Cadets from 15 different schools in Alabama and Mississippi competed in a multitude of tasks, in what will become an annual event on Fort Benning.

"The cadets were originally selected for the challenge in the four ROTC regions by competing for the highest scores. The winners were then teamed up and sent to the challenge," said Capt. Mike Harwood of Auburn University.

The cadets braved the rain of "ranger weather" to compete in events such as grenade tossing, knot tying, rope-bridge building, disassembling and reassembling of the M-16A1, M-60 and a .45-caliber revolver.

All of the events were timed and conducted in a round-robin fashion. At one point on Todd Field a group of cadets could be heard cheering on one of their teammates as he raced to tie knots. A few feet away the grenade toss kept many of the cadets with their face in the mud.

The highlight of the challenge was the rope-bridging event, when four teams raced against each other to build a one-rope bridge and travel from one end of it to another.

The cadet team from the University of Alabama won first place, while the team from Auburn University placed second.The team from Jacksonville State University won third place honors.

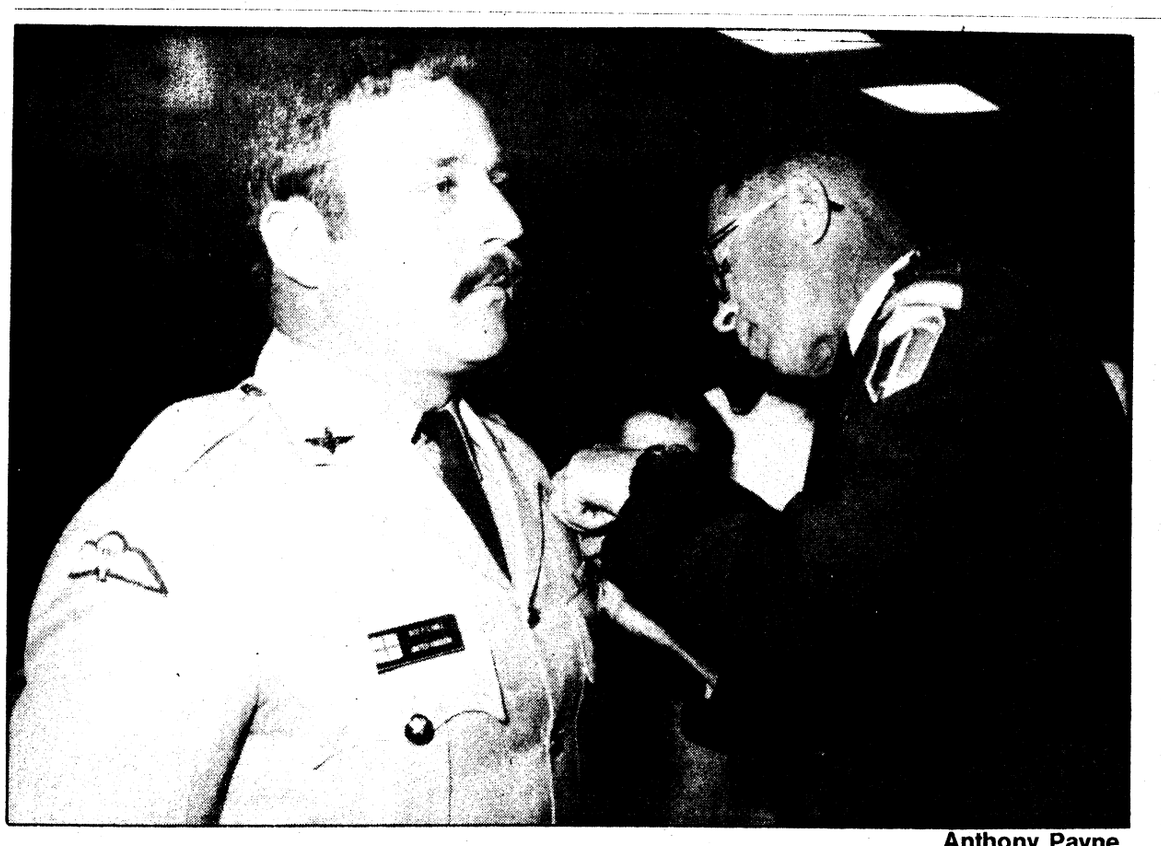
"WE FEEL GOOD ABOUT LEAVING JAMAHL AT THE DAY-CARE CENTER BECAUSE THEY TREAT HIM LIKE HE'S THEIR OWN CHILD."

SSG Ken and SP4 Jacquie Farmer

"We never really considered leaving Jamahl with anyone except a private sitter. But our first visit to the new Child Development Center here at Fort Hood sure changed our minds.



"We know our son is well taken care of. So we can concentrate on our jobs without worrying about what he's doing.

"He learns, instead of just playing. He counts, sings, says his ABC's. And they teach him to be more independent.

"Jacquie and I have peace of mind when Jamahl's at the Center. They take care of him, and he's learning, and those are the two most important things."

The Army's Day-Care programs are making modern day-care facilities available to more children each day. And the quality of the "Caregivers" who attend the children has never been higher. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

British warrant officer awarded service medal

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Warrant Officer Class 2 Phillip Hall, a British exchange officer, has been awarded his country's Long Service and Good Conduct Medal. This award is only given to soldiers after they have served 15 years of exemplary service.

According to Lt Col. John M. Grundy, British liasion officer, his country awards very few medals. "By and large, medals are given for campaigns of gallantry or service above and beyond the call of duty," he said, "Its possible that some soldiers could go throughout their whole career without receiving a single award."

This is not the case with Hall, who is presently acting as Detatchment Commander, Detachment 2, Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

He also wears campaign medals for acts of valor in Northern Ireland and the Faulklands War. "I fought because that is what I joined the Army for," Hall said, "to uphold my country's rights and to help fellow countrymen who are being deprived of their rights."

Halls' career has taken him to many points on the globe since his enlistment in the army. He has been to most of those places with 2nd Battalion, The Parachute Regiment, the British equivalant to our rangers. With them, he has been to Malaysia, Singapore, Turkey, Sharjah, Cyprus, France, Norway, Denmark, Belgium, West Germany (including Berlin), Kenya, Belize and now he is in the U.S., with his wife Jenny and daughter Tracey.

He has been here since October 1985. "I was selected to come here when the United State started employing the 81mm Mortar," said Hall. "The mortar is made in Great Britain and our expertise was requested." According to Hall, he is the second person to hold his position in what has now become a permanent program.

Hall has found his niche in other areas here too. "I am a player-coach for the Columbus Cruise-matics, a rugby team," he said, "We just won the Georgia title and we will be going to Jackson Mississippi to play for the Eastern Divisio title."

Despite two Benning tours, soldier has never served here

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Lt. Col. Marcel Lettre has been assigned to two tours of duty at Fort Benning but has never served here. Confusing? Not really. Lettre has been, respectively, an Infantry representative to Turkey and, most recently, the School's liaison officer to the French Army.

Lettre, who is an 18-year U.S. Army veteran, is returning from his posting in France after two and one-half years as one of eight U.S. Army officers serving as links between the U.S. and French armies.

"My job was to serve as a communicator between our infantry and the French infantry on appropriate military information both armies are interested in," he said. "I conducted studies, observed training, taught classes on U.S. tactics and equipment and, in general, showed the U.S. flag in France and to the French military.

He said he was selected for the liaison job because of his credentials as an infantryman, parachutist and his fluency in the French language.

"I am of French-Canadian ancestry and I majored in French literature in college," he said. The airborne Ranger, who is a Vietnam combat veteran and an avowed Francophile, said he's impressed by the French army.

"The French soldier is excellent and very motivated," Lettre said.

"Their army is smaller than our but, proportionally, roughly the same size.

Their elite units, such as their Airborne and Foreign Legion, are superb," he said.

Lettre operated from the French Infantry School located at Montpellier, in the south of France.

Lettre spent much of his time in the field with a variety of French units, including one little-known organization, the Alpine.

"May people are not aware of the French Alpine Division. These soldiers are very elite. They are trained to fight and survive in the Alps and are experts in mountain warfare," he said.

He also spent time with the famed Foreign Legion.

"The Foreign Legion is everything you read about it and more. Their training is grueling," he said. "For example, after only four weeks of Legion basic training, the volunteers conduct a platoon-size raid on an objective which entails them moving, on foot, 60 miles with full combat load in less than three days," he said. "The attrition rate in Legion training is very high but the soldiers who complete the training are top-notch."

During his time with the Legion, Lettre met several Americans in Legion training as well as Legion recruits from all over the world.

"I met one American who had served for three years with the 1st Ranger Battalion and was looking for a different challenge," he said.

Child care major concern of parents

By Ann Keays
TRADOC OCPA

FORT MONROE, Va. — When a soldier receives orders for a permanent move, there are a number of concerns — housing, the new job, a different lifestyle, transportation. If the soldier is a parent, there's an additional problem — child care.

If the youngsters are old enough for school, the spouse may want to find a job outside the home. And in many cases, even though the children are too young for school, financial obligations make it necessary for the spouse to work.

When both parents have jobs outside the home, child care becomes a major concern. Child care centers, nursery schools, babysitters, and willing relatives are all possible solutions to the problem.

There is however, another alternative — the Family Child Care Program. An Army-wide program, FCC is chartered in Army Regulation 608-10. Each installation is authorized an FCC director, whose job is to certify child care locally by establishing training for child care providers.

Providers are people who take children into their government quarters and give them developmental care. They are professionals, trained and certified by Army regulation. They undergo background investigations and attend a variety of educational classes and workshops. It takes at least six months from the time a potential child care provider applies to become part of the program until full certification can be accomplished. And after that, there are periodic refresher courses and further training in which the child care provider must participate to remain qualified as a profresional in the FCC program.

The provider is paid for child care services by the parents of the children. Details of the care are agreed upon and both the provider and the parents sign a contract. Child care providers live on military installations, and therefore must abide by Army Regulation 210-50. Since the Family Child Care Program is a professional business operated in government quarters, it is regulated and permitted by consent of the local commander.

Child care providers are visited regularly by members of the local FCC staff, the safety office, fire department, and preventive medicine office. Some visits ar announced, but others are not All aspects of the provider's home environment are inspecte — safety, cleanliness, adequate playing space, nutritional meals, recreational activities, and th quality of interpersonal chil care.

The Family Child Care Program is organized under Chil Development Services on each installation. In TRADOC, about 500 homes with child care providers have been certified within the past year, according to Harriett Holley, Family Child Care Specialist at TRADOC headquarters The average FCC home is providing care for four or five children.

Holley, whose office is located in the Family Support Branch — Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Administration, and Logistics, said she acts as middleman between the TRADOC installations and Department of the Army.

Army will pay extension bonus for some MOSs

Military & Personnel Center

How does the Army compensate soldiers overseas who fill some of the most difficult jobs? You can find out if your military occupational specialty is in the Overseas Extension Incentive Program, according to Sgt. Maj. C. Hensley Jr., of MILPERCEN's Programs Management Branch.

The OEIP, which the Army started in 1981, offers soldiers additional pay or benefits in exchange for their extending overseas for 12 more months in approved positions.

"An overseas assignment can cause reservations about whether you'll like it or not," Hensley said. "Then people tell you that you can do a lot of touring, but you're not sure how. You're barely making ends meet, and you use all your leave to go home and visit your family.

"But once you're on assignment you make the best of it," he continued, "find out that you like the country, and that you have a super job and unit. Then suddenly, it's time to rotate, and you haven't even vacationed in the country yet."

To take advantage of such situations, soldiers should consider the Overseas Extension Incentive Program. It offers three incentive packages, which add flexibility to soldiers' choices for travel, pay or leave:

- $80 extra pay per month during the period of the extension.
- Thirty days of nonchargeable leave.
- Fifteen days of nonchargeable leave and travel to and from the continental U.S.

"Space imbalances between U.S. and overseas needs for these soldiers and average turnaround times are still used to identify most of the military occupational specialties for the OEIP," Hensley said. "However, grade level of detail is now analyzed."

Additional skill identifiers can now be designated in the OEIP for selected skills. Where an additional skill identifier or MOS at a certain rank has been designated as critical and hard to fill, it too can be included.

Check DA Circular 614-85-1, Assignments, Details and Transfers — Incentives for Enlisted Members to Extend Tours of Duty Overseas, for more information. The Department of the Army changes the list of eligible MOSs, with additional skill identifiers and ranks, every six months. DA announces the changes by message.

Medical experts disagree on cause, effect of stress

Capt. James J. Picano
AVIATION DIGEST

FORT MONROE, Va. — The concept of stress has received widespread attention in recent years. The dangers of excessive stress in our lives are well-documented as scientific research continues to link stress with physical illnesses, decreased job performance, and social and psychological maladjustment. Much of the popular literature is devoted to teaching us innovative ways of managing, preventing and even eliminating stress from our lives.

In spite of this quickly growing body of knowledge about stress, there exists little agreement within the scientific community about exactly what stress is and how it affects us. But, what is becoming clearer is that stress, even in high degrees, does not necessarily have adverse effects.

Certainly, all stress should not be elminated from our lives, for it is this force which motivates us, challenges us and stimulates our continued growth. Rather, it appears that the ways in which we cope with life stress have more to do with its effects on our health that does the mere presence of stress alone.

Healthy stress-coping strategies can enhance and enrich our lives, whereas poor stress coping can lead to a life lacking in fulfillment and filled with physical and emotional discomfort.

More importantly, poor stress coping in aviation can have disastrous consequences. A recent study by Dr. Robert Alkov, a psychologist at the U.S. Naval Safety Center in Norfolk, Va., shows that poor stress coping is linked directly to aircraft mishaps.

Alkov and his associated studied the life stress and poor stress-coping symptoms of more than 700 naval aviators who had been involved in major mishaps over a four-year period (1978 to 1982). These researchers compared the psychological functioning of aircrewmembers whose accidents were judged to have resulted from pilot error to those pilots whose accidents did not result from pilot error.

They found that pilots of the "pilot error group" were significantly more likely than their counterparts to have:

- Experienced a recent personality change.
- Been having difficulty with their superiors.
- Been having difficulty in interpersonal relationships.
- Marital problems.

All of these are symptoms of poor stress coping.

Alkov also found that the pilots of the pilot error group were also isignificantly more likely than their counterparts to be contemplating career changes and engagements to marry.

There appears to be a small margin of safety for poor stress-coping strategies in aviation: therefore, it is the duty of individual aviators and aviation commanders to learn about the effects of stress, the early warning signs of poor stress coping, and effective and adaptive ways of managing and coping with stress.

Stress is an elusive concept, a force much like gravity in that we infer its presence by observing its effects. Much of our current understanding about the effects of stress on the body has evolved from the pioneering work of Dr. Hans Selye. He defines stress as the nonspecific response of the body to external demands placed upon it (stressors). Selye outlined a "general adaptation syndrome" based upon the body's physiological response to stress, which occurs in three stages:

- The alarm stage signals a defensive reaction on the part of the body to a perceived threat. This reaction is primarily mediated through the endocrine system with an increase in adrenal cortical secretions. Blood pressure and body temperature also show a characteristic rise initially. This adrenal response continues through the next stage.
- The resistance stage is marked by the body's effort to adapt to the stressful situation. It is identified by adrenal enlargement, shrinkage of the thymus gland and its associated reduction in lymphocytes, and gastrointestinal ulceration. Under conditions of prolonged or serve stress, the body's ability to adapt becomes diminished and the body begins to break down.
- In the exhausted stage, the illnesses associated with excessive stress and poor stress coping, such as gastrointestinal ulcers, hypertension and arthritis, become manifested.

The stressors that provoke the above outlined response pattern are not always noxious environmental events. Even relatively positive life events such as getting married, promoted, or graduating from flight school can trigger the stress response described here to some degree. In short, any event that demands change can be considered a stressor.

Obviously, life changes do not always lead to physical and emotional breakdown. In fact, most people handle even severe stressors quite effectively with few adverse effects. But, stressors are cumulative and if not dealt with effectively, can cause significant distress. Researchers have only just begun to study how the ways in which we cope with stress, that is our stress-coping styles, mediate this physiological response pattern to positively influence our health.

Effective stress-coping strategies are — to borrow an analogy from Dr. George Vaillant of Dartmouth University, an eminent researcher in this area — those processes by which "an oyster confronted with a grain of sand, creates a pearl." Such processes may be under our conscious control, like soliciting advice from a friend or professional in times of crisis. Or, stress-coping mechanisms may operate outside of our awareness — such as drinking heavily to dampen the emotional pain associated with the death of a loved one.

Some of the stress-coping processes that have been found to more favorably impact on physical and psychological health are analyzing problem situations, using humor, and talking over fears and worries with others. Avoidance mechanisms such as excessive drinking, smoking, or eating during times of stress, mght help to reduce some of the immediate tension, but do not promote health over the long-term.

Surprisingly, we know relatively little about the ways in which aviators cope with the excessive stresses of military aviations, partly because we have been reluctant to study these processes (fearing that the discussion of stress in aviation might itself engender more stress), and partly because stress and difficulty coping with stress are topics that most pilots do not readily discuss.

There are some concrete things that you can do to enhance your ability to cope with stress:

- Set realistic and attainable long-term goals; this helps to minimize the impact of life changes.
- Exercise regularly and pay attention to proper nutrition to increase the body's resistance to stress-related illness.
- Take leave, and learn to relax and enjoy the time off from work.
- Most importantly, take time to identify the major sources of stress in your life, and take positive steps to deal with them.

197th's 'Head Hunters' win post championship

Sally Roberts

Sgt. Derek McConnico (No. 30), of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, goes up for a basket.

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

They were both winners going into Monday's finals of the U.S. Army Infantry Center Intramural Basketball Tournament.

But there could be only one champion, as the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade Head Hunters decapitated the River Rats of the 586th Engineers, 36th Engineer Group, in a 88-73 victory.

The pace was fast and the play intense, as both teams demonstrated their flash-lane potential.

When forced to settle down into a half court game, it was the Head Hunters' ball control that proved to be the fatal poison for the River Rats.

Coach Kenneth Maertins had trained his scavaging Head Hunters to endure.

"They had a good team," Maertins said. "But we had a lot more forwards and guards to press throughout the entire game."

The River Rats handled the pressure well in the opening period, scurrying to a 36-36 tie at the intermission.

Henry Sevion and Terry Fortson we. constructing a bit of engineered pressure of their own, as Sevion hit 14 first half points, and Fortson tallied 11 in the opening action.

Sevion's first and last shots of the period were good from the three-point range.

It was the team pressure applied by the Head Hunters that wore down the contenders.

Early into the second half, as the River Rats began to tire, the Head Hunters began to extend thier lead.

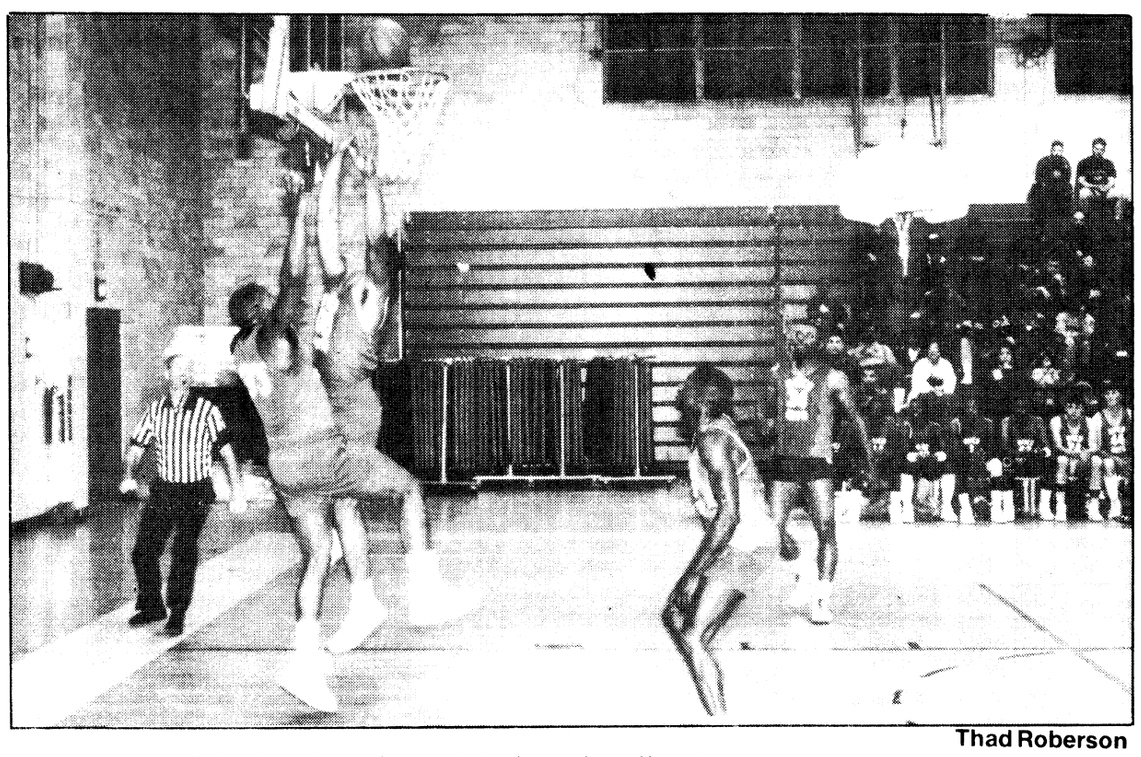
Battle's outlet pass to Eddie Smith, who had hit two three-pointers in the opening period, sent the Head Hunters racing to a 43-56 lead.

Derrek McConnico's turn-around jump shot was on target, providing the Head Hunters with 14 points.

But, the River Rats continued to travel with the flow, as Jeffrey Tillman pulled within four when he scored a three-point shot, closing the gap to 56-60.



Michael Guyton quickly adapted, coming off the bench to drive in 10 points. His offensive stamina on the boards gave the Head Hunters repeated opportunities, on which they capatilized.

The Head Hunters could do no wrong, as Reginald Worrel, who made six of six at the free throw line, mirrored his efforts at the baseline, rocking up 16 points.

The show really began with only six minutes remaining. Battle sent the Head Hunters up by 10 with a layup and began to stretch it out on the next play, stealing the ball for another easy basket under the hoop.

Alicton Ritter, who was also perfect at the line, nailed down the championship with "two" from the free throw, pushing the Head Hunters ahead 64-78.

The Briant Wells Field House was jam packed. But, it was only half the crowd that began to chant with 2:30 left on the clock in the final period.

Benning course joins state assn.

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

The Fort Benning Golf Association recently became a member of the Georgia State Golf Association, which rates members' courses and "adds integrity to players' handicaps," said Dick Vogel, social and membership chairman of the association.

"What it means is that our members can now qualify and play in other State-sanctioned tournaments using their handicap established at the Follow Me course," he said.

He said their handicaps will be accepted on an equal footing, enabling members to play other courses without reestablishing a handicap.

Vogel said the Follow Me Golf Course is in good shape. "They spent over $1 million in the last three years on the greens and clubhouse," he said.

For information on becoming a member, call George Cliff, club pro, at 687-1940.

Joan Leighton, Joe Henderson, Don Brady and Norman Cooper made for a winning combination Saturday, as the team shot 65 and took first place in a 4-ball scramble tournament at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The team of Dale Meridith, George Prestridge, Dill Guinn and JOhn Mulhall shot 66 for second place, followed by the team third place finishing team of Harold Johnson, Dick Wahlert, Charles Hill and Al Walker, with a score of 68.

The other finishers were:

Fourth place: Tyler Williams, Johnny Grimes, Joe Corona and Jim Young with a score of 68.

Fifth place: Richard Brown, Ed Sundie, Bill Corbin and Sandy Casey with a score of 68.

Sixth place: Robbie Cole, Frank Casey, Gary Perolman and Lorraine Richards, with a score of 69.

Seventh place: Kurt Runge, Ted Jekinek, Bill Roark and Fred Noe, with a score of 69.

Eighth place: Sung Hong, Bill White, Joe Tillman and Tom Makinster, with a score of 69.

Ninth place: Gene Williams, Ed Burba, Robert Anderson and Earle Lassoter, with a score of 69.

Closest to the hole prizes went to Dick Brown on Hole No. 4 and Sung Hong on No. 16.

Volunteers needed

The Georgia Special Olympics Area 10 Spring Games kick off April 7 at Kinnett Stadium in Columbus. Volunteers are needed to work with the games.

"This is a day full of invincible spirits and there are no defeats for anyone. Last year we got great support from Fort Benning and we really need it this year," said Ann Baldwin, one of the game's organizers.

More than 400 mentally handicapped athletes will compete in the softball throw, standing long jump, dashes, relays, race walking, wheel chair races and developmental sports beginning at 8:30 a.m. and going until 2 p.m.

Georgia Special Olympics reaches more than 12,000 mentally handicapped children and adults each year and its existence and expansion depends solely on the work of volunteers.

Special Olympics accommodates competitors at all ability levels. Each athlete is assigned to a competition division based on both age and actual ability, giving each competitor a more equal opportunity to win. Each participant who competes receives a ribbon or medal.

POVs damaged at sea

WASHINGTON — Department of Defense personnel planning to pick up vehicles from Europe at the ports of Baltimore, Md., Charleston, S.C., or Bayonne, N.J., are being advised to contact their local transportation office before leaving to do so.

The cargo ship carrying the vehicles, the Federal Seaway, recently encountered a severe storm at sea, said officials of the Military Traffic Management Command in Falls Church, Va. Much of the cargo of privately owned vehicles, along with a few household goods shipments, reportedly sustained damage.

MTMC officials explained that damage to vehicles ranges from minor to substantial.

Soldiers who suspect their shipments may have been aboard the ship, which departed Felixstowe, United Kingdom, about Feb. 12 and Bremerhaven, Germany, about Feb. 14 and docked at Baltimore March 2, should contact their local transportation office for information.

The problem will be dealt with on a local level as in all cases where damages in shipments have occurred, according to officials. Local transportation officers have instructions to direct those who are affected to the claims officer, after which the claims officer and customer will work out payment for damages.

MTMC officials said they are conducting a marine casualty investigation with the carrier. — Army News Service

The Wednesday Ledger-Enquirer erroneously reported that the video rental shop at the Fort Benning Mini Mall rents X-rated video cassettes, according to a representative from the Post Exchange. Post officials set record straight

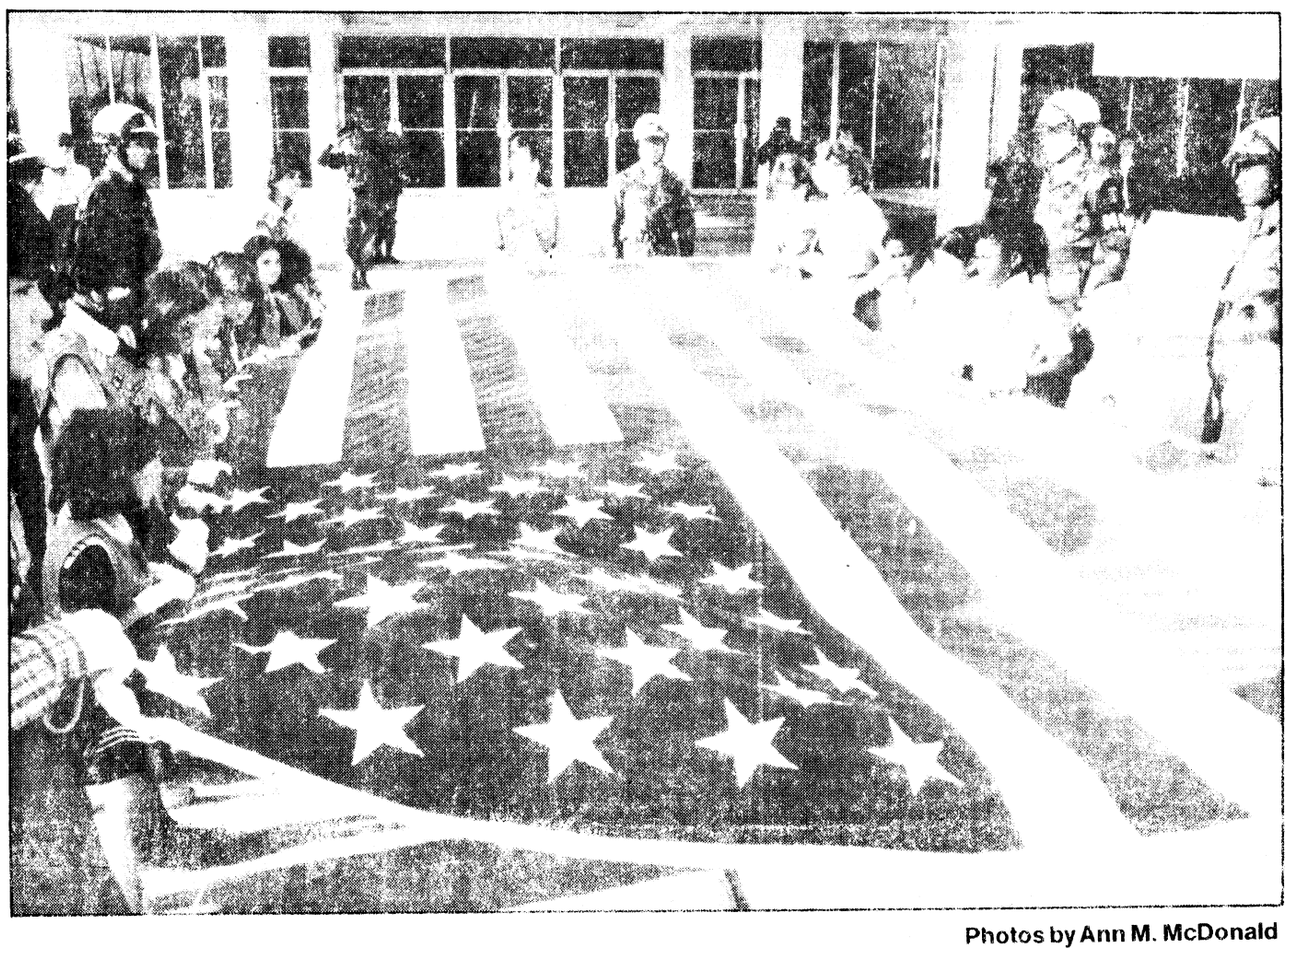
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A recent headline in the Columbus Ledger newspaper gave the impression that Fort Benning had been given the OK to contract out to commercial sources the majority of jobs currently held by government workers at the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

"This is just not so," said David Flo, director of Resource Management.

"What Fort Benning is attempting to determine is the most effective and efficient manner to get the DEH mission accomplished," he said. "In June 1986, a solicitation went out to private contractors to submit their cost proposals for the DEH mission, and it is this solicitation that has caused all of the confusion."



He said the solicitation process is based on the idea that if government is performing work that can be done in the private sector, then the Army should solicit contractor cost proposals and compare their costs against in-house costs, to make sure the Army gets the most for its dollars.

"The solicitation process is also designed so that the government can amend a solicitation for a contract proposal if there is sufficient cause," said Glenda Catrett, an analyst in the Commercial Activities office that prepares the solicitation for bids.

It is this option that has caused the current delay.

Col. Phil Harris, the director of DEH, who was not here when the June solicitation hit the street, asked that a new feasibility study be conducted.

Donations to local agencies top $500,000

DPCA

Military and civilian personnel employed by the Federal Government in the Columbus-Fort Benning-Phenix City area contributed a total of $563,654 ($551,180 net after costs) to agencies participating in last fall's Combined Federal Campaign.

Local United Way, $417,180 of which $66,425 was specifically designated to the various member agencies; National Health Service Agencies, $84,502 of which $73,663 was specifically designated; International Service Agencies, $28,167 of which $19,031 was specifically designated; National Service Agencies of which $19,969 was specifically designated, and to "write-in" activities that were not members of the number agencies — all of which is designated, $13,498.

The United Way will combine the funds obtained from the CFC with approximately $3 million dollars contributed during their campaign by all other civilian personnel and corporations in this area to support the following humanitarian organizations. It may be noted that the Community Activities Association is a member of the United Way and will receive approximately $200,000 to support community activities.

Convenience store now open 24-hours a day

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Mini-Mall convenience store recently "threw away the keys," because the management won't be locking it's doors anymore.

Since Feb. 28, the store operates on a 24-hours a day, seven days a week schedule. The store formerly opened from 7 a.m. to midnight, seven days a week.

According to Benjamin Parker, store manager, the Army and Air Force Exchange Service changed the hours to better meet the needs of the community.

He said that the store is right in the heart of several housing areas and with the all-day, all-night service, residents won't have to go off post in the middle of the night to get something they need.

"We were going to change the hours last summer but then we decided to just extend the hours instead," Parker said. "Now that we finally opted to stay open 24-hours a day, it was decided to do it now before summer set in so people could get used to the new hours." The peak profit period for the store is during the summer months he said.

The mini-mall convenience store is the only store on post open all of the time. "To my knowledge there is only one other store in the entire region open the same hours," Parker said, "and thats at Fort Bragg."

Parker said that no changes were made in the staff to compensate for the added hours. "We just made some scheduling adjustments and asked for volunteers to work the added shift," he said.

Parker said on the average about 200 extra customers were coming in during the weeknights and and an additional 600 during the weekend nights.

He said the hours change is a permanent one.

Tax volunteers win IRS award

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning Tax Volunteers are the best in Georgia and they were recently presented with the statewide "Best Military Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Award" to prove it.

According to Paul Williams, Internal Revenue Service Atlanta District director, the idea for the award came out in a workshop conducted in Atlanta. "We decided that an award would provide both incentive and recognition for excellence," he said.

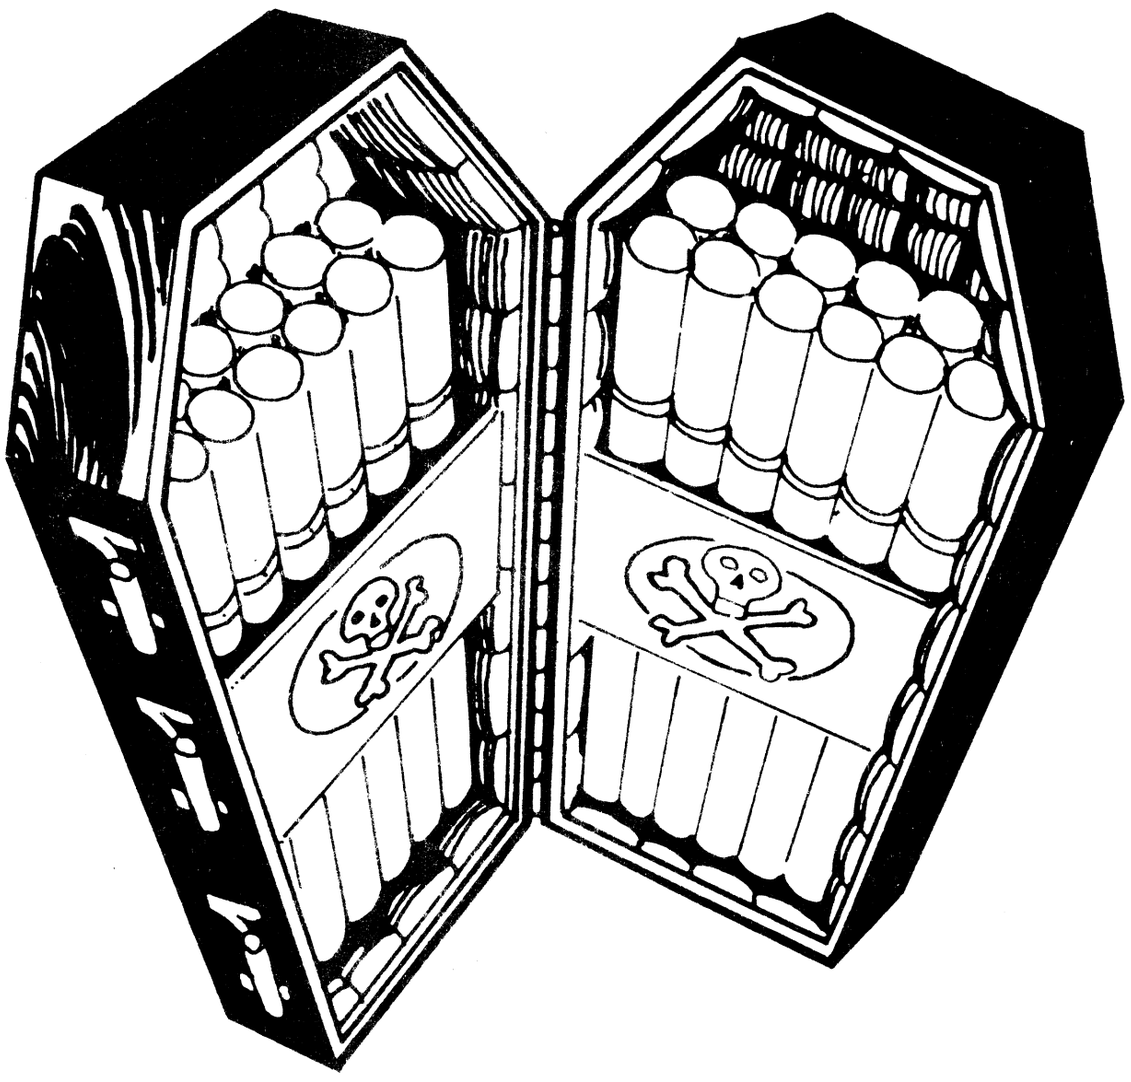
According to Capt. Gary M. Perolman, chief of the Legal Assistance Office on post, Fort Benning was selected from a field of 12 competitors.

The factors considered selecting process were planning and organization, publicity, control, identification of returns, reports and statistics.

Perolman said that the 90 volunteers in the Fort Benning program all attended a course presented by the Internal Revenue Service, assisted 1,515 taxpayers, and prepared 734 federal and 163 state returns last year.

Capt. Michael Totin, the 1986 Fort Benning Tax officer, was responsible for the overall success of the program, Perolman said.

"Capt. Totin, ran an excellant program," Williams said, "he was determined from the start to win this award for Fort Benning."



Williams attributed Totins success to the large amount of publicity he arranged to boost the tax assistance program and to the completeness of the reports he submitted to his office.

Researchers say smoking kills thousands each year

Army News Service

People are dying to quit smoking. Are you? For thousands each year the only release from the effects of smoking is death. That's not pretty, but it's a fact.

Researches have identified more than 20 poisonous substances in tobacco smoke, including arsenic, cyanide, carbon monoxide, formaldehyde and phenol.

Smokers suffer from about 22 percent more diseases than non-smokers, and require 10 percent longer to recover from illness than persons who don't smoke.

Don't kid yourself. Each cigarette injures your body.

Tobacco smoke also attacks "passive smokers," non-smokers who cannot escape from smoke-fouled air. A study of office workers trapped in air polluted by their smoking coworkers showed lung damage equal to that of smokers who consumed 10 cigarettes per day for 20 years.

A passively smoking spouse will suffer lung cancer more often than a non-smoker. Children with parents who both smoke have less healthy lungs, have more sick days during school, and are twice as likely to have pneumonia, bronchitis and tonsillitis than the children of non-smokers.

Danger from passive smoking begins in the womb. Women who smoke while pregnant increase the likelihood of infant death during birth or shortly thereafter.

Why do you think cigarettes are called "coffin nails"?

These facts frighten many away from conquering this killer. If you're scared, if you're tempted to deny that the problem exists, if you've resigned yourself to doing nothing for yourself or others because you believe there's nothing to be done, hang on.

There's hope. We have a plan for ourselves and those around us. We have an opportunity.

The military has declared war on smoking because of its effects. Remember, cigarettes declared war on us first. This is self-defense. Smokers and passive smokers, all of us, are in this together.

We're all dying to stop cigarette smoking in one way or another. We're dying to win the war on the effects of the weed. Aren't you?

Death comes in seconds when not wearing your seat belts

Safety Office

This is the slow-motion, split-second reconstruction of what happens when an unbelted driver crashes into a solid, immovable tree at 55 mph.

One-tenth of a second: The front bumper and chrome "frosting" of the grillwork collapse. Slivers of steel penetrate the tree to a depth of one and one-half inches or more.

Two-tenths of a second: The hood crumbles as it rises, smashing into the windshield. Spinning rear wheels leave the ground. The front fenders come into contact with the tree, forcing the rear parts out over the front door. The heavy structural members of the car begin to act as a brake on the terrific forward momentum of the two-and-a-half-ton car. But the driver's body continues to move forward at the vehicle's original speed (20 times normal force of gravity, his body weight is approximately 3,200 pounds). His legs, ramrod straight, snap at the knee joints.

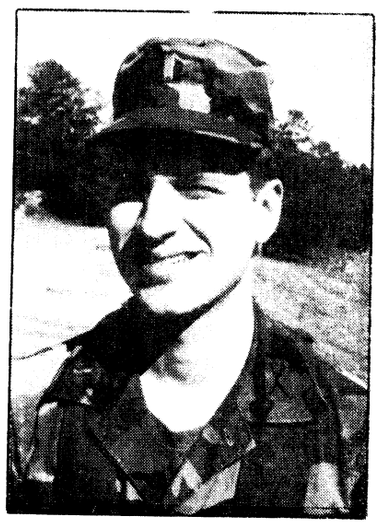
Three-tenths of a second: The driver's body is not off the seat, torso upright, broken knees pressing against the dashboard. The plastic and steel frame of the steering wheel begins to bend under his terrible death grip. His head is now near the sun visor, his chest above the steering column.

Fourth-tenths of a second: The car's front 24 inches have been demolished, but the rear end is still traveling at an estimated speed of 35 mph. The body of the driver is still traveling 55 mph. The rear end of the car, like a bucking horse, rises high enough to scrape back off [illegible] branches.

Five-tenths of a second: The driver's near-frozen hands bend the steering column into an almost vertical position. The force of gravity crushes his chest against the steering wheel, rupturing arteries. Blood spurts into his lungs.

Six-tenths of a second: The driver's feet are ripped from his shoes. The brake pedal shears off at the floor boards. The chassis bends in the middle, shearing body bolts. The driver's head smashes into the windshield. The rear of the car begins its downward fall, spinning wheels digging into the ground.

Seven-tenths of a second: The entire writhing body of the car is forced out of shape. Hinges tear, doors spring open. In one last convulsion, the seat rams forward, pinning the driver against the cruel steel of the steering shaft. Blood leaks from his mouth; shock has frozen his heart. The driver is now dead.



Ledger-Enquirer

Elapsed time: only seven-tenths of a second.

NTC: Soldiers develop most deadly weapon; knowledge of enemy gained in desert

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

When the 197th Infantry Brigade deploys to the National Training Center in August, it will be equipped with an improved weapon, slightly different from the conventional infantry, armor and artillery weapons. This weapon is simply a knowledge of the enemy gained through training with Fort Irwin's Opposing Force.

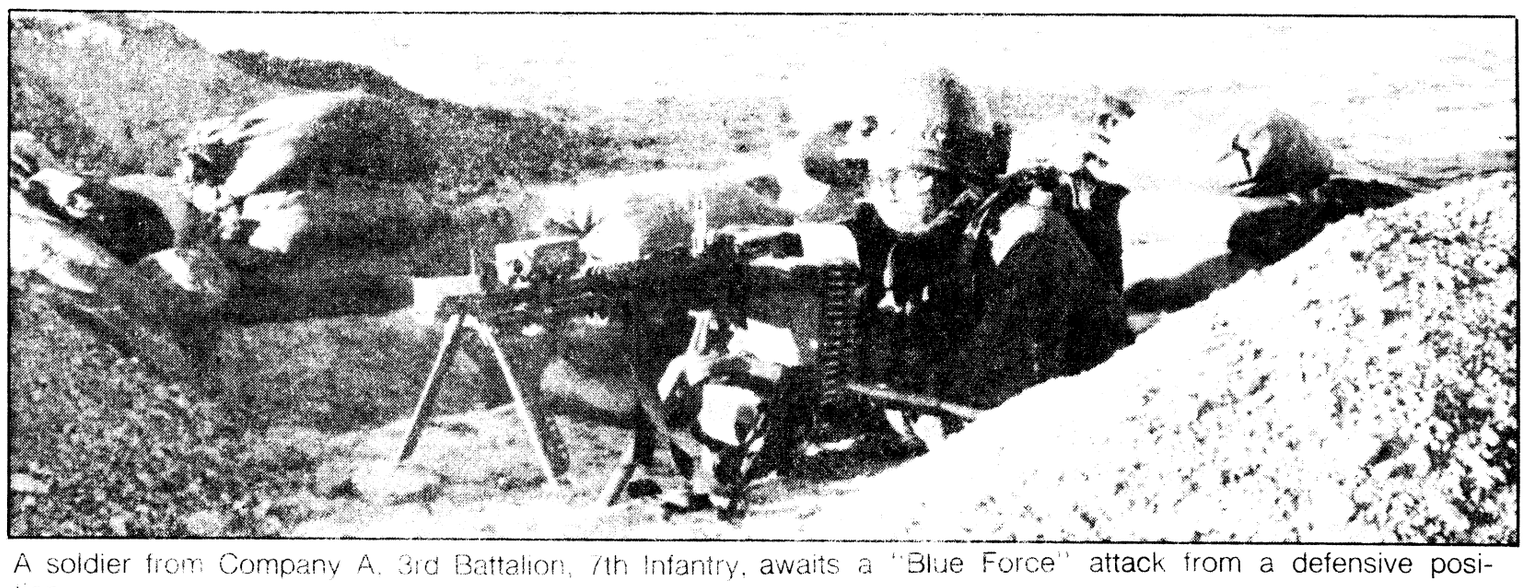
Several company sized units have deployed to the NTC to train with the OPFOR since the 197th's last rotation in February 1986. These units have learned and utilized the OPFOR's Soviet tactics during the desert training and have returned to Fort Benning to prepare for battle as the "Blue Force."

Infantrymen from Company A and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry and scouts from Troop A, 15th Cavalry recently returned from three-weeks of battle on the OPFOR's team. During the training the soldiers wore Soviet style uniforms, trained with Soviet vehicles and weapons, and practiced Soviet doctrine.

"The Soviet's main plan in an attack is to throw a mass movement of soldiers and machinery at the weakest point," said 2nd Lt. Earl Barthel, a platoon leader with Company A. "When in a defense, they try to channel their opponent into a kill zone."

"We learned that the most deadly weapon that the Blue Force has is artillery," Barthel said. "The Blue Force must utilize field artillery against dismounted troops and attack and kill tanks before the OPFOR attacks. Once the OPFOR tanks are disabled, the BMPs (Soviet Armored Personnel Carriers) are very vulnerable."

Barthel explained that Company A will return to the dessert with several plans to effectively battle the OPFOR.



A 197th Infantry Brigade soldier gets a warm welcome when she returns to Fort Benning after three weeks at the National Training Center.

Kelley Hill tackles Skills Qualification Tests

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Every year an important event takes place in a soldiers life, or so many NCOs and officers say, it is the soldirs qualification with their individual weapons.

Last week the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry of the 197th Infantry Brigade conducted weapons qualifications for their soldiers.

"Everybody from the Battalion Commander right down to the privates in each company must qualify with their individual weapons," explained SSgt. Carlos R. Avila, from the 3-7 S-3.

"Every soldier in the combat arms needs to qualify once a year at the minimum. Weapons qualifications is a mandatory requirement and is very necessary."

During the range week such weapons as the .45 caliber, M16 rifle, M60 machine gun, Dragon, and M203 grenade launcher were fired by 3-7 Infantry soldiers in order to become even more combat ready.

"The more you do something the better you get," said SSgt. Avila.

"The soldiers task is to eliminate the enemy, if we can not fire our weapons we can not do our our job. Firing on a range is not a hard thing to do, the soldier gets to go out and fire his weapon and do what they do best. Its kind of demoralizing to carry a weapon and not get to fire it. The soldier needs to have confidence in his weapon."

New computer gives artillery winning edge in fire fights

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Speed and accuracy is always a requirement when the field artillery receives a fire mission. The Tactical Fire Direction computer is a tool that the field artillery uses maintain timely and accurate fire support to the infantry.

The 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery is enhancing its ability to provide fire support to the 197th Infantry Brigade with a new TACFIRE system. The battalion recently received the computer and has begun the task of installing the equipment into vehicles and training the soldiers to use it.

"TACFIRE is not new equipment to the field artillery. Most soldiers are familiar with its use for Advanced Individual Training or experience with other units that had TACFIRE," said Capt. Thomas Lynch, from the 2-10 Field Artillery operations section.

A New Equipment Training Tean from Fort Sill, Oklahoma began basic sustainment training with 2-10 soldiers this week, in a TACFIRE simulation center located on Kelley Hill. The training will continue with hands on operation of the equipment and end in a battle field training exercise in May.

Developing the soldier's skills and knowledge of TACFIRE will benefit the battalion on upcoming developments to the National Training Center, as well as in support of the Infantry Center on Fort Benning.

29th Inf. Reg.

The United States Army Infantry Center and Fort Benning Safety Award, was awarded to the 29th nfantry Regiment and Weapons Department.

It was presented by Col. James R. Ellis, the chief of staff of the United States Army Infantry Center to Lt. Col. J.E. Stull, deputy commander of the 2th Regiment.

Elliscomplimented the unit on this outstanding achievement in the prevention of accidents, during thechief of staff meeting on March 5, which was colucted in the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment Motor Pool.

The safety award was earned by achieving the largest decrease in injuries and accidents for the first quarter (Oct. - Dec. 86), of fiscal year 1987.

It is a key award in the United States Army Safety Program and is designed as an incentive to ensure safety is achieved in Training, Combat and Production. — 29th Infantry Regiment

36th Engineer Group

Some vehicles from the 197th Infantry Brigade will have a new look near the end of this month, thanks to Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

According to SSgt. William M. Capps, platoon sergeant, soldiers from the second squad of the first platoon have been busily working to remodel the insides of five M577 Command Tracked Vehicles from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor.

This is the first time that the 43rd soldiers, whose primary Military Occupational Specialty is Carpentry, have ever done this kind of work, Cappssaid.

The soldiers have been building shelves, cabinets, nap boards and storage areas for the command vehicles, according to Capps.

The Company B soldiers should be finished aroundMarch 22 Capps said.

"Our soldiers were tasked to do this project after members of the 69th saw vehicles that had the same work done at Fort Knox," he said. — Shawn Bryson, 36th Engineer Group correspondent*

10th Mountain

The School Support Cycle concept came to the 10th Mountain Division, Fort Benning, in September 1986. As part of the brigade annual training plan, school support cycles are planned as a time for soldiers to work toward the Department of the Army educational goals.

These goals are high school completion or equivalent, the mastering of basic educational skills needed to perform duties of Primary Military Occupational Specialty, and college courses designed to offer personal and professional growth that lead to an Associate Degree.

The first School Support Cycle was for enlisted soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment and started immediately after the field exercise, Celtic Cross, in California. In subsequent sessions, enlisted soldiers of the 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment, were broken into two groups because of support requirements for an exercise in Panama.

There were 225 soldiers enrolled in Basic Skills Education Program classes during the School Support Cycle and 183 of those soldiers retested on the Armed Forces Classification Test.

Eighty-eight percent of the soldiers retesting increased their General Technical score on the AFCT with an average increase of 11 points. Seventy-four percent increased their GT score to 100 or higher.

Also, 30 soldiers passed the General Educational Development tests and received high school equivalency certificates for their home state or the State of Georgia.

There were 302 soldiers enrolled in college courses during the School Support Cycles. The men chose English composition, United States history, world history, college algebra, and math in general studies for 351 college course enrollments. These men are working toward fulfilling the Department of the Army goal to earn an Associate Degree or complete 60 semester hours in a field related to one of their specialties before the fifteenth year of service.

The soldiers of the 10th Mountain Division were encouraged to attend college classes and BSEP II instruction as full-time students. These educational opportunities supported the total Army goals that enhanced the quality of life and offered personal growth experience through career development and voluntary educational programs.

The cooperative effort on the part of the 10th Mountain Division, Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization, and education personnel produced three truly successful School Support Cycles. The lasting result of the educational cycles was the development of better soldiers and leaders.

Plummer and his men are committed to the premise that education is a life-long process. They are continually reaching for excellence and striving to achieve the Army Theme "Be All You Can Be." — 10th Mountain Division

Company B, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division graduated three COHORT soldiers from Ranger School in three different categories.

On Oct. 23, PFC Michael S. Huffman became the first COHORT private in the division to graduate from Ranger School.

"My NCOs taught me self discipline and encouraged me every step of the way," Huffman said. "I also was able to use what the unit taught me and apply it to Ranger School."

On Jan. 22, SP4 Gerald L. Gammon became the first COHORT soldier to become an honor graduate from Ranger School. "Dealing with the elements was the toughest part but I learned a lot," Gammon said.

When asked about how he felt about becoming honor graduate, he said, "I was happy I got it, but I wasn't really trying to get it. I had good people in my squad and platoon and we all worked together."

On Feb. 12, PFC Kenneth M. Sutton became the first Forward Observer in the Division to graduate from Ranger School. "The school opened my eyes on 11B tactics to include movements and ambushers," Sutton said. "Immediate action drills gave me an understanding on how an 11 Bravo reacts and how I can support him with indirect fire while he's under enemy contact."

Company B has had a total of eight soldiers graduate from Ranger School, at present there are three soldiers in each the Pre-Ranger Course and Ranger School. The company is currently 20 percent Ranger-qualified.

"We feel that the Pre-Ranger and Ranger School are the ideal places for teaching and testing leadership," said Capt. Tom McGrath, Company B commander. "Being co-located at Fort Benning has allowed the company to utilize the school to it's fullest extent. We always challenge our soldiers and they see Ranger School as the ultimate. They are lining up to go and we will send those who are ready." — Daniel Sullivan, Company B, 2-14th Infantry, 10th Mtn Div.*

During February, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division, had a Black History display contest within the battalion.

Each company planned and made a display that was judged by the battalion Command Sergeant Major, the battalion Executive Officer, and the battalion commander. Because of the high quality entries, no winner was declared.

The displays were placed throughout the battalion to increase awareness of Black History Month. Congratulations go to the following individuals for their work on the displays; A Co. - SSgt. Jerome Rowe; B Co - SSgt. Thomas Gerrits; C Co - Sgt. Terrence Smith and HHC - Sgt. Spencer Abrams and Pvt. Carlos Balams.

Currently, the Battalion is training and testing for the highly coveted Expert Infantry Badge. This is providing the Golden Dragons with good training for the upcoming squad Army Readiness Training Program in April.

The battalion will be going through its first company change of command, on March 27 at 10:30 a.m. in front of Building 3210 in Sand Hill. Capt. Christian K. Jacques assumes command of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, from Capt. Karl Miller. - — Christian K. Jaques, HHC, 2 - 14th Inf.*

Food Services

The atmosphere is customarily light, the prices moderate, and the food tasteful.

But when Fort Benning's top 11 cooks come together, preparing a ful course meal for competition, dining is divine.

Sgt. Gordie Smith, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment and Rolf Kiner, Rice Services Reception Battalion, took the grand prize honors with numerical averages of 72 and 74, respectively.

Each contestant had prepared a "Blue Ribbon" meal, where the menu consisted of lasagne, peas with mushrooms, chef's salad, garlic bread, and raisin cookies.

The cooks were scored on a 10-point system, where judges graded in categories ranging from flavor to correct serving temperature.

These cooks were selected from Cooking Boards which questioned them on their food preparation techniques.

The other military finalists were:
Cpl. Eduardo Cubero, 988th Military Police Activity
SP4 Celso Cruz, U S. Army School of Americas
Sp4 Wayne Zabala, 197th Infantry Brigade
Sp4 Nathaniel Bates, 36th Engineer Group
PFC Franklin Brown, HHC, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division

In the Rice Food Services competition, the finalist were:
Lovie Cook, Company C, 10th Bn, 2nd ITB
Mary Evans, Company B, 2nd Bn, 2nd ITB
Hattie Morgan, HHC, 1st Bn, 29th Infantry

Ground accidents decrease in first year of 'Safe Army 1990'

By Jeffrey D. Lindbald
Army News Service

In fiscal year 1986, the first year of "Safe Army 1990," the Army recorded a 10 percent reduction in overall ground accidents, to include measurable declines in all major categories under the heading of ground accidents.

Safe Army 1990, the Army's updated five-year safety program, documented 2,649 fewer ground accidents in fiscal 1986 than in the previous year. The largest reduction occurred in the major category of personal injury, with a 15 percent decrease.

Accidents among Army motor vehicles declined by a margin of 6 percent, its lowest in 12 years. This accident rate of 2.32 per million miles driven was better than the average rate of 2.93 for commercial carriers. Those involving combat vehicles went down by 5 percent, reversing an upward trend set in fiscal 1983.

"This is a significant accomplishment, considering Army motor vehicles operate over rough terrain in tactical conditions," said Maj. Gen. Donald E. Eckelbarger, director of Army safety in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at the Pentagon.

The past year also produced the lowest number of private motor vehicle accidents since fiscal 1980.

"The military private motor vehicle fatality rate of 17.5 per 100,000 military population in fiscal 1986 was better than the national rate of 19.1 per 100,000 civilian population," Eckelbarger said. He added that "this is particularly noteworthy, considering that more than half the total Army population is in the high-risk age group — under age 25 — for private motor vehicle accidents, compared to about one-fifth in the civilian population."

For the first time in 10 years, claims under the Federal Employees Compensation Act reversed course, measuring a 5 percent reduction. Fatalities resulting from accidents were down by almost 5 percent, disabling injuries dropped 17 percent, and total lost workdays claimed an 11 percent decline. Total accident costs achieved an about-face, recording an 8 percent drop.

Eckelbarger said, "The Army has just recorded the lowest number of accidents in five years and the best aviation record in the history of Army aviation. This commendable safety record is a direct result of a higher level of safety awareness throughout the Army."

"It's proof-positive that Army leadership, at all levels, is serious about safety, and that we are not just talking safety — we're doing it," he emphasized. "Today," he continued, "commanders at every level are demonstrating their care and concern for the welfare of the persons who make up our force and the total Army family. This includes improving safety in Army operations and in the workplace, as shown by the accident reductions of last year."

He stated further that "credit also belongs to all those in the field who have enthusiastically accepted and supported the Army's five-year Safe Army 1990 accident reduction plan. These safety gains greatly increase the combat readiness of the Army and are a positive indication that the Army plan is working'

"We're extremely pleased," said a spokesman for the Army safety office at the Pentagon. "During the first year of Safe Army 1990, the numbers of accidents were significantly decreased."

"We still face major chalenges in preventing accidents, but the figures show that safety is at the forefront of everyone's mind," he added.

"Much of the success shown so far in the program stems from the continuing leadership support and concern for safety of the soldier and Army civilian."

Support for the Army's safety program starts at the top with Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., "The Army's safety officer." His five-point safety policy sets the stage:

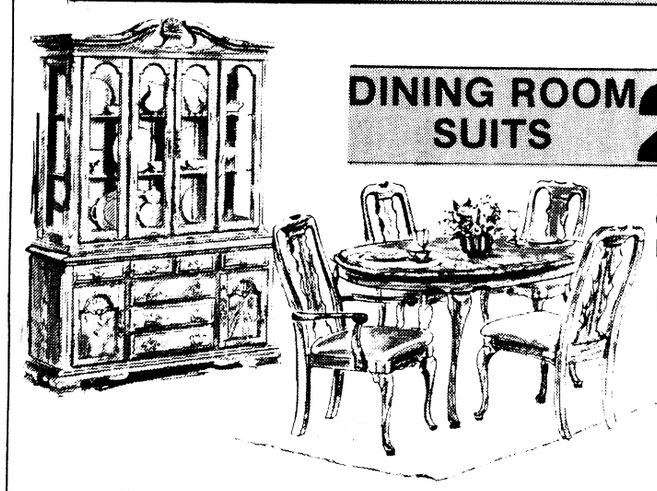
"● Nothing we do n peacetime warrants the unecessary risk of life or equipment.

● Commanders are my safety officers.

● Instill in soldiers a sixth sense of safety.

● Fix accountability.

● Be proactive and aggressive."



The spokesman explained that in his address to last year's convention of the Association of the United States Army, 'Wickham talked about Safe Army 1990. He also stressed several key safety topics at the four-star general and MACOM conferences. Safety is a much-talked-about topic and the Chief receives personal safety briefing on a quarterly basis," he added.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

Rape, regardless of the manner inflicted and the physical injuries, or lack thereof, is always emotionally traumatic for the victim. There is no gauge or means of measurement, but the pain is a matter of fact.

As was discussed in an earlier article, recorded rape victims range from 6 months to 90 years of age. They come from all walks of life and ethnic backgrounds. The common denominator is that they are innocent victims of a hideous crime. The pain and trauma is unfair, and will last with the victim for the rest of his/her life.

In a particular rape case, this author witnessed the traumatic effect on the victim. For obvious reasons, certain details of the incident will not be included in this article.

While guarding a prisoner in a military hospital emergency room, I observed an ambulance arrive, and a military policeman holding the hand of a patient who was being rushed into a attending physician. The victim was a 19-year-old wife of a service-member. She had been raped and beaten by more than one man while her husband allegedly watched and took photographs.

What struck me as odd was the dialogue between the victim and the military policeman. The MP was not much older than the victim, however, she was calling him "Daddy."

I watched in amazement as this young military policeman compassionately and wisely played the role she so desperately needed. She had reverted to her childhood, perhaps to the point in life where she was subconsciously the safest.

She had been beaten, but the physical damage was not as tragic as was the psychological trauma that she was experiencing and probably always will suffer.

Also, there may be another type of trauma involved. In the past, law enforcement agencies and court systems, comprised primarily of men who were ignorant to the wide range of problems associated with this crime, were calloused and even cruel to a woman reporting her rape. This has caused an estimated 50 percent of rapes to remain unreported.

Police agencies worldwide have become more professioal, thereby allowing a more educated approach to this delicate situation.

It is important for women to understand that we take great pride in our professional standards in the Military Police Corps , and trained personnel are on staff to assist the victim throughout the terrifying ordeal.

Because the conviction of the rapist is dependent on the cooperation of the victim, it is important for us to understand how to best protect the victim from unnecessary humiliation and traumatic relapse.

Ask the 'judge'

Provost Marshal

Q: A friend of mine has been talking about a buying club which he joined to get wholesale prices on items which he orders from them. What things should I take into consideration before joining?

A: First of all, examine the initiation charge. This is the amount that you will be charged by the company to begin using the service. It may be a very small charge, or it may be as high as $800 to $900. Some clubs make most of their money from large, upfront frees and then have little incentive to provide good price discounts to its members. The higher the fee, the more purchases you will have to make to begin saving money.

You can use basic math to figure out if you really benefit from using the service, for example: If you paid $500 to join a club and saved 25 percent on everything you bought, you would have to spend $2,000 before you would break even. If, however, you paid only $100.00 to join and saved 20 percent, you would only have to spend $500.00 in purchases to break even.

Be especially careful of clubs that use high-pressure sales techniques to get you to join. A truly reliable club will not usually put such pressure on its customers.

For additional information, contact the local Better Business Bureau or your Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281/3282.

Q: I bought a mobile home three years ago, with an APR of 17 percent. I want to buy a house now, and I want to sell the trailer. I called the loan company for a payoff amount, and they told me it was $8,000 more than the purchase price of the mobile home. I'm confused, because when I looked at my payment book, I saw that I had paid about $4,000 on equity on the trailer. That's a $12,000 difference. What can I do?

A: It's hard to say what rights you may have under the mortgage contract in question without seeing it, but situations like this are commonly encountered by soldiers.

You should contact the bank who is going to make your new home loan, and see what they think of the mortgage.

Additionally, you can set up an appointment with legal assistance,and have a lawyer review the documents.

Though a JAG would not be available to represent you in court on such matters, he or she might be able to explain the terms of the contract, and additionally refer you to the Better Business Bureau or the applicable State Banking Commission.

State laws vary, so you may have no recourse, or you might have a valid claim to set aside the contract or lower the interest. The legal assistance office could also refer you to a civilian attorney.

Harris cited poor performance work statements in the 1986 solicitation package as the reason for a new study.

"Only two results are possible from this feasibility study. We can contract out or keep a job in-house," Flo said.

Money is not the only factor to be considered in such a study. "The decision is based upon not only cost but also the technical ability of parties involved in the competition," he said.

In order to do a more up-to-date performance work statement, Fort Benning subsequently requested an 18-month extension to update the DEH solicitation. Approval for the extension has not yet been received, according to Harris. "We cannot afford to sit back and do nothing pending receipt of this approval for the extension," he said.

Flo said it is this effort to have an amended solicitation, based on more accurate and up-to-date data, that has delayed the original solicitation process, and not a desire by the Army to avoid contracting the DEH to private enterprise as implied by the story in Monday's Ledger.

Mrs. Catrett said her office is working full-time with DEH to obtain current work data and complete revisions to the solicitation.

"Then it will go back through the review process," she said.

The amended solicitation will be given to prospective bidders when the review is complete. A cost comparison between the "best contractor" proposal and the "in-house" proposal will then be done.

"Fort Benning will then make a recommendation to DA to award the contractor to the "best contractor" proposal or stay "in-house," whichever is most cost effective," Mrs. Catrett said.

About two-thirds of the current DEH work force would be affected if the directorate were contracted out, Flo said. The other one-third would be retained in administrative and quality control positions to monitor the work done by the civilian contractor.

Spiritual

Spiritual health needs to be tested along with physical fitness

By Philip R. Touw
MACH Chaplain

"Get on a health kick
Let it pour
Get on a health kick
Milk's got more"

The message is obvious. If you want to be healthy, drink milk. This popular advertisement works because people are so intensely concerned today with physical fitness and physical health.

Office talk, party talk and casual conversation seems invariably to turn to the racquet club, the health spa or how many miles you did on your last run or bicycle ride.

Thin is in; salad bars are thriving; "wellness" is a catch word of the '80's. And who would criticize this emphasis on physical health? We do need to take better care of our bodies.

But we are not only physical creatures; we are also spiritual beings who need to be as concerned about the state of our spiritual health as we are about our physical health.

Every six months the Army gives soldiers an opportunity to measure their physical fitness, but how do we measure our spiritual fitness? I would like to suggest three ways to test our spiritual health.

The first gauge of spiritual health involves our relations with other people. Charlie Brown, in the comic strip "Peanuts," once said: "I love the human race; its people I can't stand."

Sound familiar? How many people are you "not speaking with?"

What happens when someone offends you? Do you relieve those grudges and hatreds over and over again, each time exexperiencing the anger and pain of the initial insult.

Let me suggest some things that may help. Be patient! The old bumper sticker contains a catchy kernal of truth: "Be patient; God isn't finished with me yet."

Be accepting. We may want people to be like us or believe what we believe, but that may not be what is best for them right now. Accept people where and as they are; don't reject them because they may not be as we think they should be.

And finally, be forgiving. Peter asked Jesus how many times he was required to forgive. Jesus told him that forgiveness is not a matter of arithmetic, but of grace. God is gracious to us and reminds us to be gracious and forgiving with each other.

The second gauge of spiritual health involves how we deal with adversity. Scott Peck, in his book The Road Less Traveled, begins page one, line one with the words "Life is difficult." And it is.

How do you deal with those difficulties? One way is to trust. Job said: "Though you slay me; yet I will trust you."

I heard my daughter screaming one day. I ran to her and found her face to face with a large, tail-wagging dog. She was terrified. When she saw me, she turned and jumped into my arms and stopped screaming. The dog was still there, but she was no longer alone.

That is what trust in God is all about: knowing that I am never alone. Jesus said "I will not leave you as orphans; I will come to you." Yes, life is difficult; but

There's really no reason to swear; using profanity just shows ignorance

By David R. Penland
197th Infantry Brigade chaplain

To illustrate to a class of new basic trainees how certain behaviors can become so subtly interwoven in our unconcious actions — I asked the question, "How many of you believe that if you leave the military in two or three years you will be able to return to homes and civilian society much the same as you were prior to your enlistment — essentially unaffected by your stay in the Army?

A considerable portion of the class raised their hands. Without warning, I suddenly stiffened up and with a serious expression on my face called the class to attention.

Without hesitation, the entire group popped to the position of attention.

I then responded, "I rest my case." They all laughed of course, but I had made my point.

I said, "When I gave the command of attention, not one of your paused or acted undecidedly, not one of you said, 'excuse me Chaplain Penland, why did you do that?' You immediately and with urgency, assumed the stance of attention."

When I asked why they had all followed my order, they said, "You're our superior," or, "We thought a higher ranking officer had walked in."

I continued by saying, "Coming to attention on command, dropping for push-ups, replying 'yes' or 'no sergeant', doing a left-face or right-face, or heeding other orders has become such a deeply ingrained part of your mental processes, that you perform these actions almost without thinking.

These commands have become permanently impressed on your psyche, on your mind, to the extent that upon hearing the order, the doing has become automatic.

I further explained that much the same process takes place in the use of profanity. The use of crude and offensive language can become so entrenched in our thoughts, so imprinted on our minds, that we use it without thinking how repulsive, how unprofessional or immoral it is.

For years I have believed that one of the favorite profanations in the Army has been a word which begins with an "F" and ends with a "K".

No, it's not "fork" and it's not "firetruck". And to add extra impact — further force and exuberance to its utterance — the delicate and serene word "mother" is used as a preface. Sometimes, when even more clout is demanded, it becomes a "religious expression" when the name of the Deity is tacked on the heading.

At the conclusion of my own basic training experience in May 1972, at Fort Jackson, I went home with a friend who, though not in my platoon, had been in my company.

One night at dinner while he and I and the rest of his family were seated around the table, my friend very casually, and without thinking much as he would have in the mess hall, said in a very jocular manner as he looked at his sister, "Pass me the blank-blanking butter."

Well, his chin dropped. My eyes grew golfball size and my skin tone took on a bright vermillion hue. He was embarrassed and his mother was struck dumb.

But the point is, he had become so accustomed to using words of that vein, they had become so firmly implanted in his mind, that he could not longer consciously filter them out and catch himself before disaster had struck.

We have often heard doctors say, "We are what we eat." I think that it can also be said that who we are — the quality of our character — may to a large degree be reflected in the way we choose to communicate with others.

Lets look at some reasons why people use profanity.

First, it may be a habit which someone has acquired as a result of their environment — environment being the family setting or other social surroundings such as school or the military.

Second, there may be feelings of insecurity or inferiority which lead the individual to use profanity as a means of proving how bold or assertive they are. With men, this is an attempt to enhance masculinity. With women, it is an effort to say, "I can curse with the best of them," — a way of affirming their liberatedness.

Peer pressure is probably the most common reason for repeated use of vulgarisms.

For years, the military has lent credence to the myth that if you didn't cuss, you weren't leadership material and you certainly weren't "one of the guys" be you male or female. The unwritten and, I dare say, unspoken military code was whoever could drink the most, curse the most and "score" the most, was the leanest, meanest, greenest, toughest soldier on the block.

I am confident this animal-like, immature and simple minded philosophy is losing ground in today's Army.

If we cannot give instruction and communicate without using profanity, sexual innuendo and God's name in vain, then we are either guilty of a poor vocabulary, a vulgar mentality, or too weak-willed to refuse the social pressure of those who speak profanely around us.

There are many ways we can express amazement, anger, frustration or displeasure without resorting to gutter-language.

One of the things which separates us from the beasts is our human capacity to articulate and convey our thoughts. We have a beautiful language, but if we debase our language and ourselves by constantly communicating filth, then we have become awfully short-sighted people — controlled by, rather than mastering our speech.

The word soldier should be equated with pride, professionalism, patriotism and moral integrity — not swearing and swaggering.

LUPUS HAS EXISTED FOR CENTURIES
While it is known that the writer Flannery O'Conner died of lupus and it is presumed the poet Emily Dickinson also suffered from the disease, prior to the nineteenth century, lupus was not well understood by the medical community. Yet, today, many believe Hippocrates may have been the first to describe lupus in the medical literature as far back as 400 B.C.
If lupus has existed for that long, isn't it about time we found the cure and cure?

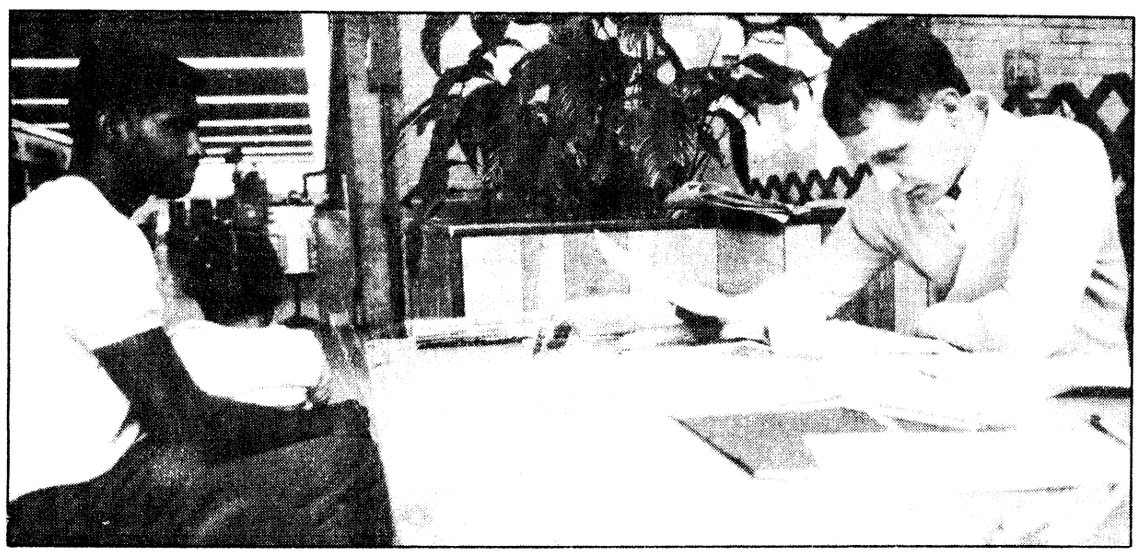
Booth at main mall offers free tax help for military

By Ann M. McDonald
The Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Legal Assistance Office recently set up shop in the Main Exchange to assist soldiers, family members, and retirees with their income tax troubles.

According to Capt. Jessica Kole, Installation Tax Officer, this is the first year that tax assistance personnel have gone out into the field so to speak. She said all of her people were trained by the Internal Revenue Service and were fully qualified to offer tax advice and fill out forms.

"People were waiting for us when we came in this morning," she said "and they all seemed really grateful that I or one of my assistants could help them fill out their taxes and answer their questions."



We actually filled out about 50 peoples tax forms," Kole said, "which takes between 15 minutes to a hour depending on what form is used."

Many other people just stopped by to ask questions and to pick up forms Kole said.

"I really think we've been successful with this program," she said, "most leave us with happy faces but some leave with a frown when they have to pay the government some money."

"Since we started doing taxes this year we have saved people over 7,000 dollars," Kole said, "we got this figure by tabulating how much a person would have to pay someone to do their taxes."

They will set up a booth at the Exchange one more Saturday before the Apr. 15 deadline.

Blood, it can be argued, is the body's most essential ingredient. The American Red Cross, which is the world's largest collector of voluntarily donated blood, estimates that an average of 45,000 units of blood are needed daily for sick and injured persons. "The need for blood never ends," it states. "The demand is continuous and there is no substitute."

The quiz below is designed to how how aware you are of the importance of blood in your body. It's not a pass-or-fail test. No matter what your score, call your Red Cross chapter and go in to donate. There is always a need for blood.

1. A typical adult has approximately 10-12 pints of blood in the body: (a)True (b)False.

2. Blood supplies oxygen, water, and nutrients to all cells of the body: (a)True (b)False.

3. It is estimated that blood can make one complete cycle through the circulatory system in approximately one day: (a)True (b)False.

4. Blood is composed of four parts — red cells, white cells, platelets and plasma: (a)True (b)False.

5. If a person is ill and needs a transfusion, he or she must be given all four parts of the blood — red cells, white cells, platelets, and plasms: (a)True (b)False.

6. The most common blood disorder is leukemia: (a)True (b)False.

7. The main function of red cells is to transport oxygen from the lungs to the tissues and to transport carbon dioxide from the tissues to the lungs: (a)True (b)False.

8. The main function of platelets is to control bleeding: (a)True (b)False.

9. The main function of white cells is to fight infection and help develop immunity: (a)True (b)False.

10. If blood is in short supply, animal blood can be used for human transfusions: (a)True (b)False.

11. Since scientists have discovered a method to make artificial blood, there is no longer any reason to donate: (a)True (b)False.

12. When a person donates a unit of blood, the body replenishes the lost bluid in five days: (a)True (b) False.

ANSWERS:

1(a). 2(a). 3(b) It takes blood approximately 24 seconds to make a complete circuit of the body. 4(a). 5(b) It is wasteful and frequently harmful to burden a patient with parts of the blood that are not needed. 6(b) The most common blood disorder is anemia. 7(a). 8(a). 9(a). 10(b) Cells and plasma proteins injected from one species to another act as a foreign protein causing violent reaction or death to the recipient. 11(b) There is not now nor in view a substance that can perform the many functions of blood in the body. 12(b) It takes only 24 hours.

Conserving fuel still necessary

By Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

The history of the United States clearly demonstrates our dependence on natural resources to forge a higher standard of living for ourselves. For hundreds of years we relied on wood for cooking and heating. This resource was plentiful and renewable.

With the onset of the Industrial Revolution we changed to coal to meet our energy needs. By 1880 coal production surpassed wood as our primary fuel. Coal served us well until about 1950.

At that time we changed again, this time to oil and natural gas. We didn't change because coal supplies were getting scarce. Coal makes up about 90 percent of the United States energy resources.

We changed because oil and natural gas were cheap and plentiful as well as convenient to use and easy to transport.

Our demand grew faster than our ability to produce oil, so we turned to imports to make up the difference. Our dependence on imports led to the oil embargo problems experienced in the 70's.

These problems resulted in may new programs to reduce our dependence on foreign oil. To date we haven't been very successful.

In 1973 we were importing about 35 percent of our oil supplies. Today we are importing about 50 percent. This makes us even more vulnerable to oil embargoes.

In one hundred years we have switched from a renewable fuel to almost total dependence on non renewable fuels.

At current rates of consumption natural gas reserves will last 20 years and oil reserves 30 years.

We are in the precarious position of haveing 5 percent of our known energy reserves (oil and natural gas) supplying 75 percent of the energy we consume.

We cannot continue indefinately under these conditions. Something must change, either with our direction or without it. We must shift our demand to coal where we have large reserves.

However it will take time to build new plants and retrofit existing plants to use coal. New forms of renewable energy such as nuclear fusion and solar must also be perfected.

What will carry us through this period until new energy forms are ready? The answer is conservation.

We must realize that everyone not actively supporting the energy program is in reality working against it. There is no middle of the road.

Emphasis on safety leads to poster contest

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

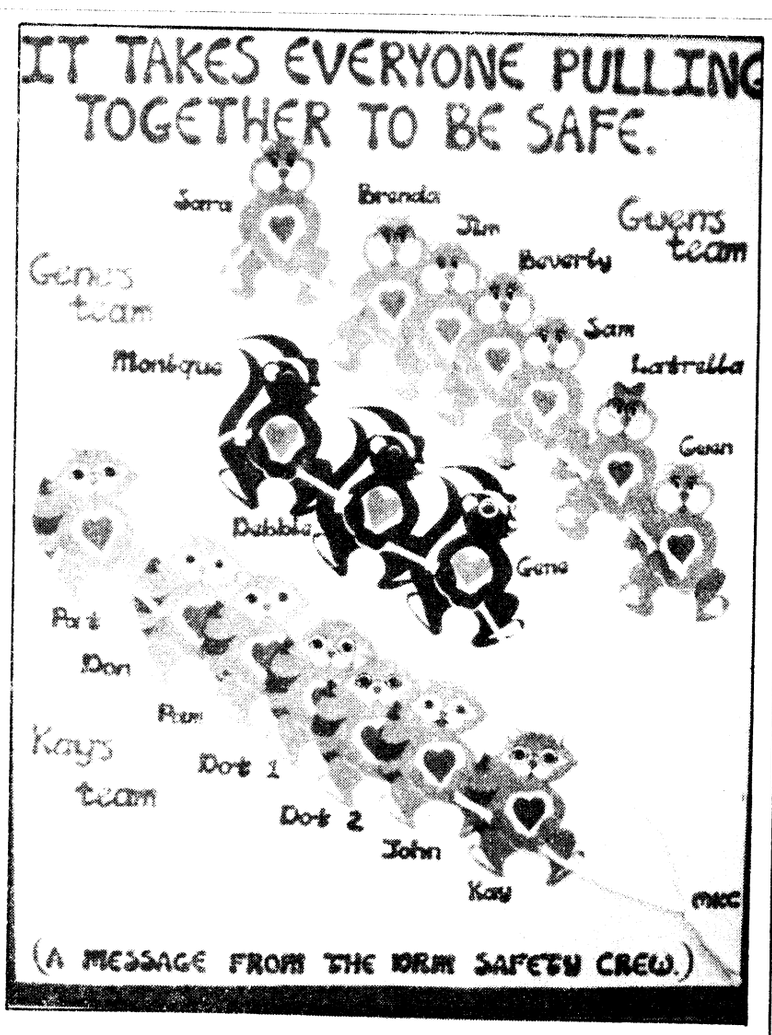
The Director of Resource Management has implemented a new safety program which will include a quarterly safety contest.

According to Monique Cholek, from Director of Resource Management, the directorate has been broken down into twenty sections and the winning section each quarter will win free lunches. Judging will be done by a group of safety committee representatives.

Cholek said the criterion for the selection of the winner includes five different areas and points are accumulated in various ways. These are:

1. Accident on or off the job, causing lost time from work immediately eliminates that section for the quarter.

2. Safety speaker or video tape: outside speaker - 20 points; DRM speaker - 10 points and video tape - 20 points.



3. Inspection checklist: members of the safety committee will conduct inspections of electrical wires, fire hazards, smoking areas, etc., with a standard checklist and the number of points awarded depends on each items, for a possible total of 20 points.

4. Poster or decal: each section will display a safety poster. Posters will be judged on content and originality, not necessarily artwork and can earn up to 20 points.

5. Input to newsletter: a DRM safety newsletter will be published each quarter to announce winner of contest. Articles and cartoons submitted and approved by commitee will be included, and can earn up to 20 points.

Bonus points will be awarded for the following: safety hazards corrected - 5 points; safety suggestions submitted - 1 point; safety suggestions approved - 5 points and best poster - 10 points. Other items approved by committee (making video tapes, computer safety game, etc.) can earn up to 10 points.

"We are trying to do our part to make Fort Benning a safer place," Cholek said, "and this contest is giving our people more of an incentive to do so."

Court report

Provost Marshal

Automatic teller machines ae becoming increasingly prevelant both in Columbus and in Fort Benning. Unfortunately, the number of thefts from the machines by Fort Benning soldiers are also increasing.

Another in a long string of teller machine cases was tried at the Fort Benning main court-room last Wednesday. As in virtually every other case, when all was said and done, a promising military career was abruptly terminated.

On Dec. 8, Lt. Cary Lucas dropped his wallet in the Briant Wells Field House parking lot. Lucas' military I.D. card and his Columbus Bank and Trust automatic teller machine card were in the wallet.

The wallet was found by SSgt. Gilbert C. Armstrong, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment/ Weapons Department.

Rather than return the wallet and its contents, Armstrong chose instead to use the automatic teller machine card to steal money. Armstrong correctly guessed that the last for digits of Lucas' social security number were the secret code numbers needed to use the card.

Armstrong memorized the numbers from the I.D. card and took the automatic teller machine card to a bank in Columbus. There, Armstrong used the card to withdraw $350 from Lucas' account at an automatic teller machine.

It is almost impossible to steal money from an automatic teller machine without being detected. Armstrong was on orders to report to Germany in February. However, he was caught in January, after he had already signed out of his company on PCS leave.

Armstrong was immediately flagged and his company commander preferred charges against him. He was tried by a special court-martial on March 10. Armstrong was convicted of stealing Lucas' automatic teller machine card and the $350.

Col. Sebert L. Trail, the military judge, sentenced Armstrong to be reduced from E-6 to E-1, to forfeit $438 per month for two months and to be punitively discharged from the service with a bad conduct discharge.

REENLIST.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

"OUR NEW ARMY HOUSING IS NICE TO COME HOME TO. IT WAS WORTH THE WAIT."

SFC Ron Rhodes and his wife Connie.

"It sure didn't take us long to get comfortable in our new house here at Fort Polk. Connie loves the size and lay-out. Ronnie-Lee loves the playground. And there's even room to store my boat.

"We love our quarters. This house has been very important for us in making a good home.

"Because we're in the Army, people may not expect us to live this well. But the Army has changed a lot in the past five years. It's a good place to live, to be.

"Connie and I feel that the Army's really come a long way in housing and, you know, in taking care of its people."

The overall quality of quarters on posts throughout the Army continues to improve. And housing starts and renovations are at an all-time high. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

ARMY FAMILY.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Program trains caregivers, ensures kids get quality care

By Ann Keays
TRADOC OCPA

FORT MONROE, Va. — If you could select the ideal person to care for your child in your absence, what personal qualities would you look for?

Warmth, caring, maturity, stability, sense of responsibility, good moral character, good health, patience, well-rounded education, and honesty might be some of the characteristics you'd want to find in the person entrusted with your youngster.

But how can you find that person? And how much time will it take?

A new Army program may have the answers for you. Known as the Family Child Care Program, this initiative provides trained and certified persons who care for children in their government quarters.

"We provide the training and they provide the service; it's a trade-off," said Harriett Holley, Family Child Care Specialist in the Family Support Branch -- Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Administration, and Logistics at TRADOC headquarters.

Holley said that persons interested in caring for children in their homes apply through their local Child Development Services on post. They fill out background information and are interviewed on their reasons for wanting to provide child care. Their spouses and other family members must also agree in writing that the potential care provider is involved in the program. They then undergo an extensive national agency background check. They must receive a positive clearance before they can become certified child care providers.

In addition, each potential provider is assisted with an individual education plan. Although they may have experience in fields such as teaching, child care, psychology, or nutrition, there are a number of classes and types of training that potential providers must attend before they can be certified as Army child care providers.

Among these special courses are first-aid training with a Red Cross manual for child care providers, cardiopulmonary resuscitation techniques, nutrition and balanced diet information, child development, and appropriate play-time and learning activities for young children.

Potential child care providers are also taught how to detect child abuse and how to use the reporting system to reach the appropriate authorities.

Since Family Child Care is a professional business, and a contract is signed between the care providers and the parents, a class is given on how to make out a contract, said Holley. Liability insurance coverage for FCC providers is also explained.

The background check and certification procedures take at least six months, said Holley.

Other measures to ensure that the potential child care provider is acceptable for the FCC program include safety inspections of the quarters by the fire department and post safety office, and visits by the preventive medicine office. Homes must pass certain standards of cleanliness and orderliness, Holley said.

Specified areas for play-time activities must be large enough that children can comfortably and safely move about. FCC staff members even advise on furniture placement in providers' homes, Holley said.

After the child care provider is certified and placed on a referral list for parents, a concentrated effort is made to match the right provider to the right child and parent.

If a parent has an exceptional child who requires special care, the FCC staff provides names of certified providers who have expertise in the required area.

Spirit

somehow, with God, we are able to endure the difficult times and to grow because of them.

Another way of dealing with adversity is to accept the present situation as it is. On my office wall is a prayer which I am sure most of you have seen or heard. "Lord, grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, the courage to change the things that I can change, and the wisdom to know the difference."

Some of the tragic, painful circumstances in my life I simply cannot change, and as difficult as it is, I need to accept that fact. I frequently need to remember God's command: . . . "Be still, and know that I am God."

Finally, we can measure spiritual health by asking how we use our financial resources. I do not believe that is a virtue to be poor; nor is it a sin to be rich. The basic issue with financial resorces involves not amounts, but perspectives.

Clovis Chappel, the famous Methodist preacher told a story of two river boats on the Mississippi River in the 1850's. They were racing from New Orleans to Memphis. The older boat slowly started to fall behind.

The Captain of the slower boat, whose boat was carrying a cargo of meat, ordered his first mate to throw the fattiest meat into the broiler fire. It worked. The old paddle-wheeler increased steam, pulled ahead and beat the newer boat to Memphis.

When the cargo owners came to the dock, however, they found that most of the cargo of meat had ended up in the fire. The captain had won the race but lost the cargo!

That reminds me of what Jesus said: "What do you profit if you gain the whole world, but lose your soul?"

Tough question. Spiritual health and our use of financial resources is a matter of perspective.

How healthy — spiritually — are you? Next week I'd like to share some ideas with you about how we can improve our spiritual health.

Q&A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I am planning to buy a new home in the $150,000 to $175,000 rage. I understand that the VA limits the amount that can be borrowed. Is this true?

A — The VA has no limit on te loan amount it will guarantee, except that the loan cannot exceed the VA appraised value. The lender determines the loan amount based on the lender's guidelines for VA loans and the financial status and credit worthiness of the veteran. Most VA leaders wil require a downpayment on loans that exceed $110,000.

Q — I have an indebtedness to the VA due to a home loan default in 1978. Can I still apply for a waiver of this debt?

A — Yes. There is no time limit for waiver requests on home loan debts.

Man loses everything before facing drinking problem

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

George Neely is celebrating an anniversary.

It's not a wedding anniversary. His marriage ended long ago.

This is an anniversary of abstinence; abstinence from alcohol. George Neely is an alcoholic and hasn't had a drink in 10 years.

Neely, a beefy, graying man, retired from military service in 1965 after 20 years in uniform, including five years in the Navy and 15 in the Air Force.

"While I was in the service, I began drinking every day and every weekend," he said. "When I retired I took a civilian job and kept drinking."

Neely then began jumping from job to job geographically, resigning before his employers could fire him for his excessive drinking habits.

"I had five jobs between 1965 and 1977 and lost all five because of drinking. I was an alcoholic and if I didn't drink I would physically hurt," he said.

In 1976, he was hospitalized for alcoholism and high blood pressure after having missed two days work from being drunk.

"There were a lot of Mondays that I couldn't go to work. I had turned to hard liquor and was drinking a quart of whiskey a day and two or three on the weekends," Neely said. "In 1976 I was introduced to Alcoholics Anonymous and spent 30 days in the hospital drying out."

The reformed alcoholic said he frequented AA but began dropping off and in October 1976, he went back to drinking.

He was again admitted to the hospital but refused to acknowledge he was an alcoholic.

"On Jan. 23, 1977, I had been drunk for three days. I went to a Veteran's Administration Hospital and checked in. The doctor who examined me was disgusted and said I should be sent to the mental hospital in Milledgeville, Ga.," Neely said. "I was vomitng blood and passing it through my urine. I stayed in the hospital until Feb. 2 and then was released to return to work. Between the hospital and home I got drunk."

Neely was married and, according to him, the relationship had fallen apart due to his drinking.

"I would tell my wife I was going to quit and when I did, she'd be on pins and needles waiting for me to start again, which I always did. It was terrible for my son, too," Neely said. "I would promise to take him fishing on a Saturday but on Friday I would get drunk. then I'd wake up on Saturday at about 1 or 2 a.m. and start drinking again. Of course, there would be no fishing trip."

After his marriage became a shambles, he moved into an apartment and on Feb. 14 he began going into delirium tremons, a state of temporary mental confusion and clouded consciousness resulting from intoxication. The dt's are characterized by anxiety, tremors, hallucinations, delusions and incoherence.

"I would get up, buy four to six bottles of whiskey, drink until it was gone and then buy more," Neely said.

On Feb. 20 he decided he didn't like his life and turned himself in to an Alcoholic Treatment Unit at a V.A. Hospital in Mississippi.

" I finally lost the desire to drink from that point forward," he said.

The program he entered was very strict, much like a basic training unit. First call was at 6 a.m. and each patient had to be dressed and have his or her area squared away by 7 a.m. The program was lasted 42 days and, in addition to daily counseling and therapy sessions, Neely began going to AA meetings and to church regularly.

"I began feeling good about myself for the first time in a long time. I even finished my high school diploma and good things started happening to me," he said. "My main realization was that I was an alcoholic and could never drink again."

Neely now works at Fort Benning and spends much of his free time as a counselor for alcoholics.

"The thing for alcoholics to realize is that they can't drink forever. Sooner or later, they're gonna lose their job anyway. There are only three ways out of alcoholism," he said, "death, insanity or sobriety."

Chart shows brain's response to alcoholic beverages

Hangover cure: eat snacks while you're indulging

By Angela J. Hare
Brooke Army Medical Center

FORT MONROE, Va. — Happy hour at a local club . . . you leave it feeling "happy," . . . everything's just great . . . until the morning after.

Hangovers are the pits, huh?

Good news — there is something you can do to lessen the severity and even eliminate the hangover effect. The secret is simple: give your body a break.

From the moment alcohol enters your body, it has top priority. Alcohol molecules are carried from the stomach through the bloodstream to the liver where they are broken down by an enzyme (alcohol dehydrogenase) and distributed to the body cells.

The liver can only metabolize one drink's worth of alcohol every hour and a half. When you exceed this amount, brain cells are especially affected.

The amount of alcohol dehydrogenase is higher in more frequent heavier drinkers. That is why they can handle more liquor before feeling the same effects as infrequent drinkers.

The initial effect or "high" comes from high blood-alcohol levels which work to deprive the body of blood sugar it needs for energy.

One drink is equal to one of the following: 12 ounces of beer, five ounces of wine, three ounces of sherry, 1 1/2 ounes of whiskey, or highball, or one cocktail.

If you are a social drinker, try one of these tips to reduce the harmful effects of alcohol on the body.

- Snack on high fat while drinking (potato chips, fried foods).
- Never drink on an empty stomach.
- Space your drinks 1 1/2 hours apart. Sip, don't gulp.

Make every other drink club soda or tonic with a twist.

More than 10 million people in the United States abuse alcohol to the point where their personal relationships, their jobs, and their health are impaired.

Even though it may seem that your body can get over a few hangovers, remember, years of continued abuse can lead to permanent tissue destruction. After all, your body's only human!

Test yourself for symptoms

The symptoms of alcoholism are:

- The alcoholic making promises to quit drinking and then breaking those promises.
- An increasing tolerance apparentally unaffected by larger amounts.
- Changes in personality.
- Denial or concealment of drinking.
- Drinking in the mornings or alone.
- Signs of drinking at work.
- Drinking becoming a daily necessity.
- Loneliness and isolation from friends and family.
- Living for the next drink.
- Personality changes.
- Poor health marked by tremors, hallucinations and weakness from malnutrition.

If you exhibit these symptoms, you may have a problem with drinking.

For help, call the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Program at Fort Benning at 545-2742 or 545-4821.

Research shows alcohol can hurt unborn children

By Joyce Champion
The Mercury

FORT MONROE, Va. — When a baby is in the womb, it receives its nourishment through the umbilical cord. Just as food nutrients pass through the lifeline, so does alcohol. If a pregnant woman has a drink, the unborn child has a drink also.

Fetal Alcohol Syndrome and Fetal Alcohol Effects are caused by alcohol abuse during pregnancy. It has been proven that the more a woman drinks, the more likely it is that her unborn child will suffer effects.

Not all babies born to alcoholic mothers have FAS. "The data suggest alcoholic mothers risk a 30 percent chance of having a baby with a severe form of the disorder," said Dr. Mark Stephen of Development Pediatric/Exceptional Family Member Program at Madigan Army Medical Center.

"The estimated frequency in the general population is about one to two per 1000 deliveries, which is quite significant," Stephen said. "That's just as common, for instance, as Down's Syndrome, which is considered the most common cause of mental retardation that we can diagnose."

Some studies have suggested that even moderate alcohol consumption is linked to spontaneous miscarriage during the second trimester of pregnancy. It has been found that between 15-27 weeks of pregnancy, women who consumed an average of two to three drinks daily have a three-and-one-half times greater risk of losing a baby than a non-drinking mother.

Babies with the full-blown FAS can be born small, reflecting slow brain development. Many have restricted motion of some joints and defects of the vertebral spine.

Even more moderate alcohol consumption during pregnancy may cause speech and language impairment. These babies can have problems with or without unusual facial features — and birth effects with or without mental retardation.

"It is estimated that one to three drinks per day during pregnancy will not cause the FAS, but certainly can have the effects on the fetus," Stephen said.

Literacy coalition offers help for adults who can't read

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

If you can read this, consider yourself lucky. If you have reached this point and have been struggling with the words for a few minutes then you may be one of the 23 million Americans who are functionally illiterate.

Functional illiterates are people who cannot read or write English well enough to cope in everyday life.

According to the 1980 Georgia State Census in Georgia alone there are a total of 1.5 million functional illiterates.

According to the census there are 28,781 people functioning at or below the 8th grade level in Muscogee, Chattahoochee, Harris, Marion, Quitman, Schley, Stewart, Talbot and Webster counties.

In the past year literacy has become a major topic in the U.S. and the Columbus community has hopped on the bandwagon to improve the quality of life for its' citizens.

Last year the CLIC, located at the Tillinghurst School Adult Education Center at 514 Morris Road opened up the Literacy Hotline to offer free reading instruction and in doing so opened books and doors for 300 people in the area.

According to Karl Roberts, director of CLIC, the Adult Education Center has been teaching Basic Reading for the past 15 years there has been a recent push that produced the hotline in September of 1986 and there are four major organizations involved in the hotlines program.

"Right now we have the Adult Basic Program, the Muscogee Area Literacy Association and the Columbus College Reading Clinic. In addition we have about 50 volunteers from the local group of the International Reading Association," he said.

If the number of students and volunteers is any predictor of the sucess of the program, then the hotline is in for a great year. "We have 220 tutors who are working and all of them have a student," said Kelly Martin, a teachers aid at CLIC. According to Ms. Martin, there are approximately 300 people attending sessions right now and many of the students commute to attend the classes.

"We have students from as far away as Buena Vista, Ga., and Pine Mountain. We have one man who drives in a couple of times a week from Auburn, Ala.," Martin said.

"The program was initially sponsored by channel 9, (WTVM TV 9), so we had people responding anywhere in the viewing area," Ms. Martin said.

Learning how to read or improving reading skills can begin with a simple phone call to the hotline.

"Someone will call here, that's usually the hardest step. They may feel a little embarassed, but once they've talked to someone they usually feel better," she said.

Once the person has made the initial contact, the caller is told about the two different programs available. "We have three classes a day from 9 a.m. to noon, from 1 to 4 p.m. and from 6 to 9 p.m. Each class has one teacher and volunteers to help out," Ms. Martin said.

Another program is designed for individual tutoring of students.

According to Ms. Martin the students range in age from 19 to 80 years old. "This 80 year old man came in and decided he wanted to learn how to read."

"We've got a lot of people making a lot of progress. We anticipate people getting jobs as a result of this program," Roberts said.

Anyone interested in volunteering as a tutor or wishing enroll in the program can call the Literacy Hotline at 682-2662.

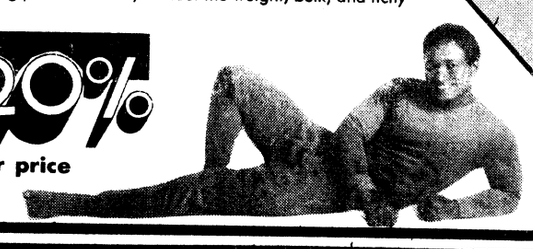
They have a two-burner propane stove and a sink. There are no refrigerators, but ice chests are available for rental also. In addition, if you really want to get back in the woods with one of these campers, we have portable generators available for power.

If the idea of "economy" doesn't appeal to you, but you don't want to tow a heavy camper, try out 14-foot travel trailers. They have an icebox, furnace, three-burner stove and air conditioning. The travel trailers sleep for people comfortably.



Campers can be reserved up to 30 days prior to your departure date. For more information, call the Equipment Check-Out Center at 545-7978. The center is open Monday through Friday, 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m., Saturday, Sundays and holdays, the center of open 8 a.m. to noon.

Youth soccer play kicks off

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet staff writer

The Youth Activities Scoccer League kicked off recently with 22 teams in the four division viaing for the "Gold".

In Saturday's action, the Sledgehammers blanked the Falcon, 3-0 in Termite Division play.

The Sledgehhammer scoring drive was led by forward Scott Kyser, who drove two points into the net.

Francisco Davila pinned down a score, assisted by the offensive stamina of Anthony Lane and Paul Maesta.

Though the Falcons continually threathened in a hard fought game, Sleghhammer goalies, Sergio Pedraza and Nahas, provided an impregnable goalline stance.

The 4-5 year-old Mighty Mites, the youngest of the Youth Divisions, featured the Bullets, who squeezed by the Kicks, 2-1.

The Kicks were firing shot-after-shot at the Bullets. But goalie Kevin Gallas was there to prevent what could have been a blowout.

The Bullets were on target with two shots, as Robert Brinke and Jenny Hollingsworth took careful aim.

The Grasshopper Division took the Field, as the Bluethunder tamed the Wildcats in a 4-0 shutout.

The Bluethunder's biggest roar came from John Quinn, who scored two goals in the contest.

Billy Wilson and Charles Carde also charge forward with scores, while Stephanie Burton, Keehu Day and Deadrick Ryan provided the defensive strength.

In the second half, Luke Clarke came off the bench to score three goals, assisted by Paula Wilcox and Bobby Ashbrook.

Jesse Thompson, Matthew Smith, Stephen McGuire, John Hernandez, Deumus Maley, And Deniece Lester added teamwork to the Firebirds first victory.

Only two more weeks left to get in shape, register

By Janice Connolly
Race Chairman

Only two more weeks until the OWC Festival of Running Apr. 4. Unit registrations are coming in at a fair rate.

Remember, company commanders, the formation run is for you and your troops. The guidons from each participating copany will be displayed in Doughboy Stadium after you complete the run.

Companies are eligible for awards in many categories -- don't be in a position to kick yourself after race day for not beating the drum well enough to have your unit well represented.

The festival t-shirt is going over great in those units that have seen a sample prior to registration. Some troops are getting extra shirts for wives, husbands, boyfriends or girlfriends -- get a matching set.

Team registrations are not going so well. We don't want to have any medals left over so check around your office, unit, social or business group for amateur or experienced runners.

This year we have team events for both the 5k and 10k runs. You can enter one of 6 categories for each distance. Thirty-six teams can be recognized (first, second and third in each category for each race).

Tell us if you're entering as an all male, all female, or mixed (include at least two females) teams in the open (military, civilian, or combination) or all military divisions.

You probably won't have to find six world class athletes to do well in some categories of the team competition.

The 1/2-mile kids run seems to be well-received. We'll try to make this a true "fun" run with each child being recognized regardless or order of finish.

The 1 mile run and 5k walk registration is OK but we think there are a lot of "late" entrants out there. Ladies, this is a good chance to get your groups involed.

Where are the "stroller brigades" for the 5k walk? Youth Activity sports teams and school groups should be taking advantage of this great opportunity to relax together.

197th soldiers vie for spot on team

Soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade recently tackled a muddy orienteering course to vie for a spot on the 197th Infantry Brigade's team.

But whether they made the team or not, the soldiers got quite a workout running the course.

According to Capt. Henry Huntley, from the 197th Brigade Headquarters operations section, "orienteering is a physically demanding sport that tests the endurance, stamina and land navigation skills of soldiers. This is a sports program that is essential to the functions of a soldier."

The top five competitors in the Brigade competition will represent the 197th in the team competition of the USAIC Orienteering Championships next week. The Brigade's team members are SSp4 Kent Miles, SSgt. Obdulio Arvelo and SSgt. Oscar Barnes, from Troop A, 15th Cavalry; and 1st Lt. Edwin Pryor and Sgt. Steve Sutter, from 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry. — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Bowling tourney results announced

Second Battalion, 14th Infantry Golden Dragons First Teams held a bowling tournament on March 5 at the Main Post Bowling Lanes.

The four company teams had seven men teams that bowled two games each.

After a tight struggle for the first place team, A company pulled through to win the bowl off by 6.5 pins. The winning team consisted of 2 Lt. Alan Clark, Cpl. David Proegler, SP4 Charles Robeson, PFC Roert Baranti, PFC Stephen Baker and Capt. Chris Jaques.

For many of the bowlers, this was the first time they had bowled. This made it for everyone. The next bowl off tournament will be between the HHC Fist Tms and the battalio 81mm mortar platoon. — Christian K. Jaques, A Co, 2 - 14th Inf.

Woman likes challenge of running in marathons

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

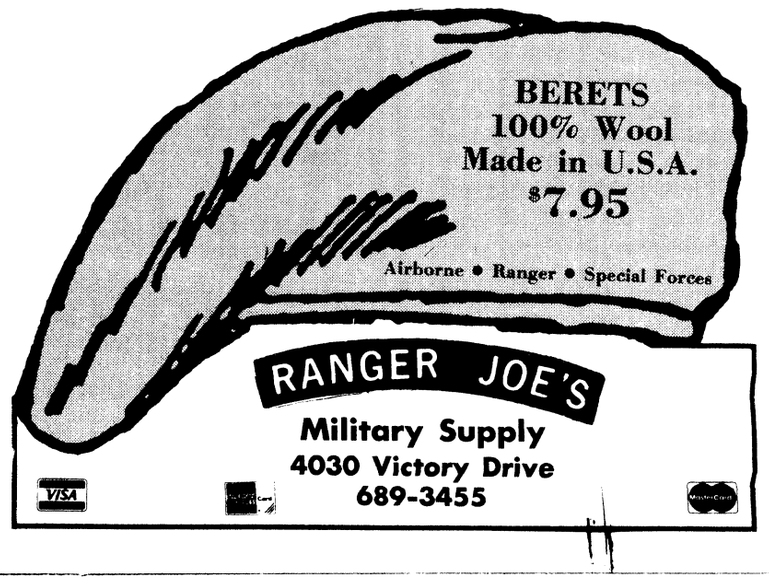
The woman displays her desire to never stay in one place for very long as she sits on the edge of her chair, hands fidgeting, as if boredom is setting in.

It is therefore fitting that, looking as though she might dart off at any moment, PFC Christine Goetz talks of her inability to stay put in one place for great lengths of time.

Goetz, the mail clerk of the 533rd Transportation Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group is a woman on the move in more ways than one. She is one of Fort Benning's most active runners.

"I have been running all my life. I love running and I run about seven miles every day," Ms. Goetz said. She describes herself as a loner, usually training alone. "Whenever I run with someone, I usually can't go at my own pace, so I prefer to run by myself."

A sense of pride flushes her face as she speaks of her last year in competitive running. "I've only been competing for a little over a year, but I race nearly every weekend. I've run in more than 40 races since I came to Fort Benning," she said.



Recently, Ms. Goetz placed second over all in the Fountain Run in Columbus, and first overall in a Carrollton, Ga., marathon.

A member of the Columbus Track Club, Ms. Goetz travels all over the state in order to race in half and full marathons. "I've done very well in most of the races," she said. "I've place first several times in women's overall competition. It's just a lot of fun for me and my desire to run comes from inside," she said.

It's obvious that age don't always matter in running as Goetz, at 35, does as well as most of the younger women.

"I'm not a flashy runner though. All I need is a pair of shorts, shoes and raggedy T-shirt and I'm fine," she said.

She'll probably never run out of T-shirts as she gets one from every race she runs as well as a wide assortment of trophies and plaques, which she modestly displays in her room.

Three soldiers killed last week in accidents

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Three Fort Benning soldiers were killed in auto accidents this month, Mar. 12 through Mar. 19, after the post had recorded no deaths for fiscal year 1987.

Dead are SFC Randall L. Williford, Pvt. 2 Danny Fulton and PFC Robert Sloop.

Williford, 29, was the platoon sergeant of the Ranger Support Element at the Ranger School's Mountain Camp at Dahlonega, Ga. He died Mar. 12. of a heart attack brought on after a truck he was working on fell on him.

"Williford had his truck jacked up on a single automobile jack which provided little stability. He was under the truck and attempted to loosen a bolt holding the right front spring of the truck. This jolted the vehicle and caused it to fall off of the jack, pinning his head and neck between the tire and wheel well," said 1st Lt. Joshua Epps, the officer who investigated the accident and Williford's platoon leader.

According to Epps, a friend found Williford pinned under the truck and called for help. Sloane, assisted by others at the scene, lifted the truck off of Williford but could not get him out from under the truck. They then jacked the truck up, successfully pulling Williford free.

"Sloane saw Williford was unconscious and began administering cardio-pulmonary resuscitation," Epps said. "An ambulance arrived and rushed Williford to St. Joseph's Hospital in Dahlonega where he was pronounced dead on arrival."

On Mar. 18 Pvt. 2 Danny Fulton died in an auto accident. According to a Columbus Police Department report, Daryl Parker was driving westbound on Victory Drive in a 1970 Chevrolet when he ran through a red light. Parker rammed into the right passenger side of a BMW in the intersection driven by PFC Troy Boston.

Upon impact, Boston's car hit the street curb and flipped over, throwing 18-year old Fulton, a back-seat passenger, out of the car. Fulton landed in the westbound traffic lane 30 feet from Boston's vehicle. Boston, who was wearing a seat belt, crawled from the vehicle. Fulton, who was not wearing a seat belt, died of massive head injuries after being taken to the Columbus Medical Center.

In a third death, PFC Robert Sloop, a 25-year old 29th Infantry Regiment soldier, was killed on Mar. 19 after Hyun Kyung Kim, a civilian, ran a stop sign at the intersection of Luna and Amber drives in Columbus.

Fred Young, post safety manager, said "Half of all vehicle accidents occur at intersections. People have to drive defensively and be constantly alert."

Women help police nab robbery suspect

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

When Deborah Brown and Eddie Jean Lunsford made a recent stop at the drive-in window of a local bank, it could have been straight from the set of "Charlie's Angels." That's because during their trip they helped capture an alleged bank robber.

Mrs. Brown, who is married to a lieutenant assigned to Fort Benning, said, "We were in the car at the drive-in window, and I was just getting ready to give the teller my check when Eddie noticed the teller acting strangely."

Miss. Lunsford said, "I saw the teller pop up then pop back down, and I remember thinking something was wrong."

Right after that the teller said,"You'll have to go to another bank, we've just been robbed; call the police!

"At that moment our only thought was, 'get to a phone,'" she said.

When the girls pulled out of the driveway, they saw the alleged robber. "He had two garbage bags in his hand and a windbreaker on and we saw him throwing his mask off," Mrs. Brown said. "He was so unassuming looking that I had a feeling we could get him, so I told Eddie to hit him."

Miss Lunsford said,"Deb kept telling me to hit him but at the last minute I couldn't so I skidded to a stop."

At that moment Mrs. Brown, clad in a skirt and penny loafers, jumped out of the car and took off in hot pursuit of the man.

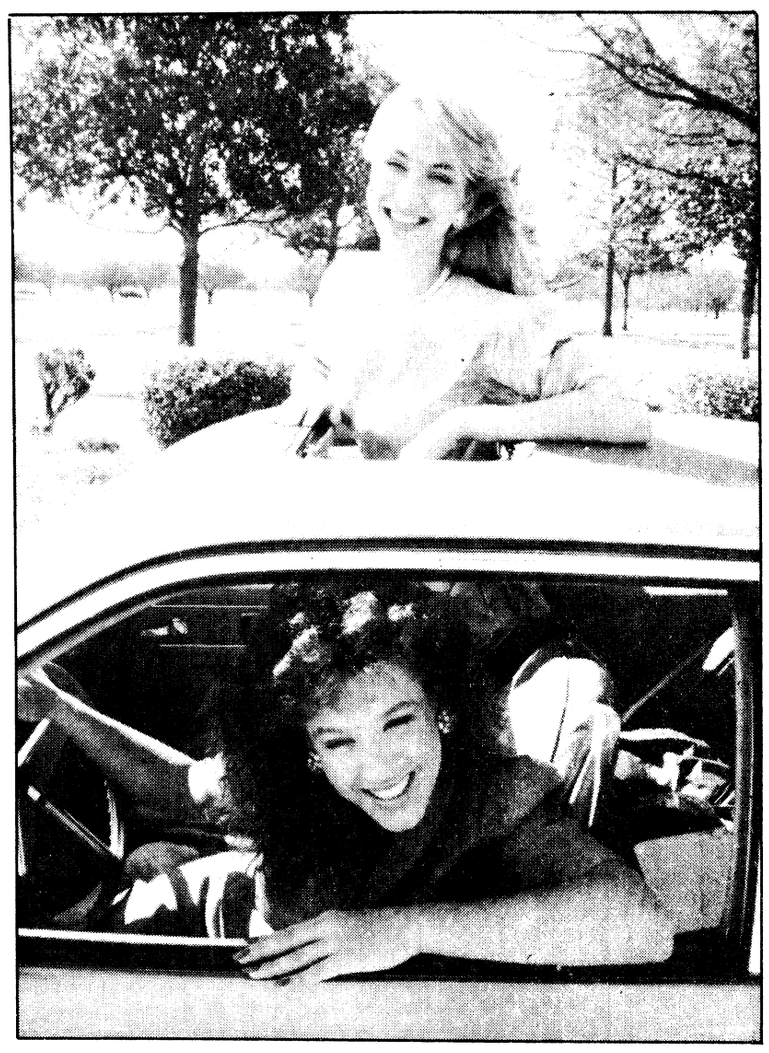
"Deb didn't even wait till I stopped the car; she just hollered, 'We can get him,' and took off," Miss. Lunsford said.

"I ran after him and he jumped over a wall, so I jumped after him," Mrs. Brown said, "and I kept hollering 'Drop the money!'"

She said the man just kept glancing backwards as he fled the scene of the crime, "and the whole time I just kept getting closer and closer.

"I can't imagine what was running through his mind seeing this blonde in a skirt chasing him like a mad woman," she said. Meanwhile, Miss. Lunsford parked the car and started after her friend. "I climbed the wall and saw that he had dropped a bag of money," she said, "I noted where it was and scrambled back over the wall to call the police."

The nearest place was a beauty shop she said, so I went in there to use the phone but there was no phone available, so I went to look for Deb.



By then Mrs. Brown had chased the alleged robber over a chain-link fence and down another alley. "Just after that he turned around and told me he was going to blow my head off if I didn't leave him alone," she said, "so I backed off, but I wouldn't have if some small children weren't near.

"I was just so afraid he would get one of those kids so I ducked in the bushes and watched where he went," Mrs. Brown said. "By that time Eddie came up and we went and called the police."

By the directions the women gave them, the police were able to track the suspect and eventually make an arrest.

"Caring citizens like these ladies," a local policeman said, "make you feel good about the city."

On Tuesday the women were cited by the City of Columbus for their bravery. One city official called them "heros" for going beyond the call of duty to aid police.

Seabees complete two-week annual training at Fort Benning

By Calvin Gatch
Seabee correspondent

Reserve Naval Mobile Construction Battalion-25 departs Fort Benning tomorrow, after two weeks annual training.

The 400 man unit is headquartered at Glenview (Ill.) Naval Air Station.

Known commonly as Seabees, members of this Navy construction force are carpenters, electricians, plumbers, heavy equipment operators, steel workers and mechanics. During their two-week deployment here, some Seabees have worked on construction projects and others have taken military training classes.

Their construction projects included constructing a new road at Ware Range; pouring two concrete drill pads at Sand Hill; and installing playground equipment at Custer Terrace Child Center.

Experimental device will help paratroopers make night landings

Army News Service

For paratroopers just landing on a drop zone in the middle of unfamiliar territory, in rough terrain, at night, assembling as a unit as quickly as possible is quite a feat, considering the confusion and dispersion that might occur.

The Army Materiel Command's Natick Research, Development and Engineering Center's Aero-mechanical Engineering Directorate, working on an Army Infantry School requirement, is developing the Drop Zone Assembly Aid System to solve a problem that has existed for four decades.

DZAAS has been likened to the Dick Tracy two-way wrist radio. It is comprised of a rugged, two-component system — a transmitter and a receiver.

The transmitter is carried by an airborne group leader to the assembly point or is placed on a selected airdrop load, and is set to turn on automatically. The receivers are wrist-mounted, with antennas that pick up the distant signal from the transmitter. A light emitting DIODE (Led) light will turn on only when the receiver is pointed in the direction of the transmitter.

Prototype testing was completed in June 1986 and, as a result. The transition to full-scale development is underway. According to project officer George Laliberte, engineering tests at AMC.S Electronic Proving Ground, Fort Huachuca, Ariz., and Yuma Proving Ground, Ariz., confirmed that the system can "expeditiously locate the transmitter, even to rough terrain."

While it used to take up to two to four hours to assemble an assault force, it now takes only 30 minutes on unfamiliar drop zones during day or night, using DZAAS.

WO selection board slated for early summer

Military Personnel Center

The fiscal year 1987 Warrant Officer Conditional Voluntary Indefinite and Voluntary Indefinite Selection Board will convene on May 26, Military Personnel Center officials announced.

The zone of consideration for CVI or VI will include all other-than-regular Army warrant officers with expirations of obligated service, or completion of CVI probationary periods, between Oct. 1, 1987 and Sept. 40, 1988.

Eligible other-than-regular Army warrant officers who want to remain on active duty in career status must submit their requests for consideration for CVI or VI status. Those who do not submit their applications will be considered to be requesting voluntary release from active duty at the end of their service obligations.

Officers should make their requests following the format in AR 135-215. Forward requests through supporting personnel service centers to MILPERCEN, attn: DAPC-OPW-P, 200 Stovall St., Alexandria, Va. 22332-0400, to arrive by April 15.

Send corrections or additions to the OMPF and ORB through the local personnel service center to MILPERCEN as soon as possible.

OPINION

Woman complains about long lines at commissary

Dear Editor:

I have just completed another maddening trip to the Fort Benning commissary. The motto for the Army's commissaries is "Serving the Most Deserving." If we as service members and dependents are in fact the most deserving, why are we forced to tolerate an environment displaying such disconcern for the military shopper?

This morning after the usual long wait to get into the commissary, I completed my shopping by following long lines of bumper-to-bumper shopping carts in all aisles. When I was ready to check out, imagine my dismay at finding only three checkout registers opened.

The lines at these registers were already backed up beyond where the shelves break to make the center aisle. When I asked a clerk at the front desk why only three registers were opened, she replied she didn't have anyone to run the registers until 11 a.m.

It is senseless and a display of poor management to open the commissary at 10 a.m. and not be prepared for the crowd that will ensue. Preparation must include anticipating the need for additional cashiers to serve shoppers. To expect customers to be understanding and tolerant of poor managerial practices is inexcusable.

Considering the routine tribulations that a military family is expected to endure, it is unfortunate that commissary shopping is among the most taxing. What is even more unfortunate is that these problems are allowed to occur at Fort Benning, "Home of the Infantry."

It is my sincere hope that someone in authority will intervene and c[illegible]ribute to the "home" environment. Prove to the Fort Benning community that you are truly "Serving the Most Deserving."

Family member

EDITOR'S NOTE: We asked the commissary for an explanation, and they provided a copy of their letter responding to Ms. Scully's complaint about poor service on March 11.

Dear Mrs. Scully:

Many unexpected things happened (that day) at the Commissary. For example, "What happened to Wednesdays?" Wednesdays normally are very slow shopping days. We advertise this day as one of the best days to shop.

Wednesday March 11 was unique. Two thousand thirty-five customers shopped on this day. Sales were $114,000. On a normal Wednesday, we serve only approximately 1,800 customers. Sales amount to about $89,000. Sunday, Monday and Tuesday shoppers elected to shop on this day.

Unfortunately, on this day we experienced a shortage of 12 sales store checkers due to vacancies, sick and regular leave and personnel on light duty. Between the hours of 10 and 10:45 a.m. there were eight checkers scheduled to operate registers, but only five were present and this, together with the large

Let parents teach kids something

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

Educating children about human sexuality is a parent's responsibility that should be done in the home.

The recent trend toward including the subject in the public school curricula leaves me feeling unsettled, to say the least.

We had health classes when I was in school, which used medical-sounding terms and cartoon films strips. These were shown only to single-sex groups of students and nobody knew exactly what the physical education teacher was talking about. We suspected it had something to do with sex, so everybody turned red.

My feeling is that kids know too much about the subject as it is, and teaching it in the schools can only lead to licentious thoughts and behavior.

Children are getting too much information from outside sources, and not believing what their parents tell them.

They get most of their information from friends, and 6-year olds can put out some pretty garbled stuff. The friends get their information from watching network television shows.

Programming on the major networks during prime time is terrible, because you never know what subjects they'll discuss. These days, you can't even trust Walt Disney; you're liable to find people KISSING on the Disney Channel.

And not to be bragging, but I think I've done pretty well teaching my children about the 'birds and the bees' so far.

When my daughter (then 3) asked where babies come from, I told her you find them in the garden under a cabbage leaf. Since we didn't have a garden at the time, this was a story she could not check.

I explained that The Stork flew in from heaven with the baby, circled around looking for a home that needed one and dropped the newborn into the garden.

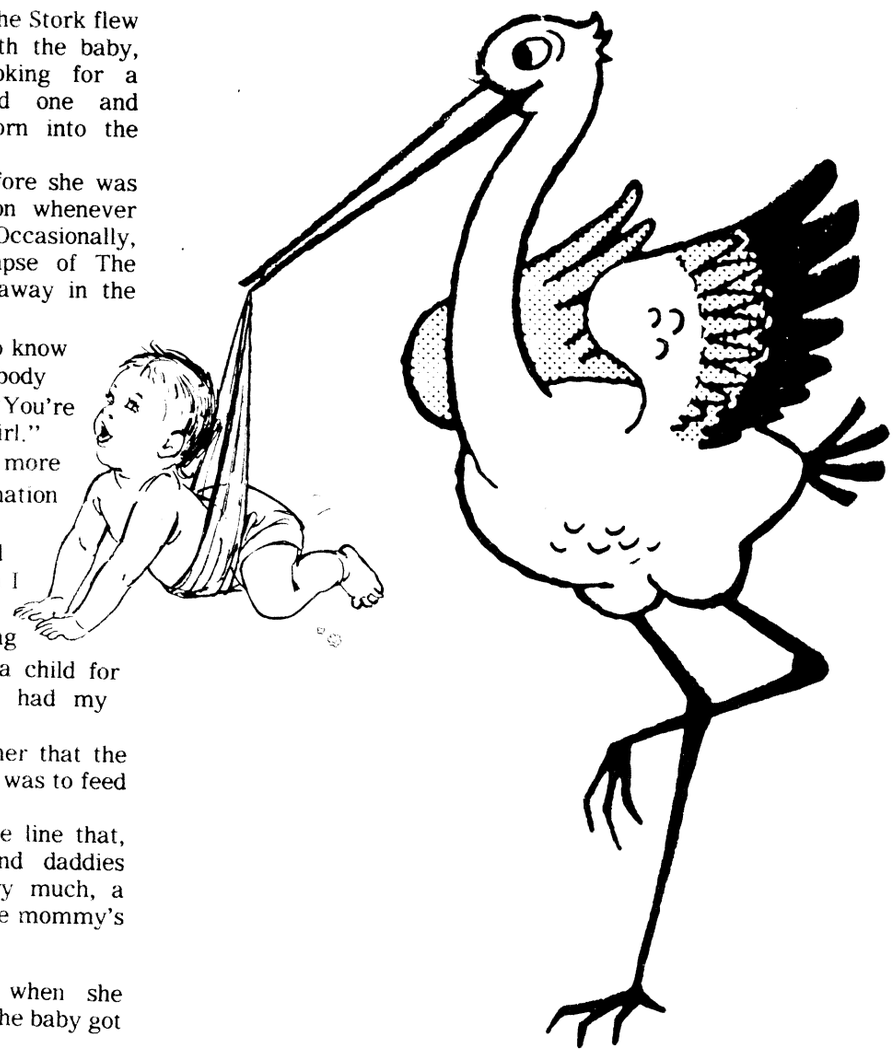
It wasn't long before she was scanning the horizon whenever we went outside. Occasionally, we'd catch a glimpse of The Stork — far, far away in the sky.

Next she wanted to know what sex is. "Everybody has a sex," I said. "You're either a boy or a girl." At 3, I felt this was more than sufficient information on the subject.

At age 4, she asked more questions when I was "in the family way." I'd been reading books on preparing a child for a new sibling, so I had my answers ready.

It made sense to her that the reason I ate so much was to feed the baby inside.

She also bought the line that, "when mommies and daddies love each other very much, a baby just grows in the mommy's tummy."



The crisis came when she wanted to know how the baby got out of my stomach.

At first, I told her that I would go get the baby at the hospital.

Even at her tender age, she understood. Mommy was going shopping again.

She assumed the hospital was like the mall except it had a baby store. "I want to go with you and pick out a baby brother," she said.

To avoid the fuss that ensued, I had to admit that the only baby we could have was the one in my belly and we didn't get to pick one out. "How is the baby going to get out of there," she wanted to know.

I was forced to tell her the truth.

"They put you to sleep in the hospital and repeat magic words over your tummy, and then it opens up and the baby pops out," I said. "When you wake up, there's the baby screaming its head off and you're good as new."

Since all 4-year olds believe in magic, it was the perfect explanation.

Now that she's 7, my daughter has started picking up lots of other facts on her own. For example, the other day, she told me what AIDS is. "It's a candy you eat when you're on a diet to keep from getting fat," she said. She learned this from a television commercial.

So you can see, my child does not need classes on such subjects at school. Her education is coming along quite well, thanks to our open and honest communications. And the television set.

'This we'll defend' refers to Constitution

By Jeffrey D. Lindbald
Army News Service

The motto of the U.S. Army, "This we'll defend," not only proclaims our duty to defend our country from our enemies, but also ties us to our duty to protecting the principles of self-government laid down by the Constitution.

The maxim becomes more clear to us when looking at our oaths of enlistment, commission and appointment to federal civil service. Within the oath, we pledge "to support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies foreign and domestic." This very act makes us unique from many Americans. Only government employees, both military and civilian, swear or affirm this oath to support and defend the very fabric of our government and way of life. In other western countries, military and public officials do not swear to protect and uphold either their sovreign or presidential leaders. In the United States, we do not swear to support and defend the president, but the Constitution.

As government representatives, our first duty to the nation is to support and defend it. This is given further credence in the preamble to the Constitution by the force of the phrase, "to provide for the common defense," which also serves as the slogan for the Department of Defense's observance of the Bicentennial of the Constitution. Even more, the act of supporting and defending the Constitution relates to the last phrase in the preamble, "to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

By defending the Constitution, we protect the rights and privileges guaranteed us all and the blueprint for the foundation of our form of government. Throughout our 200 years under the Constitution, we have experienced rises and threats to the principles laid down by the Constitution and to our way of life from within and outside our shores. Each time the Army has responded in a manner befitting the urgency of the situation.

When the danger arose we were there. Many times the Army was prepared and ready to face the threat; other times the threat hit us full in the face when we least expected it. However, the Army, along with the country, refused to falter and reacted with all the strength it could muster to defend our rights, our Constitution and our institutions.

For many years the oath for enlisted soldiers didn't contain the phrase "to support and defend."

On Jan. 3, 1961, Rep. H.R. Gross of Iowa introduced a bill, which became law in 1962, to amend the existing enlisted oath of service by allowing enlisted persons to swear an oath similar to that of officers. He inserted into the oath the phrases "to support and defend the Constitution of the United States" and "so help me God."

Gross felt that the Constitution was not emphasized enough throughout the country, and that including a reference to the Constitution was just one way to stress its importance.

He also felt the oath would serve as a reminder to men and women entering the service that we do have a Constitution in this

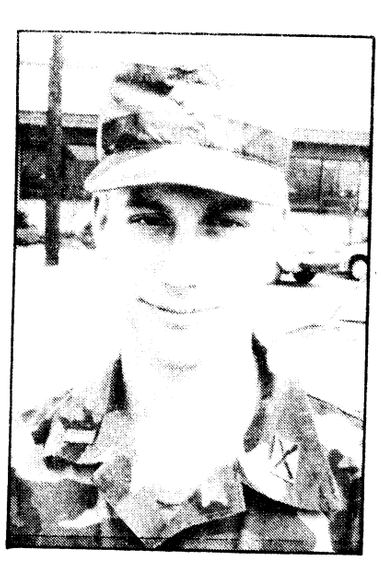
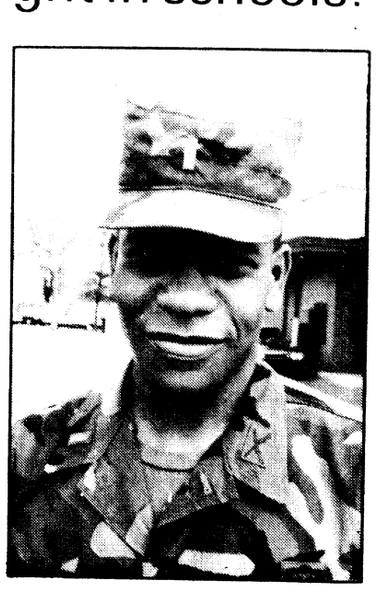
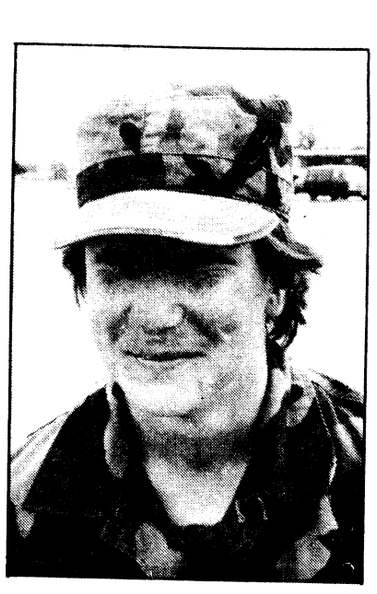
VARIOUS VOICES / Do you think sex education should be taught in schools?



SSgt. John Styron, Company A, 1/507th PIR, - "Yes, I do; a lot of parents are afraid to tell their children about sex or else they are just not educated themselves. At any rate, kids need to know the consequences of having sex so there won't be so many teenage pregnancies."



Pvt. Rami Chapman, Delta Company, 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, - "Yes, definitely. A lot of times, parents have problems communicating with their children about sex. It needs to be taught elsewhere because ignorance and sex are a bad combination."



Roy Newman, Directorate of Plans and Training, - "Yes, but I think parents also have an obligation to tell their children about sex. Unfortunately, all parents don't feel that way so it needs to be taught in school, so that children won't believe all the distorted falsehoods about sex and social diseases."

2nd Lt. Thomas Cantwell, 24th Company, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade, -"Yes, it certainly should. Parents are not teaching their kids what is morally right or wrong, so they need to be educated on the consequences in school because there are far too many teenagers becoming pregnant."

2nd Lt. Terence Singleton, 25th Company, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade, - "Yes, I don't think the burden should be left entirely to the parents. Learning about sex in school is the best way to make sure that all the myths are dispelled and that all the children are informed."

Pvt. Mary Nixon, Company B, 1/507th PIR,, - Yes, I think so, but kids need to be taught young, maybe about the 5th or 6th grade so that they understand sex and are educated on how to handle it when the time comes."

First 'Best Ranger' departs for Germany

Bill Walton

Then SFC Philip Sebay climbs the Prussik rope during the first Best Ranger competition.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

When 1st Sgt. Philip Sebay, Company A, 1/507th, PIR came to Fort Benning in 1978, he didn't intend to stay eight years, but as it turned out he has.

He's leaving now, for Bad Tolez, West Germany; but he will be remembered long after he is gone.

One glance at the badges adorning his battle dress uniform tells the story; Drill Sergeant, Ranger Tab, Pathfinder, Expert Infantryman, Master Parachutist.

Sebay has spent nearly all of his time here instructing troops. "I like teaching people," he said, "I take great pleasure in passing my knowledge onto other soldiers."

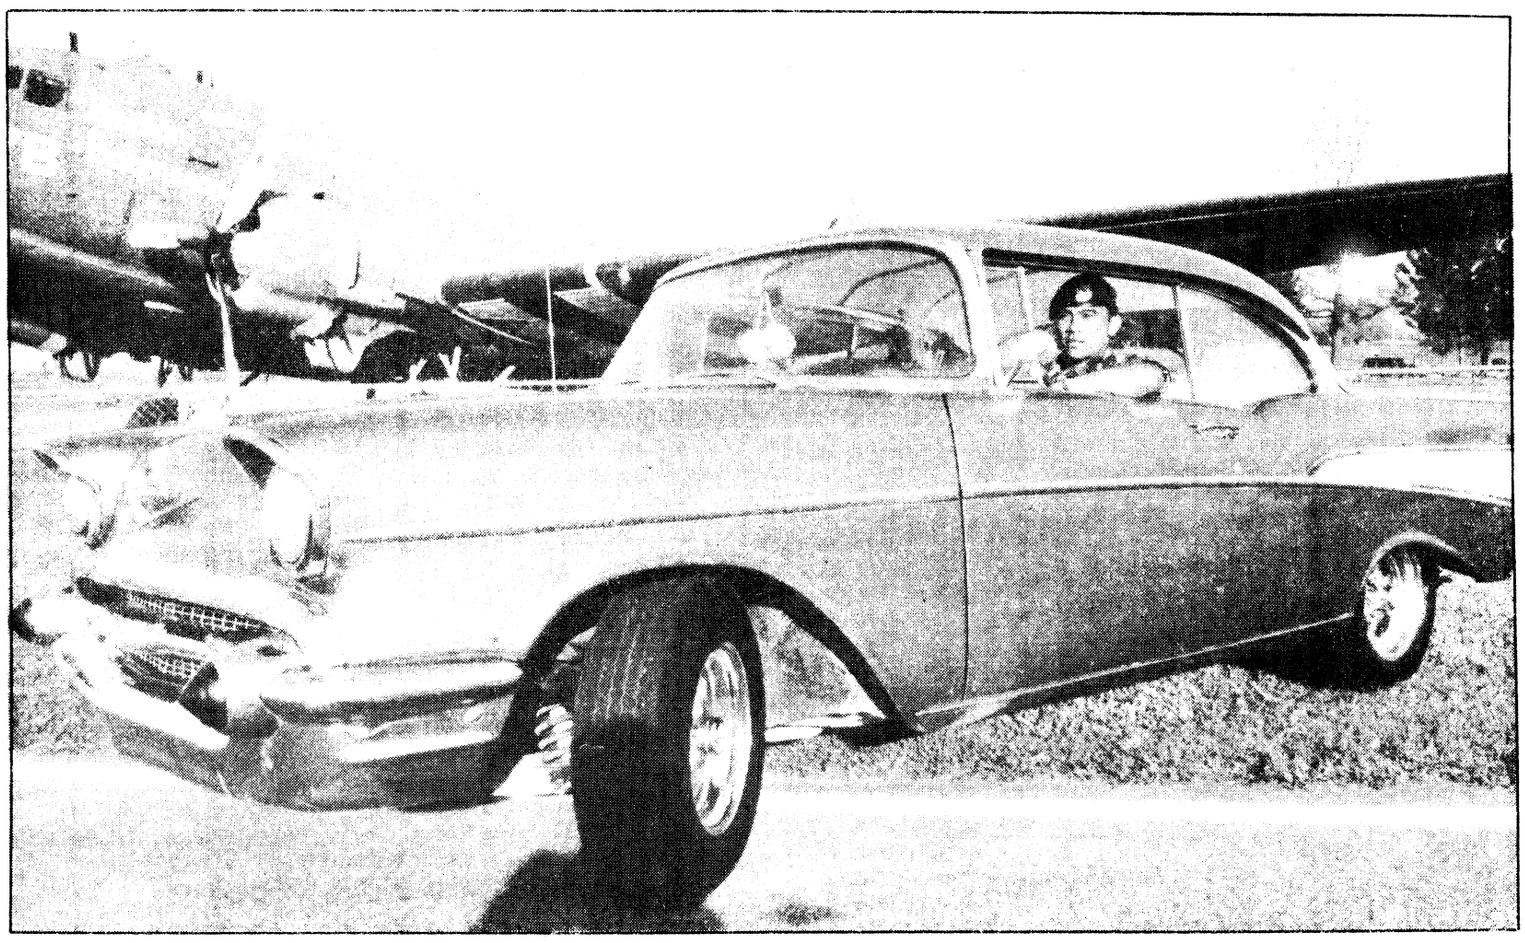
And that he has done, he's been an Airborne Instructor, Drill Instructor, Ranger Instructor.

Capt. Chip Preysler, 12th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, remembers Sebay as an Ranger Instructor, "He truly believes in leadership by example," he said, "when I was a ranger student he threw me in the hand to hand combat pit three times!"

"He didn't remember that but I did," he said, "and I told him about it when he became my platoon sergeant." We were both there when they activated the 3rd Ranger Battalion, Preysler said, "As a matter of fact he was the first platoon sergeant in the battalion and I was the first Platoon Leader."

"I think being involved in the activation of the battalion is my fondest memory of my tour here," Sebay said, "but I have enjoyed everything I've done."

Sebay holds the distinction of being involved in another first; he and SFC Charles Light are the first "Best Rangers." They won the coveted title in 1982. "I was the rock and he was the animal," he said, "but let's not talk about the past, let's talk about the present, about my airborne students; they are what is important to me now."



I tell them I will always be their first sergeant, he said, even after they leave this company. He also tells his company a few other things; "One, that parachute is gonna open and two, you're gonna love it, if not come see me!" Do the students take him up on that offer? "Not one" he said with a grin "not one."

"I like to create an atmosphere where the students are fired up and motivated," Sebay said, "then they can do anything and that's why they don't take me up on my offer." I like instilling the confidence I have in myself into my troops, he said.

Sebays' love of teaching just doesn't end when he takes off his uniform. During his off time he can be seen at one of the local nightclubs giving country western dance lessons.

But his biggest interest is collecting vintage trucks and automobiles. He said he likes old Ford Trucks, but when it comes to cars, Chevrolets are his favorite. "I have a fully restored 50' Ford F-1 with a flathead motor," he said, "and I have a fully restored 57' Chevy Bel Air with all original parts." He finds the parts through magazines and various dealers and rebuilds them himself. "I would feel cheap if I had a new car," Sebay said, "they just don't build them like they used to."

The old familiar sight of Sebay cruising around the 507th in his vintage vehicles will be gone soon, Fort Benning wishs him farewell; our loss will certainly be Bad Tolez's gain.

197th Inf.

You might have called it a meeting of the minds, when all of the company commanders in the 197th Infantry Brigade met recently for a Company Commander's Seminar.

For several years now, the 197th has utilized this semi-annual event to develop cohesion between company commanders.

"The purpose of the seminar is to give company commanders a chance to exchange ideas and information, and to discuss current issues concerning the Brigade, Fort Benning and the Army," said Capt. John Blasser, 197th Infantry Brigade training offier. "This also provides the Brigade commander and staff officers an opportunity to disseminate current command information and policies."

The commanders passed information to each other through the meetings, sharing command experiences and advice. The officers also benefitted from the knowledge and experience of the 197th Infantry Brigade commander and the battalion commanders who shared their command philosophies.

"Company commanders often only see their small part of the whole picture," Blasser said. "Through this seminar, they can see how important that small part is to the Brigade." — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Fort Benning's Cactus Observation Post was set ablaze during a Combined Arms live Fire Exercise, featuring field artillary, Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicles, M-1 Abrams Tanks, and 4.2 inch mortars.

On hand for the demonstration were students from the Infantry Pre-Command and Infantry Officers Advance Course.

"All the students gave with rave reviews of the demonstration, indicating that they had gotten a lot out of the class," said Msgt. Thomas Steele, non-commissioned officer in charge, Fire Support Branch, which sponsored the classes.

Students first attended a capabilities class. Then it was off to Cactus, where the live fire got underway.

The Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle converged on the impact area under the direction of Company D, 1st Battalion, 69th Armor Division, 197th Infantry Brigade.

Another demonstration at Cactus is planned April 15. — Thad Roberson, Bayonet staff writer

The Army Community Services Food Locker Program is richer by 14 milk crates of canned goods, thanks to soldiers at Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

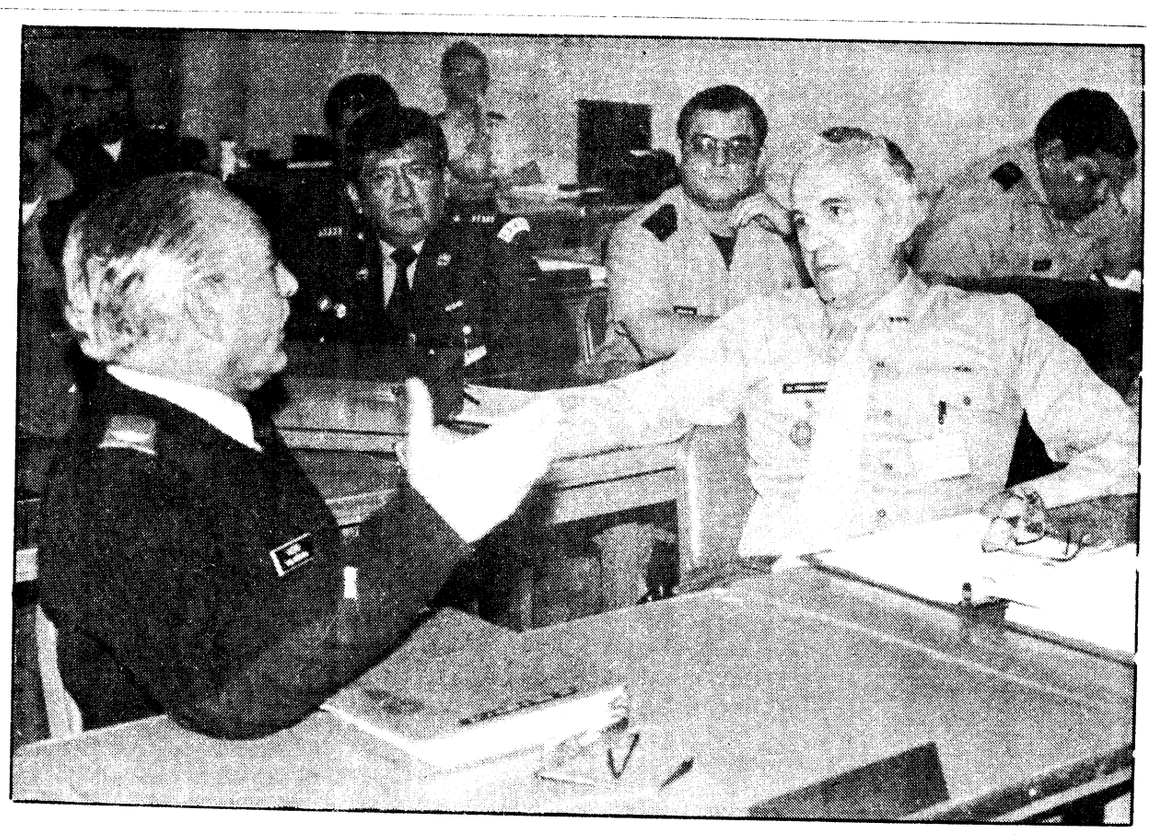
Lt. Col. Gordon Lam, Battalion commander, CSM Emory L. Smith, 5th Battalion command sergeant major; and the 5th Battalion first sergeants presented the 450 cans of food to Chaplain (Capt.) Robert Washington. Washington then donated the food to ACS.

"The response of the companies of 5th Battalion to the food drive is a good example of soldiers taking care of other soldiers and their families, not just those in their own unit, but those throughout the Army," Washington said. — Marsha Santiago, ITC correspondent

10th Mountain

A rigorous week of testing for the coveted EIB Badge took place this past week. Company A, 2d Battalion, 14th Infantry, Golden Dragons started on Monday with the EIB Army Physical Readiness Test (APRR) in the morning followed by the 12 mile EIB road march in the afternoon.

All day Tuesday, the company went through the EIB Land Navigation Course. Wednesday afternoon the Alpha Force went through the Hands On Testing Stations located at the Eagles Nest in the Sand Hill area.



Based on the soldiers who passed the above mentioned events, qualifying as Expert on the M16 and getting an 80 percent or better on the 11 series SQT Test, the company feels that the soldiers who earn the EIB will definitely have a great sense of accomplishment. At present, the company is waiting on the SQT results to return to determine the EIB awardees.

Today, at 10:30 a.m. on Dragon Field located in front of Bldg #3210 on Sand Hill, Alpha Company will become the first company to go through a change of command in the COHORT Battalion since its reactivation in December 1985.

Capt. Karl Miller, the outgoing commander, has led this company through five off-post deployments to include Celtic Cross IV, Fort Hunter Liggett, Calif.; Dahlonega, Ga.; Fort Rucker, Ala.; Jungle Operations Training Center, Panama and the Amphibious Warfare Course, Little Creek, Virginia.

The unit has gone through the Ligth Leader course; an intensive train-up period, platoon ARTEPs and a Battalion ARTEP. Capt. Miller will be going to 2d Brigade, 10th Mountain Division to become the Brigade S3 air.

The Incoming Commander, Capt. Christian K. Jaques, is assuming command after being the battalion adjutant since August 1986. His background includes 7 1/2 years in the 30 Brigade 82nd Airborne Division, he has served as rifle platoon, 81mm mortar, and scout platoon leader, company executive officer and battalio adjutant. - Mark London, 2/14th

USARSA

March 20 signalled the end of a week-long symposium at the U.S. Army School of the Americas highlighted by the many U.S. and Latin American military and civilian attendees.

The symposium, which was themed, "How Army Training Enhances Democratic Growth," raised some important politico-military and socio-political issues involving the U.S. and Latin America's role in the development of civic action in the Western Hemisphere.

The symposium was held as an outgrowth of the concern expressed on terrorism at the Conference of American Armies held in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in 1986. A joint effort by the U.S. Southern Command and USARSA, this symposium was organized into five simultaneously-run seminars which keyed on different presentations by each represented Latin American country.

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., commander, USAIC and Fort Benning, welcomed all participants to the opening session of the symposium, and introduced the keynote speaker, Gen. John R. Galvin, commander-in-chief, SOUTHCOM — who has been designated to replace Gen. Bernard Rogers as Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, later this year. Galvin's speech, followed by questions and answers, set the tone for the week's activities.

The presentations included one on "Civil Military Operations in the U.S. Southern Command", presented by Col. Robert N. Lichtenberger, chief, civil affairs, SOUTHCOM.

With increased emphasis on becoming more responsive and aware of latin America's experience in counterinsurgency and civil-military operations, SOUTHCOM has played a key role in responding to some of those operations, more recent one was in assisting Bolivia against drug trafficking and coca-leaf production last year.

"Civic action is not a 'handout' but a combined host country — U.S. civil-military program in which the community participates in the planning and execution of projects," said Lichtenberger.

"Local participation leads to greater community interest and enhanced civil military cooperation," he said.

An example of these initiatives is SOUTHCOM's assistance in humanitarian and foreign disaster relief operations. Four recent areas of assistance include the eruption of a volcano in Colombia and the defastating earthquakes in Mexico, El Salvador and Ecuador.

"During the Colombian disaster alone, SOUTHCOM transported over 54,000 pounds of relief supplies in addition to 110 support personnel and 12 helicopters, which flew 562 hours of relief support missions and most recently, during the Salvadoran relief effort, U.S. military airlift transported 500,000 pounds of supplies," Lichtenberger said.

A unique aspect of the symposium centered on participation by the students of the USARSA command and general staff course as recorders and observers. Their efforts were essential to the preparation of the final report which was distributed to each participant. Their effort was aided by eight members of the Utah Army National Guard, who performed as translators and interpreters during the workshop sessions.

More than 85 non-USARSA people attended and participated in the symposium, which was the first of its kind devoted to training and education.

Many long hours were logged even during off-duty hours in administrative and audio-visual, logistical and audio-visual support of the symposium.

Brig. Gen. Loeffke summed up the reaction of all participants, saying, "The USARSA symposium reflects very strongly the motto of the school, 'Uno para todos y todos para uno' (One for all and all for one), a motto which can serve our respective armies as well." — Marco Morales and Glen Weidner, USARSA

Soldiers practice NBC decontamination skills

Command inspection gives troops chance to use protective measures

By Troy Buchanan
19/th Infantry Brigade correspondent

One of those important skills that soldiers are required to perform during the Brigade Commanders Inspection is reacting to a Nuclear, Biological, and Chemical hazard.

"Each soldier is required to perform three decontamination tasks," said SFC Edward Merrett, Brigade Chemical Section.

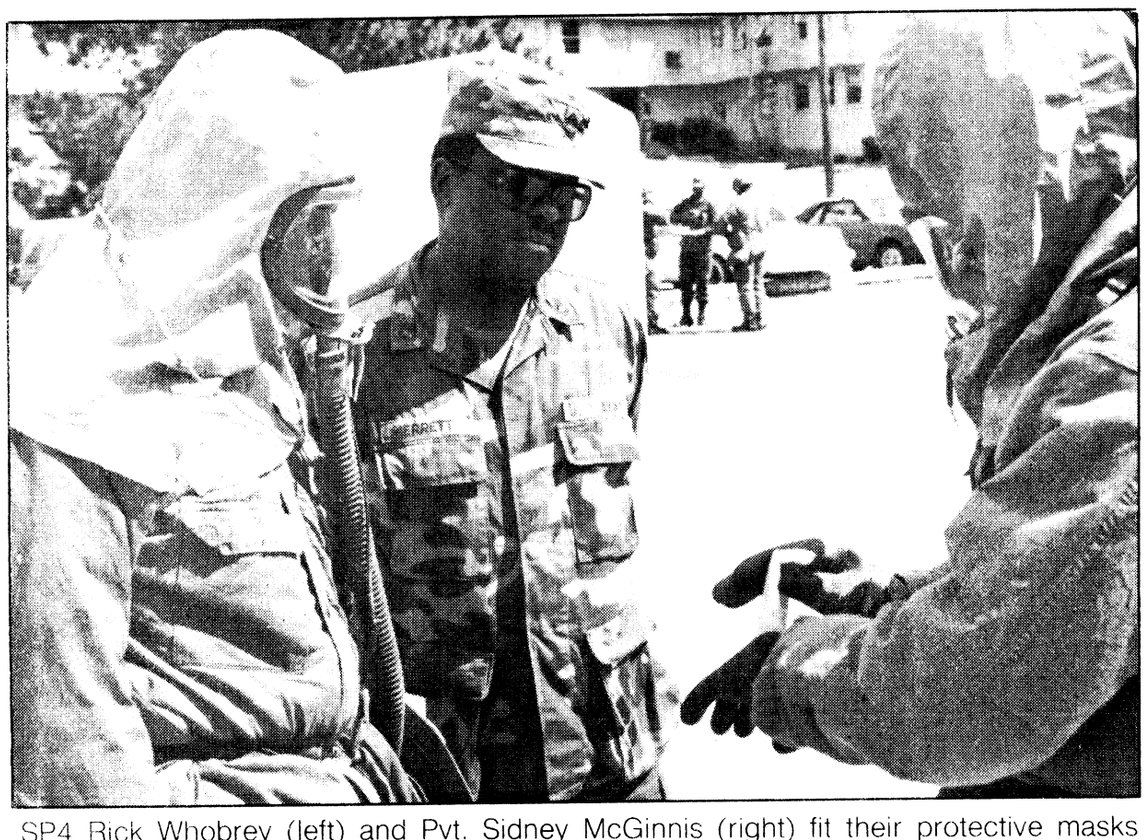
"First is individual decon, second is MOPP (Military Operations in Protective Posture) gear exchange, and third is vehicle spray down using M11 decontamination devices."

The first task, individual decon, consists of the soldier decontaminating himself after being exposed to a harmful chemical agent. During the second task, MOPP gear exchange, two soldiers assist each other in changing contaminated suits for non-contaminated chemical suits.

The third and final task requires the soldier to decontaminate his vehicle using an M11 decontamination device. The device resembles a small fire extinguisher and is used to rinse down the truck.

The run off from the spray down is buried and marked; the same thing is done with the old contaminated chemical suits.

"During the MOPP gear exchange ten steps must be followed," Merrett said.



"Not only does the soldier's skin need attention, but also the protective mask."

country, and they are defending the rights and privileges guaranteed us all by that document.

Although the oaths contain the phrase "to support and defend," there are differences in the two.

Army civilians can be considered unique as federal employees. They not only represent the federal government, but also play key roles in the Army's day-to-day operations. Their importance is a mainstay to the total Army force. This much needed support and service to the military is provided by the Army civilian not only during times of conflict. The Army depends upon them to ensure that many of the activities it performs continue without interruption while the Army is responding to the threat. As such, Army civilians are part of the team that ascribe to the creed "this we'll defend."

Just like the Army's motto, these oaths identify the primary roles and duties of the soldier and Army civilian — that of supporting and defending the Constitution. The U.S. Army, for more than 200 years, has defended the principles and ideals upon which our nation was founded and it will continue to follow the principles set down in its motto, in the oath of service and in the very document it upholds to defend.

Oath of Enlisted Military Service

I (insert name), do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to regulations and the Uniform Code of Military Justice. So help me God.

Oath of Federal Office

I (insert name), do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; that I will faithfully discharge the duties of the office of which I am about to enter. So help me God.

The problems in the cash register operation of the Commissary Store have been with us ever since we expanded the days and hours from five days, 47 hours per week of store operation to seven days, 55 hours per week, without receiving additional resources to allow for the spread.

We had no personnel on call, or temporary hires who could substitute for personnel that were absent on this day.

The weakness in this area was brought to the attention of the Troop Support Agency Commander and the Director of the Southeast Commissary Region during their visit to Fort Benning on March 17. Authority to hire additional part time temporary employees to alleviate and improve the commissary check out operation was granted. The required paperwork for the recruitment of these additional personnel has been submitted to the Civilian Personnel Office.

Commissary management always appreciates suggestions and comments from our patrons, and we hope the above has enlightened you as to the reasons for the situation on March 11.

Benning names Allen best junior instructor

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

SFC Jimmy Allen is Fort Benning's Junior Enlisted Instructor of the Year for 1987.

The 14-year Infantry veteran became the post's top junior enlisted instructor while teaching basic ariborne students at the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry's Tower Branch. Allen, who is currently a drill sergeant, taught everything from the suspended harness to recovery from the drop zone during his three and one-half years there.

To be chosen as the number one junior enlisted instructor, Allen had to win Instructor of the Month and Quarter and then come out on top appearing before a board of three officers and giving a graded period of instruction.

"My motivation as an airborne instructor came from trying to ensure that the students I taught didn't get injured on the drop zone after exiting the aircraft. I knew, after each jump, how successful I had been," Allen said.

Allen is also Jumpmaster and Pathfinder qualified.

He is currently serving with Company D, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Traning Brigade as a drill sergeant, and said his move from airborne instructor to drill sergeant was a natural one.

"I've served as a team leader, squad leader, platoon sergeant, recruiter and airborne instructor. Being assigned as a drill sergeant rounds everything out," he said.

Allen said he hopes to become an instructor training instructors in Benning's Basic Instructor Course after his two-year stint as a drill sergeant is up.

Museum dedicates visitors' gallery

New facility named for Vietnam hero

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

The Bond Gallery was officially opened yesterday in a ceremony at the National Infantry Museum.

The gallery, located on the third floor of the museum, was named in honor of the late Brig. Gen. William Ross Bond.

Guest speaker at the ceremony was retired Gen. Richard Stilwell, a close personal friend of the Bond family.

"Bill's special genius was his continuing — indeed accelerating — rate of intellectual and cultural and professional growth throughout life" Stilwell said. "Not for personal gain nor satisfaction, but to increase his utility as an officer in the Army, as a survivor of Country, as a contributor to society as a whole."

Gen. Bond was born in Porland, Maine in December 1918.

At the end of World War II, he served as an instructor in tactics at the Infantry School.

He then toured the Far East and middle East, to return to Fort Benning for the Advanced Infantry Course and to assist in the establishment and operation of the Airborne Ranger Program, now the Ranger Department.

His Middle Eastern tour was as a member of the United Nations Truce Supervision Team, involved in achieving and maintaining the truce between Israel and the Arab states.

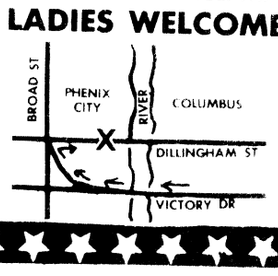
Bond, while engaged in combat and commanding the 199th Infantry Brigade, was killed in Vietnam April 1, 1970.

He was the first U.S. general officer to be killed in Vietnam while commanding infantry troops on the ground.

Some of those former 199th Infantry members also attended the dedication ceremonies.

The Bond Gallery provides a place for museum visitors to relax in the comfortable surroundings of American and British antique furniture, dating back to the early 19th Century.

Also special to the gallery is a large bronze plaque and portrait of Bond. The artist for the General's portrait was Wyndell Taylor.



The portrait and plaque were unveiled by Mrs. John Lockwood, the Bond's sister-in-law, and brothers-in-law Babot Sedgwick and Ellery Sedgwick Jr.

Bradleys show their firepower at CALFEX

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

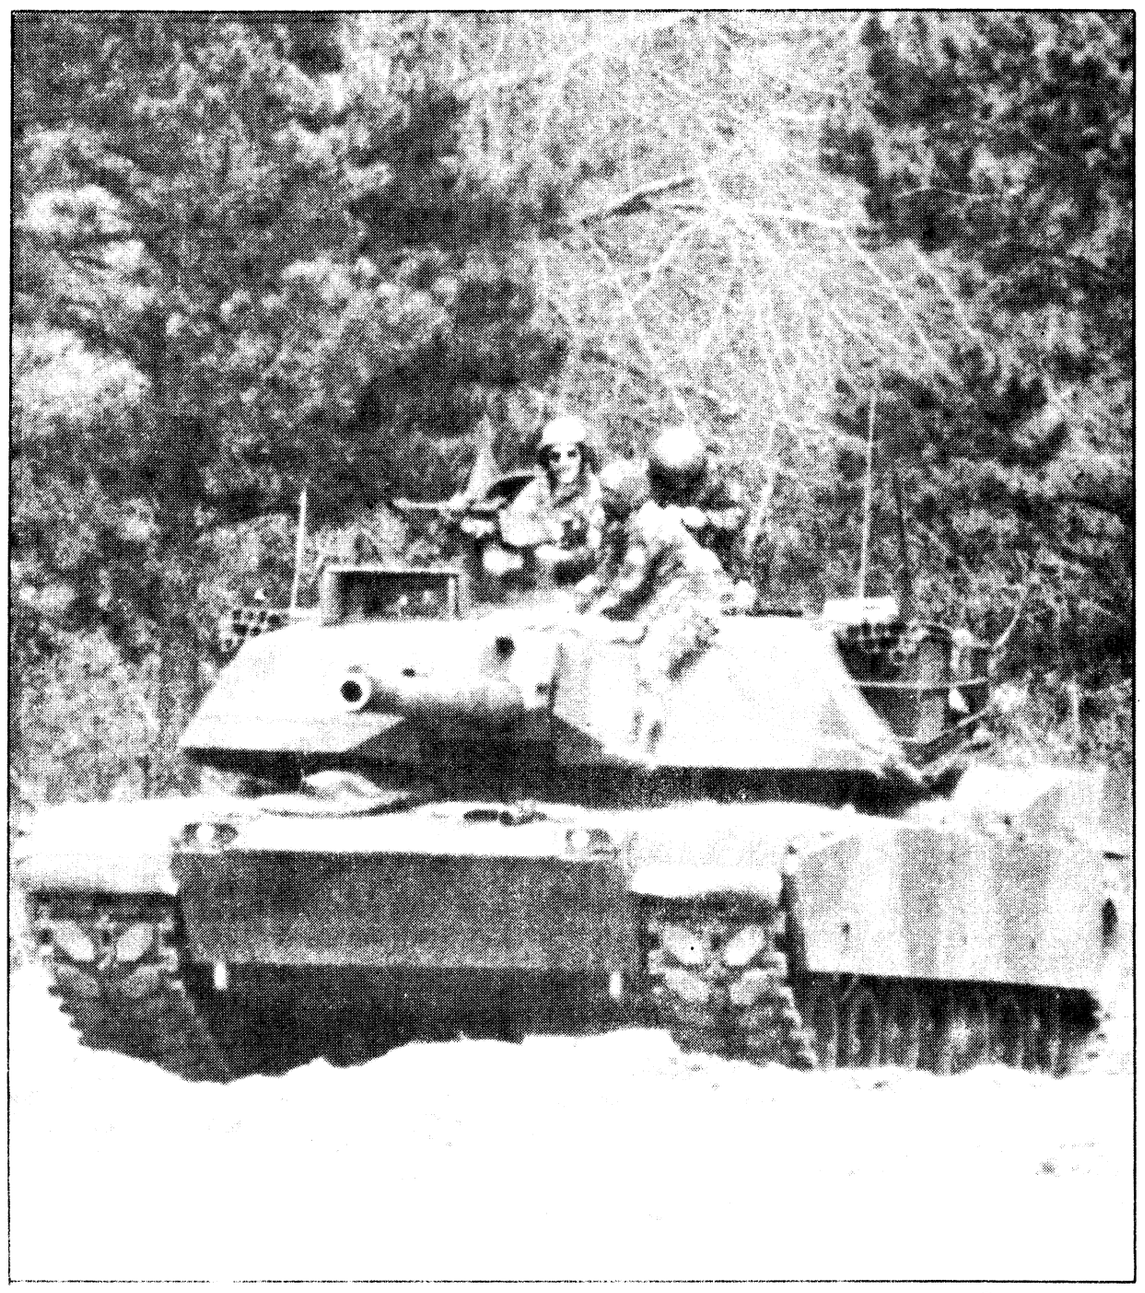
As today's weapons arsenal grows more and more sophisticated, it is only fitting that the Infantry and Armor units receive newer and more combat ready equipment.

Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment has the Bradley fighting vehicle, and Company C, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armored has the M1 tank.

"The Bradley and M1 put on a live fire show for the Infantry Officers Advance Course during a recent CALFEX (Combined Arms Live Fire Exercise)," explained Capt. George Lennon, Company commander of Company D, 1-29 Infantry.

Instructions were given to students before and after the live fire exercise, tactics were discussed and an after action review was conducted."

According to Lennon this is the first time that the Infantry has the ability to kill tanks while supporting themselves. Since the M1 contained such great speed and accuracy, the Bradley had to be the same, giving the Infantry a vehicle with the ability to fight with great effectiveness against armored threats.



"The Bradley does not have the ability to stand and fight toe-to-toe along side the M1," Lennon said. "It has limited armor protection, but it does support itself with a cannon type weapon."

"The Bradley has been tested with the M1 to make sure they

7th gunners get practice firing Stingers at Stewart's Moving Target Simulator

By Elijah Campbell and Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondents

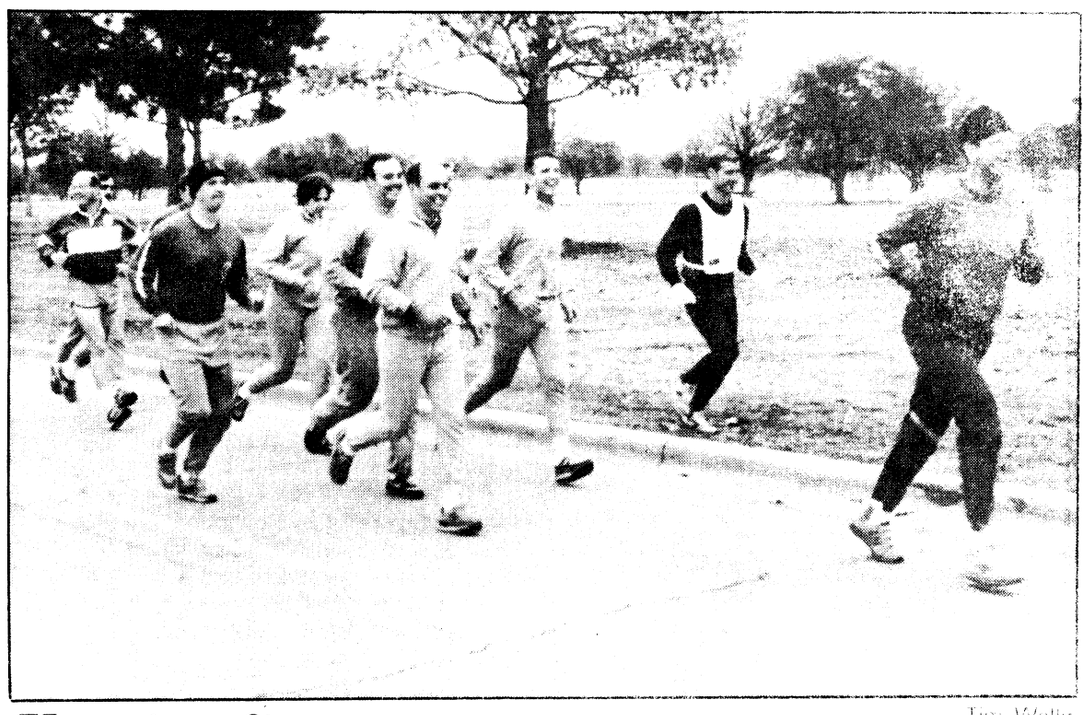
The importance of prime training time to soldiers is well known. The Stinger/Redeye (Air Deense Artillery) Platoon from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade recently traveled to Fort Stewart, Ga., to capitalize on some prime training in the Moving Target Simulator.

This simulator, also known as "the dome," creates a battlefield atmosphere with sight and sound effects. Aircraft is projected on the dome to simulate it flying across the battlefield and the soldiers track the aircraft with specially equipped Stinger weapons.

The objective of the Moving Target Simulator training is to provide a means of training and evaluating the performance of a Stinger/Redeye gunner under simulated combat conditions.

MTS provides a means for gunners to practice engagement procedures and decisions and weapons operations and firing. Since this is accomplished without the use of actual aircraft or live rounds, much of the expense involved with live tracking and firing is eliminated.

The training received at the MTS provides key knowledge for soldiers to become more proficient in their Military Occupational Specialty and to further prepare them for the Skill Qualification Test.



The results of the MTS training is one criteria that the platoon laders use to determine who will fire the Redeye missile during the platoon's annual Redeye live fire on Fort Benning.

The Stinger platoon leaders are also trying to schedule off-post live fire training at Fort Bliss, Texas to overcome Fort Benning range limitations on the Stinger weapon.

Beware of ads offering easy ways to earn cash

Staff Judge Advocate

ASK THE JUDGE

Q: I saw the following ad in one of my magazines. It sounds great, but is it Legitimate?

Would you like to earn hundreds of dollars a week at home? In your leisure time? Many people are supplementing their income in a very easy way. Let us tell you how . . .

A: These ads usually sound good, especially if you have small children and want to be able to stay home with them. Some are legitimate, but most are not.

What many of these ads do not say is that you may have to work many hours without pay. There may also be hidden costs.

Many work at home schemes require you to spend your own money to place ads in newspapers, make photocopies, or buy the envelopes, paper, stamps, or other supplies needed to do the job.

The company may also demand that you pay a membership fee or make regular payments in order to get continual instructions or materials. Some consumers have lost thousands of dollars and wasted lots of time and energy on these schemes.

In order to help you determine if the company is legitimate, ask the following questions before you pay, or agree to pay, any amount of money.

- What tasks will I be required to perform?
- Will I be paid on salary or commission?
- Who will pay me?
- When will I get my first paycheck?
- What is the total cost of the program

Before you make any final decisions, be sure to check out the company with the local consumer protection agencies and the Better Business Bureau.

Q: I tried to get a credit card with a local department store, and they turned me down. I had lots of financial problems a few years ago, but they are all taken care of now and I'm tired of being turned down by these companies because of my past mistakes. How can I get my credit record re-written?

A: You are entitled by law to correct any inaccurate information which appears in your credit bureau file. Once a creditor rejects an application, you have the right to know why it was denied. If it was due to the report received from a credit bureau, they must also tell you the name and address of the bureau which they used.

If you write to the credit bureau within thirty days of your credit denial, they must provide you with a copy of your credit file at no charge. If you would like a copy at any other time, you may have to pay a small fee.

Check the report to see if the information is accurate. You have the right to dispute the accuracy or completeness of any information in your report. To do so, send the credit bureau a written explanation as to why you feel the information is wrong. The credit bureau must then investigate the matter. If it cannot verify the disputed information, it must remove it from your file.

Don't be misled by ads which promise to repair or clean up bad credit histories. These are usually aimed at people with bad credit histories, judgments, or bankruptcies. The promises can almost never be kept.

Best defense is using common sense

Provost Marshal

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

During the month of March, we have discussed the crime of rape, the psychology of the rapist, and the trauma that is suffered by the victim. Let us now discuss the measures that a woman can take to prevent a rape from occurring.

I'm sure that everyone has seen advertisements for self-protection training, weapons training, and a variety of means to avoid a rape. The fact is that, unless a person is highly proficient in these tactics, they can prove to be more harmful than useful. The best defense is to use common sense and discretion.

When at home, lock your doors and windows. Do not unlock your door until you know who is wanting to enter your home. Hang curtains or blinds on every window. Know your neighbors and keep their phone numbers available for use in an emergency. Never advertise the time you plan to return by leaving notes on your door or mailbox.

The use of lights inside and outside of your home is an effective deterent. Vary your routine, beware of places wher men might hide, and avoid secluded areas within your apartment complex or neighborhood.

When walking, plan your route in advance. Always walk with someone after dark, and walk at a steady pace. If you need help in a hurry, scream. Do not stop yelling. If necessary, run, and don't stop until you reach a safe place. By all means, never hitchhike or accept rides from strangers.

If attacked, active, immediate response may give the victim a chance to escape. However, be realistic about your ability to protect yourself. Passive resistance may be advisable if your life is in clear danger. Vomiting, urinating, telling the attacker you have a sexually transmitted disease, or that you are menstrating may stop him or give you a chance to escape.

If you are a victim of a rape, seek help. Call a friend or a local rape crisis center. Then you must decide whether or not you want to report the crime to the police.

197th soldier convicted for selling marijuana

COURT REPORT

On March 3, PFC Carl Stiner, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was sentenced to 45 days confinement, reduction to E-1 and a bad conduct discharge after pleading guilty to charges of distributing marijuana at Fort Benning.

Stiner told the military judge, Col. Sebert Trail, that he was contacted in November by another soldier who was interested in buying illicit drugs.

Steiner met with him at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center and proceeded to a picnic area on Ivy Road. He then sold him 1.6 grams of marijuana for $25. In February, Stiner was apprehended and was informed that he had sold the marijuana to an undercover agent.

Stiner was scheduled to ETS on February 10. As a result of this conviction, he will be required to serve his confinement prior to leaving the service. During confinement Stiner will receive no pay or allowances.

On March 17, Sgt. Raymond Leverich, HHC, 197th Support Battalion, was sentenced to a Bad Conduct Discharge, 30 days confinement, and reduction to E-1 for two specifications of larceny and one specification of forgery.

Leverich told the Military Judge, Col. Sebert Trail, that in December he stole a Zales Jewelers credit card from another soldier's desk at Fort Benning. Leverich took the credit card to the Zales Jewelry Store at Peachtree Mall, forged the account holder's signature, and used the credit card to purchase an engagement and wedding ring set for $764. Shortly after the theft from Zales, Leverich married his finance and gave her the stolen rings.

The theft was discovered the following month after the account holder received a statement for the rings which had been charged to his account. Special Agent Perry Seales of the Fort Benning CID Command conducted a thorough investigation of the incident and recovered the stolen rings from Leverich's wife. Leverich will serve his period of confinement at Fort Benning.

Here's what to do during bomb threat

American Forces Press Service

Think that caller's threat about a bomb is a practical joke? Better think again. People who call in bomb threats usually aren't joking. How you react to a bomb threat can mean the diference between life and death.

The car bomb that leveled the Marine Corps barracks in Beirut, Lebanon, killing 241 servicemen, demonstrated the destructive capacity of a single bomb.

Fortunately, the Beirut tragedy hasn't been repeated at other U.S. military installations. But no base, post, depot or training site overseas or in the United States is immune to the threat.

Each service and command has established plans for dealing with bomb threats. In every case, level heads and a speedy response to threats can help save lives and property.

Federal firearms experts advise the person receiving the threat to immediately notify the designated military police or Federal Protective Service representative and provide as many details as possible that may help in the investigation.

If a bomb threat is called in, they advise the person answering the telephone to take the following steps:

- Keep the caller on the line as long as possible. Ask to have the message repeated and record every word spoken by the caller.
- If the caller doesn't say where the bomb is located or what time it is expected to detonate, ask.
- Tell the caller the building is occupied and that an explosion will kill or injure many innocent people.
- Listen for peculiar background noises such as car engines, music or other sounds that could help determine the caller's location.

Month recognizes things that make kids of military special

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Community will be alive with displays, posters and numerous activities during The Month of the Military Child, which revials throughout the month of April.

"While every month is the month of the child, April has been set aside to specifically recognize the essential role that military child care services and youth activities play in the life of the military family," said Cathy Cox, family child care outreach worker, Child Development Services Office.

The Month of the Military Child stems from the National Association for the Education of Young Children, who proclaims the first week of April as the Week of the Young Child.

"Each housing community has set up events which encourages parent and child cohesion," said Cox.

In Fort Benning's Month of the Military Child program, events range from circus magic to cookouts and dances. But the opening day's activities may stand out as the most rewarding, as the Crime Prevention Van sets up on the grounds of the McGraw Manor Community Life Center on Custer Road, where after the appearance of McGruff, the Crime Dog, kids will be finger printed in a safeguard to children safety.

Later that evening, the Exceptional Family Member Program, located in Splinter Village, will provide buses for those wishing to attend the 7 p.m. European Circus magic Spectacular, at the Three Arts Theater.

The Month of the Military Child will be highlighted by many more events.

The April calendar includes:

Program helps parents recognize drug problems

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

The toughest job in any military service is to the balance mission requirements against those of the family. April, the Month of the Military Child, is a time to stop and reassess how well that balancing act is being accomplished.

Whether the family is military or civilian, raising a child in today's environment is harder than ever, according to three out of four adults answering a Louis Harris poll. These adults said the problems facing today's children are more severe than those they faced when they were children. The increased temptation to experiment with drugs and alcohol at a young age was identified as one of the most serious problems.

According to the 1985 national survey of high school seniors, 55.5 percent of today's teen-agers had tried alcohol and 28 percent had tried marijuana by the age of 15. When kids who have had a brush with the law are questioned on drug and alcohol use, the figures skyrocket. Of delinquents in correctional programs, 78.9 percent had tried marijuana by the age of 15, while 84.1 percent had tried alcohol by that age.

According to Dr. J. David Hawkins, director of the Center for Social Welfare Research at the University of Washington, early experimentation with drugs is a prime risk factor for developing a drug abuse problem. "Kids who try drugs or alcohol before the age of 15 are much more likely to have an abuse proble than if they wait untilthey're 19 to experiment," said Hawkins.

Risk factors are not guarantees that a problem will develop, said Hawkins. "It's similar to risk factors for lung cancer and heart disease. There are smokers who will never get lung cancer and people who eats lots of salt who will never have a heart attack. But researchers have demonstrated that by lowering the risk factors in a community you can reduce the community's rate of cancer and heart disease. Similarly, we're working on the theory that if you can reduce the number of risk factors for drug and alcohol abuse, you can lower a community's percentage of drug and alcohol abusers."

According to Hawkins, the following factors increase the likelihood of drug and alcohol abuse problems:

[illegible] general population [illegible] percent of the sons of alcoholic parents become alcoholics. "Of course," noted Hawkins, "that means that 75 to 80 percent of the sons of alcoholics are not alcoholics — but still, at least twice as many sons of alcoholics are also alcoholis." Researchers have not established a similar link in daughters of alcoholics.

- Poor family management. Expectations are not clear, supervision is inadequate, good deeds are not praised, and bad behavior is not met with moerate but prompt and consistent punishment.
- Boys who are still biting, kicking and otherwise acting aggressive in first and second grade. Particularly at risk are boys who are usually shy but show occasional violent behavior. Researchers have not established a similar link in girls.
- Academic failure in grades four through six. "Academic failure at this stage is a problem no matter what the cause — whether it is because the child has a learning disability or because the child is so smart that he or she is bored," said Hawkins.
- Low degree of commitment to school. "The kind of child who is always saying he hates school and wants to stay home or who starts cutting class is at high risk for drug abuse," said Hawkins.
- Having friends who use drugs. "This is one of the strongest risk factors all by itself. However, kids who care about school, who know what their parents expect of them and who have been rewarded for good behavior and appropriately disciplined for bad behavior are less likely to want to associate with drug users."
- Trying drugs before the age of 15. "This is the one we're concentrating on the most," said Hawkins. "The earlier a person experiments, the more likely he is to abuse drugs."

Hawkins and his colleagues have been training teachers and parents in the Seattle school district in techniques aimed at lowering the risk factors. The programs are matched to the children's grade from the first through sixth grade.

For example, parents of first grade children learn how to set expectations for their children, with appropriate rewards and discipline. First grade teachers learn techniques to handle aggressive students more effectively. Parents of second and third graders learn how to help their children succeed in school. Second and third grade teachers have their students tutor each other, which also helps students succeed in school. Later, parents of sixth graders learn to help their children say "no" to drugs.

Kay Garvey, Department of Defense Dependents Schools spokesperson, said that DoDDS has had similar programs for the past few years. "[illegible] in high school has benefitted su[illegible] and [illegible] drug [illegible] Kindergarten through grade 12."

According to Frank Gallivan, DoD Dependents Schools program manager for health, drugs and wellness, the efforts have been very successful because of the high level of command support and parental involvement. "In order for a program to be successful, it must be a total community effort," he said.

New W-4 form will be easier to complete

Tax Office

Congress specifically directed IRS to design a new W-4, Employee's Withholding Certificate, "so that withholding from a taxpayer's wages approximates as closely as possible the taxpayer's ultimate tax liability."

What was wrong with the "old" W-4? A series of computer tests of simulated situations showed that the form would not accommodate the new law's major changes that dropped rates, hiked standard deductions and personal exemptions and made major alterations in deductions and credits. According to these tests, any taxpayer using the "old" forms would be seriously underwithheld for income tax purposes. Since the TRA-86 requires that 90 percent of 1987 tax liability be prepaid, such underwithholding could result in penalties to taxpayers.

The new W-4 worksheet, which should have been in most employers' hands by the first of the year, allows people to personalize withholding by plugging in their own tax facts, such as income from more than one job, spousal income and non-wage income. By bringing in all the facts, taxpayers will avoid having a significant tax bill at the end of the year and thereby will avoid any penalty that might be imposed. (W-4A new form will be out in mid-April. Current W-4 is still valid.)

TRA-86 requires that each employee submit a new W-4 by October 1, 1987; however, we are urging taxpayers to complete a new Form W-4 as soon as possible in order to have the correct amount of tax withheld during the year. (Contact unit tax advisor for help with new W-4. Pick form up in tax assistance office.)

To help your clients' returns be processed more quickly and accurately and avoid unnecessary delay in their receiving their refunds, there are several things you can do.

To reduce delay in processing Forms 1040, tax practitioners can help by assembling return in "sequence number" order. The sequence number is the number printed immediately below the year in the upper right corner of the schedule or form. Attach payments and Forms W-2, W-2P, and W-2G in the spaces provided on the front of the Form 1040. All other statements or attachments should be behind the sequenced numbered forms and schedules even if they relate to another form or schedule. If the attachments are not in sequential order, the entire return must be pulled apart and assembled correctly before any other processing can occur.

Use the peel-off label from your client's tax forms package or post card. By using the label you reduce the likelihood of error and help us issue the refund to your client more quickly.

If your client received a tax forms package, use the bar-coded envelope. This saves us time in processing and can hasten your client's refund.

To ensure proper crediting of payments to your clients' accounts, send one check for each return, rather than one check for several returns or several checks for one return. Also include the Social Security or employer identificatin number, the type of tax, and the tax period of the check.

If your clients have changed their last name during 1986, they need to inform the Social Security Administration (SSA). In the event they do not notify SSA timely, their refund may be delayed significantly.

Changes brought about by the Tax Reform Act of 1986 to the IRA program take effect January 1, 1987. However, taxpayers have until April 15, 1987, to make contributions to their 1986 IRA's. Since the old law applied for 1986, all taxpayers with earned income may deduct contributions made to their IRA's up to $2,000 or the total of their earned income, whichever is less.

Under the new tax law, married taxpayers whose adjusted gross income is less than $40,000 on their joint return may take an IRA deduction whether or not they are active participants in a qualified retirement plan. Single taxpayers in qualified retirement plans may deduct. IRA contributions if their adjusted gross income is below $25,000.

The IRA deduction phases out over the next $10,000 of adjusted gross income. Married couples with AGI over $50,000 or single filers with AGI over $35,000 will not be able to deduct contributions to IRA's if their employers have retirement plans.

Taxpayers who do not have a qualified retirement plan at work may take an IRA deduction up to $2,000 or the amount of their income, whichever is less, regardless of their AGI.

Taxpayers who take or continue a loan to make an IRA contribution will not be able to deduct the interest on that loan.

In 1984, about 16 percent of all returns, that is about 15 million returns, clamed IRA deductions totalling $36 million. Preliminary figures for 1985 show little decrease in these figures.

Open IRA now and take deduction on 1986 tax return

American Forces Press Service

Hard earned money should be invested wisely. An Individual Retirement Arrangement is a good investment. However, an IRA should be chosen carefully and all financial aspects of it checked thoroughly, the Internal Revenue Service advises.

IRAs may be bought from different sources including banks, insurance companies, and mutual funds. Savers should compare IRAs from these different sources to choose the one that is best for his or her situation, the IRS says. Some things to look for when shopping for an IRA are:

- Are there fees?
- How much are the fees?
- What is the interest rate and how is it figured?
- How much will be in the account at retirement age?

The Internal Revenue Service cautions taxpayers about misleading or incomplete disclosure statements related to Individual Retirement Arrangements.

Even though the federal tax law on IRAs in general requires complete and accurate disclosure by financial institutions, important details are sometimes omitted, the IRS notes. For example, two investments may advertise the same interest rate but, because the interest rates are figured differently, a saver may earn more from one investment than from another. A prospective IRA purchaser should ask questions and try to obtain as much information as possible before signing on the dotted line, the IRS says.

One good way to determine which financial instrument is the best overall investment is to examine the part of the institution's disclosure statement that gives a projection of the value of the investment at the end of each of the first 5 years and also at ages 60, 65 and 70. Withdrawal penalties for money that is taken our prematurely are also supposed to be reflected in these projections, the IRS adds.

The IRS notes that taxpayers must contribute to their IRAs by April 15, 1987, for the contribution to apply to the 1986 tax year. Extensions to file a federal tax return do not extend the deadline for contributing to the IRA.

More information on IRAs is available in IRS Publication 590, Individual Retirement Arrangements (IRAs). To obtain it, use the order form in the tax package or call the IRS.

Office offers free tax help

By Jessica L. Kole
Installation Tax Officer

Fort Benning's Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program has been in operation since the beginning of the 1986 tax season. During his time, soldiers, family members and retirees who have taken advantage of the free income tax assistance have saved over $9000 in state and federal income tax preparation fees.

The VITA program is sponsored by the Legal Assistance Branch of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate with assistance from the Internal Reserve Service. In January, 110 unit tax advisors and ACS volunteers were trained as tax preparers by the IRS. All of the preparers wer required to attend a five-day training course and pass an examination which tested their ability to prepare the various federal tax forms and schedules.

The tax advisors are available to answer tax questions and prepare tax returns. Any problems which cannot be answered by the tax advisors are referred to the Legal Assistance Office. The unit tax advisors have also received training on the proper way to complete the new W-4 form.

In addition to the availability of unit tax advisors, the Fort Benning community can also take advantage of the services offered in the Tax Assistance Office in Building 5. This office has federal and state income tax forms, as well as the new W-4 forms.

The office is open from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Monday and Friday, 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Wednesday, and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday. To date, over 3,000 people have utilized the services of the Tax Assistance Office.

Doublecheck your figures

American Forces Press Service

To those expecting a tax return this year, the Internal Revenue Service says a quick check for accuracy can help avoid mistakes which might slow tax return processing. Carefully prepared, easy-to-read returns can be processed faster, the IRS advises. Once the return is completed, the IRS suggests that taxpayers consult the following check list:

- Have you attached all your Forms W-2, Wage and Tax Statements?
- Have you attached all the supporting schedules to your Form 1040?
- Is your name and social security number on each schedule?
- Is your arithmetic correct?
- Are all of your entries on the proper lines?
- If you rounded your numbers, did you round consistently?
- Is your handwriting legible?
- When you used the Tax Table, did you follow the line across to the correct column for your filing status?
- Did you sign and date your return? Remember, if it's a joint return, your spouse must sign too.
- Did you use the peel-off label, and is the information on the label correct? Have you made necessary corrections right on the peel-off label?
- Have you retained a copy of your return for your records?
- Did you remember to put a stamp on the pre-addressed envelope? If the return has several attachments, additional postage may be required.

were a good pair," said Capt. Bryan Foy, Company commander for Charlie 2-69.

"In my opinion the Bradley is the best thing to happen to the Infantry. The alternative is the M113."

During the CALFEX, the demonstration was conducted to show how well the team can operate together, both in manueverability and attacking the enemy target.

"The Bradley can lay suppresive fire against the enemy, giving the MI the ability to manuever against the enemy more effectively," Foy explained. "I think the Bradley and MI are a very good team."

SPIRITUAL

Spiritual health depends on quality of our 'workouts'

By Philip R. Touw
Martin Army Community Hospital Chaplain

Army Physical Fitness Test — Every six months this test assume an important meaning for every soldier in the Army. For some, the APFT is a welcome opportunity to excel.

For others, however, it brings groans, complaints, fear and frequently a sudden surge in sit-ups, pushups and running prior to being tested. If a physical weakness exists in a specific area, extra work needs to be done to enable an increase of physical strength in order to pass the PT test.

Last Friday we talked about measuring our spiritual health in terms of our relationships with other people, our ability to deal with adversity and our use of financial resources. When we find ourselves weak in certain spiritual areas, we need additinal spiritual exercise to increase our spiritual strength. Let me offer a few strength-enhancing suggestions.

The most significant way to improve spiritual health is to consistently read God's word. If I want to know something about wood-working or bicycle repair, the ovious way for me to learn is to buy books or magazines that will teach me.

The same principle applies to spiritual growth and understanding. The best way to know about God and God's will is to read what God had revealed to us in the Bible. I would suggest two ways to do this.

Read one chapter of the Bible every day. Begin in the Psalms and read a Psalm — or part of a long Psalm — daily.

Secondly, commit to memory oe verse of scripture each week. You may want to begin with the following verses: Psalm 18:2, 55:22; 147:3; Nehemiah 8:10 and II Timothy 1:7.

As you read a chapter each day, the list of verses you wish to memorize will expand. I strongly believe that if you go through the Bible and underline every sentence that refers to healthy, power-filled living, you will have the greatest text book on health and strength ever written.

The secod way to increase spiritual health is to develop what Norman Vincent Peale calls a "calm center of life." That is done through an active prayer life.

I believe that it is important to begin each day with a quiet devotional time. It does not have to be long; but having such a quiet time will help begin the day in confidence and strength.

In your quiet time of prayer, meditate on the verses you are memorizing and also think about these biblical truths: "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength" (Isaiah 30:15); You will keep a person in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on you" (Isaiah 26:3); and finally "Come unto me all of you who are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest" (Matthew 11:28).

The way we begin our day establishes patterns for how the day will progress and end. Try to begin every day calmly in the presence of God, who is our rock, our fortress, our deliverer and our strength. (Psalm 18:2).

The third exercise which will help to increase spiritual strength is to overcome destructive, self-defeating habits. Nothing saps spiritual strength more quickly than self-destructive behavior, which tears us down physically and spiritually.

Abuse of alcohol, overeating, uncontrolled anxiety, smoking, all contribute to keep us from feeling good about who and what we are and consequently contribute to spiritual weakness. We at some point make the decision to start a destructive habit; we can also make the decision to stop it.

If we avoid a self-destructive habit for just thirty days, we will be in control of the habit; the habit will no longer control us.

The final way that I would suggest to increase spiritual health or strength is through service to others. As we give we grow. Keith Miller in his book, A Taste of New Wine, tells the touching story of a wealthy New York executive who was struggling with spiritual weakness.

He was about to renounce his faith when he unexpectedly learned the secret of spiritual strength. He was on his way to catch a train at Grand Central Station. He was late and was hurrying down the platform to catch the train that would take him to Connecticut to finalize a million dollar real estate deal.

In his hurry he collided with a young boy carrying a box under his arm. As they collided the contents of the box spilled onto the crowded platform. The buy xecutive was perplexed. Should he stay or run to the rain and arrive in Connecticut on time to close the deal?

He hesitated; then kneeled down to help the boy gather up the contents of the box. When they had finished, the young boy looked at the executive and asked, "Mister, are you Jesus?"

At that moment the young businessman felt his spiritual strength to begin to grow. He had learned the secret of spiritual growth: it is in emptying ourselves that we are filled; it is in losing ourselves in service that we find outselves; it is in becoming servants that we become the children of the King.

How strong — spiritually — are you? If your spiritual life could use some toning up, try a few of these spiritual exercises and begin to experience what the prophet Nehemiah meant when he said, ". . . the joy of the Lord is my strength."

Santa Fe to perform at Fort Benning

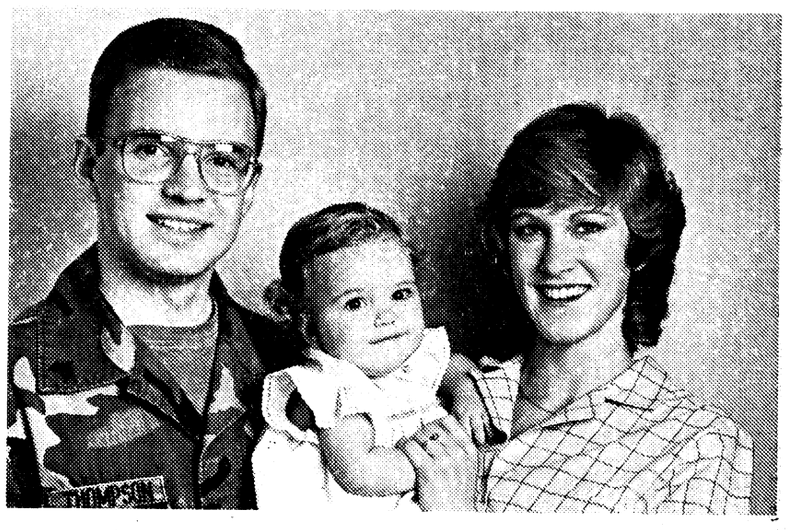
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Santa Fe. You've heard of the railroad. You might have visited New Mexico's capital city. But while visions of an old freight train chugging through a dusty western town may linger in your mind, this Santa Fe is a bit different.

Picture instead several guys in their late twenties on a concert stage, surrounded by guitars, synthesizers and a myriad of speakers, amplifiers, and other electronic gadgetry. This Santa Fe — while its travel schedule might rival that of the railroad — is actually a band, based not in New Mexico, but in Indianapolis, Indiana.

Formed in 1978, the group features synthesized keyboards, guitars and vocals, and performs in a popular style that fuses rock, jazz and pop/top-40 genres. The band has toured the United States and in Japan and Africa as well.

Santa Fe is Spanish for Holy Faith and te group is composed of Spirit-filled musicians who are using their musical talents to spread the Gospel of Christ. And they will be at Fort Benning this Sunday and Monday.



Their 2nd Infantry Training Brigade concert will be at Theatre #2 in Harmony Church at 3 p.m. on Sunday, March 29. They will perform for the 1st I.T.B in Theatre #3 on Sand Hill at 7 p.m. On Monday at 4 p.m. they will be hosted by the 197th Infantry Brigade in the Kelley Hill Chapel. Each of the concerts is open to everyone.

"Jim helped us out in so many ways. Finding a place to live. Moving in. Helping Belinda find a job. Getting Jessalyn into the child care center.

Straightening out my pay problem. He really pointed the way.

"I think if you've had a good experience, you want to repay it. When I become a Sponsor, I hope I can do as good a job as Jim."

The Army Sponsorship Program grows in scope and importance as, each day, new Sponsors join the Program and soldiers and their families who have been sponsored in the past reach out to help others. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

Soldiers help Special Olympics

Mountaineers volunteer to work with children at Phenix City games

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet Staff writer

Soldiers from the 2nd and 3rd Battalions of the 14th Infantry Regiment, 10th Mountain Division, recently helped out with the Phenix City Special Olympics by working as volunteers in the events.

The 29 mountain men helped the children compete in a number of events that included the long jump, relay runs, ball tossing and wheelchair races.

The soldiers assisted by measuring jumps, keeping time, walking the children to different events and by pushing wheelchairs.

Scattered around the field of the Central High School track Friday it was not unusual to see a child perched atop a soldier's shoulders to get a better view of the competition.

The mountaineers have formed a bond with Phenix City, and the Special Olympics are just one example of how the city has adopted the soldiers.

In the opening ceremony at the Olympics "Phenix City declared itself the 'Home of the Mountain.' Through the city resolution they adopted us," said Capt. Steven Duckworth, the Brigade civil affairs officer.

"We've made ourselves responsible for Phenix City and did this as a part of our Associatin for the United States Army plan," Duckworth added.

The Special Olympics is for children who are mentally handicapped, although some of the children also have physical handicaps.

The olympics included 125 children from Russell County and Phenix City.

All youngsters who competed received ribbons for their efforts. "Here, we tried to make them all winners regardless of how they did," said Mack Hebson, special education coordinator for the Phenix City School District.

Children who did exceptionally well will compete in district events April 11, followed by the state finals in May, Hebson said.

"That's where the serious competition is," he said.

It was a special day for the mountain men and special impressions must have been made. "Next year we (the 10th Mountain Division) plan to host the Special Olympics," Duckworth said.

'RIVER RATS'

Surprise concert entertains diners

By Calvin Gatch
Seabee correspondent

It's not surprising that music flows spontaneously from the post's most recently-formed singing group, the "River Rats."

Founder of the group is Chaplain (Capt.) Andrew Bullard III, and the River Rats is the latest in a succession of gospel groups formed by the National Baptist Church minister and Army chaplain.

The group came together earlier this week when Bullard asked for volunteers at a prayer breakfast. The resulting group sang gospel hymns at the prayer service and then entertained patrons at the post Burger King with several songs, sung in four-part harmony.

"Music is a great motivator," Bullard said. "It also inspires. I've always enjoyed singing. It helps you make it through the day."

He said he heard gospel singing for the first time as a young child at his father's church in Chattanooga, Tenn. Bullard has sung in a number of choirs, including his father's church choir and ones at Chattanooga's Riverside High School, the University of Tennessee-Chattanooga, from which he graduated in 1979 and the Morehouse School of Religion in Atlanta, Ga., where his singing won school recognition.

Bullard's mother, Peggy, an accomplished soprano singer, gave each of her eight children musical training. One of Bullard's brothers, Alexander, is also a National Baptist minister with a church in Chattanooga; a sister, Mamie, is a semi-professional singer, enrolled in a music Master's degree program at the University of Tennessee, and brother Justino, a sergeant with the 3rd "War Eagle Brigade" at Fort Campbell, Ky., has sung regularly on a gospel television program.

Bullard entered the Army after graduation from Morehouse, and he formed gospel singing groups at both of his previous assignments; the 2nd of the 502nd Strike Force Battalion at Fort Campbell, Ky., and the 1st of the 38th Infantry Battalion at Camp Hovey, Korea.

Bullard's present assignment is chaplain of the 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group. Members of the River Rats all belong to the 586th Engineer Company, whose slogan is River Rats, and whose motto is "No Bridge Too Far."

New program emphasizes quality care

By Ann Keays
TRADOC, OCPA

FORT MONROE, Va. — "Quality child care provider" is a new term you'll be hearing around the Army. What does it mean? Simply put, it's an adult who has been trained and certified under Army regulations to provide in-home care for children in government quarters.

The key in the phrase is quality.

Child care providers are part of a new Army-wide program called Family Child Care. The program is an organized, regulated, and professionally managed system that trains its participants to share in the development of youngsters while providing a paid service to parents who cannot be at home at all hours with their children.

"We don't want anyone in the program who doesn't have the children in mind," says Harriett Holley, Family Child Care Specialist at TRADOC headquarters. Holley serves as a liaison between the TRADOC installations' FCC programs and the Department of the Army.

The Family Child Care Program operates under the Child Development Services on each installation. An FCC director certifies local child care by establishing training for potential child care providers.

All community resources are brought into the training program because of its scope. Hospital and social services professionals, community health nurses, nutritionists, the fire department, staff judge advocate, and post safety and preventive medicine offices share in, and contribute to, the Family Child Care Program.

Certified child care providers are referred to parents who request child care. In addition, there are support groups for providers and their spouses, newsletters, liability insurance, and consultation services. FCC lending libraries provide training and educational materials, high chairs, booster seats, and other items that child care providers may need.

Because of the Army-wide organization of FCC, more resources are available to child care providers than to privately employed child care specialists — or babysitters.

But the most important element in the Family Child Care Program is the certification process, according to Holley. This is where quality is achieved through careful screening of applicants, followed by well-

Seabee 'clowns around' during off duty time

Sisu's act uses a mixture of patriotism, pride to teach school children proper way to behave

By Calvin Gatch
Seabee correspondent

A Seabee from Michigan brought smiles to the faces of children with his Scandinavian clown act last week.

Petty Officer 1st Class Sandy Mattila, whose stage name is Sisu, performed at Fort Benning's Patch School and Wesley Heights Elementary School in Columbus.

Mattila is one of 400 members of Reserve Naval Mobile Construction Battalion-25 whose reservist members are performing their two weeks annual training duty at Fort Benning.

RNMCB-25 is headquartered at Glenview (Ill.) Naval Air Station; its members live in Iowa, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Mattila lives in the small town of South Range, Mich., and works as a heavy equipment operator for a contracting firm. He spends much of his spare time giving free performances for children, senior citizens, and the handicapped. He has performed for schools near a number of the Seabees' annual training sites, including Gulfport, Miss., Adak, Alaska, and Camp Pendleton, Calif.

Upon his arrival at Benning, Mattila spread the word that he would perform during his off-hours at local schools.

The Shriner-sponsored clown act incorporates a mixture of patriotism and pride in ancestry. Sisu is a Finnish word that translates into determination or fortitude — or more simply, "guts."

"That's the quality that enables you to overcome any obstacle," Sisu explained to the children. "When you fall off your bicycle, you don't give up. You keep trying until you've mastered bike-riding."

His basic themes were especially well-suited to Wesley Heights Elementary School, which is sponsoring an ongoing program entitled, "Proud of Who We Are." Guest speakers throughout the past year and a half have addressed different aspects of this theme.

"We know that students perform better if they have a good self-image," said Maryjo Coolik, a special education teacher and one of the program coordinators. "I think Sisu's performance helped children understand how each one of our backgrounds has something unique — something we can be proud of."

Many Finnish traditions molded the childhood experiences of Matila and his brothers and sisters. Each family member spent half an hour a week in the sauna, which was an essential part of every farm; home baked bread and pastry was standard fare, and Mattila and his brothers and sisters learned early in life how to care for each other after their mother died in childbirth with the last child. Sisu intersperses patriotism and ethnic awareness into his clown performance. He is introduced to the children in a bright red-white-and blue flag sweater and one of his floppy backwards-facing boots is also painted with the colors of old Glory.

Part of Mattila's performance consists of putting on his makeup in front of the children, so they can learn exactly how the laborious process is accomplished. He also sings several traditional Finnish songs, and ends the performance with five dances with his puppet dancing partner, STUP.

The letters in STUP's name stand for what Sisu calls the four most important words in the childrens' vocabulary. Those words are sorry, thank you and please.

"If you master these words," Sisu told the children, "You'll be able to handle just about any situation you meet."

Mattila spent four years about the Navy Destrouyer USS Stockham during World War II. He returned to Northern Michigan after his discharge, lured in part by the community ice hockey team he played for many years. After working a year in the copper mines, he joined his brothers' roadbuilding firm.

He and his wife Patricia have three children.

Mattila joined the Naval Reserve Seabee program in 1971. As a member of Company A, he operates the battalion's heavy equipment.

"Petty Officer Mattila is certainly a credit to our battalion," says Commanding Officer Cdr. Terry Hodnik. "Seabees have created a lot of good will over the years with their non-profit community construction projects. Petty Officer Mattila's community service reflects one of the Navy's goals of using both our military and civilian skills to enhance the image of the Navy."

Care

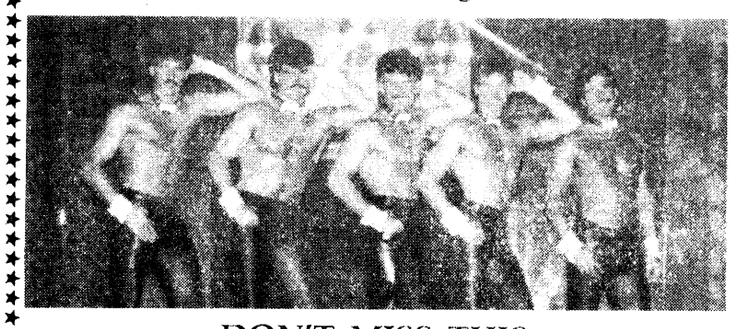
The local FCC staffs develop individual education plans for each child care provider. Some of the training they receive is identical to that given to Child Care Center personnel, said Holley, but it also is more extensive.

"This is not a one-shot deal," Holley added. "We encourage retention. When FCC providers move to their next installation, they can continue to work in the program there because of our standardized procedures."

Another method by which quality is achieved is the consistent monitoring of the care in the provider's home.

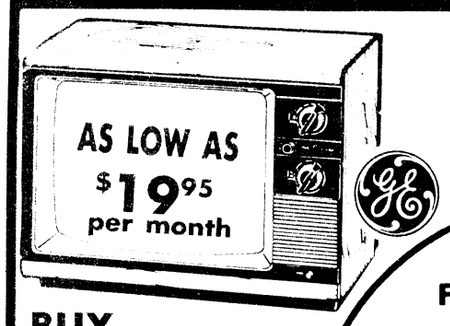
"We (the FCC staffs) know the make-up of the home, how many children the provider can effectively care for, how much one-on-one lap time is needed, and whether nutritional meals are planned and prepared for the children," Holley said.

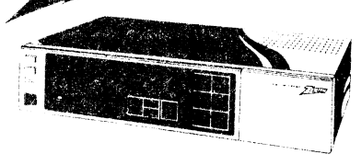
Holley explained that the U.S. Department of Agriculture Food Program pays child care providers for feeding children according to an approved menu schedule. The FCC director checks and verifies the menu, which must include balanced meals and such items as fresh vegetables and real fruit juices. A typical provider caring for four or five children per month averages $200-$250 in payments from the USDA Food Program.

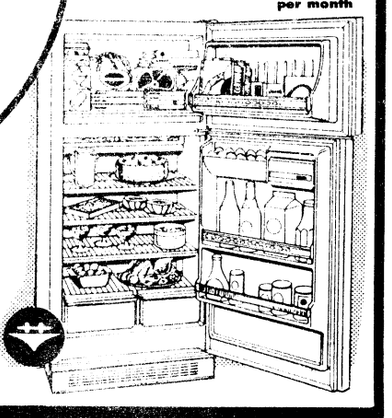


Another aspect of the quality care is the professional outlook required of the child care providers. They are employed in a business and must be ready to greet the arriving children as though beginning a normal work day, Holley said. "They are not supposed to come to the door in a bathrobe — unprepared."

The FCC program allows the government "to get so much more for our money," Holley said. For example, a new child care center costing $1.2 million can care for 200 children — while only $30,000 could manage an FCC program for the same number of children. Under FCC the children and parents benefit from personalized care in a family environment under monitored standard procedures.







Anyone interested in becoming a child provider under the FCC program should contact an installation Child Development Services office, Holley said.

The Chattahoochee Auto Tag Office reminds all Chattahoochee County residents living on Fort Benning to register their vehicles in a timely fashion. The tag office is located on the second floor of the 1st Union Bank (formerly 1st National Bank) at the Rail Street side.

Persons with names beginning with letters L through R should buy their tags in March. Those with names beginning with letters S through Z should buy their tags in April.

The on-post location of the Chattahoochee tag office was opened recently as a convenience to soldiers. The office has also changed its hours so that soldiers can buy tags during their lunch hour. The office is now open from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m., and 2 to 5 p.m.

The tag office will no longer accept personal checks in payment for tag fees.

Fort Benning depends on its volunteers to keep valuable service programs alive. These programs allow the Army to take care of its own. While a volunteer helps others, he is also helping himself in many ways such as, learning a new skill, fine tuning an old skill, meeting new friends, becoming familiar with the community, getting some time away from the children, helping others or gaining experience to obtain paid employment. Whatever your needs are, please consider the following positions.

Receptionist: this is a busy job which involves greeting visitors, directing them to the proper place or helping to answer their questions. These jobs are currently available at the Army Community Service Volunteer Resource Center and the Red Cross Office.

Army Emergency Relief clerk: here is a job where you will assist in filing, typing and handling phone calls. This is a very busy and interesting job.

Budget counselor: if you enjoy working with figures and planning and preparing budgets, this position at ACS is for you.

Tagging and consignment clerks: the Thrift Shop has several openings available on Tuesdays, Thursdays and two Saturdays a month. You can work in the main store, Furniture Barn or Craft Cabin.

Caseworker: these Red Cross positions assist military families who are faced with emergency or stressful situations.

Safety instructor: also a Red Cross opening, in this role you can learn to teach First Aid, Water Safety and cardiopulmonary rescuscitation.

National Infantry Museum tour guide: learn to be a vital link between the curious and the "Queen of Battle." The training alone is a motivator and self-esteem builder.

Santa's Castle: here's your chance to play with toys. This job consists of cleaning and repairing donated toys, bicycles and games for needy children.

Library: the library needs a few people to help file cards, shelve books and assist the librarian in other duties.

We offer free nursery care at Tot Town for volunteers. If you have a skill or interest not mentioned here, the Volunteer Resource Center will assist you in finding the right place for you. For more information, call 545-5602 or 545-5176p Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., or stop by the Volunteer Resource Center at 310 McIver St.

Petty Officer 3rd Class John Miller works out at Brant Wells gym. Calvin Gatch

Sailor credits fitness to rigid workout regimen

By Calvin Gatch
Staff writer

The intense physical fitness training that Petty Officer 3rd Class John Miller received at Fort Benning's jump school 21 years ago impressed upon him the importance of being physically fit.

"Ever since then, I've worked out regularly," said the 39-year-old Waterloo, Iowa native. "It's something I like doing. In some ways, I can say that the jump school fitness training created a routine that I've continued throughout my life."

After finishing jump school, he served a 12 month tour in Vietnam with the 101st Airborne Division, participating in the Tet Offensive at Hue and the Siege of Queson.

Upon discharge from the Army, Miller returned to Dubuque, Iowa, where he went to work for Dubuque Packing Co., the predecessor of FPI Foods, as a meatpacker.

He joined the Naval Reserve seven years ago, and is presently a construction electrician with Reserve Naval Mobile Construction Battalion-25 Seabees in DENVER, Colo. presently performing their two week's annual training at Fort Benning.

Miller's physical fitness regime consists of three or four workouts a week lifting weights and jogging. He has maintained his pattern while at Fort Benning, using the weight room at Brant Wells gymnasium.

Miller says physical fitness is important to several of his hobbies: he is the oldest member of the Dubuque Rugby Club, plays basketball regularly and enjoys free fall parachuting.

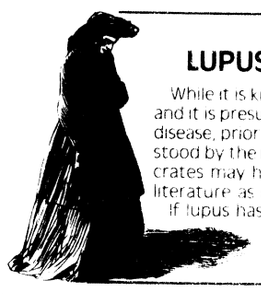
Post soldier earns spot on Army wrestling team

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

A Fort Benning soldier recently won a spot on the All Army Wrestling Team.

Capt. William Francis is currently undergoung extensive training at Fort Campbell, Ky., for the Armed Forces Competition.

Francis, who is assigned to the 12th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade has just completed the Officer Advance Course.



The 5-foot 2-inch, 28-year-old soldier has joined the team of 23 men (20 men and 3 alternates) and expects to wrestle in the 125 pound or the 135 pound weight classes.

Francis, who has wrestled since high school, once competed in the pre-Olympic qualifying tournament.

"I had crushed a disc in my neck. I won one match but lost the second. I was wrestling injured so I couldn't go any further," he said.

Next week, Francis will join the team and head to Mathers Air Force Base in Sacramento, Calif., to compete in the Armed Forces Competition with other military services. Winners will then go to the allied nations' competition, the Conseil International Du-Sport Militaire.

Francis, who will ultimat ly be stationed with the 25th Infantry in Hawaii, has hopes for the Olympics. "This is the year for you to make a name for yourself to make it to the Olympics," he said.

LUPUS HAS EXISTED FOR CENTURIES

While it is known that the writer Flannery O'Conner died of lupus and it is presumed the poet Emily Dickinson also suffered from the disease, prior to the nineteenth century, lupus was not well understood by the medical community. Yet, today, we believe Hippocrates may have been the first to describe it in the medical literature as far back as 400 B.C.

If lupus has existed for that long, isn't it about time we found the cause and cure?

Marathon running not for everyone

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

Did you ever wonder what makes a marathon runner run? Well, the answers to that question are not as simple as the question itself.

Take for instance CWO 3 Richard T. Schick, a 37-year-old physician assistant at Troop Medical Clinic 5. Schick not only runs marathons (26.2 miles) but he also runs ultra-marathons (runs that are longer than 26.2).

Schick, who leaves soon for the Boston Marathon, competed in the Pine Mountain Mountain Trail Run recently and said his reasons for running are fairly simple.

"I think it's because I enjoy the runs. It's really multifactual, he said. "Another reason is the challenge of doing them. I'm a bit of an egotist and I like the notoriety."

Discipline plays an important role to the marathon runner and sometimes provides motivation. "I spend a good 12 hours a week on my feet running," Schick said, "and my weekly training miles are from 60 to 90 miles a week."

Another Boston Marathon contender, 1st Lt. Daniel Sullivan, platoon leader for Company B, 2nd Batalion, 14th Infantry Regiment, 10th Mountain Division, said that if he doesn't run, he feels guilty. "I try to run 50 to 60 miles a week. The hardest part is being disciplned enough. If I take one day a week off more than I should, I feel guilty.

Sullivan ran his first marathon three months ago in Macon, Ga., without previous marathon training. "I'd always been a runner. It was a beautiful course in Macon. I was really surprised to find out I qualified for the Boston Marathon," Sullivan said.

Most runners agree that the good feeling they get from running is an important reason for doing so.

"For a lot of runners it is the most positive self-image maker that they have in their life. It's a tremendous feeling to finish a marathon. One that is unequaled, a feeling of tremendous accompishment," said Dr. (Maj.) John M. Henderson, family physician at Martin Army Community Hospital on fellowship to the Hughston Orthapedic Clinic in Columbus.

Henderson, who tries to average 50 miles a week, began running in medical school to combat a weight problem. He believes that running attracts a different sort of person.

"You have to do a lot of introspection. The last six miles you start to ask yourself, 'What am I really made of?'

When asked about the "runners high," Henderson denys that that is the only reason runners run. "There is some release of a narcotic-like chemical from the brain. It's something that is nice and beautiful and simple," he said. "I think what it really is is a nice feeling of well-being. You're-balancing your psyche and your body. It's one way of saying your body is in tune with the world," he added."

Schick agreed. "Running is my quiet time. I can do a lot of thinking. That's 100 percent my time," he said.

Another interesting aspect of marathon running is the commraderie. "What's nice about marathon running is that you get to meet a lot of nice people," Henderson said. Sullivan said that he enjoyed the longer runs because he could talk to people along the way.

Dr. George Sheehan summed up his reasons for running in his book "This Running Life" when he wrote, "When a stranger asks me what I do, my reflex is to tell him my time for the marathon. The marathon, you see, is my bench mark. It is the status symbol in my community. It is my credibility factor, not only for others but for myself as well. My marathon time is in fact my most valued possession."

IOBC team wins Orienteering meet

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Infantry Officers Basic Course team battled the terrain and 10 other teams to claim The United States Army Infantry Center Orienteering Championship crown.

Orienteering, a combination of land navagation and cross country running is a sport which challenges both mind and body

According to Linda Ferguson, Fort Benning Orienteering Director, 102 soldiers registered for the two-day meet. "They competed for trophies in five individual categories plus team trophies," she said, "and we had Mikell Platt, United States Orienteering Champion design the maps for the course." Ferguson added that Platts expertise in map making was a big reason that the meet was a success. "Without a good map," she said, "some people have problems finding the various checkpoints on the course."

Mark Crowson, IOBC, didn't seem to have any trouble as he claimed top place in his category and led his team to victory. "I think we did so well because we spend a lot of time in the woods," he said, "and you have to be in good physical shape to keep up with these young lieutenants."

Top finishers in each of the categories are: Yellow; 1st, Kent Miles, 197th; 2nd, Thomas Popalowski; 3rd, Keith Emerick

Orange; 1st, Jeffrey Teune, USARSA; 2nd, Adolph Carlson; 3rd, Francis Suarez, USARSA

The winners in the womens category are: 1st, Barbara Fonquette, OCS; 2nd, Lisa Wood, OCS

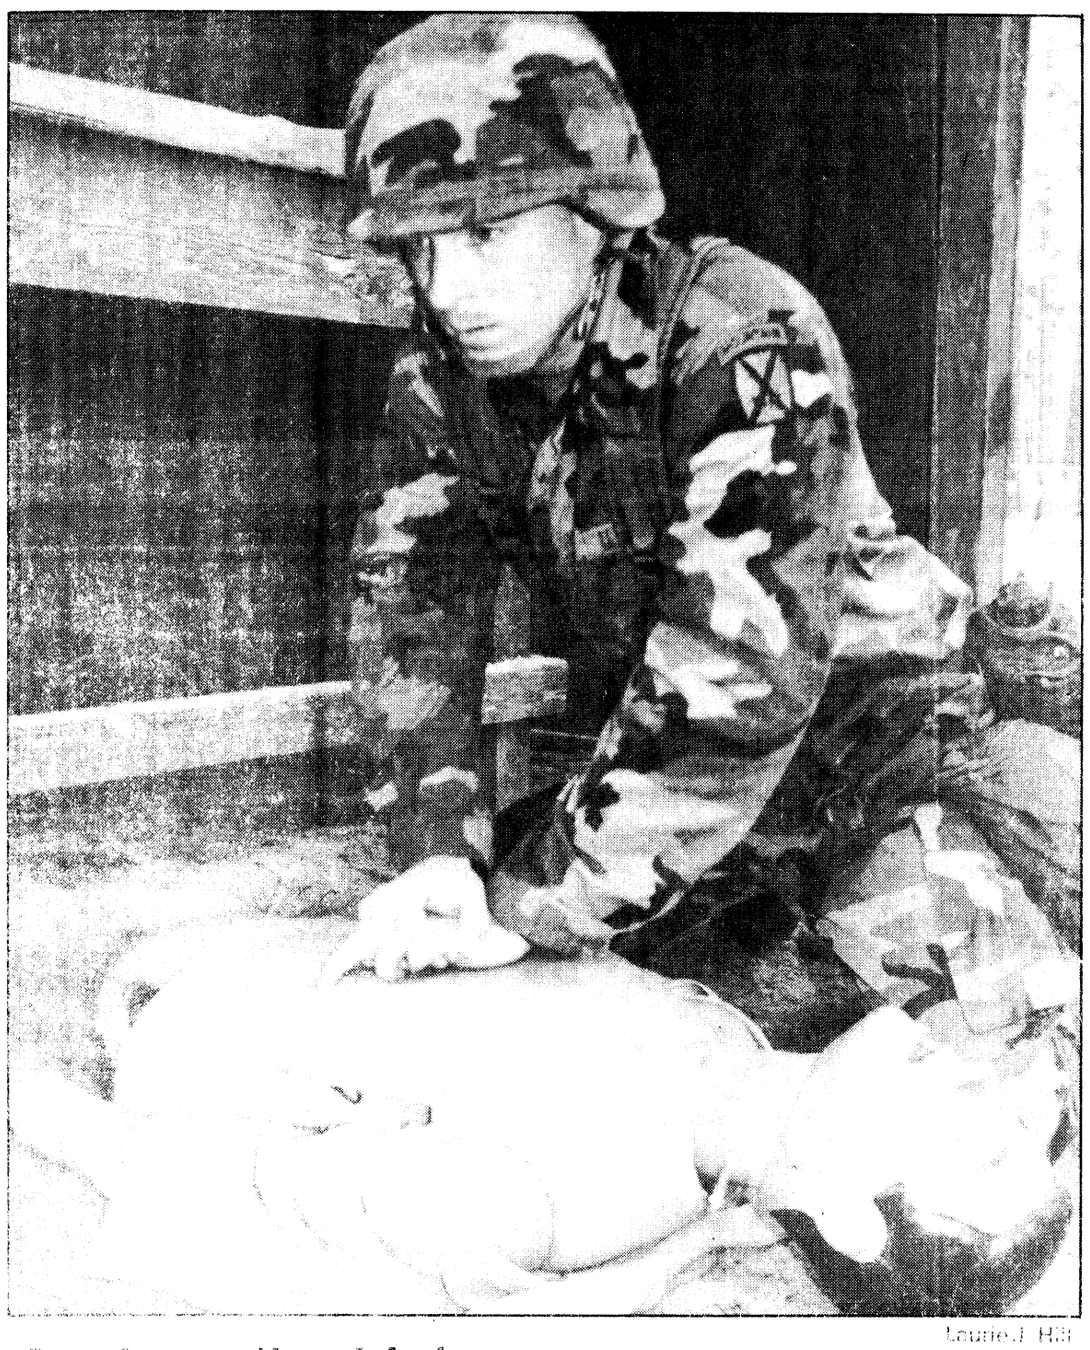
Infantry Conference convenes next week

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

The Secretary of the Army, a congressman, other distinguished civilians and 46 general officers from around the world will descend on Fort Benning Monday for the 1987 Infantry Conference.

The annual conference, "Pulls together infantry experience from all over the world to chart the course for the infantry for the rest of the year," said Maj. Gary Dacey, a spokesman in the U.S. Army Infantry School's Office of the Secretary.



The theme for this year's conference is "The Infantry Force: Regional Challenges and Combined Arms Imperatives."

The focus will be on the effect of regional considerations on organizing, training and developing doctrine.

The conference, running through April 9, will feature highlights such as an address by Gen. Carl Vuono on "Preparing the Force for Victory," and panel discussions on equipping and training the force and organizational issues.

The Army Chief of Staff Gen. John Wickham will wind the conference up with a presentation on "The State of Today's Army."

The conference is not open to the public.

Burba chosen to command light division

Leuer becomes Benning's new Chief of Infantry

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

Burba

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. has been selected to command the 7th Infantry Division (Light), at Fort Ord, Calif., a Department of Army spokesman announced Monday in Washington, D.C.

Burba, currently the Chief of Infantry and post commander, will be succeeded by Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, who now commands the 5th Infantry Division (Mechanized), at Fort Polk, La.

The change of command will take place sometime in June.

Burba became assistant commandant of the Infantry School in July 1983. In January 1986, he succeeded then Maj. Gen. John W. Foss, as post commander and Chief of Infantry, when Foss took command of the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Leuer has also served as the assistant commandant of Fort Benning's Infantry School. He held the position from April 1982, until giving the assignment over to Burba in July 1983.

Leuer, 52, has held various command and staff positions.

He was the assistant Chief of Staff, Operations, United Nations Command/Republic of Korea-United States Combined Forces Command, United States Forces Korea/Eighth U. S. Army, and Commander General, 193rd Infantry Brigade.

He also commanded a battalion of the 101st Airborne Division (Airmobile), in Vietnam.

Leuer's awards include the Legion of Merit, Bronze Star with two oak leaf clusters, and the Meritorious Service Medal with oak leaf cluster.

Leuer was commissioned a second lieutenant upon graduation from the University of Iowa, where he received a bachelor of science degree in business administration.

His military education continued with the Armed Forces Staff College and the Industrial College of the Armed Forces.

Army offers dental insurance plan for family members

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. based families of active duty servicemembers will be automatically covered by a new Defense Department dental program, beginning Aug. 1.

Under a contract to be awarded April 3, active duty sponsors will begin co-sharing the cost of the coverage, paying a small monthly premium of probably no more than $10 beginning Aug. 1. Under the program, the government will pay from 80-100 percent of the cost for authorized benefits.

Family members will receive 100 percent coverage for diagnostic oral examination and preventive dental services. This plan includes such services as X-rays, laboratory tests, and flouride treatments during initial, periodic and emergency visits.

The dental plan will pay 80 percent of charges for basic restorative services. These include cavity fillings, stainless steel crowns, and repairs to dental appliances.

Since enrollment is automatic, those U.S.-based family members declining to participate must have their military sponsor decline to enroll in the program. Members wishing to withdraw from the program may do so after April 14. To prevent the automatic payroll deduction from starting in July servicemembers must decline to enroll by June 30. Army officials state that definitive disenrollment/enrollment procedures are being developed.

The plan requires that new enrollments and changes to enrollments be the responsibility of the military sponsor. During the month of April, each service member will receive a personalized letter regarding enrollment in the Active Duty Family Member Dental Plan. This letter will identify the number of family members eligible for dental benefits ased on the Defense Enrollment Reporting System (DEERS) records as of March 1. Attached to the letter will be a five-page flyer explaining the details to the program.

Families enrolled in the program may cotinue to use space-available are for those services not covered by the program.

Servicemembers who elect coverage will be required to participate for a minimum of 24 months. An exception to the 24 month participation requirement will be allowed if the servicemember is transferred.

The new program is not available to military retirees and their families, survivors of deceased active or retired military members, or former spouses of servicemembers.

CHAMPUS plans to announce the awarding of the contract on April 3.

Program for civilians covers nursing home care

American Forces Press Service

Department of Defense civilians will have an option for long-term care insurance if a current personnel proposal goes into effect.

The Office of Personnel Management has proposed offering federal workers an option of additional insurance that would cover nursing home and home health care expenses.

"A growing number of American workers, their spouses and families are forced to carry the heavy and unanticipated cost of nursing home or some extended care for an older family member," said Constance Horner, Office of Personnel Management director. "This new option relieves the family of a great financial burden at an already difficult time."

The long-term care option will be offered through the Federal Employees Group Life Insurance Program. More than 900,000 DoD civilians are already enrolled in the program, which private-sector insurance companies administer and insure. The new option will be added by redirecting, not increasing, current federal costs, Horner said.

The OPM proposal will work as follows:

- Upon reaching 50 years of age, a worker who has participated in the basic life insurance program for 10 years will have a one-time opportunity to convert the face value of basic insurance or $25,000, whichever is less, to long-term care coverage;
- The employee can purchase long-term care coverage for his or her spouse at group rates without evidence of insurability.

Traffic will be rerouted for Saturday race

Officers Wives Club

Saturday's Officers' Wives Club Festival of Running means changes in traffic on main post in some housing areas.

Every effort was made to select routes that would have the minimum effect on the post traffic flow. Lumpkin and First Division Roads will be closed from 6 to 11 a.m. as well as Vibbert Avenue from Riverside to Doughboy.

Ingersol Avenue between Vibbert and Wold Avenues will be closed to through traffic.

Golfers are advised to take the Marne Road exit to Baltzell Avenue.

Occupants of quarters living along the race route (primarily Lumpkin and First Division) are asked to park their cars behind their quarters during the race.

If you can walk or ride a bike to Doughboy Stadium, parking problems will be minimized.

Finally, the assistance of all motorists is required to insure a safe series of races. Of particulr importance is the absolute necessity to follow the instructions of the control personnel at the many streets bordering the race route.

Four officers selected for brigade slots

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Four Fort Benning colonels made the recently released brigade commanders list, while another three were named on the alternate list.

Tapped out for colonel's command for 1988 are three U.S. army Infantry School officers: Col. Edwin P. Smith, Lt. Col. (P) Linwood Burney and Lt. Col. (P) Lawson Magruder. Lt. Col. (P) Harvey Watson, of the United States Army Infantry Board, was the fourth selectee.

Chosen for the alternate's list were Col. Conrad Boterweg, the director of the Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities; Col. Phillip Harris, who heads the Directorate of Engineering and Housing and Col. Thomas Feuerborn, the post provost marshal.

The selection boards based their appointments for colonel's troop command primarily on an officer's demonstrated ability and potential to lead troops, especially in combat.

The board also judges the officer's overall military experience to ensure a high order of competence in the application of tactics, techniques and procedures associated with their respective branch.

Class B phones being installed in remote areas

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Post hunters will soon have emergency telephones available to them in several different locations in the field.

According to Col. James Mace, Chairman of the Post Fish and Wildlife Council, these telephones will make it a whole lot easier for the hunters. "Before, there was no way for a guy to call if he needed help," he said. "There is always someone getting stuck out there.

The areas in which the phones are located are marked on the range maps at the hunting checkpoints. Phones are being installed at the following locations: 10th Armored Division Road and Red Arrow Road; 10th Armored Division Road and Forest Road; 2nd Armored Division Road and Buena Vista Road; Box Springs Road and Buena Vista Road; 1st Division Road and Hourglass Road and Red Diamond Road and Box Springs Road. These phones are class B phones, which can be used for on post calls only.

The telephones are now being installed by phone company personnel, "as weather permits," said Harley Chase, a spokesman in the Safety Office. "They should be operational soon."

OPINION

Readers praise service at Benning commissary

Dear Editor:

Recently I visited the Fort Jackson commissary. This commissary has been in operation for about a year. I was quite impressed by the facility and wish that the Fort Benning commissary had some of its unique qualities.

The most important aspect of the Fort Jackson facility was that shoppers and those waiting to check out did not cross each other's paths. They shop one place and check out at another. The Jackson facility also had a special line for wheel chairs and a special cart for them.

Instead of having a bagger follow you to a car, the customer received a number and the groceries are shuffled of elsewhere. The customer goes and get the car and drives around to a pickup area. All tips are paid inside before the customer leaves.

I do not think our commissary has the capability to this but it would be super if they could.

In closing, the Fort Benning commissary is very good and considering the volume that it handles, it might be the best in the world.

The management is good and the check out clerks are a great bunch, as are the people we do not see who unload the trucks, stock the shelves, cut the meats, etc.

Keep on trucking.

Weinberger declares April 'Month of the Military Child'

American Forces Press Service

Last year, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger issued a proclamation declaring April "The Month of the Military Child."

As Weinberger noted, "Annually, the National Association for the Education of Young Children proclaims the first week of April as the 'Week of the Young Child.' During this week, local NAEYC affiliate groups focus public attention on the issues concerning young children and society's responsibility to children.

"To support the NAEYC effort, I encourage each service to develop promotional materials and plan events that emphasize the importance of providing children quality services covering all facets of their lives. Although many military activities may become involved, I anticipate that your Child Care and Youth Activity Offices at the departmental and installation levels can best coordinate these activities.

"I ask you to publicize this program and develop initiatives that will benefit military children now and in the future."

The National Association for the Education of Young Children has 55,000 preschool educator members in the United States and overseas. Most of the association's overseas members are childcare professionals on United States military installations. The idea of a special month to recognize that military children face special challenges as well as benefit from unique opportunities for growth and experience was originated by some of these overseas members.

The Department of Defense has observed the Month of the Military Child since 1983 and many installations schedule special events and programs for military families throughout the month.

Teach kids to be 'street smart'

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A recent Home Box Office television special, "How to Raise a Street-Smart Child," made me realize how uneducated I am on the subject of child abduction and molestation.

The program covered abduction and molestation of children in great detail and explained what parents can do to wise up their kids.

Education, as in most cases, is the key to prevention.

It took me only a few minutes to see that my son is not "street smart," and would be a prime target for abduction.

Remember what momma always told you about never taking candy from "strangers?" The program pointed out that many parents fail to make it clear to their children what a stranger is.

Here's the definition they suggested. "A stranger is anyone you do not know, no matter what they look like or what they say."

I knew right away my son didn't know what a stranger was. His willingness to carry on a conversation with anyone while he's sitting in the shopping cart at the commissary affirmed that.

Until watching the program, I was very proud of his friendly, outgoing nature. Now, it frightens me to think that his friendly nature could be used to lure him into the hands of a child molester.

The narrator stressed the point of being honest with your child and about what can happen to them when they are out by themselves. He also said that parents should be honest in teaching their children about parts of the body and avoid nicknames. This is important so that children will be able to distinguish if someone is not touching them properly.

Another point the narrator made was that children need to learn that their bodies are their own, and they have the right to say no to anyone, adults included. If they don't want to kiss Aunt Bessie or Uncle Bud, don't make them, he said. Teach them to be honest, to say "NO!" if they feel uncomfortable.

The program stressed being honest with your child in all areas. It was a point that certainly hit home. It brought to mind a recent conversation I had with my son.

He asked me why ambulances take away dead people. Rather than tell him the truth, I hedged the question.

I avoided the issue because I felt uncomfortable, afraid of how he might respond to the information about death.

Watching the program made me realize that it is my duty as a parent to tell the truth about all things, no matter how uncomfortable I feel.

The program's main message was that child molestation and abduction happens, but we can help prevent it.

Here are some other tips the show offered. Maybe they will help you teach your child to be "street smart."

- Avoid personalized items, such as names on jackets, lunch boxes, and nameplates on bicycles. If a child is called by their name they feel a sense of familiarity and may be more willing to approach that strange person.
- Dress your child the same as the other children. Do not dress them like a "rich" kid. Abductors look for children who look different.
- Teach your child his complete address, phone number, 911 and the operator and insure that they are capable of using the phone.
- Set up a code word between you and your child. If you are not able to get them for some reason you can send someone you trust who can use the code word and your child will know they are safe. A case has been documented where someone tried to get a child, but when they were challenged with the code word they took off.
- Teach your child to trust their instincts. Teach them to run away from danger and look for someone in a uniform.
- Encourage them to play in groups of three or more and never let them play alone.
- If your child answers the telephone, teach them not to divulge information and not to identify themselves to the caller.

Freedom of press protects democracy

By Julius Tsai
Heidelberg High School

WASHINGTON (Arnews) — Just released from a long period of captivity in Lebanon, David Jacobsen stood with President Reagan in the White House. Reporters clustered around him, and flash bulbs went off, lighting up his troubled face like flashes of lightning. Concerned that the press was endangering the lives of hostages in Lebanon by its disclosures of the U.S.-Iranian arms deals, he cried out, "In the name of God, would you please just be responsible and back off."

But the press was being responsible. For although our national interests come first, the press has as its duty to convey information to the American people. As established by the First Amendment, the free press is the agent through which the people find out about the world. As long as the press performs its duty honorably, it serves to inform and enlighten the public.

The citizen must be properly informed and knowledgable to vote and form his own opinions in a responsible manner, for he is the basis of American democracy. In many totalitarian systems where the government controls the press, they censor much of the news and distort the facts to suit the purposes of the ruling party. The people remain ignorant of current state affairs and do not know what to believe, much less make personal decisions. Fortunately, our press is independent of the government, and it is only by staying that way that it can provide the public with the truth.

The free press today plays an important role in introducing cultures and peoples to the American people. This promotes understanding between people in an age where fear and paranoia abound, and stem largely from ignorance. We are fortunate that many of our newspapers and periodicals provide us with excellent opportunities to learn about our world.

The press further observes the policies and actions of the government and relays its findings to the public. By accurately reporting and monitoring legislation and action of the government, it helps to minimize corruption and illegal activity. Furthermore, public awareness of covert action by any individual or branches of government can quickly lead to rectification. The Pentagon Papers, Watergate and the current "Iranscam" are all examples of how the press has forced the government to divulge the truth. By keeping government reasonably open to the public eye, the mere presence of the press aids greatly in preserving the principles and ethics of government.

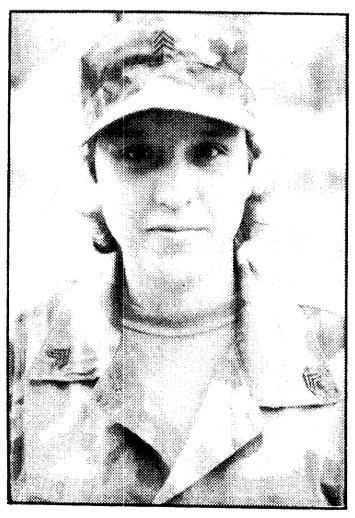
If we look at any American newspaper or magazine, we are sure to find letters to the editor, various columns and editorials on every subject imaginable. For free press is a forum for open expression of opinions and criticism. This expression of opinion, especially dissenting opinion, is vital to any democracy. Sometimes a simple dissenter can arouse the national conscience, or bring fresh insight into an issue and provide a solution.

High school student wins essay contest

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A senior at Heidelberg High School in Germany took first-place honors in a national essay contest on the U.S. Constitution.

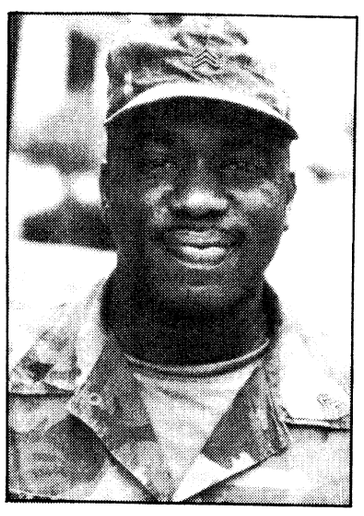
For his winning entry, Julius Tsai, a 17-year-old native of Claremont, Calif., received a cash prize of $500, which he plans to apply toward his college education.



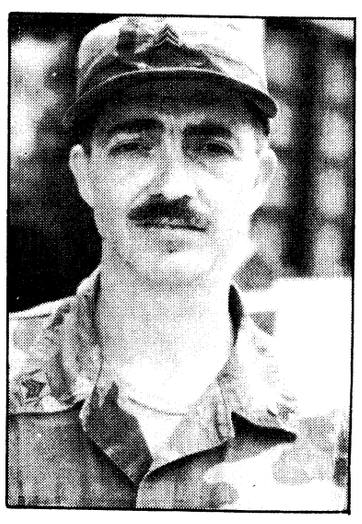
His essay on the contest's theme, "The Constitution — the First Amendment: The Value of a Free Press to American Society," focuses on how recent world events, and their political and social repercussions, have raised questions about the role of journalists in a free society.

Tsai had learned about the contest from his history teacher, who explained that the program is sponsored by the Society of Professional Journalists and is open to all American high-school juniors and seniors. His English teacher, Pamela K. Barney, sponsored his entry. She accompanied Tsai to Washington March 17 to accept the prize and to express her support for the program. "It doesn't do anything," she said, "to teach writing as an intellectual exercise. The student must have an audience for his writing — someone besides the teacher. These contests provide the audience, while giving the students a chance at financial reward and a practical application of writing skills."

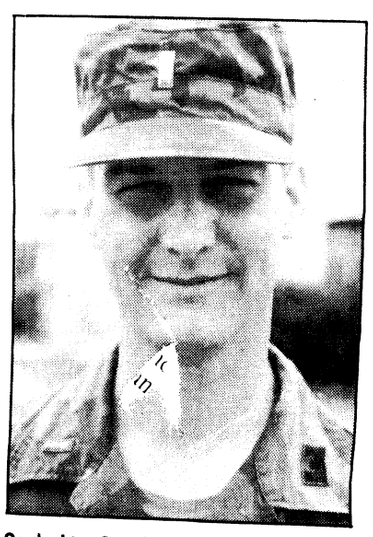
VARIOUS VOICES / How do you think child abuse can be prevented?



Sgt. Gloria Alexander, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "If parents who are under abnormal stress and can't control their emotions seek help, they won't abuse their children. I know sometimes children do make you angry, but nothing warrants abusing a small child. I also think that people should make themselves aware of what is happening in their surroundings and not be afraid to report suspected abuse."



Sgt. Martina Rosado, Company A, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, - "I think child abuse could be prevented if people first make sure their marriage is right. Often times, children get abused because their parents do not have a sound marriage, so they take it out on the children."



Capt. Mark R. Moyers, Company B, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, - "I think it can be prevented by educating potential violators to take responsibile action when they find they are in a trouble-indicated situation, such as; finding themselves losing control and yelling at their children for unwarranted reasons. If they are aware of the indicators, they will be able to seek help before it is too late."

Sgt. Tony Miller, 533rd Transportation Company, 36th Engineer Group, - "I think child abuse can be prevented by making the children aware of themselves and their bodies. I am teaching my 4-year-old daughter about her body so that if someone does abuse her, she will know enough to tell someone what happened."

Sgt. Donald Stanley, 10th Service Battery, 197th Infantry Brigade, - "I think it can be prevented with neighborhood awareness programs, sort of like the crime watch programs. I believe people who know they are being watched would be less likely to abuse their children. Also, I think the laws should be changed so that social workers can enter the homes."

2nd Lt. Stephen Stevens, Company D, 1/507th PIR, - "I think child abuse can be prevented with the support of church activity groups and through spending more time with your children on a one-to-one basis. I believe such abuse occurs because people don't understand their children or their actions."

EXPERT INFANTRYMAN BADGE

SP4 Timothy W. Sexton fills out a salute report and identifies a tank, while SSgt. Rodney E. Southard evaluates his performance.

Soldiers find going tough during Sand Hill testing

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet Staff writer

A few of Fort Benning's soldiers recently learned the value of the Expert Infantymans badge when mountain men from the second and third Battalions, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division spent the last two weeks on Sand Hill attempting to earn the coveted badge.

The mountan men began testing for the EIB after training for two weeks. Soldiers from the 3rd Battalion began the testing the first week followed by the 2nd Battalions testing the next week.

The mountaineers started by taking their Skill Qualification tests. Then they began the five day testing period with a physical fitness test and a 12-mile road march. "They had to do the march in 3 hours in full equipment, weapons, web gear and steel helmet," said Maj. Randy C. Gallatin, executive officer for the third Battalion.

The following day the soldiers had to prove their navigational skills were up to par by spending 12 hours on a day/night land navigation course.

The mountain men then spent the following day undergoing gruelling station-to-station task testing. The 37 stations validated the soldiers skills in first aid, M-60 machine gun assembly, tank identification and camouflage techniques, among others.

In addition the soldiers had to qualify as expert marksmen with their M-16A1s.

"The soldiers had to score 80 percent in each event in order to get the EIBs," said 3rd Battalions CSM Austra Galloway.

" All of the events had to be done within a week with the exception of the weapons qualification," Gallatin said.

"The EIB testing went very well. It was a tough test. The ones who didn't get the badge learned a lot and the ones who did get it are walking around very proud this week. It was really super," Gallatin said.

The soldiers who did earn the EIB should feel proud considering they are a minority among those tested.

"We had 166 soldiers compete for it and 10 will receive the badge," Gallatin said.

According to CSM Willie E. Solomon, the 2nd Battalion'sSQT results will be in later this month. "But it looks like out of the 305 soldiers who tested we have 23 who will probably make it."

USAMU

More than 60 visiting foreign attaches were on hand at Fort Benning's Hook International Shooting Range last week to observe small arms firing sponsored by the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

Live fire demonstrations by members of USAMU included the M-21 sniper rifle system and the .45 caliber pistol.

Following the demonstration, the attaches were given the opportunity to fire each of the different weapons, assisted by USAMU personnel.

Afterwards, the attaches were treated to a trick shooting demonstration by USAMU's SSgt. Matthew Dryke, the current world champion and Olympic gold medal winner in international skeet.

Dryke was assisted in his routine by teammate SFC Alger Mullins. Part of the program included breaking hand-thrown multiple clay targets, breaking targets from behind his back and from between his legs. Dryke concluded his demonstration by breaking targets while riding an unicycle and completing a clean round of skeet by shooting entirely from the hip. — Tommy Pool, USAMU PAO

197th Infantry

Last week the 197th Infantry Brigade got some help from the Reserve Naval Mobile Construction Battalion, better known as the Seabees.

"The Seabees have been coming to Fort Benning for the past few years," said Maj. Charlton Brice, from the Brigade Engineer Section. "I had to get some projects lined up and funded for them before they came down here."

The Seabees poured new sidewalks and began construction in the Kelley Hill Gym.

"Building the new racquet ball courts was something that required their skills," Brice said. "They come to Fort Benning for the change of environment and different training."

Not only did the Seabees begin construction on the courts, they also worked on new storage buildings for the gym as well.

"Two battalions will actually be used to complete the project," he said. "The 25th Battalion came in first and began construction, then after they pull out and leave, the 15th Battalion will come in and finish on the job."

After construction is finished on the two courts, the 197th Support Battalion will put in the light fixtures.

"We're shooting for (a completion date of) the first of May," Brice said. "If not both courts, at least one will be finished." — Troy Buchanan, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Army careers may take soldiers from one side of the world to another, wherever their skills and experience are needed. That's how 1st Sgt. John Washington found his way to the 197th Infantry Brigade after spending most of his career traveling from Korea to Fort Lewis, Wash., and back again.

Washington has been a soldier in the signal corps for nearly 19 years since being drafted into the Army in 1968. He takes pride in missions he has performed, such as with the 122 Signal Corps in Korea, because of the meaningful mission the signal soldiers performed for the 2nd Infantry Division.

However, his four tours in Korea are one in Japan also kept him close to his home and family in the Borin Islands, off the coast of Japan.

Washington explained that life in the Borin Islands offered very few options for a career.

"We had one school which went through the seventh grade," Washington said. "After that you either worked for the U.S. Navy or became a fisherman. Those were the only two choices."

His family sent him to Guam to finish high school and the U.S. Army offered him a vocation after that. Washington first served in Vietnam for 12 months and earned his U.S. citizenship. He got out for a short time following this but stayed in the U.S. to attend college. Before long he returned to the Army life.

In the years that followed, Washington built his leadership values on the strong influences of fitness and discipline. During his most recent position as a first sergeant in Korea, he maintained his company as honor company for 18 of the 24 months he was there. Those are the goals he brought to the 197th.

"I have learned a lot in dealing with soldiers and in dealing with the mission," he said. "If a soldier does a good job, he should be rewarded. If a soldier fails to meet the standards, he should be given the attention and help to change that."

Washington's goals for his new assignment with the 197th reflect the high standards he maintained as a first sergeant in Korea.

"It's a difficult task to learn to deal with the many different missions of a brigade headquarters company," he said. "But I have high standards and I want the soldiers here to feel proud of their unit and to strive for the best at everything we do."— Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

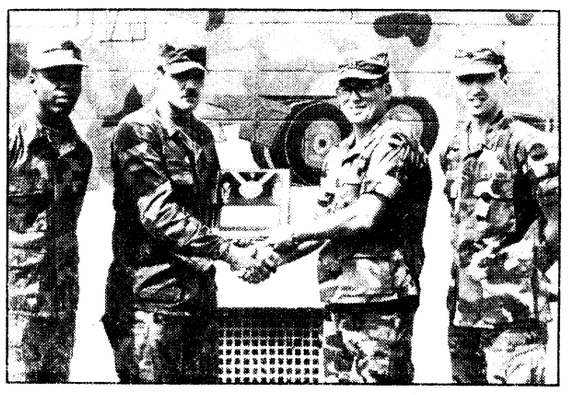
According to 1st Lt. Darrold McCloud, officer in charge of the project, the crew was tasked to destroy the north wing of the building.

"A chainsaw crew came and literally cut the building in half and then we were able to start tearing down the front part of the building," McCloud said.

SP4 Larry Tso, crane operator, operated the 12 1/2-ton crawler crane with a three-ton wrecking ball and demolished the one-story building March 26, and scoop loaders from the company hauled the ruins away Monday.

The remaining part of the building will be renovated and reused at a later date, McCloud said. — Shawn Bryson, 36th Engineer Group correspodent

The Supply section of the 533rd Transportation Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group recently received the Supply Excellence Award for fiscal year 1987.



According to SSgt. Robin Marion, 533rd supply sergeant, the section was presented the award by Capt. Jeffrey J. Davis, 533rd Commander, March 24.

Marion said "The contest for the award was basically a written format displaying the different aspects of a supply organization." He said that his section was selected as the best on Fort Benning after a series of inspections of the 533rd supply office and all the paper work of the section.

The competition was designed to grade supply sections on points basis. The 533rd scored 99.49 percent, which was far superior to any of the other competitors, according to Davis.

Marion added that the inspector for this year's competition was very thorough in his inspection of the 533rd supply Standard Operating Procedures, as well as the attitudes and friendliness of the supply personnel.

"When you consider the fact that our supply sergeant has a 64C truck driver Military Occupational Specialty and all the operations that go on in supply during a year, it is amazing that a supply section could score such a high score," Davis said. — Shawn Bryson, 36th Engineer Group correspondent

From day one, soldiers are taught the need for an Army that is prepared to move out with a moment's notice. The 598th Maintenance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, was put to the test of readiness in its latest Emergency Deployment Readiness Exercise last week.

"I was notified the morning of March 23 and attended a meeting with Lt. Col. Thomas Hooper.

67th Battalion Commander, in which I was informed that my company should be ready to deploy at Fort Stuart, Ga. on March 25," said Capt. Abraham B. Compton Jr., 598th commander.

Compton was quick to add that an EDRE involves more than jumping on a plane or in a truck and taking off. In the three days that the 598th soldiers were allotted to deploy, the captain said that inspection upon inspection was to take place before moving out.

"The 201 files, identification tags and shot records of the deploying soldiers all had to be inspected to make sure everything was in order," Compton said. "Weapons, field mess equipment, TA 50, unit files, communication equipment, vehicles, generators and many other things had to be inspected for the EDRE. "From the time we received the message to the time we deployed, everybody in this company was busy."

The 598th deployed with three kinds of transportation. A train loaded with eight trailors, one tractor and a 4,000 lb. fork lift pulled out March 24. Compton said a convoy left the morning of the 25th and a C141 airplane took off the same day with over 40 soldiers and a jeep with trailer on board.

The company stayed the night at Fort Stuart and headed back to Benning March 26, mission complete.

Compton added that this was the first EDRE in seven months and the soldiers did an outstanding job with only minor problems.

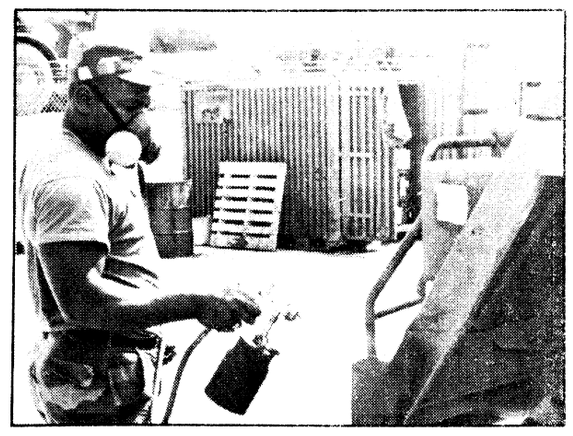
New firing record



Soldiers from Company D, 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, demonstrate their prowess in markmanship. The Delta Dragons recently set a new post Basic Rifle Marksmanship record. Out of 149 firers, 83 fired expert, with 12 achieving a perfect score of 40, 56 scoring sharpshooter and 10 scoring marksmen. The Company BRM average was 35.36.

Soldiers from Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, after several weeks of preparation, are now south-bound for training in Central America.

According to Capt. Steve Wabnitz, Company B commander, approximately 60 soldiers are headed to Honduras for extensive training in their military occupational specialties. Wabnitz said that 40 of the personnel are from Company B with Company A, Headquarters, Company D and communications soldiers making up the rest of the deploying soldiers. The soldiers deployed yesterday and today and will stay fo approximately three months, Wabnitz said.

Wabnitz said that the soldiers will put their carpentry, electrical, plumbing, masonry and earth-moving skills to use in several different projects in and around Pamerolla Air Force Base. The base is used by the Air Force and the Army and is in need of many improvements, according to Wabnitz. One of the biggest projects to be tackled by the Company B soldiers is the construction of a dining facility which will seat 300 people when completed.

"Our equipment will be left in Honduras when we return so that Company C soldiers can use it when they deploy to Honduras in three months," Wabnitz said. Honduras is used as a continuous training area for soldiers throughout the Army, Wabnitz said. — Shawn Bryson, 36th Engineer Group correspondent

The 2d Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment conducted a monthly awards ceremony in the Harmony Church Theater March 31. Special guest speaker was Regimental commander, Col. William H. Gavan. This was Gavan's last opportunity to address the soldiers of the battalion prior to his departure in April for reassignment as Chief of Staff at Fort Dix, N.J.

Twenty-six soldiers were recognized for their outstanding duty performances, contributions and exceptional accomplishments. Capt. Walter Seaman and SFC Willie Perry were awarded the Meritorious Service Medal, SSgt. Alfredo Tongson received the Army Commendation Medal, and twenty soldiers were presented the Army Achievement Medal. SP4 Everton Fearon was recognized as the Battalion Soldier of the Quarter for first quarter, fiscal year 1987, and SP4 Gregg Bowyer was the Battalion Soldier of the Month for March.

Gavan's address highlighted the past accomplishments of the Battalion and stressed the importance of future requirements and missions.

Army tests education reenlistment option

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

Enlisted soldiers who want to go back to school may soon be able to do so without getting out of the Army.

The Office of the Chief of Staff for Personnel recently announced approval of a plan that will allow soldiers to reenlist under a special education option. The option will allow soldiers to spend up to two years in a post high school educational institution.

According to a March 23 message from OCSPER, the option will be implemented in a test mode until its impact can be fully analyzed and budgeted for. For this reason, only 200 soldiers will be allowed to reenlist for this option in fiscal year 1987, and 400 in FY 1988.

The option is open to initial and mid-career soldiers who meet the qualifications.

The soldier must reenlist for a specified period of time and agree to bear all expenses incurred in connection with the schooling, including tuition, fees and books. The GI Bill, the Army College Fund and other educational benefits or grants may be used.

Unless the schooling will result in the award of a baccalaureate degree within two years, the soldier will be restricted to only one year of schooling.

Soldiers who enroll in an academic discipline relating to their MOSs will be entitled to basic pay, allowances and appropriate FTR entitlements. Those soldiers in academic disciplines not related to their MOSs must attend schooling in an educational leave status, and will be entitled to basic pay only.

Soldiers attending school for 20 weeks or less will do so in a permissive TDY status and must be stationed in the Continental United States. Those attending schools for longer than 20 weeks in a discipline related to their MOS will be assigned to the U.S. Army Student Detachment, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., with duty station at the respective school.

Soldiers attending school in an educational leave status must be assigned to CONUS to apply and will remain assigned to the unit they were assigned to before approval of their educational leave of absence.

It is open to soldiers in all military occupational specialties.

SFC Russell Meier, assistant operations noncommissioned officer at the USAIC Reenlistment Office, outlined the basic qualifications a soldier must meet.

"A soldier must be an E-6 or below, have no more than 10 years active duty service at the time the application is forwarded to the Department of the Army; be a high school graduate or possess a General Equivalency Degree; and have a GT score of 110 or higher," he said.

The soldier must be fully qualified to reenlist, without a waiver, he said. Also, a soldier must not already have earned a baccalaureate or higher degree. Soldiers interested in applying should contact their unit reenlistment NCO, Meier said.

Paydays change in September

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Starting with the September end-of-month pay period, soldiers will be paid on the first day of the following month, rather than the last day of the pay period month.

The congressionally required change affects all active duty servicemembers throughout the Department of Defense.

The military services still are authorized to advance payday up to three days when the first day of the month falls on a weekend or holiday, except for the month of September. Since September is the last month of the fiscal year, payday for that month must be moved into the month of October.

Under the Army's new schedule, developed by the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center in Indianapolis, the following payday dates apply for the first 14 months after the September EOM change over:

1987 pay days:
September — Oct. 1
October — Oct. 30
November — Dec. 1
December — Dec. 31

1988 pay days:
January — Feb. 1
February — March 1
March — April 1
April — April 29
May — June 1
June — July 1
July — Aug. 1
August — Sept. 1
September — Oct. 3
October — Nov. 1

USAFAC officials note that scheduling of mid-month payments is unaffected. Taxable wages will continue to be based on January — December paydays.

The new schedule also will affect the delivery dates of allotment checks, causing some arrival dates to be a day or two later than what was customary under the former system.

Under the new schedule, soldiers have three months in which they will receive pay during the current pay-period month. These are October and December 1987, and April 1988.

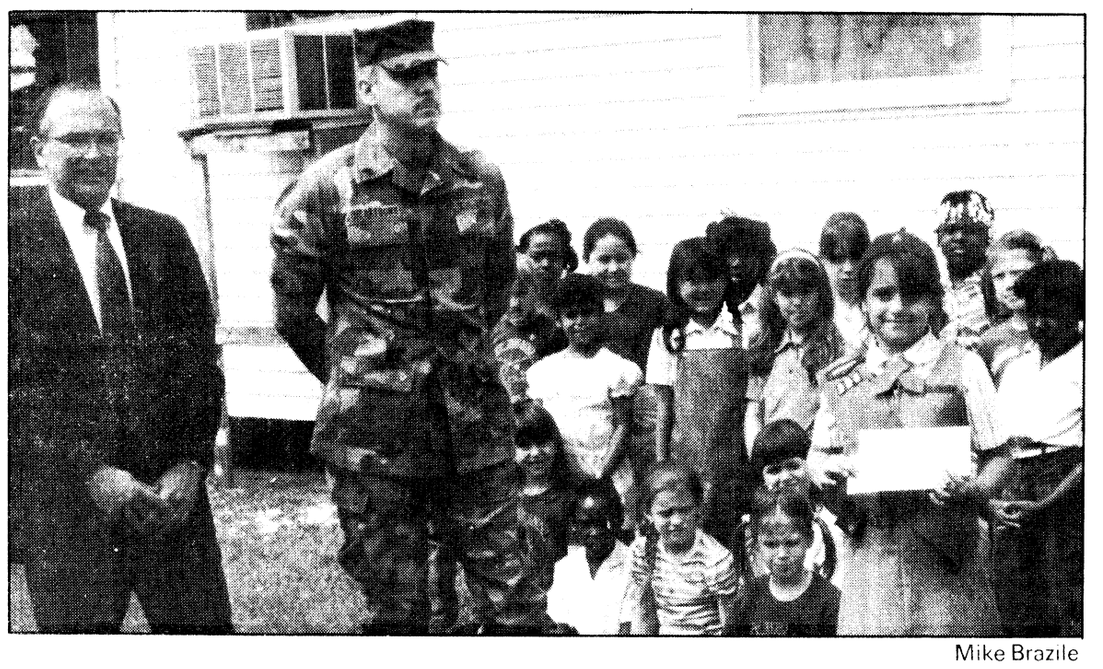
Officials explain that the three-month alignment results from authorization to move payday up to three days earlier when payday would come on a holiday or weekend.

Soldiers with mortgage or car payments due at the end of the month need to notify their financial institutios now to adjust these payments, officials say.

Marsh announces redesignations

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., today announced that the major Army command in the Pacific, U.S. Army, Western Command, headquartered at Fort Shafter, Hawaii, will be redesignated as the U.S. Army, Pacific.



Secretary Marsh also announced that the U.S. Army, Japan — which has been a separate major Army command in the Pacific — will be subordinate to USARPAC.

Lt. Gen. Charles W. Bagnal, current commander of WESTCOM, has been nominated for promotion to the four-star rank of general and assignment as the commander-in-chief of United States Army, Pacific.

The reorganization of command relationships will enhance the Army's capability to support the tactical mission of the commander-in-chief, U.S. Pacific Command, the joint-services commander for the Pacific region. The reorganization is designed to improve unity of command and command readiness, and to enhance operational planning capabilities.

The change is being accomplished within present Army manpower and funding ceilings and with minimal relocation of personnel. The reorganization will result in a net relocation of three civilian positions from Japan to Hawaii.

USARJ's new command relationship with USARPAC should enhance present U.S. Army — Japan Ground Self Defense Force (JGSDF) relationships and open up new avenues for cooperation.

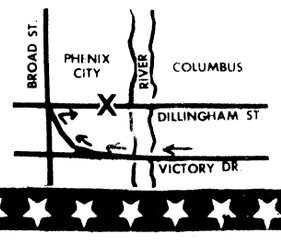
Kind donations from post workers, bank replace Girl Scouts' stolen cookie money

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet Staff Writer

Brownie Troop 298 is back in the money thanks to Fort Benning's Adjutant General's Division and the Fort Benning branch of Columbus Bank and Trust.

In February, $546 of the troop's Girl Scout cookie sale money was lost. This money represented the bulk of the funds the girls would have used for activities such as camping and field trips for the rest of the year. When this loss was reported in the March 13 edition of The Bayonet, it caught the eye of Sgt. Michael Dearybury, of the A.G. division's I.D. Card Section and Columbus Bank and Trust.



"I just thought it would be nice if someone helped these girls out, so myself and SSgt. Sherry Roberts began taking up donations from the A.G. Division," Dearybury said.

They raised $210 for the Brownies.

The Fort Benning branch of CB&T was also touched by the girls' unfortunate plight, and the bank decided to contribute $200 to the troop.

Russians prepare to add new attack helicopters to arsenal of weapons

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — In 1986 Soviet production facilities for all types of ground force equipment continued to turn out modern T-80 tanks; nuclear-capable, self-propelled and towed 152-mm artillery pieces; and 220-mm multiple rocket launchers. The Soviets soon will begin series production of HAVOC and HOKUM attack helicopters.

The HAVOC is similar to the U.S. Army Apache and the KOHUM has no current counterpart, but it may give the Soviet a significant rotary-wing air-to-air combat capability.

Each of these developments, as well as other efforts by the USSR to enhance its military forces and its military-related space programs, is reported in the 6th edition of "Soviet Military Power."

The book was released by Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger at a March 24 press conference at the Pentagon.

He reviewed the sixth edition's brief comparison of the U.S. and Soviet political systems, and explained how they affect long-term force planning and the use of military power. In addition to updating the information on trends in the Soviets' military force modernization, the book presents selected analyses of special-interest topics.

Here are some of the most noteworthy developments over the past year: the number of Soviet road-mobile intercontinental ballistic missiles, the SS-25, increased to about 100; the fifth TYPHOON-class and fourth DELTA IV-class ballistic missile submarines were launched; the current inventory of BEAR H strategic bombers carrying the long-range, nuclear-tipped AS-15 cruise missile was increased to some 50 aircraft; seven of the new supersonic strategic bombers (the BLACKJACK) went into flight tests; ground- and sea-launched versions of the AS-15 cruise missile neared deployment; and the new MiG-29/FULCRUM interceptor totaled more than 300 in inventory, and continue to be deployed to Soviet forces opposite NATO.

Other highlights of the latest edition include a special-interest section on Afghanistan, a section on biological warfare development, a comparative analysis of military technologies, a detailed discussion of Soviet weapon modernization programs, a discussion of the costs and benefits that accrue to the Soviets' centralized planning system, and an analysis of Soviet warfighting doctrine and strategy.

The highly illustrated, 160-page "soft-cover book" contains photographs of a T-80 tank with reactive armor, an aerial photograph of the Soviet military base at Cam Ranh Bay, Vietnam, and commercially acquired satellite imagery of the Soviet air base on the Japanese Northern Territories island of Etorofu.

Weinberger emphasized that the book's purpose is to document the realities of Soviet military power. It is intended to keep free nations informed about Soviet military force modernization, the Soviet activities throughout the world and the threats posed by these developments to allies and friends of the United States.

Appeal's process in place for NCOs who disagree with annual ratings

Military Personnel Center

Are NCOs using the Army's Appeal System when they have a strong belief that they were rated unaccurately or unfairly? Officials at Headquarters DA don't think so.

Last year only 336 appeals reached the Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel Enlisted Special Review Board, which is the Army's primary authority for ruling on appeals that are based on claims of inaccurate or unjust evaluation. There are more than 277,000 active duty NCOs. Only five Reserve Component NCO appeals reached the board.

"Something is wrong," one board member said. "Either NCOs are not aware that they can appeal an evaluation report or they do not believe an appeal has any chance for survival."

Another board member added that he felt NCOs may also believe the appeal must be perfectly written and that we will look with disfavor on an appeal with incorrect grammar or misspellings. "That's a myth. We look for substantive evidence in support of the appeal and the rationale explaining why the report is being contested," he said.

Another myth in the field is "Why go to all the work to appeal, when the board at DA never approves any." The fact is in 1986 full or partial relief was granted on 38 percent of all appeal cases completed.

File an appeal

If you want to appeal an EER, get some help. AR 623-205, Chapter 4, provides guidelines for preparing an appeal and Appendix G of that regulation has recently been added so as to provide more definitive guidance for their construction. The staff judge advocates office and your personnel services center have people who can also help.

How do you dissect the challenged report? Begin by making notes of every entry, evaluation and narrative comment with which you have good reason to disagree. Get answers to these questions:

Look for errors

- Are there errors in the administrative portion of the report, such as your name, grade, social security number, military occupational specialty, inclusive rated period, nonrated periods, duty description and rating chain?
- Are there factual records that would back you up?
- On the substantive portions of the report (which relate to numerical scores, block placements and narrative), are there inaccurate or unjust entries?
- Are there third party observers, records and reports that back up your contentions?

Gather evidence

Also, you may want to make a list of those who were in a position to have observed your performance during the period of the challenged report and who might provide you a statement of support.

Concentrate on identifying those who would have known of the expectations and demands of your rating officials and your working relationship with them. For example: Battalion Command Sergeant Major in support of operations sergeant, or a company 1SG in support of a squad leader.

Remember, what you should be looking for is a compilation of evidence that will clearly and convincingly support your challenge to an appealed report.

New policy to allow reservists greater access to commissary

By Donna Bolinger-Miles
American Forces Information Service

Good news for reservists and National Guardsmen awaiting word on commissary privileges: Beginning March 30, they are entitled to use any military commissary for up to 14 days each year.

Limited commissary use for Reserve component members is nothing new. For years, they've been entitled to shop in commissaries during their two-week annual training periods.

That meant many reservists and guardsmen, particularly those without dependents who pulled their annual training at remote sites, never got to take advantage of the commissary benefit.

The National Defense Authorization Act of 1987 changes that.

It gives reservists and guardsmen an opportunity to accrue one day's commissary use for each day of active duty for training up to 14 days each calendar year. Instead of limiting commissary usage to days of annual training, the new law lets reservists and guardsmen use them at their convenience for up to one year.

The procedure for taking advantage of the commissary privilege will be similar to that used by off-duty reservists and guardsmen who visit military exchanges.

They will be required to present their red military identification card and the original copy of their leave and earnings statement for the period ending Dec. 31, 1986.

Leave and earnings statements must be stamped by the members' commander, verifying the number of annual training days served that year.

In granting commissary visits based on te previous year's training, defense officials recognize that first-year Reserve recruits will have to wait a full year before receiving the commissary benefit.

The new commissary guidelines allow visits by dependents of reservists and guardsmen as well. Dependents who accompany reservists to the commissary will be required to show a photo driver's license or other photo identification. Their presence will not be charged against the reservist's commissary entitlements.

Caring physician can help minimize victim's trauma

By Angela Tillman
Walter Reed Army Medical Center

FORT MONROE, Va. — Peggy is 12 years old. She has been the victim of sexual child abuse by her father for three years. As a result, she had an incestuous pregnancy.

Like many sexually abused children, it is possible that Peggy's situation could have been avoided with a more careful medical evaluation by her physician.

"The spectrum of sexual child abuse has hovered over the physician for quite a long time," said Maj. Stephen Lazoritz, M.D., assistant chief of Ambulatory Pediatrics at Walter Reed Army Medical Center. "Only recently has it swooped down on him and required a positive response.

"The media seem to have been more effective in alerting the physician to this widespread problem than the pages of his own medical journals."

According to Lazoritz, the physician is in a unique position to be able to recognize sexual abuse and initiate the process necessary to evaluate and treat victims of abuse and their families.

"However, it must be emphasized that the physician alone cannot assume the full responsibility for the management of these cases, but must work as an integral part of a team," he said. The physician's role is essential when dealing with a child or adolescent who has been sexually victimized.

The physician's major responsibility in cases of sexual abuse is his patient, Lazoritz said.

This involves the proper diagnosis of the abuse, the management of medical needs resulting from the abuse, the management of the victim's emotional needs, and safeguarding the child by referring the case to the appropriate agency for further evaluation, management, and treatment.

According to Lazoritz, a common, though misconceived belief is that the physical examination will retraumatize the sexually abuse victim.

"Certainly an examination performed hastily or clumsily would traumatize the child, even one who had been suffering from a cold virus," he said.

"However, a careful physical examination performed by an experienced, sensitive physician is unlikely to be a traumatic event. The physician would recognize those situations where a physical examination should be temporarily deferred or if sedation should be used if the examination must be done right away," he explained.

Lazoritz said a physical examination should be deferred when the abused victim presents anxiety and fear to the physician as a result of the crisis atmosphere generated by the disclosure of the abuse. This most often occurs when the child or adolescent is brought to the emergency room in the middle of the night and has been questioned by the police or social workers.

"A hospital emergency room is a frightening place for a young child or adolescent," Lazoritz said. "A quiet, clean, well-decorated physician's office is more conducive to conduct a traumatic examination than most emergency rooms. This is especially true when the crisis atmosphere is somewhat defused."

When performing a medical examination on older children, it is important to get their consent. "Victims should never be examined against their will, nor should children be restrained for the examination," Lazoritz said.

"Efforts of involved personnel should be directed toward developing rapport with the child and gaining the child's trust rather than coercing, bribing or restraining the victim," he said.

However, according to Lazoritz, there are some children who have been both physically, emotionally, and brutally traumatized, and cannot consent to the examination. Such cases should be admitted to the hospital.

"If there is no suspicion of physical injury to the child, and the last episode of the abuse occured 72 hours or longer before presentation, it may be desirable to postpone the medical examination to a more suitable time and place. The reason for the 72-hour time limit is that any physical evidence of the abuse, such as sperm, will no longer be present after that time," he explained.

The physical examination should be complete and comprehensive. Physical abuse is frequently coexistent with sexual abuse, and important signs of physical maltreatment should not be missed.

"The 'telltale' bruises on the thighs or wrists and bruising of the breasts or buttocks may be seen. This shows the victim was restrained in the course of the sexual abuse. Therefore, it should be documented. A complete oral exam may reveal evidence of attempts to gag the victim or show signs of a sexually transmitted disease," the doctor said.

"A rectal exam may show bruising, redness, fissures, or lax tone. The genital examination should be carefully performed, looking for signs of trauma," he said.

It is always possible that the sexually abused child could contract a sexually transmitted disease. "Cultures of the throat, rectum, and vagina or cervix should be obtained for gonorrhea and if available, chlamydia. Both of these organisms may be asymptomatic at all three sites," Lazoritz said.

For the child, 10 years and older, there is another concern doctors must face. "Pregnancy should be considered a possibility even if menarche (menstruation) has not occurred, and testing should be done as clinically appropriate for the situation.

According to Lazoritz, the "Damaged Goods" syndrome is a major treatment issue. This is an emotional problem present in many of the thousands of sexually abused children who confess to physicians each year.

According to Lazoritz, misconceptions regarding anatomy or the nature of the sexual act are frequently the basis for these feelings of being "scarred for life." They may be fostered by adults involved in the investigation and management of the abuse.

"It should be made clear to the victims at the level of their understanding, after a thorough examination, that there is no lasting damage and that he or she has not been harmed for life.

The children should also be assured that when they grow up, they will be able to have children and normal sexual functions."

Emotional abuse, neglect as damaging to children as beatings

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

"Sticks and stones may break my bones, but names will never hurt me."

Most of us probably used or heard that old rhyme when we were children. It might have made us feel a little better, but we didn't really believe it.

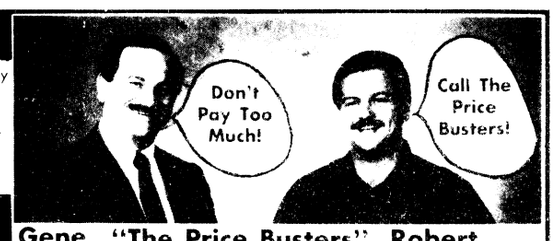
Because words do hurt. And cruel words from a parent or teacher can hurt a child as much as or more than teasing from another child.

Most people think of children being beaten or sexually molested when they hear the words "child abuse." But emotional abuse and neglect are forms of child abuse, too.

In 1984, according to the American Humane Association, 1,726,649 children were officially reported as being abused. Most of these cases — 55 percent — involved neglect (failure to provide adequate food, shelter, clothing, supervision, hygiene or medical care); physical abuse, 25 percent, and sexual abuse, 13 percent. (The figures add up to more than 100 percent because some reports involved more than one kind of abuse.) But while only 11 percent of the reported abuse cases were classified as emotional abuse, experts believe it is present at least as often as physical abuse.

According to a glossary published by the federal government's National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect, psychological or emotional abuse is "child abuse which results in impaired psychological growth or development." It frequently occurs as verbal abuse or expecting to much from a child and then ridiculing him when he can't meet the demands. It results in a negative self-image and disturbed behavior.

According to a spokeswoman for DoD's Military Family Resource Center, examples of emotional child abuse include:



- Rejection. Telling a child, "You're no good," or "I wish you'd never been born." Rejection sets the child up for failure and belittles him when he can't accomplish a difficult task. Rejection also includes routinely telling a child he's clumsy or stupid for making normal childhood mistakes, such as spilling milk.
- Ignoring. Failure to talk to a child, praise his accomplishments and give him affection and encouragement.
- Terrorizing. Threatening a child, telling her the world outside is out to get her or attacking the child's beloved possessions or pets are examples of terrorizing.
- Isolating. Not allowing the child to go out or make friends outside the home or in general trying to destroy the child's friendships.
- Corrupting. Teaching or encouraging a child to steal, be aggressive or sexually precocious, use drugs or alcohol or take part in other socially unacceptable behavior or praising a child who engages in such behaviors.

Who is most likely to emotionally abuse a child? While any parent, if placed under enough stress, can become an abuser, these factors can put some parents at higher risk.

- Youth and inexperience as parents. Young parents are more likely to have unrealistic expectations. "It's these parents who are more likely to think that a 12-month old is wetting her pants to be mean, for example," said the center spokeswoman.
- Isolation from family and social sources of support. "This is a particular problem for a young military wife stationed in a far-off post. She can't just call her mother for advice," said the spokeswoman. Although help is available from other military parents and from chaplains and military family support professionals, many young parents may hesitate to ask for it.
- Stress, whether it's from job demands, financial hardship or marital problems.
- Drug or alcohol abuse or emotional problems.
- A history of having been abused as children themselves. These parents not only had no role models for good parenting, but tend to have low self-esteem, which makes them more likey to abuse their children.

CHILD ABUSERS

Army programs center around rehabilitation, treatment of offenders

By Angela Tillman
STRIPE, Walter Reed Army Medical Center

FORT MONROE, Va. — Sexual child abuse not only cripples its victim from leading a normal healthy life, it often imposes severe stresses on the family members as well.

As a result, integrated treatment is essential in the healing process. Teamwork among many different professions is critical in achieving success.

"Experience and research indicate that treatment is critical for everyone involved in child sexual abuse," said Col. James R. David, assistant chief of Walter Reed Army Medical Center's Social Work Service. "This often includes the victim's family members and friends.

"The harm or injury that occurs with the victim, as well as non-involved family members is very severe. As a result, clinical or therapeutic intervention is indicated.

"Physical abuse and neglect of children, spouse abuse, and child sexual abuse are serious problems for the Army. While the number of reported military child sexual abuse cases is relatively low, the amount of time and effort that is spent by the family and the different persons involved in treating the patients is considerable."

According to David, research has shown that if soldiers are experiencing significant stress within the family unit, they are unable to give their full attention to their military duties.

"The fact that a soldier is involved in child sexual abuse does not indicate that he is not competent, loyal, or dedicated on the job," David said. "Therefore, it is sometimes in the Army's best interest to take the time to rehabilitate the soldier, rather than taking steps to administratively separate him."

Army Community Services offer education and prevention programs to train teachers, parents, and children the difference between a "good touch and bad touch."

"Children should be taught to recognize if a family member, stranger, or friend is appropriately or inappropriately touching them," he said.

"Unless we are comfortable with ourselves and our own sexuality, we are not going to do an effective job in talking about child sexual abuse or any other aspect of sexual functioning with our children."

According to David, the first objective in treating any child sexual abuse case is protecting the child. This is to keep the child and the non-ofending parent in the home. The offender moves out of the home."

With the non-offending spouse, there tends to be a wide range of problems in addition to the obvious intrapsychic and interpersonal feelings. There is also a tremendous sense of embarrassment, survival, and loss of community status. For the soldier, there may be adverse influence upon his career.

Supportive therapy is necessary to aid in any guilt feelings or awareness of the abuse the non-offending spouse may or may not have. The objective of this type of treatment is to do a total assessment and respond to the unique needs of each individual.

"Non-offending spouses find themselves in a complex and multifaceted situation," David said. "We try to make sure the non-offending spouses are able to function more effectively in the parenting role and better assert themselves in the marital relationship.

"Regardless of whether the spouse had some level of awareness or knowledge of the abuse, it is critical that he or she deal with it; face the trauma that has affected the whole family unit, and come to terms with it," David said.

According to David, if the non-offending parent had knowledge of the abuse, it's an indication that the parent has a lack of self-esteem. "Parents who are aware of the abuse feel that they have no other option than to allow it to continue," he said. "These individuals have a much lower degree in their sense of self. They require more intensive therapy and support to overcome this problem.

"We have found that it's important to have a combination of individual supportive therapy and participation in a group experience with other parents. This will help them to realize that they are not unique in their circumstances. It also lets them know that other people have survived the same type of situation," he said.

Finally, the therapist will assist individuals in conducting a thorough self-assessment to help them confront and deal with themselves in order to take a more responsible stand in the future.

When incest occurs within the family unit, a mandatory process of family separation takes place. Over a period of time, the therapist gradually arranges to have the faily come together with supervision for normal living experiences a family therapy.

"The family becomes fragmented as a result of the separation, so the offender is not allowed to inflict himself on the identified patient again," David said. "I think the most difficult task when treating this type of case is the ongoing sensitivity and monitoring that is required in order to reconstitute the family unit.

"With incest cases, the victim feels a great sense of betrayal. The home is traditionally thought of as a safe and trusting environment. When that trust and safety has been violated, it is much more difficult to reinstate it. However, in most cases the family members will actively wish to reconstitute the family at a functional level."

According to David, no matter how old we are, the degree of acceptance and love we feel from our parents is critical in determining how we see orselves andin our capacity to relate with other people.

"The chances of a family reuniting with a fixated pedophile (one who has a chronic sexual orientation with children) is very low. However, some programs report a 90 percent success rate with the regressed offender (one who reaches out to his own children because of stresses in his life)," David said.

"With intensive therapy over a period of one to three years, we can expect a high level of success in dealing with families were the regressed pedophile is present."

The objective is to give the victim a more comfortable life adjustment.

"Adults molested as children tend to blame themselves for the abuse," David said. "At some level of awareness, they conduct themselves in manners that will confirm their low self-esteem. The manifestations of that will vary.

"But there is a real optimism for people molested as children, even though it was never really addressed, or the anguish or trauma resolved. If they seek treatment, they may find relief for any lingering concerns they may have," he said.

SPIRITUAL

Lent a good time to measure our spiritual growth

By James E. Rogers
USAIC Chaplain's Office

I sort of grew up here at Fort Benning. I say sort of because my progress has been slower than I expected and the process is far from complete.

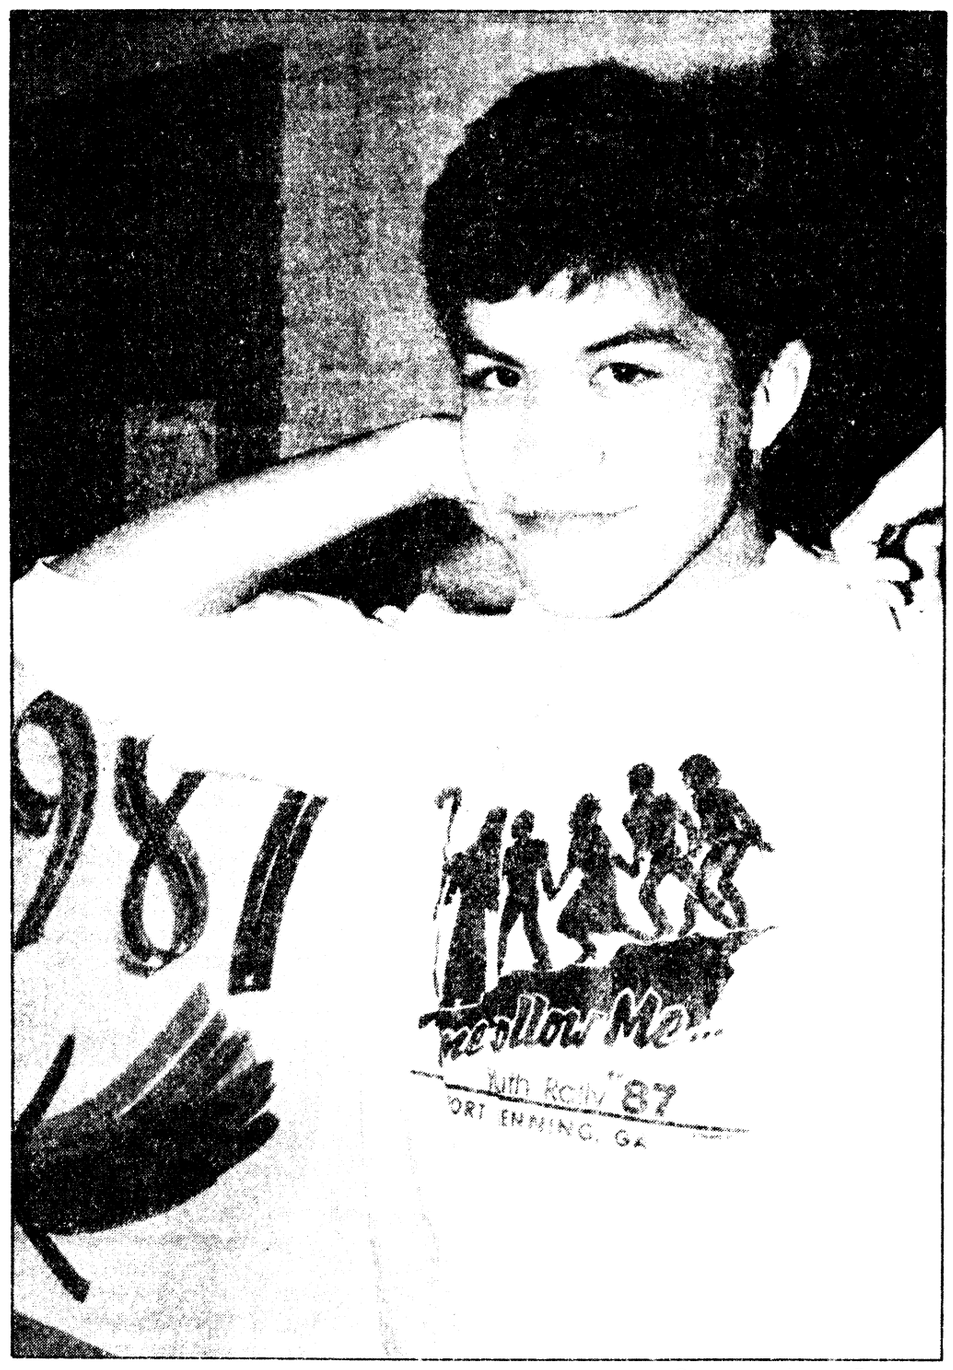
The truth is that a lot of us have done some serious growing and maturing since being assigned here. Growing up is necessary here. In fact, growing and maturing are so much a part of the program that you either do it or you won't survive.

Joan Rivers makes a lot of money reminding people to grow up. We all think she's kidding. Maybe she's serious. We sometimes refer to hard training as being necessary for character building. Maybe we should be serious about that because like it or not, a disciplined approach to life does get results.

In the case of our bodies, they don't just happen to get into shape. Television viewing does little to sharpen our minds, and following our natural inclinations on moral issues contributes little to building moral fiber. If we expect improvement in any of these areas, we must follow a disciplined approach. This is just as true morally and spiritually as training for a maximum score on a physical training test.

The season of Lent is a time to do some serious introspection. Whether we see ourselves as strongly religious or simply living by an ethical code or both, we must make plans to grow. If or someone is going to pay for our immaturity. If, for instance, we are acting in a small-minded way in a place of big responsibility, our fellow soldiers and family members will suffer.

We need, instead, to grow to fit our space in life. All to often, religion and ethical behavior are looked upon as options until we are unexpectedly called upon to defend our actions. By then, it may be to late.



In the same way that we train for wars which we hope we never see, we should practice the spiritual discipline of regular religious worship, prayer and meditation, and systematic giving of our tithes and offerings.

Just as a well-trained Army is the best deterrence to war itself, training in the spiritual discipline is a deterrence to the spiritual and moral apathy of so many people today.

Those who grow strong in their religious faith make our world a better place, right now. That alone is worth the spiritual investment required for us to grow up in our faith.

Youth rally

The three-day event included workshops, entertainment and prayer. (Right) Paul Chinen dons the program T-shirt, which each delegate received. CHAPEL BRIEFS

Author to speak at special events

The Protestant Women of the Chapel announce two special programs featuring Allegra McBirney, a missionary, Bible teacher, author and radio personality.

Her presentations include the use of visuals, object lessons and life application. She challenges and encourages participants in their walk and outreach.

The first event will be a family pot luck April 22 at 6:30 p.m. in the Religious Education Center. The evening will include Ms. McBirney's personal testimony. She especially hopes to reach those who do not, as yet, have a personal relationship with God.

The second program will be April 23 at the PWOC regular 9 a.m. fellowship, also at the Religious Education Center. Babysitting will be provided for both events. For more information, call 545-2050.

Area, post teens to be confirmed

Young people from the Fort Benning Catholic community will celebrate the Sacrament of Confirmation April 8, with teens from other area parishes and Savannah Bishop Raymond Lessard.

The worship service will take place at Our Lady of Lourdes Church at 7 p.m.

Education series offered Sundays

The Adult Enrichment Series continues Sunday with a discussion of the nature and missions of the church.

The two-hour program, which meets in the Religious Education Center, Building 229, at 7 p.m. is open to all.

Women's council meets next week

The Military Council of Catholic Women gathers for its First Friday meeting today in the Main Post Catholic Chapel at 9:15 a.m. Mass follows the praying of the Rosary.

The business portion of the meeting includes a review of the constitution and election of officers.

Babysitting is provided at the Religious Education Center beginning at 8:30 a.m. For more information, call Marianne Tennant at 687-0451.

Marriage seminar planned in April

Couples who are planning to celebrate their marriage in the Catholic Church are invited to a pre-marriage seminar April 5 at 1 p.m. in the Religious Education Center, Building 229.

The program includes discussions on communication, finance, legal issues, sexuality and spirituality. Participation is a requirement for all couples who plan a Catholic wedding.

Call Phil Reilly at 545-5508 for more information and to register.

Priests available to hear confessions

Catholics will gather at the Main Post Catholic Chapel to celebrate the Sacrament of Penance Thursday at 7 p.m. The celebration of the forgiving love of God will include an opportunity for individuals to confess their sins and receive absolution.

Priests will also be available for individual confessions Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the MPCC.

Chapels celebrate lenten services

In this season of Lent, we prepare to hear the good news, Jesus is Lord and Savior.

That was the joyful news of Christians from the beginning. It is our news too.

The family of God gathers to worship because of that news. In worship, we remember such mighty acts of God, we celebrate His gift of grace, we proclaim His Word, pray in His name sing praises to Him and become prepared to share the news ourselves.

We invite you to come and worship with us at Sightseeing Road Chapel at 11 a.m. each Sunday morning.

Rock group delights Kelley Hill audience

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The Christian Rock Band Santa Fe rocked the timbers of the Kelley Hill Chapel recently.

The group played a variety of upbeat Christian songs as well as top 40 hits.

Nearly 200 soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor took a break in the duty day to enjoy the concert.

Santa Fe has played on post before, so the group was welcomed by the soldiers from Sand Hill, Kelley Hill and Harmony Church.

The five-member band hails from Indianapolis, Ind., and has been traveling in the south, playing most recently in clubs in Daytona Beach.

Simple diet modifications make weight loss painless

By Monice Hemingway
The Mercury

Excessive body weight is a major health problem in the United States. Consider the fact that eating an extra 100 calories a day above your body needs results in a weight gain of 10 pounds in a year's time. Those 100 calories may come from a mere tablespoon of mayonnaise or an extra ounce or two of meat.

On the other hand, shaving off several hundred calories here and there on a regular basis, just by adapting your cooking methods, an either help maintain your current weight or facilitate a slow but steady weight loss.

Here are a few modifications you might implement on a daily basis to start reducing calories relatively painlessly.

• Cut back on the amount of fat in your recipes. For example, in a casserole calling for six tablespoons of margarine, try using three or four tablespoons. or if a muffin recipe suggests one cup of oil, try 3/4 of a cup.

You will find that in a number of mixes, such as preseasoned rice mixes, you can completely omit butter or margarine and wind up with a completely acceptable product. However, cutting the amount of fat used in cakes can be tricky and experimentation is necessary.

In cutting back on fat, you may lose some moisture so make up the difference with broth, skim milk, or fruit juices. You can also add extra herbs and spices for seasoning.

• Any time a recipe calls for milk, use skim milk or low-fat instead of whole milk. One cup of whole milk has 170 calories; two percent milk, 125 calories and skim milk, 80 calories.

• Substitute lean meat cuts such as skinless poultry, veal, fish and lean cuts of beef or pork for the high fat meats such as bacon, sausage and cold cuts. Some lean cuts of pork include leg (whole rump, center shank), ham and smoked ham center slies.

Cuts of beef that include a high amount of fat are brisket, corned beef, ground beef (more than 20 percent fat), rib roasts and rib steaks. Cuts of pork high in fat include spare ribs, ground pork, country style ham, and deviled ham.

• Calories in fatty meats can be reduced by broiling or baking the meat on a rack so that the fat drips off.

• Trimming obvious fat from meat edges and removing whitish fat pads from under the skin, especially in poultry, is helpful.

• Use a good non-stick skillet for fat-free frying or sauteing. Non-stick sprays are also available and beneficial.

• Avoid browning vegetables with meat. Vegetables are notorious fat sponges.

• Refrigerate soup stock, stews, meat drippings and sauces, so that you can remove hardened surface fat before rewarming and eating.

• Low-fat plain yogurt works well as a substitute for sour cream. It can also be used to stretch mayonnaise in cole slaw, tuna and potato salads.

• You can save calories by using low-fat margarines, mayonnaise or salad dressing.

• In some recipes, you can modify the amount of sugar by 25 to 50 percent. For starters, try using one fourth less sugar and adding more cinnamon, nutmeg, vanilla, almond, or other extracts to spark the flavor.

• To lower calories, use water to dilute a higher calorie fruit juice such as cranberry or grape, or try mixing orange or pineapple juice with unsweetened iced tea.

• For a low-calorie salad, stick to salad greens and other raw vegetables such as radishes, cucumbers, celery, cabbage, cauliflower, tomatoes, onions and peppers. Coleslaw, potato salad, macaroni salad, and creamed cottage cheese are higher in calories.

• When ordering a salad, have the salad dressing on the side. This allows you to control the amount of dressing you use.

• Condiments such as catsup and sweet pickles add calories quickly so go easy on them.

• Cut back on the size of the portions you eat. The smaller the serving, the fewer the calories.

Secretary of Defense voices opposition to withdrawal of U.S. troops from Europe

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

A major U.S. troop withdrawal from Europe would send the wrong message to potential adversaries, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger said in a recent speech. "A U.S. retreat from our commitments abroad would undermine the unity and strength of free nations," he said. "And unity and strength are our first defenses against hostile powers whose pre-eminent aim is to split and dominate free nations."

Weinberger said the U.S. presence in Europe is critical not only to European security, but to our security as well.

"Western Europe is freedom's front line and by far the greatest attraction for Soviet ambitions," he said. "We station troops in Europe because it is in our interest to do so. The United States could not live in a world in which Western Europe was overrun by the Soviet hordes."

Proponents of a major U.S. troop withdrawal insist that such a move would prompt our allies to share more of the burden of defending the Continent. Weinberger said such a withdrawl would have the opposite effect.

"Our pullout could convey a message that the United States is either no longer concerned about the Soviet threat or has lost the will to maintain an effective deterrent against the threat." Weinberger said that if the United States contributes less, the Europeans would likely do less," and we all will be less secure. The result over time could well be an unraveling of the Atlantic alliance and the neutralization of some of our strongest allies, with all that that implies for American's vital interests."

Withdrawal proponents also point to the money that could be saved or used for other things as a reason for a pullout. The notion, Weinberger stressed, "is as wildly erroneous as the other parts of the withdrawal thesis."

Said Weinberger:

• A withdrawal of 100,000 U.S. personnel from Europe would incur one-time costs of $500 million for transporting the forces home.

• Renovating or constructing new facilities for them in the United States would cost another $4.7 billion.

• Reduced operating and support costs for the forces in the U.S. vs. in Europe — estimated at $600 million per year — could not begin to be realized for about eight or nine years. Even then they might not be realistic, since European hosts bear some of those costs now.

Withdrawing a force of 100,000 would also require a capability to return it in 10 days or less in the event of hostilities.

"The least expensive way to do this would be to buy a second set of equipment for pre-positioning and enough airlift to move residual equipment. This would cost about $20 (billion) to $25 billion, including over 100 additional wide-bodied cargo aircraft. Alternatively, returning the entire force and its equipment by air could require over 1,000 additional aircraft at a cost of around $100 billion," noted Weinberger.

Company recalls suit due to choking threat

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

DALLAS — The Army and Air Force Exchange Service is helping Elkay Industries, Inc., alert customers to a potential hazard with one of its two-piece children's knit sets.

The garment, sold for children under 3 years old, bears decorative yellow plastic buttons which could present a choking hazard. When the Consumer Product Safety Commission subjected the star-shaped buttons to use and abuse testing, they separated from the shirt. According to CPSC guidelines, the pieces present a small-parts hazard for children under 3. The agency has not received any reports of injuries involving the garments.

The stars are on a long-sleeved knitted white shirt with red and blue stripes. The words "Little Pro" are embroidered across the front. The shirt is sold with long corduroy pants. The label in the neck of the shirt reads: "Made in the U.S.A. KidstuffRN 43051, An Apparel Product of Elkay."

AAFES bought 1,200 of the two-piece outfits for its fall and winter children's line. Any garments remaining in stock have been removed from sale. The CPSC is advising consumers who purchased these garments for children under 3 to immediately remove the stars from the shirt and discard them.

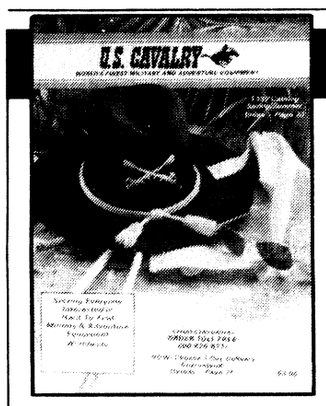
Plan escape route in case you need to stop auto fast

Safety Office

Most of us travel the same route to work every day. Have you considered where you would steer your car if the road ahead was suddenly blocked by an accident or a stopped vehicle? As you drive to and from work for the next few days look for places where you know you can safety steer off the road and come to a safe stop. You will be surprised at what you discover.

There will be places where you can't maneuver to the right because of insufficient space such as a bridge or a steep drop off. Here you may decide that driving onto the left shoulder may be the safest course. You will notice many things you haven't considered before. You will see large immovable objects that you surely want to avoid as well as plenty of safe unobstructured routes where you can safely stop your vehicle.

This planning for an escape route is similar to a pilot's flying of a small plane. The pilot is always observing the land below looking for places where he can land safely when an emergency arises. Don't wait for your emergency. Plan ahead now, and always remember you want to avoid the head on collision at all costs.



Abuse

"There is a tremendous amount of release when these people, mostly women, admit and deal with the sexual abuse that occured when they were children."

According to David, in some cases, adults have gone throughout their entire life without disclosing the abuse. "We don't know what percentage of individuals who are sexually abused as children seem to recover without treatment and any discernible negative results. However, we do know from various surveys that a relatively high percentage of women were sexually abused with varying degrees of trauma when they were children.

"It's better to deal with and resolve our emotional trauma. So the earlier an individual addresses these issues, the less difficult and lengthy the treatment will be, and the better of the person and society will be," he said.

Caliber of military people at highest levels in history

By SGM Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

When it comes to people, today's Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps have the best educated and best trained force in history.

"The strength and quality of our military personnel is probably the proudest achievement of the Department of Defense during the last six years," said Chapman B. Cox, the Pentagon's top manpower official.

In 1986, the military services were also blessed with the highest number of high school graduates and the highest aptitude test scores among recruits. Other statistics show a drastically reduced rate of illicit drug use and discipline problems, according to Cox, assistant secretary of defense for force management and personnel.

"Since 1980, 100 percent of the military's manpower recruiting goals have been met and with higher quality people," said Cox. In 1986, 92 percent of active duty accessions were high school graduates. This compares with only 68 percent in 1980.

Recruits also scored higher on the Armed Forces Qualification Test during that period. "In 1980, only 65 percent of our accessions scored average or above on aptitude tests," said Cox. "In 1986, we hit an all-time high of 96 percent."

There has been a 67 percent decrease in illicit drug use, according to DoD surveys and drug test findings.

"Credit for these improvements belongs to the service members themselves," said Cox. "Their patriotism, dedication and morale go far toward explaining our successes. Today's forces stands more ready, willing and able to defend freedom in the world than ever before."

The military services are boasting 13 years of success with the volunteer force, but DoD manpower officials are becoming concerned about the continuing decline in military-age youth in the United States.

Cox said President Reagan's combined 1988 and 1989 budget to Congress is designed to improve compensation and quality of life programs for service members and their families

Reagan is asking approval for a 4 percent pay hike for fiscal 1988 and 4.3 percent for fiscal 1989. "Pay isn't the only compensation factor which contributes to satisfaction with military life," Cox pointed out. "Others include re-enlistment bonuses, housing and family support programs and other quality of life programs; the modernization of family housing and additional housing for lower grade enlisted personnel, especially in high-rent areas and overseas."

ASK THE JUDGE

Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I have a problem that requires the advice of an attorney. I was about to make an appointment with the legal assistance office but a friend told me that the people over there were not "real lawyers" but only JAGs. What are the qualifications of the legal assistance officers?

A: All legal assistance officers in the Judge Advocate General's Corp are graduates of law schools certified by the American Bar Association.

Before coming on active duty as a JAG Officer, the officer must have passed an exam issued by a State Bar of Legal Examiners.

After that, the Officer is subjected to an in-depth investigation and interview to determine that he or she is ethically qualified to be admitted as an attorney.

The lawyer then takes an oath of office. When accepted as a Judge Advocate, the attorney goes through intensive study of military law at the Judge Advocate General's school.

After successfully completing this course of study, the officer is assigned to a unit. Many legal assistance attorneys have years of experience in the civilian sector prior to coming into the military.

In addition, as exhibited in the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Office, some attorneys are licensed by the State of Georgia.

Q: I want to exclude my spouse from my will, because my spouse has done me numerous wrongs. In my will, I want to explain why I am excluding my spouse. Can I exclude my spouse, and tell my spouse why I am doing so in the text of my will, so that he will find out about it only after my death?

A. You can exclude your spouse from your will, but a court will carefully scrutinize such an exclusion. Depending upon your state of residence, such an exclusion could still mean that your spouse would still be entitled to a large portion of your estate.

You need to explain your desires to your attorney when you come in to make a will. Usually, when a spouse is excluded in a will, a divorce is on the way.

Child care keeps 'em smiling

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

Smiling happy children is a sure sign that all is well. And it's even more reassuring when the smiles are coming from your child who just completed a stay with a care-giver.

Although smiles are not their primary purpose, the Fort Benning child care facilities are working hard so that smiling faces are what they see at the start and end of the day.

For a parent examining child care options, Fort Benning offers a multitude of choices to please even the most protective parent. The facilities range from drop-in service to the standard full-time child care.

"We have two Army-sponsored day cares and we have three privately run centers," said Jennifer L. Williams, Family Child Care director for Fort Benning. "In addition we have 59 certified child-care homes," she said.

The two Army-sponsored centers are the Marne Road Child Development Center and the Custer Terrace Child Development Center. Both offer full-time child care.

These centers employ certified care-givers and are designed for working parents.

The three privately run centers are Patch Pre-School, A Small World Child Development Center and Tot Town. All three centers teach half-day pre-school classes. Tot Town, in addition to the pre-school classes, offers hourly child care.

Another alternative for child care is one of the 59 care-givers available in certified homes on post.

All of the care-givers are selectively choosen. In order to get certified each care-giver must take a 20-hour class in child care where they are trained in child safety.

"We have to follow regulation AR-608-10. Everybody has to have Red Cross and Cardio Pulminary Resuscitation classes," said Ida E. Barnes, supervisor of Tot Town.

"All of the child care-givers are carefully screened. We do a backgroud check through Social Work services and through Fort Sam Houston, Texas, to make sure there are no charges of child abuse or molestation in their background," said Ms. Williams.

In addition to the careful screening and certification, the facilities undergo rigid examination.

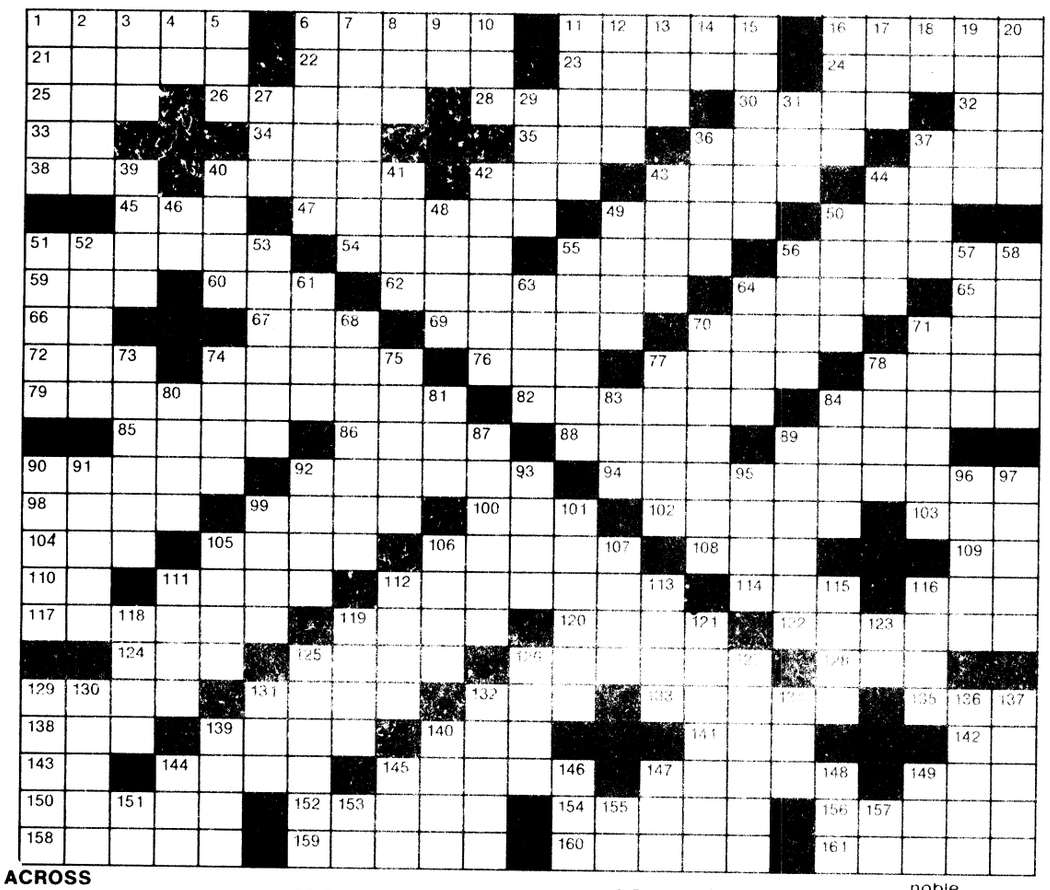
"The centers and homes are inspected by the Inspector General, Preventive Medicine, fire inspectors and child care coordinators," said Mrs. Barnes.

All of the facilities serve hot lunches and snacks and some provide breakfast. "The United States Department of Agriculture Child Care Food Program under the Department of Education sets the guidelines for meals. We even have different portions per age group," said Linda H. Berry, director of the Custer Terrace Child Development Center.

So with all the different types of child care services available how do parents decide what is best for their child?

"It depends on what the parents want for the child. Whether they want a one-on-one relationship or the interaction of other children," Ms Berry said.

For the children who have no brother or sisters, Ms. Berry said that putting a child in a center would offset them not having other children to play with. "Also, in a center, there is more than one person monitoring your child. To me that is like a safety valve," she said.



Home care-givers take into their certified homes one to six children and centers have many care-givers. "The full-day child development program is an extention of the pre-school. Where the pre-schol is only two hours a day, the center extends a full day," Ms. Berry said.

The centers operate on Monday through Friday while the homes and Tot-Town offer more flexible hours. Each facility requires a small membership fee and nominal rates. All of the facilities are open to the military and Fort Benning employees. Eligible children range in age from six weeks to 12 years old.

Whatever your childs age or your child care needs are there are a number of possibilities. You may never alleviate the uneasy feeling of dropping your child off at child care. But you'll feel better when your child greets you at the end of the day with the same open arms and happy smile the care-giver is greeted with in the morning.

For more information about post child care call 545-3328 or 545-52.6.

Fort Benning announces top officer instructor of the year

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

"In order for you to achieve success and get everything in life you want, all you have to do is let enough of your subordinates get what they want," says Capt. James O'Donnell, Fort Benning's Officer Instructor of the Year.

O'Donnell, a 12-year Army veteran, is an instructor of training management and operations in the Infantry School's Combined Arms and Tactics Department under the Leadership Division.

The captain's students are comprised of officers in the Infantry Officer Advance Course, Basic Course and from the Officer Candidate School. He has been an instructor for 26 months.

Competing with more than 200 other officer instructors at Fort Benning, O'Donnell had to win instructor of the month and quarter, as well as go before a board of three officers to come out on top as instructor of the year.

O'Donnell said his guiding force as an instructor is enthusiasm.

"You have to think positive. Enthusiastic people are contagious people. I say 'Enthusiasm is contagious, catch some,'" O'Donnell said.

The instructor, who is here at Benning with his wife, Maryann, and their children, Shannon and Karen, says to be an effective instructor you have to realize the importance of what you're doing.

"The students I teach in my classes are going to go to their units and teach soldiers. That means I'm not only having an impact on the students but on thousands of soldiers as well. That makes my job even more important to me," O'Donnell said.

The two-time company commander and former battalion S-3 said his greatest pleasure in instructing comes from student feedback.

"It really makes me feel good to have students say that they learned something from my instruction," O'Donnell said.

It's never too late to swim

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

A Fort Benning family member and a drill sergeant are both all wet and they love it. Each has learned to swim in just 20 days.

Kathy Richardson, wife of a captain at Fort Benning, almost drowned as a child and has been terrified of the water ever since. SFC Hugh Hardy, a drill sergeant with Co. D, 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, said he just never learned to swim and felt very apprehensive about the water. Enter Elaine Kendall and the American Red Cross.

"These two are amazing. They started swimming lessons on Feb. 17, and by the first week in March could do the side stroke, back crawl, elementary back stroke, breast stroke and the front crawl," Mrs. Kendall said. "They average 300 to 400 yards swimming per hour and that's great for having just learned,"

Kendall, who is an ARC certified swimming instructor, said there is no magic in learning how to swim.

"If a student comes on a regular basis, has a qualified instructor and never quits, that student will learn how to swim," Mrs. Kendall said.

Mrs. Richardson, 32, said she never thought she would even attempt to learn the behavior of swimming.

"When I was a kid I jumped into a swimming hole with my friends. I went under and got tangled up in a lot of vines and could see my friends swimming above me but I couldn't g free," she said. "Finally, a frie missed me and dove down a pulled me to the surface. Aft that I was petrified of t water."

Her motivation to learn swim came from her family annual trips to Florida.

"Last year I sat on the bea and watched my daughters a husband swim and have fun the ocean. I was determined n to sit on the beach this year a watch them have fun," M Richardson said, treading wat in Briant-Wells Pool.

Hardy, who is 30, had a diffe ent reason for wanting to swi

"I want to go into Army Speci Forces. You have to know how swim to get into SF. I had learn and through Elaine's help did it," Hardy said.

Many sports available for kids at YA

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

"I know I am Somebody," rings out clearly to many Fort Benning youth.

They are finding themselves in many of the activities sponsored by the Youth Activities center.

Leading the way is baseball.

"Our largest single program turnout is Baseball, T-Ball, which brings more than 400 youths to the baseball diamond," says Ray Pierce, YA coordinator.

The participation is so great that the division must be divided into American and National leagues, allowing a T-Ball World Series to highlight the season. Though baseball has the greatest draw, football, soccer and basketball are other activities provided in the YA program.

Once one ventures past the trophy case in the foyer, which houses the many awards presented in the YA Sports Program, one is directed into a buzz of adventures in the main lobby.

Teen or pre-teen dances are always a crowd pleaser, as the youth come together to "Pee-Wee-Herman" into the latest craze.

The snack bar prepares delights to satisfy the young and old appetites alike. The menu ranges from the grilled hamburger to the triple decker plus ice-cream cone.

Though the Youth Activities Center gives the kids an opportunity to grow outside the family, at least once each month, the center hosts Family Night.

The Center gives the family an opportunity to come and do some things together," Pierce said. "We set up small tournament games for parent/son and daughter competition."

The Youth Center is also enrolling mother and daughters in a new Mother/Daughter Softball League.

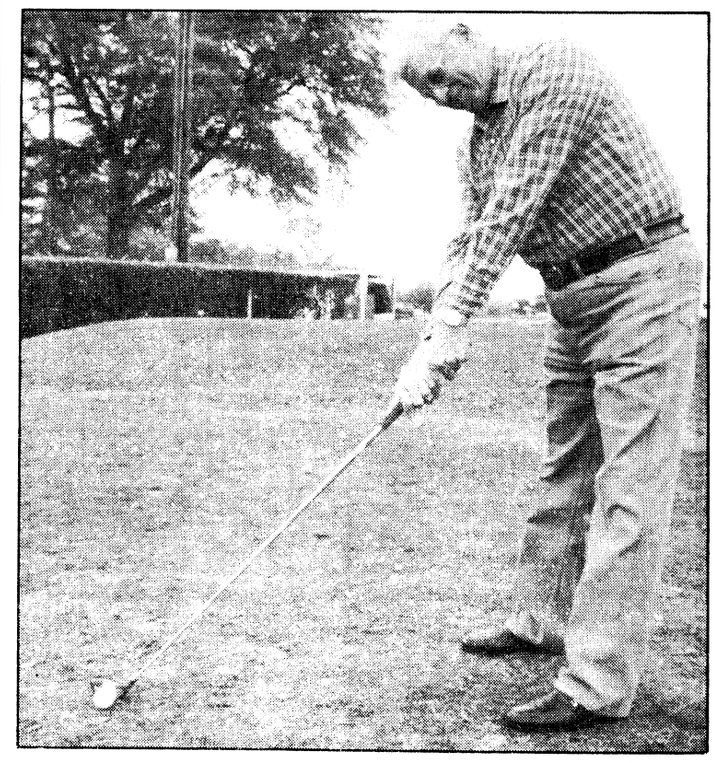
In addition, the center provides on-going classes in arts and crafts, modeling, dancing and self defense.

Two self defense classes are offered at the YA Gymnasium. Karate classes are held Tuesdays and Thursdays from 6 to 8 p.m. and Saturdays from 10 a.m. till noon. Tae Kwon Do instruction takes place Mondays and Wednesdays from 6 to 8 p.m.

Holidays provide special threats for the Fort Benning youngsters, such as the haunted house at Halloween or Santa's visit at Christmas.

Other seasonal activities take the kids outdoors. During the summer, youths may enjoy the regulation size pool, adajacent to the Center.

Swimming classes are offered, with instruction lasting one hour a day for two weeks.



While most activities are currently housed in the original YA building, plans are underway to build new facilities.

Currently under construction is the new Youth Center located on McIver Street, which will house the YA administration office, craft shops, game rooms, TV rooms and kitchen. The new building of approximately 15,000 square feet is scheduled to be completed in May.

Plans are also in the works to set up a YA Media Club. In hopes of getting children involved in the various aspects of producing a newspaper or newsletter, the Center plans instruction in layout and design techniques.

The center's hours for spring operation are:
The administration office is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The YA Center is open Wednesday through Thursday from 3 to 8 p.m; Friday and Saturday from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. and Sundays from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. It is closed on Mondays, Tuesdays and holidays.

Freeman Horner prepares to tee off at the Follow-Me Golf Course recently.

Golf association provides greatly needed service, say officials

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

The Follow-Me-Golf Course has taken on a new form, now offering greater club expansion due to the birth of the Fort Benning Golf Association in January.

Though the association is new to the community, it already boasts more than 280 members.

Membership in the FBGA is available at a cost of $10 per calendar year.

Officials of the FBGA said the association was founded to provide a greatly needed service to the community.

"We formed the FBGA primarily so we would have an accociation of people interested in keeping better handicap control, so that we could promote better tournaments," said George Cliff, Follow-Me golf pro.

Handicapping is critical in tournament play, Cliff said. Individuals with an inaccurate handicap may be disadvantaged or overly-advantaged in tournament competition.

Should an individual who regularly shoots a 75 be handicapped at 80, his tournament score would give him a much lower round, giving him an unfair advantage over the other golfers.

In an effort to provide a closer handicapping system for everyone, the FBGA implemented a computerized process.

"Our ultimate goal is to have a daily sign-in roster," he said. "After each day of play, golfers must turn in their score cards. Those who fail to turn in the scores will be penalized."

The system was previously provided by Les Wood, handicap chairman, who physically checked all cards for accuracy before posting scores.

The FBGA employs the United States Golf Association's GHIN System of handicapping.

Together with the USGA, the GSGA offers its member clubs a computerized handicap service, providing clubs with the latest in proven handicap computer techniques.

They make permanent distance markers available to members, which certify that the course has been rated and measured by the GSGA.

These markers are placed on each teeing ground at the point from which the hole was electronically measured and give the golfers a reference point from which the hole was measured.

Membership in the FBGA does include membership in the Georgia State Golf Association and the USGA.

The FBGA also serves to promote social activities in conjunction with golf.

Through the FBGA, provisions are made to promote both Junior and Couples golf.

Hero tees off for hole in one

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The odds of getting a hole in one in golf are about the same as getting a Medal of Honor. Freeman Horner has done both.

Horner, a retired Army major, hit his hole in one during a tournament at the Fort Benning Golf Course. He used a 3-wood at the par-3 seventh hole, hitting the ball off the tee to the hole 174 yards away.

The 64-year old Horner said he normally shoots in the high 80s, and his handicap is 17.

He earned his Medal Of Honor during World War II, for showing extraordinary courage in fighting against the enemy during a battle in Wurselen, Germany.

According to George Cliff, head pro at the Fort Benning course, the chances of getting a hole in one here are one in 14,000.

Horner's feat was recorded at the golf course, and he was given a 24-carat gold plated putter with a leather handle.

"I learned to play in 1950, when I was tasked as Special Services Officer to build a golf course in West Germany," he said, "In order to do it right I figured it would be best if I learned the game."

Horner said he found he enjoyed the game and has been playing off and on ever since.

Benning's family programs named tops in TRADOC

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning is the "post with the most," according to the judges of Training and Doctrine Command's Installation Excellence Awards program.

The Home of the Infantry received the 1986 TRADOC Award for best morale, welfare and family programs on a large installation. Lt. Gen. Robert H. Forman, presented the trophy to Maj. Gen. Edwin L. Burba in a ceremony Tuesday.

Fort Benning took top honors as a result of the Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities making a concerted effort to meet or exceed TRADOC program standards, according to Linda Magee, chief of the Family Support Division, DPCA.

"It's easy to just do your job and get by. But a lot of caring people went beyond that and provided excellent service for soldiers and their families," she said.

The post's nominee for TRADOC's Outstanding Volunteer, Elaine Kendall, also came out on top as the outstanding volunteer for all TRADOC installations.

"Elaine Kendall exemplifies volunteering at its best. She has volunteered throughout the post, teaching soldiers how to swim, working with handicapped children and manning a desk at the Red Cross," Ms. Magee said. "And Elaine always does it with a smile. She has probably touched more people on this post than any other volunteer."

The post's newest trophy will be displayed at the Officer's Club main entrance and then will be rotated and displayed by community activity divisions on a monthly basis throughout DPCA.

Last year Fort Sill won the award with Fort Benning coming in a close second. The award is based on inspections by TRADOC judges of an installation's quality of life for its residents.

Gen. Carl Vuono, commanding general of TRADOC, said, in a message on the excellence awards, "I am aware of the excellent quality of our TRADOC people programs and the dedication of the personnel staffing them. Our programs continue to gain in stature and are being recognized throughout the Army. Keep up the good work," Vuono said.

California firm to be insurer in dental plan

Army News Service

The Department of Defense today announced it has awarded a $121,026,960 contract to Delta Dental Plan of San Francisco, Calif., to provide dental care for families of active duty military personnel nationwide.

Dental benefits under the new Active-Duty Dependents Dental Insurance Plan will begin Aug. 1. The plan will cover the dependents of active-duty members of the uniformed services in the 50 states, District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands. Civilian dental care under the plan will not be available to military families overseas.

Under the contract, Delta Dental Plan will set up a nationwide network of dentists and dental hygenists who will make available certain basic and restorative dental services to the families of active duty service members who enroll their families in the plan.

Active duty members themselves are not eligible for the plan. Nor are military retirees and their families, former military spouses, or the surviving family members of deceased active or retired service members.

The plan will offer active-duty family members such preventive and diagnositic services as routine oral examinations, dental x-rays and flouride treatments for a small monthly deduction from the service members basic pay — $3.93 for one dependent, or $7.86 for two or more dependents.

Some restorative services — fillings, stainless steel plastic crowns for baby teeth, and repairs to dentures — will be available on a cost-sharing basis. For these services, the patient or military sponsor will pay 20 percent of the allowable charges, with the insurance plan paying the other 80 percent.

Chief of staff tapped for star, division slot

Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

Col. James R. Ellis has been selected for promotion to brigadier general, a Department of Army spokesman announced this week.

Ellis, who currently serves as post chief of staff, will be promoted April 29, and become assistant division commander of the 10th Mountain Division at Fort Drum, N.Y.

Col. Bobby R. Hurst, who is now the Director of Plans, Training and Mobilization, is slated to become Benning's next chief of staff.

Ellis, an Alabama native, enlisted in the Army in 1955, entered the United States Military Academy in 1958 and was commissioned into the Infantry in 1962. He went on to graduate from the Infantry Officer Basic Course, the Armor Advance Course, the Armed Forces Staff College and the National War College.

His awards include the Silver Star, the Defense Superior Service Medal, Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star, the Purple Heart, the Meritorious Service Medal, an Air Medal, an Army Commendation Medal, the Combat Infantry Badge, Expert Infantry Badge, the Ranger tab, the Master Parachutist's Badge, the Department of the Army General Staff Identification Badge and the Office of the Secretary of Defense Identification Badge.

In addition to his tour of duty at Fort Benning, Ellis has served in Vietnam, the United States Military Academy at West Point, Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and the Dominican Republic.

Ellis took command of the U.S Army Infantry Traning Group in 1983, which was later reorganized as the 29th Infantry Regiment. In July 1985, he assumed his current duties as chief of staff.

Three women are running for the post of vice mayor of the Indianhead Terrace community. Incumbent Juanita Mobley faces challengers Angela D. Payne and Susan M. Galvan in that race.

Mrs. Payne has lived at Fort Benning since March 1983. Her experience includes employment at the C & B Bank. She also has a bachelor of science degree.

Mrs. Galvan has served as a volunteer secretary and receptionist at the Indianhead Community Life Office, and currently works for the Army and Air Force Exchange Service.

Mrs. Mobley works for the Burger King food chain. She has been a post resident since 1984.

Six women are running in uncontested races for mayor.

Jenita Mazola seeks the mayor position for the Custer Terrace community.

Mrs. Williams is currently in the mayor's position at McGraw. Her work experience has taken her to Japan, Europe and throughout the United States, where she has held a variety of positions in education and administration.

The current incumbent, Diane Gravatt, is running uncontested for mayor of the South Main Post community.

Susan M. Hubbartt is running for the vice mayor position in the Custer Terrace community.

Mrs. Hubbartt has two years experience as a volunteer, and worked in Army Community Services while in Germany.

Heather C. Dalton is running for vice mayor of the South Main Post community. She holds a B.B.A. degree in finance, and is a former community crime watch chairperson.

New PCS rules won't affect drill sergeants

Army News Service

The recent changes in permanent change-of-station policy have not altered or extended the drill sergeant tour length, according to SFC Charles L. Nunley, chief of MILPERCEN's Drill Sergeant Assignment Branch.

"Drill sergeant duty is a two-year tour with the option to request an extension of an additional 12 months," Nunley said. "However, the PCS changes have affected how long a drill sergeant will be assigned at the same location.

"Drill sergeants completing two- or three-year drill sergeant tours should expect to remain at their current installations until they have completed 48 months on station," he continued. "They will fill different positions at their current locations once their drill sergeant tours are over."

Reassignment overseas is an exception to the PCS policy, and does not require 48 months on station.

OPINION

Reader wants to know why civilians 'hog' post gyms

Dear Editor:

Could you please publish information on who is entitiled to use the gym facilities.

Audie Murphy and the Building 4 Fitness Center are full of civilians , and we (soldiers) have a hard time waiting on them to use our facilities — particularly at lunch. This does not seem fair.

My commanding officer told me that our military welfare recreation funds pay for the facilities. Then why do civilians have to be let in?

How about us having priority between 11 a.m and 1 p.m. — just like soldiers in uniform do at the post exchange? Civilians get lockers in Audie Murphy and Building 4, but we don't. Why? If we have to put up with civilians hogging our gyms, why don't we make them come to our 6 a.m. physical training as well?

Unsigned

Editor's note: While it is our policy not to publish unsigned letters, we decided to make an exception in this case.

Dear Unknown Soldier:

Active duty military and their families assigned to Fort Benning are first in priority to use the Military Welfare Recreation funded facilities, according to Stan Mehosky, director of the Physical Activities Branch, Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities.

Mehosky explained that according to Army Regulation 215-2, active duty military and their families not assigned to the installation (including Army Reservists and Army National Guard on active duty for training) are next in priority.

After them, priority goes to active duty personnel of other services and their families, followed by retirees of all services.

"Department of Defense employees are lower on the list, after the military," he said. "We are in the process of determining a better balance to accommodate all, with the understanding that the military do have priority in accordance with the regulation."

Addressing the problem of lockers, Mehosky said more lockers have been ordered and once they are installed, they should ease the demand for locker space.

We suggest that when you are unable to use a facility because of the crowds, you check with the person in charge. They can ask the civilians to give up equipment and machines to soldiers.

At the same time, it is important to note that the Army encourages civilian employees to maintain their physical fitness. In order to support this program, all users of post facitilities must be willing to share, and use tact when disrupting a civilian's workout routine.

Surrogate mothers

Budding baby market could be beginning of new economic bonanza

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

When I read about the Baby M case, I was appalled.

Can you believe they paid Mary Beth Whitehead only $10,000? No wonder she wanted to get out of the contract.

If you figure it out, that comes to about $1.10 per hour for the nine months she carried that baby.

It just goes to show you. Women finally find an easy way to earn extra money, and immediately they set the price way too low.

Women now earn only $.60 for every $1 a man earns, and by asking for such a low salary, surrogate mothers will drag that figure even lower.

I say, if we're going to do it, let's do it right.

Women interested in being surrogate mothers should immediately join forces, form a labor union (pardon the pun) and set a decent wage for their services.

At the least, I think they should demand minimum wage for carrying a child, with add on charges dependent on the length and type of labor and delivery.

An Associated Press survey showed that 75 percent of respondents agreed with the judge's ruling in the case, but frankly, I don't think he went far enough.

He really should have ruled that Mrs. Whitehead was underpaid for her services, and ordered the Sterns to fork over more money. If they had made the paycheck better to begin with, the whole court fight might never have happened.

Fundamentalist religious groups oppose the ruling, basically because they feel human life is sacred, and babies are not commodities that can be bought and sold. They suggest that surrogate motherhood threatens the very moral fiber that this country was founded on.

The decision to be a surrogate mother, or to hire one, is a personal one that I don't presume to judge.

But it seems to me that our moral fiber is more threatened by the antics of Jim Bakker and his mascaraed wife Tammy Faye, than by a simple working woman trying to get ahead.

Another criticism comes from feminists, who say that poor women will turn into little more than baby factories for wealthy women who are too busy with careers to take a break for motherhood.

To them I say, get real.

The truth of the matter is that surrogate parenting is here. More than 500 babies have already been born in the U.S. to surrogate mothers.

Women would do well to get organized so that this does not become just more low paying "womens' work." Just look at what happened to the secretarial profession when women took over the field; salaries plummetted. That's the way the market place typically treats women.

The fact is that women have finally found a job where men can't even begin to compete. What we have here is a bona fide monopoly.

Look at the rates the power company charges and you get the idea.

The Baby M decision is a landmark one that could be the beginning of something great.

It offers women a chance to corner the market and climb the economic ladder to prosperity.

The next step should be charging husbands for babies their wives have. Think about it.

It is only during modern times that husbands stopped having to pay dowries. In African tribes, some men still have to "pay" women to marry them. Thirty head of cattle may not sound like much to us, but to an African tribe, this is great wealth. A woman worth that much is definitely an important person in the community.

A law could be passed that required a husband to pay his wive a dowry, based on how many children he wants from the union.

Overnight, wives would become economically independent. It would change the entire power structure of marriage as we know it, and revolutionize the marketplace. As women acquired more disposable income, demand for goods and services would rise. The economy would boom, and recession would become a thing of the past.

And just think, all this prosperity because one judge ruled, "a contract is a contract."

I urge every woman reading this to immediately take pen in hand and write her congressman. We need to get them working on this legislation immediately.

Success is easy, once you know the formula

By John F. Brooks
McChord Air Force Base, Wash.

FORT MONROE, Va. — There are four kinds of people in the world: those who make things happen (the successful), those to whom things happen (the unsuccessful), those who watch things happen (the uninvolved), and those who didn't even know that things were happening.

The different philosophies, techniques, theories and gimmicks that claim to lead to success are unlimited. Some people propose that drive and determination are the essential elements of success, while others believe that finesse, savvy or common sense are the critical ingredients. Still others claim that simple luck is the most important factor in the equation.

In reality, of course, there is no single formula for success. Different situations require different approaches. While it is difficult, if not impossible, to identify an optimum formula for success, I believe there is a single ingredient that is common to all formulas. It's an ingredient that's frequently overlooked but often marks the thin line between success and failure.

That simple ingredient is confidence.

Confidence is the quality of having faith, of acting on bold assurance. There are different kinds of confidence: confidence in one's God; confidence in one's people and confidence in one's country.

All are important, some more so than others. But regardless of which is more important, they all serve to produce and nourish another kind of confidence — self-confidence.

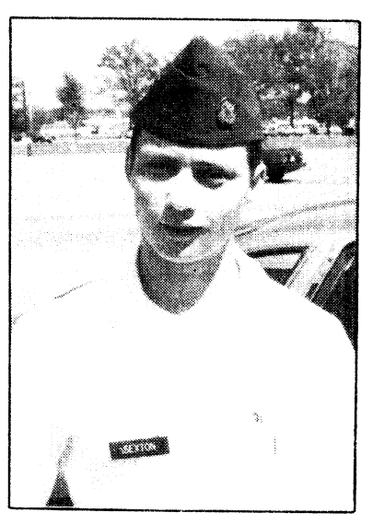
A noted scholar wrote that the "lack of self-confidence, so common in our culture, is crippling to the individual. Our psychological selves may be crippled in much the same way as our physical selves may become crippled by disease or by an accident. Each limits what we can do."

Not only does a lack of self-confidence limit what we as individuals can do for ourselves, but also what we can do for others. People find it difficult to place their trust in someone who doesn't believe in himself. In contrast, self-confidence allows each of us to make the decisions and take the steps that move us closer to our goals, closer to success.

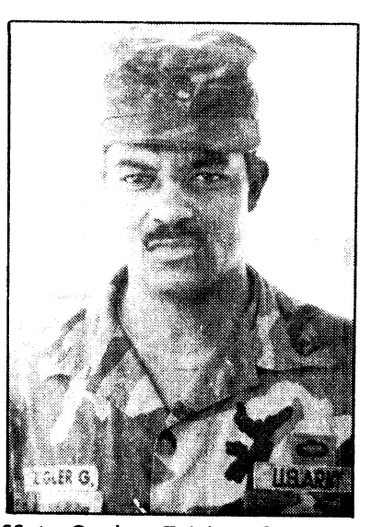
This isn't to say that confidence produces 100 percent error-free performance. Mistakes happen and will continue to happen. But confidence gives us the courage to continue, the strength to meet new challenges and the ability to make things happen.

Yes, confidence is the key.

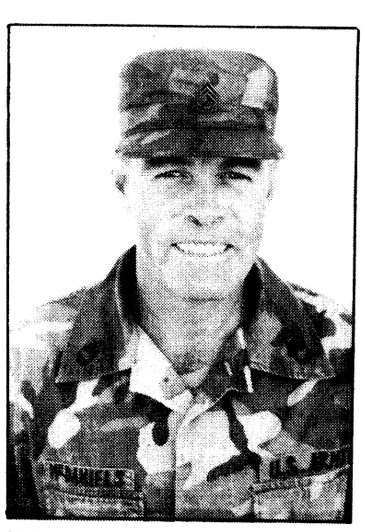
VARIOUS VOICES / How do you think the Baby M case should have been decided?



1st Lt. Danford Sawyer, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "I am not sure how the issue should have been decided. I think it is unfortunate on both sides and I personally think surrogate motherhood should be made illegal. I just think the issue is too difficult for our society to handle and this case is a prime example of that."



SP4 Debra Mick, RC Provisional Company, The School Brigade, - "I would have made the same decision the judge did and given the baby to the father. The mother entered the contract knowing fully what it entailed. Plus, the father of the baby has so much more to offer. I think that surrogate mothers should be outlawed anyhow. Pretty soon we are going to have drones just running around having babies for money."



CWO.2 Ted Slawinski, Headquarters, United States Army Infantry Center, - "I think it should have gone to the natural father as in this case it did. The laws governing surrogate parenthood need to be tightened so that something like this won't happen again. I think it is good that surrogate mothers are available to families who can't have children as a couple but still want at least one to be the natural parent."

SP4 David Sexton, MEDDAC, - "I would have decided the same way the judge did. He did the correct thing, she signed the contract giving up all rights and claims to the child, and I feel a contract is a contract."

SSgt. Gordon Zeigler, Company A, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "I think they should have given the baby to the mother. The money or the contract should not have been the issue. She carried the baby for nine months and if she decided she wanted to keep the baby, she should have been able to. I know she had made a different decision at first, but she realized she made the wrong choice."

SFC James McDaniels, Company A, 1/507th, PIR, - "I agree with the judge, it was a legal contract and the contract should be followed. But morally, I don't think it should be done. A mother naturally bonds with the child when she is carrying it and that will influence her to change her mind."

TAX TIPS

Using labels in tax packet speeds refunds

American Forces Press Service

Many delays in the processing of federal income tax returns could be avoided if taxpayers used the labels and envelopes that accompany their tax packages, the Internal Revenue Service says.

The peel-off label, which contains the taxpayer's name, address and social security number, is designed to expedite accurate processing at IRS service centers and thus avoid delay in the issuance of a refund check.

A common misconception is that using the peel-off address label will trigger an audit. Actually, coding on the label identifies the kind of forms contained in the tax packages, IRS says. It does not in any way indicate the return should be audited.

One of the most common and troublesome errors that can be averted by use of the label is the listing of an incorrect or illegible Social Security number. This is a major cause of delayed refund checks.

The IRS advises taxpayers to use the label, even if corrections are necessary. For example, in the case of a change of address, the correction should be made directly on the label.

The coded, pre-addressed envelope ensures that the return is sent to the proper IRS service center. Once the envelope reaches the Service Center, the coding ensures speedy entry into the processing system. Taxpayers should make sure that they use the proper postage when mailing their returns. IRS adds. Most returns require one first class stamp. However, thicker returns, usually containing over four items (ie: Form 1040 and three attachments) require additional postage. Returns which are sent back to taxpayers for additional postage will not be considered timely filed returns even if they are originally mailed on April 15th.

When requesting a filing extension, send taxes owed

American Forces Press Service

Preparing an income tax return can require a multitude of information papers such as cancelled checks, receipts and proof of earnings and expenses.

Sometimes copies of certain information papers must be obtained and are not received on time to prepare the return and meet the filing deadline. Form 1040 or 1040A filers can request an automatic 4-month extension of time to file their tax returns, the Internal Revenue Service says. However, the IRS adds that this is not an extension to pay taxes owed.

Taxpayers filing Form 1040EZ or those requesting the IRS to compute their tax are not eligible for an automatic extension.

To obtain the 4-month extension beyond April 15, a taxpayer must complete Form 4868, Application for Automatic Extension of Time to File U.S. Individual Income Tax Return, and forward it to the service center processing tax returns for his or her state. Form 4868 must be filed on or before April 15, 1987, the IRS says.

On Form 4868, one must make a tentative estimate of the year's taxes and submit any balance due with the form. Upon filing the tax return, if the unpaid tax is more than 10 percent, there is a penalty for late payment unless the taxpayer can show reasonable cause for not paying the tax when due. The penalty is one-half of one percent per month on the unpaid balance, up to a maximum of 25 percent.

Interest is also assessed on any unpaid balance, the IRS says.

Keep copies of all documents for your files

American Forces Press Service

Copies of federal income tax returns from prior years not only serve as good financial records, but they can serve as guides for filling out future returns as well, the Internal Revenue Service says.

A good deal of information may be utilized from old copies, especially for those taxpayers whose financial situations stay almost the same from year to year, according to the IRS.

Being able to refer to completed returns could also be helpful to those who might later wish to amend their returns, income average, or who are called in for a tax examination. Taxpayers finding themselves in any of these situations will be glad they retained a copy of their return.

Requesting copies of prior returns can be very time consuming and costly depending on the contents of the documents requested.

Rounding off makes figuring returns easier

American Forces Press Service

Taxpayers may find it easier to round off cents to the nearest dollar when figuring their federal income taxes, the Internal Revenue Service said.

However, if a taxpayer rounds off one dollar item, all amounts must be rouned of. Amounts under 50 cents should be dropped and amounts from 50 cents to 99 cents should be increased to the next higher dollar. For example, $1.39 becomes $1 and $2.69 becomes $3.

One advantage to rounding off, according to the IRS, is that taxpayers are likely to make fewer math errors because they will have fewer figures to with with and compute.

Credit available for child care

American Forces Press Service

Parents who pay someone to care for a child or dependent while they work or look for work may qualify for a special tax credit, the Internal Revenue Service says.

This Child and Dependent Care Credit may be taken not only for payments to babysitters and day-care centers, but also to certain relatives paid for this service.

This credit is available to married couples who both work part-time or full-time or are actively looking for work, and file jointly. If one spouse works full-time and the other works part-time, is a full-time student or is disabled, they are also eligible for the credit, according to the IRS.

The credit may also apply to a divorced or separated parent who has custody of a child who is under 15 or physicaly or mentally incapable of self-care, even though the parent may not be entitled to a dependency exemption for the child, according to the IRS.

The parent claiming the credit must, however, have custody for a longer period during the year than the other parent. A married person living apart from his or her spouse is eligible for the credit when the spouse is absent for the last six months of the taxable year.

The credit is from 20 to 30 percent of eligible expenses, depending on the taxpayer's adjusted gross income. The maximum credit that may be taken is limited to $720 for one qualifying person and to $1,440 for two or more qualifying persons.

To qualify for the Child and Dependent Care Credit, a taxpayer: must have been gainfully employed or in active search of gainful employment when the expense for the child's or dependent's care was incurred; and must have paid over half the cost of maintaining his or her household, which included one or more qualifying individuals.

A qualifying individual is a dependent child under 15 years of age or a spouse or dependent who is mentally or physicaly incapable of self-care.

To claim the credit, taxpayers can file Form 1040A, using the worksheet in the Form 1040A tax package to compute the amount of the credit. Taxpayers who file Form 1040 may also claim the credit, even if they do not itemize deductions. These taxpayers compute the credit on Form 2441, Credit for Child and Dependent Care Expenses, and attach this form to the Form 1040.

Wills must be rewritten once child is born

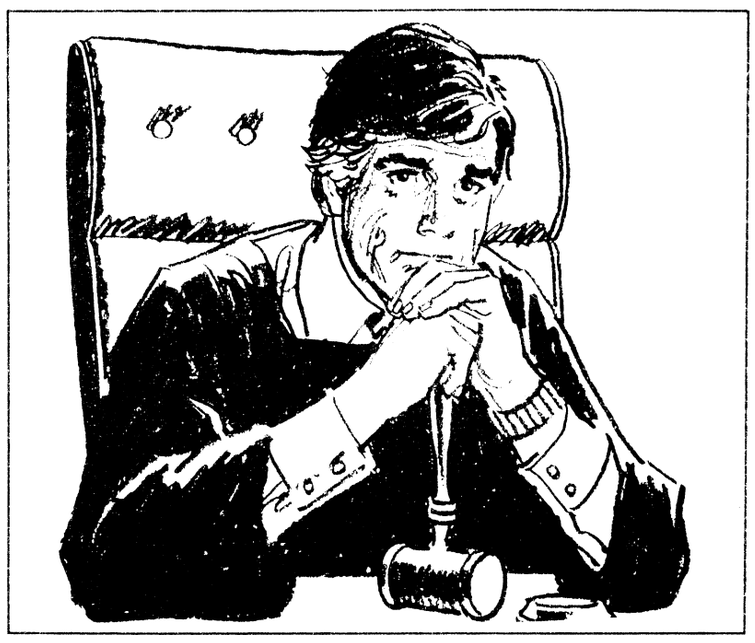
ASK THE JUDGE

Q: My husband is presently assigned to Korea on an unaccompanied tour, while my three children and I remain living in Columbus. Up until last month, my husband had been sending bi-monthly checks to pay our living expenses.

Since my children are young, I do not work. This month my husband sent me less than 1/2 the amount he normally sent. This amount barely pays for rent. I have written him but he does not respond. What can I do?

A: Although severe, your problem is unfortunately not uncommon. Your first step is to speak to a legal assistance attorney.

The attorney can write your husband's commanders, requesting that they counsel him on his responsibility to adequately and continuously support his family. This is dictated under Army Regulation 608-99.



If there is no positive result, we can contact the U.S. Army Family and Community Support Center in Alexandria, Va. They can put the pressure of the Department of the Army on your husband's commander to help relieve the situation.

In the meantime, the Army Community Service and Army Emergency Relief may be able to help with short term needs. The American Red Cross may, with your husband's consent, loan you money to help you get on your feet. You should not hesitate to contact your Chaplain for emotional and spiritual support.

Q: My spouse and I were married several years ago. Some time after that, we both made wills, providing for each other. The wills didn't provide for any children. Now we have a child on the way. Do we need new wills?

A: You probably do. Even though your spouse might still be your primary beneficiary in a new will, the new child should be provided for. The will can name a guardian or guardians should you and your spouse both be dead.

In many states (Georgia is one), if you have a will, but later marry, have children, or divorce, the will is voided, unless the will made provision for your marriage, children, or divorce. When you see an attorney, bring your old wills with you, because this can speed up the process.

Selling drugs to agents lands soldiers in jail

Staff Judge Advocate

On March 16, Pvt. Michael A. Padilla was sentenced to a dishonorable discharge, 25 months confinement and forfeiture of all pay and allowances after being found guilty of distributing marijuana on Fort Benning.

Padilla told the military judge, Col. Sebert Trail, that on Sept. 24 and Oct. 7, he was contacted by soldiers within his unit wanting to purchase marijuana.

In the first sale, the buyer gave Padilla $100 to purchase one ounce of marijuana. Padilla took the money and made arrangements with his source to have the marijuana hidden in a bush behind the barracks. The buyer was then contacted by Padilla and told where to pick up the marijuana.

In the second sale, Padilla received $120 for the purchase of one ounce of marijuana. After receiving the money, Padilla took the buyer to a house off post, where Padilla went into a house and got the marijuana. Padilla returned to the car and distributed the marijuana to the buyer.

On March 23, PFC Cornell L. Smith was sentenced to a dishonorable discharge, 5 years confinement, reduction to the grade of E-1, and forfeiture of all pay and allowances after being found guilty of introduction of cocaine onto Fort Benning and distributing cocaine.

Smith was targeted by the Fort Benning Drug Suppression Team in early October as a possible dealer of cocaine. Smith agreed to sell one-eighth ounce of cocaine for $325 to a government agent on Oct. 3. After receiving one-half the money, Smith departed Fort Benning and obtained the cocaine. The cocaine was then cut by adding Acetone to it to increase its weight. Smith took the cocaine to Fort Benning and distributed it to the agent.

Again on Oct. 7, Smith agreed to sell cocaine to a government agent. Smith sold .532 grams of cocaine to the agent for $100. Smith's company commander testified that Smith's duty performance was generally poor and that he did not have rehabilitative potential.

On March 27, Pvt. William R. Chermak was sentenced to a dishonorable discharge, 3 years confinement, and forfeiture of all pay and allowances after being found guilty of distributing cocaine.

Chermak told the military judge, that on Oct. 24, he agreed to provide one-eighth ounce of cocaine to a friend of a friend for $300. Chermak received $160 from the buyer in advance.

He went to his source and bought the marijuana, and in turn distributed it to the buyer.

On Sept. 16, Chermak received nonjudicial punishment for use of marijuana. Chermak's former platoon leader testified that Chermak's duty performance was generally very good.

Drinking in public parks can mean arrest for soldiers

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Provost Marshal

It's a beautiful sunny day, and a perfect time for partying. Right? Beware! If you are planning to drink alcoholic beverages within the Columbus city limits, it is strictly prohibited in certain areas.

Sidewalks, parking lots, playgrounds and public parks are strictly off-limits to alcoholic beverages. Columbus City Ordinance 14-5.1 prohibits the consumption of alcohol in a variety of public areas within the Columbus city limits.

You may be used to different laws and procedures in your home state and city, but while assigned to Fort Benning, you must abide by local laws. Take heed — the penalties can be tough to swallow.

According to a spokesman of the Columbus Police Department's Crime Prevention Section, City Ordinance 14-5.1 is a very specific law. Depending upon the judge's discretion, the maximum penalties for drinking in public are up to 60 days in jail and a $350 fine. This is a very expensive cost for a party. Take time to think before planning to drink in public places.

Soldiers assigned both temporarily and as permanent party members are being cited under this law. Perhaps it is because of a lack of forewarning. Consider yourself forewarned! It is against the law to drink alcoholic beverages in those public places mentioned above and violators will be punished.

City Ordinance 3-5L specifically deals with drinking in public parks. Under no circumstances will alcohol be permitted on these premises.

Additionally, City Ordinance 4-41.1 prohibits being in public parks after dark. These laws have been and will be enforced by the Columbus Police Department.

Do yourself a favor and avoid unnecessary problems. This summer season can be fun and full of excitement. However, the local laws apply to Fort Benning personnel, as well as to local citizens. Enjoy the nice weather and learn to enjoy this area, within the limits of the law.

Check quarters for fire hazards while cleaning

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Spring cleaning time is here. While you're giving your house a spring cleanup, why not give it a fire safety checkup as well?

Fire is more of a possibility than you would think. Every year, fires kill more Americans — 6,000 — than all other natural disasters combined, although fire is not a completely "natural" disaster. Fires injure 60,000 Americans a year badly enough to require medical attention and cost the country $30 billion damage to property and persons.

Here's a checklist that may be helpful in preventing your household from being a statistic:

- Fire extinguisher. If you don't have one, buy one. An all-class (Class A, B and C) extinguisher is good for all fires except those primarily involving metals. Purchase one with the underwriter's laboratory or factory mutual label. Once you buy one, put it in the kitchen near the door, not near the stove. You may want to buy more than one — it's a good idea to have an extinguisher on every floor of the house. Mount it out of a toddler's reach, and check the pressure gauge regularly. Fire extinguishers are meant to fight small fires only (no bigger than a trash can). William D. Killen, the Navy's fire marshal program administrator, said you should call the fire department, no matter what the size of the fire.
- Cords and plugs. Replace worn cords. Keep cords away from heavy traffic areas. Unplug small appliances (toaster, coffeemaker, hair dryer) when not in use.
- Smoke detectors. In a house, there should be a smoke detector on every floor. In apartments, place one within 10 feet of all bedrooms. Check the batteries occasionally to make sure they still work.
- Light fixtures. Make sure bulb wattage is not too high for the fixture — this can cause overheating. (Fixtures and lamps usually indicate the highest wattage they can tolerate.)
- Ashtrays. If there are smokers in your house, put ashtrays in every room and empty them often. Don't smoke in bed.
- Doors. Make sure they can be unlocked from both sides. An extra safety precaution is to close doors at night — this acts as a fire break.

After you've checked for those items, do a room-by-room check:

- Kitchen. If you have children, don't store cookies and candies above the stove. Children could get burned trying to get at the treats. Clean the stove and oven frequently to prevent the fire hazard of grease buildup. Keep electrical cords away from the stove and sink. Keep combustible materials — including cookbooks, potholders and towels — away from the stove. Killen said you should not attempt to douse a grease fire with flour — it can cause an explosion. Put a pot lid over the fire. If your pot doesn't have a lid, cover it with another large, clean pan.
- Living room, family room or study. Make sure televisions, computers videocassette recorders and other appliances have adequate ventilation. Resist the urge to use such appliances as resting places for books, magazines and flower vases. Books and magazines cover ventilation, and vases could cause problems if they spill.
- Basement. If your furnace or hot water heater is in a laundry room that doubles as a storage area, be careful not to store anything flammable too close to it — not even clean clothes.
- Outside. Don't fill the gas tank on a lawn mower while it's running, hot or in a closed area such as a garage. Gas can explode without warning, causing severe burns.

Computer simulates battle, saves valuable resources

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

At first glance, you might think the officers crowded around the computer monitors were involved in some new video game. Actually, it is a new concept in training known as the Army Training Battle Simulation system. Officers from the 197th Infantry Brigade are currently training on the computerized equipment.

"ARTBASS is not a computer game," explained Maj. Robert Mallicoat, the training team leader. "By using computer imagery, the monitor displays a color map of a battlefield. All we do is take information from the operation orders and put it into the system. Soldiers can see what is happening on the battle field by watching the screen."

Maj. Mallicoat explained that the beauty of the whole thing is that the battalions can accomplish the same training value as a real field training exercise, and save the battalion's training resources.

"By using this equipment, communications and maneuverability can be improved," states SFC James Baker. "The computers can not only simulate different weather conditions, but different environments as well."

A ten-man team of trainers from Fort Bragg, North Carolina, operate the equipment and enter the information based on battle decisions made by the 197th leaders. Different elements of battle; such as the maneuver elements of infantry and armor, artillery, support and the Brigade headquarters and the threat element; are all coordinated through five separate stations. The results of these movements are then relayed back to the leaders on the monitor, where they can watch the battle action.

All 197th Infantry Brigade leaders will have the opportunity to train with the ARTBASS team during their two-week stop on Kelley Hill.

Privates, bosses switch jobs to learn more about leadership

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

It happens all the time. The first sergeant stands before a formation and asks for a few volunteers for a particular task he needs to get done. Without knowing what the mission entails, a few soldiers raise their hands, figuring it can't be any worse than a detail in the motor pool.

Recently, several such volunteers from Company D, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry Brigade got the answer to their prayers, or was it their nightmares, when they found out that their mission was to replace the company commander, first sergeant and platoon leaders for two days of leadership training.

"We planned this role reversal to enhance the soldiers' knowledge of the duties and responsibilities of the people in charge," said SFC J.C. Henry, Company D first sergeant. "We put the private in the leader's position to help him understand the decision making and planning that goes into keeping soldiers gainfully employed throughout the day."

However, according to Capt. Thomas Gwiazdowski, Company D commander, the whole idea of the training was not only for the soldiers to learn about a leaders garrison duties, but to foster an individual initiative in all soldiers.

"We have used this idea in training from the Brigade's recent Sledgehammer I Field Training Exercise, as well as training at squad level," Gwiazdowski said.

During the training, the newly appointed leaders had to organize common task training as well as fill the role of the trainer. They were responsible for the output of information and accountability of all the Company D soldiers. Before they returned the company to the commander and the first sergeant, the leaders-in-training even had to tackle the planning of an infantry school support commitment that took the entire company to the field for training.

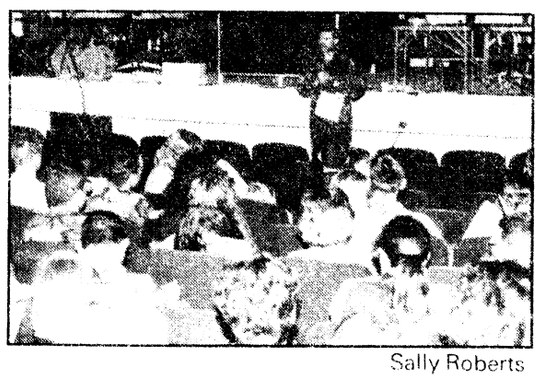
197th Infantry



Keeping a soldier's family well informed can be as important as keeping a soldier well trained. The 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry recently brought their soldiers and families together to learn about the Battalion's Family Support Organization for 1987.

Throughout the year, the Battalion brings families together for a family member briefing to introduce the chain of support to all members of the "Battalion family," as well as provide helpful information in overcoming some common problems. Families who are new to the Army benefit from the experience of families who know the ropes.

Lt. Col. Gary Halstead, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry commander, recently discussed with family members many of the stumbling blocks encountered while soldiers are here at Fort Benning or deployed for training elsewhere. Halstead also explained what the command can do to help.

In addition to the battalion's military chain of command, there is a support system for families made up of more experienced family members. These people are volunteers who help by providing services from babysitting to organizing occasional social gatherings.

This program and others like it within the 197th Infantry Brigade, help ease the soldier's worries about his family while he is training, simply by knowing that someone is there to help. — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

29th Inf. Reg.

The 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment recently became involved in sponsoring an 8-year-old boy requiring kidney dialysis treatment while awaiting a kidney transplant. Members of the Battalion learned of the young boy's need for support from Nora Poole, a civilian employee assigned to the Battalion S-3 Section.

The Trinity Episcopal Church of Columbus established a program to help the child receive free treatment at the Columbus Health Department.

Under this program, members of the Battalion collect soda and beer tabs, which "buys" free time on the dialysis machine. The child receives 15 minutes of treatment at no cost to his family for every 100 tabs collected.

Since becoming involved in the program a few weeks ago, the soldiers of 2nd Battalion have collected over 10,000 tabs.

The child's identity is being kept confidential to protect the privacy of the family. Any individual or unit wishing to collect tabs for this worthy cause can contact the adjutant, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment at 544-7415/6226. — 29th Infantry Regiment

Researchers begin study of potential AIDS drug

Veterans Administration

The Veterans Administration is conducting a cooperative study of the new drug AZT — azidothymidine — to determine its effectiveness in treating AIDS-related complex.

The four-year study is designed to test the effectiveness of AZT in halting ARC — the stage of the viral infection though to precede AIDS.

The study is the first to evaluate AZT's long-term benefits and toxicities for ARC patients and should contribute to the limited knowledge of the course of the disease.

VA medical centers in New York, Los Angeles, Miami and Houston will be participating in the study, which is partially funded by the U.S. Army. Duke University Medical Center will provide laboratory support in confunctionwith the VA Medical Center in Baltimore, Md. Burroughs Wellcome pharmaceutical company, manufacturer of AZT, is providing the drug for the study's duration.

The research will be administered through the VA Cooperative Studies Program Coordinating Center in West Haven, Conn., and the VA Cooperative Studies Program Research Pharmacy Coordinating Center in Albuquerque, N.M.

VA Q&A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Veterans Administration

Q — My VA National Service Life Insurance policy is an ordinary life policy. When will this policy be paid up?

A — An ordinary life National Service Life Insurance policy requires that a fixed premium be paid until the insured reaches age 96.

Q — I am considering enrolling in a course that is neither required as a prerequisite nor elective toward fulfillment of my graduation requirements, but is applicable toward personal enrichment of my present job. Will the VA consider this course eligible for education benefits?

A — Only those courses which are required or can be considered for elective credit toward meeting requirements for graduation can be considered for payment of VA education benefits. The only exception would be courses required to establish entitlement to VA education benefits at the full-time rate. In this case you would be allowed to enroll in courses(s) outside your curriculum sufficient enough to establish entitlement to VA education benefits at the full-time rate.

Q — I am an honorably discharged World War II veteran. I plan to retire shortly and I would like to buy a new home. I know that I was entitled to a VA-guaranteed home loan when I got out of the service, but I believe the time limit on this benefit has expired. Is this correct?

A — All time limits for use of the VA loan guaranty benefit have been eliminated. Eligible veterans of World War II and later periods may use this benefit at any time during their lifetime.

Q — I receive VA compensation and would like to know when I will receive my W-2 form to file with my federal income tax returns?

A — VA compensation benefits are not taxable. W-2 forms are only sent to record taxable income.

Engineers renovate Thrift Shop

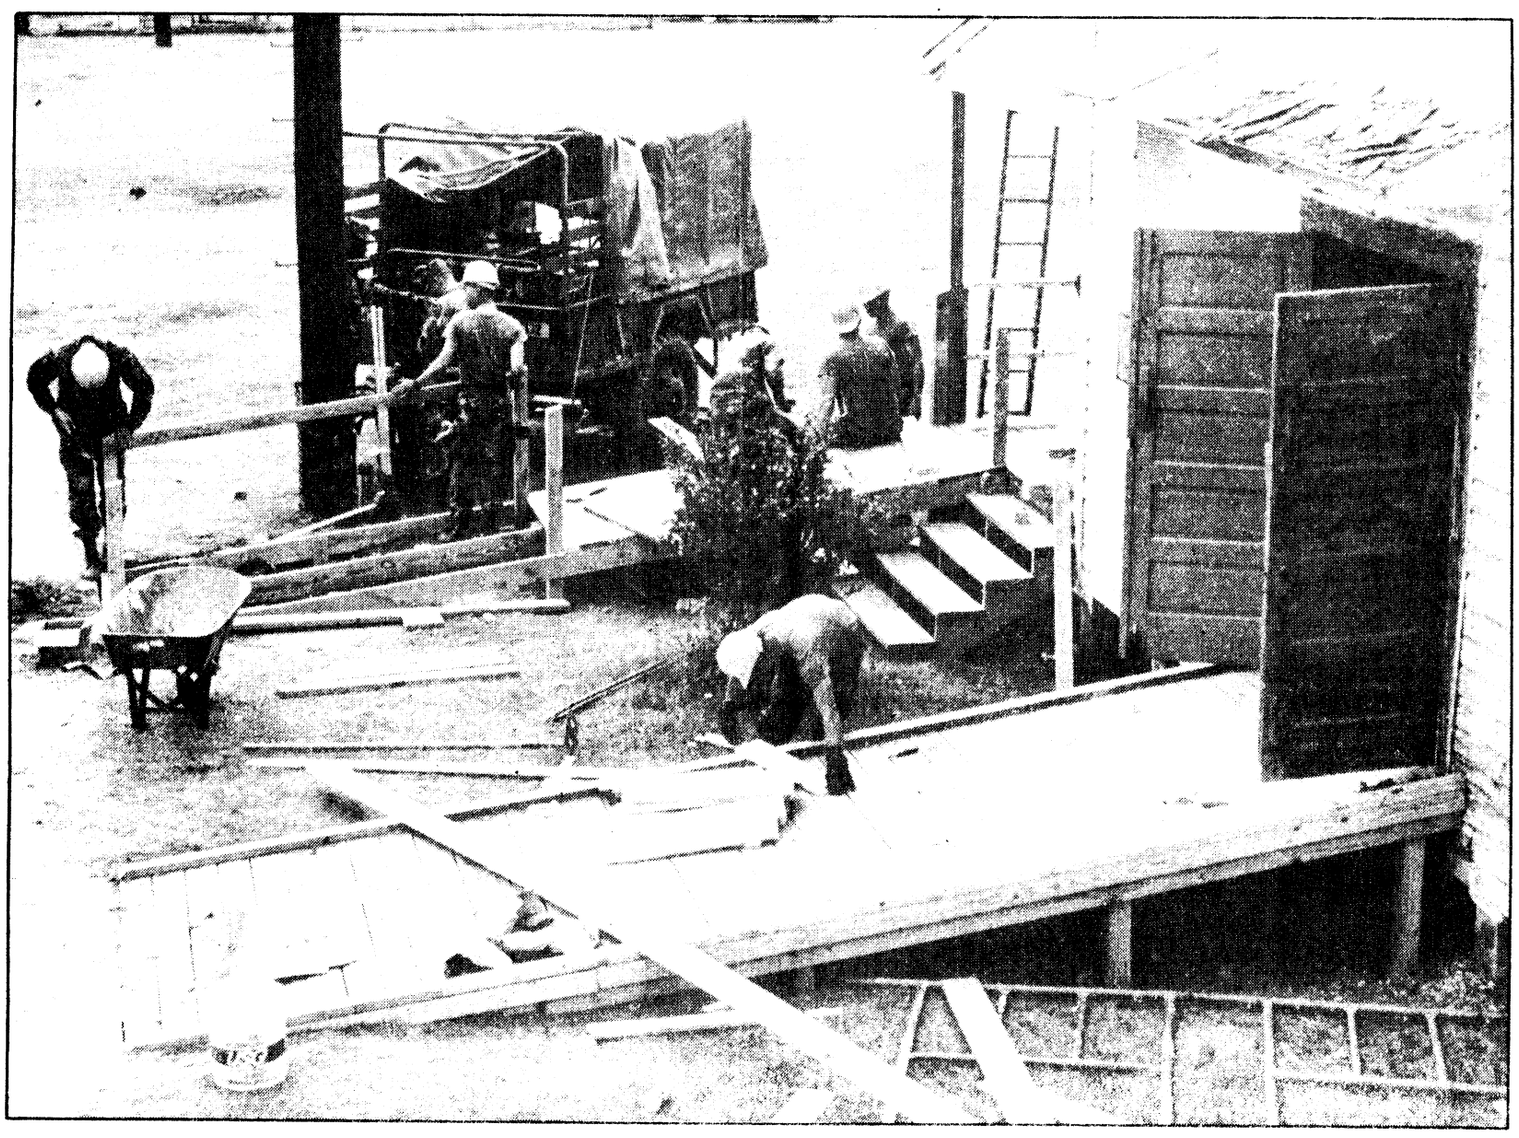
Two Company C soldiers pull up supplies for roof repairs at the Thrift Shop.

Workers gain work experience while helping the community

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Soldiers from Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group can be found working around-the-clock on their latest project at Building 1230.

The building is used as a part of the Officer's Wives Club Thrift Shop and was much in need of repairs and renovation, according to Capt. Charles H. Heaton, Co. C commander.



Heaton said that the project involves "rehabilitating" the entire building. The day crew is totally re-roofing the building as well as putting three wheel-chair ramps in, Heaton said. The night crew is putting in a drop ceiling, rewiring the building, repairing the interior walls and windows and hanging dry wall, he said.

This is the first time that the soldiers from the first and second platoons have been given a project of this magnitude. It gives them very demanding but valuable experience, he said.

"The project started Tuesday and we hope to have it finished in 10 days or less if the good weather holds out," Heaton said. "Our soldiers are working 24 hours a day on the project because the longer the Thrift Shop is closed, the more money it loses," he said.

The more than 50 soldiers working on the project include electricians, carpenters and plumbers, Heaton said.

Soldiers from Co. D, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group will be renovating the other building of the thrift shop in May.

Faith students win 'Olympics of the Mind'

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The competition was tough as more than 1,000 students from throughout Georgia gathered for the Fourth Annual Olympics of the Mind competition in Warner Robins, Ga., but Fort Benning's Faith Middle School students walked away with top honors.

Eighth grader Chris Cairns, and sixth graders Troy Hutchins, Ginger Townsend, Maurine Shields, Dana May and Juli Broussard will travel to Central Michigan State University in Mt. Pleasant, Mich., in May to represent Georgia in the Olympics of the Mind World Finals.

Olympics of the Mind was founded in 1978 by educators in New Jersey to provide opportunities for students to test their creativity and problem solving ability.

It has grown and is now called the World Finals because students from other countries have become involved and will participate in Michigan along with students from throughout the United States.

"This competition encourages critical thinking in its purest form," said Libbie Kurinec, the Faith teacher who has sponsored this team. "Critical thinking skills need to be emphasized in classrooms, and Olympics of the Mind provides our students a wealth of opportunities in long-term planning and evaluation as well as in spontaneous problem solving."

The competition is divided into two major parts. First, student teams must develop one of five specific problems. They have eight minutes to perform the solution for a panel of judges.

The second part of the competition involves spontaneous problem solving. The team faces a panel of judges. A problem is presented. The team is given one minute to consider the problem and three minutes to provide as many creative solutions to the problem as they can.

Faith's winning team chose to develop a problem called "Cro-Magnon;" they were to bring pre-historic civilization to life. This required the team to write a script, create a set that could be assembled on stage in one min of the Association of the United States Army sponsors the ceremony by procuring the actual award, a .45 caliber pistol. Lenora Smith, president of the chapter, presented the pistol and an engraved plaque to Reynolds.

Col. R.S. Siegfried, ITC commander, presented an engraved saber to Reynolds from the officers and noncommissioned officers of the ITC.

The Drill Sergeant of the Year Award was originally developed at the request of Richard A. Leandri, a prominent Florida businessman, to honor Col. (Retired) Donald C. Shuffstaff. Leandri attended this year's ceremony. He was recognized and praised by Siegfried for his support of the United States Army.

Siegfried also praised the local AUSA chapter for the support they give Fort Benning's soldiers and families.

Connie Reynolds joined her husband on stage during the presentation of awards. Jim Gallagher, first vice president of the local AUSA chapter, presented her a bouquet of roses.

Following the ceremony, a reception honoring Reynolds was held in the 3rd Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade dining facility. — Marsha Santiago, ITC correspondent*

Earning one Distinguished Service Cross, four Silver Stars, four Bronze Stars, a silver and blue Combat Infantry Badge, and having a Fort Benning field named after you are things to bragg about. It's an impressive list and one that tells the colorful story of the 28-year career of SGM Bobby Q. Brock.

Until recently assigned as operations noncommissioned officer, S2/3, Headquarters, Infantry Training Center, Brock has served in Germany, Korea, and Vietnam, and seen many changes during his career.

The Nashville, Ga., native entered the Army in 1958. He in-processed at Fort Jackson, S.C., and was then sent to Fort Benning to complete both basic combat and advanced individual training.

He served in a variety of positions and locations, but when the time came for him to select a regimental affiliation, Brock chose the 5th Infantry. "I liked the crest," he said.

Brock said he finds young soldiers entering the Army today highly motivated and physically fit. The advice he would give any soldier entering today is, "Be all you can be.' Regardless of what job you have, do the best you possibly can.

"The Army has been good to me," he said. "I like my job."

Reviewing his career, it is obvious that Brock has lived the "Be All You Can Be" motto. As a staff sergeant leading a platoon in the Republic of Vietnam, he lived these words. Even though he was wounded twice, he and his 21-man platoon held off a battalion-sized force for a day and a night until reinforcements arrived. His actions earned him the Distinguished Service Cross.

Brock praised the NCO corp. "NCOs are the backbone of the Army. I believe that. That's the reason I stayed an NCO all my time," he said.

After 28 years, 7 months and 20 days spent serving his country, Brock is ready to face a new challenge. "I'm going to get a college degree. I never did that while I was in the Army. When I was coming up through the ranks, they gave me a rifle and told me to go for it," he said.

Brock retired last week. He will remain in Columbus and is currently enrolled at Troy State University, working towards a degree in business administration. — Marsha Santiago, Infantry Training Center correspondent*

School board elections coming up

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Parents of children attending Fort Benning Schools set the direction for their children's schools through an elected school board.

An 11-member elected board, made up of parents of children attending the schools, meets monthly to set district policy and provide general direction to the system. Members are elected for two-year terms, with each of the eight schools having a representative on the board. In addition to the eight school representatives, the board includes a president, a chaplain, and a lawyer. Members' terms are staggered so that the board will include experienced board members each year.

School board elections will be May 19. Board sets up for elections for two-year terms are the representatives from the Dexter, Loyd, and White Schools. A candidate will also need to be elected to represent the Faith School for one year to fill an unexpired term.

To be eligible to run as a candidate for a school, an individual must be the parent or guardian of a child enrolled in the school during the time he or she serves on the board and must not be an employee or related to any school system employee.

The school board meets on the last Monday of each month at 4 p.m. in the Administrative Conference Room. The board considers school policies, approves the budget, approves personnel selections, approves curriculum changes and functions in much the same way as do school boards in civilian communities.

Current elected board members are Col. Miguel Garcia, president; Lt. Col. John Nix, JAG representative; Lt. Col. Don McSwain, chaplain; Col. Frederick Peters, Schools Officer; Col. Carl Ernst, Faith School; SFC William Ray, Wilbur School; Mary Alice Stacey, McBride School; SGM Carl Littlejohn, Wilson School; Anne Mace, Patch School; Sarah McCrary, White School; Tandy Shields, Dexter School; and Elaine Kendall, Loyd School.

The problem became more complex because certain topics had to be contained within the skit, there were time limitations, and there were strict budgetary and procedural requirements.

To prepare for the spontaneous problem-solving portion of the competition, students have worked all year on a variety of problems provided by their teacher, Mrs. Kurinec.

"The spontaneous problem solving was very hard for all of us at the beginning of the year," said Maurine Shields, sixth grader. "We see how we have improved with practice. It's fun now. Mrs. Jurinec keeps making the problems harder, but we enjoy doing them."

The "Cro-Magnon" team is preparing for the trip to Michigan by performing for Fort Benning School groups and civic organizations. The students will be featured on the Rozell Show on Channel 3 on April 13 and on the Good Day Show on Channel 9 on April 16. They will also participate in Olympics of the Mind State Champions Day on May 9 where they will be videotaped.

Students, teachers and parents have also embarked on a fund raising campaign to finance the team's trip to Michigan.

Two other teams from Faith School participated in the Olympics of the Mind competition. One group — Sean Ray, Loren Magruder, Tina Pierson, Natasha Matos, Tara Norton, Pontress Wilkins, and Tonya Burdeshaw — placed third for their problem, "Poetic License." Sean Ray received the prestigious Renatra Fusca Creativity Award for his exceptional presentation of the poem, "Annabel Lee."

Mrs. Kurinec's students are all members of the gifted program at Faith Middle School.

"We are thrilled with the results of this year's competition, particularly since it was our first year to participate," says Kurinec. "Many of our students who were not involved in the program this year are already looking forward to participating in Olympics of the Mind competition next year."

What Specialist Hales has been aiming for during his off-duty time.

Specialist Four Jason Hales has been aiming for the best. As a soldier, and as a student. He's an Infantryman at Fort Myer, Virginia, as well as a B.S. candidate in Mechanical Engineering at Park College. And he's just one of the over 100,000 soldiers who are building brighter, smarter futures through the Army's Reaching for Excellence education program.

It's a terrific opportunity that's available to each and every soldier, at virtually every Army post around the world. Reaching for Excellence is everything from basic educational skills and technical skill development to undergraduate and graduate studies at the college level. And it's a chance to have at least 75% of your college tuition paid for by the Army.

Continuing your education is a commitment that's fully supported by the Army leadership. You can start taking advantage of this commitment at your post's Education Center. There, you'll find a professional education counselor who can help you set short- and long-range goals which fit both your educational and career plans.

Drop by your Education Center and find out, as Specialist Hales did, how you can turn some off-duty time into a lifetime of rewards. If you want to get ahead, now's the time to get started.

ARMY EDUCATION. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Activities provide fun, excitement for post kids

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Small World Preschool and McGraw Manor Community Life Center joined together recently to give Fort Benning children a chance to have some good clean fun.

The two groups sponsored a variety of activities just for kids in celebration of the Month of the Military Child.

McGruff the Crime Dog was there passing out badges to the kiddies, while his police counterparts took fingerprints for parents to keep should anything happen to their children.

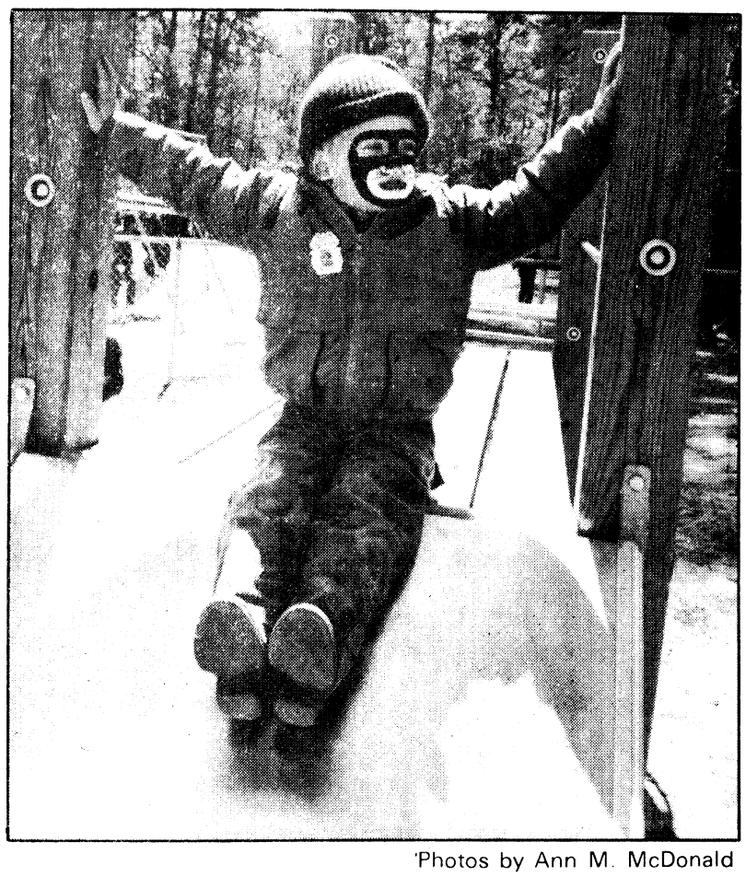
There was an artist on hand to paint the youngsters' faces. They were asked what they wanted to look like and that's what they got. As a result, there was a lot of little "cats" and "Indians" running around.

"The paint was made out of a mixture of ivory liquid soap and non-toxic paints," said Rebecca Gillmore, a member of the board of directors at the preschool, "so that it could easily be removed.

The biggest event was the balloon launch. "We attached the address of the preschool to the balloons," Mrs. Gillmore said, "and let the children release them simultaneously."

"I think that's my balloon," one preschooler said, while others just oohed and ahed as a myriad of colored balloons filled the air.

Other activities were train rides and cartoon shows. Hot dogs, soda pop, and other goodies were available to fill hungry tummies.



"The day turned out great," Mrs. Gillmore said. "Before it was over kids were asking when we plan to do this again."

More than 6,000 competitors await start gun at OWC Festival of Running

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning Officers' Wives Club Festival of Running was truly a family affair, as people ranging in ages from 2 to 76 turned out to run or walk in the different events.

According to Janice Connolly, race coordinator, over 6,000 people participated in the festival.

The start and finish was at Doughboy Stadium, with the course stretching out around main post. "We tried to design the course so that it was nice and flat," Mrs. Connolly said, "and we tried to make the route scenic so that people who had never been on Fort Benning before could see a pretty part of the post.

"The focus of the whole festival was the family," she said, "we didn't want to leave anyone out."

The 283rd Band was on hand for listening enjoyment of runners and spectators, and Maria Ratio lead an aerobics session to warm up the kiddies before their race.

The Spencer High School ROTC Drill Team strutted its, stuff on the stadium field, evoking oohs and aahs from the spectators.

Refreshments were available for the runners after the races.

Units competed for the Commanders Trophy in the 3 and 5 mile runs. There was also individual and team runs in the 5- and 10-kilometer distances and a 1/2-mile run for children 6 and under on the stadium track. A 5 kilometer walk was offered for people who just wanted some fresh air exercise.

"I thoroughly enjoyed the race," Christine Goetz, overall winner in the 5-kilometer race said, "and the unit run was a lot of fun. I think it builds camaraderie."

• For a complete list of winners, see B-3.

608th Ordnance undefeated in volleyball intramural play

Calvin Mitchell of A Company lobs the ball to the 608th Ordnance team in Volleyball action at Audie Murphy Gym Monday night.

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

In volleyball action Monday night the 608th Ordnance slaughter Company A of the 43rd Engineers in a 15 to 5 victory.

A Co. got off to a bad start when they lacked a scorekeeper and had to forfeit the first game in three.

In one of the three games schedualed Bill Wesner of the 608th opened with a serve that A. Co could not return making the 608th the first to score.

In another highlight of the game Doris Taylor of A Co. bopped the ball in the air setting up the opportunity for teammate Darrell Taylor to send a spike over the net and out of reach of 608th to score the first point for A Co.

Halfway through the game Donnie "P.T" Lee sent a serve to A Co.that forced Bob Neidow nose first to the floor in an effort to retrieve the ball. But his efforts were to no avail resulting in the 608th lead of 8 to 1.

In another outstanding playthat sent people to their knees was one in which James Voigts dived on his face to return a spike from A Co. back over the net resulting in a saved pointand scoring a point when A Co. failed to reach it in time.

At one point the action got so hot that Tom Payne of the A Co. and Jerry Reyes of the 608th both went for the ball at the top of the net and simultaniously tried to spike it into the opponents territory. The ball managed to find its' way into 608th turf where Felicita Rangel set up a spike for "P.T" Lee which resulted in another score for the 608th.

Things slowed down some with the ball being rallied back and forth in one play that was hit 15 times before coming to land in 608th territory giving A Co. another point.

The 608th Ordnanace walked away once again undefeated with a 7 to 0 standing, placing them first in the 36 Engineer Group Division. A Co. are now 2 to 3 with a comeback promised for next week.

Passover time to recall Jewish heritage

By Craig Allen
Reception Battalion Chaplain

Editor's note: The eight-day festival of Passover begins Tuesday for the Jewish community. For information on the observance at Fort Benning, call 545-2288.

I will never forget Passover 1977. As the sun went down, signaling the commencement of the holiday, my father died. It was not unexpected. He had been gravely ill for many weeks.

Nonetheless, the time of his death, coming on the festival commemorating the most significant experience in Jewish existence, insured that I would have a continuing personal involvement with Passover.

At first, this personal involvement meant a predictable, yearly spectrum of primarily negative emotions relating to an unresolved grief process. Gradually, however, in a sort of mystical way, the annual Passover experience, instead of being a negative remainder, actually became a source of healing and strength.

At the very heart of Jewish theology is the concept of redemptive history. Correspoding to, yet markedly different from the Christian concept of salvation, the idea is bascially this: God has a special relationship with all the distinct people of the world. The degree to which they are able to clearly perceive their relationship and role impacts strongly on their prospects for "salvation."

Needless to say, a respect and tolerance for other differing relationships and roles is presupposed. The relationship and role of the Jewish people with respect to God is based upon affection and expectation; i.e. God has both an unconditional love for and a special requirement of us. Furthermore, this relationship and role is revealed through God's involvement in history which brings us back to Passover, the core historical experience of Jewish identify.

It is in this historical event and its influence upon the Jewish psyche that we witness the ongoing redemption of the Jewish people.

It starts from a loving God who unconditionally chooses a people to be His "special treasure" (Exodus 19), then hears their cries of enslavement, becomes actively involved in their liberation, ultimately recruiting them to be a "light unto the nations."

This is the essence of the covenant relationship wherein divine favor is maintained by adherence to the Law (Torah).

For Jews, this covenant is eternal. It is precisely this concept of eternity that is flected in the 12th chapter of the Book of Exodus ("And ye shall observe this thing for an ordinance to thee and to thy sons forever.")

The two main aspects of this "ordinance" of Passover that are mandated in Exodus are the annual retelling of the story (v. 26 ff) and the eating of unleavened bread (Matzah). The retelling of the story ad the eating of Matzah take place at an eleborate and colorful ritual meal and religious service called a Seder.

The Seder is really a study in pedagogy (teaching technique) as a variety of symbolic foods and rituals are interwoven in a manner designed to stimulate the youngest child to ask at the beginning of the Seder, "How is this night different from all other nights?" The entire rest of the evening consists of answering that question in a variety of ways on different levels.

But the bottom line is "because of what God did for us and our ancestors in Egypt."

There is no distinction between "us" and "our ancestors" as each of us is biblically commanded to see ourselves as having "personally" come out of Egypt.

It is this personal internalization of the collective historical Exodus experience that assumes redemption in the form of ongoing Jewish survival. By means of this personalization, both the individual as well as the people are able to bring the past into the present, continually reawakening and renewing Jewish identity.

That is why those who have historically been committed to Jewish destruction have always tried to disrupt the observance of Passover. Although they didn't understand why, they instinctively knew it was an essential aspect of Jewish survival. What is happening in the Soviet Union today reflects the same unsuccessful attempt.

The central theme of Passover is freedom. Freedom takes many forms. Whereas the Hebrews in Egypt were physically ensalved, Pharoh was a victim of spiritual enslavement as evidenced by his refusal to let the Hebrews go. Human freedom of choice, i.e. our ability to choose between psychological freedom and slavery, is central to the Jewish world view, a view that has so profoundly influenced western civilization, especially in regard to jurisprudence.

In the Book of Leviticus, we see a foundational biblical commandment: "Justice, Justice, you shall pursue." The English translation does not really do the verse justice. The Hebrew word really means to chase after, almost making the goal an obsession.

It is the Egyptian bondage that so intensely impacted on the Jewish soul. Time and time again we read in the Bible to do such-and-so or behave in a certain way because "you were once slaves in Egypt."

We are constantly reminded to treat the stranger in our midst righteously because we were once strangers. This pursuit of justice is the essence of the covenant, i.e., the Jewish people's relationship with God and our role among the peoples of the earth.

Furthermore, we are constantly reminded of the nature of God: "I am the Lord, your God who brought you out of Egypt," i.e. I am personally involved in your destiny as revealed by My hand in history.

That first Passover in Egypt 3500 years ago did not eliminate evil or remove injustice from the world. What it did was offer the world an alternative; freedom as opposed to enslavement; an affirmation of the basic worth of each individual, a testimony to the uniqueness and dignity of the human spirit.

The Passover Seder (Last Supper) which Jesus celebrated just before his death was such an affirmation, a personal internalization of the preceeding 1500 years of Jewish history and experience. Perhaps therein lies the universal significance of Passover.

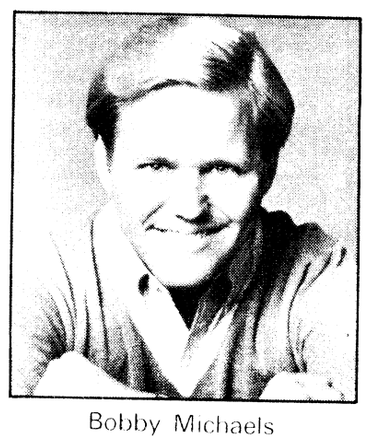
Christian singer to perform during Holy Week

USAIC Chaplains Office

Next week is Holy Week for Christians, and Fort Benning believers will have an opportunity to contemplate the message of Jesus presented in an especially accessible form — the music of Bobby Michaels.

Michaels, originally from Texas, is internationally known for his music ministry to American Armed Forces Personnel. The Word recording artist sings in the "adult contemporary" style and his material is an up-beat proclaimation of Christian belief and hope.

Michaels tries to relate closely to his audience. His story of God's power in his life has inspired many.



He will perform in eight concerts and services at Fort Benning next week.

On Thursday he will sing in Marshall Auditorium, Building 4 at 7 p.m.

On Good Friday he will be heard at Sightseeing Road Chapel at 8:40 a.m, the Kelly Hill Theater at 11:30 a.m. and in the Harmony Church Theater #2 at 7 p.m

The Reception Battalion will host him at 3 p.m April 18 and he will appear in Sand Hill Theater #3 at 6 p.m.

Michaels will be featured in the T.I.C Chapel's Easter Sunrise Service on April 19 at 6:30 a.m.and at Sand Hill Easter Service in front of first Brigade headquarters at 9 a.m. Everyone is invited to share these experiences of Michaels' ministry.

Personal growth comes by studying experiences

By Johnny R. Almond
Brooks Air Force Base, Texas

FORT MONROE, Va. — What is life without development, without growth?

Growth is the natural law of life. When things stop growing they begin to die. This is true of people, businesses, and nations. Our joy is in growing. The reward for development is the release through ourselves of greater potentials for development. We are most content when we are fulfilling our purpose.

The purpose of life is spiritual, mental, and physical growth. We are born to grow. This is the word that religion, philosophy, literature, and art ceaselessly speak. We can grow by keeping in vitual communion with the world within us and outside us.

"We have only one ambition," says Lee Iacocca. "To be the best. What else is there?" Why stay on Earth unless it is to grow, to become "all that you can be?"

Life contains far more than power, wealth, and fame. Excellence is a far nobler goal than success. Attainment of power, wealth, and status is never as satisfying or lasting as development of character and integrity.

You are attaining excellence to the extent that you grow, and you grow to the degree that you become wiser, more useful, and a more secure person. In other words, we live to learn, and by this very process we learn to live.

As a total being, we either grow toward something or our very existence is meaningless. "He has changed" is a fine compliment. Berries change from green to ripe. If it were not so, they would be useless. All growth means change.

In Texas years ago, almost all the oil came from surface operations. Then someone got the idea that there were greater sources of supply deeper down. A well was drilled 5,000 feet deep. The result? A gusher.

Too many of us operate on the surface. We never go deep enough to find supernatural resources. The result is that we never operate at our best. More time and investment is involved to go deep, but a gusher will pay off.

From infancy the lesson books of life are opened and the mentality and intellect proceed in an ever-expanding circle, producing a consciousness which grasps the profound wisdom of God.

The purpose of existence is to develop this consciousness. When the soul has reached maturity it has reached full growth, and should be prepared for immortality and eternal life. We change by growth, not by magic.

CHAPEL BRIEFS

Author to speak at special events

The Protestant Women of the Chapel announce two special programs featuring Allegra McBirney, a missionary, Bible teacher, author and radio personality.

Her presentations include the use of visuals, object lessons and life application. She challenges and encourages Christians in their walk and outreach.

The first event will be a family pot luck April 22 at 6:30 p.m. in the Religious Education Center. The evening will include Ms. McBirney's personal testimony. She especially hopes to reach those who do not, as yet, have a personal relationship with God.

The second program will be April 23 at the PWOC regular 9 a.m. felllowship, also at the Religious Education Center. Babysitting will be provided for both events. For more information, call 545-2050.

Summer session needs volunteers

Vacation Bible School will be conducted June 15 through 19 at Dexter and Wilbur Schools.

From 9 to 11:30 a.m. each day, children aged 4 through sixth grade will take part in Bible studies, crafts, music and recreation. Refreshments are provided.

There will be free babysitting for children below age 4 whose parents are working in Vacation Bible School.

Buses will transport children from Custer Terrace, Davis Hill, Bouton Heights and McGraw Manor areas. Routes and schedules will be announced at a later date.

Adult workers are needed. To volunteer, call the Religious Education Center at 545-2366 or 545-4715.

Chapels celebrate lenten services

In this season of Lent, we prepare to hear the good news, " Jesus Is Lord and Savior."

That was the joyful news of Christians from the beginning. It is our news too.

The family of God gathers to worship because of that news. In worship, we remember such mighty acts of God, we celebrate His gift of grace, we proclaim His Word, pray in His name sing praises to Him and become prepared to share the news ourselves.

We invite you to come and worship with us at Sightseeing Road Chapel, at 11 a.m. each Sunday morning.

Education series offered Sundays

The Adult Enrichment Series continues Sunday with a discussion of the nature and missions of the church.

The two-hour program, which meets in the Religious Education Center, Building 229, at 7 p.m. is open to all.

"Spending $10.62 to make $500-that's music to my ears!"

Spending a little money in Ledger-Enquirer Classified to sell something like a piano can mean big money for you. You can run a 3-line ad for 3 days for just $10.62 on a big-ticket item. Or, you can run a 3-line ad for 5 days for just $5 in some classifications. Either way, when you have something to sell, spending a little can help you haul in a lot!

Vuono named chief of staff

Army News Service

President Reagan announced this week that he will nominate General Carl E. Vuono as the next Army chief of staff.

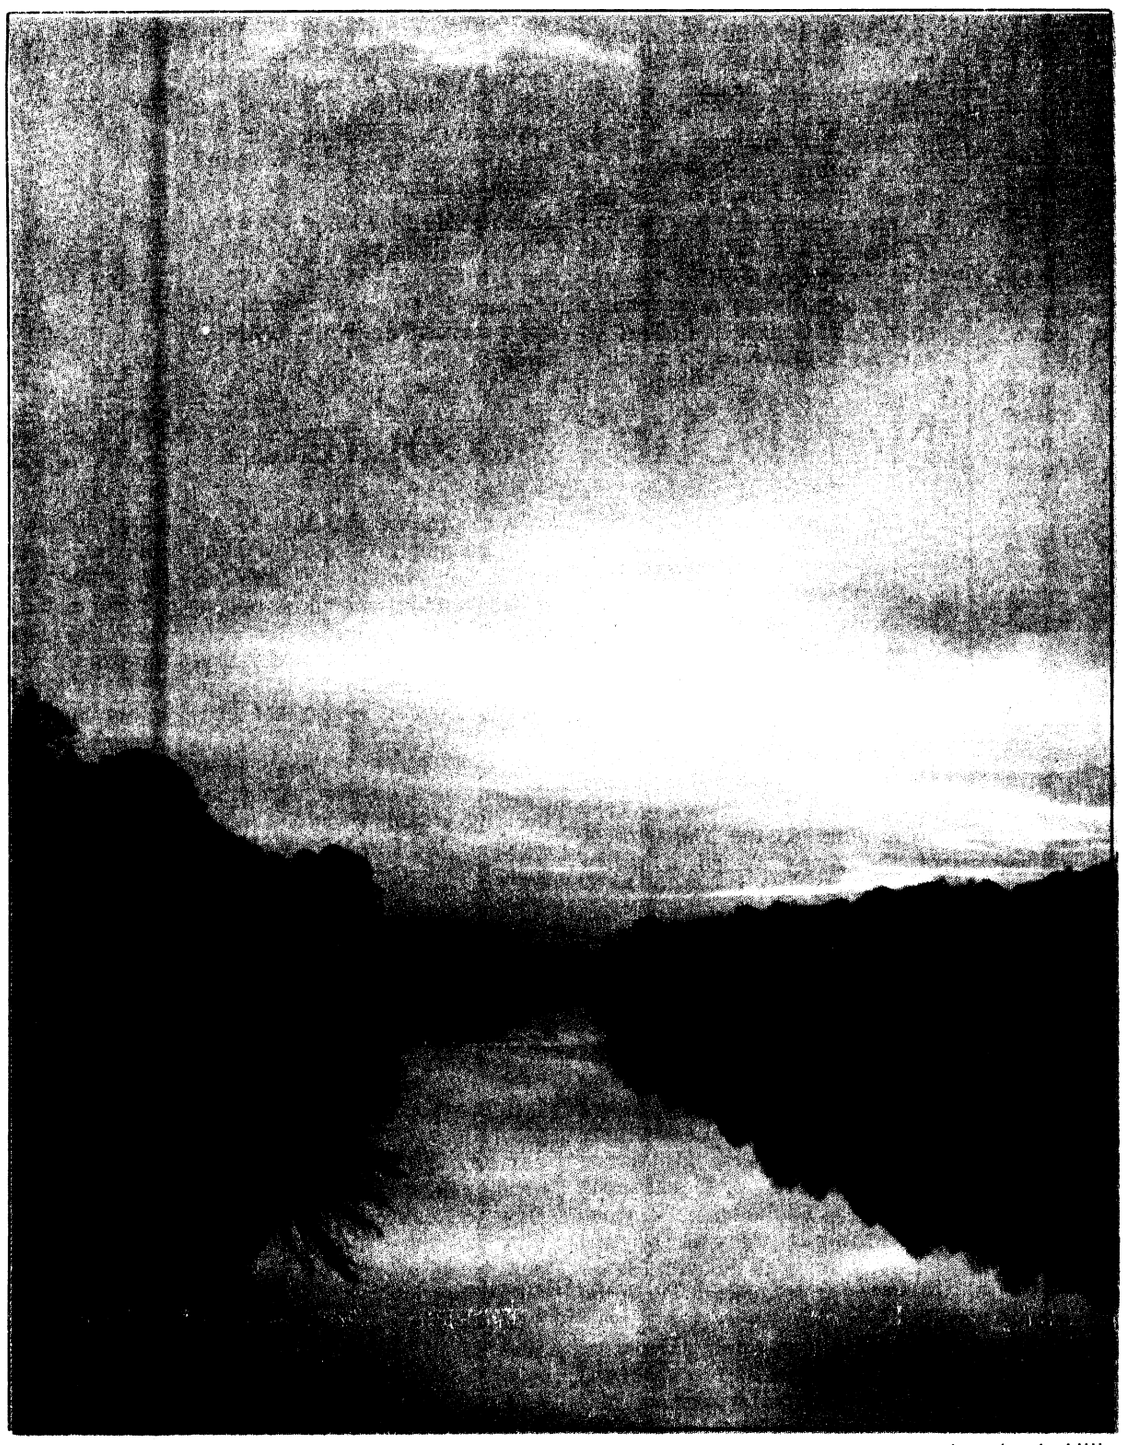
Senate confirmation of the nomination will make Vuono the senior uniformed member of he Army, directly responsible to Army Secretary John O. Marsh Jr.

Vuono is currently commander of the Army's Training and Doctrine Command, Fort Monroe, Va. He will succeed General John A. Wickham Jr., who retires in June.

Born in Monongahela, Pa., Vuono earned his commission from the United States Military Academy in 1957. He held a wide variety of command and staff positions including assistant division commander of the 1st Infantry Division (Mechanized) at Fort Riley, Kan.; commander of the 8th Infantry Division (Mechanized) in Bad Kreuznach, West Germany; and commander of the Combined Arms Center and Fort Leavenworth, Kan. Before assuming his present duties as commander of the Training and Doctrine Command on June 30, 1986, he was the deputy chief of staff of operations and plans for the Army. He holds an M.S. degree in public administration from Shippensburg State College, and has attended the Army's Field Artillery School, the Marine Corps Command and General Staff College, and the Army War College.

Dedication of Airborne Walk slated Apr. 23

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer



The "Airborne Walk" will officially be dedicated April 23, at 9:45 a.m. on Eubanks Field, Tower Branch of the United States Army Airborne School.

According to Capt. Floyd Hayse, Commander Headquarters Company, 1/507 Parachute Infantry Regiment, the ceremony will consist of two parts. "The first part will be transferring the care of the completed monument over to the Chief of Infantry," he said, "and the second part will be a memorial service and wreath laying, honoring the members of the original test platoon."

"The Memorial Ceremony is going to be an annual event," Hayse said, "which will be conducted in conjuncition with the award banquet the Airborne Association has in Atlanta."

The ceremony is open to everyone and a number of activities are planned in conjunction with the event, including a freefall parachute demonstration by the "Silver Wings," and a Ranger/Airborne orientation.

The walk, which was designed by former paratrooper Bob Baldwin, is set in the ground in the shape of the Parachutist Badge. Outlining the wings of the badge are 26 markers dedicated to past and present Airborne, Special Forces and Ranger units.

Federal workers receive brand new retirement system

Editors note: The following is a comprehensive look at the new Federal Employees Retirement System. Social Security Benefits is the first installment of a four part series covering the new system.

By Hal Haskins
American Forces Information Service

The new Federal Employees Retirement System went into effect Jan. 1, 1987, and affects more than 1 million Department of Defense civilians. It automatically covers new government employees hired after Dec. 31, 1983. Those hired before that date can transfer to the new system or can remain covered under the older Civil Service Retirement System and receive any Social Security benefits earned for non-federal employment.

The new system has three components:

- Social Security benefits
- Basic benefit plan
- Savings plan

Under the Federal Employees Retirement System, you pay full Social Security taxes and a small contribution to the basic benefit plan. In addition, you can make tax-deferred contributions to a savings plan, a portion — up to 5 percent of your salary — matched by the government.

Following is a summary of the Social Security benefits.

You are eligible for two types of Social Security benefits under the Federal Employees Retirement System: (1) Old-age, survivors and disability insurance, which replaces a portion of earnings lost as a result of retirement, disability or death; and (2) Medicare hospital insurance, which pays a portion of hospital expenses incurred while you are receiving Social Security disability or retirement benefits.

Old-Age Survivors and Disability Insurance

Benefits include:

- Monthly payments if you are retired, have at least 40 quarters of coverage under Social Security and have reached at least age 62. Monthly payments during your retirement are also made for your spouse and dependents if they are eligible;

Military Family Act of '85 gives job preference to spouses.

By Hal Haskins
American Forces Information Service

Military spouses seeking jobs at their sponsor's duty stations may now receive job preference for more grade levels.

The Military Family Act of 1985, which gave preference to military spouses in jobs at grades GS-8 through GS-15, now includes GS-5 through GS-7 and blue collar jobs at similar levels.

To be eligible for hiring preference, the military spouse must:

- be married to an active duty service member;
- accompany the sponsor on a permanent change of station move; and
- be included in the best-qualified group after a competitive screening process.

The applicant should:

- submit proper application forms for job openings at the installation's personnel office; and
- follow the procedure required by the local personnel office to apply for spouse preference (requirements may not be the same everywhere).

In addition, there are some differences in rules governing stateside and foreign areas.

In the states, military spouses may request preference when applying for a vacancy by submitting the customary application forms. Some services may also require a copy of their sponsor's permanent change of station orders. Spouses may exercise preference from 30 days prior to six months after the sponsor's permanent change of station move or until they accept or decline a job based on preference, whichever is earlier.

Education codes linked to non-commissioned officers' promotions

Army News Service

Noncommissioned officers who want to get promoted need to make sure that their records have their correct NCO education codes.

Recent Army policy changes have made NCO education sequential, progressive and mandatory, and have linked some education to promotion. Because of these changes, NCO education codes on the Standard Installation/Division System data base and the Enlisted Master File have become more important, according to SGM Perry R. Crook of the Military Personnel Center's Non-Commissio ed Officer Education System section.

"As the Army considers and implements more links between NCOES and promotion in the future, it will be even more important that NCOs have the correct education code in their records," Crook said.

"Some of the codes in use have become meaningless as our Enlisted Personnel management system has evolved over the years," he explained. "Also, soldiers often have codes that do not accurately reflect the highest professional development training they've completed."

The use of standard codes should correct the lack of good information about NCOES. These codes will ensure that soldiers are considered for promotions and NCOES courses

The only valid NCO education codes are:

A: Sergeants Major Academy nongraduate (resident and nonresident) — was enrolled in, but failed to complete one of these programs

B: Sergeants Major Academy declinee (resident and nonresident)

E: Sergeants Major Academy selectee (resident and nonresident)

M: Advanced NCO Course nongraduate (resident only) — was enrolled in, but failed to complete this program

S: Advanced NCO Course graduate (resident and nonresident)

T: Advanced NCO Course selectee (resident only)

W: Basic NCO Course graduate — includes all basic non-commissioned officer courses and basic technical courses

2: Primary NCO Course graduate — includes graduates of Primary Leadership, Primary Noncommissioned Officer and Primary Leadership Development courses conducted at NCO Academies; and resident NCO Academy graduates before Oct. 1, 1976.

O: Has not completed any level of NCOES course and codes T, M, F, D or do not apply.

"We announced these codes in MILPER Message No. 87-36 in November," Crook said. "All invalid NCO education codes should have been changed to the correct codes by March 1.

"However, NCOs need to check their records to see that they have the right codes listed," he added. "And whenever their level of non-commissioned officer education changes, they need to make sure that their education codes get changed too."

Personnel recods and SIDPERS clerks also need to make sure that the records they handle have correct NCO education codes. The codes will be an item of interest for Personnel Management Assistance System team visits.

OPINION

Surrogate mother piece branded sick humor

Dear Editor:
When I first began reading Becky Obert's article "Surrogate Mothers," I thought it at best a satire, at worse sick humor. At the conclusion of the article I was completely disgusted to realize she was serious.

That anyone would condone the buying and selling of human flesh is repulsive to those of us who consider human life precious. That she would go so far as to suggest this as a legitimate means of economic independence is ludicrous! She has just reduced the act of conceiving a human being to an economic equation or, put more bluntly, prostitution.

In this day and age when the American family is being devasted by the effects of widespread immorality, she now wants to add the extra burden of economic warfare between a husband and wife or, in her words, "change the power structure of marriage as we know it." What "power structure?" I am inclined to believe that most married couples derive their own personal "power structure" based on each individual's strenghts and weaknesses as well as mutual consent. It has been my experience and observation, that most couples work toward common goals, not personal independence.

To her sweeping concluson that "surrogate parenting is here," I would say, so is murder, rape and theft. But this in no way legitimizes these acts. Society rightly finds these things abhorrent. I suspect that most Americans view surrogate mothering the same.

Lastly, it is no small leap in "logic" to envision nationwide economic prosperity as a result of gross immortality. As the case of Mary Beth Whitehead has demonstrated, what of the cost in human pain and suffering? Shall we further undermine our values, families and nation for mere money? I think Becky Obert's equation lacks a few key variables.

Capt. Robert G. Soechting

Saluting: when in doubt, whip it out

By Richard J. McDowell
Deputy Public Affairs officer

Back in the days of the "old Army" — white name tags and gold and black "U.S. Army" on starched fatigues — our drill sergeant used to constantly beat one thing into our shaven heads. That was, "If it moves, salute it, if it doesn't, paint it."

Another maxim of the day was, "when in doubt, whip it out."

We knew if we saw a blue sticker on a car, we saluted, even if it was evident the driver was the officer's wife or child. If we recognized an officer in civilian clothes, even though we too may be in civilian clothes, we saluted.

There was no such thing as "neutral turf" where, because of the congestion one didn't salute.

There have been a few changes to those days. Salutes are no longer required if either the senior or subordinate is in civilian clothes. Blue officer stickers on cars no longer mandate a salute and post commanders can designate high traffic areas, such as shopping malls and outdoor break areas as "no saluting zones."

It is still appropriate to salute officers in official vehicles if they are identified as officers by rank recognition or star plates.

And it should go without saying that when meeting an officer who out ranks us, we salute and render a proper greeting.

Officers aren't the only ones we salute. We also salute our National Colors. We do so at reveille and retreat. This applies to civilians, who, although they don't render hand salutes, they will stop and face the flag until the ceremony is over. If they are in a car, they stop the car, get out and stand at attention.

At parades, we stand when the colors are marched past where we are sitting.

As far as we're concerned, you can't over salute. When in doubt, whip it out.

No "butts" accepted at Stop Smoking Clinic

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

It's no secret that the Army declared war on smoking.

On April 17, 1986, Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., said, "Medical evidence shows overwhelmingly that the use of tobacco products adversely impacts on the health and readiness of our force."

On June 6, the Department of the Army issued a policy establishing the standard of a smoke free environment.

In accordance with that policy, Fort Benning prohibited smoking inside all buildings. Smoking areas were designated for people who wished to smoke, but only after the supervisors certified that secondhand smoke was sufficiently isolated to protect nonsmokers.

A task force is now being implemented on post to further the fight, said Yvonne Linsenbigler, of the Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities.

Part of what the task force is doing is helping support a stop smoking clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital.

"The clinic was started before the Army began its crackdown on smokers," said MACH Chaplain Phillip Towe, "and we've noticed a big increase in people registering since the crackdown."

"MACH has sponsored this clinic for about five years," he said.

Towe said the clinic functions like an alcoholics anonymous for smokers. It is divided into four, two-hour sessions in an open forum.

"Our clinic is based on the Fresh Start program sponsored by The American Cancer Society," Towe said., "It covers why people smoke and how to quit."

The Stop Smoking Clinic is free and everyone is welcome to attend.

Two clinics are schecduled for this quarter: April 21, 23, 28 and 30 from 10 a.m. to noon, and May 12, 14, 19 and 21 from 7 to 9 p.m. To register, call Capt. Buchanan at 544-1221/4166.

Being military child isn't easy job: courage, love needed

by Mike Roddin
Fort Riley, Kan., Post

What does it mean to be a military child? Well, I can't talk from first-hand experience, never having been one myself, but I sure can relate to what it's like for my 3½ year-old daughter, whose favorite question is, "Do you have to work tomorrow, Daddy?"

For military parents, whose work week often stretches from Monday to Sunday, that's probably a popular question around your household as well.

My research has led me to one undeniable truth: being a military child isn't easy. In fact, it takes a great deal of courage on the part of the child and lots of understanding, caring, patience, and love on the part of the parents. That's a tall order for someone short on time like so many military people are.

As parents with busy work schedules, numerous "hot" suspenses to meet, field training exercises to participate in and continual juggling of family/work related priorities, we often forget that "kids are people too" with the same emotions, feelings, and need for understanding, love, and self-worth that we as adults have. So, when my little girl grabs at my shirt sleeve or begs to be held, I know it's time to reorganize my workload and priorities accordingly.

You can only tell Johnny or Susie so many times how nice the next duty station will be and how easy it will be for them to make new friends once they get there before you completely lose your credibility as a parent.

Holidays are special occasions for military children as well. Just ask any 7-year-old whose father or mother missed Thanksgiving Day or Christmas Eve because they had duty. Somebody has to pull it, right?

Baseball games, school plays, piano recitals, and spelling bees are other frequent activites missed by busy parents because of a mission essential TDY trip or major inspection.

It's real easy for busy military parents to let the Army set their priorities for them. It's easy and it's wrong! At 3½ years of age, my daugher has already heard more excuses and broken promises than I care to mention, and it breaks my heart every time I'm "forced" to make a decision that's not in the best interests for my family.

Being a military child isn't easy, but it does have distinct advantages, like the comradery, esprit, and positive values military children develop as they grow up. Somehow they seem more mature, experienced, and ready to face new challenges.

I guess you can say that military families need to develop stronger lines of communication, more supportive family ties, and deeper appreciation for family members and the role each plays in the family group.

After a day at the office or a week in the field, there's nothing quite like a child's hug or a tiny voice that says, "I love you, Daddy," to make things rights with the world for me.

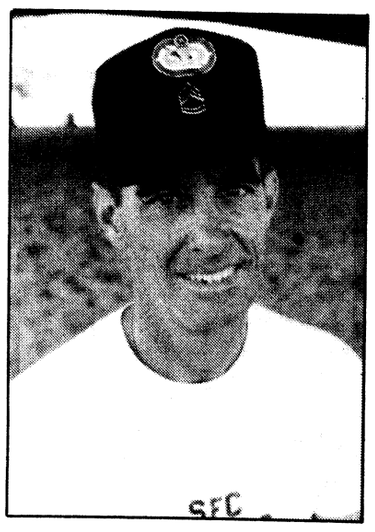
Jane Mahaffey honored for contributions to Army families, communities

Army Public Affairs

WASHINGTON — Mrs. Jane Mahaffey, widow of the late Army Gen. Fred K. Mahaffey, was honored for her many years of Army involvement and community service in a recent Pentagon ceremony.

Army Chief of Staff, Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., a longtime friend of the Mahaffey family, presented the Outstanding Civilian Service Medal to Mrs. Mahaffey on Mar. 12. "Jane, this is part of the Army's way of recognizing all the things that you've done over the years to strengthen the Army's focus on family matters," Wickham said, "and through honoring you, we honor all Army families for what they mean to the Army."

Mrs. Mahaffey helped to found the Army Community Service program while the family was stationed at Fort Benning, Ga., helped to arrange for wives to attend pre-command courses at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and taught citizenship courses to prospective U.S. citizens at Fort Campbell, Ky. She also served as a member of the Army Ladies of Arlington, a group that, under the guidance of the Arlington National Cemetery Chaplain's Office, represents the Army Family at funerals at the cemetery.



"My family and I are deeply appreciative of this award, which I accept on behalf of all Army families," Mrs. Mahaffey said. "Fred once said to me, 'Give the Army a chance to show how magnificent it can be,' and the Army has shown me that and more. The Army commissioned my husband; the Army helped me bury him; the Army was there for the birth of our children; and the Army will lay me to rest reside him at Arlington," she said. "I'm very much a part of the Army, and I'm proud to say that."

Both natives of New Mexico, the Mahaffeys were married in 1954, and Gen. Mahaffey entered the Army in 1955. An Infantryman, he served tours in Vietnam and Europe and earned numerous military awards, including the Distinguished Service Medal, the Silver Star (with two oak leaf clusters), the Legion of Merit (with three oak leaf clusters), and the Combat Infantryman Badge.

Capt. Herman Payton, Training Officer, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "We get up real early and go to church then the whole family gets together and has an Easter Egg Hunt for the little kids. We kind of make Easter into a family reunion of sorts."

Soldiers have guaranteed right to remain silent

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Recently, the right of all Americans to remain silent when faced with the prospect of criminal charges captured the public's attention when two military figures invoked this constitutional right, as private citizens, before an investigative congressional committee.

As a result, questions arose in some circles as to the how and why persons, specifically ones in the military, could shield themselves from congressional scrutiny as private citizens.

In this the Bicentennial Year of the Constitution, and in light of the congressional investigation, one of our most basic constitutional rights, the right to remain silent, has become a topic of discussion among many Americans.

The fact is, a soldier, when charged or suspected of a crime committed in the United States or its territories, has the same right against self-incrimination as do private citizens. The distinction should be made that soldiers accused or suspected of crimes by civilian authorites can only claim rights guaranteed under the Bill of Rights. For crimes committed against the military, they are guaranteed the right against self-incrimination as covered by the Uniform Military Code of Justice.

The roots of the private citizen's right to silence lie in the mid-1200's, when the English people rejected the church's inquisition trials into heresy. Their resistance steemed from the church's practice of forcing a person to answer all questions put to him when no formal accusation had been made; the accused had no idea what he was being questioned about or accused of.

Widespread objection to this method brought about the change that all persons brought to trial would first be formally charged; however, the accused still was required to answer all questions, even if the answers were incriminating. And if the accused stood mute to the questions, the court considered him guilty and passed sentenced.

Either way, people had little chance at justice before the court.

> "Over the years, the Fifth's guarantee against self-incrimination has received the federal courts' most liberal interpretations of all the Fifth's provisions.

During the 1500s and 1600s, people began to demand freedom from forced responses to questions. In many cases, these involuntary confessions resulted from the use of physical and mental tortures. Even an innocent person would confess to crime in order to avoid any further pain and cruelty employed from court-appointed interrogators. Public outcry soon became impossible to ignore by the courts themselves.

In 1589, an English judge, Lord Coke, argued in a celebrated English common law case that confessions gained from physical torture were inadmissable in a court of law and an accused person could not be forced to testify against himself. The right to remain silent had reached its first important milestone as a basic right for those who believed in justice under common law.

This common law decision (English common law is unwritten, but passed down through the years), along with others, traversed the Atlantic Ocean to the colonies in America, becoming a part of the laws in each of the colonies by the King's governors. After the War of Independence, many of the states — Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Vermont and Virginia — adopted the right to remain silent in their constitutions.

Over the years, the Fifth's guarantee against self-incrimination has received the federal courts' most liberal interpretations of all the Fifth's provisions.

In 1807, Chief Justice Marshall, serving as a circuit justice for the federal court of Virginia, ruled that protection is given to answers that would establish a link in a chain of evidence needed to prosecute. In another case, Counselman vs. Hitchcock, the U.S. Supreme Court accorded the right to persons appearing before a grand jury. This broadened the scope of the constitutional provision. The Fifth up to that time had granted the right to silence in criminal cases only. The court concluded that the right should also extend to tort cases (commission of a civil wrong where compensation is due), as well as criminal cases, so that those who may enjoy it can secure it in all legal proceedings.

The extension was granted even further in two other Supreme Court cases: Emspakvs. United States and Quinn vs. United States. In both, the court ruled that the right to remain silent can extend to appearances before congressional committees. In a unrelated case, the court held that the firing of an employee fr invoking the fifth was illegal.

Protecting a witness during a trial for pleading the Fifth was another decision rendered by the court. If a person pleads the Fifth during a trial, the prosecution or the presiding judge may make no reference to it because the potection of our judicial system affording the accused would be jeopardized and the credibility of the accused could be lessened in the eyes of the jury.

Perhaps the most important and sweeping development for the right against self-incrimination is the "Miranda decision." Here, a suspect in a crime must be read his rights granted by the Constitution at the time of his arrest and before any questioning by the arresting police officer. The right only extends to the time the suspect is in the custodial care of the arresting authorities. Suspects are reminded that they have the right to remain silent, anything they mght say may be used as evidence against them in a court of law and that they are entitled to the presence of a lawyer during questioning.

The suspect may waive these rights, but must do so voluntarily — the decision being made with clear understanding of the waiver. Also, during a trial the prosecutor may not ask the suspect why he was silent after the reading of the Miranda warning.

A problem of perception occurs sometimes when a person invokes the Fifth Amendment. People, on occasions, wonder if the person actually does have something to hide, or they say to themselves that he is quilty because he refused to answer to questions put to him.

There may be a number of reasons why a person pleads the Fifth. For example, the objectives of a congressional committee might run counter to those of the witness (such as when the committee headed by Sen. Joseph McCarthy in the 1950's set out looking for communists in government and other professions). Other times a person may refuse to answer because his replies to questioning might lead him to being found "guilty by association", when in fact he knows noting about the crime. The refusal to testify might also be based on the witness' belief that any evidence given may be used against him in a future criminal proceeding.

> "...a soldier, when charged or suspected of a crime committed in the United States or its territories, has the same right against self-incrimination as do private citizens."

Two instances apply in which a witness must testify without the protection of the Fifth Amendment. They fall under the heading of "immunity granted by the government."

The most common, "use immunity," means that testimony given by a witness may not be used against him, but the witness can be tried for criminal offenses if there is evidence that is gathered independently of his testimony. The other, "transaction immunity," states that a witness may not be prosecuted for any crime for which he is about to testify or any crime mentuioned after immunity is granted.

Since its inception over 700 years ago, the right against self-incrimination has gone through a continual refining process from informing the accused of his crime before questioning to remaining silent before congressional committees to the granting of immunity from prosecution for testimony given.

The founding fathers, a group of learned and enlightened men, believed in the rights of man, and that government may not deny citizens their rights to be free. They were also of the opinion that the practices used in England and other areas of Europe to gain confessions via torture must not be used or tolerated in the new republic. And as evidence of their steadfast conviction, they wrote into the Bill of Rights that all Americans have the right to speak freely without fear of retribution, and in matters of justice, the right to remain silent before their accusers without the fear of an unjust punishment.

Justice Douglas, in a concurring opinion in Ullman vs. United States, said, "The Fifth Amendment protects the conscience and dignity of the individual, as well as his safety and security against the compulsion of the government."

U.S. soldiers' rights against self-incrimination part of American Army's history for 201 years

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The soldier's right against self-incrimination may be considered older than the provision granted to private U.S. citizens by the Fifth Amendment in the Bill of Rights.

This right is part of the provisions of Article 31 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, which has its beginnings in U.S. military law with the Articles of War of 1786, five years before the ratification of the Bill of Rights.

In 1775 the Continental Congress, meeting in Philadelphia, discussed as part of their agenda the raising and maintaining of an Army. When they set up the Continental Army, they decided to adopt the British Articles of War as the laws to govern the operation of the Army because the colonial forces had been subject to them before the War for Independence.

In 1776, the Articles were repeated and new articles were put into force. Soon it became apparent that problems with the military tribunals were occurring, and, in 1786, Congress repealed the Articles of 1776 and adopted the Articles of War of 1786, which contained the right of soldiers against self-incrimination. The provision was contained in Article 6, which called for the military prosecutor to consider himself as counsel for the accused "to the extent of objecting to leading questions to witnesses or to any questions in which the accused might possibly incriminate himself."

In the Act of Sept. 29, 1789, which established the U.S. Army under the Constitution, the Articles of War of 1786 were extended to govern conduct within the Army. Two revisions of the Articles occurred in 1806 and 1874, with a change occurring in 1874. The change prevented a witness from being forced to present self-incriminating evidence, and, if so forced, the evidence would be considered as being given under duress and coercion. The Congressional Act of 1878 further extended the protection of the right to silence by prohibiting, in court and military tribunals, the presumption that a person is guilty for standing by his right to remain silent.

In a case in the 1870's involving a cadet at the U.S. Military Academy, a witness raised objections on the grounds of self-incrimination. The U.S. Attorney General wrote in an opinion that the witness' claim was valid because he was protected by the Articles of War and "common law privilege."

The Act of August 29, 1916 gave more protection to the soldier. It said that a person who is subject to criminal consequences may claim the right to silence before boards, commissions, courts or boards of inquiry, and a military or civil officer designated as a court officer. The Act further said that a witness must not be forced to answer questions that tend to discredit him, and have no value as evidence to the proceedings.

In 1948, a provision was added to say the use of coercion or unlawful influence to obtain a confessin, statement or admission would not be allowed as evidence during a trial. In addition, the witness or accused must be advised of his rights before he is asked to answer questions.

Interestingly, Congress made sure that a person in the military would be advised of his rights before questioning many years before the Supreme Court issued the Miranda decision (1966) which made the making the advisement federal law.

When the Uniform Code of Military Justice was enacted in 1951, Congress, in Article 31, included in the sphere of persons protected by the right against self-incrimination suspects as well as witnesses and the accused if they felt evidence they gave would incriminate them.

It should be noted that these protections were written down without ever having the influence of the Supreme Court. In most cases the provisions came from either acts of Congress or from decisions of military tribunals.

ASK THE JUDGE

Q: I am about to buy my first new car. I know that the car salesmen are real fast talkers. What can I do to prepare for this experience?

A: Here are three areas of concern that you should already have thought about before you enter the car dealership's front door. 1) Do you already own a car and are you thinking about trading it in with the deal? You should realize that car dealers will not normally give you top dollar on your used car. You may want to sell it privately, although it will involve time and some inconvenience. The National Automobile Dealer's Association Official Used Car Guide (available in most libraries) can help you determine a fair price for your used car. 2) Automakers frequently try to boost sales with special low-interest rate loans. These special rates can save hundreds of dollars on the life of the loan. Realizing this, some dealers may try to add some of those dollars to the price of the car. It's best to settle on the price before discussing financing. When these special rates are not offered, it may be advisable to shop banks and your credit union for the best price. 3) The last area concerns the agreement itself. Don't be embarrassed about taking your time to read the sales agreement before you sign it. Agreements from one dealership may not be the same as another. If there is something in the agreement that bothers you, don't be shy about asking to have the wording changed. Make sure the sales agreement includes a statement that you can get your deposit back if something goes wrong (failure to deliver by a specified date, for example). Make sure the dealership manager signs the agreement. The salesman's signature alone may not be legally binding. If you have any questions about the agreement, make an appointment to see a legal assistance attorney, and have it reviewed.

Fleas, ticks, mosquitoes: all bug household pets

Veterinary Services

With what looks like a wet spring in store for us, we pet owners are challenged by the insect kingdom. Fleas, ticks, flies, and mosquitos represent a small percent of the insect world, but these pests can cause our pets a lot of grief, and can transmit infectious diseases to them and sometimes to us and our children.

Fleas spend a very short time on a pet before hopping back off, making the flea problem primarily an environmental one, i.e., home and yard. Be advised that fleas can transmit tapeworms to our pets and sometimes to young children that swallow a flea (dead or alive) or parts there of. To start an effective flea control program, both the pet and its environment need to be treated with effective insecticides and/or repellents.

Second to fleas, ticks are the biggest threat to your pet. Ticks are the most important transmitters of insect-borne animal diseases (including man). An interesting affliction called "tick paralysis" can strike dogs, and can be caused by a single tick. Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever is a well known tick (the common dog tick) borne disease of both animals and man, and is relatively common in the Southeast.

Flies are also a problem to pets and people. Biting flies can easily turn a dog's ears into an infected, ulcerated mess.

The bottom line, of course, is to keep the fleas and ticks off you and your pet and out of your quarters and yard, and minimize unsanitary and/or wet conditions in an effort to reduce fly and mosquito breeding grounds.

Post residents responsible for care, safety of pets

Do you own a pet? If you do, in accordance with USAIC Reg 210-5, the owner of a pet on Fort Benning is ultimately responsible for the care and control of these animals. That means that, in addition to feeding and grooming, you are also responsible for ensuring that they do not run free. Wild animals, such as squirrels, rabbits, skunks, foxes, raccoons, monkeys, and snakes are not considered pets and are not permitted to be maintained as such on this installation.

Recently, we have noticed an increase of dog and cat bites. Despite the fact that in some cases the animal was provoked into biting, the regulation specifically states that the animal must be under confinement or control of a resposible owner. As long as the animal is on a lease, controlled in your quarters or within proper voice control, you are taking proper precautionary measures. However, if the animal fails to obey the voice commands of the owner, then he/she is still accountable for the actions of the pet.

But if you do allow your pet to roam free outside of your quarters, or if it breaks free from it's chain, you are ultimately responsible.

In the event that a pet bites a child or adult, and depending on the medical examination, your animal can be quarantined by the veterinarian for the necessary incubation period. This is specifically covered by U S A I C Regulation 210-5.

Owners should also be familiar with the requirements of USAIC Reg. 40-905, Pet and Animal Disease Control, which is available at the veterinary activity.

Parents, there are also animals on our installation which are natural wildlife, and which do roam free. Squirrels, racoons, opossums, snakes and many other animals may bite your child. They may or may not be provoked. Keep in mind, rabies is an unpleasant reality, and you must educate your children to the dangers.

Let's work together to keep these incidents from needlessly occuring. Owning a pet is a responsibility, and must be taken seriously.

Dr. Dog helps kids over "rough" times

By Charlotte Asch
The Mercury

FORT SAM HOUSTON, Texas — Seven-year-old Lara Bartizal closed her lips tightly, lowered her face and shyly shook her head, "no." She had just been asked if there was anything else she would tell "Dr. Dog," the black and gray dog who sat nearby, about the not-so-good things Dr. Dog might expect if she had to stay in the hospital.

Things such as "being away from home," "bad food," "losing your hair" had already been mentioned by the small group of young outpatients at Brooke Army Medical Canter, San Antonio, Texas, all of whom had undergone chemotherapy for cancer.

Capt. Michael D. Mantooth, BAMC chaplain who helped smooth the way in getting Dr. Dog's visitation privileges, was leading the informal session to learn more about the concerns of young cancer patients. Sensing Lara was holding back on something, he asked her if she would like to whisper in Dr. Dog's ear what it was that she didn't want to say to the group.

After a momentary hesitation Lara leaned over, found the dog's shaggy ear and whispered something.

"Now that you've told Dr. Dog, do you think you can tell us,?" Mantooth asked gently.

Lara hesitated a moment and then, in a very soft voice responded, "being lonely."

Mantooth reflected that feeling lonely was a very common thing for children as well as grown-ups who had to be in the hospital, and he could understand Lara's feeling. The other children all solemnly nodded their heads in agreement. They also knew firsthand about that feeling of loneliness in the hospital.

Lara's opening up to Dr. Dog is but one example of the potential role of animals as therapy facilitators. Recent research has revealed more about the importance of the human-animal bonding process and how it can be used to help people in various life situations. (Dedicated pet owners would say this only confirms what they have known for years.)

And how does this affect the U.S. Army?

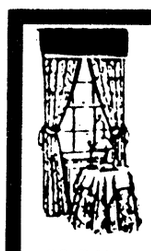
Readiness, one of the total Army goals, is in the words of Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., "inextricably tied into family morale." Early studies have shown many areas of potential significance of pets to the military services, where over 50 percent of military families have pets.

In an effort to explore this question more deeply, "Explorations of Human-Animal Bond Applications the AMEDD Mission" was selected as one of the FY86 and FY87 AMEDD study programs. The BAMC pediatrics program is a part of this study. Maj. Lynn Anderson, chief, veterinary medicine branch, Headquarters, Health Services Command, is the author and director of this study and has been actively involved in research in this area for a number of years. He has recently been named a consultant to the Army Surgeon General for human-animal bond issues. In addition to being a veterinarian, Anderson also has a masters degree in social work.

According to Anderson the role of animals in four areas related to the AMEDD is being studied: in therapy, in diagnosis and referral, in normal family situations and in a functional capacity.

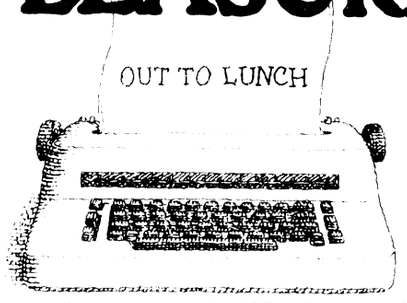
As for the role of pets as therapy facilitators, for over a year active duty soldiers and their families, on their own time as volunteers have taken their pets to visit the elderly residents of the Soldier and Airmen's Home in Washington, D.C. in a program begun by Anderson. These volunteers have become the greatest proponents of animal visitation, according to Anderson, because they have seen the difference the visits of the animals make to the residents.

The animals seem to have a "social lubricant" effect, Anderson explained. Some people who won't respond in any other way do respond to pets. They first pet them, then perhaps hold them and start talking to them. After a big they start interacting with the people around them.



At BAMC "Polly," "Dr. Dog," or "Dr. Polly Dog" — she is known by all three — "is making military history" in the area of therapy, according to Anderson. Polly is a "Benji-type" two-year-old dog with a remarkably loving personality. A homeless stray, Polly was to become a great influence for good in the military/medical community.

Already Polly is the first official military therapy animal (MTA), having made numerous visits to pediatrics patients at BAMC, including the visit with Lara who told her what she hesitated to say to anyone else. And she has just recently moved into Chambers Pavillion, the psychiatric unit of BAMC, to become the first resident animal in a modern military inpatient facility.



Those interested in further information may contact Anderson at AV 471-6519/6522 or Headquarters, Health Services Command, Attn: HSVS-P.

Air Force NCO flying high as top sergeant at Army posts

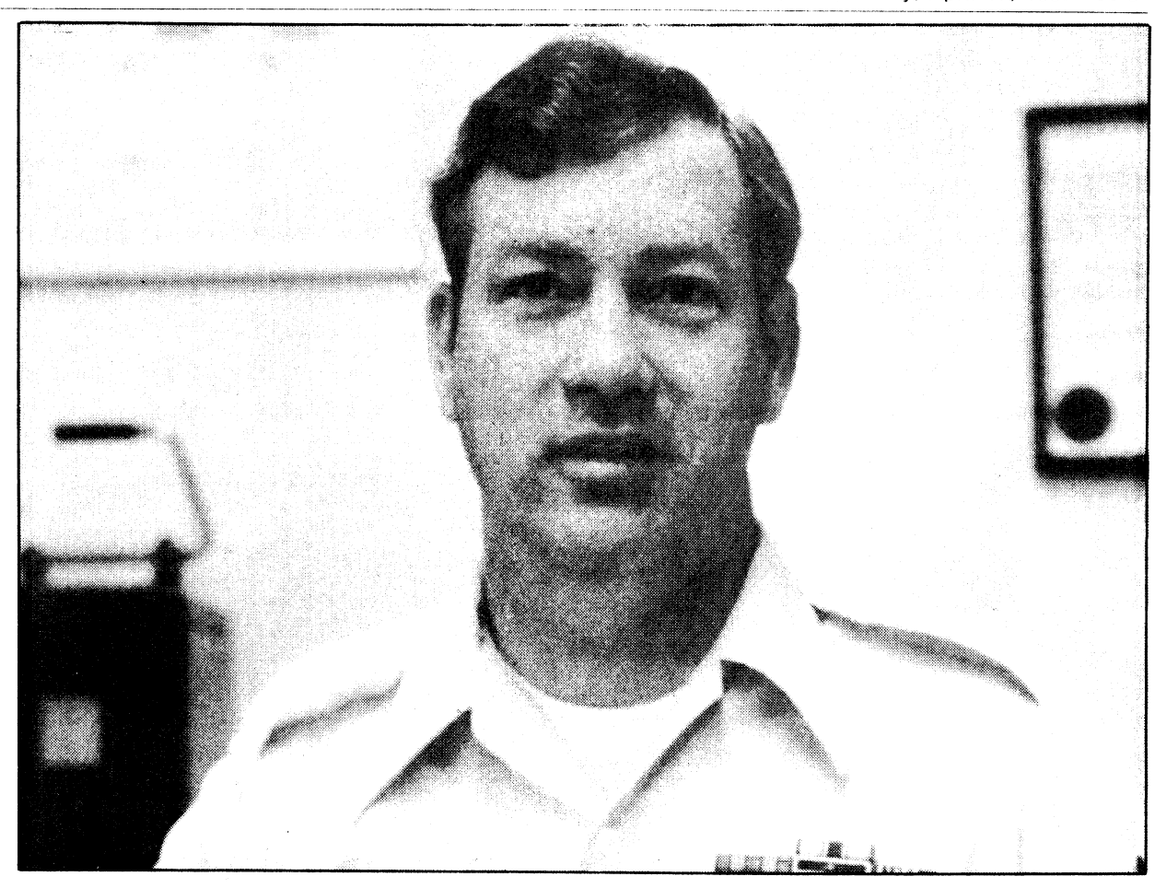
By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

He may be flying a desk but as far as the Air Force is concerned he's their equivalent of the Navy's "Top Gun."

Tech. Sgt. Michael Lee has been named the top non-commissioned officer in the Air Force of those NCOs serving on Army posts.

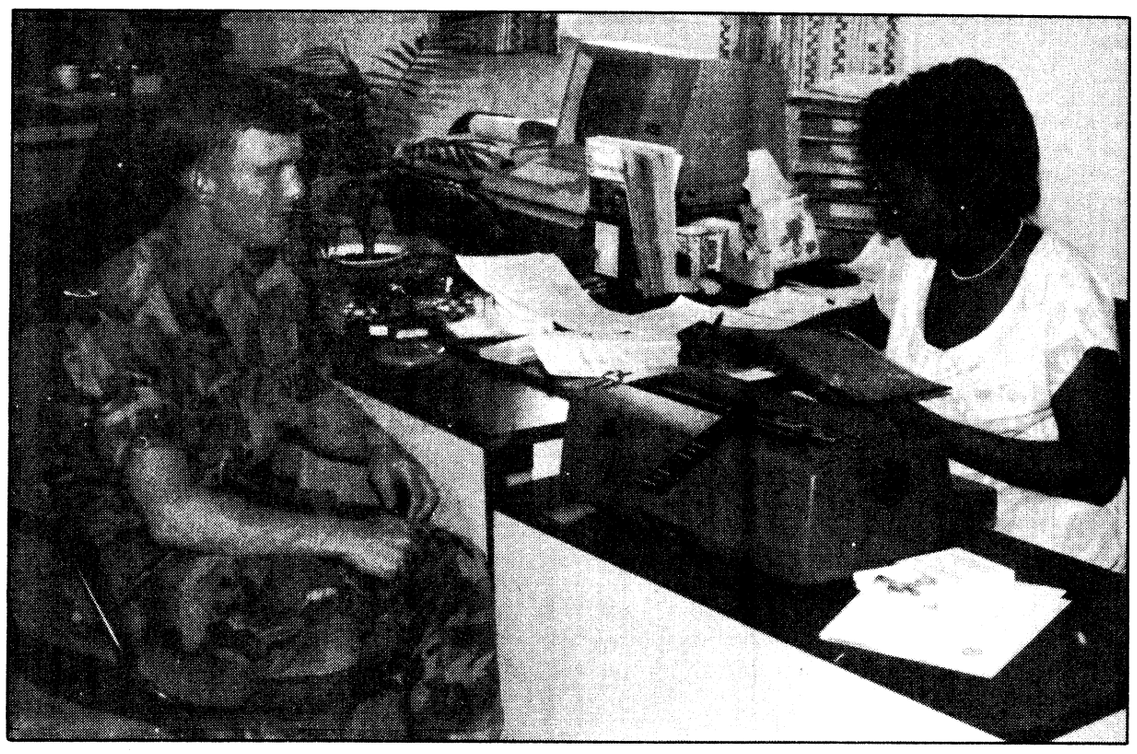
Lee, who has been at Benning since September, 1985, serves as the Air Force liaison for airmen attending Benning's Airborne and Ranger Schools. He also provides assistance to retired Air Force personnel and their families in surrounding areas. For his distinguished performance in these areas, he was named NCO of the Year for 1986.

Col. Jay Riedel, Benning's senior Air Force representative, praised the 37-year old Lee's work.



"Sgt. Lee has taken it upon himself to ensure the smooth processing and welfare of all Air Force personnel attending schools at Fort Benning. Additionally, he serves as an instructor's aide, scheduling classrooms, security, curriculum support and audio-visual engineering. It takes a unique person to handle the diversity of projects Lee handles, and he performs these tasks in a masterful way," Reidel said.

Riedel went on to say that Lee, an 18-year Air Force veteran, serves as the resident expert on all things pertaining to the Air Force, including finance, personnel, legal, medical and retired affairs.



"Prior to this award, Air Force NCOs assigned to bases other than Air Force installations didn't have any NCO of the Year awards program. I'm very proud to have been selected as the first recipient of this award and I am glad that this recognition program was started," Lee said. This award is part of a program to recognize administrative support specialists assigned in support of Tactical Air Command's Deputy Chief of Staff, Senior Air Force Representatives and Liaison officers at operating locations throughout the continental United States.

Lee has served in Texas, Vietnam, Thailand, New Mexico, Japan and Missouri.

The Air Force professional holds, among many awards, the Air Force Commendation Medal, the air Force Achievement Medal, the Air Force Good Conduct Medal with four devices, the National Defense Service Medal, the Vietnam Service Medal with three devices, the Republic of Vietnam Gallantry Cross with device and the Republic of Vietnam Medal.

Tech. Sgt. Mike Lee, the Air Force's top NCO serving on an Army post, has been at Benning since 1985. Lee takes care of all Air Force personnel at Fort Benning attending Infantry schools and also all Air Force retirees in the area.

SSgt. Michael Caldwell has his application for an ID Card processed by Janice Morrison.

Benning ID card section identifies with service, reduced waiting time

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning people can expect better service these days at the Post Identification Card Section.

That's because the office recently moved into new quarters at Splinter Village in Building 2638. The section sports computers, carpeting, a comfortable waiting area with a television and magazines and much improved service, designed to reduce customer's waiting time.

"When the section was at Building 83, it was like going into a maze," said Sgt. Michael Dearybury, the section's non-commissioned officer in charge. "It took two hours or more to get an ID Card made and there were a lot of customer complaints. We've tried to change all of that.'

The section improved enough in 1986 to pick up a Training and Doctrine Command Excellence Award and feedback from customers has been positive.

Users of the facility can fill out Customer Satisfaction Questionaires, which helps the staff gauge its success. Dearybury said customer comments since the move have been positive.

● Monthly payments if you become disabled and payments for your spouse and dependents if they are eligible during your disability;

● Monthly payments for your eligible survivors; or

● A lump sum payment upon your death.

The amount of monthly payments is based on three factors:

● Average earnings upon which you have paid Social Security taxes;

● Number of dependents in your family; and

● Consumer Price Index changes.

If you are receiving Social Security payments while under the age of 70 and have other earnings that exceed specified amounts, your payments will be reduced or stopped. There are no special Social Security rules for Federal Employees Retirement System participants, including those who transfer into the system.

Most of the Social Security cost is paid through payroll taxes. You pay a percentage of your salary, up to a specified earnings amount called the maximum taxable wage base, and the government, as your employer, pays an equal amount.

The maximum taxable wage base is $43,800 in 1987. It increases automatically each year, based on the yearly rise in average earnings of the American work force.

The percentages of your wages paid for old-age, survivors and disability insurance coverage are:

1986 and 1987..... 5.7
1988 and 1989..... 6.06
After 1989.....6.2

Medicare Hospital Insurance

The Medicare portion you and the government each pay is equal to 1.45 percent of your salary, up to the maximum taxable wage base. No increase is scheduled.

For further information about Social Security benefits, contact your local Social Security office. Note that no special Social Security rules apply to Federal Employees Retirement System participants, including those who transfer from the Civil Service Retirement System.

197th support soldiers "railroad" brigade vehicles

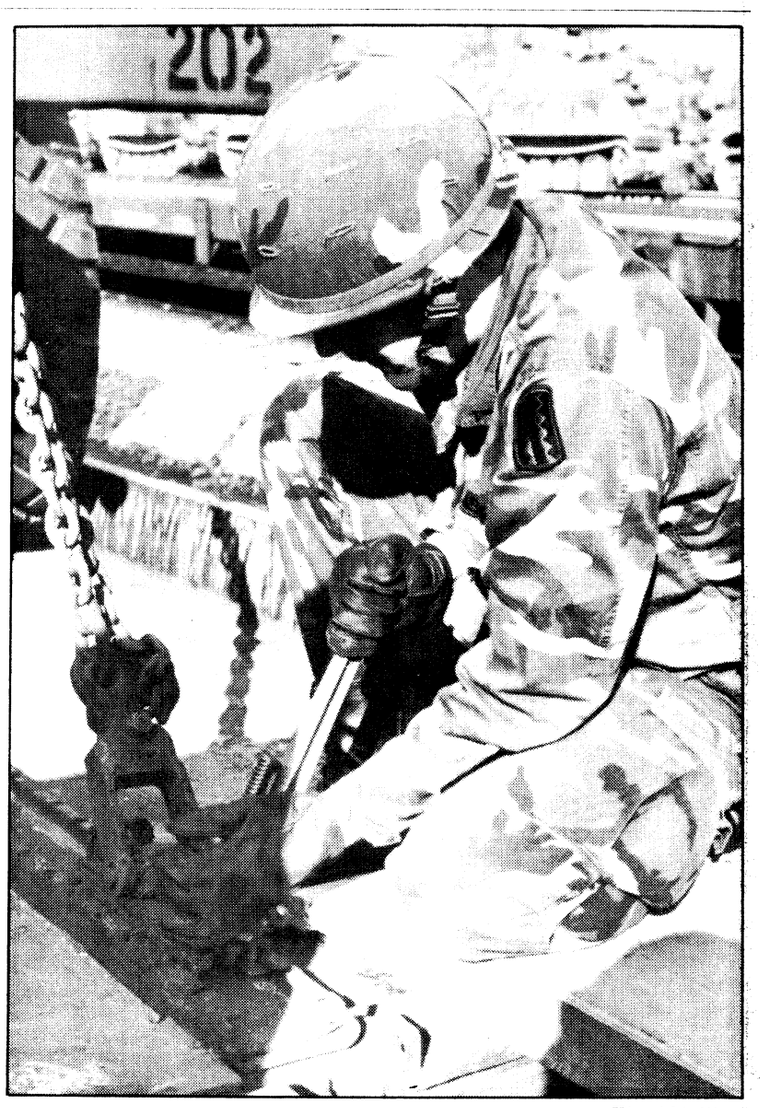
By Clarence Pittman III
197th Infantry Brigade

With headlights beaming and vehicle body frames slightly dismantled, a number of trucks and vans from the 197th Support Battalion convoyed to the Sand Hill railhead site last week.

"The operation here allows the opportunity to train soldiers who have just arrived in the unit," says 1st Lt. David Thomas, the officer-in-charge of the 197th Support Battalion rail load teams. "It is important to maintain our teams at a high level of readiness because our mission demands us to support numerous maneuver operations."

This battalion element, involving only about 75 soldiers, may perform three to four major rail load operations a year, similar to this one. Within the next few days, the soldiers will deploy with their maneuver element — 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry — to provide support in the areas of administration, medical, supply and transportation, and maintenance.

"Attitudes have been positive because the soldiers realize they're carrying out another important function," according to SFC John Wilkes, the Non Commissioned Officer-in-charge of the Support Battalion rail load team. "The soldiers have given an outstanding performance, which has lead a smoother operation."



This was the second day of rail load operations, which is a critical stage of deploying vehicles and equipment to be used by the soldiers when they reach the training location. The Support Battalion soldiers spent the previous day making final preparations to their vehicles before moving to the railhead.

"When you prepare to rail load your vehicles, a tremendous amount of work is done, right up until the day of the rail load," said SFC Wilkes. "This includes securing radios, boxing and banding basic issue items and cargo, securing canvas and bows in the lowest configuration possible, and ensuring drivers are licensed for all types of vehicles and generators."

It's an operation which in order to be successful requires all involved to be accountable and productive. This includes the soldier who secures the tie-down chain shackles that connect the vehicle to the railcar, as well as the soldier initially responsible to ready the vehicle in top-notch maintenance shape.

"I feel confident about the work that I've done," said PFC Patrick Cunningham, a light wheel mechanic from Company C, 187th Support Battalion. "In particular, I've put a lot of time into the fuel tankers, and it has paid off because everything appears to be going well."

All training devoted to dismantling the vehicles for railloading proved very fruitful as the railcars departed Sand Hill bound for Canada.

Card

One retiree wrote, "This operation has improved at least 100 percent since my last visit." Another customer, a soldier, wrote, "Very nice work and very nice people. Keep up the good work."

He said statistics show that the previous two-hour waiting time for getting an ID card made has been cut down to 30 minutes.

Dearybury credits his staff and the adjutant general at Benning.

"My staff — Dolly Dorsey, Debbie Blackwood, Janice Morrison, Lisa Buford, Diane Beard and Thomas Ray — really run this show. They're the reason for the positive turn around that we've had. Our section also gets great support, Lt. Col. James Milling, the AG" Dearybury said.

The section, which serviced almost 45,000 customers last year, does much more than make ID cards.

"We take care of all enrollments for the Defense Eligibility Enrollment Reporting System for family members, we make all dog tags for permanent party soldiers and we also take care of ID cards for all retirees and their dependents in this area," he said.

Additionally, the section supports Survival Assistance Officers and takes all photos for on-post taxi drivers, civilian personnel and exchange employees.

Dearybury said one problem his section is trying to address is the updating of all soldier's Emergency Data Cards.

"The DD Form 93, which lists who to notify in the event of an emergency, must be kept updated for emergencies. Soldiers should update the form after new births, marriage, divorce or death," he said.

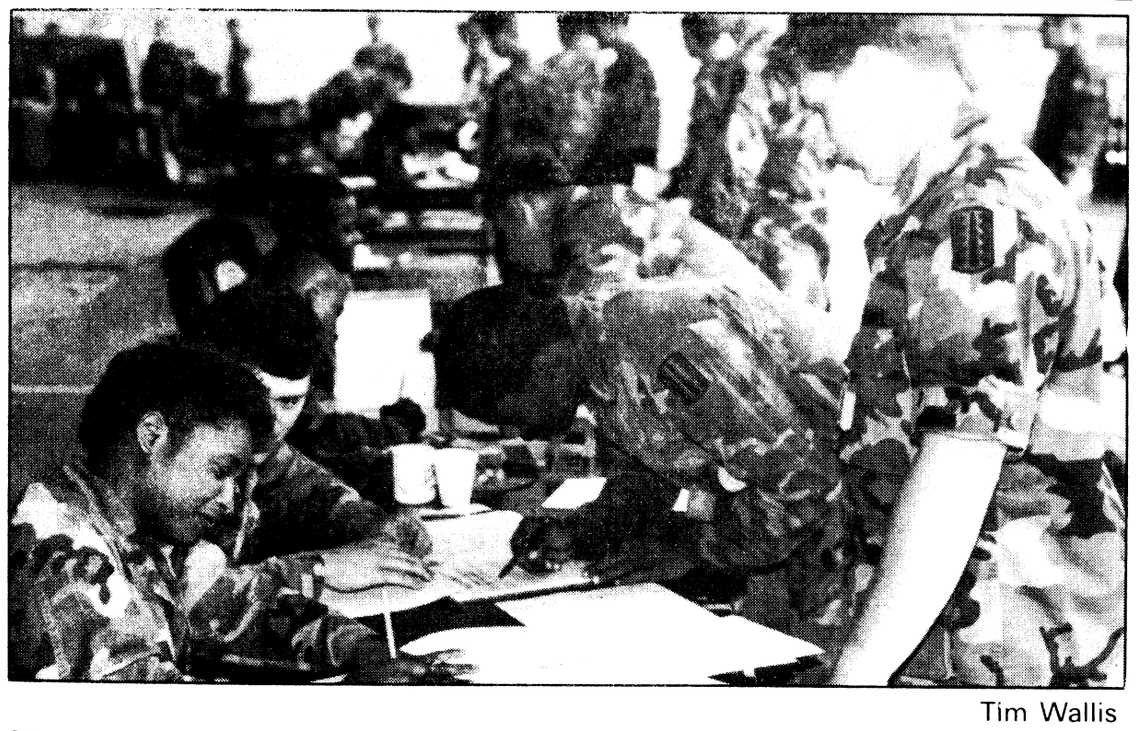
Administrative soldiers not just paper-pushers

By Clarence Pittman III
197th Infantry Brigade

Everyone in the Army is very aware of the respectable amount of administrative paperwork that is done concerning peacetime matters.



Well, every so often, an administrative section is required to fully process a large number of administrative files and forms in a short amount of time.

Recently, this tasking was assigned to the soldiers of Personnel Service Company, 197th Support Battalion, who screened, briefed and processed a task force of soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry.

"All personal affairs actions, which entail a great deal of work, are taken care of here before a unit deploys," said 1st Lt. David Edwards, officer-in-charge of the Preparation for Overseas Movement of Units. "We've been ahead of schedule, with about 70-100 soldiers processed each hour."

"Even though the POM required extra effort and time to set up for all processing to be complete, the staff appreciates the change of atmosphere from daily administrative processing," said MSgt. George Young, Non-Commissioned Officer-in-charge of the POM. "It's hard, continuous work, processing a large number of troops at one time; however, I believe my people feel they've really accomplished something."

The staff sections involved some 30-40 soldiers, including soldiers from Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, and Company B, 197th Support Battalion. All processing sections were arranged in the Kelley Hill Physical Fitness Center in a circular set-up, with Task Force 1-58 soldiers moving in a snake-like formation from table-to-table, to update dental, medical, legal and personnel files.

197th cooks serve seafood

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor were recently treated to a "Seafood Special" in their battalion dining facility. Cooks from the 2-69 dining facility prepared many types of seafood dishes to offer the soldiers a change in the normal Army menus.

According to 1st Lt. Brian Kroll, executive officer of HHC, 2-69 Armor, the dining facility staff planned the menu using ingredients that are available through Troop Issue Subsistance Activity, where dining facilities get all their food supplies. Special seafood main dishes, such as lobster tails, oysters, scallops, trout and perch were available to the hungry soldiers.

"This was a nice change of pace," said SFC Massimo Barbalinardo, a 2-69 Armor soldier. "The cooks could hardly keep up with the demand for the food."

The dining facility plans to offer special lunches, such as the seafood special or a barbecue twice a month, not only to please the pallots of the soldiers, but to offer the cooks the challenge of preparing different types of meals. The cooks, who participate in the 197th Infantry Brigade Chef of the Quarter competition, will benefit from he varied menus when preparing their projects for the competition.

Mountain men earn "Arctic Light Fighter's" title

By Jon Charles Sullivan
Special to The Bayonet

They came marching down the snow and ice covered street on a cold Sunday afternoon. Dressed in white, they resembled 147 snowmen, only these snowmen had human faces. Their feet, encased in vapor-barrier boots, made a crunchy-squeak sound of rubber on ice heard over the rhythmic military cadence each man enthusiastically sang. Marching to a small parade field at Fort Greely, Alaska, they were brought to a standstill on the command of "halt".

These are the men of Company A, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division (Light), Fort Benning, Ga. After spending nearly four grueling weeks going through a Northern Warfare Training Center course in Fort Greely, they earned the title "Arctic Light Fighter's," the first to earn the title and it wasn't easy.

What made this day special is that both NWTC and the 10th Mountain Division share a common history dating from the early 1940s. NWTC evolved from the 87th Regiment, the training command of the 10th Mountain Division. This group of "Mountain Soldiers" is the first company of the 10th Mountain Division to be trained at NWTC since the division was deactivated after World War II.

"On Jan. 22, they started cross country skiing," SFC Michael Underwood, noncommissioned officer in charge of Team One said. "That's two days after they got here. This was an exciting time for them. Of the 147 men of Company D, about 130 of them had never been on ski's or snowshoes before. We knew from day one what to expect four weeks later, knowing they would be good skiiers".

The training included instructions and practical exercises involving first aid and medical evacuations, plant and wildlife, survival, Nuclear, Biological, and Chemical training and the phenomena common to Alaska and Akhio, movement. The soldiers trained on the use of a sled in which winter equipment is carried, the use of Yukon stoves, and erecting 10-man tents within 17 minutes. Much of the training was placed on light movement.

Training on the ski's was a slow process. The first lessons were on flat terrain to learn the basics of cross country skiing. As the training progressed the cadre began adding weight starting with a 25-pound rucksack. Once hill climbing and downhill techniques were mastered, they began to ski cross country. With each trek more weight was added to each soldier's ruck. At the conclusion of the course, the soldiers of the 10th were carrying full loads averaging 76 pounds each including weapon.

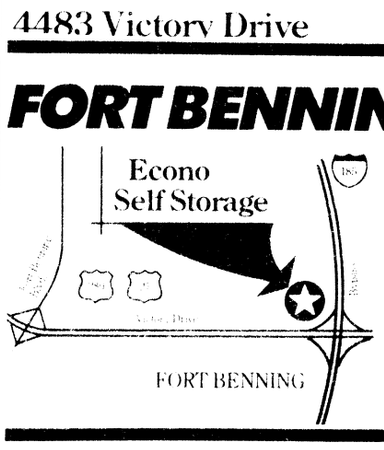
"I enjoyed the training as far as learning how to ski," Pvt. 2 Curtis D. Dowery, 1st Plt., 3rd Sqd., stated. "I've always wanted to learn how to ski. A lot of it was cross country and I would like to have had a little more downhill skiing".

The 10th Mountain received instruction on survival. The men built and slept in makeshift shelters and lived in snow caves for a night. Underwood explained some soldiers were a little reluctant to get into the snow caves. "Some thought they would freeze in them or the caves would collapse on top of them," he said. "Once they found out the temperature inside the snow caves was about 35 degrees warmer than the outside air, they lost their fear".

"We learned how to survive in the cold, something we can't do at Fort Benning," PFC Mark A. Canter stated. "The training took us to where our unit and the 10th is supposed to be. I enjoyed it here, but I am a little homesick".

All the training was put to the test on the final two days. The NWTC cadre developed a squad competition involving many of the skills taught during the course. The main focus was placed on a 12- kilometer biathlon and a 12- kilometer cross country ski race with full gear. The soldiers had three stops along the way to fire their weapons. Each firing point required the soldiers to fire from different positions.

Throughout the four-week program the NWTC cadre were impressed by the motivation the men of the 10th displayed. Underwood attributed that to the leadership of the company, from the commander through the squad leaders. He also praised the cadre for their outstanding job during the training. Comments on the professionalism of the instructors wasn't limited to Underwood.



"They're coming around to meeting he needs of the light infantry in their instruction," Capt. Roger C. Travis, commander of Company A, exclaimed. "It took a lot of work on their part."

Tired and anxious to return to Fort Benning, the 10th Division soldiers still displayed the enthusiasm they brought with them nearly four-weeks earlier. The soldiers chose to name themselves, "Arctic Light Fighters," a name that will be tagged onto every subsequent class completing the course.

Keeping good soldiers in the Army is part of every leader's job. Whether you're an NCO or an officer, your leadership can have a powerful influence on your soldiers, especially in their decision to reenlist.

Nobody knows better than you that when soldiers are treated fairly, with respect, and with a true concern for their goals and accomplishments, they're more likely to find their Army experience a positive one. And more likely to want to continue that experience.

As you know, it takes a lot to develop a good soldier. Time, patience, and effort. But the end result is worth it. Not just for a proud soldier, or the Army, but as a credit to your ability as a leader.

Next time you stand in front of your troops, remember that they're not just in the Army, they are the Army. And they're yours to keep.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

THEY'RE YOURS TO KEEP.

SPIRITUAL

Jesus: dead or alive, does it make a difference?

Chaplain James Bluett
197th Infantry Brigade Chaplain

Several years ago a young mother took her five-year-old son to Good Friday services at the church staffed by Benedictine Monks. The monks seemed to be in no hurry, so the liturgy moved along very slowly. An hour, an hur and a half, two hours passed. Unable to bear the strain of such solemnity any longer, the restless little boy began to pester his mother with questions. The clincher came when he asked, with utterly disarming logic, "Is He dead yet"?

Is He dead yet? The question seems so ridiculous on Easter. Bells, banners and bunnies assure that He is alive. And in our own way we believe it; after all, what good is Jesus dead? But it may also be asked, by the more cynical among us, what good is He alive? As the centuries wear on and the wars continue, as the gospel gets older and the guts continue to get spilled in the streets, we may very well ask if it makes any difference whether Jesus is dead or alive. He has become useless like those stacks of yellowed newspapers and moldy boxes we keep in the basement. You hate to throw them away, just in case. And besides, the church is planning a garage sale next month.

A bit of folklore - that's what Easter is. Not quite as charming as Christmas; not quite as homey as Thanksgiving; not quite as loud and frantic as New Year's. But still a familiar rite of spring, along with house cleaning, school vacations, fishing season and baseball. Maybe it's possible to keep easter even if Jesus is useless. It would be sad to see Congress stay in session all spring with no more than the start of the baseball season as an excuse for a recess.

But suppose, for a moment, that Easter has nothing to do with folklore. Suppose that Easter might happen even if there were no new hats and no chocolate eggs and no waxed lilies in the church. Suppose that if we opened our eyes and saw only an abandoned dump full of decaying steel-belted radials and broken head-lights: there would still be Easter. It blows the mind; it's offensive' its disagreeable; and its true. Easter is not a Swiss mountain covered with buttercups; its a pit - an ugly pit full of nasty things abut life. Jesus did not rise like Apollo, fleet, sleek and handsome. He rose into "us", pitted, broken and, oftern enough, pathetic.

Is He dead yet? Yes and No. The jury is still out. Certainly the Jesus of easy hopes and comfortable virtue is dead. But then He was never really alive anyway. Certainly the respectably liberal Jesus is dead, the one who pickets the IRS and locks his car door in the ghetto. And the crewcut Jesus is dead too - the one who used to tour high schools and make us aware of the red menace. Yes, even the first communion Jesus is dead; the one who whispered sweet nothings in our ear as we stumbled back to our pews, worried about how we could get host unstuck from the roofs of our mouths. Dead, all of them, gratefully dead.

But there is a Jesus who lives, ne who did nothing to avoid the pits, one who had the courage to look the abandoned dump straight in the eye and to find it soomehow beautiful, terribly beautiful. This Jesus was scarred, pitted and broken. Like most of us he sang songs off-key and told stories that didn't turn out right. He chose friens who were often morons, and He trusted in a God who greeted his death with devastating silence. This Jesus knew how nasty and how low life one could be to lepers and prostitutes. He knew how oppressive virtuous people can become and how quickly goodness can degenerate into snobbery. It is this Jesus who lives, the one who went down into the pits and came back with wounds to prove it.

Is He dead? Only you can answer that because his body is yours. Our experience of the Jesus who lives is as infinitely varied and as changing as our own bodies are. It is significant that, in the Easter story found in John's gospel, the immediate reactions of the three people at the tomb are different.

Mary thinks someone has stlen the body. She gets frightened and runs for help. John peeks into the tomb, but lets Peter go inside first. Eventually, however, the gospel makes the point that all three persons have the same experience - they believe that Jesus is alive. And this believing is an utterly new way of experienceing Jesus; it is a new way to see.

If Easter is ever going to be anything more than folklore, we Christians will have to learn to see in an entirely new way. Seeing is believing, but not unless we are willing to look at the ugly places too; the tombs and the dumps and the pits. If all Easter intends to do is console us, then it is worse than useless. Consolations, after all are cheap. They can be bought, bartered, offered, withdrawn and denied. But there is no denying the Jesus who lives. He is as real as death itself, as visible as wounds, as nourishing as eating bread and drinking wine- if, that is, we choose to look and see.

Corning

Volunteer paid in kids' smiles

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet Staff writer

Pat Corning has a fulltime job at Fort Benning but doesn't get paid in money. Her salary is happy faces.

Chosen as the post's Volunteer of the Quarter, Corning has immersed herself in the Fort Benning Girl Scout program.

"I originally got into Girl Scouting because my daughter joined a troop. But one thing led to another and now I'm really involved," Corning said.

Involved is amost an understatement. Corning is the troop leader for Brownie Troops 72 and 102. She is also the area coordinator, assisting other troop leaders with problems and coordinating activities. Additionally Corning serves as the Girl Scout Service Unit Section's secretary.

"I do put in quite a few hours. I have two troop meetings each week which takes up about four hours. Then I put in about 10 hours a week as the Service Unit secretary. As the area coordinator I guess I put in close to five hours each week," Corning said.

The mother of two daughters, who is married to a non-commissioned officer in the 29th Infantry Regiment, said her family has become accustomed to all the time she puts in as a volunteer.

"I've been doing this for about three years now. My husband asks me when he comes in from work, if I'll be home tonight. If I have a meeting or work to do, he helps with the dishes and puts the kids to bed," Corning said, smiling.

The question arises why does she do all of this?

"At first, I just wanted to endure that my daughter got the best experience out of Girl Scouting. So I became a volunteer. I enjoy working with and for kids and making them happy. I also hear a lot of parents complain that their daughters troops don't do anything. My rebuttal to that is 'become a leader and find out why'," Corning said.

Fear of fat causes women extra problems

University of Kentucky Information

FORT MONROE, Va. — For some women, the battle of the bulge develops into an intense fear of fatness.

This fear, coupled with a distorted body image, may lead them to harmful dieting methods such as bingeing and pruging (bulimia) or not eating (anorexia nervosa).

Neither of these behaviors has a single cause or simple cure. But Laurie L. Humphries, director of eating disorders at the University of Kentucky, is trying to find answers.

Humphries has just completed a national study of the behavior associated with anorexia and bulimia. More than 5,000 women throughout the United States and Canada participated in the study.

According to Humphries, her survey is providing the first national information about bulimia and is indicating that the syndrome is more prevalent but less understood than anorexia.

"In my opinion, 5.7 percent of my sample suffer from severe bulimia, 8.3 percent have mild or insipid bulimia, while 1.6 percent showed attitudes and behaviors consistent with the diagnosis of anorexphries.

"However, only 1.8 percent had ever sought help. Furthermore, a Gallup survey done in April had similar results; while many people could identify symptoms of anorexia, very few knew what bulimia was," she said.

From her national project, Humphries also learned about the social history of the syndromes.

"I found that eating disorders often start with a diet, an innocuous behavior that many people engage in.

"In the case of bulimia, the women would turn to bingeing and purging, often with abuse of laxatives, diuretics, or ipecad, after a diet had failed to produce the desired result," she said.

"In fact, there is direct statistical evidence that a lot of people who use diet pills go on to abuse various purgatives hich have detrimental medical effects, including heart arrhythmias and kidney damage."

The use of ipecac, a poison, can destroy the heart muscle. This drug was used by 3.2 percent of the women surveyed to induce vomiting after overeating — a high percentage, according to Humphries. However, ipecad is presently sold without a warning label.

In light of her research, Humphries would like to see the Food and Drug Administration put a warning insert into the ipecac packages.

Humphries also wants to study the relationship of body weight to menses, particularly how low weight can cause amenorrhea (an abnormal absence or suppression of the menstrual discharge).

Currently unknown data, this information could help women discover the cause of their menstrual problem more quickly and save themselves some expense.

For example, if a woman suffers from amenorrhea, her low body weight could be the culprit, and this variable would be treated first. If added weight is indeed the solution, then the patient has avoided taking costly tests unnecessarily.

Soldiers "SAW" "enemy"

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers are using a SAW on Fort Benning but they're not using them to cut down trees, they're learning how to cut down enemy soldiers.

Infantrymen-to-be of Company C, 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade were firing up Malone Range 3, April 7, with the Squad Automatic Weapon.

"We teach these guys disassembly, assembly, operator's maintenance, clearing, loading, firing positioning and aiming techniques. This is all done in an eight-hour block of instruction. Then they hit the range the next day to put it all to use in a live fire exercise," said Sgt. James Schoenrock, an instructor with Company C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"I really like the SAW. It's a neat little weapon and I enjoyed firing it," said Pvt. 1 Robert Myers.

The SAW, two per squad in each conventional infantry platoon, can effectively fire out to a range of 1,000 meters and has a sustained rate of fire of 85 rounds per minute when fired in two to three round bursts. The weapon fires a standard NATO round but can also fire 5.56 ammunition in an emergency.

Sgt. James Schoenrock, a 29th Infantry Regiment instructor, shows Pvt. 1 Scott Freeman how to extract the bolt carrier group from the SAW.

Firing the SAW, Pvt. 1 David Doody takes up a good, tight firing position.

Students get veggies old way: they grow them at Loyd School

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet Staff writer

Fifth Graders at Fort Benning's Loyd School are exercising their green thumbs this spring in a gardening project.

"This is a science endeavor to teach kids about living and non-living things. They learn about the soil, how things grow, what will grow and what won't. Things like that," said Owen Ditchfield, a fifth grade teacher at Loyd.

The class is divided into sections of two to three students each. Respective sections grow such things as strawberries, radishes, mustard and collard greens, carrots, onions, turnips and lettuce.

"We plant, take care of and harvest our crops. Then we get to take the stuff home with us," said Malcolm Sanders, a class member.

The school's cafeteria saves compost for the garden and the class, according to Ditchfield, partakes in a communal salad that . . . "is just great," Ditchfield said smiling.

Post problem solvers provide service to all

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

You've checked the manuals, the regulations, the wisdom of a buddy, the expertise of a supervisor, but you just can't find the answer, though you know it's there.

It is then time to contact the U.S. Army Materiel Command's Fort Benning representatives.

Logistics Assistance Offices are located at most major TRADOC and FORSCOM installations and overseas commands.

The LAO serves to provide a "local point of contact to resolve any supply or maintenance problem and to coordinate logistics support to maintain unit readiness," said Robert W. Porter, Logistic Management Specialist.

In providing unit readiness, the Logistics Assistance Representatives have gecome "problem solvers".

"We feel that by being readily available to the soldier, 'we can provide soldiers with the decisive edge,'"said Porter.

In providing a decisive decisive edge, there are six commands represented on Fort Benning.

The Missile Command (MICOM) manages the Army's air defense, field artillery, and anti-tank rockets and missiles.

The Tank-Automotive Command (TACOM) develops, procures, distributes and supports all Army tracked and wheeled vehicles, to include construction and materiel handling equipment.

The Aviation Systems Command (AVSCOM) is responsible for Army aviation research, development, and initial procurement.

Though most of its plants and activities are operated under contracts with industry, the Armament, Munitions and Chemical Command (AMCCOM) provides management for Army weapons from conception to contract completion.

When soldiers find themselves with a problem they can not solve, the Logistics Assistance Office is available at 545-4184 or 545-3792.

Post bowlers roll into tourney

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

Three Fort Benning soldiers competed in the Army Bowling Championship trials that began here Saturday.

Sergeants First Class Anthony Szeluga and Darrell Despain, and PFC Eric Pavil were selected to compete in a field of more than 40 of the Army's top rollers.

Szeluga, 75th Ranger Regiment, has the most experience of the post bowlers, and was among the top finishers.

Szeluga opened the first day with a total pin fall count of 2508, after 12 games. He held on the second day to clench a birth on the All-Army Team, averaging 208.5 after a 24-game rolloff.

The 27-year-old Professional Bowling Association member, has competed in the past four Army trials, making it to the Intraservice Championships each time. Szeluga's sixth place finish in the Fort Benning tournament kept his winning record alive.

In seven years of consistent bowling, Szeluga has shot three perfect games. "But past performance is no sure indicator of future results," says Szeluga.

In previous tournament trials, the lanes have been the most critical factor.

"The abilities of those who make it to the trials are always at a high level, said Szeluga."

Each of the top finishers in this year's All Army tournament broke the 200 mark, with the highest score going to Mark Kimball, Fort Meade, Mo., with a 220.1 average.

"I looked forward to big scores since the Fort Benning lanes are in very good shape," says Szeluga.

Also looking for high scores, was SFC Despain, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

"I was thrilled to be selected for the trials," Despain said. "Last year, I set my sight on the All Army trials. So, it was a dream fulfilled when I was able to realize that goal." Despain finished 15th in a field of 24 in the Men's Division with a 24-game average of 165.9.

The newest and youngest to the bowling circle, Eric Pavil is ready for the challenge, too.

"I'd been excited since hearing that I was selected for the trials," said Pavil. "It has been the biggest tournament that I've ever bowled."

Pavil, also of the 75th Ranger REgiment, has bowled competitivelly for just over two year , beginning in his senior year in High School.

But, it was in recent TRADOC Tournament, March 13-15, that he was recognized as a potential All-Army competitor.

The experience of Szeluga, desire of Despain and talent of Pavil, provided the correct combination, which allowed Fort Benning to have three representatives in the 1987 Army Bowling Championship trials.

The 6-man and 6-woman team to represent the Army in the 1987 Armed Forces Championships are:

Men's Division

Mark Kimball; 220.1, Fort Meade, Mo.

Leonard Carrier; 219.1, Fort Knox, Ky.

Shawn Flanary, 215.0, Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

Chris Cantley, 208.9 ,Karshrue, Germany

Barry Horne, 208.6, Erlangan, Geramny

Anthony Szeluga, 208.5, Fort Benning, Ga.

Women's Division

Sally McCafferty, 190.9, Fort Benjamin Harrison, In.

Ruth Allen, 182.9 Schweinfurt, Germany

Ronda Eldred, 182.9, Fort Richardson, Ak.

Frances Sims, 182.7, Army Material Command, Va.

Adrian Crews, 180.6 Wurzburg, Germany

Sharon Witman, 179.1 Fort Hood, Tx.

Orienteers leave woods, hit Fort Benning streets

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning orienteers recently came out of the woods and into the streets of Main Post to compete in an Urban Orienteering Relay.

The relay which put a different twist on traditional orienteering consisted of three person teams, running separate legs, on different courses, each armed with street maps to locate their points.

The relay was the brainstorm of Linda Ferguson, Post Orienteering Director. "We plan on making it an annual event," she said, "Everyone who participated in this meet seem to enjoy it immensely.

"We used an ordinary street map of Main Post to devise the route," Ferguson said.

Orienteers could be seen running around Main Post in search of their points. It was reported that one competitor was seen running through a building in efforts to cut down their time. "The shortest distance between two points is a straight line," she said. "In orienteering you try to take the shortest route possible and in this case if just happened to be through a building."

Beryl Robertson, a member of the winning team in the Open Category said, "I had a lot of fun, orienteering is a good way to get exercise and use your brain at the same time, I will definately do this again.

Benning's "Marathon Man" headed for Boston

By Marsha Santiago
Infantry Training Center correspondent

When the pistol fires, starting the Boston Marathon this year, personnel at the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade will be watching with special interest.

That's because they'll have a 2nd ITB soldier who they helped stake, to root for in the race.

For SSgt. Lloyd McDonald Jr., the logistics non-commissioned officer for Headquarters, 10th Battalion, 2nd ITB, it will be the second year he has competed in the marathon.

Brigade personnel donated $425 to help finance McDonald's trip to the marathon.

The support he's received from the Brigade will definitely shape his goals for the race, McDonald said.

"First of all (my goal is) to finish in the 2:20s. Knowing I have their support, I will be running for quite a few people," he said.

He also hopes to complete the race in 2 hours 19 minutes, which would qualify him for the Olympic trials. "I would have to be in a real flow," he said.

A native of Plant City, Fla., McDonald entered the Army in September 1978. He completed basic training at Fort Jackson, S.C. Except for a one year assignment in Korea (1984-1985), he has been assigned to Fort Benning since 1981.

It was in 1981 that he became interested in running. The interest in marathon running began in 1983.

"In high school I was a wrestler. I did do a lot of running to develop my stamina," he said.

When he was assigned to 1st Battalion, 1st ITB in 1981, he said the Battalion commander (Col. James D. George) encouraged him to start running, and introduced him to racing coach Billy Clark.

"Clark is a tough coach. He helps me get in shape physically, develop a racing strategy and develop my confidence. He is a real motivator,"McDonald said.

Clark, who is the aquatics director at the Community Recreation Division, Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities, has been coaching military and civilians for many years. A retired master sergeant, he coached the Army Women's Triathlon Team in 1978. Before retiring from the Army in 1979, Clark coached all sports for military personnel.

Clark, a civil service employee since July 1980, was working at Santiago Gym in 1981. Clark helped McDonald with methods of running to increase his speed and endurance.

"Anyone can run," Clark said,"but most people run wrong. I showed Lloyd how to increase his stride and cover the same distance in less time. I also encouraged him to work with Nautilus equipment to increase lower body strength. He is twice as fast as when I first met him."

Before a run, Clark helps McDonald prepare physicaly by planning his workouts, and mentally by giving what he calls a "Coaches' Firing Up." The physical part involves working up to a peak and then working down so the runner is not fatigued on race day. The mental preparation involves developing a "killer instinct" — the desire to win regardless of the cost to the body.

Clark said McDonald's goal for the Boston run is very realistic. "He's a good young man and has a lot of heart. I would like to see him accomplish his goal."

"I would like to see Lloyd run middle distances," Clark concluded. "In the 1500 meter or mile I think he would be great."

When he is not preparing for a race, McDonald runs an average of between 70 and 90 miles each week. In preparation for the 26.2 mile Boston Marathon he has logged 96 miles in one week. His training has included back-to-back runs of 17 and 19 miles, with plans for at least 2 more 20 or more mile runs prior to April 20th . He runs six days a week, resting one day. "To maintain a peaking level it is very important to stay on a specific program," he stated.

In the 1986 Boston Marathon field of 6,200 runners, McDonald placed 283rd overall and first among the military runners. The November 1986 Marine Corp Marathon, Washington, D.C., saw him finishing 123rd out of the 11,000 runners. In 1983, McDonald ran on theAll Army Track Team.

On Saturday, McDonald added another victory, finishing first in the Promenade 20K run in Columbus. His time of 1:08:44 gave him an almost five minute lead over his closest competitor.

For the McDonald s, running is a family affair. McDonald and his wife, Rhonda, have two sons: Lloyd III, 8, and Quinton, 7. In the December 1986 Faith School One Mile Fun Run, Quinton snared first place overall, with Lloyd III winning 10th place overall.

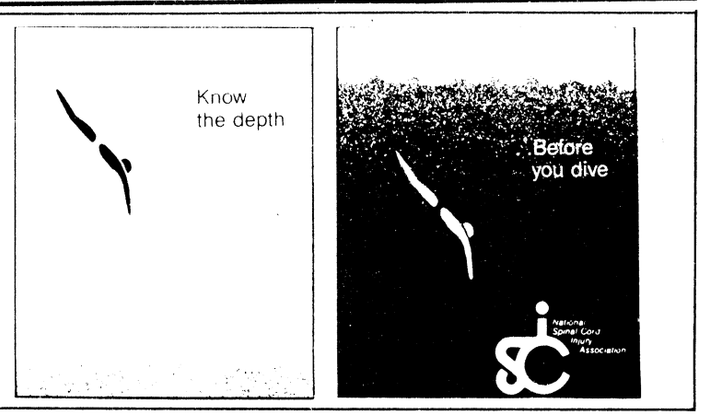
Flyers capture regional crown



By Steve Gouthro
Flyer's Rigby Club

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby Team captured second place in the Eastern Regional Rugby Tournament recently at Fort Stewart, Ga. Teams from Fort Stewart, Camp Lejeune, Cherry Point, Seymour Johnson Air Force Base, and Benning participated.

Benning drew the Marines from Cherry Point in the first round. Cherry Point scored first on a penalty kick. Minutes later Henry Himstedt tied the score at 3 with a penalty kick for Benning. The game was a hard hitting defensive battle but the Marines scored once again for a 7-3 halftime lead.

Time was starting to run out for Benning when Sammy Luisamoa tried to crash over the goal line. He was stopped but Gouthro grabbed the loose ball and scored. Himstedt added the conversion from a difficult angle to seal a 17-13 Benning victory. This placed the Flyers in the championship game.

IF 3.9%, 2.9% or 0% DOESN'T WORK, TRY $3990.

Most car advertising these days is cluttered with numbers representing each month's interest rates. Newspaper ads feature down payments, and television commercials shout them in living rooms around the country.

The relentless effect of this hoopla about affordable financing is to hide the fact that most new cars are becoming increasingly unaffordable.

It's a mathematical smokescreen.

YUGO doesn't need to resort to such tactics to sell cars, because the YUGO is quite simply the most affordable new car in America. It costs just $3990, which is a number economists understand and buyers can really appreciate.

Once behind the wheel, they find even more to appreciate, such as ample headroom, reclining seats and full carpeting, standard performance features like 4 wheel independent suspension, front disc brakes, rack and pinion steering and steel belted radial tires.

They also find security. The YUGO not only meets all federal safety standards, but in a recent 35mph crash test, the government found that the YUGO outperformed 2 costlier cars, including models from all the companies offering low interest rates.

It is easy to understand why YUGO has become the fastest selling new European import in its introductory year. We start by creating an affordable car, while other car manufacturers start with an unaffordable car and then try to create affordable terms.

It's a clever smokescreen, but when the smoke clears, one number remains . . . $3990.

Daley honored for support of post

File photo

Then Capt. Charles S. Daley surveys the horizon in Holland in 1944. Daley served with the 82nd Airborne Division in Europe during World War II.

Community leader to receive 'Spirit of Fort Benning Award'

Editor's note: Charles S. Daley is this year's winner of the Spirit of Fort Benning Award.

Established in 1985, The award is given to a civilian who has gone above and beyond the call of duty to support the military community.

The award will be presented at a Tuesday ceremony at the Officer's Club.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Charles S. Daley sits behind the desk in his downtown Columbus office, surrounded by reminders of the Army. One picture hanging on the wall behind him depicts a World War II glider scene; another is of soldiers parachuting near the 250-feet Airborne towers.

"In a sense I rejoined the military when I came to Columbus," he said. "I was drawn to Fort Benning."

Daley, an Officers' Candidate School graduate and veteran of World War II, came to Columbus in 1964 to serve as president of the 4th National Bank (now named the National Bank and Trust Company.)

"A few of my friends who stayed on in the Army were ending their careers here," he said, "plus the Army is just such a great institution, it keeps me interested."

Daley said he will never forgot his time at OCS. "Going to OCS was one of the greatest experiences of my life," he said. "I learned how to survive."

He said when he went through, part of OCS was out in the Harmony Church area. "I never even knew what main post looked like until I came back in 1964,"Daley said.

Upon graduation, he volunteered for the 82nd Airborne Division, was sent to Glider School and then off to the war.

Daley took part in the D-Day Invasion at Normandy. "We landed in the wee hours of the morning. I was supposed to serve as an executive officer, but ended up taking command of a company because the casualty rate was over 50 percent," he said.

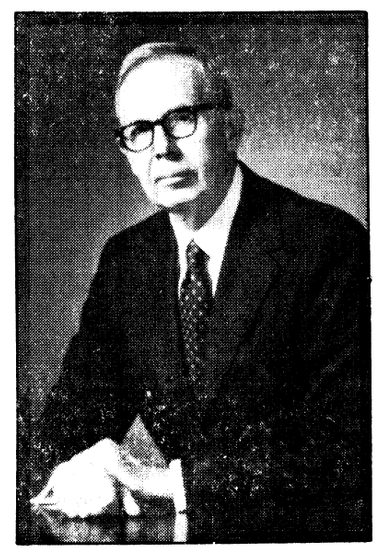
He was wounded three times, the last one so severe that it kept him hospitalized for almost a year. "I made a full recovery though," he said, "and I attribute it to the training I learned here as an OCS student."

Daley and his wife host a gathering locally every June to remember D-Day.

He said he has many good memories from his association through the years with the military community.

Daley was instrumental in arranging President Gerald Ford's visit to post for the Army's 200th Birthday.

"I was in charge of the festivities surrounding the birthday celebration in Columbus, and a friend was actually supposed to make arrangements for the president's visit," he said.



But the friend had a last-minute problem and couldn't complete the arrangements, so Daley flew to Washington, D.C.

"It was the funniest thing," he said. "I went to the White House and talked with a general there and told him what I wanted.

"You don't really think you can get the president to Fort Benning?" the general said. "He is going to lean on the secretary of the Army for that advice."

Well, it just so happened that Daley knew Bo Callaway, who was then secretary of the Army. "I told that general to get his secretary on the phone, that I wanted to speak with Bo," Daley said. "I made sure his secretary emphasised that I was at the White House at the time."

While she put the call through,

Daley

Daley said he waited nervously.

"I did know him, but not as well as I was putting on and I was hoping my bluff wouldn't get called."

Well, his bluff didn't get called. Callaway called and gave Daley his personal assurance that the secretary would do everything he could to get the President to Benning.

Ford did come and Daley said he remembers that same general flashing him the victory sign during the celebration.

Daley was instrumental in getting the National Infantry Museum opened. He said that out of his entire relationship with the community, he considers that his greatest accomplishment. Daley still serves on the board of trustees for the museum. The uniform that he wore in the last invasion he participated in during World War II adorns a mannequin there.

He a member of the OCS Hall of Fame and the OCS Alumni Association, is a past president of the local chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army and is still involved in many of its activities.

"I think Fort Benning is a remarkable place and I am honored to receive this award," he said.

New payday should save $785 million

Army News Service

Servicemembers' September 1987 end-of-the-month pay will occur Oct. 1, the first day of fiscal year 1988, as part of a Congressionally mandated payday change.

Army personnel officials explain that the change allows the government to avoid paying $785 million out of FY 87 funds, a measure aimed at reducing the FY 87 budget deficit.

The current payment schedule still covers a total of 12 end-of-the-month pay periods, since servicemembers will receive their December pay Dec. 31.

Officials note that the change will have no effect on servicemembers' income tax for calendar year 1987.

The service secretaries have retained the option of paying servicemembers early or late when payday falls on a Saturday, Sunday or holiday.

Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. has directed that soldiers be paid early when payday falls on any of these days, except when mandated by Congress.

The following is the schedule of paydays through October 1988.

September 87 — Oct. 1, 1987
October 87 — Oct. 30
November 87 — Dec. 1
December 87 — Dec. 31

Brown nominated for Army vice chief of staff job

Army News Service

The Department of Defense announced last week that President Reagan has nominated Lt. Gen. Arthur E. Brown Jr. for promotion to general and assignment as vice chief of staff of the Army.

Brown is currently the director of the Army staff in the Pentagon. Senate confirmation of this nomination would make him the number two man on the Army staff, with duties including service on the joint chiefs of staff in the absence of the service chief.

Brown's active Army career began when he was commissioned with the class of 1953 at the United States Military Academy, West Point, N.Y. As an infantryman, Brown has served in Airborne, Infantry and Mechanized units, and has commanded light infantry companies, a light infantry battalion, and a mechanized brigade. He was assistant division commander of the 25th Infantry Division in Hawaii, and served as the executive to the U.S representative to the NATO military committee in Bussels, Belgium. Before becoming director of the Army staff, he commanded Readiness and Mobilization Region IV at Fort Gillem, Ga. He taught military science at the University of North Alabama, and military strategy at the Army War College.

Brown holds a master's degree in public and international affairs from the University of Pittsburgh, and is a graduate of the Army's Infantry Basic and Advanced courses, Command and General Staff College,and War College.

Born in Manila, Philippines Brown is married to the former Jerry D. Cook of Savannah, Ga. They have three children.

Program aims to reduce soldiers' housing costs

By Sgt. Maj. Rudi Williams, USA
American Forces Information Service

Service members will no longer have to shell out hundreds of dollars in security deposits if a Department of Defense-directed, guaranteed-compensation-payments-to-landlords test program is successful.

The Army, Navy and Air Force will each conduct a year-long pilot program at a stateside installation starting this spring.

The Navy is scheduled to conduct its portion of the test around the Moffett (Calif.) Naval Air Station, which is nestled in the midst of high-cost "Silicon Valley," where a number of hi-tech firms are located.

"The average rent for a two-bedroom apartment in a good area is between $900 and $1,200 a month," said Moffett public affairs spokesman John Shackleton. "Of course, you can get cheaper places in less desirable areas where the housing and schools are not as good."

The same type of apartment would cost a little less near Fort Ord, Calif., where the Army will hold its test.

"An apartment costs between $750 and $800 a month in this area," said Jim Davis of the 7th Infantry Division (Light) and Fort Ord Public Affairs Ofice. "It costs about $2,000 just to move into an apartment."

A final decision hasn't been made, but Air Foce officials are leaning toward Luke Air Force Base, near Glendale, Ariz., for the test.

"We think military service members are responsible people and will take care of damages if they're at fault," said a spokeswoman for the Defense Housing Office, an arm of the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Force Management and Personnel.

Congress authorized the test in the fiscal 1987 Defense Authorization Bill. The test results will be reported to Congress, and the lawmakers and DoD officials will decide whether to make it a permanent program.

Three lauded for work with chapel programs

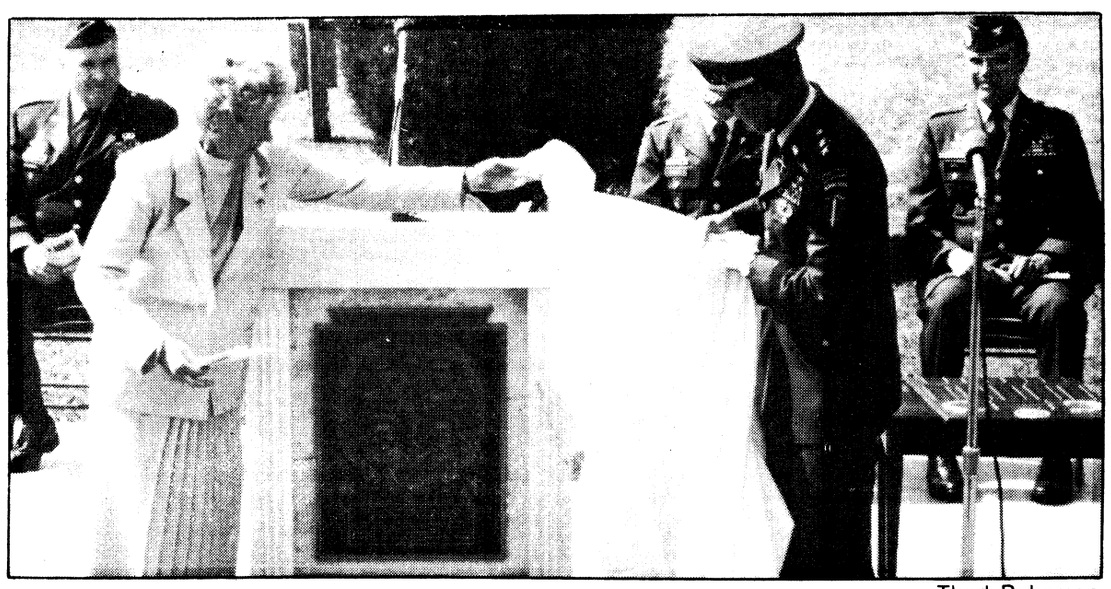
By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

Three community residents received the Chaplain's Legion of Honor Award at a ceremony Monday.

Myrtle Conway, Gordon Kitchens and Col. (ret.) Oliver M. Smith accepted the awards from Chaplain (Brig. Gen.)Charles J. McDonnell, the Army's deputy chief of chaplains.

The awards were presented during a dedication ceremony of a monument honoring four heroic chaplains.

The monument was presented to Fort Benning by Lenora Smith, on behalf of the Chattahoochee Valley Chapter, Association of the U.S. Army. Smith is president of the organization.



Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba, post commander, accepted the monument on behalf of the Benning community.

The four chaplains died February 3, 1943, after their ship, the S.S. Dorchester, sank in the North Atlantic after being hit by Nazi torpedoes. The four went down with the ship so that others might have their places in the lifeboats.

McDonnell compared their sacrificial spirit to the "endless giving of volunteers.

"The volunteer's efforts triples the effectiveness of our outreach ministry," McDonnell said. "They assist the chapel programs in every aspect with phenominal vigor. We could not work without them and their special gifts."

Lenora Smith, president of the local chapter of the AUSA, unveils a memorial donated by the group, as Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba, post commander, looks on.

OPINION

Civil servant defends his right to use post workout facilities

Editor's note: The following is in response to a recent letter written by a soldier who complained about civilians using gym facilities on post.

Dear Unsigned:

While we would not like to contribute further to the impression of a "PT Rift" between civilians and military, your letter and the equally-slanted editor's note demand an answer from the supporting work force, particularly regarding the Building 4 Fitness Center and its origins.

When Brig. Gen. Kenneth Leuer was school assistant commandant some years back, a group of women formed an aerobics group and were scrounging space on the stages of some of the large classrooms during the lunch hour.

The general offered to have part of a large storage room cleared out for their use and, later, even had a couple of salvage Nautilus machines installed.

Originally established to meet a civilian need, the room slowly gained popularity, growing over the years into the fine facility we all enjoy today.

But to the heart of your letter — the allegation that civilians are "hogging" gym and locker facilities. The most cursory check of attendance figures would reveal that only a small minority of attendees are civilian.

Most of the women using the Fitness Center do so for aerobics (displacing no military), and most of them are dependent wives. Similarly, many of the few male civilian employees using the facilities are either retired military or reservists. All are aware of the rule that active duty military have priority and wouldn't have it any other way.

Finally, the Department of the Army does indeed encourage the work force to exercise in military facilities in the certain knowledge tht those who do work out have a dramatically lower record of sick leave than their sedentary co-workers.

A Civilian Personnel Office letter generally limits use of these facilities to one's lunch hour and after duty hours. A phone call to Thomas Mull, chief of the Community Recreation Division, established that he has never received a complaint on this subject from any of his facility managers.

We can well imagine, however, that when you do experience some crowding it might appear that one civilian in the facility is too many.

May we suggest that, considering the alternatives, you would be better served by boosting civilian efforts to maintain physical fitness.

Office no place for rude behavior

By Miss. Goodmanners
Special to the Bayonet

It has always puzzled Miss. Goodmanners to see people who behave perfectly well in society become ogres in the office.

Once they set foot on a military installation, these people immediately become "soldiers and civilians," and follow an entirely different code of conduct.

Miss. Goodmanners recognizes that there are differences between soldiers and civilian employees. Military service requires soldiers to follow additional rules of conduct, such as saluting and being respectful to their commanders. Civilian employees also have a code of behavior that they must uphold, such as doing their jobs properly, giving a full day's work for a full day's pay and arriving on time.

But these are additions to the already accepted standards expected in polite society. These standards include being polite and courteous to everyone we meet during business hours. The majority of people at Fort Benning follow these standards.

The problem comes when a small minority of misguided people feel that their position in the workplace exempts them from the normal rules. These people operate under the erroneous idea that it is perfectly proper to treat civilians or soldiers as second-class citizens.

To correct this misconception, Miss. Goodmanners suggests that rather than dividing people into job categories, why not think of everyone on post as Department of the Army employees. Along with this, let's assume that as such, everyone is working toward the same goals. In the case of Fort Benning, Home of the Infantry, our collective role is to assist in the training of soldiers to perform their wartime missions.

Dear Miss. Goodmanners:

After standing in line 30 minutes, I finally reached the head of the line, where I was informed that this office doesn't perform the transaction I needed, and summarily dismissed. I was left with no idea of where to go, and feeling definitely miffed for having wasted my time for nothing. However, I controlled my anger, said nothing and went elsewhere to try to find help. Do you think I was treated properly?

Only a private

Dear Private:

First off, I commend you for behaving properly under trying circumstances. You are clearly a well-bred individual who showed admirable control after such shabby treatment.

In answer to your question, of course you were not treated properly. The person to whom you spoke should have been of more assistance.

In this situation, it would have been appropriate for the person to say, "I'm terribly sorry that I cannot help you. You need to see Mrs. Very Helpful in Room 205, Building 2. Do you know where that is?" and give you directions as needed.

Lastly, please do not refer to yourself as "only a private." You are a vital member of the Fort Benning community and deserve to be treated with respect, regardless of your rank. Miss. Goodmanners is sure that with your obvious breeding, you will not stay a private for long.

Dear Miss. Goodmanners:

What is the proper way to disembark from an elevator, when both men and women are riders? I understand that if the riders are all soldiers, then rank takes precedence over gender, but what is proper when the ladies are not in uniform?

Slightly confused

Dear Confused:

Thank you for asking this question, for it addresses a problem that Miss. Goodmanners encounters frequently.

It is always proper for a gentleman to allow a lady to precede him from an elevator. This is so that the gentleman can hold the door open and protect the lady from possible loss of limb.

Dear Miss. Goodmanners:

Recently I entered an office for the purpose of conducting business. The secretaries present ignored my arrival, and continued an antimated discussion of the proper method for planting tulip bulbs. Since I was on a work assignment, I felt it was rude for the women to continue talking of personal things when there was work to be done. What should I have done?

Not a gardener

Dear Not:

Miss. Goodmanners doesn't know what the world is coming to when people can use valuable office time to discuss personal matters.

The proper thing for you to do in this situation is clear your throat softly, give both individuals a pointed stare, and then glare at your wristwatch. If this

Drug Suppression Teams provide vital service

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

In the past six months, 10 soldiers have been courtmartialed for drug-related offences.

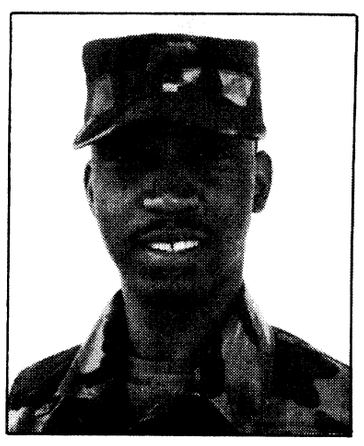
What makes these statistics especially alarming is that several of the cases, soldiers were convicted for selling cocaine and LSD.

Cocaine is an especially dangerous drug because it quickly becomes addictive, forcing the user to resort to crime to support the habit.

Lysergic acid diethylamide, a mind-altering drug popular in the 1960s, causes or "trips" that may last from six to eight hours. Aftereffects include birth defects in users' children, brain damage and recurring hallucinations.

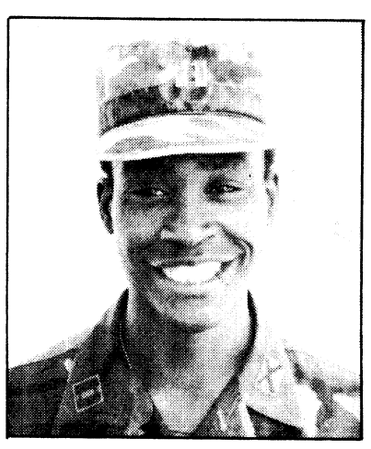
The Army does not want drug users or pushers in its ranks. Article 112a of the Uniform Code of Military Justice bans the use, possession, manufacture, and distribution of such illegal drugs, and cites stiff penalties for offenders.

Soldiers convicted of selling cocaine or LSD face a maximum sentence of 15 years. Users of the drugs don't get off lightly either. The maximum sentence for use of the drugs is five years imprisonment.



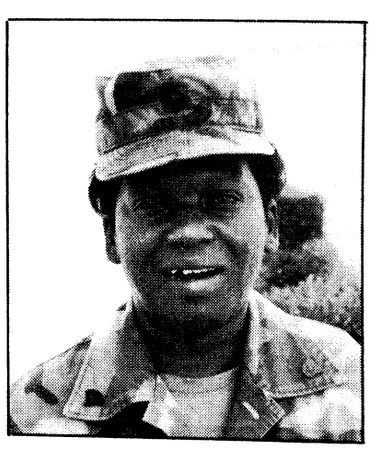
While most cases involving users result from random urinalysis testing, most sellers are being apprehended by Drug Suppression Teams working undercover.

These employees, working undercover, are faceless men and women who do a dangerous job well.



Thanks to their efforts in the past six months, Fort Benning and the Army is rid of at least ten pushers.

Because of the dangerous nature of their work, these brave people can not be singled out by name.But they deserve praise for the work they do.



VARIOUS VOICES / Do you think the penalty should be stiffer for drug offences?

Sgt. Terry Taylor, 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group, - "Yes,I think the penalties are stiff enough but they could probably be a little harder. In the civilian world the rules are pretty tough they go to prison, etc. The Army tell you everyday not to do drugs but people do it anyway. If they are old enough to do the crime they should pay."

Capt. Daniel Morgan, 25th Company, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade, - "No, I don't think the punishment is hard enough. In the books the penalties are high enough but they are rarely enforced. I think people tend to be lenient on the basically good soldier, but that is wrong. Drugs have no place in the Army. I think NCO's and Officers need to be more strict. I firmly believe that anyone, officers and enlisted alike should be reduced in rank, do some hard labor and then be put out of the Army!"

SP4 Linda Hudson, Food Inspector, MEDDAC, - "No, I don't think the price most people pay is high enough. Yes, the regulation says alot but not everyone is disciplined the same. The lower enlisted usually get two chances where as for NCO's and Officers its one time and you are out. In my opinion I think all people should go through rehabilitation treatment and then get discharged from the Army.

SSgt. Kenneth Deppe, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment, - "No, a lot of units in the Army take the first offender and give him and article 15 or a letter of reprimand, to me that isn't enough. I think that it should be mandatory that any soldier caught doing drugs should be dishonorably discharged from the Army. If they are selling and using drugs they should be sent to Leavenworth and do some hard labor."

PFC Joel Scott, Veterinary Services, MEDDAC, - "Yes, I think the penalties in the books are stiff enough but unfortunately they are not enforced fully. I recently was busted myself, I recieved the maximum punishment under UCMJ for what I did. I didn't contest the punishment because I knew it was just. Most people do not recieve the maximum sentence and that is what I feel is not right."

Lt. Col. David Hill, 10th Company, 1rst Battalion, The School Brigade, - "No, I've been a police officer here in Columbus and I've observed a lot of cases where drugs were involved and I have not seen anyone who has benefited from taking drugs without a doctors prescription. A soldier has a responsibility not only to his country but to be capable to go through his mission unimpaired, because, not only his life but his fellow squad members depend on him.

Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment, 10th Mountain Division recently finished Light Fighter III, the third and final phase of training for the Cohesive Operational Readiness and Training soldier. The training is designed to enhance the skills of COHORT Light Infantry troops.

According to 1st Lt.Harry Yates, S-1 officer with 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment, 10th Mountain Division, the mountain men have spent the week being evaluated on their commando skills.

"The training is geared to be as realistic as possible with squads firing and manuevering at the same time," he said, "but, as always, priority one, is safety."

A new technique was used in evaluating one aspect of the skills, the crack shot. "The troops were run through a training lane," Yates said. "In that lane is an outstretched cable with attached dummies, made from helium filled balloons."

He explained that when when a soldier got a hit, the dummyfell to the ground. "This creates a realistic scenario of an enemy patrol moving silently down a trail."

Each man was required to do a helicopter rappel and set up and fire a 60mm mortar, Yates said."The men were constantly moving and lack of sleep became another obstacle to overcome," he said.

Yates said the training helped the soldiers learn to function as a vital part of the squad. "The soldiers know that how well they do is a direct reflection on their squad leader," he said.

Besides their combat skills, soldiers were also graded on their ability to survive.

They had to consturct a survival kit containing at least one tube of bullion cubes, salt tablets and purification tablets. Use of natural water sources was a must and the men were called upon to demonstrate skills used to catch small game.

"The troops have worked hard this past year and a half," Yates said. "Their performance out there proves it."

Brigade soldiers face challenging course with confidence

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Soldiers from the Personnel Service Company, 197th Support Battalion, recently shut down their word processors and left the stressful office environment behind to challenge their physical stamina on the Sand Hill Confidence Course.

From the laughter and smiles, it was easy to see that the soldiers were enjoying themselves during the day's events. The female soldiers attacked the obstacles with as much gusto as the males. Even the company commander and first sergeant joined in on the action.

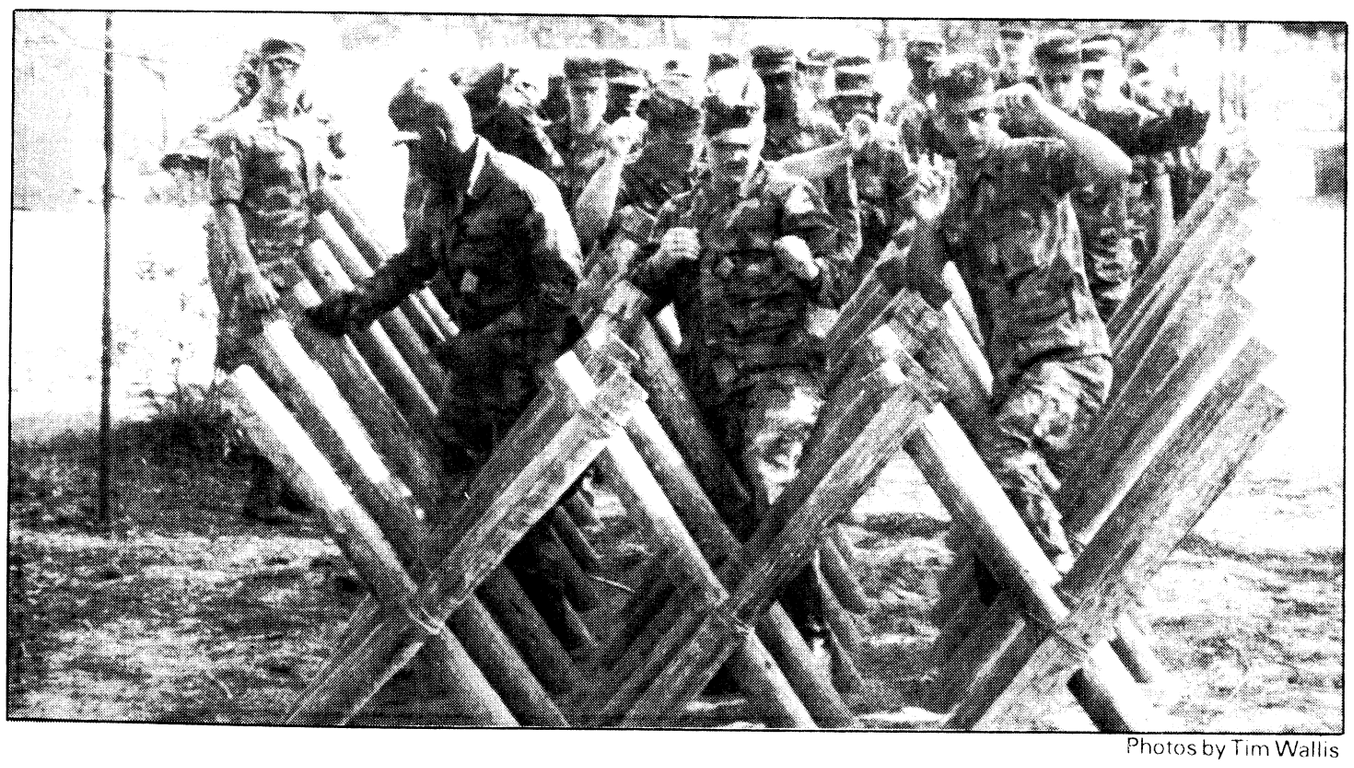
"These soldiers don't get to do any adventure type training, since this company has an administrative mission,' said Capt. Mark Reed, PSC commander. "It's almost like a return to basic training."

Before the soldiers took on the challenges of the obstacles, SFC Jeffrey McWilliams, PSC first sergeant, walked them through the course, showing them what was expected at each barrier.

"Use the obstacles to blow off steam, have a good time and enjoy it," McWilliams said to the assembled grup of soldirs. "But also get the training value out of the exercise."

The encouraging cries of fellow soldiers helped drive the less athletic on to conquer difficult obstacles, such as the slide for life, inclining wall and confidence climb. Some obstacles required teamwork and extra effort, like the skyscraper.

"Everyone who was physically able went through the course," said SP4 Walter Peterson, company training NCO. "It really does build your confidence, and helps you to work with others."



As the tired and sore group left the confidence course and boarded the trucks for Kelley Hill, there was little doubt that some may curse their aches and pains, however, all would cherish the experience for days to come.

Capt. Mark Reed jumps into the pit, while SP4 Raleigh James and Pvt. 2 Maria Francis wait their turn.

IOBC adds off-duty swimming lessons

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet Staff writer

The Infantry Officer Basic Course isn't just teaching tactics and leadership any more. Instructors are giving swim lessons to those IOBC students who can't swim.

"Our goal is to teach enough swimming to lieutenants who can't swim so they can survive in the water and pass the Combat Water Survival Test," said 1st Lt. Peter Galagni, the assistant operation's officer for the 2nd Training Battalion, IOBC.

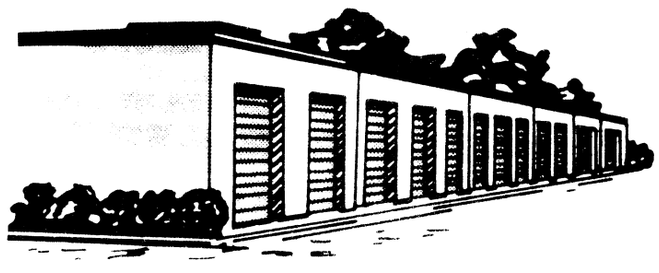
"The CWST has always been a prerequisite for Ranger School and, since September 1986, has been a requirement for IOBC," Galagni said. "Being able to swim could save a soldier's life and is a needed skill."

Galgani added that if an officer fails to pass the test by the end of the Basic Course then this adverse information is reflected in his records.

The success of this program centers around the platoon training cadre.

"Our platoon trainers, both officers and NCOs, become qualified lifeguards between cycle breaks. This involves instruction and training in advanced life saving, cardio-pulmonary resuscitation and first aid," Galgani said.

These "lifeguards" then teach their non-swimming students how to survive in the water during non-duty hours. When the program first started in July, 1986, it was a voluntary endeavor to help non-swimming lieutenants who wanted to go to Ranger School. However, Brig. Gen. Barry McCaffrey, assistant commandant of the Infantry School liked the idea of the program and formalized it into required training for all IOBC students who could not swim.



The instruction concentrates on making the non-swimming officer comfortable in the water by teaching the basic side stroke and how to tread water. These

Benning to begin teaching sniper course this summer

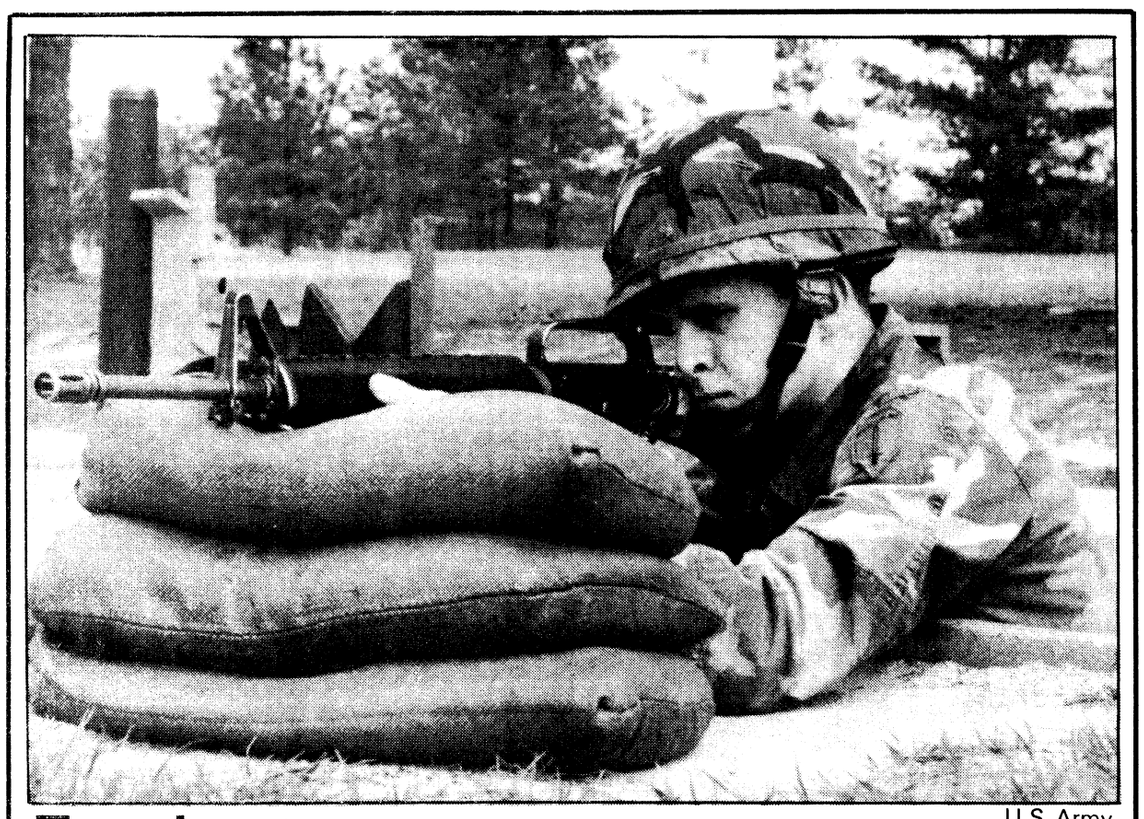
By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

An infantry platoon, moving against an enemy objective, takes fire from a concealed machinegun position. The platoon leader can't reduce the enemy position so he calls back to the company commander who sends forward a sniper team. The team silently and quickly moves into an advantageous position that offers concealment and eliminates the enemy machinegun team, allowing the platoon to continue their mission.

Infantry leaders will be able to call on sniper assets after August of this year as the new United States Army Infantry School's Sniper Course graduates its first class.

"The Infantry School has been getting requests from the field for specially trained snipers to operate with front line battalions to engage selected targets. Their argument was that a sniper would be a definite combat multiplier. The School studied the queries from the field and is now fielding a Sniper Course," said Lt. Col. Roger Hewitt, the Chief of Course Development at the USAIS.

The three week course, tentatively set to begin Jul. 11, will teach such techniques as employment of snipers, combat orders, camouflage and concealment, selection and occupation of position, target detection and selection, engagement techniques, marksmanship, range acquisition, techniques of observation and Threat identification.



"A sniper will have to know Threat rank and insignia so that he can eliminate primary targets which will cause command and control problems for the enemy. Targets might also be ones which can't be overcome by conventional means," said SFC William Knox, the senior trainer of the new school being set up by the 29th Infantry Regiment.

Knox said many armies of the world use snipers and that these expert marksmen have been an integral part of the military for many years. He said the U.S. Marine Corps has always recognized the need for snipers and that the School's new course is calling upon Marine sniper expertise as the set up the course.

"We have six of our instructors at the Marine Scout Sniper Course at Camp Lejeune, N.C. and representatives from the Marine sniper course will be here to look at our set-up June 15," Knox said.

The United States Army Marksmanship Unit will be providing the shooting instruction for the course.

Once a student successfully completes the course he will be awarded a special skill identifier to his military occupational specialty designator, according to Knox.

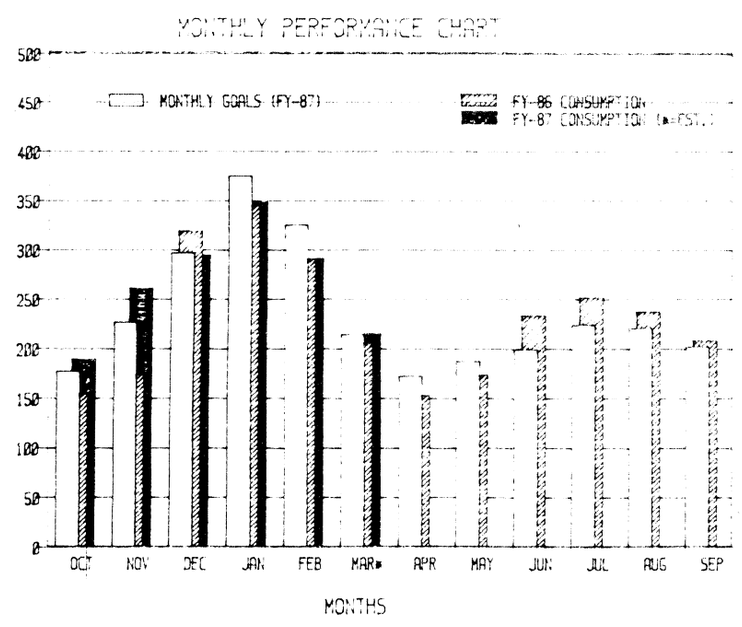
Top shooter

Cpl. Gregory Quillin won top honors in the 1st Infantry Training Brigade's annual shooting competition earlier this month. Quillin, along with five other marksmen, scored 40 out of 40 in initial competition. He went on to win the competition by hitting 38 out of 50 rounds during the moving target engagement part of the competition. Quillin is assigned to Headquarters, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, and is currently waiting to attend Officer Candidate School.

Energy conservation requires everybody's efforts

Energy Office



Heating season officially ended March 16. We are now in a period that offers an opportunity for significant energy savings. The bar graft below shows monthly energy consumption for fiscal year 1986. You can easily see the roller coaster effect with extremely high peaks during heating and air conditioning season and the lower peaks during the off season. In fact, energy consumption doubles and triples during the heating and cooling seasons.

In order to utilize our energy resources in the most efficient manner possible and capitalize on available energy savings, we must do two things. First, the extremely high peaks must be leveled off. We can do this by effectively controlling building temperatures when heating and air conditioning systems are in operation. When you consider the fact it takes from 3 to 5 percent more energy for every degree about 65 for heating or below 78 for cooling, you can see the tremendous potential for saving energy.

The second area we need to consider is the season which we are in now. This is the time of year when we are between heating season and air conditioning season. This period must be maintained as long as possible. The graft shows these off season periods have been very short in the past. We must work to change this.

There is an obstacle in our path. The Spring season in this part of the country is usually not a gradual warming trend but contains sporadic changes from cool waves to warm waves. This same characteristic is true for the Fall season also. This means we will possibly face a cool snap after the heating systems are shut down or a hot spell before air conditioning season begins. It is not wise and efficient to extend the operation of heating and air conditioning systems for long periods of time to deal with these varying weather conditions.

Common sense will suffice in most of these cases. If the weather is cool, wear a sweater to get by and if its warm open windows to bring in outside air. The Army has faced up to these changes in life style that must be made. Its time we do the same.

This chart shows the monthly energy consumption goals and how well Fort Benning is meeting them.

Declining dollar overseas makes it rough on soldiers

By Sgt. Maj. Rudi Williams, USA
American Forces Information Service

Mid-month March paychecks for service members overseas were expected to include an average 15 percent cost of living allowance, or COLA, increase to help them cope with the dollar's drastic decline against many foreign currencies.

"I know that the changing value of the dollar has made living more difficult for many of our service members and families overseas," Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger said in announcing his decision to authorize an increase. "Accordingly, I have directed that the cost of living allowance be increased to reflect the most recent household expenditure data. This will help keep your overseas purchasing power close to your stateside counterparts.

"In addition, I have directed new travel rules that will permit certain family members in West Germany, Japan, Italy and Spain, in cases where commanders believe there is a real need, to return to the United States on a space-available basis aboard military airlift flights," Weinberger said.

During a late-February Pentagon press conference, David J. Armor noted that the new rates were approved by Weinberger to become effective on March 1, 1987, and would show up in the mid-March paycheck if computers could be readjusted in time for the calculation.

Service members will receive the new COLA payment retroactive to March 1. The amount each person receives "depends upon your income level — what your basic military pay is and the number of dependents you have," said Armor, principal deputy assistant secretary of defense for force management and personnel. "But the average increase will be about 15 percent higher than what they're receiving now. Most members will receive between 10 and 20 percent more COLA than they're getting now.

"Persons in higher ranks or with more dependents get greater increases," Armor explained.

Cost of living allowance rates are also based upon where the person is stationed. For example, the allowance for an E-5 with two dependents and eight years of service living in Heidelberg, West Germany, goes up from $103 to $117 per month, or from $1,236 to $1,404 per year. The allowance for an O-3 living in Heidelberg with two dependents will go up from $148 to $170 per month, or from $1,776 to $2,040 per year.

The lowest rate is paid to service members living within 50 miles or an hour's drive from commissary and post exchange facilities. This is called a "full support location."

If the same E-5 and O-3 were stationed more than 150 miles from a commissary and post exchange, the E-5's cost of living allowance would go up from $223.17 to $253.50 a month, or from $2,678 to $3,042 per year. The captain's allowance would increase from $320.67 to $368.34 per month, or from $3,848 to $4,420 a year.

There are also different rates (on a graduated scale) for service members living between 50 and 150 miles from facilities.

The situation is critical in Europe, where in some counties the dollar has declined by 40 percent in the past year and half, according to Pentagon statistics.

"This decline has hurt many of our military members and their families, particularly those who rely on the local economy for housing, food and other servies," Armor emphasized.

Hardest hit are people stationed in West Germany, Japan, Italy and Spain. But the value of the dollar is also lower in South Korea, the United Kingdom and the Philippines. Panama is the only country where the exchange rate has not changed.

More than 90 percent of American military personnel overseas are stationed in these eight countries, with more than 50 percent of them in West Germany.

Only non-command-sponsored dependents in West Germany, Japan, Italy and Spain are eligible for a "free" trip home using high-priority, space-available travel on military aircraft.

But this is a short-term benefit with an eligibility cutoff date of May 1, 1987. "If you bring dependents overseas unsponsored after that date, they will not be eligible for the free return home," Armor emphasized, adding that DoD is not trying to force these family members to return to the United States.

"... this is an option, not a requirement," he said emphatically. "We're allowing those to return who can show their local commanders that they're experiencing a serious (financial) problem ..."

"We don't expect all of them to return," he said.

Some 5,000 non-command-sponsored dependents ar living overseas, most in West Germany, according to DoD personnel managers' estimates. But officials emphasized that they are not trying to force them to return stateside because they've created problems for commanders.

"I don't think they present a serious problem to commanders," Armor aid.

"It's still our policy that if you want the full benefits of housing and housing allowance programs, you have to become command-sponsored," Armor noted. "We're encouraging all of these individuals in that situation to become command-sponsored. Any family who is overseas unsponsored can convert to a sponsored tour. Of course, they have to sign up for a longer tour.

"For many of these families, that would be an immediate way to solve their economic problems," he said. "They would immediately get a higher housing allowance, and it just means staying there one more year.

"It's a choice many of these families will have to make," Armor emphasized. "We encourage them to extend their tour and become sponsored as probably the easiest and quickest way to solve their financial problems."

Weinberger also asked each military service to improve command information and education programs about foreign exchange rates and how cost of living allowance and overseas allowance programs are designed to alleviate financial problems for service members and their families.

'Homebase' program designed to save troops' moving expense

Military Personnel Center

The Army's Homebase/Advance Assignment program may be able to save you money on moving expenses and reduce dislocation of your family when you are assigned to a family member — restricted overseas tour.

On homebase assignments, soldiers return to the same locations where they were stationed before going on their overseas tours. Their family remains at the homebase location while the sponsor is away. Homebasing eleminates moving costs, and allows families to stay in place longer.

With advance assignments, soldiers know where they will be stationed for their follow-on tours after serving overseas. Many families move directly to their next assignment locations. This eliminates a move to a third location while the soldier is away, which saves money and allows the family to stay loger in either the former or the new assignment location.

"The program applies to sergeants through master sergeants," said SGM Marino A. Fiesel of MILPERCEN's Assignment Procedures Office. "Specialists four and below, promotable master sergeants, sergeants major and soldiers electing to serve 'all others' tours are not eligible for the Homebase/Advance Assignment Program."

Soldiers who want to participate in the HAAP must sign statements when they are notified of their homebase/advance assignments. This statement says that the soldier understands the intent of the program.

"Soldiers participating in the HAAP are expected to use their permanent-change-of-station entitlements to move their families only to their advance assignment locations," Fiesel said.

If the assignment authority cancels or changes a soldier's homebase or advance assignment, the soldier may use the PCS entitlement. If a soldier, contrary to the intent of either program, executes the PCS entitlement, the assignment authority may cancel or change the previously approved homebase or advance assignment.

Additional instructions in a soldier's PCS orders indicate the soldier's election of either a homebase or advance assignment.

In all cases where MILPERCEN cosiders a change of hoebase or advance assignment for a soldier, an assignment manager will contact the soldier to determine the impace of the change.

Form your own 'Neighborhood Watch'

Provost Marshal

What is Neighborhood Watch? In recent years, this nationwide program has taken on significant importance in dealing with crimes occurring within communities.

This program has changed drastically since its inception. In the past, citizens were asked to actively patrol their neighborhoods and act as sworn deputies of a sort. However, there were many problems encountered by this method, and so police departments were forced to take a different approach.

The U.S. Army has defined and streamlined this program to its present state. Department of the Army Pamphlet 190-31 outlines and explains the program as it will be implemented within the Army communities.

The Neighborhood Watch, as its name describes, is very simple. Patrolling, enforcement, and similar tasks are not a part of our program. Very simply, the residents are provided with the latest statistics about their particular area, and are given guidance as to what agency to contact in the event of a crime.

Good citizenship best describes this idea. A resident who witnesses or suspects a crime cotacts a community representative or the Military Police, and then the ball is rolling.

If a family is on vacation, our out of their home for any reason, other members of the community keep an eye on the vacant home and property belonging to the absent family.

This is so simple, and requires very little effort that is out of the ordinary. The first step in preventing crime is to become involved. Attend a meeting in your community, and I'm sure you'll be amazed at how easily you can play an important role within your own neighborhood to prevent crime.

The Military Police cannot police each street corner simultaneously; therefore, it is necessary for you, the resident to become involved.

"WE FEEL GOOD ABOUT LEAVING JAMAHL AT THE DAY-CARE CENTER BECAUSE THEY TREAT HIM LIKE HE'S THEIR OWN CHILD."

SSG Ken and SP4 Jacquie Farmer

"We never really considered leaving Jamahl with anyone except a private sitter. But our first visit to the new Child Development Center here at Fort Hood sure changed our minds.

"We know our son is well taken care of. So we can concentrate on our jobs without worrying about what he's doing.

"He learns, instead of just playing. He counts, sings, says his ABC's. And they teach him to be more independent.

"Jacquie and I have peace of mind when Jamahl's at the Center. They take care of him, and he's learning, and those are the two most important things."

The Army's Day-Care programs are making modern day-care facilities available to more children each day. And the quality of the "Caregivers" who attend the children has never been higher. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

COHORT soldiers get taste of light infantry during FTX

By Marsha Santiago
Infantry Training Center correspondent

Soldiers in One Station Unit Training at the 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, got a taste of what the real Army holds for them during a recent field training exercise.

The approximately 350 soldiers in the battalion make up a COHORT unit bound for 1st Battalion, 87th Infantry, 1st Brigade of the 10th Mountain Division at Fort Drum, N.Y.

Every OSUT class is required to complete a field training exercise, but because these troops are going to a light infantry assignment, their FTX was tailored to provide light infantry training.

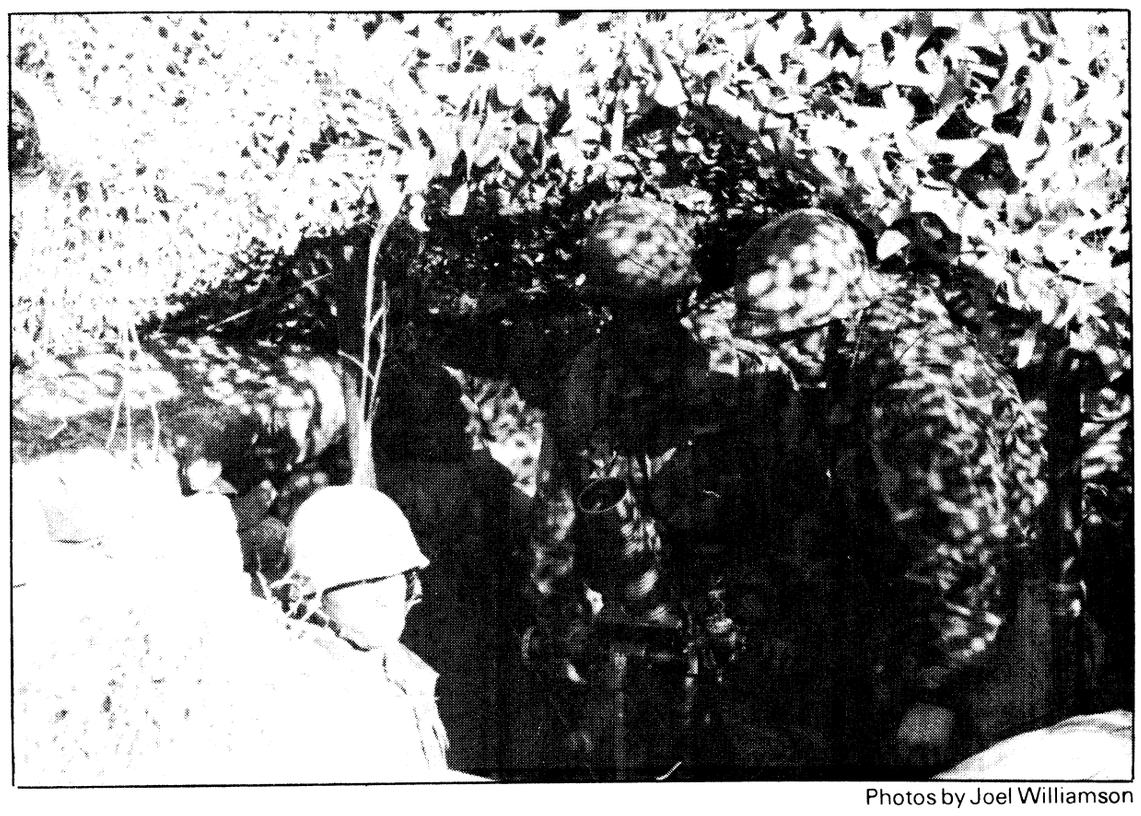
The FTX began at a staging site in the woods just east of Lawson Army Airfield. The battalion's 'mission' was to deploy to LAAF and conduct a combat air assault by C-130 Hercules Aircraft into Dekkar Airfield (a typical light infantry division air movement operation.)

The battalion deployed Companies B, D and E, along with the Battalion headquarters and occupied an assembly area east of Dekkar Landing Strip. The companies then moved to Cody Landing and conducted a river crossing operation supported by the 586th Engineers.

The Battalion staff also spent the week in the field training. Battalion operations orders were planned and issued. A Battalion Tactical Operations Center and an Administrative Logistical Center were established and controlled the exercise.

Following the river crossing, the soldiers headed out on a tactical road march.

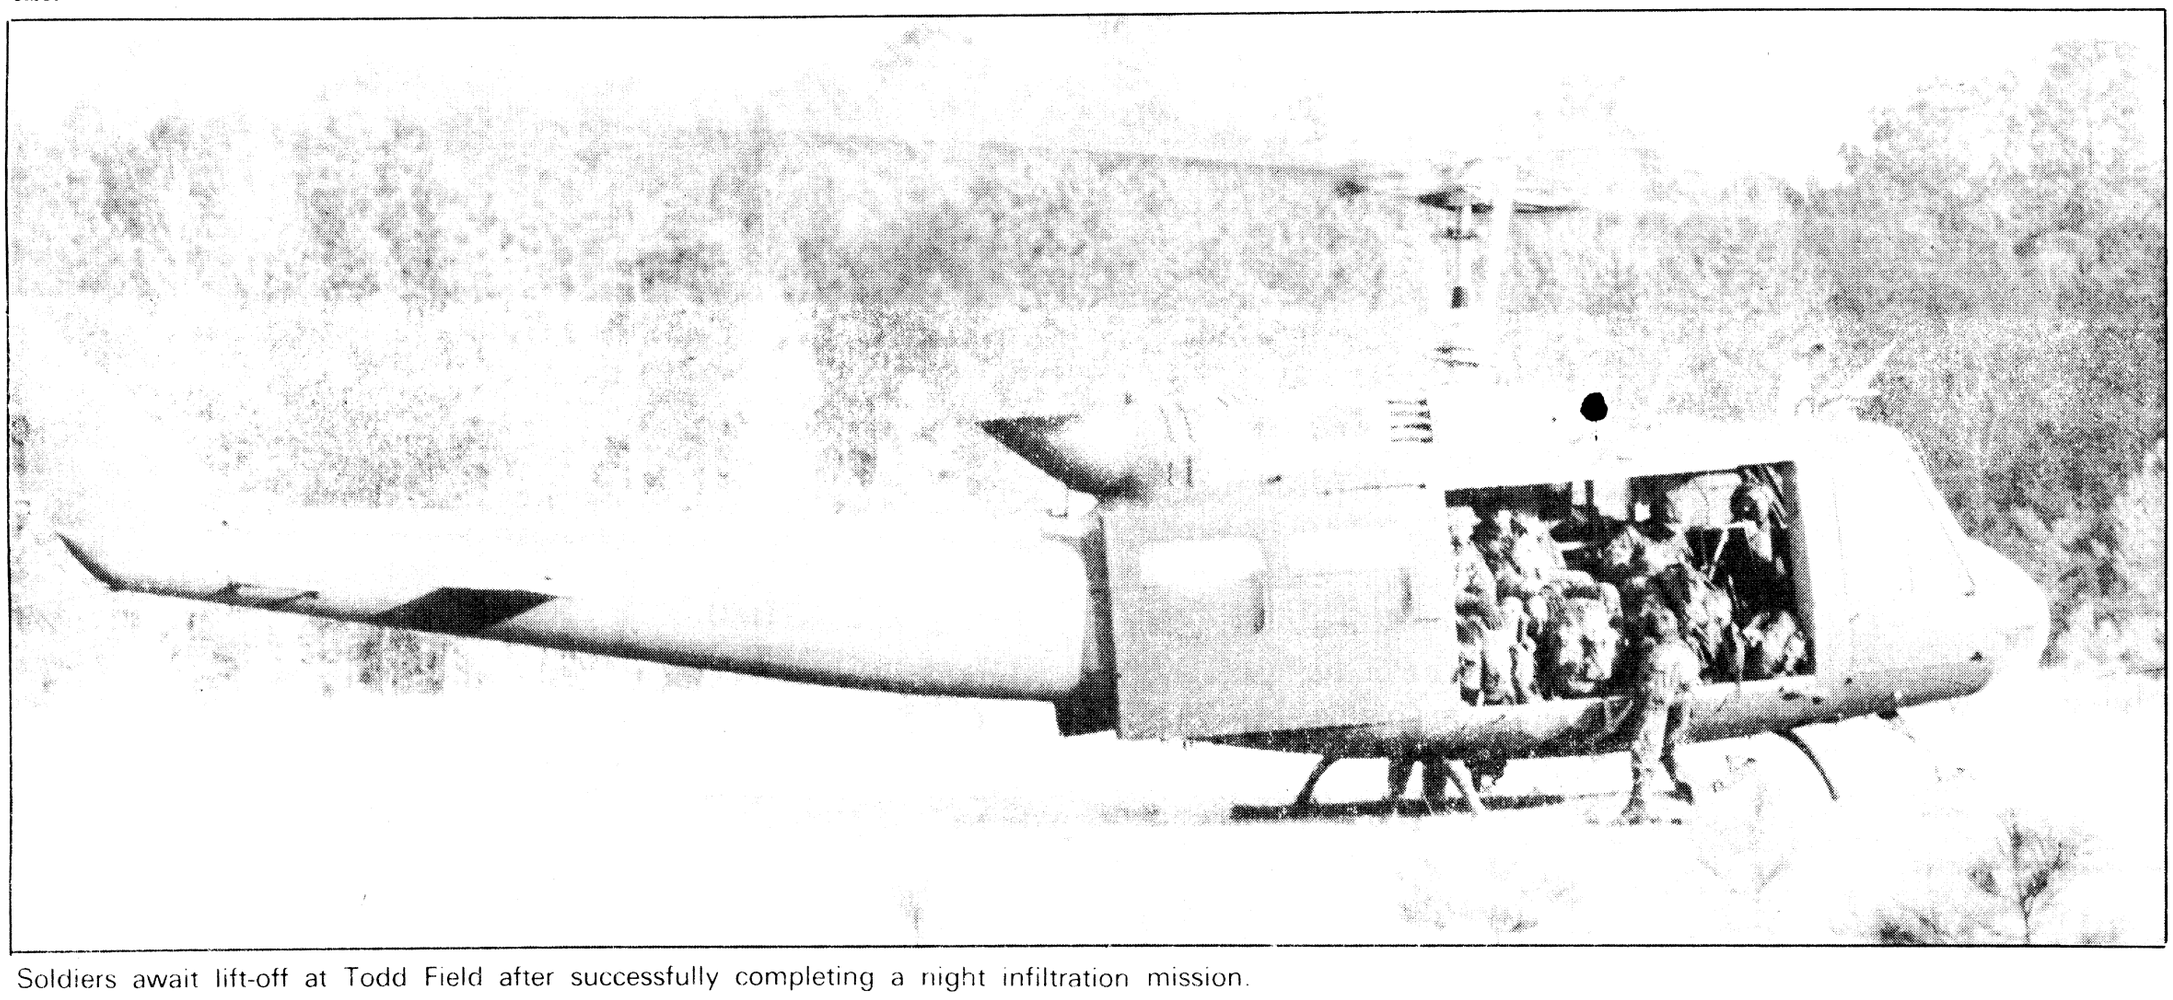
Next they dug in and waited for the enemy. Reports soon confirmed that "enemy" forces were surrounding them. Once surrounded, the 7th Battalion soldiers had to conduct an exfiltration through the enemy lines and return to friendly lines. They successfully did so during the FTX.



The soldiers said they found the FTX exciting. "I've enjoyed it and learned a lot. I would like to do more of the training," said Pvt. 1 Roy O'Daniel of Company D.

Pvt. 1 Michael Burress, also a member of Company D, said, "It's wonderful, great, a new experience. I joined the Army for adventure. I'm looking forward to Fort Drum."

"Excellent training. I like being part of a COHORT unit — I got disciplne here. I feel great and can't wait for graduation." said Pvt. 1 Noel Roa, a Company B soldier.



The week long exercise was a success for the 7th Battalion cadre as well as the soldiers. According to Capt. Jim House, Company B commander, "This exercise was not just limited to training soldiers — it trained the leaders as well since it gives everyone a refresher course on infantry skills."

After graduating on April 17, the soldiers headed home for leave before reporting to Fort Drum May 1.

ROTC cadets spend Easter honing soldiers skills

Auburn ROTC Cadet Boyd Relor searches "POW" Eric Thomas, a Fort Valley State cadet.

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

A typical Easter weekend for most people is getting dressed up, going to church and eating a special dinner. But for 200 Reserve Officer Training Corps cadets, this Easter was anything but typical.

Cadets from Auburn University, Auburn at Montgomery, Tuskegee, Columbus College and Fort Valley State University arrived at Fort Benning last weekend for two days and one night of intensive preparation for the cadet's upcoming six-week advance camp this summer.

"Our goal this weekend is to get these cadets ready for summer camp. We want to introduce them to a team work environment, develop their leadership skills, improve their land navigation skills and develop cadet interaction between different universities," said Capt. Linda Eppele, an Auburn ROTC cadre member.

Saturday, the cadets got up at 5:45 a.m. for physical training, personal hygiene and breakfast. Then the cadets, divided into two companies, road marched to their training sites one to land navigation and the other to tactical skill's lanes.

The tac lanes involved squad exercises in such scenarios as react to indirect fire, search a prisoner of war, assault an objective and react to sniper fire. Leadership positions in each squad changed for each different scenario.

"This training is interesting. It's alot like the Basic Camp, but this training will specifically prepare me for summer camp, which is pretty important," said Auburn cadet Stephanie Smith, a 21-year old economics major from Florida.

Bryan Shirley, 22, also from Auburn, said he really loved the training. "The weather's good, the scenery's beautiful and I'm enjoying the training," said the building construction major from Tennessee.

Both cadets agreed that the primary thing they were learning was how to lead and control an infantry squad.

The two companies switched training sites at noon and Saturday evening involved a night land navigation course. Sunday, the "third lieutenants" honed their leadership skills at the Leadership Reaction Course. Camp was broken at 2 p.m.

Dividend hoax plagues VA

Veteran's Administration

A GI insurance dividend hoax aimed at veterans for more than 25 years is again plaguing the Veterans Administration, this time with a new target — the Vietnam-era veteran.

The VA reports it is getting nearly 15,000 applications a week for a non-existent dividend at its Philadelphia insurance center and many of the letters are from Vietnam-era veterans. The VA operates the nation's fifth largest insurance system.

"The World War II veteran has been the principal victim of the hoax since the early 1960s," said Robert W. Carey, director of the center. "We've been telling them for years that despite what a bogus mimeographed flyer says, the VA does not pay dividends on lapsed National Service Life Insurance policies. Now we have a new generation to contend with."

The mysterious applications promise dividends "whether or not the insurance is still carried," and announce that payments for as much as several hundred dollars are due. The announcements attribute the bogus dividend to recent legislation passed by the Congress.

"There has been no such legislation," Carey said, "and there is none pending. I have no idea how these forms started, but they've been with us for years," he added.

In addition to the expense in labor and mailing costs borne by VA, thousands of inquiries are received by the agency's other 57 regional offices across the country. Most are from wary veterans seeking confirmation of the dividend. Others are irate callers who want to know what VA is doing about stamping out the erroneous information.

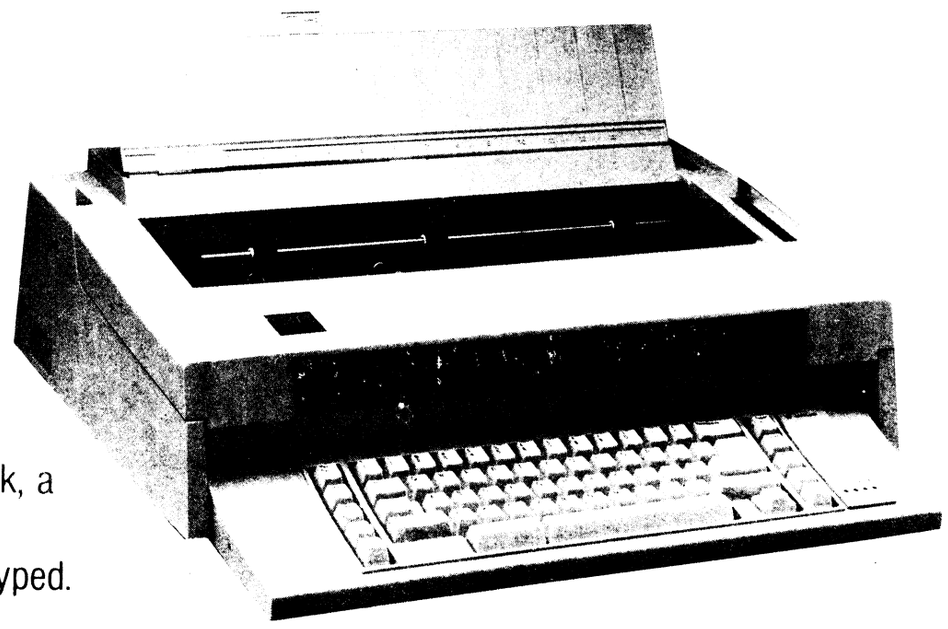
Applications are printed in well-meaning but misguided magazines, newspapers and newsletters. Contacted by the VA, editors are quick to publish retractions, but the interim periods are sometimes weeks and months.

VA's legitimate dividends are eagerly awaited each year by policyholders. More than 3 million veterans this year are sharing in an annual dividend distribution of nearly $935 million. Payments are automatic to those who continue to pay premiums, usually on the anniversary date of the policy. No application is needed.

VA Q&A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q. I am receiving Veterans Administration benefits as a full-time student under the Veterans Education Assistance Program. Am I entitled to participate in VA's work-study program?



A. Yes. Full-time students who receive VA education benefits under VEAP and under the new GI Bill-Active-Duty Educational Assistance program are eligible to participate in the VA's work-study program. Previously, only those veterans receiving benefits under VA's vocational rehabilitation or the Vietnam Era GI Bill were eligible.

Q. My mother, a veteran of the armed forces, was buried in a private cemetery and her headstone was furnished, at no cost, by the Veterans Administration. I visited her grave recently and noticed that the sone was cracked. Will the VA fix the headstone?

A. The VA will replace a previously furnished government headstone at government expense if it is cracked, broken, destroyed or otherwise made illegible. Requests for replacement of a headstone should be made in writing by a family member or other responsible person. The request should state the condition of the headstone and be sent to: Director, Monument Service (42), Veterans Administration, Washington, D.C. 20420.

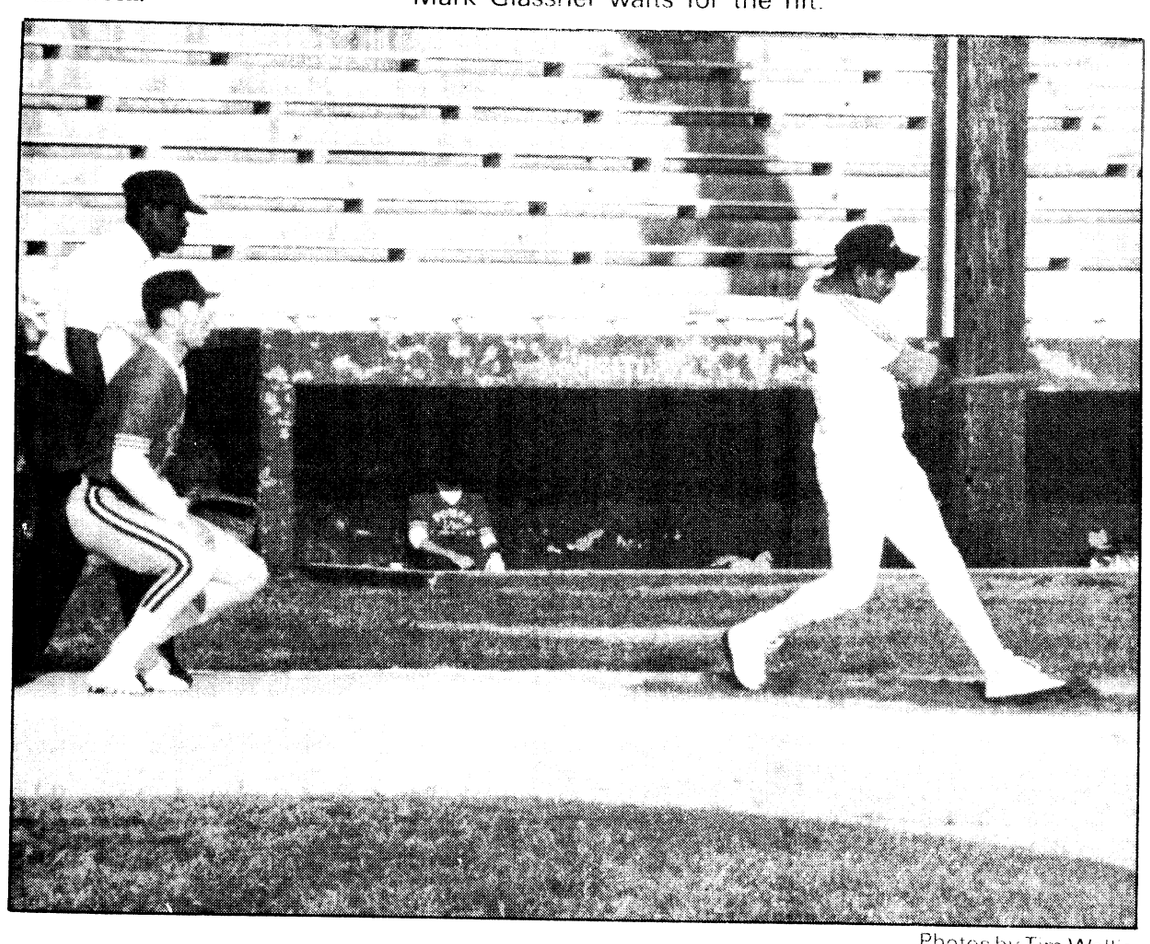
197th beats KISS FM 12-2 in softball play



By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Armor soldiers from Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, are gearing up for the softball season with scrimmage games.

From the looks of it, the team is well prepared to face the competition on post. In a recent game with a team from KISS FM Radio Station, the Company B team emerged victorious, beating the station team 12 to 2 in a nine inning game at Gowdy Field last week.

Mountain soldiers face off in volleyball action during a recent tournament. It was time for "fun in the sun" for the 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division recently as the mountain soldiers participated in their annual Battalion sports tournament. Family members watched as the soldiers of the respective companies competed in flag football, frisbee football, volleyball, softball, basketball, a 25-mile team relay, orienteering and a tug-of-war.

Post wrestler scores big in matches

USAIC Public Affairs Office

When Tony T. Thomas, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, departed Fort Benning in January, he was headed to the U.S. Olympic Team Wrestling Camp and the U.S. Army Wrestling Trials.

Since then, Thomas has successfully competed in the Army Wrestling Championships and the Interservice Championships.

In the Army Championships at Fort Campbell, Ky., March 2 and 3, Thomas took top honors in both Greco Roman and Freestlye wrestling.

Thomas claimed the Greco Roman Chimpionship by defeating Sam Stebbins of Fort Lewis, Wash., 16-0, and pinning the 1987 USAEUR champion, Eric Lewis after 2:30 into the first period.

Thomas also dominated the Freestyle championships by beating Stebbins, 15-0 and Lewis, 18-0.

It was then on to the Interservice Championships at Marther Air Force Base, Sacremento, Calif., where Thomas earned into the Silver Medal by beating Carl Bersinger of the Marine Corps, 16-1 and the Air Force's Chris Brown, 11-10, before losing to Dave Butler of the Navy, 11-4.

Thomas had his hands full when he went up against Butler, the 1985-86 National Champion and fifth ranked in the World.

"The first five minutes of the match, I led 4-2, but made some critical mistakes in the last minute, giving up eight points," Thomas said.

"This was my third lost to Butler in the last two years. Previous loses were 7-4, 4-3, and 11-4," explained Thomas.

Thomas is currently ranked fourth by the U.S. Wrestling Association, and is a favorite to make the 1988 Olympic Team.

Turkey hunters must check in

Turkey hunters at Fort Benning during the 1987 season will be required to abide by the following rules:

- They will be required to physically sign in and out of the Hunter Check Station at Harmony Church between 4 a.m. and 8 p.m., or the Uchee Creek Recreation area Bait Shop between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m., as they did during deer season.
- Hunters will be allowed to preregister at 10 a.m. the day before they hunt at either check station.
- Turkey hunters will be allowed to sign up for three hunting areas.
- Turkey hunters will be issued area and vehicle access passes, similar to those issued during deer season. The area access pass will be carried on the hunter's person while hunting, and the vehicle pass will be prominently display on the dashboard while in the field.

The season for Georgia turkey hunting runs from March 21 to May 5, while Alabama's season is from March 20 to April 30. — Hunting Office

DA announces plans to defer overseas PCS dates

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

The Department of the Army has directed deferments in permanent change of station moves for some U.S. based soldiers slated for overseas assignments.

The deferments apply to soldiers who are on orders to assignments outside continental United States long tour areas.

Soldiers who have reporting months of July through November, and are on orders for a 36-month accompanied or a 24-month unaccompanied tour, will have their arrival months involuntarily delayed.

Personnel officials estimate that more than 600 Fort Benning soldiers will be affected by the delays.

The decision by DA is one based firmly on budgetary considerations.

"Because of PCS dollar constraints, the Army will delay PCS moves from fiscal year 87 to 88," said Lt. Col. James S. Milling, post Adjutant General.

While moves through September will be delayed up to three months, soldiers originally scheduled to report in October and November will be deferred only one month.

Soldiers effected by the delays, who are authorized leave in conjuction with a PCS, will not be allowed to report to their new station before Oct. 10.

Those soldiers arriving at overseas installations before Oct. 10 will be forced to remain in leave status.

The PCS delay policy does not apply to everyone.

"The Enlisted Management Branch will screen everyone scheduled to depart Fort Benning to determine if the PCS delay policy applies or if they are an exception," Milling said.

Soldiers who have assignments to Alaska or Hawaii are exempt from the deferments, and will go on to their assignments as scheduled, he said.

According to Military Personnel Center officials, "soldiers graduating from One Station Unit Training or any initial entry training will continue to their first assignment as scheduled.

Other exceptions to the PCS delays include soldiers who are part of a "unit move," such as battalion rotations, or deploying COHORT units.

The PCS delays will not affect soldiers who are on temporary duty enroute to ANCOC or BNCOC, or for ASI, SQI or functional training specific to force modernization.

Also excluded from the delays will be soldiers on orders to the following force modernization units: APACHE, MLRS, PATRIOT and MSE.

rIn order to maintain readiness conditions in Europe, limited movement of soldiers in selected Military Occupational Specialties may be required.

"The Army will comply with the request for personnel in Europe to maintain the proper level of staffing for our NATO troop strength," Milling said.

The new policy outlined by DA will slow down PCS movement in two ways; by expanding the tour lengths in the continental United States to a 48-month goal, and by extending the tours in Europe for first term soldiers.

Under the new policy some

Civilian officials follow Army's lead on AIDS testing

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Public health officials have decided to encourage individuals seeking family planning services, prenatal care or drug treatment to be tested for AIDS. However, they do not endorse mandatory tests for them or tests for all those applying for marriage licenses or admitted to hospitals.

The officials announced their position following a recent forum on the disease sponsored by the Center for Disease Control. Air Force Lt. Col. John Herbold, a senior policy analyst for preventive medicine and health promotion with the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs, said the recommendations were in line with Department of Defense positions.

In some ways, said Herbold, civilian officials have followed the military's lead. Although AIDS screening for military members is mandatory, a precedent can be found for it in such procedures as mandatory vaccinations for military members. Both procedures are necessary to protect service members.

"We don't want to send someone with a potentially compromised immune system into field conditions in parts of the world with a high risk of endemic disease or minimal medical support. We also don't want to put infected individuals into a situation where unscreened blood transfusions may be required," Herbolt said.

Military dependents requesting certain services in the military medical system may be screened voluntarily after giving their consent. Officials at the forum recommended voluntary screening for women of child-bearing age in communities with a high rate of AIDS. DoD Health Affairs officials recommend no such distinction — that testing be offered, but not required, for any woman seeking prenatal services as a "standard of care." Under "standard of care," an individual can refuse to be tested and still receive care. AIDS testing is also the recommended standard of care for those being treated for drug abuse and sexually transmitted diseases other than AIDS.

Herbold said that media reports that the military is planning a dramatic change in its policy regarding those individuals who test positive for AIDS are overstated and that no big change is expected. "Fitness for duty will still be the primary factor determining whether an individual testing positive for the HIV (human immunodeficiency virus) antibody is retained or not. A medical board will thoroughly review the person's case before making a decision. An individual who can still perform the mission will not be discharged based on antibody positivity alone," he said.

"AIDS screening" is actually a test for the presence of the antibody to human immunodeficiency virus, which causes AIDS.

Service members confirmed to be infected with HIV receive extensive evaluation, psychological support and treatment at selected service medical treatment facilities. The military has been screening all potential recruits for HIV antibody positivity since October 1985. Between Oct. 15, 1985, and Sept. 30, 1986, 641,220 potential recruits were screened. Of these, 976 were confirmed as antibody positive by the Western blot test — an overall rate of positivity of 1.5 per 1,000 individuals, or 0.15 percent. Individuals who test positive are not accepted into the military.

Red Cross taking applications for summer program

By Becky Obert

The Fort Benning Red Cross is looking for teens to take part in its Youth Volunteer Program.

The program is open to youths ages 12 (rising seventh graders) and up, but only those 13 and older can work in the medical positions, said Maggie Siegfried, volunteer station chairman.

A volunteer position can be whatever the student wants it to be, Siegfried said. "They can work as many or as few hours as they want, it's up to them. Last year we had some teens working five days a week," she said.

Positions available include jobs as receptionists, ward clerks, helpers at the pediatrics ward and newborn nursery of Martin Army Community Hospital, as well as jobs in the library and veterinary and dental clinics.

Siegfried said the program gives young people a chance to contribute to the community in a meaningful way while helping them grow and mature.

"They also gain job skills and get a chance to explore a possible career field," she said.

Students who apply and are approved must attend an orientation session May 30, and both student and a parent must attend the screening interview.

"We do this so they will understand what we expect of them, and what they can expect of us," Siegfried said.

Application packets are available at the Red Cross office (on the corner of Vibbert and Ingersoll Streets), and the MACH Red Cross office (on the 7th floor of the hospital). Applications must be returned by May 15.

For more information, call the Red Cross at 545-5194.

DoD slashes security clearances in response to espionage cases

American Forces Information Service

The Department of Defense has cut the number of security clearances issued to government military, civilian and contractor employees by 34 percent.

The reduction, in which some clearances were administratively terminated and others downgraded, far exceeds the 10 percent cut ordered by Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger in June 1985.

Since then, DoD has eliminated or downgraded 1.4 million clearances, from 4.1 million to 2.7 million.

Top secret clearances dropped 40 percent, or 241,000. Secret clearances were cut by 30 percent, or 1.3 million. Clearances held by DoD contractors were cut 31 percent, or by 436,000.

Meanwhile, confidential clearances rose by 31.7 percent, or 102,000.

The reductions in the number and level of security clearances were directed following several espionage cases and a commission report that reviewed DoD security policies and practices.

The reductions were made, according to a DoD official, to help reduce DoD's vulnerability to espionage by those entrusted with its most sensitive information.

The reductions, he said, reflect DoD's effots "to pay more attention to security, to reduce the number of requests (for clearances), to reduce the number of people actually cleared and, of course, to take all the other actions that we've been trying to take to preserve our secrets."

OPINION

Support country; buy savings bonds

May 4 through June 12 has been set aside for Fort Benning's 1987 U.S. Savings Bond Campaign. I wholeheartedly support this effort.

A new market-based interest rate now sets yields on Series EE Bonds, held at least five years, at 85 percent of the average return of five-year Treasury securities. That rate is calculated and compounded every six months during the life of the bond and is guaranteed not to drop below 6 percent. Bonds will pay 6.06 percent from November 1986 to April 1987.

No matter what your goals — extra retirement income, college education for children, a new home — bonds can help you to reach them while helping to keep America strong. Your dreams will not come true unless you make a genuine effort to save, and U.S. Savings Bonds represent a painless and convenient way to start your own savings program.

The success of this year's campaign is contingent upon your support of the program by inittially joining he plan, or by increasing your present allotment. During the campaign, a savings bond canvasser should meet with you to afford the opportunity to sign up for payroll deductions.

I urge you to carefully consider this opportunity. A small payroll deduction today can help service your future, as well as the future of our country.

Asian / Pacific Americans contribute much to U.S.

In recognition of Asian/Pacific Americans and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, the week of May 4 through 11 is proclaimed "Asian/Pacific Heritage Week" at Fort Benning, Ga.

This year's theme is "Asian/Pacific Americans: Striving for Equality," and marks the ninth anniversary of this observance.

Asian/Pacific Americans have contributed to a wealth of accomplishments in all facets of American life.

Of particular note in the history of the U.S. Army are PFC Herbert K. Pililaau, 2nd Infantry Division,Cpl. Hiroshi H. Miyamura, 193rd Airborne Brigade,and Sergeant Rodney J. Yano, 11th Armored Calvary Regiment, who received Congressional Medals of Honor for conspicuous gallantry and heroism in combat action during the Vietnam Conflict.

They are among a long and distinguished line of Asian/Pacific soldiers who have been committed to the values that made this nation strong. The many Asian/Pacific cultures are remarkable and very much a part of our society.

All personnel on Fort Benning and in surrounding communities are encouraged to participate in the observance through the planned activities by units, staff, and other agencies.

Webster's New World Dictionary defines freedom as "being able to act freely." We define freedom as the Constitution. The Constitution is what America is all about.

In America, freedom rings as clearly as the Liberty Bell. We can vote, worship as we choose, voice our own opinions, dress in our own style and enjoy life freely.

Without the Constitution, we would not be able to have these privileges that so many of us take for granted as Americans.

The eagle is a symbol of American freedom and what our Constitution stands for. The eagle is free to soar across the beautiful snow-capped mountains of the Rockies or the beautiful painted desert of Arizona. But what if we were to take that eagle and lock it up in a cage?

It would no longer be able to hear the wind whistle in the trees of see the sun as it sets across the sky. It would not be able to choose its own prey or shriek in the night. Could you imagine being that eagle? Existing from day to day on what others feed it? No longer would the eagle have the freedom to roam wild.

To us that is what it would be like without the Constitution. We would be caged eagles no longer free to fly and explore the universe. Because we are Americans the Constitution was established by our forefathers.

The cage was open and we are able to fly free.

"We the People" is about the sacrifices Americans endured during the early years of America's development. It is a stepping stone to understanding our government.

The sacrifices early Americans made are unforgettable. Our sacrifices will never equal theirs. They sacrificed their families, fortunes and lives so that freedom might be obtained.

Though many people take it for granted, the Constitution is our most prized possession. The Preamble to the Constitution states "We the People of the United States."

This statement shows the document was written by people to be acknowledged and used by people, and to be supported and protected by people. It embodies the dream and desires of past, present and future generations of Americans.

It summarizes in three words the whole point of the Constitution. It is a document of the people, by the people and for the people. The Constitution is a very important part of our governmental system and our strong belief in freedom.

It is the cornerstone of our country. Upon this document, that is fragile in years, but strong in character, is the hope and dreams of the world. Our Constitution is a beacon of hope with quarantees to all people, in all races.

As it stands the test of time, the Constitution will continue to declare that freedom can be obtained. However, that responsibility entails protecting these rights held so preciously.

The Constitution guards our nation from destruction. From the dreams of people like Madison, Adams and Jefferson to the reality of people like Eisenhower, Kennedy and Reagan, will come a strong nation bound to ideas and principals represented in the Constitution.

Baseball, hot dogs, and apple pie. For many years these words have represented the ideals of America. But there is something else that represents Americas ideals. Something besides the Declaration of Independence. Something besies the Statue of Liberty. There is the Constitution of the United States of America.

The Constitution of which I speak is the basic set of laws that governs our country. The Constitution began as a set of seven basic laws which were called the Articles of Confederation. This document later evolved into our original Constitution. The original Constitution also has seven basic parts. These parts, or sections, are thoroughly explained by many subdivisions.

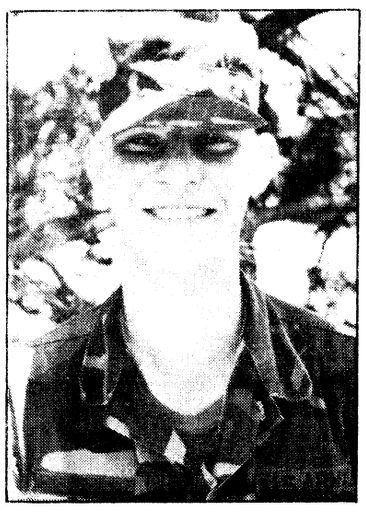
The Constitution has also been changed over the years. These changes are known as amendments and are voted on by our congress. If passed by congress they must then be ratified by the states.

The first ten amendments are called the Bill of Rights. All ten of these amendments protect the most basic rights of an American. These were all passed in 1891.

There are sixteen other amendments in addition to the Bill of Rights. All of these were passed and ratified between 1898 and 1971. There will probably be additional amendments needed as our country grows and prospers.

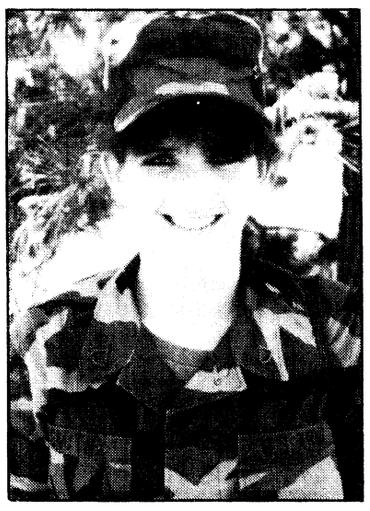
The amendments were created to change parts of the Constitution so it would better suit the needs of our country as it grew and prospered. Many amendments have been the end result of war, the amendment being created to right the wrongs of war. Many civil rights amendments have also been passed opening the way for interracial activity in America. Other amendments have been passed to modify amendments passed before.

At the very beginning of the Constitution there is a short paragraph explaining our reasons for the Constitution. It begins with, "We the People of the United States of America . . ." and continues on to give reasons for the creation of the Constitution.



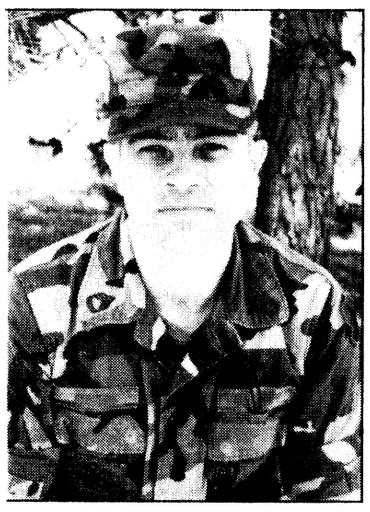
According to the preamble, the Constitution was created for the purpose of binding the states closer together than they were under the Articles of Confederation, to see that everyone receives fair treatment from our nations courts, to keep peace within the country and to protect our liberty and freedom of those many generations in the future.

So you can see, the Constitution is a great document ensuring peace, justice, and liberty for more than two hundred years. It has bound our country together and enabled us to have relationships with other countries, both hostile and friendly.

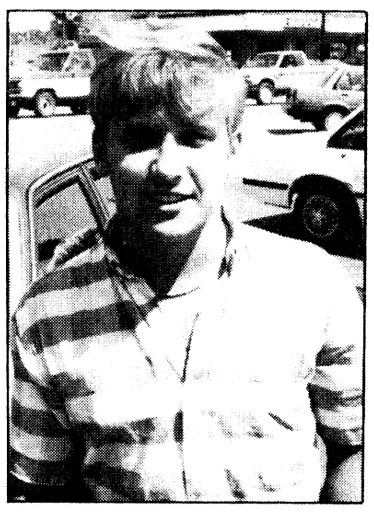


The Constitution has given us the power not only to be a major world leader but a world friend as well.

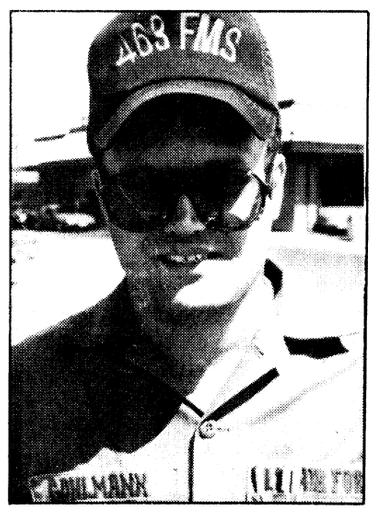
Third place winner Chris Looney is a member of Mrs. Hughey's eighth grade class. His parents are Lt. Col. Victor and Carolyn Looney.



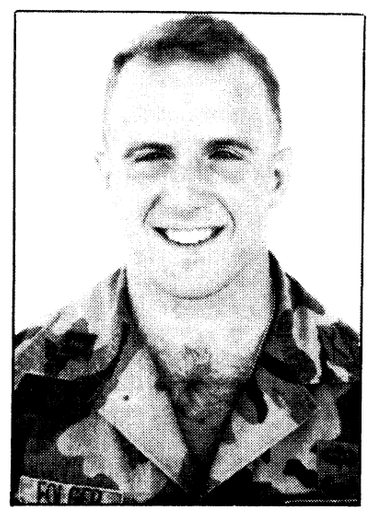
VARIOUS VOICES/What do you think about changing the Constitution?



Pvt. Randall Rossbach, Company C, 1/507th PIR, - "I think we need to straighten out the problems we have in modern day society before we start fooling with the Constitution. I do think we ought to cut out the loopholes, a lot of people try to go in between. Until we can attempt to abide by our present Constitution, we don't need to mess with it."



PFC Julie Smith, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, - "I really do not think it is a good idea. I think it should stay the same. The original writers pretty much covered everything then. In my opinion it does meet our modern-day needs. It depends on how you perceive it.



SFC Boyd Powers, Company C, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, - "I think it does need to be changed or at least looked through to see what is too old and does not pertain to us. In my opinion it was written in the 1700s for the people of that era and it met there needs fine. I feel there are a lot of things that need to be molded into modern day needs."

SP4 Robert Hibert, Headquarters and Headquarters Detatchment, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade, - "I don't think it should be changed. Why have a document like that if you are going to keep changing it? It takes the value out of it if you can change it — why have a Constitution at all."

SSgt. Paul Gohlmann, Dias Air Force Base, Abilene, Texas, - "I think it's a good idea. The Constitution is outdated and times have changed. 200 years is a long time for something written down to still be viable."

Capt. David Folger, 12th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "I think it should remain the same. As a matter of fact I think we may be getting away from the basic tenets laid down by our founding fathers. People want legislation for everything and you don't need that."

Course teaches soldiers how to penetrate enemy lines

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

War has broken out in Europe. The Warsaw Pact has come across the borders of the West and their forces are fighting to break through.

Amid the confusion and chaos, a U.S. Army division commander desperately needs up-to-date intelligence on what the enemy is bringing up to continue their attack. He notifies a six-man team which quickly moves out, making an airborne drop 50-kilometers behind enemy lines.

Setting up a secure surveillence site, the team begins to quietly and methodically feed back information on enemy vehicles, weaponry and units. Based on this tactical intelligence, the division commander is able to formulate a successful plan of action to defeat the enemy he faces. The six-man Long Range Surveillence Unit has suc ceeded.

The Long Range Surveillance Course being taught by Benning's Ranger Department is designed to train such teams.

The course i filling a void in Army intelligence gathering, according to Maj. Harvey Latson, the LRSU Course Branch Chief.

"The Army got out of human intelligence collection after the Vietnam War," he said. "The mind-set seemed to be that the next war would be a mid- or high-intensity conflict, unlike the low-intensity of the Vietnam War.

For this reason, the thinking was that needed information could be collected electronically, he said. "We've since learned that we need all of it, both human and otherwise. That's the reason for LRSU,"he said.

Until now, the Army's primary source of combat intelligence during a conflict would be provided by Special Forces Reconnaissance Units, who would operate 200-kilometers and beyond behind enemy lines, and provide strategic information.

"We needed to cover the void between the forward edge of the battle area and out to 200-kilometers. LRSU, which will provide tactical intelligence, fills that void," Latson said.

The 35-day course, which has graduated 140 soldiers since its inception in October, focuses on four primary areas.

"This course teaches soldiers static surveillence, reconnaissance, target acquisition and damage assessment, concentrating on static surveillence," said Capt. Rick Gibbs, LRSU's operation's officer.

Students learn intelligence gathering tachniques, Soviet and third world order of battle, communications, survival, long-range land navigation and patrolling.

"The toughest part of the course for the students seems to be the first two weeks, where they are hit fast and furious with order of battle information and communications," Gibbs said.

Students must quickly absorb information on identifying Soviet and third world vehicles, weapons and uniform insignia. The communication's equipment is new to most students and presents additional information to be learned.

"Our commo training is way beyond what most soldiers have received," said SSgt. Kent Bailey, a LRSU communication's instructor. "We go into antenna theory, choosing a proper radio frequency, making and utilizing field expedient antennas and using the PRC-70 radio with the Digital Message Device Group."

The DMDG looks like a small typewriter. A message is typed in and then sent in a short burst all at once, providing much more security for the sender by reducing the length of each transmission. According to Bailey, the DMDG can send 1,000 characters in 13 seconds, making it difficult for the enemy to locate the DMDG operator.

Being able to get the intelligence to send is the reason for all of the preparation and training.

"It takes a special type of guy to work in a LRSU Detachment," says Sgt. Bill Wilkerson, a LRSU instructor. "He has to like working in a small, six-man team and he has to be able to bear up under a tremendous amount of pressure."

Wilkerson knows of what he speaks. The tall, weathered-looking NCO spent three years with the forerunner of LRSU, the Long Range Reconnaissance Patrol, in combat during the Vietnam War.

"When a recon team gets in place behind enemy lines, the pressure builds from two sources; the enemy and from your own unit," Wilkerson said. "When conducting surveillence, you have to be almost completely quiet and there can be very little movement.

"This creates pressure, having the enemy around you and you having to keep quiet and just observe. There is also pressure created knowing that the intelligence you're sending back will impact on tactical decisions being made by commanders. It's a big responsibility," he said.

He said it is sometimes tough teaching the LRSU students that their job is to gather intelligence, not to make contact and fight.

"The LRRPs had a direct action capability, like ambushes or knocking out a bridge," Wilkerson said. "LRSU, however, is strictly an intelligence gathering team. Getting the intel and getting out undetected spells a successful mission," Wilkerson said.

Wilkerson was with a four-man student LRSU team serving as the "walker," or evaluator/teacher of the team. The students were "cammied up" and motivated, despite the fact that they had been moving all night to get to their present surveillence site.

"We're from a Long Range Reconnaissance Unit from the 425th Infantry, Michigan National Guard. Even though we've been using a lot of this commo equipment and have been involved in a lot of this training before, I know I've picked up a lot. The order of battle training was top-notch and something all of us needed," SSgt. Ron Hamden said, who, with three student team members, was on his final field training exercise.

SSgt. Charles Surmacz, another student, said he was learning a lot from the hands-on training.

"Being with instructors like Sgt. Wilkerson allows all of us to pick up effective techniques not necessarily found in field manuals," he said. "It's things like how to move, observation techniques, how to carefully select equipment; practical, commonsense things that you just don't know unless you have experience."

Wilkerson pointed to a bulging rucksack and made the point that "You're on your own when your LRSU team is dropped behind enemylines. There isn't any resupply, there isn't any contact with friendly soldiers, what you have is what you carry," he said. "That means they have to have more ammunition, more water, more everything. Rucksacks for a mission, including commo gear, weigh in excess of 110 to 120 pounds." The heart of the LRSU Course centers around five field training exercises which build on specific skills, culminating in an all-encompassing exercise.

"We stress that, while there is no harassment, this is not a gentlemen's course. The days are long and tough. The students go on a five-day survival exercise, a five-day long-range land navigation exercise, a five-day communication's exercise involving an airborne insertion and the final eight-day LRSU mission, where the students put everything they've learned together," Gibbs said.

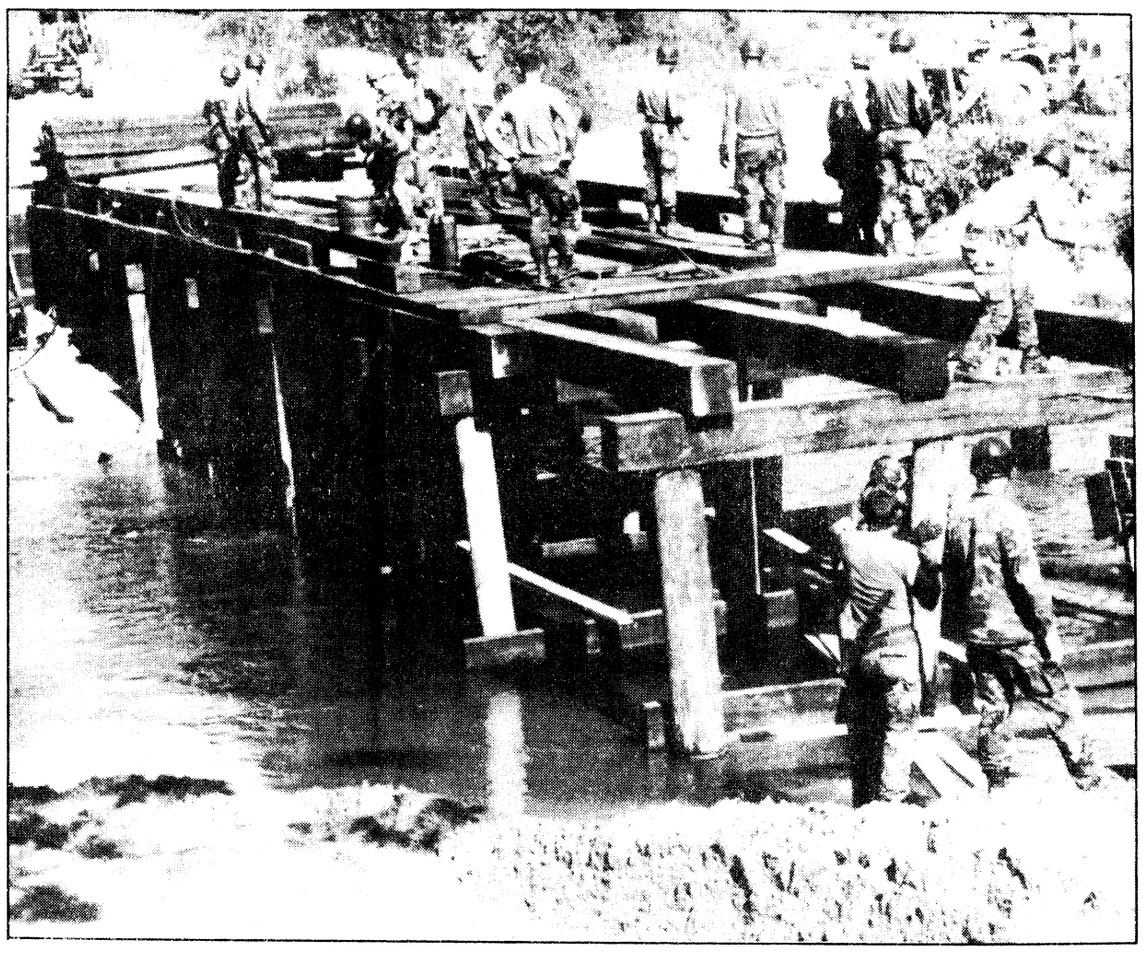
Engineers bridge the gap during FTX

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engr. Gp. correspondent

Soldiers from Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, put their skills to the test during the battalion's latest field training exercise as the company tackled several constructions projects.

According to 1st Lt. Aniello Tortora, approximately 50 Company C soldiers worked 24 hours a day for three days straight on the biggest of the projects. Tortora, officer in charge of the project,said the soldiers built a timber tressel bridge at the Caramouche Range on post. The bridge construction involved several crews and alternating shifts of soldiers in order to complete it on time, Tortora said.



"We brought the equipment in April 24 and began bridging Upatoi Creek right away," he said. According to Tortora, the biggest problem in building the bridge was the fact that many of the support piles could not be easily driven through the creek bed due to concrete that had been laid there many years ago. The project also required building a road to and from the bridge with the company's scrapers and graders.

Tortora noted that organization was the key to successfully completing the bridge and therefore the soldiers were divided into four crews. "One crew was in charge of driving the support piles into the ground with a crane, while another of the crews was responsible for bracing the superstructure that two other crews had constructed," Tortora said. "The road to and from the bridge was constructed by a fifth crew." The fastest way to build the bridge was to have soldiers from each of the crews working 24 hours on a rotation schedule Tortora said.

The bridge was built so that the range workers could have quicker access to the back half of the range,which is divided by the creek. Without the bridge, the range personnel had to drive 45 minutes out of the way in order to maintain the range, Lt. Tortora said.

The second of the company's projects was kind of a follow-up to a project that was completed by the earth-moving platoon in 1986, according to SSgt. Anibal Barrow, noncommissioned officer in charge of the project. The platoon used its scrapers, graders, dozers, high-speed compactors, water-spreading trucks and vibratory rollers to construct a taxi lane and warm-up apron for the McKenna Airstrip on post.

"We strated the project April 24 and finished it April 27. Ten soldiers worked in shifts 24 hours each day of the job," Barros said. According to Barros, more than 10,000 scraper loads were dropped to fill in the ditch beside the airstrip in order to construct the taxi lane for airplanes landing at McKenna.

Barros said that different colored chemical lights were used to guide and manuever the heavy-duty vehicles at night.

"The reason we worked 24 hours a day during this project was to give the NCOs a chance to test their leadership abilities on a project that involves working in shifts and stresses organization, as well as giving the soldiers the valuable experience," he said.

The third project that Company C soldiers completed was the destruction of building 2520 near the Airborne barracks on post. The soldiers used a crawler crane with wrecking ball and 2 ½ yard scoop loaders to knock down and roll over the old building, according to Sgt. Carl Johnson, NCOIC of the project. Johnson said that building 2519 will be destroyed by the Company C soldiers at a later date.

197th Infantry

The 197th Infantry Brigade recently acquired a lighter and more maneuverable weapon that will increase the effectiveness of the soldier on the battlefield.

Infantry line companies added new Squad Automatic Weapons to their arms room inventory, in addition to individual and crew served weapons such as the M16 and M60 machine gun.

Sp4 Todd Kerlin, armorer for Company C, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, compared the SAW to the M60 machine gun, noting that it is about 10 pounds lighter and can be operated by one man instead of two.

"The weight makes a big difference," Kerlin added. "It takes two men to operate an M60 machine gun or to carry it on a long road march."

Kerlin explained that the SAW can easily fire 725 rounds per minute. Cleaning tools are stored in the hand guard and the pistol grip, enabling soldiers to maintain the weapons while in the field.

"This is the best thing the Army has come out with in an automatic weapon." Kerlin said. "Everyone here has been anxious to handle the SAWs; they stop by the arms room to check them out."

But the soldiers won't get any hands on training with the SAWs until sometime in May. First there will be familiarization training and then qualification for those soldiers who will be SAW operators. — George Mingee, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Reserves

The officers and soldiers of the 91st Training Group, 91st Division (Training) from Camp Parks, Calif., are at Fort Benning, for a period of intensive training under the guidance of 29th Infantry Regiment.

This organization, commanded by Col. Brian J. O'Connor, consists of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Tactics, Light Weapons, Heavy Weapons Committees. Its mission will be to increase its mobilization readiness posture, and learn as much as possible from regiment personnel.

If you see soldiers around wearing the Fir Tree Patch you will be seeing a soldier of the 91st Division (Tng) and, more than likely, this soldier will be a member of the 91st Training Group.

The 91st Division was first formed in August 1917. It served in France during WWI winning streamers for the Lorraine, Meuse-Argoe and Ypres-Lys campaigns. The Division again saw combat in World War II and was awarded battle streamers for Rome-Arno, Northern Appennines and the Po Valley campaigns.

The Division was reorganized into a Training Division of the U.S. Army Reserve 1959. We are Infantry and proud to be at the Home of Infantry. Our members have served in WWI, Korea, Vietnam, and other interesting places that soldiers sometimes find themselves.

While most of us are reservists in terms of a part-time commitment, we also have full-time members assigned. None of us are part-time in our attitude and our commitment to the Army.

While at Fort Benning, we can be contacted through our host unit, the 29th Infantry Regiment, 544-6864. — 91st Division

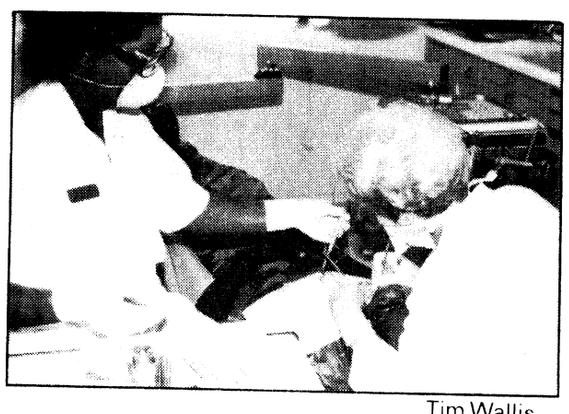
Total fitness of soldiers requires much more than physical training, nutrition and an annual flu shot. Another important preventive measure for fitness is regular dental care.

The dentists and staff of Fort Benning's Dental Clinic Number 3 are devoted to maintaining dental fitness for 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers. On an average day, more than 100 soldiers are seen by the dental clinic staff for routine care, cleaning of teeth, x-rays and dental sick call for emergency problems.

Lt. Col. Mark Johnson, chief clinician of the clinic, explained that the clinic provides an oral health fitness program that begins when a soldier inprocesses into a unit and continues with annual dental check-ups and cleaning until the soldier leaves the brigade.



"We have found from experience that dental problems, such as gum disease or toothache, can make a soldier be of no use to his commander," Johnson said. "We ensure that soldiers are kept at a state of readiness from a dental standpoint and the support from commanders here has been good."

The dental clinic's central location on Kelley Hill also contributes to the brigade's successful dental hygiene programs. Soldiers can be seen for dental care and return to their units to continue their duty day.

The clinic is equipped and the staff trained to handle nearly all types of preventive and general dentistry and specialty care, such as root canals.

"Because we are so productive, we always have state-of-the-art equipment available," Johnson added. "We can do nearly all types of dental work right here, so it isn't necessary to refer soldiers to other clinics for care."

The clinic helps the 197th Infantry Brigade meet the mission requirement for combat readiness, at least from a dental standpoint, and the soldiers on Kelley Hill benefit from having convenient and quality dental care available within their place of duty. — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Donating blood one way you can help out buddies in need

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Martin Army Hospital wants your blood! But, don't despair they only want a pint.

According to Maj. James Hawkins, Laboratory Manager at MACH, the blood bank is not suffering from a critical shortage, but they are always looking for donors to support them.

"We do not receive blood through the Red Cross," Hawkins said, "The blood bank is supported soley from donations within the Fort Benning Community."

"We accept donations in our lab all through the week," he said, "with the exception of Wednesdays from 8:30 a.m. until noon when our mobile team is out at one of the various units."

"The units are notified way ahead of time," Hawkins said, "to insure that the soldiers are aware that we will be there."

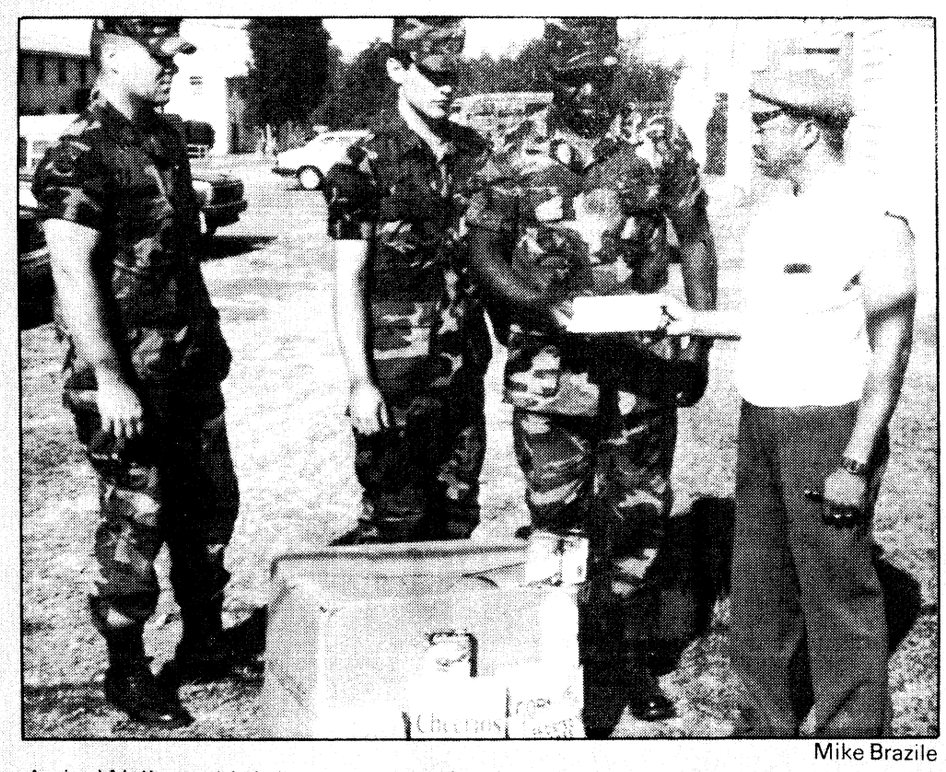
Each unit of blood recieved is put through a battery of tests to check for infectious diseases. If the unit of blood is safe it is broken down into its components to meet individual patient needs, red blood cells, plasma and platelets.

"So in actuality," Hawkins said "we are helping 2.2 patients every time a person donates blood."

The hospital gets approximately 150 units of blood per week from donations,Hawkins said.

"With those donations, we keep our blood bank at full strength," he said. "We also send some to Fort Gordon, and if the occasion arises,we give some to the local hospitals."

MACH can also credit transfers of blood to different blood banks if a person you know or are related to needs blood," Hawkins said, "but, we can only do that if all the criteria involved in the donation is met."



"We have one instance where a sister of a 10th Mountain Division soldier needed blood," he said, "so we conducted a blood drive just for that."

We collected over a 100 units," he said "which went a long way to help that girl."

He said a person who is going through elective surgery can donate their own blood beforehand if they wish.

"Some misconceptions people have about giving blood," Hawkins said, "are that it is harmful to your body or that they might catch some infectous disease."

"Neither is true; giving blood stimulates your body and increases bone marrow activity," he said, " all the equipment we use is disposable so each time we draw blood it is completely sterile."

ACS Food Locker needs donations

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

PFC Joe Smith's father passes away and he has to fly home for the funeral. When he gets back to Fort Benning, he's out of money and needs food for his wife and son. What will they do?

Mary Jones' soldier-husband is in Korea. She is at Fort Benning and overspends her budget. She has no money to buy groceries for her children. Where does she go for help?

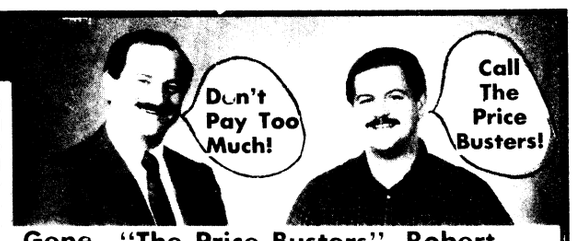
Artis Wallace, the director of Army Community Service's Food Locker, helps Fort Benning people like those above.

"Someone in need of food can come here, show us an ID card and we'll give them food," Wallace said.

There are controls to keep people from abusing the system. All those asking for help must present a valid military ID. If a single soldier applies he cannot be living in the barracks. Additionally, a card is kept on each person receiving assistance to ensure that the person is not consistently coming back for help. "We're here to help a family with food for three or four days. We always ask them what they will do after this food supply runs out and, if they need additional assistance, we send them to Army Emergency Relief to inquire about a loan or to budget counseling," he said.

All of the food at the locker, located at Building 2634 in Splinter Village, is non-perishable. The food available includes such items as canned meat, soup, vegetables and fruit and dry goods, such as powdered milk, Kool-Aid, cereal, rice and beans.

"Our food is not fancy but it allows the needy to prepare a decent meal for breakfast, lunch or supper," Wallace said.



The food comes from donations by Fort Benning units, individuals, the commissary and from purchases from the commissary with ACS funds.

Wallace said the food locker is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Food donations are always welcome, he said.

For more information on the ACS Food Locker, call 545-5516 or 545-4357.

Off-limits list names facilities to be avoided

Provost Marshal's Office

Now that warm weather is back and summertime is near, people are becoming more recreationally active.

Whether you are sunbathing on the rocks of Flatrock Park or jogging at Cooper Creek, remember that there are areas which have restrictions. For example, all parks are off-limits after dark, and alcohol is not allowed at any time.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

The Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board decides if a facility should be placed off-limits because of safety hazards (such as gravel pits) or because, in the past, a particular business place has demonstrated unfair practices because of race, religion, or sex of soldiers.

Listed below are facilities that are off-limits to military personnel:

Columbus, Ga.

Bus Stop Inn (no name posted on building), 614 Eighth Street; 12th Street Country, 518 12th Street (Formerly Moving On Club); Abandoned Rock Quarry, owned by CSM Corporation and located approximately 1,000 meters to the north of and to the rear of Bobby's Place Too, 7501 River Road, (Formerly Green Valley Club), off River Road; Smitty's Lounge, 3103 Baker Circle

Phenix City, Ala.

Richardson Lounge, 102 Seale Road

Protect yourself from fraud by guarding cards

Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I just received my first major credit card. What do I need to know to protect myself from fraud?

A: Credit card fraud costs an estimated $500 million a year, so your concerns are well justified. The first thing you need to do is to write down the account number and the company's address and phone number so that you can contact them if your card is lost or stolen.

You should do this for every card that you have, and you should keep this list in a safe place. Secondly, it is a good idea to carry your cards separately from your wallet.

When you use your card, try to keep it in view whenever you give it to the clerk. Some dishonest clerks have been known to make blank imprints of a card, which they later fill in with their own purchases. Also, be sure to keep the carbon copies that come with the receipts. Thieves may find these later in the company's trash and use them to learn your number and your signature.

Finally, never give your account number over the phone unless you were the person who made the call. Several people have been victims of a scheme where the caller promises you a free gift or a prize if you provide them with your number and the expiration date. Of course, the gift never arrives, but the caller uses the information which you gave him to order things for himself.

Remember to report any questionable charges that appear on your monthly statement to the company as soon as possible. If you call to report the problem, be sure to follow up with a letter and keep a copy for your own records. You may need to prove that you tried to resolve the situation later on.

Q: I have been living with my girlfriend for three years. We have one child together, now a year old. When we moved into an off-post trailer park, we signed as husband and wife, so there wouldn't be any trouble. We have a joint checking account that says Mr. and Mrs. Yesterday, my girlfriend told me to get an ID card for her, because in Georgia, we were common-law man and wife. I told her that you had to live together for seven years before you had a common law marriage. Tell her I'm right.

Q: You're wrong. In Georgia, common law marriage only requires that you live together as man and wife, you hold yourself out to the world as man and wife, and, if you two had wanted to, you would have been able to get a license. Three years, (or even three months) might be long enough.

You have set up joint bank accounts and rented a trailor as man and wife. You have a child together. You have, in effect, asked the state of Georgia to treat you as man and wife.

You may well be deemed to be married by the state because of that. Once you are married, even by common law, you need a formal divorce to break up. There is no such thing as a common law divorce.

However, even if you are, in fact, legally man and wife, you will need to convince the United States Army Finance and Accounting Center in Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., before you can get the lady in question an ID card.

You won't get BAQ at the with dependent's rate, without some kind of official determination, either. Addititionally, the child is left in a precarious position — does he have a legal father or not? You need to see a legal assistance attorney, because you've got some important decisions to make.

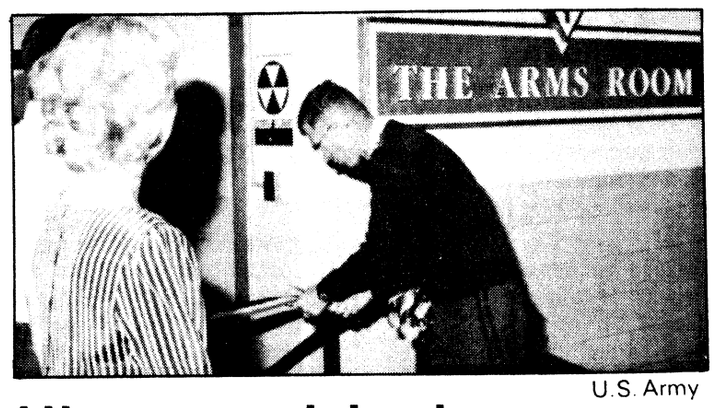
Soviets continue to deploy weapons

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service



Despite the Soviet Union's recently renewed interest in arms control, its production of newer, more lethal strategic nuclear weapons continues. But that's not all. Last year, the Soviet Union built and deployed new generations of conventional land, sea and air forces and strategic defense forces.

Details of these developments are contained in Soviet Military Power 1987. The newly released book, the sixth edition to be published by the Department of Defense since 1981, provides a detailed account of Soviet military capabilities and trends within the Soviet military.

The United States and other Western nations have always relied on superior technology to combat the large Soviet advantage in numbers of troops and weapons. But each year, said Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger, "we confront a more technologically advanced Soviet Union, which has been aided by theft and legal acquisition of Western technology and growing sophistication of the USSR's own scientific knowledge."

That increased knowledge, together with acquisition of Western technology, has enabled the Soviet Union to make great strides in the deployment of nuclear and conventional forces. Some of the more noteworthy Soviet military efforts for 1986:

- The newest class of strategic ballistic-missile submarine (the Delta IV) is about to deploy on its first operational mission with 16 of the latest submarine-launched ballistic missiles (SSN-23s), each with 10 nuclear warheads.
- There are now 100 launchers for the SS-25, a fifth-generation, mobile, intercontinental ballistic missile.
- Rail support facilities continue to take shape in preparation for the imminent deployment of a new rail-mobile SS-X-24 intercontinental ballistic missile. The size of Peacekeeper, this ICBM will have 10 independently targetable nuclear warheads.
- Even with 441 SS-20 longer-range, intermediate-range nuclear force missile launchers already deployed, the Soviets are test-firing an even more accurate version of the same missile. It could become operational this year.
- Additional new-generation, supersonic Blackjack bombers are now undergoing flight testing, and more than 50 Bear H strategic bombers are now fitted with new, long-range, nuclear-capable AS-15 air-launched cruise missiles.

History revisited

The Arms Room, located in Infantry Hall, was recently dedicated by Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba, post commander. The room depicts the infantry brigade and battalion commanders of the Active Army, Army Reserve and National Guard. It also houses the histories of the Active Army and National Guard Infantry Divisions.

New book details Allies' response to arms buildup

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

Soviet Union military power increased last year — a fact detailed in Soviet Military Power 1987, which has just been released.

The other side of that coin: accomplishments by the United States and its allies in meeting the increased threat from the Soviets and their surrogates.

The book provides an overview of U.S. defense policy and strategy that has been developed to deter those who have aggressive designs on the United States or its interests.

"U.S. defense policy is guided by the necessity to maintain nuclear deterrence while pursuing research into strategic defenses," states the report. "It seeks to maintain deterrence against conventional attacks while combating the more ambiguous forms of aggression characteristic of low-intensity conflict."

Significant improvements in the U.S strategic nuclear deterrent have begun to be made in the last six years, according to the report. This has been achieved by the deployment of new Peacekeeper intercontinental ballistic missiles, new Trident submarines, air-launched cruise missiles on 130 B-52 bombers and the B-1B bomber. Command, control and communications systems have also been improved, adding to stability by making them more survivable and therefore less attractive targets.

Work continues on the Strategic Defense Initiative to determine whether advanced defensive technologies exist that could be deployed to effectively guard against ballistic missile attack. "We will continue to try to convince the USSR to join us in working out a stable transition toward this realistic, achievable goal," notes the report. Moreover, it adds, "The SDI program is being conducted in a manner fully consistent with U.S. obligations under the ABM Treaty."

U.S. conventional forces have been strengthened with the addition of major new systems in each service.

The Army's M-1A1 tank, M-203 Bradley Fighting Vehicle and AH-64 Apache anti-tank helicopter are three examples of modern systems now entering the Army inventory.

The Navy is expected to attain its goal of 600 ships by the end of fiscal 1989. In addition, a 14th aircraft carrier has been deployed and a 15th will follow by the end of the decade. Three battleships have been activated and a fourth will join the fleet in 1988. The attack-submarine force has been modernized through the addition of Los Angeles-class SSN-688 submarines, up from 10 in 1980 to 36 today.

The Air Force continues to add F-15 and F-16 aircraft to its inventories, and DoD is ready to fund advance procurement of the Air Force advanced tactical fighter beginning in fiscal 1992. An increase of 10 percent has been achieved during the last seven years in the overall U.S. fighter/attack force structure.

The Marine Corps MV-22 Osprey holds promise as an advanced tilt-rotor aircraft to perform assault transport missions faster and with greater range than current aircraft.

The report states that "our force objective is to attain a fully modernized, sustainable, deployable, and ready 28-division Army, as well as a four-division Marine Corps manned with quality personnel."

GETTING OUT? YOUR ARMY BENEFITS CAN BE MORE THAN MEMORIES.

It's probably hard to say what you'll miss most about the Army if you've decided to return to civilian life. For some, it's the camaraderie. Others miss the travel and excitement. Still more miss those money-saving Army benefits.

Joining the Army Reserve can help you retain many things you like about the Army. Most important, it will help you keep some of those great benefits. Like your PX and commissary privileges. Space-available air travel. And low-cost life insurance.

The extra income you'll earn will come in handy, too. Right now, an E-5 with four years active duty earns over $125 for a single Reserve weekend. Add two weeks annual training pay, and you've got over $2,000 a year. Plus, you'll continue to qualify for retirement pay.

For more information call SGM Carl E. Pelt, MSG James M. Southern or SGM Curtis B. Haig Jr. at 545-4132, 544-4759 or 544-2062

SPIRITUAL

Prayer a chance for people to 'recharge batteries'

By James L. Bixler
HHD, 2nd ITB chaplain

When a machine is constantly operated beyond the manufacturer's recommended limits, stresses and strains are imposed upon it that it was never intended to sustain.

Parts wear down and the effectiveness of the machine decreases. It may even completely break down.

The Designer and Creator of humanity places limits upon each person. He has designed and limited our lives by our individual needs, abilities and strengths.

When the load that we carry exceeds our own limits for prolonged periods of time, then we wear down. Our emotions, physical stamina and relationships suffer.

We allow many things to make demands upon our lives. Urgencies prod us through our days. The truly important gets postponed. Stress builds. Friction builds. We get angry, tired, depressed.

We spend all our time on the temporary demands in our lives and have no time left over to invest in the lives of our families. We exchange treasure for trash. As we fly through our days, life blurs.

Stop! Slow down! We need to live within our limits. We need to live more wisely. Wisdom is the art of loving. That art, like many skills, demands concentration. Concentration is directing our attention to a common center.

It also means to increase in strength. We can increase our strength for living when we focus our attention by talking with God daily. We increase in strength when we allow God to act upon our spirits, redirecting them to what is truly wise and worthy of our lives.

Jesus, the wisest of us all, took time out of each of his demanding days to talk to God. His followers sensed the difference it made in His life and asked Him to teach them to pray. The Scriptures record what is called "The Lord's Prayer." It is a model of what praying should be about:

"Our Father Who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." (Matthew 5:9-13)

Prayer is a time when we remember again that God is our maker. He knows our limitations, our purpose, our problems and our needs better that we do. He knows what will keep us in working order. As we spend time with God daily, we can be reminded that some of the things we are pouring so much of ourselves into are not as important as we believe.

Prayer is a time to ask that God provide what we need for today. We do not always know what is necessary for the day. We may have some stubborn wishes or great fears. In prayer we can come to God and present to Him all of our anxieties, believing that He cares for us. We can let go of the daily pressures and worries that wear us out.

Talking with God gives us an opportunity to ask forgiveness for our blunders, for trespassing — crossing the boundaries and bringing pain to other people's lives. When we talk to God in the way that Jesus suggested, we are also reminded of our need to forgive as well as be forgiven.

Prayer is also a time to seek God's guidance for the day, that He will remind us through the day of what is wise and right and remind us of our limits.

God knows our limits. Often we ignore them. When we do we live beyond the limits that God recommends, our physical stamina, emotions and relationships erode. When we make a practice of talking with God we can focus our attention on what is wise and reduce the stresses in life that wear us out.

May 7 is National Prayer Day

USAIC Chaplain's Office

President Ronald Reagan has proclaimed May 7 the National Day of Prayer.

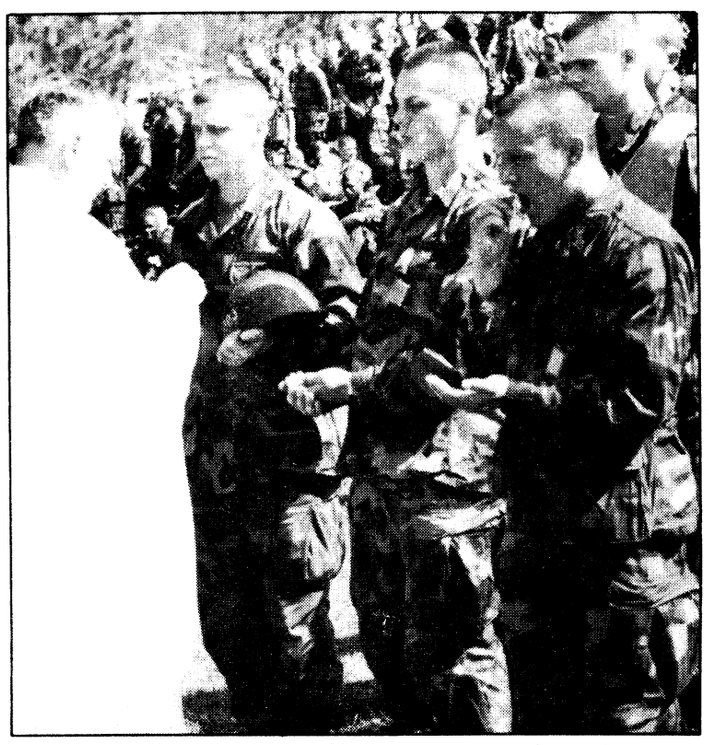
In his proclamation, he said, "America has lived through many a cold, dark night, when the cupped hands of prayer were our only shield against the extinction of courage. Though that flame has flickered from time to time, it burns brightest when we are willing, as we ought to be now, to turn our faces and our hearts to God, not only at moments of personal danger and civil strife, but in the full flower of the liberty, peace and abundance that He has showered upon us...

"Our land today is more diverse than ever, our citizens come from nearly every nation on earth, and the variety of religious traditions that have found welcome here has never been greater."

The President called on all Americans to "gather in homes and places of worship to pray...for unity of the hearts of all mankind."

ITC troops take a break to attend Easter services

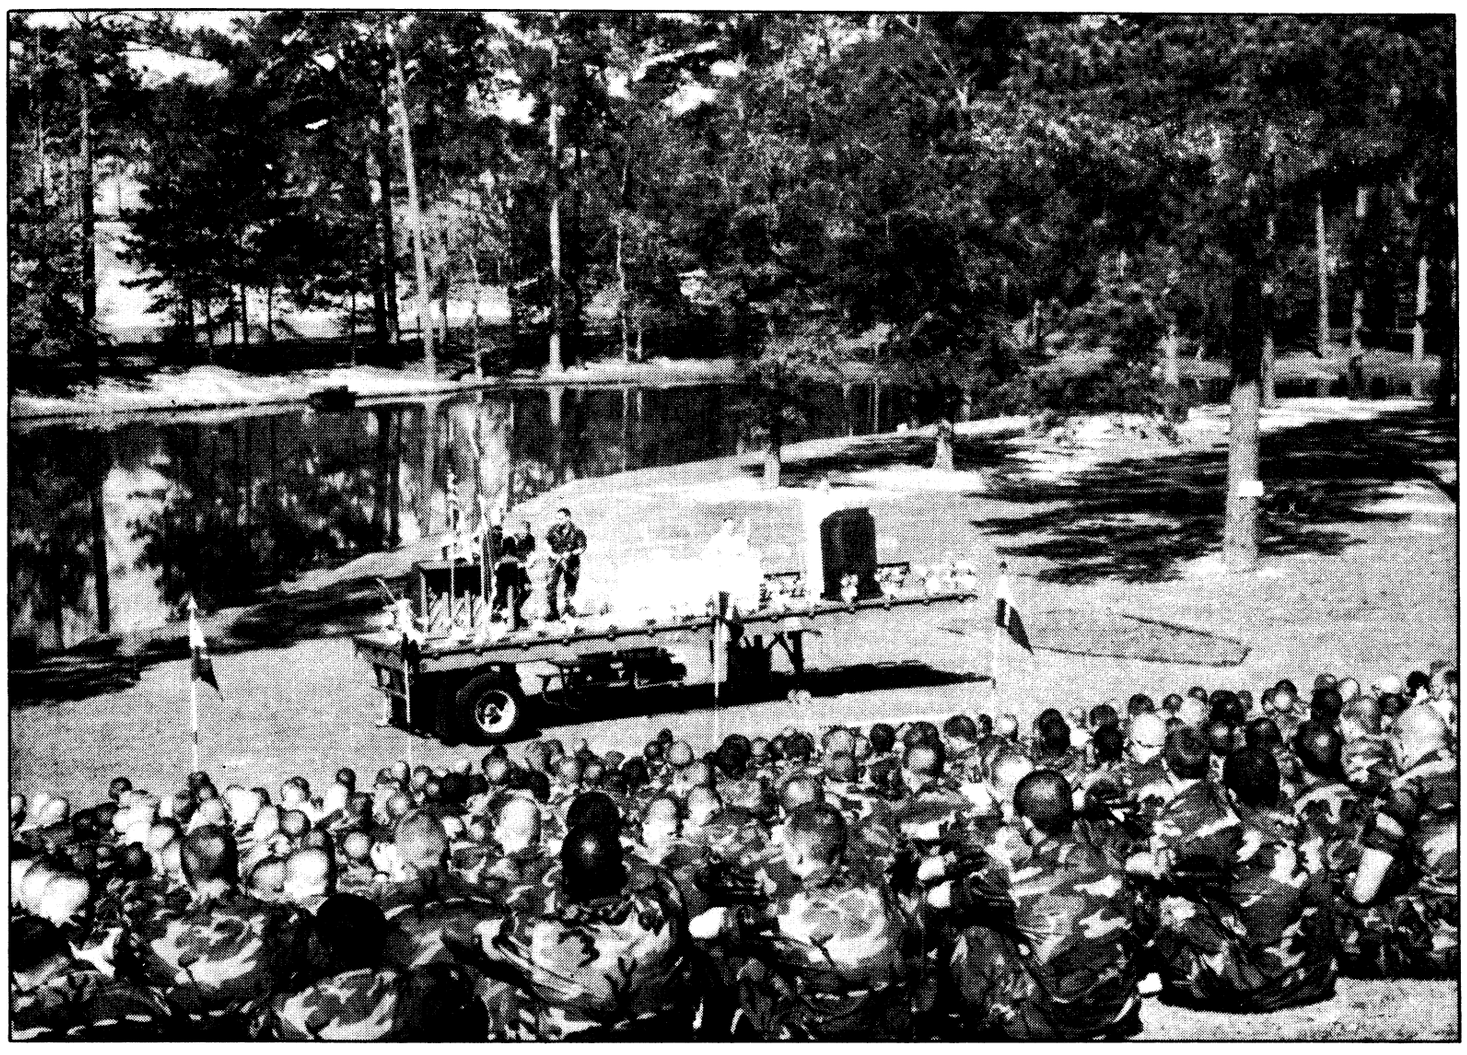
By Marsha Santiago
ITC correspondent



For One Station Unit Training soldiers spending time with drill sergeants and company commanders is the normal routine of each day. Easter Sunday provided an opportunity to spend time together in a different setting.

OSUT soldiers, cadre, battalion and brigade staffs, and family members gathered at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade Duck Pond and Victory Pond, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, to worship together.

Protestant services were conducted at both 1st and 2nd ITBs. Chaplain (Col.) Roy Mathis, USAIC chaplain, was the guest speaker for the 9 a.m. 1st ITB service with special music provided by Bobby Michaels, recording artist.



The Catholic Mass of the Resurrection was observed at 10:30 a.m. at the 1st ITB Duck Pond. Celebrant for the Mass was Chaplain (Brig. Gen.) Charles J. McDonnell, Deputy Chief of Chaplains for the U.S. Army. Special music was provided by Diane Swiecicki.

The Victory Pond service was conducted by the 2nd ITB chaplains: Chaplains (Capts.) J.D. Bender, Donald Trover, Jeffrey Smith, James Bixler, and Chaplain (Maj.) John Krider. Guest speaker for the service was Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Huey Bridgeman.

High holy month begins for Muslims

Members of the Muslim faith will observe the high holy month of Ramadan now through May 27.

During this period, Muslims are required to abstain from eating or drinking from first light until dusk daily.

The feast of Eid-al-Fitar on May 28 ends the fast.

Prayer services are scheduled each Friday during the month.

For more information on Ramadan and the command policy on its observance, call the chaplain's office at 545-2288.

ITC breaks ground for 600-seat chapel

The Infantry Training Center, Sand Hill, was the site of a groundbreaking ceremony for a new 600-seat chapel recently.

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba, post commander, officiated at the ceremony, and stressed the importance of developing soldiers' character and spiritual strength as well as training their bodies.

Chaplain (Brig. Gen.) Charles J. McDonnell, deputy chief of chaplains, offered a prayer of dedication for the new chapel.

The 13,720 square foot chapel is the only one approved by Congress for construction in the continental United States during fiscal 1987.

In addition to relieving overcrowding at religious services, the new facility will provide offices which can be used for counseling.

Babysitting, unlike Navy should not be adventure

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Should babysitting, like the Navy, be an adventure? Children's lives may depend on a babysitter's actions and this job should be taken seriously, according to the Fort Benning Military Police.

The MPs stress that babysitters should be professional about their work. They shouldn't come in on a Saturday night, receive instructions from the parents they're babysitting for and then flop in front of a television set when the parents leave.

In a brochure entitled, "Safety for Babysitters," the MPs urge babysitters not to leave children alone for long periods of time, stayon the telephone talking, have friends over unless the parents they're sitting for agree and find out who to call in case of an emergency.

The Red Cross, to ensure a better educated sitter, runs a babysitting course for people 12 years of age and up. Linda Scourgie, Red Cross director, said the classes cover child psychology, safety and such specifics as what to do if a stranger knocks at the door.

"We tell our classes to never, ever let a stranger into the house, regardless of who they say they are. It's also good to leave an outside light on so they can see anyone coming to the door, and a babysitter should never tell anyone that they are alone, either over the phone or at the door," she said.

Scourgie said that babysitters should keep emergency phone numbers handy and keep all doors and windows locked. She also said they need to be aware of common dangers in the home, such as poisons.

"As a minimum, you should make sure all household poisons are kept out of the reach of children," Scourgie said.

United States Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5 states, "No child under the age of 12 will be left unattended." Based on this regulation, babysitters on post must be 13-years of age or older to watch other children.

Scourgie said that the Red Cross teaches babysitting to 12-year olds because of a Red Cross national program requirement ".. but we make post babysitting regulations, especially in regard to age, very clear to all of our students."

SFC Gary Leeds, a MP spokesman, said the biggest problem they have with children on post is not with underage babysitters, but with parents who leave underage children unattended in their quarters.

"We don't really have a problem with babysitters. We do get calls from people in family housing reporting children in the neighborhood under the age of 12 being left alone by their parents," he said.

HIGH BLOOD PRESSURE

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Hypertension doesn't mean you're too tense. It means your blood pressure is to high.

May is National High Blood Pressure Month. As a member of an organization that believes in good health, you're probably more aware of the need to keep your blood pressure under control than your outside-of-DoD friends.

Every time you go to the clinic, the nurse puts a cuff around your arm and measures your blood pressure with a gauge. A normal reading for an adult male is 120 over 80 millimeters of mercury. The first number is the systolic pressure -- the reading when the heart is working hardest, pumping blood out of the heart. The second number -- the lower one -- tells the diastolic pressure, occurring when the heart if filling with blood again.

A blood pressure reading that stays at a level of 140 over 90 or higher indicates a person has hypertension.

According to Dr. Motilal Pamnani, the connection between stress and high blood pressure is not clear. Pamnani is associate professor of physiology at the uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences, the nation's only military medical school.

For example, he said, "Death row inmates have no higher blood pressure than the rest of the population. But people in lower economic classes do tend to have higher blood pressure." Pamnani believes this could be related to the stress suffered by the poor, but it could also be related to diet or other factors.

There is a clear relation between hypertension and a diet that is high in salt and low in potassum," said Pamnani. However, he said, this is true only for people who are more sensitive to salt. "The majority of Americans eat a diet that is far too high in salt, but they don't all have high blood pressure."

One in four Americans has high blood pressure. The rate for black Americans is almost 40 percent. And about one out of two Americans has high blood pressure by age 60. Other factors that increase the risk of hypertension are being male, obese or diabetic, or taking birth control pills.

Scientists have theories as to why certain people are at higher risk. For example, some speculate that blacks tend to retain salt because they originally came from a hot climate. According to Pamnani, the evidence for this is not conclusive.

Since untreated high blood pressure can result in heart attack, stroke or kidney problems, keeping track of your blood pressure is a good idea. And so is eating less salt and more potassium.

You can get enough potassium by including bananas, citrus fruits and juices and beans in your diet. However, Pamnani warned against taking potassium supplements unless your doctor has prescribed them, since they can cause a variety of side effects, ranging from mouth irritation to stomach ulcers.

Even if you don't think you're sensitive to salt, it's a good idea to cut down. Pamnani said that we get as much salt as we need from foods in their natural state, so there is no need to add salt in cooking or at the table. "But once people are used to eating salt, things don't taste right withou it," he said. "It just takes self-discipline and tim to get used to a lower salt diet." Cutting dow on salt gradually makes it easier.

Some suggested low- or no-salt seasonings an lemon juice, garlic, onion powder (not onion salt) vinegar, herbs and spices. If you don't have hyper tension but want to reduce salt, Pamnani sug gested not adding salt at the table and going eas on fast foods and highly processed foods such a canned soups.

Other salty foods include dill pickles, canne tuna (except for the kind packed withou salt) and baking soda. Pamnani also advised goin easy on salty condiments such as soy sauce, whic has 1,379 milligrams of sodium in a tablespoor Monosodium glutamate — MSG — a flavor er hancer commonly used in oriental cooking, and so dium nitrate, a preservative, are also sources c sodium in foods. A tablespoon of salt has 6,589 mi ligrams of sodium.

Nutrition experts recommend a daily sodium i take of between 1,100 and 3,300 milligrams. Man Americans consume two to three times tha amount.

Symptoms not always obvious

American Heart Association

One in four Americans has high blood pressure, according to the American Heart Association. You may be one of them, or you may have a family member or friend who is.

Almost half of the people with high blood pressure don't know they have a life-threatening condition. For these reasons, the American Heart Association has designated May as High Blood Pressure Month to promote awareness and control of the 'silent killer'.

Blood pressure is the push of blood against the walls of the arteries. High blood pressure indicates the heart is straining to pump blood through the arteries.

High blood pressure is unhealthy because it can result in an enlarge heart (congestive heart failure), kidney failure, and increased hardening of the arteries and kidney disease.

These conditions can lead to a fatal or disabling stroke or heart attack.

The only way to find out if your pressure is high is to have it checked at least once a year. You can have high blood pressure for years and not know it. Yet, you might be on the verge of a stroke or heart attack.

If you have a family history of high blood pressure, you should have your pressure checked every six months. Start the habit early. Blood pressure should be part of every child's health checkup, beginning at age three.

The American Heart Association offers 10 commandments to help anyone with high blood pressure bring it under control.

Free screening available at Red Cross

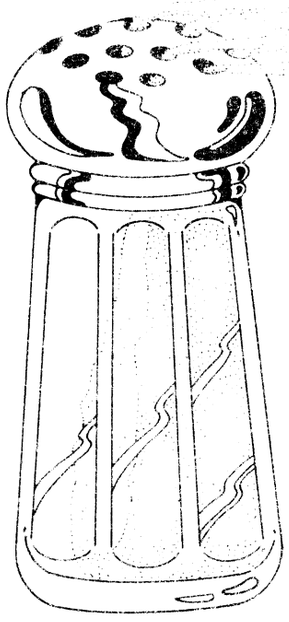
Fort Benning Red Cross

Spring has arrived in Fort Benning and with it, National High Blood Pressure Month. The Fort Benning Red Cross has announced a month full of free activities, to help educate the public about high blood pressure, the leading cause of stroke.

The Red Cross will kick off the schedule with an educational display and blood pressure screening at the PX Mall, Saturday, according to Maggie Siegfried, spokesperson for the Fort Benning Red Cross.

"May is an excellent time to focus public attention on healthier lifestyle habits," Siegfried said. "It is easier for our community members to (practice what we preach) about diet and exercise when the weather is nicer and healthy foods low in fat and sodium are plentiful," she said.

Although high blood pressure cannot be cured, it can be controlled through medication and nondrug methods such as exercise, weight loss, reduction in sodium intake, and healthy eating habits.



Siegfried said the activities planned by the Red Cross will focus on education and treatment to assist Fort Benning residents in their efforts to control high blood pressure. More than 25 percent of area residents have high blood pressure, but only a small percentage are successfully controlling it.

"We want to remind people to maintain their treatment programs while they're on vacation this summer and to take advantage of our National High Blood Pressure Month activities," she said.

For more information on the events and services offered by Red Cross, call 545-5194.

Ten commandments to good health

- Know your blood pressure. Have it checked regularly.
- Know what your weight should be. Keep it at that level.
- Don't use excessive salt in cooking or during meals; avoid salty foods.
- Eat a low fat, low cholesterol diet according to American Heart Association recommendations.
- Don't smoke cigarettes; smoking can increase your chances of having a stroke or a heart attack.
- Restrict your drinking of alcoholic beverages.
- Take your medicine exactly as prescribed; don't run out of pills even for a single day.
- Keep your appointments with the doctor.
- Follow your doctor's advice about exercise, and live a normal life in every other way.
- Make certain your parents, brothes, sisters and children have their pressures checked regularly. High blood pressure tends to run in families.

Reading product labels vita to discover sodium content

American Forces Information Service

- Sodium free — where a product has les than five milligrams of sodium per serving
- Very low sodium — 140 milligrams o less.
- Reduced sodium — for foods that have a least 75 percent less sodium than usual.
- Unsalted or no salt added — for foods tha are normally processed with salt but to whic none has been added. However, a food s labeled may contain sodium from anothe source.

All foods that make claims about salt mus list the number of milligrams in a serving.

Infantry Center vacation spot offers beaches, boating, more

JSAIC Public Affairs Office

Ever since the early 1500s when Spanish explorer Ponce de Leon searched for the Fountain of Youth, vacationing tourists have come to Florida's beaches to be kids again.

Though the price of regaining your lost youth on some Florida beaches can be expensive, military discounts at the Army's Destin, Fla., beach resort makes this vacation spot affordable for soldiers and their families.

At the U.S. Army Infantry Center in Destin, you can beachcomb, work on a suntan, play volleyball or tennis and go deep-sea fishing at a price that will not empty your wallet.

On the 15.5 acre facility, there are cottages of various types and sizes, trailer pads and camping sites. A new 10-unit motel will soon be available to Destin visitors.

Each of the cottages is centrally cooled and heated, and each is equipped with the basic necessities including cooking and dining utensils, bed linens, a stove, refrigerator and color television.

A two-bedroom cottage will sleep six people and a three-bedroom cottage sleeps 11 to 12 people comfortably.

Recreation abounds at the Destin resort, located on the bay. There is a private beach, sailboats, motorboats, and volleyball and basketball courts. If you like to ride the ocean waves, and the beaches on the ocean it is only a 10-minute drive to the Gulf.

During the resorts seasonal period (Memorial Day through Labor Day), reservations for cottages are determined by periodic, post-wide lotteries, with active duty personnel at Fort Benning having first priority.

Active duty soldiers from other installations, retirees and civil service employees are accepted on a space available basis. During this period, visits to the recreation center will be for six nights only.

According to USAIC Circular 215-4, the lottery for June will be conducted May 5. Applications for the weekly booking periods will be accepted by the Outdooor Recreation Branch for two-weeks before the drawing. The last chance to sign up for the drawing is May 4.

Once a reservation has been made, no portion of it can be cancelled. Cancellations will only be accepted for the entire reservation period.

Destin's camping area has complete sewage, water and electrical hook-ups for recreational vehicles and tent sites for camping. The camping area is located adjacent to a bath house with shower, toilet and laundry facilities. Trailer pads and camping sites may be reserved at the Reservation and Ticket Office of the Outdoor Recreation and Bowling Branch on a space available basis, no more than 30 days in advance.

Destin is a four-to five-hour drive from Fort Benning, but it is well worth the trip. For more information on how you can enjoy the Destin Recreation Center, call the Outdoor Recreation Branch at 545-7535.

Spring the perfect time to clean house

By James E. Floyd
Fire Department

How can you tell it is Spring? Birds are singing, flowers are blooming and lawn mowers are humming their old familiar sounds. People are busy cleaning out closets to make room for their spring clothes. They are trying on clothes to see how much weight they have gained or lost.

Everyone's busy little bees out working in their yards cutting, watering and raking along with a thousand other things to do.

Now, that you have yourself motivated for Spring Clean Up, lets look at your responsibility for Fire Safety:

- Lawn mowers should be thoroughly checked out before using. Never pour gasoline in the tank while the motor is hot.
- Gasoline should be stored in safety cans; no more than two (2) gallons.
- Do not store flammable liquids in the house or utility room.

Artist-in-residence shows kids how to shoot, develop photos

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Sixth and seventh graders at Benning's Faith Middle School are focusing on photography, thanks to of Frank Hunter.

Hunter, a professional architectural photographer by trade, is a member of the Georgia Artists in Education Program. He has been teaching Faith children basic photographic techniques since Apr. 7. He has also helped the school set up the new dark room and has been holding seminars for teachers on how to use photography to help them teach.

He said he feels his primary duty is to give students the basic principles of photography and then let them use this knowledge however they see fit.

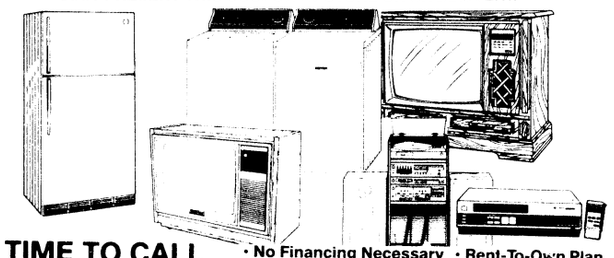
"I begin by using a blue print exercise called cyanotype. We apply a chemical to a piece of paper, put leaves or semi-transparent objects on the paper and then lay the paper in the sun, which naturally develops the image of the objects," he said. "It doesn't require a dark room and it shows the kids how simple photography can be."

Hunter stressed that people, even children, shouldn't be intimidated by all the gadgetry in photography today.

"In learning photography, you need to get away from all the technical aspects, stick to the basics, keep it simple and control what you're doing," he said.

Initially, Hunter presented a slide show of his own work to the school, talked about his program and students were then asked to fill out a questionnaire on why they would like to participate in the program. After evaluating the questionnaire, teachers made recommendations on students they thought would do well in the program and who seemed interested in photography.

"We wanted kids who expressed a real interest in what Mr. Hunter was doing. We didn't necessarily get gifted students or average students. We got a good mix," said Cindy Givens, who runs the Media Support Center at Faith and is a coordinator for the Artists in Education Program.



Hunter let each student take a picture using a 35-mm camera after he explained how to use the equipment. All other photographs were taken using a plastic Dores camera.

"The Dores costs about as much as a roll of film. It's simple and easy to use and the kids concentrated on taking pictures rather than gadgetry," Hunter said.

Besides learning the basics of using a camera, the students were schooled in dark room procedures, negatives, making prints and mounting photographs.

Teaching 80 kids divided into ten-person groups four times weekly proved challenging, Hunter said.

Price high for ear injuries

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

"Hey, did you hear the one about the soldier who never wore his ear plugs and went stone deaf?" Doesn't sound funny, huh? It's not supposed to.

"Even though hearing loss due to noise is 100 percent preventable, it is the number one health hazard in the Army," said Capt. Marc Stevens, an audiologist at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Stevens said that, since 1968, the Veteran's Administration has paid out $1,748,414,472 in disability payments to veterans for hearing loss "...and all because service members won't wear 15 cent ear plugs."

Ear plugs protect the ear from loud noise, which is measured in decibels. According to Stevens, there are two types of noise or sound, impulse and sustained. The ear can only stand about 85 decibels at a sustained or steady rate for eight hours. After that, damage can occur. The ear can stand more impulse than sustained noise but not much.

"Noise is our enemy. The impulse noise level in a firer's ear when firing the M-16 rifle is over 150 decibels. To prevent a hearing loss you have to wear ear plugs. It's that simple," Stevens said.

Stevens made the point that soldiers have to hear to be combat ready. "A soldier with a high frequency hearing loss can't hear things like tread and vehicle movements, foot steps in the grass, movements in the brush, communications or the loading of enemy weapons. If you can't hear well, you can't fight well," he said.

The key to hearing loss prevention is hearing conservation," Stevens said. "Soldiers have to wear ear plugs in high noise areas. This means if you have to shout to be heard when you're talking then you're in a high noise area and should have those ear plugs in," he said.

"Prevention is the key to eliminating hearing loss. It seems almost ironic that last year the government spent almost $200 million on compensation to veterans for hearing loss. That's just one year and it all could have been prevented by the use of a 15 cent pair of ear plugs," Stevens said.

For more information on hearing conservation, call 544-4450.

Learn how to detect, avoid heat injuries

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

With summer almost here, the mercury is steadily rising and so is the risk of heat injuries. By following the guidelines in United States Army Infantry Center Regulation 40-14, the chances of heat related injuries can be greatly reduced.

"Fort Benning does a good job overall of preventing heat injuries," said Harley Chase of the post Safety Office. "The last fatality that was a direct result of heat, happened June 10, 1985."

"All the units follow the Wet Bulb Globe Temperature index and take the steps necessary in each category, Chase said.

The guidelines for training according to the WBGT is as follows:

In Category I, (a WBGT reading between 85 and 87.9 degrees Farenheit), soldiers not used to the heat must limit intense physical activity and exposure to sun. Category I does not affect a soldier who is already used to the weather.

In Category II, (a reading between 85 and 89.9 degrees F), soldiers not used to the heat cannot attend outdoor classes in direct sun and may not do any intense physical activity, such as prolonged marching. Soldiers used to the weather must limit intense physical activity.

In Category III, (a reading between 88 and 89.9 degrees F), soldiers not used to the heat cannot participate in any physical training and strenuous outdoor activities. This applies to all soldiers who have less than 12 weeks training time in hot weather.

Thoroughly acclimatized personnel may engage in limited activity, for no more than six hours daily.

In Category IV (readings above 90 degrees Farenheit), all soldiers must refrain from strenuous activity and non-essential outdoor physical duty.

Soldiers and supervisors need to know how to recognize the four types of heat injuries and know what action to take.

The four types are sunburn, heat cramps, heat exhaustion, and heat stroke. While sunburn is generally not a condition of great significance, there are cases where soldiers have unduly exposed themselves to the sun. If the soldier is unable to perform duties as a result of sunburn received during off duty time, they are subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Heat cramps are commonly associated with heavy physical exhaustion and the symptoms are painful constrictions of the muscles of the arms, legs, abdomen or back caused by large salt losses through sweating.

First aid for heat cramps is as follows: first put the victim in the shade, loosen clothing and give water to drink. If the victim does not improve within 15 minutes, evacuate to the nearest medical facility.

Heat exhaustion occurs when a person has lost a large amount of water from his body. The victim develops heavy, labored breathing, profuse sweating, headache, weakness, nausea, and sometimes fainting or loss of consciousness. Heat cramps may also be present.

After the victim has lain on the ground for a few minutes, the victim may regain consciousness and feel somewhat better. The victim's skin will usually feel cool and moist, he will be sweating profusely and will have a rapid, feeble pulse.

First aid for a vicim of heat exhaustion is to first place the casualty in the shade and elevate the feet, remove or open clothing and cool the victim's body by sprinkling it with water and fanning him. Give the victim some cool water to drink if he is conscious and make him sip it slowly, then evacuate to nearest medical treatment facility.

Heatstroke happens when there is a breakdown in body temperature control by an excessively high body temperature. His temperature is persistently high caused by vigorous exercise and evironmental factors which combine to cause this frequently fatal condition.

This represents a true medical emergency. Although it sometimes comes on with a severe headache, upset stomach and weakness, its onset is frequently sudden with loss of consciousness, convulsions or delirium.

The skin will usually feel dry and hot, and sweating may be absent or greatly reduced. Heatstroke can occur while sweating profusely if work rates and humidity are high.

The single most important thing in treating a victim of heat stroke is to lower his body temperature as soon as possible, while enroute to the nearest medical facility. Take the following steps with the victim: put him in the shade remove his clothing, do not give him water to drink and again get the victim to the hospital as quickly as possible.

"Our staff monitors all the units on post, to insure they are following regulations," Chase said. "We go over to the Airborne Department and to the Basic Training sites and make sure the troops are being sprayed down when needed."

U.S. Army
A Ranger instructor hoses down one of his students, a good way to lower body temperature fast.

Airborne!

Ceremony honors members of original parachute test platoon

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet Staff writer

"Airborne" is a word that symbolizes military excellence. It represents the free spirit of soldiers, who volunteer to jump from an aircraft in flight to defend our country's freedom.

Past and present airborne soldiers recently gathered here on Eubanks Field, home of the infamous 250-foot towers, to celebrate the completion of the Airborne Walk and memorialize fallen comrades.

Future airborne soldiers looked on under the ever watchful eye of their black hat instructors from Company A, 1/507th Parachute Infantry Regiment. These "legs" (students) got a chance to view a bit of Airborne History.

The walk commemorates all Airborne soldiers. From the ground it is very similar to a small park with 26 markers bordering the outer edges, each representing an airborne unit. From the sky you can see the detailed symbol of the coveted parachutist's badge.

"The idea for a memorial was first proposed in April 1982 by John Wosnick at an Airborne Awards banquet in Atlanta," said Capt. Floyd Hayse, commander of Headquarters Company, 1/507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

"It was decided it would be built here for several reasons; one, this is the home of the Infantry and the training grounds for the original test platoon and for almost every paratrooper after that," he said.

Many of those same people, who shed blood, sweat and tears to earn those silver wings came back for the event, but there was one in particular who was sought after the ceremony.

Retired Brig. Gen. William T. Ryder was the platoon leader of the original test platoon. It is for him and the rest of the members of the platoon that a marker stands in the center of the monument. There are 19 left out of the original 48 legends, those pioneers in airborne operations.

Ryder reminisced about his days in the original test platoon. Enter early 1940.

"It was Maj. Bill Lee who was the driving force behind the concept of Airborne operations," he said. "The idea was not warmly received at first and Lee let it lie until one day when he got a call from the President."

"It didn't take long after that to set up their initial test platoon," Ryder said, "But I knew something was up way before the initial go ahead was given to set it up."

Ryder, then a lieutenant with the 29th Infantry Regiment had witnessed test parachute cargo drops at Lawson Field and felt it was only a matter of time before they started using people and consequently, he did some research on airborne operations.

During that time he submitted several articles to the Infantry Board on the subject.

When the time soon came to ask for volunteers to man the Test Platoon, it was decided that the men necessary for the mission would come from the 29th Infantry Regiment.

The enlisted members would be recommended by their commanders and the officers would take a two-hour test administered by the board.

"I went in to take the test and found they had used a lot of the material I had submitted to create it," Ryder said. "I knew I did well on the test when I left the testing area."

Ryder recalled thinking that he wouldn't have a chance even though he did so well on the test. He felt that the fact that he was married and had a family weighed heavily against him and that they would pick a unmarried man instead.

As it turned out, when the selections were finished, it was Ryder who was named platoon leader.

"We started our training soon afterwards. We did calisthenics and ran much like they do today, plus we learned how to pack our own parachutes," he said. "It was discovered later on that it wasn't practical for an airborne soldier to pack his own chute."

During that early training, the platoon learned how to do parachute landing falls by jumping from a truck. When the men became proficient, they jumped from the truck while it was moving.

The platoon traveled to Highstown, N.Y., during one point of their training to jump from some parachuting towers much like the ones that are used at Fort Benning today.

Ryder remembers after they had finished their training and his test platoon was teaching airborne techniques he got a phone call from Maj. Bill Lee. "He asked me how many towers we wanted here at Benning," Ryder said, "Those towers cost $125,000 each and it struck me funny, here he was asking me how many towers I wanted at thousands of dollars each and in those days you had to have several witnesses to destroy $15 worth of china."

During this time Ryder and others also went to observe military parachuting in different countries.

"I went and observed the British and made about six jumps with them," he said. "They did not use a reserve parachute or use the same techniques as far as packing the parachute and landing as we did.

"When I came back to the United States I wrote a 50-page report on how much more superior we were in Airborne operations," Ryder said. "Ironically, shortly thereafter we adapted their techniques."

Ryder developed the quick release device on the parachutist-sharness and the Lateral Drift Apparatus still used today to train airborne students.

Ryder went on the serve under McArthur and saw combat during invasions in the Phillipines and New Guinea.

"I really didn't envision what Airborne is today," he said, "but then again you really couldn't."

He said the same airborne spirit is still there going strong. "In the Airborne community you have volunteered to carry out a mission," he said. "You are accountable for yourself and the standards you have set.

"The troops are better and stronger because they have the advantage, the knowledge that we have set before them," he said.

Ryder and 18 others are the only ones left from the original 48-man test platoon. They keep in contact and have a reunion every year.

They have added a new tradition — attending the Airborne Walk, and will memorialize their fallen comrades at the yearly ceremony.

Members of the original "Test Platoon" watch the ceremony.

Ret. MSgt. William "Red" King and Brig. Gen. (ret.) William T. Ryder lay a wreath while Capt. Thomas Foster, Commander of troops looks on.

USAMU members blast the competition at matches

World champion Matt Dryke outscores field to win this year's interservice skeet event

By Tommy Pool
USAMU correspondent

USAMU members scored both individual and team victories during regional pistol and interservice shotgun championships held last weekend.

Current world champion and individual world record holder, SSgt. Matthew Dryke, outscored all competitors to win this year's annual Interservice Skeet event conducted at USAMU's Shotgun ranges from April 24-26.

Dryke fired rounds of 97-99-99, to overtake the early leaders and finish with a winning total of 295 out of 300 targets.

This victory marked Dryke's eighth Interservice Skeet title since 1978.

Second place in the matches required a 50 bird shoot-off between USAMU's SFC Alger Mullins and Sp4 Robert Wilson, after both competitors finished with scores of 289 in the regulation event.

Mullins won second place and the silver medal by scoring 49 out of 50 in the shoot-off, to edge Wilson by one target at 48.

In team competition, the US Army "Blue" squad scored 437 out of 450 targets to defeat the Army Reserve "Gold" team at 417, and win the overall Interservice Skeet Team Championship.

Members of the winning Army "Blue" team included SSgt. Dryke scoring 147, Sp4 Wilson with 146 and SFC Mullins rounding out the Army's winning team score with 144 targets.

In last week's pistol championships, MSgt. Roger Willis fired the highest score of his career to win the Tennessee Trophy Pistol Tournament held at Nashville, Tenn., April 25-26.

Willis posted a total of 2,671 out of 2,700 to win the overall title by three points over National Guardsman, SSgt. James Lenardson, who finished at 2,668.

The former national champion also won two of the three individual aggregates on his way to the overall title. Willis scored 893 out of 900 points in the .22 caliber event and a total of 888 out of 900 to win the .45 caliber championship.

Third place in the matches went to USAMU's SFC James Laguana, who finished with a total of 2,625 points.

Shooting competition will continue at Fort Benning next week with more than 50 of the top military shooters in the country participating in the Interservice International Rifle championships.

Competition will run from May 5-10, and will include the final tryouts for this years United States CISM Rifle team.

Military shooting teams from the Army, US Marine Corps, Army Reserve, National Guard and US Air Force are expected to be on hand for the matches.

The general public is cordially invited to observe some of the nations finest marksmen in action. All competition will be held at Hook International Range.

Firing will normally begin at 8 a.m. and conclude at approximately 4:30 p.m.

Despite childish appearance, vehicles can prove deadly

American Forces Information Service

"They may look like overgrown 'big wheel' riding toys, but all-terrain vehicles are anything but harmless playthings," said Jerald Anderson, DoD's deputy director for safety and ocupational health policy.

An all-terrain vehicle is a motorized, off-road vehicle designed to travel on three or four low-pressure tires. Last year, more than half a million were sold.

Tragically, not everyone who bought one was aware that the vehicles need to be handled with care.

According to the Consumer Product Safety Commission, 644 Americans died and 230,000 were injured in all-terrain vehicle accidents during the past five years. Almost 50 percent of the casualties involved children aged 16 and under. Children 12 and under accounted for 135 of the deaths, or 21 percent.

Anderson said statistics aren't kept in such a way to show if any all-terrain vehicle accidents involved military children. But, he stressed, the vehicles are popular in states where military people are stationed.

Anderson said all-terrain vehicles are used in several military jobs. People who ride them at work include installation law-enforcement, perimeter and beach patrols, combat-control teams and explosive ordnance disposal groups.

Military users are thoroughly trained, and there have been no military all-terrain vehicle fatalities on the job in the past 2½ years. However, two service members have died in off-duty recreational all-terrain vehicle accidents.

Almost 75 percent of all-terrain vehicle accidents involved three-wheeled models tipping over. "Three-wheeled ATVs (all-terrain vehicles) have a very high center of gravity — they're easy to overturn," said Anderson. And carrying a passenger on one increases the odds. Another problem, said Anderson, is operating them on public streets (where they are illegal) because they're low, and auto drivers can't see them.

Rural terrain has its own hazards.

A 7-year-old Arkansas girl hit a tree. Her all-terrain vehicle overturned on top of her and crushed her. Other off-road fatalities have occurred when all-terrain vehicles hit objects such as a tree stump, a chain and a fallen tree branch. Some young riders have been crippled when their vehicles overturned on private dirt or gravel roads and crushed their legs.

In 1985, a congressional committee recommended that the Consumer Product Safety Commission outlaw all-terrain vehicles for riders under 12, and that 12- to 16-year-olds be licensed only after they had taken training classes. It also recommended the recall of three-wheelers, 80 percent of those currently is use.

The commission opted to request the industry to voluntarily cease marketing all-terrain vehicles intended for use by children under 12. If that doesn't work, the commission may move to ban them from the marketplace. A commission task force concluded that children under 12 are unable to operate any size all-terrain vehicle safely.

While the sale of three-wheelers hasn't been banned, the safer four-wheel models are accounting for a growing percentage of sales.

The manufacturers have stepped up their safety education program through the Specialty Vehicle Institute of America, an organization founded in 1983 to promote the safe use of their products.

The institute sponsors rider training courses with trained instructors. The toll-free number to find a course near you is 1-800-447-4700. Also available are booklets for rider self-training and one parents can use to train their children.

Since 1986, all-terrain vehicles have been labeled with special warnings, including recommended ages for young riders.

Protective equipment and clothing are very important. "Dirt bikers and motocross riders on TV wear helmets and leather," said Anderson. "Kids see these 'role models' and follow their good example."

All-terrain vehicle riders should wear helmets and either a face shield or goggles. A long-sleeved jersey and log pants are necessary for the minimum level of protection, but off-road riding gear — pants with knee pads, a jersey with shoulder pads — is better.

Gloves will protect hands in case of a spill, and boots will prevent feet from slipping off the footrests.

Fleming Cos. Adopt Anti-Takeover Plan

Following the example set by other publicly held companies, Fleming Cos. has adopted an anti-takeover plan.

Fleming, which has a Columbus distribution center, said the plan isn't in response "to any known effort to acquire control of the company."

For each common share held on July 7, shareholders would receive the right to buy one common share for $150 if a person or group acquired 20 percent or more of Fleming's stock. The right also would apply if a person or group initiated an offer to buy 30 percent or more of the company's stock.

Closings Won't Hurt Swift

Levi Strauss & Co.'s recent closing of three plants in Texas and Virginia will have no effect on Columbus' Swift Textiles, the world's third largest producer of denim.

Swift chairman Bob Koon said the Levi plants being closed were designed to produce women's wear and slacks, not denin jeans. They were later converted to jeans plants, but at a "very high cost," said Koon.

Levi, which is Swift's biggest customer, "will make up that production" by shifting the work to other plants, said Koon. "They will be producing the same number of pairs of jeans."

There will be "no change whatsoever," at Swift as a result of the plants' closings, he said.

'Beam Me to Columbus'

Roland Castle hopes "Beam me to Columbus, Scottie" will be the refrain among southeastern science fiction fanatics next March as they flock to the Columbus Ironworks Convention & Trade Center for a science fiction convention called Magnum Opus Con II.

"I know we don't look like businessmen," said Castle, the event's coordinator, who visited Columbus last week seeking support from area restaurants, hotels, printers and other businesses.

Castle predicts the event will draw 3,000 participants from around the southeast and more than 20 national celebrities. Profits will go to Columbus College's scholarship fund, Castle says.

Information about the event is available from Pat Robinson at 324-2559.

Post voters face full slate in school board elections

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning parents head for the polls May 19, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. to elect representatives for the Dexter, Loyd, White and Faith School Boards.

Representatives will be elected to serve two year terms, with the exception of Faith School, where the elected representative will serve for one year to fill an unexpired term.

Candidates must be 21 or older, and have no knowledge of a permanent change of station within 12 months.

In the upcoming election, there are six candidates running, three of whom will be uncontested on the ballots.

The only contested race will be at the Dexter School, where Maj. Walter L. Bunyea, Elizabeth (Lee) Matthews, and Linda Scholtes are combatants.

Scholtes received a masters degree in education from Boston University. She has been a teacher for five years, served on a community mayor's committee and has been a Brownie leader.

Matthews received a bachelors degree and has taught kindergarten and second grade. She has served as the Parent Advisory Board Chairman and at the Child Development Center, while in Germany. She has also chaired a Ways and Means and a Hospitality Committees, and served as second vice president for the Officers Wives' Club.

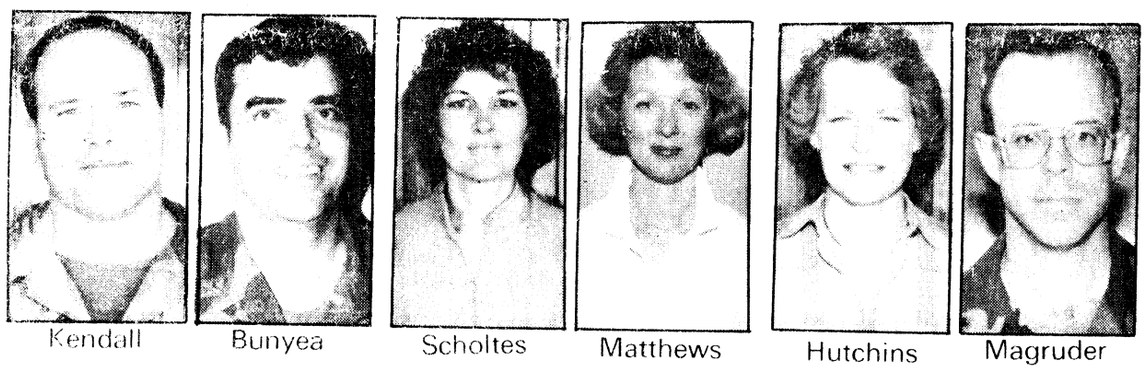
Bunyea received a masters degree in International Relations at the University of Southern California and graduated from the U.S. Army Russian Institute and has a background in foriegn language, but empasizes the need for the kids to first learn English and mathmatics.

Lt. Col. Lawson W. Magruder is uncontested in the White School elections. Magruder is the Chief of the Tactics Division at the Infantry School and has a masters degree in personnel management and a bachelors degree in business administration.

In the Loyd School race, SFC Bruce Kendall is unchallenged. Kendall is a Red Cross instructor and volunteer assistant coach to the Fort Benning Swim Team. He also serves as a scouting coordinator and liasion for the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts.

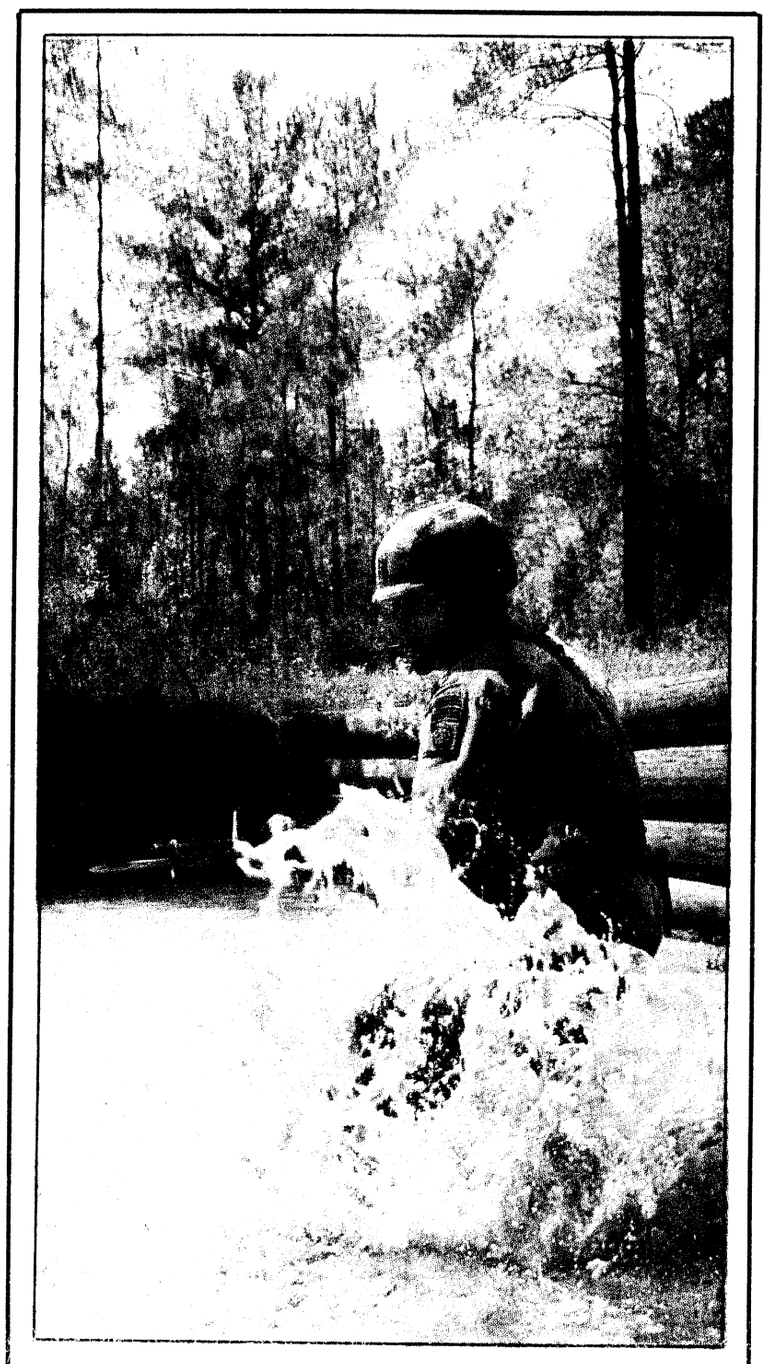
Joan Hutchins appears alone on Faith School ballots. Hutchins has worked with students and teachers as both Math tutor and Art specialist. She received a bachelors degree from Temple University in Philadelphia, Pa. Hutchins has also worked with various Bible Schools for six years.

Ballots are cast at each school, where a sealed box will be placed in a centralized location.



"When the ballots are compiled, they will be counted with no less than three eligible voters present," said Beth Middlemiss, director of staff developments, Fort Benning schools.

Eligible voters are parents or guardians living in the student's immediate household.



Absentee ballots may be cast at the schools between May 11 and 18.

"The 11-member board meets on the last Monday of each month at 4 p.m. to set policy, to approve school budgets and govern the school systems," said Dr. Rolla Baumgartner, superintendant of post schools.

Election results will appear in the May 22 issue of the Bayonet.

New branch seeks troops to reclassify

Military Personnel Center

The recent approval of Special Forces as a separate career branch reinforces the Army's efforts to strengthen its special operations. In support of these efforts, MILPERCEN is looking for high-quality enlisted soldiers to enter career management field 18, Special Operations.

Because of the emphasis on special forces, interested soldiers can now get pre-printed application packets from the CMF 18 recruiting team at the U.S. Army John F. Kennedy Special Warfare Center, Fort Bragg, N.C. Write Commander, USAJFKSWC, attn: ATSU-SP-R, Fort Bragg, N.C. 28307-5000, or call autovon 239-1818/5083, commercial 919-396-1818/5083.

Special Operations is a non-accession career management field, which means that all openings are filled by soldiers already in the Army who apply to reclassify from their original CMF's. To be eligible, a soldier must:

- Be a specialist four or higher for military occupational specialty 18D, special operations medical sergeant; or be a sergeant or higher for special operations MOSs 18B, weapons sergeant; 18C, engineer sergeant or 18E, communications sergeant.
- Be a Primary Leadership Development Course graduate.
- Have a General Test score of 110 or higher.
- Pass the Army Physical Readiness Test with 17-21 age group standards.
- Not be on levy for overseas assignment.

For more information on CMF 18 and types of assignments available to Special Forces troops, refer to AR 614-200, or contact MSgt. Hennix, MILPERCEN's CMF 18 professional development NCO, at autovon 221-8340, commercial 202-325-8340.

Basic Benefit Plan covers all workers hired since Dec. 31, 1983

American Forces Press Service

Editor's note: The new Federal Employees Retirement System went into effect Jan. 1, and affects more than 1 million DoD civilians. It automatically covers new government employees hired after Dec. 31, 1983. Those hired before that date can transfer to the new system or can remain covered under the older Civil Service Retirement System and receive any Social Security benefits earned for non-federal employment.

The new system has three components: Social Security benefits; basic benefit plan and savings plan.

Under the Federal Employees Retirement System, you pay full Social Security taxes and a small contribution to the basic benefit plan. In addition, you can make tax-deferred contributions to a savings plan and a portion — up to 5 percent of your salary — will be matched by the government.

Following is a summary of the basic benefit plan.

To be eligible to receive retirement benefits from the basic benefit plan, you must have at least five years of creditable civilian service. Survival and disability benefits are available after 18 months of service.

Creditable service includes:

- Federal civilian service for which contributions have been made or deposited;
- Military service, subject to a deposit requirement. To receive credit for post-1956 military service, you must deposit 3 percent of your military base pay if you come under the Federal Employees Retirement System.

If you transfer to the Federal Employees Retirement System with five years service or more under the Civil Service Retirement System, you must deposit 7 percent of your military base pay.

Creditable service does not include:

- Military service if you are receiving military retired pay, although there are limited exceptions;
- Leaves of absence for performing military service or while receiving workers' compensation;
- Unused sick leave — it is not converted into creditable service for any purpose, with the limited exception of Civil Service Retirement System employees who transfer to the new system;
- Civilian service after 1988 when no contributions are withheld.

Your contribution to the basic benefit plan is the difference between 7 percent of your basic pay and the current Social Security old-age, survivors and disability tax rate. In practical terms, that will come to 1.3 percent of salary in 1987; 0.94 percent in 1988-89; and 0.8 percent after 1989.

You may withdraw your Federal Employees Retirement System contributions if you leave federal employment. However, if you do, you will not be eligible to receive benefits based on service covered by the refund.

Nor can you redeposit contributions that have been refunded.

There are three categories of retirement benefits in the basic benefit plan:

- Immediate
- Early
- Deferred

In some cases, you must have

Schools switch to hot weather hours

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning schools

On Monday, May 18 1987, heat relief hours begin again in all eight Fort Benning schools. This schedule will be in effect for the rest of this school year.

Since some of Benning's schools are not air conditioned, the Fort Benning School Board voted at its April meeting to resume the 45 minute earlier starting time that had been used during the first five weeks of the school year.

These hours will be in effect through the end of the school year, June 8.

OPINION

Soviet theft of technology massive security problem

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

The Soviet Union has a massive, well-executed plan for obtaining critical technologies from Western nations. Each year, thousands of pieces of Western equipment and many tens of thousands of documents — some classified — reach the Soviet Union. Defense officials said this assimilation of Western technology is so broad that the United States and other Western nations are, in effect, subsidizing the Soviet military buildup.

Those in the military community who work with sensitive technologies are well aware of Soviet acquisition threat. The Department of Defense Technology Security Administration is attempting to increase the private sector's awareness of the problem through its out-reach program.

"It's important that those dealing with sensitive technologies in private industry and academe understand that this loss of technology results directly in a degradation of our national security," said Stephen Bryen, deputy undersecretary of defense for trade security policy. "We want to be sure they understand the Soviet effort, a critical first step in protecting Western technology."

In an effort to stem the flow of some technologies to the East, DoD works closely with other federal agencies to keep a close watch on what is being exported. In many cases, these detailed export controls can cause friction between industry and DoD. Bryen said DoD is actively working to speed up the export application review process to alleviate this problem. "But we have to do all that we can to be sure these critical technologies aren't going to be diverted to communist nations for eventual use against the West," he said.

Industry briefings have effectively increased public awareness, said Bryen. These briefings, developed by the Industrial and Government Liaison Office of the Technology Security Program, stress:

- the importance of the U.S. technological edge to national security;
- the Soviet threat to that technological lead;
- the government-wide program to counter the threat; and
- the need for strong commitment from industry and other publics to restrict the loss of critical technologies.

The outreach program extends into the scientific and academic communities. Scientific conferences on missiles, marine technology, space, microelectronics and other military-related subjects are attended routinely by Soviet KGB or military intelligence officers.

"We brief participants in these conferences to make them aware that foreign intelligence agents may be present and that sensitive miliary-related research should not be discussed," said Bryen.

DoD spends several billion dollars each year to fund academic research. The Soviets have identified several universities around the world as sources of high-tech information.

"It's important that we work with these institutions because the research they are doing in many cases has military applications," said Bryen. Defense officials estimate that in the late 1970s and early 1980s, as much as 5 percent of the technology the Soviets were most eager to obtain came fromuniversities.

Bryen said the following technologies are currently at the top of the Soviet's "wish list": artificial intelligence, robotics, robotic sensors and supercomputers.

Mother's Day a commie plot?

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

Warning — Mother's Day is really a communist plot to undermine the stability of the American family.

I have it on good authority that they do not celebrate Mother's Day in Russia, where every day is "Comrade Day," and it is unseemly to single out people for special recognition. But the real reason is that the Russians see the dangers in this particular holiday.

You're probably wondering how taking a day off to honor our mothers for all their hard work, suffering and self sacrifice could be detrimental, but think about it.

Do you know what to give your mother for Mother's Day?

According to an official statistical study (consisting of a phone call to Zayre's — K-Mart's line was busy), more than 95 percent of mothers storm the malls the Monday after Mother's Day, returning the bath robes, toaster covers and back scratchers purchased so lovingly by their children the previous Saturday.

People just don't know what to give their mothers.

You may think if you just had more money to spend you could give something that would please your mother. But no, rich people have the same problem we poor people have.

They give their mother a $6,000 Rolex watch and she takes it back and exchanges it for solid gold ear muffs.

They're just impossible to satisfy.

If this sounds like the voice of experience, you're right. I have yet to buy my mother the right gift. If I give her flowers, it's, "you shouldn't waste your money on those things, they die so quickly." A cactus that the florist guarantees not to die comes down with a mysterious ailment (could it be overwatering) and dies within two weeks of its arrival. Silk flowers wither — plastic ones melt.

COMMENTARY

When I despair and just give her a gift certificate, it's "so, you couldn't take a few minutes out of your busy schedule to look for a present for your poor old mother. If I had only known how you'd turn out when I was getting up at 2 a.m. to feed you." It doesn't count that it took me an hour to go to the store and buy the stupid certificate, it is clear that I spent no time "thinking about" what she would like.

The expensive perfume sends her into fits of sneezing. Chocolates are given to the grandchildren, while I get the reproof, "I'd love to eat them, but my doctor has me on a no-fat diet."

Clothes are absolutely out of the question. If you call her up the day before Mother's Day and ask what size dress she wears, she'll have outgrown the size 12 she requested by the next morning.

Of course, fit is the least of my problems. "You know I can't wear red, brown, black, blue, orange...and this sackcloth and ashes is so much more becoming on me anyway."

Deciding she needs something just for herself, I blow a wad on a makeover at a local salon. To mom, this means I don't like the way she looks, and proves that I don't know how to handle money. "You're going to end up living in the gutter, the way you throw your money away," she declares with a satisfied air.

The next year I buy her an electric blanket. "So you want me to be electrocuted in my sleep, no thank you!" she says.

Despite this constant personal failure, I don't plan to give up this year. As a matter of fact, I think I've finally discovered the perfect Mother's Day gift.

I'm giving her a cruise around the world. I know, she'll be seasick the whole six months. But have you ever tried to talk on one of those ship-to-shore telephones? You can't — the connection is terrible.

Happy Mother's Day!

Soldiers continue to die in motorcycle accidents

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

The good news is that the number of military motorcycle fatalities is going down. The bad news is there are still too many good men and women dying due to lack of respect for the machines.

In fiscal 1984, 224 people in all services lost their lives in motorcycle accidents. In fiscal 1985, 195 died. By 1986, the number was down to 181.

In the past few years, DoD and the services have all beefed up their motorcycle safety rules. All service members and DoD civilians must pass a motorcycle safety course before they can ride on a military installation. They must wear properly fastened helmets, whether the state requires them or not. The helmets, which must meet certain safety standards, must have a face shield, or the rider must wear impact-resistant goggles. Motorcycles must have a rear-view mirror, and the rider must use the headlight at all times.

Individual service regulations go further. The Marine Corps requires reflective vests. The Navy's required safety course lasts two days and includes a lot of hands-on training and skill testing. The Army can require soldiers to pay their own medical expenses if they're in an accident and are not wearing helmet. And Air Force safety people are pushing for a longer required safety course similar to the Navy's.

So why are people still dying?

Alcohol, excessive speed, inexperience and failure to wear required helmets are all part of the problem. Riding borrowed cycles — machines the rider is not familiar with — is another problem.

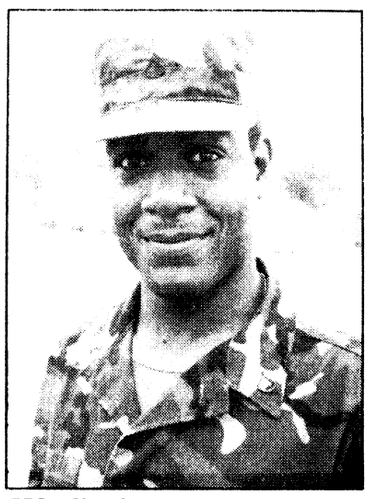
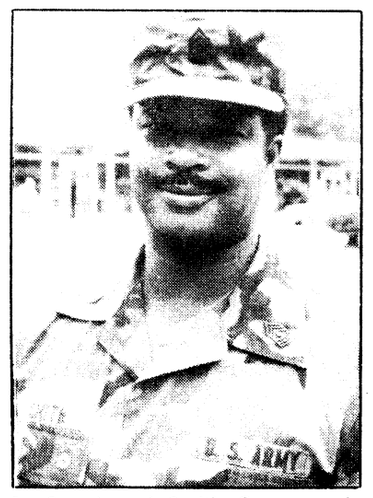
VARIOUS VOICES / What are you going to do for your mother on Mothers Day?

CW2 Thomas Conner, Company C, 43rd Engineers, - "I can't do anything for my mom because she's so far away. I did however get my wife a card and a present and I am going to make her breakfast in bed. Plus, I just let her buy a new dining room set."



Capt. Mark Martinez, Veterinairy-Services, MEDDAC, - "I will send her an autographed copy of this column along with a special frame. Since I haven't seen her in almost a year, a picture would make her very proud even though she is ex-navy."



Sgt. Carl Dibene, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1/29th Infantry, - My wife and I are going to drive down to Florida and take her out to dinner. I love my mom and I guess I've kinda always been her favorite too."

Mrs. Dana Cox, Dental Clinic #1, - "I'm going to call her and send her flowers to make up for all the good times and hard times she went through when I was a kid."

PFC Claude Cochran, Company B, 1/507th PIR, - "I plan to send her something. I have been looking around and I think I've about decided on getting her some jewelry. I am also going to call her on Sunday. She means everything to me. I could say a hundred words but it all boils down to the same thing."

1st Sgt. Joseph Smith, Company A, 1/34 Infantry, Ft. Jackson, South Carolina, - "I'll probably get her some roses and take her out to dinner, I love my mom very much."

Immediate Retirement. If you meet one of the following sets of age and service requirements, you are entitled to an immediate retirement benefit.

Age	Years of Service
62	5
60	20
MRA*	30
MRA*	10

*Minimum Retirement Age
Reduced benefit

NOTE: Reduced benefit means if you retire at the minimum retirement age with at least 10, but less than 30, years of service, your benefit will be reduced 5 percent a year for each year you are uner age 62. The exception: when you have 20 years of service and your annuity begins of age 60 or later.

Early Retirement. The early retirement benefit is available in certain involuntary separation cases and in cases of voluntary separations during a major reorganization or reduction in force. To be eligible, you must be age 50 or older and have at least 20 years of service or, if less than age 50, have at least 25 years of service. There is no reduction for being under 62 years of age in this case.

Deferred Retirement. If you leave federal service, you may be eligible for deferred retirement benefits; that is, defer your retirement benefits until a later time, when you meet a combination of age and service requirements. To be eligible, you must have completed at least five years of creditable civilian service. You may receive benefits at one of the following ages:

Age	Years of Service
62	5
60	20
MRA*	30
MRA*	10

*Minimum Retirement Age
Reduced benefit

How calculated

Your basic benefit is based on your "high-three average pay," which is figured by averaging your highest basic pay over any three consecutive ears of creditable service.

If you are eligible for immediate retirement before age 62, your annual basic benefit is determined by multiplying your years of creditable service by 1 percent of your high-three average pay. If you retire at age 62 or later with at least 20 years of service, a factor of 1.1 percent is used rather than 1 percent.

Remember, the total could be reduced if you elect to retire at the minimum retirement age before completing 30 years of service.

Survivor benefits

The basic benefit plan provides benefits for survivors of federal employees and retirees.

Spouse. A married retiree's annuity is automatically reduced 10 percent to provide spouse survivor benefits unless those benefits are jointly waived in writing by the retiree and the spouse before retirement. If survivor benefits are not waived, the surviving spouse receives an annuity of 50 percent of the retiree's unreduced benefit plus a special supplementary annuity payable until age 60 if the surviving spouse will not be eligible for Social Security survivor benefits until age 60.

A former spouse may receive survivor benefits as provided in a retiree election or a qualifying court order.

If you die while you are an active employee, are married and have worked for the federal government for 18 months, your surviving spouse receives a lump-sum payment equaling $15,000 (indexed to the cost-of-living adjustment for annuitants) plus one-half your annual pay rate at death or one-half your high-three average pay, whichever is higher.

If you had 10 years of service, your spouse also receives an annuity equaling 50 percent of your accrued basic retirement benefit.

These benefits are paid in addition to any Social Security, group life insurance or savings plan survivor benefits.

Children. If you have 18 months of civilian service and die while you are an active employee or if you have retired, your children may be eligible to receive an annuity.

This benefit is payable to each unmarried child:

- Up to age 18 if unmarried;
- up to age 22 if unmarried and a full-time student;
- At any age, if the child became disabled before age 18.

The amount of the benefit depends on the number of children and whether the children are orphaned. In 1987, the surviving child benefit is approximately $2,884 per child for each of three children; $3,502 if orphaned. This is reduced dollar-for-dollar by any Social Security children's benefits that may be payable.

Disability pay

Eligibility. To qualify for disability benefits, you must be disabled and have at least 18 months of creditable civilian service.

You are considered disabled under the Federal Employees Retirement System if you are unable to perform useful and efficient service in your position because of disease or injury. However, you will not be considered disabled if you decline your agency's offer of a position that accommodates your disability and is at the same grade or pay level and is within your commuting area.

You may also qualify for Social Security disability benefits if you are unable to work in any substantial, gainful activity.

Benefits. The first year you will receive 60 percent of your high-three average pay minus any Social Security disability benefits to which you are entitled.

After the first year and until age 62, if your disability prevents you from performing your job and you do not qualify for Social Security disability benefits, your benefit will e 40 percent of your high-three average pay.

If you qualify for Social Security benefits, your disability benefit will be reduced by 60 percent of the initial Social Security benefit to which you are entitled. The resulting total benefit will be equal to at least 40 percent of your high-three plus 40 percent of your Social Security disability benefits.

If you are a disability retiree and your total income from work in a calendar year exceeds 80 percent of the current pay level of your former job, the disability benefits will be discontinued. In addition, you may be required to prove periodically that you have not recovered from your disability.

COLAs

As a regular retiree, you receive a cost-of-living adjustment if you ae age 62 or older.

Survivors and disability retirees receive a cost-of-living adjustment regardless of their ages.

The amount of the annual cost-of-living adjustment increase is based on the increase in the Consumer Price Index.

The Federal Employees Retirement System basic benefits are generally paid in the form of an annuity. Non-disabled retirees may withdraw their own contributions in a lump sum and receive a reduced annuity.

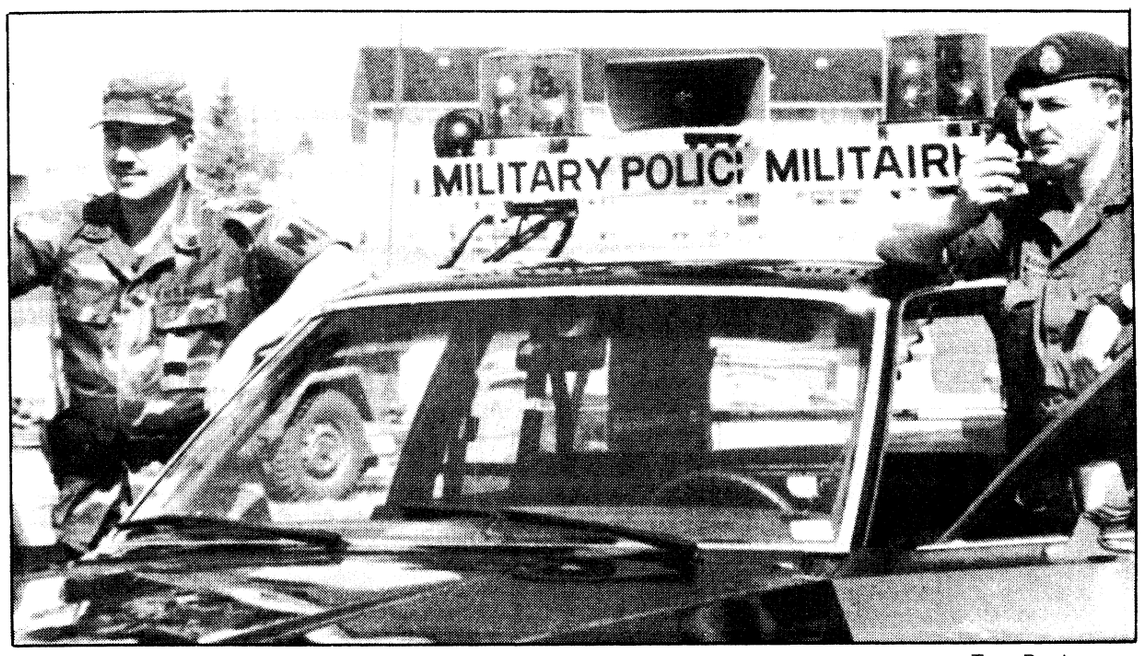
ALBERTA, Canada — Many different elements of the 197th Infantry Brigade and Canadian forces have had the chance to work together and learn from each other during Rendezvous 87, a joint training exercise currently taking place in Alberta Canada. The Military Police are no exception.

The attached MP element that has accompanied Task Force 1-58 to Canada, are working closely with the Camp Wainwright Support MP platoon.

"We currently have 32 Canadian MPs here and three American MPs working with us," said Lt. Glenn Piper, Canadian Officer-in-charge of the MP Support Group. "We back up the 197th military police when they need it and they do the same for us."

"The MPs pair off, one American and one Canadian policeman to a car," explained WO Jim Lemieux, from the Camp Wainwright MP station. "They both patrol and work together, performing normal police duties."

Some of the MP duties include patroling, traffic control, radar (speed trap), and some foot patroling.



Not only do the MPs perform important tasks in garrison, but they also tackle critical missions in the field as well.

During the Field Training Exercise, the Military Police, both American and Canadian, will support the Prisoner of War station.

"We helped support an assault river crossing with the Canadians," said SSgt. Bobby Gilpin, Noncommissioned officer-in-charge of the 197th MP support element. "I think we are really learning a lot from each other."

The 197th Military Police support element consists of ten soldiers who alternate their three-man teams in and out of the field. That way, each team of the 197th MPs gets a chance to work with the Canadians.

"I have really enjoyed working with the Canadian MPs on this exercise," said SP4 Garry Crawford, 197th Military Policeman. "It's really been a good training experience for all of us." — Troy Buchanan, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

An M60A3 tank fires while on the move during tank gunnery qualification at Hastings Range.

Troops test tank gunnery skills

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

A thunderous BOOM cracked through the air as the M60A3 tank fired and rolled out of its defensive position at Fort Benning's Hastings Range. Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 89th Armor began a rigorous training day of qualification.

The soldiers assaulted Hastings Range for quarterly training on individual gunnery skills, which, according to Pvt. 2 Robert Howard from Company A, is the most realistic training available outside of battle.

"When we have tank gunnery, we really get the feel of what the tank is doing," Pvt. 2 Howard said.

The four-man crew of an M60A3 tank consists of a tank commander, driver, loader and a gunner. This crew is trained to work together as a team, operating the tank as if it were an extension of themselves. With the precision of a surgeon and the strength of a lion, the team knocks out targets from defensive positions and while on the move.

According to Capt. David Rhodes, commander of Company A, 2-69 Armor, the crew's first tasks are from a defensive position. Targets are spotted and the driver moves the tank out of the "dug-in" position to engage. The team must successfully engage two gargets at a range of 900 to 1200 meters within 60 seconds.

The tank crew's offensive assault skills are also tested as the crew moves the tank down gunnery lanes, to engage targets while on the move.

"We think of it as a game, Pvt. Howard added, "with the platoons competing against each other."

Quarterly tank gunnery training such as this prepares the crews for annual tank gunnery qualification. During the annual qualification, scheduled during the fall, the crews will qualify at all skill levels, from individual and crew skills to section and platoon battle drills.

Therefore, it can be seen why tank gunnery remains as the key to the armor battalion's training.

Best Rangers

Buddy teams from all over the Army converge on Benning to compete

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The toughest of the Army's Rangers pushed themselves to the limit to see who was the best of the best in last weekend's David E. Grange Best Ranger Competition.

Teams came from as far away as Hawaii to compete for the coveted title of Best Ranger.

After three grueling days of competition, SSgt. William J. Ulibarri and Sgt. Ross Willson, the team from nort Lewis, Wash., was named winners of the competition.

Ulibarri, who participated last year said, "I had to come back — it was something I had to prove to myself."

And prove himself he did. The partners set the stage in the first event, the Army Physical Readiness Test. They amassed over a thousand points in the test which was good for a first place finish. During that test, each man did nearly 150 push-ups.

Consistency proved to be the key to their success, because although they did not finish first in any other event they were consistently in the top five.

The two felt that the Land Navagavigation and Force Road March were their toughest events, while the Darby Queen was the best.

"We breezed right through the Queen," Ulibarri said. "For some reason that is where we seemed to get it together."

Each event was scored individually, with the base score of 35 for a first place finish. The score was then multipled by the degree of difficultly designated.

Five new speed records were set during the competition.

Records were broken in the Prussik climb, forced road march, land navagation, Darby Queen, 2.7 mile buddy run and the water confidence course.

The men competed in seven other events. Ranger stakes (common Ranger skills), Bayonet Assault Course, weapons examination, M16A1 zeroing and record fire, canoe race, parachute spot jump and Helocast-400 meter swim Brothers, SSgts. Jerome and James Ciciora, each with separate partners, were members of a team that set a new record.

Despite all the success stories in the competition there was also some heartache. There were 25 teams that finished out of the original 34.

The victors were awarded Meritorious Service Medals and pistols for their efforts, with the 2nd and 3rd place receiving Army Accomodation Medals and knives and bayonets respectively.

The rest of the finishers received Army Achievement medals.

The competition was designed to place extreme demands on each teams's physical, mental and technical abilities as Rangers.

The finishers met the challenge and truly led the way. But, its not over, most of the men said they would come back. "It gets in your blood," one Ranger said, "I will definately be here next year."

Commander praises people, good organization at 29th Inf

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

As thunder rumbled, skies darkened and lights flickered, Col. John D. Fuller sat in his office and talked about the 29th Infantry Regiment.

He seemed not to notice the storm raging outside the headquarters building last Friday afternoon, so intent was he on conveying what this assignment means to him.

Returning to Benning is a homecoming of sorts for Fuller. It will be his third tour of duty here. "For anybody who's infantry, Fort Benning has to feel like home," he said.

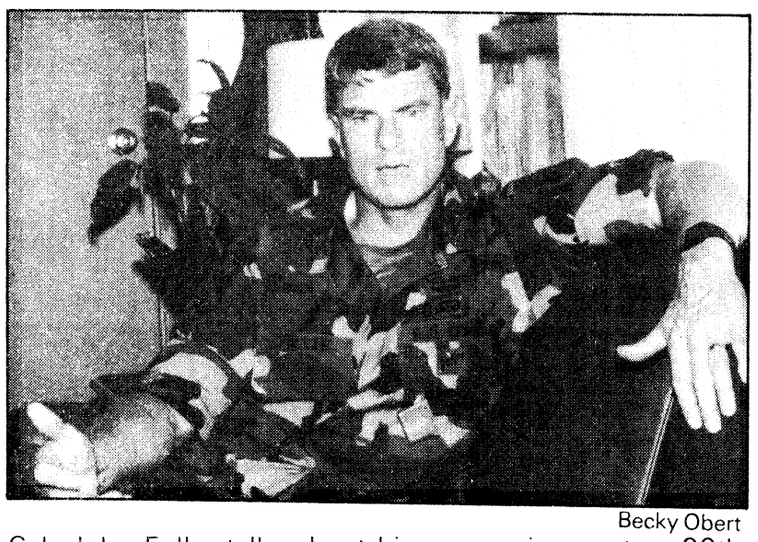
He has spent time here as an instructor in the Ranger Department and in three jobs at the U.S. Army Infantry School.

He served as chief of the Bradley Fighting Vehicle Task Force, commander of the 2nd Training Battalion (Infantry Officer Basic Course), and as chief of the Tactics Division, Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

Fuller said even now, it is impossible for him to walk through Infantry Hall without running into people he knows. "Many of the officers who were students in IOBC when I was there are now back at Benning for the advanced course," he said.

Fuller said that as a commander, he's people oriented. "I like my soldiers. I don't avoid people. I like to do things with my people," he said.

"I like to see every individual who works for me achieve the best they're capable of, "self actualization" in a sense," he said.



"I try to provide an environment where they can do that," he said.

Fuller said he's not the type of leader who likes to micro-manage. "I'd like to be able to give them a mission and walk away, knowing they can get the job done," he said.

He said he expects to be able to do just that at the regiment.

"Morale is high and a sense of unity is already here. That's because Bill Gavin (the former commander) is one of those rare guys who inspires people to feel like a part of a family," he said.

Fuller said he has the utmost admiration for the job Gavin did while in command of the regiment. "He accomplished an almost impossible task of pulling together so many diverse organizations under one umbrella," he said

Col. John Fuller talks about his new assignment as 29th Infantry Regiment commander.

His personal philosophy is to give any job his best personal and professional effort, but not make work the end all. "I have a responsibility to duty but also one to take care of the people who work for me, to stroke them when they need to be stroked and discipline them when necessary," he said.

Family comes high on the list of priorities for Fuller. "Far too often we get caught up in duty and neglect our families," he said. "A lot of people work long hours just to be seen in the office. I'll work long and hard but I also save time for my wife and children."

He said he agreed with the so-called "triangle of life" that Gavin shared with him. At the top is duty, the Army mission. at the bottom, one apex is family and another is self.

"If a person is secure in his family and with himself, he's going to be better at the job," he said. "If you accept this, then you can see that family and self are the firm foundations of a soldier's life."

He said he doesn't believe in neglecting any of these three aspects of his life.

For this reason, Fuller said he believes in working for mental as well as physical fitness. "It's very easy to get caught up in the pressure cooker of the job, but sometimes you have to put your in-box in the safe and get away for while," he said.

Fuller said he does this in a variety of ways. "I like competitive bicycling and working out in the gym, and I enjoy woodworking," he said.

He also enjoys doing things with his children, but said, "I never feel that I give enough time to my family."

Fuller said his parents moved to Columbus in February, so now all his ties are here. His two children by a previous marriage also live here, so the assignment allows him to spend more time with them.

Of his new command, Fuller said there are several things he has on his agenda. First, he wants to ensure that the regiment stays a regiment. "I think it's important to the infantry force to maintain this organization as a regiment, rather than a support brigade, because the regiment has a unique structure and mission," he said. "Also, the regiment's lineage and tradition provides a foundation for our current mission. I think to rename it would be a grave step backwards."

His second goal is to continue the "good work" started by his predecessors. "I'd like to continue their work of training to high Army standards and helping the Infantry School and Center send out the best infantry soldiers and leaders possible to be fighting forces in the field," he said.

Hand in hand with this goal is a desire to take a hard look at the way the regiment is presently performing its mission. "I want to make sure that we are structured in the best way possible to perform our diverse missions, and make any internal realignments needed," he said.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Military Police Activity

May is Auto Theft Prevention month on Fort Benning. That is, therefore, an appropriate time to examine the problem of auto theft.

The Military Police are aware that auto thieves are active and are taking every possible action to apprehend them. However, due to the vast number of parking lots on the installation it will take a total community effort to discourage the auto thief.

An Army-wide analysis has indicated that the junior enlisted soldier is the most frequent victim of auto theft. For these soldiers the theft of a vehicle represents the loss of his or her single greatest investment.

Some things that an individual can do to prevent vehicle theft are:

- Secure the vehicle.

Auto theft on post seems to be primarily a crime against targets of opportunity. Most vehicles are stolen by personnel who use the vehicle for an evening and then abandon it. Most stolen vehicles were unsecured.

Some were left running by the victim who left the vehicle for a short errand, and many were stolen using the key that the owner had left "hidden" in the vehicle.

- Mark the vehicle.

If vehicles are stolen for resale, it is likely that the Vehicle Identification Number will be defaced or modified. Owners can increase their chances of recovery by marking their vehicle in a manner or place that is likely to be overlooked by the thief.

Simple, but effective "tricks" such as scratching one's social security number on a steering wheel or other obscure spot, or dropping one's business card down the window slot in the door have in the past led to the successful identification of cars that were stolen and disguished by thieves.

Various anti-tamper devices are available for use in POV's, and may be particularly worthwhile investments for expensive cars in areas where auto theft rates are high. Once activated on a locked car, these devices set off a bell, horn, buzzer, or other noise-making device should someone attempt to open a door, turn the steering wheel, or move the gearshift lever.

- Don't keep a title in the vehicle.

Possession by a thief of a vehicle's title makes it much easier for him to dispose of a vehicle.

- Secure motorcycles and mopeds.

A third of all vehicles stolen Army-wide each year are motorcycles or mopeds. Most of these vehicles come with fork locks that keep the front wheel from turning. While this may be effective with large motorcycles, it is not adequate for mopeds or other light vehicles since they may be easily lifted by one man and carried away.

In addition to the fork lock, a moped should be secured to a fixed object.

Vehicle theft costs all of us twice: first, in terms of property loss and insurance rates; second, in taxes that go to maintain law enforcement services and other agencies of vehicle crime control. The problem can only be solved when each of us recognizes its effects, and takes aggressive action to do something about it.

Safety

Jim Filek, the motorcycle safety expert at the Navy Safety Center in Norfolk, Va., said that a big problem is that young people think they are never going to die.

"What really hurts is that these are smart guys — they're in the 'A' schools," said a spokesman at Marine Corps headquarters in Washinton, D.C. "As one general put it, they've got heads on their shoulers, but they obviously don't have common sense."

All of the factors boil down to this: Motorcycling, a fun way to get from point A to point B, can also be a lethal weapon. It deserves that respect.

One of the basic ways to show respect for a motorcycle is never to drink and ride. "Alcohol and motorcycles don't mix," said Jerald Anderson, DoD's deputy director for safety and occupational health policy. "It's dangerous to drink and drive, but even more dangerous to drink and ride a motorcycle. Riding a motorcycle requires much greater mental and physical skill than driving a car."

Although alcohol was confirmed as a factor in only 32 of the 181 military motorcycle fatalities in 1986, experts think the real figures are higher. According to the Motorcycle Safety Foundation, between 40 and 45 percent of all riders killed in motorcycle accidents had been drinking. Not all of these individuals were legally intoxicated, but it doesn't take much alcohol to impair your skills on a motorcycle. Even small amounts of alcohol impair your ability to:

- ride and scan the road for hazards at the same time;
- perceive moving objects;
- see clearly at night;
- react quickly;
- coordinate eye, had and foot movements;
- maintain balance while maneuvering; and
- make good decisions.
- coordinate eye, hand and foot movements;
- maintain balance while maneuvering; and
- make good decisions.

Lack of experience in riding is another big factor in motorcycle accidents. Sixty percent of all motorcycle accidents involve riders with less than a year's experience.

Taking a good motorcycle safety course helps. Air Force Master Sgt. Chester Thompson, Aerospace Safety Center, Norton Air Force Base, Calif., said that of the 12,000 persons ho have taken the Air Force's optional 12-hour, hands-on course, only one-half of one percent have and an accident of any kind. (The Air Force requires a four-hour classroom course and a demonstration of basic skills to get the decal necessary to register a motorcycle on base).

Not all motorcycle safety problems are the biker's fault. Some safety rules are designed to protect bikers rom unsafe automobile drivers. Wearing reflective vests and keeping the headlight on in daylight make it harder for a driver to say he didn't see you. Automobile drivers who make this claim are a factor in two-thirds of motorcycle collisions, according to the Motorcycle Safety Foundation.

Schools kick off energy contest

Post Energy Office

The Fort Benning School System has kicked off its spring Energy Awareness Program sponsored by Energy Management Section of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing. A post essay contest patterned after last year's successful program will be undertaken again.

The theme for this year's contest is "Our Energy - Our Future." Students in grades K thru 3 will prepare an energy poster and grades 4 through 8 will write an energy essay on the theme. The student with the best poster or essay in each grade will receive a new bicycle and a certificate of achievement signed by the commanding general.

The second place winner in each grade will receive a $50 savings bond and a certificate of achievement signed by the commanding general.

All students that participate will receive an "Energy Buster" T-shirt. The winners will be announced May 27, with prizes and certificates presented May 29, in the new Faith School Gym.

This contest provides an opportunity for students, parents and teachers to increase their energy awareness and support of the Fort Benning Energy Program.

The Spring Energy Awareness Program presently underway in the Fort Benning School System provided Energy Management personnel with one additional reward that wasn't expected. While preparing the purchase request for bicycles to be awarded to the winners of the Energy Poster and Essay Contest another opportunity presented itself. Why not purchase a bicycle for our own use? Well that's justwhat we did and the result has been both enlightening and exciting.

We discovered there are about as many bicycles in the U.S. as there are automobiles: over 100 million. Most people know bicycles are a major form of transportation in other countries but interest is increasing here at home also. Not only is the bicycle fun but it can be an efficient, inexpensive and non-polluting way to travel to work or run errands. Several states are making provisions for cyclists in road planning that includes paved shoulders, wide outside lanes and drainage grates designed to avoid catching bike wheels.

There are many benefits to cycling. A bicycle costs an average of 50 dollars per year to operate versus $1,000 to $2,000 per year for a car. In our case, many trips are less than 1 miles, such as run from the energy office to Building 35 and Building 4. The automobile is very inefficient during short runs these.

There is another important benefit to cycling. The exercise improves your health and makes you feel better. However, let me advise you to take one precaution. If you haven't ridden a bicycle in several years, as in my case, don't overdo it to begin with. After just a few short trips you'll begin to see your endurance and stamina increase tremendously.

WASHINGTON — The Series EE Bond is an appreciation-type security that has a maturity of 12 years. Its purchase price is 50 percent of its face amount. For example, a $100 bond costs $50. Denominations (face amounts) available for $50, $75, $100, $200, $500, $1,000, $5,000 and $10,000.

The Series HH Bond is available in exchange for Series E and/or U.S. Savings Notes (Freedom Shares) with a total redemption value of $500 or more. It is a current-income security, available at par in denominations of $500, $1,000, $5,000 and $10,000.

Complete safety

U.S. Savings Bonds are guaranteed as to principle and interest by the full faith and credit of the United States. If lost, stolen, mutilated, or destroyed, the bonds will be replaced without charge upon application — and will bear the original issue dates.

The interest on Series EE bonds purchased on or after Nov. 1, 1982, and held five years or longer is set at 85 percent of the average return on 5-year Treasury marketable securities during the holding period, rounded to the nearest quarter percent and compounded semiannually. Bonds purchased through October 1986 are guaranteed to earn a minimum of 7.5 percent when held at least five years; bonds purchased on or after Nov. 1, 1986 have a minimum rate of 6 percent when held at least five years. Bonds redeemed before being held five years earn interest on a fixed, graduated scale.

Series E and EE bonds and Savings Notes purchased before Nov. 1, 1982, are eligible for market-based rates if held to their interest-accrual date occurring five years after the start of the market-based interest program. Minimum rates vary according to purchase dates and when a bond last entered an extended maturity period.

Deferred interest

Interest on EE bonds accrues through periodic increases in redemption value, and is payable when a bond is cashed. The redemption value reflects the principal amount plus interest accrued during the holding period. Series EE bonds become eligible for redemption six months after issue. Interest on HH bonds is paid semi-annually by check directly to the HH bond holder.

Where offered by employers, the Payroll Savings Plan permits Series EE Savings Bonds to be prchased through regular deductions from pay. Bonds also may be purchased over-the-counter for cash at most banks and many savings and loan associations, and other financial institutions.

HH bonds may be purchased only in exchange for Series E/EE bonds and Savings Notes at Federal Reserve Banks and Branches and from the Bureau of the Public Debt, Parkersburg, W. Va. 26106-1328. Most savings bonds issuing agents will forward exchange applications for customers.

Easy to redeem

At the owner's option, EE bonds may be redeemed at any time after six months from issue date at most banks or other financial institutions. HH bonds are redeemable at any Federal Reserve Bank or Branch, or at the Bureau of the Pubic Dept., Parkersburg, W. Va. 26106-1328, any time after six months from issue.

Reporting of interest for federal income tax purposes may be deferred until EE bonds are cashed, disposed of, or reach final maturity, whichever comes first.

Reporting of accrued interest on bonds and notes presented in exchange for HH bonds may continue to be deferred, for federal tax purposes, until the HH bonds are cashed, disposed of, or reach final maturity, whichever comes first. However, the interest earned on the HH bonds must be reported each year for federal income tax purposes. EE and HH bonds are exempt from state, local and personal property taxes, but are subject to inheritance and estate taxes levied by state and localities.

Easily cashed

Six months after issue, Series EE bonds may be exchanged alone or in combination with eligible Series E bonds or U.S. Savings Notes — for current income Series HH bonds. The bonds and notes presented for exchange must have a total redemption value of $500 or more. HH bonds obtained by exchange pay interest by check every six months at a level rate of 6 percent per year.

All bonds may be issued in the name of one person; in the names of two persons as co-owners; or in the name of one person as owner with a second person as beneficiary.

No probate

If, upon the death of the owner, there is a surviving co-owner or beneficiary named on the bonds, their bonds do not form a part of a decedent's estate for probate purposes. Subject to applicable estate or inheritance taxes, if any, they become the sole and absolute property of the survivor.

Tables of Redemption Values for Savings Bonds are published regularly and are available from the Superintended of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. Banks can also provide information on redemption values to bond owners.

Savings bond Q&A

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Q: What is the market-based interest formula for Savings bonds?

A: The market-based rate formula sets interest yields on Series EE and outstanding Series E (issued after October 1947) and U.S. Savings Notes (Freedom Shares) held five years or longer after November 1982. Market-based rates are set semiannually in May and November, and bonds held five years or longer receive the average of semiannual rates, rounded to the nearest quarter percent and compounded semiannually, in effect during the holding period. For bonds issued since Nov. 1, 1986, and held five years or longer, there is a minimum rate of 6 percent; these bonds reach maturity in 12 years — the time it takes the bond to reach face value at the minium rate.

Q: How is the market-based rate set?

A: Each May 1 and Nov. 1, the Treasury computes the average daily market yield on five-year Treasury marketable securities during the preceding six months. The Savings bonds rate is set at 85 percent of the market average. At the end of five years, the average of the 10 semi-annually rates, rounded to the nearest quarter percent and compounded on a semi-annual basis, determines a bond's five year yield. If a bond is held for six years, 12 semi-annual rates are averaged, and so on. Bonds held less than five years earn interest on a fixed, graduated scale.

Q: I hold bonds purchased before November 1986. Do they now get the 6 percent minimum rate?

A: In most cases, no. All bonds with minimum rates higher than 6 percent continue to receive those rates as their minimum to the end of their original or current extended — maturity period. As bonds enter new extension periods, they will begin to receive the new minimum. Under current market conditions, persons holding bonds with higher guaranteed rates have every incentive to retain them.

Q: Is there any change in the rates paid on Series H and HH bonds?

A: Yes. Beginning with HH bonds issued in November 1986, a flat rate of 6 percent per annum (annually) is in effect. Older H and HH bonds continue to receive their previous guaranteed rate (either 8.5 percent or 7.5 percent) to the end of their current original or extended maturity period.

Q: Is there a limit on the amount of Savings Bonds a person may buy?

A: Yes. The annual limit on the amount of Series EE bonds an individual may buy is $15,000, issue price ($30,000 face amount). This limit applies to the amount of bonds that may be purchased in the name of any one person in any one calendar year; it has no effect on cumulative holdings. Purchasing bonds in co-ownership form can effectively double the limit, assuming the co-owner has purchased no other bonds. There is no limit of HH bonds that may be issued in exchange for Series E and EE bonds and Savings Notes, or purchased with the redemptive proceeds of matured Series H bonds.

Q: Where can I get more information on Savings Bonds?

A: Current rate information can be obtained toll-free by calling 1-800 US Bonds (in metropolitan Washington D.C., USA-8888). Other information can be obtained from many financial institutions, Federal Reserve Banks and Branches, and Savings Bonds Division District offices. Information on replacing lost or stolen bonds, or re-issuing existing securities, can be obtained by writing to the Bureau of Public Dept., Parkersburg, W. Va. 26106-1328.

Savings bond rates tied to market factors

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Department of the Treasury announced late last year that the current minimum rate for new purchases of series EE United States Savings Bonds held five years or longer will be 6 percent.

The current minimum rate, replacing the 7.5 percent minimum rate in effect from Nov. 1, 1982 through Oct. 31, 1986, will affect all EE bonds purchased on or after Nov. 1, 1986, until such time as market conditions again may require a change in the current minimum rate. Older bonds will retain their previously-quaranteed rates until the end of their original or current extended maturity period.

In the announcement, the Treasury noted that the market-based rate system and the basic features of Series EE bonds remain unchanged, guaranteeing bond owners a competitive return under all market conditions.

EE bonds held five years or longer receive 85 percent of the average return of five-year Treasury marketable securities during the holding period. If the resulting rate is above the minimum rate current at the time of purchase, a bond holder receives that market rate, rounded to the nearest quarter percent, compounded semi-annually from the date of purchase. If the average rate is below the minimum rate current at the time or purchase, the bond holder receives that minimum rate from the date of purchase, if the bond is held at least five years. Also, E.E. bonds are exempt from state and local income taxes, and federal tax may be deferred until a bond is redeemed or reached final maturity.

The present change in the curent minimum rate reflects the decline in market interest rates during the past year. Periodic changes up or down in the current minimum rate are likely in the future as market interest rates continue to fluctuate.

Semi-annual market-based rates are announced each May and November, based on 85 percent of the market rates on five year Treasury securities during the preceding six months. These rates, in turn, form the basis for the rate on a bond held five years or longer.

Starting Nov. 1, 1986, until such time as the current minimum rate is revised, new Series EE bonds will have a maturity period of 12 years. Savings bonds maturities are based on the time it takes a bond to increase in value from the issue price to face amount at the minimum rate current at the time of purchase. If the market-based rate applying to a bond is higher than the current minimum, it will double in value sooner, and continue to earn interest to maturity. Bonds held less than five years earn interest at fixed, graduated rates depending on how long they are held and the scale in effect on the date or purchase.

EE bonds purchased before Nov. 1, 1986, as well as all Series E bonds and Savings Notes eligible for market-based interest, retain a 7.5 percent, or higher, minimum rate through their original or current extended maturity.

Savings bond sales have increased rapidly since the introduction of market-based interest in November 1982, from $3.1 billion during FA 1982 to $8.2 billion in FY 1986. More than $87 billion worth of Savings bonds are now held by the public.

Beginning Nov. 1, until such time as the current minimum rate is revised, new issues of Series HH Savings bonds, available only in exchange for Series EE and E bonds and Savings Notes with combined redemption values of $500 or more, will earn interest at a flat 6 percent rate over a 10-year maturity period. Older HH and H bonds retain their current interest rates to the end of their current original or extended maturity periods. Interest on both H and HH bonds is paid semiannually by check.

REENLIST.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

"WE FEEL GOOD ABOUT LEAVING JAMAHL AT THE DAY-CARE CENTER BECAUSE THEY TREAT HIM LIKE HE'S THEIR OWN CHILD."

SSG Ken and SP4 Jacquie Farmer

"We never really considered leaving Jamahl with anyone except a private sitter. But our first visit to the new Child Development Center here at Fort Hood sure changed our minds.

"We know our son is well taken care of. So we can concentrate on our jobs without worrying about what he's doing.

"He learns, instead of just playing. He counts, sings, says his ABC's. And they teach him to be more independent.

"Jacquie and I have peace of mind when Jamahl's at the Center. They take care of him, and he's learning, and those are the two most important things."

The Army's Day-Care programs are making modern day-care facilities available to more children each day. And the quality of the "Caregivers" who attend the children has never been higher. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

Be a PAL!

Group needs adults to work with disadvantaged kids

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

John and Debra Smith's parents are divorced. Johnny and Debbie need a companion — a friend — a pal. Can anyone help?

The Columbus Family Counseling Center, Inc., sponsors a PALS (People Able To Love and Share) program, which offers a big-brother, big-sister companionship to the many "Johnnys" and "Debbies" of the local area.

According to local officials of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, there are more than 60,000 single parent homes in Columbus.

"It's a reoccurring theme," said SSgt. Richard R. Flowers, a 3rd Battalion Ranger and PALS volunteer.

"My father was not available for me when I was growing up. So I've always wanted to give what I could to those coming up as I did," Flowers said.

Flowers' pal is 10-year-old Antonio T. Hall who, "enjoys a bit of everything, especially going places with his new companion."

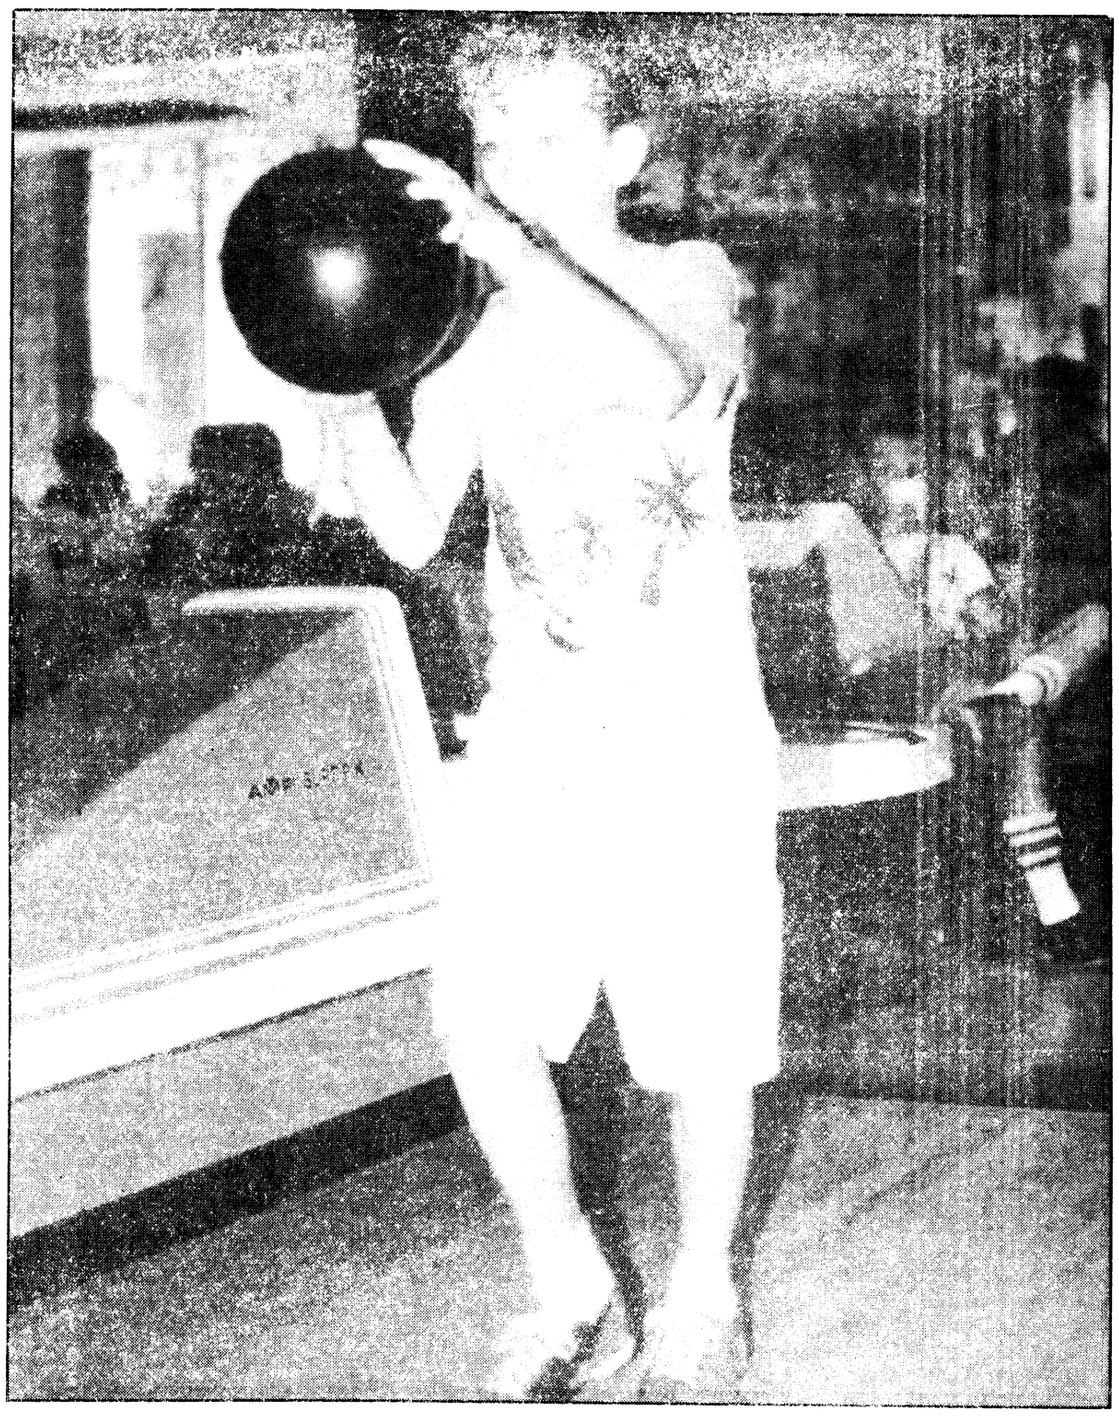
The Flowers-Hall combination has been ongoing for more than a year.

The PALS concept was dreamt of Romolo A. Cannamela more than eight years ago. Cannamela, Director Family Counseling Center, spent three years studying and planning to make the program a reality.

The program, funded by United Way, celebrated it's fifth anniver-sary in February.

"Columbus is vey fortunate to have a program such as this. It lets the child know there is someone else that really cares. It offers companonship with a capitol "C," said Shelia Standridge, mother of a PALS program participant.

With 44 individual matches, and 11 children group matched, there are still 32 children on the waiting list.



According to Sara Stone, PALS program coordinator, "children wait for a pal for an average of six months. But there are many who have been on the list for more than a year."

Volunteers trained to help women deal with the aftermath of rape

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Jane is at Martin Army Community Hospital. She has just been raped and is all alone. What does she do? Where does she turn?

That is where Fort Benning's Rape Crisis Volunteers step in.

According to Jan Anderson, Social Services Counselor and coordinator for the volunteer program. They are taught communication and active listening skills, police, legal and hospital procedures.

"The volunteers are on call mainly during the weekends and evenings," she said, "their name and number are on a roster at the hospital."

When a lady is called she has to be ready to go. She meets the victim at the hospital and stays with her while she is being examined by the doctor and interrogated by the Military Police.

Anderson stressed that the volunteers are not professionals and that they are on call just so that person won't have to be alone during that very difficult time right after the rape.

"When I get to the hospital I find out where the victim is and I go and introduce myself," Sue Jones, a volunteer said, "I like to meet with and prepare her for what is going to happen when she gets examined by the doctor."

The examination is a very long drawn out procedure because the doctor is looking for evidence that can be used aginst the rapist, Mrs. Jones said.

"It can be very scary for the woman when she is being checked," she said, "her whole body is being exposed after just being raped."

Mrs. Jones said that most of the women she has dealt with are very receptive to her aid.

"We let them cry, just hold our hand, talk or whatever," she said, "most of the time they have no one else but us."

"Sometimes the women stay in touch after the rape," Mrs. Jones said, "I received a call from one woman who had left Fort Benning but remembered me on the anniversary of the rape."

The program is always seeking volunteers, and "the program works," said Mrs. Anderson.

"Communities who have Rape Crisis programs are more likely to have more convictions," she said, "because, the victim has had the support of the volunteer."

EFMP identifies families with special needs

Military Personnel Center

The Army's Exceptional Family Member Program can make life much easier for soldiers who have family members with special needs.

Enrollment in the EFMP allows assignment managers to identify soldiers whose family members have special physical, emotional or intellectual needs that require access to educational or medical services. Assignment managers can then consider whether projected assignment locations have the appropriate services.

"The EFMP provides assignment cosideration for soldiers with exceptional family members," said SFC Enoch F. Foy of the Military Personnel Center's Compassionate Review Branch. "Those needs are one more factor we consider, such as rank and military occupational specialty, when a soldier comes up for assignment.

"This program enhances soldiers' tours by having the services needed readily available for their families," Foy continued. "But MILPERCEN has to know about those special needs early in the assignment process so we can consider them before we make assignment decisions."

Mandatory screening for family members of soldiers, officer and enlisted, who receive orders for overseas assignments took effect Aug. 1, 1986. Screening involves checking medical and school records. That screening leads to identification of exceptional family members, who must then be enrolled in the EFMP.

Soldiers enroll through their local medical treatment facilities by filling out information packets. Medical and/or educational specialists verify the information, and the packets are sent to the appropriate regional medical center to be coded into booklets.

MILPERCEN receives those booklets and puts the coded information into its EFMP data base. EFMP information does not go into a soldier's field file or Official Military Personnel File. MILPERCEN uses it strictly for assignment purposes.

"EFMP data never goes before a promotion or school selection board," Foy explained. "Having family members in this program does not affect a soldier's career progression in any way."

When a soldier in the EFMP is nominated for assignment, MILPERCEN coordinates with the proposed gaining command to determine if the needed services are available where a valid personnel requirement exists. When services are not available, MILPERCEN may consider alternate assignments.

While every effort is made to find assignments that meet family members' needs, the needs of the Army come first. Soldiers might have to serve unaccompanied tours if the Army needs their skills in locations where there are no services for their families.

"In the majority of cases we meet the needs of the Army and the family," Foy said.

According to Lt. Col. Joseph Serio, chief of the Compassionate Review Branch, about 11,000 family members have enrolled in the program so far.

"When exceptional family members are identified, we have the flexibility to make smart assignments," Serio explained. "This program works. It increases readiness, provides family members with the treatment they need, helps the exceptional family member, the soldier and the Army."

The Army Community and Family Support Center is the proponent for the Exceptional Family Member Program. MILPERCEN works with it and the Medical Department to ensure the welfare of soldiers and their family members, to maintain Army families.

Local Army Community Service centers can help soldiers and families find community support services. These include cultural and recreational activities, such as Special Olympics; respite care, where families can get a break from the 24-hour care required for a handicapped child or adult; and information on or assistance with establishing parent support groups.

There are also provisions for soldiers who are not assigned near Army medical treatment facilities to get their family members screened for and enrolled in the EFMP. When a soldier is assigned at a location more than 60 miles from the nearest Army medical treatment facility, the soldier should contact the personnel service center reassignment section. It will provide information and referral to the medical treatment facility point of contact responsible for medical processing into the EFMP.

The point of contact will provide procedures for processing the necessary screening paperwork to civilian medical authorities or other military services' medical treatment facilities, as appropriate. This includes payment procedures.

Key to preventing teen suicide is recognizing symptoms, acting

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

It may seem surprising, but there are more suicides in spring than in the gloomy winter months. Perhaps that's why June is Youth Suicide Prevention Month.

Suicide is the second cause of death among college students, and the third for youths between ages 14 and 25. Accidents, many of which experts believe are disguised suicides, are the leading cause.

Every day, 1,000 Americans attempt suicide. Every year, more than 6,500 young Americans succeed.

Unfortunately, young people are impressionable, and the suicide of one teen-ager can lead a second troubled teen to copy the desperate act.

But suicide can be prevented. According to information provided by the Military Family Resource Center, nearly 80 percent of those who commit suicide give some warning of their intentions. Furthermore, most suicidal people are that way for only a brief period in their lives. If given the proper assistance and support at that time, they will probably never be suicidal again.

According to the experts, factors that increase the risk of suicide are:

- Depression, indicated by changes in appetite and/or sleep patterns, loss of interest in pleasurable activities, lethargy or agitation, feelings of guilt or worthlessness and withdrawal from family and friends;
- Previous suicide attempts;
- Loss of a friend through suicide;
- Drug or alcohol abuse; and
- Alcoholics in the family.

Military suicide experts say that a suicide attempt is highly likely if someone with one or more of the risk factors for suicide shows any of the following warning signs:

- Talking about suicide;
- Giving away possessions, making a will and "getting his life in order" — this could include attempts to make restitution for past misdeeds;
- Obsession with death, listening to a lot of sad music or reading sad poetry — the person may do art work or write letters on the subject of death;
- Making specific plans to commit suicide and getting access to lethal means.

Not everyone shows such obvious signs, so the experts advise you to take all threats seriously and trust your suspicions.

They also suggest:

- If you believe someone is suicidal, try to get him to talk — then listen. Don't be afraid to confront the person. Start by asking if he is depressed, but lead up to asking if he's thinking of suicide.
- Let him know you care about him — people who are thinking about suicide usually feel unloved. Let himknow the situation is not as esperate as she might think, but avoid guilt-inducing comments such as, "You're so much better off than most."
- Until you feel sure the crisis period is over, avoid leaving a suicidal person alone.
- Get professional help. For military people, there are a number of sources. If the problem is immediate, the hospital emergency room is the best source. Also, suicide hotlines or 24-hour "help-lines" are available in many areas. Otherwise, such resources as the family service or family support center, mental heath service, the alcohol and drug counseling center, the chaplain and social work services can provide help.

Wise mother displays delight for her children

By William T. Laigaie
3-14th Inf 2nd Bde correspondent

Whom does the Bible rate as a wise and loving mother? What does the Bible say about mothers? According to the book of Proverbs, a wise mother displays diligence, discipline, and delight toward her children. Let's look at a few verses.

First, a wise mother displays diligence in duty. "She provides food for her family . . ., she sets about her work vigorously . . ., she opens her arms to the poor and extends her hands to the needy" (Proverbs 31:15, 17, 20). "She watches over the affairs of her household and does not eat the bread of idleness" (Proverbs 31:27). So, a wise mother provides for her family's physical needs. She sets the example for active loving-kindness: inwardly towards her family members and outwardly towards needy people in her community and sphere of association.

Next, a wise mother disciplines and teaches her children. "The rod of correction imparts wisdom, but a child left to itself disgraces his mother" (Proverbs 29:15). "She speaks with wisdom, and faithful instruction is on her tongue" (Proverbs 31:27). A skillful mother, then, sets and enforces firm guidelines for her children. She spends time instructing and showing them how to live.

Also, a wise mother (and father) delights at her child's upright behavior. "The father of a righteous man has great joy; he who has a wise son delights in him; may she who gave you birth rejoice" (Proverbs 23:24-25). This mother outwardly expresses joy. She shows satisfaction when her child responds to loving guidance and acts in the same way.

Therefore, the wise mother is the one who provides for her family's physical needs. She sets the example for active kindness. She gives guidance and instruction for living. She openly praises her children for acting in a life-enhancing way. She displays diligence, discipline, and delight towards her children.

Do you want to be a wise mother? The way to begin is to "fear the Lord", that is, to put life in the proper perspective. We need God's help to navigate the way successfully through life. The wise mother develops her life skills and mothering skills. She searches God's Word and makes it her continuous practice to grow according to its wise teaching.

Don't you think we should praise and appreciate our wise mothers? "Her children arise and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praises her. Charm is deceptive and beauty is fleeting; but a woman who fears the Lord is to be praised" (Proverbs 31:28-30). A mother who is blessed enhances and enriches life for her entire family. Let's encourage ourselves, our wives, our mothers to look at God's loving, caring communication. Let's resolve to listen to God's call for skill in living, skill in the high position and privilege of being a mother.

A: The veteran's and the spouse's income are considered in determining ability to repay the loan.

Q: Can a non-veteran assume a GI loan?

A: Yes. VA approval is not required before a veteran or a nonveteran assumes a GI loan. However, before the veteran-seller can be released from liability in the case of a loan default, the buyer must be credit-worthy and acceptable to the VA.

Q: What is the current VA-guaranteed mortgage rate?

A: The VA-guaranteed mortgage rate was set at 9.5 percent on April 13, 1987.

Classes help teachers relate to foreign born students

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Recognizing and respecting cultural differences leads to understanding and learning, according to Charlotte Osterburg, of the Allied Student Training Detachment.

Based on this statement and Osterburg's 13 years of working with allied officers from all over the world, Elizabeth Thornton, the Muscogee County School District's staff development director, asked Osterburg to conduct seminars for county teachers on understanding different cultures. She felt the course was needed as a result of the influx of foreign nationals into the Fort Benning-Columbus area.

"Elizabeth felt that since I have been dealing with allied officers from all over the world for more than 13 years, I would be the natural choice to teach teachers about understanding and dealing with different cultures," Osterburg said.

A German who emigrated to the U.S. in 1957, Osterburg serves as the program director for the detachment, which takes care of the needs of foreign allied officers attending schools at Fort Benning. She deals with officers from almost every continent in the world on a daily basis and, in her seminar, hits on the nuts and bolts of how to treat and interact with people from different countries.

"As a result of the School of Americas, American Family Life Corporation and the military in general, Columbus has a large foreign population. Many of these people send their children to Muscogee County schools and their customs are very different from ours. Teachers who can understand and deal with these different customs will be able to teach these children more effectively," Osterburg said.

She touches on different cultural differences from specific countries during her five, two-hour long seminars, which began in November.

"This time I am covering Pakistan, Venezuela, Iceland, Korea, Belize and Malaysia. I also use officers from the ASTD as speakers. That way the teachers are getting their information from the horse's mouth," she said."Some examples I give, as anecdotes, are things such as a Turkish officer who was at his sponsor's house for a barbecue. His sponsor asked him if he liked his steak medium. He said yes but later confessed to the host that he would have preferred a large steak but felt awkward asking," Osterburg said.

Besides using anecdotes, Osterburg said she also uses concrete dos and don'ts when dealing with other cultures.

Osterburg said having children from other countries in the classroom is a positive experience for both foreign national and American children because they all learn new things about each other's cultures and themselves.

Follow these tips to avoid check writing mistakes

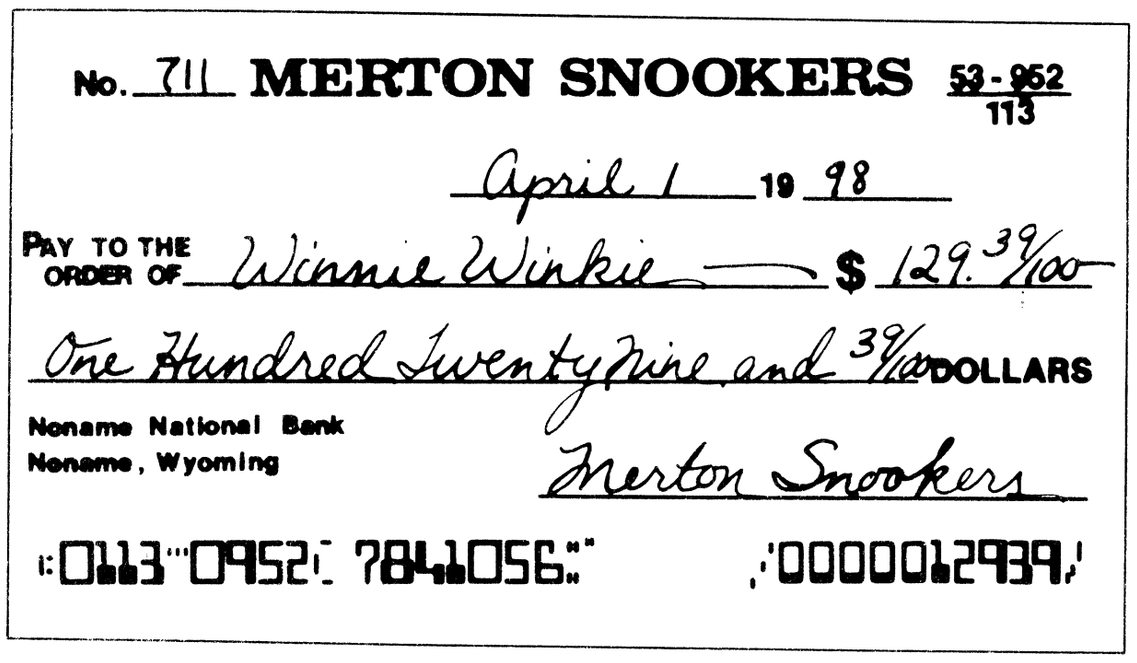
American Forces Press Service

Ninety percent of money payments are made by check.

They are safe, since it means you don't have to carry around a lot of cash.

You can pay bills by mail,and cancelled checks serve as a good record of expenses.

But what if you mess up in writing your checks and fail to keep an accurate record of them? In that case, the benefits of a checking account can disappear, and you could find yourself with new problems.



Here are some pointers for avoiding errors and problems:

- Write left. Print or write clearly all words and numbers as far to the left as possible. If you don't need all the space given, draw a line to fill the remaining space.
- Use a pen. Never write a check in pencil or erasable pen.
- Use today's date. The date on the check should be the current date. Some people date a check ahead (post-dating) to a time when enough money can be deposited to cover the check. Bank tellers are instructed to refuse these; however, some post-dated checks may get cashed or deposited anyway, causing an overdraft of your account.

Also, avoid giving or accepting a check dated six months or more in the past, since many banks will not accept them.

- Match numbers. Make sure the amount in numbers and the amount in words are the same. It's the written sum that's legally binding. For clarity, use the word "and" only once — between the dollar and cents figure. For example, write "One hundred twenty-five and 75/100," not "one hundred and twenty-five and 75/100."
- Match names. Sign the check exactly the way your name appears on your signature card at your bank. If you have imprinted checks, it should be the same as the printed name on your check. Also, if a check is made out to you, endorse it on the back, left edge exactly the way it's made out to you, even if your name is misspelled. Then write your name correctly underneath.
- Double check. Don't sign the check until you're sure the information is correct and complete. If you goof, write a new check. An altered check looks suspicious and might not be accepted by a bank or another party. If you accidentally tear a check so that some numbers are missing, write a new one. You may have destroyed some information used to process the check.
- Keep a record. Immediately record the check number, amount, date and person or organization the check is made out to on your checkbook stub or register. This helps prevent overdrawing your account and serves as a personal record of the action. Also, be sure to record in your checkbook register any "money machine" withdrawals from your checking account.
- Report missing checks. Notify your bank immediately if your checks are lost or stolen. Cancel your current account and open a new one.

A signature that's not yours on lost or stolen checks won't always be detected.

To transfer to another person a check made out to you, write on the back, "Pay to the order of ....." then just beneath that, sign your name as it appears on the front of the check.

When you mail a check, made out to you to a bank for deposit, write "For deposit only" on the back, then endorse it with your name as it appears on the front of the check. This type of endorsement restricts any other use of the check.

If you have a joint checking account, work out a good system of record keeping, advises an official of the American Banker's Association. Let the other person know the transactions you've made each day. Otherwise, you run the risk of being overdrawn or never knowing how much you have in your account.

Hank Standridge, 11, and SP4 Joel D. Chandler, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, have been pals for just over a month.

Hank had been on a waiting list more than six months. The news of a pal being found was a bit of a shock.

"I did not know what to expect when the call came from the center. My mom was excited, but I was 10 times as excited," Hank said.

Since that day, there have been numerous outings for Chandler and Hank. But the phone calls still mean a lot for the pals.

"We rode a motorcycle to the Little White House in Warm Springs, Ga.,"Hank said. "And I am looking forward to seeing and Air Show, because Joel's brother works with the Thunderbirds. Because Joel is in the Army, sometimes we cannot get together, but his phone call always let's me know that he cares,"

"Many volunteers give much more of themselves," Stone said. "My partner, Antonio and I, get together as often as we can. Being in the Ranger Department keeps me pretty busy," Flowers said. "But it takes so little time to give so much pleasure, that I would feel selfish not giving any of myself."

"There are many soldiers, who not only have the available time, but are lonely themselves," Chandler said.

Both soldiers wish to challenge their peers to, "to come to the call, where lives may be given new meaning."

"The children are from all racial, religious and socio-economic backgrounds.

"We serve the children of the tri-community area," Stone said.

And they need a pal like Joel Chandler or Richard Flowers, someone who really care.

For more information on the PALS Program, call Sara Stone at 327-3238.

Marksmen battle in post competition

USAMU Public Affairs Office

Nearly 700 of the best marksmen in the Army, Army Reserve and National Guard will compete for top honors in the U.S. Army Small Arms Championships during the next two weeks at Fort Benning.

Opening ceremonies on Tuesday will kick off the "Precision Combat" competition phase, which will determine the top M16 rifle, M60 light machinegun and .45-caliber service pistol shooters in the Army's three components. Weapons are non-accurized, targets are silhouettes and the courses of fire are designed to simulate battlefield conditions.

Defending their 1986 championship titles in combat rifle and machinegun events will be teams from the 101st Airborne Division. Last year's combat pistol team title went to 2/23 Infantry, 9th Infantry Division from Fort Lewis.

The Precision Combat competition culminates Fri., May 14, with an awards ceremony at 2 p.m. in Theater 1, Building 90.

"National Match" competition begins May 16, with the traditional "First Shot" opening ceremony at 7:30 a.m. on McAndrew Range. The National Match phase involves accurized match-grade weapons — the M14 service rifle and .22, centerfire and .45 cal pistol's National Guard teams took top slots in both events last year.

Awards for National Match winners will be presented Fri., May 22, at 2:00 p.m. in Theater 1.

The U.S. Army Championships represent the "Super Bowl" of small arms training and competition for the Army, Guard and Reserve. Individuals and teams earn the opportunity to compete here by excelling in lower but progressively more difficult, stages of competition during the preceding year.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, supported by the All Reserve and National Guard Shooting Teams, will conduct the matches, which have been held annually at Fort Benning for more than 30 years. Additional support will be provided by elements of the 10th Mtn Div, 197th Inf Bde, 36th Engineer Group and the 34th Medical Battalion here.

The general public is cordially invited to attend all phases of the matches to observe the Army, Guard and Reserve's "top guns" in action. Firing will begin daily at 7:00 a.m. and conclude at approximately 5:00 p.m.

Listed below is a brief schedule for the competitive events. All ranges are located on main post near the intersection of South Lumpkin and Dixie Roads.

May 12-12 — Combat Rifle Matches - McAndrew Range; Combat Pistol Matches - Phillips Range; M60 Light Machinegun Matches - Easley Range

May 17-21 — National Match Pistol Matches - Phillips Range

May 16-22 — National Match Rifle Matches - McAndrew Range

Yellow Jackets win 18-6 in T-ball season opener

Youth Activities

Fort Benning Youth Activities T-ball/baseball/softball division opened it 1987 season saturday in a colorful ceremony on Green Field.

The guest speaker was CSM Roy Owens, post sergeant major. He was presented with the "Commissioner's Lifetime Award" by Commissioner Ed Chapa, for his unwavering support of youth activities on military installations around the world for over 29 years.

The commissioner also presented an appreciation plaque to coach Rick Pedillia from a grateful military community for his three years of coaching at Fort Benning. This is Coach Pedillia's last season.

"This season is dedicated to one of the many unsung heroes behind the scenes that make any Youth Activity sport season such a success, 'the team Mom,"'said Chapa.

Representing all the teams' moms was, Brenda Lane, who received the ceremonial first pitch' opening the 1987 YA Baseball season from the commissioner.

Action got underway with the Yellow Jackets stinging Green Thunder by a narrow margin of 18-16 in the T-ball division.

The Yellow Jackets started with six runs, then Green Thunder screamed back with six runs of their own to lock the game in the opening innings.

In the 2nd inning, Shannon Ingle made two excellent outs to 1st base, stopping Green Thunder from striking home.

The Green Thunder continued to swat the scoring attempts of the Yellow Jackets. In the third inning, the Yellow jackets could only pull in one run.

James Harris and Ingles provided the defensive edge for the Yellow Jackets, keeping home plate free of any dust in the fifth and sixth innnings.

James Bledsoe was the high scorer with four runs, followed by David Fielder, Dax Keehu, and James Harris each with three runs.

Keehu and Fielder also lead the way in the batter's circle. Keehu hit two triples to fire up four RBIs. Fielder had a triple and finished with four RBIs.

Youth Activities T-ball regularly pits sluggers ages 6 to 8 years old in mortal combat, such as the opening high scoring Yellow Jacket victory.

Benning prepares for Armed Forces Day 1987

Parade, kiddie rides just part of fun planned for residents of tri-city area

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Everyone is welcome to come eat, drink and be merry at Fort Benning's Armed Forces Day Open House celebration Saturday on main post.

Officials said festivities will proceed, rain or shine.

The United States Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps, Rifle and Drill Competition will be part of the post festivities.

Some 1,000 JROTC cadets will be participating in this year's competition.

Gardner Field will be the site of the drill competition with the rifle competition at Parks Range.

There will be midway activities which will include live entertainment, static displays, and kiddie rides.

In conjunction with Armed Forces Day, the local chapter of the Association of The United States Army is sponsoring a picnic. A change has been made in meal arrangements this year. In the past, there was one standard fare for all picnickers.

This year there will be a variety of foods including Barbecued chicken, chili dogs and chili. Cotton candy and cookies will also be on the menu, with soda and beer available to wash it all down.

Prices vary from 25¢ for a cookie to $1 for Bratwurst with a roll.

There will be no advance tickets sold. All tickets will be purchased on the picnic grounds. The tickets will be 25¢ and will be used in place of money at each of the booths.

Shuttle buses will run in family housing areas from 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Dental insurance to begin

Troops must decline coverage to avoid payroll deduction

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Service members who do not want their families enrolled in the new uniformed services dependents' dental insurance plan must notify their finance office before June 30. Otherwise, eligible families will be automatically enrolled.

The first monthly premium — $3.93 for one dependent, $7.86 for two or more — will be deducted from paychecks in July for benefits beginning Aug. 1. Only services obtained from civilian dentists on and after Aug. 1 will be paid for by the plan.

Active duty families who are enrolled will still be able to get dental care on a space-available basis at military medical facilities, but only for emergency care and services not covered by the new program.

The dental program's preventive, diagnostic and emergency benefits include:

- routine oral exams, including teeth cleaning;
- fluoride treatment;
- routine dental X-ray;
- laboratory exams; and
- emergency minor treatment for pain

Restorative services will include fillings, stainless steel crowns for baby teeth and repairs to dentures.

Some examples of dental services not covered are braces, tooth extractions, root canals, porcelain or gold crowns, dentures and cosmetic dental services.

Families not enrolled will still be eligible for space-available care from military dental facilities.

Captain convicted for using marijuana

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

A Fort Benning captain was court-martialed last week for possessing and using marijuana. Capt. Timothy P. Barnes, assigned to 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, was convicted by a general court-martial last week of two specifications of use of marijuana and one specification of possession of marijuana.

Barnes was sentenced to forfeit all pay and allowances and to a dismissal from the Army. A dismissal is the equivalent of a dishonorable discharge and is the worse type of discharge that an officer can receive.

Some time before Feb. 7, Barnes acquired a small bag of marijuana. One evening, he was visited by several girls from his neighborhood. One girl was 12 years old and the other was 13 years old.

According to evidence presented in court, Barnes smoked two marijuana cigarettes in the presence of the two girls. One of the girls reported Barnes' use of marijuana to her father, who in turn reported the matter to military authorities.

As soon as Barnes' company commander was told what Barnes had done, he ordered Barnes to provide a urine specimen to be tested by CompuChem Laboratories. Barnes provided a sample and it was sent to the laboratory where it tested positive for THC, the active ingredient of marijuana.

Army names Garman its top drill sergeant

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — The ballots are in for the 1987 Drill Sergeants of the Year competition, and the winners are SSgt. Michael A. Garman and SFC Jeffrey S. Buczkowski.

The winners were announced by the Headquarters, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command at Fort Monroe, Va., in the closing ceremony of the week-long competition April 24.

Garman, assigned to Headquarters, 136th Engineer Brigade, Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., was selected as the active Army Drill Sergeant of the Year. Buczkowski, chosen as the Army Reserve Drill Sergeant of the Year, is assigned to the 1st Battalion, 2nd Engineer Brigade 98th Division, Buffalo, N.Y.

The Stephen Ailes Award and the Meritorious Service Medal were presented to Garvin. The Ailes Award, initiated in 1969, is named after Stephen Ailes, a former Secretary of the Army. He was instrumental in forming the drill sergeant corps in 1964.

Garman will return to Fort Leonard Wood to act as an advisor on initial entry training policy and serve as a point of contact between the TRADOC commanding general and drill sergeants in the field. He has been on active duty for eight years and has served as a combat engineer at Fort Hood, Texas, and Vicenza, Italy. He currently lives at Fort Leonard Wood, with his wife Jo.

The Ralph E. Haines Jr. Award and the Meritorious Service Medal were awarded to Buczkowski. Haines was a former commander of the Continental Army Command. CONARC was located at Fort Monroe until TRADOC was established in 1973.

Buczkowski, 27, served on active duty as a U.S. Army Ranger before he became a drill sergeant in the Army Reserve. He and his wife live in Cheektowaga, N.Y., where he works as a manager of a local retail store.

In addition to their other awards, both Drill Sergeants of the Year received the Army Times newspaper's Eugene P. Famiglietti Award, named in honor of a late editor of the Army Times.

New retirement system offers workers several ways to save

American Forces Press Service

The new Federal Employees Retirement System went into effect Jan. 1, 1987, and automatically covers all new government employees hired after Dec. 31, 1983. Employees hired before that date can transfer to the new system or can remain covered under the older Civil Service Retirement System and receive any social Security benefits earned for non-federal employment.

This article, the third in a four-part series, explains the savings plan.

Under a special tax-deferred savings plan for federal employees, a savings account is established for you to which you contribute through payroll deductions. The government matches your savings up to 5 percent.

All federal employees covered by the Federal Employees Retirement System on Jan. 1, 1987, are eligible to participate in the savings plan. Employees hired after that date will generally have a six- to 12-month waiting period.

Employees covered by the Civil Service Retirement System also may participate in the savings plan, but may contribute up to only 5 percent of their pay. These contributions will not be matched by the government, and the money may be invested only in the government security fund. However, you won't have to pay taxes on the contribution or the interest until you retire.

The government automatically contributes the equivalent of 1 percent of your pay to the savings account set up for you, even if you contribute nothing.

You may contribute up to 10 percent of your pay through payroll deductions, and the government will match up to 5 percent according to the following schedule:

Contributions
Employee	Government
0 percent	1 percent
1 percent	2 percent
2 percent	3 percent
3 percent	4 percent
4 percen	4.5 percent
5 percent	5 percent
6-10 percent	5 percent

Thus, the government will contribute 5 percent to your savings account if you save 5 percent or more. If your contribute more than 5 percent. For example, if you contribute 6 percent, the total, with the government's contribution, will be 11 percent and so on, up to a possible 15 percent total — your 10 percent plus the goernment's 5 percent.

Note: Special savings plan options are available to all employees to make up for the period (Jan. 1, 1987, through March 31, 1987) during which employees were unable to participate in the savings plan.

During April 1 through June 30, 1987 - Federal employees covered by the Federal Employees Retirement System may contribute up to 15 percent, and the government contribution will be double the normal amount. For example, if the employee contributes 15 percent, the government will add 10 percent, for a total of 25 percent going into the employee's savings account.

During this period, employees covered by the Civil Service Retirement System may contribute up to 7.5 percent percent, but there will be no matching contribution from the government.

July 1 through Sept. 30, 1987 - Employees covered by the Federal Employees Retirement System may contribute up to 15 percent, and the government will contribute the regular amount, up to a maximum of 5 percent.

During this period, employees covered by the Civil Service Retirement System may contribute up to 7.5 percent with no matching contributions from the government.

IRS rules sometimes limit the maximum amount participants can contribute to the savings plan. For example, the average contribution by high-salaries employees (generally $50,000 and up) cannot exceed the average contribution made by all other employees by more than 2 percent of pay.

Except for some restrictions during the first 10

OPINION

President salutes all armed services

The more than 2 million active service members and 1 1/2 million National Guard and Reserve personnel have a challenging task: preserving peace and defending freedom.

The freedom and liberty that Americans enjoy today result from the dedication, spirit, courage, and patriotism of our men and women in the Armed Forces. We must never forget that you who wear our country's uniform are the armor that shields our democratic way of life. You are the strength and security that help keep the free world free.

It is appropriate this year, as we commemorate the Bicentennial of the Constitute, to remember that 23 signers of our Constitution were soldier-statemen.

As our Nation celebrates Armed Forces Day, 1987, all Americans should reflect upon the proud heritage of the Armed Forces and remember their sacrifices.

As your Commander in Chief, I am proud, as every American should be, of the unparalleled progress we have made in attracting and retaining quality volunteers to our military services. The renewed appreciation and confidence Americans are showing for our service men and women are a direct reflection of the high quality personnel who proudly serve this Nation.

In return for your dedication and in the interest of national security, I solemnly promise to continue to press for the best equipment and the best living and working conditions for all members of the Armed Forces and their families who sacrifice so much in defending or democracy.

Ronald Reagan
President

'Peace with Freedom' is Armed Forces Day theme

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Once again, U.S servicemembers worldwide have the chance to share with the public their heritage as the free world's vanguard of stability and civility in a world of political upheaval, religious strife, the threat of terrorism, and the uncertainties of global conflict.

The sharing will take place Saturday in the annual observance of Armed Forces Day. Also, the week before that date has been designated Armed Forces Week.

This year's theme — "Peace with Freedom" — carries with it more than the obvious message of maintaining peace through military strength and protection of the freedoms so cherished by a free society. It also delivers a message of hope to those nations yet to realize peace either internally or externally: by America's example, peace may some day be as concrete a term as it is an abstract one.

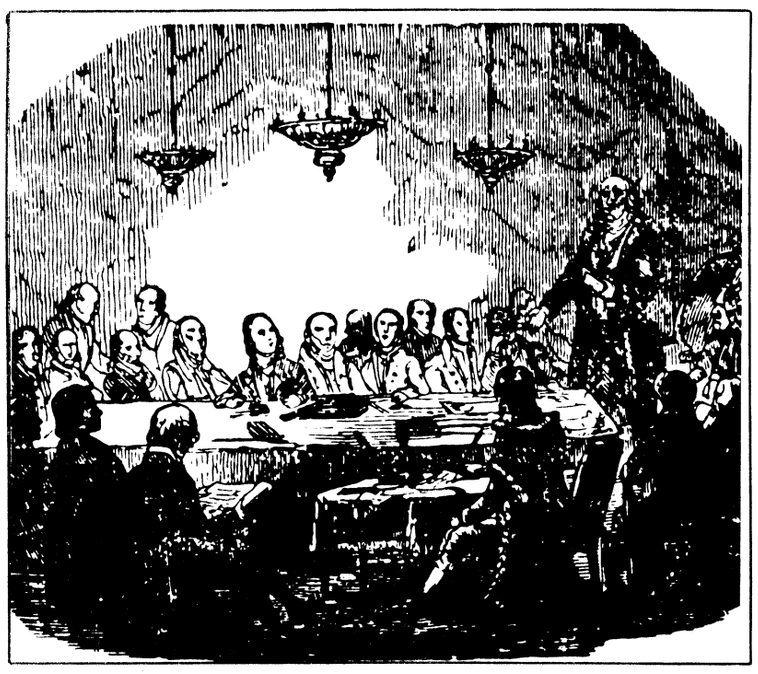
The theme's other part -- "with Freedom" — likewise presents an underlying message in this the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Constitution: freedom is a relative term; some nations, depending on their forms of government, are more nearly free than others. But once their citizens have a free hand in choosing their destiny, they could do a lot worse than choose the American ideal, as embodied in the Constitution.

Soldier-statesmen are there when Constitution is written

By John O. Marsh Jr.
Secretary of the Army

In September 1987, the United States commemorates the bicentennial of the signing of the Constitution. The history of the Constitution should be of interest to all those who love liberty. Most of the world today is not free, and the significance of the Constitution, a document that stands unique in the world's political literature, is especially appreciated by those ho log for its guarantees. We, as members of the military forces, should be especially attuned to the values embodied in this great document, for it is our sworn duty to "support and defend" it against all enemies.

Twenty-three of the 40 signers of the Constitution were Army veterans of the Revolutionary War. Their experiences in that conflict made them deeply conscious of the need for a strong central government that would prevail against its enemies, yet one that would safeguard the individual liberties and the republican form of government for which they had fought. Their solution is enshrined in the Constitution.



The original states tht entered into the great experiment were few in number and their people largely farmers and small merchants. However, the men they chose to mold our nation's future were giants on the world's stage, with an equally enormous vision.

We in this generation must not shirk our responsibilities any more than did those courageous men of 200 years ago.

Our vision must be the vision of James Madison; our character that of George Washington. The world must know that we are dedicated to our Constitution and our way of life. And to that world we continue to declare: "this we'll defend."

It is appropriate that this nation pause, publicly, to reflect on the meaning of the Constitution. The efforts of those Founding Fathers truly did "form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and or posterity."

That it has attained its bicentennial is a marvel of the enduring intergrity of the Constitution as a design of self-directed order and justice by and fo. a free people. Each generation of Americans can find pride and reassurance in an examination of its remarkably practical draftmanship.

The President of the United States is the Commander in Chief of the nation's military forces. But it is the Congress that has the power to raise and support those forces and to declare war. The founding Fathers established for all time the precedent that the military, subordinate to the Congress, woudl remain the servant of the Republic.

Mother's Day no joking matter to reader

Dear Editor:

Reference the article by Becky Obert, headlined "Mother's Day A commie plot" in the May 8 Bayonet.

I cannot believe that approximately a square foot of space was allotted for such rubbish.

It seems that Mrs. Obert has a misconception of what Mother's Day is set aside for. It is not a day day set aside with a mandatory requirement to give mother a gift. Can one appreciate or enjoy a gift given out of obligation?

What good comes of honoring mother on the second Sunday of every May if mother is not honored the other 364 days of the year?

As far returning gifts, have you ever been into most any of the stores the day after Christmas? Hundreds of items are returned for whatever reason, wrong color, wrong size, or just don't particularly like it.

Since she mentioned her mother (Thank God, she isn't my daughter) there are many days that are "mother's day" for me and certainly not because of any material gift.

Nothing makes me happier than to see one of my children singing in the church choir, or to know they have done a good deed for someone else. Just being a good, moral, law abiding, clean living citizen makes me happy.

A mother's day is the many occasions when each child will congregate at a family member's house with a covered dish and just have a get-together and enjoy the people we love, or a simple phone call that says, "hi Mom, just wondered what you are doing or how you are, and I love you."

By the way, what does Russia have to do with our mothers? I see no comparison.

Since Mrs. Obert does not know what to give her mother, maybe she should send her a copy of her article in the Bayonet. I am sure it would not make her day, but Becky would not have to buy a gift.

Jean Miller
Phenix City, Ala.

Editor's note: The article you refer to was clearly labeled "commentary." This means that it is a story written as a personal narrative, and I use this style to take a humorous look at issues.

The story was not meant to offend any mothers. In fact, my mother read it and loved it. (She says I get my warped sense of humor from her side of the family.) Thanks for writing.

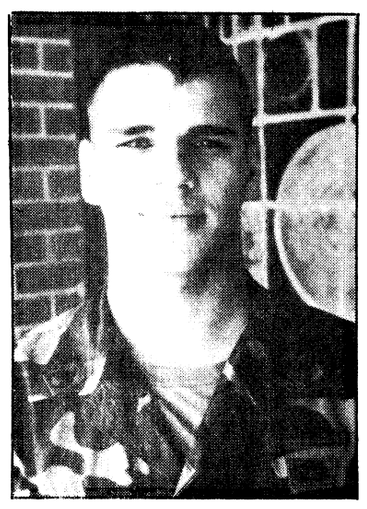
VARIOUS VOICES / What does Armed Forces Day mean to you?

Sgt. Wilbur Wayman, Company A, 1/507th PIR, - "I feel the celebration of Armed Forces Day is very important. The words Armed Forces is the key. It means that all branches of the military are celebrating a day together. Plus it gives the civilian community a chote to view first hand what we are doing. The picnic and the carnival atmosphere of the event also gives our spouses and children a chance to get out and have some fun."



PFC David Kerchoff, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 128th Infantry, Fort Atkinson, Wis., - I think it's a celebration of Army victories and the success of all the Armed Forces."

SP4 Lanny Collins, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "It is to me a day in which all the Armed Forces in the United States Military Services pay tribute to each other. It also provides an opportunity to show the civilian community what the military is all about. The biggest example of this is the Armed Forces Day Picnic, which has various displays and demonstrations showing the capabilities of the Armed Forces."

Sgt. Vincent Thomas, Company C, 1/507th PIR, - "I feel it is a celebration of freedom that we have because of the military. If it wasn't for the Armed Forces, the Nation would not be free. We have received peace by deterrence."

SSgt. John R. Calpena, Company C, 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, - "I think it's an important day. It reminds people what we are here for and what the military is all about. Plus, it's a break from the monotony and its good for the morale of the soldiers. Also, it gives the other units on post a chance to get together with units they don't even normally see."

Sgt. Pamela Wheeler, MEDDAC, - "I think it's great. It's an acknowledgemet of all we do. It increases the awareness of the public by giving them a chance to see some of the things we do through the various displays and so on."

Soldiers from Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group recently completed a project for the Metropolitan Boys Club of Columbus and Phenix City.

According to 1st Lt. Allen Pace, officer in charge of the project, Boys' Club personnel acknowledged a need for a second baseball field at the south-side branch located on Cusseta Road in Columbus.

Pace said that the earth-moving soldiers used scrapers and graders to level off the field behind the Boys Club. According to Pace, the project took about three days to complete.

"The 36th Engineer Group has really been great in helping us with this project," said Robert Stanford, director of the Metropolitan Boys Clubs of Columbus and Phenix City. — Shawn Bryson,

The food service personnel from the dining facility of the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group received an award Monday for having the best nutrition oriented dining facility at Fort Benning.

A plaque was presented to SFC Robert Wallace, noncommissioned officer in charge of the dining facility by Col. J. Ellis, post chief of staff. He stressed the importance of feeding soldiers the best possible food stating that it is the basis for keeping soldiers happy and physically fit.

The soldiers were also presented a plaque representing their first place finish in the Training and Doctrine competition for the Connelly Award for outstanding field food service. The personnel are also awaiting the results from the Army-wide competition for the Connelly Award which they competed for in April.— Shawn Bryson, 36th Engineer Group correspondent

The shrill beep of the NBC alarm is sounded, warning soldiers in the area that a Nuclear, Biological or Chemical environment exists. Soldiers immediately don protective masks and prepare themselves for Military Operations in Protective Posture.

Basic soldier skills ensure that soldiers will know how to survive when an NBC threat exists in their area of operation. Units also have trained personnel to monitor and document NBC conditions, and ensure that commanders receive current NBC information, that may affect their decisions.

Soldiers who are members of 197th Infantry Brigade unit NBC Defense Teams bear the responsibility of that mission. Their knowledge and skills are tested anually by Brigade Headquarters chemical personnel.

According to 2nd Lt. David Hebert, a 197th Infantry Brigade Chemical officer, the Defense Team consists of small sections that each have a different mission. Radiological teams monitor and survey radiation levels in areas of operation and radiation levels on soldiers, equipment and vehicles. Chemical teams survey areas and equipment for chemical agents and sound the alarm when such conditions exist.

Each defense team will also set up a hasty decontamination site.

"The hasty decon site allows soldiers only to decontaminate themselves and their equipment to a sufficient degree to continue fighting," Hebert said.

Hebert explained that the Defense Team control party gathers data from the sections and forwards that data to commanders. "This is a never ending mission." he said, "as NBC environments change constantly due to repeated enemy strikes or dissipation of the chemical agents in the area."

"Without this information, commanders may move into a contaminated area without knowing it and not be aware of the effects four hours," Hebert said.

The annual evaluations of the Decon teams supplement NBC scenarios during major training exercises such as the recent Sledgehammer I or training at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif. — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Sgt. Eddit Clifton, HHC, 197th Infantry Brigade, tests the alarm that indicates an NBC environment.

Equipped with for 2 x 6 boards, a rope, and a fifty-five gallon drum of fuel, a team leader and four soldiers try to navigate an alligator, infested river.

Soldiers from Company D, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry recently attacked Fort Benning's Leadership Reaction Course with a sole mission in mind: to test the leadership potential of each soldier.

"Like leadership in garrison, the training is designed to enhance the soldier's ability to lead and bring things in focus," said SFC J.C. Henry, Company D first sergeant.

The LRC was the second stage of a program, which put the company's lower enlisted soldiers in charge for a day. During the initial stage in March, soldiers played the roles of the Company Commander, First Sergeant, Platoon Sergeants and Platoon Leaders.

"I think it's great, I was a little scared at first, but once you do it, it's fun," Pvt. James Otto said.

Otto had just completed leading his team on an ammo resupply mission thru an enemy mine field.

"Each team was given a mission, at each obstacle station, but everyone tried a different plan," Sp4 Todd McGregor said.

Teamwork is essential for the squad to be able to complete the mission, which is designed to test a soldier's mental flexibility and ingenuity.

The LRC, which has near real-time obstacles, once again, provided a true test and experience for these lower enlisted soldiers who were in charge for a day. — George Mingee, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Soldiers from Company D, 3-7th Infantry move a box of ammunition across an obstacle at the Leadership Reaction Course.

The targets can barely be seen from the forward observation post. The observer feeds data into a small computer-like device called a Digital Message Device (DMD), and a short distance away, the crew of an M109A3 self-propelled howitzer have firing data within seconds. A 155mm shell roars overhead and impacts a few hundred meters from the target.

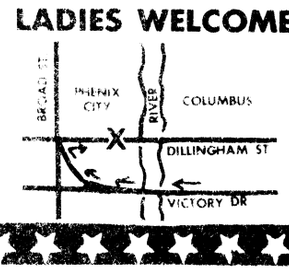
The forward observer presses a few more keys, the howitzer crew adjusts fire and a shell impacts on target. The observer punches the fire-for-effect commands, and the target area is pounded by shells.

This was the field exercise conducted recently by the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery. The purpose was to validate the Tacticle Fire Direction system (TACFIRE) which the unit has been training with for the past two months. While TACFIRE is not new equipment to the field artillery, this is the first time it has been used on Fort Benning.

Capt. Thomas Lynch, the 2-10 Field Artillery Battalion TACFIRE Director officer, explained that the TACFIRE computer shelter sits on the back of a five ton truck and can be located miles from the forward observation points and artillery batteries.

The shelter receives target information from forward observerss. The computer helps select which of the battalion's three firing batteries will engage the target based on location and ammunition available; then sends information to the firing battery.

Battery computer systems use this information to plot firing data. In the event the TACFIRE is cut-off or moving, the forward observer can use his DMD to communicate directly with a firing battery.



Sgt. Donald L. Green, working with a DMD from a foward observation post, said "I find TACFIRE to be a lot quicker, but easier to make mistakes."

The training that the men of the 2-10 Field Artillery have been receiving helps to minimize the risks of these mistakes.

"TACFIRE radically improves the speed and accuracy of artillery fire", said Lt. Col. Glen G. Lackey, commander of the 2-10 Field Artillery. This is done using digital transmission on FM radio." Lackey said, "The TACFIRE system

Most Americans choose not to hear the warnings about tinnitus. How noise—any noise that is loud enough that you have to raise your voice to be heard—can cause tinnitus. The 2-10 Field Artillery will be training with TACFIRE three days a week to maintain proficiency with the new system. They will also have another field exercise at the end of June before they put their skills to the test at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif. — Kevin J. ALBERTA, CANADA — Thanks to the Canadians, mechanized infantry soldier from Company D, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry got a taste of the foot soldier's life during trench warfare training at Camp Wainwright, Alberta Canada. Huddling and fighting close together in the narrow trench line, three platoons of U.S. Army soldiers faced enemy soldier pop-up targets in live fire training with M60 machine guns, M203 grenade launchers and M16 rifles.

"The trench system represents an abandoned enemy position," explained Sgt. Andy Skibinsky from the Canadian Military Battlefield School training ward. "Friendly forces move in and occupy the abandoned enemy position. From here, he would send out scout patrols to keep track of the enemy."

Wire obstacles and simulated mine fields extend across the range area in front of the trench line, giving the soldier a feeling of actually being on the battle field.

"The significance of this range is the unique type of training the soldiers receive here," said Skibinsky. "The soldier gets to live fire his weapon against enemy targets, which is a great benefit in training."

All soldiers received training and practice, but according to Company D Commander, Capt. Bill Reiger, the platoon leaders and noncommissioned officers benefitted from the valuable training.

"This is called a platoon defense live fire exercise. It allows the platoon leader and sergeants to demonstrate good planning and their ability to execute it successfully," stated Reiger. "This also allows them to think for themselves, giving the young officers training and experience."

According to Reiger, the platoon leaders were being evaluated on several different skills, such as fire control, squad placement, leadership reaction and indirect fire support.

"The platoon sergeant also plays an important role in this training," said Reiger. "He controls the soldiers in the trenches and accounts for ammunition distribution, demonstrating his experience to the platoon leaders. They can really learn from one another during this type of training."

As the sun set, silhouetting the soldiers against the Canadian landscape, the fighting force from Company D 1-58 Infantry left with yet another memorable experience to share with their fellow soldiers back to Fort Benning. — Troy Buchanan, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

A soldier looks for the enemy before moving out of his position during trench warfare training in Canada.

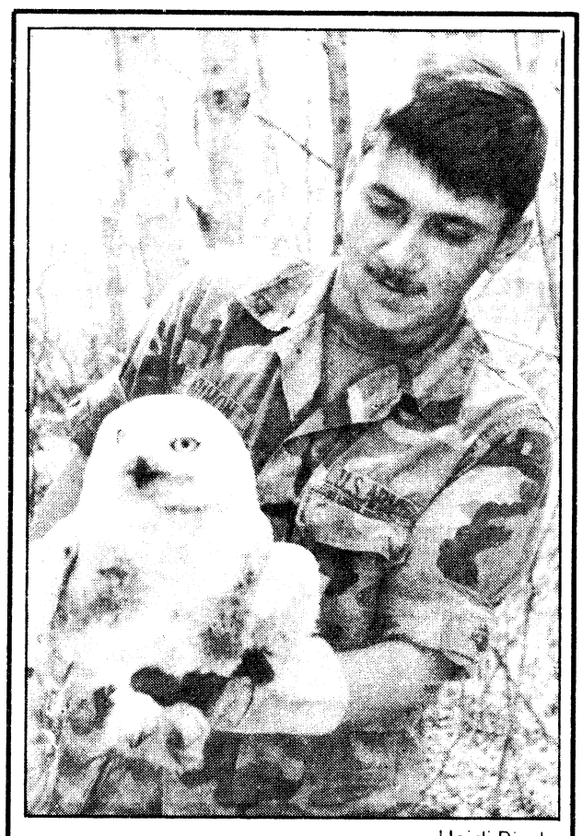
Two soldiers standing side-by-side in formation may appear to have the same needs during the duty day. Look a little closer, however, and you can see a big difference in each soldier, particularly in his financial needs.

One soldier goes home to a family, a house payment and other financial responsibilities. The other lives in the barracks and puts his paycheck into a stereo system or a new car. Whatever the case, each soldier needs to ensure that the responsibilities will be taken care of in his absence.

SFC Peter Galles, 197th Infantry Brigade legal noncommissioned officer, recently discovered a great demand for powers-of-attorney and wills during administrative processing of soldiers who were deploying to Canada for a one-month training exercise.

Maj. Gregory Cox, a U.S. Army Reserve officer and civilian attorney, who recently served his active duty time with the Staff Judge Advocate General's Office on Fort Benning, is assisting the 197th Infantry Brigade legal office in educating 197th soldiers about the importance of wills, powers-of-attorney and the 1987 W4 withholding form.

Cox explained that there are two types of POAs.



"A general power-of-attorney will enable a person to act in your name, to do all legal acts that normally would require your presence," Cox said. "A specific POA will enable a person to perform only the legal business designated on the POA, such as selling a car during your absence."

However, Cox emphasized the importance of choosing someone you trust when giving them a power of attorney or naming them as executor of your will.

"Soldiers with families especially need to consider the need to have a will. Even single soldiers need to think about a will," Cox said. "It is a personal decision, but you need to keep in mind the implications of how that decision will affect the people you leave behind."

"A will is also necessary to designate a guardian for minor children, whether it be your spouse, a friend, or other family member," Cox said.

Another important topic was the new 1987 W4 tax withholding form. The Internal Revenue Service requires tax payers to complete the new form and turn it into his or her employer before October 1987. However, Cox suggests that you submit the form as soon as possible to ensure that the proper amount of tax is withheld throughout the year. — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent years of the savings plan, you may elect to invest your savings in one or all of three investment funds. The funds differ in rate of return and amount of risk involved.

You will be able to change the amount or type of investment at least twice a year in open seasons to be established later.

The funds are:

- Government Securities Investment Fund (Fund G), which consists of special-issue securities guaranteed by the government. Any money for which a fund is not designated will be invested in the government securities fund.
- Fixed Income Investment Fund (Fund F). Money in this fund will be invested in guaranteed investment contracts, bank certificates of deposit or other private sector securities. These investments provide a fixed rate of return for a specified period of time.
- Common Stock Index Investment Fund (Fund C). Money in this fund is invested in a common stock fund designed for long-term growth. Since it is a stock fund, the rate of return will vary.

Phase-in Period. Private-sector investment options (Fund F and Fund C) will be phased into the plan during the first 10 years. This means a percentage of the money must be invested in government securities according to the following schedule:

Year	Percentage Required to be Invested in Government Securities: Employee Contributions	Government Contributions
1987	100%	100%
1988	80%	100%
1989	60%	100%
1990	40%	100%
1991	20%	100%

After 1991, all employee contributions may be invested in private sector securities, at the employees' option.

1992	0	100%
1993	0	80%
1994	0	60%
1995	0	40%
1996	0	20%

After 1996, all funds may be invested in private-sector and/or government securities, at the employees' option.

Contributions to the savings plan, both yours and the government's, as well as investment earnings are tax-deferred. That is, you don't pay income tax on it until you withdraw it from the fund — either as an annuity or in a lump sum.

You have immediate rights to contributions made to your savings plan account, both yours and the government's, except for the automatic 1 percent government contribution. That means you own these contributions, even if you leave federal service before retiring.

If you are a career civilian employee, you own the 1 percent government contribution after three years of service. If you are a non-career Senior Executive Service member, political appointee, member of Congress or a congressional staff member, this automatic contribution becomes yours after two years of service.

If you retire, become disabled, die or leave federal service after becoming eligible for retirement benefits under the basic benefit plan, you or your beneficiary may receive your savings as an: annuity; lump-sum payment; or in a rollover to an individual retirement account or similar plan.

If you leave federal service before becoming eligible for retirement benefits under the Federal Employees Retirement System basic benefit plan, you can withdraw your savings account only by rolling it over into an individual retirement plan or similar plan.

You may not withdraw your funds from the savings plan while you are employed with the federal government.

However, a loan program will be established Jan. 1, 1988 At that time, you will be able to borrow from your savings plan account for serious financial needs such as:

- Purchase of your primary residence;
- Medical expenses not covered by health insurance;
- Educational expenses for you or your dependents; and
- Financial hardship.

You can borrow up to the full amount of your contributions. This does not include the government contribution.

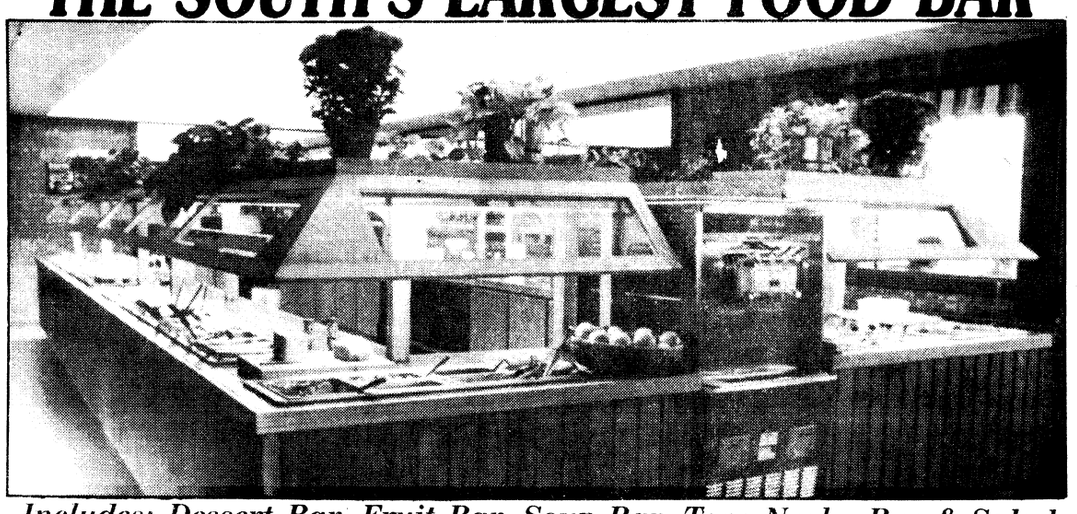
D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment/Weapons Department, was convicted by a general court-martial last week after he tried to beat the Army promotion system by fraudulently getting himself promoted to the grade of E6.

Hollis had been in the Army for almost sixteen years. He spent most of his time in the Army as a personnel specialist. In 1984, he changed his MOS to 11M and transferred to Fort Benning.

While at Fort Benning, he and Sp4 Luretta Gill-English became close friends. English was the promotions clerk for 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry.



When the Department of the Army announced the promotion cut-off scores in October 1986, Hollis and English determined that Hollis would not have enough promotion points. They then decided to cheat to get Hollis promoted to E6.

They forged documents that gave him credit for more promotion points and he promoted himself in a private ceremony.

His squad leader initiated an investigation that discovery of the fraud.

Hollis was sentenced by Colonel Sebert L. Trail, the Military Judge, to be reduced to the grade of E1 and to be separated from the Army with a Bad Conduct Discharge. English was convicted last month of dereliction of duty for her participation in the scheme and she too was sentenced by Judge Trail to be reduced to the grade of E1 and to be separated from the Army witha Bad Conduct Discharge.

Campaign hopes to save lives

National Safety Council

The national All-American Buckle Up is scheduled May 18 through 25. The theme this year will be "Buckle Up America."

The campaign is designed to coincide with the Memorial Day weekend which kicks off the summer vacation travel period.

The National Safety Council reports that last year, a total of 595 people lost their lives in traffic accidents which occurred during the Memorial Day weekend.

Of those fatalities, 12 were reported by the state of Geogia. The NSC estimates that another 400 to 500 people will die in traffic accidents during the 1987 Memorial Day Holiday weekend.

If everyone in the United States accepted the challenge offered by this year's All-American Buckle Up, we could save many vacations from being ruined, and many people from being killed or seriously injured.

According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, about 10,000 lives could be saved annually if all vehicle occupants used seat belts at all times.

Accept the challenge and "Buckle Up America" because seat belts really do save lives.

Celebrate week by taking care of your teeth, gums

Community Health Office

"A Healthy Smile Can Last a Lifetime" is the theme of the 1987 National Senior Smile Week celebration. Our teeth are meant to last a lifetime.

A large percentage of the American population is over the age of 65 years and many of them forget the importance of regular, sound dental care and oral hygiene. The mouth is the gateway to the rest of the body and a healthy mouth, teeth and gums is a reflection of total health.

Regular dental visits are important at any age. At least yearly, an examination of the teeth, gums and any removable appliances should be made. Just because an individual has dentures doesn't mean his yearly exams should cease.

Through the years, dentures will need to be relined or even replaced. The tissues under the dentures will need regular care and examinations. Dental checkups are also necessary for the detection of oral cancer and other diseases.

Teachers, students give new Faith School an 'A+'

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning has a new middle school, and teachers and students alike think the new facility passes all the tests for being a great place to learn.

Last week's opening of the Don C. Faith Middle School was celebrated with a variety of activities including a reception for invited guests, and an open house and curriculum fair for parents.

The 84,000 square-foot building, erected at a cost of over $4 million, was carefully planned to reflect the middle school philosophy.

"We teach sixth, seventh and eighth grades here. At these ages, the children are kept separate from the other grades to reflect different learning needs," said Olin Harp, Faith's principal.

Faith has a separate wing for each grade, with a fourth wing housing the cafeteria, art room, industrial arts shop and home economics lab. All four wings are connected to a central wing that holds the media center.

Harp said the media center boasts a photography dark room, audio-visual room, research center and study rooms, which all three grades use.

"I was at the original Faith School for 19 years. We had leaking roofs, heating problems -- it was an old building. This new school is great and was designed and built with a lot of educator input," he said.

Judi Ebert, who has been teaching at Faith for 18 years, said she thinks the new school enhances learning.

"This new facility is wonderful. Our classrooms are clean, bright and beautiful, the way a middle school should be. Being here has rejuvenated my teaching and I think my students are learning better," Ebert said.

Shaneatha Lane, a 13-year old eighth grader, likes the layout of the school. "I think our new school is well-organized and well-planned," she said.

Tamara Wilcox, another eighth grader, agrees.

"I work in the library and I like it much better than the old school because it's bigger, but you still have to have a pass to go anywhere," she said.

The school is named after Lt. Col. Don C. Faith, a former Fort Benning resident who attended Columbus High School in 1932 and was awarded the Medal of Honor posthumously for actions in Korea in 1950.

Workers save post $2 million

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

Thanks to a number of conscientious employees, $2 million will be saved for the government and Fort Benning.

At a ceremony last week, the employees were recognized for their achievements in the Project SPIRIT (Systematic Productivity Improvement Review In TRADOC) program during the second quarter of FY 87.

The program is designed to motivate government employees to find cost efficent ways to operate.

"As a result of new initiatives, the Project SPIRIT recipients captured $2,345,931.28 in savings for this quarter, verus $150,000 which was captured during the first quarter," said Col. James I. Daily, the post's new chief of staff, who handed out the awards at the ceremony.

The Staff Judge Advocate, Col. Earle F. Lasseter accepted the first place trophy on behalf of his office for implemehting one suggestion and 10 management improvement actions that yielded an annual savings to the government of $563,785.

Among the SGA's accomplishments were: automation of a word processing center; automation of office administrative requirements; establishment of a satelite tag registration office; establishment of a legal assistance tax assistance room and a Saturday volunteer tax assistance program.

The Directorate of Contracting was named second place winner, for saving Fort Benning $423,156 annually with two suggestions and four management initiatives.

Among those accomplishments were: enrolling in correspondence courses versus temporary duty travel and hiring of trainees versus journeymen.

Taking third place was the Equal Employment Opportunity office for implementing two management initiatives that will result in an annual savings of $222,300. The EEO also received a wall plaque for accomplishing EEO training and complaints resolutions.

Individual Project SPIRIT awards were given to 10 Fort Benning employees for maximizing Army resources. The following individuals were honored:

Sara Hodges and Beverly Howell, Management Analysis Division, for implementing a system for the quarterly commanding generals review and analysis and active action briefing that will save the government $44,000 a year.

Tommy Poole and Anna Wilson, EEO office, were presented an award for their participation in resolving discrimination complaints during the counselling stages at the installation level. These actions, along with the participation of other EEO counselors, will result in an annual savings of ,$222,218.

Alice Howard, Environmental Management Office, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, was presented an award for initiating the use of wells at Fort Benning in lieu of contracting these services to an outside agency. This initiative resulted in a tangible savings of $1,175,895 per year.

Sammy Harris and Mike Patton, Facilities, Maintenance and Operations Division, DEH, were both presented an award for detection and correction of the setting for the water level sensors on the clear well at the Water Treatment Plant, thereby eliminating the loss of treated water through the clear well flow. This will result in a savings of $349,962 per year.

Harris was also recognized for specifying the minimum efficiency requirement for the chlorine dioxide. This will result in a savings of $47,029 per year.

Cassandra Unwin, Engineer Resources Management Division, DEH, was presented an individual award for automation of in-house budget reports which will result in an annual savings $6,070 per year.

Dean Rose, ERMD, DEH, was awarded for his instruction to 122 personnel on the use personal computers and software packages, eliminating tuition, TDY and travel costs. The implementation of this procedure resulted in a savings of $75,246 per year.

Jean Whitehead, Engineering Division, DEH, was presented an award for her initiatiive to purchase specifications and disks for contract specification and correspondence in lieu of manually keying in the guide specifications library of 8,000 pages on overtime. This idea resulted in an annual savings of $26,976.

"We must encourage our soldiers and employees to be more creative and innovative in streamlining our operations and saving government dollars. We have a lot of bright individuals out there who have good ideas for accomplishing their jobs in a more efficient cost-effective manner," Daily said.

New regulation spells out how to pass IG inspections

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

The Army's Annual General Inspection has gone the way of the .45 pistol and C-rations. There is a whole new system for conducting inspections and a single key element for passing them.

As a result of a new Army regulation, 1-201, entitled "Inspections," the Inspector General will no longer conduct an AGI on specific units looking for anything and everything but look at systems. "The new regulation comes after a period when the Army had no defined inspection program," said Capt. John Mulhall, an inspector with the Infantry Center's IG Office.

The IG will now conduct special inspections on functional areas or items of special interest, rather than focusing on units.

As an example, Mulhall cited a recent special inspection on a maintenance system. "The IG spent less time inspecting vehicles but concentrated more upon the system. This approach meant looking at vehicle inspection records, tracking actions throughout the motor pool and then tracking outside the unit to see how effective the system was functioning," he said.

Mulhall said the IG's Office is finding that the new system brings them into closer contact with members of the post staff to develop recommendations to solve problems.

The inspector said that the single most effective tool unit commanders can use to develop their inspection programs is AR 1-27, the "Chief of Staff, Army, Reduction of Administrative Workload for Unit Commanders Program."

"This regulation provides commanders and their staffs with a single reference they can use in determining what publications they need to accomplish their unit-level, day-to-day administrative requirements," Mulhall said.

The listings in the regulation run the gamut, from food programs to medical services, from air transportation to training. Anything and everything, regulation-wise, that DA requires a unit to have to perform with is listed. Most people are surprised by the amount of work that they thought was required by "the regulation" that is not required by DA.

Mulhall related that the regulation also works for inspectors because they can now use an all-inclusive, single publication that consolidates DA-level administrative requirements that apply at a unit level to inspect with.

IG inspections are now but one part of a triad, with the other two inspections being a command inspection and a staff inspection.

"A staff inspection involves a brigade supply officer looking very technically at a battalion supply section to identify and take care of technical problems in the system. The command inspections are taken care of by individual battalion commanders," Mulhall said.

According to the new regulation, a command inspection is "a formal inspection conducted by the commander in the chain of command of the inspected activity. The areas of interest and scope of command inspections...are determined by the commander conducting the inspection."

"The end result is," said Mulhall,"that the commander has a more direct role in determining the standards of his unit." The inspector stressed that units must be familiar with and use these new regulations to properly administer their units.

"An information explosion is going on right now in regard to Army regulations. The good news is that most of the changes have been made with the expressed purpose of reducing the workload at unit level," Mulhall said.

He said if units want to stay up-to-date and on track they need to stop relying on institutional memory and use the appropriate ARs in administering their units.

House renamed for great Army general

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

An historical set of Fort Benning quarters has been dedicated to a soldier who was instrumental in developing this country's ability to rapidly deploy anywhere in the world.

The Infantry School's assistant commandant's quarters, has been renamed the Mahaffey House in honor of the late Gen. Fred K. Mahaffey. Formerly known as Quarters 2, the house is located on Kries Street.

In a ceremony May 6 attended by Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba, Jr. and former Army chief of staff, (retired) Gen. Edward C. Meyer, the house was dedicated to Mahaffey. Burba hailed the deceased general as having been "...one of the great leaders of our Army."

Meyer said dedicating Quarters 2 to Mahaffey was appropriate as "...Fred Mahaffey occupied these very quarters when he served with distinction as the Infantry School's assistant commandant from 1976 to 1978."

(Retired) Lt. Col. Craig H. Mandeville, an officer who served with Mahaffey, said the general left a lasting legacy to the Army and the nation when he worked jointly with the Marine Corps in developing the ability for U.S. forces to rapidly deploy anywhere in the world.

"In 1979, as a result of the mid-east oil crisis, the President of the United States adopted a rapid deployment force doctrine. A task force was put together to organize and implement this new doctrine. Part of this doctrine involved the development of a new airplane, the C-17. If it hadn't been for Mahaffey, this new plane might never have been developed according to Army needs," Mandeville said.

Because of Mahaffey's efforts, the plane was designed to meet Army needs, including carrying all needed Army equipment in a ready-to-fight configuration, operate on short landing fields and execute low altitude parachute extractions of outsized equipment, according to Mandeville.

Don't make it easy for car thieves

Provost Marshal's Office

All too often, some driver's make it easy for car thieves to steal their cars. Whenever a window is down or a door not locked, it's an invitation for a thief.

There are basically two kinds of thieves:

- Joy riders, age 15 to 21 — Most have never committed a serious offense before. They are just having some fun at someone else's expense, and they do not realize that car theft is a felony that can carry a stiff prison sentence. If they get away with car theft, young people often get involved in more serious crimes. Young car thieves have a high accident rate. They're all too likely to injure or kill themselves and others.
- Professionals — They steal cars either for resale, or to use as getaway cars. It takes less than a minute for a professional to break into a locked car and start it, or they may tow it away. Recovery is much less likely with professioal thieves. Cars are repainted and sold, shipped out of the country, or stripped for parts within hours in "chop shops." Professionals often steal cars to use in other crimes, such as holdups, theft, or kidnapping. Nearly half the getaway cars used in bank robberies are stolen.

Car theft is a widespread problem. More than $4 billion is lost, annually, due to auto theft. Of all the cars stolen, 40 percent are never recovered. A car is stolen every 28 seconds, totaling over one million cars each year.

Here on Fort Benning, from April 1986 to April of this year, there were a total of 57 cars reported stolen. Last May, nine cars were reported stolen, which was the highest number reported stolen during a one-month period.

Understanding how car thieves operate could prevent you from being their next victim. Remember not to leave valuables, such as cameras, packages, and purses, in the seat, which would encourage a thief.

Bicentennial celebrates liberties granted us in our constitution

By Rick Needham
2nd Bde. 10th Mtn Div Chaplain

"I do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic." These are familiar words to those of us in the military.

And this week we celebrate Armed Forces Day, honoring all branches of the military. President Harry S. Truman proclaimed Armed Forces Day; and it was first celebrated in May, 1950.

The observance occurs on the third Saturday of May with military exercises on land, at sea, and in the air. But why is it necessary to have armed forces? What is the purpose of the United States military?

We have a military because of Article I, Section 8 of our Constitution, which reads: "The Congress shall have the power . . . To raise and support armies . . ." Our armed forces are established and funded because of the need to defend our great Constitution.

This year marks the beginning of our nation's third century under the oldest national constitution in the world, a constitution intended to secure rights which are the gift of God. Our early history clearly evidences belief in God, the Author of History. Our foundational documents, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, are weighted with Judeo-Christian values.

President Grover Cleveland, a minister's son, on the occasion of the Constitution's centennial said, "If the American people are true to their sacred trust, another centennial day will come, and millions yet unborn will inquire concerning our stewardship and the safety of their Constitution. God grant they may find it unimpaired; and as we rejoice today in the patriotism and devotion of those who lived 100 years ago, so may those who follow us rejoice in our fidelity and love for constitution liberty."

Here we are 100 years later. Our Constitution will only live on unimpaired if we engrave in our hearts the words enshrined in the Jefferson Memorial: "God, who gave us life, gave us liberty. Can the liberties of a nation be secure when we have removed a conviction that these liberties are the gift of God? Indeed, I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just, that His justice cannot sleep forever."

Grenade course aims for realism in training

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Mike Brazile
2nd Lt. Kevin Lewis gets ready to pull the pin on a live hand grenade during the Infantry Officer Basic Course's hand grenade training.

The Infantry Officers Basic Course is striving for realism in the training of future infantry leaders and the course's new hand grenade range is controlled, realistic violence in support of realistic training.

Built by the cadre of the 2nd Training Battalion's Tactical Leadership Branch, the grenade range combines a tactical situation with an M-16 rifle live-fire and the throwing of live hand grenades. There are no concrete berms, grenade sumps or dug-in bunkers with plexi-glass observation windows. This course boasts in-the-dirt realism.

"When a squad comes through this course they first throw one hand grenade each for practice, to get the feel of throwing it. The squad then regroups, gets a fragmentary order and moves out. That's when the realism really begins," said SFC Harvey Peebles, the noncommissioned officer in charge of the grenade course and one of the 23 TLB cadre members who helped build the course.

The squad begins taking "fire" and must move against the "enemy." Two-man buddy teams move up, begin firing live rounds at pop-up targets and then one man moves to a five-foot, u-shaped reinforced wooden wall and tosses a live grenade while his buddy continues engaging the "enemy."

Peebles said the course is designed to build the students' confidence in their ability to engage targets with small arms fire and to throw live hand grenades.

The object is to provide a realistic environment, where soldiers must "think and hump," he said. "The only thing this course doesn't have is live fire from the enemy."

Students are taught to watch where the grenades land once they throw them. The reason for this, Peebles said, is "to instill in each man the fact that the enemy could easily pick up a grenade and throw it back if the thrower isn't watching where his grenade goes."

Driving 55 mph helps save energy

Post Energy Office

Americans have a reputation for doing their best during a crisis. A good example of this occurred after the oil embargo of 1973. New programs were developed to conserve oil and reduce our dependence on imported oil. Examples include ride share programs and the 55 MPH speed limit. Consumers also demanded smaller fuel efficient automobiles.

How successful have these measures been? Through our conservation efforts, demand for oil was reduced enough to seriously damage to OPEC Cartel. Failure of the oil exporting countries to limit production and boost artificially high prices has resulted in just the opposite occurring.

Oil is again flowing in large quantity from the Mid East Oil fields and prices are dropping. Many people believe the good old days are back and are calling for a return of the 65 MPH speed limit.

It makes you wonder if we learned any lessons from our past experiences? Have people forgotten what it feels like to wait in gas lines and experience four fold price increases?

If we have, it's time to stop and look at the facts. In 1973, at the time of the embargo we were importing 37 percent of our oil supples. Today we are importing almost 50 percent of the oil we use. 25 percent of the energy consumed in the United States is for transportation. 96 percent of the energy used for transportation is oil with the automobile accounting for 30 percent of this. It is obvious that a dramatic reduction in oil, whether a result of a Mid East war or embargo will have worse consequencies than in 1973.

We must also consider other issues. The balance of payments in foreign trade is presenting serious problems for the overall economy. We are sending our money and technology overseas in exchange for something we literally burn up. The 55 MPH speed limit has reduced our dependence on foreign oil and also provided some relief with petrol dollars. Another unexpected bonus that came with the reduced speed limit was the reduction in deaths from automobile accidents.

When all the facts are considered, the adventages of the 55 MPH speed limit far out weigh any disadvantage. In fact the disadvantage can be overcome simply by starting your trip a couple of minutes early.

Engineers head south to train at Camp Santiago, Puerto Rico

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Some soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group recently took a trip to the Carribean. However, for the soldiers of the 608th Ordnance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, the trip was no vacation.

According to Capt. Carl Runyon, Commander of the 608th, the company was notified that it would be deploying to Puerto Rico as a part of a Emergency Deployment Readiness Exercise,which began April 27.

Runyon said that there was much to be done before the co ny actually left for Puerto Rico. "A comp y really has to have its act together to pass all the inspections to see if it is deployable," the commander said. "The inspections were numerous and included everything from soldiers' personal files to vehicles."

After the hustle and bustle of the inspections, the advanced party, including 20 soldiers and two vehicles, loaded onto a C-130 airplane for a four hour trip to Camp Santiago. The Camp is a Puerto Rican National Guard post in the south part of the island, just outside the city of Salenas.

Runyon said that the mission of the advanced party was to coordinate with the Battalion staff at Camp Santiago to ensure that a dining facility, billets and additional transportation would be ready for the main body, which left April 29, also on a C-130 out of Lawson Army Airfield here.

According to Runyon, "One of the key points of the EDRE was the fact that our young soldiers were able to experience an overseas airlift. Eighty-five percent of our soldiers had never even been on a C-130, and the airlift was a good wartime simulation for them." Many of the soldiers were surprised at the combat landing of the C-130 onto an unimproved airstrip that looked more like a cow pasture.

While in Puerto Rico, the 608th troops spent one day, under the intense Puerto Rican sun, on a live-fire M-16 range amidst the hills and mountains of the island.

The soldiers also tested their skills at the squad level on the Camp Santiago Leadership Reaction Course, Runyon said. The course was designed to test the teamwork abilities of the soldiers as they were given a time limit at each obstacle according to Runyon.

Classes were also given on radio operations, heat injuries and first aid, Runyon said.

After all the training, the soldiers of the 608th were given a chance to boost their morale. A two hour bus ride took the soldiers to San Juan, Puerto Rico for a day of sight seeing, sun bathing and souvineer buying.

May 3 the 608th packed up and was bused to Roosevelt Roads Naval Base and flown home in a C-141 airplane.

According to Runyon, the EDRE went very smooth as was expected. "The EDRE to Puerto Rico was a unique experience so many new firsts including visiting Puerto Rico, deploying overseas and deploying by airlift rather by convoy," he said.

The return of the 608th to Fort Benning meant more training for the soldiers as it was straight to the field for the 67th Maintenance Battalion Field Training Exercise.

Snipers 'psych' out enemy by 'taking out' commander

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

D'Arcy Thompson wrote in his book, Paraphrase of Euripides,"Ten good soldiers, wisely led, will beat a hundred without a head."

This could be the maxim for the snipers in the Scout Platoon of the 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division.

"Snipers have a psychological effect against an enemy. Taking out a company or battalion commander can render a unit almost helpless. That's only one of the uses of a sniper and why we have them," said 1st Lt. Kimm Rowe, the platoon leader of the 3/14th Scouts.

There are five soldiers in the Scout PLatoon's Sniper Team and their mission, according to Rowe, is to eliminate key targets when called upon and to serve as intelligence gatherers and forward observers for fire support.

"Scouts serve as the eyes and ears of the battalion commander. When our snipers aren't on a sniper mission they serve as observers, sending back pertinent intelligence on the enemy. However, when they perform as snipers they are a definite force multiplier," said SSgt. William Hartman, a sniper and a graduate of the Marine Corps Sniper Course. These "force multipliers" train constantly to improve their shooting skills and their expertise in camouflage, observation and movement techniques.

"Half the battle, for a sniper, is getting to his position unobserved and staying that way," Hartman said.

To hone their skills in "getting in unobserved," the snipers conduct frequent stalking exercises.

"On a stalking exercise, a sniper team will get into their gilly suits, (special camouflage uniforms) and then begin moving down a lane toward two observers," Rowe said. "These observers are using binoculars to try and locate the snipers and it's tough on the snipers."

The exercise requires these soldiers to move to within 250 meters of the observers without being seen. An 800-meter movement exercise such as this might take two to three hours to accomplish, Rowe said, with the snipers moving painstakingly slow so as not to be observed.

Besides training on observation, camouflage and movement techniques, the snipers also do a lot of firing to keep up their shooting skills.

"We have each man fire at least 20 rounds per month and they have to qualify quarterly," Hartman said.

This qualification, using an M-40 Model 700 Remington rifle with a Redfield scope, involves firing at both stationary and moving targets at ranges of from 300 to 600 yards. The stationary targets are standard "E-type" silhouettes. The moving targets are but 13-inches wide.

According to Rowe, a sniper has to be a very disciplined soldier who can stay in one small spot for days at a time with little or no movement. A sniper must also be levelheaded, possess a lot of common sense and be able to adjust to change easily. "A sniper also has to have the desire to be a sniper," Rowe said.

"I'm a sniper because when you go out, it's just you and your teammate. If you mess up or make a mistake it's your own fault and no one elses," said SSgt. Tony Mendoza, a graduate of the sniper courses conducted by the 82nd Airborne Division and the Army Marksmanship Unit.

Sp4 Darryl Speed agreed. "As a sniper you have to be able to depend upon yourself. You're out there all alone, just you and your partner. If you make a mistake, it's on you and no one else. There's nobody around to help you, you make it or break it on your own," he said.

Students read 14,260 books thanks to 'Book It' program

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

What do Fort Benning school children, books and pizza all have in common?

The "Book It" Program.

"Book It" is a national reading incentive program sponsored by Pizza Hut. It involves children in grades 1 through 6 and lasts for five consecutive months.

"The initial decision to participate in the program is left up to the teacher," Beth Middlemiss, Fort Benning School System Director of Staff Development, said, "once the teacher decides then there are guidelines set up for the teachers to follow."

They are given a progress chart to put the children's names on. The teachers set the minimum monthly reading goals for the whole class.

The students begin to read and submit written or verbal reports on each book and their progress is then charted.

Students who achieve the minimum monthly goal earn a Free Pizza Award Certificate good for single topping personal pan pizza, those who achieve the minimum goal in all five months earn a Principal's Honor Diploma. If all the students in the class achieve the minimum goal in at least four out of the five months the class earns a Pizza Party.

"This years program has been a great success," Mrs. Middlemiss said, "We have already signed up for next year."

According to Mrs. Middlemiss a total of 14,260 books were read by the children during the five month time span.

"The effects are still being seen in the classroom," she said, "the media specialists have noted a steady increase in library usage."

On a National average 400,000 teachers participated in the program.

In a teacher survey conducted by the University of Rhode Island during the 1985-86 school year, approximately 69 percent of students improved their level of reading while 82 percent of students increased their enjoyment of reading. It also was found that 46 percent of parents showed active involvement with their children in the program.

Mrs Middlemiss said that the president of Pizza Hut stressed that this was not an advertising campaign and that they wanted to just be able to teach children to read.

"The amazing thing about this program," George Nix, Patch School Principal, "is the fact that even though it's run by a vendor there is no interference except the children get a free pizza."

Fann Woody, a first grade teacher at Patch School said, all of her students participated.

"It's a great incentive for the first graders to learn to read," she said, "One of my students thought it was so neat that they could get a pizza while learning how to read."

The program is especially good for first graders because they have a tendency to believe that they can only read from the primary book, Miss Woody said.

As a result of the program students from Wilson School put together a booklet to send to the "Book It"promoters.

Some excerpts from the book are. "Book it made me smarter. It taught me new words," wrote James Grant; "I used to play football but now I read in school and at home," wrote Derek Thompson; "It was nice of you to do this for us," Nicola Presley wrote.

Soldier hopes to see stars in his future

Working as extra makes dream of becoming an actor a reality

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Mike McPhie is a soldier who hopes to have stars in his future — movie stars, that is.

The staff sergeant, a licensed practical nurse with the 34th Medical Battalion, was stationed in Germany last year when he found out from a friend in a theatre group that ABC Television was looking for extras for a TV mini series being filmed in Europe.

"There were 700 of us, both military and civilian, who went in for an extras audition. There were 12 chosen and I got lucky because they were looking for a certain kind of face," McPhie said.

Given permissive TDY to participate in the series, he found out the series was entitled "War and Remembrance," a sequel to a previous series, "The Winds of War,' both based on Herman Wouk novels.

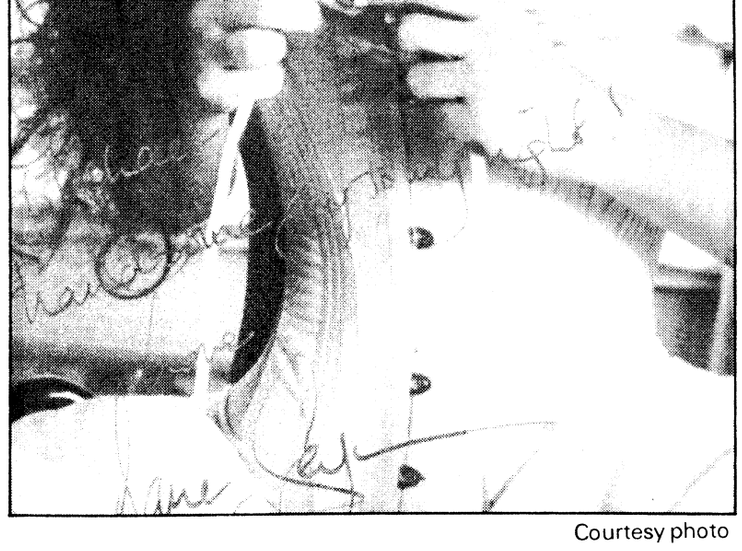
McPhie played the part of an American businessman caught up in France during the World War II German occupation of that country. "I got really lucky in one scene and was filmed with Jane Seymour on my left and Sir John Gielgud in front of me," said McPhie, proudly displaying a photo of Seymour. Seymour had written on the picture "To Michael, the handsome guy on my right," Jane Seymour."

McPhie said he and Seymour talked quite a bit after she found out he was an LPN working in obstetrics. Seymour's father is a doctor of obstetrics, according to McPhie. "We talked about babies,"he said.

McPhie's acting career lasted for three days, with filming being done in the chic German spa resort, Baden-Baden.

"I was paid about 600 marks for my work, plus ABC paid for our hotel rooms and all of our food," McPhie said.

He said it was hard work and long hours but a lot of fun.



"The first day we began shooting at 6 a.m. and filmed until 10:30 that night, completing just three scenes. They wanted us to look tired like we had been traveling all night, so I stayed out in Baden-Baden until 4 that morning . I looked travel-worn, all right, with just an hour's sleep," said McPhie, smiling.

The 11-year Army veteran said his name will appear in the credits when ABC shows the series in October and that he hopes to do more work in movies and television.

"I'm going to try and do some 'extra' work on movies in Atlanta. The director of "War and Rememberance' said I looked pretty good," McPhie said.

The tall, red-headed NCO said he took a lot of teasing about his scene with and picture of Jane Seymour and that a lot of the doctors at the hospital where he worked asked him how come he didn't take her out.

"I wanted to," he said,"but she's married and has two kids."

Army's treatment program works to rehabilitate drinkers

Army News Services

WASHINGTON — "I had been an alcoholic since 1979 . . . my wife told me for years that I was an alcoholic . . . I just didn't have the power to do anything about it." "I had gone through Trace II . . . I still had the denial when I came here from 'detox' . . . I couldn't cope with the idea that I am an alcoholic."

These are the words of two soldiers who had completed Trace III of the Army's Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program. The six-week, intensive, in-patient program at the Fort Gordon, Ga., Eisenhower Army Medical Center's residential treatment facility treats and rehabilitates soldiers and spouses with problems of drug and alcohol abuse.

Does it work? Of 612 soldiers and 297 spouses treated at the facility in the last four years, 71 percent have returned to duty. Follow-ups and after-care programs are offered on a non-resident basis at the 190 Army Drug and Alcohol Prevention Control Programs at installations Army-wide.

In the first case, the soldier worked in the hospital and referred himself to the facility on the 12th floor. He went on to say, "After work, I'd drink a six-pack between here and Gate 5. I'd stop and get a case and drink that over the course of the evening and sometimes ask my wife to get another six-pack. From 1981 on, I would drink a case and a fourth a day . . . This month I have a year's sobriety. The role that Fred played was totally awesome. He made me look at myself." Another patient echoed his words by saying, "He understood my guilt and shame and how I could reach bottom. He told me God was not through with me. He made a point of meeting with me perhaps more than the others."

The "Fred" that these soldiers refer to is Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Fred L. Maddox, a member of the multidisciplinary staff in the facility's integrated program. Maddox uses a group-dynamics approach. All patient's problems, suggestions for treatment, and progress are discussed among members of the staff at daily meetings so that a composite picture of what is happening with each patient emerges. Maddox says he has found the approach vital to the psychological and spiritual treatment of chemical addiction. His presence lends spiritual balance.

Some patients are referred to the facility after attending Tracks I and II of the Army's Anti-Drug Abuse Program. The 30-day-long Track I phase provides education about alcohol and drug abuse, along with group counseling. Track II consists of up to one year of out-patient care and offers more intensive counseling. Some patients enter the facility after the two-week detoxification regimen on the hospital's 13th floor.

Each patient entering Fort Gordon's facility must meet with Maddox and complete a "religious inventory," an assessment of the patient's spirituality. The questionnaire's 79 items are designed to afford a general self-evaluation as well as to solicit information on personal piety and religious orientation. The assessment provides relevant and revealing feedback to the patient. Designed to raise valid questions of a religious nature, it thus helps the chaplain nurture the beginnings of spiritual growth, a practice similar to the Alcoholics Anonymous emphasis on spirituality — reliance on a Higher Power and prayer — to reinforce sobriety. Maddox explains, "Because of the physical and mental impairment, the God-given ability to make decisions has been distorted. That ability has to be restored before a person can be committed to God."

The questionnaire's general religious subjects include self-concept, personal piety, external piety, religious models, coping with erring, managing temptation, religious family dynamics, forgiveness, sense of wonder, sense of God and the concept of God.

As Maddox explains the religious inventory, he says, "I present feelings based o the content of the inventory and spiritual assessment, as a place where theology and psychology come together. The people who come here . . . begin to feel things that they've never felt and feel things that have been anesthetized for a long time, including the whole positive and negative spectrum of feelings. I present it as 'the cradle of conscience.' Theologically, we speak of the inner core of a person's being as his conscience — the God-like part of us. The small voice of conscience gets through when the whole spectrum of feelings are awakened or expressed."

For example, one of the questions asked goes like this: "Where do you place yourself in the scheme of things (in the sight of god)? a. I am important; b. I am somewhat important; c. I am not very important; d. I am unimportant." Maddox explains, "Usually, if the psychologists say the patient has low self-esteem, the religious inventory usually has reflected the answer c. — 'I am not very important.' Or the answer will reflect that they don't have a sense of purpose. What happens in one area seems to be happening in another. Then the staff knows what that person needs encouragement to think well of himself.

"I assure each one. I use Psalm 8 a lot:

"'When I consider the heavens, the work of Thy fingers,

The moon and the stars,and all that Thou has made;

What is man that Thou art mindful of Him

And the son of Man, that Thou dost care for him?

Yet Thou has made him just a little less than God.

And dost crown him with glory and majesty.'

"I say then: Do you ever stop to think you are just a little less than god? You're crowned with glory and honor. You are of inestimable worth to God."

Maddox conducts eight "spiritual journeying" classes designed to encourage persons in the process of considering and expressing their sense of destiny, purpose and direction, and to become able to enter into true intimacy and faithfulness. He gets the most emotional response from any of his classes when he asks the patients to write a letter home under the pretense that their life is ending and they must write about what is most important and what they believe.

Another positive approach he stresses is that patients who are chemically dependent have a difficult time admitting they deserve forgiveness; and that each person needs to return as a person recovering from a disease, a person ready to perform, and to reclaim what is his. Other classes on he medical aspects of the disease, dietary needs and physical fitness are conducted by other staff members.

Alcoholism costs U.S. $120 billion a year

By Julia Ridgely
Johns Hopkins Univ. Alumni Magazine

WASHINGTON — Costing as much as $120 billion annually and affecting at least 10.6 million Americans, alcoholism may be the country's most serious drug abuse problem. Yet most of its victims will suffer needlessly from chronic health, social, financial and legal problems without ever guessing they are addicted to the nation's most popular drug.

Most people who drink will never develop a drinking problem; yet each year thousands of "social drinkers" slide into alcoholism, developing a chemical dependence. As tolerance builds, it takes more alcohol to achieve the same effect. Early symptoms emerge slowly and subtly. Alcoholics drop activities that interfere with drinking, or friends who disapprove. They may complain of vague physical problems, such as tensions, diarrhea, insomnia, or unexplaind bruises. The brain is affected, even when the person is not drinking. Alcoholics may become more forgetful, irritable, and impulsive, more prone to accidents. In general, drinking causes the person recurring trouble, first to relationships with friends and family, and finally on the job.

Warning signs can go undetected because, until recently, few doctors have been trained to look for signs of chemical dependence in patients. Close friends or family may avoid confronting alcoholics or even help them conceal evidence of the problem. Alcoholics often deceive themselves by imposing restrictions that give the illusion of control, drinking only beer or wine, only at home, or only after a certain hour.

The ability to control completely one's drinking habits, rather than when or how much is drunk, separates the normal drinker from the alcoholic. Members of Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) often recommend this test: can you have one drink — no more, no less — every day for 30 days? A normal drinker can, with no exceptions at parties or after a hard day at work. An alcoholic cannot.

Treatment for alcoholism is the same as for other types of chemical dependency: detoxification, support from family and peers (as in AA), and complete abstinence from alcohol and psychoactive drugs, including tranquilizers. Withdrawal is physically and emotionally difficult, but those who break the habit notice sudden, often dramatic improvement, even in health problems they had no idea were tied to their drinking. Treatment succeeds in about 75 percent of people.

Untreated, the disease can easily progress to the point that physical and social symptoms become devastating. Alcoholics can become depressed, anxious and quick to anger; can experience heart palpatation, hypertension, sexual dysfunction, nightmares, and digestive problems; and can get into fights and auto accidents. The liver, heart and brain are especially vulnerable, but no body system escapes. Between slow poisoning and sudden catastrophe, alcoholics die an average of 11 years younger than the general population; one in 10 deaths in the United States is thought to be alcohol-related. A recent hospital survey showed that 30 percent of patients were alcoholics.

For the normal drinker, it is relatively simple to avoid trouble by being alert to the warning signs of alcohol abuse. For the abuser, it is difficult -- but potentially lifesaving -- to take immediate steps to stop.

IG says today's soldiers are the best in history

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The inspector general of the Army had good things to say about Fort Benning during a recent visit here.

Lt. Gen. Henry Doctor was at Fort Benning to speak at the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's Pioneer Ball.

He said soldiers in the Army are the best he has seen in his 32 years as a soldier. "Sopisticated equipment is fine and we need it," he said, "but the quality of the people is the Army's biggest strength." He credited education for making today's soldiers better than those in the past.

Doctor praised the small group approach to instructing that is being utilized in the Infantry Officers Advanced Course and other schools here. This approach means students are in smaller groups and receive more individual attention from their instructors.

"It also keeps the trainers on their toes," he said. "as the student gains more knowledge, he becomes more inquisitive and that trainer has to stay one jump ahead of them."

He was also impressed with the new appointment system at Martin Army Community Hospital. Under the old system, there was one centralized number to call for appointments, which was always busy. "That has always been a big complaint Army-wide," Doctor said, "now that people can call the individual clinics, administrators can see where their resources need to be distributed."

Doctor said his job as inspector general gives him the opportunity to do things for soldiers.

"I think that the Inspector General can do more to enhance readiness and to take care of soldiers, civilians and family members better than any other staff officer we have," he said. "Daily contact with soldiers, civilians and family members is a big plus in my position."

Members of the Inspector General branch travel throughout the world visiting Army posts, to find out what problems soldiers, family members and civilians have and ways to solve them.

He feels the credibility of the branch has come a long way from the perception people had many years ago. "People used to see the I.G. as a threat and were afraid to express their feelings about their unit for fear of being ostracized," he said. "People are starting to realize that the system can be helpful and that certainly gives my staff a better opportunity to accomplish the mission."

Doctor said every soldier in the Army has a piece of the action and they have to understand how they fit into the mission.

"The biggest complaint we receive across the board in the Army is categorized as conditions in units," he said.

"Every commander or leader has a different way of marketing unit policies. That is, explaining why they do certain things which are usually unique to that unit," he said.

Leaders must not forget individual soldiers and their family members, which he said was the key to forging a cohesive battlefield team.

Doctor has commanded everything from a rifle platoon all the way to a Forward Division on the Demilitarized Zone in Korea. At Benning, he commanded the 1/29th and was the deputy brigade commander at the 197th.

He has held several command positions and said that to command is the highest calling of any infantry officer. At the same time, he said that the system is such that you have to serve in staff positions as well.

"But you should always keep in touch with the soldier," Doctor said.

2nd ITB troop places 332nd in marathon

By Marsha Santiago
Infantry Training Center correspondent

For the general public, the 91st Annual Boston Marathon is a thing of the past, but for SSgt. Lloyd McDonald Jr., it is a signal to start training for the 92nd Annual Boston Marathon.

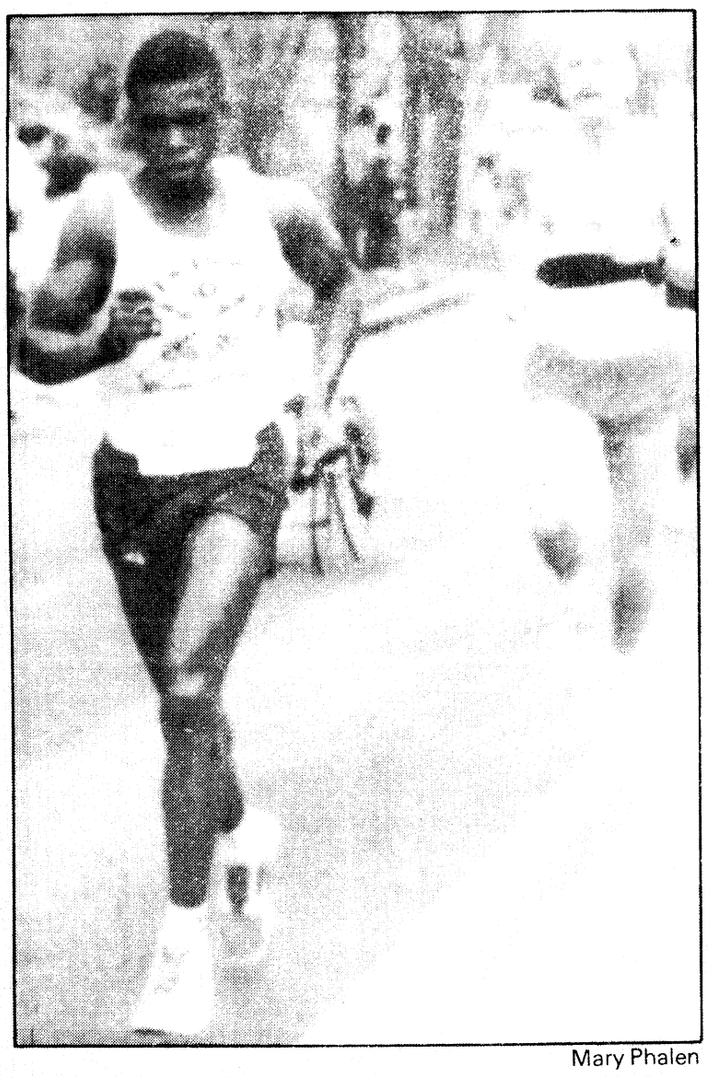
In April, the logistics non-commissioned officer for Headquarters, 10th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, headed for Boston with the support and financial backing of his battalion and brigade.

His finish time for the grueling 26.2 mile course was 2:42:13, which earned him 332nd place in a field of over 10,000, and fifth place among the runners from Georgia.

This year's marathon included over 20 world class runners with a goal of breaking the existing world record of 2:07:12.

With weather conditions a factor, the world record still stands and McDonald was not able to meet his personal goal of finishing in the 2:20s.

"We had to run into a head wind. It was 38 degrees with humidity at 68 to 70 percent," McDonald stated. "There was also a slight rain. Given the weather conditions, I was very happy with my finish time."



He went on to say that the times for the first 350 runners were very close — a few seconds made a big difference in where a runner placed.

McDonald commented on the course, stating it taxes all the muscle groups and demands the last ounce of endurance from a runner.

"The first part of the race, about 13 to 15 miles, you go down hill. Then you hit "Heartbreak Hill" and its up and down for about 6 miles. You start working a different set of leg muscles and by the time you finish, everything is gone," he stated.

What does a runner think about to keep going? McDonald stated he thinks about race strategy and compares the course with a course he has run before. By making the comparision, he can remember that he made it up that Fort Benning hill and he will make it up this one.

He also praised the fans who line the entire course and cheer the runners on. "The fans are fantastic. They keep it exciting and make you push the whole way. They just won't let a runner quit," McDonald said.

Mary Phalen

SSgt. Lloyd McDonald meets the challenge of "Heartbreak Hill" during the Boston Marathon.

As McDonald was leaving Boston after the race, an extra bit of excitement was added to his trip. His photograph had appeared in the Boston Globe the day of the marathon. At the airport, he was approached by individuals carrying the paper and asking, "Isn't this you? Did you run in the marathon?"

"I was a bit of a celebrity for a day," he stated. "It was fun."

McDonald stated the support he receives from his chain of command, his family, friends and neighbors helps keep him motivated.

"Everyone at 'The Eagle Brigade' was very pleased with my performance. My battalion commander had contacted his sister and her family, who live in Boston, and they came out to help and support me during the race," McDonald said. The commander of the 10th Battalion is Lt. Col. Paul Cullinane. During the marathon, Ken and Mary Phalen were waiting at "Heartbreak Hill" to cheer McDonald on.

McDonald went on to say it is impossible to achieve a goal such as the Boston Marathon without that type of support network.

He added that runners must have tremendous amounts of discipline. The discipline is not limited to physical training, but also includes the discipline necessary to make the correct decisions on eating. "It's hard sometimes to watch what you eat, when everyone around you is eating all kinds of foods," McDonald stated. "The support I get from everyone makes it a little easier to make the right decisions."

What's next for the 32 year old staff sergeant? McDonald and his coach, Billy Clark, Community Recreation Division, have a training plan ready to implement. It includes work with Nautilus equipment to build leg strength, alternating hard and easy runs, and working to increase the running stride.

McDonald's next run will be tomorrow in the Fort Benning Armed Forces Day 10K run. He also plans to enter the Peachtree Road Race scheduled for July 4th in Atlanta.

Dubis set two new Interservice records in winning both the 300 Meter Three Position and 10 Meter Air Rifle championships.

His score of 1,164 in the 300 Meter event raised the old mark by one point set by Lt. Col. Lones Wigger in 1981. He also broke his own 10 Meter mark by one point with total score of 591 out of a possible 600.

In the 300 Meter Standard Rifle Championships, USAMU's Maj. Robert Aylward established a new Interservice record and tied the current National mark with a total of 584 out of 600.

Aylward narrowly edged teammate Capt. Kurt Fitz-Randolph, who placed second in the championship with a total of 583. Dubis also finished third at 582.

In the 50 Meter rifle matches, Capt. Fitz-Randolph came back to win the Three Position title scoring 1,169 out of 1,200 possible points.

He finished four points ahead of Dubis at 1,165 while third place went to Capt. Stephen Goff at 1,164.

Other individual winners included Army reservist's William Beard in 50 Meter prone and Wanda Jewell in Women's Standard Rifle.

Former USAMU member, Capt. Mary Godlove, also a member of the USAR, won both of the final Women's events, including 10 Meter Air Rifle and 50 Meter Prone.

Post youths battle it out in T-ball action

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

It was an exciting week for the Fort Benning Youth Activities T-ball teams.

In the T-ball American League 6 to 8 year-olds, the Ghost Busters downed the Tigers 29 to 10. Kevin Moore, second baseman for the Ghost Busters, was the most valuable player, making many key plays. The win put the Ghost Busters in third place, while the loss keeps the Tigers in the last place slot.

Blue Thunder remains in first place after defeating the Phillies 20 to 12 in the 6 to 8-year old Grasshopper League.

The Blue Thunders played a totally defensive game with outfielders Sissy Ashbrook, Julie Peres and Peyton Brow along with B.J. Barker and Doug Lawson covering the infield. Julie Perez went 3 for 3 at the bat. Tevam Rufus batted in a grand slam home run, while Bobby Ashbrook and Doug Lawson went 3 for 3.

In the Fermies Baseball League,(9 to 10 year olds,) the Custer Terrace Mets beat the Cubs in a 15 to 7 game placing the two teams in a final position for fourth place for their division.

In the 11 to 12-year-old Tee Wee Yankee League, the first place Reds shut out the Dodgers 19 to 0 with Martin Tolinson, Luis Vasquez, Miguel Suarez and David Fenton each scoring three runs.

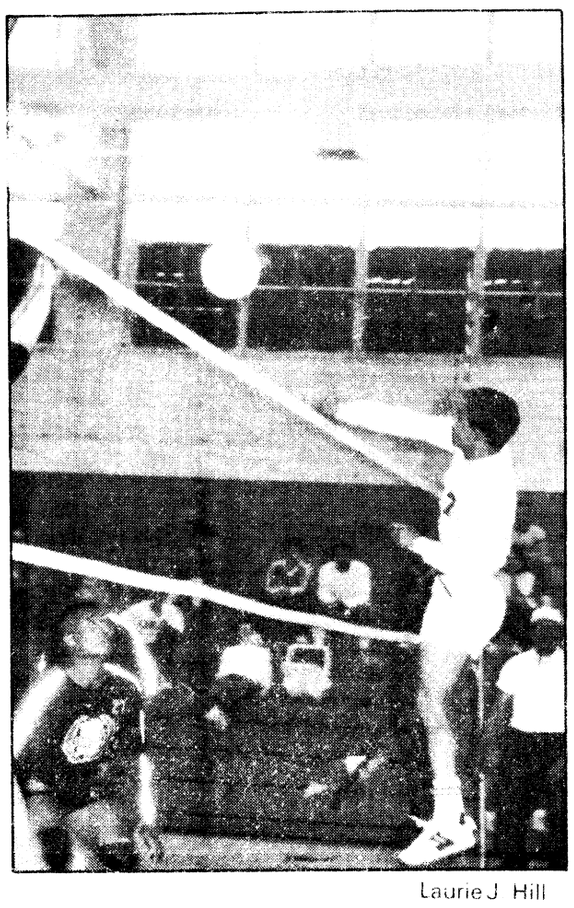
Pitcher Miguel Suarez threw 19 batters and struck out 16 of them. Martin Tolinson and David Fenton each went 3 for 3. The Reds stand undefeated with 3 wins and the Dodgers are in third place for their division.

IOAC players are champions in volleyball

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Volleyball champs have finally been determined!

In a heated championship match, the Infantry Officer Advance Course students from 12th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, captured the company-level 1987 Volleyball Championship from the 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.



In the double elimination tournament Friday night at Briant Wells Gym, TSB lost the first game to the 9th Bn. by losing the first two sets.

The win did not come easy for the 9th Bn., with both sets going down to the wire. The loss surprised the TSB team, which had been undefeated throughout the season.

However, the second game proved more successful for TSB. The players buckled down and beat the 9th Bn. to win the championship.

Highlights of the first game put "volley" in the word volleyball with ceiling-high set-ups and impossible-to-return spikes. The first set was tied until the 9th Bn. seemed to get a second wind and hurled ahead to hit the 15 point mark.

The second set was almost a replay of the first with 9th Bn. winning and forcing TSB to play a second game.

Laurie J. Hill

The School Brigade's Majos Mati spikes the ball across the net toward the 9th Battalion's Jessie Esrrada

The second game kept the crowd on its toes with points volleying as often as the ball. TSB won the first set and lost the second. However, an amazing comeback in the third set gave TSB the victory and the championship.

Commander praises new dental plan

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Service members who are having a hard time deciding about enrolling in the new dental insurance plan may be interested in what Benning's chief dentist has to say.

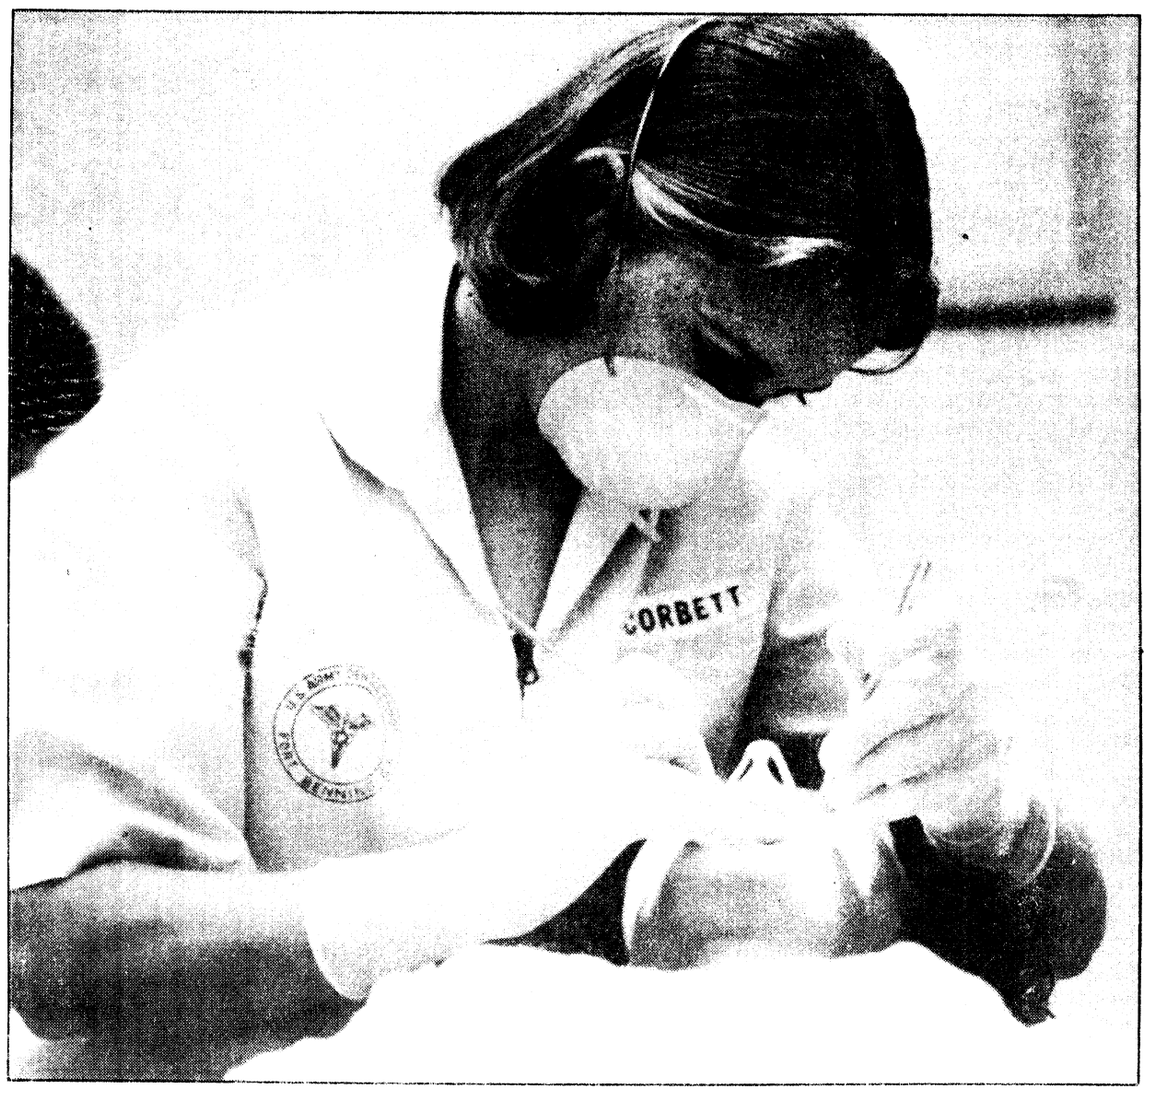
"I'm for the plan in that it provides family members some dental care at a low cost," said Col. Dick Brown, post Dental Activity commander.

"At many posts across the United States, family member care is very limited or not available at all," he said.

Brown believes that the program will be very beneficial to soldiers located in areas where there is no care available, such as for family members whose spouse is on recruiting status.

"I would have liked to have seen the program cover more types of care, but it's a start," Brown said. "As a soldier with family members, I am letting my congressional representative know I'm thankful for the program but I would like to see it expanded."

He said that most family members here have been able to receive the type of care they need from the Fort Benning DENTAC, if they are persistent.



"Our mission here is to provide care for soldiers, then family members," Brown said, "Dependent care represents 30 percent of the care now provided by the clinic on post."

He said the problem is that we don't have the resources to provide all the care that is needed. "This new program is definitely a start," he said, "especially for family members who live where access is limited."

The benefits of the program are:

- No cost to beneficiary for diagnostic and preventive care such as routine oral pain, if a participating dentist is used.
- Beneficiary pays 20 percent of contracted cost for some restorative services such as amalgam and compostite fillings, stainless steel crowns for baby teeth and repairs to dentures for care by participating dentist.
- Beneficiary must pay in full for braces, root canals, tooth extractions, new dentures and porcelain or gold crowns.
- Families enrolled in the program may continue to use space available care for those services not covered by the program.

Cost for one family member is $3.93 monthly ($47.16 per year).which will be automatically deducted. For more than one family member, the charge is $7.86 monthly ($94.32 per year). Yearly premiums can go up or down.

Cool out

Post air conditioners to be turned on Tuesday

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Editor

Air conditioning season officially begins Tuesday, according to post officials.

"We have met the minimum Training and Doctrine Command Criteria of four out of five consecutive days being above the 85 degrees Farenheit comfort line," said Col. Philip R. Harris, director of Engineering and Housing.

The TRADOC comfort line is calculated using the maximum daily outdoor temperature and the relative humidity.

The air conditioning has already been turned on in medical treatment facilities and retail facilities such as the post exchange and commissary.

According to Rodney Carroll in the post Energy Office, family housing has first priority during turn-on of air conditioning, followed by troop housing and administrative buildings.

"We realize that people have been uncomfortable, but we will have more energy during the real hot months of August and September," Harris said.

The cooling season normally ends in September, with four consecutive days of temperatures below the comfort line.

197th troops return from Canada

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

As the dust cleared and soldiers breathed a sigh of relief, the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry Task Force prepared to leave Canada. For the soldiers of 1-58, Rendevous '87 had ended.

But they were leaving with the benefit of a lot of varied and different training. Like the squad live-fire at Gunnery Hill, a Warsaw Pact course with enemy live fire positions, and the trench warfare scenario that the Infantry soldiers went through, testing their abilities and skills.

Not only did the infantryman train hard, but also the support elements as well. The 72nd Engineers platoon built tank ditches and obstacles, 197th Military Police controlled traffic and conducted law enforcement on the ranges, and 2-69 Armor live-fired on Range 16. All these things and more tested the stamina and durability of the 197th soldiers.

After 30 days of training, over 900 soldiers seemed more than eager to get home. But first, weapons, uniforms and other personnal equipment had to be cleaned and serviced for the return to Fort Benning. Vehicles were rail-loaded onto a train that when completed, would contain more than 140 cars.

And as the first group of tattered and weary soldiers boarded the World Airways DC-10 flight, there was a note of happiness. For they all knew, that at the end of their flight, their families would be waiting with open arms.

OPERATION BABYLIFT

People respond to needs of children

Editor's note: Operation Babylift ended on this date in 1975. That's the day that the last two orphans boarded an airplane and flew off to be placed with their adoptive parents. The rescue operation at Fort Benning lasted approximately seven weeks, and involved the efforts of volunteer workers throughout the tri-city area. In a war that left many with bitterness and doubts, Operation Babylift stands out as a rescue effort that the community can remember with pride.

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

They were the flotsam of a devastating war.

The 173 children who arrived by plane at Lawson Army Airfield on April 12, 1975, from An Loc Orphanage in Vietnam, had no where else to go.

Saigon was about to fall under the onslaught of an invading North Vietnamese Army.

How these children were rescued from the invading communists and brought to America to find new parents, was dubbed Operation Babylift and Fort Benning played an integral part.

The An Loc Orphanage in Saigon had been supported by Americans for years. One such American was Betty Tisdale, a Columbus native who had been involved with raising money for the orphanage.

She, along with other concerned social workers, conceived the idea of moving the entire orphanage's population to the U.S. before the invading North Vietnamese Army took over the capital city.

After much red tape and haggling, the South Vietnamese government gave its permission and Babylift was underway — destination, Lawson Army Airfield.

It would be one of the community's finest hours, as soldiers and civilians alike donated their time to help with the children.

"We didn't know what to expect," said retired Lt. Col. Jerry Hahn, who commanded the 34th Medical Battalion in 1975. "I got a warning order about April 7 (1975) and was told by Maj. Gen. Thomas Tarpley, who was the post commander at the time, to get ready to take care of 200 to 300 Vietnamese orphans.

"We were given Wilbur School to house the kids, which we cleared out quickly, and sent out a call for donations," he said.

According to Red Cross worker Wanda Funderburk, who assisted in the Babylift operation and is still a Red Cross volunteer, the Fort Benning-Columbus-Phenix City area exploded with support for the children.

"We were told the kids might be suffering from lice, dehydration, upper respiratory infections, scabies, measles, chickenpox, diarrhea, you name it," she said, displaying yellowed newscopy and old photographs of the Babylift in her seventh

OPINION

Memorial Day a time to pay solemn tribute

This Memorial Day we remember with solemn pride and gratitude America's sons and daughters who have paid the ultimate price for the preservation of freedom.

From "the shot heard 'round the world" that marked our birth as a nation, Americans have time and again taken up arms in liberty's defense. Knowing the ferocity of war and the immensity of the sacrifice it exacts, they have nonetheless followed the spirit of our Founders who pledged their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor to the support of freedom.

The debt we owe to those who have left home and family to serve this cause is beyond measure, but our greatest debt of all is to those who fell in battle. Their ranks are legion, the stories of their heroism countless. Many of them lie beneath the soil of distant lands, and many here at home.

Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr. expressed a fitting thought when he said, "At the grave of a hero we end, not with sorrow at the inevitable loss, but with the contagion of his courage." I join all of you who proudly share that spirit in your own service to our Nation as you pay tribute to these brave Americans. May we always walk in the light of their memory, the light of liberty which shines from age to age and still illuminates the way forward.

God bless you, and God bless America.

Ronald Reagan
President

Soldiers guard our freedom

Memorial Day is a time to remember those Americans who gave their lives for this country's values as embodied in our Constitution-the cornerstone around which our philosophy of self-government and freedom is built.

It is a time to honor the one million Americans who have given the ultimate sacrifice in our nation's eight major wars.

It is also a time to reaffirm those principles for which they died and recommit ourselves to defending peace and freedom.

We must never forget that our future, our childrens' and their childrens' future is based upon that commitment. It is from the moral strength of our founding fathers and the ultimate sacrifice by countless Americans, we remain free today.

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr.
post commander

Don't become accident statistic

Monday we honor the members of our Armed Forces who sacrificed their lives defending our country. Those who died in battle did not die in vain, but each Memorial Day holiday many Americans lose their lives in tragic accidents which could have been prevented.

During the last two years, Fort Benning has not recorded a single accidental injury or fatality during the Memorial Day weekend. We can maintain this enviable record if all of us take some simple precautions.

When you drive, drive defensively and wear your seat belts. Don't try to drive too far, and allow sufficient time for rest stops. At your vacation spot, swim only in areas with lifeguards on duty, and don't try to exceed your capabilities. While boating, make sure that you and your family or friends are wearing life preservers at all times, and obey all the boating "rules of the road." Remember that alcohol doesn't mix with driving or boating.

Enjoy your vacation and return safely after the holiday.

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr.
post commander

Take care when around water

Children need supervision at all times when swimming

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Editor

It was every parent's nightmare.

One day last summer we visited friends who live on Lake Oliver, to fish off their dock. They also have a pool, so while my husband fished, my 2 ½-year-old son William and I swam.

William spent the afternoon playing in the pool, wearing "swimmies" on his forearms that kept him from going under. As the day passed, he became more and more adventurous. When we started preparing to go home, I took the devices off.

In the confusion of loading up the car, I thought my husband was watching him and he thought I had William with me.

Our host walked out the patio door and discovered William floating face down in the swimming pool.

William's body was limp and lifeless when it was pulled from the water. His tanned body had gone white from head to toe, the only spot of color a dark purple bruise on his forehead.

I thought he was dead.

My husband, who has had extensive training by the American Red Cross, immediately went into action.

I don't pretend to know how to do mouth to mouth rescuscitation on a drowning victim, so I cannot describe it exactly. But what I saw was him tipping William's chin back and blowing into his mouth. After four breaths, water gushed out of William's mouth and he began to cry.

Within minutes, an ambulance arrived and we were whisked away to the emergency room. There our pediatrician examined William and said he would be fine; there were no signs of any permanent damage.

After a day spent resting to recover from the shock, William hit the ground running and seemed to have forgotten the whole experience.

My husband and I took longer to recover as we kept asking ourselves how we could be so stupid and careless with our precious little boy.

The Red Cross does not recommend the use of swimmies, said Elaine Kendall, chairman of the Health Services Educaion Committee of the post Red Cross.

Water pressure can cause the devices to lose air quickly, as can a manufacturing defect, she said. But the worst thing about them is that they seem to be such a good safety device.

"Parents get careless, lulled into a false sense of security," Kendall said. "The children sort of learn to swim, but without the devices on, they quickly sink to the bottom."

She said the devices do not give parents a license not to watch their children, and there's just no substitute for knowing how to swim.

"A child is taught that if he falls in the water, he can kick up and grab the wall. They learn that the wall is safety," she said.

The Red Cross teaches swimming lessons for children age 3 and older, and has a water familiarization course for children under 3. Kendall said physicians do not recommend continuous dunking of children under 3 because it leads to ear problems.

They also offer classes in lifesaving and water safety, which no parent should be without, she said.

People who don't know what to do when someone is drowning should try to get help, and the last thing they should do is jump in after the victim.

"The only thing worse than a drowning is a double drowning," she said.

In her classes, Kendall said she teaches four "magic words."

"They are reach, throw, row and lastly, go," she said. The first thing a person should do to help someone in trouble is to try to extend their reach, without going into the water. If that doesn't work, throw a float, rope or whatever is available that the victim can hold on to. If this fails, the person should get on a float, row to the victim and tell them to grab hold of the float, always keeping the float between them.

Only as a last resort should you go into the water after them. "If it's an active person, go in from behind and hopefully not in water over your head," she said.

Kendall said that everyone should learn lifesaving techniques. "It's not that hard and it's painless. It takes four or five hours, and that's not a lot to invest to save someone's life," she said.

The National Safety Council predicts that more than 2,000 people will die from drowning this year.

Make sure you or a member of your family don't become a drowning statistic.

Use care while driving this holiday weekend

By Mike Brazile

Fort Benning hasn't had a Memorial Day fatality since 1982 and the post safety director wants to keep it that way.

"We want everyone to enjoy themselves on Memorial Day but we want them to come back home alive," said Fred Young, Benning's safety director.

Young cited two major areas that everyone needs to be conscious of during the Memorial Day holiday.

"Traffic accidents and water safety are the two biggies that you have to be conscious of during Memorial Day," said Young. "There are a lot of people traveling during the Memorial Day holiday and many of them will be drinking, speeding or driving long distances after work and will be tired. Even though you might be a good driver you have to drive defensivley and watch out for the crazies."

According to Young, the National Safety Council has estimated that 400 to 500 people will die in the U.S. during this Memorial Day holiday Last year Georgia accounted for 12 auto-

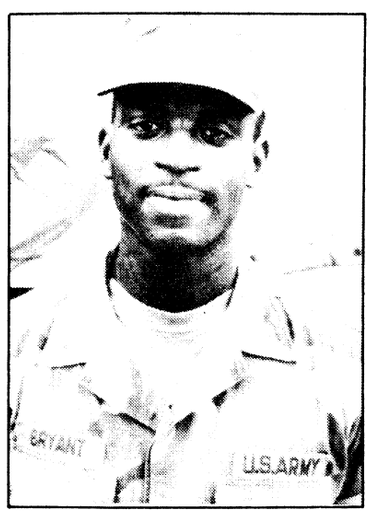
VARIOUS VOICES / What do you think about the new Army Dental Plan?

Capt. Steve Smith, 12th Company, The School Brigade, - "I'm not really familiar with the program because I'm not married, but I don't think it's right that they will automatically take it out of your check if you don't respond by June 30. A lot of people tend to procrastinate and then they will lose their money. However, I do see some benefits to the program because on many posts there is no Army sponsored dental care available for dependents and they have to seek help off post and pay full price."



1st Sgt. James Johnson, Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, - "If you don't have dental problems I don't think you need the program, but for people who do have problems and frequent the clinic it's a good idea because they can probably get downtown faster than on post. Its especially good for people that go to the field a lot with families who don't live on post.

SFC Jack H. Flowers, Company B, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade,, - "I don't think it's very beneficial, the program just covers basic hygiene and not the costly items that you would want in a dental plan for your family. I believe the dental program I presently have with a civilian dentist is cheaper."

Capt. Richard Kaiura, Army Research Institute, Fort Benning, - "My initial reaction when it first came out that it gives us more options. When the military system is overloaded, it allows our families to seek help in the community. I think that the system will be very beneficial in the long run.

Sp4 Anthony Bryant, 598th Maintainance, 36th Engineer Group, - "I don't quite understand the program. It's probably a good plan for some people but not for me. I don't believe I am going to enroll because it isn't going to give us everything we need and it doesn't cover everything. Anyway, I will still have to wait at the dentist's office."

SSgt. Michael Schlotter, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, - I think it's a good program for Fort Benning — it may not be for other posts but it certainly is good for here. There are so many family members that need dental care and it is available but you have to wait, because of course the students and trainees have priority."

Babylift

floor office at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Based on these assumptions, a complete medical receiving operation was set up in an airplane at the airfield in anticipation of the orphans' arrival.

On April 12, 1975, United Airlines Flight 5625 landed at Lawson with the 173 Vietnamese orphans from An Loc. They were accompanied by 90 chaperones, 70 of whom were volunteer airline stewardesses, Tisdale and her staff.

"The kids were in much better shape than we thought they would be," Funderburk said. "They had stopped over in California and had been bathed, given clean clothes and fed."

The Red Cross, under the direction of the hospital field director, Janet Baker, had been prepared for the children's arrival in true military-organizational style. There were five volunteers detailed to receive children, five to undress them, 12 to give them baths, five to dry them, five to dress them and 20 to escort them to a bus for transportation to Wilbur School.

Hahn said his unit had set up the school in a nursery configuration.

"We divided the kids by age and sex except in the case of brothers and sisters, who we tried to keep together," he said. "We were tasked, basically, with getting the kids healthy before they were released for adoption. Most had runny noses and diarrhea but a few were very sick. We got great support from MACH and they took care of the sick children."

According to Funderburk, the primary malady of the sick children was malnutrition.

"Those poor kids looked so much younger than American kids their own age. They were so small and malnourished that we treated them almost like new-born babies. We were told the formula at An Loc had been very low quality and it had really affected them physically in their development," she said.

Bill Tremitiere, the manager of children's programs for Tressler-Lutheran Services, an adoption and placement agency in Pennsylvania who played a major role in the placement of the orphans, agreed with Funderburk but added that the children suffered from more than lack of food.

"Vietnam was and is a backward country. Because of a lack of polio vaccine many of the An Lac orphans arrived here with residual problems associated with polio which they had had previous to coming here," said Tremitiere, who is now the executive associate for the same organization.

Tremitiere, in a phone interview from Pennsylvania, had high praise for Fort Benning in the handling of the event 12 years ago.

"During the 34 days the orphans were there, whatever they needed they got; through donations from the Army or private citizens. This ran the gamut, from food to clothes to toys," he said. "But the main thing they received was a fantastic amount of love and organized care. The Army amazed me when they put togethertheir support of this Babylift together as quickly and efficiently as they did."

Hahn said that thanks to donations, needed supplies were available. "We had everything donated including diapers, cribs, clothes, bottles...you name it," he said.

The only problem was a cultural one involving sleeping arrangements.

"Vietnamese don't like to sleep on beds, so we fixed air mattesses and litters on the floor for the older kids. When we ran out of baby cribs we used shopping carts,"he said.

What to feed the malnourished children was their biggest concern, according to Hahn.

"We had this scientific dietician who had devised a special, nutritious diet for the kids. It was good for them but they didn't like it, just like any other kids," he said, "so we ended up feeding them a lot of rice and fish-based soy sauce. They also liked milk and jello."

Almost from the very moment the orphans touched the tarmac at Lawson, there was a controversy over who had custody rights. Tisdale claimed sole responsibility for the children, while the Pearl Buck Foundation said they should exercise control.

After much haggling and negotiation, the Tressler-Lutheran Service Associates in York, Pa., was given the authority to place the children in homes as adoptees. Hahn, Tremitiere and Funderburk all expressed the opinion that without the tremendous amount of volunteer work donated by Fort Benning and surrounding communities, the operation could not have succeeded as admirably as it did.

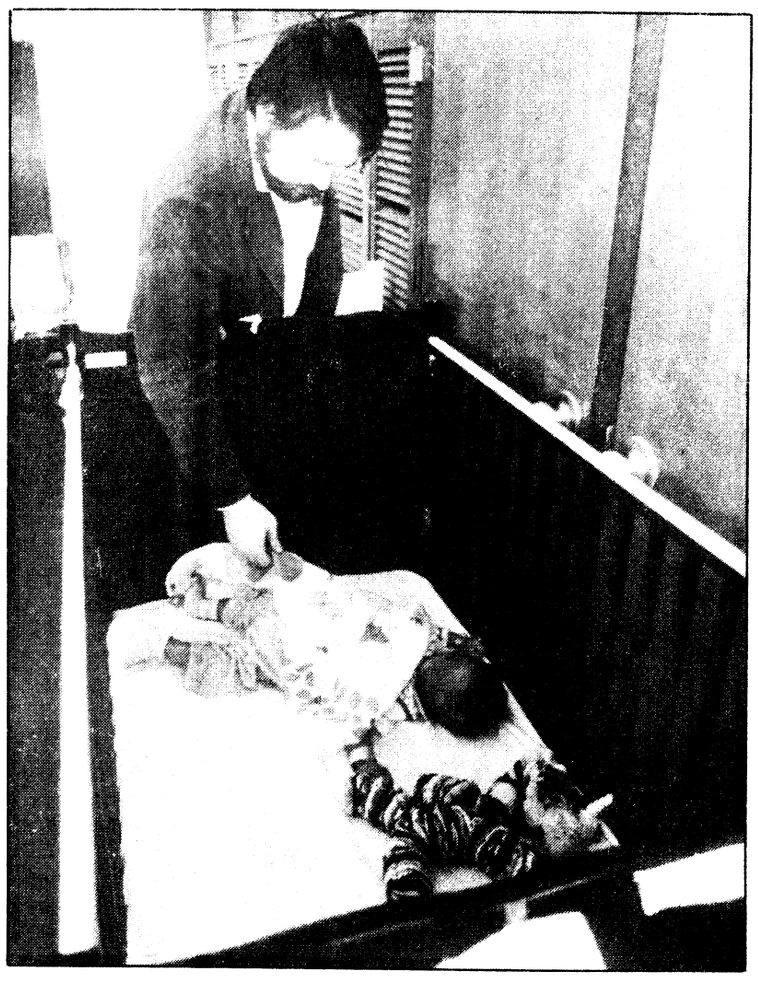
"We ran 24-hour-a-day shifts taking care of those kids. Some women became so attached to the babies they were taking care of that they called them their own," Hahn said. "These kids hadn't had any love or care on an individual basis for a long time and our volunteers filled the bill."

In looking back, Tremitiere said he had one thing and one thing only uppermost in his mind when he became embroiled in the custody controversy.

"We had a group of kids who were under 10 years old that needed help. I mean basic care, like a place to sleep, food to eat and someone to love them. The issue was helpless kids in need and all of us responded to that," he said.

By May 22 the Babylift kids from An Loc were gone, adopted by people all over the country. Families in Georgia got 28, Pennsylvania 120, Arizona one and New Jersey eight.

But the children left lasting memories: some are still in town, settled with the new families that took them as their own 12 years ago and others, while not here in body, remain in spirit.



Wanda Funderburk sits in her Red Cross office, shuffling paperwork, looking out over the post and the area that she has called home since her husband died in 1972, the year she started working as a Red Cross volunteer. The Babylift has a special place in her heart.

"You see, that Babylift was a great thing for me. The Vietnam War wasn't the issue. It wouldn't have made any difference if those kids had been Japanese or German or Chinese," she said. "They were just young kids, with no mothers or fathers, the helpless needing help. I grew a lot helping them and that's what life is all about. Nothing like that will ever happen to me again, as long as I live."

Family looks back on rescue operation

Editor's note: This Columbus family agreed to be interviewed on the condition that their names be changed, in order to protect their privacy.

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

They wear jeans and tennis shoes, eat hot dogs and drink Cokes. Their television is equipped with a VCR for watching movies and they like some things in school and some things they don't. They're typical American kids except for their origins.

Ha-Ly and T.A.D. were two of the thousands of children orphaned by the war in Vietnam, but they were luckier than most. Thanks to Betty Tisdale and Operation Babylift, the children were brought to America and a new life.

The children now live in Columbus, enjoying life as American citizens. Their new parents are compassionate people who felt strongly about their moral obligation to help these children.

"I first became interested in helping orphans in Southeast Asia through the work of Dr. Tom Dooley," said Violet. "I would send Dooley's organization money whenever I could and kept up a correspondence with him."

After marrying a soldier, she ended up working as a nurse at Martin Army Community Hospital.

"When Babylift happened in 1975 I worked on the operation and my husband, who had gotten out of the Army, and I decided we wanted to adopt two of the children," she said.

Her husband Lon had served two tours of duty in Vietnam and said he felt a responsibility to the orphans coming from An Loc.

"I was involved in the war in Vietnam and felt some personal responsibility for what was going on over there. Based on this, I wanted to adopt a couple of the kids to help," he said.

The couple told Tisdale they wanted a little girl and "...we told her to give us, as a second child, the sickest baby she had." After much procrastination and paperwork, they got their children.

"Before we got actual custody of the kids, we were going to Wilbur School where they were being kept. We fed them and loved them. That was the main thing they needed, love," Violet said.

Ha-Ly, who was a little over a year old at the time, still has a flat place on the back of her head from laying in a crib for so long at An Loc Orphanage.

"The kids got minimal care at An Loc There were so many and to just keep them fed and their diapers clean was a major chore," Violet said. "As a consequence, they suffered from a lack of attention. Most of the babies just laid there."

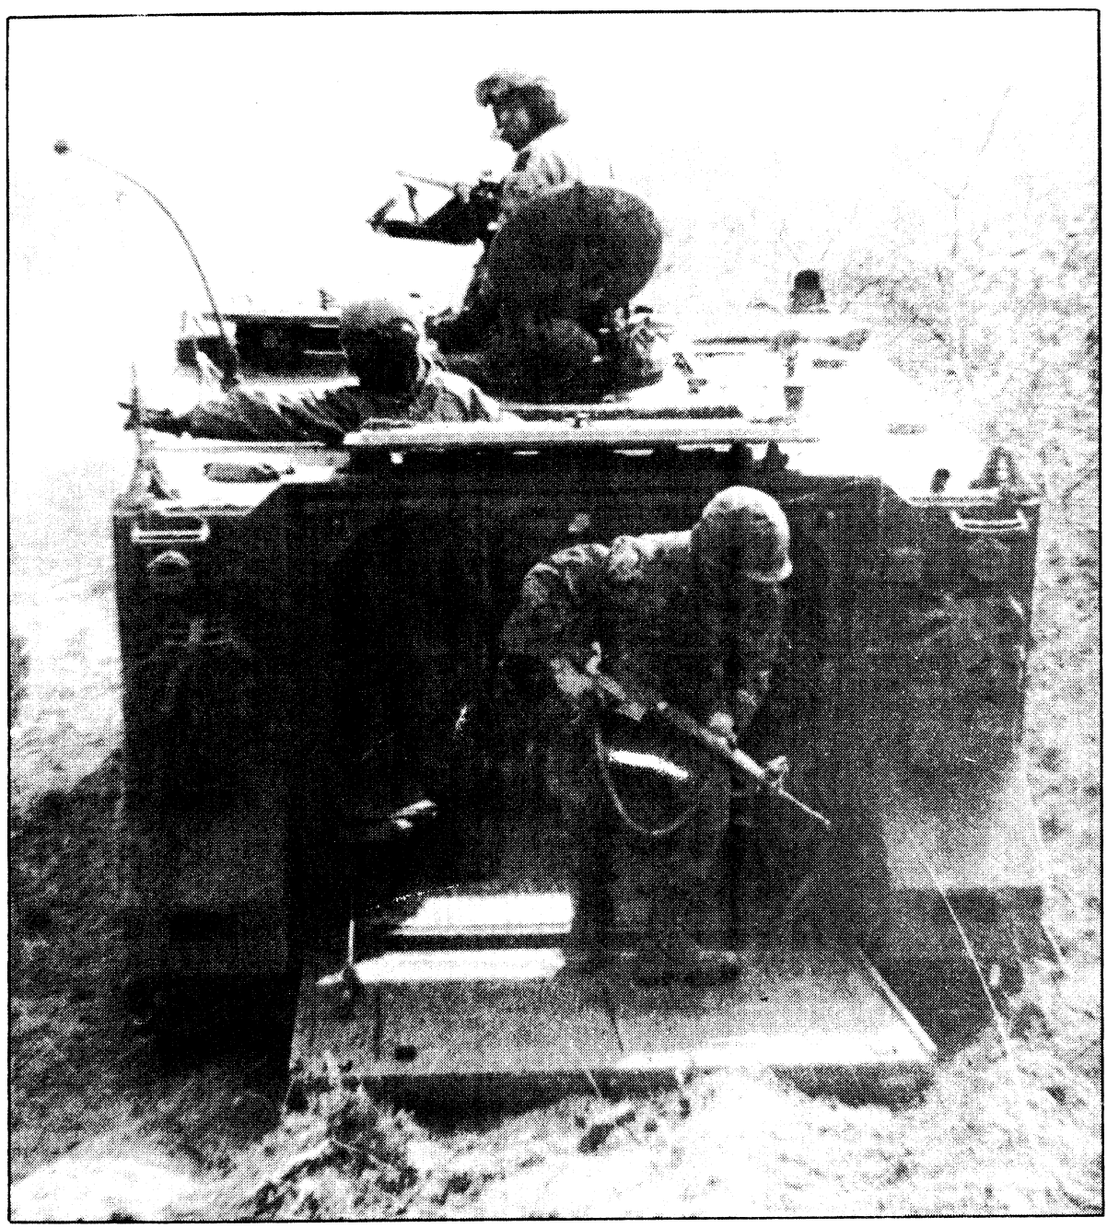
Ha-Ly could speak only Vietnamese when she arrived in Columbus 12 years ago but now speaks English with a decidedly Southern accent.

"I really don't remember too much about the orphanage or the trip over here. This is my home now. I'm an American," she said.

The 13-year old said her favorite subject in school is science. She plays the oboe in band and has first degree blackbelt in karate.

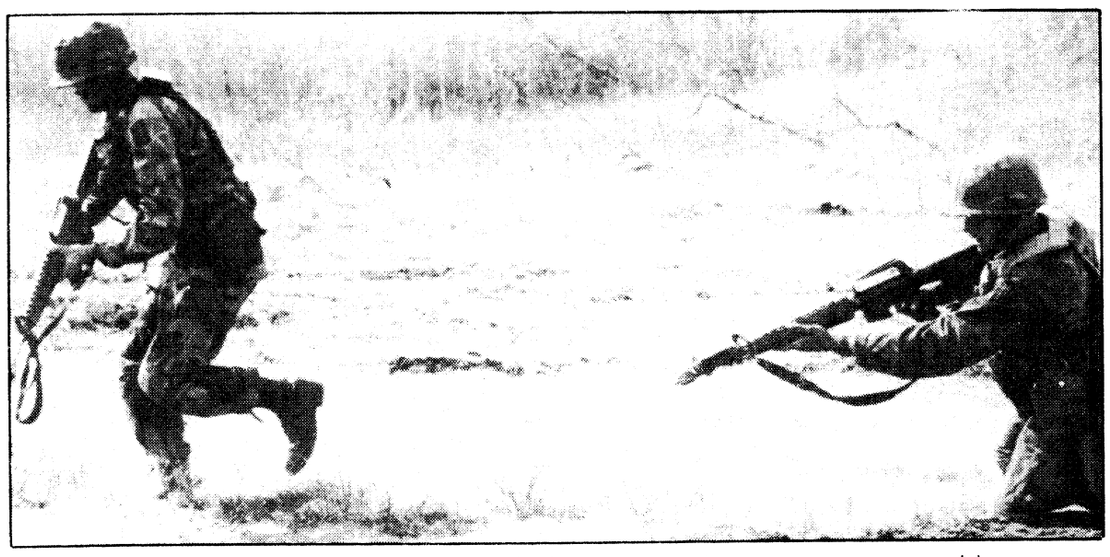
T.A.D., whose name is the initials for Thomas A. Dooley, says he remembers nothing about Vietnam or the Babylift because of his age.

"I like math in school. Violet tells me I was pretty sick when I got here and that I almost didn't make it, but I'm fine now," he said, running outside to play with friends.



"T.A.D. is actually Cambodian," said Violet, "Madame Ngai, the director of An , said his mother had three other children. She felt that T.A.D. might die because she couldn't care for him, so she asked Madame Ngai to keep him at An Loc. According to Ngai, T.A.D.'s mother stared him in the face for a full five minutes to memorize the son she was giving up," Violet said.

According to Violet, the only adjustment problems either child went through was mainly centered around Ha-Ly. "Ha-Ly was very upset and angry for a long time after she arrived and she had a real temper. The first thing she did when we brought her home was hit our other daughter in the head with her bottle. Jennie said 'Take her home,'" Violet said, smiling.



Both Violet and Lon credited the Army with doing a great job of organizing and supporting the Babylift and trying to expedite the process.

"What amazed us was the tremendous amount of support in the form of volunteers and all the donations everyone gave. It was an outpouring from the whole community," they said.

"We're both very grateful to Fort Benning for what they have done for us," said Violet, looking at T.A.D. and Ha-Ly, "very grateful."

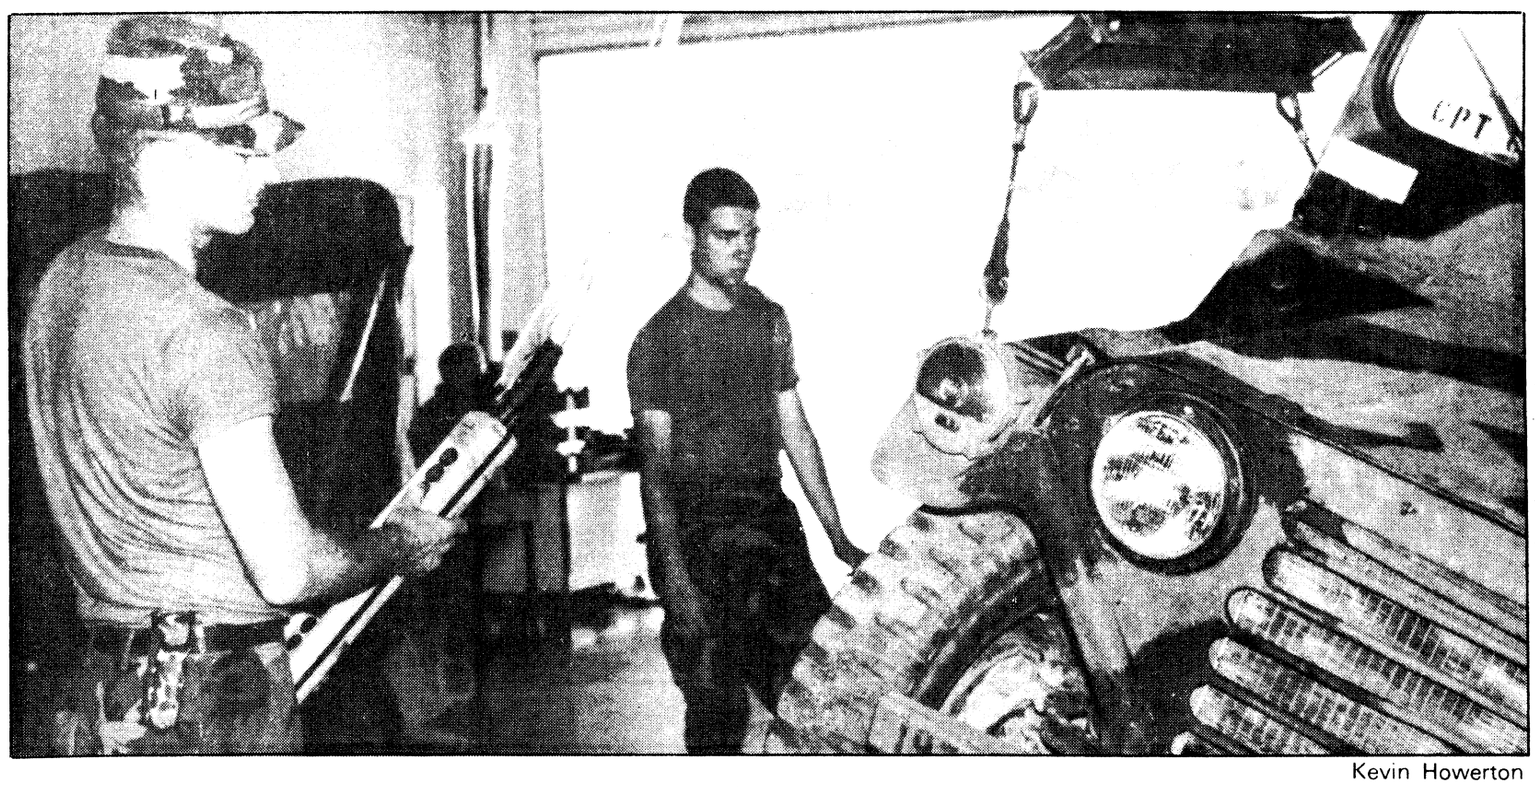
New motor pool helps soldiers keep up vehicles

By Troy Buchanan and Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondents

It hasn't taken much time for soldiers from the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry to feel at home in their new motor pool facility. The clean, yellow bay buildings and the newly poured cement give off a feeling of efficiency and cleanliness. Soldiers busily take advantage of the facility's new equipment to help complete their maintenance mission.

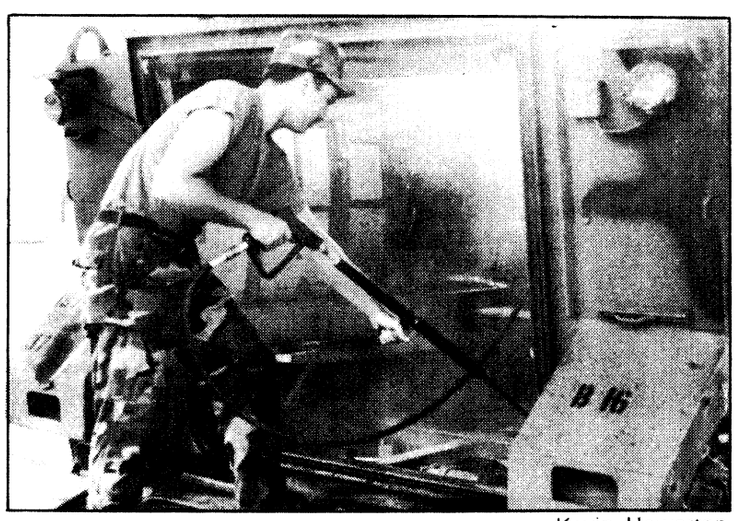
The new facility is larger and has over-head cranes to make loading and unloading of heavy equipment much easier, as well as helping with major maintenance jobs. Nine large bays serve as maintenance shops for the tracked and wheeled vehicle shops.



These provide more than adequate space for simultaneous and continuous maintenance operations. One bay also houses the Direct Support Maintenance contact team from the 197th Support Battalion.

"This really brings everyone together under one roof," stated Capt. William Dasch, Battalion motor officer. "The tools are easily accessible, and there is the ability for quick loading for the field and alerts."

In-ground fuel storage and pumps make refueling a simpler task. Sunken pits with a drainage system makes maintenance jobs as oil changes easier. Steam cleaning equipment also enables soldiers to clean up oil spills as well as clean engine compartments for service.



"This is a lot nicer than our old motor pool," said SP4 David Campbell, who was steam cleaning an Armored Personnel Carrier. "There were no steam cleaners in the old motor pool and this makes the job a lot easier."

The battalion's previous facility was located in Harmony Church and required daily transportation of soldiers from Kelley Hill to the motor pool.

Soldiers work behind the scenes to keep vehicles moving

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

As the sun peeked over the tree tops, Company C, 197th Support Battalion fuel handlers started their rigorous day of setting up a fuel point.

These soldiers routinely handle fuel, however, setting up in a field environment is crucial in preventing maneuver units from coming to a grinding halt due to a lack of fuel.

According to 2nd Lt. Bernadette Nicholson, petroleum platoon leader, Company C's petroleum platoon consists of nearly 30 fuel handlers. The platoon requisitions the fuel from a bulk issue point, and in return supplies the Brigade with diesel or mogas fuel, which is the life line for the vehicles.

While in garrison, fuel handlers fill and maintain the separate motor pools throughout the Brigade. Also, they fulfill another mission, of supporting the different units which conduct or participate in various field training exercises around Fort Benning.

When the Petroleum Platoon goes to the field they are faced with may challenges, such as locating a centralized position in order to best support the Brigade. However, once the position is determined, fuel handlers are quick to react, for it takes ten soldiers only one hour to completely set up a 40,000 gallon fuel point.

After the point is set-up, safety becomes another challenge.

Sp4 Francisco Alonso said "Safety is the big thing, because fuel is very hazardous. If someone is smoking, we will ask them to put it out if they refuse, we will not issue fuel to them."

Fuel is always a hazard, and with a hazard there are always safety guidelines. That's why fuel handlers are trained in every aspect of setting up and distribution of fuel.

It's easy to see why fuel handlers are so important in the field environment. Without their participation the maneuver units would slowly come to a grinding halt.

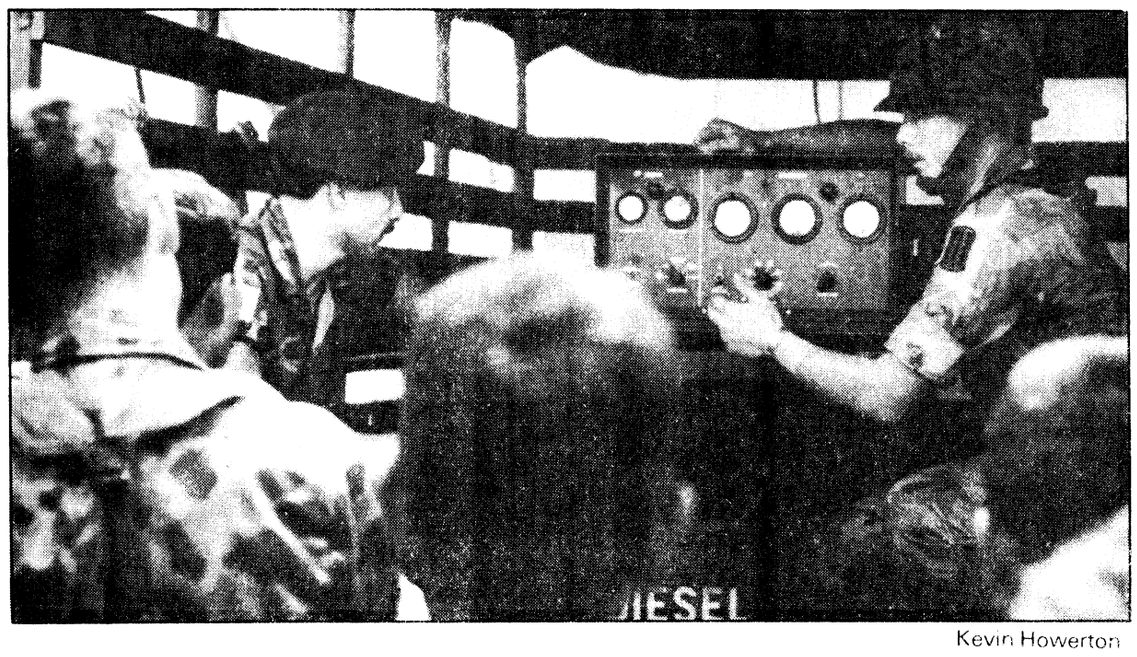
Unit shows USARSA cadets how to clean up water supply

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Proving drinking water is safe for soldiers is essential to any mission. 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers recently demonstrated water evaluation and purification techniques for 74 Columbian students from the School of the Americas. The American and Columbian soldiers also shared their knowledge of basic soldier skills and equipment.

The water purification team from Company C, 197th Support Battalion, set up an Erdlater van at Victory pond. The van is capable of purifying up to 1500 gallons of water an hour. The team also demonstrated water quality analyisis and nuclear, biological, and chemical detection methods.



"The water that comes from these vans is as good, if not better, than city water," said Sgt. John D. Weaver of the water purification team.

The Brigade has two vans, which can supply water on field exercises.

The Columbian students also showed great interest in the basic equipment the 197th soldiers carried.

"We're talking D-day at Victory pond," said SP4 Kevin J. Foster of the water purification section. "I showed them how to put my protective mask on, and every single one of them were looking at their watches, seeing if I did it right. Everybody was clapping after I was done. You go to CTT, no one there claps for you."

The afternoon ended with an exchange of handshakes and good-byes between the 197th soldiers and the Columbian students.

1st ITB

Col. Jose R. Feliciano will assume command of the 1st Infantry Training Brigade, United States Army Infantry Training Center, tomorrow at 8 a.m. on Wetherby Field. Feliciano will succeed Col. James E. Mace in the position.

In the event of bad weather, the ceremony will be held in Sand Hill Theater # 3.

Mace, who has served as commander since April 1985, will become the director of the United States Army Infantry School Ranger Department on June 1.

Feliciano comes to Fort Benning from Fort Bragg, N.C., where he served as Director of Exercises, G3, XVIII Airborne Corps.

Feliciano has served in various command and staff positions during his Army career, including, commander, Company B, 1st Battalion, 327th Infantry and S-3 Air, 1st Brigade, 101st Airborne Division Vietnam; S3 and Executive Officer, 1st Battalion, 502nd Infantry and Chief of Operations, G3/DPT, 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky.; Operations and Training Officer, J-3, and aide-de-camp to the commander-in-chief of the United States Southern Command, Panama; Inspector General and Secretary General Staff, Headquarters, First U.S. Army, Fort Meade, Md.; and battalion commander, 5th Battalion, 1st ITB, USAITC, Fort Benning, Ga.

He holds a master's degree in business administration from the Inter-American University, Puerto Rico and a bachelor's degree in business administration from the University of Puerto Rico.

His decorations include the Silver Star, Bronze Star with oak leaf cluster, Defense Meritorious Service Medal, three awards of the Meritorious Service Medal, Army Commendation Medal, Air Medal, Combat Infantryman's Badge, Parachutist Badge, and Ranger Tab. — Marsha Santiago, Infantry Training Center correspondent

May 9th, the 5th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade took to the field, but not for the usual training. Under sunny skies, soldiers and their families gathered at Wetherby Field to enjoy a day of competition, demonstrations, and good food.

After Lt. Col. Gordon Lam, 5th Battalion commander, welcomed the soldiers and their families, Chaplain (Capt.) Robert Washington gave the invocation.

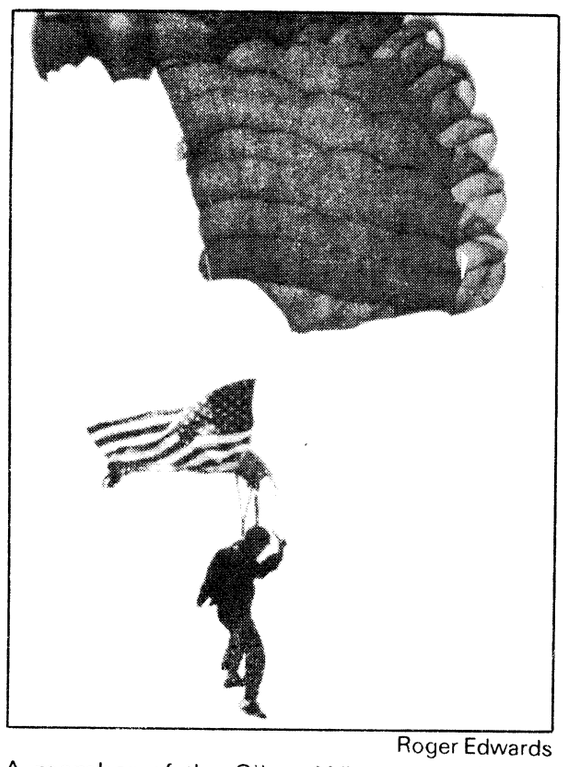
As the approximate 800 attendees watched, members of the Silver Wings parachuted in with an American Flag. During their jump, Pvt. 1 Keith Howell, Bravo Company, said the National Anthem. The remaining members of the Silver Wings then parachuted into the area. The Rangers in Action demonstration that followed was well received by the crowd.

"It was great. The competition was highly motivational. The food was excellent and it all went quickly. The Ranger Demonstration was the best," said PFC Stephen J. Donley of Delta Company.

Each of the battalion's five companies had a team for each of the eight competitive events, giving the spectators a chance to cheer for their soldiers.

Alpha Company walked away with the trophy for overall field day winner with high scores in the 100-yard dash, Log Shuttle, and the Tug-of-War.

Teams from Bravo Company received trophies for Pushball, Platoon Drill and Ceremony, and the Combat Run, while Delta Company teams won the eight-man/two mile relay race and the Pushup/Sit Up event.



Col. James E. Mace, 1st ITB commander, was on hand to present trophies to the winning teams.

At Armed Forces Day, the 1st ITB was represented in the Log Shuttle and Tug-of-War by members of the Alpha and Charlie teams.

The One Station Unit Training soldiers were enthusiastic about the day. "It was fun, a break from the stress of training. The food was good. All the events were good and the competition was rough. The pushball event was the best; the log shuttle was the worst because it caused us to lose the battalion trophy," said Pvt. 1 Michael J. Reilly, Bravo Company.

Pvt. 1 Forrest Fletcher, Delta Company, thought it was a good way to release tension and work as a company. "There was good sportsmanship between all the companies. The best thing about the day was when the companies met and shook hands."

Family members attending stated it was an excellent way to spend time with their soldiers. — Marsha Santiago, Infantry Training Center correspondent

The 598th Maintenance Company, known for supporting, maintaining, fire fighting, and marching, did it again during a recent five-day field training exercise.

They supported HHD, 67th Maintenance Battalion in mess operations, vehicles, and reaction force, during the unit's Army physical readiness exercise. When HHD received the order to move, the 598th stepped in, providing vehicles and helping them move. At the same time, the 598th became the battalion headquarters.

Throughout the field exercise, they continued to support their customers both in the field and in the rear, maintaining equipment all around.

On Saturday, a few of the soldiers became firemen, when a fire was spotted in the woods down the road from the company's field site. It was discovered that this was not a range control fire, so the soldiers went into action. When the forestry department arrived approximately 30 minutes later, they commended the soldiers for a job well done. Once again, the 598th Maintenance Company reacts!

Sunday morning, the soldiers tried their hand at being infantrymen. They went on a 5-mile road march during which they were ambushed several times. They responded very well to the ambushes and flushed out the aggressors. — 598th Maintenance Company.

Recently combat engineers from Fort Benning had a chance to sharpen their bridge construction skills at Fort Bragg, N.C. As part of an intensive three-day training exercise, 175 men from the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge), 36th Engineer Group, and the 72nd Engineer Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, joined forces for the deployment to Bridge-EX 1987.

this annual event, allowing engineers throughout the Continental United States to remain proficient in bridge construction and receive instruction on new techniques of bridging. The engineers constructed various bridges to include aluminum foot, Baily, light tactical raft, M4T6 trestle, medium girder (single and double story), ribbon, and field expedient bridging.

Additionally, practical exercise in assault river crossing techniques, rigging and Soviet bridging capabilities were given. Due to the fact that bridge companies are normally division or above assets, rarely are the different types of bridges located on one installation.

Encompassing weeks of preparation and coordination, the engineers hit the ground running. After a short block of instruction and briefing from the primary instructor at each bridge site, control was returned to the platoon leader and sergeant for construction of the bridge.

Bridging requires communication, organization and team work, so it is vital that leaders remain in charge throughout construction.

The ability to quickly build a bridge across a gap in combat conditions is one of the most important aspects of the offensive. Throughout history, armies have won decisive battles due to the ability to cross wet or dry gaps: For instance the crossing of the Suez or Remagen. Simply put; engineers play a decisive role in support of the infantry.

May 9 the engineers boarded buses to return home followed by a trail party of 42 soldiers and 18 vehicles on a two-day convoy. Return to Fort Benning meant the 72nd Engineers gearing up for the National Training Center and more intensified 12C MOS SQT preparation for the 586th — Kenneth A. Young, 586th Engineer Company

The officers of the 67th Maintenance Battalion recently received a class on urban defense at the MOUT Site as a part of their Officer Development Program.

The class (which many officers never receive) was taught by the Battalion Commaner Lt. Col. Thomas A. Hooper. Emphasis was placed on defense considerations. Upon completion of the class, the company commanders and the battalion executive officer gathered with their assigned officers to prepare a briefing on how they would defend the MOUT Site.

The officers walked around and discussed their plans for approximately 40 minutes. The battalion commander then selected an officer from each company to brief. The ODP turned out to be both challenging and rewarding. — Linda K. Daniels, HHD, 67th Maintenance Battalion.

Fort Mitchell, Ala., cemetery opens with ceremony Monday

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Monday the Fort Mitchell National Cemetery, located 10 miles south of Phenix City on Highway 165, will be officially dedicated. The Memorial Day event will formally open the 28-acre National Cemetery, which has been developed as a shrine for the honored dead who have served in the U.S. Armed Forces.

The ceremony will include a special unveiling of the "Avenue of Flags" dedication plaque and special flag presentation by Congressman Bill Nichols. Following the dedication ceremony, the public will be invited to visit the adjacent park.

Due to the crowds expected, parking will be at Mount Olive Jr. High School. Only dedication workers, dignitaries, disabled and media will be allowed to park in the cemetery for the dedication. Special passes must be presented to the military police to enter the cemetery grounds.

The dedication ceremony will start at 2 p.m. Eastern Standard Time.

Post swimming pools open

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Summertime in Georgia means iced tea, barbeques and swimming and Fort Benning can provide plenty of the latter right on post.

The Community Recreation Divison's summer swim season begins May 25 and, like last year, economical user fees will be charged.

"The user fee was instituted as a result of federal budget cuts. However, these user fees also allow us to provide better service and facilities to all post swimmers," said Billy Clarke, post Aquatic's Director.

A family seasonal swimming pass costs $20 and individual seasonal passes run $10 for adults and $5 for children 12 and under.

Monthly rates are $4 for adults and $2 for children 12 and under.

The daily fee rate for adults is 75 cents and a half-dollar for kids.

Seasonal and monthly passes may be purchased at Briant Wells Indoor Pool in the Physical Activities Branch office at Doughboy Stadium, door 8, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. After May 25 passes may be purchased at all CRD pools.

CRD Pools on post are: Carey Pool, located behind the main post NCO Club; Custer Terrace Pool, located on Handle Street; Harmony Church Pool, located at the Harmony Church Field House

Kelley Hill Pool, located at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, Sand Hill Pool, located at the 10th Mountain Division Recreation CenterFor more information call 545-5777.

mobile fatalities during this "first fiesta of summer."

"One primary reason Fort Benning has such a good record during this holiday," Young said, "is because of so much command emphasis on ensuring cars are safe to drive and safety consciousness is stressed so much."

Water safety consciousness is also a must because Memorial Day is the unofficial start of the summer swimming season.

"Most water or swimming accidents occur because of plain old stupidity," Young said, "and by using a little common sense these tragic deaths can be avoided."

Safety Office statistics show that 58 Fort Benning soldiers have drowned since the 1950s and fully 75 percent of these deaths were of a recreational nature.

"These soldiers were swimming and relaxing but doing dumb things," Young said, "like trying to swim across the Chattahoochee River and drowning because of the strong current or swimming in areas without lifeguards. Just plain, dumb mistakes."

Young emphasized several water safety points that everyone should follow when participating in water sports: always swim in an area with lifeguards present; if you can't swim, don't enter the water without a personal flotation device; don't mix alcohol and water sports; don't try and swim long distances and don't drink and drive a boat.

"Last year there were five soldiers killed Army-wide due to accidents during Memorial Day. None of those were Fort Benning soldiers and we want to keep it that way," Young said.

Help is available for families in need of marital counseling

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Is your marriage on the rocks? Are you and your kids driving each other crazy? Don't despair, there is counseling available on Fort Benning for active duty military and their families.

The Family Life center offers marital and family counseling, chaplain training and Systematic Training for Effective Parenting (STEP) for parents of children age 12 and under and STEP-Teen for parents of teen-agers.

The center works hand-in-hand with the Army Family Advocacy Program and Social Work Services.

According to Barbara Henry, an assistant at the center, approximately 15 families are counseled weekly and she feels that the success rate is high.

Ms. Henry stressed that all the sessions are strictly confidential. "A lot of service members are afraid to seek our aid because they think it might get back to their commanders," she said, "but that is not the case and that is why we can't stress confidentiality enough."

STEP and STEP Teen each consist of a series of six classes, conducted consecutively once a week on learning how to be a better parent and how to prevent problems that might occur. For instance, what do you do if your 6 year old wants to do is throw spitballs in class.

Henry said STEP teaches parents how to talk to that child and find out the real problem. Parents learn to do that from group sessions, lectures and cassettes. There is even "homework" where you apply ideas that have been taught. "If Susie doesn't want to do the dishes, use this approach and so on."

One Fort Benning soldier's wife who recently went through the STEP-Teen program had nothing but good things to say.

"We weren't having any problems with our children they are just normal teenagers," she said,"but Chaplain White recommended the program and I had also heard about the program from friends."

She said that she didn't feel STEP-Teen made her a better parent but but she certainly felt more informed. "The classes taught me how to listen to my kids and let them make their own decisions."

ASK THE JUDGE

Q: I have been considering trading my older car in on a new one. This seems like a good time because of the low interest rates. Is there anything special I need to know before I choose one of these very low rates?

A: Yes. Often there are special conditions attached to the new low interest rates. Before you agree to accept this, or any other financing, be sure to ask the following questions:

- Will you be charged a higher price for the car to qualify for low-rate financing? You might save money if you financed elsewhere and paid a lower price to the dealer.
- Does the financing require a larger-than-usual down payment?
- Are there limits on the length of the loan, such as 12 or 24 months?
- Do you have to buy special or extra merchandise or services, such as rustproofing, extended warranty, or a service contract, to qualify for the low-rate loan?
- Is the financing available for a limited time, or does it require that you take delivery of the vehicle within a certain time frame?
- Does the low rate apply to all cars in stock, or just certain models?
- Are you required to turn the manufacturer's rebate back over to the dealer?
- Does the dealer offer any other financing packages which you can consider?

Remember, you are not limited to financing offered by the dealer. You may also want to see what type of loan you can arrange with your bank or credit union before you buy.

Check to see that the terms of the contract reflect the statements that the dealer has made. If they differ, get a written explanation before you sign.

If you have additional questions, call your local better business bureau or request a copy of the contract and make an appointment to have it reviewed by your legal assistance office.

Q: I bought a new 4x4 truck two months ago at a local "tent sale." They had the sale price soaped on the windshield, but I didn't see a manufacturer's suggested retail price on the truck. After I bought it, I found out that I paid almost $4,000 over the manufacturer's invoice price to the dealer, and almost $1,000 more than the manufacturer's suggested retail price. Isn't there a law that makes auto dealers put the manufacturer's suggested retail price on all new cars and trucks?

A: Federal law requires all new passenger automobiles to have the manufacturer's suggested retail price prominently displayed on the new automobile.

However, under most circumstances, this does not apply to new trucks, even though these trucks are often as full of options as new automobiles. This means that you can get "taken" when you buy a new truck.

Though there's little that can be done for you now, as far as the price is concerned, next time you should ask to see the invoice price when you buy a truck, and get an Edmunds or similar auto pricing guide before you buy.

What Specialist Hales has been aiming for during his off-duty time.

Specialist Four Jason Hales has been aiming for the best. As a soldier, and as a student. He's an Infantryman at Fort Myer, Virginia, as well as a B.S. candidate in Mechanical Engineering at Park College. And he's just one of the over 100,000 soldiers who are building brighter, smarter futures through the Army's Reaching for Excellence education program.

It's a terrific opportunity that's available to each and every soldier, at virtually every Army post around the world. Reaching for Excellence is everything from basic educational skills and technical skill development to undergraduate and graduate studies at the college level. And it's a chance to have at least 75% of your college tuition paid for by the Army.

Continuing your education is a commitment that's fully supported by the Army leadership. You can start taking advantage of this commitment at your post's Education Center. There, you'll find a professional education counselor who can help you set short- and long-range goals which fit both your educational and career plans.

Drop by your Education Center and find out, as Specialist Hales did, how you can turn some off-duty time into a lifetime of rewards. If you want to get ahead, now's the time to get started.

ARMY EDUCATION.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Provost Marshal

Last year, over a million Americans were victims of car theft, costing taxpayers more than a billion dollars. Even if you never had a car stolen, the costly effect is still felt in the form of higher costs for insurance.

It seems that the most popular saying when it comes to auto theft is, "It won't happen to me." All too often, we see this crime happening to the other guy, and because we don't see this crime as often, we tend to believe it is a less serious crime. In fact, it's a very serious crime, a felony, and yes, a crime that could happen to you.

Most cars that are stolen were left unlocked or had a window down. One out of five stolen cars have the keys left in the car. No car can be made 100 percent theft-proof, but you can make the job more trouble than it is worth by locking your car and taking the keys with you.

You, the individual car owner, have the ultimate responsibility for your automobile. With your help, car theft could be prevented in most cases.

On Fort Benning, the military police are aware of this crime and will be looking for unsecured vehicles. When an unsecured vehicle is found, they will place a warning card on the windshield or inside the vehicle which tells the driver that his/her car was unsecured and what time it was found. This is a reminder that a thief could have found the vehicle and taken it and/or any valuables inside.

It's up to you to help stop car thieves.
