Soldiers assigned to Bradley Fighting Vehicles need not worry about exposure to the halon gas contained in the vehicle's fire suppression system as long as they heed operating procedures outlined in the vehicle's operator's manual.

The Bradley operator's manual contains this warning: "Prolonged exposure to halon could make you dizzy. Halon can irritate eyes and throat. After a halon discharge, open hatch covers and turn on vent fans or get all soldiers out of the vehicle within five minutes. "It may not be practical to open the hatch in a battlefield situation, but there is really very little chance that halon concentrations inside the vehicle will become dangerous, even with it closed," said Lt. Col. Hugh McAlear of the Army Surgeon General's Office.

Soldiers will be exposed to only about 2 percent halon for about two minutes, as long as the fans are running, McAlear said. The National Fire Protection Association considers exposure to 7 percent halon for 15 minutes acceptable. Individuals who are exposed to much higher concentrations for much longer periods of time may experience dizziness, impaired coordination and disturbance in cardiac rhythm. However, halon exposure in the Bradley is well within recommended concentrations and exposure times, said McAlear.

There has also been some concern by soldiers about the safety of breathing halon by-products, (hydrogen fluoride and hydrogen bromide) which are produced when halon reacts with a fire, said McAlear. Although high concentrations of these materials may form in the event of a fire, the vent fans will clear the Bradley within a few minutes, he said. With vent fans on, soldiers may still experience temporary irritation from breathing halon by-products, but no permanent injury.

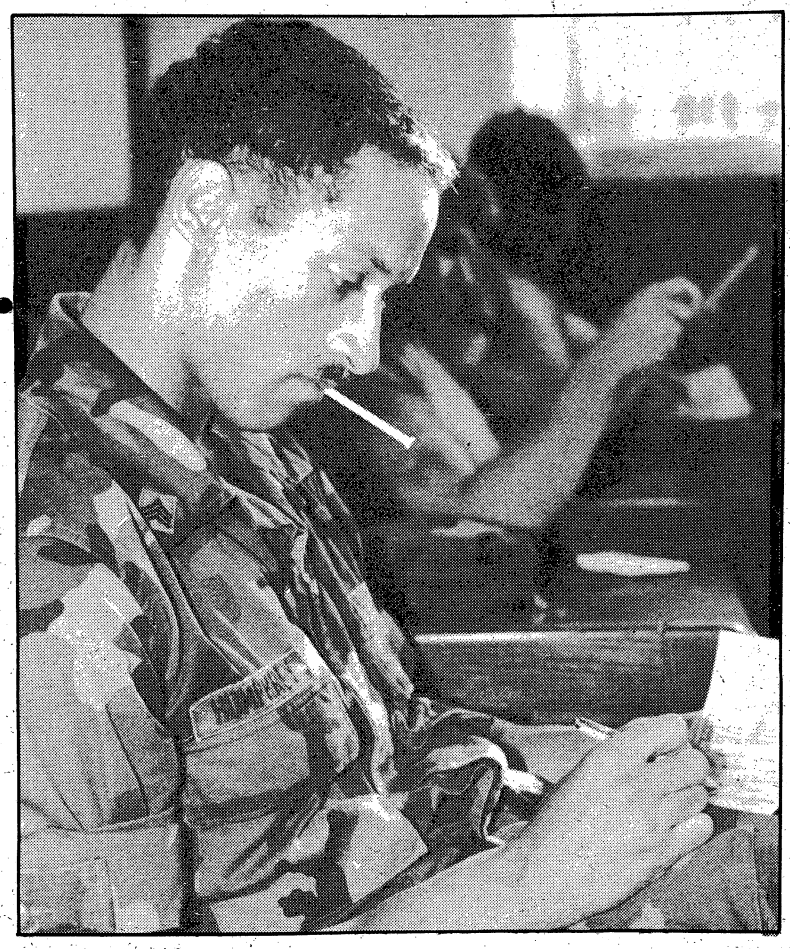
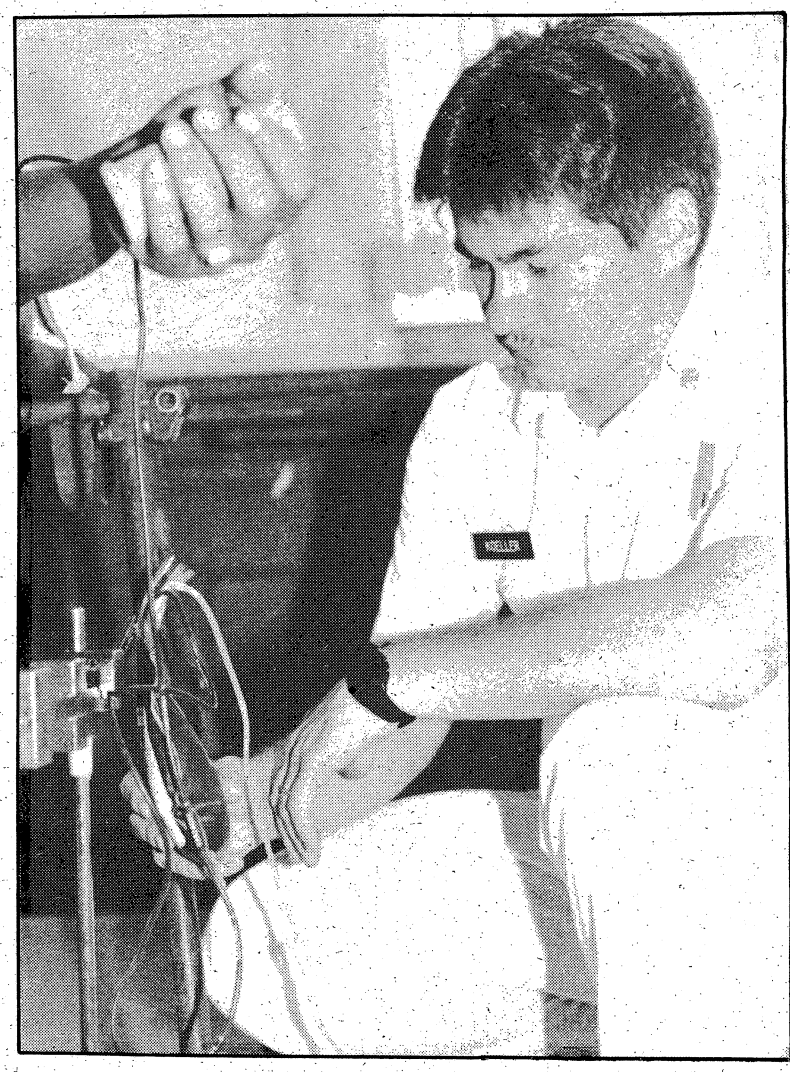
Blood donor team heads to engineers for blood donations



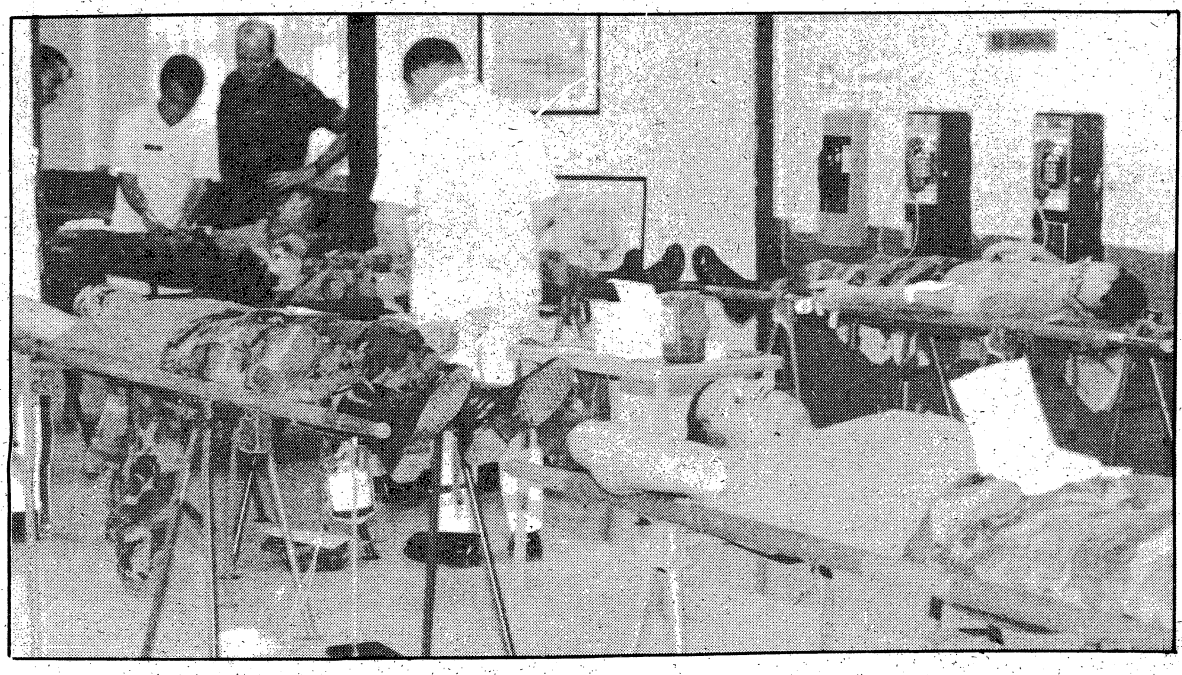
Story and photos
by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Martin Army Community Hospital's Blood Donor team found itself at the doors of the 36th Engineer Group Wednesday, looking for donors.



"Each major unit on post is asked to donate blood two months out of each year. We usually travel to the unit on Wednesdays during their scheduled months and collect it," said Maj. James B. Hawkins, laboratory manager of MACH.

Hawkins said a pint of blood meets many needs for blood products. It is used to obtain packed red blood cells and fresh frozen plasma. "We also make a platelet concentrate for cancer patients," he said.



The program will soon expand its collection days."The blood platelets only last five days so we're going to start collecting blood at the hospital for anyone who wishes to donate," Hawkins said.

Sgt. Cecil Humphrey's temperature is taken as he fills out the blood donor application.

SP4 Rodney Koeller checks the blood as it flows into a bag.

The dayroom of Company B 43rd Engineers, is filled with blood donors.

A small amount of a donor's blood is tested prior to donation.

Keep cars cool in hot weather

USAIC Public Affairs Office

July and August can be unhappy months for many cars. All you have to do is drive near a big city when the sun is bright and the traffic slow. You'll see a lot of cars with their hoods up and engines steaming! The owners steam, too, because it can mean expensive repairs.

If your engine has overheated that severely, there's a good chance that the cylinders or cam shafts have been scored, bearings badly worn . . . expensive stuff with today's engines! (Most times, this is not the case. There are a few simple things you can do to prevent your car from overheating.)

Here are some hot weather tips that can help . . .

- Be sure your radiator is checked and contains the proper coolant. Don't just add water . . . pure water boils at a lower temperature than water mixed with anti-freeze (ethylene glycol). If you top off the radiator, be sure to use a 50/50 mix of water and anti-freeze to keep that boiling point as high as possible and carry a gallon or two in the trunk (just in case).
- Blast bugs off the radiator with a garden hose (a stiff stream of water). Clean them out with a stiff bristled brush. Proper air flow for your radiator not only keeps your engine cool but also cools the transmission oil.
- Be sure the transmission oil is at the proper level. If it's a brown color and smells burnt, change it. Have the bands in your automatic transmission adjusted before you go on any long trips. The weight of a trailer could be just enough to cause the bands to slip and leave you stranded on your vacation.
- Inspect fan belts to check if they are glazed or cracked. If a belt breaks or slips badly on a hot day, your coolant won't circulate properly and you are sure to overheat. Your battery and air conditioner will suffer too. While you're at it, inspect the hoses. Are they cracked or mushy? If you have any doubt, replace the belts and hose before you start. They always fail at the worst possible times, so replace them before the trouble starts!
- Turn off air conditioning if the engine is overheating. Air conditioning puts a big load on your cooling system.
- Be careful! Wait until the engine cools to take the radiator cap off. The radiator is full of super heated water under pressure. It will explode in your face and give you a nasty burn if you try to take the cap off too soon.
- Change your oil regularly. You should start thinking about oil changes every 3,000 miles no matter what your car manual says. As engine oil gets dirty, it losses lubricating power; high friction means a hot engine. Change your oil before you go on a long trip . . . it's cheap insurance for your engine. Always use a high quality oil (in the summertime, the higher viscosity grades are better).

Have a happy summer and enjoy your vacation!

Intruders arrest Outlaws in softball championship

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Intruders have once again invaded the Fort Benning Women's Softball Division as they arrested the Outlaws to claim the 1986 Women's Softball Championship.

In a 4-1 victory over the Outlaws, the Intruders won their sixth consecutive championship title.

Winning is a definite part of the Intruder attack. They have gone two seasons or 44 games without defeat.

The 44th win would be the most precious, as the Intruder coach of six years, Albert McGruder, announced his retirement.

"It's been a great season and the team has been good to me throughout the years, but this will be my last season as coach of the softball team," said McGruder in acceptance of the championship trophy.

The championship matchup opened with Tweet Taylor, Intruder-left fielder, hitting a stand-up triple. The first inning's only run was scored by Taylor, when Dorcel Johnson slipped a single between short and second. The Intruders left two runners on base finishing the first innings.

The Outlaws seemed ready to answer the challenge when Carolyn Glee topped the batting order to tap one over second base and end up on third base.

But the Intruders cut off the run by subduing the next three Outlaws at bat.

The Outlaws' Selinda Altomore pulled their only run in the second inning, but threatened with runners Janice Johnson and Andrea Boynton on second and third.

The game remained tied at 1-1 throughout the next four innings, with the defensive play of both teams pinning runners at first or second but never advancing to home plate.

The tension of the championship game was reflected in the eight joint errors of the Intruder/Outlaw matchup.

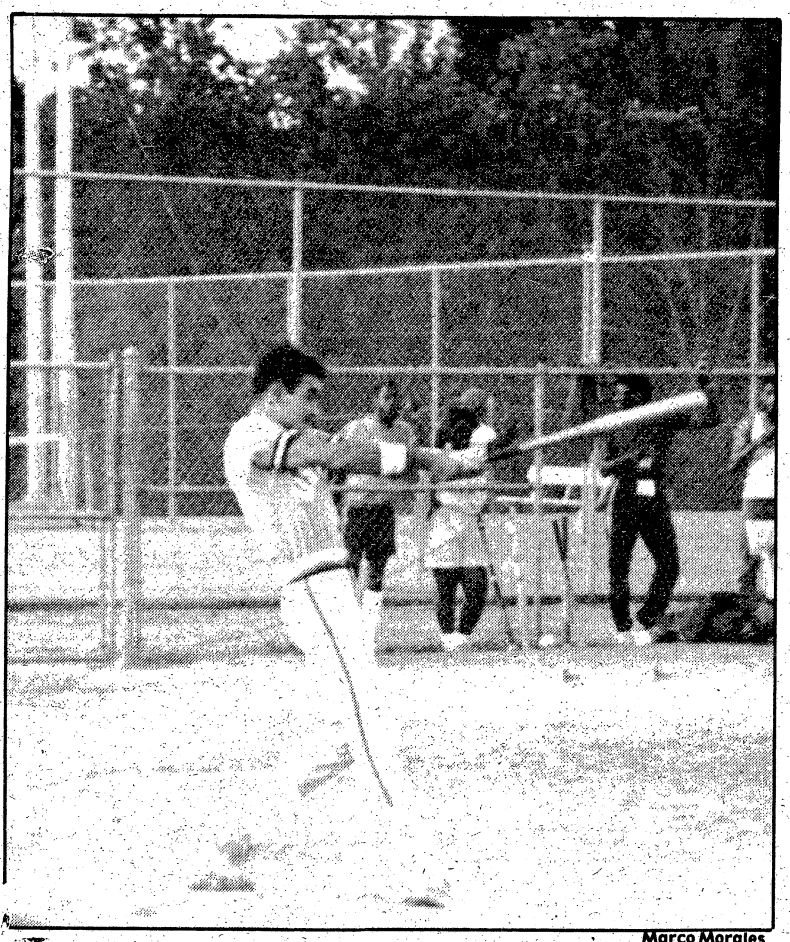
The errors in the seventh inning accounted for the Intruders next three unanswered runs.

Dorcel Johnson cleared second and advanced to third on a Linda Jackson single, to break the tie.

Jackson would also score on a wild throw to third base after Martha Shumpert leveled a standup double.

Shumpert hit home plate for the games final run when Sandy Moore slipped a double along the third base line.

The Intruders held onto their famed title in the true form of undisputed champions.



"We had the power and we found some unexpected speed," said McGruder.The fact that Michele Seggler and Annette King, short stop and second base, could exchange positions without hurting our defensive play contributed to our power."

Missing only one game this season, pitcher Sandy Moore kept constant control of the game.

"We support each other, said Kathy Hofacker, and knew we had to hit on the ball to win."

The coach revealed his winning formula.

"We have players dedicated to the game, those whose love of the game makes them willing to practice and willing to take my abuse."

School of Americas wins 36th Engineer championship

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas

"A superb offense and excellent defense" is what coach Jose Recio said as he led the School of the Americas' softball team to the 36th Engineer Group League Championship Aug. 23.

USARSA finished its winning season at 14-4 in a final game defeating the 533rd Transportation Company 4-1.

Veteran pitcher Angel Ortiz gave up a mere nine hits and allowed one run to frustrated opponents of the 533rd.

USARSA's Gilberto Martinez finished the game with an impressive .674 batting average and scored the final run.

Seven teams competed this season in the 36th Engineer Group League.

The 20-man USARSA team will now compete in Fort Benning's Championship Softball Tournament scheduled to begin Aug. 18.

Make plans to join fall tennis league

The fall season of the Columbus U.S. Tennis Association Volvo Tennis League begins Sept. 13. The league, which is designed for the recreational player, both adult men and women, was highly successful in the spring, with 26 teams participating, including five from Fort Benning.

The league is run using the team tennis concept with matches held throughout the Fort Benning and Columbus area against players with the same level of play. The league offers an excellent opportunity to sharpen one's tennis skills and to socialize with many interesting people from the local community. For more details and to sign up, call Betsy Hayden at 687-4516, or visit the Officers' Club Tennis Courts.

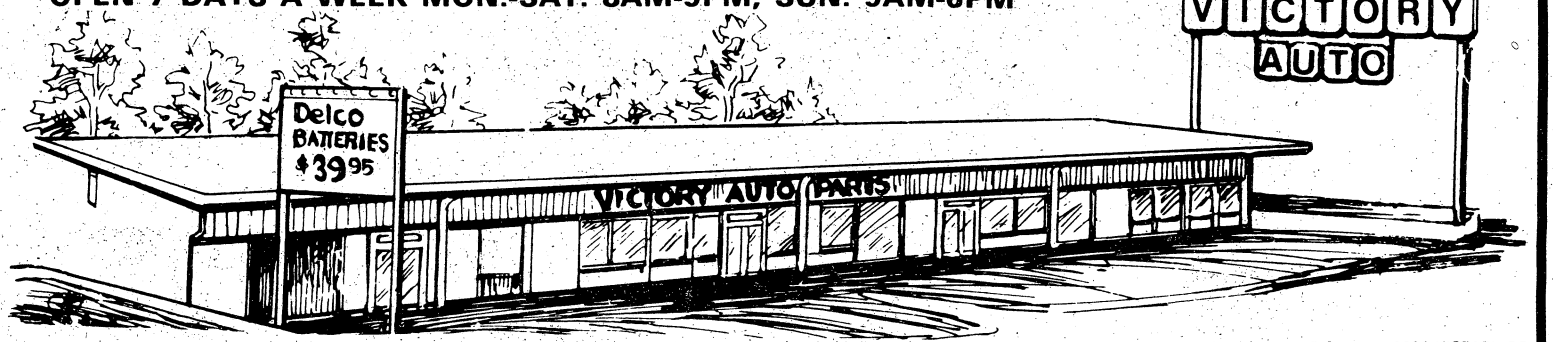
vations whatsoever. She works and her and our children are in New York while I finish my training. The training isn't really tough, you just have to cope with it. I'll tell you this, though: in Navy boot camp there wasn't any road marches, not as many pushups and definitely not as much yelling," said Phelps, grinning.

Most of these veterans spent from one to 11 years as civilians before coming into the Army. They matured, got used to thinking for themselves and made their own decisions. Now, they're told by drill sergeants what time to get up, when to eat, speak, talk or even go to the bathroom.



"I've been out for 11 years. Coming back in after being my own boss as a civilian definitely involves a transition. Hell, I'm older than a lot of the drill sergeants. We're older and kind of set in our ways. Getting back into military discipline and bearing is tough. It has been kind of a shock. Just yesterday I ran past a captain without saluting. He dressed me down just as he should have," said PFC Charles Dennis, a 31-year-old Army veteran who worked as clerk his first enlistment in the early '70's.

All of these prior service soldiers agreed that coming back into the Army was overall, a decision none regretted. The majority of them enlisted for duty in a Ranger battalion, looking for tough, disciplined, hard-core service.

Again, one wonders why?

"Most of us were bored with civilian life. The reason most of us asked for Ranger battalion duty when we came back in was because we'll get to wear a beret," yelled one Marine veterans," they don't have berets in the Marine Corps."

Did You Know That Last Year's U.S. Savings Bonds Average Rate Exceeded 9%?

Many people all over America are surprised when they hear what U.S. Savings Bonds have to offer.

For starters, Savings Bonds give you market-based interest rates—like the money markets—plus the security of a guaranteed return. This means you can earn a lot more than the guaranteed minimum rate of 7½%, but never less! To earn the higher rates, just hold your Bonds for five years or longer.

Here's more surprising news—the interest you earn from Savings Bonds is free from state and local income taxes. And you don't have to pay federal taxes on the interest earned until you cash in your Bonds.

Savings Bonds are easy to buy, too. They cost as little as $25 and can be purchased at most banks and savings and loans. Or through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.

All of these advantages are making Savings Bonds an increasingly popular investment. Last year, sales of U.S. Savings Bonds were up nearly 30%!

With all that Savings Bonds have to offer, it's no surprise they're one of the best investments in America. For the current rate, just call toll-free 1-800-US-BONDS.

U.S. SAVINGS BONDS Paying Better Than Ever

Market-based rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least five years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn market-based rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than five years earn lower rates.

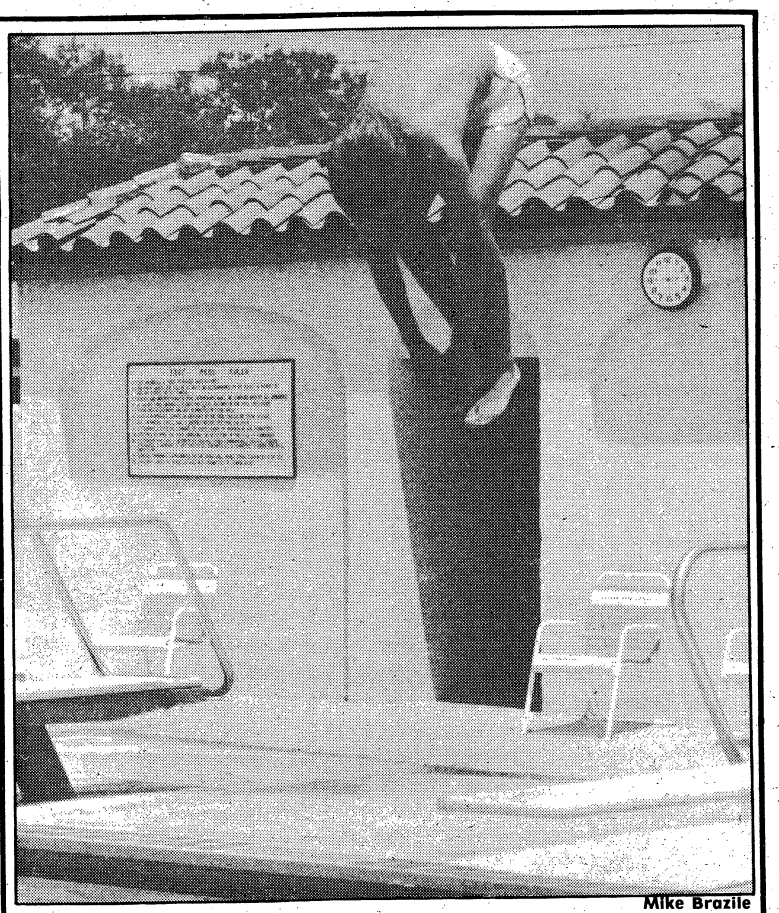
Post package stores announce recall of contaminated rum

Contaminated rum sold at post package stores could put customers in bad "spirits," officials say.

The contaminated bottles are Bacardi Silver Label, 1.75 liters, which were sold on and after July 17.

The contamination was discovered by customers, several of whom returned their purchases after finding black particles floating in the liquor.

Sixty-six bottles are still unaccounted for, and officials ask that customers who purchased the rum return it to any post package store.



Officials don't know if the contaminant poses a health problem.

New fitness badge approved for wear

Soldiers scoring 290 or higher on the Army's Physical Readiness Test taken after Oct. 1 will be authorized to wear a new physical fitness badge on their organizational physical fitness uniform or on their own physical fitness clothing.

Unit commanders will be authorized to award the embroidered patch to soldiers who score 290 or higher and meet the weight standard in Army Regulation 600-9. Soldiers must then continue to achieve the minimum passing score on all future fitness tests as well as meet the weight standards in order to continue wearing the badge.

The new badge is expected to be available in military clothing sales stores in October.

School of the Americas on post permanently

by Mike Brazile and Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The office of Georgia's Representative Richard Ray announced Wednesday that the U.S. Army School of the Americas would be permanently sited at Fort Benning. The announcement followed a recent decision by Congress on funding for the school.

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., post commander, praised the decision made by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh on the siting of the school at Fort Benning.

"I think this is a great victory for Fort Benning. We have freedoms that they (foreign countries) see and that they would like to aspire to obtain. There is no other installation or community which could accomodate the school as well as we could. In my judgment, this was the right decision for our country and hemisphere," he said.

Burba said that funding would now be forthcoming for much needed construction to make USARSA students more comfortable and to make the headquarters building more efficient.

The School of the America's commander Col. Miguel A. Garcia, was also pleased about the Secretary of the Army's decision.

"I am delighted that this decision came about so quickly after the funding problems for the school were resolved. Now we can move forward on construction that our school has needed to properly support Latin American students," Garcia said.

Garcia said plans call for Building 35 to be completely renovated for the exclusive use of USARSA. New buildings will be constructed for Fort Benning personnel currently working in Building 35 who are not connected with the School of the Americas.

USARSA provides instruction to officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers from 13 Latin American countries, teaching students everything from tactics to military medicine. Since the school's inception at Fort Gulick Panama in 1947, USARSA has graduated over 46,000 soldiers from 22 different countries.

Ellis nominated for promotion to brigadier general

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Col. James R. Ellis has been nominated for promotion to brigadier general.

Ellis was nominated by the President of the United States for the promotion, pending confirmation by the Senate.

Ellis, who has been Benning's Chief of Staff since July 1985, began his military career in 1955 after enlisting in the Army from the State of Alabama.

The colonel was commissioned in the infantry after graduating from the U.S. Military Academy in 1962.

Ellis served as a platoon leader, aide-de-camp and company commander with the 82nd Airborne Division; as a company commander and assistant G-3 in the 1st Infantry Division in Vietnam; as an advisor in the Delta Region; as an assistant professor of economics and international relations at West Point; as battalion executive officer and deputy chief of staff of the 7th Infantry Infantry Division; as a battalion commander at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.; as staff officer in the office of the Army Chief of Staff, and in the office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs.

He served two tours in Vietnam and one in the Dominican Republic.

In addition to his bachelor of science degree from the military academy, Ellis also holds a master's degree in public and international affairs from Princeton University.

His military schooling includes the Infantry Officer Basic Course, Armor Officer Advanced Course, Armed Forces Staff College and the National War College.

In June 1983, Ellis took command of the U.S. Army Infantry Training Group at Fort Benning, which later was reorganized as the 29th Infantry Regiment, where he served until becoming chief of staff.

His awards and decorations include the Silver Star, Defense Superior Service Medal, Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star with two oak leaf clusters, the AirMedal, the Army Commendation Medal with two oak leaf clusters, the Combat and Expert Infantryman's Badges, the Ranger tab, master parachutist's wings, the Department of the Army General Staff Identification Badge and the Office of the Secretary of Defense Identification Badge.

Ellis and his wife Carol, have two children: Tracy, 22, and Kevin, 17.

Love of family, integrity, truth important values in our society

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

As individuals, we are only as good as the values we choose to live by and uphold.

People who live by their values always had a positive effect on my life. I can remember one teacher who valued learning, and she taught me the joy of learning for its own sake.

A former boss valued his integrity above all things. If he gave his word, you could count on it. Because he lived this, he was widely respected by everyone who knew him.

One man I admired greatly was a captain who was getting out of the Army because he had not made the cut for promotion to major. Many people would have been bitter and angry about it, but if he felt it, it never showed.

He served out his remaining commitment to the Army and made plans to start a new career. And he continued to give the Army the best he had to give.

He did it because it was the right thing to do, to give a full day's work for a full day's pay. It was a case where he had been "wronged" by any definition of the term, but he refused to be vengeful about it.

The best supervisor I ever had was a man who truly cared for his employees. He cherished his family as the most important part of his life, and treated his workers as a kind of extended family.

Of course, the mission always came first, but he understood when a worker had to take off to go to a child's school program or take a sick child to the doctor.

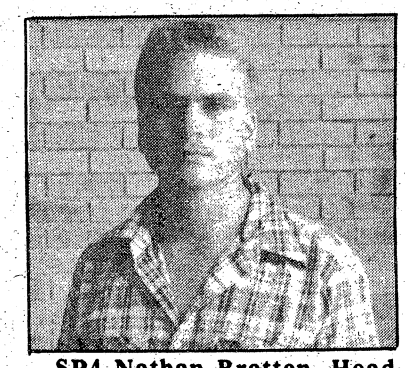
These people were all "successes" in the best sense of the word. They were not millionaires, they weren't at the top in their fields, they didn't win praises and awards from high and low.

But they lived by what they believed was right and good, and they were happy within themselves. They could sleep easy at night, knowing they had lived honorably that day.

One of my favorite Army mottos is "death before dishonor." I think it was meant to teach soldiers not to be cowardly in battle, but in peacetime it still applies.

While we don't hear of someone committing suicide because they behaved in a less than honorable way, it's a good goal to aim for because it recognizes the importance of living a life of honesty and with integrity.

Some of the most unhappy people I have seen are those who let pettiness and jealousy consume their lives. They worry that someone else will make rank before they do, or are simply envious of a person's possessions.

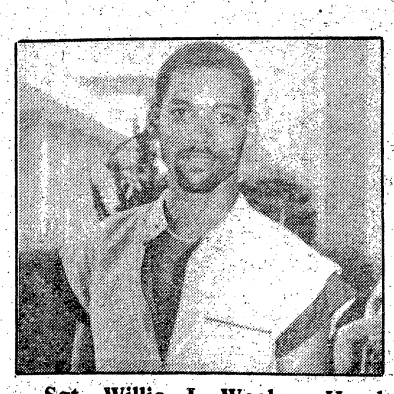


It makes me angry sometimes having to deal with such people, because they are so self-centered they can't see beyond themselves and have no respect for the rights of others.

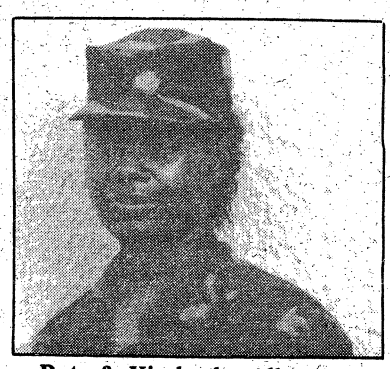
Certainly it is a competitive world we live in, but the best way to compete is to do the best job you can and let your accomplishments stand for themselves.

So maybe you won't get named citizen of the day and handed a key to the city. You will have the personal satisfaction of knowing you gave your best.

Various voices



What are some of your basic values and where were they instilled?



SP4 Nathan Bratton, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade"During these years in the military, I've learned to get along with people. So, courtesy would have to be considered one of my basic values."

Cadet Amy M. Wheeler, D Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry"My concerns are of the basic patriotic values of family, home and country. I am from the mid-west where the church, family and schools still finds these values prevalent."

Sgt. Willie J. Wooley, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th Battalion, 6th Mechanized Infantry"My values center around my family and career. The care and welfare of my family is the most pressing concern. To properly administer to the needs of the family I must also be concerned with my career."

Pvt. 2 Kimberly Allen, 608th Ordinance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group"I was raised with the basic values of loyalty, especially to family and friends. Over the years, I've developed economic values which makes my career one of my primary concerns."

Op-Ed

Two roads to general's stars

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

You hear it all the time at Fort Benning — if you want a successful career as an officer in the Army, don't get stuck as a commander at the Army Training Center, the 29th Infantry Regiment or in the 197th Infantry Brigade. It's the career kiss of death.

A brigadier generals' promotion list released Wednesday dispels this notion at a resounding double-time.

Out of 57 Army colonels on the list, six of them served as commanders at Fort Benning.

Col. James Ellis, currently the post chief of staff, served as the commander of Benning's Infantry Training Group, later converted to the 29th Infantry Regiment.

Col. James A. Musselman, commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade before Col. William Hartzog took command, is the assistant chief of staff and G-3 (operations) for the Third Army and soon to be a general officer.

A former 2nd Infantry Training Brigade commander, Col. Craig A. Hagan, is also slated to wear stars and is presently serving with Training and Doctrine Command.

Col. Edison E. Scholes, the deputy chief of staff for Third Army, was the commander of the 1st Infantry Training Brigade and made the "B.G.'s" list.

Sidney Shachnow, a colonel in the 1st Special Operations Command (Airborne), will pin on brigadier general's stars. He formerly served at Benning as both the commander of the Infantry Training Group and later as commander of the Army Training Center.

The executive to the deputy chief of staff for personnel, Col. Robert L. Ord III, commanded an Army basic training battalion at Fort Benning.

As an Army officer goes up the pyramid of rank, the chances for promotion get smaller and smaller as the slots at higher levels become fewer and fewer. The myth that an officer has to serve his or her's platoon leader, company commander, battalion commander and brigade commander time in Army combat TO&E units is patently false.

The path to higher command in the Army doesn't necessairily consist of just one route, requiring officers to serve in units considered "high speed," such as the Rangers or airborne and air assault commands.

If you don't believe doing a good job as a commander in a unit at Fort Benning such as the Army Training Center, 29th Infantry Regiment or 197th Infantry Brigade won't do your career a lot of good, just ask six certain colonels soon to be brigadier generals.

They'll have a different story to tell you.

Reader feels Army civilians, soldiers equally important

Dear Editor:

I am writing in reference to the "Op Ed" written by Mike Brazile and included in the July 25 issue of the Bayonet, in which he addresses the need for civilian employees to treat soldiers with respect and to render them prompt service.

Brazile is absolutely correct in stating this, but I question the attitudes underlying his editorial.

He states that "without soldiers, Department of Army civilians ain't got a job, Jack, no mission, no one to support."

Certainly there is some truth to this statement, but he should also realize that without Department of Army civilians, soldiers "ain't got no buildings, supplies or ammunition, Jack," and as a result, those same soldiers would not be very effective in dealing with an enemy.

The point is that civilians and soldiers alike are here to accomplish the same mission together; to protect our country from all enemies, foreign and domestic.

There are no second-class citizens among soldiers and civilians.

New defense strategy needed for U.S. based on three elements

American Forces Press Service

Many concepts behind U.S. defense plans, if they're to be responsive to today's world situation, need to go the way of hula hoops and love beads.

Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger said these concepts, drafted in the 1950s and early 1960s when the United States was in a position of unquestioned military superiority, don't address today's world situation.

Pointing specifically to the rise of the Soviet Union as a military superpower, Weinberger recently called for a review of U.S. defense strategy.

The defense strategy for the 1990s, he said, must consist of three basic elements:

- the Strategic Defense Initiative and nuclear deterrence;
- uses of military force and conventional deterrence; and
- arms reduction and control.

Weinberger called the Strategic Defense Initiative research program this administration's boldest departure from the dogmas of the past.

SDI, he said, represents a radical rejection of he concept of mutual assured destruction. This concept is based on the theory that because both the United States and the Soviet Union have the capability to destroy one another's society, neither can contemplate war.

Weinberger said SDI will offer a safer alternative to his "mutual suicide pact."

According to the doctrines developed in the 1950s and early 1960s, limited war was essentially a diplomatic instrument, a tool for bargaining with the enemy.

However, the Reagan administration's policy is to discourage acts of aggression by making it clear that U.S. troops will be committed in whatever force is necessary to respond to a threat.

"By preventing the attack that would make necessary an American commitment of troops in response, we achieve our objective without war," Weinberger said. "Peace through strength is more than a motto — it is a fact."

The third aspect of the defense strategy for the 1990s, Weinberger said calls for reducing and controlling nuclear arms — to assure that the defense of vital U.S. interests never requires the United States to fight a nuclear war.

What is our aim? Freedom and peace, the protection of our vital interests and those of our allies at the lowest possible risk of nuclear war, indeed, of any war.

Car accidents number one killer of soldiers

Safety Office

Did you know that the number one cause of soldier deaths each year is motor vehicle accidents? In fiscal year 1985, 43 percent of fatal privately owned vehicle accidents were alcohol related.

In the past five years, 1,341 U.S. Army soldiers have lost their lives in motor vehicle accidents.

That's equivalent to 260 every year, 21 every month, or five soldiers killed in traffic accidents every week. The number of soldiers killed in privately owned vehicle accidents for the first three months of FY 86 follows the all too familiar patterns of the past.

Forty-eight soldiers have been killed in 420 POV accidents. One of those killed during that time was a Fort Benning soldier. Since Jan. 1, 1986, six more Fort Benning soldiers have died in POV accidents.

Alcohol, speed and failure to use safety belts (or in the case of motorcyclists, helmets), continue to reappear as contributing factors in vehicle fatalities. Unfortunately, alcohol is being reported more often as a factor in accidents.

At Fort Benning in the last five years, 38 soldiers were killed in POV accidents. Alcohol was a factor in 53 percent of the accidents, versus the FY 85 percentage of 63 percent.

The typical Fort Benning accident victim is in his early 20s and in the pay grade of E4. He had been drinking, was speeding and was not wearing seatbelts. He either lost control of the vehicle, crossed the center line or ran off the road.

Driving while impaired by alcohol tends to occur most often after 10 p.m., on Fridays and Saturdays and in the summer and fall. This accident profile is compiled from accident reports, lab tests and police reports.

On July 5, 1986, at 11:59 p.m., a soldier driving a 1967 F-100 Ford pick-up travelling south on I-185, lost control, exited the left side of the roadway struck four guardrail poles and fell 40 feet to the railroad tracks below. The driver was thrown from the truck and killed, and two passengers were critically injured.

The driver was a 23-year-old PFC. The accident happened on the overpass of Cusseta Road, where there are warning signs and caution lights to reduce speed to 50 miles per hour. Factors in the accident were a blood alcohol content of 0.2 (0.1 legally intoxicated), speed (estimated at 65 m.p.h.) and no seatbelts.

The list of victims of traffic accidents continues to get longer and longer. Always drive defensively to keep your name off of this list of traffic fatalities.

Wife integral part of drill sergeant's success

SFC Sang Chin pins a Ranger Tab on his son Tom, 3, at Chin's graduation from Ranger School last week.

Story and photos
by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

She doesn't look like a woman of influence. She sits quietly, patiently listening to the questions as her husband tranlates into her native Korean tongue.

The small-framed woman talks softly. Her shoulder-length hair is curled neatly, reflecting the influence of the American styles.

Kun Sook Chin nods her head proudly and agrees that she had to play the duel role of mother and father when her husband SFC Sang Chin became a drill sergeant.

Her husband was recently named Fort Benning's Drill Sergeant of the Year and he acknowledges that without her help and support he never would have accomplished it.

"Everytime I accomplish something, I always give her half of the credit," Chin said.

If Chin's career is a reflection of the commited support of his wife, then she must have worked pretty hard.

Chin recently graduated from Ranger School where he was an honor graduate. While he was in school his wife was in Houston working with her sister, but returned in time to see her husband graduate.

This military family had its roots in Korea nine years ago and is the result of an arranged marriage.

"We met each other a couple of times and my father arranged the marriage. We liked each other but if we didn't, then we didn't have to agree to the marriage," said Mrs. Chin.

They were married and Chin brought his new wife to the United States.

It wasn't easy for Mrs. Chin to adjust."The hardest thing to overcome was the language barrier," she said. She adopted the finer American traditions while combining and hanging on to those of her native country. "There are two things I admire about the American women and that is that they are very active and they are very kind," said Mrs. Chin .

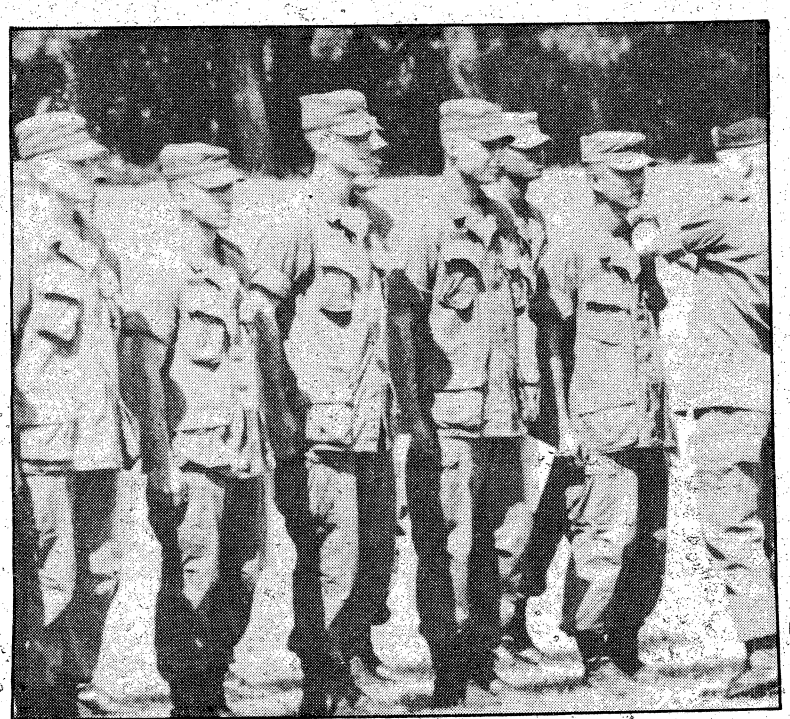
When she arrived at Fort Benning, Mrs. Chin didn't know how to operate a car or how to be the wife of a drill sergeant who is gone from the early morning hours until 9:30 p.m.

At first she was very dependant on her husband. Her lack of understanding of the English language made her shy and withdrawn.

Now, two years later, Mrs. Chin is the epitome of the tradional housewife and mother combined with the finest qualities of a military wife.

She drives her oldest child to school and takes care of all the shopping. "She has become very independant, when I was preparing for the board she would take the kids out so I could concentrate," her husband said proudly.

As she speaks her eyes reflect the love and respect she has for her husband. When asked of other ways she helped her husband's career, Mrs. Chin said, "One factor is to alleviate all the problems in the house so Sang won't have to worry about them. This way he can concentrate more on his soldiers."



She said she never tires of her role as homemaker, because she enjoys fulfilling her responsibilities and believes her role is every bit as important as her husbands. Chin is very careful to never take her for granted and if she feels that he is doing so she is quick to remind him.

Mrs. Chin finds time to support the Korean Church and sing in their choir. She actively tries to help Korean families new in the area.

She doesn't look like a woman of influence, but just ask Chin about her and watch his eyes light up. "If she is not here when I get home from work, I feel very lost and confused," he said.

The Chins' marriage shows what can be accomplished by a smooth working team. Their goals for the future are combined goals. She would like to do volunteer work once their sons, Tom, 3, and John, 6, are both in school, and Chin concentrates on saving for his sons' college education.

"We have a lot of trust for each other. We have been building that trust for a long time," she said. "In Korea trust is a more important word than love."

College cadets forego fun in sun, spend summer 'Rangering'

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Eight weeks and many blisters later the soldiers of Ranger Class 10-86 were proudly presented with the "Tab of Excellence."

Forty-two Reserve Officer Training Corps and West Point Cadets volunteered to attend the rigorous training. The soldiers chose to spend the summer climbing the mountains of Dahlonega and patrolling the swamps of Florida instead of splashing away on some beach like many students did this summer.

But this summer may have been the most memorable one for the cadets who finished the training.

They arrived at Fort Benning early to begin what is called cadet pre-ranger training. This training enabled them to get caught up on the military skills that their peers who came from Ranger battalions had been practicing.

"We did this in lieu of our advanced camp and only 42 out of 2,000 applicants were chosen," said Cadet Steven C. Spitze, a student from the University of Nevada.

The grueling training left the 28 cadets who finished, tired and 15 to 30 pounds lighter than they were eight weeks ago.

"I lost 20 pounds that expect to put it right back on. Being hungry helps create the stress needed for the training," Spitze said.

Leadership under stress is the primary mission of the Ranger class and the cadets certainly learned about stress.

"The training gives you a whole different viewpoint on eating, sleeping and all the "freebies" in life," said Cadet Harold I. Joyce, from the Worcester Polytech Institute.

"It sure gives you a whole new set of priorities," Spitze said.

The cadets learned more than ranger skills while in training.

"You learn more about a person's limitations," said Cadet Christopher Marinakis from Appalachian State.

"It makes you an expert in the art of bartering, for example a cracker worth two gums," Joyce said.

The cadets showed some regret for the selection of those passing the course and those failing.

"I didn't think it was real fair. Some really good guys don't make it. Then there are some who are helped a lot by their buddies," said Cadet Russell J. Lamarre, a West Pointer.

All the cadets agree that they are a different person from the ones they were when they began the class eight weeks ago.

"You have to be prepared to change. It's not a tough [illegible] school," Joyce said.

When asked if they ever considered quitting, the cadets said the thought did occur on numerous occasions.

"You think about quitting, but then you think about having to go up to the Ranger Instructor and tell him, then you always reconsider," Marinakis said.

The soldiers all agreed that they are glad when they completed the course.

"The course had enlisted, officers and cadets. Having these three groups made it a worthwhile experience," Joyce said.

Overall, they were pleased with their training and the caliber of the course.

All of the soldiers said that the course was worthwhile and were glad to have had the experience of attending Ranger School.

43rd Engineers improve Benning training facilities

43rd Engineer Battalion

Soldiers from Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Heavy) recently finished the second phase of construction at Roger Young Range (formerly Malone 19).

This phase of construction included the movement of a lister bag stand and range personnel building from another location, construction of an ammo storage building, construction of a meter high wall and berm, and upgrading the existing drainage.

During completion ceremonies held July 10th, Col. Gavin, Commander of the 29th Infantry Regiment thanked the engineer soldiers for their dedicated efforts and the quality of the work.

Each year thousands of infantry soldiers benefit from the opportunity of negotiating the live-fire infiltration course at Young Range.

Capt. Glen La Force is the second generation of his family to teach at the US Army Infantry School.

Infantry School's law instructor seasoned soldier, commander

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Thirty two years ago Captain Paul La Force was an instructor on the Bayonet Committee at Fort Benning. His son, Glen, a captain, is now the second La Force to teach at Benning but in a different capacity: as the law instructor for the Infantry School.

"I was born here when my father was an instructor in 1954. I've served for the past 2 1/2 years as a defense counsel at the post's Trial Defense Service office. I like the post and, since becoming the school's law instructor, I've really enjoyed teaching," said La Force.

The captain, before becoming a judge advocate general officer, was an infantryman. Commissioned in 1976 from the U.S. Military Academy, La Force served as a platoon leader, company commander and in various staff positions. While a company commander at Fort Jackson, So. Carolina, he became interested in the Army's Fully Funded Legal Education Program.

I applied for the program and was accepted. I went to the University of South Carolina law school for three years and, after passing the bar exam, was rebranched in the JAG Corps," said La Force.

The infantry-officer-turned lawyer, who wears airborne wings and the Expert Infantryman's Badge, teaches military law to the Advanced Non-Commissioned Officers Course, the Officer Candidate School, the Infantry Officer Basic Course and the Advance Course and to Allied officers.

"I try to tailor all of my classes to the specific audience. NCOs get information on their legal authority and the law of war. The allied officers get a general overview on their rights while in the U.S. and on our system of law. The officer courses get classes on military justice, personal legal affairs and the law of land warfare," commented La Force.

"The law of land warfare is probably my most challenging block of instruction. when talking to infantry soldiers about the rules of war there seems to be a minority element that feels there should be no rules. Their thinking runs along the lines of 'the enemy doesn't follow rules, why should we?' I try to show them why it is important for American soldiers to abide by the rules of warfare," La Force said.

Once the captain finishes his tour as Benning's law instructor he and his wife, Martha, will move on to the JAG Advance Course.

Individual Ready Reservists hit Fort Benning for infantry training

Soldiers from all over put it together in tough, hands-on refresher course

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning is playing host to 190 volunteers from the Individual Ready Reserve this summer.

"The IRR is comprised of around 200,000 personnel in every military occupational specialty, branch and of every rank. They are not assigned to any specific unit but choose, with the help of their career advisor, some kind of traning each year in accordance with their branch or MOS needs. The 190 men at Benning this year are 11B infantrymen who are in an infantry refresher course," said Bob Grindle, the training coordinator for the Reserve Components Branch at Benning.

Arriving July 27, the IRR infantrymen have undergone an Army Physical Readiness Test, classes and practical application on land navigation, weapons training on the squad automatic weapons, the .50 calibre and M60 machineguns, basic rifle marksmanship and the Tactical Leadership Course.

"In TLC we go through 20 basic skill stations with one of us acting as squad leader on two stations each. We teach our squad and then lead them through the drill. I'm learning a lot. I'm prior service form the 101st Airborne Division and I've been in the IRR for about 18 months. I like its flexibility an the varied training," said SP4 Peter Willemse, from Tampa, Fla.

"I joined the IRR after getting out of the regular Army so I could stay in touch with the Army. I'm learning a lot of new techniques here and meeting a lot of new people," SSgt. Joe Gracia said, a Texan and Vietnam veteran.

"The Army depends heavily upon the Army Reserve. The IRR plays a big part in the strength of our Army. IRR soldiers have to be just as ready as our regular soldiers because of their importance in the nation's defense. Training like the IRR is getting at Fort Benning keeps them mission ready," Grindle said.

Ranger School instructors lead, teach by example

Army's most demanding course cadred by ultimate professionals

USAIS Public Affairs Office

How would you like to get up at 2:30 in the morning, do physical training and running for two hours, conduct an airborne operation, train and demonstrate bayonet fighting, run the bayonet assault course and not finish until 8 p.m.? Ranger instructors at Benning's Ranger School do all of the above everyday and sometimes more.

SFC Edward Erb has been a Ranger School instructor at the Benning Ranger Division for the past year. He is an intense, solidly built man who says he has wanted to be an instructor at the School since going through the Ranger course himself.

"When I was a Ranger student here I was highly impressed with the professionalism of the instructors. I wanted to emulate them after finishing the course. Being a Ranger instructor is the most professional job I will ever have as a non-commissioned officer," Erb said.

SSgt. Mike Hummel, who has been an instructor at the school for two years, feels much the same as Erb.

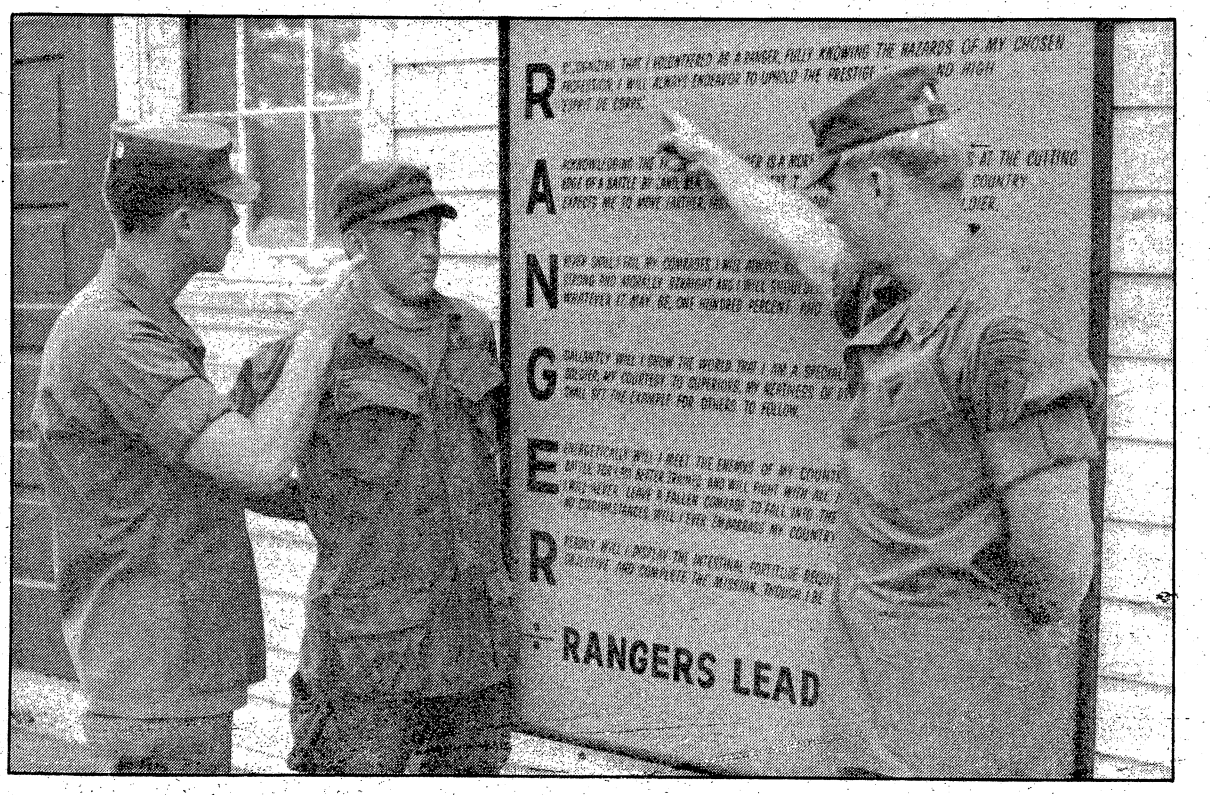
"I'm an airborne Ranger infantryman. Being an instructor at the Army's premier infantry course is the highest level an airborne infantryman can achieve," Hummel said.

Each said they feel their jobs have an extremely large influence on the leaders of tomorrow's Army.

"The majority of people we get are E-3s, E-4s and young lieutenants. What we teach them and instill in them are things they will carry with them the rest of their miltary careers and their lives," Erb said.

Both instructors work on the School's Morgan Team, which encompasses having Ranger students for the initial eight days of the 58 day course. During this phase the "studs," as the students are called, are first given an Army Physical Readiness Test and the combat water survival test. Students who fail either of these tests are not allowed to continue the course.

"Our standards are exacting but fair. When a stud is doing pushups they have to do them correctly. The same goes for sit-ups and the 2-mile run," Hummel said.



"Part of our job on the Morgan Team is to weed out the people who don't really have what it takes to be here. We don't want them leaving here and then quitting when they get to the mountain phase or in the desert or in Florida," Erb said.

Erb, Hummel and the rest of the Morgan Team teach physical training, hand to hand combat, rifle bayonet fighting techniques, advanced land navigation, escape and evasion and advanced airborne operations. All of this training is underlined by constant physical and mental pressure put on the student to see how he reacts.

"This is a leadership school. We take these men and tax them mentally and physically, keep them hungry and require them to conduct military operations. That's the way it is in combat and we try to set up, as closely as possible, combat situations," Hummel said, who is a combat veteran of the Grenada invasion.

To qualify to be an instructor at the Ranger School a soldier must be, as a minimum, airborne and Ranger School qualified. Many instructors, however, are jumpmaster qualified, Pathfinder graduates, scuba and qualified in high altitude low opening parachuting.

"How do we stay motivated for our jobs? It's simple. We believe in and love what we're doing," said Hummel.

SFC Edward Erb, (l), and SSgt. Mike Hummel, (r), reinforce the Ranger Creed to West Point cadet and Ranger student Robert Allen.

Engineers improve post facilities

43rd Engineer Battalion

Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion is currently constructing a forward area medium lift runway near King's pond.

The project began in May 1986 during the 43rd Engr. Bn.'s annual ARTEP. During the ARTEP, 40 percent of the runway was completed. Assets from other companies were utilized during the ARTEP to increase the work progress.

The forward landing strip, is an expedient runway. By design, an FLS is meant to form fit to existing terrain in order to minimize earthwork. The form fitting is accomplished through allowable slope changes (percent change) both longitudinally and transversely. Effective use of these tolerances, with an eye toward good drainage, allows the Engineer to construct the airfield in a relatively short amount of time. The airfield surface is composed of natural soil and is compacted until it is "rock hard." This type of airfield will require quarterly surface maintenance to remain active.

When complete, the runway will be 3700 feet long. The first C-130 landing is scheduled for Sept. 23, 1986. Col. Chinen, 36th Eng. Group Commander, will be among the occupants on the first landing. Power For Service.

VA Q&A

Editor's Note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I filed a claim for compensation about three months ago and have had my exam. I have not heard anything from the VA. How can I find out the status of my claim?

A — Initial claims often take longer than 3 months to process. You should wait a little longer before checking on your claim. If you are concerned, however, you may call the local VA regional office to check the status of the claim.

The tankers begin to maneuver the tank gunnery course, watching for targets to appear.

Tankers crank out rounds at gunnery table ranges

by Sally Roberts
197th Public Affair Office

On a dry and dusty tank gunnery range, the air was filled with the thunder of M60A1 main guns as tank crews from Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor tested their gunnery skills last week.

The training focused on crew level skills for all the weapons systems of the M60s. The four-member crews trained at Fort Benning's Carmouche Range on calibration and Tank Tables 5 and 8 using the tank's main gun, .50 caliber and co-axial machine guns.

"Calibration is simply double checking the bore site," said Hawkins, Company D commander. "The crews fire one round each at targets at 950, 1,200 and 1,500 meters. If they hit two out of three targets, then we know that the main gun is calibrated."

Hawkins said that a tank crew may need to check the bore site several times each day during training or combat operations.

"Changes in temperature or barometric pressure, and wear on the gun tube after firing it several times, are some of the things that can affect a gun's accuracy," he said.

Tank tables 5 and 8 test a crew's reaction to pop-up, stationary and moving targets. The crews engaged targets in several different scenarios, such as day and night firing while on the move or in a defensive position.

Training company assaults Ranger, light infantry combat drill course

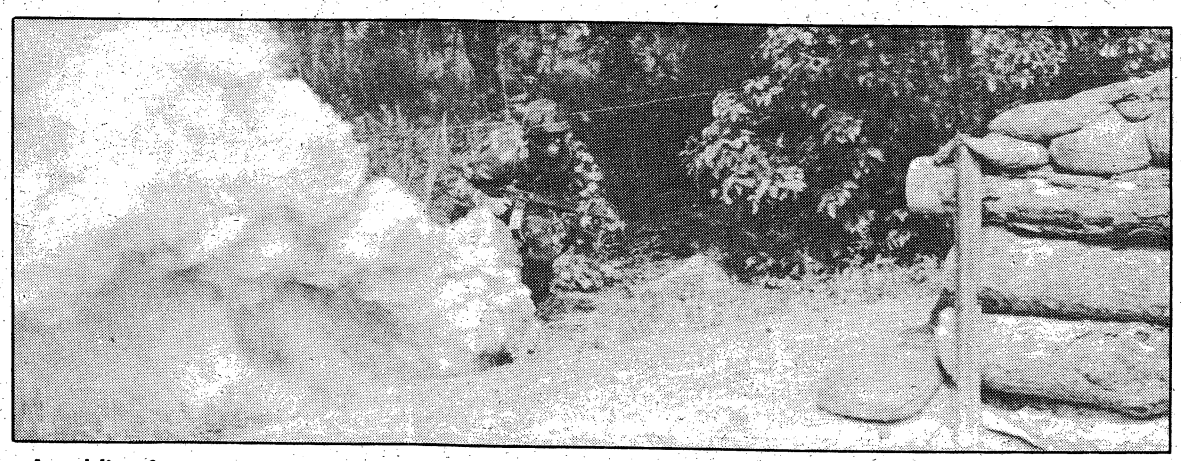
2nd Infantry Training Brigade



Last week was a busy one for the soldiers of Company C, 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

It was the field training exercise for these soldiers who are here undergoing the second half of split option training. Under this program National Guardsmen and Reservists come to Fort Benning two consecutive summers to complete one station unit training.

Capt. German Garcia, company commander, wanted the FTX to be beneficial and different from the normal OSUT field training. So he took his troops to the Anzio Road Light Infantry Training Site.

This area was built by the combat engineers for the Rangers and other light units to perform an squad combat drills. The site contains a variety of different obstacles for the rifle squad to overcome.

"We are the first training company to use this site," said Garcia, "We felt that by using this area we could maximize training and go beyond the normal squad combat drill."

'Summer surge' handled by finance professionals

Laurie J. Hill

Pvt. 1 Donald J. Quistorff signs a pay voucher, while his fellow soldiers wait their turn in the pay line.

by Kelly J. Bakis
215th Finance

The Finance Branch Office provides pay services to the more than 7,000 new soldiers assigned to the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center in a timely and accurate manner.

The office is staffed with soldiers from the 215th AFSC and civilian personnel assigned to the Finance and Accounting Office.

They must handle the so-called "summer surge" from June through August as the soldier population swells dramatically at ATC.

The new soldiers are divided into three categories for pay purposes. Split option 1 soldiers are those who are initially entering the Army, many of whom come directly from high school. They train for six weeks and return home to complete their schooling or go back to civilian jobs. Split Option 2 soldiers are Split Option 1 soldiers from the previous summer. These soldiers spend six week in MOS training, equivalent to advanced individual training for One Station Unit Training soldiers.

The average soldier will see the Finance Branch Office at least three times before completing his training.

The initial encounter is when the soldier arrives at the reception station. Soldiers get advance pay to cover personal expenses. At this time, each soldier's Personal Finance Record is complied and sent to the Finance Branch Office in Harmony Church.

The second time the soldier encounters finance is when he outprocesses a few days before graduation. At this time he may receive a travel payment or his personal finance record if he is going to Airborne School.

Two to three days later he returns to finance to receive separation pay.

The soldier may see finance more than three times in the event a payday occurs during his training or he has a pay inquiry.

OSUT troops learn fire direction skills

by Michael Ricca
1st Infantry Training Brigade

Editor's note: This is the ninth article in a series which will allow the readers to follow one soldier through his entire One Station Unit Training Brigade located on Sand Hill.

We spent this week of advanced individual training in the classroom. The classes were on another part of the indirect fire team — the First Direction Center (FDC). We were taught to evaluate call-for-fire, convert chart data to fire commands and operate the M16 plotting board.

The FDC is comprised of three different positions: the first direction radio telephone operator, the computer and the fire direction chief.

The fire direction RTO operates the radio and is the driver of the unit. He is also trained in the duties of the computer.

The fire direction computer operates the M16 plotting board. He's responsible for determining and announcing deflections, charges and elevations for the mortar sections. He determines the angle "T" which is the difference between the forward observer's point and the mortar section's point in M16s.

The fire direction chief supervises all functions of the FDC and also conducts training.

Being in the classroom eight hours per day for five days was a definite change of pace. Personally, the tasks I performed were challenging; at times hard, but always interesting.

Throughout this week of classes, we completed two more training events. After class on Monday night, we had a 12-mile road march led by our XO Lt. Allen J. Gill and Drill (Staff) Sergeant Bobby L. Carter. This march was another test of endurance and strength.

We ended our week by beginning to reinforce for the end-of-cycle test.

Engineer's sergeant major honored

by Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group

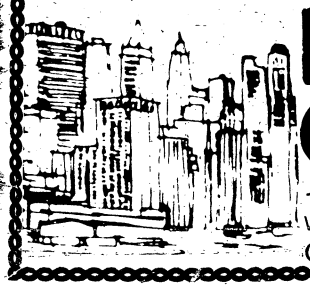
CSM Ernest C. Farley was honored July 25 by the Noncommissioned Officers of the 36th Engineer Group (Combat) at the Group's 3rd Quarter payday review on Engineer Field.

The Legion of Merit was presented to Farley, who had served as a Command Sergeant Major since June 1976.

Farley also received a gift watch and an honorary plaque from the Association of the United States Army (AUSA) in appreciation of his services in a career spanning 26 years.

Farley's wife, Lardell, received a Certificate of Achievement from the 36th Group Headquarters for her devoted service to her husband during his active duty service. Mrs. Farley also received a bouquet of roses.

Farley gave a farewellspeech to the soldiers of the Group and honored guests of the ceremony.



Turning his command over to Command Sergeant Major James G. Brown, whose last tour was Korea, Farley retired July 31.

NBC training important part of battlefield skills

by Sally Roberts
197th Public Affairs Office

Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor are prepared to face a Nuclear, Biological or Chemical threat on the battlefield thanks to the Battalion's emphasis on NBC training.

Recently, the Battalion trained and tested soldiers on individual NBC common skills. The tankers re-enforced their knowledge of NBC skills with the help of trainers from the 197th Infantry Brigade Headquarters Chemical platoon as well as Battalion chemical soldiers.

"Soldiers learn these skills in Basic and Advanced Individual Training, but they can lose them quickly," said 1LT George Sears, 2-69 chemical officer. "The next battlefield will be a contaminated battlefield and soldiers need to know how to function in protective gear."

The soldiers passed through stations learning such skills as decontaminating skin and equipment, recognizing and reacting to a chemical, biological or nuclear hazard and exchanging MOPP gear in the field.

"A MOPP suit will only protect you for 6-8 hours," Sears said. "Soldiers have to get in and out of contaminated gear and continue fighting."

Soldiers will also have to deal with other situations such as eating, drinking and performing maintenance on equipment in a contaminated environment.

"We start a losing battle if we are not trained to fight in a chemical environment," said SSgt. Timothy Jackson, a Battalion chemical non-commissioned officer. "These skills are important to officers and enlisted personnel alike in order to protect themselves."

2nd ITB turned over to Army Reserve's 90th Division

1st Bridgade, 91st Division

The 1st Brigade 91st Division (Training) assumed control of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade last week for the reserve unit's two weeks of annual training.

A change of command ceremony was held the second day of their arrival in which Col. R.S. Siegfried turned over command of the Brigade to Lt. Col. Guy C. Brown Jr. commander of the 91st Division's 1st Brigade (One Station Unit Training) headquartered in Sacramento, Calif.

At the same time 1st Brigade's, 1st Battalion, 360th Regiment assumed command of 2nd Battalion, 2nd ITB; the 2nd Battalion, 36th Regiment, took control of the 8th Battalion. The 3rd Battalion, 360th Regiment moved into the 9th Battalion and the 2nd Battalion of the 360th satellited on the 4th Battalion.

The 2nd ITB's 10th Battalion remained under control of the active component.

To assist the Reserve Brigade in its pre-annual training mission, each affected battalion of the 2nd ITB twice sent teams of drill sergeants to conduct pre-validation training and testing of the Reserve drill sergeants.

At Harmony Church, the drill sergeants from the 1st Brigade conducted phases of OSUT training including basic rifle marksmanship, physieal training, drill and ceremony, tactical bivouac and patrolling. Brigade and Battalion headquarters personnel also assumed complete counterpart duties.

The 91st Division consists of one OSUT brigade, two Basic Training brigades, one General Subject Training brigade, a U.S. Army Reception Station, a training group, a leadership academy and a U.S. Army Maneuver Training Command. Its mission is to set up and conduct Army Training Center operations for new soldiers.

The Division has units located in 18 communities throughout Northern and Central California. Division headquarters is at Fort Baker, Calif.

Army announces latest changes in uniform wear

Army News Service

Several uniform items for soldiers will reach their wearout dates on Oct. 1, while several others have been extended another year. In addition, other items have been approved for optional purchase and wear.

All these changes were recently announced by the Army's deputy chief of staff for personnel at the Pentagon.

The following items no longer will be authorized for wear after Sept. 30:

- Olive green 107 cold weather field jacket.
- Olive green 109 undershirt.
- Army green 388 uniforms, skirt, dress and jacket (mint green).
- Women's Army green pantsuit, jacket.
- Women's Army green 344 uniform, coat. (The slacks to the pantsuit and skirt to the Army green uniform may be worn as a Class B uniform until Sept. 30, 1987.)

Gramm-Rudman ax still sharp as ever

Army News Service

On July 7, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings "balanced budget" law is unconstitutional, giving some the mistaken impression that it is a dead issue.

The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation consists of a schedule of annually decreasing federal budget deficit limits and a provision for automatic budget cuts to keep the deficit within those limits, in an effort to balance the budget by fiscal year 1991.

Although a portion of the law was declared unconstitutional, it does contain a fallback provision allowing an alternate method of implementing automatic budget reductions, said Steve Bagby, chief of the Army's Budget Execution Division.

The court found fault with Public Law 99-177, the Balanced Budget and Deficiency Control Act of 1985, because it violated separation-of-powers principles by giving executive branch authority to the U.S. comptroller general, a non-elected officer of the legislative branch.

As a result of the legal ruling, the comptroller general has lost his budget-cutting authority, and the automatic budget reductions that were imposed in March had to be revalidated by a vote of Congress.

The fallback procedure, which was included in the legislation in anticipation of a challenge of constitutionality, revalidates the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget cuts for FY 86, said Bagby. The fallback procedures requires the House and Senate Budget Committees to form a temporary joint committee on deficit reduction. That committee, which has the freedom to determine how the cuts are structured, must report a joint resolution containing the Office of Management and Budget and Congressional Budget Office cuts to Congress within five days after it convenes, Bagby said.

Then, the joint resolution must be approved by Congress within five days and signed by the Presient; otherwise the automatic cuts will be voided, but the law would stand in following years. "We do expect the budget cuts to be revalidated," Bagby said.

"The fallback procedure is better, because it allows more flexibility to make changes before automatic budget cuts are made," said Bagby. "If budget cuts are so deep that they generate personnel reductions, the fallback procedure would allow the Army to voice concerns to the joint resolution committee in an effort to protect Army personnel," he said.

The budget-balancing proposal named for Senators Phil Gramm, Warren Rudman and Ernest Hollings was conceived by Gramm and Rudman more than a year ago. It was later tabled as an amendment to the 1985 bill raising the federal debt limit from $1.823 trillion to $2.079 trillion. The amendment limits the federal budget deficit to the following amounts:

$171.9 billion for FY 86; $144.0 billion for FY 87; $108 billion for FY 1988; $72 billion for FY 89; $36 billion for FY 90, and 0 billion for FY 91.

Signed into law by President Reagan on Dec. 12, 1985, the act aims to ensure a balanced budget by fiscal year 1991 through this schedule of budget ceilings and automatic cuts. Originally it gave OMB, CBO and the General Accounting Office the authority to decide whether Congress has met the annual deficit reduction targets and the comptroller general the final authority for making budget cuts to meet the targets, Bagby said.

Even if the day is 5 or 10 years away, you need to plan for it today.

Time doesn't wait, and those military years pass quickly. Before you turn around, you'll be wanting to start living that life of leisure – and you'll want it ready and waiting for you.

That's why we suggest you begin to plan your tomorrows today.

General Development has been helping military families find their place in the sun for more than 30 years. And we can help you – just as we've done for over 12,000 service people.

How? By giving you the right questions to consider and the right answers to look for.

For example: 1) Do the people you're dealing with have special financing plans tailored to your military income? 2) How reliable are they? 3) What's their past record of performance? 4) Does the community you're interested in have full shopping, recreational and cultural facilities? 5) Is there a military base nearby? (Hospital, commissary and exchange privileges can mean big savings.) 6) How about location? Is it overcrowded or is it so isolated that you would feel shut off from civilization?

Sergeant convicted of indecent assault

Judge Advocate General

On Aug. 1, a staff sergeant assigned to the Adjutant General Replacement Detachment was sentenced to a dishonorable discharge, confinement for one year, and forfeiture of all pay and allowance. SSgt. George Ulee was convicted by a panel of officer and non-commissioned officers of unlawfully entering the barracks room of two female soldiers and indecently assaulting each of them. In addition, he was conficted of indecently exposing himself to one of the women.

Capt. Bobby Henry, the military prosecutor, presented testimony which established that Ulee abused his position in relationship to the two women, both of whom had come to Fort Benning for their first duty assignment and were awaiting reassignment to their permanent unit.

Capt. Bobby Henry, military prosecutor, showed that Ulee was the Chargeof Quarters at the AG Replacement Detachment on April 5 and April 15 and in both instances, abused his position of trust as the CQ.

On April 19, Ulee entered the room of his victim while she was lying on her bed partially disrobed. The woman asked Ulee to leave, which he did. He later returned and exposed himself to the woman. The next day the woman reported the incident to the chain of command and it was subsequently discovered that his was the second time that the sergeant had engaged in such conduct.

The first incident occurred the morning of April 5, when Ulee noticed that his young female victim had not awakened intime to make an 8 a.m. formation. He entered the woman's room, made several indecent suggestions to her, then sexually assaulted her.

The woman resisted and Ulee left after it became apparent that he would get no further with the woman.

The young soldier was frightened by the incident and did no report it until she later learned he had engaged in another similar act of misconduct.

Alcohol can lead to summertime tragedy

Provost Marshal's Office

Summertime is in full swing, and for a lot of people that means going out in the sun and having a good time.

Aside from the obvious danger of drinking and driving, there are other alcohol related offenses that can ruin a day of fun.

Possession of alcohol in a city park, and drunk and disorderly conduct arrests are becoming an increasing problem.

For the arrested soldier it means time in jail, a fine of at least $50 and a black mark on his record. And for the soldier's chain of command it can mean a loss of manhours.

Being arrested for these offenses, and many others, can be avoided by using a little common sense.

- Don't drink in city parks.
- Drink in moderation. If things get out of hand you may get arrested for disorderly conduct.
- Look out for others. If someone in your group is getting out of hand, it may be time to take him home. You will be doing him a favor.
- Don't keep open containers of alcohol in your car. Even if you are not drunk, this can lead to trouble and a fine.
- Don't drink and drive!
- Drinking and swimming are like oil and water, they don't mix very well. Swim only in designated swimming spots.

By using a little common sense and these tips, you can stay out of trouble and in the sun.

Post dress code simple: keep your clothes on

by Laurie J. Hill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Take it off! But don't take it all off! With the hundred degree temperatures it's important to keep in mind the post dress code while fighting the heat.

According to officials, violations of the civilian clothing standards are becoming more apparent. "During the summer months that's the way it goes, people dress more casually. We never have this problem in the winter," said Jose Fantauzzi, post Commissary manager.

Due to the many visitors on post, Fort Benning sets a high standard of appearance for those who live and work on the installation.

The standards need to be met by all military, family members over 10 years old, civilian and visitors alike.

Those areas where the clothing standards are enforced are; the Commissary, chapels, Officers and Noncommissioned Officers Clubs and Club annexes, the Follow Me Country Club and Golf Course, the post Exchange retail sales stores, post exchange concessions, post theaters and Morale Support Activities facilities to include libraries, bowling alleys and recreation centers.

Dress codes are also enforced at the medical and dental clinics and at the hospital when people are not there for emergency treatment.

The following items must not be worn in the previously mentioned facilities; underwear, mens "tank tops" or "muscle shirts," bare feet or shower slippers (except at swimming pools or gymnasiums), modified uniforms such as cut off fatigues or fatigue jackets with no sleeves, hair curlers covered or uncovered, or very short shorts worn by male or females.

According to the regulation, clothing must be worn in good taste and worn as designed by the manufacturer and appropriate to the occasion.

People will not appear shirtless or barefoot except when running or jogging, working in their yards, exercising in a gymnasium or sunbathing in their yards or at swimming pools.

Members of the military will wear the appropriate uniform while in and out processing. Those on leave or permanent change of station or in an otherwise authorized off-duty status may wear appropriate civilian clothing when conducting business in service-orienting facilities such as the Transportation Office, Housing Office, COMPACT, TIC Federal Credit Union and the Finance and Accounting Office.

"It's not really a severe problem but people do complain when they see short shorts for example, they think it's indecent," Fantauzzi said.

"We usually just discretely remind the violators. But by keeping the standards in mind the shopper could be saved some embarrassment and a trip home to change clothes," Fantauzzi added.

Disabled veterans get benefits increase

Veterans Administration

A 3.1 percent cost-of-living increase in Veterans Administration compensation benefits for service-connected disabilities will be reflected in checks issued March 1, the Veterans Administration has announced.

The rate boost, effected Dec. 1, 1985, was signed into law by President Reagan on January 13.

VA Administrator Harry N. Walters said the checks will include retroactive amounts due for the months of December and January.

Promotions depend upon needs of Army

Military Personnel Center

"Will I ever get promoted?"

This is a question that many enlisted soldiers have asked themselves, their friends, and, indirectly, the Department of the Army, each time a promotion list comes out.

For a better understanding of why that extra stripe is not always put on as soon as expected, let's take a closer look at how the promotion process works.

"All promotions, whether to private first class or sergeant first class, are dependent upon the needs of the Army," said Sgt. Maj. Phil Zarate, chief of the Enlisted Promotions Section at the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va. "These needs are governed by the number of losses to the force. These losses include deaths, separations and retirements."

Promotions for private 2 through specialist four are made by field commanders based on needs. Soldiers may be advanced by their unit commanders to private 2, private first class and corporal/specialist four, without constraint, provided they meet the criteria for time in service and time in grade. They may receive accelerated advancements, within limitations outlined in AR 600-200, provided allocations exist.

Advancements to private 2, private first class and corporal/specialist four depend on soldiers' abilities to perform duties and assume responsibilities of the higher rank and on their potential as evaluated by their commanders.

Sergeants and staff sergeant promotions are semi-centralized, meaning they compete equally against others in the same military occupational specialty based on a point system. Points are awarded for such areas as skill qualification test, commander's evaluation, awards and decorations, weapons qualification, physical readiness test, promotion board appearance and military and civilian education.

Sergeant first class through sergeant major promotions are centralized, with sergeants first class promoted by MOS need and master sergeant and sergeant major by sequence number.

A soldier's total points are forwarded through automated systems to HQDA for consolidation into an Army-wide listing of scores by MOS. A determination is then made for each MOS as to what cut-off score would promote the desired number of soldiers.

The number of promotions are often limited based on MOS comparisons of assigned and authorized strengths and budgetary constraints. For example, high cut-off scores mean fewer promotions because MOS overstrengths (more soldiers than positions) or tight budgetary controls. Once determined, the cut-off scores are mailed to all Army installations for publication of orders.

Soldiers are eligible for promotion on the first day of the third month following date of selection. For example, a soldier is boarded and recommended in January 1986. Between Jan. 15, 1986, and the end of January 1986, the points are forwarded to HQDA.

In February 1986 the points of soldiers boarded in January 1986 are consolidated with soldiers already on the list to determine how many are on the list and where each soldier stands. At the beginning of March 1986, Army headquarters establishes cut-off scores for the first of April 1986 promotions. Soldiers boarded in January 1986 and before who meet the April 1, 1986, cut-off score are then promoted.

A high cut-off score may cause a delay in promotion. Promotions may also be delayed when the Army's budget cannot support promotions to ranks and positions that are not required.

Soldiers qualified in specialties that are overstrength face tough decisions. They either may continue to work in those areas that earn promotion points, wait for their MOS to balance and cut-off scores to lower: or they may request reclassification into shortage specialties to improve their promotion potential.

Selection for promotion to sergeant first class, master sergeant and sergeant major is done by DA boards held annually. Selections are made in each MOS based on the number of projected vacancies. Promotions to sergeant first class are made each month by MOS based on the need of each MOS and budgetary constraints. Promotions to master sergeant and sergeant major are based solely on assigned and authorized strengths of the respective ranks and on budget constraints.

Promotions are only one of many Army programs affected in the current effort to reduce defense spending. Difficult decisions must be made in these times of limited resources — a situation that might not satisfy personal desires but that will strengthen the Army's overall ability to accomplish its mission.

Special Army ad campaign seeks computer programs

Army News Service

Army personnel who think they have developed a computer program that could benefit standard automated systems now have a channel for sharing it.

An effort called "Harvest the Flowers" appeared on the automation scene in 1985 as a regular means for soliciting software applications for microcomputers from Army personal-computer users, said Richard E. Simpson of the U.S. Army Logistics Center at Fort Lee, Va. The project gets its direction from the center and the U.S. Army Information Systems Engineering Command at Fort Belvoir, Va.

"There are a lot of people in the field who have good ideas. We want to "harvest" these programs for adoption," Simpson said.

Programs may be related to any job field. They need not be complex. They also don't have to possess potential for Army-wide application. Simpson said they welcome any program that saves time and money. This might include anything from programs improving the operation of unit motor pools and supply rooms all the way up the logistics chain to theater materiel management.

Persons submitting programs under "Harvest the Flowers" could gain more than the satisfaction of knowing their idea is benefiting the Army; they might end up with money in their pockets.

Submissions should include a copy of the computer program accompanied by a written explanation of how it works. They should be mailed to: U.S. Army Logistics Center, Project Smart — Harvest the Flowers, Fort Lee, Va. 23801-6000.

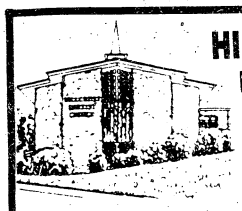
Sergeant Major of Army says "Vote!"

Army News Service

"We must beat the bushes and reach into the trenches to get our soldiers out to vote," said Sgt. Maj. of the Army Glenn E. Morrell in response to statistics showing that Army voting was 10 perc ent ow the national average. Those statistics also revealed that soldiers below the rank of staff sergeant voted less than other soldiers in the 1984 federal election.

The Defense Department sponsored the study, which also showed that the Navy's voting record was 20 percent higher than the Army's, said Army voting program coordinator Tom Feazell. "People seem to think that if it isn't a presidential election year, it isn't important. But there's no such thing as an off year when it comes to electing the people who have a direct influence on all of us," Feazell said. "After all, it is the Congress — our senators and representatives — who make the laws, introduce the legislation and pass the budgets that impact on all programs, both civilian and military."

On Nov. 4, 33 U.S. senators, 39 state governors, the entire House of Representatives, and delegates from the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands and American Samoa will be elected.



Soldiers stationed overseas should receive federal postcard applications by Aug. 15, and those stationed in the continental United States should receive them by Sept. 15, Feazell said. Registration deadlines vary from location to location, but any soldier who doesn't receive a card by the appropriate date should see his voting officer.

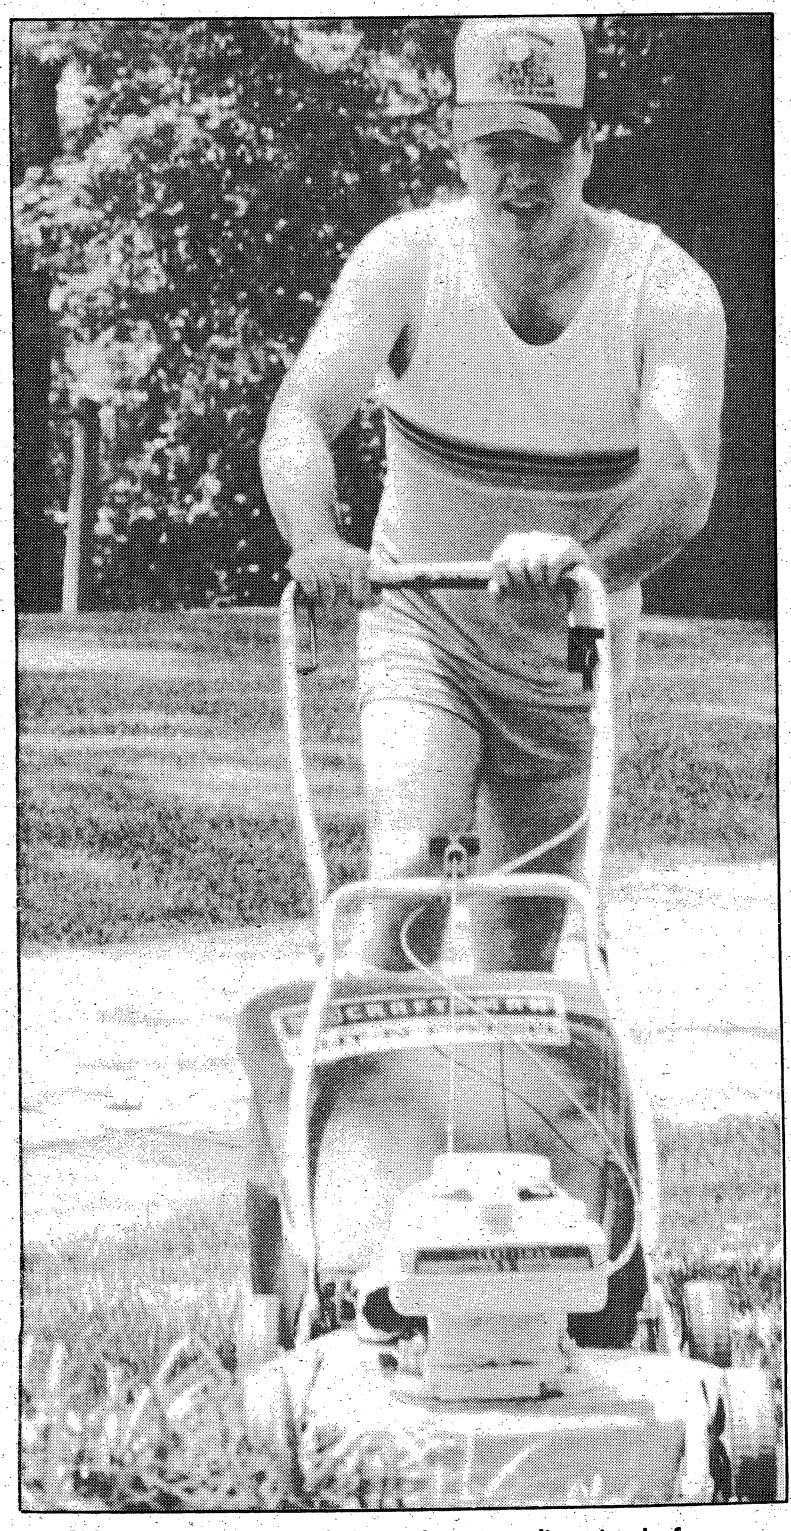
Long, hot summer

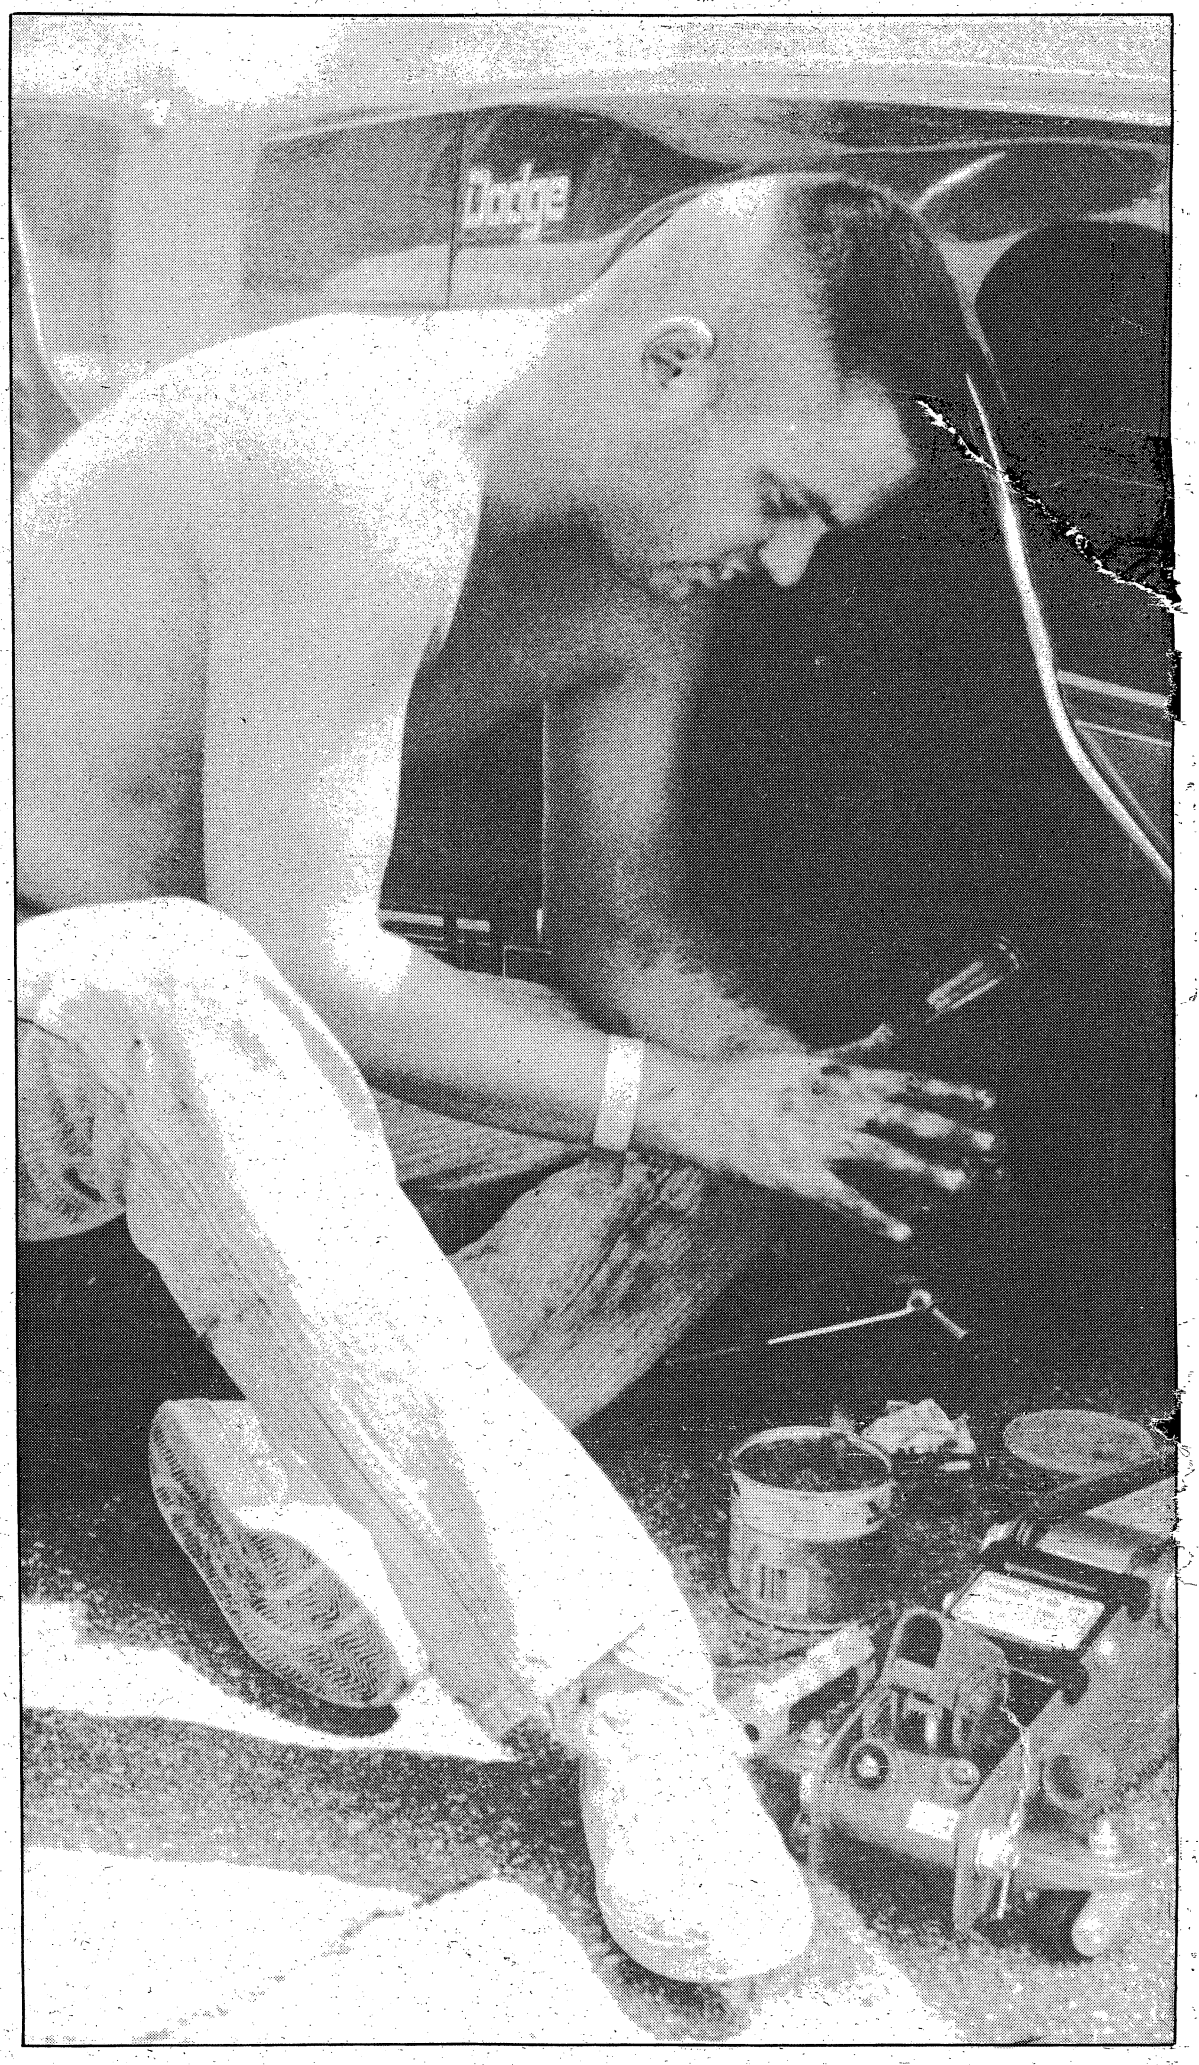
Story and photos
by Thad Roberson and Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It's summertime, it's hot, it's sultry. So what else is new? People at Fort Benning carry on with summer activities despite scorching temperatures and humidity that makes the sweat pour.



Whether it's mowing the grass, working on a car or just enjoying the sun, the pool and a good book, summer means work and play as usual.

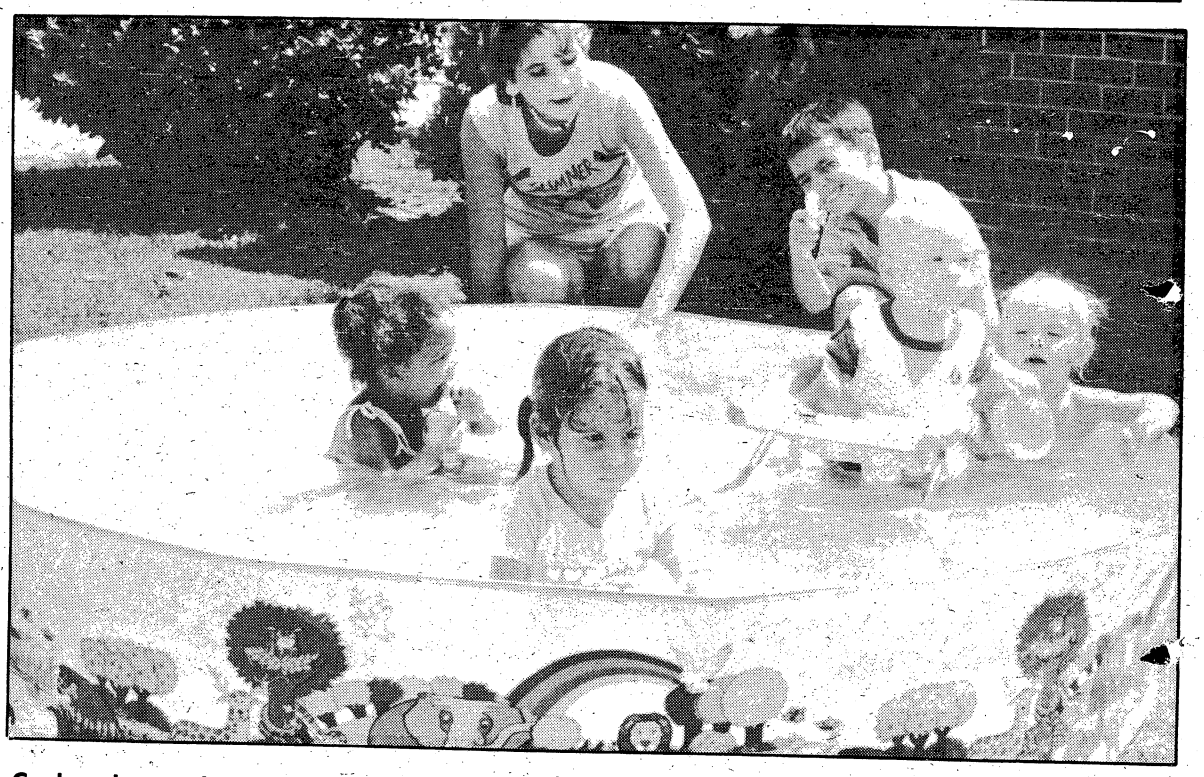
There's always summer fish to be caught, cold ice cream to be eaten and plastic play pools for the kids on the front lawn.



Some people have summer jobs, like lifeguarding, sitting on a high chair overlooking the pool, working on the tan and keeping a careful watch behind sunglasses on the multitudes splashing, thrashing and having fun.

Others take vacations, take days off, take clothes off to stay cool. Summer's a time for taking, it seems. Taking in the sun, taking in the sights, taking off an extra hour from work to just loll in the heat with a cold drink.

Summer's here, summer's hot, summer's long. Endure. Enjoy.



Lt. Col. Bill Blackman performs a long-standing ritual of summer: mowing the grass.

Army solicits public comments on lethal chemical agent disposal

ArmyNews Service

The Army is soliciting public comment in response to its plans for the disposal of its lethal chemical agent stockpiles.

The weapons to be destroyed are located at eight Army installations (Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.; Anniston Army Depot, Ala.; Lexington-Blue Grass Army Depot, Ky.; Newport Army Ammunition Plant, Ind.; Pine Bluff Arsenal, Ark.; Pueblo Army Depot Activity, Colo.; Tooele Army Depot, Utah; and Umatilla Army Depot Activity, Ore.).

On July 1 Army officials announced the release and public availability of the draft programmatic environmental impact statement outlining four alternatives for the disposal of the chemical weapons by Sept. 30, 1994, as required by Public Law 99-145.

During the past several months open meetings were conducted at each site to solicit public opinion, and beginning July 2 the Army began running full page ads containing an 800 number (1-800-225-4305; 1-800-854-3453 in Maryland) in each of 35 major newspapers across the country.

The disposal requirement was included in PL 99-145, the 1986 Defense Authorization Act, with the object of removing obsolete chemical weapons for replacement with newer, safer weapons, according to Army spokesman Maj. Phil Soucy. The weapons that are being destroyed are unitary (containing lethal agents); whereas the new weapons will be binary (containing two separate canisters of chemicals that are not lethal until they mix after firing), he explained.

The Army also stores chemical weapons at Johnston Atoil in the Pacific, and these weapons are already scheduled for on-site incineration beginning in June 1989.

On-site incineration has been tenatively chose by the Army based on public health and safety, environmental impact, sabotage or terrorism suspectibility, regulatory complexity, public opinion, cost, and other factors, said Soucy. However, final determination may be influenced by public comment in response to the DPEIS, he added.

A detailed analysis of environmental, safety, and other factors is included in the DPEIS. Final determination on a disposal method is expected by January 1987, Soucy said.

Comments and questions, and requests for copies of the DPEIS or DPEIS executive summary should be addressed to:

Program manager for chemical demilitarization
Attn: AMCPM-DC-TC
Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md. 21010-5401

Only comments received by Sept. 23, 1986, will be considered in preparing the final programmatic environmental impact statement, however, Soucy said. The public comment period for such a document is normally 45 days, and in this case it has been extended to 85 days, he explained.

"WE FEEL GOOD ABOUT LEAVING JAMAHL AT THE DAY-CARE CENTER BECAUSE THEY TREAT HIM LIKE HE'S THEIR OWN CHILD."

SSG Ken and SP4 Jacquie Farmer

"We never really considered leaving Jamahl with anyone except a private sitter. But our first visit to the new Child Development Center here at Fort Hood sure changed our minds.

"We know our son is well taken care of. So we can concentrate on our jobs without worrying about what he's doing.

"He learns, instead of just playing. He counts, sings, says his ABC's. And they teach him to be more independent.

"Jacquie and I have peace of mind when Jamahl's at the Center. They take care of him, and he's learning, and those are the two most important things."

The Army's Day-Care programs are making modern day-care facilities available to more children each day. And the quality of the "Caregivers" who attend the children has never been higher. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

Hangover symptoms reveal signs of alcoholism

by Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

Mellow, tipsy or tight; plastered, soused or loaded; dead drunk, under the table or out cold. Whichever term describes your last bout with alcohol, chances are the experience was followed by a hangover you thought could have won an Academy Award for special effects.

But the length and severity of that hangover tells a lot about your relationship with alcohol. With the occasional overindulgence, most people experience a headache, stomach discomfort and mild anxiety, and the symptoms usually disappear within a few hours.

But alcoholics experience much harsher symptoms. Their hangovers, write Drs. Jack Mendelson and Nancy Mello in their book, "Alcohol: Use and Abuse In America," are actually a withdrawal from alcohol.

Within six to eight hours after an alcoholic has his last drink, he develops a series of signs and symptoms. These symptoms usually become most severe in the next 24 hours and gradually diminish within the following 48 to 72 hours.

"The major signs include tremor of the arms and hands, and sometimes the tongue ad torso, sweating, a flushed face, a mild increase in the heart rate, rapid involuntary movements of the eye, hyperactive reflexes, nausea and vomiting," they write. Alcoholics also experience disorientation, nervousness, insomnia, nightmares and, occasionally, hallucinations, according to Mendelson and Mello.

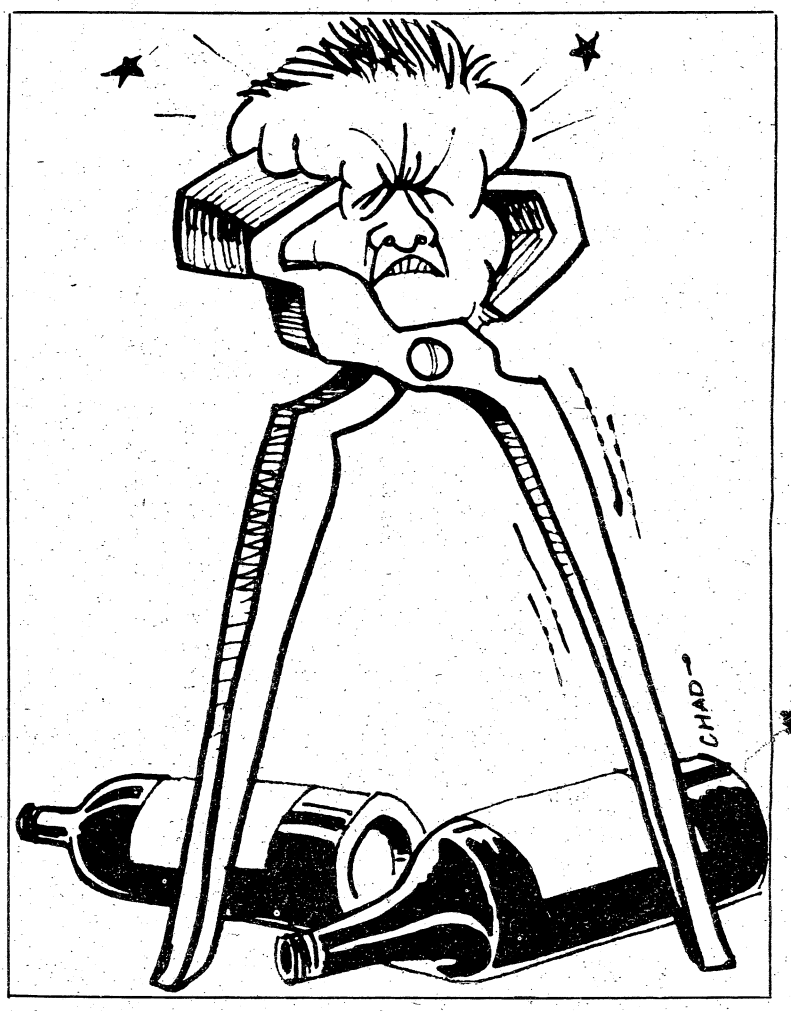
But the hangovers associated with mild, infrequent intoxication, while not as severe as the alcoholic's, are still uncomfortable.

Army Dr. (Col.) Harry C. Holloway, chairman of the Department of Psychiatry at the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences, the nation's only military medical school, said the mild discomforts that occur after an occasional overindulgence are actually very complex reactions occurring in the body.

"There are poisons in alcoholic drinks," he said. "And after a period of drinking, those toxins accumulate in the body in numbers high enough to cause some discomfort to the drinker."

Overindulgence in alcohol also results in a temporary imbalance of water and chemicals in the body. Alcohol, like coffee, is a diuretic. That is, it increases the amount of urine excreted. When you excrete more fluids than you take in, you may become dehydrated. The alcohol also shifts body fluid in unusual ways. The effects of the dehydration of fluid shift will be the "cotton mouth" and massive thirst associated with hangovers.

With the depletion of body fluids comes a depletion of electrolytes. "Electrolytes are like the battery acid of the body," Holloway pointed out. "They are chemical compounds like sodium, postassium and magnesium that help transmit the body's electrical impulses along the nerves."



Holloway said that symptoms of an electrolyte imbalance are the same symptoms associated with hangovers: pain, nausea, headache and some visual disturbances. Muscle tone and coordination also deteriorate.

Still, many people are willing to occasionally suffer the mild and even more severe after effects of drinking. But is there anything that can be done to make the "morning after" more bearable?

Many people pop a tranquilizer to mask the symptoms of a hangover. Holloway cautioned against this practice since the combined effects of alcohol and other drugs are complicated and potentially fatal.

Drinking more alcohol to rid yourself of a hangover is a favorite among heavy drinkers. But that remedy, said Holloway, only prolongs the inevitable. Today's cure is tomorrow's hangover.

Exercise won't help, but Holloway said it won't hurt either. But he recommended that before torturing yourself, drink tea with sugar or a commercial sports drink to replenish your supply of electrolytes.

But now you've probably guessed that stuffing yourself with greasy food or drinking nasty concoctions won't help either. You're right. Holloway recommended aspirin and fruit juices to make you feel a little more comfortable.

Unfortunately, there are many gimmicks but only one cure: Modern medical science says the only 100 percent sure way to avoid a hangover is abstinence.

Government provides guidelines for nutrition, healthy diet

by Reynaldo R. Martinez
Martin Army Community Hospital

Almost anyone can adopt the title, "nutritionist." At the present time the guidelines covering who may use this title are vague.

It seems every magazine and newspaper one picks up has its own section on nutrition. Some of this information is valid and some of it is not. Unfortunately, most of this information is written by unqualified pseudo-nutritionists and is not valid.

In order to dispel some of the nutritional rumors, fads and fallacies which are sensationalized by these publications, the American Dietetics Association will hold its annual National Nutrition Month in March.

Registered dietitians at Fort Benning will be conducting many events on post during the entire month of March in order to provide sound nutritional advice to the Fort Benning community.

Some of the upcoming events you may look forward to in March are:

- Weekly newspaper articles on nutrition and related topics.
- A display at the main post library on sound nutrition literature.
- A dietitian will be available at the health fair in March to answer your nutrition related questions.
- A dietitian will be available for group presentations in the Fort Benning area (see below for booking information).

The registered dietitian is a trained professional in nutrition and nutritional counseling. If you have a question or nutritional problem you should consult your local dietitian for safe advice.

Treasures not found in earthly things

by Dave Bon

I and my family are on orders to move again. We are excited! Or maybe I should say, "we were excited." The issue centers around our possessions: furniture and cars. You see, we are going to a location where we cannot take our car nor much of our furniture.

We were amazed at how attached we have become to material things and how concerned we are about losing money by selling our cars. VALUE CHECK!!!

My thoughts went to a song:

This world is not home
I'm just a passing through Somewhere beyond the blue
The angels beckon me
From heaven's open door
I can't feel at home in this world anymore.

I remember a New Testament Scripture, Matthew 6: 19-21 where Jesus teaches, "do not store up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust destroy, and where thieves break in and steal. But store up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where moth and rust do not destroy, and thieves do not break in and steal. For where your treasure is, there your heart will be also."

The question is not the ownership of material possession. It is the attitude toward what I have that is significant.

From a spiritual view point, possessions need to be evaluated in proper perspective. Am I willing to let go of earthly belongings? Or, am I full of greed, coveteousness and selfishness? Is there a security in knowing that real value is in the eternal?

We have heard that we bring nothing into this world and we will take nothing out, yet, we tend to hold on to things like they are more important than WE ARE. They mean social position, prestige and security in a world system that would place human value over God's eternal value.

So, enjoy the material blessings that are available to us. Use them to make life positive. Yet, remember the real joy is eternal, uncorruptible, and never fades away.

Jerry Lewis' annual telethon needs volunteers to succeed

Muscular Dystrophy Association

The Atlanta area broadcast of the 1986 Jerry Lewis Labor Day telethon to benefit the Muscular Dystrophy Association needs volunteers, announced John C. Spencer Jr., chairperson of the telethon in the Atlanta area. The 21 ½-hour entertainment specular will be aired on WAGA-TV 5, starting at 9 p.m. August 31 through 6 p.m., September 1.

"Volunteers play an important role in the telethon's success," said Spencer. "Each year, they handle a variety of behind-the-scenes jobs, such as answering pledge phones and sorting pledge envelopes. The fantastic people of Atlanta area have always come through for us in the past, and I hope we can count on them again this year."

The 21st Annual Telethon, which will originate live from Caesars Palace in Las Vegas, will be broadcast throughout the U.S. by some 200 "Love Network" stations. The show's format includes 45 minutes of national programming and 15 minutes of local programming during most of its hours on the air.

Funds raised by the telethon help MDA continue its extensive research and patient care programs covering 40 neuromuscular diseases. The association sponsors 500 individual research projects worldwide as well as research centers here and in England. MDA also supports some 240 hospital-affiliated clinics nationwide, where people with any of the 40 disorders covered by association programs receive medical care, orthopedic aids, and related services.

The MDA clinics serving the metro Atlanta area are located at Emory University Center for Rehabilitation.

Spencer said that anyone interested in volunteering for the Labor Day Telethon should call the local MDA office at 633-5151.

CPR's miraculous 'breath of life' can defeat sudden, airless death

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

From biblical times until the recent past, bringing a person back to life was the stuff of miracles. But since the 1970s, the simple technique of cardiopulmonary resuscitation has enabled ordinary — but informed — individuals to reverse "sudden death."

Little Christina Anderson's parents still think of Air Force Tech. Sgt. John Giuste as a miracle worker. More than a year ago, Giuste's wife was babysitting the infant girl when she stopped breathing. Mrs. Giuste called to her husband, who was upstairs with their little boy. Giuste gave the girl — who had turned blue — infant CPR while his wife called the hospital.

Giuste had never taken a CPR course — but he remembered enough of what he's read in Air Force Pamphlet 50-34 to save a life. Today, little Christina is still doing fine.

CPR is a combination of mouth-to-mouth breathing, in which a rescuer inflates the victim's lungs by blowing into his or her mouth, and vigorous, rhythmic compression of the chest, which squeezes blood through the heart to supply the victim's brain and other organs with oxygen.

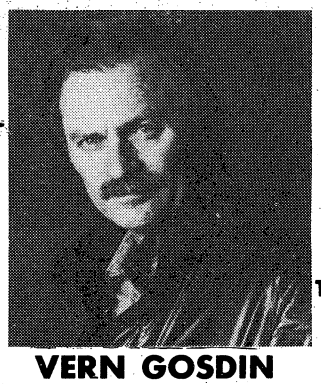
Basics of CPR are now included in Navy and Marine Corps basic training courses and many officer precommissioning programs. The Air Force is considering making it a requirement for its people to take CPR courses; the Army makes CPR courses available and encourages soldiers to take them.

Something like "CPR" was first practiced in 1878 on chloroformed cats by a German scientist named Boehm, but it was 1958 before anyone tried it on humans.

In 1958, doctors at Baltimore's Johns Hopkins Hospital administered oxygen while compressing the chest of a woman who had suffered cardiac arrest during an operation. Her pulse returned, and she recovered. The entire medical staff of Johns Hopkins was taught the procedure. The first officially trained laypersons were members of the Baltimore City Fire Department Emergency Squad.

Medical people were practicing the technique in the 1960s, but there was a need for a standardized way of teaching CPR. Researchers with the National Academy of Sciences-National Research Council and the American Heart Association worked together to develop and refine the basic life support techniques so they could be taught in a few hours to lay and medical persons.

In 1973, the refined technique was published in a special edition of the "Journal of the American Medical Association," and the American Heart Association distributed more than 3 million copies to encourage the general public to learn it. Since then, the experts have published revised standards twice — in 1980, and most recently, in the June 9, 1986, issue of the "Journal of the American Medical Association."



Government sets guidelines for sound diet, nutrition

Nutrition Care Division

Good nutrition is important for every person. But how can you tell if you are getting proper nutrition? It is hard to know what foods are the best because there is so much information coming from all directions, and sometimes that information does not agree. That is why the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services wrote seven dietary guidelines for Americans. These guidelines, which are listed below, should help in choosing the most nutritious foods for a healthy diet.

- Eat a variety of foods. This is very important because there are more than forty nutrients that are needed for good health and tey can only be obtained from a variety of foods.
- Maintain desirable weight. There are many problems that are associated with obesity, such as high blood pressure, heart disease, strokes, diabetes and cancer.
- Avoid too much fat, saturated fat and cholesterol. High levels of blood cholesterol is a major risk factor for heart attacks. Some ways to decrease fat, saturated fat, and cholsterol are by eating lean meats such as fish and poultry, by broiling, baking, and boiling instead of frying.
- Eat foods with adequate starch and fiber. Fiber has been known to contribute to the relief of constipation and to reduce symptoms of diverticular disease.
- If you drink alcoholic beverages, do so in moderation. Heavy drinking may cause serious problems such as cirrhosis of the liver and some kinds of cancer.
- Avoid too much sodium. Sodium is part of salt and is related to high blood pressure.

Coaching legacy hangs it up, claims sixth top softball trophy

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The end of this year's Women's Softball season marks a legacy that is more than 10 years old.

Coach Albert McGruder, Fort Benning's "winningest" coach announced his coaching retirement after claiming his sixth consecutive Women's Softball top trophy.

The 57-year-old coach is the Sports Director at the Harmony Church Field House and has claimed the top ranks in several sports.

He has also coached championship volleyball, baseball and tennis teams. But, the Intruders have been the team that has coveted the most crowns.

McGruder's Intruders have gone 44 games undefeated, while losing only once in the 1984 season.

This was the sixth consecutive title for the Intruder Club, but it did not just began for the McGruder teams.

The club began in 1977 as the Lady Spirits, coached by McGruder.

"Most of the players have been with the club since 1977. Not until last year did we pick up new players," said McGruder.

The team changed its name to the Triple Tee but not the winning spirits.

Players who began with the original team credit the success to the legacy himself.

"The coach keeps us together, and makes our team the best it can be," said Lu Lu Doucet, team member.

"Also an original Lady Spirit, Sandy Moore reflects, "He coaches basic softball. He teaches how to bat, how to field, the rules of the game and first of all, sportsmanship."

He graduated from Benedict College Of South Carolina, where he majored in Physical Education and played both baseball and football.

It was in college that he recieved his nickname "Big Truck".

"I was a full-back and because I was big enough to run over most defensive lines, I was called "Truck". Later someone added the "Big" to it and the name "Big Truck" stuck with me. said McGruder.

It was as "Big Truck" that McGruder was selected as a Little All-American. Because of the racial barriers of that time he could not be named an All-American.

McGruder came to Fort Benning during the reign of the 3rd Army, more than 20 years ago, and coached the "WAC" teams.

He has coached many teams during his years, included are the New Mount Zion Baptist Church Team, the first black church team to enter in the Columbus League, and the TSB team, which was the first integrated club of Fort Benning to play in the Columbus League.

The love of the intramural sports keeps "Big Truck" McGruder rolling along.

"My greatest joy in coaching is being able to work with people. To work with those willing to participate, is greater than any win or loss or any trophy I might receive," said McGruder.

The new recruits to the McGruder program are a testimony to that spirit.

"He's a winner. Regardless of the sport, he will always come out on top," said Jackie Hoskins.

What tribute can you give a man, who has served so devotedly for so many years? "We will always love him," said the Intruders.

Benning bowler wins in tourney

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The All-Army Bowling Team took first place in the Interservice Tournament held recently in Camp Lejeune, N.C.

Representing Fort Benning in the six-member Army team, was SFC Anthony Szelugo, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Szelugo, who has been a soldier for nine years, has been a member of the All-Army team for the past three years.

Szelugo recieved many awards and broke several records in his climb to the championships.

In TRADOC competition, he was the High Series Winner, bowling a 734 in a set of three games.

His personnel best in a series came in January , when he bowled a 807 series.

It was just two months ago that the bowling veteran, pitched a perfect game scoring 300 points.

With the final ball in-hand, he looked down the lane at 10 pins which would decide wheather it would be a perfect game or just outstanding competition.

"Bowling is about 25 percent physical and 75 percent mental," said Szelugo. "You have to have patience in the sport."

Patience it was, when the 300-point strike hit it's mark.

Szelugo was also runner-up in the Singles and Doubles matches.

The wins do not come easily for competitors at the Armed Forces level of bowling.

"Including league and evenings, I bowl about 40 to 50 games each week," said Szelugo.

Fort Benning will be able to see the All-Army team workout for the 1987 season, in that, the Army Trail Camps will be held at Fort Benning April 17-24.

Barracudas score at recent triathlon

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

At the recently held Super Kids Triathlon members of Fort Benning's Barracuda Swim Team did super good.

"We had eight swim team members enter the triathlon and seven of them placed in the top three for their age groups," said team coach and mentor, Elaine Kendall.

Kristie Rock, 14; Paul Mules, 11; David Ancona, 10 and Alice Ancona, 13, all took first place honors.

Seven year-old Franklin Ancona swam, ran and bicycled to a second place berth and Nina Kendall, 11, and Sarah Holt each took third places.

The team works out year-round, swimming 3,000 yards a day five days each week. Additionally, they run a mile two days a week and do daily pushups and situps.

Hunting safety classes available next week

Persons born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, desiring to hunt in Georgia or on the Fort Benning reservation must complete a State Hunting Safety class. Classes will be conducted Aug. 19 and 20 in Building 4, Classroom 24, from 7 to 10 p.m. Students must attend both classes. For more information, call 545-3267.

Flyers Rugby Club looking for members

The Fort Benning Flyers Football Club will start practicing for the Fall 1986 season Aug. 20 and 21 at 6 p.m. on Stilwell Field. They will continue to practice on Wednesday and Thursday nights during the season.

The season begins Sept. 13 and continues through December. The team plays local teams throughout Georgia, Alabama and Florida.

The Flyers are looking for more players. You don't have to know how to play, as they will teach you. Soldiers of all ranks are invited to attend practice and play in matches.

For more information, call Stephen Tennant at 687-0451 or Joel Courtemanche at 689-5272.

Soccer camp offered at Columbus College

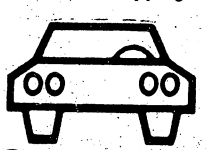
Columbus College will teach a soccer camp Aug. 18 through 22 from 9 a.m. to noon. The classes will offer the young soccer player a camp which includes skill development in the fundamentals and instruction which incluedes the rules of the game and sportsmanlike conduct. Fee is $30. For more information, call 568-2023.

Swimming championship planned in September

Briant Wells Indoor Pool will host a Swimming Championship Sept. 11 and 12. Entry deadline is 4 p.m. on Sept. 5. For more information, call the post sports office at 545-5777.

USAIC Fitness Center now open weekends

The Fitness Center in Building 4 is now open Saturday and Sunday. The new hours are Monday through Friday, 6 a.m. to 8 p.m., Saturday and Sunday 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.



Make plans to join fall tennis league

The fall season of the Columbus U.S. Tennis Association Volvo Tennis League begins Sept. 13. The league, which is designed for the recreational player, both adult men and women, was highly successful in the spring, with 26 teams participating, including five from Fort Benning.

The league is run using the team tennis concept with matches held throughout the Fort Benning and Columbus area against players with the same level of play. The league offers an excellent opportunity to sharpen one's tennis skills and to socialize with many interesting people from the local community. For more details and to sign up, call Betsy Hayden at 687-4516, or visit the Officers' Club Tennis Courts.

Sun spells trouble during heat wave

Army News Service

Caution in the sun is the key to surviving in the heat wave that we are experiencing.

Prolonged exposure to the sun and heat leads to dehydration. Drink plenty of water or refreshing fruit juices to replace body fluids.

Work in your garden or yard early in the morning or late in the evening. Stay in the shade as much as possible. When out of doors, wear a hat to keep the sun from beating down on your head.

If you have to stay out in the sun, knowing the symptoms of the various heat-related illness can aid you in helping a victim.

- Heat Cramps are painful spasms often experienced in the leg or abdomen due to loss of salts and water. Other symptoms include pale, wet and cool skin. The body temperature is about normal.

- Heat Exhaustion also results from loss of body water and salts. It takes longer to develop this than other heat-related illnesses. Symptoms include weakness, heavy sweating, nausea and giddiness. The body temperature is about normal with pale, wet and cool skin.

- Heat Stroke requires immediate attention and medical treatment. Among the symptoms are faintness, dizziness, headache, rapid pulse and hot, flushed but dry skin. The body temperature may vary from 104 degrees to 110 degrees.

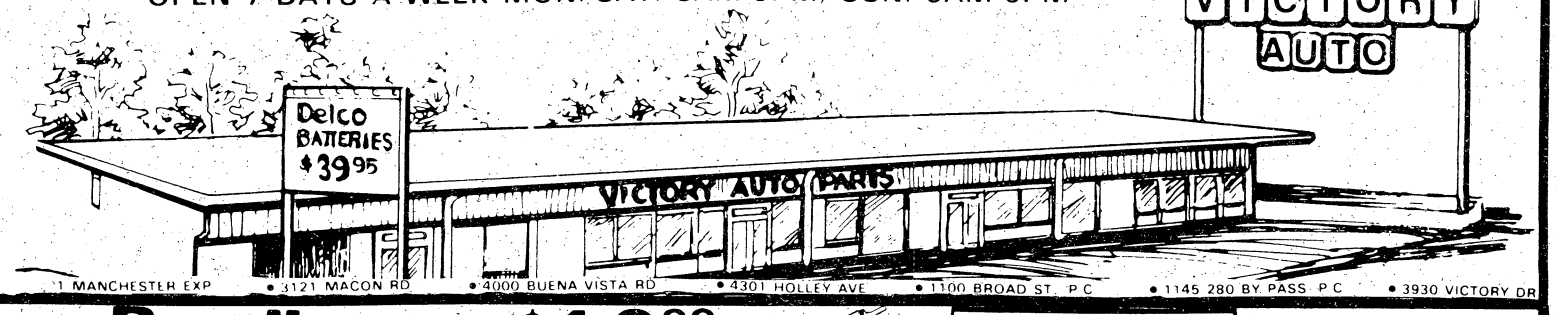
"Aerobically, we were fit to compete of our swimming but I think the bicycling was the toughest event of the three," said Mules.



The team travels to swim meets extensively during the year and plans to host a new meet at Fort Benning in September.

"We're going to put on the first-ever Southeastern Military Youth Invitational Swim Meet. We'll be sending invitations to swimmers at all military posts and bases in Georgia, North Florida and Alabama. It should be great for these super kids of mine," Kendall said.

TRENDS

A night club war is waging in Columbus. But it's unlike any battle the city has ever seen. The fodder is dancing music and soda pop. And the spoils are teen-age party-goers. D-11

PROFILE

John Watson Jr., has spent 31 years in medicine helping others. This year, the Columbus radiologist will help Georgia's doctors and patients as the president of the Medical Association of Georgia. D-

100 YEARS
COMMEMORATIVE DESIGN

To celebrate the German automotive centennial, we have commissioned a special edition of the Audi 5000S sedan. It is an automobile with nearly a century of engineering advancements behind it, however, you have far less time to acquire one.

The additional amenities like Alcantara suede sport seats with leather bolsters, a 10-speaker sound system and power sunroof have made these unique Audis move quickly. And now, only a few remain.

The Commemorative Design Audi 5000CS sedan. Come in and test-drive one soon. After all, timing is everything.

The art of engineering.

Workshops aim to increase voting

The Fort Benning Voting Assistance Workshop will convene Monday in an effort to get more soldiers to exercise their right to vote.

"Last year military personnel didn't participate in the voting arena as much as they should have. The Army wants soldiers to vote. It's their right and they want them to take advantage of that right," said SSgt. S.M. Roberts, of the Adjutant General's Office.

A former prisoner of war of Vietnam, retired Navy captain Red McDaniel, will be the guest speaker.

McDaniel is the president and founder of the American Defense Foundation and the American Institute of Defense.

Troop seriously hurt while inflating tire

A soldier from Fort Rucker, Ala. was critically injured recently when he was struck by a locking ring that flew off a tire he was inflating.

The Fort Benning Safety Office would like to caution all that when inflating tires, a tire inflation safety cage should be used to allow the individual to stand at least 10 feet away from the tire.

Road closed next week

Benjamin Street will be closed at the intersection of Riordon Street today through Aug. 26, for the installation of steam lines.

School board changes class hours

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Students attending the Fort Benning Schools will start the day earlier this fall in an effort to beat the heat.

The eight Fort Benning Schools will start and dismiss 45 minutes earlier each day for the first five weeks of school as a result of action by the School Board in July.

The new schedule will provide students with more time in school during the cool morning hours and shorten the study time during the afternoon heat.

All school times will advance by 45 minutes, including Tuesday early dismissal times. Schools will revert to normal hours Sept. 29.

Columbus named site for military outpatient clinic

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Plans to establish a new health care facility for military patients were unveiled yesterday.

Capt. Paul Mouritsen, a spokesman for the Office of the Surgeon General in Washington, D.C. announced that a contract will be offered for bids for a Primary Care for Uniformed Services Center in Columbus.

"This contracting out of health care services will mean providing more access to medical care, not better medical care than patients are currently receiving," he said.

The PRIMUS center will provide routine medical care on a walk-in basis for active-duty and retired servicemembers and their families.

The facility will have an on-site pharmacy, laboratory and radiology services.

The center will not handle emergencies and patients who need specialized care will be referred to Martin Army Community Hospital.

The center is one of six scheduled to open at Army posts throughout the U.S. in fiscal year 1987. The first PRIMUS center opened in Northern Virginia in October 1985, and three more centers are scheduled to open this October, two in Northern Virginia and one at Fort Stewart, Ga.

By 1992, the Army plans to have 26 centers in operation.

Road trip with kids no vacation

by Dawn Kilpatrick
Bayonet Editor

Many soldiers are looking forward to a much-deserved break from the routine of Army life around this time of year.

Well, if your leave is still ahead and you have plans to hit the highway with small children, take a word from the wise and weary — find the most direct route to your destination and make the road time as short as possible.

Having recently returned from a "vacation" with two sons — one 6 months old and one 11 years old — I believe others may be able to benefit from my experience.

We had things in order when we set out for Texas to visit my husband's family. Our cooler was stocked with sodas and preparations for snacks so we could lunch al fresco along the way. Number one son had plenty of books and other "busy work" to sufficiently stimulate his mind. The baby had an array of playthings strewn about his car seat. My husband had carefully selected our route and highlighted it on the map for easy navigation. I brought along the latest copy of "Parents" magazine. And we were off!

Two hours down the road the 11 year old needed to use the bathroom. He was bored. Every few minutes the question "Where are we?" popped up. And the always popular, "How much longer?" seemed to follow shortly after.

About three hours into the trip the baby had had it with the car seat. I'm a firm believer in the value of a car seat, especially on long trips. But after witnessing an active 6-month-old child attempt to squirm his way out of one, I had to rethink my conviction on its use.

By the time we had reached our destination, a "short" 12 hours later, my husband and I were seriously questioning our sanity.

Vacation? Frankly, I'm happy to be back at work.

'Safe Army 1990' aims to make all post workers safety conscious

Army News Service

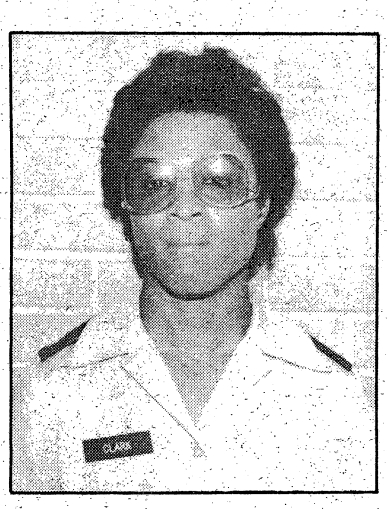
The Chief of Staff of the Army initiated "Safe Army 1990" in October last year. The objective is to consolidate safety programs to support established Army goals.

The key to success of "Safe Army 1990" is the development of a "sixth sense of safety" for both soldiers and civilians associated with the Army. To benefit, "Safe Army 1990" must become more than just a headquarters at Department of the Army and major commands. Personnel at the lowest levels in the Army must be influenced to be safety conscious.

Safety officers, commanders and managers at all levels need to be innovative in developing programs to reduce accidents in their areas. Possibilities are only limited by the imagination of the thinkers. An example would be to provide recognition and awards for those who don't have accidents. Another example is briefing soldiers prior to the start of field exercises and holidays.

Everyone should do their part to look for safety hazards, to report them and see that they are corrected. Just because you recognize a hazard doesn't mean others will. Get involved.

Examine your immediate work area. Are there extension cords exposed that can be tripped over? Are the wall outlets overloaded? Are there frayed cords on electrical appliances?



Are stairs covered with skid resistant material? Are there tears in carpet where people could trip? Are there water leaks on the floor making it slick?

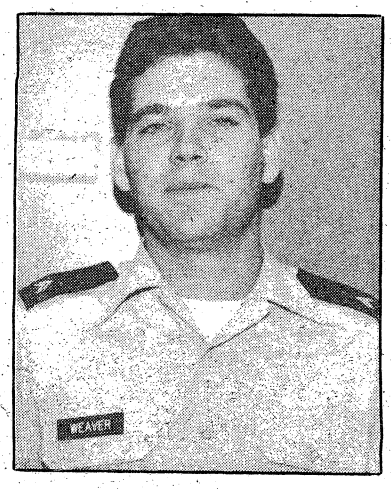
Safety hazards are potential accidents, and accidents injure people. Injuries may be both painful and life threatening. The eventual losers are all of us. From the supervisor who loses the worker to the injured party to the taxpayer who pays the hospital costs.

Think safety. Make the Army a safer place to be, because you care.

Various voices

What can be done to increase safety awareness on the job.

Sgt. Mary J. Clark, Company A, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade "The bulletins may not be the most effective means of relaying the safety information. There should also be classes with updated films on safety in each specific work area."



SP4 Robert A. Soroka, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry Brigade"NCOs should give an in-briefing, before duty hours, and before the job starts. The person coming into a shop would then know what to look out for.

Capt. William J. H. Smith, Tactical Leadership Course, 2nd Training Brigade "The bottom line is holding fist-line supervisors and their immediate superior more responsible for what their people do and don't do."

Pvt. 2 Troy Buchanan, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade "Safety rules should be posted and enforced. Safety officers should ensure that people are familiar with those rules around the work area."

Cpl. David Weaver, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade "Offices should have more safety officers who are aware of safety violations and are willing to make on the spot corrections."

Op-Ed

Clarke shares leadership training ideas

by Bruce C. Clarke
Retired General

Leadership in relatively complex organizations such as the Army is generally not as simple and straightforward as might appear to those who have not studied its many facets.

Although it consists of common threads of principle and theory, the wide variety of demands placed upon the leader by the differing missions of the several branches makes the mastery of different techniques of leadership necessary.

Before I became a general officer (I would like to emphasize the lower case "g" to eliminate inherent branch parochialism) I had served in four branches, including the section chief, squad leader and platoon leader level.

It was my experience that each branch made unique demands on my skill as a leader. For example, leading combat arms soldiers to close with and destroy the enemy provided different challenges than leading combat service support troops in keeping the combat arms soldiers supplied.

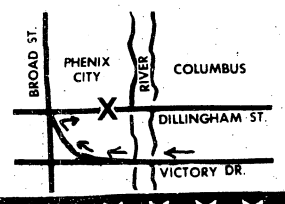
I commend this problem to the teachers of prospective platoon or equivalent leaders in the Army. I focus on the platoon leader level because above the platoon the one in charge is a commander. A commander's techniques differ in some respects, although basic characteristics do not change.

Teachers of our prospective platoon leaders should consider these questions as they structure their training and conduct their classes:

- Are your students already branch assigned or are they undecided as yet?
- How do you teach the different leadership techniques required in peacetime and those required in battle?
- During any battle, a few Army units close with the enemy face to face in combat. Do they need different leadership techniques from those who do not? If so, how do you teach that?
- What leadership techniques should be stressed in the different types of units, including: combat arms, combat support, combat service support, administrative, corps or higher level logistics, special operations, and those stationed in the United States and overseas?

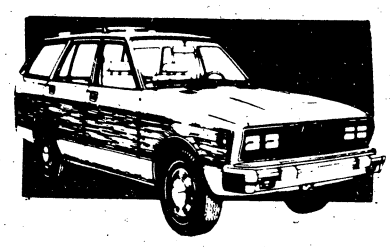
It is my position that the Army's leadership instructors have a responsibility to consider these questions in order to ensure that we are continuing to provide the best young leaders possible.

I have discussed this subject at Marine Corps and Navy schools. Marine Corps leadership techniques are not materially different from the Army's. The primary mission of the Marine Corps, as in the Army, is to use the individual Marine (or soldier) to project land combat power against the enemy. We provide this Marine (or soldier) with equipment to facilitate the accomplishment of this mission.



The Navy and Air Force, on the other hand, have significantly different missions. Control of the sea and mastery of the air requires the application of power in the form of ships and aircraft. It is almost incidental that crews (for example, sailors, and airmen) are required to man their equipment to accomplish the mission.

This situation presents some unique leadership challenges. Consider, for instance, that the "fighters" in the Air Force are almost exclusively officers. Each service's unique mission provides different challenges to the leaders in these services. Therefore, different techniques of leadership are necessary.



Another difference between the Army and Marine Corps and the Navy and Air Force is that, when a ship puts to sea, or an aircraft takes to the sky, the officers and men are constantly in close proximity and they cannot "bug out."

In an infantry platoon, discipline, cohesiveness and leadership keep the troops together and moving forward, not the physical confines of a ship or plane. This situation requires different techniques to teach cohesiveness.

Training prepares troops for final testing

Editor's Note: This is the 10th article in a series that will allow the readers to follow one soldier through his entire One Station Unit Training at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill.

by Micahel Ricca
1st Infantry Training Brigade

We started this week off with end-of-cycle reinforcement — that repetitious training that prepares us for our final End-of-Cycle Test.

This test was a combination of various tasks that we have been trained on during our Basic and Advanced Individual Training phases.

Training was different this week for we knew we would soon be graduating.

Our reinforcement was just like mid-cycle reinforcement as far as format and approach to training.

The reinforcement lasted one week and we spent many long hours on the various tasks, such as putting on our protective masks, M16 functions check, administering nerve agent, map and compass tasks, tank identification and many others.

On Saturday afternoon, we took our End-of-Cycle Test. Everyone was anxious to do his best on this final event, and we came away with another Eagle Streamer, signifying 100 percent first-time passes for the EOCT.

For the first time since I arrived at Fort Benning I faced failure. On three tasks I received a "no go" because I made several careless errors. Total overconfidence caused me to make these simple mistakes.

This taught me a very important lesson on overconfidence and mastering the easy tasks in life. I must admit these three small failures, even though I passed the test, bothered me quite a bit. I feel that I did not perform to the best of my ability and that it is very hard to deal with it. This lesson I will never forget!

A few other major events we had during the week were the Military Defensive Driving test, the final PT test, and the opportunity to meet our company officers and NCOs from Fort Drum, N.Y.

The driving test involved hand-to-eye coordination and reactions to emergency situations. Our platoon had a 100 percent passing rate.

We went out the following day to Wetherby Field for our final PT test. Our platoon did very well and I scored the maximum amount on all three events with my best performance ever — I did 70 push-ups, 70 sit-ups, and ran the two-mile run in 12:40.

The officers and NCOs from Fort Drum explained what we would be doing and what was awaiting us in New York. This meeting was very enlightening and helped clear up a lot of misconceptions that we had concerning Fort Drum. I, for one, feel much better now knowing for sure what we have to look forward to.

Because of our hard work and excellent instruction from the drill sergeants, my platoon — 1st Platoon — tied 2nd Platoon for "Honor Platoon of the Cycle."

Hot tips

Knowing the symptoms of the various heat-related illnessescan aid personal action as well as action toward a victim.

- Heat Cramps are painful spasms often experienced in the leg or abdomen due to loss of salts and water. Other symptoms include pale, wet and cool skin.
- Heat Exhaustion also results from loss of body water and salts. It takes longer to develop this than other heat-related illnesses. Symptoms include weakness, heavy sweating, nausea and giddiness. The body temperature is about normal with pale, wet and cool skin.
- Heat Stroke requires immediate attention and medical treatment. Among the symptoms are faintness, dizziness headache, rapid pulse and hot, flushed but dry skin.

'Habitat' marchers pause at Benning on 1,000-mile walk for nation's poor

by Robert Schmidt
2nd Infantry Training Brigade

The people from Habitat for Humanity walked through Fort Benning last week on their pilgramage to Kansas City.

The group is on a 1,000-mile walk from its headquarters in Americus, Ga. for its 10th anniversary celebration Sept. 18.

2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade provided a resting area and refreshments for the weary travelers.

Habitat for Humanity works in almost every state and 16 countries in South and Central America and Africa. It is a Christian organization that works with the poor to provide them with homes.

Miller Fuller, the founder of Habitat for Humanity, stresses that they build the homes with the poor and not for them.

He said, "We believe in 'Sweat Equity.' We work side by side with the poor and after the homes are completed we set up a no-interest mortgage so they can pay for them."

The group is walking to Kansas City for a number of reasons. The most important reason is to raise the consciousness of the people and one million dollars to help in the plight of the homeless.

"We walk by choice; we feel a necessity to walk and identify with the poor. When you walk in the heat people say you're crazy or you really must believe in something, which is everyone having a decent place to live," Fuller said.

Habitat for Humanity has a local chapter in Columbus. They have built one home already and plan to help five more local families in need.

The decision to open a PRIMUS center is the result of an ongoing commitment by the Department of the Army to improve the access, quality, efficiency and cost effectiveness of health services, Mouritsen said. The local center, scheduled to open in October 1987, will provide improved access and convenience to military patients.

All uniformed services beneficiaries who are enrolled in the Defense Eligibility Enrollment System will be able to use the PRIMUS Center, which will operate as a military medical facility. It will be operated under contract by the U.S. Army Medical Department, with technical supervision of the contract provided by Martin Army Community Hospital.

Military quality assurance regulations and procedures will be adhered to by the contractor.

The medical director of the PRIMUS Center will be a family practice physician. All practitioners including physicians, professional nurses, licensed practical nurses, physician's assistants, radiology and laboratory technicians and pharmacists will be required to possess all applicable Georgia licenses, accreditations and certifications.

The center will be required to seek accreditation by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals.

The Request for Proposal is expected to be mailed to potential contractors around Nov. 15.

OSUT soldiers show courage, skill rappelling from 90-foot tower

by Robert Schmidt
2nd Infantry Training Brigade

A big part of One Station Unit Training is overcoming fears and developing confidence.

The soldiers of Companies B and E, 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade took a big leap in that direction last week at the Ranger Department's rappelling towers.

The COHORT soldiers undergoing training here at Harmony Church headed for the 25th Division in Hawaii, enjoyed the introduction to air assault techniques.

The ability to rappel from a helicopter is an important skill for the light infantry soldier because he may be deployed to a remote area.

The day started on the small rappelling platforms. The soldiers first practiced basic skills, which included learning to hook up properly, releasing to move down and braking.

The initial rappel was down a wall so the soldiers could familiarize themselves with releasing and braking. Next was the helicopter skid and a free fall rappel.

After the basic skills were mastered, it was time for the real test of skill and courage — the 90 foot tower.

PFC N. Ibabao of Company B said, "It was hard to get up there and jump off. You look down between your feet and it seems so far down but once you kick off your fears leave and you concentrate on what you're doing."

Editor's note: "Around Fort Benning" is a new column that will appear in the Bayonet each week. Its purpose is to highlight the activities of various post units. Input is welcome from all sources and should be submitted to the Editor in Room 601, Building 4 by 11 a.m. Monday. All input should be typed, double-spaced, with the name and specific unit of the writer. Submissions will be subject to standard editing and condensing. High quality black and white photographs will also be considered for publication in this column.

USARSA

Forty-one 41 Latin American youngsters finished six weeks of summer English language training Aug. 1.

The children of Latin American guest instructors and students at the School of the Americas at Fort Benning, spoke no English when they arrived in the United States.

Most of them enrolled in local schools last semester and studied English then. The summer program is designed to maintain and improve their English language skills.

According to Jean Castaneda, the program director and instructor, "Funding for the course came from a registration fee and a substantial donation by the USARSA Columbus Support Group."

Castaneda and Ana Velez, the other instructor, are both certified teachers in local school systems. They agreed the students made excellent progress and seemed enthused about learning the language.— Cory Loomis, USARSA Public Affairs Office

Cory Loomis

Jose Velez presents a certificate of achievement to Ivan Herrera, 6.

The 47,000 total graduates mark was surpassed Aug. 1 at the U.S. Army School of the Americas with 30 students completing the Preventive Medicine course.

Countries with number of graduates represented were: Colombia, four; El Salvador, 16; and Honduras, 10.

Fourteen Salvadoran female non-commissioned officers and one Honduran female officer, who completed the course represent a unique training trend not seen at USARSA since the late 50s and 60s when similar medical civic-action courses were offered to participating Latin American countries.

Preventive medicine is the control of environmental factors affecting the health and well-being of soldiers in tactical areas.— Marco Morales, USARSA Public Affairs Office

36th Engineers

The 608th Ordnance Company of the 67th Maintenance Battalion recently participated in its annual Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program here.

The training was conducted under a war game scenario created by the battalion commander and his staff.

The exercise gave the 608th Ordnance Company the opportunity to perform its actual wartime ammunition support mission.

More than 150 soldiers participated in the exercise. The soldiers were evaluated on tasks such as maintenance and recovery operations, communications, field sanitation, supply operations, field food service operations, and receipt, storage, issue, shipping and renovation of ammunition.

Members of the ammunition supply platoons also had the opportunity to participate in live demolitions training and ammunition sling-load operations.

The soldiers were trained on preparing the palletized load, rigging the A-22 air cargo bags, guiding the aircraft using hand and arm signals and actually hooking up the sling to the UH-60A Black Hawk helicopter. — — Dwayne Ford, 608th Ordnance Company

With the average temperature being in the high 90s most of us wish we could be at the swimming hole instead of work.

Members of the 31st Engineer Detachment (Rubber Boat) have been spending a lot of time in the water this summer.

Recently members of the 31st traveled to Fort Stewart to give classes concerning the mission, capabilities and features of the RB-15 for the 2nd Battalion, 70th Armor. The soldiers spent a day in the water perfecting the use of the RB-15 by making assault crossings and practicing capsizing drills. The last part of training involved the installation of a 200-meter one-rope bridge.

The 31st has provided support to many units recently. Among them are the 10th Mountain Division and the 36th Engineer Group.

Future exercises include a deployment to Fort McClellan, Ala. with the 10th Mountain and to Fort Riley, Kansas with the 1st Infantry Division for the "Big Muddy River" exercise.— Terry N. Thompson, 31st Engineer Detachment

Ask the judge

Legal Assistance

Editor's Note: These questions are inquiries that the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be a substitute for advise from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

Q. I have an appointment with a legal assistance attorney. Where do I go and what do I bring with me?

A. Appointments with legal assistance take place at the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate in Building 5 on the corner of Sigerfoos and Vibbert Avenues, across from the Main Post Chapel. During your interview, it is important that the attorney have any and all paperwork that may be related to your case. Therefore, bring anything related to your problem.

Q. I leased a Nissan 300ZX last year. Last week, I came up on levy for Korea. What can I do with the car?

A. Leasing an automobile is usually cheaper than buying a car over a monthly basis. However, for soldiers and their family members, leasing may bring more problems than its worth.

Because soldiers move every three years or so, leased automobiles may sometimes have to be shipped overseas. Sometimes the leasing company will not allow the vehicle to leave the continental United States.

More often, the leasing company will not care where the car is, but the car will be shipped at the soldier's own expense. The reason for this cost is that the vehicle does not belong to the soldier, he is only renting it. As a result, he is not entitled to have it shipped at government expense.

Q. My husband and I are having marital problems. He has a child from a previous marriage. If I leave him, do I still get support and an identification card?

A. Army policy assures family members that soldiers will support them. If you are not living in government quarters, your husband is required to send you an amount equal to his Basic Allowance for Quarters at the "with dependent" rate. However, if he is obligated to support other family members, you may be entitled to only part of that amount.

For example, if you and your husband's child were the only two family members, then you each would be entitled to half of the amount of BAQ. But if there were a court order or separation agreement that obligated your husband to support payments, then you would be entitled only to an amount equal to the difference between the BAQ at the "with dependent" rate and the amount in the court order or separation agreement.

Concerning an ID card, you are entitled to an ID card until you are no longer a military family member — until you are divorced.

Q. If I don't have a will, does my home state take all of my estate?

A. This is a common idea among most people. However, there is no state that will take a person's estate simply because they do not have a will.

To make sure that property is distributed at the death of an individual, each state has laws that predetermine the way that a person's estate will be divided.

For example, if you have a wife and two children and you pass away without a will, the state law may divide your property one-half to your wife and one-half to your children. Keep in mind that these laws vary from state to state. The way to keep the state from determining how your estate is to be divided is to have a will that distributes your estate the way that you want.

Attitude, skill equally important in developing safe driving style

National Safety Council

Which is the most important of these two aspects of driving — skill or attitude?

If you said both you're correct. In actuality, one tends to borrow heavily from the other.

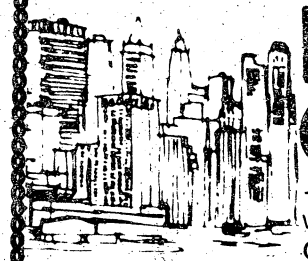
A driver can have all the skill in the world, yet the average driving examination tests for capabilities, not expertise.

The usefulness of skill is based on the quality of attitude. Depending on your frame of mind, a quick trip to the store could result in an injury or possibly death.

What constitutes the driver's attitude is the way that he thinks or feels. Some people believe that they have a divine right to the road, and are exempt from law or authority.

Others think that accidents can never happen to them because they are meant for "the other guy."

The really good driver is the one who manages to keep driving without an accident long after he is statistically overdue.



What is the attitude of such a successful driver? East — "It hasn't happened — yet." This is his credo regarding the possibility of involvement in a traffic accident. By being a bit more pessimistic in your driving, and expecting the worst from fellow drivers at all times, you might possibly prevent a serious accident from occurring.

GETTING OUT? YOUR ARMY BENEFITS CAN BE MORE THAN MEMORIES.

It's probably hard to say what you'll miss most about the Army if you've decided to return to civilian life. For some, it's the camaraderie. Others miss the travel and excitement. Still more miss those money-saving Army benefits.

Joining the Army Reserve can help you retain some of those great benefits. Like your PX and commissary privileges. Space-available air travel. And low-cost life insurance.

You'll earn a good extra income, too. Over $2,000 a year, in some cases.

New M16 rifle scheduled for fielding next year

Army News Service

The soldier's basic combat weapon, the M-16A1 rifle, has undergone extensive remodeling.

The newly designated M-16A2 incorporates changes affecting many of the component parts of the rifle and will fire improved 5.56mm ammunition — the M-855 ball and M-856 tracer. These are the same-sized rounds being used with the Squad Automatic Weapon (M-249) and with comparable weapons in use by NATO countries. The M-16A2 will fire the M-16A1's 5.56mm rounds.

The new stock is longer by five eighths of an inch. This change will help improve the soldier's shooting, explained John Post, weapon system matrix manager for the M-16A2 rifle.

Soldiers will find the rifle heavier by about a pound as a result of a heavier barrel. The barrel will also have a higher rate of twist than the M-16A1 (1:7 as compared to 1:12) to provide stability for the longer and heavier projectile. The new projectile will increase the effective range from 450 meters to 600 meters, he said.

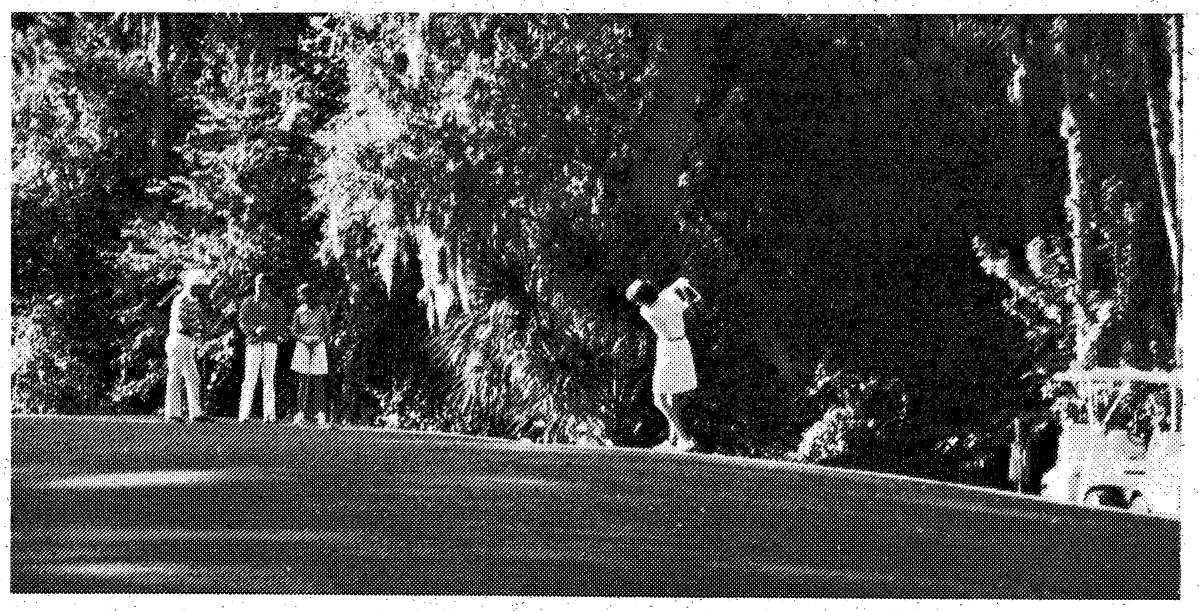
A new muzzle compensator/flash hider at the front of the rifle keeps the rifle from rising while being fired; it also prevents the gasses from flashing during night firing.

Post explained that a square front-sight post is replacing the old flared sight to improve target hit probability.

The newer rifle has a more sophisticated rear sight with windage and elevation knobs for easy adjustment. With the M-16A1 a pointed object, such as a nail, was needed to change the rear sight.

Soldiers also will find new, cylindrical handguards, made of a stronger material. These will look much like a soda can, said Post. The handguards are split on the horizontal plane. No longer will right and left sides need to be stocked, because the sides can be interchanged. The ring at the back of the hangguards now is tapered for easier grip when reinstalling the handguards after maintenance.

The upper receiver has a spent-cartridge case built in to protect the left-handed firer from hot spent cartridges.



Another feature is the three-round burst control. This replaces the "rock and roll" or automatic firing position on the oler M-16A1. Post noted, however, that, depending on one's ability to manipulate the trigger, the rifle can still achieve a firing rate of 750 to 900 rounds per minute at the three-round burst-control position.

The selector level now has markings on both sides of the receiver so the firer can tell if it's on "safe," "semi-automatic" or "three-round burst" from either side of the weapon.

Post also commented that the new rifle's butt, stock and pistol grip are all made on a stronger material so they will last longer.

In the Army's inventory since 1964, the M-16 rifle up to now has had only one major change since its introducing: the addition of the forward assist to the right side. That change resulted in the rifle's being designated from the M-16 to the M-16A1. The Air Force still used the M-16 version.

Plan aims to cut cost, complexities of CHAMPUS system

by Hal Haskins
American Forces Press Service

The Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services is too costly and too complex for both those it serves and the Department of Defense, Dr. William Mayer, assistant secretary of defense for health affairs, recently told members of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

"CHAMPUS expenditures have been rising faster than private sector health care costs, and its administrative complexities and costs to our beneficiaries continue to be the source of most complaints we receive about our system," Mayer said, presenting DoD's proposed reform of the CHAMPUS system.

A key feature of DoD's CHAMPUS Reform Initiative is to award three fixed-price, "at-risk," contracts, covering the continental United States, Hawaii, Alaska and Puerto Rico.

The "at-risk" feature means that the contractor would lose money if unable to provide the necessary care at an agreed price. These contractors will assume financial responsibility for virtually all health care services provided under CHAMPUS as well as administrative processing and paperwork.

A voluntary enrollment program, called "CHAMPUS Prime," will be offered to beneficiaries. Under this program, medical care will be provided without the normal CHAMPUS deductible ($50 per person and $100 per family) and co-payments (20 to 25 percent of the medical bill), although the providers of health care may be allowed to charge a nominal per-visit fee.

The current CHAMPUS system will still be available for those who do not want to enroll in the Prime system, and beneficiaries may continue to use military hospitals on a space-available basis.

The first step in implementing the reform is already under way. A "draft request for proposals" went out June 20, asking health care contractors for comments on the preliminary design of the new system. The responses will be used to fashion the formal requests for proposals, expected to go out this fall.

The draft proposal request sent to potential contractors outlines five principal objectives of the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative:

- Better coordination between the military and civilian components of the Military Health Service System to correct system inefficiencies and assist beneficiaries in obtaining appropriate care;
- Improved access to services, particularly primary and preventive care, by establishing an affordable alternative to overcrowded military treatment facilities;
- Contained costs for CHAMPUS, now too expensive for both beneficiaries and the government;
- Assured quality under CHAMPUS, which now has little quality monitoring of the care provided by thousands of civilian physicians and other health care providers; and
- Simplified procedures under CHAMPUS, which now has complex paperwork and long delays in paying claims.

Mayer said the new system, in addition to reducing costs and providing better care, "will establish a vital partnership between the military and civilian components of the military health services system to ensure that we can meet wartime readiness and improve peacetime health care services."

New policy lets soldiers pay health insurance by allotment

Army News Service

Soldiers may now use the Joint Uniform Military Pay System, Army Allotment Authorization Form (DA Form 13410) to pay family members medical and dental insurance premiums.

A change to the Department of Defense Directive 7330.1, voluntary military pay and allotments, dated Jan. 14, expanded the coverage to these areas to make it easier for soldiers to make these payments, said Gary Olson, spokesman for the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

In the past the only insurance premiums the allotment system could be used for were life insurance premiums on the soldier.

The Army waited until June 13 to begin this program to allow DoD to pick up the change in its entitlements manual, he explained.

Soldiers still cannot use allotments to pay other types of insurance premiums such as auto, personal property or homeowners, Olson added.

Soldiers who would like to use JUMPS to pay these premiums should visit their local military personnel administration center for more information on what is required when filling out the JUMPS form.

Different insurance companies require different information, ranging from the soldier's social security number of policy premium number on the DA Form 1341, Olson explained.

Energy update

Energy Office

In the current water crisis situation, everyone has to do their share to use water wisely. Water is a valuable resource and when it's in short supply, we cannot afford to waste it.

Follow these five short steps to help conserve our water supplies.

- Check your faucets for leaks and drips. A slow drip wastes 15-20 gallons of water a day, almost 6,000 gallons a year. A faster drip can waste more than 100 gallons per day.
- The toilet is the single largest water user in your house, accounting for 40 percent of all consumption. Make sure yours is operating efficiently by checking it for leaks. Put a few drops of food coloring in your toilet bowl. Without flushing, watch to see if the color shows up in your bowl. You can lose up to 100 gallons per day from these invisible leaks. And that's more than 30,000 gallons a year.
- Don't shower too long or fill the tub too full. Personal bathing accounts for 26 percent of all indoor water use. It takes about 36 gallons of water to fill up the bathtub. Long, hot showers waste five to 10 gallons every unneeded minute. Five inches per shower and about five inches in the tub is plenty. Shower head flow restrictors and other conservation devices will help reduce water use even more.
- Automatic dishwashers and clothes washers should be run with full loads only. Even when the machines feature short cycles, you are using water wisely when there are enough dirty things for a full load.
- Most important, use good sense when watering your lawn or garden. Water early, not in midday when evaporation is highest, and not in the evening when damp grass can cause a fungus problem. Avoid windy days. See that the water goes where it's needed, not on sidewalks or driveways. And remember — a single lawn sprinkler spraying five gallons per minute uses 50 percent more water in one hour than a combination of 10 toilet flushes, two five minute showers, two dishwasher loads and a full load of clothes. A drip irrigation system made from half-inch flexible hose with holes punched in it will use only about one or two gallons of water per hour if set on a slow flow rate. And, the water is channeled directly to tree and shrub roots where it's needed most. Be sensible. Think before you water.

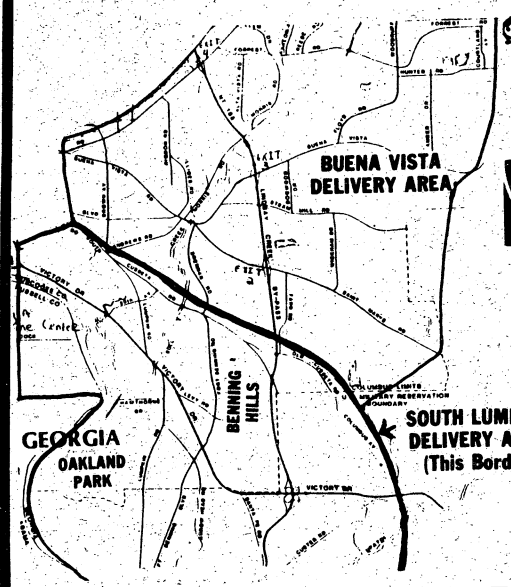
These five short steps are simple and easy. Put them into practice. Encourage your family, friends and neighbors to do the same. With your help we can be sure that Fort Benning can meet its water needs, both now and in the future.

Army to pay soldiers more SRB up front starting in October

Army News Service

A change in public law effective Oct. 1 permits the Army to pay 75 percent of the selective re-enlistment bonus "up front."

This policy change means that soldiers receiving an SRB will put more of the bonus in their pockets when they reenlist. The change was made to improve the attractiveness of SRBs and improve overall reenlistment rates, said Lt. Col. John Herring, chief of Programs Management Branch, U.S. Army Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va.



"In the past, a soldier eligible for a $10,000 SRB would receive $5,000 (less taxes) when reenlisting and the remainder in anniversary payments," Herring said. With the Oct. 1 change, that same soldier will receive $7,500 (less taxes) when reenlisting and smaller anniversary payments paid over the length of the reenlistment."Any soldier receiving an SRB should consider income averaging when preparing his tax return. The amount of taxes the soldier pays on his bonus depends on his particular situation. More money up front should improve his chances to use income averaging. If the soldier can use income averaging for tax purposes, his taxes for the year in which he received the bonus will probably be less than if he claims the lump sum as straight ordinary income. Income averaging allows the soldier to 'spread the load' over a four year period," Herring said.

Presently, there are about 100 MOSs being paid SRBs, he said. Payments range from about $1,500 to $20,000 depending upon the soldier's MOS, the multiplyer on the MOS as approved by the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, the soldier's base pay, and the length of reenlistment, and any prior obligated service, Herring said.

Proper preparation key to shipping POV overseas

Translog Magazine

Imagine the car you shipped to Germany going to Defense Property Disposal Office. You did not properly prepare it for shipment and the engine block cracked. All of this happened because you didn't put in antifreeze. It will cost a small fortune for repairs and you don't have the money. If only you had known about proper privately owned vehicle shipping preparation!

Make no mistake, shipping a POV overseas is a difficult task. This article highlights some areas you should be concerned with when shipping a POV. Although it won't replace the counseling you receive at the Transportation Office, it will give you an idea of what's involved in the process.

Shipping a POV is limited to military personnel with permanent change of station orders to, from or between places outside CONUS, or an official change in home port of your vessel. You may ship one vehicle owned by you or your dependent, from the port serving your old duty station to the port serving your new duty station. Rules for DoD civilians shipping POVs are outlined in Volume II, JTR.

Shipping limitations

Only self-propelled wheeled motor vehicles may be shipped. This includes cars, station wagons, jeeps, motorcycles, scooters, vans, pick-ups, panel trucks converted to campers, small auto-buses, mini-vans and other vehicles which do not exceed a nine passenger capacity.

POVs shipped by the government may not exceed 20 measurement tons or 40 cubic feet. If you ship a pick-up with camper, a recreational vehicle, a panel truck converted to camper or similar vehicle exceeding 20 measurement tons, you must sign an agreement to pay costs for any measurement ton in excess of 20 tons.

You may not ship riding mowers, snowmobiles, golf carts, go-carts or minibikes. However, you may be entitled to ship these items with your household goods . Also, you may not ship leased or rented vehicles, even if the lessor grants permission.

DoD will not ship POVs to Japan and Okinawa due to Japanese environmental, safety and inspection standards. This affects all POVs built after March 31, 1976. If you ship a POV built before April 1, 1976, contact your sponsor about insurance, taxes and registration fees. You must also get written approval from your service authority in Japan.

Export preparation

If you ship your POV, you must prepare it for export. Make sure it's safe and meets host nation emission and safety standards. You should have a valid safety and emission sticker on your vehicle.

Anything not permanently installed must be removed from your POV before shipment. No flammable or hazardous substance may be shipped in your POV, including flares, waxes, oils, solvents and polishes. However, the following items may remain in your POV:

- Normal tools like jacks, tire irons, chains, fire extinguishers, tire inflators and basic hand tools such as screwdrivers, pliers, wrenches and hammers. Tools and toolboxes may not exceed the value set by your service.
- One spare tire and two snow tires with wheels either mounted or unmounted. POVs to Guam or Hawaii carry only one spare due to ocean tariff restrictions.
- Cribs and childrens' car-seats (permanent or removable). POVs to Guam or Hawaii may carry only a permanent crib or child's car-seat.
- Thermos bottles, bottle warmers, car cushions and other small comfort items may go with your POV only if they can be packed in a carton about 24" by 16" by 16."
- Nothing may remain in the trunk of POVs to Guam or Hawaii except one spare with wheel and minimum tools due to ocean tariffs.
- Catalytic converters, catalyst components (pellets), oxygen senor and pipe segments used to replace converters in overseas areas.

Special requirements

Propane must be purged from tanks in POVs, motor homes and recreational vehicles before shipment. You must either switch to propane mode and show no fuel remains, or have written certification from a propane dealer or fire department. Propane tanks for stoves, refrigerators and grills must also be certified empty.

POVs may be exposed to freezing temperatures during shipment. You should fill the POV with antifreeze .

New Policy allows wear of jungle boots

Soldiers may now wear the jungle boot in lieu of the standard combat boot, according to a Department of the Army message. However, a change to AR 670-1 restricts their wear with the green service uniform and in formations where uniform appearance is required.
The regulation change also allows the wear of commercial boots of similar design of the standard combat boot.

Your POV must contain the least possible fuel when turned-in at the terminal. The government will put about two gallons of gas back in your POV at pick-up point. POVs with diesel engines may be shipped with the tank three-quarters full.

All exterior surfaces including the undercarriage must be free of soil and foreign matter before turn-in. Steam cleaning is not required, but the terminal will not accept a POV laden with dirt and mud. Also, you may want to rust-proof and undercoat your POV before shipment. Without protection, yor POV may rust in certain climates.

Importing CB radios is banned in most countries, including dash-mounted CBs. Failure to comply will cause your POV or household goods to be held in port until the CB has been shipped out of country. All costs for removing your CB will be at your expense.

When you turn in your POV you need a valid ID card and seven copies of your PCS orders. If you or your spouse cannot deliver the POV to the port, an agent may do so. The agent must have power-of-attorney or a statement signed by the owner, proper civilian ID and other items required to ship a POV.

Export Control Program

The Export Control Program assists in protecting your POV's catalyst system where unleaded gas is not available. The ECP is limited to POVs built after 1976 and equipped with catalytic converters. It is voluntary and only DoD members on PCS orders to or from overseas may take part.

All costs for removing or refitting the catalyst system are owner-paid. But DoD civilians may be reimbursed for reinstalling a catalytic converter when their POV reenters CONUS.

Removing emission control components can be done by commercial facilities, dealerships or exchange-affiliated service stations. An EPA waiver letter is required before emission controls are removed. The waiver allows you to remove emission controls 10 working days (14 calendar days) before shipping your POV. Waivers may be obtained from local transportation or traffic management offices.

POVs going to Guam, Samoa, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Mexico and Canada keep their catalyst systems because these countries offer unleaded fuel. Vehicles returning from there do not require converter servicing if they have a manufacturer's emission control label.

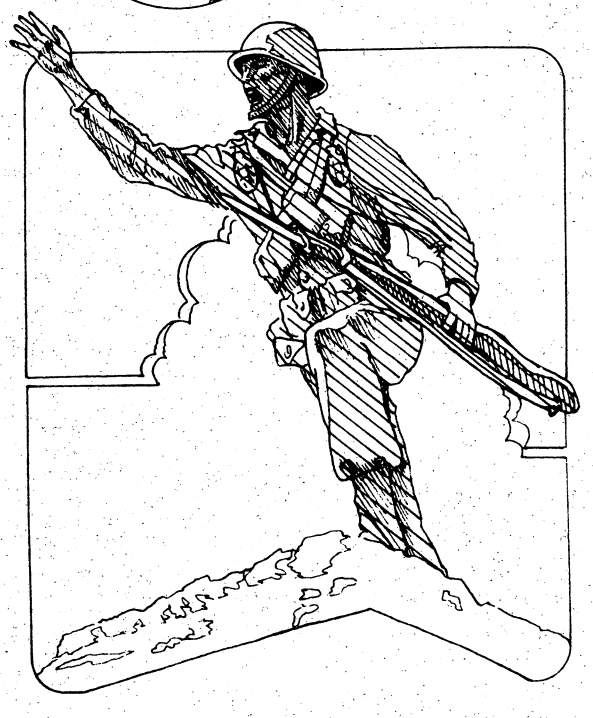
Vehicle pick-up

The following items are needed to pick up your POV at the terminal:

- Military ID.
- Sponsor's copy of DD Form 788, Private Vehicle Shipping Document.
- Complete set of keys.
- If a spouse or agent is picking up the POV they need power of attorney or authorization letter and civilian ID.

You should obtain state registration and license plates before picking up your POV. Most state motor vehicle divisions accept POV registration by mail.

When returning to CONUS, you may have your catalyst system reinstalled overseas. However, EPA has authorized DoD members five working days to reinstall emission controls or install new components if the old ones were ruined by leaded fuel.



If emission components were shipped back with the vehicle, you will receive a waiver card allowing you five days to have them reinstalled. Failure to comply is a civil violation with penalties up to $10,000 and/or impoundment of your vehicle by customs.

Inspect your POV for damage when picking it up at the terminal. Ensure the items you left in the POV are still there. Any loss or damage should be recorded on DD Form 788, Private Vehicle Shipping Document.

Appointment service works to ensure efficient care

Medical Services Command

The Patient Appointment Service at Martin Army Community Hospital works to assure that the patient, provider and other resources (such as medical records, x-rays, test results, etc.) needed for an episode of care are in the same place at the same time.

This is being accomplished in a decentralized manner, with each individual clinic scheduling its own appointments.

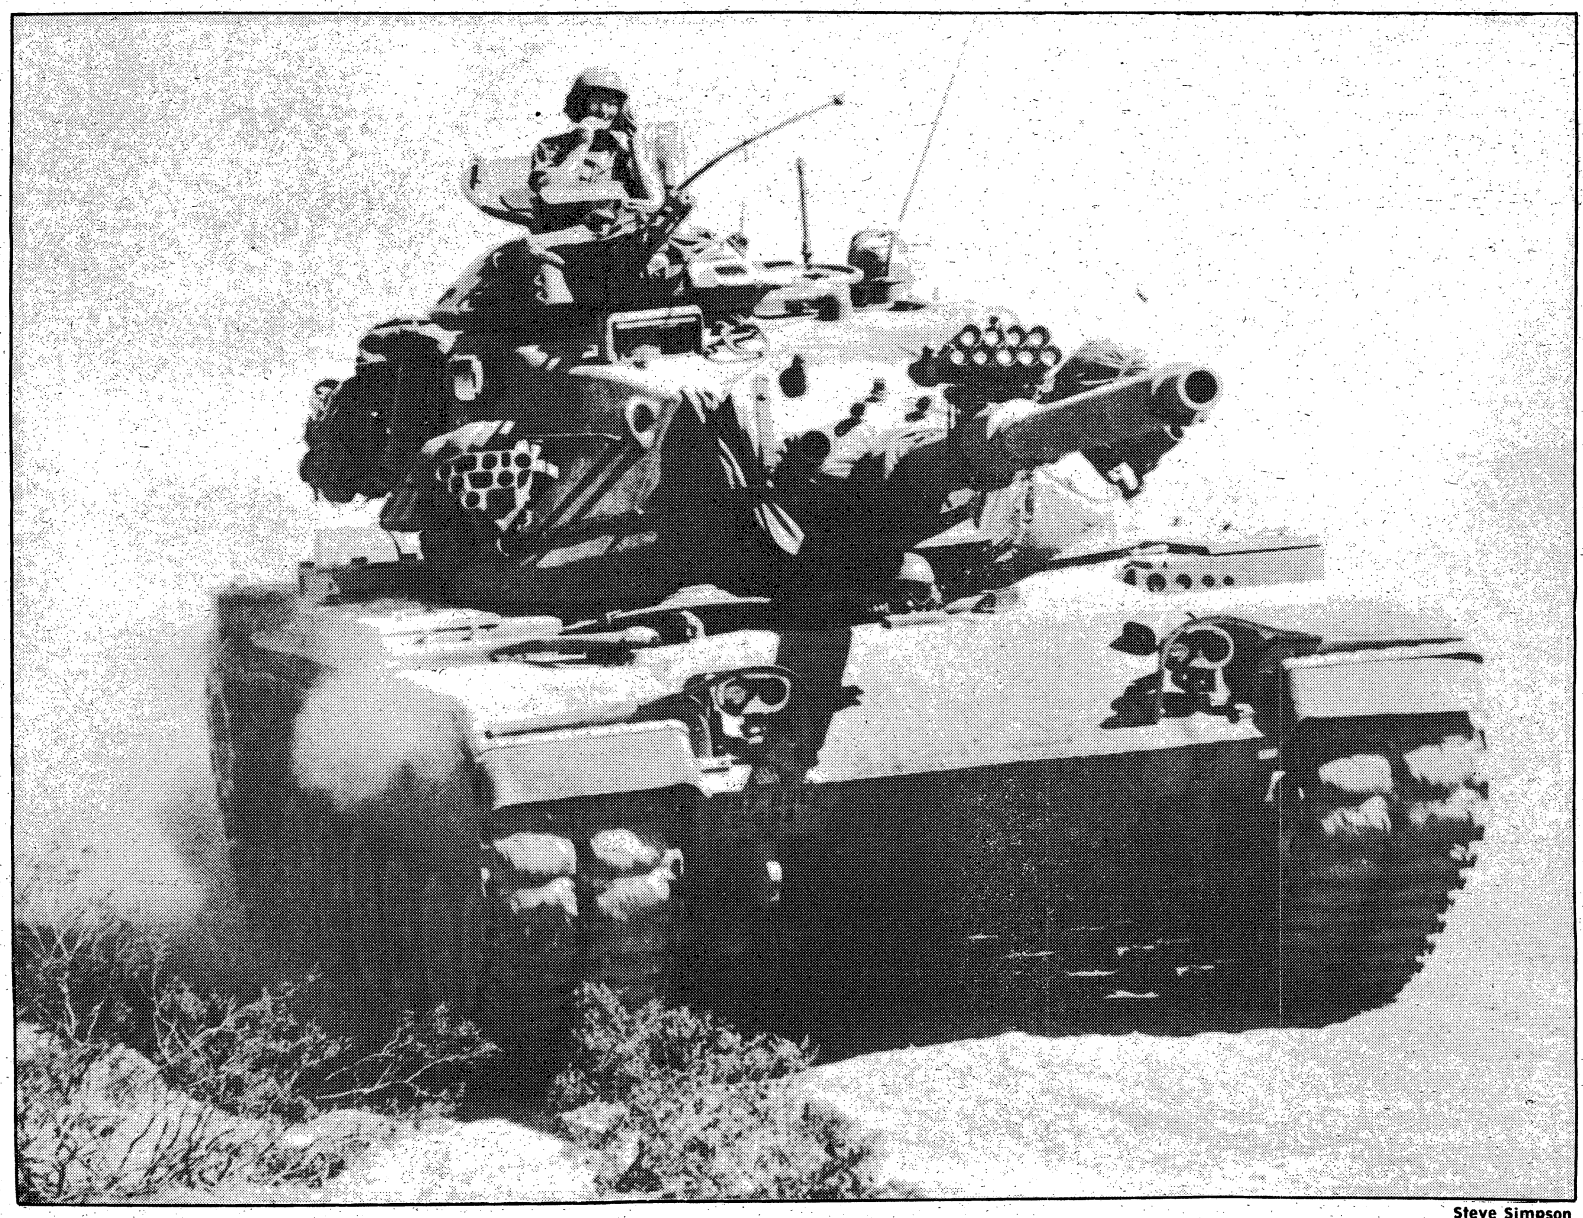
The primary care clinics are initial points of entry for health care, and appointments can be obtained directly from those clinics.

Active duty soldiers not assigned to Family Practice must use their assigned troop medical clinic as their initial entry point for health care, however.

Appointments for the specialty clinics normally require a referral from a primary care physician. These consultations should be taken directly to the specialty clinic concerned so that an appointment can be made.

All appointments must be promptly kept if the Patient Appointment Service is to make maximum use of health care provider time in scheduling appointments for the Fort Benning community.

If you find it impossible to keep an appointment, call the clinic in advance so that other patients may be given your time.



The following list provides needed information on making an appointment for health care.

197th returns from Gallant Eagle '86

by Bill Branley
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Nearly 1,400 soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade — grinning triumphantly in dusty, battle-worn uniforms — returned to Fort Benning last week after a round of desert training in California.

The soldiers battled a harsh climate as well as an opposing force during Joint Readiness Exercise Gallant Eagle 1986, which ended recently at Twenty-nine Palms, Calif. The exercise pitted the mechanized unit against an air mobile force from the 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky.

The Brigade's key fighting element was Task Force 3-7 Infantry, which consisted of maneuver companies of mechanized infantry and tanks, an anti-armor company, a scout platoon and a host of other attachments and supporting units.

Capt. Michael Curry, assistant operations officer for the task force, explained that the unit conducted an attack, a defense and other operations against air mobile troops.

"In the first mission we attacked two air mobile battalions," Curry said. "After that we fought against one of their battalions augmented by one of our own mechanized companies."

The force-on-force training was followed by a type of live-fire drill known as a fire coordination exercise. The participants — who were from many different Army units and other services — launched an array of projectiles according to a detailed time schedule.

Col. William Hartzog, Brigade commander, said, "This type of deployment is vitally important for a heavy force. It involves a lot of soldiers performing dangerous missions with a lot of heavy equipment. However, it was done smoothly and without serious incident."

The commander added that Gallant Eagle also provided units of the 197th with the opportunity to maneuver in relatively unrestricted terrain.

Most of the soldiers who returned home last week agreed that the number one enemy in the desert was the weather. Temperatures peaked at 118 degrees for many consecutive days.

Overall, Gallant Eagle 1986 presented many challenges to the people who took part in it. Thousands of tons of equipment were shipped by air, rail and sea to the exercise site. Moving equipment and vehicles off ships involved a complex Logistics Over the Shore operation, followed by a 270-mile convoy at night.

Brigade soldiers who deployed to Gallant Eagle were from the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry; 197th Support Battalion; Troop A, 15th Cavalry; 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery; Headquarters, 197th Infantry Brigade; and the 72nd Engineer Company. In addition, several soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, deployed as controllers.

Support staff kept busy filling supply needs

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Any 197th Infantry Brigade soldier who ate meals, drank water or refueled vehicles during Joint Readiness Exercise Gallant Eagle at Twenty-nine Palms, Calif., was on the receiving end of the efforts of soldiers from the 197th Support Battalion.

The Support Battalion also performed such combat sustaining missions as transportation, maintenance, supply and provided medical support to the Brigade as well as other attached XVIII Airborne Corps units.

Throughout the desert training exercise, soldiers from Company D performed direct support maintenance missions without fail in the searing desert heat.

1st Lt. Cindy Sbrocco, a Company D maintenance shop officer, said: "At times we couldn't even touch some repair parts because they were so hot from the sun. But, overall we had less maintenance problems because the Brigade units are used to working in the desert."

Sbrocco added, "The exercise also helped the maintenance contact teams become a more cohesive unit working with 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry."

Soldiers from Company B ran the medical clearing station that provided support to the Brigade and Corps units.

"The clearing station performed extremely well," said Capt. Edward Tappel, Brigade surgeon. "They supported more people than they had anticipated."

"We went out to California expecting to be supporting only the 197th," said SSgt. James Gut, a Company B medic. "But we ended up supporting other Corps units too."

Despite training in an environment suited for heat injuries, the clearing station saw only scattered cases.

"I think the Brigade soldiers are pretty well versed in heat injury prevention," Tappel said. "Probably the single biggest complaint was chapped lips."

Other supply missions were fulfilled by Company C. The company provided transportation assets, and kept combat and utility vehicles rolling with constant fuel supplies."

Soldiers from Co. C also worked with other Corps units to keep soldiers fed.

Retiring commander's prayer offers thanks for Army career

USAIC Chaplain's Office

After 29 years of service in the Army, Col. Edward Szvetecz retired and relinquished command of the Army Training Center in a ceremony Tuesday at Wetherby Field.

His first act after handing on the ATC colors was to offer inspiration to soldiers and participants at the event. He shared his prayer of gratitude.

"Lord, thank you for:

- a beautiful career in the most honorable profession of arms;
- for the many dear and true friends made over these 29 years — may their friendships last forever;
- for my leaders and mentors — for the outstanding command climate they provided and their patience and understanding as I grew;
- for the soldiers I led — they are the ones that made it happen and deserve all the credit for the accolades I've received;
- for the senior leadership and their focus on caring for people — may it always remain the top priority;
- for the exceptional raw talent of today's soldiers — Lord, keep filling our ranks with America's best;
- for the civilian communities of selfless and sincere patriots who support today's soldiers;
- for the dedicated support of post staff and agencies, who are absolutely essential to mission accomplishment;
- for the professionalism of the 29th Regiment, our inseparable partner in training;
- for the outstanding affiliation and relationship with the USAR Training Division;
- for being American — the greatest privilege on earth;
- for the red, white and blue, standing taller and prouder than ever before in history;
- for helping Pam and I celebrate today as a new beginning with new opportunities and joys to be uncovered;
- for all the good wishes from all these special people present and those here in heart;
- but mostly, I want to thank you, Lord, for a loving and caring wife and family — may you help me in the years to come to give back to them just a fraction of what they've give me.
- Amen!"

Catholics plan celebration for Feast of Assumption

USAIC Chaplain's Office

On Friday the Catholic/Christian Tradition keeps the Feast of the Assumption of Mary, a day for honoring the Mother of Jesus. The church celebrates her complete union with God in his kingdom.

Mary is a pattern or model for all believing people: a fully human person who continued to grow in the knowledge and love of God. She responded to his word and his will in faith.

Mary reminds us to believe that ideals are possible. Her special day encourages us to be optimistic.

This year, soldiers focus on Army values: loyalty, personal responsibility, selfless service.

Sometimes the nature and stress of our work will cause us to get cynical about these ideals and move us toward a negative outlook. This pessimism is expressed in a "worst possible scenario" approach to our profession and to life itself.

None of us can claim perfection in living these values; but growth is our mission. Believing that they are possible to achieve and being optimistic because "in God we trust" will lead us to accomplish our mission.

Columbus minister feels kinship with Fort Benning paratroopers

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Tommy Williams was a man with a mission 41 years ago: serve as an occupation soldier in Japan. The former airborne soldier is on a new mission now, serving as the pastor of the South Columbus United Methodist Church, a church built expressly because of Fort Benning.

Williams' church came about as the result of an idea by Columbus leaders that Fort Benning was going to rapidly expand due to World War II.

The leaders believed that a church, close to Fort Benning, would be needed to serve the thousands of soldiers that would be trained here. Rapidly acting on this idea, the church was built on Benning Drive and dedicated in 1942, shortly after the U.S. entered the war.

"I entered the Army in 1945, taking my basic training at Fort Rucker, Ala.," Williams said.

"Myself and four other men in my unit were on orders to Fort Benning to receive additional training. We were earmarked for the invasion of Japan. But they dropped the atomic bombs on Japan and the invasion was called off. That cancelled our orders and I was immediately shipped out as an occupation soldier to Japan," said the quiet spoken Williams, still trim looking and fit, but with his head covered in white hair.

As an enlisted man with the Army's Engineer Corps, Williams landed in a Japan that was devastated by years of bombing and supporting the Japanese war effort in the Pacific and China.

"Being in Japan, I saw the tragedy of war, the rubble, the hopelessness. I think that was when I first thought about becoming a minister so I could help others," he said.

While in Japan Williams fulfilled a longtime dream by becoming a paratrooper.

"I was assigned to the 7th Army but the 11th Airborne Division was looking for airborne volunteers.

"I said 'why not,' signed up and was sent to the jump school at Sendai. We had no fancy towers or anything. Just mock doors to practice our exits and platforms to do parachute landing falls from. After one week of ground training we were put in the air and out the door of C-47 aircraft. I still remember the physical conditioning and the runs. Oh brother, do I remember the runs," he said.

After an honorable discharge from the Army in 1947, sporting jump wings proudly on his uniform jacket, Williams attended various colleges. He then spent three years at the New Orleans Seminary, getting his theological training.

"I've been ministering ever since," he said.

William's church has had chaplains from Fort Benning preach when regular pastors were sick. The church suffered a decline in membership when the 1st Cavalry Division left Benning for Vietnam in 1966.

Williams believes that his military background destined him to lead the South Columbus church.

"I'm proud of my military service. I've had three sons go through Fort Benning for infantry training and one son even completed jump school.

"I and my family and my church have close ties to the military and Fort Benning and I want to strengthen those ties.

"But I sure enjoyed jumping out of those airplanes back in '46," Williams said wistfully.

Army News Service

Imagine you're a helicopter pilot . . . flying at night in a primitive country. Except for the few major cities, there is no electricity, so there are no lights to use as a guide. None of the navigational aids you normally use are available to you.

Mountains loom in the darkness all around you. They tower as high as 9,800 feet — close to the operational limit of your aircraft. They make radio contact almost impossible, so you cannot communicate with the base you just left, or with your destination base.

"It's dead reckoning flying down here," said Capt. Curtis M. Anderson of the 868th Medical Detachment, part of the 205th Medical Battalion, Missouri Air National Guard.

The pressure of flying in conditions like this is enough to test the mettle of any flight crew. But it has become a matter of routine for the U.S. Army aviators and support personnel operating from forward base Camp Oso Grande in the remote highlands of North central Honduras. Their mission: To lend aviation support to "General Terencio Sierra '86," a combined road-building and training exercise between the U.S. Army and the Honduran armed forces.

The aviation team consists of pilots, flight operations personnel, flight medics, maintenance people and air traffic controllers.

Fort Benning Schools registration scheduled for Tuesday

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

School registration for post school children in kindergarten through eighth grades will be conducted at each of the Fort Benning schools Tuesday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Students who have pre-registered during the kindergarten round-up as well as students who attended school at Fort Benning last year should complete the registration process on that day.

Elementary students should register at the schools indicated below:

• Students entering kindergarten through third grade who live in McGraw Manor (off Custer Road) register at McBride School on Custer Road.

McGraw Manor residents entering fourth and fifth grades who live in McGraw Manor should register at White School on 1st Division Road.

•All elementary school students from Bouton Heights, north of Nash Court, (inclosure No. 1, map II, zone A), register at Loyd School on Sante Fe Road.

•Bouton Heights students who live south of Roark Court (inclosure No. 1, map II, zone B) and are entering kindergarten and first grade register at Patch School on Lumpkin Road and Baltzell Street.

Second through fifth graders from Bouton Heights should register at White School.

•Elementary school students who live in Block 9 and officer quarters indicated on inclosure No. 2, map III, zone D register at Dexter School on Yeager Avenue.

Sixth, seventh and eighth grade students from all housing areas should report to Don C. Faith Middle School for registration.

A student must attain the age of 5 on or before Sept. 1 to enter kindergarten in the Fort Benning Schools. Birth certificates or other proof of birth will be required for children to be enrolled in either kindergarten or first grade unless they attended kindergarten at Fort Benning during the last school year.

Kindergarten and first grade students entering school for the first time are required to have had a physical examination. Information regarding school physicals can be obtained from Martin Army Community Hospital at 544-3862.

All students entering Fort Benning Schools for the first time must present a record of immunization and a certificate of eye, ear, and dental examination at registration. New students in first through eighth grades should also bring a report card or a grade placement record.

High school students ninth through 12th grade who did not attend a public high school in Muscogee County last year and who have not already pre-registered for the 1986-87 school year should report immediately to the Columbus Roberts Center at 539 Brown Avenue in Columbus to pre-register.

Those high school students who attended a local public high

VA Q&A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I filed a claim for compensation about three months ago and have had my exam. I have not heard anything from the VA. How can I find out the status of my claim?

A — Initial claims often take longer than 3 months to process. You should wait a little longer before checking on your claim. If you are concerned, however, you may call the local VA regional office.

Q — Does a widow whose VA benefits were restored after termination of a remarriage regain her veterans preference for civil service?

A — No. Civil service preference is not restored after the remarriage is terminated.

Students learn more than techniques in karate; 'dojo kun rules' offer high standard of conduct

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"I'm not teaching people how to be bullies here. I'm teaching people self-defense. The most important thing is not to defeat an opponent but to defeat one's self, that inside challenge. I and my class train to be better people, not to fight," says karate instructor Ed Erb, a sergeant first class with the U.S. Army Ranger School.

Erb teaches Shoto Kan karate three times a week to 24 students, ranging in age from 5 to 35, at the Youth Activities Gym.

Shoto Kan karate, according to Erb, is one of many variations of karate that exist today. Erb explained that karate came from Japan and Korea and that his style is Japanese.

"Karate means 'empty hand.' I teach empty-hand defense. Thousands of years of practice brought about a lot of different styles of karate and most enthusiasts concentrate in one style," he said.

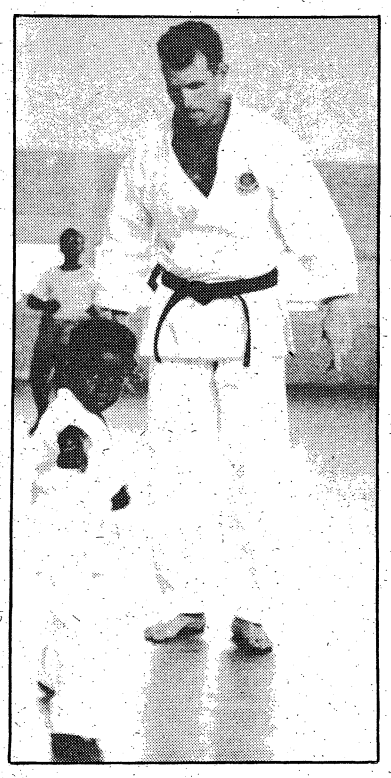
"A kata is a ritualized, formal set of movements based on the presumption that you are defending against several imaginary opponents at once. Different movements have different meanings with a succession of blocks, kicks and punches practiced," Erb said.

The Youth Activities Gym becomes a 'dojo kun,' Japanese for training hall, when Erb and his students enter.

"Every dojo kun has a set of rules for all who enter. Dojo rules are actually, on a large scale, the rules for life," he said.

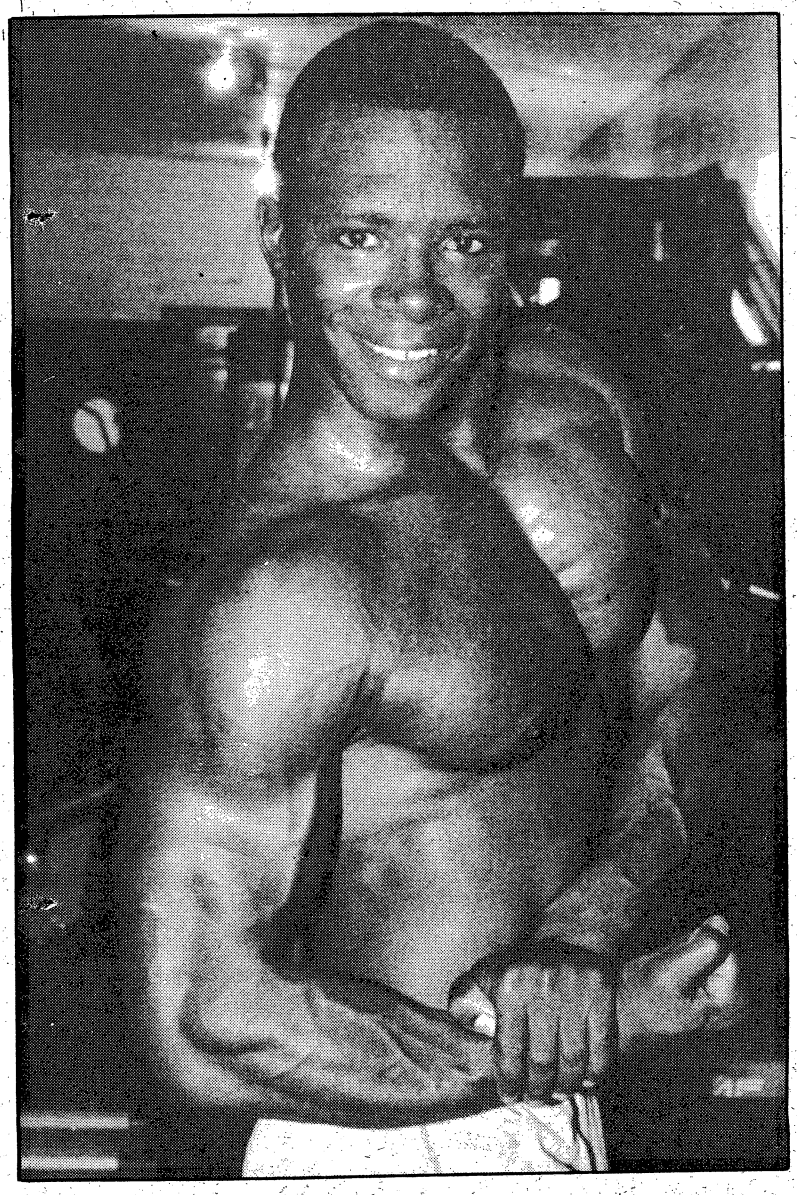
After a one hour training session Erb's students sit on their knees in a straight line, in back of Erb, who is also sitting, and recite the dojo kun rules.

"Our dojo has five rules: seek perfection of character, endeavor, respect others, be faithful, and refrain from violent behavior. I tell the kids especially that these are rules for living their lives," the instructor said.



If it is brought to Erb's attention that a student, child or adult, is involved in provoking a fight then that student cannot practice karate for a week and must sit through the training sessions.

"My students obviously want to practice. I won't tolerate them using the karate I'm teaching to bully or intimidate others," he said.



Erb is a member of the Karate Association of Hawaii, which is affiliated with the Japan Karate Association, and he has been involved in karate for 10 years, holding a black belt.

"There are four belts in Shoto Kan karate. Beginners start with a white belt and work up to a blue, purple, brown and then black. Each different belt has its own level of difficulty," said Erb.

Erb, in conjunction with Youth Activities, is looking for additional students. Anyone interested in Shoto Kan karate may call Erb at 323-2731 or the YAC at 545-3070.

Coaching one of his younger karate charges, SFC Ed Erb ensures the student uses correct form in punching.

SSgt. Howard Mullen shows the winning form that took the Southeast Regional Bodybuilding Championships for him in the middleweight division.

First-time competitor comes out on top at regional bodybuilding competition

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A Fort Benning athlete commanded the recent Southeast Regional Bodybuilding Championships.

In his first competition, SSgt. Howard Mullen, U. S. Army Infantry School Ranger Department, pressed his way to the first place position in the middleweight class.

Could Mullen have been considered an amateur in that this was his first competition, or is he a seasoned veteran because he'd trained four years to be a winner?

"I started working out in the gym about four years ago, and could see the changes in my body," said Mullen. "I wanted to make sure that when I hit the stage, I would be a winner."

When the 28-year-old Ranger came into the Army 10 years ago, he weighed in at 112 pounds. His training program took him to the middleweight division where he tipped the scale at 175 for the Regional competition.

Competing against bodybuilders from the Carolinas, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and Arkansas, Mullen was not immediately sure of his timing.

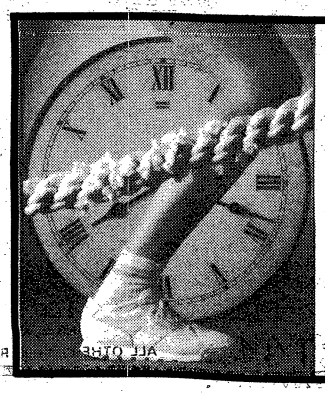
"I was nervous at first, and really didn't know what to expect. But after the pose down I heard the crowd's reaction and knew that I could win it," he said.

The training sessions have been long and hard for Mullen, but he continues to work on building more for future competitions.

"You've got to feel it, to believe it," Mullen said.

He must be believing it. Mullen worked out seven days a week, starting three weeks before competition.

He attributes his victory to 2nd Lt. Franklin Roach and wife Denise, who helped him clear the final hurdle.



"I met the Roaches two weeks before competition. At that time, my body was still retaining water," Mullen said. "It was Franklin Roach who worked me, I do mean worked me, for seven days each week.

"The Regiment gave me great support, but I was really pumped up to see the Morgan Team cheering me on, led by Capt. Guy A. LoFaro," said Mullen.

Mullen revealed the requirements of the serious bodybuilder.

"Bodybuilding is for everyone, male, female, young or old. But a bodybuilder must be prepared to train long and hard; maintain a strict diet in that nutrition plays about an 85 percent role in bodybuilding; and must always be prepared to learn more.

"You've got to feel it, to believe it."

Youth lands 'seven pounder' while fishing in Russ Pond

by Thad Roberson
USAG Public Affairs Office

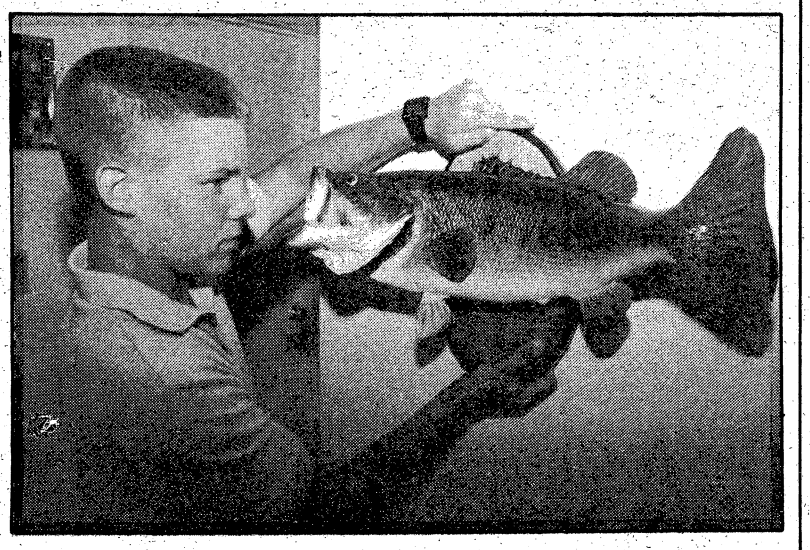
Did you hear about the one that almost got away — but didn't?

"I've been fishing all my life, but this is the largest bass I've ever caught," said 12-year-old, Ed Silverthorn.

Silverthorn was fishing at Russ Pond recently when he hooked a 24-inch large-mouth bass weighing 7 pounds 2 ounces.

"I had to fight with him, but it was not the type struggle I'd expected from a bass of that size," Silverthorn said.

Although this was his largest bass catch, the Berrien Springs, Michigan native has landed a 17 pound salmon while dredging Lake Michigan.



Silverthorn visits his relatives, Cindy and Dough Harper, each summer to cast his favorite "Nip Diddee" on the waters of Russ Pond.

"I lost the yellow and green lure that I used to catch the bass, but found one of a different color that I hope will be as effective," he said.

Silverthorn fishes regularly and says it is his favorite pastime.

"I get out to fish at least three times a week," he said. "But, when I'm at home I go to my Grandpa's pond everyday."

Russ Pond has been a proven winner for Silverthorn and other Fort Benning youth. Russ is a children's fishing pond and anglers must be under 16 years old to use the facility.

Ed Silverthorn displays his newly mounted bass.

AMERICA'S TOUGHEST SECOND JOB.

It's in the National Guard and Reserve, and your employees don't do it for the money or for the glory. They do it because they believe in a strong America.

And the Guard and Reserve is strong. It's one-third of our nation's defense. So when your employees ask you for time to train to help make our country more secure, give them that time. Because this is one second job that will help them do their first job better.

If you're an employer and want more information, write Employer Support, P.O. Drawer 9660, Arlington, VA 22209-0660. Or call 1-800-336-4590. In Virginia and Guam, call collect 202-696-5307.

SPECIAL DEALS.

WE'RE OFFERING LOW PRICES ON SELECT FX MODELS DURING HARLEY-DAVIDSON'S INDEPENDENCE ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION.

In celebration of Harley-Davidson's five years of independent operation since 1981, we're offering unheard-of prices on some new models from the series we launched that year: FXR Super Glide, FXRS Low Rider, FXRT Sport Slide and FXRD Grand Touring Edition. They're all powered by Harley Davidson's 80 cubic inch V2 Evolution engines set in computer-designed frames, and they are all at very low prices now and until all units are sold!

Now is the time to check out a Harley. You may never see a better deal on these bikes.

And while you're there, take a look at Archie's Trade-in Specials also being sold at unheard-of prices. We are making room for new '87 models, everything must go!

THINGS ARE DIFFERENT ON A HARLEY.™

These special prices are brought to you by Harley-Davidson and participating dealers. Your participating dealer is an equal contributor; therefore, actual price, down payment, and payments will depend on dealer. Void where prohibited by law.

100 YEARS COMMEMORATIVE DESIGN

To celebrate the German automotive centennial, we have commissioned a special edition of the Audi 5000S sedan. It is an automobile with nearly a century of engineering advancements behind it, however, you have far less time to acquire one.

The additional amenities like Alcantara suede sport seats with leather bolsters, a 10-speaker sound system and power sunroof have made these unique Audis move quickly. And now, only a few remain.

The Commemorative Design Audi 5000CS sedan. Come in and test drive one soon. After all, timing is everything.

The art of engineering.

Some civilian workers face random drug tests

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will begin testing some civilian employees for illegal drug use beginning next month.

The testing will be limited to civilian workers in the law enforcement, aviation and drug abuse counseling fields.

Twenty law enforcement personnel, 18 aviation workers and 28 clinical workers in the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control office will have to take urinalysis tests on a regular basis.

People to be tested include federal police, a pilot, aviation mechanics and inspectors, two air traffic controllers and technicians and counselors in the drug abuse and control office, said Willie Varner, chief of the Management and Employee Relation Branch, Civilian Personnel Office.

He said a person who tests positive for illegal drug use will be given counseling and possibly transferred to a "non-critical job" at Fort Benning or elsewhere. If a job is not available, the employee could be fired.

Employees who refuse to take the test also face transfer or dismissal, he said.

The 66 employees will face random urinalysis tests in the future.

Five soldiers heroes after rescuing trapped worker

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment PAO

Five soldiers of the 29th Infantry Regiment are being hailed as heroes after saving the life of a civilian construction worker, said Capt. Paul Niche, adjutant, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

SP4 Frank Stewart, SP4 Wayne Sease, SP4 Elmer March III, Sgt. John Holzapfel and SSgt. Richard Lynch rescued William Foster when the side of a ditch collapsed on him last week at a construction site in the Kelley Hill area.

Foster, an employee of Cleveland Construction Company, was supposedly clearing the ditch to lay underground pipe, the five soldiers related.

Probably, a shift in the wet ground and no wall support for the approximate 18-feet-deep hole caused the disturbance, the soldiers said.

Even so, they worked together — shoveling dirt, controlling a curious crowd and employing immediate first aid techniques — to save the man.

Stewart distinguished himself as he leaped into the already

Women voters present formidable force

'Gender gap' becoming clearer 63 years after 19th Amendment

by Dawn Kilpatrick
Bayonet Editor

"The vote is won. Seventy-two years the battle for this privilege has been waged, but human affairs with their eternal change move on without pause. Progress is calling you to make no pause."

Carrie Chapman Catt, noted suffragist leader, was full of promise and hope in her words to new women voters in 1920. The president of the National American Woman Suffrage Association could have had no idea that it would take nearly 60 years for women to match the voter turnout rate of men.

There could have been many reasons women did not flock to the polls to exercise their newly realized privilege in the 1920s.

The Nineteenth Amendment was ratified by the requisite 36 states only two and a half months before the national election that year. Some election practices in southern states discouraged any minority turnout — men and women. These included poll taxes, literacy tests, strict residency requirements and frequent registration requirements, to name only a few.

Voting was a new experience and a new responsibility that, because of societal pressure, many women did not feel comfortable with initially. However, according to experts, voting rates for any group entering the electorate are usually low.

Over the 1960s and 70s the gap in voter turnout between men and women gradually narrowed until in the 1980 presidential election, virtually no difference in voter turnout rates was evidenced.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, women have outnumbered men in numbers of eligible persons who actually vote since 1964. Women have been a majority of the population since the end of World War II. With more women than men in the voting age population and with voting rates for women as high as voting rates for men, the majority of the voters will be women.

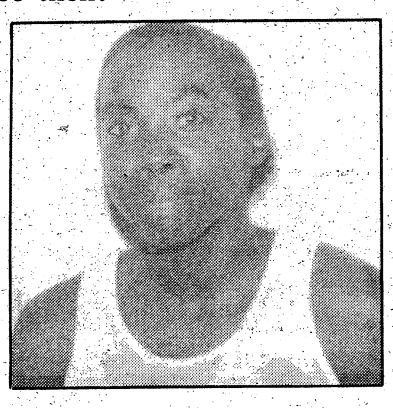
The majority of the voters will be women.

"The women's vote."
"The gender gap."

Are women, as a group, becoming a political force to be reckoned with? Let's hope so. Think of the implications. If women could become united behind causes, we could catapult our society years forward.

"Women and Politics: The Visible Majority" by Baxter-Lansing in 1983 stated: "With their strength in numbers, leadership experience and organizational skills, women now have the best opportunity in the 60 years since suffrage to exercise political clout. Their clout is especially powerful in the closely balanced electoral system of the United States. When winning margins are smaller, a well-organized voting bloc can often determine election outcomes, as women demonstrated in 1982."

Our goal now should be to ensure women, as a group, turn out to vote. The value of forcing candidates to deal with issues that are important to women cannot be stressed enough.



Women's groups are using a variety of techniques to cement a place in politics. It is important that women be equal participants with men in voting and determining policies that affect our lives.

Various voices

The Nineteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution was passed on August 25, 1920 giving women the right to vote. What are some of the strides that women have made since then?

Sgt. Starr Lee, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade "Since the 1920s, women's self-images have changed for the better. Women were very unsure then of our capabilities outside the home, but we now know that we are as intelligent, responsible and competent as any man in any field and prove it everyday."

Pvt. 2 Carleen Charles, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade "Being given the right to vote has taken women away from the image of being brainless and showing that we can accomplish the same things as men outside of the home. Women have used the right to vote to bring about the necessary changes toward equality.

Capt. Mark Washechek, Infantry Officer Advanced Course "We now have a woman on the Supreme Court. Women have progressed in banking, accounting and other professional fields. They've voted consistently and have turned a number of elections."

SP4 Joseph R. Hansen, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry Brigade "They have come a long way, especially in the business world. No longer are they subjected to staying home, but are able to pursue careers. It has proven to be a fantastic role reversal in the United States."

Dorothy Jackson, family member "There have been better jobs for women. The women of the United States are attaining the long sought after executive positions in major corporations. There has recently been a lady vice presidential candidate. Women are continually moving forward."

Reader learns value of buckling up

Dear Editor:

"They're too confining. My clothes get so wrinkled. I'm only going to the store."

These are typical excuses for not wearing a safety belt. Until a recent incident, I used these and many more. I now have a new attitude about safety belt protection, and after reading the following, hopefully you will to.

On July 29, I was traveling south on I-185 to Fort Benning going to work. As I crested a hill near the St. Mary's Road exit, I was traveling at approximately 55 to 60 mph when I realized that the traffic ahead was at a complete standstill.

I immediately slammed on my brakes, which caused me to lock and the rearend of my car to "fishtail." Within a split second, I was heading towards the median.

My car went into the air and turned completely over before it hit the ground and then rolled several times, finally landing upside down.

When my vehicle finally stopped, several people gathered around to assist in getting the car back on its wheels. I was not too sure of my condition as I was hanging upside down in the vehicle.

Several extremely nice people were supportive and assured me that I was in excellent condition and that they could see no injuries. I was taken to MACH where I was examined, treated for minor muscle strain in my neck and back, and released.

Special thanks to SFC Rodney Russell and all of the other people for their kindness and support at the scene of the accident.

Due to the mandatory law on post, I was wearing my safety belt. What could have been a fatal accident is now only a reminder of my own vulnerability.

To all of you, please take the time to buckle up.

Bayonet editor invites readers to have say

The Bayonet invites readers to write letters to the Editor. If you disagree with a story written in the paper or wish to air your views on a topic, feel free to write.

The Army theme this year is values. For this reason, we presently are specifically requesting letters on how values have helped people deal with difficult life experiences, or what values have taught them.

We ask that writers try to write about specific instances and situations, rather than writing in general philosophical terms.

We ask that you hold your correspondence to no more than 250 words. All letters should be typed double-spaced, or hand written legibly.

Please include your name, address and telephone number so we can contact you if necessary. Only your name and city will be printed. It is our policy not to withhold names. No pen names will be printed.

Letters are subject to standard editing and condensing.

Misstatements of fact will be corrected.

Generally no more than one letter a month from a writer will be published.

Poetry and open letters will not be published.

Those letters we choose not to use will not be sent back. We also cannot provide personal responses to individual letters.

You may bring your letters to our office in Room 601, Building 4, or mail it to: Editor, The Bayonet, Room 601, Building 4, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

If you have any questions, please feel free to call our office at 545-2201/4622.

Values found in Code of Conduct kept POW alive for seven years

by Karen L. Eure
Training and Doctrine Command

FORT MONROE, Va. — It has been said that it is easier to fight for one's values than it is to live up to them.

Ask retired captain Navy James P. Mulligan. Mulligan endured 2,522 days — more than seven years — of torture as a prisoner of war in North Vietnam because of his firm commitment to live up to his values.

The values in question? The Code of Conduct.

Captured in 1966, Mulligan was imprisoned in Hanoi. "I was treated as a war criminal and tortured because the Vietnamese couldn't understand that I was required to live up to the Code of Conduct," said Mulligan.

For Mulligan, the value of the code establishes how the role of the POW will be played in a war situation. "It acts as a starting point for the POW. It allows you to build a military organization and a cohesiveness among the other POWs," he said. "It provides mutual support because it applies to all fighting men across the board."

Mulligan, now a resident of Virginia Beach, Va., also served his country during the Korea War. He said he believes the results of the Korean War, compared to those of the Vietnam War, show a difference, in part, because of the code.

"During the Korean War, the code didn't exist so the conduct of the POWs varied. There was chaos in some of the camps because there was no guidance of military rules that could be enforced," said Mulligan.

"A lot of POWs in Korea died because of a lack of organization. Others returned home and were brought up on criminal charges because of their conduct toward other soldiers. In fact, 21 elected to stay back instead of face charges."

President Eisenhower established the Code of Conduct which Mulligan says allowed him to survive his Vietnam experience and come back.

The code, as written, states:

1. I am an American fighting man. I serve in the forces which guard my country and our way of life. I am prepared to give my life in their defense.

2. I will never surrender of my own free will. If in command, I will never surrender my men while they still have the means to resist.

3. If I am captured, I will continue to resist by all means available. I will make every effort to escape and aid others to escape. I will accept neither parole nor special favors from the enemy.

4. If I become a prisoner of war. I will keep faith with my fellow prisoners. It will give no information or take part in any action which might be harmful to my comrades. If I am senior, I will take command. If not, I will obey the lawful orders of those appointed over me and will back them up in every way.

5. When questioned, should I become a prisoner of war, I am bound to give only name, rank, service number, and date of birth. I will evade answering further questions to the utmost of my ability. I will make no oral or written statements disloyal to my country and its allies or harmful to their cause.

6. I will never forget that I am an American fighting man, responsible for my actions,and dedicated to the principles which made my country free. I will trust in my God and in the United States of America.

The code is standard; however, Mulligan and his fellow POWs adjusted it to meet individual needs, he said.

"We resisted to the best of our abilities but there's no easy way out when you are a prisoner," said Mulligan. "The beatings, starvation and years of solitary confinement were the enemy's way of trying to bring me to their side."

As a result of the code, when the senior-ranking POW was under too much pressure, the command was passed to the next ranking officer, Mulligan said. After the POW leader regrouped, the lead was passed back up. "If they broke you, we didn't care. You did the best that you could."

Even 13 years after his release, the harsh tone in which he imitates his captors and the quickness with which he can still relay the POW communication code are still there. Even more, the seriousness with which he talks about the Code of Conduct is embedded in his character.

"I couldn't forget them even if I wanted to," said Mulligan. "I think the good Lord only lets you go as far as you can. You get to that point and the Lord helps you. Man's quest for survival is not easily overcome — and the code was a tremendous aid to us."

Mulligan said he hopes that his stress on the importance of the values listed in the code will reach the young fighting men of today. He points out that the code isn't simply words printed on a card crammed somewhere behind a social security card.

"It was like a bible to us," he said.

However, as irony would have it, the very code that "put the POWs in the right rame of mine over there" faced opposition at home.

Sometimes it is easier to fight for values than it is to live up to them. Ask Mulligan: he did both — and survived.

197th soldiers sharpen NBC defensive skills

Story and photos
by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

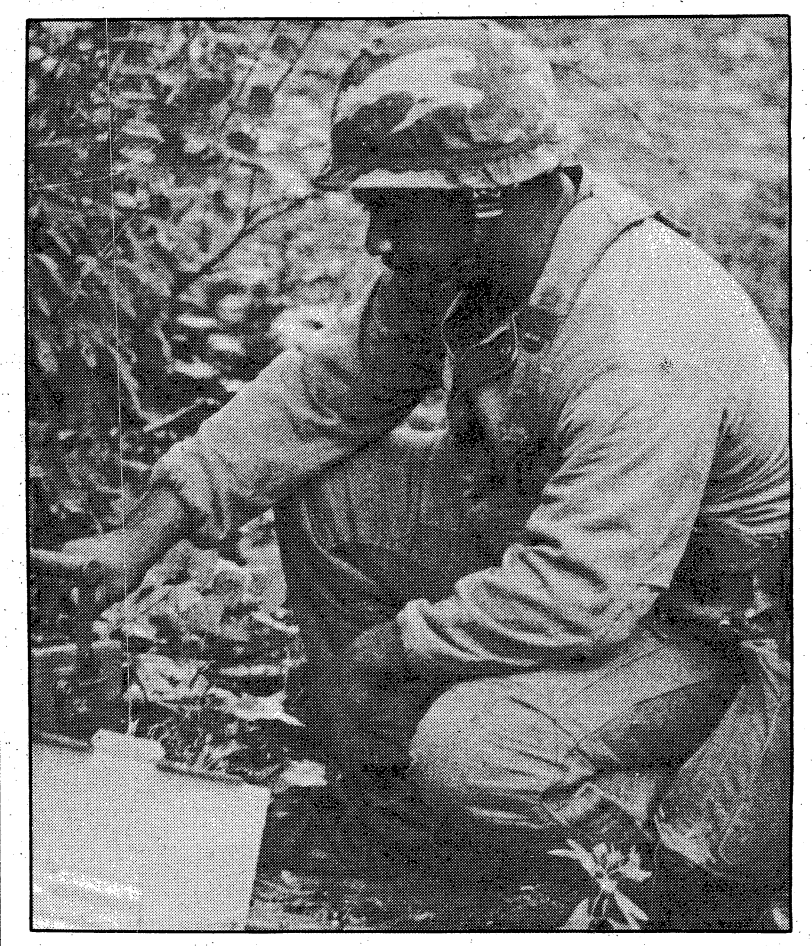
Today the Army is stressing the importance of a solid defense against nuclear, chemical and biological warfare. Soldiers are being trained and informed more thoroughly in chemical detection and defense.

In the 197th Infantry Brigade, each company has a special NBC Defense Team consisting of soldiers who are trained in NBC skills. These skills include detection of chemical threats, protection of soldiers and equipment and identification of certain chemicals.

Once each year, each company's NBC Defense Team is evaluated by the Brigade Chemical section.

The evaluators look to see that the NBC Defense Team can perform all of its functions, such as decontamination, operating chemical alarms and conducting radiological monitoring. A 13-man team usually accomplishes these missions by organizing small "sub-teams."

Each sub-team has a different mission. The Control Party, for example, keeps the company commander informed on the NBC situation. The Radiological Monitoring Team monitors radiation levels in an area where soldiers will be working.



The evaluators grade the team on how the reaction to certain chemical or biological hazards. Also, each sub-team must be proficient in the operation of various pieces of equipment used by the group.

Each team performs its missions in full MOPP gear in order for the simulation to be more like an NBC battlefield environment. It takes each company three hours to go through a scenario or mission. Each team is graded on its mission and reaction time.

"From a Brigade standpoint, we see how each team can operate and fight in a chemical environment," explained Capt. Fred Jones, the Brigade chemical officer. "This gives the company a chance to see what they need to work on."

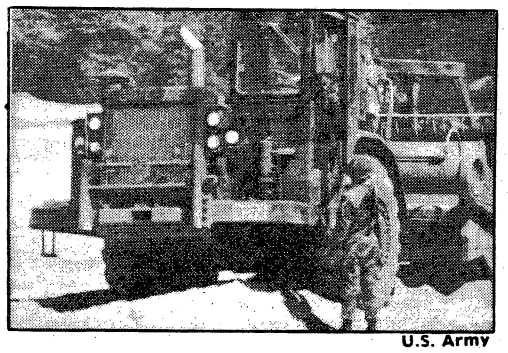
Until recently the Harmony Church landfill was an eyesore and hazard because the garbage was not properly covered with earth.

However, the Earthmoving Platoon of Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, has corrected the problem.



Making the accomplishment more notable than just another completed mission, the platoon finished it one year ahead of schedule.

According to Capt. Steven Wabnitz, company commander, the work was scheduled to be done in September 1987.

"Because of the environmental impact of an uncovered landfill, the project needed to be completed as soon as possible," he said.

Soldiers of the Earthmoving Platoon went to work on the job Aug. 8, and finished Aug. 11.

The project involved moving 95,000 cubic feet of dirt, and in the final four days, the platoon moved 30,000 cubic feet.

days. That's what really makes this such an accomplishment," he said.

Covering the garbage with dirt allows for the growth of vegetation over the landfill, Wabnitz said. "It greatly improves the balance of the environment in that area."— 43rd Engineer Battalion

The soldiers of the 608th Ordnance Company's ammunition platoons performed well in the company's recent ARTEP.

Despite the heat, they were able to set up a combat ready Ammunition Supply Area. This is the first time this kind of play has been implemented.

The field ammunition area consisted of a customer service area, renovation shack, salvage yard, surveillance team and issue and turn-in points.

The soldiers also conducted ammunition sling-out operations with the Black Hawk UH-60 helicopter.

During the exercise, the Ammunition Storage area at Harmony Church was maintained by civilian workers, supported by soldirs from the 197th Infantry Brigade.

Col. R.S. Siegfried recently presented the ATC streamer to Company B, 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. The company won the streamer by scoring 100 percent on midcycle testing.

U.S. Air Force

The Navy Seabees recently completed some construction work for the Air Force detachment in the Harmony Church area. U.S. Air Force Maj. 197th, 29th Infantry troops team up in combined arms live-fire exercise

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

When the 197th Infantry Brigade gets together with units of the 29th Infantry Regiment, the results could be called the "Greatest Show on Fort Benning."

Recently, M-1 tankers from Company C, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; artillerymen from 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery and Bradley infantrymen from Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, demonstrated the power of the combined arms team in a live-fire exercise at Cactus Range.

During the exercise, armor and infantry soldiers conducted hasty attacks on simulated targets. They breached obstacles constructed by support elements from the 72nd Engineer Company.

Also, the artillerymen laid down artillery fire on the objectives and smoke to obscure observation of the maneuvering units.

For each of these groups, the exercise provides an excellent training opportunity.

"The combined arms live-fire exercise on Cactus Range gives us a chance to shoot live-fire without the range restrictions of a tank gunnery range," said SFC Tommy Whitaker, a platoon sergeant from Co. C, 2-69th Armor. "It's a good chance to use all aspects of the combined arms team."

According to Capt. Xavier T. Newby, commander of Battery B, 2-10th Field Artillery, "The success of this exercise is achieved through close coordination of all elements of the combined arms team."

However, the exercise also tests the individual and crew level skills of all the soldiers involved.

"This gives tankers an opportunity to perform their jobs in a more realistic environment," Whitaker said. "We're firing live rounds and doing all the things we would do in combat."

Capt. Newby added, "The exercise is a great confidence builder for my (artillery) soldiers because they are delivering live munitions within 600 meters of friendly forces, on time and on target."

Niche said, " Stewart put himself in danger. The trench could have caved in on top of him."

SP4 Charles Bemis, who conducted the military police investigation, said the ditch did collapse more. It was completely filled in before he departed the area.

The soldiers have been recommended for awards for their heroic actions, Niche said.

Accordingly, Foster was treated and released from Martin Army Community Hospital.

No one from the civilian firm was available for comment.

Last week of OSUT focuses on specific MOS tasks

Editor's note: This is the final article in a series that has taken readers through One Station Unit Training at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill.

by Michael Ricca
1st Infantry Training Brigade

This is our last week of training. In Field Tactical Exercises, we were given the opportunity to put our training to use and of course learn more of our specific Military Occupational Specialty abilities.

As indirect fire mortarmen we were set apart from the other three platoons of the company who are infantrymen.

We built our mortar stations by digging in, building them up with logs and sand bags, and completely camouflaging the mortar pits, fighting positions, the fire direction center and the headquarters. All of the positions were equipped with hand phones for communication, 24-hour guards, 81mm mortars and the headquarters had plotting boards to plot enemy attacks.

We lived in the field at our self-made position (no tents this time). We had the opportunity to simulate battlefield conditions with overhead flares, grenade simulators, machine guns and M16 fire. We reacted to the situations as we faced them.

The FTX gave us a more lifelike experience of a combat situation. We exercised noise and light discipline and walking with caution because of trip wires and mines. Instead of tents dressed right, we slept in camouflaged positions 10 meters from the next man. This was all very different from our previous bivouac.

During the FTX, we also went to the Infiltration Course. This is a range where we went through low- and high-crawling 150 meters under constant M60 machine-gun fire with explosives shaking the ground below. We went over low logs and under barbed wire. Everyone of us came off this course tired and missing some skin from our elbows and knees.

A few weeks ago we qualified through the training and gunner's exam on the 81mm mortar. This week we qualified on the 60mm mortar. This mortar was fun to work with; I like my position as a 60mm gunner more each time I get the chance to operate the weapon. The gunner's exam was even fun; I, along with my assistant gunner plus two other gunners, maxed with 200 points — our platoon's overall average was expert.

Then we went to the advanced mortarman live-fire range. I must admit these last two ranges were the most enjoyable of them all.

At this range we were able to place ourselves in all three positions of the indirect fire team. Being a forward observer (the eyes), I was responsible for spotting, locating, recording and reporting information on the enemy. In the Fire Direction Center, I plotted all information and called in the fire mission to the indirect fire team (the muscle).

While working as part of the indirect fire team, I collected information from the fire direction center and applied by commands and fired the round down range.

Most of us finished off the week going to church with friends. Then the platoon started the final cleaning of our training gear for we are preparing to turn in our equipment. We are ready to go home. It is getting close and I feel I am ready.

About the author: PFC Michael Ricca graduated from One Station Unit Training Aug. 15. His COHORT unit (6th Bn, 1st ITB) will become the 2nd Battalion, 22nd Infantry, 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y.

Ricca received the physical training award for his company and has flown to Washington where he will join his wife and son before driving to Fort Drum.

When asked if he had any parting words, Ricca replied, "I did the absolute best I could and have enjoyed my training experience at Fort Benning; however, I am glad to be leaving and I look forward to serving in my new unit at Fort Drum."

Illinois National Guard trains under leadership from 197th

by Bill Branley
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Some soldiers from the Illinois National Guard may have gotten more training than they bargained for when their recent annual training was evaluated by members of the 197th Infantry Brigade.

About 150 Brigade soldiers, including the commander and several battalion commanders, traveled to Fort McCoy, Wis., to conduct an evaluation of the 33rd Infantry Brigade (Separate) from Illinois.

"We emphasized standards for everything from appearance of individual soldiers to brigade-level operations," said Capt. Thomas Carey of the 197th's Operations Office.

"The 197th commander, for example, personally assisted the headquarters group in establishing an effective system for running a tactical operations center."

The overall program consisted of external evaluations of company-sized units combined with a field training exercise. The units had to complete such missions as a movement to contact, hasty and deliberate attack and a withdrawal.

"They did many things very well," Carey said. "They road march a lot in the course of their weekend drills and, consequently, were very good at it."

Carey added that the leadership of the 33rd Brigade — which is a light infantry unit — was very receptive to what the 197th leaders had to teach.

"We feel we left them with a solid foundation on which to build he said.

Women's battle for vote long, hard one

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Tuesday is Women's Equality Day, which marks the 63rd anniversary of the ratification of the Nineteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

That amendment says, "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex."

The struggle to put those simple words into the Constitution was long and bitter.

It began in Seneca Falls, N.Y., in 1848 with the first women's rights convention. Elizabeth Cady Stanton drafted a suffrage amendment to be added to the final resolution the conference would make, but most of those present rejected the idea as being too radical. The vote to add the amendment passed by a narrow margin.

The amendment stated, "Resolved, that it is the duty of the women of this country to secure to themselves their sacred right to the election franchise."

From this radical beginning, it was a long, uphill fight for the women in the suffrage movement.

Early feminists were treated with scorn and ridicule by most people. Men argued that giving women the vote would cancel out the vote of their husbands, and make women too masculine. Yet women were required to pay property taxes along with male property owners, leading to the historical cry from feminists, "no taxation without representation."

The need for all women to join together, black and white, rich and poor, was poignantly emphasized by Sojourner Truth, a black woman who addressed the 1851 Akron, Ohio Suffrage Convention, with her now famous, "And Ain't I a Woman" speech.

Indeed, for the very beginning, it was clear that obtaining equal rights meant equal for all, including blacks.

In 1868, the first women's suffrage amendment was introduced into Congress. Then in 1878, the "Anthony Amendment" was introduced in Congress by Sen. Sargent of California.

Times were slowly changing, however, and in 1869 Wyoming became the first territory to allow women to vote and serve on juries.

The next year, Utah enacted women's suffrage and Utah women voting in city elections became the first in the country to vote.

From 1870 to 1910, 480 campaigns for passage of the amendment in 33 states resulted in 17 referenda, only two of which (in Colorado and Idaho) were successful.

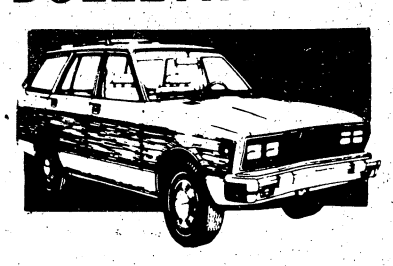
In 1890, the Georgia Women's Suffrage Association was founded in Columbus by H. Augusta Howard, with a total of six members. As a result of her efforts, the National Woman Suffrage Association held its yearly convention in Atlanta, Ga., in 1895.

Also in 1890, Wyoming was admitted to the union with women's suffrage in its constitution. The State continued to be a frontrunner in women's rights. In 1910, Mary Bellamy became the first woman to be elected to a state legislature, followed by Jeanette Rankin, who in 1917 became the first woman elected to the U.S. House of Representatives. In 1925, Wyoming elected the first woman governor, Nellie Taylor.

In the early part of this century, women were going to jail for the movement. In 1917, silent sufrage pickets held banners outside the White House gate, and when the banners turned antiwar, the women were arrested for "obstructing sidewalk traffic. The women went on a hunger strike and were brutally forcefed.

Their efforts got them the attention they wanted, however, and in 1918, President Woodrow Wilson publicly supported women's suffrage.

On Aug. 26, 1920, Tennessee became the 36th state to ratify the Nineteenth Amendment, and it became part of the U.S. Constitution.



It was 1921 before women in Georgia were allowed to vote, and 1970 before the Georgia General Assembly voted to ratify the amendment.

Mississippi carved its own special niche in history when it became the last state to ratify the amendement in 1984.

New educational programs will 'make a difference'

by Suzanne Williams
Fort Benning Schools

School days are here again. It's back to classes and books for more than 3,000 Fort Benning children. The excitement that fills the air on opening day will be maintained this year through educational programs that make a difference.

Kindergarten, a very special beginning for 5 year olds, will be even better this year with implementation of a full-day program. The school day for kindergarten has been extended, matching the instructional time for other early primary students. This added time will be used to enrich the kindergarten experience to include more activities for language development, more service from special area teachers, and more exploratory experiences such as field trips, science experiments, and story dramatization through puppetry.

The kindergarten teachers prepared for this program change by working experts in early childhood education last spring. They will be ready to welcome the children on opening day to a rich and exciting kindergarten program.

There will be an emphasis this year in the Fort Benning Schools on improving the self-concept of students in order to enhance their achievement in school. It is believed that a happy, confident child is more able to meet the challenge of a rigorous educational program. Teachers, administrators, and parents will work together to provide a learning environment that promotes success.

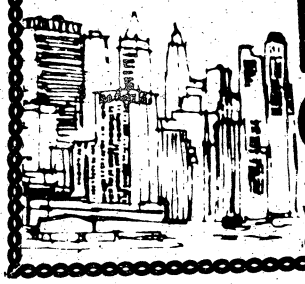
Kids and computers are a natural pair. Students in the Fort Benning Schools in grades kindergarten through eight will have the opportunity to use these fascinating machines to enrich their educational experiences. New machines (hardware) have been purchased and new educational programs (software) have been added to insure that all children will have the opportunity to increase their understanding of computer utilization and their use of the computer of a learning tool in various subject area programs for computer assisted instruction.

Having trouble with a basic skill in reading or math? Students facing this dilemma have the opportunity for special instruction in either or both of these vital areas through a newly developed remedial education program. This program will help students work on particular problem areas which have been revealed through standardized testing. It is anticipated that this very intense and specific instruction will enable students to overcome skill deficits and progress to their expected levels of performance.

We welcome School of the Americas' children and other limited-English-speaking children to our schools. To make their time with us most productive, as well as enjoyable, we will offer an English as a Second Language program for children in second through eighth grades. Children in grades second through fifth grades in need of the service will attend White School, and those who qualify in sixth through eighth grades will be served by the ESL teacher at the Faith Middle School. While our limited-English-speaking children are learning about America and the English language, our schools are enriched by their presence and the new dimension they bring to our classrooms.

Children are not the only individuals in our schools who will be excited by learning this school year. Teachers in the Fort Benning Schools will have many opportunities for professional growth through an exciting staff development program. Even before school opened, Dr. Carma Hales, an internationally recognized authority on individualized education presented a week-long workshop for an enthusiastic group of Fort Benning educators.

Upon return to duty, the For Benning staff had the opportuni to hear Dr. Rasamma Nybe another nationally known educa tor who addressed the impor tance of students having a po tive self concept and t relationship between self conc and achievement.



In addition, various individu school administrators hav planned professional develo ment programs for their sta using highly qualified consu ants. These presentations w focus on themes such as th development of thinking skills chai ter education, increasing teacher expectations and student achievement, and developing strategies for improving self co cept and learning. What an excit ing and productive year it will be for the Fort Benning educators.

Local constuction projects aim for improvement in education

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

More construction is on tap for Fort Benning Schools this year and for the next two years if plans are followed. Currently, a new middle school is under construction to replace Faith School. The middle school is scheduled for completion around Christmas, with school officials hoping to move into the facility during the Christmas vacation.

Funds were approved in this year's budget to expand the Dexter, Wilson, McBride, and Loyd Schools. Each school will gain a music, art, remedial, special education, and counseling facility and the Wilson, McBride, and Loyd Schools will gain more library space through the expansion. Work on these projects should begin this fall, with completion scheduled for the end of the school year. While the construction will cause some inconvenience for children and personnel working in the schools, the minor inconvenience will be offset by the additional space which will result.

The budget submitted by the president for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, inclues a project to expand the White School, adding a new library, art room, music room and special education facilities.

Also included in this project is a provision to air condition White School. Work on this project should begin a year from now if the project gains Congressional approval.

A new school in the Bouton Heights/Davis Hill area is scheduled for fiscal year 1988. If this project is approved, work will begin two years from now. When the Bouton Heights/Davis Hill School is completed, the plans call for closing the Wilbur and Patch Schools, with all students attending school in an air-conditioned and modern facility.

'Civilian yellow' to replace 'Army green' school buses

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Yellow school buses will replace the familiar Army buses as school starts for the Fort Benning Schools Tuesday. The James M. Smith Company, a commercial contractor, will be transporting post children this year, replacing the Army Transportation Division.

The change resulted from new requirements being placed on the Fort Benning Transportation Division which made it impossible to transport the school children on military buses.

Richard Skinner, Fort Benning Schools' assistant superintendent, said the school system anticipated no changes in transportation policies or procedures as a result of the switch and that parents should anticipate no change. "As with any new group taking over a function, we may have minor problems as we learn to work together. We are confident, however, that the contractor will provide top-rate service," Skinner said.

Bus schedules are available in the schools and were distributed at registration. Parents who observe problems with bus schedules or overcrowding are asked to call Alice Harrell at 545-2500. Parents who wish to report discipline problems on the bus should call the local school principal.

22 new teachers arrive at Fort Benning Schools

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Twenty-two new teachers will be greeting Fort Benning children when the school bell rings on Tuesday. The twenty-two new teachers were selected from several hundred applicants, according to Dr. R.W. Baumgartner, superintendent.

"We believe that we have hired an outstanding group of new teachers, bringing a wealth of experiences to our children," Baumgartner said. The superintendent noted that the new teachers included beginning teachers and veterans and that all came highly recommended.

School officials noted that the turnover rate for teachers was about 10 percent and this figure was consistent with past years' turnover. Since the system employs several teachers who are married to soldiers, a certain amount of mobility is expected.

New staff members come from systems around the world. Four come from overseas DoD schools, one from Fort Campbell Schools, one each from Wisconsin, Virginia, Texas and North Carolina. Eleven of the new teachers are Georgians, with most coming from Columbus. Three of the newcomers are beginning a second tour with the Fort Benning Schools.

New staff members and their school assignments are as follows:

FAITH: Ms. Lorri M. Blanchard - Choral Music; Mrs. Roxanne M. Champion - 6th Grade Language Arts/Social Studies; Ms. Marcie D. Collins - 7th Grade Language Arts; Mrs. Susan C. Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

Despite continuous emphasis and educational efforts, the Military Police are still finding that a large amount of property reported stolen on the Fort Benning military reservation is either not marked, or the markings are not recorded.

Engraving your property with unique identification markings and recording serial numbers will not prevent it from being stolen — but taking these steps will tremendously increase the chances that stolen property can be positively identified, recovered, and the thief apprehended.

The amount of stolen property recovered from pawn shops in the Columbus/Phenix City area every week is proof in itself of the value of being able to identify and trace individual property. It is also an acknowledged fact that thieves are reluctant to steal property which they know to be marked, because such items are difficult to pawn or "fence," and are much more likely to lead to their own identification and apprehension.

Personnel living in the barracks are encouraged to mark property and make high-value item lists, using DA Form 4986, of cameras, stereos, television, etc., in two copies.

One copy of this form is to be retained on film in the unit orderly room and updated as new items are acquired or old items disposed of. The second copy is to be retained by the service member and updated as necessary. Engraving instruments should be available at each unit on the installation for marking of property.

Service members and their families residing in on- or off-post quarters are also encouraged to ensure that their property can be identified. Engraving instruments may be signed out for a 72-hour period, from the Military Police Crime Prevention Section (545-7115/7154), building 215, for this purpose.

Additionally, representatives from the crime prevention section and the crime prevention van will be located at various locations on post to engrave property and register bicycles. Take advantage of these services.

Once you have marked your property, itemize and record the property marked and the identification markings used. Maintain this record in a secure location away from the property itself, and periodically update the list.

Taking photographs of valuable items and maintaining the photographs in a secure loction is an additional measure which may also assist law enforcement authorities in its recovery if stolen.

During July there were 158 larcenies, 60 were of unsecured property. All of the property reported stolen was unmarked.

The Military Police urge you to protect your property by practicing good crime prevention techniques and bein prepared to assist us in the recovery of stolen property by furnishing us with serial numbers, identification markings and a good description of the item.

Crime Watch

Provost Marshal

Davis Hills/Bouton Heights had one domestic disturbance and one damage to private property.

North Main Post had two housebreaking/burglaries.

South Main Post had three larcenies of private property, one damage to government property and one aggravated assault.

Indianhead Terrace had one domestic assault, one animal bite, and one communicating a threat. Upatoi had one unlawful entry.

The Military Police Activity Crime Prevention Section will have their crime prevention van, along with the Columbus Police Department, in the Main Mall parking lot on Aug. 28. Bring your bikes and have them registered. Get crime prevention tips from the Columbus Police Department and the Military Police personnel.

GETTING OUT? YOUR ARMY BENEFITS CAN BE MORE THAN MEMORIES.

It's probably hard to say what you'll miss most about the Army if you've decided to return to civilian life. For some, it's the camaraderie. Others miss the travel and excitement. Still more miss those money-saving Army benefits.

Joining the Army Reserve can help you retain some of those great benefits. Like your PX and commissary privileges. Space-available air travel. And low-cost life insurance.

You'll earn a good extra income, too. Over $2,000 a year, in some cases.

Ask the 'judge'

Editor's Note: These questions are inquiries that the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be a substitute for advise from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I had to pay a hefty fine after police picked me up coming out of a bar with a plastic take away cup. Is it really illegal to drink in public?

A. According to the Columbus City Code, it is not only a criminal violation to drink alcohol on public property but it is also a violation to drink in parking lots and on other outdoor premises of private businesses. The rule applies to all alcohol including wine and beer. The bottom line is that if you must drink, do it either inside a licensed establishment or on nonbusiness private property. If you are offered a plastic take away cup, refuse it and report the establishment to both the Columbus Police Department and the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board.

Q. I am the former spouse of a now retired U.S. Army soldier. We were married for quite some time and, although I don't have an identification card anymore, I've heard rumors that I may be entitled to some benefits under a new law.

A. You may be right! The Uniformed Services Former Spouse's Protection Act, which became effective February 1, 1983, is a federal law that might entitle you to some benefits. To qualify you must have been married to a soldier for at least twenty years, he must have served at least 20 years on active duty and the overlap of your marriage and his service must be at least 15 years. Former spouses who meet this standard are eligible for limited benefits. If the overlap of your marriage and his service is over 20 years, the former spouse is entitled to full military benefits in her own right.

There are other measures of the Former Spouse's Protections Act that address direct payment of either alimony or an awarded share of the retired pay as marital property.

Q. I have recently arrived at Fort Benning and will not be eligible for on-post housing for quite some time. As a result of this, I am planning on moving into a rental apartment. Are there any special concerns I should have?

A. As with any contractual arrangement you propose to enter, get a copy of the agreement before you sign and read it thoroughly! Make sure that all details are put in writing.

Have more questions? See your legal assistance officer for an appointment.

Even if the day is 5 or 10 years away, you need to plan for it today.

Time doesn't wait, and those military years pass quickly. Before you turn around, you'll be wanting to start living that life of leisure – and you'll want it ready and waiting for you.

That's why we suggest you begin to plan your tomorrows today.

General Development has been helping military families find their place in the sun for more than 30 years. And we can help you – just as we've done for over 12,000 service people.

How? By giving you the right questions to consider and the right answers to look for.

For example: 1) Do the people you're dealing with have special financing plans tailored to your military income? 2) How reliable are they? 3) What's their past record of performance? 4) Does the community you're interested in have full shopping, recreational and cultural facilities? 5) Is there a military base nearby? (Hospital, commissary and exchange privileges can mean big savings.) 6) How about location? Is it overcrowded or is it so isolated that you would feel shut off from civilization?

As you're well aware, military families have special needs. If you want to meet them in all the years to come, send us the coupon. And let us show you the way to a great Florida future.

Post spruces up for Installation Excellence inspection

Directorate of Engineering and Housing

It is time for everyone to spruce up their work areas, clean up around units and put their best foot forward.

A seven-man team from Training and Doctrine Command will be on post Sept. 2 through 4 to conduct the annual TRADOC Installation Excellence Program Evaluation.

Based on evaluation results, posts will compete for TRADOC installation awards to be presented at the Commander's Conference in November.

The Installation Excellence Program, in its second year of existence, was set up by former TRADOC commader, Gen. William R. Richardson, and has the full support of the present TRADOC commander Gen. Carl E. Vuono.

The program is based on the concept that there is a direct correlation between job performance and the quality of the environment in which a person lives and works.

This evaluation team will be looking at the appearance of the installation in general, but areas of specific concern during this visit will include classrooms, finance and accounting offices, housing referral offices, transient billeting, the visitor/information center, civilian personnel offices and in/out processing centers.

In order to put our best foot forward, it is requested that everyone become involved in a "spring cleaning" type effort. Special attention should be given to grass mowing, removal of debris, etc. Self-help effort is strongly encouraged.

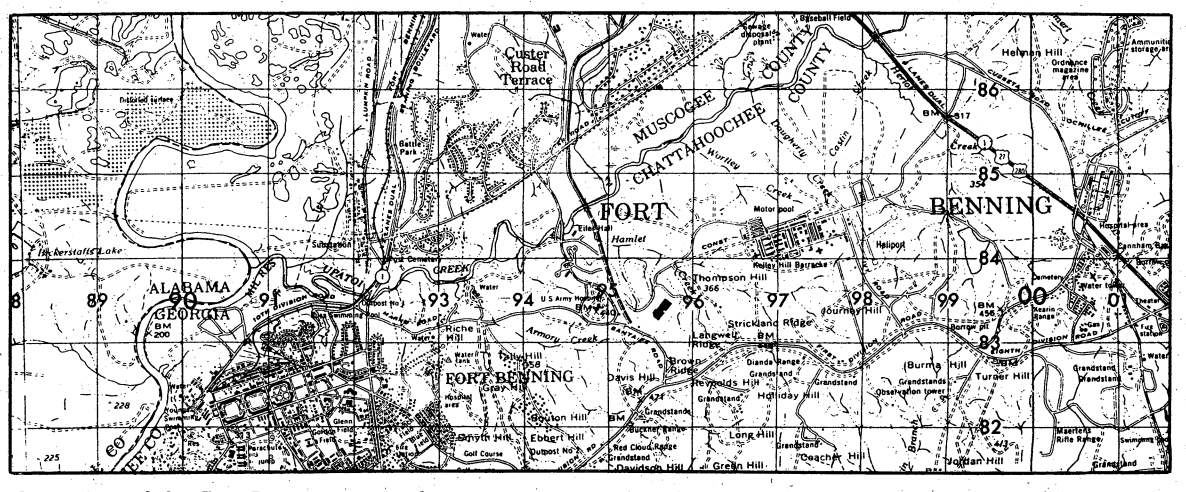
Car registration easy using simple guidelines

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

It's difficult to get around these days without a car. Unfortunately, it is impossible to legally drive a car unless it is properly registered with a state. For soldiers, this can be a real headache. However, with a little knowledge and a little patience, registering can be simple.

Soldiers at Fort Benning have two ways that they may register their cars. First, they may maintain their registration in their home state. However, they must comply with the laws in that state. For example, they may have to have their cars inspected as a condition to having it registered. This could present problems, especially if you plan to return to that state while on leave.

It is more common for a Fort Benning soldier to register his car in the state of Georgia. This may be accomplished by first determining what county you live in.



All residents and units north of the Upatoi Creek are located in Muscogee County. This includes all units in Sand Hill and all residents of McGraw Manor, Custer Terrace, Upatoi Terrace, Battle Park and Old Officer Capehart. All other Fort Benning residents and units are located in Chattahoochee County.

Before registering a vehicle in the respective county, soldiers should go the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate in order to get a Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act Affidavit. This will exempt non-resident soldiers from paying the state ad valorem tax on their vehicle. If the car is titled in a spouse's name or if it is being leased, the exemption cannot be applied.

Armed with your affidavit, your current registration, vehicle title, proof of insurance and Leave and Earnings Statement, you are ready to register your car.

If you are located in Muscogee County, the place to register your car is in the Government Center. The Center is located between First and Second Avenues and 9th and 10th Streets. If you are live in Chattahoochee County, you register your car at the Cusseta City Hall. Cusseta is located off of Highway 27, south on Highway 55.

Registration costs $8. If you are a Georgia resident, you may have to pay some ad valorem tax in addition to the registration fee. In either case, once you have paid what you owed, you will receive your tag and sticker that shows that you have registered your vehicle for the coming year.

Alabama SWAT teams assault MOUT site

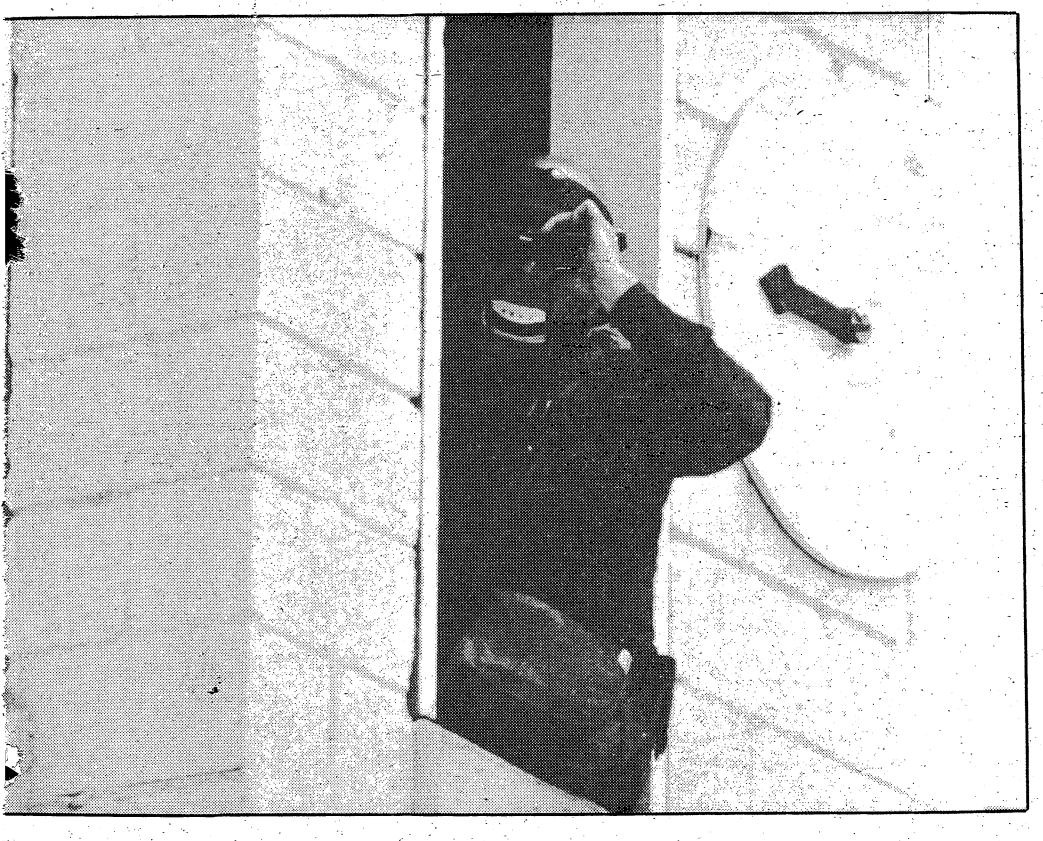
Story and photos
by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Military Operations in Urban Terrain site could have been renamed "Civilian Operations in Urban Terrain" this week as the "city" played host to Alabama law enforcement officials.

Two Special Weapons Assault Teams from police departments in Auburn and Birmingham used the MOUT site and Fort Benning multiple integrated laser engagement system equipment this week to sharpen their SWAT skills.

MILES, an individually worn system, has sensors attached to a vest and a laser on the end of each rifle. The sensors beep when someone is "shot," indicating a "kill" or "near-miss." The police officers have no such system and being able to use Benning's MILES added to the realism of their training.

According to Capt. Ed Downing of the Auburn Police Department: "We have 14 officers from Birmingham and nine from Auburn here today. Using these buildings and MILES gear is the best training these men will probably ever get in terms of realism. The only thing more realistic would be the real thing."

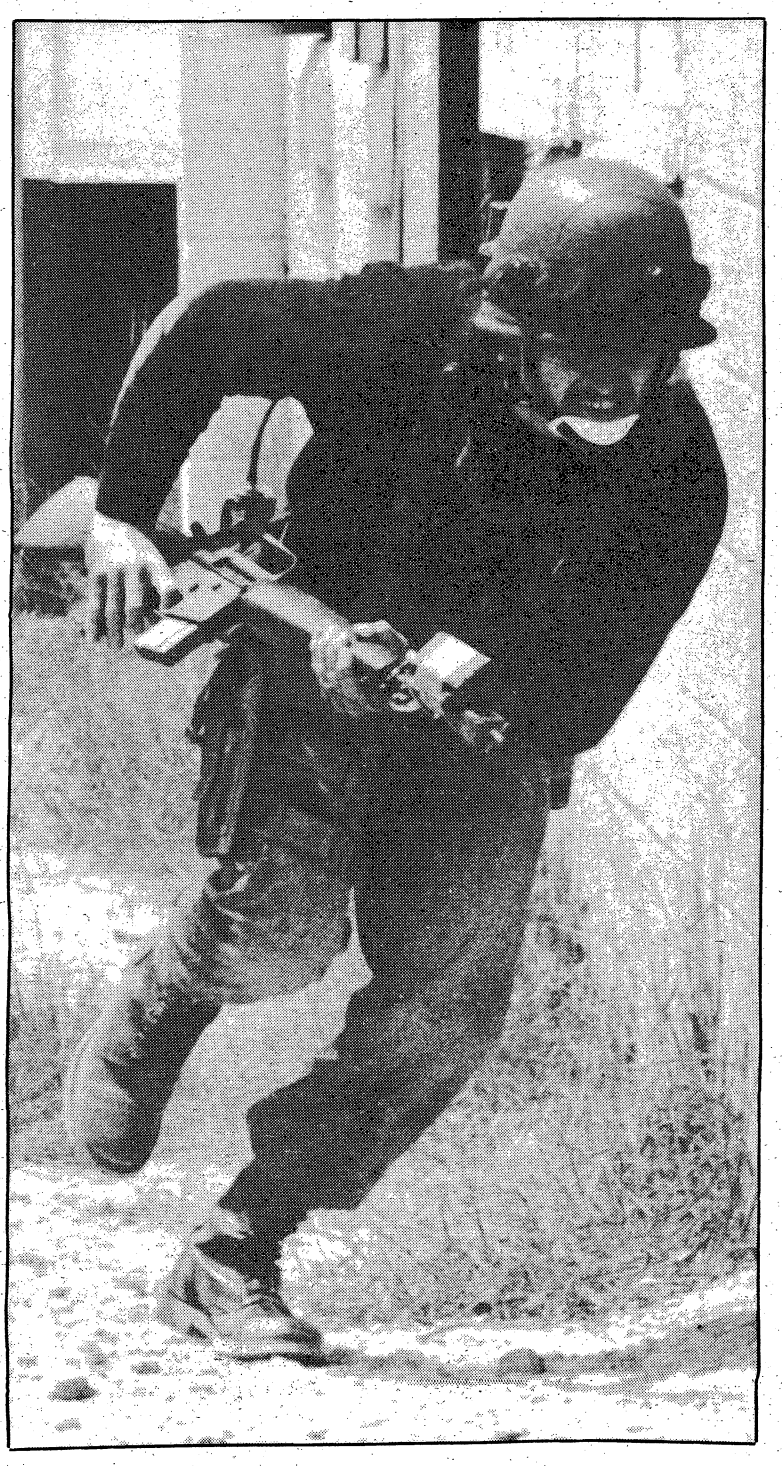


Dressed in black jungle fatigues, combat boots and helmets and armed with knives, side arms and M-16 rifles, each man went through the "round robin" training.

The different stations included team movement, entering and clearing a building, second story entry using a grapling hook and nylon ladder and approaching a sniper. After training was complete the officers began the "real life" scenarios.

"My men are going to be briefed and then move against two snipers located in that bell tower," said Birmingham's Capt. John Fisher, pointing to a "church" steeple where two men, one armed with a rifle with scope attached and the other spotting for him with binoculars, were concealed.

Fisher's men moved against the snipers, using building entry techniques and the low-crawl. The "good guys," after losing three men to the "snipers," finally managed to eliminate the shooters and end the scenario.



The next scenario involved two women volunteers, Carmen Ferguson and Loretta Rhoads, who acted as hostages being held by a killer. The Auburn SWAT, briefed and led by Downing, quickly moved in, got the situation under control and saved the hostages.

Clerical workers top list of injured civilian workers

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

One of the most dangerous civilian jobs at Fort Benning is that of clerical worker.

That may sound far-fetched, but the numbers back it up. Since October 1985 325 accidents involving civlians have been reported. Of those, 50 happened in offices and most of the people injured were clerical workers. That equates to 15 percent of the total civilian injuries reported.

Frank McClanahan, a safety and occupational health specialist intern at the Safety Office, said the majority of those incidents (44 percent) were injuries caused by falls in the office.

"People trip over typewriter or telephone cords or slip on a slick spot on the floor," he said. They also tumble down stairs and trip over desks or filing cabinets in poorly arranged office spaces, he said.

Seven people were hurt lifting something too heavy (14 percent), four people bumped or struck objects, and 17 fell into the miscellaneous category, with injuries ranging from cuts to minor eye injuries.

"One lady was counting and bundling money when the rubberband she was putting around the bundle snapped and popped her in the eye," McClanahan said.

Back injuries are also high on the list of civilian injuries. So far this year, 62 incidents involving back injuries have been reported.

Harley Chase, also an intern in the Safety Office, compiles statistics on back injuries. He said people usually hurt their backs because they try to lift too much.

"I've seen injuries caused by all kinds of strains," he said. "People have hurt their backs by bending over to tie their shoes, or moving heavy furniture."

McClanahan and Chase agree that the best way to prevent an accident is to be safety conscious and aware of hazards. "Many offices' furniture is poorly arranged, leaving cords exposed or small walk areas, which create safety hazards," McClanahan said.

According to Anita Langford, in the post Safety Office, civilian employees have filed 185 lost time claims so far this fiscal year, compared to a total of 200 filed in fiscal 1985.

This may not sound like a lot, but in 1975, lost time accidents cost the Army $98 million.

SafeArmy 1990 establishes an Army goal of a 3 percent reduction in lost time claims, but according to a recent Army Ground Accident Report, the Army as a whole is not meeting this goal.

What can Fort Benning do to improve its numbers? "People need to be aware of the hazards in their environment, and act accordingly," McClanahan said. "People need to be safety conscious and think about what they are doing from a safety standpoint."

If you need help resolving a safety problem, call the post Safety Office's hotline at 545-CARE.

VA commissions study on women veterans' health

Veterans Administration

The Veterans Administration has issued the request for proposal to prospective bidders for development of a protocol that will be used to conduct a study of possible long-term health effects among women who served in the military in Vietnam.

Most studies of health problems among Vietnam veterans have relied on information about men since a relatively small number of women served in Vietnam. This meant that for statistical purposes women veterans could not be identified with exposures to specific environmental hazards. The VA study proposes to examine the entire Vietnam experience — not specific incidents — and its relationship to the health of women veterans.

The largest group of women military personnel in Vietnam was the Army Nurse Corps, followed by the Women's Army Corps, Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps.

Because there is no central file of women military personnel who served in Vietnam, VA has compiled a preliminary roster of women Vietnam veterans in collaboration with the U.S. Army and Joint Services Environmental Support Group. The roster will be made available to the contractor, as well as the protocols of a number of health studies of male Vietnam Era veterans.

The study was mandated by Public Law 99-272, the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, which was enacted April 7, 1986.

Ga. governor proclaims day for Air Force liaison officers

U.S. Air Force Liaison Office

Stating that "The U.S. Air Force Admissions Liaison Officer plays an important role in our national defense," Governor Joe Frank Harris has proclaimed tomorrow as a special day in Georgia to honor this group who identify and recruit outstanding candidates for the Air Force Academy and applicants for Air Force ROTC scholarships.

The date coincides with an annual statewide meeting of ALOs at Robins Air Force Base, Ga. Speaker at an awards ceremony will be Maj. Gen. James E. McAdoo, vice commander of the Air Force Reserve.

"Patriotism is the love for and loyal support of one's country, and in the United States, there are many men and women who exemplify the spirit of patriotism by devoting their lives to our nation's security," Harris said of the ALOs. They contribute much to natuional security by working with students and high school administrators across the country to find applicants with high academic, physical and leadership qualities, he said.

Known as "foster alumni," said ALOs are Air Force Reservists with some Air National Guard, active duty and retired personnel represented. There are 1,875 ALOs nationalwide assigned to 81 liaison officer commanders.

Georgia LOC Maj. Thomas H. Lokey of Columbus has 45 ALOs in his command.

"During the past 12 months, these officers have conducted approximately 1,200 school visits, held 1,800 counseling sessions with students and driven their own cars more than 140,000 miles," he said.

"Receiving only four days pay and working a minimum of 24 days a year, these officers must fund their long distance telephone, transportation and office expenses," Lokey added.

He cited statistics that show that these ALOs are responsible for providing scholarships worth more than $22 million to outstanding young men and women from Georgia. There are currently 113 cadets from Georgia attending the Air Force Academy and at least that many Georgians attending colleges throughout the U.S on Air Force ROTC scholarships, according to Lokey.

All academy cadets receive a full scholarship valued from $12,000 to $60,000, depending on the college, with the average value approximately $20,000, he said

McAdoo expressed pride in the accomplishments of the ALO corps, terming their contributions exceptional. "I'm happy that across the country, Air Force Reservists are seeking out quality applicants: well-rounded, motivated candidates who'll be the future leaders of the Air Force," he said.

The effectiveness of the program can be seen in the fact that last year all of those admitted to the academy and most awarded ROTC scholarships were counseled by ALOs.

The program operates on the premise that motivation begins with information — information to young men and women, parents, guidance counselors and others who will assure a continuous flow of highly motivated, outstanding applicants for Air Force commissioning.

Two liaison officers serve the Columbus-Fort Benning area and its surrounding counties. They are available to provide information on both the AFROTC and Air Force Academy Programs to interested students ad parents. Maj. David Mize is the representative to contact for most schools at 327-5452. Lokey is the representative to contact for those students in Brookstone or Shaw only, and his phone number is 327-9867.

Adequate water intake vital for everyone to stay alive

Inside The Turret
Fort Knox, Ky.

FORT MONROE, Va. — Deny someone food and he can still live on for days, even weeks. But death comes quickly — in a matter of a few days — if you deprive a person of water.

Without air to breathe there is, of course, no life. But among all the nutrients that humans consume, water is, as one scientist put it, the "indispensable nutrient" that all forms of life depend on. Nothing survives without water, and virtually nothing takes place in the body without water playing a vital role.

The indispensability of water is reflected by the fact it is absolutely necessary for the body to maintain its crucial water balance. People living in hot, arid climates have to maintain as much water in their tissues as those living in wetter surroundings. Water, carbohydrates, fat, protein, vitamins and minerals are the six major nutrients humans consume to survive and, of the six, water constitutes the largest part of body weight. In a 150-pound man, for example, water accounts for about 90 pounds, fat about 30 pounds, with protein, crbohydrates, vitamins and minerals making up the balance.

While variations may be great, the average adult's body weight is generally 50 to 60 percent water — enough, if it were bottled, to fill 40 to 50 quarts. Men generally have more water than women, a lean person more than an obese one.

A loss of 5 to 10 percent of body weight in a young child due to fluid losses can be fatal. Such a loss may be caused by vomiting or diarrhea, and may bring on severe dehydration. It also could affect body temperature as well as respiration, circulation and kidney functions.

Some parts of the body have more water than others. Human blood plasma is about 92 percent water, muscle and the brain about 75 percent, and bone 22 percent. If normal and healthy, the body maintains water at a constant level. A number of mechanisms including the sensation of thirst, operate to maintain body water content within narrow limits.

The body uses water for virtually all its functions — for digestion, absorption, circulation, excretion, transporting nutrients, building tissue and maintaining temperature. Almost all of the body's living cells need and depend on water to perform their functions. Water carries nutritive elements to the cells and carries away waste materials and salts to the kidney.

Water serves as an important element of lubricants, helping cushion the joints and internal organs, keeping body tissues such as the eyes, lungs and air passages moist, and surrounding and protecting the fetus during pregnancy.

Water is needed in each step of the process of converting food into energy and tissue. Digestive secretions are mostly water acting s a solvent for nutrients.

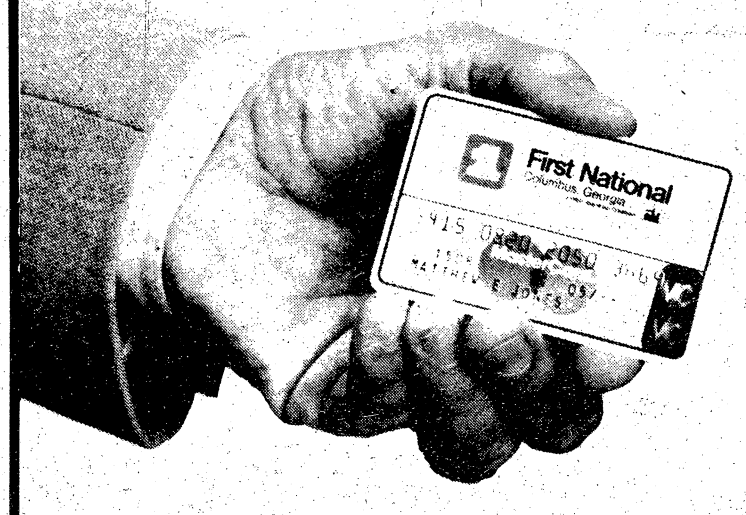
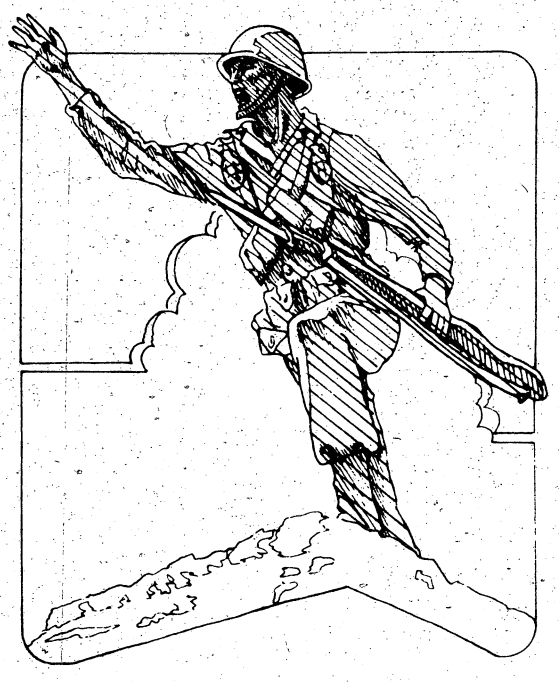
The DPCA is under new management and we want your ideas! We provide fun recreation, family activities and a host of things that you seldom see. In future weeks you will read in this column all the neat things available to you. If you don't read about it here — it's not worth doing.

Your clubs on post offer a variety of entertainment and luncheon and dinner specials. Coming up in your Main NCO Club — Saturday, Two for One Steak Night, with disco in the ballrom, Latino Disco in the End of the Hall Lounge and Dreamer Band in Golden Touch Lounge. Bring your wife, husband or date and dine and then dance the night away! Breakfast is served Monday through Friday from 6:30 to 9:30 a.m. The tennis courts are now open to membership, with tennis racquets and balls available to members at the cashier's office.



Bingo is offered several times weekly. The Main NCO Club presently has a $5,000 jackpot ready for someone to grab at the bingo sessions on Sunday, at 2 p.m., Tuesday at 7 p.m. and Thursday at 7 p.m. The Sand Hill NCO Club also has bingo three nights weekly, with a $5,000 jackpot on Monday, Wednesay and Aug. 30.



Being charged too much for lunch? Come to the Fort Benning Officers' Club for sandwich or salad by the ounce. Pay only for what you get — but get all you want!

Join us at the "Western Round Up" BBQ buffet tonight in the Supper Club, from 6 to 8:30 p.m., with a poolside dance. Then, on Saturday, "All Night Disco" in the I Bar with no cover charge. Bring your family to the "All American Nite Buffet" on Tuesday. And for the upcoming Labor Day holiday, celebrate at the pool party and poolside BBQ (weather permitting).

What Specialist Hales has been aiming for during his off-duty time.

Specialist Four Jason Hales has been aiming for the best. As a soldier, and as a student. He's an Infantryman at Fort Myer, Virginia, as well as a B.S. candidate in Mechanical Engineering at Park College. And he's just one of the over 100,000 soldiers who are building brighter, smarter futures through the Army's Reaching for Excellence education program.

It's a terrific opportunity that's available to each and every soldier, at virtually every Army post around the world. Reaching for Excellence covers everything from basic educational skills and technical skill development to undergraduate and graduate studies at the college level. And it's a chance to have at least 75% of your college tuition paid for by the Army.

Continuing your education is a commitment that's fully supported by the Army leadership. You can start taking advantage of this commitment at your post's Education Center. There, you'll find a professional education counselor who can help you set short- and long-range goals which fit both your educational and career plans.

Drop by your Education Center and find out, as Specialist Hales did, how you can turn some off-duty time into a lifetime of rewards. If you want to get ahead, now's the time to get started.

PWOC members grow spiritually through fellowship, education

If you're looking for a place to make Christian friends, take a look at Protestant Women of the Chapel.

The group is open to women married to active duty or retired soldiers, enlisted and officers.

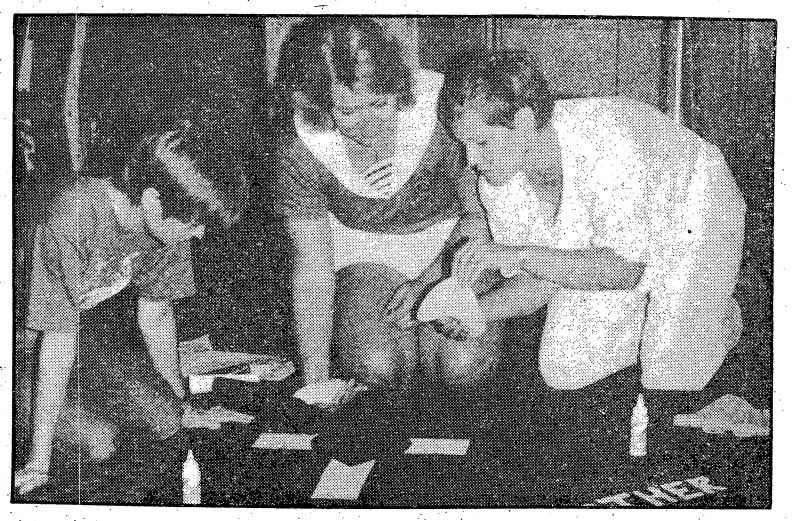
According to Terry Cairns, president of the local chapter, "the purpose of our group is to draw women to Christ and help them deepen their relationships with him."

The group also tries to touch the community with its Outreach Program, by visiting newcomers and patients at Martin Army Community Hospital, said Shirley Mull, Outreach chairman.

This fall's theme is "Love one another as I have loved you," (John 13:34). The new season will begin with a sign-up session Sept. 11 at 9 a.m. Terry Cairns will be the speaker, and participants will be able to sign up for classes and outreach opportunities. Refreshments will also be served.

PWOC will offer women a choice of four different study groups at its Thursday morning session.

Topics to choose from include "Marriage without Regrets;" "The Christian Family" and "Women of the Bible — Sarah." The subject of the fourth group is still in the planning stages.



The fall program starts Sept. 11, and will meet Thursday mornings from 9 to 11:30 a.m. at the Family Life Center. Free babysitting is provided. The center is on the corner of Dixie and Ingersoll, in what used to be the Welcome Center.

Cairns said two retreats are also planned, one in mid-October.

But study groups are not the main attraction, she said. "If you enjoy fellowship, singing and prayer, it's a good place to make Christian friends," she said.

She stressed that rank is not considered in the group. "We are all workers together for Christ," Cairns said.

"This is the place I come when I hurt," said Cairns. "I find people who will pray for me and I stop hurting."

Cairns said it's easier to be a good Christian when you're around other Christians. "Spiritual life is enhanced when you fellowship with other Christians," she said. "Our goal is to walk with Christ, and the group's support of this is just tremendous."

If you need a ride, call Shirley Mullat 568-7845.

Learning to love self first step to happiness

by Chaplain Jeffery L. Smith
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Whitney Houston has hit the top of the charts with her rousing song "The Greatest Love of All." In that song Ms. Houston joyfully declares that she has found the greatest love of all by learning to love herself.

She suggests that while we are still children we need to learn to love ourselves. Yet, as seems to be the case with the person who wrote this song, people are often in their adult years before they learn that true happiness can only be found by first learning to love oneself.

I suspect we can all agree with Whitney Houston. People just don't seem to like themselves. The quest to find something to love in ourselves frequently makes us put other down. Those who get put down most are often those closest to us: husband, wife, children, friends, co-workers. Some have even linked the festering conflicts between races and nations to the lack of healthy self-esteem.

General Wickham has declared this to be the year of "Values". It would seem to be a good idea to ask, "How do I value myself?" Jesus told us to "love our neighbor as ourselves". The U.S. Constitution has established the principle "that all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights". Maybe Ms. Houston is right. We need to join her in singing those powerful words "We have found the greatest love of all, to love ourselves."

God says that loving yourself is only the beginning. Love begins with us, but needs to be shared. The basis of our love goes back to the one who created us. If He loves us as we are, with all our imperfections, then we can and should do nothing less. Our God is not wrong, He created each of His children with worth and dignity. So learn to love yourself so that you can live life to the fullest.

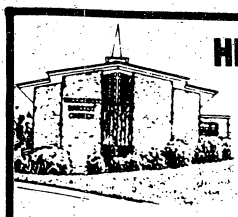
Chaplains get regimental crest

USAIC Chaplain's Office

The 211th Anniversary of the Chaplaincy was celebrated July 29, 1986. During ceremonies at the U.S. Army Chaplain Center and School, Fort Monmouth, N.J., the chaplain Corps Regiment was officially activated.

Chaplains (like JAGs, Ordnance Corps, and Signal Corps) belong to the "Whole Branch Regiments", according to the Army Regimental System plan. They will have a distinctive crest to denote affiliation with the regiment.

The regimental concept is being implemented in the Army to help build team identity and cohesion, as well as to provide more predictable assignments.



Although the activation of the Chaplain Corps Regiment will have little direct impact upon most soldiers, for Chaplains and Chaplain Assistants it will mean an enhanced sense of belonging. It will be especially important during assignments in hich the regimental system is not implemented.

Teams slugging it out in company-level softball tourney

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Infantry Center Company Level Softball Tournament began Monday with 19 teams dropping heavy artillery on Gowdy and Glenn fields.

The double-elimination tournament will continue through Aug. 28, but two teams have already been dropped.

The 34th Medical Battalion team and the MEDDAC team each suffered losses in Monday and Tuesday night's games.

Games start on both fields at 5:30 p.m. Admission is free and the entertainment exciting.

The sports office looks for you to be there and pick the winning team.

9th Bn., 2nd ITB vs. USARSA — 9-3

The 9th Battalion team opened as Ramon Martinez hit a double and rounded third to score on a Bobby Richardson RBI.

USARSA's Nelson Nieves scored the only run of the second inning when he nailed a home run just over left field to tie the score at 1-1.

It was rally time for the 9th Bn. team in the third inning when Roy McCage hit a triple and came in on a error. Bobby Richardson scored on a double by Moose Kinsey. Kinsey scored on a Mark Kapsalis home run.

Co.B, 29th Inf. vs HHC, 197th — 12-1

Marcus Rinaldi had the game's first RBI, bringing Greg Light across the plate. Light was perfect at bat, hitting 4 for 4.

Jesse Thomas, Kent Griggs, Jimmy Macon, Earnest Brown and John Watts provided five runs in the fourth inning to stun the HHC team.

A seventh inning rally finished the game, highlighted by a Earnest Brown home run.

HHC, 36th Eng. vs. 34th Med. — 9-2

William Acklien opened with a triple and scored when Thomas Wilson popped a base hit over second base.

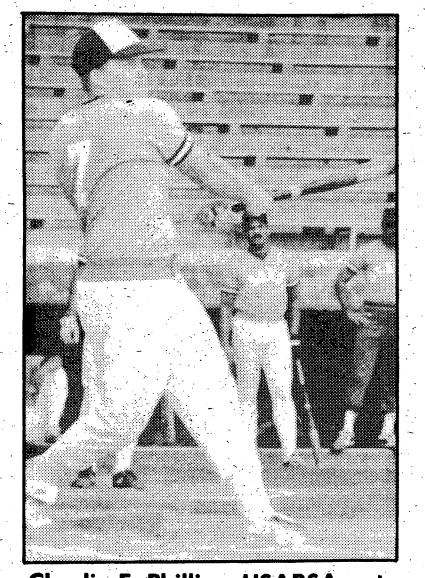
In the third, Acklien provided the RBI to bring Dominic Macaluso across home plate and tie the game at 2-2.

HHC pulled away in the fifth as Macaluso hit a RBI, bringing Stephen Tennant home and later scored on a Thomas Wilson RBI.

Kip Younker scored in the sixth. But, the final nail was hammered as Acklien, Kenneth Mchaffie and Bruce Dewael took three more runs in the seventh.

NCOA vs. Inf. Board — 19-4

In what turned out to be the tournament's first massacre, the NCO Academy almost cleaned the batting order in the first inning.



With only one walk and one error in the inning, the NCOA club hit on the ball for eight runs.

In five innings, the club had scored 19 runs to end the game on the 10-point rule.

Jose Nunez was perfect at bat, hitting a single, two doubles, and a home run.

Dwayne Hurley, who also hit a home run, scored twice in the opening night slaughter.

The Infantry Board's only slight threat came in the second inning when Richard Brumbaugh, Don Sanks and Greg Negron provided three runs.

1st ITB vs. 197th No.3 — 14-0

Both Joseph Sarianides and Alden West gave the team home runs and scored three times in the 14-0 onslaught.

Kenneth Wilcox also pushed a ball through the outfield for a home run in the fourth inning.

Scoring three runs in the first inning, the ITB team shot six more runs at the 197th in the second inning. It was all over in the fourth, when the games three home runs provided the team with five additional runs.

MPA vs. Info Sys Command — 13-0

MPA arrested the ISC without giving them the right to speak.

In the 13-0 shutout, the MPA team got fired up in the third inning, scoring five runs, one of which was a Rodney Hall home run.

Horace Johnson was perfect at bat, 3 for 3, and provided one of the six runs slapped against the ISC in the fifth inning.

Tuesday

HHC, 1-58th vs. 34th Med. — 11-4

The 34th Medical Battalion team was the first to be eliminated in the tournament, when HHC, 1-58th issued them their second defeat.

Billy Rocks was perfect at bat and scored three runs, to include a fourth inning homer.

After opening with one run in the first inning, HHC rocked up four runs in the third, two in the fourth and four in the sixth.

The 34th Med. could not mend the 11-2 tear issued by HHC at the end of five innings, but did score two more runs before their tournment was closed in a 11-4 defeat.

HHC, 3-7th Inf. vs. HHC, 197th — 13-7

HHC, 3-7th answered each threat by the 197th team.

The 197th opened with two runs on a home run hit by Bill Clark.

The 7th Inf. team responded with three runs in the first and another in the second.

It was in the third that the Grand Slam home run by Michael Guyton screamed past the 197th, providing four more runs.

Batt. A, 2-10th FA vs. MEDDAC — 11-4

MEDDAC struck first with a L. Brown home run in the second, and led 3-1 into the third.

But, Battery A dropped the heaviest bomb in the fourth with a five-run rally. The raid on MEDDAC continued in the fifth inning with the Field Artillery team shelling out three more runs.

The rally in the fourth came when Lima Togia, Colon Rafael Betancourt, Michael Bennett and John Supron all provided runs.

9th Bn., 2nd ITB vs. HHC, 3-7th Inf — 5-4

HHC led 4-1 in the fourth inning with Bob George scoring on a Keith Meeker single.

Joseph Simmons pulled a RBI to bring Meeker in, who was followed by Dave Conrad on a Leroy Latshaw RBI.

David Bellerue, 9th Bn, hit a single that brought Reader across in the fifth to cut the margin.

In the sixth inning, the 9th Bn fired three fatal runs at the 7th Infantry team. Bobby Richardson sent Ramon Martinez home on a single and also scored the tieing run when Moose Kinsey slapped a double down the line.

Mark Kapsalis hit the game winning RBI to bring Kinsey to home plate.

Co. B, 29th Inf. vs. MEDDAC — 9-1

Company B opened with three quick runs by Earnest Brown, John Watts and Douglas Boyd.

MEDDAC's only run came in the second inning when L. Brown hit a shot just over second to bring R. McKenzie across the plate.

533rd Trans. vs. 36th Eng. — 5-4

The game was tied 2-2 going into the sixth. In the sixth, the Engineer's Thomas Johnstone and Kevin Davis scored two runs, only to be answered by Transportation's Lance Neece and Dan Hughes.

The game remained tied through the eighth inning and not until the ninth did Clarence Odums crack a base hit down the first base line to bring Dan Hughes across with the winning run.

Woods, Colpo score national, interservice wins

by Tommy Pool
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit won both National and Interservice Shooting Championships in competition last month.

At this year's National Pistol Matches fired at Camp Perry, Ohio, MSgt. Thomas Woods came from 10 points behind on the final day to win the National Individual Championship.

Competing in strong winds gusting up to 20 miles per hour during the last day of the championship, Woods was able to overtake early leaders SSgt. James Lenardson and Capt. Patrick Powell of the National Guard.

Woods fired a winning total of 2,620 out of 2,700 to finish three points ahead in the final aggregate championship. Both Lenardson and Powell scored 2,617 points and finished second and third respectively.

Woods also won the prestigous President's One Hundred and U.S. Army Forces Command Trophies for firing the highest score in the National Individual and Trophy Team championships.

In team events, the U.S. Army "Gray" squad scored 1,155 out of 1,200 to win the .45 caliber National Pistol Team Championship.

Members of the Army "Gray" squad included MSgts. Joe Steed and Erich Buljung, SFC Jimmie McCoy and SSgt. Gary Marsh. SFC Anderson Leavelle was the team coach, while SFC Wesley Vaughn served as team captain.

During the Interservice Rifle Championships at Quantico, Va., USAMU's SP4 Michael Colpo scored a final aggregate total of 985 out of 1,000 points to win the individual Interservice title.

Colpo finished two points ahead of U.S. Marine Corps shooters, SSgt. John Cook and Sgt. D.W. Demille, both with scores of 983.

In other individual events, USAMU shooters established three new Interservice records. SFC Tommy Covington broke the first record with a score of 200-17x in the 600-yard Any Rifle category, to raise the old mark of 200-16x.

SP4 Vincent Greiner also set a new record in the 600 yard Service Rifle category by scoring 200-13x, to erase the old record of 200-11x.

The third new Interservice record was fired by USAMU's Maj. Edward Schumacher in the Long Range Rifle Championship. The event consists of 20 shots at 600 yards and 20 shots at 1,000 yards. Schumacher fired a perfect total of 400-29x and raised the old record score from 400-25x.

More than 900 shooters competed in this year's National Pistol events, and more than 400 were on hand for the Interservice Rifle Championships.

The U.S. Army Rifle Team is recently competed in the National Rifle Championships at Camp Perry, Ohio.

Benning marksmen grab top prizes in nationals

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit returned to Fort Benning this week after scoring a near total domination of the 1986 National Rifle and Pistol Championships at Camp Perry, Ohio during July and August.

After winning early victories in pistol events, USAMU members continued their dominance during the National Smallbore and Highpower Rifle championships.

In one of the closest contests in recent years, SFC John Mann narrowly edged Sgt. Jeffrey Larosa in a tie-breaking procedure for this year's National Service Rifle Championship.

Mann and Larosa finished the four-day event with identical scores; however, Mann scored five more center shots, with a total of 2,365-88x to Larosa's 2,365-83x.

Third place in the championship went to Capt. David Erickson, also of USAMU, who finished two points back at 2,363-95x.

In addition to winning the national individual title, Mann also won the national 1,000-yard Service Rifle Championship. He scored a total of 193-11x, to win the event by two points over Cpl. Dan Jones and SSgt. Kenneth Roxborough of the U.S. Marine Corps.

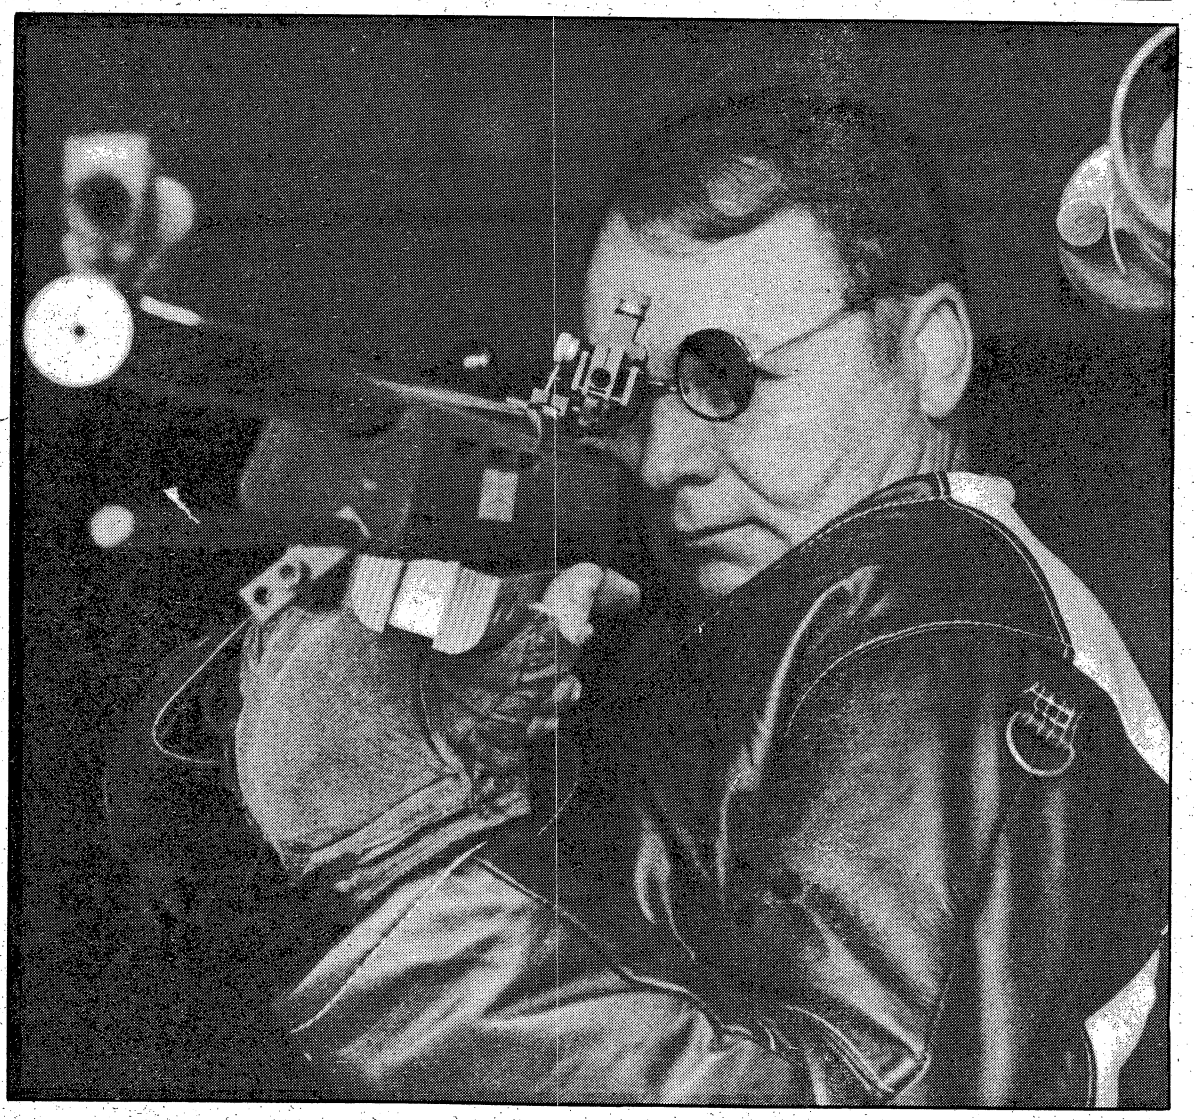
Other individual winners during this year's highpower rifle events were Maj. Edward Schumacher, who scored 495 out of 500 to win the national individual Daniel Boone Trophy as well as the U.S. Forces Command Trophy for scoring the highest combined individual and team score.

Schumacher also won the 200-yard rapid-fire Appreciation Cup Trophy with a score of 200-16x, only one center shot short of the national course record of 200-17x.

USAMU's SSgt. Greg Strom won the Pershing and Rattlesnake Trophies for the high scoring Army competitor during the National Trophy team championship, while Erickson won the Navy and Nevada Trophy Cup championships during the individual matches.

In the National Four Man Team Championships, the U.S. Army swept the top three places with the winning Army squad scoring a total of 1,190 out of 1,200 points. The second and third place Army teams finished with tie scores of 1,183.

Members of the winning team included Schumacher, Larosa, Erickson and Sgt. Lowell Johnson. The winning team coach was SSgt. David Batt.



The U.S. Army also won national team victories in the Infantry Trophy Championship and the 1,000-yard Long Range team events.

The 1,000-yard metallic sight Roumanian Trophy was won by the U.S. Army "Batt" team, while the 1,000-yard any sight Herrick Trophy was won by U.S. Army "Silvis".

Team members of the winning Roumanian Trophy included Sgt. Kenneth Strait, Larosa, Sgt. Jeffrey Nyfeler, Johnson and Batt (team coach).

Members of the winning Herrick Trophy were Schumacher, SFC Tommy Covington, SSgt. Earl Ellis and Sp4 Vincent Greiner. The squad was coached by SSgt. Lewis Silvis. This marked the second concecutive year that the winning Army team in this event was coached by Silvis.

Individual 1,000-yard titles were also won by Strom and Mann in the service rifle categories of the matches. Strom scored 194 out of 200 to win the Porter Trophy, while Mann totaled 193 out of 200 to win the Farr Trophy championship.

USAMU's Lt. Col. Lones Wigger shows the winning form that brought him an unprecedented 18th Smallbore Rifle title.

In the Smallbore Rifle events, Lt. Col. Lones Wigger led from start to finish to win his 18th national position championship since his first victory in 1963.

Wigger scored a total of 2,313 out of 2,400 to finish 35 points ahead of runner-up, Maj. William Beard of the Army Reserve. Beard fired a total of 2,278-47x to place in front of USAMU's Sgt. Marvin Spinks in third position at 2,278-36x.

The Women's Position championship was won by Capt. Joyce Myers, also of USAMU, with a final score of 2,250. She finished 12 points ahead of Robin Bardenhayen and SSgt. Suzanne Mitchell of the USAR.

In team events, the U.S. Army "Blue" squads won both the National Metallic and Any Sight Championships. Members of the winning teams included Wigger, Spinks, Myers, SFC Mark Kauder and 1st Lt.'s William Patzke and Ronald Wigger.

The final individual and team standings from this year's National Rifle and Pistol Championships are as follows:

Finals: 1986 National Matches

Barracudas tops at tri-city meet

Recently the Barracuda Swim Team competed in the Tri-City Invitational Swim Meet in Columbus and set 22 tri-city records.

Team members included Marshall Leonard in the boys 6 and under category; Paul Mules, in the 11 and 12 age group, Katie Bjarnson in the girl's 7 and 8 year old group; Bethaney Bjarnson in the 9 and 10 year old division; Kristy Rock and Jenny Banyea, 13 and 14 year; and Cindu Rock in the 15 and up division.

Records were set in the 25, 50 and 100 yard freestyle, back, breast and butterfly strokes, as well as individual medley events.

Phone number offers West Point football

By dialing 1-900-410-ARMY callers can access live broadcasts of the U.S. Military academy football games along with pre and postgame shows.

The service can handle 14,000 call simultaneously. Cost is 50 cents for the first minute and 35 cents for each additional minute. Calls from outside the U.S. must pay prevailing international rates.

Pregame shows will start approximately 30 minutes before scheduled kickoffs.

Tennis tournament winners announced

Jack L. Goodwin won the Junior Veteran Division title in the 1986 USAIC Tennis Championship here recently.

Goodwin and Nick Johnson won the junior veterans double title. John Nix and Donald Riggers were second place finishers in doubles competition.

Ricardo Ramirez won the open division singles title, while Santiago Busan was runner-up.

Doubles champions in the open division were Busa and Charles B. Culp Jr.

Hunting safety classes available next week

Persons born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, desiring to hunt in Georgia or on the Fort Benning reservation must complete a State Hunting Safety class. Classes will be conducted Tuesday and Wednesday in Building 4, Classroom 24, from 7 to 10 p.m. Students must attend both classes.

Post boxing program needs boxers, trainers

Those participating in the Fort Benning Boxing Program now have two locations where training is available.

In addition to the Harmony Church Field House location, Main Post's Briant Wells Field House is also equipped with a regulation size ring.

The Fort Benning Boxing Program has tentatively scheduled a full boxing card at Gowdy Field Sept. 26.

For more informaion, contact the sports director at 545-5777.

Benning golfer places sixth in All-Army tryout

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Trials for the All-Army Golf Team hosted a soldier of the 215th Area Finance Support Center, 36th Engineer Group.

SP4 Clayton S. Uselton attended the camp recently at Fort Meade, Md., where he placed sixth in competition for the All-Army team.

Competition was a four day event with golfers playing 18 holes each day vying for the top five slot to make the All-Army team.

After leading the first two days with shots of 70 and 75, the 1978-79 Tennessee Junior Player of the Year, met the third day with disappointment, shooting a 81.

"It was the day that cost me," said Uselton. "It was one of those days when everthing goes wrong. I just couldn't get it together."

Beginning the sport at age eight, the 24-year-old putter has seen his share of both wins and loses.

"My whole family played golf. When I was about 10, the older guys would drag me out to the greens," said Uselton.

The largest tournament that Uselton played was the 1984 U.S. Amateur Tournament in Oklahoma City. But he said that the most exciting was last year's Tennessee State Amateur Tournament, where he took top honors.

Uselton went to the University of South Carolina on a four year golf scholarship, where he played with golfers currently on the Professional Golf Association tour, such as Brad Faxon, Davis Love III and Jody Mudd.

With the opportunity to advance to the professional ranks, Uselton chose to enlist in the Army.

It was his senior year that the South Carolina team ranked 12th in the country.

Uselton stopped playing golf after entering the service, but knew that he would return to the sport.

"In that I'd played golf for so long, it became a job rather than a form of enjoyment," said Uselton. "I took the time off to regain the hunger for the thrill of the game, that I might play better just because I love the sport."

The finance specialist gave up the opportunity to make the $ 100,000 tour in order to handle money, but knows golf will always be a great part of his wealth.

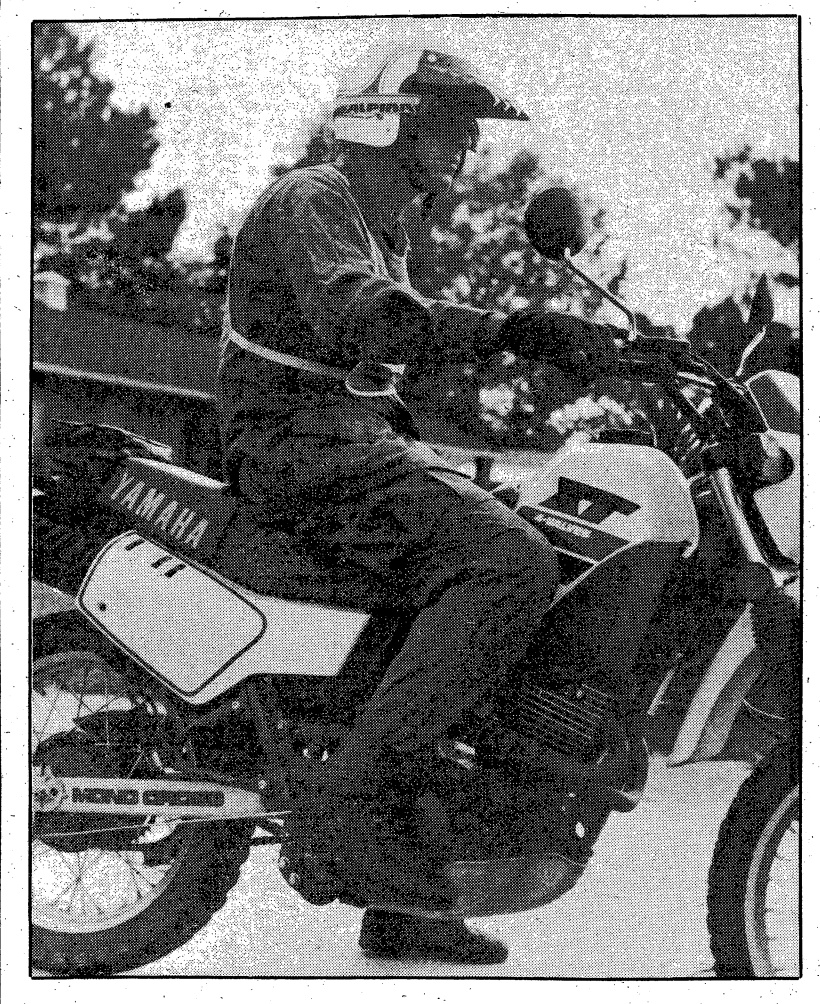
Facilities set holiday hours

Monday, Labor Day, will be a holiday for soldiers and civilian employees in nonessential positions.

Reliable Trash Service Company will also be on holiday, so those housing areas where trash is normally collected on Monday will have it picked up on Tuesday. Those whose trash is usually picked up on Tuesday will have collection Wednesday.

Martin Army Community Hospital clinics and outlying facilities will be closed. Emergencies will be handled at the hospital Emergency Room. All Troop Medical Clinics with the exception of TMC 5, Building 3216 on Sand Hill, will be closed.

The pharmacy at Martin Army Community Hospital will be open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. The Refill Pharmacy at the Main Mall, however, will be closed.



The Commissary will be closed. The Post Exchange retail and food facilities will be open normal hours at the main store, the Mini-Mall, Custer Terrace, Sand Hill, Kelley Hill troop store, Baskin Robbins, Burger King, the Main Mall Bowling Alley and the Main Post Bowling Alley.

The Mall Service Station will be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Harmony Church; 8th Division Road Snack Bar, 11 a.m. to 8:30 p.m.; Mall Snack Bar, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Hot Dog House, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.; Mini-Mall Pizza Pub, noon to 8 p.m.; Sand Hill Snack Bar, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Kelley Hill Snack bar, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and the Airborne Snack Bar, noon to 10 p.m.

The theaters will be open normal hours.

New policy sets guidelines for motorcyclists

Required clothing, equipment meant to reduce severe injuries

Properly outfitted with all of the required safety clothing and equipment, SFC Gary B. Kilpatrick heads off to work at Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Fort Benning motorcyclists will be required to wear and display a variety of safety equipment when the military police begin enforcing a change to the U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 190-5.

According to MSgt. Gary Leeds, Military Police Activity Operations non-commissioned officer, an exact date for the implementation of the change has not been determined.

In compliance with a Department of the Army regulation, soldiers driving or riding motorcycles on or off the installation must wear an approved helmet, long sleeve shirt, long pants, goggles or shatterproof eye protection, a reflective vest, leather boots or shoes and gloves. Leeds explained that if the motorcycle has a protective windshield, the rider does not have to wear eye protection.

Motorcycles must have mirrors on both sides of the handlebars and must have the headlight illuminated at all times.

Phyllis Taylor from the For Benning Safety Office said tha the new policy will affect abou 1,000 motorcyclists on post. I 1985 945 people completed th motorcycle safety course that i a requirement to register cycle on post and Taylor estimate that the number for this yea would be close to that.

Taylor said she believes th new policy is the Army's way c protecting vital resources. "Th soldier is the Army's most valu able resource. In most cases c motorcyle accidents involvin another vehicle, the other vehicl is at fault. The driver of the othe vehicle will usually say, 'I didn' see him' (the motorcyclist)."

Taylor said the reflective ves will help make the motorcyclis more visible. Leeds agreed "Even if you don't see the head light, you will ususally pick up o the reflective vest," Leeds said

The required clothing, Taylo explained, will provide additiona protection to the motorcyclis who does get into an accident "When a motorcyclist hits th ground, he's going to ge

Revised weight control program due out Oct. 1

Army News Service

Soldiers soon will have a new set of policy guidelines on the Army Weight Control Program — ranging from the way measurements are taken to an increase in the women's screening-table weight ceiling.

The changes are contained in the revised Army Regulation 600-9 that takes effect Oct. 1, said Col. James S. Jewel of the Office of the Army's Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at the Pentagon.

He explained that the revised program's original effective date of April 1 was changed to allow policymakers to consider comments from the field.

A major change from the current procedure allows soldiers to select a desired weight below their screening-table weight listed in the regulation. A soldier will use this as a guideline to keep him at his individualized weight. The tables, Jewel noted, represent upper weight limits for the average person. This practice was adopted recognizing that individual differences should be taken into account, Jewel added.

Another change, Jewel said, consists o using a tape measure, instead of a caliper, t measure the extent of body fat. The meas urement, formerly conducted by medica personnel at medical facilities, now will b done at the unit level. This policy result from the Army leadership's emphasis on th commander's responsibility to work with hi troops and assist them in meeting thei weight standards.

Labor Day acts as transition from one season to another

Safety vital in planning weekend fun

by Dawn Kilpatrick
Bayonet Editor

Labor Day will be celebrated Monday. And while this particular national holiday has its roots in the 1800s, it has come to mean something very different for the masses today than it did for our forefathers.

Originally established to recognize the "working man" in an age where the proletariat represented a certain American way of life, Labor Day allowed the entire population a day to stop and examine the value of a working force.

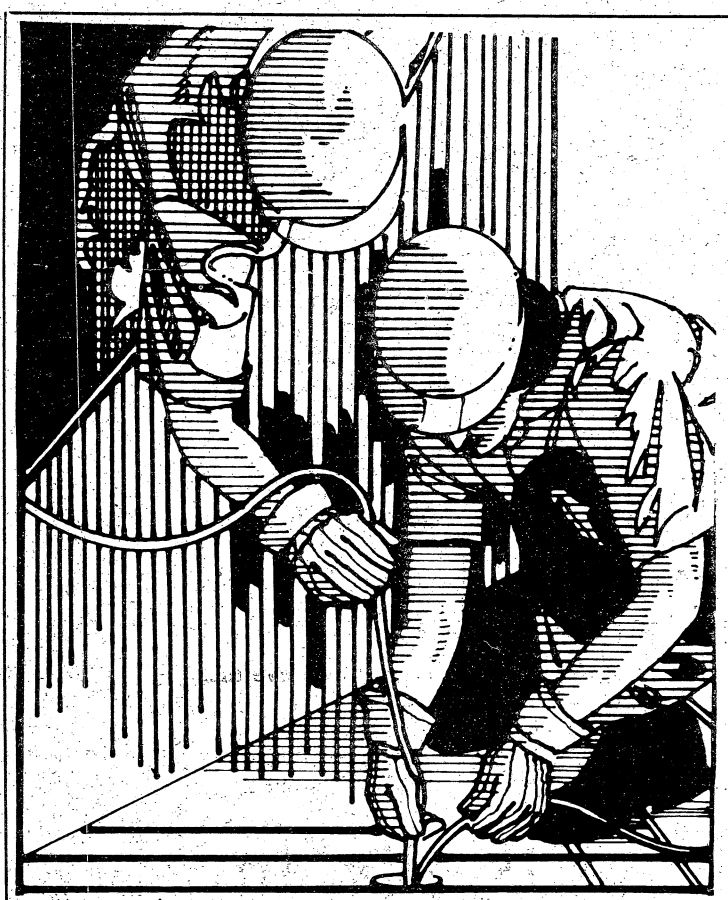
Today, however, the observance of this holiday marks the passing of summer.

Labor Day is still a time for reflection of sorts, however. As summer turns into fall and fall into winter, we have a tendency to look at what we have accomplished and set or revise our goals.

Schools and colleges throughout the country reopen. Many regard the traditionally long weekend as the last hoorah before buckling down to a season of hard work.

Long weekends are special to most of us. We regard them as the much-needed break that they are. Often we take the opportunity to travel. Some people will make a short trip to Atlanta while others may hit the highway for home (if it isn't too far away.)

Special attention should be given to your vehicle if you are planning a trip this weekend. Supervisors have the responsibility to perform safety inspections of all their soldiers' vehicles. This is an added precaution to help ensure everyone returns to work Tuesday. If you are a supervisor, take the time to show you care.



If your plans are to stay close to Fort Benning and simply relax, there are certain things you need to be aware of to make certain the weekend passes without a hitch.

Drinking alcohol in city parks is against the law. Don't do it.

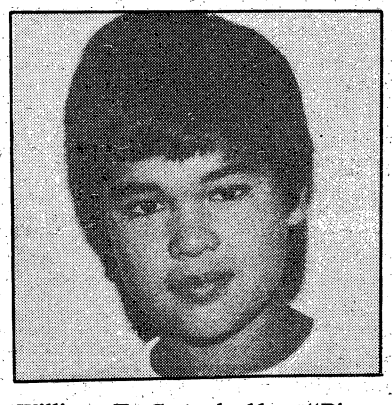
If you're swimming or water skiing or boating, drinking and water don't mix. Water sports are demanding and need all of your attention. Don't dull your senses with a beer or two.

The oft repeated "Don't drink and drive" cannot be stressed enough. Let's keep our wits about us and have a safe and happy Labor Day weekend.

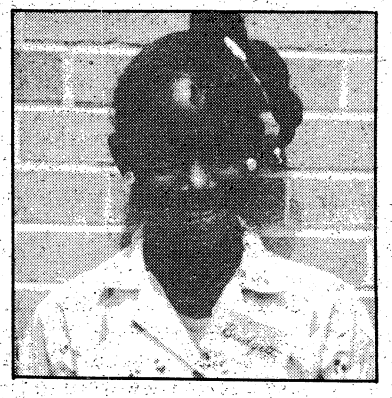
Who's starting the charcoal?

"A truly American sentiment recognizes the dignity of labor and the fact that honor lies in honest toil." — Grover Cleveland.

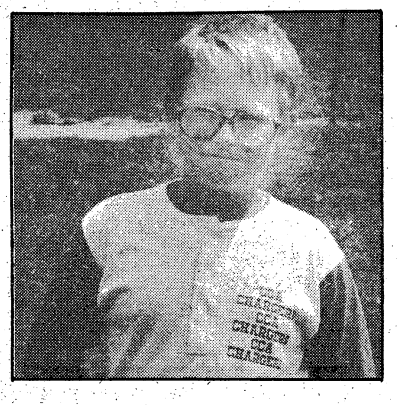
Various voices



The Labor Day holiday weekend traditionally marks the end of summer. What was the highlight of your vacation and what are you looking forward to this school year?



Kathleen M. Wilcox, 8, "I enjoyed going to the pool. I love to swim. I am looking forward to working hard this school year."



Elizabeth Shields, 9, "The most fun of the summer was going to a lot of places and seeing a lot of my family at the reunion. This year I want to have a lot of fun and work hard."

William E. Guasch, 11, "Playing around the house with my new toys was a lot of fun. When I got bored I got a chance to read some good books. This year I want to make better grades."

Bridgett Bell, 9, "I had the most fun going to see my grandmother in Armericus, Ga. This year I want to learn a lot."

Troy Owens, 10, "I reckon the most fun of the summer was going to Alabama and riding my four-wheeler. I looking forward to a lot of fun and not a lot of school work."

Bible offers code of values for group of post workers

by John Dresser
Fort Benning Supply Division

Change is something everyone is familiar with. In the Army we have changes of command and permanent change of station moves.

Many of these changes can be good for us. Some can even be fun or profitable.

Sometimes changes can be frustrating, as when we just have something down pat and it gets changed.

Moral values is a good example. What was once called "stealing" is often laughed off as "redistribution of government property." One section of men at Fort Benning's Supply Division doesn't see it that way.

Assigned to the vehicle unit are five men who will quickly tell you that the standards of conduct here are from the Bible.

Otis Duncan is the first person you would probably come into contact with when conducting business at the vehicle unit. "The Bible gives us the values that we are to uphold. God hasn't changed them and until he does, I intend to follow them," Duncan, who is also a Methodist minister, said.

George King, leadman and veteran of more than 33 years of federal service will tell anyone, "No matter who you are or what your rank is, you'll be treated fairly and with dignity in this yard."

Harold Hunter, supervisor of the vehicle unit, said of values, "It is a good feeling to go home at night and know that there are no loose ends left behind and no questions about employee integrity or honesty.

"These men differ in age, race, and denomination, but they all have one thing in common — they are all born-again Christians.

"Each is aware of his responsibility to put in an honest day's work, uphold his brother and be ready to witness his faith."

Commander's comments

Congress established the first Monday in September as Labor Day.

Since its inception, Labor Day has been observed annually to honor the skill and industry of the American wage-earner. It is often referred to as the "American Worker's Holiday."

Labor Day will be celebrated by millions of Americans this year. Unfortunately, accidents frequently occur on this long weekend; but they won't if proper precautions are taken.

The majority of these fall into two categories — those resulting from motor vehicles and those involving water sports.

If you must drive, plan your trip carefully. Be sure your vehicle is in safe condition include rest stops, wear your seat belts and above all drive defensively.

While swimming always use the "buddy system" and swim only in authorized areas.

I urge you to take advantage of local and on post recreational facilities. They are convenient, less expensive and often more satisfying than a hurried trip to some distant place.

Have an enjoyable holiday by making it a safe one for yourself, your friends and your family. Let safety be your guiding principle in all holiday activities.

Seatbelts' importance learned hard way in highway accident

Safety Office

Much has been done recently to get people to wear seatbelts. There's nothing more convincing than a personal experience. Unfortunately, that's just what happened to Marilyn Howell, an employee at Milan Army Ammunition Plant. She told her story in the plant newspaper in the hopes that someone else won't have to learn the hard way.

"I guess we all tend to think of the spring and summer months as vacation time. At least I do. So back in May of this year, I decided to take a few days off. I had planned on it being a wonderful time off from work, but in a twinkle of an eye, it turned into a nightmare! Here's what happened.

"My husband and I were enjoying a leisurely drive until just outside Sharon, Tenn.

"A car coming from the opposite direction suddenly turned directly in front of us with no warning whatsoever. There was no way to miss it, even though we were traveling at a slow speed.

"My husband was driving and, of course, he made an effort to avoid hitting the car. This sudden swerve threw me into the driver's side because you see I didn't have my seatbelt fastened. I hit the steering wheel full force, almost as though something had thrown me there. When the car finally stopped, we were conscious but rattled.

"An ambulance came and took us to a hospital. (Incidentally, the driver of the other car was hardly scratched.) My husband and I had cuts and bruises all over us, but we were grateful to be alive. He spent three days in the hospital and was then released.

"Mine was a different story. I had internal injuries caused from the blow I received when I was thrown into the steering wheel.

"I was hospitalized for 24 days. It has been a long and painful experience for me. I missed two months from work; we've had to buy a new car (ours was totaled); and the driver of the other car had no insurance. Along with the physical suffering there has been a lot of emotional and financial strain involved.

"I guess that one of the hardest things to face was the fact that if I had been wearing my seatbelt more than likely I would have been spared much of the physical suffering and financial loss.

"This is why I plead with you to fasten your seatbelt. You can bet your life I will not drive or ride in a car until everyone is fastened in.

"Why don't you make a practice of it! It only takes a few seconds, but it could have your life."

Letters

The Bayonet invites readers to write letters to the Editor. If you disagree with a story written in the paper or wish to air your views on a topic, feel free to write.

The Army theme this year is values. For this reason, we presently are specifically requesting letters on how values have helped people deal with difficult life experiences, or what values have taught them.

We ask that writers try to write about specific instances and situations, rather than writing in general philosophical terms.

We ask that you hold your correspondence to no more than 250 words. All letters should be typed double-spaced, or hand written legibly.

Please include your name, address and telephone number so we can contact you if necessary. Only your name and city will be printed. It is our policy not to withhold names. No per names will be printed.

Letters are subject to standard editing and condensing.

Misstatements of fact will be corrected.

Generally no more than one letter a month from a writer will be published.

Poetry and open letters will not be published.

Those letters we choose not to use will not be sent back. We also cannot provide personal responses to individual letters.

You may bring your letters to our office in Room 601, Building 4, or mail it to: Editor, The Bayonet, Room 601, Building 4, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

If you have any questions, please feel free to call our office at 545-2201/4622.

Artillerymen compete for 'Top Gun' award

Story and photos
by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Howitzer sections from 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, were in a heated competition last week for the Battalion's "Top Gun" award. The spirit of competition among the batteries also fulfilled a training requirement.

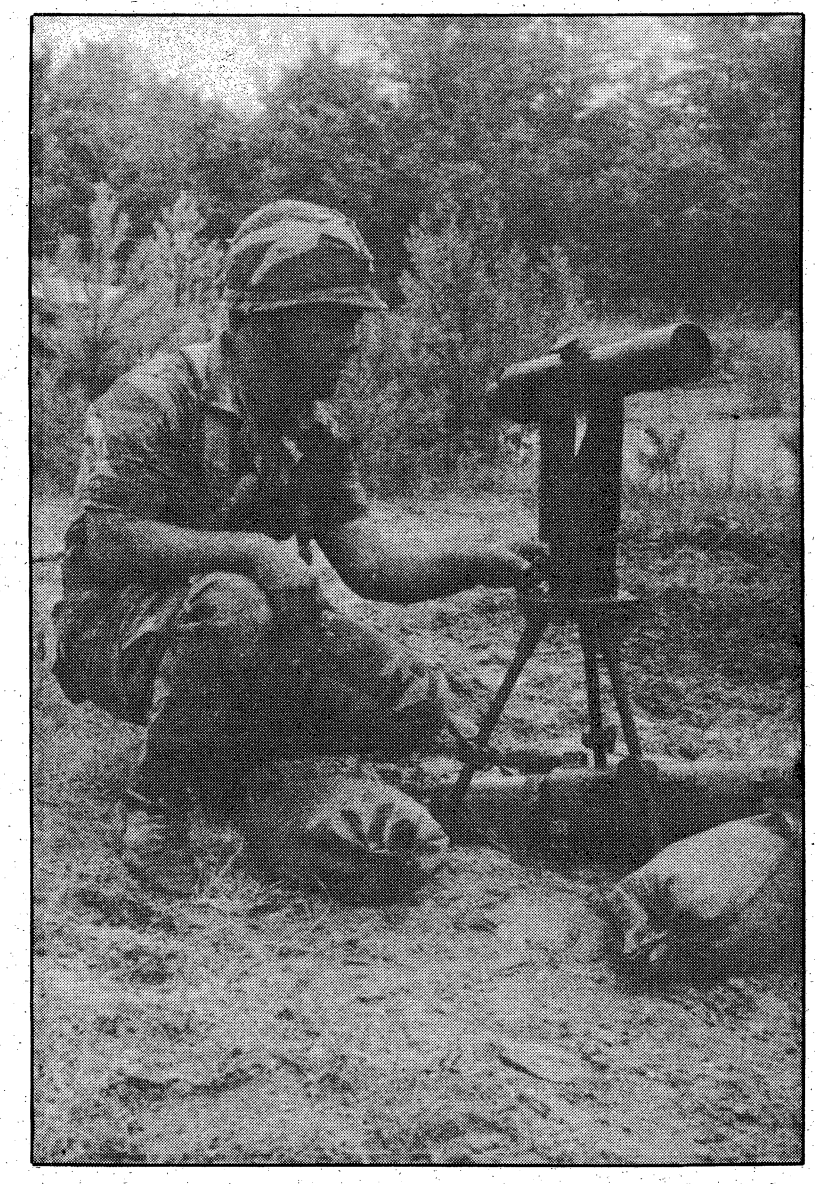
A howitzer section evaluation is done semi-annually to maintain certification of the battalion's howitzer sections.

"In order for the batteries to remain combat capable, there are certain things a howitzer section must be able to do," said Capt. Michael Walker, Battery A commander. "The evaluation is based on those tasks."

The field artillery soldiers are evaluated on basic soldier skills, maintenance and tasks necessary to position and fire the howitzers.

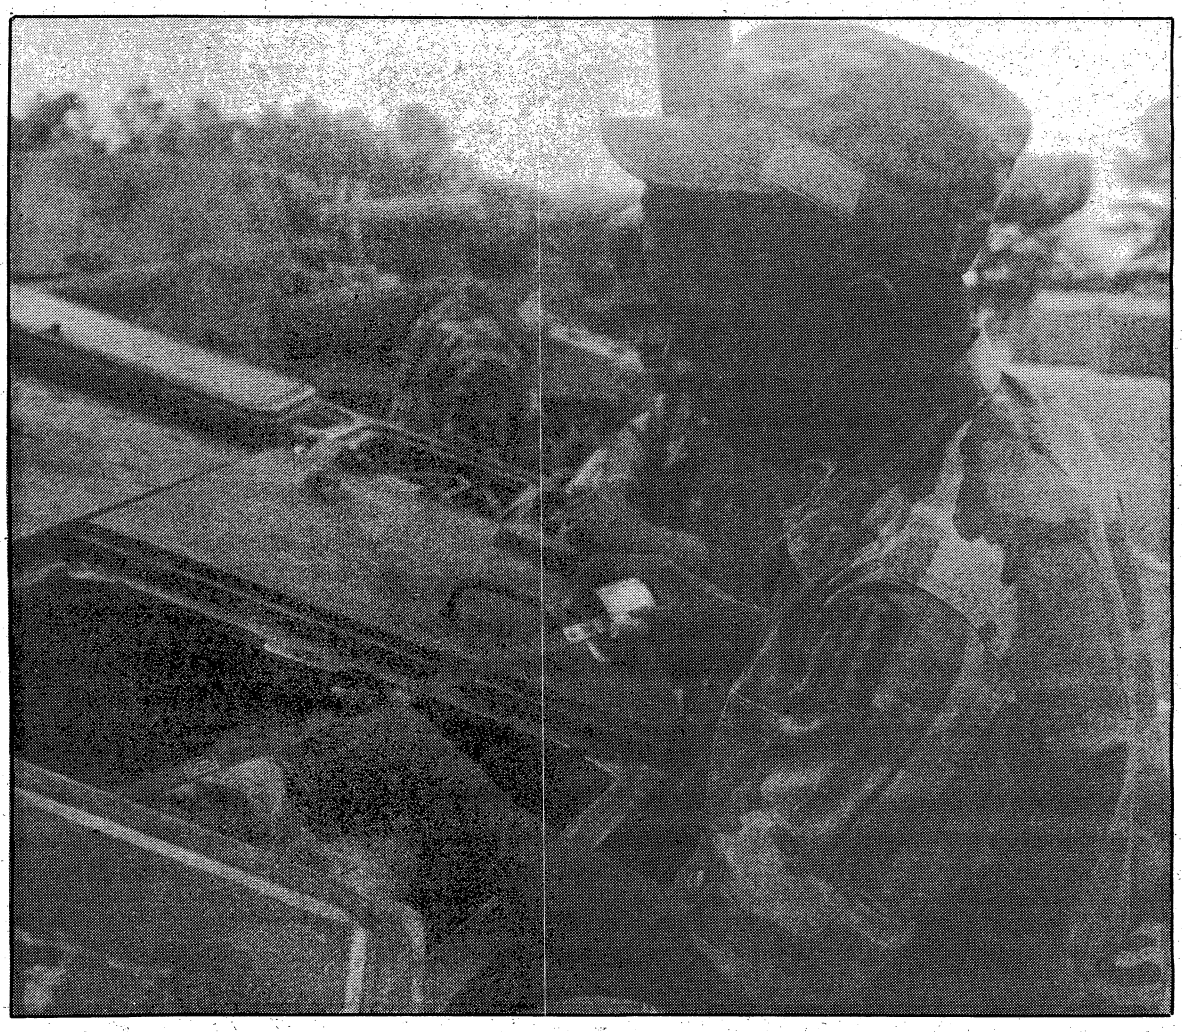
First, each soldier takes a written test of common soldier skills and field artillery related subjects.

Maintenance of the vehicles and equipment is evaluated by the battalion motor officer and maintenance technician. The maintenance evaluators check each crew member's ability to perform preventive maintenance checks and services, and to properly complete the paperwork to document a vehicle's maintenance. They also see that the "combat load" is properly stored on the vehicle.



The advance party must properly prepare the firing position that the howitzer will occupy. They set out the firing stakes to establish direction to the target and establish communication in the area.

The crew then has to perform several tasks to ensure that they are "laid in" to the position correctly.

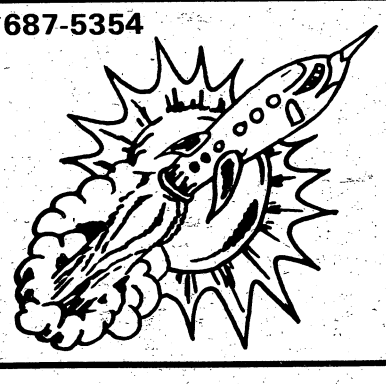


Finally, the crew must complete a dry-fire mission. The evaluators see that they use the proper commands and that the site picture is on target. They also determine that the chief and crew function as a team.

The tasks are scored on a "go-no go" basis and a point value is set for the number of go's versus the number of no go's. The "Top Gun" section will be determined by adding that number to the section's average score on the written test.

The battalion's competition and evaluation is wrapping up this week.

SP4 Eric Colon, Battery A, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, makes an adjustment on an artillery aiming device.



SP4 Andre Gilbert, Battery B, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, checks a howitzer's oil during the maintenance phase of a battalion howitzer section evaluation.

Two soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade check over their tank during a break in the battle.

Experience, hard work ensure Company B tops at maintenance

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Experience pays, as soldiers from Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor will tell you. They have mastered the art of keeping tanks operational and combat ready even in the most demanding battle environments.

Their knowledge has been field-tested during several recent trips to the desert. Each time they have sharpened their skills a little more.

"When a tank goes down during field exercises on Fort Benning, all you have to do is tow it back to the motor pool," said 1st Lt. Doug Irwin, a platoon leader from Bravo Company. "But in the desert, the tank must be serviced wherever it breaks down. So it pays to have a good maintenance team."

Extreme temperatures demand a well-serviced vehicle, according to Irwin. So maintenance has to be done on a daily basis in the desert. The tanks must be serviced every night after maneuvers. Even during a break in the battles, tankers check what they can.

The tankers say that the desert causes certain recurring problems that they have learned to identify.

Since the tanks move at a much higher rate of speed, for example, the suspension systems take a beating. Sand also wears out the track pads much faster. Before deployment the track pads, shoes and shocks are all serviced.

Other persistent problems are dirty fluids and air. Engine oil must be replaced daily. Also, the tanks are equipped with a clean air induction system that allows the engine to breathe without drawing in dust or sand. Each of Co. B's M60 tanks have been desert-modified in this way.

Irwin credits numerous deployments for Bravo Company's experience in knowing what to expect in the desert.

"Since we know what parts will be damaged or broken in the desert, we also know what parts will have to be serviced at the end of the day," says SSgt. Zebedee Clarke, a platoon sergeant.

"What really keeps us going is pride," says SSgt. Flonoy Chambers, a tank platoon leader. "Bravo Company has always been the best maintenance company."

29th Infantry Regiment hosts California reservists

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment PAO

After two weeks of training in hot, humid Georgia, members of the 91st Training Group returned home to cool California last week.

The U.S. Army Reserve unit was here as part of its annual training mission: to continue instruction to basic and One Station Unit Training soldiers in the event active-duty soldiers are called to war.

The group arrived Aug. 9, and after certification by 29th Infantry Regiment instructors, the Reservists taught classes on the squad automatic weapon, basic rifle marksmanship, squad tactical training, individual tactical training, land navigation, first aid, tactical communication, land mine warfare and the M60 machine gun.

According to SGM Earl Sutton, a member of the Reserve team, these are only a few of the subjects the group would have to teach if activated.

The Reservists were well received by instructors of the Regiment, Sutton said. "They accepted us like we were on active duty. They made no distinction. And they supplied us fully with all the material we needed."

He added, "We have found Fort Benning to be the most hospitable and professional post we have been on." The group has also trained at Fort Ord, Calif., Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and Fort Jackson, S.C.

Temperatures ranged in the 90s during the group's stay. And although the training and the post were enjoyable, Sutton said, "We look forward to getting back to cool bay area."

Approximately 250 soldiers from San Francisco, San Jose, Oakland, Dublin, Concord, San Leandra and Clayton, Calif., were part of the mobilization effot.

Their regular occupations include police officer, business executive, postal and sales clerk, bus driver and mechanic, Sutton said.

The 91st was organized Aug. 26, 1917 as the 91st Division at Camp Lewis, Wash.

Its units include Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st, 2nd and 4th Brigades, Maneuver Training Command, Training Command, Leadership Academy and the 6219 Army Reception Station.

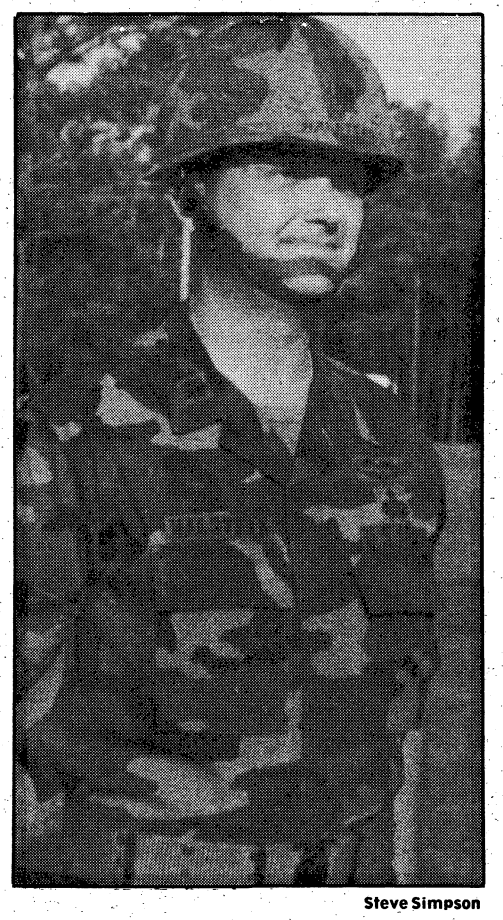
197th Infantry

The "Soviet" regiment had a well-laid plan to cut down the strength of its adversary. In the early-morning darkness of the desert, a motorized infantry company awaited the movement of an opposing tank company maneuvering toward a defensive position.

A "Soviet" reconnaissance patrol heard tank engines to the east and quickly alerted the rest of the company. Without warning the "Soviets" ambushed the column and took two tanks. Remaining tanks continued moving into the midst of the ambush. More tanks were destroyed. The few that were left scattered to the north, losing command and control.

This battle scenario is typical of what a rotational task force is up against while training at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.



However, in this particular battle, Fort Irwin's permanently based opposing force was assisted by Company D, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry.

The Fort Benning soldiers are in the desert completing 30 days of OPFOR duty with the 6th Battalion, 31st Infantry.

The company trained on OPFOR tactics and learned to use Soviet weapons and equipment. They even donned Warsaw Pact-style uniforms before rolling out with the OPFOR to fight force-on-force exercises.

"The tank ambush was a big mission for us," said Capt. Bill Shoaff, company commander. "It led to the success of the Soviet attack."

The company will return from the National Training Center Sept. 6. — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade PAO

36th Engineers

The summer season generally means long days spent relaxing for most. This has not been the case for the soldiers of the 598th Maintenance Company.

In June the 598th prepared for its annual Army Testing and Evaluation Program. The 598th was evaluated on its ability to establish and man a defensive perimeter, the size of 12 football fields and providing direct support maintenance for 33 customer units, on a 24 hour continual basis.

Training also included extensive nuclear biological and chemical activity, which required the soldiers to perform common tasks.

After a short break, the 598th received an Emergency Deployment Readiness Exercise notification on Aug. 4. An EDRE is designed to test the unit's overall ability to prepare and deploy for combat operations within 72 hours. During the EDRE, the unit worked around the clock preparing vehicles, unit files, individual records, weapons and equipment. The unit also packed up soldiers' personal belongings and initiated a privately owned vehicle turn-in process for safe keeping.

The inspections conducted by the 36th Engineer Group and the Fort Benning Emergency Operations Center were all rated as satisfactory. The final EDRE inspection culminated a 218-mile convoy on Aug. 7 to Warner Robbins Air Force Base with equipment that the unit would need to perform its wartime mission. — James Brown III, 598th Maintenance Company.

Infantry School

More than 200 lieutenants from the Infantry Office Basic Course went through a five-hour period of instruction at Brown Demolition Range recently.

During the exercise, the students blew more than 650 pounds of explosives as instructors from the U.S. Army Infantry School's Mobility/Counter Mobility Branch, Combined Arms Division, Combined Arms and Tactics Department, taught the lieutenants basic skills with explosives and demolitions.

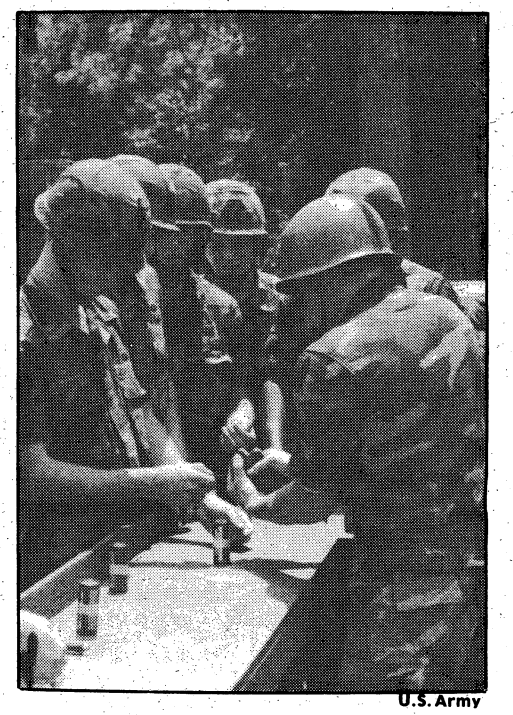
The training was divided into three phases. The first phase was a bleacher presentation by SFC Raymond L. Montgomery. The students were introduced to military explosives and became familiar with different priming techniques.

They then moved into the "hands-on" portion of the exercise. During this phase, the students constructed two priming systems. The first priming system consisted of TNT primed with detonating cord. The students also primed TNT with an electric cap for the second firing system.

Soldiers from the 72nd Engineer Company, 197th Infantry Brigade served as additional instructors during the training. Serving as AI's allows the soldiers from the 72nd to maintain their proficiency in a required skill, as well as provides the extra instructors needed to handle the large demonstration phase.

The final phase consisted of a four-station round-robin exercise. Students were exposed to steel-cutting charges with C-4 explosive, the hasty road crater using the shaped charge and cratering charge, the construction of an abatis as a counter-mobility obstacle and the use of a 4.2-inch mortar round as a field expedient anti-personnel mine.

At the end of the day the students blew all of the charges at the round-robin stations down range.



After the explosion had gone off, the dust had settled, and the range was cleared, the students were able to view the result of each round-robin station in order to see the effectiveness of each charge.

The success of the exercise was due, in large part, to the support provided by the soldiers of the 72nd Engineer Company, medical support from the 34th Medical Battalion, the Ammunition Supply Installation and the Range Division.

Instructors from the Mobility/Counter Mobility Branch, CAD, CATD, also conduct demolition training for the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, Ranger School, the Light Leader's Course, the Anvanced Non-commissioned Officer Course, and the Officer Candidate School.

They also provide classroom instruction on the use of Engineer assets as a combat multiplier.

Workshop teaches soldiers how to use absentee ballot

by Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Voting is not just a right, it's a responsibility."

Retired Navy Capt. Red McDaniel, who spent six years as a prisoner of war in Vietnam, echoed the thoughts of Army leadership as he spoke at a voting workshop here Monday.

The workshop was designed to help voting officers and non-commissioned officers on post teach soldiers to register and vote.

"When I went to Vietnam, I had never voted in my life. I spent six years watching the decisions that were made about that war, and made up my mind that I was going to do something about it," he said.

McDaniel said that all of the services together make up a constituency, which is important in the political process. "If you're a constituency, the politicians listen to you. We could get more tanks, more aircraft, and ensure a stronger national defense," he said.

On May 19, 1967, McDaniel was shot down over North Vietnam while flying his A-6 Intruder aircraft.

According to his biography, he was one of the most brutally tortured prisoners of the Vietnam War, in part because of his participation in camp communications and escape attempts. He was released from captivity March 4, 1973.

After his return, he was awarded the Navy Cross, its second highest award for bravery. He subsequently commanded the USS Niagara Falls and the USS Lexington before retiring from the Navy in 1982.

The most important thing he learned during his captivity, was the value of freedom. "If we lose our freedom, we have nothing," he said.

After his release, he said he was surprised that students were adopting the slogan "Nothing is worth dying for."

He said the young people in America have to be taught the importance of defending our freedom, because they are the future of our country.

"We have to teach them that if it isn't worth dying for, then it isn't worth living for," McDaniel said.

After his return from Vietnam, McDaniel felt so strongly about the need to educate young people about the value of our freedoms that he formed two organizations to further that aim.

The American Defense Institute and the American Defense Foundation are bipartisan organizations that promote a strong national defense. As president, McDaniel strives to teach young people the importance of good, well represented government and a strong, free America.

The ADI and ADF launched a massive military voter registration drive before the 1984 elections, which resulted in a large increase in the number of military personnel voting.

More than 200,000 newly registered servicemen and women voted, and for the first time, the percentage of military voters surpassed the percentage of voters in the general population.

When servicemembers are stationed away from their home, they become disenfranchised from the voting process, McDaniel said. One of his main goals is to see that servicemen and women learn how to obtain and cast an absentee ballot, in order to regain control of their voting rights.

Energy Update

Energy Office

The following are interesting energy facts:

The United States contains 6 percent of the world's population and consumes 33 percent of its energy resources.

Known oil reserves will last 30 years at our present consumption rates. Known natural gas reserves will last 20 years.

Since 1950 75 percent of our energy has come from oil and natural gas and nonrenewable fossil fuels.

There is a 100 year supply of coal in the United States.

Almost half of the oil we consume is imported.

Most of the world's oil reserves are in the Soviet Union and the Middle East.

Oil makes up 3 percent of the U.S. energy reserves and supplies almost half of the energy we use. Coal makes up 90 percent of the U.S energy reserves and provides 24 percent of our enrgy consumtion.

The U.S. could maintain its present standard of living while reducing energy consumption by 30 to 40 percent by conservation.

In 1983 $55 billion spent on imported oil accounted for 80 percent of the trade deficit.

It takes 20 to 50 years to develop and implement new en- energy systems.

The Energy Office is looking for energy conservation slogans to display on the signs around post.

If you submit a slogan that is used you could win an "Energy Buster" t-shirt.

Slogans should be no more than three lines long with 15 characters to a line. If you have a slogan you would like to submit, bring it by the office in Room 120, Building 262. For more information, call 545-4652.

Former POW recalls torture handed out at 'Hanoi Hilton'

Editor's note: National Prisoner of War/ Missing in Action Recognition Day is set for Sept. 19. It's a day set aside to make people aware of the pain and suffering that thousands of American POWs went through in all of the wars in which the United States has participated. It also is a day established by Congress and proclaimed by the president to call attention to the fact that more than 2,400 Americans are still missing in Southeast Asia.

The Tomb of the Unknown Soldier represents more than 3,300 World War I, 78,700 World War II and 8,100 Korean War servicemen whose remains have never been repatriated.

There are thousands of stories that could be told about what POWs went through to preserve the liberty we all cherish.

This is one of them . . . the story of former POW, Army Special Forces MSgt. Jon R. Cavaiani, who is also a Medal of Honor recipient. His story explains what led up to his capture by the North Vietnamese and his life in a POW camp.

by Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

"I don't know that I've really sat down and faced Vietnam as some of the more fotunate people have; it still bothers me," said Army Special Forces MSgt. Jon R. Cavaiani, a former POW and a Medal of Honor recipient.

After being released on March 27, 1973, Cavaiani was hospitalized for nearly six months. "They spent nearly five months trying to teach me how to walk again, how to swing my arms . . . I still had a bullet in me," said Cavaiani, who lost 106 pounds during his incarceration. "They were trying to get me back both psychologically and physically."

He was captured in June 1971 by a "69-year-old North Vietnamese soldier carrying a Soviet single-shot, bolt action rifle equally as old," as Cavaiani lay in darkness awaiting daylight so he could enter a friendly forces camp. He was suffering from extensive wounds received 11 days earlier in a fierce North Vietnamese barrage. His actions in helping other members of his platoon escape the attack later resulted in Cavaiani's receipt of the Medal of Honor.

Cavaiani spent the next 23 months, often being brutally interrogated, in POW camps such as "Plantation Gardens" (where he spent most of his time), "The Zoo," "The Hanoi Hilton," and "D-1," a camp south of Vihn. He was moved to the "Hanoi Hilton" on Dec. 27, 1972, and "fattened" on Russian meat and other "goodies" before being released after the war.

Flashing back to the days of his captivity, Cavaiani said he thinks he caused his own worst beating when he was first captured. The North Vietnamese political officer hit him across his face and Cavaiani said, "Hell, my grandmother hits harder than that . . ."

"That was my worst interrogation, both psychologically and physically," said Cavaiani. "He (the political officer) told a couple of guys to take off their sandals and they just kicked the living hell ot of me. They busted six of my ribs and six of my vertebrae. They strung me up about five feet over an incline, cut me loose, and I busted my neck near the top of my shoulder."

Cavaiani was already suffering from extensive burns to his hands, face and back, a wound from a bullet that had hit him in the lower back and stopped near the base of his neck, and close to 30 fragment wounds.

"They bandaged my hands and face because they were burned, and if spotted from the air, it would look like I was receiving medical treatment," said Cavaiani. "But they wouldn't do anything else."

The North Vietnamese eventually removed the bullet — rather crudely — causing Cavaiani problems as he healed. Since his captors wouldn't remove the fragments, Cavaiani sharpened a bamboo stick and dug them out himself.

American POWs were beaten for even minor infractions of camp regulations. A "normal" beating was 124 lashes with a rubber hose.

They lived in two- to eight-man rooms in a barracks-type building "in the middle of 4 million Vietnamese." Their beds consisted of a wooden plank, a little mat and a blanket — all bug infested. Depending on the weather, the POWs wore long or short red, pajama-style uniforms with reddish-gray stripes. Their hoes were called "zeps," a Vietnamese sandal made of innertubes and tires.

"There was no reason to get up in the morning, but they gave us regimentation," said Cavaiani. You'd get up about 7:30 every morning, fold your stuff a certain way and sit on your bed and talk to the other guys."

After a meager breakfast of weak tea and French bread, Cavaiani and his fellow POWs tried to entertain themselves by playing cards, "talking" movies, exercising or whatever else they could do to combat boredom.

"We got a deck of cards about every six months, so we'd cut them in half and make two decks," said Cavaiani. "Talking a movie could take up to two hours or more — that was two hours you were not in prison."

POWs were given haircuts about every month and a half. They shaved every three or four days.

"There wasn't much outside time, no exercise time, but some prisoners did their own thing, like working up to 2,000 sit-ups and 1,000 push ups a day," he said. "The camaraderie amongst the soldiers was really the best part."

Reflecting back on 23 months in a North Vietnamese POW camp, Cavaiani said,"I hope we never get involved in another war period. But we have a right to defend this country and that's what we're going to do . . ."

American families wait, hope while search for MIAs continues

by Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

Of the more than three million Americans who served in Southeast Asia, 2,436 are still missing or unaccounted for. Their families and friends wonder, day in and day out, year after year, when — or if — they will hear if their lived ones are dead or alive.

Among those waiting is retired Air Force Lt. Col. George Shine, whose son, Capt. Anthony C. Shine, disappeared more than 13 years ago.

The older Shine, a veteran of World War II and the Korean War, received word on Dec. 2, 1972, that his oldest son's jet fighter had disappeared over Laos.

Since that day, his life has become one of waiting and hoping, and, as a board member of the League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, helping to keep the issue of America's missing alive.

Shine said he is particularly encouraged by recent progress in resolving the POW/MIA question.

The Socialist Republic of Vietnam pledged in July 1985 to resolve the POW/MIA issue within two years.

Richard L. Armitage, assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs, recently reported to Congress the developments since then:

- The Socialist Republic of Vietnam has turned over 33 human remains, 29 of which have been identified as Americans and returned to their families.
- The Vietnamese government provided the results of their investigations into 49 of 70 reports relating to missing Americans. Based on these investigations, 21 remains — 10 tentatively identified as Americans and 11 unidentified — were expected to be returned this spring.
- A joint U.S.-Vietnamese team excavated a B-52 crash site near Hanoi. This represented the first operation of its kind, and while the excavation uncovered only minimal human remains, it opened the door to possible future joint operations.
- A joint U.S.-Lao excavation of a U.S. crash site in February 1986 uncovered human remains, now undergoing analysis.
- Four representatives of the Lao People's Democratic Republic attended briefings at the U.S. Joint Casualty Resolution Center and Army Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii in September 1985 to learn about U.S search and identification capabilities.

Armitage told Congress top priority in this effort goes to determining if some Americans are still being held in Southeast Asia.

All but 112 reports of live sightings of Americans have been determined to be fabrications or reports of men who have been accounted for. These 112 cases, which involve 86 reported sightings in Vietnam, 24 in Laos and two in Cambodia, are under continuing investigation in an attempt to confirm the information, Armitage said.

These reports, he said, give the United States hope that some missing Americans may still be alive.

"We continue to seek the return of, and any information on, all Americans that may still be held in Indochina, regardless of their status, condition or circumstances," he said. "We seek not revenge, not retribution — but resolution."

And resolution of the POW/MIA issue, defense officials agree, appears closer now than ever before.

"It is clear to me that our strategy is working, and we must maintain and increase this momentum," Armitage said.

As encouraging as this momentum may be, historians caution that, as in past wars, some of America's missing may never be found. They note that 78,751 Americans from World War II are still recorded as missing, as well as 8,177 from the Korean War.

Bread, water reality for prisoners of war

by Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

Many former American prisoners of war called food in the North Vietnamese prison camps "terrible," but Army MSgt. Jon R. Cavaiani viewed it as a "saving grace." "It wouldn't have passed USDA standards, but it would keep you alive . . ."

At breakfast; every prisoner got his own little teapot and a half loaf of French bread. "Somebody passed a tea bag over the water and called it tea," said former POW and Medal of Honor recipient Cavaiani.

"Sometimes the bread was rancid," said Cavaiani, who lost 106 pounds during his 23 months of incarceration. "It had a little bit of everything from rat feces to string and cockroaches in it. But after a while, you made up your mind that you just ate it and didn't look. The North Vietnamese soldiers were eating the same thing.

Cavaiani has acquired a taste for such gourmet delights as Chateaubriand, veal scaloppine and his special homemade pizza. But his favorite meal in the "Plantation Gardens" POW camp in Hanoi was the garlic spiced broth from boiled fresh spinach his captors call "soup."

"The lunch menu consisted of whatever vegetable that was in season and a loaf of French bread," he said. "The stock from the boiled vegetables became your soup.

"Can you imagine eating pumpkin for two months, potatoes for two months, spinach for two months and kohlrabi (a turnip-like vegetable with stems all over it) for two months?" asked Cavaiani. "I had an allergic reaction to kohlrabi."

After his capture, it was 42 days before he reached the "Plantation Gardens." "I ate a rice ball a day (about the size of a baseball) and a teaspoon of ground salted fish," he said. "The North Vietnamese soldiers ate a half teaspoon of fish and a half rice ball."

His main staple for dinner in the camp was plantains, large cooking bananas, which were served about 4 p.m. "You got a little bit of egg on special occasions — I craved eggs," said Cavaiani.

"We got two meals on Sunday, rice with sugar in the morning — sort of like grits," he continued. "There was very little meat. On holidays, theirs and ours, they would give us buffalo meat and pork. They brought us into their celebrations, too.

"We celebrated the Fourth of July, Christmas, Tet — all the holidays, except Thanksgiving," he said.

Fort Benning plans observance for POW/MIA Recognition Day

USAIC Public Affairs Office

National Prisoner of War - Missing in Action Day will be observed at Fort Benning Sept. 19 at 11 a.m. in Marshall Auditorium at Infantry Hall.

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba, Fort Benning commander, will host the ceremony. He will be joined at the podium by guest speaker, retired Col. Benjamin H. Purcell, a former POW.

Immediately following the ceremony will be a wreath laying at the POW monument in front of Green Hall on Lumpkin Road.

The Infantry Museum will host a tour of the POW/MIA display at 1:35 p.m.

A special display of unique items made by POWs during captivity will be on exhibit in Building 4 from Sept. 12 to 19.

The POW/MIA flag will be flown below the American Flag in front of Building 4 the entire week.

Wickham touts Bradley as 'best fighting vehicle in world'

Army News Service

The Bradley Fighting Vehicle is the best infantry fighting vehicle in the world today. And with the improvements currently being incorporated, it will remain the foremost fighting vehicle for infantry soldiers for years to come, according to Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr.

Wickham, and Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., recently testified before the House of Representatives' Armed Services Sub-committee on Procurement and Military Nuclear Systems. Both were there emphasizing the importance of the Bradley as an essential part of the Army's equipment modernization program and to counter recent criticisms of the Bradley testing program.

With all the questions and criticisms surrounding the Bradley, Wickham believes that it is most important for soldiers to understand how important the Bradley is to "today's Army."

"I realize that I'm 'preaching to the choir' when I talk to soldiers about the advantages of the Bradley, but it superbly combines speed and cross-country mobility with decisive firepower and small and medium fire arms protection. In short, it gives our infantry soldiers that fighting edge that is needed to win on today's battlefield," he added.

Wickham believes that infantry soldiers will continue to be the deciding factor on the battlefield. It is critical to their success that they be in the right place at the right time with decisive firepower in order to influence the battle. The Bradley does this. While not a tank, it's much more than an armored personnel carrier. It's a fighting vehicle and it has the capability to traverse cross country at speeds in excess of 40 miles per hour. It also carries a stabilized 25mm Bushmaster cannon along with a 7.62mm machine gun and TOW anti-tank missiles. Additionally, the Bradley has night and limited visibility fighting capabilities that are comparable to the Abrams (M-1) tank. It also has many less-publicized safety features such as an improved ventilation system and an on-board fire suppression (extinguisher) system.

The Bradley is designed to be deployed in conjunction with Abrams tanks or assume an overwatch position while providing covering fire in support of a dismounted infantry assault on an objective. With the Bradley, the infantry now has the system it needs to fix the enemy, freeing tank-heavy forces for maneuver warfare. Not only can the Bradley's TOW missiles destroy enemy tanks, its 25mm cannon will destroy the BMP (the Soviet counterpart). With the longer range weapons, vehicle dash speed and improved armament, the Bradley affords a more flexible battlefield response to defeat the enemy.

But time marches on and the Army must take advantage of advances in technology. "We make improvements and modify equipment all the time based on tests as well as soldier/user suggestions," he said. Ten years of technological development, intelligence collection and field and laboratory tests have led to enhancements that can be made to the Bradley. Some of these improvements are being incorporated over the next several months. One of these improvements is "reactive armor," which disrupts the jet stream created by a shaped charge. This greatly reduces the armor penetration ability of such weapons as an RPG, Wickham noted.

Another major innovation is the "spall liner" that catches or reduces the metal fragments that result from penetrating rounds. Wickham also noted that improvements have been made to the on-board fire suppression system. By moving the system's sensors, fires can be detected and extinguished immediately.

Recently, critics of the Bradley have charged that tests conducted on the system are unrealistic and results have been modified in order to give the public a false impression of the ability of the Bradley to withstand penetration.

He said,"Weapons being used against it could sink a battleship. "By doing this, researchers can study the results and apply modern technology to improve survivability. But," he added, "This is expensive because test vehicles are destroyed. Army test procedures are designed to be both practical and affordable, with each round designed to hit the Bradley in specific areas so that we learn from the results, not just destroy it."

Testing on the Bradley is supervised by the Department of Defense and carried out in accordance with accepted practices and procedures. Live-fire testing is conducted by the Ballistics Research Laboratory at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., which is a testing organization for the Army and totally independent of the Army's Bradley Program Office in the Pentagon. According to Wickham, BRL does not have to answer to him or anyone else in the Army's top leadership concerning good or bad test results.

It was from results of earlier live-fire testing that current design improvements were made. Wickham pointed out that ammunition storage racks have been moved and the fuel drainage system redesigned, both of which reduce the chance of secondary explosions if the vehicle is hit by armor-piercing rounds. Another innovation developed from testing is added protection for cables to reduce damage done by metal fragments not caught by the spall liner.

Critics charge that the Bradley is too expensive and not a good investment for the securtity of the country.

Wickham agrees that the Bradley is expensive, costing about $1.3 milliosn each, and that it must compete with other weapons systems for money. But, he added that the system is an essential element of the Army's combined arms response on today's battlefield. "It continues to prove itself better than any other foreign counterpart including the BMP and the German Marder. Exercises at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., confirm that when it is deployed, using the proper tactics in concert with a combined arms effort, it is highly effective and provides the soldier with a fighting advantage.

"The Bradley is designed to do more than just move infantrymen on the battlefield. It affords them more protection from enemy weapons while giving them the speed, mobility and fire power to meet and defeat enemy combat forces. Soldiers who use the Bradley put it very simply, 'with it we win, without it we lose'," Wickham said.

Benning's 'first families' to be recognized

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Nominations are currently being accepted at the Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities for the Great American Family awards to represent the Fort Benning community.

According to the DPCA, the Great American Family award program is an opportunity to recognize families who have made significant contributions to the quality of Army life.

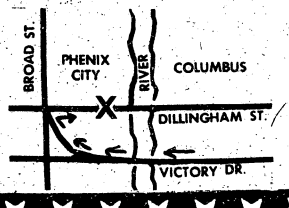
Families who have made outstanding contributions to the community and the quality of local life may be nominated.

The format for nominations is as follows: The cover page should have the name, address and phone number of the family.

Areas that should be addressed in the narrative portion of the nomination are: how the growth of each family member, including parents, has been encouraged and supported; how love and teamwork have been nurtured in the home; and how the family has extended friendship and service to others in the community.

The second narrative portion should summarize the family's overall qualifications. This should be limited to less than five pages and should be listed as annex B.

Annex C should include no more than five pages of documentation, including awards, letters of appreciation, commendations, citations and news articles that support the nomination.



A recent photograph of the family should also be included in the package.

According to Kaye Kyle from the DPCA, three nominations from Fort Benning were forwarded to the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command last year.

Nominations should be turned in at DPCA, Room 204, Building 241 before Oct. 31.

Army cancels recent decision to force out field grade officers

Army News Service

The Army leadership has decided against directing the mandatory retirement of senior regular Army field-grade officers as a means for equalizing strength imbalances within the officer ranks.

A Selective Early Retirement Board was convened last month to recommend some 84 colonels and 87 lieutenant colonels for early retirement. This was the first of three anticipated annual boards.

The imbalance was caused, in part, by senior field grade officers delaying retirement an average of three years longer than officers had in the past, said Maj. Gen. William G. O'Lesky, director of Military Personnel Management in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at the Pentagon.

In the midst of the SER process, however, while the results of the board were under review by Army officials, Congress announced its intention to reduce officer end strength in the Defense Department beginning in fiscal year 1987, O'Leksy said. The projected cut of about 2 percent each year for three years would require the Army to consider a broader range of alternatives. Officials still are not sure exactly how many officers would be affected by this reduction.

Realizing this, and considering the uncertainty of the upcoming strength reduction, the Army's Chief of Staff directed an analysis of the officers recommended for selective early retirement.

The analysis showed that many of those recommended for retirement were good officers still contributing a lot to the Army. It also found that most were retiring during the next fiscal year. The analysis concluded that the practical return on such a major "investment of hurt" is simply too low, O'Lesky said. "We figured the human thing to do was not to force them out."

Having made this decision, the Army now is exploring other alternatives to reduce the officer end strength while limiting forced separations, O'Lesky said.

Some of these recommendations would require changes to current laws and regulations. Some options under consideration follow:

- Permit voluntary losses by waiving certain service obligations, such as the obligation incurred when accepting a promotion or making a permanent-chance-of-station move.
- Seek statutory policy changes to permit release of specific groups of officers.
- Further slow promotions of officers currently on promotion lists.
- Limit the number of active-duty commissions offered through such programs as the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the Officer Candidate School.
- Change future promotion selection rates overall so that fewer officers in the zone of consideration are promoted, while increasing "below the zone" promotions opportunities.
- Selectively limit the number of officers who are allowed to continue after completing their initial service obligation.

O'Lesky said that decisions on how to reduce the number of Army officers will be made after Congress announces its decision on military officer reductions.

Slow down when driving in school zones

Safety Office

"School days, school days, good old golden rule days."

Do you remember the old rhyme? Just about the time school started you began to hum it and at the same time got excited about school starting. Do you remember that first day of school? Do you remember how you ran out the door of your house and made a bee-line for school?

For some a lot of time has passed and for others not so much time, but no matter how much time has passed, drivers and children need safety reminders.

Drivers must reduce speed in school zones and at school crossings, obey all school crossing guards and stop for school busses when they are loading and unloading. Please watch for children running in front or back of school busses when the busses are stopped.

There will be many bicycle riders heading for school. Drivers, it is better to yield, if need be, than to be sorry. Watch for children running across the street.

Parents must inform children to cross streets at crosswalks only, to look in both directions before crossing, to obey school crossing guards and that when getting on and off school busses they must not run in front or back of the busses.

When riding a bicycle, children must be told to obey all traffic rules and to walk their bicycle across the street.

With school back in session, lets all — drivers and parents — make the trip to and from school safe and happy for the children.

Air defense program gains tentative approval

Army News Service

The Army won conceptual approval Aug. 14 for the development of a 10-year, $11-billion forward area air defense program.

Announcement of the five-part system was made at the Pentagon by Deputy Secretary of Defense William H. Taft IV.

The Forward Area Air Defense System will not only replace the Sergeant York Division Air Defense gun, but is designed to defend divisional ground forces against the entire spectrum of enemy attack aircraft, said Lt. Col. James Starkey of the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans at the Pentagon.

The system will combine new and existing weapons technologies tied together with a computerized command, control and communications network to counter the threat, he said.

Taft approved the initial phase of the command, control and intelligence (C2I) component of the FAADS plan after the Army's briefing of the Defense Department's Joint Requirements and Management Board, the DoD approval authority, on July 29.

The $2.5-billion C2I system, the first component of FAADS which has received DoD approval to date, will collect aircraft data through ground and aerial sensors and feed it to the FAADS weapons. The aerial sensor may be carried by manned or unmanned aircraft of balloons. C2I will be fielded beginning in fiscal year 1991, Starkey said.

Approval of the other four components will be requested at future JRMB meetings, said Starkey. One of these is the non-line-of-sight component of FAADS, which will be a weapon that can be fired when the soldier's view of the target is obstructed by terrain.

"The fiber-optic guided missile (FOG-M), an Army-developed weapon that is able to find and destroy helicopters hidden behind hills or trees, is a leading candidate for inclusion in the NLOS component," Starkey said. A JRMB review of this $2.7-billion NLOS component, which should be fielded beginning in fiscal 1991, is scheduled for March 1987.

The line-of-sight forward-heavy component will directly replace the Sergeant York, said Starkey. "The weapon, which will consist of missiles and guns mounted on tracked vehicles, will be capable of defeating fixed-wing aircraft and helicopters that the gunner can see in his sights," he said. Fielding is expected to begin in fiscal 1991 at an estimated cost of $3.5 billion.

Another FAADS component, the line-of-sight-rear weapon, consists of Stinger anti-aircraft, heat-seeking missiles mounted on High-Mobility, Multi-Purpose Wheeled Vehicles at an estimated cost of $1.3 billion, with fielding beginning in 1989. Stinger missiles are currently carried by ground troops and shot from the shoulder.

In addition, an estimated $800 million will be needed to make previously planned anti-aircraft improvements to existing helicopters, tanks and troop-carrying vehicles, Starkey said. Included are the mounting of an air-to-air version of the Stinger on the OH-58C and D helicopters; improvement of the Bradley Fighting Vehicle's air-defense capability; and tank ammunition improvements, he said.

All five components of FAADS should be operational with fielding beginning to Army divisions by the end of fiscal 1991, Starkey said. Heavy and light divisions, armored cavalry regiments and separate brigades will receive FAADS.

"Little of the technology that makes up FAADS is new," said Starkey. "What is new is the way the weapons work together. We don't need to put radar in each HMMWV or helicopter, because the C2I system will provide the other four components more target-finding capability than our present manual systems."

A DoD decision on the remaining for components is expected within the next two years, he added.

Ask the 'judge'

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. — I thought only people who are in trouble go to legal assistance, but my first sergeant says it's for everyone. Who's right?

A. — Your first sergeant. The Legal Assistance Branch of the Staff Judge Advocate's Office is available to all soldiers, their family members, and retirees.

Many clients do have personal legal problems that need an attorney's attention. We also provide notary service, powers of attorney, bills of sale and numerous other services to prevent legal problems from occuring.

Many clients just need advice as to the legal aspects of a decision they need to make. Most clients are concerned about their legal affairs, just as much as they are concerned about their medical condition. Get a legal check-up, it may prevent future problems.

Q. — I've heard a lot of my buddies getting into trouble because they signed some type of camera and photographic service contract. They are in debt up to their ears. What should I be aware of if someone tries to sell me something that expensive?

A. — All active-duty soldiers and their family members are entitled to legal advice concerning personal legal problems. Whenever faced with a situation where the consequences of a sales contract may involve a lot of money, don't sign anything until you have the chance to speak with a legal assistance attorney.

Sales personnel are experts at one thing: to get YOU to sign on the dotted line. Once you do sign you may be held to all the terms of the contract. Then it may be too late to do anything. Many sales contracts are confusing.

Don't rely on the sales person to protect your interests. Do yourself a favor, see legal assistance before you sign.

Q. — My husband recently passed away and in his will he leaves everything to me. What do I do now?

A. — The actions you need to take depend a great deal on several important factors. This would include what your husband's state of legal residence was and whether your husband owned any real estate. These same factors are important even if your husband died without a will.

The Fort Benning Legal Assistance Office can assist survivors with matters and proceedings pertaining to administration of a deceased person's estate. This process is better known as "probate."

In all cases involving a death in the family, individuals are encouraged to contact the legal assistance office for an appointment as soon as possible.

Q. — I have not filed taxes since 1982. In each of those years, I was entitled to a refund. Can I still get my money?

A. — Some of that money is still available to you. The statute of limitation for the claim of a refund from the federal government is three years. This means that you have waited too long to claim any refund from your 1982 tax withholding. However, your refunds are still available for those other years.

In order to claim that refund you must obtain the forms for the specific tax years in question. These forms are available either at the Internal Revenue Service located at 307 15th Street or the Legal Assistance Office.

Gramm-Rudman forcing Congressional action to cut deficit

Army News Service

The Congressional Budget Office and the Office of Management and Budget recently took an initial Gramm-Rudman-Hollings "snapshot" projection of the fiscal year 1987 budget deficit.

On Aug. 20, the two offices submitted to the Government Accounting Office estimates of federal revenues and outlays, based on their current economic assumptions (inflation, the gross national product, the unemployment rate and the like) for the upcoming fiscal year.

The General Accounting Office will average the two offices' estimates and include the results in a report to the president and Congress on Aug. 25.

The GAO report reflected a $163.4 billion deficit, exceeding by $19.4 the $144 billion Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit target as imposed under the Balanced Budget and Deficiency Control Act of 1985, said Steve Bagby, chief of the Army's Budget Execution Division.

However, this excess doesn't mean automatic budget cuts. What it does mean is that Congress must endure additional pressure to reduce the fiscal 1987 budget (not yet passed) or to increase taxes to meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings ceiling before Oct. 1, when an automatic budget cut would be imposed. If Congress can accomplish this, the cut would be avoided, Bagby said.

The incentive for Congress to make necessary adjustments during September is great, Bagby said.

Until the budget cut order is announced Oct. 1, Congress has the latitude to order cuts or raise revenues in whatever way it sees fit.

The overall effect of this action probably would be less traumatic than the alternative — an automatic 5 percent cut the president would otherwise order on Oct. 1. (The percentage for the cut is calculated based on a formula detailed by law.) The cuts would be applied to each of the Defense Department's more than 4,000 programs, projects and activities.

The Army is hoping for a Congressional solution, even though that route still would put pressure on the service's fiscal 1987 budget in Congress, Bagby said.

"If Congress is the one making the cuts, at least we have the latitude to fight for our budget. We have participated in taking cuts in the past, but we don't want to face automatic across-the-board cuts. We want to protect our budget," he explained. "If the order to cut the budget takes effect, it would limit our ability to negotiate."

Come Oct. 1, the Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office will take a second snapshot to determine were the federal deficit stands in light of any actions Congress might have taken during September.

If the deficit has not been sufficiently reduced, a presidential order would be issued on Oct. 15, and the budget cutting process would proceed.

The Defense Department would absorb 50 percent of the total cuts. Domestic programs would absorb the remaining 50 percent.

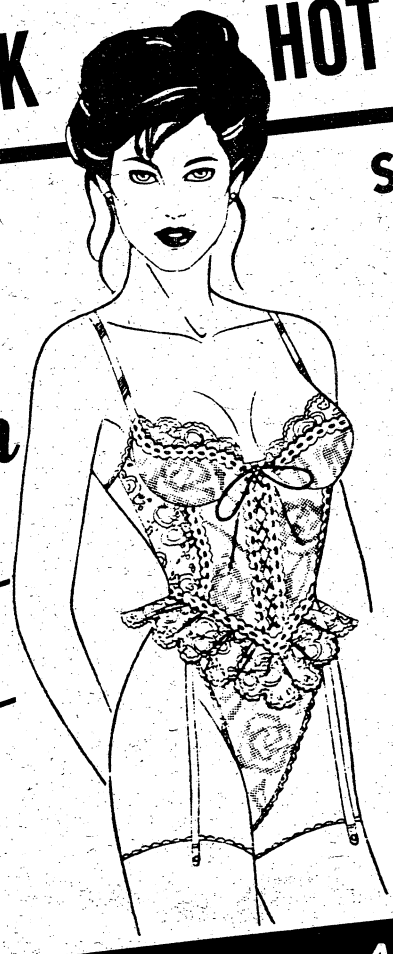
Exchange warns customers of defective food processors

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

DALLAS — The Army and Air Force Exchange Service is helping Regal Appliance Co. with a notification to customers concerning Moulinex Regal La Machine food processors manufactured during 1980 to June 8, 1984.

Regal is alerting owners to the potential failure of the product's safety interlock system.

From 1982 to 1986, Regal received 21 reports of hand injuries. AAFES offered only two models of the problem processors, the LM2 (La Machine II) and the LM5 (La Machine V), between 1983 and 1984.



Owners of the processors can determine if their unit is affected by checking the bottom for the stamped model numbers "LM2" or "LM5" and for a date code for 010380 to 080684. The six digit date code is in day, month and year sequence.

Regal is offering to replace the original bowl cover on affected machines.

To get the replacement, owners should write to: The Bowl Cover Replacement Program, Regal Appliance, Inc., 2820 Crusader Circle, Virginia Beach, Virginia 23456. The letter should include the owner's name and address and the model and date code numbers of the machine. The company will send the replacement cover free of charge.

CIB honors infantryman's exemplary combat service

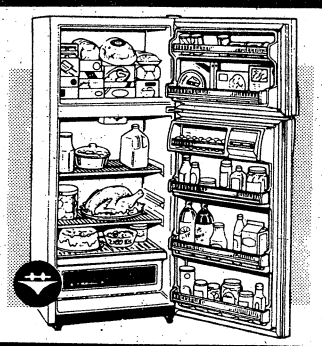
by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It was March 1944. The place was Fort Bragg, N.C. Technical Sgt. Walter J. Bull of the 100th Infantry Division was the first man to receive the Combat Infantryman Badge. It was presented to him by by Lt. Col. Lesley J. McNair.

Originally conceived by the secretary of war in 1943, there were to be two badges, one called "Assault Soldier" and the other "Combat Assault Soldier."

The awards were to be given to privates and privates first class in the infantry who had attained a certain level of individual combat proficiency or for actual combat. These men were to be known as "fighter" and awarded a metal badge attesting to their prowess. The name was changed, however, to "Expert Infantryman Badge" and "Combat Infantryman Badge." The EIB and CIB were adopted as such Nov. 15, 1943.

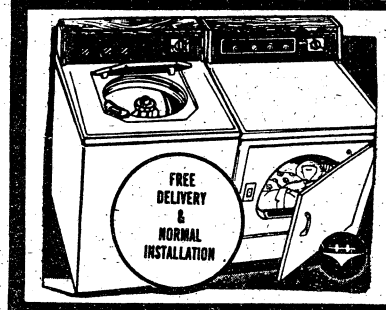
In a War Department circular in 1943, the justification for the badges was stated: "The present war has demonstrated the importance of highly proficient, tough, hard and aggressive infantry...As a means of attaining the high standards desired and to foster esprit de corps in infantry units, the EIB and CIB are established for infantry personnel." Thus, the badges were born.



Since its inception, the CIB has been awarded to infantrymen for exemplary actions during World War II, the Korean War, the Vietnam War and actions in Lebanon, the Dominican Republic and Grenada.

The EIB is awarded for meeting tough infantry and military test standards as prescribed by regulation.

In order to be eligible for the CIB, Army Regulation 672-5-1 says that a soldier must be in the grade of colonel or below with infantry as the soldier's branch or military occupational specialty. The soldier must have served or be serving after Dec. 6, 1941 assigned or attached to an infantry unit of brigade, regimental or smaller size unit during the period the unit was engaged in ground combat.



There are many Army veterans who wear the CIB for actions in more than one war. This is denoted by stars appropriate to the number of actions placed on the top of the badge. To date, according to the National Infantry Museum, there are 230 soldiers confirmed who were awarded the CIB with two stars for action in three wars or conflicts.

Korean seeks former soldier known only as 'Billy'

by Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

Baik Sung-Hak never forgets his friends. And now, he's asking Americans around the world to help him find a really special friend — a soldier who helped him when he was a homeless 11-year-old orphan trying to survive in the middle of the Korean War.

It's been 35 years since Sung-Hak last saw the soldier he knew only as "Billy." Now a wealthy South Korean businessman, he is coming to the United States and would like to be reunited with his friend Billy. But some obstacles stand in his way.

Sung-Hak's story was the subject of a recent "Reader's Digest" article. It detailed how Sung-Hak, who survived by scavenging around U.S. military garbage dumps, was taken in by a young soldier he knew only as Billy.

"He stood apart from the rough and tough soldiers around him," the article told. "Billy was shy and always seemed sad. He seldom spoke, never swore or raised his voice in anger. Nor did he ever talk of himself other than to say that he, too, was an orphan."

Billy cared for Sung-Hak, saw that he ate well and gave him medical attention when he needed it. While in Korea, Billy wrote to his sister in the states and tole of Sung-Hak. She sent a jacket and other items of warm clothing for the boy.

Sung-Hak cared for Billy, too, and even crossed enemy lines once to survey enemy positions.

Tragedy struck in June 1953, when incoming artillery hit a gasoline drum, and the drum exploded. Sung-Hak was doused with gasoline, burning most of the front of his body. Sung-Hak awoke in a hospital to find Billy standing next to his bed. He thought it was a dream because it was, as the "Reader's Digest" article said, "virtually impossible for soldiers to leave their units in wartime to pay a visit to a faraway hospital."

The armistis agreement ending the Korean conflict was signed on July 27, 1953. According to the "Reader's Digest" article, Billy visited Sung-Hak once more after that, and when it came time for him to leave, he hugged Sung-Hak and left without a word. Sung-Hak never saw Billy again.

Today, Sung-Hak owns a hat company that employs 2,800 people. He is one of South Korea's wealthiest businessmen and hopes to be reunited with his long-lost friend.

So little is known about Billy that finding him may be impossible. All Sung-Hak knows about Billy is that he had a sister in the states, was assigned to load and fire a 105-mm howitzer and was promoted to corporal shortly before Christmas 1952. Sung-Hak remembers Billy wearing an emblem of a bucking horse with a cowboy aboard, the official logo of Wyoming since 1936.

The search has centered on the 300th Armored Field Battalion, a unit of the Wyoming National Guard that was stationed in the area during the time that Sung-Hak met Billy.

Lt. Col. John Cornelison of the Wyoming National Guard said finding Billy won't be easy. He pointed out that there were a lot of active Army personnel who came into the unit after it was mobilized. After all the Wyoming guardsmen left Korea, the 300th remained strictly an active unit. That means that soldiers from anywhere in the states could have been assigned to the unit and could have worn the unit emblem.

If you know of Billy's whereabouts, contact David Reed at: Reader's Digest, Pleasantville, N.Y. 10570.

Program gives soldiers college credits for work experience

by Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Military people are often surprised to learn how much of their experience can be meaningfully applied to a college degree. Said one military education official about a Defense Activity for Non-Traditional Educational Support program, "A university won't give a soldier credit just for learning how to be a cannoneer, but it can give him credit for the mathematics involved."

"Non-traditional" is the key part of the DANTES title. The DANTES program enables a soldier, sailor, airman or Marine to finish a high school degree or earn college credits in spit of unusual duty hours or mission requirements.

Although many servicemen and women are able to take advantage of the more formal classroom education programs offered through their local education centers, others can't. The latter are stationed at isolated sites, do shift work, are transferred before completion of their programs to sites where courses are not offered, or have advanced to a level in their studies where courses needed to progress are not among those offered at their new places of assignment. For such individuals, non-traditional education programs are a practical way to make progress toward educational goals.

Pre-Ranger course helps troops brush up skills for 'real thing'

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Medical school students have to attend a pre-med program before medical school. Students going to law school have to have a pre-law preparation before law school. Before going to the U.S. Army Ranger School, soldiers in the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Ranger Battalions and in the regimental headquarters have to attend the Pre-Ranger Course here.

The 1st and 2nd Ranger Battalions started the courses in 1977. However, with the organization of the 75th Ranger Regiment here, the Pre-Ranger Course was consolidated.

The 19-day course begins approximately three weeks before the start of each new Ranger School class.

"Most of the soldiers who come to Pre-Ranger have spent anywhere from six months to one year in a battalion. They've got the basic skills they'll need for Ranger School. We're here to hone those skills," said CSM Autrail Cobb, from the 75th Ranger Regiment.

To sharpen these skills the Pre-Ranger Course uses a whet stone made up of classes and practical exercises on land navigation, patrolling, writing operations orders, communications, first aid, weapons and a lot of physical training.

"Our PT begins at 5:30 every morning and it's very intensive. We stretch, do about six exercises, stretch some more and then go on a three to five mile run. After the run we do strength training, concentrating on the upper body one day and on the abdominal the next," said SFC William Guest, the course's first sergeant.

"The first week of the course is primarily platform instruction along with PT. Students also have to take the APRT, the swim test and complete a 12-mile road march. The second week hits heavily on land navigation and, on Friday of the second week, patrolling begins. The patrols are led by the cadre for the first few days and then the patrols are all student-led," Guest said.

Cobb said that Pre-Ranger does not encompass everything done at Ranger School.

"Pre-Ranger is to train and improve skills. We don't deprive our students of food or sleep. That's part of the Ranger School course. If we did that here they would be too broken down to successfully complete Ranger School. We're here to get them ready for that challenge," Cobb said.

The course seems to do a pretty good job of that, according to the Pre-Ranger commander, Capt. Philip Calahan.

"A study conducted six months ago shows that 92 percent of soldiers who have attended Pre-Ranger successfully complete Ranger School," Calahan said.

The 12 cadre members of the course must, just like the students, meet stringent requirements. All cadre must be Ranger and airborne qualified and must have served in a Ranger battalion or at regiment.

Cobb stressed that the Pre-Ranger Course and cadre have assisted other units in the Army besides the Ranger Regiment. This includes the 10th Mountain Division, the 1st Infantry Training Brigade, the 1st Special Operations Command, the Ranger Department and the Marine Corps.

today's fast-changing, high-technology society, DANTES provides an opportunity for all military people to get that education.

Said Dr. Dorothy von Scanland, head of professional information services for DANTES, "Voluntary education is incredibly undervalued in perspective. It touches upon literally millions of people. You probably remember the term 'night schoool.' Now it's a way of the times."

DANTES offers a number of examination and certification programs. These programs are available to Army, Air Force, Marine Corps and Coast Guard personnel through the local installation Education Office, to Navy personnel through the local Navy Campus Office and to all eligible National Guard and Reserve personnel through the nearest active component Education Office.

Among the most popular DANTES testing programs is the College Level Examination Program, a widely accepted program for giving college credit for knowledge already gained on the job or through independent study. Last year, DANTES administered more than 50,000 general CLEP tests. DANTES also gives DANTES Subject Standardized Tests in vocational-technical and traditional academic subjects, as well as other tests for gaining college credit.

Another popular DANTES service is the chance to take conveniently the Scholastic Aptitude Test, which is required for admission to many colleges and some officer education programs. Last year, DANTES administered some 12,500 Scholastic Aptitude Tests and even paid the fee. Also available through DANTES is the National Teacher Examination, the Graduate Management Admission Test and the Law School Admission Test.

If you'd like to get a high school equivalency certificate, ask your education officer about the General Educational Development Test. Available to military personnel stationed in the continental United States, overseas and at deployed locations, the general education development testing provides adults who do not have their high school degrees a chance to earn an equivalency. DANTES pays the state credentialing fee.

Military people go to some tough schools to acquire some of the best training around. Why not get college credit for that work? The American Council on Education has rated a number of courses given by military schools such as the Defense Information School, the Defense Language School and the Field Artillery School.

Directorate of Personnel, Community Activities

Labor Day weekend. Three days off duty!

The Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities has many things going on for your relaxation this weekend and next week.

Are you interested in playing in the Southern Open Pro-Am with a favorite pro in October? The winner of the Follow Me Golf Course Club Championship this Sunday and Monday will do just that. The contest will be broken down into several flights depending on the number participating.

Don't forget the pool party and poolside barbecue Labor Day at the Officers' Club. On Tuesday, "German Nite Buffet" will be offered in the Lexington Room from 6 to 8:30 p.m.

The Main NCO Club has "Two for One Steak Night" Saturday. Sunday is your chance to try for a $5,000 bingo jackpot at 2 p.m. with a prime rib special at 6 p.m. in the Garden Room. If you don't win the jackpot Sunday, you still have a chance to try for $3,500 on Monday and Wednesday at the Sand Hill NCO Club and the $5,000 on Tuesday and Thursday at Main NCO Club.

If you want to get in shape and enjoy it, come and join a fun aerobic exercise class at the Officers' Club Family Fitness Center, Monday through Friday from 12:10 to 12:40 p.m. and Tuesday and Thursday from 9 to 10 a.m. Come and try it; the first class is free! For more information, call 687-0871. Also, you can sign up now for Adults' Swimming Classes starting on Sept. 2.

You can bowl three games for $2.40 at the post bowling centers from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. You can also bowl for only 73 cents a game by purchasing bowling tickets for 15 games for $11.

If you enjoy late-night bowling, you can bowl as many games as you like for $5 from 11 p.m. to 4 a.m. on Friday and Saturday at the Mall Bowling Center.

The Main Post Bowling Center will be organizing several leagues next week. All bowlers are welcome and you can relax and let the automatic scorers do the work for you.

If you haven't visited the Arts and Crafts Center lately, you may want to. There are numerous molds available.

The time to start on your Christmas gifts is now, before the big rush starts. The Greenware Department is now enlarged with new items never before offered and each will make an excellent gift.

The large walk-in sales store has all the supplies necessary to complete these projects and save your money. If you don't have the time to make gifts, the sales store offers finished items that are reasonably priced.

Classes are offered weekly on photo lighting, oil painting, wood safety and ceramic pouring. Call 545-4436 for times. The hours of operation are 1 to 9 p.m. Wednesday through Friday; 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Don't forget the Recreation Centers will have many activities planned for the holiday weekend. Watch movies on the big screen VCR-TV non-stop during operating hours. Free popcorn and punch are also available.

We absolutely guarantee the best billiards tables in town. You can enjoy a safe holiday and still have fun by participating in the off-duty events provided by the DPCA.

If you are one of the many people who has had the urge to fly, the Fort Benning Flying Club is for you. Membership is open to all active-duty and retired military personnel, their family members, members of Armed Forces Reserves and Department of the Army civilians.

Teaching beginners and providing aircraft are the main objectives of the club. There are also commercial training and transition training from rotary to fixed wing aircraft. Private, commercial, instrument and instructor ratings are available to members.

The club is located at Lawson Army Airfield in Building 2416. For more information call 687-0254 or write P.O. Box 1872, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-5226.

scratched up. The long sleeve shirt, pants, gloves and boots will cut down on the severity of that," she said.

According to Leeds, civilian employees driving or riding motorcycles on post are also subject to the new policy.

Leeds explained that when the policy goes into effect, the MPs will allow about a two-week grace period before citing violators. "During the initial time, we will be stopping people and giving them warnings. But, once there has been time to get the word out, we'll be strictly enforcing the policy."

The basic training brothers of Company A, 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade are, (l-r), Pvts. 1 Sean and Michael McNutty, Jon and Robert Jones, Paul and Keith Brishke and Heath and Keith Stanley. The McNuttys, Joneses and Stanleys are twins.

An "A Team" soldier from 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, sounds off during 5:30 a.m. physical training, asking for "More P T, drill sergeant, more P T."

Young soldiers' summer fancy: infantry basic training at Benning

Story and photos by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Summers for most 18 and 19 year olds are a time for sleeping late, maybe working a little and lots of movies, driving around, swimming and dating.

But for the 18 and 19 year olds of the 3rd and 5th Battalions, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, this summer is like none they've ever seen. They've just started Army basic combat training.

In the 3rd Battalion, four sets of brothers, three sets of them twins, came in together to spend this summer as soldiers.

During their first-ever Army training, the young men are doing things they had never dreamed of doing.

Waking up at a mind-numbing 4 a.m. each day on their own to ensure their areas and their persons are "squared away," the new soldiers hit the ground running.

Drill sergeants are always on hand to get them into formation at a rapid-fire pace and dole out an appropriate portion of push-ups.

"I never really made a bed before I came into the Army and I sure never used hospital corners. The discipline here is something else but it's going to make a man out of me. It's a lot different than anything I've ever done," said Pvt. 1 Kevin Kain, an 18-year-old Iowa native.

Besides getting up early and making a bunk tight enough to bounce a quarter off of, the new soldiers are learning how to shine boots and shoes, the finer points of sweeping, mopping, waxing and buffing floors and how to precisely tie a laundry bag. Some of these new recruits are even learning their way around an Army kitchen and about the business end of a pot scrubbing brush.

Pvt. 1 James Lang crawls under his bunk to pull the blanket and sheets tighter around the mattress, creating the "drum-like" effect.

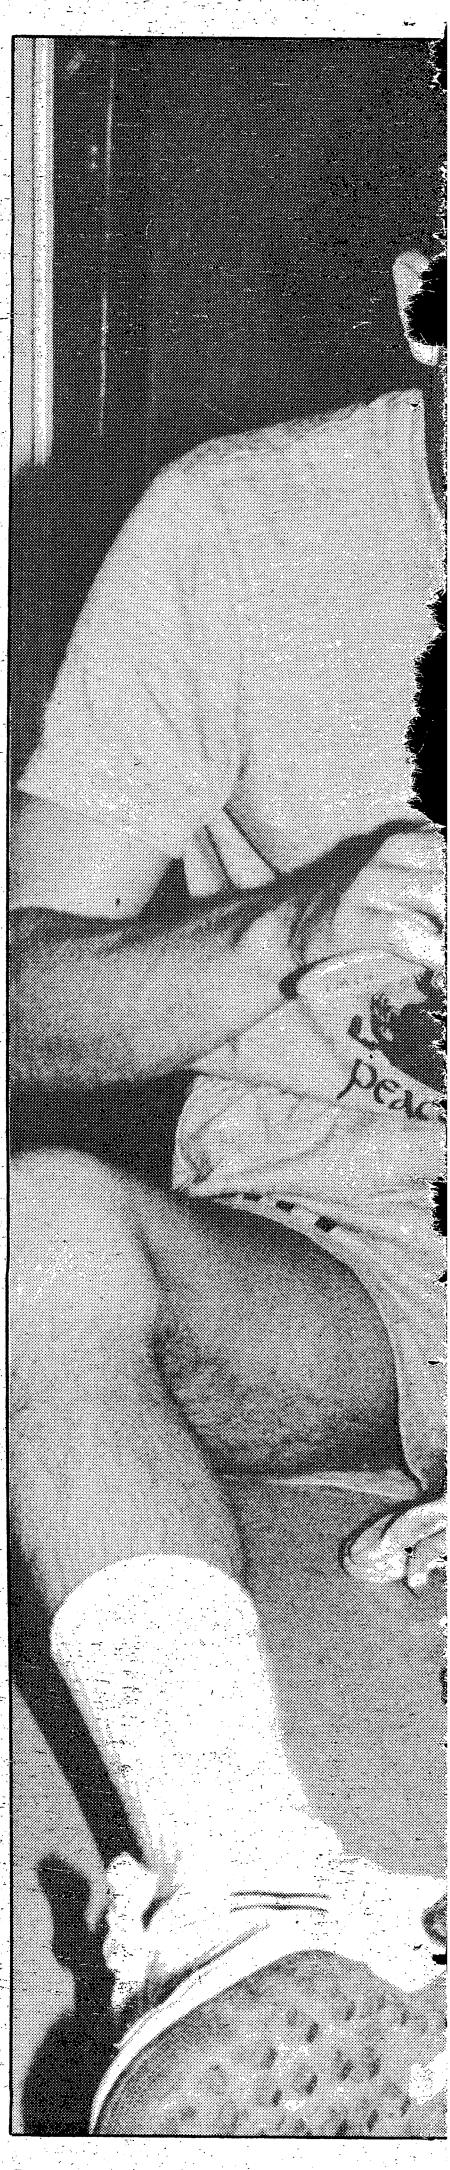
"I guess the biggest adjustment is just getting used to all of this," said Lang, pointing around the "open-bay" living area.

Like soldiers in a parade formation, all of the bunks and wall lockers are perfectly aligned. Under each bed, the shoes are all in the same spot in the same order.

Laundry bags tied to the ends of each bunk are exactly the same width, tied the same way. The room reeks of rigid uniformity, as do its inhabitants.

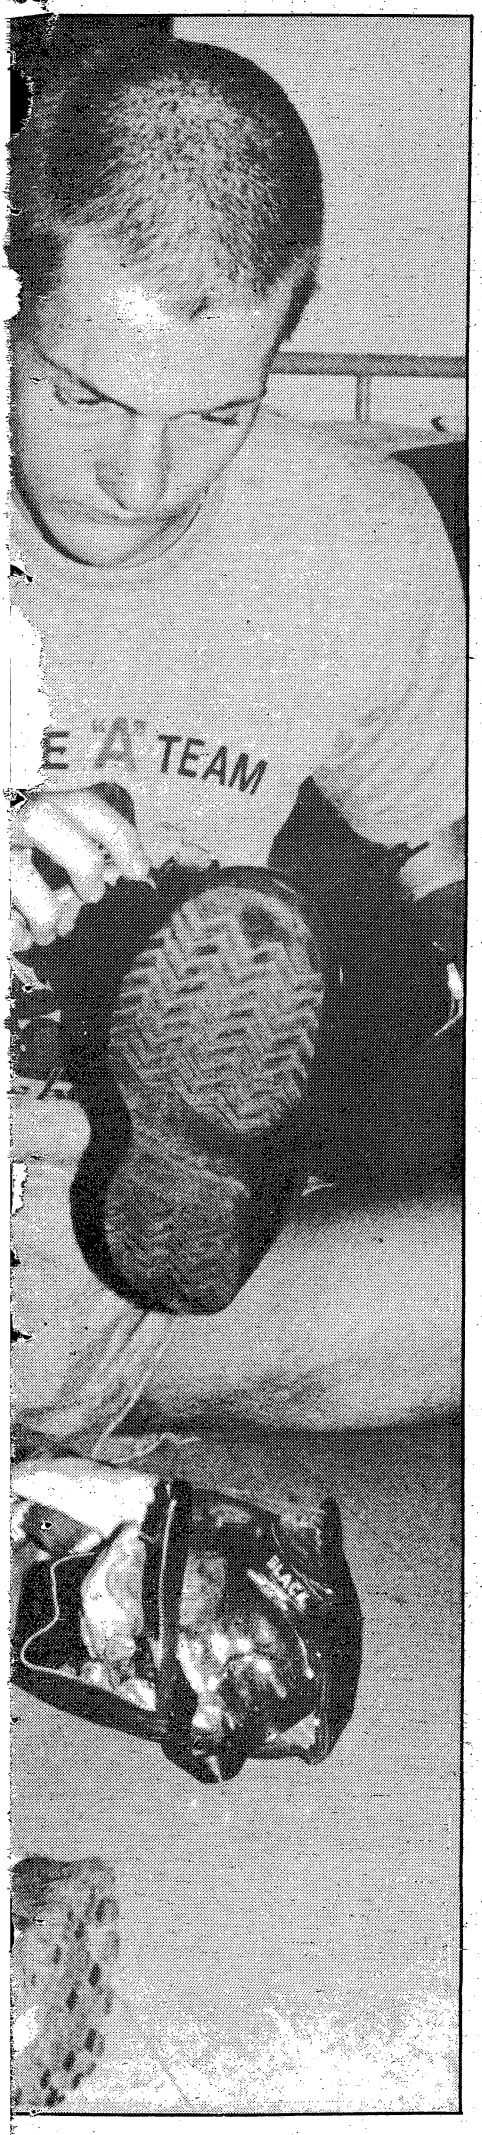
During physical training at 5:30 a.m., a sea of sweaty, sleepy faces is intent on a drill sergeant's instruction concerning the sit-up technique. Friends at home are still sleeping, will still be sleeping when these soon-to-be-infantrymen have finished PT, breakfast and are dressed, ready for a day of training.

The new soldiers are all different. Some are tall. Some are short. But all listen as the drill sergeant offers his expertise on the sit-up. Other drill sergeants constantly move among the crowd, ready to provide clarification at the first sign of hestitation or confusion.



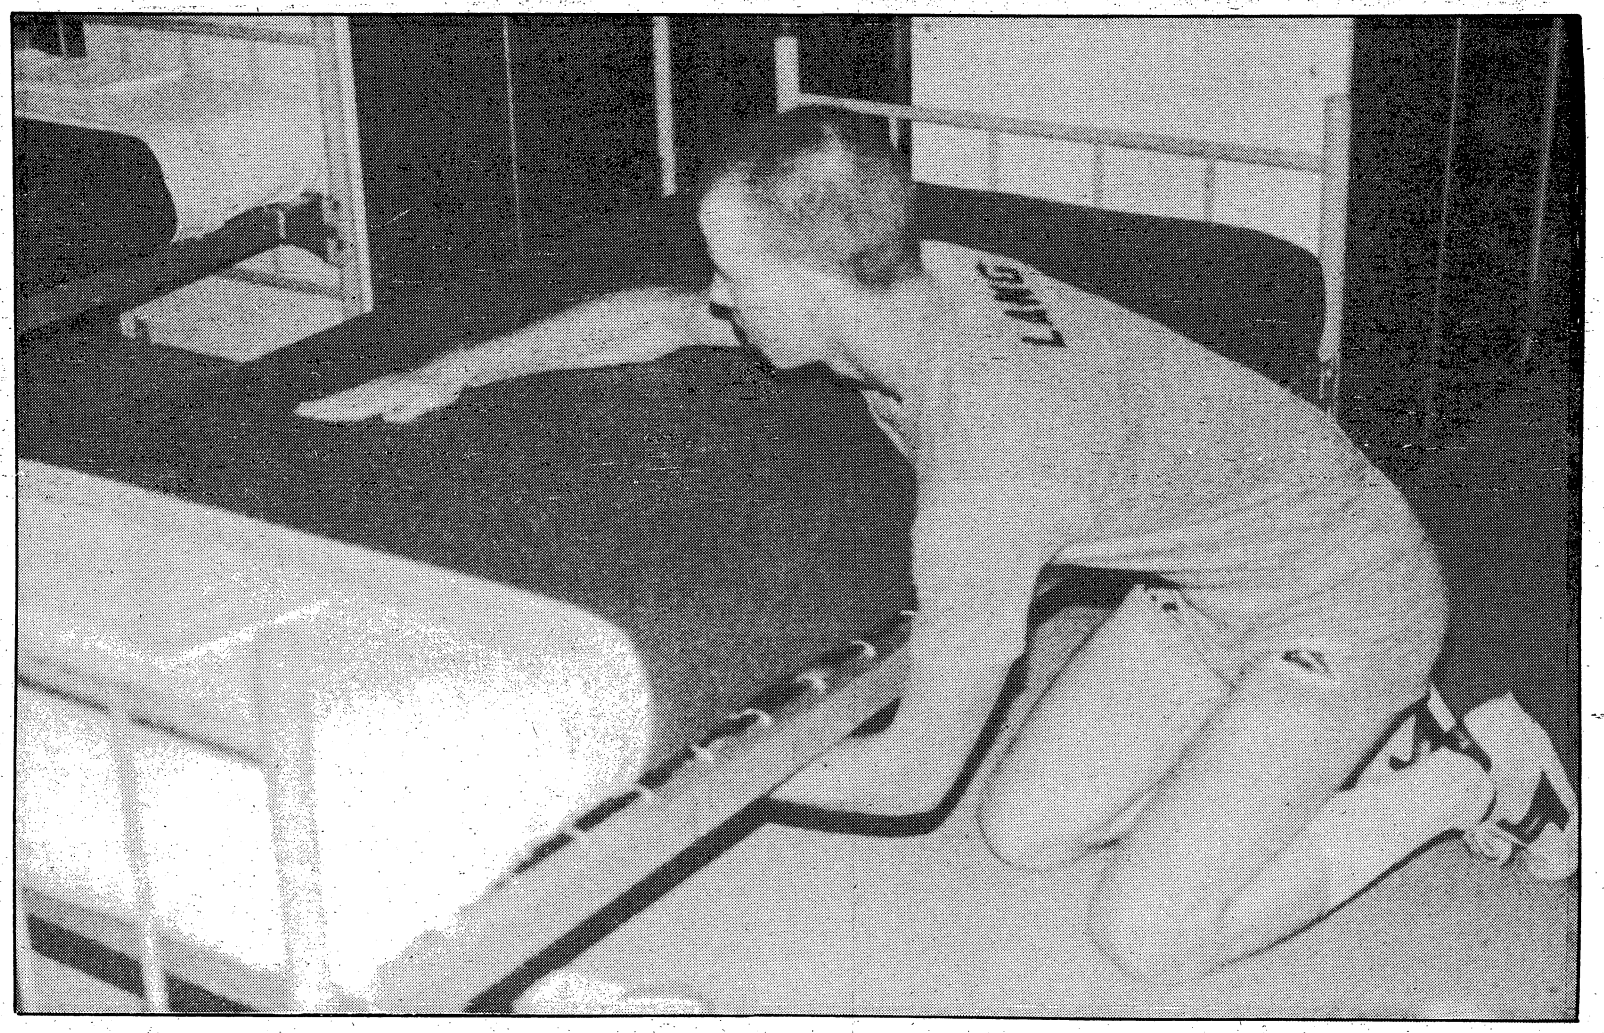
The afternoon brings yet another new experience as the troops make their way to the "gas" chamber, where they test their protective masks. After ensuring a proper seal, the soldiers stepped into the chamber, thick with the putridness of CS smoke.

Once confidence in the equipment was established, they had to learn what it would be like without it.

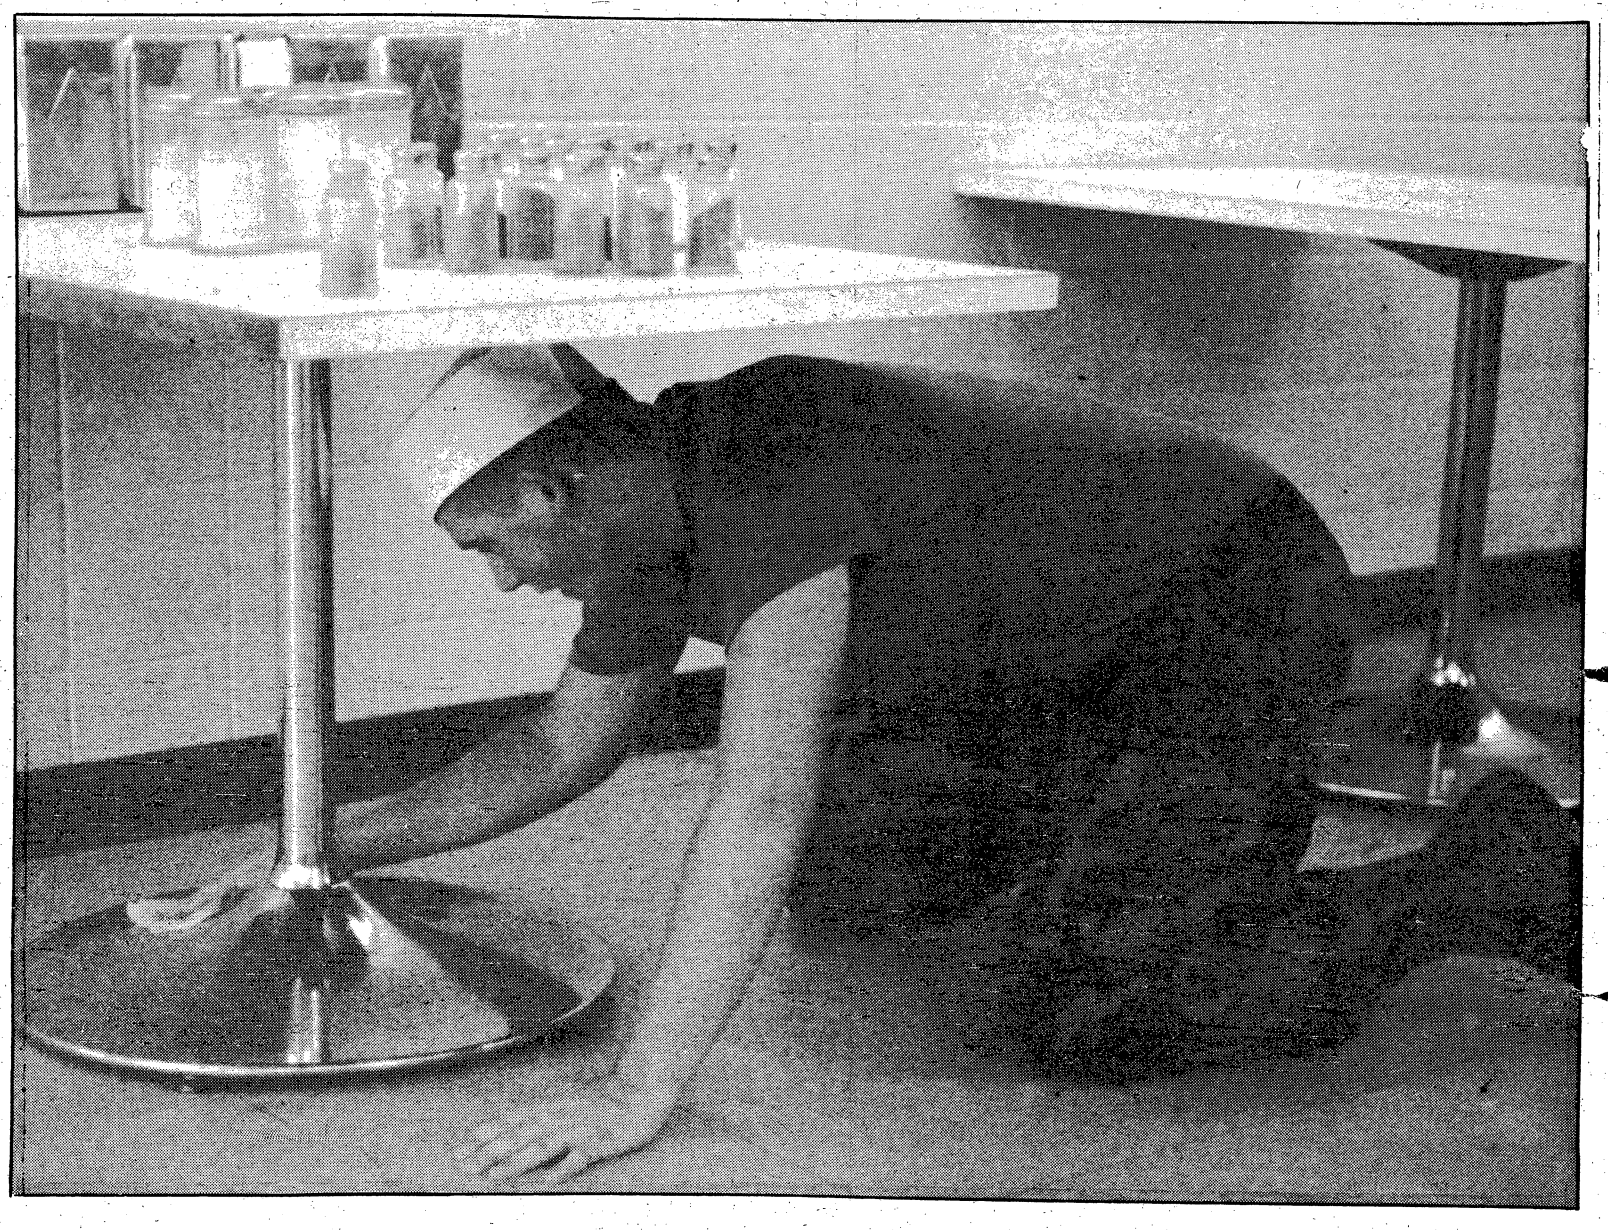


So, while their friends at home were swimming and lolling around, these men were stumbling — teary-eyed, and gasping for air — through the door of a "gas" chamber to the air outside.

As they gasped and wheezed on their way to fresher air, the pride couldn't be masked. Through it all, though, the drill sergeant's voice resounded with: "you're in the Army now, troop. You better be doubletiming!"



This summer will be in their minds forever.



Pvt. 1 James Alman, from S.C., inspection before going out to physical ensures his boots are ready for training.

Pulling his blanket tighter, Pvt. 1 James Lang squares his bunk away.

On hands and knees, Pvt. 1 Jimmy Boles shines a table bottom, part of his duties while on K.P., kitchen police.

TRADOC commander 'dedicated to warfighting'

by Ann Keays
Office of the Chief of Public Affairs
Training and Doctrine Command

FORT MONROE, VA — The reputation of the Training and Doctrine Command is "superb," according to its new leader, Gen. Carl E. Vuono.

In fulfilling its mission of preparing the Army for war, TRADOC touches not only every part of the Army, but also the Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps, he said.

Speaking to headquarters staff officers here shortly after assuming command from retiring Gen. William R. Richardson, Vuono recounted his long association with TRADOC.

He explained that he was among the group that helped plan the reorganization of the Army's Continental Army Command and Combat Developments Command, forerunners of the present-day TRADOC and Forces Command organizations.

TRADOC officially became a major command July 1, 1973, with Gen. William E. DePuy at its helm.

Vuono traces his membership in "the profession of arms" to the day he donned his first uniform. He said he is "dedicated to warfighting." He added that there is no place in which commitment and understanding of the mission are more important than in TRADOC.

Warfighting includes preparing the Army and its leaders to competently and confidently conduct combat operations against any foe and win. But warfighting also means conveying to any potential aggressor the competence of the Army, thus deterring their aggression.

Vuono went on to say that war has several faces. "One face is the preparing-for-war face. You look at your doctrine and refine it. You look at your training and make sure it's tough, meaningful and realistic. You make sure that you're modernizing your force to the best of your ability. And you educate leaders — from sergeants to generals.

"Another face is war itself. And when you're in a fight and you're fighting to win, everything is on parade — your doctrine, training, strategy, equipment, and certainly your leaders."

Vuono said TRADOC is in "the preparation-for-war phase" now and that means increased readiness for the Army.

He stressed that America is a global power and will be called upon to deter war, and fight if necessary, across the whole spectrum of war. That spectrum can include low-, mid- and high-intensity conflict.

To meet this obligation, a nation must have a balanced force, Vuono said. That force must be fully and rapidly deployable as a deterrent or reinforcement for forward-deployed units. There is also a need for special operations forces that can fight geographically and globally.

Vuono emphasized that we won't go to war as an Army alone, but rather as part of a joint and combined force comprised of other U.S. services and allied nations' forces. "No one has a bigger role and a more responsible role in making all that happen than you and I — TRADOC.

"The reputation of TRADOC is absolutely superb," Vuono said. "It's built on hard work and the dedication of many folks who came before us . . . and it will continue."

Vuono said that after TRADOC's establishment 13 years ago, he was on the receiving end of many of TRADOC's products and is thus aware of its vital role. During that period, he served as commander of division artillery with the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C., February 1975-August 1976; assistant division commander in the 1st Infantry Division (Mechanized), at Fort Riley, Kan., August 1977-August 1979; and commander of the 8th Infantry Division (Mechanized) in United States Army Europe, June 1981-June 1983.

Vuono also served at TRADOC headquarters as deputy chief of staff for combat developments, August 1979-June 1981. His contributions included work on the initial phases of AirLand Battle doctrine and what was known in those days as Division 86 — a major effort to redesign the Army's divisions.

Concepts discussed and evaluated at that time also led to the redesign of the entire Army field force, including combat, combat support, and combat service support organizations at all levels, throughout the active and reserve components. This restructuring, based in part upon an awareness of the technological advances in weaponry and the increased demands to be placed upon soldiers on future battlefields, has resulted in today's "Army of Excellence," Vuono noted.

As commander of the Combined Arms Center at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., June 1983-June 1985, Vuono oversaw the formation of the School of Advanced Military Studies. SAMS offers students an opportunity to delve into military studies and doctrinal concepts in a more in-depth way than is possible during the Command and General Staff College course. SAMS prepares tomorrow's division and corps leaders by immersing them in a study of the history of warfighting.

During Vuono's tenure as CAC commander, the Combined Arms and Services Staff School course became mandatory for captains. The demanding, scenario-based classroom portion of CAS3 is designed to prepare company-level leaders for future assignments as staff officers at division level.

As TRADOC continues to accomplish its mission of preparing the Army for war, training, doctrine and combat developments are continually reviewed and revised. Vuono said he is convinced TRADOC is going in the right direction and then described key areas critical to the warfighting mission.

- Doctrine. AirLand Battle doctrine is being made known and incorporated throughout the force. It is better understood now, and is the central driving force for all the Army's preparation for war.

The Army now has a better understanding of the necessity for joint and combined doctrine and how to operate under it. Thus, theater commanders in a battlefield situation will be able to make the best use of all available combat power, whether it is from another U.S. service or from an allied nation.

Now that AirLand Battle and the concept of a joint and combined battlefield doctrine are part of the Army's how-to-fight manuals, the next doctrinal phase is execution.

"By that I mean we must teach our leaders various aspects of the doctrine critical to warfighting — and develop companion manuals in sync with FM 100-5," Vuono said.

Other services and our allies also must have access to, and a fuller understanding of, joint and combined doctrine. This will help their joint and combined force commanders make the best use of their entire force. Such knowledge also is essential in preparing for war and in using scarce resources to their best advantage. The improvement in our forces' effectiveness also can act as a deterrent to potential enemy forces.

- Training. We must know how to train to fight, Vuono said. "We've got a magnificent Army of young soldiers . . . but if their leaders don't understand training, then we're not going to maximize the individual soldier, the unit, and the great equipment coming down the line."

- Mobilization. Projections are that by 1991, 51 percent of the Total Army will be reserve components. The force will go to war as a Total Army, with no break-in time — so that means the training, doctrine, modernization and mobilization of the reserves is an essential aspect of TRADOC's and the Army's business.

- Combat Developments. In addition to acquiring and fielding hardware, other areas must be considered. The concept for the weapons system must be sound.

Kids in school early to beat summertime heat

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning youngsters returned to reading, writing, and arithmetic as Fort Benning Schools began the 1986-87 school year Tuesday.

Students began their day bright and early — 45 minutes earlier than last year — Tuesday morning. Fort Benning's school board voted to start school early for the first five weeks to beat the heat since some of Benning's eight schools are not air conditioned. Teachers and administrators have reported many favorable parental responses to the early starting time.

Tuesday also marked the beginning of a new contracted bus system as yellow school buses picked up Fort Benning students for the first time. Minor problems were reported at some bus stops but according to Richard Skinner, Assistant Superintendent for Logistics, these problems are ones that normally occur at the beginning of any school year. "We have a new contractor with new drivers," said Skinner. "We are in a learning period which we think will be a very short one. Within one or two days we have every reason to believe that these minor difficulties will be resolved."

Enrollment in the Fort Benning School System is about the same as last year with 3,160 students reporting for the first day of classes compared to 3,182 last year. The pattern of distribution of that enrollment has changed since last year with some schools reporting a heavier enrollment and some reporting lighter.

Enrollment is up significantly at Faith School, McBride School and White School.

To balance class loads a small number of kindergarten students have been moved from Patch School to Dexter School and a small number of fifth grade students have been moved from Wilson to Loyd School.

School officials will continue to monitor class sizes each day until after Labor Day which traditionally has been a time when additional students report and attendance figures stabilize.

Weight

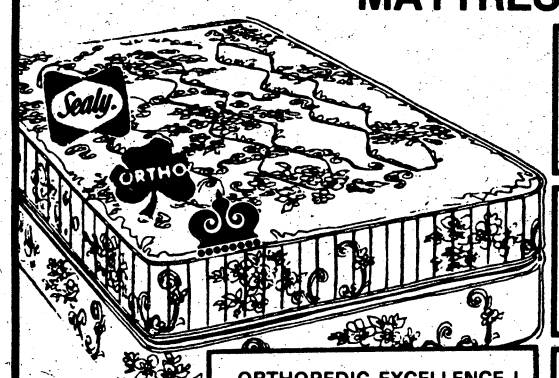
From now on, the women's screening-table weight figures will show an increase of 5 percent over the original ones; but the men's figures will be unchanged.



Previously, Jewel added, the weighing and measuring process took place with the soldier in uniform and the clothing weight was deducted from the weigh-in. The new method has the soldier in the physical training uniform and stocking feet. It requires no deduction for the nominal clothing weight.

By staying at their individually selected weight goals, soldiers can maintain a higher state of physical fitness, he said.

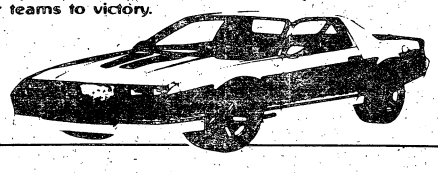
Win a 1987 Chevrolet Camaro from Devon

Come play with the pros at Devon Stores and you could drive away in a 1987 Chevrolet Camaro Z-28 at the end of the football season.



That's right! A fully loaded 1987 Chevrolet Camaro Z-28! And all you have to do is show you're a winner at picking winners.

Bet you're excited. You know you can do it. You've always considered yourself a pro at picking winners of NFL games. Well, you'll have plenty of opportunity to get there. During each of the 16 weeks of the season, there will be six games for you to choose the winner of and one of those games is used as a tiebreaker. And whether it's a blowout or won on a last minute field goal, if you're the best at picking the winners, you could win all sixteen weeks.

Each week there will be four area winners. These winners will receive a valuable prize from Devon Stores, the store with Instant Credit and Famous Name Brands. If there is a tie, the winner will be decided by the total points scored in the designated tiebreaker game. All winners and those who tied the winners will qualify for the Devon Stores Grand Prize Drawing at the end of the season for the fiery red 1987 Chevrolet Camaro Z-28 (see official rules for details).

To enter just fill out the entry form shown here or at any Devon Store (see entry form for deadlines). Then drop it off in the special Devon "Play With The Pros" entry box and then sit back and root your teams to victory.

Whether you're a Charger or Redskin fan, a believer in wide open offenses, or a rooter for a tough defense, and even if you just watch the games to see the cheerleaders, come to your local Devon Store each week during the season and play with the pros. You never know, you could be the one driving onto your base behind the wheel of a hot, new 1987 Chevrolet Camaro Z-28.

Contest Rules

1. No purchase necessary.
2. Each entry form must be filled in completely.
3. Entrants must be at least 18 years of age and be a current member of the Military or Civil Service.
4. Only one (1) entry per person per week.
5. Winners will be notified by phone and registered mail.
6. Void where prohibited by law.
7. There will be four (4) area winners each week. Weekly prizes to be determined by Devon Store.
8. Ties will be broken by total points scored in a designated tiebreaker game. Any further ties will be broken by random drawing.
9. All weekly winners and tiebreaker contestants will be eligible for the final drawing for the car. Grand Prize Drawing to be held Wednesday, December 24th, 1986.
10. All employees of Devon Stores Inc., their families and their affiliates are not eligible.

Cocaine-related fatalities on rise as use increases

Phoenix House Foundation, Inc.,
New York, N.Y.

FORT MONROE, Va. — Cocaine is a local anesthetic and central nervous system stimulant made from the leaves of the coca shrub. As a drug of abuse, it has a long and not unglamorous history. Known as the "king of drugs" because of its scarcity and cost, cocaine was used by only a limited number of Americans until the 1970s. Today, the drug is still regarded as a glamorous substance and is identified with celebrated entertainment figures. However, cocaine has now acquired a large and heterogeneous clientele covering most social and economic classes and age groups. Particularly significant is the recent increase in youthful abuse of cocaine.

Illicit cocaine, smuggled into the United States from South America, is usually adulterated or "cut" many times before reaching the average U.S. abuser. The most common cocaine adulterant is mannitol.

Other agents used to "cut" the drug are lactose, dextrose, inositol (a vitamin B complex), and a variety of other drugs, including such local anesthetics as procaine, benzocaine, and lidocaine, amphetamines, PCP, and even strychnine. Occasionally, talc, which can scar the lungs, is used.

The initial effects of cocaine are usually pleasurable. For 20 to 40 minutes the drug produces euphoria, feelings of well-being and increased self-confidence. Users have a sense of being more energetic and alert. They are often talkative, restless and may become stimulated sensually.

The less attractive effects include: irritability, loss of appetite, delusions of persecution and even hallucinations. Some users may become psychotic and outbursts of violent behavior are not uncommon. As the effects diminish, users become depressed and the urge to continue administering the drug is strong. Fortunately, the effects of cocaine are generally short-lived, particularly when the drug is heavily adulterated (although the adulterates themselves may produce an allergic reaction).

Cocaine is most commonly administered nasally by "snorting" or inhaling small amounts through the nostrils. Regular users who inhale the drug may well damage their nasal passages. Inflammation and ulcerations are common. In addition, users experience a dramatic increase in heart rate and blood pressure.

Users who inject cocaine find the effects of the drug more pronounced, since concentrations build up more rapidly in the blood stream. However, they face greater dangers by choosing this method. Although the "rush" of injection is considered to be more intensely pleasurable, the subsequent feelings of depression encourage repeated use. Thus, injected cocaine is more psychologically addicting than cocaine administered nasally. In addition, injection of cocaine can produce skin abscesses and other problems caused by the use of equipment that has not been sterilized. Most cocaine-related deaths in the United States result from intravenous injection.

Recently, a number of cocaine users have begun smoking the drug. Since the cocaine hydrochloride present in street cocaine does not lend itself to this use, sophisticated users convert the hydrochloride to an alkaloid commonly known as "freebase." The conversion frees street cocaine from its acid radical as well as from its adulterants. Conversion is accomplished with kits available from drug paraphernalia dealers.

Cocaine use can cause death from cardiac arrest, or, more frequently, death from respiratory arrest. The number of cocaine fatalities has kept pace with the growing use of the drug.

The Christian rock group Santa Fe, is scheduled to perform here this weekend.

Christian rock group to perform on post

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Can the Gospel and rock and roll mix?

Some people think not. But Santa Fe thinks so, and many who have experienced their performances enthusiastically agree.

A 10-member band from Indianapolis, Ind., Santa Fe will be at Fort Benning this weekend to share their music, some solid inspiration and lots of spirit with soldiers, their families and friends.

The group sings and plays guitar, multiple keyboards, bass and drums in a rock style and has toured extensively in the U.S. and Japan.

The group is a touring band of the Campus Crusade for Christ. Their appearance here is sponsored by the Infantry Center Chaplains' fund. The shows are free and open to the public.

Chaplain Bob Washington of the 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, who arranged their visit, said, "Through a variety of circumstances and events, all the guys in the band have become Christians.

The group will appear at the following performances on post:

Aug. 30, 1 p.m. — Reception Station, Sand Hill
Aug. 30, 7 p.m. — Kelley Hill Chapel
Aug. 31, 4 p.m. — Theatre 2, Harmony Church
Aug. 31, 7 p.m. — Theatre 3, Sand Hill

Labor Day originally planned to honor 'working man'

by Chaplain Donald Wilson
10th Mountain Division

I recently asked some people: "What comes to mind when you think of Labor Day?" I received some interesting responses: school, picnic, labor, pool closes, day off, and "I need a vacation, like nobody's business." Do these responses sound familiar?

Labor Day was established back in the 1800s as a day to honor the working man.

It was to be a day of rest and relaxation away from the long, hard hours of the job. It was a small incentive, but it non-theless made a statement about this hard working labor force.

But, these men were not only hard working, they had pride in what they were doing. The painstaking craftsmanship of a half century ago makes us admiringly say — "they don't make it that way anymore." Their finished product made a statement — "this work is part of me."

Have you ever watched an artist at work? He works diligently at the canvas, placing a dab of paint here and another there. But after a while, he steps back from the canvas to view what he has done. He has learned that he cannot see the overall effectiveness of his painting until he stops and evaluates.

I believe that Labor Day can serve the same purpose for each of us. Along with the picnics, rest, and relaxation, we need to stop and evaluate. We need to look at what we are doing and why.

Too often today, our driving force is not pride in our work or even support for our family, but greed.

God's word tells us in Colossians 3:23 — "Whatever you do, work at it with all your heart, as working for the Lord, not men . . ."

29th Infantry takes championship

Story and photos by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade faced the Company B Barbarians of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment in the Post Softball Championships on Gowdy Field Wednesday.

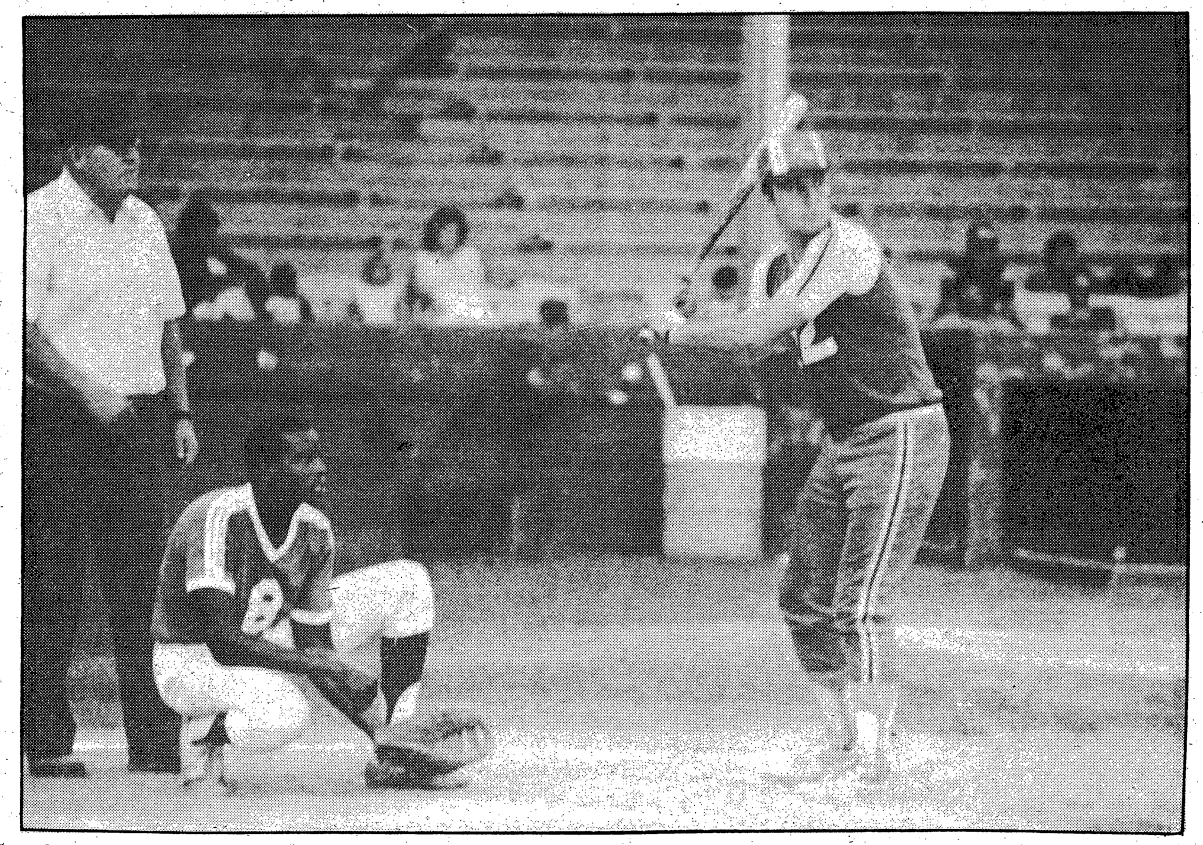
Company B, 1/ 29th claimed the Post Championship in double victories over the 9th Battalion team.

The double elimination tournament narrowed the field of 19 teams to the two best record-holders on Tuesday, with the Company B team narrowly escaping the continuous hit and run drills of the Non-Commissioned Officers Academy team 8-7.

Both teams were scoreless in the opening inning, but the NCOA took off to a 4-3 lead in the second.

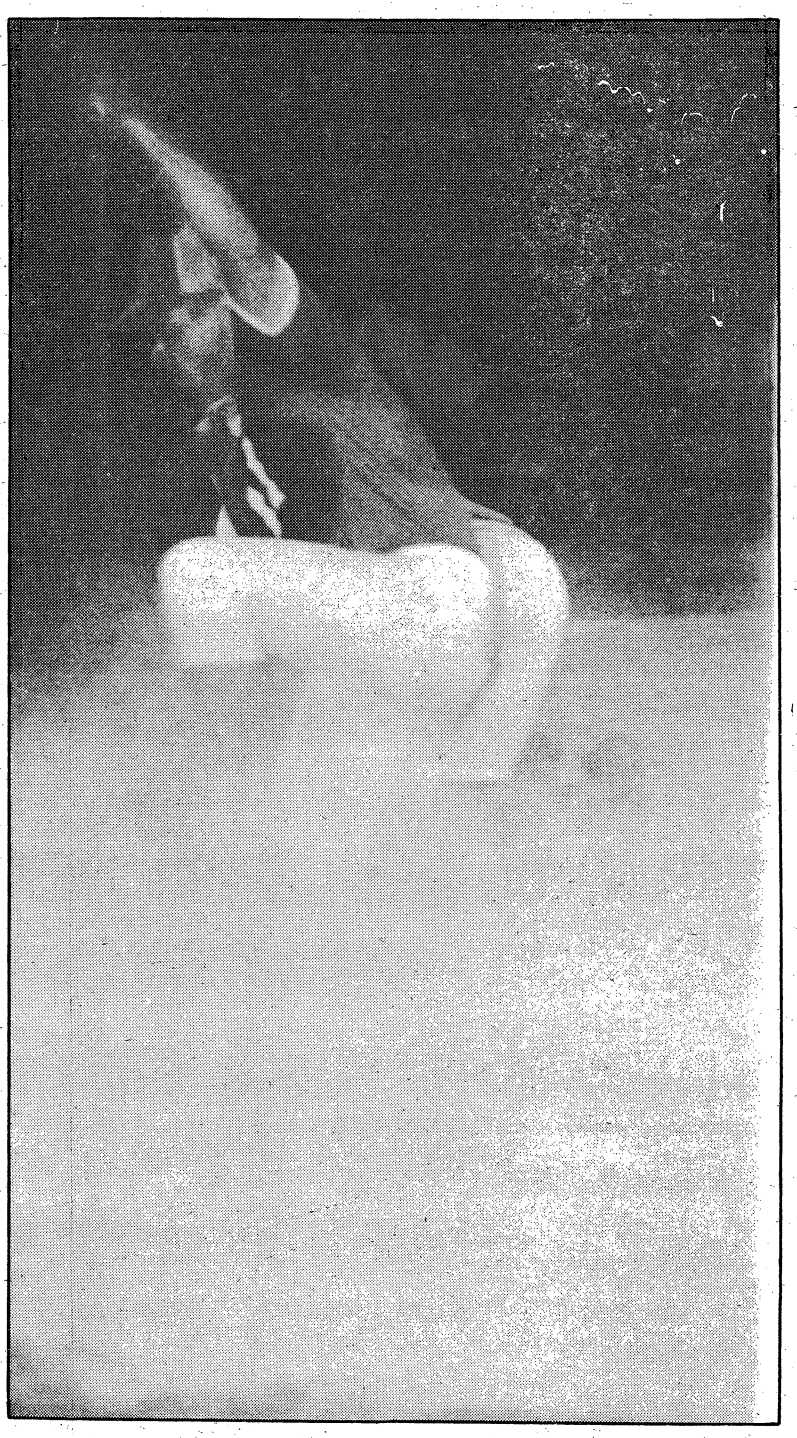
Greg Light, Company B's first baseman, started the slug-fest with a single in the second and was followed by Julius Smith and Jimmy Macon with base hits.

The NCOA answered with William Allen, Curtis Stein, Russell Snook and Dwayne Hurley providing second inning scores.



Both teams scored one run in the third inning and two runs in the sixth, giving the NCOA a one run, 7-6, lead going into the top of the seventh.

Earnest Brown lead the Barbarian attack with a triple at the top of the seventh inning batting order. John Watts' base hit brought the tieing run across home plate.



Watts moved into scoring position when Douglas Boyd hit a long sacarfice fly to center field. William Kearns flew among the stars when he met the base hit that brought Watts home with the winning run.

The narrow escape sent them once again into the den of the 533rd Transportation team. The Company B team suffered an earlier tournament loss to the 533rd, 4-1.

Both championship contenders handed the Transportation team their only defeats. They suffered a 5-2 defeat at the hands of the 9th Battalion and were out of the series after the Barbarians pulled out a 7-4 victory.

The Transportation team came back quickly when they stormed the second inning with three unanswered runs.

Clarence Odums scored on a Michael Harms base hit. Mark Miller followed at bat hitting a triple and scoring his first RBI of the game. Miller would also score on a Levi Grimes base hit, to tie the game at 3-3.

Lonnie Odell broke the tie coming across on an error charged to the Company B second base.

The Barbarians retaliated in the fifth when Earnest Brown started a rally that would provide four Company B runs.

Watts, Boyd, and Kearns were again the power of the batting order, each scoring in the fifth to lead the Company B Barbarians in the championship game against the 9th Battalion, 2nd ITB team.

Company B's climb would be an uphill struggle in that to be crowned champion, they would have to beat the undefeated 9th Battalion in two consecutive games.

The 9th Battalion went through the 35-game series casting opponents aside.

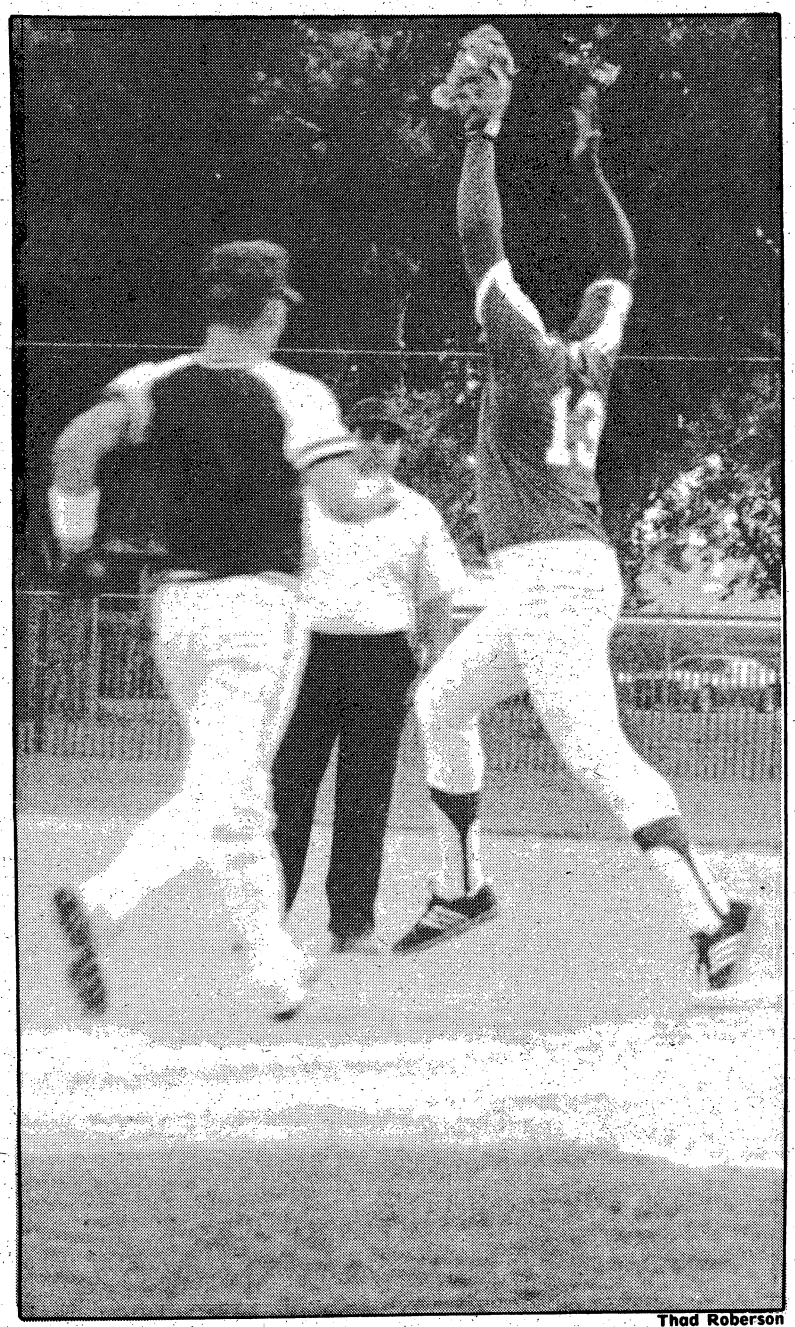
They opened against the U.S Army School of Americas, dropping a 9-3 bomb.

The 9th Battalion team went on to edge by Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry 5-4 and cracked the bat against Company A, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry 5-1.

In the final days of the series the 9th Battalion club offered the NCOA their first tournament defeat in a 10-0 shutout.

The 2nd ITB team scored five runs in the first inning and capped the win with a five-run rally in the fourth inning.

In a defensive struggle, the 9th Battalion squeaked out a 5-2 win over the 533rd after eight innings of play.



It was not until the bottom of the fourth inning that 9th Battalion's Ramon Martinez scored on a Moose Kinsey double, to give the 2nd ITB the first run.

Transportation's Lee Nixon scored in the seventh inning on a Michael Harms home run, giving the 533rd a 2-1 edge going into the bottom of the inning.

The 9th Battalion tied the game when Kinsey rounded third on a Mark Kapsalis base hit.

While the eighth inning saw the 533rd scoreless, the 9th Battalion team mustered three runs scored by Robert Charles, David Bellerue and Eric Caminitti.

Results of the championship matchup will appear in next week's Bayonet.

U.S. shooters set new records in Portugal

by Tommy Pool
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit PAO

Propelled by a new record in rifle events, the United States came from behind to win the XXVI Military Shooting (CISM) Championships recently in Ota, Portugal, Aug. 2 to 10.

This year's victory marked the fifth consecutive overall team title won by the United States with 16 of the 21 member squad assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit at Fort Benning.

More commonly known as the "Military Olympics," a total of 24 countries competed in the matches that included more than 200 of the finest military marksmen in the world.

Steven Goff demonstrates the winning form that scored a gold and silver medal during this year's CISM shooting matches

New record set

Trailing by as much as 40 points after earlier slow fire rifle and pistol team events, U.S. members scored a new CISM record in the 300-meter rapid fire rifle championship to overtake Finland and win the overall team title.

All four members of the record setting squad were from USAMU and included Capt. Steven Goff, Sgt. Bradley Carnes, 1st Lt. Kurt Fitz-Randolph and Capt. Glen Dubis. The alternate firing member was Maj. Robert Aylward, while William Krilling was the winning team coach.

The new record score of 2,267 out of 2,400 was 73 points over the old mark and gave the United States a combined rifle and pistol aggregate team total of 9,197 high was another CISM record.

Finland finished second in the overall team standings with 9,174 while Norway placed third at 9,093.

Goff wins big

In individual competition, USAMU's Goff scored a near CISM record total of 580 out of 600 in a narrow one point win in the 300-meter standard rifle event. Finland's R. Westerlund was a close second at 579, followed by L. Nygard of Norway at 578.

Goff also won a silver medal in the 300-meter rapid fire event as he finished three points behind Westerlund's winning total of 566. Also placing third in the match and picking up the bronze medal was Dubis, who finished two points behind Goff at 561.

Marksmen head for Germany to compete in world competition

by Tommy Pool
U.S. Army Marksmanship PAO

Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit departed Fort Benning recently to participate in this year's 44th World Shooting Championships.

A total of eight members from USAMU will participate with the United States Shooting team during the championships to be fired in Suhl, East Germany from Sept. 2 to 13.

Three of the members are also competing at the World 300-meter Rifle Championships in Skovade, Sweden, through Monday.

USAMU members participating at the 300-meter rifle events in Sweden this week include; Lt. Col. Lones Wigger, Maj. Robert Aylward and Capt. Glen Dubis.

Those competing in East Germany by event are; (Shotgun) SFC Alger Mullins, SSgt. Matthew Dryke and 1st Lt. Denise Morrison in Women's Trap. (Pistol) MSgt. Erich Buljung and SFC Jimmie McCoy.

This year's U.S. Shooting Team includes 45 of the top men and women competitors from across the country. They include both military, civilian and junior competitors and will partipate in 20 different events in rile, pistol, shotgun and running target disciplipes.

Defending world record holders on this years U.S. squad include SSgt. Matthew Dryke in Men's Skeet and MSgt. Erich Buljung in Men's Standard Pistol competition.

Benning dove season opens for bird hunters on Sept. 6

by Mike Brazile
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The official 1986 hunting season will kick off on Fort Benning Sept. 6 when hunters take to the fields in search of dove.

Jim Ozley of the post Safety Office believes education is the key to a safe hunting season this year.

"Through great command support, the chief of staff has given us the time to devote a lot of effort to our hunting safety program. The linchpin to this program is education," Ozley said.

Ozley and four volunteers, all certified hunting safety instructors, teach the six-hour Georgia Hunter Safety Education Program. Anyone born on or after Jan. 1, 1961 who wants to hunt on post must attend the class.

Subjects covered include survival skills, the 10 commandments of hunting, game care and home and field gun safety.

The classes are presented monthly as long as there are at least 10 students.

Those born after Jan. 1, 1961 must view a film on hunting safety produced by the Infatry Center. The film is shown at Building 247, Community Recreation Division.

According to the Provost Marshal, all hunters over the age of 16 must have a post permit, a hunting license, a hunter safety card and have attended the hunter safety training course to hunt on Fort Benning.

Those authorized to hunt on the installation are active-duty or retired armed forces personnel, disabled veterans with a 30 percent disability or more, active and retired civilian employees, active National Guardsmen and Reservists residing in Russell and Lee counties in Alabama and in Muscogee, Chattahoochee, Harris and Marion counties in Georgia, primary dependents of sponsors and deceased sponsors and authorized guests of those already listed. Guests must reside more than 75 miles from Fort Benning unless an exception is made by the deputy post commander.

All hunters must check range maps prior to hunting. The maps will be posted at the Provost Marshal's Office, Building 215, Range Control, Building 2621, the Fish and Wildlife Office, Building 5883, Harmony Church and, on weekends and holidays, at Malone Range 21. Hunters should be aware that this year all areas marked by vertical green lines are authorized areas to hunt in.

Ozley emphasized that all hunters, except those hunting duck and dove, must wear 500 square inches of orange fluorescent material to include hat and all must be worn above the waist. He also said that any accidents or fatalities would probably come about as a result of deer stands or the use of buckshot.

"To keep hunters from being peppered with buckshot as a result of another hunter taking a swing shot, only solid slugs will be allowed during deer season.

Also, many hunters are injured through self-wounding because they climb in and out of a deer stand carrying a loaded rifle. "Rifles should be unloaded when climbing into or out of deer stands," Ozley said.

"Fort Benning issues close to 4,000 hunting permits each year. We haven't had a hunting accident since 1982. If people will just become educated about hunting safety and then practice what they learn we'll keep our accident record clean," Ozley said.

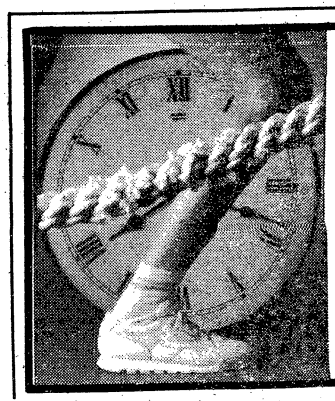
petition, the United States scored a 1-2-3 sweep of the individual medals.

Capt. Gloria Parmentier won the overall title with a gold medal winning performance of 570 out of 600. She was followed by Capt. Mary Godlove in second place with 558, while 2nd Lt. Denise Loring finished in third position at 557.

The United States also dominated the Women's Pistol events as Army Reservists SSgt. Ruby Fox and Sgt. Linda Libasci captured the gold and silver medals.

Fox scored a total of 588 out of 600, while Libasci finished at 561. Portugal's C. Silva won the bronze medal with a total of 560 points.



In the total team medal count, the United States finished with six gold, four silver and three bronze to also win the overall championship.

Runner-up Finland scored a total of three gold and four silver, while Switzerland finished in third place with one gold, one silver and one bronze medal.

It takes a strong National Guard and Reserve to help defend our country. Keeping that strength at its peak takes training—one weekend a month and at least two weeks a year. Fully trained and ready, the Guard and Reserve make up one-third of our nation's defense.

ANYBODY CAN BUY A SAAB. NOT JUST ANYBODY CAN SELL ONE.

Last year, Saab turned down three times as many dealerships as we accepted.

Some because they didn't have a service department capable of taking care of sophisticated machinery.

Others, because they didn't have the kind of knowledgeable sales staff Saab likes.

And there were a few dealerships that just didn't have the right kind of reputation. Snobby? Maybe.

But one dealership had everything Saab was looking for.

Correspondence course students expect delays

Students enrolled in the Army Correspondence Course Program can expect some lengthy delays in the processing of courseware, according to a recent announcement from the Army Training Support Center at Fort Eustis, Va.

The program has experienced severe computer support problems for several weeks, said Diane Jennings from the Center.

Transition to a new computer system will continue the disruption for another 30 days, Jennings said.

The delays may affect many of the 340,000 enrolled students, especially those who complete correspondence course work for promotion, retirement or as a possible prerequisite for resident instruction.

The point of contact for the correspondence course program is Dr. Robert H. White. He can be reached at Autovon 927-4070 or commercial (804) 878-4070.

Youth sports set to start tomorrow

Youth activities will start the fall sports season tomorrow with opening ceremonies for football and cheerleading set for 9 a.m. on Gordon Field.

SMA Morrell 'gets down in foxholes' during recent visit with post soldiers

The Bayonet Editor

"The problem with this Army is that too often when people move up in the ranks, they forget what it's like to be in the foxhole. I try to get around to visit the troops as much as possible so I don't lose touch. It also gives me the old adrenaline flow to be where the action is."

One thing that SMA Glen E. Morrell has not made a practice of during his more than 30 years of service to his country is to forget what it is like in the foxhole.

During the two days he was here last week, the Army's top enlisted man took every opportunity to observe training and talk with troops.

Although the primary purpose for the visit was to speak at the U.S. Army Ranger School graduation, Morrell also spoke with various post sergeants major, toured the 598th Maintenance Company's facilities and met and talked with soldiers from the 43rd Engineer Battalion, the Ranger Indoctrination Program and the 197th Infantry Brigade.

A frequent visitor to the Home of the Infantry, Morrell had high praise for Fort Benning. "I like it here. Although I never had the opportunity to be stationed here, I've seen what a good job they do here," he said.

"Ranger School is one of the best schools we have in the Army today," Morrell said. "It is the closest thing we have to putting people into a combat situation. The Ranger School turns out soldiers with the right foundation to go on and be good leaders."

In his wide-reaching travels, the sergeant major of the Army has an opportunity to hear many different problems that enlisted people face. One of particular interest to him presently is the need for a program designed to develop the soldier's spouse as the soldier progresses up through the ranks.

"If we would take the time to bring a spouse into the system when we promote the soldier to corporal or sergeant, then the spouse would know what is going on and

Primary mission of all soldiers: maintain individual readiness

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

The dreaded phone call. It usually comes in the wee hours of the morning. Between 1:30 and 3 a.m. is an optimum time. As the phone rings out through the house, the noise seems to rudely reverberate off all the walls, sending an ominous message.

It is the alert. Time to assemble at the unit area. Is it just an exercise? Maybe it's the "real thing" this time.

For those soldiers who are presently in a deployable unit the scenario is a familiar one. Those of us who have previously served in a deployable unit vaguely remember what it is like to receive that call.

The importance of combat readiness is ever present in the minds of soldiers who fall into these two categories. We are well aware that the potential for deployment is very real.

We are also comfortable with the idea because we are confident in our abilities as soldiers. We are well trained and know that we could perform as expected in a time of crisis.

We know all of this because of countless hours spent on training exercises. The days, stretching into weeks and months sometimes, in the field, digging foxholes, firing rifles, pulling patrols or perimeter guard, it all comes rushing back when the phone rings at 2 a.m.

The days we got drenched on a road march and our rucks felt like they were filled with bricks suddenly have new meaning. Getting baked in the sun along with the hard clay on the rifle range takes on new importance. We begin to think that maybe sitting through all of those classes on NBC defense wasn't such a waste of time after all. And it sure makes us feel good to know that, thanks to real common task training, we could properly administer first aid if we had to.

But, what about all of those soldiers who have never spent a day in the field? Sure, everyone goes on bivouac in basic training — that doesn't count.

There are a lot of soldiers who sit up in the ivory towers in comfortable positions so aptly termed "non-combat" and become civilianized. They lose sight of their mission. They become "clerks first" or "journalists first" or "drivers first."

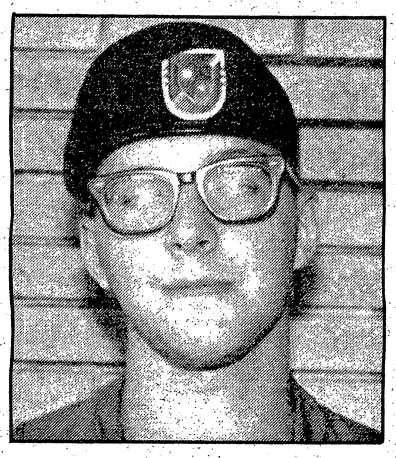
The cold hard fact here is that everyone in the Army is a soldier first. Mission comes first. The mission, during peace or war, is to maintain a high degree of readiness. No one who believes his military occupational specialty is more important than being a soldier is fulfilling his end of the bargain.

It is the responsibility of each person who wears the uniform of the United States soldier to be prepared to meet the demands put on him. This means, be combat ready.

It doesn't matter if you're in a non-combat position, you still need to know how to survive. There will be no distinction by the enemy. A cook is just as much an American soldier as an infantryman in the eyes of our enemies.

If you are one of the soldiers who doesn't see the importance of your mission as an American servicemember, take some time to think about those combat ready troops who are routinely awakened in the middle of the night, not knowing where they may be called to serve, but always ready to give their best.

The next time you complain about going to the field for a couple of days, think about the soldiers from the Ranger battalions who lost their lives in Grenada.

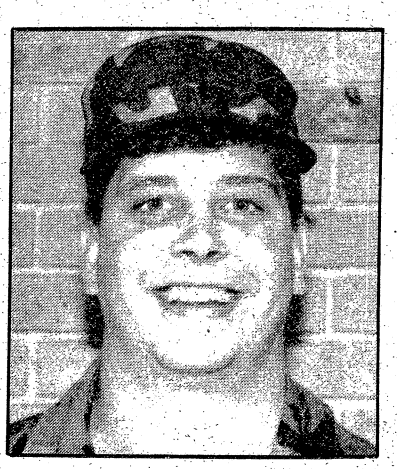


When your name comes out on a roster to qualify with your M16 rifle, take a minute to remember the Special Forces troops who made the ultimate sacrifice in Vietnam.

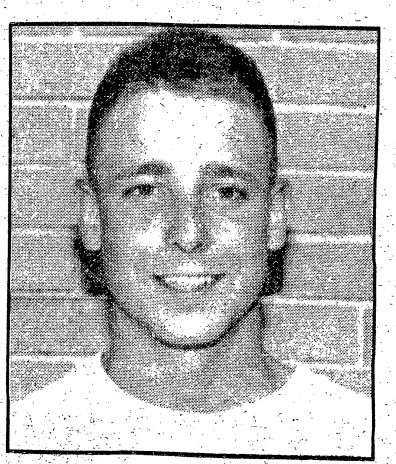
When you're bluffing your way through the next common task training, stop and recall the Marines who were overrun in Korea, or the soldiers who succumbed on the beaches at Normandy, or the Doughboys who never returned from France.

Just stop and think.

Various voices



What is the most important aspect of being a soldier for you?



Pvt. 1 Daniel P. Waldron, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment "Discipline and pride in yourself are the most important aspects of being a soldier. By that I mean keeping a good appearance by always keeping alert and physically fit.

SSgt. Charles R. Knight, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry "I think the most important aspect of being a soldier is the commitment. A lot of people aren't willing to commit to what the Army calls for."

SP4 Thomas M. Legerski, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade "The most important aspect to being a soldier is the welfare of your troops and completion of your particular mission."

Pvt. 1 Chris A. Williams, 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C. "Defending our way of life is most important about being a soldier. Defending the life we live every day."

1st Lt. Greg J. Sewell, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry "For me the most important aspect about being a soldier is leading by example and looking out for the soldier."

Soldiers' job fighting in defense of freedom

Just giving 'bunch of nice kids jobs' not reason America supports Army

by Bob Lonsberry
Harrison Post, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

Get this straight; the Army isn't a college fund and it isn't a social welfare agency. The mission of the Army is to kill and be killed.

Somewhere between the recruiting ads and the Army Community Services briefings, some soldiers lost sight of what it is they are about. They forget about the bottom line; the line that is written in the blood of fallen heroes.

And you can't blame them. The Army is as much a parent to soldiers as it is a boss.

Practically no problem can arise in a soldier's life for which the Army hasn't preplanned a solution.

Think about it, the Army will clean a soldier's teeth, give him an attorney, loan him money, sell him food, rent him a fishing pole, watch his children, employ his wife, pay for his education, teach him to swim, set his broken bones, give him mental health counseling, teach him about equality, give him a home and build him a bowling alley. The list goes on forever.

So, too, does the list of soldiers who have died for their country. Sometimes it seems people forget which list is the most important.

No one ever built a monument to the GI Bill and there aren't any cemeteries dedicated to the post exchange.

No, the real Army is soldiers willing to face anything for their country.

And soldiers need to remember that real Army, the Army of Valley Forge and Gettysburg and Normandy. Soldiers need to remember why they wear their nation's uniform.

Because America doesn't have an Army just to give a bunch of nice kids jobs. No, America supports an Army because it knows that freedom often must be bought at the price of violence. The total, ruthless violence that is war. Soldiers must be ready to face and inflict that violence every hour of every day.

Maybe that is why the Army and the country provide so generously for soldiers' wants and needs. Maybe they remember the sacrifices combat soldiers have to make. Maybe they think that nothing is too good for those who risk death in their country's service.

They have come to think of "benefits" as "rights." They have started to believe that they have earned what the Army gives them. They have lost sight of what the Army is really about.

Just try to remember, the Army isn't a college fund or a social welfare agency. It is an organization of heroes. Heroes whose job is to fight.

197th 'battles hostile force' without leaving unit area

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

The 197th Infantry Brigade fought a two-day battle last week against a hostile opposing force. The Brigade's battle strategists plotted, planned and followed each aspect of the fight from troop movement to supply activities and maintenance.

However, not a single Armored Personnel Carrier or tank left the motor pool. The battle was fought on a huge game board at the U.S. Army Infantry School Combined Arms Simulation Center on Fort Benning.

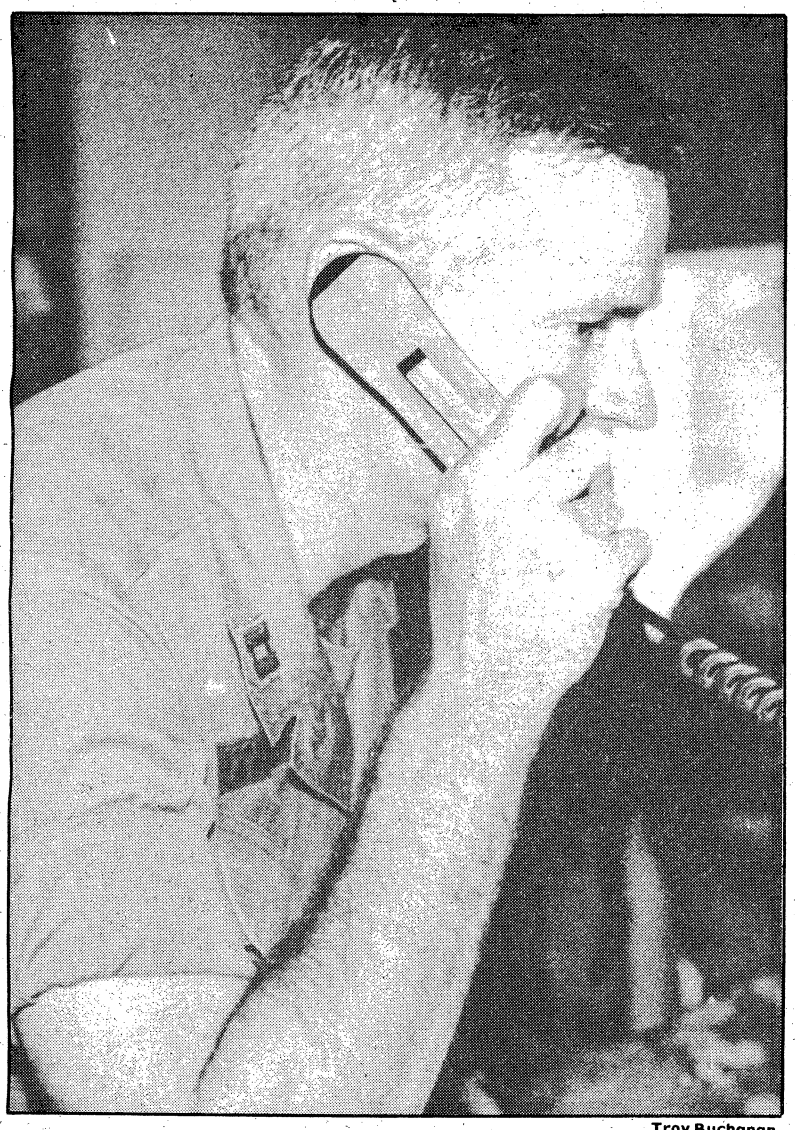
The 197th stages a Command Post Exercise each month between deployments. According to Capt. Mike Altomare from the Brigade Operations Section, the goal of the CPX was to reinforce the proper reporting procedures from company to battalion level and from battalion to brigade level.

The simulation center recreates the set-up of battalion and the brigade Tactical Operations Centers. Camouflage nets are strung over rooms filled with radio-equipped wooden APCs. Field tables are covered with maps and status reports from ongoing battles.

In another room, the battles of the CPX are played out on the game board covered with terrain features.

"The battle scenario was developed by the Brigade Operations sections," Altomare said. "The Brigade Intelligence section drew up the battle plan for the OPFOR."

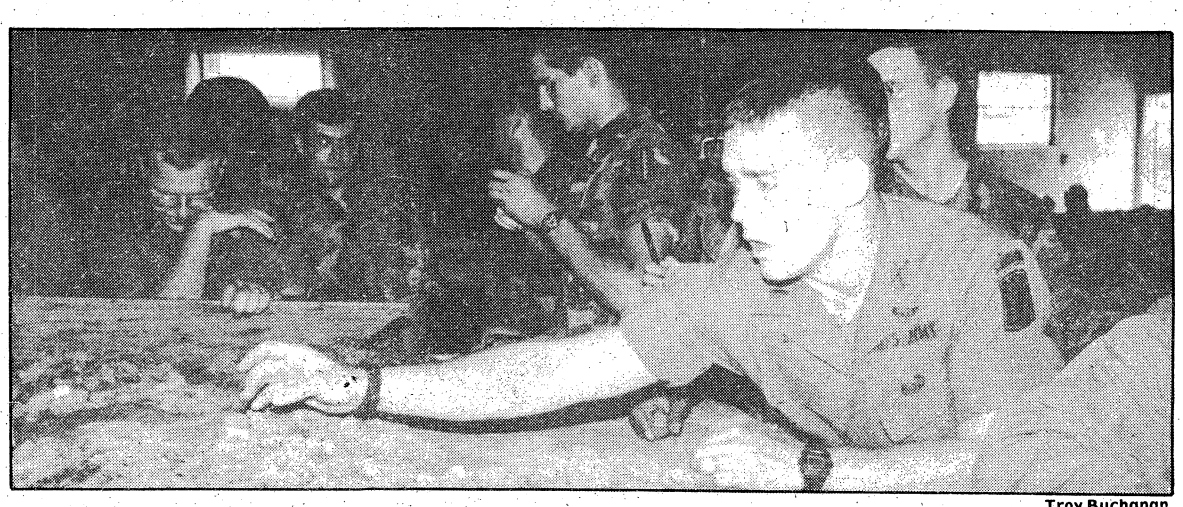
Small wooden game pieces representing infantry, artillery and armored vehicles are moved across the map as the battle progresses. Markers representing chemical agents and obstacles are also incorporated into the battle scenario.



The Brigade even bought its "Platypus" into the play of the battle. The platypus is simply an operations center built into a movable Army van.

"Normally, the Brigade would be attached to a corps or division," Altomare said. "The Platypus represents that higher headquarters."

"For example," he explained, "if we needed assets that the Brigade doesn't have, such as air support, we would request them through a higher headquarters. The request would be granted or denied and the battle would continue."



Next month, the 197th is planning to take the CPX to the field on Fort Benning.

Altomare added, "The communication lessons we learned from this exercise will help the Brigade operate better in the field."

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division step off the plane at Lawson Army Airfield last week.

Mountain troops return to Benning following combined desert exercise

The Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from the 2nd Brigade, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division returned from California Friday beaming with sucess from the annual Celtic Cross exercise.

The troops stepped off the commercial airliner at Lawson Army airfield to music provided by the U.S. Army Infantry Center Band and boarded waiting busses.

The soldiers trained from Aug. 11 to 28 in a simulated combat environment at Fort Hunter-Legit, Calif. and Camp Robert, Calif.

The exercise, which invovled soldiers from the 7th Infantry Division (Light), Marines and Air Force personnel, was designed to test the capabilities of the new light infantry concept.

Maj. Clairborne W. Davis, the executive officer of the 2nd Brigade explained the scenario. "We started with a rebel force crossing a border and the 7th Division was called in to help a fictitious country.

"We went north to Camp Robert with the help of helicopters, mechanized units and light infantry. We fought a border crossing with a substantial guerrilla force behind us," Davis said.

According to Capt. Stephen Duckworth, 2nd Brigade adjutant said, "The exercise went extremely well. They (the soldiers) did a superb job."

29th Regiment instructors offer improved Squad Tactical Training

29th Infantry Regiment PAO

If you don't think the instructors of the 29th Infantry Regiment are serious about training the infantry squad, then apparently you don't know the changes they've made to Squad Tactical Training.

In March, STT underwent drastic changes, said SFCs Marion Brown and Lewis Walls, veteran STT instructors.

According to them, they've implemented a new method of teaching, stepped up their strength and productivity and improved the quality of soldiers they train in the process.

Currently, STT instructions are taught using the Small Unit Instruction concept, Brown said.

This translates to one instructor per nine-man squad for the entire training course.

As many as 150 soldiers were trained at any one time by a single instructor under the old system, Brown said.

Today, the ratio is more like 8 to 1.

In line with better preparing the soldiers for combat, the instructor partakes as a member (squad leader) of the squad as he teaches all of 21 tasks outlined in STT.

Included are prepare for combat, react to contact, locate the enemy, gain fire superiority, conduct a flank attack and consolidate and reorganize.

To fully adopt the new teaching method, regiment instructors were retrained in all areas of STT prior to implementation. Brown said it took a lot of work to make the conversion happen.

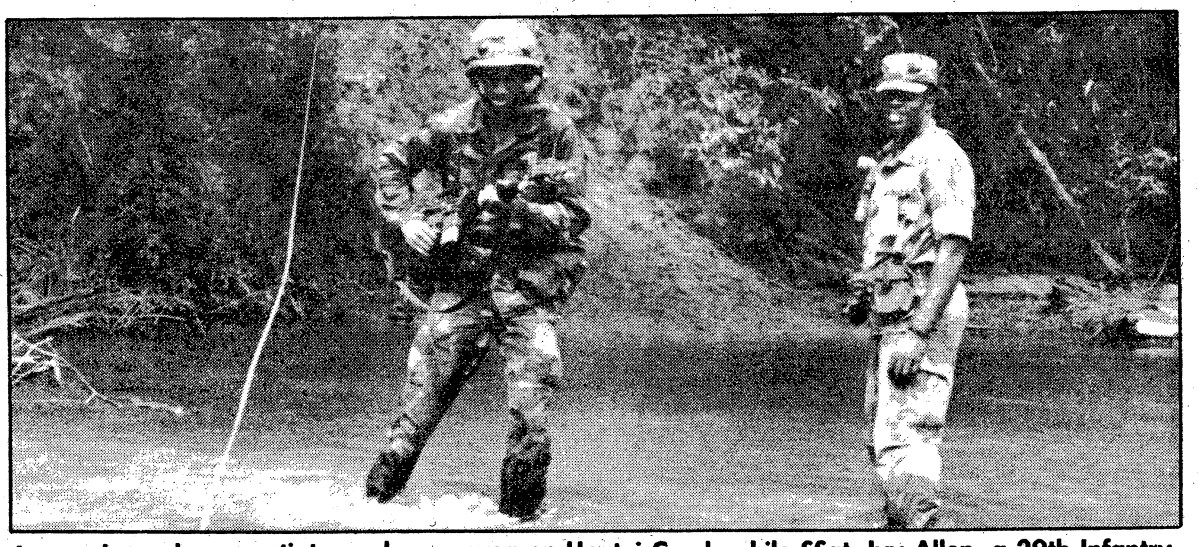
"We continued our regular instruction to One Station Unit Training soldiers as we received instruction on various ranges when our range was down," he added.

As with anything new, some instructors had their doubts about the new system, said MSgt. Michael St. John, master trainer, STT.

But after running the course for a while, they changed their minds. Also, feedback from many drill instructors and unit commanders indicated the new system was working, St. John said.

Walls said, "I had several drills tell me how well the new instructions helped them with their field training exercise, which is conducted at the end of training."

And Brown said he can see an improvement in how soldiers perform during squad combat drill.



"It used to be that one man — the aggressor — would annihilate 10 out of 11 men using the Multiple Integrated Laser Equipment System," he said. "Today, that same man is lucky if he gets two."

To further enhance STT, regiment instructors and drill sergeants blend their expertise.

"In addition to the drill sergeant reinforcing training and acting as safety, he often fills in as a squad leader for the instructor," Brown said.

The new method of instruction also helps instill unit cohesiveness, he said.

"By working together for the entire period, everyone learns what the other is doing, and the instructor can readily identify any weak areas on the part of the individual or the team," Brown said.

Lynda Kennedy, the U.S. Army School of the Americas' newly assigned chief librarian, returns a book to its proper shelf at the USARSA library.

Librarian faces challenge managing 20,000 books

Majority of volumes available in Spanish

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas PAO

The U.S. Army School of the Americas has a new librarian.

Lynda Kennedy arrived at USARSA in early August and already has plans to make instructors and students at the school more aware of available instructional and informational publications.

"I see my new job as a challenge," Kennedy said. "Acting on guidance I've received from my supervisors, I'm going to try to provide the best library service we can possibly offer at USARSA."

"If we make the instructors more aware of what materials are available to them they will pass on this information to their students," Kennedy said.

The USARSA library offers its patrons about 20,000 volumes, 90 percent of which are printed in Spanish.

As no stranger to rooms or towering shelves full of thousands of archives, Kennedy accepted the position at USARSA after completing one and a half years of intern training at the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command's librarian course at Fort Monroe, Va. She worked one year at the Command and General Staff Library in Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and 18 months as a librarian at Bluefield Baptist College in Bluefield, Va.

Kennedy, 36, was born in Miami, Fla., but is a native of Savannah, Ga., where her mother currently lives.

Kennedy has a bachelor's degree in Spanish from Valdosta State University and a master's degree in Library Sciences from the University of South Carolina.

Troops spend leave working with sick kids

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade PAO

Soldiers spend summer vacations doing a variety of things, ranging from visiting family to catching up on home or car repairs.

But, three soldiers from the 72nd Engineer Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, chose to spend their recent leaves helping kids with cancer have a good time during summer camp.

SP4 Greg Norton has been a counselor at Reach Out for Cancer Kids Camp in Lake Wales, Fla. for three years.

He became involved with the program while he was working at a children's hospital in Florida before joining the Army. While stationed at Fort Benning, he has returned to the camp each summer to share his time with the kids.

This summer, two other soldiers from Norton's unit, SP4 Richard Timm and PFC Sam Singletary decided to join him in the worthwhile cause.

As counselors, the three soldiers spent two weeks swimming, horseback riding, canoeing and playing games. They also chaperoned the R.O.C.K. Camp kids on a visit to Busch Gardens near Tampa, Fla.

"I learned a lot from these kids," said Timm. "They are just like any other kids. They like to have pillow fights and do things that all kids do."

"Some of the kids have returned to the camp for several years," said Norton. "It gives the newer kids an incentive when they see how well the kids who have had cancer for a few years are doing."

All three soldiers plan to return to the camp next summer.

197th Infantry

The Dining Facility at 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, was recently presented with the Post Best Mess award for the third quarter of fiscal year 1986.

Col. William W. Hartzog, 197th Infantry Brigade commander presented the award to SFC Edward Gill, the dining facility manager.

"All that training really paid off," said PFC John Wilson, a supply clerk from Company D, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade.

Wilson was involved in Common Task Training last week with his company. The training stressed first aid tasks.

One evening as he was walking into a convenience store, Wilson saw a man who was bleeding from a gaping wound on his arm. The man had been stabbed with a broken bottle.

Wilson got bandages from the store and applied a pressure dressing to the man's wound. He then treated him for shock and waited until paramedics arrived. The paramedics told Wilson that his action had stopped the bleeding.

"At first I thought, it looks bad, don't touch it," Wilson said. "But something just made me do it."

Wilson was awarded the Army Achievement Medal for his quick reaction to the situation — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade PAO

34th Medical

Lt. Col. Robert D. Deaderick assumed command of the 34th Medical Battalion at a change of command ceremony on York Field Aug. 13. Post commander Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba was distinguished guest, and Lt. Col. Nick L. Johnson, outgoing commander, acted as reviewing officer in the passing of the colors. Johnson was awarded the Meritorious Service Medal, third oak leaf cluster. — Anthony Intrepido, 34th Medical Battalion PAO

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba passes the 34th Medical Battalion colors to incoming commander, Lt. Col. Robert D. Deaderick.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

The time of the year is upon us when strict compliance to speed limits is especially important.

The school year has started and children will be waiting for school buses on street corners and walking to school.

They like to play while waiting for the bus and often dart into or cross the street.

Parents should supervise their younger children at bus stops.

Concerned parents in an area can rotate this responsibility and ensure daily supervision of bus stops.

Motorists must be acutely aware and pay special attention to the road, especially in the housing areas.

Another area of concern are the school crossing zones. The maximum speed limit is posted, "15 mph while children are present." Further guidance from the Fort Benning Military Police Activity Traffic Section says that when a school crossing guard is present at the crossing point, the 15 mph limit will be obeyed and motorists will also be required to comply with the traffic signals given by the school crossing guard. These instructions direct motorists to slow, stop, turn or continue through the zone.

The safety of our children should be paramount in the minds of everyone. The motorists, the parents, and even concerned pedestrians walking through a school zone can help us protect our greatest resource — children.

Ask the 'judge'

Editor's note: These questions are inquiries that the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be considered a substitute for advise from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I bought a used car for $3,000 only six weeks ago and when I went to trade it in on a new car, the new car dealer said he would only give me $150, because the front end damage makes the car almost worthless. What can I do?

A. The first thing to do is to look at the original contract for the used car. Unless there are express warranties as to the value of the vehicle you may be out of luck.

It appears that you contracted not for the value of the car, but for the use of the car. Even if there were problems with the use of the car, you may still be out of luck unless there were express warranties on certain systems in the car (for example, the engine).

Most used cars are sold "as is," and therefore you take the risk as to the purchase.

Make an appointment at legal assistance and let us look at the contract. We will let you know exactly what you are bargaining for.

Q. What is a power of attorney? Are there different kinds and when do they expire?

A. A power of attorney is a document that allows someone else to act as your legal agent. Thus a power of attorney can be used for a friend to sell your car, to let your spouse ship your household goods or to authorize a relative to take your child to the hospital. It can create valid and legal debts in your name or it can authorize a person to pay off your debts.

There are two types of powers of attorney, general and special. General power of attorney allows the person you name to do any of the things that you legally could do. A special or limited power of attorney lists a particular act that the agent is authorized to do and limits the agent to that act.

A power of attorney should never be made indefinite or permanent. The best course is to set a date for the power of attorney to expire, and this can be written into the power of attorney. That way, the power of attorney will be no good after the expiration.

Energy Update

by Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

Even though temperatures have dropped, air conditioning has not been turned off on post.

However, the Energy Office reminds residents that the need to conserve resources still exists, and asks that they turn off their thermostats when temperatures are comfortable.

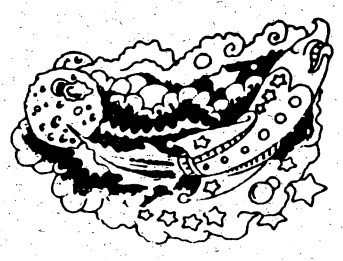
Now is the time when Fort Benning has the greatest opportunity to save energy, by turning on fans and opening windows and taking advantage of cooler outside air temperatures.

Last year, temperatures remained hot during September and October, creating a continued demand for air conditioning. By conserving now, Fort Benning will have the resources it needs during the coming hot months.

For the first time in 10 years, Fort Benning can meet the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command Energy goals.

Residents and workers must continue the practices that have been successful in conserving our resources up to this point.

Building temperatures must be maintained at the standard 78 degrees Fahrenheit. For each degree below 78, an additional 3 to 5 percent of energy is consumed.



When using air conditioning, keep windows and doors closed tight to prevent the escape of conditioned air. Turn out unneeded lights. Report energy waste and abuse.

The above measures require only a small effort on your part, but the results, when multiplied by the thousands of soldiers, civilians and family members who live and work on Fort Benning, will make a difference.

One thing is certain, we will not be successful without the continued support of everyone living and working at Fort Benning.

With everyone's help, we will meet the TRADOC energy goals.

Even if the day is 5 or 10 years away, you need to plan for it today.

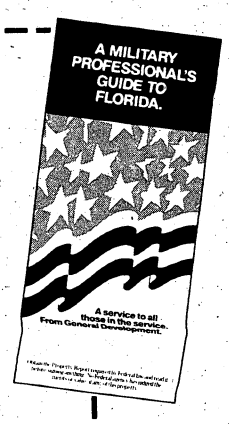
Time doesn't wait, and those military years pass quickly. Before you turn around, you'll be wanting to start living that life of leisure – and you'll want it ready and waiting for you.

That's why we suggest you begin to plan your tomorrows today.

General Development has been helping military families find their place in the sun for more than 30 years. And we can help you – just as we've done for over 12,000 service people.

How? By giving you the right questions to consider and the right answers to look for.

For example: 1) Do the people you're dealing with have special financing plans tailored to your military income? 2) How reliable are they? 3) What's their past record of performance? 4) Does the community you're interested in have full shopping, recreational and cultural facilities? 5) Is there a military base nearby? (Hospital, commissary and exchange privileges can mean big savings.) 6) How about location? Is it overcrowded or is it so isolated that you would feel shut off from civilization?



As you're well aware, military families have special needs. If you want to meet them in all the years to come, send us the coupon. And let us show you the way to a great Florida future.

Schools

Nurses do more than hand out bandaids; they're working to promote kids' health

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

When you think of a school nurse, do you picture a lady in white sitting in a clinic waiting to dispense a Band-Aid or to take a child's temperature?

If that's the case, then visit with one of the five registered nurses within the Fort Benning Schools. Gloria Amon at Faith School, Linda Christensen at Wilson School and Patch School, Mary Jones at Wilbur School, Kathy Brinkman at Loyd School and McBride School and Liliane Baumgartner at Dexter School and White School all offer much more.

The role of the school nurse in the Benning system consists of a variety of functions—screening, teaching, assessing, planning and evaluating. As a regular faculty member, she wears no distinguishing uniform.

The nurse maintains a health record on each student. She conducts screening programs in vision, hearing, tuberculin, scoliosis, height, weight and dental at specified grade levels. She administers first-aid, refers students to medical facilities and counsels individual students and parents to eliminate or minimize the health problems of students that interfere with effective learning. She also serves as a member of the Child Study Committee in each school, discussing children with special problems.

The four elementary school nurses conduct weekly SWISH flouride rinse treatments in the schools. The nurses jokingly comment that they should never suffer from another cavity themselves because they have personally demonstrated SWISH on a weekly basis to so many students.

In addition to the many on-site medical services that the nurses perform, they serve as a vital component of the Fort Benning instructional team. The nurses are a constant source of health related materials for the classroom teacher.

Benning school nurses provide on-going instruction and preventive medicine information to students. This instruction is done individually, in small groups and with entire classes.

Information on nutrition, posture, hygiene, grooming, first aid, effects of smoking, exercise, and health related careers are presented according to age and grade level of students.

Sometimes special instruction is provided when a new student with a medical problem enrolls; at this time the nurse works with teachers and classmates to explain the medical situation and explain how students and teachers can be of help to the new student.

"As school nurses, we are in a unique position. We are able to provide an assuring and comforting relationship on a one-to-one basis for children," stated Liliane Baumgartner. "We teach students the concept of wellness. As we teach the keys to good health, we make children aware that they are in charge of their own well being physically and emotionally."

Benning school nurses are active participants in the on-going staff development programs that are available to Fort Benning educators. They are frequently involved in courses in Spanish and in new and effective teaching techniques.

Linda Christensen reflects the general feeling of all of the Fort Benning school nurses when she states, "It is rewarding when you see the results of your work with children. Just yesterday a first grade student told me that her aunt is baking chicken now instead of frying it everytime. Young children do understant the information that we present. It's good to see that our work has an impact upon students and their families."

What Specialist Hales has been aiming for during his off-duty time.

Specialist Four Jason Hales has been aiming for the best. As a soldier, and as a student. He's an Infantryman at Fort Myer, Virginia, as well as a B.S. candidate in Mechanical Engineering at Park College. And he's just one of the over 100,000 soldiers who are building brighter, smarter futures through the Army's Reaching for Excellence education program.

It's a terrific opportunity that's available to each and every soldier, at virtually every Army post around the world. Reaching for Excellence covers everything from basic educational skills and technical skill development to undergraduate and graduate studies at the college level. And it's a chance to have at least 75% of your college tuition paid for by the Army.

Continuing your education is a commitment that's fully supported by the Army leadership. You can start taking advantage of this commitment at your post's Education Center. There, you'll find a professional education counselor who can help you set short- and long-range goals which fit both your educational and career plans.

Drop by your Education Center and find out, as Specialist Hales did, how you can turn some off-duty time into a lifetime of rewards. If you want to get ahead, now's the time to get started.

ARMY EDUCATION. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Volunteer telephone line offers listening ear

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Need someone to talk to? Want to help someone else? Contact Contact.

Contact is an organization made up of volunteers who have completed a meaningful training course. These volunteers are ready and trained to listen, to provide counsel, to help, to give referrals and to be a confidential friend. Contact stresses the confidentiality.

According to the U.S. Army Infantry Center Chaplain's Office, Fort Benning soldiers and family members use Contact extensively. Contact logs more than 1,000 calls each month on post.

Contact supplements Benning's people helping programs of chaplains, Army agencies and mental health services. In addition to personal counseling from a its volunteers, Contact can also arrange follow-up or add-on help if requested.

"Contact is a useful and necessary service to our community. Fort Benning is involved and we need more volunteers to serve as counselors. A new training program will start Sept. 11 and we need volunteers," said post chaplain, Col. Roy Mathis.

The Contact training course is a 50-hour, college-level program designed to stimulate spiritual and emotional growth. It develops techniques of listening, communicating and finding solutions to people's problems. Contact also provides an information base to help in dealing with contemporary issues.

Persons interested in volunteering are urged to call Contact at 327-3999 or the Chaplain's Office at 545-2288.

Anyone needing help can call Contact at the same number as above.

Christian band brings good music, and message to Fort Benning

The Bayonet staff writer

The Sante Fe touring band was met with warm applause on Fort Benning Labor Day weekend.

The band gave four shows during its second visit to post this year.

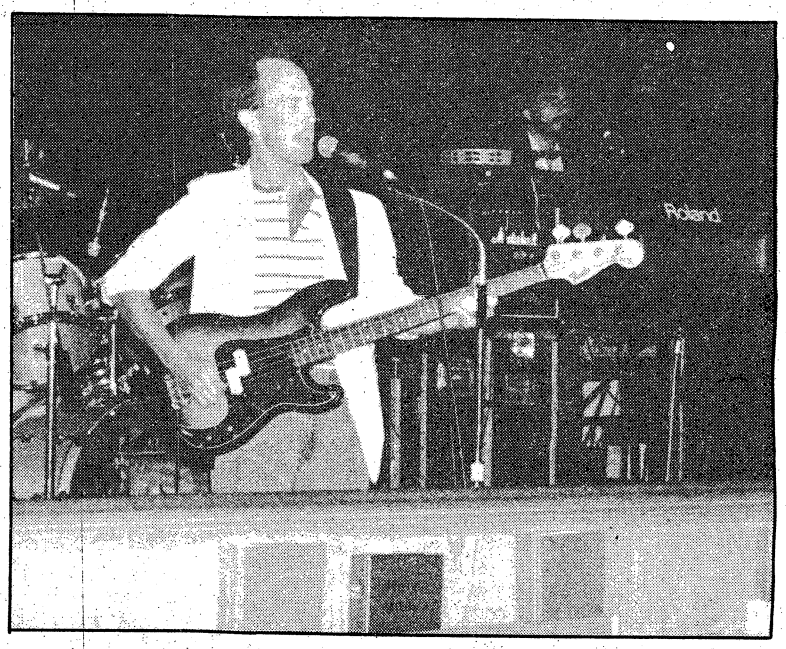
Sponsored by the U.S. Army Infantry Center Chaplains Division, the six-member band did the shows in an attempt to emphasize various chapel-related programs offered here.

"The chaplains program wanted to say this is what we have available," said Rick Satterthwaite, director of the band.

The Indianappolis based band, which tours for the Campus Crusade For Christ, generally plays for college students.

According to John Haddix, music director and keyboard player, "We try to come to Fort Benning about twice a year where we can carry the word of Christ."

The U.S. Army Reception Battalion was the site for one of the band's shows Saturday. A large number of soldiers, new to the Army and some still sporting their civilian clothes, listened raptly while Sante Fe offered renditions of old favorites like "Johnny B. Goode" as well as many "top 40" hits.



Sante Fe's mission includes more than playing music, however. "We share (the message about) our relationship with Christ," said Satterthwaite.

In their ministering, the band is careful not to be too aggressive with their beliefs. "When we play to groups we only speak briefly about our relationship with Christ. We use the music as our medium," Haddix said.

"Our main purpose is to tell the people about Jesus Christ and how he has changed our lives and how he can give people hope. We try to bring these feelings out through our music," Satterthwaite said.

Playing at the Reception Battalion was a new experience for a band that has performed worldwide. "It was the first time we played for an audience where everyone had ear plugs," said Satterthwaite. "I only saw one guy wearing them though," he added.

"We had a great time. I think everyone really enjoyed the band," said Chaplain (Capt.) James Pomann, assistant to the post chaplain.

Rick Satterthwaite (on guitar) and John Haddix accompany the Sante Fe band in a rendition of "Johnny B. Goode" during the concert appearance at the Kelly Hill Chapel Saturday.

Association planning 'Fiesta' for National Hispanic Week

U.S. Army School of the Americas PAO

This year's National Hispanic Week is showing signs of what is going to be a colorful and cultural experience for surrounding Fort Benning communities

Aside from the familiar Latin dishes that will be prepared and offered by several dining facilities on post, displays, posters and information on the cultural backgrounds akin to many U.S. soldiers of Hispanic descent, a "Fiesta in Columbus" is already in the making.

Sponsored by the Columbus Hispanic Association, the highlight of Fiesta activities is set for Sept. 14 at 1 p.m. at the Riverfront Ampitheater on Front Avenue in Columbus.

"If you've never seen typical folk dancers from such countries as Peru, Brazil, Argentina, Chile and several others from Latin America, this will be an excellent opportunity to do so," said Yolanda Hagberg, Hispanic Dance Troupe coordinator.

According to Hagberg, some 12 different dance groups are scheduled to participate during the Fiesta. 'Fiesta' means celebration or festival in Spanish. Many of the dancers are instructors or students and family members at the School of the Americas.

The dancers, who will be dressed in native folkloric costumes typical of many Central and South American Indians, will sparkle audiences from 1 to 5 p.m.

"This will be the second year we have participated in this event," said Hagberg, adding, "And this year's activities will be more organized than before."

More than 5,000 Columbus residents are of Hispanic lineage. Hispanic soldiers represent about 5 percent of the total force in the Army.

Child development coordinator 'looking out' for post kids

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

The Army isn't just made up of soldiers. It's made up of families, and recognition of this important element led the Department of Army to establish child development services at all installations.

At Fort Benning, Becky Carroll is the Child Development Services coordinator, and is responsible for coordinating all such programs on post.

These include two child development centers and the home caregiver certification program. Carroll is also responsible for inspecting private child care facilities on post to ensure they meet applicable Army regulations.

"Our goal is to provide the best possible care for post children, in accordance with Army guidelines," Carroll said. "Our primary focus is children age 6 weeks through 5 years old, which is the eligible age group for the two centers."

Care for school-age children is also offered in certified homes on post, which are flexible in meeting an individual family's needs.

"Soldier mothers must return to work when the infant is four weeks old, and most centers don't take babies younger than six weeks, but we can refer them to certified caregivers who fill that gap," she said.

Fort Benning is in a unique position, being one of the last installations where privately run child care facilities still exist, she said. Carroll is responsible for inspecting these private centers and helping them meet Army regulations.

She's also the person who investigates complaints by parents dissatisfied with care they receive in any type authorized care center or home.

A big part of the child care program is the ongoing training program for child care providers. "We teach at least one major course each month, to help people improve their skills," she said.

Army Regulation 608-10 sets the standards for child care on post, mandating the number of children per caregiver as well as who can provide the care.

The regulation prohibits a person from keeping children in the housing area for profit, unless the person is certified to do so.

"One of our major goals right now is to stop people from giving unauthorized care in their quarters," Carroll said.

All approved child care facilities and homes are covered by liability insurance by the Army. Uncertified homes are not. Uncertified caregivers can be evicted from post quarters, she explained.

Carroll said she is available to speak to groups and explain the child care program on post, and to help parents find child care. For more information, call 545-5246 or 545-3328.

'Mrs. Sergeant Major of the Army' shares opinions

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Karen Morrell accompanied her husband, SMA Glen E. Morrell on his visit to Fort Benning last week.

While touring the Custer Terrace Child Development Center and Santa's Castle, Mrs. Morrell talked of issues pertinent to Army families and of her role as the sergeant major of the Army's wife.

"Family members have to understand the pressures and problems encountered by a soldier-spouse. They have got to support that soldier-spouse to keep the family on an even keel.

"Family members also have to support each other and work together. A soldier-spouse must do his or her job in the Army and be a parent as well as a spouse. That means taking care of their family and pulling their load as a family member.

"The Army is starting to institutionalize caring for Army families and that's a big step in the right direction for soldier-spouses and family members," Mrs. Morrell said.

An Army wife for 30 years, Mrs. Morrell said she didn't have institutionalized help for her, her husband and their three children.

When her husband was away from home, Mrs. Morrell almost always had to fend for herself. "If something needed doing we had to do it ourselves. We formed our own informal support groups that helped new wives to get to know where facilities were or where to go for help. When our husbands had to go off to war or to the field for training we had to help each other. But it was informal," she said.

"As the wife of the sergeant major of the Army I recognized a need for a formal program of support for families when the soldier was away. The Army now has such a program and family members needing help of any kind have a formal chain of command to turn to when the regular chain of command is away. That's important and was needed," she said.

Mrs. Morrell is also very interested in child care for Army families.

"With more and more families in the Army where both spouses work and with more married soldiers in general, the Army has needed a formal child care program. I worked for many years in custodial child care. That's just taking care of the children.

"Due to an Army emphasis we now have child development centers where children aren't just taken care of but where they learn things. Army families needed this and we have it. That's really a positive step," Mrs. Morrell said.

She had high praise for Benning's child development program and for Santa's Castle.

The wife of the Army's top non-commissioned officer said she enjoys being "Mrs. SMA" because it gives her a chance to help and talk with Army families worldwide.

"We just returned from a 25-day tour of the Far East. We visited soldiers and families in Korea, Japan, Okinawa and Hawaii," Mrs. Morrell said.

Mrs. Morrell offered a word of advice for service spouses.

"The Army is a good life. To enjoy it and make the most of it family members have got to get to know the post they're at and what's available.

"A new Army family should get to know the spouse's senior NCOs and their families and then pick their brains and learn from their experience.

"Don't put on airs. Do only what you feel comfortable doing. Whatever you do, be yourself."

Okinawan soldier 'natural' for U.S. Army

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

SP4 Toshio Sharpe, of the 586th Engineer Company, is a natural, a naturalized citizen, that is.

A native of Okinawa, a small island south of Japan, Sharp was sworn in as a United States citizen in Atlanta March 5. The way he got here and into the Army is a longer story.

"My mother, who was divorced, married a soldier she had met and fallen in love with on Okinawa. He adopted me and, at the age of 17, we moved to Indiana," Sharp said.

"I could barely speak English and was worried about school. I had almost finished my senior year in high school in Okinawa when we made the move. Since I didn't have the necessary English language skills I voluntarily began sitting in on a kindergarten class to pick up the language," he said.

Sharp smiled as he remembered the children. He said they treated him like a big brother and he picked up the language easily. He advanced quickly to 9th grade and then went on to 12th, where he was required to finish a full year as a senior.

"I really felt lonely for Okinawa a lot of times when I was in school and the language barrier sometimes presented a problem. I didn't have trouble getting dates, though," said Sharp.

"I met my wife during the time I was in Indiana. I was different and easy going and outgoing, like most Okinawans. I was also anxious to mix with Americans and become a part of the culture," he said.

After high school and his marriage, Sharp checked with the Marine Corps and Army recruiters, deciding on a military career. He chose the Army because of more opportunity for advancements and training.

The 586th is Sharp's first assigmnment. He attended One Station Unit Training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

He said he owes a lot to his supervisor, SSgt. Bill Sheridan, for helping to get Sharp and his family moved and settled and for Sharp's new citizenship.

"SSgt. Sheridan really helped my wife, Marondola, and my two children, Toshaki and Kiyomi, when they moved out here. He also assisted us in setting up our household. But the main thing I thank SSgt. Sheridan for is helping me get my citizenship," Sharp said.

Sheridan gave Sharp the necessary time to study American history and government and time for taking the test in Atlanta.

The Okinawan-turned-American said he still misses Okinawa and the surrounding ocean and some Okinawan foods, but he is adjusting.

"I like fried chicken. They had a Kentucky Fried Chicken in Okinawa so I tried some there. Okinawan food is based primarily on rice and fish. But we also eat a lot of tempura, which is anything that is fried after being put in a special batter.

"I ordered my wife a three-volume set of Okinawan cookbooks but I didn't pay attention and when they arrived we found they were in Japanese," he said.

would be better able to support the servicemember and the Army," Morrell explained.

"Soldiers' spouses need to feel comfortable with the system," he said. "That way, they are able to become involved in the community and the various programs on the installation."

Morrell believes that many units have good existing family support networks, such as the Chain of Concern used by the wives of soldiers in the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment here.

"The spouse support programs throughout the force, especially in the deployable units, are very good. But, the development of the spouse is still vital," he said.

Another issue Morrell feels strongly about is the welfare of the non-commissioned officer corps.

Since he was named sergeant major of the Army in 1983, he has instituted many positive changes that have had a profound affect on the NCO Corps. One of the most widely acclaimed was the changeover from specialist five and six ranks to sergeant and staff sergeant. Nearly one year has passed since that change took place and Morrell believes the Corps has definitely reaped some rewards from the move.

"The NCO Corps was strengthened by the change," he said. "In addition, those who were converted feel like they have more to contribute.

The sergeant major of the Army summed up his entire leadership philosophy in saying, "We should never set a soldier up to be a failure."

He believes that good leaders have got to be able to distinguish those soldiers who have the potential to be NCOs and ensure they receive the necessary training through schools and the appropriate recognition through promotions.

"It only hurts an individual who is not qualified if we send him to a promotion board or a school and he fails," he said.

29th Infantry 'Barbarians' take softball title

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

In the true tradition of champions, the Comany B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment team recently fought back, overcoming seemingly insurmountable odds to claim the 1986 Fort Benning Softball Championship.

The Co. B Barbarians stormed the 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade with more than the element of surprise.

The Barbarians suffered an earlier loss to the 533rd Transportation team and faced elimination twice therafter.

In their first five tournament wins, the Barbarians allowed only five runs.

It was not until the final days of competition that the threat of elimination haunted the 1986 Softball Champions.

In games against the Non-commissioned Officers Academy team and the 9th Battalion, the Barbarians were knocking on the door to the grandstands, where a defeat would have sent them for the duration of the tournament.

In a narrow 8-7 victory over the NCOA, the Barbarians escaped elimination.

But, their greatest escape came championship night, when they faced the undefeated 9th Bn. team.

In what could have been 9th Bn.'s hour of greatness, the 29th Infantry Barbarians conducted a sly 5-4 maneuver over the previously unbeaten team.

John Watts opened, scoring the games first run, but the 9th Bn. rally in the second inning brought four runs to answer the attack.

Moose Kinsey, Ramon Martinez, Patrick Springham and Fred Sheldon scored the runs that gave the 9th Bn. a 4-1 lead.

Barbarians Greg Light and Julius Smith scored in the second. Both Light and Smith were based when 9th Bn. pitcher Fred Sheldon, walked them at the start of the lineup.

The 9th Bn. team's last run came in the top of the third when Mark Kapsalis came in on a Moose Kinsey double.

With the 9th Bn. leading 5-3, the Barbarians were scoreless until substitute Felix Alicea took a base on a fifth inning walk, and came home on a Douglas Boyd base hit.

Alicea led off the bottom of the seventh with a base hit and tied the game when John Watts hit a shot to short stop for the fielder's choice, but a throw to home plate was high, allowing Alicea to score.

In the top of the extra eighth inning, it was three up and three down as Bobby Richardson was caught in a double play.

The Championship match-up was sent into the "if" game when Jesse Thomas came home on a sacrafice fly by Jimmy Macon.

Thomas opened with a single. The bases where loaded when the next two batters were walked.

Macon's only task was to get wood on the ball, which he did sending the first pitch far into left field.

After a short break, the two teams again hit the field for the final matchup.

In the first inning it appeared that neither team would lossen up. But, it was the Barbarians that relaxed four runs in the second inning.

Greg Light scored on a Marcus Ranaldi single just over short stop.

Both Ranaldi and Kent Griggs coame in on a Earnest Brown base hit. Brown scored when John Watts pulled a single down third baseline.

Barbarian pitcher, Douglas Boyd, allowed only three hits in the 6-1 championship upset.

Scores were also provided by Jesse Thomas and William Kearns, to link the Co. B 1-29th Barbarians with the 1986 Softball Championships.

Post shooter sets world records on way to championship

by Tommy Pool
U.S. Army Marskmanship Unit PAO

USAMU's Capt. Glen Dubis, recently set two new world records and won six medals during this year's 300-Meter World Rifle Championships in Skovde, Sweden, Aug. 27 to 31.

In the individual championship, Dubis narrowly edged Great Britain's Malcolm Cooper, after both shooters had finished with new world record scores of 1,174 out of 1,200 possible points.

The individual winner was determined by the last 10 shots fired in the event with Dubis scoring 99 out of 100 points, to Cooper's 97 for the gold medal victory.

Both Dubis and Cooper will be credited with new world records breaking the old mark of 1,164 set by Cooper in 1985.

Dubis scored his second world record during the 40 shot kneeling phase with a near perfect total of 397 out of 400.

The new record was one point over the old mark of 396 set by Victor Danilshenko of the USSR in 1983.

Dubis continued his outstanding performance with a silver and bronze medal finished in the individual prone and standing events.

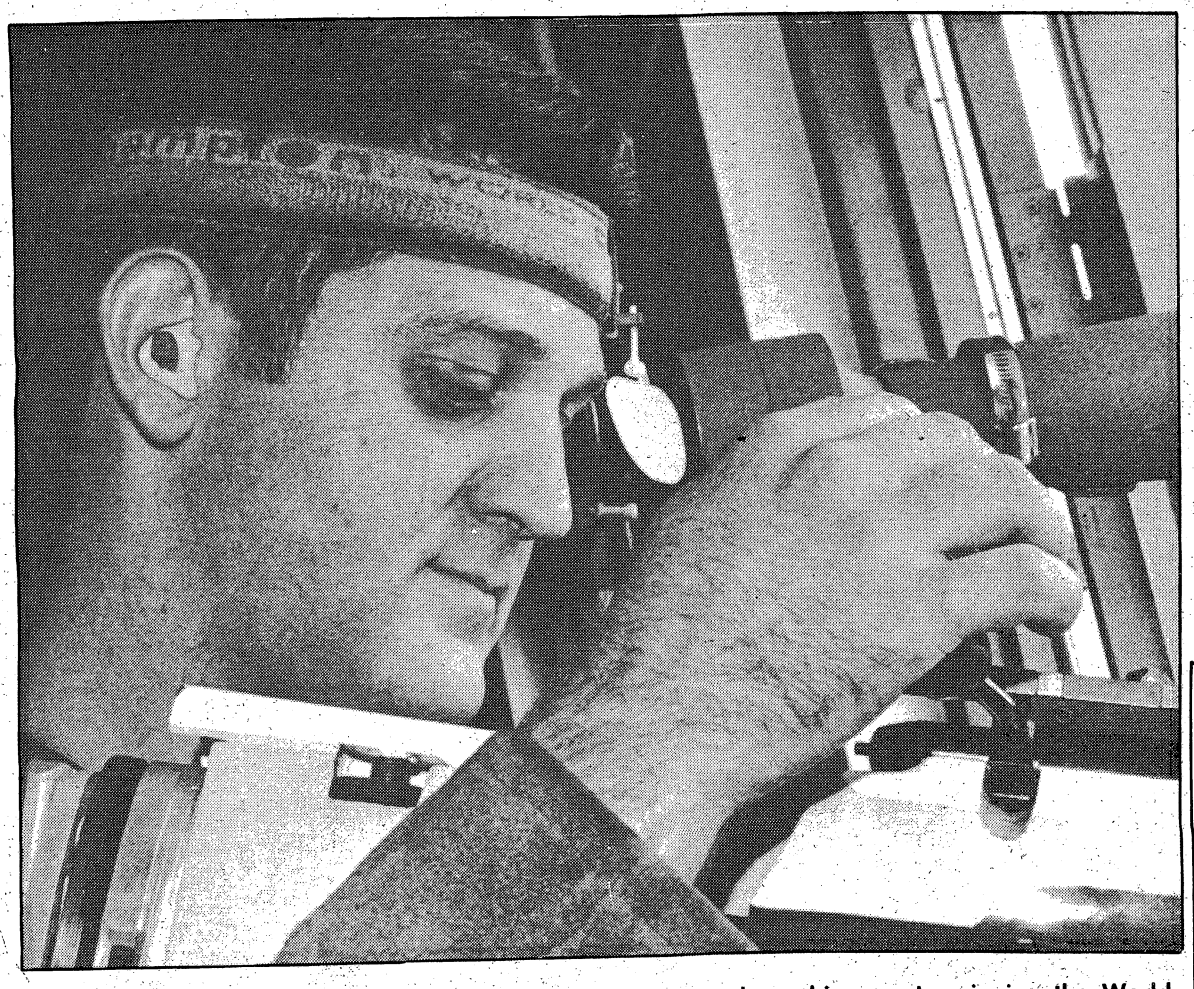
His score of 383 was four points back of Cooper's new world record of 387 in the standing championship. In the 60 shot prone event, Dubis tied for second place with Finland's M. Roppanen at 597, but lost in the final ten shot series by one point.

Malcolm Cooper scored his third world record with a total of 599 out of 600 in the event.

Overall, Dubis finished with a total of one gold, four silver and one bronze medal in both individual and team competition.

This year's U.S. team was composed of three members from the U.S. Army Markmanship Unit here and included Dubis, Lt. Col. Lones Wigger and Maj. Robert Aylward.

Also on the squad were Army Reservists Bruce Meredith of LaGrange, Ga., and David Kimes from Huntington Beach, Calif.



Dubis is presently competing in the second phase of this year's World Shooting Championships in Suhl, East Germany, through Sept. 14.

The matches in Suhl include smallbore rifle and pistol events as well as shotgun and running target competition.

In addition to Dubis, those competing in the championships from USAMU include; MSgt. Erich Buljung, SFC Jimmie McCoy (pistol) and 1st Lt. Denise Morrison, SFC Alger Mullins and SSgt. Matthew Dryke (shotgun).

Watch for complete scores and results in future issues of the Bayonet.

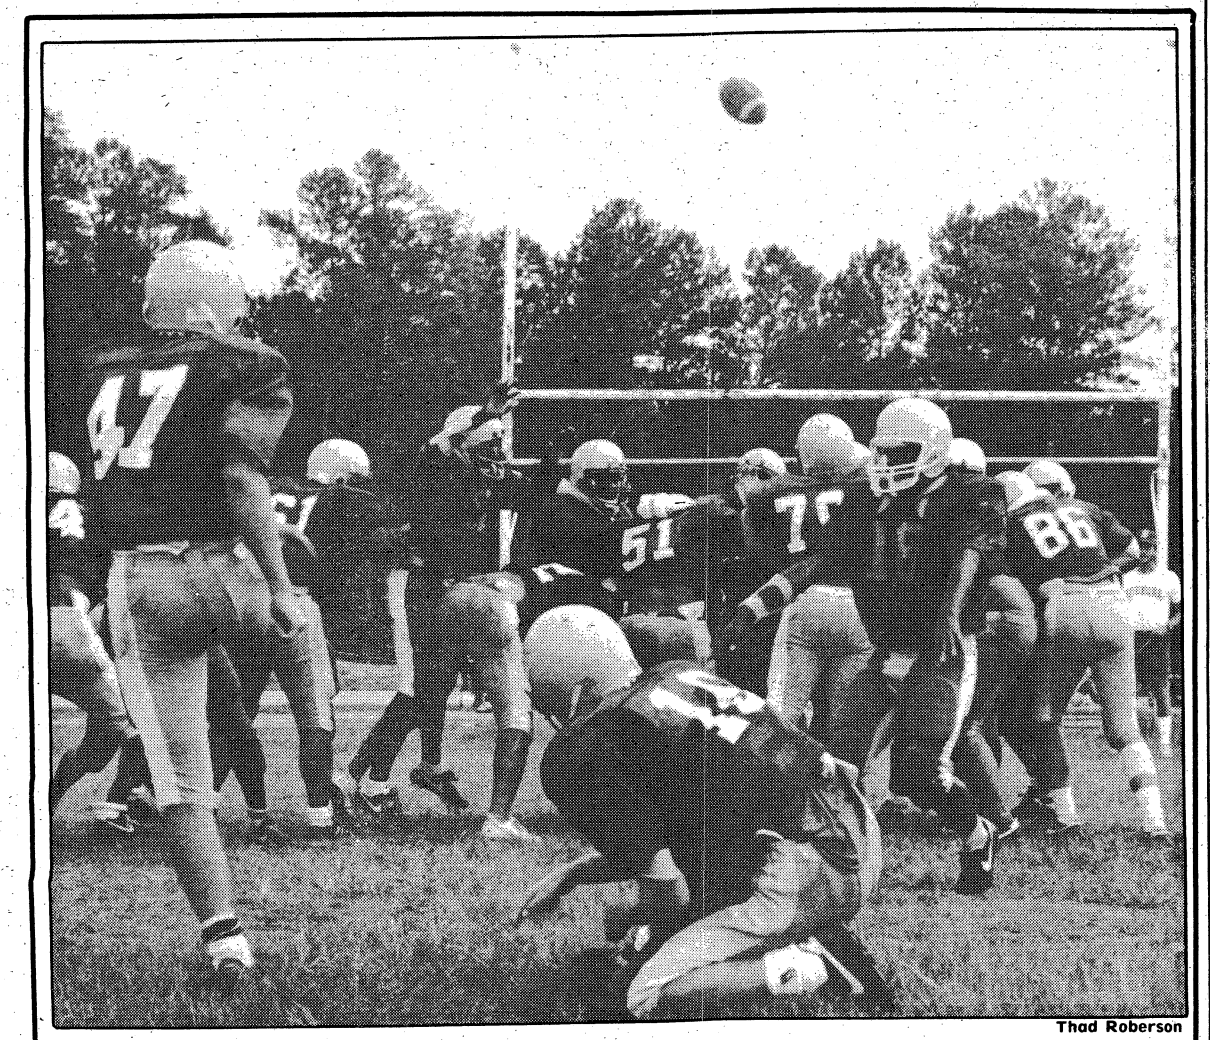
Youth Activities fall sports set to kick off tomorrow

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The Youth Activities Division's Fall sports program will soon be underway with 26 teams participating.

The football season, which opens tomorrow, will host 16 teams for children from 6 to 15 years old.

Cheerleading season opens along with the football season and each squad will perform during the four eight-minute quarters, with the visiting team highlighting the 10-minute half-time shows.



The season will kick off with ceremonies on Gordon Field tomorrow at 9 a.m.

Soccer's opening day ceremonies begin Sept. 13, at 9 a.m. on Blue Field.

The YA soccer league, with 10 teams battling for the number one slot, is open to children from 6 to 13 years old.

The Grasshoppers, 6 to 8, will play two 25-minute halves, while the Peewees, 11 to 13 years old, will scrimmage two 25-minute halves.

"We are expecting great particpation," said Ray Pierce, YA Sports Director. "More than 300 boys and girls will particpate in the fall program."

Thad Roberson

Ranger living out his dream, meeting Army's challenges

Story and photo by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

SP4 Tony Roughton is living his childhood dream.

Assigned to Company C, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, he recently beat out other top soldiers on post to win the 1986 Soldier of the Year competition.

The 20-year-old Cumming, Ga., native enlisted in the Army right out of high school, and 28 months later, he's glad he did.

"It was something I'd always wanted to do; it seemed like it would be an exciting experience," he said.

He enlisted as an infantryman, specifically to be assigned to a Ranger battalion. "I like the Rangers because it's the biggest challenge the Army has to offer, and I like to be the best," Roughton said.

Roughton downplays his success in winning the award. "I like to read and stay up with what's happening in the Army," he said.

Appearing before the board was nerve-racking, he said, but once he got started everything was all right. "They asked some questions I didn't know, and a lo of technical questions," he said "A lot of points on the board come from verbal expression poise and appearance."

The best thing about being in the Battalion? "The close knit family atmosphere is the best thing," he said. "Everybody works together and you trust the men beside you because you know they know their jobs."

Attending Ranger School is next of his list of goals, but will have to wait for the time being while he fulfills his duties as

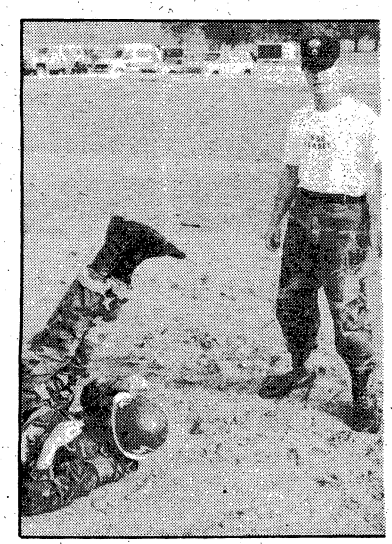
He looks around the room as he fidgets with his sleeves and picks a hair off his collar. He looks down at his shoes checking for smudges in the fresh polish. He takes a deep breath and opens the door.

One more group of senior non-commissioned officers sitting behind a table asking questions presents little challenge to SSgt. Ronald E. Veasey Jr.

Recently named Fort Benning's Non-commissioned Officer of the Year, the 28-year-old 10-year Army veteran faced a lot of sergeants major on his way to his prestigious positon.

He spent the last few months preparing for one board or another to win this title. "I first had to win the battalion NCO of the quarter, then the brigade NCO of the quarter then the post NCO of the quarter," Veasey said.

"The whole competition is evaluated on appearance, poise, bearing and conversational skills," Veasey added.



The recently married Columbus native is accustomed to the military lifestyle. He graduated from Spencer High School while his father was a sergeant major here.

But his father was of little influence in his decision to make the Army a career.

"I've always lived around the military. As far as growing up I came to the decision to join the Army on my own. One day I just had my dad come down to the recruiter's (office) to sign the papers for me since I was only 17," Veasey said.

The newly selected NCO of the Year recently moved from a platoon sergeant position in the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade to an instructor job with the Tower Branch of the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry. He believes keeping a "positive attitude" is important.

"So far I have liked everything I've done in the Army but being a 'Blackhat' will give me experience as an instructor," Veasey said.

The Fort Benning NCO of the Year, SSgt. Ronald E. Veasey Jr. watches as Pvt. 1 James V. Thomas performs a parachute landing fall.

Retirement act's provisions to affect only new members

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

The Military Retirement Reform Act of 1986 went in effect in July.

Although those of us who unselfishly give of ourselves in defense of our great country could debate forever on the ridiculousness of this move, our wailings would fall on deaf ears. Discussion is pointless because it is upon us.

However, there are a few very important points that a lot of people do not understand and are, therefore, confused.

The most important aspect of the entire act is the fact that it only affects people joining the military on or after Aug. 1, 1986. Once again, it only affects those who enter into a contract with the U.S. governement on or after Aug. 1, 1986.

So, to further clarify who is affected by the new system: If you were in the Army or if you had signed an enlistment contract or a Reserve Officer Training Corps program contract before Aug. 1, you are not affected. Also, those attending the U.S. Military Academy at West Point before Aug. 1 are not affected. Another important point is that those soldiers who are considered "prior service" who come back into the Army after Aug. 1 are not affected by the change.

Only those people who enter into their origianl contract with the Army on or after Aug. 1 are affected by the changes.

Highlighting cultural differences never brings people together

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas correspondent

Sept. 14 through 20 marks the 18th year that National Hispanic Heritage week has been observed throughout the Department of Defense.

The observance is but one of several events over the year designed to raise the awareness of the general population of the contributions by members of specific groups to American culture and history.

That's the sort of cosmic purpose of this type of event . . . to raise awareness. To what extent that purpose is achieved depends on the effectiveness of the information put out during the observance. These events also depend on the preconceived images brought into the event.

America is said to be the "Great Melting Pot," although at times it appears that the flame under the pot isn't putting out enough heat to melt a stick of butter.

To make a melting pot work, you almost have to lose the cultural identity of one group or combine the cultural identities of different groups.

If handled properly, special awareness activities can definitely highlight contributions of ethnic groups to our society. Our scientists, leaders, politicans and heroes have ascended from all walks of life . . . from all races, colors, sexes and creeds.

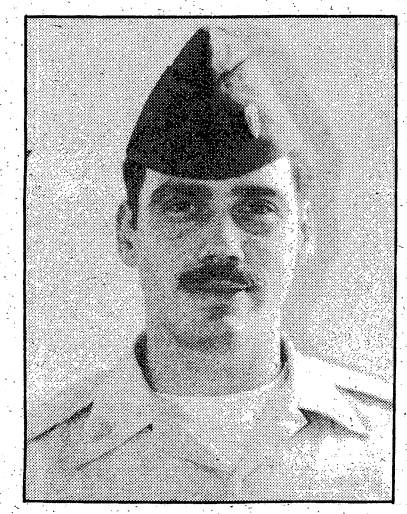
Many of the special awareness events however, highlight unique cultural features or ethnic differences instead of the "melting" together of cultures.

The lesson should be clear. "Different" is always "different." Highlighting differences never brings people, neighborhoods, cultures or nations together.

We are all "Americans." We all contribute to our country and — at Fort Benning and the surrounding community — our military, civil servants and family members.

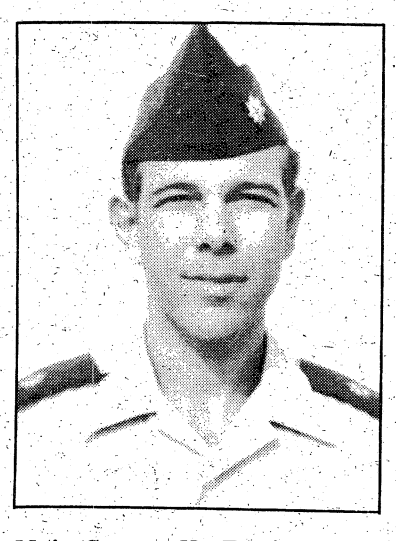
It doesn't matter if we are female or male, active Army, Reserve component or Department of the Army civilian.

The goal of any awareness month, week or day should be to say that individual "A" was a great American who was also "green." If we say individual "A" was a great "green" who was also an American, we will never be able to fulfill the dream of truly becoming the melting pot of the world.

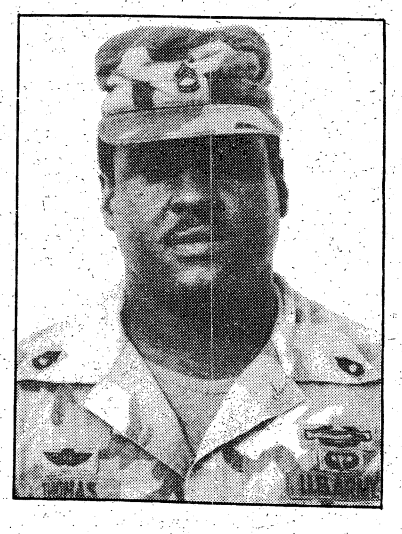


We can shape that next generation of Americans today.

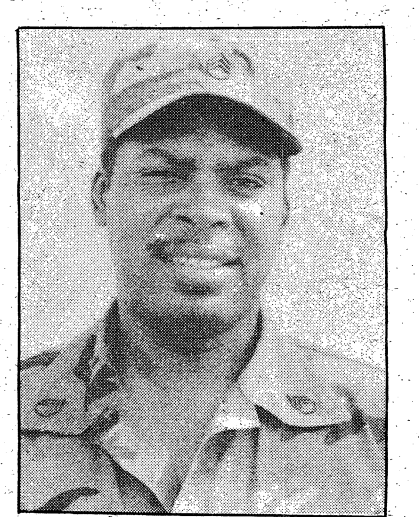
Various voices



Hispanic Heritage Week begins Sunday throughout the Department of Defense. Why do you feel it's important to recognize soldiers of Hispanic decent?



Mauricia Padilla, family member "These soldiers should be recognized because they try so hard and they want to feel like they are a part of the community."



SP4 Anthony Payne, Headquarters Co. 1st. Battalion, The School Brigade "Because these soldiers are here defending a country they wouldn't normally have an alliance to — but they do. For that they should be recognized."

Maj. George H. Ferris, U. S. Army School of the Americas "It very important to recognize them because of their outstanding contributions and efforts in the realization of the Army's mission."

SFC Frank Thomas Jr. Tactical Leadership Branch, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade. "I think they should recognize everybody. They're serving our country they deserve the respect like everyone else."

SSgt. Benny L. Nelson, Headquarters Detachment, 197th Support Batallion, 197th Infantry Brigade "I think that all nationalities reguardless of race should be recognized. It lets them feel like they are a part of today's world."

Op-Ed

Former smoker shares reasons for quitting

by Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

"That's it. I've finally had enough! My life is going up in smoke and it is time to extinguish the fire."

These were my thoughts as I examined my smoking habits and how I became the "Leader of the Pack" with my helpless addiction to cigarettes.

I was probably in one of my crises that seem to occur weekly, when a friend said "Here try one of these, it'll calm your nerves." It was a filterless cigarette and tasted awful.

So, later I tried a "light" cigarette with a filter and the light headedness was so enjoyable that I lit another one.

Within a few months I had graduated to regular cigarettes — you know, the ones in the hard red and white box that cowboys in the magazines smoke? They looked so cool. "I'm not going to mess with them wimpy smokes anymore," I told myself one day after trying a smoke from a friend's hard pack.

I should have seen the warning signs. But, I didn't. Before I realized it, I was buying two packs a day.

I felt pretty good. My weight was finally at a comfortable 123 and because all my friends smoked, nobody commented on the fact that I probably smelled like a walking ashtray.

I could never understand how people could smoke more than two packs a day.

I figured it takes about 20 minutes to smoke one cigarette. That would add up to about three cigarettes an hour. The average person is awake 16 hours a day. At this rate, a person could only smoke 48 cigarettes a day. With a few minutes between to breathe some fresh air, two and a half packs a day would have to be maximum.

I had to ask myself how someone as busy as I was could possibly smoke three packs a day.

I was starting to feel the pressure financially and from my friends who were beginning to quit.

Then the ugly photos of the black lung started to grace my television screen. To top it off, John Wayne croaked. One of cowboys I thought was so cool was cold!

I was in my fifth year of "indulging" when the hacking began. My weight was down to a slim 116 pounds. I realized that my weight loss was caused by my loss of appetite, which was caused by the tastelessness of food, which was caused by smoking.

It was about this time that I toyed with the thought of quitting.

Cutting down was useless because a crisis would arise (sometimes fabricated to give me an excuse to light up) and I would give in to the compulsion.

I started reading articles on "how to stop smoking." I remember one of them referring to the fact that the smoker should be completely disgusted before making the attempt to stop. So I waited a few more weeks. I continued to smoke and hack. Then one night I figured out that $84 a month was going up in smoke.

Then, I got really tired of it all.

It was Nov. 14, 1983. I remember the day well. It was midnight. I had awakened to smoke a cigarette (I was doing that lately) and realized I was completely out. I didn't even have a butt left. Now, I decided, was the time to do something.

I decided to combine a number of techniques I had read about and formulated a plan to quit.

I went through my apartment and dumped, cleaned and hid all the ashtrays. Then I went back to bed and decided that eight hours of sleep would be a good head-start on the first 24 hour period.

I knew that if I could just make it through the first day I could quit for good.

Then I began a juice fast. This was supposed to flush the nicotine out of my body. I began with orange juice, then papaya and then whatever juice I could get my hands on. I didn't eat any solid foods but drank all the liquids I wanted to, trying to stay away from caffeine.

As the day wore on so did my nerves.

I kept as busy as I could. I worked harder at my job. Then when it was getting to the point where I couldn't stand it anymore I finally started praying. "I haven't got anything to loose," I told myself.

I appealed to a "higher power" and asked for help in removing the compulsion.

Much to my surprise, the next morning rolled around and I was smoke-free. I had made it a full 24 hours without a cigarette!

It has been three years since that day and I have never even had a puff of a cigarette since. I still occasionally crave a cigarette, but that is becoming rarer as time passes.

Sometimes I'm so grateful that I had reached the point so low that there was nowhere to go but up. Thank God it wasn't up in smoke!

197th soldiers face test of mech gunnery skills

by B.A. Souerwine
Co.C, 1st Bn., 58th Infantry

"Charlie two zero, this is Charlie six — Sit-Rep, over.

Charlie six, this is Charlie two zero. I am engaging one BMP in the open, 1500 meters north of CP eight, over.

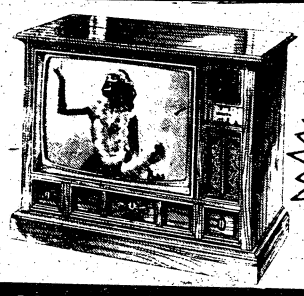
Roger two zero. Hold that position until second platoon sets up in the overwatch, over.

Wilco Charlie six. Charlie two zero out."

Last week, Company C, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry conducted mechanized gunnery training on Fort Benning's Ware Range. The complex consists of a tactical maneuver course originally designed for gunnery exercises with the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle.

Using M113 Armored Personnel Carriers, as did Charlie Company, presents a challenge to both leaders and soldiers.

They faced a total of 15 stationary and moving target areas representing enemy vehicles, weapons and infantry soldiers. Targets ranged from 150 to 2,850 meters away.



The course is designed to test the skills of all the members of a mechanized rifle squad utilizing its organic weapons. Evaluators ride on the tracks with the squads as safeties and controllers.

Acting as opposing force new role for 197th troops

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Soldiers from Company D, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, returned to "home soil" on Fort Benning last week after a month as part of the Opposing Force at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.

The Company joined the 6th Battalion, 31st Infantry, in battles using Soviet and Warsaw Pact weapons and equipment.

Units from the 197th Infantry Brigade have faced the NTC OPFOR before as a rotational, or "friendly" force. However, joining the side of the OPFOR taught the 3-7th soldiers many lessons.

"The OPFOR uses a lot of deception in their fighting," said 1st Lt. John Brown, Co. D executive officer. "Now that we know how they fight, we will have some insight when we face them again as part of a rotational task force."

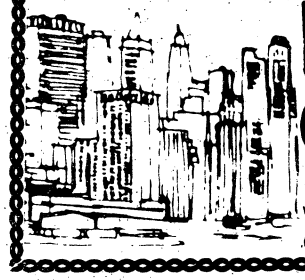
The company also benefitted from the OPFOR's dismounted infantry tactics.

"As a mechanized infantry unit, we don't get as much dismounted training," Brown added.

In addition to the unit's newly gained knowledge of Soviet tactics, it also gained some hands-on experience with Warsaw Pact weapons and vehicles that the OPFOR uses in the desert battles.

During a live-fire phase of the training, the OPFOR set up a fire and maneuver course. The Co. D soldiers ran the course using such weapons as the Soviet AK-47 rifle.

"We also got a good deal of land navigation in the desert environment," Brown said. "Distances can be very deceiving in the desert, so the experience is valuable to soldiers."



During the force-on-force phase of the desert exercise, Co. D soldiers faced units from the 194th Armored Brigade, Fort Knox, Ky.

Rappelling offers twist during 36th Eng. exercise

Maj. William H. Ward joins in on a class given by the Air Assault School first sergeant.

Night, convoy moves two lessons learned during rugged six-day training schedule

Story and photos by Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

"Practice makes perfect" might well have been the motto for soldiers from the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group during the unit's most recent field problem.

Fort Rucker, Ala. was the destination as the convoy pulled away Aug. 21 with a rugged training schedule planned for the six-day field training exercise.

The exercise was the Company's first under the command of Capt. Darrell W. Johnson. Johnson arrived in July.

According to Johnson, the highlight of the FTX was the night move Aug. 23. The company commander was very pleased with the smoothness and safety demonstrated by the performance of the soldiers throughout the move.

Many of the soldiers said the most exciting and challenging training of the FTX was rappelling training at the Air Assault School at Fort Rucker. Along with 150 students from Advanced Individual Training, HHC soldiers were given classes on fitting a swiss seat and the proper procedures for rappelling.

The grand finale of the rappelling training was a trip down the 35-foot tower following a relaxing and comical demonstration of the "do's and don'ts" of rappelling.

The rest of the FTX was not all fun and games, however. Soldiers spent countless hours learning to set up tents and camouflage vehicles properly.

Soldiers also endured a seven-mile tactical road march and a class on properly donning and exchanging MOPP gear.

"Field duty in the 36th Engineer Group is the most physically intensive training I've ever experienced outside of commanding a "leg" infantry rifle company in Korea," said Maj. William H. Ward, executive officer of the 36th.

Pvt. 2 Michelle Campbell displays the proper breaking procedure on her way down a rappelling wall.

Roughton admits he's more comfortable in his role as a rifleman at Company C, or preparing to move out on a Ranger mission than attending awards dinners.

He plans to reenlist and said 10 years from now, he'd like to be assigned to the Ranger Department at Dahlonega, Ga., and building his dream home on some property he owns nearby.

2nd ITB

In its mission to train quality infantry soldiers Company B, 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade keeps excelling. On Sept. 2, Co. B set a new Army Training Center record during Basic Rifle Marksmanship qualification.

At Malone 16, the record fire range, the 204 soldiers knocked down an average of 29.13 targets.

In May the scoring procedure for rifle marksmanship was changed. Before when the soldier missed a target because of a weapon malfunction or he just did not see it, he received alibis. During alibis the targets the soldier missed would pop up and he got to expend his leftover rounds and the targets hit would count in the final score.

Now the qualification is computer graded and the soldier receives no alibis, a target missed for any reason remains a miss. The system is the most accurate way the Army has to determine the quality of a marksman.

In addition Co. B had 22 soldiers fire expert, achieving 36 or more target hits out of 40. The previous high was 14 experts in one company. Pvt.1 Timothy Boldery and Pvt.1 Russell Prudhomme, both from the 4th platoon, had perfect scores of 40.

36th Engr. Gp.

In July Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion coordinated with The Follow-Me golf course to accomplish a greatly needed dredging mission.

On the back nine of the lakeside course, two 12 ½-ton crawler cranes removed excess sludge and material from the bottom of the lakes to increase the depth of the ponds, which will allow for a better watering system.

Upon removal of the sediment, the Company used its 20-ton dump trucks to haul it off to a refuse point.

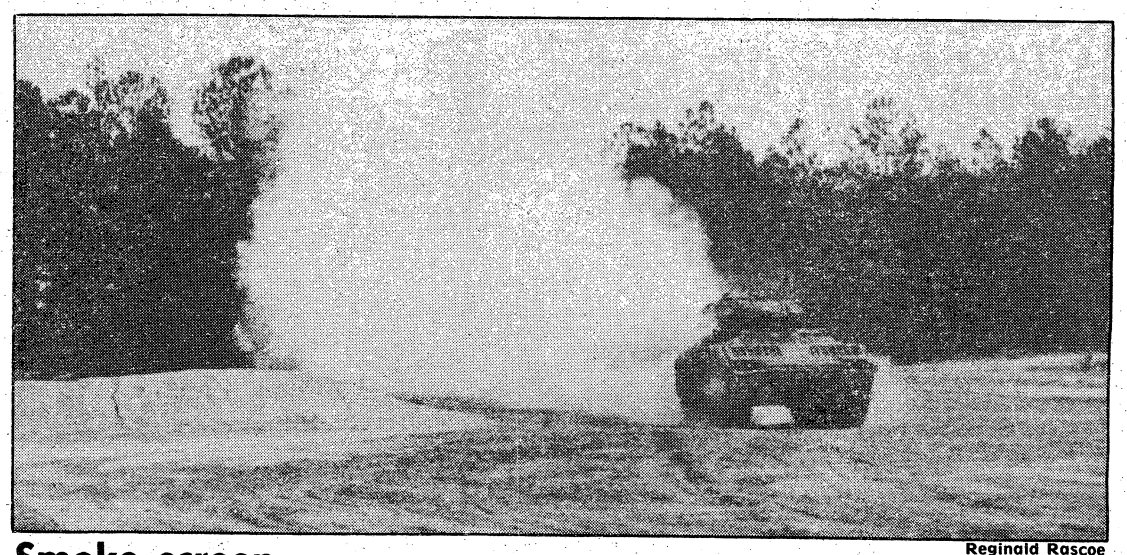
community service operation and allows the military to assist the community on improving one of its facilities.



It also gave the soldiers from Alpha Company critical training experience that improves the non-commissioned officers' managing skills and gives the soldiers operations and maintenance practice.

The 586th Engineer Company (AFB) conducted a company field training exercise at Fort Benning recently.

During the FTX the soldiers learned to camoflauge for an aerial perspective as each platoon had an opportunity to view

Additionally, many infantry-oriented missions were conducted as squads took turns agressing the perimeter, initiating a reaction force, executing night patrols and participating in a nine-mile road march which culminated the exercise.

Training was effective and morale remained high all week as each gained valuable experience and self confidence. The Planning, Logistics ad Mess Support was exceptional. The Company began to develop the focus necessary to excel in an ARTEP and looks forward to the next time they can prove themselves in the field. — Thomas Perry, 586th Engineer Company.

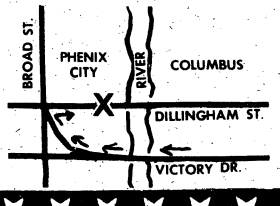
Korea-bound soldiers to get Hepatitis shots

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Beginning Oct. 1 all soldiers making a permanent-change-of-station move to Korea will be vaccinated against hepatitis before their departure.

According to Dr. (Lt. Col.) J. Pitt Tomlinson, the chief of the Preventive Medicine Service here, approximately 125 soldiers leave Fort Benning each month headed for Korea.

"The hepatitis vaccine has always been a requirement for those at high risk, like medical or dental personnel," Tomlinson said. "But now there is an increased risk of developing hepatitis in Korea."



The local policy calling for the vaccinations in on line with an Armywide decision that also goes into effect Oct. 1.

According to Dr. (Lt. Col.) Ernest T. Takafugi from the Office of the Army Surgeon General it has been determined that a significant number of soldiers assigned to Korea have contracted the hepatatis infection.

"Each year, Army hospitals diagnose some 200 to 300 cases of hepatitis among active-duty personnel," Takafugi said.

The Army's cause for concern, however, goes beyond this number. "Only one in five soldiers infected with the hepatitis virus shows outward symptoms. This means that as many as 1,500 soldiers are infected each year, and most don't even know it," Takafugi said.

"It is this group of undiagnosed soldiers that we're most worried about. Those with the 'silent' infections are more likely to become chronic carriers of the virus," Takafugi explained. "As a result, they could develop chronic liver infections. They also could unknowingly transmit the virus."

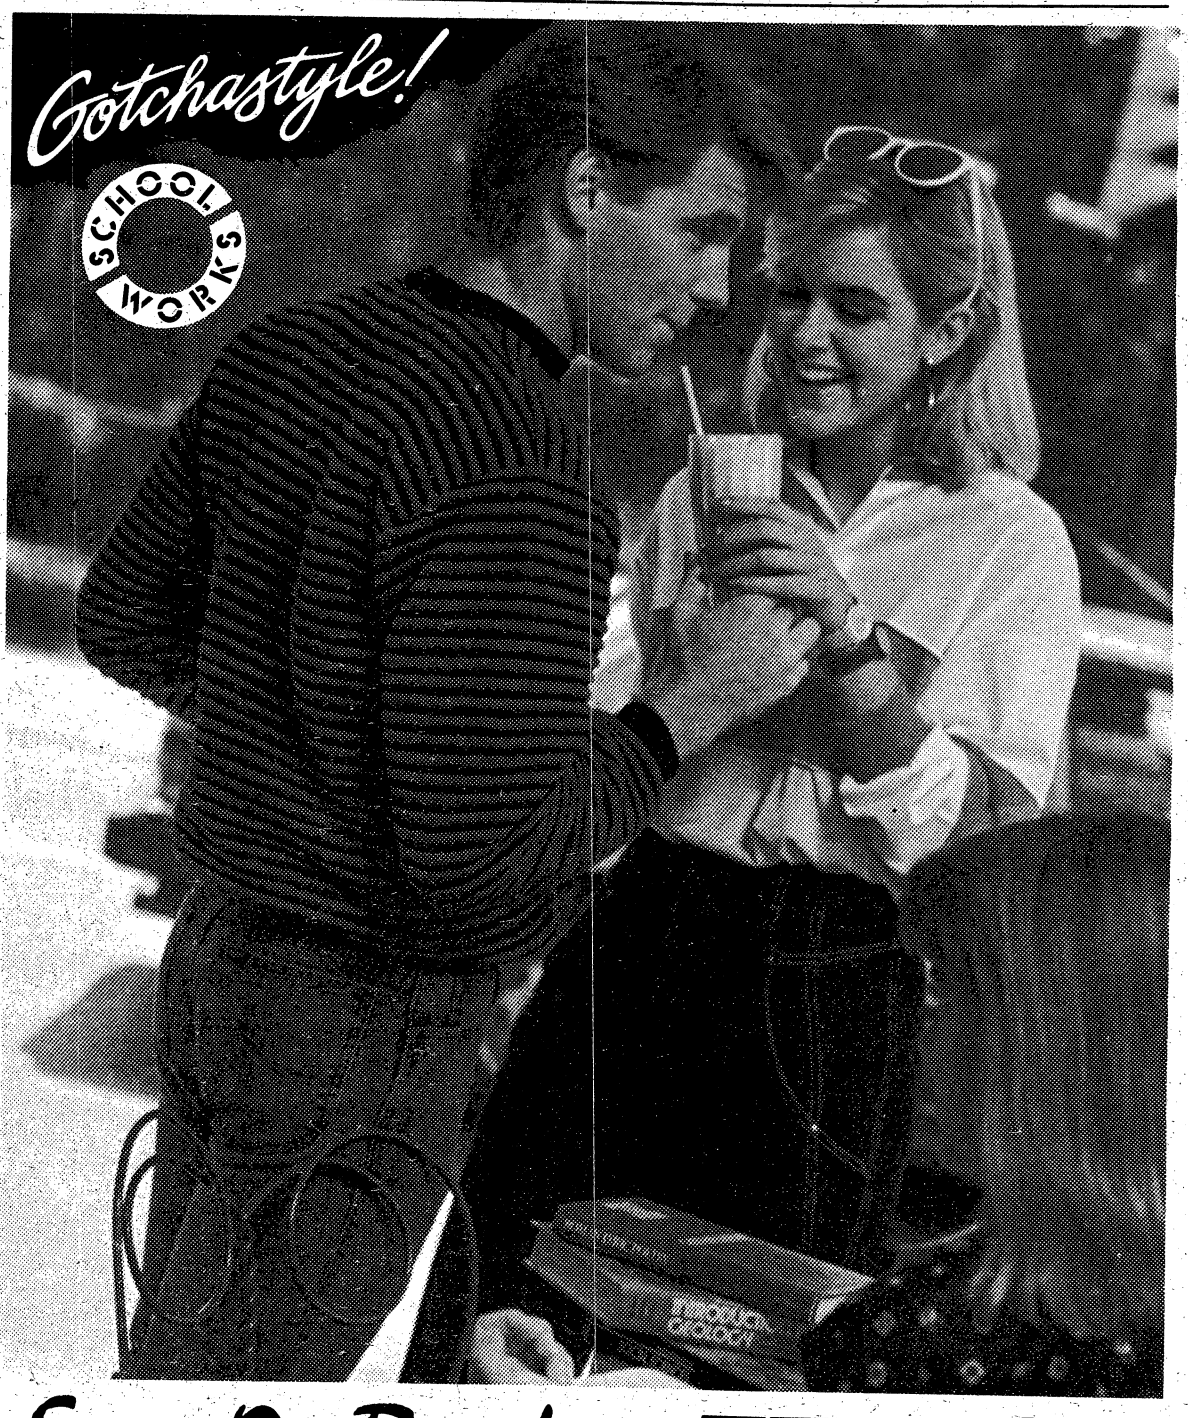
By requiring the vaccinations, the Army is attempting to offer some degree of protection to the soldiers assigned there, Tomlinson said.

Tomlinson said that vaccination involves three injections spaced 30 days apart. Soldiers must begin the series early enough to have completed at least two of the shots before departing. The third shot may, if necessary, be given after arriving in Korea.

Fort Benning soldiers bound for Korea should take their medical record and individual shot record to the Immunization Clinic in Room 942 at Martin Army Community Hospital after Oct. 1 to begin the three-shot series.

Tomlinson explained that the intradermal method of vaccination would be used to administer the vaccine. "It has been proven that the intradermal method, actually putting the vaccine into the skin rather than into the muscle, is nearly as effective and only a fraction of the amount of vaccine must be used."

According to Takafugi, it is estimated it will cost about $264,000 a year to vaccinate those presently covered under the policy.



Command-sponsored family members accompanying a soldier to Korea or civilians offered a position there may voluntarily receive the vaccination.

Upcoming events at the Officers' Club include "Italian nite buffet" in the Lexington Room, 6 to 8:30 p.m., Sept. 16 and "All Night Disco" in the I-Bar, Sept. 20. Don't forget the Concord Lounge is open Monday from 6 to 10 p.m., and live entertainment in "Flicks" with Mike Delmonte Tuesday through Saturday.

One of the biggest events of the season is coming up this weekend at the Follow-Me Golf Course — the Annual Member-Guest Tournament. Deadline for entry is 6 p.m. today. Entry fee of $80 includes cart both days, five prizes per flight, lunch both days and a player party 5 to 7 p.m. Sunday. There will be additional prizes for closest to the hole on all pars 3. Sign up at the Pro Shop.

On Sept. 19, 5 to 10 p.m. the Golf Club is offering a seafood buffet, all you can eat for $12.95.

On Saturday night, the Main NCO Club has two-for-one steak night, Disco in Ballroom, Latino in End of Hall Lounge and Night Train in the Golden Touch Lounge.

The Hidden Door Club on Main Post features rock video disco seven nights a week. We still have the big bingo jackpots on Sunday afternoons, Tuesday and Thursday nights at the Main NCO Club ($5,000) and Monday and Wednesday nights at Sand Hill ($3,500).

Remember, community breakfast is served Monday through Friday from 6:30 to 9:30 a.m. at the Main NCO Club and is open to all grades including civilian employees. You can't beat the price! Put the ticket stub with your name on it into the jar for a drawing each Monday for breakfast or lunch free for one week.

The young Americans bowling alliance, ages 6 to 18, will be organizing on Sept. 13, at 9:30 a.m. at Main Post. The leagues will bowl Saturday morning at 10 p.m. All bowlers will receive one or more awards. Coaches are also available for bowling instruction. An awards presentation cookout will be sponsored by the Bowling Center at the end of the leagues. To sign up, come by or call 545-4272. Lads and Lassies Mixed Doubles Bowling League will organize and bowl today at 7 p.m. Mall and Main Post Bowling Centers will organize the Annual Company Level Bowling League and Championship on Sept. 15. company commanders or unit A&R officers who wish to submit a team to represent their units should contact one of the bowling centers. Stop by either bowling center for a game of bowling made easy because accuscore is here in total color; you knock 'em down, we total 'em up.

The Recreation Centers Branch has musical equipment and instruments available for rental on a daily, weekly or monthly basis, which includes public address systems and spotlights along with woodwind, brass, percussion and string instruments. Active-duty and retired military and currently employed civilians are eligible for this service. Fees are very reasonable. Their mission sometimes re- ires the soldiers from Com- ny B, 43rd Engineers Battal- , 36th Engineer Group to be up their elbows in grease. And en they're not doing that you n find them busy around the otor pool taking inventories, airing vehicles and preparing the next mission.

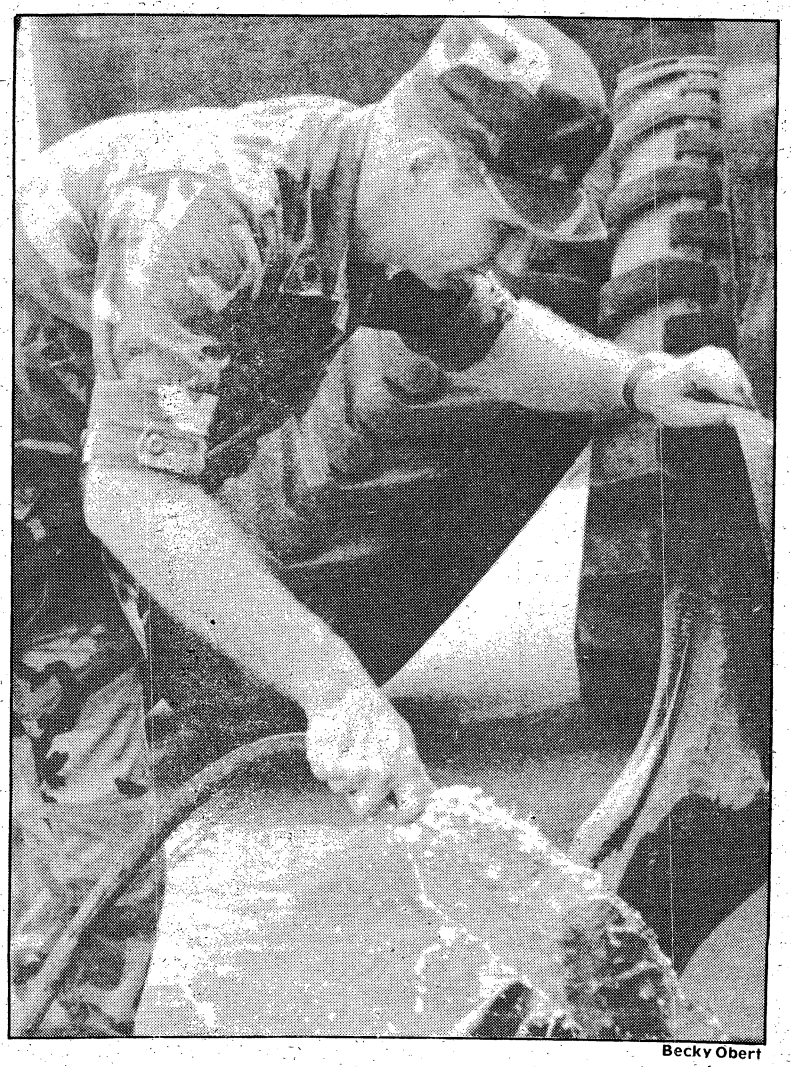
Since recently returning from nduras this company has su- sfully pulled its mission readi- ss back up to 80 percent in just natter of months, according to O 2 William R. Vanover, gineer equipment maintenance hnician and maintenance sec- n leader.

The unit, a combat heavy engi- er company, prides itself on mission of equipment repair l construction.

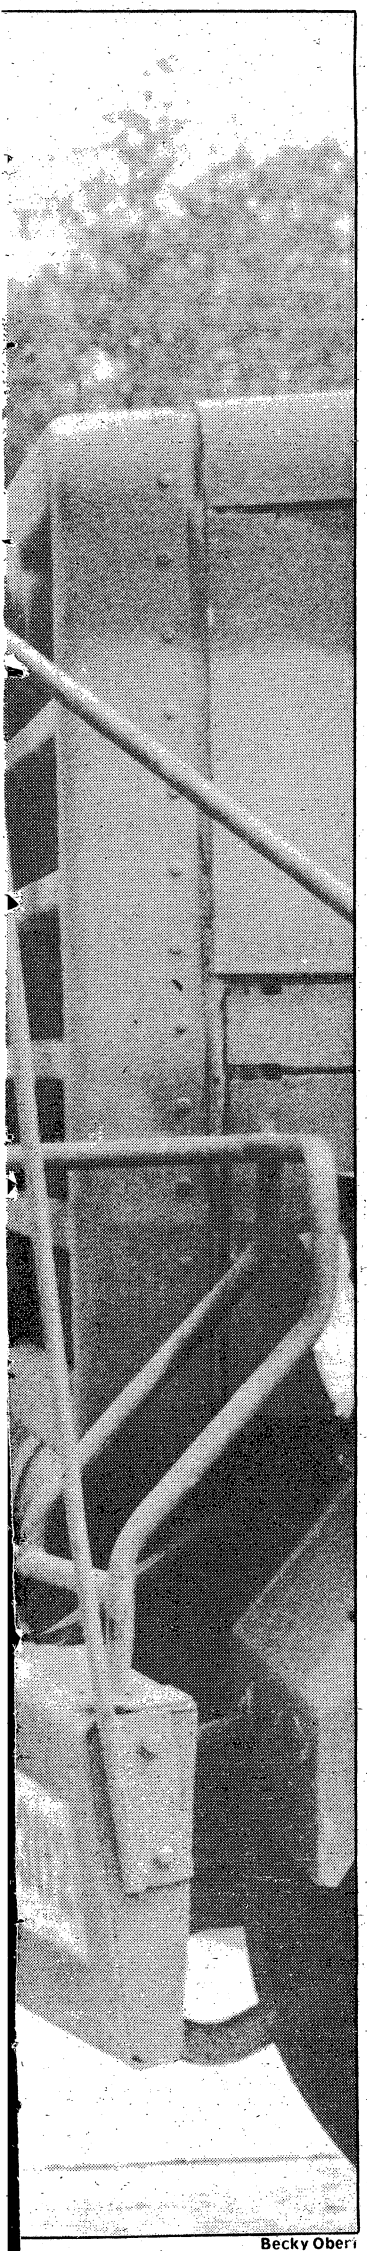
"We have the capabilities to go o jungles and build roads. We do just about any kind of construction work," Vanover said.



There are eight different specialities within the maintenance section. "We have someone here who can fix everything from chain saws, pumps and generators to construction equipment," Vanover said.

The unit's equipment is maintained and repaired by soldiers in four platoons. Two of those platoons are general construction. These soldiers specialize in plumbing, pipefitting, carpentry, and electrical repair.

One platoon specializes in earthmoving equipment, including 621 Cat Scrapers, 130-G Cat Graders, NW-24C Case Bucket Loaders, compacting equipment, M-920 tractors, 40 ton trailors and water distributors.



All in all the company supports 93 peices of equipment.

Right now the soldiers are busy preparing for their next mission. At any time they can be found up to their elbows in grease. But the soldiers of Company B are ready to go.

Hispanic worshippers add to religious community

by George Gonzalez
U.S. Army School of the Americas chaplain

Recently the Hispanic community at Fort Benning has grown.

Being very religious and cohesive, the Spanish-speaking people gather in large numbers (usually about 600 strong) to celebrate the Hispanic Mass (Misa Hispania) at the Sightseeing Road Chapel every Sunday at 9:30 a.m.

This energetic group forms a Catholic parish and takes responsibility for ministry under the leadership of their pastor.

During the services, singing spirited hymns and Latin tunes reminds everyone present of the colorful countries from which they come. The choir is under the direction of Sonia Barroso. This large volunteer group rehearses on Fridays and arrives at the chapel early Sunday morning to bring inspiration and extra vitality to the parishioners with their music.

Visitors also notice a well-trained group of alter servers, the cadets from various Latin countries, the lectors, the ushers, the speakers, plus a number of smiling ladies welcoming people at the doors and offering hymn books and bulletins.

The Liturgy Committee and Pastoral Committee have put forward some outstanding initiatives aimed at renewing faith and developing the community. There is even a Religious Education Program in Spanish for the children.

Even people who do not speak Spanish would enjoy the Spanish Mass.

Service set to remember POWs, MIAs

by James L. Langford
1st Infantry Training Brigade chaplain

To this date, 2,435 American soldiers remain unaccounted for in Southeast Asia.

We must not forget these soldiers and their families. It is imperative that the Christian community join together in prayer for our prisoners of war and those missing in action and support their families in every way possible. Soldiers need to understand that the American people stand by them and appreciate the committment and sacrifice they make in defense of our beloved nation.

The president and the Congress have set Sept. 19 as national POW/MIA Recognition Day. It is important that all Americans note this day as one of observance for the POW/MIAs and their loved ones.

A special service expressing this concern is scheduled on that day for 11 a.m. in Marshall Auditorium in Building 4. Plan now to join your friends within the Fort Benning community in remembering our POW/MIAs and their families.

Think about this. What is your reaction when you look upon our beautiful flag, rippling in the gentle breeze, or when you look upon the Statue of Liberty, the emblem of freedom to the oppressed and enslaved everywhere?

Are you thrilled when you hear our national anthem played? Do you thank God for the priceless, precious freedoms we have and for the material and spiritual blessings he has so bountifully bestowed upon us?

We can only hope and pray that through God's grace and official negotiations these 2,435 POW/MIAs will be accounted for and returned to their homeland.

If you know family members and relatives of POW/MIAs, why not call or write them?

Parenting classes help family life

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Systematic Training and Effective Parenting is a program being offered to parents in the Fort Benning community.

The U.S. Army Infantry Center Chaplain's Division is sponsoring the course at several Fort Benning locations to benefit all members of the Army community.

The program originated in Circle Pines, Minn. in 1976. More than 1 million parents have participated in STEP in the United States, Canada and other countries worldwide.

A survey of 1,300 STEP leaders reported that 88 percent of parents they trained noted positive changes in their family lives from the knowledge they gained through STEP.

Chaplain (Maj.) Robert White, from the Family Life Center of the Chaplain's Division is a STEP leader and Fort Benning's marriage and family therapist. He has trained the leaders who will head the classes being offered on Fort Benning.

The Kelley Hill Chapel will host a STEP course beginning Sept. 17. The group will meet on Wednesday at 7 p.m. to discuss such topics as encouragement, communication, responsibilities and decision making.

A STEP course especially designed for parents of teens will also begin Sept. 17 at the Family Life Center, Building 2606. The group will meet from 9 to 11 a.m.

The Family Life Center has information on all dates and locations For more information call 545-1760/5301.

"WE FEEL GOOD ABOUT LEAVING JAMAHL AT THE DAY-CARE CENTER BECAUSE THEY TREAT HIM LIKE HE'S THEIR OWN CHILD."

SSG Ken and SP4 Jacquie Farmer

"We never really considered leaving Jamahl with anyone except a private sitter. But our first visit to the new Child Development Center here at Fort Hood sure changed our minds.

"We know our son is well taken care of. So we can concentrate on our jobs without worrying about what he's doing.

"He learns, instead of just playing. He counts, sings, says his ABC's. And they teach him to be more independent.

"Jacquie and I have peace of mind when Jamahl's at the Center. They take care of him, and he's learning, and those are the two most important things."

The Army's Day-Care programs are making modern day-care facilities available to more children each day. And the quality of the "Caregivers" who attend the children has never been higher. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

El Gentio Hispanico son diversivo Americanos

por Marco Morales
y sra. Cheryl Watters
U.S. Army School of the Americas correspondents

La semana Nacional de Herencia Hispanica esta programada para celebrarse del 14 al 20 de septiembre a traves de todo el Ministerio de Defensa de los EE.UU.

El grupo de gente en los EE.UU. conocido combo hispanoamericanos es tan diverso como el arco iris proverbial. Los mexicano-americanos, americanos de sud y centro america, puertorriquenos, dominicanos, cubanos — tudos son hispanoamericanos que representan aproximadamente al 5 por ciento del Ejercito total de los EE.UU.

Compuesto principalmente de una mezcla de las culturas indias y espanolas, este grupo de gente personifica la herencia cultural de muchas civilizacones y razas.

La poblacion de mexico, por ejemplo, cuenta con mas de un 90 por ciento de mestizos — descendientes de los imperios Ateca y Maya qua debido al destino historico se mezclaron con los colonizadores espanoles y franceses, creando asi una nueva raza.

Aunque los hispanoamericanos tienen mucho en comun, cada grupo etnico tiene sus ideosincracias — los mexicanos americanos, chicanos, cubanos, puertorriquenos, o iberoamericans. La semana Nacional de Herencia Hispanica esta encaminada a fomentar el conocimiento y el entendimiento de la rica cultura hispana. Fue aprobada por el Congreso estadounidense en 1968.

La mayoria de los paises latinoamericanos festejan sus aniversarios de independencia desde agosto hasta diciembre.

Por proclamacion presidencial, la semana en que cae el 16 de septiembre ha sido designado como la semana Nacional de Herencia Hispana desde 1968.

En previas guerras que han involucrado a loss EE.UU., los hispanoamericanos han defendido a su patria (los EE.UU.) y a la bandera con orgullo y valor.

Los hispanoamericanos representan el grupo mas grande de minorias etnicas en los EE.UU. que ha recibido la Medalla de Honor por valentia en combate, con un total de 39 recibidores. La Medalla de Honor es la mas alta condecoracion de las fuerzas armadas estadounidenses.

El idioma espanol se habla mundialmente por aproximadamente 300 milliones de personas y es el idioma mas comunmente hablado despues del china e ingles.

Los hispano continuan desempenando un papel importante en el desarrollo de los EE.UU. Como lideres estan muy orgullosos de su cultura e idioma lo cual fomenta un fuerte sentido de justicia y compasion que finalmente fortalece el sistema democratico.

Los hispano no son tan recienllegados a la region del sudeste de los EE.UU. como lo cree mucha gente. Los hispanos poblaron la Florida y Georgia medio siglo ates de la llegada de los peregrinos a Massachussetts, y establecieron misiones en lo que presentemente es Nuevo Mexico, mas de 150 anos antes de la guerra de la independencia.

Hispanics diverse group of Americans

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas correspondent

The group of people known as Hispanic - Americans in the U.S are as diverse as the proverbial rainbow. Mexican - Americans, South and Central Americans, Puerto Ricans, Dominicans, Cubans — all Hispanic Americans who represent about 5 percent of the total active Army force.

The common bond shared by Hispanics is the Spanish language. Hispanic Americans are a fusion of the old and new worlds.

The week containing the 16th day in September has been designated as National Hispanic Heritage week since 1968 by presidential proclamation.

In past wars involving the U.S., Hispanic Americans have defended the "Stars and Stripes" with pride and courage.

Hispanic Americans represent the highest Medal of Honor recipients for bravery in combat than any other ethnic minority with a total of 39. The Medal of Honor is the highest U.S military decoration.

Spanish is spoken by about 300 million people worldwide and is the third most common language following Chinese and English.

Hispanics continue to play an important role in the development of America. As leaders, they take pride in their culture and language which nurtures a strong sense of justices and compassion ultimatey strengthening our democratic system.

Hispanics aren't as new to the Southeastern U.S. as many might think. Hispanics founded settlements in Florida and Georgia half a century before the Pilgrims landed in Massachusetts, and were homesteading in what is now New Mexico more than 150 years before the War of Independence.

Commander's comments

In recognition of Hispanic Americans and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, the week of Sept. 14 through 20 is proclaimed "National Hispanic Heritage Week" at Fort Benning, Ga.

This year's theme is "Hispanic Soldiers: Committed to Army Values," and marks the 8th anniversary of this observance.

Hispanic Americans have contributed to a wealth of accomplishments in all facets of American life.

Of particular note in the history of the U.S. Army is retired MSgt. Roy Benevidez, the most recent recipient of the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Benevidez is but one in a long and distinguished line of Hispanic soldiers who have been committed to the values that made this nation strong. Hispanic cultures are remarkable and very much a part of our society.

All personnel at Fort Benning and in surrounding communities are encouraged to participate in the observance through the planned activities by units, staff and other agencies.

"My mother calls me 'my daughter the mechanic,'" says Anne Shaw, Faith Middle School's industrial arts teacher. "I surprised myself and my family in my junior year of college when I began taking auto mechanics and woodworking courses and loving every minute of it."

Shaw, who joined the Faith Middle School faculty this year after teaching industrial arts at Coosa High School in Rome, Ga. for two years, comes from an academically oriented family.

Her father is a professor of music at Auburn University and her mother worked for many years in the education department at Auburn and now edits books.

Shaw describes her high school and college programs, prior to her junior year of college, as "very academic." She had a strong math and drafting background, was a member of various honor societies, and was planning a career in architecture. Her interest in her industrial arts course work changed her plans, and she graduated from Auburn University with a degree in Industrial Arts Education.

Shaw's industrial arts curriculum is structured so that students are given increased responsibility in each grade level. Her program is designed to allow students many opportunities to succeed, to question and to suggest new ideas as they create.

Sixth grade students who choose industrial arts take the course for six weeks. Shaw presents first time experiences; students learn to use machinery safely while also learning basic design and create wooden puzzles.

Seventh grade industrial arts students participate in the program for nine weeks. They build rockets from cork, cardboard and plastic and learn the basic aerodynamics involved in rocketry. The highlight of the exercise is the rocket launchings.

Eighth graders who choose industrials arts take the course for 18 weeks. Shaw and her students design and build race cars using a lawn mower engine. They also design and build race car models within specifications; as they build and finally race their models using C02 cartridge, students study elements of design and determine which designs are suited to race cars, station wagons and jeeps.

Shaw gears the industrial arts program to meet present and future needs of students who vary greatly in their academic abilities, mechanical abilities and plans for future careers.

Fort Benning softball player vies for slot on All-Army team roster

The Bayonet sports writer

When the trial camps opened in Fort Huachuca, Ariz., for the 1986 All-Army Softball Team, 39 players from a field of more than 300 applicants competed, one of whom was SSgt. Daryl Niles of Fort Benning.

Though Niles placed 16th, catching the last cut of the season, he accepted the trial camp as training for next year's All-Army team.

"This was my first attempt at the All-Army team. And I realize that the team is made up primarily of veteran players, those who have either made the team previously or those who have attended the trial camp," said Niles.

Niles' rookie season is over and he has started working on the hustle needed to become a member of the next All-Army team.

It was Niles' first play at the All-Army level, where he finished with a .496 batting average, but he is a veteran on the baseball diamond.

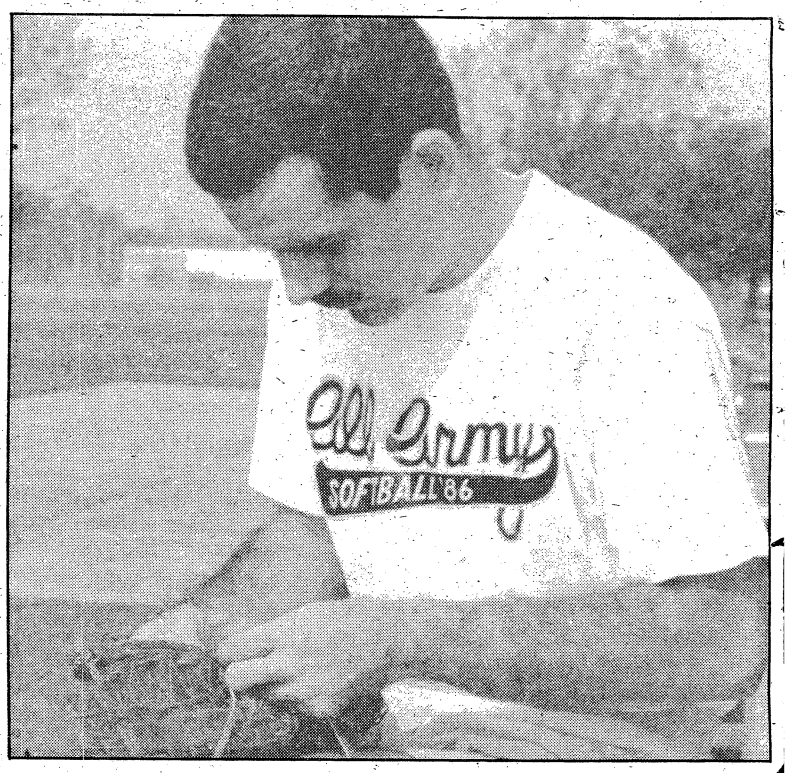
Beginning his organized softball career in high school, Niles joined the military 10 years ago and played in Vicenza, Italy and on the Fort Bragg Post Softball Team.

The 1986 All-Army team consisted of 15 members, six of whom were rookies.

The trial camp opened with 39 players from Army installations all around the world, with daily cuts until that final day, when Niles felt the cutting edge.

"In the first week, nine players were cut," said Niles. "Then steadily two players were dropped each day until Aug. 9, when he made me his final cut."

During those three weeks, training was intense for all of the potential All-Army teammates.



"I played more softball during the trial camp than I have played in the two years here at Fort Benning," said Niles.

"The day started each morning at 6:30 with physical training, followed by three hours of practice before lunch and three more hours after lunch. We played two games each night. On the weekends we played in tournaments against the local Pheonix City, Ariz. league," said Niles.

Niles is a drill sergeant at Company E, 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, and though they had a company team, Niles did not get to play a lot of softball.

"It is a misconception that once someone makes the All-Army team, that play softball is all that they do," said Niles. "Though I love softball, it will always come second because I have a job to do here as a drill sergeant, and that will always come first.

Niles could not be physically present for the Interservice competition where the Army team placed third behind the Air Force and Navy teams. But, Fort Benning looks to see the drilling outfielder in next year's championships.

SSgt. Daryl Niles makes a few adjustments to his softball glove before practice.

Troop shapes up for boxing tryouts

The Bayonet sports writer

The Department of the Army recognizes top athletes through the All-Army Sports Program, which Fort Benning contributes to in a big way in most sports.

Sports included in the program include men's and women's team and individual events. The most common sports, however, involve the formation of an All-Army team. The All-Army team is selected during a trial camp where athletes from Army installations throughout the world vie for positions.

Fort Benning has a new soldier and a new opportunity to be represented on the All-Army Boxing Team.

Pvt. 2 Denard C. Trapp, from the 2nd Brigade of the 10th Mountain Division, has been accepted to participate in the boxing trial camp set for January at Fort Hood, Texas.

Although the 178-pound fighter has been in the Army for less than a year, he has been around the boxing game for more than 15 years.

"I have been boxing actively since I was 12, but started training at 5 years old with my brother-in-law, Freddie Boynton, who was a middleweight golden glove champion.

Since that time, Trapp has boxed with more professionals. Included in that list is Greg Evers, currently fighting among the New Jersey professional ranks, and Adam Garland, who fought in the recent Goodwill Games.

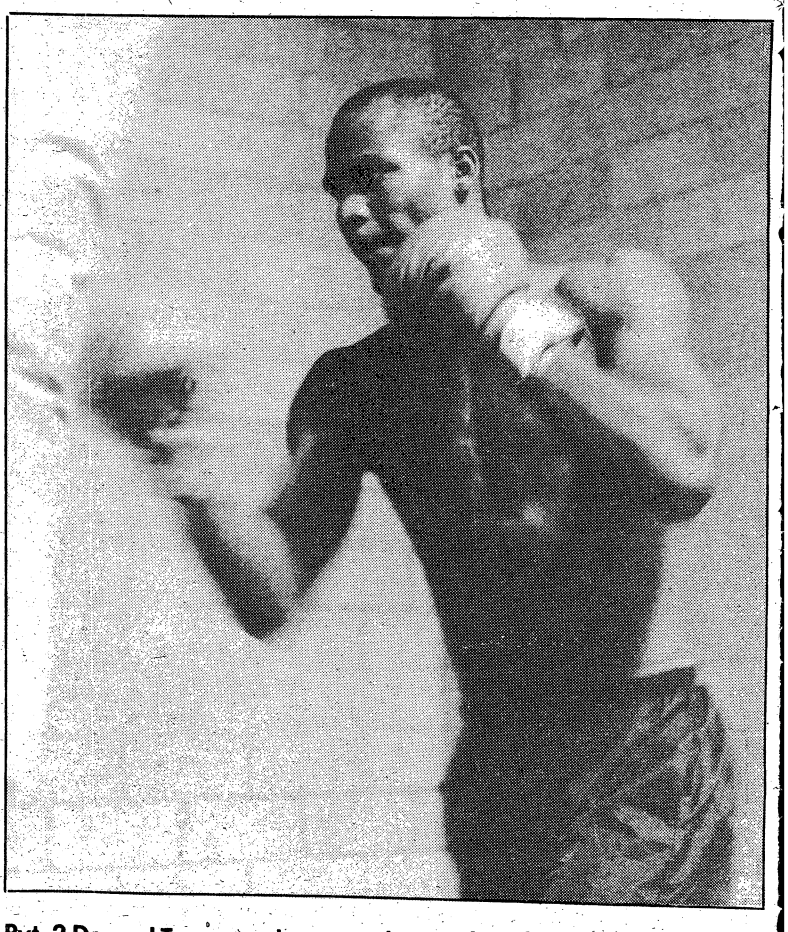
Trapp has attained his own string of titles since the days of sparing in the gyms of New Jersey .

In 1985, he was the Light-heavy Weight Golden Glove Champion , winner of the American Boxing Federation Tournament and winner of the Garden State Games.

Trapp won a second-round TKO in a recent tournament at Fort Stewart, Ga., and is currently training for the upcoming USAIC Tournament.

"I like to run at least four miles a day and spend about three hous in the gym," said Trapp.

Trapp's routine includes working on the speed and heavy bags. But, his primary concern is working on technique.



"I concentrate on not telegraphing punches, slipping punches and keeping my feet in the right position for the heaviest punch," Trapp said.

Trapp also realizes that technique will not be the only factor in a victory.

"I rely on both technique and endurance because someone is going to get tired. It is when you are tired that you must keep the technique together," he explained.

Trapp looks forward to representing Fort Benning and hopes the installation will be proud to represent him.

"I'll be there to win," said Trapp. "I'll be using my favorite punch: the one that lands.

Pvt. 2 Denard Trapp works out on the punching bag.

Post boxing program needs boxers, trainers

Those participating in the Fort Benning Boxing Program now have two locations where training is available.

In addition to the Harmony Church Field House location, Main Post's Briant Wells Field House is also equipped with a regulation size ring.

The Fort Benning Boxing Program has tenatively scheduled a full boxing card at Gowdy Field Sept. 26.

Barracudas 'gobble up' competitors at recent meet

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The Fort Benning Barracudas were ferocious, as they topped the Interservice Youth Invitational swim meet Saturday at the Youth Activities pool.

More than 150 youths, representing the Army, Air Force and Navy, competed in the 90-event swim meet.

The Barracudas stored up 592 points with the closest team, the Fort McClellan Marlins, gathering 274 points. Third place went to the Fort Stewart Dolphins with 235.

Tyndall AFB Dolphins, Moody AFB Blue Phantoms and Pensacola Navy Base finished with scores of 216, 199, and 197, respectively.

Green Waves lose hard-fought battle with Smith Panthers

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The Smith Station Panthers rolled over the Spencer High Green Waves in a 21-7 highjacking Friday at Doughboy Stadium.

The Panthers' opening drive went 67 yards, resulting in a Tony Heard touch down.

Earl Clark, Spencer defensive back, almost ended the Panther drive when he popped a fumble free, only to be recovered by Panther guard, Jody Floyd.

On Spencer's first series of downs, the Green Waves' offense could only march backwards.

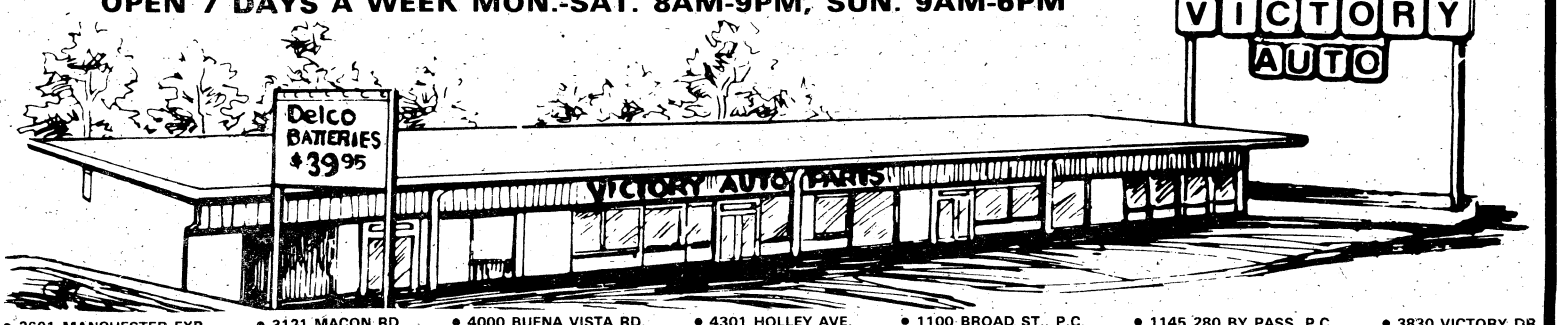
Fourth down brought the punt team to the field. The first 30-yard punt was called back with a flag on the play.

On the following punt, a broken play sent Randall Asburry, Spencer punter, 66 yards to a Green Wave touchdown. At the end of the first period it was tied 7-7.

Asburry kept the Panthers against the wall but they continued to claw their way down field.

It was late in the third period before the Panthers scored again.

Tony Heard was there once again for the 19-yard touchdown pass, giving the Panthers a 14-7 edge at the end of the third.



Late in the fourth period, quarterback Rick Chancey flipped a 26-yard touchdown pass to Wayne Washington to bring Smith Station steaming to a 21-7 victory.

Ask the 'judge'

Editor's note: These questions are inquiries that the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be considered a substitute for advise from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

Legal Assistance

Q: I went to a car dealer and found a new car I wanted to buy. I gave my salesman $100 as a deposit and signed a purchase agreement. Now I have changed my mind and decided not to buy the car. Can I get my deposit back?

A: Don't count on it. When you give a dealer a deposit on an automobile that you have agreed to purchase, the dealer is taking that car off the market and cannot sell it to anyone else. If you decide that you don't want the car, the dealer will take your deposit as damages, the logic being that if he had not held the car for you, he could have sold it to someone else.

The purchase agreement should explain that if the purchase does not occur because of some fault of the buyer, the deposit will be forfeited.

Be sure to read the fine print before you sign anything, and if you have questions that the dealer cannot answer, have a legal assistance attorney review the document before you sign it.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

Fourteen bicycle thefts were reported to the Fort Benning Military Police in July.

Of these reported, 10 of the thefts occurred in post housing areas. The majority of bicycles stolen were left unsecured in the yard or on the porch of the quarters.

Let's take a look at some of the reasons these bikes were not secured:

Reason: No lock was available to secure the bicycle.

Fact: Bicycle locks at the post exchange currently range between $1.95 and $8.50. You could use any lock and chain combination. Compare this to the price of a new bicycle.

Reason: It was only left in the yard for a few minutes.

Fact: It only takes a minute for someone to come along and ride off with your bicycle.

Reason: If someone wanted it badly enough they could take it even if it is secured.

Fact: Locks are only a preventive step. By using locking devices, you cause the professional thief to work harder and take more time, increasing the chance of his getting caught. Locks also deter the casual thief, who only steals when the opportunity presents itself.

Most bicycle thefts are crimes of opportunity. You can help prevent these thefts. The first step is to get in the habit of locking your bicycle up whenever it is not in use. Record the serial and model numbers of your bicycles. This will aid in the recovery if your bicycle is stolen.

Register your bicycle with the MPs. On Fort Benning, the Crime Prevention Van is located at various locations on post throughout the year to register bicycles.

The Crime Prevention section will register your bicycle during normal duty hours, Monday through Friday at the Main Post Military Police Station, Building 215, Room 213, telephone 545-7115/7154. Just bring the description, including make, model and serial number with you. Help the military police stop bicycle thefts on Fort Benning.

Lock it up.

Crime Watch

Provost Marshal

The following is a breakdown of crimes reported to the Military Police during August:

McGraw Manor had three domestic disturbances, four domestic assaults, two larcenies of private property, three damages to private property, one damage to government property, one housebreaking and burglary, one animal bite and one threatening and obscene phone call.

Custer Terrace had one domestic disturbance, one domestic assault, four larcenies of private property, one damage to private property, two damages to government property, two housebreaking and burglaries, one animal bite, one threatening and obscene phone call, one disorderly conduct and one aggravated assault.

Davis Hills/Bouton Heights had one domestic disturbance and two damages to private property. North Main Post had two housebreaking and burglaries. South Main Post had three larcenies of private property, two damages to private property, one damage to government property and one aggravated assault.

Indianhead Terrace had one domestic assault, one larceny of private property, one animal bite and one communicating a threat. Battle Park had one assault and Upatoi Terrace had one unlawful entry.

Energy Update

by Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

The cool weather we experienced during the last days of August helped Fort Benning meet the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command criteria for turn-off of air conditioning.

However, air conditioning will continue when outside temperatures exceed 76 degrees Fahrenheit. Turn-off will take place when the daily temperature drops below 70.

This extended service is made possible by the combined efforts off all consumers at Fort Benning in working to eliminate waste and abuse of energy.

If everyone continues their wise and efficient use of energy, we can provide air conditioning through the remaining hot weather ahead.

U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 11-27 sets the lowest authorized temperature at 78 degrees during cooling season. According to the regulation, air conditioning in administrative offices can be turned on 30 minutes after the start of duty hours and must be turned off 30 minutes before quitting time.

Remember, this is the season when outside ventilation should be used when temperatures drop. You can operate 10 to 15 fans on the energy a single room air conditioner uses. By using fans, we can reduce the tremendous energy required for air conditioning.

With your continued support during this critical period, we can continue to provide air conditioning and remain on target in meeting our energy goals.

Scouting kicks off year of promise

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning chapters of the Boy Scouts of America have begun a new year of Scouting on post.

"We have 522 boys on Fort Benning involved in scouting. We should have double that number during the fall and we're out to get them," said Steve Harris, the district scout executive.

"We need boys and leaders. We only have 22 adult leaders right now.Without adult leaders we have no program. The more leaders we have the more boys we can offer Scouting to," he added.

Harris lauded scouting for its value to young men.

"Scouting builds citizenship, character and physical fitness. It teaches boys about the country we live in and appreciation for our country. The program also teaches and reinforces a sense of right and wrong. Boys also have a lot of fun in scouting," Harris said.

Benning has nine Boy Scout troops, 10 Cub Scout dens and five Explorer Posts.

The Explorer program is for boys 15 to 21 years old and is dedicated to boys with a specific career interest. The program includes three high adventure posts that concentrate on outdoor activities, one medical post and a law enforcement post.

Boy Scouts is open to boys 11 to 18 years old and combines skill building and knowledge with many planned outdoor activities that center around hiking and camping.

Cub Scouts is for younger boys with an emphasis on crafts and daytime outdoor activities.

"Our theme this year is 'Catch the Spirit for 1986.' We want and need more boys and especially more leaders. Scouting slows down in the summer but we're gearing up now for a great year. We want adults and boys to catch the spirit of scouting. We need them and they need scouting," Harris said.

"Why doesn't he just snap out of it."

We wouldn't expect someone with a serious physical illness to get better without treatment. Yet, often, for the victims of mental illness, treatment is not even considered. In fact, of the over 35 million Americans afflicted, only one in five gets treatment because their symptoms are either ignored or misread as mere personality problems.

But mental illness is a medical illness that requires medical attention. And today there is real progress in its treatment—two out of three victims can get better and lead productive lives.

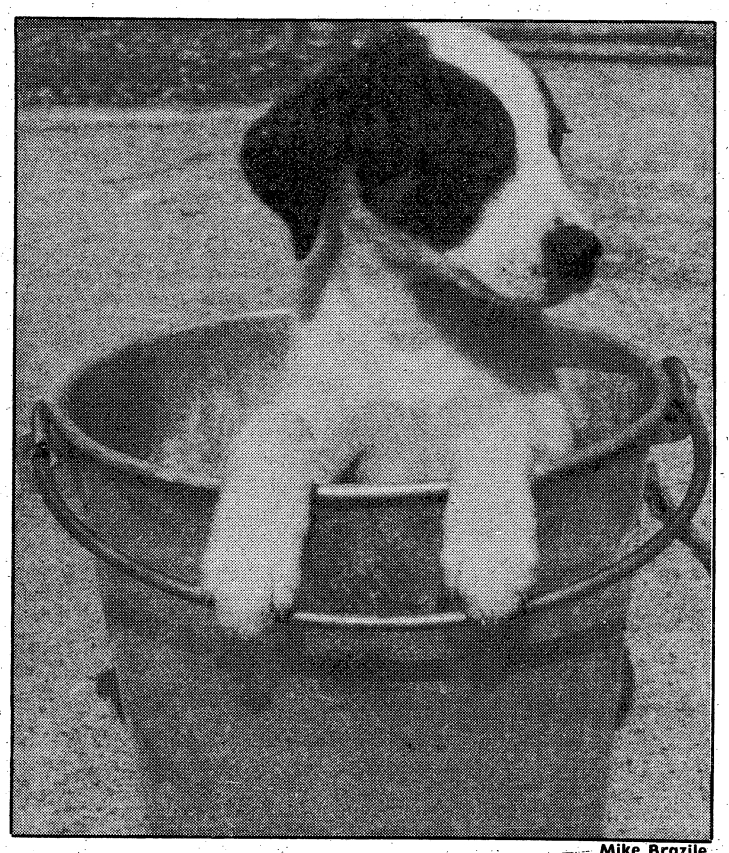
Upfront

Cycle policy goes into law

Beginning today the Fort Benning Military Police will start a two-week grace period for enforcement of the change to U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 190-5 affecting motocyclists.

Soldiers driving or riding motorcycles on or off the installation must wear an approved helmet, long sleeve shirt, long pants, goggles or shatterproof eye protection (unless motorcycle has a windshield), a reflective vest, leather boots or shoes and gloves.



Ceremony set for POWs/MIAs

National Prisoner of War-Missing in Action Recognition Day will be observed here today with an 11 a.m. ceremony in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

CG makes changes to uniform wear reg

In a major policy change by Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba issued last week, soldiers are now authorized to wear utility uniforms anywhere in the local area until 8 p.m.

Soldiers wearing fatigues, battle dress uniform, cooks' or medics' whites or flight suits may now sit down in a fast food restaurant or visit a mall.

Mike Brazile

Pet of the Week

A 3-month-old "puppy-in-a-pail" is available for adoption at Fort Benning's Veterinary Clinic. Each week The Bayonet will feature a pet from the more than 500 strays picked up in a year on post. The Clinic is in Building 265, 10th Division Road. Adoption hours are 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Restrictions imposed on some helicopters

Army News Service

The Army recently implemented temporary operational flying restrictions for its OH-6A and OH-58A helicopters in response to engine failures in six of the helicopters.

Between October 1978 and June 1986, the helical cluster gears in one of the Army's OH-6As and five of its 1,340 OH-58As have broken during flight, causing engine failure and forcing pilots to make emergency landings, said a spokesman for the U.S. Army Aviation Systems Command in St. Louise, Mo.

The most recent incident involved a Tennessee National Guard OH-6A. No fatalities have resulted from the incidents, but there has been one injury, the spokesman said.

According to SSgt. James Fort, 36th Engineer Group Aviation Section, there are two OH-58As on Fort Benning. He explained the Scout helicopters are primarily involed in convoy cover and site reconnaissance missions for the 36th. "The restrictions are not really affecting the mission," he said, "except the altitude restriction makes it hard to get down close to look at something."

The temporary restrictions that have been imposed will afford maximum aircrew safety in the event of additional failures before the gears can be replaced, the spokesman said. Restrictions include a requirement that pilots of OH-6As and OH-58As maintain a minimum flight altitude of 400 feet above ground level except during take off, landing, required instructional periods and tactical unit training.

The pilot needs about 400 feet to make a controlled descent, he explained. Also, passengers are prohibited from riding in back seats and fire guards are now required to stand forward of the engine compartment during starts.

Replacement of cluster gears in all of the OH-6A and OH-58A helicopters should be completed by September 1987, the spokesman added.

New system judges 'fat' as proportion of net weight

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

The changes to the Army's weight control program, which go into effect Oct. 1, largely involve tape measurements and body fat, according to Martin Army Community Hospital's Capt. Zachary Truitt.

"Instead of using caliper measurements and maximum allowable weight, the standards will be measurements using a tape measure and percentage of body fat.

"The responsibility for taking these measurements lies with unit commanders," Truitt said.

Based on an information letter from the Office of the Surgeon General dated June 25, commanders should use a draft of Appendix B, Army Regulation 600-9 as a basis for taking the measurements and calculating body fat.

"When conducting measurements, commanders should ensure the use of a fibreglass tape measure. Tape measures made of cloth stretch and metal measures don't conform to the body's shape," said Truitt.

For more information or clarification, commanders can call Truitt at 544-3308 or 544-3318.

Soldier's survival testament to his disciplined spirit

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Today is National POW/MIA Recognition Day. It is a day to think about the men and women who have been prisoners of war or missing in action. The president has proclaimed the day a "recognition" day. However, merely thinking about those who made the sacrifice is hardly enough.

The numbers, although oft-quoted, warrant a look. Nearly 150,000 Americans, including 81 women serving in the Philippines, were captured during World War I, World War II, the Korean Conflict and the Vietnam War. More than 17,000 of those died while in captivity. A truly staggering statistic, standing all by itself, is that more than 2,000 men are still considered missing in action from Vietnam.

In looking back at the great sacrifice by those thousands of Americans, perhaps we can find hope in one man's strength.

He doesn't overwhelm you immediately. Unless, of course, you've heard the legend. He does impress, however. He weighs in at around 170 or 175. He carries it well on his hardened 5 feet 9 inch frame. His sparkling blue eyes are warm and friendly.

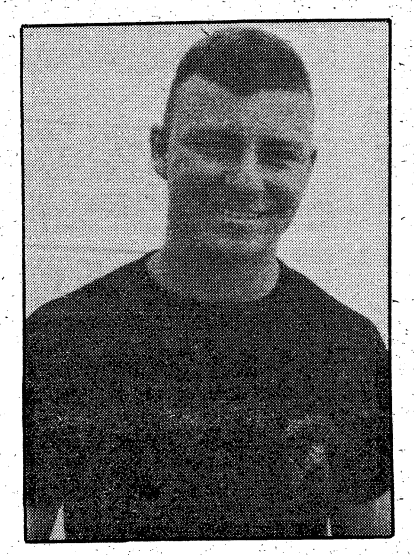
The father of the Survival, Escape, Resistance and Evasion Course at Fort Bragg, N.C., Lt. Col. James N. Rowe, knows what he's doing. He's been there. He's been forced to rely on wit and courage to stay alive. Now he shares his experience with other soldiers — hoping to increase their odds if they are ever in the same situation he faced and lived through.

On a mission he didn't feel comfortable about in Le Coeur — a Vietcong dominated area — the Special Forces lieutenant was taken into captivity when his team was overtaken, Oct. 29, 1963.

"I was starving. I had two types of dysentery and beriberi. Then I remembered what happened to Job when he asked 'Why me?' He got slam-dunked. 'Why me?' is an irregular question. Don't ask it."

In his book, "Five Years to Freedom," Rowe offers some insight on how he survived the five years and two months in captivity. He suffered psychological and physical torment. He endured loneliness and frustration, watching fellow Americans die. Every day brought another struggle to maintain faith in himself as a soldier and in his country.

He recalled seeing three other POWs die. At least one "because he didn't understand that if he was going to live it was going to have to be because of what he could provide for himself.



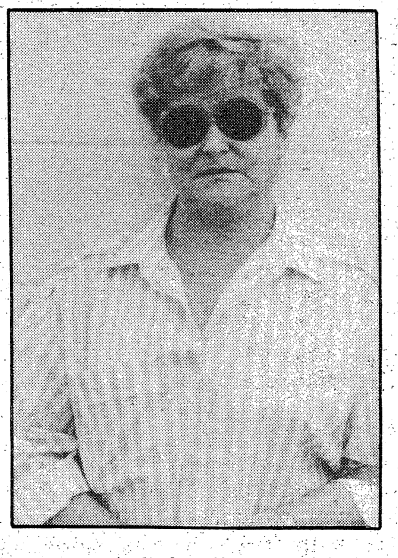
"I believe you need a faith in something," Rowe said. "I'm not going to say that everyone who has a faith in God will make it, and those who don't won't. My faith helped me, but it just isn't that simple."

What kept him going after four unsuccessful escape attempts and countless days stretching into weeks in solitary confinement? "I just tried to throw my heart into the next day and let my body follow. And I thought about my parents. I was their last surviving child. My brother and sister had died. At the worst of it, when I was being punished for an escape attempt — chained up in my cage with no clothes so the mosquitoes were working on every square inch and I was lying in my own filth — I made up my mind that my parents weren't going to have to go through that kind of sorrow again just because I didn't make it."

Yes, I believe we can all find some inspiration in Rowe's story. When you're at the memorial service or the wreath laying today, give him a thought. When you get a chance, read his book. His story, his survival, are testimony to the truly disciplined human spirit.

Various voices

More than 2,000 servicemen are still listed missing-in-action from the Vietnam War. What do you think the American people can do to help resolve the problem of those still considered missing in action?



Cpl. Jim A. Mansfield, 1st Battalion, 2nd Marines, 2nd Marine Division, Camp Le Juene, N.C. — "I feel the public is doing the best they can do without endangering other lives. I think they should send higher ranking officials over there who know the area."

SSgt. David S. De Camp, Tactics Division, United States Army School of the Americas — "I think the public should continue to elicit support from their congressmen and don't give up hope."

SP4 Marsha M. Aperans, MEDDAC — "I think the public should write their congressmen, president and senators and let them know that people are still thought of and bring them home."

Betty Reed, family member — "I think we have done all we can do for them. The only ones that aren't back are the ones that don't have a desire to come back."

PFC Michael D. Kipp, 3rd Ranger Company, Class 13-86 — "I don't think the public can do anything that they haven't done already. It's a military matter."

Op-Ed

Memories of father's service taught respect for POWs/ MIAs

by Marshall Pilcher
29th Infantry Regiment adjutant

"When you coming home Dad?"
"I don't know when. We'll get together then son; you know we'll have a good time then."

The lines from Harry Chapin's song "Cats in the Cradle," still cause tears to well up in my eyes every time I hear them.

Nothing is set so deeply into my soul as the emotion the song evokes. It came out when my father was serving his second tour in Vietnam.

I guess the perspective of a 9-year-old child on Vietnam is not the most authoritative, but it is certainly a deeply emotional one.

I didn't know where Phu Bai or Da Nang were. But I did know that my small family was left to lead as normal a life as possible while the head of our household served two separate tours in Vietnam. It was nothing more than thousands of other families were asked to do during that era. So we weren't really special.

I still remember the pain of "Daddy" not being there.

What if he doesn't come back?

Does he know I love him?

Thank God above for his grace and mercy, for he returned my father to me on both occasions.

Thousands of other American soldiers never returned to their families. Some are considered missing in action while others are still documented prisoners of war.

All of America should stand together to support our POWs and MIAs and the courageous families that stand behind them. The ultimate sacrifice is theirs, and it is our duty to recognize and support our fellow Americans.

Maybe the next time you hear "Cats in the Cradle" on the radio you'll stop and listen to the words. They'll bring tears to your eyes, too.

God Bless our POWs, MIAs and veterans. I love them all.

National Guard training crucial

U.S. Army National Guard

In January 1985, the governor of California refused to let 450 members of the California National Guard participate in a military training exercise in Honduras.

One year later, the governor of Maine kept members of that state's National Guard from participating in a road building exercise in Honduras and another exercise in Panama.

These are not isolated incidents. Why do they happen?

National Guardsmen serve both as state militiamen and federal reservists under legislation enacted by Congress in 1933. In addition, the Armed Forces Reserve Act of 1952 requires a governor's consent before his state's National Guard may be mobilized for federal service.

James H. Webb Jr., assistant secretary of defense for Reserve affairs, said this requirement — which has been used by certain governors and special interest groups to affect U.S. foreign policy at the expense of important National Guard training — has become obsolete and must be changed.

Webb said state governors' politically motivated decisions not to send their National Guard troops for critical overseas training jeopardizes the readiness of National Guard units—readiness on which U.S. national defense depends.

"This is no longer a case of a few isolated incidents; it is a demonstrated way for dissent groups, state legislators and state governors to seize a forum to debate foreign policy," Webb told a subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Since January 1985:

- Three state governors have refused to permit National Guard members to train in Honduras. Three more governors said they will take similar action if asked.
- Six governors said they will approve National Guard training in Central America only on a case-by-case basis.
- Twenty state legislatures have taken up the issue and remain divided; the House in one state and Senate in another passed resolutions urging their governors to cancel participation or withdraw guardsmen from Central American training.
- In one state, two legislators pushed for a state constitutional amendment that would require the legislature's approval before their state's guardsmen could be sent anywhere "where there had been armed conflict within two years."

Webb said this pattern is destructive to today's Total Force policy, which is based on the assurance that National Guard and Reserve forces are able to mobilize as quickly as the active forces.

Training in the terrain and climate in which they could be called to operate, with the differences in operating procedures and language they would confront, and using the same transportation and equipment, "provides the best environment that tests every member of a unit and enhances readiness," he said.

"We have increasingly staked our national security on the ability to mobilize, deploy and employ combat ready National Guard and Reserve members and units anywhere in the world rapidly," Webb said.

"Consequently, effective and realistic training throughout the world is a necessity if we are to rely on the men and women of the National Guard to perform their federal mobilization missions within the current deployment schedules."

National POW/MIA Recognition Day, 1986

By the President of the United States of America

A Proclamation

Courage and sacrifice are no strangers to America. In every war since our first struggle for independence, America's prisoners of war have endured terrible hardships and have been called upon to make extraordinary sacrifices. The bravery, perseverance, and profound devotion to duty of our POWs and MIAs have earned them a place of honor in the hearts of all Americans. Their heroism is an inspiration to future generations. Their spirit of hope and their commitment to the defense of freedom are a claim on our loyalty to them.

All Americans are also deeply moved by the pain and suffering endured by the families and friends of those who remain missing or unaccounted for. We share both their burden and their commitment to secure the release of any U.S. personnel who may still be held against their will, to recover the missing, to resolve the accounting, and to relieve the suffering of our missing servicemen. Until the POW/MIA issue has been resolved, it will continue to be a matter of the highest national priority. As a symbol of this national commitment, the POW/MIA flag will fly over the White House, the Departments of State and Defense, the Veterans' Administration, and the Vietnam Memorial on Sept. 19, 1986. It will also fly over the Vietnam Veterans Memorial on Memorial Day and Veterans Day.

In order to recognize the special debt all Americans owe to the men and women who gave up their freedom in the service of our country and to reaffirm our commitment to their families, the Congress, by Senate Joint Resolution 220, has designated Sept. 19, 1986, as "National POW/MIA Recognition Day," and authorized and requested the President to issue a proclamation in observance of this occasion.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, RONALD REAGAN, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Friday, Sept. 19, 1986, as National POW/MIA Recognition Day.

I call on all Americans to join in honoring all former American prisoners of war, those still missing, and their families who have made extraordinary sacrifices on behalf of this country. I also call upon state and local officials and private organizations to observe this day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this twenty-eighth day of August, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighty-six, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and eleventh.

Ronald Reagan

Common task training makes sure 29th Regiment troops stay ready

Story and photos by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment correspondent

1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment recently took action to ensure its soldiers will survive and win on the next battlefield.

Some 147 battalion troops participated in Common Task Training at the beginning of the month.

The testing was a makeup session following the first CTT conducted in July.

According to SSgt. Morris Anderson III, assistant operations sergeant, approximately 85 percent of the Battalion's soldiers underwent the training and successfully completed the tasks in July.

More recently, the soldiers were tested on 17 tasks and did exceptionally well, Anderson said. "All 147 passed."

It was no surprise, however, "they knew the first testing was off, so they went on and prepared themselves for the makeup," Anderson said.

CTT is conducted annually to ensure every soldier knows what is expected of him in case of war, Anderson explained.

"Further, it helps the soldier to maintain proficiency in basic soldiering skills as it gives the unit commander an idea of his unit's overall performance," he added.

Keeping the soldier abreast of changes to his basic skills is a responsibility shared by the soldier, his first-line supervisor and his commander, according to the Soldier's Manual.

However, the Battalion's Training and Operations Office is charged with planning, organizing and scheduling CTT to fit Army needs, said Anderson.

The soldiers tested ranged in grades from private to sergeant first class. All were unable to participate in the first testing because of prior commitments.

The tasks included: identify armored vehicles, send a radio message, identify terrain features, locate a grid coordinate, give a magnetic azimuth, camouflage self and equipment, put on, wear and perform maintenance on an M-17 protective mask, decontaminate skin and equipment, put on Mission Oriented Protective Posture gear, react to a nuclear hazard, identify nerve agent symptoms and administer antidote, treat for shock, identify and treat injuries, and prevent frostbite.

Guest instructors complete drownproofing classes

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas correspondent

Twenty U.S. and Latin American guest instructors from the School of the Americas are better swimmers after attending drownproofing and lifeguard certification classes at the Youth Activities Center recently.

The instructors, who make up the patrolling division under the Department of Combat Operations successfully completed the Advanced Lifesaving Course and the Advanced Swimming Course.

Patti Recio, a certified life guard at the YAC, taught both courses.

"Our instructors are required to be lifeguards while conducting training in drownproofing or combat water survival," said SFC Harry Ellifritz, non-commissioned officer in charge of the patrolling division at USARSA.

The patrolling division conducts waterborne training for such courses as the El Salvador Cadet Course, the Commando (Ranger) Course and the Patrolling Operations Course.

Editor's Note: "Around Fort Benning" is a new column that will appear in the Bayonet each week. Its purpose is to highlight the actvities of various post units.

Input is welcome from all sources and should be submitted to the Editor in Room 601, Building 4 by 11 a.m. Monday. All input must be typed, double-spaced with the name and specific unit of the writer and should be limited to two pages. Submissions will be subject to standard editing and condensing.

High quality black and white photographs will also be considered for publication in this column.

10th Mountain

The 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, conducted its first off-post training exercise Aug. 11 through 20.

While at Fort Rucker, Ala., the Battalion conducted platoon-level training in helicopter rappelling, cargo sling loading, Stabilized Body Operations, boat movements and various platoon level tactical missions. The Battalion Tactical Operations Center and Combat Service Support systems were also exercised.

The Battalion received its mission, executed it, and returned safely to Fort Benning without an accident.

The exercise proved to be an invaluable learning experience for the soldiers and leaders.— Dale R. Meeks, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry.

There comes a time within an organization when a lot of fun and relaxation is needed to build morale. It is a time for the unit to come together away from the normal duty day.

The Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 67th Maintenance Battalion found that having a family day not only built morale, but it also created unity.

The officers and soldiers and their families met at the Uchee Creek Recreational facilities for indoor and outdoor activities.

The afternoon started out with a feast of barbeque ribs, chicken, hamburgers, hotdogs, baked beans and potato salad. After eating, each staff section chose a soldier or family member to represent their section for the pie-eating, arm wrestling, checkers and horseshoe tournaments. The first place winners received plaques and a three day pass. Other tournaments included: volleyball, cards, dancing and tug-of-war.

At the end, everyone pitched in to clean up and they were smiling! Some soldiers stressed their opinions of the day's events. SP4 Donald Campbell (winner of the pie eating contest) said: "People actually felt comfortable with each other! I think it was a great success." PFC Letisha Buskey said, "It gave everyone a chance to leave the job behind and become friends." — Linda K. Daniels, 67th Maintenance Battalion.

Mortarmen right on target during recent exercise

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

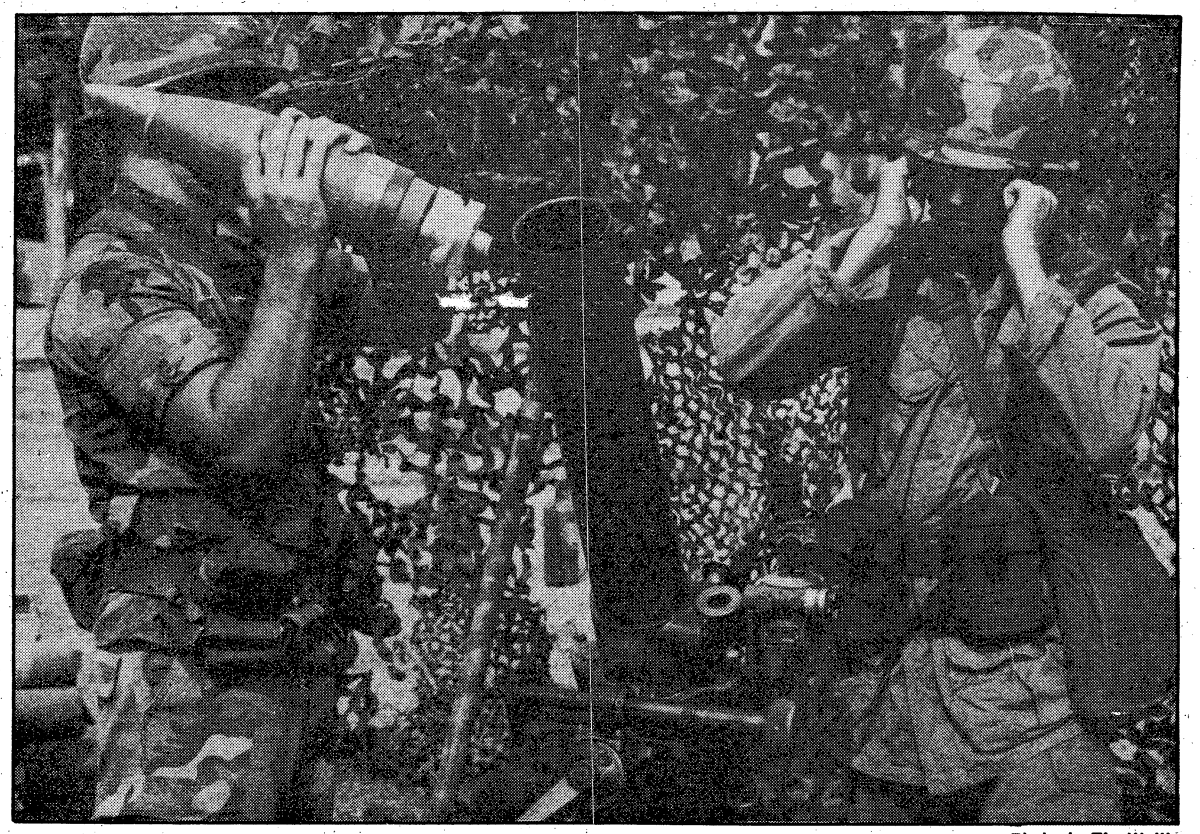
Among the assets an infantry battalion commander has at his disposal is indirect fire support from the battalion's 4.2 inch mortars.

Soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry's "Four Deuce" platoon recently displayed their skills during a week-long exercise that included a live-fire on Fort Benning's Coolidge Range.

In most cases, the mortarmen can't even see their targets. Timely and accurate fire depends on the information gathered by the forward observers.

During the training, infantry officers and non-commissioned officers from Company A, 1-58th acted as forward observers, calling in the missions for the fire.

Forward observers determine the type, distance and location of the target and report to the fire direction center. There, soldiers enter the information into a small computer to determine the exact data to send one round on the target. The FOs observe the round impacting and report any necessary adjustments back to the FDC.



It may take three or four rounds to bracket the target before the mortarmen fire for effect and unleash a barrage of mortar fire on the target.

The platoon also gained some knowledge of the 60mm mortar during the training.

The 60mm is an indirect fire weapon used by U.S. Army Rangers. Soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment from Hunter Army Airfield near Savannah, Ga. provided instruction and a live-fire with the 60mm mortar.

Forward observers vital assets in battle

by Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The platoon's forward observer was positioned ahead of his element adjusting fire on an enemy position. As the thunderous barrage of artillery fire began, another enemy element was sighted approaching the platoon's flank.

Without hesitation, the platoon sergeant grabbed a map, compass and radio and moved to a hilltop to observe the approaching enemy unit. From his vantage point, the sergeant called for mortar fire and stopped the enemy's advance.

When a maneuver unit faces an enemy in battle, forward observers are an invaluable asset to call for artillery and mortar fire when and where needed. However, infantry soldiers must also have these skills to expand the unit's fire support capabilities.

Infantry officers and non-commissioned officers from Company A, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry recently refreshed their skills as forward observers during a live-fire exercise at Fort Benning's Coolidge Range.

"Officers and NCOs all know how to call for fire, but it's a skill we don't often get to practice," said Capt. Robert O'Connor, Co. A commander. "In combat, most infantrymen will have to call for fire."

Before the officers and NCOs participated in a live-fire however, they "walked through" fire missions at the U.S. Army Infantry Center Tactical Simulation Center here. There they learned to adjust fire using maps and learned the proper procedures to call for fire.

Then, in order to really put their skills to the test, O'Connor had his soldiers adjust and call for fire in a live fire training scenario.

"Most infantry leaders don't get the opportunity to work with mortar assets frequently enough to remain efficient," said 2nd Lt. Ronnie Graham, a Co. A platoon leader. "This was a good opportunity to see the effects of the fire support we request."

The training was supported by the 1-58th's 4.2 inch mortar platoon and forward observers from 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery.

Infantry scouts perform vital mission spying on enemy in his own territory

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The Armored Personnel Carrier rolls to a halt. Slowly, the hatch swings open and out steps a soldier. A second follows, and then a third.

Green camouflage paint hides their faces; leaves and twigs cover their steel pots and weapons. They cautiously and silently listen, looking for any sign of the enemy.

They are miles ahead of the main fighting force, alone and dependent only on themselves. Who are these soldiers and what is their mission?

The infantry scout's mission is to gain and maintain visual contact with the enemy, while trying to evade and prevent engagement themselves. Most scouts say this is no easy task.

Scouts must provide advance warning and cover the forward enemy lines while the battalion is in a defensive position.

When the battalion is in an offensive mode, the scout's job is to find the enemy's location, search for obstacles, identify different routes for movement and cover specific areas.

The scout is a very mobile and flexible soldier, which is necessary for him to accomplish so many different missions. Scouts may operate as forward observers and call in artillery and mortar fire. They also provide target information for close air support.

"We are a valuable asset to the Battalion," explained SFC Richard Chisholm, scout platoon sergeant in the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry. "Without the scouts, the battalion loses its eyes and ears."

Scouts prepare enemy sighting reports and radio them back to the battalion commander. They search for openings in enemy lines so friendly forces can bypass them without being spotted. Then the battalion can attack the enemy from both the front and the rear.

Normally, scouts will only engage the enemy in self defense, or, if ordered, they could be tasked to destroy enemy reconnaissance elements.

If the battalion engages the enemy, the scouts move to the flanks and screen those areas to warn the battalion of any outlying enemy activity.

"We primarily operate mounted because we have a lot of territory to cover," said Chisholm. "But we do dismount when there is a chance the vehicles will be spotted."

The scout platoon of 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry is currently practicing its mission in preparation for a trip to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif. The platoon is set to deploy with Company D, 1-58th to work as part of the Opposing Force.

Court report

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Soldier receives 28 years for rape. On Sept. 3, Sgt. Lee Barnes, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was sentenced to 28 years confinement, a dishonorable discharge, total forfeitures, and reduction to private for sexually assaulting a 9-year-old Fort Benning girl.

Prosecutors, Capts. David Ford and Kurt Meckstroth, presented evidence that Barnes went to the military quarters of a female soldier on the afternoon of July 8 and convinced her children to allow him to come inside and wait for their mother to return from work.

Four children, ages 9 to 12, were present in the quarters at the time. After waiting about 15 minutes, Barnes asked one of the girls to come upstairs to her brother's bedroom to talk with him. As soon as she entered the bedroom, Barnes locked the door, dragged her to the bed, and sexually assaulted her. Barnes left the quarters before the girl's mother returned. He was apprehended the following morning.

Barnes pled guilty to rape, indecent acts with a child, and attempted sodomy. He will serve his period of confinement at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

Soldier convicted for taking stereo. Pvt.1 Jeffery Titmus, Company D, 197th Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted Sept. 5 for taking the stereo of another Fort Benning soldier.

Evidence presented at the trial established that Titmus took his former roommate's stereo from his barracks room while the roommate was on deployment in California.

Titmus was scheduled to be discharged the week of the incident and claims he intended to retrieve the stereo from a local pawn shop and return it prior to departing from Fort Benning. He pled guilty to wrongful appropriation and was sentenced to a bad conduct discharge, 60 days confinement, and forfeitures of $400 per month for six months.

Larceny - nine months prison, bad conduct discharge. SP4 Marion T. Watts, Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment/Weapons Department, was convicted and sentenced last week at a general court-martial after leaving town with a supply of travelers checks.

On the evening of Feb. 11, 1986, Watts was preparing to clear Fort Benning on a permanent-change-of-station move to Germany. He noticed that the door to SSgt. Charles McKelvey's barracks room had been left opened. McKelvey was also preparing to depart Fort Benning on an extended temporary duty trip.

McKelvey had been issued $2,200 in travelers checks to finance his trip. Watts entered McKelvey's room looking for McKelvey. When Watts discovered that McKelvey was gone, he opened a briefcase lying on the bed and found the travelers checks inside.

Watts closed the briefcase and left the room. He later returned to the room and stole the checks. Soon thereafter, Watts departed for Germany. He cashed some of the checks before his departure and the rest while enroute to Germany.

Upon his arrival, he was questioned about the larceny. He denied taking the checks.

Despite testimony from a number of non-commissioned officers from Watts' chain of command that Watts was an outstanding soldier prior to the offense, Trai determined that the barrack thief did not deserve to remain i the service.

Trail sentenced Watts to b reduced to private, to forfeit al pay and allowances, to be con fined at hard labor for nine months, and to be discharge from the Army with a Bad Conduct Discharge.

498th soldiers 'wash up' in field

Story and photos
by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Medics headed to the woods last week for quarterly field training, and practiced valuable soldier skills.

Troops from the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) donned mission oriented protective posture gear and waited for the attack they knew was coming.

"We don't practice donning the MOPP gear because what we're training to do is respond to a gas attack on a helicopter, not our unit," expalained WO1 David Lombard, nuclear, biological and chemical officer for the 498th. "What our soldiers would be doing is either picking up a chemical casualty or responding to the chemical attack on the helicopter."

Lombard said that the medical troops have to know how to decontaminate the "air ambulances" because otherwise, the residue left by a chemical casualty could contaminate other patients.

The 498th's wartime mission is to provide medical evacuation for wounded personnel.

The soldiers set up two wash stations, one rinse station, a litter exchange, an inspection station and a drying station. They also called in a water truck to support the exercise.

When the helicopter flew into sight, the decontamination team leaped into action, working on the bird while it hovered.

Code offers guidance for surviving if taken prisoner

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment correspondent

1. I am an American fighting man. I serve in the forces which guard my country and our way of life. I am prepared to give my life in their defense.
2. I will never surrender of my own free will. If in command, I will never surrender my men while they still have the means to resist.
3. If I am captured, I will continue to resist by all means availalble. I will make every effort to escape and aid others to escape. I will accept neither parole nor special favors from the enemy.
4. If I become a prisoner of war, I will keep faith with my fellow prisoners. I will give no information or take part in any action which might be harmful to my comrades. If I am senior, I will take command. If not, I will obey the lawful orders of those appointed over me and will back them up in every way.

5. When questioned, should I become a prisoner of war, I am bound to give only name, rank, service number, and date of birth. I will evade answering further questions to the utmost of my ability. I will make no oral or written statments disloyal to my country and its allies or harmful to their cause.

6. I will never forget that I am an American fighting man, responsible for my actions, and dedicated to the principles which made my country free. I will trust in my God and in the United States of America. — Code of Conduct

Seldom mentioned, yet always remembered, the Code of Conduct for members of the armed forces "says something about the American soldier — the way we feel — how we relate to things," says CSM Troupe Floyd, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Since the mid-1950s, American soldiers, in times of war, have turned to the code's beliefs and values to help them cope, says Floyd, a former squad leader with the 25th Infantry Division in Vietnam.

Particularly, the code was emphasized during the Vietnam era, he says.

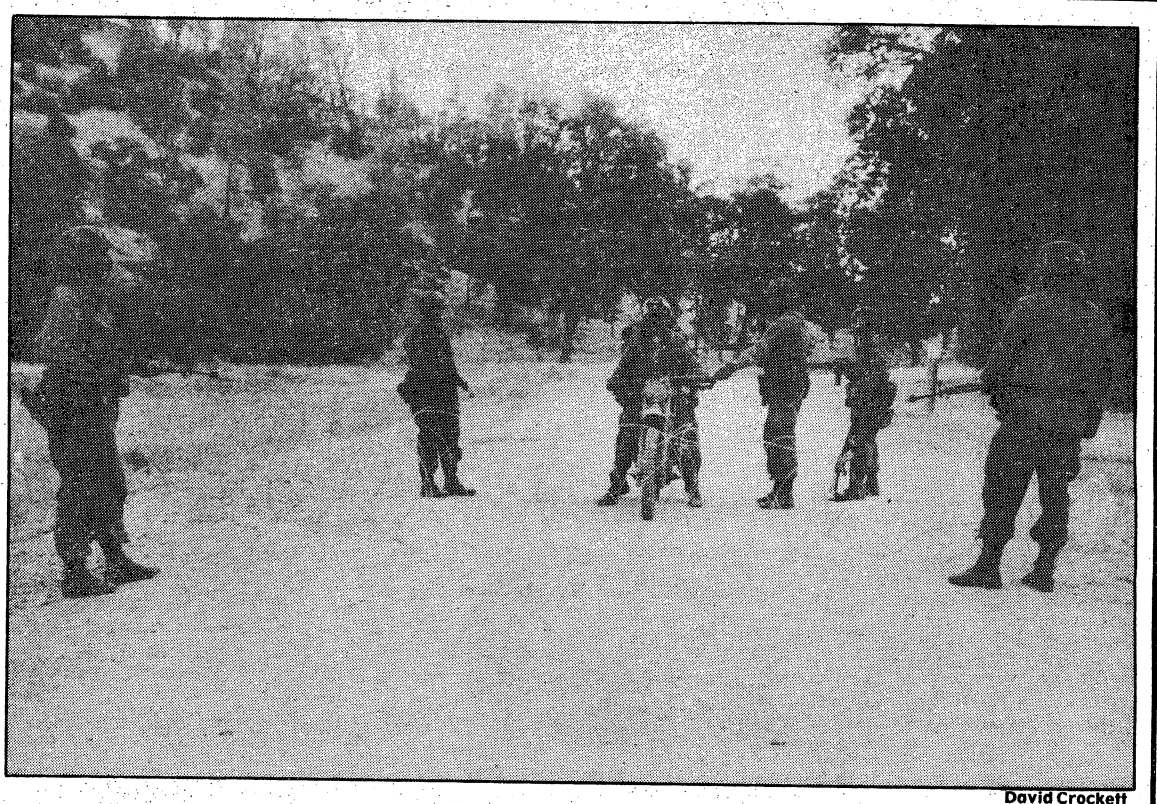
Legal Assistance

Q: I am a soldier stationed at Fort Benning. I bought a mobile home in Georgia, but I live in Alabama. The dealer didn't charge me any Georgia sales tax since I am not a Georgia resident. I just received notice from the Alabama Department of Revenue telling me I owe something called a "use tax." What is this, and do I have to pay it?

A: A "use tax" is a tax that a state can charge you for the privilege of using property in that state. This tax is based on the value of the property. Each state has this tax to protect its revenue production and local business.

For example, why would anyone buy anything in Georgia when all they had to do was cross the state line into Alabama to avoid paying the Georgia sales tax?



In order to protect itself, Georgia will charge you the difference between the sales tax of the state where in purchase is made and the Georgia state sales tax. If you have not payed the sales tax of the state where you purchased the item, your "use tax" will be equal to Georgia's sales tax.

Q: I am in the market for life insurance but have heard that payment under some policies can be a problem if I die on active duty. How can I be sure I'm protecting my family?

A: Your concern is real one! Many insurance policies do contain military service clauses that can allow insurance companies to escape liability if a soldier dies on active duty. To make matters worse, these clauses are often buried in lengthy insurance contracts and are seldom brought to the attention of the soldier.

By Army regulations insurance policies offered and sold on Army installations must contain no restrictions relating to military service unless restrictions are clearly indicated on the face of the policy.

Soldiers considering the purchase of an insurance policy should look for a statement of restrictions and examine the policy closely for restrictions which might apply to additional coverages or riders. Insist that all questions you might have be answered by your agent before you buy. If your agent can not give you clear answers you should probably consider finding another agent.

Using auto craft shops for repairs educational, money-saving hobby

Story and photos by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Tired of going downtown to mechanics to have your car fixed? Would you like to feel more control over the repair and upkeep of your car? Would you like to pocket all that money you're giving to mechanics for car repairs? Then you need to see Taylor Bumper at the main post Auto Craft Shop.

"The Auto Craft Shops are here for three reasons. They build soldier morale, they save people money by having a facility for them to repair their vehicles at and they give people an education in mechanics and how to fix cars," said Bumper, the manager and a training instructor at the main post Auto Craft Shop.

Benning's two auto craft shops, Bumper's on main post and the one at Kelley Hill, are staffed by seven training instructors who are qualified mechanics. Their sole function is to assist and instruct patrons on how to care for and repair their vehicles.

"We won't do the work for them but we'll diagnose the problem and tell the customer what they need as far as parts , give them the necessary tools and help them repair their vehicle. If a customer doesn't want to repair the vehicle at least when they take it downtown they can tell the mechanic exactly what is wrong with their car. That's a money saver in itself," Bumper said.

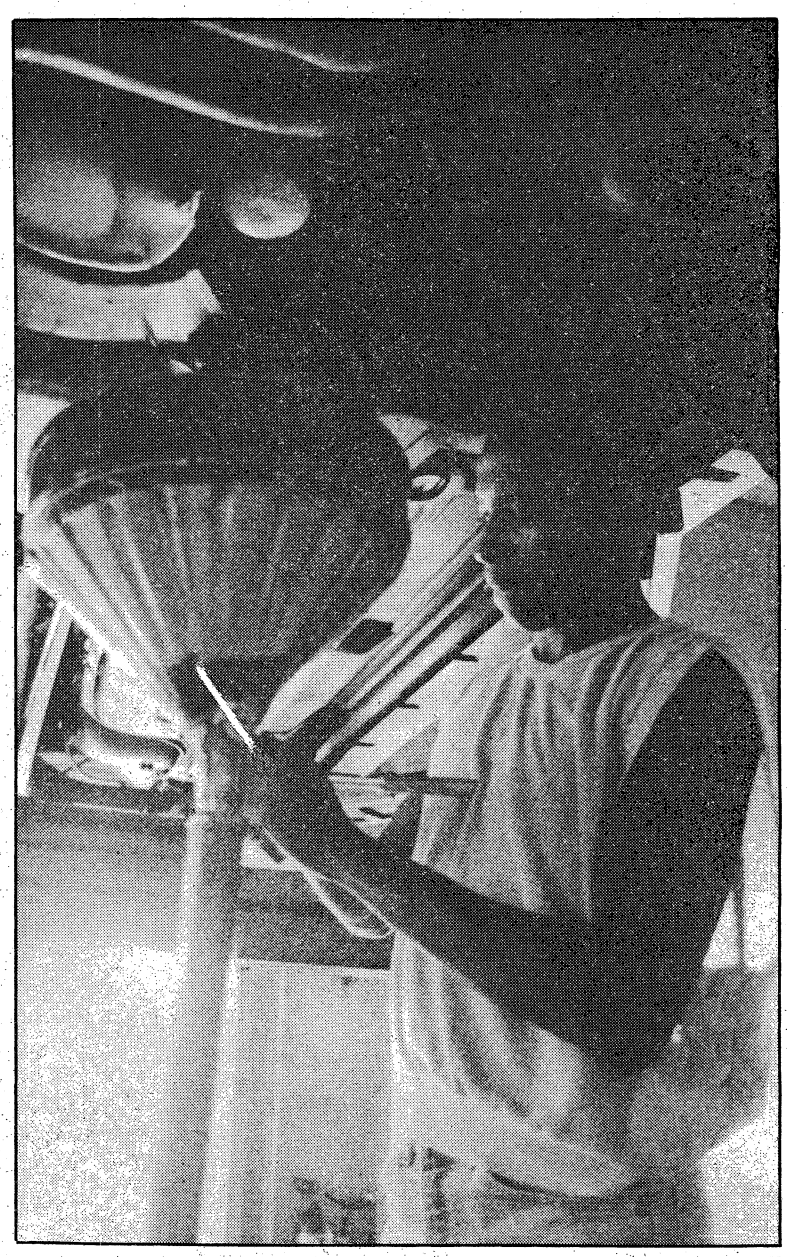
The main post shop, in addition to having training instructors always available to help, has the latest in tools and equipment for the do-it-yourself mechanic. Shop work areas are well-lit and clean.

"One piece of equipment we have that customers like is our Sun Computer II. We hook it to a car's engine and it can tell us how the car cranks, runs, engine RPMs, hydro-carbon exhaust output, you name it. This only costs $10," Bumper said.

According to Bumper, people who use the Auto Craft Shop can save substantial amounts of money if they're willing to do a little work.

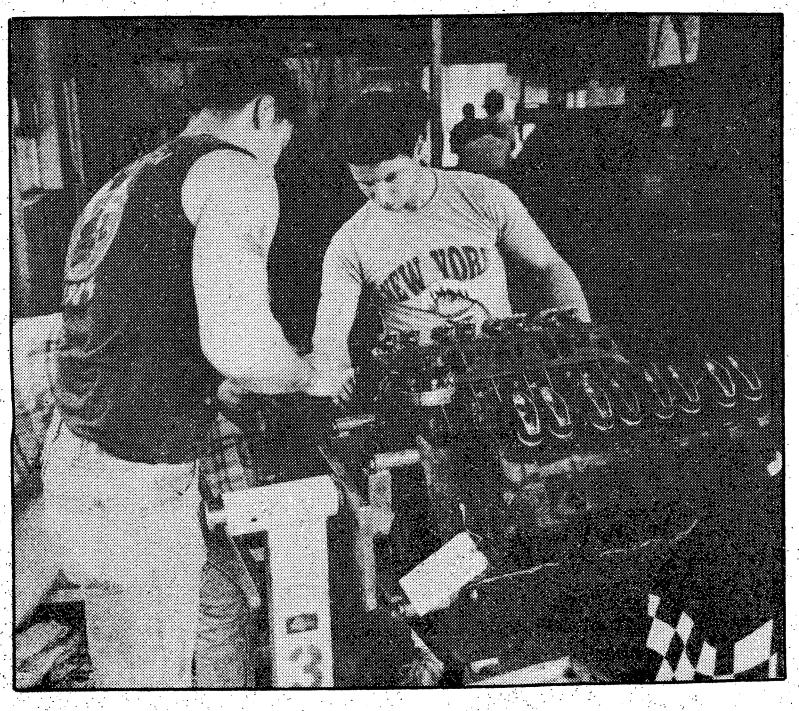
"You can change your oil and filter right here for $6.45 and 30 minutes of your time. Downtown, they charge about $14.95," said Bumper.

The training instructor said other examples include balancing four tires for $12 versus $25 downtown; $4 to turn a rotor versus $13 downtown; and an engine steam clean for $5.35 that costs $25 in Columbus.



"I want to stress, also, that you don't have to be a mechanic or car expert to use our facilities. That's what we're here for, to teach people about their cars and how to repair them. We have a lot of women using our facilities now because they're tired of paying to have their cars fixed," Bumper said.

PFC Mike La Piano, along with PFC John West, is completely rebuilding his car's engine at the Auto Craft Shop.



"I've never rebuilt an engine. With the help of Mr. Bumper and Mr. Johnson I'm learning a lot and getting the engine rebuilt," La Piano said.

Sgt. Chris Hunt had his 1985 Camaro at the Craft Shop. A mechanic downtown had told him he needed a whole new front end and that it would cost $800. Johnson looked up under the car and told Hunt all he needed was some grease on the idler arm.

"This place saved me $800. What can I say? It's great," Hunt said.

Sgt. William Smith drains the oil from his car and gets ready to install a new oil filter.

Addict's first step hardest one to take Civilian counseling service there to help in overcoming chemical, substance abuse

by Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

The young man looks around nervously as he steps through the door. He puts his hands in his pockets, trying to conceal the trembling. The sweat trickles down his brow. He looks over his shoulder, carefully eyeing the people in the room for some glimpse of familiarity. He slowly approaches the receptionist.

"May I help you?"

"Yes, I need to talk to somebody," he stutters in a low voice.

This is a common scene at the Fort Benning Civilian Counseling Service. It is also the first step a person can take toward getting help for alcohol, drugs or personal problems.

"In the civilian industry there are billions of dollars lost annually due to the complications of substance abuse," said Dr. Sidney H. Levine, clinical director and acting alcohol and drug coordinator here.

Studies have indicated that at any given time 18 percent of certain workforces are experienceing problems such as alcoholism (10 percent), drug abuse (2 percent) and mental health problems, (6 percent).

According to Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Control Program statistics, the troubled employee is absent 16 times more and has an accident rate 3.6 times higher than the average employee.

In addition, these employees utilize their sick benefits three times more and their compensation five times more than the average employee.

Overall, these employees are only functioning at 67 percent capacity.

Because of these somewhat staggering statistics, the CCS has expanded its services to meet the needs of the Fort Benning civilian community.

The service offers help to both appropriated and non-appropriated fund Department of the Army employees and their families.

"The CCS of the ADAPCP functions as a screening service for all elegible employees whose jobperformance,conduct or attendance appears affected by a personal problem," explained Yvonne Linsenbigler, the civilian program coordinator at ADAPCP.

"If the problem has its basis in alcohol or other drug abuse, the ADAPCP provides out-patient counseling or referral services designed to resolve the problem," she said.

According to Linsenbigler, supervisors play an important role in resolving employees' problems. "Supervisors need to be aware of the signs that indicate an employee may be having trouble," she said.

She went on to say that absenteeism is a big indicator of problems. Multiple inastances of unauthorized leave, especially on Friday and Monday.

On-the-job absenteeism is another indication of trouble such as continued absences from post, long coffee breaks and physical illness on the job. An employee experiencing problems will exhibit difficulty in concentration and spasmodic work patterns.

Generally the employee has lowered job efficiency and makes bad decisions. Recognizing employees with problems is just the beginning to getting help for them.

"Often it is the supervisor's responsibility to approach the worker and recommend counseling.

"Supervisors need to be aware that if an employee recieves a driving under the influence citation on post, while on duty, it is mandatory that they are referred to CCS." Linsenbigler said.

"Many times the person will come in on their own and not even know what the problem is. We try to help them identify it," Linsenbigler said.

Once the employee gets to ADAPCP the road to recovery begins.

The counselling service is free and Linsenbigler guarantees that all contacts are kept confidential.

"If someone comes in here it will not go in their records," she said.

"We mostly do screening and referral. We don't do the actual treatment. We encourage people who are having any kind of problem that's personal in nature to call and set up an appointment. Sometimes it helps to just come in and talk," said Linsenbigler.

"Ours is a free out-patient service, but if they need to go to the hospital it's at their insurance's expense," Linsenbigler said.

CSS has nine professionally trained counsellors who have the knowledge of where a worker can go for guidance and treatment.

Any civilian employee or family member needing to speak with someone about a problem may call 545-4993 or visit Building 2215.

There is also an extensive program for soldiers who may believe they have a problem with alcohol or drugs. The system for dealing with soldiers' problems is a bit different, but the purpose is the same. The office is there to help those who need it. Soldiers desiring help can call 545-2742 or 545-4415.

Every year about 200 dogs suffer heat stroke in Georgia. Most of them die, and many suffer because their owners left them unattended in the car.

Dogs and cats begin to suffer in 90 degree temperatures. And they can't take off their fur like we take off clothes or sweat away the heat like people do.

Dogs only sweat in two places — on the tongue and between their toes. So it's crucial that they avoid extreme heat.

Animals with heat stroke may show symptoms of rapid breathing, vomiting, or a staring expression in the eyes. Immediate therapy is essential for the animal to survive. Immerse the animal in cold water and head straight for the veterinarian.

But, it's best to avoid the problem. Be sure your pet has plenty of shade and fresh water when you're traveling. Leave him at home while you're shopping in town. Never leave your pet alone in a parked car. After an hour in the sun, the interior of an automobile can reach 150 degrees.

Medal of Honor winner recalls action that led to his citation for valor in war

Charles Coolidge has his World War II Medal of Honor pinned on by his wife Frances.

The Bayonet staff writer

He is in a wheelchair now, white-haired, a victim of multiple sclerosis that attacked him 26 months ago. But around his neck hangs a medal, suspended by a blue ribbon, that denotes valor, and a courage displayed before the ravages of MS.

The courage and valor that earned him the medal manifested themselves during World War II. The man is Charles H. Coolidge. The decoration is the Medal of Honor.

Coolidge and 10 other Medal of Honor winners visited Fort Benning earlier this month for the annual meeting of the Third Region of the Congressional Medal of Honor Society.

Society members who attended the Fort Benning tour included veterans of the Vietnam War, the Korean War and World War II.

Coolidge remembered the war that brought about his award. "I was a draftee, called up in 1943 from my hometown of Signal Mountain, Tenn. I took basic at Fort McClellan, Ala., as an infantryman. I won the Medal of Honor in France after landing in the South of France in '44. We didn't get much publicity because of the Normandy landings further north but we had some tough fighting."

The former technical sergeant recalled those long ago days, "I was with Company M, 141st Infantry, 36th Division. I was the leader of a section of heavy machine guns. We ran into a German infantry company and yelled at them to surrender. They opened fire," he said.

Coolidge used his carbine and wounded two enemies. The Tennessean then walked the line, calming his men and directing their fire. They repulsed that attack and numerous others during the next two days. On Oct. 27 the German infantry, supported by two tanks, again attacked. Coolidge picked up a bazooka and advanced within 25 yards of the tanks.

"I tried to fire the bazooka and it wouldn't work. I grabbed a case of hand grenades and started tossing them. I killed a lot of German infantry but the tanks were too much. We had to fall back," Coolidge said.

The citation for his Medal of Honor reads, in part, "...he crawled forward and inflicted heavy casualties on the advancing enemy. It became apparent that the enemy, in greatly superior force, supported by tanks, would overrun the position. Coolidge, displaying great coolness and courage, directed and conducted an orderly withdrawal, being himself the last to leave the position. As a result of Coolidge's heroic and superior leadership, the mission of this combat group was accomplished throughout four days of continuous fighting against numerically superior enemy troops in rain and cold amid dense woods."

"When my lieutenant told me I was being put in for the Medal of Honor and what did I think, I told him I'd just rather go home. I'm not ashamed to admit it. I didn't want to go to war but it was my duty as a citizen," said Coolidge.

Laughing, Coolidge also related that "...the regulations stated, I found out later, that if you're put in for the Medal of Honor you're supposed to be pulled off the line. So much for that. I didn't know about the reg and neither did anyone else so I stayed in combat, on the line."

Coolidge was on that "line" for over two years, fighting in Sicily, Italy, France and Germany. After the war he went back home to Signal Mountain and opened a printing business. He, his brother and son continue to operate that business.

During the society's visit to Fort Benning, the men and their wives attended an airborne school graduation, troop training and a tour of the National Infantry Museum.

Charles H. Coolidge, proudly wearing his worn Medal of Honor, was there, going every inch of the way in his wheelchair, slow but never out of step.

Benning gets new judge

Lasseter

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's new staff judge advocate, Col. Earl F. Lasseter, has come home.

"I was here at Fort Benning as the SJA the first time in 1979. Now I'm back in the same position. I asked to come back because out of all of my assignments my wife and I like it here best," said Lasseter.

A military lawyer since 1966, Lasseter was an armor officer prior to getting his law degree. He was born in Gadsden, Ala. and went to the Georgia Military Academy, Auburn University in Alabama and to law school at the University of Alabama.

"I entered the Army in Texas but Alabama and Georgia are where I feel I'm from. It's really a pleasure to return to this area," Lasster said.

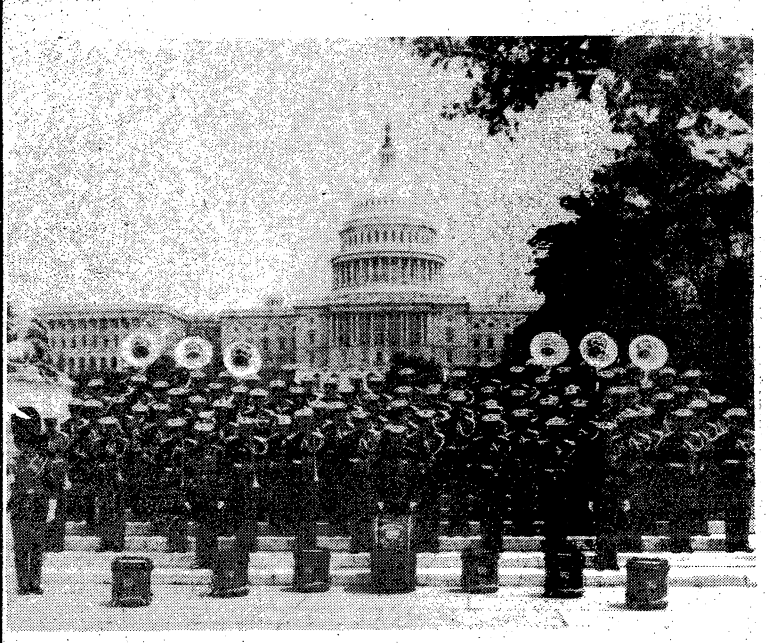
When the SJA decided to go to law school he was an active-duty armor officer. At that time the Army had no fully funded legal education program so Lasseter took an administrative leave from the Army and enrolled in law school. He paid his own tuition and expenses and, after graduation, came back on active duty as a Judge Advocate General Corps officer.

"Being a military lawyer requires you to wear two hats. You're both a soldier and a lawyer. Depending upon the type of unit you're in you might wear one or the other hat more often. My assignment as the SJA for the 82nd Airborne Division required a lot of military skills and parachuting. I was a lawyer but I was also very much an airborne soldier. It makes for an interesting career," Lasseter said.

The lawyer-soldier's list of assignments show the Army taking him all over the United States, Germany and Europe, the Republic of Vietnam and Taiwan.

Lasseter said being in the 82nd was like a world tour in itself. "I jumped into Turkey, Greece, you name it," Lasseter said.

In testimony to his airborne qualifications is a large plaque, waiting to be hung, of Jumpmaster Wings, which Lasseter earned while he was an All American.



Besides being Fort Benning's top legal expert, Lasseter's duties also include mapping out the assignments for new lawyers coming on board as part of his team .

"I don't take a young lawyer and put him in, say, criminal law and then just leave him there for his entire tour of duty. I see that these young lawyers serve in many different areas within the SJA for the experience it gives them. Maybe a tour in criminal law and then administrative law, dealing with real estate and contracts. They get a broad background of experience, which makes them better lawyers," Lasseter explained.

During his 20 years as a military lawyer, Lasseter has seen the JAG Corps grow from a low of about 900 attorneys to a high of 2,300 during the Vietnam War to the present stabilized level of 1,800.

"I've also seen more minorities and women come into the JAG Corps than when I first came in. That's very positive. I think in 1966 there were about three women lawyers in the Army. That's certainly changed. In most law schools now women make up more than 50 percent of the students. That's a positive change," he said.

In-Home Child Care Program means parents can rest easy

Army News Service

A common concern among some soldiers when making permanent-change-of-station moves is finding capable child care at the new duty station.

For soldiers living or working on or near an Army installation, that concern has been lessened by the Army-sponsored "In-Home Child Care Program" that offers access to licensed day care providers.

At Fort Benning, the program is run by Jennifer Williams, the family child care director. She is responsible for certifying and supervising caregivers, as well as providing names of available homes to parents.

The program requires that military family members caring for an unrelated child more than 10 hours a week in government-owned-and-operated housing be licensed under an extensive training program developed and presented by the Army.

Like similar programs that have long been offered at some installations (particularly in Europe), the Army-wide program began in 1983 to supplement on-post day care centers. It provides a reliable alternative for parents who prefer a less-structured environment than the centers offer, said program manager Linda Smith from the Community and Family Support Branch in Alexandria, Va. It also offers extended child care operations to meet soldiers' unique needs caused by military duty requirements.

Through the program, soldiers have access to a central referral list naming all licensed child care providers on the installation. That list, maintained at installation Child Development Services offices or Family Child Care offices, improves soldiers' chances of finding competent, trustworthy child care, Smith said. Family Child Care directors at these offices manage local application of the program.

Under the program, applicants for licensing are subject to an extensive background investigation designed to evaluate their suitability to provide child development services. The investigation includes a review of the application by the installation's case management team, social services workers and criminal investigation division.

In addition to the investigation, applicants must complete 20 hours of training in such areas as first aid, nutrition, child growth and development, child abuse identification, and safety and emergency procedures. At the end of this training, participants receive a provisional certificate and may begin providing child care. During the following six months, they must complete 18 more hours of similar training to earn their license. To keep it, they must complete an additional 24 hours of continuing education annually.

The program further requires that child care providers get a physical examination and that their homes be inspected periodically by the Family Child Care Office and by fire and safety inspectors for safety and suitability.

"The In-Home Child Care Program is very much like a child care center," said Lt. Col. Bill Ritter, chief of the Family Policy Office at the Pentagon. "The guidelines governing the program come out of the same regulations as those for our child care centers."

As of Oct. 1985, some 4,800 licensed homes provided care for nearly 23,000 children Army-wide, Smith said. The cost per week for such care averages $44.

Although soldiers might find a few state-licensed child care providers outside their installation, they shouldn't assume the standards for licensing are equivalent. "All states have some type of liensing requirements, but they vary. Most states are just beginning to regulate in-home child care," Smith said.

The Army's program offers something for everyone, in Smith's view. Parents have access to quality child care, spouses can build themselves a "portable" career, and the Army can save millions of dollars.

To regulate the program, the Army authorizes each installation one supervisor and about $30,000 per year to monitor every 40 hours. The homes provide care for some 150 to 200 children. If the Army were to build a center to care for that number of children, it woud spend more than $2 million in construction costs alone, Smith estimated.

Program officials expect in-home care to substantially supplement child care centers over the next five years.

For more information on the Fort Benning program, call Williams at 544-3328.

Centers, homes to open for visit

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning parents will have a chance to see, firsthand, what the Army child care program is all about next weekend.

The two Army-run centers on post, as well as selected certified child care provider homes, will be open to the public Sept. 27 and 28.

Becky Carroll, child development coordinator, said the event is being called an "Open House Celebration for Child Development Services.

"It's a chance for parents to come into some of the certified homes and see the kind of environment we are providing for their children," Carroll said.

Representatives from Carroll's office, as well as certified caregivers, will be available to answer questions and provide information on the program.

"We're excited about the things going in child development at Fort Benning," she said. "We've recently hired a new family child care director and an outreach worker, and two more people will be hired in the near future.

"The additional personnel will allow us to expand our programs even more."

Parents can place their children in any certified home or center they want to use, Carroll said. "Many people think they can only use a center or home that is located in their housing area, but this is not true. They can pick a location that is convenient to them."

People also need to understand that the certified child care providers can pick up where day care centers leave off. "If a parent cannot get to a center by 6 p.m., they can hire a certified caregiver to pick up their child and keep them until the parent gets off work," she said. This flexibility is something that many soldiers need.

The Custer Terrace Center is on Candle Drive, near the water tower in the Custer Terrace Housing area. The Marne Road center is next to the main post exchange.

Both centers, as well as selected homes, will be open Sept. 27 and 28 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., and Sunday from 3 to 6 p.m.

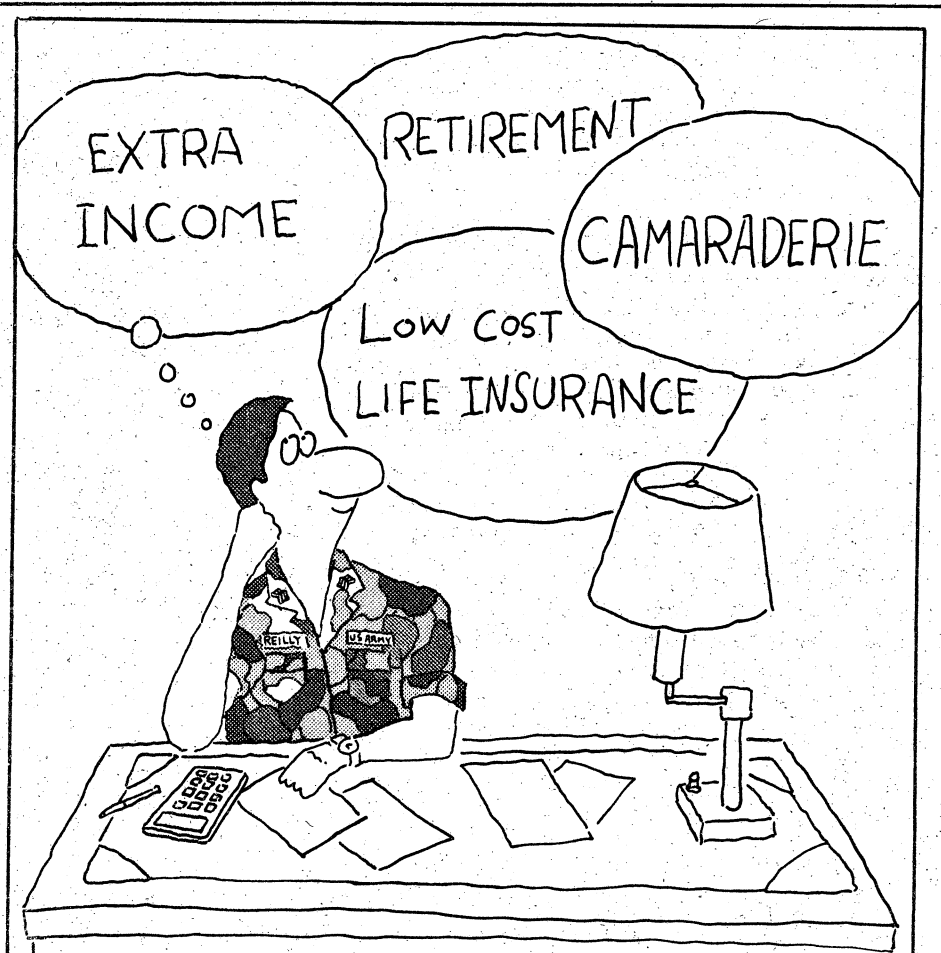
Caregivers participating in the open house Saturday include:

Margit Haney, 103-A Butts Street, Custer Terrace.

Ellen Watkins, 250 Logan Street, Indianhead Terrace.

Christiane Talamoa, 839-A Arrowhead Road, McGraw Manor.

Carolyn Wiley, 144 Gilespie Loop, North Main Post.



Ilse Crowell, 941-A Burr Street, South Main Post.

The following child care providers will open their homes Sunday:

Ester Moore, 176 Derrickson Street, Indianhead Terrace.

Laura Redman, 864-B Arrowhead Road, McGraw Manor.

Catherine Ingle and Donna Fielder, 129 Ingersoll Loop, North Main Post.

GETTING OUT? YOUR ARMY BENEFITS CAN BE MORE THAN MEMORIES.

It's probably hard to say what you'll miss most about the Army if you've decided to return to civilian life. For some, it's the camaraderie. Others miss the travel and excitement. Still more miss those money-saving Army benefits.

Joining the Army Reserve can help you retain some of those great benefits. Like your PX and commissary privileges. Space-available air travel. And low-cost life insurance.

You'll earn a good extra income, too. Over $2,000 a year, in some cases.

War games allow players to learn by their mistakes

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Lamachus, an Athenian general, said, in 500 B.C., "In war there is no room for two mistakes."

A team of Fort Benning civilian employees stages wars for U.S. soldiers here and abroad that allow for as many mistakes as soldiers want to make as long as they learn from those mistakes.

The team works for the Loral Corporation and the wars they stage are fought with "laser bullets." They don't kill the combatants but they do make them think.

"There are nine of us on Loral's team at Fort Benning. We're training consultants and we provide tactical and technical expertise for units engaging in operations with the Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System, called MILES," explained Lee Rhoads, a 10-year Army veteran from the infantry and military police.

Like Rhoads, the rest of the team members also have military backgrounds. Their experiences range from first sergeant to warrant officer helicopter pilot.

They all have one thing in common, however. They know tactics involving a variety of weapons systems and combined arms operations and possess a high level of technical expertise with MILES.

MILES involves the use of laser bullets emitted by a laser transmitter attached to a weapon. Upon firing a blank round, a built-in sound sensor triggers the laser transmitter to simultaneously fire its coded pulses.

Each soldier wears detectors that receive the coded laser pulses. These detectors are worn as a helmet band and on a simulated load-carrying harness.

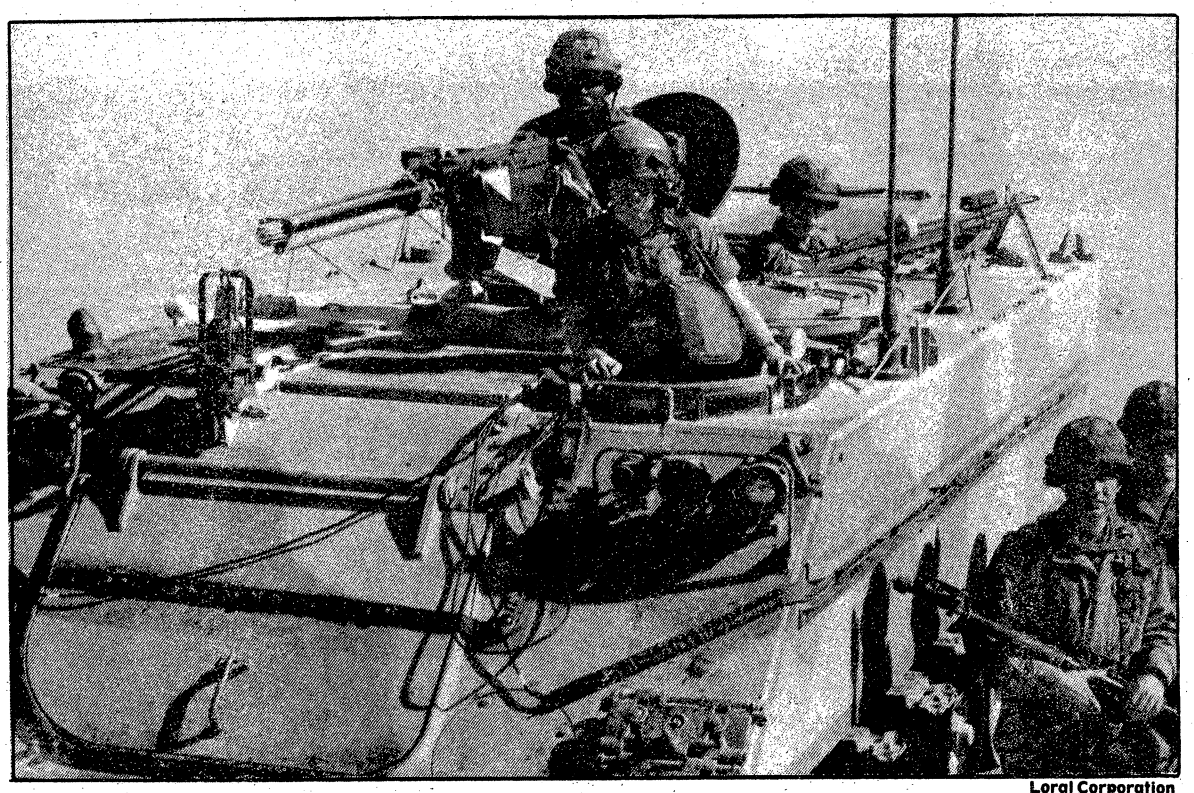
An alarm is located on the harness near the soldier's left ear. A series of short tones from the alarm tells the soldier of a near miss and a continuous tone indicates a kill.

To stop the tone the "dead" soldier must take a yellow key out of his transmitter and insert it into the alarm. If he takes the key out, the alarm again sounds. Until the system is reset by a controller's key the soldier remains "dead." According to Rhoads, this method adds realism to training exercises.

"When a soldier takes up a good sight picture on an 'enemy' and pulls the trigger and hears a continous 'kill' tone he knows he did something right. The 'dead' soldier knows he did something wrong," Rhoads said.

"Most soldiers speak of an eery feeling after being beeped. They realize they've messed up and been killed. In a war, they'd be dead. That's the beauty of MILES. You're as close as you're ever going to be to actual combat. The training is great," said Tom Hobbs, a MILES technician.

MILES has been developed for everything from the .357 Magnum pistol and 12-gauge shotgun to anti-tank weapons, fighting vehicles, tanks, air defense missiles and aircraft.



"Getting leaders and soldiers up to speed on the technical aspects of MILES is only part of our job. For MILES to be used effectively the unit must plan intensively. They must look at their mission and then work MILES training into that mission to make the training realistic and worthwhile. We can help on using MILES effectivley," said Hobbs.

During the action in a MILES exercise the training consultants and unit controllers watch every step of the action and take copious notes. After the action ends an after action review is conducted.

"In a battle, whether MILES or actual combat, each participant has tunnel vision in that he only sees his small part. During the after action review we ask the right questions of the right people so that everyone, attacker and defender, gets the overall picture of what happened. This way, everyone learns," Rhoads said.

"MILES training allows for mistakes and for soldiers to learn how to fight. More units should use MILES and our MILES team because a 'yellow key' kill is better than a body bag kill," Rhoads said.

The MILES team can be contacted at 545-3396 by any unit interested in MILES support.

Loral Corporation

An infantry squad prepares for multiple integrated laser engagement system "combat." Besides being outfitted with personal MILES gear, the squad's M113 Armored Personnel Carrier and their .50 caliber machinegun also has MILES gear.

WE'RE HURTING.

Saving lives can be very expensive. The costs of our disaster relief and other humanitarian programs keep mounting. And we can't afford to come up short.

Please help.

The philosophy of many people is "If it ain't broke, don't fix it." But CWO3 Arthur Miller has saved the Army millions of dollars by taking the opposite approach.

Miller has been active for several years in the Army Suggestion Program, and was recently named Military Suggestor of the Year by the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command.

"I've always been the kind of person who looked for the most efficient way to get a job done," he said. "I learned early the importance of not wasting resources, and that time is money."

He credits his first employer with instilling this philosophy. "I was a 12-year-old boy, making a little money shoveling coal, and Mr. Curtis Parsons showed me how the coal I left behind could fill another bag. He impressed on me the fact that what I thought was trash was really money. I've never forgotten that lesson," Miller said.

From his humble beginnings, Miller has made saving resources a lifetime commitment. "There is always a better, more frugal way to do a job if you just look for it," he said.

And look he does. This year alone, he submitted 24 suggestions, seven of which have been adopted. His suggestion for recycling solvents will save the Army more than $100,000 during 1986 alone.

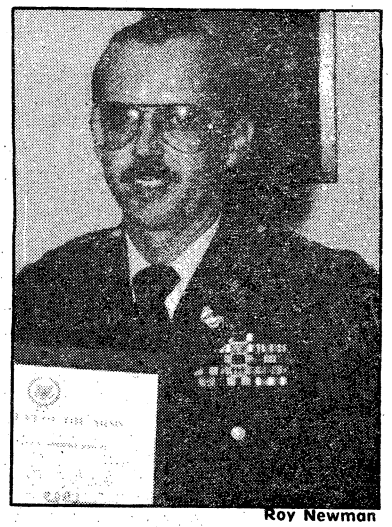
And during a one-year tour in Korea, changes made at his suggestion resulted in first-year savings of $1 million.

Miller uses the Army Suggestion Program, submitting his ideas for ways to do things less expensively. His ideas range from a porta-filter system for solvents that allows them to be recycled, to suggesting a different supplier of cleaning fluid that is cheaper.

It's not every soldier who can show you personal letters from the secretary of defense and the Army, praising his efforts to save Army dollars.

Miller believes that everybody knows ways to save money, and that the key is getting them to use the suggestion program.

"If all of the approximately 2.5 million people employed by the military services each found a way to save $1 per day, that would be $2.5 million saved a day," he said. "Think of the effect on our economy today if everybody did this."



All you have to do is write your idea down on a DA 1045 suggestion form, he said.

"People don't have to cost out the suggestion, that's the evaluator's job, but it helps if you have some idea of the savings."

If your suggestion gets disapproved, resubmit it if you believe it hasn't been properly evaluated. "Out of 24 I submitted this year, I've had to resubmit seven or eight of them, and many that finally yielded big savings were those that had been resubmitted several times," he said.

As well as saving the Army money, Miller adds from $4,000 to $6,000 to his own pockets every year from suggestion cash awards.

The bottom line, he said, is this: "It's everybody's responsibility to try to save money and resources. I don't just do it on suggestions. If I see a faster way to stop fraud, waste or abuse, then I take that route."

Army celebration highlights Bicentennial of Constitution

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Wednesday marked the beginning of a yearlong Bicentennial of the Constitution Celebration throughout the Department of the Army.

On Sept. 17, 1787, the United States Constitution was signed at the State House in Philadelphia, Pa.

While the Constitution has long been regarded as the cornerstone of our democratic form of government, at the time the 55 state representatives gathered on May 27, 1787, to begin drafting the document, the general consensus of those present was that their job was crucial to save the 10-year-old nation from the evils of democracy.

After the Declaration of Independence was signed, the representatives elected to Congress had only power to persuade the people, but no real power to govern. As George Washington succintly put it, "Influence is not government."

Congress did not have the power to tax, and without the ability to raise revenues, it was powerless to pay the Army and maintain order.

The situation was so desperate that many people demanded a dictator or monarchy form of government. They could see that someone needed to be in charge, and felt that a dictatorship with someone governing was better than anarchy.

The 55 men who gathered at the Constitutional Convention were a varied group; merchants, farmers, financiers, doctors, educators and soldiers. At least 31 were lawyers, and 24 were college graduates. The average age was just over 40 years old, while the oldest member, Benjamin Franklin, was 81.

According to James M. Beck, author of The Constitution of the United States, the most striking thing about the group was that "they were able to debate for four months during the depressing weather of a hot summer without losing their tempers, ... and who showed that genius

Veterinarians do more than just treat animals

Story and photos by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Veterinarians have been with the Army since the 1800s when each cavalry regiment was assigned an animal doctor. The Army still has veterinarians. But, in addition to animal care, the doctors are tasked with disease prevention and food hygiene.

"We have a six-fold mission here at Fort Benning. We provide complete care for government- owned animals, such as military police working dogs. We diagnose, prevent and control disease in privately owned animals. Rabies are surveyed and controlled and we have a Veterinarian Public Health Education Program. We also provide emergency treatment for animals to prevent suffering or loss of life. Our facility, in addition, inspects all food coming onto post for cleanliness and quality," said Capt. Mark Martinez, a veterinarian and the officer in charge of the post's Animal Disease Prevention and Control Facility.

Assigned to the clinic, in addition to Martinez, are four military animal care specialists who work with the veterinarian and four civilians who perform administrative functions.

To receive his doctor of veterinary medicine degree, Martinez completed a four-year bachelor's degree and then four years of veterinary medicine school.

"A veterinarian's training is very similar to a medical doctor's except we work on animals. Our four years at medical school consists of two years of classroom and two years of practical clinic work," he explained.

At Fort Benning's clinic Martinez puts all of his skills to work, caring for the MP dogs and providing minimum to maximum life-saving care for cats, dogs, horses and even two goats.

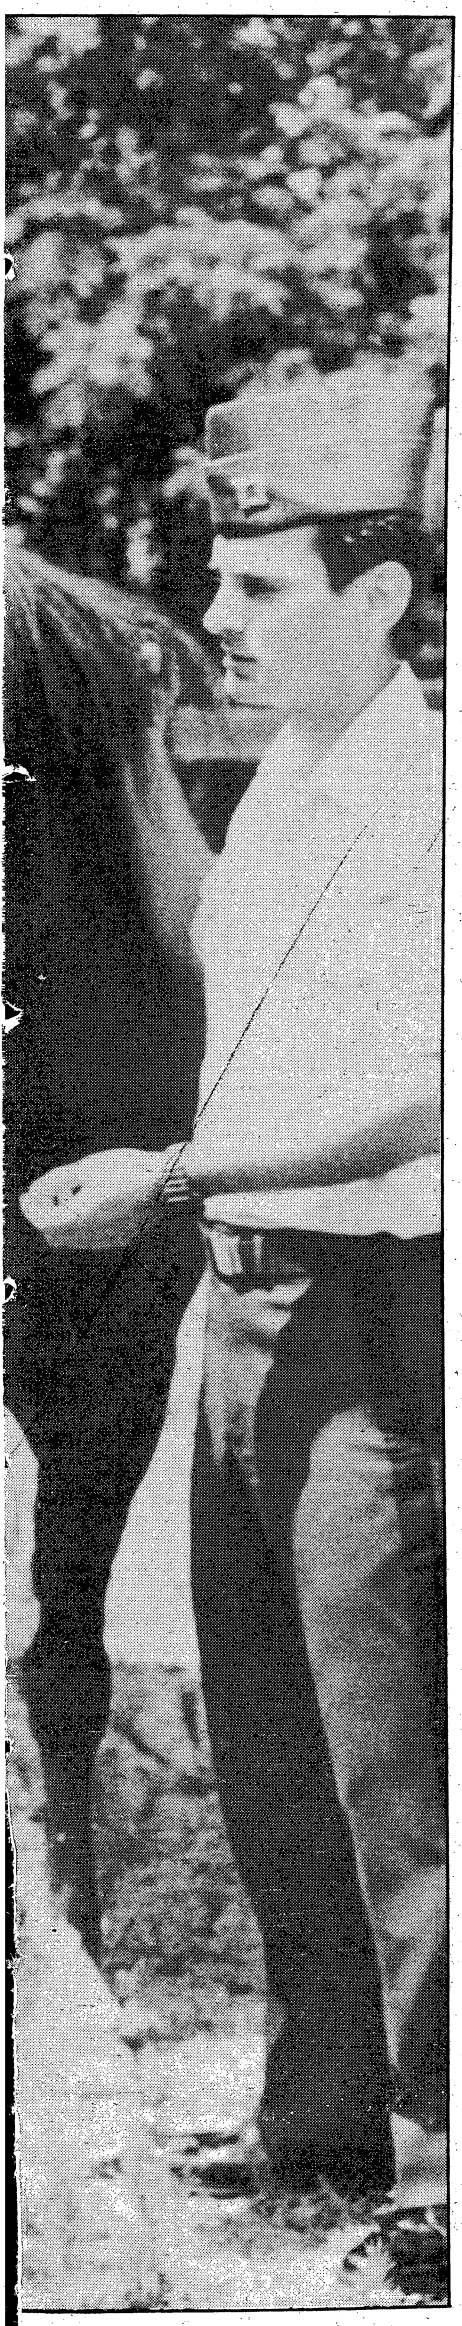
"Many personnel come to us for disease preventive shots, such as rabies. Any horses brought onto the reservation are quarantined with us for two weeks so we can examine them, draw blood and immunize the animals. We also take care of stray animals," Martinez said.

Last year, according to Martinez, the MPs picked up 513 stray animals, most abandoned by their owners. These cats and dogs are brought to the Veterinary Clinic.

"We'll keep a stray animal for three business days. If we feel an animal is adoptable we'll keep it for a week to 10 days to find a home for it," Martinez said.

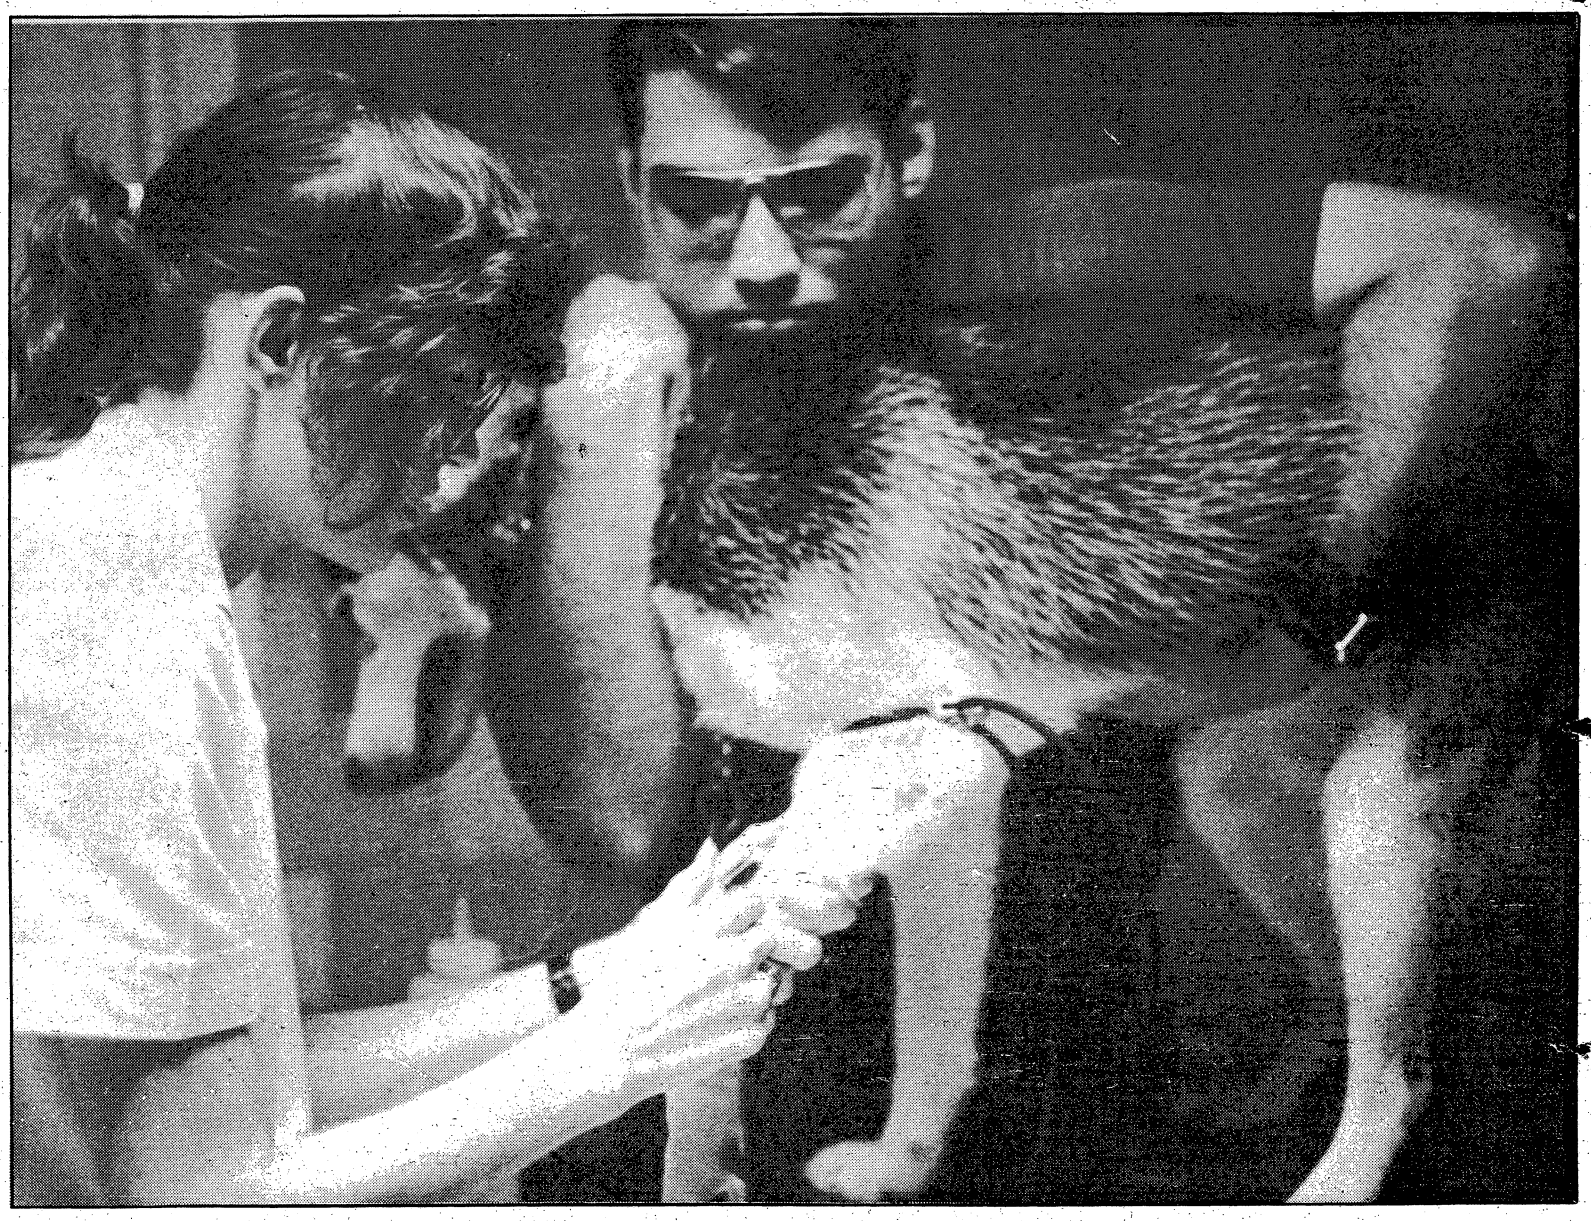
To adopt a cat or dog from the clinic all patrons, military and civilian, have to do is pay a minimal charge for a blood test, parasite test and any vaccinations needed. Then these new "parents" register their cat or dog on post and the clinic also has paperwork for registration in Columbus.

"We're really pushing our adoption program. It's open to anyone, civilian or military. We're just trying to find a home for these animals," Martinez said.



Martinez is also working closely with Martin Army Community Hospital on a Human-Animal Bond Program.

"Animals provide therapeutic companionship for humans who are sick or injured. We're trying to couple dogs we have with patients at MACH," Martinez said.



The clinic is in Building 265 on 10th Division Road, next to Alert Cable Television.

Pets may be viewed for adoption Monday through Friday, from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Clinic hours are 8 to 11 a.m. Mondays and 1 to 3 p.m. by appointment; Wednesdays from noon to 4 p.m. by appointment and from 4:30 to 7 p.m. without an appointment; Fridays from 8 to 11 a.m. by appointment only and a monthly clinic on Saturday from 8 to 11 a.m.

VA offers services for former prisoners of war

Veterans Administration

Former American Prisoners of War are eligible for special veterans benefits, including hospital medical care, special priority outpatient treatment and disability compensation. These benefits, provided in laws enacted in 1981 and 1984 are in addition to regular veterans' benefits and services.

Former military persons held by the enemy for at least 30 days are eligible for compensation under the new provisions. Special health-care provisions apply regardless of length of captivity. An advisory committee, made up of physicians and former prisoners of war, has advised the Administrator of Veterans Affairs on the administration of new VA benefits for POWs since 1982.

More than half of the Americans held prisoner in the last four wars are now living. Some 142,227 Americans, including 81 women serving in the Philippines were captured and interned during World War I, War World II, the Korean Conflict and the Vietnam War. More than 80,000 are living today.

Charles A. Stenger of the American Ex-Prisoners of War Association projects that as of Jan. 1, 1987, living American former-POWs will total 277 from World War I, 76,403 from World War II, 3,505 from the Korean conflict and 615 from Vietnam.

Congress defines a former prisoner of war as a person who, while serving in active military was forcibly detained or interned in line of duty by an enemy government or its agents, or a hostile force, during a period of war or during a period the Administrator of Veterans Affairs finds comparable to periods of war.

Studies have shown that the physical deprivation and psychological stress endured as a captive have life-long effects on subsequent health, social and vocational adjustment. These studies also indicate vulnerability to psychological stress is markedly increased.

Compensation

A former prisoner of war may be eligible for disability compensation if there are symptoms of any of the following disabilities: avitaminosis, beriberi, chronic dysentery, helminthiasis, malnutrition, pellagra, nutritional deficiency, psychosis, any of the anxiety states or a depressive neurosis.

For POWs detained or interned for 30 days or more, it will be presumed that the disability was incurred in or aggravated during military service, unless there is evidence of some other cause. To be eligible for service-connected disability compensation, the time period for these disorders has been eliminated.

Compensation is paid based on the degree of disability. The laws on former POW benefits recognize that military medical records do not cover periods of incarceration, but require adequate medical reasons for relating any current condition to military service or POW status.

Veterans rated 30 percent or more disabled qualify for dependency allowance. Family members of those rated 100 percent disabled may qualify for educational assistance. Widows of veterans rated 100 percent disabled for 10 years prior to death or veterans who died as the result of service-connected disabilities are eligible for dependency and indemnity compensation based on the veteran's grade.

Current monthly compensation according to degree of disability:

10 percent	68
20 percent	126
30 percent	191
40 percent	274
50 percent	388
60 percent	489
70 percent	617
80 percent	713
90 percent	803
100 percent	1,335

Medical care

Special health-care provisions for former POWs apply regardless of length of captivity:

- Special POW protocol examinations.
- Inpatient treatment for both service-connected and nonservice-connected conditions.
- Outpatient care on a priority basis for any condition, including medications as well as eyeglasses and other prosthetic appliances.
- Dental care for any condition if internment was for 180 days or more and dental care for service-connected conditions if interned less than 180 days.

For further information and assistance in filing a claim as a former POW, contact any VA office of call the VA toll-free POW Hotline Number 1-800-821-8139.

First time reenlistees to get stateside choice

Army News Service

Starting next month the Army will begin allowing eligible first-term soldiers completing stateside tours to re-enlist for their choice of stateside assignments.

The option, which begins Oct. 1, guarantees soldiers re-enlisting for at least four years a minimum of 12 months at their new continential United States station of choice, said MSgt. William Underwood from the Enlisted Sustainment and Distribution Branch in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel in the Pentagon.

Underwood said that the program is designed to encourage high-quality first-term soldiers to re-enlist. Approximately 10,000 first-term soldiers will be eligible to apply for this new option, he added.

Currently, criteria for the new option are being developed. Some of the things that will probably be considered for eligibility include the soldier's rank, education level, and skill qualification test score, as well as eligibility for re-enlisting without waiver, he explained.

The ConUS-to-ConUS station-of-choice re-enlistment option will be available to soldiers who are within six months of their transition date, provided there is a vacancy in their military operational specialty at the post where they wish to be assigned.

Underwood said that reinstatement of this once-popular option, last offered in 1982, will continue indefinitely to allow Army officials time to check the effects the option has on first-term soldier retention.

Support troops can now wear unit designator

Army News Service

Soldiers in combat support and combat service support units are being authorized to wear a numerical designator above their branch-of-service collar insignia.

The expanded wear policy for such branch insignia results from the inclusion of these branches in the regimental system, said MSgt. Kathleen Harvey of the Uniform and Awards Branch in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at the Pentagon.

Harvey added that the new policy, to be published in the next scheduled change to AR 670-1, takes effect immediately. It applies to both officers and enlisted soldiers of those branches thus far incorporated into the system.

Upon approval by the pertinent major Army commander, non-combat-arms soldiers, when assigned to color-bearing regiments or to separate tables-of-organization - and - equipment battalions of their branches, have the option of wearing the branch-of-service insignia combined with the numerical designator for the regiment or battalion. For example, a member of the 2nd Battalion of the 1st Signal Brigade would be wearing that branch's insignia with the number 2 affixed thereto.

Harvey pointed out that all such optional branch-of-service insignia are authorized for wear only while the wearer is assigned to the designated unit. She added that appropriated funds may not be used in acquiring the optional insignia, and that there is no requirement for soldiers to buy them.

It was in 1983 that combat arms soldiers received authorization to wear the numerical designators of their affiliated regiments. Once so affiliated, the soldier may wear the affiliated collar insignia regardless of future assignment, Harvey explained.

Computer eliminates need for personal finance records

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

The soldier's individual Personal Finance Record, which has been kept on file at the local Finance Office, will be eliminated beginning Oct. 1.

Each individual's PFR is in finance's computer system, and now that the office has the terminals to use the system, a "hard copy" file will no longer be maintained.

"The folder has been used as a history file for inquiry purposes every since we became computerized," said 1st Lt. Edward South, chief of the Military Pay Section. "Now that we have Joint Uniformed Military Pay System Teleprocessing System, we don't have any need for the PFR."

JTELS is a telephonic computer system with inquiry and message capabilities that gives Fort Benning a direct link to the Finance Center in Indianapolis, Ind., he said. "It gives us access to the most up-to-date pay information available."

PFRs currently on file at the Finance Office will be returned to soldiers by their Personnel Action Centers during November, and can be used by soldiers to maintain their own personal records.

By getting rid of the "hard" files and using the computer terminals instead, finance workers will be able to increase production and process documents more quickly. "This means they'll be able to process transactions, and serve customers, faster," South said.

In an average month, the Finance Office processes 1,200 soldiers inprocessing to the post, and assists between 500 and 800 permanent party soldiers and retirees with financial transactions.

Soldiers with pay inquiries must make an appointment through their unit PAC, and it will help speed the process if they bring along the proper documentation. "They should check with their PAC and first sergeant on what documents they need to bring with them, and this will help us help them," South said.

He stressed that soldiers should always keep a copy of documents used in any type financial inquiry.

"When a soldier turns in a form to us, we give it a document number and send it to Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., where it is microfiched and the record is kept there. So it takes several weeks to obtain a hard copy from them."

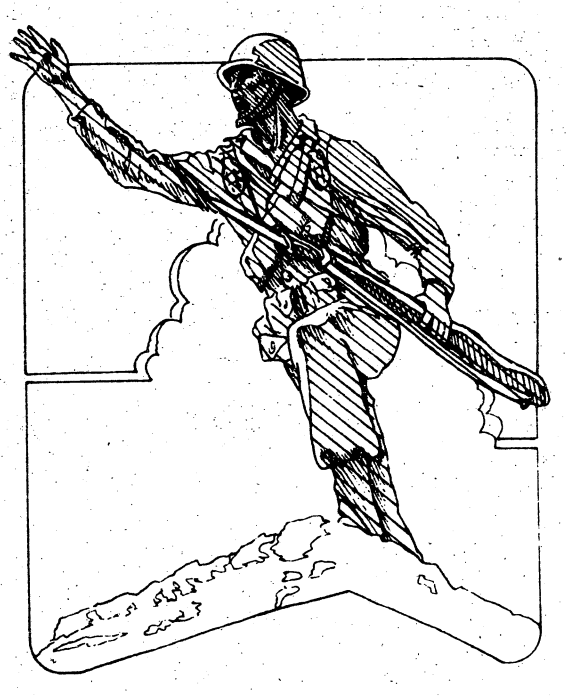
VA Q&A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I filed a claim for compensation about three months ago and have had my exam. I have not heard anything from the VA. How can I find out the status of my claim?

A — Initial claims often take longer than three months to process. You should wait a little longer before checking on your claim. If you are concerned, however, you may call the local VA regional office to check the status of the claim.

Q — Do the VA's eligibility assessment provedures apply to veterans age 65 and older?



A — The means test applies to all nonservice-connected veterans regardless of age.

Q — Does a widow whose VA benefits were restored after termination of a remarriage regain her veterans preference for civil service?

A — No. Civil service preference is not restored after the remarriage is terminated. Questions about this may be addressed to the Office of Personnel Management which is responsible for preference certifications.

Bible's laws never changing; always reliable guide for living

by Robert Washington
5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade chaplain

"Hey, Chaplain, what's the thought for the day?" Not an uncommon question for me to hear in my battalion.

It all started with the first sergeant from Company A. He believed that one of my jobs as chaplain was to provide him a thought for the day. Whenever he saw me he would ask me for it. One day the first sergeant mentioned it to the battalion commander, and from then on I had to be ready at any time to give the battalion commander the thought for the day.

Eventually, it got down to the level of the trainees in the battalion. On any given day I might be asked by anybody, from the lowest private to the battalion commander, for the thought for the day.

I remember one day when the battalion commander asked me for a thought for the day. I was unprepared. I pulled from my memory files some saying I had read years before in a bubble gum comic: "A penny saved is a penny." Needless to say, I got a "no-go" for that thought for the day.

I was reminded that my thoughts for the day had to have some spiritual value, as well as be relevant to the soldiers and what they were doing. From then on I tried, for the most part, to take my thoughts for the day from the Bible, and from then on I got a "go" for my thoughts for the day.

I think there is a lesson in this for us. As we go through life we choose values by which we live our lives. Some of us adopt the values of our parents. Others of us adopt the values of our peers. Some adopt the values of society in general. Still others look to the church or some other institution for their values.

What we need is a source of values that won't change with time; a source of values we can believe ae right and good and true, and will continue to be so.

The Bible is such a source: it gives us right, good and true values, eternal values. The Bible reveals to us the mind of God. In it we find those values that God says are important. In it we find eternal values, because as God never changes, his values never change.

We can take our values from society, from our parents, from our peers, or from bubble gum comics. But if we are looking for reliable values and eternal values, values that will get a "go" from God, I suggest we take them from the Bible.

Oh, I almost forgot. The thought for the day is: "The grass withers, the flower fades, but the word of our God will stand forever." (Isaiah 40:8)

'Mime & Music' visit Fort Benning chapels

USAIC Chaplain's Office

An Operation Appreciation "Talent Team" will be at Fort Benning this weekend to bring "Mime and Music" to soldiers and friends.

Singer Charlene Hill and mime artist Randy Hollingsworth will offer their talents and Christian witness during several shows and chapel services.

The daughter of a Louisville pastor, Hill is a secretary and also a chapel choir director at Fort Knox, Ky.

Hollingsworth is a youth minister in Jacksonville, Fla., and became part of Operation Appreciation while in seminary in Louisville.

Begun in 1966, Operation Appreciation extends the ministry of Army chaplains through a cooperative venture between civilian and military communities. The volunteer organization offers Saturday night programs, retreats, and other outreach effots to soldiers in training at Fort Knox.

The many civilians helping in the various services try to make clear their concern and support for military personnel, to express appreciation for the dedication and self-giving of armed forces people.

Helene Stewart Royster, founder and coordinator of ministries, says, "As Operation Appreciation moves into its third decade of ministry, we are, more than ever, aware of the Lord working in and through soldiers and 'helpers'"

"Mime and Music" will be at the Reception Battalion on Saturday at 1 p.m. and at Chapel Services on Sunday 8 a.m. at 4th Battalion, 9 a.m. at 9th Battalion, 10 a.m. at 2nd and 10th Battalions.

Offerings taken at Fort Benning Chapels make their appearance here possible. All are invited to attend.

Reservations are required. Call Marianne Tennant at 687-0451 for more information.

Seminar highlights Christian growth

"Becoming a Mature Christian: Growing in Faith" is the topic of a seminar to be offered Sept. 26 and 27 by the Columbus Religious Educators group.

Though meant primarily for teachers of religion, anyone interested in Christian information will find the meeting valuable.

Author Clarice Flagel and family-life expert Dr. David Thomas will be principal presenters at the seminar to be held at the Martinique Inn.

For more information, call Frances Cummings at 322-0098.

Community invited to special service

Chaplain Don McSwain and the congregation of The Infantry Center Chapel invite the community to join them for worship Sept. 28 at 11 a.m.

Chaplain Gary Bowker from the Office of the Chief of Chaplains in Washington, D.C., will be guest preacher. A potluck lunch in the chapel annex will follow the service.

For more information, call 545-2050.

Workshops improve parent-child relations

Improving parent-child relationships will be the focus of a series of discussion sessions during September and October. Classes will be taught at several locations, using the Systematic Training for Effective Parenting system.

Classes are currently underway on Wednesdays from 7 to 8:30 p.m. at the Kelley Hill Chapel, Building 9023. The teachers are Chaplains Bjarnason and Dudley.

The Army Family Advocacy Program offers STEP classes beginning today in Building 2640, to be taught by Nancy Braye and Darnell Gillipsie.

The TSB Chapel will also be the site of STEP classes beginning in October. The teachers for this class will be Jackie George and Donna Williams.

STEP classes for teens will be offered at the Family Life Center, Building 2606 each Wednesday from 9 to 11 a.m., now through the end of October. The instructor will be Chaplain White.

Energy update

Army News Service

The Army won five of 32 federal energy awards presented by the Department of Energy for 1986.

The Department of Energy offers the annual energy awards recognition of ongoing efforts to make the federal government more energy efficient, said Maj. W. Minter from the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics at the Pentagon.

All federal agencies are considered for such recognition. The awards presentation, scheduled for Oct. 2, serves as a kickoff for American Energy Month (Oct. 1 to 31).

Mannheim Military Community, Germany, was recognized for improvements in its energy management program from 1983 to 1985. The community placed first in the 1985 U.S. Army Europe energy efficiency awards program. The community reduced its fixed-facility energy consumption so that it now uses 41 prcent less energy than in 1975, Minter said.

Badger Army Ammunition Plant in Baraboo, Wis., a government-owned, contractor-operated military industrial installation, reduced its energy consumption by 58 percent from 1980 to 1985. The reduction was achieved by active support of and involvement in an energy awareness program and through the innovative use of energy reduction projects and initiatives, he said.

Lt. Col. Ray Powell, director of Engineering and Housing for the Ansbach, Germany, Military Community, was recognized for his initiative and leadership in achieving a utility savings of 35 percent below the community's fiscal year 1975 figures, Minter said.

Col. Gifford D. Wilson, while commander of Letterkenny Army Depot in Chambersburg, Pa., was able to reduce energy consumption at the depot by 21 percent — saving $664,000 — through a strong energy-reduction program that he pioneered, Minter said.

Donald Miller, energy program coordinator for the 21st Support Command in Kaiserslautern, Germany, provided guidance and management emphasis for an energy conservation program that resulted in a $2.9 million savins among the 11 communities in the command.

The Energy Department has presented the awards annually since 1981 to recognize outstanding accomplishments in energy conservation within the federal sector.

ing was extensive.

"We simulated real POW compounds with barbed wire, lights and interrogations.

"We got in the act of doing everything short of physical abuse . . . put him (the soldier) in the mud, blindfold him, mental torcher . . . anything to get the information from him about his unit, . . .

"We even acted out real situations from capture and escape to recapture," says Floyd.

The idea was to put the soldier in as real a situation as possible without injuring him, Floyd related.

"That way we were better prepared should anyone become a POW or MIA (Missing in Action)."

Today's POW training is not on the same level as back then, he added.

"I don't think we get into as much of that as we used to. Probably, we don't have the time to do as much of that type training as we would like to.

"But, if the situation dictated, I'm sure we would gear our training to meet the requirement," he says.

Although the Code of Conduct provides a basis for how a soldier should relate to the enemy if captured, the true test of loyalty to one's country lies in one's values, especially his "soldierly values."

Floyd explains, "If the soldier has been taught 'good' values from childhood, and they are soundly implanted, then he is able to fall back on those values in conjunction with the code.

"They work together, soldierly values (courage, competence, candor, commitment) and the code."

In general, Americans today have reassessed their values, says Floyd.

"Ten years ago people didn't relate to the soldier the way they do now. Today they see him as part of the family, the community. The value his importance and they also think we should find our POWs/MIAs . . . and I still think we have some," he added.

Nonetheless, the Code of Conduct is not always in the forefront of the soldier's mind," Floyd says.

"It becomes a reality the minute the first shell is fired. Then, the soldier has to think about 'will I surrender or will I continue to fight.'

"If his values are sound and he believes in his country and what it stands for, he is bound by the code to fight, to make every effort to escape if he becomes a prisoner and to not surrender his men," says Floyd.

He concluded, "I'm sure wherever we have POWs out there, they are using the code as part of their way of coping with their situation."

Cowboys over Atlanta easy pick for football watchers

Editor's note: "Guesswork" is a new column that will apppear in the Bayonet sports section each week throughout the football season.

Using his immense sports background and general hunch for the game, Thad Roberson will share with you his predictions for the outcome of the weekend's professional football matchups.

He's telling us he's better than "The Greek." Let us know what you think.

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

Atlanta at Dallas

The Atlanta Falcons are showing signs of waking up in the National Football League. But will the new defensive efforts of Mike Gann, Rick Byron and Mike Pitts be enough to hold back the explosive Cowboy attack?

Though Danny White's passing game no longer posseses the deep threat, the short passes to Hershel Walker coming out of the backfield and the occassional hookup with Tony Hill will pull the Cowboys across mid-field. The veteran, Tony Dorsett, can take it from there.

Los Angeles at Indianapolis

This will be the Rams' chance to pull into the No. 1 position of the National West. Steve Bartkowski is still struggling with a less-than-impressive total offense. But, Eric Dickerson will ride the Colts all day.

The sluggish Rams will win big over the helpless Colts.

Miami at New York

The Jets, who are coming off a 20-6 defeat at the hands of New England, have more troubles ahead.

Jet running back Freeman McNeil is now on injuried reserve with a separated shoulder.

Dan Marino will be in champion form with an offensive attack led by Mark Clayton and Lorenzo Hampton.

Miami can expect good field postition on punt returns, with Rookie James Pruitt looking to break his 71-yard touchdown return.

Pittsburg at Minnesota

The Steelers find themselves digging a deep hole early this season. But they will come out for revenge against the Vikings.

The Steeler defense will hold the Vikings to two Chuck Nelson field goals.

The Steelers are having trouble getting their offense off the ground but should be good for three touchdowns.

Should the Viking defense pull out a desperation score, the score should be 21-13, Steelers.

St. Louis at Buffalo

Both teams seem to rally toward a big fizzle.

It has taken Jim Kelly a short time to get into the flow of both the Bill's offense and the NFL.

In his third NFL game, Kelly will be less conservative and open up his talented offense.

The Cardinal offensive line is not giving Neil Lomax the protection needed to connect with Roy Green and J.T. Smith.

In this war of determination, it will be the Bills flying high.

Seattle at New England

This will be the defensive matchup of the week.

Both quarterbacks, Dave Krieg and Tony Eason, should get the protection needed to pick apart the average secondary.

The Seattle air attack will be accompanied by the special team's potential to tally just as many offensive yards, giving the Seahawks a slight margin.

In a game that may be decided by a field goal, Norm Johnson, whose range includes a 53-yarder, will have to kick perfect field goals. The two-point edge goes to the Seahawks.

Tampa Bay at Detroit

Neither team has produced much offense. Just when it seems that Bucs quarterback Steve DeBerg is on target, the Tampa Bay turnover-ghost comes into the game.

Detroit's greatest yards accumlated have come on penalties. Last week's flags sent the Lions 70 yards rearward.

In this toss-up match, Tampa Bay will pirate their first victory of the season.

Houston at Kansas City

The Oilers are now on track after a minor setback against Cleveland.

Warren Moon will light the Kansas City stadium, passing for more than two hundred yards.

Should it come to a war of field goals, Tony Zendejas is a sure bet.

It will be Moon shining over the Chiefs as the Oilers brew up their offensive onslaught.

New Orleans at San Francisco

The New Orleans "Ain'ts" — are this week.

Though Jeff Kemp seems quite capable of running the San Francisco offense after the loss of Joe Montana, the Saints defensive secondary will pick the 49ers clean.

Eric Martin, wide receiver, will account for a great portion of the Saints' offense.

The margin in this upset will be more than a touchdown.

Washington at San Diego

George Rodgers has not been working with the Redskins' offense long enough to cause severe damage in this matchup, but will keep the Chargers honest.

Dan Fouts, coming off a five-interception game, will be more accurate while spreading the offensive wealth with receivers Wes Chandler and Kellen Winslow.

Winslow returns this season 100 percent, from his 1974 injury.

The Chargers will edge the Redskins in a narrow victory.

Denver at Philadelphia

Denver comes off a road victory to face Ron Jaworski and Mike Quick in Philadelphia.

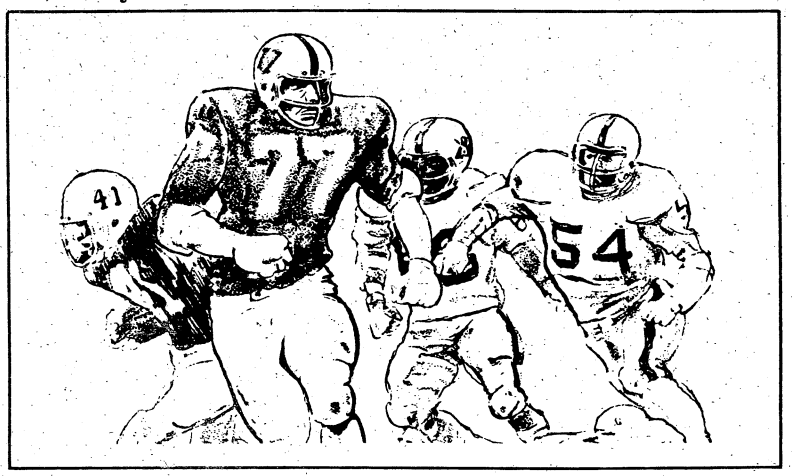
The Eagle defense is expected to dominate the game. But John Elway's season has arrived.

Favoring receiver Steve Watson, Elway and the Broncos will ground the Eagles by a six-point margin.

Giants at Raiders

The Giants' defense will be able to hold off any offensive attempt by Raider-ends Todd Christensen and Dokie Williams, though Marcus Allen will have a 100-yard game.

The threat Phil Simms poses to the Raiders' secondary can only be enhanced by the ground threat provided by a power back such as the 5 foot 6 inch Joe Morris.



Simms is expected to find Bobby Johnson in both the short and open patterns.

The New York Giants will march over the Raiders on their way to the National East title.

Chicago at Green Bay

What appears to be an obvious Bear win — is.

The Bears are tuning up for another championship season, partly because they have a winning football squad and partly because they have a winning season schedule.

Hunting

Basic rules help outdoorsmen avoid accidents, enjoy selves

by Joseph Overman
Soundoff, Fort Meade, Md.

Can you smell fall yet? You should be able to. Dove hunting season started last week.

Sure the corn fields and flyways are still hot and miserable, but most sportsmen have the fall bug by now and 90-degree heat is no deterrent to loading up the four-wheel drive and heading to a local corn field for a little wing shooting.

Modern sporting firearms are designed for modern cartridges and shot shells. When used properly, they can afford many hours of shooting pleasure.

A safe shooter observes basic rules that are approved practices on the range or in the field.

Always check to see that the barrel and action are clear of obstructions — before firing. If you stumble or fall and the muzzle of your gun touches the ground the first thing you should do is unload the gun and check to see that the bore is clear of mud, dirt leaves, sticks or other debris. If not, when you pull the trigger, you'll get the kind of action that was never built into the gun.

Never store a gun with cleaning patches, stoppers or any other kind of plug in the barrel, and if that single-shot or side-by-side is kept in the barn for convenience in eliminating chicken thieves, you're in trouble. In the first place, you probably are violating the safety rule that says guns and ammunition should be stored separately and under lock.

Secondly, dirt daubers have been known to build homes in shotgun muzzles. If you fire a gun with an obstruction in the barrel, you're inviting trouble.

Always be sure that the ammunition matches the gun. If you have a .12 gauge and a .20 gauge, that's fine. But make sure you don't have any .20-gauge shells in the hunting jacket or shell vest when you're using the .12 gauge.

The .12-.20 burst can gut a gun and maim a man. Shells help. Better still, a jacket for the .12s and another for the .20s. But the safest thing is to make sure you have only the shells for the gun you use, before going afield.

When hunting — think safety. Your gun may be a production model or custom built. In any case, it's yours to handle properly and enjoy. Have a safe one.

Regs to change, give officials control

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Hunting procedures and regulations are currently undergoing changes at Fort Benning according to Chris Dunne, chief of Natural Resources Management Division of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

"This year hunters will be assigned specific areas on post where they can hunt. There will be a daily check-in and check-out procedure. This will provide better control and improve safety for hunters," Dunne said.

"From the Department of Defense Police's side of the house, we are currently setting up a check station to support the check-in and check-out procedure. The station will be open from 5:30 a.m. to 9 p.m., seven days a week," said DoD police chief, Bennie Wright.

These changes will be in the form of an amednment to United States Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-2 and will be available not later than Oct. 1, according to Dunne.

Soccer season soars in with Silver Wings demo

The Bayonet sports writer

The 1986 Youth Activities Soccer season officially got underway with ceremonies on Gordon Field Saturday.

The Silver Wings, 507th Parachute Infantry, soared in a free fall exhibition, bringing the game's opening ball to start the first game of the season.

An addition to the YA Soccer league, the Mini Mite Division, made up of youngsters 4 and 5 years old, received the ball for the opening kick to officially begin the season.

Several matchups highlighted the day's activities.

In the Termite Division, the Red Demons burned the Hawks in a 5-1 victory.

The Demon offensive attack was led by Francisco Davila and Anthony Lane.

Also contributing fantastic offensive play was Patrick Williamson and Scott White.

The Hawks were held to one goal due to the defensive efforts of Kelly Clark, Carrie Schumacher and Matthew Nahas.

The Yellow Jackets defeated the Ghost Busters 4-2 with Julio Rivera scoring three goals.

Paul Maestas provided the fourth goal for the victory.

The Mama's Boys slipped past the Strikers, 2-1.

The Strikers only goal was scored by Christian Sandoval.

In the Grasshopper Division, the Destroyers blanked the Firehawks 2-0.

John Quinn scored the game's only goals with defensive assistance from Charles Carde and Jonathan Carnagay.

The Blue Knights opened the fall season with a 4-1 victory over the Road Runners.

Troy Nelson scored three goals while Victor Renteria provided the key passes to the forwards and scored one goal in the contest.

Joey Cercone and Andrew Hash kept the Knights' goal protected.

The Smurfs did a 4-2 dance on the D-Fedders.

Bo York, Chris Cairns, Andrew Nix, and Edgar Santana each scored a goal in the victory.

Southern Open free to soldiers

Fort Benning soldiers are invited to attend the 1986 Southern Open to be played at the Green Island Country Club at 6501 Standing Boy Road, Oct. 2 to 5.

Enlisted soldiers in Class B uniforms will be admitted free. The week opens with the South Pro Am Sept. 29, followed by the CB&T Pro Am on Wednesday, with the first round of the PGA Tour tournament opening Thursday.

Defending his 1985 Southern Open Championship will be Tim Simpson, who shot a 264 last year.

The professional golfers will be competing for a share of the total prize money of $357,000.

Qualify tomorrow for AUSA 10-miler

Fort Benning runners wishing to qualify for the Association of The U.S. Army's Annual 10-Mile Run may do so tommorrow at 8 a.m. on Dickman field.

Four runners will be chosen to represent Fort Benning in the 10-mile run as a part of the AUSA convention in Washington, D.C. Oct. 12.

Entries will be accepted through 7:30 a.m. with the race beginning at 8 a.m. on Dickman Field off 1st Division Road in the Harmony Church area.

It is expected that runners who run the 10-mile course in less than 60 minutes may be qualifers. But the best four times will represent the post.

For more information contact 1st Lt. John Underwood at 687-8066 or 544-6363.

Post boxers prepare for upcoming match

All active-duty male military personnel are eligible to participate in an amateur boxing tournament at Gowdy Field at 8 p.m. Sept. 26. Rain date is Sept. 27 at Briant Wells Field House.

Competition will be conducted in the Novice and Open Division classes.

Register now for training at Briant Wells Field House. Training sessions are conducted daily from 3 to 7 p.m.

Experienced amateur boxers may apply for All-Army trials leading to the armed forces team and higher level competition.

Boxing coaches and instructors and trainers are also encouraged to register at the Post Sports Office, Building 394 or phone 545-7519.

Bass Rodeo scheduled

A Bass Rodeo, sponsored by the 29th Infantry Regiment, hooks up at River Bend tommorrow.

The Rodeo is open to all military, civilians and their dependents of the Regiment and Army Training Center.

The official starting time is 6:30 a.m. and weigh-in begins at 2 p.m.

The entry fee of $10 per person will serve as prize money in the fishoff.

Because River Bend has no bait shop, it is recommened that anglers bring their own food and refreshments.

for toleration and reconciliation of conflicting views inspired by a common fidelity to a great objective that is the highest mark of statesmanship."

By the end of the convention, many of the original 55 delegates had left in disgust and 39 representatives were left. Of these, three refused to the end to sign the document. Many who signed did so only because Franklin convinced them they were signing it on behalf of their states, and were not personally responsible.

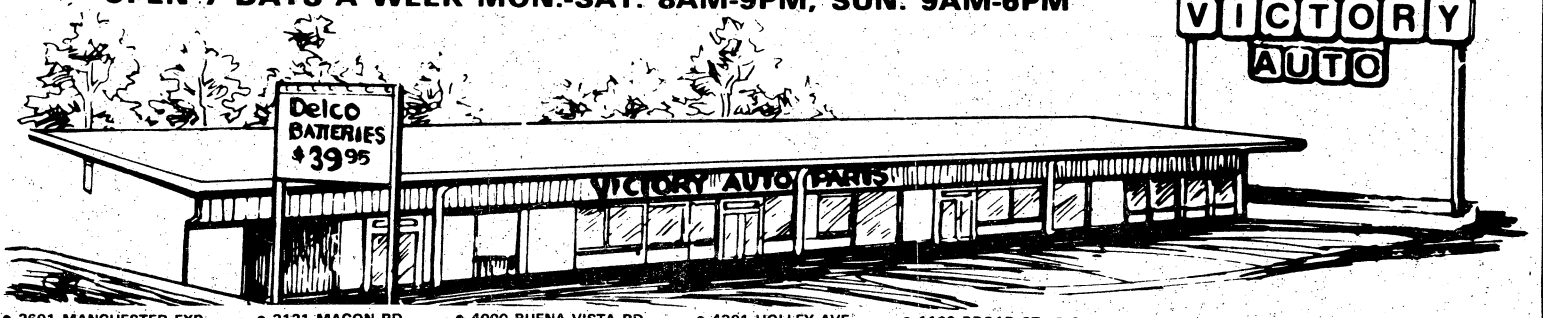
What has enabled the U.S. Constitution to survive for 200 years with so few changes?

According to Beck, one key reason is that the document consists of generalities rather than specifics. Realizing that circumstances, such as markets, trade and political parties could change, the framers were more concerned with delineating a few basic principles of government to use as guidelines, rather than a rigid pattern that would be inflexible in changing times.

By setting up a representative type government, they hoped to limit the powers of the "democrats," but fearful of any group gaining too much power, they made it a dual form of government, headed by a chief executive, to spread the power around.

The idea was to build in checks and balances to keep any one person from becoming a dictator or having too much influence. By creating an independent judiciary, the Supreme Court, they added significantly to this system of balances.

Another unique feature was the guarantee of individual liberty through constitutional limitations. As Beck points out, up to this point, governments always considered the state sovereign over the individual.



The framers believed that each individual had certain inalienable rights, which neither the state nor other people could rightfully take from him.

Once the document was signed on Sept. 17, 1787, the battle had just begun. There would follow long years of ratification by the individual states, and countless tests of the survivability of the Constitution.

But the writing of the most important document in the history of American government was done. As Franklin said, "Our Constitution is in actual operation; everything appears to promise it will last; but in this world nothing is certain but death and taxes."

If he were alive today, perhaps he would modify that dictum to say 'nothing is certain but death, taxes and the U.S. Constitution.'

Upfront

Ammo turn in question-free

Ammunition found on or off post may be turned in at the Ammunition Supply Installation Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

No paperwork is required and no questions are asked concerning the turn in.

Ammunition found after duty hours or on holidays and weekends may be turned in at the Vehicle Holding Area. Make sure the ammunition is safe before moving it. If doubt exists, contact the 89th Explosive Ordnance Detachment at 545-2914 or 545-4154, or the ASI at 544-6667.

Warrant officer positions open

The Military Personnel Center is accepting applications for warrant officers for fiscal year 1987 in some military occupational specialties.

Applicants must meet the mandatory requirements in Department of the Army Circular 601-85-4.

For more information, call Mrs. Lee or Ms. Evan at 545-1917 or 545-1402.

Self-help classes move to Building 72

Beginning Monday, classes for family self-help, energy conservation, troop self-help and fire marshal kitchen equipment will meet in Building 72 on Wold Avenue and Anderson Street.

New test will detect lower drug levels

Army News Service

Soldiers using illegal drugs face a higher risk of being caught when the Army lowers the threshold level used to confirm a positive urinalysis.

Beginning Oct. 1, the drug urinalysis testing levels at which a specimen is reported as positive for marijuana or cocaine is expected to lead to more positive identifications, said Lt. Col. Douglas L. Allen, chief of the Alcohol and Drug Policy Branch at the Pentagon. As a result of the more sensitive testing, specimens could test positive even though they might show less drug content in the system than under the current standards.

"Some soldiers who in the past have used one of these illegal drugs but had nanogram (one billionth of a gram) levels below the threshold for reporting as positive now will be detected," Allen said. "There is now no safe limit for doing drugs. Casual or sporadic drug users who have escaped detection in the past will now be identified."

The change comes with the success of gas chromotography/mass spectrometry tests introduced last year for confirming presence of drugs in urine samples, Allen said. The state-of-the-art tests provide the most specific and sensitive analytical techniques available. The new tests make it possible for the Defense Department's forensic drug testing laboratories to positively identify substances at extremely low concentrations — in theory, down to one nanogram, he explained.

Based on current figures, drug and alcohol officials predict that positive urinalyses for marijuana could increase from about 40,000 to 46,000 positive cases per year and from 4,000 to 6,000 cases for cocaine.

Although the detection rate might be higher immediately after the new testing is begun, Allen said he expects the downward trend for drug use among soldiers to continue. Positive urinalysis results for marijuana use in 1985, for example, were about 5 percent lower than the 1983 figures.

The initial screening, which precedes SC/MS testing, uses radio-immunio-assay to identify drug use. The threshold for this will continue to be set to avoid the possibility of false positive results due to passive inhalation, Allen said.

Frequent Flyer program helps Army save money

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Wanted: Army employees who take three or more commercial flights each year in the line of duty, to enroll in the Frequent Flyer Program.

According to Lt. Col. James D. Martin, chief of the Transportation Division, Directorate of Logistics, the potential savings to the government through signing up Army travelers is significant.

"Of $8.5 million spent here on travel, there's a potential savings of from $50,000 to $100,000," Martin said. "The activities that save will be those that have the most employees flying."

Airlines have offered the Frequent Flyer Program for several years. Customers who enroll earn free domestic trips for flying a certain number of miles. With some airlines, it's as little as 30,000 miles, Martin said, which a traveler can accrue by flying cross-country round-trip three times.

"We have a number of people at Benning who probably travel 50,000 to 60,000 miles each year who either haven't been enrolled in the program or have done so on their own," he said.

They haven't participated in the program before now because they didn't have the manpower to handle the paperwork involved, Martin said. This problem has been solved by the purchase of a computer system that processes the applications quickly.

"What we're trying to do is enroll these people so the government can enjoy the savings,"

AUSA purpose not really mystery: support soldier

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Nobody likes to hear stories that start out "I remember how it was back when I was a private." Keeping that in mind, I will keep this story short, because I do believe it is an important one to recall.

The year was 1979 and I had just been assigned to a headquarters battery of a field artillery brigade at Fort Bragg, N.C. Then, as now, I was a journalist. I was fresh out of college, new to the Army, new to the south and certainly new to the field artillery. Picture in your mind a very confused, very naive private first class. Now that the scene is set . . .

The very first thing my new first sergeant (an imposing man who stood about 12 feet tall as I recall) asked as he peered down at me was: "So, are you a member of AUSA?" Immediately searching my memory banks for the unfamiliar term, I willed myself to suuddenly know what AUSA was. Unsuccessful, after a time I was forced to stammer out a negative response. "No problem," he bellowed. "Sign right here!" It was not a request.

That was about seven years ago.

Since then I have discovered that the Association of the United States Army is an organization that protects soldiers' interests in Washington, D.C. and on a local, more recognizable level, the AUSA generally supports the soldier through various awards programs.

Although at first glance these two things — lobbying and handing out plaques to soldiers of the month — may not seem vital to our national defense, once one takes time to understand the overall mission of the organization, the importance begins to manifest itself.

When the AUSA was formed in 1950 through the joining of the infantry and field artillery associaions, it carved out a mission statement that still holds true today.

It is a non-profit organization committed to "maintaining a strong national security with special interest in all components of the Army." The association was basically formed to provide a group that could "speak with one voice" on behalf of the Army and our national defense. The AUSA attempts to do this through a framework of objectives, which are:

- To advance the security of the United States and support the United States Army as an indispensable instrument of that security.
- To maintain a military posture that will support the national interest in any situation threatening the security of the United States and will promote peace and stability throughout the world.
- To work for an Army of sufficient size and adequately equipped to fulfill its mission.
- To foster public support for the Army.
- To promote greater recognition of the military profession and advance the well being of those who pursue a military career.
- To perpetuate tradition contributing to espirit de corps.
- To publish a professional military magazine, which contributes to the exchange of the above objectives and provides a respected forum for the exchange of professional thought.

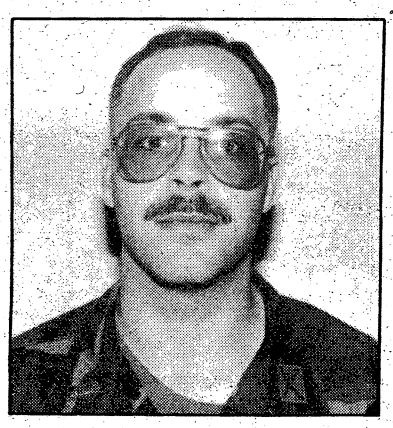
To a great extent, the AUSA achieves the objectives through its lobby efforts on the national level. That is to say, as a private organization on Capitol Hill the members are able (hopefully) to positively influence legislature that affects us — soldiers.

The AUSA has made signifcant progess in some areas important to the soldier over the last few years. One of these is the vast improvement in the standard of living. They are responsible for bringing about more money for modernizing barracks and buying furniture for them, building new barracks, bachelor officer quarters and improving and building more family housing.

Another area where the asssociation has made considerable contributions is in military medical care. Through urgings by the AUSA, some programs were saved and doctors received a bonus for joining the Army.

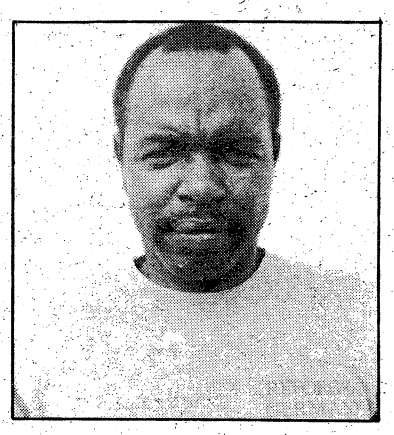
Although the work in Washington is a very substantial part of what the association is all about, it is sometimes difficult for the everyday soldier to grasp the importance of it. That is why it is important for local chapters to do a good job at reaching out to the soldier and getting the AUSA message to him. In accomplishing the objective of "perpetuating tradition contributing to espirit de corps" local chapters recognize, through awards or plaques, soldiers who distinguish themselves.

Typically, the local chapter will present the soldier and non-commissioned officer of the month, quarter and year with a plaque or some other type of memento. The Chattahoochee Valley, Fort Benning Chapter does this. It also routinely provides refreshments for large units returning from off-post deployments. This gets the message to the soldier.

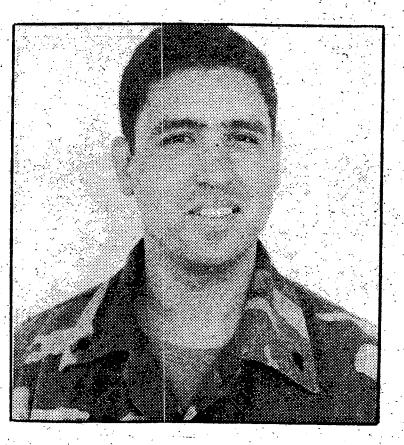


So, next time your first sergeant asks you about joining the AUSA, give it some serious thought. After all, it is there to serve you. You may as well take advanage of it.

Various voices



What do you think the Association of the United States Army does for the soldier? Are you a member of AUSA?



SFC Willie J. Mickens, Advanced Non-commissioned Officer Course, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "No, I'm not a member. I think I think they're kind of like a support group."

2nd Lt. Williams M. Stine, Infantry Officer Basic Course, 2nd Battalion, 24th Company — "I think it supports them when it's time for pay raises. Yes I am a member."

SFC Andrew Scott Jr., Company C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry — "I'm not presently a member. They try to maintain a lot of benefits for us."

SP4 Jaime Villarreal, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "I'm not a member but I think they should keep up the good work."

Sgt. Jethro Wiggins, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 34th Medical Battalion — "I think it does a lot for the soldiers as far as lobbying.

Op-Ed

NSIA Conference meets at Fort Benning next week

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning is hosting the semi-annual meeting of the National Security Industrial Association Oct. 2 and 3.

The NSIA is an organization of 360 defense-oriented manufacturers and developers. The organization brings together the nation's top industrial talent for Department of Defense briefings on the needs and projected needs of various DoD functions without the possible partisanship of a single company.

"This year's theme is 'Infantry Azimuths-1993 and Beyond.' Various directorates at Fort Benning will be briefing NSIA members on the future needs of the Infantry," said Capt. Victoria Nathaniel, from Benning's Directorate of Combat Developments.

The scheduled activities for the first day include directorate briefings. Plans for the second day are for "round table" discussions followed by a capabilities exercise.

"What Fort Benning will be doing is giving the NSIA ideas on how to best target their research and development efforts to meet the infantry soldier's future needs," Nathaniel said.

Anyone from Fort Benning who is interested in attending must have a secret clearance and submit a security letter to DCD. Other government representatives or industries must register through NSIA by calling (202) 393-3620.

Communications key to combat power

Association of the United States Army

Success in battle depends on well trained and motivated soldiers, good leaders, accurate intelligence, intense firepower and rapid mobility.

The key to unleashing this combat power with the maximum intensity at the proper place and at the critical time is the communications system.

On the modern battlefield, the Army needs improved command, control and communications systems to collect, evaluate and distribute intelligence data; to control the maneuver of fighting forces; to coordinate air and artillery support, and to organize the logistics effort to sustain the combat forces.

To process the vast quantities of information in an efficient and timely manner, the Army has designed a modern tactical communications system that will provide secure and reliable voice, teletype, data and facsimile service that is as mobile as the tactical units it supports and flexible enough to serve both massed and dispersed formations.

For the high-technology battlefield of the future, the Army insists on a system that can survive and function in a high-intensity conflict environment, under conditions of extreme frequency congestion and subject to highly sophisticated electronic countermeasures, without disruption of service.

Since our NATO allies have already fielded two systems that meet most, if not all, of these requirements, the Army has decided that it can save many millions of research and development dollars and expedite the fielding of this urgently needed system by procuring one of the NATO systems. This will also provide a system that has been operationally tested by troop use in the field, and would ensure the ability of Army units to interoperate with their NATO allies.

Congress should give its full support and encouragement to this approach so that the Army canmaintain the technological advantage that serves our nation and our NATO allies so ably in deterring Soviet aggression.

U.S. Army match for any fighting unit in world

Association of the United States Army

The U.S. Army is something on the order of one-third the way along in its planned modernization program and is probably better, man-for-man and division-for-division, than any other in the world.

Today's Army is in better shape, has a better quality soldier, and is better trained and equipped than any army, American included, in many years. And it is safe to say that, given the continued support of the administration, Congress and the American people, the Army will give a solid, professional performance even under the most trying circumstances.

If we are to continue to recruit the cream of America's youth to defend our precious freedoms, we have the deepest obligation to provide them with the resources needed to enable them to fight and win.

That includes ensuring that our soldiers have all the ammunition they need to win not only the first but also the last battle.

Fly

Martin said.

It is against Army regulations for a person to join the program and use the free trip for their own 2rivate benefit, he explained. "The government is saying that any free tickets frequent flyers accrue belong to it," he said. "Anyone who keeps such a free trip is guilty of travel fraud and will be prosecuted if caught.'

By enrolling in the program through the Scheduled Airline Ticket Office or travel office, employees will ensure that any free flight earned is used by their agency for a government trip, thus saving on travel funds.

"All they have to do is walk into the SATO Office in Building 4 or the travel office in Building 18 and say they want to enroll and we'll do everything else," Martin said.

"They put their name on the enrollment form and the forms come back directly to us," he said.

The potential savings from the program Armywide could be in the millions of dollars, he said, so employees who fly frequently are encouraged to sign up.

Apology

The article entitled "El Gentio Hispanico son diverso Americanos" that ran on page 24 of the Sept. 12 issue of The Bayonet was inappropriately titled in Spanish.

It also had numerous typographical errors that weren't corrected because no one on The Bayonet staff is familiar enough with the language to edit articles written in Spanish.

The Bayonet apologizes to its bilingual readers for this.

Family day

Spouses see training at Carmouche Range

Story and photos
by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

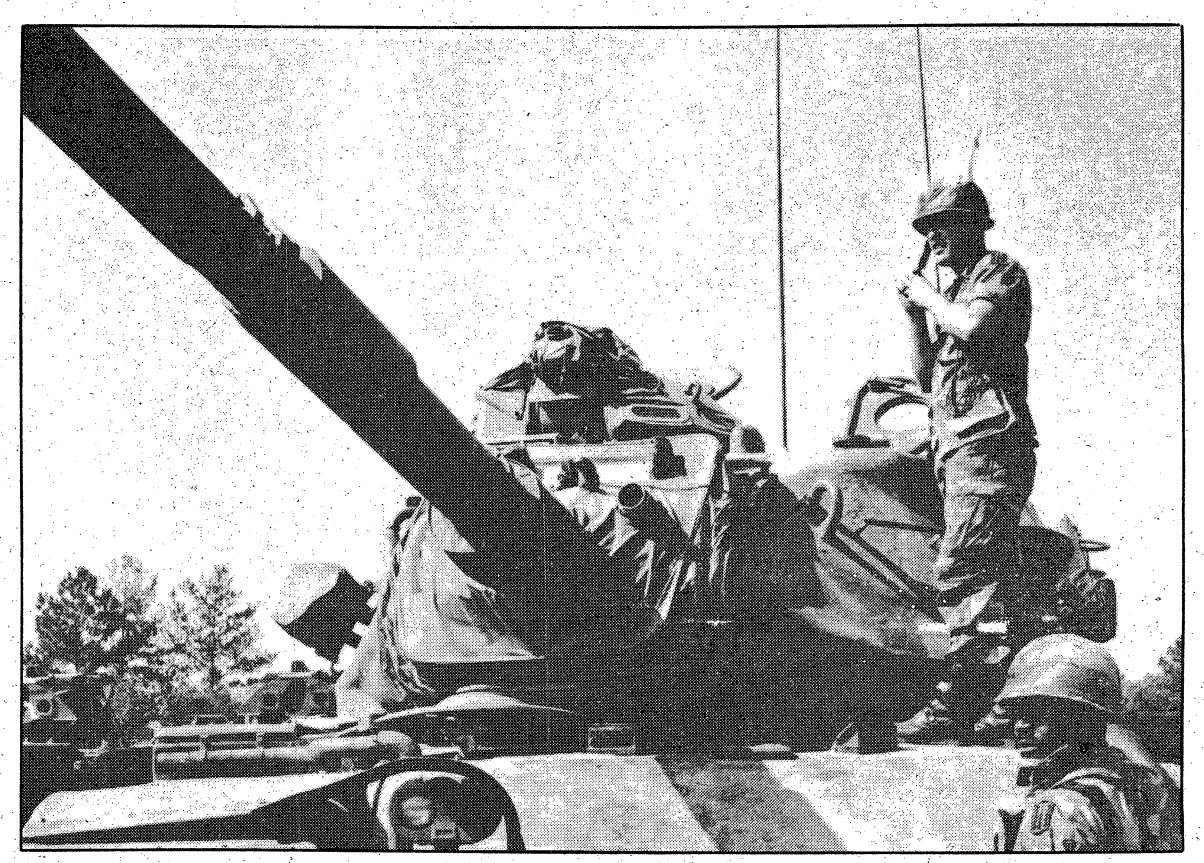
Family members of Troop A, 15th Cavalry, recently got an inside look at what their loved ones do during those long stays in the field.

The Cavalry went through annual gunnery qualifications for two weeks earlier this month. During the qualifications they took the opportunity to have the soldiers' families observe a day of training.

The family day took place at Fort Benning's Carmouche Range, which allowed the spouses and children to see exactly what the soldiers do in the field. More than 100 family members participated in the weekend event.

The Cavalry put on a live-fire display to demonstrate how the troop operates and moves. The family members also looked at various military vehicles, then lunched in the field.

"This is the first time in three years that we have involved the families and allowed them to see us in tactical training," said SFC Clarence Wood, troop master gunner operations sergeant. "The wives enjoyed it so much we will hold a family day once a year."

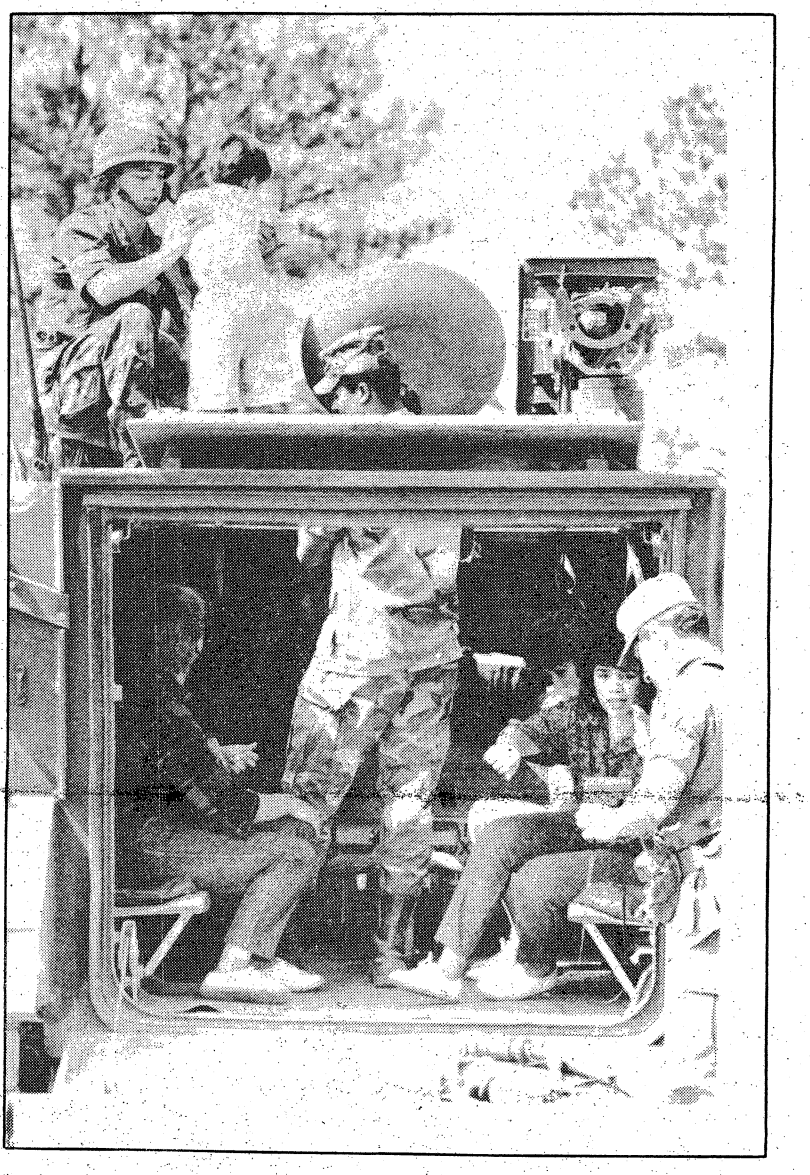


During the qualifications all weapons that are a part of the Cavalry were fired, including the tube-launced, optically-sighted, wire-guided missle weapons system.

However, before firing large weapons systems, each soldier had to qualify with his individual weapon, such as the 45. caliber, M16 rifle and M60 machine gun.

The actual gunnery involved M60 tanks, Improved TOW Vehicles, 4.2 inch mortars, and Dragon anti-armor systems.

The scouts and tankers used a point system to try to score at least 700 out of 1,000 points. Trophies were awarded to the top crews sections.



"Our mission is to keep the soldier combat ready and able to fight anywhere in the world. We must go through qualifications to keep the troops ready," said Wood. "This also tests our support. Without the support of our maintenance, cooks, and support sections we would not be able to fight."

SP4 David Wiott, tank crewman, watches his fellow tankers down range.

Mountain troops fight for 'Lusada' at Celtic Cross IV

by Brooke Bradley
Fort Lewis, Wash. Public Affairs Office

As the battle heats up, both sides prepare feverishly for the approaching border conflict that will decide the fate of the country of Lusada. Can U.S. troop intervention save the Lusadans' homeland? Or will their peaceful way of life be shattered forever by guerilla gunfire from the neighboring country of Zapita?

Lusada?

Zapita?

Any atlas will reveal that these two countries don't exist. Yet to the participants of Celtic Cross IV, the recent fight for Lusada was very real.

More than 21,000 soldiers faced the battle elements and scorching central California temperatures during the exercise last month.

The focus of Celtic Cross IV was on the light division concept in a low- to mid-intensity combat environment. But where did the Army come with Zapitan guerillas to invade the mythical Lusada?

They called in the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, and its subordinate units, to act as the 2,500-member opposing force.

"I never thought I'd end up as one of the bad guys," said PFC Scott Devlin, a medic from Headquarters Company. "This is defintely different!"

Different, but beneficial when it comes to training experience, said Devlin. "Being an aggressor is a lot harder than I ever imagined. When you are the defense, you worry about protecting your line and getting attacked. Playing the opposing force here, we're learning how to get behind those lines. Also, as the aggressors, we're never stationary very long and we are in the action almost all of the time. It's an experience we've learned a lot from," he added. "Plus, how well the 7th does here affects us since we are also light infantry."

Not only was Celtic Cross IV the first time Devlin and his "Zapitan comrades" had played the "bad guys", it was also their first major exercise.

The 2nd Brigade was activated just more than one year ago out of Fort Drum, New York. Celtic Cross IV was the Commando Brigade's first opportunity to train with its subordinate units on a large-scale basis.

"We tested a new battalion and headquarters. We wanted to see the command and control capabilities of the 2nd," said Capt. Phillip Scebelli, the operations officer.

"Celtic Cross gave us the opportunity to test these capabilities in a low-intensity environment, in a combined arms task organization. Our logistical, personnel and support systems capabilities were also tested," he added.

And Scebelli says the brigade command was pleased with the results.

"This was a good training opportunity for us," he said. "And the soldiers did a good job. They made the best of the exercise and learned productive lessons they can apply to their everyday training."

The Commando Brigade returned to Fort Benning Aug. 28, bringing with them those lessons learned playing the Zapitan opposition force. There is, however, one lesson they didn't bring back. As one soldier put it . . . "I'm sure glad we didn't have to learn the language," he chuckled. "I mean, does anyone even know what Zapitan sounds like?"

Battery A launches rounds down range during live-fire training last week.

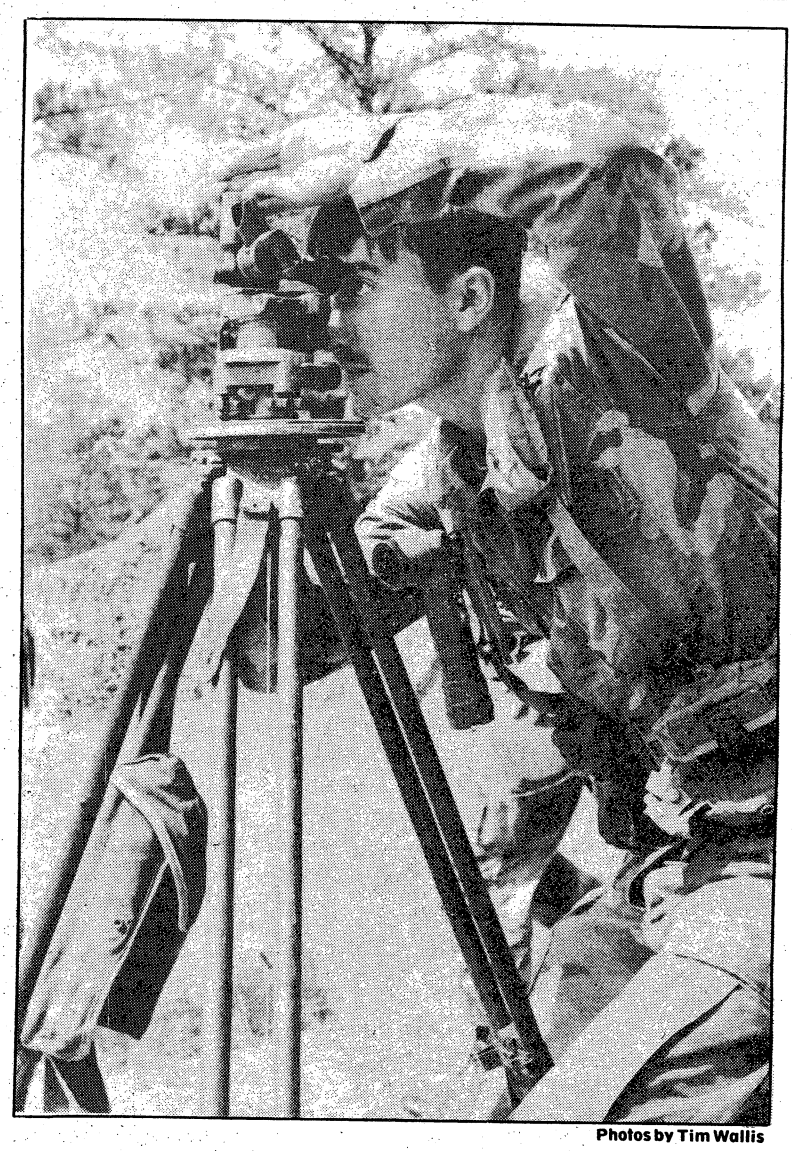
Artillerymen practice quick response

by Bill Branley and Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondents

Talk about teamwork. An artillery battery on the move doesn't have much time to react when it receives an emergency fire mission.

During several days of live-fire and dry-fire training last week, batteries of the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, practiced this and many other tactical missions that must be performed on the battlefield. The training was designed to prepare the batteries for their upcoming Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program-based qualification test set for next month.

An emergency fire mission requires a battery to answer a call for fire and have "steel on the target" within 13 minutes. Setting up for an emergency fire mission involves finding a spot and laying in the battery in short order.



"An emergency mission is just that . . . an emergency," said Maj. Bill Engel, 2-10th operations officer. "It is fired from the first possible location, without the benefit of any previous reconnaissance."

A battery gets this type of mission while on the move, usually from one firing location to another. Typically, the battery commander will already be at the battery's next location, leaving the executive officer in charge.

Engel explained that for the battery, an emergency fire mission is like a sudden change in plans. It means that a target has been spotted that must be fired upon immediately. Since the executive officer is the senior man present, he has the job of halting the battery, quickly identifying a location and getting a round in the air.

"A battery XO has a tremendous responsibility in a tactical environment," said Engel. "During a mission such as this, he's entirely on his own."

An artillery battery has many other missions, all demanding a lot of teamwork and precision timing between different groups of people. The training last week gave the batteries a chance to practice these missions using live rounds.

SFC Johnnie Williams is featured on the cover of Defense 85 magazine as he makes his way through a jungle swamp in Vietnam. The inset, by Brenda Taylor, shows Williams at his present job.

Picture on Army recruiting poster made Vietnam veteran instant star

by Brenda Taylor
29th Infantry Regiment correspondent

Rumor has it that SFC Johnnie Williams is a celebrity.

"Celebrity!" says Williams, with a comfortable smile on his face.

"Nah-h-h-h," he says, shaking his head from side to side.

"Sure, it's wonderful to have my picture in these magazines.

"But a celebrity?

"Nah-h-h-h."

Since 1969, Williams, who is assigned to the 29th Infantry Regiment operations shop, has appeared on the cover of various military magazines.

Draped in tropical combat gear, bearing ammunition for the M-60 machine gun, carrying an M-16 rifle tucked under his right arm, Williams is featured with one other squad member in actual combat in a Vietnam jungle.

He says he never knew that such a photo had been taken until 1969, when he walked into a reenlistment office at Fort Gordon, Ga.

He explains, "I went in to reenlist for my second term. "I was sitting there talking with the reenlistment NCO (non-commissioned officer) when he turned to this huge poster hanging behind his desk.

"He said, 'Hey is that you?'

"And after looking at it for a few minutes, I said, yeah-h-h! That is me."

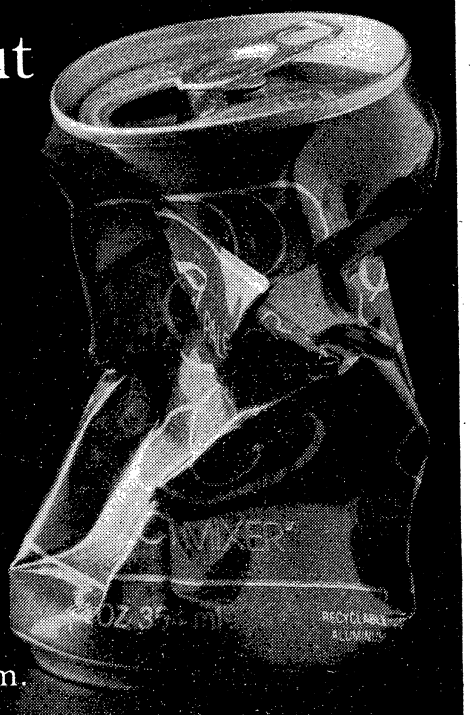
The two got a real chuckle, Williams says, and before long the entire office joined in on the laugh.

Since that time, Williams has seen himself many times on the cover of Army, Soldiers, Infantry and Defense magazines.

In fact, he has appeared so frequently on these magazines that now he expects to see himself.

He says, "When I don't see myself on the cover, I'll thumb through the magazine to see if I'm on the inside.

"Once, I did appear in the center of one of the magazines," he says.



As well as not knowing who took his photo, Williams also doesn't know in what magazine or when his photo might appear.

A co-worker of his, SFC James Harback, says, "He is professional in his conduct, and he seems to have adjusted well to the concept of the new Army . . . he thinks about things first . . . uses good reasoning before he takes action. He makes a lot of decisions that affect our troops on the ranges and he's always looking out for their best interest."

His awards include the Combat Infantryman Badge, two awards of the Bronze Star medal, two awards of the Army Commendation Medal, the Air Medal, first award for flying more than 35 flights into hostile territory in Vietnam, and the Good Conduct Medal, to name a few.

He was also part of the Vietnam Tet Offensive, 1968, and the cease fire, Phases I and II.

Program allows USARSA instructors to share tactical expertise with troops

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas correspondent

Two non-commissioned officers and three officers from Central and South America recently participated in field training exercises with U.S. soldiers as part of a training exchange program initiated by the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division and the United States Army School of the Americas.

The Latin American soldiers are guest instructors assigned to USARSA.

The commander of Company C, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, Capt. Frank Lesieur, "brainstormed" the idea after having served with USARSA as an instructor for two years.

According to Capt. Jerry Croghan, USARSA's Resident Training Division chief, Lesieur initiated the program because he recognizes the value of interoperability training and wished to use the expertise available at USARSA to better train his soldiers.

"There is a large pool of tactical expertise within USARSA," said Croghan. "Units of the 10th Mountain Div. wanted to 'tap' this invaluable resource and spark interest in the interchange of light infantry tactics and training ideas."

SSgt. Marco Batres of El Salvador and 1st Lt. Adalberto Garcete of Paraguay spent three weeks in May with Co. C while the unit trained at the Mountain Ranger Camp in Dahlonega, Ga.

"The quality of 'soldiering' in this unit is excellent. It gave me a chance to participate in mountain training — something I don't have much experience with," said Garcete.

Capt. Carlos Lopez of Guatemala deployed with Co. C in June for a week-long Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program at Fort Rucker, Ala. "It was a positive experience to have been able to participate and observe a regular Army unit of the United States," Lopez said.

"Considering that the unit was only recently activated, its officers, NCOs and soldiers showed a high state of morale and the desire to do things right. They accomplished their missions very professionally."

Capt. Eugenio Castillo represented the Republic of Chile during the 2-14th's "Celtic Cross IV" exercise in California last month.

He spoke of his recent exercise with the unit. "I consider this training a total learning experi-

Local Air Force personnel celebrate independence

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet staff writer

Members of the U. S. Air Force who work at Fort Benning celebrated their service's independence Saturday at Uchee Creek Recreation Center.

James Forrestal had taken the oath of office as the nation's first secretary of defense just nine days before President Harry Truman signed the papers that officially divorced the Air Force from the Army.

Traditionally the Air Force marks Sept. 26, 1947 as the date it became an independent member of the United States Armed Forces.

It was upon ratification of the National Security Act of 1947, that the agreement began to take form. The secretary of war ordered that an agreement be drawn to separate the Air Force from the Navy.

The Air Force from the beginning had a specific mission as stated by Maj. Gen. Edward M. Powers, the first assistant chief of air, staff and logistics.

Air Force personnel, assigned throughout divisions of Fort Benning, celebrated along with their family and friends, their service's 39th birthday.

ence. I saw firsthand what U.S. soldiers are like under simulated combat situations. They maintained a constant state of readiness and high morale throughout the exercies."

Castillo said he felt like "one of the guys. These soldiers made me feel like part of their unit. I participated in the training with them," he said.

The commander of the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, Lt. Col. Larry Smith, hopes to expand this program in the future, according to Croghan.

"The comments of the soldiers involved in the exchange program have been nothing but positive and the benefits received by all soldiers — U.S. or Latin American — have been invaluable," said Croghan.

In keeping with the U.S. military tradition of recognition for a job well done, Smith presente certificates of appreciation t USARSA's five participants dur ing a recent ceremony in front o the 2-14th's battalion headquar ters at Sand Hill.

The Bayonet Editor

Pinned down in a defensive position, your squad is taking fire from a large group of enemy soldiers. As the squad leader, you tire of the helpless position. You decide to make a move.

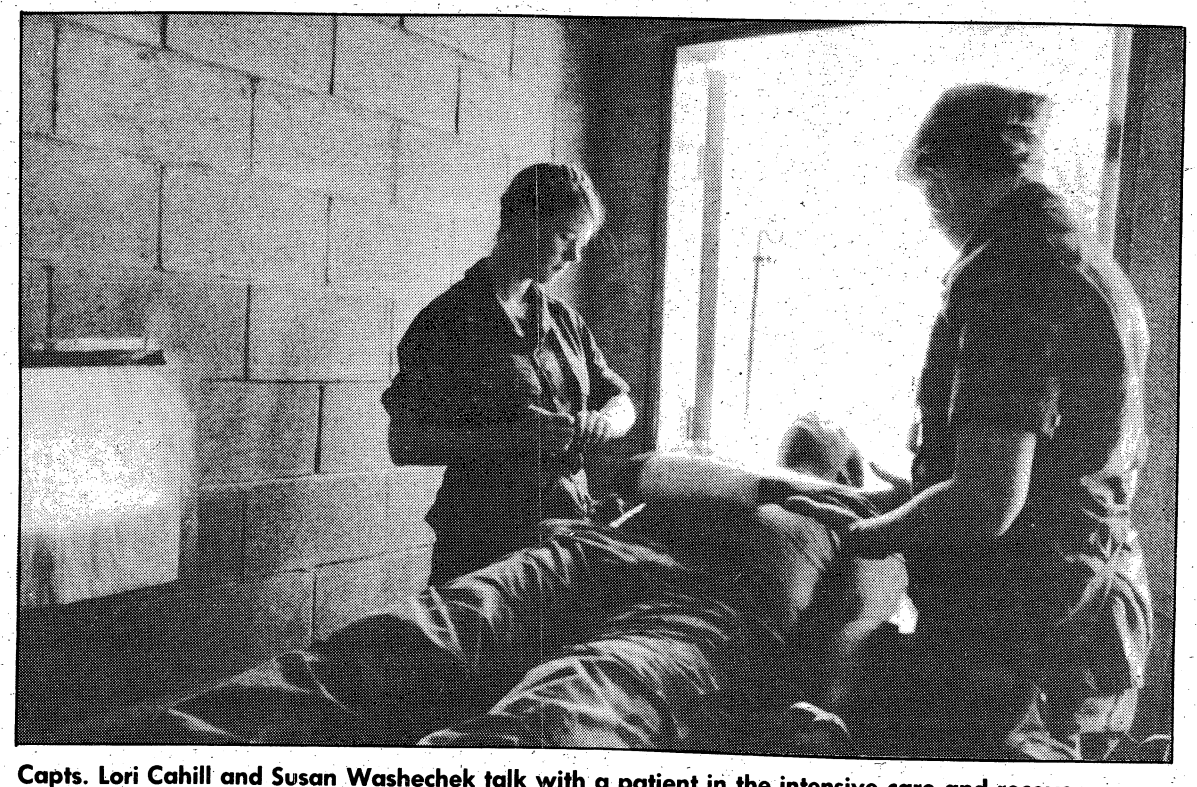
Suddenly everyone is up and running. They're on the move to wipe out the enemy. Bullets whiz by. In the fury, you don't realize you've been shot in the leg.

Suddenly you fall to the ground. You can't move. Looking down at the area where you feel pain, you see blood pouring from a gaping wound. You try to maintain even breathing and stay in control of the situation. Your head is swimming and you're drifting, drifting, drifting. . . .

As you float in and out of consciousness you are vaguely aware of what is happening around you. You're placed on a stretcher and loaded on board a helicopter. Someone says 'Don't worry, Sarge, they're takin' you to the MASH.'

After what seems like only a few seconds, you open your eyes to the orchestrated buzz of activity in what appears to be a hospital. A doctor is looking at your leg while a nurse attaches an intravenous needle to your arm. Another soldier is standing beside your head writing the information from your identification tags onto a piece of paper.

Welcome to the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital. Commanded by Lt. Col. Howard R. Elliott III and part of the 34th Medical Battalion, the 2nd MASH is one of the Army's frontline hospital units tasked with providing immediate stabilization to battlefield casualties.



"We're right there. Closest to the front line . . .sometimes too close," said Maj. Marvin S. Hilliard Jr., the unit's chief nurse. Hilliard said that each division in the Army has one MASH assigned to offer immediate, life-sustaining care to soldiers injured in combat.

The doctors, nurses, operating room technicians, medics and adminitrative specialists of the 2nd MASH exercised their skills recently during an Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program on post. While they are accustomed to performing in a field environment (they deploy on the average of once each quarter of the fiscal year) this time things were a bit different.

"For the first four days we were set up at a field location," Hilliard said. "That in itself is challenging because we have to put the ward tents up around trees, always keeping the practical running of the hosptial in mind." The chief nurse said remaining mindful of patient flow and the design of the hosptial can test their imagination.

USARSA

Thirty Salvadoran officers graduated Sept. 19 at the U.S. Army School of the Americas from the Combat Officer course.

Guest speaker for the graduation ceremony was Chilean Lt. Col. Pablo Belmar, a guest instructor at USARSA.

The 11-week course offers training in company and battalion-level tactics, defensive and offensive operations, artillery employment, and internal defense and development, which includes psychological operations.

This event brings to date the total number of graduates from El Salvador at USARSA to 4,533, since USARSA was founded in 1946. Marco Morales, U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Six countries from Latin America represented at the U.S. Army School of the Americas celebrated their national independence anniversaries Sept. 16 to 18 here.

Very much a legacy now at USARSA, these observances are appropriately titled as "Brindis", or toast, to honor a country's independence.

Mexico celebrated its 176th independence anniversary Sept. 16 in a ceremony at the Fort Benning Officers' Club. Lt. Col. Alfredo Herrera, a guest instructor from Mexico assigned to USARSA, spoke on how Mexico has evolved in this hemisphere to the 200 or so invited guests and USARSA personnel who attended.

Four countries that celebrate independence anniversaries on Sept. 15, celebrated their observances Sept. 17 also at the Officers' Club. Those countries were Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras. Of these four countries, Costa Rica, El Salvador and Guatemala declared their independence in 182 Honduras declared its independence in 1838.

Chile observed its 176th independence anniversary Sept. 18 at the Officers' Club. Chile declared its independence in 1810.

An effective and interesting approach to "getting the word out," is the "67th Maintenance Battalion Material Newsletter" that for the last 18 months has been a regular monthly publication for the tentative units.

The Battalion Material Office thought many of the Department of the Army maintenance related letters, messages and other publications were not always making it down to the unit motor pools or repair facilities.

The solution was to publish a monthly newsletter to serve as a quick reference for all of the publications from the various sources.

The intent of the newsletter is not to republish these sources of information. The MATO crew instead lists the source and/or reference and the subject for the material.

The newsletter also contains a monthly calendar of maintenance events, competitions, and safety tips. The Battalion commander, Lt. Col. Thomas A. Hooper fully supports this endeavor and as a further example he has a "Commander's Comments" paragraph in which various maintenance subjects are discussed.

This project is just one more example of the professional dedication of soldiers in today's Army. The 67th Maintenance Battalion's motto says it all "Strength Through Support.— by Robert Kiernan, 67th Maintenance Battalion.

Reserves

The 2nd Brigade (Infantry) 70th Division (Training) arrived at Fort Benning Aug. 23 and hit the ground running.

The reserve unit headquartered in Flint, Michigan has a mobilization mission to assume the duties of the 1st Infantry Training Brigade within several weeks of arrival at Sand Hill.

Four battalions and a brigade headquarters moved into the 1st ITB area and went to work immediately.

"It was a good confidence builder. It makes you realize that you can do things you didn't know you could do," said 2nd Lt. Lynn Peters. — Vanessa Bailey, U.S. Army Reserve

Court report

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

A major battle in President Ronald Reagan's war on drugs was won at Fort Benning recently when Pvt.1 Matthew R. Kelly, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Weapons Detachment was sentenced to 11 years in prison for selling cocaine to an undercover government agent.

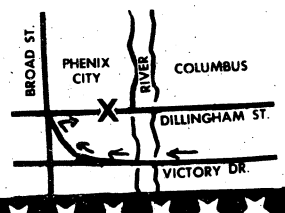
Kelly was targeted by the Fort Benning Drug Suppression Team in early April as a possible courier of illegal drugs from Florida to Fort Benning.

On April 14, a government agent approached Kelly and asked to buy some cocaine. Kelly readily agreed and sold the agent one-half gram of cocaine. Later that week, the agent asked to buy more cocaine. Kelly agreed, but required the agent to pay him in advance. Then, on April 21, Kelly delivered another one-half gram of cocaine to the agent.

Several members of Kelly's chain of command testified that Kelly was a good soldier who never caused any problems. They said they were unable to detect any drug used by Kelly.

Both of Kelly's parents testified during an extremely emotional portion of the trial. They described to Lt. Col. Douglas Andrews, the military judge, the drug-related problems Kelly experienced as an adolescent and asked him to consider their own failure to help Kelly overcome his drug problems earlier on.

Kelly took the stand during the sentencing portion of the trial and characterized himself as a long-time drug addict who resorted to drug dealing to help himself support his habit. Though he expressed sorrow for committing the serious crimes, he declined the judge's invitation to identify his source of illegal drugs.



Kelly could have been sentenced to as much as 15 years in prison for each of the two sales of cocaine. Despite the favorable testimony of members of Kelly's chain of command and his parents, Kelly was sentenced to be confined at hard labor for 15 years. He was also sentenced to forfeit all pay and allowances and to be discharged from the service with a bad conduct discharge.

Ask the 'judge'

Editor's note: These are questions the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be considered a substitute for advise from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

Legal Assistance

Q: My spouse and I are having marital problems. He came home today with a document called a "separation agreement." Please explain what this document is. How can I be sure that my interests are being represented before I agree to sign it?

A: A separation agreement is a contract between you and your spouse. It states that although you will remain legally married, you will live separately and apart as though you were not. It sets out the terms that you both agree to live with as part of the separation, such as child custody and visitation, child and spousal support and division of property.

In the event you eventually get divorced, the separation agreement may be used as part of a final divorce settlement.

You have the right to discuss any proposed separation agreement with an attorney to make sure the agreement is fair to you, so contact the legal assistance office for an appointment before you sign any papers.

Q: I've heard that Florida doesn't have any state income taxes. Can I go to Legal Assistance to change my legal residence so I would have to pay any state income taxes?

A: Your legal residence (domicile) is the state that you intend to be your permanent home. You should not change it without good reason.

If you wish to change your domicile you must first establish some necessary links with that state. It cannot be changed by simply getting a post office box in a state.

Actions such as buying a house in the state, registering your automobile, registering to vote, obtaining a driver's license are things that show that you intend to reside permanently in the state once you have separated from the miltary.

Once this is done, then ask your personnel Actions Center noncommissioned officer for a DD Form 2058. This is an instruction to finance to change your tax withholdings from one state to another. Lastly, it's a good idea to inform your old state of your change in domicile. This may stop future problems before they start.

Q: My company commander is accusing me of stealing from my roommate in the barracks. Do I see a legal assistance attorney?

A: Legal assistance attorneys do assist soldiers with their personal legal problems, including some non-military criminal matters. They do not handle military criminal actions. Rather than see a legal assistance attorney, you need to contact an attorney at the Trial Defense Service.

Q: I've talked to my company commander. My ex-girl friend called him and accused me of being the father of her child. What should I do?

A: Paternity allegations are covered in Army Regulation 608-99. That regulation describes the steps that your commander should take in answering your ex-girl friend's complaint.

Basically, you will be asked to either admit or deny that you are the father of the child. If you deny that you are the father of the child, then no further action should be taken by your commander until there is a court determination that you are the father of the child.

If you should receive papers from a court alleging that you are the father of the child, see a legal assistance attorney immediately. You only have so many days to answer this complaint or you will lose by default.

Q: I've been having all kinds of trouble with a new car that I bought. I am thinking of turning it in to the dealer. What will happen to me if I do that.

A: What you are thinking of doing is called a "voluntary repossession." After the car is back with the dealer, it will be sold at either a public or private auction.

Whatever amount of money the automobile will bring will be credited against the amount that you still owe on the sales contract. You will still be responsible for the balance of the contract.

Rather than take the car back, legal assistance attorneys advise that you contact the dealership regional distributor with your complaint. If they can not satisfy you, then contact the local Better Business Bureau.

Fellowship available here for people of all religions

by Pat Hash
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment chaplain

Several months ago I was at the hospital visiting a Ranger. As I got off the elevator, a woman with three small children approached me and said, "Chaplain, I am so lonely; my husband is always gone. I have no family here and I think I am going crazy."

Does that sound familiar? We sat down to talk and I soon learned that she was Catholic. It then occurred to me that Fort Benning has a group that can help meet this woman's need. That group is the Catholic Women of the Chapel.

True faith promotes the fellowship of the faithful; and whether the faith be Jewish, Protestant, or Catholic, Fort Benning has faith groups organized and designed to meet the needs of Fort Benning wives. These groups promote love, faith, study and fellowship in a beautiful way.

Psalms 91 is a beautiful meditation that reminds us of God's providence. God will never abandon us. He will always protect us. He is always with us to prevent us from suffering harm.

According to the Psalm, and according to belief, one way the providence of God toward us is exercised is by the faithfulness of others. Fort Benning's women's faith groups inspire us with good thoughts through study, assist us in our weaknesses, and help us to combat loneliness.

It is beautiful to watch these women of faith reach out to all wives irrespective of age, color, creed, or their husbands' rank.

When husbands are gone, they are willing to do whatever is necessary to provide ministry. And it is a holy thought to think that God has assigned women on Fort Benning to head these groups.

Give of yourself to one of the fine women's faith groups. No longer do you have to be alone, afraid, or out of fellowship with other Army wives or women.

Individual effort key to success

by Bill Branley
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

A group of officers from the 197th Infantry Brigade were treated to an old story told with some fresh insight this week when the post chaplain addressed the group at a prayer breakfast.

Chaplain (Col.) Roy Mathis, U.S. Army Infantry Center chaplain, talked about normal, average people who strive to be overachievers, and how attitude and courage help them achieve their goals.

The theme of his talk Tuesday morning at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center was "Be All You Can Be."

"We can't 'be all we can be' outside of a relationship with God," Mathis said.

To illustrate his point, Mathis told the story of David and Goliath.

"David was a teenage lad who was determined to be all he could be," he said. "He was the only person to volunteer to ace the giant Goliath."

Mathis said that the story had a personal message for him. As a high school youth of small stature, he fought often because he felt the need to prove himself. His grandmother told him the story of young David slaying his giant enemy.

Mathis

"You will only be all you can be when you tap into God's resources of strength and power," Mathis said. "Goodness is greater than evil, and in the long run you will win if you stand up for what is right."

David won his battle against Goliath, but didn't claim any of the credit. Mathis pointed out that David felt he was simply the one selected to carry out God's will.

"Courage is contagious," Mathis said. "A team will fall in behind a leader, as David's people did behind him. The Army needs officers and non-commissioned officers with the same type of courage."

Another lesson in the story, he said, is the importance of attitude.

"Ordinary people have performed fantastic things because they had a positive attitude," Mathis said. "Attitude is sometimes more important than ability. David's fighting ability was small, yet his attitude and courage carried him."

David was not scared away by obstacles, he said.

"Obstacles are those frightening things that jump when we take our eyes off our goals.

"In the end," Mathis said, "God is the deciding factor. God's power and strength created this world. It is available to us."

CWOC to sponsor prayer retreat

The Catholic Women of the Chapel are sponsoring a Retreat Day Oct. 3 at the Blessed Trinity Retreat House in Alabama. Sisters Virginia and Nancy will discuss prayer with the participants.

Reservations are required. Call Marianne Tennant at 687-0451 for more information.

Seminar highlights Christian growth

"Becoming a Mature Christian: Growing in Faith" is the topic of a seminar to be offered today and tomorrow by the Columbus Religious Educaors group.

Though meant primarily for teachers of religion, anyone interested in Christian formation will find the meeting valuable.

Author Clarice Flagel and family-life expert Dr. David Thomas will be principal presenters at the seminar to be held at the Martinique Inn.

For more information, call Frances Cummings at 322-0098.

Community invited to special service

Chaplain Don McSwain and the congregation of The Infantry Center Chapel invite the community to join them for worship Sunday at 11 a.m.

Chaplain Gary Bowker from the Office of the Chief of Chaplains in Washington, D.C., will be guest preacher. A potluck lunch in the chapel annex will follow the service.

For more information, call 545-2050.

Workshops improve parent-child relations

Improving parent-child relationships will be the focus of a series of discussion sessions during September and October. Classes will be taught at several locations, using the Systematic Training for Effective Parenting system.

Classes are currently underway on Wednesdays from 7 to 8:30 p.m. at the Kelley Hill Chapel, Building 9023. The teachers are Chaplains Bjarnason and Dudley.

The Army Family Advocacy Program offers STEP classes beginning today in Building 2640, to be taught by Nancy Braye and Darnell Gillipsie.

The TSB Chapel will also be the site of STEP classes beginning in October. The teachers for this class will be Jackie George and Donna Williams.

STEP classes for teens will be offered at the Family Life Center, Building 2606 each Wednesday from 9 to 11 a.m., now through the end of October. The instructor will be Chaplain White.

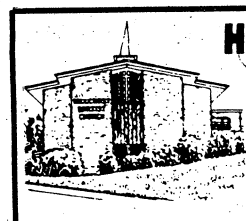
For more information, call 544-1692 or 544-3070.

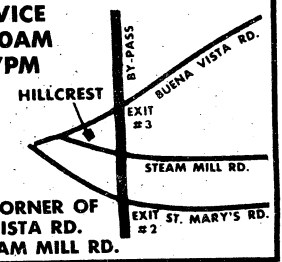
Center offers language classes

The Religious Education Center offers English language classes for foreign born spouses of soldiers and personnel from the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Classes are free and anyone interested is encouraged to attend.

Volunteer teachers are urgently needed.





For more information or to volunteer, call 545-2366 or 545-4715.

Hospital

most recent field problem came after four days at a field site, when the unit moved into the German villiage at the Military Operation in Urban Terrain site and established the hospital inside the buidlings there. "This was the first time we have ever set up in buildings and it was really interesting," Hilliard said. "In most cases we would be in tents in a field location. But, we have to be able to do both," he said.

Designed to provide general surgery, such as that for gunshot wounds, orthopedic surgery and cardiovascular surgery, the 2nd MASH has six areas or wards. The hospital has a 60-patient capacity, which, according to Hilliard is plenty because no one would stay at the MASH for more than 72 hours. "The term 'meatball surgery' is pretty accurate," he said. "We're here for stabilization." He explained that if a casualty needed additional care, he would be sent on to another, more fully equipped evacuation hospital.

When a patient is brought in to the MASH, he first goes through patient administration where all of his personal information is annotated. He then goes into the emrgency medical treatment where a doctor makes a prognosis. If it is determined necessary, the next step is "pre-op." The operating room comes next, followed by "post-op" and the intensive care unit.

The various areas, as Hilliard explained, are normally fashioned out of tents. The hospital also has "boxes" that can be kept sterile that are used as operating, supply and x-ray rooms. Each of the "boxes" is transported on a dolly that works off hydraulics, allowing for the "boxes" to be leveled, regardless of the slope of the ground, when they become rooms.

Whether it is set up in tents or buidlings or a combination of both, the power to provide heat, air conditioning, water and electricity is vital to the operation of a hospital. Hilliard said the 2nd MASH gets its power from a utility pack that is run off an engine similar to that of a UH-1 helicopter.

A hospital, by its very nature, seems to be rather immobile. So, the thought of a unit of such complexity just picking up all of those tents, operating rooms, power generators, x-ray rooms and everything else is difficult to imagine. 2nd MASH does it, however. And the soldiers of the unit can usually have the entire operation set up and functional within 1 1/2 hours of pulling into a new location, according to Hilliard.

Shop Three fixes everythin from tents to truck bodies

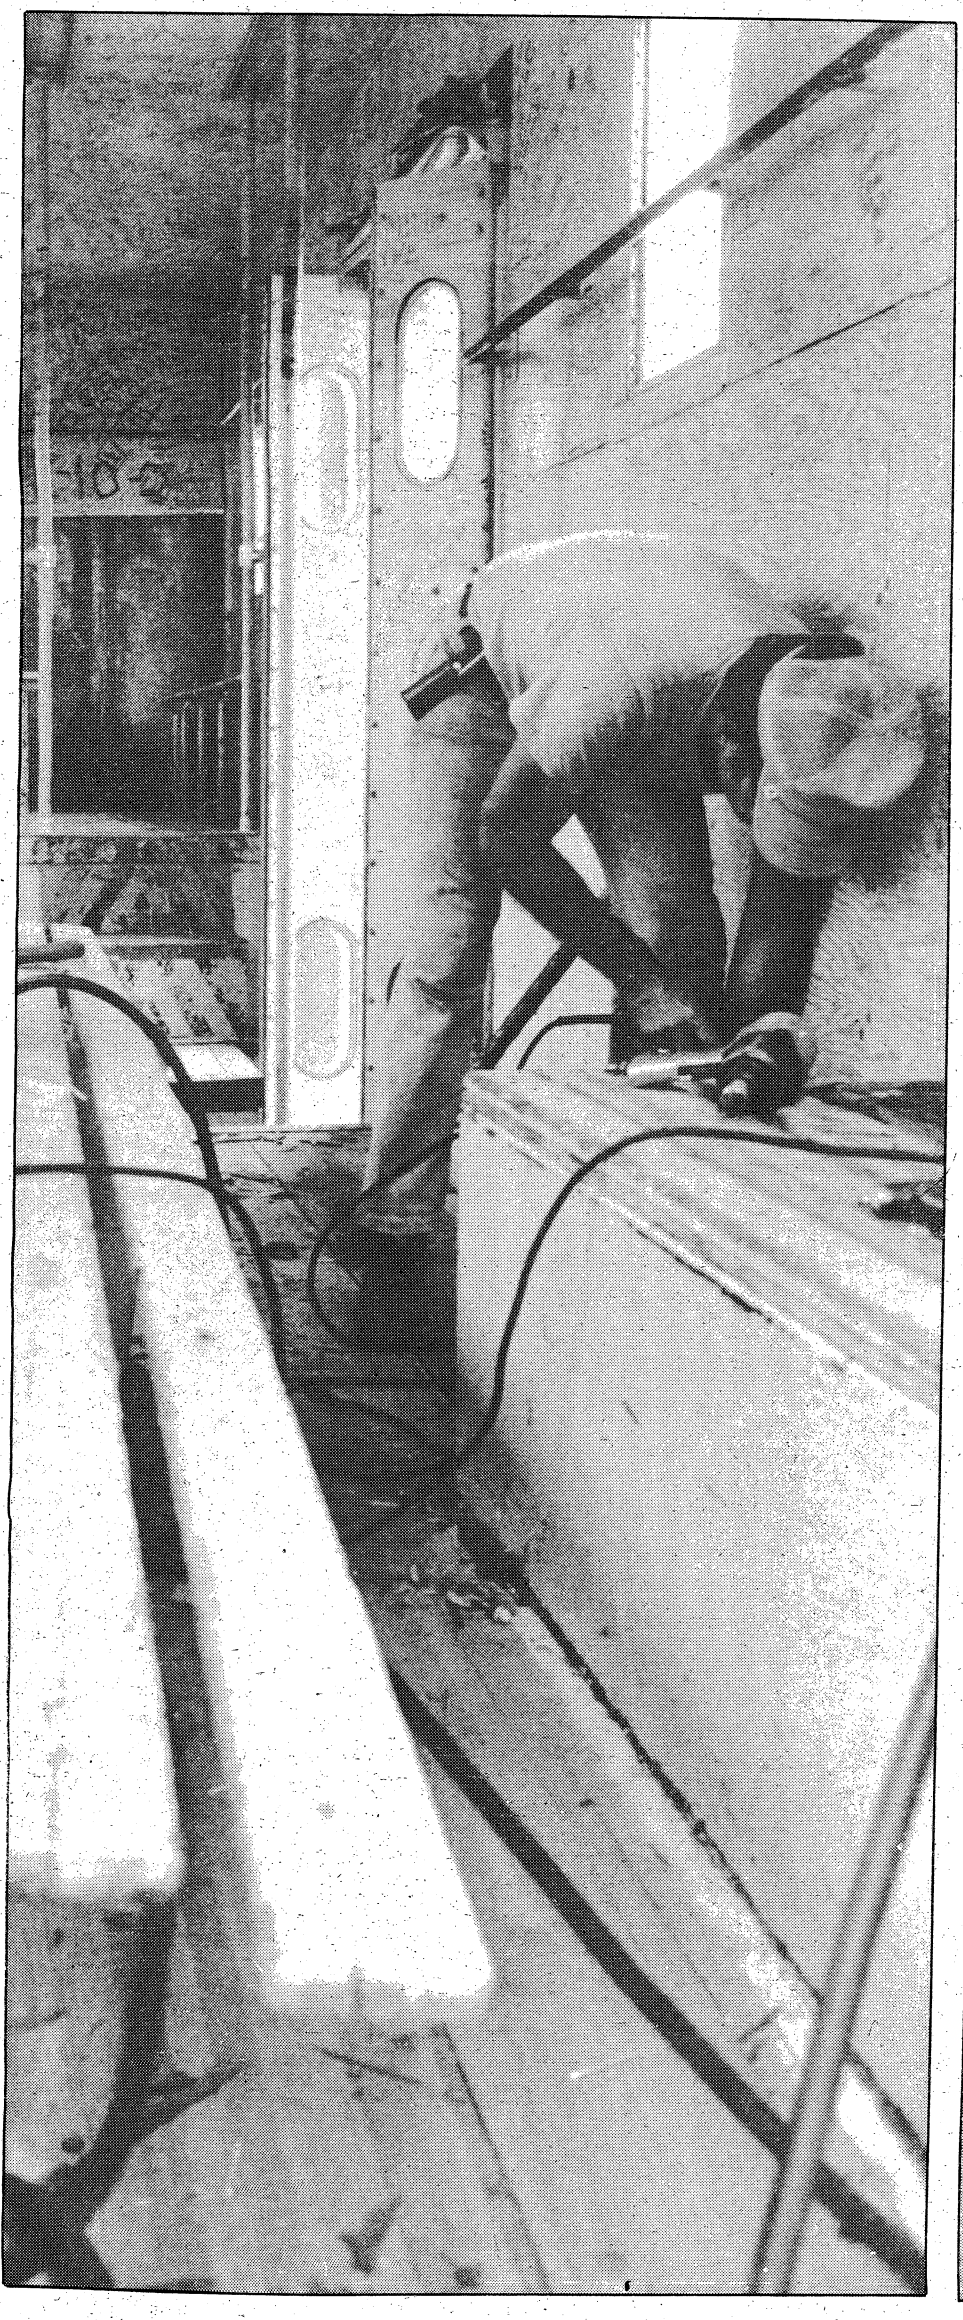
Story and photos by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Maintenance Division's Shop Three fixes everything from vehicle bodies to load-bearing equipment to office furniture. They even helped construct the Iron Mike statue that stands in front of Infantry Hall today.

Shop Three, one of five in the Maintenance Division, is comprised of a canvas, web, clothing and textile section; a machine shop; a metal furniture repair section and a wood and furniture upholstery section. Their motto could be "We can fix anything."

Milton Greer, the general foreman, oversees the huge operation that seems to keep Fort Benning together. His canvas shop foreman, Joseph Steele, has been at Shop Three for 27 years.

"There are 81 employees at Shop Three. In our canvas section we repair all types of tentage and all damaged load-bearing equipment. We also sew on insignia for enlisted soldiers free of charge and repair damaged uniforms," Steele said.



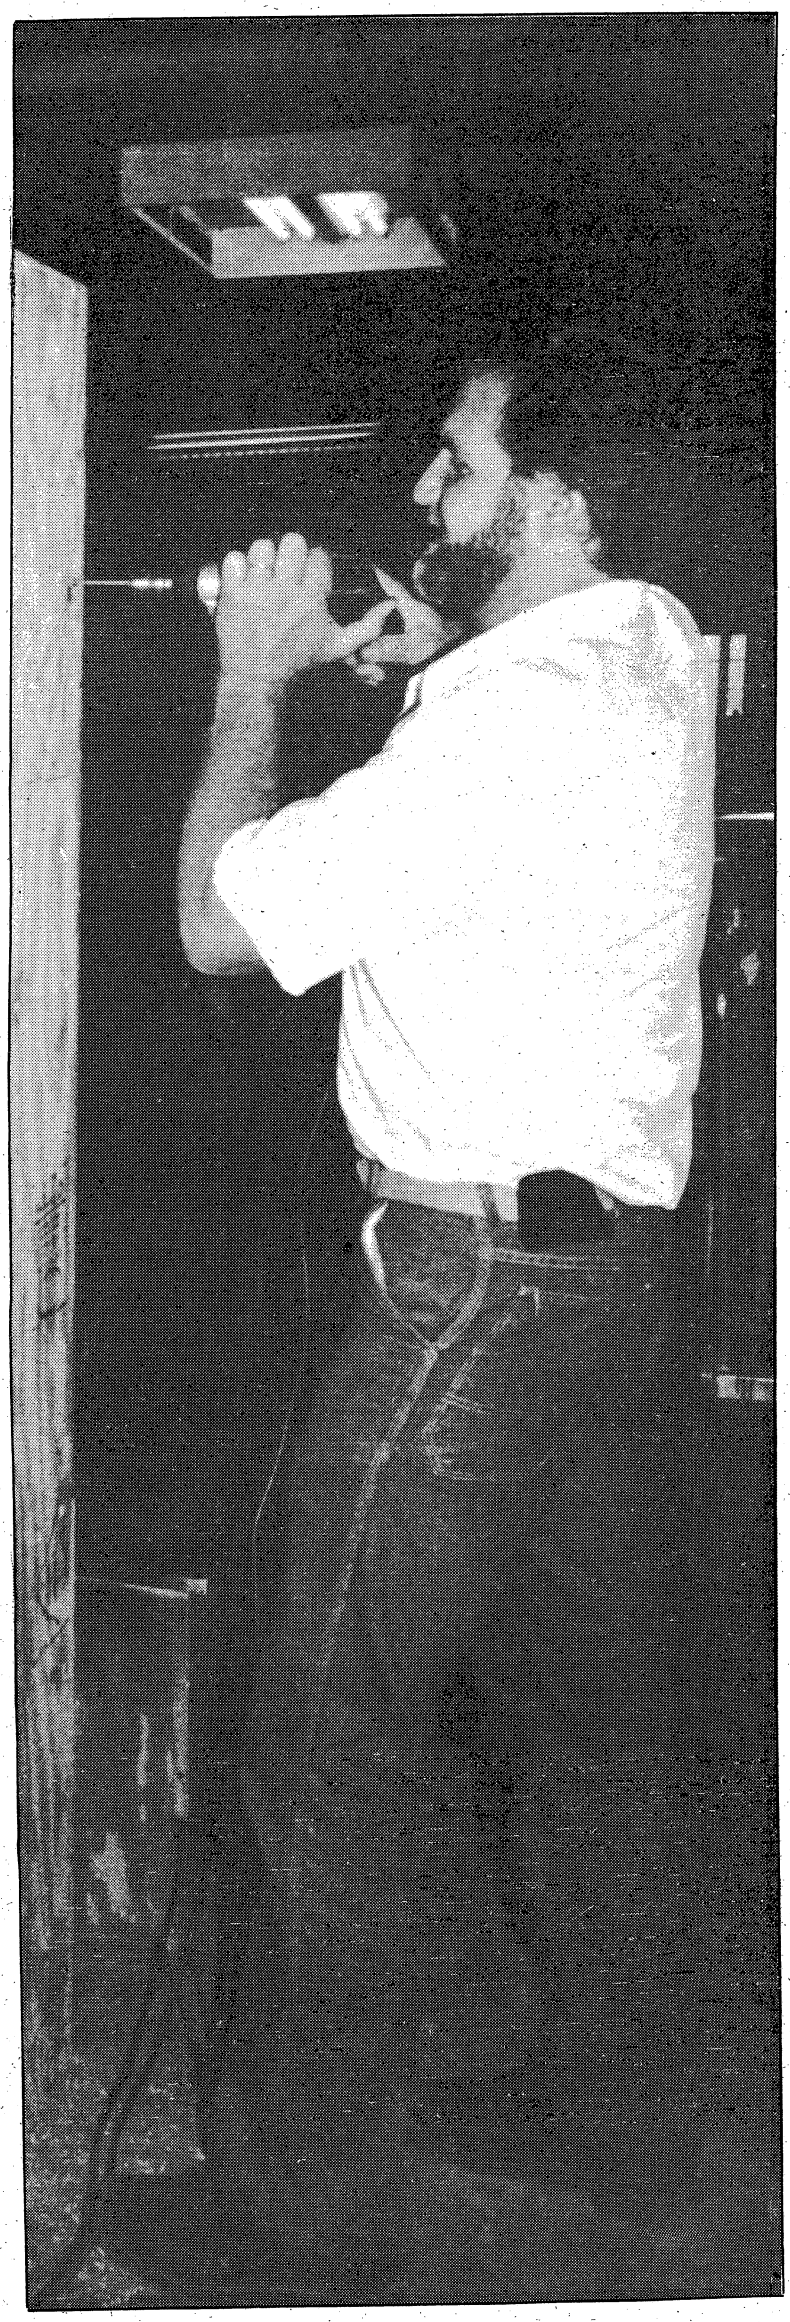
The machine shop manufactures needed metal items and equipment from scratch can repair just about anything made of m according to Steele.

The metal furniture repair section menc and fixes all metal furniture, such as chai bookcases and desks.

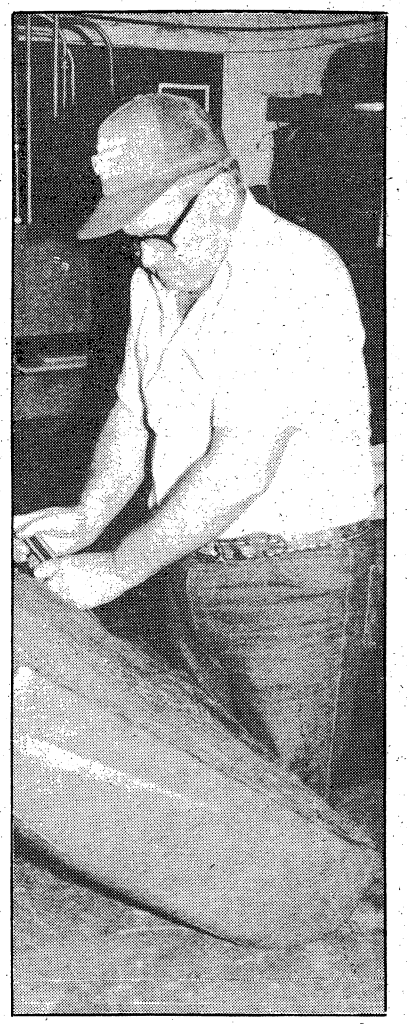
The wood furniture section repairs all wooden furniture and equipment, in additi specialty carpentry jobs. Mike Moss, a woodcrafter, has built wooden display cas for the National Infantry Museum as an example of their specialty jobs.

In the 1960s the shop supplied the tools facilities for the construction of Iron Mik statue in front of Infantry Hall.

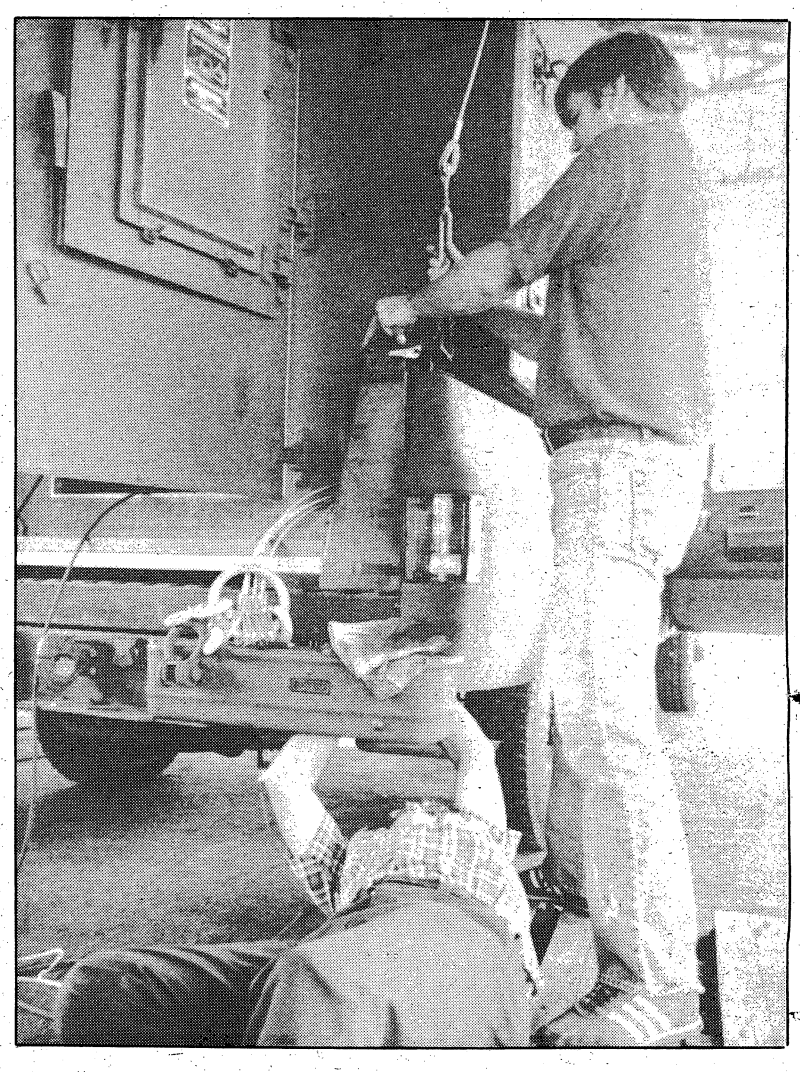
"Without Shop Three Fort Benning wou in kind of a mess," Steele said.



Harrold Kendrick refurbishes the inside of a "cattle car" transportation vehicle.



Rosa Lawrence, a clothing inspector, checks battle dress uniforms turned in for repair.



Henry Thornton, a veteran woodcrafter, saws lengths of wood for a project in the woodwor section.

Woodcrafter Mike Moss works on a special security cabinet for a computer and printer for the Infantry Center.

Ed Compton patches a hole in a vinyl chair in the upholstery repair shop.

Royce Pate, lying down, helps Wayne Yalberton, a welder, install a radio antennae base on a vehicle.

Effie Thomas stitches together a torn shelter half in Benning's Shop Three.

Energy Update

by Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

The Energy Office gets information from several sources to help us measure our progress in conserving energy.

Examples include inspectors performing building energy audits, energy reports prepared by unit or organization energy conservation officers and inspector general inspectors. This information helps us spot trouble areas that need to be corrected.

Most of the unnecessary lighting could be eliminated, resulting in substantial energy savings.

Periodically, air conditioning systems are found operating all night and all weekend in unoccupied buildings. Since these systems require a huge amount of energy to operate, this is an excellent example of total energy waste.

The Fort Benning energy regulation requires that air conditioning be turned off 30 minutes before quitting time and common sense should prevent anyone from leaving the units on.

The Energy Office will be taking a close look at these areas and following up to eliminate this energy abuse. We request your assistance in correcting these problem areas. A simple check performed daily could eliminate this energy waste.

Pets can now fly same flight as owners do

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

In a move guaranteed to win the hearts of animal lovers everywhere, the Military Airlift Command recently approved concurrent travel for family pets.

In the past, people had to ship their animals on a commercial airline, which meant paying commercial rates. Also, the animal had to depart from a different point than the family. This meant a separate trip to the airport and kennel fees if the pet arrived at the destination before the family.

During fiscal year 1986, MAC conducted a pet shipment test to see how costly it would be to send pets on the same aircraft with families. Although exact figures were not available, Fido apparently won out.

As a result, man's best friend will no longer be forced to endure the cruel whims of fate and airline baggage handlers.

Beginning Oct. 1, MAC will begin shipment of pets as part of its normal service to Department of Defense passengers on selected flights.

Pets are defined as dogs and cats only, and each animal must be caged in an approved container for shipment.

Pet shipment is restricted to passengers making a permanent-change-of-station move and each family is limited to two pets.

The flights included do not include those to the Pacific; although MAC is now looking at that possibility.

Reservation procedures and documentation requirements for pets remain the same. Requests for reservations are taken on a first come, first serve basis.

The following is a list of Category B channels currently approved for pet shipment, as well as the cost for each channel. Rates are effective Oct. 1.

Former Army spouse continues to serve as AUSA president

by Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

The room was full of people. Soldiers from command sergeant major to private were present and applauded her introduction.

A slight blonde woman approached the podium showing no signs of nervousness. She smiled warmly, blue eyes radiating the caring she verbally expressed for the soldiers and guests.

Speaking to large groups of people is just one of the responsibilites Lenora C. Smith accepted when she was named the president of the Chattahoochee Valley, Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army.

Smith explained that the chapter president is required to serve at a lot of ceremonial functions. "But I direct the affairs of the chapter and take care of little things like being sure they're working on the budget. There is a lot of office supervision and I represent the association when called upon," Smith said.

Smith

The bright mother of four and grandmother of three children considers herself "beyond the age of reason" and has had a lot of experience in politics and government affairs.

The widow of an Army major and daughter of a soldier, Smith spent her childhood years around the military and during her husband's post-Army years she lived in Washington, D.C.

"My husband was a lobbyist in Washington, so I have seen how legislation works. Because he couldn't drive (he had sight problems) I went with him and listened," she said.

Although she attended Vanderbilt College in Nashville, Tenn. and Randolph-Macon Women's College in Lynchburg, Va., Smith didn't receive a college degree until some years later.

"I quit school to get married. In 1971 I finally got my degree at Columbus College," Smith said.

"But college was wasted on me the first go-around. I had a really good time," she said with a twinkle in her eyes.

When her husband was medically discharged from the Army she spent a lot of time in the nation's Capital where she formed her opinions and philosophies about the government and shaped her role in AUSA.

"I think our government is run by well-organized minorities and special interest groups that know what they want and go after what they need. This does not involve money. I don't see that this is any different than that with the Army," Smith explained.

"The AUSA can make representation to Congress. The AUSA can speak as a private organization where the military can't," Smith said.

Smith has established that during her term as AUSA president, which lasts until June 30, 1987, she has three main themes. These are: communication, participation and cooperation.

"Lenora is a unique person — the first-ever lady president of this chapter. Just that fact speaks well of her capabilities. Her theme is three words that exemplify her," said Jim J. Gallagher, first vice president of the chapter.

Even with her busy schedule, Smith manages to find time for other civic activities. A few of those are the Phenix City Riverfront Development Board, the Uptown Columbus board of directors and the development of the Phenix City, Russell County Library.

Georgia looking for good volunteers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Georgia's leadership is looking for a few good volunteers.

In an attempt to comply with Gov. Joe Frank Harris's proclamation making September "Public Lands in Georgia Month" two state parks need volunteers to help with a general cleanup as their project in the Take Pride in America campaign.

Harris asks that volunteers get together and help clean up Florence Marina State Park and Providence Canyon State Park.

"Assistance from Fort Benning in the form of equipment to complete some of the work tasks on these two parks will help ensure a successful project," said O.R. Cothran III, director of the Georgia Department of Natural Resouces.

"We'd like to have as many people as we can get. People can bring bush hooks, axes, chain saws and dump trucks so we can clear the underbrush along the shoreline of the river," said Don Castleberry, Florence Marina State Park's general manager.

Castleberry asks that volunteers come to the park in Omaha, Georgia anytime after 8 a.m. tomorrow For more information about the cleanup call (912) 838-4244.

The Providence Canyon State Park cleanup will invovle picking up litter, tree limbs and clearing up kudzu. "It won't be a hard job at all," said Madge Rudledge, interpretive park ranger for the Providence Canyon State Park.

Rudledge asks that volunteers come to the park tomorrow after 9:30 a.m. to help. For more information call (912) 838-6202.

For large groups interested in the cleanup project, call Pate Bridges at (919) 439-4402.

Latin American dancers entertain hundreds at fiesta

by Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas correspondent

The 2nd annual "Fiesta in Columbus" at the Columbus Convention Trade Center amphitheater enchanted hundreds of people Sept. 13 as dancers performed to folkloric Latin American music.

The event, which involved many U.S. Army School of the Americas personnel, opened with a ceremony introducing the flags of the 20 nations participating at USARSA — including flags from Puerto Rico and Georgia.

The opening was followed by a fashion show and dancers representing 11 Latin American countries. All dancers were dressed in colorful costumes native of their countries.

The event was tied into Fort Benning's observance of National Hispanic Heritage week. Many soldiers and family members — both U.S. and Latin American — participated in the activities at the amphitheater.

Representing Fort Benning commander, Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., USARSA's Commandant Col. Miguel A. Garcia welcomed all who attended in his opening remarks. "Today's programs are a cooperative effort between Latin Americans and the local community to celebrate National Hispanic Heritage week this year," Garcia said.

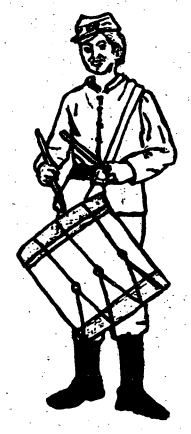
"One of the reasons we in the U.S. have set aside specific weeks to celebrate the heritage of particular ethnic groups is to dispel misconceptions about these groups. For example, many people think all Latin Americans are "Hispanics", but that is not the case. The Portugese, Dutch, French and English all had colonies in what is now called Latin America," he said.

Garcia spoke of Hispanic influence in the region. "How many of you here know of Fort Apalachicola, the Spanish fort built on the Chattahoochee River in the 17th century?" he asked, adding, "The Spanish at St. Augustine considered this area key to their claims on the continent. Thus, not only did the Spanish establish the first permanent settlement in the new world, they also established the first garrison here."

The commandant also spoke of the many contributions Hispanic-Americans have made in the U.S. social and political arena throughout history.

As Garcia prepared to say in Spanish everything he said in English to attending Latin American friends, he said, "This 'Fiesta in Columbus' definitely has a purpose — to enable an ethnic group to demonstrate its ethnic culture with pride. It is a gala event, free to the public with no purpose other than to show the greater community who we are, what we are and what we feel."

The audience seemed to enjoy watching the dancers as they clapped along with the music throughout the afternoon.



Dancers from Mexico, Colombia, Guatemala, Dominican Republic, Brazil, Peru, Venezuela, Chile, Panama, Argentina, Bolivia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico performed to native festive music.

Entertaining the audience during intermissions was "La Atraccion" — a local band which specializes in contemporary Caribbean music. Many couples danced to the band's 'Salsa' beat.

Columbus and surrounding community residents watched with great interest as the show continued throughout the afternoon. Several booths next to the amphitheater sold refreshments and fast food, including some Latin American food.

Many thanks go to all who helped put this year's "Fiesta in Columbus" together including the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, Columbus Hispanic Association, the Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities and the Public Affairs Office at Fort Benning, and all USARSA personnel.

Regular examinations help ensure good vision

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

"Being able to see is so important, especially in children, because the great percentage of learning takes place visually," said Lt. Col. David Marrs.

He said examinations and follow-up care are essential to good eye health.

September is National Sight Saving Month, and Marrs, chief of the Optometry Service at Martin Army Community Hospital, said people should be aware of what they need to do to take care of their vision.

"Regular eye examinations should begin when children are age 4 or 5, and continue once a year until the child reaches age 20.

"Vision normally stabilizes by the early 20s, so people need an exam about every two years," he said. Once in their late 30s, people need to be seen a little more frequently to be checked for eye problems that can develop due to glaucoma, and diseases such as diabetes and hypertension Marrs explained.

"Many eye problems that result from diseases don't have clear cut symptoms to the individual; it's a gradual thing that slowly occurs so the person may not notice it in the early stages," he said.

One example is problems caused by hypertension. "Changes in the retina occur that only a physician or optometrist would be able to see during a visual exam," Marrs said.

The Optometry Service does all vision checks for new soldiers at the Reception Station, as well as providing corrective lenses and optical inserts for protective masks.

They also conduct a preschool screening required by Georgia on Wednesdays for children entering the school system.

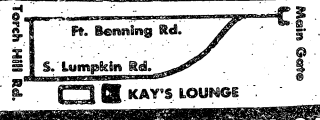
The service also does glaucoma screening on a walk-in basis Monday through Friday during regular operating hours. The test used is fast and painless. "We use a noncontact tonometer, which blows a puff of air onto the cornea and the machine's computer converts this to a digital readout of the pressure within the eye," he explained.

If not detected and treated promptly, glaucoma can result in blindness, he said.

Parents should be aware of the warning signs of vision problems, Marrs said. Children may sit too close to the television, or when reading get too close to the page. Another tipoff is a child who tilts his head down very close to the page when writing. And if a child complains about not being able to see, his vision should be checked.

Army accepting astronaut applications

Army News Service



The annual Army Astronaut Candidate Selection board will convene in November to select soldiers for nomination to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Active-duty, National Guard and Reserve soldiers interested in applying for the astronaut program may apply through Oct. 15. NASA is looking for people with a technical background and operational experience.

To apply, soldiers must have a bachelor's degree from an accredited institution in engineering, biological science, physical science or mathematics, said Maj. Stanmore Hinds, the Army's program manager at the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va. Applicants must also have distant visual acuity — 20/100 or better, uncorrected; correctable to 20/20, for each eye. These prerequisites are not waiverable. There is no age limit, he added.

NASA has an affirmative action program goal of having qualified minorities and women among the selected astronaut candidates.

Parents invited to take a look at child care program

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning parents will have a chance to see what the Army child care program is all about this weekend.

The two Army-run centers on post, as well as selected certified child care provider homes, will be open to the public tomorrow and Sunday.

Becky Carroll, child development coordinator, said the event is being called an "Open House Celebration for Child Development Services.

"It's a chance for parents to come into some of the certified homes and see the kind of environment we are providing for their children," Carroll said.

Representatives from Carroll's office, as well as certified caregivers, will be available to answer questions and provide information on the program.

"We're excited about the things going in child development at Fort Benning," she said. "We've recently hired a new family child care director and an outreach worker, and two more people will be hired in the near future.

Carroll's office had to freeze the certification classes for new home care providers last year because there were not enough people to supervise the homes. But by hiring additional outreach workers, more homes can be certified, thereby giving working parents more options.

It also means they'll be able to crack down on people who are providing unauthorized care on post. "We have a team ready now to begin inspecting homes suspected of providing unauthorized care, and can move to stop the people from doing so," she said.

Parents can place their children in any certified home or center they want to use, Carroll said. "Many people think they can only use a center or home that is located in their housing area, but this is not true. They can pick a location that is convenient to them."

People also need to understand that the certified child care providers can pick up where day care centers leave off. "If a parent cannot get to a center by 6 p.m., they can hire a certified caregiver to pick up their child and keep them until the parent gets off work," she said. This flexibility is something that many soldiers need, but many aren't aware that it's available on post.

The Custer Terrace Center is on Candle Drive, near the water tower in the Custer Terrace Housing area. The Marne Road center is next to the main post exchange.

Both centers, as well as selected homes, will be open Sept. 27 and 28 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., and Sunday from 3 to 6 p.m.

Caregivers participating in the open house Saturday include:

Margit Haney, 103-A Butts Street, Custer Terrace.

Ellen Watkins, 250 Logan Street, Indianhead Terrace.

Debra Walker, 137F McGrath Street, McGraw Manor.

Carolyn Wiley, 144 Gilespie Loop, North Main Post.

Ilse Crowell, 941-A Burr Street, South Main Post.

The following child care providers will open their homes Sunday:

Ester Moore, 176 Derrickson Street, Indianhead Terrace.

Laura Redman, 864-B Arrowhead Road, McGraw Manor.

Catherine Ingle and Donna Fielder, 129 Ingersoll Loop, North Main Post.

Schools

Program lets parents match kids to teachers most like mom, dad

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

This fall parents at the Edward A. White School participated in the selection of their childrens' classroom in a new program emphasizing parent choice.

According to Dr. Joann Alam, principal at the White School, the new program is directly in line with the National Governor's Association's recent focus on parental choice.

"The trend across the country is to promote greater parental involvement in children's education. Through a genuine partnership between parents and the school, we can match child rearing practices in the home with teaching practices in the school," said Alam.

The program at the White School began a year ago when teachers met to consider their teaching methods and styles. The teachers discussed individual teaching styles, noting similarities and differences.

Following this activity, the teachers formed into groups or teams based on compatibility of teaching styles and methods, with all but one group including teachers from second through fifth grades.

Team members were assigned adjacent classrooms in one of the school's wings. Each team described, in writing, its teaching style and methods, calling the written statement an "environmental description."

When parents registered their children this fall they were provided with a copy of the environmental description for each team along with the names and grade levels of the teachers on each team. Using the environmental descriptions as a basis, parents were then given the opportunity to select the team that they believed to be best for their children.

The teaching styles and methods of all teachers at the White School are designed to reach the educational objectives which have been established by the school system.

None of the teams use methods that are experimental or could be considered extreme, with classrooms reflecting differences in approach which are found in most schools around the country.

Classrooms range from highly structured, where children receive very specific daily direction to less structured, where children assume some responsibility for planning their time and completing assignments.

Some groups stay with one teacher for all academic subjects while others have a departmentalized schedule with each teacher teaching a different subject and children moving during the day between teachers.

"Different structures and organizational patterns fit different youngsters and we are soliciting parental help in selecting the best learning situation for each child," Alam explained.

The Edward A. White School is the only school on Fort Benning that is organized around teaching styles in an effort to facilitate parent choice.

Hispanics share culture with students

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Hispanic Heritage Week came alive in the Fort Benning Schools as students, teachers, parents, and visitors shared in the celebration.

Students became the instructors in many classrooms as they demonstrated Hispanic dances, taught Hispanic songs, and told of their families and homes in Hispanic speaking countries.

Flags, clothing, books, and various forms of Hispanic artwork were displayed in classrooms, hallways, and media centers. Student posters were prominently displayed throughout the buildings.

Many parents provided Hispanic dishes for food-tasting parties in the classrooms, and students enjoyed a wide variety of dishes ranging from tortillas to flan. In some classes students prepared their own food by following Hispanic recipes.

Visitors from Fort Benning and Columbus presented programs on Hispanic countries. From kindergarten through eighth grade, students learned Hispanic customs, songs, and vocabulary. Parents at McBride School dressed in costumes of their native countries and demonstrated several types of dances.

Hispanic composers were featured in several classrooms. A special treat at White School and Wilson School was a biographical sketch on composer, Isacc Albeniz, presented by Columbus College student teacher, Donna Guillaume. Guillaume followed the sketch with a piano recital of Albeniz compositions.

Faith Middle School sixth grade students toured the School of the Americas. They were particularly interested in the Spanish library and the translation center where computers printed in Spanish. Capt. Corydon M. Loomis Jr., from the U.S. Army School of Americas, gave a slide presentation on the purpose and the history of USARSA to several of the classes.

"Here in the Benning Schools we are very fortunate to have a wealth of resources for Hispanic Heritage Week," said Nan Mathews, principal of McBride School. "The week brings a special opportunity to draw upon the talents and varied backgrounds within our community to provide an exciting week of sharing and learning for our students."

Sports

Bears will claw up Cincinnati Bengals

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

Chicago at Cincinnati

The defending Super Bowl Champions seem to be struggling with an offense that is uninspired due to the loss of Jim McMahon. Though not yet polished, Steve Fuller is both confident and reliable as is Bear running back Walter Payton.

The Bear defense is still strong enough to divide the Cincinnati Bengal Esiason-Brown combination. Because Dave Kinnebrew will not be shut down in the backfield, the Bengals will exhibit a little offense.

But by the slightest of margins, Chicago will keep their win record untarnished.

Detroit at Cleveland

Both teams' defense will be non-existent in this contest. Eric Hipple is still trying to find time to see if he has a secondary, but he cannot boast of an offensive line either. Kosar is ready to prove himself in the NFL and will do so against the Lions in the Brown's den.

Green Bay at Minnesota

The Packers played an impressive first half against the Chicago Bears last week, but to be a winner in this scrambled NFL season, a team must keep the offensive barrage alive for four full periods.

Tommy Kramer seems to have found the perfect connection in rookie receiver Hassan Jones, who pulled in two Viking touchdowns against the Steelers.

The Minnesota trickery will put them in the winners circle.

Kansas City at Buffalo

Both teams are coming off wins from last week, but the Chiefs have been the more impressive club in their two victories.

Jim Kelly is expected to spark his Buffalo club while completing more than 50 percent of his pass attempts. But, it will take more than a spark to burn Greg Hill and the rest of the Chiefs' defensive secondary.

The Chiefs will rally around the Bills to a Kansas City victory.

Los Angeles (Rams) at Philadelphia

The Rams, in an attempt to keep up with the Atlanta Falcons, leader of the National West, have the momentum going into this matchup to storm the ailing Eagle team, which lacks the offensive surge to break the "Saints-Syndrome."

Steve Bartkowski has a great arsenal in top-ranked league rusher, Eric Dickerson, who will not only take the ball from the backfield, but will also slip out among the secondary for the short pass, turned into a long gain.

New Orleans at New York (Giants)

In what New York hopes to be an easy contest, the New Orleans Saints have been forced to start what is probably their best quarterback, Dave Wilson, due to a Bobby Hebert injury.

Hebert hurt his right foot in the Saints-49ers game last week. Though Wilson is the most probable candidate for the starting position, the Saints have reached an agreeement with Babe Laufengerg.

The Giant defense will be able to captialize on the confusion and come up with at least one touchdown.

The steady Phil Simms will lead the offensive Giants into an air attack with Lionel Manuel and the ground attack with the powerhouse, Joe Morris.

The Giants will slip past the hungry New Orleans Saints.

Pittsburgh at Houston

Should the Oilers be able to tally two touchdowns and a field goal, they will have tied the Steelers three game scoring effort of 17 points.

Let's chalk up a pair of Chuck Banks TDs for the Houston gusher at the Astrodome.

San Francisco at Miami

The 49er defense has allowed but 40 points to be scored against them. But the Dolphin arsenal is insurmountable.

The top career percentage passer, Dan Marino will be looking to the sure hand of Mark Clayton and Lorenzo Hampton to get the Dolphins airborne.

The only rush to expect in this one will be the one that seats Jeff Kemp's 49ers in a Dolphin tidal-wave.

Seattle at Washington

Both teams pulled out last minute victories in Sunday's matchups.

Dave Krieg connected with Ray Butler with 1:14 remaining, while Jay Schroeder found Gary Clark at 1:16.

Both Butler and Clark have the speed to get past an alert secondary, but Seattle's secondary is more than alert. They have the best pass defense in the AFC.

In what appears to be a close one, the Seahawks will blow the Redskins ashore by more than a touchdown.

New York(Jets) at Indianapolis

The Jets have gone three-dimensional in receiver Wesley Walker. The Ken O'Brien—Walker combination proved effective in the Miami upset last week, and will be more than enough to harness the Colts.

The continuous heavy bombings of Mark Gasteneau and Joe Klecko will not only corral the Colts, but in this contest, look for a shutout.

San Diego at Los Angeles(Raiders)

The winless Raiders are due a win, but it will not be against the stable offense of Dan Fouts.

Suffering two consecutive losses, the Chargers can look forward to a victory here.

New England at Denver

In this contest of the strongest and the fittest, Denver will have the advantage of being at home. But, quarterback John Elway will need more of an advantage.

Playing against the pass defense of the Seahawks, Tony Eason tallied 422 yards passing.

Both teams have the men at the helm that can strike at any moment. But, it will be the Patriots riding the Broncos to a narrow New England victory and handing Denver their first season defeat.

Atlanta at Tampa Bay

The Bucs will stay close to the Falcons but will be unable to bridle the Atlanta spirit that has been awakened in their 3-0 record. Dave Archer will live in the limelight once again.

The Bucanneers face a defense that shut down the Saints and Cardinals and shoved 14 points down the throats of America's team.

It's the Falcons over the Bucs by five.

Dallas at St. Louis

Will the $5 Million man see action against St. Louis? "But, of course he will."

We should also see a more time-consious Tony Hill should Danny White be able to play after pulling a thigh muscle.

Regardless, the Cowboy's revenge will be taken out on the St. Louis Cardinals in a mirage of America's team of yesterday.

Redskins down Cougars in first game of YA season

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

Five men fell from the sky, landed in the center of a blue field Saturday carrying a "pig" that they presented to the spokesman at the sporting event.

The Silver Wings parachute demonstration team dropped in to the official opening of the Youth Activities football season Saturday.

They brought in the football presented to Commissioner Ed Chapa.

Dave Platta, sports director from a local television station, greeted the 10 teams that were on hand for the opening festivities.

Each team's cheerleaders were also present to offer their support.

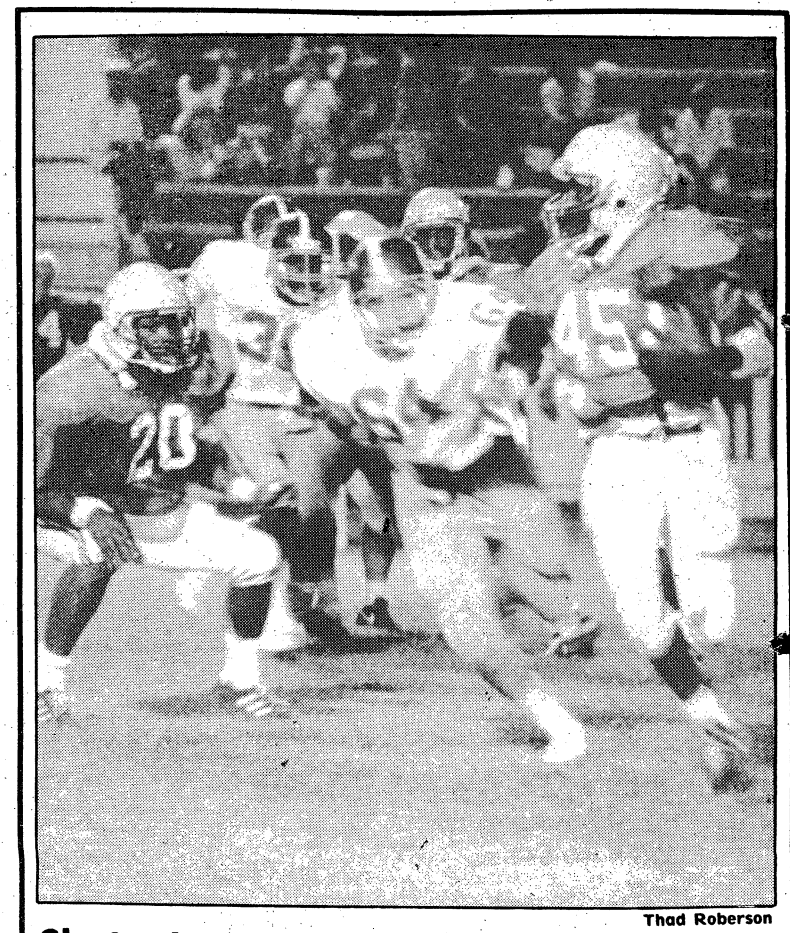
Action got underway immediately with the Redskins tackling the Cougars in a 12-6 opening day defeat.

The Redskins attacked early as quarterback Daryl Moore hit Lovell Orr for a 35-yard touchdown pass in the first quarter.

The Cougars were able to mount a scoring drive later, but that was followed by another Redskin attack.

In the third quarter, Moore ran a keeper around the right side for a 30-yard touchdown run.

In the final two minutes of the game, the Cougars were threatening, as they marched down to the Redskin's 20-yard line. The Redskin defense, led by Anthony Perkins and Danny Suttle, were able to stop the Cougars for four consecutive downs to clench the victory.



The Dolphins suffered the season's first shutout when they faced the Cougars of the Termite Division in a 6-0 defensive battle.

An offensive effort was mounted by Dolphin quarterback Richard Sweeting, fullback Eddy Sessom and halfback Micheal Fabjon.

The Dolphin defense played well and allowed only one score, which was enough to send the Cougars into game two carrying a victory.

Combining to hold the Cougar's offense were Carlyon Johnson, Eddy Sessom, Robert Taylor and Junior Smith.

The Youth Activities Football League plays each Saturday on Blue field with kickoff at 10 a.m.

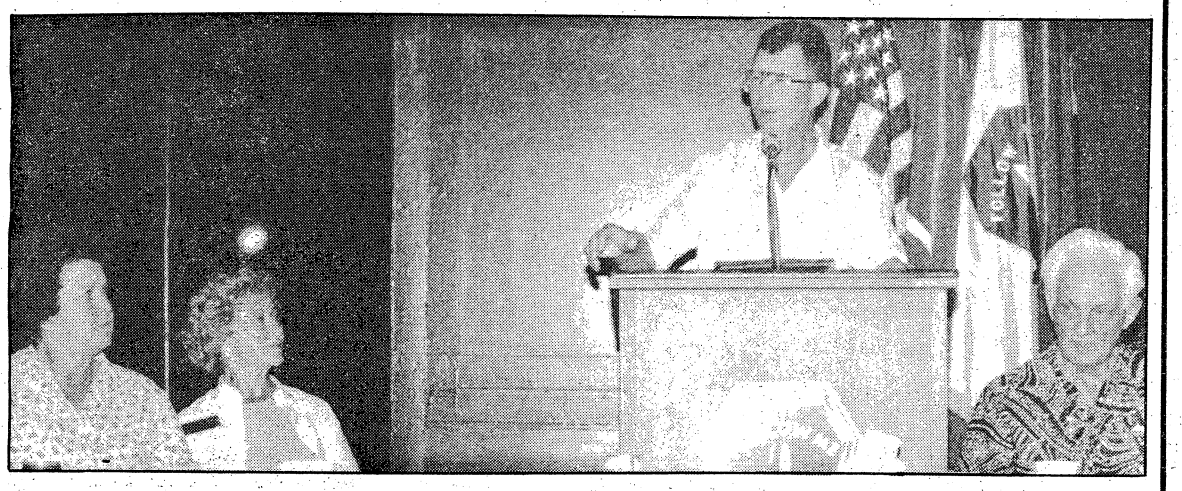
Southern Open free to soldiers

Fort Benning soldiers are invited to attend the 1986 Southern Open to be played at the Green Island Country Club at 6501 Standing Boy Road, Oct. 2 to 5.

Enlisted soldiers in Class B uniforms will be admitted free. The week opens with the South Pro Am Sept. 29, followed by the CB&T Pro Am on Wednesday, with the first round of the PGA Tour tournament opening Thursday.

Defending his 1985 Southern Open Championship will be Tim Simpson, who shot a 264 last year.

The professional golfers will be competing for a share of the total prize money of $357,000.



Amateur boxers don gloves tonight

An amateur boxing tournament will begin at 8 p.m. tonight at Gowdy Field. In case of rain, the match will be tomorrow at Briant Wells Field house.

Competition will be conducted in the novice and open division classes.

Experienced amateur boxers may apply for All-Army trials leading to the armed forces team and higher level competition.

Boxing coaches and instructors and trainers ae also encouraged to register at the Post Sports Office, Building 394 or phone 545-7519.

Fish fry

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba speaks at last week's Association of the United States Army's annual fish fry as, (l-r), Lenora Smith, Lorraine Gallagher and Louie Kunze listen.

The Chattahoochee Valley, Fort Benning Chapter entertained 540 people at the yearly event staged at the Chattahoochee Valley Fairgrounds.

U.S. Savings Bonds now pay market-based interest rates like money market accounts!

Savings Bonds are easy to buy, too. Purchase them at most banks and savings and loans, or through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work. For more information, call toll-free 1-800-US-BONDS.

U.S. SAVINGS BONDS
Paying Better Than Ever

Market-based rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least five years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn market-based rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than five years earn lower rates.

19 legal drinking age for troops on post

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Fort Benning soldiers under 21 will no longer be able to stop by their favorite watering hole in Columbus.

In a move to bring Georgia on line with guidance issued by the Reagan administration last year, the state adopted 21 as its legal drinking age Oct. 1. Under the threat of loss of highway funds, the General Assembly voted last year to raise the drinking age to 20 in September 1985 and to 21 this year.

According to SGM Raymond Hood, the general manager of the Non-Commissioned Officer Club branch, the clubs on post are not affected by the change. "We go by Alabama and not Georgia law on this one because part of the installation is in Alabama. Even though their (Alabama's) drinking age is 21, they grandfathered it for the military. So, it is still 19 on post."

Hood explained, however, that family members must be 21 to drink in Fort Benning clubs.

A large percentage of Fort Benning's under-21 population comes from the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center where about 28,000 new soldiers are trained each year. In 1985 the average age of the ATC soldier was 20.9. The Center's operations officer, Lt. Col. Richard T. Helmling, said that as of the end of August, this year's average age was somewhat lower, 19.3, because of the approximately 2,500 split option soldiers processed.

Upfront

Southern Open free to soldiers

Fort Benning soldiers are invited to attend the 1986 Southern Open to be played at the Green Island Country Club at 6501 Standing Boy Road through Sunday.

Enlisted soldiers in Class B uniforms will be admitted free.

Family Practice to change policy

Due to workload demands, the Family Practic Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital is changing its immunization policy.

Beginning Nov. 1, immunizations will only be given from 1 to 3:30 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

This includes Vitamin B12 shots, school immunizations, immunizations for personnel moving overseas, etc. It will also apply to people needing HTLV III testing.

All immunizations and HTLV III testing will be done in the Acute Care area of the Family Practice Clinic.

Routine childhood immunizations will continue to be given at the time of the Well Baby appointments.

Veterinary clinic limited to 30 pets

Veterinary Services is sponsoring a pet clinic tomorrow from 8 to 11 a.m. Due to limited space, treatment will be restricted to the first 30 pets.

The office has been temporarily relocated to the Animal Impoundment Facility in Building 267, which is behind the Vet Services Building on 10th Division Road.

Reaching out to needy gives something back

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Helping other people is a basic good that makes you feel warm all over.

Maybe you've had a really awful day — you didn't want to get out of bed this morning and things just went down hill from there. You were late leaving the house and encountered the typical morning traffic on the bypass in. Slipping into formation just as the first sergeant called the company to attention, you realized you had your T-shirt on wrong side out.

"Extend to the left — march . . ." and all that. Still clinging to a half-sleeping, half-waking state, you make your way through the morning run.

Back at the company, finally awake, but fully aware that you cannot wait for this day to be over, you are accosted by your platoon sergeant soliciting a contribution to the Combined Federal Campaign. "Oh, come on . . .I just gave to something a few months ago," you lament.

Sure, you just gave to something a few months ago. "Wasn't that the CFC? Maybe it was the AER."

Perhaps it does seem as though every time you turn around, the Army is asking you to give back some of what you work so hard to earn. But, take a minute to stop and think. If your platoon sergeant is doing his job, he will explain to you where the money you contribute to the CFC will go. Just in case he doesn't . . .

Last year on Fort Benning, more than $500,000 was contributed to the campaign. There are about 13 post agencies that receive benefits from the CFC. Among those are Army Community Services, Boy and Girl Scouts, Youth Activities, the Community Life program, Red Cross, the chaplain's office, the dental health program, Child Development Services and the July 4th celebration fund.

In addition to the post agencies that receive money through CFC, there are a number of agencies in the surrounding communities that also receive money from the campaign. The largest amount of the money collected goes to the United Way, a non-profit organization that doles out money to needy groups.

The program also makes allowances for those who may want to make their contribution to a national organization. There are more than 150 charitable groups that are eligible to receive money through the CFC. A partial list of those is on page 19.

So, if you've had a bad day, or even if you haven't, think of how good it will make you feel to reach out and help someone. Better yet, think of how it will make that person in need feel.

Don't you think it's worth a few dollars a month? I do.

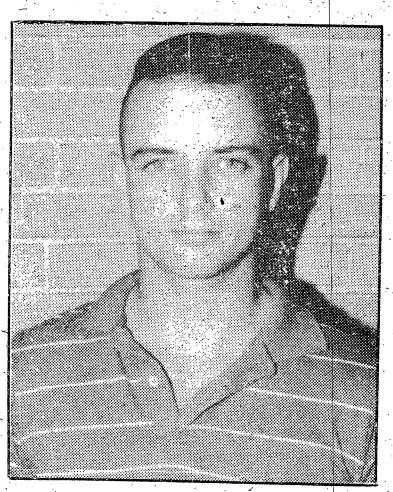
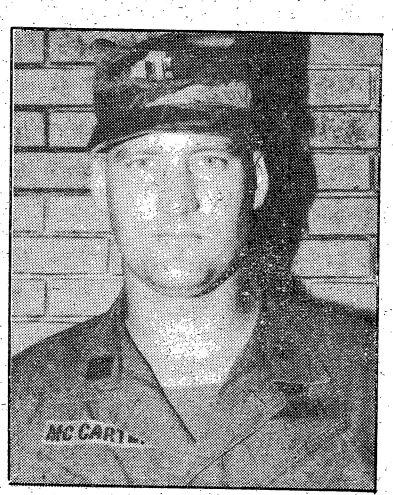
Various voices

The Combined Federal Campaign drive has started for this year. Do you plan to contribute? Why or why not?



SSgt. Ronald L. Harris, Atlanta Recruiting Battalion — "I do contribute and feel that every soldier should contribute because they spend a lot of money for research and you never know if your going to be unfortunate."



SSgt. William P. Frazier, Company C, 8th battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade — "I do plan to contribute. It supports a good organizatin that helps young soldiers in a spot.

SP4 Lorraine D. Greene, Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade — "No, I'm not going to contribute. The government takes enough of our money."

SP4 Kent S. Miles, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment — "Yes, I'm going to contribute. I feel it's a worthwhile charitable thing to do."

Capt. William R. McCarther, Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry — "I contribute because it's an organization that helps people."

Congress looks at new command to control joint special operations

by Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

They're a force of some 30,000 volunteers of high physical and mental standards, specially trained and equipped to conduct the most dangerous and unusual missions.

Special operations forces can support conventional operations or be employed independently when conventional force is inappropriate or unfeasible. With the increased use of low-intensity conflict against the United States and allies in many parts of the world, special operations forces are receiving special attention.

These forces are likely to be called on to deter state-supported terrorism and subversion, to evacuate Americans from a country in turmoil, or to assist a friendly country under attack.

To ensure that Army special forces and Ranger battalions, Navy SEAL teams and the Air Force special operations forces are fully prepared to respond together to missions like these, the Defense Department is planning to implement a new Special Operations Force Command.

As conceptualized by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Special Operations Force Command would be a major step in the U.S. special operations forces revitalization program that began in 1981.

Adm. William J. Crowe Jr., chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told Congress such a command would emphasize joint training and exercises, standardized special operations doctrine, and the development of specialized equipment to improve the readiness of special operations forces.

The command would also ensure that progress made during the past five years to beef up special operations capabilities is not undone when budget axes begin to fall.

Special operations forces have received considerable emphasis since 1981, when they operated on a budget of $441 million per year. Since then, the special operations force capability has been pumped up with the addition of a special forces group, a Ranger battalion, a SEAL team and a psychological operations battalion.

The Seafox, a light surface craft, and dry deck shelter, best described as a "holding tank" attached to a submarine, have been put into operation. Both are designed to support clandestine troop infiltrations.

Still on the agenda is the addition of another special forces group, another SEAL team, 21 new MC-130 Combat Talon aircraft, 12 new AC-130 Spectre gunships and 11 newly modified MH-53J Pave Low helicopters, as well as the development of MH-60X and MH-47E aircraft.

So for fiscal 1987, DoD has requested $1.6 billion for special operations forces.

"We all agree that the time has come to develop a new organizational structure which will keep pace with the special operations force revitalization program, more fully exploit their potential across a spectrum of contingencies, better integrate them as a combined force, and assure that their resource requirements receive top level attention in a fiscally constrained environment," Crowe told Congress.

He said the new plan will give the special operations forces community "an unparalleled opportunity to apply their professional knowledge, skills and imagiation to new warfighting concepts, doctrines and plans," as well as more opportunity to train and exercise as a multi-service team.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

The control of pets is becoming an increasing problem at Fort Benning.

U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-10 requires that all pets, when outside, be on a leash or under voice control and within sight of a responsible individual.

In spite of this, the Fort Benning Military Police receive complaints regarding uncontrolled pets each week. Approximately two of these are complaints of people being bitten.

The above figures strongly indicate that many post residents are either not aware of or are disregarding both state and installation regulations governing their responsibilities for control of pets. Of even greater importance, these figures indicate that a large percentage of pet owners are exhibiting little concern for the welfare of their neighbors.

The decision to acquire a pet of any type is one that should not be made lightly. Questions that should be asked include:

- Can I financially afford a pet?
- Do I or other members of my family have sufficient time to devote to the pet?
- Do I have the facilities, and am I assured that the pet will be properly housed and secured at my quarters?
- Am I willing to assun responsibility for any damages property or harm caused to pe sons by my pet?
- In short, am I prepared properly "care" for my pet?

If the answer to any of the questions is "no" or "maybe no then acquisition of a pet shou be postponed or forgotten.

Because of the severity of t pet control problem and concer for the safety and health residents of the installation, t installation policy concerning t control of pets is very strict. requires the removal of a p from the installation when:

- It has been declared a nu sance three times.
- It has been impounded f running astray twice.
- Removal may also be r quired if the animal has bee involved in an unprovoked bitin or scratching incident.

It is not that the command do not like dogs, cats, and other pe and wants to rid the post of then The fact is that we, as p owners, have the personal r sponsibility to control then What some of us consider to b an adorable pet and almost member of the family, othe may consider a nuisance, esp cially when these pets are a lowed to run loose and destrc lawns, shrubbery, flowers, and c occasion, bite or scratch pe ple.

Commander's comments

The 1986 Combined Federal Campaign will be conducted at Fort Benning and in other federal government activities in the area during the period Oct. 1 through Nov. 30.

This campaign solicits monetary support for more than 100 humanitarian agencies through the single appeal.

This combined effort affords each of us a chance to assist in essential support to local, state, national, and international activities that render support to both our military and civilian communities.

Every year, through the United Way, this campaign provides hundreds of dollars for Fort Benning's health, welfare, and youth activities.

The goal for this year's campaign is $500,000. This goal can be attained by the wholehearted participation of all members of this installation and other federal personnel in the nearby area in a fair share system of giving.

Generosity and concern for others have always been symbolic of those who serve in the United States Government. Let us continue this tradition.

All personnel are urged to support these deserving agencies by giving generously to the 1986 Combined Federal Campaign.

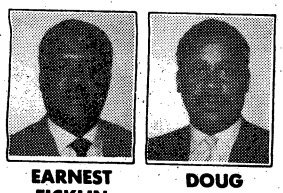
43rd Engineers battle for victory in organization day competition

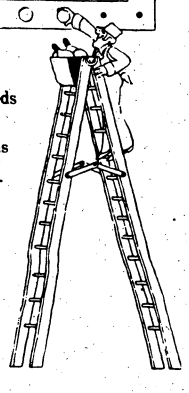
Story and photos
by Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

King's Pond was the site for this year's organization day for the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

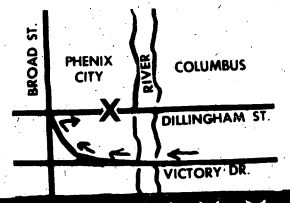
The competition among the five companies of the Battalion seemed to be the highlight of the day. The soldiers competed in 10 events, including a three-mile run, chariot race, log carry, raft race, egg toss, three-legged race, bat relay, horse shoes, volleyball, and tug-of-war.



The battle for first place was fierce as the final tally of points separated first place from third by only three points.



Company D received a trophy for winning the overall competition.



The grills were rolled in to prepare everything from barbecued ribs and chicken to hamburgers and hot dogs to feed more than 1,000 people.

197th soldiers beat back "enemy" during recent ARTEP

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

"It's rough out here, but it helps our ability to fight," said SP4 Matthew Kemper, an M-60 machine gunner for Company A. From his fighting position he had a clear view of the road.

"Just this morning we breached and destroyed an obstacle while wearing chemical protective gear," he said.

All along the hill soldiers were dug in behind trees and in foxholes. Track vehicles lay waiting — covered with bushes and hidden among the trees.

Companies A and B from the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, and other forces from the 197th Infantry Brigade participated in an Army Readiness Test and Evaluation Program at Fort Benning last week.

During the program each platoon had an evaluator test its ability to complete a given mission. The platoons all had predetermined standards to achieve.

The job of the evaluator during an ARTEP is to provide the company commander with an outside pair of eyes. This helps determine what the company's strengths and weaknesses are. The commander can then use the evaluations to plan his training for the coming year.

"I act as a senior trainer and provide my experience and advice so the soldier can do his wartime mission effectively," said Capt. Alan Todd, the battalion intelligence officer.

Evaluators used an ARTEP manual, which lists the basic tasks for the soldiers, to "grade" the exercise. There are certain missions the platoons are to be tested on, and each mission has a general standard on how the platoon must perform.

"I'm given an order by my peers and then give the order to my platoon leaders and they carry them out," said Capt. Reuben Maynard, Co. A commander. "And after every phase of the mission the evaluator gives the platoon an after action review."

Each platoon was expected to perform many types of missions, such as breaching obstacles, performing reconnaissance, attacks, defending positions and movement.

"Sometimes the platoons are tasked to destroy enemy recon elements so that they cannot find our defense area," explained Maynard. "Anytime we stop, we set up a hasty defense and regroup the soldiers. Ammunition must be reissued, casualities must be listed and equipment accounted for."

SP4 Matthew Kemper, an M-60 machine gunner, and Sgt. David Kiggins, an M-16 rifleman, both of Company A, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, defend their fighting positions.

For a platoon ARTEP there is only one evaluator for each platoon. Not only did the friendly forces, Companies A and B, have evaluators, but the enemy did also. This was designed to provide the evaluators with the enemy's opinion of how well the platoons did against the enemy.

Alpha and Bravo Companies returned last week.

Air Force checks vehicles' condition at annual 'Roll-by'

by Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

"Rollin', rollin', rollin'. Keep them doggies rollin'."

And roll they did.

The 31 vehicles that belong to the 197th Air Force Detachment 4 of the 507th Tactical Air Control Wing, that is.

Last week airmen from the Roswell Street motor pool conducted their annual "Roll-By" to show off the results of a summer of maintenance and hard work.

A Roll-By is an Air Force tradition that is conducted within the motor pool. Each driver drives his vehicle by the inspecting officer who views the machinery.

"Roll-Bys are held once a year, preferably in August or September. It's a method of quality control. It shows off the good efforts of the troops," said Air Force SSgt. Rod L. Williams, non-commissioned officer in charge of vehicle control.

The Air Force motor pool has basically a support mission.

Col. Lawrence W. Greene, director of intelligence at Shaw Air Force Base, S.C., represented the 507th Tactical Air Control Wing, as he conducted the inspection.

SSgt. Michael Fripp from the General Subjects Committee, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, explains the importance of land navigation to a group of family members.

Families focal point at 29th Inf during special appreciation day

29th Infantry Regiment correspondent

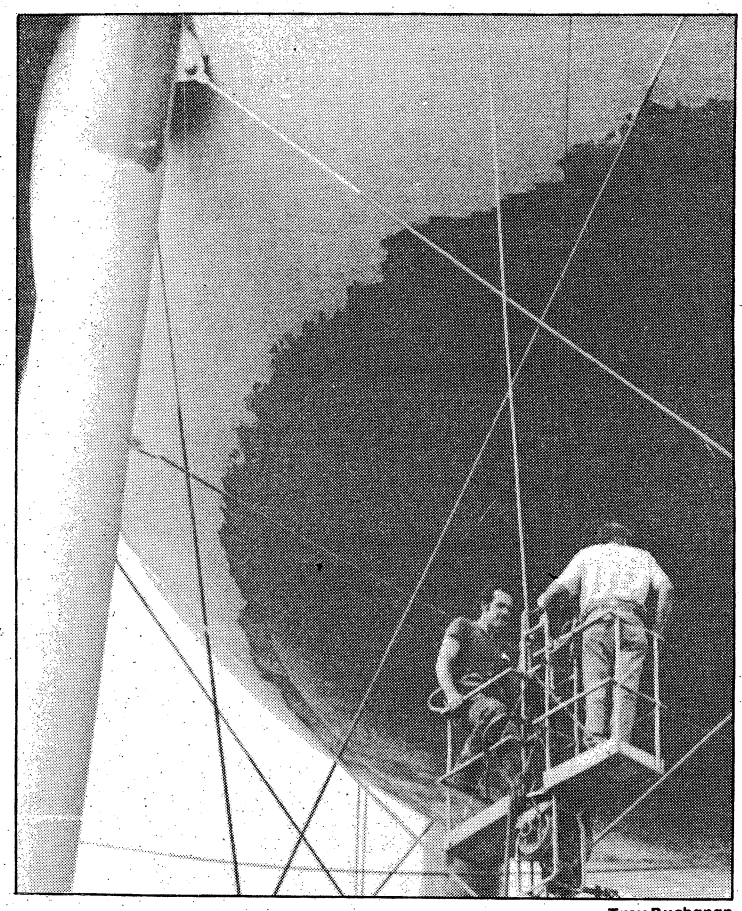
Long after the Army declared the importance of the military family, the soldiers of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment continue to keep the family at the focal point of their operations.

Sept. 26, the Battalion proclaimed Family Appreciation Day, and more than 500 soldiers and family members packed Red Cloud Range to celebrate the occasion.

According to SFC Angel Miranda, Battalion operations sergeant, the celebration started with only a few family members touring the Battalion facilities, to include a visit to many of the ranges operated by the unit.

"The intent was to enlighten the families on our mission and to show them how we go about carrying it out on a day-to-day basis," Miranda said.

Some of the family members were not aware of the significant contributions 29th soldiers make toward training infantry officers, non-commissioned officers and One Station Unit Training soldiers, Miranda said.



He explained, "We teach all areas of general subjects: tactical communication, threat, land navigation, nuclear, biological and chemical warfare, first aid and land mine warfare.

"We have Fort Benning's only mortar school and are the only unit at Benning with Bradleys."

The celebration concluded on Red Cloud Range where the crowd ate plenty — more than 200 pounds of chicken, 1,200 hamburgers and hot dogs, and 60 gallons of sodas were consumed, Miranda said.

Additionally, the group observed training with the Bradley and the 107mm mortar.

Static displays of the Bradley, the M-88 and M-578 recovery vehicles, all types of mortars, the M-35 2 ½-ton truck and M-1009 Commercial Utility Cargo Vehicle were set up for family members to explore.

Around Fort Benning

Editor's Note: "Around Fort Benning" is a new column that will appear in the Bayonet each week. Its purpose is to highlight the actvities of various post units.

Input is welcome from all sources and should be submitted to the Editor in Room 601, Building 4 by 11 a.m. Monday. All input must be typed, double-spaced with the name and specific unit of the writer and should be limited to two pages. Submissions will be subject to standard editing and condensing.

High quality black and white photographs will also be considered for publication in this column.

197th

Soldiers from Company C, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry and a fire support team from 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, recently deployed to Fort Hunter Liggett, Calif., to participate in a special test to help the Army learn more about the role of infantry forces.

The group will perform as both friendly and opposing troops in an evaluation dubbed the Contribution of Infantry to Battle Test. The test is being conducted at the Combat Developments Experimentation Center at Fort Hunter Liggett.

Charlie Company will perform such mechanized infantry tasks as breaching operations, reconnaissance and seizure of key terrain. Although the infantry soldiers are generally familiar with these tasks, they won't know the specifics of each scenario until the evaluation begins.

"The CIBT is being held to provide data to CDEC to validate existing infantry doctrines or formulate new doctrine," said Capt. Mark Sherrill, Co. C commander. "For that reason, these missions can't be rehearsed."

While part of the Company is taking part in an actual evaluation mission, the remainder will provide an opposing force and perform other support missions. Sherill also plans to incorporate internal evaluations of platoon and squad battle drills into the exercise.

The Company is scheduled to return to Fort Benning Oct. 20.— Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade.

It's hard to argue with the need to conserve energy. Since much of the energy we use is derived from rapidly depleting fossil fuels, it stands to reason that our sources of energy will last longer if used wisely.

In the 197th Infantry Brigade the goal of the energy awareness officer is to convince people of this logic and promote a spirit of volunteerism.

"Our main thrust is to create an awareness of the need to conserve energy," said Capt. Richard Bathurst, the Brigade logistics officer.

"We don't want to create resentment toward the program," Bathurst said. "The goal is to instill a volunteer attitude among soldiers in the Brigade."

The Brigade's ultimate goal is to do its part in helping Fort Benning meet its energy usage targets.

Rodney Carroll, the installation energy awareness officer, explained that Fort Benning receives its energy target from the Training and Doctrine Command. The target is converted to British Thermal Units and represents the total amount of energy that the post wants to consume in a given fiscal year.

"We're right on target for fiscal year 1986," Carroll said. "We're planning to do even better in the future by making use of monitoring devices and more inspectors."

Energy usage generally falls into two broad categories: mobility fuels used in vehicles and utility fuels used in garrison operations.

In the 197th Brigade, as in other units, keeping consumption of these fuels down means making sure soldiers turn lights off when not in use, close doors and windows when air conditioning is on and avoid wasting vehicle fuels. These steps are only a few of the many that can be adopted.

"We have many indications that volunteerism is working in the Brigade," Bathurst says. "For example, spot checks show that lights are generally turned off when they're supposed to be." — Bill Branley, 197th Infantry Brigade.

Fourteen field-grade Latin American officers representing three countries graduated Monday from the Resource Management course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Guest speaker for the graduation ceremony was U.S. Air Force Col. Walter Hines, dean of the War College at Maxwell AFB, Ala.

The nine-week course is designed to give students a working knowledge of how to employ resources more efficiently on a national and general staff level by using management techniques, economic and quantitative analysis, and environmental factors.

Graduating from Ecuador were Majs. Rufo I. Cisneros, Edmundo Hernandez and Franklin Torres. Navy Lt. Cmdrs. Galo J. Davila and Napoleon A. Villacis, also represented Ecuador in the graduation.

Graduates from Honduras were Lt. Cols. Arnulfo Cantarero, German Dole, Diomedes Garcia, Carlos A. Hidalgo, Alejandro Martinez, Wilfredo Salgado and Maj. Leonel A. Galindo. One Honduran Navy officer, Lt. Cmdr. Reynaldo Flores, also graduated.

Graduate, Maj. Luis A. Cordoba, represented Panama. — Marco Morales, U.S. Army School of the Americas

"Those soldiers (split option) come to us between their junior and senior years in high school, so that lowers the average considerably," he explained. "If you want the mean, the regular Army guy, I would say his average age is about 20."

Helmling doesn't believe the new Georgia law will have much of an impact on the ATC soldiers. "Our soldiers are on a fairly restricted regiment," he said. "They don't have the opportunity to get off post in a drinking environment more than two to three times max.

"The only way it will affect our soldiers is to curtail their invovlement in things like the AUSA (Association of the U.S. Army) picnic or Oktoberfest," Helmling said.

Whether they come from the ATC during those brief periods of freedom or from Fort Benning's other units, soldiers make up a large part of the crowd at some local night clubs according to the managers.

One manager estimated that soldiers account for "about 90 percent" of his club's business. But, he added, "most are over 21. I don't think we'll be affected too much."

Fort Benning commander, Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., addresses the audience at the Combined Federal Campaign kick-off breakfast Tuesday.

Breakfast marks beginning of CFC

Story and photo by Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

The Combined Federal Campaign began the 1986 drive with a kick-off breakfast at the Regimental Dining Hall on Fort Benning Tuesday.

The breakfast was given for unit commanders and sergeant majors to officially begin the campaign.

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., Fort Benning's commanding general, spoke to the audience and encouraged them to make the first week the most profitable one.

"In the past 15 years we've generated millions of dollars and a great amount of that went to our soldiers right here on post," Burba said.

The CFC solicits for voluntary health and welfare agencies that cooperate locally in a combined single campaign for federal personnel.

The CFC distributes to organizations such as the United Way, the National Voluntary Health and International Service and many others.

"Lets give it (the campaign) our best," Burba encouraged.

Oktoberfest to feature parade, live entertainment

USAIC Public Affairs Office

"O 'zapft is!"

With those words, Lt. Col. Fred Shulz will officially open this year's Oktoberfest at the Columbus Ironworks Trade and Convention Center Saturday.

Festivities are set to begin with a parade down Broadway at 11 a.m., followed by the tapping ceremony conducted by Shulz.

"The tapping ceremony is a tradition in the city of Munich, Germany," said Jim Gallagher, vice president of the Fort Benning-Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army, which sponsors the event.

"The mayor of Munich taps the first keg and passes around mugs of beer and declares Oktoberfest officially begun," he said.

Oktoberfest originally began as a royal wedding celebration and has developed into a tradition in Germany, Gallagher said.

German polka music will be played from noon until the fest ends. Country and western and rock and roll bands will also play from noon to midnight.

The Georgia Dancing Machine, a dance performing group from Melissa's Dance Studio in Columbus, are scheduled to perform at 2:30 and 4:30 p.m., and Miss Georgia 1985 Samantha Mohr is planning appearances at at 1:30 and 3:30 p.m.

A variety of door prizes will be awarded, including merchandise donated by AUSA corporate members. The top prize is a weekend for two at the Miracle Mile Resort in Panama City, Fla.

Admission is $3 per person, and children under 12 will be admitted free if accompanied by an adult.

The Ironworks is located at Front Avenue and Ninth Street across from the Hilton in downtown Columbus.

'Spirit of Yorktown' carries on 205 years after historic battle

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

According to the history books, Sept. 28, 1781, "was a fine clear day, and sunny." Surely a good omen as the combined French and Continental armies quit Williamsburg and headed for Yorktown, Va.

It was a march that would lead to the final victory for the Americans in their fight for independence against England, and mark the defeat of the Earl Charles Cornwallis, lieutenant-general of the British army, and second in command of the King's forces in America.

His surrender at Yorktown on Oct. 17 ended six years of battle and meant victory for the democratic form of government so dearly paid for by the American forces.

For the Americans fighting to secure their independence, it was clearly a bold decision to take up their swords and die rather than submit to tyranny.

That they chose to do so indicates the depth of their commitment to the cause of freedom.

The ideas they were fighting for, while accepted as our due in modern society, were bold and treasonous at the time.

Advocating no monarchy, no established church, no hereditary nobility, no military establishment, no colonization; these were radical ideas that directly opposed everything the British stood for.

Indeed, the Declaration of Independence was written in secret, for fear of reprisal from the British authorities. The principles it expounded, self government, limited government, religious freedom, popular education and a classless society, were untried dreams yet to stand the test of time.

To many people, these were not self-evident truths, that "all men are created equal; all have a right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Advocating that the purpose of government was to secure these rights, that men have the right to overthrow existing governments and make new ones was the most revolutionary idea of all.

Americans were the first people to revolt against a mother country and set up their own. It was the first nation founded squarely on the right of revolution; on the "right to alter or abolish" government.

As James Madison said shortly before the inauguration of the new nation, "If there be a principle that ought not to be questioned within the United States, it is that every nation has a right to abolish an old government and establish a new one. This principle is not only recorded in every public archive, written in every American heart, and sealed with the blood of a host of American martyrs, but is the only lawful tenure by which the United States hold their existence as a nation."

To the farmers, printers, tradesmen and planters fighting in the trenches at Valley Forge, Lexington, Concord and Bunker Hill, it had been six long years with little pay, hardship and deprivation on the battlefields. Many had served their enlistments and longed for an end to the strife so they could return to their homes and loved ones. But the battle was not over; their freedom was still beyond their grasp and so they stayed.

As they faced the British at Yorktown, a ragtag band with weapons to match, they faced an enemy of professional fighting men. That the Americans emerged victorious is a testament to their courage, determination and endurance.

How many among them realized the effect their deeds would have on future generations and the world?

How many realized the truth in Thomas Paine's words: "America made a stand, not for herself only, but for the world, and looked beyond the advantages which she could receive."

Next week: The Battle of Yorktown.

Q: I am experiencing serious financial problems. Creditors keep harrassing me for money I don't have. Is there someone who will help me out?

A: Your first step in attempting to solve your problem should be to determine exactly how serious your situation is. Help in doing this is available from Army Community Service budget counselors. Appointments with a budget counselor can be made by callng 545-5516.

These same counselors will assist you in setting up a personal budget and in negotiating with creditors to get you back on payment schedules and end their harrassment.

Q: I have just been informed that my company commander is initiating a report of surve against me because I lost some o my gear on our last field trainin exercise. What should I do?

A: The Army uses the report o survey to determine liability fo lost and damaged governmer property. In your case a survey ing officer will be appointed t investigate the incident. In orde to find you liable for the los equipment, he must determin that you were negligent in carin for the property and that you negligence was the cause of th loss of the equipment.

You have three opportunities t present evidence in your behal First, you will probably be aske to give a statement to the survey ing officer.

Second, after the officer fi ishes his investigation, you wi be given the opportunity to re view all of the evidence availabl and provide a rebuttal to th conclusions of the investigatin officer.

At this time, you may reques that any amount that you ma have to pay be prorated over period of time. Third, if you ar found to be liable for the los equipment, you have two years t appeal this conclusion.

Drill sergeant stresses importance of basic skills

The Bayonet staff writer

"I won't graduate any man that I wouldn't go into combat with. I believe in that. The men I train here could go to their unit and right into a combat zone. Their one station unit training has to give them enough skills to survive in combat until they learn the tricks of the trade," said SFC Patrick Coyle, the senior drill sergeant of Company A, 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

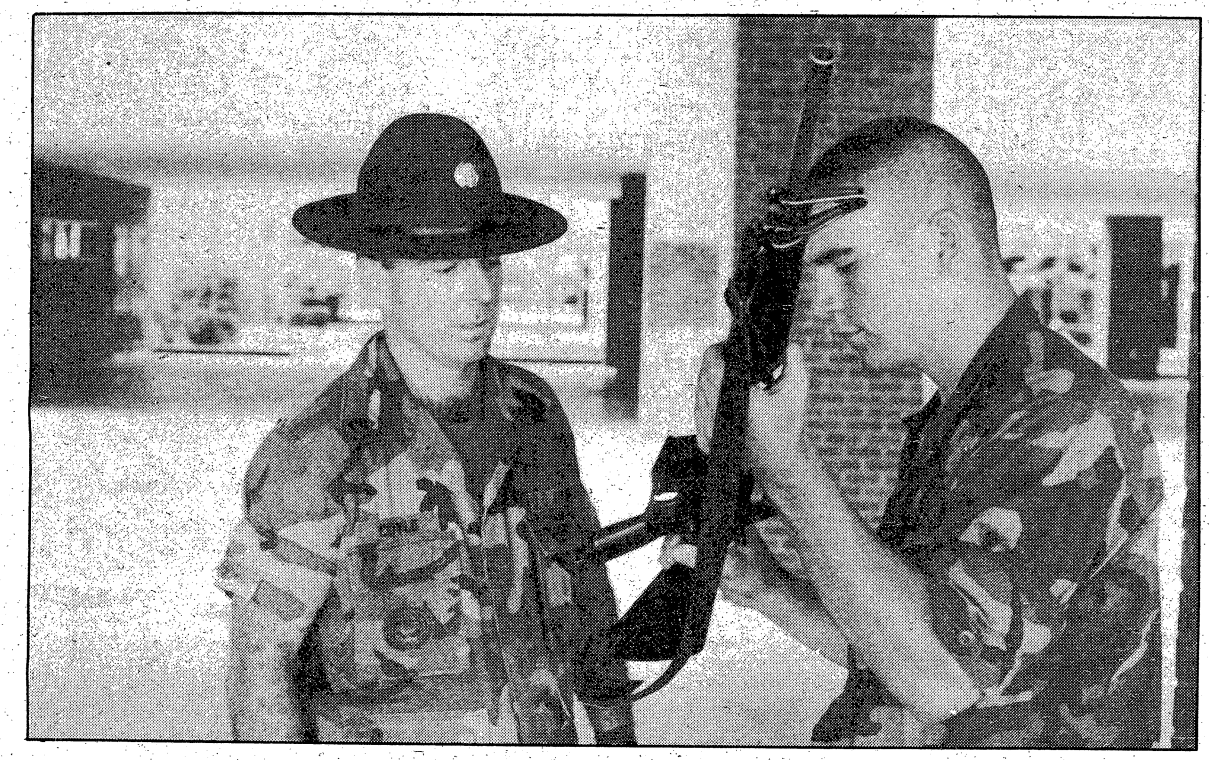
Coyle, a 13-year Army veteran, has been "under the hat" for almost two years. He is a mortarman and, after graduating from Fort Benning's Drill Sergeant School, he reported in to the 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

Coyle's day typically starts at 4:30 a.m. when he comes in for physical training. Normally, his day doesn't end until 8:30 p.m. and many times much later.

"As a drill sergeant and, especially as a senior drill, I have a lot of 'half beer nights.' I'll get in late, turn on the television, drink half a beer and go to sleep," Coyle said.

The senior drill sergeant says he doesn't mind the 16-hour days or the seven-day work weeks that seem to be the rule rather than the exception.

"I like my job as a drill sergeant and as a senior drill for a number of reasons. Working with young soldiers is satisfying. As a drill sergeant I have the most direct impact on that soldier's training than anyone else.



"The very best thing about this job, beyond a shadow of a doubt, is taking young men and turning them into something they had no idea they could be — an infantry soldier," Coyle said.

A drill sergeant's day is spent constantly training and correcting new soldiers. They teach young men from all over America how the Army wants a bed made, how the Army wants boots shined, how the Army wants soldiers to march, how the Army wants soldiers to do the manual of arms. But, according to Coyle, drill sergeants have to do more than that to be successful.

"The secret to being an effective drill sergeant is psychology. You have to have military bearing; you have to set the example; you have to have technical knowledge, but without psychology you're beat.

"A drill sergeant has to teach a new recruit how to live as a soldier. That's a radical change for most young men. What we

Foreign wives learn 'haggling' at special OWC game show

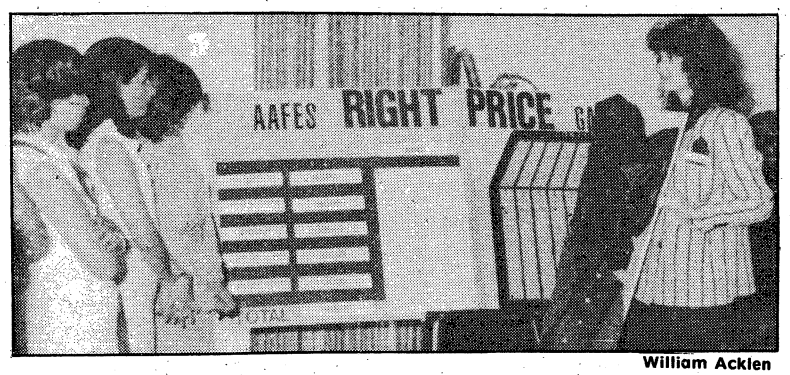
by Linda Mayer
U.S. Army School of the Americas correspondent

Shopping is a cultural experience, whether in Latin America or here in the United States. Recently Latin American ladies, accustomed to bartering for the best deal, discovered that bargains are available here in the United States without haggling.

Sixty-nine ladies from 11 countries learned, in a most entertaining way, that they can save more than 35 percent by shopping at the Post Exchange rather than at retail stores in Columbus.

"The Right Price," a game modeled after a television show, was the program for the USARSA Officers' Wives' September meeting at the Follow Me Golf Club. Ten lucky ladies were selected to be contestants. Lori Clay, PX sales and merchandise manager, displayed articles to the group, giving the "outside price" one would pay at a retail store in Columbus. Rosa Ranier translated, as necessary. The contestants guessed the PX price after each "showcase," and after five varied "showcases," each contestant's total was calculated.

In the television version of the game, a contestant guessing higher than the actual amount is automatically a loser. In the USARSA game, every contestant underestimated the savings available at the PX and guessed over the actual amount.



Mary Jean Lopez, special guest and publicity coordinator for the 1986 Fiesta in Columbus, won first prize of a $100 gift certificate from the PX. Her guess of $617 was just two dollars over the actual PX total of $615 for articles that would cost $968 in Columbus.

Mercedes Miranda from Puerto Rico won second prize of a $75 gift certificate, and Maria Tejada from the Dominican Republic won a $50 gift certificate for third prize. However, everyone who attended the event was a winner, receiving door prizes of AAFES brand household items.

Mens' and womens' clothing and fragrances were among the items used in the game, as well as a 20-piece set of dinnerware and a ladies' Swiss quartz watch with diamonds.

Because of the diversity of the Latin American countries involved, each USARSA wife's function is unique. "The Right Price" was another memorable occasion to add to the cultural exchange.

Special guests at the meeting, other than the winner, were Lenora Smith, president of the Chattahoochee Valley — Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army, and Isabel Caballero, program coordinator for the 1986 Fiesta in Columbus.

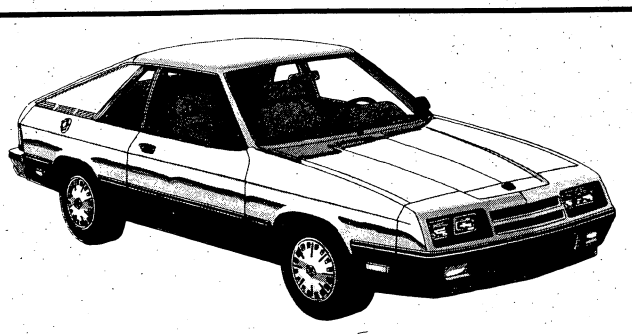
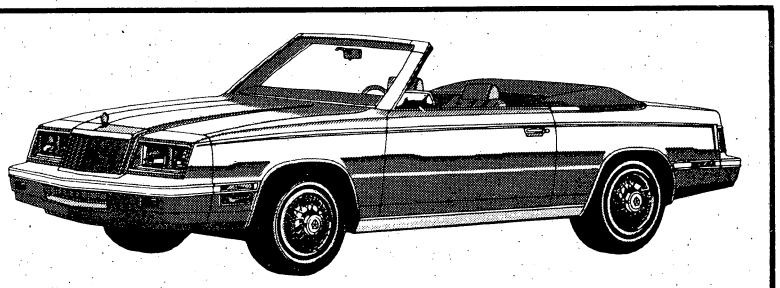
This lock-in is for children ages 8 to 14. Drop your child off at 7 p.m. tonight and enjoy a romantic night out (or in . . .) and pick your child up by 10 a.m. tomorrow.

Cost for this unique opportunity is only $12 a child. All they need to bring is a pillow and a sleeping bag. The enthusiastic staff will provide everything else, especially the fun.

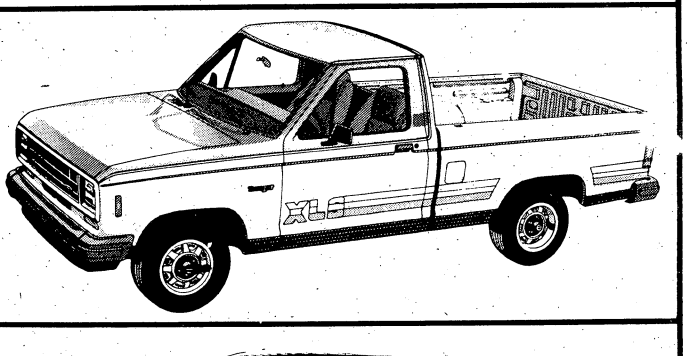
If you are interested, call 544-3079 or just come by the Rec Center on Marne Road to drop your child off a little early. The staff will be happy to answer any questions you may have.



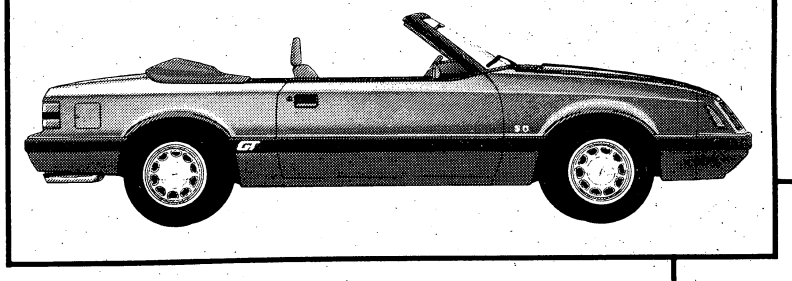
Destin Recreation Area — The U.S. Army Infantry Center Recreation Area is on a 15 ½ acre beach site in Destin, Fla., approximately 232 miles from Fort Benning.



Available are completely equipped cottages (two and three bedrooms), trailer pads, camping sites, camper service center, a snack bar, deep-sea fishing boats, inshore fishing boats, jet skis, sailboats, paddle boats, outboard motors, a beach area and sports equipment.



Right now is the best time of year to visit the beach — nice weather, no summer crowds, and plus all that, beginning Nov. 1 through March 31, drastically reduced rates are in effect. Depending on rank, prices range from $14 to $20 a night. For the fisherman, the Destin Fishing Rodeo began Oct. 1 and runs through Oct. 31.



Active duty and retired military and DoD civilians employees at Fort Benning are eligible to use this facility.

Engineers deploy to Puerto Rico

Story and photos
by Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

If a war should break out, the United States Army is going to need equipment.

It is the mission of the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, to be ready if such a situation arises. Recently, the engineers had a chance to prove their readiness.

Two months ago the wheels began turning in the Battalion's first Prepositioned Material Configured to Unit Sets exercise.

The mission would normally be carried out as a combat equipment group in Europe during wartime, but for the most recent exercise the engineers deployed to Puerto Rico.

According to Capt. Horace E. Williams, assistant operations officer for the 36th Engineer Group the main reason for the exercise was to practice emergency deployment.

Emergency deployment sometimes involves moving to various designated active and reserve units around the world and preparing vehicles that have been stored in warehouses for years.

In the case of a deployment to Europe, the troops would draw equipment from such places as Brunssum, Netherlands or Olen, Belgium, and then move it to various POMCUS sites.

In this particular simulation, the soldiers deployed to Puerto Rico instead of Europe.

"The 448th Reserve Engineer Battalion in Puerto Rico was acting as a POMCUS unit because the 448th's Table of Organization and Equipment is basically the same as ours," said SFC Howard D. Lyttle, 43rd Battalion Maintenance and Operations sergeant.

"The 448th were extremely helpful. They helped us out a lot," said Maj. Tim L. Wood, operations officer for the 43rd.

The whole mission actively involved only 350 of the Battalion's 2,000 troops. But they used a wide variety of specialists, ranging from medics to cooks to generator repairmen and heavy equipment operators. Even the clerks and typists were busy driving vehicles when needed.

"We did send a small group down two months earlier to do a reconnaissance of the area," Wood said.

As a result of the coordination, Camp Santiago was designated as the center of operations. Plans were made to pick up vehicles at motor pools in major cities such as Ponce, Caguas and San Juan and then prepositioned to Camp Santaigo.

The advance party of 129 soldiers arrived at Roosevelt Roads NAS on Sept. 16. Flying aboard two C-141s, the soldiers brought nothing but their field gear, an M8-80 contact truck, tool boxes, welding equipment, medical supplies and plenty of Meals, Ready-to-Eat.

"These supplies were brought along for practical purposes. The advance party needs to set everything up and they have to do preventive maintenance checks on all the vehicles there," said Capt. Robert C. Davis, assistant operations officer for the 36th Engineer Group.

By the time the main body of engineers arrived in Puerto Rico on Sept. 19, the vehicles had all traveled by convoy from the

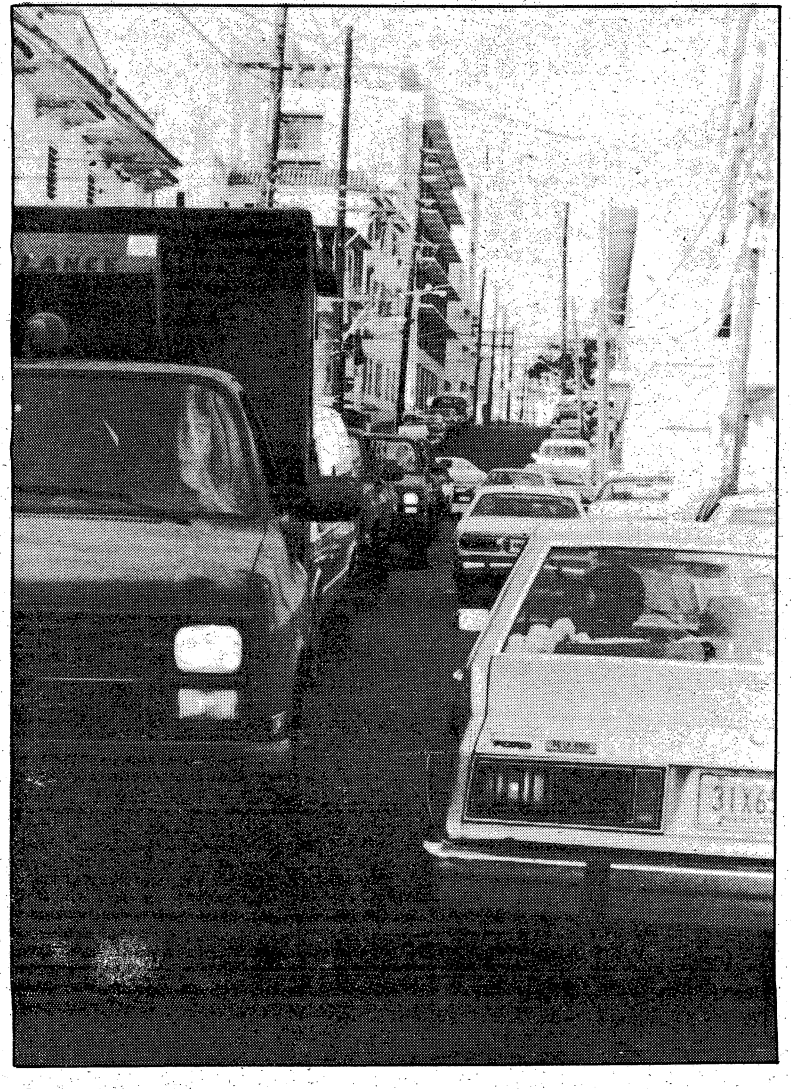
Returning troops test new airstrip

by Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

As the C-130 circled the runway at McKenna Airfield Monday, soldiers from Company D, 43d Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group anxiously waited to welcome the last plane full of 43rd soldiers home from Puerto Rico.

The anxiety of the soldiers stemmed from the fact that the C130 was to be the first large aircraft to land at the newly certified airstrip.

However, to the soldiers of the 43rd, McKenna is no ordinary airstrip. It is an airstrip they built themselves earlier this year.



McKenna is also the only combat airstrip on Fort Benning, making the landing of the C130 a special event for 43rd soldiers and Fort Benning.

According to Col. Paul Y. Chinen, the 36th Group commander, and Lt. Col. Charles S. Rust, the 43rd Engineer Battalion commander, the soldiers worked long, hard hours on the airstrip and accomplished something they could be very proud of. Chinen and Rust were both on the plane as it landed at McKenna.

"In my long career, I have seen many airstrips like this one, but this is, by far, the best I've ever seen," Chinen said.

Soldiers from the advance party take another look at their vehicles after the long drive from Fort Buchanen to Camp Santiago.

A convoy of 43rd engineers take the long way back to Camp Santiago by way of San Juan.

Scrapers await departure from a motor pool.

Schools

Language class brings children of different cultures together

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning schools

"It's a small world after all," sings a group of students in Spanish, then in English. The students are in the English as a second language class at the Fort Benning Schools.

Diane Guthmiller, the teacher of the ESL program, believes that these lyrics represent one of the major tenets of the program — that students bring languages, cultures, and ideas together for the enrichment of her 43 ESL students and their classmates.

Fort Benning Schools have students from Germany, Mexico, Chile, Ecuador, Venezuela, Brazil, Colombia, Peru, Argentina, Thailand, and Puerto Rico who are currently enrolled in ESL.

The program is designed to help non-English speaking students attain proficiency in speaking English while, at the same time, assisting students to function well in the total school program.

Kindergarten and first grade students remain in neighborhood schools. Guthmiller provides assistance to their teachers so that the young children benefit from ESL strategies while being totally immersed in the school program.

Second through fifth grade ESL students attend Edward A. White School, and sixth through eighth grade ESL students attend Don C. Faith Middle School. Guthmiller works with these students individually and in small groups on vocabulary, pronunciation, and grammar, as well as with understanding cultural differences and similarities.

Guthmiller also serves as a resource person for classroom teachers at White School and at Faith School, assisting teachers as they individualize their programs to meet the needs of the ESL students.

An experienced ESL teacher, Guthmiller taught in an ESL program in Virginia for several years before coming to Fort Benning two years ago. She says that while students vary in the speed at which they learn English, they almost always progress through the same stages of learning — listening and comprehending, speaking, reading and writing.

"The ESL program emphasizes the positive aspects of having the ability to speak more than one language," said Guthmiller. "The program provides a supportive setting where students can ask questions and practice speaking before speaking out in class or in social situations.

"It is always a thrill to see students developing the language skills and the confidence in their own abilities to communicate in English."

Bus riding safer when following rules

National Safety Council

Each day more than 22 million students ride the bus to and from school. To keep them safe, the National Safety Council encourages parents to teach their children important school bus safety rules.

Some 5,500 youngsters were injured and 45 were killed in school bus accidents in 1984, according to the Council. Of the fatalities, 35 occurred as the child boarded or exited the bus.

In observance of National School Bus Safety Week, which lasts through tomorrow, the Council urges parents to tell their children these guidelines for boarding and leaving the bus:

- When the school bus approaches, line up away from the road. Wait until the doors open before stepping into the roadway.
- Use the grab handle when stepping onto the bus. Once aboard, go directly to a seat.
- Don't engage in horseplay. Stay seated at all times.
- When crossing in front of a stopped bus, walk about 12 feet in front of the vehicle in order to stay in the driver's range of vision.
- Wait for a signal from the driver before beginning to cross the street.
- Do not cross the center line on the road until the driver signals that it is safe to do so.

The Council reminds parents that children should also be taught the correct way to cross a street: Always stop at the curb or at the otside edge of a parked car. Look left, right, and then left again, before entering the roadway.

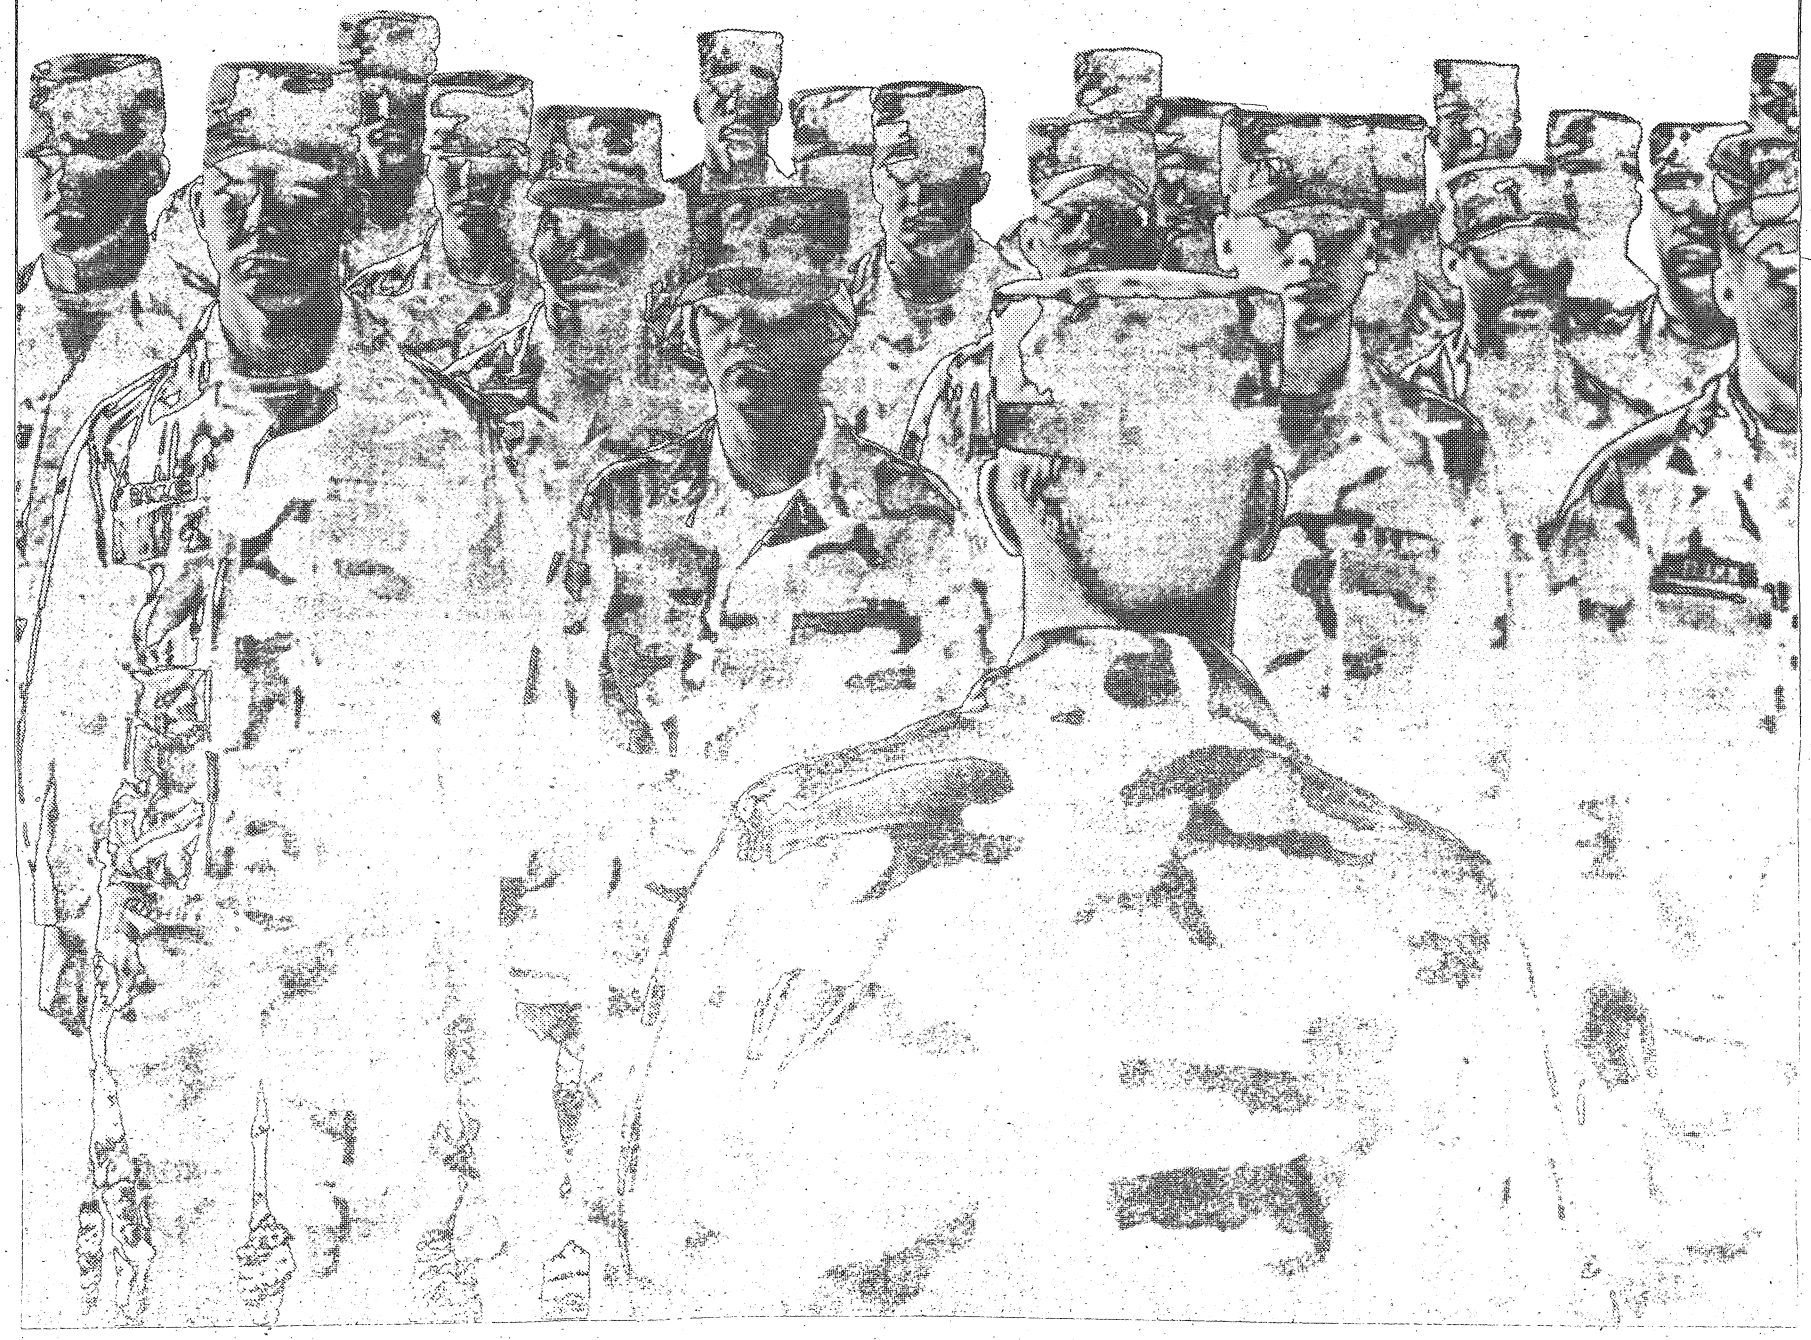
Keeping good soldiers in the Army is part of every leader's job. Whether you're an NCO or an officer, your leadership can have a powerful influence on your soldiers, especially in their decision to reenlist.



Nobody knows better than you that when soldiers are treated fairly, with respect, and with a true concern for their goals and accomplishments, they're more likely to find their Army experience a positive one. And more likely to want to continue that experience.

As you know, it takes a lot to develop a good soldier. Time, patience, and effort. But the end result is worth it. Not just for a proud soldier, or the Army, but as a credit to your ability as a leader.

Next time you stand in front of your troops, remember that they're not just in the Army, they are the Army. And they're yours to keep.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

THEY'RE YOURS TO KEEP.

New Year celebration Judaism's major holy time

by Craig L. Allen
Fort Benning Jewish chaplain

On Oct. 3, Jews throughout the world begin the observance of the most significant period in the Jewish year, beginning with the New Year celebration of Rosh Hashana and culminating 10 days later with Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement.

Basically the period is one of personal and collective reflection wherein we intensely examine the previous year and recommit ourselves to those values that we believe God wishes and requires of us.

In the broadest sense, the yoke of heaven mandates the Jewish people to be a "light into the nations." This is not a passive role. Indeed, it is a proactive partnership with God in which our individual as well as our collective behavior must be a continuing positive example to friends, family and community. Toward that end, this period of the Jewish year is designed to be one of spiritual regeneration and religious rehabilitation.

However, the burden of "repentance and return" is not entirely on us. Since God has a stake in the affairs of humankind, Jewish tradition maintains that he, during this period, increases his efforts to make us aware of his presence and purpose. During this time of the year, God is especially close and accessible to us.

Obviously, the challenge is one of "tuning in," or getting on the right frequency or what military people often refer to as "the same sheet of music" with the Lord. Religious tradition provides some guidance. We are told that God reveals himself in a variety of ways, the most fundamental of which are history, nature and scripture.

Scripture is undoubtedly the most comprehensive, since it frequently interprets or explains God in light of history and nature. The relationship is somewhat circular because observation and contemplation of history and nature helped to motivate and inspire Biblical authors, editors and commentators! God's presence is evidence in nature and his purpose is revealed in history.

Furthermore, God's basic attributes are seen to be justice and mercy. Our role is to emulate these divine attributes, thus coming into partnership with God.

The Bible (especially, all the case law sections) becomes the blueprint, formulating the social structue necessary to establish justice and mercy in a practical, earthly context.

In a very real sense the Torah (five books of Moses) is a type of soldier's manual, complete with task descriptions, standards and performance measures. Its universal practicality is not subject to debate. It is a document that, when followed, has served to fashion a workable society out of chaos.

But those values and institutions require continual monitoring and input on our part. The High Holy Day period from Rosh Hashana through Yom Kippur serves to renew our individual and community commitment to those values and institutions. It is a time of intense self evaluation, of scrutiny over our deeds, repentance, and behavioral modification.

The concept of "return" is very revealing theologically. It is strongly linked to the idea of free will, or personal responsibility for our actions. We are the architects of our life's script, freely choosing good or evil.

One of the central features of the period is the daily sounding of the Shofar (Ram's Horn). This is the instrument that Joshua used to bring down the walls of Jerico. It is the same instrument whose sound "waxed louder and louder" at Mt. Sinai were the Jews receive the Ten Commandments. It's message during the New Year period is clear: "Awaken from your slumber and return to God."

We have a tremendous responsibility. It is also a tremendous opportunity that all of us, Jew and gentile, share. Therein lies the universal religious significance of this time of the year.

From humble beginning, center now largest in world

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

In 1918 Woodrow Wilson was president. The estimated population of the United States was more than 103 million people. Our country exported $3 billion worth of goods and services more than we imported and the U.S. Army Infantry School was officially founded on Oct. 7 at Fort Benning, Ga.

The Infantry School was a consolidation of three separate organizations that had been at widely scattered locations.

Originally, the first infantry school was at Jefferson Barracks, Mo. in 1826. It was called the Infantry School of Practice. The school was closed two years later, however, when its students were sent to participate in the Indian Wars.

In 1907, Arthur McArthur established a School of Musketry in California. This school was moved to Fort Sill, Okla. in 1913 and the name was changed to the Infatry School of Arms.

When the Army began expanding during World War I, the Department of the Army established a Small Arms Firing School at Camp Perry, Ohio and a Machine Gun School in Georgia. The Infantry School of Arms continued to operate at Fort Sill. It was the combination of these three schools, in 1918, that heralded the new U.S. Army Infantry School at Fort Benning.

After World War I the Army issued orders that Fort Benning was to be "salvaged." Maj. Paul Jones, then the post commander, took "salvage" to mean "save." Based on this, he had all buildings on Fort Benning painted to save them.

The Army's general staff then decided to set up a peacetime infantry school here. By September 1919 the infantry school became a permanent organization.

During the peacetime years between World Wars I and II many officers who would later become famous were trained and stationed at Fort Benning. Some of these distinguished officers included Dwight D. Eisenhower, Generals of the Army George C. Marshall and Omar N. Bradley; Gens. Lawton Collins, Joe Stillwell, Mark Clark and Courtney Hodges.

With the advent of World War II basic training for officers and enlisted men was expanded and the Parachute School was added as a course.

From its humble beginnings, Fort Benning has grown into one of the largest, most modern posts in the world.

The U.S. Army Infantry School teaches thousands of officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers each year in courses ranging from One Station Unit Training to the Infantry Officers Advanced Course.

It proudly retains the motto "to produce the world's finest combat infantryman."

Changing with times school's challenge

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Sixty-eight years after its inception, the U.S. Army Infantry School is still undergoing changes that seem to keep it in a constant state of metamorphosis. However, three constants remain intact: to be the proponent for all infantry; to develop, publish and evaluate fighting doctrine, organizations, material and training programs and, to train infantry soldiers and leaders to fight and win.

"The Infantry School is constantly changing because we want the best training possible for soldiers and leaders. The Infantry Center sometimes becomes frustrated with the constant change but we have to accomplish our mission," said Maj. Gary Dacey, the deputy to the School's secretary.

To accomplish its mission the school is organized under a commanding general/commandant, an assistant commandant and a deputy assistant commandant.

Under this command structure, the School is composed of a U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command System Manager and Infantry Proponency; a school secretary, the 29th Infantry Regiment, the Ranger Department, Combined Arms and Tactics Department, The School Brigade and three directorates: Evaluation and Standardization, Training and Doctrine and Combat Developments.

TRADOC System Managers are tasked with responsibilities such as coordinating and interfacing with higher commands, reviewing contractual actions and representing the School commandant or commanding general of TRADOC.

Infantry Proponency provides recommendations to the chief of infantry concerning force integration and personnel management for the infantry.

The School secretary provides all administrative needs to the School and maintains academic records.

Conducting tactical, technical, weapons and marksmanship training for infantry soldiers is part of the mission of the 29th Infantry Regiment. The 29th, additionally, provides subject matter experts for the development and evaluation of NCO and officer professional development.

The Ranger Department trains selected officers and NCOs in small unit tactics under conditions as close to combat as possible.

Combined Arms and Tactics is tasked with being the proponent for and presenting resilient instruction. CATD also figures heavily in infantry doctrine.

The Directorate of Training and Doctrine determines the need for and manages the development of all infantry doctrine, training programs and training materials.

The mission of the Directorate of Evaluation and Standardization is to identify and define infantry training development problems, determine solutions and provide quality control for USAIS products and processes. The directorate also coordinates standardization throughout the infantry from a USAIS standpoint.

Developing "boots to Bradleys," the Directorate of Combat Developments is responsible for infantry concepts, organizations, weapons, vehicles, clothing and equipment. This directorate ensures the infantry has what it needs to fight and win.

The School Brigade provides leadership development and evaluation of officer and NCO students. TSB conducts the Infantry Officer Basic Course, Basic Airborne, Jumpmaster, Pathfinder, NCO professional courses and the Army's only Officer Candidate School.

"The Infantry School is very egocentric. But that's because the Army revolves around the infantry and the infantry revolves around the School," Dacey said.

The USAIS currently conducts 22 schools in addition to training provided to soldiers at the Army Training Center.

General favors 'onion skin' leadership training

Army Infantry School commandant sees, praises production of solid infantrymen

by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

He could be compared to the dean of men at an academic institution. He oversees 22 different courses of instruction and turns out 38,000 students each year. His job is assistant commandant of the United States Army Infantry School. He is Brig. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey.

"I've just come to the Infantry School after nine years with infantry units in the 3rd and 9th Divisions. It's so easy to lose track at Fort Benning of how well this school trains soldiers and leaders.

"The graduates of One Station Unit Training, the Advance Non-Commissioned Officers' Course, the Infantry Officer Basic Course, the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, Ranger School and from all of the schools at Benning are as good as the Army has ever produced," McCaffrey said.

McCaffrey, as "dean of the Infantry School," said that the Ranger Course is the epitome of leadership training.

"Without a doubt, Ranger School is the greatest leadership course anywhere. It certifies a guy for combat. It's what we call the 'onion skin' leadership training process. You peel back layer after layer of a person during the course until you find out who and what he really is," said McCaffrey. "It's a great confidence builder to see how good your fellow Rangers really are."

The brigadier general also praised the Light Leader's Course because of the uniqueness of its training.

"It's unusual because we send an entire unit chain of command through the course at once — together. This builds cohesion. The course will soon become a permanent part of the School's curriculum," McCaffrey said.

He also said basic rifle marksmanship, AirLand Battle doctrine, the Advance Non-Commissioned Officers' Course and the Infantry Officers Advanced Course are set to undergo some innovations or changes in the future.

"Despite the advanced technology of the Army we still must have infantry soldiers who can hit targets in the excitement and confusion of combat. Our new M16A2 rifle and improved BRM training and trainers will enable us to be even more effective marksmen. With our new rifle and good training, soldiers will be able to hit targets at more than 800 meters," said McCaffrey.

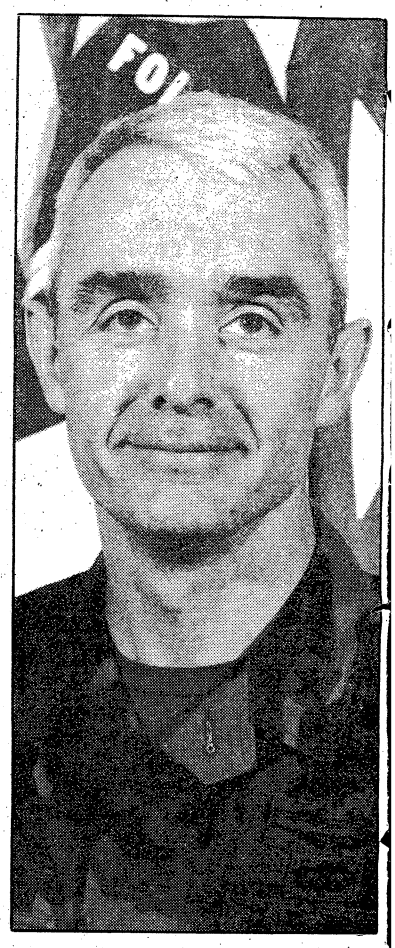
"We're emphasizing leaders learning how to teach rifle marksmanship so they can, in turn, teach their soldiers. This technique will produce deadly shooters," he said.

McCaffrey believes improved marksmanship will be an integral part of the Army's new AirLand Battle concept.

"AirLand Battle will not be business as usual. Soldiers are going to have to be able to engage the enemy at long distances. We recognize that future combat operations will include both air and ground operations and new technology. The modern battlefield will be small unit actions fighting, much of the time, in isolation.

"That means our soldiers and small unit leaders, our sergeants and company grade officers, will have to exert better leadership than in the past. They will have to be self-reliant and enormously confident," McCaffrey said.

Taking issue with the labels of low-, mid-, and high-intensity conflicts, McCaffrey said: "All actions involving the infantry center around the execution of small unit operations. The violent execution of armed combat applies to action in Europe as well as in a jungle."



Charging sergeants and company grade officers with the requirement of being better leaders led McCaffrey to talk about ANCOC and the IOAC.

"With the help of Benning's CSM Roy Owens and CSM Jan Schalauin, we've designed a new ANCOC that will better prepare sergeants for combat. (More than) 70 percent of their time will be spent in the field. Everything will be taught from the perspective of a first sergeant or platoon sergeant. The students will also be taught in small groups with highly experienced NCOs as their trainers," McCaffrey explained.

The officers in IOAC will have a trained officer as their trainer. "These trainers and students work face-to-face every day during their training," McCaffrey said.

McCaffrey also said the Pathfinder Course was being revamped to bring it on line with the new technology of the UH-60 and CH-47D helicopters.

"In the Infantry School of today, nothing remains static. Although this great institution works well already, Maj. Gen. Burba has us pushing to continue to create new opportunities," McCaffrey said.

Energy Update

by Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

After experiencing the hottest and driest summer on record, we were looking forward to the relief of mild fall days.

To date, that relief has not arrived. Daily temperatures are running in the mid-90s, a good 10 degrees above normal.

The result is a record long air conditioning season to go with the record hot temperatures.

The fall and spring seasons are the two periods we rely heavily on for reducing energy consumption when air conditionin and heating systems are not in operation.

It appears now that our off season will be very short. This means we must use air conditioning as wisely and efficiently as possible.

Please remember that the Energy Office will not release air conditioning units to operate until the outside temperature reaches 78 degrees Farenheit.

Building occupants should ensure that the units are turned off 30 minutes before quitting time, in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 11-27.

With your continued support and conservation, we can continue to provide air conditioning through the present heat wave.

The above facts should be kept in mind as we enter American Energy Month. The month of October is set aside to promote better utilization of efficient energy technologies and all domestic enrgy resources. Most Americans now acknowledge this as a national priority.

We believe that it is imprudent for the United States, by far the largest enrgy consuming nation in the world, to be overly dependent on imported oil. We must inform our fellow Americans that while we have excellent technologies and abundant resources, America has not yet achieved energy independence.

Fort Benning will observe our annual Energy Awareness Week Oct. 19 through 25. Several activities are planned during that week and we will run an article in next week's Bayonet to inform you of them.

Remember, as we begin a new fiscal year, the weather is not working in our favor. To overcome this handicap we ask for your continued support in the wise and efficient use of our energy resources.

have to accomplish is behavior modification. These troops have to be mentally motivated all the time to get through this training. That's our job, how to keep them motivated. We have to try to keep these guys liking what they're doing and believing they like it. All of our soldiers are pretty much motivated but when they get tired or sleepy or a little down a drill sergeant has to use psychology to keep them motivated," said Coyle.

The senior drill sergeant's positive outlook comes through in dealing with a recalcitrant soldier who had refused to train. When the company first sergeant inquired about the young troop, Coyle responded: "First sergeant, I've been making that soldier run behind the formation during P.T. This morning another soldier fell out and 'refuser' policed him up and got him going again. He's coming around. He's going to graduate. I guarantee it!"

Redskins scalp Bears in Youth Activities football

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

Blue field hosted several hard-hitting football games Saturday highlighted by the Redskins skinning the Bears in a 22-6 victory.

Scoring from 57 and 35 yards out, tailback Robert Beverly led the Redskin assault.

The Redskins attacked from every angle possible, with quarterback Steve Murrell scampering 18 yards on a broken pass play to tally six points against the Packers.

From another position, defensive lineman, Miguel Suarez charged the Packer line to find the quarterback in the endzone for the safety.

Moments later defensive ends, Murrell and Beverly met at the quarterback once again in the end zone for the final score.

Rashaad Dobbs destroyed the Packer offense, returning an interception 78 yards, which set up the final Redskin touchdown.

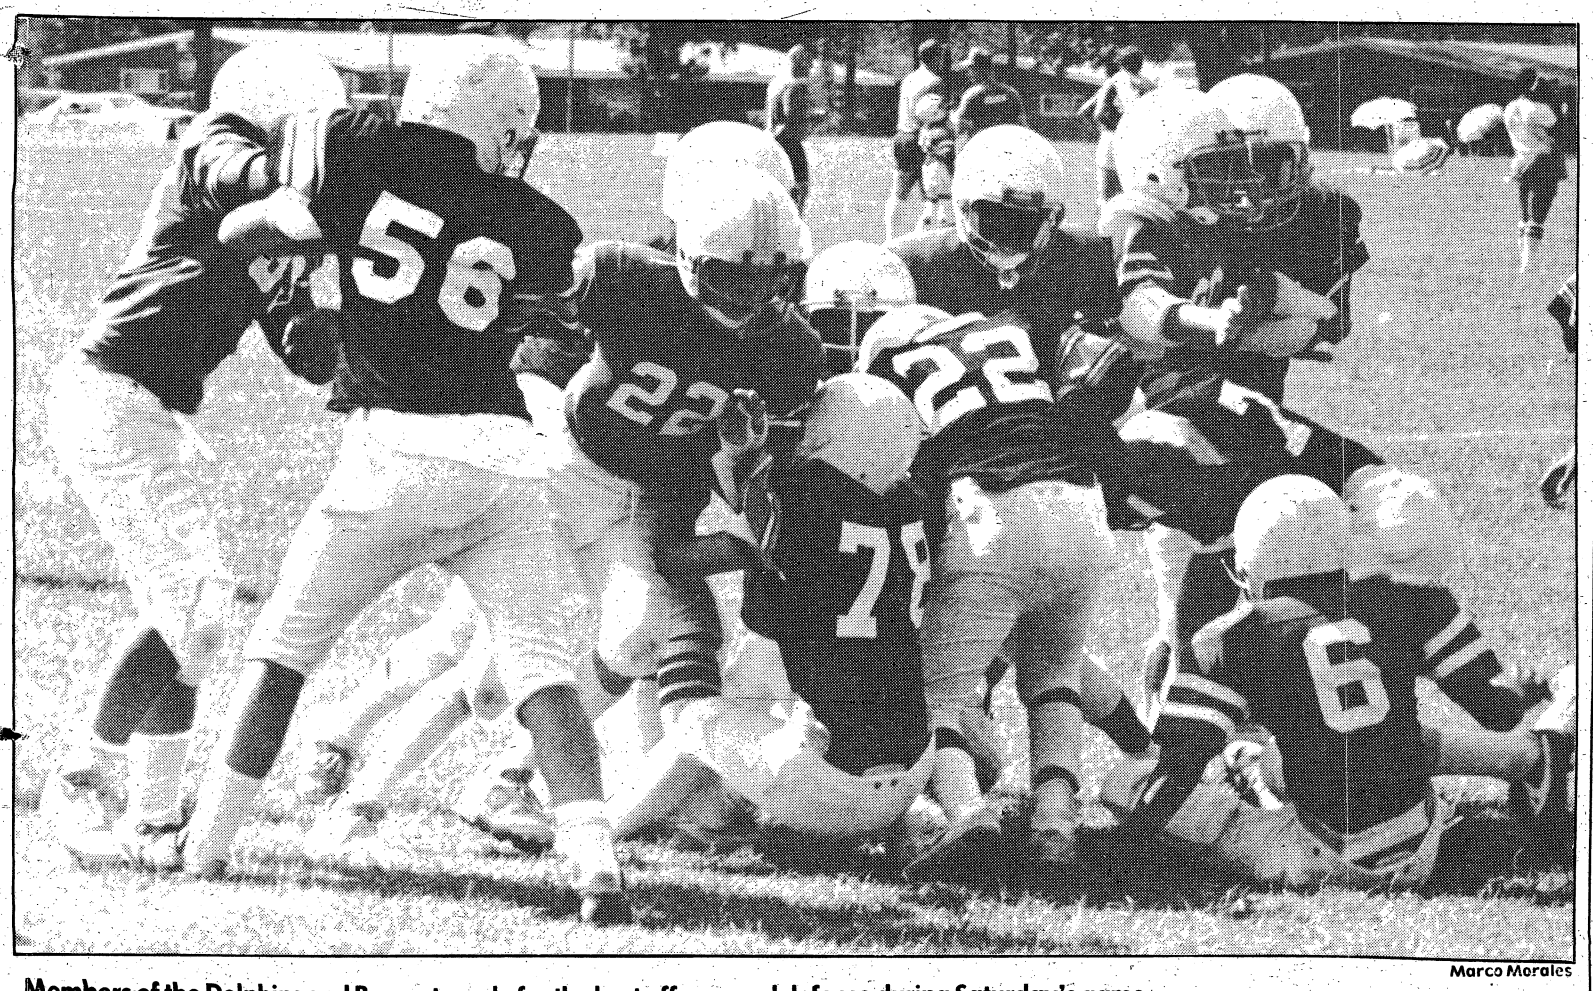
When the 9 and 10 year-olds hit the field, the Bears blanked the Dolphins 12-0 with touchdown runs by halfbacks Lydell Beverly and Michael Clemmons.

In the opening game of the season, the Bear defense held the Columbus Colts to only six points while the offense went on to pull out 14 points for the victory.

The Bear club keeps the slate clean, with a 2-0 record.

The Bear defense is spearheaded by Fredy Martinez, Larry Richman and Lydell Beverly.

In flag football action, the Bears slapped a 32-18 defeated to the Redskins.



The winning combination came as Bears quarterback Rodney Ulmer consistently hit B.J. Rogers in a comeback effort.

The Bears trailed 18-14, but the blocking on the offensive line allowed Ulmer the time to make the connection.

Will Hunter and Travis Sawyers protected the quarterback in the backfield.

In the second half, James Laberette and Matt Hunter kept pressure on the Redskin quarterback.

"The Redskins have a good team. We had to play an aggressive game to beat them," said Bear Coach Sawyers.

Atlanta Falcons will continue winning streak

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

Washington at New Orleans

The Saints, surprisingly, will be able to generate the necessary offense. But, can the force of a Jay Schroeder-Gary Clark connection be offset by the shallow Saints secondary? The first upset of the day will be when George Rogers returns to New Orleans without being able to penetrate the line.

In the upset of the season, the Saints will rally past the 'Skins at the Superdome.

Cleveland at Pittsburg

In a contest of field goals, Pittsburg stole past the Oilers last week.

The Steelers are having problems at the quarterback position. Seven-year veteran, Mark Malone, may not have been Coach Chuck Noll's best choice. The decision has blanked star receivers Louis Lipps, Calvin Sweeney and John Stallworth.

In this week's theft, it will be Cleveland by more than a field goal.

Miami at New England

In a game that will come down to a field goal, Tony Franklin's accuracy shines over that of Fuad Reveiz, who missed two last week.

Patriot cornerback Ronnie Lippett and safety Fred Marion, will combine to deflate any attempt by Dan Marino to drop in on the duo of Mark Clayton and Mark Duper.

The Patriots will land the Dolphins, shutting down Dan Marino for the second consecutive week.

Dallas at Denver

Karl Mecklenburg and Steve Busick should be able to contain the Cowboys' explosive backfield long enough for John Elway to get his offensive weapons zeroed.

Steve Watson, the 195-pound speedster, is an ample target for Elway as the Broncos throw the Cowboys to a defeat.

Los Angeles (Raiders) at Kansas City

Kansas City hopes to stay on the heels of the Broncos in the American West.

In this match up, the Chiefs must rely on an air attack with the running game being closed off by the strong point of the Raider club — the impregnable Raider defensive line.

But, there is no worry because Todd Blackledge is more than capable of moving the Chiefs offense through the air.

Stephone Paige continues to thrill the fans with the big catch, while consistency goes to Anthony Hancock.(Both will be needed to beat Howie Long)

Yet, the Chiefs will raid Los Angeles in this battle of the West.

Philadelphia at Atlanta

Philadelphia has the arsenal capable of caging the Falcons — A rookie running back who can run the pass option — A receiver who truly lives up to his name. How can you lose with a Keith Byars - Mike Quick combination?

Even with the personnel, the Eagles have not shown that they can put it together. With a schedule that gets no easier, the Eagles will fall into the claws of the beaming Falcons.

Atlanta's thirst for victory will lead them to a 5-0 record.

Tampa Bay at Los Angeles (Rams)

Did Tampa Bay set up a club revolving around the invisible Bo Jackson?

In a club that uses it strengths and shelters it weaknesses, there is still a missing element.

Steve Young once again has moved into the starting quarterback position over Steve DeBerg. But, this is not the missing element.

Though the Rams will not be able to pass against Jeremiah Castille, Eric Dickerson will have his best game of the season, leading the Rams to victory by a four-point margin.

New York (Giants) at St. Louis

The Giants have consistently climbed over the Cardinals, who are now perched on a 0-4 record.

Joe Morris remains the primary weapon in the Giants' attack, while Phil Simms' striking power revolves around Lionel Manuel and Byron Williams.

The Giant explosion will be unavoidable and will blast the Cardinals by seven.

Minnesota at Chicago

Welcome home Jim McMahon.

San Diego at Seattle

Dave Krieg has in his fleet of receivers one of the NFL's greatest.

Steve Largent will make the day a nightmare for the Charger defensive ends.

Pulling the secondary deep will allow Curt Warner ample room to rump 100 plus yards in the Seahawks retaliation.

Houston at Detroit

In a warm-up for the upcoming contest with the Windy City Bears, the Oilers will have to pump up a true showing of their potential when they take the road to Detroit.

Veteran Drew Hill and the rookie from Louisville, Ernest Givins, will demonstrate Oiler excellence in the Houston victory in the Lions Den.

Buffalo at New York (Jets)

Both teams have the offense capable of blowing past any team in the NFL.

Ken O'Brien, in just four years has proven to be the best at what he does. Finishing last season completing 297 of 488 attempts with 25 touchdowns, he was the number one quarterback in the league. He continues to keep the defensive secondaries in a tailspin.

The Jets defense will make the difference in this one. The Jets will scream past Buffalo to up one for the win column.

Cincinnati vs. Green Bay

The Bengals will be looking for a momemtum-builder after the Bears cut deep into their 2-2 ego.

The Boomer must be able to look over the 6 foot 4 inch, 259 pound Ezra Johnson to find Chris Collinsworth or their first round wide receiver, Tim McGee.

The Bengals ground threat, James Brooks, will break through the Packer line to drive the Bengals ahead of the Pack.

Indianapolis at San Francisco

The struggling Colts are still looking for the right combination to make them either a winning club or just a competitive one. Maybe, they will find it in the next draft.

In this 49er exibition game, San Francisco will abuse the tamed Colts.

Fort Benning Flyers get good start

by Joel D. Courtemanche
Fort Benning Flyers correspondent

The Fort Benning Flyers hosted the Albany Eagles Rugby Football Club at Stilwell Field Sept. 20. The Flyers spotted Albany an early lead before rolling to a 32-10 victory.

Lew Boone led the Flyers with three scores during the second half for the first "hat trick" of the season.

Albany gained a score when Oliver Jones picked up the loose ball and raced five meters through the Benning defenders for the first score. Albany's lead was short because Flyer Bob Higgins repeated Jones' score two minutes later. Higgins pulled the ball out of a scrum, took two steps forward, and dove across the try line to even the score.

Albany recaptured the lead as Jones intercepted an errant Flyer pass, and sprinted 40 meters for the score. The successful kick gave Albany a 10-4 lead. The Flyers countered off of good scrum play when Henry Helstead carried the ball in from three meters out and cut the score to 10-8.

Late in te first half, the Flyers scored the eventual winning try when Joe Trawinski caught an Ariel Rivas pass, and broke a pair of tackles to score. Billy Whitesides hit on the extra point attempt to give the Flyers a 14-10 lead at the half.

The Flyers opened the second half with a rush. Rivas passed the ball to Luke Matau and Matau three motor pools to Camp Santiago.

"The actual process is different than what we would do in a real POMCUS mission. Equipment would have been drawn in six hours," Wood said.

Because the engineers proved their combat readiness capabilities so successfully, the next few days they busied themselves with assorted projects at Camp Santiago.

The projects included working on a 2,000 meter road through Puerto Rico's mountainous terrain, building culvert headwalls and opening an impassable road.

"The construction done at Camp Santiago is one way we can help pay the reservists for all their support," Wood said.

The main body returned to Fort Benning Friday with the rear detachment arriving on the newly built McKenna Airstrip Monday.

"This was the biggest emergency deployment readiness exercise that we've ever tried. We went to Honduras and Wisconsin but this is the first time we deployed a whole battalion on an emergency exercise," Davis said.

"Overall the whole two week period went super well. We deployed as part of EDRE and that validated the whole project," said Lt. Col. Charles S. Rust, commander of the 43rd Engineers.

Athlete sets sights on 1988 Olympics

by Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

Every muscle in his body strained as he jumped. He saw only the sawdust pit and he concentrated only on his goal: to do his best.

His concentration was so intense that he failed to notice the marker that had the world record inscribed upon it. He failed to see how incredibly close he was to that marker...too close in fact.

This was what happened to 2nd Lt. Ralph B. Spry at the World Military Championship in Rome, Italy recently for track and field competition.

"I was concentrating so hard that I didn't know 'till it was all over that I missed tying the CISM (Counsil de Internationale du Sport Militaire) record by one centimeter," he said.

Spry sucessfully walked away with a gold medal in the long jump, however.

Spry traveled a long road to that meet and is still following it toward a few more career goals.

"I train everyday. Basically in the fall months I use heavy weights and do quality heavy work. January through March I train indoors and from April through September I do speed workouts," Spry explained.

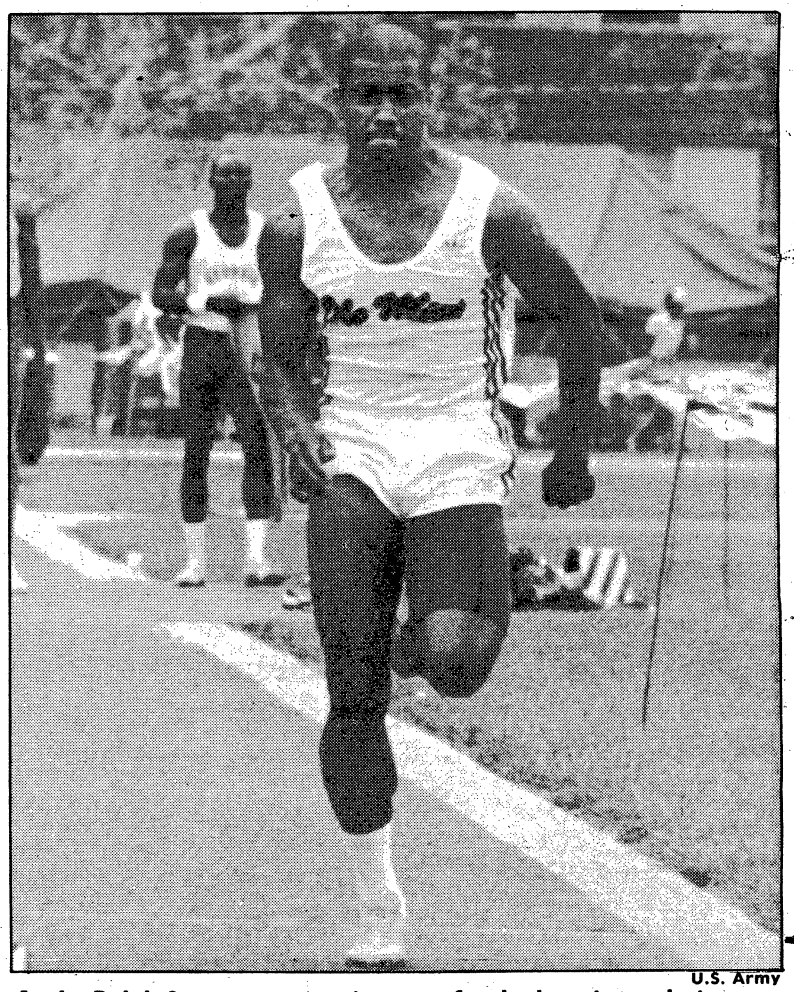
Spry's training has paid off.

He has won all the competitions he has entered and the most recent gold was just another step up his ladder.

In June, Spry needed to compete against representatives from all the United States Military services in the Inter-service Competition at the San Diego Naval Training Center in San Diego, Calif.

Spry won a spot among the 27 finalists to go to Rome, where he did a good job for the United States, even though the country didn't do well.

"The American teams didn't finish as well as expected. For example, we took only two gold, four silver and one bronze medals. But the Italians took 27 gold medals," Spry said.



In spite of his limited training (he trained every night after work), Spry managed to bring home a gold medal for jumping 26 feet, 7 ¾ inches. The standing record for the World Military Championships was 26 feet, 8 inches. This record has not been broken in 10 years.

"I just missed the record by one centimeter," he said. "But my jump was the 14th longest jump in the world this year." Spry is leaving Fort Benning soon, in pursuit of one of his major goals.

"The Army thinks I have a good chance at the Pan American team," he explained. "I will be going to the University of Florida to train full time under coach Joe Walker. I'll be training for the 1987 Pan Am Games and the 1988 Olympic trials," Spry said.

There's a lot of other competitions but those are my main goals," Spry said.

Spry will be moving on next month, but now there's a new name to watch for in the sports pages.

Bass Club sponsors annual tourney, fish fry

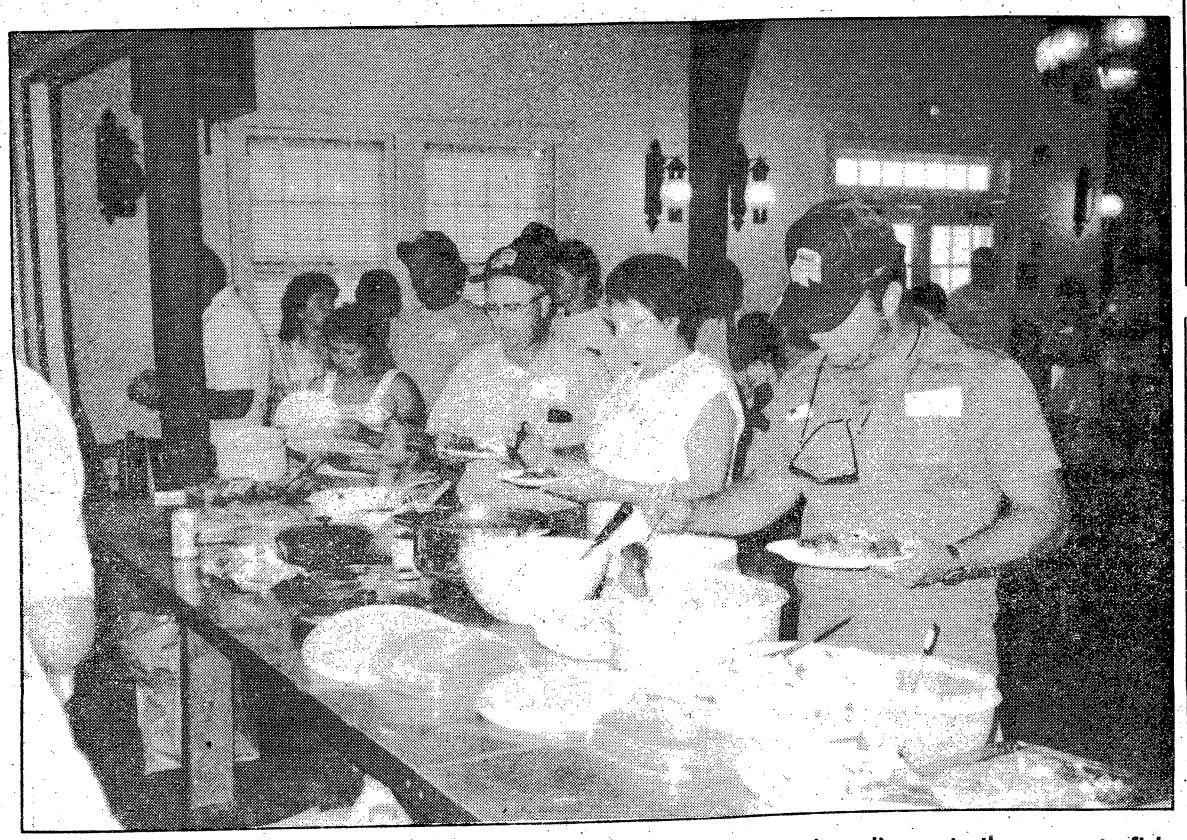
by Bill McCrary
Fort Benning Bass Club



After a relatively quiet summer, due to low water on the Chattahoochee River, the Uchee Creek Marina roared back to life recently as the Bass Club of Fort Benning sponsored its annual two-day tournament and fish fry.

Some 20 club members tested their skills, and patience, in pursuit of the elusive "Black Bass."

After 15 hours of heated competition, Jack Tibbs Jr. claimed first prize with a catch of 19 lbs. 4 oz. Second place went to Tommy Brewer, the current point leader in the club standings, with 16 lbs. 14 oz., while third place went to relative newcomer Murray Williams, with 14 lbs. 12 oz. Maj. Jack Eatman took "Big Fish" honors with a 5 lb. 10 oz "Bucket-Mouth."

After the final weigh-in some 100 family members, friends, and special guests were treated to the traditional "Fish Fry" at Uchee Creek.

Next month the club members will travel south to Lake Seminole State Park to test their skills in the land of grass beds and standing timber. Anyone interested in the Bass Club of Fort Benning can call 545-1213 or 687-8514.

Bass Club members and their families go through the serving line at the recent fish fry.

raced 70 meters before he was tackled from behind. Matau released the ball, picked it up, and advanced to the five-meter mark and was tackled again. He passed the ball to Lew Boone, who darted in for his first score.

Trawinski then blocked an Albany kick and quickly recovered the ball for the Flyers. Three short passes later the ball was on the other sideline. Whitesides advanced the ball and passed it to Boone short of the goal line. Boone carried the ball in for the score to give the Flyers a commanding 22-10 lead.

Higgins added another score for the Flyers by repeating his earlier try. He pulled the ball out of a scrum and dove across the try line from about three meters out. Whitesides hit the extra point. Boone scored his third try when he recovered his own pop kick and split the Albany defenders to race in from 20 meters out. The missed kick left the score at 32-10.

During the second game, the Flyers cruised to an easy 22-4 victory. Alan Neland, Norm Dodson, and Sean McDonald (two scores) lead the Flyers to the victory. Neil Schuele contributed three extra-point kicks to the Flyers' efforts.

The Flyers will entertain Emory University at 1 p.m. Saturday in their next home game at Stilwell Field. The public is invited. For more information about the Flyers Rugby Football Club, please call Capt. Steve Tennant at 545-1426.

Introducing the 1987 Alfa Romeo Milano at an unheard of introductory price.

$12,850*

1987 Alfa Romeo Milano

The ultimate high-performance sports sedan.

The 1987 Milano. It's set new standards for power, performance and reliability. Automotive journalists cite this extraordinary four-door sports sedan as a masterpiece of European engineering and design:

Autoweek hails its 154-horsepower, 2.5 liter V-6 engine: "With a top speed of near 130 miles per hour, the Milano . . . likely will be the fastest sedan anywhere near its price category, in both top speed and 0–60 sprints."

Motor Trend describes Milano's luxurious interior as "one of the nicest Euro interiors around."

From its sheer power and superior handling to its high-tech elegance, discover for yourself why Milano has no competition.

How to put the power in your hands.

Come in today and find out more about Milano's impressive array of technologically advanced standard features and outstanding warranty program that backs the best Alfa Romeos ever built.

There's only one way to truly experience the meaning of high performance. Your Alfa Romeo dealer is waiting to hand you the keys to a 1987 Milano for a test drive you'll never forget.

Compare. Milano sets a new standard.

JAY AUDI-SAAB

One of the most aerodynamically efficient luxury sedans in the world.

ALL 1986 AUDI'S MUST GO!

Annoucing an opportunity that will be hard to pass.

The 1986 Audi 5000CS Turbo, with its 158 horsepower turbocharged engine, is an automobile that is most difficult to pass on the highway. And with the prices we're offering on these high performance luxury sedans, they won't be easy to pass up in the showroom.

Your opportunity to see the 5000CS Turbo is indeed rare, because we have but a few left.

Test drive the 1986 Audi 5000CS Turbo. It will go from 0 to 50 in a quick 5.6 seconds. How quickly it goes from the showroom to your house, however, is up to you.

Trashed vehicles becoming post problem

An abandomed Mustang sports a garish grin as it sits on a lot waiting to be claimed.

Story and photo by Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning is becoming an eyesore because of abandoned vehicles.

"We currently have 53 abandoned cars in our impoundment lot. These cars were left on the side of the road, in parking lots or at the auto craft shops. They are becoming a big problem on post and present an eyesore," said Harold Pruitt, the lost and found property custodian at the Military Police Activity.

Pruitt said many cars are simply left by soldiers who are separating from the Army or going overseas. He explained that some cars are used for parts to rebuild another vehicle at one of the two auto craft shops and that the stripped car is abandoned.

"When we find these vehicles we have to have them towed by Birthday vital in determining drinking age on Fort Benning

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Amid some confusion Georgia raised its drinking age to 21 last week. Law makers and law enforcers had a time determining when the change would actually take place. Some believed Sept. 30 to be the effective date while others said 20 year olds had until Oct. 1 to imbibe. It was finally sorted out, though and the new law is now firmly in place.

More confusion abounds concerning the drinking age in Alabama and on Fort Benning. According to an Army directive regarding raising the drinking age, posts located within 50 miles of the border of another state with a lower drinking age may follow the one with the less restrictive policy.

As explained by Lt. Col. Douglas P. Franklin, the chief of the Criminal Law Branch, Fort Benning Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Alabama raised its drinking age to 21 on Sept. 30, 1985. However, that law was grandfathered to those individuals who were 19 prior to Oct. 1, 1985. Those individuals for whom the law was grandfathered when they were 19 are now 20. Therefore, the legal drinking age for active-duty soldiers on Fort Benning is 20 for those who reached that age prior to Oct. 1, 1986.

The individual's birthday becomes a very important issue here, Franklin said. He explained that if a soldier is 20 now, but his birthday was after Oct. 1, he is still not able to drink on post.

Family members, regardless of their birthday, must be 21 to drink on post.

New standards offer incentive for excellence

by Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Higher standards. Most of us aspire to something more than we are presently capable of accomplishing.

The search for perfection, or at least improvement, is one we should never abandon. All of us, by our very human nature, can stand improvement.

As of Oct. 1, Army leadership is giving soldiers a chance to excel. At long last, we have a goal. We have something to work toward. The Army Physical Fitness Test, with its new name and slightly higher standards, has become gospel.

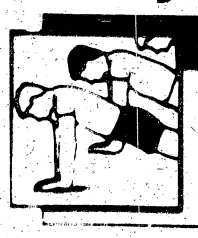
Among the revisions was an increase, in most cases, in the minimum and maximum performance levels for the push-ups, sit-ups and the two-mile run. The women's performance levels for the sit-ups also increased.

Under the new testing procedure, which is a modified form of the Army Physical Readiness Test, the age groups have been redefined from four groups to eight groups and the "go, no go" standards for soldiers over 40 have been shelved.

All soldiers must now score at least 180 points on the test to pass and achieve a minimum of 60 points in each event.

I, for one, have to take the time to applaud this move. Someone looked at the studies that have been done and decided to apply the knowledge gleaned.

Anyone could pass the old test. Regular exercise wasn't a prerequisite. This is evidenced in the fact that most units where a high degree of physical fitness is imperative imposed the "Kid's test" on its soldiers. Rangers, for example, don't even concern themselves with the standards for their individual age groups. However, they all know what it takes for a 17-year-old male soldier to "max" the test.



Increasing the requirements for women in the sit-up event was a small move in the right direction. Eureka! Women can do just as many sit-ups as men. I knew that. Women and men are able to develop their abdominal muscles equally.

The standards in the other events for women still seem a bit lenient, however. I firmly believe that a 17-year-old woman should be able to do considerably more than 18 push-ups if she was even remotely physically fit. A man the same age is expected to do 42 push-ups to pass. That doesn't seem equitable to me.

So, with its slightly higher standards, the new Army Physical Fitness Test brings the requirements for men and women a little closer.

The minimum standards still don't present that much of a challenge for those soldiers who maintain a normal degree of physical fitness. Those who set standards of excellence from themselves, however, will find much more self-satisfaction in their quest for the maximum score.

Various voices

The new standards for the Army Physical Fitness Test went into effect Oct. 1. What do you think of the new test?

SP4 Debra A. Landman, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "I don't agree with it because it was hard to meet the old standards - now it is even more difficult to meet the new ones. They should have left them the way they were."

MSgt. Bobby L. Cobb, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Support Battalion — "I think it's more fair. It closed the gap on the male and female scores. I think it gives the individual more incentive to get in better condition."

Capt. Thomas J. Carey, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade — "I think it's great. I think the Army should do PT more than three days a week. I think the standards should be tough."

SSgt. Robert V. Pendroza Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment — "I think it's OK. It's going to help the guys get more physically stronger. I think the run should be cut down more."

PFC Steven J. Sloan, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade — "I think it's better than the old test. It's something more to strive for."

AUSA calls for changes in Congress to improve armed forces' effectiveness

Association of the U.S. Army

Last October, when the Senate began to reorganize the Department of Defense, the ranking Armed Services Committee members made some very candid comments about the changes required of Congress itself if we are ever to improve the effectiveness of our armed forces.

Senator Sam Nunn made the point that "If we are going to demand reform in DoD, we are going to have to reform ourselves,"

Committee Chairman Barry Goldwater was equally emphatic when he said: "Congress is compounding the problems of DoD and major changes in the way we conduct our business are long overdue."

It would be nice to report that Congress has, in fact, gotten its act together. Nothing, however, could be further from the truth; probably the height of hypocrisy is Congressional criticism of the military establishment for inefficient and costly procurements.

Two recent Congressional actions ably illustrate the point. The Air Force has made it clear that there was no need to buy the T-46A jet trainer, which is manufactured in New York state. But, since the plant is in the Congressional sphere of Congressmen Sam Stratton and Tom Downey, those gentlemen were successful in getting the House Armed Services Committee to add funding that would require purchase of the T-46A whether the Air Force wants it or not.

Another illustration of Congressional micro-mismanagement involves the Army's effort to select a replacement for the venerable .45 caliber pistol. After extensive testing, the Army selected the Italian Beretta 9mm as its standard sidearm and more than 20,400 have already been delivered.

Smith and Wesson, one of the losers (although given two chances), is in the Congressional purview of Representatives Silvio Conte and Edward Boland of Massachusetts, who pressured the House Appropriations Committee to include language reopening the contract and giving Smith and Wesson a third crack at it.

These are but two examples of how Congressional critics of Defense procurement policies are making weapons purchases a pork barrel issue. By doing so, they are misleading the American public and making a mockery of Defense reform.

Commander's comments

On Oct. 13, 1986, Americans will pause to honor Christopher Columbus, the discoverer of the western world. America has seen many changes since Columbus' maiden voyage in 1492.

The vast wilderness that he found now holds huge cities and millions of people who are linked together by the most extensive road system the world has ever seen.

Traffic accidents have taken a devastating toll of our manpower resources in the past years. These accidents frequently involve either excessive speed or alcohol, and are a tragic waste of our most precious resource.

The cost to Fort Benning, in terms of both human suffering and loss of efficiency, is tremendous. The impact on readiness and mission accomplishment direct and immediate.

The upcoming three-day weekend can be a safe and happy occasion if we remember to temper our desires with good judgment.

Safety is not just a mechanical process but is also a mental process. Let us take advantage of Columbus Day weekend to develop our mental safety awareness by weighing our options against our capabilities before deciding on a course of action.

Each of you enjoy your holiday weekend and keep safety in mind during all of your recreational activities so that you can enjoy many more holidays in the future. America needs you!

Guard important to our defense

Association of the U.S. Army

In a move that can only be characterized as political posturing, a handful of governors recently vetoed training of National Guard units from their states when the training was to be conducted in Central America.

In several cases the governors cited the danger to the soldiers engaged in field exercises in places like Honduras and Panama as the reason for their refusal.

But others admitted that it was opposition to the Reagan administration's Central America policies that prompted them to withhold their consent.

Reaction to the refusal of the state chief executives who have said, "Hell no, our troops won't go," has been mixed.

The National Governors' Association voted unanimously to reaffirm their traditional peacetime control over the National Guard. Others, both in Congress and in the Defense establishment, have called for stricter measures, ranging from transfer of the Guard unit's mission to the Army Reserve, to complete withdrawal of federal funding of Guard units in the affected states.

It is hoped that Congress will have the stamina to reinforce the credibility and reliability of the National Guard by removing partisan politics from these vital national security decisions.

Letters

Dear Editor,

I would like to illustrate, using a personal experience, what I believe to be one of the traits that each of us in the military needs to devote himself to. That is caring.

I recently experienced a permanent-change-of-station move to Fort Benning from Korea. Not having been stationed at Fort Benning before I tried to find out about the post from personal contacts.

CSM John Propst, the Camp Humphreys, Korea post command sergeant major, learned of me coming to Fort Benning. He called me into his office. He was already making plans to telephone his family (they are still residing at Fort Benning) to arrange for me and my family to have a place to stay temporarily while getting situated at Fort Benning.

He made the telephone call and upon my arrival at Columbus, we were met at the airport by CSM Propst's son, escorted to their home and the Propst family opened their home to my family until we found housing.

I do not feel that I can ever fully repay the Propst's for the many kindnesses shown to us while staying with them. Primarily, the feeling that even though we were settling in an area where we knew very few people, here were some people who really cared about my family and our welfare.

Thank you, CSM Propst, Mrs. Propst and the entire Propst family. I will try to repay part of this debt owed you by passing on some of the same kindness, thoughtfulnes, and warmth to others of our military family that I come into contact with.

29th Infantry Regiment's demos big hit

In performing their support mission for the United States Army Infantry School, the soldiers of Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment rolled out their Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicles for visitors last week.

The National Security Industrial Association, an organization of defense manufacturers and developers, was here "to receive briefings on the infantry soldiers' future needs for equipment and weapons," said Capt. Victoria Nathaniel, project officer, Directorate of Combat Development.

The 29th assisted the school by staging a live-fire exercise on Redcloud Range.

Co. D soldiers displayed the maneuverability of their lightweight (25 tons) M-2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, and fired the Squad Automatic Weapon, M-16 rifle, M-203 grenade launcher, M-240 coaxle machine gun and M-242 25mm chain gun.

Also, the soldiers set up static displays of the Bradley and the M-1 Abrams tank.

"The intent (of the live-five exercise) was to familiarize organizational members with the infantry's fighting vehicle and its capabilities for the near-term battlefield," Nathaniel said.

She added their knowledge of the Bradley along with the information they learned in classroom briefings will better enable them to target future research and development efforts.

The 29th's exercise concluded the group's two-day visit here last Friday afternoon.

Among the special guests attending the conference were Maj. Gen. Jerry Max Bunyard and Brig. Gen. Thomas C. Foley, Nathaniel said.

2nd ITB practices 'Total Army concept'

by Robert Schmidt
2nd Infantry Training Brigade correspondent

In a brief ceremony Col. McEdward Law, 3rd Brigade commander, 95th division (Training) recently returned command of the 10th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade to Lt. Col. Patrick Toffler. The ceremony closed out a year of training for the U.S. Army Reserve units that perform annual missions at Fort Benning's Harmony Church.

The 95th Div., headquartered in Stillwater, Okla., is one of 13 training divisions in the U.S. Army Reserve arsenal. The mission of these units is to establish U.S. Army Training Centers and conduct infantry One Station Unit Training.

The 95th has the capability of receiving and training 20,000 soldiers in subjects ranging from first aid, basic rifle marksmanship to squad tactic training.

With the same pride that earned them their nicknames, the "Bravest of the Brave" and the "Ironmen of Metz" during World War II for their capture of Metz France and drive across the Rhine into Germany, the 95th came to the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade to complete their annual mission.

Displacing the cadre of the 10th Battalion from July 31 through Sept. 29, the 3rd Brigade, of the 95th Division rotated for battalions through 10th Battalion changing every two weeks.

The soldiers of 10th Battalion showed no sign of any decline in standards being taught.

"The teamwork and rapport between the reserves and the active cadre was very good," Toffler said. "It was a very positive experience for everyone. The soldiers of the 95th are a terrific bunch of people who give up their jobs and families for two weeks and complete their mission with a lot of pride."

Soldiers from Battery A, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery recently traveled to Auburn University in Alabama to open the dedication ceremony of the William F. Nichols Center with a 17-gun salute.

The artillerymen participated in the dedication of the center that will house Auburn University's Army, Navy and Air Force Reserve Officer Training Corps programs. The center is named for Alabama Congressman William F. Nichols.

The 2-10th is often tasked to perform ceremonial gun salutes with 105mm howitzers that are maintained in the Battalion for such occasions.

Nichols is a graduate of Auburn's ROTC program and served as an Army officer during World War II. While 93 Colombian cadets graduated from the Cadet Infantry Orientation course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas, 93 more cadets arrived from Colombia at Lawson Army Airfield Sept. 23.

Guest speaker Maj. Francisco Pedraza, a USARSA instructor from Colombia, addressed the cadets at their graduation ceremony.

Integrated into the new group of 93 Colombian cadets, who arrived at the U.S. Army School of the Americas Sept. 23, are nine air force military academy cadets.

The cadets, who are taking the Cadet Infantry Orientation course with infantry branch cadets, will receive four weeks of training that will prepare them for future duties in military air base operations.

"These air force cadets are programmed to become part of the security force in Colombia's military air bases upon completing their overall training. This course gives them some of the necessary skills for that requirement," said Maj. Angel Pesante, chief of course development at USARSA.

"Navy or air force cadets normally would have attended courses offered through the U.S. Air Force-run Inter-American Air Forces Academy or the Navy's Small Craft and Instruction Technical Team School in Panama.

A number of Colombian cadets have been attending branch-specific courses at USARSA since last year. This year, 89 engineer branch cadets, 73 artillery branch cadets, and 82 armored cavalry branch cadets have graduated at USARSA.

Similar iterations are scheduled for fiscal year 1987. — Marco Morales, U.S. Army School of the Americas.

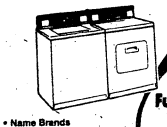
USAF Academy cadet rescues injured driver

U.S. Air Force Academy

Cadet Christopher C. McCann, a junior at the United States Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, has been awarded the Air Force Commendation Medal for humanitarian action in rescuing the victim of an automobile accident.

McCann was among the first to reach an overturned truck on Interstate 85 south of Atlanta June 21, 1985. Without hesitation, Cadet McCann organized the rescue effort and successfully located and removed the injured driver.

He then remained with the driver, comforting him until professional medical assistance arrived.



McCann's decisive assessment of the emergency and his immediate action without regard for personal safety directly contributed to the protection of the victim's life.

McCann is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter P. McCann of Columbus.

WWII Rangers visit post, observe today's training

by John Wolf
U.S. Army Ranger Association

On Oct. 2, 32 former members of the World War II Ranger battalions returned to Fort Benning to renew friendships, share memories and to see that the history and traditions of the Rangers live on.

The annual reunion of the Alva E. Miller Chapter of the Ranger Battalions Association of WWII took place Oct. 2 to 4. These Rangers and their families observed a demonstration of current Ranger training and hand-to-hand combat at Harmony Church.

Thursday morning they attended the graduation ceremony for Ranger Class 12-86 and welcomed the newest Rangers into their ranks. The guest speaker for the ceremony was James Altieri, a veteran of the 1st and 4th Ranger Battalions who participated in campaigns in North Africa aand Italy. Also to his credit is the assault on the Anzio beachhead in 1943.

In addition to his address to the class, Altieri re-dedicated the William O. Darby award on behalf of the Ranger Battalions Association by presenting an engraved commando knife to the class distinguished honor graduate, PFC Robert M. McCue.

Thursday afternoon, at a ceremony hosted by the Lead the Way Chapter of the U.S. Army Ranger Association, Francis Coughlin, the president of the Alva E. Miller Chapter, presented a stained glass window panel to Col. James E. Ellis, the U.S. Army Infantry Center chief of staff. The window panel, which commemorates the six Ranger battalions of WWII, will be permanently displayed in the General Bond Gallery at the National Infantry Museum here.

Friday's activities included a film and briefings on Ranger School and observing the Rangers-in-action demonstration at Victory Pond.

The Fort Benning Officers' Club was the site of the Reunion banquet Friday evening. The highlight of the banquet was remarks by Altieri who compared the Ranger training of today with that of the training received by the 1st Ranger Battalion at the British Commando School in 1942.

Before departing Fort Benning Saturday, the WWII Rangers and their families attended a memorial service to honor the memory of their friends and fellow Rangers who died in Europe during WWII.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

"Please help me! My husband came home late; he was drinking and we had an argument and now he's beating me. I'm five months pregnant and I'm afraid he's really going to hurt me . . ."

With this telephone call, the Fort Benning Military Police became involved in one of the 18 domestic disturbances reported in September.

These incidents usually start as arguments over money, excessive drinking or coming home late. At some point, either the husband or wife loses control and their angry words are replaced with physical blows.

Such incidents normally end with the wife being transported to Martin Army Community Hospital for treatment of injuries and then to the Army Community Services Battered Wives Shelter for her protection.

The husband usually ends up at the MP desk being charged as the subject of an assault and then released to his unit.

While military police involvement in a domestic disturbance ends when aid has been rendered to the victims and the offenders have been charged, complications for the family involved may only be beginning.

Because of command interest, concern and responsibility for the welfare of all families residing in family housing, couples involved in domestic disturbances are required to respond to their chain of command in writing of their actions designated to rectify the situation. Subsequent disturbances may result in the family being required to clear quarters and move off the installation.

The consequences of domestic disturbances can be severe, but they are avoidable. If the troubled couple would only "count to 10" and seek help before the declining relationship gets out of control, the disturbance can usually be avoided.

There are many agencies on and off post that can offer assistance before it is to late. On-post aid is as close as a telephone call through the Chaplain's Office, the Army Community Services Program, the American Red Cross or the Martin Army Community Hospital counselling services.

The military police mission is clear: protection of individual rights and property with a goal of making Fort Benning a safe place to train and live. In domestic disturbances, our military police should be a of last resort.

Crime Watch

Provost Marshal

The following is a breakdown of crimes reported to the Fort Benning Military Police during September:

McGraw Manor had one domestic disturbance, four domestic assaults, two larcenies of private property, one housebreaking/burglary, one aggravated assault, one animal bite, one report of prowler and one attempted unlawful entry.

Custer Terrace had one domestic disturbance, two domestic assaults, one housebreaking and one obscene phone call.

Davis Hill/Bouton Heights had two domestic disturbances, one larceny of private property, three damages to private property, one damage to government property, one obscene/threatening phone call, one runaway and three animal bites.

Indianhead Terrace had one domestic disturbance and one unattended child.

North Main Post had one larceny of private property, two damages to private property and one animal bite.

South Main Post had two domestic disturbances, four larcenies of private property, one aggravated assault and one unattended child.

Battle Park had two domestic assaults and one obscene/threatening phone call.

TRADOC program lets 'U do it'

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — You're sitting at your desk, trying to concentrate, but something keeps snaring your attention from the corner of your eye. It's an irregular, sort of butterfly-shaped hole in the wall plaster, where a pencil sharpener used to be mounted. You can't keep from focusing on this little imperfection, even though you know you should be thinking about your work.

You say to yourself, "I'd like to fix that thing." But you realize that if you patched the hole, the patch would need to be painted, and if you painted the patch, the whole wall would need to be painted. And besides that, what's the use of painting when what the room really needs is to have the ceiling dropped to cover all those pipes and wires.

Until recently, there wasn't much that employees could do to renovate their work areas. They pretty much had to wait until their office's turn came up for an improvement project. And even then, those little nice-to-have things like vinyl wall covering, chair rails, and accent lighting weren't on the engineers' list.

Now, there's a TRADOC program to change that. It's called "U-Do-It." It's a self-help concept that's a spin-off of the traditional Self-Help Program, under which residents of family housing and troop housing used to get advice and materials to do minor maintenance and repair.

At the new U-Do-It Centers, people can get the materials and assistance to do substantial renovations of their work areas. This includes the building materials, tools, expert advice, and — if needed — support from the engineers to do "code" work such as electrical wiring and plumbing.

The U-Do-It program will allow for repair or minor renovation of any building or area, other than family housing, according to Malcolm Martin of TRADOC's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff, Engineer. All that office employees or area occupants will need are some construction skills and the motivation to improve their surroundings.

Examples of U-Do-It projects include work in offices, lounges, shop areas, motor pools, and range facilities. The work is intended to include, but not be limited to, refurbishing or replacement of drop ceiling, wall paneling, wainscotting, chair rail, and crown molding. The program can also include exterior grounds projects.

"By harnessing the pride and competitive spirt of the community, worthwhile projects can be accomplished that might otherwise not be done," Martin said.

Col. Gerald Brown, TRADOC Deputy Chief of Staff, Engineer, said the old Self-Help programs have been "very successful," returning an estimated $10 for every $1 invested by the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

The U-Do-It program will build on that success and will extend the program to cover volunteer work by occupants of offices, work areas, and other facilities outsiding of housing. The program includes work beyond basic maintenance, such as minor renovations.

That standard should be in agreement with the Installations of Excellence program, according to TRADOC engineers.

Brown also said that the U-Do-It program must be operated as a strictly voluntary effort. "The incentive to participate in the work effort," he said, "is the improvement in the quality of life that will result from the effort."

Fort Benning troops save money renovating, painting unit buildings

by Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

"Bang, bang, bang, buzz, buzz, buzz."

These are familiar sounds around Fort Benning and music to Ken G. Hankins' ears. The chief of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing recently announced that the Self-Help/U-Do-It projects completed in fiscal year 1985 have saved Fort Benning a total of $4.5 million.

"And right now we're at about the same pace as last year," said Robert Kelly, engineer and technical representative of DEH.

The program was designed to allow units to order materials through DEH and allow soldiers to use their own elbow grease to make necessary repairs and renovations.

However, Kelly feels that in spite of the program's sucess, not enough people are aware of the program.

"We brief brigade commanders about the program but it's impossible to brief each company commander because they come and go so quickly," Kelly said.

"We have several commanders who are real enthusiastic with the Self-Help Program," Hankins said.

Hankins believes that in the new fiscal year the savings should double in labor.

DEH expects to get five more engineers to help with the increased workload.

"Our Training and Doctine Command model (for the program) is Fort Sill, Okla., and Langley Air Force Base," Hankins said.

"Our system is as good as or better than theirs. When we get ours full strength we should be number one," Hankins added.

Recently a number of major projects were completed through the Self-Help program. The following are good examples of sucessful renovations; The second floor of Building 2827, 36th Engineer Group Headquarters. The work was performed by soldiers from the 43rd Engineer Battalion with materials costing $1,860, yielding a savings on labor of $418,600.

Another major project recently completed was the rebuilding of Building 4151, 7th TAICW, 9th Air Force, Vehicle Maintenance Shop. The rebuilding of the interior and exterior was done by the Naval Reserve Engineer Detachment. The material cost $16,000 and was paid for with Air Force funds. But, the savings in labor costs was $4,160.

Buildings 4910 and 4911 had the interiors painted and the floors replaced with materials costing $43,800 and saving $4,200 in labor.

Upon completion of these projects the Installation of Excellence Evaluation Team inspected the work.

"The evaluation team was very impressed with the high standards observed in many areas at Fort Benning. These include the Fort Benning Boulevard entrance, the Visitors Center and the Housing Referral Office," said Col. Robert Frink, from the team.

"If people would use the program more we'd have much better living conditions and a better atmosphere," Kelly said.

Army training helps soldier save buddy's life

Story and photo by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet staff writer

Emergency sitations are handled by physicans daily, but an occurance for the layman to administer the same aid is rare.

In just such a situation, PFC Bobby R. Seago breathed the breath of life into Pvt. 1 Miguel Rodriquez, a fellow trainee at Company E, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

According to Rodriguez, both soldiers were in their fifth week of training when he had a violent reaction after eating shrimp, which he is allergic to.

"There did not seem to be enough time to wait on an ambulance, so we were taking him to the hospital in my truck," said SFC Don Mobley, a Co. E drill sergeant.

On the way to Martin Army Community Hospital, Rodriguez lost consciousness and then stopped breathing.

"We, Pvt. 1 Richard Carson and I, noticed that he (Rodriguez) had lost consciousness and yelled to Sergeant Mobley that he'd stopped breathing. It was Sergeant Mobley who told me what to do. Since I was the closest I administered the three short breaths and continued the cardio-pulmonary resucitation," Seago said.

The Bronson, Texas, navtive attended Tyler Junior College, where he majored in sports medicine, but said he received his greatest CPR training in military training.

"The college CPR course that I'd received just ran through the information, but 1st Sgt. George Yance went into CPR in great detail to ensure that we knew what we were doing," Seago said.

The Co. E first sergeant said: "Seago had always been a good soldier and his emergency reaction was that expected of a soldier who has been in several years. This is the type behavior expected of an non-commissioned officer."

In a recent ceremony, Seago was awarded the Army Achievement Medal. He is now continuing training in anticipation of his first duty assignment.

Vaccinating family pets best way to avoid rabies

by Mark Martinez
Veterinary Services

It is found worldwide and has threatened mankind for more than 2,000 years.

It is rabies.

Because of its highly fatal nature, rabies is the most feared disease transmissible from animal to man.

Medical dictionaries define rabies as a "highly fatal infectious disease that may affect all species of warm-blooded animals; transmitted almost exclusively by the bite of a carnivorous animal."

A viral disease, its symptoms are those of profound disturbance of the nervous system including excitement, aggresiveness, and madness, followed by paralysis and eventually death.

The virus makes its way to the salivary glands from which it is shed in the animal's saliva.

Transmission of the virus is commonly a result of biting resulting in a saliva-contaminated wound, or less commonly by contamination of preexisting, fresh wounds with virus-laden saliva.

The most significant reservoir of rabies virus is wildlife. Transmission in nature is by bite wounds inflicted from animal to animal. The level of rabies in the wildlife population determines when the disease spills over into the domestic animal population, and from there to man. Skunks, racoons, bats, foxes, cats, and dogs are significant sources of rabies exposure for people.

Records over the past 13 years give support to minimize the importance of rodents as rabies hosts, but the number of rodents found rabid is increasing. In particular, woodchucks have been increasingly diagnosed as being rabid. There has been no significant increase in the incident of rabies in the other rodent species.

In Georgia, some 200 cases of rabies have been diagnosed annually for several years. Almost 80 percent are racoons, followed by bats, skunks, cats, then foxes. Alabama diagnoses about 75 percent the number of cases as does Georgia, but the racoon is still on top with 51 percent of the cases, followed by bats, skunks, cats and foxes. Other animals found to be rabid in our two-state area include dogs, cattle, horses, mules and oppossums.

Wildlife exhibiting what would be considered as abnormal behavior should be considered potentially rabid. The animal becomes irrational and viciously aggressive, losing all instinctive caution and fear of natural enemies.

Rabies immunizations programs for companion animals are the most important methods of maximizing a protective barrier between wildlife rabies and man.

On Fort Benning, dogs and cats must be vaccinated against rabies (as well as other diseases). Initially cats are to be vaccinated at 12 weeks of age and dogs at 16 weeks.

If your vaccinated companion animal is bitten by a potentially rabid wild animal or suspect domestic animal, carefully treat your pet's wound, and have your pet examined and given a rabies booster immunization as soon as possible.

Fort Benning's Veterinary Service clinic operation is in Building 267 on 10th Division Road, Main Post. Clinic hours of operation are Monday, 8 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 3 p.m.; Wednesday, noon to 4 p.m. and 4:30 to 7 p.m.; and Friday, 8 to 11 a.m. Saturday morning clinics are periodically scheduled. Yorktown proves Cornwallis' downfall

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

It was only an 11-mile march from Williamsburg to the scene of America's coming triumph at Yorktown.

The French and American troops marching to battle all traveled light, ready for action at a moment's notice, mindful of the order issued by their commander in chief the night before.

"If the enemy should be tempted to meet the army on its march, the general particularly enjoins to troops to place their principal reliance on the bayonet, that they may prove the vanity of the boast which the British make of their peculiar prowess in deciding battles with that weapon," Washington's order read.

"The justice of the cause in which we are engaged, and the honor of the two nations (America and France), must inspire every breast with sentiments that are the presage of victory."

The allied army was made up of three parts; the American continentals, the American militia and the French anxiliaries. The continental force numbered 5,500 men strong, while the militia, all Virginians, added more than 3,000 men to the cause. The French force added an additional nearly 7,000 infantry, artillery, horse and foot soldiers.

While the elite of the king's army was present at Yorktown, their numbers were clearly insufficient to meet the formidable task at hand. Cornwallis commanded around 7,500 troops, headed by a tiny number of officers. He had only one brigadier general, two colonels, 12 lieutenant colonels and 12 majors in the entire force, hardly enough to adequately lead the British defense.

On Sept. 29, the entire allied force spread out into permanent camps, forming a semicircle from the banks of York, above the town, around to Wormley Creek, an arm of the York River below.

The morning of the Sept. 30, the allies discovered that the British had deserted their fortified positions outside and retreated to the immediate defense line inside Yorktown. The allied troops set to work setting themselves up in the abandoned grounds, and spent the first week of October digging in there.

To prevent confusion during the siege, clear and minute regulations were issued respecting its conduct on Oct. 6. Fifty-four regulations minutely spelled out every task necessary and how it was to be accomplished.

When Oct. 6 arrived, everything was in readiness for the opening of the approaches. The guns were up, the materials prepared, the enemy's works reconnitered, the grounds surveyed.

The allied forces moved up and began digging in, and by morning the English awoke to find the enemy looking down their throats, firmly protected by trenches dug during the night.

By Oct. 9, the allied forces were ready to begin artillery bombardment of the city. The French were first to fire at 3 p.m., followed by the American battery at 5 p.m. The journal of more than one American officer mentioned the fact that the first shot from the battery was fired by Washington himself.

By Oct. 14, only two British emplacements stood in the way of the allies' attack and they quickly crumbled under the attack by French and American forces. Hopelessly outnumbered, the forces of Cornwallis manning the emplacements quickly surrendered.

The siege as a form of warfare proved its worth once again. On Oct. 17 at 10 a.m., "a drummer in red mounted the enemy's parapet on the left and began to beat a 'parley'," the signal that the British were ready to concede their defeat. He was accompanied by an officer waving a white handkerchief.

Negotiations for the surrender began, and by 11 a.m Oct. 19, Cornwallis and his army were prisoners of war.

Next week: Yorktown's significance to the final defeat of the British.

WWII dummy decoy donated to museum

The Bayonet staff writer

A rubber dummy paratrooper was donated to the National Infantry Museum here last week as part of a nationwide campaign to increase public awareness of the dummy's role in the Normandy Invasion during World War II.

George Freedman, who manufactured the original dummies in 1944, was on hand to present the replica.

The businessman explained the significance of dropping the dummy paratroopers. "The dummy was used for diversionary purposes. It was dropped from C-47 planes on June 6, 1944, (D-Day) about 145 miles behind the Normandy coastline into Nazi occupied France. This was done to draw the Germans away from the coastline so that we could establish beachheads.

"There were reports that enemy paratroopers were coming in. The Germans didn't know what to do, so they didn't do anything," Freedman said.

The Germans, thinking they were being invaded by enemy paratroopers deployed their 915th Reserve Regiment and the 325th Infantry to help fight them.

The "Operation Titanic" (code name for dropping the dummies), worked so well that Eisenhower wrote about the operation in his book "Eisenhower's Own Story Of The War." The former president said: "The tactical surprise achieved, coupled with the confusion created by the dropping of the dummy parachutists elsewhere, caused the enemy to be slow to react, and it was not until midday that elements of the 21st Panzer Division counterattacked. By that time our men had consolidated their positions and the enemy's efforts to dislodge them were in vain."

"It was due to this diversion that the Allied Forces were sucessful on D-Day. It's very rewarding to know that something I made helped save thousands of lives," Freedman said.

The four-foot rubber dummy was designed to closely resemble a paratrooper. Freedman's dedication to detail in constructing the dummy was credited as being a primary reason the dummy was so sucessful in fooling the enemy.

A CO2 cartridge that was designed to inflate and make the dummy appear more human was attached. Also attached was 12 feet of primer cord.

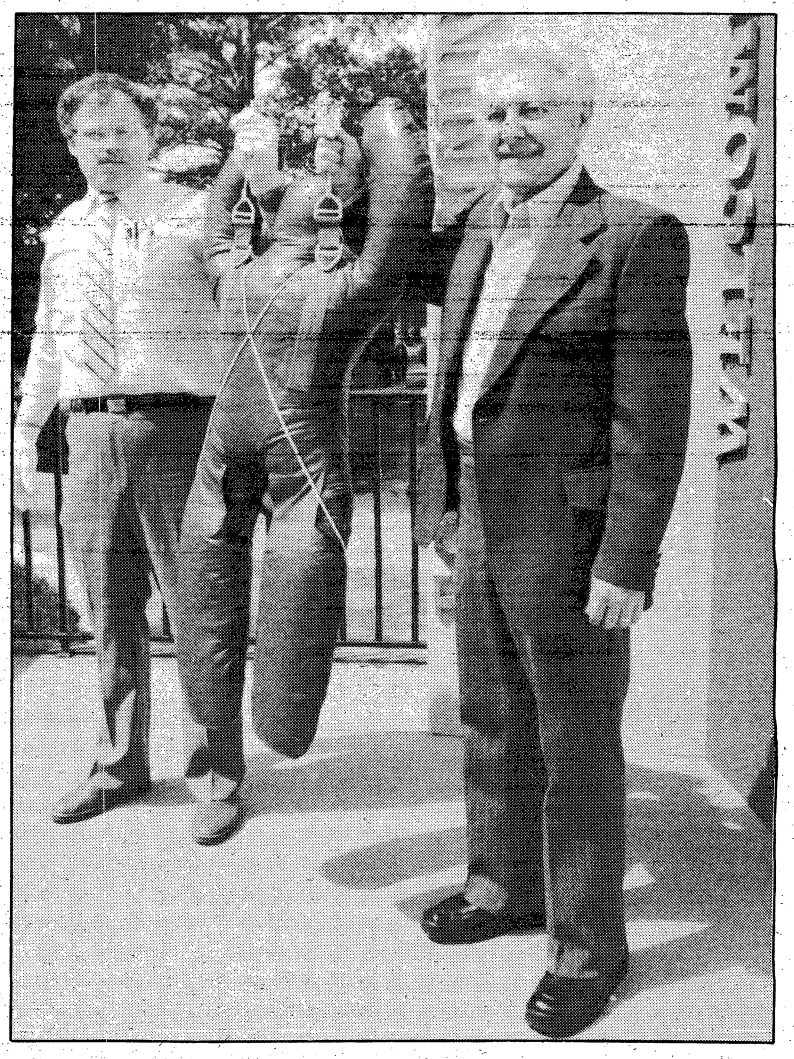
"When the dummy got close to the ground the cord was rigged to go off making sounds like a firecracker so the enemy would think they were being shot at," Freedman said.

The idea for the dummy came about while Freedman was working with his brother designing and manufacturing sporting goods and rubber supplies.

"I was approached by government officials and they very secretly asked me if I would produce some dummies for them," Freedman said.

Freedman designed his first dummy in 1938 out of straw. Later he went to the rubber version. Freedman and his brother produced dummies and sent them to Canada where they were then sent to England. In March 1944, an order for 5,000 dummies was placed.

However, producing the dummies, which the British nicknamed Rupert although Freedman called them "Oscar," was not enough for Freedman.



So he sold his share of the business to his brother and enlisted to experience the Army himself.

He served as an armorer and explosive specialist in Gen. George Patton's 3rd Army and the 4th Armored Division.

Ironically, Freedman was on hand to fight in the very invasion where his dummies were so efficently employed. He believes the dummies might very well have saved his life as well as his fellow soldiers'.

The outcome of the Normandy Invasion on D-Day is history now. And a big part of that history is now available for viewing at the National Infantry Museum here.

Don't be a dummy — go over and check it out!

Z. Frank Hanner, curator of the National Infantry Museum, (left) and George Freedman display the World War II decoy dummy Freedman gave to the museum at a recent ceremony.

A worker mixes special concrete for the construction of a building at the Military Operations in Urban Terrain site that will allow soldiers to fire live ammunition inside. The project is being supervised by soldiers from Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group. The work is scheduled for completion at the end of the month.

Building to accommodate indoor live-firing exercises

The Bayonet staff writer

A building is going up just outside Fort Benning's Brinson Range that will allow soldiers to fire indoors.

Soldiers from Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion are constructing the Military Operations in Urban Terrain building with a new concrete that is designed to absorb live fire rounds.

"It'll be a building with four walls, no roof and a fibrous wall oposite the doorway. In this range soldiers will be able to use live rounds and throw live grenades," said 1st Lt. W. Rountree, project officer in charge.

The building will be the first of it's kind for the Army.

"One (range) was started at Fort Bragg in 1978 but because of funding and the lack of priority it got shelved," said SFC Porter B. Angel, project non-commissioned officer in charge.

The special cement was developed by Waterways Experimental Station Army Corp of Engineers in Vicksburg, Miss.

"It had its origin from two different types of material. One is shock absorbing; one is fibrous," said Bob Denison, research civil engineer for WES.

"We're trying to develop a material where troops can get live-fire realistic training. This shock attenuating concrete (SACON) is still a research project," Denison said.

The SACON does prevent ricochets; prevents spalling and captures the round, Denison said.

"The concrete can be further used to protect targetry and lower the maintenance cost by protecting equipment. Waterways will run the initial live-fire test to assure the material does what we hope it will do," Angel said.

Even if the day is 5 or 10 years away, you need to plan for it today.

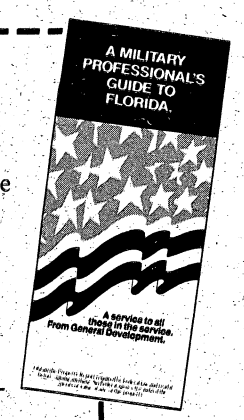
Time doesn't wait, and those military years pass quickly. Before you turn around, you'll be wanting to start living that life of leisure – and you'll want it ready and waiting for you.

That's why we suggest you begin to plan your tomorrows today.

General Development has been helping military families find their place in the sun for more than 30 years. And we can help you – just as we've done for over 12,000 service people.

How? By giving you the right questions to consider and the right answers to look for.

For example: 1) Do the people you're dealing with have special financing plans tailored to your military income? 2) How reliable are they? 3) What's their past record of performance? 4) Does the community you're interested in have full shopping, recreational and cultural facilities? 5) Is there a military base nearby? (Hospital, commissary and exchange privileges can mean big savings.) 6) How about location? Is it overcrowded or is it so isolated that you would feel shut off from civilization?



As you're well aware, military families have special needs. If you want to meet them in all the years to come, send us the coupon. And let us show you the way to a great Florida future.

Directorate of Personnel, Community Activities

Officers' Club — The Club is offering two steaks for the price of one every Thursday night. A different steak special will be provided each week. Bring a friend and enjoy this delicious bargain!

Don't forget to sign up for the 1986 Fall Tennis Classic set for Oct. 15 to 19. Entry deadline is 5 p.m. Oct. 13. For more information, call the tennis pro at 687-4516.

NCO Club — Tomorrow night, the Main NCO Club has Two-for-One Steak Night, Disco in the Ballroom, Latino Disco in End of the Hall Lounge, and Donna Hopkins' Band in the Golden Touch Lounge.

Recreation Center — The auction at the Kelley Hill Rec Center in August was so successful another one has been scheduled for Oct. 18. This gives you a wonderful opportunity to make some extra money for the upcoming holiday season.

All you have to do is clean out your attics, closets, store rooms, and garages and bring the "junk" you don't want to the Kelley Hill Rec Center. It will be auctioned off to the highest bidder.

All type items are acceptable, old or new, never-been-used or just plain junk. Remember, one man's junk is another man's treasure.

Items to be auctioned may be brought to the Kelley Hill Rec Center, Building 9079 on Marne Road, Oct. 15 to 17 between noon and 8:30 p.m. The auction will begin at 1 p.m. If you are interested in buying or selling, call 544-3079, Wednesday through Saturday between noon and 8 p.m or Sunday between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. Start cleaning out your closets today.

Tomorrow the monthly USCF rated Chess Tournament will be conducted at the Kelley Hill Rec Center. This tournament is open to all USCF rated players. If you are interested, but not a USCF member, you may purchase a membership on the day of the tournament.

Start time is noon. The Rec Center furnishes all the necessary equipment, including refreshments.

The first-place finisher receives a prize and his name will be sent in to the USCF. If you would like to enter, call 544-3079, Wednesday through Saturday between noon and 10 p.m. Are you in the market for a new car or truck? Maybe you are or you might just want to see the sharp new 1987 models. The Rec Center Branch is having a New Car Show Oct. 19. The show will begin at 11 a.m. and will last until 6 p.m.

There will be no high pressure sales tactics as no cars or trucks will be sold on site.

Bring the whole family to the 1987 new car and truck show at the Kelley Hill Rec Center, Building 9079. Refreshments will be available. For more information or directions call 544-3079.

Physical Activities — Registration is underway for coaches and players for the 1986/87 Women's Basketball Program. Basketball season will start on or about Nov. 1.

Active-duty military, family members and Department of the Army civilians employed at Fort Benning are eligible to participate. Personnel must be 19 or older.

For more information contact the Sports Office at 545-5777/2332, or register at Building 394 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily.

Effective Oct. 1, hours of operation for the Kelley Hill Branch Library were changed to: Monday and Tuesday — closed; Wednesday through Saturday — noon to 9 p.m.; Sunday — 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.; and holidays — closed.

Arts & Crafts — Do you have some free time on your hands? Visit our Arts & Crafts Center where classes are being conducted either free or for a nominal fee.

There is a free glazing class from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and a finger painting and straining class will be offered at a cost of $3. Two color printing classes are being offered at 1 p.m. or 6:30 p.m. on Oct. 17. The Arts & Crafts Center will be closed Oct. 13 to 15.

You still have a little time to get your auto inspected free prior to the upcoming holiday at the Main Post Auto Crafts Shop from 1 to 9 p.m. today and the Kelley Hill Auto Crafts Shop from 10 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Santa's Castle — Do you want to give a child a happy Christmas? We need your help. Santa's Castle, Building 2639, is now open Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

They need toy donations for needy children and volunteers with carpentry and bicycle repair skills. A drop-off box for toys is located in front of the Main Mall PX. For more information, call Karen, 687-1674 or Diane, 687-8722.

Ask the 'judge'

Editor's note: These are questions the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be considered a substitute for advise from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

Legal Assistance

Q: I am a soldier assigned to Fort Benning. My wife has been working part-time at a department store for extra income. After looking at her statement attached to her check, I found out that she has Georgia State tax deducted from her wages. Is that legal?

A: Not only is it legal but there can be other state tax deductions made depending upon your domicile. Section 514 of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act protects soldiers from taxation on their military income from any state other than their domicile.

That is because, under section 514, service-members neither gain nor lose their domicile solely by being assigned some place pursuanct to military orders.

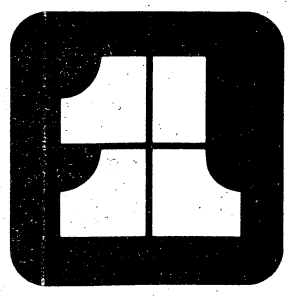
Unfortunately the protection of section 514 does not apply to military dependents. In addition, it is possible, though unlikely, that your wife's income could also be taxed by her state of domicile.

Q: I am an officer with more than 28 years in the Army. I am presently living in a home that I bought a few years ago. I've been told that if I sell my house then I can take advantage of a one-time exclusion of any gain I may make. What are the rules to know?

A: If you buy and sell a primary personal residence, any gain realized must be reported as capital gain during the year of the sale. Major exceptions to this rule apply when a re-purchase of a military personal residence costing more than the sale of your old residence. This re-purchase must occur within limited periods of time.

In addition, there is a one-time exclusion for taxpayers 55 or older. You must have owned and used the property for three of the past five years and the exclusion is limited to $125,000.

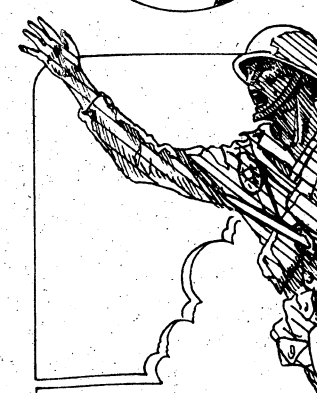
Q: I am confused about all the civilian courts in Columbus. What kind of cases do they take? Is there a small claims court?



A: There are several civilian courts in Columbus. The highest state court is Superior Court. It hears serious criminal matters, cases involving title to land, and divorces.

Probate Court primarily involves probating wills, administration of estates, and establishment of guardianship of children.

Municipal Court is the Small Claims Court. It takes civil suits of less than $2500. You have to go before a judge but you need not hire a lawyer. Other state courts include Recorder's Court and Family Court.



There are also three federal courts in Columbus.

Magistrate's Court deals with traffic violations committed by anyone on Fort Benning. has jurisdiction over min inal offenses committed ians on post. U.S. Distri handles cases involving tions of federal statute Bankruptcy Court gives vidual the legal and f protection of bankruptcy.

97th Infantry trains leaders, troops

Logistical problems highlight Brigade CPX

by Bill Branley
7th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Leaders and planners from the 97th Infantry Brigade worked ut some classic battlefield chal-enges during a command post xercise last week.

In an effort to bring realistic ogistical and personnel problems nto the game board exercise, rigade planners in those areas ntroduced a few new elements nto the standard CPX agenda.

The idea was to make sure actical planners and combat unit ommanders take such things as ogistics seriously when fighting nock battles.

"Tacticians and logisticians ust constantly interface," explained Capt. Richard Bathurst, Brigade logistics officer. "Logistics must be geared to support tactical requirements. However, tactical commanders must learn what the logistical restraints are at any given time."

Bathurst added that one of his goals during the CPX was to evaluate reporting and forecasting. In other words, units must constantly report the status of critical supplies and equipment such as fuel, ammunition and combat vehicles. At the same time logistical planners at all levels must learn to forecast upcoming needs.

"This CPX gave logisticians a chance to be in on more planning," Bathurst said. "This is important because the time to tell tactical commanders about logistical constraints is during planning. Once they're on the battlefield executing a plan, it's too late."

During the CPX, Bathurst and his staff placed special emphasis on two classes of supply items: barrier materials and ammunition.

"We don't want commanders shooting up vast amounts of ammo without thinking about were it's coming from," Bathurst said.

Logistics wasn't the only area that received special emphasis during the CPX. Brigade personnel managers also took steps to introduce more realism into the exercise.

"We had AG players on the game board," said 1st Lt. Kenneth Avery, the Brigade's enlisted personnel management officer. "This allowed us to assess exact numbers of 'casualties' and observe company commanders making the necessary reports."

In order to get the personnel systems into action quickly, units began the wargame at less than 100 percent strength. This meant that replacements had to be requisitioned early in the exercise.

"We wanted to test reporting and requisitioning procedures at all levels," Avery said. "There are also many things we can learn, like how a specific combat action may drain unit strength or the manpower required to operate specific weapons systems."

The 197th's recent CPX was another in a series of such exercises. Most activities occured on and around Kelley Hill, where the Brigade and most of the battalions set up tactical operations centers. Some units set up farther out in the field in order to combine the CPX play with a field training exercise.

Support Battalion exercises airlift, orienteering capabilities

by Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

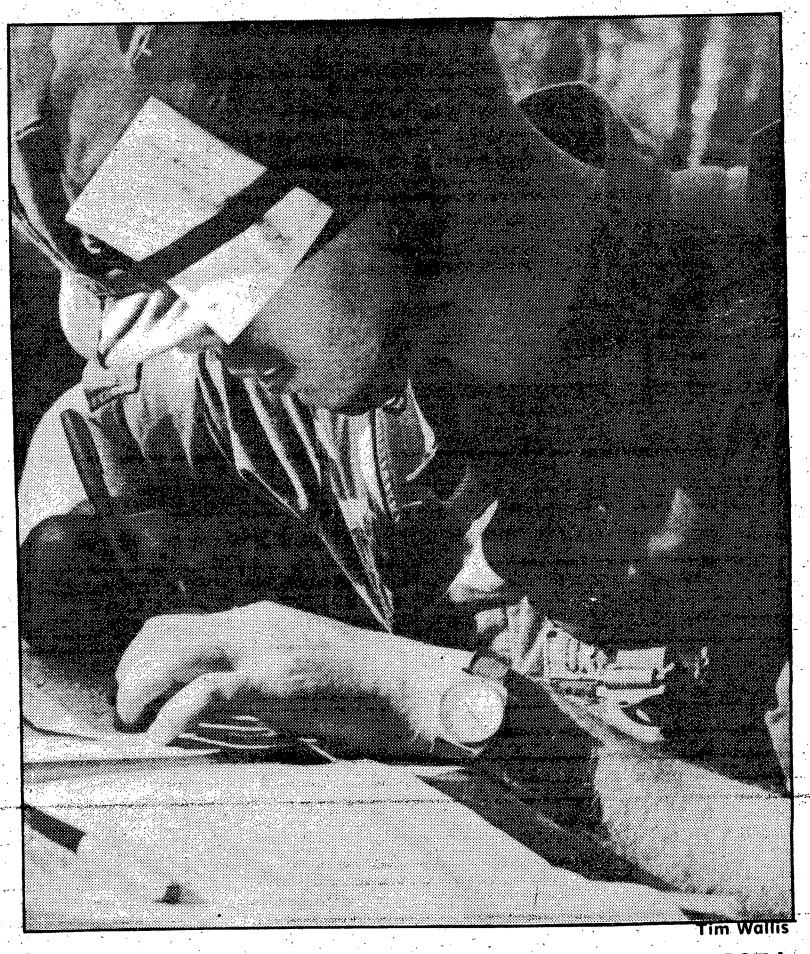
Soldiers of the 197th Support Battalion packed a lot of training into a few days last week when the battalion conducted a field training exercise in conjunction with a 197th Infantry Brigade command post exercise.

The support companies worked on wartime maintenance, resupply, medical, transportation and administration missions during the exercise. Many of the soldiers even worked on a few specialty missions.

Company C, for example, practiced sling-loading operations. Using a UH1-H Huey, the company airlifted a 500-gallon water blivet and rations during the training exercise.

"This is something we don't get to do all the time," said SSgt. Glen Dean, water point supervisor. "We normally use trucks, so helicopters are a new aspect for us."

When supplies such as food, water, ammunition or equipment are needed by units in the field helicopters are used because they can airlift heavy loads.



Soldiers guide the helicopters using hand and arm signals into position over the cargo to be picked up. As the craft hovers, a hook-up man connects the supplies. Two ground men assist the hook-up man.

Once the cargo is attached and the men are clear, the signal for "all clear" is given. The helicopter then lifts the load and delivers it to the designated area.

Support Battalion soldiers also ran an orienteering course during the CPX. Two-man teams used compasses and maps to locate six points in the woods. The teams were graded on speed and accuracy.

"The teams must locate each marker," said Sgt. Robert Beason from Company D. "On each marker is a paper punch with a different punch marker."

The teams have one hour to locate the markers by using terrain association and exact compass settings. Usually one person will keep track of the distance covered by counting paces. Each orienteering team had three different courses to run.

Retiree Open House expanded to include Job Fair, golf tourney

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Approximately 15,000 Army retirees and 11,000 retirees of other service branches residing in portions of Alabama, Georgia and Florida, are being invited to Fort Benning for the sixth annual Military Retiree Open House, Oct. 23 to 25.

This year an additional day, Oct. 23, has been added to the Open House, in order to make way for a Retiree Golf Tournment and Job Fair.

The Tournament gets underway at 8 a.m. at the Follow Me Golf Course. Also at 8 a.m. shuttle buses will begin loading behind Theater No. 1 for the Job Fair site. They will run throughout the day every half hour until 5:30 p.m.

National companies and organizations as well as international corporations are expected to attend the Job Fair. Representatives will talk with retirees, active duty personnel and family members. Those attending should bring copies of their resume.

The Fair is bing hosted by the Commanding General's Retiree Council to assist those seeking employment or wishing to broaden their horizons.

A retirement ceremony is also scheduled for Oct. 23 at 4 p.m. on York Field.

Regular Open House activities begin Oct. 24, with 7 a.m. registration at Theater No. 1. A $1 fee will be charged to help defray some of the cost.

Included in the day'sagenda will be static displays of infantry, armor and artillery equipment, a demonstration by the Fort Benning Military Police dog team and a tour of the National Infantry Museum.

As in the past, military retirees are being invited to Fort Benning for the purpose of transacting personal business related to their rights, benefits, privileges and entitlements.

Representatives from federal, state, local and post activities will be available to counsel retirees Oct. 25 during the various sessions in Infantry Hall. Tables will be set up in a "county fair" atmosphere.

A "Tactical Aerial Demonstration" is set for 2 p.m. at York Field along with static displays of aircraft.

Also scheduled are demonstrations by the Rangers and "Silver Wings" Free Fall Demonstration Team.

For more information on the open house activities contact the Retirement Services Office, P.O. Box 2373, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905 or telephone (404) 545-5369.

Some soldiers to serve longer tours to save money, provide continuity

Army News Service

Some soldiers will be serving longer tours under a recent change to the Defense Department's permanent change-of-station policy.

Under the change, soldiers assigned within the United States — including Alaska and Hawaii — will serve three-year minimum PCS tours, with some exceptions.

Congress ordered research into cutting PCS costs because a large portion of military personnel spending falls into this category. The current changes evolved from initiatives developed by a Congressionally mandated Department of Defense PCS program study group charged with recommending options for saving money on PCS funding.

The change takes effect immediately for soldiers in the continental United States who have not yet received assignment instructions, and for those who leave the continental United States after Sept. 30. Soldiers currently overseas or departing the continental United States before Oct. 1 will not be affected by the changes until Jan. 1.

Army leadership is supporting the Congressional order to reduce military moves. The Army will continue to support the soldiers while maintaining the current high state of readiness.

In this vein, the Army has submitted a proposed legislative package to Congress that includes several options that could be used to encourage soldiers to voluntarily extend their tour lengths.

The primary initiative in the proposal calls for the service to provide free transportation home and back for soldiers, if unaccompanied, or, in most cases, for soldiers and their families, if accompanied.

Soldiers would qualify for travel if they meet the following requirements:

- They extended for 24 months (from three to five years) in all long-tour areas;
- They extend for 12 months (from two to three years) in short-tour areas, and;
- They extend for one year or more in foreign service if serving as three- or four-year enlistees.

The same travel bonus would be offered to soldiers who volunteer for two complete consecutive overseas tours. Exceptions can only be made by the U.S. Military Personnel Center's commanding general.

The study group predicts that besides reducing PCS costs, the tour extensions should help stabilize the lives of soldiers and their families.

Soldiers may be reassigned from their stateside assignments in less than 36 months under the following exceptions:

- Soldiers who are reassigned to an overseas tour or separated from the Army;
- First-term soldiers, compassionate reassignments, and certain assignments limited by statute;
- Soldiers reassigned for training, or because of major weapons systems changes, or because a unit moves; and
- Married couples who move to a joint domicile after one year on station.

Soldiers with fewer than two years remaining military service will not be eligible for reassignment within the United States. These soldiers have several options: serve a short tour overseas (provided their remaining service obligation allows), extend, re-enlist or remain at their current duty station until their transition date. Career soldiers selecting the later option will become ineligible for re-enlistment.

Soldiers who volunteer to serve consecutive overseas assignments would use their free travel between their first and second tours. Those extending would travel after they complete their initial tour and before they begin serving their extension time.

Even more stringent PCS requirements could be announced in the next few weeks when Congress announces fiscal year 1987 PCS funding levels.

"OUR NEW ARMY HOUSING IS NICE TO COME HOME TO. IT WAS WORTH THE WAIT."

SFC Ron Rhodes and his wife Connie.

"It sure didn't take us long to get comfortable in our new house here at Fort Polk. Connie loves the size and lay-out. Ronnie-Lee loves the playground. And there's even room to store my boat.

"We love our quarters. This house has been very important for us in making a good home.

"Because we're in the Army, people may not expect us to live this well. But the Army has changed a lot in the past five years. It's a good place to live, to be.

"Connie and I feel that the Army's really come a long way in housing and, you know, in taking care of its people."

The overall quality of quarters on posts throughout the Army continues to improve. And housing starts and renovations are at an all-time high. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

Spiritual

Patron saint inspires elite troops with courage, loyalty, leadership

USAIC Chaplain's Office

On Sept. 29, paratroopers around the world observed St. Michael's Day, a day to honor the patron saint of the Airborne.

Created before God created the universe, angels are spiritual beings whose mission is to glorify God and protect and minister to God's people on the earth.

The Bible recognizes the angel, Michael, as the leader of the force of obedient angels that opposed Satan and his followers in their rebellion against God.

Because he was the only figure that remained loyal to God, a Council of Catholic Bishops (circa 400) set Michael above all angels and set him above all on the earth.

Early Airborne units in Christian European countries felt that Michael's courage, leadership and loyalty represented the essence of their mission as defenders and protectors of freedom and liberty. Saint Michael was recognized as the patron saint of the American Airborne by World War II when American Airborne troopers were recognized as an elite group of soldiers whose mission was to fight for American rights and liberties.

Today, St. Michael's Associations exist wherever groups of Airborne troopers are in fellowship together.

In order to join the society at Fort Benning, one must only show proof of Airborne qualification and agree to the jump commands of the society.

- GET READY! I will always attempt to be physically and spiritually fit before my master.
- STAND UP! I will make a decision to maintain high moral standards inspite of what others say or do.
- HOOK UP! Through personal prayer, I will maintain a direct line of communication with God.
- CHECK STATIC LINE! I will prepare myself to make a daily check of my attitudes and relations with others.
- CHECK EQUIPMENT! I will take a personal inventory of my weaknesses and faults and prepare to make amends.
- SOUND OFF FOR EQUIPMENT CHECK! I will share my faith with others by word of mouth and example.
- STAND IN THE DOOR! With my belief in a supreme being, I will determine to face bravely whatever test life gives to me.
- GO! Whether on land, on sea or in the air, I will be firm in my resolutions to serve God and country as both would expect me to.

Airborne!

More information on joining the St. Michael's Airborne Association of Fort Benning is available at the Airborne chaplain's office, Building 2767. The phone number is 545-1314 or 545-3715.

Catholic women celebrat love for Christ, share spir

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

"We are one in the Spirit," is the theme of the Catholic Women of the Chapel's fall program.

It could also serve as a motto for the group all year.

"We come together as one to celebrate our love for Christ and share this love with our families and community," said Marianne Tennant, president of the group.

The purpose of the group is fellowship, service to the community and religious education, she said.

The group sponsors all church activities, makes and launders the altar linens, prepares the Sedar meal, decorates the church for holidays, and makes babtismal bibs and confirmation stoles.

It also sponsors a food and clothes closet for needy families, and Santa's Castle, which repairs toys to give to needy families at Christmas.

An important part of the group is the fellowship the members enjoy with other Catholic women.

"We try to plan social activities and programs that don't cost anythi people will be able to and participate," Mary Ann Rierson, president of the grou

Awareness best defense against fraud, waste, abuse

by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Sgt. Jones was the property book officer for his unit and he always had ready cash in his pocket to spring for lunches and buy his buddies a beer.

He drove a new Cadillac, lived off-post in a $100,000 home and seemed to have a bright future ahead of him.

All that ended when special agents of the Criminal Investigation Division appeared at his office one morning and arrested him.

His crime: defrauding the government by stealing government property and "cooking the books" to cover his crimes.

Today, Jones occupies a cell in federal prison, awaiting the appeal of his dishonorabe discharge. His home and car were siezed by the government and things don't look so bright for him any more.

While Sgt. Jones is a fictional character, his crime is all too familiar.

"In the last year, fraud has cost Fort Benning hundreds of thousands of dollars," said Charles Washington, a CID spokesman.

October has been declared Fraud, Waste and Abuse Awareness Month by the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, and the primary thrust of the campaign is to make people aware of the problem.

Washington said fraud occurs when a person uses his position as an employee of the government to steal goods for personal use or resale.

Claims fraud is another example of theft, he said. "A person's stereo is stolen, and the person files a claim for $1,400, when he knows the stereo was only worth $400. If a claims examiner doesn't catch it, the individual has defrauded the government of $1,000."

In the past, fighting fraud, waste and abuse has been primarily reacting to crimes that were discovered, Washington said. Now, law enforcement officials are becoming more proactive, looking for evidence of abuse, searching out possible questionable transactions.

"With the Gramm-Rudman Act focusing on cutting government spending, finding and preventing this type crime becomes even more critical," he said.

But Washington said law enforcement personnel cannot do the job alone.

"We need all employees to be watchful and report suspicious behavior. They do not have to furnish us evidence that a crime has actually been committed," Washington said.

"Our job as agents is to put together information. The facts one person reports are only a tiny piece of the puzzle and if everyone reports what they see, we'll have a complete picture to work with," he said.

We have to police ourselves, Washington explained, because these crimes abuse the whole military system.

"To do this, we have to be aware of the issue and get more people actively involved in fighting to catch criminals," he said.

"Many people have the misconception that they have to have proof that someone is stealing, but this isn't true. We (the CID) need people to be our eyes and ears out there, and we'll build the case against the person if they are found to be committing a crime."

The CID has a Fraud Action Hotline that accepts calls on suspected abusers. A person may remain anonymous if they so desire, Washington said, and reports are kept confidential. The number is 545-3984.

Handicapped Employee of Year doesn't let deafness slow her down

Story and photo by Becky Obert
The Bayonet staff writer

Terri Bradley is Fort Benning's Handicapped Employee of the Year, but she's not handicapped.

Just ask her.

"I do everything I want to do," she said. "I like to dance, go to movies, go shopping."

She enjoys her work as a data transcriber at the Property Control Branch, Supply and Storage Division, Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

Co-workers are full of praise for Terri's "dedication and enthusiasm" for her work. "She acts like it's a challenge to her to learn things," said Vivian McCrory, a co-worker. "She's so smart, you just have to show her once how to do something."

McCrory said everyone enjoys working with Bradley. "She's got such a good personality, so friendly and she's always laughing," McCrory said. "She makes people feel good working with her."

McCrory said the only think Bradley can't do is answer the telephone. "If it wasn't for that, she could do just about any job here," McCrory said.

Bradley was born deaf, with no possibility of correction. But she has no problem communicating, through writing and sign language.

She attended the North Carolina School for the Deaf from age 4 to 10. Then her father, a career soldier, died, and the family moved to Columbus.

Bradley then entered public schools here, attending Key Elementary School, Talbotton Road Junior High and Jordan High School.

At Jordan, she was a member of the National Honor Society, Who's Who Among Distinguished American High School Students and received a Certificate of Merit at graduation.

She continued her education at Columbus Area Technical and Vocational School, taking typing, filing and data processing. She got her job at Fort Benning in March 1985.

She said she taught her brothers and sister to sign when they were little, so there's never been a communication problem at home.

School was hard at Jordan, because deaf students were expected to learn everything the other kids did, and there were translators in each class. "That's because all the deaf students attended high school there," she said.

Right now, she said she's trying to teach her co-workers to sign, but there's not a lot of time at work to teach them. "I write notes, and they write notes to me," Bradley said.

She's excited about her engagement to Arthur Bass, her boyfriend of three years, but said they haven't set the date yet.

"Arthur teases me that he wants five children, but I only want two," she said.

She said she's happy about the award, which she received at a ceremony Wednesday. "Now I'm a star," she joked.

Terri Bradley, Fort Benning's Handicapped Employee of the Year, uses sign language to talk with one of her co-workers.

Benning workers recognized in 'excellence' program

Directorate of Engineering, Housing

The Sept. 4 outbrief by the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command Installation of Excellence Evaluation Team was the culmination of a very successful two-day evaluation.

Col. Robert Frink, the TRADOC team leader said during his outbrief for the U.S. Army Infantry Center chief of staff: "From the facilities we have seen and the people we have met, I am convinced that high standards are being set and excellence is becoming a way of life at Fort Benning."

The evaluation team keyed their efforts on areas that provide a highly visible first impression, such as grounds maintenance. The team was amazed that even with the severe drought, Fort Benning presented itself as a well-manicured and a well-policed installation.

As special recognition for excellence, the following units or individuals were presented "Installation of Excellence Caps":

- The Welcome Center, Col. Thomas Feuerborn of the Military Police Activity and Carol Noble, a volunteer worker.
- Tot Town Child Care Center awards went to Ida Barnes, the director, and Delisa Whittlessey.
- Two volunteers, Helen Walnes and Harold Freeman, from the Army Community Service received special recognition for the "Benning Baskets" loan closet.
- Craig Taylor, Architect, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, was recognized for the excellent design of the Officers' Club Health Spa.
- Bob Shelley, director of Briant Wells Field House, was recognized for excellence.
- Lt. Col. Neville Holder and SGM James Berry were recognized for their efforts in providing an excellent image in the Finance and Accounting Office.

Energy Update

by Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

Several activities are planned for Energy Awareness Week, which is set for Oct. 19 through 25.

Of particular interest are four professional exhibits provided by Georgia Power Company. These will be located in high traffic areas, including Building 4, Building 35, the main mall and Martin Army Community Hospital.

Building 4 will house the Georgia Power Solar Research Exhibit, which shows the company's commitment to developing solar energy.

The main mall will also have a solar exhibit, "The Shenandoah Solar Center." This display has been called the 'Little World's Fair in Georgia.' It entertains and involves viewers while they larn about Georgia Power's large-scale industrial solar research project. The display explains how the sun's energy is collected and how a solar plant works.

MACH will house the Nuclear Energy Exhibit. It explains the operation of a nuclear electric generating plant by using a model and schematic light up in sequence following the narration.

Building 35 will have the Electronic Message Exhibit called "Computer 1." It contains a computerized message board and has the capacity to present a continuous slide show.

Also, be on the lookout for the Energy Buster as he makes the rounds during the week, searching for energy conscious people. He just might have a key tag or some other reward for your efforts.

James Parker, quarterback for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, tries to get a pass off before a Company B, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery defender, rushes in.

Company flag football kicks off at 197th Inf.

The opening play from scrimmage foretold the outcome of Monday's matchup as Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry silenced Company B, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery in a 18 — 0 shutout on Essebagger Field.

After a Rodney Huntly kickoff, that started Co. B on its one-yard line, the HHC blitz sent quarterback Joseph Billinger scrambling into the endzone, where he was sacked for the two-point touchback.

HHC, who leads the Green Division of the 197th Flag Football League, kept Co. B against the wall, seldom allowing them to cross mid-field.

On a broken play, just minutes before the half, HHC quarterback, James Parker, scrambled in search of a receiver, finding Raymond Elston, who caught the Co. B defense asleep and raced 30 yards for the touchdown.

The HHC club scored the extra point, giving them a 10 — 0 lead at the half.

The opening drive of the second half was remininscent of the first.

It was on fourth down that Parker found Marcel Newsome in the endzone, sending HHC scurrying 16 points ahead of the Co. B team.

Several drives were kept alive by the speed of HHC running back Bobby Oliver, who continually zipped around the right side in a blaze.

The HHC defense would score again. On third down, Billinger again found himself in his own endzone for the safety that capped the 18 — 0 HHC victory.

YA soccer rolls on. . .

by Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The Youth Activities Soccer League continued to set high goals as teams met on Greenfields last week for the kickoffs.

In the Termite Division, the Hawks had a split, suffering a 2 — 0 defeat when they faced the Blue Dragons, but edging past the strikers 2 — 1 in the following game.

Gary Prewitt scored on a penalty kick to get the Hawks airborne.

The Hawks soared to victory when Tara Horton hit the game-winning goal.

The Grasshopper Division heated up as the Blue Knights and the Strikers continued an ongoing battle for first place.

The Blue Knights, leaders of the division, were handed their first defeat at the hand of the number two ranked Strikers in a 2 — 0 whitewash.

The Strikers were coming off a 6 — 0 shut out loss against the Destroyers, ranked third in the division.

Though the Strikers had good defensive play from Jonathan Cornagay and George Stinson, the Destroyers marched past them, scoring six goals.

The Blue Knight team was also matched with the Destroyers, but edged by in overtime, 5 — 4.

The Road Runmers kept playoff hopes alive, claiming a 3 — 1 victory over the Cardinals.

Micheal Czibik scored early in the first quarter, then again late in the third.

The win was sealed when Josh Dun, Chad Bell and B.J. Geasa kept the ball in play for Ricardo De Jesus' final goal.

The Fire Hawks though blanked through the season, with a 0 — 8 record, will be a true force in the upcoming games.

Redskins skin Broncos, lead YA Pee Wee Division

by Thad Roberson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Led by a dazzling passing attack and a mean, stingy defense, the Redskins corralled the Broncos Saturday in a 12 — 0 defeat, and now lead the Pee Wee Division of the Youth Activities Football League, 3 — 0.

Quarterback Steve Murrell connected with wide receiver Allen White on touchdowns of 22 and 85 yards.

A staunch effort by the Bronco defense contained the potent Redskin ground game, holding rushing yards to 78 and sacking the quarterback on four occasions.

Redskin defenders Sean Burke and Rashaad Dobbs each recovered fumbles, while Murrell and White each intercepted Bronco aerials to stop drives short of the Redskin 50-yard line.

The Redskins' defense was led by Murrell with eight tackles, two assists; Robert Beverly, four tackles and four assists; Dobbs, three tackles and four assists; and Flashy Jerlando Jackson with four tackles and two assists.

The second round of league competition resumes in two weeks with the Redskins scheduled to meet the Bears Oct. 18.

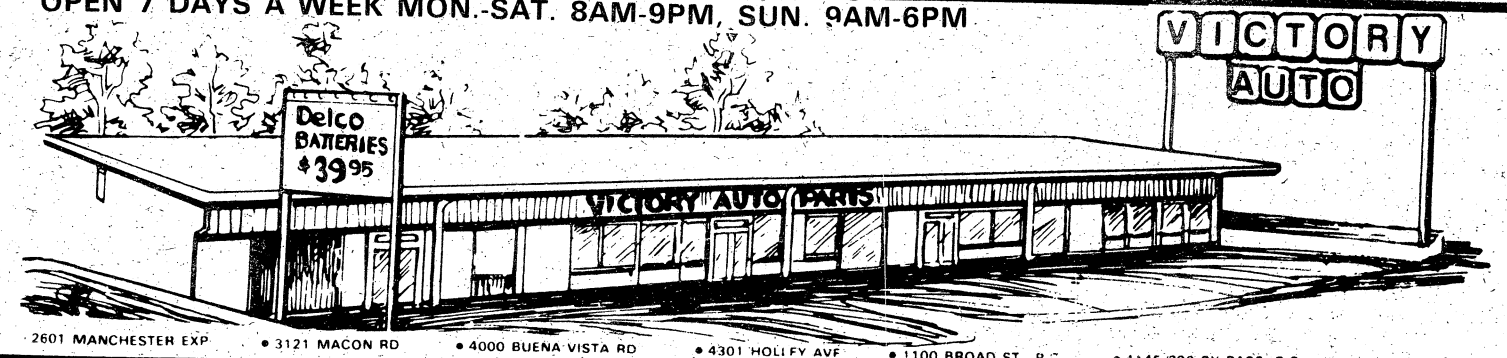
the Transportation Motor Pool to the impoundment lot.



"We have to try and notify the vehicle's owner. If we locate the owner we hold the vehicle for 120 days. If it's not picked up it goes to Property Disposal where it's auctioned off," Pruitt said.

According to Pruitt, if the vehicle's owner can't be located the vehicle is kept for 90 days and then sent to Property Disposal for auction.

"This whole process is a waste of time and money. These abandoned vehicles, many stripped or rusting, present a bad image for Fort Benning," he said.
