budget because the modernization programs underway are vital to meeting the defense needs of the 1990's.

This was the theme in the opening statements of Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., and Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., as they presented their annual report on the status of the Army to the House Armed Services Committee Feb. 7.

Both leaders called for continued modernization of the service in the face of a Soviet threat which is now more dangerous than ever before. They cited the continuing growth of Soviet combat power, which is now more dangerous than ever before. They cited the continuing growth of Soviet combat power, which now totals 199 divisions, an increase of five divisions from last year. Even more alarming than Soviet investment in their armed forces — about 15 to 17 percent of their gross national product — is their influence in the growth of terrorism and insurrection in third world nations. Marsh noted that there are more than 20 active insurgencies and conflicts throughout the world, many fueled by Soviet arms.

To meet these challenges to U.S. Security and National interests, both agreed that the Army must be able to respond to either low- or high-intensity conflicts. This response requires a balance of light, rapidly deployable forces and conventional, heavy forces.



Both leaders believe quality soldiers are essential to a strong, capable Army. Wickham noted that more than 90 percent of the active force and 80 percent of the reserve components have high school diplomas, representing a substantial increase over 1980. To attract and keep quality soldiers, the 1987 budget calls for $6 billion for quality of life programs to meet needs ranging from family housing and child development, to maintenance and repair shops, to soldier and family services. Another concern related to recruiting and retaining soldiers is proposed changes in the military retirement system, requiring a cut of $2.9 billion in retirement funds for soldiers entering the Army. In his prepared remarks, Wickham said that if Congress does not lift the cap on obligations or change the current law, the Army would have to absorb a devastating reduction of 120,000 active and 112,000 reserve component soldiers.

Equipment is key

Both Army leaders stressed that quality soldiers need quality equipment and that the modernization currently underway must continue. Programs designed to get modern equipment to active and reserve units must continue. Marsh noted that plans for FY 87 include providing more than $2 billion in modern equipment to the reserve components, an increase of about one-half billion dollars over last year. Wickham showed the committee a modernization plan for the next five

Orienteering meet right on azimuth

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Over 150 competitors turned out for the 1986 U.S. Army Infantry Center Orienteering Championship Feb. 11 and 12 at Fort Benning.

Participants had their choice of five courses to run, beginning with the easiest, the Yellow course, getting progressively more difficult in the Orange, Green, Red or Blue courses.

According to Jeanne Truitt, orienteering sport specialist at the Community Recreation Division, Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities, the competitioned was sanctioned by the U.S. Orienteering Federation, which sets rules for orienteering. It sets guidelines for course lengths, which is why all Yellow courses must be from 3.5 to 4.5 kilometers, etc.

Competitors could enter as individuals or as members of seven man teams. Points were awarded in each event for time it took to complete each course, difficulty of the course and finishing times in relation to other competitors on the course, called placement points.

Each competitor had three hours to navigate the courses they chose. This three hour limit is a federation rule.

Each person headed into the woods with a map, compass and score card. Maps were marked with control points, and competitors had to find the spot in the woods, punch their score card with special hole punches located there, and get back to the finish line as quickly as possible.

Truitt said the competition lasted for two days because part of the competition is testing the consistency of performance by the competitors.

"People have to be in top physical condition to run these courses, and they are especially stressed the second day, when they are sore and tired from the first day of competition," Truitt said.

She said the three hour daily time limit is a good rule, Truitt said. "Otherwise we'd have people out in the woods in the dark, still trying to locate a control point. Orienteering competitors are that competitive and don't give up easily," she said.

Awards were presented to the top individual winners and runner-ups on each course, as well as the top three team winners.

This year's competition added a new awards category for women competitors, won by Katheryn Bassett as the best overall female, and Holly Davis, who was runner-up. The category was added to encourage more women to compete in what has been a predominantly male sport, Truitt said.

"Women don't spend as much time in the woods and aren't conditioned by their parents to excel in such activities, so they come to the sport somewhat behind the beginning male competitor," she said.

The team from 4th Battalion, USAITC, won first place, with a meet score of 4,358. Second place went to the team from the 1-507th PIR, with a score of 3,444, while the 6th Battalion, ATC team earned 3,439 points for third place.

Individual winners and runner ups by course were:

Yellow Course: Franklin Krebel, winner; Kelly Gillen, runner-up.

Orange Course: James Woodul, winner; Robert Lara, runner-up.

Green Course: Robin Harrison, winner; Glen Steffenhagen, runner-up.

Red Course: Richard McCaughey, winner; Raymond Shepherd, runner-up.

Blue Course: Keith Antonia, winner; Alvin Kalawe, runner-up.

Flyers lose

By Joel Courtemanche
Special to the Bayonet

In opening day ceremonies hosted by Col. Paul Chinen, 36th Engineer Group commander and newly installed team sponsor, the Fort Benning Flyers Rugby Football Team played matches against the Columbus and Macon teams, losing both.

During the first game, the Flyers scored first with Pili Niuamoa carrying the ball in for the try. Failing the kick, the Flyers took a 4-0 lead before Macon tied the score. Capitalizing on a 40 meter drop-kick by their team captain, Macon scored the winning points, beating the Flyers 17 to 4.

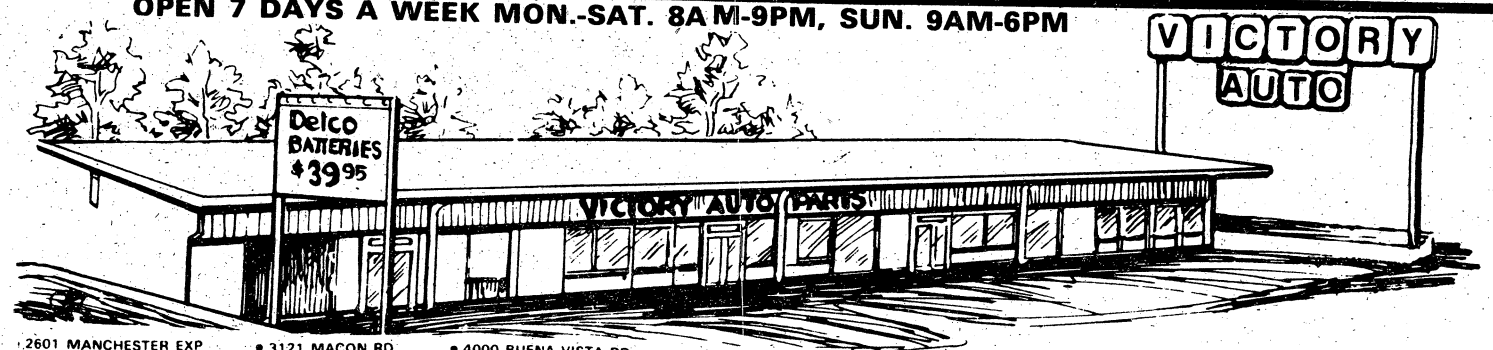
In the Columbus game, the Flyers gave up several early scores and Columbus took the lead, 16 to 0 at halftime. During the second half, the Flyers rallied for 10 points but were unable to prevent Columbus from scoring, losing 24 to 10.

The Flyers played aggressive rugby during both games, but were unable to generate sufficient offense. Exceptional performances were put forth by many Flyers, including Billy Whitesides, Jeff Cleveland, Kurt Webber, Bob Higgins, Lew Boone and Steve Powers during the Macon match.

Scott Mizener, Scott Pacello and Bernard McCauley paced the Flyers against Columbus.

Tomorrow the Flyers travel to Atlanta for a match and March 8th will see the Flyers playing the High Country Rugby Football Club at 1:00 p.m. on Stilwell Field. For further information on games or joining the team call CPT. Steve Tennant at 545-1688.

Key Club picks new members



The Spencer High School Key Club has recently selected new clubmembers who, unlike the past, are female.

Before this change the females were considered "Sweethearts" but were not official members. The new nominees and the Sweethearts were given an interview with the Sponsors and club officers following the decision to liberate the females.

The new members include Michelle Cadwell, Angie Thacker, Nancy Patrick, Krista Helgason, Kelly Cargile, Linda Davis, Amanda Walker, Cammy Diaz, Tracy Olds, Carolyn Hughes, Tracy Crawford, Mary Mace, Amanda Liebl, Lori Jones, Michelle Pryor, Melanie Foye, Inez Goggins, Kysa Cargile, Holly Peters, Heidi Nix, Emily Burba, Andrea Alvarez, Edith Cabersaurus, Monica Dorsey, Paige Arthur and Beth Mace.

years. This plan calls for an increase to 89 M-1 (tank) battalions, 72 Patriot (Air Defense) Batteries, 68 Bradley Fighting Vehicle battalions, 54 UH-60 (Helicopter) companies, 45 Multiple Launch Rocket System batteries, 34 AH-64 (Apache Helicopter) battalions and 3 Mobile Subscriber Equipment (MSE Communications) corps sets. "We are modernizing our force structure, giving it better balance, and increasing its combat power, all without an increase in the end strength of our active component," he said.

The reserve components continue to play a vital role in the Army's force structure, constituting 49 percent of the total Army strength. Reserves currently comprise 50 percent of the combat battalions, 70 percent of the deploying forces and 69 percent of the Army's combat service support. They play an increasingly important role in the Army's mission and are being integrated into more overseas deployments. Marsh mentioned to the committee that Army National Guard and Army reserve units participated over the past 12 months in deployments to Honduras, Panama and Germany. They also are included in training cycles at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

The secretary and chief stressed the importance of the Army's light divisions in meeting today's challenges. Twenty-five percent of all Army divisions are configured as light forces. Wickham pointed out that the Army's light division has significantly more of its strength devoted to fighting forces than does the traditional combat division. Marsh pointed out that the light division can respond to a global crisis in about one-third the time, using one-third the airlift sorties that are required by existing heavy divisions. The Army will activate its fifth light division in 1986 with the 6th ID (light) in Alaska.

In addition to light divisions, the Army will continue strengthening its special operations forces, with improved communications equipment and aviation assets. Marsh added that many of the special operations units are reserve organizations, and stressed to the committee members that their support is critical toward maintaining a balance between the components.

Saving money stressed

The Army leaders reported significant cost avoidance in awarding contracts. In fact, Army procurement officials exceeded the FY 85 goal while awarding $14.9 billion competitively. In FY 86 the Army has set a goal of approximately $15.8 billion to be awarded competitively. But the Army's effort to cut costs goes beyond contract competition. Multiyear procurements since FY 82 and projected through FY 87 will reduce costs by an estimated $2.8 billion, Wickham said. Marsh's testimony added that the Army is complementing these stewardship efforts by prosecuting those who defraud the government. We have created a fraud, waste and abuse task force consisting of the principals of the secretariat and Army staff to assist in these efforts," Marsh said.

Wickham outlines concern

In his statement for the record, Wickham outlined five areas of special concern to the Army. He told the members of the committee that the Bradley Fighting Vehicle is essential to the combined arms team. "All major armies of the world have infantry fighting vehicles designed to protect infantry from artillery fragments and small caliber weapons, and have mounted on them anti-tank weapons as well as cannons for suppressive firepower. The results of our vulnerability tests how that the BFV is a tough, survivable vehicle far superior to its predecessor, the M-113 and the Soviet BMP." Improvements planned for the BFV include a spall liner to reduce fragment damage and "reactive" armor to better withstand a shaped charge attack. The estimated cost of these improvements will be less than $75,000 per vehicle.

Wickham stressed a need for better air defense capabilities in the forward battle area. He specifically called for support of the "forward area counter air concept" including a combination of fiber-optic guided missiles, gun-missile systems, command and control improvements as well as improvements to existing infantry, armor and artillery weapons. Without adequate air defense, Wickham feels that other investments made in force capabilities are in jeopardy.

For FY 87 the Army is requesting a budget of $80.6 billion in total obligation authority. Marsh added that reductions in this would have significant impacts, particularly when combined with the cuts in the FY 86 budget. This would cause negative consequences for our deterrence and war fighting capabilities, he said.

Both Marsh and Wickham petitioned his key Congressional committee to continue to support critical programs to ensure an Army that is ready, responsive and responsible. (ARNEWS)

U.S. Savings Bonds

Now Paying

8.36%

U.S. Savings Bonds now pay market-based interest rates like money market accounts!

Hold your Savings Bonds for five years and you automatically get the market-based rates which change semi-annually, the first of May and November. Plus, you get a guaranteed return! You'll probably earn a lot more—but never less than 7½%.

With both money market rates and a guaranteed return, Savings Bonds make a great investment. And Bonds are still a great way to keep America strong.

Savings Bonds are easy to buy, too. Purchase them at most banks and savings and loans, or through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work. For more information, call toll-free 1-800-US-BONDS.

U.S. SAVINGS BONDS
Paying Better Than Ever

Market-based rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least five years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn market-based rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than five years earn lower rates.

Whose face is on the $100,000 bill?

(No fair peeking in your wallet.)

According to the 1986 World Almanac®, a portrait of Woodrow Wilson adorns the $100,000 bill, used only in transactions between the Federal Reserve System and the Treasury Department.

The 1986 World Almanac is itself a treasury of more than a million fun facts! And it contains updated, favorite features such as America's Most Influential Women, Heroes of Young America and a portrait of the future by the editors of Omni magazine.

Benning's drill sergeant of the year named

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Drill Sergeant of the Year is an all-American success story.

"I came to Alamogordo, New Mexico from Korea and I knew how to say two things in English: 'Thank you' and 'How are you.' I wanted to see the world so I joined the Army in 1972," said SFC Sang Chin, who is a member of Company A, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

Fourteen years later Chin is a sergeant first class, fluent in English, and a veteran of tours in Germany, Fort Hood and, now, Fort Benning.

In this year's drill sergeant of the year competition, Chin came out on top overall in the four graded events: the Army Physical Readiness Test, basic rifle marksmanship and drill and ceremony, mid-cycle tests and end of cycle tests.

The mid and end of cycle testing consists of the same tests as One Station Unit Training soldiers undergo such as hand grenade skills, map reading, NBC, anti-tank weapons and military occupational skills specific testing such as basic infantry or mortars.

On April 11 Chin will be awarded a .45 caliber pistol, a plaque and an Army Commendation Medal for his win.

He attributes his success to his chain of command.

"I got a tremendous amount of support from my chain of command. My first sergeant and sergeant major provided resources and time for me to get ready for this competiton. Without their support I couldn't have won," said Chin.

Chin and his wife, Kum Sook, have two children; John, 6, and Tom, 3, and all four reside off-post in Columbus.

Chin goes to Fort Monroe, Va. for TRADOC competiton April 21.

Speedy inking of union contract result of close relations

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning officials signed a new three-year contract with the American Federation of Government Employees last Friday.

The new contract covers all general schedule nonsupervisory employees on post, a total of nearly 3,100 workers, said Willie Varner, chief of Management-Employee Relations, Civilian Personnel Office.

Signing the contract were Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba Jr., post commander; Col. John Richards, commander of Martin Army Community Hospital; Lt. Col. William Parrish, deputy director of the U.S. Army Information Systems Command; Joseph Governskil, deputy commissary officer; Col. Richard Brown, Dental Activity commander; Leo Lyons, president of AFGE Local No. 54; and Varner.

Varner said the biggest change in the contract was in hours of the work week and tours of duty. Some provisions were changed to comply with the new Office of Personnel Management Regulations, he said.

The new contract took only 14 hours to renegotiate, according to Varner, because "we have very good management-employee relations at Fort Benning."

Department of Defense could lose power to punch; 1986 budget cuts might knock military out of ring

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Budget cuts are upon us and the Defense Department is being forced to chop away: less mileage driven on tanks, fighter pilots getting less flying hours in and Naval personnel separating from service early.

I went up to Raggedy Gulch, Arkansas to discuss the Defense budget cuts with my great uncle, Joe 'Rotgut' Brazile.

Uncle Joe used to be a prize-fighter back in the '40's, shortly after he, according to his story, "whipped the Japanese Army and finished World War II." I figured, based on this, he would know a lot about the Defense Department and what was going on and how it would affect our national readiness.

"Hello, Uncle Joe," I says, pulling myself up on the rotting wooden porch that boasted a sleeping pig, a sleeping dog and a sleeping Joe.

"Joe, rise and shine. It's me, Mike."

He woke up, scratching his hairy belly that was naked because of a t-shirt that was once there but now had only a begrimed collar left, hanging loosely around his neck.

"Uncle Joe, I came up to discuss the cut in funds that the Defense Department is having to put into action."

Joe, propped on one elbow, looked at me kind of cross-eyed and took a long pull at a half-empty bourbon bottle.

"I thought the President was buildin' the military back up," said Joe, bleary eyed.

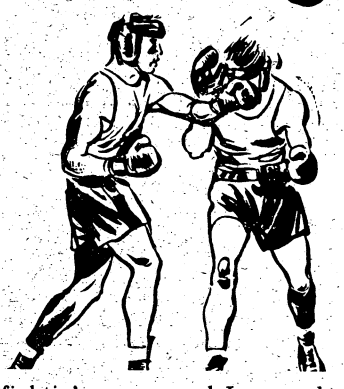
"I thought he was bringin' our soldier and sailor and fly boys up to snuff so we could lick the 'hull' Russian Army if we needed to," he said, stretching and causing his left foot to poke the pig's nose letting the poor porker get a whiff of his ripe toes.

"He was doing that, Uncle Joe, but people in Washington felt the miltary was strong enough and decided to start cutting back just when they were getting strong," I said, as I watched the pig begin snapping its tail and then run, squealing, away from Joe's fetid feet.

"That reminds me of something that happened to me back when I was a prize fighter," said Joe, finishing the bottle and throwing it behind his back.

"When I was boxin' professional I had a trainer name a' Whisky Jack Wajelski. Now, Whisky Jack was between fighters and lookin' for a likely prospect when he happened upon me, swabbin' out saloons in Denver, Colorado. He saw I had potential, what with my muscles from fightin' all those Japs, and he took me on as his boxer."

"Now, the potential was definitely there but, after all the drinkin', gamblin', gallin' and swabbin' I had been doin' I was out of shape."



"Ol' Whisky Jack stopped all the drinkin' and smokin' and gamblin' and swabbin' and most of the other one and began shapin' me up. He spared no expense, gettin' me a gym to work out in and a ring and sparrin' partners. He had me liftin' weights and exercisin' and runnin' ever' day. I lost alla' my fat and my muscles were bulgin'. Then he had me workin' on my speed and footwork and I was a rarin' to go and fight. I was ready."

"My first three fights were pushovers. Why, they didn't wanna get back in the ring with me, I beat 'em so bad. Then this guy from the Caribbean wants to fight me, Whisky Jack says awright, and I clobbered him, too."

"My reputation was made, by this time. I was on top of the world. Jack and I had a little money put by and we were gettin' along just fine. Then Jack starts gettin' greedy. He said I didn't need a gym no more and stopped rentin' me a place to work out in. I quit liftin' weights and workin' on the bag cause Jack said shadow boxin' was good enough. I had to take my job back, swabbin' out saloons and purty' soon I was gamblin and drinkin' and smokin' but I couldn't afford the fun one. I was in purty' sad shape but Jack said don't worry about it. I was strong enough."

"Then this hairy, bear of a fella shows up from the East and says he wants to fight me. Well, Jack tries to talk him out of it and pleads and wrings his hands but the Bear wouldn't have any of it and commenced to layin' into me. I'll tell you, he whomped and stomped me somethin' pitiful. Oh, I tried to fight back but I didn't have enough strength or speed. I was outa' shape and outa' luck. I went down in the first round and the Bear even kicked me a coupla' times before they could pull him off."

"That was the end of my fightin' career and I come back here to Arkansas and been drinkin' ever since. I guess that Bear's still stalkin' around somewhere, with nobody mean enough to stand up to him."

"But I learned somethin' from that fight. If you're gonna be a winnin' fighter you gotta be ready all the time and in top condition or when the fight comes you'll get whopped like a stubborn mule on a drunk Saturday night."

I just shook my head and looked at Uncle Joe. I should have known better than to come to some punch-drunk, rummy hillbilly. I decided to go Washington and find out from all those experts about why it was alright to cut our Defense the way they're doing. What does an old drunken boxer know, anyway?

Lack of standardized equipment fatal flaw in NATO forces

By Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

If the Warsaw Pact forces were ever to roll across Central Europe, they would be met by NATO forces operating six different kinds of tanks. Not only do most of the NATO tanks have major structural differences that require unique repair parts, most of them don't even shoot the same kind of ammunition.

The United States spent more than $1 billion in research, development and testing of the Abrams tank. Great Britain and Germany spent just as much on the Challenger and Leopard, respectively.

This doesn't happen only with tanks. NATO countries produce and deploy many armaments that are not compatible with their allies' systems. What ultimately suffers is the combat effectiveness of NATO forces.

Deputy Secretary of Defense William H. Taft IV recently identified this problem in the system that arms NATO. "Inadequate arms cooperation hurts NATO both in capabilities and costs," he said.

Taft said the use of standardized equipment by Warsaw Pact forces gives them a considerable edge over NATO forces. For example, rather than fielding six distinctly different tanks, the Warsaw Pact has five tanks, each basically an evolutionary improvement of the previous model with many common features.

Taft said the efficiency of this system enables the Warsaw Pact to:

- get more "bang for the buck" by outproducing NATO countries with less defense expenditure;
- maintain substantially lower development-to-deployment lead-times than NATO;
- narrow the quality gap, which for so long gave NATO a substantial lead; and
- move ahead of the West in some areas of technology.

"Inadequate arms cooperation hurts NATO both in capabilities and in costs," Taft said. "Unless we do better, the inexorable upward push in weapons costs can prevent Alliance nations from replacing current equipment and inventories in sufficient numbers."

So what's keeping NATO from working together?

Taft said it boils down to:

- protectionism, or each country's attempt to protect its own industry;
- concerns about technology security; and
- the difficulty of reaching agreement within each NATO member's political, military, technical and commercial communities.

Taft emphasized that better cooperation within NATO in the development of arms should not interfere with competition and free trade.

Maintaining the proper balance between sharing critical technology within NATO and protecting it from Soviet exploitation, Taft said, will require broad cooperation.

"Our alliance can and will benefit substantially if we move forward as true partners to share the burdens and benefits of cooperatively developed, modern conventional weapons," Taft said.

Post MPs aim to stop drunken drivers; frequent patrols help catch offenders

There has been much publicity lately about the nationwide campaign against drunk drivers and police efforts to get them off the road. Your military police at Fort Benning are totally committed to making the roads safer and spend a great many hours patrolling them.

While many may believe that MP's establish intoximeter checkpoints or "stake out" installation clubs in their search for drunk drivers, this is not the case.

Almost without exception, drunk drivers are identified by the military police through their involvement in traffic accidents or because of erratic driving. Through surveys, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has established the following likelihood of performance by drunk drivers:

- 65 percent will turn on too wide a radius and straddle the centerline or lane markers.
- 60 percent will slouch behind the wheel, weave and narrowly avoid striking other vehicles or fixed objects.
- 55 percent drive on the shoulder or off the road entirely.
- 50 percent will drive well below the speed limit, stop without cause, follow other vehicles too closely, or "drift."
- 45 percent will brake erratically or drive into opposing traffic.
- 40 percent will be using their turn signals improperly or be extremely slow to respond to traffic lights.
- 30 percent will drive without headlights at night.

Every member of the Fort Benning community can do two things to support the campaign against drunk drivers:

1. Use discretion when drinking. Eliminate yourself from becoming a statistic by refraining from driving.

2. Promptly report to the military police (stating time, location and circumstances) any display of one of the drunk driver performance indicators shown above.

Remember that the roads being patrolled by the military police are YOUR roads. The lives we are trying to protect are YOUR lives. Help us!

VA Q and A

Editor's note — Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I am a 67-year-old veteran with limited income. I have applied for a nonservice-connected pension. Do I have to prove to the VA that I am disabled?

A — No. Permanent and total disability for pension purposes is presumed at age 65.

Q — My brother was a disabled veteran. I was appointed his guardian by the VA. His compensation checks came to me. He died last month and I would like to use the check that came at the end of the month to pay some of his bills. Can I do this?

A — No. A veteran's entitlement to disability pension or compensation terminates at the end of the month prior to his death. Checks received after the death should be returned. The person who pays the funeral expenses may be eligible for a burial allowance.

Q — Does the Veterans Administration offer assistance for rent, utilities, food, etc?

A — No. the VA has no resources for these forms of assistance. You may wish to contact a local veterans affairs or social service office. (VA)

West Point celebrates 184 years of service to nation

The United States Military Academy was established by an act of Congress on March 16, 1802.

The West Point Founders Celebration each year has become the event to commemorate the anniversary.

The organization of an American military school in 1802 was a logical step for several reasons: regular military instruction, appropriate in any well conducted military organization, was lacking in the Army; the death of trained officers in the revolution proved the need for military technicians in the event of a renewal of war; and leading statesmen felt that a military academy would serve to strenghthen the Army.

Finally, for the duties many officers were called upon to perform, a knowledge of the mathematical sciences, as well as practical training joined together with the personal qualities of integrity and leadership, was a necessary prerequisite.

For 184 years since 1802, the military Academy has been educating succeeding classes of professional Army officers. As a measure of the Military Academy's achievement, one may properly recall the respect and esteem which the whole world holds for the names of graduates like Eisenhower, Arnold, MacArthur, Pershing, Lee and Grant.

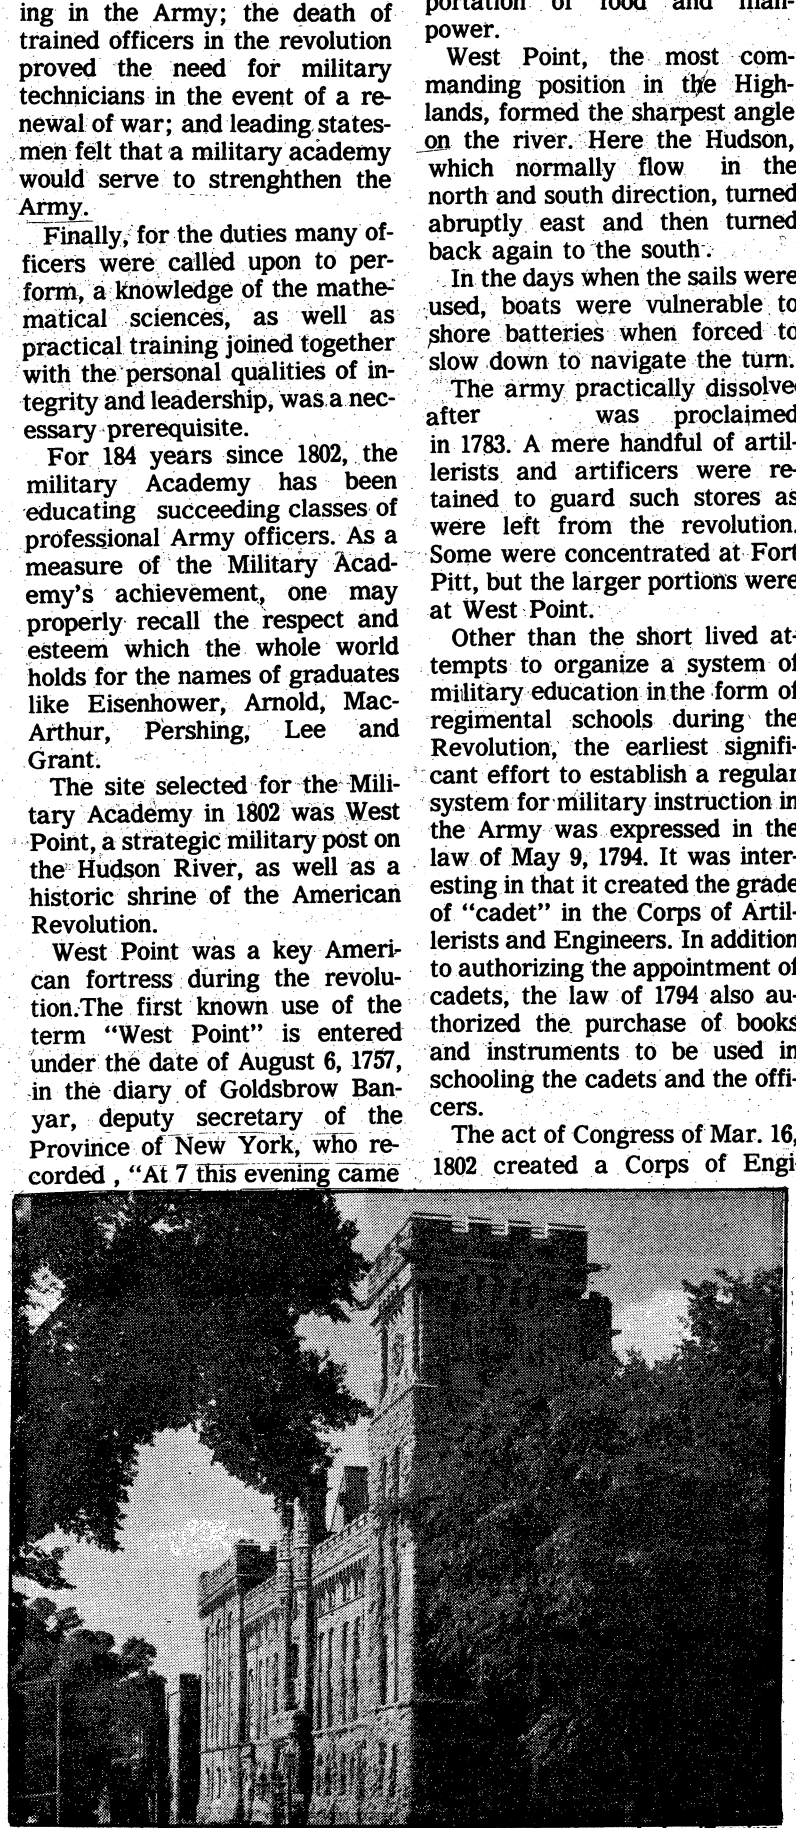
The site selected for the Military Academy in 1802 was West Point, a strategic military post on the Hudson River, as well as a historic shrine of the American Revolution.

West Point was a key American fortress during the revolution.The first known use of the term "West Point" is entered under the date of August 6, 1757, in the diary of Goldsbrow Banyar, deputy secretary of the Province of New York, who recorded , "At 7 this evening came to an anchor at the W. Point of Marbling's Rock (Martelaer's Rock now Constitution Island).

It was with the rising tide of the American Revolution that the Hudson Highlands, and West Point, intruded themselves on the consciousness of America as a region of major importance in the unfolding military and political struggle.

In order to wage war more successfully, the Americans had to have the Hudson open for transportation of food and manpower.

West Point, the most commanding position in the Highlands, formed the sharpest angle on the river. Here the Hudson, which normally flow in the north and south direction, turned abruptly east and then turned back again to the south.



In the days when the sails were used, boats were vulnerable to shore batteries when forced to slow down to navigate the turn.

The army practically dissolved after was proclaimed in 1783. A mere handful of artillerists and artificers were retained to guard such stores as were left from the revolution. Some were concentrated at Fort Pitt, but the larger portions were at West Point.

Other than the short lived attempts to organize a system of military education in the form of regimental schools during the Revolution, the earliest significant effort to establish a regular system for military instruction in the Army was expressed in the law of May 9, 1794. It was interesting in that it created the grade of "cadet" in the Corps of Artillerists and Engineers. In addition to authorizing the appointment of cadets, the law of 1794 also authorized the purchase of books and instruments to be used in schooling the cadets and the officers.

The act of Congress of Mar. 16, 1802 created a Corps of Engineers as a branch of military service separate from the artillerists and directed that "The said Corps when so organized, shall be stationed at West Point, the State of New York, and shall constitute a Military Academy." This law first used the phrase "military academy" perhaps as hopeful indication of its objective, and authorized a regimental school, patterned on a medieval college in which the Engineer officers were the masters under whom the cadets served as apprentices. This was the school in which the modern military academy finds its beginnings.

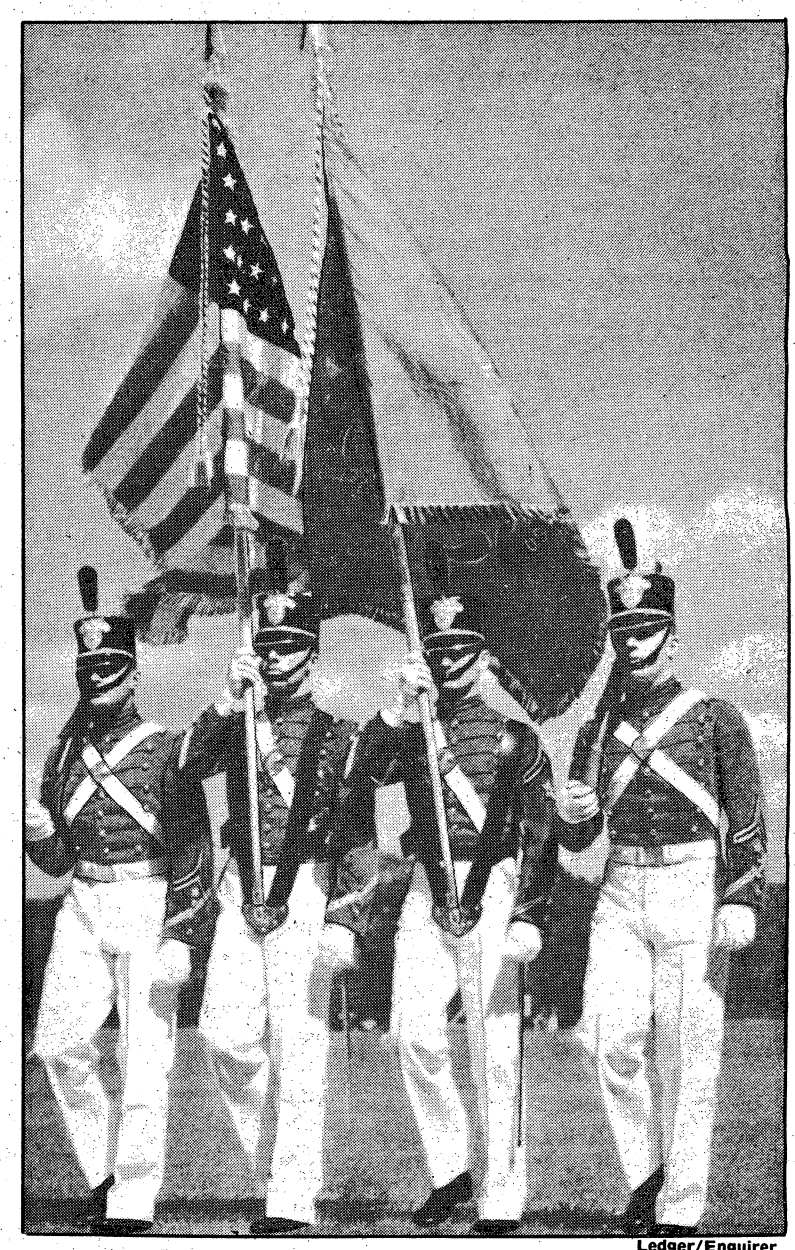
> "The United States Military Academy was established by an act of Congress on March 16, 1802."

Ledger/Enquirer

LIVING HISTORY — The Clock Building, still in use, at the U.S. Military Academy.

Again, academic instruction was quite irregular, particularly because officers responsible for teaching were frequently called away for service on coastal fortifications. Before the War of 1812, formal tuition was suspended.

Up to and including this time, 88 cadets had been graduated; they had entered without mental or physical examination, at all ages from 12 to 34, and at various times during the year.



In 1817 Major Sylvanus Thayer, Corps of Engineers, was ordered to take charge of the Military Academy as Superintendant.

Reporting at West Point in July 1817, Thayer found most cadets absent or on special leave, regulations disregarded, studies imperfectly mastered and the Academy in a state of disorganization. Thayer approached the problem of administering the Military Academy with two guiding principles in mind. The first principle which he insisted upon making effective was strict adherance to the rule of discipline and subordination. Supporting fundamentals which had to be fostered at the Military Academy, he felt were an ardent attachment to the military profession, a resonable desire for preferment and a strong and dignified regard for personal reputation.

A second principle guiding Thayer was that of advancement of promotion according to merit with no distinction between students because of financial or family background.

The West Point teaching staff accepted these principles as their own and joined Thayer in their application to the day-to-day administration of the Academy. To supervise the cadet and to conduct his military education, Thayer appointed an officer as Commandant of Cadets.

In 1898, the present coat of arms was adopted, the motto theron of "Duty, Honor, Country" was but a later generation's attempt to put Thayer's ideal into words.

Thayer's most important contribution was raising the technical and ethical standard of the Army officer from that of a man with a vocational skill which could be acquired by practice to that of a man of education and training on a level with the professions of theology, law and medicine.

For the achievements of his administration from 1817 to 1833, Thayer is celebrated by West Pointers as "The Father of the Military Academy."

West Point is changing. But these vast improvements have been achieved only by the striving for perfection of those who have gone before - traditionally known as the Long Grey Line. To those graduates who in peace and war, succeeded in molding the little fort of Revolutionary War days into the symbol and nucleus of the defense of their country. To them we say, with the motto "Duty, Honor, Country," ever before us, may we "Follow close order behind you, where you have pointed the way."

Founder's Day celebrated on Benning; academy grads encouraged to attend

Gen. William Richardson, commanding general of TRADOC, will be guest speaker at West Point Founder's Day March 22 at the Fort Benning Officer's Club.

Founder's Day is the annual celebration of the founding of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. This year marks the 184th anniversary and all service academy graduates are encouraged to attend.

Cocktails begin at 6:30 p.m. in the main ballroom and dinner is at 7:30 in the Supper Club.

If you are an academy graduate and have not received an invitation, call Capt. DiGiulio at 544-6860/6314 or Capt. Lesieur at 544-1986/1594.

Recipe for Benning's 'Great American Family' food for thought

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

When she was a little girl, Brenda Jo Burke knew what she wanted when she grew up.

"All I ever wanted was to marry Jimmy Burke, be a nurse and raise a houseful of boys," she said. She did marry her childhood sweetheart, now Capt. James Burke, and after ten years of Army life, she is a licensed practical nurse and mother of three sons.

The Burkes were recently named one of three Training and Doctrine Command Great American Families, part of a world-wide competition to honor Army families who have contributed to their communities. This summer, nine families will be selected to be honored by First Lady Nancy Reagan, honorary chairperson of the American Family Society, which sponsored the contest.

What makes their family so special it was singled out for recognition?

Burke said the credit goes to his wife, but she said he played just as important a role in their family's success.

Family important

Family is important to the Burkes, whose lives revolve around their three sons, Kevin, Sean and Eddie. They said they spend as much time with the boys as they can, because it's what they want to do.

"This time with the kids growing up only lasts a short time, and we don't want to miss anything," Mrs. Burke said. "All it takes to help kids is to show a little bit of concern, and they really need it."

Since Burke entered the Army, the family has lived at Fort Hood, Texas, Fort Rucker, Ala., Fort Jackson, S.C., San Antonio, Texas and Fort Benning. Burke also served an unaccompanied tour in Panama, an experience that made him rethink his views on family and career.

"I spent six months in Panama not knowing when I'd see my family again, and when I got back, my priorities were changed," he said. "Now every decision is based on does it benefit my family."

Communication key

Communication is also an important quality in their family life. "We are able to talk to our kids on their level. We don't talk down to them, we just discuss things with them openly," Burke said.

"They can have opinions and come to their own conclusions. We listen to them with an open mind, and sometimes we change our minds on things," Mrs. Burke said.

Doing everything they want to do takes some coordinating, since both Burkes are full-time students. Mrs. Burke is working on her RN degree at Columbus College, and Burke is pursuing a master's degree in management at Troy State University. Mrs. Burke also works third shift on weekends as an emergency room LPN at the Medical Center.

Since all three sons are active in scouting and extracurricular activities, the Burkes have gotten involved in them too.

Mrs. Burke is treasurer of Cub Scout Pack 127 and an assistant den mother. Her face is a familiar one at sporting events on post, as she takes her sons to football or soccer practice and studies while they participate.

Parents involved

Her involvement in Youth Activities was recognized recently by the post sports commissioner, who dedicated the All-Star Football Game to her during half-time ceremonies, and presented her with a plaque and certificate of appreciation.

Her husband can be found at almost every athletic event his sons take part in, acting as team manager, waterboy or sports announcer. He has donated much of his time and money videotaping games and events, making copies for other parents.

Burke said the sports program at Fort Benning is an excellent one. "There is so much available to youth here, all you have to do is tap into the system."

He is also Scoutmaster of Troop 27 on post.

He got involved with scouting when the family moved to benning. "Sean was too young for scouts, so I agreed to help them if they'd take him," he said. When the scoutmaster moved away, Burke took on the job, and said he doesn't regret it.

Enjoys scouting

"I enjoy working with the boys. In some senses it's easier to work with boys from military families because they're used to a goal oriented life," he said. "At the same time, it's hard because many fathers are away a lot due to their work, and the books look to me for a role model."

GREAT COUPLE — James and Brenda Burke. Becky Winters

He said scouting is good because it puts a lot of responsiblity on the boys. "When they go camping, they are in charge of planning the trip, deciding on food, clothes and supplies, so it teaches them to be self sufficient," he said.

While they admitted that the schedule sometimes gets hectic, there's really nothing they could give up.

"We both have to further our educations," Burke said. "The LPN career field is drying up and I have to have a degree to get promoted, so school is essential."

Mrs. Burke said there's nothing she could give up, and luckily she only needs 6 hours of sleep so she can make it. She said the two nights a week she works in the emergency room are her special time. "The pace is so fast and I work with a lot of nice people, so it's my favorite time," she said.

Attention works

The Burke boys show the positive results of parental involvement.

Thirteen-year-old Kevin is president of the student body and chairman of Student Council at Faith Middle School. He played wide receiver on the YA football team, and goalie on the YA soccer team and was elected team captain of both. He was co-captain of the YA All-Star Super Bowl, and established a Faith Middle School record of 5:26 for the mile run.

His first month at Faith, he was chosen Citizen of the Month by his teachers and recently was chosen to be one of two students participating in a student exchange program with an off-post school later this year. He developed this idea while campaigning for the presidency, as a goodwill gesture to promote civilian understanding of the Army way of life.

The 8th grader won first place honors for an art project submitted to commemorate the State of Georgia's Steeplechase Week.

He is patrol leader of Dragon Patrol, Troop 27, and was indoctinated into the elite "Order of the Arrow" last summer.

Eleven-year-old Sean is a straight A student in the sixth grade at Faith School. He is the youngest scout ever to have attained the rank of Star Scout on post and is also a patrol leader.

He is the youngest member of the Fort Benning All-Star Football Team and plays linebacker and offensive guard. He's also a comedian, according to his mother.

"He got involved in it at White School, participating in little

National Training Center supports 197th Infantry Brigade

197th

An Army combat unit rotating to the National Training Center brings a good deal of its own equipment but the rest comes from the NTC. This eliminates the dificulty and expense a unit would undergo in bringing all of its own gear to the desert.

While in Fort Irwin's "dust bowl," or staging area, units of the 197th Infantry Brigade drew many tons of hardware from NTC's vehicle and equipment yards. This phase of NTC is a busy time for supply sergeants and executive officers who must inventory and distribute everything form M-60 tanks to nuts and bolts.

According to Maj. Jack Grugin, brigade S-4, the 197th drew more than 200 vehicles, to include tanks, armored personnel carriers, Improved TOW Vehicles and recovery vehicles.

The list goes on. Units drew some 1,200 camouflage systems, 2,600 pieces of individual MILES equipment, crew-served weapons and many other items.

Soldiers learn early not to take the issue procedure lightly. Each crew, for example, does a complete technical inspection of its vehicle before taking it out of the yard. Once the vehicle is out, the unit has complete responsibility for it.

When a vehicle, such as an APC, leaves the yard, NTC technicians check the vehicle's MILES instrumentation before giving it a thumbs-up for the battlefield. The crew also test fire the weapons with blank ammunition and zero each weapon's MILES transmitter.

"The hardest part in issuing a vehicle is to do a complete inspection of its systems," Grugin said. "We check the communications, mechanical, weapons and MILES systems to make sure the vehicle is fully mission capable."

DUST BOWL BLUES — At sunup, 197th soldiers prepare for another work day at Fort Irwin.

When the initial dust bowl phase is over, the task force is ready for the desert. However, when the battles are over, the soldiers return to the vehicle and equipment yards to reverse the process.

Grugin noted that the turn-in is as hard as drawing the equipment. It not only involves cleaning and accounting for everything that was issued, but also ordering parts and completing other paperwork that may be required to correct any deficiencies. What's more, units will also have to turn in mines, wire and other barrier materials drawn to create obstacles on the battlefield. This material has to be collected and turned in to clear NTC.

Families given help by support detachment while spouses battle at NTC

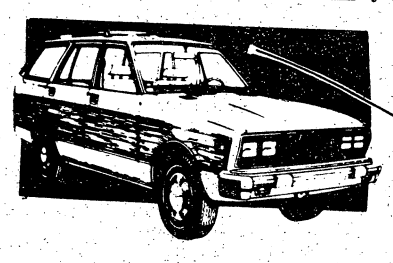
197th

If you are a family member of a 197th Infantry Brigade soldier and he or she has been assigned to the Brigade for more than a year, chances are you have bid your loved one farewell more than once. Believe it or not, the 197th has deployed for off post training exercises four times in the past 20 months.

"A unit that deploys as often as the 197th has to have an effective system of informing and supporting dependents of deployed soldiers," states Lieutenant Colonel Richard Rhoades, the Brigade's Rear Detachment Commander. "We have found that maintaining direct contact with family members on a regular basis is the best way of doing this." In fact, the 197th has its Family Member Support program down to a science.

The process starts several weeks before the Brigade deploys. Briefings are held for deploying soldiers and their spouses. These sessions provide information on powers of attorney for cashing payroll checks, emergency telephone numbers for the hospital, MPs, fire department and the like. Representatives from the Red Cross, Army Community Service and other activities on post attend these briefings to explain how their agencies work.

Once the Brigade has deployed; the 197th's newsletter, "First Call," is employed. The newsletter is normally written for Brigade soldiers, but during this rotation at the National Training Center the newsletter has been written exclusively for family members of deployed soldiers. "First Call" contains procedures for contacting Rear Detachment personnel, news from the National Training Center and other useful information. The newsletter is mailed directly to deployed soldiers' families.



The family members themselves have also invented a well oiled machine that begins to operate once the Brigade departs Fort Benning. Each unit has its own support system. 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, for example, has a babysitting program staffed by volunteers from the battalion. Every Thursday members of the unit may leave their children with the battalion sitters so they can run errands, pay bills or grocery shop.

There are also organized activities such as social hours and fashion shows. 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor wives sponsored a Ladies Night at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center last week. These outings give wives a chance to get to know one another. They serve as excellent mediums for sharing information as well.

Preparations for Welcome Home celebrations are in the works too. Family members are hard at work planning refreshments, making banners and signs to decorate company areas and the Lawson Army Airfield hanger where 197th soldiers will deplane.

Being separated from loved ones is always hard, but for 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers and their family members the time spent apart is made easier thanks to the 197th's ability to 'take care of its own'.

Army sure-pay system pays off in soldier's peace-of-mind

By Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment

29th Inf.

In an effort to better inform soldiers of the 29th Infantry Regiment who are not currently enrolled in Sure-Pay, the regiment's S-1 shop conducted several classes recently.

Sure-Pay, a plan whereby the soldier's salary is sent directly to a financial institution on pay-day, will become mandatory for anyone joining the Army after Oct. 1, 1986.

In summary, the classes offered an explanation for the Army's conversion to Sure-Pay, showed the soldier's how to sign up, and had several local financial institutions explain their services.

According to SFC Richard Watson, organizer of this activity, mission readiness is what led the Army to endorse Sure-Pay.

"In the event a military emergency arises, all soldiers must be ready to deploy when called upon.

"His mind must be free of personal and financial worries so that he can concentrate on the mission," Watson said.

Thus, the direct deposit plan is meant to eliminate many of the financial worries that normally accompany combat emergencies.

According to Watson, "The soldier's pay will go directly to this account everytime; no matter where he goes."

In turn, this will benefit family members, Watson said. "If the soldier's account is joint with his spouse, the spouse can draw on the account in his absence."

However, the soldier should consult his company Sure-Pay advisor for further clarification on joint accounts.

Several representatives from various financial institutions in Columbus and Fort Benning participated in the classes. The representatives talked briefly about their services and listed the number of locations they have throughout the area.

In general, the banks require a minimal monthly balance (for example $300) for no-charge checking accounts. If the balance falls below minimal requirements, a monthly sevice charge ranging from $1 to $4 plus 15 cents to 20 cents per check charge could be incurred.

The credit union requires the soldier to become a member before using any of its services. However, a minimal checking balance of $5 must be maintained to receive no-charge checking, and there is never any charge for checking writing.

For the most part, the banks pay 5 ¼ percent compounded annually on savings accounts with a minimal balance requirement. The credit union pays 7 percent compounded quarterly with a minimal savings balance.

Other features offered by local financial institutions to Sure-Pay customers include 24-hour banking, military loan services, an audio response system — a system whereby many financial transactions may be handled by computer via the telephone, and more.

Just because a soldier is as signed to Fort Benning, doesn't mean he has to use local facilities. According to Watson, the soldier may choose an institution any place in the United States.

Approximately 185 soldiers attended the classes.

29th's mentorship means better soldiers and leaders

By Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment

29th Inf.

According to Webster's Ninth Collegiate Dictionary, a mentor is a trusted counselor or guide.

For the instructors of squad tactical training (STT), "mentorship" is the new way they train initial entry soldiers.

"Under the new system the instructors act as squad leaders and go through the training with the soldiers," Capt. Roger King, commander of Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, said.

"When the instructors are not conducting formal training, they are reinforcing what the soldiers have already learned," King said.

"Prior to mentorship, one instructor was responsible for eight hours of training over a five-day training period. But under mentorship, each instructor is responsible for 43 hours of training over a four-day period," King said.

Each instructor is assigned a squad which will stay with him for the duration of the training period.

"The instructors teach how to be a member of an infantry squad, to include movement techniques, and ammunition usage and fire superiority," King said.

During the last phase of training, the new soldiers perform squad combat drill using MILES

TAKING CARE OF BUSINESS — Evans inventories his supply area.

Supply sergeant can predict his battery's needs at NTC

By Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

197th

SSgt Willie Evans learned some important lessons on his first rotation to the National Training Center in 1982. At the time, he was an E-4 assigned to the supply section of B Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery.

"We ran out of some key items fast," Evans explained. "I sure figured out what kinds of supplies are critical at NTC."

Now, on his fourth trip with the 197th to the NTC, Evans is the supply sergeant in the same battery. He's learned to predict, pretty accurately, what his battery will consume in expendable supplies during a three-week NTC rotation.

This kind of desert wisdom runs heavily throughout the 197th, now in the middle of its third NTC exercise in the past 18 months alone. At almost every level and in just about every type of activity are those soldiers who have "done" NTC until they know it, cold.

Fortunately, a good bit of this NTC savvy can be found where it helps the most, among the brigade's noncommissioned officers. From the brigade sergeant major down to squad leaders and section sergeants, there are NCO's with a lot of hard-earned desert know-how under their steel pots.

SSgt. Evans, for example, not only knew exactly what he needed to take to NTC to keep his battery going, but he also knew to get it early to beat the pre-NTC rush at Fort Benning's Self Service Supply Center.

That approach was echoed by SSgt. Nick Baker, a platoon sergeant in D Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, operating as part of Task Force 2-69.

"We have a lot of people who have never been to NTC before," said Baker, who first came to the desert with the 197th in 1984. It's just like getting replacements in combat, experienced guys have to smooth the way for them."

Military combat units have often been compared to athletic teams. Those with the hardened veterans and sharp rookies seem to enjoy the greatest amount of success. If that truism holds, the 197th will be able to add another success story to its long list of productive training exercises.

104th Division reservists save life

Reserves

When the drill sergeants from the 104th Division, U.S. Army Reserve, came to displace the regular Army cadre from Echo Company, 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade last Friday, they came with one purpose in mind: to take charge.

SFC Steven Borts and Sgt. James Lessaos had that very thought in mind when they quickly applied first aid to Pvt. 1 Ladee Roundy after he had momentarily stopped breathing during NBC training on Britten Range.

After receiving a 16 hour block of instruction on the importance of knowing what actions to take after a nuclear, biological or chemical attack, the soldiers were trained on how to don their protective masks.

"The final test of the day was a practical exercise for the soldiers. Although the soldiers received a very explicit block of instruction on how to don a protective mask, there is always a few who don't pay attention," said Lessaos.

While the soldiers were standing in formation a CS gas canister was exploded nearby. The soldiers began putting on their protective masks as the large plume of white smoke began moving towards them.

"I noticed a soldier laying with his face down in the sand. Borts and I ran immediately to assist him. When Borts turned him over I noticed he wasn't breathing. I cleared his airway and began giving him mouth-to-mouth resuscitation. Seconds later, Roundy revived," said Lessaos.

"Those drill sergeants saved my life. I took a deep breath before putting on my protective mask and the next thing I remembered was waking up with two drill sergeants kneeling over me. I later learned they saved my life," said Roundy.

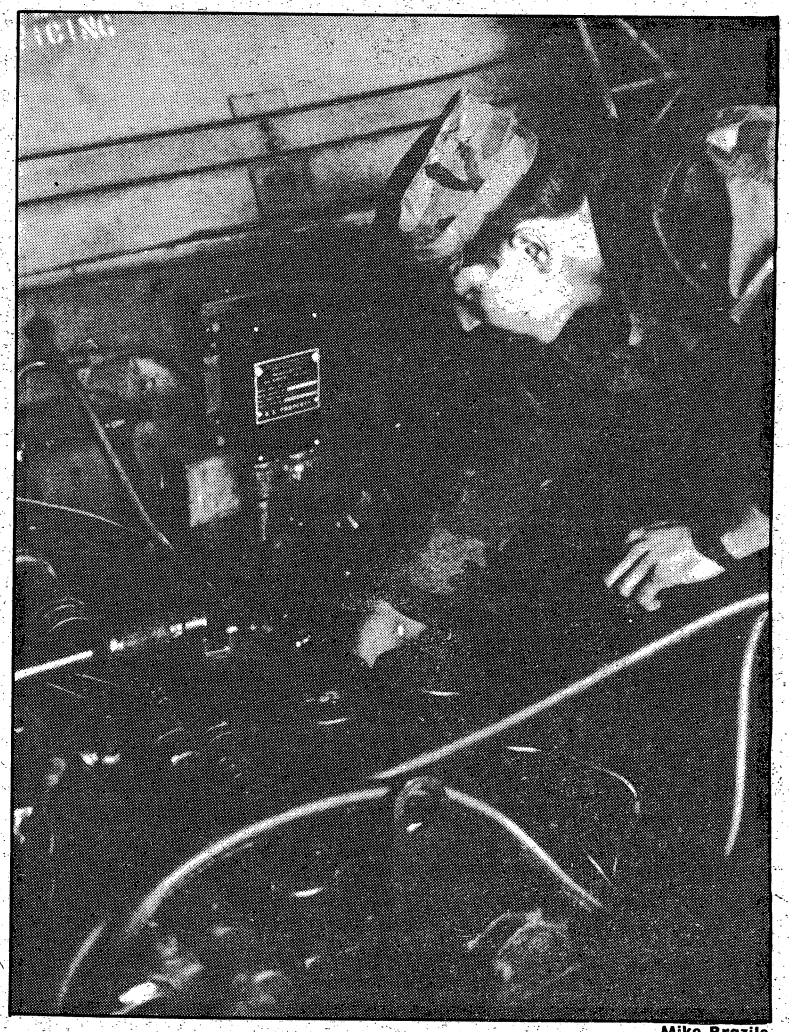
Transportation Company wins maintenance award

36th Engrs

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 533rd Transportation Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, of the 36th Engineer Group recently won the Chief of Staff Army Award for Maintenance Excellence in the intermediate category.



"Basically, when I got here 20 months ago CWO4 Clayton McClanahan had put together an outstanding maintenance program. I've just perpetuated that program, fine tuning what McClanahan put together," said CWO2 Jack Hahn, the 533rd's Automotive Maintenance Technician.

No other unit in the Army has won the Chief of Staff's Maintenance Award as consistently or as many times as the 533rd, according to Hahn.

"Last year, in '84, we won first at Forces Command level and we were the runner at DA. In '83 the unit won first at both FORSCOM and DA. We've got a good program here with a lot of good people working hard and hustling," said Hahn.

Hahn with his 24 mechanics and clerks maintain 55 M915 Line Haul Tractors, vehicles similar to a semi-truck rig; five Chevrolet Blazers; two 2 1/2 ton trucks; a wrecker and 108 semi-trailers.

The award is based on unit readiness, training, management, cost savings and innovation.

Second COHORT battalion graduates

1st ITB

By Joel Roberts
ATC

The 1st Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade graduated the second COHORT battalion for the 10th Mountain Division at Fort Benning on February 27

The reviewing officer for the graduation was 10th Mountain Division Commander, Maj. Gen. William Carpenter, Jr. Also present was Fort Benning Commander, Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba; 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry Commander, Lt. Col. Richard Lane, whose unit the new soldiers will go to; and 1st Battalion, 1st ITB commander, Lt. Col. Michael Fisher.

Carpenter addressed the soldiers, alerting them to the importance and the challenges of their new assignment.

In addition to the graduation, the 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division was activated officially as a unit.

Contract awarded for funding of peer review of military doctors

MACH

The Defense Department announced on January 30 that a $4.6 million contract has been awarded to the Commission on Professional and Hospital Activities to organize and administer the Peer Review Process.

The Civilian Peer Review Process to monitor the quality of medical treatment provided to the Army's 778,000 soldiers, their families and retired service men and women has the full support of Major General Floyd W. Baker, the Commander of the Army's Health Services Command. "This gives us an opportunity to prove that Army medicine is top notch and that our physicians and supporting personnel are performing outstanding service to the nation," Baker said.

Colonel John C. Richards, Commaner of Martin Army Community Hospital at Fort Benning, predicts that the process will confirm that the quality of care in Army medical treatment facilities equals or surpasses that of the overall health care system in the civilian community. Martin Army Community Hospital is staffed by 105 physicians, 96 active duty nurses and supplemented by 69 professional civilian employees. The hospital contains 350 operational beds and annually provides inpatient medical and surgical care to over 11,300 beneficiaries. An additional 2,000 patients are treated daily in clinics and other outpatient facilities. (MACH PAO)

King said that by using the MILES equipment, the soldiers can determine how well they've maneuvered because a beeper sounds when the soldier makes an error.

According to King, by going through the training with the new soldiers, the instructors are helping their own careers.

"When the instructors move on to other units, they will be better squad leaders because of this training," King said.

Lancaster gets ARCOM for saving life of soldier

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

1st Lt. Fredrich Lancaster was awarded the Army Commendation Medal by Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba Feb.28, for saving the life of SP4 James Howard.

Lancaster's unit, the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, was training at Brown Demolition Range on mines.

"SP4 Howard was behind a 12-foot high berm in the prone position. He detonated a mine and shrapnel from the detonation blew back and over the berm.

A piece of the shrapnel caught Howard in the carotid artery in his neck. Blood was squirting everywhere. I was the first one on the scene and I immediately applied direct pressure. Using a field dressing, I finally got the bleeding to stop. It was just a freak accident," said Lancaster.

The wound began bleeding again and Lancaster and soldiers present stopped the flow of blood a second time. A MEDEVAC helicopter had been promptly called and arrived on the scene to take Howard safely to Martin Army Community Hospital.

Medical personnel at the hospital said Howard was lucky to be alive.

"Lancaster definitely saved his life. Howard could have bled to death in a matter of a few moments," said a Martin Army Hospital corpsman.

Lancaster, a platoon leader in Bravo Company, has been at Fort Benning for 18 months. Howard is assigned to Delta Company.

Sexual harassment hurts; has no role in workplace

By Capt. Ronald West
Leadership Instructor Leadership Branch

Sexual harassment, as defined by AR 600-21 (Change 3), 1 Jan 84, is advances, requests for favors, and other sexually related verbal or physical conducted when —

a. Submission to such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a condition of a person's job, pay, or career status.

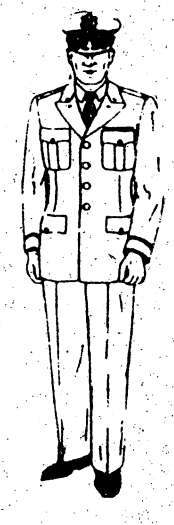
b. Submission to or rejection of such conduct by a person is used as a basis for career or employment decisions affecting this person.

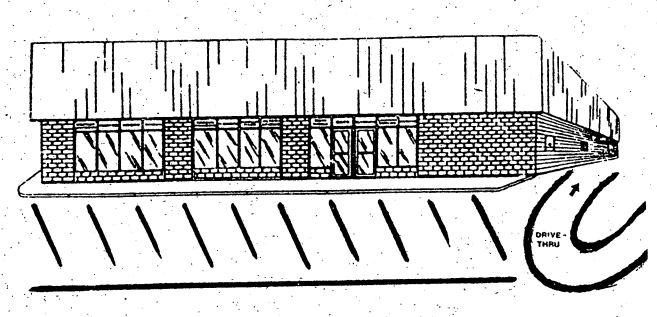
c. Such conduct interferes with a person's performance of duty or otherwise creates an intimidating, hostile, or offensive environment.

Sexual harassment is a violation by either sex. Simply put, it is an unwelcomed sexually related, obscene or suggestive act. The offender communicates the violation via language, gestures, coercion, humiliation, embarrassment, or physical contact. Some examples of sexual harassment are verbal or physical abuse, improper sexual contact, indecent acts.

Who does the recipient report sexual harassment to? The chain of command, Inspector General, the Chaplain, Equal Opportunity Officer, or Staff Judge Advocate. Is sexual harassment punishable? It sure is. Various offenses are punishable under Uniform Code of Military Justice. Some examples are: Attempted rape, sodomy or adultery (Art. 80); cruelty or maltreatment (Art. 93); sodomy (Art. 125); and extortion.

To minimize the effects of sexual harassment, the chain of command must develop a good program that educates the soldier, allows the offended to receive just support, and punishes the offender by just and consistent standards.





Further information concerning sexual harassment can be obtained by reading AR 600-21 and by contacting the chain of command, IG, Chaplain, EO Officer, and the SJA.

In conclusion, it should be noted that sexual harassment cannot be tolerated. Educate your soldiers thoroughly in this sensitive area, and above all, it is the duty and responsibility of all soldiers to enforce the standards, and report any violations concerning sexual harassment.

Civilians move to the beat in station's aerobics classes

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Civilians at the Reception Station in Sand Hill are learning first hand the truth in the motto, "No pain, no gain."

Since November, civilian workers have joined their military coworkers for aerobics classes. The free classes meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 5:15 to 6:15 p.m.

Led by Capt. Linda Hampston, participants do aerobic dance steps to popular music, while working out. Hampston, S-1 of the Reception Station, said she organized the classes because she enjoyed aerobics but didn't like working out alone.

"It started out being mostly military people who worked out as remedial P T," she said. "Gradually the civilians started coming too."

Sessions are held in the station's auditorium, which makes it convenient for people to participate. Hampston said people bring in the kind of music they like and she adapts the aerobics routines to fit the different beats.

An average workout starts with a warm up, followed by work on the arms. Twenty five minutes of aerobics comes next, then work on abdominals and legs, ending with a cool down.

"It is hard, fast paced aerobics most days, but if they don't feel good, sometimes I'll slow it down a little," Hampston said.

The sessions average 18 to 20 people, with four to six men. Hampton said participants range in age from 25 to 40, and all share an interest in getting into and staying in shape. "Some women want to fix problem areas, such as their legs or stomach, while some want to lose weight. Others just like to keep in shape," she said.

But no matter what kind of shape you think you're in, you don't really know until you go through a good workout, Hampston said.

"A lot of the ladies think I don't get tired, but I get tired just like everybody else," she said. "The thing is, I have to go on because I'm leading the group."

Hampston is now in the process of training class members to lead the sessions, so the classes can go on even if she is unable to be there.

Vanessa Francis, a civilian employee in the Clothing Initial Issue Point at the station, said she could tell a difference right away. "It was very, very painful."

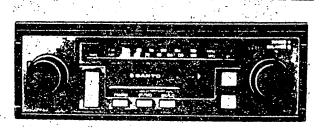
Francis, along with co-worker Mozella Montoute, was in pretty good shape when she began the classes because the pair regularly worked out at the gym and lifted weights. But aerobics added a whole new dimension to their exercise program.

"You could tell the difference, because once the pain stopped, you knew you'd accomplished something," Montoute said. She's always been interested in exercising, she said, to keep in shape and build her endurance.

"Aerobics keeps your heart pounding, so you won't have a heart attack," she said.

Montoute said another reason she likes the classes is because of Hampston. "It's fun, because Capt. Hampston makes up little steps and it's like dancing," she said.

Exercising together also adds to the espirit de corps of workers at the Reception Station. "It's kind of like a social function that everybody shares," Francis explained. "It makes people know each other better and is a topic of conversation.



"One thing's for sure; you're gonna get up there and sweat and you won't be able to hang in there for the whole routine," she said.

Gwen Williams, also a CIIP civilian, said the exercising has really made a difference for her. Because her job entails sitting at a sewing machine all day, her legs used to cramp a lot. "Now I don't get cramps like I used to," she said.

VA disability checks are bigger

A 3.1 percent cost-of-living increase in Veterans Administration compensation benefits for service-connected disabilities will be reflected in checks issued March 1, the Veterans Administration has announced.

The rate boost, effected Dec. 1, 1985, was signed into law by President Reagan on January 13.

VA Administrator Harry N. Walters said the checks will include retroactive amounts due for the months of December and January.

More than 2.2 million veterans currently receive compensation totaling more than $8.2 billion a year. The rate adjustment means an increase from $1,295 to $1,335 per month for a veteran with a disability rated at 100 percent. Veterans with a 50 percent disability will receive $388 a month, up from $376, and those with a 10 percent rating will get $68 a month, up from $66.

The legislation also increases to $360 the annual allowance payable in August to certain veterans whose artificial limbs or wheelchairs cause wear on their clothing.

In addition, the law provides a 3.1 percent increase in dependency and indemnity compensation (DIC) rates for surviving spouses and children of veterans who died in service or of service-connected causes. (VA)

plays there. Then he found out about auditions at the Springer and tried out for several parts," she said. "He didn't make it at first, but he kept trying until he got a part."

Youngest son Eddie is also interested in acting. "He kind of slipped in on it," Mrs. Burke said. "When we took Sean to audition, Eddie asked if he could try out also. He ended up getting a better part than Sean."

The nine-year-old has earned straight A's since kindergarten and is an avid reader. He is active in Cub Scout Pack 127 and has completed all the requirements for advancement to WEBLO. He is the second Cub Scout to have earned the God and Country Medal during the last two years on post. He too enjoys football and was selected to play on his age group's YA All-Star Super Bowl team.

Burke said the whole family is involved in assigned decisions, but surprisingly, the boys don't have that many requirements.

"The main thing with the boys is that they want to live on a military post, because they really enjoy living in a military community," he said.

Wherever they go, they go as a family and support each individual. Both parents feel that their physical presence is an important way to let their sons know they support them, which explains why they can be seen at football and soccer fields, theaters, schools, anywhere their sons are.

Mrs. Burke said that while they enjoy going to these activities, it's really a necessity. "The only time we ever missed one of Kevin's football games (due to a battalion function), we came home and found he'd broken his leg," she said.

Environment shapes and influences lives in positive ways

Chaplain Craig Allen
2nd MASH

Reflections

The importance of environment in shaping one's life can not be overstressed.

Recent decades have produced volumes of psychological case studies on the subject. However, the concept is not new. Indeed the Bible provides us with many examples. God tells Abraham to "separate" himself from his land and his kindred at least partially for environmental reasons.

Several centuries later the "mixed multitude" that accompanied the Jews out of Egypt as well as the bondage experience itself are seen in Midrashic commentary as being responsible for the sin of the Golden Calf.

Indeed, one such commentary beautifully depicts Moses arguing on behalf of the Jewish people. Moses accuses God of being like the father who sets his son up in business in a "red light" district and then acts surprised when his son takes up with the wrong crowd.

The Midrash then returns to the text (Exodus 32:14) to show us that Moses' "enviromental" argument was apparently effective enough to dissuade God's anger: "And God repented from the evil which He said He would do unto His people."

It is indeed timely that this Bible passage (Exodus 32 ff) with its emphasis on environment, is being read in synogogues throughout the country, for this week also marks the commemoration of an institution that has markedly affected our national life: the Girl Scouts of America.

Organizations such as this have a two-fold positive function in our time. Not only do they provide a good environment for our children, but through the values they expose, they positively influence our collective environment. In an age of uncertainty, the Girl Scouts represent something tangible and hopeful for us all.

Program helps divorcees adjust to singles lifestyle

The Pastoral Institute will sponsor a program for divorced persons Thursday at the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Center from 7 to 8:30 p.m.

Reverend Douglas C. Turley, director of the institute, will lead a discussion on "Who am I; what do I want; and what am I willing to pay for it." The cost is $3 including refreshments.

For more information, call Rosalyn Holmes at 568-2317.

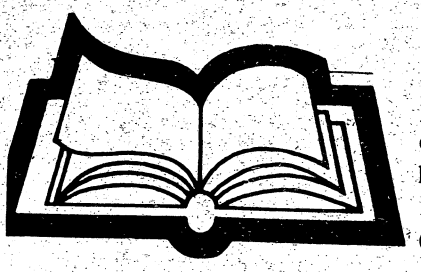
Conference theme is 'hooked on marriage'

The Georgia Association of Couples for Marriage Enrichment's state conference is today and tomorrow at the Columbus Iron Works and Convention Center. The theme of the conference is "Hooked on Marriage" and a variety of workshops will be offered.

For more information, call Miranda Jones at 324-2488.

PWOC lecture-slide series features Shroud of Turin

The Shroud of Turin will be the topic of a lecture and slide presentation March 28 at the Infantry Center Chapel. Lecturer-researcher Russell Breault will speak on the Shroud, which is reputed to be the burial cloth of Christ, at 7 p.m. Free babysitting will be provided.



'Sermons From Science' come to post April 24-27

The Moody Institute of Science has scheduled a presentation of four Sermons from Science at Fort Benning April 24-27 1986. The place and time will be announced at a later date. The four demonstrations will include: light and color, including laser; resonance; testing the senses vs the laws of nature; and recording devices.

These demonstrations have been presented to standing room only crowds at the World's Fairs in Seattle, New York, Montreal, and Spokane.

Van Stone is guest speaker at potluck luncheon April 2

Dorie Van Stone, author of "The Girl That Nobody Loved" will speak at a potluck luncheon April 2 sponsored by the Protestant Women of the Chapel. Van Stone's presentation will begin at 9 a.m. in the main post chapel annex. Free babysitting will be provided, but bring each child a sack lunch. Call Ms. Larabel at 689-4185 for more information.

Special Bible study groups further spiritual education

In addition to the Precept Bible study classes the Protestant Women of the Chapel offer, the group also sponsors three options to the program.

First, a beginner's Bible study class is taught by Nancy McKenzie. Secondly, a study class meets and discusses the book, "The Spirit-Controlled Woman" by Beverly La Haye. The mothers of pre-schoolers program offers a third option which consists of Bible-related studies, crafts, fellowship and fun, centered around the idea that sometimes moms need a morning out.

The classes meet at the Religious Education Center every Monday at 9 a.m. and are open to everyone. Free babysitting is provided.

Contemporary music featured at upcoming gospel concert

Bobby Michaels will present a Concert of Contemporary Gospel Music at The Infantry Center Chapel tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. The community is invited to attend.

A professional singer, Michaels has sung and ministered to more than 250,000 U.S. military personnel and family members in Europe.

Michaels will also be singing for soldiers at the Reception Station, 1ITB, 2ITB, and 36th Eng. Gp, and will make presentations to soldiers in the Army Training Center and for chapel congregations on main post.

For more information, call the Chaplain's Office at 545-2288.

Dial-A-Prayer "re-called" because few called number

The Fort Benning Dial-A-Prayer service is no longer available. The Foundation for Christian Living has provided this service, free of charge, to the Fort Benning Community for the past few years.

Unfortunately, the use of the service did not justify the continuation of Dial-A-Prayer, and the Foundation determined that it was necessary to "re-call" the equipment.

Our apologies to those of you who used the service and received a spiritual lift from Dr. Norman Vincent Peale. We also wish to express our gratitude to the Foundation for Christian Living for permitting us to use the service in the past.

See what's new at Busch Gardens

Ask what's new at the zoo at Tampa's Busch Gardens, The Dark Continent, and you're likely to learn it's a diapered baby chimpanzee, a new brood of baby alligators or a rare Lear's macaw hatchling.

The park is currently undergoing a zoological renovation, creating dramatic new exhibits for Busch Gardens' elephants, camels, Chilean flamingos, Nile crocodiles and a variety of other animals. The renovation project is scheduled for completion in the spring of 1986.

Busch Gardens is located on 3000 Busch Boulevard, in Tampa, Fla., eight miles northeast of downtown, two miles east of Interstate 275 and two miles west of Interstate 75.

A single admission price of $15.50 includes all rides, shows and attractions. Children two years and under get in free. The gardens are open from 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily except summer and selected holidays when hours are extended.

For more information, call Susan Size or Teresa Ingram at 314-982-1700.

Master's competition May 23-25 at Gardens

The world's finest skiers will compete in the Master's Water Ski Tournament May 23-25 at Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, Ga.

Skiers will compete for $50,000 in prize money in men's and women's tricks, slalom and jumping categories. In addition, a "freestyle" category has been added to the competition.

Master's weekend begins May 23 with a day of practice scheduled. The elimination round begins May 24, with freestyle practice highlighting the afteroon's activities. May 25 the freestyle qualifying round is set, followed by the three-event semi-finals. Freestyle finals will precede the finals in the tricks, slalom and jumping events.

Scoping in

Pvt. Jesse Poppen of C Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, zeroes the Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System on his M-60 machine gun, assisted by SFC Kenneth Lawton. MILES equipment provides for realistic combat training through the use of eye safe lasers. Transmitters mounted on weapons send the low-level beams down range when the weapon is fired. Soldiers wear laser detectors that emit a shrill beep when set off by a laser.

Scouting adds learning, fun

The world can be a pretty serious place for girls growing up today. That's why they need Girl Scouting more than ever — to help them experience the fun and joy of all that life has to offer.

Adults also need fun, and that's why so many of them give unselfishly of their time to work — and play — in Girl Scouting. Our community needs Girl Scouting. Let's join in wishing our Girl Scout frends the very best during Girl Scout Week, March 9 through 15.

Membership is open to girls ages 5 - 17 years (Kindergarten through grade 12) and interested adults who subscribe to its ideal as stated in the Girl Scout Promise and Law. Girls are placed in troops based on age, location and troop availability.

Both women and men are needed to fill a variety of volunteer positions: leaders, consultants, neighborhood administrators, board members, sponsors and more.

For more information contact: Fort Benning Girl Scout Assoc., P.O. Box 2235, Fort Benning, Ga. telephone 689-3326. (Girl Scouts)

598th team named basketball champ

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 598th Maintenance Company team maintained control of the courts last Friday, beating the A Co, 3/7th Red Team to grab the post championship.

The game ended nearly two weeks of play in the double elimination intramural basketball tournament.

Final score was 57-52, with the 598th scoring 9 points in the last few minutes of play due to fouls by Red Team players desperate to stop the hard-driving 598th players.

The 598th was in full control from the starting buzzer, maintaining a 6 to 8 point lead throughout the game.

Swing guard Stanley Brandon was top scorer for the 598th, dunking in 18 points. Calvin Deason, point guard, contributed 16 points towards the win.

Dennis Jordan dominated the boards, grabbing 12 rebounds. Dudley Harden was a last minute replacement for the 598th's star center Kenneth Brown, who was called away on a emergency leave the day before the final game in the tournament.

It was the second time the team had defeated the Red Team in tournament action.

Robert Sims, assistant coach for the 598th, said his players were up for the game. "They had plenty of practice time and our commander was very supportive of the team, which helped a great deal in our success this season," Sims said.

The 598th had a win-loss record of 26-1 for the season, which Sims attributed to the positive attitude of the players.

"Everybody enjoyed the games and worked together, but they never lost sight of the fact that it was all just for fun," he said.

Sims singled out Calvin Deason for special praise for his championship game performance.

"Deason had an outstanding game. He took advantage of the fast breaks and repeatedly looked for a chance to catch the Red Team off guard. This resulted in Deason's making several steals during the game," Sims said.

Steve Smith was coach of the 598th, but left Fort Benning for a permanent change of station this week.

Other members of the 598th team are: Byron Jackson, Leonard Wilson, Terry English, Gary Bonds, Wade McCod, Darryl Jackson and Bill Pinson.

Register now for Festival of Running

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Officer's Wives Club will host its 3rd Annual Festival of Running April 5.

Individuals can sign up for the 1-, 3- and 5-mile runs, while unit teams can compete in the unit 3- and 5-mile formation runs or the 30-mile relay. Relay teams will consist of six runners, each of whom will individually run the 5-mile course and hand off a baton to their team's next runner.

The festival begins at 7:55 a.m. and ends with the awards presentation at 1:15 p.m. Awards will be presented to the first, second and third place finishers in each age division for every race. T-shirts and certificates, as well as free beverages, will be presented to every participant in the festival.

All races will begin and end in front of Infantry Hall.

Pre-registration fees are $4 for runners under age 15; $5 for those 15 and older; and $36 per 6-man relay team.

Race numbers may be picked up at DYA Gym (across from the Infantry Museum) on April 4 from 6 to 8 p.m. or at the race site on the day of the race. The deadline for pre-registering is March 29.

Those registering late can do so April 4 from 6 to 8 p.m. at DYA Gym, or beginning at 7 a.m. and continuing until 15 minutes before race start time on race day. Late registration fees are $6 for runners under 15; $7 for those over 15; and $48 per team.

One of the more popular events last year was the unit formation runs, complete with distinctive uniforms and cadences. Unit commanders interested in signing up for formation runs should call Maj. Tom Green at 544-2843.

Race applications are available at the Sports Office in Doughboy Stadium, Martin Army Community Hospital, the OWC Office, the Officers and NCO Clubs, the DYA, Bryant Wells Gym, Infantry Hall, the Volunteer Resource Center and local running stores.

Those entering more than one race must submit separate applications for each race entered.

Last year over 2,825 runners participated in the festival, making it the fifth largest running event in the State of Georgia.

Age divisions are as follows:

1-mile run (male & female): 1-4, 5-6, 7-8, 9-10, 11-12, 13-14, 15-16.

3-mile run (male & female): 8 & under, 9-11, 12-14, 15-17, 18-24, 25-29, 30-34, 35-39, 40-44, 45-49, 50 and over.

5-mile run (male & female): 8 & over, 9-11, 12-14, 15-17, 18-24, 25-29, 30-34, 35-39, 40-44, 45-49, 50 & over.

1-mile Slogger Jogger: Females over 30 (finish times under 8:30 disqualified).

30-mile relay (enter only one division):

Elite division: All male, all female, mixed (3 each) — no age groups.

Military division: All male, all female, mixed (3 each) — no age groups.

Open division: All male, all female, mixed (3 each); 18 & under, 25 & under, 35 & under, 45 & under, 55 & under.

Registration Form

I hereby waive any and all claims for myself and my heirs against officials or sponsors of the 3rd Annual Festival of Running, Fort Benning, Ga., for injury and illness which may be directly or indirectly result from my participation. I hereby certify that I am in proper physical condition to participate in the run.

Winners will be notified March 17 and badges must be picked up not later than 5:00 p.m., April 1.

Fort Benning rugby team defeats Emory University

The Fort Benning Flyers rugby team travelled to Atlanta last Saturday and returned with a 20 to 7 victory over the Emory University Rugby Club. The match was highlighted by good hitting and strong team play from the Fort Benning side.

Team capatin Steve Gouthro provided all the punch the Flyers needed by scoring three tries early in the game. The first came as he took the ball to the weakside from a maul near the try line. Gouthro picked up the ball , hid it on his hip, and slipped it past the try line before the Emory defenders could react.

Emory fought back to gain the lead, scoring on a try and a penalty. Gouthro then took the ball from a set scrum and gave the Flyers a lead which they never relenquished. He rolled around the corner of the scrum and dove across the try line for an 8 to 7 Flyer lead. He completed the hat trick by taking the ball from another maul and diving through the Emory defenders for the score. Steve Tennant made the conversion to make the score 14 to 7 at the half.

Benning lost the "B" side match, 10 to 0.

The Flyers play their final home game of the season tomorrow at 2 p.m. at Stilwell Field, when they entertain the High Country RFC from Atlanta. (Flyers RFC)

Quality Basic Education Act aimed at improved schools

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The Quality Basic Education Act — commonly referred to as "QBE" — passed into law by the Georgia Legislature in the spring of 1985 and represents a significant move by the state to upgrade public school education in the state. As a result, QBE affects the Fort Benning Schools since the on-post schools are required to provide programs comparable to those provided children in selected Georgia schools.

The QBE changed the way Georgia schools are financed in order to provide additional funds to districts in need. This provision will have minimal effect on post schools since they arefederally funded.

However, QBE provides for a full-day kindergarten program, resulting in a longer school day for Fort Benning kindergarten teachers next year.

If funds are made available, there will be an increase in the number of remedial teachers to help Fort Benning children who are behind in their studies receive additional instruction to improve their skills.

The QBE also calls for additional teacher aides to assist Georgia teachers in the classroom, with Fort Benning Schools increasing teacher aide staffing.

A career ladder program for Georgia teachers was included in QBE as well and will be implemented in the Fort Benning Schools as the state develops the career ladder plan.

A final requirement of QBE which impacts Fort Benning teachers is the requirement that teachers pass written tests prior to re-certification.

Fort Benning Schools Superintendent, Dr. R.W. Baumgartner, views QBE as a very strong effort by the state. "If fully implemented, QBE will significantly improve the educational opportunities available to Georgia children," Baumgartner stated. "The program will be of great help to children if the legislature provides the implementing funds to Georgia Schools and DoD provides similar funding to our schools."

Faith students perform in musical variety show

By Libby Kurinec
Post schools

Fort Benning's Faith Middle School Performers presented a musical variety show for the Professional Association of Georgia Educators at the Sheraton Center Village in Atlanta, recently.

Sixth-grader Jenny George dynamically hosted and narrated the program which consisted of several songs from the musical, "Cabaret", and other popular tunes.

Solos were sung by George, Matt Davidson, Josh Romans, and Andy Nix.

Featured in the show was Roger King of Columbus who is currently serving as a practice teacher under the group's director, Libbie Kurinec.

A representative of the Georgia Public Broadcasting System was on hand for the performance and is considering doing a feature program on the Performers.

The group's members include Andy Nix, Jenny George, Yamilette Flores, Dawn Scherbert, Melissa Bush, George Suarez, Joshua Romans, Christina Ashley, Natasha Matos, Nicole Dondelinger, Nicole Worley, Tarina Taylor, Beth Harsh, Tehea Fulkerson, Lisa Fortner, Shontay Deal, Pontress Wilkins, Matt Davidson, Jason Longcor, Beth Wright, Stephanie Bass, Jolanda Nieto, Jennifer Strauser, and Erin Touw.

Spencer High School snares awards at UN program

By Emily Burba
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Spencer High School dominated the awards at the Columbus Area High School Model United Nations (CAHSMUN) held Feb. 19 through Feb. 22 at Columbus College.

The students involved in CAHSMUN went through two months of study and preparation and then 29 long hours of strenuous debate with other countries from different schools.

For the first time in CAHSMUN history, Spencer swiped the top two Major Power awards; the delegation of Japan recieved first place and Libya recieved second place.

In addition, Lebanon received second place for the Middle Powers and Thailand won an honorable mention for the small powers.

In the Security Council Daniel McNeil (Libya) won the best Guest Speaker award, and Marshall Rich (Thailand) received an honorable mention for Best Speaker.

In the Economic and Social Council Karl Douglas (Japan) received an honorable mention.

The Spencer students agreed and announced that the students success was greatly due to the aid and support of sponsors Linda Skinner and Mark Turner who teach Social Studies at Spencer.

Those involved in the competition from Spencer High were Paige Arthur, Emily Burba, Stan Maxwell, Rennee Dennis, Karl Douglas, Kate Rhodes and Anece Baxter representing Japan.

Kysa Cargile, Chris Ray, Ted Easten, Dan Bon, Mary Mace, Dan McNeil, Lisa Harris and Amanda Walker represented Libya.

Doug Mitchell, Kelly Cargile, Shane Johnson, David Tonagan, Frank Braski, Lucky Caswell, Nilda Davis, Fay Dorsey and Michael Wells represented Lebanon.

Representing Thailand was Marshall Rich, Beth Mace, Daniel Cook, Royal Brown, Dana Brown, David Bon, Roy Zinser, Tammy Blackman, Wanda Matilla, Kristen Wade, and Tammara Farris.

Representing Zimbabwe were Nancy Patrick, Jay Nelson, Candy Bar Machine, Lupe McMoore, Kristin Helgeson and Craig Jones.

Lon Sharff, Scott Napier, Marcia Woods and Carmita Meyers represented Mexico.

THE END OF AN ERA

CJ7

AMC has decided to change the CJ7 to a more conventional style automobile. They are going to make the CJ7 Replacement 5 inches lower and 4 inches wider, and increase the price by $1500. With factory approval we purchased over 100 CJ7's for the last day of production ordering which ended Nov. 26, 1985. There are only 14 left. When these 14 CJ7's are sold there will never be any more. The Resale Value May Sky Rocket.

Army's 700 Blackhawk helicopters grounded

Rucker soldiers killed in crash

Fort Benning's six UH-60 Blackhawks have been grounded in an Armywide move following a crash near Fort Rucker, Ala. Tuesday in which three soldiers died.

About 700 Blackhawks throughout the Army were affected by the grounding, which is a temporary, precautionary measure, according to Maj. Phil Soucy, a Department of the Army spokesman.

It is unknown at this time if the cause of this week's accident is similiar to the two that caused the grounding of the Blackhawk in April 1985.

Investigators determined one of those crashes, on April 18, 1985 at Fort Rucker, was caused by the failire of the main rotor blade spindle. Following that discovery, repairs were made to the entire fleet.

The other crash, which occured at Fort Bragg, N.C., was determined to have been caused by a problem peculiar to that one helicopter, involving a missing bolt in the flight-control assembly.

That grounding was lifted and the Blackhawks returned to the sky in June 1985.

The soldiers who died in the crash two miles southwest of Elba, Ala. were identified by a Fort Rucker spokesman as CWO Jerry L. Brown, 30, of La Follette, Tenn.; WO Stanley E. Harris, 26, of Kannapolis, N.C.; and WO Gary M. Reynolds. 30, of Centerville, Ohio. They were all assigned to the 9th Training Battlaion at Rucker's Lowe Army Airfield.

Approximately 70 AH-64 Apache helicopters were also grounded as the result of a separate incident at Fort Rucker this week.

According to Lt. Col. David Burpee, another DA spokesman, the Apache grounding will be lifted as each aircraft is inspected. (USAIC PAO)

Post wins excellence in contracting award

Fort Benning, Ga., is the first installation to win the Training and Doctrine Command's Barbara L. Jones Memorial Award for Excellence in Contracting.

Donald E. Goodroe, Fort Benning director of contracting, accepted the award from Maj. Gen. Carl H. McNair Jr., TRADOC chief of staff, at the TRADOC Acquisition Conference in Hampton, Va., on Feb. 13. The annual conference is sponsored by TRADOC's Office of the Principal Assistant Responsible for Contracting.

OPARC determined the award winner by compiling monthly performance statistics from each of TRADOC's 21 contracting activities, according to Lt. Col. Jeffrey Boucher, PARC. It then rated the activities in 20 criterion areas, with monthly ratings adding up to a possible yearly total of 120 points. all activities have a good chance at the new award, since no installation can win two years in a row, Boucher said.

Fort Benning received an overall rating of 108 points, with strongest scores in customer service, contract preparation and overall management. Honorable mentions went to the contracting directorates at Forts Knox, Ky., Rucker, Ala., Dix, N.J., and to the TRADOC Contracting Activity East, Fort Eustis, Va. Boucher said only three points separated the top five installations.

The new contracting award posthumously honors Barbara L. Jones, who served as PARC from 1982 through 1984, Boucher said. Jones died in April 1985.

Boucher said Jones conceived the idea for the contracting award out of a strong belief that installation contracting offices deserved formal recognition for their accomplishments.

"Before the changes she initiated, people at the installations felt as if they were isolated on little islands. Mrs. Jones aimed at creating a genuine contracting system," Boucher said.

Jones was responsible for bringing each contracting office under the installation chief of staff as a directorate. She also added more than 100 personnel

Benning schools: post and county chase rumors

Fort Benning

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Write your congressman, ask your parents to write their congressman, tell Aunt Bessie and Uncle Jed to write their congressman," Bob Cairns said.

Cairns and seven other parents and school board members make up the special committee appointed by the Fort Benning School Board to investigate the affect of turning post school administration over to the local counties.

Congress ordered the Department of Defense to prepare a plan for turnover of military schools to state and local control no later than 1990. The purpose of such a move is to get the federal government out of the education business and return it to the local level.

Fort Benning schools are currently funded directly by the federal government, while local schools are funded by a combination of state, local and federal impact funds. One objective of the turnover is to save the federal government money, part of deficit reduction budget cuts.

The Fort Benning committee recently released the results of its investigation, which looks at several key issues in the turnover.

• Cost: While Muscogee County has an adequate tax base to absorb an additional 1,100 students in its 30,000-member student body, Chattahoochee County doesn't even come close. Adding 2,200 students to its present student body of 325, even with federal and state funds, would severely strain the taxpayers there.

"Property taxes pay for education, and there are only 815 taxable parcels of land in Chattahoochee County," said Tandy Shields, a committee member who investigated the county's tax situation. "And even if property taxes were raised as high as the law will allow, they would only raise $260,000, far short of what it takes to educate these children," she said.

Fort Benning's school budget this year is approximately $8.5 million, which is less than school officials requested due to federal budget cuts.

Fort Benning spends about $2,650 to educate each child in the system, about the

Muscogee County

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Dr. Braxton Nail has been the superintendant of Muscogee County schools for 13 years. There are 30,000 children in Muscogee County schools. If Fort Benning schools are merged with Nail's schools, about 1,000 Benning students would be involved, with the other 2,000 students going to Chattahoochee County. Nail has definite feelings about the possibility of having to absorb military school children into the Muscogee County education system.

"My position is that turning over schools on Fort Benning in Muscogee County to our jurisdiction would not be in the best interests of the parents involved or the children. We have to keep the morale of our fighting forces high. People are concerned about schools for their children. Department of Defense schools operate pretty much the same across the country. When military people move they know what kind of schools their children will be going into at their next post. This adds some consistency to their childrens education and happy children make happy parents," Nail said.

"How do you measure the feelings a parent has that things are okay as far as their childrens education goes? I don't think the money saved by the government if this transfer takes place is worth it," said Nail.

"If this transfer comes about, I will do everything possible to quell the fears parents may have concerning their childrens education. Those children will also get the best education possible," he said.

The school superintendent sees no real problems in the quality of education, as he feels Muscogee County schools and Benning schools each strive for the highest possible standards in education.

Funding for the additional students would bring on a whole new set of problems, according to Nail.

"No one has talked to us about additional funds. The government says military bases pump money into the local economy through direct sales. From these sales the state derives income in the form of sales tax. However, our schools are funded through property taxes. Military living on Fort Benning pay no property taxes, yet their children might be attending our county schools. Who picks up the tab? If our schools got a percentage of local sales tax, then the government's postion would be correct, but as things now stand we derive no monies from sales tax.

• See MUSCOGEE, page 6

Chattahoochee County

By Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If mandated and enacted by Congress, Fort Benning schools would pass to the control of Chattahoochee and Muscogee County school systems.

Specifically, all Benning children attending Wilbur, Loyd and McBride schools would come under the jurisdiction of Muscogee County. Those children in Patch, White, Wilson, Dexter and Faith schools would be transferred to the Chattahoochee County school system.

Ronnie Burgamy is a soft spoken, affable man, given to careful thinking before speaking. He is the superintendent of the Chattahoochee County school system, a veteran teacher and principal with over 15 years invested in education. If Benning schools were consolidated with local school systems, Burgamy would be instrumental in the education of over 2,000 Fort Benning school children.

"First of all, I don't think the transfer of Fort Benning schools to Chattahoochee and Muscogee counties will ever occur. But if it does, if it's mandated, I say to the people of Fort Benning, all decisions and options will be discussed. Any and all decisions will be made with the best interests of the children in mind, first and foremost," Burgamy said.

The superintendent said consolidation of DoD schools with local school systems has come up many times before but that the present situation holds a lot of unknowns.

"I want to emphasize at this point that we're all just chasing rumors when addressing this situation. Nothing has been decided and we don't have all of the facts. Before you have all of the facts you can't make an honest assessment of the situation," Burgamy said.

Hypothetically speaking, however, Burgamy brought up potential problems that he foresees if the transfer takes place.

"Eighty percent of Chattahoochee County is taken up by the Fort Benning military reservation. Left with just 20 percent of the county, our tax base is not sufficient to pay for the education of an additional 2,000 students. We've got the facilities for our 330 total students but we certainly have no room for 2,000 more students. The money and the facilities are just not here. If the transfer took place, Fort Benning students would have to continue using their present facilities and federal funding would have to accompany the transfer," he said.

Drill sergeant convicted for cheating trainees

PMO

The courtroom at Building 5 was the scene of a four-day general court-martial last week that vividly illustrated the important role played by Infantry drill sergeants and the high degree of trust to which drill sergeants are held accountable.

Staff Sergeant Frank B. Dixon, Company D, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, Army Training Center, was tried and convicted by a general court-martial on Feb. 28, 1986 of 17 separate crimes committed against trainees between May 1984 and November 1985. Evidence presented by Capt. Kurt Meckstroth, ATC prosecutor, disclosed Dixon came to Fort Benning in January 1984 in the midst of a bankruptcy proceeding in Washington. Dixon completed Drill Sergeant School at Fort Benning and started his first training cycle in April 1984. Meckstroth presented testimony and documentary evidence that Dixon purchased a motorcycle in May 1984 for $1,100. The check for $1,100 written by Dixon bounced and he solicited money from his first cycle of trainees to cover the check. Meckstroth presented a check to the court written by a trainee in Dixon's platoon that bore Dixon's endorsement on the back.

Meckstroth showed that during the next training cycle, which began in July 1984, Dixon came up with an ingenious scam for bilking trainees out of their money. Dixon, who is a licensed minister, solicited money from his trainees to buy land upon which to build a church. Dixon told the trainees the bricks used to build the church would have each donor's name imbedded in the brick. One trainee testified he gave Dixon $400 of his enlistment bonus to go towards this non-existent church. Other trainees testified Dixon collected money from them on other occasions for transportation to a Columbus church that never materialized.

During the training cycle that started in March 1985, Dixon borrowed $3,000 from one of his trainees that he used as a down payment on an automobile. Later during this same training cycle, Dixon borrowed $500 from four other trainees in the platoon. None of the trainees got their money back from Dixon.

In October 1985, Dixon told his trainee platoon guide that two members of the platoon had their paychecks stolen and that it was up to the platoon to collect money to cover their losses. More than $400 was collected and given to Dixon, which he pocketed. Meckstroth presented testimony that no money was stolen and that Dixon directed two trainees to lie to their fellow trainees and claim their paychecks were stolen. One of the trainees complained about this scam that led to the investigation and court-martial.

This same cycle of trainees was subjected to two other Dixon scams. On the night the soldiers reported to Co. D, Dixon conducted a safe-call. He collected a total of $672 from 22 different soldiers. Dixon gave the soldiers no receipts for their money and whenever the soldirs asked Dixon about their money, Dixon ordered them to drop for push-ups. Dixon was convicted of stealing the $672. About a week into this same training cycle, Dixon collected $340 from his platoon to purchase a set of weights. Evidence presented by Meckstroth showed Dixon paid only $150 for the weights and pocketed the remainder of the money. Testimony indicated Dixon had used the same eight schemes with other training cycles.

Meckstroth called more than 40 government witnesses from as far away as Korea and Panama to testify during the four-day trial. Dixon took the witness stand in his defense and denied any wrong doing and claimed all the government witnesses were lying.

In his closing argument to the jury, Meckstroth emphasized the special position of trust an infar try drill sergeant holds and hi responsibility and duty to insti in trainees the sense of pride integrity, and discipline that wi guide them throughout their ca reers. Meckstroth said that i order to accomplish their mi sions, drill sergeants are er trusted with almost complet control over the trainees as signed to their platoons. Meck stroth told the court to com pare Dixon's conduct with that c the other 99 percent of dri sergeants who are dedicated hard-working professionals working 18-hour days to train th best infantry in the world. Meck stroth urged the court to le Dixon know how costly it can b to abuse this special position o trust by stealing money fron trainees.

The jury, consisting of 3 offi cers and 3 noncommissioned offi cers, sentenced Dixon to be re duced to private (E-1), to forfei all pay and allowances, to be confined in Prison for 6 years and to be Dishonorably Dis charged from the Army.

Military police seek to calm combatants in domestic conflicts

One of the missions of the Military Police is the maintenance of discipline, law, and order within the command. To reestablish order and preserve the peace, Military Police are often required to intervene in domestic disturbances. The objective of the Military Police is to initiate action that will neutralize the problem.

The intervention of Military Police into a domestic disturbance often has a calming effect.

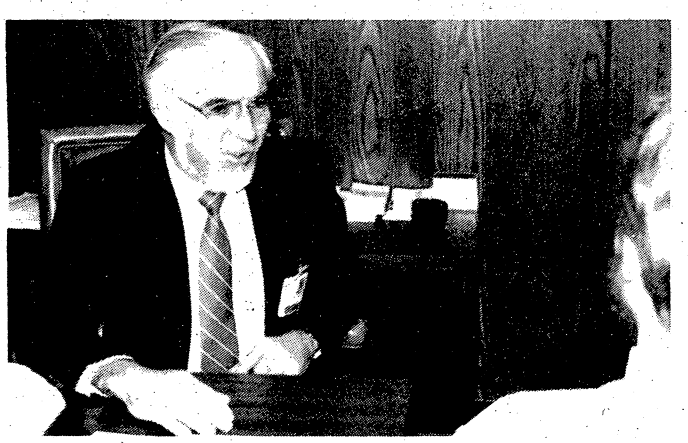
The President's Commission on the Cause and Prevention of Violence determined that many families in conflict actually desire an objective authority figure who will "do something that will settle things."

Domestic disturbances involve altercations, verbal or physical, between two or more members of the same family. Family conflicts are not unusual in themselves. However, given the right elements, these conflicts can often develop into uncontrollable and violent episodes.

It's this very unpredictability that makes a domestic disturbance one of the most dangerous offenses for both the people involved and the Military Police. Most homicide victims are killed by close relatives or friends. A large percentage of these deaths are the direct result of so-called domestic disturbances. Nationwide, domestics are one of the leading situational settings for deaths and injuries to police officers in the line of duty.

There are a number of factors which affect the incidence rate for domestic disturbances. These offenses, of course, are initiated when two or more family members have a difference of opinion.

The conflict may remain at a verbal level or escalate to violence. The Military Police are obligated to respond to either level when a complaint is made.



Although not scientifically validated, most police officers will assert that domestic incidents appear to increase when the weather becomes warmer. It is scientifically validated that, in the vast majority of domestic disputes, one or more of the parties is under the influence of

Separation tours add special stresses to military children

Separation hardship tours are an inevitable part of Army life. They can be extremely stressful for families and are perhaps hardest on children.

Children often feel deserted, lacking an understanding of why their mother or father has left. In spite of efforts to explain and compensate for the loss, trauma of separation can have lasting affects. Children are the neglected victims of deployments.

Several factors may influence the way children respond to parental absence. Their adaptation is largely determined by the way they perceive their parent's absence. This understanding is formed by parental response and preparation, plus teacher and peer input.

Children are handicapped by a faulty sense of time. A "year" is a block of time impossible for them to imagine. One father tried to make the time rame understandable to his children by explaining, "I'll miss everybody's birthday once and then I'll be home."

A child's age may be a key factor in how he or she is able to cope with a hardship separation. Infants and toddlers are unable to comprehend the meaning of the absence. Toddlers will frequently ask for the absent parent. The findings of a study of children of absent military parents indicate that parental absence during the critical years from birth to seven years hinders emotional development. Preschoolers (3-6) often suffer a strong fear of abandonment and quilt. School-age children (6-11) tend to hide their feelings. Adolescents (12-18) may act more mature and helpful; they may also rebel, acting out their feelings of deprivation through delinquency, promiscuity or school failure.

Where children live during separations can help or hinder their growth. The military community, filled with "service brats" who have likely experienced parental absences, is usually a supportive environment.

Parent-absent families should avoid relocating or changing schools. The stress of separation is compounded when the remaining spouse lives with his or her parents. The children end up being parented by both their remaining parent and their grandparents. This can be upsetting and confusing for children, particularly if philosophies of child-rearing are different. Some grandparents reluctantly agree to, yet resent, the arrangement. The children, hurting from the parent-loss, are thrust into a hostile environment.

An important factor which may shape a child's reaction to parental absence is the response of the remaining parent. According to a study of military families, the adjustment of the mother may be the most significant factor in the adjustment of the children. A child's response to separation may reflect the remaining parent's attitudes and tolerance. Negative feelings may be suppressed by the remaining parent, yet sensed an picked up by the children.

An "Army Times" article has suggested that many service wives may be silently encouraging their children to show their husbands how they feel about being left. Mothers may also withdraw from their children or hide their feelings, out of a sense of frustration and a feeling they have little to give their children. Their emotionally unsupported children are subtly denied permission to miss the absent parent.

Other factors influencing the adjustment of parent-absent children may include: the stability of the marriage; the adjustment of siblings; whether the remaining parent works (according to one study, working parents have fewer problems with their children than those who remain home. The extra income compensates in a quality of life way for the absence). (ARNEWS) alcohol.

The obvious question — "What is likely to happen if the Military Police respond to a complaint of a domestic disturbance at your quarters?" — is easily answered.

• Depending upon what took place, the sponsor and spouse may be charged with assault or aggravated assault, and must then contend with the consequences of those actions.

• The military sponsor may be subject to judicial and administrative sanctions as the result of acts committed during the course of the disturbance.

• Families involved in repeated domestic disturbances may lose the privilege of living in government quarters and be forced to move off post.

The entire theme of this article is that the "crime" is not worth the probable consequences. If you become involved in a family dispute, try to remain calm and rational. Talk things over with one another. If this doesn't work, professional counseling is available through your chaplain, ACS, and Social Work Services at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Armywide, March is Domestic Violence Prevention Month. Don't let your private home life become an official military police case!

positions TRADOC-wide, automated the system, and greatly emphasized professional development, said Sue Pena, OPARC supervisor of installation contracting and former policy chief under Jones.

TRADOC acquisitions, from paper clips to food service contracts, are "at the Army's leading edge," Boucher said.

"Even our small-money acquisitions can mean the difference between training and not training. TRADOC acquisitions have a greater, more immediate impact on the soldier than almost any others. That's why the work Mrs. Jones did to improvethe situation at the installation contracting office level is so important," he said.

"One big acquisition that goes sour may get all the publicity, while thousands of others that the activities handle beautifully are ignored. The activities have responded very positively to the idea that we're looking closely at what they do, because they're very proud of their work."

Boucher said there has been a tremendous increase in purchase volume since 1984. Last year alone, TRADOC activities handled 600,000 individual acquisition actions and obligated $1.2 billion in contracts.

"It's complicated to explain but it's well known in this business that when funding goes down, the actual number of inividual purchase actions goes up, resulting in a lot more work for the contracting activities," he said.

OPARC provides contracting authority, or warrants, for all TRADOC contracting activities, reviews and approves contracts over $1 million, and publishes the TRADOC supplement to the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

same amount spent per child by Muscogee County. Chattahoochee County currently spends about $2,500 per child.

• Quality: Fort Benning and Muscogee County schools are accredited by the State of Georgia and regionally by the Southern Association. Chattahoochee County schools are not accredited on a regional level, only by the State of Georgia. What this means is that because of its small size, the county doesn't have the funds required to provide the necessary courses that are required for accreditation.

• Curriculum: Fort Benning schools are set up to meet the special needs of military children. They have English as a second language classes to meet the needs of the students from other countries. Elementary counselors, programs for the gifted and talented, and school nurses are other elements of the Fort Benning schools that are in place to deal with the problems of a transient student body.

Neither Muscogee nor Chattahoochee County come close to what Fort Benning provides. Muscogee County has one nurse for the county, while Chattahoochee County has none. Muscogee County considers gifted and counseling services as "special resource" and provides limited personnel, while Chattahoochee County has nothing at all in this area.

Neither has the capabilities of providing the kind of English as a second language classes at the current levels.

There are no answers on several other issues raised by the possible turnover.

Teachers now employed at Fort Benning face losing their jobs, because the two counties involved cannot say at this point whether or not they would hire them.

If they were hired by the counties, Muscogee County officials said they would try to provide a comparable salary, while salaries in Chattahoochee County would be considerably smaller. Teacher retirement plans would be affected, as it would be up to the counties to decide what to do regarding length of service and benefits.

Post children could face busing to county schools, according the the report.

Muscogee County currently buses students to achieve racial integration. While Fort Benning schools are already integrated, students could face busing to the county for integration purposes.

Chattahoochee County officials strongly endorse the neighborhood school philosophy and say on post schools would be used, but not necessarily in the current arrangement. They say this decision lies with their school board.

Currently, Fort Benning has a school board that is elected by parents. Muscogee County's school board is appointed by a Grand Jury, and members must reside in the district for two years prior to the appointment and be available to serve a five year term.

Chattahoochee County has an elected school board and has indicated a willingness to increase the size of its board to include Fort Benning representatives. But officials cannot make a firm commitment on this issue.

The implications of the school turnover are frightening to parents like Ann Mace, Tandy Shields, and Bob and Terry Cairns, who were all members of the investigation committee.

"It will destroy the sense of community these children have," said Ann Mace, study group chairwoman. "Our teachers understand military children and the schools are used to working with students who arrive in the middle of the year."

Mace said she doesn't want to see the community split up. "Right now we are a close community, with many parents actively involved in the schools."

Should local property owners have to pay for the education of military children?

Busing and desegregation might also prove to be a problem.

"Kindergarten, first and second grades are exempt from busing. However, for the other grades I would have to petition the district court to get their response. The federal courts would have to tell us how Fort Benning children would fit into the overall desegregation plan."

Nail said in anything decided, giving Fort Benning children the best education possible was the bottom line.

School

According to Burgamy, Chattahoochee County spends approximately $2500 per student per school year. This figure encompasses federal, state and local funding. The state of Georgia would pay a little over half of this $2,500 figure for Fort Benning students if consolidation of the systems occured, just as the state does for all Georgia public school students. this translates into about $1,200 needed from the federal government per Fort Benning child to have them educated in Chattahoochee County.

"Our tax base simply could not absorb the extra costs," said Burgamy.

On the issue of busing, Burgamy unequivocally stated that his position would be to keep Fort Benning school children in their neighborhood schools.

"Can you imagine the logistical problems of trying to bus 2,000 children every day? Can you imagine the cost? Besides, my philosophy is to keep kids in their neighborhood schools," Burgamy said.

Blood Bank looking for people to 'make a deposit'

By Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

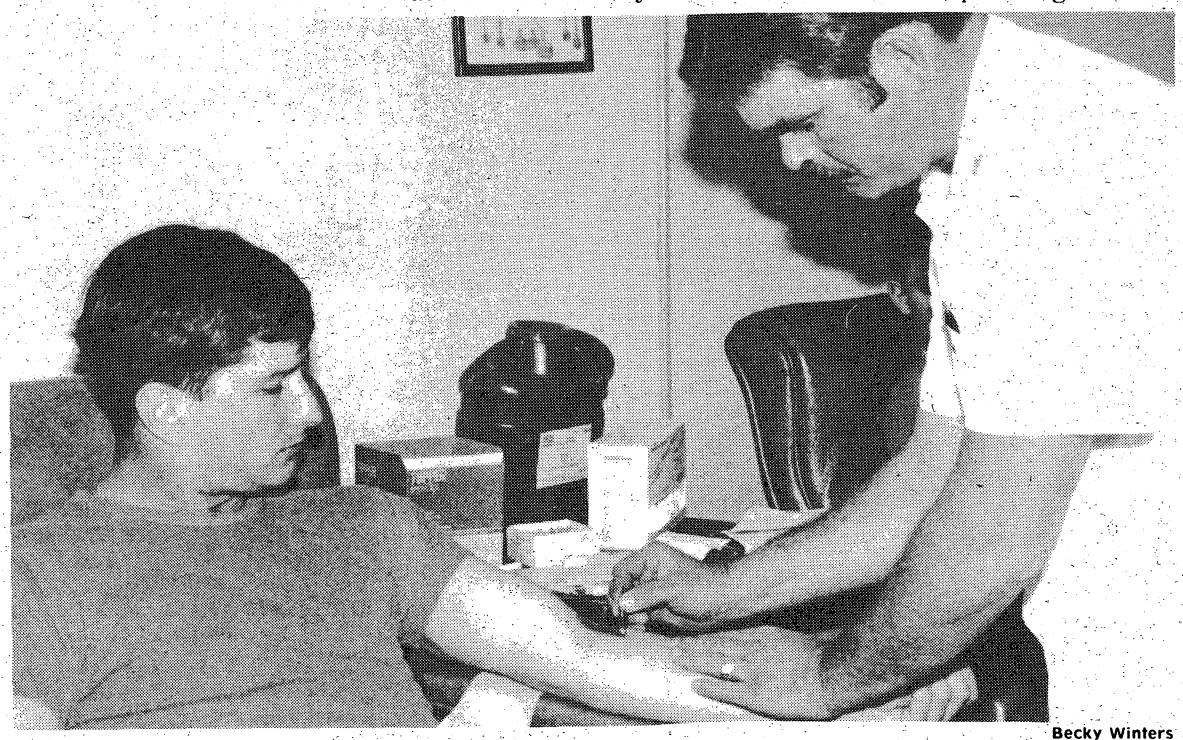
The Blood Bank at Martin Army Community Hospital wants a pint of your blood, and they're doing everything they can to get it.

"Since this is a training post, you never know when an accident might occur and we'd need blood," said SSgt. Phillip Bryan, noncommissioned officer in charge of the Blood Bank. "Our main objective is to supply the Fort Benning community."

The bank is setting up collection points in units on post every Wednesday to make donating easier for people. This month, the field unit will be at Building 4640, located on Hawkes Road across from the 29th Infantry Regiment's headquarters. They'll be at that location every Wednesday from 8:30 a.m. until noon.

Just about any healthy person can give blood. "It takes about 20 minutes of a person's time, from start to finish, to give blood," Bryan said. "And 90 percent of the blood donated to us goes to the military, their dependents and retirees."

MACH uses about 200 pints each month, providing blood for their patient population, which includes soldiers and retirees and their dependents. They also send blood to the Army Collection Point, which distributes it to facilities Armywide where a need exists.



The blood bank also sends blood to other military and local hospitals when they request it.

Bryan said there's always a need for type AB blood, both positive and negative. AB negative is the most rare blood type, followed by B negative and O negative.

But O negative is the only blood type that is considered universal because it can be given to anyone, regardless of their own blood type. This is vital in some accident cases that require immediate transfusions when there's no time to do a type check.

He said by giving just one pint, you could be helping as many as eight people. "Each unit of blood can be separated into eight components that can be utilized in

Blacks integral part of country's history

In the 1850s, Benjamin Bradley, a 16-year-old black slave hired out by his master to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, built a working model of a steam engine. He sold the model to a midshipman. Bradley used the money from this sale and from other savings to build a full-size steam engine that could drive a ship at a speed of 16 knots.

Just over 100 years later, 29-year-old Vernon W. Hawkins, a black design liaison officer for the General Dynamics Corporation's Electric Boat Division, watched the atomic submarine USS Nautilis — which he helped design and build — make history by crossing the North Pole under the polar icecap.

Despite prejudice, discrimination and other serious obstacles, blacks in the United States are responsible for pioneer work in open-heart surgery, advances in agricultural chemistry, the development of blood plasma and blood banks, and important cell biology research.

Many of these contributions, like that of Garret A. Morgan, a Kentucky-born black inventor, have added significantly to U.S. defense capabilities.

In 1916, Morgan used his "gas inhalator" to rescue workers trapped in a tunnel filled with smoke and toxic gases. Modified versions of Morgan's inhalator — later referred to as the "gas mask" — helped save the lives of thousands of servicemen subjected to poisonous gases during World War I and later conflicts.

Other contributions by black scientists have had far-reaching effects on the health of U.S. service members and the world population at large.

In the late 1930s, Dr. Charles Richard Drew, a black surgeon and teacher, organized blood banks for the American Red Cross and National Research Council. Drew stored plasma instead of whole blood in the banks, preserving it with a freeze-dry process he developed. Early during World War II, Drew was chosen unanimously by his fellow scientists to direct the Blood for Britain program.

Ironically, Drew resigned from the Red Cross when U.S. military officials insisted — and the Red Cross agreed — that blood being sent to U.S. soldiers fighting in World War II be separated according to the donor's race. This policy was abolished after the war.

Today, the DoD blood donor program, which collects some 200,000 pints of blood each year from service members and military dependents, is directed by Army Lt. Col. Anthony Polk, a black medical services officer.

Polk said he was the first black to be commissioned through his university's ROTC program, one of only three among the 1,000-some students in his office basic course, and one of the first blacks to be involved in the military blood bank field.

ACS has staff, knowledge to help you set up a budget

Becky Winters
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Anybody who has trouble controlling his money needs a budget," said Olan Brooks, consumer affairs coordinator at Army Community Service.

Brooks' office is in charge of budget counseling, and he has a staff of trained personnel who are ready to sit down with anyone and help them work out a financial plan.

According to Brooks, a family should be able to live on 70 percent of their income, pay creditors with 20 percent and save 10 percent.

Unfortunately, the majority of people his staff sees are those who have not budgeted their money wisely, and are in a financial crisis.
