Memorial Day service planned for Monday

Servicemembers who died in past wars will be remembered in a Memorial Day Service at the Main Post Cemetery here Monday at 9 a.m..

The non-denominational ceremony will be at the corner of Custer and Benning Roads, where a wreath will be placed on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

Because of limited parking facilities in the immediate area, people are asked to park along Terry Drive.

Safety, caution key holiday ingredients

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Memorial Day will be celebrated Monday. The recipe for disaster during the three-day weekend could include one tragic ingredient: you, according to the Safety Office, if you're not careful.

Safety Office spokesperson, Anita Langford, stressed that everyone should refrain from drinking and driving. Langford, however, touched on some other, less publicized potential situations where people are fatally injured if they aren't careful.

"I don't want to insult anyone's intelligence, but it's the seemingly simple, common sense things that get folks killed or seriously injured. During the upcoming Memorial Day weekend, people should be aware of water safety, bad weather, snakes and insects," said Langford.

Just as in driving a car, people shouldn't drink and then ride in or drive a boat. Langford said many people have drowned after drinking and then falling overboard in a boat.

Langford also said, "If you can't swim you shouldn't go near water.

"People should not try to engage in any type of water activity unless they can swim. Also, specifically, it is both dangerous and against regulations for anyone to try to swim across the Chattahoochee River. There have been several drownings when people have attempted this," Langford said.

"Also, everyone should be careful of the sun. Two soldiers were recently hospitalized with second-degree sunburns," she said.

Langford also mentioned the danger with snakes and insects.

"With the warm weather here, the snakes will be out. You have to watch for them and avoid them. We've also had several people put into the hospital because of spider bites.

"In 1985 the Safety Office had no reported fatalities or lost-time injuries during Memorial Day. If Fort Benning people will use common sense and caution 1986 can be accident and fatality free too," Langford said.

The Fort Benning Military Police Activity is encouraging leaders at the company level to inspect soldiers' privately owned vehicles before the soldiers leave for car trips during the long weekend.

"When inspecting, leaders should ensure that all lights on the vehicle work, that the brakes are in order, that the tires are in good shape and that the vehicle is, overall, sound. These leaders should also see that each soldier with a POV has a valid registration, driver's license and that the vehicle is properly insured," said Sgt. Mark Halverson, of the MP Traffic Section.

"We are not planning on putting on any extra patrols for Memorial Day weekend but there will be an awareness that there is a possibility for an increase in drivers who are drinking. If people will think before they drink and drive we shouldn't have any problems," said Halverson.

American freedom: some paid tab for others

You can't get anything for nothing; even Roberto's lunches have price

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Memorial Day, coming up Monday, conjures up images, for me, of a restaurant I used to frequent in Las Cruces, New Mexico, during my poorer college student days.

In those days I was on a balanced budget but not a balanced diet. I ate at the cheapest places I could find.

Four days a week I would walk across the campus of New Mexico State University to the 'city-side' of Las Cruces and have lunch at Roberto's Cafe Eleganza. Believe me, the name of the place had as much to do with good, 'elegant,' food as Richard Nixon does with truth. In both cases, never the twain shall meet.

I liked the place, though, because of Roberto Gonzales and his liberal way of handling the serving ladle.

He had come from San Luis Potosi, Mexico, in 1974 with literally nothing except a wife and three kids. The guy could only go up and brother, he did.

He, like the phoenix, rose from the ashes of his situation to become the owner of his own business. He and his wife had both worked at various restaurants around Las Cruces and El Paso, Texas and, by saving and scraping to put together enough money, leased an old, vacated cafe.

The rest was history, as far as hungry, penny- pinching undergraduates were concerned.

Roberto served enchiladas, tacos and chalupas, three on a plate. Along with one of these three entrees he would also serve up all the refried beans, Spanish rice, tortilla chips and salsa that you were capable of stuffing yourself with. Additionally, iced tea at Roberto's was served in a bottomless glass.

How could college students already on a Gramm-Rudman budget go wrong? We couldn't.

I was sitting in Roberto's one day, having a fourth helping of salsa and chips, when I noticed Roberto himself talking loudly to a cowed-down young man sitting at the counter. It seems the young man had eaten an enormous amount of food and washed it down with great torrents of tea and had then informed Roberto that he had no money to pay for his lunch.

Roberto looked at the young man and I could see that he, of all people, could not tolerate something such as this. Roberto had started with nothing and made something. This young man had stolen from him.

"Mister," I remember him saying, "my English ain't so good but let me tell you this: there ain't no free lunch. I worked for everything I have and you have stolen from me. There ain't no free lunch," and Roberto proceeded to throw the lunch thief out, muttering to himself, "Somebody always has to pay, there ain't no free lunch."

Going through the military cemetery last year at Fort Benning on Memorial Day reminded me of Roberto Gonzales and his words to that young man at the counter: "There ain't no free lunch."

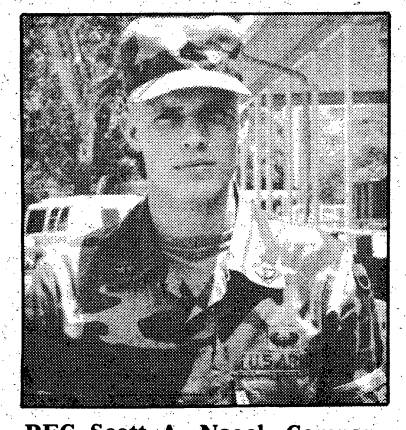
Long-dead soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines are silent witnesses to this statement.

Without becoming maudlin, let me indulge myself. When the spectre of World War I raised its ugly head, the aggressors had to be stopped. Stopping them cost the United States 130,174 men dead. World War II came along and, to pay the price of freedom, 292,131 were killed. Korea accounted for 33,629, Vietnam charged 47,244 and Grenada's right to freedom had a price tag of 19 killed in action.

My point? Just this: freedom, like Roberto Gonzales' beans, rice and tortilla chips, is not free.

The freedoms we enjoy in this country are not the result of complacently coexisting with totalatarian nations around the world. We have to "carry a big stick," as Teddy Roosevelt so aptly put it, to keep at bay those who would take from us our inalienable rights.

Our "big stick" is our ever-vigilant military, ready to go at a moments' notice.

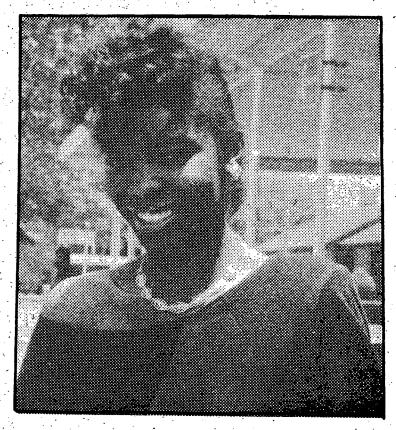


So, as you barbeque your ribs, drink your beer and sun yourself-Monday, Memorial Day, stop, just for a minute, and say a silent thanks to those men and women, forever laying in the ground, who paid the ultimate price so others could live free. And remember, "There ain't no free lunch."

Various voices

On this Memorial Day, what are your thoughts of the servicemen and women who have given their lives for our freedom?

Pvt. 2 Johnathan C. Jones, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry — "I think that those memorials are well deserved but overdue. It takes too long to raise a suitable monument to those who have died for our country. I would like to see greater tributes paid to these veterans."



PFC Scott A. Nagel, Company D, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry — "There are always too many people who complain about the duties of a soldier in a time of war. This is a good time for them to realize that these soldiers have given their lives so that we can continue to live ours."

Sgt. Staley R. Tichenor, 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry — "It is a tragedy anytime someone dies to defend our country, but it must be done that we may have a free country. I'm just thankful there were those willing to give their life for our freedom."

Sgt. Martin E. Mattern, 179th Military Intelligence Department — "Many people seem to forget too easily what freedom has really cost. Memorial Day is an excellent time to remember how our many comrades have died for our country and our freedom."

Andrea Jones, Family Member — "Actually, there is just one word for what I feel when thinking of the many veterans who've given their lives that we might live freely—sorrow."

Post CG wants safe holiday

Monday we honor the members of our armed services who gave their lives defending our country. Those who died in battle did not die in vain, but each Memorial Day holiday many of our fellow soldiers and citizens lose their lives in tragic accidents that could have been prevented.

Last year Fort Benning did not have a single accidental injury or fatality during the Memorial Day weekend. We can maintain this enviable record if all of us take some simple precautions. When you drive, drive defensively and wear seat belts. Don't try to drive too far and be sure to take time for rest stops. At your vacation spot, swim only in areas with lifeguards on duty and do not exceed your capabilities. While boating, wear your personal flotation device and obey all of the boating "rules of the road."

Enjoy your vacation and return safely after the holiday.

Edwin H. Burba Jr.
Major General, USA

Prevent accidents: be careful

Memorial Day encompasses two enduring American traditions. The day is of particular significance to all of us in the military community since this holiday honors those who died defending freedom. The day also marks the beginning of the vacation season for many Americans.

While I want to encourage everyone to celebrate this special day, I am concerned about having a safe holiday. The great increase in highway traffic and recreational activities always results in accidents and injuries. This needless annual waste of human resources is unacceptable.

We can and must make the upcoming holiday safer. To do that, all of us must recognize our personal responsibility for safety, not only to ourselves but to others. Defensive driving skills and safe swimming and boating procedures are particularly critical during this time.

To underscore our commitment to safety this Memorial Day, I want all commanders to brief their people on the safety hazards of the holiday and, more importantly, on safety practices to avoid accidents.

Let's make this a safe and enjoyable holiday throughout Training and Doctrine Command.

William R. Richardson
General, United States Army

Americans pay price for freedom

As we observe this Memorial Day, we are gratified that it is another peaceful Memorial Day in which we can give full honor to those who gave all they had to give in serving their nation.

From simple, modest grave sites in local cemeteries, to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington. Americans are united today in paying their respects, not only to our familiar military heroes, but to all of our now silent comrades, most of whom died far from home, defending our liberty and our freedom.

Each Memorial Day we recognize anew that freedom and justice have always exacted a very high price. We also know that Americans have always been willing to pay this price, and will continue to pay any price this imperfect world may demand of us to retain our freedom and the heritage handed down to us by those we honor today. We can never do any less.

Caspar Weinberger
Secretary of Defense

Memorial Day: time of painful memories

Each Memorial Day we pause to recall with love, with pride, and with gratitude those members of our armed forces who made the supreme sacrifice in preserving our liberty.

We Americans traditionally celebrate Memorial Day with picnics, parades and the opening of swimming pools and beaches. While we look forward to this day as the unofficial beginning of summer, we also know it is a time for painful memories — memories of the many courageous Americans in all our wars who fought and died so that we could live in peace and freedom in this blessed land.

Today we pay solemn tribute to our fallen heroes. We know that we can never give them as much as they gave us, but we and succeeding generations can see to it that they did not die in vain, by keeping the flame of freedom burning brightly. As we observe this Memorial Day, let us also remember that the best way to preserve our peace and to prevent future wars is to keep our armed forces strong and ready.

Ronald Reagan
Commander-in-chief

Army wife's reflections on past reveal good things about life

by Frances Moore
Bayonet Liaison

Memorial Day is observed throughout the United States to commemorate the members of the armed forces who gave their lives during the various wars the nation has been engaged in.

It began in 1868, becoming a legal holiday first in 1874 in Rhode Island, gradually encompassing most Northern states. It has now become a gala national holiday surpassed only by Independence Day.

On a long ago Memorial Day, as I sat in Edgewood Presbyterian Church watching the sunlight filter through abstract stained glass panes set in rich golden wood, blending with gold carpet and wooden pews, a very warm, peaceful feeling came over me.

The services began with the choir humming "America the Beautiful." As a serviceman's wife who has sailed from both shores of this great country to spend time in Japan and Europe, that song still brings a lump in my throat.

Then I start to remember.

I remember a young Navy pilot I had been married to very briefly who, at 21, lost his life in his plane. I remember his daughter born three months after his death.

When she was still a toddler, I met a Army lieutenant who fell in love with the two of us and married me.

I thought of a young Japanese girl, who was part of our household, whose husband had lost his life as a pilot. I remember the day I stood on a mountain top cemetery in Heidelberg Germany, looking at the rows of all the young Germans sleeping there, finding it hard to remember they had been our enemy.

I remember a trip to Holland and the young Dutchman we met there who guided us through the country and shared with us the loss of his entire family, shot in the town square during the final days of World War II.

I remember a gentle man we met in Heidelberg, a restaurant owner, who when sharing memories with my husband had been on one side of a mountain in Italy with the German army while my husband was on the other side with his American unit.

I thought of the German girl who worked for us who had lived in and escaped from East Berlin, giving up family and friends for freedom.

I remember driving through southern Germany, passing a sign directing us to Dachu, the concentration camp. Somehow we could not bear to stop.

I thought of this great land of ours, how much I have been privileged to see as an Army wife. How very beautiful it is, the freedom we take for granted, the way of life we enjoy, our schools, churches and the opportunities we pass on to our children.

The quiet dignity of Arlington cemetery came to mind. The Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, the military graves scattered throughout this country and in places all over the world.

I think of veterans who will proudly salute their flag, some on crutches, some in wheel chairs, but still very proud.

This Memorial Day will have an added touch of sadness, but also a sense of pride, as I remember a very special soldier who is now a deceased veteran...my husband of 40 years.

Two weeks ago on a sunny afternoon on a hilltop near the Veterans' monument at Parkhill, a very gallant, strong soldier in a flag-draped coffin, finished his last battle.

He gave 50 years of his life to government service.

As we pause to reflect and honor our dead, let us give thanks for all — young and old — who served their country with all they had. They have all given us a land of freedom, opportunity and a hope for the future.

New light thrown on 'Taps,' night song of soldiers

by Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

Memorial Day: A holiday originally observed as an occasion for decorating the graves of soldiers killed in the Civil War. But since World War I, Memorial Day has been a day to commemorate those who died in all wars.

This year, as in the past, those attending Memorial Day observances around the country will undoubtedly hear a lonely bugle sound "Taps." And even though no other bugle call is more recognizable to service people and other Americans, little is known about its origins.

Its composer, Civil War Union Gen. David Butterfield, said of "Taps," "It brings down the curtain on the soldier's day and upon the soldier's life."

It's not generally known, but there are words to "Taps:"

Fades the light;
And afar

Thousands on hand to enjoy Armed Forces Day activities

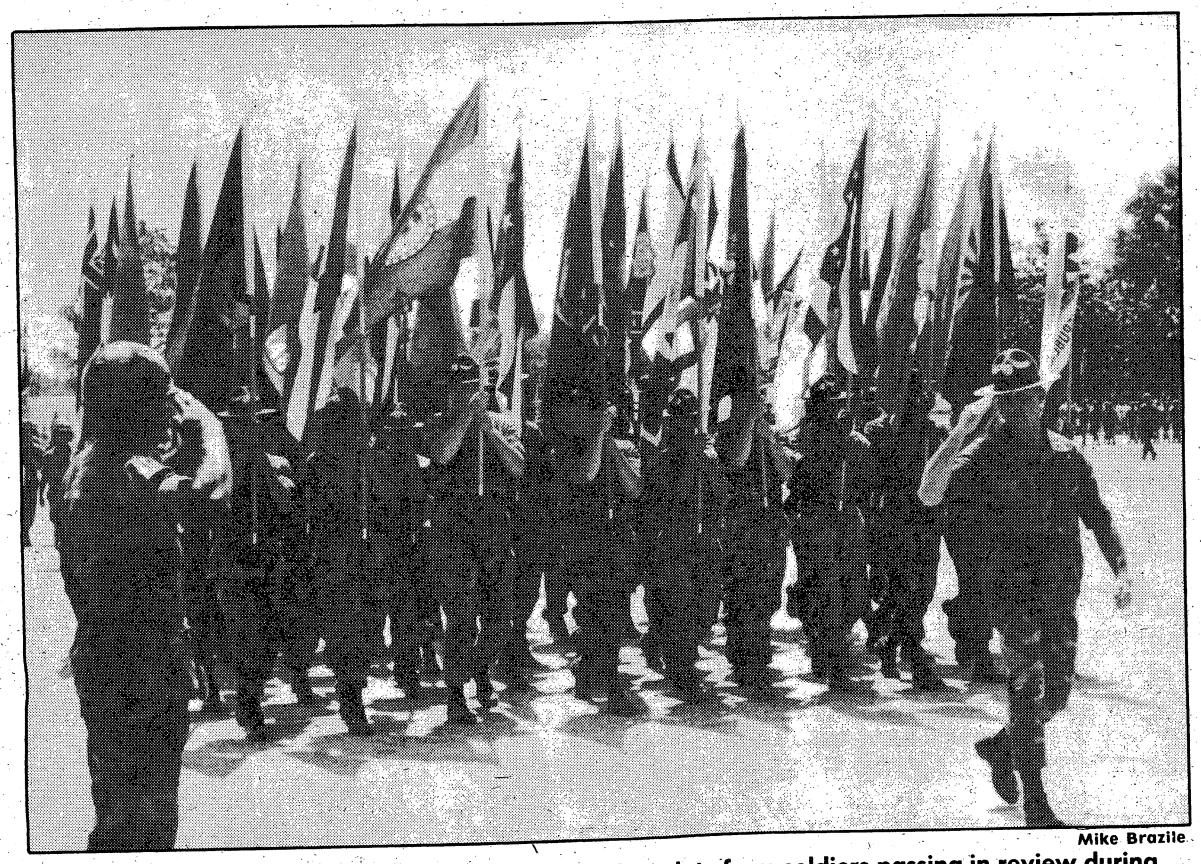
Thousands of soldiers and civilians came out for "fun in the sun" at Saturday's annual Armed Forces Day celebration and Association of the United States Army picnic.The festivities were off and running at 7 a.m. with a 10- kilometer and two-mile fun run, starting at York Field.

Soldiers representing all of the major commands on post marched in an 11 a.m. parade.

Directly after the parade, the eight-member precision drill team from North Georgia College entertained the crowd with an electrifying performance. The future officers flipped, spun and threw their bayonetted rifles with a controlled abandon and their intricate marching was flawless.



The crowds from Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning played games during the day, enjoyed the AUSA picnic, looked at static unit displays and watched major commands compete in athletic events.

Major units on post competed in six different athletic events. The 2nd Infantry Training Brigade dominted the competition, winning the two-mile run, the tug of war, the push-up competition and the litter carry. The School Brigade took the chariot race and the log shuttle was won by the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry.

The highlight of the day began at 3 p.m. when the Silver Wings Parachute Team jumped onto Stewart-Watson Field to signal the crowning of the AUSA queen.

SP4 Daniella Washington, 197th Infantry Brigade, and her fellow 197th sub-chapter queen hopefuls sold 26,252 vote tickets to win the competition.

A Rangers-In-Action demonstration wrapped up the day's activities.

Veterans remember, pay tribute to fallen comrades

Make Memorial Day time for reflecting on servicemembers' many sacrifices

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Memorial Day is a holiday to honor fallen members of the armed services. Three area combat veterans talked about Memorial Day, what it means to them and their wars.

Joe Rivais is a vice president with the Ledger-Enquirer newspapers. During World War II, Rivais served with the U.S. Navy's 3rd Fleet in the Southwest Pacific.

"My most vivid memory of World War II was when Japanese 'kamikaze' (suicide) planes were going full strength. We were in one attack where our ship wasn't hit but took a lot of shrapnel. One of our sister destroyers not too far away was hit and had a lot of men killed. I think of that and how lucky I was to have come out of that war without being hurt.

"I think the American people tend to forget what Memorial Day stands for. Let me tell you, parents who have lost sons in war don't forget it," Rivais said.

"Memorial Day is a time of celebration but also a time of thanksgiving. I think it's sad, though, how patriotism in this country has gone to hell. I saw a boy at the beach one day with an American flag swimsuit. That wouldn't have happened 40 years ago. He'd of been ripped limb from limb.

"My father was in World War I. He was a machinegunner with the 5th Division, the "Red Diamond." He fought a lot in France, I fought in the Pacific in the second world war, so Memorial Day is a kind of blessed day in our family. I fly the flag every Memorial Day from my porch for the men who didin't come out of war as luckily as I did," Rivais related."

Philip Foley is 74 years old. He fought in World War II, Korea and Vietnam and retired from the Army with 31 years service. His duties included serving as an infantryman, field artilleryman and warrant officer logistics specialist.

"Just like every year, I'll go with the VFW (Veteran's of Foreign Wars) to Parkhill Cemetery. We'll present our flags and a wreath to those who died serving their country.

"I don't want to talk about World War II or Korea. I want to talk about Vietnam from the standpoint of a man who had seen two wars before Vietnam," Foley said.

"I was in the 1st Cavalry Division and deployed with the unit in 1965. The first casualty we took that I knew about was Capt. St. Peters. Helicopter warfare was new at the time and St. Peters was flying around and through the hill in An Khe. We never saw him again and so he either was shot down or crashed.

"The 1st Cav had a lot of good men. But some of the young boys that deployed with us were only 17 or 18 years old. They didn't know what to expect or what they were getting themselves into. But they did a great job in Vietnam. Those kids proved they were there to fight a war and they did," Foley praised.

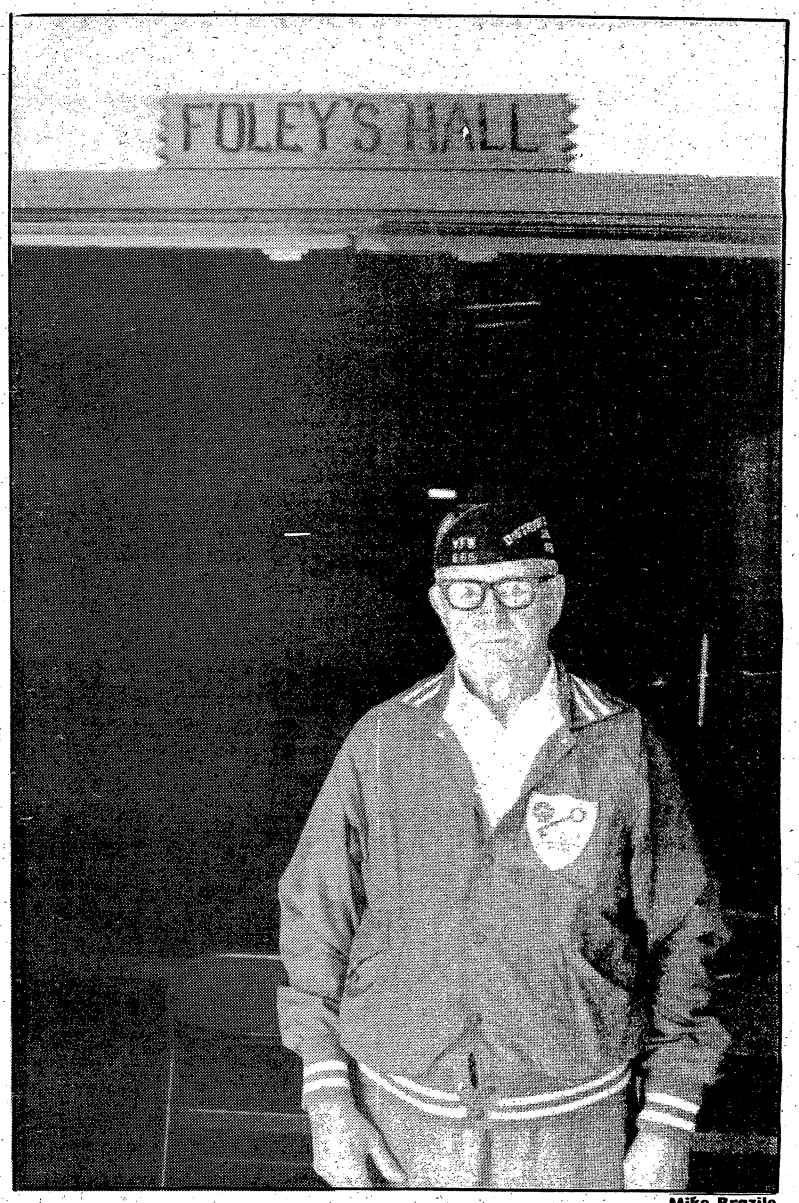
"We also had some women in Vietnam who did a fine job. Female nurses were saving lives almost everyday and the medical technicians were great too.

"The Vietnam soldier fought for his country and did everything asked of him. I think about all the soldiers' lives that could have been saved if we would have just gone in there and won the damned war. That's what I think about on Memorial Day," Foley shared.

"I'm not bitter. If another war came along I'd fight in it, even though I'll be 75 in August.

"On Memorial Day I don't really think about any one person but all the people, good people, that I served with who were killed. They will always have my prayers and my memories of them. Every Memorial Day is good. I believe in it.

SSgt. James Bradford is currently assigned to the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry. He previously served and, subsequently, saw action with, the 1st Battalion (Ranger), 75th Inantry during Operation Urgent Fury in Grenada. Bradford participated in the unit's combat jump and in combat ground action.



"On Memorial Day I don't really think of any one person who was killed in action. I think of all the guys who were killed, giving their lives," Bradford said.

"I've always placed emphasis on Memorial Day, to honor service members who made the ultimate sacrifice. I placed emphasis on it before the Grenada action. A soldier dying in combat is the ultimate sacrifice. I feel there should be more than one day for Memorial Day."

Bradford, who will become a six-year Army veteran in October, says he comes from a long line of soldiers dating back to Custer's 7th Cavalry and the Indian Wars. Because of this, he believes Memorial Day may be more special to him than to others.

"I'm an Army brat. I love the Army and that makes Memorial Day special to me. I have to admit, though, that the soldiers killed-in-action in Grenada are always foremost in my mind and hit closest to home.

"I also think it's good that the U.S. is getting back some nationalism and some pride. I think we need it. Memorial Day is a good time for people to stop and reflect back on what soldiers in the past have done and what they were and are willing to do."

Infantry troops apply skill in pursuit of prestigious EIB

by Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

More than 200 infantrymen from the 197th Infantry Brigade and other Fort Benning units spent the last two weeks trying to show they are experts in their field.

The Brigade conducted its annual Expert Infantryman Badge testing at a training area on Kelley Hill.

SFC Rodney Kennedy, noncommissioned officer in charge of the site, explained EIB holders from units in the 197th were manning the 15 stations that comprise the test.

The stations are the final step in a series of grueling tasks that infantrymen must complete to earn the coveted award. They must fire expert with the M-16 rifle, pass day and night land navigation courses and finish a 12-mile road march in three hours. Immediately after the road march the candidates must demonstrate their ability to assemble, disassemble and perform a functions check on an M-16.

EIB hopefuls must also pass the Army Physical Readiness Test and Skill Qualification Test. Officers must take the skill level four SQT.

The stringent prerequisites weed out many candidates. Those who remain get the chance to tackle the hands-on stations, possibly the most difficult phase of the EIB process.

Kennedy explained that the infantrymen must pass all stations to be awarded the badge. Furthermore, a soldier is allowed to retest in only two stations. In other words, as soon as a soldier fails three stations he is automatically disqualified.

Kennedy, a platoon sergeant from Company B, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, expects to have nearly 250 soldiers go through the testing.

29th Regiment NCO gets 'new attitude' from PLDC

29th Infantry Regiment PAO

Like Carly Simon, Sgt. Julio Soto has a "new attitude."

Recently, Soto, a supply non-commissioned officer with the Logistics Office, 29th Infantry Regiment, graduated from the Primary Leadership Development Course, class 5-86.

He says since attending PLDC, many things have changed about him.

"My morale is high, I'm more motivated about being an NCO, and I'm more in tune with Army policy and my responsibility as an NCO," Soto says.

Although the 26-year-old soldier's attendance at PLDC was made mandatory by a recent change in Army policy, he says he wanted to attend the training earlier, but a long waiting list kept him from doing so.

The four-week course was demanding says Soto, and because of it, he believes he is a better NCO.

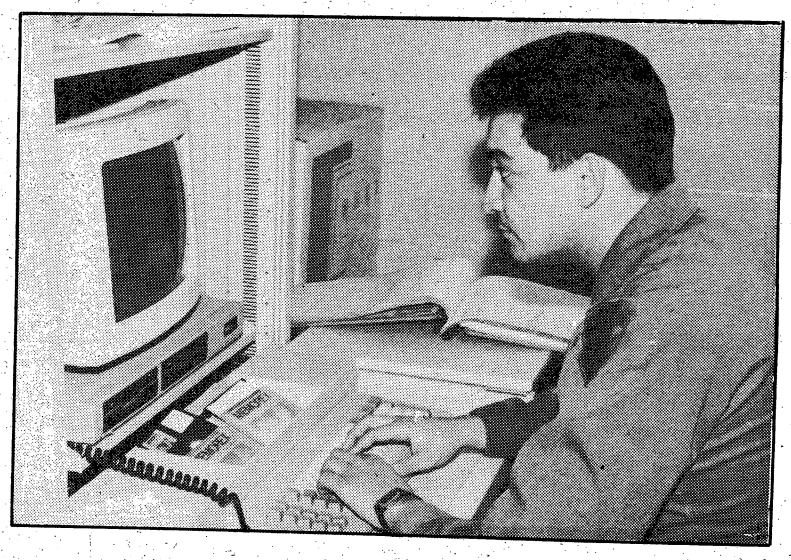
He explained, "Before, I thought I understood what it was to look after the well-being of my subordinates.

"When a soldier came to me with a problem, I sought to resolve it from my point of view.

"I made recommendations based on what worked for me."

Since PLDC, however, Soto is better able to listen and deal more objectively with his subordinates.

"I search for what the soldier thinks the solution to his problem is. I seek to find out how he sees his problem affecting him. And from that, I try to help him in the best way that will benefit him."



Additionally, Soto claims his morale is up and says he is more excited about soldiering after having contact with the cadre.

He says, "They (cadre) are well-informed soldiers. They know just what to do to put you in a situation were you have to demonstrate your leadership ability.

"Their objective is to have you see what you can do so you can help yourself."

Soto's regular duties involve accounting for real estate, which consists of 453 structures or buildings, for the entire 29th. Additionally, he processes all work order requests for the Regi-

197th troops get 'back to land,' learn how to survive in Florida

by Sally Roberts
197th Public Affairs Office

Could you live off the land with only a survival knife and a parachute? Soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, learned that they could during a recent exercise in Florida.

The group began their training at the Land Survival School at Pensacola Naval Air Station. During classroom instruction they learned such skills as gathering edible plant life, water purification, hunting and building shelters. Then they took to the wilds of Florida's woodlands to practice what they had learned.

According to 1st Lt. Edward Parrish, 1-58th Scout Platoon leader, "We were taught to survive with a parachute, a pack of matches and some small tools. We were also allowed to carry a few small things such as a fish hook and some line."

That is how the survival test began. The soldiers built three types of shelter, one using the parachute they were given and others using materials they found around them. They gathered green vegetation to cover the floor of their shelters and built camp fires.

The soldiers could eat anything they gathered or caught. There were no Meals, Ready to Eat on this field exercise. They learned some of the wild fruits and vegetables that are edible and how to determine if a plant is safe to eat.

"You can test a plant by breaking off a piece of it and rubbing it on your skin," said PFC Brently Harder. "If it causes burning or itching then you don't eat it. If not, you test a small piece of it checking for bitterness or a bad taste."

Parrish added, "You can also watch birds and animals to see what they eat."

They learned to tie fish nets from the parachute cord and caught small frogs and salamanders to use as bait. They also set snares to catch rabbits and other small animals.

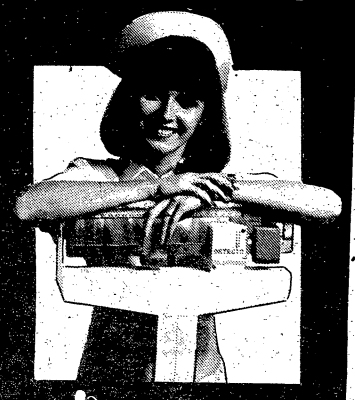
In addition to eating the vegetation, the soldiers learned medicinal uses for plants. "You can make an ointment from boiled oak leaves to help heal cuts," Parrish said. "You can also find a natural aspirin in the branches of the willow tree."

They also used the Spanish Bayonet plant to make two types of field rope.

"Anyone can use these skills," Parrish said. "The training was basically learning to survive on a bare minimum."

36th Engineers tackle river during monthly unit training

by Kevin O. Davis
36th Engineer Group



Once a month, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group conducts a road march with rucksacks and M16 rifles. The road march serves as a means to achieve physical fitness and increase the combat readiness of the unit.

With a company that has more than 30 officers and in excess of seven first sergeants or master sergeants and above, Capt. Del W. Miltenberger, the company commander, usually finds it a difficult task to design training to encompass and stimulate the interest of all ranks. However, the idea of a river rafting exercise in conjunction with a road march proved to be an effective tool in building unit cohesion.

Adding a different dimension to the monthly road march, HHC took a voyage down the Chattahoochee River in rubber boats with paddles provided by the 586th Bridge Company. After marching for 2 1/2 miles, the slightly apprehensive soldiers began pumping air into their 15-man rubber boats in preparation for a one-mile journey.

After donning life jackets and receiving a safety briefing, they set sail. Within 20 minutes, the first boat had reached the objective. The average time on the water for the whole company was 30 minutes. After the conclusion of the rafting expedition, the soldiers hit the ground and continued to march another five miles.

Soldiers face test of stamina in Iron Vanguard competition

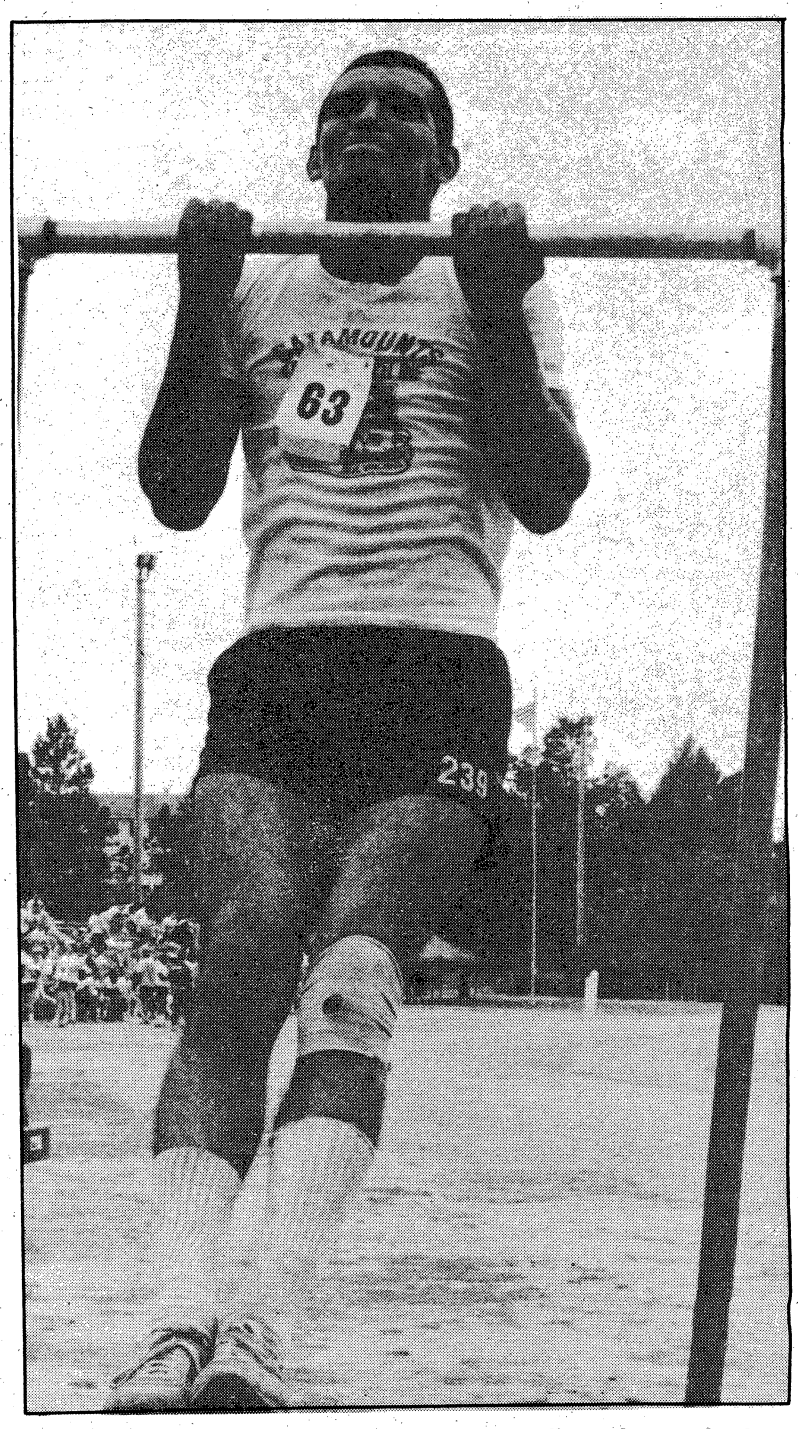
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers from the 10th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade competed in the second Iron Vanguard competition at Harmony Church Sunday.

The soldiers tested their strength, endurance, speed and agility in a grueling marathon of physical events.

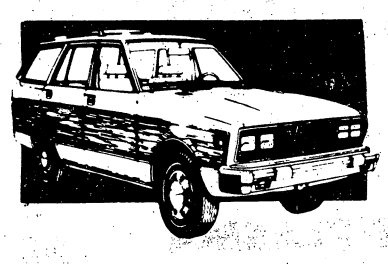
Ninety-one soldiers did as many push-ups, sit-ups and pull-ups as possible in a two minutes time span to accumulate maximum points.



The soldiers also ran the 440-yard dash, a high crawl race and a five-mile run.

"This was the first time we did this on battalion-level," said Capt. Richard Stalbaum, commander of Company C, 10th Bn., 2nd ITB.

10th Bn. commander, Lt. Col. Patrick A. Toffler, officiated as the soldiers were awarded ribbons and T-shirts for high scores in each events and overall first, second and third place.



The overall winners were: PFC Joseph Smith-first place, Pvt.1 Kurt Barksdale-second place and Pvt. Kenneth Winfeild-third place.

Pvt. 1 Brian Martinez said, "The competition was exhilerating, yet tiring. I had a really good time," he added.

725 rubber checks bouncing around exchange monthly

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

People are writing twice as many bad checks at the Fort Benning Post Exchange this year as last and officials want to put a stop to it.

"Last year we were averaging from 300 to 400 bad checks per month and this year, so far, it's running about 725 a month," said Jerry Olson, main mall PX manager.

Olson said any check that is sent back to his office from the bank is considered a bad one. "The banks automatically run the check through twice before returning it to us, which usually takes about 10 days," he said.

Once the check is returned, a letter is sent to the soldier and his commander, requesting that the check be made good within 10 days. After 10 days, a second notice is sent, a copy of which also goes to the Adjutant General's office, which is in charge of overstamping identification cards.

If the check isn't paid within 21 days, the PX submits a military pay adjustment voucher to the Finance Office and collects the money from a soldier's pay.

If the soldier departs Fort Benning in the middle of such a situation, Olson said his office will contact the soldier's new duty station to get payment.

His office has 90 days to collect on the check, at which time it is turned over to Army and Air Force Exchange Headquarters for collection.

"They can collect from any federal monies due the person, including retirement pay and tax returns," Olson said.

He said there are several reasons why people write bad checks.

"The majority are people who don't understand the way banks work today. With the new sophisticated electronic transfer system, a check written today will clear the bank tomorrow, even an out of town bank," he said.

"People write a check a few days before payday, thinking that it will take that long for it to clear at the bank, but it is processed very quickly and the check bounces," he said.

Olson said only about 10 percent of the bad checks the PX sees are written by people who knowingly write bad checks. These range from people who are just irresponsible to con artists who steal checkbooks and I.D. cards.

Another problem many soldiers have is not understanding the SurePay system, said Olson. "They don't understand that it takes 60 to 90 days for the direct deposit to start, so they write checks before checking with the bank," he said.

A person who writes two bad checks in six months will be suspended from cashing checks at the PX for six months, Olson said. "For three checks in a year, their check-writing privileges are indefinitely suspended."

Once privileges are suspended, they can be reinstated only if the person requests a review by the PX manager, who investigates their credit history.

For soldiers assigned overseas, this could cause problems, because there are few places in foreign countries where they can cash checks, he said.

"People need to realize what a privilege it is to cash checks at the PX," Olson said. "We cash checks written on banks from other states, as long as the person has a military I.D. card. Even banks don't do that with no waiting period."

He said another problem is that many people don't realize they are responsible when they cash a two-party check. "If somebody gives them a bad check and we cash it for them, they're treated as if they wrote the check themselves," he said.

His advice on two-party checks is simple. "Don't cash them here. Take them to the bank on which they were written."

Soldier convicted of absence without authority

by Charles A. Coffin
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

AWOL - 2 months jail, bad conduct discharge:

Pvt.1 Dean S. Leibas, 988th Military Police Company, Military Police Activity, was tried and convicted by a special courtmartial May 7 for being Absent Without Authority from his unit.

Capt. Bobby Henry, prosecutor, presented evidence that Leibas left his unit without authority Dec. 18, 1985 and did not return to Fort Benning until March 31. Henry showed Leibas had received three Articles 15 in less than nine months. Henry calld Leibas' company commander, Capt. K.M. Martin and lst Sgt. Arthur Wilsox. Both testified Leibas was a substandard soldier who was a constant disciplinary problem. They both said he should not remain in the Army.

Leibas took the witness stand and said he went AWOL so that he could help out his mother in Ohio. He said he did not tell his chain of command about his family problems. In his closing argument to the Court, Henry said Leibas had been an embarrassment to his unit and had caused good soldiers extra work during the Christmas season.

The military judge, Maj. Donald A. Rogers, sentenced the Ohio native to two months in jail and a bad conduct discharge.

Lightning can be 'shocking' experience

Safety Office

Fort Benning is located in a 100-mile corridor that runs from the southern coast of South Carolina west through Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana known as "lightning alley." In the Fort Benning area, thunderstorms occur approximately 70 days out of each year.

With such high exposure it is not surprising that Fort Benning has had more than its share of lightning fatalities and injuries. In one 11-year period, 13 people were killed by lightning. In July 1976, 19 soldiers were injured during a lightning storm on a firing range. Although several were injured no one died during this incident because of the quick and proper action by the unit commander.

Thunderstorms build up tremendous electrical charges in the clouds, while on the ground below, opposite charges of equal potential gather. When the attraction between these opposite charges is strong enough to overcome the air resistance between them, a lightning stroke results. The dual character of lightning — it carries currents of up to one million volts and produces destructive thermal effects — makes it doubly dangerous.

To help you save your life when lightning threatens, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has developed the following safety rules to keep you from being Fort Benning's next victim. Don't wait to apply these rules until you have seen the first stroke of lightning . . . most people are killed or injured during he muggy lull that precedes the storm.

- Stay indoors and don't venture outside, unless absolutely necessary.
- Stay away from open doors and windows, fireplaces, radiators, stoves, metal pipes, sinks and plug-in electrical appliances.
- Don't use plug-in electrical equipment like hair dryers, electric tooth brushes or electric razors during the storm.
- Don't use the telephone during the storm — lightning may strike telephone lines outside.
- Don't take laundry off clothes lines.
- Don't work on fences, telephone or power lines, pipelines or structural steel fabrications.
- Don't use metal objects like fishing rods and golf clubs. Golers wearing cleated shoes are particularly good lightning rods.
- Don't handle flammable materials in open containers.
- Get out of water and small boats.
- Stay in your automobile if you are traveling. Automobiles (except convertibles) offer excellent lightning protection.
- Seek shelter in buildings. If no buildings are available your best protection is a cave, ditch, canyon or under head high clumps of trees in open forest glades.
- When there is no shelter, avoid the highest object in the area. If only isolated trees are nearby, your best protection is to seek low ground and crouch or kneel in the open, keeping twice as far away from isolated trees as they are high.
- Avoid hilltops, open spaces, wire fences, metal clothes lines, exposed sheds and any electrically conductive elevated objects.
- When you feel your skin tingle or your hair stands on end, drop to a kneel or crouch position immediately. Lightning is about to strike.

Observing these rules will greatly reduce your chance of being struck by lightning. If, however, you are called upon to perform first aid on someone who tried to beat the odds, keep these facts in mind as explained in the "Annals of Internal Medicine." Persons struck by lightning receive a severe electrical shock and may be burned, but they carry no electrical charge and can be handled safely. A person "killed" by lightning can often be revived by prompt mouth-to-mouth resuscitation and CPR. In a group struck by lightning, the apparently dead should be treated first; those who show vital signs will probably recover spontaneously although burns and other injuries may require treatment. After emergency treatment is performed, all victims should be taken immediately to a medical facility for observation and further treatment.

Many people are killed by lightning each year because they think these are freak accidents that can't happen to them. Lightning is not choosy; it will strike anyone foolish enough to ignore the simple safety precautions outlined above.

It can and will kill you! Don't take the chance!

Motorcycle Safety Course teaches two-wheel safety

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

For anyone, regardless of age, who wishes to operate a motorcycle or moped on post, it is mandatory to have completed the Motorcycle Safety Course.

The course, predesigned by the National Safety Council, emphasizes safety and vehicle maintenance.

In emphasizing safety, the Motorcycle Safety Course is particularly beneficial. This course ensures that the motorcyclists on post are well trained in defensive driving.

The course is taught every weekend, alternating on Friday and Saturday from April through September. "We have more people riding during that period," said Phyllis B. Taylor, safety specialist at the Safety Management Office.

From September through March the course is offered twice monthly.

Saturday classes were designed for those students on post who are unable to attend on Friday. "Normally the commanders will give the soldiers the time off," Taylor said.

According to Taylor, this course is a prerequisite for registering motorcycles on post.

"But if they have taken a comparable course somewhere else we do not make them take it again here," Taylor said.

In addition to recognizing other courses, the course completion card earned here is good at most other posts.

The motorcycle course is free and is a total of six hours instruction. Three hours are in the classroom; one hour is devoted to hands-on maintenance; and a two-hour skill test wraps up the course.

The skill test is designed to determine the students' reactions during simulated situations including starting and moving up a hill, crossing angled railroad tracks, quick stopping on a curve and accelerating on a curve.

Classes are scheduled for today and May 31. If you are interested in taking the course, you should be at Brown Hall, Building 328, at 8 a.m. on the desired date. Each student must bring a motorcycle, proof of ownership and a driver's license or learner's permit from Georgia. It is also important that the student be dressed properly for driving a motorcycle. "They must have on long pants, a long sleeve shirt or jacket and sturdy shoes," Taylor said.

Services stress motorcycle safety

by Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

Air Force MSgt. Ron Shepard is well aware of the dangers of motorcycle riding.

About 15 years ago, while stationed at Anderson Air Force Base in Guam, Shepard was involved in an accident that left him with two broken arms and two broken legs. He remained in traction for six months; today, one leg is still three-quarters of an inch shorter than the other.

But it was about a year after his accident — when Shepard dismissed a young airman early from Saturday duty, only to learn within hours that the airman's skull had been crushed against a street curb in a motorcycle accident — that Shepard started asking hard questions about motorcycle safety.

What he found was that, despite an alarming number of fatalities and injuries, no military service sponsored a real motorcycle safety program.

During fiscal year 1985, 195 soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines died and almost 2,500 were injured in motorcycle accidents. As alarming as these statistics may appear, they are considerably lower than those of only five years ago.

The reason: a new emphasis on motorcycle safety.

Few people would disagree that motorcycles are dangerous. Yet some, like Shepard, argue that proper training gives motorcyclists the skills needed to ride safely and avoid other motorists who don't.

Now stationed at the Air Force Inspection and Safety Center at Norton Air Force Base, Calif., Shepard coordinates the Air Force motorcycle safety program.

His counterparts in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps train military motorcycle riders around the world in safe motorcycle techniques. They also ensure that riders are familiar with the Defense Department's and their individual service's riding requirements.

"I just can't understate the importance of training," said Shepard. "We can teach people that no matter what someone else does to you, if you react properly, you still have a good chance of surviving."

Fred Young, Fort Benning safety officer, was even more emphatic about the importance of training. "Anyone who rides a motorcycle without first taking a basic course on how to ride it is a fool — a person trying to get killed," he said.

A DoD motor vehicle directive issued last November echoes this view. To ride on a military installation, all motorcycle operators, military and civilian, must complete a motorcycle safety course during which they demonstrate their ability to operate the cycle.

Also before riding on an installation, riders must:

- obtain the appropriate state motorcycle license;
- wear a properly fastened helmet that meets specific safety standards;
- wear a face shield attached to the helmet or impact-resistant goggles;
- have a rear view mirror; and
- use a headlight at all times.

The services go a step farther in enforcing motorcycle safety.

Safety officials say stricter safety requirements are paying off directly in fewer motorcycle deaths and injuries. However, they stress that no regulation and no safety class can instill the most critical safety consideration of all — a proper attitude.

By this they mean respecting the extremely dangerous nature of motorcycling.

Harold Taylor, chief of ground safety for the Military Airlift Command, summed up what he considers to be the ultimate safety guideline. "The day you think you have mastered the machine or lose respect for the bike — sell it."

Army support, special branches become part of regimental system

by Suzanne Williams
Fort Benning Schools

As families move from duty station to duty station one of the first questions asked concerning the new assignment is often "How good are the schools?" The quality of education provided for the children is of primary importance.

The recent nationwide attention focused on public education has caused alarm within the general population that schools are falling fast and only dramatic action can save them.

Contrary to all this negative rhetoric is the fact that many schools continue to meet the standards for accreditation by a regional accrediting agency and this accreditation is still a benchmark by which the public can measure the quality of its schools and be assured that they are providing outstanding educational experiences for children.

Since 1895 the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools has existed to assure the public that schools meeting the standards for accreditation represent quality.

Initial accreditation requires that a school system perform an intensive self-study and write an evaluation report. This experience is followed by an on-site visit by a committee of educators to determine if the school system does meet the standards. Continuing accreditation requires an annual written report that calls for each school to submit a yearly plan for improvement. In addition, to continue accreditation, a school system must do a similarly intensive self-study and invite a committee evaluation every 10 years with an interim review of a less demanding nature every five years.

The Fort Benning Schools were first affiliated with the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools in 1955 and were fully accredited in 1963 when the Southern Association began accrediting schools below the secondary level. Since that beginning more than 20 years ago, the Fort Benning Schools have maintained the high standards that gained initial accreditation, ensuring that accreditation has been continued each year.

The most recent 10 year self-study was completed by the Fort Benning Schools in 1983 and the required visit by a Southern Association evaluation committee occurred in the fall of that year. Some 25 educators visited all the schools over a 2 1/2 day period talking with parents, students and educators, looking at records, observing in classrooms and inspecting facilities and support services. The schools received numerous compliments and accreditation was continued without question.

Fort Benning children attend quality schools and parents can be assured of this quality through the schools' continued accreditation with the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

Department of Army receives kudos for exceeding energy saving goals

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger recently praised the Department of the Army for exceeding energy conservation goals set servicewide.

He said the monetary savings resulting from Army conservation efforts exceeded $300 million in 1985 alone.

"This is a remarkable accomplishment in light of the heavily increased mission support demands of the president's programs to restore America's military strength," he said.

Weinberger's praise came as a result of the Army's program to implement Executive Order 12003, which required all federal agencies to reduce energy consumption in facilities by 20 percent per active square foot, and gasoline consumption by 15 percent.

The Army surpassed this goal, reducing energy consumption 21.8 percent and gasoline consumption 25.9 percent.

This led to a cost avoidance of $3.2 billion for the 10 year time period, according to Lt. Gen. Benjamin F. Register Jr., Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics in Washington, D.C.

To make sure it meets this goal, the Army has established the Energy Idea Interchange Program, as a means for agencies to share winning conservation strategies.

GETTING AROUND CAN BE EXPENSIVE.

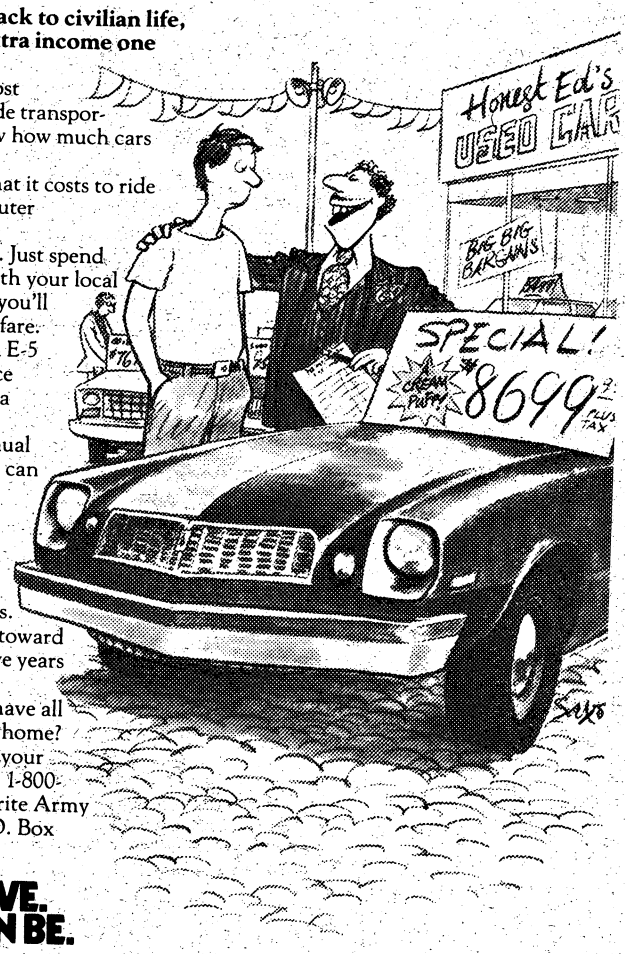
If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Unlike the Army, most civilian jobs don't provide transportation. You already know how much cars and gasoline cost.

But wait'll you see what it costs to ride subways, buses or commuter trains these days.

There's a way to cope. Just spend one weekend a month with your local Army Reserve unit, and you'll earn a lot more than bus fare.

Did you know that an E-5 with four years' experience now makes over $130 for a Reserve weekend?



Add in two weeks annual training pay and the total can easily top $2,000 per year.

You can also continue to save by buying tires and other auto accessories through the PX. Reservists get PX privileges.

Plus retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have all that waiting when you get home?

It can be arranged. See your in-service recruiter. Or call 1-800-USA-ARMY. Overseas, write Army Reserve Opportunities, P.O. Box 7717, Clifton, NJ 07015.

Army support, special branches will soon be in regimental system

Army News Service

Twelve combat support, combat service support and special branches plus the corps of engineers will be incorporated into the Army's regimental system by Sept. 30.

Plans for regimental affiliation, recently approved by the Army chief of staff, will extend to these soldiers the same benefits already offered to combat arms soldiers under the system. Affiliation will offer the opportunity for long-term identification and the potential for recurring assignments. It will also help to carry on the history, customs and traditions of the corps.

Because these branches are not legally considered regiments, their regimentation plans will not follow the same guidelines as those for the combat arms units. All branches will retain their "corps" titles and be implemented into the regimental system as whole branches, said Lt. Col. James T. Dowdy of the new Manning System Division at the Pentagon. Under this "whole branch concept," these soldiers will automatically be affiliated with the branch of their primary military occupational specialty. Once the corps are implemented under the regimental system, they will be counted as regiments and referred to in regimental terms.

Under the regimental implementation plan that governs the affiliation process Armywide, the branches are developing a "regimental" crest and color (flag) for their respective corps. Individual plans for each corps must address a personnel assignment system that will give soldiers the opportunity to serve recurring assignments. These assignments might be, for example, in a particular geographic location or within a specific unit.

"Our soldiers need to know, however, that no assignment guarantee can be made since soldiers will serve within their corps in both table of organization and equipment and table of distribution allowances assignments to meet Army requirements and to achieve individual professional development needs," Dowdy said.

The implementation plan further requires that each corps designate a homebase where the "regimental" color (flag) and memorabilia will be kept. The ordnance corps' implementation plan already has been developed. The program should include a marketing strategy designed to inform and educate soldiers regarding their corps' plan and to demonstrate to them the benefits of the regimental system to both the Army and the soldier.

Command sergeants major, sergeants major and colonels have been invited, by letter, to affiliate with their corps or to any active or proposed combat arms regiment in which they have previously served while holding a combat arms occupational specialty, he said. This procedure is similar to that used for general officer affiliation.

By the end of fiscal year 1986, when the 13 corps are fully implemented, the Army regimental system will total 64 regiments servicewide. The Army will continue to implement as many regiments and corps as possible in fiscal years 1987 and 1988 to bring the total to more than 149 by the end of fiscal 1988, Dowdy said. The entire Army is planned to be under the regimental system by the end of fiscal 1992, bringing the servicewide total to 183 regiments.

'Big Wheels' spreads fertilizer for greener lawns on Benning

USAIC Public Affairs Office

For you curious folks who have seen a big truck spraying black stuff along Fort Benning roads and wondered what was going on, or questioned why the very same grass that is sprayed turns a brilliant green, here's the "poop," uh, scoop, that is.

The truck is called "Big Wheels" and it's a 1977 10-ton that holds 1,600 gallons of fertilizer or "sludge."

The truck was bought in 1977 to help in eliminating the excess fertilizer that is produced at the Waste Treatment Plant No. 1.

"The plant purifies 2.5 to 3 million gallons of waste a day," said SGM William Freeman with the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

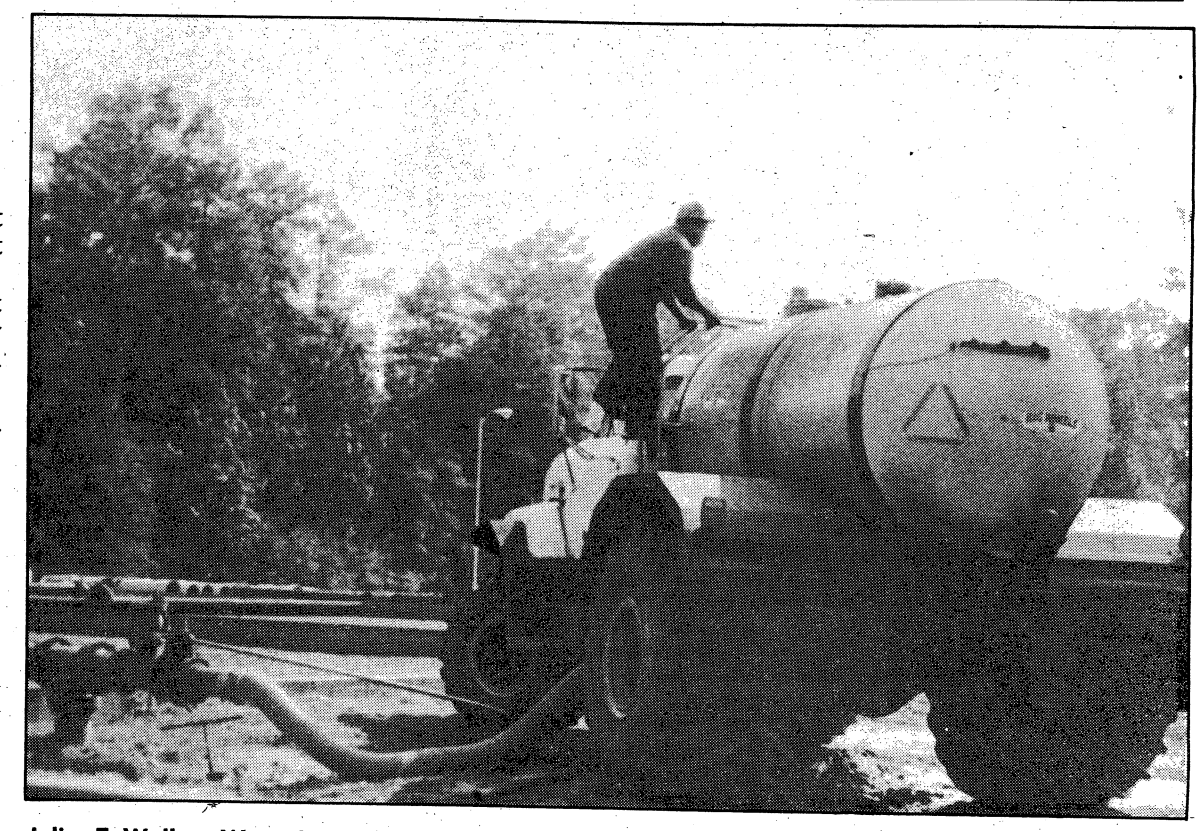
"The sludge is made from purified human waste and then put into beds to dry," Freeman explained.

"We can't sell it, or at least we have no means to sell it," Freeman said.

Sludge is the final product that is produced in the digesters at Waste Treatment Plant No. 1.

The purified waste is then put into drying beds and given away to units and individuals who need it for fertilizer use on post.

The truck gets a lot of practical use on post.



"Everyday somebody is calling and begging us to come spray their units (lawns)," said Dan A. Hudson, Plant Operations and Maintenance foreman.

But mostly, the fertilizer is given away to any individual or unit that comes to the plant and hauls it off.

Surprisingly, the sludge's smell is not what one would expect.

"As long as it is treated properly and there is a balanced Ph, you won't have a smell," said Freeman.

So if you are looking for the key to a lush lawn and you don't mind getting a little dirty, stop by Waste Treatment Plant No. 1 and dig some up.

Julius T. Walker, Waste Water Treatment Plant operator and driver, reloads "Big Wheels" for another trip around post.

He says what he does now, in comparison to what he has done in the past (supply sergeant for the Pershing II Missile Unit in Germany), used to bother him.

But, thanks to PLDC, his attitude has changed about that, too. He says, "A good NCO adapts to changes and makes the best of any situation.

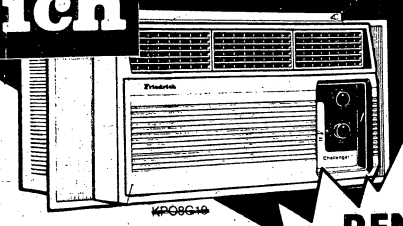
"He (the NCO), can't afford to nag in his work environment because it could blow the morale of his subordinates."

Still another important aspect of leadership addressed in PLDC was Army Regulations, Soto says.

"Leaders must be aware of Army policy and Army policy is laid down in various regulations.

"PLDC encourages the leader to know Army policy.

"After all, if you are to correct or guide someone, you yourself must know the source of those guidelines."



PLDC didn't come soon enough for Soto. He says, "I waited one long year before getting in."

He concluded, "I think it is a great idea that every junior NCO must attend PLDC before making E-6."

Recruiting command needs touring NCOs

U.S. Army Recruiting Support Command

The U.S. Army Recruiting Support Command at Cameron Station, Va., is looking for qualified volunteers to join its team of exhibit-touring personnel.

Soldiers selected to be exhibit team members will tour the country 11 months of the year, manning mobile exhibits that tell the Army story and support the Army's recruiting program. The exhibits will appear at college and high school campuses, shopping malls, state and county fairs, conventions and other public events. The normal tour of duty for exhibit team members is three years.

Because RSC team members represent the Army in close-up meetings with the public, only the most qualified applicants will be selected. Prerequisities for selection are: qualified to perform duties on extended TDY; pay grade E-5 to E-7; minimum time in service four years; outstanding personal appearance and military bearing; demonstrated physical fitness; and medically fit, with no limiting profile.

Other prerequisites for selection include a desire to meet the public; excellent communication skills; no record of courts-martial or recent Article 15; financial stability; and be a high school graduate with a GT score of 100 or higher.

Applicants for this duty must have a minimum of 18 months retainability; possess a valid civilian driver's license; and not currently be due for an overseas tour or special assignment or have any restrictive assignment limitations. Preferably, applicants will have an MOS and grade that is in worldwide overage, and will not currently have received an enlistment or reenlistment bonus.

Soldiers interested in applying for this challenging and rewarding duty should contact the RSC Adjutant, Maj. Clarence Barto, at Autovon 284-6664/6666, or Commercial (202) 274-6664.

Nurses needed to care for child

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two-year-old Regina Zacherl, soon to be a resident here, needs help to stay alive.

Regina was born with a rare disease of the pancreas, called Nesidio Blastosis, in which the organ secretes too much insulin. Her father, Maj. Donald H. Zacherl, said that since the condition was diagnosed shortly after her birth, she has been on a strict regimen of exact doses of food and medication.

"If she isn't fed exactly the right amounts and kinds of food through a stomach tube, her pancreas produces too much insulin, which can send her into insulin shock or produce a hypoglycemic condition. Either of these states could be fatal," he said.

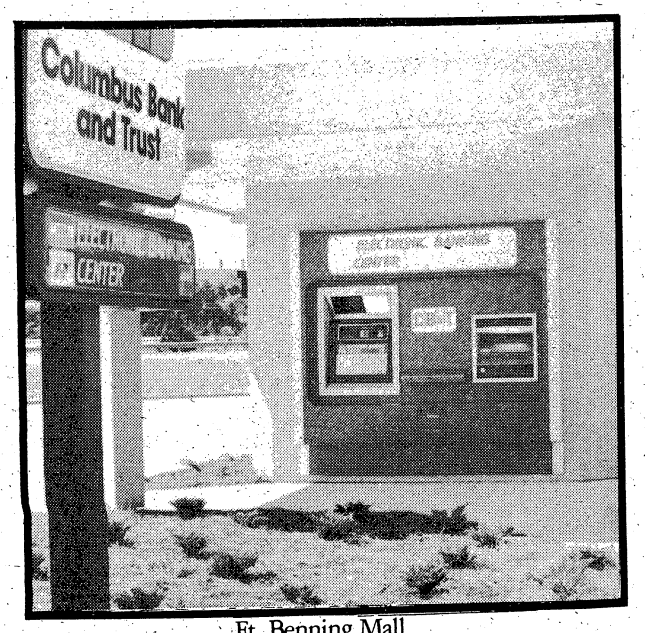
The family will arrive at Fort Benning June 9 and will immediately need nurses to help with Regina's care. Right now, her father and mother share 12 hours of her care each day, and nurses are needed for the other 12 hours daily.

The family receives financial help through the CHAMPUS system, but not enough to pay what a commercial nursing service charges per hour.

"We're not looking for volunteers, but for nurses who will work for the CHAMPUS rate plus an additional amount we negotiate with them," he said.

Zacherl is presently a student at the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and will be assigned to Benning after graduation. He is programmed to become the fire support officer with the 75th Ranger Regiment.

He and his wife, Marianne, have two other children; Christina, 10, and Anna, 9.



Zacherl said Regina should outgrow the condition by the time she is 5 years old, although there are few children older than age 15 who have survived the disease.

If you're interested in helping Regina, call Jonnie Smith in the Community Health Nursing Office at 545-4041.

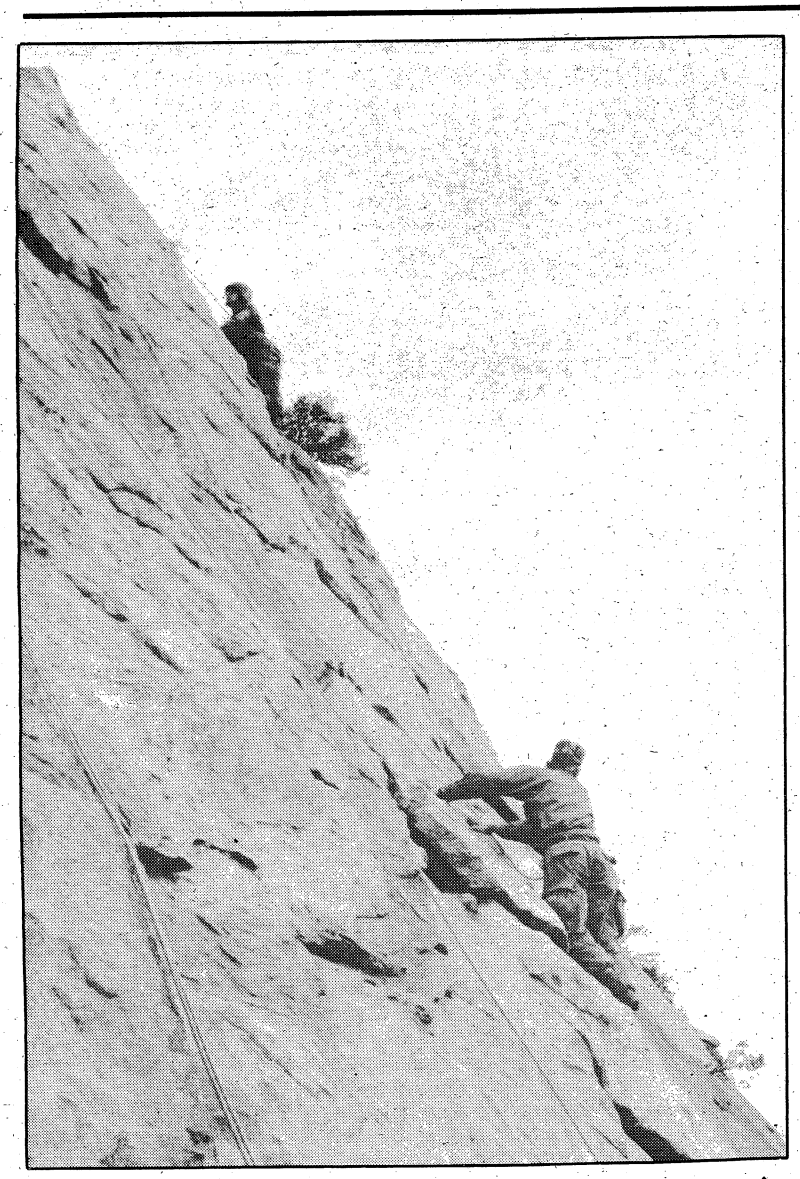
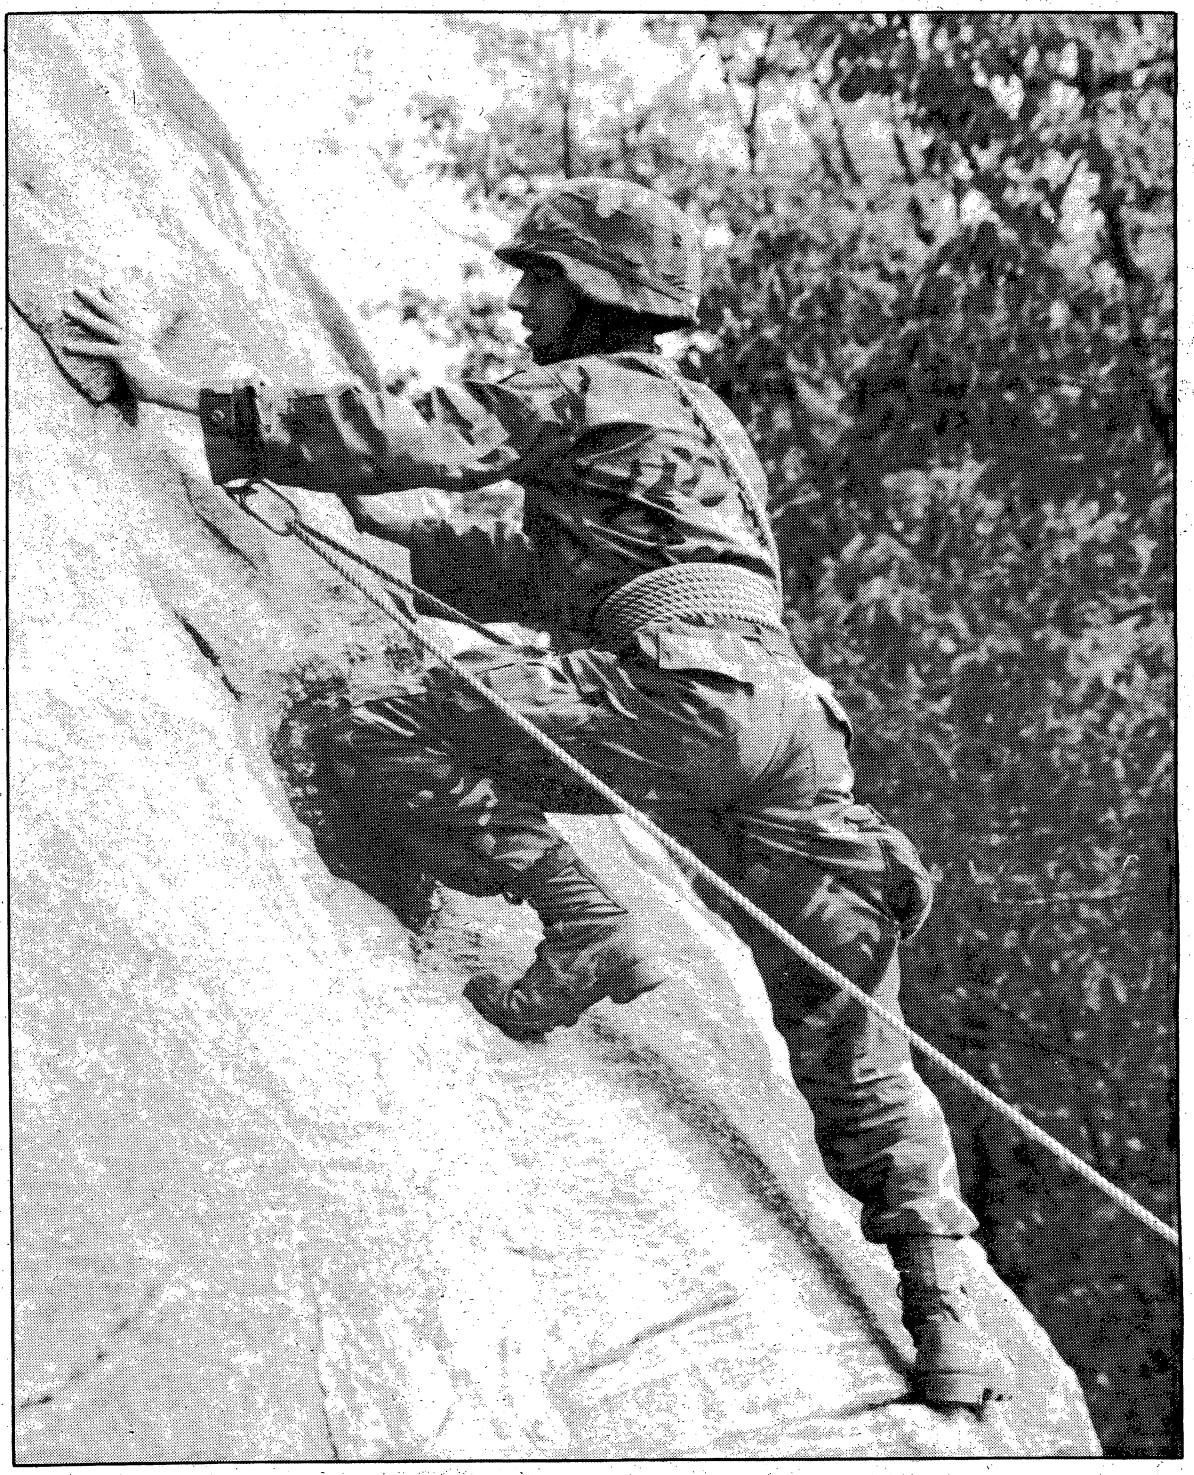
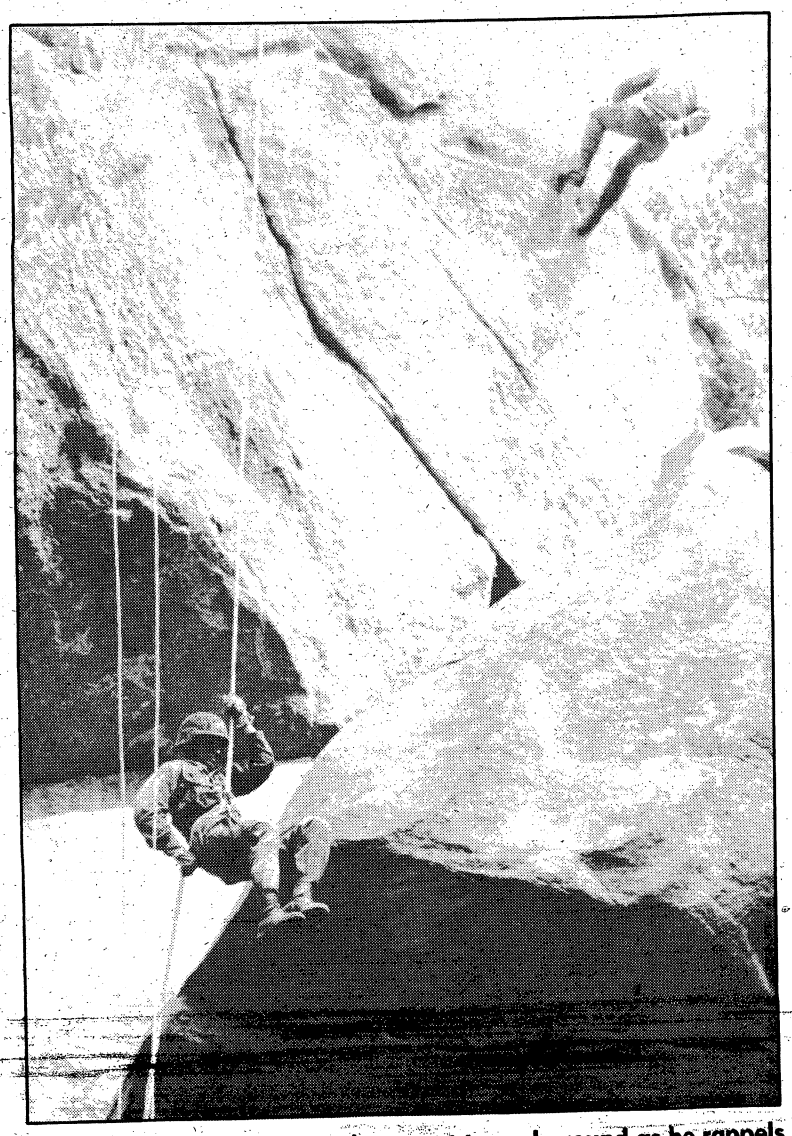
Pvt. 2 Rickey Edwards prepares to descend the rappelling tower using the Australian method.



An instructor checks a soldier's knots before allowing him to descend the 30-foot rappelling wall.



Soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division begin the climb up Mount Yona, as their instructor lends guidance.



To ensure safety, soldiers practice belay techniques.

Two soldiers inch their way up one of the steepest mountain faces during lower mountain training in Dahlonega, Ga.

Pvt. 2 Timothy Richards reaches for a good grip as he climbs Mount Yona in Dahlonega, Ga. during recent mountain training.

Pvt. 2 Earl G. Greene struggles to get turned around as he rappels down the face of Mount Yona.

Mountain troopers earn tab during training at Dahlonega

Story and photos by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division recently returned to Fort Benning following three weeks of training at Dahlonega, Ga.

The soldiers arrived at the Mountain Ranger Camp May 1 and spent 20 days engrossed in intense lower mountain training.

"This is the first time the exercise has been in Dahlonega and we will continue the training on a yearly basis," said Capt. Steve Holly, liaison officer for the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division.

The 600 soldiers (including the support personnel from 2nd Bde.) participated in classes on various rappelling and mountain-climbing techniques.

According to Holly, instructors from the Ranger School were instrumental in the training. "They taught key individuals in the 2-14th how to instruct, then we had our own trainers," he said.

Many of the soldiers had mountain training during infantry One Station Unit Training, but for some it was the first time.

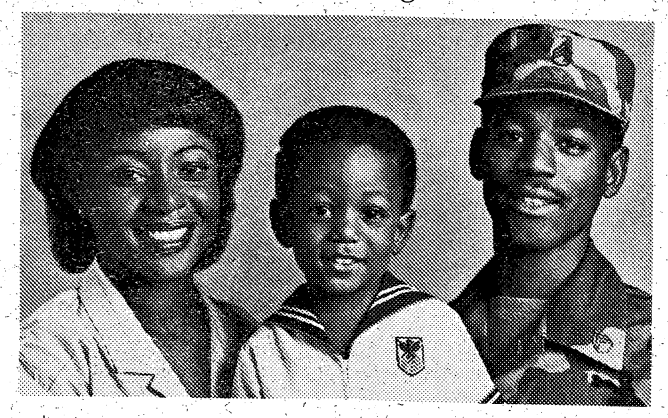
"Mostly everything (additional training) we're doing is on our own, many of us are Ranger and Pathfinder (qualified)," said 2nd Lt. Orville M. Edrada, Company C executive officer.

The soldiers were separated into groups and rotated through stations to learn or refresh the techniques.

On the face of Mount Yona, a few miles away, different groups tested their skills. While one group rappelled down one side, another ascended the face, using the buddy and balance climb methods.

In the woods around the area there were small groups patrolling .

"We did a lot of marching in the hills," said Pvt.2 Patrick Pape, radio, telephone operator.



"It was really great, Fort Benning dosen't have half the steepness and distance of the hills here," he added.

"The training exceeded all its objectives and the soldiers of the 2-14th had the opportunity to earn the mountain tab," said Col. Michael T. Plummer, 2nd Bde. commander.

"WE FEEL GOOD ABOUT LEAVING JAMAHL AT THE DAY-CARE CENTER BECAUSE THEY TREAT HIM LIKE HE'S THEIR OWN CHILD."

SSG Ken and SP4 Jacquie Farmer

"We never really considered leaving Jamahl with anyone except a private sitter. But our first visit to the new Child Development Center here at Fort Hood sure changed our minds.

"We know our son is well taken care of. So we can concentrate on our jobs without worrying about what he's doing.

"He learns, instead of just playing. He counts, sings, says his ABC's. And they teach him to be more independent.

"Jacquie and I have peace of mind when Jamahl's at the Center. They take care of him, and he's learning, and those are the two most important things."

The Army's Day-Care programs are making modern day-care facilities available to more children each day. And the quality of the "Caregivers" who attend the children has never been higher. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

Memorial Day honors service over selfish gain

by Chaplain Gregg Hill
3rd Battalion, (Ranger) 75th Infantry

Memorial Day weekend. How much thought have you given to this holiday? Is it merely a time away from the unit - a time to ritually welcome in the summer? Is the meaning of this weekend simply a traditional time for picnics and relaxation?

Perhaps we should take a few moments to ask ourselves a few questions and become more discerning about those we choose to honor. Specifically, who are we to honor? How shall be honor them? Does this mean we, too, are to be honorable?

We observe Memorial Day as a time to honor those who gave their lives for our country. More, we give honor to all who have served faithfully, honestly and with integrity. We honor not all who served, but those who chose service over selfish gain, even though it cost many their lives.

Who are/were these people? The Bible tells us of similar men and women in past times:

Let us now praise famous men, and our fathers in their generations . . .

The Lord apportioned to them great glory . . .
all these were honored in their generations, and were the glory of their times.
There are some of them who have left a name, so that men declare their praise.
And there are some who have no memorial . . .

Sirach 44: 1-2a, 7-9a

Who are/were these people? Some have left a name through family, history or at least a marker. Others, too many others, are now known only to God. These we are to honor.

But how shall we honor them? As individuals we can honor them as follows.

- By handling our freedom, their gift to us, in a responsible manner.
- By serving each other, not for gain or fame lest we dishonor those who served and are now unknown.
- By being living memorials to their memory.

Does this mean we, too, are to be honorable? We thank God for those honorable men and women who have gone before us. Can we be less for those who follow us? Will our children remember us as people of honor?

As children of the living God, and children of those who have served, may we serve well, that our children may live in freedom. In this way, may we be living memorials to all that is just, merciful and honorable.

Vietnam veteran joins author ranks, pens book about his action in combat

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

In the foreword to his book, "Vietnam: What a Soldier Gives," David L. Hartline sums up what the war experience meant to him.

"You have never lived until you have almost died. For those who have fought for it, life has a flavor the protected will never know."

His book shows how he came to this realization through fighting the war.

The Viet Cong fought a creeping, insidious kind of war. Soldiers had a hard time distinguishing between enemy troops and innocent civilians and every shaking bush could hide an AK47 pointed to kill.

To survive, men had to have eyes in the back of their heads and sharply honed survival instincts. Hartline was one soldier who had what it took.

The book chronicles his service experience from basic training at Fort Benning, Ga. through his return home after spending a year in the Mekong Delta with the 3rd Battalion, 60th Infantry, 9th Division.

Hartline was the honor graduate of his reconnaissance-scout school at Fort Knox, Ky., and the country boy accustomed to hunting in the Alabama woods quickly adapted his skills to jungle warfare.

He spent his first few months as an M60 gunner, then became a reconnaissance scout. It was in this unit that he went into the "no man's land" across the Cambodian border. Since Americans weren't supposed to be there, his missions there earned him no medals, but plenty of opportunities to die.

Hartline stresses that his book depicts how a patriotic American served his country and he refuses to be ashamed of what he did there or to question America's involvement in Southeast Asia.

As he makes clear he was a soldier, not a politician.

He's also not a writer, as the construction of the book makes clear. It is written in the style and tone of a letter home, short on description and many things are mentioned but not explained.

While the subject matter itself makes it compelling, the book is hard to read at times.

And unless you've never read a book or seen a movie on the subject, you won't learn much new information from this book.

At one point in the book, he writes, "I believe writing this all down will help me finally get it off my mind."

Hartline may have accomplished his purpose. But the book doesn't add much to the national unraveling of the Vietnam experience, and ignores important questions like why it happened.

Reviewer colors Spielberg film 'great'

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"The Color Purple" is a masterpiece in moviemaking. I saw the movie recently at the Main Post Theater and I can't believe it didn't win any Academy Awards.

The movie was brilliant. It contained all the elements essential for a hit. There was humor, touches of violence, three songs sung by Margaret Avery, characteristic of a top-rated musical, suspense and the sad scenes evoked tears.

Spielberg was considerate in that the transitions from humor to sadness were done gently.

Spielberg made his presence known in the camera angles that are his trademark and in the subtle touches of humor scattered throughout the movie.

For example, in the scene at the opening of the honky tonk "Harpos" when it becomes apparent that Sophie is going to hit someone and the room begins to clear, the camera zooms in on a dog sneaking away with his tail between his legs.

Whoopi Goldberg is exceptional in her premier role. She has the sort of face that allows her to play what appears to be a broken and spiritless woman. Her expressions can be read like a book. Goldberg communicates all emotions well and the audience flows with her throughout the film.

Post ruggers in top ten at national tournament

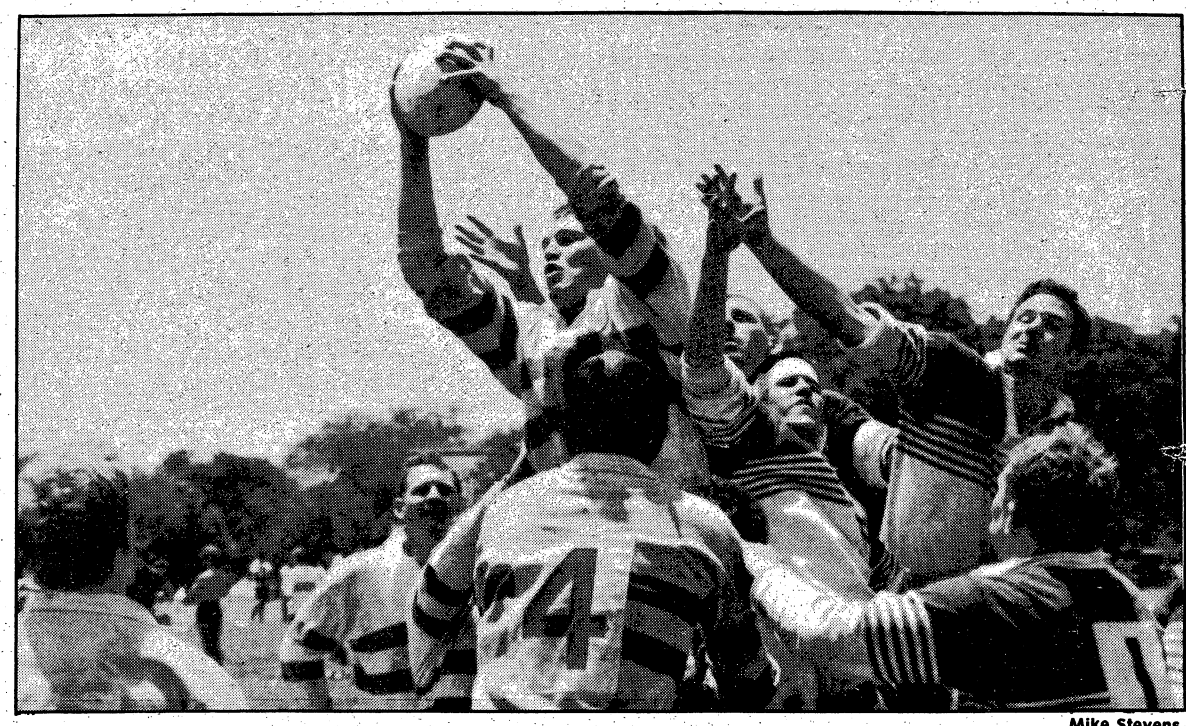
by Stephen Gouthro
Special to the Bayonet

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby Team travelled to San Antonio, Texas, to participate in the National Military Rugby Tournament May 10 and 11. Coming off a fine showing in the Eastern Military Regional tournament, the Flyers were confident of doing well.

The first match started off slowly against the Parris Island Marine Corps side. The Flyers found themselves defending their goal line most of the first half. Flyer Tom Lynch made some key long kicks to start the offense going. The scrum followed up with a 30-meter run by Bob Muller off of a penalty. Muller passed to Steve Geise, who raced for 40 meters for an apparent score. The referee called the play back for a forward pass. The Flyers recovered and continued playing well. Just before the first half ended, Rick Buonotello executed a penalty play perfectly, and ran in for the score. The failed conversion gave the Flyers a 4-0 lead at half.

The Flyer back line attacked strongly to dominate the second half. After several unsuccessful runs, Luke Mattare broke loose for a Flyer score. The conversion gave the Flyers a 10-0 lead. Parris Island made a few breaks, but the tough Flyer defense denied any scores. The Flyers held on for a 10-0 victory.

The second match pitted the Flyers against the top-seeded Davis-Montham Air Force Base team. The Benning scrum matched up well against the opposing pack and outplayed them throughout the match. Unfortunately, the Flyers' back line could not generate any offense. Davis-Montham capitalized on three Benning miscues for scores and the match ended with an 18-0 Davis-Montham victory.



During the final match, the Flyers squared off against the Fort Hood, Texas ruggers. The Flyers needed the win to advance further. Immediately, Tom Lynch found himself in a kicking duel and managed to keep the Benning team alive. Neither team could effectively advance the ball, and the first half remained scoreless.

The second half was a repeat of the first half. The Flyers had one scoring attempt when Fort Hood was penalized. Tom Lynch attempted a 40-meter field goal, but the ball fell short. The game ended scoreless.

The Flyer's record of 1-1-1 was not good enough to qualify for the quarterfinals, but it did place the team 10th out of the 30 teams that participated. Steve Tennant, the club president, was selected to the All-Army Tournament side.

The Flyers would like to say "Thank You" to all of the commanders who supported the Team and allowed their soldiers to participate in the tournament. The Team members are to be commended for their dedication and personal sacrifice in making the long trip to San Antonio, and for their performance as the representatives of Fort Benning.

The Flyers closed out their spring season last night against the Columbus Cruise-a-matics, in a match under the lights at Doughboy Stadium. Next week, we will provide results of the game and a season wrap-up.

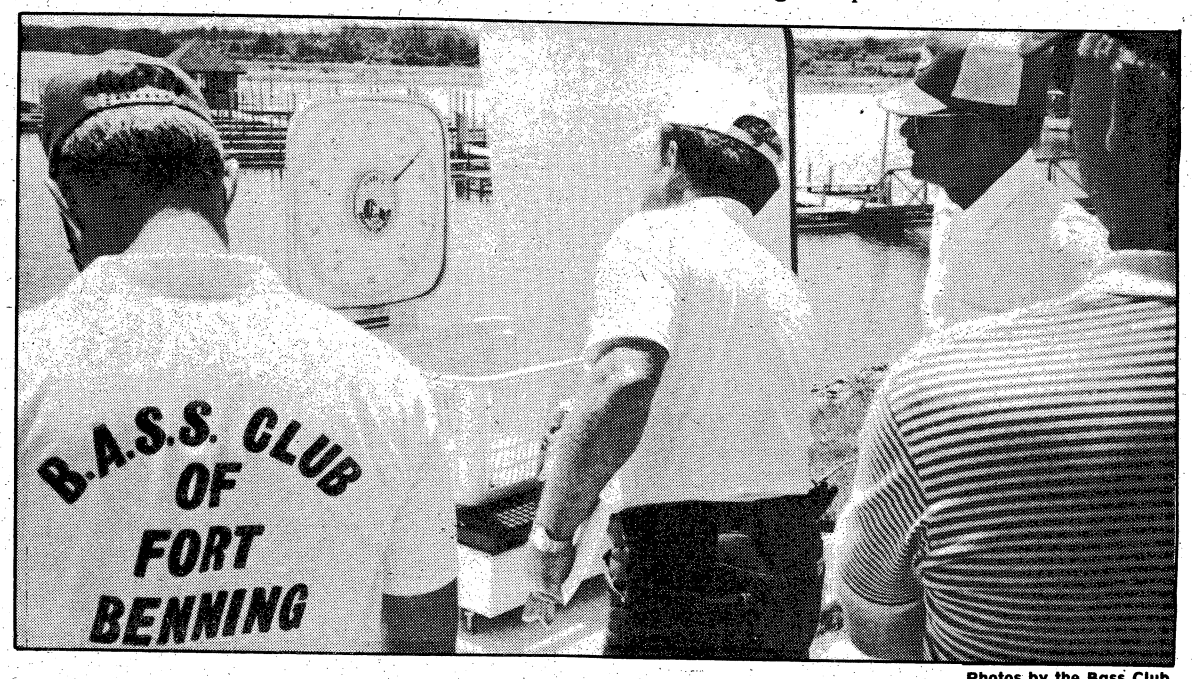
Benning Bass Club 'reels in' Georgia chapter award

Bass Club

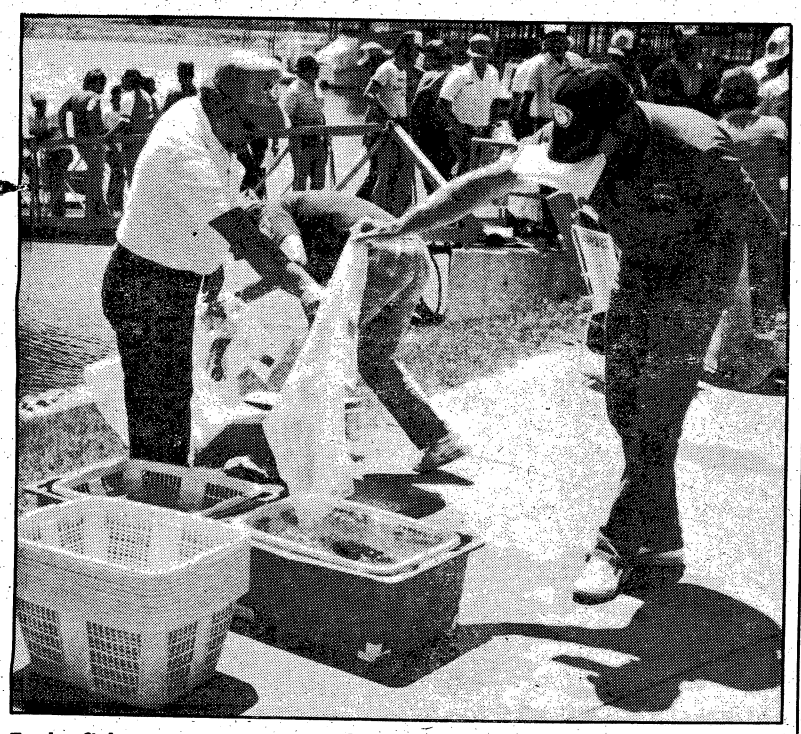
The Bass Club of Fort Benning has been named winner of the 1985 Henry Ferris Memorial Award. This annual Georgia Bass Chapter Federation award is named in honor of a past president of the Club and recognizes outstanding activities in the categories of chapter development, conservation, youth programs, community service, tournament competition and public relations.



The "conservation programs" of the Club include numerous clean-up and beautification projects in both Georgia and Alabama, a highly successful catch-and-release program returning more than 90 percent of the tournament caught bass back to be caught again and extensive communication and work with State and Federal environmental agencies.

The Club's "youth program" has many facets and is highlighted by conduct of a Boy Scout Merit Badge Clinic to aid Scouts in attaining their fishing and motor boating merit badges. The Bass Club developed the "how to" booklet for this clinic that has been adopted by the Boy Scouts of America as their official handbook on the subject.

The Club has always been at the top of the list in supporting community service activities. Their contributions of time and manpower go to support numerous benefit tournaments such as for the Grady Hospital Burn Unit for Children and the "Dreams Come True" foundation.



The annual "Tri-Community Super Bowl Tournament" was hosted, and won, by the Club in April. This is a public relations event in which prominent citizens of the Tri-Community are invited to fish as observers with members of several local bass clubs. The primary purpose being to demonstrate and promote sportsmanship, conservation and safety in boating and bass fishing.

The Bass Club of Fort Benning has a reputation throughout the Georgia Bass Chapter Federation as a quality organization with a "can do" attitude and winning the Henry Ferris Memorial Award is an accomplishment to be proud of.

The Fort Benning Bass Club fishermen, winners of the 1985 Henry Ferris Memorial Award, gather at the scales for a recent weigh-in. The scales bring the fisherman's tales to life.

Each fisherman separates his catch in preparation for the weigh-in.

Post anglers share stories about 'one that got away'

by Sally Roberts
197th Public Affairs Office

It may sound like just another fish story but it was the one that got away that was the difference between first and second place for Maj. Pete Elkins and SFC Bob Bryant. The two anglers took second place in the 4th Annual National Crappiethon Classic fishing tournament on Lake Wheeler near Decatur, Ala. recently.

Elkins, a legal officer from Fort Bragg, N.C. and Bryant, 197th Infantry Brigade legal noncommissioned officer, won the tournament last year and returned to defend their title. They brought in 14.31 pounds of fish and won the big fish of the day with a 1.8 pound crappie. But, that wasn't enough to beat two anglers from Warner Robins, Ga. who slid by with 14.59 pounds of fish.

Elkins and Bryant were netting all of their catch during the one-day tournament, except the first one — the one that got away. Bryant estimated that fish at about three-quarters of a pound.

Elkins fished from the front of the boat using a Garland lure. Bryant threw out behind the boat, using the same lure but with a fly rod.

Although they missed out on first place, the team still brought home a $5,000 prize for a day's fishing.

Capt. Glenn Dubis scored two national championship victories while Lt. Col. Lones Wigger won a third during this year's National 300-Meter Rifle Matches and World Team tryouts.

The annual championships were conducted at Fort Benning's Hook International Range May 15 to 18, with more than 40 of the top international rifle competitors in attendance.

Dubis, a member of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, won both the 300-Meter Position and English Match events and placed second in the Standard Rifle event after losing in a tie-breaking procedure to Lt. Col. Wigger, also of USAMU.

Both competitors finished with identical scores of 1,152 out of 1,200 in the Standard Rifle championship, with Wigger being declared the winner on the basis of a 97 in his last 10 shot series to 96 for Dubis.

The victory marked the 10th time Wigger has won the Standard Rifle title since his first win in 1969.

In the position championship, Dubis outscored Wigger in the three-day event by 19 points with a winning total of 3,465. Maj. Robert Aylward, also of USAMU, finished third in the event at 3,439 points.

The championships were also used as final tryouts for the 1986 United States Shooting Team that will compete in the World 300-Meter Rifle events in Skovade, Sweden, from August 26 to Sept. 2.

Members selected to this year's team include Dubis, Wigger and Aylward of USAMU. Also selected were Meredith and Kimes of the Army Reserve.

Softball enthusiasts begin play; 118 teams set for new season

Story and photos by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The National Baseball League currently has 12 teams registered, while the American Baseball League sports 14, but competing in the Fort Benning Softball League are 118 teams.

This figure does not include the 23 baseball teams of the Youth Activities Division.

"Softball has been one of Fort Benning's earliest traditions," said Speedy Austin, Sports Coordinator.

With some teams playing two games per week, Fort Benning hosts more than 280 games each week.

September 1943, with one week to go in the regular season, the leading team, 3rd Armored Regiment, had a 4-0 record. The season ended with the championship team playing only seven games.

Today's teams are prepared to play more than 20 regular season games.

Last season closed out with the "Intruders" dominating the Women's Softball League, while "A Team" from Company A, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, claimed number one in post baseball.

The "A Team" was known as the comeback team of last year's season, coming back from a 4-1 deficit to beat Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade, 5-4 to claim the post softball crown.

This year, the defending champs hope to come out leading the field as did the "Intruders."

The "Intruders" had a perfect season record, finishing at 24-0.

Defeating the "Bandits" in last year's playoff competition sent the "Intruders" into 1986 in search of their fifth straight women's championship title.

"This year we will be in the rebuilding stages," said Albert McGruder, "Intruder" coach for the past six years. "We lost five players who we had come to depend on for speed," he said.

With the loss of a few players, McGruder's team may have to sacrifice its fast start.

"We are hoping to pick up a few fast players," the coach said. "But, we don't plan to rely on our speed, we'll look more towards our power this year."

Competition is expected to be intense, as the many Fort Benning teams have begun to chase the winning records, in hopes of de-throning last year's champs.

Taps

Goeth day,
Cometh night;
And a star
Leadeth all,
Speedeth all
To their rest.

Another version:

When your last Day is past
From afar
Some bright star
O'er your grave
Watch will keep,
While you sleep
With the brave

But "Taps" wasn't always taps. The French "L'Extinction des Feux" ("Lights Out") was originally used by the American Army to signal the end of the day. A particular favorite of Napoleon, it didn't suit Butterfield.

Butterfield, a Medal of Honor awardee, composed "Taps" one night in the hopes it would comfort the men under his command. Their morale had sunk to a new low during heavy fighting near Richmond, Va. Their hopes for an early end to the war and reunions with their wives and families had been dashed when they were informed that help would not be coming. Dug in for the night, Butterfield, without knowing a note of music, composed what we know today as "Taps." The next morning Butterfield summoned the Brigade bugler and hummed the melody he had composed. After a few tries, Oliver W. Norton had mastered the call. At nightfall, he played "Taps" officially for the first time.

Norton would later write about the reaction to "Taps": "The music was beautiful on that still summer night, and was heard beyond the limit of the Butterfield Brigade as it echoed through the valleys. The next morning, buglers from other brigades came to inquire about the Taps."

Later in the same campaign, "Taps" was used for the first time in connection with a military funeral.

In this case, a soldier from "A" of the 2nd Artillery had been Capt. John D. Tidball's Battery mortally wounded. Since the unit was so close to the enemy in a forward position and hidden in the woods, Butterfield decided it would be unwise and dangerous to fire the three traditional volleys over the soldier's grave. He decided instead to have "Taps" played. From that time on, all the units in the Army of the Potomac adopted "Taps" as a custom at military funerals.

The Army officially adopted "Taps" in 1874; by 1900, the other services had followed suit.

It was, and still is, the custom to fire three volleys over the grave of a deceased soldier to signify the end of the funeral ceremony. This custom originated in the early funeral rites of the Romans. The Romans would throw dirt over the coffin three times and call the dead three times by name to mark the end to a funeral ceremony. Today, when three volleys are fired at military funerals, it is a way of biding a soldier farewell three times.

Fitness nuts urged to approach with caution

Training and Doctrine Command

In this day of exercise crazes, it seems that everyone is into health and fitness. But before you begin revitalizing yourself, here are a few tips you should consider:

● Exercise programs are great, but they do have some risks. Before starting an independent exercise program, consult with your physician. Exercise is an important part of weight loss, but you must also push yourself away from the table. Combine your exercise program with a sensible diet.

● Diets should be planned under the supervision of a doctor so as not to endanger your health. Your physician will plan a diet for you based on your age, height and frame. Once you enter the world of calorie counters you will find your eating habits changing. You still may be eating many of your favorite foods, but the portions will be smaller and may be prepared differently. Just remember that dieting is one activity in which losing is winning.

● Stress is something that nobody can escape. Learning to handle it is the key. Train yourself not to get upset about things you cannot change.

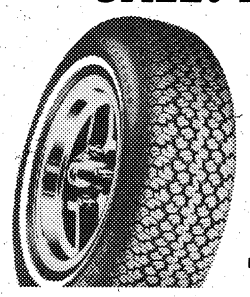
● Breaking the smoking habit is not easy, but 30 million Americans have done it. You learned to be a smoker and now you must learn to be a nonsmoker. If trying to stop "cold turkey" is too tough, try easing out of the habit by smoking each cigarette halfway or by not inhaling every cigarette. Even if you've been smoking for years, if you quit now you can add more years to your life.

● More and more people are getting involved in some type of exercise and regular exercise can do a lot for you. It can develop an efficient cardiovascular system, lower your blood pressure and relieve stress and tension. Exercise can give you a daily feeling of well-being.

● Tailor your exercise to your individual lifestyle. Include activities you know you will do. A really effective program should be aerobic in nature. Common aerobic activities are running, walking, jogging, swimming, and aerobic dancing. Exercise for a fuller, healthier life.

● What you eat has an effect on your health. No single food supplies all the essential nutrients you need. To assure a well-balanced diet, your daily food intake should include fruits and vegetables, cereals and breads, meats, poultry, fish and eggs, dry peas and beans and milk, cheese or yogurt.

● To lose weight you must take in fewer calories than you burn. Fats and sweets are high in calories and low in nutrients, so if you are sincere about losing weight, limit these foods in your diet. Foods containing high amounts of sodium also are foods that should be eaten sparingly. Remember, what you eat affects the length and qualify of your life.



● Because you feel well doesn't always mean that your blood pressure is normal. Many people think that only nervous and tense people get high blood pressure. Not true. Many calm, relaxed people are victims. Regular checkups will let you know if your blood pressure is too high. High blood pressure can be treated and controlled, and many who have it live full and healthy lives.

197th heads for training in Canada

by Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

An armored task force of more than 600 Kelley Hill soldiers departed Fort Benning last week for a month of training in Canada.

The 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers traveled to Camp Wainwright, Alberta, where they joined elements of the 1st Canadian Brigade Group.

Initially, the soldiers are planning to participate in a field training exercise with Canadian, British and other U.S. troops from Alaska. Following the exercise, the 197th soldiers are scheduled to conduct gunnery training on Camp Wainwright's extensive tank gunnery ranges.

The 197th soldiers are from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry; 197th Support Battalion; 72nd Engineers; 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery and Headquarters Company, 197th Brigade.

Energy office announces contest winners

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Nine youngsters will be riding in style this summer on brand new bicycles, thanks to their energy awareness.

Dr. Rollo Baumgartner, superintendent of post schools, announced the winners of an energy awareness contest Wednesday. "An Energy Wise Summer" was the theme of the contest, which was sponsored by the Post Energy Office.

Post Chief of Staff James Ellis and Baumgartner will present the new bicycles to the students at a ceremony today at Dexter School at 10 a.m.

Rodney Carroll, an Energy Office spokesman, said the children responded overwhelmingly to the contest.

"More than 2,000 youngsters submitted entries to us, and got into the spirit of the contest," he said. The contest was designed to promote energy awareness in students, who will hopefully take home what they learn about energy and help their family conserve.

Students in kindergarden through third grade drew posters, and those in grades four through eight wrote essays on the theme "An Energy Wise Summer."

Energy saving tips ranged from "Use Pool to Keep Cool" from kindergardener Phillip Padden, to curbing air conditioning use by eighth grader David Bjarnason.

Following is a listing of the winners:

Phillip Padden-Wilbur School; Jamie Woodul-Wilbur School; Ryan Pivonka-Dexter School; Laquetta Gray-Wilbur School; Linda Wright-Loyd School; Maurine Shields-Dexter School; Ryan Black-Faith School; Bobby Gipson-Faith School; and David David Bjarnason-Faith School.

Cigarette smoking deadly, not glamorous

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

You don't jump into deep water if you can't swim because you'll probably end up dead from drowning. You don't try to leap tall buildings in a single bound because that results in death by compression on the hard sidewalk below. You don't run wildly in front of an M-60 machinegun firing line on a qualification range because your body will resemble that cheese, Swiss, full of holes. You don't pump your system full of alcohol until you're blind and then attempt to drive during the 5 o'clock rush hour because you'll end up dead. You just don't do these things because you'll obviously be stacking the deck in the favor of the Grim Reaper, Death. Then tell me, why do you smoke?

People die every year from lung cancer caused by smoking tobacco. I don't care what the tobacco lobbyists and their public relations people tell us about "inconclusive evidence" and "facts not fully substantiated or proven." If you smoke tobacco you're greatly increasing your chances of prematurely dying. And that brings us to smoking and the Army.

For a long time, smoking was viewed as sophisticated and glamorous. Remember John Wayne, lighting up a Lucky after taking some "Jap-infested" hill in the Pacific? He would sit down, steel pot pushed back on his head, look out over the pile of dead Nipponese that he had personally waxed with a hand-held .30 caliber machinegun, and draw the rich, aromatic tobacco smoke into his lungs, refreshing and renewing himself. Pure bliss, except when you take into account two things: •John Wayne, just like in his movies, smoked — a lot. •John Wayne died after cancer, caused by smoking, ravaged his body and left him a skeleton of his former robust self and, ultimately, a corpse.

Now, the Army is heavily pushing physical training and soldiers staying in shape. It has something to do with the fact that combat is, if nothing else, a vigorous undertaking. Infantrymen jump ditches, crawl under obstacles, run up hills, sprint from firing position to firing position, stay awake long hours with no sleep, move great distances on foot and carry heavy loads of personal equipment, ammunition and weapons. It is a given that to be successful in a business like this that you must be fit, especially aerobically fit. Where does smoking fit into all of this? Nowhere.

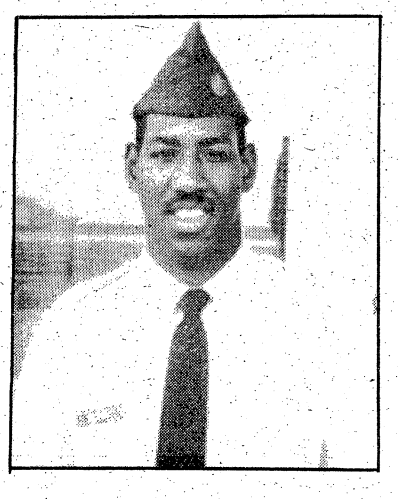
The Army currently mandates that all of its soldiers will be fit to fight. The Army also mandates that all of its soldiers will meet strict height and weight requirements. In other words, you gotta' be in shape and you can't be fat. Where does smoking fit into being fit? Nowhere.

If the Army is going to require soldiers to be fit and not fat can't they, shouldn't they, go one step further and ban smoking? If it takes a fit soldier to win on the modern battlefield because of the overwhelming number of soldiers the threat can put into the field against us, and if we must fight and win outnumbered, then the life of every American soldier is precious and must be jealously guarded. Where does smoking fit into this? Nowhere.

Even getting off the soapbox of high ideals and looking at smoking from the general, everyday level, the habit is nauseating.

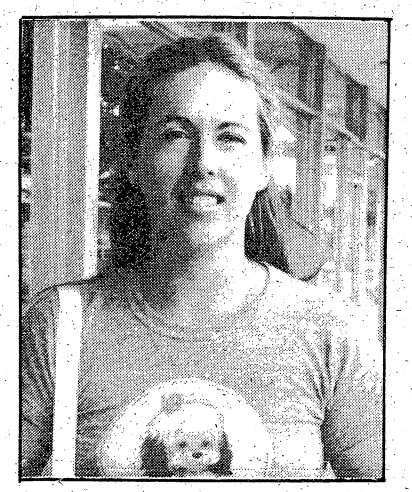
Smokers teeth are stained a yellowish brown. Their fingers become stained with nicotine from handling all those cigarettes. Their clothes and hair reek of the sour, burnt smell of cigarette smoke. Much of the time, ashes from their burning sticks of tobacco cling to their clothes, lie strewn on their desks and work areas and fill usually-overflowing ashtrays as the grim residue of people slowly smoking themselves to death. I won't even go into those lovely people who, after eating, light up, smoke and then grind their cigarette butts and ashes into the remains of left over food on their plates.

The Army is currently urging its soldiers to voluntarily give up tobacco. Given the health hazards, the Army's fitness-minded leaders and the fact that the Army usually leads the way in breaking new ground for civilians to follow, I think the use of tobacco will be banned in the Army in the very near future.



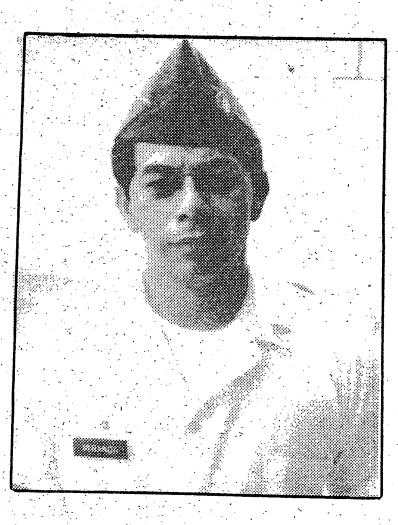
Just like "you don't spit in the wind or pull on Superman's cape," you shouldn't light up or put that pinch between cheek and gum. Where do those actions fit into the living of your life? Nowhere. They're real killers.

Various voices



Do you think military members should be allowed to smoke?

PFC Ramona C. Miller, 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group — "It is a person's privilege to decide whether or not they wish to smoke. The military should not pose a ban on anyone's personal decisions."



SP4 Brian K. Smith, 215th Area Finance Support Center, 36th Engineer Group — "I don't smoke and don't mind others who smoke, as long as they are considerate. The only rule should be that it be banned in public places."

Lorraine Jones, family member — "There should be no ban on an individual who wishes to smoke. It is a personal decision. I don't want the smoke blown in my face, but others should have the right to decide what happens to their bodies."

SP4 Patrick L.M. Kuhn, 533rd Transportation Company, 36th Engineer Group — "Absolutely. There should be a ban. I am against all smoking. It is a bad habit, it causes cancer and it is not healthy for the soldiers."

SSgt. Emiro C. Miranda, U.S. Army School of Americas — "There should be rules as to smoking in dining facilities, barracks, libraries and other public places, but there should not be a ban on smoking for the military members who enjoy smoking."

Op-Ed

Child abuse's other face: the innocent family

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Army communities take care of their own and Fort Benning is no exception. In December 1985, a soldier's home burned while he was away. The Fort Benning community responded overwhelmingly, donating clothing, toys, furniture and household goods to help the family set up new quarters.

Fellow soldiers from within the unit and from other units with no direct connection to the family donated cash to help the family get back on its feet. People just couldn't do enough to help them.

Right now, another Army family is undergoing a different kind of crisis, one that threatens to tear the unit apart.

A 25-year-old sergeant was convicted May 12 of sexually abusing his stepchildren. He was sentenced to nine years in prison, reduction to private, total forfeiture of all pay and allowances and a dishonorable discharge from the service.

The victims, his wife and three stepchildren, continue to pay the price for his crimes against them.

"It's been bad for the whole family," said his wife, Mary (not her real name). I feel disgusted, rundown and depressed."

Since the family no longer qualifies for government housing, they've been asked to move. Housing officials aren't pushing them onto the street, but a deadline has been set, with the Army providing movers.

Mary has to come up with the money for housing and utility deposits, and with no pay coming in she doesn't know where it will come from.

Her teenage son is presently hospitalized at the Bradley Center. There are plans to move him soon to West Central Georgia Regional Hospital, where he'll probably be treated for the next couple of years. Her two daughters both go to the Bradley Center several times a week for therapy, as does Mary herself.

The family is still covered by Civilian Health and Medical Plan of the Uniformed Services, which will continue to pay 80 percent of the therapy bills until her husband's dishonorable discharge is finalized, 14 to 18 months from now.

Mary is responsible for paying the other 20 percent and the debts of the marriage. One of the family cars is already being repossessed and all she has left to sell is some worn out furniture.

She tries not to let the children know how serious the money situation is, because they have problems enough without knowing that. "Seeing their brother in a straightjacket, raving at us, was hard enough on the girls," Mary said.

She doesn't have a job. She lost her last one, as a telephone salesperson, when she had to miss work because of the children. "Who'd hire me when I have to go to the Bradley Center four days a week to take the kids for therapy?" she said. "And how can I leave my daughter alone when her therapist says the child might get depressed and kill herself?"

Mary did all the right things when she found out the abuse was going on. She believed her children when they told her about it, which prosecutors say is the exception rather than the rule in such cases. She immediately called in post authorities and had her husband arrested.

"She came through for us and testified, and stuck to her guns to help convict him," said Maj. Charles A. Coffin, chief of the Military Justice Section with the Staff Judge Advocate's Office. "I'm just sorry his crimes continue to hurt this family."

Mary praises the staff at Military Justice. "They supported us throughout this whole thing and are now working to get our moving deadline extended," she said.

A few friends in the neighborhood have helped, as have a few individuals from her husband's unit. Some friends of her daughter have been supportive, which has helped the child a lot, Mary said. She's talked to a sergeant at Army Emergency Relief, who said he'll look into the case.

She said she doesn't regret going through with the trial. "It has helped the kids to know that he is being punished for what he did," she said.

Now she's just worried about what is going to happen to her family. If she cannot find a home, she'll be forced to put the kids into foster care, at a time when the childrens' therapist said they need their mom the most.

"I can see why other mothers don't report it, because they have too much to lose," Mary said. "Even though I did the right thing, I need a miracle now to keep this family together."

Child sexual abuse is a subject that is distasteful to everybody. We don't want to think that it happens in our community. When we read about someone being convicted, we're glad he's getting what he deserves. This soldier is currently assigned to a cell at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, where he's sure of a roof over his head and three meals a day for the next nine years.

It's too bad his victims can't say the same.

'Bureaucratese' caused coining of 'gobbledygook'

by Roy H. Copperud
Editor and Publisher Magazine

FORT MONROE, Va. — The use of gobbledygook in its present sense, the turgid language characteristic of bureaucracy, was popularized by Maury Maverick in an article that appeared May 21, 1944, in the "New York Times."

Some hold that Rep. Maverick did not originate the term, but there is no question that his article, protesting the diction used in reports of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, of which he was then chairman, popularized it. "Be short and say what you are talking about," Maverick exhorted. "Stop 'pointing up' programs, 'finalizing' contracts that 'stem from' the district, regional, or Washington levels. No more 'effectuating' or 'dynamics.' Anyone using the words 'activation' or 'implementation; will be shot." But alas, more than 40 years have gone by and Washington prose is worse than ever. Not only that, but many of the expressions Maverick denounced have gone into common use.

A good illustration of gobbledygook and its cure developed in a wartime press conference at which President Franklin D. Roosevelt read an order concerning blackouts that had been prepared by the director of civilian defense:

"Such preparations shall be made as will completely obscure all federal buildings and nonfederal buildings occupied by the federal government during an air raid for any period of time from visibility by reason of internal or external illumination. Such obscuration may be obtained either by blackout construction or by terminating the illumination. This will of course require that in building areas where production must continue during a blackout, construction must be provided so that internal illumination, may continue. Other areas, whether or not occupied by personnel, may be obscured by terminating the illumination."

After the reading of this order had been interrupted several times by laughter from the reporters present, President Roosevelt directed that it be reworded.

"Tell them that in buildings that will have to keep their work going, put something across the windows. In buildings that can afford it, so that work can be stopped for a while, turn out the lights."

Another splendid example of gobbledygook appeared in the Federal Register in Washington in an attempt to define the term ultimate consumer in reference to eggs:

"Ultimate consumer means a person or group of persons, generally constituting a domestic household, who purchase eggs generally at the store of retailers or purchase and receive deliveries of eggs at the place of abode of the individual or domestic household from producers or retain route sellers and who use sugh eggs for consumption as food."

This was indignantly translated as "Ultimate consumers are people who buy eggs to eat them."

Flight surgeon sky-high on flying, medicine

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Gary Goforth is a doctor with a thriving clinic that takes care of all the medical needs for more than 2,300 people. His clinic has been cited as a model that other doctors should emulate and his patients love the care they get. Gary Goforth is also a captain on active duty in the Army at Fort Benning.

Goforth, 31, is the Chief of Aviation Medicine Service Clinic and also runs a thriving family practice in the same clinic.

"Dr. John Bucholtz and I take care of 300 Army pilots and more than 2,000 family members and retirees in our clinic. We're both flight surgeons and have specialized in family practice medicine," said the quiet-spoken officer.

On the aviation medicine side of the house, Goforth said Army pilots have to be taken care of because of their mission.

"An aviator is entrusted with the lives of his or her crew and passengers and with an expensive piece of equipment. If a pilot has a medical problem or is taking the wrong kind of medicine and flying it could spell disaster for everyone aboard. That's a flight surgeon's job: to take care of pilots so they can safely fly," Goforth said.

The doctor related that, because of all the training , time and equipment used to train an aviator, flight surgeons must not only diagnose an aviator's present condition but how that condition will be in 10 or 15 years. This is also the reason why the Army has such stringent physical requirements for aviators and why they must pass an annual flight physical.

"With the extensive training and responsibilities the Army gives its aviators, flight surgeons have to ensure that both brand new and veteran fliers are top notch," said Goforth.

To stay in touch with the fliers he treats, Goforth spends one day each week on the flight line. He frequently flies and is something of a pilot himself.

"I've always been interested in flying. I received my private pilot's license in high school and flew some in college also," said the Vanderbilt graduate.

After serving his residency at Trippler Army Medical Center in Hawaii, Goforth attended a seven-week flight surgeon's class. Included in this training was 15 hours of flight time in a TH-55 helicopter and a solo flight in the aircraft for the final test. Goforth said he still gets in about an hour of flying in every month in an Army aircraft but there must be an instructor pilot with him.

"When one of our fliers comes in and complains of hand cramps from flying or describes a medical problem peculiar to flying, I know what they're talking about and why they're having the problem," said Goforth.

"This job, because of the flying, can be a lot of fun," he said, grinning.

The doctor's first love seems to be, however, his family practice.

"We treat people here from birth to grave. I get to treat and care for just about everything, including obstetrics. In family practice it's great because our patients get to see the same doctor each time and we're seeing the same patients. It develops into a positive doctor-patient relationship that is good for everyone involved," Goforth said.

The clinic, besides its two doctors, employs two licensed practical nurses, three technicians in flight physicals, one secretary, an appointment clerk and a non-commissioned officer in charge.

Recently, when the Chief of the Air Medical Education Division inspected Goforth's clinic, the inspector praised the fact that the doctor's organization was close to the airfield and that it ran aviation medicine along with a family practice. The inspector's final comment on the clinic was "Don't change a thing."

"There's a great staff here and great patients. I feel we lead the Army in running an aviation medicine clinic combined with family practice. It's great," said Goforth.

Airborne troop jumps into USAIB history books

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

SP4 Zulika Oliver made history at the U.S. Army Infantry Board recently when she became the first woman assigned there to earn the parachutist badge.

The 23-year-old Connecticut native said her April 24 graduation marked the achievement of a goal she'd been striving for since joining the Army a year and a half ago.

"I wanted to go straight to Airborne School after graduating from advanced individual training, but they put me off, saying I should wait until I got to my permanent duty station," she said. "Then once I got here, they said I had to be in my job for six months before I was allowed to attend any schools."

Although her USAIB job as a behavioral science specialist does not require her to be on jump status, Oliver said going to jump school is something she's always wanted to do.

"It was a challenge, something I'd always been curious about," she said.

She said the school was a lot of hard work, but the first jump made it worth all the effort.

"It's a great feeling when you step out that door, your adrenalin starts pumping while you're waiting for your 'chute to open, and then the feeling of serenity once it does is really something," Oliver said.

She's assigned to the Human Factors Section, Analysis and Technical Support Division, USAIB, where she helps administer questionnaires and compiles test data.

Senior NCO from Down Under on top of things as instructor

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The dictionary defines a wombat as "any of several sturdily built Australian marsupials having stocky bodies, short legs and rudimentary tails and in general resembling small bears."

He dosen't look like a wombat, but that's what his students call Staff Michael W. Tugwell, an instructor for the Combined Arms and Tactics Division of the U.S. Army Infantry School here.

Tugwell was recently selected as the senior enlisted instructor of the month. But that is not what makes him unique.

Tugwell's uniqueness lies in the fact that he is one of the few Australian soldiers who has been selected for duty in the United States.

"It's a great honor to be selected for a post overseas," Tugwell says, in a thick British accent.

"I only know of three other conventional infantry senior noncommissioned officers (Australian) who are holding instructor jobs in other countries."

The soft-spoken Australian sits casually, trying hard not to put his feet on the desk. His small frame is covered in the light colored camouflage battle dress uniform of his army. His eyes jump around the room as if to look for the answers to the questions asked of him.

He speaks of being one of three children who helped his father shear sheep on a farm in Western Australia and how he joined the Australian army to do something different.

After becoming a soldier in 1973, he became qualified to teach.

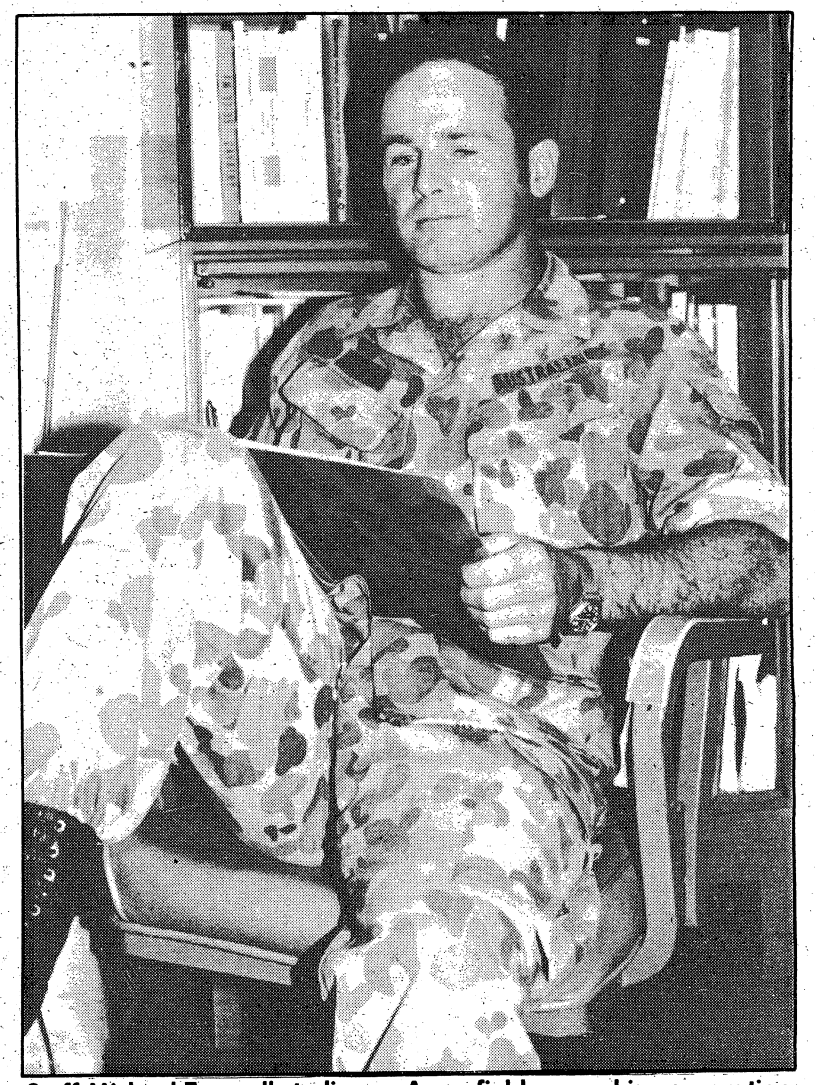
"I've only been teaching for four years total, two years of which are equivalant to being a drill sergeant here," Tugwell says.

His rank is that of a "staff." He explains that is comparable to "somewhere between an E-7 and an E-8 in your Army."

Tugwell explains that he has been fortunate to be able to travel as a member of the Australian army. He says that most of their soldiers stay in their homeland.

"I spent six months in 1983 working with the British army in England during a yearly exchange among Australia, New Zealand and Britain," he says.

He also spent two weeks working with the Berlin Brigade in military operations in urban terrain.



As an instructor with the Infantry Officer Basic Course, the Officer Candidate School and the Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course, Tugwell had some adjusting to do.

"The methods of instructing are different here. The four steps in the beginning presentation and in the conclusion are slightly different. But it doesn't matter which way you do it, it achieves the same goal," Tugwell says.

Where Fort Benning is concerned, Australia seems to only send the cream of the crop.

Tugwell being picked as instructor of the month is almost traditional. "It's not the first time an Australian NCO has been awarded instructor of Airborne liaison takes care of new paratroopers

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Airborne Liaison office here is a busy place. Many soldiers stop in unannounced just to ask questions, while some come seeking reassurance on an uncertain future.

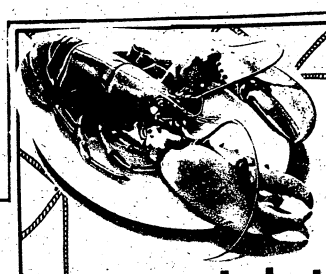
SSgt. Marlon Conklin, Liaison Noncommissioned Officer for the XVIII Airborne Corps and the 82nd Airborne Division, stays busy briefing soldiers headed for Fort Bragg, N.C. He ensures that their paperwork is in order and finds troopers to fill vacanies with the Army's only airborne corps.

Conklin's responsibilties involve many different areas.

His main mission is to make sure all of the airborne soldiers coming into and out of Fort Benning are "squared away and have all their records," he said,

In addition, "I offer them the opportunity to terminate (training.) I'd rather have them do it in here than out there," Conklin said, pointing to the field with the jump towers.

In an effort to establish a method to his mission, Conklin separates the airborne students into two groups. The first group is made up of those soldiers not targeted for assignment at Fort Bragg, but who are interested in going there. Troopers headed for Bragg make up the second group.



Conklin gives a briefing and shows a film to acquaint the soldiers with the airborne way of life at Fort Bragg. He takes the names of those who are interested in going there and forwards them to the Department of the Army.

"The outcome is totally up to D.A. It can take up to two weeks before we know anything," Conklin said.

The liaison also handles unique problems that may plague the airborne student. "Each week it's something different. Our most common problem is guys bringing their families here for the duration of their airborne training. It's nothing we can't handle," Conklin said. "I also get a lot guys who are thinking of quitting. I tell them that there are a lot of guys at Bragg who graduated the long course (referring to training recycles)," Conklin added.

The Airborne Liaison Office never seems too busy to meet the needs of the soldiers. Most of those who drop in to see Conklin, whatever the problem, leave Fort Benning as a qualified paratrooper.

Something different? Try Hunt Club hayride

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Tired of the same old cocktail parties? If your office or group is looking for something different to do, the Fort Benning stables may offer the answer.

The Hunt Club offers hayrides and horseback riding to groups of as many as 30 people at reasonable rates.

Patti Stuart, treasurer of the club, said hayrides are $3 a person plus a $20 refundable deposit to make the reservation.

Larry McGlaun, the manager of the club, said they'll provide whatever people want. "A hayride can last from one to four hours, with riders following or leading on the trail," he said.

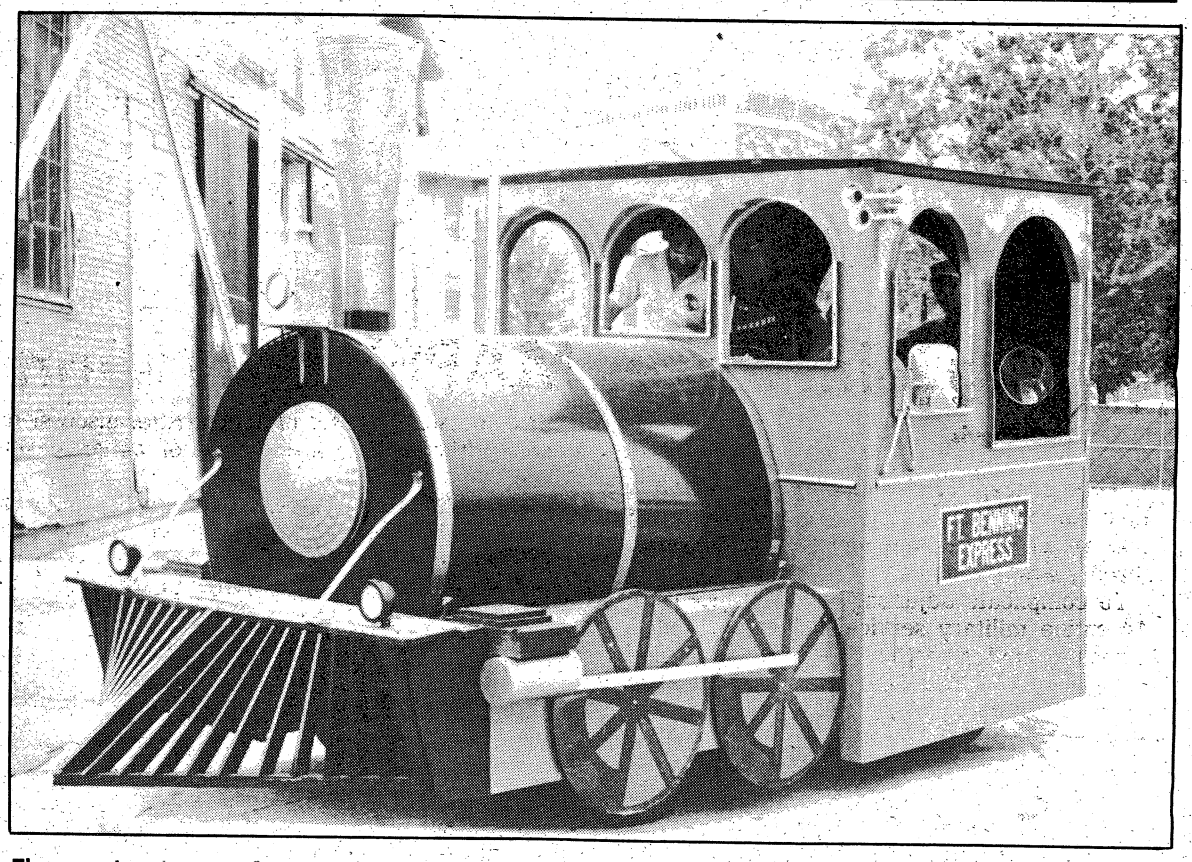
Horses are $7 an hour for non-club members.

"We can serve beginning riders, as well as accomplished horsemen," he said.

The club has more than 400 acres of trails with jumps that can be jumped or bypassed, he said. It offers riding lessons for $7 an hour including the horse, to people age 4 and up.

Space is also available to board horses, McGlaun said. "We can provide full boarding services, including the stall and feeding, or we will just rent the stall and let the owner do the feeding."

If you do your own feeding, it's $23 a month, plus an $18 monthly membership fee.



Rates for lessons and horses are half price to members.

Any active-duty or retired military and their families can use the stables.

The stables have 13 horses available for rent. McGlaun said some of them are very gentle, suitable for beginning riders, as well as more spirited mounts for the accomplished horseman.

Wives and officers of the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry enjoy a hay ride during a hail and farewell party at the Hunt Club.

The newly renovated Fort Benning Express train is ready for parades and special events.

It's not the Chattanooga Choo-Choo nor the Wabash Cannonball, it's the Fort Benning Express.

The train is a refurbished mock-up version of one built four years ago to run in parades and and special events.

The original train was built of wood over an M-151 jeep motor and pulled three carts that held a total of 60 passengers.

"The original (train) participated in Christmas parades downtown. We used it for any military activity that requested it." said Johny Mahone, shop foreman for the Allied Trade Shop 1.

Since the first train made such a hit it was decided to build another when the original began to fall apart.

"The first one has since deteriorated away, so we built an-another one and it was completed just in time for the Association of the U.S. Army Armed Forces Day Parade.

The new train's body is made of sheet metal and it will soon have a smoke stack that will put out real steam.

VA Q & A

Editor's Note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors.

Q — May the current monthly rate of VA benefits received by a veteran be released to a third party?

A — Yes. The monthly amount of benefits is considered public information, however, the information concerning the veteran's disabilities cannot be released without the veteran's prior consent.

Q — My father is a Medal of Honor recipient and receives $200 a month from the government. Will this affect this eligibility for a nonservice-connected pension?

A — No. Receipt of this special award is independent of and in addition to any other benefit the veteran may be awarded by the VA or other federal agency.

Q — I received widow's benefits from the Veterans Administration based on my first husband's military service. The benefits stopped when I remarried. My second husband has died. Can I start receiving VA benefits again?

A — You should furnish the VA with your second husband's death certificate and a request to have your eligibility for widow's benefits based on your first husband's service reconsidered.

US Army, Argentina cement relations during joint forces MAPEX operation

by Susan B. Sands
Oregon Army National Guard

The concept of civilian control over the military is a reality in the United States. But in Argentina the concept is new and has only existed for three years.

To complicate adjusting to that concept, each Argentine military service had enjoyed relative autonomy under past governments. The idea of components working together was as untraditional as answering to a civilian minister of defense. A drastic military budget cut, coupled with major economic upheaval, brought some significant changes in thinking among their military leadership.

A recent presentation by Gen. John R. Galvin to Argentina's military leaders on his role as commander in chief, U.S. Southern Command (Southcom), created strong interest for more exchange of ideas between the U.S. and Argentine military. An area of special interest was joint planning: learning how to bring together all service components during military operations.

Southcom's staff worked with experts at the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA) to modify a Joint Planning Map Exercise (MAPEX) to meet immediate needs and interests of the Argentine leaders. The result was a 10-day MAPEX called "Casablanca," conducted last April andinvolving 35 Argentinians and 11 U.S. servicemen.

The MAPEX compared the joint planning processes of the two nations. It also showed how various service components might use their individual expertise to work together. The result was successful. It showed surprising similarities to the U.S. planning process.

The U.S. role in the phased exercise was that of umpire and co-director. The officers from Southcom and USARSA contributed much expertise.

The Argentine officers, who came from comparable staff levels, were split into two task forces. Argentina also provided a co-director and several advisors.

After an initial briefing comparing methods of joint operations planning, "Casablanca" was introduced. It required developing a joint plan to evacuate 5,000 individuals from "Casablanca." In the scenario, the threat of a large guerrilla force had generated the need for a massive evacuation directed by an Joint Task Force.

Using the assigned mission, intelligence, logistics and personnel estimates, the players took three possible courses of action. After discussions and critiques, the best course of action developed.

Lt. Col. Jaime Torres-Rivera, U.S. Southern Command J-5 said, "The players were amazed at how well they worked together, and what good solutions came from their discussions. The U.S. military was also surprised at how similar Argentine solutions compared with ours, all with little help from advisors. Their solutions were like U.S. approaches, and in some cases, much better." Torres added that the problem solving process was the same; only the semantics were different.

Torres explained that, regardless of the forces scale used, the same attention-to-detail and prioritizing takes place.

"The informal discussion and exchange of ideas throughout the exercise showed a willingness to learn from each other. The group dynamics were especially good," said Torres.

"Discussions were open and friendly, and ran the gamut from economics to politics."

For U.S. officers, the exercise tested their Spanish language skills. Torres said, "The Argentines were especially pleased with our efforts to reach out to them. I think it motivated the players to participate even more."

The "joint" flavor of the exercise was reflected in the closing ceremonies in Buenos Aires on April 18, 1986. The secretary of the Minister of Defense, the chief of the armed forces, and chiefs of staff and representatives from each branch participated in the event.

"Senior military officials in Argentina are committed to making democracy work, despite deep cuts in their budget," Torres said. "They're true professionals who see that everyone has to adjust their thinking. Military reorganization is just one of many changes in Argentina as its democratic lifestyle gains a foothold."

The 1983 election of Raul Alfonsin as president ended seven years of military rule. The Alfonsin government currently seeks to develop a role for the military consistent with Argentina's defense needs and civilian control.

Since the MAPEX was the first U.S.-Argentine military venture since the 1982 Malvinas Conflict (Falklands), there was much media attention; not all positive. There were some protests from individuals concerned the exercise objectives were more in U.S. interest than Argentine. Torres SP4 T. Uzomba and PFC H. Johnson conduct an inventory of small arms ammunition at the Ammunition Supply Installation.

Ammo supply unit gets bullets to troops

by Clyde Bell
608th Ordnance Company

Located at the Harmony Church area of Fort Benning, the Ammunition Supply Installation controls and issues a very important commodity — ammunition.

The ASI is staffed with eight civilians and soldiers from 608th Ordnance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, who are responsible for getting ammunition to the people who need it the most, the soldiers on post.

Soldiers of the 608th have a unique and demanding job. Not only do they issue, receive and store ammunition for units, these soldiers have the responsibility of maintaining and accounting for more than 25 million dollars worth of ammunition.

A lot of the ammunition moved at the ASI can be relocated by the use of forklifts and pallet jacks, but the majority of the ammunition still gets "humped" by the soldiers from the 608th. This moving amounts of close to 100 tons a day.

The personnel are proud of their work and it showed recently with the completion of a quarterly inventory with a 96.7 percent accuracy rate, the best inventory on record here.

So, whether they are moving ammunition for units or maintaining accountability, you can rest assured that the soldiers from the 608th Ordinance Company are getting the job done.

'Lodging plus,' new TDY system, tested for efficiency

Army News Service

Soldiers on temporary duty are participating in a test of a new method of computing travel vouchers.

The test, which started earlier this year, is part of the Army's effort to find a TDY reimbursement system that pays the traveler actual expenses within the limits of the established maximum daily rate, and which is more efficient and less complicated than the regular systems, said Lt. Col. Stephen Westbrook, of the Army's per diem committee in the Pentagon.

Lodging plus, the system being tested, is a combination of the standard and high cost systems that have been used in the past, explained Westbrook.

Under the high cost system, a traveler was allowed a specified amount ranging between $50 and $75 per day, and was required to document his meal and lodging expenses. With the standard system, a traveler was allowed a $50 per dien amount, but documentation of meals was not required.

Under the lodging plus system, the traveler will not be required to document his eating expenses. In most cases, reimbursements for meals will automatically be 40 percent of the established daily per diem amount. For example, in a high-cost $75-per-day area with no government mess, the amount reimbursed for meals would be $30.

In situations where meals are provided in government messes or are otherwise provided. A deduction for the meal involved will be made at 10 percent of the established daily per diem rate for breakfast or lunch, and 20 percent for dinner.

Under lodging plus, the traveler will be required to document his lodging expenses and will be reimbursed the actual cost of lodging, as long as it is not more than 60 percent of the established per diem amount,said Westbrook. Thus, for example, in a high-cost $75-per-day area, the maximum a person would be rimbused for lodging would be $45.

Because the lodging plus system applies only to the meal and lodging expenses, all other claims for reimbursable expenses, such as rental cars and other expenses over $25, must still be supported by receipts, Westbrook added.

Existing per diem rates will remain in effect until the per diem committee and the General Services Administration can gain Congressional authority to establish new rates. The new rates would be designed to reflect cost of travel more accurately than existing rates, said Westbrook.

The results of the test will help the per diem committee in future revisions of Joint Travel Regulations for servicemembers throughout the Department of Defense, he said.

The lodging plus system applies only to soldiers, Westbrook explained, as Congressional authority for the test does not extend to civilians. However, according to Westbrook, the GSA has already obtained Congressional approval for a new computation system for traveling government civilians. The system, which takes effect July 1, is similar to the lodging plus system being tested, for the military, he added.

29th Infantry Regiment soldiers prove their worth, earn EIB

29th Infantry Regiment PAO

After weeks of testing, several soldiers of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment now rank among the Army's most qualified infantrymen.

1st Lt. Harry Prantl of Headquarters Company; 2nd Lt. John Dalton of Company A; SSgt. Huey Washington of Company B; and Capt. James Cline, SSgt. Walter Mitchell, Sgt. Dennis Jones and Sgt. Donald Lam of the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle Detachment, recently earned the Expert Infantryman Badge.

1st Lt. Harry Prantl, of Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, hikes another hill during the 12-mile road march for the EIB test.

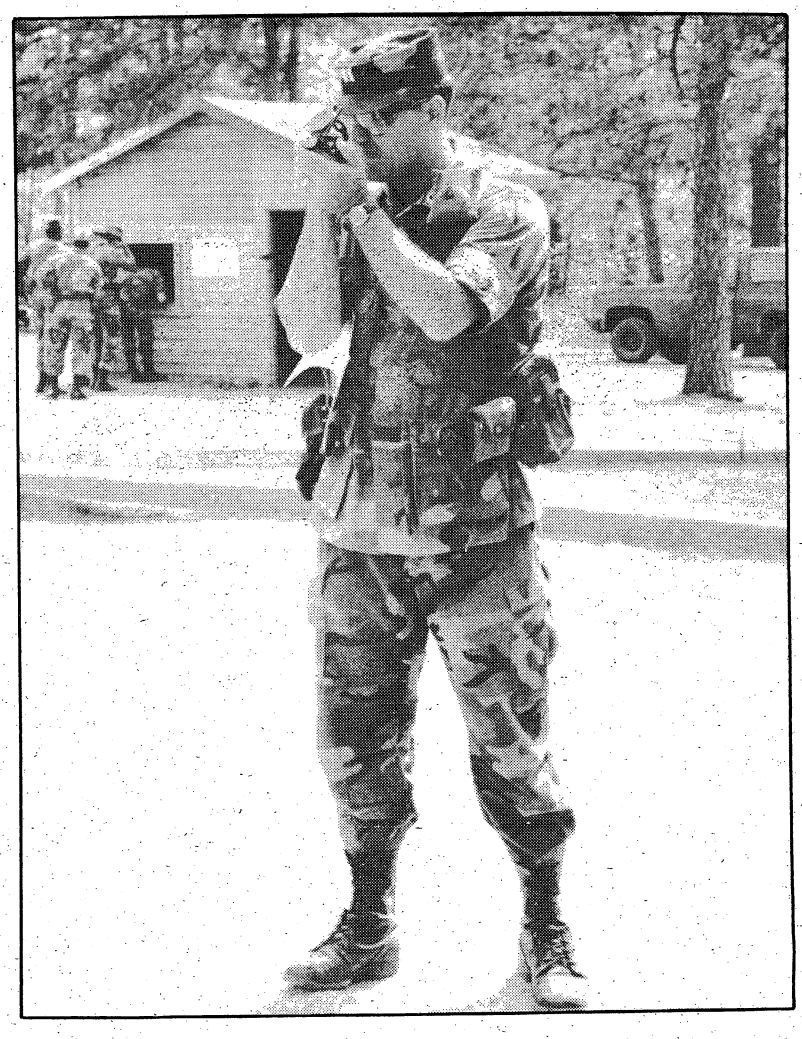
The EIB is by far the most prestigious badge earned by an infantryman, according to these soldiers.

As Sgt. Dennis Jones puts it, "It shows that you've met the standards and deserve to be called an expert in your field.

"No other badge says that," he added.

For some, the EIB is a show of self-pride in one's work. Capt. James Cline says, "It shows that I'm technically proficient at being an infantryman; that I know what I'm supposed to do."

Earning the EIB, helped to bring on a new surge of confidence for other soldiers. There is talk of airborne school and ranger training when there was no mention of this training before.



For Sgt. Donald Lam, the EIB means promotion points, and the possibility of a better position, for example, as a squad leader.

Also, Lam hopes that by wearing the EIB, his peers and subordinates will recognize what he is capable of doing, he says.

The EIB test was conducted by the 197th Infantry Brigade, and regiment soldiers vied alongside brigade members as well as other infantrymen assigned to Fort Benning.

Hundreds of soldiers competed, 30 of whom were from the 29th.

586th Ranger Support Element engineers construct live-fire targets in Puerto Rico

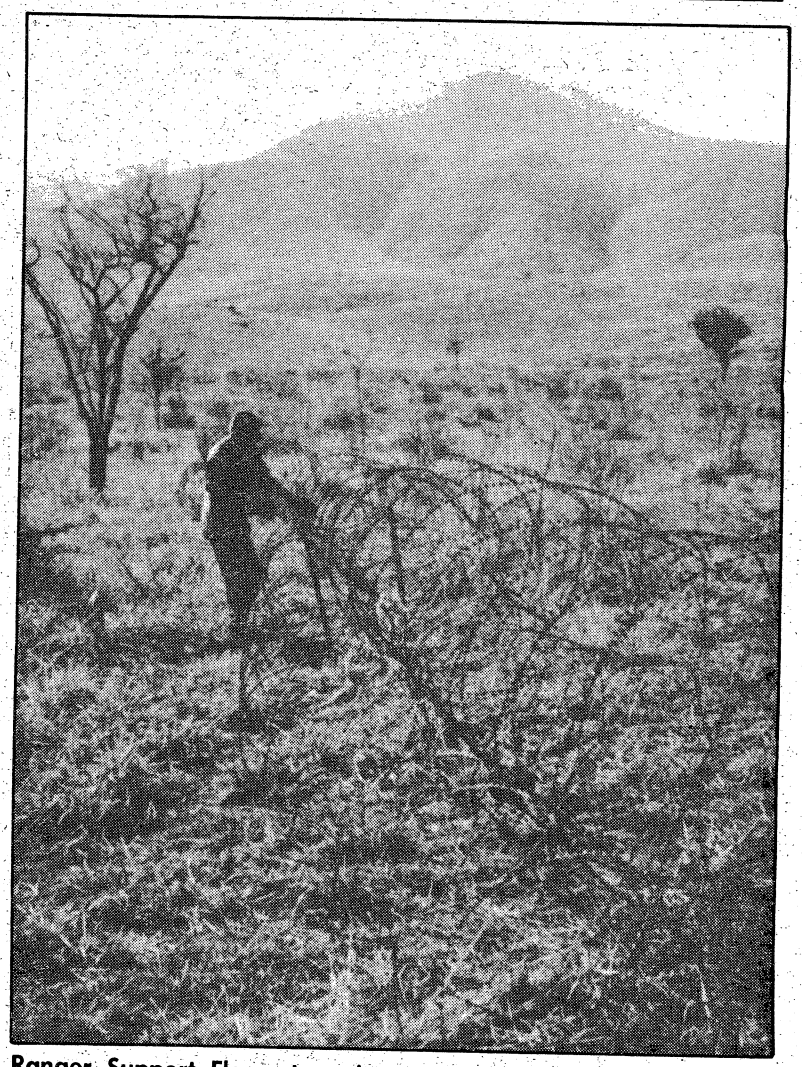
586th Engineer Company

From May 1 to 11, 16 members of the Ranger Support Element Engineer Section from the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) deployed with the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry to Puerto Rico to participate in Ocean Venture '86.

The section's mission was to construct a live-fire target for an assault by a company-size element. The target consisted of a triple-strand concertina wire fence, a bunker in each of the four corners and a 16 feet high tower in the center.

The deployment began with the section leaving with the 3-75th advance party from Lawson Army Airfield at midnight May 1.



After arriving at Camp Santiago, Puerto Rico, the engineers began work on the mission site. The first day was the most demanding as they filled 3,000 sandbags with no sleep. The men continued the mission for another day and a half by building the 400-meter triple strand concertina wire fence, the four bunkers and the tower.

Once the company assault mission was completed, the RSE engineer section was called upon to rebuild the site in one day in preparation for platoon-sized assault missions.

Before returning May 11, the engineers and Rangers had an opportunity to see San Juan, including the historical sites of the island as well as many tourist attractions.

Getting a bunker ready for an attack, engineers uncover the sand bagged position they built in Puerto Rico.

Ranger Support Element engineers string concertina wire at a defensive position in Puerto Rico.

Vehicle recovery unit brings 'em back; 10-man section on call 24 hours a day

598th Maintenance Company

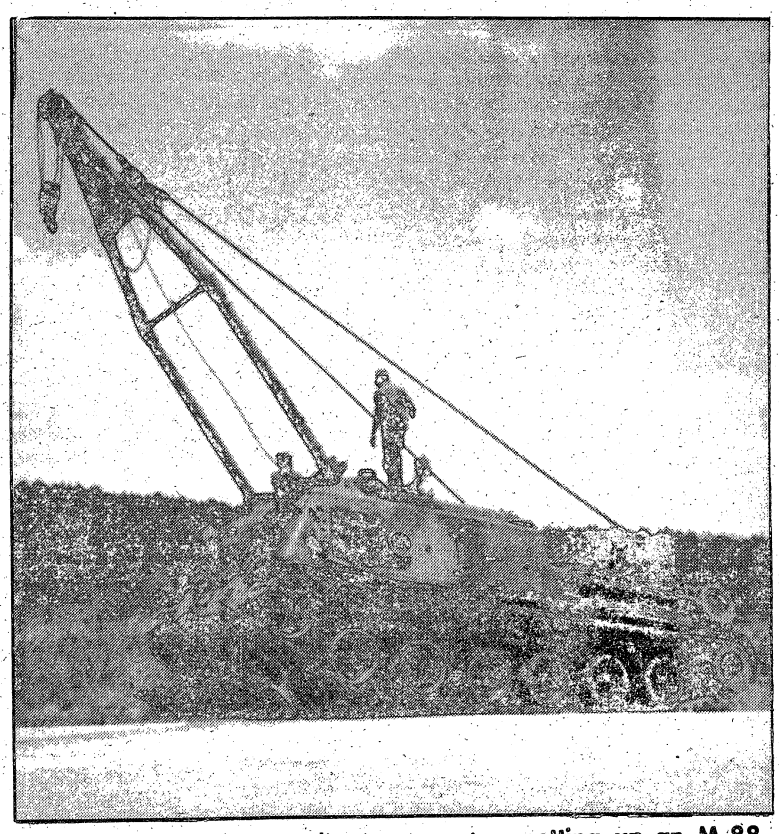
Recovery is the first step in the repair and return to the user maintenance process. Stranded, disabled and wrecked equipment must be recovered from the line of fire to assess damages and determine the maintenance echelon for performing repairs.

Normally, the recovery process is an owning unit responsibility accomplished by specifically designed and specialized equipment. Unfortunately, not all units at Fort Benning have this recovery capability.

The 598th Maintenance Company of the 67th Maintenance Battalion provides direct support maintenance and recovery operations for 35 separate U.S. Army Forces Command units. On call 24 hours a day is a small recovery section of 10 soldiers. They are responsible for maintaining and operating the 598th's recovery vehicles. These vehicles include four 5-ton wreckers, two M911 Heavy Equipment Tank Transporters and an M88 (Track) Recovery Vehicle.

Each type of vehicle has different degrees of capabilities. For example, the M543A2 and M936 wreckers have a 10-ton lift, a 15-ton towing and a 22-ton winching capacity. The trucks are used daily for missions ranging from simple lifting operations of engines to hauling or towing disabled vehicles.

The M88 (Track) Recovery Vehicle is primarily used offroad for tanks and other track vehicle operations. With a 45-ton main winch, a 25-ton boom lift, and a 60-ton towing capability, the M88 is the work horse. This vehicle also has night vision, smoke capabilities, and a .50 cal machinegun to aid in battlefield recovery environments.



Finally, the Heavy Equipment Tank Transporter (HET) M911 is used for hauling track vehicles on hard, improved road surfaces. Its missions are to evacuate damaged equipment to maintenance support teams and to haul combat ready vehicles to the front lines. The M911 tractor is equipped with two 45,000 pound winches and pulls an M747 trailer capable of hauling a 60-ton load.

The 598th recovery section not only performs recovery operations for its supported units, but also provides the back-up recovery support mission for a 60-mile geographical area surrounding Fort Benning.

The 598th soldiers are highly trained and are on call around the clock every day of the year. The vehicle recovery training is performed at the unit level. Currently the personnel management system does not provide a specific recovery military occupational specialty. However, an additional skill identifer is now authorized in some units for the wheel/track mechanics. These soldiers perform a vital mission with large specialized equipment and great responsibility.

Safety is a high priority as the 598th deals with disabled vehicles daily in many varied and unique situations. These situations include accidents, over-turned equipment and stuck or mired vehicles. Each situation must be professionally and carefully examined to ensure safety.

The use of oxyactylne cutting/welding torches, winches, booms, block, tackle, anchors, and mechanical advantage are just a few of the considerations and options available for each mission. In all missions, safety and prevention of further damage is essential. Many long hours and calls in the middle of the night are routine for the recovery soldiers.

Sgt. William Jones, (standing), supervises setting up an M-88 recovery vehicle.

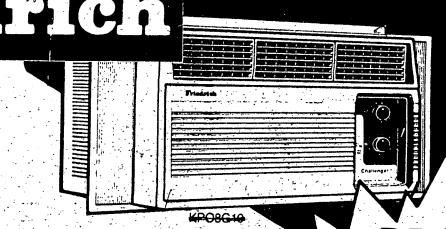
Wives play soldier for day, fire weapons, throw grenades

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The wives of U.S. Army Infantry Center cadre had the opportunity to "play soldier" recently during Spouse Day activities.

"The purpose was to orient the wives as to what the cadre do in their mission," said Capt. Timothy R. Reynolds, assistant scheduling and protocol officer for the Army Training Center.

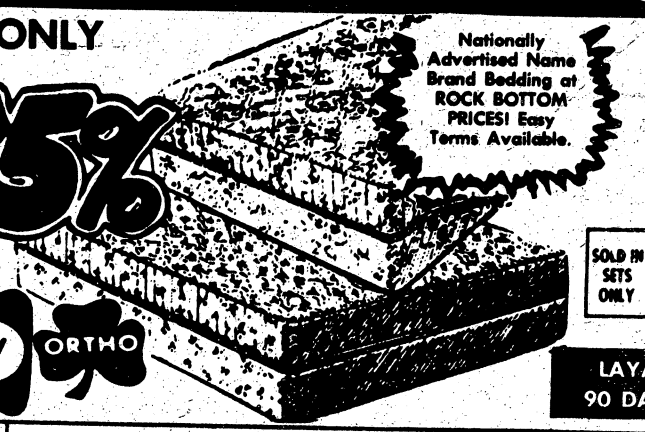
The group of 30 women began the day with a briefing at 9 a.m. at Theater 2 in Harmony Church. The next stop was Malone 16 where the wives had a chance to fire the M16 rifle.

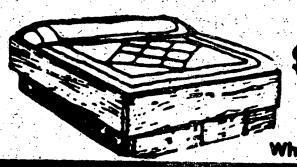


"Shooting the M16 was really exciting. Although I didn't hit anything, I came pretty close," Beverly Mills said.

The wives also went to Malone 11 where they threw practice grenades. "Going through the grenade course was by far the most exciting," Mills said.

Lunch in the 3rd Battalion Dining Facility was also inckuded in the activities.





By 2:30 p.m. the tour was complete.

"I couldn't wait to get home and tell my husband all about it. I really admire those guys," Mills said.

ROTC reorganized as major subordinate command

Training and Doctrine Command

FORT MONROE, Va. — In a May 2 ceremony at Fort Monroe, Va., the Army activated the Reserve Officers' Training Corps Cadet Command, giving the Corps the status of a Major Subordinate Command for the first time in its 70-year history.

Maj. Gen. Robert E. Wagner, commander of ROTC, said that one advantage of the Corps' new status will be improved quality control. He stressed in his address that the focus of the command will be squarely on the cadets enrolled in the program, which produces almost 75 percent of the second lieutenants entering the Army.

"Cadets is what this command is about. We are for and about cadets," said Wagner.

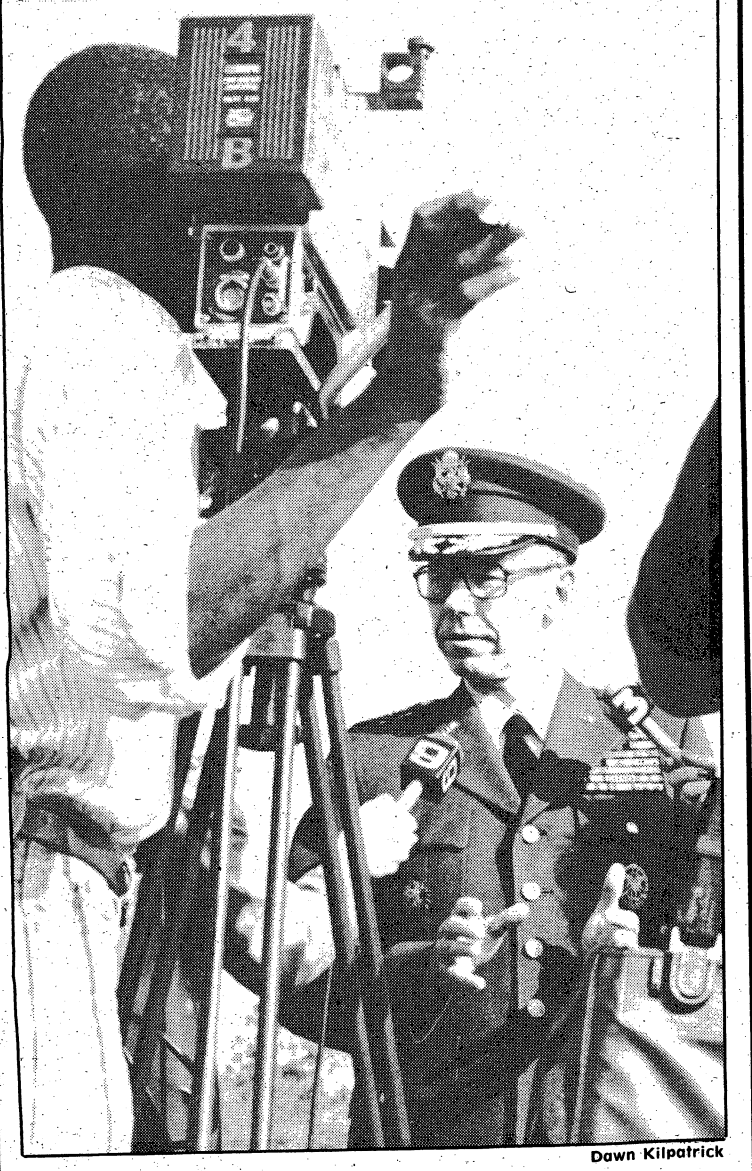
Featured speaker at the ceremony was Gen. William R. Richardson, commander of the Army's Training and Doctrine Command, Cadet Command's higher headquarters.

Richardson told guests at the ceremony that while the Army expects the number of ROTC cadets to rise in the years ahead, the new command will work to build more than numbers of cadets.

"Quality, not quantity, must be the primary guide and objective," Richardson said.

"America's soldiers and America's security can only be entrusted to officers of intellect, character, and high professional competence.

"Units that lack quality leaders will collapse at the first shock of battle, no matter how superbly they may be organized or equipped. So it is imperative that the ROTC Cadet Command now enter upon a program of building quality such as never undertaken before," said Richardson.



He called for a five-point program, the beginnings of which, he said, are already under way. The program includes:

- More aggressive recruiting of quality prospects.
- The establishment of higher academic standards.
- Tougher, more realistic training on campus and at summer camp.
- Increased emphasis on the fundamentals of leadership.
- Improved methods to measure cadet performance and insistence that every cadet who is commissioned measure up.

To meet its requirements as the American military community's largest commissioning program, the ROTC Cadet Command is represented on more than 400 campuses in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and Guam.

Participating in the activation ceremony were cadet units from several local colleges and universities, including Hampton University, the College of William and Mary, Norfolk State University, and Old Dominion University.

Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, Vice Chief of Staff, talks with representatives from two local television stations during his visit to Fort Benning last week. The general was on post for the 10th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade's graduation. The group, a Cohesiveness Operational Readiness and Training unit, is headed for the 25th Infantry Division at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.
During the interview the Vice Chief of Staff praised the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, calling it the "greatest fighting vehicle in the world." He is confident it will rise above the current controversy surrounding the testing methods and be with the Army for years.

A harrowing account of America's "Tunnel Rats" in the underground battlefields of Vietnam
Tom Mangold & John Penycate
Just a stone's throw from Saigon, there were barracks, arms factories, hospitals—all of them Vietcong. And all in an incredible 200 mile maze of tunnels deep below ground. THE TUNNELS OF CU CHI is the story of the cunning and courageous GI's who entered the booby-trapped blackness of Cu Chi armed with only knives and pistols, and whose terrifying mission was to root out the VC.

Students, parents, teachers join hands for hunger

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

"Helping Hands at Fort Benning" became a reality as 3500 students, parents, and teachers joined hands May 22, linking Richard G. Wilson School in Indianhead Terrace and Don C. Faith Middle School. The event, the result of several months of planning by teachers and parents, was part of a day-long series of activities designed to focus student attention on the issues of hunger and homelessness.

The human chain, which stretched 1.6 miles, served as the stage for the singing of three songs related to the Helping Hands theme. Upon the students' return to class, a series of activities related to the theme were incorporated into the regular curriculum. For instance, in science the importance of proper nutrition was an area expiored by many students.

Creative writing exercises in language arts produced a variety of perspectives such as this one by Tiffany Davis, a fourth grader, at E.A. White School.

STOP HUNGER!
by Tiffany Davis

You might think you're rich
You might think you're poor,
But there's always someone hurting more.

So many times, again and again,

We've tried to make the world be friends.

So love each other, help one another and stop this hunger fight.

Let's get to work on this good earth,

And be the brave, and catch the wave.

Let's band together to make this a better way of life.

Brian Gurty, a fifth grader from E.A. White School, expressed his feelings about the "Helping Hands at Fort Benning" event as he wrote:

"I was a part of history today. We formed a human chain across Fort Benning. It was a day to remember all right."

Another activity that took place during the week was the opportunity for students to contribute to a fund to be turned over to ACS Food Locker. The opportunity to contribute was offered, but students were in no way required to contribute in order to participate in the other activities during the day. The suggestion to donate one day's ice cream money or whatever a child could afford (up to .25), rather than asking a parent for "extra money," was an attempt to give meaning to student contributions.

"Helping Hands at Fort Benning" was not a part of the "Hands Across America" program, though it shared some of the basic concerns expressed by that program. "Helping Hands at Fort Benning" was an attempt by Fort Benning educators and parents to provide a local opportunity for students to develop a deeper understanding and concern for the needs of others.

8th grader wins history paper contest in Georgia competition

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Jennifer Bunyea, Faith Middle School eighth [illegible] trophies and a blue ribbon for her historical paper at the state level Georgia History Day competition held at Agnes Scott College May 17.

Bunyea's paper, "The Personal Conflicts of a Confederate Soldier During the Civil War," won First Place in the Junior Division (sixth to eighth graders) in the Georgia History Day Competition. The paper also earned Bunyea the Alice Knierim Award for the best historical paper.

Bunyea received the Georgia Association of Historians Award for best historical research. More than 300 Georgia junior and senior high school students competed for this award.

Bunyea and her social studies teacher, Mary Barnett, will travel to the University of Maryland in June to represent the State of Georgia by submitting her paper in the National History Day Competition.

"We are very proud of Jennifer Bunyea and our third place winners in this Georgia History Day [illegible]" stated Olin Harp, Faith Middle School principal. "This is the first time that our students have entered this particular competition, and we are delighted that their hard work and strong academic skills are receiving this recognition. We are all looking forward to Jennifer's participation in the national competition."

Other Fort Benning winners in the Georgia History Day competition were Jackie Allen, Claudine Belliggi, Kim Grotton, Erica Moore, and Chandra Pearce. These Faith School eighth graders, who are students in Mary Barnett's social studies [illegible], won third place in the state competition for presenting their original historical drama, "A Step Toward Equality," which depicted a portion of the Selma march in 1965.

Southern Association ensures quality education for children

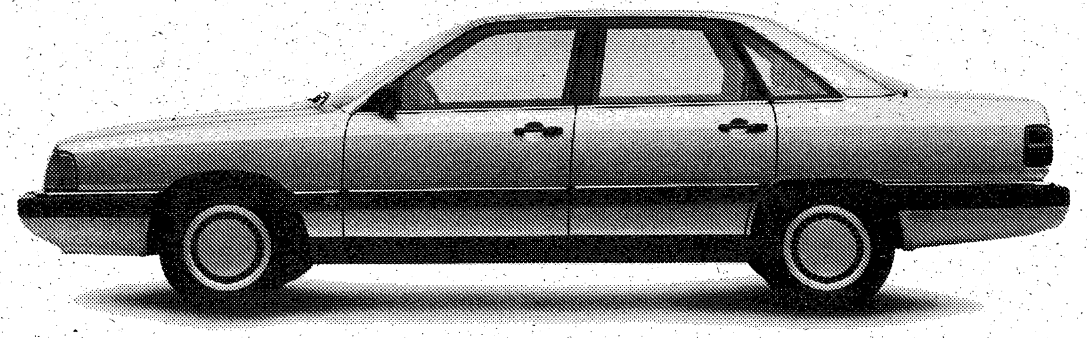
by Suzanne Williams
Fort Benning Schools

As families move from duty station to duty station one of the first questions asked concerning the new assignment is often "How good are the schools?" The quality of education provided for the children is of primary importance.

The recent nationwide attention focused on public education has caused alarm within the general population that schools are falling fast and only dramatic action can save them.

Contrary to all this negative rhetoric is the fact that many schools continue to meet the standards for accreditation by a regional accrediting agency and this accreditation is still a benchmark by which the public can measure the quality of its schools and be assured that they are providing outstanding educational experiences for children.

Since 1895 the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools has existed to assure the public that schools meeting the standards for accreditation represent quality.



Initial accreditation requires that a school system perform an intensive self-study and write an evaluation report. This experience is followed by an on-site visit by a committee of educators to determine if the school system does meet the standards. Continuing accreditation requires an annual written report that calls for each school to submit a yearly plan for improvement. In addition, to continue accreditation, a school system must do a similarly intensive self-study and invite a committee evaluation every 10 years with an interim review of a less demanding nature every five years.

The Fort Benning Schools were first affiliated with the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools in 1955 and were fully accredited in 1963 when the Southern Association began accrediting schools below the secondary level. Since that beginning more than 20 years ago, the Fort Benning Schools have maintained the high standards that gained initial accreditation, ensuring that accreditation has been continued each year.

Fort Benning children attend quality schools and parents can be assured of this quality through the schools' continued accreditation with the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

Benning 3rd graders get first-hand look at history

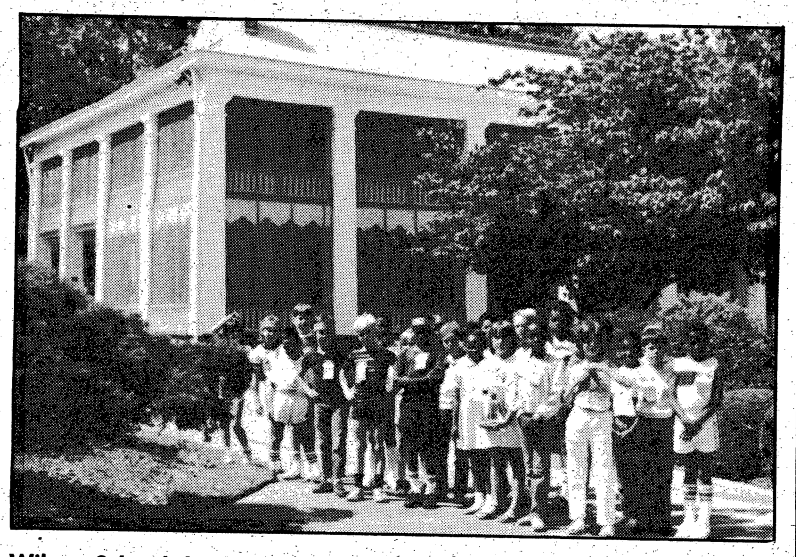
Fort Benning Schools

One hundred and two Wilson third-grade students completed an intensive history course May 23 with a visit to "Riverside" and the National Infantry Museum.

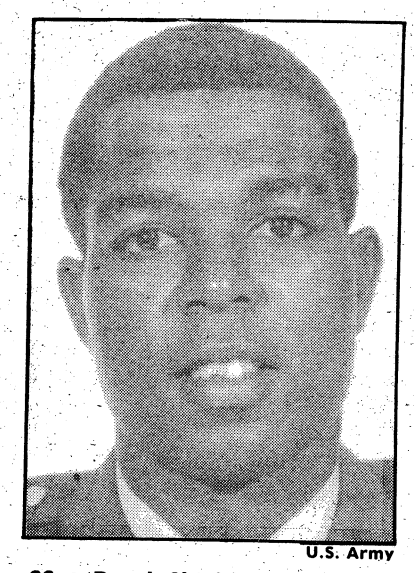
Trish Burba, wife of Benning commander Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., invited the children to visit the historical residence, "Riverside," and fascinated them with stories of ghosts that have been reported in and about the house through the years. She answered their many questions about "Riverside" as it is today and when it was part of the Bussey plantation long ago.



Volunteer guides at the museum gave the children an opportunity to see first hand the artifacts, uniforms, weaponry, and memorabilia they had studied in the classroom. The guides had developed treasure hunts for the [illegible] different areas in the museum. Award certificates were presented to children who first spied the designated "treasures."

The children's text book has been a course of study developed by Wilson teacher Sharon Martz. Entitled "Benning: From Forest to Fort," it begins with the activities of the powerful Creek Nation and the Muscogee tribes once here along the Chattahoochee. It ends with materials as current as the newly dedicated Airborne Memorial.

The children wore headbands representing four of the early Creek tribes. Many wore brightly decorated Indian vests fashioned from commissary bags.



The third-grade students began their field trip with a bus tour of the base. As they traveled, they labeled a map that traced Fort Benning's history from Indian days through the area's time as a dairy farm up to its role today as the Home of the Infantry.

The field trip was video-taped by the teachers and will be in- [illegible] Fort Benning's [illegible] being scripted, illustrated, and enacted by the Wilson third-grade students under the direction of Martz.

Students turn into animals for play

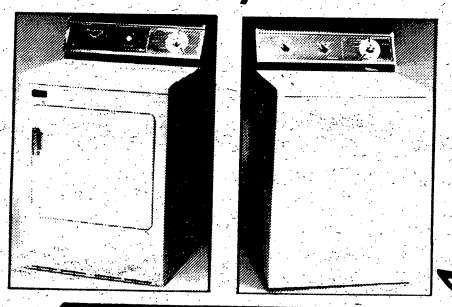
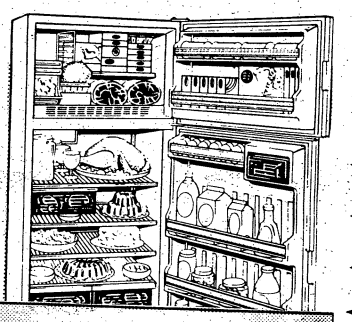
"Carnival of the Animals," a series of orchestral musical selections composed and/or adapted by French composer Camille Saint-Saens, is coming to life at Herbert J. Dexter School as fifth graders in Carroll Thebaud and Susan Browder's classes are turning into lions, swans, turtles, and elephants, to name just a few.



In a carnival setting, the animals react to Saint-Saen's music. They make the audience aware of the way in which the music uses instruments and themes to convey descriptions of the animals and their sounds.

Cy Dietrich, Dexter School music teacher, has used "Carnival of the Animals" selections for many years as listening exercises for his students. It was the student interest in the music that inspired Dietrich to write, produce, and direct this original student production.



"Carnival of the Animals" has recently been performed for enthusiastic student and adult audiences. Additional performances for student groups are scheduled.

Drinking, driving spell disaster for young

by James C. Fell
Traffic Safety Magazine

Not so long ago, it was commonly accepted in America that a person had to be at least 21 years old to purchase alcohol legally. Only two states had set their purchasing age below 21. Then things changed.

In the early 1970s, a constitutional amendment granted 18-year-olds the right to vote. At the same time, many 18-, 19-, and 20-year-olds were fighting — and dying — in Vietnam. It just didn't make sense, to many people young and old, to impose adult responsibilities (like military service) while denying adult privileges (like drinking). State after state took action to "correct" the "inconsistency." Within just a few years, the legal drinking age was 18 in most states.

What happened then was tragic.

Motor vehicle crashes and deaths already far too numerous, soared. Young drivers — those same 18-, 19- and 20-year-olds — began to injure and kill themselves, their friends, and innocent strangers at an alarming rate. Without a doubt, alcohol was principally at fault. A most significant and obvious increase in deaths and injuries following the lowering of the drinking age came from nighttime crashes involving single vehicles driven by young males: those kinds of crashes have long been known to have high incidence of alcohol involvement. Research studies consistently demonstrated that a lowered legal drinking age leads directly to an enormous increase in alcohol impaired driving by young people; and, to much more suffering, injury and death. Any police officer who had occasion to investigate crashes before and after the change in the drinking age could tell us the same thing.

Reversing the Flow

Faced with this carnage, our legislature started to reverse the trend. Since the mid-1970s, no state has lowered its drinking age. Many have since raised the age, by a year or two in some instances and all the way back to 21 in others. As of the first of the year 37 states have a 21-year drinking age.

Given the facts, why haven't all states acted to return to the 21 standard?

We Americans quite rightly view ourselves with pride as fair-minded, self-reliant people who love liberty. Our instinctive reaction is to grant rights, privileges and responsibilities. We deny them, generally, with distaste. Issues of individual rights grasp Americans with particularly strong emotional force.

The drinking age is one such issue. Fair-minded and well-intentioned people can be and often are caught up in the emotional arguments and lose sight of the basic fact: too many people kill themselves and others when they drive after drinking. In trying to reach these people, to change their perceptions, it is not effective to just keep restating the facts. We have to deal with the arguments, in as rational and calm a fashion as possible.

This article is intended to help do so. We have reviewed hundreds of hours of testimony before state legislatures, reams of editorial opinion and voluminous research reports in an effort to distill the most commonly heard arguments against the 21-year-old drinking age. Many of these are myths or misperceptions of fact. Some are outright fictions. Some are sincere concerns for rights and liberties that are no less valid simply because they compete with other equally valid rights. All are views strongly held by many people, the vast majority of whom are honestly motivated by and interested in the freedom and well-being of young Americans. We who see the drinking age 21 as an essential step toward preserving that freedom and well-being need to treat our opponents and their arguments with respect. Legitimate concerns and sincere questios deserve respectful, logical responses, if we are to succeed in convincing others of the rightness or our position.

We hope that this paper will help support your efforts to raise the minimum drinking age. On July 17, 1984, President Reagan signed legislation encouraging states to establish a minimum drinking age of 21. This law, which withholds a portion of highway construction funds to states who do not enact such a law by Oct. 1, 1986, is seen by the President as "one simple measure that will save thousands of young lives" and will "take the battle to stop drunken driving one crucial step further." a major reason that the President signed this law, after a great deal of thought, was the need to eliminate the continuing cross border problem — where our youth can drive from one state with a lower drinking age and purchase alcoholic beverages otherwise prohibited to them. Some of these youth drink to excess and then drive back into their home state — tragically killing themselves or other innocent victims.

Facts and Figures

Before addressing the arguments raised by opponents of the 21 drinking age, a brief recapitulation of the facts is in order.

- When the laws were changed, lowering the drinking/purchasing age from 21 to 18, collisions, deaths and injuries involving young drivers increased steeply and immediately.

(In Michigan, the number of 18-20-year-old drivers involved in fatal crashes increased 54 percent in the first year following the lowered drinking age. In Massachusetts, the corresponding figure was 100 percent).

- Alcohol-related motor vehicle crashes are the leading cause of death for Americans between 16 and 24 years old.

- Sixteen percent of the people who died in alcohol-related crashes are teenagers. An average of 11 American teenagers die in alcohol-related crashes everyday.

- Drivers 18, 19 and 20 years old make up only 7 percent of licensed drivers. But they account for 16 percent of the drivers in alcohol-related crashes.

- The Presidential Commission on Drunk Driving reports that states that raised the legal drinking age to 21 experienced an average annual reduction of 28 percent in nighttime fatal crashes involving drivers of the affected ages.

- When a state sets its drinking age at 21, many lives are saved: young lives as well as older lives.

- Drivers between 18 and 20 years old have fatal alcohol related crash rates per mile driven that are three times those of older drivers.

CONCLUSION: Every state definitely needs to set its drinking age at 21. That is an essential step toward protecting its citizens of all ages. Here are some of the major arguments advanced in opposition to the 21 drinking age, and the appropriate responses.

"Not all young people drive drunk, or get into other problems with alcohol. Why should we punish a whole class of responsible young adults because of the irresponsible attitudes and behaviors of a few?"

The entire process of human growth and maturation is a sequence of gradually increasing rights, privileges and responsibilities. As children grow, they are gradually allowed to do more and more of the things that previously were denied to them. Some of the denial and bestowal of rights, privileges and responsibilities is controlled by parents, some by schools and some by other organizations; and, some is controlled by law.

Drinking is one of those behaviors that society seems to agree should be denied to the "young" and permitted to those who are "old enough." There doesn't seem to be any point in debating whether drinking is a right, a privilege or a responsibility. Like most human behavior, it probably is a bit of all three. But that doesn't mean that it shouldn't be regulated, and specifically be regulated by age. The only question is, at what age should the behavior be permitted?

Most Likely Victims

Setting the legal drinking age at 21 can be based solidly and logically on actual drinking driving performance. During 1982, drivers aged 18-20 accounted for less than 7 percent of all vehicle miles travelled in American, but they were involved as drivers in 16 percent of alcohol-related accidents. To put this in clearest terms: 18-20 year old drivers are about three times more likely than older drivers to become involed in alcohol-related atal crashes. And, that is despite the fact that it already is illegal for them to drink in about 37 states. In contrast, drivers who are 21-24 years old (all of whom can drink legally) are twice as likely as older drivers to get involved in an alcohol-related crash.

Drivers under 21 years of age, as a group, have shown an inability to handle alcohol in reasonable safe fashion. It is no more "punishment" to require them to wait until age 21 to drink legally than it is "punishment" to deny a 13-year-old a driver's license or to keep a 6-year-old from using matches. It is simply a recognition of a need for additional maturity before the right, privilege, and responsibility of drinking can safely be exercised.

"Wouldn't the economic impact be disastrous? If 18-20-year-olds can't drink, wouldn't many bars, taverns and restaurants close, and wouldn't government lost millions of tax revenues? Also, many young people work in bars and restaurants; wouldn't they lose their jobs?"

Very few businesses in this country are forced to depend for their survival on the sale of alcoholic beverages to 18-20-year-olds. To be sure, many bars, liquor stores and restaurants cater primarily to young clientele. But if the drinking age were raised, nothing would prohibit them from refocusing their marketing, either to an older crowd or to providing alcohol-free entertainment for their current clientele. And, the notion that the state should maintain a low drinking age to protect the interests of the youth alcohol market is a bit disquieting.

Finally, there is no reason why a 21 drinking age should cause the young employees of bars and restaurants to lose their jobs. The state can certainly enact legislation permitting 18 years olds to sell and serve alcoholic beverages, even though they can't consume them.

Mock promotion boards help officers, families dispel myths

Military Personnel Center

Promotion boards affect the lives of all officers in the Army, and the lives of officers' families as well. But many officers and family members don't understand how promotion boards work and what procedures they use to select people for promotion.

In order to clear up some of those misunderstandings, MILPERCEN's Secretariat for DA Selection Boards has been taking mock officer promotion boards to the field. The people who participate see real files and go through the actual procedures a real board uses.

"We're trying to dispel the secrecy surrounding the selection process and boards in general," Maj. John R. Baer, secretariat executive officer said. "The more people we can touch with the mock board exercise, the wider understanding we can get."

A recent mock board exercise at the Army War College in Carlisle, Pa., included spouses as well as students. According to Baer, many family members have misconceptions about the promotion process, and it's important for them to understand selection procedures too.

The secretariat teams take the mock board exercises to several locations in Europe and the U.S. They use different exercises, from major through colonel selection boards, and the secretariat updates them annually so they will be current as well as realistic.

The procedures at a mock board exercise are the same as for a real board, but are compressed due to time limitations. The secretariat team briefs the "board members" and answers questions, then breaks the group into panels.

Each panel votes all the files, and every member of the group sees the same 11-15 files. The files are sanitized, with names deleted and faces removed from photographs, and they are paper copies rather than on microfiche as a real board would see the files.

"The fact that participants know they're looking at actual files helps in the learning process," Baer said. "The files are a good representation of what the board actually saw, with a mix of varied quality files."

The War College students and spouses saw lieutenant colonels' files that were considered by the 1985 colonel selection board. The participants voted on each file and put them in rank order, and had to decide which seven of the 15 considered would be selected for promotion.

"There is a lot of mental anguish, both during the real boards and the mock boards," Baer said. "It's a tough decision to draw that line.

"Every board wrestles with that decision," he continued, "but the members feel confident when they leave that they've selected the best qualified for promotion."

Once the mock panels have made their decision, the members compare their results with the real board results. According to Baer, there is about a 90 percent correlation.

"Our panel and our seminar group ranked them pretty closely to the real list," Army War College student Lt. Col. Clarence M. Agena said. "There were one or two flip-flopped, but it was very similar. The system does work."

According to Baer, many officers say they wish they'd had the mock board exercise earlier — that it would have helped them to put the promotion process into better perspective.

"Officers and family members can also educate others after they've participated in our exercises," Baer said. "They can help dispel the rumors and the myths that surround the selection board process."

According to SFC Angel Miranda, noncommissioned-officer-in-charge of the prerequisite portion of the EIB training for the regiment, the 29th made a good showing considering the odds against one earning such a badge.

He explained, "We started out with 80 soldiers, and 30 met the prerequisites.

"I'd say seven out of 30 to finish isn't bad," Miranda added.

Also, Miranda concludes that soldiers of the 29th were at a slight disadvantage. He explains, "We are a TDA unit, so we do not have the chance of using the facilities to get our weapons out to train with as often as soldiers assigned to a TO&E unit.

"But we are still infantrymen," Miranda says, "and some are super infantrymen."

The soldiers were required to perform 23 separate tasks, all in sequence, timed, with no errors, Miranda says.

For some of the tasks, the 197th set up practice stations to help individual soldiers refresh their skills before taking the actual test.

Task force to coordinate attack on waste, fraud, abuse

Army News Service

A newly formed task force on fraud, waste and abuse will monitor and coodinate all Army activities tasked with eliminating such misconduct.

The task force, established by Army Secretary John O. Marsh Jr., had its initial meeting earlier this year to discuss its role and how to fulfill it. It is chartered with overseeing investigations where allegations of fraud, waste and abuse are concerned and with making recommendations to the secretary regarding actions to be taken when contractors or federal personnel are suspected of misconduct.

The task force is not designed to replace or parallel existing efforts in any way, said Jack Hobbs, chairman of a permanent work group that supports the task force. It is intended to supplement them; to serve as a focal point.

The task force reviews ongoing programs and procedures relating to fraud, waste and abuse, and then recommends appropriate measures for strengthening them. These measures are expected to help promote equality in the treatment of fraud, waste and abuse cases, he added.

To introduce that equality, the task force discussed the possibility of developing a system to coordinate all activities and actions related to fraud, waste and abuse throughout the Army and putting together a series of briefings on the primary agencies involved with eliminating fraud, waste and abuse. They also talked about whether training could be developed for federal personnel to educate them on the subject and to discourage them from getting involved in such cases, Hobbs said.

The task force will play no part in uncovering or substantiating instances of fraud, waste and abuse, although it might step into major cases to determine whether administrative actions should be taken to protect the Army's interest while the issues under investigation are being resolved, Hobbs said.

For instance, the task force might recommend that payments to the contractors accused of misconduct or wasteful operations be reduced or suspended.

"In the past we haven't done much in the way of looking at cases from an administrative viewpoint," Hobbs said. "Rather, we've tended to see them only from the criminal perspective." He explained that administrative actions are not punitive and have no influence on the status or outcome of criminal proceedings.

The five permanent members of the task force are the assistant secretary of the Army for financial management; the general counsel; the judge advocate general; the commander of the Criminal Investigation Command; and, serving as chairman, the assistant secretary of the Army for research, developement and acquisition.

All these offices have significant responsibility in the fraud, waste and abuse area, Hobbs added. The work group that supports the task force is comprised of general officers and senior executive service members from each office represented on the task force and at least seven special members.

The task force will meet at the request of the chairman at least once a quarter and will provide a quarterly status report to the Secretary of the Army.

●Grass cutting: Occupants are required to trim and cut all areas associated with their quarters, including areas around flower beds, walls, curbs, sidewalks, driveways and ditches. The occupant's responsibility will be that expected of a homeowner. Edging of concrete surfaces in excess of two inches is prohibited. Turn off all lights, stoves, water and other electrical appliances in your house when not used or needed.

Sleep in to conserve body energy. Do not over exert youself.

Do not leave the air conditioning on while doors and windows are open. Do not leave fans on when you are not home, if you have them. Do not leave lights on when it is sunny.

Do not always watch a lot of television all summer long. Do not let cool air escape through doors or windows. Don't leave appliances on all day. Don't leave lights on when you are asleep. If you have a fireplace, try to use it instead of heaters sometimes.

It saves energy and it can be a lot of fun too. Help your friends and family save energy this summer. Leave ovens and stoves off when there is nothing on or in them. If you see any unnecessary lights, call S.W.A.T. at 545-S.W.A.T. Don't be afraid to call.

S.W.A.T. needs your help SWATing the energy waster. Don't let the energy waster get away with it. He is depriving you of your energy.

Keep batteries in the refrigerator to keep them charged. If you see your friends car lights on, don't pass it by, tell him. Pleae don't leave your motor running. Don't put a lot of electrical appliances into one socket. Don't waste gas. When doing the dishes, don't let the rinsing water run while you are cleaning the dishes. Use candles for some holiday dinners instead of a lamp.

If you have a sprinkler or some other system of watering your lawn, don't leave it on all night long. If you have a computer system, turn it off after you're done or if you have to go somewhere.

Save energy this summer and every day so our children and our children's children will have energy. SAVE ENERGY!

Mother Nature better at drying clothes than dryer

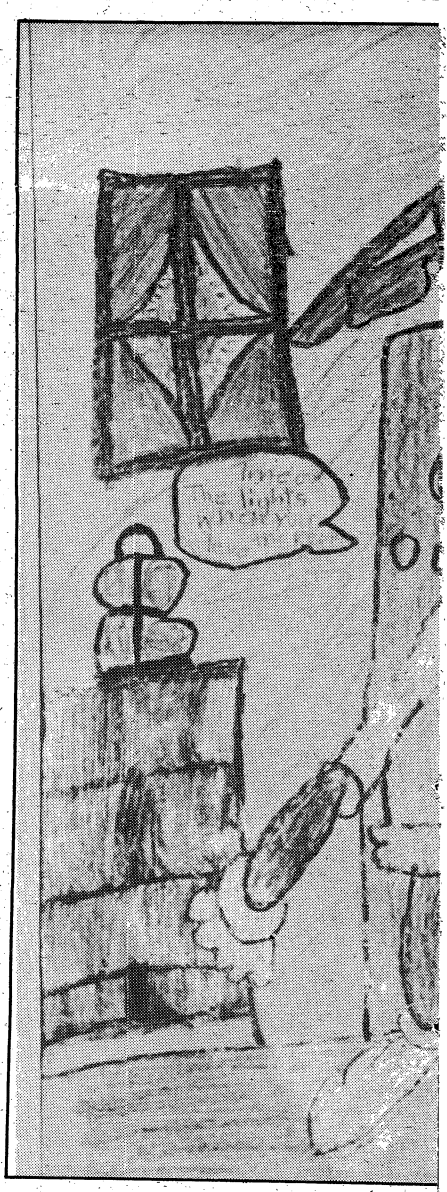
by Bobby Gipson
Faith Middle School

I think I should start off by telling you what energy and energy conservation is. You see, we could not live without energy. Energy is what we use to power everything we have, energy even powers us.

Energy conservation means to save energy so we can use it in the future. In this report you will have a chance to learn some ways to save energy.

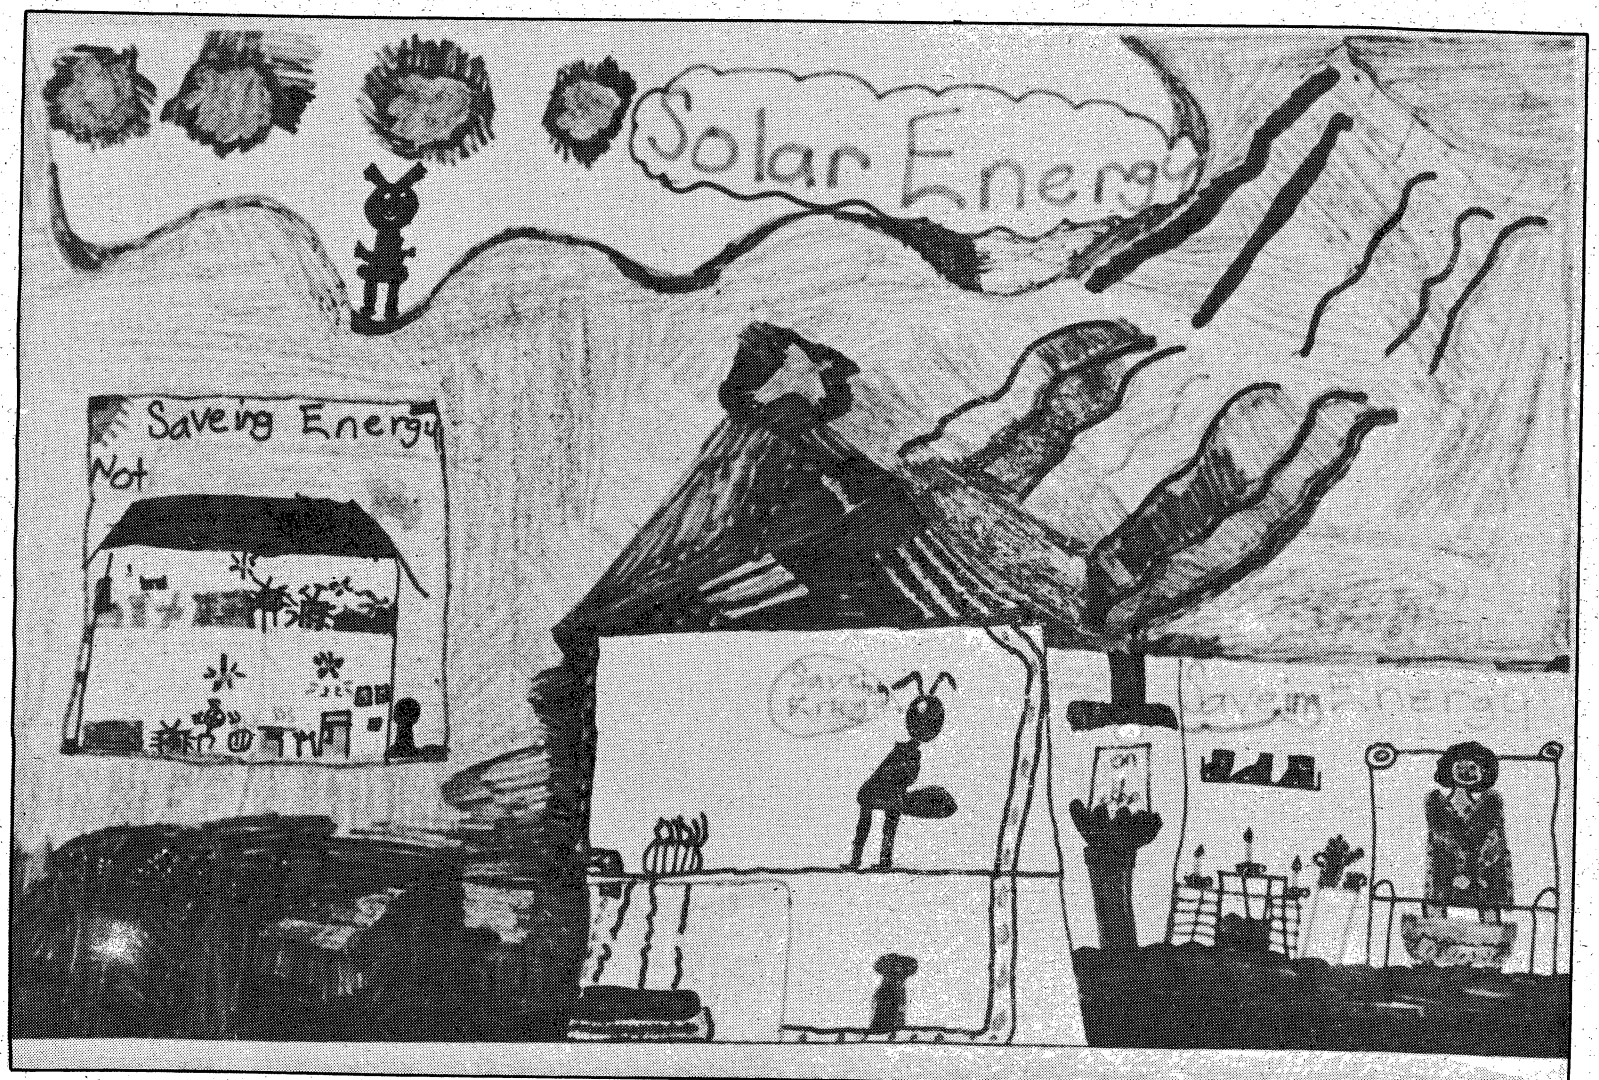
To save energy in your home you should insulate your house. It not only helps keep your house warm, but it also saves you money by keeping it warm enough so you won't have to use your thermostat.

You can also conserve energy by turning off appliances and using full loads of laundry. You should also save hot water because it takes energy to heat the water.



To conserve energy outside you should do things like hang clothes outside so you won't have to use your dryer. You know that nature can do things just as good as technology in some things and sometimes better.

One of the most popular things people talk about is conserving energy where transportation is concerned, like riding bikes and car pooling.



One day I was reading my science book when I came across some strange ways to conserve energy, like close curtains to keep your home cool or plant trees to shade in summer and protect against wind in winter.

These were all very good ways to keep energy efficient. Please follow these simple rules to conserve energy.

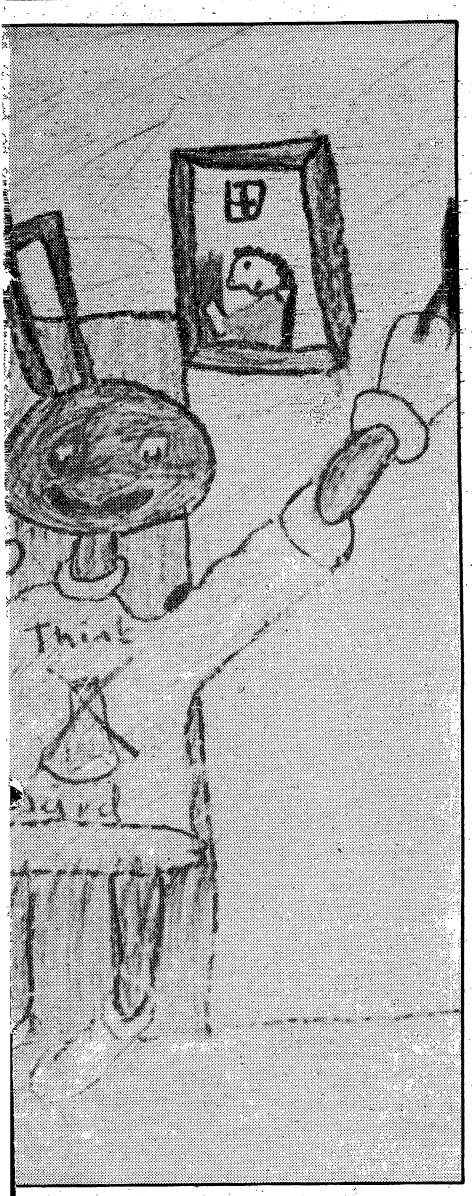
Thinking about what you're going to do this summer? Carry your thoughts a little farther. Are you going to be energy foolish or energy-wise?

Think about the things you'll be doing with water. If you run through the sprinkler, you'll be wasting a very important resource, especially since Uchee Creek is so low.

So instead of running through your sprinkler, how about filling up your wading pool and inviting some friends over to cool off in it. There's no reason for the whole neighborhood to fill up pools.



When you're ready to dump out the water, empty it into your flower garden or put it onto dry spots in your yard.

To freshen up after a long hot day, take a bath. It saves a lot more water than when you take a shower.

If after playing real hard you gulp down four or five glasses of water, it's not going to do much good. Drinking one or two glasses of water slowly is better for your body and for the water supply.

When you want to read you don't have to turn on every light in a room. You don't even have to turn on one if you sit by a window.

At night, turn off your porch lights unless you're expecting someone to Franklin's key unlocked door to energy

by Lynda Wright
Loyd School

You can save energy by turning off water and lights. You should only use energy if it is needed. Just because the government pays for the energy cost does not mean we should use it a lot.

If you have little brothers and sisters who waste energy, you should help to teach them how to save energy.

Why do we need energy? To take a bath, so you can see with a light. But if we didn't have light you never know.

You could wash you hands in the bathtub water instead of the water in the sink.

How will I save energy this summer? I will turn off the lights even though I didn't turn them on. I will turn off the water even though I didn't turn it on.

Who invented energy and electricity? BENJAMIN FRANKLIN invented energy and electricity. How did he do it? One day he had a kite and a key and he was waiting for it to rain and thunder and lightning, and when it did he went out with his kite and key. He flew his kite and then put the key on it and it shocked him and that's how we got energy and electricity.

I want you all to know I have to save energy and I am going to try and help all my friends, neighbors, cousins and family save energy. I would like to challenge all of you this summer to see if you can save 10 times as much energy and electricity as you can.

I know I am going to encourage my family, friends and relatives to save a lot of energy and electricity, even myself. BE AN ENERGY SAVER!

Turning off lights, sprinklers easy ways to save resources

by David Bjarnason

This summer promises to bring another several months of fun, relaxation, sunny weather and for youth, an escape from the drudgery of schoolwork. And although most people enjoy the summer months, they do not enjoy the oppressive heat and humidity that summer brings with it.

And not enjoying the heat, most people take great lengths to avoid it. Most often this is accomplished by running air conditioners as long as possible, and buying an armada of fans to circulate the air throughout their households.

Three or four fans left on 24 hours a day for three months use an impressive amount of electricity. And in the end, although the inhabitants of Fort Benning may be somewhat cooler, the Army suffers as a result of widespread energy waste.

What can be done to prevent this waste of Army energy? Much has been done already by the rather extensive "Save Army Energy" campaign which has been conducted over the last year or so. This campaign has been promoted by everything from pencils and erasers to billboards that list telephone numbers to report waste and fraud.

Catchy slogans such as "Kill a watt, save a lot" and "Cut — Conserve Utilities Today" have helped the campaign to result in a greater public awareness of the problem. But the recognition of energy waste by those it affects is only the first step which must be accomplished before this problem is brought under control.

If we are to truly have an "Energy Wise" summer, the servicemen and women at Fort Benning must come to realize that although the cost of the energy they use (or waste) does not come directly out of their paycheck, they, along with everyone else, have and will continue to suffer when Army energy is wasted.

If we are to truly Save Army Energy, we must get the people at Fort Benning to make a decisive effort to limit their energy usage to acceptable levels.

Those who wish to have an energy wise summer must take all the steps necessary to prevent energy waste. Five fans running at once are not needed to be reasonably cool. An energy wise person must take care not to leave electric lights on when they are not needed. Television and stereos should be turned off when no one is around to use them. If the families residing at Fort Benning will simply be conservative in all they do, an Energy Wise summer will become a reality.

let in cool breeze, off air conditioners come in the middle of the night.

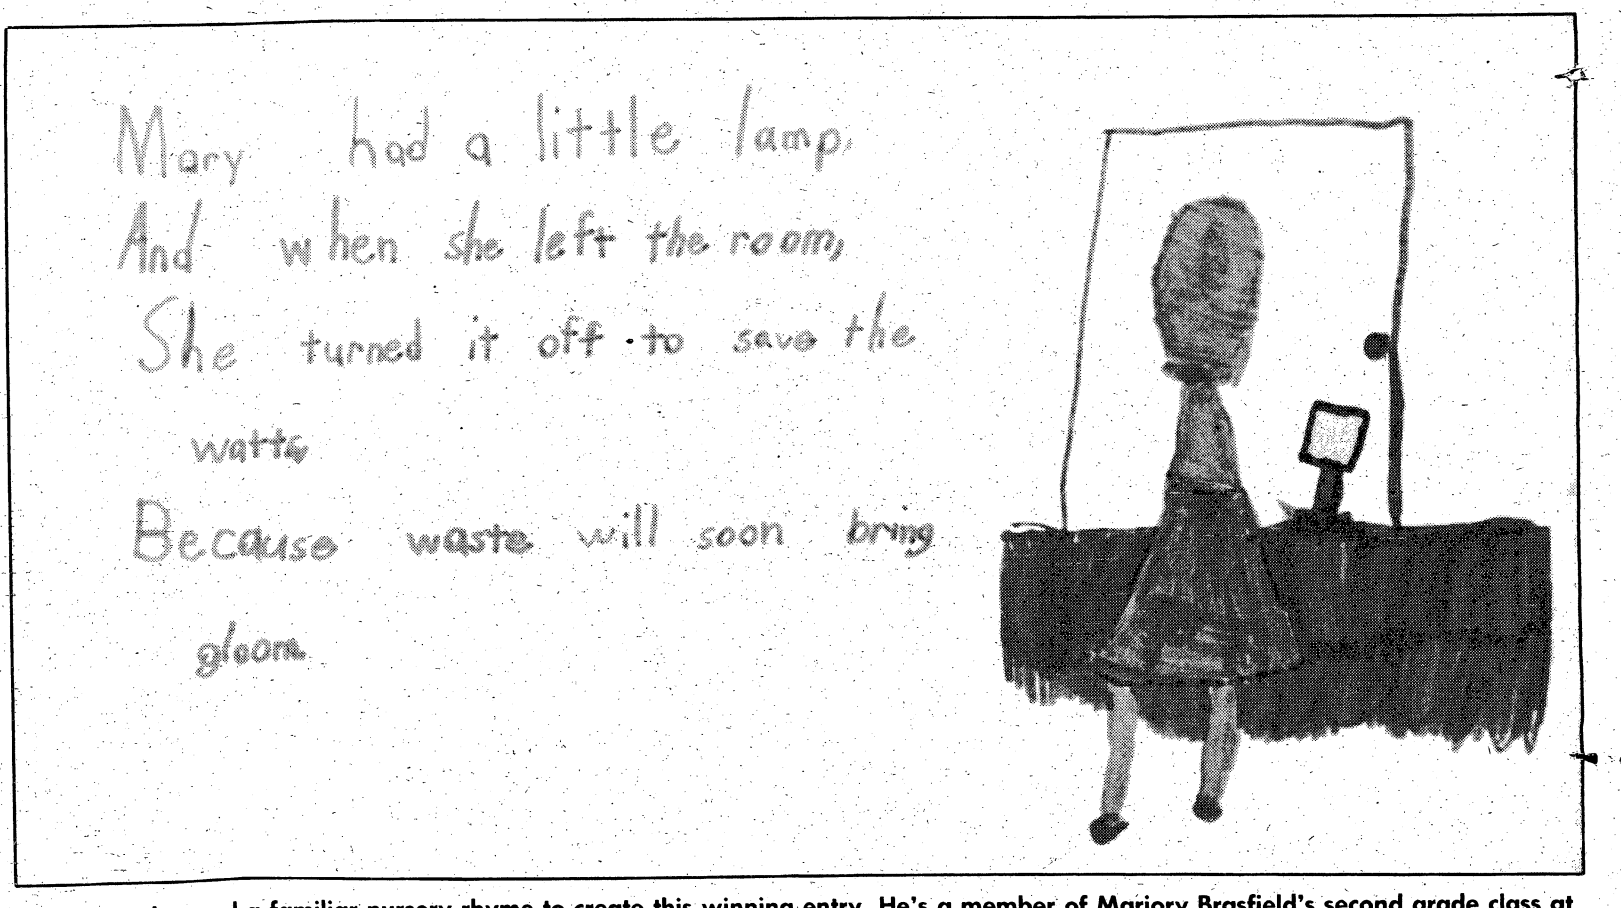
How about fixing yourself a cold meal or snack instead of using the stove and heating up your kitchen. If you want a hot meal and you have a microwave, use it. It saves more energy than a stove, is quicker and doesn't heat up your kitchen.



After you wash a load of clothes, you could use a dryer, but you also could use your clothesline. Which would conserve more energy? Your clothesline, of course. It also leaves clothes smelling fresher.

When you want to go to the pool you don't have to drive in your car. You could just as easily ride your bicycle or walk. It's good exercise too. If you can't ride or walk, why not carpool with some friends?

At night, open your windows to get the cool night breeze. You don't always have to use your air conditioner. If you want more air circulation in a room, use a fan. It works really well. Try it, you'll see. In the daytime, shut you blinds to keep out the rays from the sun. You'll find that your house will stay much cooler if you do.

Be a power saver. Use these tips for an energy-wise summer.

Teeth lost in accidents can be saved

Georgia Dental Association

It looked like a touchdown run, but he was tackled on the 10-yard line. He got up, but one tooth remained on the ground.

Every year thousands of children's teeth are knocked out in contact sports or accidents. But just because a tooth is dislodged, doesn't mean it's lost for good.

If you follow five simple steps, recommended by the American Association of Endodontists, you can help save that tooth:

- Stay calm and locate the tooth. If it's still in the mouth, gently push it back into the socket.
- If the tooth has fallen out of the mouth, pick it up by the top, or crown, not the root.
- Place the tooth in the socket or in the mouth between the cheek and gum. For a young child who might swallow the tooth, a parent or adult can hold the tooth in his or her mouth. The tooth can also be placed in a cup of milk or water.
- Do not attempt to scrub or clean the tooth because you may damage the cells of the root. The dentist will carefully cleanse the tooth before replanting it.
- Don't worry about the time of day or night; call your family dentist or an endodontist immediately. Endodontists are dentists who specialize in root canal therapy and have special expertise in treating traumatic injuries and emergencies.

The sooner you get to the dentist — preferably within half an hour — the better your chances are of saving the tooth. After the tooth is replanted, root canal therapy probably will be needed to remove the inner tissues of the tooth that may have been damaged by the injury.

Many replanted teeth last a lifetime with proper oral hygiene and regular dental checkups.

Santa's Castle gives toys to needy children

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Christmas all year long? Sounds like a child's dreaming but, through the efforts of concerned Fort Benning residents, the goodies for Santa Claus' bag will be collected for those less fortunate 12 months a year.

"In past years, the collection and repair of toys for distribution at Christmas time for the less fortunate was done by the Fire Department in conjunction with the Mayor's Council. Also, other organization on post engaged in these same activities which resulted in an overlap of effort. In order to create a more centralized, comprehensive and equitable effort we want to start Santa's Castle," Karen Chinen said, along with Diane Gravatt.

Their proposal would result in collecting, repairing and storing offor the needy on a year-round basis, for distribution aT Christmas time.. According to Chinen, this would result in better efforts in the planning for and preparation of donated toys.

"We will be having our first organizational meeting-coffee on June 12 at Building 2639 at 9:30. Since this effort will be based on volunteers entirely, we need the support and attendance of anyone on post who can help or donate time," Gravatt said.

The new group will have its first toy collection June 2 through June 13. Donations can be delivered to any of the Fort Benning community mayor's offices, to the Volunteer Resource Center or at a display to be set up in the Main Mall Post Exchange area.

"We want Santa's Castle to be the unification of the best efforts of Fort Benning's volunteer organizations and units to help our less-fortunate soldiers during the Christmas season," Chinen said.

For more information, please call Karen Chinen at 687-1674 or diane Gravatt at 687-8722.

Chaplain says people choose own direction through worship, relationships with God

by Chaplain Donald McSwain
The Infantry Center Chapel

One morning a couple of cowpunchers went out into the mountains to bring home a wild steer. They took with them one of those little gray donkeys — a burro. A 3-year-old steer that had been running wild in the timber was a tough customer, but the cowboys had a technique. After they left, the burro had a bad time. The steer threw him all over the place, banging him across rocks, trees and bushes. But there was one great difference between the burro and the steer: the burro wanted to go home.

No matter how often the steer threw him, every time the burro got to his feet, he took a step toward home. After about a week, the burro finally showed up at ranch headquarters, and he had with him the tamest steer you ever saw.

We might observe that much beef, brains, gifts, or education amount to little unless there is some well-organized purpose in control of all these resources. On the other hand, we might note that the burro, though small in size, put all he had in one direction and continued pursuing that goal.

Some people have achieved their purpose and God's purpose in their lives because of the pull they always had in one direction, and they devoted themselves to continuing in that direction. We learn soon in life that there are many crossroads we arrive at and we must decide which way to travel. We reach these crossroads in our vocations, our education, our families and also in our relationship to God. The time comes when a middle-of-the-road attitude is not enough and we have to definitely decide which road to take and which direction to eternally follow.

John Oxenham said it all in his little poem:

"But to every man there openeth
A way, and ways and a way,
And the high soul climbs the high way,
And the low soul gropes the low;
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro;
But to every man there openeth
A high way, and a low,
And every man decideth
The way his soul shall go."

Chest pain not necessairily first sign of heart attack

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Chest pain is the hallmark of heart disease. It is the one symptom that usually brings heart patients to the doctor's office for the first diagnosis.

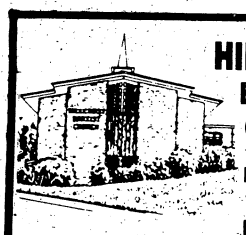
Relief and management of chest pain has long been the mainstay of heart disease treatment.

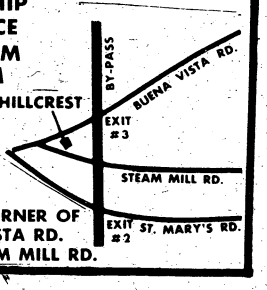
Now medical researchers are beginning to question the traditional belief that chest pain is always present as a signal that the heart is in trouble — a kind of early warning system. New studies show that the pain experienced by heart patients may only be the tip of the iceberg, and that for every painful episode, there are at least three times as many occasions when the heart suffers in silence. Cardiologists consider this to be one of the most important new findings about heart disease, and there is still no general agreement on how this new knowledge might change treatment.

Two kinds of events trigger chest pain: One is exercise beyond a certain level; the other is a change in the tone of the arteries. In both cases, although for different reasons, the heart does not get enough oxygen-rich blood to do its work. This blood-starved state is called ischemia.

Ischemic heart disease is treated with medications that can lighten the heart's workload by reducing the number of beats, or improve blood supply by expanding the arteries and preventing their constriction. For instance, the new calcium channel-blocking drugs, such as Cardizem (diltiazem), prevent coronary arteries from constricting inappropriately and improve blood flow through arteries which are permanently obstructed by fatty plaque. The goal is to keep supply and demand in balance.

The new discovery of silent or painless ischemia was made possible through a space-age technique called Holter monitoring. This allows doctors to receive around-the-clock tracings of the electrical impulses produced by the heart. One group of researchers found that most of the episodes of trouble were associated with different levels of mental stress, especially job-related activities — reading interviewing, and driving a car. At such times, the arteries, often narrowed and severely limited blood flow to the heart.





While doctors are not yet inclined to hook up apparently healthy persons to a Holter monitor to look for silent heart disease, they are in agreement that treatment of diagnosed heart patients should be aimed at eliminating periods of silent ischemia along with those of clear chest pain. This can perhaps be accomplished with medications that stay in the bloodstream

Area Activities

Sunshine, sea, white beaches on Florida's 'Suncoast'

Fleishman Hillard Inc.

TAMPA, Fla. -- The Tampa/St. Petersburg/Clearwater area, often referred to as Florida's "Suncoast," offers all the features that visitors desire in a Florida vacation -- ample sunshine, sea and white, sandy beaches, complemented by unique offerings of history, culture, natural beauty, attractions and year-round outdoor activity.

Tampa, a picturesque vacationland and bustling "megatrend" city," has an international flavor while maintaining the down-home friendliness for which the South is noted. These contrasts create the unique atmosphere of this hub city of Florida's West Coast.

Within Tampa's own city limits is the most popular attraction on Florida's West Coast, Busch Gardens, The Dark Continent, a 300-acre family entertainment park that brings the sites and sounds of Africa to America.

Featuring seven distinctly themed African sections, Busch Gardens offers thrill rides, live entertainment, animal shows, shops, restaurants, games and a stunning array of exotic animals, many that wander freely in the 60-acre Serengeti Plain. The park has more than 3,000 animals, making it one of the top zoos in the nation.

From mysterious Morocco to the arid desert outpost of Timbuktu, realism and whimsy combine at Busch Gardens to provide visitors a unique step back into time to the Africa of old - an experience rivaled only by the real thing.

Adventure Island, a separate water theme park also operated by Busch Entertainment Corporation is adjacent to Busch Gardens and features giant speed slides, twisting body flumes, an inner tube slide, wave pool, diving platforms, water games and more than 13 acres of tropically themed lagoons and white sand beaches.

Tampa's newest attraction, Harbour Island, is an exciting waterfront development featuring a 300-room luxury hotel and more than 100,000 square feet of specialty retail shops and restaurants -- all centered around an outdoor piazza and waterwalk along the waterfront overlooking Tampa's skyline.

Visitors can discover Tampa's colorful Latin heritage in Ybor City, the Latin Quarter that was founded in the 1800s by Cuban cigar makers. Ybor Square is a complex of shops, restaurants and bazaar-like nostalgia markets in the old renovated V.M. Ybor cigar factory. Visitors can browse through the quaint shops, see cigars being hand-rolled, watch artists and craftsmen at work and enjoy lunch or dinner in an authentic Spanish restaurant.

Travelling west, the sparkling Suncoast and its eight resort communities provide a semi-tropical setting along 28 miles of some of the widest beaches found anywhere.

The climate compares favorably with any tropical destination because of the area's unique geography. The Suncoast is bordered on the east by Tampa Bay and on the west by the Gulf of Mexico. Breezes from the surrounding waters moderate summer warmth and make winters a subject of envy.

The average temperature is 71 degrees and the sun shines an average of 361 days a year. And, with 28 miles of shoreline, water is a way of life. The Gulf's average temperature of 75 degrees makes it a year-round playground.

More than 60 marinas and yacht clubs provide pleasure and sightseeing cruises and deep-sea fishing charters. But, activities aren't restricted to watersports. The favorable climate makes outdoor sports facilities even more numerous, with world class instruction available at many of the resorts.

Naturalists will enjoy visiting the Suncoast Seabird Sanctuary, a refuge for as many as 500 injured and permanently crippled land and sea birds. A non-profit organization, the sanctuary has become known worldwide for its dedication to the rehabilitation and preservation of wildlife.

After a full day of seeing the sights or soaking up a tan on the beaches, the Suncoast's more than 1,500 restaurants offer everything from elegant to casual, barefoot dining, to moonlight dinner cruises. A variety of colorful ethnic restaurants reflects the area's rich culture and the abundant fresh seafood is, naturally, an area specialty.

With nearly 365 days of sunshine a year, plenty of sandy beaches and attractions ranging from deep-sea fishing excursions to Tampa's Busch Gardens, Florida's Suncoast brings its guests to the qunitessential Florida experience -- sun and fun.

These two youngsters swing wide over the Fountain of Youth, a kid's-sized play area at Tampa's Adventure Island, including slides, water cannons, a rope-web gym and a central splash fountain that kids find irresistibly appealing. Adventure Island is located at 4545 Bougainvillea Avenue, eight miles northeast of downtown Tampa. The admission price of $10.95 per person entitles visitors to use all of the recreational facilities. Children 2 years and under are admitted free, and all children 8 years and younger must be accompanied by an adult. Up to 50 lifeguards supervise water activities on a rotating shift basis.

Smokeless tobacco could mean cancerous mouth

Georgia Dental Association

Smokeless tobacco products may carry warning labels soon, if pending legislation in Congress becomes law.

"Contrary to popular belief, smokeless tobacco products are not a safe alternative to smoking," said Dr. Ronald E. Harrell, President of the Georgia Dental Association. "We now know that both snuff dipping and tobacco chewing can cause many oral health problems, among them — oral cancer, gum disease, tooth abrasion and cavities."

With an increase in awareness of smoking hazards, many people, particularly young adults and teenagers, have decided to switch to smokeless tobacco as a so-called "safe" alternative to cigarettes.

"This, however, is a dangerous misconception," Harrell noted. "When using a smokeless tobacco product, you place a pinch of snuff or a chew of leaf tobacco between your cheek and gum. This constant and prologed exposure leads to oral health dangers."

Consumption of smokeless tobacco products reached 135 million pounds in 1984, according to U.S. Department of Agriculture figures, with 87.3 million pounds consumed as chewing tobacco and 47.7 million pounds as snuff, a powder-like tobacco mixture.

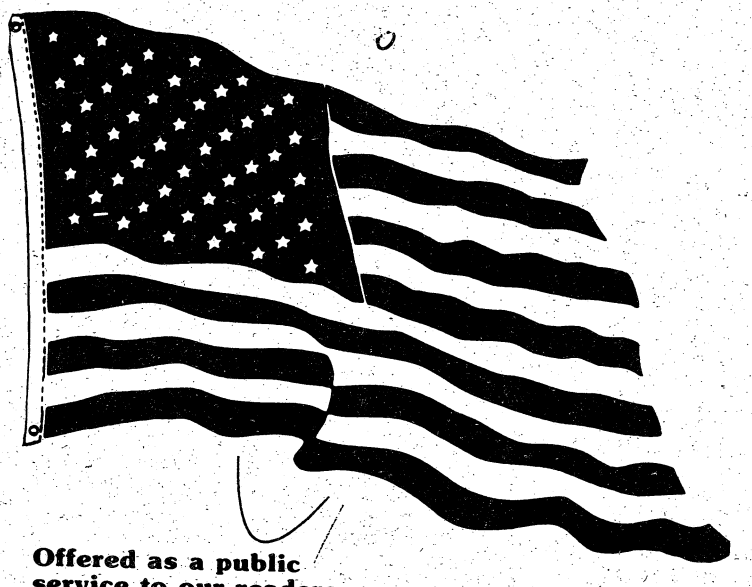
Estimates of the number of people in the United States who use smokeless tobacco run as high as 22 million. Smokeless tobacco, especially moist snuff, is gaining popularity with young adults, teenagers and as reported in some places, children, as young as two years old.

The GDA took a strong stance on smokeless tobacco legislation following its recent House of Delegates meeting and joins national health organizations which advocate this cause, including the American Cancer Society and the National Cancer Institute. In 1984, the American Dental Association urged the U.S. Surgeon General to require a warning label on the packaging and advertising of all tobacco products, including smokeless tobacco.

"Unfortunately, it has become a macho symbol," Harrell noted. "Chewing tobacco is advertised by sports figures and celebrities whom youngsters look up to. What they don't realize, however, is the potential consequences of dipping and chewing."

Typically, a smokeless tobacco user places a pinch of moist snuff or a chew of leaf or plug tobacco between the cheek and gum and sucks on the quid. Heavy users have been known to keep a quid in place 24 hours a day. The hazards of this habit are evident in the number of users being diagnosed with early signs of oral cancer.

"In fact, figures show that the risk of cancer to the soft oral tissues is almost 50 times greater in long-term tobacco users than in non-tobacco users," Harrell noted.



Other potential dangers include:

- Gum recession, resulting in exposed roots and increased sensitivity to hot and cold.
- Abrasion to tooth enamel due to high levels of sand and grit contained in smokeless tobacco products.
- Tooth decay caused by varying levels of sugar added to smokeless tobacco.

The fate of smokeless tobacco in this country has not yet been determined on a federal regulatory level.

Benning ruggers slam goose egg on Cruise-A-Matics

by Joel Courtemanche
Fort Benning Flyers

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby Club shut out the the Columbus Cruise-A-Matics in a 6-0 match under the lights at Doughboy Stadium Thursday.

Throughout the contest, Columbus applied intense offensive pressure. The Flyer defense rallied time and time again to stop the volatile Columbus offense. The result was the most exciting match of the season.

Columbus started the game by charging down to the Flyer goal line and spending the first five minutes only meters away from a score. The Flyer defense fought hard and prevented numerous scoring attempts. Lew Boone finally provided the Flyers with some relief when he booted the ball out to midfield.

The Flyers made several offensive charges that were foiled by the Columbus defense as the game shifted to the center of the field. Both teams fought back and forth with surges toward a score. Both strong defenses stopped all scoring attempts.

The Flyers pushed toward the Columbus goal and got the only score of the game 30 minutes into the first half. Flyer captain Steve Tennant picked up a loose ball and advanced it 10 meters into a swarm of Columbus defenders. Tennant passed the ball to Rick Buenetello who jumped over two tacklers and sprinted the final 15 meters for the score. Tennant kicked the extra point to give the Flyers a 6-0 margin.

Columbus immediately advanced the kickoff ball down the field toward the Benning goal line. The Flyer defenders responded to every danger and tackled a Columbus player in the try zone. The Flyers then drove the ball out of the try zone before a score was made. Columbus continued to apply intense pressure for the remainder of the first half.

The second half was more of a defensive battle than the first. Columbus aggressively drove toward the Flyer goal many times. Several Flyers made score-preventing tackles on open-field runs. Tom Evans raced 40 meters down the sideline to tackle a Columbus runner from behind. Billy Whitesides stopped a break-away run with a crushing open field tackle. Steve Geise stopped a Columbus scoring attempt, stole the ball, and raced upfield to relieve the Columbus pressure.

During the final minutes of the game, Columbus drove hard toward a score. The Flyer defense countered with a wall of men against the goal line and stopped several last ditch scoring attempts as the final whistle blew.

The entire Fort Benning Flyer team played an exceptional game. Players rose to the occasion and the team played as a solid unit throughout. Billy Whitesides, Tom Evans, Lew Boone, Steve Geise and Steve Tennant all earned recognition for their individual performances. The Flyers won as a team and showed why they are the 10th ranked military team in the nation.

The Flyers concluded their season with an 8-6-1 record. They finished 10th in the National Military Rugby Tournament, third in the Eastern Regional Military Tournament and had a 5-1 record in the Georgia Rugby Union.

For more information about the Flyers, call Capt. Steve Tennant at 544-4853.

'Run for Your Life' trots all over TRADOC

by David Apt
Fort Monroe, Va. Public Affairs Office

The "Run for Your Life" Program is streaking through The U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, and Fort Benning is in the running.

The program is open to active and retired military, family members and Department of the Army civilians assigned or attached to TRADOC.

Keith Elder, Physical Activities Coordinator for Headquarters, TRADOC said, "The program was originally started by Byron Gibson, the TRADOC Sports Director in 1974. During the past 12 years, the number and categories of participants have increased each year."

Mileage certificates and patches are awarded at the installation for achieving the 50, 100, 200, 300, 400, 500 and 750 milestones. TRADOC awards the certificates and patches for achievement of the 1,000, 2,500, 5,000, 7,500 and 10,000 milestones.

Participants log their own mileage and are limited to five miles a day. There is no time limit set on attaining milestones. The program is extremely flexible and permits walking.

Keith Elder states "The program is not designed to be a competition and, therefore, is not directed at the competitive runner. The program is designed for those who enjoy running and are interested in developing or maintaining their own physical fitness. People can track their own accomplishment through this program."

Recent 10,000 mile award receipients include Col. Gary Hartwell, Fort Gordon, Ga., and Lt. Col. Fred H. Van Peer, Fort Dix, N.J.

TRADOC distributes certificates and patches every month to the people who reach the 1,000 or higher milestone. "I believe in awarding patches and certificates in a responsive manner," said Elder.

Information and Run For Your Life entry forms can be obtained from the Fort Benning Sports Office, Bldg 394. For futher information, contact Don Plottner, 545-5777.

Cook teaches martial arts to fitness hungry soldiers

by Sally Roberts
197th Public Affairs Office

Among the many activities offered at the Kelley Hill Fitness Center, one that 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers can learn is basic martial arts.

SSgt. Brian Moore, a cook from 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, is experienced in the martial art of Hapkido. He holds a second degree black belt and is qualified to teach his skills to others. Moore and other experienced Brigade soldiers hold classes three nights a week at the fitness center, free to anyone who is interested.

Moore began to practice martial arts in 1976 while stationed in Korea. When he started he looked into several forms of the "art". He became a brown belt in Tae Kwon Do and participated in three competition fights.

Moore says that he turned to Hapkido because it is more intense than Tae Kwon do.

"Hapkido is too dangerous for competition because it is meant to disable an opponent," Moore said. "There are throws and breaking holds that are different from the basic kicks and punches in Tae Kwon do."

Before leaving Korea in 1984, Moore put a lot of hard work and dedication into his chosen art and rose to the level of second degree black belt.

However, now that he is back in the United States, he enjoys teaching Hapkido to others in order to maintain his own skills. He is associated with a local martial arts school for his own progress in the art, but he is qualified to teach and promote a student to black belt, first degree.

Moore added that the soldiers who join in at the Fitness Center have become close friends.

Ghost Busters beat Crush

The Ghost Busters scared the Orange Crush into a 20 to 5 defeat.

In the second inning, Rodney Ulmer pitched a shutout. Lamonta Adams had the short stop position under control, making repeated long and accurate throws to first base to send the Crush runners back to the pens.

Zachary Tietjen accounted for four Ghost Buster runs.

Dodgers beat Angels 16-4

The Dodgers scored 16 runs to better the four runs provided by the Blue Angels in their recent matchup.

J. C. Holland, Dodger pitcher, struck out 14 Blue Angels in the win, while Tim Huffman led the scoring drive with two RBIs.

Jason Martinez had first base covered, providing three needed outs in the final innings of the game.

Cubs claws clipped by Cards

The Cubs lost a very close but hard fought game against the Cardinals May 6. The Cardinals won 10 to 8. The following Thursday the Cubs' revenge was taken out on the Astros who suffered a 8 to 2 defeat.

Strong pitching by starter Jeff Moore led the way. Great defense by all the fielders kept the Astros at bay. Josef Buljung did an outstanding job at first base keeping the ball from going down the line and saving what could have been base hits for the Astros.

Jeff Baxley, third baseman, teamed up with catcher, Torrey Gooding, to throw out four Astros trying to steal third.

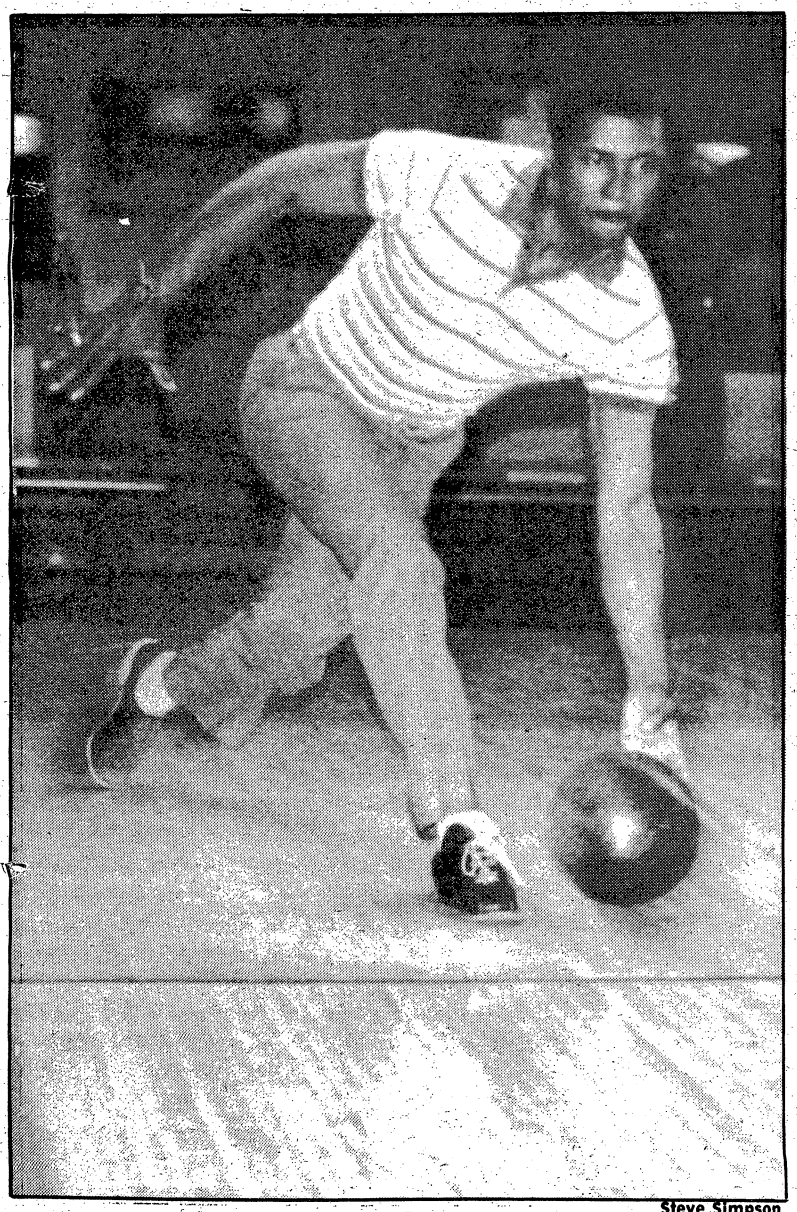
Jeff Baxley, third baseman, teamed up with catcher, Torrey Gooding, to throw out four Astros trying to steal third.

Mike Tietjen remains the high scorer as he brought in three runs in the victory.

Braves beat Royals in slugfest

The Braves improved their record to 2-0 Tuesday, overcoming a stubborn and talented Royals club, 27 to 23. The Braves again fell behind early in the contest before bearing down in the field and limiting the number of Royals who crossed the plate.

Leading the Braves on defense were second baseman Randall Black and pitcher Joshua Allinder with three outs each. Strong support was provided by shortstop Vince Meckstroth, right fielder Charlie Wells, and first baseman Daniel Finley. Finley led the Braves' bats with three home runs. Also swinging hot sticks were Chris Smith, Luke Clarke and Bennett Fisher. Finley provided the game winning RBI with a home run in the bottom of the fourth inning.



The Braves were on the warpath Thursday, as they faced the Red Thunder. Led by exceptional defensive performances at second base by Randall Black with seven outs and his able substitute Charlie Wells, with three outs, the Braves remained perfect with a 3-0 record. Donna Brown, Toby Trader and Brian Wright were all swinging heavy lumber as was Daniel Finley who had two homeruns. The game winning RBI was provided by shortstop Vince Meckstroth with a sharp single in the top of the fourth inning.

Mariners roll over opponents

It was a perfect week for the Mariners, who defeated the Hawks 12-5 and edged out the Cherokees 18-10.

In the matchup against the Hawks, Lindsey Horne was four of five at bat with three RBIs.

In the game against the Cherokees, Keith Scott hit for a double and two home runs.

CSM rolls perfect 300 bowling game

by Sally Roberts
197th Public Affairs Office

When CSM S.D. Walker started off his Monday night bowling league on a hot streak, he was only hoping to make his highest three-game series of the season. Not only did he meet that goal, but he rolled a perfect 300 game to boot.

When Walker, command sergeant major from 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, began rolling strikes, he was thinking of a 700 series and winning a team pot for six strikes.

"I really wasn't paying attention," Walker said, "until I looked at my score in the ninth frame."

Many other bowlers at Victory Lanes that night also noticed the excitement and began to gather near the lanes that Walker and his team were on.

"Everyone's attention was on me," Walker said. "People were trying to talk to me but I couldn't listen. I was only thinking about the next ball."

When he rolled the last ball, he felt it slip out of his hand. "I put some lift on the ball and it hit the pocket," Walker added. "I couldn't believe it."

Walker finished with games of 227 and 204 for a 731 series. His previous high game this year was a 273, but a 700 series had been just beyond his reach until this unforgettable night.

Womens' softball teams start season with burning opener

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Outlaws shot holes in the Riggers game plan in a recent softball contest played at Gowdy Field.

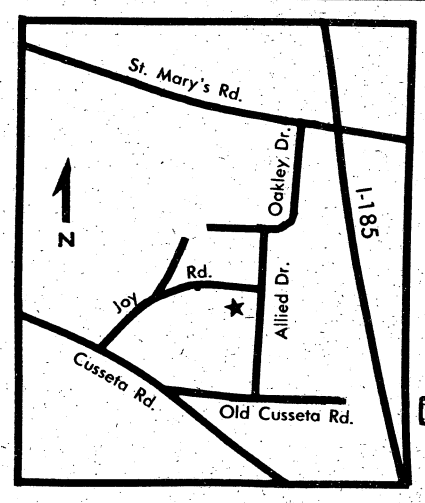
With great fielding by both teams in the first four innings, the bottom fell out for Riggers pitcher, Donna Story.

Story walked two players in the top of the inning to place Valencia Jones and Nancy Hadley on first and second.

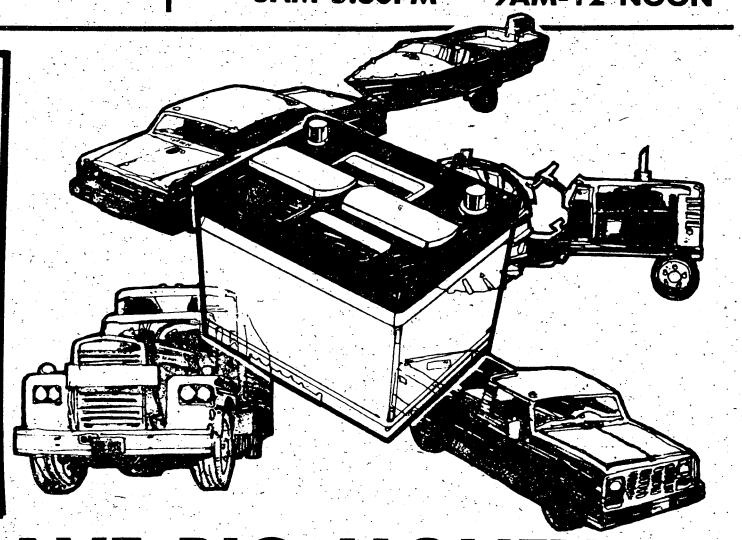
Rachel Coon then hit a double that brought in the first run. She was followed by Carolyn Glee, who hit the triple to account for two more runs.

The rally didn't stop there, and Glee also found a place at home, as Shelia Bryant singled to bring the fourth run of the inning home.

After the third walk of the inning, it was time for a conference. With the bases loaded, Story saw her fourth walk bringing Janice Johnson across the home plate and Phyliss Olmstead replacing her on the pitcher's mound.



As the new king of the mound, Olmstead was faced by Clarice Flood, who hit a triple to score two more runs.



The Outlaws rally finally came to an end on a double play, but not before a 7-0 rally.

The Riggers were saved the shutout when one of their players hit a single, bringing in their only run in the bottom of the fourth inning.

Bad checks land soldier discharge

by Charles A. Coffin
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Bad Checks - 60 Days Jail - Bad Conduct Discharge: Pvt. Jesse S. Tate, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, was found guilty May 20 at a special court-martial of writing worthless checks and breaking restriction.

Capt. Jim Johnson, prosecutor, presented evidence that proved Tate wrote eight worthless checks to the Sand Hill Noncommissioned Officers' Club between March 14 and 25. The total dollar amount of the bad checks exceeded $200. Johnson also established Tate was placed on restriction April 4, but that Tate broke restriction without authority on three separate occasions.

In his closing argument, Johnson asked the court to consider the negative impact a bad soldier such as Tate can have on unit morale and readiness.

The military judge sentenced Tate to 60 days in jail, forfeiture of $200 in pay and a bad conduct discharge.

I nervously entered Furnish America's showroom. As I had expected, the entire store was awash with hungry shoppers. I worked my way down one aisle and spied a three piece living room group that I liked. As I sat on the sofa, a very heavy set woman approached very rapidly and said, "That's mine!" I glanced at the price tag and understood immediately why she wanted the group. I then saw her husband, obviously a Ranger who eats nails for breakfast, approach the area with fire in his eyes. I hastily beat a retreat and as I bound over the sofa a native salesperson assured me there was one in stock but for safety purposes we could find refuge in the credit office. I was sheltered by friendly store employees as they arranged the most convenient credit terms for me. I look back now, and laugh, content in the knowledge that I had explored Furnish America and came back to tell about it. The trophy's in my living room. I think I'll lie down on that comfortable sofa and think about my next sojourn to Furnish America.

Soldiers face possible VHA cuts; actual costs must be documented

Army News Service

FORT BENJAMIN HARRISON, Ind. — Soldiers drawing Variable Housing Allowance who do not submit housing cost documentation to their local finance and accounting office by Thursday will find less take home pay in their checks.

According to Ken Kielman, a computer systems analyst with the JUMPS - active Army pay branch of the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center here, this documentation was due by the end of May.

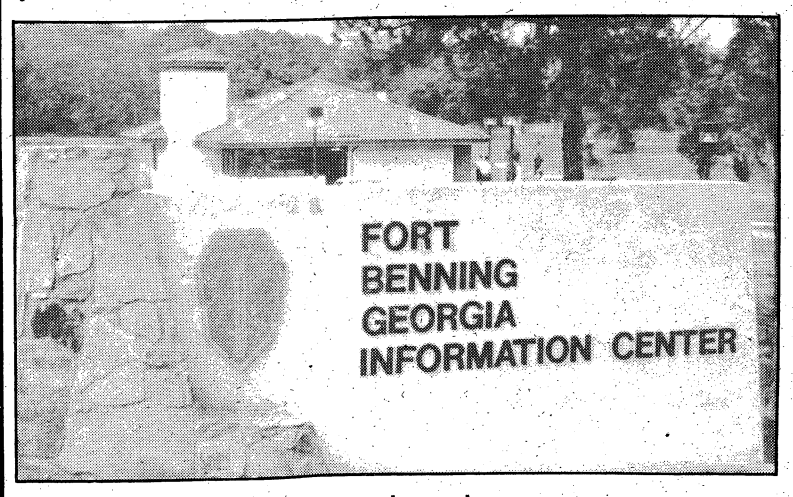
Congress passed a measure last year calling for all VHA recipients to document their actual costs because Congress felt that some servicemembers were receiving money in excess of their actual housing expenses.

The Army sent information to the field in early 1986, alerting units to the requirements for soldiers to furnish documentation of housing costs. The VHA offset program became effective March 1. The ending date for receiving the housing cost information was May 30. But, according to Kielman, initial reports from field finance offices reflect that only half of the soldiers required to submit the information have done so.

"Without this information on actual housing costs, soldiers' pay records will reflect an inaccurate estimate of costs used to compute the amount of VHA for March, April and May.

As a soldier provides the necessary information, his pay records are recomputed from March 1 to the current date, and an adjustment in his pay is made. The offset program basically recovers one-half of the VHA after total housing costs are subtracted from the total housing allowances, provided the costs are less than the allowances.

For example, a soldier in the grade of E-4 stationed in the midwest has a BAQ of $183. He is also allowed a maximum of $84.82 in VHA. The soldiers' documents, which should be filed with his local finance office, show his actual housing costs to be $140. The average utility costs for his area are $91.20. Thus, his housing costs total $231.20.



The soldier has a maximum allowance of $267.82, which is the combined figure of his BAQ and maximum VHA. Subtracting his housing cost of $231.20 from his allowance of $267.82 leaves a difference of $36.62.

Since the offset program calls for one-half of the figure for recoupment, the soldier is then required to have the maximum VHA amount ($84.82) reduced by $18.31 per month. Therefore, the soldier receives $66.31 per month in VHA. A collection of $36.62 would be reflected on the soldier's May Leave and Earnings Statement — $18.31 for March and $18.31 for April.

Soldiers who do not submit housing documentation will also see collections covering March, April and May.

"Soldiers should take steps immediately to provide the required information. Any VHA collections due to missing documentation of housing costs would then be repaid in a following paycheck.

A soldier will know if his VHA paperwork has been processed by the Finance and Accounting Center if the remarks section of his LES shows either an authorized VHA entry or a changed VHA entry followed by the amount of his rent or house payment.

The new Welcome Center stands ready to open.

Welcome Center opens

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's new Welcome Center officially opens this morning, in a ribbon-cutting ceremony at 9:30.

Col. James Ellis, post chief of staff, will officiate at the ceremony.

Located a few feet beyond the present MP Outpost 1 on Lumpkin Road, the new facility has 1,130 square feet of floor space.

George Purdue, chief, Engineering Division, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, said the interior consists of a reception/waiting area, bathroom facilities, an office work area, a vending area and a storage area.

The center will be administered by the Provost Marshal's Office and will be open from 8 a.m to 5 p.m, Monday through Friday. It will be staffed by the Department of Defense police who currently work at Outpost 1, which will be open after duty hours and on weekends.

Editorial

Leaders, soldiers must combat sexual harassment

by Dawn Kilpatrick
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two Fort Benning soldiers were recently convicted on numerous counts of sexual harassment and a variety of related charges. One had been in the Army for more than 18 years and was a Vietnam veteran. Both were noncommissioned officers in positions of authority with the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry. Both received bad conduct discharges, have been sentenced to confinement and reduced to private.

Is this a message from Army leadership that sexual harassment will no longer be tolerated?

I hope so.

According to SFC Audie R. Dame, with the Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office, "It is a cold, hard fact that sexual harassment happens. The only way to deal with it is for commanders to get their folks together, tell them that it is a violation of the Uniform Code of Military Justice and make it known that it will not be tolerated."

Dame went on to say that the victims of sexual harassment, who are usually women, also need to know that the chain of command does not support or condone sexual harassment.

As in the two recent cases here, when women are confronted by men in positions of authority, for example, a drill sergeant, a platoon sergeant or an airborne instructor, they become intimidated and are afraid to report the individual's conduct.

The reasons women feel this way are very complicated. In part, society is at fault for bringing us up to believe that men are superior and should not be challenged. The Army is also at fault in this area because society's beliefs have been carried over into the uniformed services. Another reason women may be hesitant to report it when they become victims of sexual harassment is the perception that the largely male chain of command will not be receptive to such complaints. In many cases this perception is very accurate. Many leaders have the attitude that "boys will be boys." These individuals need to wake up.

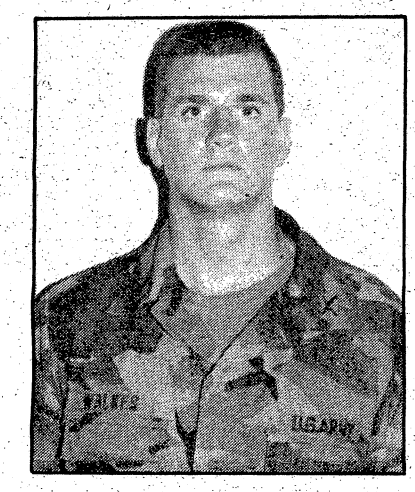
Few women who have been victimized need an official Army definition of what sexual harassment is. But, for those who might wonder, specifically stated as it appears in Army Regulation 600-21: Sexual harassment is defined as advances, requests for favors, and other sexually related verbal or physical conduct when — a) Submission to such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a condition of a person's job, pay or career status. b) Submission to or rejection of such conduct by a person is used as a basis for career or employment decisions affecting this person. c) Such conduct interferes with a person's performance of duty or otherwise creates an intimidating, hostile or offensive environment.

Therefore, when a cadre member tells an airborne student that he can make things easier on her if she engages in certain sexual acts with him and she refuses, he is violating Article 93 of the UCMJ.

According to Capt. Bobby Henry with the Criminal Law Division of the Fort Benning Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, repeated offensive comments constitute sexual harassment as well.

So, even if he doesn't make any promises or threats, if a platoon sergeant makes repeated comments to a soldier who makes it known she finds such remarks offensive, he is guilty of sexual harassment.

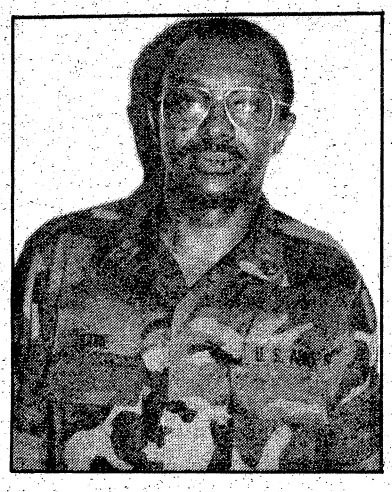
Who is responsible for dealing with sexual harassment? As a noncommissioned officer, I believe that every NCO in the Army should be responsible for ensuring it does not occur.



As a realist, however, I know it is going to happen. Therefore, I assert that it is the reponsibility of commanders to make it clear that sexual harassment is not tolerated. The commander can accomplish this by creating an environment and an attitude that leave absolutely no doubt about where he stands on the issue. The commander must also take steps to deal harshly with offenders. The commander is the key here, because, after all, soldiers are an extension of their leader.

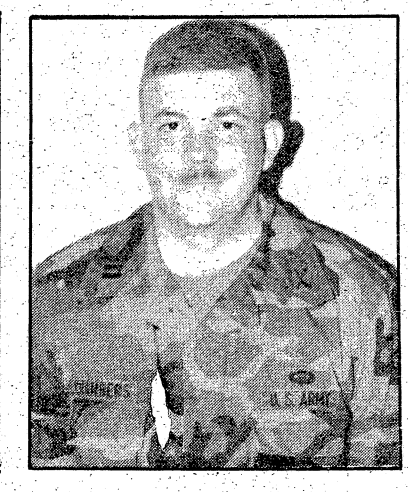
As a woman, I say it is the responsibility of the victim to report the offender. If she doesn't believe the chain of command will take action, she should go to the Criminal Investigation Division or the Equal Opportunity Office.

Everyone in the Army — men, women, officers, noncommissioned officers and junior enlisted soldiers — is reponsible for ensuring sexual harassment does not happen. With renewed emphasis and command interest, it is possible that the problem can be eliminated. It needs to be eliminated because it is potentially very damaging to everyone involved.



Various voices

What do you think our leadership should do to control sexual harassment in the Army?

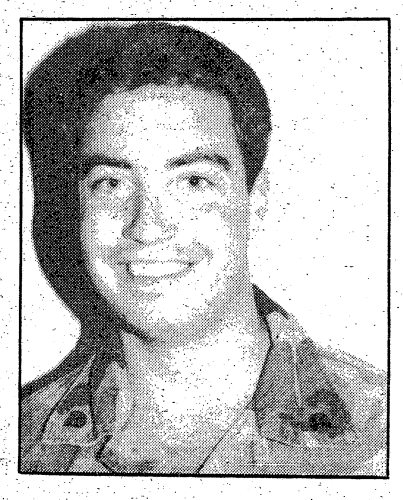


2nd Lt. William G. Walker, Infantry Officer Basic Course

"I think the best way to control a problem like that is to educate personnel and recognize it as a problem. I think it's a serious problem."

SSgt.Clifford L. Moore, ROTC, Tuskegee University, Tuskegee, Alabama

"They need to enforce stricter policies as far as fraternization is concerned."



Capt.David W. Chambers, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade

"As long as men and women are going to be in the Army there's going to be a problem waiting to happen. Leadership should adopt the attitude that they should set a good example."

SP4 Cindy L. Rendon, HHC, 197th Infantry Brigade

"If women are made more aware of the problem during basic training they wouldn't be so scared to report it, therefore they would help save others from the same harassment."

SP4 John J. Schwartz, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade

"I think the commanders should pay more attention to the complaints and investigate them further to determine the actual reason for the complaint."

Soldiers' loyalty to unit cornerstone of our Army

by Dick D. Grube
National Infantry Museum

For most of our nation's first century, the chests of its soldiers went unadorned of medals and decorations. Not until the American Civil War and the establishment of the Medal of Honor did the nation change the policy of a young republic that had severed ties with European traditions and what were considered the trappings of royalty and established military powers. While it is true that our Commander in Chief, George Washington, wore a medal of the Society of the Cincinnati, and he had given to two or three revoluntary soldiers a "purple heart" to mark military merit, the American Army went largely without any visual expression of their actions and needs in support of their military duties.

However, during our great civil war with hundreds of thousands of soldiers in uniform, a pattern began to develop that found soldiers wearing on their coats or hats, corps' badges. These badges, in the shape of stars, crescents, diamonds, crosses and other designs identified the wearer to a specific 'unit' of the Army or to a specific commander whose fame was a source of pride to the nation and the wearer.

Many of these badges were merely cut from cloth taken from inside the uniform where its loss would no show and then sewn to the crown of the cap or breast of the coat. Other corps badges were fashioned from scraps of brass and were homemade. Still others were made of gold and silver and were hung from fine chains attached to bar pins, much like modern-day medals given to mark sporting events. Some of these medals were made by the nation's leading jewelers in Philadelphia and New York.

The importance of the corps badge is clear. It gave the wearer an identity with a unit. It gave him a value upon which he could build. The cook, the clerk, the rifleman shared the glory or shame of their unit. They were willing to be counted and identified by the mark they would wear.

During World War I again the nation called hundreds of thousands of soldiers to duty. It was during this period that divisional shoulder patches were developed.

One commander said he wanted to be able to spot his men from across the parade field by the color and size of the shoulder patch. The result was a yellow and black patch five inches across and six inches in length.

Pride of unit, pride of accomplishment, acknowledgement of failure, comradeship, identity with others who may have done more or less than ourselves but who take pride in the accomplishments and history of the unit are values upon which our Army grows today: loyalty to the unit.

Editor's note: The writer is a retired lieutenant colonel who now serves as the director of the National Infantry Museum here.

Sure-Pay system part of readiness

Finance and Accounting Office

What if a military emergency develops and you have to leave immediately for overseas. How will your family manage? Will they be able to support themselves? Financial readiness continues to be an essential part of mobilization and deployment. Participation in the Sure-Pay program is the only method for soldiers to provide financial support for their families which, in turn, contributes to total unit readiness.

Other advantages to the soldier are as follows:

- Easier access to his money
- Ease and proof of paying bills
- Credit development and references
- Access to reasonably priced credit
- Fewer personal pay problems

Positive aspects of Sure-Pay not only affect the individual soldier. Sure-Pay saves the U.S. Army dollars and lost duty time is reduced. It costs approximately 80 to 90 cents for a bank to clear a check. These same costs are borne by the U.S. Government each time it issues a check.

A variety of checking account options can be selected from almost any financial institution to include checking accounts that accumulate interest, Automated Teller Machines and the list goes on. The bottom line is the financial institution's ability to make your money readily available when you need it.

As of Oct. 1, 1985 Sure-Pay is a mandatory requirement for all soldiers entering the Army. These soldiers are required to convert to Sure-Pay within 90 days of arrival at their first permanent duty station.

Water use not fluid situation

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Due to an increase in the water supply, the Directorate of Engineering and Housing is lifting the restrictions on water use.

"The water situation has improved somewhat; however, it is not back to normal," said Col. John Hatch, chief of DEH. "Limited use of water can be resumed, in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 11-27, Energy Conservation Program."

The regulation allows washing military vehicles at wash rack facilities and limits residents to using water for lawn irrigation and car washing to twice a week.

To make sure Fort Benning residents have enough water this summer, DEH is setting up a water usage schedule for lawn irrigation and washing personal automobiles in the family housing area.

Water may be used for these purposes between the hours of 6 p.m and 6 a.m., not to exceed four hours a day, for two days each week.

The schedule is:

South Main Post, North Main Post and Upatoi Terrace — Monday and Thursday; Custer Terrace and McGraw Manor — Tuesday and Friday; and Davis Hills and Bouton Heights — Wednesday and Saturday.

Grandfathering assured in retirement changes

Army News Service

Regardless of which military retirement bill Congress approves, soldiers in the total Army prior to the bill's enactment will not be affected by the legislation, said Chapman B. Cox, assistant secretary of defense for Force Management and Personnel.

"Total grandfathering of the current military retirement system will be approved," he said.

The Senate and the House of Representatives have approved separate retirement bills to change the current system that allows servicemen and women to retire after completing 20 years of active service with 50 percent of their basic pay.

"The senate bill will reduce the 20-year retirement benefit for future entrants to 44 percent," Cox said. "And the House bill will reduce the 20-year retirement pay to 40 percent. Although we are not in favor of either bill, the Senate version is considered to be potentially less damaging to the management of our force."

The Department of Defense has fought against any changes to the current retirement system, citing two arguments.

"One, which was carried," Cox said, "is that men and women now in the services have made career choices based upon their expectations. Even though there is no legal commitment, the government and the people of this country have entered into a kind of obligation with our people in the military." The other argument, which was not carried, was that any change would severely impact on retention. "We felt it was a good argument, based on analysis and experience that when you reduce retirement benefits it affects retention," Cox said.

"Any change in the retirement system, however, will impact, we feel, on recruiting and retention," Cox said. "The retirement program is part of the overall benefits package that people come into the service for. Those who choose not to stay because of reduced retirement benefits will need to be replaced, causing more people to be recruited."

The Senate version of the proposed retirement legislation includes a reduction in the retiree cost-of-living allowance. "The proposed formula would subtract 1 percent of the annual consumer price index until the retiree reaches the 40th anniversary of his service entry date. After that," Cox said, "the COLA will gradually increase until it catches up to what the retiree would have been receiving at the full rate. Once the COLA is level with the CPI, the 1 percent reduction would begin again."

The theory behind this, Cox said, is that at the time retirees are expected to be losing earning potential, the formula will bring them up to what their normal retirement pay would be.

"The House bill basically discourages people to stay for 20 years even though it has incentives for people to stay to 30 years," Cox said. "Our study shows that, even with incentives, people won't stay to serve 30 years and will leave the service at the five- or 10-year mark. To make up for this expected loss of experience, we would have to recruit 100,000 more men and women each year for all the services."

Congress was to have agreed upon the retirement reform by May 1, Cox said, "But the deadline has been extended to July 1."

Assault float bridge company supports Alabama Guard

A 22 man detachment from the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) recently deployed to Fort McClellan, Ala. to support the 167th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) (Alabama National Guard).

During the two-week active-duty training period, the 167th Engineer Company (AFB) (AL-NG) took an externally evaluated Army Training and Evaluation Program. The 586th Eng. Co. provided five combat support boats, camouflage netting and assistance throughout the exercise.

There were several day and night river crossing operations completed successfully on the Coosa River during the ARTEP. Additionally, there were night moves, tactical bivouacs, survivability and combat engineer missions evaluated.

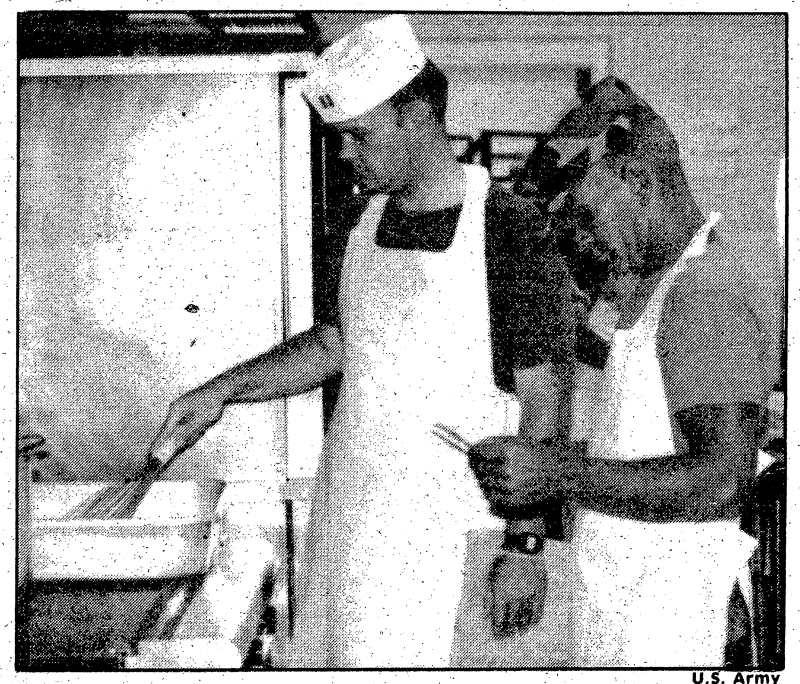
U.S. Army Reception Battalion



Cook Appreciation Day started off with a sizzle at the U.S. Army Reception Battalion recently.

The sizzle was that of the bacon cooking as the staff and cadre of Headquarters and Headquarters Company hit the kitchen to prepare breakfast for their cooks.

The cadre took to the stoves at 3:30 a.m. to show their appreciation for the many meals prepared for them.

Among those cooking and serving breakfast were the company commanders, battalion commander and first sergeants.

"I think the cooks appreciated getting served rather than serving others for a change," said Capt. Reid.

42 years later Allies' D-Day victory remembered

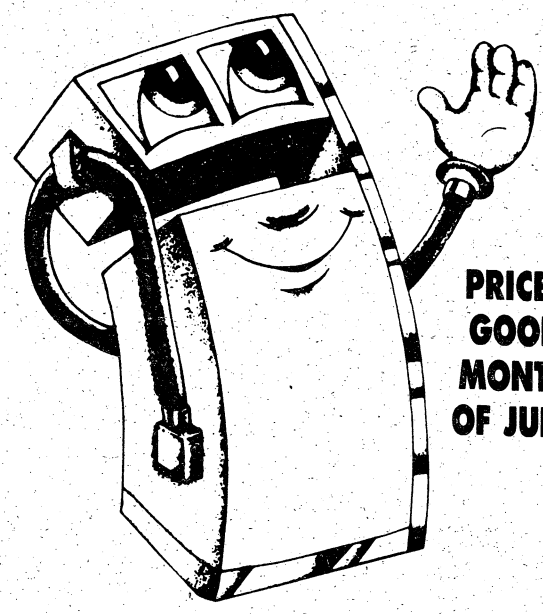
by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The last time Frenchmen looked across the English Channel and saw an invading army from Great Britain before World War II was 1415. Henry V, Monarch of England, landed in Normandy to start the 100 Years War. After seizing a great arsenal at Harfleurs, Henry marched to Agincourt and destroyed 10,000 Frenchmen.

The ancestors of those Frenchmen who looked across the channel more than 500 years ago saw, on June 6, 1944, another army coming at them. This army, however, wasn't coming to kill Frenchmen. It was coming to drive Germany from France and, ultimately, from the occupied countries of Europe.

Today marks the 42nd anniversary of that undertaking: D-Day.

This huge armada, steaming ominously toward the French coast, numbered, in the initial effort, 1,213 ships carrying more than 176,000 men and tons of equipment. But before this armada disgorged its men and materiel other men had landed. At 2 a.m. that morning paratroopers of the 82nd and 101st Airborne Divisions had silently drifted down, numbering 17,262 men.



The paratroopers' mission was simple and stark. They were to secure pre-determined exits for the soldiers landing on the beaches to allow those soldiers to break out. Amid much confusion and many disoriented soldiers and leaders, these paratroopers accomplished their mission, securing and holding strategic crossroads and exit points for their compatriots on the ships.

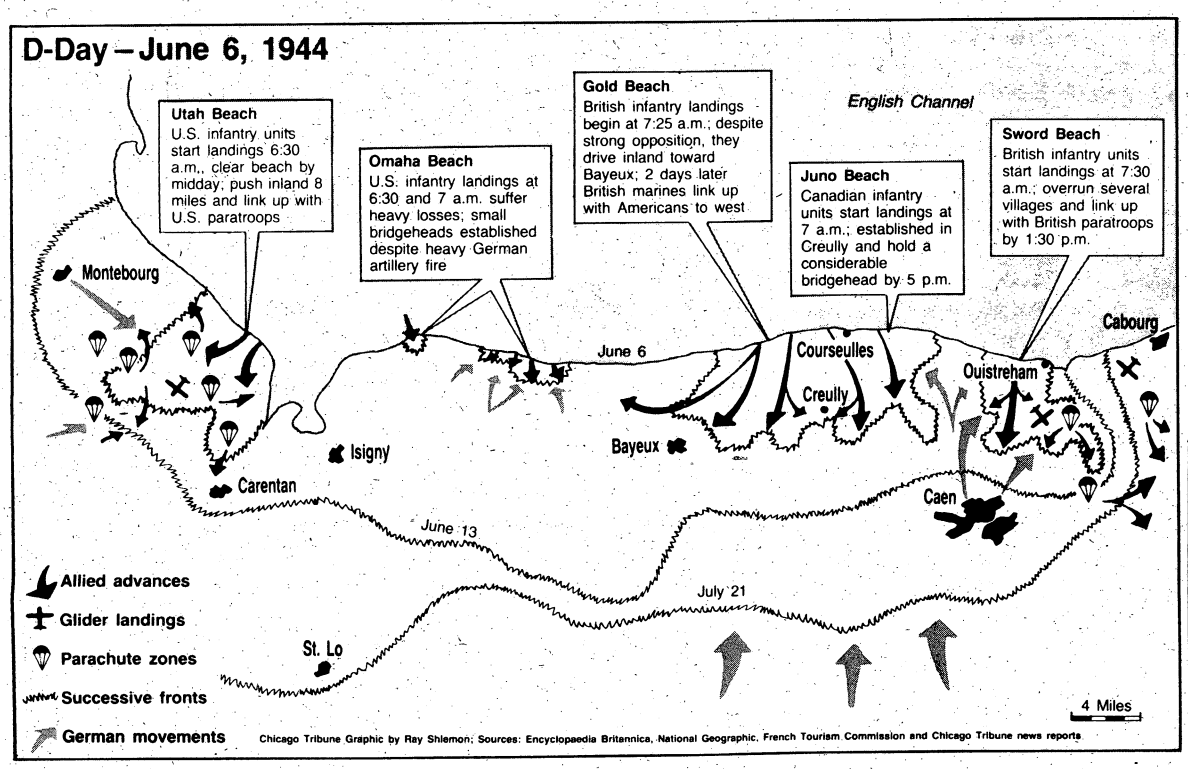
American troops stormed ashore at Utah and Omaha Beaches, west of the Cotentin Peninsula. British and Canadian troopers set ashore at beaches Gold, Sword and Juno.

The U.S. forces moved northwest to clear the peninsula and capture the port of Cherbourg, vital to Allied shipping as a logistical landing place in order to expand the beachheads.

The British and Canadians advanced toward Caen to the southwest.

This huge undertaking was led by the third son of a poor family from Denison, Texas.

He was graduated from the U.S. Military Academy in 1911 but never saw combat during World War I. Promoted to brigadier general after distinguishing himself as chief of staff of the Third Army during manuevers in 1941, Dwight David Eisenhower served as assistant chief of war plans of the general staff. This required him to work closely with the British and on the plans for the eventual invasion of Europe.

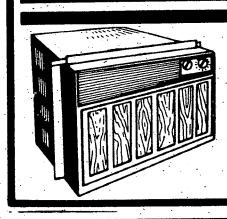


Eisenhower received his baptism of fire fighting with German General Erwin Rommle's Afrika Corps in the deserts of Algeria and Tunisia. He then took Sicily and Italy from the Germans. As a result of these victories and of the experience gained, Eisenhower was chosen as the leader for "Operation Overlord," the invasion of continental Europe through France.

Eisenhower, after much vacillation and many delays because of bad weather, set the armada in motion.

After the initial landing and assault to establish a beachhead, the invaders began moving inland. Infantry and armored units fought a slow, tough action through the thick hedgerows of France that impeded movement and observation.

By June 12 Eisenhower had linked all the Allied bridgeheads and his front extended 50 miles inland. U.S. forces had captured Cherbourg and had taken the important crossroads at St. Lo. The British and Canadians were moving toward Paris and the Seine Basin.



Like Henry V, 529 years before him, Eisenhower had successfully invaded France. Unlike Henry, he had many countries to liberate and many armies to defeat before Hitler's "Fortress Europa" lay in a smoldering ruin.

A Chicago Tribune graphic shows the details of the D-Day invasion.

Gold Star Wives, widows of veterans, proudly fly 'Old Glory' four times a year

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you drove down Victory Drive Memorial Day weekend, you probably saw the Avenue of Flags.

"You can't drive past all those waving American flags without feeling a surge of patriotism," said Wanda Funderburk, vice president of the Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the Gold Star Wives of America, which sponsors the flag project.

A total of 57 flags flew in the median on Victory Drive from the Georgia Welcome Center to the Traffic Circle Shopping Center during the holiday weekend, Funderburk said.

The group began sponsoring the Avenue of Flags in 1969, and the first year flew 100 flags.

President Ruta Warren said the project was a way to honor those soldiers who gave their lives for their country, as well as servicemen still serving.

"We fly the flags four times a year; Memorial Day, Flag Day, Independence Day and Veterans Day," Warren said.

The organization is a nationwide, non-profit group formed by widows of servicemen who died on active duty or of service-related injuries. It was established in New York in 1945.

While the national organization lobbies for widows' benefits, the purpose of the local group is to be a service to the community and a social group, she explained.

"Last year our members contributed 3,400 volunteer hours to various post agencies," Funderburk said. The group also donates food baskets to needy families at Thanksgiving, and contributes to community projects. "For example, we donated money for shoes for needy school children last year."

The chapter is always looking for donations to purchase new flags and flagpoles, Funderburk said. "Vandalism and normal wear and tear mean we have a constant need to buy replacements," she said.

The flags, which are 5 feet by 8 feet, cost $20 each, while the 20 foot flagpoles run $40. The group accepts donations of any amount.

Anyone who donates to the fund can have the name of their deceased loved one enscribed on a plaque at the Georgia Welcome Center, Warren said. "We're also in the process of having a plaque honoring the donors themselves," she said.

Erecting the flags on the flagpoles is quite a job in itself, Warren said. "Several local veterans' groups help us put them up and take them down, including th 1st Cavalry Division Association, the Purple Heart Association, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Veterans' Council," Warren said. "We couldn't do it without their help."

If you'd like to make a donation to the flag fund, send it to Gold Star Wives, 4119 Canady Street, Columbus, Ga., 31909.

Select ROTC cadets give up summer hoping to earn coveted Ranger Tab

It takes a lot for a soldier to make it through the U.S. Army Ranger School here.

He's judged on his physical conditioning and stamina, motivation, determination and leadership ability, as well as his soldier skills. There's also an undefinable quality that makes some soldiers rise beyond the normal levels of physical and mental endurance and go that extra mile.

It's a matter of pride for many soldiers to wear the Ranger Tab. Others want to increase their chances of promotion by getting into a ranger battalion or regiment. Many men wash out and don't get recycled.

But at least 42 students in Ranger Class 10-86 have that extra quality that will see them through the eight weeks training, said Lt. Col. William Scandrett.

He's speaking of the 42 Reserve Officer Training Corps cadets who are here for Ranger School, which counts as their advanced summer camp.

"We're training the generals of the 21st century, the future officer leadership of the Army," Scandrett said.

The students who are here competed with thousands of cadets all over the country for the 42 slots in this class and were selected as the top men by a special U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command selection board. They were chosen based on their military and academic records, as well as physical fitness and motivational factors.

"These men were selected because they have all the prerequisites to make it through Ranger School," he said.

Scandrett is a professor of military science from Augusta College in Augusta, Ga., who is serv-

Brave Hawk

Cavalry unit serves as 197th's eyes, ears

by Troy Buchanan
197th Public Affairs Office

Soldiers from Troop A, 15th Cavalry, deployed to a Fort Benning training area last week to be tested in their combat missions. The evaluation was in conjunction with the 197th Infantry Brigade's recent command post exercise, "Brave Hawk."

"The Cavalry is the eyes and ears of the Brigade," explained 2nd Lt. Matthew Devore, a tank platoon leader from the Cavalry troop. "Cavalry provides information on the disposition of the enemy so the main friendly forces can effectively engage and destroy the enemy."

During the evaluation the Cavalry troop performed such missions as battlefield screens, reconnaissance in zone and covering force missions.

"The purpose of a covering force mission," said Devore, "is to slow the enemy down until a larger force can engage them."

The chief aim of the Cavalry troop is to give the Brigade commander a good clear picture of the battlefield. This includes not only disposition of the enemy but information about the terrain as well.

Determining whether or not Alpha Troop accomplished these missions was the job of a team of evaluators from Fort Stewart, Ga.

1st Lt. Alvin Peeples, one of the evaluators said, "What I am looking for is their strengths and weaknesses."

Another mission of the evaluators is to keep track of simulated casualties during battles and to settle disagreements over the outcome of battles.

"Soldiers may try to abuse the MILES equipment, so you have to watch out for that," said Peeples.

For the troop's rearward passage of lines mission the evaluators looked for such things as proper coordination and signals that are necessary while passing through friendly lines.

The soldiers returned to Kelley Hill at the conclusion of the training Monday.

Never let it be said that the 197th Infantry Brigade doesn't make the most of its training. The Brigade's command post exercise "Brave Hawk" combined different objectives of several 197th units into one intense training exercise on post last week.

In a battalion field training exercise, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry accomplished its training objective while under the control of the Brigade headquarters.

According the MSgt. Gary Thorstad from the 3-7th operations section, the Battalion had three training objectives to accomplish throughout the exercise.

"We received orders from Brigade and then revised our plans to carry out the order," Thorstad said.

The Battalion conducted an assault upon an objective. The mechanized infantrymen assaulted and pushed back the enemy, Thorstad said. "Then we reconsolidated and were given the order to defend in place."

Throughout the defensive phase of the exercise, soldiers concentrated on building individual fighting positions, patrolling operations and reconnaissance of sectors forward of their positions.

"All this is part of a good defense," Thorstad said.

The Battalion culminated its training with a counterattack mission. Following that, the unit remained in the field for several days of mechanized gunnery training. Thorstad added, "The FTX was excellent training in preparation for the upcoming joint readiness exercise."

The 3-7th and other Brigade units will participate in JRX "Gallant Eagle" in California in July.

'Platypus' adds new dimension to command post

by Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

The newest player in command post exercises by the 197th Infantry Brigade has the unlikely name of "Platypus."

Although this platypus is not a duck-billed mammal that lays eggs, it possesses a unique capability to be many different things.

The Platypus is essentially an operation's center built into a movable Army van. Equipped with map boards, counterspace and shelf space for radios, the van can be towed to almost any location. Once in position, the Platypus can be configured to whatever type of operation's center it needs to be.

"This provides us with an outsider's view of the Brigade," explained Lt. Col. James B. Stapleton, 197th deputy commander.

During a training exercise, for example, the Platypus can play the role of an adjacent unit, a higher headquarters or an attached unit thereby introducing a new element into the operation.

With this, the Brigade staff could be forced to respond to radio and written reports from a higher headquarters," said Stapleton.

The Platypus could also be used by evaluators and controllers during unit evaluations. Such a facility could even be used for evaluations of the entire Brigade. During these events, the Platypus could serve as a location for an after-actions review.

The operation's center could also play the role of additional task forces, which would put additional pressure on the Brigade commander and staff.

"We're also looking to use this facility for no-notice moveouts," explained Stapleton. "Since it consists of only one van, very few people would know it was moving out."

The Platypus carries generators and can be completely self-sustaining. Depending on the mission, it would be manned by people from within the Brigade or from other units or installations.

Commissary manager knows his stuff; been on job for more than half a century

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A cartoon taped on Jose Fantauzzi's door shows a doctor telling an elderly patient, "There's nothing medically wrong. A man your age who's in your condition is supposed to feel bad."

This gentle humor reflects Fantauzzi's attitude about himself, after 55 years of government service.

At 75 he's still going strong as manager of the Fort Benning commissary, with no real plan to retire.

"As long as my health is good I plan to continue working," he said. "When you know your job, it's easy. There's no pressure and it's a relaxed working situation."

He said it's hard for him to believe that 55 years have passed since he enlisted in the Army in 1931. "It seems like it was yesterday that I enlisted in the Army on White Hall Street in New York City," he said.

The Army was different then and to a 16-year-old Puerto Rican boy, it was the culmination of his childhood dream to be accepted.

"The Army was very picky about who they accepted back then. If you had one tooth missing, they rejected you. Of the 26 boys who tried to enlist when I did, only five were accepted," he said.

Despite the excitement of making the cut, it was a rough transition from boy to man. "The noncommissioned officers were rough on recruits and it was hard. I cried myself to sleep at nights for the first six months."

He spent his first three years in the infantry, then reenlisted in the quartermaster corps and started moving up. He said they misunderstood him when he requested an assignment near New York City and he ended up going to Plattsburg, N.Y., which was 20 miles from the Canadian border. "I stayed on that iceberg for nine years," he joked.

His first commissary assignment came while he was a career soldier. He was assigned to Camp Upton, N.Y. in 1945. "It was an old World War I detention camp and my major duties were to feed the troops, feed the German and Italian prisoners of war and feed the sick and wounded at the base hospital," he said.

In the 40s the commissary had no meat or produce sections, he said, just canned goods, dairy products and a few personal items.

Serving his country has been a lot of fun, Fantauzzi said. He was assigned in France from 1950 to 1955, which gave the family a chance to travel all over Europe. When he was assigned to a post in Thailand, they traveled to the Orient. "What other job would have allowed me to go to India and visit the Taj Mahal?" he asked.

He retired from the Army as a chief warrant officer in 1957 and spent a year working in Puerto Rico. His family didn't like living there, so they returned to the U.S. in 1958 and he went to work in the commissary at Aberdeen Proving Ground in Maryland.

He came to Fort Benning in 1974 and under his leadership, the facility has won best commissary worldwide honors once, best in the Southeast region twice and was named runner up for the region three times.

Fantauzzi said the secret to running a good commissary is people. "I give credit to my present staff for this location being the fine operation it is. A good staff is what it takes, people who are dedicated, have perseverance and enjoy their work."

Since he's been everywhere and seen the world he's not anxious to retire, but joked that he might someday. "Maybe next year, when President Reagan retires."

ing as the cadets' liaison and evaluator.

Last week the cadets spent 6 1/2 days in pre-Ranger training, "to bring their military skills up to par with other ranger students who are currently on active duty," Scandrett said.

According to Scandrett, the cadets range in age from 18 to 29. More than half of the cadets in the group are airborne qualified, and one-third of them are air assault qualified. Some are combat veterans of Grenada, a few are ex-Marines, and one man graduated from the Special Operations Scuba Diving School.

They're also high on the academic ladder, Scandrett said. "The group's average grade point average is 3.3 on a 4.0 scale."

Each agreed to commit one whole summer to the training, in case injuries force them to be recycled.

But he doesn't expect any failures because of physical condition. "These cadets were required to be able to do physical training up to Ranger School standards before they came here, plus a 12-mile road march with full field gear in three hours or less and run five miles in 40 minutes or less," Scandrett said.

He said he thinks all of them will make it, barring unforeseen injuries, because they are a highly motivated bunch of cadets.

"If they graduate, it guarantees that they'll be branched infantry when they graduate from college," he said. "Most ROTC cadets don't have any assurance that they'll get the branch they request, so this is a big plus for them."

The cadets have had classes on land navigation, patrolling, weapons, using communication equipment, and reconnaissance and ambush techniques. They've had a chance to test their leadership ability by being squad, platoon and team leaders, and teamwork skills as squad and platoon members.

From a personal standpoint, earning the Ranger Tab is a tremendous confidence builder, Scandrett said. "These students will be the leaders on their campuses when they go back to school. The'll have earned the respect of other ROTC students and their instructors, who know how tough Ranger School is."

The cadets will also be assets to their schools' ROTC programs. Most will have a chance to teach ranger skills to fellow students and will help prepare next year's group of ROTC ranger students. They'll be a source of information for other students, Scandrett said.

"They'll also end up becoming recruiters on the campuses and draw more people into the ROTC program," he said.

Ranger Class 10-86 started Tuesday, and those who have what it takes will graduate July 31.

"OUR NEW ARMY HOUSING IS NICE TO COME HOME TO. IT WAS WORTH THE WAIT."

SFC Ron Rhodes and his wife Connie.

"It sure didn't take us long to get comfortable in our new house here at Fort Polk. Connie loves the size and lay-out. Ronnie-Lee loves the playground. And there's even room to store my boat.

"We love our quarters. This house has been very important for us in making a good home.

"Because we're in the Army, people may not expect us to live this well. But the Army has changed a lot in the past five years. It's a good place to live, to be.

"Connie and I feel that the Army's really come a long way in housing and, you know, in taking care of its people."

The overall quality of quarters on posts throughout the Army continues to improve. And housing starts and renovations are at an all-time high. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

Wilson School students write on; original poetry, prose published

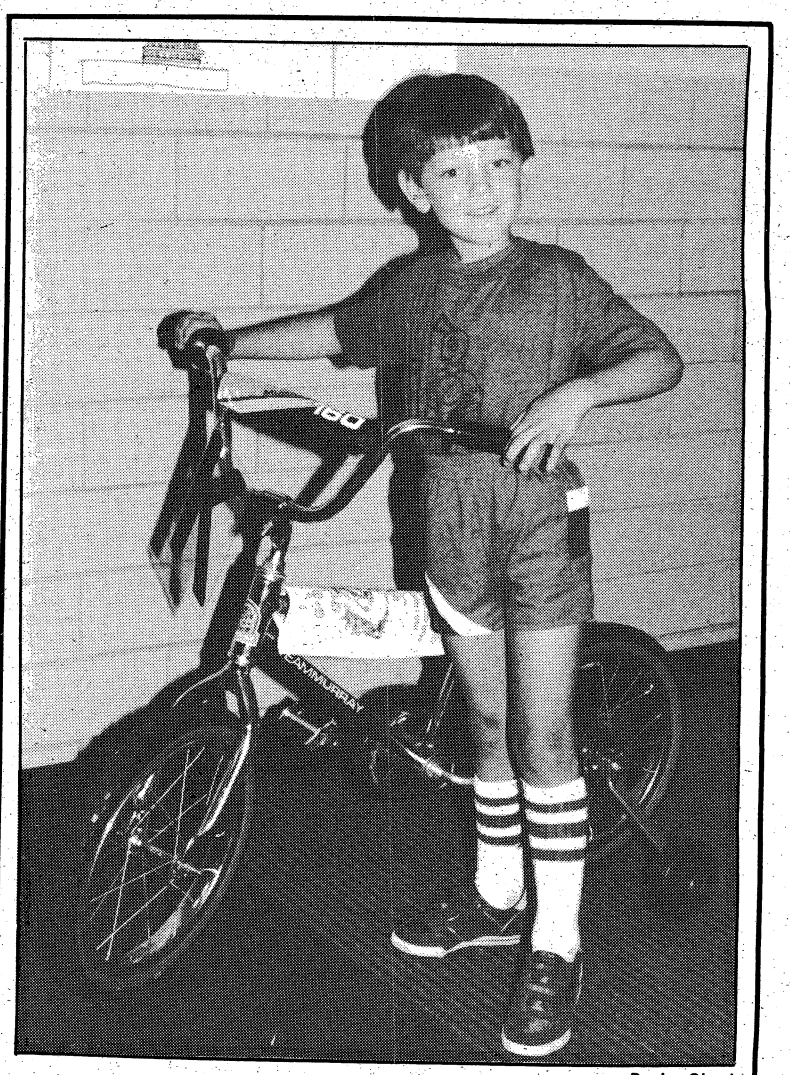
Fort Benning Schools



Wilson School third graders learned about books "first hand" by writing and publishing one themselves.

The students put together a 20-page anthology of creative writing and art work. Each of the 102 third graders is represented by a poem, an essay, a report or an original drawing.

Third Grade Anthology represents the highlights of the third graders' year together at Wilson School. The national news, folklore, stories, math, music, social studies, and science contained in its pages reflect a third grade view of 1985-86.

Volunteer teaches water safety, helps community

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Everytime a person goes after someone they're putting their life on the line, but the time it takes to die is usually a lot shorter than the time it takes to get trained medical help. Emergency care is something anyone can do," said Elaine Kendall, Red Cross Health Services Education Chairman.

But emergency care needs to be learned, that's why Kendall spends five to seven days a week instructing lifesaving, first aid and water safety classes on Fort Benning.

Kendall has a multitude of responsibilities. "I make sure the equipment is there for the classes. I research new programs and handle instructor cards and records," she said.

"We have public relations and they do a fantastic job but they send me some things," she added.

The contributions Kendall has made to the water sfaety programs here are obvious.

"A year ago we taught only 17 hours a month. This year it's on the average of 150 to 155 hours a month," Kendall said. Although Kendall herself may spend 40 to 80 hours a week volunteering her time, she prefers to shift the credit. "It was a lot of us. All of the Red Cross working together," she said.

Why would an alredy busy mother of two girls (9 and 10 years old) donate her time so selflessly?

She admits to wanting to help make the community safe. "Since my family is a definite part of the community I like to think the community will be safer," Kendall said.

Kendall, whose mother is a nurse, worked in a hospital and like her mother also practiced nursing.

Being the wife of a soldier made it difficult for her to keep hospital hours. "I wanted to be home with my family. Hospitals don't offer enough flexible time. This way (working for the Red Cross) I can make my own hours," she said.

But making her own hours means being available for any emergency.

Since becoming active in Red Cross 10 years ago she has been instrumental in saving at least two lives. She believes that this is an obligation for anyone with the training. "When you sign any card, CPR (cardiopulminary resuscitation), first aid or water safety, you take on the responsibility to stop and help," Kendall said. "Once they have the training they don't have the option, they have the responsibility to try and save that person," she added.

If Kendall has her way, she will see to it that anyone desiring the training in emergency lifesaving will get it.

Army warrants become commissioned officers

Army News Service

Army warrant officers will gain new responsibilities and prestige as commissioned officers under recent legislation that amends Title 10 of the United States Code.

The legislation, included in the fiscal year 1986 Department of Defense Authorization Act approved last November, permitted the Army to change the appointment procedures and status of Army chief warrant officers (CWO 2, 3, 4) beginning June 1 "to equalize appointment procedures in the armed forces for regular and Reserve warrant officers," according to the legislation.

Until now, all Army warrant officers were appointed by the Secretary of the Army, while all chief warrant officers of the Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard have been receiving presidential commissions, said CWO 4 David E. Helton, a staff officer in charge of warrant officer issues for the Army.

Congress has highlighted three basic consequences of the legislation. First, warrant officers will gain the authority to administer the oath of enlistment. Second, they can be designated as commanding officers and assume many of the responsibilities allowed to higher-grade commissioned officers. Finally, their service as commissioned warrant officers can be counted as commissioned service.

While it will remove many of the legally-imposed limitations on appointed warrant officers, the legislation does not address all the specific consequences of the commissionings. Therefore, the Army currently is reviewing its regulations and other documents so that it can fully implement the law, Helton said. He said the Army cannot yet determine how long this process will take.

The new law authorizes the Secretary of the Army to commission Reserve warrant officers promoted to permanent chief warrant officer grades and the president to commission those promoted in the regular Army. Promotions under the Army of the United States' temporary system does not qualify a warrant officer for a commission. Warrant officers (WO1) will continue to be appointed (not commissioned) by the secretary of the Army, Helton said.

Because of the Army's dual promotion system that features temporary and permanent promotions, Congress has assigned commissioning authority to both the president and the Secretary of the Army. It made no distinction, however, between the status of officers commissioned in the two categories, he said. The difference is strictly procedural.

Interpretations of the new legislation, in addition to those outlined by Congress, indicate that commissioned warrant officers will be given the following authority and status:

- Under Article 9(B) of the UCMJ, they may order enlisted personnel into arrest or confinement by their own authority. A warrant officer who is not commissioned must first receive such authority from a commanding officer;
- They are subject to Article 133 of the UCMJ — conduct unbecoming of an officer and a gentleman;
- They may sit on "Courts of Inquiry" appointed under Article 135, UCMJ;
- They are eligible for inter-service transfers under Title 10, United States

TRADOC's top enlisted man impressed with Fort Benning

by Henry Brown
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command's top enlisted man visited Fort Benning last week.

CSM William J. H. Peters was on post to share some ideas with CSM Roy C. Owens.

After two days of observation, Peters seemed impressed with the installation.

"Fort Benning touches the rest of the Army," he said.

Peters said that because Fort Benning trains infantry soldiers, training manuals and doctrine are written here and the U.S. Army Infantry Board tests much of the equipment used by the Army, this post is an important one.

The command sergeant major also has respect for the quality of soldier coming from Fort Benning. "The best judge of the product that Fort Benning puts out is the unit that gets it," he said.

Peters had praise for the Drill Sergeant School here as well. The training program underwent a study in 1984. As a result of that study, a new program of instruction was developed. Peters believes the Army is now turning out better drill sergeants than ever before.

"Since I've been at TRADOC I've have the opportunity to participate in three Drill Sergeant of the Year selection boards. This year's board was a super board in comparison to the two previous boards. The drill sergeants had to be more proficient physically, mentally and technically," Peters said.

On the issue of the Army's new Tobacco Cessation Action Plan, Peters said, "For years the experts have been telling us that we are endangering our health by smoking. We as noncommissioned officers should educate our young soldiers on the risks of smoking. Through educating and restricting smoking, it will become less popular among soldiers, like alcohol."

Commenting on the recent talk of plans to abolish the Skill Qualification Test as a tool in promotion, reelnlistment and other personnel actions, Peters said he doesn't believe the SQT should be used in personnel actions but, as a tool to measure unit training programs and individual performance.

Peters talked about individual unit Physical Training programs he participated in while he was here. He said they were well-organized, greatly executed and there was great participation. He also had praise for the command emphasis in the local PT programs.

To the NCOs at Fort Benning he left this message: "Lead by example. It is exciting to see the enthusiasm. Be experts. Be innovative, you can't be in a rut, continue to think and make the soldier feel good about every minute of training that he gets."

Federal employees plan agenda

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Federal Women's Program Committee will sponsor Federal Employee's Week Monday through Friday.

The week will consist of a series of workshops designed to enhance the Army's policy of equal employment opportunity and to inform federal workers at Fort Benning on how to improve their chances of gaining promotions within the civil service system.

The workshops will be at Building 4, Classroom 6. Anyone interested in attending will be excused, without charge of leave, pending mission requirements.

A kickoff luncheon is planned for Monday from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Columbus Hilton.

The workshops will begin Tuesday and will run from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. and from 1 to 3 p.m. daily.

The topics for Tuesday will be Merit Promotion and Affirmative Action in the morning and Life Experiences, College Credits in the afternoon.

Wednesday's discussions will include Hiring Registers in the morning and Civilian Training in the afternoon.

The Civil Service Retirement Program will be discussed Thursday morning and Investment Counseling is set for the afternoon.

Friday, Management-Employee Relations is the morning's topic and the afternoon's workshop will be Self Improvement Through Public Speaking and Communication.

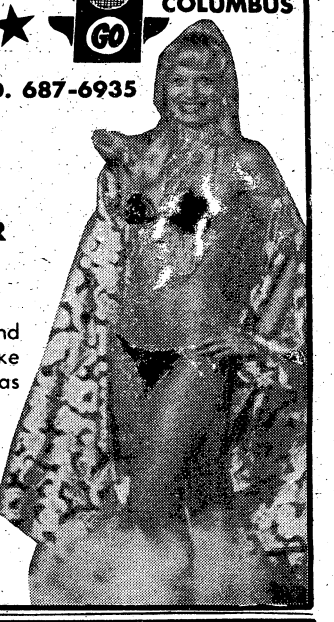
code;

● They can be appointed as general staff officers or inspectors general;

● They are not statutorily precluded from appointment as summary court-martial officers. However, under the manual for courts-martial, a summary court-martial should be in the grade of captain or above.

The legislation does not affect warrant officer eligibility for retirement, however. Warrant officers still can retire under provisions of Title 10, U.S. code, Section 1293, if they complete at least 20 years of active federal service. Or if their career includes 10 or more years as a commissioned officer or commissioned warrant officer, they can choose to retire under section 3911, according to Helton.



The only advantage to counting commissioned warrant officer service as commissioned service would be for warrant officers who have at least 30 years of active federal service. If at least 10 years of this service was as a commissioned officer, then the warrant officer could retire at the highest grade held for at least 180 days, even if that grade was gained under the Army's temporary promotion system.

Congress has amended Title 10 to address those areas where commissioned Army warrant officers may assume the duties previously limited to commissioned officers. "Commissioned officer," as now defined in the U.S. code, includes commissioned warrant officers," Helton said. "Therefore, wherever the term appears without qualifications or exceptions pertaining to commissioned warrant officers (for example, commissioned officers in the grade of captain or above), they are included.

"We are looking at many of those areas not directly addressed by Congress and will be making recommendations to the Secretary of the Army to resolve these issues," he said.

Because the legislation does not require the Army to commission its warrant officers, it leaves many questions unanswered.

World class champion wrestler combines soldiering, sports

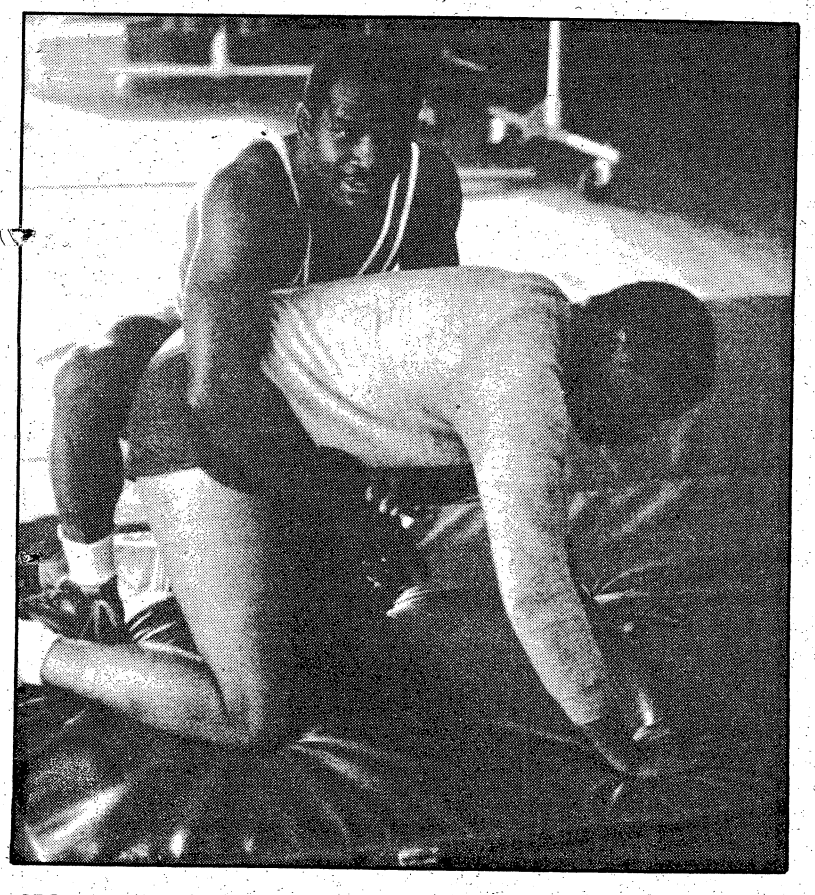
USAIC Public Affairs Office

SFC Tony Thomas, an instructor with the 29th Infantry Regiment's Bradley Commander's Course, joined the Army in 1975. He has air assault wings, the Expert Infantryman's Badge and is a qualified drill sergeant. At 29 he is young for a sergeant first class. Tony Thomas is also a world class wrestler.

"I've been wrestling for about 13 years now. I started out in junior high, wrestled off and on, then joined the Army and wrestled for another couple of years. I started wrestling again in 1982 and I really enjoy it," Thomas said.

The 29-year-old also does pretty well at the sport he enjoys.



Since January, Thomas took fifth place in the Pier Gant Cup wrestling matches in Norway; won the Army Championships in March in both Greco-Roman and freestyle; was the runner-up in the Inter-Service Championships in Greco-Roman and third in freestyle at Quantico, Va.; took first place in the Midwestern Regional Nationals; second place in the Eastern Regionals and fourth place in the National Championships in Wisconsin. In addition, the sergeant first class was an alternate on the 1984 Olympic Wrestling Team.

Thomas devotes seven to eight months each year to wrestling and the remaining months are spent at Fort Benning.

"We trained at West Point this year. A typical training day was sprints at 8 a.m., wrestling practive from 9 to 11, a second practice from 2 to 4:30 p.m. and in the evening we had to run on our own and lift weights. We did this six days a week and on Sundays it was running and weight lifting on our own. I attribute my success to the 100 percent support I get from my unit," said Thomas.

Greco-Roman, as opposed to freestyle wrestling, primarily concentrates on moves against the upper body. It is the oldest Olympic sport and involves a lot of "high altitude" throws, according to Thomas. In freestyle wrestling opponents can attack each other's legs, but this is not allowed in Greco-Roman.

When asked how much longer he would keep wrestling, Thomas smiled and replied "I hope my last match will be for the Olympic Gold Medal in '88. I'll be 31 by then and I guess I'll hang it up."

SFC Tony Thomas practices with a wrestling partner during a recent work-out at Briant-Wells Field House.

Exercise class dances to upbeat jazz sounds

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Dancing to the upbeat rhythms 20 students work out three times a week to an internationally known routine.

The Jazzercise classes taught by Terri Smith at the Officers' Club Health Center, are a part of an international dance program choreographed by Judy Sheppard-Missett, founder of the program.

"There are more than 4,000 instructors based throughout the United States and in 18 foreign countries," Smith said.

The jazzercise routines are the same in each class.

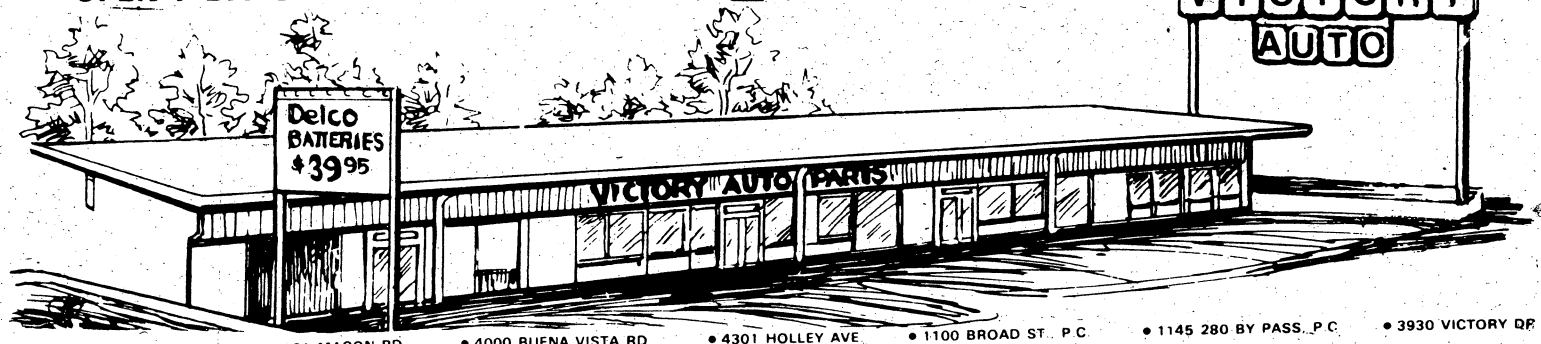
"A program here would be the same as a program in California," Smith explained.

There are only two jazzercise programs in the local area. The health center class is the only one on Fort Benning.

The routine opens with a warm-up, followed by the 25-minute aerobic section of the program.

The instructor keeps a steady rhythm with the commands for each exercise.

The grimaces and smiles on the students' faces show that although they are working hard, they are also having a lot of fun.



"We concentrate on the cardio-vascular system, muscle toning, endurance and flexibility," Smith said.

Smith was certified in Birmingham, Ala. The certification process was a two-month ordeal consisting of two auditions. Each audition lasted four days.

Smith represents an international program that provides a fun way to burn up those calories.

I nervously entered Furnish America's showroom. As I had expected, the entire store was awash with hungry shoppers. I worked my way down one aisle and spied a three piece living room group that I liked. As I sat on the sofa, a very heavy set woman approached very rapidly and said, "That's mine!" I glanced at the price tag and understood immediately why she wanted the group. I then saw her husband, obviously a Ranger who eats nails for breakfast, approach the area with fire in his eyes. I hastily beat a retreat and as I bound over the sofa a native salesperson assured me there was one in stock but for safety purposes we could find refuge in the credit office. I was sheltered by friendly store employees as they arranged the most convenient credit terms for me. I look back now, and laugh, content in the knowledge that I had explored Furnish America and came back to tell about it. The trophy's in my living room. I think I'll lie down on that comfortable sofa and think about my next sojourn to Furnish America.

Soldiers must comply with Georgia law, meet requirements for truck suspensions

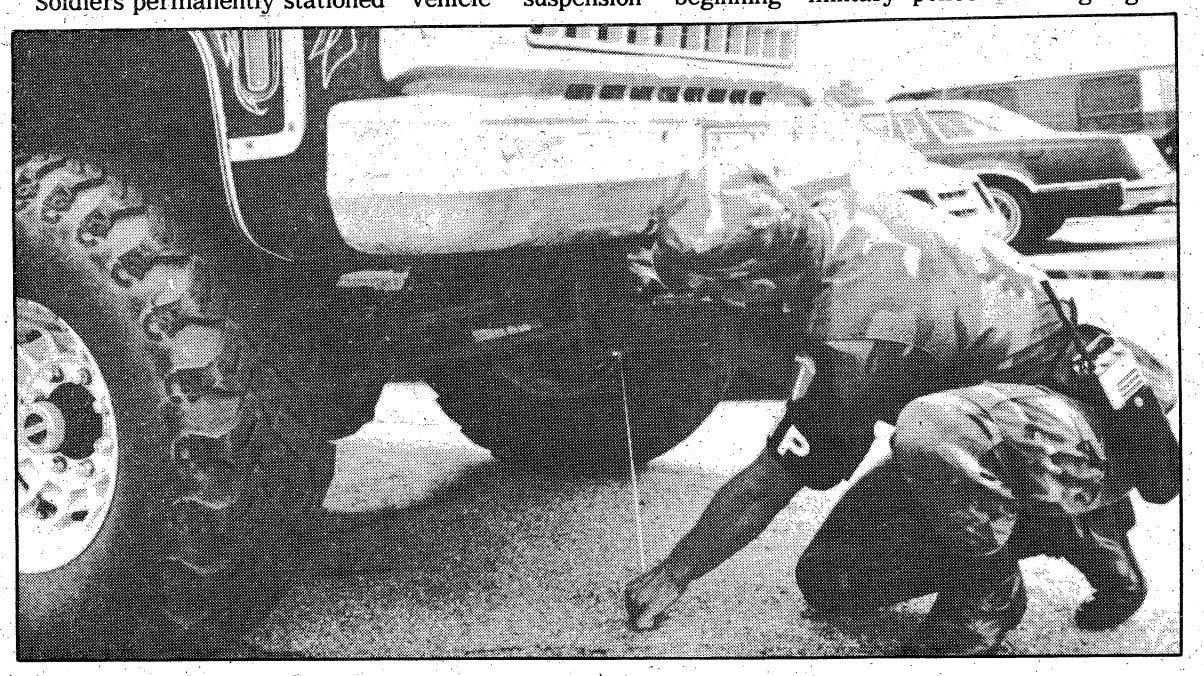
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers permanently stationed at Fort Benning will be required to comply with a new Georgia law governing the height of their vehicle suspension beginning July 1.

Although the law actually went into effect June 1, Fort Benning military police aren't going to ticket violators until next month.

Maj. John Wood of the Columbus Police Department said they haven't started ticketing violators yet, but will begin to do so within a few weeks.

"We want to give people a chance to get their truck suspension lowered and we realize this may be expensive for some people," Wood said.



He said traffic officers reported that many owners have already complied with the new law. Violators can be ticketed with a moving violation, which carries a penalty of up to a $300 fine and 90 days in jail, Wood said.

Fort Benning policy is to adopt local laws, so the military police will also be looking for violators.

MPs will be issuing warning tickets to violators through the month of June.

"We want to give people a chance to make corrections to Special Forces officer is new deputy post commander

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Col. Donald "Buzz" McKay Jr. is Fort Benning's new deputy post commander.

McKay, a native of Americus, Ga., comes here after serving a three-year tour as commander of the Army Jungle Operations Training Center at Fort Sherman, Panama.

He said he is looking forward to his duty at Benning and has no changes in mind yet.

"I try not to approach any new position with any rationale for changes. I believe 'if it ain't broke, don't fix it,'" he said.

"Being new here I don't know what's bad or broken, but it looks like Col. Moore has done a great job here," McKay said.

The new DPC attended Webster University and the Georgia Institute of Technology before joining the Army in 1957.

In his 29 years of service, McKay has been awarded the Silver Star, three Bronze Stars and three Meritorious Service medals, as well as the master parachutist's badge.

His past assignments include: training officer and commander of the 1st Special Forces Group in Thailand; company commander of the 1st Air Cavalry Division in Vietnam; infantry advisor, U.S. Military Advisory Group, Thailand; executive officer, 1st Battalion, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) Fort Campbell, Ky.; and deputy commander of the 7th Special Forces Group, Fort Bragg, N.C.

Flag flies as symbol of our cherished freedom

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

My daughter, Dallas, and I were sitting on our front porch the other evening, eating ice cream cones and just talking. It was one of those lazy, balmy kind of evenings, not too hot and not too cold, but just right. As we talked, I happended to mention that Saturday is Flag Day.

Being 7 years old and inquisitive, she asked me why we had a Flag Day.

"We have a Flag Day to honor the American Flag," I replied, between licks of rocky road.

We talked of other things that afternoon that didn't really matter, but helped to pass the time. Thoughts of our flag kept coming back to me, however. Why, indeed, do we have a Flag Day and why even a flag?

President Woodrow Wilson said, in 1915, that "The things the flag stands for were created by the experiences of a great people. Everything that it stands for was written by their lives. The flag is the embodiment, not of sentiment, but of history."

What comes to mind from Wilson's words is that our flag is a symbol that triggers memories of those people, those great people, who fought for the creation of this country, who built this country and who died for this country defending what that flag of red, white and blue stood and stands for.

In Philadelphia, on June 14, 1777, Congress was in session while British General Burgoyne was in the process of invading this country anew from Canada. Recorded in the Congressional journal for that day were appropriations of monies for colonial militias fighting the English for the country we live in today. Included in the entries for that day , taken from a book entitled "The History of the United States Flag," was "RESOLVED: that the flag of the United States be made of 13 stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be 13 stars, white in a blue field, representing a new constellation." Thus was our flag born.

The heady wording of that resolution, "a new constellation," in reference to a country being coaxed into existence by a ragged army defying the greatest military power on the face of the earth at that time would seem almost comical. Indeed, America, the United States, was forcing its way into the lofty heavens of the nations of the world. Upstarts impudently trying to take their place alongside the likes of Great Britain, France, Spain and Holland. And these ragged upstarts even had the audacity to mandate the design of a flag.

Audacious or not, impudent or not, America, along with its flag, was born, a "new constellation," and how we have shined forth since.

Our flag, with its people resolutely behind it, has been called upon by many nations many times to protect them from tyranny. Witness World War I, World War II, Korea, Grenada: where the stars and stripes go, freedom and prosperity follow and wanton tyranny ends.

Our flag underwent many changes and additions as new states were admitted, as new stars burst into that constellation called America.

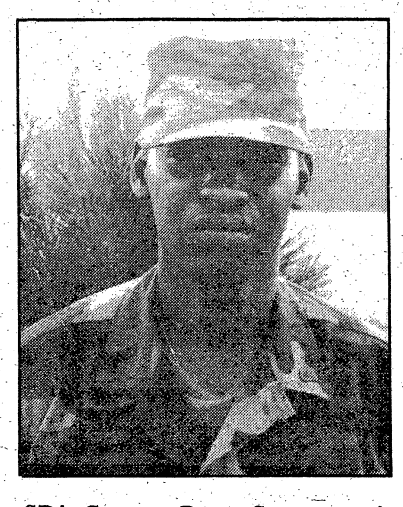
Even now the oppressed of the world come from all over, hoping to share in the freedom and opportunity of the land that flies the red, white and blue.

Wilson was right when he said that everything that our flag stands for was written by the lives of our people, men and women rallying to the colors, giving their very beings to protect what our flag stands for.

I suppose, though, that what our flag really stands for, in microcosm, is something very simple: a country where a father and daughter are able to eat ice cream together on a balmy summer day, talking about why we honor our flag on Flag Day, free from want, free from oppression, able to bask in the glory of the stars and stripes. That's what our country and our flag are really all about.

Various voices

What significance does Flag Day have for you?



SP4 Dale Thornton, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade
"I think the flag honors our forefathers who fought for and under it in past wars. The flag represents our country. It should definitely be honored. That's why we pay tribute to it every morning and every evening and why Flag Day is important."

SP4 Guy Dinkins, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade
"Flag Day shows that the American people remember our forefathers and the battles they fought over the last 200 years for the flag and the freedoms it represents. As long as our flag stands tall and is honored it shows the strong feelings of patriotism in our country."

PFC Damon Dibassie, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade
"I think our flag should be remembered for all of the wars fought under it. The flag signifies freedom, battles won and patriotism. Flag Day is a very special day."

SP4 George Day, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade
"Our flag should be honored. It should also be respected more. At retreat many people don't pay our flag the proper respect, they just keep walking or driving. The flag represents the greatness of our country and should be honored as such."

SP4 William Carter, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade
"The flag is a symbol of freedom, what we stand for. It has something to do with our being a free country and being able to do what we want to do, the flag is a symbol of that. I also think that on Flag Day a lot of things should be remembered,like veterans who died in past wars."

Op-Ed

Don't drink and drive, it isn't worth the price

by Shawn Paul
McClellan Air Force Base, Calif.

"Your friend is not going to make it." That's what the policeman said to me as I wiped the blood from my hands onto my shirt.

It started out to be a normal day. I had a few days off, so I decided to go see some old friends. My hometown was only an hour and a half away. Soon after I arrived, I ran into Rich and a couple of his friends.

We sat around drinking beer and talking about old times. Before we knew it, it was past midnight. By this time we were all pretty wasted. Then someone came up with the idea that we should take Rich's Jeep and do some four-wheeling. I don't know who suggested it, and it really doesn't matter, I guess.

We all jumped into the Jeep. I was in the back seat with one of Rich's friends. His other friend was in the front, and Rich was behind the wheel.

We headed out of town, just cruising down the street, everything going fine. All of a sudden, for no reason at all, Rich made a hard left turn. We were going about 40 mph, and, of course, the Jeep was not about to take the corner at that speed. Everything began to go in slow motion.

The Jeep began to roll slowly to my side. I remember someone yelling as we crashed onto the pavement. Then I remember the sound of glass breaking as we turned upside down. Another yell.

As we started to roll back over, we hit a tree. The next thing I remember, I was flying through the air, still everything in slow motion. As I hit the ground, the only thing that crossed my mind was that the Jeep was going to roll over on top of me. As I landed, I got up and ran. I escaped unharmed as did the other guy in the back seat.

I saw that he was all right, but from the Jeep there came a cry for help. "Get it off me! Get it off me!" Rich's other friend cried. The Jeep had rolled back over him and crushed his leg. I soon realized that Rich was not around. I yelled for Rich. No answer. I looked around. It didn't take long to find what I didn't want to see.

There was Rich, his body sandwiched between the Jeep and the sidewalk, his head hanging over the curb. No movement, no sound. Just blood.

I will never forget that night, and I don't think Rich will either. He got a second chance; I guess we all did. We all made the same mistake, but Rich paid more. His neck was broken and he was in a coma for more than a month.

Sometimes I think of what could have happened that night. Rich might not have made it. I guess we were all pretty lucky. Take my word for it though: Don't drink and drive. It's not worth it.

The School Brigade

How many times have you been running in a physical training formation and a vehicle has passed at a high rate of speed? How many times have the drivers completely ignored the road guards trying to slow them down? Unfortunately, the answers to the above questions are something we do not like to hear because these situations occur on an all-too-frequent basis.

Post officials have gone a long way to alert and protect soldiers during PT. Roadways with heavy traffic have been put off limits to running formations. Caution lights and signs have been set out to warn drivers. Policy letters have been published outlining safety requirements for running formations. Finally, inspectors and training evaluators are checking units to ensure they are in compliance with the policy letters and post regulations.

Even with the above actions, a significant problem still exists. Drivers in too many cases are not slowing down when passing PT formations. What can be done to reduce this problem? Increase the number of military police patrols; fine, but who is left to respond to emergencies when patrols are tied down trying to control ignorant or inconsiderate drivers. Close the post during PT hours — doesn't work. This was tried several years ago and created more problems than it solved. Publish articles; articles have been published and those concerned soldiers and civilians who have taken the time to read are complying.

There are no simple solutions that can be spelled out in a few short sentences. To correct this problem, it will take an increased safety awareness on everyone's part: commanders, supervisors, family members and civilian employees.

Soldiers and family members; SLOW DOWN! That's your husband or wife, roommate, fellow soldier or personal friend running down the road. Civilian employees and contractors: these people running in formation are defending your freedom, SLOW DOWN! Hopefully, the people who have read thus far understand what we're trying to emphasize. Ten miles an hour maximum when passing troop formations!

Reader points out errors in D-Day article

Dear Editor,

On the 42nd anniversary of Operation Overlord we should pause to reflect on the important contribution the soldiers of the Allied armies made by their efforts. Knowledge of military history is a vital tool for today's professional officer. I am delighted to see your newspaper feature history related articles. But your article on D-Day was so flawed with errors, over simplificiation and exaggerations that it cheapens the efforts and accomplishments of the soldiers you try to glorify. You should correct the errors in the article.

1. The Amer. beaches are east of the Cotentin Peninsula not west of it.

2. The Amer. did not begin the drive on Cherbourg until the beachheads had been linked. It was not captured until June 27 and could not be opened until July 19.

3. While the British began their move towards Caen at once they did not succeed in driving the Germans out until July 29.

4. Eisenhower did not take Italy from the Germans. While he was in England preparing for D-Day, the breakout from Anzio was going on. On May 30 the Allies were still short of reaching Rome and Allied forces fought in Italy until the end of the war in 1945.

5. All the achievements of June 12 are false. The American bridgeheads were not linked until June 13. Allied forces did not penetrate to a depth of 50 miles until at least July 31 when the 4th Armored Division passed beyond Avranches. St. Lou was seized by the 29th and 35th Infantry Division on July 18. British forces did not start a definite move towards Paris and the Seine basin until the Falaise Gap was closed August 20 and 21.

These objectives were not achieved easily. The Germans were outstanding fighters and made our forces work hard for every yard of ground. Allied gains came only after tremendous efforts and after many men had been killed and wounded. To imply that those gains were easily won does the veterans of that war as well as today's professional soldier a grave disservice.

New CSM big on NCO leadership training

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment PAO

CSM Richard Pimental lacks nothing in the way of infantry experience.

The 45-year-old veteran boasts 24 years combat arms experience, to include two tours in Vietnam.

Recently, the 29th Infantry Regiment welcomed Pimental, formerly battalion sergeant major of the 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, to its chain of command.

He replaces outgoing CSM Charles R. Wells who will soon join the 59th Ordnance Brigade in Germany.

As the newly assigned, senior noncommissioned officer, Pimental has no plans to change current operations. However, he would like to enhance unit pride and NCO development.

He explained, "I've always been fortunate to be a part of good units, and I've had some good leaders.

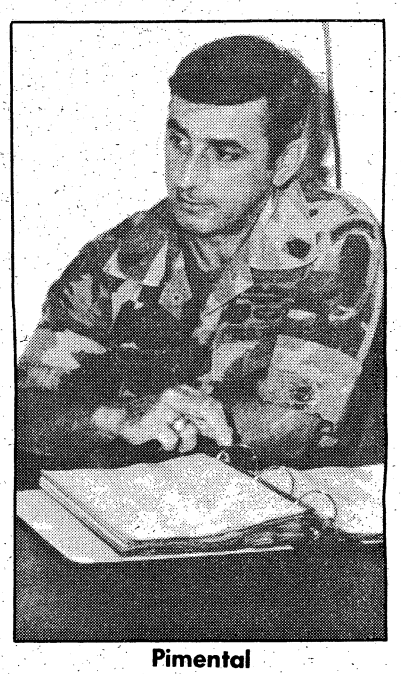
"I hope in some way to pass this sense of pride on to the NCOs in the regiment."

As for NCO development, Pimental says, "An NCO must continue to better himself.

"He must continually learn about new systems and come up with innovative ideas on how to make better use of training time."

This is important because today's soldiers are better educated and deserve leadership that is progressive and informed, according to Pimental.

In summary, a good NCO development program helps to make good leaders and enchances unit effectiveness, Pimental says.



The native New Englander joins the Regiment with past experience as a machine-gunner with the 1st Infantry Division, Vietnam; Special Forces Operations Intelligence sergeant; Special Forces intelligence sergeant on an "A" team and jungle operations instructor, Panama; Special Forces instructor, Fort Bragg, N.C.; Infantry platoon sergeant and first sergeant, Fort Stewart, Ga.; ROTC instructor, University of Connecticut; First sergeant, sergeant major and command sergeant major of the 25th Infantry Division, Hawaii; tours with infantry divisions in Germany and Korea; and graduate of the Sergeants Major Academy, July 1984.

Further, Pimental has served as a member of the Department of the Army Selection Board for E-7s and Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course selectees.

He, therefore, sees himself as a ready source of information for soldiers who are planning to go before such boards, he related.

In tune with his experience, he is the recipient of the Purple Heart, Meritorious Service Medal, four Army Commendation Medals, Army Achievement Medal, Combat Infantryman and Expert Infantryman badges, Drill Sergeant patch, and airborne and Special Forces tabs.

Pimental is the first in his position at the regiment to have an infantry background.

Soldier seeks disciplined lifestyle in Army

(Editor's note: This is the first in a series of 13 articles that will allow the readers to follow one soldier through his entire One Station Unit Training with the 1st Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill. All articles will be in the words of PFC Michael Ricca, Company C, 6th Battalion, 1st ITB.)

by Michael Ricca
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Having trained for the last 10 years, with the hope of participating in the 1988 Olympic Games in martial arts, I began to see obstacles that were "holding" me back. Realizing discipline is the cornerstone to success, I looked to the military as a possible answer. After discussions with members of my church and family I decided my thirst for dedicated training and self-discipline could be quenched in the United States Army. Even with the support of my family, the day I said goodbye to my wife Donna and my new son in Auburn, Wash. was one of the toughest in my life.

Today I am an Initial Entry Training soldier in a COHORT battalion in the 1st ITB. Being a platoon guide offers a lot of new responsibility and pressure, which I joined the Army for. This is a definite boost as I train to be not only a light infantryman but an expert mortarman as well. Despite thriving on pressure and mental discipline, I was overwhelmed at the severity of my first few days at Fort Benning. I was shocked by the amount and intensity of the shouting of the drill sergeants, not to mention the physical training we've done in such a short period of time.

After a few days, however, I began to understand the direction the drill sergeants were leading us. I realized that one of their objectives is to train well disciplined, physically fit soldiers capable of defending this country, should the need arise. After a slight "attitude adjustment" on my part, I felt that I could conform and excel in this new method of training.

The training is definitely tough, but the quality of it makes it more than tolerable. It is also extremely educational in many ways.

Last week we learned about chemical warfare and how to protect ourselves against it. We were taught how to don our protective clothing and masks. We were exposed to CS gas with and without protective gear; this exercise really bolstered our confidence in our equipment. Later, while on the trail, we were ambushed with CS gas. Those of us who properly donned our masks had no problems with the gas, others weren't so lucky. They experienced burning eyes, runny noses, severe coughing and other miserable conditions.

We were also afforded the opportunity to go through the NBC chamber and were told to remove our gear. Having mixed emotions about this task, I approached it with a "mind over matter" attitude and defaced all the rumors I had heard about how bad it was.

This was just one of the many obstacles I must face and overcome during my training here. By clearing these hurdles one at a time, I am getting closer to the opportunity of achieving my goals and dreams in life. I believe this training will lead me to success and contentment with myself, my family and my military career.

197th soldiers test basic survival skills in field

by Sally Roberts
197th Public Affairs Office

Soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade tested their will to survive recently during three days of training.

The soldiers went to the Fort Benning training site with only essential equipment and were tested in several different situations. They worked together in groups to accomplish each task.

"We set up the training to be as realistic as possible," said SSgt. Matthew Bidou, HHC training noncommissioned officer. "We didn't waste any available time."

For example, when the soldiers arrived at the training site, they were ambushed by "aggressors" (other soldiers from the company) and were captured and taken to a "prisoner of war" camp.

However, the emphasis of the training was on survival skills. The soldiers had classroom instruction on skills such as obtaining food and water, starting a fire with steel and flint and concealing a burning camp fire.

Against a screen of green and white smoke, the soldiers crossed a rope bridge constructed by their trainers. They set snares to catch small game, learned to construct and avoid booby traps and had instruction in land navigation skills.

"Many of these skills come naturally," Bidou added, "but some things need to be learned."

Sgt. Scott Roadarmel described the training as informative and well prepared. "This is the toughest training we've had in the company," he said. "They are really teaching us the will to survive."

Job books provide ready training info

Army Training Support Center

Commanders and noncommissioned oficers: Your attention is called to Army Regulation 350-1, Army Training, on the use of job books. The job book, used for military occupational skill levels one and two, serves two basic purposes:

- Provides trainers a written record of soldier proficiency on common tasks and MOS-specific soldier's manual tasks.
- Provides trainers a management tool to guide unit training of individual soldiers. You must ensure that job books are maintained and transmitted to the soldier's next duty station.

Your attention is also called to AR 350-37, Army Individual Training Evaluation Program, on the use of the Field Expedient Squad Book (DA Form 5165-R). This form, use of which is optional, standardizes the recording of task proficiency information on individual soldiers. Although called "The Squad Book," it is designed for any situation (squad, crew, team, etc.) where soldiers work together. Skill Qualification Test, Common Task Test and Commander's Evaluation "go-no-go" results can be entered on this form. The Squad Book benefits the trainer in several ways:

- Facilitates recording and maintaining "go-no-go" task results for soldiers in the same MOS skill level.
- Consolidates tasks proficiency of soldiers for easy review analysis.
- Pinpoints soldier training weaknesses to focus remedial training.

MI unit deactivates after 41 years service

by Sally Roberts
197th Public Affairs Office

The 197th Infantry Brigade will bid farewell Monday to a unit that has provided an invaluable support asset to the Brigade's missions. The 179th Military Intelligence Detachment will be inactivated at 4:30 p.m. during ceremonies at Treadwell Field on Kelley Hill.

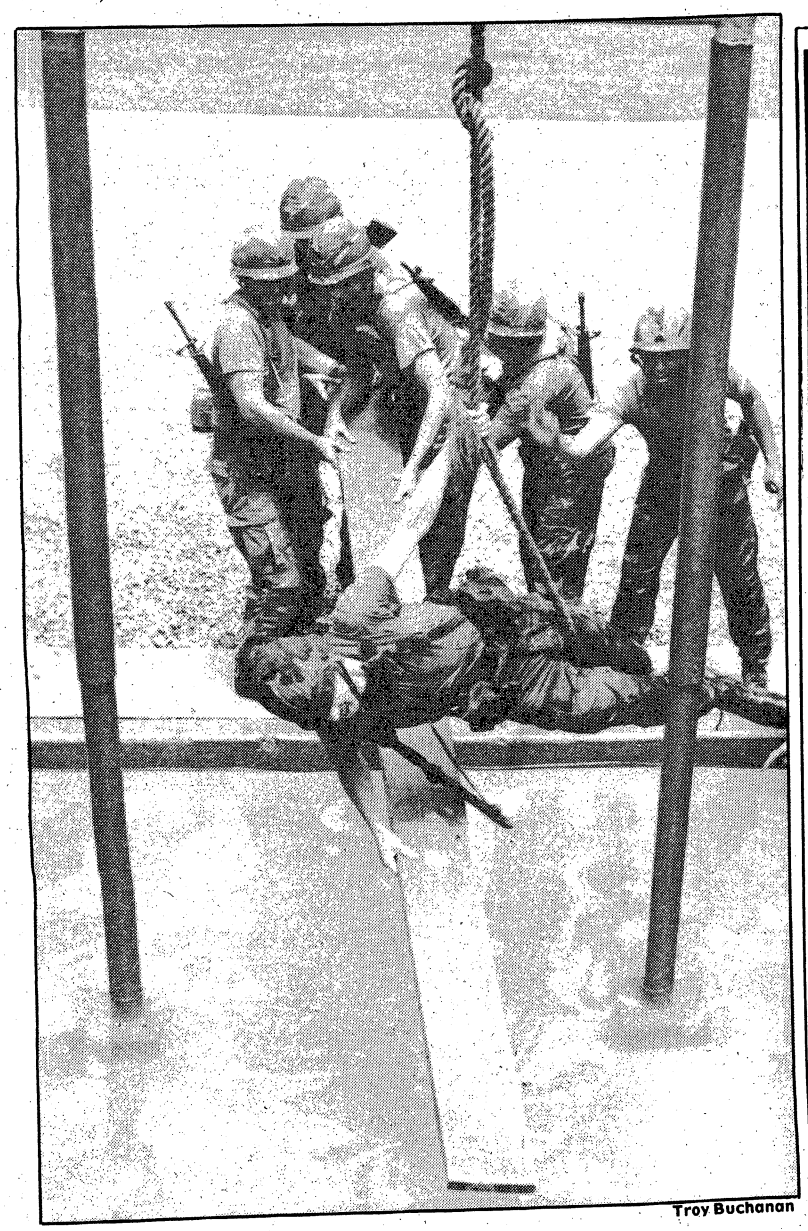
The unit's history dates back to 1945 when it was constituted on Morotai Island as the 179th Language Detachment. After the end of World War II, the unit was inactivated in Japan in July, 1946.

Twenty years later, the unit was redesignated as the 179th Military Intelligence Detachment at Fort Benning. After participating in 11 campaigns in Vietnam, the Detachment was again inactivated in October 1970. On March 21, 1973, the Detachment was reactivated at Fort Benning as a part of the 197th Infantry Brigade. The unit has been awarded the valorous unit citation, the meritorious unit citation, two awards of the Republic of Vietnam cross of gallantry with palms and the Republic of Vietnam civil action honor medal.

Since the detachment was reactivated as part of the 197th Infantry Brigade, it has provided the Brigade with advice and security in all intelligence matters. The unit provided interrogators with several different language capabilities. They also provided ground surveillance radar support for early detection of enemy troop movement.

"The 179th MID has deployed with the Brigade on all major exercises," said Capt. Debra Graham, Detachment executive officer. "We have supported unit-level training on Fort Benning and taught such classes as anti-terrorism and Subversion and Espionage Directed Against the Department of the Army briefings."

The Brigade will now seek intelligence support from the 320th Military Intelligence Company, an Army Reserve unit from Atlanta.



Graham added, "The 320th MI will provide the Brigade with the same capabilities as the 179th MID in addition to electronic warfare and signal capabilities."

"I have benefited from working with these professional soldiers," said Capt. Bernard P.F. Jefferson III, Detachment commander. "These soldiers have received valuable training with the 197th and I hope that their next assignments will provide them with the challenge they had here."

Troops hone gunnery skills at Ware Range

Steve Simpson

PFC William Misel, 2nd Squad, 3rd Platoon, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, quickly changes the barrel of the .50 caliber machine gun during gunnery training at Ware Range.

by Troy Buchanan
197th Public Affairs Office

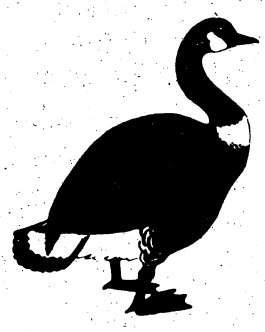
Soldiers from the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, spent several days sharpening their mechanized gunnery skills during training at Ware Range last week.

"Mechanized gunnery involves firing all weapons associated with the mechanized infantry," explained 1st Lt. Joseph Ozoroski, the range officer from Company E. "These include the M16 rifle, M60 and .50 caliber machineguns."

The range consisted of 10 points. At each firing point a squad was given a tactical mission that required the soldiers to perform reaction drills.

At the first nine points the machine gunners engaged targets that appeared without warning. As the armored personnel carriers moved through the field, several strategically placed targets popped up. The gunners had to react quickly and hit the targets, knocking them to the ground.

The first nine firing points were all mounted assaults, but the last was a dismounted attack. The soldiers dismounted their armored personnel carriers and engaged the enemy on foot.



As the carriers rolled to a halt, the rear ramp dropped to the ground. The infantry soldiers moved out of the vehicle, running for cover and getting on line with the carrier. Silhouetted targets appeared several hundred meters to the front of the soldiers, forcing them to react.

Steve Simpson

Sgt. Zeb Taylor of 2nd Squad, 3rd Platoon, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, fires his .50 caliber machine gun downrange during mechanized gunnery training last week.

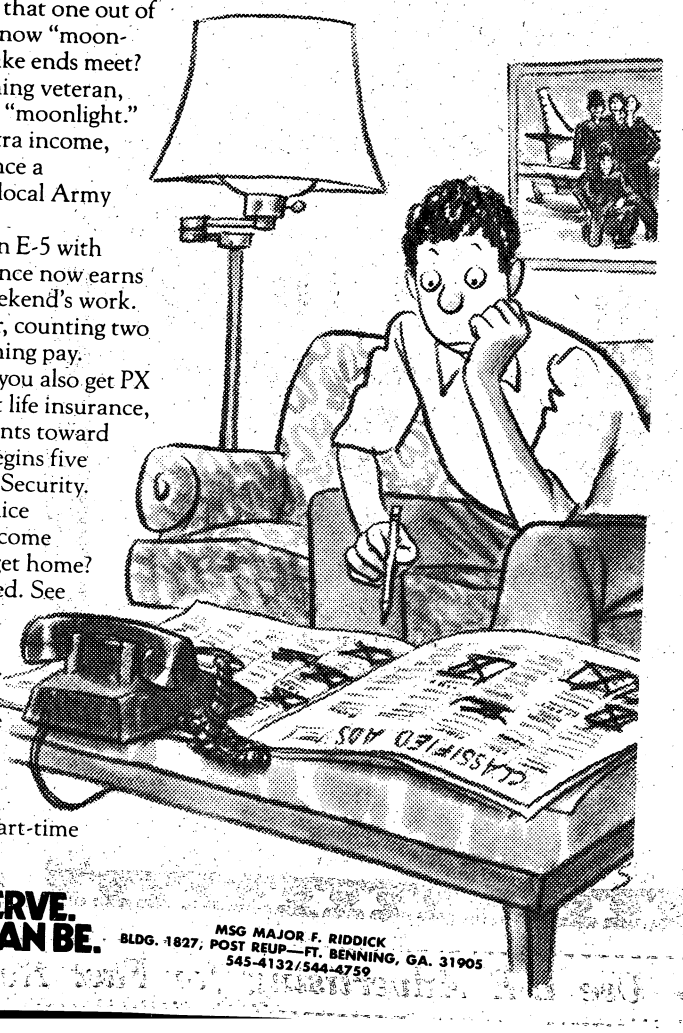
A GOOD PART-TIME JOB IS HARD TO FIND.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Did you know that one out of three Americans now "moonlights" to help make ends meet?

But as a returning veteran, you don't have to "moonlight." If you want an extra income, just "weekend" once a month with your local Army Reserve unit.



For instance, an E-5 with four years' experience now earns over $130 for a weekend's work. Over $2,000 a year, counting two weeks annual training pay.

As a Reservist, you also get PX privileges, low-cost life insurance, and retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have an extra income waiting when you get home?

It can be arranged. See your in-service recruiter. Or call 1-800-USA-ARMY. Overseas, write Army Reserve Opportunities, P.O. Box 7717, Clifton, NJ 07015.

Community projects net scouts 'Eagle' awards

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Four Boy Scouts from Fort Benning's Troop 27 were recently awarded the rank of Eagle Scout.

In a ceremony at the Main Post Chapel, the four received full honors before an audience of parents and fellow Scouts.

Each Scout participated in community service projects to complete the final steps in acheiving the coveted award.

Louis Acosta Jr.'s final step in achieving his award was cleaning and restoring an historical cemetery at Harmony Church.

Michael Hitchcock collected food for needy families at Easter and Randy Cook assisted the Easter Seals Day Care Center for handicapped children.

Joe Marm's service project was to fingerprint children at Fort Benning for parents' use.

2nd Infantry Training Brigade commander, Col. Steve Sigfreid said, "Nothing is more important than acknowledging the value of the Scout creed as a code to live by."

Six Boy Scouts from Troop 27 have earned the Eagle Scout award in the past six months.

Unit transforms 'Hobo Village' from eyesore to eye pleaser

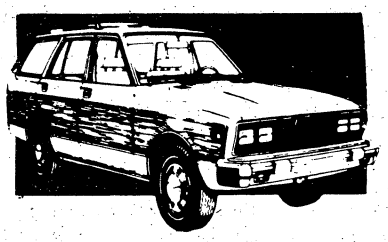
by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It is no longer "Hobo Village." It doesn't even look like it's nickname anymore. But the little patch of land at Benning Road has a new name and a new look.

Just outside Fort Benning, the lot has been completely renovated at the hands of the soldiers from Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

"We were asked to go out and look it (the lot) over to see if we could do anything with it," said 1st Lt. Jerome Aikens, a platoon leader with Co. B.

The 28-man team approached the lot and began clearing out stumps, cutting down trees and cleaning up the area.



"It was like clearing a jungle. Basically, what we did was landscaping," Aikens said.

The results of the community project were so good that Columbus recognized the soldiers' hard work.

"The city of Columbus put up a little sign at the site for the most improved area," Aikens said.

In a dedication ceremony last week, Deputy Post Commander Col. Jimmy R. Moore officiated, the lot was renamed. On one of the trees selected to remain on the lot is another new sign, this one left by Co. B. The sign heralds the park's new name to go with its new look: "Bravo Park."

Consider all the facts before shipping POV overseas

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Getting ready to transfer overseas? Like to bring that brand new Corvette with you? Well, there are a few things to keep in mind before shipping your vehicle.

A very big consideration is whether or not the car is owned or leased.

Leased cars cannot be shipped overseas unless specifically stated in the leasing contract.

According to the Comptroller General, "...there is no legal authority for the transportation of long-term leased vehicles under Title 10 U.S. Code 2634."

"Apparently there has been an increase in the number of soldiers renting cars as opposed to buying them," said Col. James Martin, chief of the Fort Benning Transportation Division.

Problems occur when soldiers receive orders for overseas permanent change of station and the leased car cannot be shipped. In order for anyone to ship a privately owned vehicle, proof of ownership is required.

"The bottom line is to, one, be aware that the government cannot ship leased cars. It must be done at your own expense. And, two, if you go ahead and lease anyway be sure there's something in the lease to cover the situation (PCS moves)," Martin said.

Even if you own your car, there are a number of factors to be considered before attempting to ship it overseas.

The Army will ship one motorized vehicle under PCS orders, regardless of rank or marital status. A motorized vehicle may be a car, truck or motorcycle.

According to officials at the Personnel Movements Section, the first thing to consider is whether or not the POV will be going to a restricted area. If the soldier will be at the overseas duty station for a year or less, he is not eligible to ship his POV.

Another important factor to consider is determining whether the country the soldier is going to has leaded or unleaded gasoline available.

If the country sells only leaded gas, the personnel at PMS will issue a waiver to have the car's catalytic converter removed. The converter must be removed 10 days prior to shipping date.

"This removal must be done at the soldier's expense and the person must retain any parts that are salvageable so they can be reinstalled when the car is returned to the states," said an offical at PMS.

However, shipping a POV can be expensive.

Even though the Army covers the shipping cost and will pay 16 cents per mile to the port of departure, there are additional expenses to consider.

"Overseas insurance is expensive and the soldier needs to be sure that his insurance company will cover it," the official said.

An additional expense is meeting the safety standards at the port of entry.

The vehicle will have to undergo a rigid safety inspection at the port before being allowed in the country. If the standards aren't met, the soldier may find himself buying new parts and paying for the cost of labor.

International Wives Club offers GED, English classes

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The International Wives' Club is a haven for foreign-born wives new to this country.

For women who don't speak English and are totally new to the American culture, going to the Club's social functions may be their only contact with the world outside their homes.

"So many ladies come in and don't speak English and find someone of their own nationality to talk to," said Olga Kelly, Club president.

For many, talking to other wives who know about Fort Benning can be a help. "There are so many things you don't know when you come here, like where to buy spices that are plentiful at home but rare here," said Renate Fischer, Club vice president.

The group was founded in May 1975 and meets the first Tuesday of each month in Building 2642 on Collins Loop at 7:30 p.m. Membership is open to foreign-born wives and anyone else interested in learning about other cultures.

Right now the club has about 100 members, representing the countries of Australia, Greece, England, Holland, Germany, Korea, Panama, Puerto Rico, Mexico, Vietnam, Italy and the United States.

Besides social functions, the group also sponsors English and GED classes. This summer the classes will meet on Tuesdays and Wednesdays from 9 a.m. to noon in Building 2642.

The club also sponsors citizenship classes twice a year.

One interesting service the club provides is a fashion show of costumes from around the world, that are modeled by wives, accompanied by the music of that country. "It gives us a chance to share information about the dress styles and customs of other countries with our American friends," Kelly said.

Kelly said the Club keeps prices of various activities low, to fit into the budgets of its members.

For more information on the Club, call Olga Kelly at 687-6471.

Civilians face cuts in Workmans' Compensation

Army News Service

The Labor Department recently announced that it will apply an automatic 7.37 percent reduction to most medical payments or reimbursements processed through the Office of Workmans' Compensation programs.

The reduction, prompted by provisions of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation, affects both direct payments to healthcare providers and reimbursements for claims by employees, including reimbursements of travel expenses incurred in obtaining medical treatment, said Leon Buchanan, personnel management specialist for the Civilian Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va.

If employees pay the entire bill to the health care provider and send in a claim for reimbursement through the Labor Department, the 7.37 percent of the total bill will come out of the employees' pockets. The health care provider is not obligated to refund to the employee the reduction applied by the labor department. It is to the employees advantage, therefore, to let the health care providers bill the government, said a Labor Department spokesman.

Likewise, medical providers are not entitled to recover the difference between the amount billed and the amount paid by the Labor Department, Buchanan said.

Where the Labor Department does not pay the entire cost billed, employees are not obligated to pay the remaining amount. When medical providers sign Form CA 16, Authorization for Examination and/or Treatment, or form OWCP 1500, Health Insurance Claim form, they agree to accept the government's charge determination as full payment for the covered services, Buchanan said.

If a health care provider should send a bill to the employee for the difference, the Labor Department recommends that the employee send this bill to his district Office of Workers' Compensation programs.

The Office of Workers' Compensation is required to make reductions to those bills paid through September 1986, Buchanan said. Notice of the reduction will be sent with each check for a reduced payment.

The only bills exempt from the reduction are those for rehabilitation maintenance, for service from rehabilitation providers, impartial medical specialists, second opinion referrals requested by OWCP personnel and physicians acting as medical advisors or consultants. Salary compensation paid for disability or death also are exempt from the reduction.

Employees who do take a loss, either for payments to medical providers or for travel expenses that were not reimbursed, may claim this amount as a reduction on their 1986 income tax form.

MPs offer suggestions on securing property

Provost Marshal's Office

Fort Benning is currently experiencing a serious problem with thefts in offices, shopping areas and parking lots. Property stolen has included purses, radios and car stereos.

The military police are taking all steps possible to prevent criminal incidents and to identify and apprehend the persons responsible for previous incidents. Criminal investigations are in progress and a number of people have already been identified.

However, the resources of the military police are limited and the problem areas are dispersed. The MPs alone cannot effectively prevent thefts, nor can they identify all of the individuals responsible. They must have the assistance and cooperation of all personnel who live and work on Fort Benning. After all, these incidents cost the government money; money that all of us pay in the form of tax dollars every year.

Those people who live and work on Fort Benning can follow some common sense tips to prevent the theft of personal and government property.

- Always secure your automobile and place high value items out of plain view, even if you are only leaving your car for a minute.
- Lock up your purse or take it with you when you leave your office. It only takes a second for a thief to pick it up. When shopping you should also keep it over your shoulder and not in the shopping cart.
- Record the serial numbers of your car stereo and other items you commonly keep in your car. If they are stolen, the chances of recovering them are greatly improved.
- Report any suspicious activity to the military police. Remember, if you leave your valuables unsecured you could be tempting someone who would otherwise not steal. Crime prevention is everyone's business.

Local resident gets award from German government

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Charles S. Daley, a distinguished Columbus resident and World War II combat veteran, was recently presented the Federal Republic of Germany Friendship Award by the German army's liaison officer, Lt. Col. Fred Schultz, on behalf of the ambassador of the Federal Republic of Germany, Gunther van Well.

"My country presented this award to Mr. Daley, the highest award that can be presented outside of the Federal Republic, because of his efforts in welcoming and assisting German army liaison officers at Fort Benning. Mr. Daley has been instrumental in fostering and sustaining friendship between the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States," said Schultz.

Daley, a banker and member of many civic organizations in Columbus, including Kiwanis and Chamber of Commerce, was a member of the 82nd Airborne Division during World War II. He saw action in Sicily, Italy and was a member of a glider unit that landed and fought in the D-Day invasion of France in 1944.

June board will recommend 180 officers for retirement

Army News Service

More than 600 regular Army colonels and lieutenant colonels will face a retirement board later this month that will recommend 30 percent in each grade for mandatory retirement.

A selective early retirement board consisting of members from the fiscal year 1986 Brigadier General Board is scheduled to convene about June 28 to review the personnel records of 317 colonels and 306 lieutenant colonels. From the board, a list of recommendations for early retirement will be developed and sent to the secretary of the Army for approval, said Maj. James Chalkley from the Directorate of Military Personnel Management in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at the Pentagon. This action is the first phase in the Army's attempt to equalize imbalances among the senior field officer ranks.

The board will consider all officers in the following two categories:

- Colonels not on a promotion list who have seven or more years in grade by the date the board convenes, provided at least four of those years have been served in the regular grade of colonel.
- Lieutenant colonels who have been considered but not selected for promotion to the grade of colonel four or more times as of May 1 (at least two of the non-selections must have been to the regular grade of colonel). Officers recommended for promotion by the fiscal 1986 colonels promotion board will not be considered for early retirement.

The secretary of the Army approved convening the board, authorized by Congress in 1981 under Title 10 of the United States Code, because officers in the senior commissioned grades have been staying in the service longer than had been predicted, Chalkley said. This situation, coupled with increased accessions and promotions to the lieutenant colonel and colonel grades, has led to imbalances within the field grade ranks.

"We've had this problem for a while now, and we have lived with it. Now we're in a position where we have to use the provisions of Title 10 to assist in reducing grade imbalances," Chalkley said. "This also will enable us to grant career status to more young officers."

Officers in the Continental United States who will be looked at by the board are being individually notified by the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va., and should receive a letter before the board convenes, said Maj. Michael La Garde, chief of the Officer Retirement Branch of MILPERCEN. The letter will include the most recent copy of the soldier's officer record brief.

Officers should immediately review and audit the brief, giving special attention to the most essential information, he suggested. Any changes should be made in red ink. This data includes assignment history, awards, military and civilian education, date of rank, heights and weight, military specialties and active federal commissioned service.

The officers should sign and date the form in "Section X" since this verifies that the information is accurate. Officer record briefs and any supporting documents must arrive at MILPERCEN by June 23 to be considered, La Garde said.

"Personal for" messages will be sent to officers outside the United States. These officers will not be sent a copy of their record briefs because of slow mailing time, La Garde said. However, recent copies of their briefs will be included in their field personnel file. MILPERCEN recommends that these soldiers immediately visit their servicing personnel center to ensure that changes to their briefs are forwarded to MILPERCEN before June 23.

Aside from updating their officer record briefs, soldiers will be allowed to submit personal letters directly to the president of the board discussing matter they feel are important in helping the board fairly consider their records. Letters should be addressed to:

President, SERB:
Attn: DAPC-MSB,
200 Stovall Street,
Alexandria, Va. 22332-0400

Letters must arrive by June 23 to be considered, La Garde said.

Any letters considered by the board will become a matter of record for the board and will be retained by the MILPERCEN commander, he added. These letters, or any other documents accepted by the board, will not be filed in officers' official military personnel files.

Communications or letters of recommendation from other parties on behalf of the officers facing the board are not permitted, Chalkley said. Likewise, the board will not review communications containing criticism or reflecting upon the character, conduct or motives of any person. Because it is not authorized by Army regulations, "complete the record" officer evaluation reports also will not be permitted

New rate structure means we all save

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A rate change by Georgia Power Company should mean a more comfortable summer for post residents and workers.

According to Judy Hyles, a utilities requirements specialist in the Administration and Budget Section, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, the utility company offered Fort Benning a rate for electricity that is designed to encourage industrial users to shift their peak demand times.

"In the past, we have had to monitor the peak usage times and our rates for the following 11 months were based on this peak," she said. "Every time we reached a new peak, such as during extremely hot weather, our costs increased."

Under the new rate structure, Fort Benning will be subject to curtailment days chosen by the power company, when it cannot meet the demand for electricity.

In the past, the Energy Office has tried to control demand for electricity. "When temperatures rose above 90 degrees, we'd have to cut off the air conditioning for 7 1/2 minutes out of every 60," said Rodney Carroll from the Energy Office. "When temperatures went above 95, we had to cut air conditioning off altogether to control our peak demand."

Under the new rate structure, Fort Benning will continue to turn off air conditioning 7 1/2minutes out of every 60 when temperatures are below 90 degrees, but when temperatures go higher, air conditioning won't have to be turned off.

New national medal honors Vietnam vets

Army News Service

A bronze commemorative medal honoring Vietnam veterans was issued in April by the U.S. Mint.

The Vietnam Veterans National Medal was authorized by Public Law 98-566, signed by President Reagan Oct. 30, 1984, "To honor the courage and dedication of the men and women in the Armed Forces of the U.S. who served in the Vietnam conflict," according to Director of the Mint, Donna Pope.

Engraved on the front of the medal is a U.S. combat troop helicopter assault operation superimposed over a map of Vietnam, with the words, "Vietnam Veterans National Medal," appearing around the edge. The design was submitted by Army Cpl. Terrill K. Tritch, stationed at Fort Campbell, Ky. Tritch, who designed company symbols and insignia while stationed in Germany, got the idea for his design from the many books and magazines he has read about Vietnam, according to Pope.

Tritch used an award winning photograph by former SFC Howard C. Breedlove as a model for his design. Breedlove took the photograph while he was on combat helicopter assault operations with the 1st Squadron, 9th Cavalry, 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile) near Chu Lai during Operation Oregon in 1967. Many of Breedlove's photographs have appeared in books and periodicals around the world. A U.S. Army photographer for nearly 20 years, Breedlove also received an award for the best combat film footage from Vietnam and was a recipient of the Bronze Star with V Device and the Purple Heart while serving in Vietnam. He attended the ARVTY film school and performed assignments in Korea, Alaska, Vietnam, the Mediterranean, and other areas throughout the world before he retired after completing 20 years in the Army.

An eagle, American flags, the U.S. Capitol, and the phrase, "In honor of those men and women who gave of themselves in an effort to ensure democracy and peace throughout the world this medal is struck by Act of Congress 1984," appear on the reverse side of the medal. The reverse design was submitted by Jim Peed, a U.S. Mint visual information specialist. Peed was in the U.S. Army from 1963 to 1966, stationed at Fort Carson, Colo.

The public law specified that the submission of designs for the medal be encouraged and considered from Vietnam veterans, medallic artists and other interested parties, but all 784 design submissions remained anonymous until after the final selections were chosen, said Pope. The Mint notified more than 400 national, regional, state and local veterans groups; sculpture societies and associations; and numismatic and general press about the open competition for the design, Pope said.

The bronze commemorative medal is available in 1 ½- and 3-inch diameters. Individuals may order the 1 ½-inch medal (number 685 on the Mint's medals list) for $2.25 or the 3-inch, high-relief medal (number 686) for $16.00 from the Mint. A check or money order should be made payable to the U.S. Mint. Customers ordering from outside the U.S. should send either an international money order or a check drawn on a U.S. bank, payable in U.S. currency. Orders should be mailed to:

U.S. Mint (medals)
P.O. Box 500
Philadelphia, Pa. 19105

The 1 ½-inch medal is available over the counter for $2.00, and the 3-inch medal for $15.00, at the U.S. Mint sales offices in Washington, D.C., San Francisco, Denver and Philadelphia. Qualifying organizations may place bulk orders for discount prices.

Rangers carved out reputation for toughness in Korea

by David Porreca
1st Special Operations Command PAO

The hills in central Korea near the 38th Parallel seem to go on forever. up and down, from valley to summit, they pose obstacles that only blood and sweat can surmount. From 1950 to 1953, they were the site of the Korean War's most vicious battles. it was in those hills that the United States faced its first test of resolve after World War II. And it was in those hills the U.S. Army Rangers — seven companies strong, airborne soldiers all — earned their reputation, carved in flesh, consecreated in blood.

Now they want that record remembered.

Thirty-six years have passed since Bob Putnam and Doug LaRue possessed the killing edge. The two friends from Michigan are a little paunchy around the waist now, a little gray around the ears. But there was a time when they could run when others would walk, endure when others would drop, survive when others would die.

They were sharp and lean back then, tough and taut in the dark days of August 1950. North Korea had surprised the world two months earlier by invading its neighbor to the south. The communists had pushed an ill-prepared United Nations' force deep into the Pusan Perimeter, threatened to drive it into the sea. Things looked bad for America and her allies.

Then came the call: The Army wanted Rangers. The elite fighting force that had been disbanded after World War II was being reactivated. Putnam and LaRue, both stationed at Fort Bragg with the 82nd Airborne Division, volunteered.

For the next nine or 10 weeks — they don't remember how long; time and space have blurred together to leave a fuzzy image — they trained like no other soldiers had ever trained before. People say that autumn in Georgia is nice, but don't ask Putman and LaRue. During their stay at Fort Benning they were too worried about the sleep they never got, the pain that never let up, the food that never satisfied their grumbling stomachs to marvel at an Indian summer sunset.

Full-fledged Rangers

Somehow they made it. They left Fort Benning in November 1950 as full-fledged U.S. Army Rangers, experts in how to fight and win against overwhelming odds. They sailed from California that same month as members of the 4th Airborne Ranger Company, ready to take their place on the Korean battlefields.

They arrived in Seoul in December, just in time for the Christmas season. It wasn't much of a holiday, though, Putnam and LaRue spent the next nine months fighting ceaselessly, mostly in the hills, but also in the fields, the streets, the caves and along the riverbanks. By the time the Army deactivated the Rangers once again in August 1951, they and their buddies had fought almost every type of battle imaginable. They had also earned the right to be mentioned in the same breath with their World War II predecessors — Darby's Rangers and Merrill's Marauders.

Now, 36 years later, Putnam and LaRue look back on their record — the record of the U.S. Rangers who fought in the Korean War — and wonder why no one else remembers.

"We're here as a show of strength; we want to get back the historical credit that belongs to the Rangers."

It's April 17, and Putnam is explaining why he and LaRue traveled from Michigan to Fort Bragg. The occasion is the transfer of honors and lineage from the 1st Special Forces Group to the 75th Ranger Regiment. For 26 years the 1st Special Forces was entrusted with the honors and lineage of past Ranger units. Now the Rangers are reclaiming their history.

Rewrite history books

The transfer pleases Putnam and LaRue, but they wish there could be more. If they had the power, they would rewrite the history books about the Korean War, which contain little if anything about the role of the Rangers. They wouldn't write anything false or misleading, just the truth: that Ranger companies went up against entire Chinese regiments and won; that Ranger companies bailed out big units like the 1st Cav. and 1st Marines; that, in words of Putnam, Ranger companies "never failed to take an objective, and never lost one."

Putnam and LaRue have changed a lot since their Ranger days. Putnam, who was a 24-year-old sergeant first class in Korea, now wears a full head of gray-white hair. LaRue, who left Korea as a 20-year-old corporal, sports a thick gray-speckled beard and hefty midriff. But their enthusiasm remains the same. When they talk about the Rangers, their voices radiate intensity and pride. And what stories they can tell.

Putnam: "When we started training, it seemed like all we did was PT. After awhile, there were guys who could sleep standing up."

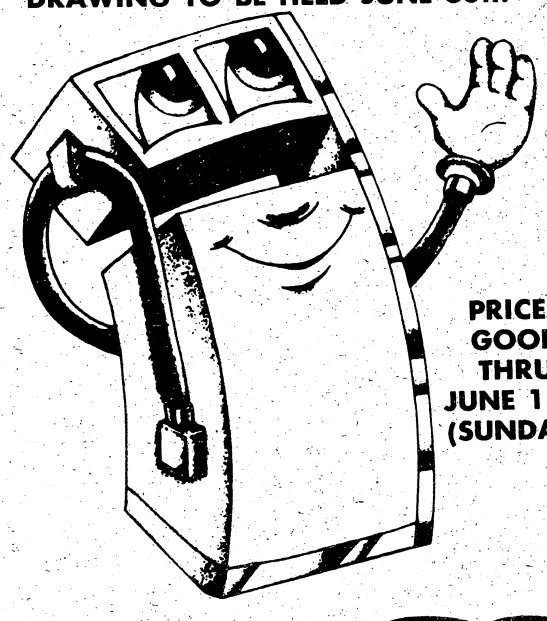
LaRue: "We were the first Ranger company to go to Korea with Mohawk haircuts. The Chinese put a price on our heads. If you had a Mohawk and a Ranger tab and you were taken prisoner, you were dead."

Putnam: "The Army had to develop a whole new set of tactics for us. We were experimental. We had a lifespan of 30 seconds.

LaRue: "We were doing PT in the streets of Seoul when we saw our first Chinese. That's when we found out the 1st Cav. had left us behind. We were the last unit to cross the bridge before they blew it."

Putnam: "I went through World War II as a regular infantryman. There was so much difference with Korea. In Korea you had the hills, and the enemy was always on a higher one than you."

LaRue: "One time we ran into a Chinese regiment at a reservoir. We left them on the road, piled up like cordwood, four or five high for hundreds of yards. That's what stopped them — they couldn't climb over their dead."



Putnam and LaRue have returned to their homes in Michigan by now. The real estate man and the retired IRS man keep in touch with each other and with the Korean War Rangers scattered throughout the country. They will regale one another with tales from the war, and they will lament the lack of a proper memorial to their efforts. And, silently, fervently, they will hope future generations will not let the memory of what happened in those Korean hills die.

Academy forms class for operations NCOS

by JoAnna Rechtenbach
Army News Service

"Paratus and bellum" ("Prepared for War") is the motto of the Army's Operations and Intelligence Course conducted at the Sergeants Major Academy, Fort Bliss, Texas.

This newly accredited noncommissioned officer course started with a pilot validation course of 30 students Jan. 24, 1986. "The 10-week course is designed to teach the students everything they will need to know to be an operations and intelligence sergeant," said Sgt. Maj. Harry E. Lewis, course chief.

According to Lewis, these soldiers serve as principal staff NCOs on all matters concerning operations, plans, organization, training and military intelligence. They maintain the current operations and intelligence estimate of the situation in coordination with other staff personnel; and prepare, coordinate and publish operations plans and orders.

Normally operations and intelligence NCOs have experience in combat arms specialties. But Lewis said that the Army does not have a formal MOS for operations and intelligence NCOs. Training these NCOs can put an extra burden on the units. "In the field it can take eight months to a year to fully train operations and intelligence NCOs, and the units just don't have that kind of time," he said.

"I've been an operations sergeant for many years and this course has been needed for a long time," said MSgt. Harold Huber, academic coordinator. "We're teaching in this 10-week course what it takes a year to learn by trial and error out in the field. When they leave us and report to their units they are ready to go to work," he said.

"In August of 1984 we were tasked to look at the possibility of teaching an operations and intelligence course for NCOs. We interviewed S2/G2 and S3/G3 officers, NCOs and their commanders Armywide — they overwhelmingly felt we needed such a course," said Lewis.

From the interviews a list of about 300 subjects was compiled. "We sent our revised list of the most combat critical skills needed to 24 senior Army commands requesting that they sort out and prioritize the list. Together we decided on 79 key subject areas ranked in order of importance. We felt we needed 10 weeks to allow us to cover thee topics," said Lewis.

The first 7 1/2 weeks of the course cover 381 academic hours of lectures, conferences and structured class discussions. The subjects covered include the Air-Land Battle Doctrine, security management, Soviet doctrine, military briefing and writing, intelligence actions and air-ground operations.

The course also covers 32 hours of instruction in the Joint Interoperability Tactical Command and Control system. "This system is the way all the U.S. Armed Services will communicate in the future, said Huber. "It provides a common message format for all messages sent between the services. Additionally, the NATO alliance is currently considering adopting this system. We are the instructional establishment tasked to teach this for the Army," he said. The students must pass a test and become JINTACCS qualified and certified which enables them to instruct their subordinates in te JINTACCS system.

The last 2 1/2 weeks of the course the students get a chance to practice what they have learned in the classroom through a one-day (eight-hour) field training exercise. "They also participate in a command post exercise phase that basically puts the students in tactical operations centers at brigade level, in two mechanized battalions and in one armor battalion," said Huber. "We rotate the students between the different areas so they can become familiarized with tactical facilities," he said.

The seven-day CPX has a German scenario developed from the TRADOC common teaching scenario, a training exercise common to all units in the Army. This phase is conducted in garrison and during regular class hours. The students us field operation tents and nearby buildings to set up the operation center. "We try hard to make the CPX realistic. The biggest challenge for the students is getting use to the radio traffic and making on-the-spot decisions within a hectic wartime environment. In a real wartime situation these soldiers wouldn't have the luxury of time to make well-thought-out decidions. They must be able to perform under stress," said Huber.

The students are graded differently during the CPX phase of training. Two faculty advisors work in each tactical operations center and observe the students' team work and leadership. "The idea is not to grade them hard on the technical portion — everyone has different ideas on that subject. We look to see if they can work and perform as a team and that they are doing all the staff coodination for each requirement we set," Huber said.

According to Lewis, it is not in conjunction with board consideration for selective early retirement.

Criteria for selecting soldiers for retirement will come from a letter of instruction approved by the Army secretary. Chalkley said that although such specific criteria is still being staffed, officers can expect that, as one screening method, the board will rank their files against those of all the other candidates, Chalkley said.

All officers whom the board considers, whether or not they are recommended for retirement, should receive individual notification of their status by late July, he said. The Military Personnel Center will not publish a list of those selected for retirement.

Those approved for early retirement must separate from active duty by the first day of the seventh calendar month after the Army secretary approves the board's report, Chalkley said. These officers will be notified of their retirement options by MILPERCEN. The options should be the same as the officers would have if they retired voluntarily. "This is not an adverse action," he explained. "What this process does is change the mandatory retirement date. It is classified as an involuntary retirement action."

Some officers selected for early retirement may already have approved voluntary or mandatory retirement orders or have been otherwise notified of a mandatory retirement because of age, time in service or time in grade. Under provisions of the Defense Officer Personnel Management Act, these officers also must be considered for selective early retirement, La Garde explained. Should these officers be selected by the board, they will retire at the earliest date of the approved voluntary retirement, mandatory retirement or selective early retirement.

Because the Army wants to limit the number of officers forced to retire this year, other boards are expected in the future. "If things remain stable, we expect that the Army will have to hold a selective retirement board for the next three years," Chalkley said.

Officers who are screened this year, and not recommended for early retirement, will be exempt from future consideration for five years, provided they remain at the same rank, Chalkley said.

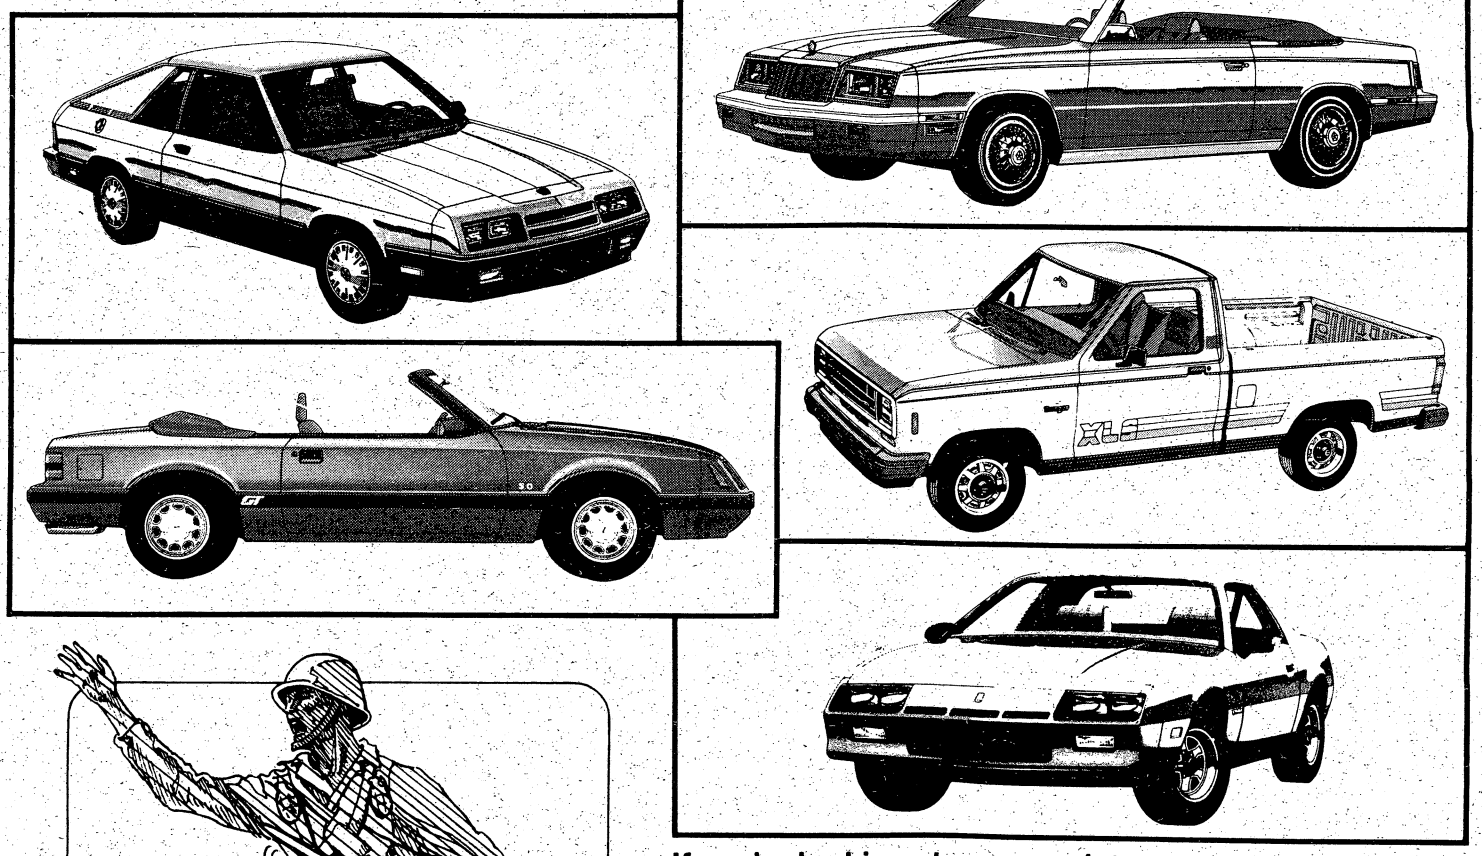
VA Q&A

Veteran's Administration

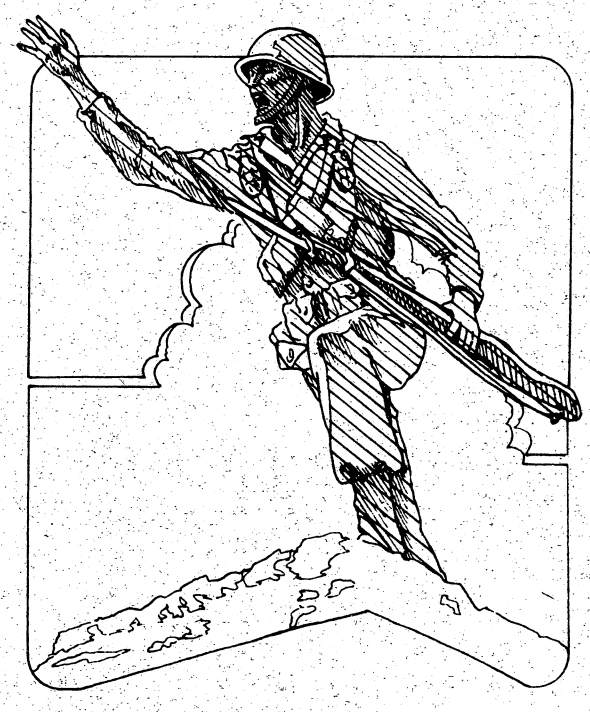
Editor's note — Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I entered military service before December 31, 1976 and plan to serve at least 20 years for retirement benefits. Will I lose my GI Bill benefits which expire on December 31, 1989?

A — No. Under the provisions of Public Law 98-525, enacted in 1984, a new GI Bill protects your benefits. Under this law you would receive $300 per month for 36 months plus one-half of the GI Bill rate you would have received under the noncontributory GI Bill if you start training after December 31, 1989.



Q — Does the VA grant loans to start a business?



A — No. The VA does not offer a business loan. The Small Business Administration has a number of programs designed to assist veterans.

Q — What is a specially-adapted housing grant?

A — A grant not to exceed 50 percent of the cost of building, buying or remodeling a home to meet the needs of seriously disabled, service-connected veterans who are mobility-impaired. The grant cannot exceed $35,500.

Graduates poised to fly into life

by Chaplain Robert N. White

Public television is to be applauded by any and all who enjoy viewing the life cycles of animals and birds in the wild. A recent program featured the life cycle of the eagle. The cameraman was able to capture on film the male and female eagle preparing their nest high up in the cliff of a mountain. They were getting ready for the female to lay her eggs. In the ensuing weeks two male chicks were hatched in the nest. Soon the weaker would die (usually killed by the older).

The female's routine was set to bring fresh game to the nest and in several weeks the young chick would be thirty two times its original size. The final stage came, as it does with all animals and birds in the wild, when the young eagle would leave the nest to repeat a similiar life cycle.

At this time of the year many parents have a son or daughter graduating from high school or a college to embark upon life's journey; a journey somewhat similiar to that of an eagle. They are at life's stage where choosing a career and a mate will be paramount in their decision making process. They will depend less upon their parents and more upon all the wisdom they have gathered as they witnessed the life struggles of their parents.

How important it was to lay a solid religious foundation for our off-springs. From that foundation they will be able to discern for themselves what mate to select, what career to pursue and how to govern the quality of their life. A personal faith in God and his Son has launched many a young person into the arena of life equipped with sword and shield, to fight and defend themselves against the evil forces of life. The Bible, that book that tells it like it is will endear them to their family and their community.

Fly high son/daughter! You belong to the sky! We are proud that you are ready, set, launched. May God's love and mercy sustain our offsprings in flight as they seek to build their nest somewhere high in the mountain of life.

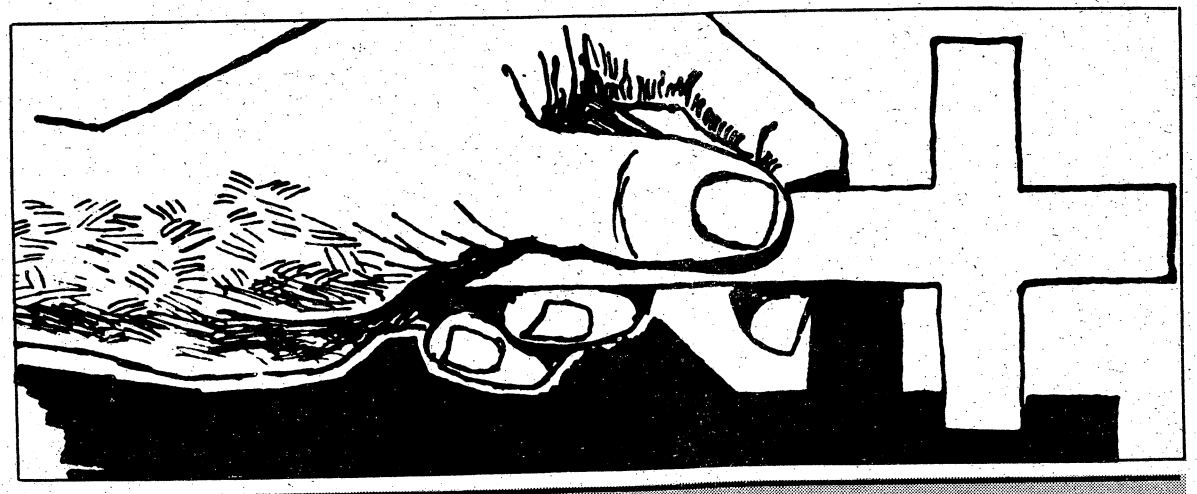
Holiday commemorates gift of Torah at Mt. Sinai

by Chaplain Craig Allen

At sundown June 12, Jews all over the world began celebrating the ancient biblical holiday of Shavuot, commemorating possibly the most monumental event in human history; the giving of the Torah (five books of Moses) at Mt. Sinai.

Occuring just seven weeks (the Hebrew word Shavuot means "weeks") after the Exodus from Egypt, this divine act of revelation is both culminating and pivitol. Indeed the world would never and could never again be the same. Hence forth, spiritual liberation was available to mankind. No longer were the Hebrews enslaved, either physically or spiritually, by the heathen value system that had so long dominated men minds.

Mt. Sinai, consequently, marked the birth of the Jewish people, a people chosen by God and tasked with the responsibility of living by and emparting a new set of values, a system, by its nature, at odds with that around it.



Easily, the core-central value that permeates the Bible is justice. Without it the world can not endure. Therefore, we are commanded to actually pursue justice, literally to "chase" after it. (Deuteronomy 16:20)

God, in his infinite wisdom, had provided the world with a document that fashioned a workable society out of chaos, a blueprint for life. In a sense the Bible is a "soldiers' manual, "complete with task description, performance measures, conditions and standards — a job description of just behavior. How sad that so few of us take the time to read and study it, even in translation.

However, taken in historical context there is reason for optimism. From that small garden of spiritual insight that God chose to reveal to the Jewish people at Mt. Sinai, has blossomed the two other great monothesistic experiences of Christianity and Islam. The seed has taken root and with God's help and our individual and collective participation will continue to grow.

What we need to realize is that these branches of the three (Judaism, Christianity and Islam) are not mutually exclusive, but rather are merely different paths to the one true living God, the God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob; the God of Jesus and Muhamed. Not only are we not mutually exclusive, and not in competition, but rather we are all necessary. There is strength in our diversity, a type of dynamic tension that can have a positive collective impact on the world.

Let us get on with it . . . together!

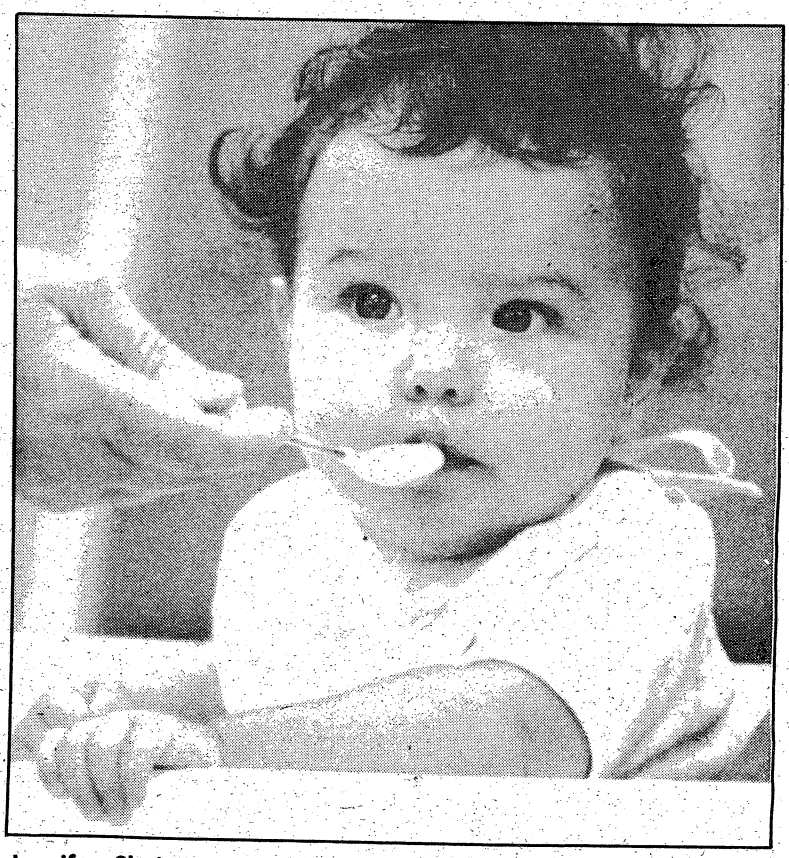
Now that school's out for the summer, parents will be looking for reliable child care. Several options are available, depending on the type of care needed.



Tot Town provides service on an hourly basis rather than full-time care. The center recently offered a reservation service to users who want to be sure they have a slot when they need it.

For a $10 deposit, customers will be able to call in a reservation in advance. If they decide to skip the reservation, the first hour's charge is deducted from their deposit.

Tot Town is staffed by certified teachers in its preschool program as well as trained child care workers. Two different classes of preschool are offered. One on Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 9 to 11 a.m. and the other on Tuesday and Thursday from 9 to 11 a.m.

The center is open to the children of all Fort Benning employ-

Fees are $1 per hour for one child, and $.50 more per hour for each additional child in a family.

Activities offered include arts and crafts, story time, puppet shows and music. The center also has Spanish-speaking personnel and they are working on a Spanish edition of the parent's handbook.

Hours of operation are from 6:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m Monday through Thursday, 6:30 a.m. to midnight on Friday, and 9 a.m. to 1 a.m. on Saturdays.

For more information about Tot Town, call 689-8698.

Parents who need full day care service for young children can use the Custer Terrace Child Development Center or the Marne Road Child Development Center.

The Custer Terrace center is in the housing area, off Candle Drive, and accepts children age 6 weeks to 5 years. It is relatively new to post, having opened Feb. 10, and accepts children of soldiers and a limited number of children of civilian employees.

The center is more than a babysitting service. "The whole center is geared to promoting the child's development, even the infants," said Linda Perry, Custer Terrace CDC director. "We want to help the children feel secure and comfortable away from their parents, and help them in their developmental and socialization skills."

Both the Custer Terrace and Marne Road CDCs are open from 6:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The Marne Road CDC is located next to the Main Post Exchange. It has been a full-time day care center since September 1984.

For parents of older children, quality child care is available through the home child care provider service, which is coordinated by Becky Carroll. For a list of certified home child care providers, call 545-3328.

their vehicles and make them aware of the new law before we start writing citations," said Sgt. Mark Halverson, noncommissioned officer in charge of the Accident Investigation Section, Military Police Activity.

He said MPs have started measuring, but so far haven't had to issue any warning tickets. "I don't think it's going to be that big of a problem, at least so far it hasn't proven to be," he said.

Halverson said in his experience, looks are deceiving. "I've seen a few vehicles that looked way too high, but once I measured them, they were within legal limits," he said.

When the MPs begin enforcing the law, any truck in violation will be impounded and the owner will be issued a citation to appear in Magistrate's Court. The post registration will be revoked and owners will have to go through the registration process again after their vehicles have been brought within legal limits.

The new Georgia law sets specific suspension heights according to the vehicle's weight class, as follows:

Vehicles with a gross weight of 4,500 pounds or less can be no higher than 27 inches.

Those weighing 4,501 to 7,500 pounds must be no higher than 30 inches.

Vehicles weighing 7,501 to 14,000 pounds must be no higher than 31 inches.

Suspensions are measured on a level surface from the lowest point on the frame to the ground.

the instructor's job to teach the students to write. They should be fairly good at that before coming to the course. The course gives them the opportunity to improve their writing skills. "You can't be a successful operations sergeant in the field unless you have strong writing and oral communication skills," Lewis said.

Before the students can graduate they must have passed six graded examinations, a physical fitness test, a written decision paper and oral decision briefing.

The students are nominated for the course by their major commands based on space allocations allotted by the Department of the Army. Nominations are open to all MOSs. Soldiers must be in Grade E-7 or above, have a secret clearance, be an Advanced NCO Course graduate and be currently in or going to an operations and intelligence job. They also must have demonstrated good communications skills, said Lewis.

According to MSgt. William H. Aceber, HHC, 75th Ranger Regiment, Fort Benning, Ga., and a course student, the biggest challenge was catching up on changes in the system. "The course has updated us, taught us new techniques that the Army is incorporating," said Aceber.

Novel explores ex-soldier's guilt, adjustment problems after Vietnam

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

After reading the avalanche of non-fictional, personal accounts of Vietnam service published in the last few years, "Living Dogs and Dead Lions" is a refreshing change.

Two brothers, one who fought in Vietnam and one who protested the war, coauthored the book. R. Lanny Hunter served with a Special Forces unit in Vietnam. His brother, Victor, is a theologian who spoke out against the U.S.'s involvement in Southeast Asia. Their different perspectives on the war nicely mesh to make this story work.

The novel is about a Special Forces soldier in Vietnam who seeks out the widow of a comrade 12 years after the war, hoping she can help him put the past to rest.

The main character, Joshua Scott, grapples with his guilt about the death of his best friend and engages in some thought provoking discussions with his friend's widow, Claudia Bishop, and a local parish priest.

Scott and his friend were both "true believers" when they volunteered for Vietnam, but by the end of their tour there, Tom Bishop was dead and Scott was totally disillusioned and ashamed. "It was all naive and gullible and an absolute waste," he tells the priest.

Claudia is haunted by her own ghosts, because she and her husband had disagreed about the war. As she said, "It was not basically a philosophical difference about the morality of it all." She felt her husband had rejected her and their life together because of a selfish yearning for "macho adventuring."

The two characters are able to work through their unresolved feelings and eventually put away the guilt and go on with their lives.

The book contains flashback sequences when Scott relives memories of battle incidents, which are printed in italics and are so well done they don't interrupt the flow of the story.

The descriptions are also good, one minute putting the reader in a Kansas wheat field, the next instant feeling the bullets whizzing past his head in a firefight.

A sub-plot of the book involves the archetypical villain and includes a scene that would be perfect for Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom — Part III. It's as if the writers started out thinking about exploring philosophical questions and decided midway to go for the movie offers.

At one point, Father Wilson tells Scott, "Our darkest and most inexplicable experiences teach us that a great deal is done by demons." From a moral standpoint, war and the things men do in battle can be neatly blamed on Satan, the evilness that arises when baser instincts are given full rein. But as the book points out, who is more evil, the governments that adopt aggression as a solution or the soldiers who carry out this policy.

The book's title comes from a verse in Ecclesiastes that says "A living dog is better than a dead lion." In the end, Scott realizes that at least he's around to live life and that only he can decide his fate.

'Raw Deal' delivers lots of blood, guts

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Raw Deal" gives the audience exactly what they go to an Arnold Schwarzenegger movies to see: blood and guts.

Co-starring Kathryn Harrold and Darrin McGavin, the movie is about a sherrif who was dismissed from the Federal Bureau of Investigation unjustly and is given the opportunity to reestablish himself.

McGavin's son is killed and he seeks Schwarzenegger's help to integrate himself into a Chicago mob and avenge his son's death.

The movie would work much better if Schwarzenegger hadn't had so much to say.

Schwarzenegger awkwardly struggles with his lines like a child learning his first words.

The movie is entertaining, but Schwarzenegger's characters seem to work better when he maintains the strong, silent- type image.

Weight control: ultimate challenge for everyone

by Bianca Nieves
USA MEDDAC

You're an overweight GI who's been told to lose 20 pounds or you lose your job. Or maybe you're a serviceman's wife with three kids who finds herself eating all day out of loneliness or boredom. Whatever the circumstances, you share a common problem: weight control.

It is estimated that 80 million Americans are overweight, and at any given time at least 50 million are either dieting or contemplating a diet. Yet very few people actually succeed in losing weight and keeping the weight off permanently.

Permanent weight loss is not impossible. However, it is not simple, fast and easy. Those diets that promise immediate results are doomed to fail, for the basic reason that they provide no realistic pattern for coping with the future. Although anyone can lose 10 pounds by eating only grapefruit for two weeks, no one can or wants to survive on grapefruit for the rest of his or her life.

Don't be tempted by advertisement for "quick, painless" weight loss diets. Such crash diets only lead to a continuation of the Yo-Yo Syndrome, or what Harvard nutritionist Jean Mayer calls "The Rhythm Method of Girth Control."

The incredible 10-calorie diet

More harm than good

You may lose 10 to 20 pounds in a short time, only to gain it all back — plus more — in a few months. Writes Henry A. Jordan, formerly chief of the Department of Psychiatry at the U.S. Army Hospital, Fort Campbell, Kentucky: "People who continually lose weight are highly motivated — or they wouldn't keep trying. But they have been snipping the weeds, not ripping out the roots."

In addition, people who are constantly going on and off diets to lose weight may be doing more harm to their bodies than they realize. According to the U.S. Surgeon General, as one gains weight, fats — called cholesterol — are added to the bloodstream. These fats are not removed when weight is lost. Therefore, continual weight loss or gain may perpetuate heart disease and certain blood diseases.

Fad diets

In the past few years, countless fad diets claiming miraculous results have come out. The fact that a "new" diet is invented every few months is proof that there is no magic solution to weight control. Fad diets appeal to the frustrated dieter because they promise immediate results . . . an instant solution to a long-term problem. But unless a diet involves permanent change in one's lifestyle and eating habits, it will inevitably fail.

Consider the "ultimate weight loss" Cambridge Diet. This diet promised weight losses of 22 pounds in 14 days with a "mix-in-a-minute diet formula." However, the diet has been called unsafe and extreme by the American Dietetic Association.

According to the ADA, which represents 47,000 dieticians and nutritions, the 330-calorie-a-day diet "is not a common sense approach to weight loss and should not be undertaken without strict monitoring by a medical professional."

Another dietary fad is "Starch Blockers," which claims to block or slow the digestion of starch in one's body. The appeal of starch blockers was that dieters could eat as much bread, pasta and potatoes as they wish without gaining weight. Starch blockers enhanced the myth that carbohydrates are fattening. In truth, carbohydrates provide energy for the body, and should be part of a well-balanced diet.

Starch blockers have now been classified as untested drugs by the Food and Drug Administration and the manufacturer of them has been halted. While starch blockers may actually block a small percentage of starch digestion (10 percent), they also have undesirable side effects such as cramps and diarrhea. High protein diets such as the Stillman Diet are usually also high in fat and may be very dangerous to persons prone to coronary disease. Such diets are not recommended for anyone because they may also cause sodium and potassium imbalances or dehydration.

Low carbohydrate diets can lead to a condition in the body called ketosis. When carbohydrates are not available to the

Cubs win one, lose one

The Blue Angels downed the Indianhead Cubs 16-5 June 4, in a T-ball game that found the Cubs doing everything wrong.

Jeff Baxley scored two home runs, while Edmund Thompson and Joseph Buljung also stood out at the plate for the Angels.

It was downhill from the start for the Cubs, who couldn't get it together at the plate or in the field. The Cubs' offense didn't pick up steam until the bottom of the fourth inning, and by then it was too late for the team to overcome the Angel's lead.

The Cubs had better luck against the Yellowjackets June 6, winning 6-3.

James Miller scored three runs, while other scoring standouts were Jeff Baxley and Mike Tietjen.

On defense, Joseph Buljung and Jeff Moore made the difference with superb pitching. Buljung struck out seven batters, and Moore cleaned up as relief pitcher. John Barela in centerfield made two outstanding catches, firing one back for a double play against the Jackets.

Barela was named defensive player for the Cubs, James Miller won offensive player honors for making the game winning hit.

Blue Thunder tops Braves, Bulldogs in good week

Blue Thunder won two games in T-ball action last week, downing the Bulldogs 25-21 June 3, and following up with a 25-16 win against the Braves June 5.

Darryl Moore scored the game winning run against the Bulldogs. Jaime Kobeck and Kris Straker showed their skills in the outfield to hold the Bulldogs' scoring drive back, as did Ricky Williams at first base.

Blue Thunder was trailing going into the bottom of the sixth, but the team rallied and went on to win the game.

Nicholas Sencey scored the game winning run. Defense standouts were Darryl Moore at short stop and Ricky Williams at first base.

Thundercats beat 'Reds'

The Thundercats beat Red Thunder 20-12 in hard fought T-ball action June 5.

Red Thunder played a good offensive ball game, with homeruns by Katie Wilcox and Joshua Wyler. The Reds defense was led by Kevin Vogel and Andrew and Matthew Atkins.

Dodgers tromp Cardinals

The Dodgers ran away with the ballgame June 6, besting the Cardinals 14-3.

High scorers for the Dodgers were Sabian Jiles, Timothy Huffman and Lydell Beverly.

Defensive standouts included Fredy Martinez on the mound, who struck out 10, and Timothy Huffman in center field.

Ghost Busters drop Firebirds

The Ghost Busters downed the Firebirds 21-8 May 29.

The Firebirds scored two runs in the first inning, followed by two runs by the Ghost Busters.

The Ghost Busters settled down by the third inning, allowing the Firebirds only one run for the remainder of the game.

Rodney Ulmer at second and Donohue McNeal at third base were defensive standouts, while Zachary Tietjen and Rodney Ulmer were scorers for the Ghostbusters.

Continuing their winning streak, the Ghost Busters beat the Tornadoes June 3, 20-9.

The Ghost Busters got off to a slow start and by the end of the second inning, they were down five runs. They came back and were ahead 15-9 by the bottom of the fifth.

Rodney Ulmer stood out at second base, while other top defensive players were Lamonta Adam at short stop and Damion Hammel, pitcher.

High scorers were Sonny Campos, Ronnie Campos and Damion Hammel.

Diet

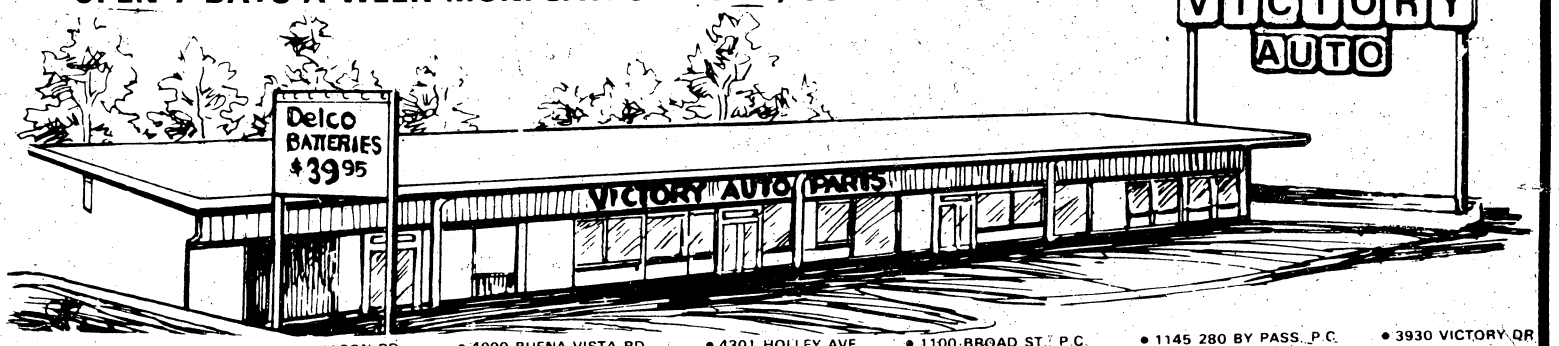
body, incompletely metabolized substances called ketones accumulate in the blood. Ketosis causes rapid weight loss, but those pounds you lose are mostly water, which will be gained back when a diet containing carbohydrates is resumed.

Military servicemembers may be particularly prone to trying fad diets because of the pressure to lose pounds quickly. However, 10 pounds lost on a 10-day crash diet will only be gained back if no permanent change in eating behavior has been made.

Is there a real solution to weight control? The answer is a qualified "YES!" To be successful, a weight loss plan must be individualized to meet your specific needs. You must ignore friends' advice about which diet worked for them and concentrate on yourself and your eating habits. You must be willing to make some permanent changes in your lifestyle — including food-buying habits, cooking habits, eating habits and your exercise pattern.



To lose weight and keep it off, you will need support from family members. The overweight soldier and spouse must make a commitment to losing weight and help each other. Once you pinpoint "problem" foods and situations, you can make appropriate substitutions and changes.

For example, the family that skips breakfast but eats snacks together at night and could try eliminating high calorie snacks and instead have a nourishing breakfast together.

A dietician can work with you to develop an individualized, workable diet plan. But the first step is your personal commitment to losing weight. Recognize that permanent weight control involves change, and is a gradual process.

$199 BUNKIES INCLUDED

I remember my last Friday the 13th Sale. I nervously entered Furnish America's showroom. As I had expected, the entire store was awash with hungry shoppers. I worked my way down one aisle and spied a three piece living room group that I liked. As I sat on the sofa, a very heavy set woman approached very rapidly and said, "That's mine!" I glanced at the price tag and understood immediately why she wanted the group. I then saw her husband, obviously a Ranger who eats nails for breakfast, approach the area with fire in his eyes. I hastily beat a retreat as I bound over the sofa a native salesperson assured me there was one in stock but for safety purposes we could find refuge in the credit office. I was sheltered by friendly store employees as they arranged the most convenient credit terms for me. I look back now, and laugh, content in the knowledge that I had explored Furnish America and came back to tell about it. The trophy's in my living room. I think I'll lie down on that comfortable sofa and think about my next sojourn to Furnish America today, they're open til 10 o'clock tonight, you know.

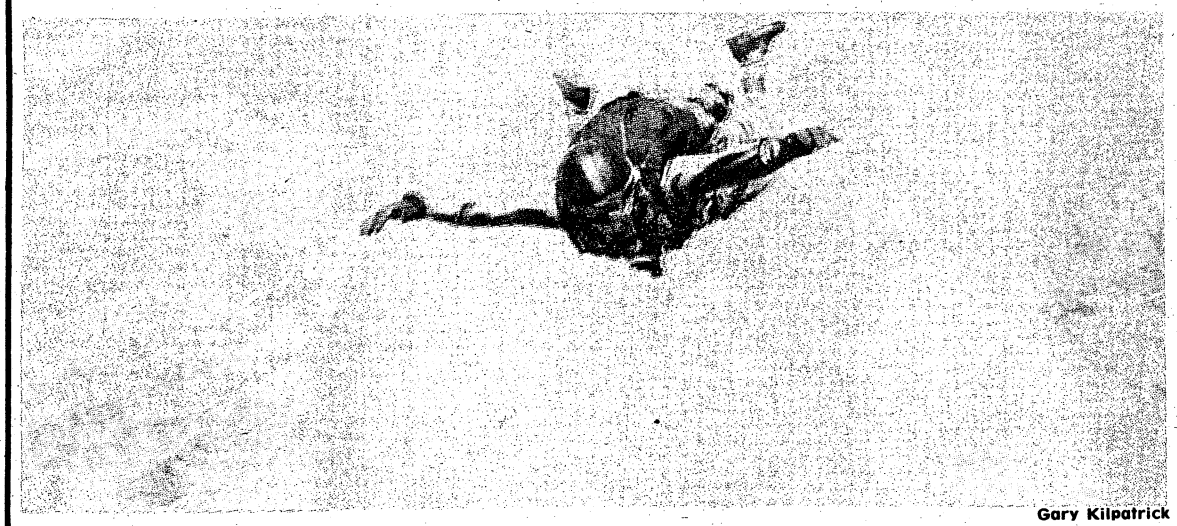
'83 MREs okayed for consumption

Meals, Ready-to-Eat manufactured in 1983 are approved for consumption until July 2, according to Army spokesman Maj. Bruce Bell.

Use of the field ration was suspended last month after packaging of some MRE items was discovered to be substandard. While MREs produced in 1983 have passed inspection, those produced after 1983 are still under investigation, Bell said.



If the 1984 and 1985 MREs, which are currently being inspected, are not approved for consumption by July 2, approval for 1983 MRE consumption may be extended, Bell said.

So far, the only MREs found to have faulty packaging were produced in 1986, said Bell, although inspection of all rations as a precaution has been ordered.

Supply channels to provide insignia

Insignia for enlisted soldiers is no longer stocked in the Army Military Clothing Sales Store. However, it is available at no cost to soldiers through normal Army supply channels.

Free sew-on of the insignia is available through the DOL Maintenance Division on a walk-in basis at Building 273. The point of contact for supply is Ms. Thomas at 545-1582. The point of contact at the Maintenance Division is Mr. Steele at 545-2871.

Army bans smoking in government buildings

by Carmen M. Finstad
Army News Service

The Secretary of the Army recently signed a new antismoking policy that will ban smoking in all Army-occupied areas, except for those specifically designated for smokers.

Locally, Fort Benning officials support the program and are currently working on an implementation program for the post.

Provisions of the "controlling smoking" policy, which commanders must implement by July 7, apply to all vehicles, aircraft, offices, buildings and facilities over which the Army has custody or control. Space assigned to the Army by the General Services Administration also falls under the provision. The policy will be included in Army Regulation 1-8, "Smoking in Department of the Army Occupied Buildings and Facilities."

Army officials expect to enhance readiness through the policy by establishing the standard of a smoke-free environment. The senior leadership hopes to cause a mind-snift within the Army to think that "smoking is the exception — not the rule."

Studies have shown that smoking reduces readiness by impairing physical fitness and by increasing illness, absenteeism, premature death and health care costs, according to the Army leadership. The 1985 Defense Department worldwide report on cigarette use by military personnel shows that 52 percent of the Army's 778,000 soldiers smoke, as compared to about 30 percent in the general public.

The intent of the policy, developed by the major Army commands and Army headquarters, is "to protect non-smokers and to encourage smokers to quit," said Maj. Jim Paige, a project officer with the Army's Leadership Division at the Pentagon.

The policy doesn't attempt to completely prohibit smoking, it provides for smokers by allowing commanders and agency supervisors to designate smoking areas, when possible, "to avoid undue inconvenience to persons who desire to smoke." Such designated smoking areas, however, must be confined to those places where the second-hand smoke can be sufficiently isolated to protect non-smokers from its effects.

Conference rooms and the other areas already designated as no-smoking areas under AR 1-8 will retain that status, according to the policy. Supervisors or commanders may not designate smoking areas within auditoriums, conference rooms, restrooms, gymnasiums, fitness centers and elevators.

The policy is broadly written to allow local commanders to develop their own policies tailored to their unit or installation. "If the policy were more specific, it would be too dictatorial," Paige said. "The commanders can set their own standards within the policy's guidelines, using a common-sense approach."

This means that enforcement could be different from one installation to another. The policy does provide specifics for enforcement in some areas, however. It specifies, for example that smoking areas in dining facilities and other eating areas "shall be permitted only if adequate space is available for non smoking patrons and ventilation is adequate to provide them a healthy environment."

It also addresses living areas. "When individual living quarters are not available and two or more individuals are assigned to one room, smoking and non-smoking preferences shall be considered."

Smoking by health care providers in front of patients, even while in a designated smoking area, is prohibited under the policy too. Likewise, faculty, staff and visiting parents may not smoke in the presence or view of children in Department of Defense dependent schools and child development centers. Students may never smoke on school grounds.

Experts say winning not all important in sports

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Are we putting too much pressure on our kids to win in competitive sports?

I recently covered a T-ball game for the newspaper, and was struck by the "win fever" shown by the spectators and coaches, the majority of whom were parents of the players.

Many of the players looked no older than 6 or 7, and their playing skills left a lot to be desired. They couldn't catch, couldn't throw and had difficulty hitting the ball off the tee.

A few kids stood staring into space, daydreaming, as the ball sailed past them. It took constant yells from coaches and spectators to keep the game going.

Despite the poor performance of the kids I saw, it isn't a result of immature muscle development.

Dr. William Previte, an orthopaedic surgeon at Martin Army Community Hospital, said 6 to 8 year old children "have all the raw materials they need to be successful in sports."

Previte said he's worked with many teams as a medical consultant, and that injuries he knows about are insignificant in comparison with the benefits the children derive from playing.

"The only injury common to young ball players is called 'little leaguers elbow,' which results from pitchers throwing curve balls at a young age," Previte said. "Usually, a 16-year-old boy comes in with pain in the elbow and his history reveals that he threw curve balls in little league."

He said this type of injury is well known to coaches and physicians, who try to prevent young children from throwing curve balls. The majority of other injuries are running related, similar to the problems adult runners have, he said.

But Previte said the benefits of taking part in organized sports far outweigh the small percentage of injuries.

"It has a positive affect in terms of their physical development in that by practicing, the kids improve their muscle and hand-eye coordination," he said.

Previte admits that he's biased in favor of organized sports, and that he participated in just about every sport available as a kid, and still does.

"I think there's a discipline acquired through playing sports that you don't get sitting in the library," he said. "If I had to select a person to execute a job for me, and had a choice of one who had participated in organized sports and one who read books, I'd chose the athlete."

He said sports teach children teamwork, "how to work with others." But he stressed that just participating should be emphasized, instead of winning.

"Kids need to know they don't have to be junior olympiads in order to benefit from playing sports," he said. "You can get just as much out of it by going out there and trying and having a good time."

Carol Graham, an assistant professor of psychology at Troy State University, said children don't respond well if they're pressured.

"If you tell a child who goes out on a ball field that he's clumsy, he'll eventually be clumsy," she said. "Kids respond to criticism by developing a poor image of themselves." Graham said it's important for parents and coaches to focus on the positive things the children do. "Praise them for the good throw or catch, but don't scream at them every time they miss a ball," she said.

What eventually happens to children who are constantly criticized is that they become afraid to try anything because they don't have any self confidence, Graham said.

Parents need to keep in mind what kind of example they are setting for their children, she said. "Our kids learn how to behave from us, and if they see an adult thrown out of a ball game, what does that teach the kids about sportsmanship?" she asked.

Graham said parents who pressure their children to excel sometimes have another motive. "I think they're trying to relive their own childhoods and have their kids do better than they did," she said.

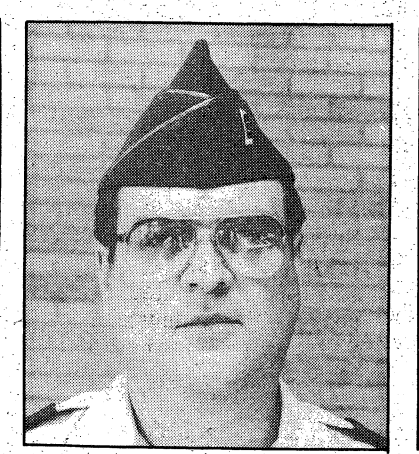
Parents need to be sure their kids get lots of praise for their efforts, and learn how to be good sports, whether they win or lose. Also, the sport should be fun and give every child a chance to participate, she said.

"Kids need to feel good about themselves and they need a good example of how to behave," Graham said.

For every winning team, there has to be a loser. But kids need to be taught that it's not who wins, but who gives their best effort that is important.

Various voices

What do you think of young children participating in competitive sports?



Sgt. Ronald Scott, 586th Engineer Company, 36th Engineer Group
"I think it's great. They need to start when they're young. It helps them decide what they want to do when they grow up. I think the competition is good and they learn leadership skills through competing."

SP4 Lisa Rivera, 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group
"I think it's okay if they want to do it. They learn a lot being with kids their own age, their own peer group. I played and it was fun, and something to do to get out of the house."

Ella Hambrick, family member
"I think it's wonderful. It keeps kids out of other activities they shouldn't be involved in and gets them out from in front of the television. Parents should let them do what they're able to do and not force them to participate."

CWO3 Richard Dumont, Martin Army Community Hospital
"I am adamantly against small children playing contact sports, because their bone development isn't sufficient to handle it. I think parents encourage competitive aspects too much, and many parents force their children to play, which is wrong."

Ruth Ann Brown, civilian employee
"My son played soccer when he was 9 and he enjoyed it, but we didn't push him to play sports. I don't think it's good to push kids. Parents should let the child choose and be supportive."

Nicaraguan situation threatens our security

American Forces Press Service

Seven years ago, Nicaraguans were celebrating the rise of the Sandinista National Liberation Front and the new era of freedom and social justice it promised. But that hope faded in the face of the harsh realities of life in a Marxist-Leninist state.

Since coming to power, the Sandinistas have followed in the footsteps of the Soviet Union, Eastern Europe, Vietnam and Cuba: censoring the press, establishing a powerful secret police force and mounting systematic attacks on organized religion.

Of particular concern to the United States, the Sandinistas have built a regime that threatens to become a "second Cuba," seriously compromising the security of the Western Hemisphere.

According to a new report, "The Challenge to Democracy in Central America," Released jointly by the Departments of Defense and State, the possibility of a Soviet base as well as a guerilla arsenal and terrorist training center and sanctuary in Nicaragua would pose a far greater danger to the hemisphere than does the relatively isolated island of Cuba.

According to the report, the Sandinistas already have the largest, most powerful military force in the history of Central America.

They have used this force to support Marxist-Leninist elements seeking to overthrow the government of El Salvador and to destabilize the governments of Guatemala, Honduras and Costa Rica, the report said. They have provided a haven for terrorists and have grossly abused human rights.

Disillusioned and fearful of the Sandinista government, almost 10 percent of the Nicaraguan population has fled Nicaragua.

However, some 20,000 Nicaraguans have refused to abandon their country and its dreams of democracy. Members of this resistance force are called "contras."

This term is used by the Sandinistas to picture the resistance as being opposed to social, economic and political change so necessary in a real revolution, according to the report.

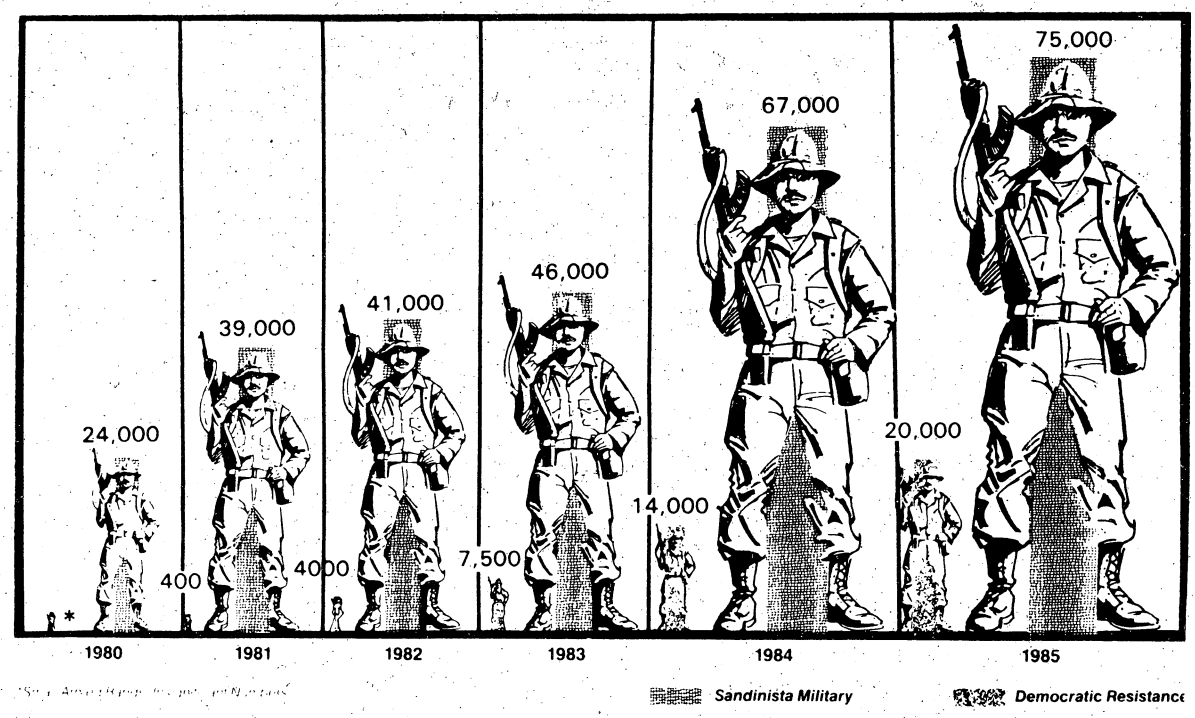
"In reality, the resistance leaders are fighting for a return to the principles of democracy, which they believed had been won in the triumph over Somoza." Nicaraguan dictator Anastasio Somoza was overthrown by the Sandinistas in 1979.

The Soviet Union and Cuba have provided the Sandinistas extensive military support. The United States, however, has provided limited support for the Contras, mostly in the form of economic aid. Increased support for the Contras has become the subject of heated debate.

"The notion of supporting guerrillas fighting a sitting government is difficult for many citizens of democracies to accept," according to the report. "The political reality of the 1980s, however, often forces difficult moral choices.

"There is no question that the Marxist-Leninist government in Nicaragua has seized power through armed revolution and false promises," the report states. "The United States opposes the Sandinistas because Sandinista Nicaragua today serves the interests of the Soviet Union and Cuba, and thus is inimical to the security interests of the United States and the countries of the Western Hemisphere."

In recent congressional testimony, Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Elliott Abrams compared U.S. responsibilities in Nicaragua to those demonstrated recently in other parts of the world.



"It is never easy to bring about constructive change in this world. It is usually a messy business, fraught with difficult changes," he said. "But we have been making the right choices — in favor of democracy and human rights — in the Philippines, in Haiti, in South America, in Guatemala, in El Salvador.

Dr. John Silber of the President's National Bipartisan Commission on Central America summarized the responsibility now facing the United States:

"We face the tragic limitation of our moral choice in that we do not always have the option of choosing between good and evil. It is perfectly moral to support the lesser of two evils.

"It is utterly immoral to abandon an inadequate democracy struggling to become an effective one, leaving it an easy prey to forces that are effectively totalitarian."

Reader inspired to write new lyrics to 'Taps'

Dear Editor:

I read the article in The Bayonet entitled "New light thrown on 'Taps,' night song of soldiers" with much interest. Though I am a civilian, I have always been greatly moved when I have heard the hauntingly beautiful tones of Taps played.

Upon reading the two different versions of words written in the article, I wrote a version I thought you might like to hear.

Now the sun
Drops from view;
Light is gone
Night is new Rest is won.
God is there
With his care
For each one

Cadence recordings capture Army history

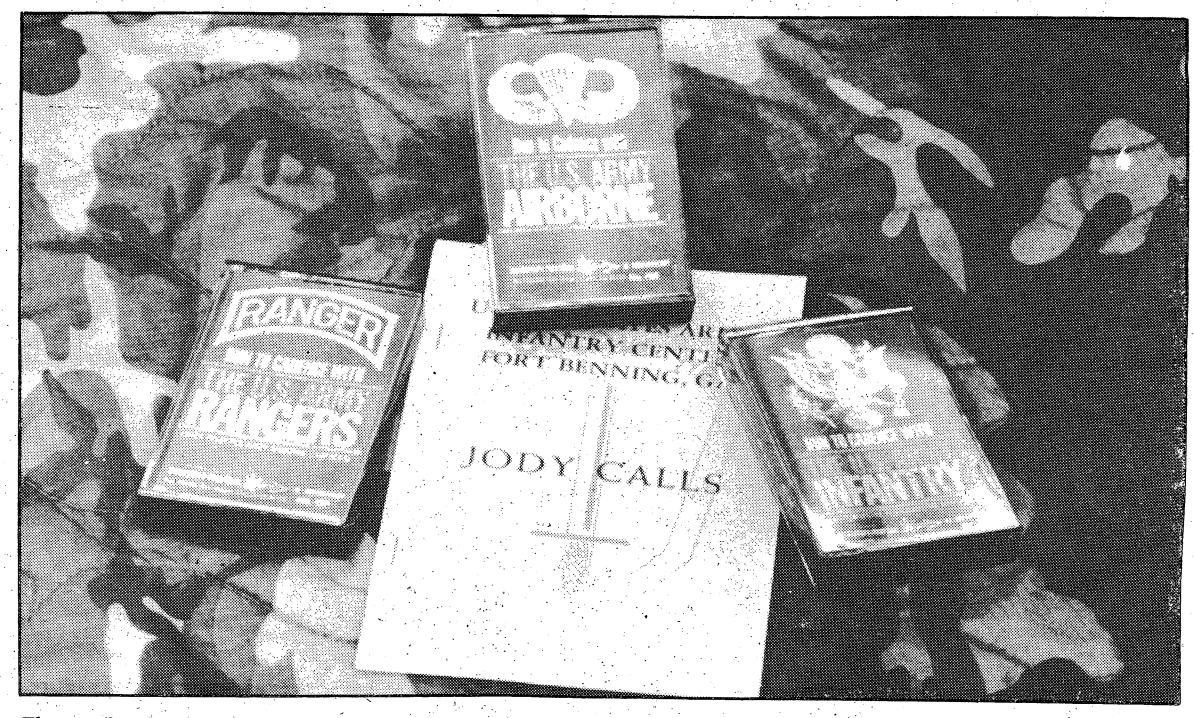
C130 waitin' on the strip.
Airborne trooper gonna' take a little trip.
Stand up, hook up, shuffle to the door,
Jump right out and count to four.
If my main don't open round,
I'll be the first one on the ground.

Cadence calls, or "jodies," are as much a part of Army life as the olive drab of the soldiers' uniform. Many rookie troops get their first exposure to cadences during basic training as seasoned drill sergeants expertly trill the tunes during those initial grueling physical training runs. Echoing the words not only helps maintain an orderly formation by keeping the inexperienced soldiers in step, it makes it easier for them to keep their breathing regulated.

By the time a soldier has been through basic and advanced individual training and has been in his unit for a while, he usually has a few favorites.



Some of SSgt. Richard A. Montcalm Sr.'s favorites will soon be available for everyone to enjoy.

Montcalm, who is assigned to the 75th Ranger Regiment here, was one of the soldiers involved in a recent recording session by Jerry Walker from Documentary Recordings. Walker's company specializes in military cadence tapes.

An original cadre member with the Regiment's Ranger Indoctrination Program, Montcalm has been at Fort Benning for a little more than one year. The eight-year Army veteran has been singing cadence since he was a private in basic training.

"I just like to sing," he said. "I learned cadence in the Navy Reserve Officer Training Corps program in high school and sang in the chorus, so the two went together well."

During the recent recording session, Montcalm and a contingent of RIP soldiers rendered Ranger running cadences. A group of airborne students from the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry were recorded while marching.

The airborne, Ranger and infantry cadence cassettes by Documentary Recordings contain many popular Fort Benning "jodies."

"I tried to stick to unique Ranger cadences that people would never hear anyplace else," Montcalm said. "This meant staying away from the ones that have been beat to death," he explained.

Montcalm's cadences are popular with the soldiers because they are original. "I've had a lot of requests to write down the words to my cadences," he said.

Most of the words are original, but many of the rhythmns are adapted from popular songs.

Recordings of Marine Corps cadence and Army airborne, Ranger and infantry cadences are sometimes used in the Marine Corps and Army drill sergeant schools as training aids. Walker said that they are also sometimes used by recruiters to give potential enlistees an idea of what they may face in the military.

The most recently recorded tapes will be in the stores around October.

Dentist joins Army for opportunities, challenges

Story and photos by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Dr. (Capt.) Mary Jo Corbett looks like she stepped right off an Army recruiting poster.

The blond-haired, blue-eyed dentist has a wholesome look that suggests the wheatfields of the midwest, though she grew up in Chicago, Ill.

The Army turned out to be the land of opportunity for Corbett, who found that it offered the best chance for her to fulfill her personal and career goals.

She graduated from Loyola University with a bachelor of science degree in biology, and went on to earn her Doctor of Dental Surgery degree from the University of Illinois in Chicago.

She decided to join the Army after several friends joined and told her about the opportunities in the military.

"In the Army I can practice dentistry without having to handle the business end of it, and without all the expense of setting up a private practice," she said. The cost of setting up a private practice is about $150,000, Corbett said.

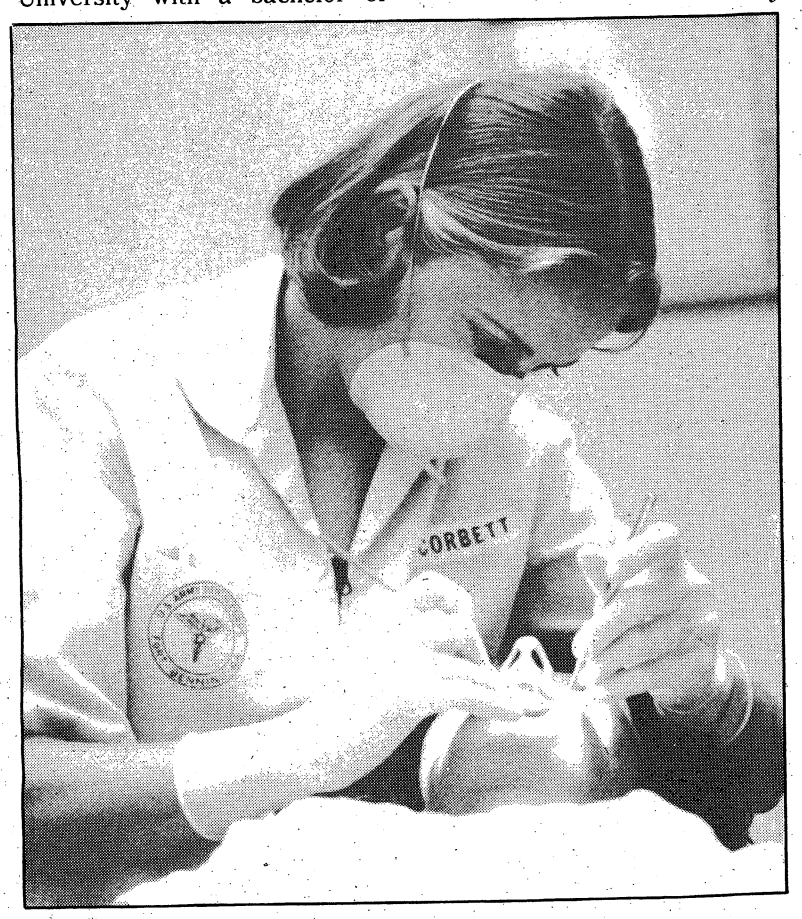
Corbett said she feels very positive about the practice of dentistry at Fort Benning. "I like being able to provide high quality care and not having to worry about billing patients and other administrative things," she said.

Another plus was the educational opportunities the Army offers. "You are required to take a certain number of continuing education hours per year, and there are several short courses offered by the Army yearly," she said.

Corbett said she's always been interested in the medical sciences and started working in hospitals during high school. She's also interested in art and enjoys painting and drawing, and she found that dentistry was a way to combine both interests.

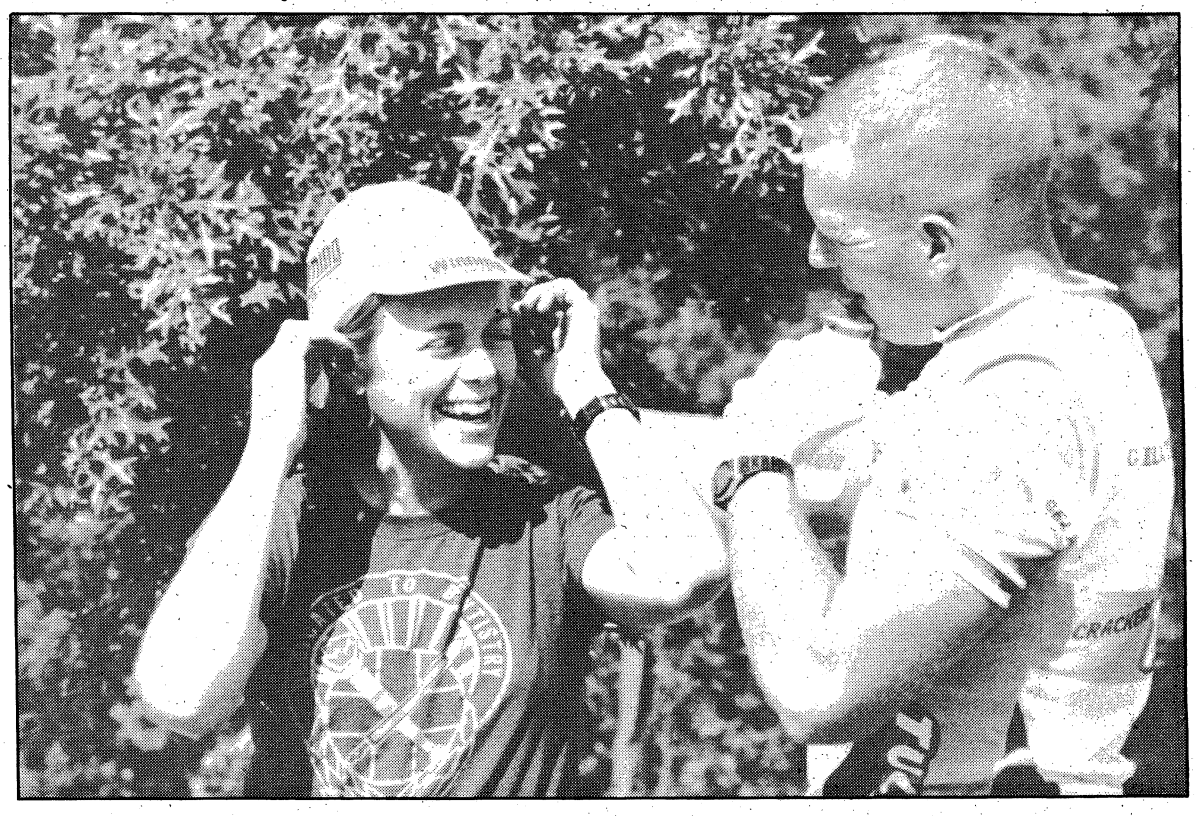
"It's creative work, using the latest materials available to help improve a patient's smile," she said.

In her position at Dental Clinic No. 1, she rotates in several areas each month, one week handling routine dental exams, the next providing emergency care.



Corbett recently earned the prestigious Expert Field Medical Badge, which she said was the biggest challenge she's faced since joining the Army. For a person accustomed to working in an office, honing the physical skills needed to pass the test took a lot of work.

"I couldn't have done it without the help of my fiancee, Greg," she said.



Greg is 1st Lt. Greg Combs, a chemical officer with the 3rd Battalion, (Ranger), 75th Infantry here. He used his soldier skills to help Corbett with land navigation and he worked out with her, offering encouragement in the physical areas.

In her spare time she enjoys competing in bicycling events, and last year was the first woman to finish the 50-mile Pine Mountain Challenge bicycle race.

She hopes to make the Army Dental Corps a career, but right now is concentrating on preparing for her wedding in July. Then it will be straight into more training for the upcoming MEDDAC/DENTAC biathalon.

Furthermore, ashtrays are not permitted in non-smoking areas unless placed at doorways so that smokers can put out their cigarettes, cigars or pipes before entering.

Soldiers, Army civilians and contractor personnel who violate the policy face administrative action. Other violators could be removed from or denied access to Army-occupied buildings.

Smoking cessation programs and support groups for smokers are being established Armywide to help them overcome the need to smoke.

Program offers 'family doctor' care to MACH patients

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Tired of being shuffled from doctor to doctor? Martin Army Community Hospital is currently involved in a program to give military families the security of a family doctor in the midst of an already shuffled lifestyle.

According to SFC Lorraine Steins, noncommissioned officer in charge of the Fami Practice Clinic, the Family Practice Clinic is designed so each family will have one physician to attend to its medical needs. This system allows the family and its doctor to become better acquainted.

Also, the patient's needs are better recognized and the doctor becomes more familiar with the family's medical history. This not only gives the family stability but saves time because the family members do not have to review medical histories every time they visit a doctor.

First introduced at Fort Lewis, Wash., in 1971, the program was so successful that Fort Benning adopted it a year later.

"The program began here in July 1972. (Mainly) for the concept that each family could have its own doctor. This way the doctor can see how the whole family is growing together," said Steins, noncommissioned officer in charge of the Family Practice Clinic at MACH.

According to Charolotte Howerton, secretary to the Clinical Director of Family Practice the clinic is presently taking care of 9,541 active-duty soldiers, their families and retirees.

"We handle minor surgeries, immunizations, deliver babies, give physicals and preform vasectomies, to name a few," said Sgt. Arnet L. Brown, assistant NCOIC of the Clinic.

"We see on the average of 5,000 patients a month with everything from a cut finger to heart conditions," Steins said.

To accommodate the large number of patients the clinic has 36 doctors, three licensed practical nurses, five secretaries and six enlisted soldiers.

In spite of their numbers, the doctors are the busiest. "The Family Practice physicians handle a lot of other responsibilities in the hospital including ward rounds," Brown said.

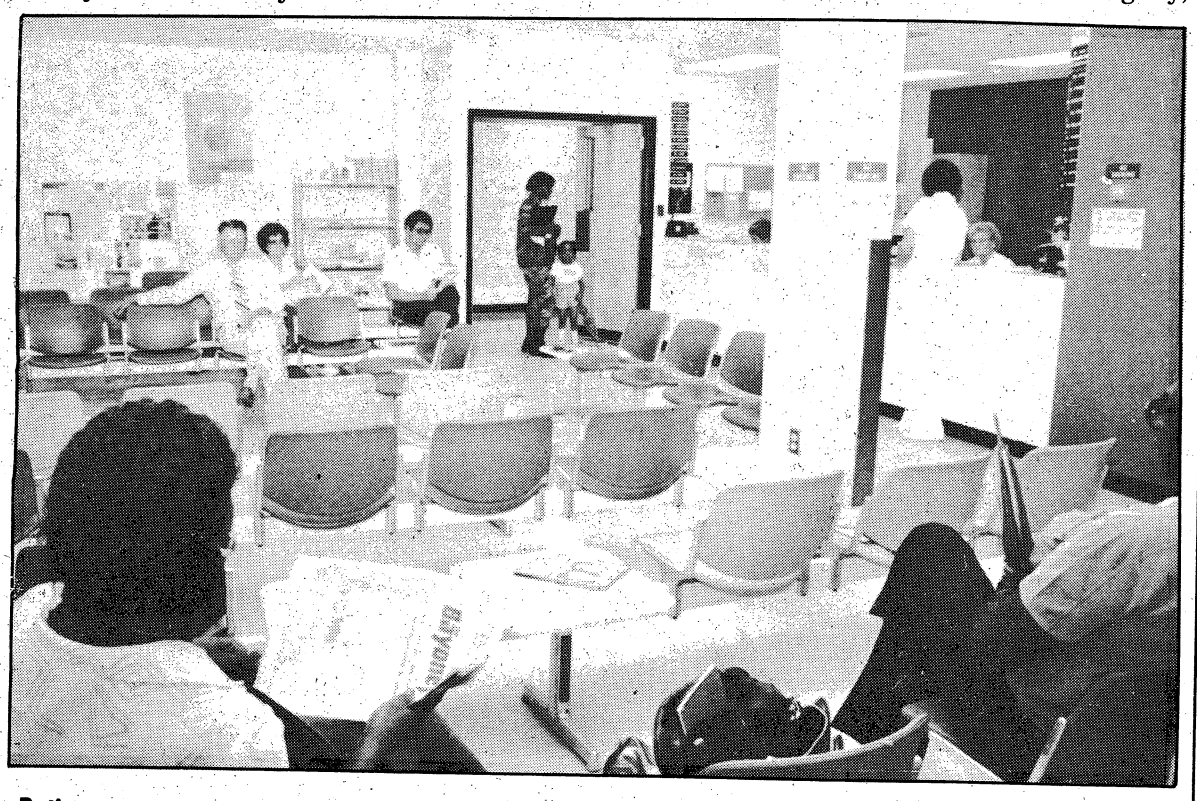
"We are trying to identify a doctor for every patient," said Dr. (Lt. Col.) John P. Fogarty, chief of the Department of Family Practice.

Becoming a member of the family practice program is on a first come, first served basis. Signing up for the program is relatively simple. Anyone interested must first fill out an application from the clinic and submit it with assignment orders. The applications are then screened and the family is put on a waiting list.

"As one family goes out, another is selected," Stein said.

At the present time the wait for active-duty soldiers can be from six to nine months.

For retirees, the list is not as long but the wait is longer. The list for both active and retired individuals contains 1,750 names.



"If slots are available people can get in (the clinic) depending on what day they arrive at Fort Benning," Howerton said.

If the people are retired the waiting list is virtually unapproachable. "There are 1,300 people on the (retirees') waiting list, which dates back to 1974. Right now the list is closed," Howarton added. The list was closed mainly because many of the retirees who settle in this area stay indefinitely.

"But those on the list can be seen at the outpatient clinic," Stein said.

"The Family Practice concept is one of the most outstanding programs that the Army has started for active duty and retired families," Stein said.

So if your worried about being shuffled from doctor to doctor simply sign up for the Family Practice program at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Patients wait to see their doctors at the Family Practice Clinic.

Soldiers' success proves worth of education program

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Several educational "success stories" in the 197th Infantry Brigade are living proof that education programs can help soldiers.

Recently four Brigade soldiers were accepted to the United States Military Academy Preparatory School at Fort Monmouth, N.J. The prep school is a nine-month course that prepares men and women for entry into the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.

The soldiers, SP4 Mark Eaglebarger from 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery; SP4 Jeffery Cook from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; PFC Craig Munns and PFC Nicholas Light both from 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry; will take their experience as enlisted soldiers with them as they begin a career as Army officers.

This educational opportunity was realized with the advice of education counselors and programs available through Army Education Centers.

Cook, for example, received his high school diploma through the general education development program before arriving in the Brigade. At the suggestion of his current platoon leader, a West Point graduate who recognized Cook's potential, he submitted his application for the prep school and was accepted.

"I am looking forward to attending the prep school," Cook said. "I think that my time as an enlisted soldier will help me as an officer."

Munns had considered applying for a West Point scholarship while in high school but instead he decided to enlist in the Army.

"When I got to Fort Benning, I went to the education center to begin a degree in military science," Munns said. "They suggested West Point and helped me get all the information together for my application."

According to Aurie McCrary, Kelley Hill Education Center chief, "the 197th Infantry Brigade can be proud of the four soldiers who were selected to West Point because there are fewer than 200 slots available for cadets coming from the ranks of the enlisted active Army. We want soldiers to see that they have what it takes to do well in college programs.

"These soldiers have met the high standards for acceptance to the Academy and now face the challenge of the training they will receive there."

Seventy-three graduate USARSA officer course

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas PAO

Seventy-three Dominican Republic cadets from the "Batalla de las Carreras" Military Academy in Santo Domingo graduated from the Infantry Officer Qualification course June 13 at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

The 21-week course is designed for cadets from the Dominican Republic and qualifies them for duty as infantry officers or for service in other branches. The course includes such subjects as staff procedures, map reading, leadership, preparation and conduct of military training, effective writing and speaking, drill and command and communications.

Eight other Latin American countries were also represented the same day as 35 students graduated from the Military Intelligence course.

Countries with number of graduates represented were; Colombia — 2, Costa Rica — 3, Ecuador — 7, El Salvador — 12, Honduras — 4, Mexico — 3, Panama — 1, and Peru — 2. The U.S. was also represented with one graduate.

The 10-week course qualifies selected officers as tactical intelligence staff officers in a conventional or unconventional war environment.

Troop gets 'back to nature' in week two of OSUT

Editor's note: this is the second in a series of 13 articles that will allow the readers to follow one soldier through his entire One Station Unit Training at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill.

by Michael Ricca
1st Infantry Training Brigade

"Getting back to nature." All my life I've heard how relaxing it is to "just get away from it all." Well, those people who believe that have never been through a week of bivouac in Army basic training.

This week began with a full-pack road march to the trucks that would serve as transportation. After a cramped ride to Bivouac Site 14, we began our setup. Of course, as with everything also in the Army, our tents had to be "dress-right-dress" and "covered down." That proved to be the most difficult part of setting up. As the platoon guide of a platoon with an odd number of men, I gave my partner to the soldier with only half a tent. They combined their halves into a full shelter, and I slept with the stars as my roof.

To be honest, I enjoyed sleeping outside. I wasn't cramped for space, I always had a nice breeze, and it was much easier for me when the inspections came around. The latter of these proved to be the most helpful in that it allowed me extra time to prepare the rest of the platoon for these inspections and formations.

This extra time was necessary considering the rigidness of the inspections. They were definitely the toughest we've had so far.

While on the subject of tough, I should bring up our physical training periods. Instead of running on a smooth, level track, we ran up big hills and down winding roads. We also were subject to extra PT periods in the evenings. We also marched to and from our basic rifle marksmanship sites at a quick pace. Approaching the BRM ranges, all the soldiers seemed ready to get behind their rifles and fire live ammo for the first time. Also on their minds was the thought that not everyone was going to pass with flying colors. We all knew that some of us wouldn't make it.

Our first day with live ammo was firing for tight shot groups. By regulation, we fired at a 250-meter scale target and were required to place our shots within a four-centimeter circle.

The next range was zeroing our weapons. Here we had to move our right shot group from the day before over to the dead center of the target, known as center mass.

For the few who weren't as successful at zeroing as others, there were several reinforcement classes given to aid any problems they had.

As for the rest of the week, all went fairly smoothly. There were the expected tangles with bugs and a light rain — just enough to dampen things — but the stars at night and the occasional fresh breezes more than compensated for these few shortcomings.

A few other joys we experienced were waking up and not needing to sweep and buff the barracks floors and still having mail call every evening. Reading letters from my wife Donna was more than uplifting.

With almost 25 more days of bivouac scheduled during the remainder of our training, I feel enthusiastic about the next 10 weeks. I just hope and pray that every time we "get back to nature", it will be as successful as last week.

Energy Office announces electricity curtailment plan

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Post Energy Office recently released a contingency plan for curtailment of electricity this summer.

Under a new rate structure Georgia Power offered to Fort Benning, the post agreed to cut electricity use when requested to do so by the supplier. Rodney Carroll, a spokesman in the Energy Office, said they could have as little as 30 minutes notice before having to cut off air conditioning systems to comply with the request.

"Curtailment last year for customers of Georgia Power who used this rate system was only three days for the entire summer," Carroll said. "The first curtailment was for eight hours, the second for four hours and the third for three hours."

Energy officials has set up a priority list for turning off air conditioners during curtailment Central plants would be shut of first, followed by air conditioning in administrative building, fol lowed by family housing units.

Post residents and workers would be notified of the curtail ment by telephone, Carroll said.

He said the new system wil mean that people will continue t have air conditioning all sum mer, except for the few curtail ment days. "In the past when we used too much electricity, we hac to turn off units, and this won't happen under the new rate struc ture, except on curtailment days," he said.

Customers must have the abil ity to cut back energy demand successfully in order to qualify for this rate structure, Carroll said.

67th Maint Bn wins best dining facility

Red and white carnations decorate the tables in the 67th Maintenance Battalion's Dining Facility, adding a pleasant ambiance to the room.

The flowers are a gift from the soldiers in the battalion, in appreciation for the food and service the facility provides.

The facility recently won Best Large Dining Facility honors for the second quarter of fiscal year 1986 and also placed as first runner-up in the Phillip A. Connelly competition in 1985.

SFC Wallace Roberts, manager of the dining facility, said they were judged on the same things in both competitions; quality of food, sanitation, food preparation and service and administration.

"I guess it speaks best that the troops think enough of this facility to give us the flowers for the tables, to show their appreciation," Roberts said.

The facility's cooks offered several reasons for their success. "We have the best cooks and good supervision," said SSgt. Larry Burton.

Statistics prove it: seat belts save lives

Safety Office

A soldier was riding in the front seat of a car being driven by a friend. As they drove through an intersection, an oncoming car turned left in front of them. The cars collided head on. The soldier was killed when his head went through the windshield. He was not wearing a safety belt.

Another soldier was driving north on a two-lane road. His wife was riding beside him on the front seat. As they topped a hill, a southbound car crossed the double, no-passing lines and collied with the soldier's car. His wife was killed instantly. She was not wearing a safety belt.

Neither of these drivers caused the accident, but both were seriously injured and their front-seat passengers were killed in head-on collision. Safety belts could have made a difference.

The Army is making the wearing of safety belts a requirement for soldiers and civilians employees of the Army. A revision to the Army regulation on the prevention of motor vehicle accidents requires soldiers to wear safety belts while driving or riding in a privately owned vehicle both on and off Federal installations. All civilians employees are required to wear safety belts while driving or riding in a privately owned or government-owned vehicle on Federal installations at all times and off Federal installations while the vehicle is used for official business.

Under the new regulation, installation commanders are responsible for ensuring the use of passenger and child restraint systems on Army installations consistent with state or host nation laws.

Although the revision to the regulation had not been published at the time, last March Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., Army Chief of Staff, directed immediate compliance with the safety belt requirement.

To focus attention on the requirement for soldiers and civilian workers to wear safety belts, an Armywide campaign promoting safety belts began with the Memorial Day weekend and will continue through Labor Day. The theme of this campaign is "Get the safety belt habit, it's a snap."

If you haven't yet gotten into the habit of wearing safety belts and requiring all your passengers to buckle up all the time, take the following steps to make safety belts a habit.

- Tell others in advance. Announce to your family and friends who often ride with you that you intend to start wearing your safety belt every time you ride in a vehicle. By doing this, they will keep the pressure on and remind you if you forget.
- Make buckling up a specific step in your entry sequence. Over the years most people have developed a set routine for entering and starting their vehicles. Make buckling up a part of your routine. Safety experts recommend you buckle up as soon as you're seated, before you start the engine.
- Buckle up religiously, regardless of distance. Wear you safety belt EVERY time you get in a vehicle, no matter if you're only going a few blocks.
- Insist your family buckle up. If you have children, take them aside and seriously explain why wearing safety belts is important. Then insist they buckle up. You can be sure they'll notice if you don't and remind you when you forget.
- Make yourself a cue card. During the first week or two when you are trying to establish your new habit, you may need to be reminded. Make a small sign that says "buckle up" and hang it on the steering wheel as you are about to get out of your vehicle. Then the next time you get in your vehicle, it will be there to remind you.
- Concentrate on the first two weeks. Make an all-out effort to use these techniques for at least two weeks. You will soon form the habit of buckling your safety belt every time.

2nd ITB soldier convicted of rape

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

A year long ordeal for two young children ended with the recent sentencing of a staff sergeant from the Army Training Center. A 2nd Infantry Training Brigade soldier was sentenced June 11 to a dishonorable discharge and nine years confinement at Fort Leavenworth as a result of his conviction for the rape and sodomy of his daughters ages 9 and 7.

The soldier admitted to the charges at the trial.

The soldier was originally charged for the offenses in June 1985. However, before he could be brought to trial he staged his disappearance, attempting to make it appear that he had drowned in a lake in Bluff Creek Park, Ala. He left his truck parked near the lake and left his identification in the truck. The lake was dragged but no body was discovered and it was presumed that the sergeant had deserted. He was subsequently arrested in Texas and returned to Fort Benning to face trial. The latter incident resulted in the desertion charge of which he was also convicted.

MPs offer suggestions to foil would-be burglars

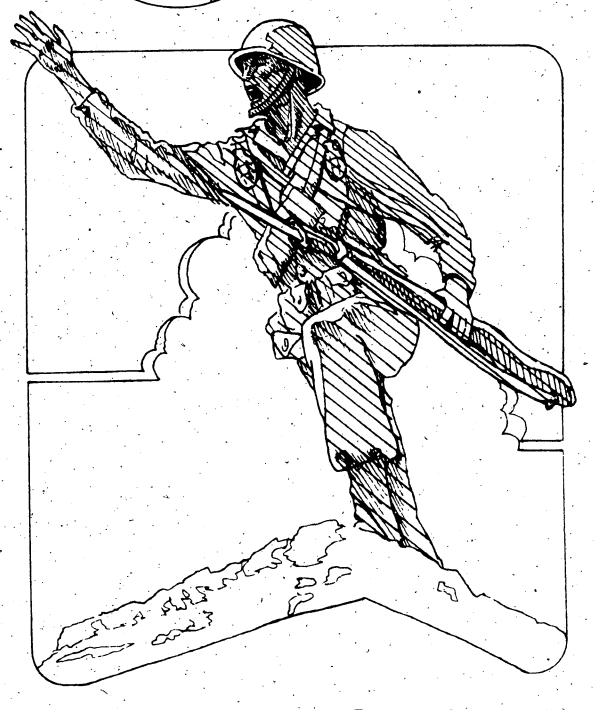
Provost Marshal's Office

Summer is here, school is out and vacation spots are opening for our enjoyment.

These seasonal signs mean that most of us will be taking vacations away from home during the coming months. While some of us are enjoying our vacations, the burglars will be hard at work taking items of value from our homes, apartments and barracks rooms.

The burglar realizes that he can be assured of a greater "haul" and greater safety by striking those dwellings that are unoccupied. And don't for a moment assume that the burglar doesn't patiently watch locations in neighborhoods that appear to be unoccupied while dad, mother, and the kids are off enjoying the season's delights.

However, all hope is not lost. There are some steps that we, as vacationers, can take to minimize the chances of being burglarized.



- Stop all deliveries or have someone pick up your deliveries daily. (Newspapers, magazines, etc.)
- Notify the police of your absence and request them to make periodic checks of your quarters while you are away. If you live on Fort Benning, you may come by the Military Police Station to request that your quarters by checked by MP patrols.
- Use a clock-timer or photo-electric relay to turn lights on and off, giving the house an occupied look.
- Don't discuss your absence in public and don't give details about your vacation to other than close and trusted neighbors or friends. Others can get all the information they need when you return.
- Have lawns mowed and yard work kept up while you are away. This adds to the occupied look of your quarters.
- Put things away. Lawn furniture, bicycles, toys, etc., should all be locked away before leaving. In addition to advertising your absence, these items can be easily stolen if left unsecured.

The Military Police Activity wishes you a happy and safe vacation. Don't spoil it for yourself by failing to take these simple, but practical, burglary prevention measures before leaving.

Canadian trip successful, 197th task force returns

by Bill Branley
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

More than 700 buoyant soldiers from Fort Benning's "Forever Forward" brigade returned home from Canada this week after a month of maneuvers and gunnery training.

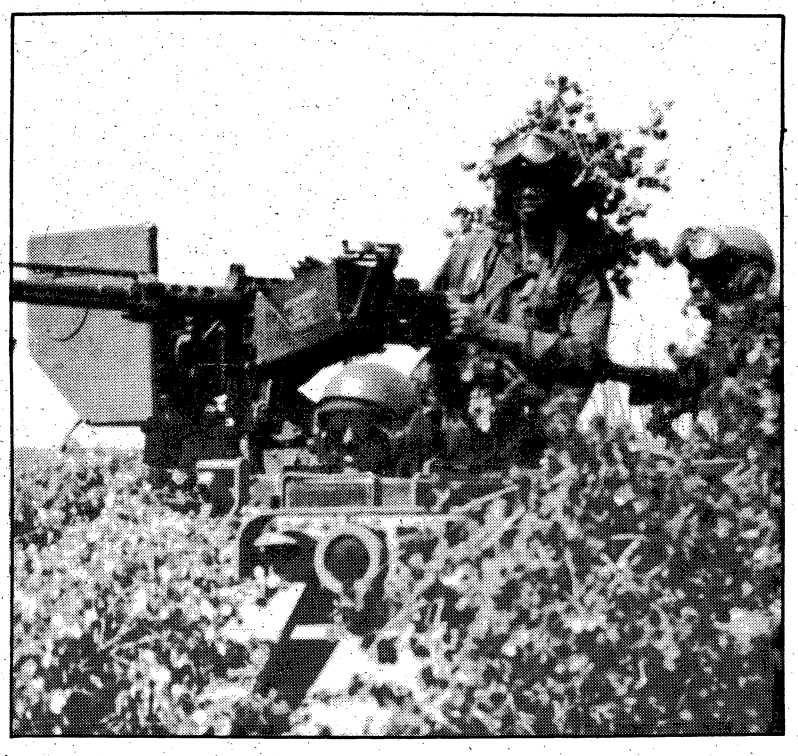
The overall operation, "Maple Fury," was at Camp Wainwright, Alberta. It began with a field training exercise during which the 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers opposed British and Canadian troops.

"It went extremely well," said Lt. Col. Dave Merriam, commander of Task Force 2-69 Armor. "The soldiers were successful in each tactical operation."

That exercise was followed by tank gunnery training on Camp Wainwright's extensive range network. The battalion commander noted that every tank crew was able to qualify on the gunnery course.

"We then conducted a combined arms live fire exercise with the entire task force," Merriam said. "Infantry and tanks worked together to carry out missions over 35 to 40 kilometers of terrain."

"It was definitely worth the trip," Merriam said.

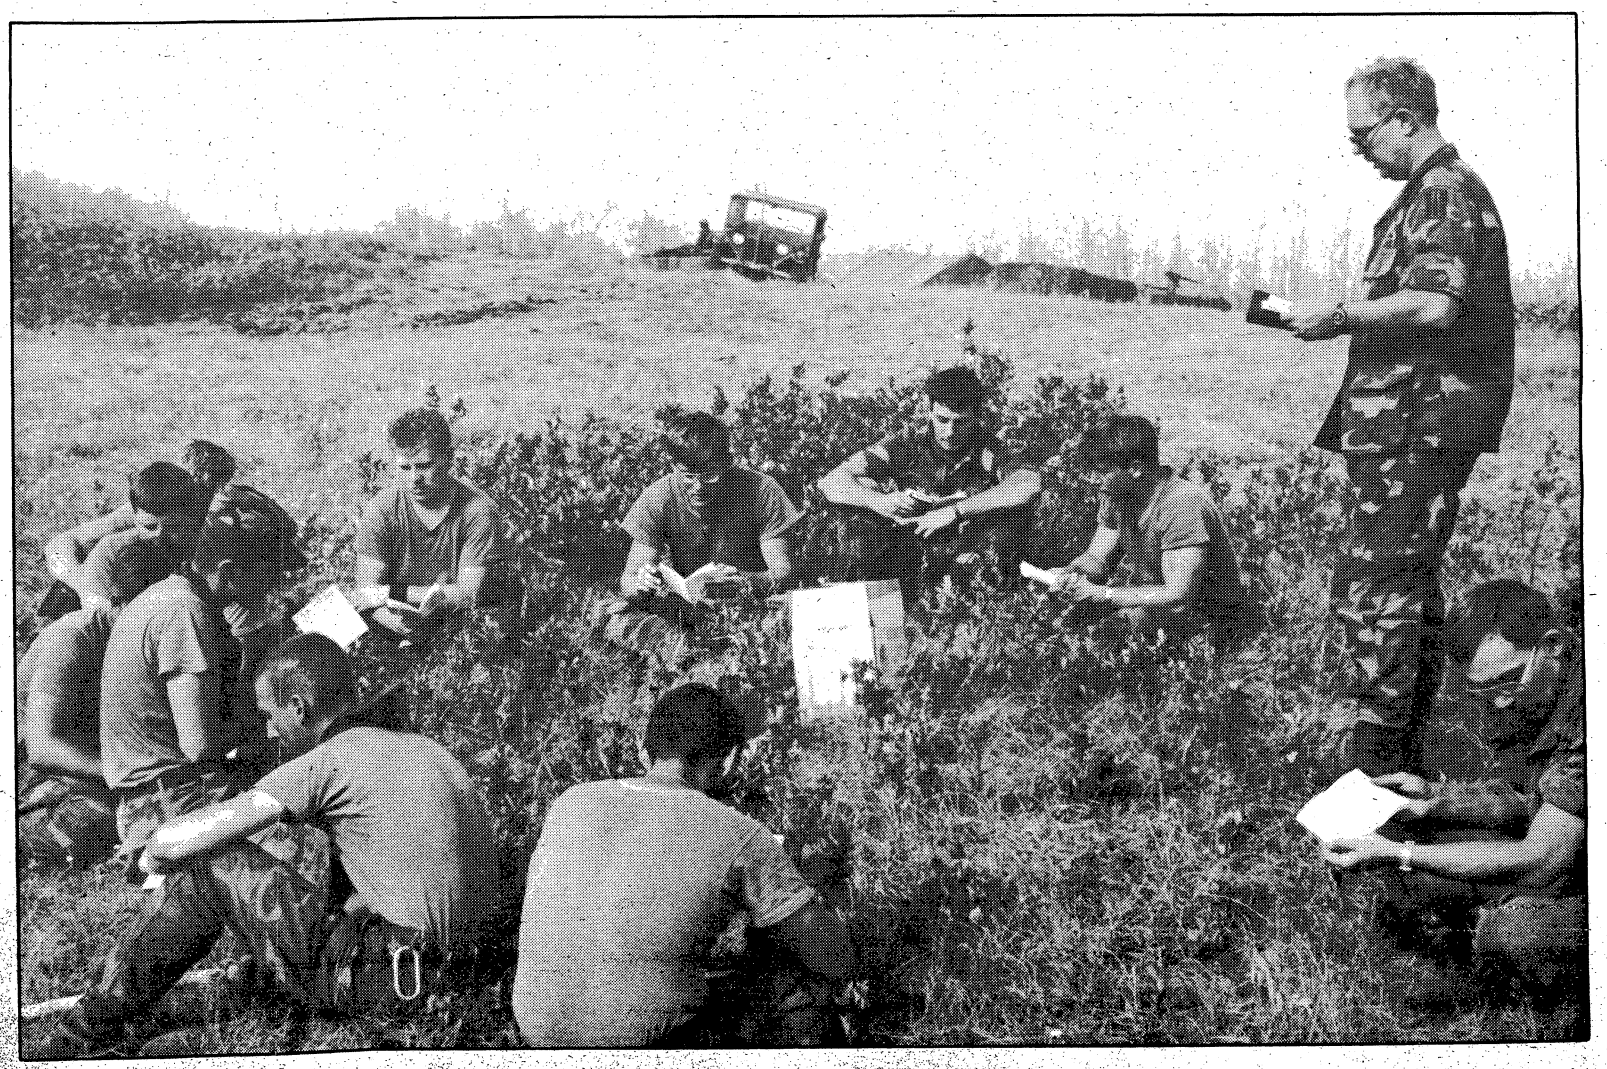


Many of the returning soldiers praised the treatment they received from Canadian military personnel and local civilians.

"The Canadians were real friendly," said PFC Palmer Newman, an infantryman from Company C, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, "and the soldiers eat great field chow."

Newman referred to the individual meal packets used by the Canadian army and sampled by several American soldiers.

SFC John Perry, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor headquarters, said, "The Canadians knew how to be good hosts. They wanted to learn from us and we certainly learned a lot from them."



Perry also said that the Battalion planned other activities for the soldiers besides training. Among these was a trip to Edmonton, where some 600 soldiers had a chance to do some shopping and sightseeing.

Kelley Hill's chapel named best of month

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

The Kelley Hill Chapel was recently selected as the Post Chapel of the Month by the U.S. Army Infantry Center Chaplain's Office.

The chaplains on Kelley Hill agree that it was the work and dedication of their chaplain's assistants that gained this honor for the chapel.

The award is based on maintenance, organization and improvement of the chapel facility. However, these are only a few of the tasks that a chaplain's assistant may encounter in one day.

"The things we do are countless," said SP4 Patricia Lee, a Kelley Hill chaplain's assistant. "We won this award because we have teamwork and all the assistants work together to get things done right."

The chaplains and their assistants are busy whether the Brigade's units are in garrison or on field training exercises. While in garrison, the assistants work with the chaplains, welcoming new soldiers to their units and organizing such activities as canoe trips for unmarried soldiers and marriage enrichment groups for married couples. They prepare refreshments for Sunday worship services and even babysit for small children while their parents are at worship.

"We also have to understand the customs of several different religions," Lee said, "because we set up the Chapel for weddings and different types of masses."

However, the chaplain's assistants' duties are not limited to these garrison activities. If the Brigade leaves Fort Benning for training, the chaplains and their assistants are right there in the field with the soldiers. They also visit units while training on Fort Benning to conduct worship services in the field and check on the soldiers.

"We visit the troops to see that they are being treated well and feeling good," Lee added. "We come to them so they can worship while in the field."

Parable shows error in pursuing riches, neglecting soul

by Philip R. Touw
Martin Army Community Hospital

I have it on authority that the following letter was actually received by the Internal Revenue Service:

Gentlemen: Five years ago I cheated on my income tax report. This has caused me considerable worry, and I have not had a good night sleep since. I am enclosing $25 cash. If I still cannot sleep, I will send you the balance.

In the Gospel according to Luke (Luke 12:4-21) Jesus talks about a man who also had a problem with money. This man was so rich that he did not know what to do with all of his wealth. Jesus points out that his problem was not really a problem of overabundance; it was really a problem of perspective. The rich man in the story talks egotistically about "my barns, my grains, my cross and my fruit." He seems to have forgotten that many of his neighbors could only dream about having such a problem. The man's wealth had blinded him to the needs of others; he lost his perspective on life and God said, "you fool."

The rich man also forgot the purpose of life, which in the end is not really so much to make a living as to make a life worth living.

The famous Methodist preacher, Dr. Clovis Chappell, illustrated this point very graphically with the following story. He told of a boat carrying a cargo of meat from New Orleans to Memphis. Another boat tried to pass and the race was on! The captain of the first ship ordered, "Full steam ahead," but it was not enough to pass, and so he ordered that some of the fat meat be thrown on the fire. This worked so well that he repeated it over and over again. At last, with whistle blowing and flags flying, the boat arrived in Memphis far ahead of its rivals. But when the merchants came for the cargo, they found that it had been burned up in the race.

It is easy for us, I believe, — like the captain of the boat, and the man in the story told by Jesus — to play the fool — to come in first (financially, powerfully, successfully), but in the process to lose the cargo. That is why God gave us the parable of the rich fool, to keep us from playing the part of a fool. For ". . . what does it profit us if we gain the whole world, but lose our soul?" (Matthew 16:26)

What Specialist Hales has been aiming for during his off-duty time.

Specialist Four Jason Hales has been aiming for the best. As a soldier, and as a student. He's an Infantryman at Fort Myer, Virginia, as well as a B.S. candidate in Mechanical Engineering at Park College. And he's just one of the over 100,000 soldiers who are building brighter, smarter futures through the Army's Reaching for Excellence education program.

It's a terrific opportunity that's available to each and every soldier, at virtually every Army post around the world. Reaching for Excellence covers everything from basic educational skills and technical skill development to undergraduate and graduate studies at the college level. And it's a chance to have at least 75% of your college tuition paid for by the Army.

Continuing your education is a commitment that's fully supported by the Army leadership. You can start taking advantage of this commitment at your post's Education Center. There, you'll find a professional education counselor who can help you set short- and long-range goals which fit both your educational and career plans.

Drop by your Education Center and find out, as Specialist Hales did, how you can turn some off-duty time into a lifetime of rewards. If you want to get ahead, now's the time to get started.

ARMY EDUCATION. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

USARSA medical course designed to promote goodwill

10-week civic action class teaches disease prevention

Story and photos by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas PAO

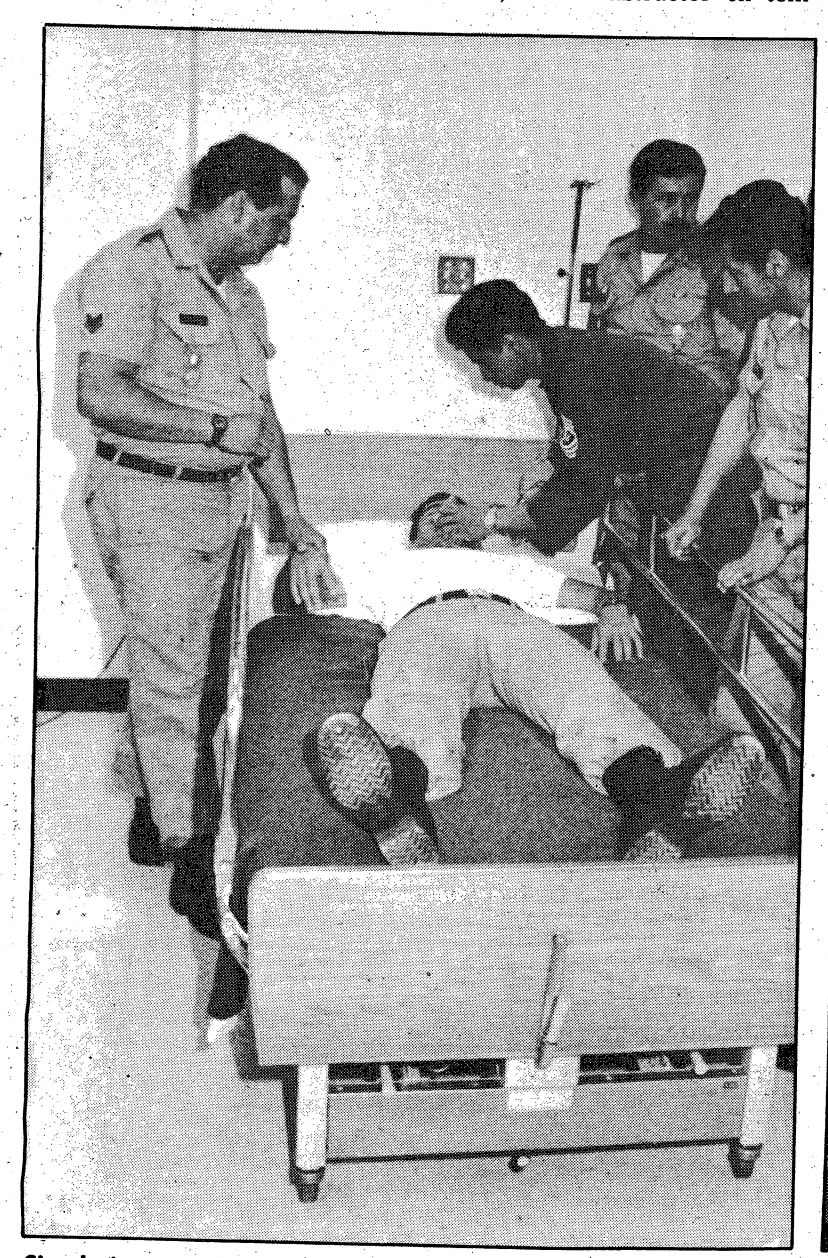
"The Basic Combat Medical course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas will ultimately promote humanitarian goodwill throughout parts of Latin America," said SFC Sabas Martinez, senior instructor on temporary duty at USARSA from the Health Services Command, Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

The 10-week civic action course, which is instrumental in Latin American national development, includes such subjects as cardio-pulmonary resuscitation, anatomy, physiology, treatment for trauma, medication administration, field sanitation and disease prevention.

Martinez and four additional TDY instructors from the medical field are currently teaching the course to 17 noncommissioned officers from four Latin American countries. Those countries are Colombia, Costa Rica, Honduras and Panama.

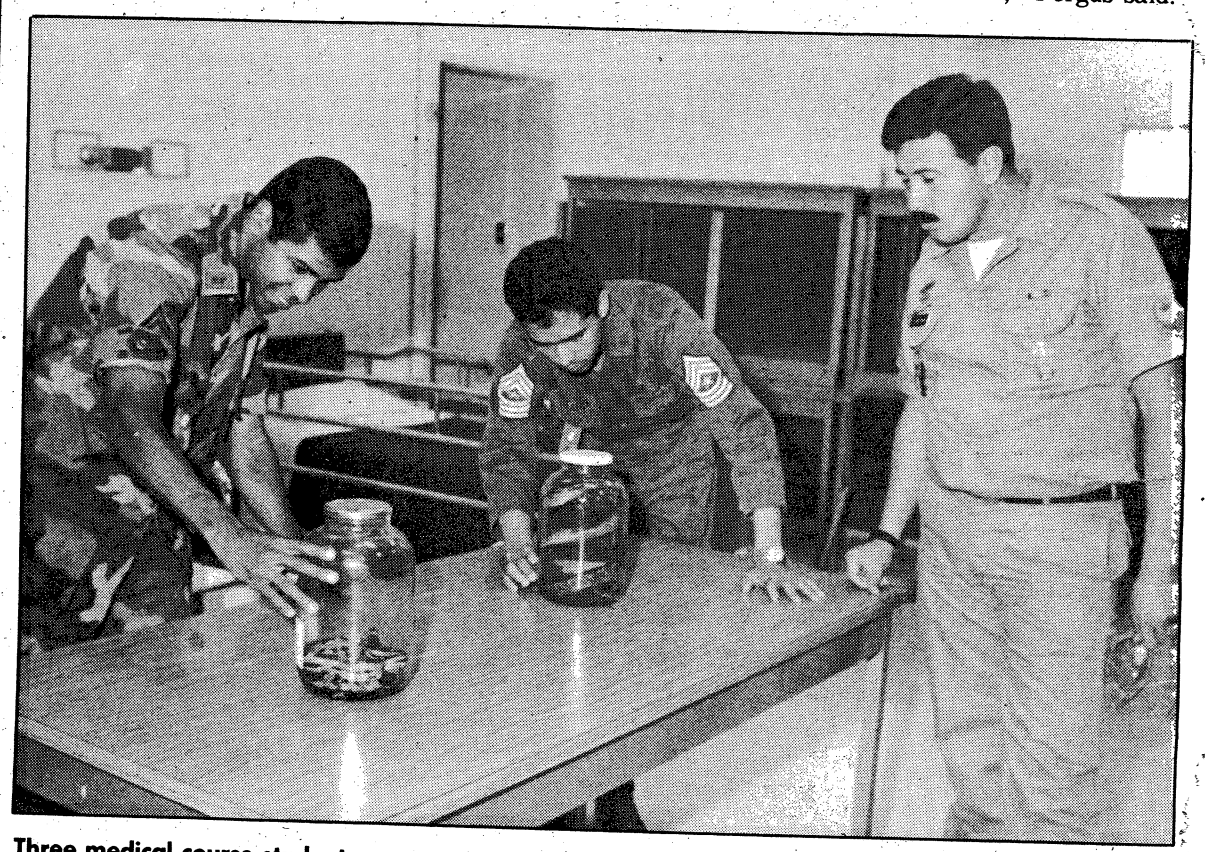
"Each instructor teaches a class according to his speciality in the medical field," Martinez said. Martinez is a preventive medicine specialist.

"These Latin American NCOs arrive at USARSA often with different ideas about military field medicine and sometimes very fundamental ways of applying medical treatment in the field," said Martinez.



"The students are extremely receptive to all instructional material we offer in this course. They appreciate the 'one-on-one' type instruction offered to them at USARSA," he said.

As always, Fort Benning support for the course has been excellent. "The people from Troop Medical Clinic No. 1 and Martin Army Community Hospital have given us their full support," said SSgt. Joaquin Fergus, course coordinator. MACH loaned USARSA eight hospital-type beds for the duration of the course. "This adds realism to the course," Fergus said.



Fort Sam Houston has also logistically assisted the medical course. "I signed for and brought about $9,000 worth of laboratory equipment here from Fort Sa including microscopes and wat purification kits," Martin said.

But the extent of the cour isn't all work and no play. S dents are offered a cha through an Information Pro designed for foreign military dents in the U.S., to visit areas of interest and rec ation.

"We've scheduled a trip Atlanta and other areas for students to visit," Fergus sa "Finding out how huge and co plex our country (the U.S.) real is amazes them," Fergus said.

Simulating an emergency room trauma, student noncommissioned officers in the Basic Combat Medical Course use available training aids to treat a fellow student "patient."

Three medical course students representing Panama, Honduras and Colombia discuss the differences between two types of snakes and their native habitats.

Infantry ball marks 211th Army birthday

by Bill Branley
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Fort Benning's annual Infantry Ball went off with a bang Saturday night as the U.S. Army Infantry Center observed the 211th birthday of the Army and the infantry.

Some 250 officers and guests from around post, plus many visiting dignitaries, turned out for the gala event, hosted by the 197th Infantry Brigade at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Organized around the theme, "We Were There," the event used music and pageantry to illustrate the role of the infantryman throughout the Army's history.

A choir of officer candidates from 50th Company, 5th Student Battalion (Class 3-86) sang "We Were There" and other selections intertwined with a historical narration by Lt. Col. Chris Hart, 197th executive officer.

The words and music accompanied a procession of soldiers wearing infantry uniforms of different periods. Three soldiers represented different types of infantrymen in today's Army: mechanized, light and Ranger. At the close of the program, color bearers from nearly 50 units and commands on Fort Benning proceeded across the stage.

Another highlight of the evening was the cutting of the Army's birthday cake by Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., Fort Benning commander, and 2nd Lt. Christopher Wahl, the "newest" infantry officer on post. Wahl was graduated from Officer Candidate School the day before.

The Infantry Ball ended with dancing to music provided by the 283rd Army Band. The band had also provided a brass choir for entertainment at the beginning of the evening.

The Columbus College Department of Military Science commissioned two Reserve Officers' Training Corps cadets as second lieutenants in ceremonies June 6.

Clementine Owens and Michael K. Cargile, children of Fort Benning soldiers, received their commissions along with 12 other cadets from Columbus College.

Owens, the daughter of CSM Roy C. and Evelean Owens is a business management major who was commissioned a field artillery officer.

Cargile, the son of Lt. Col. E.D. and Eddie Cargile is an accounting major and was commissioned in the quartermaster corps.

Retired Col. Robert B. Nett, a Medal of Honor recipient for action in the Pacific theatre during World War II, was the guest speaker and assisted in the commissioning.

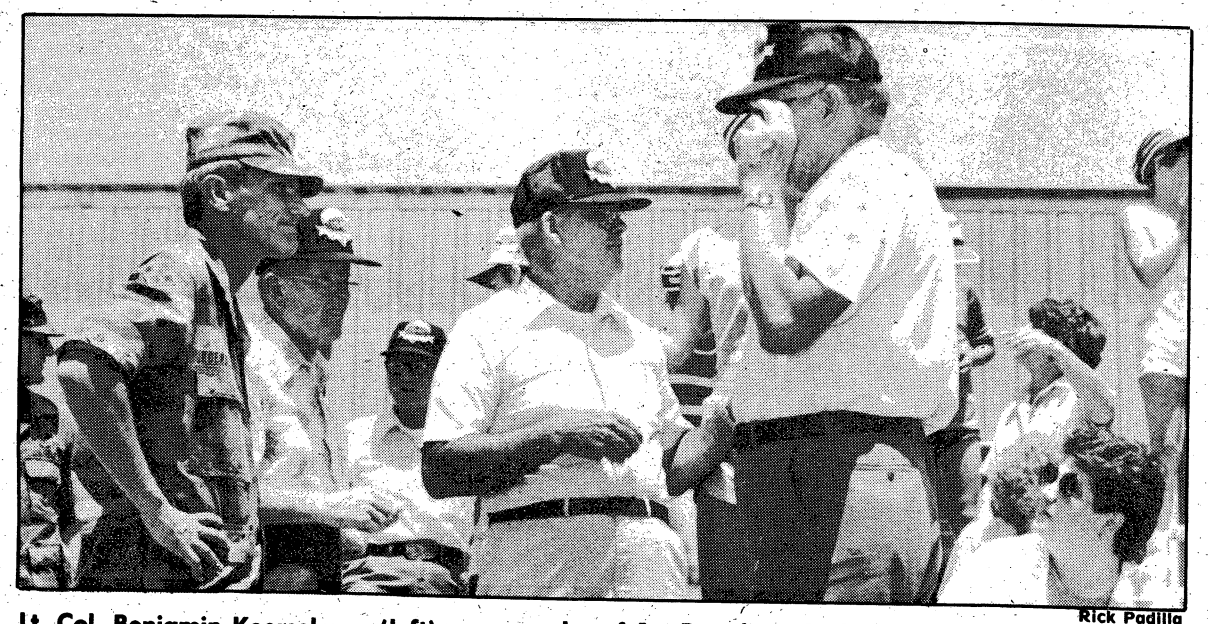
Original Airborne Test Platoon returns to Benning for reunion

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment PAO

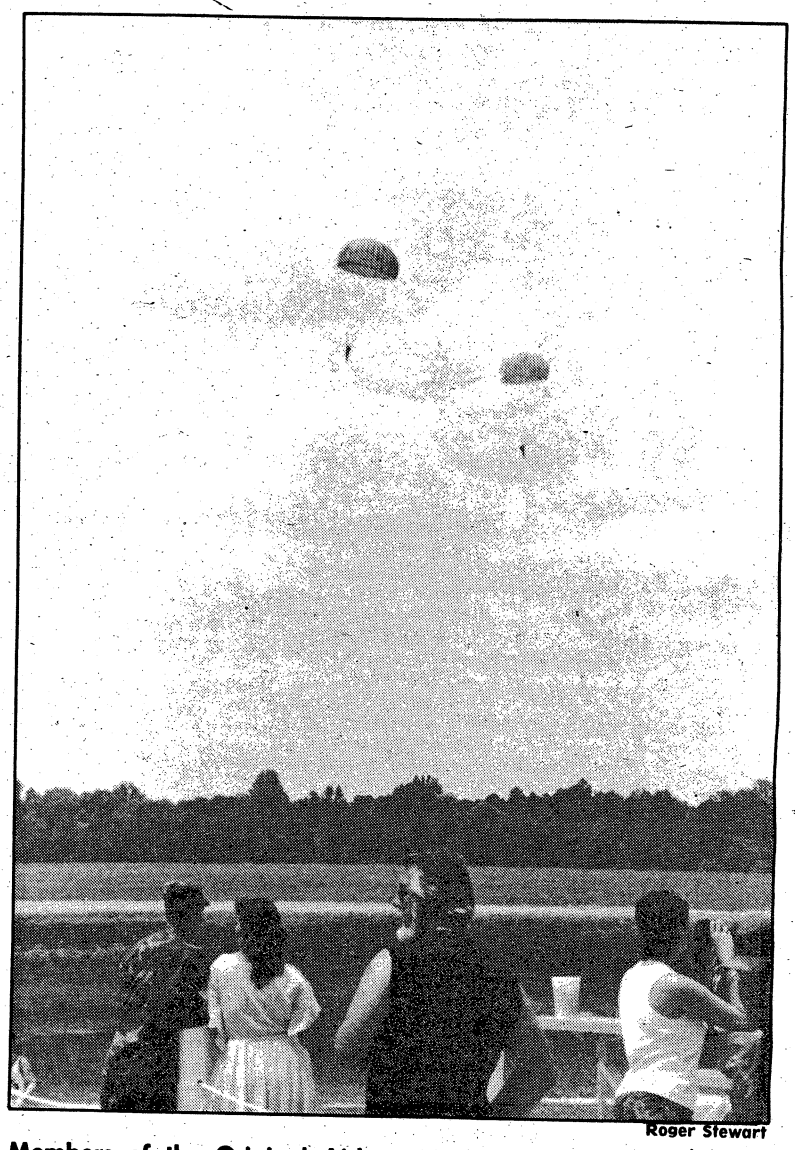
Several members of the first Airborne Test Platoon and their families gathered at Red Cloud Range Friday for a live-fire exercise conducted by the 29th Infantry Regiment.



The exercise was the highlight of a three-day-long airborne reunion celebration.

Soldiers of the 29th maneuvered, fired and displayed the smoke capability of the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle.

Earlier, the 60 or so visitors toured the new Airborne Walk, observed parachute packing, ground training and an Airborne 5,000 demonstration, and helped pin wings on many new airborne soldiers of Airborne Class 31-86.



The test platoon was formed August 16, 1940. More than 200 soldiers from several Army installations volunteered. However, 40 were selected, according to MSgt. Teddy Harman, Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Among the surviving members were Red King, the first enlisted soldier to jump and retired Gen. (then lieutenant) William Ryder, the first officer to jump.

self motivation," SSgt. Arnet Jackson said, "and our personnel have all three."

Roberts praised the caliber of his staff, both military and civilian workers. "It takes a lot of teamwork and pride in your job, and my people have it," he said.

But the final judge is the people who eat there. "Its food is the best. Everybody know that, and that's why everybody eats here," said SP4 John Wellborn, a recent diner who is assigned to the 43rd Engineer Battalion.

'Top Gun' hits right on target, delivers romance, thrills, action

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you go to see "Top Gun" because you saw the previews and you've been enticed by all the action, you'll leave the theater happy to have gotten just what you expected.

Pete "Maverick" Mitchell (Tom Cruise) and his co-pilot "Goose" (Anthony Edwards) are Navy pilots picked to train at the Navy's elite school for fighter pilots — "Top Gun."

This story is about the trials and tribulations Maverick endures in his effort to be the best in the class, which already boasts the top 1 percent of the Navy's finest pilots.

Maverick is a likable, somewhat cocky hot-shot pilot determined to follow in his father's footsteps. His sidekick, Goose, works with him in what is reminiscent of an Abbott and Costello comedy team.

For example, in a scene at a bar, Maverick and Goose seranade Kelly McGillis in one of the movie's funniest moments. The two work together well, giving the appearance of a natural team.

The funny scenes are hilarious, the somber moments are good and the action scenes are riveting. All the scenes flow together smoothly, keeping the viewer's attention successfully.

Of course no story is complete without some romance. This is where McGillis comes in, first as a prospective bar pick-up. Soon after, her role as his instructor is revealed.

Cruise, in spite of his boyish face, takes the viewer through the transition from arrogant kid to a humbly matured fighter pilot.

The action in the flying scenes is a fine example of cinematic art in which the audience is flying with Maverick at Mach 2 for about 30 percent of the movie.

Although there are moments that are "Hollywood," these are subtle and don't distract from the quality of the movie.

For example, how come McGillis is the only one in the movie who never breaks a sweat even when everyone else in the room is drenched?

And don't look to closely at the MiGs or you will notice they are cleverly camouflaged American fighter planes.

But these small indiscrepancies put aside, "Top Gun" has good acting, lots of action and fine cinematography.

Wickham videotape provides answers to soldiers' questions on variety of topics

Army News Service

A new chief of staff videotape titled "Straight Answers to Tough Questions" is being mailed to installation commanders and general officers.

The 37-minute tape contains questions asked by students at the pre-command course at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and answered by Gen. John A. Wickham Jr. The questions address safety, light infantry divisions, the regimental system, acquisition of the Sgt. York weapon system, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation, the role of the spouse of the Army, ambition and "jointness" (the advantages of the military services working together). The tape concludes with Wickham talking about leadership and the Army theme, "Values."

Because the tape touches on current topics that affect today's Army, it could be used for such occasions as officer and non-commissioned officer calls, command breakfasts and command and staff meetings.

Additional copies of the tape will be developed in the future by the Joint Visual Information Activity at Tobyhanna Army Depot, Penn., for distribution to local training and audiovisual support centers. The organization has not yet established a timeframe for the distribution.

The standard audiovisual production identification number for the tape is 705984 DA. The release number is TVT20-625. Anyone wanting a copy of the tape, when it becomes available, should request it through their local Training Aids Support Center using both identification numbers and the title.

Track star leaps above field, grabs All-Army high jump win

USAIC Pubic Affairs Office

In the height of competition, George Milton leaped above the rest as he claimed first in the All-Army high jump competition and third overall in the Interservice Track and Field meet in San Diego June 13 and 14.

Milton was the top high jumper for the 1986 All-Army team clearing a height of 7.25 feet.

The winning jump in the Interservice contest was 7 feet, 2 inches, made by Leo Williams who represented the Navy, and was also a member of the 1984 Olympic team.

Competition has always been a part of Milton's life.

"I have competed for as long as I can remember, at least since I was able to run," said Milton. "I grew up in the type of environment where baseball, basketball, running and all competitive sports were daily activities," he said.

Milton attributes his winning drive to several factors."My first function is that of a christian and doing the Lord's will," said Milton. "The fact that God has 'enabled' me to compete is a constant motivation. There are those who want to become athletes but are not able to for various reasons. It gives me the opportunity to minister to the younger athletes. Secondly, the feeling of accomplishment that one receives in competition is a source of motivation," he said.

Milton's best jump is recorded at 7 feet, 3.5 inches, but he did not just start at the seven-foot mark.

"I went to Southern Arkansas University on a football scholarship, but also participated in the track and field events. When the new coach arrived at the University, he wanted me to make a decision to play only one sport. After first choosing football, I later realized that track and field was where I really wanted to be," said Milton.

Milton has since been an All-American twice and a member of the All-Army team for the last four years.

His athletic ability has led him throughout the United States and overseas.

When the U.S. was represented in the 1983 CISM meet in England, Milton was there. When the U.S. team went to Eygpt for the 1984 CISM meet, Milton was there. He also hopes to attend the 1986 meet in Rome, Italy tentatively scheduled for August.

The team representing the U. S., consisting of the top athletes from all four branches of service, competes against armed forces teams from around the world.

"More than 22 countries were represented in the 1984 meet," Milton said.

Running hard and jumping high may seem simple to some.

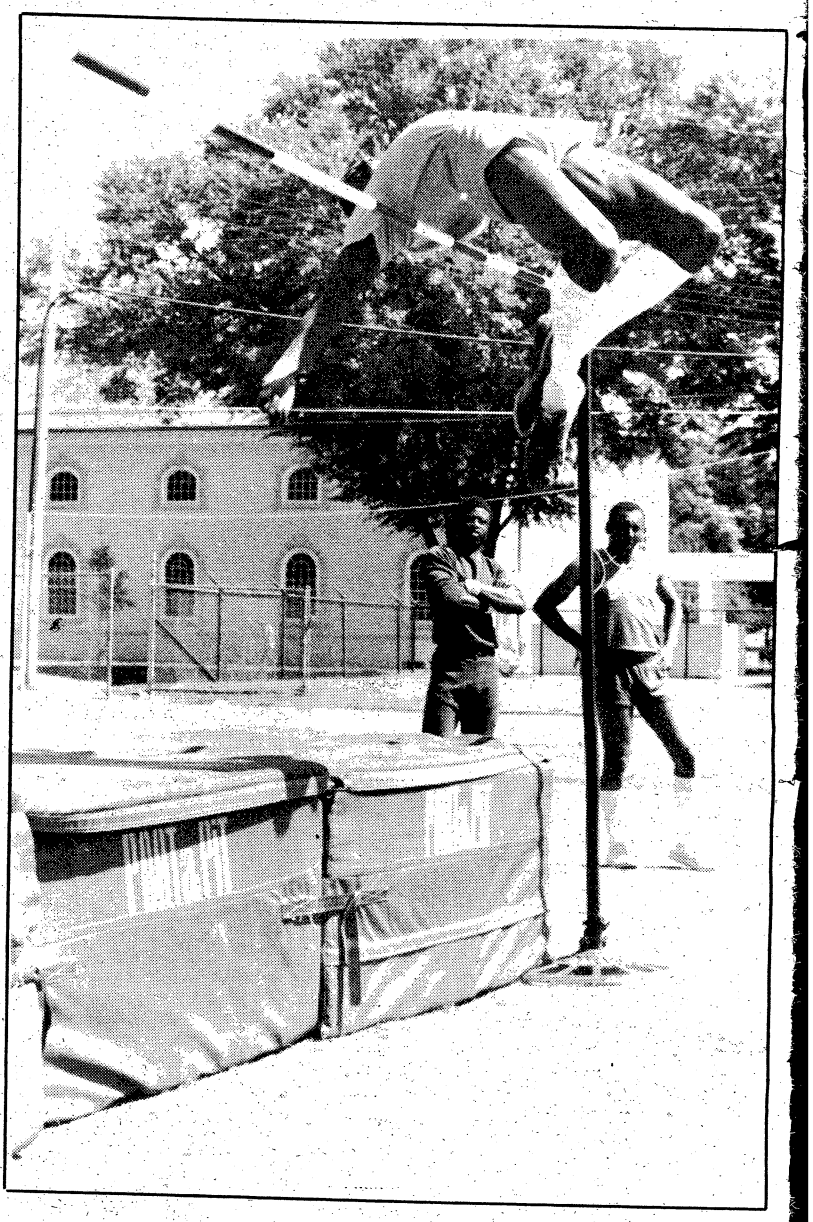
Milton assures us it is not.

"You have to be able to train, get the job done of defending our country, and maintain a stable family life," Milton said. "I have great support from my family and that is one of my greatest blessing," he added.

Milton and wife Melanie have two girls, Natalie and Canda.

Milton said that he also receives a lot of support from the 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group, where he is a Fire Control Systems Repairman.

"In a lot of cases, individuals are not able to compete because the units don't allow the travel, but my chain of command has been very supportive," said Milton.



At 6 feet, 1 inch, Milton is relatively short for a high jumper.

"I seem to walk around looking up to everybody at the meets," Milton said.

Milton's aspirations include a trip to Seoul Korea for the 1988 Olympics where he hopes to compete in the decathlon.

The 10-event contest consists of the 100-meter dash, broad jump, 16-pound shot-put, high jump, 400-meter dash, 110-meter hurdles, discus throw, pole vault, javelin throw and 1,500-meter run.

Milton lifts weights and runs to keep in shape, but is in search of a coach to help with training and techniques.

George Milton clears over 7 feet in recent track and field competition.

"I am concentrating on technique rather than strength for the decathlon. High jump is about 90 percent mental and 10 percent physical," said Milton.

The Army's top high jumper keeps concentrating and jumping high in hopes of claiming more victories in the track and field events.

USAMU shooters take top honors at rifle, pistol matches

by Tommy Pool
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit PAO

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit won both individual and team victories during this year's Georgia State Shooting Championships here last week.

SSgt. Greg Strom and MSgt. Thomas Woods captured individual titles, while the USAMU "Blue" squad dominated the team events.

In the highpower rifle championships, Strom, the 1986 All-Army Champion, held on to an early lead to finish one point ahead of two competitors from the U.S. Marine Corps team.

Strom scored an individual aggregate of 790 out of 800 over the championship course, while USMC shooters SSgt. Jack Caseman and CWO Ted Wilson of Quantico Marine Corps Base, Va., both finished at 789.

In team competition, the action was again very close as the U.S. Army "Blue" squad scored a narrow three point over the USMC "Scarlet". The Army finished with 1,969 out of 2,000 points, while the USMC placed both second and third at 1,966 and 1,957.

Members of the winning Army "Blue" team included Strom, Maj. Edward Schumacher, SFC Jeffrey Lear and SP4 Jeffrey Nyfeler. The "Blue" squad was coached by SSgt. Lewis Silvis, last year's National Long Range Championship winning coach.

In the Georgia State Pistol Championships, USAMU's Woods outdistanced the competition with an excellent total of 2,663 out of 2,700 points.

Second and third place in the championship went to SFC James Laguana and Jimmie McCoy, both of USAMU.

Laguana, a former National Champion, finished with 2,651 points, while McCoy scored) total of 2,641 for third place.

The U.S. Army "Blue" squad also dominated the pistol team events with victories in the .22 caliber, Center Fire, and .45 caliber competition.

Winning team members included Woods, Laguana, Lt. Col. Ralph Talbot, MSgt. Roger Willis and SSgt. Gary Marsh.

The U.S. Army Rifle and Pistol teams will be competing again later this month and in July at the annual Interservice Shooting Championships. The pistol phase will be hosted by the Army National Guard in Nashville, Tenn. June 26 to 29, while the U.S. Marine Corps will host the rifle events at Quantico, Va., July 23 to 29.

Watch for all the scores and final results in the Bayonet.

Rangers return from Cabanas '86

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers from the 75th Ranger Regiment recently returned from the joint forces exercise, Cabanas '86, in Honduras.

The Ranger regimental headquarters coordinated and conducted exercises with the 2nd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry from Fort Lewis, Wash., the 3rd Battalion, 7th Special Forces Group and engineers from Fort Bragg, N.C.

The 2-75th Rangers concentrated on squad level tactics, taking advantage of the barren area of the Honduras in which they were training.

According to a 75th Ranger Regiment spokesman, the climate and conditions were perfect for the training the U.S. forces engaged in.

The deployment was part of the second phase of the ongoing Cabanas '86 operation.

Federal workers get revamped travel pay system

Army News Service

A new per diem computation system for federally employed civilians will change the way employees are reimbursed for official travel expenses.

Congress gave the General Services Administration authority under Public Law 99-234 to implement a system beginning July 1 that more adequately reimburses actual expenses for travel within the continental United States, said Mark H. Ellicott, the Army representative on the Civilian Advisory Panel to the per diem committee in Alexandria, Va. The new system also will be more efficient and less complicated than the current system because it eliminates excess record-keeping and computations. This will result in reduced administrative costs, he said.

"Under the new system, the traveling employees probably will be reimbursed more completely for actual expenses for temporary duty travel," he said. "This means less out-of-pocket money. That's the way it should be."

The new per diem system will eliminate the current standard and high-cost systems that set statutory ceilings on per diem allowances and subsistence expense reimbursements, Ellicott said. Instead, it expands the amount that can be paid for per diem so that the figures range from a $50 minimum to a $126 maximum.

Under the high-cost system, travelers are allowed a specified amount, ranging from $50 to $75 per day, and are required to document their meals and lodging expenses. Under the standard system, a traveler is allowed a $50 per diem amount, but documentation of meals is now required.

Under the new per diem system, travelers will not be required to document their eating expenses, but must continue to document lodging expenses. In most cases, reimbursements for meals and subsistence allowance will be either $25 or $33 per day, depending on the location. The maximum for lodging expenses has been established by GSA for each area of the country and may vary based on the cost of living.

For example, in a current high-cost $75-per-day area, the employee would be reimbursed $33 per day for meals and $42 for

Values integral part of professional daily life

by Daniel Schmidt
Fort Campbell, Ky.

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — What is the so-called elusive definition of "values?" Social scientist Milto Rokeach, a well-known student of values, says that values are "abstract ideals, positive or negative, not tied to any specific object or situation, representing a person's beliefs about forms of conduct."

Soldiers, more than many other professionals, regard traditional values as an important tool in their everyday life. Soldiers, NCOs and officers set, promote, teach and live values as part of their professional aims. They do it by saluting, attending and teaching noncommissioned officer professional development classes, caring for their families and working as a team. Many times this means taking a risk in order to do what they believe is the right thing.

For the last few years, the Army has emphasized not only the professional but also the human side of the soldier. Past Army themes that included leadership, excellence, physical fitness and the family bear this out.

The creation of the "Values" theme points to continued renewal and revitalization of many inherent and old-fashioned values we have as Americans.

"Generally held truths" that influenced the family, churches and schools during the 1920s were "holdovers" from earlier days.

Values were expressed in terms of the following:

- Cleanliness is next to Godliness.
- Truth has already been established; it is simply a matter of transmitting it to the young.
- Man earns his bread by the sweat of his brow.
- The important thing is to find answers, not to ask questions. We already know the questions.
- We have a mission in the world, and it is to make other people believe and act as positively as we do.

A recent indicator of the upswing in values could be the rise in the national sales of high school class rings to 65 percent of all graduating students, compared to an all-time low of 40 to 50 percent in the 1970s.

Dr. John Pollock, vice-chairman of Research and Forecasts Inc., says there is a marked tendency to seek values that were grouned in the America of the early pioneers.

A recent study of leisure in America found that our work ethic endures. About six out of 10 Americans believe that leisure time is best spent "focused" on constructive goals. According to Pollock, people have a responsibility to spend part of their free time helping others.

This "value" of leisure time is especially visible in the Army. Volunteerism in the Army — helping others — continues to lead the way. It's an important way of life for average Americans we well as soldiers and family members.

A return to basic values can reveal a confidence that something positive lies at the heart of the American culture, Pollock said.

Pollock said he feels that craftsmanship — attention to detail, personal devotion to excellence and worksmanship — is essential to a positive way of doing business.

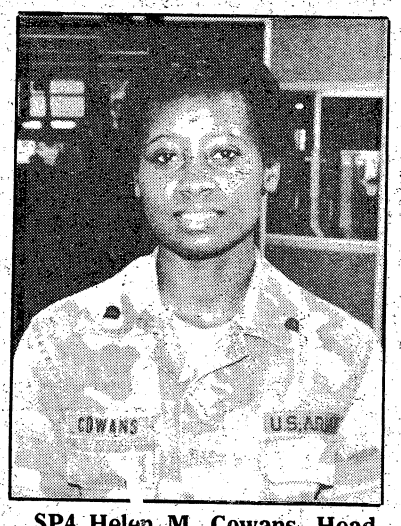
Soldiering is a craft; an infantry squad leader perfects his part in battle drill and ensures that every soldier acts and reacts in the correct way. This is perhaps best shown through his motivation, attention to detail and dedicated practice.

To a soldier, craftsmanship suggests detailed inspection and personal devotion to doing his best — every time.

A tradition that the American Indian fervently believed in applies here: "to know another man, you must walk a mile in his moccasins." This is a challenge for all of us to understand, adopt and live the positive values of others.

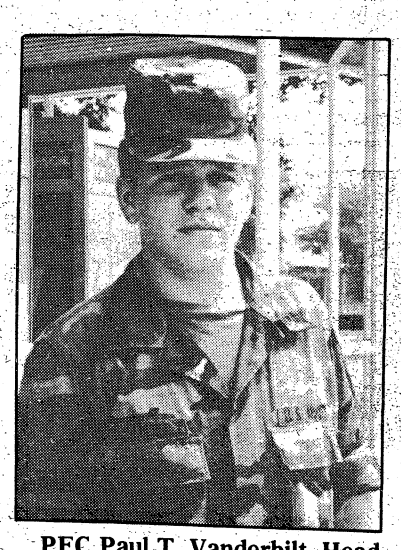
Various voices

The Army theme for 1986 is values. What do you think are some important values for soldiers?



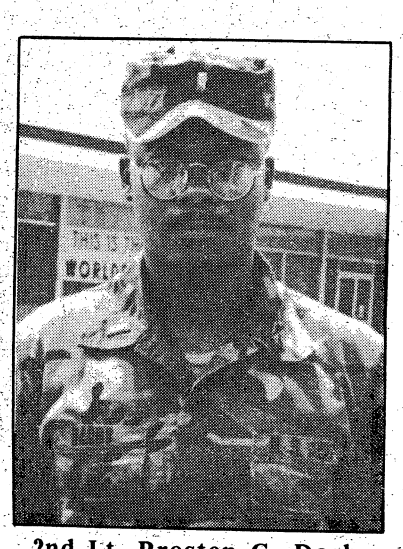
Capt. Steve H. Britton, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade

The value system of a soldier should consist of integrity and duty to unit and country. A soldier should have a value of selfishlessness, able to care about what happens to a fellow soldier. There should be self-improvement through the available educational means."



SP4 Tim A. Meadows, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade

"A soldier is concerned about his finance and off-duty recreational time. A soldier satisfied there, can take pride in his job."



SP4 Helen M. Cowans, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade

"The soldiers primary values are those of education and family. The pride one has in their job, somewhat reflects the soldier's moral value."

PFC Paul T. Vanderbilt, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade

"A soldier must value freedom, in that, that is what we are here for. The health of the soldier is of value and is reflected in the pride shown through physical conditioning."

2nd Lt. Preston G. Darby, Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

"A soldier's vaules should include his duty to the country and integrity. Soldiers values are reflected in the pride they have in themselves and the uniform that they wear. As a world concern, a soldier should be concerned with morality."

Inner person important stresses Sennewald

by April W. Johnson
McClellan News

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — Recently speaking at Fort McClellan, Ala., Gen. Robert W. Sennewald, commanding general, U.S. Army Forces Command, says soldiers need more than solid training, such as the technical skills of reading a map, firing an M16 rifle, applying a field dressing or donning a mask.

"The difference between a good soldier and an average soldier is the inner person," Sennewald said.

Sennewald emphasized a quote from Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr.: "Unlike soldierly skills, ethics and values are more caught than taught."

Sennewald explained that the challenge is instilling the proper soldierly values. The values these new soldiers brought into the Army from home, churches and schools need to be nurtured and reinforced.

Sennewald said that although as leaders in a training environment you should set a positive example, "your job is to create an ethical climate where new soldiers can catch the values the Army is looking for."

According to the senior Army leader, the values that should be stressed by the training cadre are:

- Competence. Don't short change these new recuits. Know your job because it shows when you don't.
- Fairness. Treat each soldier equally.
- Dedication. Dedication to mission, job, unit and country is essential.
- Honesty. It comes in many forms; taking resposibility for your actions, admitting mistakes, and being up front are just a few.
- Pride. Soldiers should take pride in what they do, who they are, in the Army and in the country.

Soldiers not just 'ordinary Joes'

by Donald Gilmore
25th Infantry Division, Hawaii

It doesn't take a lot to figure out that a soldier is a cut above your ordinary Joe. For in no other job can you get out of bed, put on a uniform and walk outside with a feeling of pride that echoes for all to hear. Some might think they're crazy, but ask any retired soldier what he misses most about active duty and he'll tell you he misses the pride he felt and the respect he enjoyed when he wore his country's uniform.

But being a soldier is more than wearing a uniform. A soldier is one who will fight to keep his loved ones free. He cares for those who have fought and fallen before him.

A soldier has order and discipline. He has moral character.

A soldier is a cook preparing the morning meal for 15,000 hungry, complaining troops. A soldier is a young private whose day begins at 4:30 a.m. and ends at 5 p.m. — if he's lucky. He is a young platoon leader, wide-eyed and eager to show the world what he can do. He is a veteran officer or non-commissioned officer who manages and supervises and, above all, leads by example.

A soldier is one who gets a lump in his throat when "Old Glory" passes by. He sometimes cries at the playing of the National Anthem while standing at attention in a lonely, foreign land.

A soldier has a wife who can juggle two checking accounts, arrange 10,000 pounds of furniture, put up with weird-shaped windows and floors, and survives buying groceries at the commissary on pay day. He has kids who speak half English and half of the language from their last overseas assignment. They can also speak Army jargon fluently — words such as MOS, TDY, ARTEP and PCS are spoken with ease.

A soldier serves with pride, from the enlistee just out of basic training to the combat veteran who knows what it's like to see death take his friends one-by-one, never knowing if he'll be next.

Somewhere deep down inside, beneath his camouflaged BDUs, dog tags and sometimes gruff manner, a soldier knows he's special. For this is a duty like no other, a confidence like no other.

He is a soldier. He is no ordinary Joe.

Fort Benning troop killed; four charged with murder

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A 34-year-old Fort Benning soldier was pronounced dead early Saturday morning as a result of being struck by a car after he had been beaten by four men and left unconscious in a roadway in Phenix City, Ala.

SP4 Paul Castor, of Company B, 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, was pronounced dead by a coroner at 3:45 a.m. Saturday after his body was found by Phenix City police officers.

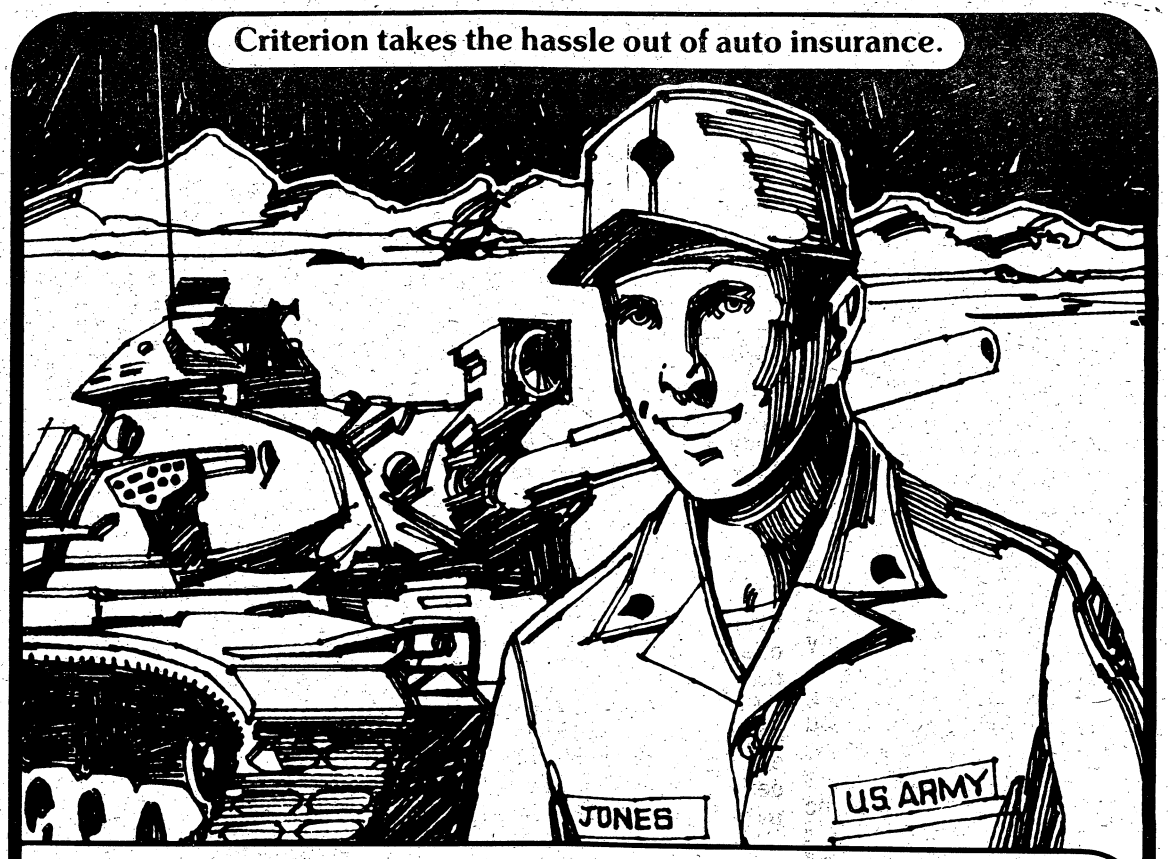
"Castor left a Phenix City night club to go to his car. He was accosted by four males. A domestic fight ensued and Castor was struck several times in the head by a brick. He was left lying on First Street at Seale Road where he was struck by a car," said Capt. A.D. Lee, chief investigator for the Phenix City Police Department.

Time of death was estimated to be at 3:09 a.m.

Castor, who was married and the father of two children, died of massive trauma to the chest as a result of being struck by the car, according to Lee.

Alvin Leon Woods, 23, of the E.L. Stough Apartments, Randy Miles, 18, of 1505 Jackson Drive in Phenix City, and two unnamed juveniles have been charged with murder by the Phenix City Police.

Woods and Miles are currently in jail but the two juveniles, ages 16 and 17, were released Monday as a result of Russell County not having an approved juvenile detention facility.



Castor, who was an infantryman serving as Company B's armorer, was accompanied by another soldier who the Phenix City Police department would like to locate and question.

"I would like to stress that the soldier who was with SP4 Castor is not and will not be charged with anything. We would just like for that soldier to come forward so we could question him," said Lee.

Lee said that his department had contacted the Fort Benning Military Police for assistance in locating Castor's companion and also the Fort Benning post locator's office.

The case, according to Lee, is still currently under investigation by the Phenix City Police Department.

Retired NCO wrecks jeep; receives multiple citations

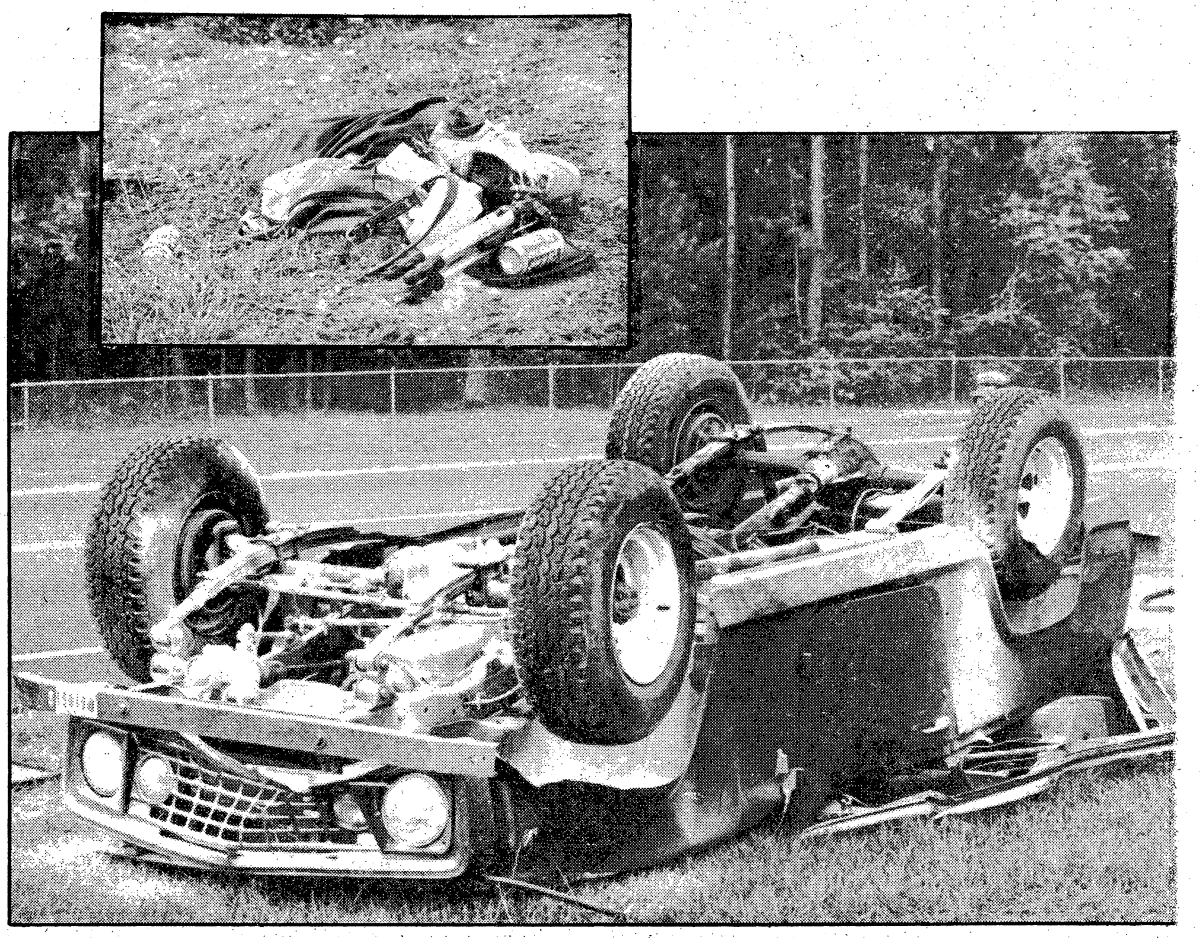
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two men were treated and released at Martin Army Community Hospital here after an early morning accident on Dixie Road last week.

According to Fort Benning Military Police, the driver, a retired master sergeant, was charged with excessive speed for road conditions, failure to drive on a roadway laned for traffic and driving without seat belts.



The driver was operating a 1973 AMC Commando when he swerved to avoid another vehicle that was stopped partially in the roadway. His vehicle spun around and flipped off the road. The two men were thrown clear and the vehicle landed upside down.

The driver of the other vehicle involved was charged with an improper stop.

Gene Morris, sales manager of a local car dealership, said the shorter wheel base on older model Jeeps such as the Commando, make them less stable. "That's pretty common knowledge and something that anyone selling that type vehicle would tell a prospective buyer," he said.

He said the new 1987 models have been redesigned just to address the stability problem. "The new ones have a longer and wider wheel base, as well as a roll bar all the way across the top of the vehicle," he said.

"Most people know that utility vehicles such as this do not handle as well as a car, but even a car or truck can be rolled if it is mishandled," Morris said.

Power cuts spell cooler summer

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning endured its first curtailment of electricity Tuesday, with hardly a whimper.

According to Glenn Todd in the Energy Office, notification was received yesterday morning that the hot temperatures expected statewide meant that a curtailment was likely.

"They finally called us at 2:30 p.m. and said we were being curtailed from 3 to 7 p.m.," Todd said. Energy personnel acted swiftly to activate the carefully planned turn-off of air conditioners in several areas on post, until the electricity demand had dropped to the requested levels.

The curtailment ended about 5:30 p.m. According to Todd, the Directorate of Engineering's Work Order Section received about 25 telephone calls asking about the turn off.

"Apparently, most people were notified through the post message system, so there were minimal reports of air conditioner malfunctions," Todd said.

D.L. Merrill, the district manager of Georgia Power Company in Columbus, where Fort Benning buys its electricity, said curtailment is good for his company and good for its customers.

"By agreeing to cut their demand when we request it, we can offer them lower rates on electricity," he said.

He said that his company has to be prepared to produce enough electricity to meet the highest demand, which means investing money in generating facilities.

197th 'takes to sea in ships;' San Diego final port-of-call

Tim Wallis

A LOGMARS sticker, like a grocery product label, gives all the necessary information about the vehicle to which it is attached.

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

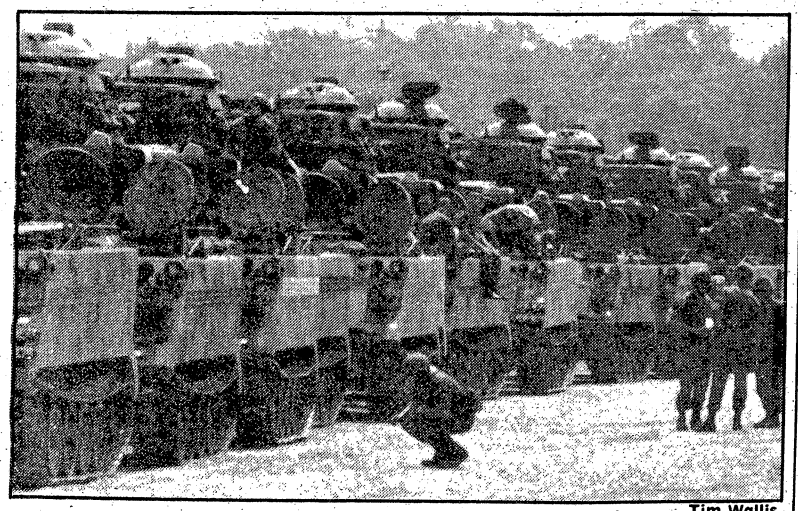
Soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade began a familiar exercise last week — shipping vehicles and equipment to the site of a major training exercise. The Brigade began its deployment to Joint Readiness Exercise Gallant Eagle '86, scheduled for July and August at training areas in California.

In all, the Brigade will send some 1,500 soldiers from 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry; A Troop, 15th Cavalry; Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; 72nd Engineer Company and the Brigade's Headquarters Company to the Marine Corps Air Ground Combat Center at Twenty-nine Palms, Calif.

To prepare for the deployment, Brigade soldiers began the painstaking process of moving vehicles from Fort Benning to a port in Savannah, Ga. for shipment by sea to San Diego, Calif.

Last week, nearly 170 track vehicles, such as M113 Armored Personnel Carriers and M60 tanks were loaded onto railcars at the Sand Hill railhead and transported to the port.

This week, convoys totaling more than 200 wheeled vehicles rolled across Georgia to Savannah to be readied for the sea voyage. Soldiers from the 24th Infantry Division from Fort Stewart, and several U.S. Army Reserve transportation units will complete the task of getting the Brigade's vehicles loaded onto the ships.



The Brigade's equipment will join that of many other Army units deploying to Gallant Eagle '86.

During this movement exercise, the Brigade is using a new method to document all the necessary data for each vehicle being shipped.

This system, Logistical Marking System, uses small labels, similar to grocery store product labels, to record such data as the type of vehicle, size and weight, so each vehicle can be properly loaded and accounted for as it is shipped.

"This is the first time the 197th has used these labels during a movement," said Capt. James Wynn, Brigade movement officer.

"This label has all the information they need to properly store each vehicle on the ship," Wynn said.

1st ITB officers learn lessons at Civil War battlefield

by Joe Roberts
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Just what type of pertinent training could one accomplish from an all-day, hands-on study of a seemingly minor battle that occured more than 120 years ago in the American Civil War?

The officers of the 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, commanded by Lt. Col. Gregory Wade, discovered the answer to this question as they conducted their quarterly Tactical Exercise Without Troops recently at Kennesaw Mountain National Battlefield 20 miles northwest of Atlanta.

Upon reaching the battlefield, the officers immediately began analyzing the battle of June 27, 1864 fought by troops of the Union, led by Gen. William Sherman, and those of the Confederacy, led by Gen. Joseph Johnston. At various strategic locations on the battlefield, which actually covered several small mountains encompassing hundreds of acres, classes were conducted by the officers to improve the group's understanding of the battle. Classes taught included: weapons used, the order of battle and biographies of generals Sherman and Johnston.

After a brief stop for a tactical bag lunch, and brownies provided by Chaplain (Capt.) Jeremy Duncan, the officers were on their way, "hoofing it" to the pinnacle of Kennesaw Mountain. Those who had earlier thought they would get out of daily physical training were in for a surprise, as the one-hour climb left the majority of the group breathless and with perspiration-soaked BDU's.

At the peak of the mountain Capt. Mike Dietrick, who organized the outing for the battalion's Officer Professioal Development, and Wade summarized the battle and lessons to be learned for soldiers today. The Battle of Kennesaw Mountain was one in which Sherman's forces suffered some of its greatest casualties in the Atlanta campaign. During a frontal assault on one Confederate stronghold, the Union forces suffered over 3,000 casualties compared to only 450 of Johnston's men, the battle lasting only 2½ hours. Sherman regrouped and returned to his familiar flanking manuevers, eventually bypassing Kennesaw and continued with his march to Atlanta and Savannah.

One of the recurring sites at 3rd Battalion TEWT's is the officer candidate applicants within the battalion. When asked how the OPD at Kennesaw Mountain could aid in his development as a future officer, Cpl. Brandon Thomas said, "It's important to realize that tactical errors were made on both sides and that the defenders had an obvious terrain advantage. However, just being able to listen to the officers discuss subjects concerning this battle as well as areas of concern within the battalion back on Sand Hill is a profitable learning experience."

Now, back to the question at hand: what type of pertinent training is accomplished through a Civil War battle study? Besides the obvious physical training received from a strenuous mountain climb, the officers learned a myriad of lessons from how to use terrain to one's advantage, different leadership styles or both sides which accounted for near superhuman feats of endurance, and the inability of the tacticians of the Civil War to keep pace with the technological advances in weaponry. All of the 3rd Battalion officers said the excursion outside the confines of Fort Benning was very informative, however tiring.

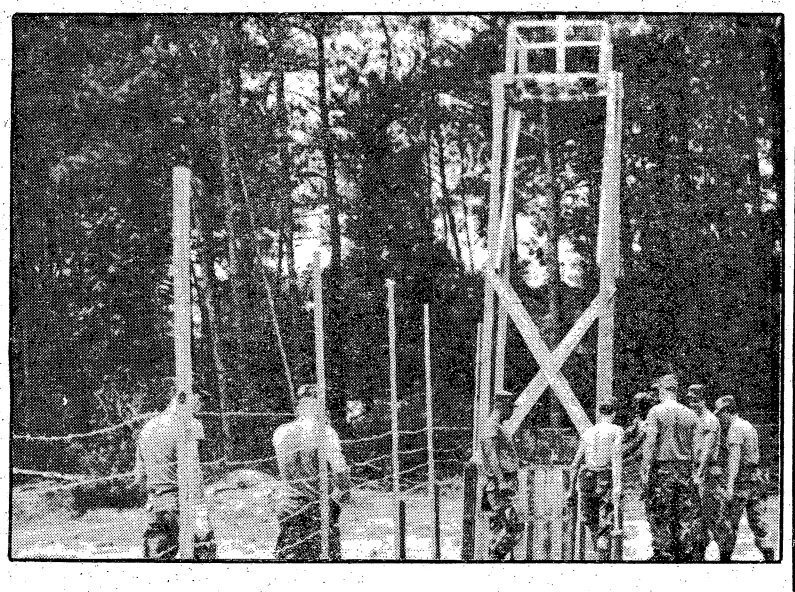
Airborne Corps CG drops in on 197th

by Bill Branley
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

The 197th Infantry Brigade hosted a distinguished visitor last week when the XVIII Airborne Corps commander met with officers from the Brigade.



Lt. Gen. James J. Lindsay, also a former Fort Benning commander, told company commanders from the 197th that the "Sledgehammer" Brigade is important to the XVIII Corps.

"You're an important part of our plans," Lindsay said. "We need your anti-armor capabilities especially."

Lindsay had lunch with the group at the Sand Hill Noncommissioned Officers' Club, where the company commanders were meeting for a two-day seminar to discuss staff issues.

Earlier in the day, Lindsay was briefed on training programs in the Brigade and got a look at the Brigade's newest project: the platypus, a specially-designed communications center that can be used for various operations.

The nickname, "Sledgehammer," that Lindsay used to describe the 197th is an informal nickname recently adopted by the Brigade.

586th Engineer soldiers put the finishing touches on the observation tower they built for the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry to assault.

586th Engineer Company

Recently members of the Ranger Support Element Engineer Section from the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) provided construction support to the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry for maneuvers conducted on Fort Benning.

The section's mission was to build a mock-up target of an opposing forces headquarters for assault by a Ranger element. The target consisted of an eight-foot high multiple strand barbed-wire perimeter fence, observation towers, target cloth buildings, conexes and simulated air defense artillery weapons.

By the end of the first day the buildings, all the conexes and the towers were in place.

The following day saw the completion of the site with the final building, the ADA weapon and the fence in place.

The objective of the RSE engineer section is to provide the Rangers with the most realistic rehearsal-site possible. In appreciation for the Engineers' efforts, the Rangers said the mock-up was their "best target yet."

Vietnamese refugees share hopes, fears

by Robert Schmidt
2nd Infantry Training Brigade

It was a dark night on the beaches of Vietnam. A boy of 16 and his best friend are hiding in the brush. They are crouched low trying not to be detected. The week before he was just another Vietnamese high school student, coping with life under the communist regime. Tonight he is making his flight for freedom. His family has no idea of his escape because he feared they would not let him go. Suddenly there is the sound of gunfire. People are screaming and running in fright. The security patrol has discovered the escape. It is now or never for the boy and his friend to make a dash for the fishing boat. They dart out of the brush and make it to the boat, lying face down on the deck.

A few men on the boat have weapons and hold off the security patrol as the boat steams away to Hong Kong. The owner of the boat has taken the money of 200 people with dreams of freedom. Only 19 people are on the boat. It is forced labor camps and probable death for the ones who did not make it.

The boy who escaped from Vietnam is Pvt.1 Hong Nguyen, who is attending one station unit training with Company B, 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. He is currently one of three native-born Vietnamese who are here with the Eagle Brigade.

PFC Tuan That Ton of Company A, 9th Battalion has recently returned from leave. Soldiers in OSUT rarely receive leave except for emergencies. 1st Sgt. Juan Garcia allowed him to return home to receive his certificate of naturalization.

Becoming a citizen of the United States has been a long road for Ton. The journey starts in Nha-Trang, Vietnam in 1975, the year the country fell to the communists. Ton's father, Thong Ton, was a major in the South Vietnamese army.

On April 30, 1975 Maj. Ton was thrown in jail by the communists. PFC Ton was in eighth grade at the time. Because of his father's affiliations with South Vietnam, Ton and his brothers were thrown out of school.

While his father was in jail, the family had no home and no income. Ton and his older brother had to take to the jungles to gather fruits and grow vegetables. His mother sold the goods in the city to raise money and keep the family going.

During this time Ton and his older brother smuggled supplies, planning for the family's escape someday. Ton remembered, "I was 14, carrying a rucksack, hiding from the communists. We would smuggle items out of the city and bury them out at our farm preparing for our escape."

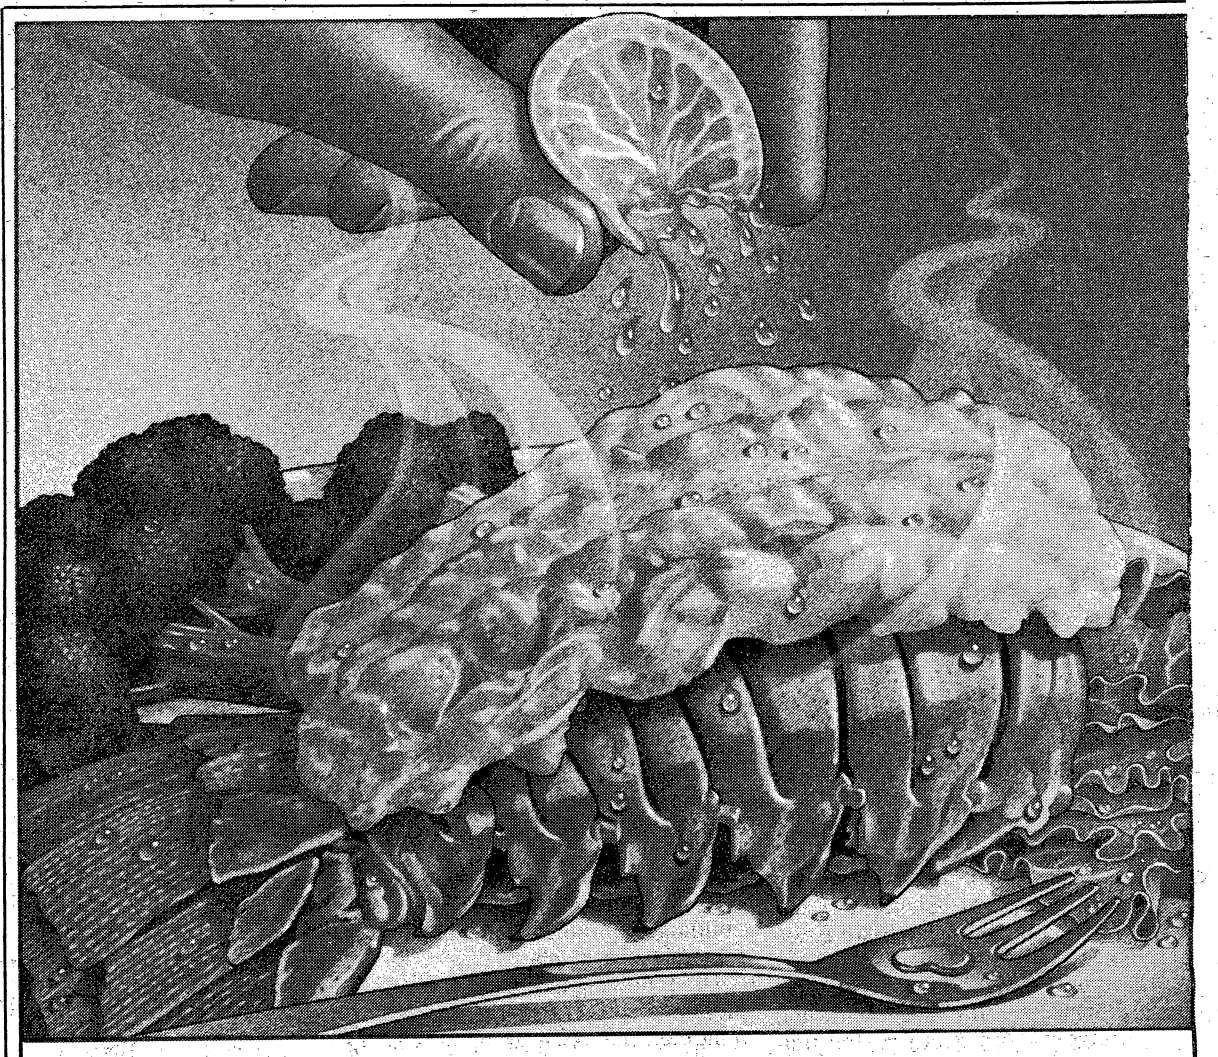
After 361 days of confinement, Maj. Ton was released from jail. He immediately went to work with his sons, keeping the family together and waiting for the opportunity to leave the country.

In April 1977 the Ton family decided the time was right for their escape. Ton said: "We got on a fishing boat with a total of 44 people crammed together. You had to sit with your knees up in your chest and there was no room to move around. The voyage lasted six days and seven nights. Most of the time I wondered if we would ever see land again. We finally made it to the Philippine Islands. That is the longest route and the last patroll ed."

The Ton family spent three months in a refugee center in the Philippines until the Lutheran Church sponsored their move to the United States. On August 3, 1977 Ton and his family arrived in Mesa, Texas, their new home.

Since coming to this country Ton has earned a bachelor of science degree in physics from Southeastern Oklahoma State University. In school he met Thu-Ha, a daughter of a former colonel with the South Vietnamese air force, and on Oct. 5, 1985 they were married. Coming from a family such as Ton's, it was only natural that he join the Army.

"I always wanted to be a soldier. During the war I used to travel with my father. My toys as a child were his weapons," Ton said.



After completion of training Ton is headed to Germany as a Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle driver to do his duty for the country that he is now a part of.

Pvt.1 Quin Huynh, who is currently training with Company A, 4th Battalion, 2nd Brigade for the California National Guard is formerly of Saigon. Huynh came to the United States through a United Nations program that brought him and his sister from a refugee camp in Indonesia to San Jose, California.

"I was tired of living in a society where I felt as if I were in jail. Block managers used to count us to ensure we were a[ll] still in the country," Huyn[h] said.

Upon graduating from OSU[T] Huynh and Nguyen will be re[-] turning to college to finish thei[r] educations. Huynh attends D[e] Anza Junior College in San Jos[e] and Nguyen is a mechanical engi[-] neering major at Washingto[n] State University in Pullma[n] Washington. Both soldiers plan t[o]

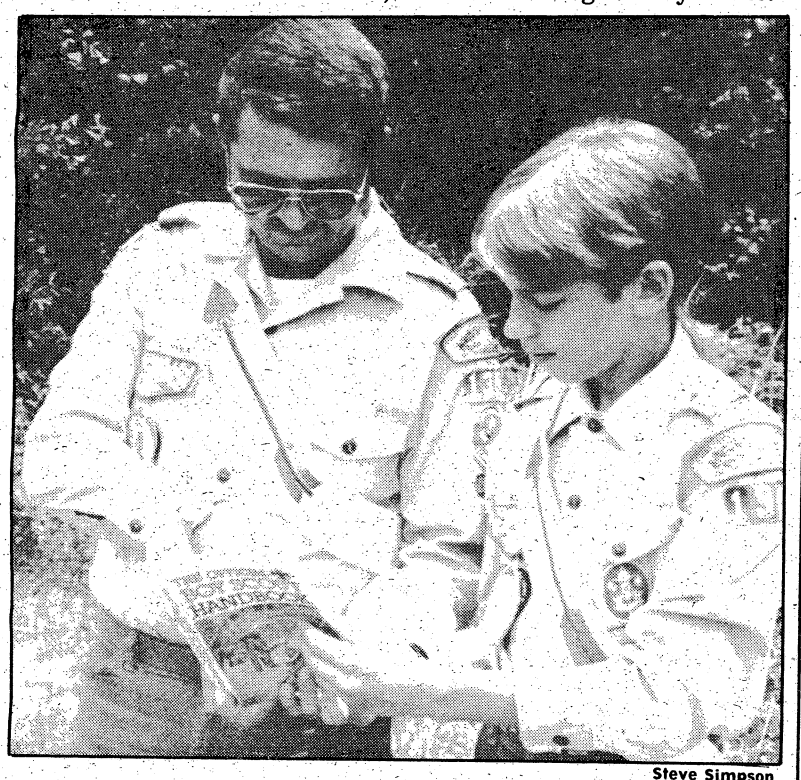
Father, son Boy Scout team inducted into Order of Arrow

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Two members of Boy Scout Troop 135 were recently inducted into the Order of the Arrow, one of the highest honors a Scout can receive. The Scouts are father and son who share their time in Scouting activities.

SSgt. Mike Spakowski is by day a squad leader in the 72nd Engineer Company, 197th Infantry Brigade. By night he is an assistant Scout leader in the Troop, where his son Michael is a Scout First Class.

The Order of the Arrow is a national brotherhood of Scout campers and an exclusive honor within the Scouts. A Scout who has proved himself worthy of receiving this honor is nominated by members of his troop who are not in the Order. He must be an outstanding Scout.

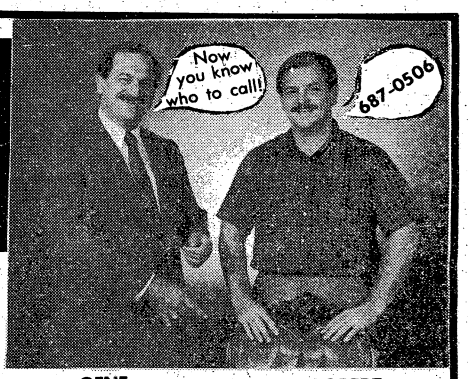


"I got involved in Scouting in Germany," the staff sergeant said. "It can be hard to juggle my Army schedule with the Scouts, but any spare time I get, I spend it with the Boy Scouts, especially on weekends."

The Troop gets together once a week and goes camping at one of several local Boy Scout Camps one weekend each month. During a week-long summer camp, the Scouts can earn merit badges in swimming, archery, camping and many more activities.

"Scouting is fun," Michael said. "You learn responsibility by doing things on your own.

Michael is now working on a project to help him advance in rank until he reaches his goal of Eagle Scout. He is writing a safety checklist for his house and the family car, and he is drawing a diagram of the house for fire escape routes.



"The Scout Leaders help with the projects but the boys really do all their own work," Michael's dad said. "I really get a lot out of helping these boys learn how to do things. Scouting can show them a good way of life."

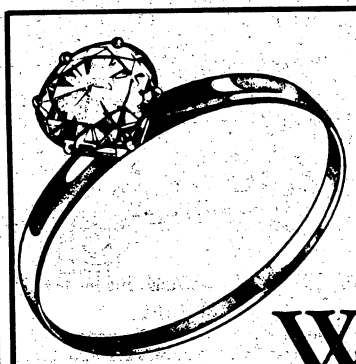
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Signs of summer are everywhere in the 197th Infantry Brigade as units celebrate Organization Days. The 197th Support Battalion and 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery recently began the summer season with their celebrations. During each unit's festivities, soldiers and family members got together for games, contests and an abundance of picnic goodies.

The artillery battalion highlighted its organization day activities with a soldier skills competition among the batteries.

Battery B took top honors, Headquarters and Charlie Batteries tied for second place and Service and Alpha Batteries tied for third.



Then, the 197th Support Battalion took a break in its missions to get together with families for a day of fun. Support battalion soldiers competed in such events as horseshoes, volleyball and softball, while family members cheered on their teams and enjoyed the games and refreshments.

This time, Headquarters Company took top honors overall in the sports events. The Delta Dogs took second and the Alpha Gators came in third. Headquarters Company was also awarded a trophy for the highest participation of soldiers and family members.

Infantry soldiers exceed 1st Brigade standards

by Thomas Bittner
1st Infantry Training Brigade

The pacesetting soldiers of Company C, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade were graduated from One Station Unit Training (Infantry) recently.

Throughout the course of the 13-week OSUT cycle, the soldiers exceeded 1st Brigade standards for all testable subject areas.

"This is a 'text book' company," said 2nd Lt. Craig L. Young, the company executive officer. "There are eight soldiers from this company who'll make first sergeant if they stay in the Army."

The statistics compiled by the company's soldiers seem to verify Young's assessment.

For example, the Cobra Company earned two streamers (signifying 100 percent pass rate - go) during the cycle.

The first streamer was awarded in recognition of the soldiers achieving 100 percent on their Mid-Cycle Infantry Skills Test. The MCT, which takes place in the sixth week of the OSUT cycle, measures the soldiers proficiency in infantry skill tasks.

The Cobra's second streamer was the result of grueling physical training conducted at the 7th Battalion athletic field and on the winding, steep roads of Sand Hill. "We (the cadre) 'PTed' the heck out of these soldiers all cycle long," Young said.

The Company average of 275.32 (out of a possible 300) is more than 11 points higher than the current Brigade average.

First Platoon of the Cobra Company achieved a near-perfect average of 289.83 on the three event (push-ups, sit-ups, two-mile run) Physical Readiness Test. In fact, Young observed, "the company scores in all areas — hand grenades, basic rifle marksmanship, TOW, you name it — beat the Brigade averages."

"The cadre pushed us," said honor graduate Pvt.1 Theron J. Grenger, "but the harder they pushed us, the harder we worked." Grenger said that the mentorship provided to the soldiers by their drill sergeants played a key role in the company's success.

"If I ever needed help with anything, they (the drill sergeants) helped me," said Grenger. "The cadre here are great."

SSgt. Jack Granderson, who was assigned to Co. C in the 11th week of the cycle, praised the high esprit of the company. "I'm glad I came here," said Granderson. "I received a warm welcome from the rest of the cadre and everything came at a smooth flow. There's real good motivation here."

"These are super motivated troops," said Young. "They studied hard and always drove on."

Grenger said that the training he had undergone "was great." "It gave me confidence and made me more outgoing," said Grenger. "Now I know that whatever I put my mind to, I can do!"

Infantry OSUT soldier shoots through week 3

Editor's note: This is the third in a series of 13 articles that will allow the readers to follow one soldier through his entire One Station Unit Training at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill.

by Michael Ricca
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Finally, after two weeks of firing our M16A1 rifles on seemingly every range in the Western hemisphere, basic rifle marksmanship is over. While it was not extremely difficult, it was also not the easiest task in the world. extremely difficult, it was also not the easiest task in the world.

Last Wednesday we were put on the firing line for qualification — the application of two weeks of training into less than five minutes of actual firing. During qualification, we fired at a total of 40 pop-up targets — 20 from the foxhole supported position and 20 from the prone unsupported position. To qualify with a "go", firers must hit at least 23 gargets. By hitting between 23 and 29 targets, firers earn the Marksman Badge. Thirty to 35 hits merits the Sharpshooter Badge, and 36 or more wins the cherished Expert Badge.

Hoping I would end the day as an expert, I was slightly disappointed when my score came up 35. Only one short of my goal!

Finishing in the top five throughout the company was some consolation, but I'll never forget missing the very first target to pop up, a 50-meter "gimme" that I completely missed.

Later that night we were once again put on the firing line, this time to familiarize ourselves with night-firing methods. We not only used regular ball ammunition, but also tracer rounds. Seeing these tracers flying through the black sky reminded me of the fireworks on the Fourth of July.

The next morning, after PT and chow, we attended several classes on land navigation. These classes included how to plot coordinates and read maps, distinguish terrain features and plot an azimuth using the lensatic compass. Using the compass brought back memories of my earlier days of collecting merit badges in the Boy Scouts.

Saturday was a big day for our company. Our first long road march with full packs began at 4 a.m. After tearing down and packing up our bivouac sites, we started the six miles back to the barracks. Leaving the site at 5 a.m., it took us about 1½ hours to complete the journey.

I felt a lot of pride when we finished the march with everyone who started. Absolutely no one fell out of first platoon. Even the few soldiers who were not in top notch shape showed enough heart and intestinal fortitude to ignore the pain and complete the march. When we reached the company area and dropped our gear, everybody was so pumped and morale was so high that the air tingled with the feeling of accomplishment.

Looking at the soldiers I march with, I see a big change in their maturity, sense of responsibility, and self-discipline brought on by the training we receive from our drill sergeants. We all have a lot of work yet to do, but there is no obvious change for the better in most of us. Throughout this changing period, I found that by keeping us busy, the days have flown by at lightning speed. It's hard to believe we are almost at the halfway point of our training.

Noticing this makes everyday a little better and the training we receive more and more interesting. I realize that all of this learning and exertion would be for naught if not for the guiding force in my life. I thank God every day for giving me the opportunity to better myself as a soldier.

Huynh and Nguyen have not told their families back in Vietnam that they have joined the Army. Hguyen said, "The communist read all the mail we send to our families. If they knew we joined the United States Army they would probably arrest our families."

The spirit of these American soldiers was summed up by Huynh who said, "The Army gives us hope that some day we may get a chance and go back to Vietnam and bring the freedoms we now enjoy to our people."

Salvadoran chief of staff guest speaker for cadets

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas PAO

The chairman of the joint chiefs of staff of the Salvadoran armed forces, Gen. Adolfo O. Blandon, spoke to 66 graduating cadets from the El Salvador Cadet course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas June 20.

During Blandon's three-day visit to Fort Benning and USARSA, he was briefed on missions of the Infantry Center, the 10th Mountain Division's 2nd Brigade, the 75th Infantry (Ranger) Regiment and USARSA.

The general also entertained questions from local media representatives during a press conference at the Marshall House on post.

Addressing the cadets at the main post theater, Blandon said, "With our firm arm, we will always be free. I recommend to you earnestly the concepts of discipline and good order. Each of you is expected to be a good son, a meritorious citizen, a stoic soldier and an exemplary Christian. Demands will be imposed on you constantly. You will abandon the warmth of your hearth, suffer the storm and be subjected to all sorts of privation. But let us keep in mind that the trees most punished by strong winds develop the best roots."

The 22-week course offers training in squad, platoon and company-level combined arms tactics to include offensive and defensive tactical operations, air-mobile operations, field artillery employment, small unit patrolling, plus various leadership classes and small arms training.

The cadets are in their first year of studies at the "Capitan General Gerardo Barrios" Military Academy in San Salvador, which means three more years before they receive their commissions as second lieutenants.

Referring to the state of affairs in El Salvador, Blandon quoted former U.S. President John F. Kennedy. "This is another type of war, new in intensity, old in its origins. A war of guerrillas, subversion, rebellions and assassinations. A war of ambushes in place of open combat; of infiltration techniques in places of aggression. It is a struggle that spills over from economic instability and ethnic conflicts."

Blandon added, "But we haven't been just abandoned to our own fate, this legendary post, (Fort Benning), which has forged generations of fighting men, among whom one can count figures such as the illustrious Gen. Patton, is an example of such men. Here, where innovative tactics have been developed to confront this type of war, the doors have been opened to us, and we leave here as very different men from those who came."

SHIP store heaven for 'fixer-uppers'

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Clogged toilet got you all washed up? All hung up on a broken clothesline? Maybe you think your World War II era barracks building needs a face-lift?

Well don't despair. There is always someone to help with your maintenance problem if you're motivated enough to tackle the job yourself.

The folks at the Self Help Issue Point on Edwards Steet have just about everything for the domestic fixer-upper in family housing and unit projects.

"The program is designed to support housing occupants in minor housing repairs," said Dominick DeCarlo, chief of Facilities Training Branch, Housing Division, Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

The self help program is available for family housing occupants and projects initiated by troop units.

When maintenance is required, individuals must first go to SHIP and present the proposal. The personnel at SHIP will then determine if the people doing the job have completed the necessary two- or three-hour building occupant Self Help Class.

If the person has met that criteria, the next step is to order the materials that are not readily available at the shop or to issue the items that are available.

But the SHIP's responsibilities do not stop there. Sometimes locating needed materials means a trip into Columbus. In addition, the personnel will inspect the project as it progresses, as well as the final project, to see that the proper training or the skills are available to complete the project.

"Each directorate identifies a Self Help officer to issue materials and delegate authority. They also identify the skills within the command," DeCarlo said.

"We do train the individual on how to do the Self Help repairs," De Carlo added.

Training the individuals is done in weekly classes at the Facilities Training School.

The SHIP requires that anyone using the program attend the classes that provide hands on training for three hours (for the troop training class) or for two hours for family housing occupants.

The three-hour class includes such topics as: materials available and methods of obtaining them, availability of technical assistance, methods of accomplishing tasks, organizing and maintaining logs on formal written and telephone work requests and accountability of materials used for self help projects.

"All the classes are by appointment," said Robert L. Kelley, civil engineer technician at the SHIP.

This program has saved the government money since the program first began in 1982.

"Last year the Training and Doctrine Command said the self help program saved them more than $30 million last year. Based on that, about 10 percent came from Fort Benning.

In determining the savings through the program, the SHIP uses the 10-to-1 ratio. "For example on a $200,000 job, it would cost $10 in labor for each of those dollars," DeCarlo said.

The program works because the people of Fort Benning aren't afraid to. So don't let those domestic projects get you down, take your problem to the SHIP.

Junior ROTC cadets invade Fort Benning

Nobody sat around toasting marshmallows at a recent summer camp here. No one even stepped into a canoe. But the teenagers from the Junior Officer Training Corps got pretty wet.

If it wasn't the sweat from Ranger training that got them wet, it was from the obstacles at the Leadership Reaction Course.

Earlier this month, cadets from eight Columbus area high schools invaded Fort Benning for one week of diverse training.

"Those 125 cadets were selected out of 1,000 individuals. They were selected based on their performance, attitude and potential for leadership," said Col. Floyd G. Stephenson, director of the JROTC program for the Muscogee County School District.

According to Stephenson, "The mission of the camp is to support the goals and objectives of the new statewide Quality Basic Education Program by providing each cadet an opportunity to develop self discipline and gain a knowledge of his own capabilities to overcome difficult situations."

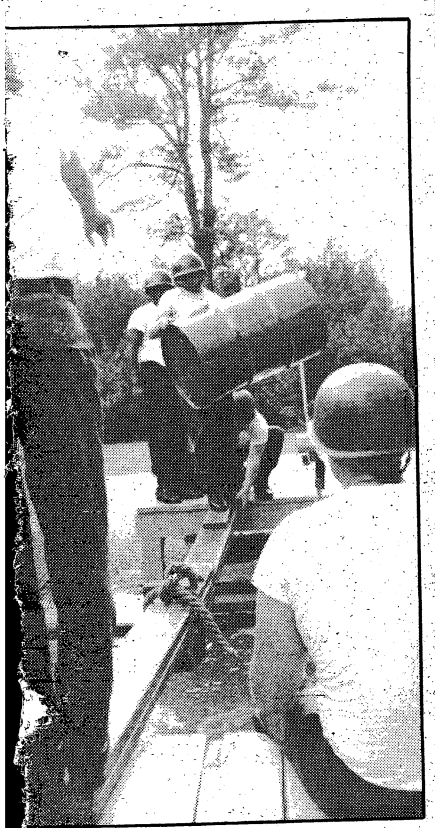
In addition, each cadet was given the opportunity to be challenged with physical and mental tasks, practical experience in working with others and gaining leadership skills. According to Stephenson, the cadets had their knowledge reinforced and enhanced the ability to perform basic military skills.

No where were these goals more tested than in the one afternoon the cadets spent at the Leadership Reaction Course.

The students spent the afternoon under overcast, sometimes rainy skies to tackle the course.

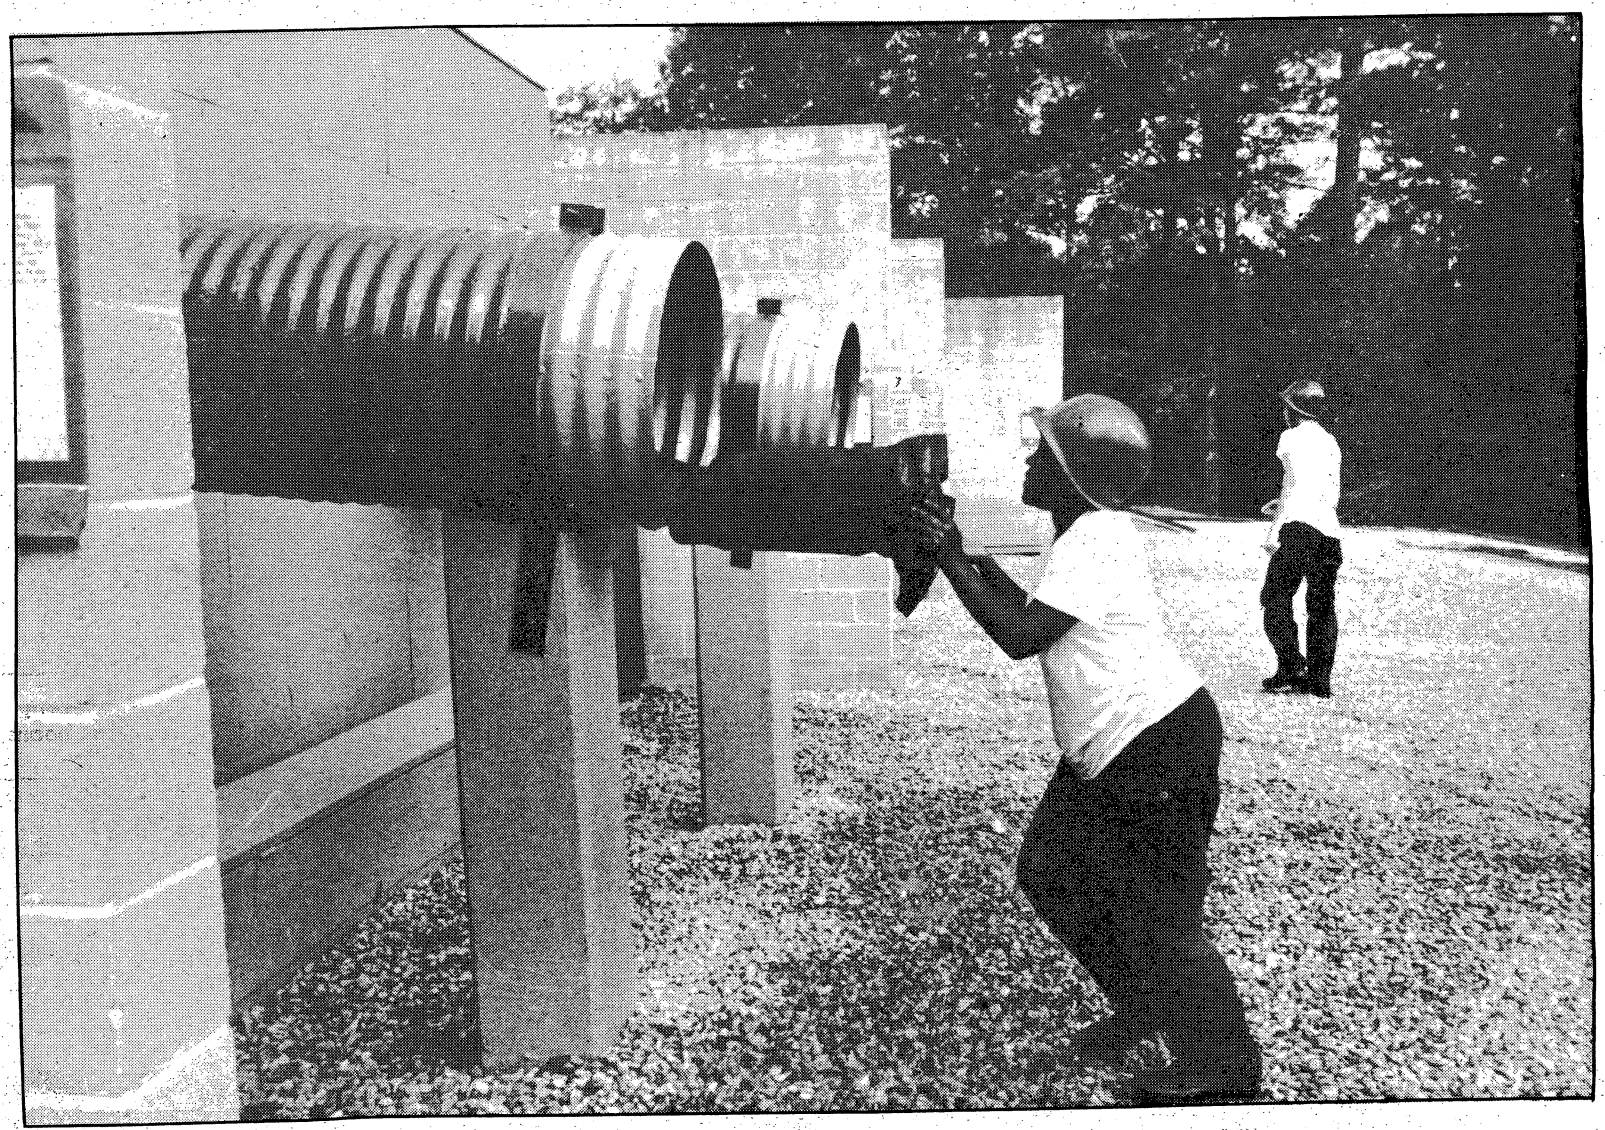
The course, which recently underwent some construction, was in full swing with the pools completely filled with water and — occasionally — cadets.

The cadets were separated into eight-person teams and ran against the clock to overcome the obstacles.



Teamwork was the name of the game. When they couldn't help physically they motivated each other verbally.

"It tests everything we learned in ROTC so far. Personally it gave me a sense of leadership and self confidence," said Helen Robertson,18, a cadet from Carver High School.



The cadets also observed airborne demonstrations, and had the chance to jump from the 34 foot towers, go on Ranger patrol exercises, practice rappelling techniques and fire the M16, M60 and the M203.

Community ties prevent crimes

Provost Marshal's Office

A community is a group of people living in close association, in the same locality, and sharing similar interests and backgrounds. One of the common ties within a community is the desire to have a safe and secure place to live. For the most part, the community tends to leave this job to law enforcement agencies.

The major task of protecting all life and property throughout the entire community has been designated as a function of the police. However, all too often the police learn of and respond to crimes only after their commission. Following the initial response, the police get busy seeking to recover stolen property, conducting investigations, writing reports and sometimes going to court. You may say that this is the policeman's job — not so! The primary job of the police is to protect life and property. This cannot be accomplished while working on crimes that have already happened.

What can be done to turn this situation around? This is where community action comes in. We, the residents of the Fort Benning community, can take steps to prevent crime in our homes and neighborhood. The most important step in fulfilling the goal of protecting life and property is for all members of the community to get involed in reporting suspicious activity and strangers in their area. When this is done, military police are able to react quickly and stop crimes before they occur or while still in progress.

More information and assistance can be obtained by calling the Physical Security/Crime Prevention section of the Provost Marshal's Office at 545-7115/7154.

electricity demand peaks, as people turn on their air conditioners to combat the heat. "It's better for us if people agree to cut back on their demand for a few days out of the summer, which means we don't have to invest in more facilities to meet the high demand of a few days a year," he said.

Before Fort Benning changed to the curtailment system, air conditioners were turned off in some areas for 30 minutes every hour on extremely hot days. With the new system, residents will have to endure only a few days curtailment in the summer. "It's really a much better system because people can have their air conditioning all the time except for the few curtailment days," Todd said.

Under the new plan, Fort Benning pays 2.8 cents per kilowatt hour instead of the former 4.5 cents per kwh. "This means we get more mileage out of our electricity dollars," Todd said.

West Point cadets get taste of real Army

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Six cadets from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. are getting their feet wet here this summer.

The future officers, all between their sophomore and junior years at the Academy, are spending five weeks on post as platoon leaders in the Cadet Troop Leadership Program.

Cadet Gary Duncan said it is a big transition going from the classroom to the field environment.

"We've studied platoon-level tactics in military science classes, but it's a lot different actually working as a platoon leader," he said. "CTLT gives us an opportunity to actually get hands-on training with troops."

Duncan and Cadet Gary Branch are assigned to Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade. Their classmate, Cadet Tom Mathers is assigned to Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

Mathers has been working with a vertical construction platoon. He said he learned quickly to rely on his platoon sergeant. "He's a good source of information and knows how to get things done," Mathers said.

When Duncan and Branch arrived May 30, their unit was in the field, so the pair headed to the woods. For four days, they watched the platoon leaders and learned about the M60A3 tanks. "A lot of time was spent on vehicle maintenance, since the unit is getting ready to deploy for Gallant Eagle," Branch said.

Duncan said he found his role as platoon leader was mostly logistical. "I made sure supplies were available to get the maintenance job done, more of a manager's job," he said.

All agree the challenge lies in learning how to solve problems that aren't in textbooks. "For example, communications becomes a problem in the field, which makes it a challenge to know where all the troops are. "In a classroom we have a big board with everything on it; it's not like the intangibles in the field," Duncan said.

Branch said he learned to rely on the chain of command and his platoon sergeant. "At first it was hard, but once I got to know the people it became easier," he said.

Making sure the troops understand what the objective is and what they're supposed to do before leaving for the field is crucial to success, according to Duncan. "Most of the guys are our age or older and the hardest thing for me was making the decision and then giving them orders."

Getting people to follow your leadership is the key, Branch said. "It's not as hard in the field because you're the man with the game plan, but back in garrison, you have to rely on your NCOs and enlisted men and let them do their jobs."

CTLT gives the cadets a chance to develop their own personal leadership style. This is something Branch said he's worked on. "I try to talk to people on their own level and get their respect that way," he said. "I don't yell and scream, just explain why I need them to do something so they'll understand. That seems to work well for me."

Duncan said it's sometimes hard to carry out orders that come from higher in the chain of command. "I have to figure out a reason for doing something a certain way so I can explain it to my troops."

He said he's learned to trust his NCOs. "If an NCO questions something, nine times out of 10 he has a good reason and he might keep me from making a bad mistake."

Mathers said he's learned to trust his men. "They are very intelligent and knowledgeable about their work, and more than anything, they want to be trusted to do their jobs."

All three cadets said the CTLT experience is invaluable to them in developing their leadership capabilities. "It's definitely made me feel more comfortable about working with troops," Duncan said.

VA Q&A

Editor's Note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q:- The dividend on my G.I. Life Insurance was not the same this year as last. Why is that?

A: - The amount of life insurance dividends is determined by the annual return on invested insurance funds, less the insurance policies paid out.

Q: - What is meant by the transfer or sale of property subject to an existing VA mortgage?

A: - The sale or transfer of property subject to an existing VA mortgage generally means that the purchaser does not become personally liable for repayment of the mortgage debt.

AER fund drive net nearly $100,000

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If the most recent count is any indication, it is apparent that generosity goes deeper than the lint in the bottom of Fort Benning's pockets.

The 1986 fund drive for Army Emergency Relief has resulted in the collection of more than $99,257 since the drive began March 31.

"We extended the campaign through the end of May, so many people are just turning in the monies now," said MSgt. Anthony Tonogan, assistant AER officer.

The drive was designed to raise funds for AER and every unit on post was asked to contribute.

"We designated people from every major unit and subordinate units who then assigned project officers to approach their people," Tonogan said.

Personnel were asked to c tribute on a one-time basis through allotments.

According to U.S. Army Tra ing and Doctrine Command co mander, Gen. William R. Ric ardson, "In 1985, Fort Benn collected $118,000 in contrib tions during it's AER campai and provided grants and loan the amount of $255,192. viously, AER funds go a long towards supporting our sold and their family members."

The campaign touched vi tually every unit on post in an effort to surpass last year's contributions.

For anyone who thinks they may need help from the AER, a visit to the Army Community Service, Building 2634 is the first step. ACS screens and forwards applications.

Shoplifting not worth it

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

You enter the store trying to act as nonchalant as possible, your hands are cold and sweaty, your eyes dart from side to side. Finally, you make your way to the aisle, pick up a piece of merchandise, look around and decide the coast is clear. You walk to another aisle looking in every possible direction to see if anyone notices you. Then, you head for the door. No one is behind you as you walk faster. You pass the ID stand and smile at the ID checker. You are now in the mall and almost to the exit. You give a sigh of relief, open the door and step outside looking for your car.

Suddenly, a voice behind you says, "Excuse me." You turn and see a man with an ID looking at you. You say, "who me?" the man asks to see your ID card. Your stomach does flip flops and you find it hard to breathe. He tells you that he believes you have some merchandise you didn't pay for and asks you to accompany him to the manager's office.

You follow him on the longest walk of your life, it seems everyone is staring at you. In the manager's office you are seated while the detective calls the military police.

You bow your head and want to cry. You hope the police will never arrive. Your mind races — "if only I hadn't done it!" — as you wait.

Does shoplifting really pay?

Togetherness leads couple to Jump School

Story and photos
by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

When Michael and Vickie Means pinned on their Airborne wings recently, it marked the achievement of a special goal for both.

The Reserve Officers Training Corps cadets are special people in their own right. They served a combined total of more than 11 years as enlisted soldiers before going on to win ROTC scholarships in an effort to move up to the officer corps.

Vickie said they decided to compete for the limited slots to Airborne School "for the thrill of it. We had done some skydiving before as a civilian sport and enjoyed it, so we wanted to get the military training in jumping," she said.

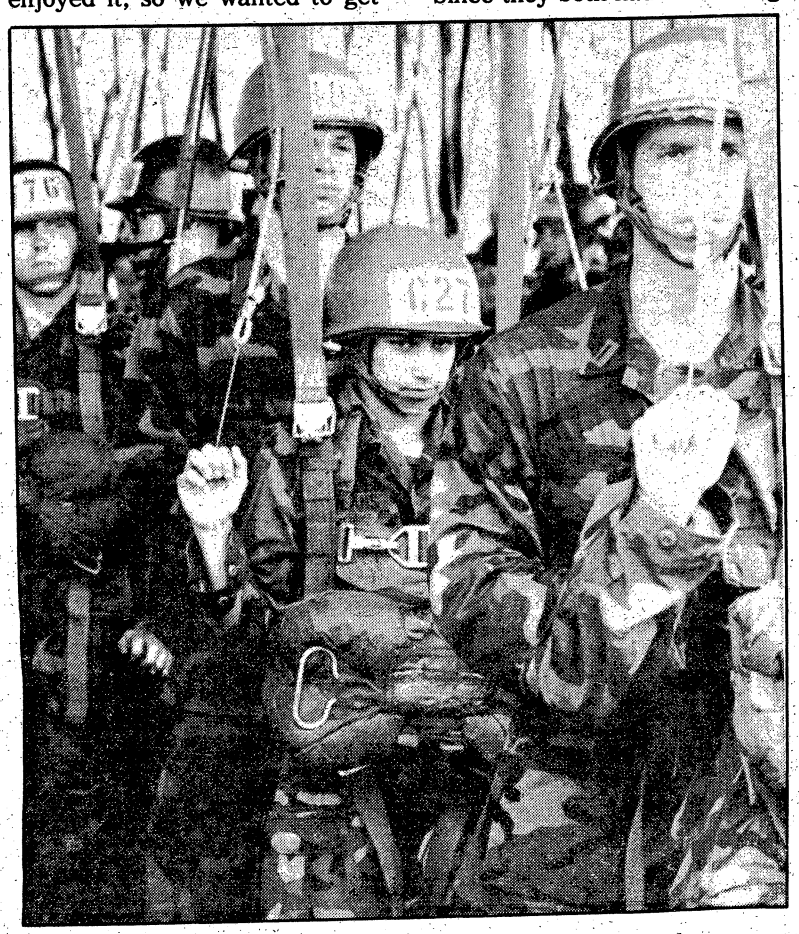
They're both dean's list students at Western Kentucky University. Michael is a nursing student, while his wife, Vickie's major is health care administration.

She said the jump school here is totally different from the civilian skydiving instruction they took. "In the civilian world it's a one-day thing, and then I really wasn't prepared mentally or physically for that first jump," she said.

"At least here I felt confident in my parachute landing fall and knew what I was doing, so I was just a little bit scared," she said.

Since they both had been doing extra physical training to prepare for the school, neither had a problem with that part of their training. "The instructors try to make it hard emotionally, to prepare you for the stress of jumping and weed out those who aren't strong enough," Michael said.

"You have got to do what the instructors tell you, practicing skills until they become automatic, because when you're jumping you have to react quickly," he said.



Michael said he learned first hand what good training he'd had, when his lines got tangled on his third jump. "I knew what to do and reacted quickly to get the lines straightened out, and I know I owe this skill to my instructors," he said.

Both praised the caliber of instructors at the school. "They 'dog' you physically, and try to push you to the limit, but when it comes time when you're afraid or have a question, they are always willing to help you," Vickie said.

Means said the hardest thing for him was going from being a noncommissioned officer to a cadet. "Cadets are really low on the pecking order, and many students in Airborne School see us as lower than dirt," he said. "I guess it's because cadets traditionally have no military experience other than ROTC training at their colleges, so people think you aren't really soldiers yet."

Michael said he and his wife take many of the same courses in college and compete, in a good natured way, to see who can get the best grades. "She is the number one cadet at our school and always beats me academically," he said proudly.

That's why it was a special thrill for Michael to be named honor graduate of Airborne Class 31-86. "It means a lot to me, especially with Vickie in the class, because she's good at anything she does," he said.

Cadet Vickie Means learns how to control the parachute's canopy on the suspended harness trainer.

Cadet Michael Means practices a parachute landing fall on the swing landing trainer.

Officers cautioned not to sign blank OER forms

Military Personnel Center

Many officers are signing the equivalents of "blank checks" on their Officer Evaluation Reports, according to Maj. Gary W. Stinnett of the Military Personnel Center's Evaluation Appeals and Corrections Branch.

"Army Regulation 623-105 charges rated officers with verification of the accuracy of parts of their OERs," Stinnett said. The affected areas are administrative data, Part I; designated rating officials, Part II; and the Army Physical Fitness Test and height and weight entries in Part IV.

"An officer's signature in Part IId indicates that the officer reviewed the information," Stinnett explained, "so signing blank copies of DA Form 67-8 is like signing blank checks. MILPERCEN receives many requests for correction of administrative data even though the officers signed their OERs in Part IId."

In such situations the rated officer must prove that the error should be corrected. Such administrative appeals require extra effort to establish how or why the officer signed the OER in Part IId, but was unaware of the error.

"Since OERs often need to be retyped, there is nothing wrong with rated officers signing a few extra DA Forms 67-8," Stinnett said. "However, all the administrative data in parts I and II, and items 3 and 12 in Part IVa, must be entered on the forms and verified by the rated officer."

New Redford movie a winner; offers simple entertainment

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you don't pay close attention, you're probably going to miss some of the humor in Robert Redford's newest movie, "Legal Eagles."

The dialogue is packed with sophisticated punchlines but the fast pace keeps the viewer's attention.

It's one of those movies you probably need to see three or four times to get all the jokes.

Billed as an adult romantic comedy, the movie pairs Robert Redford and Debra Winger as two attorneys working to defend Daryl Hannah, who's charged with murder.

Redford turns in the most endearing performance of his career, playing a sharp courtroom lawyer who's a klutz as a person. He's the type who spends his days successfully prosecuting ax murderers, then has to break into his car to get his keys out of the ignition so he can drive home.

His cure for insomnia is tap dancing in the bathroom, and a pleasant breakfast with his daughter turns into a one alarm fire when he forgets the toast in the oven.

Sparks fly whenever Redford and Winger are on screen together, which is one reason this film works so well. You keep hoping the two will get together, and the ending is just suggestive enough to make you think maybe they did.

For some unclear reason, the movie is rated Parental Guidance suggested. There's no nudity, little violence and the language is suprisingly clean for a movie made in the '80s.

Hannah turns in an admirable performance in her small role. Last seen as a mermaid in "Splash," where she did nothing but look lovely, it's a pleasant surprise that she can handle a bit of acting. She's believable here, as the avante-garde offspring of a famous artist.

Winger, a true credit to women everywhere, proves that you can be intelligent as well as beautiful, and still get the Robert Redfords of the world. She projects a warmth on screen that makes you want to give her a hug.

It's nice to see a movie where the hero chooses the older, more sophisticated, intellectual woman instead of going for the pectorals of a stunning model.

I don't think this film was made to explore moral dilemmas or offer solutions to world problems. It succeeds at being good, solid entertainment that will make you laugh for a couple of hours.

When you leave the theater you'll feel you got your money's worth.

All amateur photographers within the Ledger-Enquirer circulation area are eligible, with the exception of Ledger-Enquirer employees and their immediate families, and individuals who personally engaged in the manufacture, sale, commercial finishing or professional use of photographic goods. For purposes of this contest, an amateur is one who photographs as a hobby. To be eligible to enter the contest a photographer may receive no more than five percent of his total income from his photography.

Only pictures taken after July 1, 1984 are eligible. Snapshots may be taken with any make of camera, but all entries must be taken on Kodak film. No art work or retouching is permitted on negatives or prints — in composite pictures, multiple exposures, or multiple printing.

Contestants are permitted to submit pictures to only one newspaper particpating in the Kodak International Snapshot Awards.

- Contestants name, address and phone number (at home and at work) should be clearly marked in ink on the back of each photograph, or on the cardboard side of each transparency.
- Entries must be unmounted: no larger than 8x10 prints. A maximum of 5 snapshots or slides may be entered in each weekly contest.
- Only entries submitted with a self-addressed stamped envelope will be returned. To prevent damage in the mailing, the return envelope must be large enough to hold the pictures. Photos will be returned after the contest is finished.
- To be eligible for the International finals, the photographer must furnish the original negative or transparency of his/her entry when requested to do so by The Ledger-Enquirer. Local winners also will be asked to provide written consent of all recognizable individuals in their photographs. To be eligible for a local grand prize, a contestant must sign a statement that the picture, or another closely similar picture of the same subject or situation has not, and will not be entered by him/her in any contest and will not be offered for publication.
- The Ledger-Enquirer contest will consist of six weekly segments. Judging will take place after each week and the six winning color photos plus 2 black and white ones will be forwarded to Kodak for the international judging. Try to enter as early as possible—photos that do not win early in the competition are kept in contention for the remaining segments.
- Entries should be mailed to Photo Contest, Ledger-Enquirer, P.O. Box 711, Columbus GA 31994. Photos must be delivered by mail or in person by noon Fridays, at The Ledger-Enquirer, 17 W. 12th Street to be eligible for that week's contest. The first week's deadline, as an exception, will be on Thursday, July 3, because of the holiday on Friday, July 4. The Ledger-Enquirer will not be responsible for entries lost or delayed in the mail.

A helpful hint from your photo contest editor — all entries will be judged on general interest and appeal. Photographic quality, while important, will not be the deciding factor.

lodging. Under the new system, reimbursement will more closely mirror actual lodging costs, Ellicott said. If the new per diem rate is $126 and the meal rate is $33, that allows $93 for lodging.

Because the new system applies only to the meals and lodging expenses, all other claims for reimbursable expenses, such as rental cars and expenses over $25, must still be supported by receipts, Ellicott said.

As an additional benefit under the law, eligibility for travel reimbursement will extend to employees on official travel who experience personal emergencies.

For example, when employees have to interrupt their temporary duty before its completion, they can be reimnbursed for travel expenses if they experienced a personal, debilitating illness or an emergency at home. Emergencies could be such things as the death or serious illness of a family member or a natural catastrophe such as a fire or flood. The travel-authorizing official (usually a supervisor) will determine if a reimbursement should be made.

The law also authorizes payment of subsistence and transportation expenses for law enforcement or investigative employees and immediate family members who find themselves in a life-threatening situation because of their assigned duties.

If an investigator, for example, was working undercover and his identity became known, the employing agency might determine that the danger to him is sufficient to warrant temporarily moving him and his family to another location in the country, Ellicott said.

U.S. Postal Service employees transferring to another Federal agency also are, for the first time, eligible to claim relocation allowances under the federal system.

The public law only applies to civilians. However, legislation for a similar per diem system for soldiers is still pending and is expected to be approved by Oct. 1, he said.

The law also does not apply to overseas travel. The State Department sets the overseas per diem rates. These rates vary from city to city within various countries.

classroom leadership training, 54 hours on maintenance and a whopping 708 hours in combined arms and tactics.

The major portion of the course includes instruction on the use of artillery, engineers and air assets; air assault operations, military operations in urban terrain; nuclear, biological and chemical training; weapons qualification and certification; and four major field problems. The FTXs include the Tactical Leader's Course, a defensive and offensive operations problem, a light and a mechanized infantry exercise.

In addition to the field time, the new lieutenants must endure long hours of regular physical training, a lot of studying on their own time and lots of counselling from each training platoon's cadre.

According to Connolly: "Our platoon trainer concept is the key to IOBC. Each platoon of lieutenants has a captain, a sergeant first class and a staff sergeant. The cadre serve as the lieutenant's role models, evaluators and counsellors. Everything the student does the platoon trainers do right along with them in the role of mentor-teacher. The platoon trainers stay eyeball to eyeball with their lieutenants, turning over leadership and instruction as much as possible to the students and letting them run with the ball with a hard-nosed critique afterwards so the lieutenant learns.

There is one word that is constantly used around IOBC that seems to underline everything the course tires to accomplish. That word is "confidence."

"The key to a lieutenant becoming a good leader is self-confidence," said Capt Bill Medley, a platoon trainer.

"A guy isn't going to come out of this course a tactical genius, another Rommel. He is going to leave this course, if he makes it, with a good, solid basis to build on."

"One tough problem we have is identifying what each lieutenant needs as far as training, especially in leadership. When you have men running the spectrum from a 21-year-old fresh out of ROTC to a 34-year-old former enlisted Ranger out of OCS, you have to gauge how much training each man needs," Medley said.

"That's sometimes hard to pinpoint. After a few days in the field, though, I can get a pretty good grasp about where each man stands and schedule leadership positions accordingly," he added.

In the course, leadership positions are rotated according to a duty roster. But if a lieutenant is weaker in leadership than his peers, he usually finds himself serving as a platoon leader or squad leader more often than other platoon members. According to Medley, the extra training serves two purposes.

"I get to look at him a lot closer and see if he can meet the standards of being an infantry platoon leader. Secondly, it gives him that much more experience as a leader, which builds up his confidence for when he takes over his first platoon after IOBC," Medley said.

SSgt. Charles Brown, who works with Medley as a platoon trainer, feels very strongly about the job he does in IOBC.

"I represent the noncommissioned officer corps to these new officers. I set high standards for myself, higher than they'll see in their units," he said.

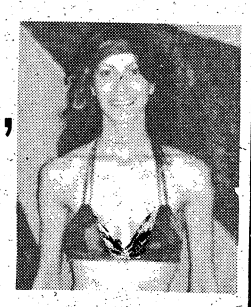
"Based on their relationship with me is how they're going to interact with their first platoon sergeant. If they don't know how to work with that platoon sergeant, they're going to have a very tough time in their first assignment," Brown said.

Medley stressed that the first phase of the course was to get the new lieutenants to the field, get some land navigation training, get in some road marching and get them wet and, according to the season, very hot or very cold.

"What I initially see in a lot of our lieutenants, especially those commissioned from ROTC, is shock. They're shocked because they have to walk a lot and realize that the infantry lives on its feet," Brown said.

"And they're shocked at our PT program. We go for muscle failure. In other words, we'll do push-ups until their muscles literally can't do another repitition. We do that with all of our PT," he added.

Connolly said the attrition rate for the course is about three percent.



"If an officer fails a test twice he is recycled into another company. If he again fails a test twice we look at him under the whole man concept and he faces loss of his commission and a discharge from the Army," Connolly said.

"To do well in this course a lieutenant must arrive in good physical condition and have a positive attitude at the outset. Shortfalls in either area will lead to difficulties at the outset," Connolly said.

"On the positive side of the house, I compare IOBC now to what it used to be in 1965. Then, it was all committee taught with very little hands-on or field training. Now, our lieutenants spend the majority of their IOBC time in the field or on ranges, and the training is hands-on. They get the down and dirty grasp of the basics coupled with leadership pressures, pain, and discomfort. We produce a lieutenant who is confident and ready to take over a platoon. He knows his weapons, his tactics, is in good physical condition and he is ready to lead," he said.

Maj. John Powell, commander of IOBC's 22nd Company, sums up the course this way: "If a lieutenant, after finishing IOBC, is called upon to go to combat, he is prepared and ready to lead. That's the bottom line."

T-Ball's Ghostbusters take top honors in stormy series against Blue Thunder

Story and photos
by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Ghostbuster's revenge came swift and steady as they silenced the Blue Thunder in the Mini World's Series at Faith Field this week.

The Grasshopper Division, ages 6 to 8, consisted of the National and American leagues.

The Ghostbusters, representing the American league, took a 2-1 game victory in the three-game series to claim the division title.

They were all but friendly ghosts as they opened the series to scare the Blue Thunder into a 17-11 defeat.

The Ghostbusters were quite visible in the first inning, scoring five runs, lead off by third baseman Allen Smith.

The power hitting came from Jason Hammel, scoring four runs, while both Rodney Ulmer and Lamonte Adams made it to home plate three times.

The five-run rallies continued through the third inning before the Blue Thunder mounted a six-run rally of their own.

Led off by Jacob Holbrook, The Blue Thunder's batting order was strong but came a little too late.

In the second game, the Blue Thunder sought revenge of their own.

The Blue Thunder's storm was a continuous rainfall that would not fizzle out.

The Ghostbusters took an early 6-0 lead in the first inning, but the rains that follow the Thunder was on the way.

Blue Thunder scored five runs in the next two innings before raising a five-run rally in the fourth inning.

With two outs in the final inning, the Blue Thunder kept their six-run drive alive, to edge the Ghostbusters 17-15, and tie the series 1-1.

Jamie Kobeck scored four runs in the victory, while Darryl Moore and Ricky Williams scored three runs.

There would be no such rally in the final game of the series.The Ghostbuster's revenge would be complete, scoring a 16-5 championship-victory.

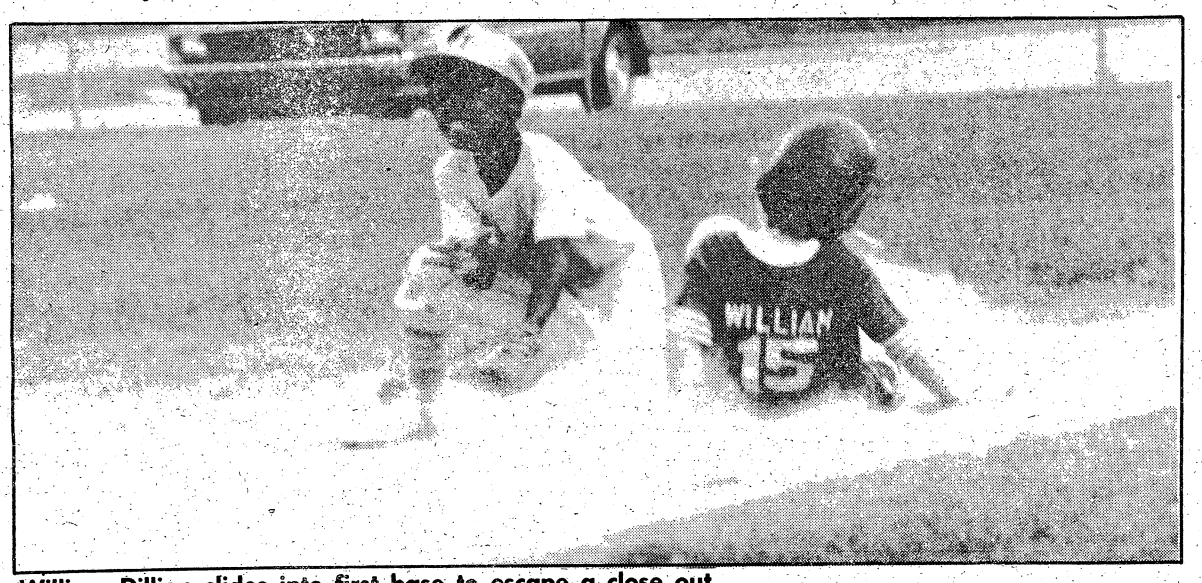
The Ghostbusters scored five runs in the third inning. They continued 'busting' in the fourth inning, driving home six more runs.

Tietien again was perfect at bat, hitting two home-runs and two singles.

Ghostbuster's Teresa Taitano, playing right field, kept the ball in play defensively, rifling throws to home plate to cut off the Blue Thunder's scoring attempts.

The Ghostbusters and Blue Thunder had good league records in claiming their respective American and National league titles.

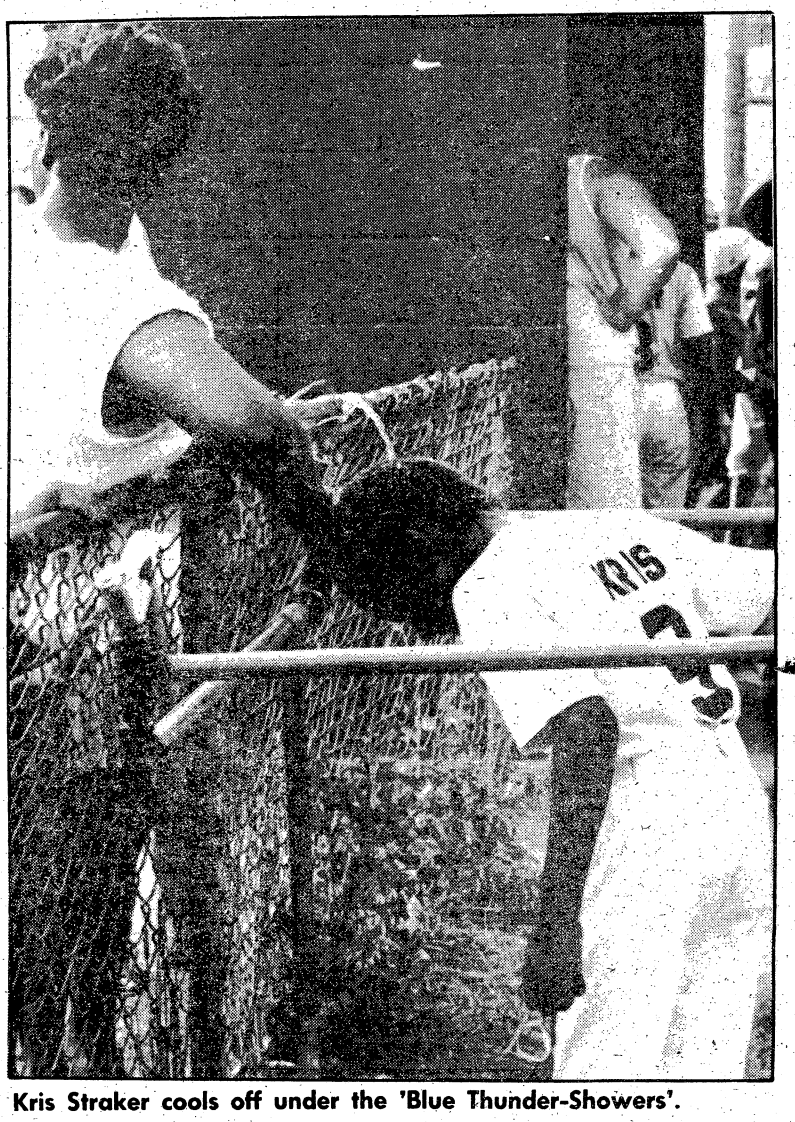
The Ghostbusters finished the regular season with an 11-1 record, while the Blue Thunder went 12-1 for the season.



Rodney Ulmer was awarded the series most valuable player trophy.

The runner-up was Darryl Moore, who led the BlueThunder's storms in the three-game series.

There were no losers in this Mini-World's Series.Each player received trophies for their hard fought efforts to claim the title, but the American League Ghostbusters had their revenge.



Donohue McNeal(10) breaks for second base as Ricky Williams waits for the play at first.

William Dillion slides into first base to escape a close out.

Champions receive congratulations after the Mini-World Series.

Kris Straker cools off under the 'Blue Thunder-Showers'.

Women's rugby team looking for players

A small group of women on Fort Benning is interested in starting a women's rugby team to begin play in the fall season.

The team will be open to civilians, family members and soldiers within the Fort Benning, Columbus, Phenix City area. No experience is necessary. Everything you need to know will be taught during practice.

Declaration of Independence set all men free

Thomas Jefferson's eloquent document spelled disaster for world's monarchs

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

On July 2, 210 years ago, a man of 33, freckled, sandy-haired and from Virginia, was asked to write a document.

He was chosen by a Congress of 56 men representing the 13 American colonies that were in rebellion against the world's greatest imperial power, Great Britain.

This Congress, in the words of Donald Barr Chidsey, "without any previous experience, but earnestly, had taken upon itself the task of building an army and a navy, waging war against the greatest power in the world, arranging for supplies, establishing factories,...imposing taxes upon men who had not authorized them ...printing money, appointing ambassadors and otherwise governing two and a half million persons, not including Indians." Why?

Simply put, so they could live as free men and women.

Prior to these American upstarts, the powers of the world, Great Britain and France, first and foremost, were ruled by monarchies. These kings and queens felt that they and their offspring were accorded a divine right to hold sway over and rule others. Not so, said the American colonies.

The colonists said their "not so" most plainly, most concisely and most alarmingly. Oh yes, kings and queens of the European monarchies, princes and princesses, living in their chateaus and castles shuddered in their satin under-breeches at what these Americans were trying to do: shake the very order of the society that ruled the better part of the world, causing the many to suppport the few living in luxury.

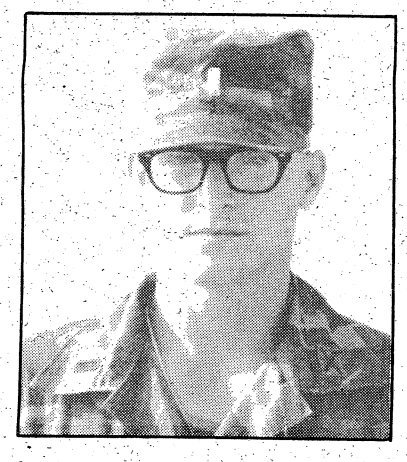
The young Virginian who authored the document that came to be called the Declaration of Independence was not only making an eloquent statement for the 13 American colonies. That Virginian, Thomas Jefferson, authored a text that rang of new ideas expressed by the collective voice of a people who rejected the tyranny of England's king, George III. This declaration was not only for the national independence of the colonies but a declaration for the rights of all men, a declaration that has come to be a cornerstone of modern democracy.

We all know those famous words, "We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

These were revolutionary statements in the most literal sense of the word "revolutionary." In a world governed by royalty that had been accepted for centuries, a precedent had been set. The lowest rag picker was said to have the same rights as the king of France, both two human beings with certain unalienable rights regardless of their station in life.

The Congress debated and made minor changes to Jefferson's indictment against George III on July 3 and, from the original 1,817 words, 1,337 remained.

On July 4, the Declaration of Independence was put to a vote by the Continental Congress and carried. They ordered it printed and that copies be sent to the Continental Army, assemblies, legislatures and committees of safety throughout the colonies.



The document was not signed until August 2, but no matter: King George had been told that we "reject and renounce all allegiance and subjection to the kings of Great Britain and all others who may hereafter claim by, through, or under them; we utterly dissolve and break off all political conection which may heretofore subsisted between us and the people or parliament of Great Britain; and finally we do assert and declare these colonies to be free and independent states...And for the support of this declaration we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honour."

Jefferson's words, however, did not a free nation make. It wasn't until the surrender of Great Britain's Cornwallis at Yorktown, Va., in 1781 after much war and death that the United

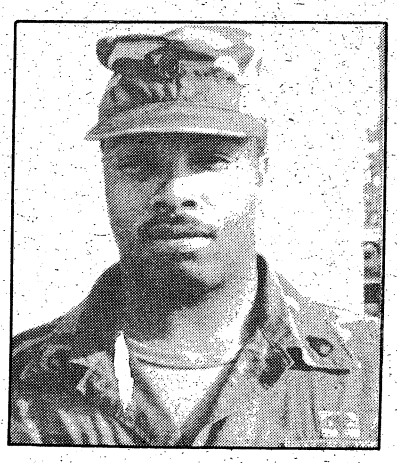
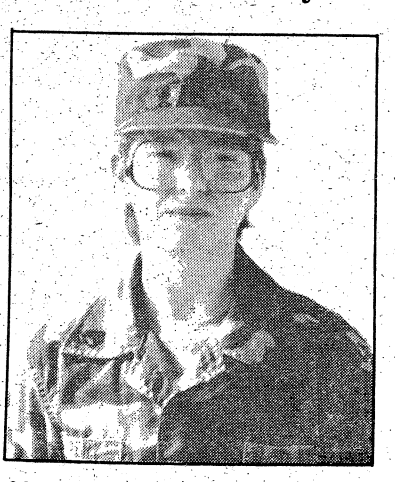
Various voices



As the United States celebrates the 210th anniversary of independence, what do you believe to be the significance of the Fourth of July?

1st Lt. Keith R. Yoder, 3rd Ranger Company, USAIS - "The 4th of July is significant because many governments have attempted a democratic system, but only ours has been able to maintain it for 210 years. We've survived and been able to change with the times."



SSgt. Steve C. Siddle, 3rd Ranger Company, USAIS - "The holiday stands for freedom and our independence. It represents the beginning of the world's best nation."

SSgt. Charles R. Williams, MEDDAC - " The significance of the holiday is it shows that a people, when unduly oppressed, can organize and overcome that oppression. It is not merely a country overcoming, but a people who have organized a system to overcome."

SP4 Mark E. Hallenbeck, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit - "I think that it can be summed up in one word — freedom, and more than 200 years of it.

SSgt. Carol L. Avery, A Training Company, 70th Division, Michigan - "It represents a nation that has the best ability, through a democratic society, to have freedom over such a long period of time."

Commanding general says 'think safety' this weekend

Our nation will celebrate another year of freedom and independence tomorrow. This day commemorates the formal adoption of the Declaration of Independence by the Continental Congress on July 4, 1776.

In earlier days, Independence Day was celebrated by massive fireworks displays, games and by firing cannons.

The fireworks and exploding field pieces caused hundreds of deaths and injuries over the years. By the early 1900s both citizens and political leaders began to plead for a "safe and sane Fourth."

Automobile crashes and water sports have become the chief modern day cause of accidental holiday deaths. If you plan to drive over the holiday, fasten your seat belt, securely fasten your children and drive defensively.

Swim only in approved areas and provide personal flotation devices for all boat passengers.

July 4th is a traditional day for outdoor fun. All can enjoy an accident-free holiday if each individual thinks and acts safely.

Army's courageous commitment ensures nation's independence

Tomorrow our nation celebrates its 210th birthday.

Our founding fathers pledged their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor in pursuit of liberty and justice. They put their signatures on the Declaration of Independence in defiance of a king.

In a similar fashion, the men and women who today serve in our Armed Forces pledge to support the continuing pursuit of liberty and justice in defiance of despots who would, if given the chance, destroy the political, religious and individual freedoms Americans have enjoyed since that first Independence Day of 1776.

As we celebrate across or nation, from our refurbished Statue of Liberty in New York harbor, to the Golden Gate in San Francisco, to Diamond Head in Hawaii and to the Snowy Peaks of Alaska, we know that it is only through your courage and your commitment to the same spirit of independence that flourished within our founding fathers, that we have the opportunity to observe this great day in American history every year. I am confident that we will be able to continue to celebrate our nation's independence for untold years to come because of your service in the cause of liberty, freedom, and justice for all.

For that we are most grateful to all of you.

Caspar Weinberger
Secretary of Defense

Armed forces' gallantry protects liberty

The Independence Day we celebrate this year is special. This July 4th, in New York harbor, we will rededicate a refurbished Statue of Liberty — that grand and glorious symbol of liberty and hope — that for the last hundred years has greeted millions of immigrants. She has welcomed them to a new land and a new life, where the darkness of privation and oppression gave way to the sunlight of opportunity and liberty — the freedom to speak and write and worship and achieve.

As we celebrate this 210th anniversary of our founding fathers' Declaration of Independence, we are reminded once again that it is the gallant men and women of our armed forces who have maintained and sustained the liberty we prize, a liberty that generations of patriots have won for us with their courage and sacrifices. Because of your dedication and commitment to defend America against all its enemies, we still enjoy those precious rights, and the Statue of Liberty remains a beacon of hope for people throughout the world who yearn for freedom.

On this special Fourth of July, I am especially proud to serve our nation as commander in chief of such splendid forces. Nancy and I salute you and join all of our fellow Americans in wishing you and your families, here and abroad, a safe and happy Independence Day.

Statue of Liberty's foundation based on 19th century Fort Wood

Army News Service

The Statue of Liberty will reopen to the public tomorrow after more than a year of renovations.

But "The Lady in the Harbor" isn't the only monument tourists will see when they visit Bedloe's Island; the statue's base is somewhat of a monument itself.

The 11-point, star-shaped structure that now surrounds the base of the statue once enclosed Fort Eleazer Wood, a fortress built by the Army's Corps of Engineers to fortify New York's coast.

The Army began construction of Fort Wood in 1808 in response to the threat of war with Great Britain. Col. Jonathan Williams, chief engineer of the corps of engineers, planned to protect New York City's inner harbor with strategically-placed forts on four islands — Manhattan, Governor's, Ellis and Bedloe's. These forts created a formidable line of defense that was never tested against an enemy vessel.

The latter fort was called "The Works of Bedloe's Island" until Nov. 9, 1814, when New York's Gov. Daniel D. Thompkins named the fort after Capt. Eleazer Wood. A West Point graduate and a corps of engineers officer, Wood had served as assistant engineer in the construction of the nearby defenses at Governor's Island. He was promoted to the rank of brevet lieutenant colonel for "gallant conduct in the Battle of Niagara" July 14, 1814. In September, he was mortally wounded in the Battle of Lake Erie.

Fort Wood became a possible site for the Statue of Liberty when Frederic Auguste Bartholdi, its French sculptor, first visited the United States. When he entered New York Harbor, Bartholdi was impressed by the high visibility of Fort Wood and the surrounding islands, and decided that Fort Wood would be an ideal place for his yet-to-be-designed sculpture.

In 1877, the secretary of war allowed the civilian committee sponsoring the project to construct the statue on the fort's parade ground.

The committee tore down old barracks and began excavating in the area in 1883. Brig. Gen. Charles P. Stone, a retired officer of the ordnance corps and the infantry, was the engineer-in-charge of the pedestal construction. He created a base to prevent the statue and pedestal from blowing over. The foundation, 90-feet-square and 38-feet-deep, required nearly 34,000 cubic yards of concrete. The statue was dedicated on Oct. 28, 1886.

In 1933 the monument was transferred to the Department of Interior to be maintained by the National Park Service, although the rest of the island was retained by the Army as a military post. Four years later the entire post was transferred to the park service.

Pledge of Allegiance explained in simple terms

by Red Skelton
Reprinted with permission

I remember this one teacher. To me, he was the greatest teacher, a real sage of my time. He had such wisdom. We were all reciting the Pledge of Allegiance, and he walked over. Mr. Lasswell was his name. He said:

"I've been listening to you boys and girls recite the Pledge of Allegiance all semester and it seems as though it is becoming monotonous to you. If I may, may I recite it and try to explain to you the meaning of each word:

"I — me, an individual, a committee of one.

"PLEDGE — dedicate all of my worldly goods to give without self-pity.

"ALLEGIANCE — my love and my devotion.

"TO THE FLAG — our standard, Old Glory, a symbol of freedom. Wherever she waves, there is respect because your loyalty has given her a dignity that shouts freedom is everybody's job.

"OF THE UNITED — that means that we have all come together.

"STATES — individual communities that have united into 48 great states. Forty-eight individual communities with pride and dignity and purpose, all divided with imaginary boundaries, yet united to a common purpose, and that's love for country.

"OF AMERICA.

"AND TO THE REPUBLIC — a state in which sovereign power is invested in representatives chosen by the people to govern. And government is the people and it's from the people to the leaders, not from the leaders to the people.

"FOR WHICH IT STANDS.

"ONE NATION — meaning, so blessed by God.

"INDIVISIBLE — incapable of being divided.

"WITH LIBERTY — which is freedom and the right of power to live one's own life withot threats or fear or some sort of retaliation.

"AND JUSTICE — the principle or quality of dealing fairly with.

"FOR ALL — which means it's as much your country as it is mine."

Since I was a small boy, two states have been added to our country and two words have been added to the Pledge of Allegiance — "under God."

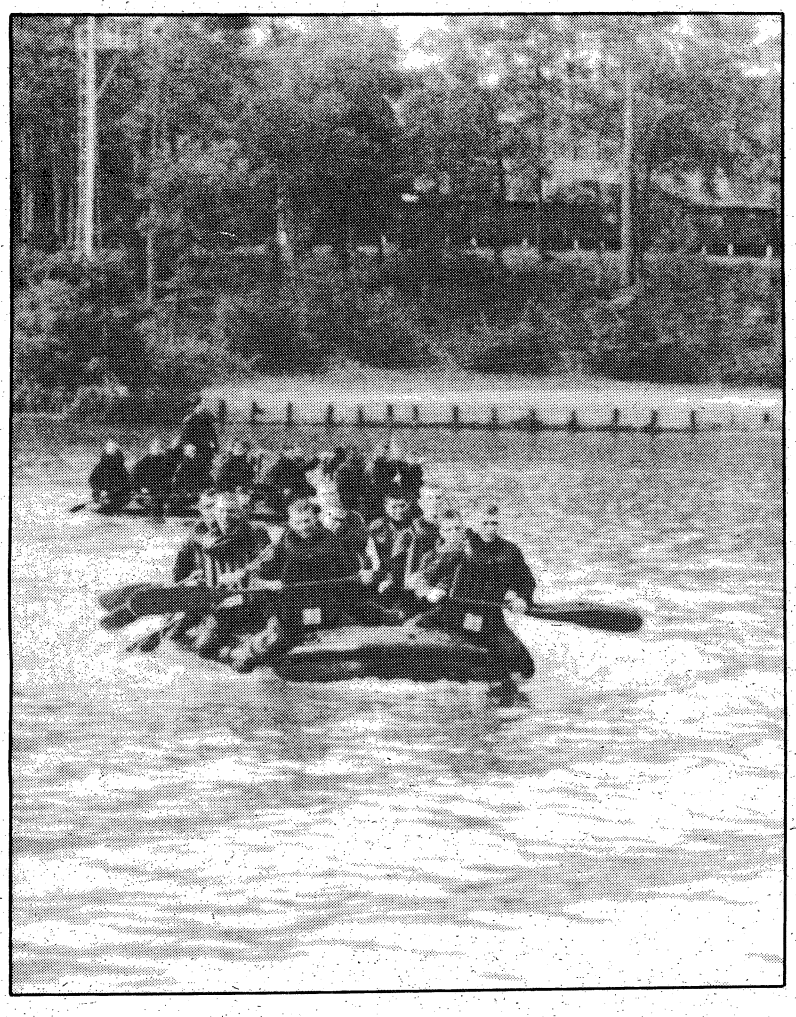
A story titled "Retired NCO wrecks jeep; receives multiple citations" appeared on page 5 of last week's Bayonet.



We would like to apologize for the implication made by the accompanying photographs. A small photograph pictured beer cans, which may have given readers the false impression that alcohol was involved in the accident. It was not.

According to Sgt. Mark Halverson, Fort Benning Military Police, the driver of the Jeep was charged with excessive speed for the road conditions and driving without seat bealts. The driver of the other car was charged with an improper stop.

The editor apologizes for these inaccuracies.

The "Vanguard" of Company E, 10th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade concluded their field training last week at Victory Pond with a splash.

The final phase of One Station Unit Training is the field training exercise. It is a test of all the skills the soldiers have been learning during the cycle. For the "Vanguard" of Co. E it was a long, hard week of road marches, squad drills and a helicopter ride, which introduced the soldiers to air mobility.

The Victory Pond wrap up, however, mixed training with fun. The 586 Engineer Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineering Group brought its rubber boats to Victory Pond for the Co. E soldiers to use.

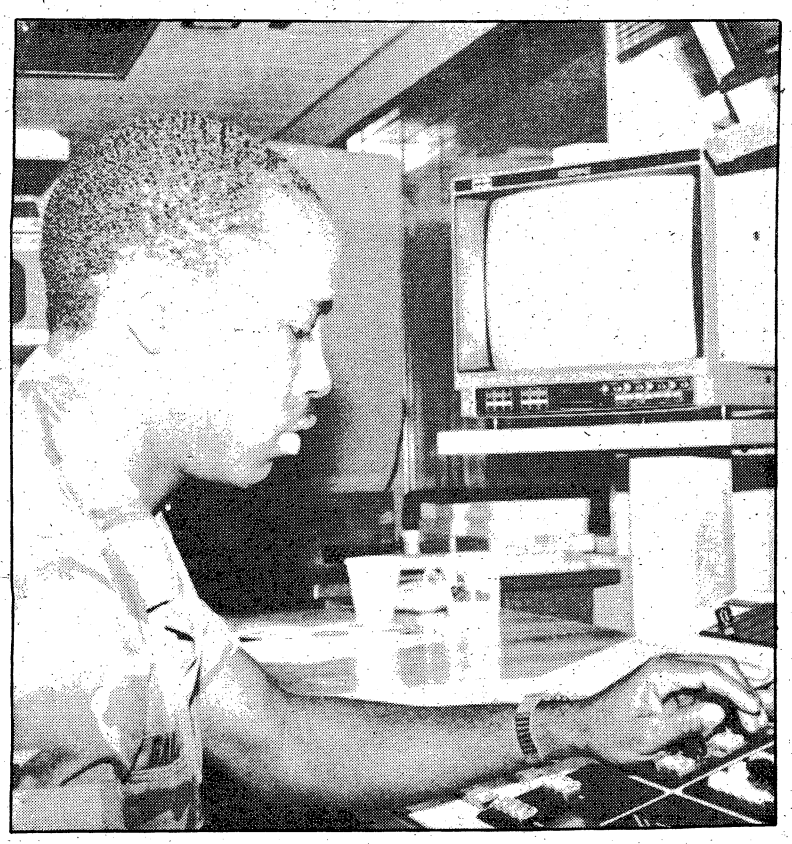
The engineers of the 586th conducted the classes. The morning started with an explanation on the history and the uses of the rubber boats. They then moved into the operational precedures of putting the boats into use.

Capt. Luis Morales, Co. E commander said, "We had a free day and I wanted to teach the soldiers something about water travel and have some fun also."

The soldiers took to the water with the boats and first learned how to maneuver them. They then went through exercises in mounting and dismounting and almost everyone got wet.

After the exercises with the boats were complete a class was conducted on other methods of crossing water obstacles.

SSgt. Ronald Holland took two ruck sacks and two ponchos and demonstrated how to make a two-man raft.



"The boats were a lot of fun," said Pvt. 1 Alex Nunez, "I doubt in Germany if I would get a chance to use the boat, but it is nice to know if we do I feel confident that I know how."

"The FTX went extremely well," Morales said. "I think the soldiers learned a lot and the cadre really got involved and enjoyed teaching."

The training ended with a ceremony. A soaking wet 2nd Lt. Vincent Taylor, the company's executive officer, was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant.

Behind the scenes at USAIC TV: hard work, dedication

Technicians share unique mission; produce infantry training films

SP4 Willie Gardner creates some special effects with a video switcher and puts the finishing touches on a film produced in one of USAIC's studios at Infantry Hall last week.

SP4 John R. Hooper focuses in on the set during filming in a USAIS studio at Infantry Hall recently.

They're not lined up for the Academy Awards, yet they are the most important people in film production. They're the electricity behind the light bulbs, the ones who do all the work, but receive no glory for their efforts.

The soldiers and civilian technicians at the United States Army Infantry Center Television are behind the scenes in military educational television.

Many think their job is glamorous. But few sit behind the scenes for hours as the parts are played over and over to achieve perfection.

USAIC TV's mission is distinctive for Fort Benning. According to Howard H. Gates, the chief of USAIC TV, the crew of 21 Department of the Army civilian employees and 11 soldiers provide support for Fort Benning and regional areas.

As many as 127 films are produced a year in the 13 rooms and two studios in Infantry Hall.

Everything from production through scripting and distribution are done. "The equipment was initially installed in Building 4 in June 1964. We tested it from June '64 through Dec. '64. It was approved eventually and we started operations as a division under the Department of Instruction as of April 1965," said Don Cox, electronic technician and noncommissioned officer in charge from 1965 to 1973.

From the Building 4 headquarters the USAIC TV crew make training films, (usually infantry equipment and tactics), make programs for the recruiting command and anything assigned through the U.S. Training and Doctrine Command.

The USAIC TV crews also work on films to be used at the military police and chemical training centers at Fort McClellan, Ala.

"We do make command emphasis programs like command briefings and change of command ceremonies. We have a number of requesting agencies, they all have to be approved by DA," Gates said.

The steps in making a program are complex.

"Generally a requesting agency will write a script. We have one man who may have to rewrite the script. The director (one of five directors who work at USAIC TV) will say 'I suggest we change this or that'," Gates said.

The script is sent back to the requesting agency and after both parties agree on the changes the script is finalized and the production begins.

The next step is to find a location to film. This consists of making arrangements to get equipment and personnel and doing a survey of the selected area.

"This may take a few days or it may take a week or two. There's a lot of consideration," Gates said.

"You have to find a good vantage point, check out the sun and visual considerations," said SP4 John R. Hooper, audiovisual production specialist.

Getting those vantage points not only requires a keen eye but sometimes a lot of guts. "Many times we've had to hang out of helicopters, been out in boats on the Gulf of Mexico, walked through marshes, scaled mountains, rode in the back of C-130s and rode on the top of many pieces of equipment, such as the Bradley. We've even had scaffolding or tree stands built to establish a good vantage point," Hooper said.

Once the program is filmed the crew returns to the studio to work on special effects and final production,

"We make the first copy, then give it to the requesting agency for approval. In most cases they will come back with suggested changes. Then we make additional copies," Gates said.

"It's a long drawn out process. It has taken up to several weeks or months to get approval. A lot depends on how fast their (the requesting agency) is in need of it (the film). It may take one day to several weeks to finish," he added.

The finished program and its additional copies are sent to the requesting agency.

So the next time you're watching an educational film, whether it is titled "Combat Decision Making" or "Multi-Purpose Bayonet" or "Pre and Post Swim The Bradley" you can be sure that the people behind the scenes are from USAIC TV. Standing ovations are unnecessary, just sit back, eat your popcorn and enjoy the show.

Holiday safety

Water, alcohol, driving spell 'dead' weekend

Boaters subject to stress, hypnosis

American Forces Press Service

More than 1,200 people die in boating accidents every year — 90 percent of them drown. And more than half of those fatalities involve alcohol. In addition, the Coast Guard estimates the annual number of non-fatal boating accidents to be 60,000 or higher, with property damage of more than $100 million.

Researches have found that even sober boaters are subjected to "stressors" — noise, vibration, sun, glare and motion that can produce "boater's hypnosis." Boater's hypnosis can slow reaction time almost as much as if you were legally drunk. Adding alcohol to boating stress factors intensifies the effect.

Alcohol also intensifies the effect of caloric labrytinthitis, a fancy term for the disorientation caused by water entering the ear. A drunk person whose head is immersed can become confused and swim down to death instead of up to safety. This explains why some good swimmers who have been drinking drown for no apparent reason.

Finally, by drinking and operating a boat, you risk a fine of up to $5,000 and a year in prison.

Buckle up, don't drive after fifth on 4th

National Safety Council

CHICAGO — Between 500 and 600 persons may die in traffic accidents during the upcoming July 4th holiday weekend, according to the National Safety Council.

The Council also estimates that between 24,000 and 28,000 people may suffer disabling injuries during the 78-hour holiday period.

The 1986 July 4th holiday period begins at 6 p.m. today and concludes at midnight Sunday.

The Council believes that between 12,000 and 16,000 of the people who died in motor vehicle accidents last year could have survived had they been wearing safety belts at the time of the accident.The Council advises all motorists to buckle up, and to fasten children in approved child safety seats.

The following advice is also offered by the Council for a safe holiday:

- Attend a community-sponsored fireworks display, rather than having a home display. More than 8,000 people are treated in hospital emergency rooms each year for fireworks-related injuries.
- Obey the posted speed limit. The Fourth of July holiday period falls during the so-called "101 critical days of summer" when traffic fatalities are heaviest.
- If you go on a long trip, do not drive more than eight hours in a day. Pull into a rest stop at least every two hours for a break.
- If you expect to drink alcohol, plan not to drive. Use the "designated driver" plan.

Skippers should keep safety first when afloat

American Forces Press Service

Twenty years ago, few pleasure boats could exceed 30 miles an hour. Today, they can zoom along at speeds of up to 70 miles per hour.

The volume and type of recreational traffic on lakes and waterways has also taken a big leap upward. Small crafts on the water today include everything from rafts and sailboats to high-performance speedboats. Professional mariners share channels with day sailors, fishermen in john boats and waterskiers being towed behind fast power boats.

Things can happen very quickly on the water. If a skipper's attention is divided between enjoying the scenery, handling fishing gear and piloting the boat, he or she is not piloting the craft properly. The skipper must constantly be aware of activity around the boat and be particularly alert to high-speed crossing situations and course changes by other boats. Skippers must know not only how to pilot their own boats safely, but also what action to take if another skipper makes a wrong decision.

You don't know if the other skipper has the seamanship skills you have. He may not know who has the right of way. Even worse, he may have been drinking. Some skippers don't know the sound signals. Your danger signal may be interpreted as a greeting.

Heads up, skipper. Give your "just along for the ride" passengers work to do. They can be your extra eyes and ears. Make sure at least one of your guests knows the basics of boat operation, so he can step in for you if you become ill or fall overboard.

Employee testifies to seat belt advantages

Safety Office

When the mandatory seat belt regulation first went into effect, many people did a lot of grumbling and complaining about being forced to wear seat belts. Most of the complaining has finally stopped and we are beginning to hear stories about how wearing a seat belt saved people from injury or death during a crash.

One such story comes from Cathy Epperly, a civilian employee in The School Brigade.

Cathy was on her way to work. As she turned onto the Victory Drive exit from I-185 she noticed the car in front of her preparing to stop so she also braked. However, the car behind her didn't. All of a sudden she was hit from the rear and pushed off the road and over the curb. When she glanced into the rearview mirror she saw the car that had just hit her begin to fish-tail, turn and head towards her again. This time it hit her in the side. Cathy said if she had not been wearing her seat belt, she is sure she would have been seriously injured when the car hit her the second time. The other driver was also wearing a seat belt.

During a four-month period in 1985, there were 456 vehicle accidents on Fort Benning with 24 injuries. During the same four-month period in 1986, there were 507 vehicle accidents with 11 injuries. These figures show that although there was an 11 percent increase in the number of accidents, there was a 54 percent decrease in the number of injuries.

Reserve finance troops cash in on Benning training

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The thermometer soared to the 100 degree mark but that didn't stop a group of Reserve soldiers who braved the furnace-like temperatures to come to Fort Benning recently.

The 374th Finance Section from Wilmington, Del. was on post last week for its annual two-week training for the first time in five years.

Seventy-nine soldiers from Virginia, Delaware, Maryland, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Washington, D.C. traveled to Georgia to train with the 215th Finance Support Center and work in an active-duty environment.

The soldiers were successfully integrated into determination and processing, control, finance services, travel and rest and relaxation sections to train with the soldiers and civilians at Buildings 85 and 89 as well as Harmony Church.

"They've been integrated into the office very well. The morale of the troops is very high because they are being well utilized," said Capt. Paul T. McDowell, chief of Military Pay and Exam Division of the 374th Finance Section.

The soldiers have actively continued their soldier skills by running physical training and practicing drill and ceremonies twice a week.

"Enlisted ranks of E-6 and above are attending a course called 'training the trainers' during the evening hours and twice a week we have 18 people come in and work on the computers," McDowell said.

The soldiers not only brushed up on their finance specialties but learned something new in their cross-training as well.

"This is great because I don't normally do this. This is a step in another direction," said SSgt. Judye T. Monroe, finance specialist.

"This was the first time that the unit has been back to Fort Benning in five years, everyone here has been so helpful," said Sgt. Evelyn C. Grey, finance specialist.

The Reservists left Fort Benning with a warm feeling. And it wasn't just from the 100 degree heat but from the hospitality from the Finance Support Center.

Follow proper procedures when talking on unsecured phone lines

by Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

What Mrs. Brown hears from Sgt. Brown in a phone call from the base: "I'm going to be home late tonight because a whole squadron of F-15s is moving overseas on some kind of special mission."

Soviet intelligence-gathering operatives, of course, hear this conversation word for word, but what they glean from it — combined with what they already know — is much more valuable than appears on the surface.

Here's how a Soviet operative might translate that information to his superior: "There are 15 F-15s deploying to the Far East tomorrow. They are assigned to 'x' squadron, and I know the tail numbers."

Bottom line: Whether the movement was for training purposes, a normal deployment or in support of a contingency combat mission, the Soviets would have gained valuable intelligence.

Nations have been exploiting information gleaned from military communications since before World War I. And they have been effective. Many battles have been won or lost as a direct result of intercepted information. During the Vietnam War, the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese monitored U.S. radio communications, and there is no question that our effectiveness was greatly reduced. Many targets simply "disappeared" as soon as a forward air controller reported their presence over the radio.

States are spending millions of dollars and thousands of man-hours to gather information they can exploit to their advantage. Nearly all voice communications systems can be intercepted by anyone who has the resources to do so.

There are COMSEC measures that can be taken to reduce the amount of classified and sensitive information that gets passed along. The following suggestions are provided by the Air Force's Electronic Security Command, but apply to all military members:

- Don't try to "talk around" classified or sensitive information while using unsecure communications. If you have to discuss sensitive information, use secure communications.
- Discuss the subject face-to-face with the person if at all possible. This will definitely decrease the risk of interception.
- If you have to use an unsecure telephone to speak with someone, don't use one where classified information is being dicsussed. The telephone can pick up background discussions.
- Push the hold button after you hang up on a multi-line phone. A monitored phone can still transmit conversations if a line is engaged.

Freedom

States became truly free of the British imperial yoke.

Ideas expressed in words can spawn powerful actions. America stands as the world's foremost protector of liberal democracy in a world trodden upon more and more by the boots of tyranny. British tyrant-monarchs, fascist dictators, Russian expansionists hiding behind communism: the names do not matter. All directly repudiate our Declaration of Independence.

As Chidsey said: "Every Fourth of July should be a time for examining our standards, our purposes, for determining afresh what principles and what forms of power we think most likely to effect our safety and happiness.

That and that alone is the obligation the Declaration lays upon us. It is no fetish; its words lay no compulsion upon the thought of any free man, but it was drawn by men who thought, and it obliges those who receive its benefits to think likewise."

On this July 4th let's wallow in celebration and revel in the good fortune that we are lucky enough to be Americans, lucky enough to have bee the recipients of that document of the Fourth of July written by the sandy-haired young Virginian.

'Sledgehammer Academy' drills squad, platoon training into soldiers

Story and photos by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

The sound of the .50 caliber echoed through the trees. M16 rifle fire cracked as soldiers from Company D, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry trained at the "Sledgehammer Academy".

The "Sledgehammer Academy" is a 197th Infantry Brigade training area behind the Kelley Hill Recreation Center. It is designed to provide squad and platoon level training in such things as movement to contact, hasty attack, breaching obstacles and individual movement.

The tasks are broken down into drills. Each drill is executed under the squad or platoon leader's direction and can be trained separately or together. The platoon leader is usually the primary evaluator.

Mechanized infantry units throughout the Brigade can use the range, as well as armor, engineer, artillery and support soldiers. The range is available upon request through the Brigade training section.

"This will be a convenient way to train," said Capt. Thomas D'Alio, commander of Delta Company. "It's local, short-fuzed, and you can work on any of the major areas or obstacles. It's practically in our backyard."

"This will give the squad leader a chance to practice basic battle drills," explained 1st Lt. Stephen Egbert, a platoon leader from Delta Company. "The squad will be able to go over weaknesses in any of the points."

The Sledgehammer Academy is expected to open for training use this week.

OSUT soldier says platoon becoming well-oiled machine

Editor's note: This is the fourth in a series of 13 articles that will allow the readers to follow one soldier through his entire One Station Unit Training at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade in Sand Hill.

by Michael Ricca
1st Infantry Training Brigade

This last week was the most educational and exhausting I have seen since basic training began.

It started early Monday morning with classes on the M203 grenade launcher. We fired three practice grenades from the foxhole position and two from the prone-supported position.

This was our first exposure to the aspects of indirect fire. For me, the difference between direct and indirect fire was enough to make me look forward to being a mortarman.

Tuesday was a day for a new type training. I spent the day on KP duty with our 1st squad leader. We scrubbed every chair leg in both dining halls while the rest of the company spent the day on cycle support duty. We also mopped and buffed the floors between meals when we were working as dining room orderlies.

The next day we got to fire the 66mm M72A2 light anti-tank weapon. We fired several rounds at old tanks that were set up down range. After lunch, we tried our hand at a moving target. As motivating as this was, the last tank of the day was the best. We knelt down in foxholes while a 30-ton armored personnel carrier drove overhead. The instant it had passed, we jumped up and simulated firing the LAW to destroy it.

Thursday was our introduction to land mines. The day started with a demonstration using two M18A1 claymore mines detonated around several silhouettes with balloons attached to them. The damage done was awesome. Not one single balloon within a 35-meter circle was left intact.

Our first task was on probing and clearing a mine field. After that class, we started working with the M21A1 anti-tank mine and the M16A1 anti-personnel mine. We were shown how to arm and bury the mines.

After chow, we were given instructions on the M18A1 claymore anti-personnel mine. This class was much more complex than any of the other mine classes. This involved several line tests and aiming procedures tht ensure proper detonation.

Friday was the most invigorating of the five training days. That was the day we learned how to low crawl, high crawl and rush in a combat situation. The difficulty of these maneuvers, combined with the heat and humidity, made the day physically exhausting.

After lunch, we applied these tactics to a course on which we moved under fire, hid, and delivered covered fire for our buddies. Jumping over walls and crawling under barbed wire made the course a challenge.

In the midst of all this motivation, there are still a few soldiers who are continuing to adjust to the Army way of life. Some of those have fallen by the wayside, leaving room for the rest of us to grow. I am positive that those who have not completely adjusted will eventually come around and begin filling in the spaces necessary to allow our platoon to run like a well-oiled machine.

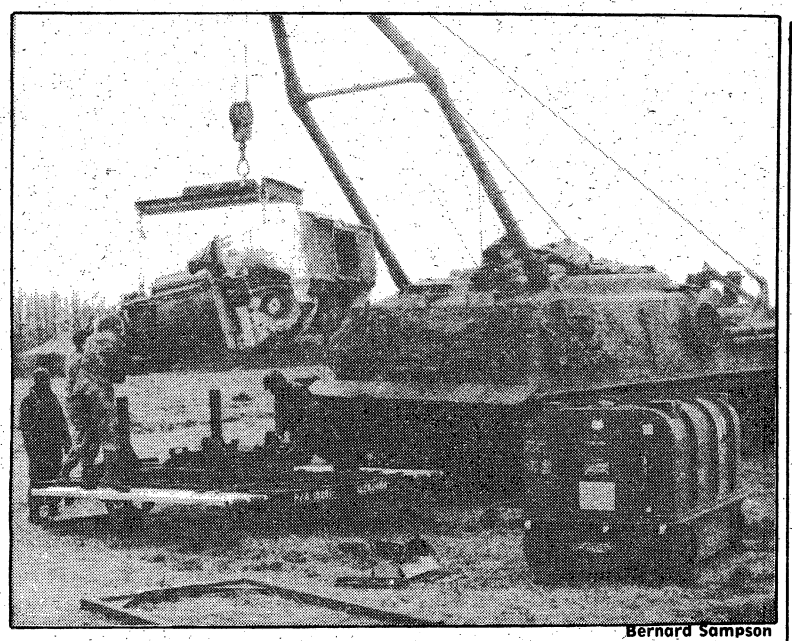
Seabees assist Benning engineers

by Mark G. Moffatt
43rd Engineer Battalion



The equivalent to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is the U.S. Navy's Construction Engineers — the Seabees.

Recently, two separate battalions came to Fort Benning for two weeks active-duty training.

The first unit completed several vertical projects, but more important to Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Heavy), were the 12 mechanics who augmented the Company's direct support mechanics in completing several overdue job orders.

Working throughout the Battalion's pre-ARTEP field training exercise, a tremendous amount of repair parts were emplaced on one rock crusher and work began on several dozers. Upon completion of their training, the 26th Battalion, from Mt. Clements, Mich., arrived at Fort Benning eager to complete what had been initiated.

These 10 soldiers, ranging in rank from seamen to CM1 (equivalent to Pvt. 2 through staff sergeant in the Army),completed two dozers, one air compressor, two water distributors, two backhoes and two graders.

197th Support Battalion supplies unending resources

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Among the 197th Infantry Brigade units that recently trained in Alberta, Canada was a group of soldiers who provided the lifeline of supplies to the infantry and armor units.

Soldiers from the 197th Support Battalion kept the maneuver units combat ready with unending resources of maintenance, transportation, medical and other supply support.

The Battalion's Company C converged on the Canadian countryside with its massive heavy equipment transport vehicles and fuel tankers. They provided petroleum, oil and lubricants to fuel the tanks, armored personnel carriers and other vehicles throughout the exercise.

1st Lt. Bernard Sampson, Support Battalion officer in charge during Maple Fury said, "The POL soldiers got some of their best training by working with the Canadians and their refueling equipment."

"There were some differences with the Canadian equipment," said SP4 Andy Johnson, a Company C POL specialist. "The Canadians use the metric system for measurement and sometimes it was difficult to convert that into gallons."

Johnson added, "Their fuel tankers could fuel two smaller fuel trucks at one time while ours can only fuel one. But, their tankers aren't equipped for off-road operation. We can get the fuel right out to the units."

Getting the support out to the units was also the mission of Company D, only in a different form. Delta Company provides direct support maintenance to Brigade units.

During Operation Maple Fury, these maintenance specialists got their first opportunity to change the engine of an M-1 tank.

In addition, Delta Company mechanics converted two M-60 tank engines, another task they had not done before.

According to SFC James Wilkes, a Delta Company maintenance noncommissioed officer, "We were sent two 'dirty air' engines for the M-60 tanks. We had to convert them to 'clean air' before installing them into the tanks."

Wilkes continued, "Usually, this is a civilian contract job, but the mechanics knew what to do from their experience and from watching the civilians convert engines in the motor pool."

In addition, the Battalion's support assets in Canada included ammunition supply and repair parts from Headquarters Company. Medical personnel from Company B also accompanied the medical platoon from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor.

The soldiers redeployed to Fort Benning with the other Brigade units in June.

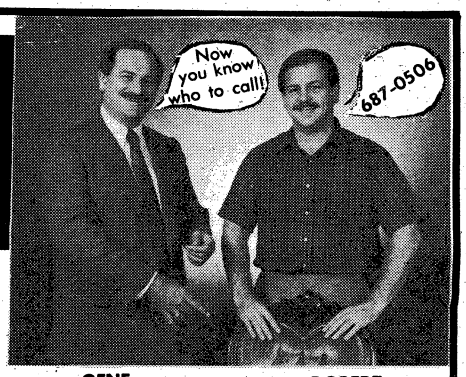
Unit engineers 'power' picnic at park

by Kevin O. Davis
HHC, 36th Engineer Group

Recently, 30 miles north of Fort Benning, the officers of the 36th Engineer Group got together for a festive picnic. In a quest to avoid the ordinary, Maj. William H. Ward, picnic coordinator and Capt. Del W. Miltenberger, project officer, decided to have the picnic at Blanton Creek Park.

Blanton Creek Park, located off exit 11 on I-185, was an ideal park for the 150 participants. When asked how Blanton Creek Park, a Georgia Power Company owned and operated park, was decided on, Miltenberger said, "I saw the sign while driving from Atlanta one day and decided to go see what was there." What he saw was a perfect area to facilitate the planned activities and the interest of both children and adults.

Bringing excitement to the picnic, competitions between units were conducted in volleyball and canoeing. The officers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th, outlasted the 67th Maintenance Battalion and the 43rd Engineer Battalion to take the first place honors in the volleyball tournament. The 67th gained revenge by rowing far ahead of the pack in the exhausting canoe race. Other games, such as badminton, horseshoes and children's relay races also took place.



The guests had their fill of chicken, ribs, hamburgers and hot dogs.

At the end of the day Col. Paul Y. Chinen, group commander, conducted an awards ceremony.

197th troops march at FORSCOM change of command

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

An honor platoon of 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers marched in a change of command and retirement ceremony at the U.S. Army Forces Command last week at Fort McPherson, Ga.

The Brigade provided a 30-man platoon from Company A, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, and a 74-man color bearing element composed of soldiers from all units in the Brigade.

The color bearers carried colors from each FORSCOM unit. CSM S.D. Walker, from 1-58th, and other battalion noncommissioned officers trained the soldiers for the ceremony.

Retiring commander, Gen. Robert W. Sennewald, and incoming commander, Gen. Joseph T. Palastra Jr., reviewed the FORSCOM units represented at the ceremony.

In addition to the 197th, other participating units included the U.S. Army Ground Forces Band, an honor platoon of Georgia Army National Guard and an honor platoon from the 81st Army Reserve Command.

Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., Army chief of staff, was the distinguished guest at the ceremony.

Sennewald has served in various command and staff positions in the Army for 35 years. He has commanded FORSCOM since June 1984.

Palastra recently completed a tour as commander, I Corps and Fort Lewis at Fort Lewis, Wash. In recent years, he has commanded an air assault brigade and a mechanized infantry division.

Missouri senator addresses AUSA

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

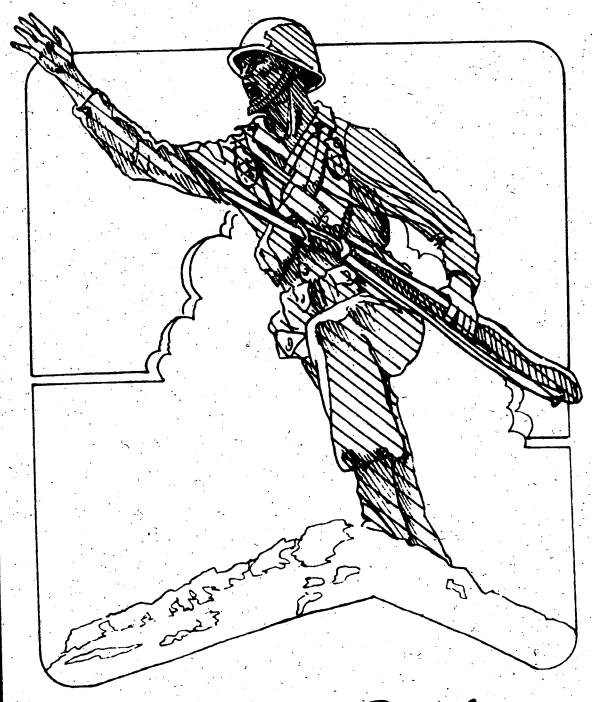
Congressman Ike Skelton was on hand for last week's Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army's general membership meeting at the Noncommisssioned Officers' Club.

The Democratic senator from Missouri spoke to 370 AUSA members and their guests following a flight in from Washington, D.C. where he spent the day voting on a measure to aid the Nicaraguan Contras.

A member of the House Armed Services Committee, Skelton spoke of the amendment he and constituents had worked on to give the anti-Sandinistas $100 million.

"We co-sponsored this measure and it's the first one of this nature to pass," he said.

Skelton went on to say: "If we hope to see freedom spread and flourish then we must be unashamed of our support of those against tyranny."



In addition to the guest speaker, the membership meeting made motions to transfer the presidency from Richard Ford to the new president Lenora Smith.

A number of members received awards including the Cliff O. Livingston Sr. award presented to Jon Hill. The award was given in recognition for being the outstanding citizen of the year and promoting good relations between the military and civilian communities.

Presidents awards were presented to six AUSA members for outstanding contributions to the association and promoting good relations. Those presented with doughboy trophies were; Col. Richard S. Siegfried, commander of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, Lt. Col. Lawrence F. Cousins, Headquarters, 29th Infantry Regiment, CSM Roy C. Owens, post command sergeant major, CSM Ernest C. Farley, 36th Engineer Group, CSM James R. Tidwell, 2nd ITB, and retired MSgt. Norman T. Gaumer.

Are infantry lieutenants confident to fight, lead?

Editor's note: This is the second of a three-part series on the Infantry Officers Basic Course.

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"You have a plan. You have an objective. Your men get started with the objective in mind. But in the course of getting to the objective and taking up fire positions, disorganization sets in. The men look for cover and that scatters them. Fire comes against them and that scatters their thoughts. They no longer think as a group but as individuals. Each man wants to stay where he is. To get them going again as a group, an officer must expose himself to the point of suicide. The men are in a mental slump; they always get that way when they have taken a great risk."

The above is from an account of a World War II battle of an American platoon assaulting a German fort.

The account was written by the platoon leader, 2nd Lt. Robert W. Rideout, shortly after the action in 1944.

Rideout had just led his men against a German position across a 700-yard open area. The platoon routed the Germans and took the fort.

That lieutenant, 42 years ago, did what is still expected of Army lieutenants today: to lead soldiers into combat. That means, as an infantry colonel once told a group of Infantry Officers Basic Course students, that to lead they must "get out front and set the example." The most critical attribute a platoon leader must have, according to history and to IOBC's 2nd Training Battalion, is confidence bolstered by a host of tactical and technical skills.

Does IOBC, a course just 16 weeks long, prepare new lieutenants as platoon combat leaders?

2nd Lt. Jim Orr thinks it does. The airborne Ranger has been an infantry rifle platoon leader for seven months. He leads 1st Platoon, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry of the 10th Mountain Division. He graduated from IOBC 18 months ago.

"I'll say this: IOBC definitely instilled confidence in me. After IOBC I was slated for Ranger School and that's scary to a new second lieutenant. But IOBC instilled confidence in me to be a platoon leader in the long term and instilled confidence in me to complete Ranger School in the short term," Orr said.

Bob Goodrich is the platoon leader of 1st Platoon, Company C, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade. A graduate of IOBC in October 1985 he has also been leading his platoon for seven months.

"IOBC really instilled confidence in me. But you have to understand that while I had a lot of confidence I had no experience. The key is your platoon sergeant.

"A platoon sergeant has years of experience and he is key in giving the platoon leader advice and guidance in leading soldiers," said Goodrich.

Orr concurred with Goodrich on the role of platoon sergeant.

"IOBC covered a lot on counselling and how to deal with and utilize your platoon sergeant. You've got to have a good platoon sergeant to help you over the rough spots," Orr said.

Platoon sergeants seem to have mixed feelings about the effectiveness of IOBC, primarily based on the individuality of the lieutenant.

"I think a lot of how well a platoon leader does when he first takes over depends upon the individual. Some are ready and some are not. I know they get the necessary training but if they're weak in mechanized infantry tactics they have to learn and learn fast," said SSgt. David Conway, a platoon sergeant in the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade.

Another 197th platoon sergeant, SSgt. Nick Baker, believes the only way a platoon leader becomes tactically proficient is through experience. "A new lieutenant may be able to maneuver a platoon but his tactical expertise comes with more experience."

"I think the most important things lieutenants learn in IOBC are to delegate authority to their NCOs, utilize their platoon sergeant tactically in the field and to conduct themselves as officers. They cannot be one of the boys. They have to be the boss," Baker said.

Both sergeants said they believe, overall, that IOBC gives lieutenants a basis to build on.

Infantry troopers 'stick it' to Bayonet Assault Course

1st Brigade OSUT soldiers set records

The infantry soldiers of Company B, 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade finished their one station unit training in a hitting style: they ran the bayonet assault course.

"This was the last real training the company had to go through before graduating. In this heat running the bayonet assault course is tough," said SFC Karl McManus, a drill sergeant with 1st Platoon.

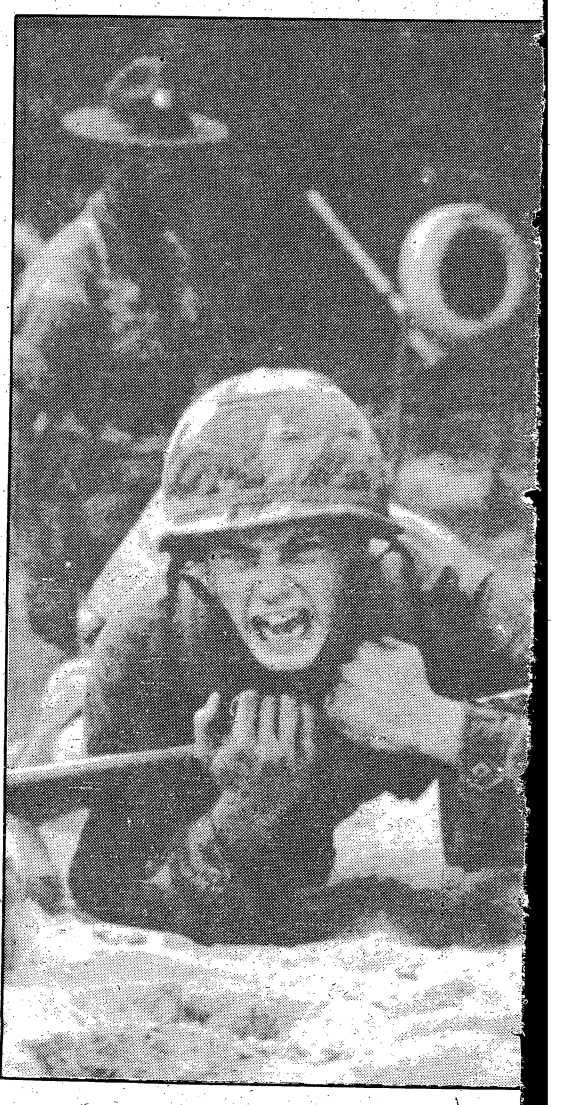
A sweating PFC Robert Wicks thought the bayonet assault course was great.

"This is what I came into the army for: lots of good training and physical activity," beamed Wicks.

Bravo Company was an exceptional unit in that it received three "Eagle Streamers," an unprecedented event, during its training cycle.

A streamer is awarded to a company if it receives a 100-percent go on on its mid-cycle test, its end of cycle test or the Army Physical Readiness Test. Company B accomplished all three.

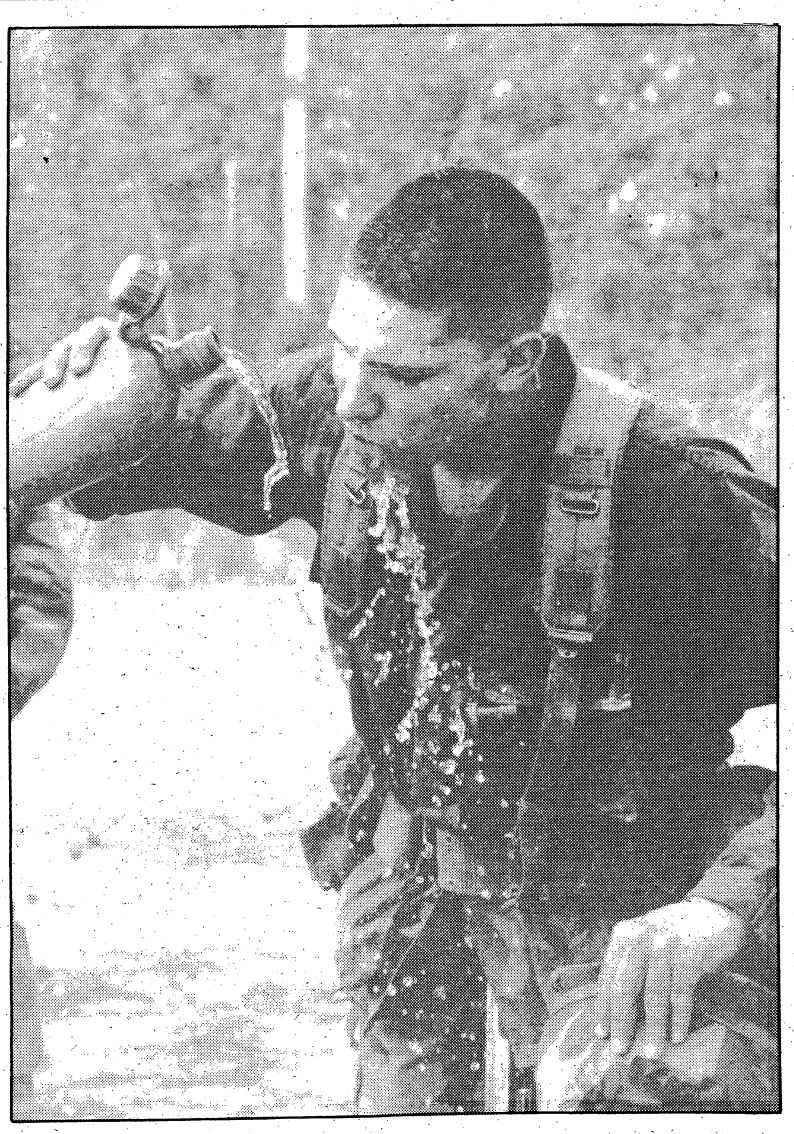
In addition, the company set Brigade records for basic rifle marksmanship and qualification with the tube-launched, optically-sighted, wire guided anti-tank missile system.



"The hard work and long hours pay off in the long run," said 1st Sgt. John Bowie.

"The quality of the drill sergeants plus the many hours of reinforcement training are the reason for the success the company had on our testing," said Pvt. 1 John Duncan, who is slated for assignment to the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry Regiment.

"Good motivation and a demanding physical training program are the reasons for us doing so well in our final PT test and it made this bayonet course a piece of cake," said Pvt. 2 Rodger Belley.



Urged on by their drill sergeant, soldiers hurdle obstacles and move on to more bayonet targets.

Gutting it out in a max effort, Pvt. 1 Eric time.

Former infantry officer new post chaplain

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Chaplain (Col.) Roy Mathis is glad to be wearing his battle dress uniform again.

The former infantry officer arrived on Fort Benning last week to assume the job of post chaplain, and he said he's excited to be back working with troops again.

"Most of my career has been spent in troop assignments, several with Airborne units, so the last three years away has been a big change," he said.

Mathis recently graduated from the War College at the National Defense University, Fort McNair, Washington, D.C. Prior to that assignment, he served as a training officer at the Pentagon.

He said now that he's back with the troops, his number one goal is to see that Fort Benning's soldiers and their families have a good religious ministry program.

"Soldiers always come first. They're our reason for being here," Mathis said. "Chaplains have a unique opportunity to serve the soldiers, through worship services, pastoral care, counseling and religious education."

He said chaplains should go to where the troops are to provide a unit ministry. "If they're in the field, in the training areas, jumping from aircraft, that's where the chaplains should be working with them," he said.

It's good for the soldiers, but also good for the chaplains as well, Mathis said. "It makes the chaplains more knowledgeable and have a better understanding of the soldiers they're ministering to," he said.

Army chaplains have to be more than clergymen, Mathis said. "With their unique training, they are also soldiers who know a soldier's needs, hurts, and joys," he said. "The chaplain has to love soldiers, hurt when they hurt, cry when they cry, and rejoice when they rejoice."

Chaplains also play a vital role in living the Army's values, Mathis said. "Of course they're humans and make mistakes, but a chaplain has to be a model for soldiers of what is right and good and honest."

He said that a chaplain has some immediate credibility with troops when he arrives in a unit, but it's up to the individual clergyman to build on this initial impression.

"The chaplain has to put the Army and his soldiers first. A troop can see right away if a chaplain is a counterfeit, not really interested in people and their problems," Mathis said.

He said chaplains have an important role to play this year, since the Army's theme is values. "All of our values, if we trace them back far enough, are rooted in religious faith, and chaplains have a lot to say about that. It's up to them to help soldiers realize the importance of values.

"Chaplains have to teach the things that are good, honest and right, because these will make for a better Army and a better life for soldiers," Mathis said.

A successful chaplain is one who puts ministering to soldiers and their families first, above his own personal needs or career goals, Mathis said. "He has to be able to communicate, understand soldiers and their problems, go where they go, eat what they eat, sleep where they sleep, in order to serve them to the fullest," he said.

Mathis said he's impressed with the chaplains at Fort Benning. "Chaplain Ortiz told me they're a super bunch, and I had heard about them from others. That's one reason I volunteered to come to Fort Benning," he said.

Mathis will be joined by his wife Nancy, in August, when they move into post quarters.

In his spare time he enjoys running, and has participated in several 10 kilometer races. He said he's been running with different units each morning and hopes to eventually run with all of them.

Chaplain (Col.) Roy Mathis relaxes in his new office.

Benning marksmen blast old shooting records

Dryke takes skeet championship; Buljung guns way to premier pistoleer

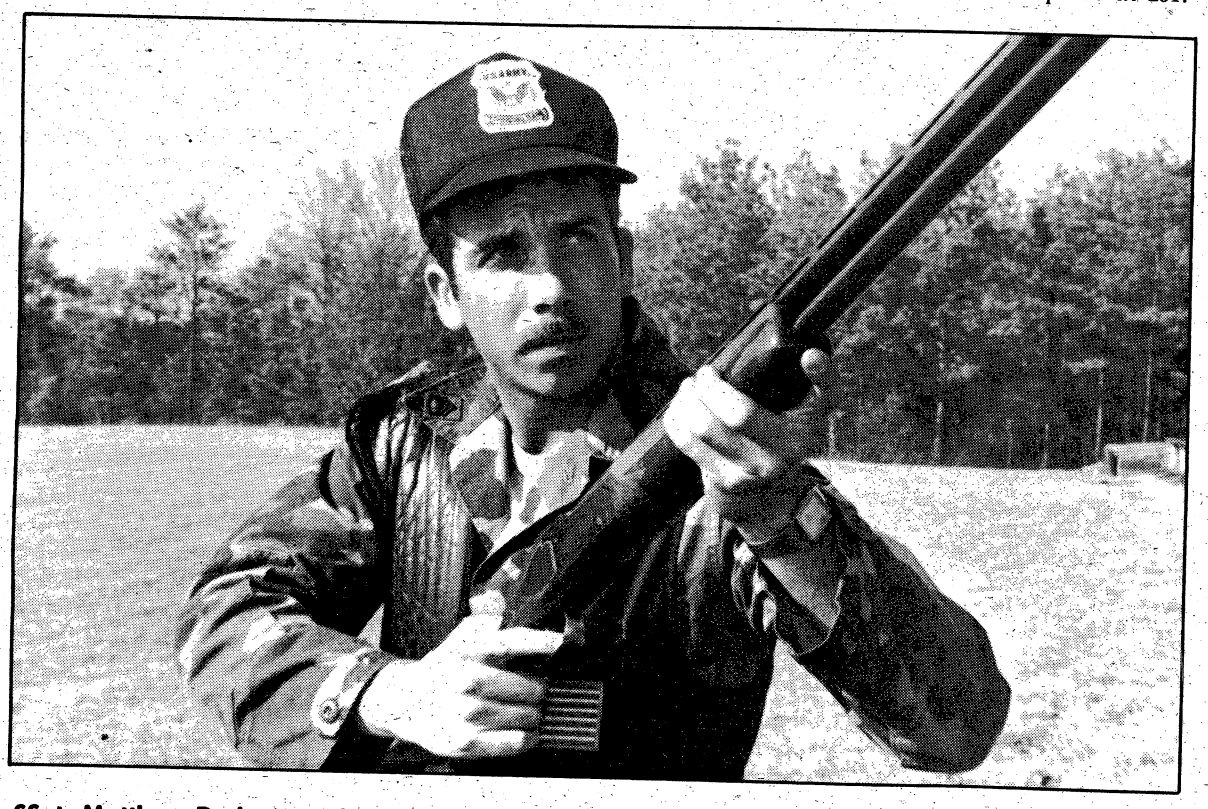
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit PAO

USAMU's SSgt. Matthew Dryke and MSgt. Erich Buljung, won national individual shooting titles during this year's annual U.S. Championships in Chino, Calif., June 15 to 27.



In the shotgun events, Dryke posted a new national record on the way to winning his seventh U.S. Skeet Championship.

Dryke, the 1984 Olympic gold medal winner, scored a four total of 397 out of 400 targets to break his own national record of 396 set in 1979.

During his record run, Dryke fired rounds of 100-100-97-100, to finish six targets ahead of teammate SFC Alger Mullins, who placed second overall at 391. Former USAMU member, Dean Clark, finished third with a total of 388.

The National Skeet Team title was won by the U.S. Army "Blue" squad composed of Dryke, Mullins and Sgt. Joe Dickson. The trio fired a winning total of 436 out of 450 to finish one target in front of the USAR team at 435.

Dryke and Mullins also teamed up to win the National Two Man Championship with a combined total of 294 out of 300. The USAR finished in second place at 291.

SSgt. Matthew Dryke scored a new record while winning his seventh National Skeet title during this year's U.S. Championship.

In pistol events, MSgt. Buljung won an individual championship and also won the silver and bronze medal in two other events.

Buljung scored a total of 1,181 out of 1,200 points to win the National Centerfire Championship over Army reservist Donald Nygord, who placed four points back at 1,177.

In the Standard Pistol event, Buljung finished second by a narrow one point margin to Army reservist Steve Reiter. Buljung scored 1,149 out of 1,200 to Reiter's winning total of 1,150.

Buljung also finished third in the Free Pistol championship behind Donald Nygord and Darius Young of the Army Reserve. USAMU's SFC Jimmie McCoy placed fourth in both in both the Standard and Free Pistol events.

More than 600 of the top shooters from across the country competed in this year's U.S. Shooting Championships. The matches were at the site of the 1984 Olympic Shooting events in Chino, Calif.

This year's events were also used as part of the final tryouts for the 1986 U.S. Shooting Team that will participate in the World Shooting Championships to be in Suhl, East Germany from Sept. 2-14. The World 300 Meter events will be in Skovade, Sweden from August 25 to Sept. 2.

Individuals who have been selected to the U.S. team thus far are Dryke, Mullins in skeet events, while Lt. Col. Lones Wigger, Maj. Robert Aylward and Capt. Glenn Dubis have been selected for 300 Meter Rifle events.

New Record

In other shooting competition completed last weekend, members of the U.S. Army Rifle Team set a new record during the Virginia State Championships the Quantico Marine Corps Base.

The new national mark was established by the Army "Blue" squad during the 1,000 yard Long Range Team championships.

The squad of Maj. Edward Schumacher, SFC Tommy Covington, SFC Jeffrey Lear and SP4 Vincent Greiner scored a record total of 795 out of 800 to raise the old mark of 793.

The record setting "Blue" team was coached by SSgt. Lewis Silvis, who also led the Army squad to last year's National Long Range Team title at Camp Perry, Ohio.

SFC Carl Sprouse posted the winning total in the individual Long Range championhip, with a perfect score of 200 out of 200 points.

In the Virginia State Service Rifle events, Sgt. Jeffrey Larosa out-scored the field with a final aggregate of 790 out of 800. He finished two points ahead of Marine competitor SSgt. Jack Caseman who placed second at 788.

Other individual winners included SFC Tommy Covington in the Rapid Fire Championship with 398 out of 400, while Larosa also won the Slow Fire title with 397 out of 400.

The Virginia State Team championship was won by the U.S. Army "Blue" squad with total of 1,965 out of 2,000 points. SSgt. Lewis Silvis was again the winning team coach. The U.S. Army "Gold" squad placed second.

NCO ponders fishing expedition: lessons learned but can Joe be trusted?

by Dick Hines
Noncommissioned Officer Academy

"0-dark thirty" on Saturday morning my fishing buddy, Joe, and I were to leave home for our favorite crappie hole.

As usual, Joe was still asleep, the boat was not hooked up nor the fishing tackle loaded. "00-dark thirty" we finally headed for the river.

Joe forgot to put Harriet's car in the shop, so we go back to his house. I drive the car to the service station while Joe follows with the truck. Now we head for the river with six dozen minnows that Joe had been fattening up all week.

Finally on the water and with the boat running good, Joe decides to speed up in order to keep the Jon Boat with the 115 Merc from passing us. You can guess who won. Six dozen minnows and 40 pounds of crappie later, we motored up to Uchee Creek for more bait. After Mr. Bruce had filled Joe, myself and the minnow bucket up, we headed back to our spot.

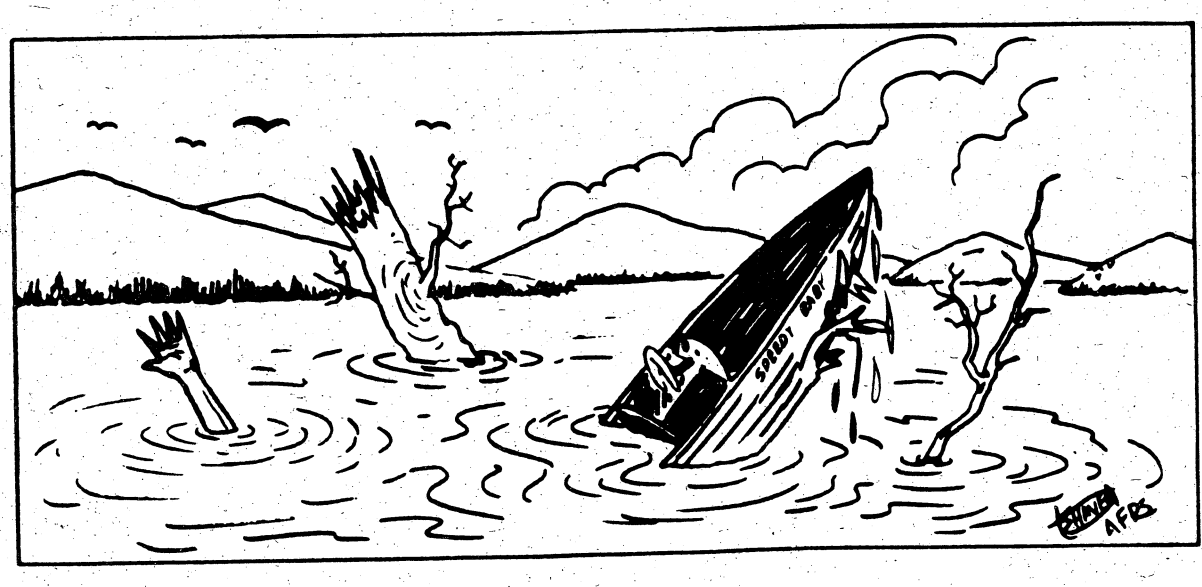
Upon arrival, Joe faithfully grabs his old fish basket with rope on it and puts the 40 pounds of crappie in the water with rope tied to the throttle, even though I had told him that the fish were too heavy for a basket. But if you know Joe like I know Joe, you know that my words were wasted on the wind.

A dozen more crappie in the boat, and we attempt to reposition the boat to get closer to the submerged trees and Joe's hand slips and without warning the boat jumps forward, causing me to fall backwards with my head nearly in the water (I was standing). The fish basket is now in 10 feet of water and Joe and I are trying to figure out what happened.

After much cussing and a lot of wishful thinking, reality sets in, the fish are gone, I am scared from nearly drowning and mad at Joe for his rotten rope and basket.

After losing several treble hooks trying to retrieve the basket, I go back to fishing, while Joe was still cussing, basket casting and berating himself. Since I could not calm Joe down, we left for home with the 20 or so crappie I caught while Joe was otherwise engaged.

As we drove away from the ramp, I tried to put the lost crappie, near drowning, and Joe's rotten rope behind me. I cautioned Joe to keep his speed reasonable because of the wildlife we had seen on the road earlier. No sooner than I said this than a small deer darted in front of the truck, but Joe swerved, boat and all, and missed it, only to have it change its mind and dart back in front of us and get hit. Nearly a mile further up the road, I suggested that we go back for the deer and take it out of its misery. Joe agrees, slams on brakes, backs up to the spot and we locate the deer.



Joe quickly put it out of its misery, slung it in back of the truck, and off we go, 55 mph north bound on Highway 27. Near Harmony Church a small car runs a stop sign 100 feet in front of us and tries to head north also. Brakes locked, tires screeching, boat careening from side to side, Joe brings the big truck to a near stand still while two very frightened passengers in the small car try to apologize, but Joe, with his cigar half swallowed and me on the floorboard of the truck, is in no mood for apologies.

While eating deer steaks the next day, I told Joe that it would be awhile before we fished together again, but there were a lot of safety lessons to be learned from the trip:

- Don't be in a hurry on water or land.
- Wear life jackets while on the water.
- Check position of passengers before starting your boat.
- Look out for wildlife on and around roadways near Fort Benning.
- Safeguard your catch by putting it on ice.
- Take in fish and minnow baskets before starting the motor of the boat.
- Drive defensively.

Joe is a fine neighbor, good friend and sportsman, but I am still not sure whether we will ever fish together again.

This is a true story.

Officer 'jumps' into success as athlete, says motivation key

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

When a career excels by great leaps and bounds, one finds an individual greatly motivated.

Such an individual, Ralph B. Spry, represented the Army in the high jump competition of the Interservice Track and Field Championships recently run in San Diego, Calif.

The motivation to excel may come from many factors.

"Both myself and wife Sylvia are active christians and put God first in our lives. We attempt to excel that he may be glorified, for without the Lord there would be no such motivation," Spry said.

Spry, who is the Army Emergency Relief Officer, is "being all that he can be".

His best jump is recorded at 27 feet, 5 1/4 inches, though a jump of 24 feet, 7 1/2 inches was enough to claim first in the competition and send him on to the CISM meet set for Rome, Italy in mid-August.

Jumps of these distances have Spry ranked among the top 10 in the country and with a sucessful European tour, he awaits the top ranks in the world.

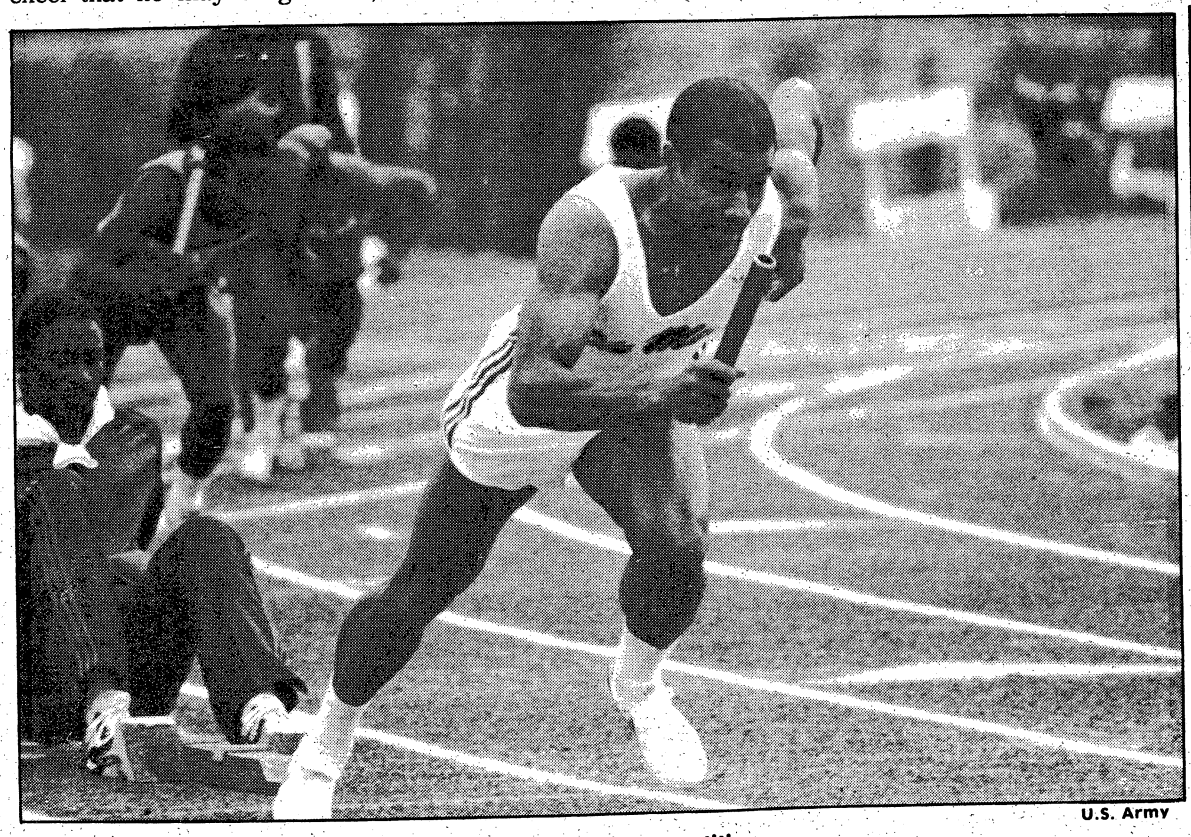
"I feel real good and look forward to busting 27-feet jumps in the upcoming tour," Spry said.

Spry, 5 foot, 8 inches, keeps physically strong through year-round training, doing his hard workouts during the off-season, and working on quality and speed during the track and field season. But, he credits a lot of his mental strength to the his wife.

"Sylvia is behind me 100 percent and gives me the positive thinking needed when I get down. She keeps urging me onward, giving the the right push when needed," said Spry.

This urging has pushed Spry into the world-class standings.

He has been accepted by The Athletic Congress as a "World-Class" athlete and will began training in September for the 1988 Pan Am and Olympic games.



He will be coached by Joe Walker of the University of Florida, who was also his coach during his track and field days at the University of Mississippi.

Walker has also coached other world-class athletes, such as Larry Meyers, a 1984 gold medalist.

Spry also placed third in the interservice 100-meter dash, where he pulled a hamstring that limited his performance.

"I pulled the hamstring about 70 meters into the race, and don't know how I went the additional 30 meters, and even more amazing, was blessed to finish third," said Spry.

With this type dedication and motivation, to what heights can an athlete leap..."to the 1988 olympics and beyond," said Spry.

Hot tips

Staying cool and comfortable is a personal as well as a health and safety concern with the extremely hot weather we've been experiencing. You can do this by wearing cool fabrics.

Polyester may be a miracle fiber of no wrinkles, but it is not cool. This is because it holds in body moisture and oils making you feel hot and sticky.

Cotton, on the other hand, is very absorbent. It acts like a natural air conditioner. So, in this hot weather it makes sense to wear clothes made of cotton or a blend of polyester and cotton, for a cool, as well as a wrinkle-resistant appearance.

Wear light-weight, light-colored clothing that is loosely fitting to allow body moisture to evaporate and air to circulate next to the skin.

Lieutenant

Both were adamant about a lieutenant having a good relationship with his platoon sergeant.

Conway and Baker also agreed that a new platoon leader should learn in IOBC not to make too many radical changes.

"They need to adjust to how the unit operates. If they want to make changes, fine, but make sure they're needed changes. I get the impression that this is stressed in IOBC and that's positive," Conway said.

Goodrich, who will soon be a first lieutenant, said the most positive aspect about IOBC for him was the technical knowledge that he gained from it.

"I learned a lot about weapons, communications, NBC and also got a good basis for tactics."

Orr felt differently about what he gained from the course.

"They touched on a lot of different types of things. We learned quite a bit about tactics and weapons but the best thing about IOBC was all the leadership training we got. That was a big plus. After Ranger School all the leadership training I received in IOBC really came together for me," Orr said.

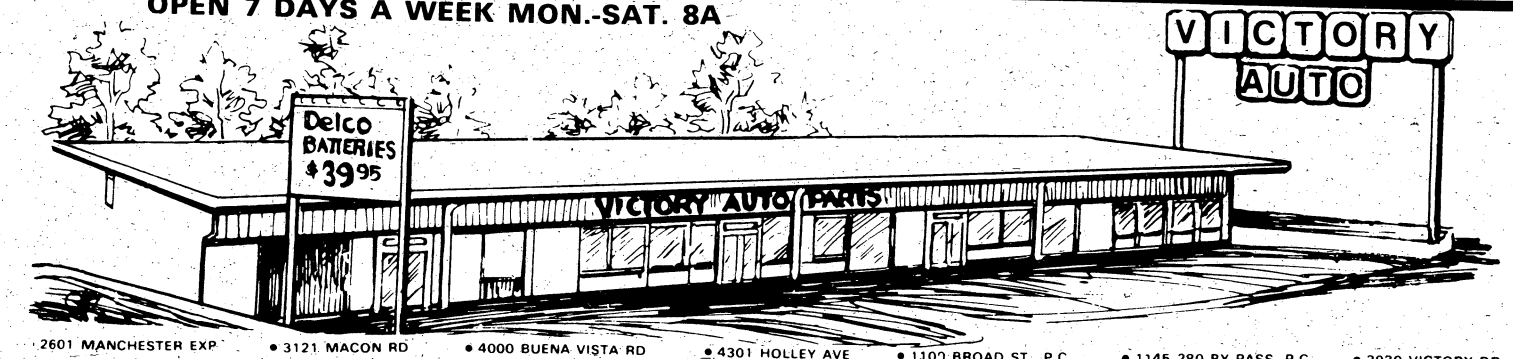
Orr said that he wished he had received more training on specifics, especially on how to run live-fire ranges and in dealing with soldiers, one on one.

"I realize they only have so much time but I run a lot of ranges and deal with soldiers on a daily basis. I needed more training in this area," said Orr.

Goodrich believes more time should have been spent in the field.

"I think they should try to track lieutenants more closely and, depending upon their assignment to a light or mechanized unit, give you additional training in that. You have to learn both but I feel there should be more of a concentration," Goodrich said.

Are IOBC graduates ready to go to combat and confident enough to expose themselves "to the point of suicide" in leading their soldiers?



"I don't feel that, directly after IOBC, I was fully ready to lead a platoon in combat. After Ranger School, yes. But maybe that's just me. If I would have gone to combat after IOBC I would have needed a lot of help," Orr said.

1st Lt. David Hutchings finished IOBC 14 months ago. He is currently a platoon leader in the 10th Mountain Division.

"When I finished IOBC I was confident in taking over my first platoon. But I could not have led a unit in combat.

"Besides, who really knows if they're ready for combat until the time comes?" Hutchings asked.

Soldier convicted for assault

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

A 2nd Infantry Training Brigade soldier was sentenced to six months in jail and a bad conduct discharge following his conviction for aggravated assault.

The court-martial panel rejected the defendant's claim that he was acting in self-defense when he struck the victim in the head with the lower half of a wooden guidon.

Capt. Thomas Shoener, defense counsel, argued that the victim of the assault was the aggressor and that his client reasonably feared that he would be seriously injured if he did not take steps to protect himself.

Capt. Kurt Meckstroth, prosecutor, urged the court members to reject the self defense claim because the earlier confrontation between the two soldiers had ended and the accused was no longer in danger. In addition, Meckstroth argued that the accused used excessive force when he struck the unarmed victim with the wooden guidon.

Evidence at the trial showed that the victim was rendered unconscious by the blow and suffered a broken jaw. The oral surgeon who treated the victim testified that more serious injuries or even death could have resulted from the blow.

The soldier was convicted and sentenced to a bad conduct discharge, confinement for six months, forfeiture of two-thirds of his pay per month for six months and reduced to grade E-1.

VA Q&A

Editor's Note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — Why are "points" charged on VA loans?

A — Generally, lenders require discount points (a percentage of the loan) when they consider the maximum VA interest rate to be too low to produce the yield or income that other investments would provide. The amount of discount to be paid is a matter of negotiation between the seller and the lender.

Q — My husband died from a service-connected disability and I have not remarried. Is it possible for me to obtain a VA guaranty on a home loan?

A — You would qualify for a certificate of eligibility to obtain a VA guaranty on a home loan. Eligibility for the actual loan would be determined by the lender.

Q — I have been participating in the VA work study program while attending school under the GI Bill. Circumstances have forced me to withdraw from school. How can I satisfy my obligation on the remaining hours of the work study contract?

A — You must work the remaining hours for which you received advanced payment.

Residents reminded to conserve water

Post residents are reminded that below average rainfall amounts means Fort Benning must continue to conserve water.

Fort Benning Regulation 11-27 states that lawns may be watered twice a week for four hours each day, between the hours of 6 p.m. and 6 a.m.

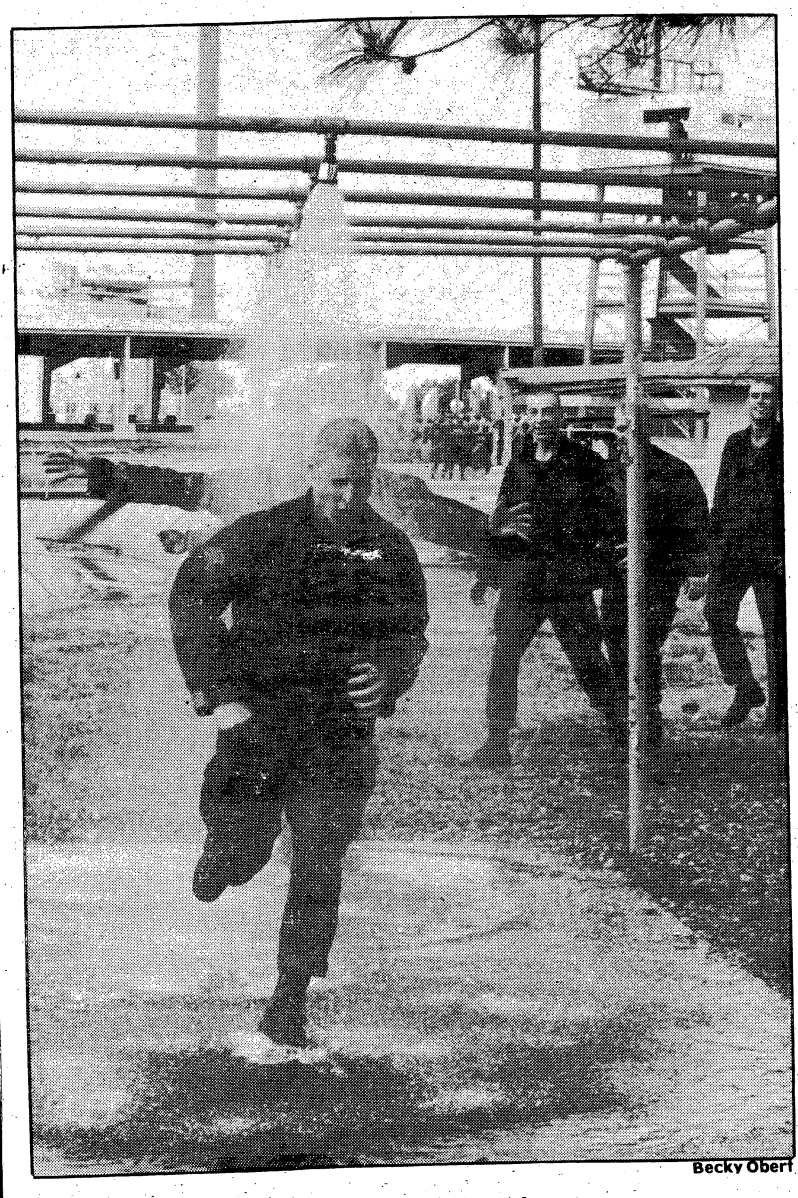
Privately owned vehicles may be washed during the same hours, or at approved wash rack facilities during normal operating hours.

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing has established a schedule for watering lawns and washing vehicles in family housing areas. It is as follows:

Monday and Thursday: South Main Post, North Main Post and Upatoi Terrace;

Tuesday and Friday: Custer Terrace and McGraw Manor;

Wednesday and Saturday: Davis Hills and Bouton Heights.



New enlistees face retirement pay cuts

Beginning August 1, retirement pay benefits for new entrants into the armed forces who serve 20 years will be reduced to 40 percent of the highest three years of basic pay, rather than the current 50 percent.

Army officials stress that current active and retired servicemembers are not affected by this change.

Heat injury threat rises with mercury

Becky Obert

Airborne students cool down in an outdoor shower.

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

As temperatures passed the 100 degree Fahrenheit mark on Fort Benning this week, the threat of heat injuries became an even greater danger to soldiers.

According to Air Force SSgt. Raymond Hoetger, Detachment 10, 5th Weather Squadron, the mercury hit the 100 degree mark early in the week and remained high. Wednesday a high of 102 was recorded. Thursday morning started with a cool 76 degrees Fahrenheit, but by afternoon the mercury had risen to 103. The expected forecast for today is a high of 102 degrees and a low of 76.

Commanders have become increasingly aware of the potential dangers of the heat. "It is very possible for a soldier to experience a significant heat injury even when the ambient air temperature is in the 'mild' range," said Dr. (Col.) John C. Richards, commander, Martin Army Community Hospital.

Richards also said, "The two most important causes of heat injury are high humidity (with or without high temperatures) in the environment and lack of acclimatization of the soldier. These facts must be considered in the development of training schedules in Georgia."

According to Maj. Charles C. Boger, environmental officer at Preventive Medicine, other factors also contribute to heat injuries.

"Command influence must be used to make sure soldiers drink water," Boger said.

"Thirst is not always a good indicator, just because you're not thirsty it does not mean you do not need water," Boger said.

The recent high temperatures have caused some units to curtail training.. "It sure slowed us down," said SFC Billy D. Bailey senior drill sergeant, Company A 1st Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

When temperatures reach Category 4, strenuous training must be curtailed. According to Bailey "it reached 'Cat 4' every day this week."

In spite of the precautions heat injuries do occur.

According to Boger the most frequent heat injuries are heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke.

But these injuries can be avoided if they are detected early. Knowing the symptoms may save a life.

Heat cramp symptoms are active sweating and muscle cramps. With heat exhaustion, the signs to watch for are sweating, headache, weakness, short breath, palpitations, nausea and vomiting. As with heat stroke there is a high body temperature, hot, dry skin, mental confusion, collapse, sudden loss of consciousness and convulsions.

Heat casualities may exhibit combinations of the above symptoms or may progress quickly

Benning implements Army smoking policy

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Everyone on Fort Benning is aware, I am sure, of the no smoking policy except in designated areas instituted by the Army.

This policy, currently being enforced at Benning, is to encourage soldiers and civil service personnel to cut down on or even quit using cigarettes because Army leadership believes smoking impairs overall readiness.

C. Everett Koop, the U.S. Surgeon General, has called smoking the country's top health problem; 75 percent of all adults are non-smokers who face possible health damage from tobacco smoke.

Dr. Alfred Munzer, testifying to the Congress on behalf of the American Lung Association, says studies indicate that non-smoker exposure to tobacco smoke "increases the risk of heart disease."

The American Cancer Society says that more smokers die of lung cancer each year than non-smokers.

The Tobacco Institute, representing American tobacco and cigarette companies, says that there is no scientific proof to a "cause-effect relationship" between tobacco smoke and lung cancer in non-smokers. They also say, in general, that smoking hasn't been scientifically proven to cause lung cancer.

Who is right?

Let's draw an allegory to illustrate a point.

If, in an ocean inlet in Florida set up for swimming, 500 swimmers died from injuries sustained by what appeared to be shark bites, the community would be compelled to close the area to swimmers for the good of all.

What if a hypothetical organization called the Free Swimmer's Society stated that there was no scientific proof to a "cause-effect relationship" between man-eating sharks and the 500 swimmers' deaths in the swimming area and demanded that the area be reopened to swimmers?

What if this Free Swimmer's Society was the company that owned and operated the inlet swimming area and was making a profit off of the swimmers using the waters?

Wouldn't you be just a little skeptical as to the motivation behind the Society wanting the area to be open to swimmers? I would.

Isn't this the same situation that tobacco companies are in? The evidence is not conclusive but hundreds of people are dying each year from lung cancer as a result of smoking, although it can't be scientifically proven. At the same time, tobacco companies are making huge profits as people slowly kill themselves.

Thad Roberson

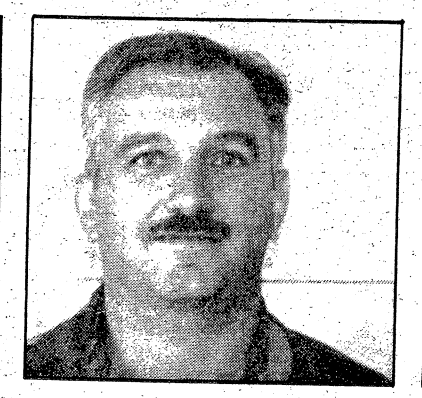
MSgt. James Cousins puts up a no smoking sign in Building 4.

So what will this Army smoking ban do? Probably keep hundreds more people from killing themselves.

It takes live soldiers to win a war. It takes live civilians to support the Army during a war. The Army has done smokers and non-smokers a big favor. It's given smokers the motivation to cut back and even quit. It's given non-smokers air that's a little better to breathe. I think we'll all benefit from this smoking ban.

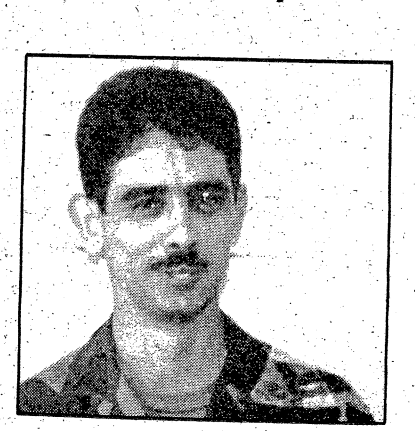
Of course, many at Fort Benning will attempt and succeed in circumventing the no smoking ban. That seems dumb to me: they're betting their lives that those tobacco companies are right but the odds seem pretty uneven to me.

Various voices



On Monday, Fort Benning implemented its no smoking policy to bring the post on line with the Secretary of the Army's smoking cessation plan. What do think of the local policy?

SSgt. Dominick P. Casisse, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry — "I consider it an infringement on my rights. I am 33 years old, still get 300 on my PT test and I am still going to smoke. The most it will do is hurt productivity."



Sgt. Jeff A. Palmer, U. S. Army Markmanship Unit — "Where an individual smokes has to be regulated. I kicked the habit three years ago. Non-smokers do not want to continually breathe in someone else's smoke."

SSgt. John S. Johnson, Advanced Non-commissioned Officers Course - "In that I recently quit smoking, I am still lenient toward those who do smoke. The no smoking policy violates individual rights. Not only am I against the local policy, but I am also against the California decision on smoking in the business place."

John Griggs, Community Recreation Division — The smoking areas designated because of the new policy are a little extreme. But the no smoking rule is an advantage for those who do not smoke. Though I do smoke, I am encouraged to stop, because of the inconvenience."

SFC Johnny Gonzales, Advanced Non-commissioned Officers Course - "It is not fair to harass individuals in order to persuade them to not smoke. If I want to smoke, it is my business. It is my life and I should be able to do with it what I will."

Op-Ed

Victims of terrorism earned their Purple Heart medals

by Joseph Ferrare
Army News Service

BERLIN, WEST GERMANY — Some say La Belle victims didn't deserve awards, but the rules of war have changed.

The undercurrent to the May 26 award ceremony, in which 35 soldiers and three airmen who were injured in the La Belle bombing were awarded the Purple Heart medal, can only be called bizarre. Bizarre because there are those who think some, if not all, of those awarded didn't deserve awards.

The thinking is that these soldiers weren't on a battlefield and some weren't injured badly, so why do they deserve Purple Hearts? We think it's clear, as does the President of the United States who in February 1984 signed an executive order authorizing Purple Hearts to those injured by terrorist action.

Purple Hearts are awarded to those who are wounded by the enemy in combat. The problem for the nay-sayers who think the awards are unwarranted is that they didn't hear the bugle and saw no advance of enemy soldiers. The crux of the question is not where the soldiers were when they were hurt, nor how badly, but why they were hurt. In this case it's clear: they were picked out because they were American soldiers, just like any soldier on the battlefield is picked out for being an American soldier.

Terrorism is recognized as warfare, plain and simple. It may be that some people have trouble seeing the connection, but it's clear when put in context. In the past, armies met on battlefields and played by gentlemen's rules of warfare. Later, as we learned during Vietnam, guerrilla warfare allowed a weaker force to exact a toll on enemy armies. Terrorism is the final form of this degeneration. Through their acts terrorists hope to get the victims and attention they could never hope to get through normal or even guerilla means.

We must not be confused. Though it is a degenerative form of warfare, it is warfare nonetheless. So it follows that soldiers wounded by this type of warfare should get the same benefits as their predecessors who suffered in the trenches of World War I or at the hands of guerillas in Vietnam.

Those who deny the reality of this warfare must then also deny the sacrifice made by the Marines killed in Beirut, the sailor killed aboard a TransWorld Airlines flight and all the other victims of terrorism who are chosen because they are in the American Armed Forces.

Just because the enemy chooses to hit where we are not in a position to defend — because he has no chance of succeeding if we are — doesn't mean it's not an act of war. By saying those hurt don't deserve their awards, the nay-sayers are denying the existence of state-sponsored terrorism, something everyone with sense agrees exists.

We leave these nay-sayers with an observation. Just because those who did the attacking were cowards, doesn't mean those hur were cowards, opportunists o anything but what they were American soldiers hurt becaus they were American soldiers Hence the Purple Heart.

Reader searches for kind soldier who helped her

Dear Editor:

Monday, June 30, my children and I were in the Columbus Square Mall. My daughter Christy fell and cut her head badly.

While I was trying to stop the bleeding — and everyone else just seemed to be non-concerned — a soldier from Fort Benning, by the name of Newsome, and his fiance, stopped to help me!

Their help was greatly appreciated. They took time to stay with us and drive us to the hospital.

As things were so confused, I did not get to thank them properly or get Newsome's full name or rank.

My husband and I would like to get in touch with him and his fiance Linda.

Hopefully after reading this, he will contact us.

Thank you Newsome and Linda!

Peruvians train on despite record heat

'This weather's like desert terrain at home,' foreign students say

Story and photos by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas

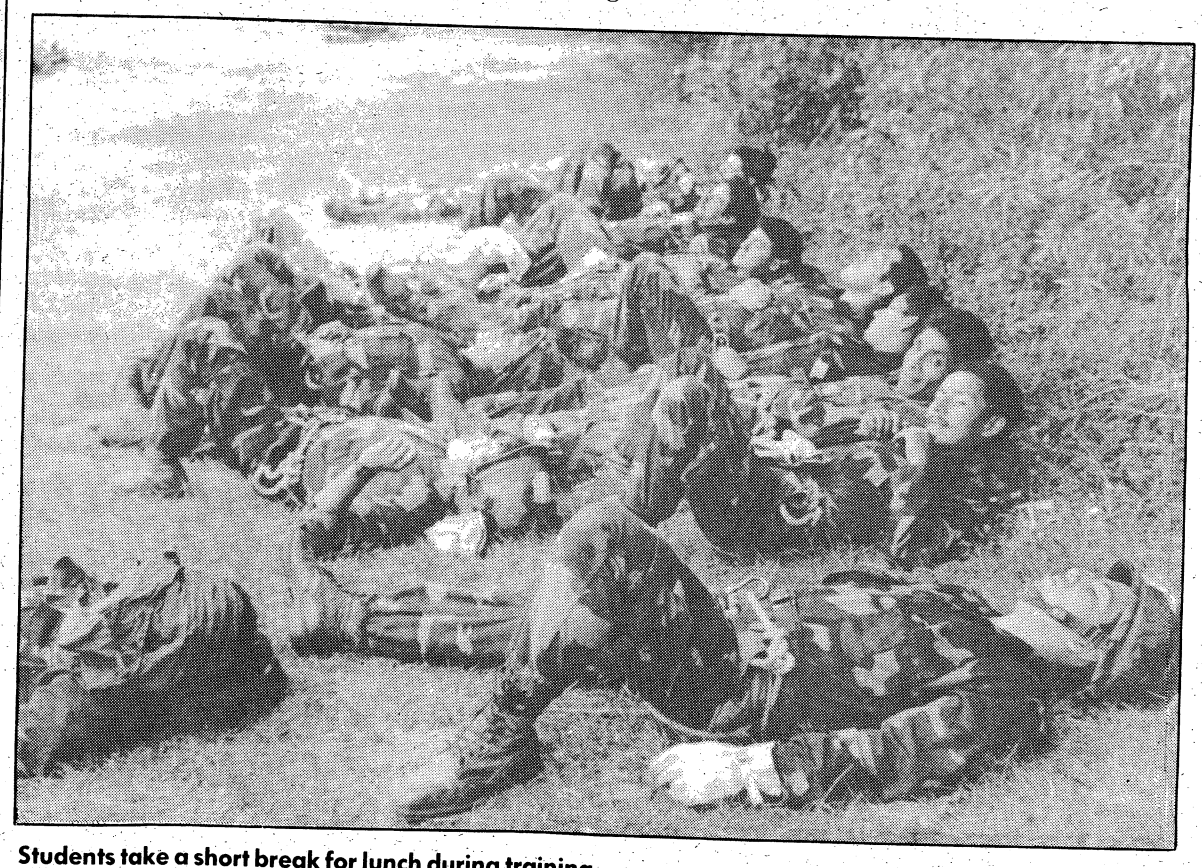
Although 'Old Sol' scorched the arid Fort Benning terrain in past weeks with 100 degree Fahrenheit temperatures, it didn't phase ongoing training.

In fact, U.S. and Latin American guest instructors from the U.S. Army School of the Americas felt right at home while conducting tower and aerial rappelling training for 25 officers and non-commissioned officers from Peru in the patrolling operations course.

"This type of climate is similar to a great part of our desert terrain in Peru," said one Peruvian NCO as he wiped his sweaty brow.

The five-week course gives students the necessary training to attain individual proficiency in small unit patrolling and airmobile operations.

Some of the Peruvian NCOs, according to Capt. Randolph Kranepuhl, patrolling division officer, Department of Combat Operations, are equivalent to force reconnaissance NCOs in the U.S. Marine Corps. "These are highly-trained NCOs. Many are SCUBA and special forces qualified," Kranepuhl said.



"The Peruvian officer students are less experienced since they recently graduated from officer candidate school in Peru," he said.

During this training, USARSA received support from Lawson Army Airfield's Rotary Wing Flight Support Branch. They provided two UH-1H "Hueys" for the aerial rappelling.

Mexican Army 1st Lt. Eduardo Guerrero, a patrolling division guest instructor, commented on how some students performed during training. "The students did very well. The NCOs have good rappelling experience," Guerrero said. Guerrero graduated from a commando course in Mexico — that is similar to the U.S. Army Ranger course.

Engineers brush up basic soldier skills during FTX

by Steven Wabnitz
43rd Engineer Battalion

The plan was simple: get the soldiers into the field and train them to the Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program standards.

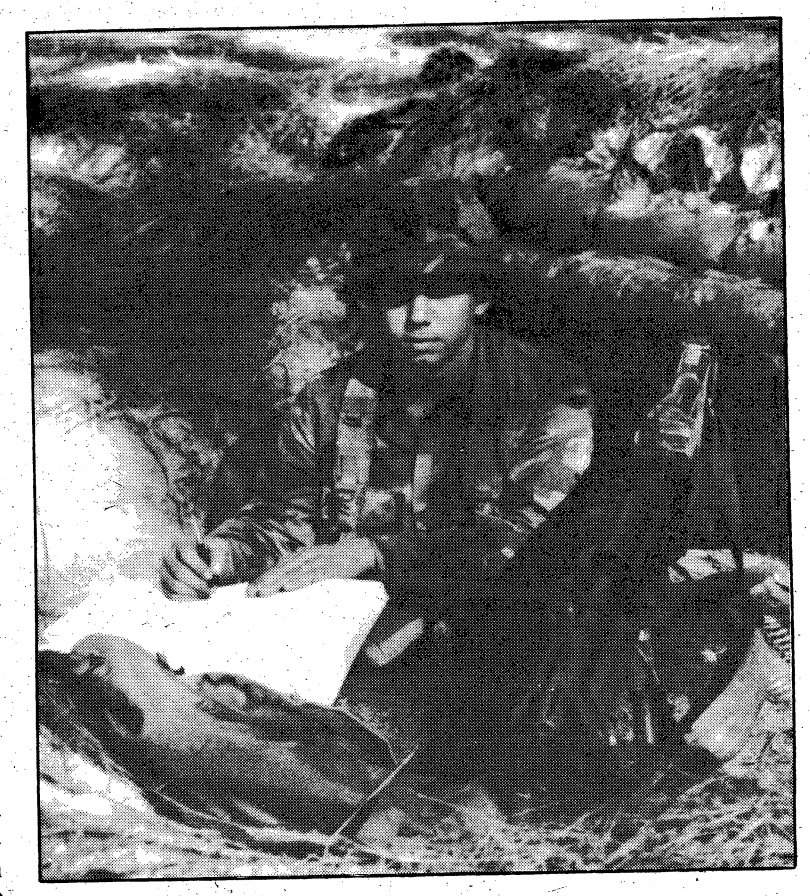
The problem faced was that the soldiers hadn't been on a normal field training exercise in more than a year.

Rather than routine training exercises, the troops from Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group had participated in major exercises such as Gallant Eagle '85 at the National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Calif. and Exercise Frozen Seahorse conducted by the "workhorses" of the 36th Engineer Group, at Fort McCoy, Wis. during the dead of winter.

Members of Co. B also deployed to Honduras for three months on a major road building exercise.

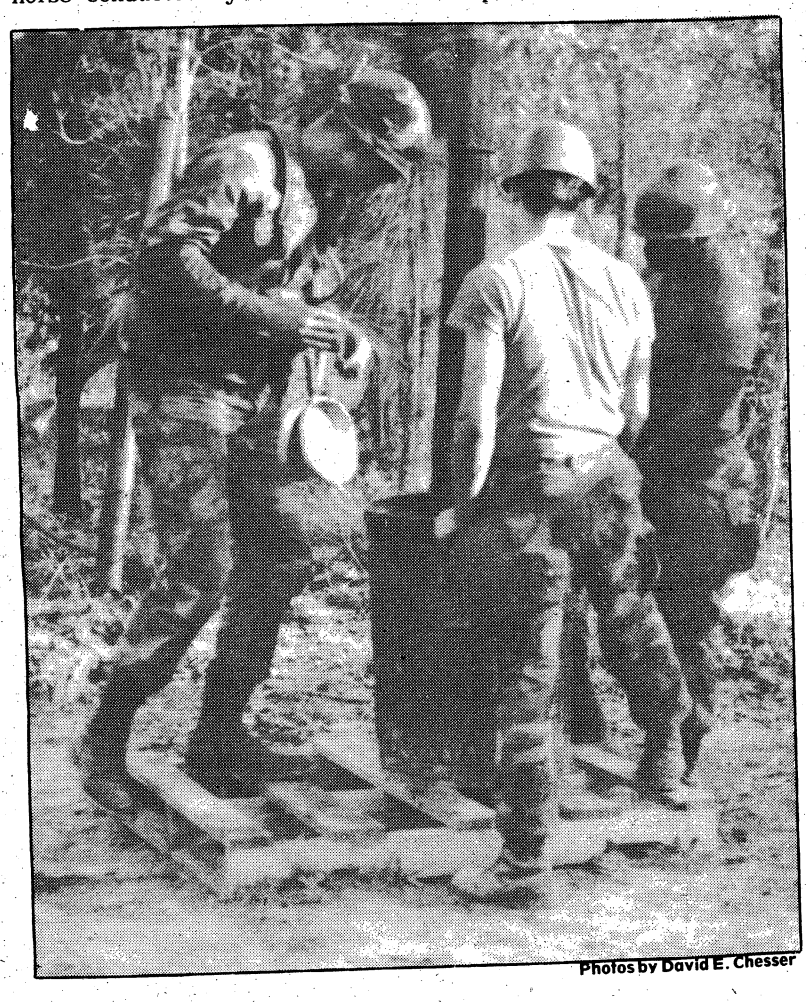
So, the soldiers needed to brush up on how to dig a fox hole position, among other skills.

In an attempt to refresh the basic soldier skills, the unit took to the field. The road to recovery began with the construction of the perimeter and camouflage, digging in and preparing to defend against the opposing force.



The initial FTX concentrated on the basics and as the plan developed a second FTX was targeted for training using the weaknesses from these basics as the building points.

The pre-ARTEP, conducted in April, had the company identifying the weaknesses and enabled the soldiers to do some fine tuning. The following weeks were filled with classes and preparation.



The results were successful. In a matter of six days the soldiers included among their missions the building of mess sheds with concrete foundations for the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade and briefing bays and benches for the Ranger School.

They also upgraded two airstrips, cleared lots, constructed a parking lot and built a new drainage system for the Hunt Club. Another project was to upgrade an access road at Martin Army Community Hospital.

The combat missions for reconnaissance and engineer demolitions were tackled along with an extended mission to reorganize as infantry.

197th leaders practice tactics using 'homemade' sand table

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

It may be made of Georgia clay, but a training device used at the 197th Infantry Brigade represents what its leaders are facing in the desert sands during the Joint Readiness Exercise, Gallant Eagle '86.

Officers from 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry constructed a sand table to simulate the terrain at the Marine Corps Air Ground Combat Center at Twenty-nine Palms, Calif. The Battalion is conducting maneuvers in sandy terrain this month and they wanted to be prepared.

The sand table is a simple scaled landscape of the mountains, valleys and ridges of the Twenty-nine Palms training areas. The Battalion used it as a tool to plan battle strategies.

1st Lt. Earl Eaddy, the Battalion intelligence officer, said, "This sand table highlights key portions of the Twenty-nine Palms area that will influence our tactical maneuvers."

The Battalion planned war games of various missions they can expect during the JRX. The soldiers practiced offensive and defensive battle scenarios.

"We use model vehicles to simulate tactical formations," Eaddy said. "Then we execute these tactical operations through the 'desert' terrain."

Eaddy added, "This is an imaginative approach to leadership training. Using this tool, every leader in the Battalion can see what considerations he needs to take to train successfully in his tactical environment."

Good maintenance keeps 533rd's trucks rolling

by Dawn Kilpatrick
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Uncle Sam wouldn't get much of a trade in on one of the 533rd Transportation Company's trucks.

The only transportation company on Fort Benning, the 533rd logs an average of more than 100,000 miles a month on its 55 trucks.

In the five-month period from January to May this year, the company drove approximately 581,000 miles in support of post units. This is more than the entire years' totals for 1984 and 1985.

The company commander Capt. Jeffrey Davis, attributes the high mileage the the new units on post. "Our responsibilities have been impacted heavily by the formation of the 3rd Ranger Battalion and the activiation of the 10th Mountain Division," Davis said.

Considering the tremendous workload produced by the Company's commitments, Davis said his troops are being required to devote more and more time to maintaining the vehicles in order to meet the ever-growing requirements.

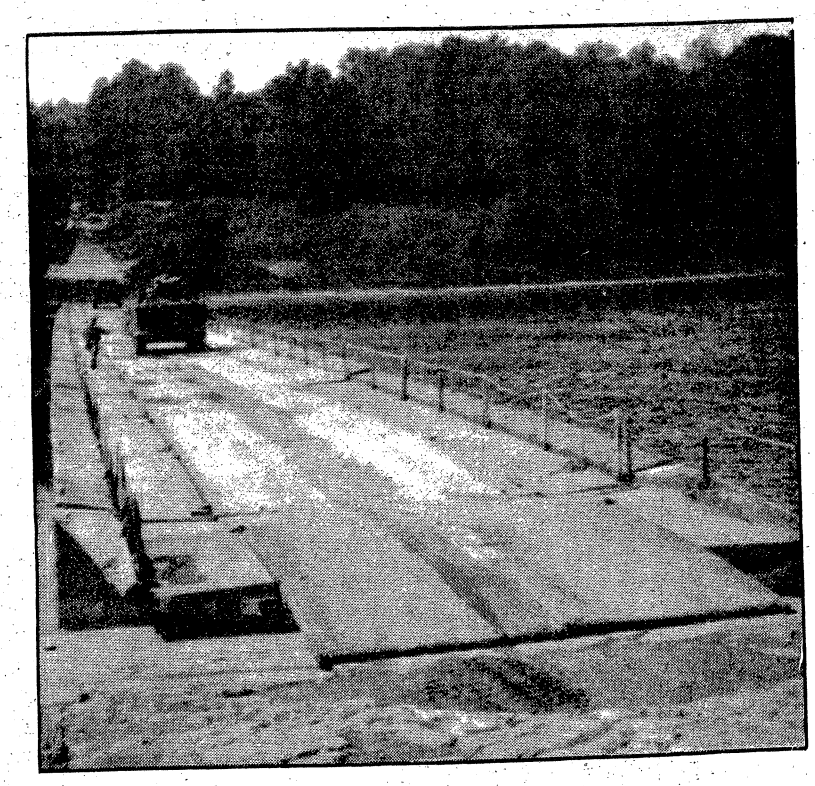
"We have the only motor pool on post that is open from 4 a.m. to 8 p.m.," he said. "More and more is being required of the troops just to keep things going on a day-to-day basis," Davis commented.

CWO3 Jack Hahn, the company's maintenance technician, said the key to the entire operation is preventive maintenance. "Based on 19 years of experience, I believe the key is to do something before it breaks," he said. "We take a little longer on quarterly service checks. We don't do pencil service," Hahn said.

The dedication to maintenance by Hahn and his 27 maintenance soldiers, as well as the drivers, paid off recently.

The 533rd claimed the Chief of Staff of the Army Maintenance Excellence Award. Units from 13 major Army commands are eligible to compete for the award, which is based on five major areas of unit maintenance, including readiness, training, management, cost savings and innovation.

Davis explained that each area is documented throughout the year. He said readiness is the easiest to document because the unit submits a monthly readiness report detailing such areas as availability of vehicles, amount of repair parts ordered and how many are on hand.



Training is tracked through the type of programs set up for drivers and mechanics and safety maintenance practices.

Policies of time management are examined to ensure adequate time is set aside to allow maintenance crews to do their jobs.

In the area of innovation, the 533rd has ongoing incentive awards programs, best driver and mechanic awards and an annual drivers' rodeo.

According to the company commander monitoring by the leadership of all the programs is an important part of innovation.

Having won at the U.S. Army Forces Command and the Department of the Army level of the maintenance excellence award competition, the 533rd is presently in the running for the Department of Defense title.

Soldiers from the 586th Engineer Company built a floating bridge across the Chattahoochee River in three hours, one hour less than the ARTEP standard.

Bridgebuilders get job done fast, beat ARTEP standard by one hour

by Thomas Perry
586th Engineer Company

Recently, two platoons of the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) conducted platoon tactical exercises on Fort Benning.

The objective was to maintain proficiency in platoon Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program tasks, and to give the junior officers and senior non-commissioned officers experience in constructing and maintaining a tactical bivouac site.

The exercise began with the establishment of a tactical operations center, mess area and perimeter.

The early missions included a successful closure of ribbon bridge across the Chattahoochee River by soldiers of the 2nd Platoon. The closure also included the installation of the overhead cable anchorage system. The task was accomplished an hour earlier than the ARTEP standard of four hours.

With the movement derived from the first successful mission, the rafting and bridging missions that followed were accomplished with ease as well.

River, bridge and route reconnaissance missions claimed most of the time the platoons were off the river. Classes were also given on survivability positions.

Additionally, the platoons supported the 82nd Airborne Division deployment to Fort Benning by providing safety boats, rubber raft training and water equipment.

The Patriots of the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, observed their organization day last week with a variety of soldier and family competitions.

Company E took overall top honors in events that ranged from a pie-eating contest to an Iron Mike competition.

The Iron Mike event included push-ups, sit-ups, a two-mile run and a 100-yard dash. To add to the challenge, contestants wore 50-pound rucksacks for all but the sit-up event.

The Patriots' Organization Day also featured guidon relays, a chariot race with quarter-ton trailer, tug-of-war and a weapons' proficiency event.

Soldier sets new brigade record firing TOW on Redcloud Range

by Robert Schmidt
2nd Infantry Training Brigade

The talk of the summer in the theaters is the movie "Top Gun." The fast-paced new release follows Navy fighter pilots trying to become the best.

In the vein of excellence, the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade has it own "Top Gun."

PFC John F. Kennedy of Company E, 8th Battalion, recently set a new Army Training Center record in qualifying on the tube launched, optically tracked, wire guided missile system. Kennedy scored 880 points out of a possible 1000.

Fired from a ground mounted tripod position or on a vehicle, the TOW is an anti-armor weapon.

Soldiers selected to be trained as TOW gunners undergo two weeks of intensified training. The first week is spent teaching the soldiers how to use and operate the system. The second week soldiers must take what they have learned and qualify.

Qualification is done with moving targets at various distances up to 3,000 meters. The gunner must simulate firing the weapon and tracking the target. He is scored on his ability to track the targets. The slightest flinch or blink of an eye can cause a miss.

The top gunner in each class fires a live TOW round at Redcloud Range in front of his peers. For Kennedy it was his time to show why he is the best.

"I was really nervous about the live fire," Kennedy said. "You only get one shot and a miss would be very embarrassing.

"When I fired the weapon I first saw nothing but smoke. Then I saw the missile going down range and my eyes wanted to follow the missile instead of the target. But I kept aim on the target and it was a direct hit. Boy was I excited."

Kennedy never dreamed he would do so well. "The day I came out to qualify I was just hoping to pass. I could not believe it when they told me I had the best score ever. This is the first time I have ever been recognized as the best in anything," he said.

Kennedy

Kennedy joined the Army to make his family proud of him. His father was a career soldier, which leads to how Kennedy was named after the late president.

He explained: "My father met my mother in Korea. When I was born she still did not speak English well and John F. was the name she could pronounce the best."

After graduation from One Station Unit Training, Kennedy will return home and join the Massachusetts National Guard, which will be proud to have a real "top gun" among the ranks.

Excellence habit forming for B-9-2 soldiers, cadre

Robert Schmidt
2nd Infantry Training Brigade

The motto of 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade is "Take the Point." One company in the Battalion has shown that it has every intention of being on the point and leading the way.

On July 2, Col. R.S. Siegfried presented Company B, 9th Battalion, 2nd ITB with an Army Training Center streamer for completing the end of cycle test with no retests.

All soldiers in One Station Unit Training must pass the test to be qualified as infantrymen. The streamer is placed on the company's guidon as a symbol of the achievement.

Winning the streamer has become a regular event for Co. B. In October 1985, the company took the test at AO Eagle and became the first company in 18 months that didn't require any retests. More than 200 OSUT companies tested during that period and failed to achieve such standards.

Last week marked the third consecutive cycle that B-9-2 received the streamer. The company took 74 soldiers to test and 50 of them scored 100 percent on all tasks. The group presently training at B-9-2 has shown to be better than their predecessors.

Other awards were earned in the mid-cycle test and the Army Physical Readiness Test. In both areas, all of the soldiers passed the first time tested. The company had a 284 average on the APRT and 68 soldiers scored 100 percent on the mid-cycle test.

Capt. Paul Agosta, the company commander, believes the credit for the company's success has to go to the cadre. "We have the best drill sergeants in the Army," Agosta said. "They are all professionals who really care for their soldiers. The effort is reflected by the continuing success of this company."

A GOOD PART-TIME JOB IS HARD TO FIND.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Did you know that one out of three Americans now "moonlights" to help make ends meet?

But as a returning veteran, you don't have to "moonlight." If you want an extra income, just "weekend" once a month with your local Army Reserve unit.

For instance, an E-5 with four years' experience now earns over $130 for a weekend's work. Over $2,000 a year, counting two weeks annual training pay.

As a Reservist, you also get PX privileges, low-cost life insurance, and retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have an extra income waiting when you get home?

BNCOC instructors bring classroom to post NCOs

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Three soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, and four other artillerymen from Fort Benning recently completed the Basic Non-commissioned Officers Course, but with a twist.

The instructors for the course, SFC Fernando Duff and Sgt. John George came from the XVIII Airborne Corps NCO Academy at Fort Bragg to teach the course here.

Since Fort Benning does not have a BNCOC for artillery, the instructors had to be "imported" from Fort Bragg. It was less expensive and easier for the instructors to come here than for the 14 post artillerymen who started the course to go to Fort Bragg.

The three soldiers from 2-10th were Sgt. Sandy Anthony, Sgt. Thomas McNeal and Sgt. Robert Newsome. Sgt. Jeffery Hof and Sgt. David Rivera, both from the 3rd Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry, also completed the course. The two other students who took the course at the Fort Benning NCO Academy were Sgt. Kevin Oplinger and Sgt. Rex Pringle from 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division.

The course provides knowledge and skills in fire support. It also provides practical experience in directing, supervising and managing a Fire Support Team.

"This is a highly demanding course," Duff said. "We started out with 14 students and ended with seven."

The Fort Benning course was no different from the one at Fort Bragg. It lasted five weeks, with 12 hours of instruction each day, and included classes on basic map reading, day land navigation, duties and responsibilities of an NCO and fire support planning. The course ended with a 33- hour field training exercise that included a live fire.

"It's very critical for the soldiers to understand the combined arms operation on the battlefield today," Duff said.

Prerequisites for the course include a pre-map test, physical training test and six month retainability upon graduation.

"The book was there but you don't really get anything out of it until you are put through the actual situation," Pringle said.

197th Infantry Brigade PAO

A ribbon cutting ceremony last week opened a new long distance phone center serving soldiers on Kelley Hill.

At the new phone center soldiers can use cash, checks, credit cards or an American Telephone and Telegraph calling card to pay for toll calls. The new phone center is open from 11 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. on weekdays and from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. on weekends. A cashier will be on duty when the center is open.

Sgt. Johnny Nichols and Pvt.1 Carleton Kimbrough, both from Company D, 197th Support Battalion, were the first soldiers in line. Nichols called a friend while Kimbrough called his wife.

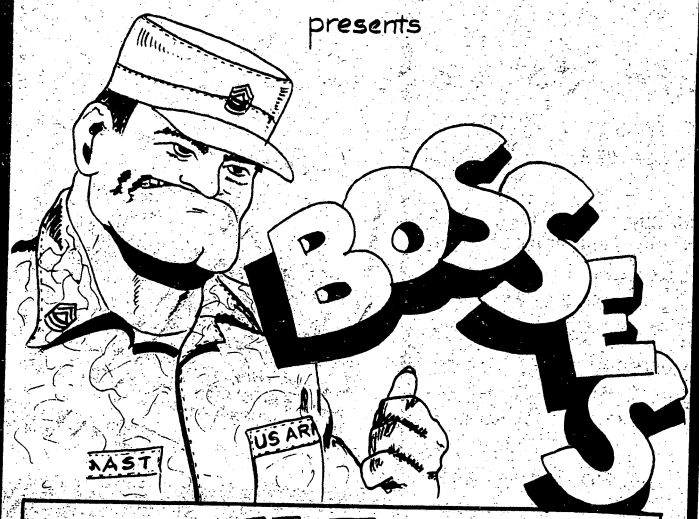
Lt. Col. Charles Hart, 197th Infantry Brigade executive officer, cut the ribbon to officially open the center, which is beside the Kelley Hill gas station.

Sgt. Johnny Nichols from Company D, 197th Support Battalion, makes a phone call from the new tele center in Kelley Hill.

Engineers teach boating skills to 10th Mountain Division troops

by Terry N. Thompson
586th Engineer Company

Recently the 31st Engineer Detachment (RB-15) had an opportunity to train members of the 10th Mountain Division in the maintenance, care and use of the 15-man rubber assault boat.



Members of the detachment assisted in more than 20 assault river crossings using their 15-man rubber boats and in more than 10 10-mile river movements. Classes were also given on capsizing the RB-15 and how to react.

In return, members of the 10th Mountain Division taught the 31st Detachment soldiers how to set up landing zones and pick-up zones for helicopters. They also participated in infantry assault using the UH-1 Huey helicopter.

The 31st Engineer Detachment is attached to the 586th Engineer Company (AFB).

The unit recently completed an assault river crossing and reconnaissance of the Chattahoochee River with the 82nd Airborne Division.

'Good Samaritan' returns student's lost wallet

Aubrey Joshua (left), maintenance supervisor for Metra buses in Columbus, accepts a thank-you handshake from Colombian cadet John Claviso.

Colombian praises American's honesty

U.S. Army School of The Americas

As Colombian cadet John Claviso got off a city bus at Fort Benning June 27, the last thing he expected to be missing was his wallet.

Claviso, who is here attending a four-week course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas, realized his wallet, which contained more than $1,500 and about $1.80 in Colombian currency, was gone as he and fellow cadets headed for the barracks.

"My mind immediately hit the panic button as I touched my back pocket," Claviso said in Spanish. "But the bus had long since departed as I headed back toward the bus stop."

After getting the phone number to the bus company and calling the Columbus Metra bus system, Claviso spoke through an interpreter with Fate Roberts, a night dispatcher at Metra. Roberts checked his log to find which bus had made the final run from Fort Benning.

Conducting a thorough search inside the bus, Roberts found the wallet behind a seat to the rear of the bus — with all the mone Claviso had already given up fo lost.

Roberts then returned the wa let through coordination with hi supervisor, Aubrey Joshua, main tenance supervisor at Metra.

"It is a rare thing nowadays t find people of the caliber of Mr Roberts . . . of his honesty," sai USARSA Commandant Col. Mi guel A. Garcia, as he addressed a recent Colombian and Salva doran cadet reception at the For Benning Officers' Club.

Garcia presented a certificate of appreciation to Roberts tha was accepted on Roberts' behal by his supervisor.

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Seventeen non-commissioned officers from four Latin American countries graduated from the Basic Combat Medical course July 2 at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

The 11-week course saw the NCOs participate in a mass casualty exercise as part of their final field problem. The course offered students a chance to learn new skills including treatment of trauma, medication administration, field sanitation, anatomy and physiology of the body systems.

Guest speaker for the graduation ceremony was CWO3 Romulo Berrezueta, chief of Troop Medical Clinic No. 1 here.

Countries with number of graduates represented were: Colombia — eight; Costa Rica — two; Honduras — five, and Panama — two.

A three-week Preventive Medicine course is scheduled to begin later this month.

Salvadorans complete combat training

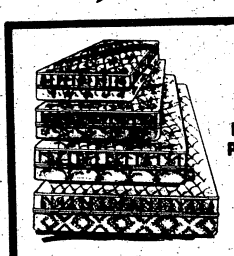
Twenty-nine Salvadoran officers received graduation diplomas June 24 at the U.S. Army School of the Americas as they graduated from the Combat Officer course.

The 11-week course, designed for Salvadoran company-grade officers, prepares students to perform effectively as company commanders and battalion level staff officers.

Guest speaker for the graduation ceremony was Lt. Col. Gonzalo Block Melgar, a senior guest instructor of USARSA from Bolivia.



A total of 4,487 Salvadoran officers, non-commissioned officers and cadets have graduated from USARSA since 1947.

Week five finds soldier on M16 live-firing range

Editor's Note: This is the fifth in a series of 13 articles that will allow the readers to follow one soldier through his entire One Station Unit Training at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill.

by Michael Ricca
1st Infantry Training Brigade

This week was another big step toward graduation. Tuesday we ran the grenade qualification course. Although I missed practice Monday, the classes that helped enough for me to score qualify as an expert. Those who trained seriously, scored high, while those who shrugged off the classes weren't as successful.

Wednesday, we put or skills with hand grenades together with our M16s and our tactical maneuvers on a live-fire range. The most important part of the range was the communication between partners while working in two man teams. Talking back and forth, covering each other and staying low made the exercise an interesting challenge.

Thursday was our first day learning about the M60 machine gun. We started with assembly and disassembly of the weapon, learning all the parts and their functions.

After lunch, we learned about primary and secondary firing sectors, aiming stakes and range cards. Constructing range cards was the most interesting, yet the most difficult instruction of the day.

The following day was spent at the M60 live-fire range. After the standard safety briefing, we moved to our lanes with 108 rounds of ammunition. We then zeroed our weapons on a 10-meter target and fired at several different 500-meter scale silhouettes.

After chow, we were given 120 additional rounds to fire at pop-up targets located anywere from 400 to 800 meters downrange. The way the automatic weapons "rock and roll" when the trigger is pulled got my adrenalin flowing and left me looking for more.

The final firing order of the day was for the 35 M60 gunners who needed to qualify with the weapon. When the firing was finished for the day, we loaded up on the trucks and went back to the barracks.

Other than some light mid-cycle reinforcement, Friday night was filled with cleaning and storing our bivouac gear and our M16s.

Sunday was, as usual, a much welcomed day. During church we had one of the best sermons I have heard in some time. Captain Duncan, our chaplain, gave an outstanding reenactment of Moses' talk with God. The sermon was accompanied by great music. Chaplain Duncan's singing and dramatization went well with the music and delivered a strong message to us all.

Sunday ended with two hours of brass shining and low-quarters maintenance for my Class A uniform.

With a good break Sunday, I was ready for the next week of training.

Check life insurance's exemptions, for 'war clause' before signing up

Army News Service

Soldiers buying commercial life insurance need to read all of the fine print before signing, because some policies include military clauses that limit coverage, according to Capt. Ashby Dyke of the Army Legal Assistance Office at the Pentagon.

These clauses, also known as "war clauses," may be so specific as to state that the policy is not payable if the soldier is killed in battle, or they may simply state that the policy is not payable if the soldier dies as a result of "military service hazard." Policies that contain such vague clauses are sometimes broadly interpreted by insurance companies to mean anytime a soldier is on active duty, said Dyke.

"The clause commonly appears in policies taken out when purchasing a new car, but it has also been found in credit card and auto club agreements. It is often buried in lengthy contracts, and is rarely brought to the soldier's attention," said Dyke.

If the clause goes unnoticed, the soldier's beneficiaries may not be able to collect on the policy. For example, a claim on a soldier's life insurance was recently denied because the contract contained a vague military hazard clause. "The soldier, who died in the Gander air crash in December, had purchased the credit life insurance policy to pay off the note on his car in the event of his death," said Dyke.

Those who find a war clause or military hazard clause should consult a legal assistance officer to see if the company will remove the clause, cancel the policy or give a binding interpretation of any vague clauses, he said.

Court report

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Soldier convicted for rape: A career non-commissioned officer with more than 14 years service was recently convicted of engaging in the rape and sodomy of his two daughters over a seven year period.

The acts occurred at Fort Benning and while the soldier was stationed in Germany.

The crimes were discovered when the older daughter reported them to her high school counselor. An earlier report made by one of the girls to her grandmother had been disregarded when the accused denied the allegation.

As a result of the attacks, both girls have suffered psychological damage that will require three to five years of counseling to overcome according to experts.

After accepting the accused's plea of guilty and considering all of the evidence in the case, Col. Sebert Trail, the military judge, sentenced the sergeant first class to a dishonorable discharge, confinement for nine years and six months, total forfeiture of all pay and allowances, and reduction to private.

The soldier will shortly be transferred to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, the Army's maximum security prison, where he will serve his sentence.

Cocaine sale results in dishonorable discharge: SP4 Homer E. Tidd, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade was convicted June 6 by a general court-martial for selling and using cocaine.

The evidence showed that Tidd wrongfully used cocaine, and he tested positive for cocaine during a unit urinalysis test.

The prosecution showed that Tidd sold 3.1 grams of cocaine March 24, 1986 to a Fort Benning undercover agent.

The military judge sentenced Tidd to be reduced to private, to forfeit all pay and allowances, to be confined for 26 months and to be discharged dishonorably.

Robber sentenced to four years : Pvt. 1 Ronald G. Thomas, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry was convicted July 3 by a general court-martial for robbery and conspiracy to commit robbery.

The evidence showed that Thomas was assigned to Fort Benning in order to attend airborne school. The prosecution showed that Thomas and SP4 Luecht went to a lounge on Victory Drive the evening of March 1, 1986. Thomas and Luecht offered another soldier a ride back to Fort Benning.

After entering Fort Benning, Thomas pointed a 10-inch knife at the soldier and demanded the his money. The soldier, feeling that his life was being threatened, gave his wallet and all his money to his robbers.

Thomas then ordered his victim out of the truck and he began chasing his victim down the road with a knife. The robbers split the money during the return trip to the lounge.

The military judge, after hearing all of the evidence, sentenced Thomas to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit all pay and allowances, to be confined for four years and to be dishonorably discharged.

Soldier to serve 32 months: SP4 Mark A. Bittner, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, was convicted June 9 by a general court-martial for selling cocaine.

The evidence presented by the prosecution showed that Bittner made two sales of cocaine on March 18, 1986 and on April 21, 1986, to Fort Benning undercover agents. Bittner sold 1.9 grams of cocaine on both of the above dates.

The military judge sentenced Bittner to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit all pay and allowances, to be confined for 32 months and to be dishonorably discharged.

How? By giving you the right questions to consider and the right answers to look for.

For example: 1) Do the people you're dealing with have special financing plans tailored to your military income? 2) How reliable are they? 3) What's their past record of performance? 4) Does the community you're interested in have full shopping, recreational and cultural facilities? 5) Is there a military base nearby? (Hospital, commissary and exchange privileges can mean big savings.) 6) How about location? Is it overcrowded or is it so isolated that you would feel shut off from civilization?

As you're well aware, military families have special needs. If you want to meet them in all the years to come, send us the coupon. And let us show you the way to a great Florida future.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal's Office

Every day some drivers on Fort Benning make it easy for thieves to steal their cars.

A quote from a car thief with more than 25 years experience: "Any car I see on a dimly lighted street, with the door unlocked or a window open, belongs to me if I want it."

Another veteran thief remarks, "You would be amazed how easy people make it for me. I've stolen, really been given is a better term, cars with keys in the switch, and even some with titles and gasoline credit cards in the glove compartment."

These old pros in the car theft business offer some hints to prevent you from making a gift of your car to anyone who wants it.

- Lock your car. This is no absolute guarantee against theft, but at least by locking your car and taking the keys, you'll slow the thief down and complicate his work.
- Park on a well-lighted street. A well-lighted street in a busy section will often discourage a thief.
- Place items of value in the car's trunk. There are thieves who specialize in stealing items from your car rather than the car itself. In the auto theft business, these people are called "car boosters." At restaurants alongside interstate highways or turnpikes, they wait for you to come along with your car fully loaded with luggage.

When you go inside to eat, the thief goes right to work, confident he'll have half an hour or more to do his job. He simply applies a tire iron to your car window and before you know it, the luggage and anything you had inside is gone, sometimes before the waitress has taken your order!

The "booster" generally steals only what he can see; if your valuables are out of sight in your car trunk, he may pass you by.

- Know your license plate number. Thieves also take license plates to use on stolen cars. Sometimes, they swap "hot" license plates from a stolen car for good clean plates. A few drops of solder on your tag bolts will help safeguard them.

If a professional car thief really wants your car, he'll probably get it. However, only a relatively small percentage of stolen cars are taken by real pros, most go to "joy-riders", one-timers or amateurs.

Don't make it easier for them either. Crime prevention is everyone's business. Help us help you.

VA Q&A

Editor's Note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — Is there a charge for the opening and closing of a grave in a national cemetery?

A — There is no charge. However, expenses related to preparation, casketing or transportation of the remains from the place of death to a national cemetery must be paid from private funds. The VA may provide reimbursement under certain circumstances for burial expenses. Social Security pays a burial benefit to a spouse in some cases.

Q — How much can I borrow on a Veterans Administration-backed loan? I have heard that there is a $27,500 limit.

A — The amount that a lending institution will loan on a VA-guaranteed loan depends in part on your financial situation. Like other lenders, those making VA loans will consider your income, liabilities and credit standing. The loan may not exceed the fair market value of the property. The VA guarantees 60 percent of the mortgage up to a maximum guarantee of $27,500 against loss if the buyer defaults.

Q — I am a military retiree. I have been notified that my CHAMPUS coverage ends when I am 65. Is this true?

A — CHAMPUS or CHAMPVA coverage ends when a recipient becomes entitled to Medicare coverage.

Q — I received an evaluation of my service-connected condition which was rated zero percent by the VA. What advantage is there to having such a disability status?

A — There are several advantages, the most important of which is having a record that your disability is related to your service. This entitles you to free, priority treatment by the VA for the condition. Establishing the disability will also allow a quicker decision if your condition worsens and you claim compensation for it. With basic entitlement established, the VA will only need to determine the current extent of your disability.

Q — During my 22 years in the Army I became an alcoholic. Will the VA pay me compensation for this disease?

A — No. The VA can offer treatment for alcoholism, but no benefits may be paid. Alcoholism is not considered a condition for which compensation is payable.

Q — I receive 100 percent service-connected disability compensation. My wife and I plan to divorce. Will she be entitled to a portion of my compensation after we are divorced?

A — No. Her entitlement to all benefits ceases when your divorce is final. In certain cases the VA must honor a court order for garnishment of compensation for alimony payments.

Q — What is considered Vietnam Era service for VA benefits purposes?

A — The period is defined as August 5, 1964 through May 7, 1975.

Q — How do I appeal a decision made by the VA about my disability?

A — You need only write a letter to the VA office which made the decision stating you disagree with the VA's decision. This will initiate the appeal process and you will then be advised of the basis for the decision and actions you must take.

Q — May I borrow on my Veterans Group Life Insurance policy?

A — No. Your Veterans Group Life Insurance is a term insurance policy and does not develop a cash or loan value. (VA)

Association seeks applicants to compete for scholarships

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Management Association is seeking business and management students to compete for its yearly scholarships, according to Mary Burt, secretary of the group.

All active-duty or retired military soldiers and active or retired federal civil service employees and their family members, residing within a 50-mile radius of the Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning area are eligible for the scholarships.

The Association will select a recipient for a $1,260 per year scholarship to Troy State University at Fort Benning, which the school donated.

This scholarship is good only at the Troy State Fort Benning Branch and is not transferable to any other Troy State University location. However, upon completion of the one-year scholarship, the student will be eligible to transfer to the Troy State main campus at Troy, Ala., without paying out-of-state tuition.

The association will also be awarding two additional scholarships; a $200 per quarter or $600 per year scholarship to Troy State University at Fort Benning, and one to any accredited college or university in the same amount.

Applicants must be working toward a four year undergraduate degree in the field of business or management.

Each applicant is required to write a letter to the Management Association, formally requesting consideration for the scholarship, including highlights of applicant's academic career and extracurricular activities. The letter should also explain why the applicant should be selected to receive the scholarship.

Along with the letter, applicants should include a copy of their high school transcript, a completed application to Troy State or the college of their choice and a copy of their request for SAT or ACT scores.

Applicants must also submit three letters of recommendation, with one, if practical, from their principal or high school guidance counselor, transcripts from any colleges previously attended, and a statement of employment indicating applicant's employer, including name, address and applicant's job title.

Selection for the scholarships will not be dependent on financial need alone. Each candidate will be judged on citizenship, high school grades, achievement tests, individual skills and school and community activities. There will be no discrimination on the basis of sex, race, national origin, handicap or marital status.

Applications must be submitted to James Kvicala in Building 4, Room 526, no later than July 25. For more information, call Kvicala at 545-2224.

Don't let poisoning spoil summer picnic

by Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

A picnic wouldn't be complete without an abundance of cold drinks. Just remember to be careful how you keep them cold.

Those galvanized water coolers (the five to 10 gallon ones you see on the back of trucks at construction sites) are meant to be used for water only. They are coated with zinc on the inside, and when the zinc comes in contact with carbonated beverages, a dangerous chemical reaction occurs, said Col. Charles B. Kenison of the Army Medical Service.

"People who drink a carbonated beverage after it has come in contact with the zinc could become very sick," said Kenison. "Generally, people would just throw up."

Kenison recommended using some other type of container to cool carbonated beverages.

He said it is also important to pay attention to the ice you use for your picnic.

"Be sure the ice is potable (drinkable)," he said. "People sometimes eat the ice beverages are stored in. If the ice is made from impure water, the impurities will freeze and be released into the body when consumed."

Wives' Club gives $64,000 to tri-city

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club put $64,000 back into the tri-city area this year through work and volunteer efforts.

"I would like people to understand that this is not just a social organization. The OWC is a hard working group of ladies, benefit- [illegible] community," said [illegible] Siegfried, OWC president.

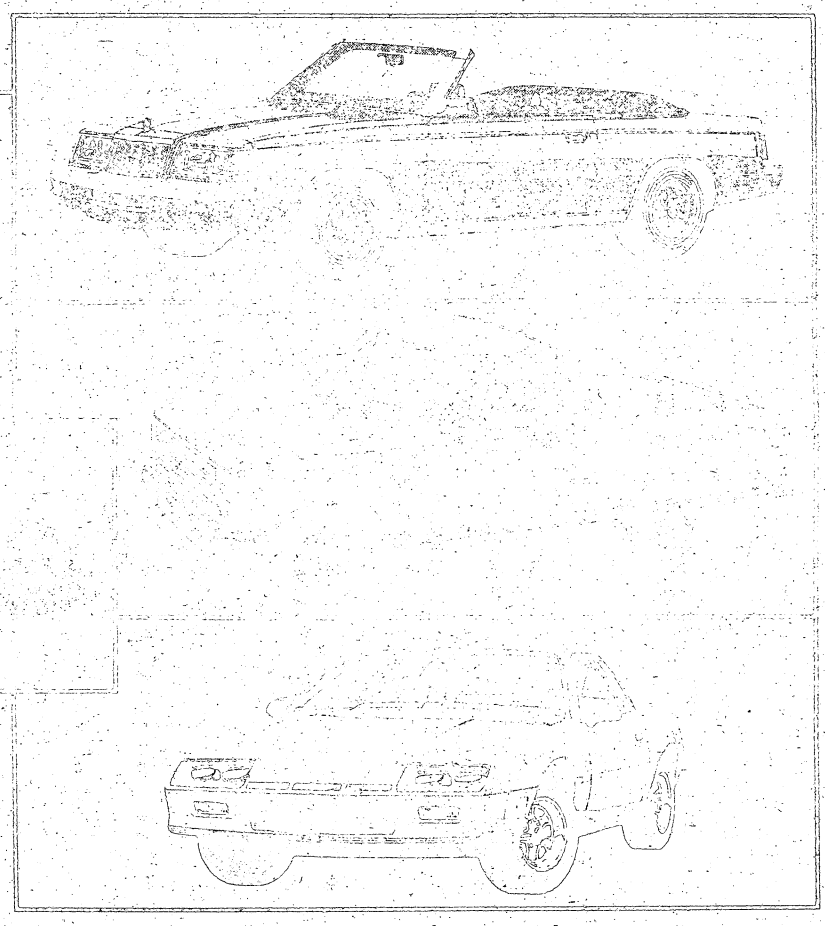
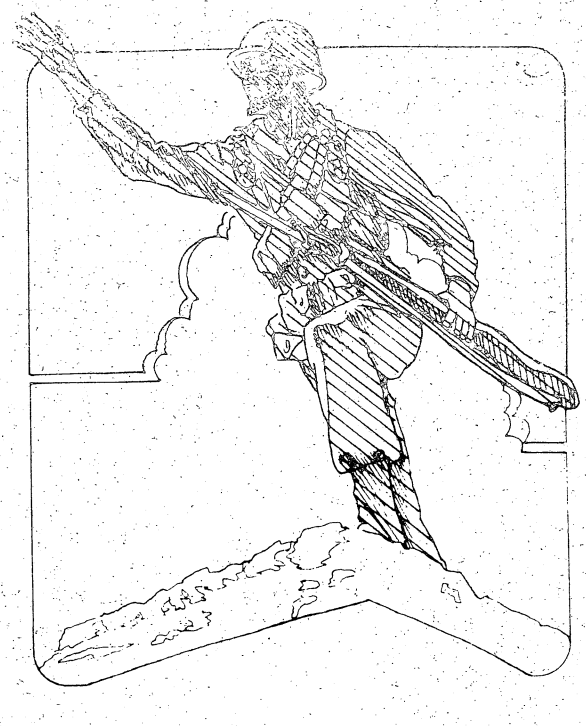
Some of the off-post agencies that benefitted from the ladies' hard work are: Kendrick High School, West Central Georgia Easter Seals Center, the Chattahoochee Valley March of Dimes, Columbus' House of Mercy, the Columbus Symphony and the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts.



The club's largest donation, excluding the scholarship money, was $3,200 for library books for the Fort Benning school system.



Siegfried praised Beverly Oliver, president of the Non-commissioned Officers' Wives' Club; Linda Ernst, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Thrift Shop chairman Janice Connolly and post chief of staff, Col. James Ellis.

"Through the efforts of all of these hard working people we were able to help make Fort Benning and the local communities a better place to live," Siegfried said.

Division's special day highlights unit's history

Indians fought as commandos in olden days

Story and photos by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

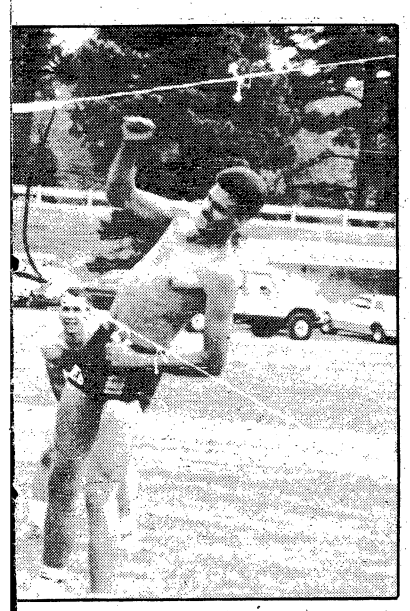
It started out with a bang. The smoke drifted onto the field and around the battalion of soldiers standing in formation.

No one moved as a group of Indians on horses, complete with war paint and feathers, galloped through the smoke and between the companies. The air rang with the sound of the announcer as he voiced the "Commando Creed."

The audience of 150 friends and family members applauded as the braves turned and rode away — accompanied by a mounted soldier attired in a modern U. S. Army battle dress uniform.

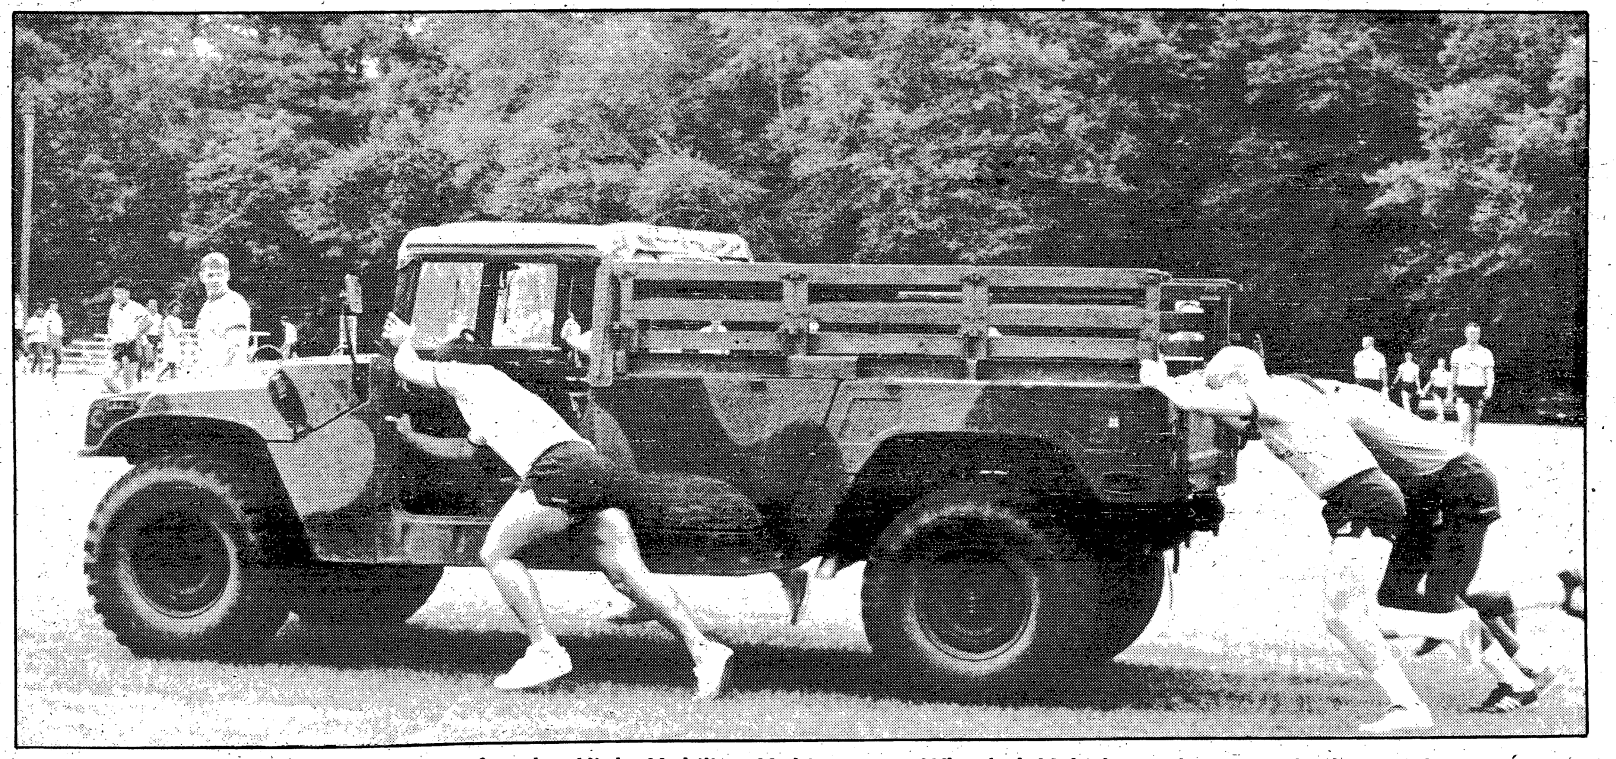
The pagentry marked the opening ceremony of the recent Organization Day for the 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division (Commando) at Wetherby Field.

"The significance of the Indians being that the original commandos were the Indians, particularly the Appache and Commanches. I guess the commando brotherhood still carries on that tradition," said 2nd Lt. Michael J. Landers, a platoon leader with Company B.



Ceremonies aside, the games began under overcast skies.

For the participating 650 soldiers, the day was filled with volleyball, softball, a five-mile run, a two-mile rucksack race, a tug-of-war and an egg toss.



There were a number of static displays, including the Dragon, a simulated camp and the full gear for the field equipped mountain soldier.

In addition, people were entertained by horse rides, children's games and the dunk tank.

"It seemed to go real well. The day was very sucessful. I think it was fun for everyone," said Landers.

Patience, planning key to smooth PCS move

by Ginger Pearson
Special to the Bayonet

Germany. Sounds exciting doesn't it? The people, the culture, the language . . . If you are most people, it sounds exciting, but a little bit frightening at the same time.

We all experience some anxiety with a permanent change of station move — keeping an eye on the packers, leaving good friends, coordinating the movers, living out of a suitcase, etc. But somehow, any anxieties or problems we might have seem heightened and somewhat exaggerated when trying to prepare ourself and our family for that move overseas. Plus, there is simply much more to do.

Never mind coordinating three separate transportation pickups; what about port calls, shipping your car, passports, "shipping" your family? And what if, once you figure out what it is you have got to do, someone goes and changes the rules? It happens. It happened.

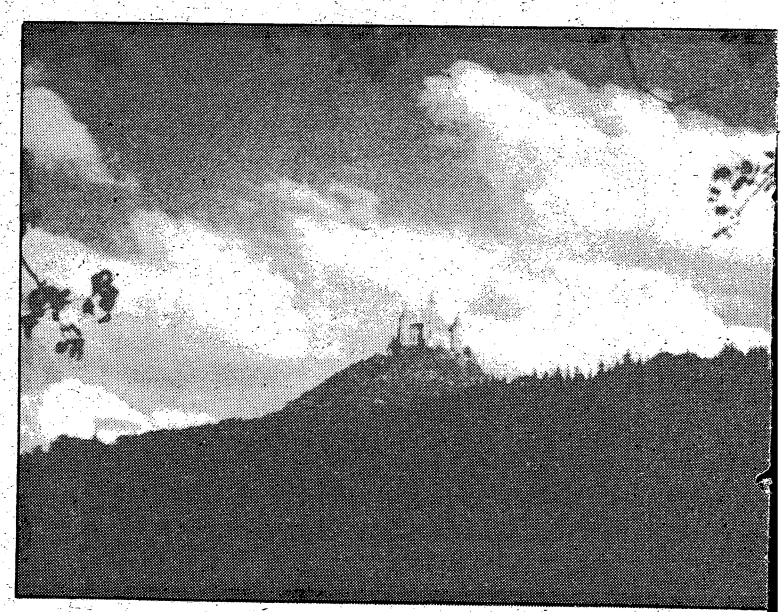
My husband was slotted for a two-week course in Florida this summer. That course and another plus leave would put us very near the anticipated arrival date of our first child, so my husband's gaining unit was allowing us to stay in the States until shortly after the baby had come. No problem right?

Wrong. The second course was not available and the gaining unit decided it was no longer feasible to leave my husband in the States such a long time for such a short course; and besides, I was not "too far along to travel yet . . ."

So instead of six months to plan and coordinate our move, we now had a little more than six weeks, to be there. With our leave plans, that meant we had to coordinate our move in a short, three weeks time. No problem, right? Wrong again. The gaining unit does not have a problem, "the sooner the better" seems to be their motto. We don't have a problem, give us a ticket and we will be on a plane. But the rest of the Army seems to think it simply cannot be done. They need time to put the paperwork through the process! Mindboggling, isn't it?

When you have a family and you are PCSing overseas, everything seems to hinge on the soldier's application for a thing called "concurrent travel." The soldier's initial orders (in the case of European assignments to the 21st Replacement Battalion in Frankfurt) will authorize the soldier to apply for concurrent travel for all his or her eligible dependants. Getting command sponsorship, pinpoint orders authenticated, household goods shipment allowances, passport authorizations, etc., all depend on that initial application for "concurrent travel." And here is the catch, it takes an average of sixty days for a response to your concurrent travel request. Aha! Now we are getting somewhere. My family seems to be about 50 days shy of the necessary 60 days. No problem, right.

Our situation is not as bleak as it might appear. In fact, there probably would not be any problem at all if we were not expecting our little "bundle of joy." We do, however, see a faint light at the end of the tunnel, so there is hope that everything will work out. I mean, everything works out in one way or another, doesn't it?



Through our experience though, we have stumbled across many things that ought to be posted in neon lights around post to guide those of us going overseas for the first time through the apparent fog. Since it's doubtful anyone could get funding for that type of display, I have come up with some checkpoints and flagstops for your move overseas. Maybe they can help to make your move overseas just a little bit easier.

There are a couple of things you will want to keep in mind, though, though, when trying to work with the system. First, simply put, is be patient. Did you know that Fort Benning processed 11,645 outbound PCS moves last year and 3,322 were to overseas destinations? Now, I am not going to dial up Guiness, but that has got to be some kind of record! So your patience will definately be a virtue when coordinating your overseas move from Fort Benning. Remember, yours is only one of more than 3,000 overseas moves that the Transportation Outbound Division is handling. Makes me feel sort of insignificant in light of it all.

The second thing to remember is to work with the system, but do not let yourself be swallowed up by it. There are exceptions to every rule and hopefully, in my family's case, a couple of phone calls can cut through some of the time and red tape that is usually associated with processing an overseas assignment. But remember, your military and civilian support personnel are only human. They are doing the best possible job they can for you and they have lots of other's needs to try to meet as well. But do not hesitate to explore other avenues if you have extenuating circumstances and you feel some different road could help you get results.

The needs of the Army come first, as always, but the needs of the soldier and his family come a close second. It is up to us to see that our individual needs are met, if at all possible. In our case, the Army needs "us" in six weeks. "We need time with our family before we go.

You can help make your overseas more easier and a little less hectic by being informed, being patient and letting the agencies you are working with know what your limitations or specific needs are. "It's Your Move" as the American Forces Information Service advocates, make it a good one!

Pills, pills and more pills. Lines, lines and more waiting in lines.

If waiting in line has gotten the best of you, the Refill Pharmacy might be able to solve some of your problems.

Recently the Refill Pharmacy at Fort Benning's main mall reached a milestone in its first year of service.

The pharmacy, which celebrated its first birthday July 9, has refilled 110,000 prescriptions since opening last year.

"It's amazing that we did so many and because we refilled so many it made life easier for a lot of people," said Col. John W. Commings, chief of pharmacy at Martin Army Community Hospital.

The facility was developed because the pharmacy at MACH was so busy.

"It's been so successful in relieving congestion (at the hospital pharmacy) and waiting time has been dramatically reduced," Commings said.

The shop that is just outside the commissary has only one pharmacist on duty each day. There are 16 registered pharmacists who work at the main pharmacy.

"Pharmacists are rotated between the In Patient, Out Patient and the Refill Pharmacy. I work here every now and then, its a nice change," said Charles Mculer, Registered Pharmacist at MACH.

"We carry every drug that's refillable," added Mculer.

The Refill Pharmacy is open weekdays from 9:45 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturday from 8:45 a.m. to noon. The facility is closed Sunday and on holidays.

Hot tips

Cooperative Extension Service

For heat cramps, apply warm, wet towels and firm hand pressure to the affected muscle. Drink small amounts of liquid.

For heat exhaustion remove the victim to a cool room and allow him or her to lie down. Give cool liquids to drink.

Heat stroke requires immediate medical help, but until help arrives the victim should be cooled off rapidly. Clothing may be removed or loosened, and cold towels or wet icepacks may be applied. A wet sheet may be used to wrap up the victim in a cool room.

Above all, take the heat seriously and heed any danger signal! Summer survival depends on it.

With the hot weather continuing full force, use fans to keep the air moving in your house, to be as comfortably cool as possible.

To keep the sun out, close draperies, shades or shutters during the day on the east side in the morning and the west side during the afternoon.

Use your kitchen fan to exhaust the heat to the outside. In the bathroom, remove heat and moisture by operating the exhaust fan or opening a window. It will quickly disappear without adding to the air conditioner load.

It is important in Georgia's climate to keep air circulating in order to cool your body.

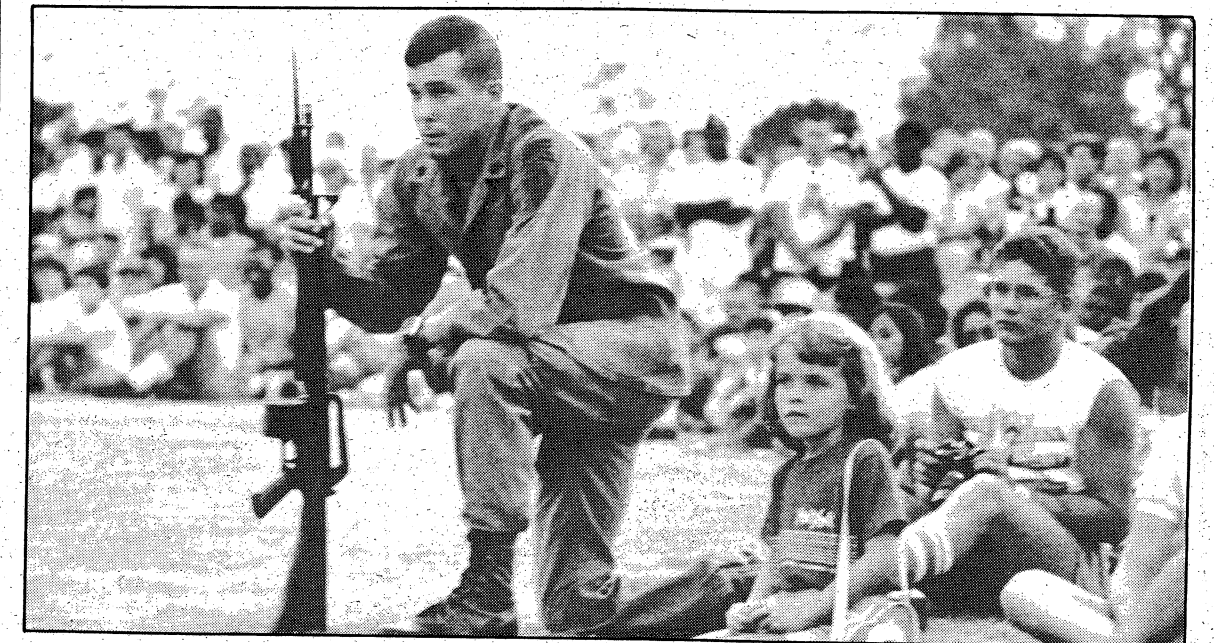
Independence celebration 'explosive'

Story and photos by Dawn Kilpatrick
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Nearly 6,000 people were on hand July 4th to enjoy the Independence Day festivities on York Field.

Although the traditional fireworks at nightfall were the highlight of the day, the entertainment started at 4 p.m. with the Infantry Center Band and a local country and western band performing on center stage.



The Officer Candidate School Choir brought the crowd to their feet with a heart wrenching version of "God Bless the U.S.A."

As always, the Ranger School cadre captured the crowd with their entertaining display of hand-to-hand combat.

The Infantry Center Band once again took the stage to perform a rousing version of the "1812 Overture," punctuated by a 50-gun salute to the nation.

Norma Russell tries to get a better look at the Rangers-in-action on York Field Friday while her nephew, Bradley Kilpatrick, seems more interested in his immediate surroundings.

Sgt. Robin Zoller from the Fort Benning Ranger Divison's Morgan Team awaits his cue to enter during the hand-to-hand combat demonstration.

Junior NCOs gain leadership experience in staff 'turnabout

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

One would think that things would be turned upside down and inside out at the Non-commissioned Officer Academy here if the reins were handed over to less than highly experienced sergeants major.

However, the "turnabout" at the Fort Benning NCO Academy recently gave junior NCOs an opportunity to test the waters for a day.

"Thirteen key cadre members were gone, most were out taking classes," said Sgt. Philip DeMello, who was acting as the NCO Academy's assistant deputy commandant.

Lower enlisted cadre members moved up the chain of command at the academy for a day to tackle the job of the higher enlisted ranks.

"The junior NCOs have taken over this position to see what it's like to function at that higher level. We have more responsibilities, more duties," DeMello said.

"Key personnel on post were notified proir to the takeover so they would be prepared to do business with us," said SSgt. Cynthia L. Rogers, PLDC instructor (acting as the commandant).

The day began when Rogers conducted the commandant's run at physical training.

After that it was business as usual. The other cadre members (mostly junior NCOs) took over the classes for the day to fill in for their counterparts.

"We handled the everyday business of running the academy. I even had to go to a general wildlife conservation (fish and game) meeting where I was a voting member for the one day," Rogers said.

Among the positions taken over were the branch chiefs for the Primary Leadership Development Course, and the Basic and Advanced Non-commissioned Officer Courses as well as the supervisor of the personnel administration center.

"We had an exit briefing the next morning and the junior leadership was amazed at the qu tions and problems that occur on a daily basis and the am of paperwork involved in susta ing the operation." said CS David J. Kloss, commandant

"All in all they felt it wa worthwile enhancement opp nity and will welcome the ch to get at it again in a fu date." Kloss added."

Nothing seemed to fall apart the Academy and the only thi upside down and inside out we the name plates on the desks.

Making things happen challenges volunteer

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office.

Linda Ernst has worked for the last 15 years but not for money. Her work has involved time, skills and a lot of sweat. But, her pay has come in the form of a better Army community wherever she and her soldier-husband have been sent.

Ernst, who is married to Col. Carl Ernst and has two two teenage children, volunteers because of her personality type.

"I think there are three kinds of people: those who make things happen, those who watch things happen and those who wonder what happened. I like to make things happen," she said, and make things happen she has.

Ernst currently works as the Hospital Chariman of the American Red Cross. As a result of her efforts, the number of Red Cross volunteers at the hospital has jumped to 58. From December 1984 to December 1985, Red Cross volunteers at the hospital logged more than 14,000 hours of volunteer work. At the minimum pay wage of $3.35 per hour, this translates into more than $46,000 of work the community received at the hospital for free.

"In the month of May our 58 volunteers put in 1,482 hours alone. We really help in the daily running of Martin Army Community Hospital, with a lot of people putting in a lot of long, hard , free hours," Ernst said.

"I like to do things positively within an organization and I like to see things happen," said Ernst.

In addition to the 14 hours a week she spends coordinating the Red Cross volunteers at Martin Army Community Hospital and her work in the Officers' Wives' Club, Ernst is also a Nautilus instructor 20 hours a week at the new Fitness Center.

Ranger units give all soldiers chance to learn combat skills

Story and photos
by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Most Army cooks, mechanics and radiomen do just that: cook, work on vehicles and maintain and operate radios, respectively.

The cooks, mechanics and commo men at the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment however, must be proficient in infantry and Ranger skills as well as their individual military occupational specialities.

The only Ranger qualified soldier in the 3rd Battalion dining facility didn't envision himself in a Ranger unit when he joined the Army. "I enlisted to be a cook and go to an airborne unit," said Sgt. David Roberts, who completed Ranger Class 2-86.

"I went through basic training, cook's school and then jump school. They asked for volunteers for the 3rd Ranger Battalion and I went for it," he said.

"We get what's called 'low density' MOS personnel into the field for infantry skill training once each month," said Headquarters and Headquarters Company commander, Capt. Rusty Cullinane.

The "low density" MOS Rangers began their latest field operation July 10, beginning with an operations order at 4 p.m. for the unit to set up a tactical operations center.

The company set up, established security and began a mock battalion headquarters operation, that involved simulated company level missions.

HHC was probed by aggressors, moved again in the night, established commo and then performed an eight-mile tactical road march. The men, who had been divided into squads, then went into a live-fire exercise at Garnsey Range the next morning.

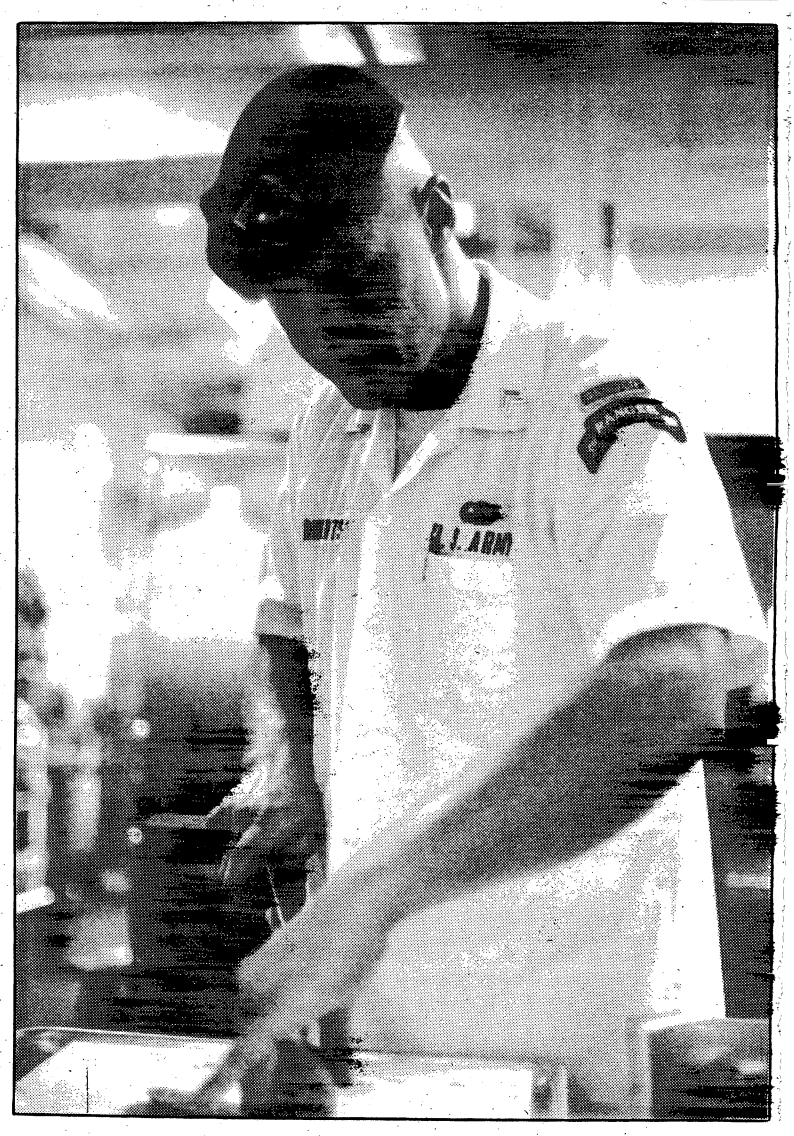
"While the TOC was operating our squad performed security and other squad operations. We also went through a land navigation exercise, which was challenging, as was the road march," said SP4 Alan Ramos, a communications specialist.

The training culminated in the squad combat drill course. Each squad, composed of two fire teams, maneuvered over a 500-meter area, using various infantry techniques to strike the objectives.

Roberts believes the missions are very beneficial. "Live fires are great training. Being in a unit like this, you have to be an infantryman first."

"If we ever went into a combat situation there's no telling what we might be asked to do," he said.

"Of course, we have to perform in our MOS and do it well. I like being a cook. But training like this is fun and breaks up the routine," Roberts said before he had to rush back to the Battalion area to help prepare the evening meal.



PFC Arvid Johnson shares Roberts' enthusiasm for the opportunity to go the the field."I'm a mechanic and work on vehicles all day. Getting to go out and participate in infantry training is a lot of fun," he said.

In addition to their monthly training, these Rangers who have non-combat MOSs also have a chance to participate in airborne operations, just as their fellow soldiers in the line companies do. Many, like Roberts, have also been to Ranger School and have earned the coveted Ranger Tab.

"After I went through Ranger School I came right back to this Battalion. I've been here since the Battalion formed almost two years ago. I like it so much that I'm reenlisting for present duty assignment for four more years," Roberts said.

The 75th Ranger Regiment is always looking for soldiers in "low density" or non-combat MOSs to volunteer for the unit. Volunteers must be airborne qualified and must also successfully complete the Ranger Indoctrination Program before being actually assigned to a Ranger unit.

"If you want to work in your MOS but be a Ranger too, we can use you," Ramos said.

Sgt. David Roberts, a cook with the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, slices tomatoes for the lunch meal.

Using hand and arm signals, Sgt. David Roberts directs his fire team during a recent Ranger live-fire operation.

ROTC nursing students get hands-on training

Story and photo by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Twelve nursing students are currently assigned to Martin Army Community Hospital for Reserve Officer Training Corps summer camp.

According to Lt. Col. Jean Hammond, chief of Nursing Education and Training at the hospital, the students will spend five weeks here in the Nurse Summer Training Program.

"For many of them, it will be the first clinical work they've done," Hammond said. Up to this point the nursing students have been in a classroom setting, learning the basics of nursing. Clinical work gives them a chance to work with patients, she explained.

Each student got to choose three locations and three specialties prior to being assigned to a hospital for NSTP. Once they got to Benning, the students were matched up with an experienced Army nurse, who will teach them while they're here.

"The preceptors work with the students one on one, acting as teachers, advisors and evaluators," Hammond said. "The student observes how they function in the clinical setting, and get hands on experience doing the same thing."

Hammond said the training at MACH takes a two-pronged approach. "We want the students to learn clinical skills and develop leadership skills in nursing."

All the preceptors are soldiers and are well versed in military bearing and principles, Hammond said. "We want to teach the cadets what it's like to be in the Army."

The cadets will be rated on leadership ability, initiative, communication skills, sensitivity, in addition to their technical skills.

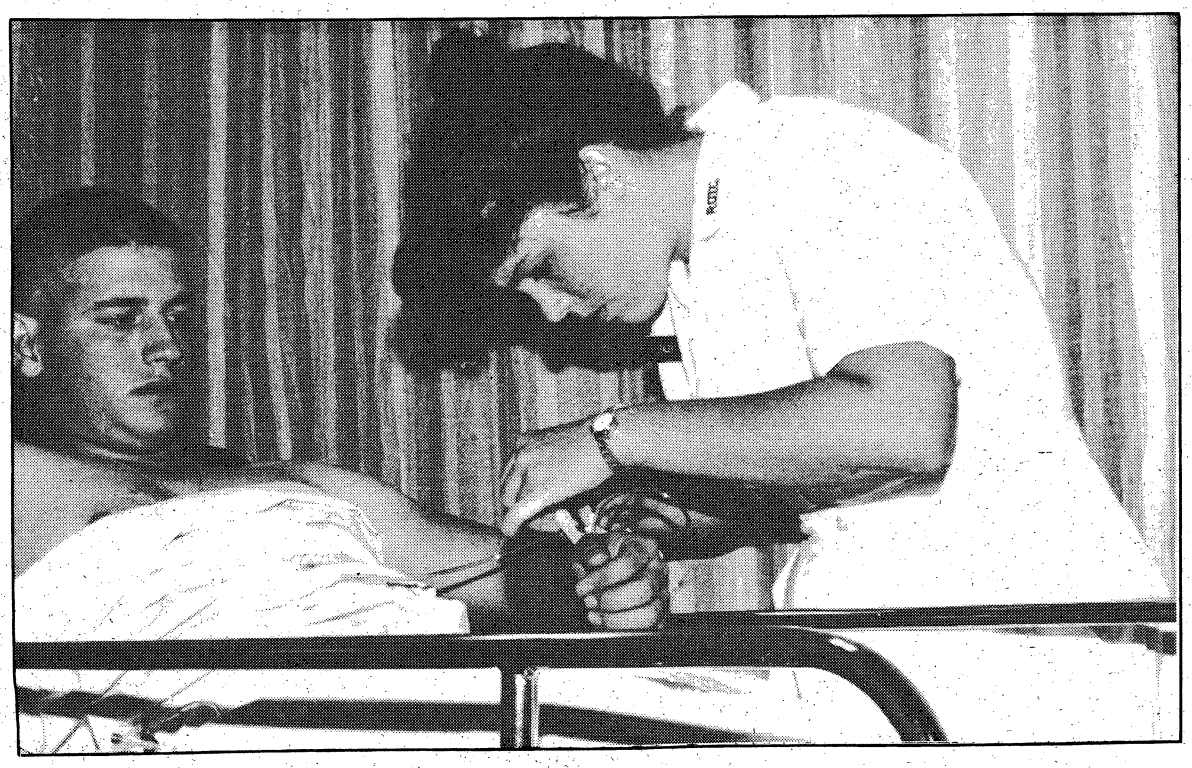
They're also rated on "followership." "The Army needs people who can follow as well as lead, so this is something we try to evaluate in the cadets," Hammond said.

The cadets work with their preceptor in one specialty area. Hammond said the cadets are spread out over the hospital, working in areas that interest them.

"We have cadets in intensive care, female surgery, the operating room, emergency room and other areas," she said.

Once their NSTP is finished, 10 of the cadets will stay on for three weeks of cadet troop leadership training. "The CTLT will be in non-patient care jobs — logistics, administration, the pharmacy — to give the cadets a better awareness of those people with whom they're going to be interfacing once they're in the Army," she said.

Cadet Shana O'Neal, a student from Morgan State University who is currently working in male surgery under the supervision of Capt. Shawn Bolender, said she's learning a lot.



"I have never worked in a hospital before, so it's a real challenge," she said. "I thought it would be much easier than it is."

She said the hardest thing for her is writing the nursing care plan for each patient. "There's a lot involved in it that I didn't think about before actually doing it," she said.

O'Neal believes the training will give her an edge over other nursing students when she goes back to school in the fall.

Bolender said she enjoys the teaching role. "I've been in-Triathlon tests childrens' mettle in swimming, bicycling, running

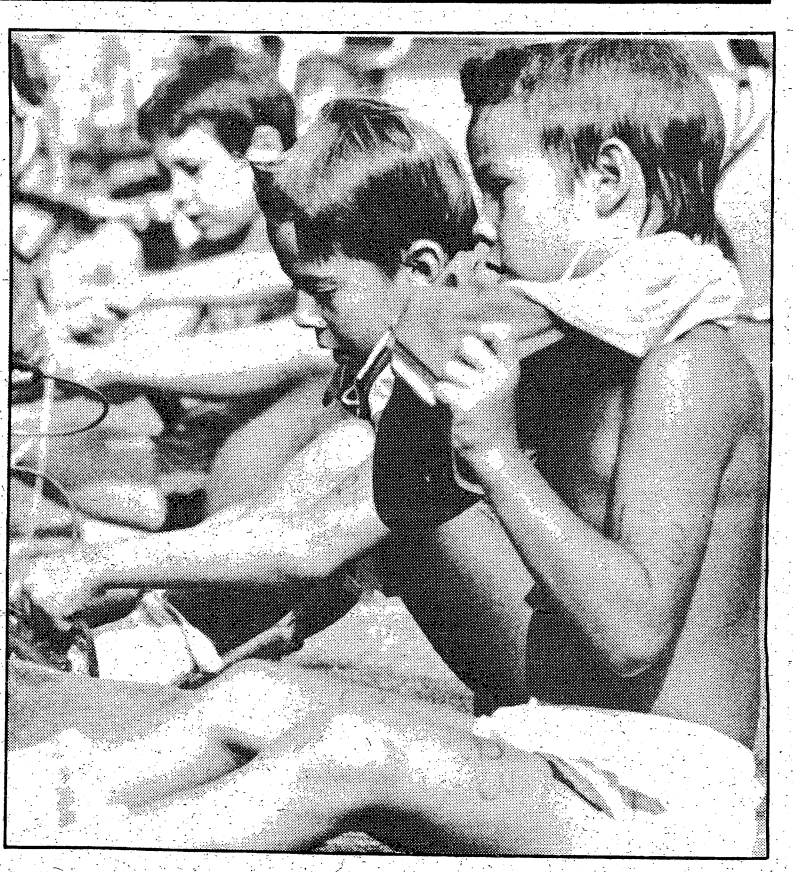
by Danny Means
Super Kids Triathlon

Attention all "Super Kids!" You are invited to participate in the 2nd Annual Super Kids Triathlon. If you aren't sure if you are a super kid, these are the requirements: 7 to 14 years old; able to swim, ride a bicycle and run. You can do all that? Then you're a super kid.

The Super Kids Triathlon is set for 8:30 a.m. July 26 at the Double Churches Recreation Area on Double Churches Road in Columbus.

Cost for pre-registration is $7. It is $9 the day of the event. All proceeds go to the St. Jude Children's Hospital in Memphis, Tenn. Participants must bring their own bicycles.

In the Super Kids Triathlon, everyone who competes is a winner. All kids receive a Super Kids winner's package and a T-shirt. Top finishers in each age group will receive trophies and other prizes.



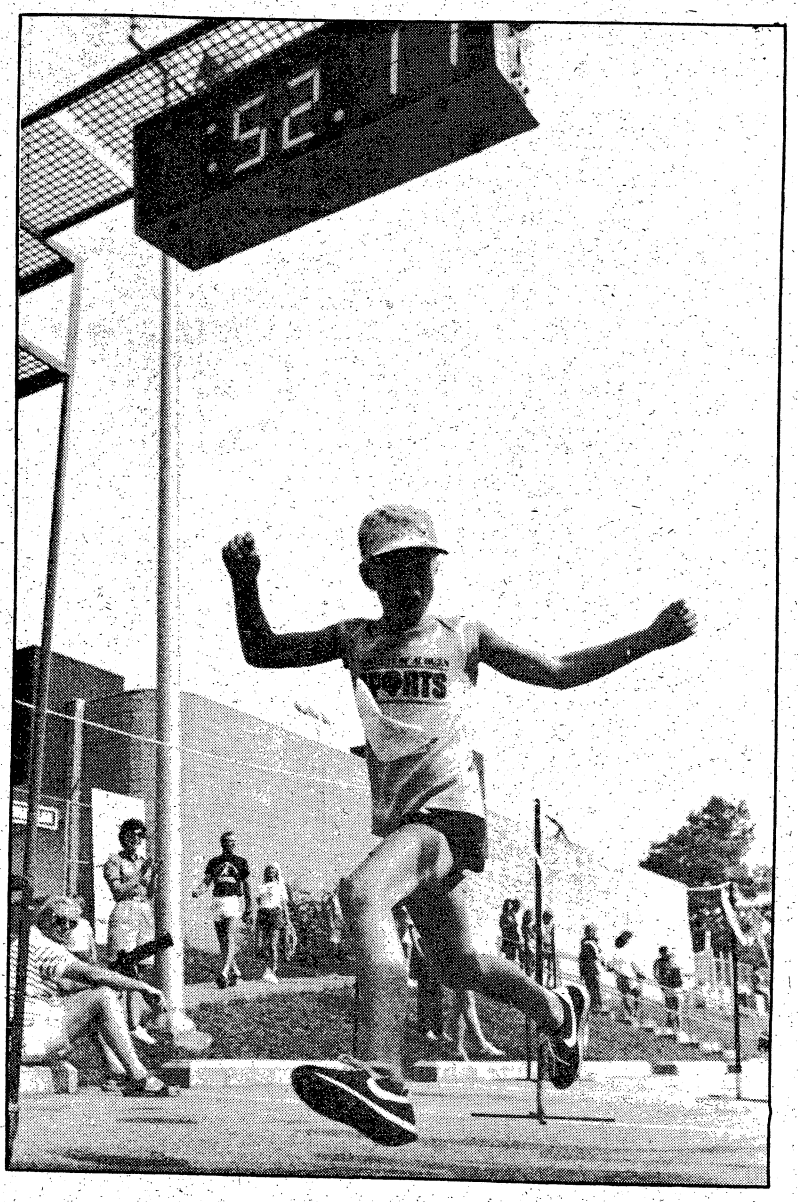
The competition will be divided into two groups, 7 to 10 and 11 to 14 years old. But the super kids only compete against others the same age.

The triathlon consists of three events with different requirements for the two age groups.

Super kids must swim 25 meters if they are 7 to 10 years old and 50 meters if they are 11 to 14. Then they dry off, dress quickly, still timed, and hop on their bicycles for a 2.6 or 4.6 mile race. Competiton ends with a one or two mile run to the finish line, where snacks and drinks will be provided for the kids and their families.

Parents, get your super kids registered soon because the number of participants is limited. For more information, call 563-1896.

Super kids, you will be doing something for yourself as well as for the St. Jude Children's Hospital.



Competitors dress quickly as they prepare to mount their bicycles at last year's Super Kids Triathlon.

Post boxers training hard for upcoming tourney

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning boxers have started rocking the bags in preparation for the U.S. Army Infantry Center Boxing Tournament set for July 25 at Gowdy Stadium. The bell will ring at 7:30 p.m. for the opening bout.

"Each battalion-size unit should be represented on the card," said Albert McGruder, coordinator for the event.

Two representatives of the 690th Medical Company will be providing medical attention at the tournament, but not in the form of first aid.

Fort Benning boxers train for upcoming tournament.

Lorenzo Young and Fernando Cook, the "Dynamic Duo" look forward to their unusual mission.

"I enjoy singing, said Cook, and will be looking forward to singing a lullaby for my opponent — "Rock-a-Goodbye—Baby."

Cook sang the same tune to his last opponent, Frank Elmory, knocking him out in the third round.

Young's last opponent never saw round three, because the welter-weight sent him to the deck early in the first round.

The "Dynamic Duo" are prepared to fight.

Cook's determination to fight has not been an overnight decision.

"It has been sort of a family tradition," said the Flint, Michigan native. "Both my father and brother were boxers," said Cook.

Young, who grew up in Detroit, was exposed to the Kronk Gym and especially Thomas Hearns, but Cook has been his fight-motivator.

"When Cook was assigned to the Company, he constantly talked about boxing. I started sparring with him and knew that I would have to get into the squared circle to see what it was about," said Young.

"Seeing what it was about" requires a lot of hard training.

The duo rises at 5 a.m. each morning for road work, which usually extends five miles, with plenty of wind sprints.

In addition to road work, they participate in the Company physical training program.

They also train four days each week with the boxing team at Harmony Church Field House.

The Dynamic Duo continue to work hard in preparation for the tournament.

"People tend to think that medics are soft," said Cook. "But we are proving that we work hard and are not weak."

"Each battalion should send someone out to represent them in the tournament," said Young. "The Dynamic Duo will be prepared to send them back," he said.

These combat medics are prepared to make Fort Benning recognize the boxing program. Any battalion wishing to be represented in the Tournament, should contact the Post Sports Director at 545-5777.

Studies dispel myths about women athletes

by Frank Gross
Randolph Air Force Base, Texas

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — Are women athletes more vulnerable to athletic injuries? Many people thought so — for a number of reasons.

Structurally, women have wider hips and narrower shoulders, less bone density and less muscle mass than men. Consequently, women were thought to be too frail to participate in sports.

Additionally, fears that women would injure their reproductive organs in some way were very prevalent in earlier decades. Until recently, strength training for females was not "socially acceptable" because of the belief that it made them appear more masculine.

Political and social influences changes this and brought more money into women's sports and recreation.

Women have met the challenge and are more competitive than ever and, in turn, the public has become more interested in women's sports. The increase in funds also has brought above more studies of the female physiology.

As a result of these studies, we now know that women respond to the stresses of training in much the same manner as men with one exception — strength training.

Females progress in weight training at about the same rate as males, except that when men weight train, their muscles increase in size while women show little or no gain in muscle size. This is due to the fact that women have relatively low levels of the male hormone testosterone.

Another common misconception is that women have a higher incidence of sports-related injuries. As with most men, injuries are usually minor and are commonly found in the lower extremities.

Women's internal reproductive organs are not as prone to injuries as men's because they are well-protected by bone and muscle structure.

The best advice for women who want to get into sports and fitness activities is to carefully improve their physical condition before placing themselves in stressful situations.

Athletic activities ae continually expanding for women. In addition, competition is constantly improving. Good training methods will always develop quality results in everyone.

Drinking plenty of water helps ensure successful, safe noontime workouts

by William Slaughter
Randolph Air Force Base, Texas

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — Now that summer is here, many outdoor-sports enthusiasts find their motivation waning when faced with a noon workout.

There are several things they can do to make exercise more tolerable and safe during the summer. Research shows that much of the advice received from coaches and doctors in the past was wrong, and in some cases, dangerously so. Here are some common sports training myths, followed by some right things to do.

The first myth — add salt to the diet. This advice is dangerously wrong. Taking extra salt before strenuous physical activity creates a saline imbalance in the body. The body, trying to compensate for this imbalance, pulls moisture from the surrounding tissues and muscles where it is needed most. This contributes to dehydration — the worst enemy of athletic performance.

In a three-hour marathon, a runner may lose up to 13.5 milligrams of salt — far less than the 35 milligrams needed to produce the mildest symptoms of salt depletion.

The second myth — drink sugared liquids before and during exercise. These products were believed to get into the bloodstream faster than water to provide the much-needed calories and to replace lost salts. Unfortunately, studies show that just the opposite is true. The more carbohydrates in the drink, the longer it takes to get out of the stomach and into the muscles.

It also dramatically slows the rate of water getting into the system. Even a very small amount of sugar takes up to 30 minutes to reach the muscles.

The third myth — wear heavy clothes or a sauna belt or plastic suit to lose weight. This advice is not only wrong, but extremely dangerous. First, any weight lost through sweating is only temporary. Weight can only be lost by burning calories and the best way to do that is by exercise.

Wearing a plastic suit during activity significantly builds up the body's heat-stress index and limits the intensity and duration of exercise. This results in fewer calories being burned than would have been in the person had dressed properly, worked out harder and longer, and perhaps enjoyed it more.

More importantly, wearing such garments restricts heat loss, increases dehydration and can lead to heat stroke, kidney failure and death.

The fourth myth — running without a shirt promotes evaporation and more efficient cooling. Unfortunately, on a sunny, hot, humid day this allows the body to absorb infrared radiation which inhibits heat loss. This can lead to heat stroke more rapidly than if a person wore a light-colored, loose-fitting, porous shirt. Also, if it's hot and humid, it's better to run either early or late in the day.

Here's what athletes should do — drink a minimum of 64 to 100 ounces of water per day to prevent dehydration.

If a person loses two pounds of water during exercise, his ability to perform can drop 15 percent. Athletes who want a special drink should try the drink of champions — two tablespoons of fresh orange juice added to a cup of chilled water. Drink about two cups of this mixture 15 minutes before a workout and two more cups during each hour of exercise.

A person can run and play sports in the summer heat and enjoy it if he takes some precautions. The most important one, however, concerns water — drink lots of it.

Heat

from one level of severity to another. Prolonged deep and rapid respiration is frequently an early sign of heat injury.

To treat heat stroke or heat exhaustion the patient must be taken to the hospital immediately. Heat cramp victims should also be evacuated if the symptoms don't improve after 30 to 45 minutes

Treatment can be given while waiting for evacuation. Place the patient in the shade, remove boots and open clothing. If the patient is conscious give them a cool water solution (1/2 teaspoon salt in one full canteen of water) to drink. Be sure to rub the arms and legs and cool the body with water and fan.

Personnel conducting strenous physical activity should be alert for signs of heat injury no matter what the temperature.

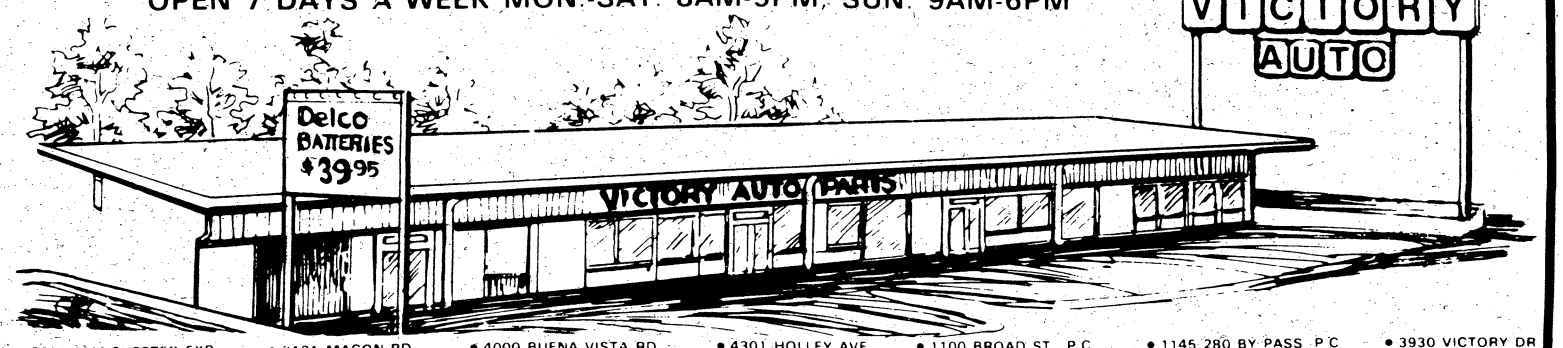
volved in education programs before and think it's interesting. It is extremely important for a cadet to know her limitations and be aware of her weaknesses. Cadet O'Neal sets goals each day and tries to accomplish them," Bolender said.

O'Neal said she likes having a preceptor because "any mistakes I make she can help me correct. She gives me a sense of direction."

An important thing she's learned is that "it helps to keep in mind that the patient is going to get better."

She's also learned something about the Army. "I thought the people (officers) would be real strict, but I've found out that they're all just nice people," O'Neal said.



Cadet Jerry Traynham, currently working in the operating room with 1st Lt. Mark Hodges, said he has prior experience working with patients in rotations at the University of Virginia, but he's learning a lot at MACH.

"We do pre-op interviews with patients, telling them what's going to happen and preparing them for surgery," he said. "I get closer to patients working with lieutenant Hodges, and get hands on individualized training from h'm."

Traynham said he feels good in the Army role. "I feel like I am being trained to fill a supervisory role. There's leadership here and the officers have to be a help to their subordinates."

197th heads west for Gallant Eagle '86

by Bill Branley
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Nearly 1,400 soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade deployed to various locations in California this week for Joint Readiness Exercise Gallant Eagle 1986.

The soldiers flew out of Lawson Army Airfield on U.S. Air Force C-141 aircraft bound for Norton Air Force Base, Calif. The final destination was the U.S. Marine Corps Air Ground Combat Center at Twenty-Nine Palms, Calif.

There, units of the Brigade will join other XVIII Airborne Corps elements in a series of desert maneuvers.

Other services will also take part in the JRX that will occur in many western locations simultaneously, and will involve some 35,000 Department of Defense personnel.

The 197th contingent at Twenty-nine Palms includes soldiers from 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry; 197th Support Battalion; Troop A, 15th Cavalry; HHC, 197th Infantry Brigade; Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; 72nd Engineer Company; and 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery.

Enroute to the exercise area, many of the Fort Benning soldiers traveled first to San Diego to retrieve vehicles and equipment shipped from the East Coast via ocean-going vessels.

After helping conduct a Logistics Over the Shore operation, the soldiers drove the wheeled vehicles in long convoys out of San Diego to the exercise area.

Meanwhile, the track vehicles made the last leg of the journey by rail and were off-loaded at an isolated desert railhead appropriately named Bagdad. Some items of equipment were flown to California in C-141 aircraft.

The Brigade set up a staging area at Twenty-nine Palms for several days of combat preparations and pre-exercise training.

The actual exercise will include offensive and defensive operations against soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), Fort Campbell, Ky.

The 197th soldiers will begin returning to Fort Benning, Aug. 7.

Women should be able to choose combat arms

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Russian 'amazons' proved themselves to be just as brutal, cunning on WW II battlefields

"I studied Russian and German women in WW II, and I know the history of ancient women as warriors. There is nothing more brutal, cruel and cunning than a female in battle. Look through historical accounts — from Africa to Middle East to Southeast Asia to American Indian — men fear women in combat." Dr. Gladdy Adams, psychology professor and former U.S. Army captain.

Should American women be allowed to fight as soldiers in combat and to be members of combat arms units?

The first argument most soldiers use and especially infantry soldiers, is the strength and stamina argument: "Women simply aren't strong enough nor do they have the endurance to function as infantry soldiers or in the combat arms."

I read of an American military officer who was a Vietnam veteran saying, on the subject of American women in combat, that "the average American woman is bigger than the average Vietnamese man and probably just as strong."

Look at women athletes. They are strong and compete in almost as many sports as men. Although women athletes have not been breaking men's records in most sports, some believe it is only a matter of time and conditioning.

The burning question is, are women strong enough to fight?

"There was absoulutely nothing more frightening than to have to face Russian women lying on their stone doorsteps and firing until they were dead. These women did not know what giving ground meant. They killed, then died, in place," said a German veteran of the WW II seige of Stalingrad.

Another argument many combat arms soldiers use against women on the battlefield is that women might become pregnant and, consequently, ineffective. It has been found, according to statistics from the book "War," by Gwynne Dyer, that the U.S. Army loses more time from its men as a result of drug use, alcohol and desertion than from its women because of pregnancy.

Pitting young, untested soldiers against an enemy and requiring them to perform is not a question of gender but one of solid training and individual make-up.

Most combat veterans say that no one can predict how they will function under fire until they're actually engaged.

Training plays a large part in reactions under pressure, however. Women trained would be women who could fight. Some women might not perform just as some men might not perform, but most would fight as trained.

Given the American concept of Air Land Battle in Europe, there will not be any defined "front line." NATO will be everywhere as will the Warsaw Pact.

The Army has women serving in Europe in every capacity except as combat arms soldiers. If World War III ever happens, given the probable fluidity of that conflict, American women will have to fight whether they are in combat arms units or not.

Russian paratroopers landing in West Germany will have to be defeated by American soldiers, regardless of their sex.

The combat arms and the infantry would not be for every woman, just as these fields are not for every man. But soldiers are made, not born, in the U.S. Army.

If a woman can satisfactorily undergo, withstand and pass any and all combat arms schools, I say let them do it.

Shouldn't every woman in this democracy of ours have the right to fight for her country? The men do.

Various voices

How do you think women can be used effectively in combat roles?

PFC John Vogel, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade — "Women can be useful in any type combat support role. They can even be effective in certain combat positions, such as aviation. Their reflexes are actually faster than men and that makes them better combat pilots.

1st Lt. William Mitchell, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 1st Infantry Training Brigade — "They would be most effective back here at the homefront. I don't foresee them in the actual field of combat. I would not want to see my daughter go to combat or even a hostile area."

SSgt. Johnnie C. Robinson Jr., Non-commissioned Officers Academy, The School Brigade — "Women have always been in combat. They have always been effective in the support areas. Some can be just as effective in a fighting position as any other soldier."

PFC Wanda Thompson, USA MEDDAC — "I am a medic with a job to do. If that job takes me to a combat environment, that is where I can serve. Just as any other medic, I am expected to and I am trained to serve in both peaceful and hostile environments."

SSgt. Frank J. Gadson, Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry — "They can be used effectively in the support units, such as the medical or supply fields. They can also be used in combat fighting positions, if it is a short period before rotation."

Op-Ed

Government's first duty is defending our freedom

Association of the U.S. Army

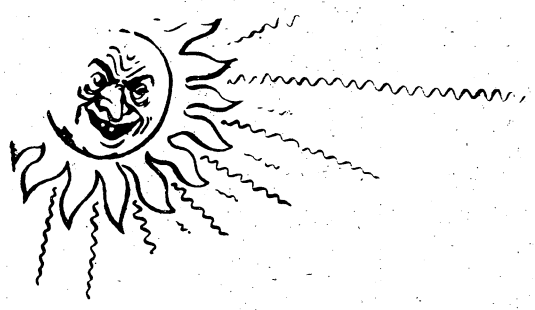
Somewhere along the line our government seems to have allowed the cart to get before the horse when it comes to planning for the security of the United States. We permit fiscal considerations to dictate what is required to "secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

When the President sends a budget request to Congress, it is based on the potential threats we face. Our national security policy, unchanged since the 1940s, determines what people, armaments and resources are needed to counter specific threats to our democratic freedoms. Unfortunately, Congress frequently declares the defense budget "dead on arrival." Too often that declaration is based solely on political expediency and has no bearing on whether or not the budget is tailored to our defense needs.

Unquestionably, our major defense need today is the strength to deter Soviet expansionism. The Soviet advantage over the U.S. is very real and will continue unless the U.S. perseveres in strengthening its deterrent. At the same time, we live in a world where more than two dozen active aggressions are ongoing and terrorism is on the increase. It is thus abundantly clear that we have little choice but to maintain the capability of responding anywhere in the world to aggression of varying degrees of severity.

The question should not be how much defense can we afford, but rather what are the risks to our freedom and what will be needed to counter them?

Congress should cease dancing to the tune of some fiscal pied piper and base its consideration of the defense budget on the risks we see now and in the immediate future. Our defense must be based on a full and unconditional appraisal of the perils we face. We should spend no more on it and can afford to spend no less.



The first business of our government is the defense of our freedom. What is needed is a common sense determination of exactly what must be done to protect that liberty, given the threats facing it, and then apply the necessary resources to match that determination.

Conserving resources helps Benning weather heat wave

by Rodney Carroll
Energy Operations Office

Mother Nature continues to batter the Southern states with record high temperatures.

We are experiencing the worst drought in 100 years and at the same time, a heat wave is producing near record high temperatures. Worst of all, the weather forecast calls for more of the same.

The result of all this is record high demand for both electricity and water. This applies to Fort Benning just like everywhere else.

In past years we controlled peak demand for electricity by restricting the use of air conditioning on very hot summer days, and there were a lot of them.

Under the new rate agreement with Georgia Power Company, we can provide much more service, which is very beneficial during the current heat wave.

Under this agreement, we are not penalized for high demand peaks. To qualify for this program the customer must have the ability to cut down his demand during peak periods when instructed to do so by Georgia Power.

Only during periods of curtailment will air conditioning service be cut.

These periods of curtailment are not scheduled but usually fall into a certain time period. The critical hours come on weekdays between noon and 8 p.m.

The following tips will help control demand for electricity during critical time periods:

- Keep your thermostat set on 78 degrees or higher and leave it there. Use fans to help circulate the air.
- Avoid washing, drying and ironing clothes during peak hours.
- Wait until 8 p.m. to run your dishwasher.
- Close curtains and drapes to keep out the hot sun.
- Turn off lights, radios and televisions that aren't being used.
- Clean or replace your air conditioner filter at least every other month and keep the oudoor portion of your unit free from obstructions that prevent proper air circulation.
- Wear light-colored cotton clothing. Light colors reflect heat and natural fibers "breathe."
- Shower quickly to save hot water.
- Make sure all windows and doors close tightly.
- Avoid unnecessary opening and clothing of doors.

Our water supply continues to be an area of concern. Upatoi Creek supplies all of Fort Benning and remains very low.

Conservation of water during the summer months has controlled the situation up to this point. We must again ask everyone to observe the U.S. Army Infantry Center regulation concerning water conservation.

Watering lawns and washing vehicles is authorized two days a week not to exceed four hours each time. We have also scheduled two days a week for each family housing area to do their watering.

For more informaion, call the Energy Operations Office at 545-4652.

Soldier finds out hard way value of wearing seat belts

Safety Office

A Fort Benning soldier recently learned the value of seatbelts the hard way.

PFC Kevin R. Benson, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division, and a companion were traveling west on Sunshine Road when a deer ran out in front of the car.

Benson swerved to avoid the deer and lost control. He ran off the right side of the roadway turning over sideways before finally coming to rest upside down.

Benson and his companion unbuckled their seatbelts and crawled out of the 1986 Toyota seconds before it erupted in flames. The car was totally destroyed.

Benson said he always wears a seatbelt and makes his passengers do the same. He also believes that the seatbelt saved his life in this accident. Without it he and his companion probably would have been knocked unconscious and would not have been able to escape before the car caught fire.

He joins the Safety Office in encouraging all to buckle-up.

43rd Engineers expand NCO Club's parking lot

Soldiers work to overcome nature, obstacles

Company D, 43rd Engineer Battalion

When the Non-commissioned Officers' Club in Sand Hill decided to expand its parking facilities, the management called on the 43rd Engineer Battalion.

The horizontal construction platoon from Company D received the task to design and construct a new graveled parking surface.

The construction process had to be delicate so as not to disturb the red cockaded woodpecker nesting area.

An added challenge was that the site for construction was nestled behind the NCO Club and on a hillside.

All available means were used to bring in fill material to include 5-ton and 20-ton dump trucks and earth scrapers. Since the project is equipment intensive, orchestration is the key to safe and effective operation.

The project is schedule to be completed Aug. 6.

The parking lot will open to club patrons beginning Aug. 8.

Soldier passes midpoint, begins advanced individual training

Editor's note: This is the sixth article in a series of 13 that will allow the readers to follow one soldier through his entire One Station Unit Training at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill.

by Michael Ricca
1st Infantry Training Brigade

The last week was not only a good one for me, but also for 1st Platoon, Company C, and especially our company commander, Capt. Robert Lambert.

What made the week so good was the mid-cycle test we took at AO LAW. After days of constant reinforcement by the drill sergeants, we finally applied our new knowledge and skills to the 15 tasks that make up the MCT.

The tasks themselves were not actually the difficult part, however. The hard part was doing them in proper sequence, paying special attention to every minute detail.

When the testing was finished, Charlie Company, for the first time in at least three years, had "streamered" the event. To streamer the MCT, every soldier in the company had to pass the test the first time, allowing for absolutely no retests. Not only did the company do well, but our platoon took first place out of the four platoons in the company.

All of our hard work was not without reward. That evening we filled ourselves with ice cream, sodas and the first pizza we've seen since day one. Everybody really did his best to eat enough to make up for lost time.

The next morning was our second diagnostic physical training test. Once again, everyone showed great improvement.

There were more push-ups and sit-ups done than before and the times on the two-mile run were much faster. Again, 1st Platoon took top honors in total points accumulated.

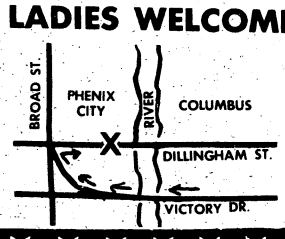
Despite the effort put into the PT test, our day was far from over. The rest of the day was spent preparing for our first in-ranks, Class A inspection. Standing tall in formation in our dress greens with our basic rifle marksmanship and grenade course medals on our jackets, we passed our final inspection of basic training.

Now we begin advanced individual training.

Friday morning we hit the confidence course. The course was fun and challenging. Several of the obstacles proved the necessity of not only team work, but also the trust one must have in his fellow soldiers.

After the confidence course, we were given our first pass. We went to the big Fourth of July festivities at York Field. This was a much appreciated break from our barracks and our training.

We finished our week with the anticipated pugil stick battles. Protected by helmets and pads and armed with padded sticks, we took out any frustrations we might have had by battling each other with the sticks.



The day ended with our first official class on what would be done at the drill and ceremony competition scheduled for the upcoming family day.

Next week we begin mortar training. AIT should prove to be hard work but well worth the effort put into it.

Edward Sell, a seventh degree black belt, demonstrates a Tae Kwon Do move.

Edward Sell, leader of the Sell Team, narrates the Tae Kwon Do demonstration.

Tae Kwon Do group visits 2nd ITB troops

Story and photos
by Robert Schmidt
2nd Infantry Training Brigade

The Harmony Church Theater was the location of an outstanding performance by the Sell Team recently. The event was sponsored by the chaplaincy of the 2nd Infantry Brigade for the soldiers training here.

The Sell Team is a Tae Kwon Do touring troupe from Lakeland, Fla. that comes to Fort Benning to entertain and help motivate soldiers in training.

Edward Sell, a seventh degree black belt, leads the group. He is the highest ranked non-oriental in the world by the World Tae Kwon Do Federation. He is also an ordained minister in Faith Ministry.

The Sell Team frequents Fort Benning because the soldiers here are undergoing one of the most stressful periods of their lives. The team shows troops what kind of things can be accomplished through total commitment.

Sell said, "We want to help these soldiers become strong mentally, internally and spiritually to succeed in basic training, and show them that they should not be afraid to go see the chaplain if they need help."

The Sell Team members include Sell's wife, Brenda. She is one of the highest ranked women in Tae Kwon Do in this country. The sparring during the show between husband and wife is tough but humerous.

The rest of the team is made up of young people who are highly motivated about life and their religion. They all speak out on how committment in belief of the Lord and Tae Kwon Do has helped their lives.

"I am here to show the soldiers you don't have to be a sissy to pray to the Lord," Sell said.

10th Mountain soldier vies with best; wins FORSCOM Soldier of Year honors

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Sgt. Jeffrey Waycaster was recently named Fort Benning's U.S. Army Forces Command Soldier of the Year.

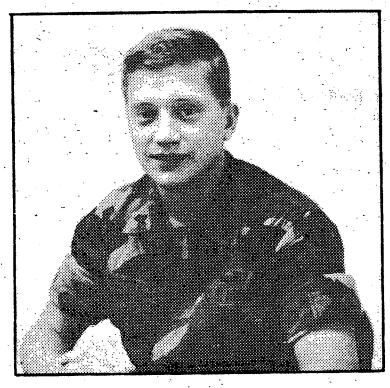
Waycaster is a mortarman assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division.

When he finished high school, he went to Georgia Tech on a full Reserve Officer Training Corps scholarship, majoring in systems engineering.

After two years, Waycaster said he just got tired of school, so he enlisted in the Army in January 1984.

"A lot of people couldn't believe I gave it up to join the Army, but I wanted to travel and see the world," he said.

The Army sent him to Mainz, Germany, where he spent 18 months with the 2nd Battalion, 87th Infantry, 8th Infantry Division.



He loved the assignment, and fulfilled his desire to travel.

"Most places were close enough to visit on a long weekend, so I traveled to England, Wales, the Netherlands, Switzerland, and Austria," he said.

Waycaster also found leave time to spend on more extended visits in Italy and Greece and said he'd love to go back overseas.

Preparing for the soldier of the year competition wasn't that difficult for him, he said because he recently completed the Primary Leadership Development Course, where he was distinguished honor graduate.

It also helped that he'd recently gone before a promotion board, Waycaster said. He said he likes being in a light infantry unit such as the 10th Mountain Division, which was a big change for him after serving in a mechanized unit in Germany.

Waycaster

Waycaster's plans to leave the Army and return to college when his current enlistment is complete in January 1987. Now that he's been away from school for a while, he said his outlook is different.

"I guess you could say the Army has been a three-year attitude adjustment," he said.

Leaving kids in cars can spell disaster as heat wave grips Southern region

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Last week Fort Benning Military Police reported two incidents of finding small children left unattended in parked cars on post.

MSgt. David Cameron, operations sergeant at the Military Police Activity, said in one case a 12-month-old baby required medical attention.

"The soldier-father had left the child inside the automobile with the windows rolled up 'for just a minute'," Cameron said. The baby was treated at the Martin Army Community Hospital Emergency Room for heat injury and later released.

The soldier was turned over to his commander for disciplinary action, according to Cameron.

In the second incident, two children, ages 3 and 4, were left unattended in the mall parking lot and were seen by a military policeman on patrol.

Fortunately, the MP found and stayed with the children until their parents arrived.

Police charged the parents under a Georgia law that makes it illegal to leave children under age 12 unattended for more than five minutes, Cameron said.

He said violators can also be charged under U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5, for leaving children under 8 years old unattended in a motor vehicle.

Cameron said police on traffic patrol are regularly reminded to watch for unattended children in post parking lots and MPA puts even more emphasis on this during the hot summer months.

Maj. Charles Bolger, an environmental science officer with the Preventive Medicine Office, said it doesn't take very long for children to suffer heat injuries.

"Temperatures inside a car rise very rapidly when it is hot outside," he said. "Parents should also watch the vinyl on seats."

There's an easy way to prevent children from suffering a heat injury inside a hot automoble, Bolger said.

"Don't leave them in the car. Take them with you when you go inside no matter how short a trip you're making. You just don't know how hot the inside of a car can get," he said.

Help available for families with problems

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Couples that have marital problems should seek help before their situation deteriorates.

"The biggest reason soldiers don't come in for counseling is they fear it will hurt their career," said Lt. Col. Paul Tessier, chief, Social Work Services, Medical Department Activity.

"There is a perception that if they seek help, they'll be identified as bad soldiers and their commanders will know," he added.

Tessier said letting the situation continue can lead to bigger troubles for the family.

"I tell them, if you don't get help, an incident will eventually happen that will bring it out, for instance, when an argument gets out of hand and the military police get involved," Tessier said.

He said the military way of life lends itself to causing stress on families and marital relationships. "The frequent moves, absences due to field exercises, temporary duty trips and short tours, as well as job pressures, all contribute to put stress on a soldier."

Also, many spouses do not have the support system found in their hometown community. "They have left their parents, grandparents and other family, who provide support in times of crisis for the family. It's the same way with civilians who work for large corporations and get transferred to new jobs. They leave their support systems behind and it's stressful for spouses and children."

An added burden to Army families is the financial strain of moving to a new post. "Many people dip into savings to cover costs of a move that are not reimbursed, and especially for lower enlisted soldiers, it puts a severe strain on family finances," Tessier said.

Adding to the problem may be poor communications between the husband and wife, he said. "Some people have difficulty talking about their problems without getting into an argument," Tessier said.

Other couples may have language problems when one spouse does not speak English or speaks it poorly.

All these things add up to put stress on a marriage, but it is important for people to know that help is available.

Tessier said his office gets referrals from Martin Army Community Hospital, the military police and also commanders and senior non-commissioned officers.

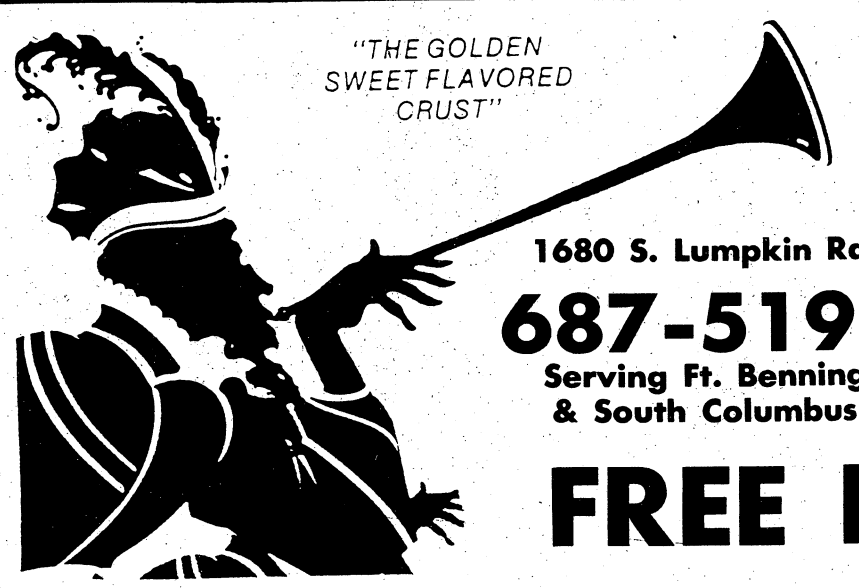
"Commanders are becoming increasingly aware and knowledgable about their soldiers, which is good," he said. "They may talk to a soldier whose work is deteriorating and find that he is having personal problems.

"Commanders who recognize the symptoms and refer troubled soldiers for counseling are really doing them a favor," Tessier said.

Couples who want help with marital problems can also go to unit chaplains, the Family Life Centers, Drug and Alcohol Office or the Family Advocacy program, Tessier said.

"Any of these agencies can work with people to see they get the kind of help their problems need. If they cannot provide it, they can send you in the right direction to get it," he said.

His office can also refer a couple to counseling facilities downtown, which are covered by Civilian Health and Medical Plan for the Uniformed Services. "Some people are more comfortable getting counseling away from the military, so we do refer people downtown," Tessier said.



Coming in for counseling doesn't guarantee a sure cure, however.

"We are not miracle workers," he said. "We can help couples, but they have to want help and be willing to work on their problems."

Social Work Services is located in Building 2625 in Splinter Village off Dixie Road. For more information, call 545-1661.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal's Office

Within the first 10 days of July there were more than 30 traffic accidents reported to the Fort Benning Military Police. As a result of these accidents, 12 people were injured, three were hospitalized and four have died.

Let's take a look at one of the more recent traffic accidents and examine some of the contributing factors.

It was approximately 8:25 p.m. It had started to rain and night was falling. Vehicle No. 1 was traveling east on Custer Road at a high rate of speed, then passed another vehicle in a no passing zone; the driver lost control of vehicle No. 1, swaying from side to side and struck the front of vehicle No. 2, which was traveling west on Custer Road. The result, the two occupants of vehicle No. 1 were killed and the operator of vehicle No. 2 was taken to Martin Army Community Hospital and admitted.

Now let's see what caused this accident.

Weather conditions play an important part in this and similar accidents. Rain and other types of bad weather cause the surface of the road to become slippery.

Another important consideration is the speed of the vehicle. The faster the speed of a vehicle, the less amount of traction between the tires and the road. Faster speeds also cut down on the amount of time the driver has to read the changing situations.

Failure to obey posted regulations also play a part in accidents. Areas are designated and posted after much consideration.

In this case the vehicle was passing in a no passing zone and therefore did not have time to safely get back into his own lane and maintain control of the vehicle.

As we can see several factors contributed to this accident.

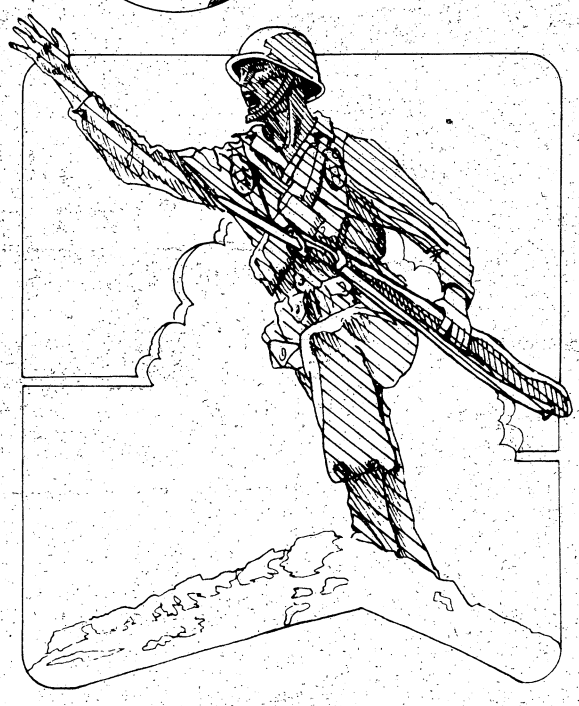
But, are these factors common in most accidents? To this we can answer NO!

A large number of accidents are caused by a simple lapse of attention, failure to note how close another vehicle is parked, or failure to notice a slow down or stoppage of traffic ahead. "I didn't see the stop sign", or "I didn't see the car pulling out from the curb" are a couple of the more common excuses heard during a traffic accident.

What can we do to cut down on the number of accidents occurring every day?

The first and one of the most important things we can do is pay attention while we are driving. Our attention should be focused on the ever-changing traffic. Drivers must be aware of what's happening in front, on the sides and behind their vehicle at all times. This calls for attention on the road, not what happened at work, or what's for dinner tonight.

We also must obey the posted traffic signs. These signs are posted for our safety, but they won't work if we don't obey them. Such signs include stop signs, yield signs and one-way signs.



Also, know your vehicle. Each vehicle has its own particular handling characteristic. Knowing these characteristics can tell you how the vehicle will respond in certain situations.

Defensive driving can help cut down on the accident rate. When you slow down and allow that other driver who should have yielded the right of way to you, you have prevented another accident. Being on the lookout for the other driver could possibly save your life, or the life of someone you care for. And please don't drink and drive. Alcohol and driving do not mix.

What Specialist Hales has been aiming for during his off-duty time.

Specialist Four Jason Hales has been aiming for the best. As a soldier, and as a student. He's an Infantryman at Fort Myer, Virginia, as well as a B.S. candidate in Mechanical Engineering at Park College. And he's just one of the over 100,000 soldiers who are building brighter, smarter futures through the Army's Reaching for Excellence education program.

It's a terrific opportunity that's available to each and every soldier, at virtually every Army post around the world. Reaching for Excellence covers everything from basic educational skills and technical skill development to undergraduate and graduate studies at the college level. And it's a chance to have at least 75% of your college tuition paid for by the Army.

Continuing your education is a commitment that's fully supported by the Army leadership. You can start taking advantage of this commitment at your post's Education Center. There, you'll find a professional education counselor who can help you set short- and long-range goals which fit both your educational and career plans.

Drop by your Education Center and find out, as Specialist Hales did, how you can turn some off-duty time into a lifetime of rewards. If you want to get ahead, now's the time to get started.

ARMY EDUCATION.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

History buffs invited to join new Infantry Center group

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The recently formed United States Army Infantry Center History Team will be meeting bimonthly and is looking for interested individuals to share history knowledge with the group.

The goal of the group is to meet and discuss various topics.

Specifically, they hope to meet "to identify areas in which military history can contribute, improve support provided to current historical initiatives and instruction and to coordinate use of available resources to use military history as an integral part of USAIS instructional, doctrinal and proponency activities."

The team, which met for the first time last week, already has members with an impressive background in history. Members include, Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., the Infantry Museum director, primary history instructor from the combined arms and tactics department and the USAIS librarian.

"What we've found is that by bringing together people who work with history, you get a lot of ideas on ways to improve instruction at the school," said Capt. Marty J. Eaton, chief of the Military History Branch, CATD.

"One reason history is so important for the soldier is that one way to learn is through experience and the other way is to learn about it through someone else's experience," Eaton said.

1st ITB OSUT soldiers visit Six Flags Over Georgia

Story and photos by Laurie J. Hill

"Free at last!"

They stormed off the buses at 9:30 a.m. and surged through the entrance gate with a flood of anticipation.

Soldiers attired in a variety of physical training uniforms scattered everywhere. Some were in blue, others in black and still others in grey, distinguishing different companies of the 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

The troops from 6th Bn., 1st ITB took a day off from training on Sand Hill to attack Six Flags Amusement Park, outside Atlanta.

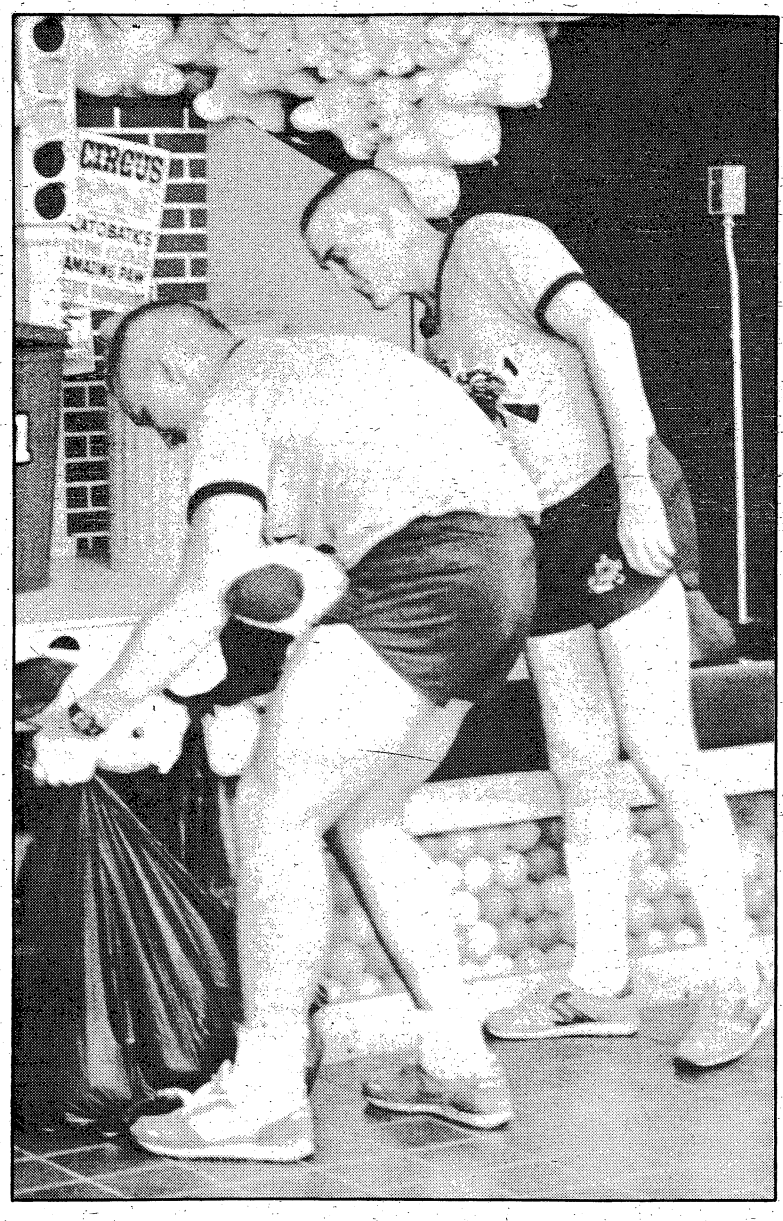
Sunday was the second part of a "total family weekend" that began Saturday with a drill and ceremonies competition.

According to battalion commander, Lt. Col. Bruce A. Harris, the weekend was designed to give the families something to do away from Fort Benning.

Approximately 1,400 soldiers bought discount tickets so their one-day pass could be spent at the park. "About 750 rode on the buses. But we gave them the option so that they could ride with their families if they wanted," said 1st Lt. Gary J. Ramsdell, battalion operation officer.

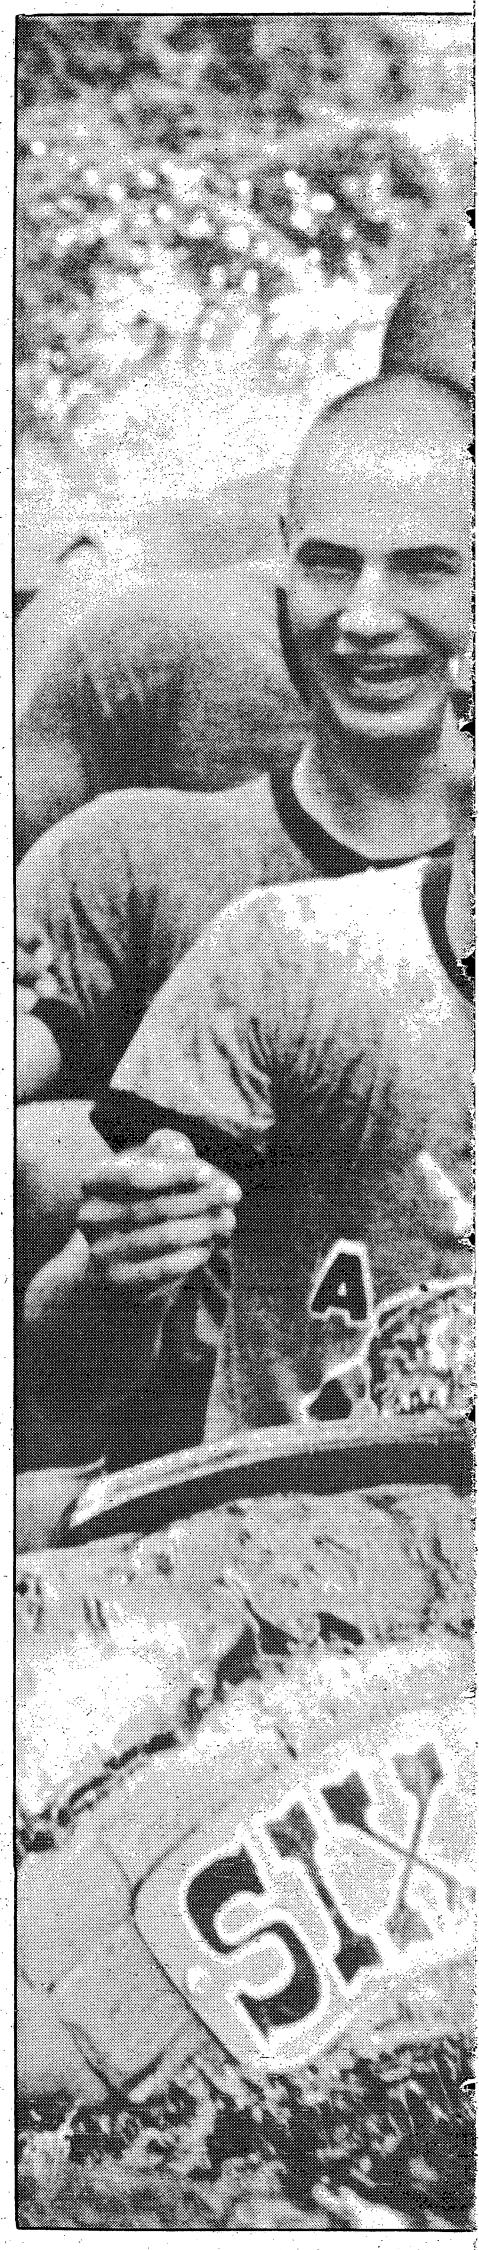
Many of the soldiers had just graduated the first phase of One Station Unit Training and were preparing to go on to the second phase of training. "Companies B, C and D all are from a COHORT unit and all had graduated from the basic to Advanced Individual Training phase," Ramsdell said.

The soldiers braved rides ranging from the "Freefall" to the "Mindbender" and the "Waterlog," stopping only to eat or sightsee.



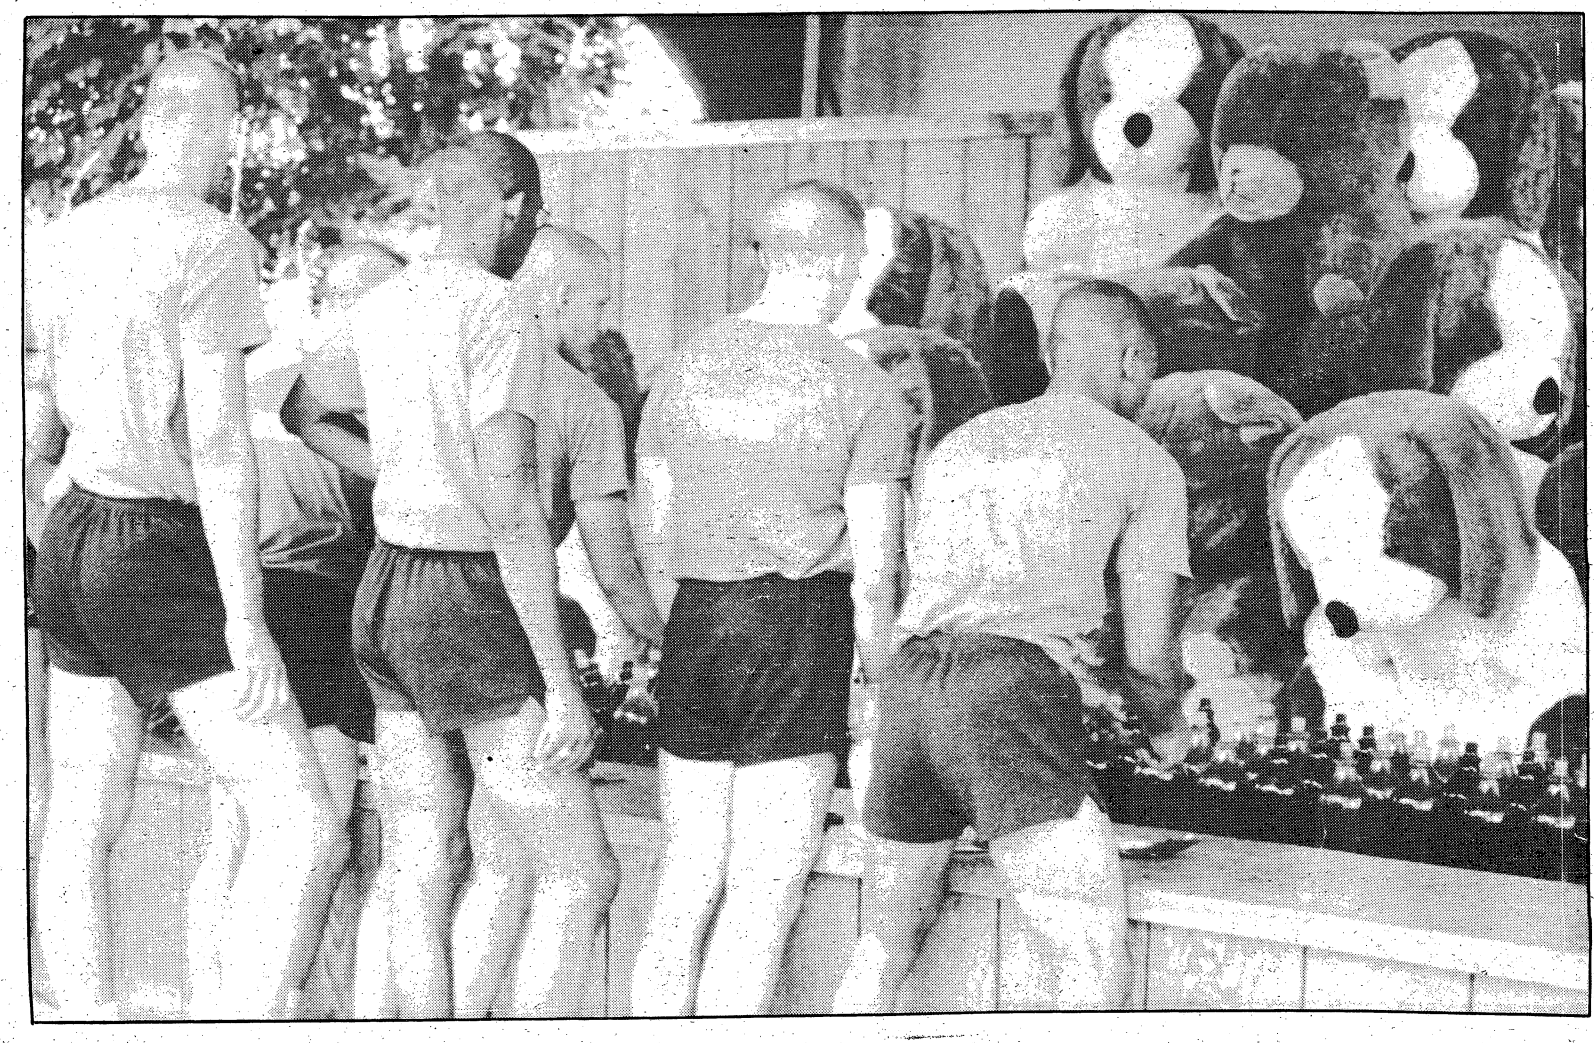
The battalion arranged an all-you-can-eat chicken dinner for the noontime meal.

Some adventurous troops challenged the many games. Many of the skillful soldiers and their families walked away with armloads of stuffed animals.

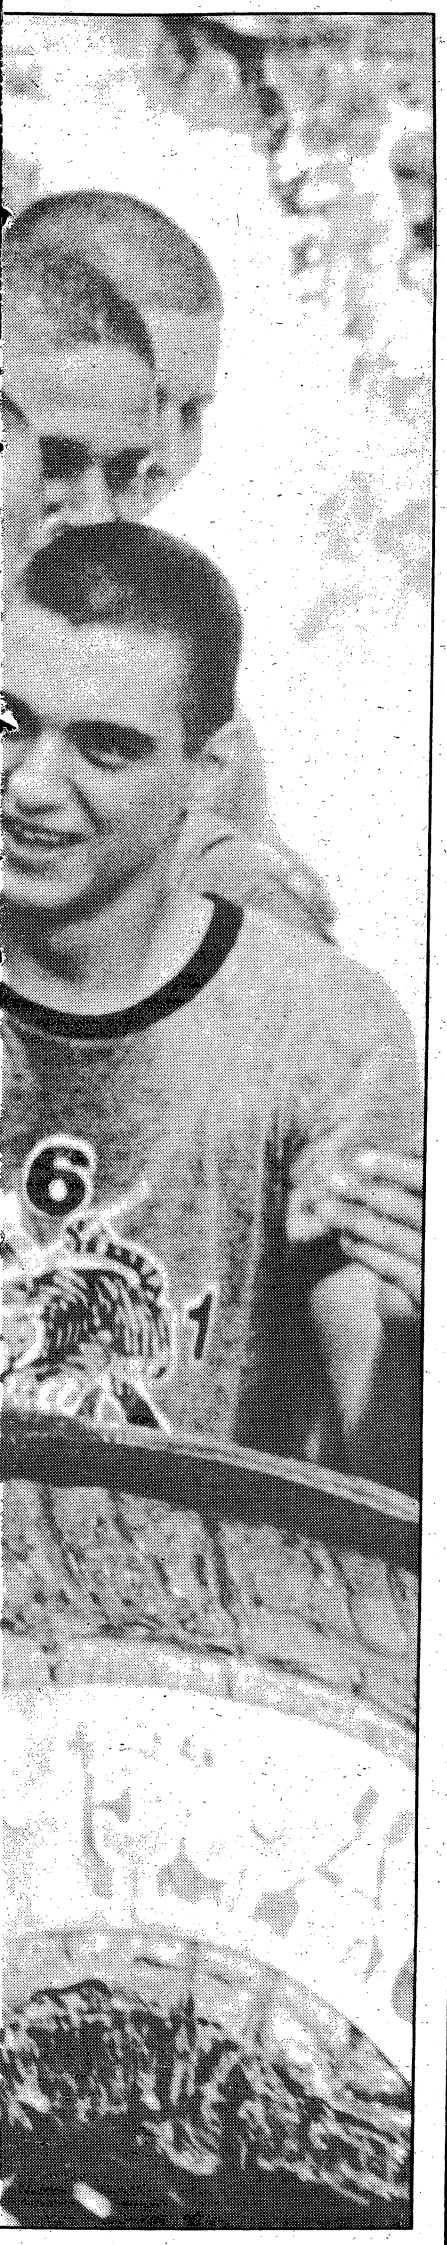


Pvt. 2 Anthony E. Hoke, Company A, needed a large plastic bag to carry his prizes. "I'm cleaning up. This is great," he said.

"We reaped tremendous benefits in bringing the soldiers," said Harris.



"It was a great sucess. All the soldiers made it to the buses on time and we had no problems at all," said Ramsdell.



Pvt. 2 Anthony E. Hoke stuffs his prizes into a bag while Pvt. 2 Gary A. Walrath watches.

Spiritual

Commandments teach vital leadership values

by David H. Hicks
U.S. Army Infantry School

"The words of Nehemiah son of Hagaliah: . . . While I was in the citadel of Susa, Hanani, one of my brothers, came from Judah with some other men, and I questioned them about the Jewish remnant that survived the exile, and are back in the province in great trouble and disgrace. The wall of Jerusalem is broken down, and its gates have been burned with fire."' Nehemiah 1:1-3, NIV.

Against this background Nehemiah responded to the needs of his countrymen by exercising sound leadership that was governed by the values he believed were important, as we shall see.

Those values arose out of the ethical framework established by God in the Ten Commandments that were received by Moses at Mt. Siani.

Notice the steps taken by this leader. First, he humbled himself before God, confessed the national sins of his forefathers and then renewed his own faith and dependence on God. Nehemiah realized that his success as a leader was dependent upon his obedience to God and that his leadership must be consistent with the ethical standards laid down by God.

Next, he sought the King's approval to go to Jerusalem so that he could lead and assist his people. The events that followed reveal that Nehemiah received the King's approval and successfully led his countrymen.

What made Nehemiah a successful leader?

He was a man of prayer, patriotism, action, perserverance and courage, both moral and physical — his first impluse however, was prayer.

Leadership values and ethics are related as seen in the example of Hehemiah, and today that relationship remains crucial for those successful leaders who set a good example at every level. That's what will make this "year of values" more than a theme.

Retired Army aviator enjoys flying home-built experimental airplane

Story and photos by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Where do old Army aviators go? In Bud Schuman's case, they keep right on flying.

Schuman, a retired chief warrant officer who spent 30 years flying for the Army, is a civilian employee at Lawson Army Airfield. He spends his days working as an air traffic control specialist there, and until recently, his nights and weekends building himself an airplane.

His Bushby Mustang II was inspected and proclaimed airworthy by the Federal Aviation Administration May 29, marking the end of a six-year project for Schuman.

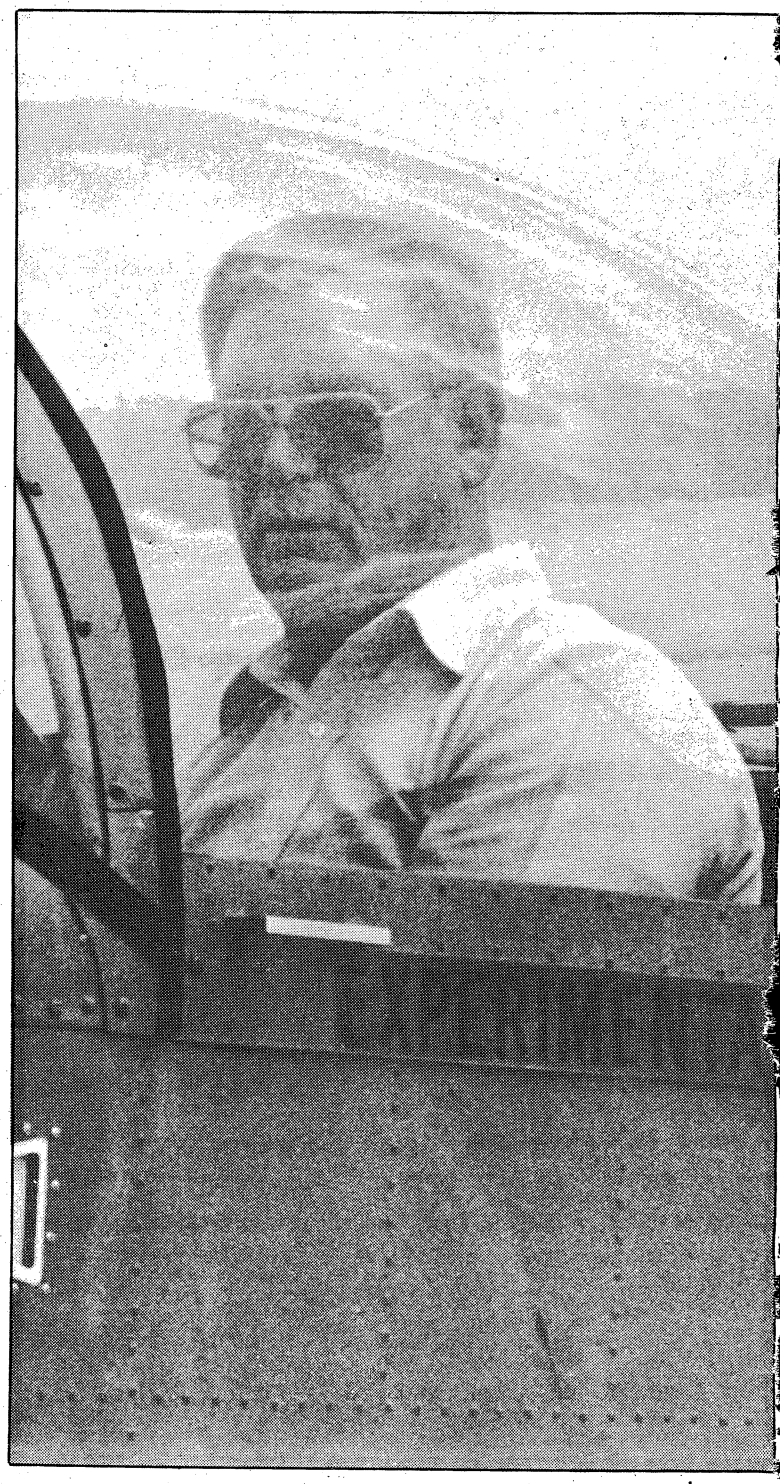
The Bushby he built is a single-engine, two-seater sport airplane. Its empty weight is 893 pounds, while its gross flight weight is 1,500. "Its useful load is 607 pounds, including 150 pounds of fuel," Schuman said.

It can carry three hours worth of fuel and can travel at 170 miles per hour.

"The purpose of home-built airplanes is for recreation and education," he said. "Building the plane was definitely an education and flying it is pure recreation."

When he started the project, "I didn't even know how to drill a hole," he said. "I thought I did, but I found out it's harder than it looks."

Schuman ordered the construction drawings for the plane, then obtained the materials a little at a time as he needed them from various suppliers. The motor in his plane is a used one he bought from the Fort Benning Flying Club and had rebuilt.



Schuman said he learned what he was doing as the work progressed and he got a lot of help from friends. The first thing he built was the main wing spar, which includes the cockpit area and landing gear. He said this was the most difficult part of the project. Then came the fuselage, wings, tail section and canopy.

All materials used have to be aircraft grade, as must be the quality of workmanship. Schuman said the plane is made out of a very strong aircraft grade of aluminum and the hardware also must be a especially strong to take the stress of flight.

He started building the plane in the summer of 1980 and estimates that he put about 1,200 hours work in on the craft.

Schuman belongs to the Fort Benning Flying Club and the Experimental Aircraft Association in Columbus, two groups of people interested in sport aviation in general, as well as a variety of modern and older aircrafts.

He said anyone interested in sport aviation should contact one of these groups, or him, for more information.

Bud Schuman tries out the cockpit of the aircraft that he spent six years building.

MACH Brace Shop fills vital need

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Are the arches on your feet falling so fast they need a parachute?

If they are, maybe you should visit the Brace Shop at Martin Army Community Hospital to find a way to stop the fall without having to go to Jump School.

Operating since 1958, the Brace Shop specializes in braces that strengthen or support human limbs.

Patients are recommended and given prescriptions for braces from local physicians, Family Practice, Occupational Therapy, Physical Therapy and orthopedic surgeons.

The five personnel at the shop are orthotists. These professionals design braces by bending and molding selected materials to achieve the correct support and a custom fit for each patient.

In order to get a comfortable custom fit the orthotist needs to have a multitude of skills.

"We are sort of a jack-of-all-trades," said Sgt. Jeffery N. Wood.

Knowing how to run certain machinery is crucial to the trade. Among the machinery used in the shop are; welding torches, band saws, grinders, automatic shoe nailers and sewing machines for leather. In addition, the orthotist must be skilled in pouring and molding plaster, hand tooling leather and be patient enough to bend different metals with irons.

"The field is going more towards plastics and less toward aluminum, because it's lighter," said SSgt. Ralph A. Urgolites, the noncommissioned officer in charge of the Brace Shop.

The shop's decor is evidence in the shift towards lighter, more comfortable braces.

A huge oven used to melt plastics sits in a far corner. A smaller "toaster" oven is also on hand to melt the plastics used in arch supports.

The orthotists at the Brace Shop are well trained in their field and spend a great deal of time in school.

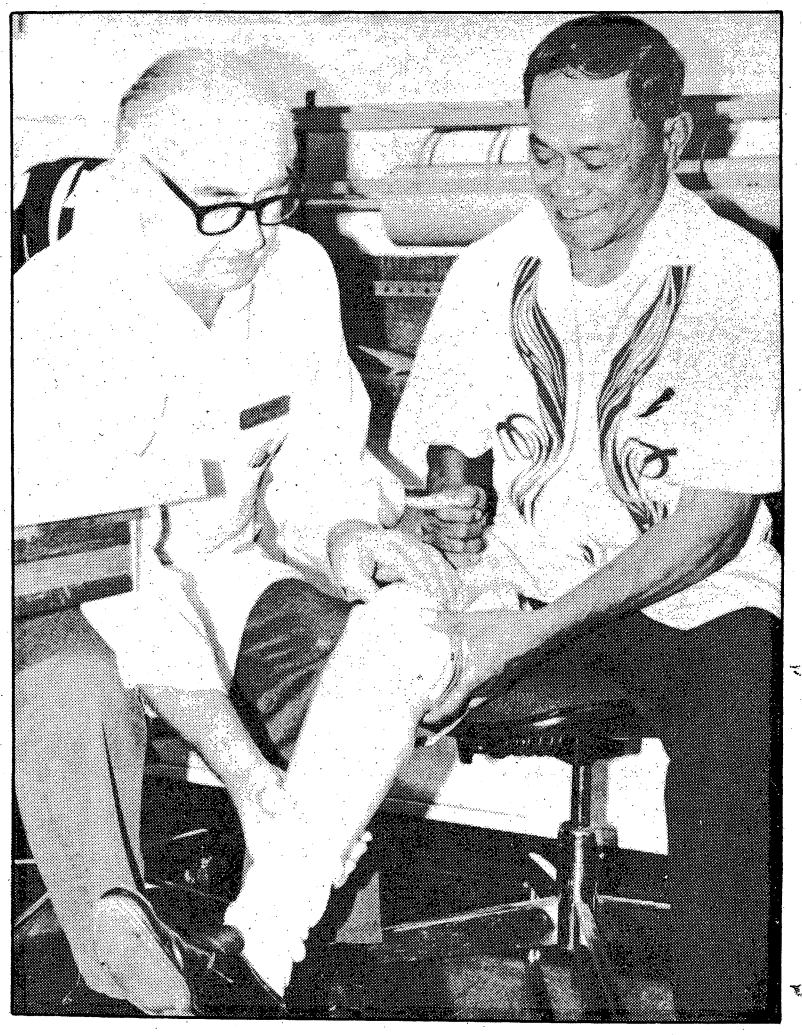
"We have to have extensive knowledge of anatomy and physiology to nerves, muscles and bones. Wherever a nerve comes out of your spine we have to know what it makes move," Wood said.

Having this kind of knowledge takes time and hard work. "We get 46 semester credit hours for college credit. The school is 52 weeks long and is very hard," Wood added.

The shop is a very busy place. Last year 6,000 patients were served. Most of them had either foot or knee injuries.

Wood and Urgolite attribute the work load and the type of problems they see to the fact that Fort Benning trains a large number of infantry soldiers.

The shop has as many braces as the human body has bones.



"We have eight different braces just for the ankle, six different kinds of arch supports and 10 different kinds of knee braces," Urgolites said.

"We also take care of a lot of people with polio and nerve damage including cerebral palsy, multiple sclerosis and broken backs," Wood said.

"When a patient first comes in with his prescription and if it comes prefabricated we take it off the shelf and give it to them (the patient). But if we don't have it, we custom make it," Urgolites said.

"It may take up to a few days to make a brace depending on how busy the shop gets, but we're faster here than in most brace shops. On the average it can take from seven to 10 days to have a brace ready," Wood said.

So anyone in need of braces can feel confident that there are skilled qualified craftsman at the Brace Shop to lean on.

A worker in the MACH Brace Shop fits a customer's new artificial leg to make sure it is properly constructed.

Book explores war's evolution from caveman to nuclear age

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Military history enthusiasts, amateur and expert alike, will enjoy a new book by author Gwynne Dyer titled "War."

Dyer, a veteran of the British, Canadian and U.S. navies, was a lecturer at Sandhurst, the British military academy.

"War," a book filled with graphic photos and illustrations, came about as a result of the seven-part public broadcasting series by the same name that Dyer also created and wrote.

The author examines war from the point of view of its evolution from small bands of hunter-warriors clashing to the nuclear weapons nightmare that we now stand, mired, in the middle of.

Through it all, Dyer makes a telling point about today's modern soldier: "Gen. Sir John Hackett, British soldier and author, once wrote that 'the essential soldier remains the same. Whether he was handling a slingshot weapon on Hadrian's Wall or whether he's in a main battle tank today, he is essentially the same.'"

For all our modern innovations, equipment and weapons, conventional war still comes down to men, face to face, fighting, and Dyer stresses this. But, he says, the consequences of war can and do change. Herein lies his telling point: "These consequences have the potential to destroy the entire human habitat: war and civilization, which were born as Siamese twins, may also end together."

Dyer writes that this is the result of industry, modern science and organizational skills being applied to an ancient institution that still obeys its ancient rules.

Along with Dyer's tracing of the evolution of war he gives the reader underlying satisfaction with the presentation of facts that, while sometimes obscure, had an overall effect on the development of war.

The Japanese, according to Dyer, were the first to really employ firearms effectively in combat, taking place in the 16th century. However, by 1675, no firearms could be found in Japan.

Why? The samurai, the Japanese warrior class, preferred single combat in which they could win personal glory. It took years to perfect the skills of a samurai but anyone, in a short period of time, could learn to fire a rifle or cannon. The Japanese, pioneers in the field of the employment of firearms, turned back to a medieval society.

Dyer writes of the English and French armies engaged at Agincourt in 1415, during the Hundred Year's War: "the pathetic spectacle of dismounted knights, wearing about 60 pounds of plate armor each, attempting to charge on foot like infantry. How easy they were to dispatch — with sticks or rocks or whatever came to hand — once you knocked them over."

Mounted knights became ineffective at this time because, while they could protect themselves, they could not put enough armor on their horses to protect them from the English long bows. The French were decimated, whether on horseback or foot. Chivalry had ended.

Dyer dismisses conventional war and limited war as blind alleys in trying to find a path out of the horror of nuclear confrontation that we now face.

He says our only hope is to abolish war: "Some generation of mankind was eventually bound to face the task of abolishing war, because civilization was bound to endow us with the power to destroy themselves. We happen to be that generation...there is nobody wiser who will take the responsibility and solve this problem for us. We have to do it ourselves."

Dyer is, of course, right. However, selling such lofty ideas to the Russians is easier written about than done.

The disappointing thing about this book is that it doesn't give an answer to the enigmatic question "How do we keep from obliterating the planet as a result of a nuclear war?"

Horrifyingly enough, to that question there seems no answer.

Intruders grab first place in Women's Softball League

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Intruders downed the Kamikazes in a five-inning shutout to clench the first place spot in the Women's Division of the Fort Benning Softball League Tuesday night.

The Intruders, 1985 Champions, grabbed the title in their 11-0 victory at Gowdy Field.

The 100-degree temperatures really got the Intruders fired-up in the opening inning.

Taking an early lead, the Intruders topped the first inning with four runs. The bases were loaded when Sandy Moore hit a hard shot through the short stop position to bring in the rally-starting run. She was followed at bat by Jackie Hoskin, who dropped one just over the head of Kamikaze third baseman, Vicki McMullen, to keep the drive alive and bring in another run.

The Kamikazes could not generate an attack early in the game, with batters hitting infield pop-ups for the easy out.

The Intruders came back in the second inning with more of the first inning power.

Led off by JoAnn Taylor's single, the unstoppable intruders were at it again.

From the dugout came the chant, "Hit that ball down the middle. Make them work, make them work a little."

As if hypnotized by the chant, Annette King powered a grounder between short-stop and second base.

Dorcel Johnson drove a single down the third base line to load the bases. Martha Shumpert followed, slamming a single that brought two runs across home plate.

The combination of power and speed would continued through three more innings of play before the game would be called on the 10-run rule.

Under this rule, when a team leads by a 10-point margin, the game is called.

The Intruders finished the fourth inning leading by eight runs. The Kamikaze began to find first base but could not advance to second because of the tight defensive efforts of the Intruders infield.

Needing two runs in the fifth inning to end the game, the Intruders came out smoking, determined to cool their heels at home.

LuLu Doucet opened with a single and advanced to second on a single by JoAnn Taylor.

Doucet scored the game's ninth run on a single by Annette King.

The winning run was on first base when Tweet Taylor hit a single, advancing King to second.

With two outs, Marilyn Woods came to bat, thundering a hit over second base and bringing in the two winning runs.

The Intruders will play in the post playoffs that begin Monday, with the 1986 Post Champions being decided in Wednesday's game.

The playoff games will be played at Gowdy Field, first game beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Hash House run features thrills of chase, capture

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It's a race. It's an orienteering course. Or, could it be "follow the leader?" It isn't any of those. It's a hunt. And the game is just as hungry as the stalker; both feed on fun.

Hash House runs feature two hares and as many hounds as are active enough to give chase.

The run is a game in which some players, called hounds, chase others, called hares. The hares leave a trail of flour along their route to lead the trail.

The Chattahoochee Valley Hash House Harriers were on track Saturday, with 23 hounds beating the trails of Uchee Creek Recreation Area in search of the hares.

Trevor "Half-lip" McLendon and Andre "Afrikan" Ryan, known as the "untouchables," were the hares for the festive event.

The game opens at a point marked by a circled-X, which also indicates changes in directions along the course.

The hares, with a 15-minute head start, set the course, leaving puffs of flour as a guide for the thirsty hounds.

At various intersections, the hounds find another circled-X. Here, the hares have left two false trails and one true trail.

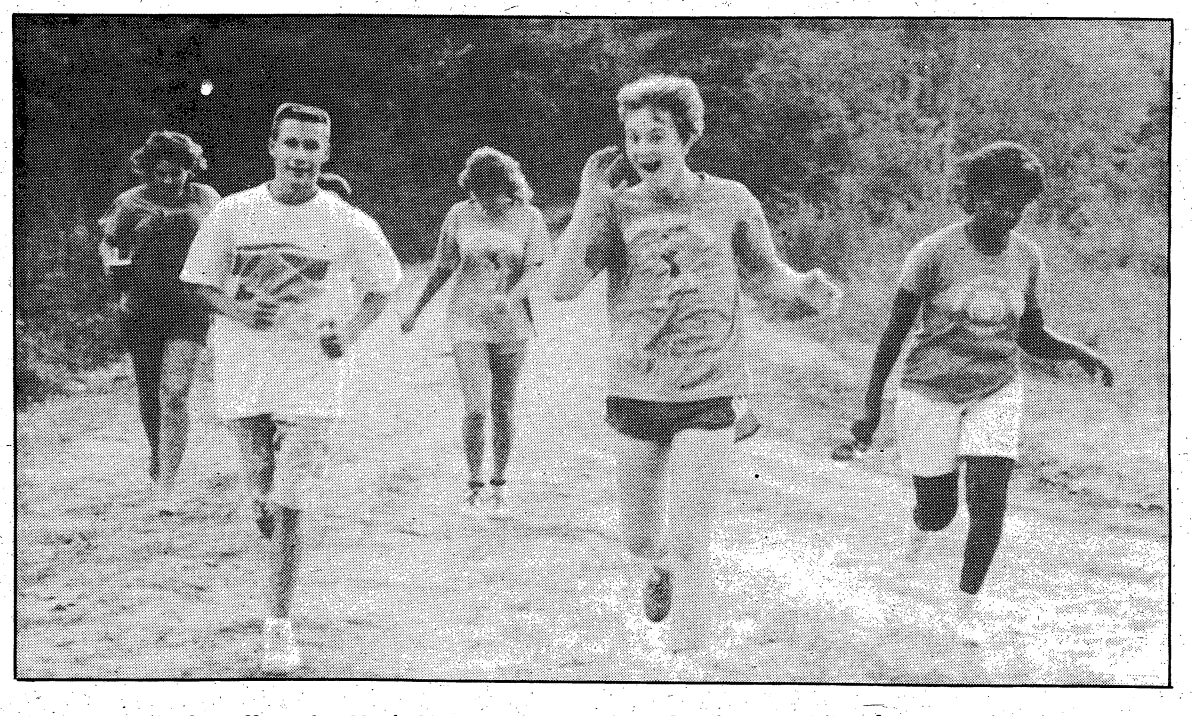
The cry of "on-checking" rings out through the woods to let the rear runners know that the trail is being checked for authenticity.

About 300 meters along the flour-puff trails, the hounds may encounter a sign of three hash marks to indicate a disappointing false trail.

At this point the "on-back" cry sings out to establish a false trail.

If no such hash marks are found, the trail is confirmed as the real one with a shout of "on-on." And the hounds are on the tracks of the brow-beaten hares.

Some hounds can follow the scent without the use of a floor trail.



"Capt. Tim Reynolds is called "Old Faithful" because he never misses a race and is seldom led down a false trail. It seems he just instinctively picks the true trail each time," said David "Double Barrel" Christensen.

The hares get an additional 15-minute jump at the halfway point, where the hounds are more than willing to take a break, after the first three miles of the course.

The hunters take this time to re-live the grueling encounters of the course's first-half.

"I thought that I had caught up with the front runner," said the "chief reprobate in charge," Lt. Col. Richard Hemling.

"But as I began a sprint down the trail, I heard the "on-back" and was instantly drained," he said.

Participants take off in the Hash House run at Uchee Creek Recreation Area.

Sprints are not always possible over the 5.3-mile course.

"Though we ran straight trails in the beginning, we also went through the true woods, jumping over logs, ducking the branches, and moving the brush," said Capt. Steve Shoup, also known as "Warm Beer."

The hounds were really able to use their noses in the final two miles of Saturday's course.

The end point was marked by the circled-X, but was also fumed with the smells of barbecue, fried onions, fresh vegetables and other enticing foods.

Hashers are christened with nicknames at the end of the race where the "down-down" festivities began. First-time hashers are also honored in the "down-down."

Hash House runs are not contests, nor are they very competitive. They are an opportunity for fun-seekers of all ages to get together for an evening of thrills and adventure while staying physically fit.

The Chattahoochee Valley Hash House Harriers run twice each month. All are invited to attend. For information on the next run, call Capt. Tim Reynolds at 327-0441.

'Super Kids' Triathlon July 26

by Danny Means
Super Kids Triathlon

Attention all "Super Kids!" You are invited to participate in the 2nd Annual Super Kids Triathlon. If you aren't sure if you are a super kid, these are the requirements: 7 to 14 years old; able to swim, ride a bicycle and run. You can do all that? Then, you're a super kid.

The Super Kids Triathlon is set for 8:30 a.m. July 26 at the Double Churches Recreation Area on Double Churches Road in Columbus.

Cost for pre-registration is $7. It is $9 the day of the event. All proceeds go to the St. Jude Children's Hospital in Memphis, Tenn. Participants must bring their own bicycles.

In the Super Kids Triathlon, everyone who competes is a winner. All kids receive a Super Kids winner's package and a T-shirt. Top finishers in each age group will receive trophies and other prizes.

The competition will be divided into two groups, 7 to 10 and 11 to 14 years old. But, the super kids only compete against others the same age.

The triathlon consists of three events with different requirements for the two age groups.

Super kids must swim 25 meters if they are 7 to 10 years old and 50 meters if they are 11 to 14. Then they dry off, dress quickly, still timed, and hop on their bicycles for a 2.6 or 4.6 mile race. Competition ends with a one or two mile run to the finish line, where snacks and drinks will be provided for the kids and their families.

Parents, get your super kids registered soon becaise the number of participants is limited. For more information, call 563-1896.

Super kids, you will be doing something for yourself as well as for the St. Jude Children's Hospital.

Shooters hit mark at competition

by Tommy Pool
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit PAO

Members of the U.S. Army pistol squad won the overall team title and set two new records during this year's annual Interservice Championships at Nashville, Tenn., June 26 to 29.

The USAMU "Blue" team composed of Lt. Col. Ralph Talbot, MSgts. Roger Willis and Thomas Woods, SFC James Laguana and SSgt. Gary Marsh, fired a total of 4,460 out of 4,600 points to defeat the National Guard "Blue" squad at 4,426.

The winning Army "Blue" team was coached by SFC Arnold Casey, while Talbot served as team captain in addition to being a firing member.

The victory marked the first overall Interservice team title won by the U.S. Army squad since 1981.

In individual competition, two new Interservice records were posted by MSgt. Erich Buljung and Willis.

Buljung fired a near perfect score of 200-19x in the rapid fire phase of the .22 caliber championship, to raise the old record of 200-18x.

In the .45 caliber event, Willis set another new Interservice mark by scoring 200-16x to erase the old record of 200-14x.

USAMU's James Laguana, 1984 national pistol champion, scored a final aggregate of 3,502 out of 3,600 points to finish second in the individual championship.

The overall Interservice title was won by TSgt. James Lenardson of the Air National Guard, with a total of 3,512. Willis placed third with 3,499 points, while Talbot rounded out the fourth place position at 3,493.

Golfers ready for upcoming challenge

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 1986 U.S. Army Infantry Center Battalion Golf Championships will be in full swing July 23 and 24 at the Follow-me Golf Course.

"More than 32 teams are expected to participate in the championship tournaments," said SSgt. Michael Gray, Fort Benning Sports Director.

The top seeded in the Battalion team championships will go on to the Individual and Flight Championships July 30 and 31.

All active duty soldiers assigned or attached to a battalion-size unit at Fort Benning are eligible to participate.

Applications are being accepted through 3 p.m. July 31, at the Physical Activities Branch, Building 394, Doughboy Stadium.

For more information, contact the Fort Benning Sports Director at 545-5777.

Research shows variety key to good fitness program

by William Slaughter
Randolph Air Force Base, Texas

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — Which activity is best for getting and staying in good physical condition?

Ask serious runners, swimmers or cyclists that question and their answers will be predictable. Research gives scientific answers and attempts to prioritize a number of activities in terms of relative value. Unfortunately, no two such lists agree.

None offers a single answer to total fitness. There are more than 600 muscles in the body containing about 100 billion muscle fibers. No single activity works them all.

Running, for example, may do great things for neglecting upper body strength and creating significant injury — causing imbalance between certain muscle groups.

Each sport or activity is muscle-group specific. This means that to be good at each activity, a person must develop specific muscle groups and improve the oxygen-uptake capacity of those muscles.

If someone is a good swimmer, it does not mean he would be a good runner or cyclist, unless he also runs or bikes. Similarly, a body builder who looks like Arnold Schwarzennegger may not be physically fit. He could be the opposite in terms of circulatory or respiratory fitness, unless he participates in an aerobic activity.

The President's Council on Physical Fitness defines fitness in terms of muscle strength, power, agility, speed, flexibility and circulatory-respiratory endurance.

Research provides more exhaustive lists, but also advocates the need to include a variety of activities in an exercise program for total fitness.

A combination of one or more aerobic sports such as running, swimming or biking, along with some form of regular, progressive-resistance training, such as weightlifting, is recommended. Add a recreational or competitive sport such as tennis or racquetball and a daily stretching routine for a well-balanced program. Change these activities regularly to prevent boredom or injury.

Remember, for any combination of activities to be effective, the activities must be done on a regular basis and coupled with proper rest and nutrition.

The Columbus Jaycees' 14th Annual Chattahoochee River Raft Race is set for Aug. 2 beginning at 8 a.m. The race begins at the Columbus City Docks behind the Trade Center and ends at Engineer Landing on Fort Benning.

Prizes for the Raft Race are: first and second place trophies to the captains of the winning raft in each of the eight classes; the River Heritage Award will be given to the raft that collects the most litter and first and second place awards will be given to the best commercial raft that best represents a company or organization.

Registration forms for early registration are available at the Jaycees office, 22 6th Street, Columbus. For more information, call 323-7224.

New policy allows wear of jungle boots

Soldiers may now wear the jungle boot in lieu of the standard combat boot, according to a Department of the Army message. However, a change to AR 670-1 restricts their wear with the green service uniform and in formations where uniform appearance is required.

The regulation change also allows the wear of commercial boots of similar design of the standard combat boot.

For more information, call Mr. Hensley at 545-5931.

Soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade direct a vehicle from a floating pier to the beach.

197th soldiers test their 'sea legs'

by Bill Branley
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

For many 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers, the deployment to Joint Readiness Exercise Gallant Eagle 1986 at Twenty-nine Palms, Calif., has been a test of their sea legs.

These soldiers, all qualified to drive many types of Army vehicles, spent their first week in California off-loading vehicles from ships and boats at the San Diego port.

The soldiers lived on a Navy vessel and worked at several sites in the area. Some worked on the large freighter that carried the hundreds of Brigade vehicles from Savannah, Ga., to San Diego via the Panama Canal.

The freighter, anchored about two miles offshore, discharged its cargo onto Army boats and "causeways," large floating platforms that ferried vehicles to the beach.

Brigade soldiers, joined by others from the 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky., and the 7th Transportation Command, Fort Eustis, Va., helped in every phase of the operation and got to know a lot about Army sea-going capabilities.

The next phase of the operation for the 197th soldiers was getting everything to Twenty-nine Palms, about a six-hour ride into the desert.

The tracked vehicles, which had been ferried to a wharf, were loaded directly onto railcars. Wheeled vehicles, meanwhile, were staged at a nearby location for convoys to the exercise area.

When the last of the vehicles and equipment had arrived in the exercise area, the Brigade soldiers began several days of combat preparations and pre-exercise training.

The 197th will begin returning to Fort Benning Aug. 6.

Taking care of families crucial to Army readiness

by Dawn Kilpatrick
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Up-to-date Dependent Care Plan will make clear who's minding children when parents are away

Deter, fight, win.

A simple thought, but the Army's mission becomes a complex concept when individuals' needs enter the picture.

The soldier's family is a specific individual need that plays an important part in the readiness of the force. If a soldier must worry about his family being taken care of, chances are he will not be as effective on the job. When the force sets about deterring, fighting and winning, it is important for individuals to be effective.

Based on this type of thought process, the Army leadership has begun placing greater emphasis on the quality of life and care of the Army family. A Department of the Army message that hit the streets earlier this month is an even more aggressive move on the leadership's part to ensure that the needs of the family as well as the needs of the Army are met.

The message, which is directed to commanders, specifies that soldiers married to other soldiers who have children and sole parents must be counseled using DA Form 5304-R, Family Care Counseling Checklist.

If all commanders were conscientious and did this, the Army may never need worry about the readiness of soldiers in those groups. As it is, however, many commanders have never even heard of a Family Care Counseling Checklist.

Too often, soldiers in these categories are overlooked. For some reason, the needs of their family members are deemed less important than those of soldier/civilian unions.

A recent letter in the Army Times stated that the Army could save a lot of money and successfully meet budget cuts mandated by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings act if it would oust all soldiers married to other soldiers who had children. A little narrow-minded? Certainly!

The needs and concerns of all family members are important. So, all commanders should use the Family Care Counseling Checklist.

What comes out of the session is a Dependent Care Plan. This plan is devised by the soldier/parent to determine who will be resposible for his children in the event of deployment, overseas assignment, temporary duty or any other instance that requires the soldier be away from home for an extended time. It is a contingency plan that must be on hand.

When commanders are on the ball and carry out their end of the bargain concerning the Dependent Care Plan, it then becomes the soldier's responsibility to ensure that the people he names to care for his children are, in fact, prepared to do so.

"If we were to move out today, I know there would be soldiers who would come and tell me that the people on their Dependent Care Plan can't take care of their kids because they moved away or something."

The words of CSM Richard McDonald from the Support Battalion of the 197th Infantry Brigade are all too true. Many times soldiers fill out their plans while viewing them as "just more paperwork." And, when the time comes to implement the plan, the children are the ones left out in the cold.

"The only thing you can do in that case is to tell the individual to go anyway," McDonald said as the answer to the problem.

The command sergeant major went on to say that if the Army was stricter on ensuring that the plans were kept updated, the problems of soldiers showing up for an alert worrying about their children would be fewer.

Parents are ultimately responsible for their children. Therefore, it is the parent who should be responsible for ensuring an accurate Dependent Care Plan is a matter of record.

Services necessary in devising the plan are available at the Legal Assistance Office of the Staff Judge Advocate. They provide powers of attorney on a walk-in basis.

According to Capt. Michael V. Totin, it is recommended that soldiers obtain specific powers of attorney for medical purposes to include in the Dependent Care

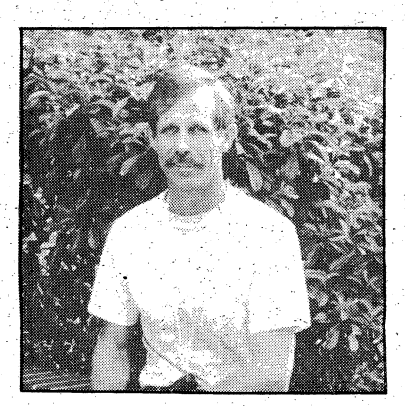
Do you think that sole parents or service members married to other service members, adversely affect the Army mission?

Pvt. 2 Kimberly L. Shields, 598th Maintenance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group"If the service members work in the same unit, it may affect their work. There may be family problems brought to the job. But it has it advantages, in that, both realize the importance of their military career and both are familiar with the requirements."



Pvt. 1 Michael C. Stribling, Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment"The sole parents give more to the military because they realize that they must provide for their children. The married service members support each other and realize what a military career means to the other. This should not hinder the Army mission."

SP4 Harold R. Copp, 988th Military Police Company, Military Police Activity"No, They don't affect the Army mission. There are a lot of problems, but they do not affect the mission. There seems to be a lot of domestic problems in this area."

Sgt. Inez E. Bowen, 215th Area Finance Support Center, 36th Engineer Group"The Army mission is not affected. I am a sole parent and have been for several years while in the military. It has never interfered with my job."

GS7 Roy Newman, Training and Audio Service Center"There are many ways to measure performance but to measure morale and love of fellow Americans is unmeasureable. If there should be a weak link, there are fellow servicemen to help the weakest link. This is called team-work. That is why sole parents or service members can not pose an adverse effect to our military."

Op-Ed

Soldiers deserve courtesy, prompt service from civilians

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

As long as our country has an Army it is going to have civilians working for it.

As a result of the strength ceiling imposed upon the Army concerning numbers of soldiers it can maintain in the force, it seems an increasing number of military jobs are being civilianized, allowing the Army to put more people in the foxhole.

In plain language, the Army wants more of its more than 780,000 troops to be fighters. Why should a trained soldier be in a gym checking out basketballs? A civilian can do the same job and put the soldier in a line company.

As a result of this type of thinking, more and more civilians will be taking over "non-military" jobs.

Regardless of what the powers that be may say, it seems to be an underlying fact that soldiers don't like civilians and civilians don't like soldiers.

After having served in the Army for a few years myself and now working as a Department of the Army civilian, I've experienced both sides of the coin. I went from being a soldier to a "slimey civilian" or from a "low-life line doggie" to a "regular working person," depending upon your point of view.

As a young buck sergeant in Germany, I had to face a DA civilian who wouldn't let me turn in my field gear when I was processing out of the unit. I had been standing in line for more than an hour with two duffel bags full of field equipment.

When I finally got to the first station to begin turn-in, I was informed by the civilian that my forms had not been "filled out in triplicate. I'm just following regulations, please come back when your paperwork is in order, next."

It didn't matter that blank forms were available, as was carbon paper, and I could have stepped to one side and fixed my paperwork. I could have turned in my gear and the civilian would have been satisfied. I know, not according to regulation, but it would have worked.

There I was, a soldier, honorably serving, working in a line unit, practically living in the field. It seems we were always cold, hungry and underpaid. Meanwhile, here's this overweight, chubby-cheeked, 8 to 5-with-two-coffee-breaks-and-lunch-hour civilian telling me that I couldn't do something.

Now, I'm an overweight, chubby-cheeked, "eight to fiver" telling soldiers that I can't accept their article for publication in the post newspaper because "it's-not-typed-double-spaced-in journalistic-style-next please."

Who's right? Let's examine a few facts.

If it wasn't for the thousands of young men and women coming into the Army every day...if it wasn't for Pvt. 1 Joe Brown from Holyoke, N. J. sweating it out in a training battalion for months at a time...if it wasn't for those soldiers training endlessly in the woods, deserts and swamps around the world, I wouldn't be paid to inflict my opinions upon this community in a weekly newspaper and John Doe Civilian wouldn't be checking in soldiers' field gear.

I know, civilians don't hassle soldiers (just ask one of us), we,

Conservation key to energy program

by Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

Last year Fort Benning implemented its new energy program. Before instituting the program, we had never met Training and Doctrine Command's energy consumption target.

The energy program is based on trying to get people to use energy more efficiently, thus enabling Fort Benning to meet the TRADOC targets.

We can be successful in reaching our energy goals. In order to do this, we must continue to practice resource conservation.

The final determination will be made by you, the consumers. Fort Benning depends on people to keep building temperatures set at 78 degrees Farenheit, turn off unnecessary lights and conserve water.

The Energy Office can only do so much, but if every consumer contributes just a little to the energy conservation effort, we can succeed.

"Black Hats" mold airborne troopers'

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"We turn regular soldiers into the world's premier paratroopers," says SSgt. Janett Gustafson.

Gustafson and SSgt. Frank Huber are instructors with the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry.

Five days a week, 12 hours a day, these two "Black Hats" put new airborne-troops-to-be through the one week Ground Training Branch portion of the three-week Airborne School.

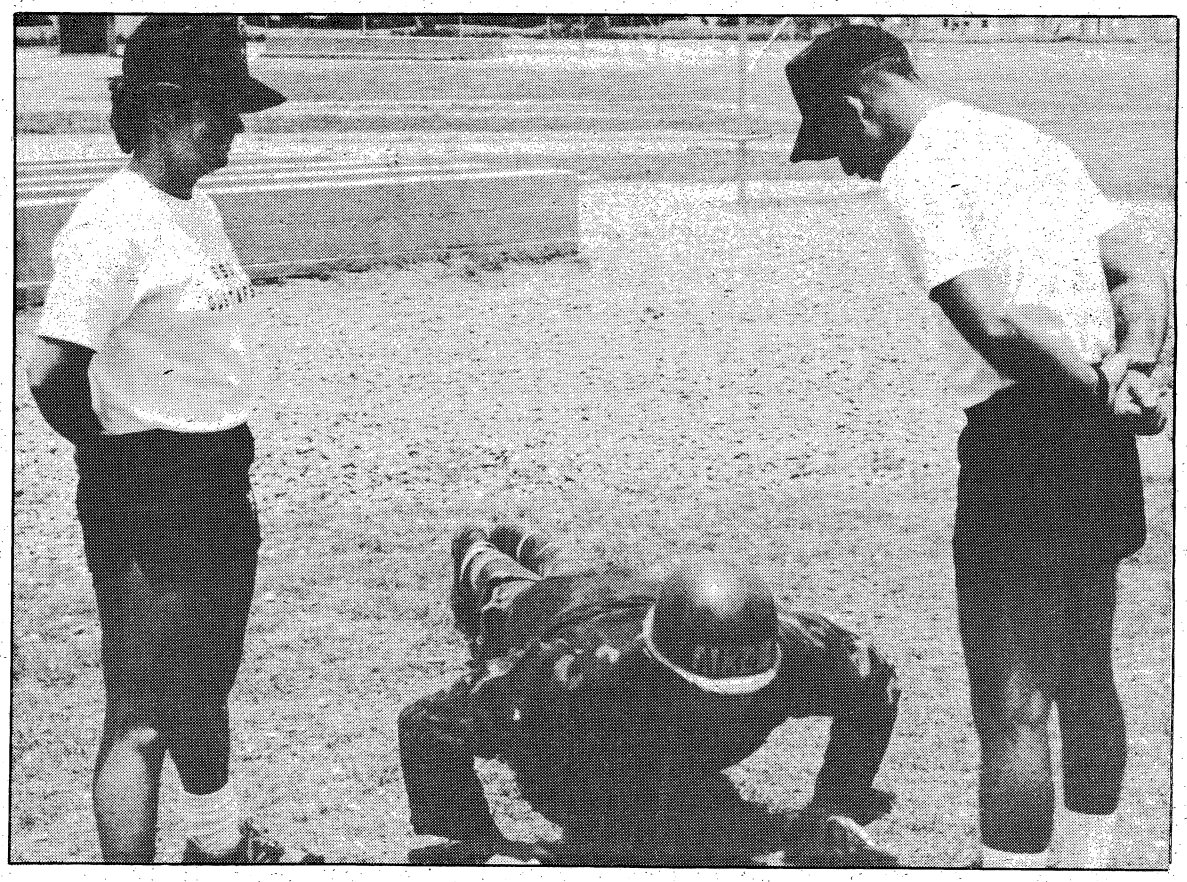
To qualify as Airborne School instructors, Gustafson and Huber had to be airborne and jumpmaster qualified, have a senior parachutist rating with at least 65 jumps and be non-commissioned officers.

"This is probable.

"Our 'Black Hat' instructors were so sharp and set the example to such a high degree that I knew I wanted to be one someday," Gustafson said.

The two instructors, and the other cadre at Ground Training Branch, teach potential paratroopers how to do parachute landing falls and how to correctly exit the 34-foot tower.

"Besides teaching the student how to exit and how to land, we have an equally important job. That job is to get the student's undivided attention," said Huber.



"I agree anything can happen. A student has to be able to react automatically to any situation," Huber said.

"We cover all potential problems in Airborne School. If a student pays attention and stays mentally alert then he or she shouldn't have any problems."

Any Airborne student or former student can point out the way a "Black Hat" gets one's attention: lots of push-ups, sit-ups and "beating your boots."

"A lot of students think we do this for harassment. But every-

Classes help riggers score high on SQT

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Airborne troopers at Fort Benning can jump with the peace of mind that their parachutes are packed and ready to open, courtesy of Company A, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, Parachute Packing Branch.

The riggers recently proved their worth by scoring an average of 93 percent on their Skill Qualification Test.

"Out of our 61 soldiers who took the test, 33 scored 95 points or higher out of a possible 100. The rest of the unit scored in the high 80s and above to achieve the excellent 93 average," said SSgt. Joseph Sanders, assistant noncommissioned officer in charge.

The soldiers in the unit must be airborne qualified and must have successfully completed the 13-week Parachute Rigger's School at Fort Lee, Va.

"The key to our success centers around weekly classes," Sanders said.

"Our soldiers get classes on parachute packing, cleaning and drying air items, repairing air items, things like that, " he explained.

SP4 Melinda Brown, who packs and inspects parachutes, has been a rigger at Fort Benning for a year. She attributes the unit's success on the SQT, as well as her own, having scored a 93, to study among unit soldiers.

"The SQT was pretty technical. Some of the things we were tested for were things we do everyday. Other questions dealt with sling loading, repairing parachutes, rigging loads on modular platforms for air drops and low altitude parachute extraction operations. Other riggers who had these skills helped us out and we helped them out with our knowledge," Brown said.

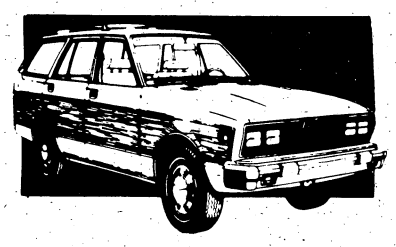
The Parachute Packing Branch packs 600 parachutes each day and all of the unit's soldiers must jump at least once a month to maintain their parachuting proficiency and to use the products they pack.

598th repairmen's work ensures equipment sends right message

by Vincent P. Haugeto
598th Maintenance Company

Communications is one of the keys to success on the modern battlefield. All communications must work in order to support a combat force that must repeatedly move to survive and fight the enemy.

At the communications and electronic maintenance facility, 598th Mainteance Company, nothing is more important than providing the best possible communications repair to 35 servicing customer units. In order to do this, soldiers are provided with up-to-date modern test equipment and vehicle and maintenance repair vans.



New equipment is being provided to the unit on a continuous basis. Soldiers have also received additional equipment training within the past year in many courses.

The courses were conducted on post by various training schools, with more training planned in the future. This training enhanced the units' capabilities to properly repair communication equipment in a timely and efficient manner.

The 598th Maintenance Company communications and electronic maintenance facility gives communications in an effort to improve the ability to shoot, move and communicate.

197th soldiers tackle leader's reaction course

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Last week, sandwiched between never-ending Brigade support missions, more than 50 197th Support Battalion soldiers tested their leadership abilities at Fort Benning's Leadership Reaction Course.

The course challenges teams of soldiers in a series of tasks that demand physical stamina and problem solving abilities.

"This course puts you in situations where you don't know all the details before you begin," said 1st Lt. Cedric Brown from the Battalion's Company B. "Then we can see how our soldiers react to the situations."

The soldiers scaled walls, swung over mock quick sand on ropes and carried ammunition boxes across water obstacles.

They all learned a lot about themselves.

43rd Engineers practice bridging skills

A soldier from the 43rd Engineer Battalion puts the finishing touches on the new bridge on Midwest Road.

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Last week was a busy one for the soldiers of the 43rd Engineer Battalion and the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge).

Under the careful scrutiny of a Department of Defense film crew and scorching 100 degree temperatures, the engineers had an opportunity to perform a series of unique missions.

The film, which will eventually be aired on the Armed Forces Television Network as 60-second "commercials," took six days to complete.

"This was a real good training opportunity," said 1st Lt. Lance Jackson, operations officer for the 43rd.

"It forced us to do these things correctly. And it was as intense as an Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program because we were being evaluated by the camera crew," Jackson said.

The soldiers performed a different mission each day, offering up a variety of unique "engineer" tasks.

Monday, Company D, 43rd Eng. Bn. was on Midwest Road building a road bridge to replace a smaller one there. The requirements called for the soldiers to construct the bridge as it would be in a wartime situation.

Tuesday the engineers from Company C built a forward landing strip at McKenna Airstrip. The soldiers tore up the small strip that previously handled only small Army airplanes and rebuilt it to handle larger airplanes, such as the Air Force's C-131, transport aircraft.

Wednesday found the 586th linking a ribbon bridge across the Chattahoochee River. They arrived on the site around 6 a.m. and began the project under the cover of smoke and the early morning light. After the bridge was in place, tanks trundled over it to test its capabilities.

"The rafting operation went really well. We had three tanks from the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry and we rafted through the smoke," said Capt. Don C. Young, 586th commander.

Thursday Young and his troops were tasked to demolish the old bridge on Midwest Road that had been replaced Monday.

"The substructure blew great and the debris fell text-book perfect," Young said

The week started to wind down Friday when Company B, 43rd Enginners, assisted by the 1-58th, blew up a concertina wire fence with a Bengalore torpedo at the explosive ordnance disposal range on post.

The last task Saturday found soldiers from Company A, 43rd changing a tire on a scraper, land mover at McKenna Airstrip.

Jackson said of the overall project, "I think it went really well. It was a real good opportunity for us to get out and do what engineers don't normally do."

Course provides challenges, opportunities for adventure

HHC, 36th Engineers said experience is beneficial to training

by Kevin O. Davis
HHC, 36th Engineer Group

Challenging, confusing and exhausting were some of the adjectives used to describe the recent training venture the soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group's tackled.

Forty adventure-seeking soldiers attempted to negotiate 10 different obstacles on the U.S. Army Infantry School's Leadership Reaction Course.

The course is a beneficial tool in developing leadership skills and testing soldiers'.

Each soldier was given the opportunity to serve as a leader for an obstacle. With time constraints and agitating hecklers, the complexity of each obstacle was intensified.

The soldiers were not evaluated on whether they accomplished the task, but on prior planning, guidance provided to team members and ability to maintain control.

To reach the objective in each obstacle, a body of water had to be crossed.

It takes a strong National Guard and Reserve to help defend our country. Keeping that strength at its peak takes training—one weekend a month and at least two weeks a year. Fully trained and ready, the Guard and Reserve make up one-third of our nation's defense.

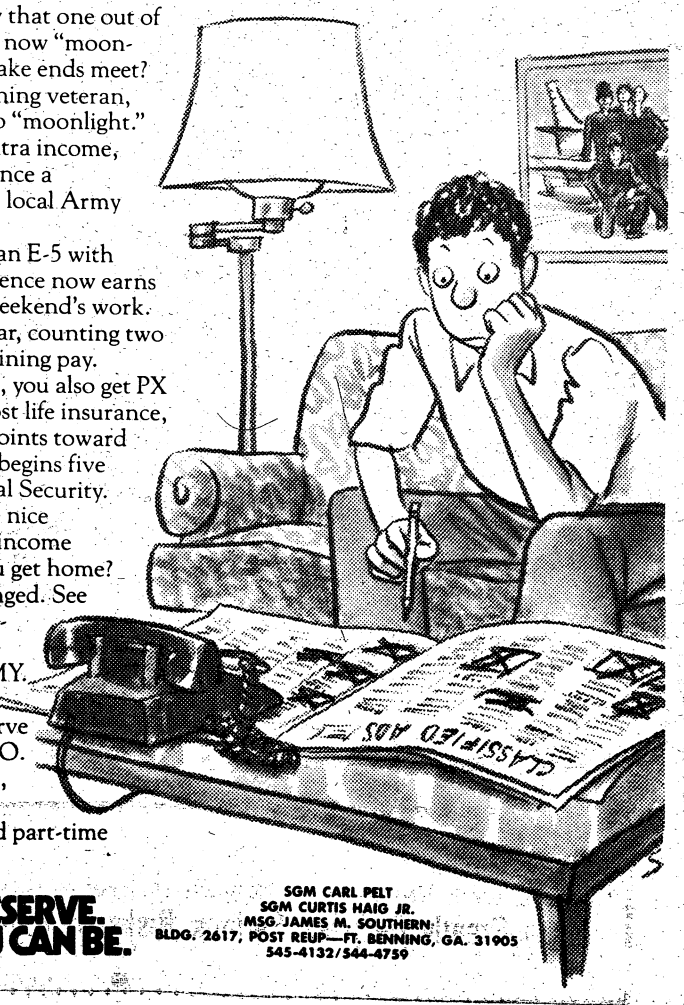
A GOOD PART-TIME JOB IS HARD TO FIND.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Did you know that one out of three Americans now "moonlights" to help make ends meet?

But as a returning veteran, you don't have to "moonlight." If you want an extra income, just "weekend" once a month with your local Army Reserve unit.



For instance, an E-5 with four years' experience now earns over $130 for a weekend's work. Over $2,000 a year, counting two weeks annual training pay.

As a Reservist, you also get PX privileges, low-cost life insurance, and retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have an extra income waiting when you get home?

It can be arranged. See your in-service recruiter. Or call 1-800-USA-ARMY. Overseas, write Army Reserve Opportunities, P.O. Box 7717, Clifton, NJ 07015.

Act fast. Good part-time jobs are scarce.

ARMY RESERVE. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Museum acquires WWII craft

The National Infantry Museum has added a "duck" to its flock of vehicles and weapons displayed on the museum grounds.

Through a $600 donation from the Officers' Wives' Club and restoration work by Fort Benning's Shop 2, the "DUKW" now dominates the center of the front grounds of the museum.

The vehicle was a specially developed amphibious craft used in beach invasions during World War II.

"We found the DUKW at a junk yard and the $600 paid for it included transportation to Fort Benning. It was really a bargain and the people at Shop 2 did an outstanding job of restoration," said the museum's Frank Hanner.

Shop 2's Thomas Boutwell said his crew put in 150 man-hours restoring the vehicle.

Developed and standardized by 1942, the 2 1/2 ton, 6 by 6, vehicle was the amphibious counterpart to the Army's 2 1/2 ton truck.

"DUKW" is a combination of letters indicating amphibian, cargo, 6 by 6 wheel arrangements and a 2 1/2 ton payload.

The DUKW, which could travel on land or in the water, was used extensively in the Normandy landings during World War II in moving much needed supplies and ammunition up to the soldiers on the beaches and further inland.

The Museum's DUKW has landing markings for the World War II Sicily invasion painted on its sides.

Tactics training adds edge to soldiers' battlefield skills

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If battles are won at the fire team and squad level, then infantry soldiers attending the 2nd Training Battalion's Tactical Leadership Course should be ready to win.

According to the TLC manual, the main goal of the week-long course is to "provide the infantry units in the field with a better trained, tougher soldier," focusing on squad level drill based training.

TLC is centered around 20 different "drills." These drills are critical skill areas such as breaking contact, reacting to a chemical attack, breaching a minefield, conducting an anti-armor ambush, clearing a trench line or knocking out bunkers.

The first day of the course is a "train-up" day where the battle drill instructors, each assigned to a specific drill, teach the designated squad leader how to instruct and lead his squad in that specific drill. Each soldier acts as squad leader for two drills and as a squad member for the remaining 18 drills.

After train-up, the execution of TLC begins on the second day.

There are four lanes with five drill stations each. The class or unit in training is broken down into 20 10-man squads and they go through one lane each day. The squad leader must teach his squad how to execute the drill, rehearse the squad in a walk through and then actually lead the squad in the execution of the drill.

Following the execution, an after action review is conducted by the student leader, he is evaluated by the battle drill instructor.

"We put the students in the Infantry Officer Basic and the Advanced Non-Commissioned Officer Courses, reserve and national guard soldiers and the cadre from infantry battalions through TLC. For the new second lieutenant, TLC is a way of showing him what squad leaders should be doing as well as improving on the lieutenant's infantry skills. For the experienced NCO, TLC is refresher training to keep him up to speed," said SFC Edward Patchitt, the non-commissioned officer in charge of one TLC lane.

TLC, restricted to sergeants (E-5)and above for attendance, is now a Department of the Army accepted branch.

Mortar training tough for new soldier

Editor's note: This is the seventh article in a series of 13 that will allow the readers to follow one soldier through his entire One Station Unit Training at the 1st Infantry Brigade on Sand Hill.

by Michael Ricca
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Advanced individual training has finally begun. Last week we were training on the Mortar Square.

At first the 81mm mortar was unbearable; we had to learn many tasks in a very short time. We learned everything from mounting the mortar to traverse firing techniques, which enable mortar crews to take out entire enemy lines.

The bivouac site at the Mortar Training Area this week is far better than those we've already encountered. At night, our platoon would assemble and discuss the day's training. This was to our advantage, being the only platoon at the bivouac site.

With a total of about one and a half hours to practice drill and ceremonies, the competition started the long-awaited family day weekend. Although out platoon didn't take top honors, we enjoyed the competition and being able to watch the other platoons march. We did come in second place and were pleased with our performance, having done it "by the book."

ANCOC needed for master sergeant promotion

Army News Service

Graduation from the Army's Advanced Noncommissioned Officers Course becomes a prerequisite for promotion to the rank of master sergeant beginning in 1988.

Effective with the calendar year 1987 master sergeant selection board scheduled to convene next summer, sergeants first class with a date of rank of April 1, 1981, or later must have graduated from the ANCOC to be considered for promotion, said SGM Dennis Smith from the Enlisted Sustainment and Distribution Division at the Pentagon. He explained that soldiers selected from this board would not actually be promoted until sometime in 1988.

Soldiers who complete that course through the Army Correspondence Course program before Oct. 1, 1986 can be awarded non-resident credit; after that, however, credit will be given only for completion of the resident course. Sergeants first class with a date of rank of March 31, 1981, or earlier won't have to meet this requirement because, at that time, constructive credit sometimes was awarded for the Advanced Course, he said.

"We are notifying soldiers of this change now to ensure they have sufficient time to complete the Advanced Course before the '87 selection board meets," Smith said. "Soldiers won't be able to contest their non-selection on the grounds that they didn't know about the requirement."

This change to the active Army promotion system originated from the noncommissioned officer professional development study directed by the Army Chief of Staff in 1985.

The study revealed that NCO education system courses are neither progressive nor sequential, that most of the courses are developed independently of the others and that Army Correspondence Course program versions of the NCOES courses are unreliable, Smith said. On the basis of these findings, the study group recommended establishing a clear philosophy of "train, promote and utilize;" and a long-range goal of an NCO education system that would be mandatory, sequential, progressive and linked to promotion, he explained.

As a further change, all Army Correspondence Course Program NCOES courses soon will be renamed. Although credit no longer will be given for these courses after Oct. 1, soldiers completing the correspondence course after this date will receive certificates reflecting the new title. The new name has yet to be selected, Smith said.

To ensure that soldiers aren't penalized under the policy change, the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va., will identify all sergeants first class with a date of rank later than March 31, 1981, who have not attended the Advanced Course and schedule them for attendance on a priority basis. Soldiers in this category who do not have a class date by Sept. 1, 1986, should contact their local Military Personnel Office, who, in turn, will arrange a class date through the MILPERCEN career branch.

Soldiers who have previously been "eliminated" from the Advanced Course may request reentry into the course under the policy change provided their dismissal occurred at least one year before submission of the request, Smith said.

Requests should be made through command channels to: Commander, MILPERCEN, Attn: DAPC-EPT-FN, 2461 Eisenhower Avenue, Alexandria, Va. 22331. Immediate commanders will recommend approval or disapproval and must specify their reasons for the recommendation.

"OUR NEW ARMY HOUSING IS NICE TO COME HOME TO. IT WAS WORTH THE WAIT."

SFC Ron Rhodes and his wife Connie.

"It sure didn't take us long to get comfortable in our new house here at Fort Polk. Connie loves the size and lay-out. Ronnie-Lee loves the playground. And there's even room to store my boat.

"We love our quarters. This house has been very important for us in making a good home.

"Because we're in the Army, people may not expect us to live this well. But the Army has changed a lot in the past five years. It's a good place to live, to be.

"Connie and I feel that the Army's really come a long way in housing and, you know, in taking care of its people."

The overall quality of quarters on posts throughout the Army continues to improve. And housing starts and renovations are at an all-time high. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

Obstacle course provides challenges new infantry soldiers are looking for

Story and photos
by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

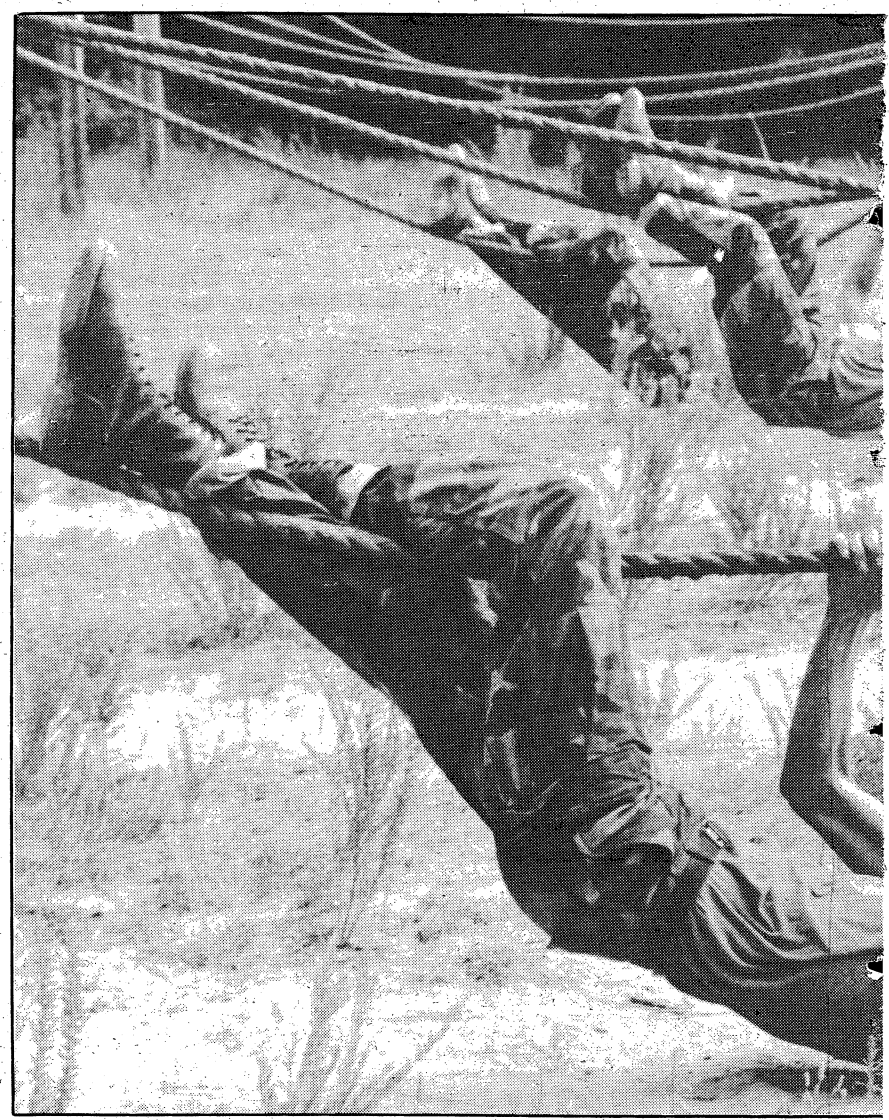
July 16 saw Company E, 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade hitting the Obstacle Course.

Company E is at the midpoint of their training cycle and, after taking their midcycle tests and getting 100 percent gos, their commander, Capt. Russ Medina, decided a run at the Obstacle Course would be a good break for them.

"Things like the Obstacle Course are what these guys came into the Army infantry for. They want a lot of physical 'hoo-rah' and it's great for them and great for the Army," Medina said.

Company E is 214-men strong and a reflection of the "One Army" concept.

"This cycle we've got National Guard, Reserves and Regular Army. We've also got a lot of prior service and a Vietnam veteran.

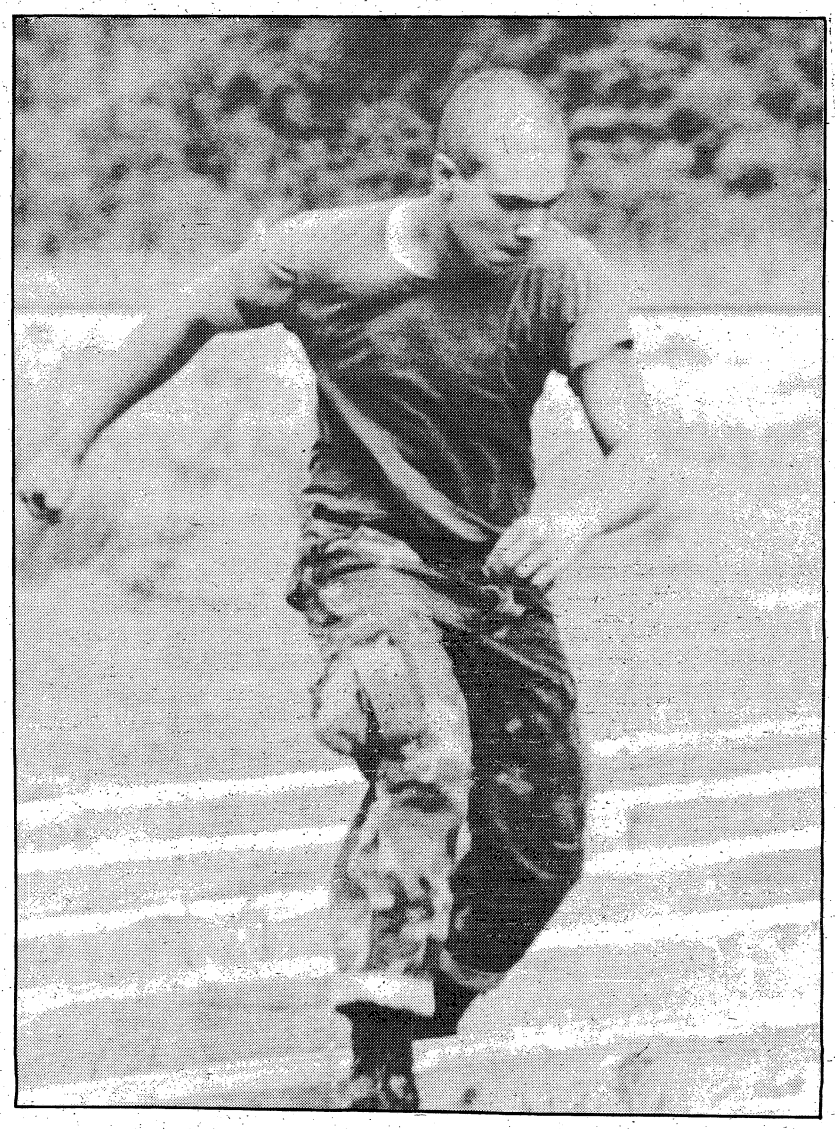


"Ages in this company for the soldiers run from 16 to 34 years old. We've got college grads and one Samoan soldier with a master's degree in criminology," he said.

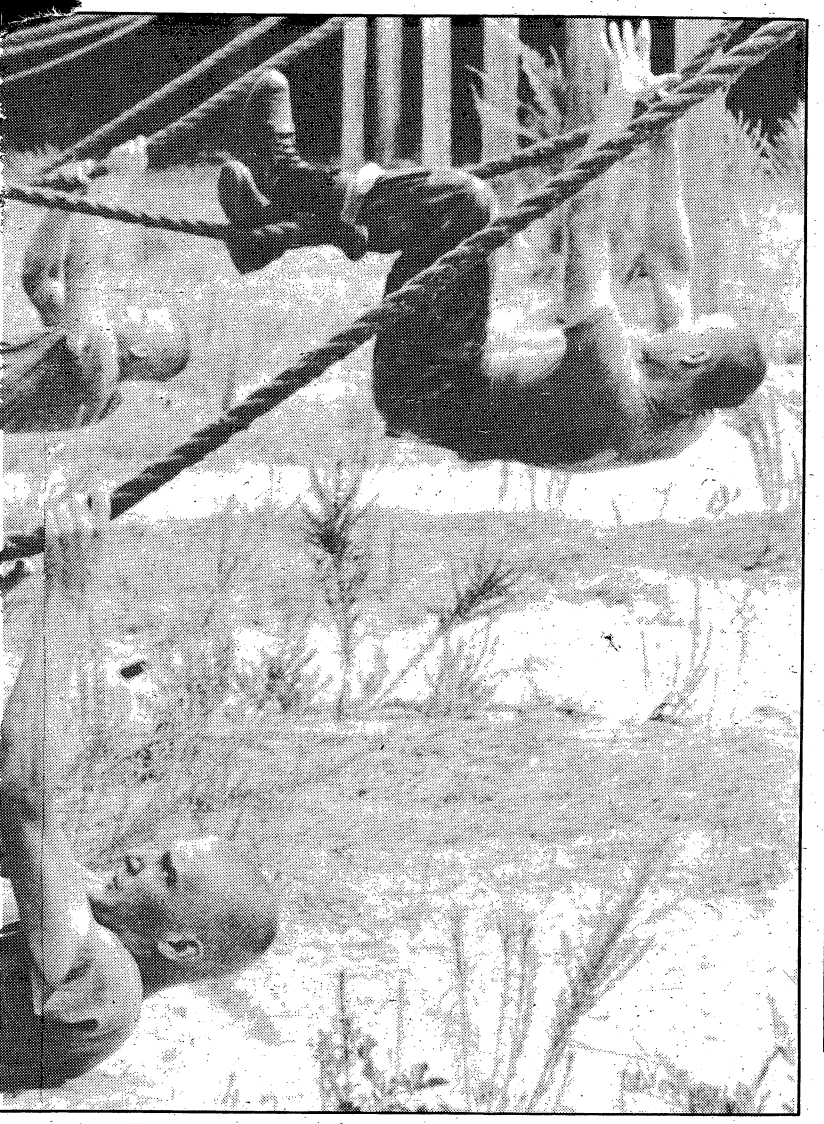
During the running of the Obstacle Course, which each man ran twice, age or component did not seem to play a part. Energy and espirit were what got the Company E soldiers up, down, through, over and around the obstacles.

"I'm an Air Force veteran. I came into the infantry for training like this. The course was a challenge but nothing that I couldn't handle," Pvt. 2 Vern Wosnak said.

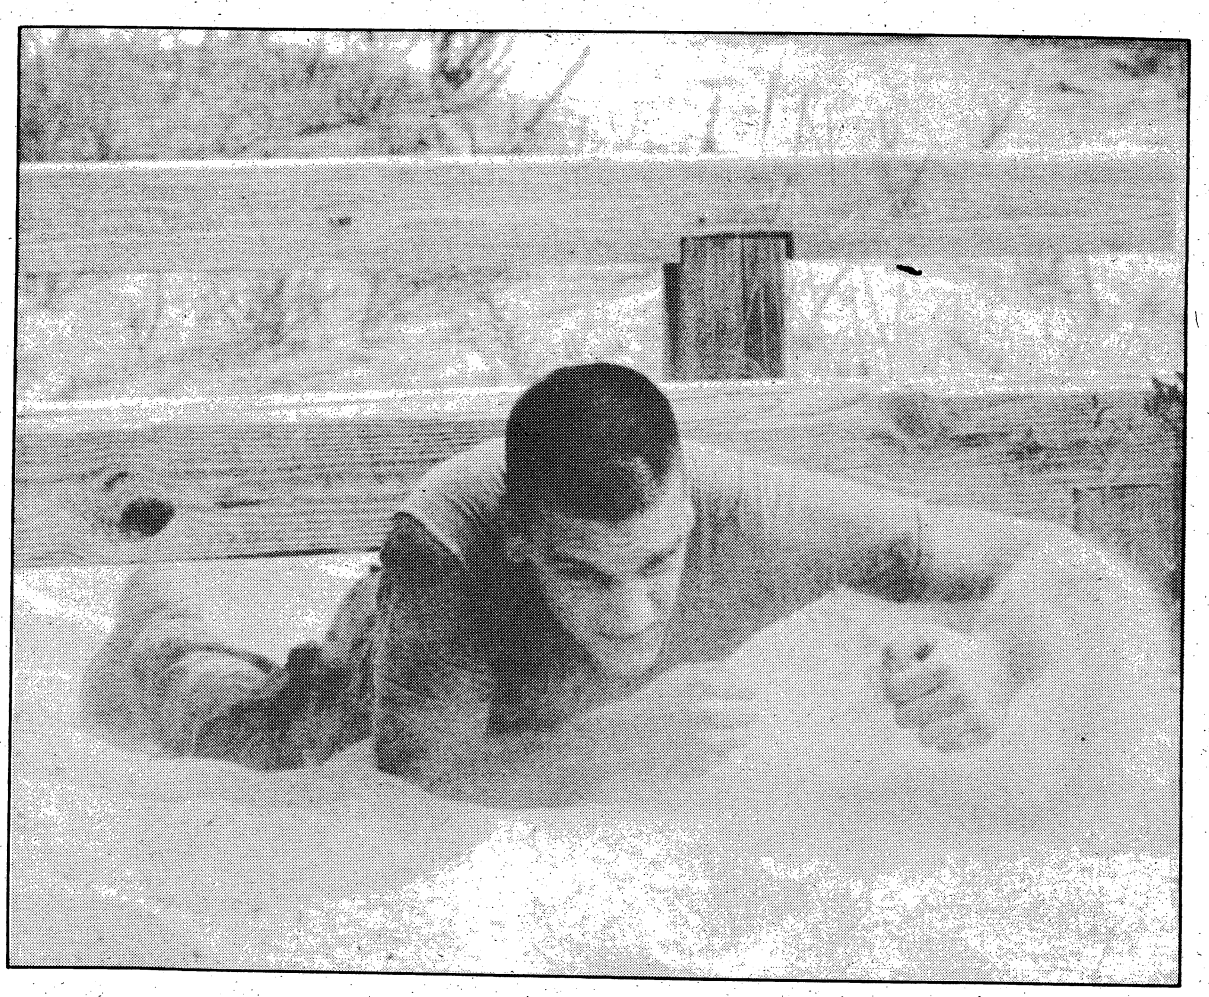
Many of the other "Evil Echo" troops expressed the desire for a third run at the course.



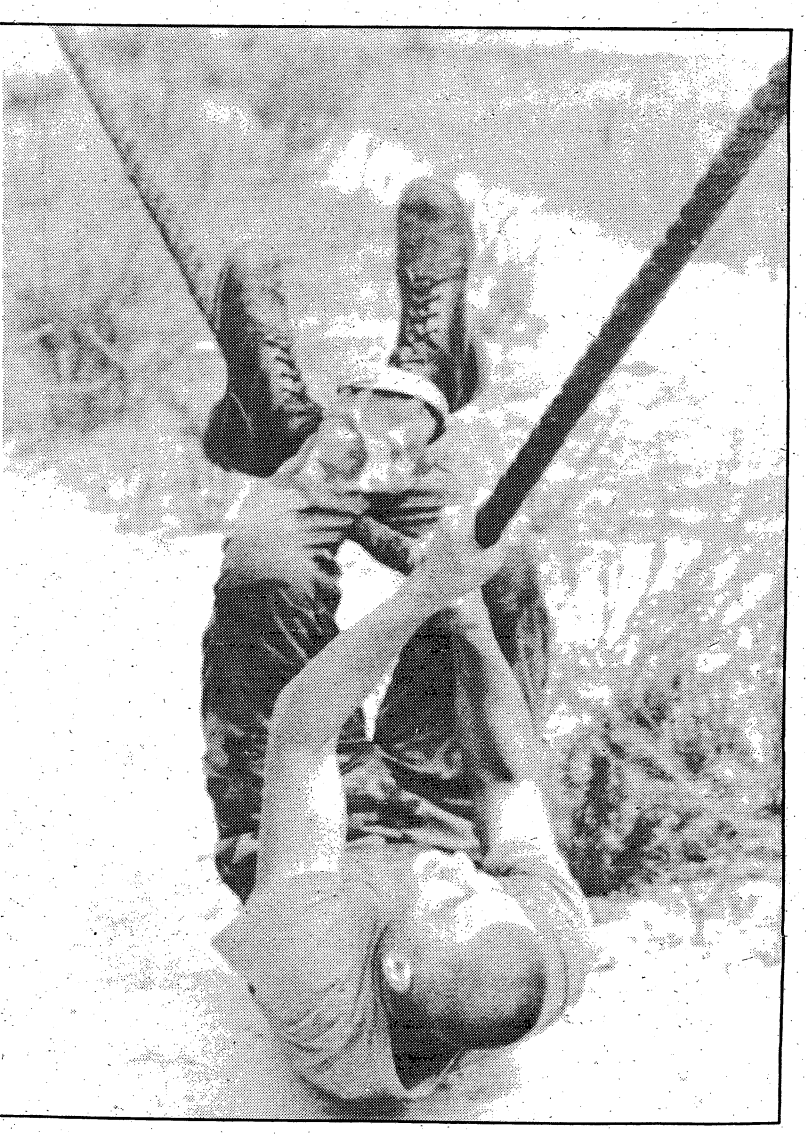
"These guys want to be infantry soldiers. Training like this is what it's all about," Medina said.



"Evil Echo " troops go hand-over-hand on the rope obstacle.



Keeping his balance, an E-6-1 infantryman runs over a wooden barrier designed to trip him up.



A one station unit training trooper high steps it over "wooden tangle-foot."

Belly down, it's under the obstacle and a low crawl in the sand.

Seminar focuses on ways to improve quality of life

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will conduct its first ever Army Family Seminar Thursday at the Officer's Club.

Linda McGee, coordinator of Fort Benning's family development program, said the purpose of the seminar is to discover areas that need improvement.

"This is the beginning for individuals to raise issues about the quality of their lives and make suggestions on how it can be solved," she said. "Some of the issues raised can be solved locally, and others have to be referred on to Training and Doctrine Command and Department of the Army."

The goal of the Army Family Program is to improve the quality of life for soldiers and their families, as well as other members of the Army "family," such as reservists, retirees and civilian employees.

While each unit on post has been tasked to send representatives to the seminar, McGee stressed that the seminar is open to anyone. "We want to hear from anyone who has suggestions to improve the quality of life at Fort Benning," she said.

The seminar begins at 9:30 a.m., includes a free lunch for participants from 12 to 1 p.m., and ends at 2:30 p.m. It will be held in the Flicks Room at the Officers Club.

Reservations must be in by close of business Monday. Call Pat Sneed at 545-5602.

Values help people make right choices in life

by James Bixler
2nd Infantry Training Brigade

Everyone has values. Values are the principles, standards or qualities that we consider worthwhile. Values are the rules or measures on which we base our judgments and decisions.

We make value choices everyday. Some are so routine that we are not even aware that we are making choices. What will I eat for lunch? What time am I going to bed? Some value choices that I make demand more thought. How am I going to spend my income?

Not only do we make value choices everyday, we experience conflict of values on a daily basis. We experience that conflict in a variety of settings: at work, in our families, with people we know well and with people we don't know at all.

Values are some of our most important tools. Unfortunately, we don't spend much time choosing or learning to use those tools. It is rare for us to sit down and ask ourselves what merits our commitment in life. So it is unusual to find people who really know what they want in their circumstances, work and relationships.

Values need to be well thought through. When I clearly understand my values I have an agenda for living. My values define the goals of my life and the standards by which I measure how I am doing in my situation and relationships.

When I know what matters to me it is easier for me to make choices. "Will this decision help or hinder me in the things that really matter to me?" When I neglect to define my values or fail to use them I will feel a lack of achievement. When I fail to understand the values of others or fail to let them understand my values I will suffer avoidable conflict.

I want to work for a certain business. I fail to ask about the values of the company. The person who interviews me fails to ask about my work values. We both hope that our values will be shared but we don't know know if they are or not. We will probably have conflict with each other. The conflict could have been avoided. One or both of us might have decided we don't share enough values to make a good employee-employer relationship possible. If we talk about values we might work out potential conflicts through agreement about work rules and standards of behavior.

Values can give each of us direction. We need priorities to keep us from being pulled in a variety of directions. Values give us a way to steer our lives in the direction we want to go. If we don't define our values we will drift through life, pulled or pushed by whatever influence is presently sweeping through our lives. Often we fail to pursue what we have chosen as values and instead react to our circumstances and the people around us. It is easy to live in reaction to lie. I need to sit down and decide what is important.

The values I choose will govern my energies and resources and decide the attitudes that will characterize my life. Failure to define my values dulls my sense of responsibility for myself and my relations. I make excuses for my behavior. "If they would have done what they were supposed to do then I would have done what I was supposed to do."

It is easy to react to people and to the circumstances of life. It is easy to drift through life and hope that I will like the journey. It is, indeed, easy to live as a child and hope that other people will take care of me and overlook my childish behavior. It is hard work to become a free, responsible human being.

When I find that my life is marked by conflict with myself, people around me or with society I need to look at my values. In fact I may find that unless I change some of my values that I am going to be in trouble with people I work with, the people I live with, and perhaps even the people who enforce the laws of the community in which I live.

If I don't like getting tickets for driving 75 miles an hour in a 50 mile per hour zone I should examine my behavior and values. I could launch a national campaign to do away with traffic laws that limit how fast I may drive or I can alter my behavior. The latter will take care of the real problems.

I may decide that I can get what I want by taking it. I should not be surprised that other people get angry when I try to manipulate or bully them so I can get what I want. I should not be surprised to find myself in trouble when I beat up my spouse or some other individual because I am angry that things are not going the way I want.

The troubles that I am having are my responsibility. They are not the responsibility of my parents, spouse, friends, employer, or society. I don't always choose good values. I need to look at my values.

When I am unhappy I need to look at my values. I may have expectations of myself that are unreasonable. I may have wishes for my spouse and children that they know nothing about or that are unreasonable. I need to be willing to share my hopes and perhaps modify them.

There may be implications to my values that I have not yet learned. As I become more aware of my values and use them my life become more consistent and more characterized by the values I believe are important.

People who clearly understand and pursue what is valuable in life will have lives that are characterized by discipline, integrity and good relationships.

New commissary policy makes collecting on bad checks easier

Army News Service

The Army is revising its method of collecting for bad checks written in commissaries by persons who are serving or have retired from the military.

An agreement, made between the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency and the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., went into effect July 1.

All armed forces active-duty and Reserve component servicemembers and retirees must now stamp and sign their checks with the following statement:

"If this check is returned as dishonored, I consent to immediate collection from my pay for the amount of the dishonored check plus any related service or administrative charges."

Bad checks written by those in other branches of the military and its retirees are sent to either the central finance and accounting office at Denver for Air Force personnel or to Cleveland for those in the Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard.

According to Ann Andrews, chief or TSA's Accounting and Finance division, Directorate of Resource Management, nearly 12.5 million checks were accepted by commissaries in fiscal 1985. Of that figure, 41,388 bad checks totaling $3 million were turned in by military finance offices serving TSA for collection.

For years, recouping this money was a time-consuming administrative burden often taking months to complete, said Gray Olson, public affiars officer for USAFAC.

The change in policy streamlines the effort because check writers, by signing the statement, agree to have their wages garnished to ensure they pay for their financial mistakes. In addition, offenders will also be slapped with a $15 service charge for redeeming the bogus paper.

Commissaries in the U.S., the Caribbean and the Far East will notify persons, in writing, that they have seven days from the time the letter was sent, to honor the bad checks. Andrews said bad checks and the $15 service charge can be paid directly to the commissary check control representative normally located in the control section of the facility.

If, after seven days, a person doesn't pay the amount of the check plus the service charge, a request to take the total from the individual's pay — a DD Form 139 — will automatically be sent to the installation finance and accounting office.

Collection procedures for commissaries in Europe are handled differently. Checks are sent directly to the Finance and Accounting Facility (200th Theater Army Material Management Center) in Zweibruecken, Germany, said Andrews.

A policy concerning Department of Defense civilian employees authorized to shop in commissaries overseas is being finalized.

There are two ways to correct a bad check written by a soldier's spouse, Olson said. The soldier can pay the money owed plus the $15 service fee within 15 days of notification, or the soldier may elect to have the case taken over by the local Judge Advocate General's office for collection.

VA Q&A

Editor's Note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I understand that a recently passed law will subject veterans seeking care in VA facilities to new eligibility assessment procedures. Does this income-based assessment apply to VA programs such as the Vietnam Veterans Outreach Centers (Vet Centers), halfway houses and hospital-based home care?

A — Veterans receiving care in halfway houses and in the hospital-based home care program are subject to the eligibility assessment procedures. Veterans receiving counseling at Vietnam Veteran Outreach Centers (Vet Centers) are not.

Q — If a veteran is denied care under the new eligibility assessment procedures can he or she file an appeal with the Board of Veterans Appeals?

A — Yes. The matter first should be referred to the nearest VA regional office for adjudication, further denial can be appealed with the Board of Veterans Appeals.

Airborne!

A member of Benning's Silver Wings parachute team prepares to land on York Field July 16 during the change of command ceremony for the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry.

Lt. Col. Leonard B. Scott passed the reins of command over to Lt. Col. Jimmie F. Holt, an 82nd Airborne Division veteran and combat infantryman.

Program puts medics in hospitals

Health Services Command

In an effort to ensure the availability of quality medical care to soldiers in both peacetime and war, two Army medical facilities began testing a concept this month that mayresult in a consolidation of most Army health providers into a unified team.

Medics assigned to Army field hospitals in the U.S. rarely have peacetime patient care duties where they could work directly with doctors, nurses and health care specialists who staff hospitals operated by the Army's Health Services Command.

The test places medics in active Army medical facilities where they will team with experienced hospital personnel engaged in patient care using state-of-the-art equipment. They and their hospital counterparts will also continue to train for combat-support missions.

A successful test would result in an infusion of medical specialists assigned to the U.S. Army Forces Command to understaffed medical centers and hospitals in peacetime, thus enhancing the quality of medical care given to active duty soldiers and their families.

Every aspect of the test will be closely monitored by an assessment team before any decision to integrate medical units Army-wide.

Apply early for VA loans

Veterans Administration

The Veterans Administration's home loan program — spurred by favorable market conditions and low interest rates — is poised for a record-setting year.

VA administrator, Thomas K. Turnage said the popular mortgage guaranty program is running at a pace that will probably exceed $35 billion in loan commitments by the end of fiscal 1986, three months from now.

That level, Turnage said, would be the largest dollar volume of loans guaranteed in the program's 42-year history.

With VA-guaranteed fixed rate mortgages now at 9 ½ percent — the lowest in seven years — the agency has experienced extraordinary demand for both new and refinanced loans.

Qualified veterans can use their entitlement to purchase, construct, alter, improve, repair or refinance conventional homes, condominiums and manufactured housing.

Loans are made by private leaders and VA-backing frequently allows veterans to obtain mortgages with little or no down payment.

VA loan guaranty officials said the current level of market activity is being felt throughout the mortgage and housing industry.

Turnage urged veterans to apply early and plan accordingly. "These favorable conditions have boosted home-buying and financing activity all across America," Turnage said. "The VA is a significant part of this truly positive economic news," he added.

197th Brigade liaison officers help families while soldiers are away

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

When the 197th Infantry Brigade deploys on a major training exercise, the preparation seems endless. Amid all the packing of equipment and moving of vehicles, the Brigade's units performed another important task.

As the deployment for Joint Readiness Exercise Gallant Eagle 1986 in Twenty-nine Palms, Calif. drew near, the deploying units held family member briefings to ensure that soldiers' families were also prepared for the deployment.

Each unit designated a family liaison officer as a point of contact for family members. If a problem arises, family members are encouraged to call the unit for assistance.

According to 1st Lt. Mark Cuttle, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry family liaison officer, "we give the family members a place to turn if such problems as pay or housing problems, or emergency leave situations should arise.

"It keeps the soldiers' morale up if they know that their family is being supported while they're gone," Cuttle said. "If they know that their family is taken care of, then they perform better in the field."

Teams battle it out insoftball championship

Vanessa Vanzandt, 197th Bullets, beats the throw by Jaguars' Eugenia Ulman to Beverly Smith in the softball championship's opening-night matchup.

Three teams kept championship hopes alive in the Fort Benning Women's Softball playoffs that started Monday at Gowdy Field.

The Intruders, Outlaws and Bandits went in the final phase of the playoffs, with the championship game being played on Wednesday.

The double-elimination tournament sent the Bullets, Jaguars and Kamikaze to the bleachers early to sit out the remainder of the tournament.

The Outlaws, the second place team in regular season play, and the Bandits, the playoff underdogs, took their only playoff defeats, at the hands of the undefeated and reigning champions, the Intruders.

All playoff teams have shown great prizewinning ability, yet only one team would claim the 1986 Championship title.

The Kamikaze suffered two losses to the Bandits, while the Bullets loss one to the Bandits and one to the Kamikaze. The Jaugars fell behind with losses to the Kamikaze and the Outlaws.

The Bandits shot hard at the undefeated team, but the Inturders were able to withstand the planned robbery.

The Intruders scored their only runs in the second inning of their matchup against the Bandits and attempted to hold them off for the final five innings.

With the score 5-0, the Bandits hitting game was on target in the last three innings, scoring two runs in the fifth and one run in the sixth inning. They were able to score early in the seventh inning.

The Bandits had runners on second and third bases. But the Intruders defensive efforts met both the tieing and winning runs at home plate, where catcher Cynthia McDowell tagged them for the game saving outs.

In the Outlaw's showdown with the Intruders, the final surge to invade the Intruders' winning streak came a little late.

The Intruders opened the game with three runs in the first inning and pulled out another three-run rally in the fifth to give them a 6-0 lead over the Outlaws. They went on to win the game 7-3.

The playoff and championship highlights will appear in the next issue of the Bayonet.

Super Kids Triathlon kicks off tomorrow

Attention all "Super Kids!" You are invited to participate in the 2nd Annual Super Kids Triathlon. If you aren't sure if you are a super kid, these are the requirements: 7 to 14 years old; able to swim, ride a bicycle and run. You can do all that? Then, you're a super kid.

The Super Kids Triathlon is set for 8:30 a.m. tomorrow at the Double Churches Recreation Area on Double Churches Road in Columbus.

Cost for pre-registration is $7. It is $9 the day of the event. All proceeds go to the St. Jude Children's Hospital in Memphis, Tenn. Participants must bring their own bicycles.

In the Super Kids Triathlon, everyone who competes is a winner. All kids receive a Super Kids winner's package and a T-shirt. Top finishers in each age group will receive trophies and other prizes.

The competition will be divided into two groups, 7 to 10 and 11 to 14 years old. But, the super kids only compete against others the same age.

The triathlon consists of three events with different requirements for the two age groups.

Super kids must swim 25 meters if they are 7 to 10 years old and 50 meters if they are 11 to 14. Then they dry off, dress quickly, still timed, and hop on their bicycles for a 2.6 or 4.6 mile race. Competiton ends with a one or two mile run to the finish line, where snacks and drinks will be provided for the kids and their families.

Parents, get your super kids registered soon because the number of participants is limited. For more information, call 563-1896.

Think safety when jogging

Safety Office

Walking and jogging are very good forms of exercise. However, when good safety practices are ignored they may prove to be very dangerous. Here are some tips to make walking and jogging during your off duty hours more safe and enjoyable.

- Choose a safe place. There are very good fields and tracks throughout Fort Benning on which to run and exercise.
- Select shoes which offer good support and fit comfortably. Shoes which do not fit properly may result in blisters.
- In hot weather be sure to wear a shirt. The shirt holds sweat against the body which aids in the cooling process.
- Wear clothing which increases your visibility. (International Orange is good). If dark, be sure to wear reflectorized items.
- If you must run or walk on a road, always travel facing the traffic.
- Run only on lightly travelled roads.
- Run on the road shoulder out of the way. Don't cause a vehicle to cross into oncoming traffic to avoid you.
- Yield the right-of-way to vehicles at intersections and when necessary.
- Run during daylight hours when visibility is greatest.

Regardless of how you choose to exercise, always be sure that you use good sense and good safety.

Following water safety rules can help prevent drownings

National Safety Council

CHICAGO — The summer months are peak months for drowning, accounting for about one-half of the total number of drowning fatalities each year, according to the National Safety Council.

Council statistics indicate that drowning is the third leading cause of accidental death in the United States, following only motor vehicle accidents and falls in fatality totals. Approximately 5,700 people drowned in the U.S. in 1984, the latest year for which statistics are available.

According to the Council, home and public swimming pools are associated with between 600 and 650 drownings each year. Many of these accidents can be avoided by following these safety guidelines:

• Never swim alone. Swim in areas supervised by a lifeguard whenever possible. Stay within your swimming limitations.

• Check water depth before diving. Do not dive into depths of less than four feet. Do not dive into any above-the-ground pool.

• Surround your pool with a fence to prevent unauthorized entry, if local ordinances permit.

• Make sure an adult supervises children in or near any swimming pool or body of water at all times. Empty plastic portable or wading pools after children have finished playing, and keeping them turned over until they are in use.

The Council urges swimmers to learn and practice "reaching assists" — helping a swimmer in difficulty by lying flat at the edge of a pool or dock and extending an arm, a pole, a paddle, a towel or clothing. Courses in swimming, lifesaving, first aid and CPR are also recommended.

Family

Plan. Such documents will allow the individuals named to have the children treated at military hospitals.

If a sole parent or a soldier married to a soldier is stationed overseas on an unaccompanied tour, the identification card facility here will issue the child, regardless of age, an ID card for the purpose of medical care.

Soldier/parents face some unique challenges. The feeling of being torn into two parts is a common one. On one hand, they want to serve the Army and give it their all.

On the other hand, they want to provide for and care for their children. Can they do both? Probably, but it won't be easy.

The best way, however, to minimize the worries is to make certain that your children will always be taken care of by competent people.

Take the time to fill out a Dependent Care Plan. Ask your commander for a copy of one if he hasn't already talked to you about it.

Do it today. Can you afford to let something so important go undone?

Service

just like Officer Joe Friday of "Dragnet" fame, deadpanning and asking for "just the facts, ma'am," tell them that "it has to be filled out in quadruplicate and I'm just following the regulations, next please," in our best Joe Friday monotone.

I think the real facts speak for themselves: without soldiers, Department of the Army civilians "ain't gotta job, Jack," no mission, no one to support.

All civilians working for the Army should keep in their minds first and foremost: those soldiers out there are the only reason, are the primary cause of the money we take home every two weeks; those soldiers are our sustenance.

So when a soldier needs your help, whether it's helping them to outprocess from the Central Issue Facility or trying to help them get a story in the newspaper, let's all of us "slimey civilians"give the soldiers the best support possible.

Because let's face it, if we don't, "we ain't gotta job, Jack."

Airborne

thing we do here has a purpose," Huber said.

Gustafson and Huber agree that the toughest part of their job is the pressure of presenting the image of an Airborne School instructor.

"We can't have a bad day, like in other jobs. Every time we stand in front of those students we have to present the image of a soldier to the extent that our students want to emulate us," Huber said.

"You have to be inspired to be an instructor here," Gustafson added.

"The students are very critical and pick up on things. If an instructor is not squared away and that instructor is trying to tell the student to be squared away, then that student is probably not going to listen. Then you've lost the student," Gustafson said.

Huber said the best thing about his job is the students.

"When our potential paratroopers finish ground week and go on it means they've met the standards of Ground Branch. They meet that standard because of us," Huber said.

"My proudest moments are when I see students I trained during ground week getting their airborne wings. That's real satisfaction and shows me that we at Ground Branch did something right," Gustafson said.

Construction starts on new Sand Hill starship

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Ground was broken Monday for Fort Benning's eighth starship barracks in Sand Hill.

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., post commander, said the new barracks will help the Army meet its future need for infantry soldiers.

"This groundbreaking is tremendously important, because it indicates the increased emphasis being put on soldier power," he said. "Technological skills will make the difference on the battlefields of the future and skilled soldiers will make the difference."

The new facility will contain 228,000 square feet and house 1,100 soldiers. It will also contain a dining facility, classroms and a battalion headquarters.

Conner Brothers, a contracting firm from Auburn, Ala., is general contractor of the project, which will be built at a cost of nearly $15 million. Completion of the facility is scheduled for May 1988.

Because of the construction, 3rd Infantry Division Road, from 2d Armored Division Road to 11th Airborne Division Road, will be closed permanently. Traffic will be re-routed using existing streets.

Burba, assisted by Col. Edward Sczevetzc, commander of the Army Training Center, and Don Conner, of Conner Brothers contracting, wielded a three handled shovel to symbolically begin construction efforts.

Soldiers, cadre at TRADOC schools barred from smoking

A. Keays
U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command

FORT MONROE, Va. — The U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command has issued a policy letter that prohibits the use of all tobacco products by soldiers in basic and advanced individual training.

Drill sergeants and other military and civilian cadre are also prohibited from using tobacco products in the presence of soldiers.

The anti-tobacco policy also applies to all soldiers attending TRADOC officer, warrant officer and non-commissioned officer courses conducted on TRADOC installations and at TRADOC service schools.

The new policy supports the overall TRADOC tobacco cessation program that is designed to enhance readiness and personal health, according to Maj. Gen. Carl H. McNair Jr., TRADOC chief of staff.

The use of tobacco products affects military readiness by impairing physical fitness and by increasing illness, absenteeism, premature death and health-care costs, McNair said.

TRADOC's anti-tobacco program carries out Army policy recently announced by Army Chief of Staff John A. Wickham Jr., and Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr.

In TRADOC, more than 230,000 trainees are processed through basic and One Station Unit Training each year. Trainees arriving at their reception battalions will not be allowed to smoke or use other tobacco products during the training day. The prohibition will remain in effect until the trainee graduates from basic or OSUT.

Sales of tobacco products from vending machines in basic and OSUT areas will be eliminated to the extent possible, McNair said. Still to be determined are the requirements of vendor contracts now in effect.

"We hope that by the time trainees graduate they will have given up tobacco use," said Wally Hunt of TRADOC's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Administration and Logistics.

Hunt, an alcohol and drug abuse control officer, said cadre will not use tobacco products in front of trainees during the day. "We want the cadre to create role models and a tobacco-free environment for the basic and OSUT soldiers. This is a time when they are very impressionable — learning about the Army and its standards."

Wanna make money, help Army? Submit ideas to Suggestion Program

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Tired of filling out five forms when you could put the necessary information on one? Then do it — it may be worth money to you.

Herman Hudson, a range assistant employed at the Directorate of Plans, Training and Management, got tired of having targets malfunction because they didn't fit properly in their concrete holders. So he designed a wooden stabilizer box to hold them in place.

His suggestion is saving Fort Benning $88,000 in its first year, and Hudson pocketed $3,340 for the idea.

It seemed like a waste of money to replace frayed or broken cable loops when there was a conversion kit available that could be used to repair the loops. So Kenneth Tingle, a parachute repair foreman in the Services and Support Division, Directorate of Logistics, turned in the idea on a DA 1045 Suggestion Form.

By adopting Tingle's idea, Fort Benning will realize a $118,000 savings in the first year. And Tingle is $3,790 richer because he submitted his idea.

Fort Benning is conducting a special Suggestion Campaign now through Aug. 15. "We want to promote the suggestion program and hopefully increase the submission rate," said Maxine Wing, suggestion program coordinator.

Wing said any Department of the Army employee, military or civilian, can submit a suggestion. DA Form 1045 is simple to complete and may be hand written or typed. Send the completed form to Wing in Room 130, Building 35.

"It's helpful if you can estimate savings on the form, but not absolutely necessary," she said.

The idea has to be a new one for this installation, she said. "If you come up with an idea and nobody else is doing it here, you get credit for it."

It could be a safety suggestion or a way to save energy, Wing said. "With energy suggestions, people need to be very original, because many conservation ideas are already being used here," Wing said.

Also, people don't have to suggest a change in their office. "If you can suggest something to improve operations, no matter where it is done on post, you will get credit for it," she said.

The activity or organization that submits the most suggestions will receive a plaque for its efforts.

Last year, Fort Benning adopted over 40 suggestions, for a first year savings of $2.1 million, she said.

A poster on Wing's wall sums up the philosophy of the program: "A country built on new ideas needs yours. Suggest!"

Instead of seeing problems, look for opportunities to get the job done more efficiently.

It could mean extra money in your pocket, and savings for Fort Benning.

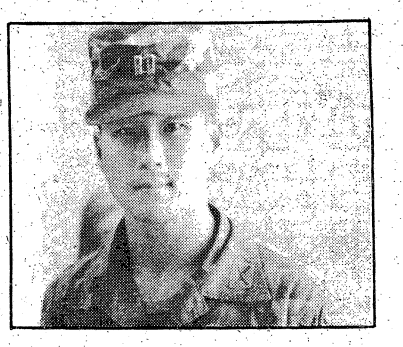
What do you think of the effectiveness of the Army Suggestion Program?

Capt. Undra Robinson, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade"It is a good program that will work if enough people participate. All ranks should contribute ideas that they think will benefit the military."



Cpl. Scott M. Johnson, Company D, 3rd Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade"The program is not used enough. There should be more suggestions and more people should know the program exists."

SSgt. Curtis R. Evans, 72nd Engineers, 197th Infantry Brigade"It works. There have been times where good ideas have meant cash rewards for soldiers. The money is a definite incentive. It should be comparable to the amount saved by the military in a given period of time."

SP4 Matt J. St. Marie, Company A, 1st Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade"The program does work. But individual units shuld emphasize the program to make more people aware. It benefits everyone in the Army."

Capt. Chelsea Y. Chae, Infantry Officers Advanced Course 3-86"The suggestion program will only be effective if there is a positive command atmosphere. If the soldier is encouraged to participate the program will be more widely used."

Post resident questions air conditioning cut-off

Dear Editor:

I am writing concerning the air conditioning cut-offs we have been subjected to in the last few weeks. To cut off the air conditioners for several hours when the temperatures are over 100 degrees Farenheit is practically inhuman.

Have you ever seen a small baby subjected to this kind of heat? It is indeed a pitiful sight. We were told in this paper that we could be subjected to the cut-offs only 3 or 4 days this summer.

So far, there have been at least 10 or more of them. I realize that we are having very unusual weather right now, but I cannot believe that there is not a better way to handle it.

I know that conserving energy is important and I teach my children the value of saving on lights, TV's, radios and the like.

Could the air conditioning not be cut off, say, thirty minutes each hour from around noon to 6 p.m. instead of cut-off totally during the hottest part of the day?

Perhaps it could be cut off seven and one-half minutes every half hour through the night. There has to be a better way than what is going on.

NANCY E. BEARD
411-A Craig Ct.
Fort Benning

Editor's note: Rodney Carroll, an Energy Office spokesman, confirmed that curtailment days have exceeded the three predicted by Georgia Power Company when the new rate structure was adopted.

"We have been curtailed seven days, a total of 20.25 hours, which averages out to 2.89 hours per day of curtailment," he said.

Customers of Georgia Power who were on this plan last summer were asked to cut back on electrical usage for three days, Carroll said. "This year, however, we are experiencing the worst drought in 100 years, along with record high temperatures, both factors which could not be planned or controlled by us."

He said that while curtailment days are uncomfortable for everyone, the new rate system is better because it allows Fort Benning to have unlimited air conditioning except for the times Georgia Power Co. asks the post to curtail its energy demand.

In the past, Fort Benning did use load shedding and load management to try to control demand. "Air conditioning units were turned off during the afternoon and evening hours for various periods of time to hold down the demands to acceptable levels," he said. "This happened every day during the hot summer months, which meant that people had to suffer every day from the heat."

The new rate agreement reached with Georgia Power allows Fort Benning to provide more air conditioning except during curtailment times. Carroll said that the power company has only so many resources to provide the electricity need of all its customers. "When we are asked to curtail our usage, other lrge customers in the State are being asked to do the same thing," Carroll said.

In exchange for the better rate, Fort Benning can afford to provide air conditioning and avoid hourly cutoffs. "The bottom line is that we are providing more air conditioning during this record hot year than we have in past years," he said.

Directorate of Engineering and Housing officials are keenly aware of the inconvenience that results from cutbacks and are doing everything possible to limit them.

"Right now, DEH workers are in the process of repairing all the FM controllers on air conditioning units so that units can effectively be operated on a rotating basis during curtailment periods," he said. "This means we will be able to turn them on by a computer and allow homes to have air conditioning on a cycled basis during curtailments."

Carroll said Fort Benning is fortunate to have concerned residents who work to conserve resources wherever they can. "People make the difference in our fight against waste and abuse of our resources," he said. "With their continued support, we can meet our Training and Doctrine Command energy goals this year."

Readers voice anger at being called 'slimy civilians'

Dear Editor:

Reference the article in the July 25, 1986, edition of The Bayonet, entitled "Soldiers Deserve Courtesy, Prompt Service from Civilians," written by Mike Brazile, the civilians assigned to this office take offense at being referred to as "slimy civilians."

We feel the article was in very poor taste as we try to get along with all the military we daily come in contact with, namely officers assigned to this installation.

Another thing we cannot understand is that a large percent of the civilians working at Fort Benning have military husbands or wives and at one time or another have either been military or had a member of their family in the military. If they didn't get along, how do you figure this happened? We did not realize that we don't like military until Mr. Brazile told us so!

We cannot understand how an editor would allow such a one- sided story to be published, and feel that some kind of apology or retraction is in order.

Dear Editor:

(Mr. Brazile), First of all, let me say that I know what point you were trying to make. I feel you did a poor job of getting that "point" across. Maybe your message should have been that we should treat others with the courtesy and respect due us — not as civilians or soldiers — but as humans.

Unless these 'soldiers' are willing to tell their superiors (fellow soldiers, not "slimy civilians") that their policies and regulations are ludicrous and asinine, then they should bite their tongues and respect that civilians sitting behind the desk (implementing the policies).

Remember, that slimy civilian was hired and took an oath to uphold the Army's regulations, guides and policies. I support and respect the Army. I abhor the lack of respect that many (not all) officers I deal with hold for myself, fellow slimy civilians and their country.

The soldiers are not my sustenance — the U.S. Army is, and I respect that. I will continue to follow its regulations. That was why I was hired — not to make exceptions for every officer who forgot something, just plain didn't care, or who didn't listen to my instructions.

Finally, if I had a dime for every "officer and gentleman" who attempted to bribe me, or cussed me out for doing my job, I could have retired years ago a wealthy woman. I would not continue to be subjected to ridicule and scorn from someone who views civilians as Webster's (dictionary) puts it — as "being of an offensive viscous liquid."

197th troopers learn Soviet style fighting

by Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

Soldirers from the 197th Infantry Brigade went to the field last week to train for a new type of mission — they were learning to be the enemy.

Company D, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry will travel to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., this month to augment the opposing force.

The Fort Benning soldiers will fight Soviet style, using Warsaw Pact uniforms and weapons, against units of the 194th Armored Brigade, Fort Knox, Ky.

Capt. Bill Shoaff, Company D commander said, "The soldiers are really looking forward to it. We went through an NTC rotation in February. This is their chance to see how the other side fights."

The soldiers went to the field last week for dismounted night training. Some of the OPFOR missions will include dismounted infiltration through obstacles.

"We'll be walking a lot in the desert," said Shoaff, and we'll have several night missions. I wanted to work on night land navigation while building up lower body strength."

Training for these missions at night paid off in more ways than one: the soldiers were able to walk four to five hours each night without suffering heat injuries.

"This would have been impossible during the day," Shoaff said. "All we had to put up with at night was the humidity. Besides, I feel the training was more valuable."

The company will spend about one month at the National Training Center.

Cottonbalers make war in desert against Screaming Eagles

by Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

In weather that has varied from scorching heat to torrential rains, soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade continued their desert mission this week at Twenty-Nine Palms, Calif., where they are participating in JRX Gallant Eagle 1986.

The actual maneuvers against the Opposing Force, played by units from the 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky. began Saturday with an attack by Task Force 3-7 Infantry. Scouts from Troop A, 15th Cavalry, ranging far to the front of the friendly troops, provided the attacking force with valuable information about its opponents.

The Brigade Headquarters soldiers, manning a Tactical Operations Center controlled the maneuver units on the field. Meanwhile, soldiers of the 197th Support Battalion supported all elements of the Brigade with the food, fuel and ammunition necessary for combat. Overall, some 1400 soldiers from the Brigade are involved in the exercise.

According to observers on the ground, the desert operation thus far has been anything but boring. Last week, for example, two nights of driving rains created flash floods and mud flows that knocked down tents and washed out a bridge to main post. At one point, four feet of water flowed through the Brigade's assembly area.

U.S. Army School of the Americas

Fifteen non-commissioned officers and 10 officers from Peru graduated July 11 from the Patrolling Operations course at the U.S. Army School of the America.

The five-week course taught the graduates how to conduct small unit patrolling and airmobile operations.

Guest speaker for the graduation ceremony was Peruvian Lt. Cmdr. Juan Portilla, currently a student at USARSA with the Command and General Staff course.

A total 3,824 officers, NCOs and cadets from Peru have graduated from courses at USARSA since 1947.

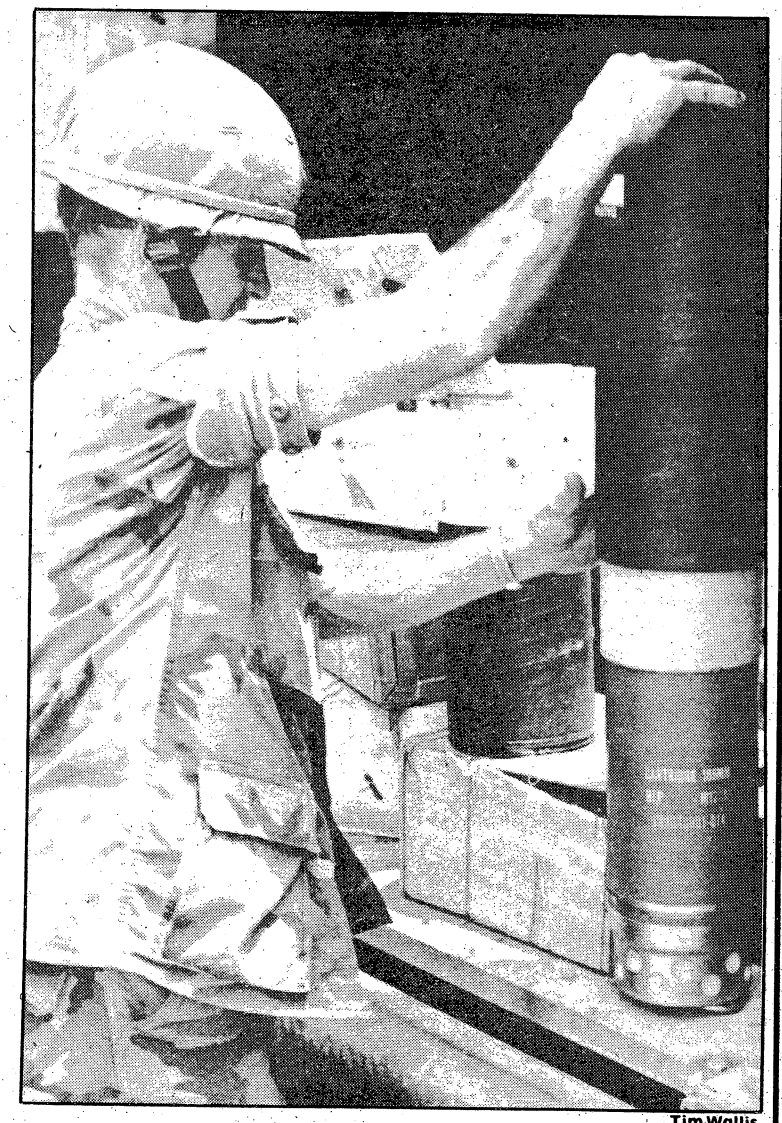
Engineer vehicle cross between tank, bulldozer

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade PAO



Probably one of the more unusual vehicles churning up dust on Fort Benning ranges is the combat engineer vehicle, which looks like a cross between a tank and a bulldozer.

Soldiers from the 72nd Engineer Company, 197th Infantry Brigade recently fired the CEV's 165mm main gun, its two machine guns, plus performed engineer tasks in order to qualify.

"The CEV is used for breaching obstacles, destroying structures, recovery and other combat engineer missions," said SFC Gary Robeson, a platoon sergeant. "Only combat engineer units have them."

A four-man crew operates the vehicle, to include manning the weapons systems and performing engineer missions.

During its three days of recent training, the company qualified four crews. At other times during the year the crews take the CEVs to the range for familiarization.

Soldier experiences diversified training

(Editor's Note: This is the seventh article in a series which will allow the readers to follow one soldier through his entire One Station Unit Training (OSUT) at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade located on Sand Hill.)

by Michael Ricca
1st Infantry Training Brigade

We started this week with four periods of Hand-to-Hand Combat Training. These periods got to be exhausting and the hand-to-hand pit became hotter and hotter as the day progressed. We all had a lot of fun being given the opportunity to hip throw and shoulder throw our fellow soldiers all morning long.

Next, we mortarmen were off to the Mortar Square for our final week of mortar training before the Gunner's Exam. Our reinforcement included: mounting, large and small deflection/elevation changes, reciprocal lay, traverse and fire. These tasks were all timed and had to be completed in a matter of seconds without error.

I noticed the tension building this week throughout the platoon. All of us were trying our best but there were times when we found the tasks difficult and it was hard to get the mortars set up in the time allotted. We also had the help of the Range Instructors and the Drill Sergeants to ensure we did our best.

One comment we heard repeatedly was, "If you're not getting the mortars up in 11 Charlie time then you're an 11 Bolo (no go for that tast). This testing was for qualification in our MOS of 11C mortarman. No one wanted to hear that he was not going to qualify so we gave it our all and then some.

Friday finally came around and it was time for our Gunner's Exam. We were all a bit edgy; I had never been as anxious before an exam and feel the rest of the platoon was in a similar state.

We found that the Gunner's Exam went by very quickly and we were all qualified Mortarmen by noon, with several of the platoon finishing with "EXPERT" scores.

It was a tremendous feeling to come up with an EXPERT score when there were times I felt "less than confident" in my ability as a Mortarman. This really shows the professionalism of the Range NCOs and our Drill Sergeants — they know how to bring out the best in soldiers.

School of Americas' new sergeant major here to work, not kick back

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas

"I've never been assigned to a unit as unique as the U.S. Army School of the Americas with so many top quality junior and senior noncommissioned officers," said Command Sergeant Major David Magdaleno, USARSA's newly assigned CSM.

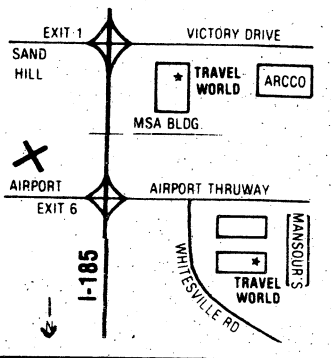
Magdaleno, who was born in Panama but makes his home in Tampa, Fla., made one thing clear as he spoke to all NCOs and enlisted soldiers Tuesday morning. "I didn't accept this assignment so I could 'kick back' and get ready for retirement," the 24-year Army veteran said. "I'm here to work. I'm here for the soldier, the Army family and the NCO," he said.

A graduate of many military courses, including the Sergeants Major Academy, Magdaleno believes in NCO career development. "I plan to concentrate a lot of my efforts assuring USARSA's soldiers and NCOs meet their career development needs such as schools and the fundamentals of soldiering," Magdaleno said.

Gesturing with his arms and hands as he talked, USARSA's top NCO said, "My first impression of USARSA is that it is a highly-visible and busy unit with our personnel conducting and supporting ongoing training for our Latin American allies.

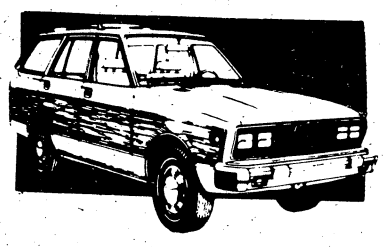
"The many different activities at USARSA seem to have a complex nature to them, perhaps because of the many countries participating in some of those activities," Magdaleno noted. "Many cultures and training ideas come together here and we communicate these through one language," he said, referring to the bilingual environment at USARSA.

"We as U.S. soldiers represent the image of the U.S. Army to Latin American soldiers," he said, adding, "So we need to 'lead by example' to project an image of what our Army represents."

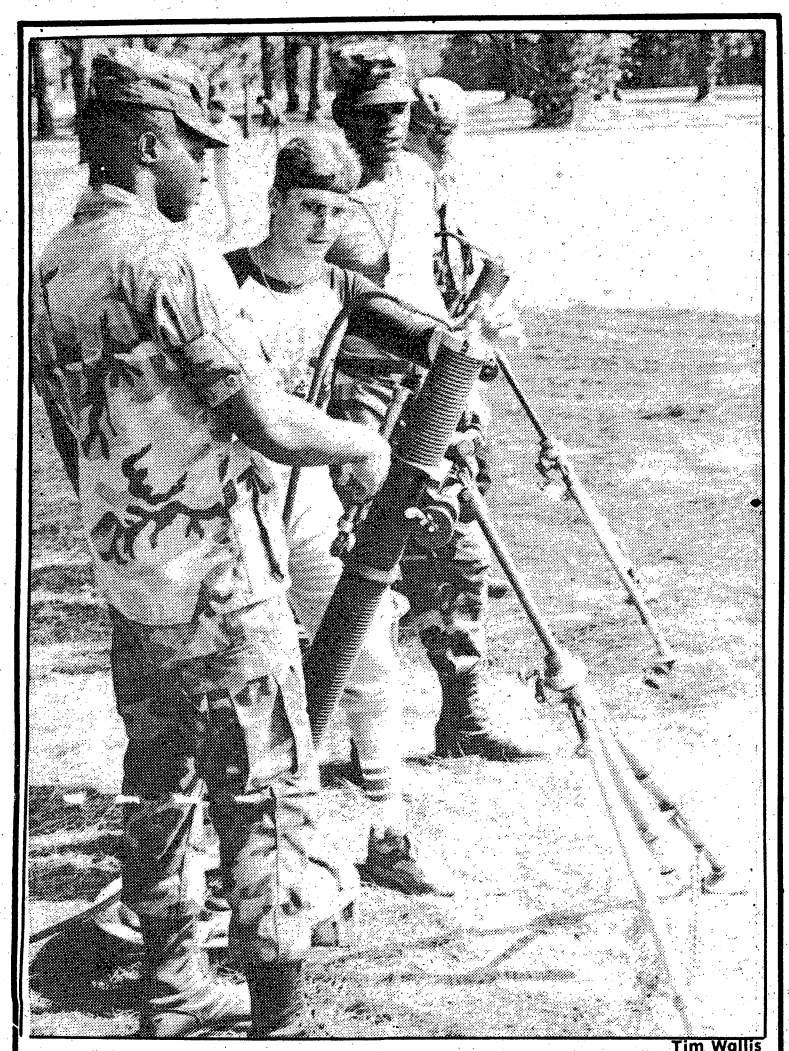


Magdaleno said USARSA promotes U.S. Army NCO Corps philosophy. "One of our goals at USARSA is to sell the U.S. NCO image to participating Latin American countries — that the NCO in our Army is an essential part of the chain-of-command," Magdaleno said.

"This is an uncommon belief many Latin American countries have of their NCO ranks," he said.



Magdaleno's last assignment was as command sergeant major of the 1st Personnel Administration Battalion, 13th Support Command at Fort Hood, Texas — a 350-soldier unit responsible for supporting about 15,000 people.



Magdaleno's overseas tours include Vietnam, Korea, Italy Panama and Okinawa.

Cottonbalers get all wet during Organization Day

by Bill Branley
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Not all Cottonbalers were high and dry last week when the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry observed its annual organization day.

Soldiers threw softballs at a dunking machine in an effort to drench their favorite battalion personalities, including company commanders.

The day-long picnic at Kelley Hill also featured displays, games and plenty of food.

Company C took top honors overall as well as first place in the military competition, which included physical training events and other tests of military skills. The company also took the award for the couples events, which featured such things as a raw egg toss.

Company E went home with the golf trophy for a Battalion tournament that was played a week earlier. Individual honors in that event went to 1st Lt. Bill Fitzpatrick, who shot an overall par for 18 holes.

Soldiers headed for 25th Division get special machinegun training

by Robert Schmidt
2nd Infantry Training Brigade

The soldiers of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade attacked the machine gun range with the cry of becoming expert gunners.

Company B is currently training soldiers for the 25th Infantry Division, Tropic Lightning in Hawaii. These cohort soldiers get to do more advanced training than the normal OSUT soldiers. Part of their training includes qualifying with the M60 machine gun.

The M60 machine gun is an important weapon to the light infantry unit. It provides them with fire power to suppress the enemy allowing the assault teams to manuever, and it also can engage targets up to 1100 meters well out of range of the M16 rifle.

Twelve soldiers from each of the 3 platoons were choosen to qualify. Upon arrival in Hawaii 4 soldiers in each platoon will get to be M60 gunners.

To qualify the gunner must accomplish two task. First he must engage strings of targets at 10 meters firing the gun from the tripod mode called traversing. The gunner has to score a minimum of 115 target hits out of 183 rounds.

The second task is field fire at pop up targets at distances ranging from 500 to 1000 meters. The gunner must hit 5 out of 8 targets firing from the bipod position in order to receive his qualification badge.

Of the 36 soldiers who got the chance to qualify11 of them qualified as expert gunners and 14 of them were 1st class gunners. Only 5 soldiers failed to achieve the minimium score.

Pvt. 1 Hector Reyna was the companys high scorer with a score of 174. He said, "I was shocked,I couldn't believe I had the highest score. I think the M60 is the best weapon you can carry."

Another expert gunner was Pvt. 1 Lyle Karsch who said, "It was exciting, I hope when I get to Hawaii I end up a M60 gunner."

Company B soldiers put up machineguns after a long day on the firing range.

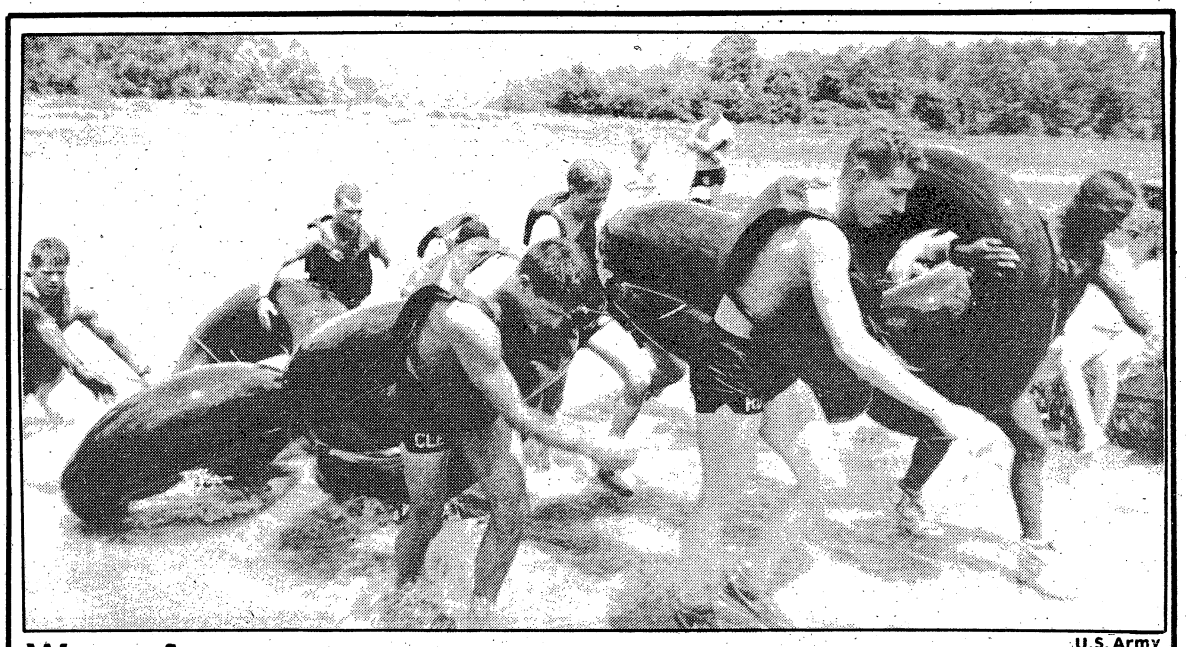
6th Bn, 1st ITB units grab 100 percent go's on testing

by G. Ramsdell
1st Infantry Training Brigade

It was a proud day for the soldiers of Companies B, C and D, 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

These three companies all received a 100 percent first time go rate on the mid-cycle test administered at AO Eagle.



They comprise the 2/22 Infantry COHORT Battalion and will be stationed at Fort Drum, N.Y., upon graduation from One Station Unit Training. Col. Edward Svetecz, commander of the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center, presented the streamers to the units and encouraged them to maintain the high standard.

Lt. Col. Bruce A. Harris is the commander of the 6th Battalion, "The Tip of the Bayonet." It is not surprising the soldiers performed so well. This is the same battalion that spearheaded the 1st ITB's tactical skills team and won the commanding general's trophy earlier his year.

Occasionally, a company will streamer the test, but for an entire COHORT battalion to accomplish the feat is an USAITC first.

The 6th Battalion is not about to rest on its laurels. The trainers and soldiers are already preparing for the end of cycle test. Can the battalion prevail twice?

"It's possible," said SFC Anslem Samuel, a senior drill sergeant in Company D. "When you combine excellent drills with good soldiers you have the necessary ingredients."

HHD, 67th Maint Bn tests alert response

67th Maintenance Battalion

The Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment (HHD), 67th Maintenance Battalion, organized, equipped and trained for responsive support to non-divisional type units recently had an Emergency Deployment Readiness Exercise, its first in over two years.

Upon notification of the alert, the unit employed security measures and began reporting status of personnel and equipment. The soldiers were briefed "on a need to know" basis, then released to prepare for the numerous inspections that lay ahead.

The inspectors consisted of key personnel from post and 36th Engineer Group (Combat). The areas inspected were: personnel administration, nuclear, biological, and chemical, movement plans, supply procedures, communications maintenance, physical security and convoy operations.

After 72 hours the final inspection came. For this, HHD rolled out with assigned vehicles and personnel to make a three-hour round-trip to LaGrange, and Opelika, Ala., and back to Fort Benning.

Engineers build rail around training area

43rd Engineer Bn.

The Training Committee for the Program of Infantry Qualification Training site has requested the 43rd Engineers to construct a safety railing parallel to a cliff on the site.

Initially, the 43rd Engineer surveyors set a compass training and testing site, but the location was near a 50 foot tall cliff along Moye Road.

To preclude any accident, Company D was tasked to construct a 75 meter safety railing that did not interfere with the function of the compass or detract from the tactical senario.

The task was assigned to the general construction platoon's carpenters who designed and constructed a wooden railed fence.

Additionally, the engineers were asked to construct six compass stands to coincide with the new fence. With the addition of these items, the troops are limited to a small area and the cliff should never present a safety hazard.

Unit renovates WWII style billets

43rd Engineer Battalion

First Platoon, Co C, 43rd Engineer Battalion recently completed a major facelift of the old WWII style billets in the D/4-2 basic training area in Harmony Church.

The project entailed the removal of old flooring and the installation of new, tile floor. The job encompassed three weeks of work for the vertical construction platoon.

The new flooring presents a fresh image within the barracks, as compared to the old linoleum floor, which had become disreputable in the last few years.

Company B works on many projects

43rd Engineer Battalion

During the 43rd Engineer Battalion Pre-ARTEP, Company B, with equipment support from the Battalion, took on the task of emplacing 3,055 cubic yards of fill at the Harmony Church old landfill.

This was accomplished in 12 hours of operation using nine 621B Scrapers and one D8K Dozer.

The total amount of fill required for the project is 95,094 cubic yards. At the present time the project is several months ahead of schedule. This is due to the hard work and long hours spent by the troops by Company B's earthmoving platoon.

The Battalion's two general construction platoons recently constructed four briefing bays for the Rangers, to be used as a field classroom and a 30-foot span timber trestle bridge which will be used on an upcoming demolition exercise.

The briefing bays were built by 1st Platoon under tactical conditions to enhance the troops' ability to construct in a possible hostile environment.

The 2nd Platoon constructed the thirty foot timber trestle bridge for the Rangers to practice demolitions. The platoon was working under a deadline, as the bridge had to be ready for a demoliton exercise planned for three days later.

197th announces 'big plans' for installation of excellence

by Bill Branley
197th Public Affairs Office

It's been said that it pays to think big. If so, future members of the 197th Infantry Brigade located on Kelley Hill may see the fruits of that philosophy.

In an all out effort to improve the Kelley Hill environment, leaders and engineers have embarked on a long range improvement plan titled Kelley Hill 1997.

The plan is contained in a 20-page booklet authored by two former members of the Brigade Engineers section, Maj. Donald Nye and 1st Lt. Lance Jackson.

The booklet describes Kelley Hill today and provides a vision of how it could look by the year 1997. Col. William Hartzog, Brigade commander, points out in the booklet that Kelley Hill was the showplace of Fort Benning when it was built in the late 1950s and early 1960s.

However, time, weather and heavy usage have taken their toll on barracks, office buildings and other facilities. The goal of the commander, engineer and other leaders is to produce a "community of excellence," through careful planning and wise use of labor and resources.

Brigade planners envision Kelley Hill 1997 becoming a reality a little at a time, between now and the target year.

Soldiers play Hawaiian-style at 2nd ITB organization day

2nd Infantry Training Brigade

The heat could not stop the fun at the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade's annual Organization Day. For the cadre of the Eagle Brigade and their families it was a fun filled day of games, prizes and good food.

This year the guest of honor was a large hog prepared Hawaiian style by SFC Harold Vidinha. Vidinha, a native Hawaiian, spent all night prior to the picnic roasting the hog just like they do for a Luau.

The picnic gave the cadre of the Eagle Brigade a nice break from its mission of training soldiers. Everyone enjoyed the opportunity to relax and spend some time with their families.

JAG office honored for tax assistance program

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Judge Advocate General's office was recently honored for having the best military volunteer income tax assistance program during the 1985-1986 tax year.

The Internal Revenue Service of Atlanta announced that the Fort Benning legal assistance office had the best overall tax assistance program in Georgia.

The VITA program, which has been active on post for a number of years, was pushed into full operation by Capt. Michael V. Totin, legal assistance officer at JAG.

The program was met with a new outlook and more enthusiam this year because of a directive sent from the Judge Advocate Generals office.

"Income tax preparation for many of our soldiers and their family members is a complicated and time-consuming exercise. Those who prepare their own tax returns frequently pay more than necessary because they fail to claim legitimate deductions and tax credits," said Maj. Gen. High R. Overholt, Judge Advocate General.

According to Totin, the program went full swing in September 1985, when he sent announcements to the major commands on post that a seminar would be held and that each unit should send a tax officer to learn the finer points of income tax filing.

Totin spent months arranging publicity. "The Fort Benning community had to know that the program existed and that it's credible," Totin said.

In addition to a regular column in the Bayonet, Totin made up flyers to be sent to the soldier with his Leave and Earnings Statement, posted signs on post and used air time on a local public service announcement television station to reach the retired community.

Once tax season began, the work got more intense. Totin was constantly monitoring the program to see how it was working. The IRS would sent spot check returns, so Totin could see what their common mistakes were and correct them.

The program also allowed staffers in the JAG office to work with a different kind of client.

"It seems that we only see the soldier here when the he is having a problem. We don't always have the chance to help the good soldier," said Capt. Gary M. Perolman, chief of Legal Assistance. "Here's something that they can really appreciate. If we can save the soldier money and from a potential problem, then we feel we've succeeded in our mission."

Infantry owes thanks to retired general for pushing Building 4 funding in 1958

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Building 4, the nerve center of the United States Army Infantry School, traces its history back to its inception in 1951 and through the efforts of Gen. Bruce C. Clark (Retired).

Initial planning for the construction of Building 4 began in 1951. Due to a lack of funds, however, construction was slow on the building project that would cost $10 million. Enter Gen. Clark.

"When I became commanding general of Continental Army Command (later divided into Training and Doctrine Command and Forces Command) I soon visited the Infantry and other schools. I found that the Infantry school needed help toward a new school building. Soon after that my engineer brought into me the schedule for dividing up the construction money for Army schools. I said 'give it all to the Infantry School and let's get its project done,'" wrote Clark, in a recent letter to a friend.

Due to Clark's decision Building 4 was finished and dedicated as the headquarters for the Infantry school June 5, 1964.

Clark's philosophy on allocating funds was "little dabs of money on a job are greatly wasted." As a consequence of this philosophy the Infantry School gained a new headquarters and school building.

Building 4 encompasses 525,000 square feet comprising the George C. Marshall Auditorium, the William C. Donovan Technical Library and 36 classrooms, ranging in seating from 25 to 200 students. Additionally, the building boasts the latest in up-to-date educational equipment as well as a closed circuit television system.

Benning's beauty marred by trash dumpers

Thad Roberson

Old furniture and discarded wire fencing material are some of the trash being dumped illegally on Fort Benning.

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

People are using Fort Benning as a dump site, say military police officials.

The avenues leading into and out of Fort Benning are the most utilized dumping areas.

"The primary site used is on St. Mary's Road as you come onto post," said SFC Gary Leeds, assistant operations sergeant, Military Police Activity. "We also have a lot of trouble with 10th Armor Division Road and Engineer Road.

Complaints also have been coming into the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

"People are concerned about the environmental health problem posed by the dumping," said MSgt. George Jordan, Directorate of Engineering and Housing operations sergeant.

He said there have also been reported sitings of "mad dogs" in the areas, apparently attracted by food in the debris.

"To ensure quality post beautification, we will need the assistance of both the local and Fort Benning communities," Jordan said.

The MPs will be stepping up enforcement efforts in support of the drive to keep Fort Benning clean.

"We are going to do everything that we can to cut down the dumping and trashing of Fort Benning," said Leeds. "There will be more patrols in these areas and persons caught littering or dumping will be cited." Those cited for littering or dumping will have to appear in court, and will be charged under provisions of a Georgia Municipal Code, Leeds said.

In the past, offenders either received fines or were detailed to police the areas, or both. But the penalty set by the municipal court judge may be even more severe .

Asbestos not dangerous unless unwrapped, exposed fibers inhaled

by Laurie J. Hill

"What people have to understand is that asbestos is not harmful. We find it in the air we breathe, it's everywhere on the planet Earth," said Richard W. Townsend, industrial hygienist at Preventive Medicine on post.

Townsend has been actively involved in the on-going surveying and sampling of asbestos containing materials on Fort Benning.

He said that in spite of current controversy, "We've been testing for many years. We have an on-going asbestos testing program where we are required to make continual assessments and make sure all post buildings are safe."

Asbestos, a mineral fiber found in rocks, is mixed with other substances to form insulation, strengthen materials and provide fire protection. Asbestos fibers can be found in the insulation of appliances, floor tiles and the lining of coffee pots. It can also be found in ceilings, walls, pipe coverings and some roofing materials.

"There are actually thousands of different industrial uses, from pipe insulation to brake linings for cars," he said.

According to Townsend, asbestos is totally safe as long as it is wrapped and not exposed to the air.

Asbestos only becomes a danger to people when the fibers are released into the air and inhaled. After breathing the fibers for many years, people may develop breathing trouble (Asbestosis), cancer or mesothelioma.

Where asbestos does exist on post, it is wrapped with an outer layer of protective covering to prevent the particles from contaminating the air.

"As long as the coverings are left intact and don't have any holes or age deterioration, the asbestos is perfectly safe," Townsend said.

The materials found in the older quarters on post is being carefully watched.

"It's in some houses and we have identified them. What we're attempting to do is manage the situation," he said.

Managing the situation means carefully watching the asbestos and making assessments to document the levels of asbestos fibers in the air.

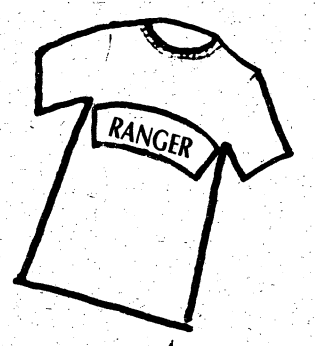
Townsend said, "As long as children aren't beating on the pipes and pulling on the coverings, it's not a problem."

According to Alice Howard, environmental specialist with the Department of Housing, "Our first priority is to remove all the asbestos from post quarters."

There are 492 quarters on post that are expected to be cleared of the asbestos.

These quarters are the older ones on main post such as those on Ingersol Loop. Harrrison St. and Gain St. Also include are all the white elephants on Lumpkin Rd., Running Ave., 1st Division Rd., Austin, Miller and Gillespie Loops and Rainbow Ave.

Areas that will be surveyed later this summer are the WWII barracks in Harmony Church, The Reserve Centers and portions of the Kelley Hill and Camp Frank D. Merrill.



"Asbestos is something to worry about but nothing to be terrified about," said Townsend.

"If anyone is having a problem with it (asbestos) they should call DEH who will take care of it right away," added Townsend.

Benning young people volunteer own time to help

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Some kids may be bored with their summer school vacation but 64 young people at Fort Benning are putting their skills, time and motivation to work as Red Cross volunteers on post.

Through the American Red Cross' Youth Volunteer Program, young people 13 to 18 years old volunteer their time helping various agencies on post. "Our kids are great. During the last two weeks of June the 41 volunteers we have at Martin Army Community Hospital put in over 1,200 hours," said Jill Kluge, the Red Cross Youth Volunteer Program's director.

Doing everything from taking vital signs to filling out paperwork to typing and taking patients to different clinics, the volunteers are an asset that supported functions would dearly miss if they weren't there, according to Kluge.

"This is the second year for this program. There were 50 youth volunteers last year. This year we upped the total by 14. We actually had more volunteers than we had time to screen and interview," she said.

The youth volunteer process begins in May, with interested teenagers filling out applications. Each applicant is then interviewed with at least one parent present.

The interview consists of finding out what kind of job the volunteer is interested in, where he or she would like to work and the responsibilities the volunteer incurs once accepted. The number of hours to be worked is also agreed upon at this time.

"The number of hours each volunteer works is strictly up to each individual. We have some who work four hours one day each week and others who put in a regular 40-hour work week," Kluge said.

Chuck Brown is a swim aide volunteer, helping lifeguards teach young children how to swim. He typically puts in a seven hour day, five days each week.

"I like helping kids. I'm also interested in becoming a lifeguard next year once I turn 15. Working as a swim aide should really help me," he said.

Brown was required to take a basic Red Cross orientation and a specialized Adapted Aquatics Class, which consisted of basic lifesaving techniques, in order to be qualified as a swim aide. Other volunteers receive specialized training and breifings also.

Worker builds display cases for rare flags

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The National Infantry Museum needed two special display cases built to hold some recently acquired rare artifacts: a 34-star U.S. flag that was recovered from the battle of Gettysburg in 1863 and the colors of the 2nd Regiment, U.S. Colo-red Troops, also of Civil War fame.

The museum turned to the Directorate of Logistic's Furniture Repair Shop and one of the shop's carpenters, Mike Moss.

"I was given the task of helping the museum construct the display cases. I guess it took about 60 hours to build and put the cabinets together," Moss said.

The two 10 feet by 12 feet cases are composed of wooden frames with sliding and locking glass doors.

Moss has been working at Fort Benning for three years and has been tapped for other special jobs on post.

"I built a 40 feet long conference table for the commanding general. I also built the old-time escort wagon display at the 197th Infantry Brigade. Carpentry is my hobby," Moss said.

"Mike did a superb job on the display cases. Now museum visitors can view our new flags, thanks to Mike's work," said the museum's Frank Hanner.

New Policy allows wear of jungle boots

Soldiers may now wear the jungle boot in lieu of the standard combat boot, according to a Department of the Army message. However, a change to AR 670-1 restricts their wear with the green service uniform and in formations where uniform appearance is required.

The regulation change also allows the wear of commercial boots of similar design of the standard combat boot.

Safety, mission accomplishment go hand-in-hand

by SGM Glen E. Morrell
Sergeant Major of the Army

NCOs are and always have been the backbone of the Army. We are the ones who translate mission statements and operations orders into action. We are the first-line supervisors and trainers. Our soldiers watch us and copy the way we do business. In short, we take care of the Army's most valuable asset — the soldier.

But taking care of soldiers and keeping them safe is not our only job. We must also accomplish our unit missions.

Safety and mission accomplishments are not separate jobs. In the Army, one depends on the other. Success in one requires success in the other, and requirements for both are much the same.

Mission accomplishment requires that soldiers be properly trained, equipped with the right tools that have been properly maintained, and told exactly what they are expected to do. Safety requires the same things.

Too many accidents happen because NCOs tell soldiers to do things they are not trained to do. This puts the soldiers in situations with which they are unfamiliar and are not prepared to handle. A typical example of this recently resulted in a fatal accident.

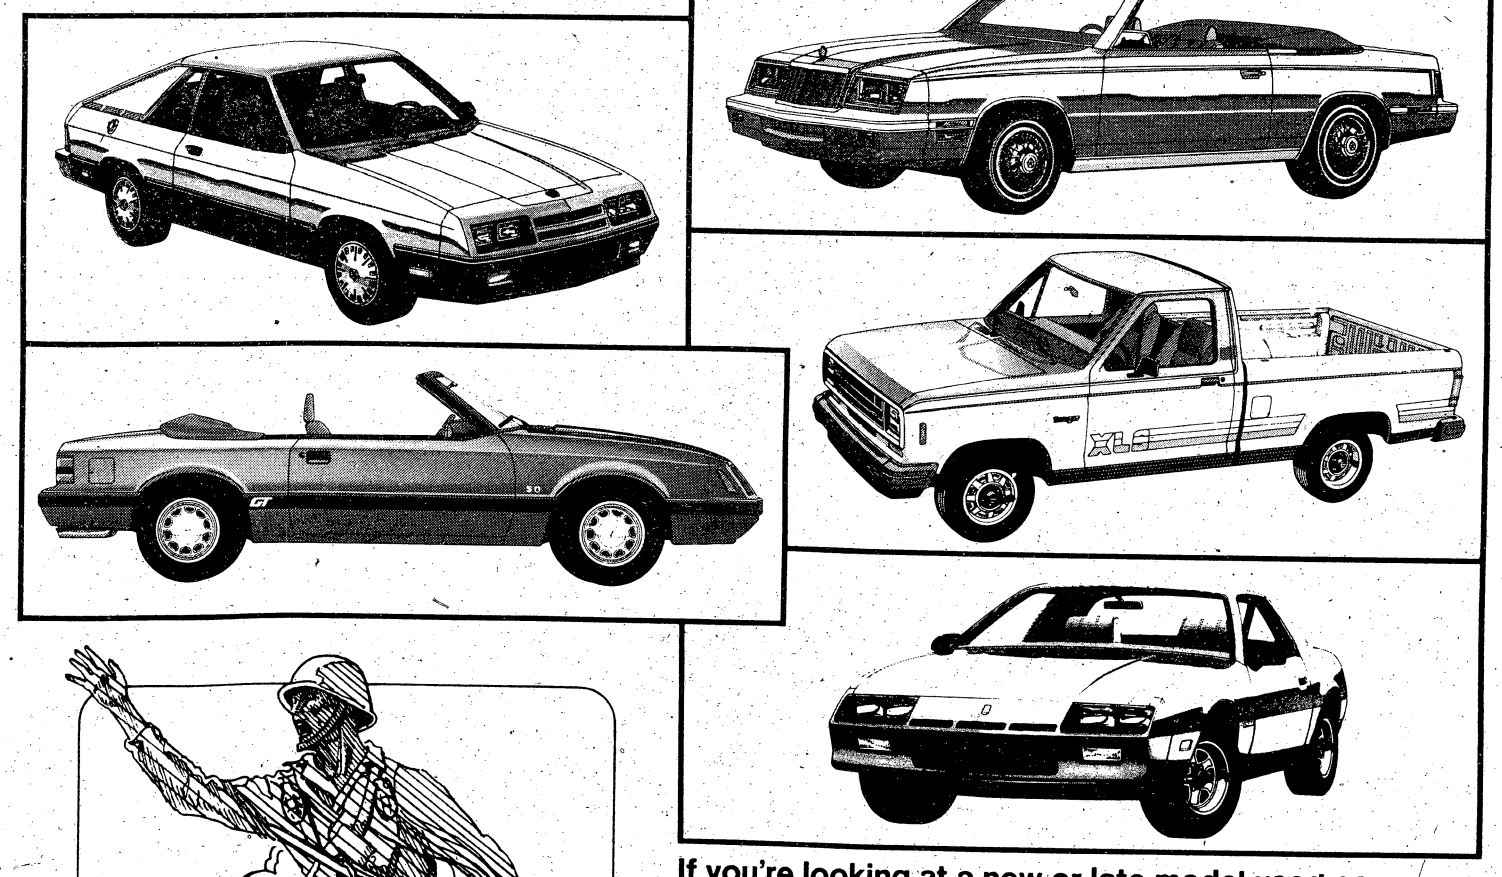
- The unit was assigned to be the post guard company. One of the communications requirements was a radio with an RC-292 antenna for the guard headquarters. A sergeant was told to take his squad and erect the antenna. After assembling it, the squad began raising the RC-292. While doing so, the antenna slipped out of control and fell into a high-voltage powerline.

One soldier was electrocuted, and the antenna was destroyed. The accident investigation revealed that none of the squad members had been trained in RC-292 antenna erection, and TM 11-5820-348-15 was not used as a guide.

We NCOs see practically everything that goes on, so we are in the best position to improve soldier performance and safety by making on-the-spot corrections.

But sometimes we don't go far enough. For example, we don't hesitate to correct one of our own soldiers. However, we sometimes hesitate to correct the same mistake made by a soldier from another unit.

We must keep in mind that we do not stop being NCOs when we leave our area to go to the PX, to the motor pool, or to another unit. If we see something that isn't right, it's our job to correct it.



Each time we see something wrong and don't correct it, we lose some of the professionalism that earns us the respect and confidence of our soldiers. Each time we look the other way and ignore some minor deficiency because we're in a hurry, or it's not that important, it becomes easier to overlook other things.

We will tend to overlook or let slide more and more until, one day, we let something slide that causes an accident. If we're lucky, it will cost us only damaged equipment. All too often it will also cost us an injured or dead soldier.

Infantry NCOs operate in an environment that demands well-trained soldiers who function as a cohesive team. This can be accomplished only by ensuring that our soldiers do it right and do it safely. To do less is a disservice to our soldiers and our missions.

Remember, safety means doing the job right. Safety is our obligation to our soldiers; safety is mission protection; safety is NCO business.

Camp Smiley

Exceptional kids have great summer

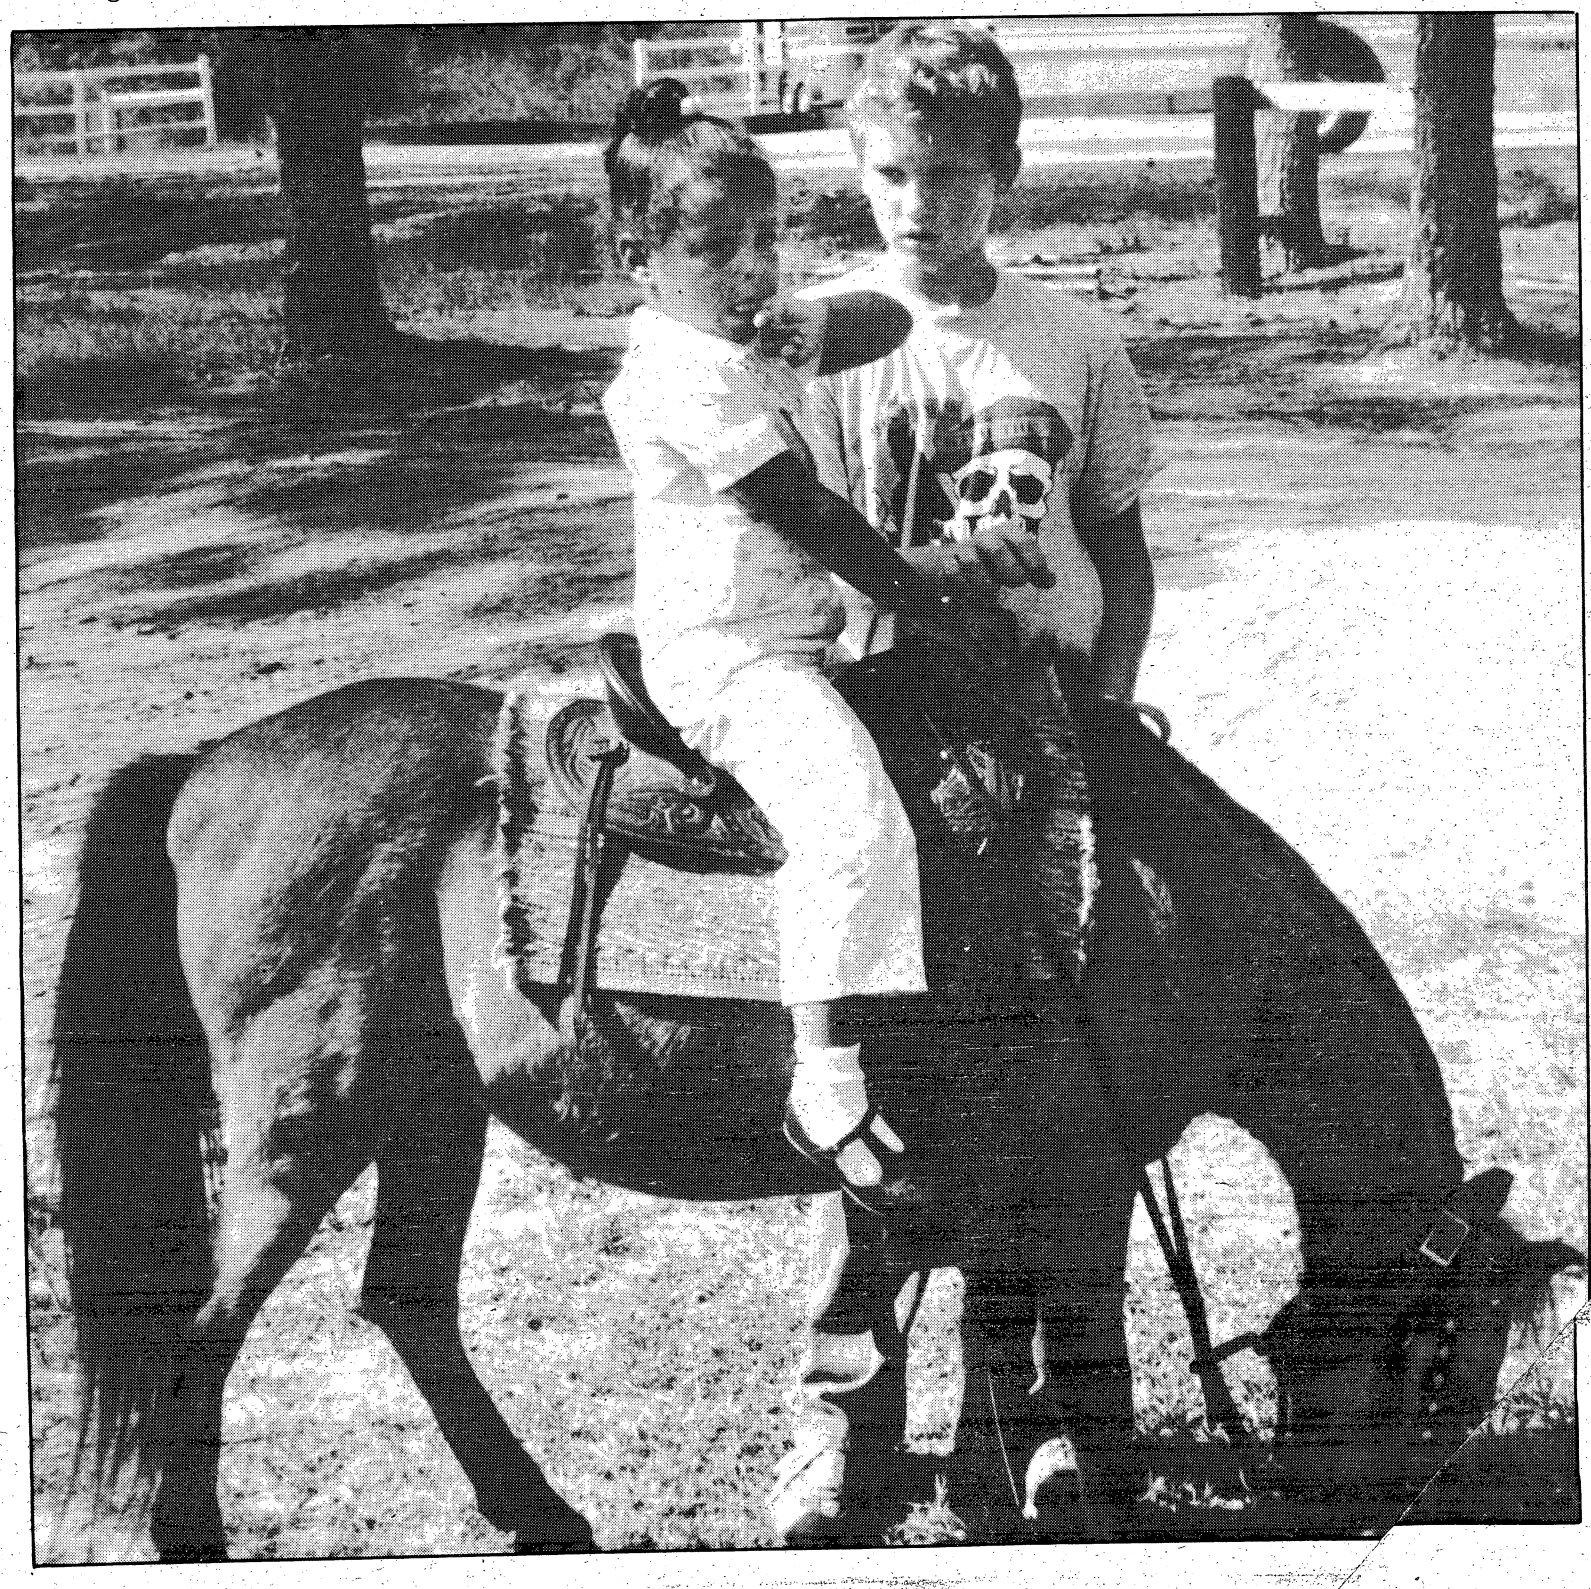
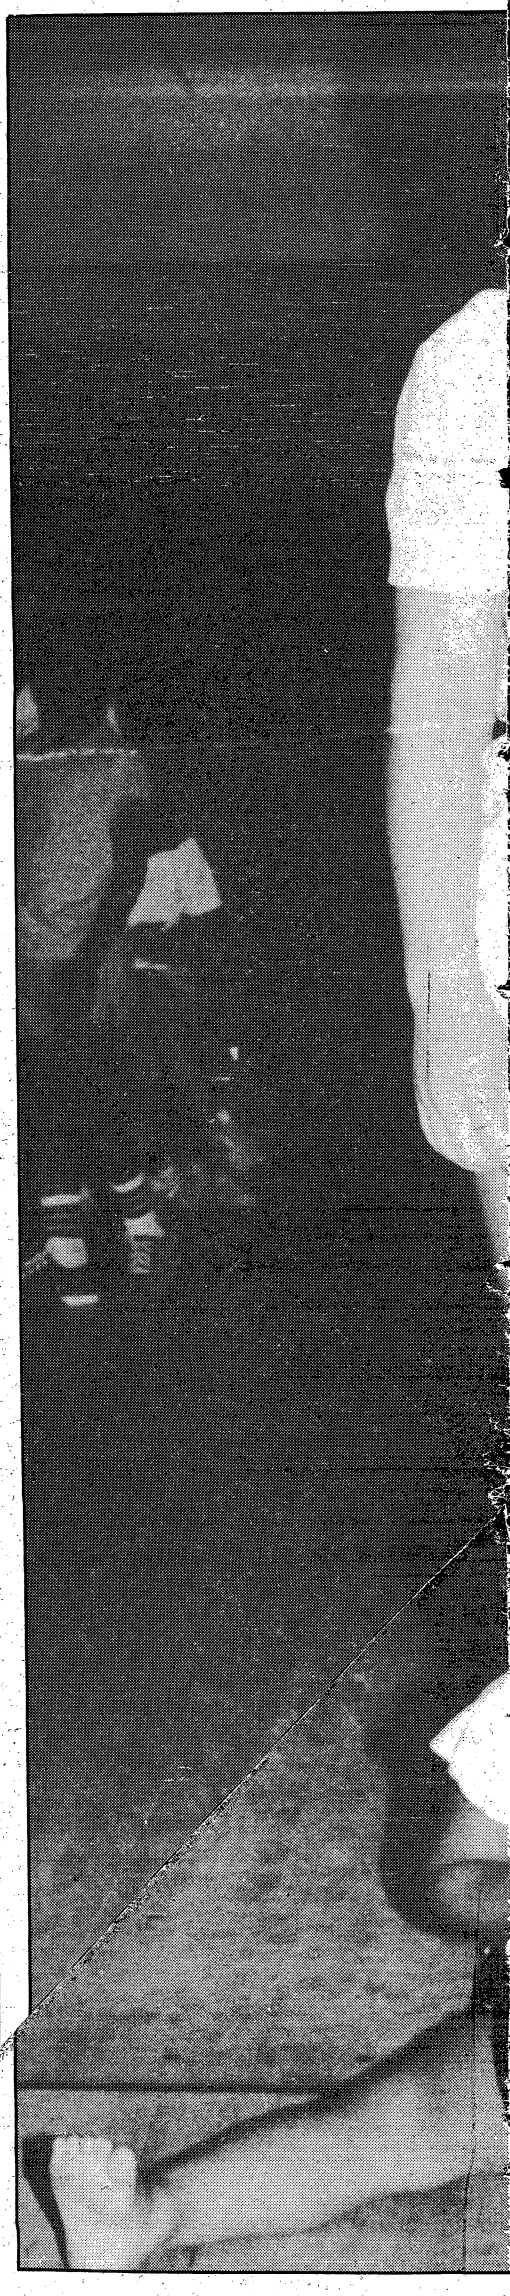
Exceptional children at Fort Benning are smiling this summer as a result of a program sponsored by Army Community Service's Exceptional Child Program.



Dubbed Camp Smiley, the program is in its fourth year of providing a summer experience for mentally and physically handicapped children whose parents are miltary and assigned to Fort Benning.

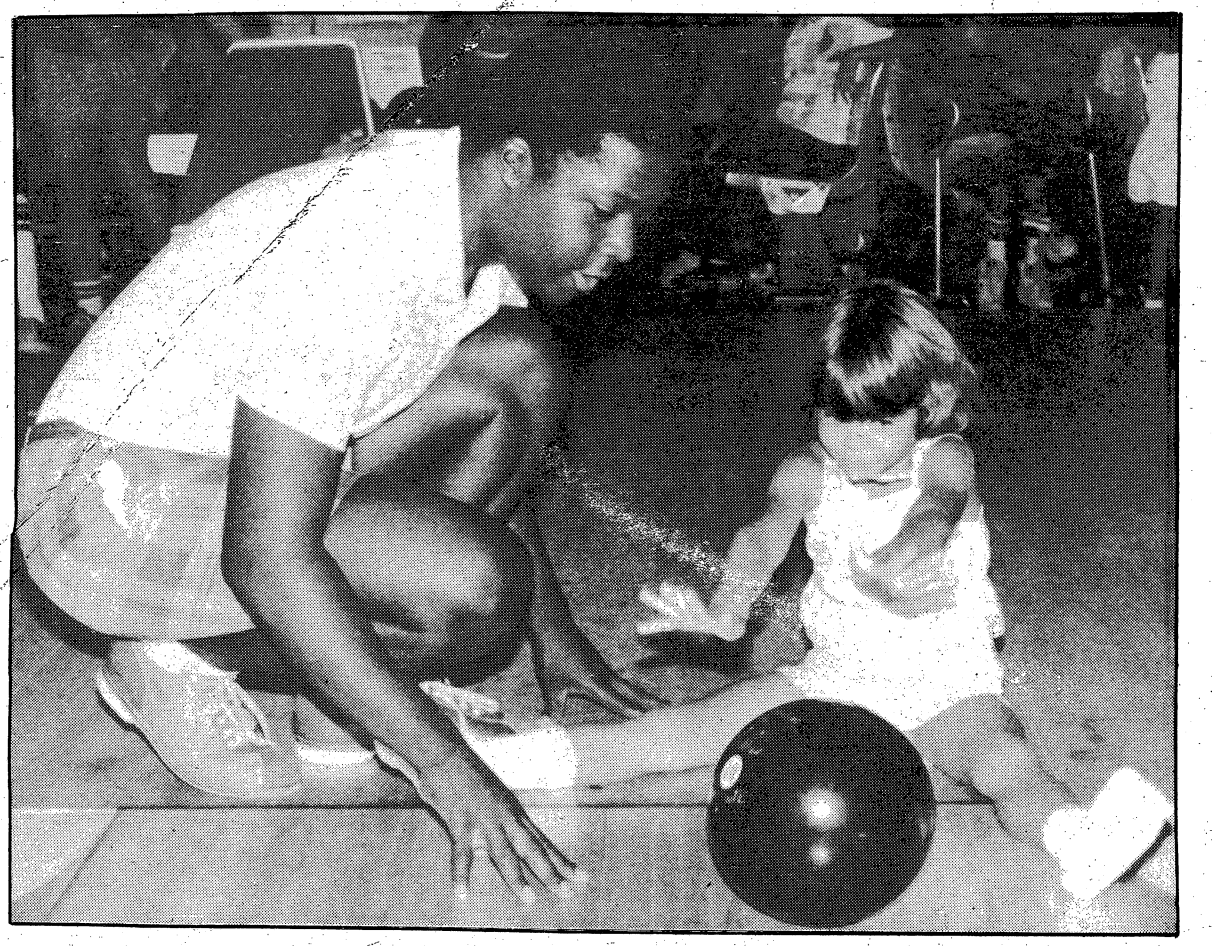
"Our goal at Camp Smiley is to mainstream these kids into regular society and life. It's a confidence builder. We show them they can be just as normal as anyone else, regardless of their handicap," said camp director Mitchell Chason.



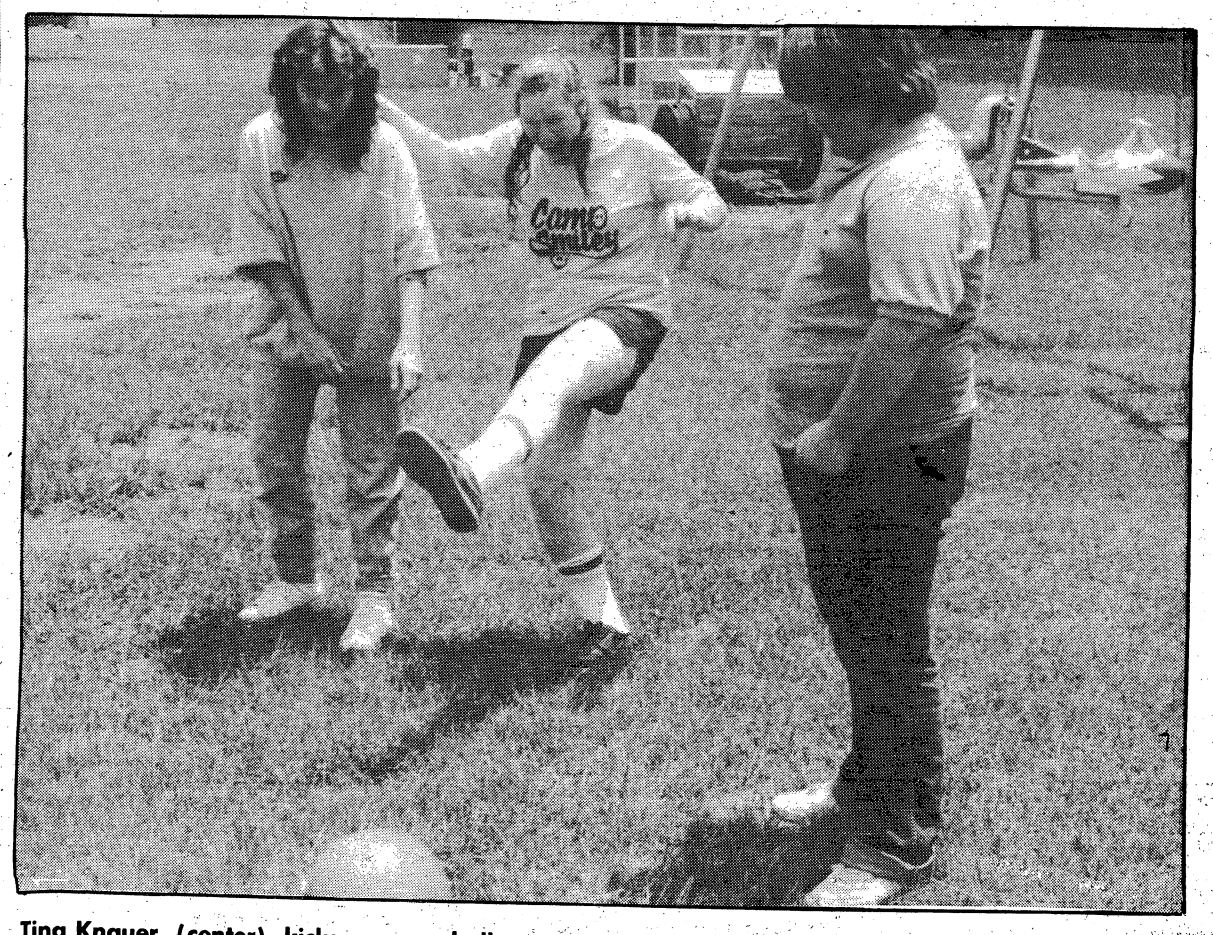
A Camp Smiley day starts at 10 a.m. and goes to 2 p.m., Monday through Friday. Running four sessions of two weeks each, Chason depends upon volunteer counselors from the ACS Volunteers Program to counsel and guide the children in their activities.

"Without our volunteers, this camp couldn't run. Our co-director, Carol Graham, really holds things together for us. Our medical support is supplied by the 34th Medical Battalion and our van drivers, SFC Robert Miller and Sgt. Tony Costin, come from the 10th Mountain Division and get us where we need to go. All of these volunteers are great," Chason said.

Activities at Camp Smiley include bowling, horseback riding, arts and crafts, swimming, miniature golf, tours of Kinnett's Dairy and the National Infantry Museum and a Fire Department demonstration and puppet show.



As Camp Smiley counselor Bill Inman looks on, Elisha Broyles apprehensively begins a Shetland pony ride.



Camp Smiley camper Roxanna Sanchez, counselor, Angel McCabe, 13, ensures she Counselor John Gibson, 16, predicts a strike as bowler Rhonda Hiatt, 6, sends the ball down the lane.

Tina Knauer, (center), kicks a soccer ball as counselors Pamela Hancock, (l), and Ben Overby offer encouragement.

Spiritual

God's love teaches us to be unselfish

by William Laigaie
10th Mountain Division chaplain

Have you heard about the dark side of love? Perhaps you've even experienced it.

The act of love can be defined as a giving of self, attention, and regard for some person or thing.

However, when the sole object of love is the self, love is turned into a manipulation of people and things for the purpose of self-promotion or self-gratification.

This is the dark side of love, where a person has love for himself or herself to the harm, neglect and at the cost of others.

Not that self-love is wrong in and of itself, but when it becomes the overall controlling purpose of our lives it can crowd out or go against what God wants us to do.

On the other hand, the basic motivation for the attitude and act of love is the imitation of God. That is, to imitate or copy God's love for people and return it to God and turn it towards other individuals.

Then love becomes selfless and not selfish. Then love becomes light and not darkness and demonstrates God's will for man.

Jesus, quoting the law of Moses, called love for God and love for people the greatest commandments of all.

In the story of the Good Samaritan, Jesus taught that my neighbor is one who has a need, whose need I know about and whose need I am able to meet.

Love is an attitude, a chosen attitude which leads to action. Love is an action which leads to feelings and emotions.

Love is a choice, the outworking of your mind, with benefits and consequences. Who or what you love tells what's on your mind. One might say it like this: how you behave is how you believe.

Let's avoid the dark side of love and let love be light, showing forth God's will for people.

Casualty officers, NCOs help in time of need

By Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

Capt. Sally Bock remembers hearing the first radio report of the Gander, Newfoundland, plane crash that killed 248 soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division. It was tragic news, certainly, but hundreds of miles away at Fort Meade, Md., it seemed too remote to have a direct personal impact.

Early the next morning, Bock was transformed from a distant sympathizer to a friend and adviser of a grieving 18-year-old widow and a middle aged couple who had just lost their only son.

She was appointed a casualty assistance officer, a duty shared by more than 2,000 service members each year.

Every time a member of the armed forces is killed or reported missing, a uniformed officer or senior non-commissioned officer is sent to notify the next-of-kin.

This notifier or another service representative then works with the family members to ensure that their needs — physical, financial and emotional — are met. They help families:

- make funeral arrangements;
- arrange transportation to the burial ceremonies;
- contact a chaplain or counselor if one is desired; and
- file claims for Serviceman's Group Life Insurance, commercial life insurance, Veterans Administration and Social Security benefits, and a myriad of other benefits to which they might be entitled.

"And sometimes," said Navy Lt. Cmdr. Kay L. Polo, a two-time casualty assistance officer, "you simply sit there and listen and hand them tissues as they cry."

The casualty assistance representative fills a vital role, bringing sympathy to the victim's family, assistance and encouragement as its members adjust to their new circumstances, and a demonstration of the military's interest in their well-being.

"All of us are members of the armed forces family, Polo said. "This is one way we take care of that family."

It's an important duty that takes precedence over any other job a service member might have.

Yet in most cases, the men and women appointed as casualty assistance officers have limited preparation for the job. They rarely know the victim or family, and in most cases they've never had the duty before.

Speed is the first consideration; the services want to notify the family in person before they learn of the death from another source.

"We want to get to them before they see it on television or read it in the newspaper," explained Lt. Col. Royce Halstead, deputy chief for Air Force casualty matters.

Old soldiers start again as trainees at Benning

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Basic infantry training in the summer: One Station Unit Training companies filled with teenage boys trying to become men. But at Fort Benning not all of these new soldiers are so young. Company E, 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade has a number of men with prior service from all branches of the armed forces, men who are starting over from the bottom.

These men have divergent backgrounds. Some have finished college, others hold high school diplomas. Some are married, some single. All, however, have one thing in common: they chose to enlist in the Army and come into the infantry. Why?

"I was bored with civilian life. I wanted a change of pace and a change in my lifestyle," PFC Jimmy Ross said.

Ross is the old man of Company E. He is 35-years old amid hundreds of inexperienced, awe-struck teenagers coming into the Army for the first time.

According to Ross' company commander, the men call Ross "Pops." He knows the ropes, knows what to expect. He first went through basic training at age 19, 16 years ago. Like many his age at the time, he was put into the infantry and sent to Vietnam with the 25th Division initially and then the Americal.

"I liked the infantry before and decided to get back in it. I'm polishing my skills but most of this training is a rehash for me. The classes and field problems are not really that difficult. Road marching is kind of rough," Ross said, whose assignment after finishing one station unit training is, at 35 years of age, Airborne School and then to a Ranger battalion.

Age doesn't seem to be an inhibiting factor with these veterans. If anything is an inhibitor to them it is their current status as trainees versus their former status. Most were non-commissioned officers their first hitch and were treated accordingly. Now they are infantry trainees, treated exactly like the 18-year old privates serving their first tour of duty.

PFC Michael Ewing is 24-years old. He served three years in the Navy as a hull technician. After separating from the Navy in 1984, he served two years in the Naval Reserve. He came into the Army because he wants to be a Ranger. He has strong feelings about his current status and treatment.

"They treat us like trainees. I guess they have to do that and we have no choice but to go with the program. Because we are prior service we do get respect when we're not with the whole company. That helps, to be recognized for your former status and knowledge," Ewing said, "but it is still tough being treated like a trainee."

"We're obviously more mature that the other trainees. We know what has to be done. I think all of us hold back sometimes when we know what the answer to a problem is. We want to take action but the drill sergeants run the show. It gets frustrating sometimes," said SP4 Thomas Turner, a 4-year Army veteran who came back in to be an airborne infantryman.

Pvt. 2 Kelly Considine, an Air Force veteran, is married and has two children. Starting all over again as a private and in an entirely new career didn't seem to present any major problems for Considine.

"My wife is a registered nurse. She has a job in Augusta, Ga. She was all for me coming back into the Army. We were both working in the oil fields in Oklahoma, making good money, when the bottom dropped out of oil. We were both laid off so I helped put my wife through nursing school. Now, she's supportive of me while I get started in the Army. I came into the Army because they offer more than the other services. I want to be an airborne infantryman in the 82nd Airborne Division, improve my education and have a career. The Army offered me what I wanted," Considine said.

Another married soldier with children beginning again in the Army is a 25-year old Navy veteran, SP4 Dwayne Phelps.

"I spent four years in the Navy as a gunner's mate technician and got out. I looked at what the other services had to offer and chose the Army for the training they offered. I want to ultimately go to Delta Force. I'm picking up a lot of skills here. You know, combat drills, weapons training. My wife didn't mind me coming into the Army. She had no reser-
