Army updates its policy on AIDS, based on new data

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — When the Defense Department developed its policy a few years ago on the incidence of AIDS among military personnel, it did so on a foundation of sketchy clinical and social data.

Now, as these data have evolved into a clearer perspective on the nature, history and risk factors of the disease, officials have decided to update the original policy.

In a recent memorandum to the service secretaries and heads of defense agencies, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger outlined major points of the new policy. He said the refined guidelines, termed "interim" and scheduled for review within a year, apply to those servicemembers, prospective new servicemembers, and military healthcare beneficiaries found to be infected with what used to be called HTLV-III — the virus associated with the acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS). That organism now carries the initials HIV, for human immunodeficiency virus.

As much a military readiness issue as it is a medical problem, the threat of AIDS raises such concerns as the risks facing an infected person in performance of military duties; the risk of transmitting the disease to noninfected persons; the effect carriers of the virus might have upon unit performance; and the safety of the blood supply.

To minimize those concerns, the new policy requires that infected civilians be barred from appointment or enlistment in military service. That restriction makes it possible for the Defense Department to avoid potential medical costs and the prospect of incurring incomplete service commitment on the part of infected appointees and recruits.

What's more, the Weinberger memo says, "Clinical evidence indicates that individuals with serologic evidence of HIV infection may suffer adverse and potentially life-threatening reactions to some live virus immunizations administered at basic training." A person so infected is unable to take part in battlefield blood-donor activities or in other blood donation programs. And, finally, "there is no way to differentiate between individuals with serologic evidence (of the HIV infection) who will progress to clinical disease and those individuals who will remain healthy."

As in the past, applicants for enlisted service are being screened for evidence of HIV infection at military entrance processing stations or at the initial point of entry into the service. Prospective officers receive such screening during their preappointment and/or precontracting physical exams.

The new policy calls for infected persons on active duty — including active guardsmen and reservists — to undergo medical-board evaluation as to their "fitness for duty." As in the past, one's exposure to the virus may not be used for the purpose of disciplinary action. This is not to say, however, that a virus-carrying person who fails to comply with a lawful order to comply with preventive medicine instructions can escape appropriate administrative and disciplinary action. Weinberger's memo adds: "Results obtained from laboratory tests for HIV performed under this memorandum may not be used as the basis for separation of the servicemembers except for a separation based upon physical disability or as specifically authorized by this memorandum."

Weinberger's memo goes on to say that persons testing positive for the virus "who shows no evidence of clinical illness or other indication of immunologic or neurologic impairment related to HIV infection shall not be separated solely on the basis of serologic evidence of HIV infection." Retention policy as applied to reserve component members prohibits their serving for extended active duty (meaning more than 30 days at a time), except under conditions of mobilization.

SPIRITUAL

Post agencies provide support for those infected by the virus

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

The room was completely silent. All eyes were on the young soldier as he tried to compose himself. His hands covered his face and he began to sob again. "It's not fair I'm too young to die," he cried.

In the room sat five other soldiers of different ages, their eyes damp with the prospect of early death. Only they could understand the emotions that others face when confronted with Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. This is a typical scene that may take place on any Wednesday evening here on post. With AIDS being such a national problem Fort Benning is no exception to exposure.

"There are 1.5 soldiers who test positive for the virus per 1,000 soldiers tested Army wide," said Maj. Charles C. Boger, environmental science officer for Preventive Medicine Services who does AIDS briefings on post.

AIDS briefings are just a small part of what Fort Benning is doing to take care of it's own. "We are part of a big team," said Maj. Hazel I. Ivey, assistant chief of Community Health Nursing.

Once a soldier is diagnosed as testing positive for HIV, he or she is systematically and thoughtfully persuaded through a chain of help and counseling on post.

Among those organizations that are available to help the stricken soldier are Preventive Medicine, Community Health, Psychiatric Counselling, Social Work Services and the chaplaincy. First in the chain of services is Preventive Medicine. This is the first place a soldier goes once his repeated HIV tests return positive. "We're like a focal point. We explain to the person what's going to happen as far as the other services are concerned," Boger said.

Although the soldiers are encouraged to go to PMS on their own, the step is mandated. "Sometimes the soldiers are brought in by somebody from the unit to make sure they got here," Boger said. "We're very judicious about getting them in," he said. "The first visit is required," he said.

The next step is for the soldier to talk with someone at Psychiatric Services at Martin Army Community Hospital. "We evaluate them and see how they are handling the news. We try to educate them about the expected psychological aspects," said Dr. (Col.) Stephen Hershey, chief of the Department of Psychology at MACH.

In addition the patient is evaluated for any organic brain syndromes and encouraged to return for pshychological follow ups.

Once the patient has been evaluated he or she is then referred to the Community Health Services where they are counseled and encouraged to attend a support group. "We try to get the service member to inform their sexual contacts that they may have been exposed to the virus," Ivey said. "Very often the patient will not know how to tell these people (their sexual partners), that's where we can help them with what to tell them," Ivey said.

The interview with CHS is also mandatory for the service member but CHS as well as the other agencys on post guarantee the utmost discretion.

"One of our major concerns is confidentiality," said Isaac L. Kornegay, social worker and HIV project coordinator at Social Work Services.

"The only people who know about the soldier's problem are people who need to know. People who come to see us usually come because they want to but sometimes it's required and their commanders know about it," he said.

SWS plays an important role in the soldier's well being by conducting a support group, individual counselling and handling social issues.

Social issues include problems like: how to tell the family or does the soldier wish to tell the family?; handling depression and compassionate reassignments and reassignments.

"Usually with a terminal illness the person feels a loss of control. We try to give them as much control as possible," Kornegay said. "Especially where tha Army's concerned there is definitely that feeling of powerlessness," said John, a soldier who wishes to remain anonymous.

"At present the Army keeps everybody who tests positive in the one through four stages but they discharge anyone in the fifth and sixth stages with 100 percent disability. We have mostly people in the one through four stages. Anyone who reaches five and six are sent to Fort Gordon," Kornegay said.

Another important part of the help received on post is at Community Health. This is where education plays an important role for the soldier.

"We teach them safe sex practices, show how to take care of their bodies, and overall general health," said Ivey.

Also at CHS the soldier is counselled in how to tell others that they may have been exposed to the virus. "We don't tell the people ourselves but we do counsel the the soldier in how to break the news," Ivey said.

Furthermore there are the chaplains on post for the HIV positive soldier to talk to. "There are a lot of religious implications involved. We try to give them spiritual guidance and support, something to hang onto from the spiritual aspect. This is not unusual for someone who is faced with life and death," said Chaplain (Maj.) Philip Toew.

All of the agencies answer questions and refer the soldier to the proper place for that particular problem.

"So far I have utilized all the agencies. Some because I wanted to, some I wanted to see, like the chaplain," said John, a 23-year-old soldier who has tested positive and is in the fourth stage of HIV. "Everyone has been really understanding. It seems the problems are with the general population and how little they know about the virus. Some people still believe they can get the virus from swimming pools or being in the same room with us. Because of this I feel even more isolated, combined with keeping it a secret," he said.

"When somebody is positive (HIV) it does not mean they have AIDS. It's a very emotional diagnoses to have. We as soldiers and government workers and caring human beings should be sensitive to the emotional stress these people are under. They are not people to be feared and in reality the general population is more dangerous to an HIV positive person than an HIV person is to them because to you a common cold is nothing but it could cripple one of them. We are always available for education and we encourage commanders to utilize that," Kornegay said.

Unit ministry team trained to help patients cope

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — In the Defense Department's counterattack upon the AIDS menace, the Army chaplaincy can play a key role.

That's the message of Chief of Chaplains Maj. Gen. Norris L. Einertson. He has reviewed for the unit ministry team the various issues surrounding the AIDS problem, and has outlined his views on how the team is expected to respond, that is trained to respond, to the challenge.

Noting that the term AIDS "evokes irrational fears, shame and guilt," Einertson described the malady as "an emotional topic, loaded with tragic consequences for those who have tested positive, their family members and friends."

He cited the "pastoral concern" felt and conveyed by chaplains and chaplain assistants. Out of that concern, "we provide ministry to those who hurt, help to the hopeless and pastoral care to those who suffer.

"In the process of testing and screening, errors will be made. We need to be sensitive to the feelings of those soldiers who have received news of further test requirements as well as to those who have been positively identified in testing. We also need to increase the awareness of those involved in the administrative and command aspects of virus testing and notification, and to the personal trauma and stress involved in receiving such news. We need to emphasize confidentiality and personal care for all persons involved."

Einertson went on to say that to pursue this ministry to persons infected by the human immunodeficiency virus, the U.S. Army Chaplain School at Fort Monmouth, N.J., has developed a special training package, now distributed to chaplains in the field. "It does not engage in judgment or condemnation," he said. "It does not seek to frighten or terrify people. It seeks to replace myth and fictionwith facts. It also aims to help all chaplains increase their pastoral skills in caring for people facing pain, hurt and rejection."

The Army's top chaplain said he sees fourareas on which the HIV-directed ministry should focus:

- "The chain of command needs to be made aware of the chaplain's role in helping people who face crises. We are the commander's primary resource in helping people. In situations involving suffering, death and dying, we carry a unique message of hope, forgiveness, reconciliation, acceptance and love.
- "The person who tests positive will immediately feel the stigma of identification. He or she will experience rejection and isolation as well as judgment and guilt. These will occur regardless of the accuracy of the test results. Our pastoral intervention can be most critical at this point. The potential for suicide is greatest in cases of extreme disappointment, embarrassment and hopelessness.
- "Unit members will look to their unit ministry team as God's spokespersons when one of their fellow soldiers has tested positive for the virus. We can be instrumental in helping soldiers understand and deal with their fears and suspicions.
- "Family members will experience the same shock responses as to news about terminal illness. Anger, guilt, hurt, fear and other strong emotions will flow through the family members. We will be called on to help these family members work through these feelings and to bond together to help each other."

Einertson concluded his "spiritual estimate of the situation" by noting that "we are again on the firing line," and that "persons tested positive in the screening and their family members are relying, as never before, on our support."

Those prepared to give their lives in support of Constitution should read it

By Greg Hill
The School Brigade chaplain

I spoke recently with senior ROTC cadets from a nearby college at Andersonville National Cemetery. The purpose of the meeting was two-fold: discuss military professionalism and the Constitution.

Although the cadets will to soon take the oath of office, swearing to support and defend the Constitution of the United States, only two had read it in the last year. A few more had read it since entering college. Some had never read it!

When I've asked other groups when or if they've read the Constitution, I get the same answers. Amazing! Men and women, officers, those who are soon to be officers, or enlisted, swearing to defend something about which they know very little.

This concerns me. Military personnel are looked to by our nation to be persons of competence, candor, courage, and commitment. We are to be persons of integrity.

Persons of integrity. What does that mean? One example is when we expect our chaplains to live up to their ordination and to know their sources of faith, be it the Bible or church doctrine. A second example is when we expect doctors to know their medicine and live by the Hippocratic oath.

I think it reasonable to expect soldiers to live up to their oath of enlistment, and officers their oath of office. To expect less is to invite disaster. A person of integrity lives out what he/she values. We cannot value, nor should we swear to defend, that which we do not know. Nor should we swear to defend the Constitution because we must do so in order to qualify for educational benefits, experience travel, or gain employment.

This is the Year of the Constitution. I challenge you to study it. Study not only the document itself, but also the environment out of which it came. Get to know men like Hamilton and Madison. Take a good hard look at the Articles of Confederation and why the Constitution was actually written. Then ask yourself, "Can I now swear or affirm to defend this?"

At the same time, we have a great opportunity to remind ourselves how our word is to be our bond. We should not swear to something, be it loyalty to our spouse in marriage, our church at confirmation, or to the Constitution, unless we mean it. To do less means we are not persons of integrity.

We have experienced a lot of disappointment with public figures who have failed to live up to their offices. Recent developments, which have received wide public attention, have cast much doubt on the integrity of clergy, elected or appointed officials, and service personnel. It is very tempting to allow the transgressions of others to give us permission to be lax in our integrity. After all, "EVERYBODY'S DOING IT."

However, God does not judge on a curve. He does not grade our short comings against those of others. He judges on a set standard. Each one of us rises or falls against that standard. Likewise, we should not use the actions of others as an excuse to diminish our integrity.

We owe a great debt to may good soldiers who have gone before to "secure the blessings of liberty" for us. May we, in their footsteps, uphold the Constitution and "secure the blessings of liberty for ourselves and our posterity."

VA Q&A

Editor's Note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q: I receive VA compensation benefits. I am now retired and living on a limited income, can I also receive a VA pension?

A: You cannot receive both VA compensation benefits and a VA pension. You may elect to receive a pension, if you qualify, and the pension would in fact be greater than the compensation benefit.

Q: I am a veteran with a service-connected disability rated at 50 percent. I have received an injury which is not service-connected, but which will require a prosthetic appliance. Will the VA supply this needed appliance?

A: Yes. Any veteran with a service-connected disability of 50 percent or more may be provided with necessary prosthetic appliances for any medical condition.

Q: Can a female veteran claim her husband as a dependent?

A: Yes. When receiving compensation, pension or education benefits from the VA, the female veteran may claim her husband as a dependent.

Show your 'better half' you care on National Military Spouse Day

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Monday is National Military Spouse Day according to a recent message from Gen. Carl E. Vuono, commander of the Army Training and Doctrine Command, in recognition for their continuing contributions to the Army way of life.

In recognition of Army Spouses Day, there will be a number of events on Fort Benning to show appreciation to the spouses of military personnel.

"The day was set aside to acknowledge and give recognition for the support the spouses have for the service member," said Nancy Parker, Army Family Advocacy Coordinator for Army Community Services.

The following events will take place on post for Spouses Day:

ACS will sponsor an open house on May 22 in honor of military spouses from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The Family Member Employment Program will sponsor workshops May 22 from 9:30 to 11:30 each morning. Presentations will cover reducing stress in moving, how to find a job in a new town, filling out a SF 171, documenting volunteer experience, resume writing, and interviewing skills and techniques.

The workshop will be at the ACS Building 2640 in Splinter Village. For more information and reservations call 545-5340 or 545-5176. Babysitting will be provided at Tot Town Nursery.

The main Noncommissioned Officers Club will offer a free lunch to any member's spouse who is accompanied by their sponsor on May 22.

The Fort Benning Officers Club will offer lunch at half price to any spouse accompanied by their sponsor on May 22.

Custer Terrace Community Life Center, (Mayor and NCOIC), will sponsor a Mayor For A Day Program.

The Main Post Exchange will salute the Military Spouse by sponsoring the following events;

- 20 percent discount, (total purchase), drawing hourly. Must be present to win on May 22 and 23.
- May 22 and 23 there will be an end of the day drawing at 8 p.m. for a $100 gift certificate. (Do not have to be present to win).
- Exchange Service Manager for the Concessionaire Activities and Theater Operations will sponsor the following activities at the Main Post Exchange on May 22 and 23.
- Hourly drawing of coupons for a free haircut, shampoo, set and blow dry at the mall Beauty Parlor.
- Hourly drawing for a free movie ticket at the Main Post Theater.

Burger King will be presenting free side salads or desserts and a carnation to spouses accompanied by an service member.

"In keeping with the goals of 'leading and caring,' it is only appropriate that the entire TRADOC Army Family honor the outstanding achievements of military spouses. We applaud the great leaders for their selfless service and extensive contributions to the Department of the Army and its well-being," said Vuono.

Stop to rest often on long road trips

Safety Office

Driving for several hours on an expressway can be very boring. In fact, it can lead to "highway hypnosis".

With few hills or curves to contend with and driving a long distance at about the same speed, one can become less alert.

Highway hypnosis does two things.

First, the driver becomes a "spectator" at the wheel of the vehicle rather than the person who's doing the driving. One starts to pay less attention to what's happening, everything seems to float by.

Second, one may fall asleep at the wheel.

As soon as you start to feel sleepy, do something different. Open a window. Talk to passengers, sing or move your body a bit.

If possible, stop at the first service station or rest area and take a short walk or have coffee. Eat a light snack.

If that doesn't make you feel any more awake, find a place to sleep for an hour or for the night.

Drivers can help prevent highway hypnosis when they follow a few simple rules:

- Don't eat a heavy meal before driving.
- Wear comfortable clothing.
- Talk to passengers, but not to the point of distraction.
- Keep your eyes moving and check your rear-view mirrors often.

Guard shooters big winners at Small Arms Championships

By Tommy Pool
USAMU PAO

This year's annual U.S. Army Small Arms Championships kicked off last week with more than 600 of the top reserve component and active military on hand at Fort Benning to determine the best marksmen in the Army.

The initial combat phase of the matches, fired from May 10-14, included both individual and team competition using the M-16 rifle, M-60 light machinegun and the .45 caliber pistol.

Last week's winners included a large majority of the titles going to the Army National Guard, with units of the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), and the 82nd Airborne Division also winning a share of the awards.

In the combat rifle matches, SFC Bruce Tucker, a former All Army champion with the Vermont National Guard, scored a narrow one point victory over SFC Rodney Sanders from the 82nd.

Tucker finished the two day event with 690 points to Sanders tally of 689. Third place went to another guardsman, SFC Richard Scheller of Connecticut, scoring 688.

The high new shooter award in the combat rifle event was won by Sp4 Sean Lynch, also from the 82nd, with a total of 686 points.

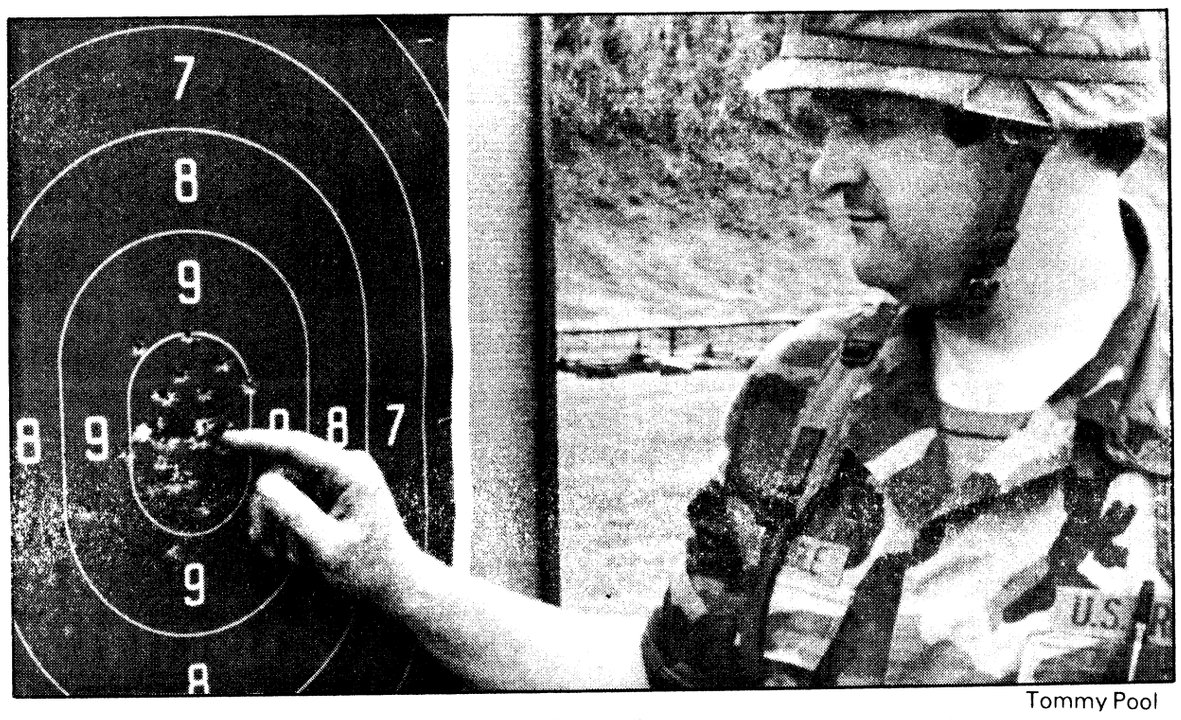
Action during two days of combat rifle team matches saw one of the closest finishes in the history of the Army championships.

Six-member squads from the 101st and 82nd, finished the championship tied with identical scores of 1,355 out of 1,500 possible points.

In a tie-breaking procedure, the team representing the 1/502nd Inf., Fort Campbell, Ky., was declared the overall champions by two additional center bullseyes over the unit from the 1/504th Inf., Fort Bragg, N.C.

The 1/502nd also narrowly edged the 1/504th again in the Army Infantry Trophy team match by two points (1,080 to 1,078).

This year's M-60 light machinegun championships were dominated by members of the Army National Guard.



Indiana guardsman, Sp4 Ronald Purdue, won the overall title by scoring a total of 2,257 points. Second place went to SSgt. Norman Platt from Michigan, with SSgt. Norman Hood, also from Indiana, placing third.

The high new shooter category in the M-60 matches was won by Sp4 James Brust, from the 1/502nd Inf, Fort Campbell.

The light machinegun team championship was taken by the Michigan National Guard with a total of 2,243 points.

Second place was won by the 1/17th Inf., 6th Inf. Division, while the 1/504th Inf., Fort Bragg, was third with 2,008 and 1,910 points respectively.

Sgt. David Kaigle, Vermont NG, outscored all combat events to win the overall individual title with a total of 2,659 out of 2,700 possible points.

Tommy Pool

Sgt. David Kaigle, Vermont Army National Guard, was near perfect in the individual combat pistol competition.

Second place went to last year's champion, SSgt. Gary Cumbie, currently assigned to Co E, 1st Bn, 1st ITB, Fort Benning, scoring a total of 2,655 points.

SSgt. Charles Allen, Connecticut NG, finished in third position at 2,644 while SSgt. Addison Clark of the Montana NG, claimed the high new shooter award with 2,652.

The overall team championship went to the Montana ARNG, with a total of 1,156 out of 1,200 points. Second and third place was won by teams from Wyoming and Connecticut at 1,150 and 1,149 respectively.

The final phase of this years U.S. Army Championships will be held from May 18-22, and will include national match rifle and pistol competition.

Early leaders in the matches thus far include USAMU's MSgt. Roger Willis in pistol and SSgt. Greg Strom in rifle. Both individuals are the defending U.S. Army Champions.

Willis won the opening round of the pistol matches by winning the .22 caliber championship with a total of 893 out of 900 points.

In national match rifle competition, SSgt. Strom took the early lead by winning the initial 200 yard standing event and establishing a new Army record in the process.

Strom scored a record total of 200-9x out of possible 200 points, to narrowly edge guardsman, MSgt. Nelson Shew, who finished with 200-8x.

Third place in the event was won by Army reservist, Maj. Robert Doverspike, at 198-10x.

Finals from the combat phase of the Army championships are as follows. Watch for national match rifle and pistol scores in next week's Bayonet.

Post athletes set records at track meet

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

The United States Army Infantry Center Track and Field Championships wrapped up the season last week, with a number of new Fort Benning records established

Four athletes ranked top in their field and will go down in post history books as the ones to beat at future events.

James Washington of the 72nd Engineers Battalion set two new records. He ran the 100-yard dash in 9.78 seconds, topping the old record of 9.79, and ran he 220-yard race in 20.05, breaking the old record of 21.10.

Another winning record was set by Victor Jones, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, in the pole vault. Jones vaulted 15 feet 6 inches, beating the old record of 13 feet.

Paul Valentine, 690th Medical Co., threw the javelin 165 feet, 8 1/2 inches to beat the old record of 165 feet,4 inches.

In the overall team standings, the 1st ITB took first place in the championships with a total of 579 points.

The 34th Medical Battalion placed second with 232 points,while the 72nd Engineers took third with 128 points.

The 29th Infantry Brigade placed fourth followed by the 36th Engineer Group in fifth place.

Among the highlights in the events, William Field of Headquarters, Headquarters Company, threw the shot put 43 feet, 7 inches to eliminate the competitors. His throw was the longest for the men's division.

In the female long jump, Bridgett Young of the 34th Med, jumped 13 feet, 8 inches.

In the female 440-yard dash, Clara Griffin, 34th Med, came in first place with a time of 1:10:56 followed by Denean Grice, 1st ITB, with 1:16:54 and Florence Rogers with 1:18:49.

In the 220-yard run with the men-over-35 age division, John Shelly, 1st ITB, ran a 23:03. Joseph Hacket, 34th Med., followed closely with 23:06 and Dick Hogan, 1st ITB, came in third place with 37:68 on the clock.

Benning wrestler to compete

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

Benning's All Army wrestler SFC Tony T. Thomas, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, recently qualified to compete in the U.S Olympic Fesival in North Carolina in July by winning in a number of other tournaments.

It was a long road that brought Thomas to the championship level. He competed in the Eastern Regional Greco Roman Championships in Detroit, Mich., where he beat three other competitors in the 163-pound weight class.

"The championship was by far my best performance at the natonal level," Thomas said. But that was just the begining for Thomas, who went on to the National Greco Roman Championships in Schenectady, N.Y., May 3, where he finished third. In the first session, Thomas was undefeated. In a later session, however, he lost to Dave Butler, a three-time national champion who is ranked fifth in the world.

Thomas said he must have learned something from the defeat. "In the final session, I defeated Dale Oliver of Albany N.Y, the World Team champion, 12 to 6 to finish third," Thomas said.

Thomas has qualified to compete in the U.S Olympic Festival in North Carolina, July 11 through 18. Thomas and his team will be wrestling in dual meets against Cuba, the USSR, Korea, Japan, Hungry and Mexico.

Soldiers buying, smoking fewer cigarettes

Army officials pleased with first-year study that shows 11 percent drop in tobacco use

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — An 11-percent drop in the number of soldiers who smoke is being reported by Army personnel officials since inception of the Army's antitobacco-use campaign a year ago.

That figure — which shows that only 41 percent of the force smokes today, as compared to 52 percent last June — surfaced in a recently completed survey of soldiers' smoking habits and attitudes. The survey's other findings reveal, for example, that daily sales of carton cigarettes at Army commissaries have declined by 10.4 percent — from 2,041 to 1,828 cartons per store.

The person most directly responsible for the Army's "controlling smoking policy" is Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel Lt. Gen. Robert M. Elton.

"We have made significant progress over the past year," he said, "in our efforts to reduce the use of tobacco products by our soldiers."

He stressed that "the Army's philosophy has been to provide information and assistance to soldiers, so they can make intelligent decisions about the use of tobacco products."

As to soldiers' response to the policy itself, the survey shows that 81 percent of the officers and 62 percent of the enlisteds surveyed "agree" or "strongly agree" with the policy's key provision: smoking on the job is prohibited except in designated smoking areas.

In their view of the policy's effect thus far, Army medical officials note that most of their activities have reported "a dramatic increase in the demand for programs to assist people to stop smoking."

Post pools prepare for summer crowds

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning community is diving into summer fun as the pools swell with activity.

The Community Recreation Divison's summer swim season began Saturday and like last year, economical user fees will be charged.

A family seasonal swimming pass is $20 and individual seasonal passes run $10 for adults and $5 for children 12 and under.

Monthly rates are $4 for adults and $2 for children 12 and under.

Seasonal and monthly passes may be purchased at Briant Wells Indoor Pool of the Physical Activities Branch office at Doughboy Stadium, door 8, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Passes may also be purchased at all CRD pools.

CRD Pools on post are: Carey Pool, located behind the main post NCO Club, open Saturdays thru Wednesdays, 1 to 5 p.m. and 6 to 8 p.m.; Custer Terrace Pool, located on Handle Street, open Wednesdays thru Sundays, 1 to 8 p.m.; Kelley Hill Pool, located at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, open Thursdays thru Mondays, 1 to 5 p.m. and 6 to 8 p.m.; Sand Hill Pool, located at the 10th Mountain Division Recreation Center, Fridays thru Mondays, 1 to 5 p.m. and 6 to 8 p.m.; For more information on the CRD Pools call 545-5777.

U.S. Army

Soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade beat the heat at the Kelley Hill pool during the Memorial Day weekend.

The Officer's Club pool is open with hours running Tuesday through Friday, from noon to 7 p.m. and Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. The pool will be closed each Monday for maintenance and cleaning.

Club membership is required and the fee is $18 monthly.

Soviets to produce two new helicopters

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union will soon begin production of two new attack helicopters, according to a spokesman with the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Intelligence (ODCSIN, formerly the Office of the Assitant Chief of Staff for Intelligence).

The two Soviet aircraft — the HAVOC and HOKUM — will greatly complement the HIND and HIP series of helicopters and will significantly improve the capability of air-to-air engagement of Allied helicopters.

Soviet experiences in Afghanistan have contributed to Soviet understanding of how best to implement these two new rotary-wing systems

They will be used primarily to attack tanks, armored personnel carriers and other ground vehicles, and will also be able to engage other helicopters.

Primary armaments for the HAVOC, according to "Soviet Military Power," will probably include a 23- or 30-mm cannon and up to 16 antitank guided missiles (ATGMS), and its development is believed to be a response to NATO weapons using thermal imaging systems.

Army intelligence has suggested that the HAVOC will have onboard sensors such as Low-Light Television and radar, self protection devices such as infrared radiation suppressors and infrared decoy dispensers and precision munition guidance aids such as a laser target designator.

The second helicopter, the HOKUM has no Western counterpart, according to the ODCSIN spokesman. Its purpose will be primarily to attack close air support aircraft, including antitank helicopters, although it may also be used to attack ground targets.

The Army anticipates that the HOKUM will be armed with both air-to-air and air-to-ground missiles. It too, along with the HAVOC, will use infrared radiation suppressors and decoy dispensers.

The ODCSIN spokesman acknowledgd that the addition of these two aircraft gives the Soviets a significant rotary wing air superiority capability.

Commissioning of warrant officers increases their authority

Military Personnel Center

Recently, the Deputy Chief, Army Reserve, administered the oath of commissioning to five warrant officers assigned to the Office of the Chief, Army Reserve at The Pentagon. In a similar ceremony across town, warrant officers assigned to the Warrant Officer Division of the Military Personnel Center were sworn in as commissioned warrant officers.

Ceremonies like these are taking place throughout the Army. Some insight into what commissioning means may be helpful to warrant officers who are still pondering the merits of becoming a commissioned warrant officer.

Title 10 of the United States code was changed by the 99th Congress to provide for the commissioning of warrant officers. The primary purpose of the legislation was to standardize the procedures used by the military services to appoint warrant officers.

Regular Army warrant officers will be commissioned by the President upon promotion to Regular Army Chief Warrant Officer grades. An "Other Than Regular" Army warrant officer, when promoted to a permanent Chief Warrant Officer grade, will be commissioned in that grade by the Secretary of the Army. Promotions under the temporary Army of the United States system have no effect on commissioning.

Warrant officers in grade WO1 will continue to be appointed, not commissioned, by the Secretary of the Army. There is no legal distinction between presidential and secretarial appointments.

New policy provisions pertaining to commissioned warrant officers were approved in May by the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

Under the new policy, commissioning has little practical effect on assignments, but could have some effect on utilization. Warrant officers will continue to be assigned to warrant officer positions in their primary or additional military occupational specialties. Under unusual circumstances, a warrant officer may be assigned outside his MOS or in a commissioned officer position only upon his or her commander's recommendation and with DA concurrence.

The main effect of commissioning is on the powers of a commissioned warrant officer. The commissioned warrant officer is authorized to:

- Order enlisted soldiers into arrest or confinement.
- Administer an oath of enlistment or reenlistment.
- Administer various oaths in performance of duties when acting as an adjutant, assigned as a military personnel officer o pecifically designated by other Army regulati
- Sit on courts of inquiry or be detailed as a general staff officer or inspector general.
- In the grade of CW3 or higher, when appointed by a general court-martial convening authority, act as a summary court-martial officer to try criminal offenses, conduct inquests or dispose of personal effects.

Remembering our own

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba, Jr. speaks at Fort Benning's Memorial Day ceremony Monday. Burba, along with Chaplain (Col.) Roy Mathis, placed a wreath on the grave of an unknown soldier during the somber but inspiring ceremony to remember America's war dead. More than 100 people attended the ceremony.

VA cemetery opens with pomp, ceremony

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

It was a bittersweet day for veterans and their families as the Fort Mitchell National Cemetery officially opened Memorial Day.

Nearly 1,000 people swarmed through the newly opened gates, flanked by the "Avenue of Flags," to attend the official opening of the cemetery.

Located on Highway 165, 10 miles south of Phenix City and just across the Chattahoochee River, the new cemetery was alive with the sound of music provided by the U.S Army Band, and the scurry of visitors from the tri-city area.

The 28-acre national cemetery, developed as a shrine to honor the dead who served in the U.S armed forces, is in the first phase of a $7 million project that will encompass 279 acres when completed.

The ceremony was supported by soldiers from Fort Benning including honor guards, a firing squad and military police.

This was the second part of the opening of the cemetery, which began May 21 with an open house. Chaplains of the Catholic, Eastern Orthodox, Jewish and Protestant faiths conducted a special ceremony to consecrate the grounds.

"We have just developed 10,000 plots for burial and we will develop more in five-year increments as needed," said Bob Brake, director of the cemetery.

The first internment in the national cemetery was that of Joseph W. Smith, former Alabama state senator and a veteran of World War II.

Smith was drafted just months prior to Pearl Harbor and commissioned into the military police. Smith retired in 1947 due to physical disability and it was this condition that caused his death in 1982. Smith's body was moved from a Phenix City cemetery.

Smith's widow, Lenora, who is currently the president of the local Association of the U.S. Army chapter, attended the ceremony.

Smith is just the first of more internments to come. According to Brake, veterans discharged honorably, members of the Reserve Officer Training Corps and Army or Air Natonal Guard who died as a result of active duty for training are all eligible for burial. Burial may also be provided to eligible spouses and minor children.

An archeological site, with much history, the charnel, has been under construction since Feb. 18, 1986.

"We have two sites (campsites) that have carbon tested to be at least 10,000 years old," Brake said.

Cut flowers may be placed on the gravesites anytime. Metal temporary flower containers are permitted. In ground containers, however, are not allowed. Cemetery personnel will remove floral items once they become faded or unsightly.

Artificial flowers may be placed on graves only during the period specified on the floral regulation sign.

Thinking good thoughts helps build self-esteem

By Capt. Cloretta McCoy
Eielson AFB, Alaska

FORT MONROE, Va. — People being treated for drug and alcohol abuse are strongly encouraged to make daily resolutions, or daily affirmations as they are sometimes called. These affirmations are imperative in treatment.

Making daily affirmations is not just for drug abusers, however. They can help people who aren't realizing their full potential and who aren't getting the most out of life.

Affirmations are powerful, positive statements concerning the ways we desire to think, feel or behave. To drug and alcohol abusers, these affirmations are like strong doses of medicine that help them feel better. Affirmations can be compared to anti-bodies that destroy self-defeating thoughts, attitudes and behaviors.

Our thoughts and attitudes are critical to achieving our utlimate in life. The messages we give ourselves are the most important messages we hear. The internal conversations we hold determine our attitudes, or behavior and the course of our lives.

Unfortunately, internal dialogues are usually self-deprecating. They tell us what we can't do rather than what we can do. They dwell on our failures rather than our successes, and highlight what we haven't versus what we have. With large doses of self-imposed sarcasm and negative reviews of our daily performance, our self-esteem, creativity, productivity and spirit are gradually mutilated.

We can believe the negative thoughts or we can change our beliefs. Through affirmative thoughts, we can set ourselves free, and open ourselves for better and more expansive experiences. We have that choice. What we choose to believe will ultimately rule our world.

If we believe we are victims, we are. However, if we choose health, happiness and peace, we will have them.

Affirmations are a way to start the day. They make us fully aware of the choices we make. As we learn to direct our thoughts, or feelings and behavior will naturally follow.

Try this affirmation now: "Today I will be more open-minded to changes and new ideas."

Commissary officer retires after 58 years federal service

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Jose Fantauzzi, Fort Benning's commissary officer since 1974, will retire today with over 58 years of combined Federal service.

The Main Post Commissary is hosting a reception for Fantauzzi at the commissary today at noon and all friends and co-workers are invited to attend.

Fantauzzi enlisted in the Army in 1930, retiring in 1957. He then entered Civil Service, serving in the United States and overseas in various commissary assignments.

Rich people not like you and me

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Editor

I read an article recently that said rich people are really not much different from the rest of us.

Apparently, a company that caters to rich folks conducted an official scientific study to find out what their customers were really like. They looked in U.S. Census Bureau records to find people who either had a minimum income of $100,000 or a net worth of $500,000 (excluding the value of their homes.)

Then they called these people up and asked them questions over the telephone.

I don't know about you, but I have to question the validity of a study complied via phone interviews.

You've all had such calls, and they always come at the most inconvenient moments. Just as Junior starts scalping his sister in the playroom, the phone rings and the spiel begins.

"I represent XYZ Research Institute and we are conducting a survey to get the consumer's opionion on child abuse in the home. What do you think about it, madam?"

At this point, Junior draws his first blood and I put the researcher on hold long enough to yell, "Stop that right now Junior, or you're dead meat!"

Of course he ignores me, as all children do when they see their parents talking on the phone, and trying to keep the outside world from knowing what their home life is really like.

I return to my caller, who now is asking, "Do we have a bad connection? I hear a screaming noise."

Nothing to worry about, I assure her. With Junior on my mind, I tell her that I can see a definite place for child abuse in the home.

As the noise level around me increases, my caller's voice takes on a nervous tone. "What do you mean? You're in favor of child abuse?"

I glance toward the playroom, where Junior now has his sister tied spread-eagled and is unscrewing the lid on his fire ant collection.

"I think there are definitely circumstances where strong action is warranted," I tell my caller. "And right now is one of them, so I must hang up now. Goodbye."

I wonder how she incorporates that call into her official survey.

But back to the subject at hand, which is what rich people are really like. The article I read, said that rich people are a lot like you and me. To this I say, "Ha! Ha!" That's because I know how to interpret these survey results.

They don't do their own housecleaning, their servants do. Their kids go to prep school and wear designer clothes.

Their money worries are about how to invest that capital gain they made to avoid paying taxes.

They don't care about owning vacation homes, belonging to fancy private clubs, owning art and antiques, or driving an expensive car. The reason this is not important to them, the survey said, is because they already possess all this stuff.

The survey found that the rich attach great importance on being able to "use their creativity, talent and energies" to full advantage. This translates to, "I want to make even more money than I already have, and be an even bigger success."

In spite of their affluence, the rich said that the most important thing was providing for their families and sending their kids to the best schools.

I say, good for them. It is really inspiring to see that rich people aren't letting all that cash cloud their vision of what's really important.

One lady surveyed was asked what she thinks of the plight of America's poor. She reportedly said, "Let them eat cake."

The singer Sophie Tucker once said, "I have been poor and I have been rich. Rich is better." This survey proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that this is not true.The rich are as miserable as the rest of us, just for different reasons.

I don't know about you, but I'd like to try their kind of miserable life. Just to find out if "rich is better."

COMMENTARY

Giving false information a disservice to soldiers

By Malcolm L. Spencer
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — At one time or another, we all have been on the receiving end of the wrong information, the wrong number or the wrong direction. It seems that many people, soldiers or civilians, feel compelled to provide an answer, right or wrong.

This feeling of having to give an answer or to pass on information even when we're not positive that the data we're providing is accurate is a total disservice to our soldiers and to ourselves.

The effect of misinformation is to set in motion actions that will have the net result of causing frustration, anger, resentment, and, worst of all, a feeling that the system really doesn't care. Time is wasted, and opportunities are lost. Hopes are raised unnecessarily For example: "Sure, you can get assigned to the embassy in Paris. Just fill out this form 4187." Unfortunately, what sometimes occurs is that the cycle may be repeated not once but many times. Eventually, the person on the receiving end gives up and will almost certainly be an ETS statistic.

There is no deep secret about how to break the cycle of misinformation, disappointment, etc. The answers are plain and fairly simple: Listen actively, search, check, and provide an answer.

One reason for listening carefully and actively is to make sure that we really know what the question is. Often the real question may be buried and require patience to discover. Once the question is completely understood, the hardest part is over.

Finding out the answer to a question, simple or complex, takes research. Checking a regulation, asking someone who should know the answer, or has already received it, are ways to find the answers. Most times, it means being humble enough to say, "I don't know, but I'll make sure you get the data." Or, "I know just who can help; let's go see him." There are lots of variatios, but each involves knowing the following: what's being asked for (information, procedures, protocol, etc.); analyzing whether we really have the information readily available; and linking the requestor upwith a proven source of the information.

One fairly critical step in the process is to ask yourself objectively (especially if you're the middle man, i.e., conduit for the response), "Do I really believe this?" Sometimes even "experts" make mistakes, and it's worth double-checking.

Soldiers and their leaders, or anyone else who needs information, have a right to expect an accurate ad timely response. We all, from time to time, are providers as well as recipients of information. Sometimes the information is needed to help influence careers, get additional training or sometimes just to help complete a task. We'll have a healthier, happier service if sound information-providing becomes one of our most important missions.

Working as turret repairer challenging job for soldier

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

It has been said that women are taking up the challenge of more and more demanding jobs in the military.

Sp4 Lisa King of Company D, 197th Battalion, is fulfilling one of those demanding roles in today's army.

"I'm a tank turrent repairer, a 45 Kilo," said the soft-spoken King. "I trouble-shoot hydraulic and electrical components that make up the main armament system."

She works on such armored vehicles as M1 and M60 tanks, Improved TOW Vehicles and the Bradley Fighting Vehicle. All of which,are crucial in the modern battlefield.

Her hometown is Kingston, Tenn., where she graduated from Roone County High School and came into the Army through the Delayed Entry Program.

She took her basic training at Fort Dix and then was sent to Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Md. for her advanced individual training (AIT), which lasted 13 weeks.

"After basic training and AIT, I went to work for the FMC Corp. in Santa Clara, Calif.," said King. "For one month, I helped validate the technical manuals used by mechanics to repair the Bradley Fighting Vehicle."

When King's one month job in California was finished, she was assigned to Gelnhausen, Germany, which became her first duty station.

"Because they didn't have the M1 as part of my school when I went through," explained King, "I had to pick it up as a six-week course while in Germany."

In November 1986, she came to the 197th Infantry Brigade and became the only woman on her 15-man contact team.

"Being the only female on the team is no problem," King said. "Sometimes it's a little awkward, but I've never had any problems."

She came into the Army for the schooling and the Army College Fund. After serving her three years, King has aspirations of diverting her energies toward international politics.

"Right now," she said, "I'm thinking of maybe taking some political science courses in college to become politically involved."

Sp4 Lisa King works on the inside of an armored vehicle.

Skill identifiers help match up troop to right assignment

Military Personnel Center

What is an 11B2PC2GM?

Most people associated with the Army recognize that the 11B in this personnel code means the infantry military occupational specialty. But how many know what the rest of the code means?

Those other letters and numbers are skill identifiers. The 2 means that this soldier holds the rank of sergeant, and the P tells us that he is a parachutist. He is also a dragon gunner (C2) and he speaks German (GM).

AR 611-201, Enlisted Career Management Fields and Military Occupational Specialties, has details on MOSs, additional skills and their codes.

It is important to know about personnel codes because the Army uses them to manage people. The codes help MILPERCEN assign soldiers, send them to school and even promote them.

Of special interest are the additional skill identifiers, which are in the sixth and seventh positions in the personnel code. (The C2 in our example.) The Army spends a lot of money on training for these skills, so it is important that ASI-trained soldiers are managed properly.

The additional skill identifier system is designed to make use of soldiers who hold specialized skills that are closely related, but are in addition to the skills of military occupational specialites. Since all soldiers cannot be trained on all equipment and in every possible skill, specialized training meets specialized equipment needs.

The Army now authorizes 182 additional skill identifers. There are 61,000 ASI positions documented and 82,000 soldiers with at least one ASI. In fiscal year 1987, 13,600 soldiers are projected to be trained at schools ranging in length from two to 52 weeks. The expected cost of this additional skill identifer training is more than 100 million dollars.

Support from the Army leadership is the most critical factor for the success of the ASI program. The following actions by commanders will improve their ASI inventories:

- Insist that trained ASI soldiers are assigned to ASI-authorized positions.
- Take immediate action to correct misuse of ASI soldiers. The Standard Installation/Division Personnel System Command Reports 46 and 48 were developed to help commanders in these two areas.
- Emphasize to personnel managers the importance of using all nine characters of the MOS code in requisition and documentation. MILPERCEN edits all requisitions and rejects those that are not in nine characters.
- Ensure that force developers and personnel managers coordinate to correctly document ASI authorizations.

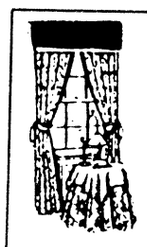
MILPERCEN is working hard to make the additional skill identifer system an effective personnel management program. However, all the system changes are useless if commanders in the field fail to use the system properly.

TSB plans family day, picnic

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The School Brigade Organizational Day Picnic takes place tomorrow on Eubanks Field from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

This picnic is open to all members of The School Brigade and their families.



There will be games, food, drinks, and rides for the kids.

Games featured at the picnic will be battalion tug-o-war, a hot dog-eating contest, horseshoes, softball and volleyball games.

After expanding all that energy the soldiers will be ready for some good food. The menu features hot-dogs, hamburgers, BBQ chicken and ribs, with coleslaw or potato salad on the side.

For the kids there will be the kiddie jump tower, choo choo train and a clown, sure to put a smile on everyones face.

"The point of the entire day is to get The School Brigade soldiers, civilians and their families together to have some fun," said TSB Command Sgt. Maj. Jeffree Yarbrough."

Troops find course good practice for expert field medic badge test

By George Mingee
197th Correspondent

About 45 soldiers from Company B, 197th Support Battalion, tackled the Litter Bearing Obstacle Course, which is located on Kelley Hill.

1st Lt. Tim Voller said the training was a good experience for the medics who will be seeking their Expert Field Medic Badge in the future. Since some of the obstacles the soldiers encountered were water obstacles, training in drown-proofing was undertaken a couple of days earlier.

The litter-bearing obstacle course not only brought out the medics, but included the mechanics and the communication specialists. The course was designed to practice combat maneuvers and procedures for better patient safety.

Pvt. Don Shoe, a medic, said, "It's something you need to learn for combat, because you're never sure what obstacles you might encounter and patient safety is very important."

It's easy to see that Company B got the most out of their wet and muddy training as PFC Greg Floyd, a medic, said, "It's constructive training and it's also lots of fun, which is a change of pace from the office work."

Command sergeant major retires

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Editor's note: CSM Roy C. Owens, Fort Benning's post sergeant major since August 1983, retires Tuesday in a ceremony at 4 p.m. on York Field.

Owens

A military career that has spanned almost three decades of service comes to a close Tuesday as Fort Benning's post sergeant major, CSM Roy C. Owens, takes in his last pass-in-review on York Field.

Owens saw the Army swell from a small contingent upon his enlistment in 1958 to a wartime force during the Vietnam conflict, where he served three combat tours.

His record reads like a textbook on how to scale the ladder to the infantry's top enlisted position: squad leader and platoon sergeant in Vietnam; first sergeant in the 82nd Airborne Division twice; first sergeant in the 1st Infantry and 2nd Infantry Divisions; battalion command sergeant major in the 1st Infantry Division; brigade command sergeant major and back to troops as a battalion command sergeant major in the 8th Infantry Division.

As his record shows, Owens has served with infantry soldiers; he has stayed with troops for the better part of his career.

"Troops are what the infantry is all about. An NCO's job is to lead troops and take care of them. That's what being an infantry sergeant is all about," Owens said.

According to Owens, an integral part of an NCO's job is to stay well educated. He said he made his primary contributions to Fort Benning and the infantry in the field of the NCO education system.

"When the new building was built for Faith Middle School, that left the old building empty," Owens said. "I felt very strongly that infantry NCOs needed a top-notch building to house classrooms and an operation's center for the NCO Academy and I did a lot of leg work and talking to get that building for the academy. The post commander (Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba, Jr.) made a hard decision and supported our academy going there and we got it."

Owens said that there hasn't been a lot done in the past to facilitate the professional education of NCOs and getting Faith School for the academy was a big step in the right direction.

Owens believes very strongly in NCOs setting a professional example, so much so that in 1985 he went through the Army's toughest course, Ranger School. He said he went through the grueling, 58-day school because, as he said in an interview at the time, "...I felt with the Ranger School here and the large contingent of Rangers and light infantry units coming to Benning as part of this command, I needed credibility with these Ranger elements. Also, as Fort Benning's command sergeant major, I felt I should be Ranger qualified to properly represent the infantry."

He completed the course, one that is tough for 21-year olds, at the age of 45.

Besides the Ranger Tab, Owens holds the Bronze Star with "V" device, the Meritorious Service Medal, the Army Commendation Medal with two oak leaf clusters, the Purple Heart, eight awards of the Good Conduct Medal, the Master Parachutist Badge and the Combat Infantryman Badge.

Owens, however, doesn't dwell on personal awards or commendations. He keeps hammering on about the education of NCOs.

"Since I've been the post sergeant major, I've been involved in the revamping of the NCO education system, which includes the Primary and Advanced NCO Courses," he said. "We took a lot of suggestions from the field from NCOs all over the world and made these courses better fit the needs of infantry NCOs. Our sergeants have to have the finest training to be the finest non-commissioned officers in the world. I feel working for better education for NCOs is one of my most significant contributions."

Owens and his wife, Evelean, plan to retire in South Carolina, where the sergeant major will go into a private construction business.

TSB changes commanders June 5

USAIC Public Affairs Office

On June 5, The School Brigade commander, Col. Frederick Peters, will officially turn over the reins to Col. Kenneth L. Teel at 9 a.m., during a ceremony on York Field.

Peters has commanded TSB since May 28, 1985. He is now heading for Washington, D.C., for his next assignment with the Office of the Congressional Legislature Liason.

Teel is coming to Fort Benning from Frankfurt, West Germany, where he served as Deputy Chief of Staff, V Corps.

He has held various assignments during his career, including platoon leader and company executive officer, 2d Battle Group, 38th Infantry; battalion S-2, company commander, 2d Battalion 30th Infantry, 3d Infantry Division; staff officer, office of the Secretary, USAIS; commander of the Officer Candidate Company; Advisory duty with ARVN; staff officer, 5th Army HQ; assistant G-1, 101st Airborne Division; senior advisor, 5th Ranger Group; instructor in the Department of English, USMA; brigade S-3, 1st Brigade, 7th Infantry Division; battalion commander, 3d Battalion, 32nd Infantry, 7th Infantry Division; and staff officer DCSOPS, HQDA.

His professional military education includes the Infantry Officers Basic and Advanced Courses, Ranger School, Airborne School, Command and General Staff College and the National War College.

Teel and his wife Barbara, have two children, Kathryn and Steven.

Col. James E. Mace will assume the position of Director of the Ranger Department, U.S. Army Infantry School, Monday on Todd Field at 4 p.m.

Col. Stanley E. Shaneyfelt will assume the position of Director of Research and Analysis of the Infantry School.

Mace has served in the U.S. Army since 1963, when he was commissioned a second lieutenant after graduating from the Citadel, Charleston, S.C.

He has attended the Infantry Officers Advanced Course, Marine Corps Command and Staff College and the Army War College. Other military courses of instruction include the Airborne and Ranger courses.

He has served in numerous stateside and overseas assignments including Vietnam and Panama. He commanded the 2nd Ranger Battalion, 75th Infantry Regiment at Fort Lewis, Wash. and the 3rd Battalion, 5th Infantry at Fort Kobbe, Panama. Mace has commanded the 1st Infantry Training Brigade, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center at Fort Benning since April 1985.

His military awards and decorations include the Distinguished Service Cross, the Silver Star, the Bronze Star for Valor (four oak leaf clusters), Meritorious Service Medal with oak leaf cluster, the Air Medal with two oak leaf clusters and the Purple Heart.

The public is invited to attend the ceremony.

Wolfhounds

COHORT soldiers test mettle during basic bayonet training

Bradley Iwafuchi
2nd Infantry Brigade

After 86 years, the 2nd Battalion, 27th Infantry, nicknamed the "Wolfhounds," are back in Georgia. Unlike the original unit which received its nickname for its fighting skills against the Bolshevik forces when the 27th was part of the American Expeditionary Forces in Siberia during WW I, these new Wolfhounds are to be part of a COHORT unit stationed at Fort Ord, Calif.

The Wolfhounds are currently receiving their basic training at Companies B and E, 4th Battalion, 2nd ITB.

"The Wolfhounds haven't been in Georgia since 1901 when they were stationed at Fort McPherson," stated Captain Ely Elefante, commanding officer of Company B, 4th Battalion, 2nd ITB. Captain Elefante also added that "historically, the Wolfhounds have a long and distinguished past."

The Wolfhounds participated in the Phillippine Insurrection, served in Siberia during WW I, fought in the Pacific during WW II and fought in the Korea and Vietnam wars.

As with every OSUT class, the Wolfhounds class is broken down into five phases. The first phase, which the Wolfhounds have just completed, is characterized by the total control of the soldier and of the formation of buddy teams. For COHORT units, the emphasis that the drill sergeant places on the trainee are "the special bonds you develop and of the tough training that is geared to the actual training at Fort Ord" stated SFC Gary Belch.

The men assigned to the Wolfhounds are excited at being in a COHORT unit. Pvt. 1 James A. Austin likes the idea of training with the same people and going to the same unit. "You can be together all the time with your friends," he stated. As to their tough training, Pvt. 1 Ron Jackson feels that the drill sergeants are "trying to show us something and to strive to be number one." With this positive attitude running through the Wolfhound's ranks, they should carry on the unit's fine tradition. As Captain Elefante stated, "they represent the future of the 7th Division."

Pvt. 1 Roger Bain, a soldier in Company E, 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, applies the slash movement during bayonet field practice.

Red Cross lauds post volunteers

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

Volunteers gathered at the Sand Hill Noncommissioned Officers Club Tuesday night for the American Red Cross Fort Benning Volunteers 1987 Spring Recognition and Awards Ceremony.

In the annual ceremony, 89 Red Cross volunteers were recognized for their efforts and contributions to the Red Cross Program.

"Just imagine if you took away from the post almost 30,000 hours of volunteer work. The vital functions would disappear. This is a total work force of over 400 people," said guest speaker Col. Richard S. Siegfried, commander of the United States Army Infantry Training Center.

Among those recognized were three recipients of the highest Red Cross award, – the Clara Barton Honor Award for meritorious volunteer leadership: Linda Ernst, Elaine Kendall and Maggie Siegfried, the outgoing station chairman.

During the course of a year, Red Cross volunteers donated nearly 30,000 hours of their time. Among those were 27 newcomers who received a 40-hour pin and 39 others who were recognized for individual years of involvment in the program. Receiving the 16-year tab was Margret Hatcher, Elsie Mace and Angeline Cole. The 18-year tab was given to Sara Kinard, the 19-year tab to Mary Callahan and the 20-year tab to Johnnie Dennis. Also receiving tabs were Mary Morgan for 23 years, Vera Nolan for 24 years and Pauline Keandry for 25 years.

Cole was also presented a special certificate for her continued faithful service as a Gold Star wife. It was noted that during her 16 years of service and working at Martin Army Community Hospital on Monday nights, Cole had only missed five nights of volunteer work. "She would visit with the patients, bring them coffee and just boost morale," said Mrs. Siegfried.

Drivers of government vehicles now must have military license

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

Beginning Monday, all drivers of government vehicles will be required to have in their possession a valid United States Government Motor Vehicle Operator's Identification Card, a valid state driver's license and a National Safety Council Defensive Driver's Card while operating government vehicles.

This new directive makes it mandatory for every driver to have these cards no matter what their age is.

"Right now your age has no bearing. In the past, in order to drive a non-tactical vehicle, all you needed was a State Driver's License if you were over 25," said William D. Wilson, chief of Transportation Division for the Directorate of Logistics.

With all of the drivers qualified, Wilson hopes that the care and maintenance of transportaion motor pool vehicles will be improved. According to Wilson, in the past years the drivers have failed to do preventive maintenance checks consistently enough to keep the vehicles in good condition. "We found that our maintenance of vehicles had allowed them to degenerate because we lost the training in how to record deficiencies properly," he said.

All drivers needing the ID card can call and make an appointment for the ID card class. All driver testing will be in the main motor pool in Bulding 220. For an appointment, call 545-5043 or 545-367).

To get a DDC card, drivers should call the post safety officer at 545-3267 for more information on classes.

36,000,000 AMERICANS HAVE TINNITUS

And that's a conservative estimate of the total number of persons suffering from tinnitus. As many as twelve million people have tinnitus severe enough that the quality of their lives is inpaired. About two million people have such severe symptoms that they can't concentrate well enough to hold a job. Some tinnitis victims have even commited suicide! For more information write:

System to ease strain of getting clinic appointments

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

Imagine having a severe bellyache and going to the outpatient clinic to sit for what seems like hours before being seen by the doctor. Well, for many, the waiting has been a reality. But don't despair there is hope in the near future that the long waits may become obsolete, especially at Martin Army Community Hospital.

MACH recently announced that the Outpatient Clinic will begin a new appointment system that will allow patients to be seen the same day they call for an appointment.

The system, which will begin June 1, will allow patients to telephonically make appointments for the same day, thereby eliminating the long wait usually associated to walk-ins.

Patients who wish to see a physician may call in the morning to be scheduled for a morning or afternoon appointment that same day, when available. If not, the patient may be scheduled for the following morning.

If all appointments are filled, the patient will be asked to call back that afternoon or the next morning.

"The Outpatient Clinic is an entry point into the hospital system. We usually see acute minor illnesses that cannot be seen in other specialty clinics or we refer the patient to the proper place," said Sue Jones, supervisor of the Patient Appointment System at MACH. The clinic will make appointments only by phone, none in person. If there is a medical emergency or a walk-in patient who feels he or she needs immediate attention, a physician will evaluate the patient and either send them to the Emergency Room or recommend they make an appointment at the Outpatient (or appropriate) clinic if the problem can wait.

"It's an effort to make things a little more convenient for the patient," Jones said.

In addition to the new appointment system, the clinic also will be taking prescription refills over the phone. It is advised that the patient have the old prescription bottle or box available when calling so they can name and describe the medication.

In preparing refill prescriptions, a doctor will look at all the information, review the patient's medical record and if appropriate, will write the refill or recommend an appointment to come to the clinic.

Prescriptions called in before 12 noon can be picked up after 9 a.m. three days later.

The telephone number to call for an outpatient appointment or a prescription refill is 544-1705 or 544-3760. This facility is available primarily for military dependants and retirees and their dependents who are not in the Family Practice Program. Soldiers are encouraged to use their Troop Medical Clinic.

"It's going to take a while to get this system running smoothly," Jones said. "So if the patients will just bear with us for a while, it will be well worth it."

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Provost Marshal's Office

Water sports, such as boating and swimming, provide pleasure for many people. During these long, warm sunny days, these devotees of water sports enjoy their favorite recreational sports; but, for some, it may result in a tragedy.

The most serious water accidents are drownings. Last year, three soldiers from Fort Benning drowned. Most drownings are usually caused as a result of either a boating accident or lack of swimming skills. Other possible injuries could be the results of sunburn, food poisoning and or snake bites.

On post, the military community should be aware of the dangers of swimming in undesignated or off-limits areas. Any place not designated for swimming, such as a rock quarry, pond, or creek is considered unsafe and not authorized for military personnel and their dependents. Swimming pools are the only authorized swimming areas on Fort Benning.

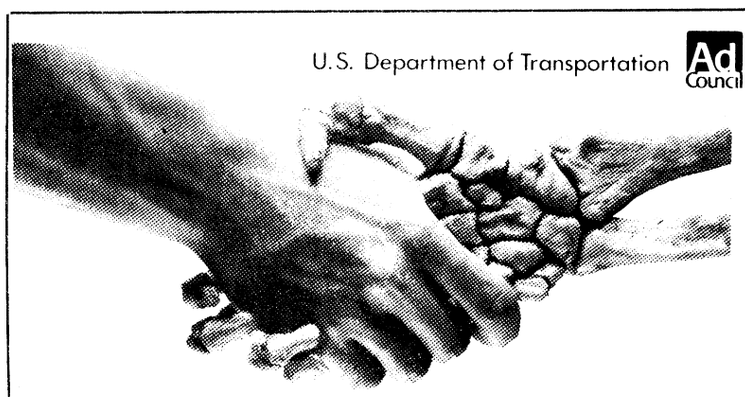
Anyone caught swimming in an undesignated or off limits area is subject to disciplinary action under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Boating is a sport that is growing every year. It can be a fun and safe sport if you, the operator or owner, makes sure that your boat has all the necessary equipment, such as life preservers (one per occupant) and fire extinguishers.

Boat operators are responsible for knowing and following the applicable rules on boating. Negligent or grossly negligent operation of a vessel which endangers lives and property is prohibited by law. Grossly negligent operation is a criminal offense and an operator may be fined up to $5,000, imprisoned for one year or both. Some examples of actions that may constitute negligent or grossly negligent operation are:

Operating a boat in a swimming area.

Operating a boat while under the influence of alcohol or drugs.



Excessive speed in the vicinity of other boats or in dangerous waters.

Hazardous water skiing practices.

Bow, seat, back, gunwale or transom riding.

Water sports should be made as safe as possible, but it will take a total effort from all of us. The Military Police activity hopes that everyone on Fort Benning will be safe and accident-free during these warm-weather months.

ENERGY UPDATE

By Paul Markowitz
Special to the Bayonet

Proponents of energy conservation found grim satisfaction in their predictions for the Department of Energy's (DOE) budget for fiscal year 1988. Unfortunately, the Department's FY88 budget request reflects its long-standing policy of exposing the enormous benefits of conservation rhetorically, while calling for deep, across-the-board cuts in the federal energy conservation budget. At stake are our country's security, its competitiveness, and our environment.

DOE's FY88 budget would cut federal conservation programs by 77 percent below last year's appropriation levels, from $369.9 to $86 million. State and local assistance programs are slated for virtual extinction with a reduction from $213 to 6 million, while conservation research and development funds are scheduled for a 50-percent reduction. Despite Congressional initiatives to restore conservation funding, total funding for conservation has been reduced from $862.1 million to $369.9 million, a decrease, since 1981. Significantly, conservation R&D represents merely two percent of DOE's $3 billion energy R&D budget.

Federal energy dollars should be evaluated and appropriated in regard to their potential for meeting important national needs. In this light, it is appropriate that each DOE energy program will be evaluated based upon how well it meets the following criteria: 1) meeting energy needs cost-effectively; 2) reducing oil vulnerability; 3) improving industries' international competitiveness; and 4) minimizing environmental degradation.

First, energy conservation has already made a significant contribution in reducing our national energy bill, and large amounts of cost-effective conservation improvements still remain to be made. The Department of Energy's FY88 Energy Conservation Multi-Year Plan reports that energy efficiency improvements had resulted in savings of more than $100 billion annually. Numerous studies suggest that the U.S. could reduce its present annual energy bill from $430 bilion to $300 billion or less by using cost-effective energy efficiency measures.

Energy conservation can also reduce oil imports and stretch the United States' diminishing domestic supplies. U.S. dependence on foreign oil has surged 22 percent in the last year alone, while imports from Persian Gulf countries have doubled during this same time period. Our energy predicament would look even worse without the significant strides in energy conservation that have been made over the last decade. For instance, Congressionally-enacted corporate automobile fuel economy (CAFE) standards have saved an estimated 1.8 billion barrels over the decade they have been in effect.

Board to decide which soldiers will be promoted to rank of E-7

Military Personnel Center

A Department of the Army selection board will convene Oct. 14 at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., Military Personnel Center officials announced.

The board will consider eligible staff sergeants for promotion to sergeant first class and for selection for Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course attendance in fiscal year 1989. The board will also consider soldiers for elimination under the Qualitive Management Program.

Staff sergeants with dates of rank of July 31, 1985, and earlier with basic active service dates of Feb. 28, 1982, and earlier, are in the zone of eligibility for consideration by the board in all categories.

To be eligible for promotion and Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course attendance, a staff sergeant must have a high school diploma or General Education Degree equivalent. A soldier who has an approved bar to reenlistment or an approved retirement or who has signed a declination of continued service statement is not eligible for consideration.

Staff sergeants who do not have high school diplomas or GED equivalents are eligible only for Qualitative Management Program consideration. Those with approved local bars to reenlistment or who have signed declinations of continued service statements also will be considered only for QMP.

Any required evaluation reports for soldiers eligible in any category must be sent to Commander, USAEREC, ATTN: PCRE-RE, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. 46249-5301 by Oct. 2.

The board requires original Personnel Qualifications Records, DA Forms 2A and 2-1, for all soldiers eligible in any category. The Enlisted Records and Evaluation Center at Fort Harrison must receive those records by Aug. 3.

Previous boards have found that some soldiers' DA Forms 2A and 2-1 contain conflicting information. Eligible staff sergeants should correct all errors in their Personnel Qualification Records, and must verify that they are complete and correct before sending them.

Eligible soldiers may write to the board president about matters they feel are important in the consideration of their records. Address letters to President, SFC Promotion/ANCOC Board, c/o Comander, USAEREC, ATTN: PCRE-BA, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. 46249-5301. Letters must arrive by Oct. 2, and must include complete social security numbers.

Letters to the board president should not be used to update Official Military Personnel Files.

War College selection board meets in July

Military Personnel Center

The 1987 Senior Service College Selection Board will meet July 21, Military Personnel Center officials announced.

The board, which will select officers for attendance at various senior service colleges, will also indentify officers eligible to take the nonresident Army War College Corresponding Studies Course.

Selection for the course is based on an order of merit list ranking. About 130 officers on that list will have the chance to take the nonresident course.

Officers interested in taking the course must apply to their assignment managers by Dec. 15. To be eligible for selection, an officer must:

- Have completed a minimum of 15 years (192 months) but not more than 23 years (276 months) of active federal commissioned service as of Oct. 2, 1988.
- Hold the rank of lieutenant colonel or colonel on the board's convene date.
- Be a graduate of or have credit for completion of a command and staff level college.
- Not have attended, received credit for attendance nor declined to attend in residence a senior service college or an equated foreign school as specified in Army Regulation 351-1, Individual Military Education and Training.

Reserve component officers on the active duty list, who are otherwise eligible, will remain eligible for senior service college consideration as long as they will not reach their mandatory release dates from active duty before the board convenes.

The curriculum closely parallels the content of the resident course. It is a demanding program with reading and writing requirements equal to those of graduate courses. AR 351-11, U.S. Army War College Corresponding Studies Course, provides more information.

Officers should apply for the course directly to their career management branches. Chain of command endorsement is not required.

MILPERCEN will announce the results of the selection process for academic year 1988-89 in February 1988. Eligibility for future senior service college selection ends when an officer accepts selection for the course and begins instruction.

Graduates of the Army War College Corresponding Studies Course receive the same military education level as resident course graduates.

They receive equal consideration with resident course graduates for future assignments.

TRADOC course prepares officers for Staff College

Military Personnel Center

A recent education initiative by Training and Doctrine Command will be implemented for selected Army officers attending the Armed Forces Staff College and other sister Service Staff Colleges this summer.

According to Maj. Howard Berriman, MILPERCEN training programs staff officer, an Army preparatory course (APC) will be presented by the Command and General Staff College to officers scheduled to attend the Armed Forces Staff College, the Air Command and Staff College, the Naval College of Command and Staff and the Marine Command and Staff College.

The APC consists of three elements: a non-resident Combat Skills Comprehensive Program focused on fundamental warfighting doctrine: a two-week Combined Arms Refresher Course consisting of 67 hours of classroom instruction on Airland Battle Doctrine, Terrorism, Force Integration, Low Intensity Conflict, etc.; and the Command and General Staff College Professional Reading Program.

TRADOC developed the two-week course to provide Army officers with the fundamentals in these areas at division and corps operational level as a supplement to the instruction received at the staff colleges.

Officers who have not completed the CGSC non-resident program will receive the APC course just prior to the start of the academic year at these staff colleges. While officers attending the Air, Navy and Marine Staff Colleges will receive the APC at their school, officers attending the Armed Forces Staff College will travel to Fort Leavenworth, Ka., for their instruction.

Savings bonds pay market interest rates

American Forces Press Service

This year's campaign should be "success built upon success," said Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger as he launched the 1987 Federal Savings Bond campaign and commenced his second year as chairman of the Interagency Savings Bond Committee.

Referring to 1986 sales — at their highest since World War II — Weinberger challenged service secretaries and agency directors to shoot for a 10-percent increase in participation over last year's campaign.

In 1986, $8.3 billion worth of savings bonds were sold, bringing the total worth held by people today to more than $93 billion. More people own U.S. Savings Bonds than any other security in America. The reasons are:

Since Nov. 1, 1982 series EE savings bonds earned variable market-based interest, like money-market accounts, if held for five years. Rates are adjusted semi-annually, each May and November, based on 85 percent of the market rates on five-year Treasury securities during the preceding six months. If the interest rates go up, the bond holder receives the higher rate. If market rates should drop, the holder will not receive less than the interest rate in effect at the time of purchase.

Bonds held less than five years earn interest at a fixed, graduated rate according to a scale in effect on the date of purchase. For bonds purchased after Nov. 1, 1986 these rates range from 4.16 percent to 6 percent, depending on how long the bonds are held.

There is no state or local income tax on interest earned from savings bonds and you can defer federal income tax until you cash the bonds. If you are saving for a child's education, you may get additional tax savings by purchasing bonds in the child's name.

If lost, stolen, mutilated or destroyed, the bonds will be replaced without charge upon application and will bear the original issue dates. For this purpose, owners should keep a record of the serial numbers, issue dates and names and addresses on the bonds. Provide this information when reporting lost bonds to: Bureau of the Public Debt, Parkersburg, West Va. 26106-1328.

Savings bonds are available in eight denominations, from $50 to $10,000. The price you pay is half the bond's face value.

They may be purchased through regular deductions from your pay. You can choose the amount set aside, the denominations you want and the names on the bonds. The may also be purchased over the counter at many banks and other financial institutions.

Securities are investment in our future

American Forces Information Service

In addition to personal benefits, U.S. savings bonds reduce the cost of financing the public debt.

The sale of U.S. government securities dates back to 1776, when private citizens purchased more than $27 million in bonds to help finance the Revolutionary War.

They bought them on trust, not knowing if they would ever see their money again. After the war, the new government paid off all the obligations — in full and on time.

Savings bonds as we know them today were established in the mid-1930s. This was at a time when peoples' incentives to save and their confidence in financial institutions had been shaken by the Great Depression.

The savings bond program offered at that time an opportunity to broaden the base of the public debt by attracting small savers. Initial investments could be small, the interest rate was attractive and the holding period relatively short. For government, the program offered an opportunity to reduce its dependency on large investors and commercials banks.

The most popular savings bonds of all time was the "E" series, first offered in 1941 to help finance the war effort and control inflation. During the World War II era, Americans bought more than $54 billion worth of "E" series bonds.

Further information about savings bonds can be obtained at most financial institutions, Federal Reserve banks and Savings Bonds Division district offices. You can get current information by calling 1-800-US BONDS toll-free or if you are in the Washington, D.C. area, call USA-8888.

Maintenance award winners announced in Washington, D.C.

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Recipients of the Chief of Staff of the Army 1986 Maintenance and Supply Excellence Awards gathered in Washington May 21 for the annual awards ceremony sponsored by the American Defense Preparedness Association.

Representing both the active and the reserve components, a number of units from throughout the Army had competed in the three maintenance categories of light, intermediate and heavy. Four of the active units qualified as the Army candidates for the defense secretary's maintenance award. The Army's winner was the 1st Battalion, 6th Infantry, an MTOE unit of U.S. Army, Europe (Illesheim, Germany).

This year's ceremony also marks the second year of the Army's awards program for "supply excellence."

SPIRITUAL

Don't take the world's problems on your shoulders

By Chaplain (Capt.) Ray Ganey
3rd Engineer Batallion

Into your world of anxiety, worry, frustration and hurt, and into your personal world of stress comes comes good news. Yes, even into this world of living a life revolving around the three glass balls of Training, Maintenance and Modernization, comes good news. Yes, even into this world of barracks living, into your own personal world of stress, comes good news. The good news is you can combat stress creatively. The choice is yours. Here are some ideas that are helping me as I seek to handle stress creatively. I hope they will help you.

Trust God to bear your burdens. Are you living as if it were all up to you? As if the burden of the whole world were on your shoulders? Do you feel helpless and inadequate for the task? I know how you feel, for I have been there. Even today and every day I find the need to "cast my cares upon the Lord, knowing He cares for me," (I Peter 5:7). To cast means to let go of the stressors and to trust God to handle them. God wants us to find in Him the answer to our fears within and fightings without. Such faith and trust grow as we study His word and let go. He is "a very present help in trouble." God cares, forgives, sustains, comforts and empowers.

Accept God's estimate of yourself. You can tell much about what a thing is worth by what has been paid for it. The price paid for your abundant and eternal life was the greatest price ever paid. You are a person of infinite worth. And you are loved and accepted by God and are paid the great compliment of the gift of free choice. Accept and love yourself.

Build a strong family life. The family can be a great support resource for the distressed person. God established families to give us the emotional support, empathy and love which we need. Family members must learn how to relieve, rather than increase, stress. Let God love you through your family. To be able to pour out your heart without putting up defenses or hiding weaknesses is a great antidote to stress. Not only accept love, but give love. Love is something you do, and it takes time. Communicate, open your heart in unselfish sharing and caring.

Set priorities. You will never get everything done. Establish short and long-range goals. Select what is most important and then concentrate on each job as it comes, doing one thing at a time. Don't try to operate in high gear all the time, but pace yourself. Learn the value of mini-vacations, a walk or even a look out the window. A change is a rest. Do not allow the urgent to crowd the important. Learn to say no. Study the levels of work or effort or ambition which are realistic for you. Nothing brings on stress more than to take on jobs which you can't fulfill and which require so much time and effort that you resent them. This guarantees a stressful life. Be self-aware.

Concentrate on gratitude. Count your blessings, name them one by one. Thank God continually and thank people for every small kindness. You will be amazed at how happy this sharing of love will make you as well as others.

Turn to serving others. Nothing relieves stress like doing a good and loving deed. It takes the focus off self and reduces the distress caused by brooding. Try giving yourself away in loving works and loving deeds. "It is more blessed (and stress-relieving) to give than to receive."

Practice thought control. Practice this consciously and you will eliminate habitual worry and anxiety, for the mind can hold only one thought at a time. And how you think determines how you feel, and how you feel determines how you act out and behave in your life. If you don't like the way you are acting out, if you don't like the way you are feeling — change your thinking. As with any good habit, this will take practice, but you do have the ability to choose your thinking patterns. This is not to be unrealistic, but it is to live by your beliefs and not your doubts.

Examine your relationships. Earn your neighbors' love. Don't neglect friendship and fellowship. God loves us through others.

Kelley Hill chapel hosts power service

The Sightseeing Road Chapel will host a "Power for Service" Sunday at its 11 a.m. service.

Chaplain (Col.) Roy Mathis, USAIC chaplain, will deliver a sermon in honor of the soldiers of the 43rd Engineer Battalion titled "Power for Winning."

Some soldiers from the 43rd will participate in the ceremony, providing music as well as readers and ushers.

The community is invited to come and worship with the soldiers of the 36th Engineer Battalion. A fellowship will meet in the chapel's activities room following the service.

Premarriage seminar offered for couples

Couples who are planning to celebrate their marriage in the Catholic Church are invited to a pre-marriage seminar at 1 p.m. in the Religious Education Center, Building 229.

The program includes discussion on communication, finance, legal issues, sexuality and spirituality. Participation is a requirement for all couples who plan a Catholic wedding.

Call Phil Reilly a 545-5508 for more information and to register.

Catholic Women plans get-together

On June 5 the Military Council of Catholic Women (M.C.C.W.) will have a "Getting to know you" celebration.

Rosary will begin at 9:15 a.m. followed by a Mass. Afterwards the group will go to TIC for the program. A video about Mother Theresa, a modern day saint, will be shown. Those interested are asked to bring a friend and two or three articles of baby, wedding, or family pictures; a favorite craft or game; or any other article that would help us get to know you better. This is optional but encouraged.

Refreshments will be provided and free babysitting is available at the Religious Education Center starting at 8:30 a.m.

Share memories, laughter and get a spiritual boost. For more information, call Marianne Tennant at 687-0451 or Viviana V. Hernandez 682-1972.

Buses to pick up Bible school kids

The Red bus departs the Religious Education Center at 8:30 a.m. enroute to Davis Hill. The route begins at Kawaura Street, vances in energy-saving technology can play a key role in assuring the competitiveness of U.S. industry in the world market. Over the past decade, American automakers lost a fourth of the global market to fuel-efficient Japanese cars. We are now witnessing the same challenge to our domestic and global market shares from foreign competitors in lighting, air conditioning, motors, appliances, manufacturing equipment and industrial processes. Unfortunately, as the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness report noted, America has recently lost global market shares in seven out of 10 high-technology market areas, despite leadership in developing high-technology projects. Energy efficiency R&D can help reverse this trend and insure against a further erosion of competitiveness.

Energy

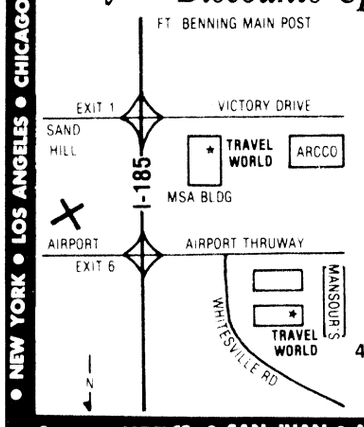
Finally, energy conservation reduces energy use, and thus decreases environmental impacts resulting directly from exploration, production, transportation and consumption of energy. A 1983 National Science Foundation report concluded that energy conservation provides the single most important opportunity to ameliorate carbon dioxide accumulation, which is caused primarily by the burning of fossil fuels. A soon-to-be-released study conducted by the Energy Conservation Coalition has found that conservation can play a significant role in reducing acid rain emissions as well.

As a first step toward restoring some semblance of balance to our national energy priorities, over 26 national organizations have joined together in supporting an alternative energy conservation budget. The alternative conservation budget calls for a modest increase of 15 percent above last year's appropriation levels and is based upon a detailed, comprehensive assessment of the potential for energy conservation programs in meeting national energy needs.

Task force aims to find solutions to pay problems

Military Personnel Center



Army personnel and finance officials have combined efforts to improve service to soldiers. Officials from the Personnel Information Systems Command and the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center have formed a joint task force to make it easier for soldiers to resolve pay and personnel problems.

Teams from both commands will be visiting major installations through July to train technicians in finance and personnel offices and Personnel Administration Centers in the use of single source data. Upon Armywide implementation this summer, input from either finance or personnel will update the other's system. Personnel will be responsible for the proper input of changes to grade; finance will input pay entry basic date and basic active service date.

"Single Source Data will save soldiers time because they will need to go to only one place to solve a problem," said Richard Polacheck, a personnel representative on the task force.

Steve Williams, a finance representative, agreed and added, "Training is an important first step, especially at the PAC, because it is now responsible for entering promotions through specialist four and reductions for staff sergeant and below. That input is what will update the soldier's finance record."

Third-graders see other countries by traveling in their classrooms

Myra Cook, a third-grade teacher at Wilson School, stamps Michelle L. Seales' "passport" before letting her into the classroom.

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

Traveling around the world is a long trip. But students at Benning's Wilson School have found that monthly stops in bigger cities like London, New York and Tokyo made the trip seem shorter.

The third graders return to tour Fort Bennning this week, the last leg of their "world tour."

This year one of the school's third grade projects was to have the children simulate traveling around the world. "This is the third year we've done this. But this year we were able to add new things into the program," said Myra Cook, who along with Sharon Martz and Julie Miller (all third grade teachers at Wilson School) helped get the project off the ground.

The children "traveled" around the world through video movies, picture books and just about anything else the teachers could think of to help the children understand the particular land they were "visiting." This included preparing native foods and designing clothing indigenous to the land for the students to wear.

"We had a lady from Japan come and spend an hour talking with them and answering questions," Cook said.

In an effort to teach the children what traveling to another country entails, the teachers devised a method in which the students would have their pictures taken to make simulated passports. They each carried makeshift suitcases and would "check" their passports before entering the classroom. Cook would convert her classroom into the country being visited, so that the students would feel as if they just entered the country.

"I put posters all over the walls and put out all kinds of information on the country. I turned the room into a museum," she said.

The teachers combined the information and photos they had accumulated from their own travels to help put the program together.

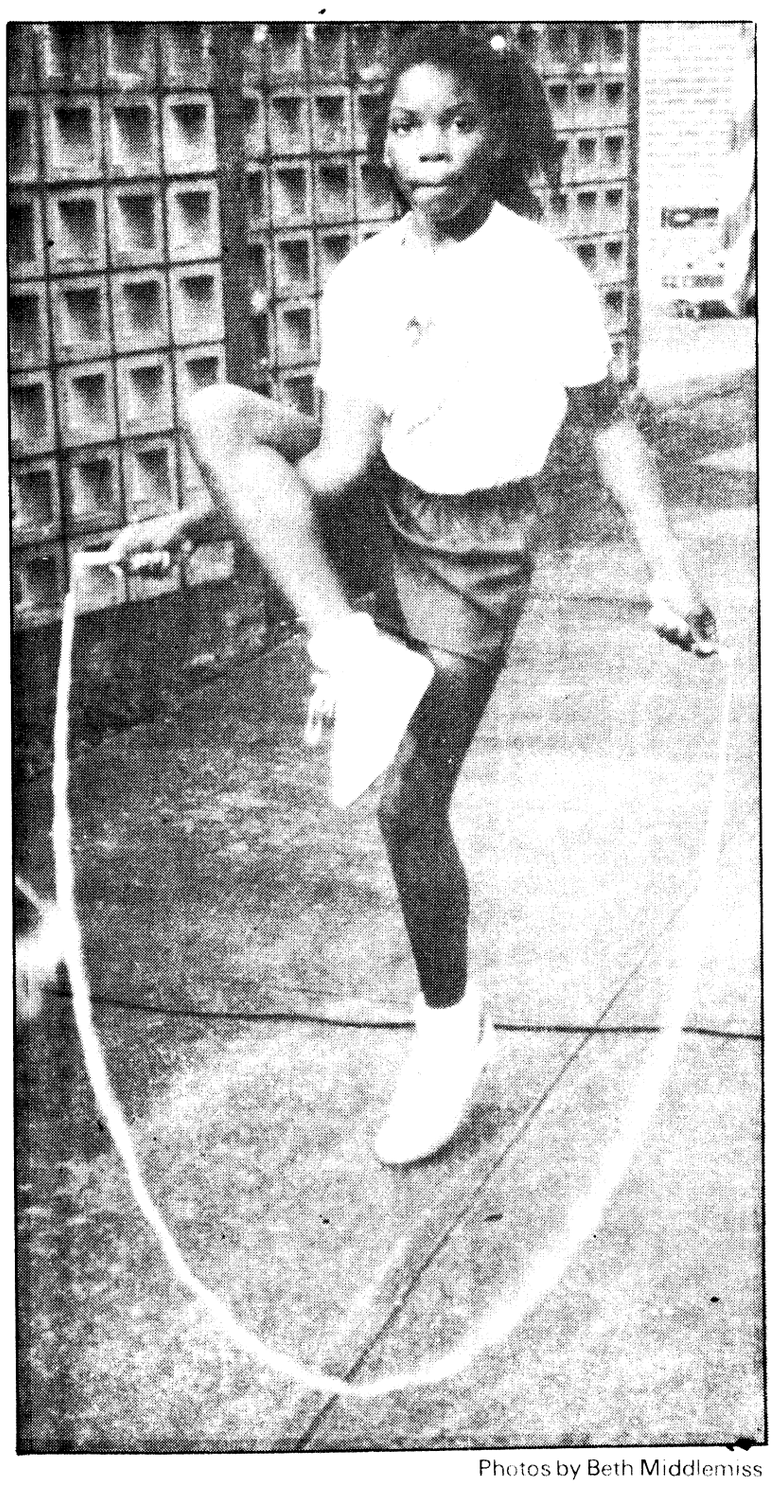
'Heartbeats' rope team shows fun way to keep fit

By Beth Middlemiss
Post Schools Correspondent

The Loyd School "Heart Beats" is a team of fourth and fifth grade jump ropers who have performed their many routines for the last two years at Fort Benning Mall, Columbus Square Mall and on local television.



Martha Slaughter, physical education teacher at Loyd School, sponsors the group which developed from the physical education program at Loyd. "Rope-jumping is an excellent activity for people of all ages. It is a wonderful way to maintain cardiovascular and respiratory health and strength," Slaughter said.

"Our children begin to learn to jump rope at Loyd School in kindergarten. By fourth and fifth grades many of the students are ready to master the complicated routines that the 'Heart Beats' perform."

Slaughter anticipates the return of several of the fourth grade team members next year. The interest in "Heart Beats" has grown each year. We are proud of our youngsters and are looking forward to next year's team events," she said.

School board members to serve one-year term

By Beth Middlemiss
Post Schools Correspondent

School board elections were May 19. The following parents were elected: Elizabeth Matthews (Dexter School representative), Joan Hutchins (Faith School representative), Sgt. 1st Class Bruce Kendall (Loyd School representative) and Lt. Col. Lawson W. Magruder (White School representative).

The above elected members will assume office July 1. They will join the following members who have one year left of their two-year terms: Col. Miguel Garcia (president), Lt. Col. Donald McSwain (chaplain representative), Mary Ann Stacey (McBride School representative), Ann Mace (Patch School representative), Sgt. 1st Class William R. Ray (Wilbur School representative) and Sergeant Maj. Carl W. Littlejohn (Wilson School representative).

The school board normally meets on the last Monday of each month in the conference room of the administrative office. The board considers school policies, approves the budget, approves personnel selections, approves curriculum changes and functions in much the same way as do school boards in civilian communities.

Board meetings are open to the public. Anyone desiring information regarding the board meetings should call the central administration office at 545-2915.

Soldier explains benefits of being able to execute airborne jumps after dark

By Jack T. Liston
1-507th PIR

I know you've seen one. It was the first thing that caught my attention while walking on main-post as a wide-eyed private nearly four years ago. There he was, a fit, confident, squared-away looking young soldier wearing a T-shirt claiming: "Cheap Thrills, I don't care how many sky dives you've got, until you've stepped into complete darkness at 1,250 feet wearing 95 lbs. of equipment and 68 lbs. of parachute, you just haven't lived, AIRBORNE!"

My first reaction was "Wow, that's a pretty serious statement!" I thought I'd been through quite a bit in my life, having already traveled to foreign countries and seen many things; surely there had to be something that wasn't so "special" about his T-shirt's claim.

For anyone who hasn't had the experience of making a tactical, combat equipment, jump at night, whether in Airborne School or later in another Airborne unit, it is certainly a "special" sensation that has few comparisons.

But why are night jumps necessary? Historically, American Airborne operations not only use the tactical advantage of surprise, but also the cover of darkness. Units or elements are parachuted in the dark, at strategic locations behind enemy lines, heavily loaded down with their combat gear.

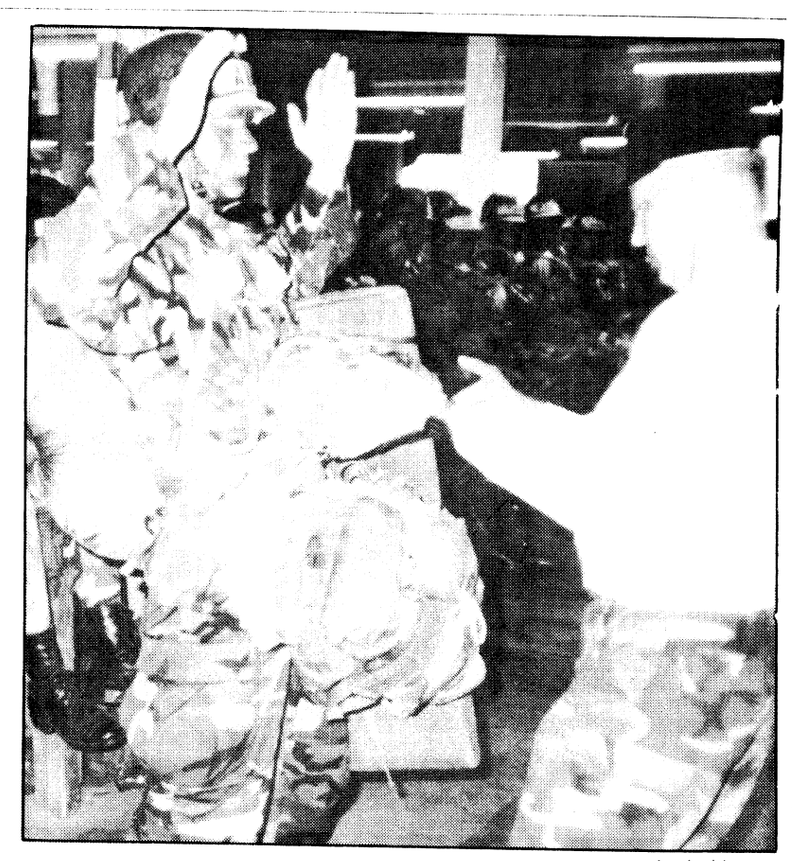
Without the advantage of the normal logistical supply system, the Airborne soldier is forced to rely on what he can carry and live off the land. By adapting to his surroundings, he becomes an effective fighting force.

Paratroopers must be physically fit, must be disciplined, must possess self-confidence, and must be an expert at small unit leadership. In fact, many key ingredients and prerequisites for today's "light" infantry concept comes from the lessons learned from the paratrooper's successes in past conflicts.

And so, basic Airborne students have at least one night jump scheduled during their basic airborne training with the 507th Parachute Infantry. These night jumps are considered to be so important to a paratrooper's training that the only reasons for missing them are when either aircraft is unavailable or weather is too restrictive.

For those going on to Airborne units or on to Ranger training, the night jump is considered so critical that they cannot jump at night with their new units until they have made at least one prior daylight mass tactical jump. In Airborne units, there are few "fun jumps" -- day jumps without combat equipment -- when compared to the majority of the jumps which are night, mass tactical assaults, with full combat loads using the parachute only as a means of arriving deep in the battle zone in total darkness.

Not only is the night jump a confidence builder to the individual paratrooper, but it instills trust in his NCO and officer jumpmasters, and his parachute equipment. All this builds confidence critical to developing unit cohesion and discipline needed for isolated combat missions most often given to Airborne units.



In order for an Airborne unit to be able to retain it's fighting strength in combat, several critical tasks must be learned during night training jumps. These include the soldier's ability to keep oriented to his darkened surroundings, to conduct his 5 points of performance under conditions of limited visibility, and execute his 5th point of performance, the parachute landing fall (PLF), in total darkness, and to properly account for and move all his combat equipment to a predesignated assembly area. The soldiers learn to respond to all jump commands inside a darkened aircraft under the soft glow of dim red lights, and then step from this eerie netherworld into an even darker one.

The paratrooper leaves the safety of the aircraft with his T-10B parachute, T-10 reserve parachute, M-1950 weapons container with individual weapon, and a combat-load rucksack. Once on the ground, he must quietly and quickly recover all his equipment and move silently to accomplish his combat mission. Night jumps in basic Airborne training approximates this realism.

In military parachuting, many parachute injuries occur when a paratrooper sees the ground rushing up to him and anticipates the landing, tending to "reach" for the ground or fold up his legs anticipating the impact. During a night jump these factors are not present. Once the paratrooper ensures that he has a full parachute canopy and orients himself to both his fellow jumpers and his landing site, he prepares to land and properly positions his body as taught in the basic airborne course.

He then learns that when the landing isn't anticipated, everything happens just as he's been taught. It then all seems so easy; all the sweat, the effort, the pain, the stress.

Yes, the T-shirt is pretty boastful, but not after taking that first step into a darkened night sky. Did I ever buy myself one of those boastful T-shirts? I own 3 as a matter of fact, each a different color. Why you ask? Just like I tell my kids when they ask: "Why do you want to jump out of a perfectly good airplane?" My reply: "Because I'm Airborne, and daddy loves his work".

New dental plan provides basic coverage to families

USADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — With the award of a nationwide contract to Delta Dental Plan of California, the Defense Department's Active-Duty Dependents Dental Insurance Plan is a reality.

After the Uniformed Services have completed the initial enrollment period, benefits under the plan will begin on Aug. 1, 1987, for covered care received on or after that date.

Among the many questions people have been asking about the plan are these:

Q: What exactly is the plan?

A: The Active-Duty Dependents Dental Insurance Plan is a voluntary program of preventive services and basic dental care for the family members of active-duty members of the Uniformed Services. The care is received from civilian dentists and dental hygienists.

Q: Who's eligible for the care?

A: Family members (dependents) of active-duty members of all seven Uniformed Services (Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Public Health Service, and National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration). The family members must be living in the 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico or the U.S. Virginia Islands.

The term "family members" generally includes: husbands and wives of active-duty service members; and unmarried children up to age 21 (21 and older if severely handicapped and the condition existed before the 21st birthday; and to age 23 if in school full-time).

Q: Who's NOT eligible?

A: The plan doesn't cover active-duty service members, only their families. It doesn't cover military retirees or their families, survivors of deceased active-duty members, families living overseas, nor the families or reserve members not on active duty. After the initial enrollment period, active duty-members with less than two years remaining of active duty service who are on a first-term enlistment are not eligible to enroll their dependents.

Q: How do I enroll?

A: For benefits beginning Aug. 1, the eligible dependents of active-duty members are automatically enrolled. If the active-duty member is serving an initial term, he or she must have at least two years remaining of active duty service in order to be eligible to enroll in the plan. However, an exception to this rule is provided during the initial enrollment period from April 15 to June 30.

Active-duty members serving first-term enlistments are enrolled during this initial enrollment period if they have at least six months remaining of active duty and their dependents live within the dental plan's jurisdiction.

*Note: Children under age 4 can be enrolled, but you must request enrollment for them. A handicapped child over age 21 or a student up to age 23 may also be enrolled. Contact your service representative to request enrollment.

If your family does NOT want to be covered by this plan, you must ask to be taken out of the plan within the 90-day enrollment period that began when the dental contract was awarded on April 3. You must complete a disenrollment form and give it to your service representative if you don't want the dental coverage.

All eligible family members must be enrolled if any member is enrolled, except where a single dependent is living away from the family (such as a college student), and the remaining family members are not enrolled because they live overseas, have other dental insurance, or have access to space available care.

For members who are beginning active-duty service or enrolling families after the initial enrollment period, your service representative can help you enroll in the dental plan.

Your family will be continued in the plan even if you're transferred to another duty station within the U.S. However, if dental care is available for your dependents at the military dental facility at your new location, you may choose to be taken out of the dental plan by filling out the disenrollment portion of the enrollment form. You must make this choice within 90 days of your reporting date to the new station.

Q: How much will the dental plan cost?

A: If you have only one depen-

Recreation Centers — Kelly Hill Rec Center is offering the following activities to the Fort Benning Community.

Self-defense for Women — Learn to protect yourself while gaining poise and confidence. The Kelley Hill Rec Center is sponsoring a series of eight classes in self-defense beginning June 3 and continuing each Wednesday and Thursday in June. All classes begin at 6 p.m. The fee for this invaluable course is only $20. Registration deadline is 9 p.m. tonight. To register, call 544-1721.

Kelley Hill Rec Center offers dog obedience classes. Is your dog lovable, yet untrainable? Does your puppy pretend not to hear you calling? Does the word "housebroken" seem to be only a dream? The center is currently scheduling dog obedience classes to begin soon. In order to provide the best possible service, a phone number has been set up for pet owners to call with information about what they need out of a dog obedience course.

If you are the proud owner of a playful pup, but need a helping hand in training him, call 544-1721 and leave your name and number. A staff member will contact you about the upcoming canine classes. A limited number of dogs can be handled, so don't delay, call today!

The Kelley Hill Rec Center offers a musical instrument rental service on a continuous basis. Various instruments are available upon request, including guitars, horns, wind instruments, amplifiers, electric pianos and PA systems. Rental arrangements may be on a daily, weekly or monthly basis. Fees vary with instrument selection. For details, call 544-1721.

LUPUS IS BIASED.

Systemic Lupus Erythematosus, commonly called lupus or SLE, is a chronic inflammatory disease affecting connective tissue. Of the over 500,000 Americans afflicted with this immune system disorder, the majority are young women in their childbearing years. Although lupus can strike anyone, the disease attacks females at an almost nine to one ratio over males.

Keep safety in mind when boating this summe

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

With their abundance of lakes and rivers, Georgia and Alabama are boating paradises. But not being safety conscious while operating your boat could pull the plug on your summer maritime mirth.

Randy Hackley is a ranger with the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Game and Fish Division, and he said boating safety centers around two specifics.

"The first thing all boaters should keep in mind is that, just like driving a car, don't consume alcohol and operate a boat," he said, "and keep in mind that probably 85 percent of all boating accidents involve alcohol."

The second specific is key in boating safety. "All boaters should take a boating course," he said.

These courses can be scheduled through the Game and Fish Division and are given by game and fish rangers such as Hackley, on a request basis by calling 687-2079.

There is also a private organization in Columbus, the Muscogee Power Squadron, which runs 11-week public boating courses twice annually that are free to the public, one in the spring and another in the fall.

"We've just finished our spring course and our fall program starts in September," said Ronald Summers, the organization's education officer. "We meet each Tuesday evening for two hours and present a very structured boating program."

Summers said the program covers how to read a river, docking and undocking, general Coast Guard Safety requirements, rules of the road, equipment requirements, how to plot courses, elementary engine maintenance and use of a nautical compass.

"We're made up of people who own everything from small bass boats to 35-foot sailboats," he said, "but we're all dedicated to boating safety. We feel that the more people we train in safe boating the safer it will be for us on the water."

The Power Squadron can be contacted at any time to answer specific boating questions by calling 322-0294.

Both Hackley and Summers stressed that all boaters should take a boating course and, additionally, offered these general safety tips:

- Don't consume alcohol and operate a boat.
- Don't speed or water ski close to swimmers, launching ramps or other boats.
- Boat speed must be regulated so as to avoid danger, injury, damage or unnecessary inconvenience by the effect of wake from a boat.
- It is unlawful to operate a power boat, except at idle speed, or to create a wake in the vicinity of marinas, bridges, public access ramps and blind points indicated by signs or markers.
- Don't load a boat beyond recommended capacity of the boat.
- Georgia law prohibits any person riding the bow or gunwale of a boat unless a retaining device is present to prevent the person from falling overboard.
- Any person being towed on skis, aquaplane or surfboard is required to wear a ski belt, ski jacket or Type I,II or III U.S. Coast Guard approved personal flotation device.
- When boarding a boat from a dock, step aboard in the center of the boat.
- Ensure the motor for your boat is not too powerful or too big.
- Personal flotation devices (life preservers) should be carried on board for each passenger and must be Coast Guard approved.
- Always have a fire extinguisher on-board that is Coast Guard approved.

VA Q&A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q: I receive a Veterans Administration pension and each year I complete a questionnaire about my income. I just started drawing Social Security. Should I wait until I receive the next questionnaire to report this additional income?

A: No. You should report any new income immediately, to prevent an overpayment of your VA pension.

Q: My husband was killed in World War II while on active duty and was buried at sea. I never remarried and would like to be buried in a national cemetery. Is this possible?

A: Yes, the widow or widower of a member of the Armed Forces lost or buried at sea, or officially determined to be in a status of missing or missing in action, or whose remains have been donated to science or cremated is eligible for burial in a national cemetery.

Q: Am I required to occupy as a home the house I purchased with my VA home loan eligibility?

A: Yes. The law specifically requires that you certify that you intend to occupy the property personally as your home within a reasonable period of time in order for you to qualify for the loan.

Q: My husband died owing the Veterans Administration $3,000. My only source of income is Social Security. Am I responsible for his debt?

A: No, you are not responsible for your deceased husband's debt.

Q: I have been designated as my father's guardian and received his monthly Veterans Administration pension check. How can I have these checks sent directly to the nursing home where my father resides?

A: Please ask your VA regional office to have a VA field examiner contact you to discuss appointing the nursing home administrator as payee. If your father is receiving other recurrent benefit checks, such as Social Security or Railroad Retirement, it might be useful for you to have those benefits, too, sent directly to the nursing home. It will be easier for the nursing home to complete the annual eligibility verification report if all income is known.

Q: I own a manufactured home on a rented lot. I would like to purchase a lot for it. Can I do this using the VA guaranteed loan program.

A: Yes. A VA guaranteed loan may be used to buy and improve a lot on which to place a manufactured home you already own and occupy.

Q: I heard that Congress passed a law authorizing special life insurance dividends for World War II veterans. I understand that veterans are entitled to this dividend even if they haven't kept their policies in force. Is this true?

A: No. The VA does not pay dividends on lapsed insurance policies. An insurance hoax that has plaqued the VA since 1948 is refueled every few years by a distribution of "applications" that claim the Congress has authorized the dividends. There has been no such action nor is there any pending. Annual dividends on current GI insurance policies are paid by the VA to veterans who continue to pay premiums. Dividend payments are made automatically, usually on the anniversary date of the policy, and no application is needed.

Center offers drop-in care, pre-school program

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

You do volunteer work on post but need someone to take care of your kids. Where do you leave them? You've got to go to the dentist and need a place for the children to stay while you go. Where do you take them? It's your anniversary and you and your wife want to spend some time alone but where can the kids go, get great care and have fun at the same time? Fort Benning's Tot Town is the answer to all of these questions.

Located at Building 1051 on 1st Division Road, Tot Town provides a dual service, drop-in child care and a pre-school program.

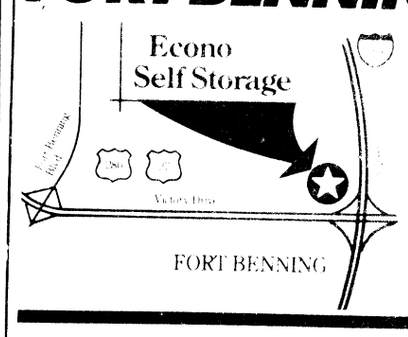
"We're not a full-time day care center. We are a drop-in, hourly service for people who need child care for a few hours and we also run a pre-school," said Barbara Baxter, the assistant supervisor of Tot Town.

The child care center, which can be used by active duty and retired military and Department of the Army civilians, charges $1 an hour for the first child and 50 cents an hour for each additional child. There is a $10 registration fee good for one year.

Parents or guardians must present an up-to-date shot record for each child and a valid ID card for military or a letter from the supervisor of DA civilians. Tot Town accepts children from 3 months to 12 years of age.

Tot Town's hours are Monday through Thursday from 7 a.m. to 6:30 p.m., Fridays from 7 a.m. to 1 a.m. and Saturdays from 9 in the morning to 1 a.m., Baxter said. The the facility is closed on Sundays.

"We also offer a pick-up service after school. We require parents to fill out release forms and make a reservation and we will pick up their children from Dexter, White, Patch and Patch kindergarten Schools," Baxter said.



All of the child care workers have attended an 18-hour Child Development Course at Columbus Tech, covering such things as working with children, communicating on a child's level, structured activities for children and safety and first aid training.

"We're also very proud of our pre-school program," Baxter said. "We have a two- and three- day pre-school for 3- to 5-year olds run by a certified teacher, Gail Whittlesey. The children participate in activities such as art, music, story time and basic education concepts."

Also open to active duty and retired military and DA civilians, the pre-school operates on Tuesdays and Thursdays for the two-day program and Monday, Wednesday and Friday for the three-day. The school runs from 8:45 to 11 a.m. and costs $25 monthly for the two-day session and $37.50 for the three-day.

USAMU shooters capture individual rifle, pistol titles

SSgt. Greg Strom of Benning's Marksmanship Unit won his second consecutive rifle title

By Tommy Pool
USAMU PAO

After two weeks of stiff marksmanship competition between some of the top military shooters in the country, this year's U.S. Army Small Arms championships ended May 22.

Winners in both individual and team events were honored in ceremonies conducted at the Main Post Theater and presented trophies designating them as the Army's best marksmen.

This year's championships drew more than 700 personnel who represented teams from the active Army, Army Reserve and Army National Guard, breaking last year's attendance record.

In last week's finals, the US Army Marksmanship Unit's SSgt. Greg Strom and SFC James Laguana captured the Army individual rifle and pistol championship titles.

Strom scored a three-day total of 2,061 to win the national match rifle championship by a narrow one-point margin, over a field of more than 250 competitors.

Finishing in second place was Army Reservist, Sgt. Lowell Johnson, firing a total of 2,066. He was followed by MSgt. Nelson Shew, National Guard, with 2,065 for third position.

Strom's victory marked the second consecutive year that he has won the individual U.S. Army Rifle Championship.

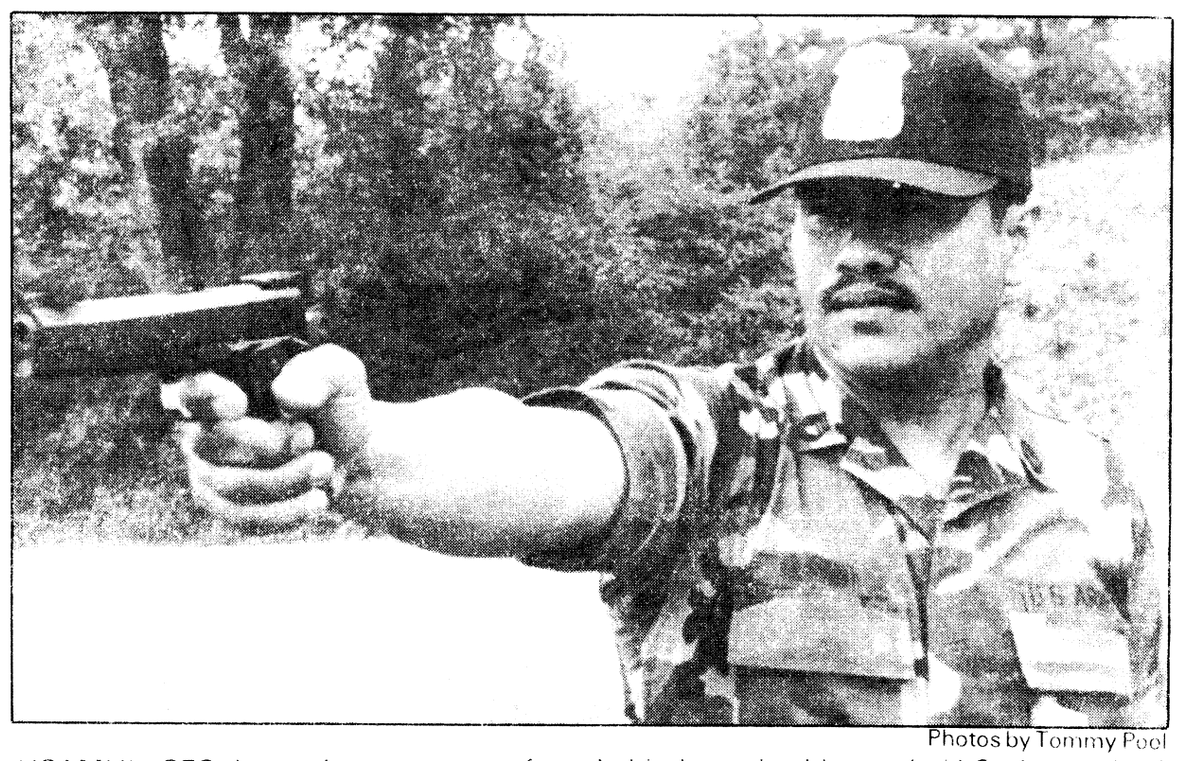
In rifle team competition, members of the Army National Guard swept the top three places in the national match rifle events, while the Fifth U.S. Army squad came back to win the final Army Infantry Trophy team championship.

Trailing the leaders by ten points going into the final phase of firing, the Fifth Army team rallied for the final aggregate score of 2,644 points to defeat the Fifth Army National Guard squad by six points at 2,638.

Third place in the infantry trophy match was won by the first U.S. Army team with a total of 2,561 points.

Members of the winning fifth Army squad included: team coach SSgt. Richard Ramos, team captain SFC Eusefio Mirelez, and firing members 1st Lt. John Czarnecki, SFC Bruce Gilbreath and Sgt. 1st Class James Reiber, SSgt. Barry Lewis, Sgt. Dan Purvis and SP4 Kenneth Strait.

On the pistol range, former national champions Laguana and MSgt. Roger Willis waged a two-way battle throughout the four-day event for the individual title.



Willis, the defending US Army champion, began strong by winning the .22 caliber and .45 caliber individual pistol titles, while Laguana came back to win the Centerfire event.

Still trailing after three rounds of competition, Laguana overcame a 10-point deficit on the last day to outscore Willis by six points.

Laguana finished with a total of 3,506 points, followed by Willis at 3,500. Army Reservist SFC Frank Goza placed third in the championship with a score of 3,492.

Final individual and team results from last week's U.S. Army Small Arms competition are as follows.

10th Mountain's swim program ensures troops are combat ready

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

"Swimming is more than a nice-to-know ability. It is a combat skill, especially for light infantry soldiers," said Sgt. Maj. Thomas Arthur, the operation's sergeant for the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, and the 10th is putting this philosophy into action with a unit swim program.

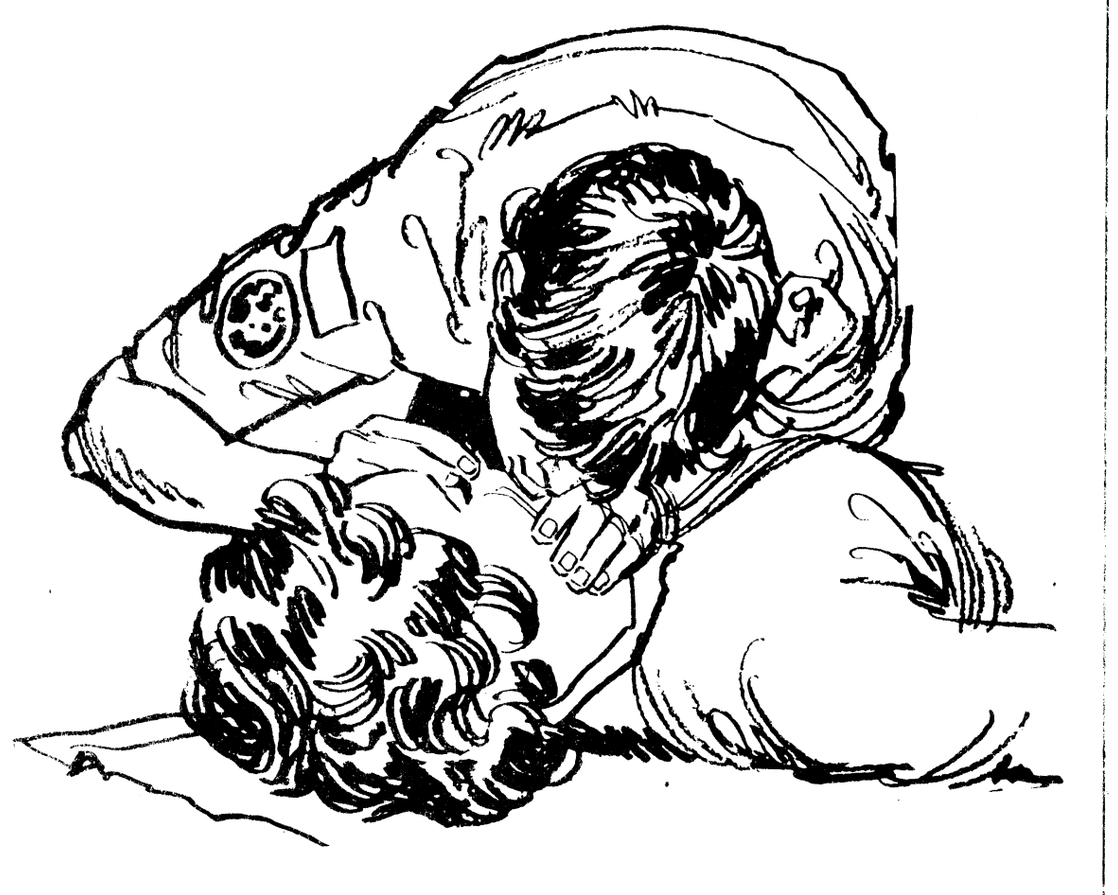
According to Arthur, the brigade's goal is to ensure every soldier can swim. To meet this goal, they contacted Elaine Kendall at the Fort Benning Red Cross, who is a certified Water Safety Instructor. She helped them start a swim program. Unit support and perseverance were the orders of the day and "...our swim program has become an integral part of our physical training program now," Arthur said.

"I started teaching a beginning swimming program for the 10th Mountain for the 3rd Battalion, which was just activating in November 1985," Kendall said. "Myself and three other instructors were teaching 50 soldiers every Saturday for about two hours a session. After that, the unit began to expand the program."

The 10th, according to Arthur, started identifying soldiers who were strong, skilled swimmers and these soldiers became the first to undergo the Red Cross Lifesaving Course, a 21-hour program that is the first step in becoming a Water Safety Instructor. "Our goal was to have our own unit swim instructors," Thomas said.

"I started off with three classes of 20 soldiers each, teaching them water safety, rescue, cardio-pulmonary resuscitation and first aid. Out of these 60 soldiers, eight were good enough to go on to the Water Safety Instructor's Course," Kendall said.

The WSI course teaches students the basic life-saving skills, and also shows students how to teach these and basic swim skills to others, according to Kendall.



The course includes the preparation of lesson plans, education principles as they pertain to water instruction, mock classes with critiques, how to handle and deal with students and written work.

"The 10th can now use their own WSIs to train their non-swimmers," Kendall said. "They have this asset because they used the Red Cross as an information source and then used a lot of unit support to start the program and keep it going."

According to Kendall, she trained 17 WSIs on post, and 10th Mountain has 58-percent of them.

"Every soldier should know how to swim. The 10th Mountain is an example of a unit actively ensuring all it's soldiers can," Kendall said.

A new WSI class begins Tuesday. Anyone interested in the program can call Elaine Kendall at 545-3161.

SPORTS SHORTS

Wanted: bodies for competition

For those who are proud and adventurous, there is still time to train for and compete in the Fourth Annual Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning Body Building Championships scheduled June 6 in the Marshall Auditorium, Building 4, Infantry Hall.

New to this year's competition is the eligibility requirements in the women's division.

The women's division was previously open to active duty military only. But, this year allows greater participation, with the division now extending to active duty or retired dependents, Department of the Army, Non-appropriated Funds and Army Air Force Exchange Services civilian employees.

The men's competition is open to active duty and retired military.

For more information call Speed, Austin, 544-1747.

Army, Armed Forces golf, soccer trials campdates changed

The dates for the 1987 All-Army and Armed Forces Golf and Soccer Trials Camp/Championships have been changed.

The 1987 All-Army Golf Championship dates will begin Aug. 26, at Fort Huachuca, Ariz.

The Armed Forces Golf Championship dates are changed to Sept. 5 through 10, at Naval Air Station, Pensacola, Fla.

The golf dates were changed in order that the four services Golf Teams may compete in the Annual Military PRO—AM Golf Tournament Sept. 11 through 15, at the Avenel Golf and Country Club, Avenel, Md.

Smoker craves cigarette even on her deathbed

BY J.C. BEAN
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Anna was born in West Virginia. She was fortunate in one respect. Mother Nature had tunneled a natural gas pipeline beneath her parents' land. So, they were better off financially than most in the rural town of Clarksburg. Anna was fortunate in another respect. She had terminal cancer but still could not stop smoking more than a pack of cigarettes a day. Anna could afford them.

Anna smoked her first cigarette at her 14th birthday party. At age 18, she and her parents moved to the tidewater area of Virginia. She was smoking at least a pack a day by then.

There, in a large seaport town, she met Bobby. They were married six months later. Anna was widowed that same year, 1940. But, the seeds of childbirth had been sown.

Anna left the tiny apartment she and Bobby had rented and moved back with her mother and father. Their familiar and well-maintained Victorian-style house quickly became a comfort to her. A daughter, Marjorie -- nicknamed Marge, was born seven months after Bobby's interment.

Marge had a happy childhood. She took lessons in dance, piano, and baton, and became the family darling.

Marge and Anna were close, especially since there was no father. She grew up to be a wholesome, intelligent, girl-next-door type. Marge couldn't understand how her mother, an impeccable dresser and vainly concerned about her outward appearance, could be so unconcerned about her body inside. And Marge was confused about something else. Anna shopped only at the finest boutiques in town, spending large amounts of money on her clothes. But they always reeked of stale cigarette smoke. How pointless, Marjorie thought.

It was 1958, and Anne was pleased when Marge married Chris, the well-mannered young man her daughter had gone steady with all through high school. Anna asked them to live in her house. She would need a lot of help with the house and lawn. And there were so many mature shrubs and trees.

The decision for all of them to share the same house was a wise one. The following year, Anna's elderly father died. It was also the year Anna had to be rushed to the local hospital, bleeding profusely through her undergarments.

Anna woke up that afternoon in the recovery room. A nurse was slapping her wrists. "Wake up, Anna, wake up!" she said. Anna's wrists hurt, but there was no comparison to the throbbing pain from the incision.

Anna's doctor sat at the side of her bed the following morning. His words brought more pain -- and shock. "The cancer was in an advanced stage, Anna," he said. "I had to do a colostomy. What that means is, I have to remove about two feet of your colon and surgically join the two parts of the intestine back together. I think we got all of it, Anna, but with this disease, not even the best doctor in the world can be sure. We'll keep an eye on you, though, and our fingers crossed and knees bent. And, Ann, you really should stop smoking."

Anna left the hospital three weeks later. Three years later, she was re-admitted. This time it was for an ileostomy, an operation to create an artifical anus by making an opening from the end of the small intestine through the abdominal wall.

"The nurse," said the doctor, "will show you how to irrigate the intestines, and we'll give you the proper equipment to take home with you. Of course, you'll feel self-conscious about wearing the ileostomy bag at first. But, after a while, you'll adjust and it won't be so awkward. And, Anna, you really must stop smoking."

Anna adjust to the new apparatus, but she could not adjust to being without nicotine. She continued to smoke. A year later, 1963, her first granddaughter was born. They named her Nancy, who, like her mother enjoyed a well-nurtured childhood. Nancy studied ballet, tap, jazz and baton. Unlike her mother, she had no talent for piano.

Three years later, Anna's second granddaughter was born. Named Cynthia, they nicknamed her Cindy. As talented as her older sister, Cindy enjoyed the rhythm of dance, but she, too, could not apply that rhythm to the piano keys.

Although Anna loved both her granddaughters very much, she had a special feeling for Cindy. Because of this, Cindy and Anna were close and did special things together. They shared picnics, school plays and cooking sessions in the large center-aisle kitchen. Cindy always left these baking classes with a white smudge on her nose. She watched Anna's rolling pin so closely that flour seemed always to jump up and landed there. The taste of the bisquits, though, remained unaffected.

Anna's growing cancer, however, did affect how she began to feel. Gray strands began to streak her auburn hair. It seemed as if pounds of flesh had disappeared from her robust torso overnight.

It was during a warm summer night in June 1976 that Anna was rushed to the hospital, coughing and spitting blood. The cancer had spread to the lungs.

She stayed this time. After almost three months, her frail body squirmed in pain as the cancer took its tool. Through all the pain, Anna constantly thought of her granddaughters. She missed seeing them, playing with them. They visited her at the hospital, but their hugs were guarded. Despite a half-dozen plastic tubes connecting hanging clear bags to needles taped to Anna's arms, legs and thighs, she continued to smoke even in her death bed. It was only a matter of time, the doctor had told them.

The phone rang at 2:15 on a warm, late-September afternoon. Marjorie jumped, answering it on the first ring. The doctor said, "Come quickly, your mother will not last another half-hour."

It was happening too fast. No matter how often she had rehearsed this scene in her mind, Marjorie's found her reflexes dulled with fright. She grabbed her purse and keys and was out the door in seconds. Sirens were whirling in her mind.

Anna, attended by nurses and doctors, attempted to rise as Marjorie rushed into the room. En route to the hospital, Marjorie had stopped to call her best friend and neighbor, Paula. "Would you pick up the girls at the schoolbus stop and bring them to the hospital immediately?" Marjorie asked. Paula didn't hesitate to help her friend.

Marjorie's eyes filled with tears as she watched her mother writhe and tug. Anna pulled at the wrist constraints until her skin turned pink and bruised. Anna's face, sheet white, was the same color as her hair, which, it seemed to her daughter, had lost its auburn color overnight. Anna's eyes opened and shut slowly, often in a distant and silent stare. They rolled back in her drooping and wobbly head. Anna moaned pitifully, and Marjorie cried out loud.

Struggling for words, Marjorie approached her mother. From behind she suddenly heard her daughter's sobbing. She turned around. They stood just inside the room. Paula remained outside the doorway. Her eyes, like theirs, were streaming with tears.

The girls had entered the room just as Anna rose to her elbows and struggled for words. "Ci ---ugh. Ci ---ugh," she repeated.

Assured she was calling the younger granddaughter, Cindy, the three of them moved in and bent close to her fading words.

"Ci -- ugh. Ci -- ugh," she coughed. Cindy put her warm hand to Anna's forehead. "I'm here, Grandma," she whispered. "I'm right here. Don't be afraid."

"Ci -- ugh. Ci -- ugh." Anna struggled again. "Cig -- a -- rette. Cig -- uh -- rette. Anna coughed and raised her fingers to her mouth, imitating a drag from an imaginary weed. She inhaled deeply. The air, sounding like that of an air compressor, rushed from her lungs. She shrugged her shoulders, stiffened and then lay still.

It was her last word -- and her last cigarette. She would smoke no more.

dent (spouse or child), $3.93 will be deducted each month from your basic pay. If you have two or more dependents, $7.86 will be deducted monthly. This amount pays part of the total premium cost. The government pays most of the premium for you.

Your premium share is deducted from base pay in the month before it's paid to the insurer. For example, the premium for benefits beginning on Aug. 1, will be deducted in July.

The plan pays the full allowable charges for covered diagnostic and preventive services that are provided by dentist who participate in the dental plan. For other covered services, you pay 20 percent of the cost to a participating dentist. You must pay all charges for services that aren't covered by the plan.

If you use a dentist who doesn't participate in the plan, he or she may charge more than the plan's allowable charges for providing services that are covered. These additional charges are your responsibility.

Also, dentists who don't participate in the plan often ask you to pay the full amount at the time they provide the services. You aren't reimbursed for this expense until your claim is paid by the insurer.

Q: What's covered under the plan?

A: The following preventive, diagnostic and minor emergency care (the dental plan pays full allowable charges:

- routine oral exams (limited to twice in 12 months;
- routine full-mouth dental X-rays (once in 36 months);
- laboratory examinations needed for other covered services;
- teeth cleaning and polishing (twice in 12 months);
- fluoride treatment (twice in 12 months);
- space maintainers;
- minor emergency treatment for pain (as specified in the benefits brochure).

The following restorative servics are covered (you pay 20 percent of the charges to the participating dentists):

- fillings;
- stainless steel or plastic crowns for baby teeth;
- repairs to dentures;

Q: What's NOT covered under the plan?

A: The following services are not covered:

Any services not specifically listed as covered by the dental plan;

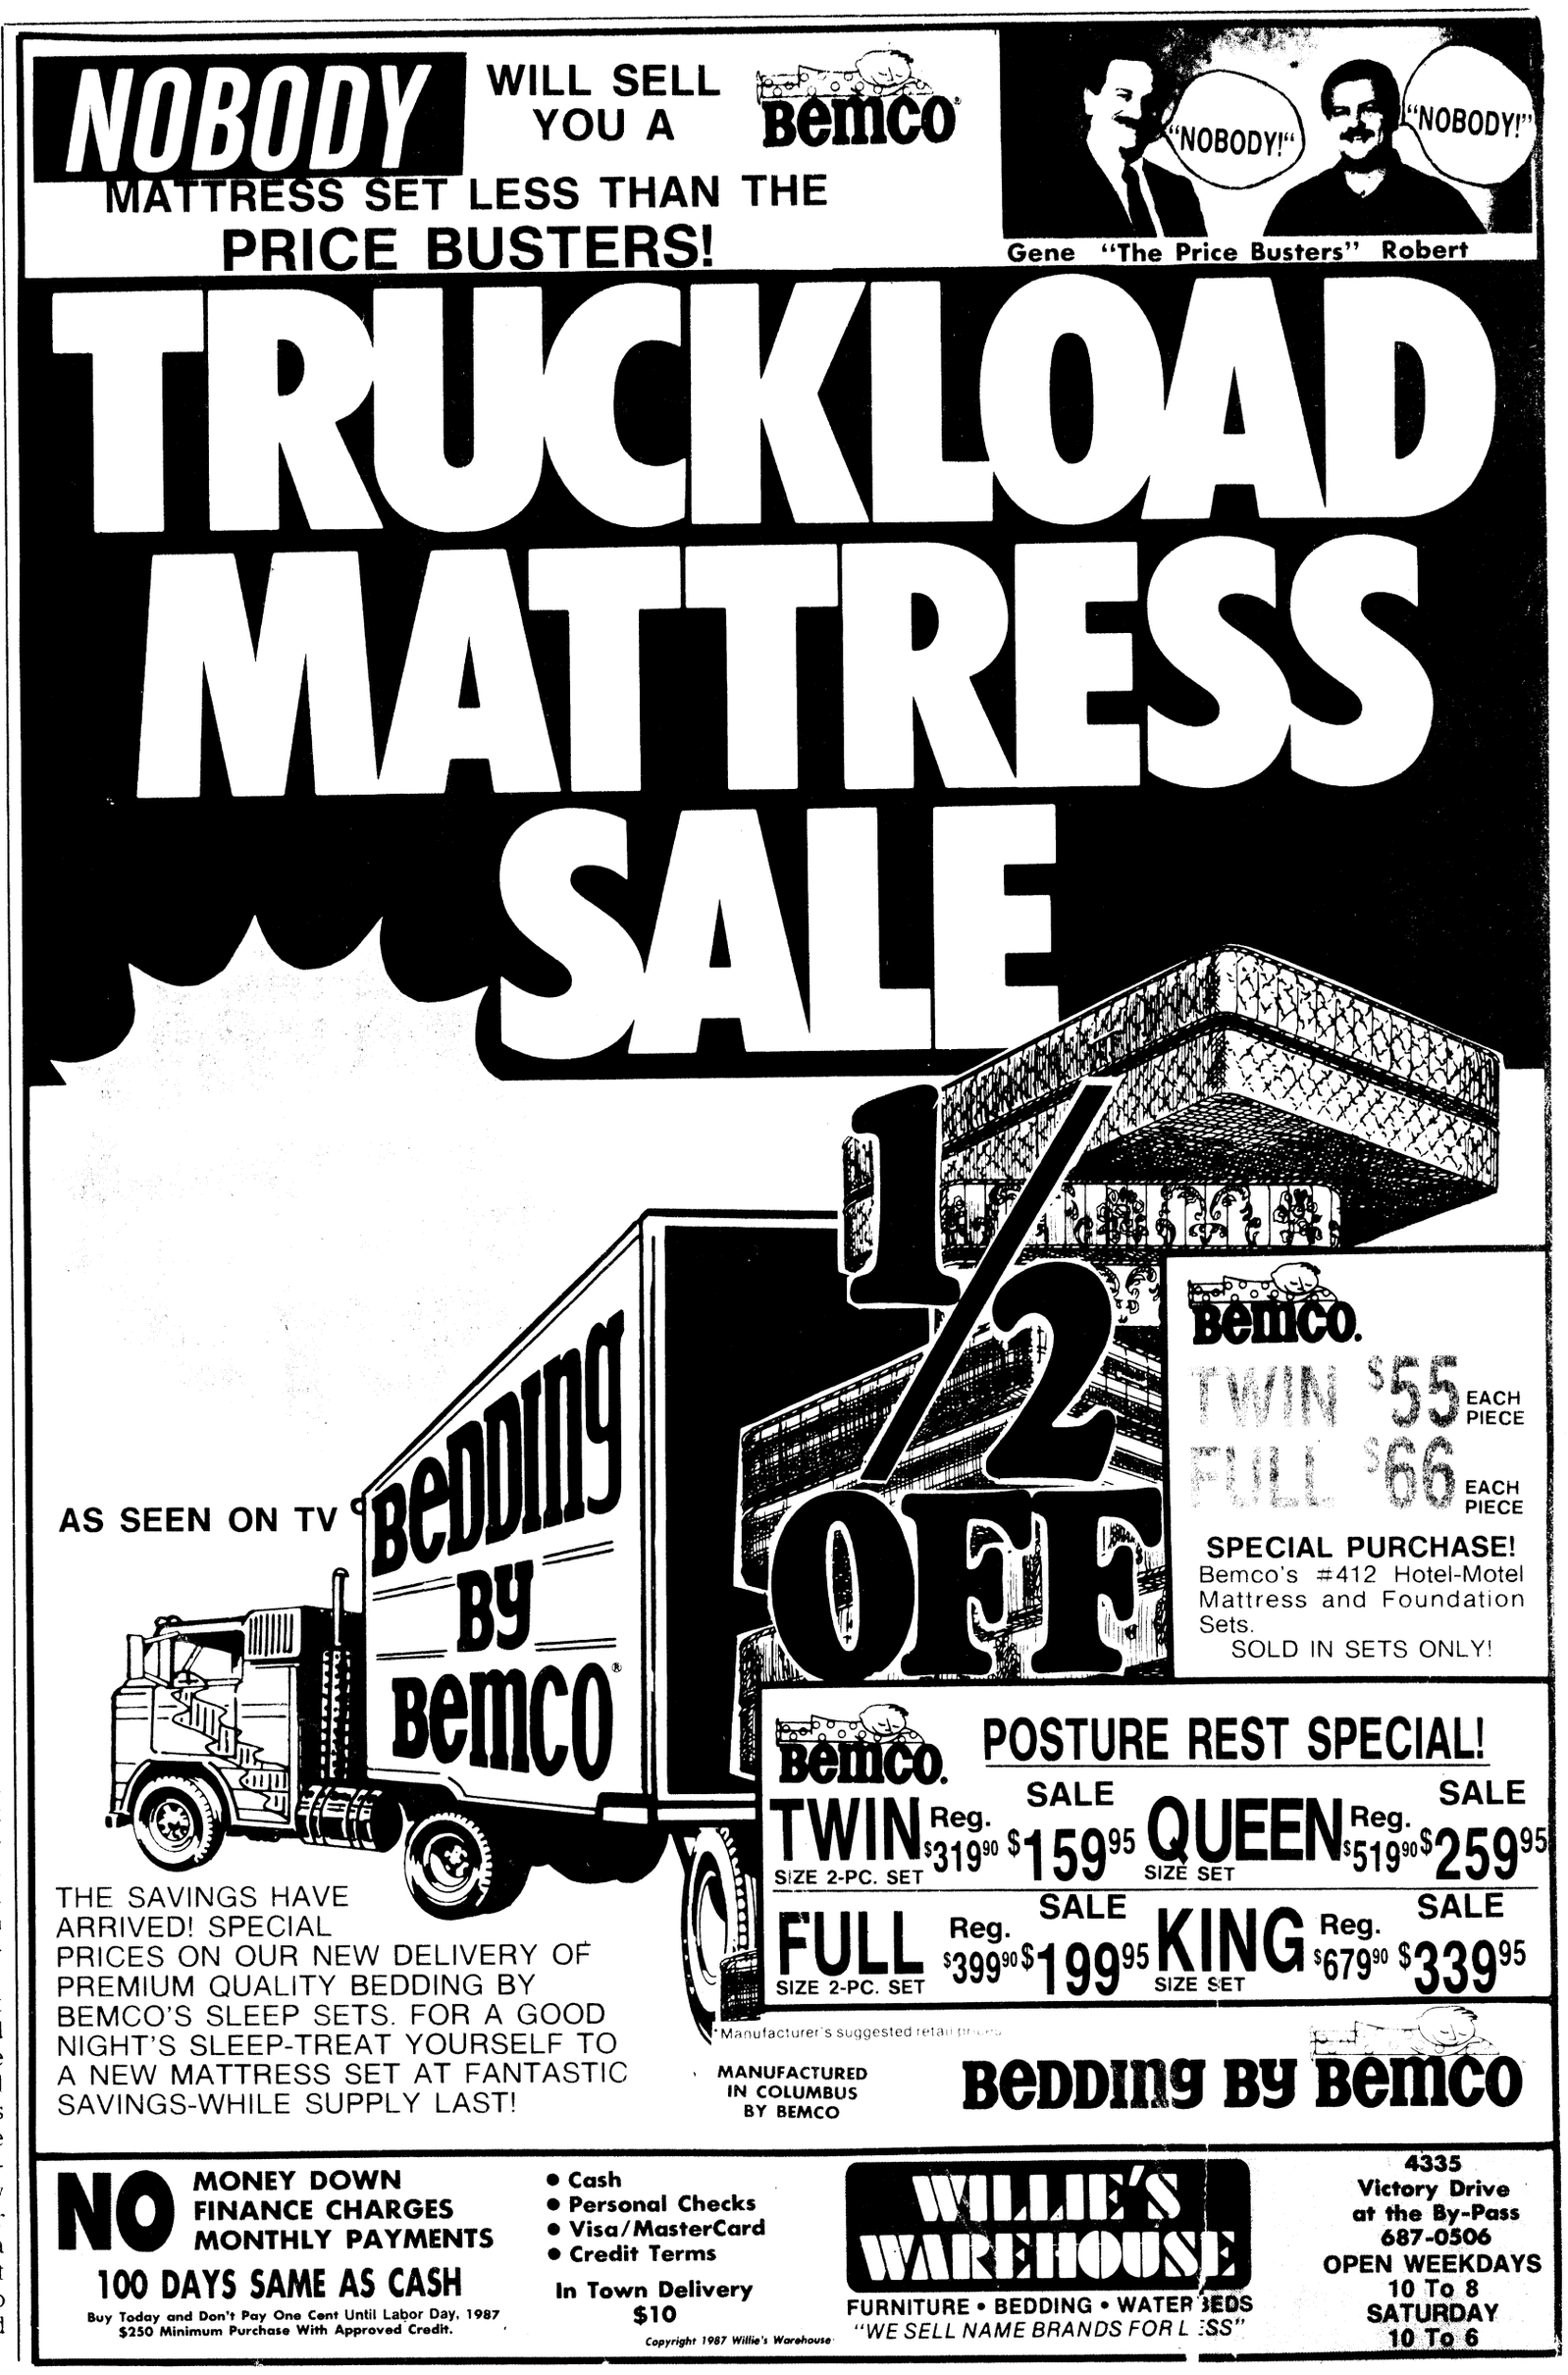
- orthodontia (braces);
- tooth extractions;
- root canals;
- experimental treatments;
- dental services for cosmetic purposes;
- new dentures;
- replacement of lost or stolen dentures;
- procedures that haven't been approved by the American Dental Association;
- correction of malfunctions present since birth;
- services covered by Worker's Compensation;
- porcelain or gold crowns;
- ambulance service;
- sealants;
- dental services for any injury or disease caused by war;
- hospital charges.

Q: When do benefits start?

A: Benefits begin under the dental plan on Aug. 1, 1987. Or (if you're not included in the initial enrollment period), they'll begin on the first day of the month following the month in which you complete the enrollment form and give it to your service representative.

Q: Where can my family get care?

A: The Active-Duty Dependents Dental Insurance plan pays only for covered procedures performed by licensed dentists or dental hygienists who are practicing within the scope of their licenses.



The dental plan has made agreements with many dentists so you'll get the best possible care at the lowest possible cost.

The agreement that the dentists in your area have with the dental plan means that they're "participating" in the plan, and have agreed to accept the dental plan's "allowable" charges for covered services, plus your cost-share, as their full fee for the care they provide under the plan. They will also file the claim for you.

The list of participating dentists is available in the office of your nearest Health Benefits Advisor located at military hospitals or clinics. The list is updated every three months, and chances are excellent that there will be a participating dentist near you.

What about dentists who don't "participate?" These dentists do not agree to accept the dental plan's "allowable charge" as their full fee for the care you get from them. Also, instead of accepting payment from the dental plan, they may bill you directly, and expect you to file the claim with the dental plan for reimbursement.

If you already have a dentist you want to continue to use, find out if he or she participates in the Active-Duty Dependents Dental Insurance Plan. If your dentist is not already participating in the plan, you can encourage participation by letting him or her know of your interest and how he or she may sign up to become a participating dentist. In most states, the dentist may sign up through the insurer's affiliated state organization.

10 troops injured when tree is hit by lightning bolt

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Ten Fort Benning soldiers remained in stable condition Thursday, after suffering burns when lightning struck a tree Wednesday.

The soldiers were training on Malone 18, a range located on Red Arrow Road in the center of the reservation, when a severe weather warning was issued, according to a post spokesman.

Drill sergeants began evacuating the soldiers from the area, and the incident apparently took place during the evacuation.

The official said the incident happened at about 1:10 p.m. Wednesday.

The injured soldiers were evacuated to Martin Army Community Hospital by helicopter, where they were admitted for observation.

The soldiers were initial entry trainees, but the spokesman declined to identify them by name or unit.

He said an investigation is being conducted into the incident.

The command group is reviewing procedures for alerting troops in the field when severe weather conditions exist including those for heat categories, the official said.

However, they note that there is no substitution for common sense and that when thunder storms approach, proper procedures should be taken immediately, with or without a weather warning.

DA announces plans to cut 3,081 officer slots

Army News Service

WASHINGTON -- Fiscal year 1989 Army manning documents will be cut 1,071 commissioned officer and 2,010 warrant officer spaces.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr. decided on the cuts May 14. The congressional mandate for the Department of defense to reduce its officer end strength by 6 percent for fiscal years 1987 through 1989 and the Army's chronic problem of warrant officer overstructure prompted the decisions. Previously, the Secretary of Defense apportioned the Army "share" for fiscal year 1987 at 1.5 percent.

The cuts announced were the first increment of firm Army figures, according to Brig. Gen. C.E. Fernandez, Director of Manpower, Budget and Force Integration in the Office of the Army's Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. Studies have been made concerning officer cuts in fiscal 1987-89 and warrant officer cuts in fiscal 1989 and beyond; however, the chief of staff made no decisions for their implementation. Such decisions, when made, will be consistent with the intent of Congress.

Army personnel officials stressed that these reductions in authorizations will be implemented over time to minimize the effect on soldiers.

No reductions in Army end strength (780,900) are now anticipated; nor does the Army anticipate eliminating any units as a result of these decisions, Fernandez added.

Commissioned officer end strength cuts will be handled through reduced accessions, attrition, and tuning the quality of the force. However, of the 2,010 warrant officer cuts, 371 result from the elimination of eight warrant officer military occupational specialties. The specialties of air traffic control technician (MOS150A); meteorological technician (MOS 201A); Sergeant York air defense artillery (MOS 224D); photo map (MOS 811A); survey (MOS 821A); and general staff administrator (MOS712A) will be eliminated by 1989. No warrant officer will be forced out of the Army, but warrant officers in those specialities will be considered for reclassification.

Four other warrant officer specialties had been considered for elimination. They were order-of-battle technician (MOS 964A); medical equipment technician (MOS 202A); terrain analysis technician (MOS 841A) and legal adminstration technician (MOS 713A). These specialties will be retained: MOS 964A and 713A at reduced levels.

Fernandez said Army authorizations for civilians and enlisted soldiers will replace many of the commissioned and warrant officer authorization cuts.

Army plans to contact patients who received contaminated blood

Army News Service

The Department of Defense announced today that beginning June 1, it will conduct a "look-back" program to trace recipients of blood from donors infected with Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV), which has been linked to AIDS.

The program has been established in conjunction with national civilian blood collection agencies in order to ensure the safety of the blood supply in light of the uncertainty which exists concerning the period of time in which an individual may be infected with HIV without showing any symptoms of the infection. Some individuals who presently test positive for HIV antibodies may have tested negative at the time of their last donation, and others may have given blood before testing began and may have been infectious at that time.

Under the program, recipients of blood from donors who now test positive for HIV will be contacted and offered testing. If the recipients test positive for HIV, they will be offered counseling about the significance of a positive test and measures to reduce the risk of further transmission.

In addition, any DoD health care beneficiary who received blood in a military medical treatment facility between 1977 and 1985 will be offered the opportunity to be tested in a military hospital. The names of recipients who are no longer DoD health care beneficiaries will, whenever possible, be provided to the cognizant state, local or host nation health authorities.

Full slate of events planned for Federal Employees Week

USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Building on the past for a Better Future" is the theme for this year's Federal Employees Week.

The Fort Benning Federal Women's Program Committee has a full schedule of workshops and speakers planned to observe the week, which starts Monday.

The week kicks off with a tour of the Natonal Infantry Museum Monday from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m., and then the program moves to Building 4, Classroom 2, for various seminars.

From 1 to 3 p.m. Monday a Networking Workshop will be conducted by Marquettte McRae Zook, the promotion director for WRBL-TV 3 in Columbus. It is designed to provide an overview on how to form a network to accomplish individual or group goals.

June 9, an Interpersonal Communication Skills Workshop will begin at 9 a.m. and run until 11 a.m. and will provide participants with organizational skills to increase effective communicationin the work place. The facilitator is SFC John Moore.

From 1 to 3 p.m., Mildred Watts, program coordinator for the post handicapped program, will give a presentation designed to identify attitudes and barriers in employment for the physically handicapped.

On Wednesday from 9 to 11 a.m., Emilio Masciovecchio (Mac the Mechanic) will chair a workshop to address various management skills to use in order to accomplish the mission.

That same day, from 1 to 3 p.m., a workshop will focus on Dr. William Glasser's reality therapy on how to take control of your life and will be presented by Yvonne Lisenbigler, the civilian program coordinator.

Rosemary Van-Keuren, the social services representative at DPCA, will conduct a workshop Thursday from 9 to 11 a.m., to provide customer awaeness and understanding in basic financial planning.

Wills and how they make a difference will be conducted from 1 to 3 p.m. by Capt. Jessica Kole of the Staff Judge Advocate's Office, and Linda Pierce, and attorney in Columbus.

New commander excited about job's challenges

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

He leaned back on the sofa, paused for a moment. The anticipation of taking over the top spot in The School Brigade was quite evident as he spoke about his next position.

Col. Kenneth Teel will step into the boots of brigade commander today. But this is not the first time he has been a member of this unit.

Besides his time spent here as a student, he was a commander at the Officer's Candidate School and held a staff position in Building 4.

"I was interviewed for the position at OCS right in this office." he said. "At that time, I never dreamed I would comeback one day as brigade commander."

Well, he is back and is ready to assume command.

He said he thinks the schoolhouse is very important to the army and realizes the importance of his unit's mission.

"I think everyone in the brigade has a tremendous responsibility," he said. "Since we are primarily teachers, we are here to set the example."

Teel's philosophy is 'power down." He believes in putting the authority down to the lowest level that the job can get done effectively.

"I don't like prima donnas," he warned. "But don't get me wrong, I like people to take pride in themselves and to stand out as long as they are doing it for the good of the Army."

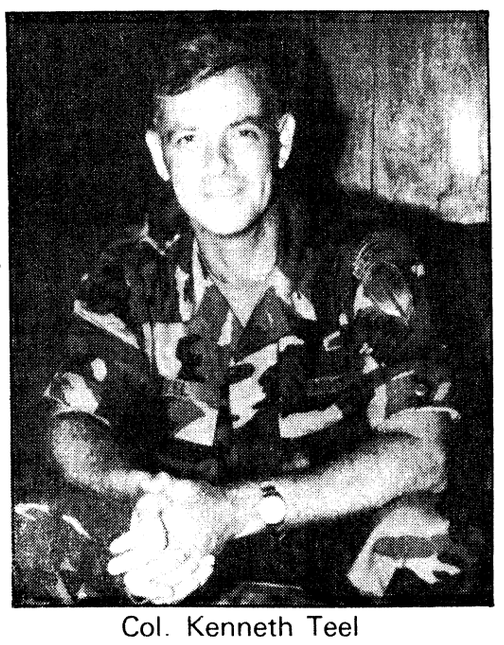
He understands that in his position he can't get into all the details and still have the broad perspective that is needed for command. "I'm not a micro-manager," Teel said,"but I'm not afraid of the details either."

Teel expects his soldiers to be hard workers and to have a good sharp appearance. "I want them to be knowledgeable in their MOS and have high SQT scores," he said. "I like to see troops highly motivated and to show self discipline."

Curious by nature, Teel said that for a while, he will be exploring. "I want to get a pulse on the command and see what makes this organization tick."

Because of the diversity of the command he said his biggest challenge will be finding a commonality between all the battalions.

He considers himself to be athletic, "But I still have to work to do well on my PT test, just like everyone else."



Teel said that the Army's PT standards are reachable and it is very important for everyone to strive to do their best.

"Physical fitness builds morale and espirit d'corps," he said. "I love getting out and pushing myself. That certain kind of fatigue I get from pushing myself feels good."

He said the recent picnic was great, in that the whole brigade gathered together with their families. "I like seeing all the troops together," Teel said, "It's good for them to see they are bigger than themselves."

Teel said he's not a workaholic and doesn't believe in taking his work home with him. "My wife will probably disagree with me on that one though," he said jokingly.

He spoke warmly of his wife of almost 27 years. "We started going steady when we were 13 years old," he said.

Col. Kenneth Teel

Teel said the family is very important and you have to put your work aside and take time with them. "My wife and children are very important to me," he said.

With his daughter married and son attending college, Teel and his wife have time to go off by themselves to sightsee and pursue other interests.

With his new position he will be on jump status, something the new commander is looking forward to.

"The 1st of the 507th already put me through their paces," Teel said. "I was very impressed with the instructors at jump refresher.

"The energy and talent in this organization is incredible," he said. "I'm looking forward to be a part of it."

OPINION

Civilians are vital to post's mission

From the earliest days of our country, dedicated civilians have worked side-by-side with the military to ensure that the principles of our Constitution have remained secure.

As we celebrate the 12th annual Federal Employee's Week June 8 through 12, that long association is reflected in this year's theme, "Building on the Past for a Better Future."

So important has this relationship become that Fort Benning's mission could not be accomplished today without the hard work of the post's federal employees.

Our future as a post and as a country is built upon that solid relationship which is based upon equal employment opportunity and career training for all federal employees.

As we remember the past and look to a bright future, we cannot fail, but honor those who have contributed to our present success.

Edwin H. Burba Jr.
Major General, commanding

Hats off to Faith students

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Five 11-year-old students from Fort Benning's Faith Middle School recently won first place in a state math competition.

The sixth graders won first place in Region One of the Georgia Math League Test. Maurine Shields, Gina M. Barlotta, Christina M. Zacherl, Rebecca Milling and Juli Broussard were the team members whose combined scores won top honors in the competition.

The competition is set up so that each grades compete among themselves. The whole school took a test and the top five finishers were selected to be the Faith School team.

Students from 360 Georgia Schools, representing 15 state school systems, took part in the competition.

The math competition, sponsored by the Georgia Math League, concentrates on problem solving skills, using basic math skills such as multiplying, dividing, adding and subtracting.

In addition to the team effort, Maurine Shields won second place in the individual competition, scoring only one point lower than the first place winner.

Studies show that mathematical skills are ones that are sorely lacking in many students entering the job market.

We think it's quite an achievement for both the students and teachers at Faith School that these five students did so well in state-wide competition.

Declaration of Independence told world Colonies refused to be bullied anymore

OCPA,HQDA

On June 7, 1776, Richard Henry Lee from Virginia, a colleague of Thomas Jefferson, rose to address the assembly of the Continental Congress. He offered a stirring resolution that the "United Colonies, and of right, ought to be free and independent states."

A committee, chairmaned by Thomas Jefferson, was named to frame a suitable declaration for consideration by Congress.

In the world of 1776 — a world in which government was imposed by decree of absolute rulers, a world in which men were not equal, a world in which men had very limited rights and privileges granted at the whim of the ruler who could revoke them just as easily — the principles of Jefferson espoused in the Declaration of Independence were revolutionary even though they included ideas of great political thinkers of the past.

Congress approved the formal Declararation of Independence as drafted by Jefferson and other members of the committee, and in doing so "declared that these United Colonies" were free and independent. The date was July 4, 1776.

Today, we celebrate that announcement as our nation's birthday. While we celebrate our nation's independence, let us also reflect upon our responsibilities as its citizens. Our Founding Fathers announced their freedom in the Declaration of Independence, and then successfully joined the ideas of individual freedom and collective responsibility in the Constitution of the United States.

The Declaration of Independence that Jefferson and his committee produced is a remarkable document. Written in a mere four days, it is one of history's most eloquent expositions on the rights of the individual. It clearly states the birthright of all Americans:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

This was a radical departure from the conventional political thought of the time. And it was a declaration full of danger. Jefferson himself noted that the colonies could not "expect to be translated from depotism to liberty in a featherbed."

The Declaration of Independence suggests this danger and reveals the commitment of the patriots when it states:

"In support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of a Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor."

From its beginning, the United States was conceived in the democratic experience — a people unwilling to accept anything less than freedom, whatever the price. Democracy is the history of the United States, which, unlike other democratic nations, has no pre-democratic history. Through the Declaration of Independence, ours is the first nation in history born into a commitment to the ideals of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Once ratified, the Constitution, drafted 11 years after the Declaration of Independence, explicitly outlines the freedoms to which every American is entitled.

For example, the First Amendment guarantees us a system of government that allows freedom of expression; freedom to worship according to the dictates of our heart; and freedom to petition our government for redress of grievances. The Fourth Amendment states the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures. Although these and other rights guaranteed by the Constitution have often been subject to a wide continuum of interpretation, they are the finest and most explicit exposition of individual rights ever known to mankind.

In addition to individual rights, the Constitution protects the concept of freedom declared in Jefferson's documents in other ways. Under the Constitution, Americans have the blessing of a military controlled by civilians, an enduring concept that has stood as an example to other freedom-loving societies. The Constitution requires a system of checks and balances between the three branches of government. This guarantees us that no branch will achieve too much power and in this way limit our freedom.

With the freedom of our American way of life comes responsibility. Franklin D. Roosevelt emphasized the need for responsibility when he said:

"Democracy, the practice of self-government, is a covenant among free men to respect the rights and liberties of their fellows."

Together, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution have provided the foundation for what America is today amd what it will be tomorrow. With these documents and the courage to sustain them, our forefathers created a unique society predicated upon individual and collective freedom, and the feeling of responsibility toward our fellow man. Throughout our history, soldiers have shown that they take their responsibility as citizens seriously.

They were showing their responsibility on July 4, 1814 when they advanced toward Chippewa under the command of generals Jacob Brown and Winfield Scott; on July 4, 1944, as they fought their way through Northern France from their Normandy beachhead; and on July 4, 1968 in the jungles of Vietnam.

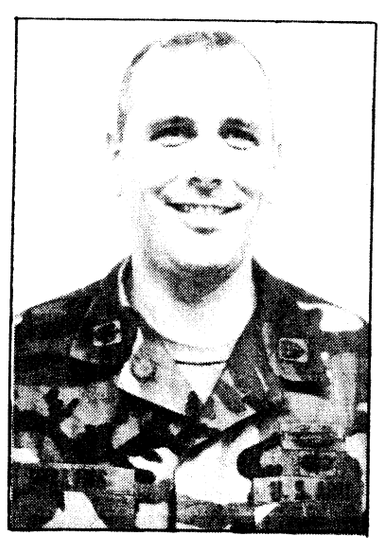
Indeed, soldiering is one of the highest possible forms of responsible citizenship. Today, as we celebrate our independence, let us be thankful for all Americans before us, especially the American soldiers who have preserved independence for us, as we stand ready to preserve it for the generations to come.

Take care during sudden summer storms

Safety Office

The thought of lightning rarely occurs to most people until they are actually faced with a thunderstorm. Did you know lightning kills approximately 150 Americans per year and injuries another 250 more accoding to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration?

Furthermore, researchers have found that most lightning related deaths occur outdoors, with more than 50 percent involving persons involved in outdoor work activities or outdoor recreation.

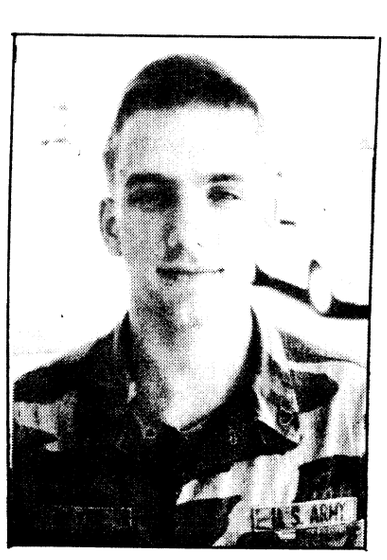


Everyone at one time or another is likely to be caught in a thunderstorm. Here are some major safety precautions if this should happen to you.

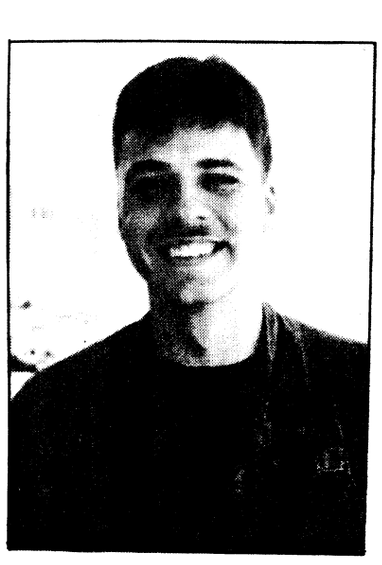
- Avoid carrying golf clubs or umbrellas.
- Do not take cover under or in close proximity to an isolated tree.
- Do not huddle together in a group. Disperse to reduce casualties should lightning strike.
- Get off high ground and seek low ground and depressed areas.
- If no adequate cover is in the immediate vicinity, and a lightning storm is in progress, disperse to low ground and kneel.
- Avoid athletic fields, exposed sheds, railroad tracks, bleachers, overhead wires, clotheslines, and any conductive elevated objects.
- Discontinue outdoor work such as operating a tractor.
- Do not ride golf carts, scooters, motorcycles and bicycles.
- Avoid metal fences, antennas, large masses of metal, plumbing pipes (golf course sprinkler pipes usually run down center of fairway).
- Get off or out of the water if swimming, fishing, skiing or boating.
- Personnel with weapons will place them on the ground, remove steel helmets and take immediate cover.

VARIOUS VOICES / What is the best way to stop DUIs?

SSgt. James Hovermale, Company B, 1/29th Infantry Regiment, - "I think that the people at command level should make soldiers more aware of the consequences, but should also put emphasis on the means available to them should they be caught in that situation. For instance, at Ft. Carson they have a number they can call all year long and get a free ride home. I know that is not available here but there is always some way available to them and the soldiers should be made aware of them.



Lt. Col. James Milling, Company A, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "People have to be concious of the effect alcohol has on one's ability to drive. There is no way in the world we can lock up every soldier in the barracks and not let him drive; so awareness and constant reminders of what can happen are the best bet and by no means should it be taken lightly."



1st Lt. Jack Liston, Headquarters Company, 1/507th PIR, - "I would make the penalties much stiffer and make it that much more difficult for them to operate a motor vehicle after having been convicted. I believe that there should be some way that the insurance company could raise the premium on convicted drivers. Also, I think that there should be a law made making the server partially responsible for that driver. That might make the bartender a little more leary of sending someone off they know has had too much to drink."

SP4 Gasie Hill, 10th Company 1st Battalion The School Brigade, - "From the military view, I think that all the functions that serve alcohol should also provide rides or designate drivers. But from any point of view, what it all boils down to is if you are going to drink don't drive."

PFC Michael Meyer, Company A, 2nd Battalion 10th Mountain Division, - "I don't really think there is a way. People who go out usually know that they are going to drink before they even drive; then after they drink, they blame it on the alcohol. People need to discipline themselves and preplan."

SP4 Robert Hume, Headquarters Company, 1/507th PIR, - "I think that on peak drink nights the Military Police and their civilian counterparts should pull over more people that they suspect have been drinking. The first time they are caught they should be put in jail and when they get out it should be very difficult for them to have the privilege of driving again. I also think bartenders serving people who are underage should be partially responsible.

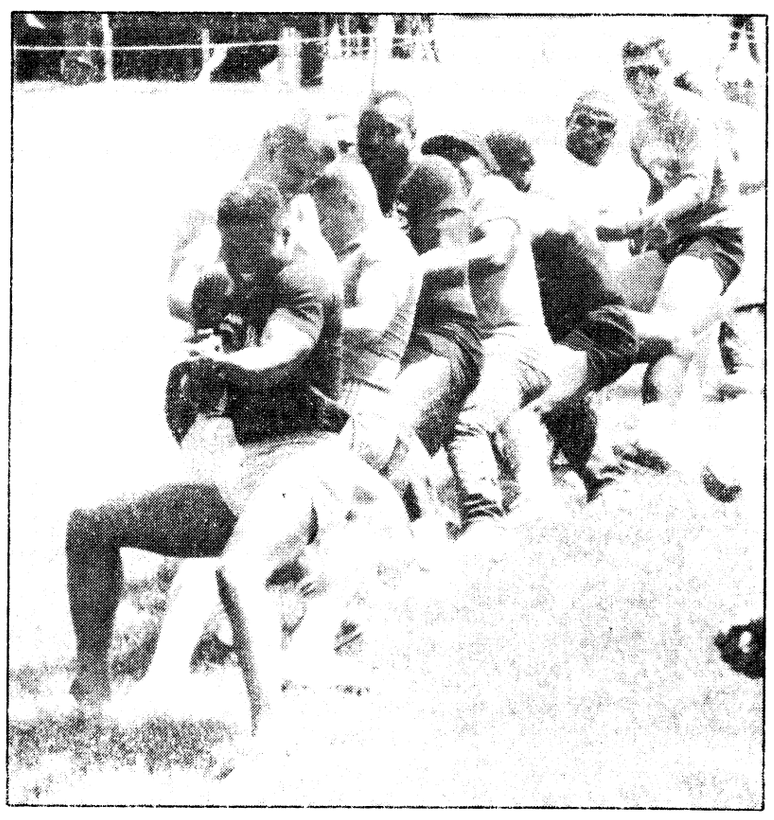
UNIT FUN: School Brigade soldiers take a needed break to spend relaxing time with wives, children



Photos by Ann M. McDonald

Food, food and more food. What would a picnic be with out something to eat. A pair of Officer Candidates feast on some of the tasty morsels available at the affair.

It wouldn't be an event on Fort Benning without a demonstration by the command exibition parachute team, the Silver Wings. Team member SFC James Walker breezes in for a landing on Eubanks Field.

What would a picnic be without a little friendly competition? Members of 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade, give it their all during the tug-o-war in the brigade games. 1st Battalion came out on top, taking first place in two categories.

Recruiting them early? Little trooper, James Radziewicz awaits a jumpmaster pre-inspection before exiting the kiddie jump tower.

Post students win bikes, bonds in energy contest

USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 2,000 students submitted entries in this year's energy slogan and essay contest.

Sponsored by the Energy Management Branch, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, the contest's theme was "Our Energy — Our Future."

Children in kindergarten through the third grade submitted posters in the competition, while those in grades four through eight submitted essays. Entries were judged by members of the post Energy Resource Group.

Col. James I. Daily announced the winners and presented awards at a ceremony May 29.

In his remarks, Daily stressed the important part young people play in using energy wisely on post and challenged the students to use what they are learning now when they become adult leaders and decision makers.

First place winners in each grade won bicycles, while second place finishers received $50 savings bonds. All top finishers also received certificates of achievement.

Every student who took part in the contest received an Energy Ant T-shirt.

The winners were:

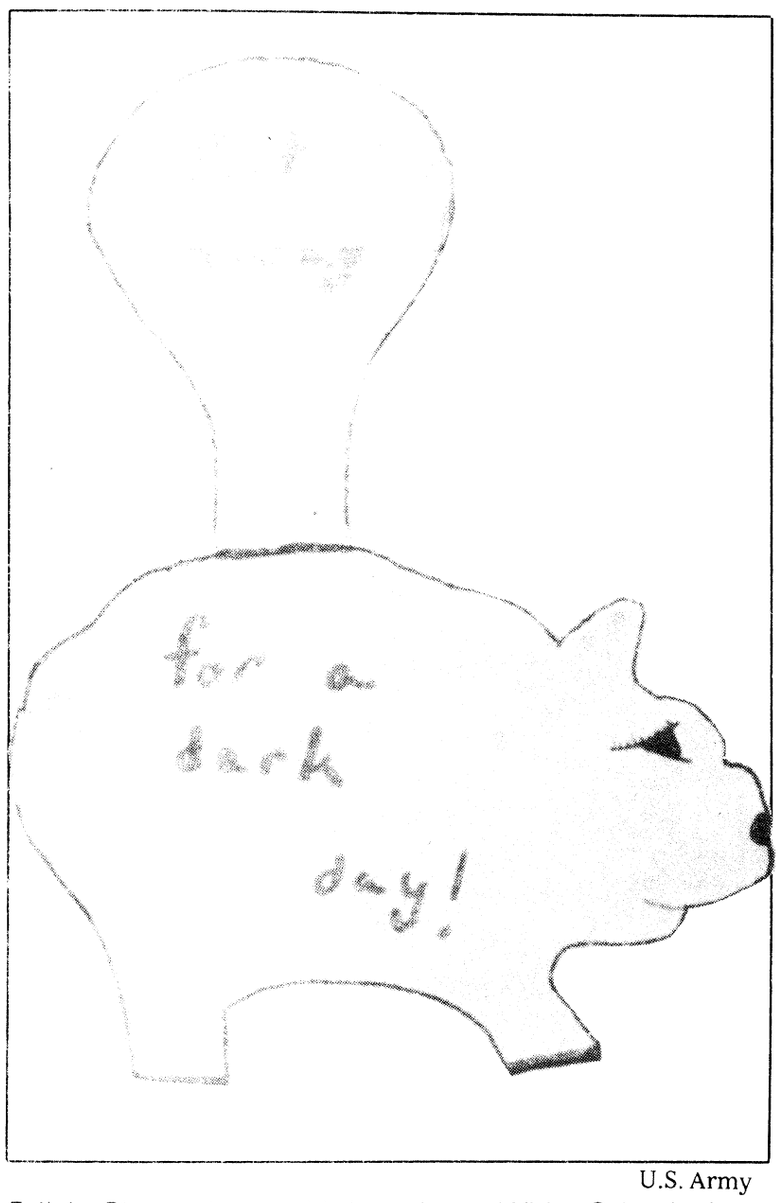
Kindergarten: First place — Ben Campbell, Patch School; second place — Tamika Boykin, McBride School.

First Grade: First place — Angela Shaffer, Wilson School; second place — Joshua Davis, Patch School.

Second Grade: First place — Shatinka Scott, E.A. White School; second place — Doletha LeShane Brown, Wilbur School.

Third Grade: First place — Samuel Dunlap, McBride School; second place — Felicia Shoemaker, E.A. White School.

Fourth Grade: First place — Barrcary Lane, E.A. White School; second place — Eboni Rafus, Loyd School.



Fifth Grade: First place — Tracy George, E.A. White School; second place — Michael Hullett, Loyd School.

Sixth Grade: First place — Gina Barlotta, Faith School; second place — Shannon Becker, Faith School.

Seventh Grade: First place — Stanley Ziegler, Faith School; second place — David Registe, Faith School.

Eighth Grade: First place — Ian Allen, Faith School; second place — Leah Viens, Faith School.

The Energy Management Branch sponsors the contest to further energy awareness.

We must take a look at the past and how different types of energies have been used and misused to decide what the future should be like.

All energy has been classified into four groups: mechanical, atomic or nuclear, chemical and radiant.

Mechanical energy was an important source of energy in the past. Man did many jobs by hand. Most of the energy in the home was mechanical energy. The present shows that man is getting more away from this source of energy. The future should see even less of mechanical energy because man is getting smarter each day, he would rather invent machines to do work for him.

Atomic or nuclear energy is a more recent form of energy. Atomic and nuclear can help us in many weeks but it also can be very dangerous. Scientists must find more ways to use this type of energy in the future.

Chemical energy is another energy that may be a great help in the future, especially if some of the danger can be eliminated.

Radiant energy, which includes electricity, has been misused. People leave on lights when they do not need them, use too many lights for office buildings and waste energy in many other ways.

The future should improve. More people are getting information about how to save energy and how to use it more wisely.

The future may see man using the sun, water and wind more. Laser energy could help more because it is concentrated energy. The sun can be used for more solar power if we could build solar energy plants in countries that get more sunlight than we do, then we could ship it to our country for use.

Water energy can be recycled, which means we can use it longer. The wind as a natural resource is limited in some areas but in the future we may could send that energy from one place to another.

If everyone would stop and think, they will try and save energy for the next group of people to grow up and use.

Energy is the name given to the ability to do work. People often confuse energy, power and force. Force is a push or a pull on an object. Power measures the rate at which work is done.

All human life depends upon the energy in the universe. Most energy on earth comes from the sun. It travels from the sun to the earth in rays that the sun gives off. The sun's rays are needed so that plants can make food. The food that plants make is the food which all the animals in the world depend on in order to live. Animals and people use the energy found in food to work our bodies and muscles.

There are several sources of energy. I'll name about five sources of energy that people use daily: solar, chemical, electrical, mechanical and nuclear.

Solar, the radiant energy given off by the sun, provides heat, light and nearly all other energy that exists on earth.

Chemical energy is produced by chemical changes. Released slowly through food, it powers all living things. Released quickly, chemical energy can launch a rocket.

Electrical energy is usually converted into other forms of energy to do work. One important form is mechanical energy, such as that produced by a drill.

Mechanical energy is the energy that moves machines and other things. The mechanism of a watch moves because of the mechanical energy stored in its spring.

Energy for the future, from my point of view, looks fairly good. The sun gives us a lot of the energy we need. We also receive a lot of other sources of energy that would help us in the future. One good thing is that we can conserve energy. So if in the future, or even in the present, we need energy, we can get it because we have conserved.

In the past few years, we have been trying to conserve energy. Schools have been handing out booklets on saving energy. Students receive pencils, magnets and erasers that are shaped like light bulbs and say "save energy." There have been banners over roads and banners flying behind airplanes saying save energy.

This has done a great deal to make both adults and children conscious of the need to conserve energy. They will turn out almost every light they see. They will turn off almost every faucet that is dripping water and they remind others to do so also. This is super, but are they thinking about another energy that the world is arguing over? Atomic energy?

Some people say that we should not use atomic energy because it has threatened man's existence. Others say we should use it because it generates electricity and propels submarines and surface ships. Some day it might even provide the power to send airplanes through the sky and rockets into outer space. Also, the main advantage of atomic energy for power is a small amount of fuel can produce a tremendous amount of power.

The name atomic energy is not fully correct. Scientists call it nuclear energy because it comes from the nucleus of an atom but many people call it atomic energy.

I hope that more people realize that there is another kind of energy to think about. This energy could help us a great deal or kill us all. I think it is wise to think about what could happen, what might happen, and what is happening. Atomic energy.

come? Energy is what people think will never go away.

If people stop using so much energy, maybe it will last as long as the earth will.

As I told you, people think energy is reusable like water and aluminum. They just don't know the value of energy, it is something they should care for.

Like the DEH says, "Think energy, save watts and therms."

There is only one type of energy we will use for the rest of our life, this is something we don't have to conserve because it gives us the ability to move around. Energy is something everyone should think about, because no one wants a dead world.

I know I don't, because I try to save as much energy as I can so come along with me and help conserve energy; at least help conserve the little bit we have left. So start turning air conditioners off and join the energy busters.

"Think Energy." Help conserve.

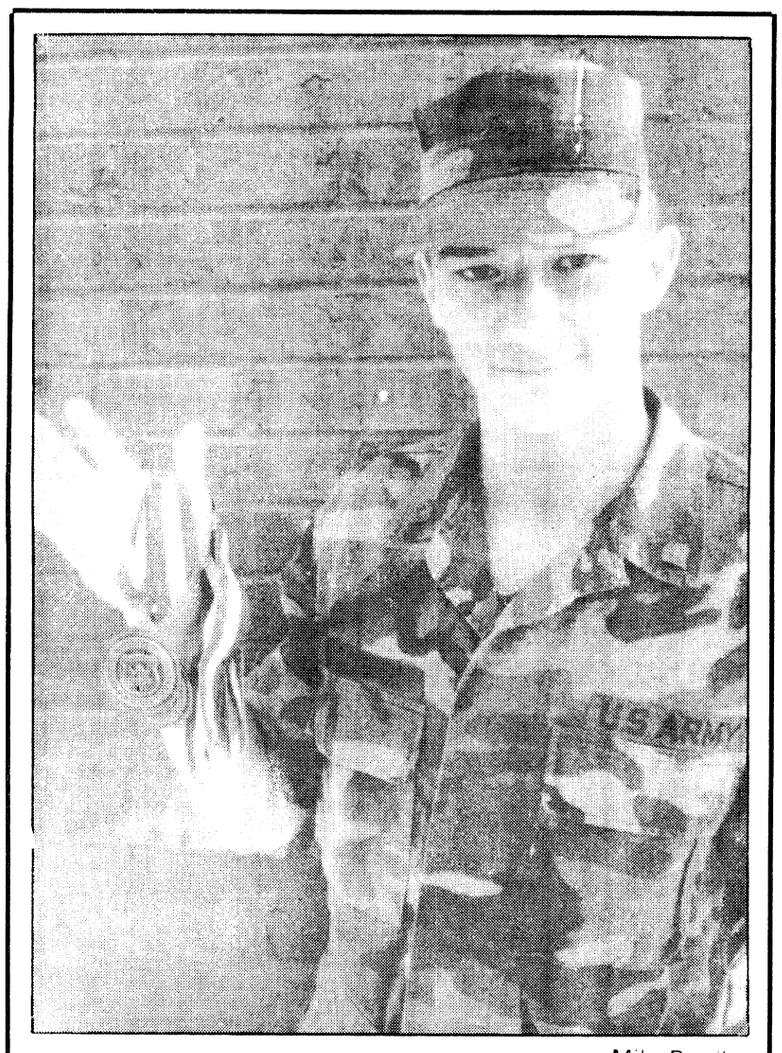
We waste lots of energy. In one day, I see the television on and no one is watching; lights are on and no one is in the room; the car is left on when you run in to get your wallet. Things like this and more affect our future.

We go all over the world to pump oil. We destroy the surroundings. By digging for coal, we kill and destroy our surroundings. Oil will take millions of years to be replaced. When we destroy the land, it will take hundreds, even thousands of years to re-develop the land and for the animals to come back.



We also use nuclear energy. Nuclear factories create fumes that destroy our air. The water near the factory gets hot and kills fish. Everything around us is being destroyed.

Acid rain, smog and more destroy nature. Because we are trying to make energy cheaply, it costs us our nature and our health. I hope that our younger generation will put a stop to this stupidity.

Why don't we use the sun or the wind more? Everyone says that it is too expensive. But we can't put a price on nature and health.

With all these things happening to you and your environment, don't you want to help your children? If you do, don't waste electricity, and complain to your congressmen.

If everyone made a promise to give up something like driving around the block when you could walk, or turning off the lights in the daytime, or even not watch reruns on television, it would make this world better. All these will help our way of life. I know there is something you can do, so try.

Mountain soldier wins novice shooting prize

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

A light infantryman must be, among other things, a crack shot. Sp4 Matt Tower, of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division, recently proved his prowess in the field of shooting.

During the All Army Marksman Championship held at Benning in May, Tower won first place in the M-16 novice 300-meter prone rapid fire event.

"His scores were among the top in the nation and he also placed fifth overall in the novice competition,"said 1st Lt. Mark London, also of Company A."He did very well."

"When I was shooting I felt really good and was confident I had done well," Tower said.

The event he placed number one in involved shooting 20-rounds, with two rounds in two magazines and eight rounds each in two additional magazines. Firing in two 50-second events, he had to engage targets at 300-meters with the added burden of rapidly changing magazines.

The 20-year old from Delaware said he had no previous background in shooting except for his training in Basic Rifle Marksmanship in basic training here at Benning.

"When I first began using the M-16," Tower said, "it just felt right, it just clicked."

It clicked so well for the now-champion shooter that the United States Army Marksmanship Unit invited him to shoot on their team. "Tower was asked, based on his performance, to shoot with the U.S. Army National Trophy Group Rifle team that will participate at the Interservice and National Rifle Championships in July and August," said Tommy Pool, the public affairs officer at the USAMU.

The three-year Army veteran, however, declined."I told my first sergeant that I wanted to stay with the unit. Shooting is fun to me but at the end of this last meet it got to be a bore,"he said. "I'm undecided on whether to stay in the Army or not and I want more experience in the infantry."

Tower, whose job in his unit is Dragon anti-tank gunner, gives unorthodox advice about how to become an accurate marksman.

"The exact principles of shooting don't always help you. It's not necessary to use the book all the time when you're shooting. Just go with whatever works and feels comfortable for you. If it works, don't change it," he said.

ROTC cadets get fired up to tackle Ranger School

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

"So you wanna be a Ranger, huh?"

That's the question that 97 Reserve Officer Training Corps and U.S. Militia Academy cadets are going to be asked for the next 53 days as they go through the U.S. Army Ranger School.

The college juniors began a Pre-Ranger Course Memorial Day to get ready for their Ranger class, which started Monday. This pre-ranger training serves a two-fold purpose, according to Capt. Dale Ziegler, the officer in charge of the ROTC Pre-Ranger Course.

"These guys come out here for one week for two purposes; to get them up to speed with regular Army soldiers going through the Ranger course and to get them from the college mind-set into the Ranger mind-set," Ziegler said.

Pre-ranger concentrates on physical training, the combat water survival swim test and basic infantry patrolling skills, according to Ziegler. Only the best cadets from across the nation are allowed this Ranger School option, which takes the place of Advanced Camp for the ROTC cadets.

"Only the best cadets from universities all over the nation and from West Point can come to Ranger School after their junior year of college," said Maj. Paul Inman, an ROTC liaison officer from Fort Monroe, Va. "Each cadet goes through a very strict screening process, so you have some of the best young men here from ROTC and West Point."

The cadets day begins at 5 a.m. and runs at least until midnight and, according to two of thestudents, everything is done on a timed basis with "You ain't movin' fast enough, Ranger," being the key words.

"These ranger instructors are dogging us on the runs," said Cadet Alfredo Quiros, from Southwest Texas State University. "They say we're only doing three or four miles but I know it's got to be farther."

Quiros said he thought the pre-ranger training was great and that "...it's really preparing me for Ranger School. I guess the toughest part so far is having to eat each meal in three minutes or less and the mental strain," he said.

Guy Dewees, from Lock Haven University in Pennsylvania, agreed with Quiros. "I want to branch infantry and this course will really help me in my career. I guess the runs and the mental strain are the toughest. But we've only got 54 more days," he said, grinning.

Inman said the main problem most of the students will have is operating in a stressful environment.

"The mental strain put on a student in Ranger School is incredibly heavy," Inman said. "Many of these young men have been through Airborne School but that in no way prepares them for ranger training. Stress will be the main problem they'll have to deal with."

Learning centers going high tech; acquiring interactive video discs

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Remember those Training Extension Courses you used to go and check out of the battalion TEC learning center?

You'd take your TEC audio-visual lesson to the Beseler projector and watch, listen and compute an 81-mm mortar registration mission or learn how to repair a thrown track on an M113 Armor Personnel Carrier. Well, TEC audio visual is transitioning into a whole new system called Interactive Video Disc.

According to Roy Burns, the chief of the Directorate of Training and Doctrine's TEC Branch, "The transition from TEC audio-visual material has already begun to interactive video disc."

Units will continue to use and maintain their TEC libraries, according to Burns, as long as the TEC material is still doctrinally correct. "But when revision of audiovisual material is necessary, it will be redesigned using interactive video disc," he said.

Interactive video disc is part of a system called the Electronic Information Delivery System. According to an article in "Army Trainer Magazine," EIDS consists of a microcomputer, a video monitor and a videodisc player. Like a video tape, the interactive video disc records both audio and visual information. Also included in the system are a keypad and lightpen.

According to Burns, using EIDS hardware with interactive video disc courseware, soldiers can actively interact with the IVD using the EIDS and the keypad and lightpen.

"Say a soldier is using an IVD on how to disassemble the M-16 rifle," said Burns. "The course might ask the student certain questions and the student answers using either the lightpen or the keypad. If a correct answer is registered, then the lesson moves on. If the student answers incorrectly, then the courseware is programmed to go back to the appropriate teaching sequence and re-teach the student. TEC couldn't do that."

A TEC lesson, which is on a super 8-mm film cartridge and audio cassette, also can't store as much information as an IVD can.

"A single, 12-inch vidodisc can store up to 108,000 video frames with increased audio time. A TEC audio visual lesson could only store 3,600 video frames of information on its super-8 film cartridge," said Nelson McGahee, a training specialist in TEC Branch. A more vivid example of an IVD's storage capability is given by Don Sayers, also a training specialist in TEC. "A single, 12-inch IVD can hold all the information in the Library of Congress," he said.

Training and Doctrine Command service schools, such as the Infantry School here at Benning, are already contracting out for production of IVD courseware. This courseware, along with EIDS, will be used for initial resident training in the schools and will soon be in the field for soldier use in sustainment and transition training of soldier and military occupational specialty skills, according to the Training Support Center at Fort Eustis, Va.

"As far as the EIDS goes, Benning will receive its first units early in in fiscal year 1988," Sayers said.

"Besides having more storage capability and being more 'user friendly,' EIDS with IVD also speeds up the learning process, is low cost, and very compact," said McGahee. "It also provides self-paced learning and individualized learning paths."

Building good nutrition

Healthy foods on the menu at dining halls

By Thaddeus Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

"Hey, Sgt. Jones. What do you say we grab a bite to eat at the dining facility. I don't know what they are having, but I know it will be squared away."

The word is fast getting around Fort Benning that good, healthy food is available for the soldier. Thanks to a post agency, whose primary concern is what the troops eat, the word is getting out."

The Nutrition Care Division, Martin Army Community Hospital, serves as a consultant to educate unit commanders on the appropriate nutritional and dietary standards for the military family.

"Unit commanders are responsible for providing readily accessible information regarding nutrition, to food service personnel and promote nutrition education for the troops," said 1LT Nancy Tingstad, Clinical Dietitian, MACH.

Tingstad prepares these commanders by first educating them on a proper nutrition program.

With an hour presentation, Tingstad has discussed and reviewed "the seven dietary guidelines for healthy Americans".

"To ensure that we become more healthy americans," Tingstad said, "individuals must eat a variety of foods, maintain desirable weight, avoid too much fat, saturated fat and cholesterol, eat foods with adequate starch and fiber, avoid too much sugar, avoid too much sodium, and if you drink alcohol, do so in moderation."

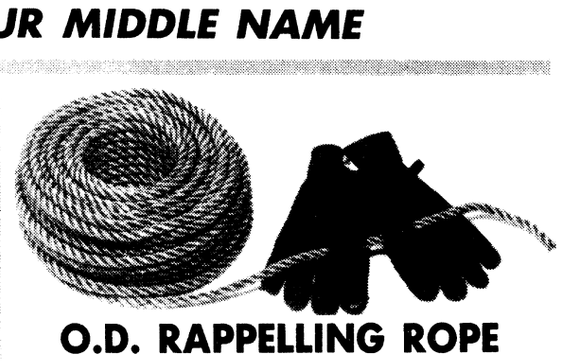
In an effort to motivate the consumption of a nutritionally adequate diet, a Menu board is set up at each dining facility, outlining various nutritional meals.

In the MACH cafeteria, sample trays are displayed, indicating the recomended servings which provide 500-calorie meals during breakfast, lunch and dinner.

Classes provided by the Nutrition Care Division are also available to other activities.

"I have given the presentation to the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, Non-commissioned officers Development Course, and many others," Tingstad said. "It's a great asset to all staff training."

Those who desire more information on nutrition education opportunities should contact 1Lt. Nancy Tingstad, 544-1542.



Elizabeth Charles a diet technician at Martin Army Community Hospital prepares a lunch tray which displays a 500-calorie meal.

Five troops earn Expert Field Medical Badge

Thad Roberson

Maj. Bobbilynn Hawkins (left) and Capt. Dwight Thompson (right) lead the litter carry through 'enemy' territory.

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

When it all began there were hundreds, then there were but five.

Recent testing for the Expert Field Medical Badge began here with almost 200 soldiers from the southeast being grilled in the skills of a combat medic.

After the written test, that number had dwindled considerably.

The Land Navigation Course also took a great number of participants out of the running and left only seven candidates to face the final obstacles.

Two of the greatest physical obstacles were the litter obstacle course and the 12-mile forced road march.

Seven candidates went through the 800-meter obstacle course, carrying an injured soldier through simulated enemy fire, traveling over high walls, below barbed wire, down hill, up hill and through water.

"The course is really tough," said 1st Lt. Trevor Johnson, test administrator. "Anything less than 100 percent will not pass the course."

The seven who endured the litter obstacle course were: Maj. Bobbilynn Hawkins and Capt. Edward Schowalter, Martin Army Community Hospital; 2nd Lt. Harry M. Hays, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 43rd Engineers, 36th Engineer Group; Capt. Dwight Thompson, MACH; 2nd Lt. Henry K. Schenck, MEDDAC, Fort Gordon, Ga.; 2nd Lt. Dennis L. Breens and 1st Lt. Vince C. Carnazza, Fort Rucker, Ala.

The seven candidates went on to the cardiopulmonary-resuscitation test and the 12-mile road march.

Thompson was able to stick in the race until hitting the CPR test. It was the 12-mile road march that forced Hawkins to the sidelines.

The five remaining candidates endured and today proudly display the EFMB on their uniforms.

Training aids now must be requested

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — In fiscal year 1988, units will not receive soldier's manuals, trainer's guides and job books unless they have established an account and ordered each required soldier training publication on DA Form 12-11D-R.

Units will no longer automatically receive STPs through the PUSH distribution system. Conversion to the pinpoint system within the next few months, will shut off this automatic supply, and indicated STP requirements will not receive the STPs they need to support the individual training of their soldiers and the Individual Training Evaluation Program.

Units should check with their publications account clerks to avoid STP distribution problems. DA Pam 310-10 and DA Circular 310-86-2 (DA 12-Series Form) provide publications personnel with requirements for establishing accounts and requisitioning publications. For emergency STP distribution, clerks may call the US Army AG Publications Center, Baltimore, Md., at AUTOVON 584-2533.

For more information on the pinpint system, call SSgt. Antoinette Thigpen or SSgt. Dale Grayson at the U.S. Army Training Support Center, Fort Eustis, Va., AUTOVON 927-4668.

10th Mtn.

They took the "mountain back to the mountain."

That's how Lt. Col. Richard Lane described a recent field training exercise of the 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division.

The battalion spent May 6 through 22 at Camp Hale, Colo., for mountain training.

Lane, commander of the battalion, said the 10th Mountain Division originally began at Camp Hale.

There were two reasons for going to train in Colorado, said Capt. Todd Foreman, battalion S-1.

"First, we wanted to get some mountain training in that we couldn't get at Benning. We did a lot of rappeling, one and two rope bridges, and road marches up to 12,000 feet to acclimate our soldiers to the high altitudes," he said.

The second reason they went there was to reestablish ties with soldiers who had previously served with the 10th during World War II.

While in Colorado, the soldiers of the 3rd Battalion attended a special memorial service honoring past division soldiers who died in combat during World War II. The service gave the new mountain soldiers a chance to meet the early mountaineers, Foreman said.

The original 10th Mountain Division distinguished itself in action during the Italian Campaign in World War II. In one action, their efforts allowed the Allies to break through the Gothic Line, which got a northern offensive going again.

The 3rd Battalion soldiers also did a lot of rock climbing, practiced mountain rescue techniques, underwent live-fire training and "fought" against part of Fort Carson's 3rd Brigade. — Mike Brazile, Bayonet staff writer

A Troop, 16th Cavalry, was at Carmouchee Range May 27th and 28th for gunnery practice. But rather than the blast and recoil of 105mm tank guns, there was only the pop of flash simulators. Instead of live ammunition, the tanks were using the Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System (MILES) lasers to down the targets.

"This system allows the men to work together as a crew without an expensive round being used and it gets them use to the MILES equipment," said Master Gunner Sgt. 1st Class Clarence C. Woods. "It will probably increase gunnery scores, and also prepare us for the MILES battles at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.

The MILES gunnery, a new technique for A/15th Cavalry, offers unique training opportunities. The tanks carry no live ammunition, so there are fewer safety restriction. Tank commanders can back up to re-engage targets or even bring other tanks down range for sensing. Range personnel can even work on targets while the tanks are "firing."

"This training will make a lot of difference at gunnery," said Staff Sgt. James I. Jacobs, a tank commander with the Cavalry Troop. "The crew has a chance to work together and learn to perform as a team."

This teamwork was put to the test this week as the A Troop, 16th Cavalry deployed to Hastings Range for live gunnery. — Kevin J. Howerton, 197th Infantry Brigade Corespondent

A Family Information Fair was recently held at Kelley Hill Recreation Center for 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor. In all, approximately 300 soldiers and family members attended the festivities.

The Fair was designed to show the soldier and family members that the Army has a wide variety of programs to offer. Some of the participants were Better Business Bureau, Army and Air Force Exchange Services, and the Army Education Center, along with 16 other director of personnel and community activity agencies, including two other off-post agencies.

A family member stated, "I never knew so much was offered to the dependents on Fort Benning; our family will definitely give some of these programs a second look."

Sometimes forgot these support agencies make the Army a soldier's strong ally. The Army has a host of programs and information just waiting to be tapped. Such as a trip to Destin, Fla., where a soldier and his family can relax in the sun and splash in the Gulf of Mexico, fully taking advantage of reduced military rates.

"If this fair can help just one soldier or his dependents, then I feel the fair was a total success and beneficial to all that attended," said Lt. Col. David T. Merriam, 2/69th Battalion commander.

Lt. Col. Merriam continued, "I believe everyone fully enjoyed themselves, particularly after eating the first class steak and shrimp dinner prepared by Sgt. 1st Class Francis L. Hardy, the dining facility manager."

As the evening came to a close, it appeared that not only did the Family Fair share great information, but also good food. — George Mingee and Terry Baesl, 197th Brigade Correspondents

The blast rocked through the protective shelter. "All-clear, all-clear," shouted the lieutenant as the men scrambled out and saw a gray cloud of dust floating overhead. They rushed over the hill, where they had placed charges on a mock bridge a few minutes before and found...nothing.

The NCO's from the Scout platoon, Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, had done their job right. They had taught the group of about 20 soldiers from their battalion how to safely demolish structures to prevent the enemy from using them.

The soldiers from the 3/7 Infantry were given classes during the mornings of May 27 and 28 on proper handling and usage of TNT, C-4 and Claymore anti-personal mines. On the afternnon of the 28th, they conducted practical exercises by destroying mock buildings, bridges, steel structures and troop targets.

The techniques learned at the Brown range included electrical and non-electrical detonating devices. The soldiers also learned about a method called an abatis, which is blocking roads by falling trees with explosives.

By the end of the day, when all the dust had settled and all the objectives had been destroyed, the soldiers from the 3/7 Infantry left the range with confidence in their new fighting skills. — Kevin J. Howerton, 197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

USARSA soldier wins NCO of quarter

"Competition for soldier or non-commissioned officer of the quarter year helps mold better leaders," said Sgt. 1st Class Rafael Colondres, Fort Benning's recently selected NCO of the Quarter.

Colondres is an instructor in the patrolling division, Department of Combat Operations, U.S. Army School of the Americas.

"The competition not only motivates our subordinates, but it helps them in career progression and in gaining promotion points," Colondres said peering out through dark, deep-set eyes.

Colondres, 35, is a native of Ponce, Puerto Rico, where he earned an associate degree in civil engineering. The 10-year Army veteran commented on the NCO of the Quarter selection process.

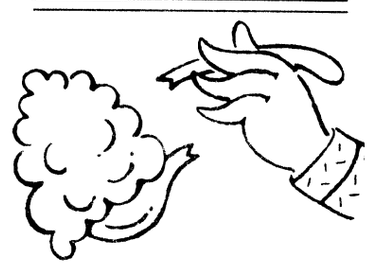
"When eight to 10 competitors go before that selection board, you know it's going to be tough, especially knowing the competitors are just as sharp if not sharper, than you," he said, adding, "The board members are extremely keen and ask some excellent questions — they make you think really hard..."

According to Colondres, some of the subjects covered by the board members included the Uniform Code of Military Justice, drill and ceremonies, leadership and current events.

Colondres attributes his success on having been selected as NCO of the Quarter to an initial selection board held at USARSA by Command Sgt. Maj. David Magdaleno. "We're not given an information sheet — better known as a 'poop sheet' — to prepare for a board. It's more an outline given by the USARSA board covering such subjects as field manuals, Army regulations, current events and similar military-related things," Colondres said. "I supplemented this by reading newspapers, watching television newscasts and reading the 'Bayonet,'" he said.

Colondres is no stranger to this type of competition. He was selected as 'soldier of the month' while assigned to the 1st Ranger Battalion at Fort Stewart, Ga., in 1977. In 1979, Colondres was selected as NCO of the Quarter in Fort Benning's Ranger Department.

Colondres emphasized a great part of this military success comes from his wife, Barbara, and 6-year old daughter, Stephanie. "A family's support is an integral part of every soldier's success," he said.



Colondres spends his free time reading the works of authors Ernest Hemingway and John Steinbeck. — Marco Morales, USARSA Correspondent

Army announces new top sergeant

Army News Service

WASHINGTON -- The Army's top enlisted position will go to CSM Julius W. Gates, who succeeds the current sergeant major of the Army, Glen E. Morrell, upon the latter's retirement June 30.

Gates, currently serving in Korea as the Eighth U.S. Army's command sergeant major, was chosen for the Pentagon post from a number of soldiers nominated by commanders throughout the Army.

The 45-year-old veteran with 28 years of active service saw two tours in Vietnam and three tours in Germany. He served as command sergeant major of the 2d Battalion, 50th Infantry; 2d Armored Division (Forward); and 3d Infantry Division in Germany as well as in that capacity with the U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy at Fort Bliss, texas.

His decorations and awards include the Bronze Star Medal, Purple Heart, Meritorious Service Medal (five times), Air Medal, Army Commendation Medal (four times), Army Achievement Medal, Combat Infantryman Badge and Master Parachutist Badge.

In his new duties, Gates will serve with the Army chief of staff in Washington, acting as the senior enlisted advisor on matters pertaining to enlisted soldiers.

A native of Chapel Hill, N.C., Gates has a wife and two children.

Latchkey kids

Have a plan of action for children who are unsupervised at home

By Rudi Williams, USA
American Forces Information Service

To Betsy Shelsby, wearing a "housekey necklace" is a badge of identification for "latchkey children," which could lead to serious problems-injury, kidnap, physical or sexual abuse or worse.

"I'm uncomfortable about kids carrying keys around their neck. They could get caught in playground equipment and injure themselves," said Shelsby, a latchkey children specialist with the Army's Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va.

But her paramount concern is that a stranger might see the housekey and try to coax the child into a car and either kidnap or sexually abuse the child.

"Tell the children when they get off the bus, they should never go any place with a stranger, even if the stranger calls the child by name. Some say, 'Hi, I'm so-and-so, come with me, your mom's been hurt,' all kinds of stories."

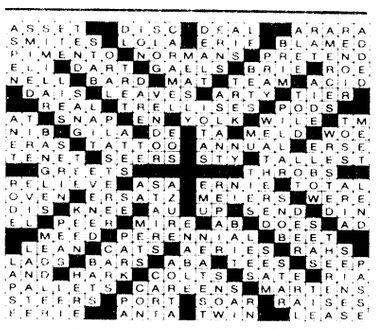
"It (the key) needs to go into something where it can't be seen and won't get lost," said Shelsby, a former child-care specialist with the Fairfax County, Va., office for children. "Children lose sweaters and jackets, but they don't normally lose their shoes. Some shoes are made with pockets. Perhaps the safest way would be to sew an extra pocket inside their clothing.

Have all emergency phone numbers on a list by the telephone," advised Shelsby. "Have a list of emergency procedures—what to do if there is a fire in the kitchen, what to do when the power goes off, what to do if a stranger tries to get into the house. Sometimes the kids just panic."

Parents should also leave a chart outlining simple first-aid techniques and instruction.

Since most latchkey children walk or ride buses to and from school, parents should prepare a survival kit for emergencies between home and school, according to the experts. The kit should include an identification card that contains the child's name, address, home phone number and parents' work numbers.

Enough change should be in the survival kit for emergency phone calls and, in some cases, money for bus or cab fare home.



The survival kit should be placed where it is always accessible to the child. Some parents tape it to the inside of their child's coat pocket.

Studies of latchkey children have shown that most spend their time watching television and eating. But Shelsby has other solutions for fighting boredom and loneliness.

"Write a letter to friends, set the table for dinner, do a job around the house that will surprise mom or dad, do some exercises, do a crossword puzzle, make up a silly song, read a book,

Soldier convicted for selling LSD

Staff Judge Advocate

Spec. 4 Jose A. Jorge of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was convicted by a general court-martial May 26 for wrongful distribution of lysergic acid diethylamide, more commonly known as LSD.

Jorge sold 100 hits of LSD to a fellow soldier in Columbus during November 1986. Then, in February, Jorge sold 100 hits of LSD to an undercover CID agent on two separate occasions. When he was apprehended, Jorge had over 200 additional hits of LSD in his possession.

As a hallucinogenic drug, LSD poses an especially grave threat to soldiers who use it and to the military. LSD effects a person's central nervous system, causing the person's senses of direction, distance and time to become grossly distorted. People who operate vehicles or who handle weapons while under the influence of LSD are likely to have accidents with life-endangering consequences.

Evidence was introduced at Jorge's trial about a Fort Benning soldier who was in an automobile accident while driving under the influence of LSD sold by Jorge. The soldier's car left the roadway at an extremely high rate of speed, flipped end over end and skidded over 400 feet before finally coming to a rest.

The soldier was so heavily intoxicated by the LSD that he did not realize he had been in an accident. He wandered from the scene and, when the effects of the LSD finally wore off, he came to his senses and found himself in an abandoned building wondering where he was and how he had gotten there.

As frightening as the immediate effects of LSD may sound, of even greater concern are the long-term effect of the drug. Long after the LSD has been eliminated from a user's body, the user may experience "flashbacks," which are fragmentary recurrences of the effects of the drug.

It is impossible to predict when someone who has used LSD will experience a flashback. It is easy to see why LSD is such a dangerous drug in the military environment, where live ammunition and heavy equipment are so frequently handled by soldiers.

Jorge was sentenced by Col. Sebert Trail, the military judge, to be reduced to the grade of E1, to forfeit all pay and allowances, to be confined at hard labor for five years and to be discharged from the service with a dishonorable discharge. Jorge will begin serving his sentence at the Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth after final disposition of other pending charges.

Pvt. Curtis M. Benthall of Company B, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, was convicted Thursday by a general court-martial of four specifications of larceny and one specification of desertion. He was sentenced to total forfeitures of all pay and allowances and to be confined at hard labor for four years.

Benthall was a trainee at Company B in October, when he stole $160 worth of Traveler's checks from a fellow trainee's wall locker. Later that same day, while performing duties as a fireguard, Benthall noticed a key hanging from a chain around a sleeping soldier's neck; he then removed the key from the chain and used it to open the soldier's wall locker, and took the $65 he found there.

These larcenies committed by Benthall were discovered and reported by the victims, but Benthall was not immediately identified as the thief. In December, Benthall broke into two more wall lockers while the rest of the members of his platoon were on a field training exercise. He stole $300 in traveler's checks from one of the lockers and various items of personal property worth about $275 from the other. When the soldiers returned from the field, they reported the offenses and Benthall was identified as a suspect.

While the investigation was underway, Benthall deserted his unit. He stayed gone until April 28, when he was apprehended in New Jersey by civil authorities as a deserter. He was returned to Fort Benning under military police escort to stand trial for both the desertion and the larcenies.

Benthall was only 18 years old when he committed these offenses. In addition to the punishments listed above, Benthall was sentence to be dishonorably discharged from the Army.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Provost Marshal

Last year, over a billion dollars were lost due to burglaries or housebreakings nationwide, with over two million homes victimized. Statistics also show that one out of every 40 homes in the United States will be burglarized.

In a five-year study conducted in Washington, D.C., it was determined that 75-percent of all break-ins happened during the day, between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Fort Benning residents should be aware of these crimes, and should take preventative measures. These include recording serial numbers of personal property and marking property to be inventoried. When you go on a trip or vacation, contact the Military Police and request a house check while you are away. This will include a periodic check to ensure windows and doors are locked.

The participation of installation communitites in the Nieghborhood Watch Program is highly encouraged. These are people organized to watch over their neighbors' homes and property. Any suspicious activity or crime is reported accurately and immediately to the Military Police.

For those residents who are concerned about stopping this crime and would like to become an active member in the Neighborhood Watch Program, contact the PMO Crime Prevention Office at 545-7115/7154 for assistance.

Parents should make a list of rules to be followed when they are not home. Rules will vary from family to family, but here is a list prepared by Lynette and Thomas Long, authors of The Handbook for Latchkey Children and Their Parents:

- Come straight home after school (or football practice, piano lesson, etc.). Wandering around the neighborhood is an invitation to trouble.
- Keep the door locked at all times. Speak with callers through the door.
- Don't let anyone in the house, not even friends or neighbors — even if the person is in uniform. Children need to be told that if it's important, they'll come back later.
- Don't tell people who call on the telephone that you're home alone. Instead, tell them that your mother is busy. Take a message and tell them your mother will call them back.
- In case of a problem or important message, call the number agreed upon by you and your parents.

ASK THE JUDGE

Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I got a note on my quarters door three days ago, which said that I had won a free prize, and that I needed to pick it up at a local address. There was a phone number included. I called the phone number and found out that I may have qualified to receive a free single lens reflex 35mm camera.

Boy, was I surprised! This kind of free gift program happens, I know, because I watch game shows on TV and this is just like it. I took my wife down to the address and we found out about the camera. We could get film at cut-rate prices and developed prints free (plus a one dollar per print handling and postage charge) if we got a subscription to the Kamerathon photo club system, for about $67 a month for two years.

The SLR camera would be free! I was so impressed that I signed up and got my wife to co-sign. When we got home that night, my wife said she didn't want to get the contract and started talking about a "three-day cooling off period."

She said it meant that she had three days to cancel this kind of contract, because we got the notice at home. I still think this club is a great deal. I've sent you a copy of the contract. You're the judge. What's up, sir or ma'am?

A: Because the sale in question occurred at the office of this company, you do not have the right to cancel within three days, as provided in Federal Trade Commission regulations for sales of goods in your home. Technically, you and your wife have a valid contract with the company. You may be able to negotiate your way out of it, but it's probably going to cost you some money.

Nobody in a business gives away a free camera. You are paying for it in the $67 a month to the Kamerathon Club. Think — why did you get involved in this? If you wanted to buy a camera, you could have gone to the PX or a retail dealer and bought one.

You could have bought the film and processing at reduced prices at the PX. It might have cost $400 to buy the camera you are getting (or a better one) for "free" and enough film to last several years. But you are paying over $1,600.

If you pay $1 "handling" for every print they make for you, you end up paying $36 to develop a roll of 36 prints. It might cost $13 to get it done at the PX. Some bargain!

You need to think before you get hooked. Maybe next time you'll be smarter. At least you'll be poorer.

If you think you've been unfairly treated by a business establishment, you should also contact the IG to make an Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board inquiry. If the firm in question has been found to have violated Army regulations or otherwise be involved in deception or unfair dealing, it is possible for them to be declared off limits to soldiers.

If you, or any of your friends, have gotten involved in a scheme like this, get an appointment with legal assistance by calling 545-3281/3282. There is no guarantee that we at JAG can get you out of a contract like this once it's made, but if you come to us before you make a contract, we can help you make the right decision.

Summertime, and the livin' is easy

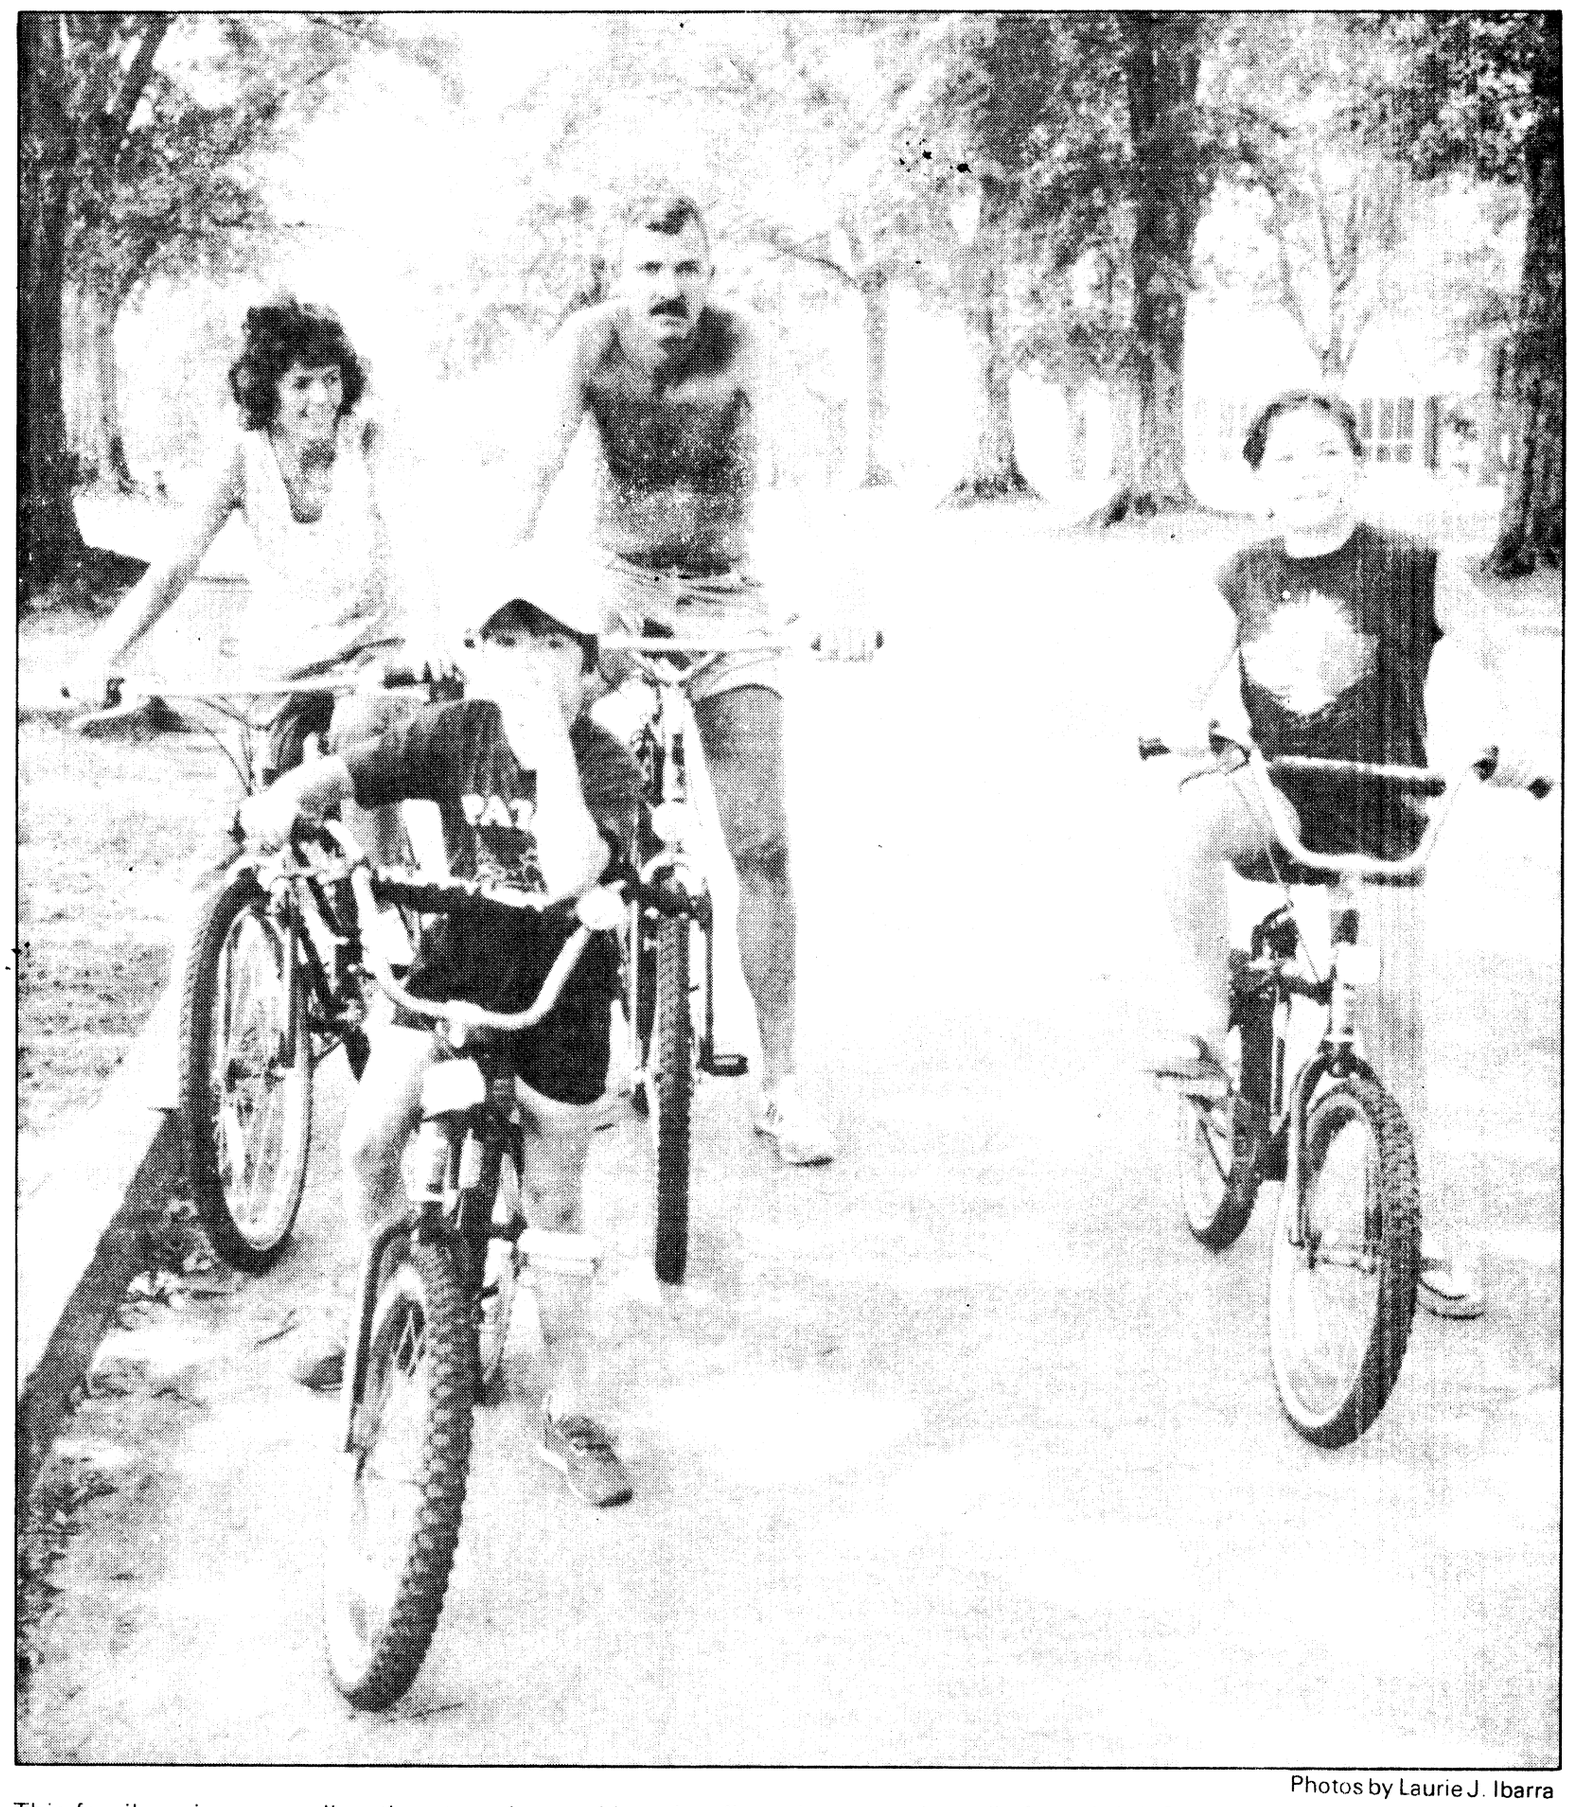
Benning offers variety of recreational activities

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

If this summer is anything compared to last summer, it's going to be a long, hot one. Long for those of us who have to work and hot for children out of school looking for something to do.

But most people will agree it will be anything but boring. On Fort Benning alone there are five public swimming pools, numerous tennis courts, baseball fields, and fields big enough for football, rugby or soccer.

Anyone suffering from too much sun can go indoors to one of the nine post gymnasiums and fitness centers. Most of these gyms have nautilus machines, free weights, and racquet ball and basketball courts. In addition, there are two bowling alleys and two golf courses.



For those folks on the more creative side, there are craft centers and auto shops

The Chattahoochee River offers plenty to do for the self-motivated, including fishing, boating and camping at the Uchee Creek Recreation Area and Marina. For anyone needing to rent supplies such as canoes, boats and campers, there is the Outdoor Recreation Center.

Moreover, there is appreciable space for bicycle, skateboard and scooter riding for big and little kids.

Summertime is also an ideal time to get involved with lawns and gardens, as well as any new landscaping that's been put off during the cooler months.

Summer is here, so let's make it a fun season!

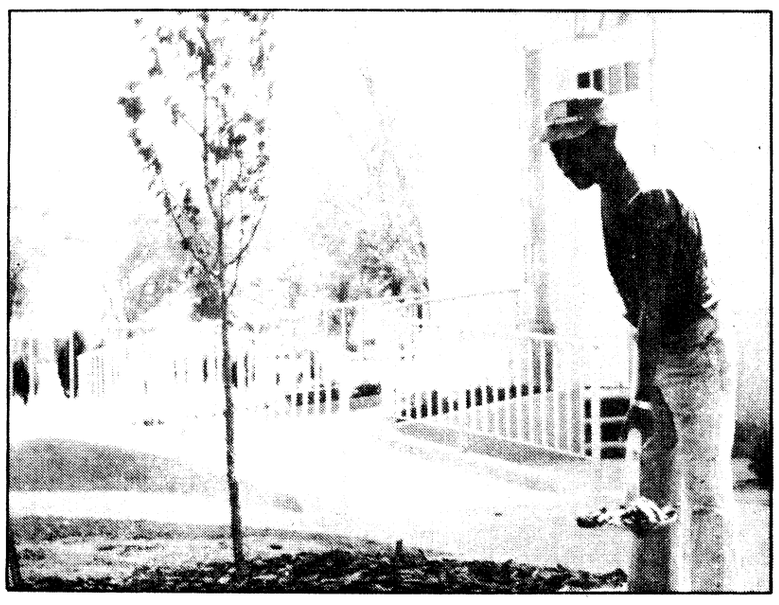
Workers changing the look of post chapels

USAIC Chaplain's Office

"God helps those who help themselves."

Self-help projects at Fort Benning chapel facilities and improvements accomplished using chapel contributions have saved the government thousands of dollars and beautified the USAIC environment over the last several months.



TIC Chapel on main post added energy-efficient and protective plexiglass to the stained-glass window exteriors, built an entrance for handicapped persons and implemented a new landscape design with an underground irrigation system. A new grounds improvement plan is now underway at Main Post Catholic Chapel, as well.

Volunteers, supervised by Walt Diefendorf and Frank Minott, completely renovated the interior of TSB Chapel Annex and upgraded the exterior setting, a savings of over $100,000 to the government by using self-help and volunteer workers.

Using self-help materials, the Rangers redecorated their chapel and engineers created a new office in the Sightseeing Road Chapel.

A major interior renovation is in progress at Custer Terrace Chapel, the new home of the USAIC Clinical Pastoral Education Center. CPE is a community-based, residential training program in counseling for chaplains. The nature of this work demanded the creation of a number of areas suitable for individual and small group counseling.

Robert Kelley of the self-help branch of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing says, "We figure that Uncle Sam saves $12-15 for every dollar in material he invests. And these chapel projects have used several thousands of dollars in building supplies and used them well."

Alto Dean puts the finishing touches to landscaping improvements at The Infantry Center Chapel.

Pentecost represents birth of the church

By Loy D.R. Ganey Jr.
43rd Engineer Battalion Chaplain

For centuries Christians have tried to describe the Pentecost experience to one another and the world. A Bible passage that provides us with an understanding of Pentecost is Acts 2, which depicts the heartfelt response of many people from different cultures being convicted by the saving Gospel message preached by Peter and the other disciples.

Jesus declares the reception of the Holy Spirit by the disciples, not as a conditional act, but as a statement of factual change in their relationship to their Lord and God.

The disciples after receiving the Holy Spirit can not help proclaiming Jesus as Lord. The people of Jerusalem have gathered to celebrate Pentecost, a festive gathering 50 days after the Passover.

In words that touch the ears of their mind and heart, they hear the message of the good news of Jesus Christ. God's plan is being fulfilled.

God's work is being done through and beyond individual's limitations. God's power brings hope, forgiveness, blessing and change in the lives of all whom God has called. Pentecost celebrates this power of transformation in lives.

Pentecost is the birth of the Church. Pentecost depicts Christ's gift to us after his ascension, the gift being the Holy Spirit, the Conforter, the Counselor. The apostle Paul tells us what we ought to do with this gift. Paul gives the command to be "filled with the Spirit" (Ephesians 5:18-21).

Paul gives four wholesome results of being filled with the Spirit — spiritual fellowship, joyful worship, hearts that are constantly thankful and humble submissiveness towards one another out of reverence toward Christ.

These four wholesome results of the Holy Spirit's fullness all concern our relationships. If we are filled with the Spirit, we are harmoniously related to God and each other. If we love God, we ought to love one another, realizing that the first fruit of the Spirit is love (Galatians 5:22-23).

May the Holy Spirit empower you this Pentecost to Spirit-filled living.

CHAPEL BRIEFS

Pre-baptism session required for parents

Parents who plan to baptise their children in the Catholic Church will meet Monday at 1:30 p.m. at the Religious Education Center for a preparation session.

The class is required for parents before the day of baptism. Call Mr. Reilly at 545-5508 to register.

Soldier honored at religious service

CSM Gerald Williams of 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Brigade will be awarded the "Four Chaplains Legion of Honor" in the 4th Battalion Chapel Sunday.

The worship service begins at 11 a.m. and Post Chaplain (Col.) Roy Mathis will be the guest speaker. The legion of honor is presented to those who demonstrate a life of unselfish service that is in keeping with the sacrifice and dedication demonstrated by the four chaplains on the U.S.S. Dorchester who gave their lives for others.

Catholic women plan get-together

Today the Military Council of Catholic Women (M.C.C.W.) will have a "Getting to know you" celebration.

Rosary will begin at 9:15 a.m., followed by a Mass. Afterwards the group will go to TIC for a program. A video about Mother Theresa, a modern day saint, will be shown. Those interested are asked to bring a friend and two or three articles of baby, wedding, or family pictures; a favorite craft or game; or any other article that would help us get to know you better. This is optional but encouraged.

Refreshments will be provided and free babysitting is available at the Religious Education Center starting at 8:30 a.m.

Share memories, laughter and get a spiritual boost. For more information, call Marianne Tennant at 687-0451 or Viviana V. Hernandez 682-1972.

See Pope during his September visit

The Pope is coming to the United States in September. Mother Mary Mission and Saint Patrick's Church in Phenix City are sponsoring a complete tour package to New Orleans for the visit of Pope John Paul II.

Buses depart Sept. 10 and return on the 13th. The cost of $150 covers transportation, room (double occupancy), and buffet breakfast on arrival. Reservations are available but will be closed soon. For additional information call Mary Huggins at 682-1576.

Fort Benning depends on its' volunteers to keep valuable service programs alive. These programs allow the Army to take care of its own. While a volunteer helps others, he is also helping himself in many ways such as; learning a new skill, fine tuning an old skill, meeting new friends, becoming familiar with the community, getting some time away from the children, helping others or gaining experience to obtain paid employment. Whatever your needs are, please consider the following positions.

Receptionist: this is a busy job which involves greeting visitors, directing them to the proper place or helping to answer their questions. These jobs are currently available at the Army Community Service, Volunteer Resource Center and the Red Cross Office.

Army Emergency Relief clerk: here is a job where you will assist in filing, typing and handling phone calls. This is a very busy and interesting job.

Budget counselor: if you enjoy working with figures and planning and preparing budgets, this position at ACS is for you.

Clerk: must be willing to attend monthly board meeting and prepare a report tabulating volunteer work hours by the 5th of each month.

Tagging and consignment clerks: the Thrift Shop has several openings available on Tuesdays, Thursdays and two Saturdays a month. You can work in the main store, Furniture Barn or Craft Cabin.

Caseworker: these Red Cross positions assist military families who are faced with emergency or stressful situations.

Safety instructor: also a Red Cross opening, in this role you can learn to teach First Aid, Water Safety and cardiopulmonary rescuscitation.

National Infantry Museum tour guide: learn to be a vital link between the curious and the "Queen of Battle." The training alone is a motivator and self-esteem builder.

Santa's Castle: here's your chance to play with toys. This job consists of cleaning and repairing donated toys, bicycles and games for needy children.

Library: the library needs a few people to help file cards, shelve books and magazines and assist the librarian in other duties.

We offer free nursery care at Tot Town for volunteers. If you have a skill or interest not mentioned here, the Volunteer Resource Center will assist you in finding the right place for you. For more information, call Wanda Campbell at 545-5602 or 545-5176 Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., or stop by the Volunteer Resource Center at 310 McIver St.

Bodybuilders flex off at weekend competition

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

Months of training and years of dedication will shine through Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium tommorrow, as contestants demonstrate the fine art of Bodybuilding during the Mr. and Mrs. Fort Benning Contest.

When the noon preliminaries begin, a novice bodybuilder, Barbara Thomas, will showcase two years of hard work.

"For the last two years, and between pregnancies, I have worked hard to attain a good physical appearance," Thomas said.

The 30-year-old, mother of two, started a serious training program in January, in hopes of excelling to a competitive level. When working out became a routine, she realized more drastic measures must be taken.

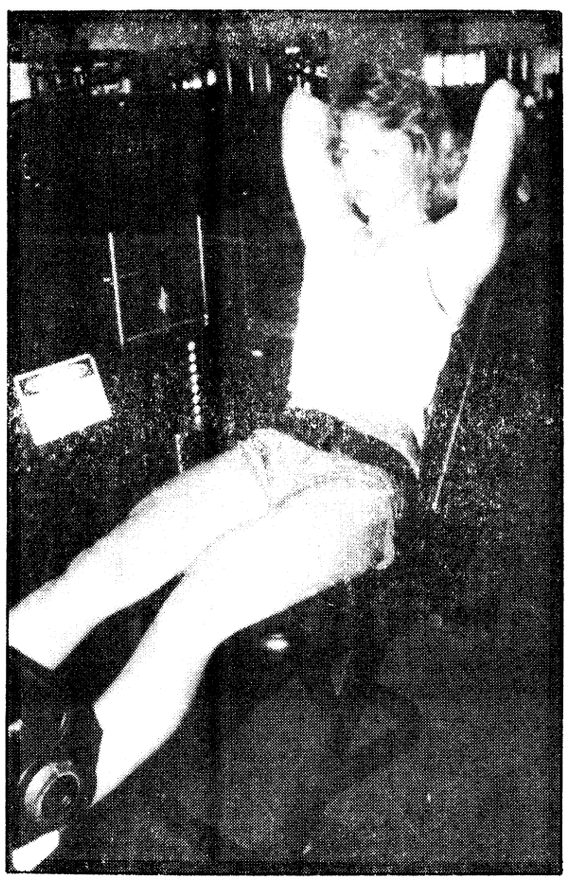
I really started to work hard in preparing for the Mrs. Fort Benning contest. It's easier to reach the level of fitness that I desire when given something to shoot for. The contest provides that target...that new goal to achieve," Thomas said.

Thomas' routine pulls her to the weight room less than ten hours each week, though considerable time is spent bike riding and running.

The three-day-on and one-day-off routine has been carefully divided to allow maximum development and definition of each muscle group.

"I split my workouts into three areas,"said Thomas, "chest and arms, back and shoulders, and legs.

Though the routine is evenly divided, Thomas recognizes the need to concentrate on the legs.



"I am confident in the competitive strength of my upper body, but realize that it will take extensive work to get my legs in top condition," Thomas said.

It has been in bodybuilding that Thomas has gained the razors edge of confidence. But in her first competition, she has found that it will take more than poise.

"It takes a lot to perform in front of an audience. But, I didn't realize how much more was involved," said Thomas. "There are many varibles to be considered, such as posing, tanning, and dieting."

The audience during the preliminaries will consist of three judges, who will be scoring the contestants in three rounds.

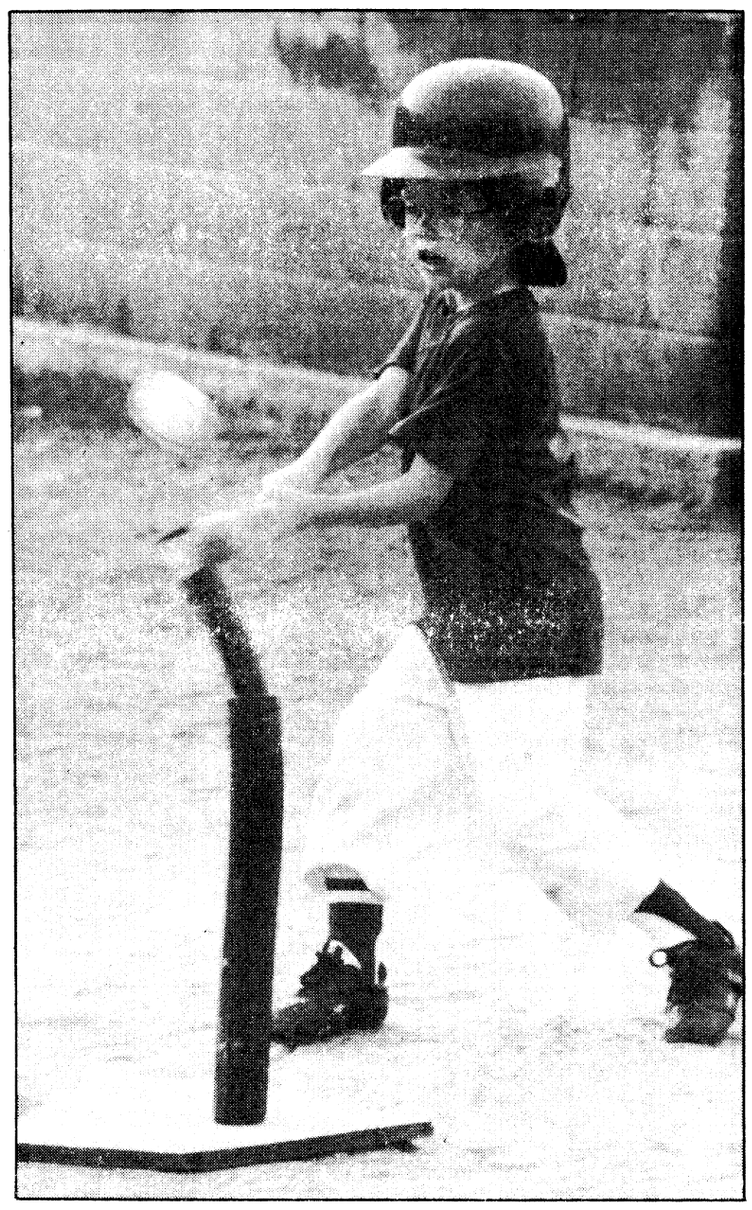
In the first round,the competitors will be judged on overall symetric. The bodybuilders will perform their individual routines in round two, while round three will consist of mandatory poses of the judges discretion.

Barbara Thomas prepares for Saturday's bodybuilding competition by working out on the Nautilus machines.

All contestants will be invited back for the main showdown, starting at 7 p.m., in the Marshall Auditorium.

One of those daring to be bold will be Barbara Thomas, a 5-foot-6-inch, 130 pound bodybuilding novice, who is ready to compete.

Due to new eligibility requirements in the women's division, the field is open to greater competition.



In addition to soldiers, the women's division is now open to active duty or retired dependents, Department of the Army, Non-appropriated Funds and Army Air Force Exchange Services civilian employees.

Should anyone desire to compete, they should call Speedy Austin at 544-1747 immediately.

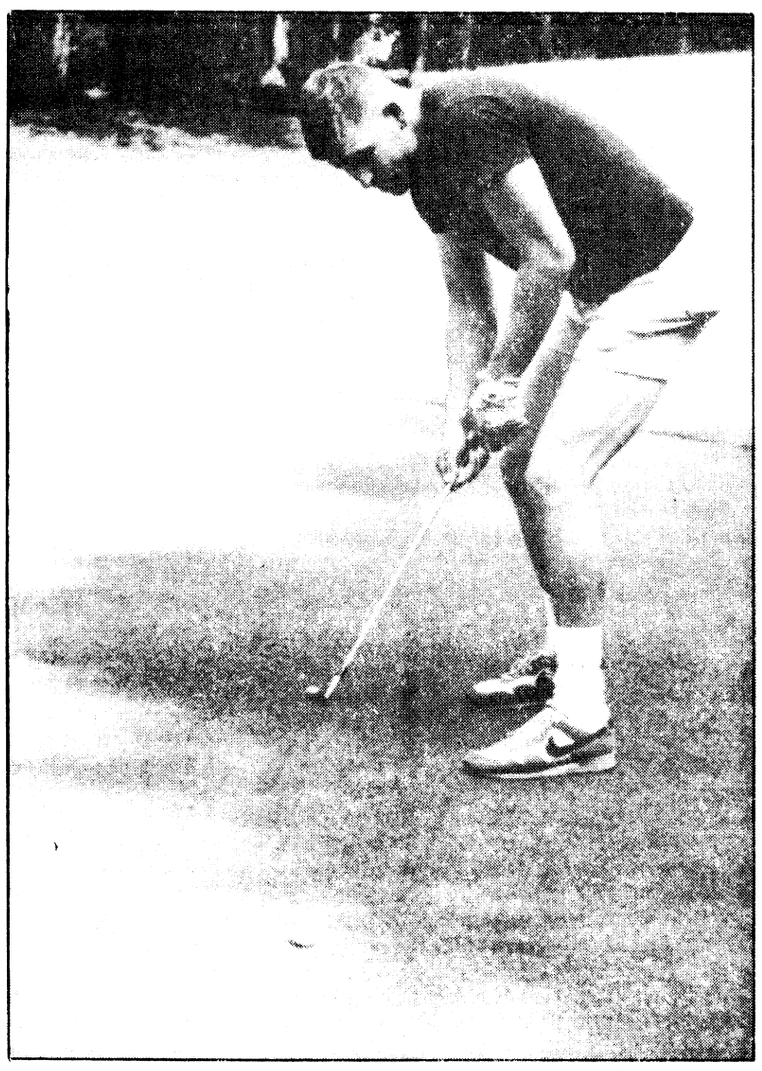
197th hosts golf tournament

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The Fourth Annual Panther Open was recently played at Fort Benning's golf course, hosted by the "Panthers" of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor. The 18-hole tournament had nearly 80 participants and was open to all of Kelley Hill.

A number of VIPs took the opportunity to swing a club, such as Col. William W. Hartzog, 197th Infantry Brigade commander; Paul Timm, Ledger-Enquirer correspondent; and Dick Ford, Association of the United States Army president.

"What a day for golf," 1st Lt. Harold Manning said. "It's good for soldiers to relax and get together for a social event, for officers and lower enlisted to meet in a different way."



Most of the participants in the Panther Open possessed only part-time golf experience; however, it was a good chance for soldiers to meet other soldiers and talk about war stories.

Ice cold beverages were also available to the golfers as they circled the course, and a number of attractive prizes were awarded to the winners.

Judging by the smiles and laughter, everyone appeared to thoroughly enjoy the Open.

"The greens are a little worse for wear this year, but overall it's a good tournament," said Pvt. 1st Class William Maddux, a two-time participant.

Some of the golfers looked like real professionals, however, others could have taken a few lessons from Tom Kite; but, all in all, the Panther Open was a total success, and a recreational afternoon for the 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers.

Bandits down Rangers 14-7

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

The Bandits launched a full blown attack to highjack the Rangers in a 14-7 victory, as players in the Women's Intramural Softball league fought it out recently at Gowdy Field.

After three and a half innings, the game was called on "time." The two teams battled for the full hour and fifteen minutes allotted by league rules.

Rosetta Cole may have been the busiest Bandit on the field, working hard in the dugout to ensure that all of the Bandits runs were tallied.

Alonia Johnson started the action early in the first inning, lining a shot along third base to bring in the first of three RBIs.

In the second inning, the Bandits really took charge. After Ranger pitcher, Rose Parker, walked the first three batters, Lannette Edmonds took the mound, facing Johnson for the first time.

With the bases loaded, Johnson hit a chip shot over second base, scoring her second RBI.

Ruthie Newsome followed with a double, bringing two more scores across the plate.

While the Rangers were scoreless after two innings, the Bandits had russled 10 runs. It was not until the top of the third that the Rangers began to pick their shots against the Bandits.

Julie Cooley provided the Rangers first run after cracking a single through the in field, allowing Denise Schucks to come home. The Ranger dugout then came to life as the team members scored six more runs, but were unable to repeat another rally, nor match the 14 runs of the Bandits.

Turkey hunters turn out in record numbers

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staf writer

Another turkey hunting season has come to a close on Fort Benning with a 35 percent increase in permits issued.

"Results of the 1987 Spring gobbler indicate that the sport is really catching on," said Chris Dunn, chief of Natural Resources Management Division, Department of Engineering and Housing. "This year, 411 turkey permits were issued as compared to 274 in 1986," he said.

The season began in Georgia March 21 and ended May 5. The Alabama season ran March 20 through April 30 and according to reports proved to be a successful one for many of the more persistent hunters.

"There were 109 gobblers reported harvested, representing a 22.4 percent success rate, with total hours hunted 2,766 as compared to 1,714 in 1986," Dunn said.

Overall he said based on hunters' reports, the turkey population seems to be growing. "Hunters reported seeing 277 more turkeys and hearing 229 more turkeys than last year. However it still required over 25 hours of hunting to kill the elusive bird," Dunn said.

THE PRESIDENT DOESN'T TAKE AN OATH TO DEFEND THE AMERICAN FLAG OR THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

The President takes an oath to defend something even more important than a majestic symbol of our country.

The President takes an oath to defend the Constitution of the United States. A document that has been described as the greatest leap forward for freedom in human history. A document that is the foundation of our country. And the means by which we achieve the rule of law and protect our freedom.

As we commemorate the Bicentennial of the Constitution, there is no better way for you as an American to reaffirm the principles for which our country stands than to learn more about the Constitution.

Telephone company cuts off Army's FTS lines

Post official says planners at TRADOC and DA got their wires crossed on when to tell users

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Last Friday, Federal Telecommunications Service (FTS), a government system to provide official long distance telephone service, was eliminated from all Army installations.

Although officials knew FTS would soon be eliminated due to a new contract with the Wide Area Telecommuncation Service (WATS), the sudden disconnection of the system came as a surprise to Fort Benning officials.

According Forrest Duncan, Director of Information and Management, about a month ago officials at Headquarters, Training and Doctrine Command informed his office that post FTS lines would be retained until WATS was operational.

"Obviously we received some erroneous information as on Friday, AT&T informed our office that the Department of the Army notified them to discontinue service on that date," Duncan said. "Upon receiving that information, our office phoned HQ TRADOC and they indicated that the decision made was firm."

Upon verifying the information, Duncan's office informed units of the elimination Monday.

"Our office is trying to alleviate most of the problems associated with the disconnection of FTS," he said. "At present we are replacing the lines with commercial ones so that units can directly dial out with the use of a control number issued by their telephone control officer and then dialing 771 than the number."

"At first it was thought that the only route available would be to use the control number system with operator assistance, but our office worked it out so that it won't be necessary."

Duncan added that units may opt for private commercial lines to be installed, but the costs associated with that option will be paid for by that organization's appropriated funds. If that route is taken, calls made will have to be logged in order to verify that the calls are official business.

Duncan said that the WATS lines should be installed by July or August.

Along with WATS, a new state-of-the-art automated phone system will also be installed. "It wasn't planned this way," he said, "it just so happens they will be installed at the same time."

The completion of the system, as well as the increase and replacement of old telephone lines, should put an end to most post telephone problems, he said.

Rise in VA interest rates is pricing military buyers right out of the market

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

The Veterans Administration raised its maximum home loan interest rate from 8.5 to 10 percent May 11 and this new rate is effecting homes sales for the military and veterans.

"I was about to sell a house to a first sergeant," said Richard Keesee, a sales associate at French Whitten Real Estate, "when the VA interest rate went up. It priced him out of the market."

Keesee said French Whitten does quite a bit of business with the veterans and that things are definitely slowing down as a result of the new rate.

Dan Phillips, with Dan Parker Realtors, agreed with Keesee. "The 8.5 percent rate stood for about two months and sales were moving along. With this higher rate things have slowed down and people are buying smaller homes. Some, however, have taken the attitude that 10 percent is better than 11 or 12 and have closed anyway," he said.

The VA doesn't actually raise its rates based on a VA decision but merely follows market trends, according to Bonner Day, a public affairs officer with the VA in Washington.

"Commercial lenders were already charging a 10 percent interest rate before we began charging it and we have to follow the market. Our rates merely reflect financial market conditions," Day said.

One captain looking at homes in Columbus said that, "The rate going up to 10 percent may not seem like much, but when you're talking about a $75,000 mortgage, it begins to really add up in your monthly payment. I doubt if we'll buy a house now. We'll probably wait until the rate drops," he said, asking not to be identified.

Day said that, also effective May 11, the VA would charge 11.5 percent for home improvement loans, manufactured home loans will go to 12.5 percent and lot loans to 12 percent.

"All of this will probably affect real estate sales to the military but it's really too soon right now to say how much the effect will be," Day said.

AER fund drive falls short of goal

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Army Emergency Relief helps soldiers out in their time of need.

But right now, AER needs your help.

According to Carla Cary, chief of Army Community Services, contributions to AER have fallen this year, which means the organization cannot provide as much help as it has in the path.

Last year, post residents and workers gave $173,000 during the AER fund drive. This year, the campaign has received only $168,000 as of June 5. This year's campaign ends today.

Cary said Fort Benning's population has increased this year, and organizers hope that contributions will match that growth, or at least match last year's total.

AER, which is a non-profit organization for active Army personnel and their family members, Army reserve and National Guard on continuous active duty for more than 30 days, spouses and orphans of eligible members who died on active duty and retirees, is, according to Cary, how the Army takes care of its own. "Giving to AER is like giving to yourself and your friends in the Army, because the money goes back to the community to help those in need," Cary said.

"AER sometimes gets a reputation as not assisting people who come to us for help, but in most cases these people are asking for help that we cannot provide," Cary said.

AER, by regulation, does not provide help for marriages, ordinary leave, liquidation or consolidation, business ventures or divorces.

"The bottom line is we are here to help, but right now we need your help to make AER at Fort Benning as strong as possible," Cary said.

To contribute to AER see your unit AER officer or call AER at 545-4043.

Team wants to know what makes Benning's contracting office tick

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Directorate of Contracting has been chosen as one of the best in Training and Doctrine Command. It will be used as one of four prototypes to be looked at as the Army improves its contracting services.

"The Fort Benning Directorate of Contracting can be very proud that they were singled out for this honor," said Jay McDaniels, a member of of the Army action group for the contracting prototype project. "Only four installations were recognized out of 250 and Benning was one of them. Significant, also, is the fact that we came here first," he said.

Benning's Directorate of Contracting takes care of $100 million in contracts annually, working with Army customers. The directorate administers 1,400 contracts and writes 3,000 to 5,000 purchase orders annually. According to Lt. Col. Jim Boucher, who is also a member of the prototype team and who serves as the deputy principal assistant for contracting at TRADOC, Army contracting is going to come under closer scrutiny as ways are found to improve contracting for services for the Army.

"The thrust of our program is to ensure that we're worthy of the public trust. In essence, we have to be able to control the money given to us. We have to be efficient with public resources and we're here to study how one of the best contracting directorates in TRADOC does business," Boucher said.

According to Boucher, the vice chief of staff of the Army, Gen. Maxwell Thruman, wanted to improve Army contracting by looking at examples of successful contracting directorates. "That's why our team was put together. We're here to step back and look at what Benning is doing so well, how they're doing it and then transmit their formula for success to the rest of the Army," Boucher said.

Boucher specifically cited Don Goodroe, the director of contracting, and his staff as having the best intern program in TRADOC, a simplified purchasing program, excellent managerial control and documentation of contract awards, outstanding pre-award contract work, the manner of how resources are used and the flexibility built into their program. "Don Goodroe's organization is

Burba presides at opening of new YA center

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In one of his last official duties as post commander, Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. will cut the ribbon to the new Youth Activities Center, in a ceremony Thursday at 1:30 p.m.

The 22,000 square-feet facility is located on the corner of McIver Street and Batzell Avenue, and will house a snack bar, mirrored dance studio, arts and crafts area and gymnasium.

"The Army puts a lot of emphasis on Army families, and this is just another example of the concern that is shown for the military child," said Ray Pierce, Youth Activities Director.

OPINION

Flag Day time to recall Army's proud service

On June 14th, the Army will celebrate its 212th birthday. It is a day for us all to remember that together we are the Army of our country. And it is an Army of which every American can be proud.

The Army is older than our country. It was created out of neccesity to win our freedom to form a nation. The continued need of the Army to protect what was won on the battlefield at Yorktown was recognized by the framers of the Constitution.

They wrote in the Constitution's preamble that among its purposes was to provide for the common defense and to secure the blessings of liberty.

On it's 212th birthday of the Army, we are reminded that 1987 is the Bicentennial Year of the United States Constitution, which gave our country life and which generations of soldiers have fought to defend.

Our country remains free today, not only because of the Army's brave deeds of the past, but because of the maginificent service of the men and women of today's total army. All of us can be proud of the Army's heritage as together we move forward in the same great tradition."

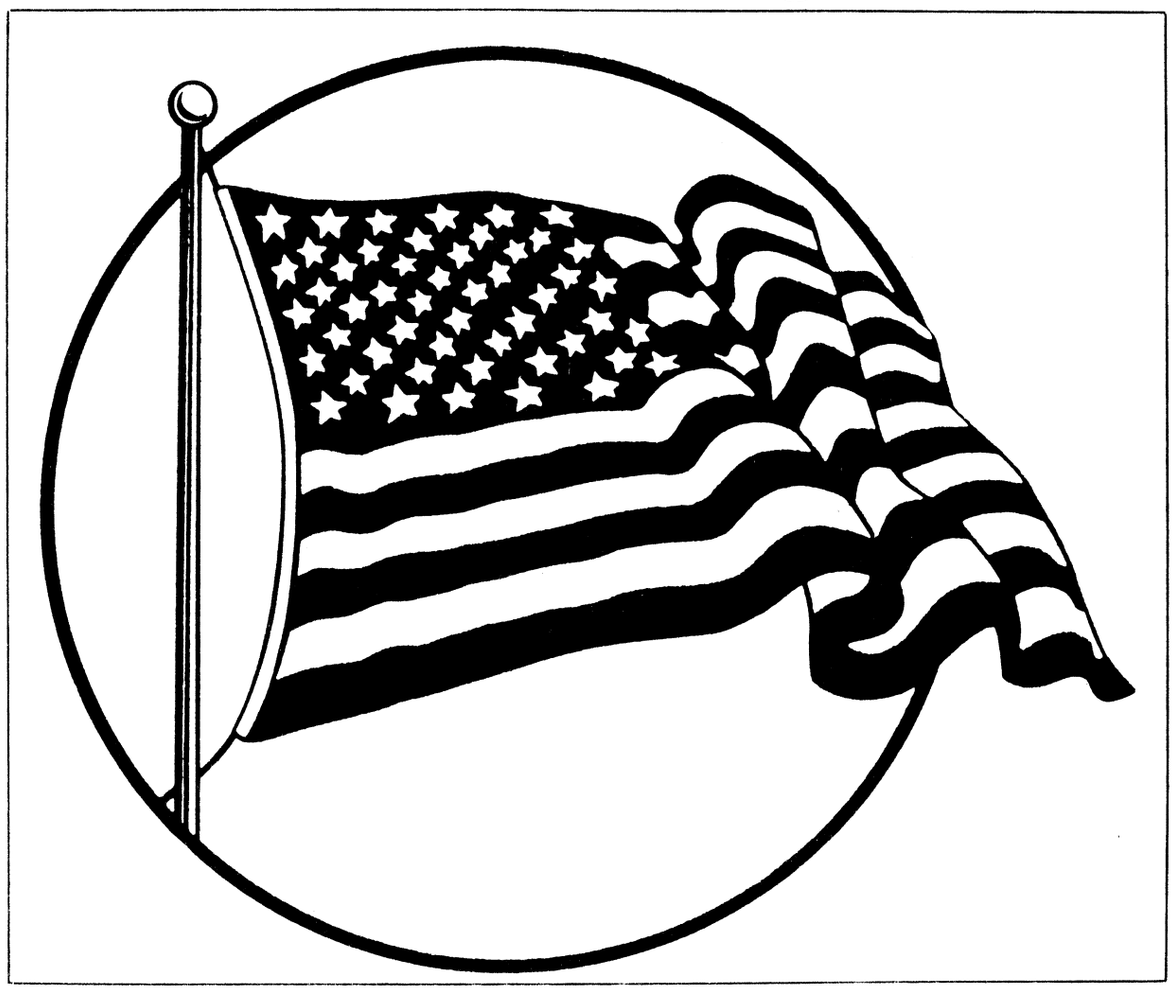
Commanders must educate troops on safety precautions

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Commanders and supervisors at all levels must ensure that their personnel are familiar with and adhere to safety precautions regarding lightning, tornadoes and high temperatures.



• Lightning: Precautions to be taken when exposed to lightning include seeking proper shelter or getting to low ground and crouching if no shelter is available; avoiding trees, metal fences, antennas, large masses of metal, plumbing pipes, telephones and bodies of water, such as lakes and swim pools. Personnel should not huddle together in groups, handle weapons or wear steel helmets. Golf carts, motorcycles, bicycles, tractors, and soft-topped vehicles such as jeeps should be avoided. If indoors, personnel should not stand near metal fixtures such as bathtubs, sinks or radiators, and should avoid touching or handling electric appliances such as televisions or radios. A person who has been struck by lightning and requires first aid is safe to touch (no electrical hazard).

• Tornadoes: If exposed to a tornado hazard, seek shelter in a tornado shelter, underground excavation or building of substantial construction. If sturdy furniture such as work benches or tables are available, crawl under them for protection from flying glass and debris. Always stay as far away from windows as possible. Personnel in open fields should lie down in the nearest depression, such as a ditch or ravine.

• Heat: Heat injuries include a sunburn, heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke, which can be deadly. Precautions to be taken for the prevention of these heat injuries include acclimatization, proper sunscreen lotions, consumption of proper amounts of water, eating all meals for salt replenishment, physical fitness, adjusting the wear the uniform, education of personnel, using the "buddy system," and closely monitoring the Wet Bulb Globe Temperature Index (WBGT) to determine criteria for training and exposure of personnel.

Take time out to honor the flag Sunday

American Forces Information Service

At 7 p.m. EST Sunday, June 14, Americans around the world will pause to recite the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag.

Some will take time out from activities with families and friends. Many in the military, well aware that national defense is not a nine to five job, will take a short break from their duties.

Together, they will honor America's 51st Flag Day celebration.

The "pause for the pledge" concept was born in 1980. Five years later, President Ronald Reagan declared it an official part of Flag Day ceremonies. Members of the National Flag Day Committee are working to make the pause an integral part of every American's Flag Day activities.

This year, as America celebrates the bicentennial of its Constitution, the pause for the pledge will take on a special significance.

The pause will be led from Fort McHenry, focus of the Baltimore defense during the War of 1812.

Named for James McHenry, secretary of war under presidents George Washington and John Adams and a soldier-statesman signer of the US Constitution, Fort McHenry symbolizes the American principles of liberty and freedom.

It was in the shadow of Fort McHenry during the Battle of Baltimore that Francis Scott Key, an American patriot, was inspired to write "The Star Spangled Banner." From a British ship in Baltimore Harbor, Key anxiously watched Fort McHenry for some proof, some sign that liberty would prevail. At the end of the 25-hour bombardment, his proof came in the form of the American flag.

"You can imagine his joy the next morning, in the dawn's early light," said President Reagan. "He looked out and saw the banner still flying, a little tattered and torn, but still flying proudly above the ramparts. Fort McHenry and the brave men manning it had withstood the assaults. Baltimore was saved.

The United States, this great experiment in human freedom, as George Washington described it, would endure."

Through hard times and setbacks, the dreams of liberty have endured. They drove Washington's troops through the harsh winter of Valley Forge, inspired the drafters of a constitution that has endured 200 years

Those dreams will be verbalized throughout America and on military outposts around the world during the June 14 pause for the pledge.

"It offers an opportunity for all Americans to display their love for the flag, the American Constitution and the dreams that have become the United States — one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

Soldier says excessive PT ruining wife's health

Dear Editor:

The unit where my wife is assigned has, in my mind, gone utterly overboard on physical training.

The amount of PT they do has caused her to lose 15 pounds in five weeks. She is 5 feet 2 inches tall and now weighs about 105. Army minimum standard is I believe 103.

She has lost almost all appetite. Her ribs are becoming more and more apparent. She won't say anything. She's a good soldier. But I will! I'm the one who must see her in pain, crying, unable to eat. Too exhausted to spend time with her children.

She was in good shape two months ago. Now she couldn't fight her way out of a paper bag, let alone a war.

This amount of PT may be good for overeating males or those with hearty appetites. But my wife doesn't fall into one of those categories.

Nine plus miles a week, plus workouts before and after, is not good physical readiness training. It's as harmful as or more harmful than drugs.

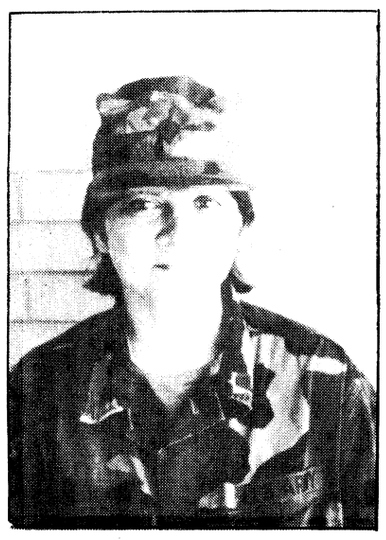
Name withheld by request

Dear Husband:

Before you blame your wife's unit for her condition, you need to have her see a doctor.

I talked with a spokesman at Martin Army Community Hospital about your wife's condition. He said that such sudden weight loss is not healthy, and recommends that she be evaluated by a health care professional, either by reporting to sick call, or making an appointment at Family Practice if your family is enrolled there.

Excessive muscle pain after exercising may indicate a lack of fluids and salt in the body. Especially now, when temperatures exceed 90 degrees during the daytime, it is vital that your wife replace the fluids she loses during exercise. It is also important that she eat properly to replace the nutrients used during PT.



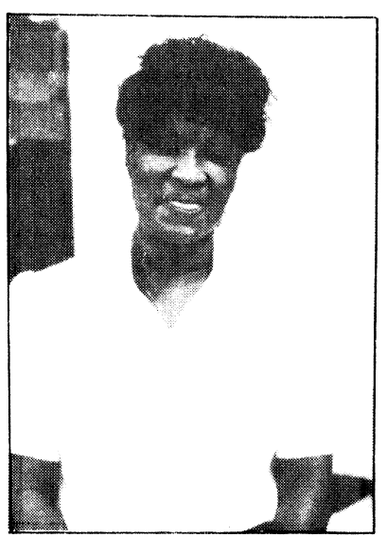
Excessive fatigue can make the normal stresses of work too much to handle, leading to depression. People can experience a loss of appetite for many reasons. Sudden weight loss, accompanied by other symptoms, could signal a serious medical problem. Weight loss can also result from fatigue, stress and depression, so she needs to have a medical evaluation to determine the cause of her problem.

As a soldier, wife and mother, your wife has many roles to perform and stresses placed on her. These may be taking a toll on her health.

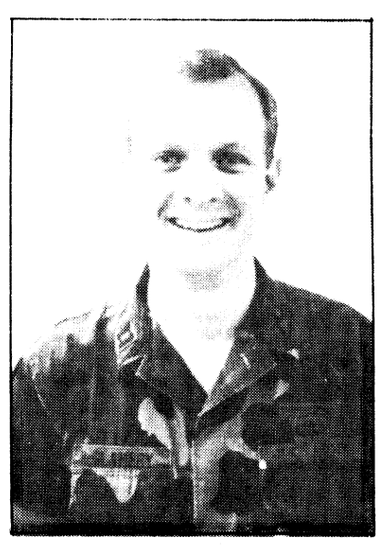
She may be suffering from the "Super Woman Syndrome," trying to be a perfect soldier, wife, mother and housekeeper. You can help her get more rest by doing some of the household chores and taking on child care responsibilities, and seeing that she eats right.

Proper nutrition could help her feel better. MACH has a Dietary Counseling Service that can explain the right foods to eat and what vitamins are especially needed after exercise. Their number is 544-1377 or 544-1674.

VARIOUS VOICES / What would you like to see in the Bayonet?



SP4 Rhonda Cleeton, Headquarters Company 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "It's funny you should ask. I just had a conversation the other day about this very subject and we both decided we would like to see articles explaining why the names of different monuments are named after certain people. What did that person do to get the honor of having a monument named after them."



SFC James Bennett, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "I'd like to see more stories about the types of benefits available to soldiers. For instance, if a soldier died, what types of benefits are available to his family. What would the survivor assistance officer do?"

Ann Hill, Chief of Protocol, - "I'd like to see more things about the different units. I tend to look for things about the different units more than anything else and I also enjoy stories about them more than anything else."

Patricia Stutson, Office of the Secretary, United States Army Infantry School, - "I'd like to see more information on what is available to civilians as far employment and some of the dos and the don't for civilians. I'd also like to see some things on leisure and pleasure for soldiers and civilians. Maybe some features on places that aren't too far from here."

Capt. David McGlamery, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "I'd like to see more things in the Bayonet in the family area, things you can do with your kids, fishing derbies, classes at the recreation centers. There are a number of things around here that are family oriented but people just don't know about them."

TSgt. Michael Lee, Airforce Liason, - "Well for obvious reasons I'd like to see more things about the Air Force as we are a part of this post too. But I would also like to see something about all the liasons here. There are Marines, British, French, German and a few others as well."

Familiar face moves into top NCO slot

Cobb vows to carry on projects begun during Owen's tour of duty

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

SGM Autrail Cobb has taken over the helm of noncommissioned officers and enlisted leadership at Fort Benning and plans to maintain the same direction that SGM (ret.) Roy Owens set.

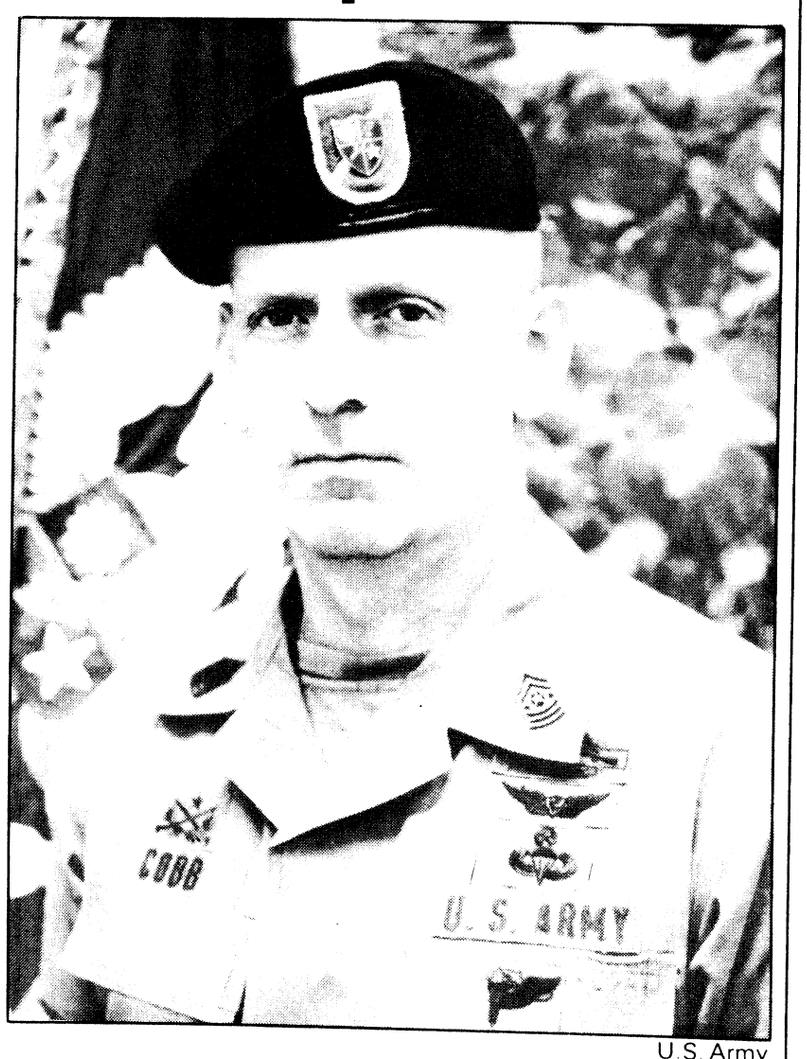
"SGM Owens left a fine setting of NCOs here at Fort Benning," Cobb said. "From the sergeant major of the Infantry School down to the NCOs in the field, we have the best in the Army. I plan to continue Owens' fine work."

Cobb said he feels his duties include being the eyes and the ears for the commanding general, being a good neighbor to Columbus and Phenix City and ensuring that the Infantry School "...trains soldiers properly to meet the enemies of our country."

NCO education is another priority. "I want to continue the development of our NCO education system to the point where it becomes the model for the whole Army to follow," he said.

"The NCO is the pulse and heart of our Army. The sergeants determine how well a unit does or doesn't perform. Without professional NCOs the Army cannot perform its wartime mission," Cobb said.

The command sergeant major has two pet peeves. "I expect every NCO and soldier on this post to do their jobs. When I start doing their jobs, then I'm not doing my job and there's gonna be trouble. Secondly, officers should ensure that they are doing their jobs and not the jobs of NCOs. A general once told me that everyone wants to ride the train to glory but few are willing to work to get the train going. Benning's train is going to go," he said.



Cobb, who has spent 17 of his 25 years in the Army at Fort Benning, also lists safety as being important in his list of priorities.

"We train every day in the art of war," he said, "and, therefore, we are going to have accidents and deaths. But what is acceptable? No one knows, but if we constantly think safety, then these accidents and deaths can be avoided."

The veteran infantryman, who served four years in Vietnam and has had many assignments with ranger battalions, the Ranger School and the Airborne Department, feels an NCO needs three things to be successful. "An NCO has to have the ability to deal with other people, an NCO must have the moral courage to speak up when things are wrong and an NCO must have integrity," Cobb said.

The career NCO also has a few maxims that have helped him in his successful climb up the NCO career ladder. "Treat people the way you want to be treated. Don't belittle someone and then expect them to follow you. Don't ever lie to soldiers and, last but not least, never let the sun set on hungry or unpaid soldiers. Feed 'em and pay 'em," Cobb said.

Before taking over as Benning'stop NCO, Cobb was the regimental sergeant major of the 75th Infantry (Ranger) Regiment.

Savings bonds a risk-free investment

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

If you're interested in making your money grow without any risk whatsoever, don't go to a stockbroker or to an investment firm. Go to the U.S. Government for saving's bonds.

"Savings bonds used to pay a straight interest rate after maturing. It's not that way any more," said Capt. Paul Wilcox, the intallation savings bond officer. "Savings bonds are now tied to a variable interest rate according to what treasury bills are paying."

According to Wilcox, this means that an average of the interest rate for all six-month periods from the time you bought your bond to the time you want to cash it in is taken and that is the interest rate that is paid on your bond.

"For example, a bond bought in November of 1982 and cashed in November of 1987 would pay a return of 8.68 percent, based on the six-month average rate for those five years," he said.

Another plus, Wilcox said, is that you only have to pay half the face amount of the bond, which is a change from previously having to pay three-quarters of the face amount.

To be paid the variable rate of interest, bond holders must keep the bond for at least five years."If you have to cash it in you can after six months, but the interest paid is less," Wilcox said.

The maturity of the bonds, which enable bond holders to cash the bond in for the full face amount plus a variable rate of interest, is also tied to the interest rate. The higher the interest rate, the quicker the bond matures. Bonds are currently maturing in 12 years at the guaranteed 6 percent rate.

Other pluses Wilcox mentioned were that bonds are convenient to buy, as the money for them can be taken right out of your pay; they're a good saving's plan for small investors as they are risk free and if the money is needed they can be quickly cashed in.

There are also tax advantages. No state or local taxes, and federal tax can be deferred until cashed in.

Bonds are perfect, according to Wilcox, for paying for your children's college education.

"You can buy bonds, put them in your children's names, listing them as the owners and you as the beneficiary, and these bonds can go for their education. With them as the owners, they usually have no income and so they don't have to pay taxes on the interest on the bond," he said.

Active duty military personnel can buy a $50 bond by paying just $6.25 monthly for four months and Department of the Army civilians can buy a $75 bond for $3.75 for 10 pay periods, all by payroll deduction.

"There are other investments out there but they involve risk. Buying savings bonds involves no risk, so you have everything to gain and nothing to lose," Wilcox said.

"By buying savings bonds, you will be patriotic and also saving a nest egg for your future," Wilcox said.

Speeding cited as major cause of automobile accidents

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

You have been worried about the 8 a.m. meeting with the company commander. It is now 7:50 a.m. and another rainy day in Georgia, when suddenly the car in front of you comes to a shrieking halt. Crash. Slam.

"Already this year, there have been more than 350 traffic accidents on Fort Benning," said Sgt. Charles A. Marro, non-commissioned officer in charge, Traffic Accident Investigations.

"It's always important to obey the rules of the road. But, when the unavoidable happens and you're involved in an accident, it's too late to panic," Marro said.

Several steps can help a shaken driver deal with the first minutes after an accident.

"The most important thing is to check for injuries to yourself and the others involved," Marro said. "Then make sure the proper safety devices are set up."

Flares and warning triangles are ideal hazard warning devices, he said. When neither is available, vehicle operators should at least raise the vehicle's hood.

When reporting the accident, callers should identify themselves, give the accident location, extent of injuries and say whether or not roadways are blocked.

According to Georgia Code 40-9-30, which governs Fort Benning's privately owned vehicle traffic, "No vehicle will be moved after an accident except under the authority of law enforcement personnel."

Accidents should be reported immediately. If no law enforcement officer investigates, then a report should be filed by operators of moving vehicles within 10 days, parked vehicles within 10 days after learning of the accident," Marro said.

Under Georgia law, failure to report accidents is a misdemeanor, which may result in a fine, suspended driver's license and revoked driving privileges.

When the law enforcement officer arrives at the scene, each operator must have a military identification card, driver's license, proof of ownership and insurance, and post decal number.

"Initial processing of the accident will takes place at the scene, where critical data is collected. In the end, it will be the Georgia Magistrate Court, which handles all Fort Benning accidents, that will decide any ruling about the accident," Marro said.

Tips help you avoid panic after accident

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Army wide there have been 881 accidents involving military vehicles since the beginning of the fiscal year, six of which occurred on Fort Benning.

According to the United States Army Safety Center, there are several causes of accidents. The center presented many reasons for accidents that happen involving vehicles and offered ways to prevent them from happening again.

The center says that the principal causes for most accidents are excessive speed, material failure due to inadequate Preventive Maintenance Checks and Services, inattention and insufficient driver training.

According to the center the M151 1/4 ton truck is involved in more accidents than any other tactical vehicle in the Army, the vehicle surpassed all other tactical vehicles in rollover fatalities, which were attributed to attempting turns at excessive speeds.

Efforts are being made Army wide to modify the M151 with seatbelts and installation of rollbars. Until the modifications are made operators must be aware of the potential hazards that exist. The center recommends that commanders and supervisors should ensure all M151 drivers are thoroughly trained to drive the vehicle and are taught its characteristics.

Problems that occur in the larger vehicles are due mainly to misjudgment of clearance. The center said never assume that there is enough clearance for your vehicle and recommends the use of ground guides when in doubt. The center added that the driver should always be prepared to take a different route and said it is always best to check a route beforehand.

A misjudgment of a different kind occurs when driving tactical semi and full trailers. Often times, the center said, the drivers think they can drive the same speed with a trailer attached but that is not true. Speed must be reduced and always the driver needs to drive defensively, especially in relation to trailing vehicles.

The center recommends that before driving any vehicle, tactical or commercial read the operator's manual and perform all maintanance necessary. Drive according to what your surroundings dictate be aware and be safe.

Knowing how system works can help you get promoted

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

New in the Army and tired of being a "peon" private? By understanding how the Army's promotion system works, you can do everything necessary to earn more rank.

First let's look at the objectives of the Army promotion system. According to Army Regulation 600-200, those objectives are as follows:

- Fill authorized enlisted spaces with qualified soldiers.
- Provide for career progression and rank which is in line with potential.
- Recognize the best qualified soldier, which will attract and retain the highest caliber soldier for a career in the Army.
- Preclude promoting the soldier who is not productive or not best qualified.
- Provide an equitable system for all soldiers.

So where do you start? Well, let's say you're an E-1, this is the time to "hurry up and wait," because the main promotion criteria is that you have six months time in service for promotion to E-2. This is done based on recommendation by your commander and these promotions take place on a daily basis.

Promotion to private first class requires 12 months in the service and four months as a E-2. This too is based on the commander's recommendation. Moving up the ranks to Specialist 4 requires 26 months time in service and six months time in the E-3 grade.

Once a soldier gets into the noncommissioned officer ranks, things get a little more complicated. A soldier going from E-4 to E-5 must have 36 months in the Army and eight months time in the E-4 grade.

At this stage, the soldier needs to be recommended by the commander to go to the promotion board. The soldier will be identified as being in the primary or secondary zone. The primary zone is for those soldiers meeting the time and grade requirements. The secondary zone is designed to accellerate soldiers who are above average. Army Regulation 600-200 states; "The secondary zone provides incentives to those who strive for excellence and whose accomplishments, demonstrated capacity for leadership, and marked potential warrant promotion ahead of their peers."

"But there are different schools of thought for that," said CSM Lyle A. Wells, 1st Battalion The School Brigade, who has sat in on 35 to 45 promotions boards throughout his career. "When I was a first sergeant, I used to reserve the secondary zone for those outstanding soldiers. But 85 to 95 percent of the soldiers are average and average soldiers need to be promoted too," he said.

Once it has been decided that a soldier may go to the board, there are certain things he or she must do. The first is to get a promotion packet together. This can be a long drawn out process if the soldier hasn't kept up with all his paperwork.

"One of the first things is to get the soldier to update his Military Personel Records Jacket, better known as the 201 file," said Gloria P. Kite, a military personnelclerk. According to Kite, the file should contain any schools attended over 40 hours, awards, decorations and college transcripts. Also, the folks at the Military Personnel Center will assist the soldier in doing a promotion point worksheet.

Promotion points play an important role in promotion from E-4 to E-5 and E-6. These points are given to the soldier for accomplishments throughout his career. The minimum amount of points a soldier needs to be promoted is called the cut-off score. This score, which is announced by the Department of the Army, is determined by the military occupational specialty and may fluctuate up to a maximum of 1,000 points.

Once a soldier meets all these criteria he can then wear the ranks of sergeant or staff sergeant.

The ne t step in the success ladder is sergeant first class (E-7), master sergeant , first sergeant, (E-8), sergeant major (E-9.)

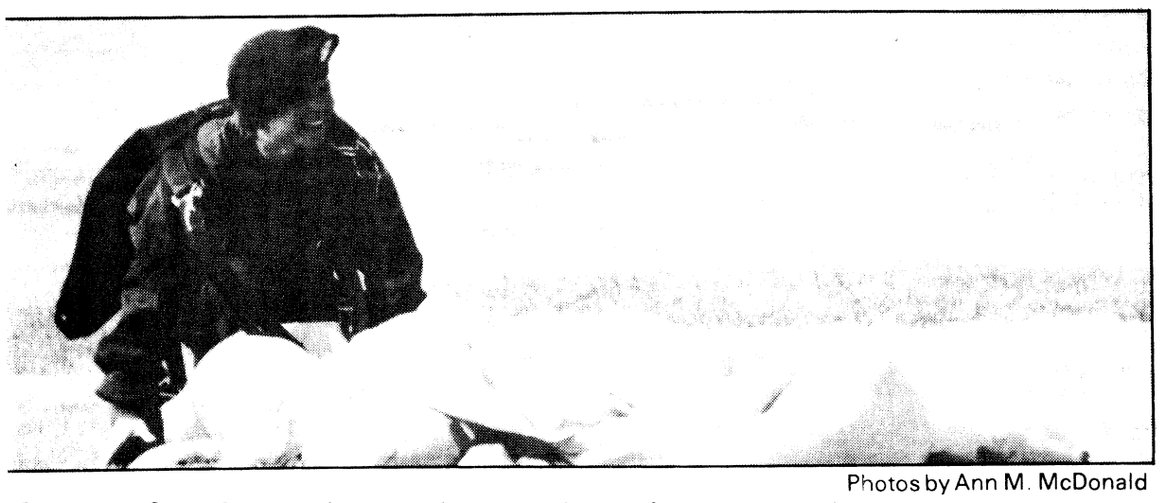
MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Military Police Activity

With the problem of criminal activity Army-wide and the rising larceny rate, it becomes very evident that precautionary measures must be taken to prevent crime. Larcenies have become a community problem in which each and every resident has been tasked to secure their own personal property.

One of the most significant words in our daily lives is security. No matter what situation you find yourself involved in, security is vitally involved. If we routinely follow good security practices, many criminal acts would be foiled in the attempt.

We, the residents of the Fort Benning community, can take steps to prevent crime in our own homes and neighborhoods. The most important step in fulfilling the goal of protecting life and property is for all members of the community to get involved in reporting suspicious activity and strangers in their area. When this is done, your military police are able to react quickly and prevent or stop the crime while it is in progress rather than deal with it after the fact.



One simple and easy way to protect yourself in the event you become a larceny victim is to mark and inventory all your personal property. This would not only increase the chances of property being recovered, but would also aid in apprehending a thief.

For miliatry personnel living in the barracks, it is required by USAIC regulation 190-31, to have property marked for identification and logged on two copies of post Form 20. One copy is to be kept by the unit commander and should be updated whenever you acquire a new piece of property.

The second copy is kept by the individual and updated as necessary.

Each of us should become involved and interested in our community if we are to have a truly safe place in which to live. Because the military is a very transient way of life, we often find ourselves being relocated to different installations.

Additional information on this and related subjects can be obtained from the crime prevention section of the Provost Marshall's Office at 545-7115.

Troop flys high with Silver Wings

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

After jumping out into the sky at 8,000 feet, SSgt. Jan Gustafson is always the last one to land on the ground; but she's flying high as the first active duty woman on the Command Exibition Parachute Team the "Silver Wings."

Gustafson, a "Black Hat" instructor with Charlie Company, 1st of the 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment has been with the team since November and now has well over 50 freefall jumps.

"I wanted to learn to ski-dive as soon as I finished Airborne School," Gustafson said, "but I never had the chance in my unit at Fort Bragg."

Well opportunity knocked on her door here, and she literally jumped at the chance to learn to ski-dive and is doing very well.

At the recent Military Nationals Parachuting Championships at Fort Bragg, N.C. Gustafson placed sixth out a field of 40 competitors in the style portion of the competition.

"She did great at the competition," said SFC James Walker, Non-Commissioned Officer in Charge of the "Silver Wings," "especially since she doesn't have as much experience as most of the other jumpers had."

The eight year Army veteran says she enjoys being a member of team. "It's exciting, but it takes up a lot of personal time because we do a lot of demonstrations on weekends in various places in Georgia and surrounding states."

"The meets are really fun," she said, "because that is where you learn the most, because you're able to watch other people's techniques and you are also being evaluated by someone other than your team-mates."

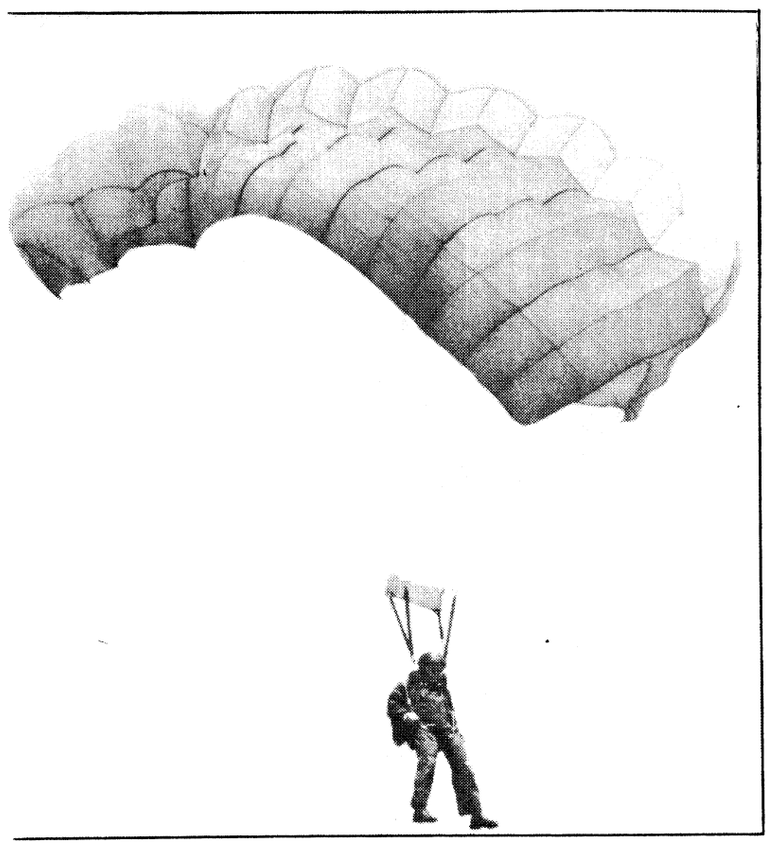
Although Gustafson is doing well in Sport Parachuting she has already proven herself in the military arena as she holds the Master Parachutist Badge, rare for a woman, as they are not normally slotted in a position to earn them particularly in her field which is a Blackhawk mechanic.

Gustafson said she worked hard to earn those wings. "I set standards for myself and I can't stand to see anything substandard."

As the lone female airborne instructor she won't accept anything but the best from her students either. "I like molding them and I put pressure on them to remember things," she said, "I try to make my squad stick together and help each other."

The female students don't quite know how to take this 5 foot 1 inch dynamo. "Sometimes I hear them whispering about me," Gustafson said, "but it doesn't bother me because then I know I'm doing my job."

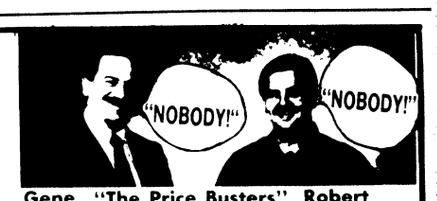
"I'm here to train, to explain to them what exactly is going on and to make them understand why they have to do certain things," she said. "not to be nice to them."



There is another side to Gustafson, she has a 4-year old son, and attends night school as well. She recently earned her associates degree and is pursuing her Bachelor's Degree.

Where does she find the time?

"I set goals for myself, and it takes a lot of discipline on my part," she said, "but I feel it is worth it."



What does Gustafson see in her future? "I plan to try out for the Golden Knights," she said, "and my chances look pretty good; they expressed their interest when I was competing in the Nationals."

With Gustafson's track record thus far turning the "Silver" into "Gold" is just a matter of time.

SSgt. Jan Gustafson glides in for a landing.

Commissary provides refunds for damaged goods

Troop Support Agency

FORT LEE, Va. — Imagine you're putting away the groceries you just bought at the Army commissary and discover that the beautiful apple is really rotten to the core, and somehow a jar of pickled pigs feet jumped into your shopping cart while you weren't looking.

Karl Malden might ask, "What will you do? What will you do?"

Well, the folks at the Troop Support Agency, managers of Army commissaries world wide, suggest you act like an American: express your disbelief, travel to the commissary and ask them to check out your problem. Nicely, of course.

But wait a minute! before returning the merchandise you'll have to find the commissary sales receipt. Don't leave home without it.

Now you can safely return to the scene of the crime. Just show the commissary officer what went wrong. In the case if the rotten apple or any other product, perishable or non-perishable; which obviously had a hidden defect at the time of purchase, you'll be given a cash refund.

But in the case of the jumping jar of pickled pigs feet, it's a whole different story. Normally, a cash refund isn't given for merchandise returned because the customer no longer wants it.

Alcoholic parents cause lifelong harm to their children

By Jackie Svyzek
The Cannoneer

An estimated 28 million Americans have at least one alcoholic parent. Until recently, it wasn't fully recognized that those Americans had trouble living normal lives because of parental alcoholism.

According to Chap. (Lt. Col.) Alan Tyson of the Chaplain Family Life Center at Fort Sill, Okla., that's changing in the form of a national movement begun in 1987.

"The National Association for Children of Alcoholics is the fastest growing self-support group in the U.S.," he said. "People, as adults are coming to realize the influence of parental alcoholism."

A chapter of the group, is being started at Fort Sill, where they will meet weekly at the Chaplain Family Life center. Tyson said he saw a need for it during counseling sessions.

"Once I was acquainted with the characterisitics and impact on adult children of alcoholics. I became sensitive to them in clients and friends," he explained.

Tyson identified the three common factors that dominate the lives of children of alcoholics: the children don't feel, don't trust and don't talk.

He said that, at best, children of alcoholics grow up with parents who are unavailable emotionally, who are unreliable and who are the object of shame. Statistics reveal the worst problem: Alcoholism is a factor in up to 90-percent of all child abuse cases.

Sharon, daughter of an alcoholic mother, said the best description of how she felt, even as an adult, was "disconnected." Even when my mother died, the disease didn't go away. My mother was not abusive, but she was unavailable and I had to learn to rely totally on myself."

James, son of an alcoholic father, agrees. "I had to get over feeling like I was crazy. I grew up in an abusive home, and the first time I faced it I was 40 years old. I saw what was happening now and the connection to them."

Tyson said that what comes of a lifetime of broken promises and an inability to feel close to one's parents, as well as the child's perception that he should be able to "fix it" doesn't so away with adulthood. Often, alcoholics' children have a neurotic need to be in control of everything in their lives.

Finding someone to talk to is difficult because trust and communication are so difficult and they don't acknowledge the role that the alcoholic parent played.

"They are so used to the conspiracy of silence, and the need to ignore the problem, that some are in their thirties and forties before they begin to admit, yes, they did deal with a lot and it affected them tremendously," Tyson said.

Sharon said what she and others like herself hope to do is to define "normal." One of the things adult children struggle with is trying to figure out what normal is and affirm themselves.

The group will meet to discuss feelings and build an atmosphere of trust for the first time in their lives.

Readers desiring to help form other local chapters may find more information available from Chap. (Lt. Col.) Richrd L. Adams, U.S. Army Chaplain Board, Fort Monmouth, N.J. 07703-5000 (AUTOVON 992-2401), or from the association itself.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Svyzek writes for Fort Sill's post newspaper, "The Cannoneer."

A GOOD PART-TIME JOB IS HARD TO FIND.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Did you know that one out of three Americans now "moonlights" to help make ends meet?

But as a returning veteran, you don't have to "moonlight." If you want an extra income, just "weekend" once a month with your local Army Reserve unit.

For instance, an E-5 with four years' experience now earns over $130 for a weekend's work. Over $2,000 a year, counting two weeks annual training pay.

As a Reservist, you also get PX privileges, low-cost life insurance, and retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have an extra income waiting when you get home?

It can be arranged. See your unit commander, or talk to your in-service recruiter, listed below. Act fast. Good part-time jobs are scarce.

Senior service college selection board meets next month

Army News Service

WASHINGTON -- The 1987 Senior Service college Selection Board will meet July 21 to select officers for attendance at various senior service colleges and to identify officers eligible to take the college's non-resident corresponding studies course.

Officials at the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va., say that selection for the course is based on an order-of-merit list ranking for the applicants in a given year. About 180 officers on the list have the chance to sign up for the course.

Each year, officers interested in applying must so notify their assignment managers by Dec. 15.

To be eligible for selection, an officer must--

- Have completed a minimum of 16 years (192 months) but not more than 23 years (276 months) of active federal commissioned service as of Oct. 1, 1988;
- Hold the rank of lieutenant colonel or colonel on the board's convene date;
- Be a graduate of, or have credit for completion of, a command and staff level college;
- Not have attended, received credit for attendance nor declined to attend in residence a senior service college or an equated foreign school as specified in AR 351-1 (Individual Military Education and Training).

Officials explain that reserve component officers on the active duty list, who are otherwise eligible, will remain eligible for senior service college consideration so long as they will not reach their mandatory release dates from active duty before the board convenes.

Smokers must use care to prevent fires

Fire Prevention Section

The control of smoking habits is sometimes a difficult problem to solve. The desire on the part of some people to smoke sometimes is in direct conflict with the concern the effect of smoking in certain areas will have on the level of fire safety and other activities for which a smoke-filled atmosphere is detrimental.

In some instances, complete prohibition is unrealistic; often careful regulation of smoking can achieve the same result.

If smoking regulations are necessary. They should be specific as to location and preferably as to time. The area where smoking is prohibited, as well as those areas where it is limited or prohibited, must be clearly marked by appropriate signs so there is no question.

The consequences of fire in areas containing flammable liquids and dusty and linty atmospheres are fairly obvious; interest in self-preservation makes smoking control relatively easy. It is in the less obvious areas, such as shipping and receiving areas with their large quantities of loose packing materials and storage spaces, which may have high-piled concentrations of combustible materials, where control of smoking is required.

Smoking control, in addition to sensible regulations, also require adequate receptacles for spent smoking materials. Not ony are properly designated ashtrays essential to safe smoking, but the disposal of the contents of ashtrays must be done with due realization of the possibilitythat a live "butt" may be present in apparently innocuous ashes. Covered metal containers, reserved for discarded smoking materials only, are desirable for this purpose.

Ash trays of improper design may constitute a hazard, particularly trays which allow a partially consumed cigarette to fall or roll offa tray, since the lighted "butt' may readily come in contact with combustible materials and start a fire under certain conditions. Ashtrays preferably are of noncombustible materials and have grooves or snuffers to hold cigarettes safely, with sides steep enough so that users are forced to place cigarettes entirely within the tray.

In business and industrial buildings, large containers of sand are a convenient and safe means for the extinguishment and disposal of smoking material.

going to show us and the rest of the Army how to do business better and we will document it. Army contracting has a responsibility to the taxpayers to use funds efficiently and we have a responsibility to local areas that provide services to ensure all contracts are awarded fairly and administered correctly. This is an important area and the Army is realizing it more every day," Boucher said.

The prototype project team will spend one week at Benning's Directorate of Contracting, talking with and observing how the contracting personnel do business and will then move on to the other three posts chosen as prototypes; Fort Bragg, N.C., Fort Lee, Va., and Fort Stewart, Ga.

Soldier's hard efforts pay off with West Point appointment

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

After an impatient wait, one soldier's dream is about to become a reality.

PFC Jeffrey A. Jones pushed his way through One Station Unit Training, one year of college and three months of active duty for one express purpose...to attend the United States Military Academy at West Point.

"I had a school guidance counselor suggest West Point and from that point on I have tried to get in," said Jones, a distribution clerk for the Headquarters, Headquarters Company 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The persistent soldier went from high school in his home town of North Andover, Mass., to college at Pensacola Christian College in Pensacola, Fla.

Jones majored in mechanical engineering, then decided to join the Army. "I joined because I thought it would better my chance of getting into the academy," he said. He had applied once as a civilian and then ried again after his enlistment. But he said what really helped his fight was when Massachusetts Congressman Nicholas Mavroules nominated him to the academy.

"That was a real boost for me," Jones said. "Everybody says that the nomination is the big thing."

But the first nomination wasn't quite enough. "I was competing against guys who had almost perfect Standford Achievement Test scores," he said. Jones felt that his lack of an area representative hurt his efforts. "I didn't realize until later how important that representative is," he said.

Then Maj. Mark Grazier, a reservist liaison officer and West Point graduate, took Jones under his wing. "I was his first case and I guess I became sort of a special interest to him," Jones said.

The tenacious 19-year-old infantry soldier kept the faith and April 3, after another nomination by Mavroules and many phone calls by Grazier, Jones received his letter of acceptance. "I'll begin cadet basic training on July 1. If all goes well I'll be in the graduating class of 1991," he said.

Jones doesn't expect any problems at West Point and looks forward to the school. "They call cadet basic training the "beast barracks," but it couldn't be any harder than OSUT. I'd like to go up there and be a plattoon leader. I was a squad leader in basic training," he said.

PFC Jeffrey A. Jones looks a plaque of former post commanders. Laurie J. Ibarra

He said he hopes to get an assignment in aviation or the Corp of Engineers after graduation. "Either way I hope to get an engineering degree," he said.

Upon his graduation, Jones will be commissioned a second lieutenant and be committed to the Army for five years.

Tank exercise provides more than just smoke for 197th Inf. troops

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade

When the smoke cleared, the soldiers stood back in awe as Company D, 3-7 Infantry Battalion recently had a close-up view of a tank spewing off thick white smoke to osbcure its presence against enemy observation. The experience was apart of a tank familiarization day which was provided to the infantrymen by the tankers of 2-69 Armor Battalion.

The purpose of tank familiarization is to have infantry and tanks work as one unit so that together the two forces are unstoppable.

SFC Winfed R. Wofford, the primary instructor said, "this is preparation for NTC (National Training Center); our main goal is to beat the OPFOR and in doing so we will be using the CAT system (Close Assault Tactics)."

The CAT system, which has been used by other units, is a new strategy for the 197th Brigade. In essence, it deploys a leap frogging effect where tanks move forward in position and lay in heavy fire, then the Infantry rush forward and lay in fire and it goes on and on until the enemy is finally defeated. To protect each other is the main purpose. It is a slow process but deliberate.

The tank familiarization day was a good one," said Pvt. Don A. Sylveseter. "It's teaching me more about the tank where as before I didn't know anything; it makes me respect the tank more because now I've seen its capabilities and how it operates."

George Mingee

Tankers from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor explain the functions of a tank to infantrymen from 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry.

Using a few simple precautions can help prevent lifting injuries

Safety Office

The Fort Benning Safety Office is pushing helpful techniques in lifting, which may prevent injuries occuring in the movement of supplies and equipment.

The most common and most hazardous of the lifting techniques is the manual lift. But even the manual lift is a simple and safe procedure, if done properly.

After examining the object, noting its size, shape and weight, checking the path to the destination and ensuring that it is free of any obstruction, it is then time to lift.

A proper lift consists of squatting with your legs slightly bent and your back as straight as possible. While grasping the object on opposite corners, draw it as close to your body as possible while straightening your legs.

Sliding, scooting, shoving, pushing and pulling are also forms of moving. When moving something, always ensure you have secure footing, since a sudden slip can be disastrous. Many objects by virtue of their size or length, must be carried by more than one person.

When a multiple person carry is used, carriers should be of similar height. If people of similar height cannot be used, then place the shorter person in front and taller one in the rear.

If a load, such as a desk, must be carried up a stairway, lighten it as much as possible and take one step at a time. The person at the rear will be the one carrying most of the weight, so use the strongest person in that position. The front person should do as little lifting and pulling as possible, in that he will be in an extremely unsafe position to lift.

Grabbing for the gold

Benning gymnasts bring home nine med... from Georgia Special Olympics competi...

By Beth Middlemiss

Gliding along the balance beam, fifth grader Heather Myers of Loyd School captured a gold medal at the Georgia Special Olympics in Warner Robins, Ga., recently. Heather and her teammates — Robert Thompson, Tyrone Fleming and Patrick Cucarese — brought home a total of nine gold, silver and bronze medals from the competition.

"The state competition provided our students the opportunity to compete at the state level in balance beam, floor exercises and vaulting," said Mark Underwood, Fort Benning school psychologist, a member of the staff who accompanied the young athletes. "It also provided a wide variety of experiences for these youngsters."

"The children did exceptionally well for their first time in competition," said Jean Anderson, Loyd School special education teacher. "Participation in the local exhibitions and in the state competiton kept their interest level high, and they practiced enthusiastically."

The four Loyd team members have p... for these events during and after school h... many weeks with their teacher's aide, Mis... Phaedra Parker, who is a gymnastics instructor. With Parker's help, the four athletes and several of their Loyd School classmates presented a gymnastics exhibition at the regional Special Olympics competiton held in Columbus earlier this spring.

"Our trip to the state competition lasted from Friday morning through Sunday afternoon," said Underwood. "In addition to the fun and excitement of participating in the events and marching in the opening ceremony, the children saw fireworks displays, stayed in a motel, and were entertained by the U.S. Air Force Bagpipe Band.

This trip is one that we will all remember. The excitement and pride seen on the faces of theyoung Olympians makes all the preparation and effort worthwhile. They are already looking forward to next year's winter and spring games."

SPIRITUAL

Does your behavior depend on others?

By William Putman
Director of Religious Education

A blind lady and her guide dog were riding on a bus in a large city recently. A problem arose on the bus and in the rush by many passengers to get off the bus, the blind lady and her dog were knocked to the floor and stepped on.

The lady desperately called for help, but receiving none, she finally made her way off the bus and into the street where she again cried out repeatedly for help and again received none.

In the end, she and the dog, both injured and bleeding, walked unassisted several blocks back to their home.

This incident brings to mind the old question, "What is our society coming to?" Have we become a society of people who do good or act honestly or honorably only when we know it will make us look good to our friends, our commander or someone else whom we respect?

How many of us break rules, regulations and laws when we think or hope we are not being observed? How many go to church and review the commandments, and then live the balance of the week in an unconscientious manner? We call that "getting by" or "getting over." It is not stealing or lying, and aren't we guilty of not helping our neighbor unless there is a reward?

There are many dos and don'ts in the Bible, but two themes that are prominent throughout are: love God first and your neighbor as yourself, and treat each accordingly, and you cannot fool God.

The good news is that another theme which is prominent throughout the Bible is that God is a forgiving and understanding God.

Below is a list of questions for your consideration:

- Do I wilfully exceed the speed limit until I see a patrolman?
- Do I stop and help attractive people in good cars on the highway and pass by others?
- Do I brief others on the illegality of using the AUTOVON and WATS lines for other than official calls, but then call friends and relatives myself?
- When working with the yard man, do I take a lemonade break and let him drink from the garden hose?
- Do I show proper concern for my employess no matter how unglamorous their job is?
- Do I welcome an opportunity to speak, sing or act at a prestigious gathering, but shun an opportunity to help in a chapel or a Sunday school?
- Do I tell the check-out clerk when a mistake is made in my favor?
- Do I thank those who do a good job even though they might be getting paid for the work?

Soldiers retreat to Callaway Gardens

Weekend at beach a chance for troops to grow spiritually

By David Penland
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Dave Penland

Soldiers from the 3-7th Infantry and the 72nd Engineers join together in fellowship.

Soldiers of the 197th Infantry Brigade hit the beach at Callaaway Gardens recently. In all, 23 soldiers from 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, also known as the "Cottonbalers," and nine from the 72nd Engineers (Combat) were led by Chaplain (Capt.) Dave Penland on a single soldiers retreat.

As the bus rolled away from Cottonbaler Court, the voices of the 32 soldiers could be heard singing, "Give me gas in my Ford, keep me trucking for the Lord."

Sun shinging brightly in a beautiful Georgia blue sky, the soldiers headed off for a great escape. The weekend included two nights of lodging at Roosevelt State Park, a day at Callaway Garden's inviting beach and a Sunday tour of the late president, Franklin D. Roosevelt's summer home, "The Little White House" in Warm Springs, Ga., where he waged a personal war against polio.

Aside from healthy doses of frivolity, girl watching at the beach, volleyball or softball playing, the soldiers entered into discussions each evening with their chaplain on "Our worth in God's eyes," based on Luke, Chapter 15; "How we can use our lives productively," based on Matthew, Chapter 25:14-30, and Sunday morning's worship focused on "Living our Faith," using as a basis for the discussion Matthew 25:31-46.

The soldiers seemed to enjoy the trip. "I liked the evening talks," said Bill Edwards of Company C, 3-7th Infantry.

"I enjoyed just getting away, and I especially liked the group singing," said Robert Whipple of Company B, 3-7th Infantry.

Willie Lopez of Company D, 3-7th, caught a bass but almost lost a fishing pole at Roosevelt Park, and Larry Pedro of the 72nd Engineers shot an 89 on one of the Garden's 18-hole golf courses.

Sunday following worship, and a tour of, "The Little White House," many of the group enjoyed a delicious meal at the Tea House in Warm Springs, Ga., a building from the middle 1800s surrounded by craft shops full of beautiful antique furniture, china dolls, needlecraft and other art works.

Russ Chesebro, the guitarist for the weekend excursion, summed up opinions by saying, "It was just the right amount of recreation and spiritual renewal; let's do it again."

CHAPEL BRIEFS

Buses to pick up Bible school kids

Vacation Bible Schools begins at 9 a.m. Monday at Dexter and Wilson Schools, and continues daily through June 19. It is open to children ages 4 years through those who have completed the sixth grade.

The program will consist of Bible study, crafts, music, recreation and refreshments and will be from 9 to 11:30 a.m. daily.

Children who have not completed the first grade must be accompanied by an older brother or sister in order to ride the bus. Bus routes are as follows:

Davis Hills: The red bus route will begin at approximately 8:35 a.m. It begins at Kawamura Street, on to Port Street, Hartsock Loop and then Buker Drive and proceeds to Dexter School.

Bouton Heights: The blue bus route will begin at 8:35 a.m. at the south end of 1st Cavalry Division Road, going through Doane Loop, and stopping at entrances to courts along the way to Marne Road, proceeding to Dexter School.

McGraw Manor: The green bus route will begin at 8:25 a.m., at Baker Street, to Arrowhead Road, down to Moon Road and on to Dexter School.

McGraw Manor-Custer Terrace: The purple bus route will begin at 8:25 a.m. Its route begins at McGraw Street and Leonard Street, then proceeds to Custer Terrace and arrives at the Custer Terrace Chapel at 8:40 a.m.

For the return routes, all buses will begin loading at 11:30 a.m. at Dexter School, and depart as soon as loaded. Passengers will be unloaded in the same order as they were picked up.

Writing bad checks can ruin your credit history

By Maureen E. Roth
Ironsides

It's a small word, but the problems it can cause are anything but small.

The problems can take many forms, ranging from an overdrawn checkbook and an abundance of credit charges to unpaid rent and utility bills.

Bad checks are one of the biggest financial problems involving soldiers," said Capt. Mark Atkinson, deputy finance officer, 17th Finance Support Unit. He said his finance office processes at least 30 bad checks per month, and that Army and Air Force Exchange System and the military communities experience the same problem. "We have three bad-check lists going at one time," said Atkinson.

Atkinson explained that many soldiers have the misconception that because they have checks, there must be money in the account. He said the same holds true for the automatic teller machines.

"Soldiers think if the machine keeps giving them money, then it's ok."

Unfortunately, it's not okay. One bad check can bounce back and bite. Not only are there service charges on the bad check (for example, $15 per check at the 17th Finance Support Unit), but often the person can lose check-writing privileges, have his commander notified and lose a good credit rating.

Many bad checks, said Atkinson, result from trying to "float" the check, that is knowing there aren't enough funds to cover the check now, but hoping that by the time the check clears, the money will be in the account.

"People can't count on that. Many soldiers think that by being overseas, a stateside check will take a long time to clear; that's just not the case," said Atkinson.

Under the Uniform Code of Military Justice soldiers may be prosecuted for repeatedly and purposely writing bad checks. According to Capt. Dana Ashford, 1st Armored Div. chief of legal assistance. "Writing bad checks can be a serious offense. A person who writes a bad check, and knows that he has nothing in the bank to cover it, is stealing from the bank."

The code states that the maximum penalty for purposely writing bad checks for $100 or less is a bad conduct discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances and confinement for up to six months. For checks of $100 or more, the maximum penalty is a dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances and confinement for up to five years.

With the dollar's decline, the difference between paying rent and other obligations in dollars or German marks can be staggering.

"It's not unusual for soldiers to enter contracts in Germany and be paying in dollars to the bank, but the contract is in Deutsche marks. As the dollar goes down the bank will notify them that they have to increase the dollar amount they are paying; most times they haven't planned for that," said Ashford.

Ashford said that soldiers are particularly vulnerable to debt around the time of permanent change of station move.

"Anytime you PCS you should watch it, especially when you move overseas. I suggest being very conservative for the first four to six months to see what your budget's going to look like," said Ashford.

When soldiers incur bad debts it becomes difficult, if not impossible, to maintain a good credit rating, according to Ashford. This rating is the key to getting a loan to buy a house or car. Credit cards, when used properly, provide a solid opportunity to establish this rating. Another way to establish credit overseas is by using the deferred payment plan, also referred to as DPP, offered by AAFES. It works much like a credit card, but only charges 12-percent annual interest. Credit limits are based on rank and financial obligations.

When financial problems get out of hand, they usually turn into legal problems. Ashford said he (and his staff) see 75-100 cases per month regarding people who are having some sort of monetary conflict with another person.

"As soon as you have an inkling that there's something wrong and that you're having problems with your finances, you should go see your local Army Community Service," Ashford advised. The ACS has trained financial counselors to help soldiers and their family members with financial matters.

Anne Runnberg, financial counselor for the Furth ACS explained that ACS is there to help with everything from balancing a checkbook to debt liquidation. "The counselors," said Runnberg, "will stick with the soldier for as long as it takes to get everything cleared up."

Be aware of warning signs of espionage involvement

By Donna Bolinger
Army News Service

Long before Ronald Pelton was convicted in 1985 for selling U.S. Military secrets to the Soviet Union, many of his former coworkers at the National Security Agency knew he was broke and heavily in debt.

But only after his arrest did it become clear that Pelton's indebtendness, coupled with his knowledge of top-secret military communications info made him ripe for recruitment by Soviet intelligence.

Identifying individuals most vulnerable to espionage — and whenever possible, offering them help - is one of the main objectives of the Department of Defense personnel security programs.

DOD Directive 5200. 2-R which governs this program, urges people holding security clearances to report behavior that could make them vulnerable to blackmail or coercion. The directive also calls on co-workers, commanders and managers to report such behavior by others who hold clearances.

Although on the books since 1979, the directive was recently broadened in response to recommendations of the DOD Security review commission, better known as the Still commission.

Among the factors specified in both the original and the revised directive as potential vulnerabilities: severe indebtedness, mental or emotonal problems, drug or alcohol abuse, criminal conduct and sexual misconduct.

The element of the revised directive that has raised the most controversy, both within and outside the defense department, is an expanded definition of "sexual misconduct."

The directive describes it as "acts of sexual misconduct or perversion indicative or moral turpitude, poor judgment, or lack of regard for the laws of society."

Such behavior, the directive specifies, includes: prostitution, sexual harassment, spouse-swapping, orgies, sodomy, child molestation, exhibitionism and incest. It also includes adultery "that is recent, frequent and likely to continue and has an adverse effect on good order or discipline within the workplace."

The image of "big brother" forcing employees to divulge their most intimate secrets — or even more offensive, those of another - has caused considerable public outcry. The directive's most vocal opponents have been gay rights groups, who view it as anti-gay.

DOD security policy inspector Peter Nelson stresed that the DOD personnel security program has little interest in, and does not intend to stand in judgment of worker's adult sexual relationships.

Area medical units respond to mock chemical accident

By Barbara Orenduff
Fort McClellan Public Affairs Office

Civilian and military medical teams from local hospitals recently tested their ability to respond to mass casualty situation involving chemical injuries.

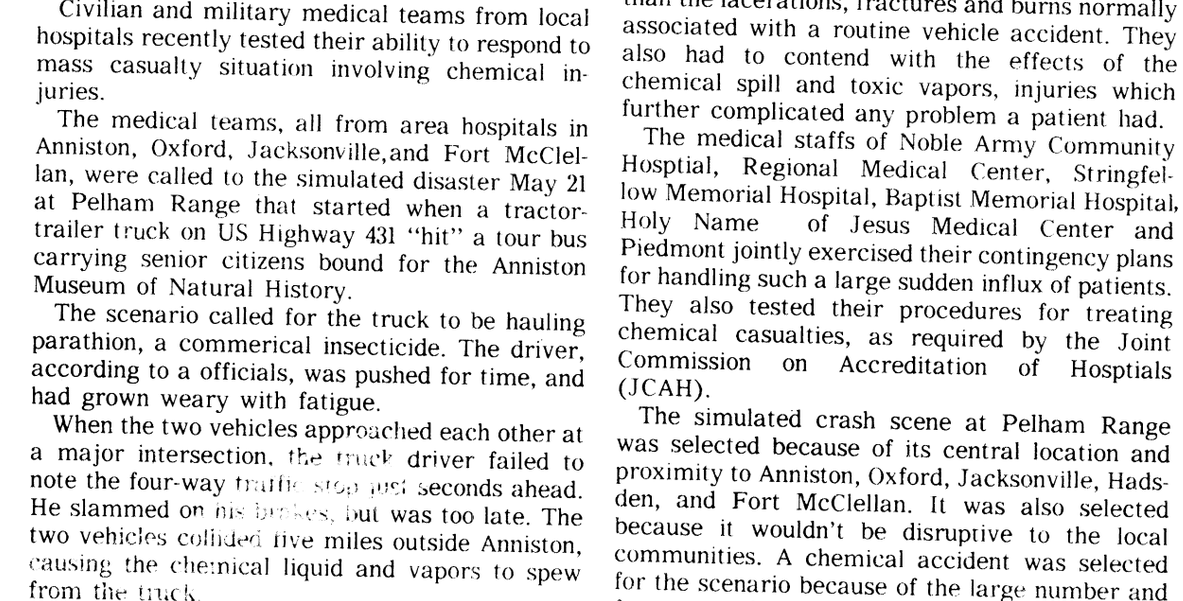
The medical teams, all from area hospitals in Anniston, Oxford, Jacksonville,and Fort McClellan, were called to the simulated disaster May 21 at Pelham Range that started when a tractor-trailer truck on US Highway 431 "hit" a tour bus carrying senior citizens bound for the Anniston Museum of Natural History.

The scenario called for the truck to be hauling parathion, a commerical insecticide. The driver, according to a officials, was pushed for time, and had grown weary with fatigue.

When the two vehicles approached each other at a major intersection, the truck driver failed to note the four-way traffic stop just seconds ahead. He slammed on his brakes, but was too late. The two vehicles collided five miles outside Anniston, causing the chemical liquid and vapors to spew from the truck.

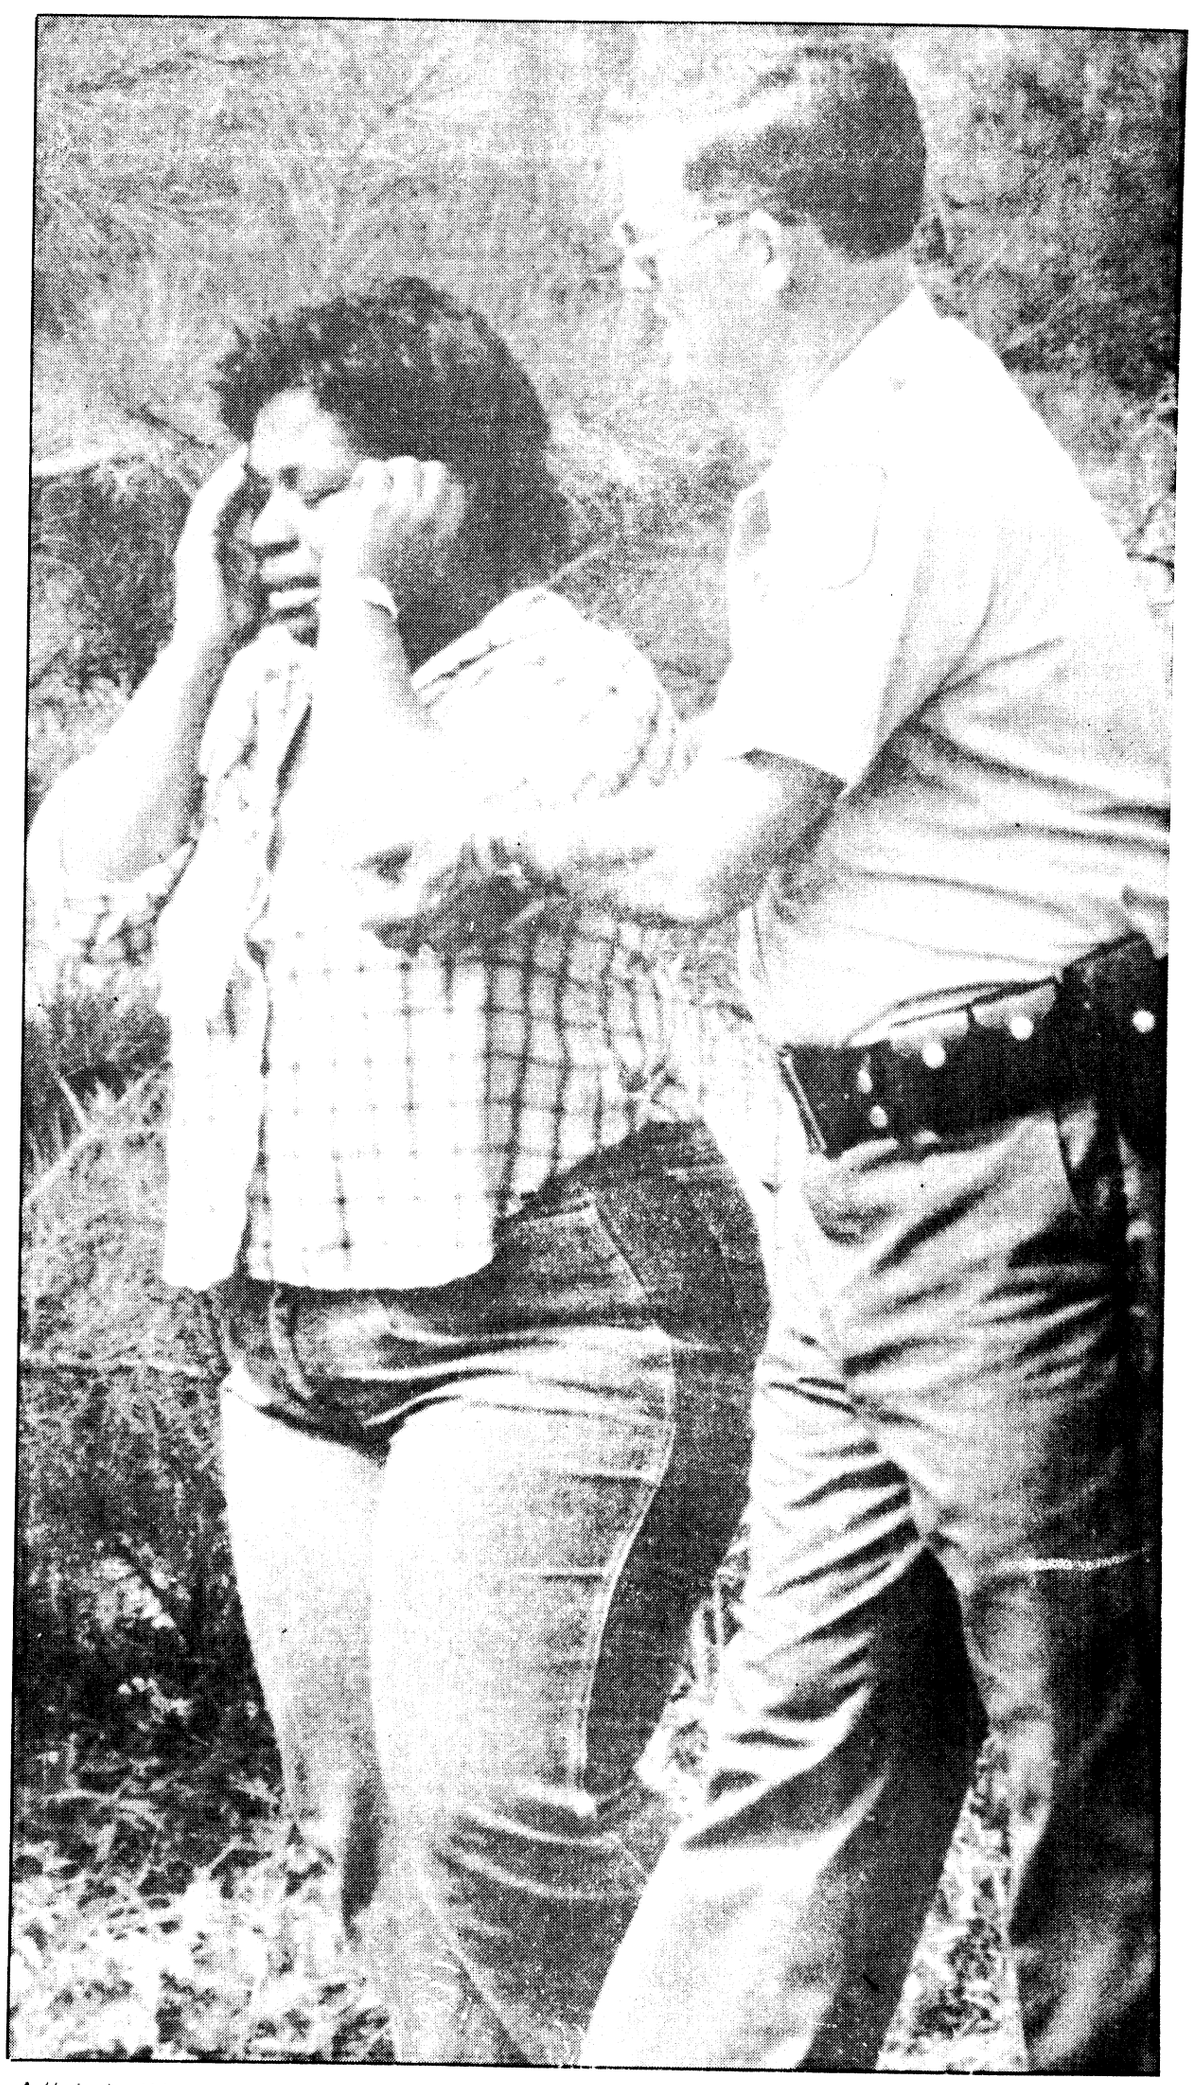
The exercise was made life-like with 85 people acting as victims that had been seriously injured or overcome by the chemical liquid and vapors as a result of the collision. The 85 "victims" were Fort McClellan soldiers and senior nursing students from Jacksonville State University.

The medical teams were called to the scene to provide emergency first aid and triage. The medical physician-in-charge at the accident scene requested air transport from nearby military units. The 498th Air Ambulance Company from Fort Benning, Ga., responded and transported the actors protraying critically injured patients to local community hosptials via a UH-60A Blackhawk and a UH-1H Huey helicopter.



Doctors and emergency room staffs were suddenly overwhelmed by patients with more injuries than the lacerations, fractures and burns normally associated with a routine vehicle accident. They also had to contend with the effects of the chemical spill and toxic vapors, injuries which further complicated any problem a patient had.

The medical staffs of Noble Army Community Hosptial, Regional Medical Center, Stringfellow Memorial Hospital, Baptist Memorial Hospital, Holy Name of Jesus Medical Center and Piedmont jointly exercised their contingency plans for handling such a large sudden influx of patients. They also tested their procedures for treating chemical casualties, as required by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hosptials (JCAH).



The simulated crash scene at Pelham Range was selected because of its central location and proximity to Anniston, Oxford, Jacksonville, Hadsden, and Fort McClellan. It was also selected because it wouldn't be disruptive to the local communities. A chemical accident was selected for the scenario because of the large number and frequency of commercially transported chemical shipments transported on Alabama's state and federal highways.

According to Army officials, the exercise attempted to link the medical resources and abilities of all the hospitals in the area, both military and civilian, under one command and control element. Medical staffs from Noble Army Community Hospital and area civilian hospitals are required to work and train together throughout the year under mutual agreements.

This exercise tested the ability of the community to work together in times of crisis. It helped identify problem areas so that plans could be made for future training and improvements, according to medical officials.

The 498th Air Ambulance Company from Fort Benning, Ga., transports critically injured patients to local hospitals in a Blackhawk helicopter.

A "victim" is comforted after losing her baby in the accident.

The Fort Benning community depends on volunteers to keep the many service programs going which allows the Army to "take care of its own." The Volunteer Resource Center is a clearing house of information for all volunteer agencies on the installation and at the present time has many volunteer job opportunities available which enable people to gain experience for paid employment or to fine-tune current skills. If you are looking for something to fill your needs, please consider one of the following positions:

Administrative Assistant: The Volunteer Resource Center is looking for someone with typing and computer skills to assist in keeping the many records of our volunteers documented. Other responsibilities are answering phones, filing, talking to clients and referring to appropriate agencies.

Receptionist: If you like working with children, organizing activities and keeping records posted, we have an opening in the Learning Abilities Center under the Red cross Program.

Typist: A short term position needed to help compile a cookbook for the Child Development Services.

Caseworker: This position helps military families in emergency situations. Requires no previous experience, the Red Cross will provide training.

33Tour Guides: 31Why not try your hand at being a tour guide at the National Infantry Museum? Hours are flexible and you will find the training to be quite motivational.

Budget Counselor: Do you enjoy working with figures and planning and preparing budgets? Then ACS has the answer for you.

Thrift Shop: Interesting jobs in tagging and consignment, sales clerks, etc. at the Main Store, Furniture Barn or Craft Cabin.

Library: A position for the book worm. Duties include shelving books, putting up newspapers and repairing old books.

Receptionist: A busy job greeting visitors and directing them to the right place, plus answering phones. ACS and Family Life Center have openings in this field.

Youth Activities: This is for the person 16 years old or older who likes children and who would like to work with the Day Camp program.

Clerk: Lovers of animals will enjoy this position at the Vet Clinic. You will answer phones, file and fill out patient records.

Santa's Castle: For the "kid at heart," duties include repairing and cleaning old toys and making doll's clothes.

Free nursery care is provided at Tot Town and with some of the Child Care Givers. If you are looking for a position that you don't see listed the Volunteer Resource Center will assist you in finding the right job. For more information, call 545-5602 or stop by the office in Building 241, Room 210, at DPCA next to the Infantry Museum. Hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

ACS conducts slogan contest

Army Community Service is conducting an Army-wide contest to select a new marketing slogan.

Fort Benning is sponsoring a local campaign to solicit slogans from eligible prsonnel. All entries will be forwarded to Headquarters, Department of the Army, for consideration in the Army-wide contest.

The winner will win a $100 gift certificate from the post exchange. Two honorable mentions will also receive recognition.

Soldier-singer hopes to make it big in music business

By George Mingee
197th Brigade Correspondent

As the competiton started he just sat back, listened and waited for his turn to showcase his singing talent and prove he has what it takes to be a rising star.

Sgt. Jeff W. Chandler, fire support specialist from Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th field artillery, is a multi-talented individual whether at work of off-duty.

A fire support specialist or known also as a forward observer, he has a mission of locating the enemy and then sending the enemy's location to the artillery guns which will adjust fire onto that given location, He plays an integral role in ensuring that steel gets on target.

During the last forty years, at which time he was stationed in Germany, Chandler mainly displayed his talent in the 11C Military Occupational Specialtylevel which is an indirect fire infantryman. Not too long ago, he switched to his present MOS, because Chandler believed it would be better his promotion chances.

"The cut off scores for 11C promotions were too high, so at reenlistment time, I changed to 13F MOS," he said.

Unlike his career change, Chandler has not switched his love for singing and music.

He said, "Singing is something I've done since I was very young, I wasn't ever involved in drinking or drugs and that is the main point I'm trying to stress to young people."

Along with singing, Chandler had a very busy schedule in high school in Macon, Ga., as he also participated in football, basketball and baseball. The city of Macon is where Chandler first picked up singing.

"My father is a gospel singer he was a big influence on me when I was growing up," Chandler continued, I first started singing at St. Mary's Baptist Church in my hometown."

Not only does he sing gospel, but rock and roll and disco as well.

Last November, Chandler entered the local WOKS Radio Talent Show and won the Best Male Vocalist category.

"It was at that time, I first realized that I could win, when I evaluated myself against the others."

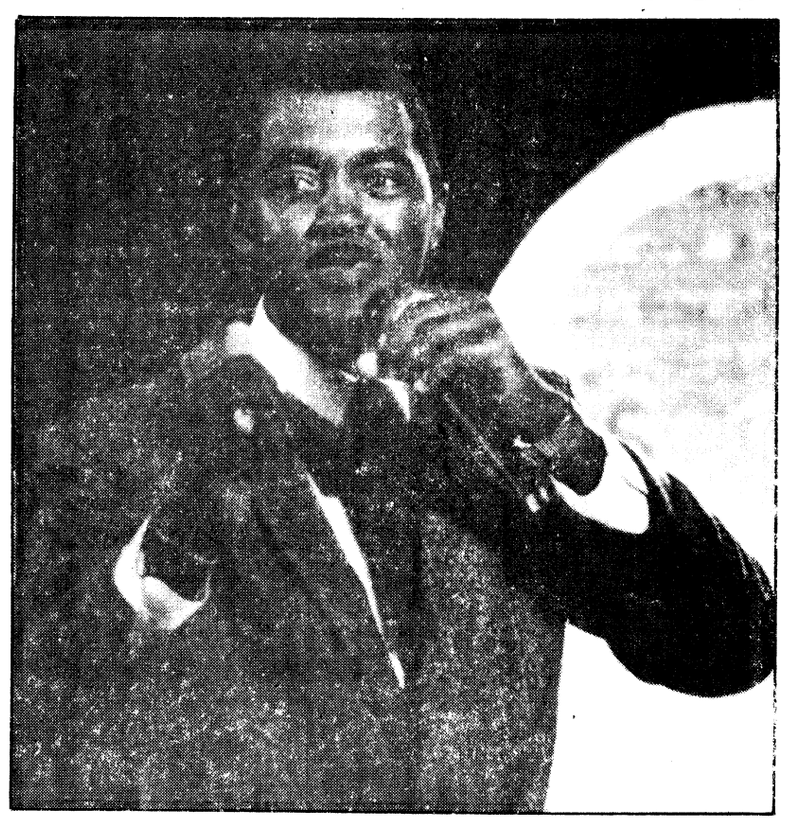
Already, the little exposure he's received appears to be establishing a favorable reputation.

"At times, I feel like a well-known celebrity, because people recognize me on the street. Also, I've even received a few requests from night clubs to sing," Chandler added.

With the exposure of singing, Chandler hopes to pursue it and maybe become a spokesman for the army, even so far as going on a type of tour such as the United Service Organization show.

Singing occupies a lot of his free time, however, he also likes to work with kids. Chandler stays active with kids as an umpire at little league baseball games.

"These games put me in direct contact with the kids; thereby, I'm able to communicate with them and positively influence them," he said.



Recently, Chandler also came in contact with Discovery Search, a regional talent program connected to Star Search (the national tv show), which came to town to evaluate the local talent. Chandler recognized the chance of a lifetime to prove he has what it takes to perform. With this in mind, Chandler entered the competiton.

Regardless of where he places in the recent talent search competiton, Chandler is already a rising star in many ways to a great majority of people.

Recreation Centers: Kelley Hill Recreation Center is offering the following activities to the Fort Benning community:

Self-Defense for Women — Learn to protect yourself while gaining poise and confidence. The center is sponsoring a series of classes in self-defense that meet each Wednesday and Thursday in June. Classes begin at 6 p.m. The fee for this invaluable course is only $20. Registration deadline is 9 p.m today. To register, call 544-1721.

Is your dog lovable, yet untrainable? Does your puppy pretend not to hear you calling? Does the word "Housebroken" seem to be only a dream?

The Recreation Center is currently scheduling dog obedience classes to begin soon. In order to provide the best possible service, a phone number has been set up for pet owners to call with information about what they need out of a dog obedience course.

If you are the proud owner of a playful pup, but need a helping hand in training it, call 544-1721 and leave your name and number. A staff member will contact you about the upcoming canine classes.

VA Q&A

Veterans Administration

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q: Do the VA eligibility assessment procedures apply to veterans age 65 and older?

A: VA's eligibility assessment procedures apply to all non-service—connected veterans regardless of age. Public Law 99-272 repealed a provision in The Veterans Omnibus Health Care Act of 1970 that allowed veterans 65 years of age or older to receive care in VA facilities regardless of income.

Q: Is there a penalty if a VA guaranteed home loan is partially or fully paid before it becomes due?

A: There is no penalty if a VA loan is partially or fully paid in advance.

Q: I heard that Congress passed a law authorizing special life insurance dividends for World War II veterans. I understand that veterans are entitled to this dividend even if they haven't kept their policies in force. Is this true?

A: No. The VA does not pay dividends on lapsed insurance policies. An insurance hoax that has plagued the VA since 1948 is refueled every few years by a distribution of "applications" that claim the Congress has authorized the dividends. There has been no such action nor is there any pending. Annual dividends on current GI insurance policies are paid by the VA to veterans who continue to pay premiums. Dividend payments are made automatically, usually on the anniversary date of the policy, and no application is needed.

Family fun

Prior planning key to ensuring your vacation is a pleasant one

By Sylvia McNair
Special to the Bayonet

You have just come back from a family trip. and soon it will be time to send the kids back to shcool. There's a good chance that one of them will be required to write an essay on "What I did on my summer vacation."

Will the report be fact or fiction? Will your daughter or son write a glowing account of the fun you had together, or will the report reflect squabbles, tears, boredom and disappointment that marred the experience you had hoped would be so enjoyable?

Now is the time ot make sure your next family vacation accentuates the positive. All it takes is careful planning, an upbeat attitude and a willingness to roll with the punches.

Here are a few hints:

- Involve all members of the family in pre-vacation discussion and planning.
- Choose a destination that has a variety of activities, so that all members of the family can do what they like best.
- Find out all you can about that destination.
- Plan for the trip to and from your destination, as well as the time you are there.
- Pack wisely.

Many families include a day or two at a theme park in their vacation plans. Such parks drew nearly 100 million visitors last year. They are safe and clean, the entertainment is wholesome, and the attendants are unfailingly courteous and friendly.

Most important, the variety of activities and entertainment gives each person something to enjoy. There are pleasant, easy carousel rides and kiddie cars, thrill rides that whip passengers through the air in breathtaking loops, Broadway-type musical shows, strolling entertainers and more.

The two Busch Garden theme parks — in Tampa, Fla., and Williamsburg, Va. — offer a couple of added bonuses. they take you on imaginary visits to far-off lands and they are located in areasfull of many other vacation attractions.

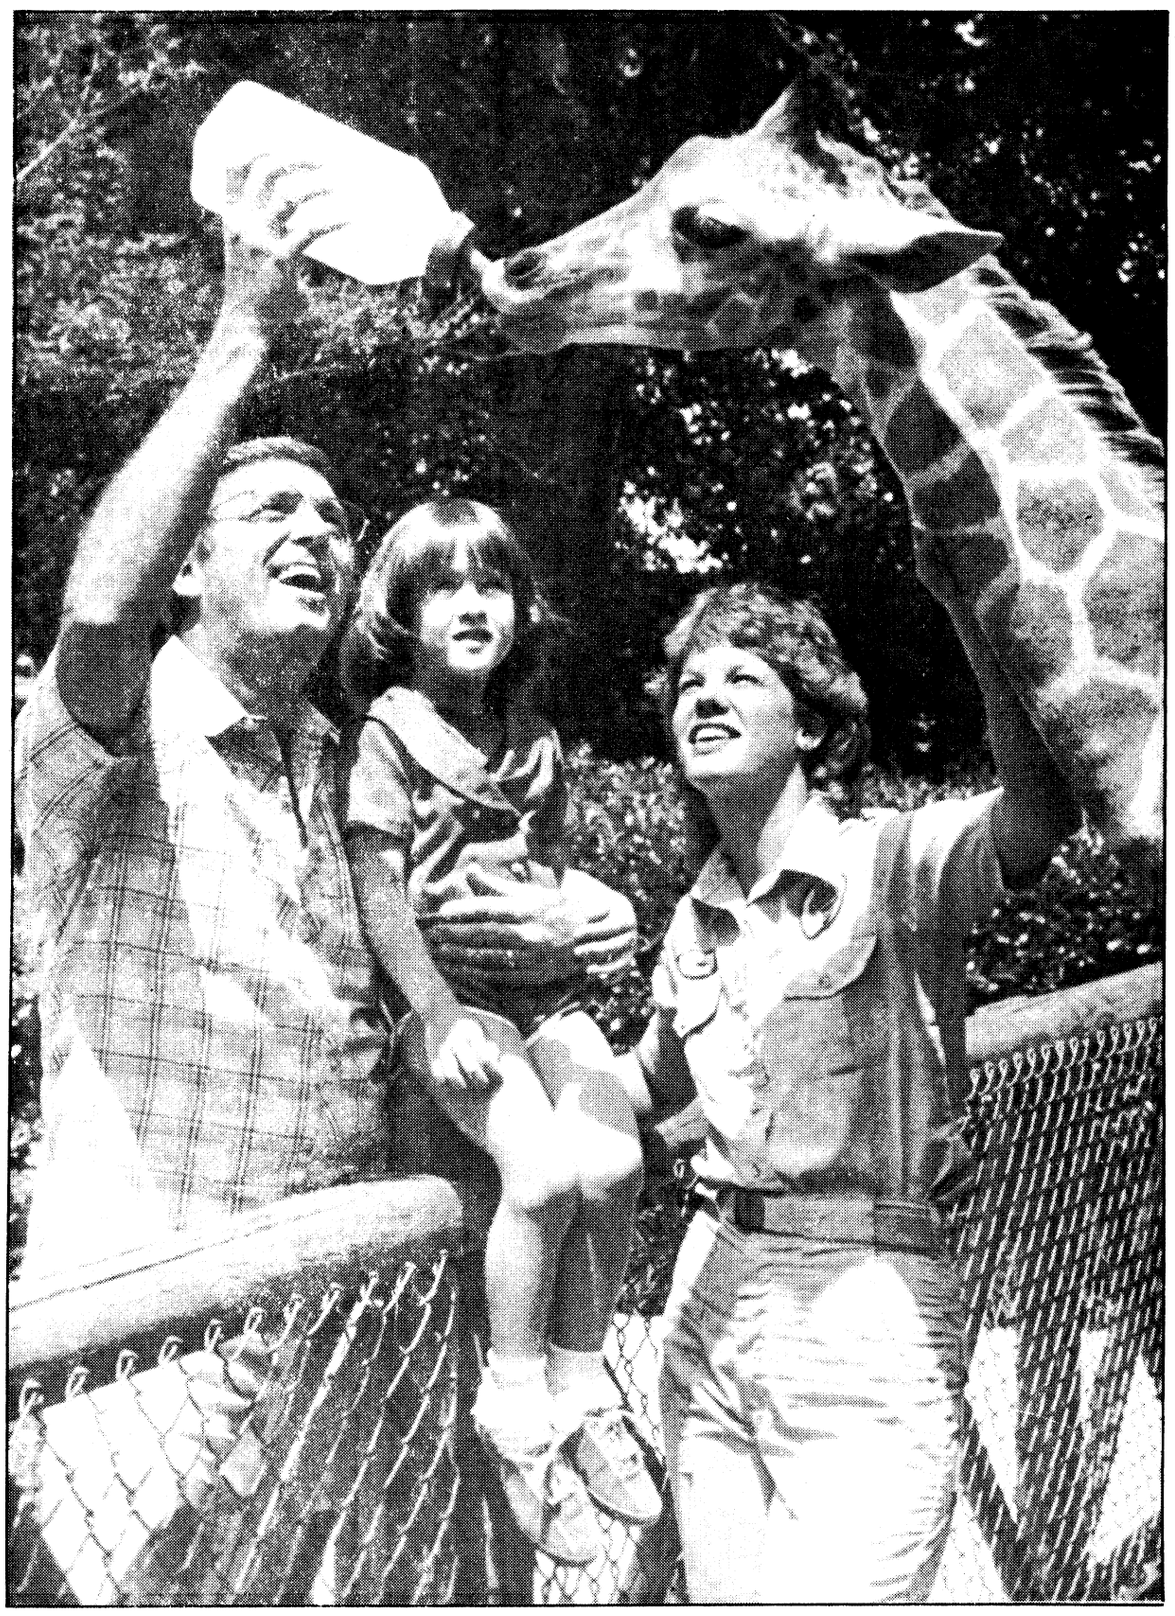
Tampa's park, Busch gardens, the Dark Continent, recreates turn-of-the-century Africa with seven distinctly themed sections, from Timbuktuand Morocco, to Nairobi and the Congo. Some 3300 animals, many of them endangered and threatened species, also live there, in what is actually one of the nations top three zoos.

Near Busch Gardens' theaters, restaurants, shops and rides, visitors stroll along pedestrian walkways, separated from the animals by wide moats and inconspicuous barriers, or go on "safari" by train or monorial. Giraffes, camels, lions, rare white Bengal tigers, gazelles, and chimps eat, sleep, play and roam freely in the large natural areas. Flamingoes ostriches, peacocks and hundreds of smaller birds add color to the scene.

Historic Tampa and the beaches of St. Petersburg and Clearwater are only a few minutes away from Busch Gardens, and all the other lively attractions of central Florida are easy to reach from there, too.

At Busch Gardens, the Old Country, in Williamsburg, Va., families can explore the heritage of our ancestors who came over from Europe in the 17th century. Separate villages let you travel in imagination to England, France, Germany, Scotland, Italy and New France (an early Canadian settlement). each section features rides, entertainment, and restaurants themed to that particualr country.

Big-name stars come to Busch Gardens, The Old Country to present concerts in a theater that seats more than 5,000 people. Many artists and craftsmen demonstrate their skills in shops and open-air settings. Some of them are at the park on a permanet basis. Others are visiting European professionals, such as a cuckoo-clock carver and a blue delft painter who will be staying for a few weeks this year.



The park is fun and fanciful and only three miles away is one of th largest amd most authentic restored villages in the world — Colonial Williamsburg — where you can step into the life of Virginia's earliest settlers. Visiting both the park and Colonial Williamsburg on one vacation trip is a wonderful way to take a short course in early American history.

You want beaches? Virginia has them too, only a little more thabn an hour's drive from Williamsburg.

If you are going to spend part of your vacation at a theme park this summer, keep the following tips in mind. They'll help make sure that everyone has a good time:

- Find out when the park opens (hours vary at different times of the year). Go early, to get ahead of sone of the crowds. certain days seem to be less crowded than others — the Busch Gardens parks report that Mondays, Thursdays and Fridays are best.
- Pick up a map of the park at the entrance gate and use it to plan your day. Be sure each member of the family gets to choose a favorite ride or show.
- Show your children where the "Lost Parents" station is and reassure them that the uniformed attendants will take care of them is they get separated from you.
- Keep cool by spending the hottest hours of midday in air-conditioned theaters, shops or restaurants.
- Consider buying a two-day pass, so that you won't feel you have to rush to see and do as much as possible in one day.

A free brochure is available on request, giving more detailed suggestions on how to make your next family vacation the best ever. It includes advice on how to select your destination and accomodations, packing tips, ways to make the travel times easier and how to get the most enjoyment from theme park visits. Send your request to: Busch Gardens' family Travel Tips, P.O. Box 8797, St. Louis, Mo. 63102.

Callaway Gardens good for weekend excursion

Callaway Gardens

PINE MOUNTAIN, Ga. — The end of another school year signals the beginning of summer and nowhere are the signs of the season more evident than at Callaway Gardens' Robin Lake Beach.

For the 27th consecutive year the Florida State University "Flying High" Circus is back bringing "the greatest collegiate show on earth" to Callaway now through Aug. 23. Twenty-five of FSU's most talented circus performers combine their skills to present an action-packed show that appeals to all ages. The circus features incredible juggling routines, balancing acts an daring overhead acrobatics on the cloud swing and the famous flying trapeze. The Florida State Circus presents eight shows weekly under the "Big Top" at Robin Lake Beach with two performances on Saturdays and Sundays at 1:30 and 4 p.m. There are no circus shows on Wednesday.

FSU's partners in entertainment at Callaway are the members of the Callaway Gardens Water Ski Spectacular. The ski team also performs eight shows weekly with two shows on the weekends at 3 and 5 p.m. The ski team does not perform on Tuesday.

Th 1987 edition of the Water Ski Spectacular features a breathtaking barefoot start from the top of the ski pavillion, a three-man barefoot exhibition, comedy routines, a thrilling performance by a five-man jump team and the ever-popular 12-person pyramid.

Robin Lake Beach is open daily from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. Besides the circus and water ski show, visitors can also enjoy a variety of other activities covered in the cost of admission. These include rides on the Robin E. Lee Riverboat, the Whistlin' Dixie Miniature Train, paddleboats and canoes, shuffleboard, ping-pong, miniature golf, and swimming. Also included is access to the Gardens, the opportunity to visit the John A. Sibley Horticultural Center, the Ida Cason Callaway Memorial Chapel, the Pioneer Log Cabin, and nature trails. Biking, golf and tennis are available at additional cost.

The daily admission to Robin Lake Beach is $9 for adults and $4 for children 6-11. Children under six are admitted free. Annual passes to the Beach and Gardens are available for $25 per person, which provide unlimited admission to Callaway Gardens from the date of purchase through March 31, 1988.

For additional info, call or write Callaway Gardens, Pine Mountain, Ga., 31822, (404) 663-2281.

Competitors vie for Mr. and Mrs. Fort Benning title

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

Marshall Auditorium buzzed with excitement Saturday, as spectators awaited the outcome of the Mr. and Mrs. Fort Benning bodybuilding competition.

Harold B. Boster II and Denise Roach muscled their way into the hearts of the crowd and judges by demonstrating just what a little hard work can do.

In three rounds of competition, Roach narrowly defeated Barbara Thomas. Third place went to Gwen Garrett.

While the female division was made up of all novice competitors, each contestant displayed the poise of a professional bodybuilder.

"Although I was a competitive gymnast in high school," said Roach, "this was my first attempt to perform on the bodybuilding stage."

The 24-year-old, who excelled on the uneven parallel bars, was inspired by her husband and 1986 Mr. Fort Benning, Franklin D. Roach.

Mrs. Fort Benning began a dedicated training program just one year ago. She worked in the gyms two hours every day, and followed a strenuous diet program.

"I concentrated on 'carbo loading' and a protein diet," said Roach. "But, in the last six months, I drank water only and took in no salts, fats or fried foods."

Roach, who weighs 111-pounds, said she relaxed her diet program shortly, or immediatly after competition.

"Just as soon as I stepped off stage I gobbled down a melted Snickers Bar. I then ate everything in sight. I normally don't eat red meats, but I seem to remember having a double-bacon cheeseburger," Roach said.

While Roach was off stage enjoying candy and victory, Boster was standing before the judges, impressing them with his double back lateral spread.

Though bodybuilding is not new to Boster, he has not competed since 1982, when he took second place in the Mr. Heart of Dixie contest in Mobile, Ala.

"I had not trained since a back injury in 1982," he said. "But, after seeing the 1986 Mr. Fort Benning, Franklin Roach, I was so motivated that I had to start working out immediately."

Roach came out to defend his 1986 championship, but was edged out by Boster's symmetrical physique.

"I beat him at the diet," said Boster. "In the last eight weeks, I was on a strict carbo loading diet.

"Taking in a lot of carbohydrates allows the water to be drawn under the skin and into the muscle, producing the cuts, and rips that win bodybuilding contests," he explained.

Boster had one year to get into shape, and he needed every minute of that time.

"A bodybuilder trains throughout the year, so that on that one day of competition, he reaches his peak. When he walks onto the stage, he must be pumped up and ready to perform," Boster said.

Boster said that during the first eight months, he concentrated on building mass. But, in the latter months he focused on dieting down to get ripped, cutting his skin to the limits.

"When I was bulking up and at my top strength, I was squatting 500-plus pounds," he said. "But, when it was time to work on the cuts, my strength was low and I could squat no more than 315 pounds."

Boster's caloric intake dropped from 5,000 to 1,500 daily calories, in order to taper the mass that he had built.

Boster, commander of the post Detention Facility, was not always "a tower of strenghth.

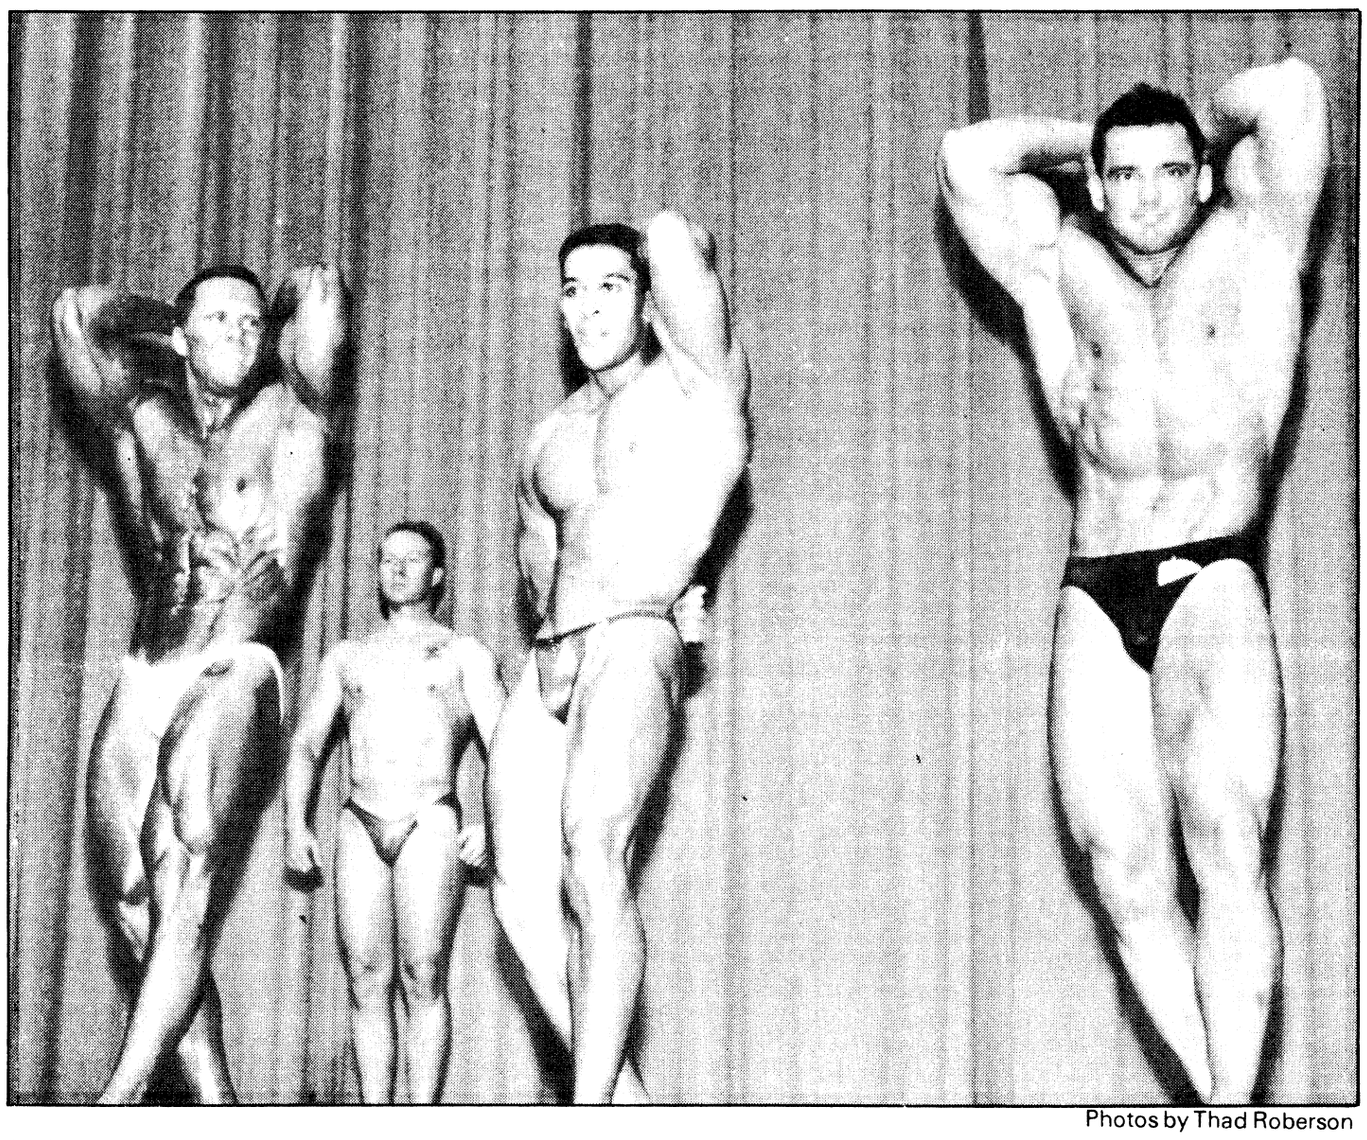
"My younger brother, Roger, was always the athlete and always bigger than me," he said. "I was the 130- pound skinny kid in the garage doing curls. My brother would walk in after I'd done three strenuous sets, and start pumping with one hand."

Boster, now 25 years old and tipping the scales at 176, has become a soldier with confidence in himself and pride in his unit.

"In the first years of the Mr. Fort Benning Contest, infantry guys had the title. This is the first time the Military Police Activity has won it. We are not going to let go easily," he said.

Boster recognizes the "we" in bodybuilding, as the key to championship development.

"I could not have done it without the help of all the people in my unit," Boster said.



"Bodybuilding is not an individual sport, as many people think," said Boster. "You must have a support group. The training is rough, both physically and mentally. You have got to have help to get boosted."

In the year that it took Boster to ready himself for the championship trail, he was surrounded by support.

"When my spirits were low, my wife, Joy, was there to lift them," Boster said. "Whenever I felt that the diet wasn't worth it, she was there with encouragement, making me stick to it."

Hares and hounds :ake off in hash run

SAIC Public Affairs Office

Do you like to run for fun? 'hen "hashing" is for you.

A hash is a combination of hide nd seek, steeple chase, cross- ountry running and sometimes n obstacle course.

According to Capt. Mark 'Neil, assistant S-3 of 1st Battal- n, 507th Parachute Infantry egiment, the sport originated ith the British and Australians Southeast Asia, and now has ecome so popular that hashes re run in 110 countries and in very major city in the U.S.

A hash starts with all everyone athering at a starting point. hen two people who have been esignated as "hares" set out to y a trail consisting of puffs of our.

Fifteen minutes later the rest the group (the "hounds") take f after them. "This is where the n starts," O'Neil said, "because hen the hares mark the trail, ey can and do leave false trails s well."

If a false trail has been left, the ares will have marked it with an in the middle of a circle. "This why hashing is not done with ne runners," O'Neil said. "Running in groups enables the runers to investigate the separate ails and to signal their partners hich is the right trail."

The hounds signal each other by calling "on, on" as they start off down the trail. Upon coming across a false trail, a hound announces that he is "checking" as he comes across a flour puff. If they unsure they are on the correct trail they they cry "on checking." If the hound comes across a marking of three lines, he knows that he indeed was on the wrong track and hollers a woeful "on-back."

"A hash is usually no longer than four to five miles and can be run just about anywhere," O'Neil said. "The run usually takes about an an hour and a half to complete."

Refreshments are served at the half-way point so that everyone has to catch up. After the hash is finished the "down down" commences where the hounds and hares sit down together, eat some good food and talk.

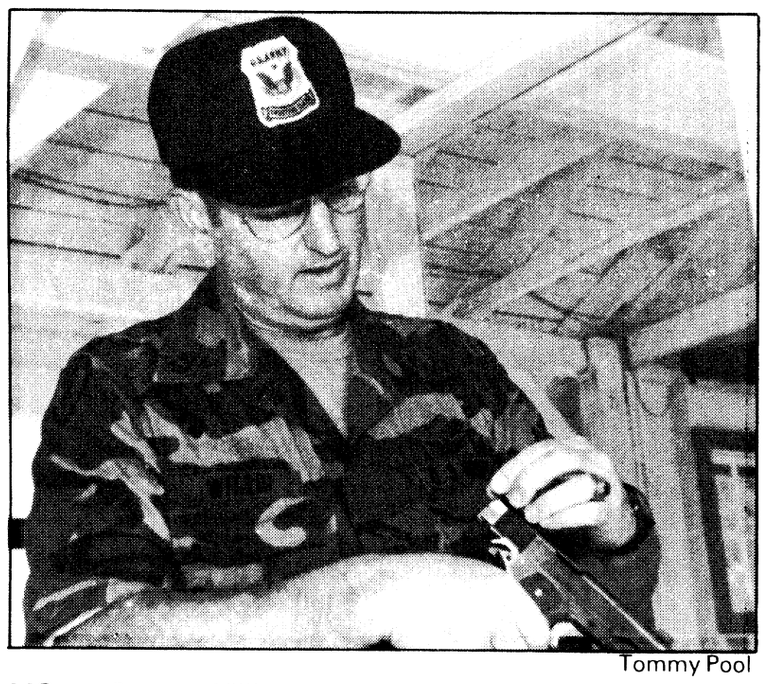
If hashing seems to be right up your alley, the Chattahoochee Valley Hashers cordially invite you to their next hash Sunday. The starting point will be at West Point Lake at 9 a.m. A convoy will meet up at 7733 Hilldale Road at 7:30 a.m., for anyone who does not want to drive.

The cost is $4 which covers food, beverages and the run. For more information, call 327-0441 or 687-3016.

Shooters face off in state pistol competition

By Tommy Pool
USAMU PAO

Members of the U.S. Army Rifle and Pistol teams swept the top awards during state and regional shooting competition held last weekend, June 6-7.



The matches were used as a warmup for the Army Shooting teams prior to competing in this year's Interservice and National Rifle and Pistol championships to be held in July and August.

During the Georgia State Pistol Matches hosted by the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club, USAMU's MSgt. Roger Williamsoutdistanced a field of more than 70 competitors.

Willis also won two out of three individual events enroute to his aggregate winning score of 2,651 out of 2700 points. He also fired scores of 878 and 884 out of 900 to win the Centerfire and .45 caliber matches.

Placing second in the overall standings with a total of 2636 ppints was SSgt. Gary Cumbie. currently assigned to Company E, 1st Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

Cumbie was followed by MSgt. Joe Steed, also of USAMU, with a total of 2631 to round out the top three places.

Tommy Pool

MSgt. Roger Willis overwhelmed the competition to capture this year's Georgia State pistol title at Fort Benning last week.

Members of the US Army Squad also competed in regional highpower rifle competition hald at Oak Ridge, Tenn., where more than 80 of the top shooters in the southeast participated inthe matches.

In a three-way battle for the individual title, Sgt. Dwayne Gaskin emerged as the winner after coming three points down in the final stage of the championship.

Gaskin scored a perfect 200 out of 200 points in the final 600 yard event to overtake early leaders, SSgt. Greg Strom and Spec. 4 Michael Colpo. with a winning total of 792 out of 800 points.

Both Colpo and Strom finished with scores of 788, with Colpo scoring one more center shot tofinish in second place.

IIn team events, the US Army squads swept thw top three places at both the Georgia State Pistol and Tennessee Regional Rifle tournaments.

More competition is scheduledfor this weekend, June 13-14, with this years; Georgia State Rifle Championship to be held at Fort Benning's McAndrews Range.

More than 200 competitors are expected for the championships. including the top US Marine Corps Rifle Team that is slated to attend.

Firing will normally begin at 8:00 a.m. and conclude at approximately 4:00 p.m. The general public is invited to observe all the action.

Leuer takes reins

Burba leaves for command in California

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer will succeed Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. as commander of Fort Benning and Chief of Infantry in a ceremony today.

The change of command ceremony will take place on York Field, in front of Infantry Hall, beginning at 9 a.m.

Lt. Gen. Gerald T. Bartlett, deputy commander of Training and Doctrine Command will officiate at the ceremony.

Leuer's previous assignment was with the 5th Infantry Division (Mechanized) at Fort Polk, La., where he was the commander. He served as assistant commandant of the Infantry School from April 1982 to July 1983.

Burba leaves Fort Benning to become the commander of the 7th Infantry Division (Light) at Fort Ord, Calif. He has been post commander and Chief of Infantry since January 1986.

The public is invited to attend the ceremony. Visitors can park in the east and west parking lots adjacent to Infantry Hall.

Ann M. McDonald

Cheers!
Attendees raise their glasses in a toast to the Army and infantry their 212th birthday Saturday night. Approximately 400 officers and their wives attended the Infantry Ball celebrating the birthday, which was held at the Fort Benning Officers' Club. Highlights included a speech by the Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba Jr., post commander, and the traditional cutting of the cake. There was dancing after the formal portion of the ball with music provided by the United States Infantry Band.

Officials ask for help enforcing post curfew

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

Military Police are asking parents who live on post to control their children.

A rash of larcenies and vandalism in recent weeks is the problem, said Capt. Sonny Buttram, the physical security officer for the installation.

"We've had incidents where kids have marked on the outside of cars with sharp objects, scratching the paint, broken windows and other acts of vandalism," Buttram said. "We've apprehended children as young as 10 years old for throwing rocks through school windows."

For this reason, Buttram said it's important for parents to help the military police enforce the post's midnight curfew for children under the age of 18.

U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5 states, "All dependents under the age of 18 years will be required to be in their quarters after 2400 hours each night except when accompanied by a parent or guardian."

The curfew runs from midnight to 5 a.m., but the regulation allows for exceptions.

Buttram said these include recognized functions at the schools or sponsored by the Youth Activities Centers, and bona fide emergencies. "The schools and YA must coordinate with our office prior to event, letting us know the hours of the event and the area it will be taking place in," he said.

In the event of an emergency, Buttram said that a child stopped after curfew can just explain to the military policeman, who can provide an escort or render assistance if necessary.

"Hopefully, if there was an emergency such as a parent being involved in an accident, the child would call the military police for help," Buttram said. "That's a big part of our job, to assist the people who live on post in any way we can."

He stressed that the curfew is not harrassment of post children, but rather a way to protect all residents from vandalism, and also to protect the children. "Fort Benning residents should be aware of the potential dangers that exist when children are out late at night unattended," he said.

Children who are picked up by police in violation of the curfew will be taken to the MP station, where their parent or sponsor will be notified to come and pick them up. Subsequent violations can result in the Director of Personnel and Community Activities being notified, Buttram said. "Families can also be asked to move off post for failing to control their children," he said.

Sponsors need to remember that living on post is a privilege, not a right, and act accordingly, he said.

Special Forces seeks volunteers

Army News Service

FORT BRAGG, N.C. — Recruiters for enlisted volunteers of the special forces soon will begin visiting Army installations worldwide to talk with potential special forces candidates and to take applications.

A team from the U.S. Army Recruiting Command, headquartered at Fort Sheridan, Ill., is using computers to locate qualified soldiers and has streamlined the procedures for getting volunteers into the system.

"Once we have determined that a soldier is qualified, we can give him a class date in three to five days," said Sgt. 1st Class William Weatherell, a special forces recruiter located at the John F. Kennedy Special Warfare Center and School at Fort Bragg.

Applications are being accepted for enlisted volunteers in four areas: weapons sergeant, 18B; engineer sergeant, 18C; medical sergeant, 18D; and communications sergeant, 18E.

The recruiting team especially wants to attract soldiers interested in signal, Morse code or cryptography. Qualified soldiers who volunteer for communications sergeant could fill training slots still open for July or August, he said.

Enlisted males, sergeant-to-sergeant first class, who have graduated from the Primary Leadership Development Course, may apply for any of the four skill areas regardless of their current military occupational specialty. Specialists four who are PLDC graduates may apply for medical sergeant.

All candidates must be U.S. citizens, high school graduates or have a GED, and must have a GT score of at least 110. Volunteers must be able to obtain a secret security clearance and be airborne-qualified or volunteer for airborne training.

They must pass a physical readiness test, which includes a 50-meter swim wearing boots and any Class C uniform, and must be able to pass a medical fitness examination.

A soldier's chain of command will not be the approving authority for release from his unit, Weatherell said.

Anyone interested in applying for special forces training should contact the U.S. Army Special Forces Recruiting Team at AUTOVON 239-1818/5083, or write to: Commander, USAJFKSWCS: ATSU-SP-R; Fort Bragg 28307.

Law gives family members easier access to jobs

WASHINGTON — Federally employed family members of federal personnel stationed overseas now have wider non-competitive access to federal employment stateside.

The expanded access comes from an amended presidential executive order authorizing special consideration for eligible candidates whose sponsors return to the United States.

Since the original Executive Order No. 12362 took effect in 1982, family members of persons in the uniformed services and the federal civil service have been covered by its provisions — so long as those family members were employed in appropriated-fund positions they would choose to apply for upon their return to the United States.

The newly issued amendment to the executive order extends coverage to the family members of non-appropriated-fund employees. It requires, of course, that this new group of eligibles be employed in appropriated-fund positions overseas.

Besides that extension to a broader range of employees, the amendment —

- Reduces the amount of overseas employment needed to qualify for non-competitive appointment from 24 to 18 months.
- Increases from two years to three, the period during which the family member is eligible after returning to the states.
- Allows the U.S. Office of Personnel Management to grant waivers from the three-year application window in cases where the employee demonstrates hardship in the job-search process. Such as case, said Joy Jean, would include the difficulty a job-seeker incurs when faced with the characteristically low incidence of federal job vacancies in certain regions.

Jean, a personnel staffing specialist in the office of the Army's director of civilian personnel, explained that the March 3 amendment leaves intact the eligibility requirement that candidates for non-competitive appointment be U.S. citizens at the time they apply for stateside jobs. Also, she said, they each must have a current performance rating of at least "fully successful," and they have to meet the qualifications for the positions to which they seek appointment.

She noted that persons needing more information or seeking clarification on individual cases, may direct their inquiries to the local civilian personnel office.

Commanders must have troops tested for HIV by Aug. 1

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

Commanders have until Aug. 1 to send their soldiers for HIV testing.

Lt. Col. J. Pitt Tomlinson, chief of the Preventive Medicine Service, said that since Oct. 1, 1985, about 38,000 individuals have been tested at Fort Benning. "We think that most soldiers here have been tested, but we're not sure," he said.

Tomlinson said that at first, many of those tested were initial entry soldiers. Now that testing is being done before the new soldiers get to Fort Benning, he said.

But it is the responsiblity of individual unit commanders to see that their soldiers are tested, Tomlinson said.

"This is not a Medical Activity program, it is an Army program that we are helping to implement," he said. "It is the unit's responsiblity to get soldiers in for testing."

Tomlinson said that a team made up of representatives from Preventive Medicine and lab technicians has been going to units at their request, giving an education briefing and drawing blood samples. But stragglers and new people coming to post may not have been tested, and commanders need to identify these people and send them in for testing.

Also, soldiers who are on orders to go overseas must be tested, he said. "As soon as they find out they are going overseas, they should arrange to be tested," he said. "They must have evidence of a negative test or the Adjutant General's office will not cut the orders."

Tomlinson said if soldiers will be overseas for more than 180 days, they have to be tested within 12 months of leaving. Soldiers who are deploying for less than 180 days must have been tested within 24 months of going overseas.

New people arriving at Benning who have already been tested elsewhere don't need to be tested here, he said. "The plan is to have everyone tested one time, and then the Army will begin retesting at some point in the future," he said. Plans for retesting have not yet been finalized.

Unit commanders have a roster of all individuals who have been tested, which they can check against personnel rosters.

Once a soldier has been tested, the test results go into the Army's data base, which means that no matter where they go, the information is part of the soldiers's permanent medical record.

If a soldier says he has been tested, the results must be present in their medical records. If there is no record, that soldier needs to be tested.

Tomlinson said soldiers who need to be tested should be set to their troop medical clinci, battalion aid station or the Family Practice Clinic (if they're enrolled there), where they will be given a laboratory slip.

The laboratory slip must include the following information in order to be entered into the Army's HIV database: name, rank and social security number; the notation "Forces Testing," the unit identification code (this should be obtained from the unit) and the major command.

The lab slip should then be taken to the hospital laboratory, where the blood sample will be drawn.

The soldier should also take his health record to the laboratory, so that lab personnel can make a note in the file that the soldier has been tested.

Commanders who have questions about HIV testing can call Maj. Jim Hawkins at 544-4565 or Tomlinson at 545-1144.

Infection rate seems to be doubling every 10 years

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

Dr. Donald S. Burke of the Walter Reed Army Institute, recently presented a report on the results of military testing to physicians at the National AIDS Conference in Washington, D.C.

Burke said that so far, 1.6 million of the military's 2.2 million active duty personnel have been tested for the HIV. Experts have found that 2,522 military people, or 1.6 per 1,000, carry the virus.

Of the nearly 1 million recruits who have been tested, 1.5 per 1,000 have tested positive for the virus. The overall rate for the Army is 1.1 per 1,000. The infection rate for women in the military is about 0.5 per 1,000.

Burke said that overall, the AIDS infection rate in recruits appears to be doubling every 10 years, but among blacks, appears to be doubling every three years.

Lt. Col. J. Pitt Tomlinson, chief of Preventive Medicine Services, said the rate of infection at Fort Benning is in line with the overall Army results. "The rate is 1.5 per 1,000 persons tested," he said.

Tomlinson stressed the importance of testing for high risk individuals. This includes homosexuals, intravenous drug users, people who visit Sexually Transmitted Disease Clinics on post, and any persons who have sexual contact with any individuals in these categories.

Tomlinson said a person who has contracted the virus will show a positive test result any time within two weeks to three months of being exposed.

Also, he said that a person who gets a negative HIV result, and then continues to engage in high risk behavior increases their chance of contracting the virus.

Anyone who wants to be tested but is afraid to come in to an Army lab, can go to the Columbus Health Department. Tomlinson said the testing there is done by number and individuals do not have to give their names. Cost of the test is $5.

PCS waivers taboo for soldiers during first tour

By Sgt. Maj. Rudi Williams, USA
American Forces Information Service

Time-on-station waivers for reassignments are taboo in the United States for service members who have not completed a three-year tour. Exceptions to the directive are limited, according to a new DoD directive.

Time-on-station requirements were established "to stabilize the lives of service members and their dependents and to reduce permanent change of station costs," states DoD Directive 1315.7, "Military Personnel Assignments."

The minimum tour length for all assignments in the United States is three years, for both accompanied and unaccompanied tours, including those in Alaska and Hawaii. However, in Alaska, shorter tour lengths have been approved for such remote areas as Adak, Fort Greely, Clear, Galena, King Solomon and Shemya.

"Contrary to what a lot of people might think, the three-year time-on-station requirement has been on the books since December 1977," said a spokesman for the Office of Assistant Secretary of Defense for Force Management and Personnel. "We're just reinforcing the policy.

"There was no retainability standard, except you could be paid a dislocation allowance only once each year," he said. "Now, you must have two years retainability for certain kinds of assignments before you can be moved. To move again, you must have three years, fall in one of the 14 categories or get a special waiver."

General or flag officers at the headquarters level must personally approve waivers case by case. That authority can be delegated to a colonel in the Marine Corps.

To reassign those with fewer than two years or those outside the 14 special categories requires approval by the personnel chiefs of the military services — a three-star general or flag officer.

The directive provides for case-by-case consideration for reassignments for such reasons as "job stress, requirements for fresh expertise or personal hardship."

Waivers may be also granted if a service member is considered the most qualified person for a particular position.

Among the categories of people who can make a permanent-change-of-station move without a waiver, even though they've served less than the minimum three years at one location are:

- first termers;
- service members in sea-intensive skills who must serve two years of shore duty before returning to sea;
- those reassigned for training or education purposes;
- those reassigned for humanitarian reasons;
- service members reassigned to a different duty station in preparation for a unit deployment;
- doctors, lawyers and service members serving in other professional skills — these people can be reassigned without a waiver to validate professional credentials or to develop expertise in specialized skills before being assigned to independent duty without supervision;
- service members disqualified for duty after losing a security clearance, professional certification, nuclear certification or medical qualification;
- those whose moves resulted from a major weapon-system change or unit conversion — for example, a change from one type of aircraft to another, such as F-4 to F-15 or mechanized infantry to light infantry. However, officials emphasized that the exemption doesn't cover moves associated with replacing a service member selected for a new weapon system or unit.

A one-year minimum applies to those who are given a re-enlistment option to retrain into a new specialty.

In an effort to keep military couples together, service members married to service members can move after serving a one-year minimum tour.

Misconceptions about AIDS abound

Despite education efforts, people still don't know facts

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

As we learn more about AIDS, national fear increases. While knowing about the disease teaches us how to avoid contracting it, people continue to have a fear that sometimes approaches hysteria.

Overreaction is everywhere. During the recent national AIDS convention, Washington, D.C., police wore yellow rubber glove to work a gay rights demonstation.

The message sent out over the national television newscasts was clear — contact of any kind with homosexuals is dangerous.

Senator Jesse Helms of North Carolina appears on "Face the Nation" advocating quarrantining all people who test positive for presence of HIV. A renowned conservative, Helms likened the AIDS crisis to other health dangers of the past, such as tuberculosis.

This week's Various Voices question provoked answers that suggest that, despite efforts to educate about the disease, many people haven't gotten the message.

For example, one soldier praises testing because it will get the disease under control. This is not true. Testing is being done to identify those who carry the virus, and ensure a healthy military force. People who test positive are counseled, but about the only sure way to keep from spreading the disease is to refrain from sexual intercourse.

It is still up to the individual to notify his contacts and refrain from spreading the virus. We have no way to ensure that the person does what the counselors suggest.

While 70 percent of AIDS victims have been homosexuals, 30 percent have been non-homosexuals. This means that AIDS is not just a gay disease. If we rounded up every homosexual in the country (that we could identify as such) and quarrantined them, the AIDS virus would continue to spread.

Another soldier said the testing is good because this way, every soldier knows his comrades have been tested and this means safety. While many people on post have been tested, others, for whatever reason, have not. And permanent party soldiers who test positive for HIV but do not exhibit any symptoms of AIDS are not automatically discharged. They can't go overseas, but they are still members of the armed forces.

Another misconception is that by identifying those who carry the virus, treatment "becomes more feasible." There is not preventive vaccine for AIDS, nor cure for the disease. Possible treatments are still in the experimental stage. People who develop AIDS are going to die. No one has ever recovered once they developed the disease.

The Army testing program merely identifies infected individuals for assignment purposes. Also, infected individuals cannot be given certain vaccines because their body may react to the serums.

According to Lt. Col. J. Pitt Tomlinson, chief of the Preventive Medicine Service on post, the Army will make a significant contribution to AIDS research through its testing program. "When you look at the disease, what we are doing now is examining the prevalence of the antibody in the general population," he said. "What we don't know is how many new people are converting to a positive test each year."

Since the military is the only place widespread testing is being done, these statistics may some day help scientists find a treatment or cure.

The only way to avoid contracting the virus is to avoid sexual contacts with infected persons. High risk individuals include homosexuals, bisexuals, and intravenous drug users.Since the virus leaves no symptoms, it is vital that you know your sexual partner and what his sexual behavior has been.

Doctors say in order to keep from contracting the disease, heterosexuals must avoid promiscuous behavior. Tomlinson said that people who visit a Sexually Transmitted Disease Clinic are at higher risk of becoming infected, and each additional visit increases their chances. This is because they are continuing their promiscuous behavior.

He also said that condoms are not the answer to stopping the AIDS epidemic.

"Condoms fail in preventing pregnancy, and they can fail to prevent the spread of the AIDS virus," he said.

Rather than giving in to mass hysteria, educate yourself on this disease. Hysteria is not going to win the war against AIDS, but knowledge might.

Spring clean-up good time to do fire safety inspection

By Evelyn D. Harris
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, VA. — Spring cleaning time is here. While you're giving your house a spring cleanup, why not give it a fire safety checkup as well?

Fire is more of a possibility than you would think. Every year fires kill more Americans -- 6,000 — than all other natural disasters combined, although fire is not a completely natural disaster. Fires injure 60,000 Ameircans a year badly enough to requrie medical attention and cost the country $30 billion damage to property and persons.

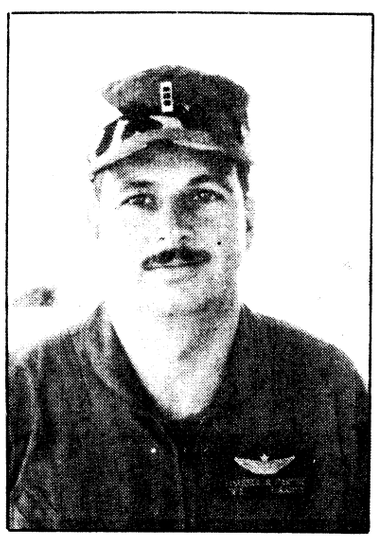
Here's a checklist that may be helpful in preventing your household from being a statistic:

- Fire extinguisher. If you don't have one, buy one. An all-class (Class A, B and C) extinguisher is good for all fires except those primarily involving metals. Purchase one with the underwriter's laboratory (UL) or factory mutual (FM) label.

Once you buy one, put it in the kitchen near the door, not near the stove. You may want to buy more than one — it's a good idea to have an extinguisher on every floor of the house. Mount it out of a toddler's reach and check the pressure gauge regularly. Fire extinguishers are meant to fight small fires only (no bigger than a trash can). William D. Killen, the Navy's fire marshal program adminstrator, said you should call the fire department no matter what the size of the fire.

- Cords and plugs. Replace worn cords. Keep cords away from heavy traffic areas. Unplug small appliances (toaster, coffee maker, hair dryer) when not in use.
- Smoke detectors. In a house there should be a smoke detector on every floor. In apartments, place one within 10 feet of all bedrooms. Check the batteries occasionally to make sure they stillwork.
- Light fixtures. make sure bulb wattage is not too high for the fixture; this can cause overheating. Fixtures and lamps indicate the highest wattage they can tolerate.
- Ashtrays. If there are smokers in your house, put ashtrays in every room and empty them often. Don't smoke in bed.
- Doors. Make sure they can be unlocked from both sides. An extra safety precaution is to close doors at night; this acts as a fire break.

After you've checked for those items, do a room-by-room check.



- Kitchen. If you have children, don't store cookies and candies above the stove. Children could get burned trying to get at the treats. Clean the stove and oven frequently to prevent the fire hazard of grease buildup. Keep electrical cords away from the stove and the sink. Keep combustible materials, including cookbooks, potholders, and towels, away from the stove. Killen said you should not attempt to douse a grease fire with flower. It can cause an expolsion. Put a pot lid over the fire. If your pot doesn't have a lid, cover it with another large, clean pan.
- Living room, family room or study. Make sure televisions, computers, videocassette recorders and other appliances have adequate ventilation. Resist the urge to use such appliances as resting places for books, magazines and flower vases. Books and magazines cover ventilation and vases could cause problems if they spill.
- Basement. If your furnace or hot water heater is in a laundry room that doubles as a storage area, be careful not to store anything flammable too close to it — not even clean clothes.
- Outside. Don't fill the gas tank on a lawn mower while its running, hot or in a closed area such as a garage.

Don't leave barbecue fires unattended, and do your griling at keast 10 feet away from buildings. Don't douse charcoal with lighter fluid once the fire has started, and make sure the coals are completely extinguished once you've finished cooking. Many fires have started from smoking embers.

VARIOUS VOICES / What do you think of the Army policy on HIV testing?

1st Lt. Bart Butler, Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, - I think it's good. It is an across-the-board test. It is fair and it provides a benefit for the soldier. Also, because it is going to be an annual test, it gives commanders the knowledge that their soldiers are healthy.Because this test detects the disease so early, treatment becomes more feasible."

CW3 Darrell R. Carter, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - I don't see anything wrong with it. It is a communicable disease and like other communicable diseases, it ought to be tested. Also, because of the seriousness of the disease and the durablility of the virus, it is very important to identify cases for the protection of others and so that they may receive treatment."

Sgt. Elizabeth Mallet, Company A, 1st Battalion The School Brigade, — "I think it's needed. I don't necessarily believe that there are a lot of homosexuals in the Army, but there are a lot of promiscuous people out there who have experiences with both sexes. Testing needs to be done to get it under control."

SSgt. Kevin Evans, 24th Company, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade, — "I think it's a good policy. It is rather frightening how fast this disease spreads and it is good that the Army has found a way to possibly contain it."

CSM Autrail Cobb, post sergeant major, - "Whether we like it or not, we are a product of our society and must abide by its rules. In this case, President Reagan, our Commander and Chief says it is in the best interest of the Army society to be tested. I fully agree."

PFC Duane Collins, 608th Ordinance Company, 36th Engineer Group, — "I think it's good. This way at least people in the Army will know each other has been tested and if some people in fact do have the disease you can isolate them."

1987 Form W-4A

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service

What is Form W-4A? This form is an easier way to figure your withholding than the 4-page 1987 Form W-4. If you have already given your employer a Form W-4 this year, do not file a new Form W-4A unless you wish to change your withholding.

Caution: Form W-4A may cause more or less tax to be withheld from your wages than you wish because it adjusts your withholding only for pay you receive after it takes effect. If not enough tax was withheld earlier in the year, you can increase your withholding by reducing the allowances claimed on line 4 of the form or by requesting that more money be withheld on line 5 of the form.

Exemption From Withholding—

Important Change in Law. If you are a dependent of another person (for example, a student who can still be claimed on your parents' return), you are not exempt if you have any nonwage income (such as interest on savings) and expect your total income to be more than $500.

What Do I Need To Do? Exempt employees can skip the Worksheet and go directly to line 6 of Form W-4A. All others must complete lines A through G. Many employees can stop at line G of the Worksheet.

Nonwage Income? If you have a large amount of income from other sources (such as interest or dividends), you should consider either using the 1987 Form W-4 or making estimated tax payments using Form 1040-ES. Call 1-800-424-3676 (in Hawaii and Alaska, check your local telephone directory) for copies of the 1987 Form W-4 and Publication 919, "Is My Withholding Correct?"

When Should I File? File as soon as possible to avoid underwithholding problems. If you do not file by October 1, 1987, your allowances may be adjusted to "1" if single or "2" if married and your take home pay may be reduced.

Two-Earner Couples? More Than One Job? To figure the number of allowances you may claim, combine allowances and wages from all jobs on one worksheet. File a Form W-4A with each employer, but do not claim the same allowances more than once. Your withholding will usually be more accurate if you claim all allowances on the highest paying job.

W-4A Worksheet To Figure Your Withholding Allowances

A Enter "1" for yourself if no one else can claim you as a dependent

B Enter "1" if:
1. You are single and have only one job; or
2. You are married, have only one job, and your spouse does not work; or
3. Your wages from a second job or your spouse's wages (or the total of both) are $2,500 or less.

C Enter "1" for your spouse if no one else claims your spouse as a dependent

D Enter number of dependents other than your spouse that you will claim on your return

E Enter "1" if you want to reduce your withholding because you or your spouse is at least age 65 or blind and you do not plan to itemize deductions

F Enter "1" if you want to reduce your withholding because you have at least $1,500 of child or dependent care expenses for which you plan to claim a credit

G Add lines A through F and enter total here

- If you plan to itemize or claim other deductions and wish to reduce your withholding, turn to the Deductions Worksheet on the back.
- If you have more than one job or a working spouse AND your combined earnings from all jobs exceed $25,000, or $15,000 if you are married filing a joint return, turn to the Two-Earner/Two-Job Worksheet on the back if you want to avoid having too little tax withheld.
- If neither of the above situations applies to you, stop here and enter the number from line G on line 4 of Form W-4A below.

Cut here and give the certificate to your employer. Keep the top portion for your records.

New form should make filing withholding information easier

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

Just about the time you think you got the new tax forms figured out and you begin to feel comfortable that your next tax year won't get audited, the Internal Revenue Service drops another bomb.

This year the bomb is in the form of the new W-4 Employee's Withholding Allowance Form. The W-4 withholding form was originally designed so that taxpayers can withhold certain allowances and determine the amount of the refund at the end of the tax year. The new form was developed by the IRS for taxpayers who have a significant amount of non-wage income such as rental property and investments. The W-4 has been the target of wide spread controversy because taxpayers feel it is too complicated.

As a result of the confusion, the IRS developed a simpler form called the W-4A Form. "We misjudged the willingness and capacity of many taxpayers to handle the additional complexity it takes to match withholding with (their) tax liability," said IRS Commissioner Larry Gibbs.In comparison, the W-4A form only covers two pages as opposed to it's predecessor's four pages. And most people will not need to use the whole form. "The only people who will have to fill out the whole thing are those who make more than $40,000. But most people who make more than that have investments and non-wage income so they would need the W-4 Form anyway," said 1st Lt. Jeffery T. Kipi, the Fort Benning tax officer.

The new form, which was approved in March, should take the taxpayer "about five to 10 minutes to fill out," Kipi said. "That's assuming that he or she knows what their income is."

Although all employees must fill out a W-4 form upon the time of their hiring or whenever new allowances or deductions are made, this new form is mandatory for everyone. "They need to fill out one of the W-4 forms (either W-4 or W-4A). said Pat Ayscue, district processing supervisor for H and R Block. "But whichever form you fill out, the part you turn in is basically the same," she said.

Is the new form less accurate than the longer more complicated one? "No," said Ayscue "It's not a matter of being less accurate, but you do need to know what has already been withheld for the 1987 year so that that can be computed," she said.

Married couples filling out the forms need to do so separately. "Usually the person who has the lower income claims zero allowances and the spouse with the higher income claims whatever allowances this is more accurate," Ayscue said.

The deadline for either the W-4 or the W-4A form is Oct. 1. The IRS urges taxpayers to be careful in making the adjustments for the remainder of the year or face paying a penality on what was not withheld.

That penalty, (which is the current interest rate), will be imposed on those taxpayers who underwithhold. Those who overwithhold will not be penalized.

Commanders to be notified of who hasn't filed

Army News Service

FORT BENJAMIN HARRISON, Ind. — Soldiers who are procrastinating about filing a new federal tax withholding statement can expect to be counseled by their commanders.

Beginning in June, the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center will furnish monthly lisitngs of soldiers who have not yet met the Internal Revenue Service requirement, according to USAFAC officials. These listings will be made available to commanders through their local finance and accounting offices.

As of the end of April, more than 555,000 active duty soldiers, or about 70-percent, had not submitted one of the new forms, according to officials. The new W-4 was made available through Army finance and accounting offices in January, and in May USAFAC distributed the W-4.

The forms are also available from the IRS, at U.S. Post offices and in public libraries.

All taxpayers are required to give their employers a new W-4 or W-4A before Oct. 1. If they don't, the IRS will automatically change the number of their exemptions to one or two, depending on whether they are single or married. Taxpayers have been advised to submit a new form as soon as possible to insure accurate tax withholding. If withholding for the year does not equal at least 90-percent of the total taxes owed at the end of the year, penalties and interest could be imposed.

Parents required to list children's social security numbers on taxes

American Forces Press Service

Now that your 1986 federal income tax return is done, probably the last thing you want to hear about is a new requirement for filing 1987 returns.

True, but the Tax Reform Act of 1986 requires, starting next year, that you show a social security number for each dependent age 5 and over listed on your return. And because of expected delays in issuing social security numbers, military and civilian families are urged to apply soon for children or other dependents who do not already have one.

If you live in the continental United States, request an application form SS-5 from your local social security office. Return or send the completed application to any local social security office.

Families overseas should contact a local personnel office for application form SS-5FS and any necessary additional assistance.

Applications require proof of the dependent's date of birth, identity and U.S. citizenship or lawful alien status. Generally, if the person was born in the United States, his or her birth certificate will serve as proof of age and citizenship. Another document, such as a military I.D. or school record, is needed for identity. If it is necessary to forward this information, certified copies can be used.

Engineers renovate building for use as new sniper school

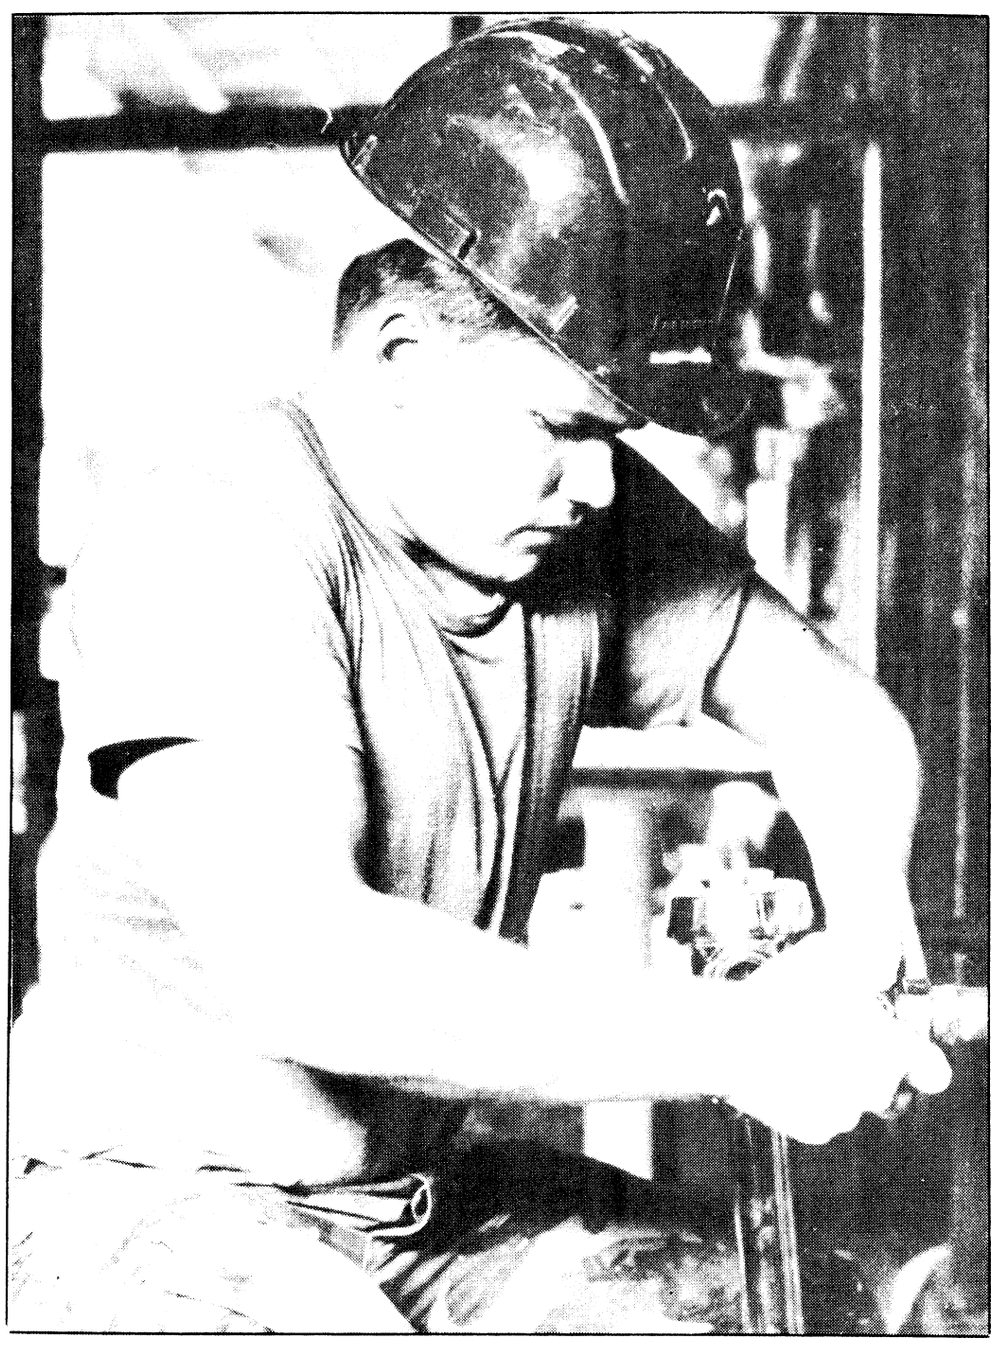
By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group Correspondent

Soldiers from Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, are currently working on a project here in support of the new Fort Benning sniper school scheduled to activate in July.

According to 1st Lt. Bart Butler, officer in charge of the project, the Company A soldiers are remodeling Building 4511, which is located in the area of the 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

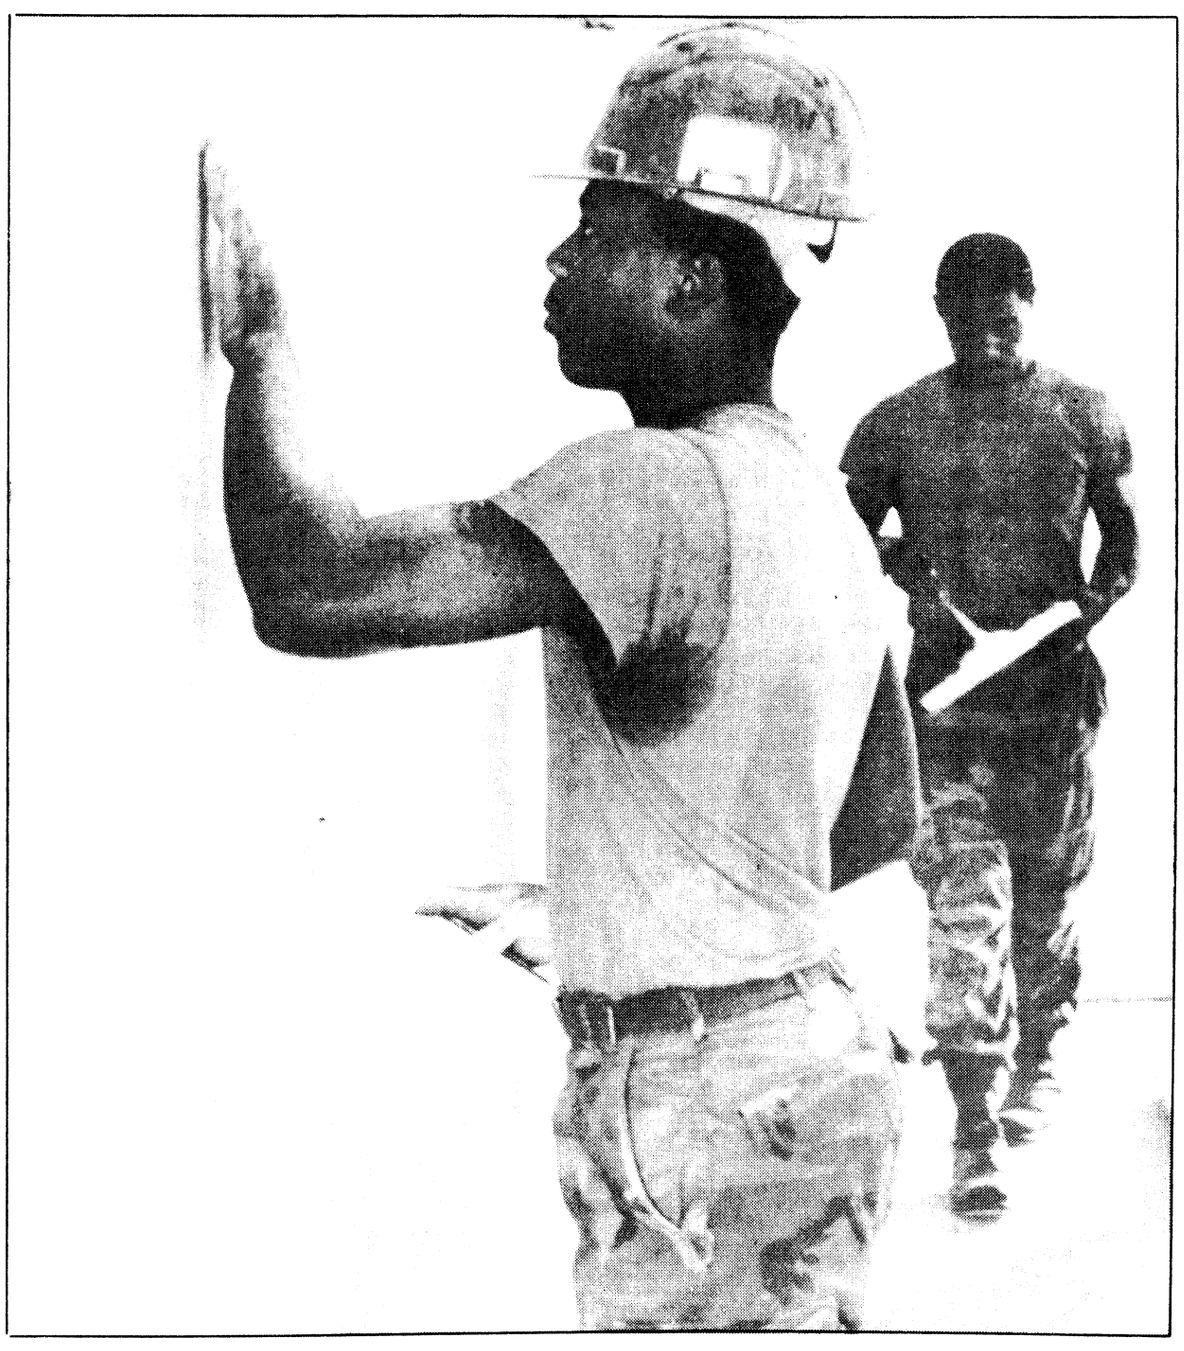
The building is being renovated to house and provide classrooms for the soldiers who will be attending the school. Butler said, "Our soldiers have basically gutted the building since they started the project May 26 and are now in the process of rebuilding it."

The World War II two-story building is expected to be completed by July 1 and will house soldiers on the first floor and classes will be given on the second floor, according to Butler.



"This project has been really unique for our soldiers because this is one of the few projects that has encompassed all of the military occupational specialties of the Alpha soldiers."

The OIC said that the carpenters put in new floors and laid insulation and sheet rock on the walls and ceilings of the whole building as well as installing new windows throughout the building.



"The soldiers also constructed and installed the ventilators for the building," Butler said.

The first platoon plumbers are replacing all of the old plumbing with all new plumbing and latrine fixtures, Butler said.

The 14 men working on the project have been working extended hours from 6 a.m. until 8 p.m. and are gaining some valuable experience, he said.

PFC Burton Davis installs a toilet in the latrine of the building.

Pvt. 2 Dock Walls III checks for rough spots in the newly installed walls of the second floor of the project.

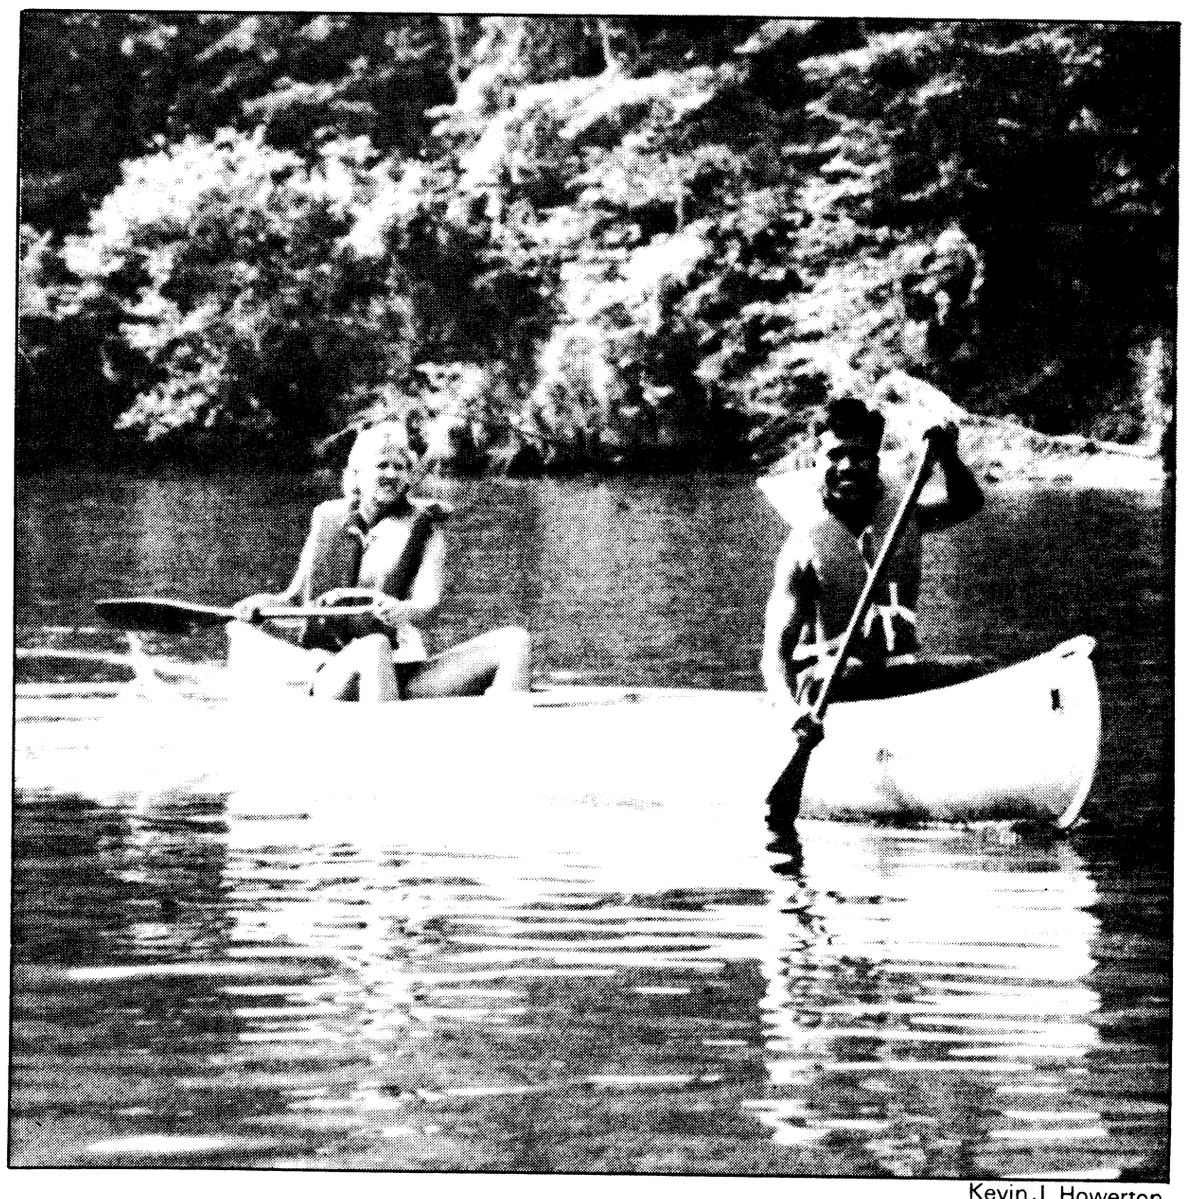
Fire call

SSgt. Ted Lopez, Headquarters Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, plots the coordinates of a call for fire during a recent brigade command post exercise. All of the battalions in the brigade set up a tactical operations center for the exercise, held earlier this month. Opposition forces simulated the tactics used at the National Training Center, so the brigade commanders could prepare for the next deployment to NTC.

197th soldiers spend day off 'up the river' during canoe trip

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent



When a soldier finally gets a Friday off, he spends most of it trying to find something fun to do. But June 12, more than 35 single soldiers from Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, found fun in the form of a canoe trip up the Chattahoochee River.

The group, led by Chaplain (Maj.) James K. Bluett, brigade chaplain, and SSgt. Ricky L. Riggall, chapel NCOIC, paddled up-river from Uchee Creek to the Bradley Landing, then returned. Participants enjoyed frisbee games, water fights, fishing, food and drinks and an occasional unexpected swim when a canoe tipped over.

"We're not here to drag soldiers out of the barracks and save their souls, or beat them over the head with a Bible," said Bluett. "We don't want them to feel guilty, we want them to feel good about themselves. It helps cut down on tensions and lets then know that someone cares."

Bluett said that he received good support from the company's commander for the outing. Transportation, sack lunches and juice were provided by the company. The chapel section took care of reserving and providing the canoes and boats.

At the end of the day the soldiers returned, tired, but refreshed, and feeling good about themselves.

VA Q&A

Veterans Administration

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q: I am a Vietnam veteran, and I am concerned about the possibility that I may have been exposed to Agent Orange. What does the VA offer in the way of examinations and health care?

A: Since 1978, the VA has operated the Agent Orange Registry Program for Vietnam veterans who are concerned about possible health effects of Agent Orange. Vets who participate in this program receive a comprehensive physical exam and complete a questionnaire about their service in Vietnam. The vet is advised of the results, which are entered into the Agent Orange registry. The exam can help to detect any illness or injury the vet may have, regardless of origin, and may provide a basis for follow-up. Vietnam veterans are encouraged to request an Agent Orange exam at their nearest VA health-care facilty.

Q: I have VA insurance which has recently been placed on waiver of premium. Will I continue to participate in the yearly dividend?

A: Yes. The fact that your policy is on waiver of premiums does not affect your yearly dividend.

Q:What is the minimum age a veteran may begin to receive a VA pension?

A: There is no minimum age. Entitlement to pension is based on qualifying service, income within the statutory limits and permanent and total disability as established by law.

Revised policy outlines changes in Army's AIDS plan

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

On April 20 Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger signed a revised policy concerning service members infected with human immunodeficiency virus, the virus that causes AIDS.

Assistant Secretary of Defense (Health Affairs) Dr. William Mayer outlined the policy revision on April 22, which has several changes from the original policy established in October 1985.

Among the changes are;

- Members infected with HIV cannot be assigned outside the continental United States. Previously, infected members could have been deployed at their service's discretion.
- Case contact information must be shared with the civilian authorities. Previously, sharing the information was voluntary.
- Mandatory testing of civilians is prohibited. However, a task force will look at certain settings where testing of civilians may be necessary; for example, civilians working "hand-in-glove" with the military overseas where there is a high rate of endemic disease or access to medical care is limited.
- The policy mandates an aggressive HIV education program, to follow U.S. Public Health Service guidelines.

According to Air Force Lt. Col. John Herbold, senior policy analyst for preventive medicine and health promotion, the revised policy in many cases compiles existing issues into one document. Such issues include testing and disposition of reservists, ROTC members, service academy cadets and officer candidate or training school members.

In addition, the new HIV policy spells out specifically that "fitness for duty" is the service-wide criteria for determining whether to separate antibody-positive active duty personnel following a medical evaluation. The guidance on fitness for duty was previously drawn from policy on all disabilities.

All applicants for military service, including applicants for the Reserve components and ROTC, will continue to be tested and will be denied entrance into the armed forces if confirmed positive.

Enlisted members who are in officer candidate programs will be disenrolled immediately from the program. Those with no previous military experience will be discharged. Those candidates who have completed their initial-entry training before entering the candidate program will follow service regulations. In any case, if being HIV-positive is the sole basis for discharge, the service will issue an honorable discharge.

ROTC students will be disenrolled at the end of the academic term or semester during which they are confirmed HIV-positive. Those who receive financial support from ROTC will continue to do so until the end of the term in which they are disenrolled. They will not have to pay it back.

The policy also affects antibody-positive individuals in DoD programs leading to appointments as specialists in the areas of physician, dentist, lawyer and chaplain. These individuals would also be discharged at the end of the term in which they are confirmed positive. Financial assistance would end at the same time.

According to Mayer, the rationale for not accepting HIV-positive individuals for military service is:

- the potential medical costs to DoD and the possibility that the individuals will not complete their service commitment;
- the danger to individuals in receiving live-virus immunizations;
- the individual's inability to be blood donors on the battlefield; and
- the fact that there presently is no way to tell who among the infected individuals will progress to clinical disease and who will remain healthy.

While the revised policy does not require testing of civilians, those who are entitled to care at military facilities may be offered HIV screening. Examples would include HIV screening at sexually-transmitted disease clinics, alcohol and drug rehabilitation units and prenatal care. However, these patients would have the right to refuse testing.

When military health officials confirm that an individual is anti-body positive, that person will be counseled on precautions and hygiene measures to reduce the risk of transmission. In addition, the individual's sexual contacts will be notified without identifying the HIV-positive person and will be offered counseling. Women will be advised of the risk of transmission to the fetus during pregnancy. To protect the blood supply, persons who are HIV-positive will be notified that they cannot donate blood and will be placed on a permanent donor-deferral list.

Educating service members on high-risk behavior for becoming infected with and spreading the virus is an important part of the new policy, said Herbold. DoD uses educational materials that follow guidelines set by the U.S. Public Health Service. Among the pamphlets are almost 500,000 copies of the Surgeon General's Report on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.

In addition, DoD is using commercial films such as Facts Over Fears and the American Red Cross' Beyond Fear. Also, public service spots have been produced for overseas military television and the services have developed briefing packets and have purchased materials for specific audiences.

Nearly 2 million military have been tested

Army News Service

The military screens active duty members for infection by human immunodeficiency virus in the following order:

- Individuals serving in or subject to, deployment on short notice to areas of the world with a high rate of endemic disease or with minimal medical capability;
- Individuals serving in, or pending assignment to, overseas permanent-duty stations;
- Individuals serving in units subject to deployment overseas;
- Other individuals who are involved in the care of HIV-infected patients, patients in sexually transmitted-disease clinics and prenatal clinics;
- All remaining individuals during routine physicals.

As of April 1,717,000 military members had been tested for evidence of infection. Overall, 75-percent of the force has been tested: 96-percent Army, 79-percent Navy and Marine Corps, and 55-percent Air Force. The overall positive rate for the services is 1.5 per 1000 individuals. Since only the military conducts mass screenings, it is difficult to estimate the rate for the general population. However, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta estimates that up to 1.5 million persons in the country are infected — a positive-test rate of 6.25 per 1000 people.

Law allows soldiers to deduct home interest

By Hal Haskins
American Forces Information Service

Service members who receive tax-free housing allowances and who do not reside on a federal base will be permitted to deduct mortgage interest and property taxes on their homes, the Internal Revenue Service announced recently.

This reverses a 1983 ruling that ministers could not deduct interest and taxes on a personal residence purchased with tax-free housing allowances. Although the 1983 ruling mentioned ministers only, the question had arisen as to whether or not it applied to service members, since they, too, received a tax-free housing allowance.

The 1986 provision clarifies this point by specifically stating that service members (as well as ministers) are now permitted to deduct mortgage interest when receiving tax-free housing allowances.

The provision applies also to past tax years as well as current and future years.

If you did not claim mortgage interest or property taxes on a tax return filed for a previous year and claiming them now would mean less tax, file an amended return — Form 1040X. The amended return must be filed within three years from the date the original return was filed or two year from when you paid the tax, whichever is later.

Forms and assistance may be obtained at a local branch of the Internal Revenue Service. Their telephone numbers are listed in the blue pages of U.S. telephone directories. If you're stationed overseas, your installation finance office can provide the forms.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Provost Marshal

In a nationwide survey to compare violent crimes with the population growth, it was determined that over the past twenty years, while the population grew just 26-percent, violent crime grew more than 360-percent during this same period.

From June 15 to July 15 TRADOC will sponsor a Crime Prevention Campaign against aggravated assault. Army-wide, this has been the most frequently occurring crime of violence.

On Fort Benning, statistics have shown for the fiscal year 1986, as compared to 1985, there was a steady decrease of aggravated assaults. TRADOC also indicated a reduction of 8-percent in the number of aggravated assaults for this same period.

A contributing factor to these decreases can be proven to be the result of Crime Prevention Programs on military installations. Also, classes are given to the soldiers which provide information which teaches them ways to avoid becoming victims.

In many cases, aggravated assaults could have been avoided; for example, accepting a ride from a stranger or hitch-hiking can lead to robbery, rape, and/or aggravated assault. Hitchhiking is prohibited on the installation by USAIC Regulation 190-5, and is strictly enforced by the Military Police.

Soldiers and dependents can minimize their chances of being victims of aggravated assault by avoiding situations that will lead to this crime, such as becoming involved in arguments of others or walking alone at night, especially in unsafe areas.

Also, avoid carrying a large sum of money. Robbery and other similar crimes can result in aggravated assault when the victims try to resist their assailant. When faced with the option of "Your money or your life," don't make the wrong choice — protect your life.

ASK THE JUDGE

Staff Judge Advocate

Q: My wife and I are both employed and are wondering how we should claim our deductions when completing the new W-4 form for income tax?

A. Couples in which both spouses are employed should combine all their income and deductions onto one worksheet when completing the new W-4 form. A new form must be submitted to each employer, but the same allowances may not be claimed on more than one form. While each spouse may claim some of the allowances to which the couple is entitled, their withholding will usually be more accurate if all allowances are claimed on the form for the spouse with the higher income and zero allowances are claimed on the form submitted by the other spouse.

Q: I have just had my car repaired by a mechanic who charged me more than what he originally estimated the repairs would cost. What can I do to recover the excess amount he charged me and how can I prevent this from happening again?

A: The easiest solution is to pay the bill, making it clear that you do not agree to it, and then sue the shop for return of the excessive amount plus any penalties that may be allowed under state law. Remember that if you refuse to pay the bill, the mechanic has the legal right to keep your car until you do pay. To prevent this situation from arising in the future, you should remember to first find a good, reputable mechanic before your car needs repair; second, get an estimate in writing before allowing the shop to do any work; and third, tell the shop to call you before they do any work if the parts or labor is going to exceed the estimate.

Temperatures pose danger during summer training

Safety Office

Fort Benning is a great place to be during the summer season. The weather is hot and sunny, and there are a number of excellent facilities available for those who enjoy outdoor activities such as fishing, boating, swimming and sunning themselves by the pool.

Summer is also the time many units choose to conduct special outdoor training for their personnel. However, the temperature, combined with a high percentage of humidity, poses a dangerous and possibly deadly threat to Fort Benning personnel working and training outdoors in the form of heat-related injuries.

These injuries include: sunburn, heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke, which is the most serious. Heat-related injuries can be easily avoided if personnel will take a few simple precautions:

- Use sunscreen lotions to prevent sunburn.
- Drink plenty of water (even if you don't feel thirsty).
- Eat all meals to assure replenishment of salt to the body.
- Look out for your friends by using the "buddy system."

Increase in insurance coverage aids soldiers shipping household goods

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — An increase of insurance coverage on household goods shipped within the United States, beginning May 1, is good news for soldiers and civilians planning to move this summer.

The increase from 60 cents per pound per article to $1.25 times the weight of the entire shipment applies to soldiers and civilians whose household goods were picked up on or after that date. "It represents a major change in the way we do business," said Robert Frezza with the U.S. Army Claims Service at Fort Meade, Md.

For 20 years, domestic personal property shipments have been released to carriers at the rate of 60 cents per pound per article. Despite a general rise in prices due to inflation, this policy was continued in order to keep transportation costs down.

This change will not affect the amount the Army pays most soldiers and civilians on claims. However, members should see an improvement in the service they receive, and the Army should realize an increase in the amount of money recovered for loss or damage during household goods shipments, Frezza said.

Over the years it became increasingly apparent that this rate of recovery gave carriers little incentive to provide the high quality of service the military services should expect, Frezza said. For example, if the government paid a soldier $450 for a 70-pound television destroyed in shipment, the government could only recover $42 for the weight of the 70 pounds (0.60 X 70 pounds). The government's contractual arrangements with carriers provide an option for a soldier or civilian employee to increase the carrier's liability, but at the individual's own expense.

In 1981, the Air Force ran a test program named Project REVAL to determine whether better service and monetary savings could be obtained from increasing carrier liability. Participating Air Force members moving within the continental United States were offered the increased carrier liability at Air Force expense in return for submitting any claims promptly. Project REVAL resulted in better shipments. In addition, improved recoveries against carriers offset the increased cost of shipments. As a result of the success of Project REVAL, the Department of Defense adopted the increased carrier liability program implemented in May.

Increased carrier liability will only apply to domestic household

Survey of spouses underway

Answers will help officials evaluate needs of families

Army News Service

In an effort to tap the information resource known as an Army spouse, Army personnel officials have begun conducting a random survey of the spouses of active duty soldiers.

Results of the survey of some 20,000 spouses of officers and enlisted soldiers worldwide are expected to give Army leaders the opportunity to evaluate current policies and programs affecting family interests, as well as to help develop future responses to their needs.

In seeking "open and honest" answers to questions about the Army's family action plan and family-related issues, the Army's top leaders are emphasizing the survey's importance.

This first Army-inititated spouse survey, which is intended to occur annually, will be used also to "identify trends in family needs, behaviors and attitudes," said Army Chief of Staff John A. Wickham Jr. in his recent letter announcing the survey to officer spouse recipients. "Since spouses are excellent sources of information in determining how well our programs are meeting the needs of Army families, we are very interested in receiving their candid opinions."

Noting that the identity of survey respondents will be kept confidential, Wickham's letter preceded the mailing of the survey questionnaire, as did a similar letter to selected enlisted soldiers from Sgt. Maj. of the Army Glen E. Morrell.

By the end of June, said survey project officer Emily Cato, all the selected families should have received the questionnaire. To encourage a high response rate, she and others in the attitude and opinion survey division of the U.S. Army Soldier Support Center — National Capital Region, plan to mail out follow-up letters during subsequent weeks of June and July. Cato added that besides the standard questionnaire form, the survey offers a comment sheet to allow spouses to write out their comments. Survey results are expected to be available early next year.

When analyzed in terms of opinions on the adequacy of such programs as housing, relocation assistance and childcare, the results should show how much return-on-investment has been realized from the Army's commitment to family-related matters over the past several years.

"When it comes to family life," Cato added, "the Army's chain of command becomes a chain of concern. But it's not a one-way process. It's vital that Army leaders keep informed. This survey is one of the best ways for spouses to let leaders know the effectiveness of the Army's family support programs," she said.

Questions about the survey may be directed to Cato at her toll-free number, (800) 443-7978 (within the United States). Callers in Virginia may reach her at (703) 325-3193. Her office address at the center is ATTN: ATNC-MOA, 200 Stovall St., Alexandria, Va. 22332-0400.

Snakes deserve to be respected

By George Smock
Inside the Turret

The sound of a rattlesnake's tail makes most people afraid, but it really shouldn't, according to University of Louisville (Ky.) herpetologist Frank Allen.

"Snakes have gotten a bad rap," he said. "They keep the mice and rat population down and play a conservation role in balancing predators and prey."

Bad rap or not, the hereptologist recommended treating the animals with respect.

"The snakes are coming out of hibernation now and people are curious, so they'll see snakes in the spring. Later on, we won't seem them as often," Allen said. "The snakes return to hibernation in the fall, sometimes as late as November.

"But the snakes are definitely out of hibernation by May," Allen said. "They seek mates, and then they eat."

"You're likely to find snakes in overgrown areas and places where they can find food," Allen said. "You should be careful when you move brush and debris, and you should look down when you're walking through tall grass."

Other times to be wary are when you're looking under a log and when you're crawling under a fence.

Snake venom poisoning is rather rare in the United States. Approximately five people died in the U.S. in 1981 from venemous snake bites. With prompt and proper treatment, 99 percent of snake bite victims recover.

"A snake bite should be treated as an emergency, but you shouldn't overreact," Allen said.

According to Allen, one or two fang marks show on skin bitten by a snake. If the bite was from a venemous snake, the victim feels immediate pain. He also becomes nauseated and swelling starts in the affected area.

Most bites are dry bites, though, and no venom is injected, according to Allen.

Even a non-poisonous snake bite should be treated as a serious incident, according to Allen. This type of bite may require the administration of tetanaus prevention measures, antibiotics and pain relievers.

"There are a lot of foreign chemicals and enzymes present in a snake's mouth," Allen said. "Even a non-poisonous snake carries enough bacteria to make you ill."

Some snake bite victims end up with blistered limbs. The blisters can range from one inch in diameter on fingers to six inches in diameter on legs and arms. Improperly treating a snake's bite, such as putting affected limb in ice, can result in the limb shriveling and turning a deep, charcoal black.

Proper treatment for bites includes putting the bite location below the level of the heart, if possible, keeping the victim calm, still, and warm, and calling for help.

If you're bitten when you're alone, said Allen, walk, don't run to get help. If you apply a constricting band, make sure it is not too tight. It should be loose enough to slip a finger under. As swelling increases, the band should be loosened so it doesn't get too tight.

Common snakebite treatment wisdom says you should try to identify the snake that bit you. A diamond-shaped head wider than the body is an indication that the snake is poisonous.

"A snake can strike up to half an hour after its head has been severed," he said. Snakes can also be identified by their behavior.

All snakes can swim, but their methods divide them, generally, into venomous and non-venomous species, according to Allen.

"If the snake is darting and swirling through the water, it is probably non-poionous. If it's in the water but keeps its head and tail out, and it has a head that is larger than its body, and is slowly cruising straight through the water, it is probably poisonous," Allen said.

LAST YEAR, WE GRADUATED MORE STUDENTS THAN ALL THE SCHOOLS IN THE NCAA* COMBINED.

Last year, millions of people graduated from Red Cross courses, having learned things they'd always wanted to know.

That's because the Red Cross offers 74 different self-help courses.

Courses that teach you everything, from how to be a better parent to how to save someone's life.

Every Red Cross course is developed by a top professional. Tuition is nominal. And there are hardly any admissions requirements.

This year, you could take a Red Cross course and learn something you've always wanted to know. To apply, simply call the people at your Red Cross chapter.

Move

goods shipments, Frezza said. It will not apply to overseas shipments or to household goods to non-temporary storage.

In some cases, those whose loss exceeds either the statutory limit pf $25,000 or the category limits on various types of property (such as the $3000 maximum payments on rugs) could see an additional benefit. This benefit could occur because, under increased liability, the Army may be able to recover from the carrier more than the member could be paid under Army Regulation 27-20. This additional recovery money would be paid to the member after it is collected.

For this new program to be effective, loss or damage must be noted on DD Form 1840 (Joint Statement of Loss or Damage at Delivery) when household goods are delivered, Frezza said. This requirement is not new. Then, within 70 days, the member must notify the local Staff Judge Advocate claims office of any additional loss or damage discovered. This time requirement is new. Notification is made on DD Form 1840R (Notice of Loss or Damage) which is on the back of DD Form 1849 the member recieves at delivery. If this time deadline is not met, the Army will lose its right to collect money from the carrier, which may affect the amount the member is paid on the claim, Frezza said.

Increased carrier liability will reduce the large difference between what the Army pays members on claims and what the Army can collect from the carriers for the damage to the member's property. This new program should encourage carriers to avoid loss and damage in order to make a profit. The number of poor moves, as well as the cost of domestic PCS moves, should be reduced.

"OUR NEW ARMY HOUSING IS NICE TO COME HOME TO. IT WAS WORTH THE WAIT."

SFC Ron Rhodes and his wife Connie.

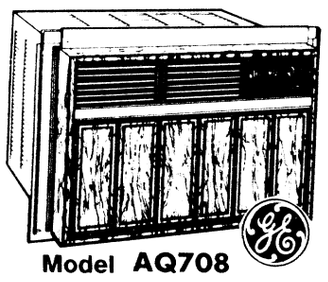
"It sure didn't take us long to get comfortable in our new house here at Fort Polk. Connie loves the size and layout. Ronnie-Lee loves the playground. And there's even room to store my boat.

"We love our quarters. This house has been very important for us in making a good home.

"Because we're in the Army, people may not expect us to live this well. But the Army has changed a lot in the past five years. It's a good place to live, to be.

"Connie and I feel that the Army's really come a long way in housing and, you know, in taking care of its people."

The overall quality of quarters on posts throughout the Army continues to improve. And housing starts and renovations are at an all-time high. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.



ARMY FAMILY.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Visiting Shorter mansion provides trip back in time

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

Looking for something to do this summer? Perhaps a place to take the kids where everyone can learn something and have fun at the same time?

How about a short drive to Eufaula, Alabama? Among the many things to do in Eufaula is a visit to the Shorter Mansion at 340 North Eufaula Ave.

The huge mansion was built in 1884 by Eli Sims Shorter II, a cotton planter, and is considered to be the epitome of the southern antebellum house.

Shorter later remodeled the house in 1906 to the Neo-Classical Revival look it has today. In the fall of 1965, the Eufaula Heritage Association bought the house from the original owners great-granddaughter for $33,000.

According to assistant manager Louise S. McRae, the summer months are the busiest for visitors. "We get from 500 to 600 people through here in the summer months," McRae said.

The house museum and cultural center is open in April for the annual Eufaula Pilgrimage. The pilgrimage is for visitors to attend the Eufaula Antique Auction and the other historic houses in the area. Upon walking up the front steps the most noticeable part of the house is the huge corinthian columns and the clean lines of architecture. Walking to the front door one can almost picture a goateed man in a grey suit and hat sitting in one of the rocking chair toking on a pipe.

Entering the main entry hall is a table where guests sign in. There is a small fee for visitors. For adults there is a $3 entry fee for children 12 years and younger there is a fee of 50 cents.

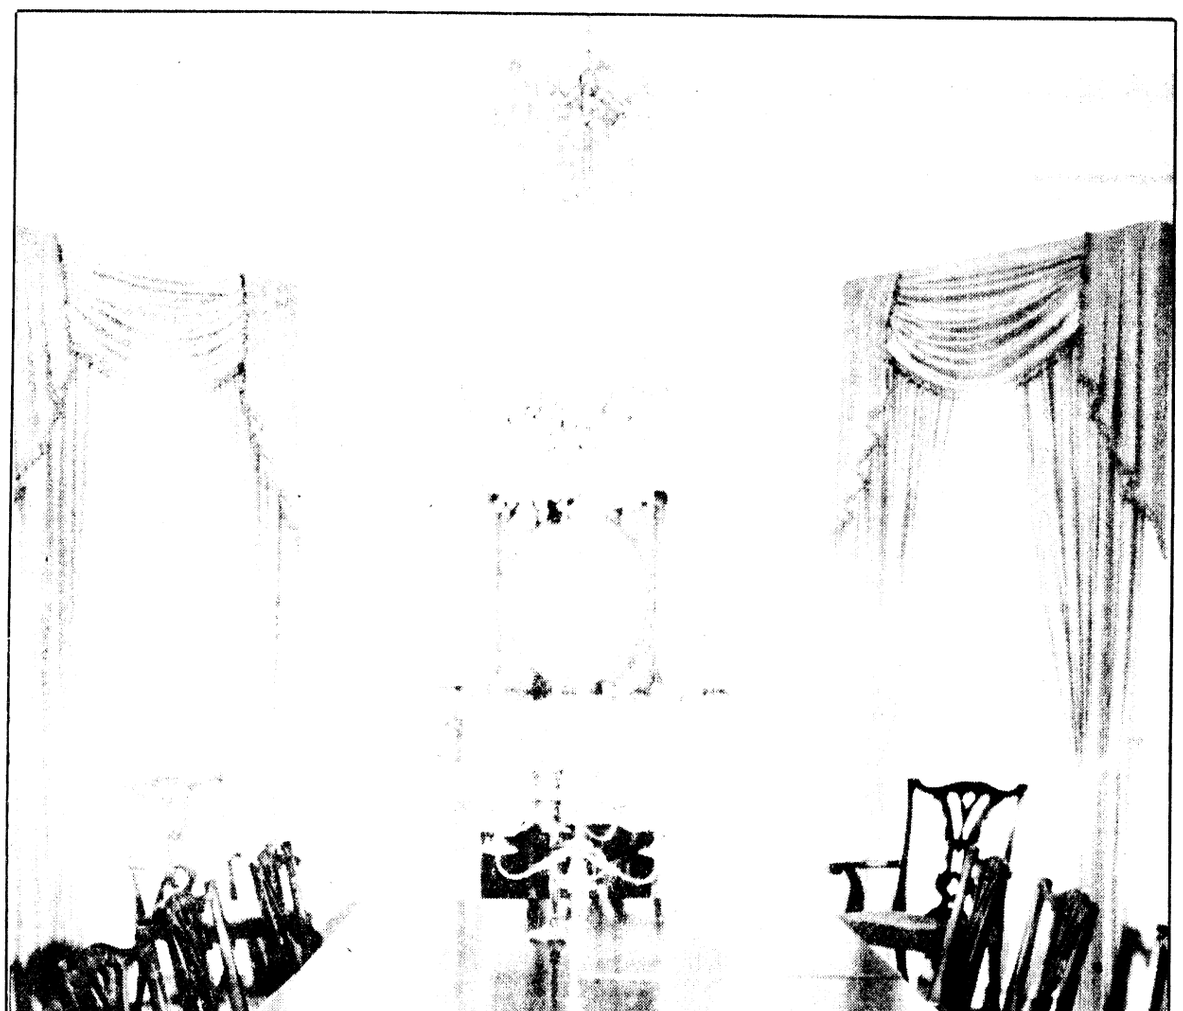
According to McRae, the furnishings in the house are not original, but the furniture has been donated by citizens and most are antiques. On the left wall of the entry hall hangs a oval shaped, brass framed mirror that puts the room in an unusual perspective. The intricate wood parquet patterned floors are lined with antique oriental rugs.

Stepping off to the left are the double parlors with chairs situated around each room. From the ceilings hang Waterford Crystal chandeliers. The doorway between parlors is supported by two corinthian columns.

The dining room is also lit up with Waterford crystals and centered in the room is a Regency Banquet table. Situated around the room are 12 English Chippendale chairs and a carved wooden mantel around the fireplace.

Also on the premises is a huge library. Situated in one window is a Rosewood Square Grand Piano, on loan form the Regar Museum in Anniston, Ala. The windows are draped with hand blocked English linen in a chinese pattern.

Upstairs there is a governors parlor with portraits of six governors with details of each administration.



Also upstairs is a collectors display room with antique clothing, dolls and furniture.

In the museum room, there is a collection of Bicentennial souveniers and confederate money among many other items.

The front bedroom has a bed made of Victorian Walnut with a child's made of American Victorian Walnut.

By this time you have seen the whole mansion and have completed a trip through history. On your way out to your car, don't forget to stop and see the beautifully manicured back yard and blooming flowers.

Whatever your reasons for going to Eufaula, the visit to the Shorter Mansion is well worth the time.

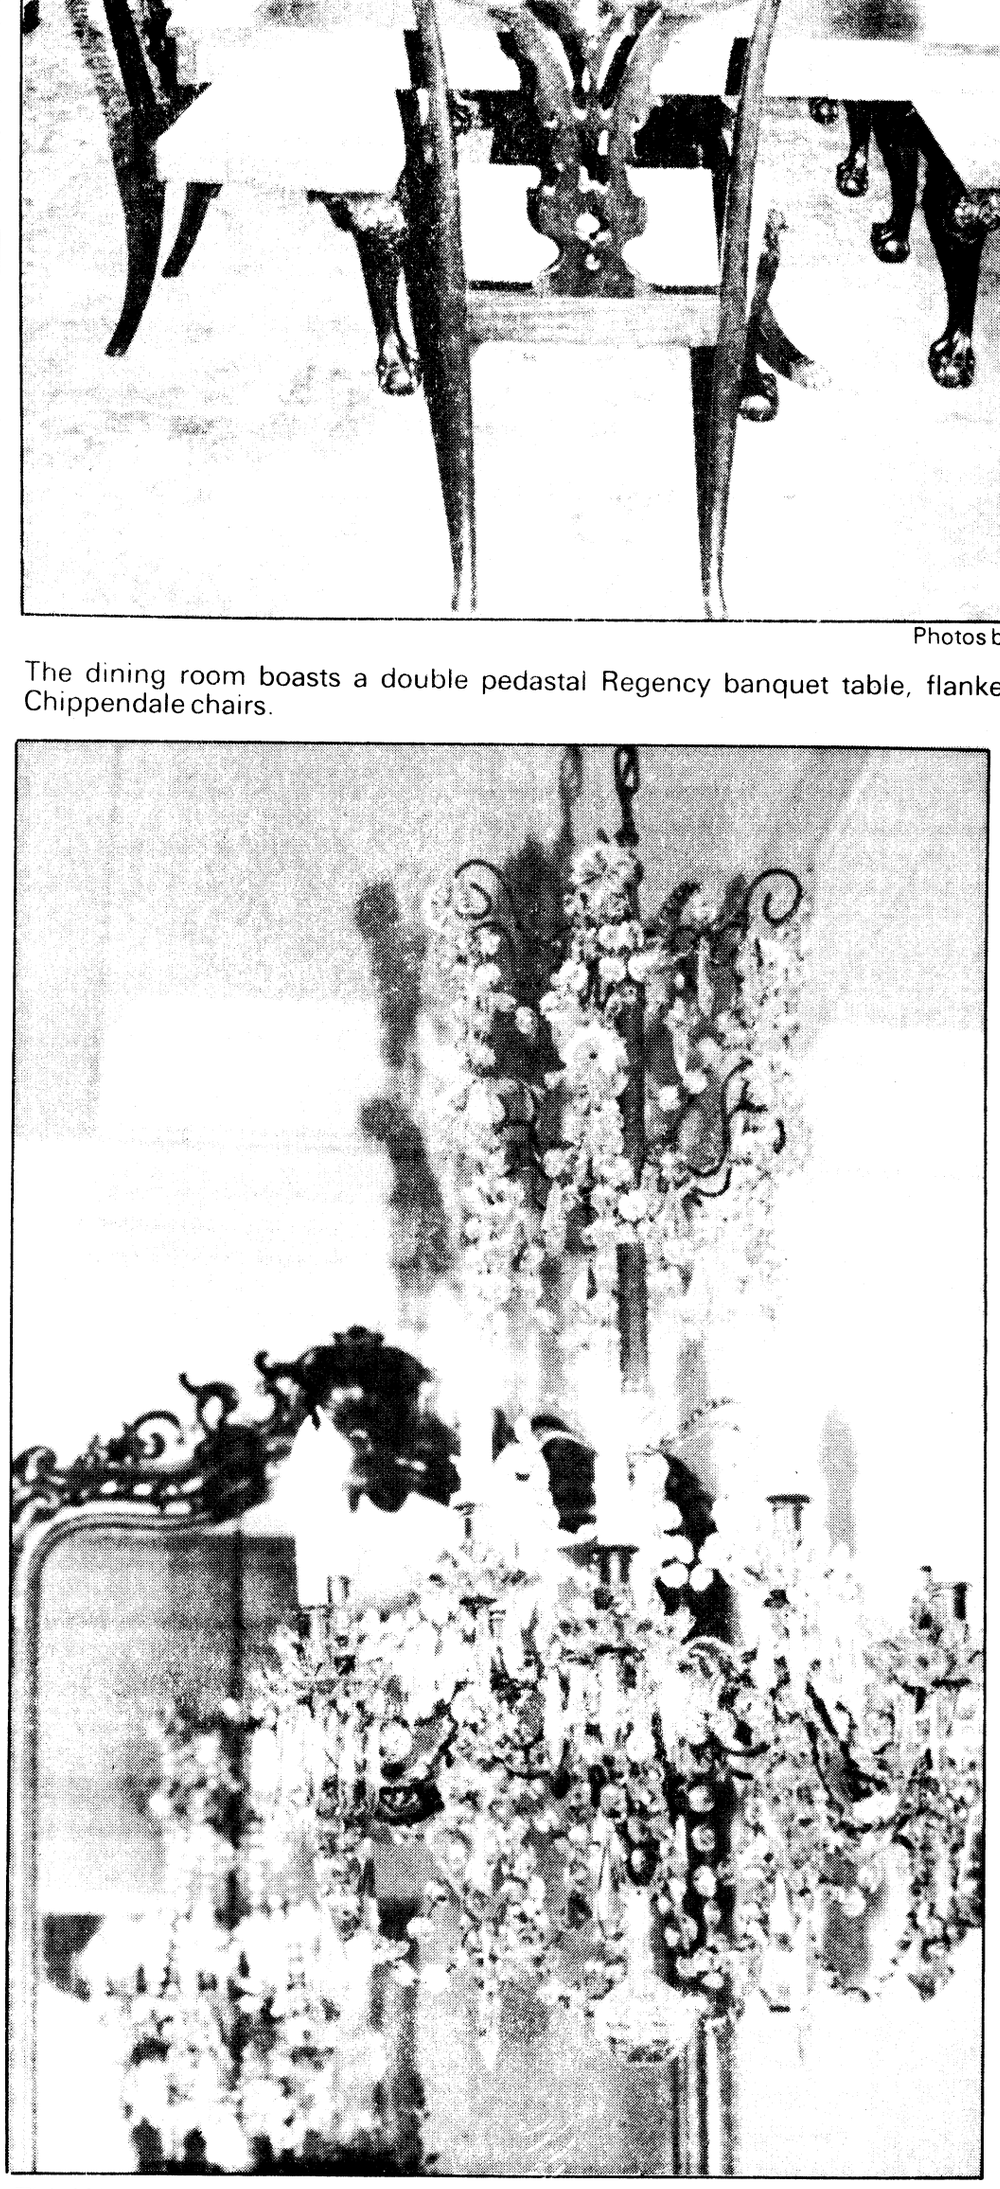
The dining room boasts a double pedastal Regency banquet table, flanked by English Chippendale chairs.



The piano in the Georgian library has keys inlaid with mother-of-pearl.

The collector's display room houses a jar collection and other mementoes of Eufaula.

The front parlor provides a welcoming place to greet visitors.

This Waterford crystal chandelier hangs in the dining room.

SPIRITUAL

Good fathers give direction to families

By James Pomann
USAIC Chaplain's Office

During the Bicentennial Year of the Constitution, I have been having a problem with most of the articles and commentaries about our nation's basic document: they talk about the work of our "founding fathers." Although the patriots who convened to organize our country and its government and who produced the Constitution were all of the male gender, the term sounds sexist to me still.

As we observe Father's Day, however, I dismiss my reservations in favor of highlighting a masculine characteristic displayed by our founding fathers, which provides a starting point for reflection and meditation within those who have assumed the vocation of parenthood. That this characteristic is called "masculine" has little to do with gender at all: mature and well-developed women show this trait as well as thoughtful men do.

Fathers give direction and movement, whether to a family or to a nation. This role was certainly embraced by our founding fathers two hundred years ago. They sought to move the loosely-bound confederation of colonies into a unified and intra-dependent republic. The government they developed was not to dominate and dictate, but to be responsive and balanced. Their creativity and patience in doing so is indeed worthy of our praise.

On Father's Day, we honor those who have given direction and movement to our lives. Parenting is not domineering. Rather fathering is actively looking for all the best in children and providing guidance and an environment for growth — balancing individual needs and the good of all, listening and caring, sometimes pushing, sometimes letting go.

Creativity and patience only begin with the birth of a child — or of a nation. Continuing energy for the effort comes only from spiritual resources. That is why many of us choose to address our ultimate source of spiritual power as "Father."

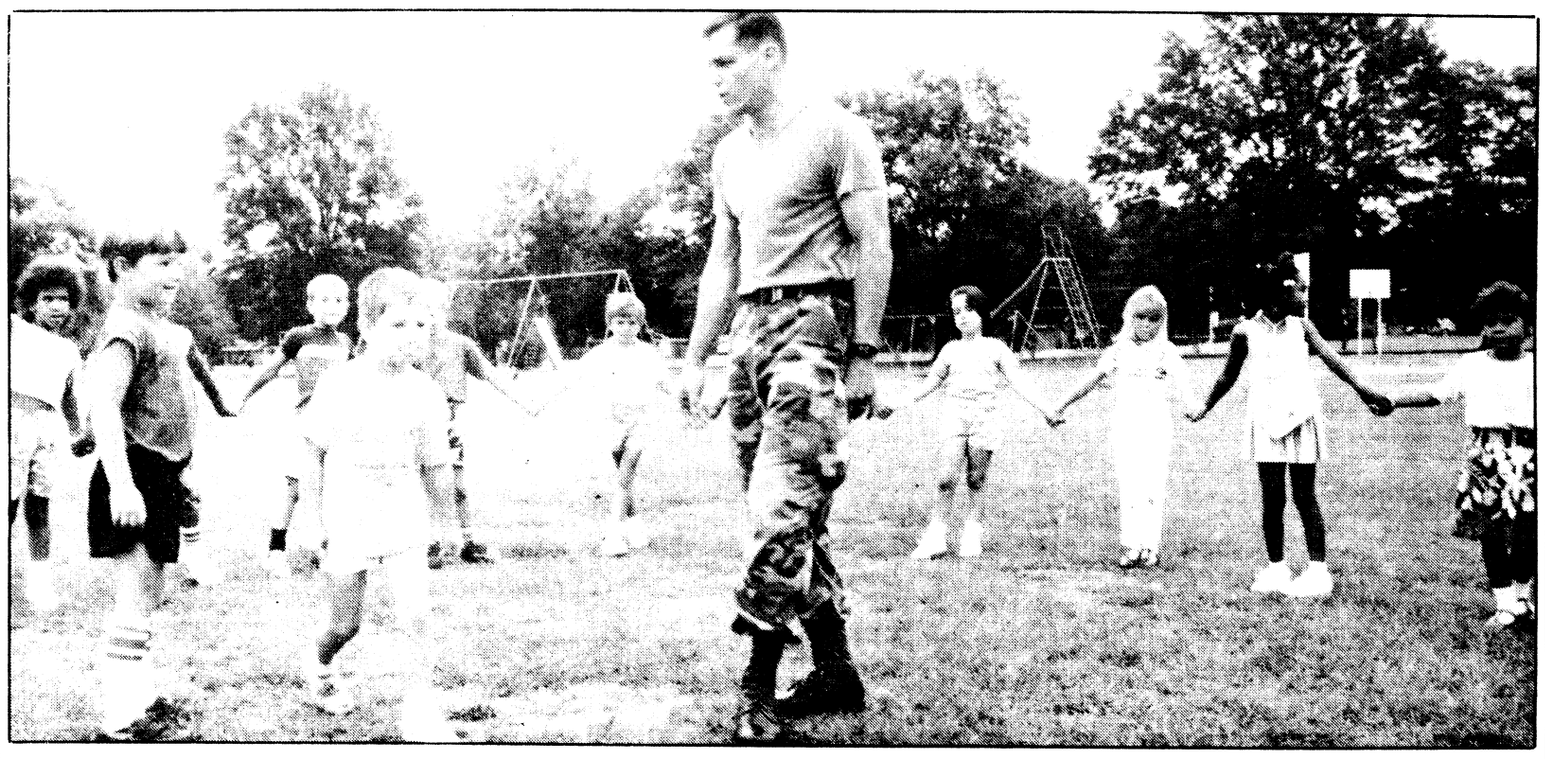
Bible School's theme is Hallelujah! Jesus is King

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

Wilson and Dexter Schools were filled with the sounds of children this week, as post youngsters attended Vacation Bible School.



Planned around the theme, "Hallelujah! Jesus is King," the week's activities included Bible story time, crafts, music, recreation and refreshments.

More than 350 children were registered at the Dexter School location, while attendance figures at Wilson were not available.

Sponsored by the USAIC Chaplain's Office and staffed with a volunteer work force of parents, Bible School offers children ages 4 through sixth grade a chance to learn about religion.

Buses are picking up children in all housing areas and returning them to their neighborhood at the end of each day's classes. Children who have not completed first grade must be accompanied by an older brother or sister in order to ride the bus.

The Bible School continues through June 19. For more information, call the USAIC Chaplain's Office.

CHAPEL BRIEFS

Community invited to prayer breakfast

The Infantry Center Chapel pastor, Chaplain Don McSwain, and the Officers' Christian Fellowship invite everyone to a prayer breakfast Tuesday at 6:30 a.m. in the TIC Chapel Annex.

There is no charge, but persons planning to attend are asked to call in advance to help the planning process at 545-2050.

"We ask people to call us if they want to come. But we have never run out of food. Last minute participants are always welcome," McSwain said.

Col. Conrad Boterweg will serve as devotional leader for the breakfast.

See Pope during his September visit

The Pope is coming to the United States in September. Mother Mary Mission and Saint Patrick's Church in Phenix City are sponsoring a complete tour package to New Orleans for the visit of Pope John Paul II.

Buses depart Sept. 10 and return Sept. 13. The cost of $150 covers transportation, room (double occupancy) and buffet breakfast on arrival. Reservations are available but will be closed soon. For additional information call Mary Huggins at 682-1576.

Buses to pick up Bible school kids

Vacation Bible Schools begins at 9 a.m. Monday at Dexter and Wilson Schools, and continues daily through June 19. It is open to children ages 4 years through those who have completed the sixth grade.

The program will consist of Bible study, crafts, music, recreation and refreshments and will be from 9 to 11:30 a.m. daily.

Children who have not completed the first grade must be accompanied by an older brother or sister in order to ride the bus. Bus routes are as follows:

Davis Hills: The red bus route will begin at approximately 8:35 a.m. It begins at Kawamura Street, on to Port Street, Hartsock Loop and then Buker Drive and proceeds to Dexter School.

Bouton Heights: The blue bus route will begin at 8:35 a.m. at the south end of 1st Cavalry Division Road, going through Doane Loop, and stopping at entrances to courts along the way to Marne Road, proceeding to Dexter School.

McGraw Manor: The green bus route will begin at 8:25 a.m., at Baker Street, to Arrowhead Road, down to Moon Road and on to Dexter School.

McGraw Manor-Custer Terrace: The purple bus route will begin at 8:25 a.m. Its route begins at McGraw Street and Leonard Street, then proceeds to Custer Terrace and arrives at the Custer Terrace Chapel at 8:40 a.m.

For the return routes, all buses will begin loading at 11:30 a.m. at Dexter School, and depart as soon as loaded. Passengers will be unloaded in the same order as they were picked up.

OFF DUTY

DPCA

A Beach Party is where the boys and girls will be Saturday from 9 to 12 p.m. The lower pool will be open until midnight in conjunction with the regular I-Bar Disco (playing your favorite beach music) so that you can enjoy the best of both worlds and take a refreshing swim to cool off after dancing. Swimwear is required if you plan to swim.

Hawaiian Luau — A Hawaiian luau will be featured June 26 in the Supper Club Porch and Pool area from 6 to 12 p.m. The Pacific Warning band will play, and a Polynesian Floor Show will be presented, featuring the Flaming Knife Dance and other authentic dances. A conventional Hawaiian buffet will be served. Hawaiian and popular dance music will also be provided before and after the show. The cost is $7.95 per person (members and bona fide guests only). Note: The Lexington Room will be closed for this event.

Father's Day Brunch — The price of Sunday brunch is reduced $1.50 for all fathers this Sunday, compliments of the club. Reservations are required and may only be taken on the hour from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Due to the popularity of this event, reservations may only be held for 15 minutes beyond your scheduled arrival time.

Family Fitness Center - Saunas, whirlpools, Nautilus equipment, free weights, electronic treadmill, stationary bikes and an exercise room offering various aerobic classes are available daily at the Officers' Club Family Fitness Center.

NCO Club System - Treat yourself to a one-pound porterhouse steak, charbroiled to suit your taste Saturday night at the Main NCO Club. Cost is $7.95 per person.

The Family Night Special at the club Wednesday is country fried steak. Dinner is served from 6 to 9 p.m. Cost is $3.95 for adults and $2.50 for children under 11.

Free Buffet — The Main NCO Club will offer a free buffet June 24 from 5 to 6 p.m.

Community Recreation — The Fort Benning Information Tour and Travel Office offers a variety of discount tickets including movie tickets, Six Flags tickets, White Water tickets and a complete range of group tour and individualized travel services. Call 545-7535 or 545-4155 for information.

The U.S. Army Infantry Center recreation area, in Destin, Fla., offers a low cost beach vacation. The center now has a 48-foot fishing/party boat available for charter, in addition to our 38-foot fishing boat. We've added two new duplex cabins and a 10-unit motel. Cabins must still be reserved under the lottery system during the summer, but the motel is available by reservation year-round. For more information, call the Outdoor Recreation Office, 545-4155.

The Kelley Hill recreation Center, Building 9079, invites retirees and their family members to participate in the programs and activities being offered. A sampling of our programs includes:

Weekly Coupon Swap — Each Wednesday at 7 p.m., all bargain hunters are invited to convene at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center to trade those valuable coupons.

Overeater's Anonymous — Do you eat when you are not hungry? Do your eating habits change when your mood changes? If so, then perhaps Overeaters Anonymous can help. This group teaches you to change your eating habits for good. This is an educational support group with no fees, no dues and no-weights. Drop in on Thursday evenings at 7:30 p.m.

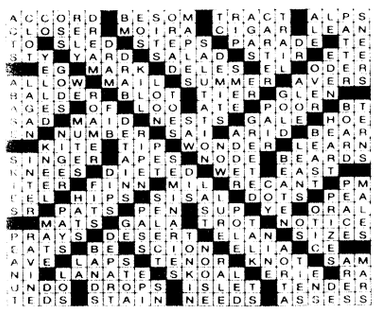
Music lessons — The recreation centers offer piano lessons, beginning and intermediate, to people of all ages.

Joleen Tice, of the Acorn School of Music, offers piano and vocal lessons for all ages. Joleen is a member of the National Guild of Piano Teachers and is qualified to teach pre-school age children as well. Grandkids to grandparents can learn to play beautifully by taking one 30-minute lesson per week, (not including practice time).

Lessons are private and individually paced. Practice pianos are available during recreation centers operational hours. Cost is only $7 per lesson. To register, call 544-1721 and leave your name and telephone number, the instructor will contact you to arrange a lesson schedule. Don't hesitate, call today!

Computer classes — Computer know-how is invaluable in today's job market. Without it, finding a good job is almost impossible. The Kelley Hill Recreation Center ranges from the most basic introductory course to the more advanced programming. Each person enrolled gets hands-on training at individual stations complete with monitor, disk drive and printer. Don't hesitate, call today!

The post entertainment section is back in operation. Ed Hensley is requesting volunteer assistance from talented personnel (young and old) who are interested in becoming a part of a company of entertainers. Hopefully, this group will be able to provide some much-needed, wholesome family entertainment for the soldier, their family and occasional visits to local children's hospital wards and homes for the elderly. If you feel you have a particular talent that is entertaining or informative, please contact Ed at 545-5057.



Arts & Crafts — The arts and crafts staff welcomes you to the Fort Benning Milton E. Long Arts and Crafts Center, Main Post Auto Shop, was Kelley Hill Auto Shop. These fine facilities are fully equipped and staffed by knowledgeable instructors.

The facilities are available for use by active duty, retired military, reserve personnel, family members and authorized civilians working on Fort Benning.

A listing of the many scheduled activities are printed monthly and are available at the Arts and Crafts Center, Building 2783, Eckel Street, or at any of the Arts and Crafts facilities during operating hours. We are proud of our facilities and want you to become a frequent user of them.

The center is located on the corner of Eckel Street and Sightseeing Road, across from the Main Post Bowling Center. The facility is a two-story structure which houses the following activities; woodcrafts, ceramic, photography, picture framing, sewing, leather, lapidary, jewelry, drawing, painting, pottery, stained glass and small crafts.

Movin' around the track

Olympic speed walker leaves runners behind

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

"It really seems to upset the runners when I compete in the Fort Benning races, said Larry M. Aviles, 1980 Olympic qualifer.

Aviles, an instuctor at Company D, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, walks faster than many of the running competitors.Kicking around a one-mile track at under seven minutes, is no novelty to the 1980 Olympic qualifier.

Aviles is a walker of national recognition. He is currently ranked among the top 10 nationally in the 100km and ranked in the top 30 in the 50km.

Aviles boast records in the 100km with a time of 13:00:00, and in the 50km, clocking in at 4:53:00.

Competitive walking is more than putting one foot in front of the other.

"Competitors have to keep one foot in contact with the ground and straighten each knee as it passes under the body. Two infractions of the rules and it's goodbye," explained Aviles.

"To be fast, requires pumping both arms in rapid counterpoint, while rotating the pelvis front-to-back, not side-to-side, and snapping off three or more strides per second," Aviles said.

Aviles' knowledge of what it takes to be fast has come from more than 10 years of competition and training from some of the top United States walkers.

Fort Benning's human roadrunner has trained with Martin Rudow and Tom Dooley, 1968 and 1972 olympic qualifiers, and Larry Young the 1972 Silver Medalist.

In his current training program, Aviles puts in at least 60 to 80 miles of road work each week.

"I get up around 4 or 5 O'clock to get in a few miles, then walk additional miles that evening," said Aviles. "I train for distance and do my hill work on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, while doing sprint work on Tuesdays and Thursdays," he added.

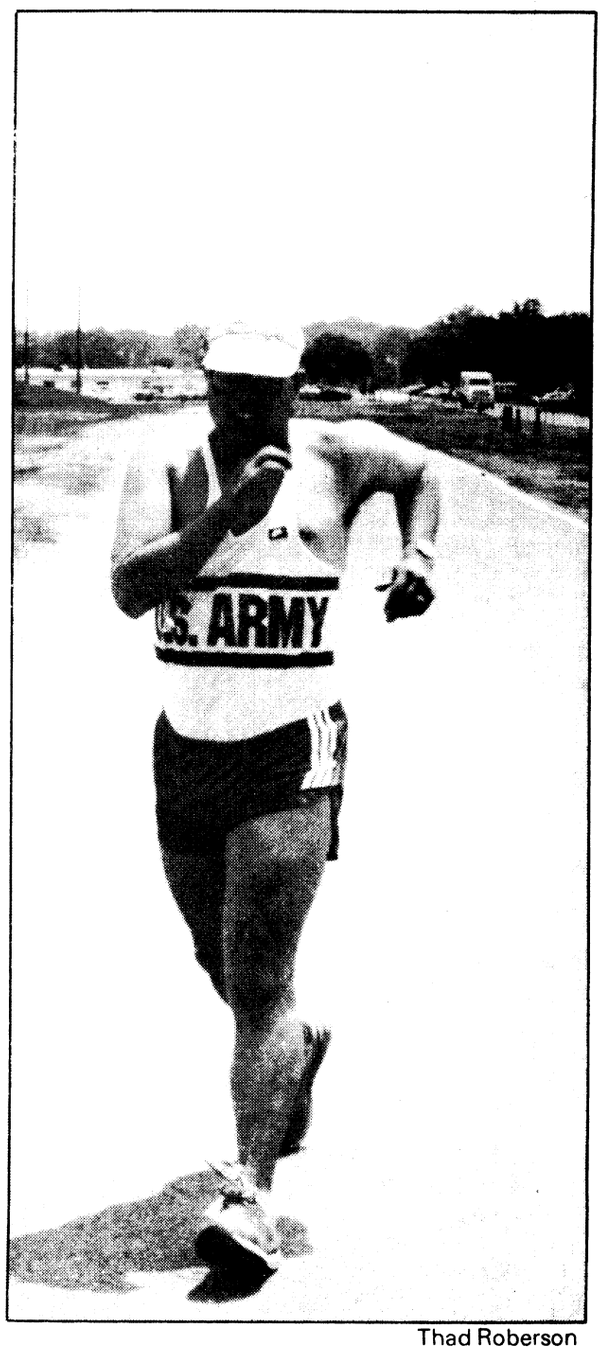
Aviles' training also includes a light weight program.

"I need to work with the light weights to build the strength in the arms, because of the steady motion of walking," Aviles said.

It was this type of training that prepared Aviles for his toughest course, in which he took third place.

The Atlanta half marathon, a course of 13.1 miles was, by far, the hardest to tackel," said Aviles. "I had to contend with both the heat and the very hilly course."

Aviles went to the Masters Southeastern Championships Saturday, in Atlanta, looking for the heat to provide him with an edge.



"I went into this 5000-meter walk with an advantage because others were not be accustomed to the heat. But, I've trained here at Fort Benning, where it gets hot," Aviles said.

Aviles is also interested in forming a walking club in the Fort Benning area.

"Walking is not just for racing," said Aviles, "but also for leisure."

"It's not for the young or old, but for everyone. There are competitors who are 80 years old and still walking, and are close to reaching world records," Aviles said.

If anyone wishes more information on the new walking club, they should contact Ssgt. Larry M. Aviles, at 545-5527.

Marksmanship meet features broad field of competitors

By Tommy Pool
USAMU PAO

USAMU's Staff Sgt. Greg Strom continued his winning streak by defeating more than 120 competitors during this year's Georgia State Rifle Championship held June 13-14.

Sponsored by the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club, this year's championship attracted the top civilian and military shooters in the Southeast and included members of the U.S. Marine Corps Rifle Team.

In the individual matches, Marine competitor CWO Walter Arndt won the initial 200-yard standing event with 197 out of 200 possible points.

Members of the Army squad came back to take the next two stages with Spec. 4 Randell Rackley firing a perfect 200 out of 200 to win the rapid fire sitting event.

Strom won the 300-yard rapidfire prone stage, also with a perfect 200 score.

In the overall championship aggregate, Strom held on to win by a narrow one-point margin over Marine competitors, CWO Arndt and Staff Sgt. William Bonilla.

Strom finished with 789 out of 800 points, while Arndt and Bonilla both scored 788 to finish second and third respectively.

In the team championship, the U.S. Marine Corps placed first and second with scores of 1,995 and 1,953 to upset the U.S. Army finishing in third and fourth position at 1,946 and 1,945.

The teams will compete against each other again during this year's Interservice and National Rifle championships to be held at Qunatico, Va. and Camp Perry, Ohio, this July and August.

The long-standing rivalry between the two teams goes back more than 80 years, with the Army holding a narrow lead in total number of national championship team titles (28), to the overall total by the Marine Corps (24).

In other competition, members of the USAMU departed this week to participate in the U.S. National Championships to be held at Prado Dam, Calif., site of the 1984 Olympic shooting events.

This year's championships will also be used as final tryouts for the United States Pan American Games Team. The Pan Am Games are to be held in Indianapolis, Ind. from Aug. 9-15.

More than 30 members from USAMU will compete in international rifle, pistol, shotgun and running target events. The top scoring individuals in more than a dozen shooting events will be selected for the U.S. Team.

The U.S. National's and Pan American Games tryouts are scheduled to run from June 21-30. Watch for all the scores and final U.S. team selections in future issues of the Bayonet.

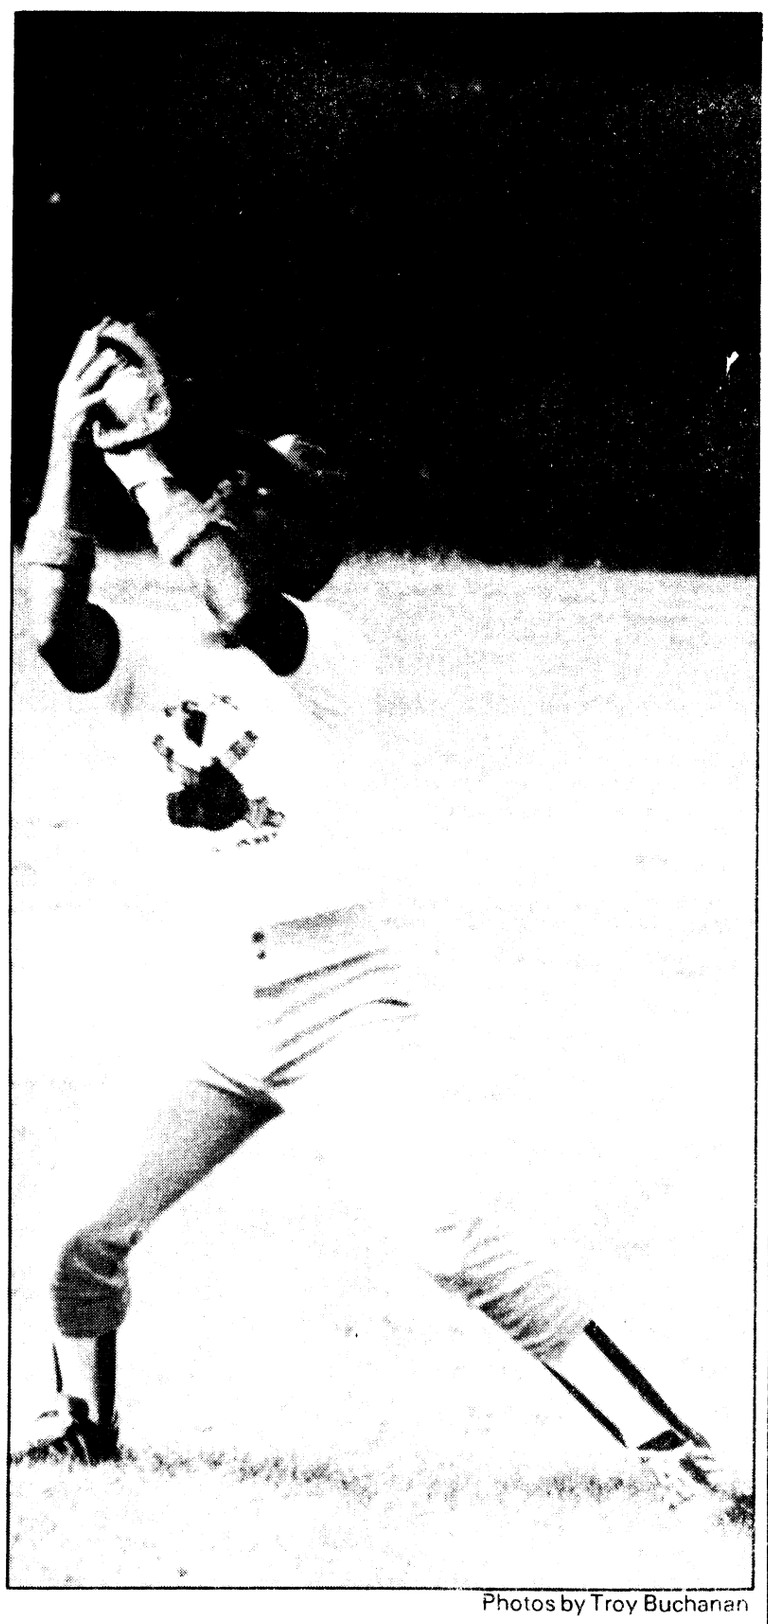
197th teams fight it out softball action

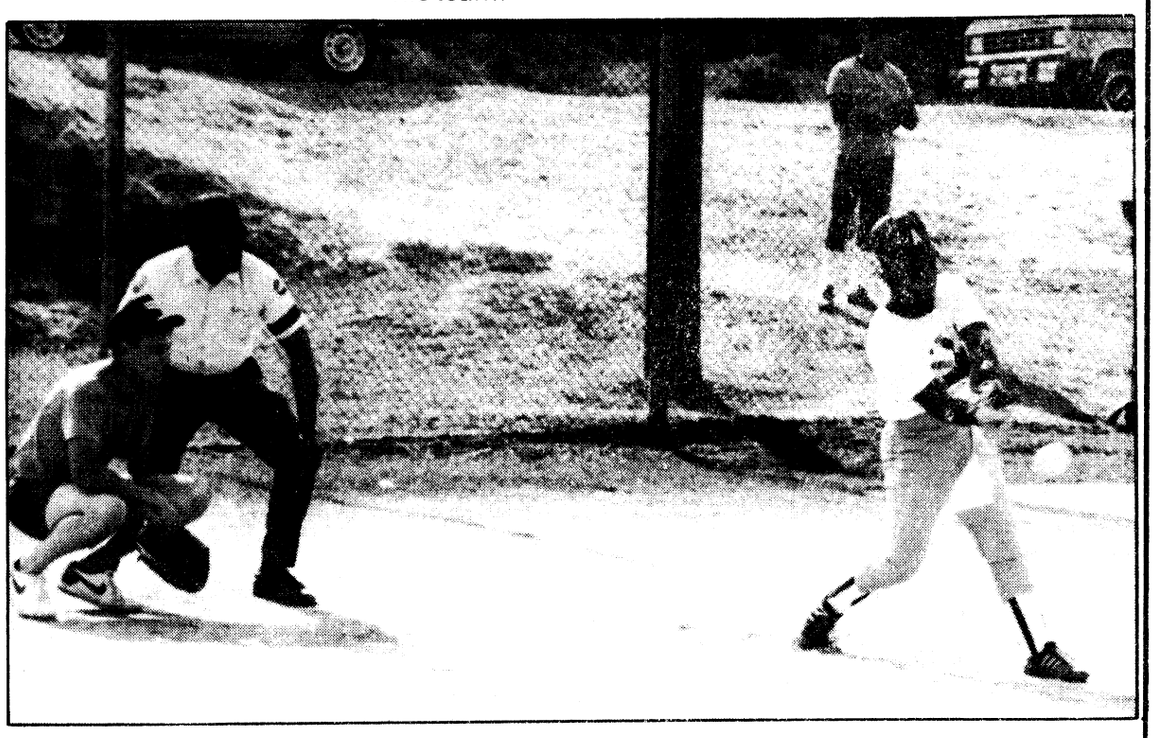
By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent



Last week Alpha Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, squared off against Company A, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, in a Post League softball game at Essebagger Field.

Alpha 1-58 started out strong by scoring eight runs in the top of the first inning. But then Alpha 2-10 took the game over.

After scoring five runs in the first inning, Alpha 2-10 gained the lead by scoring five more runs in the second inning, and three runs in the fourth inning.



Spec. 4 Derrick Voerg, from Alpha 2-10, hit a two-run homer in the bottom of the sixth inning. Then three more runs were scored as Alpha 2-10 came up to bat, giving Alpha 2-10 an 18-8 victory over Alpha 1-58.

"During the first inning, we didn't do so well, but after we settled down we started to work together really well as a team," said Staff Sgt. Rafael Betancourt of Alpha 2-10. "It was a good game and I was really proud of the team."

Ghostbusters beat Hawks 27-18

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

When it's scores that you need on the softball field, who you gonna' call?

In another season of "cracking the bat," the Ghostbusters are dominating the American League of Youth Activities Softball.

In recent action, the Ghostbusters III scored more than 20 runs in games against the Red Devils and the Silver Hawks.

Though the Hawks were flying a close precision mission, the Ghostbusters pulled out a 27-18 victory.

In protecting their unblemished, 10-0 record, the Ghostbusters had to fight through the Silver Hawk defense, which held the Ghostbusters to only two runs in the first inning.

The Silver Hawks were able to quickly spot the Ghostbusters until the third inning, when John Quinn disappeared with a thundering homer to start the rally.

Quinn, who scored four runs in the contest, shared the home plate with teammate, Kevin Moore, also pulling in four scores.

Moore was a highly visible Ghostbuster, boosting the Buster defense with several diving catches.

The Ghostbusters were still fired up to burn the Red Devils in a 25-17 judgement.

It was three up and three down, when the Red Devils took the field to face the Ghostbuster defense, led by Siona Poyer, Brian San Nicolas and Jelana Quinn.

The scoring drives were provided by Casey McMullen, with two runs, and Angela Matteo, who brought in two scores.

The remainder of the scores were distributed among the team members of the number one team in the American League.

'Low impact' newest trend in aerobic exercise

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

"Low impact" is the newest trend in aerobic exercise. "It's a fantastic way to get involved in a fitness program," said Joyce Heflin of the Navy's Health and Physical Readiness Office. "It's social, the music is dynamite and with a good, personable instructor, you can get a great workout and have a lot of fun. And it's not just for the out-of-shape -- a lot of Seabees and SEALS are taking the classes too."

The Seabees and SEALS and others obviously don't rely on low-impact aerobics to ensure they score well on fitness tests. "But as an adjunct to training, it's super. It can relieve the boredom of just working on tested skills," said Heflin. For dependents and civilians, low-impact aerobics can fill the bill for a fitness program, said Capt. Frank Gross, staff physiologist at Randolph Air Force Base, Texas.

Gross likes low-impact exercises because they can improve or develop upper-body strength. "People who focus exclusively on running may be neglecting their upper bodies," said Gross.

Low-impact aerobics was developed after persons taking high-impact aerobic courses started developing stress fractures, knee injuries and low-back injuries.

Low-impact aerobics include more floor exercises, and the dance routines keep one foot on the floor at all times. There are no high leaps, such as those found in regular aerobics, so the body weight is not pressing down on the foot as it hits the floor with as high an impact.

Just because it's safer doesn't mean it's easier. "You can achieve a rigorous workout without going into a high-impact situation," said Gross.

Some of the injuries sustained in high-impact aerobic classes might have been avoided had the instructors been better qualified.

Said Heflin, "It's important that you make sure your instructor is certified by an organization like the American College of Sports Medicine. A certified instructor will know CPR and other first-aid techniques and will know enough about exercise physiology not to instruct you to do anything dangerous." Low-impact aerobics classes are available at many military recreation and fitness facilities. The instructors at these classes are properly trained.

If you're looking for a class in the community — and there are many good ones — Gross suggested looking at the room where the class will be taught as well as the instructor's qualifications. "You want a floor with some resiliency, but it shouldn't be like dancing on a pillow either" he said.

And if you want a change from low-impact aerobic dancing, Gross had another suggestion. Try "jarming" — which gets its name from putting a "j" for jog in front of "arm." This involves sitting in a chair with "heavy hands" (small weights in the hand) and making swimming motions with the arm. It's great for upper-body strength, and you're guaranteed to baffle at least some of your friends when you excuse yourself to go jarm.

Of course, it's a good idea to get a doctor's advice before attempting low-impact aerobics or jarming.

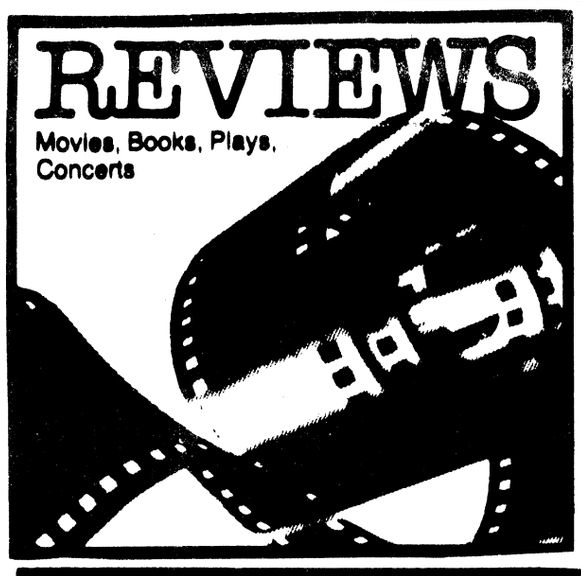
Summer leagues forming on post

Retirees Summer and Winter Mixed Doubles Handicap Bowling League is forming. All individuals wishing to participate must be in possession of a current I.D. Card, DD Form 2, or DD Form 1173, and must be retired from military service or a spouse of a deceased retiree.

Those interested should sign up at Main Post or the Mall Bowling Lanes or call Ray Pierce, 563-7824 or 545-3272.

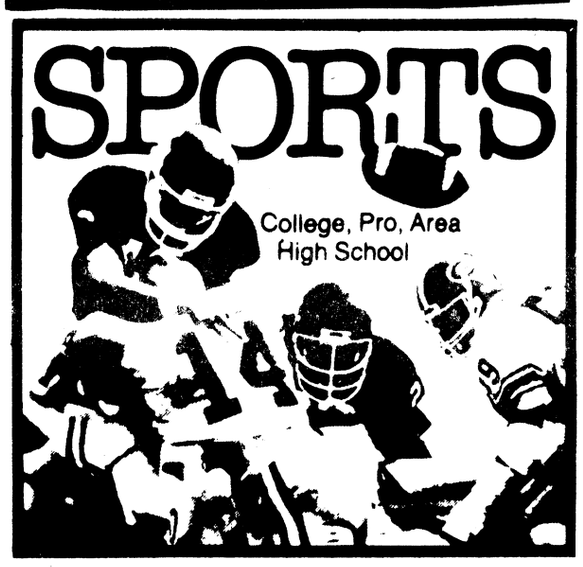
Locals sponsor softball action

Several local businesses have joined forces and are sponsoring a men and women softball tournament in the Benning Park Complex.



The tournament will be played June 26, 27, and 28 with team trophies for the four teams, individual trophies for the top team and t-shirts for the top 3 teams.

Awards will be given to the most valuable player and for the most home-runs hit.



The fee is $80 per team and the games will be governed by the AmatuerSoftball Association.

THE SAAB 9000. OR, FOR A FEW THOUSAND DOLLARS MORE, BMW WILL SELL YOU A SLOWER CAR THAT WILL CARRY LESS.

Both the Saab 9000 Turbo and the BMW528e are high-performance European luxury sedans.

Despite the fact that the BMW is more expensive, the Saab provides far more performance and luxury.

Motor Trend reports the BMW's acceleration from zero to 60 as 10.3 seconds, and its standing quarter mile time as 17.51 seconds. Not bad, but not in Saab's class. Motor Trend's figures for the Saab 9000 were 8.2 seconds and 16.2 seconds, respectively.

And while luxury may have many components, a principal one is space. The Saab 9000 is one of only two imports classified by the Environmental Protection Agency as a "large car". The BMW is two classes down from that, among the "compact cars."

If you demand more performance and comfort for your dollar, bring your demands to us. Soon. SAAB

Officials hope to avoid PCS freeze in FY 1988

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — "No PCS freeze in fiscal year 1988" is one of two top goals Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel Lt. Gen. Robert M. Elton has reaffirmed in a recent permanent change of station review conducted at the Pentagon.

The other goal is to stay under the congressional limits imposed in the budget.

The review was the fourth in a continuing series specifically conducted to monitor the Army's progress in meeting its PCS dollar objectives while at the same time prevent furthur involuntary tour extensions.

According to Elton, the Army is close to meeting its objectives and is pressing hard to reap the savings that are required. Assignment officials, including seven general officers and their staffs, met to carefully review each category of PCS move to ensure that only necessary moves and those in the best interest of soldiers and the Army are executed.

These reviews, Elton added, demonstrate action by the Army leadership to provide a coordinated effort with major field commanders to meet congressionally mandated budget constraints on PCS moves while sustaining readiness and minimizing further hardship on soldiers and their families.

After the most recent review, Col. R. Dennis Duffie, chief of the ODCSPER enlisted sustainment and distribution division, said that

"Elton has continually sought innovative solutions to reduce the number of PCS moves made by soldiers worldwide and we expect that commitment to continue with the new DCSPER, Lt. Gen. Allen K. Ono. In our search for solutions, we have learned how to be more efficient in our assignment identification and selection process. Barring further budget reductions, these efficiencies will help ensure no PCS freeze will be required during fiscal 1988."

In tightly managing the entire PCS issue, the Army has found an unexpected success story. Foreign-service tour extensions are climbing, and if the extension rate continues, the savings could reach $60 million this fiscal year. This can be attributed to overseas commanders' understanding the PCS budget and their continuing efforts to encourage overseas extensions.

Thre tighter management of tours in the continental United States time-on-station for most soldiers is approaching 36 months against a 48-month CONUS retainability goal. Duffie said this is a positive trend for unit readiness and personnel stability because it keeps soldiers in units longer and reduces the number of soldier and family moves.

Homebase program designed to save soldiers money on moves

Army News Service

The Army's Homebase/Advance Assignment program may be able to save soldiers money on moving expenses and reduce dislocation of their families when they are assigned to a family member-restricted overseas tour.

With homebase assignments, soldiers return to the same location where they were stationed before going on their overseas tour. Their family remains at the homebase location while the sponsor is away. Homebasing eliminates moving costs, and allows families to stay in place Marino A. Fiesel of MILPERCEN's assignment procedures office said.

Family member restricted areas include Johnson Island, Korea, the Sinai and Turkey.

With advance assignments, soldiers know where they will be stationed for their follow-on tours after serving overseas. Many families move directly to their next assignment locations, said officials. This eliminates a move to a third location while the soldier is away, which saves money and allows the family to stay longer in either the former or the new assignment location.

Families moving to a new location are not eligible for government headquarters until the soldier returns from his overseas assignment. However, the time the soldier spent away, usually 12 months, counts toward the time the family needs to get into quarters and this time usually puts the family at the top of the housing list.

"The program applies to sergeants through master sergeants," said Fiesel. "Specialists four and below, promotable master sergeants, sergeants major and soldiers electing to serve all others tours are not eligible for the Homebase/Advance Assignment Program."

Soldiers who want to participate in the HAAP must sign statements when they are notified of their homebase/advance assignments. This statement says that the soldier understands the intent of the program.

"Soldier's participating in the HAAP are expected to use their permanent change-of-station entitlements to move their families only to their advance assignment locations," Fiesel said. "If they are on homebase assignments, they should not use their PCS entitlements at all."

If the assignment authority cancels or changes a soldier's homebase or advance assignment, the soldier may use the PCS entitlement. If a soldier, contrary to the intent of either program, uses the PCS entitlement, the assignment authority may cancel or change the previously approved homebase or advance assignment.

Additional instructions in a soldier's PCS orders indicate the soldier's election of either a homebase or advance assignment.

"Promotable specialists four who are promoted before they leave for their overseas family member-restricted tours will receive homebase/advance assignments," Fiesel said. "Those who aren't promoted to sergeant until after they arrive at their overseas locations aren't eligible for the HAAP."

Soldiers serving in overseas areas with HAAP who voluntarily extend those tours for any length of time will be reassigned to their original homebase/advance assignments upon completion of their extended tours, if valid requirements exist at those installations. When no valid requirement exists, a soldier will be reassigned to another location based on the needs of the Army.

"We make HAAP assignments based on the needs of the Army, professional development considerations, least-cost factors, regimental affiliation and the soldier's wishes," Fiesel explained. "Once MILPERCEN makes a homebase or advance assignment, a soldier's request for a change must be made in accordance with AR 614-200, Chapter 3."

In all cases where MILPERCEN considers a change of homebase or advance assignment for a soldier, an assignment manager will contact the soldier to determine the impact of the change.

Help available locating jobs off post

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

Tired of pounding the pavement looking for a job? Well, there's a new center on post that should take a lot of the legwork out of job searching.

The Family Members Assistance Program is designed to assist family members, military retirees, civil service employees, reservists and military personnel separating from service in finding jobs.

The program, which began on post May 11, has made job searching quite a bit easier for anyone affiliated with the military.

Implemented Army-wide, the program came about as a result of greater awareness of the militay family member. "Essentially the idea originated with the Army Family Symposium in 1980," said Pat Sneed, post program manager. It came about when Army wives made it known that they need some attention too, she said.

The model program was initally created at Fort Belvoir, Va., and as a result of its success the program was adopted Army-wide.

Expanding the program to Fort Benning has been a process that Sneed has worked on for a year. No stranger to recruiting workers Sneed put her experience and expertise to work in makng the program possible for Fort Benning.

The wife of a retired soldier and Civil Service employee herself, Sneed has worked as a volunteer coordinator for three years. "I recruited and replaced volunteers in different agencies on post," she said. "I also sought out people to volunteer. I helped teens find volunteer positions. With two teenagers of my own, I understand how hard it is for teenagers to find jobs," She said.

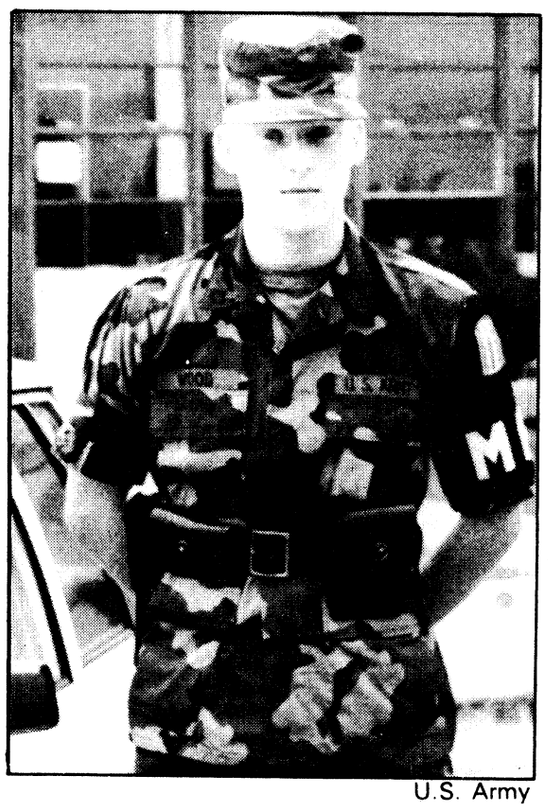
The fruit of her labor has resulted in 85 people being registered into the program since the center opened its doors. "We have sucessfully been able to place about half of those people," Sneed said. "And we shouldn't have any problem placing the rest of them. But if a person has updated marketable job skills the applicant can be placed within a few weeks," she said.

Sneed was surprized at the response of the local employment services. "My first hesitation was there would be some resistance on their part. I was overwhelmed with their response because they had been looking for a point of contact on Fort Benning to reach family members. They have welcomed us with open arms,"Sneed said.

In addition to the jobs that the services offer, the center keeps on file other fields of employment such as; security guards, banking, medical, management, secretarial and data entry."We refer a lot of people to these services," Sneed said. Although some of the jobs start out as temporary many may become permanent. "Many of the businesses in Columbus have permanent jobs but they hire someone on a temporary basis so that they can watch the employee. This is also a good opportunity for the employee to check out the office too," Sneed said.

197th soldier helps nab thief in Canada

197th Infantry Brigade



On May 4 in Canada, a 197th Infantry Brigade (M) (S) soldier chased and tackled a suspect who fled from the scene while his vehicle was being searched.

At the time of the incident, Pvt. 1st Class Richard A. Wood of the Military Police Platoon was on patrol with two members of the Royal Canadian Mounted (R.C.M.) Police. While his fellow Canadian soldiers, Constable Royowski and Constable Van Dorland stopped a pickup truck and proceeded to search it, Wood stood back near the police vehicle to observe procedures and provide proper coverage.

During the search, the Canadian police seized a quantity of drugs; however, the suspect fled on foot. Immediately, Wood gave chase, stopped the suspect and Constable Roykowski subsequently arrested the suspect without further incident.

Wood was recognized and applauded by the R.C.M. Police for his ability, determination and professionalism displayed at the time.

His platoon was apart of the Rendezvous 87 Task Force which trained in Camp Wainwright, Alberta, Canada, last month.

Pvt. 1 Richard A. Wood, a military policeman, helped members of the Canadian Mounted Police apprehend a suspect during his deployment to Canada for Rendezvous 87.

Wickham praises troops as he retires from service

After 41 years in uniform, I leave active service with mixed emotions of pride, respect and some regret. First, there is great pride in what we have achieved together in defense of our nation. Second, there is tremendous respect and admiration for what you, individually and collectively, have accomplished and are on the verge of achieving. Last, there is a sense of regret as I shall no longer share with you the triumphs, the challenges and the camaraderie of an active soldier's career.

Over the course of these past 41 years, sometimes in combat and crises, but mostly in peacetime, we have accomplished many things and made an important difference in our nation's security. The Army continues to grow in combat capabilities and readiness because history tells us that being ready for war is the best way to assure the peace. Our ethic of service still prizes loyalty, integrity, duty and selfless commitment to excellence and our leaders at all levels practice and mentor these values daily. Soldiers and their families share a quality of life worthy of their sacrifices and they give faithful service in return. These are achievements in which each of you can take great pride.

Under the strong leadership of Secretary Marsh and General Vuono, I know you will continue to make history. You are a good Army on the threshhold of greatness. Your spirit, patriotism and vigilance will safeguard the blessings of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness for our children and for succeeding generations of Americans. Our future is in very good hands. Thanks from the bottom of my heart for your loyalty and support during my stewardship.

Gen. John A. Wickham
Former Chief of Staff, U.S. Army

TRADOC gets award for reenlistment efforts

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — During fiscal year 1986, the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command was among those who are continued to excel in the retention of quality soldiers, said Maj. Gen. William G. O'Lesky, director of Military Personnel Management.

For this achievement, Gen. Carl E. Vuono, TRADOC commanding general, accepted the Headquarters, Department of the Army Reenlistment Award for Fiscal 1986 on behalf of TRADOC.

O'Lesky described the success as a "direct result of involvement by commanders at all levels of command."

According to Sgt. Maj. Arthur Heyman, TRADOC senior retention non-commissioned officer, TRADOC not only met all the numerical goals set by the Department of the Army to receive the reenlistment award, but it exceeded the initial term quality point goal of 66 for retaining high-quality soldiers as well.

One reason that TRADOC does so well in achieving the goal each year is because of its incentive awards program for reenlistment, Heyman said. In this program, Headquarters, TRADOC awards plaques to its six top-producing installations.

"We (TRADOC) are the only ones in the Army," Heyman added, "that recognize commands and installations for outstanding achievement, quality and quantity of reenlistees."

Deadline moved up next week

Professionals show commitment, pride

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

One of our main jobs as a training post is to turn out soldiers who view themselves as professionals.

It's also one of our hardest tasks, because people tend to separate their work assignment from their soldierly tasks. They think that as long as they make it to PT on time, and report for duty wearing a clean uniform and spit-shined boots, it doesn't matter how they perform in their roles as file clerks, typists or drivers.

Nothing could be farther from the truth.

While some people have MOSs that require proficiency in the traditional infantry skills, many others are in administrative or support positions that require knowledge and expertise in other fields.

And when it comes time for commanders to evaluate soldiers, job performance is high on the list of things that will effect their chances of promotion.

Being a good soldier is much more than maxing the PT test or running a 6-minute mile. It is giving the Army the skills and effort that it needs from you in the job it assigns you.

So if you're a typist, that means turning out correspondence that is neat and error free, not next week, but when your boss needs it. It means working through lunch or after 5 p.m. on a big project that needs to go out.

If you're a driver or messenger, it means being the best darn driver you can be. It means being proud of your contribution to your unit, no matter your rank or title.

It means making sure your vehicle is always immaculately clean, inside and out, and that you are ready to take your commander where he needs to go. It means thinking ahead to the next day's schedule, making sure the gas tank is full and the tires are properly inflated. It's ensuring that your vehicle is safe to drive and is properly maintained.

Your boss knows he can count on you to get him where he needs to go, when he needs to get there. He has confidence in you because he can see from your job performance that you are a professional.

He knows this because he can tell that you are conscientious about your work.

You have educated yourself about the needs of your vehicle, and also about his schedule, so you have the necessary knowledge to perform your mission.

It doesn't matter what job you have. From private to general, you owe it to the Army to give your best every day. It's a big commitment, but then, that's what the Army is all about. Commitment, dedication, love of country.

Are you giving your best for your country?

"Good ol' Sgt. Potsworthy. Always spearheading his men."

Excellence program enhancing post's image

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

The Installation of Excellence Program is changing the face of Fort Benning.

Created in November 1985, the program is the brainchild of then Training and Doctrine Commander Gen. William R. Richardson. Its goal is to attract and retain skilled and motivated personnel by creating a profesionally and personally fulfilling environment for soldiers, civilians and their families. The program sets standards, evaluates against the standards and rewards those who achieve excellence.

Th philosophy behind the program is "to create a professionally and personally fulfilling environment for soldiers, civilians and their families." Richardson believed that by making work surroundings more attractive, soldiers and civilians would perform better.

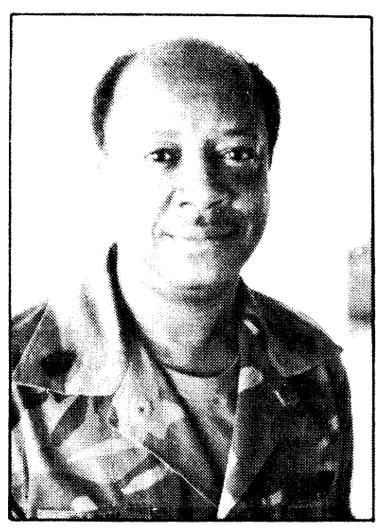
Last year, a TRADOC inspection team visited post and offered recommendations on what we could do to improve the appearance of the installation. Inspectors keyed in on such things as our lack of a uniform sign or paint policy. Street and office signs were a hodgepodge of colors and shapes, and a building's exterior color depended on the whims of different commanders.

But things are changing. A sign policy has been established, as exhibited by the brown and white signs now in use all over post. A painting policy has been implemented, so that building colors are consistent and harmonious.

Perhaps the best thing to come out of the program so far is the creation of the U-Do-It Shop. Carpenters are at work right now building showrooms of available office decors, which managers can visit and pick up the materials to give their offices facelifts.

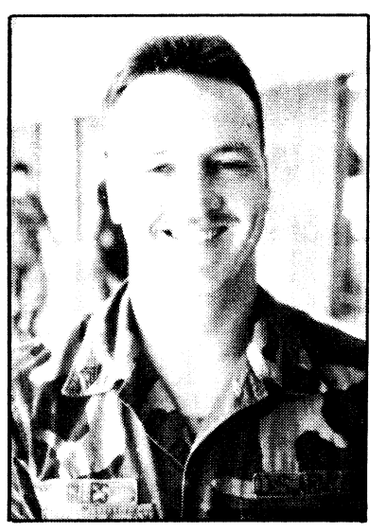
According to Craig Taylor, IOE program coordinator, the materials are available, at no cost to individual offices. "The money does not come from individual budgets, it is allocated in installation improvement funds," he said.

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing administers the office. Taylor said that when you visit the U-Do-It Shop, they'll provide you with the materials and an expert to advise you on renovating your office. You provide the manpower to do the work.

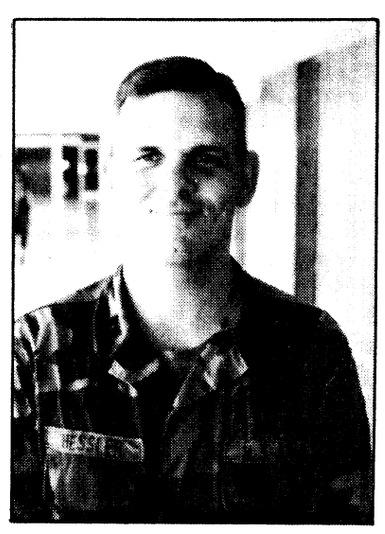


According to Taylor, pride of ownership is the key ingredient to getting this program rolling. And if there's one thing we have at Fort Benning, it's pride.

For more information on the U-Do-It Shop, call Dominic DeCarlo at 545-4207.

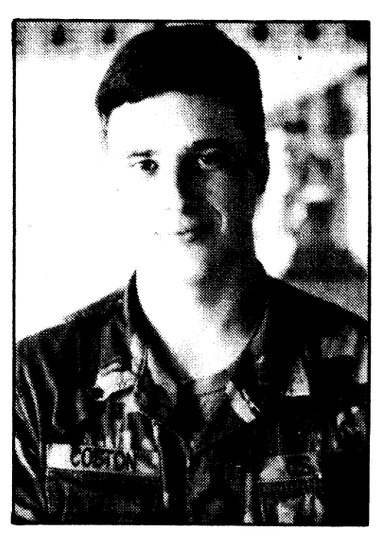


VARIOUS VOICES / Why is it important to wear a seatbelt?



Sgt. Bryan Newman, 3rd Ranger Company, Ranger Department, - "Quite frankly so you don't die. The seatbelt affords you protection as well as keeping you in the proper driving position. The seatbelt prevents you from receiving as serious an injury when in a car accident. Simply put seatbelts keep your alive. On a more personal note, I was in an accident a few years back and if I was not wearing my seatbelt I would have been one dead ranger."

Sgt. Maj. Anderson Blow, Company A, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "Statistics show that seatbelts save lives. I use mine all the time. I've seen some programs on what can happen if you don't wear a seatbelt and it isn't pretty.I encourage everyone to wear seatbelts."



Sgt. Richard Giles, Weapons Department, School of Americas, - "Safety is the primary function of the seatbelt and that is why we are urged to wear it. Plus it is the regulation on post to wear the seatbelt; but plain and simply, seatbelts save lives."

Capt. Ben Hessler, 12th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "I don't have anything profound to say about it. I wear my seatbelt because I was in an accident a couple years ago, and fortunately, I had just dropped off my son so he wasn't injured. If he had been in the car, he would have been killed. I think they are a good thing but I don't think we need a law governing the wear of seatbelts."

Jackie Flowers, Directorate of Resource and Management, - "Wearing the seatbelt for safety purposes is the main reason. I once heard a highway patrolman say he had never unbuckled a dead person. I think that says it all."

2nd Lt. Brian Coston, Echo Company, 2 - 11th, Infantry Officers Basic Course, - "Statistics prove that seatbelts save lives. My feeling is I want to extend my life as long as possible and wearing seatbelts enhances my chances of surviving in a automobile accident."

Leuer says hard work, dedication key to success

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

He's a man who believes in old fashioned values, and lives his life accordingly. His philosophy: "Do what is right in training, caring and community."

Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, Benning's new commander and Chief of Infantry, is a man at ease in his surroundings, confident of his ability to command.

"Everyone has values and success is tied to doing what is right," he said.

"If we can be successful enough that the people assigned here and their families feel that we are doing what is right for them, then we'll be fine."

Growing up in a large Minnesota family, Leuer said he learned early what values were important. "I was taught to be a winner," he said. "Mediocrity and losing were not allowed in my family." He said the family talked about its successes and failures, and it was clear what was valued.

Leuer learned the lesson well, growing into a fierce competitor. He was a national wrestling champion in college, and he said "all the teams I have been on have been winners."

He said he's not a good loser, but believes the saying, "Good losers usually do."

He said to be a winner takes hard work, dedication and commitment. "I spend a lot of time working to be competent; reading, discussing and thinking about issues," he said.

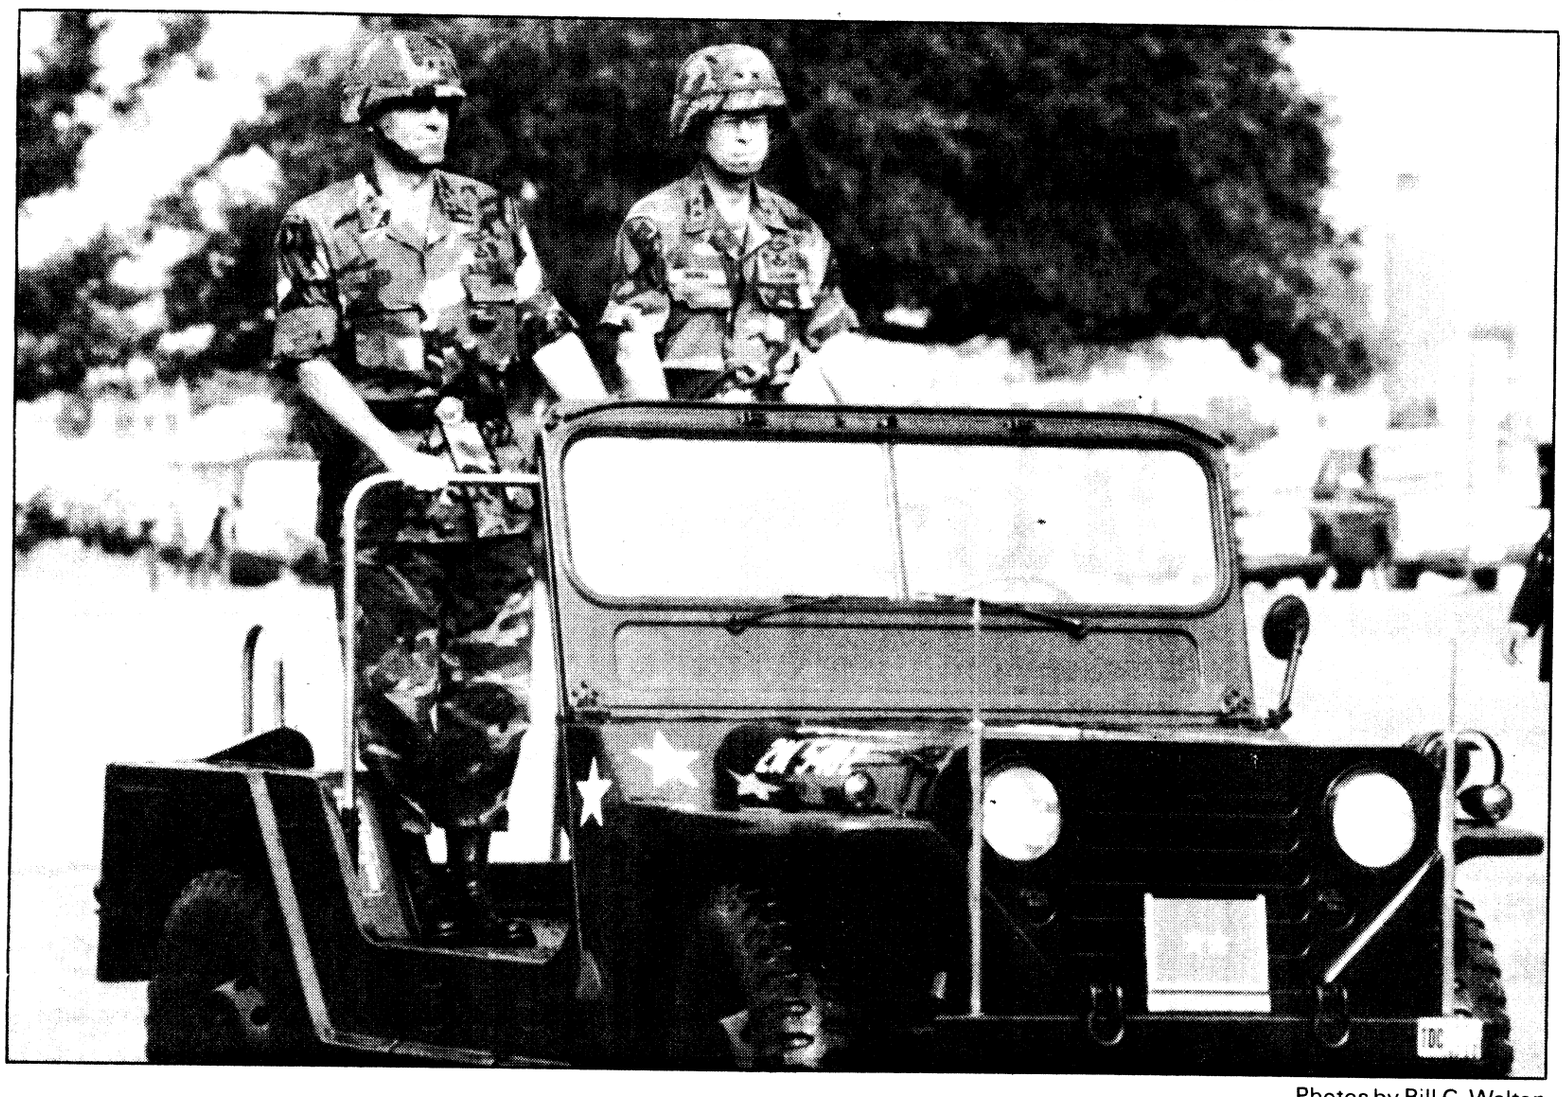
He describes himself as someone who's sincerely interested in the growth, welfare and future of his soldiers.

"Every soldier's future and heart is in my mind, and I'm committed and dedicated to them. I'm concerned that soldiers grow and have pride in themselves and this post."

Leuer said he likes to set a theme for his command and stick to it for the duration. "I really believe that people like having something to guide them," he said.

His top priority is first class training. "It needs to be challenging, realistic and directly associated with what we'll need if we go to war," he said. Tied to this is taking care of families. "If soldiers know that their families are being cared for while they are off training, then the troops will be able to do a good job."

What he expects of his soldiers is dedication and commitment. "Every infantryman must be completely professional in his appearance and attitude, disciplined and physically fit," he said. "To be a good infantryman, he must have self-respect, pride in his uniform and country, a high sense of duty and obligation to his comrades and his superiors, and a self-confidence born of demonstrated ability ."



At the same time, Leuer believes that developing such soldiers is also a responsibility of commanders. "All of us in positions of responsibility must help our soldiers and their families grow," he said. "The health of our Army — its readiness — depends upon the health of its soldiers and their families."

As a leader, Leuer takes very seriously the role model he presents to his troops.

Benning's new 'first lady' brings grace, charm to Riverside

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

Sally Jean Leuer recalls fondly how a handsome young lieutenant "swept her off her feet" nearly 27 years ago.

"I was attending college in Germany at the time, spending my junior year doing Europe and working on my German language requirement," she said.

It was a magical time for Mrs. Leuer. "I was living in a one room flat over a shoe shop, really seeing the European history I had been studying," she said.

"Then I met Kenneth, and college did not seem so important."

It is obvious that she has no regrets.

Together they have raised three children, and are now the proud grandparents of Emily Ann and Samuel. And though the separations brought on by Army life must have been hard, Mrs. Leuer looks back on it all with humor.

During the Vietnam Conflict, her husband was gone from the time her youngest child, son Joseph, was 16 months old until he finished first grade. "Joseph told me later that he never knew he had a father until he finished the first grade," she said.

Since her three children, Sheryl Jean,Linda Lee and baby Joseph were so close together in ages, "we did everything together," she said. "I called it our group therapy." But when her father visited and found flowered sheets on Joseph's bed, he took his daughter to task.

"He said you must take those sheets off his bed, get rid of that pogo stick and I'll buy him a ball and bat," she said. "I had been treating Joseph just like the girls and my dad was protecting that boy."

The Leuers are justifyably proud of their children. Daughter Sheryl Jean is married to an Air Force captain and a mother of two. Linda Lee is an Army Nurse married to an Army captain. Son Joseph is a Peace Corps volunteer in Guatemala.

The only child of a foreign service officer, Mrs. Leuer said she was drawn to Gen. Leuer's large Minnesota family. "We have spent a lot of time there and I think having such a large extended family gives people a sense of their roots," she said.

One thing she prizes is her furniture, which was lovingly collected over the years. "I loved collecting pieces from the areas where we lived," she said. "I don't really have a lot, but what I have I cherish."

Collecting furniture was also a way for Mrs. Leuer to continue to study history, which was her major in college. In looking for new pieces of furniture, the search led her to many fascinating people and places. "You learn so much about the history of a region from the furniture," she explained.

Returning to Fort Benning is coming to a "comfort zone" for Mrs. Leuer. "It's very hard to be the new man on the block, no matter where you are, but I feel comfortable here because we have so many friends in the area."

Since her husband has been a general officer for eight years, Mrs. Leuer said she's comfortable in her role as a commanders wife. "I've learned what to do and what not to do," she said.

Mrs. Leuer said she likes the openness she finds in young people today. "When I was a young wife, I would never, ever just walk up and say hello to the CG's wife," she said. "I find it exciting today because young people will walk up to you without being afraid."

She's interested in learning about the post's history, especially that of Riverside, the commanding general's quarters. "I've set up a meeting with historical experts from on and off post so that I can learn about Riverside and share this information with everyone," she said.

As the commander's wife, Mrs. Leuer is honorary chairwoman of many organizations on post. But she said she tries hard not to play favorites. "Everyone views their organization as special and I don't want to take away from that," she said.

One issue she is especially interested is family services, which is a developing area Army-wide. "I want to make sure Fort Benning is getting everything that is available," she said. "It's also important that we make sure the community knows what's going on."

She's excited about living at Fort Benning. "Everybody loves it here. It's a youthful, beautiful post, with a history that adds to its charm," she said.

Sally Jean Leuer emphatically makes her point.

Tankers hone gunnery skills using mobile tank simulator

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

"The purpose of this exercise is to develop the skills necessary to detect, identify, engage and hit a stationary target from a stationary tank.

"Assume you are in combat, occupying a turret down defensive firing position. Your tank is fully operational, and all weapons are loaded. It is daylight and visibility is unlimited.

"Upon detecting a target, you must move your tank to a hull down position, open fire within 10 seconds and kill the target within 20 seconds.

"You cannot expose your own tank for more than 16 seconds. Time begins when the target appears. Good luck."

These are the instructions given by the instructor-operator as he prepares a gunner and tank commander for exercises in the Mobile Conduct of Fire Training (M-COFT) shelter, recently delivered to Kelley Hill. The 197th Infantry Brigade is the only active unit in the Army to have an M-COFT.

The M-COFT is a mobile M60A3 tank simulator in which the tank commander and gunner are trained as a crew under combat situations to enhance their gunnery skills, explained Charley Dorr, an instructor with General Electric Corp., the company supplying the unit. Computers are used to generate graphics of terrain and enemy vehicles, which the tank crew engages in a very realistic electronic battle.

Twelve NCO's began training as instructor-operators on the M-COFT unit June 17, explained Sgt. 1st Class Clifton R. Kinsey, master gunner for 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor and NCOIC of the M-COFT. It is the responsibility of the instructor-operator to pre-brief the crew, select the proper battle engagements, monitor crew communications and evaluate the crew's performance.

Outgoing commander stresses value of working to improve job performance

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

He was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Infantry branch in 1967. He then spent three and a half years in Vietnam as an Infantry officer before branch transferring into logistics.

"My goal after 20 years was to become a lieutenant colonel," said Lt. Col. John Stewart, outgoing commander of the 197th Support Battalion. "I wasn't sure at the time I was commissioned whether or not I wanted to be a career Infantry officer."

Stewart paused briefly and shifted his tall frame in the chair.

"The latter few months that I was in Vietnam, I had the opportunity to work at 1st Cavalry Division Headquarters. There, I came into contact with officers from many different military branches who were on the staff. I worked for a couple of quartemaster officers and those men had a big influence on my decision to make a branch transfer," he said.

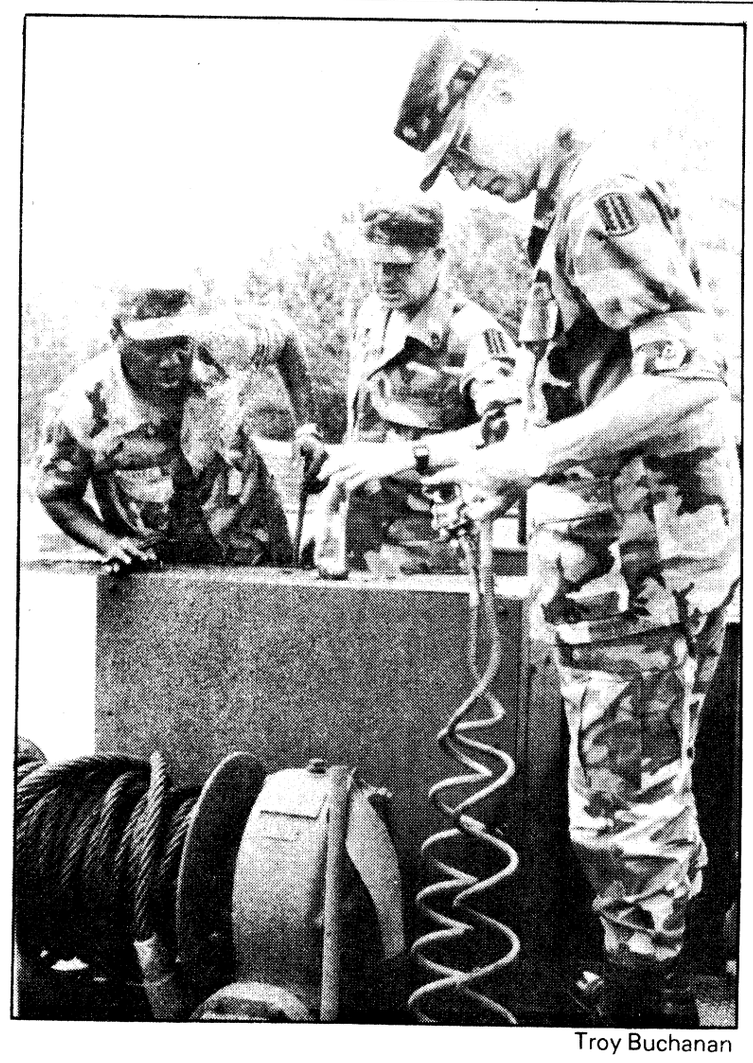
After his branch transfer from Infantry to Logisitics, Stewart's career took a turn.

"As an Infantry officer, I had asked for a number of special schools," he said. "Whether it was the pressure of the Vietnam War at the time or something else, I was unable to attend such courses as Ranger Airborne or Flight School."

Due to his perserverance, he later attended Airborne School and Parachute Rigger School.

After serving 20 years as a logisitics officer, Stewart credits special training as an important part of career development and advises any logistics lieutenant to do the same.

"A young logisitics officer must try to get as much education and special training as one possibly can. This includes ranger, airborne and other courses. It's not just the fact that you wear the badges, but what you will gain as an individual," he said. "To see what your body, mind and heart can withstand. You learn a lot about yourself when jumping out of a plane at 8000 feet or night patrolling with the rangers."



Stewart not only believes that a young logisitics officer needs to experience special training, but also he or she needs to ensure their family is included in day-to-day planning.

"I have the greatest family in the world," he said. "Command is a very challenging animal and families play a very big role in it. The spouse of a commander is a very important person," he said. "My wife has come up with ideas that I had not thought of, and I have brought them back into the battalion and implemented them. And I give her the credit for those things."

Stewart added, "She is my 'command team,' giving me tremendous support. I have two children, Laura, 18, and John, 15. And they also have helped a great deal."

Stewart will be leaving the 19th Support Battalion for a job at the Pentagon. It was quite obvious that leaving his command behind was a tough thing to do.

"After having commanded two previous companies, I realize that this is the best time of my military career. This is where it's happening. The interface with soldiers and their families in this active community of Columbus, being able to give an order and see a result, that is a great part of being in the United States Army. Many jobs in the military do not offer this kind of soldier and family interface," he said.

East assumes command of Reception Battalion

By Marsha Santiago
Infantry Training Center correspondent

Lt. Col. Paul B. East assumed command of the U.S. Army Reception Battalion, United States Army Infantry Training Center, on June 12 during a ceremony held in front of Johnston Hall. East succeeds Lt. Col. Jo B. Rusin.

Rusin had served as Reception Battalion commander since April 1985. Her next assignment is with the Air War College, Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala. At the Change of Command ceremony, Rusin was presented a Meritorious Service Medal, third oak leaf cluster, by Col. R.S. Siegfried, USAITC commander.

Since August 1986, East had served as assistant chief of staff for the United States Army Infantry Center.

East has served in various command and staff positions during his Army career, including instructor at USAIS, Fort Benning; platoon leader and motor officer, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, Camp Dodge, S. Korea; brigade assistant S-1 and commander, headquarters and Headquarters Co., 4th Brigade, 1st Cavalry Division, Fort Hood, Texas; chief of enlisted personnel management, Operations Officer, and the Deputy Chief for MILPO, adjutant general company, 7th Infantry Division, Fort Ord, Calif.; chief, administrative services division, headquarters, U.S. Army Southern European Task Force, Vicenza, Italy; commander, U.S. Army Personnel Control Facility and Chief Compact, Fort Dix, N.J., and commander, Boston Military Entrance Processing Station.

He holds a master's degree in personnel management and administration from Central Michigan University and a bachelor's degree in history from Providence College, Providence, Rhode Island.

His decorations include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Meritorious Service Medal with oak leaf cluster, Joint Service Commendation Medal, the Army Commendation Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster, a Joint Meritorious Unit Award, a National Defense Service Medal, an American Forces Expeditionary Medal, Army Service Ribbon, an Overseas Service Ribbon and the Parachutist Badge.

Under the Army's Regimental System, the U.S. Army Reception Battalion will officially become the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception).

Church takes reins at 36th Engineer Group

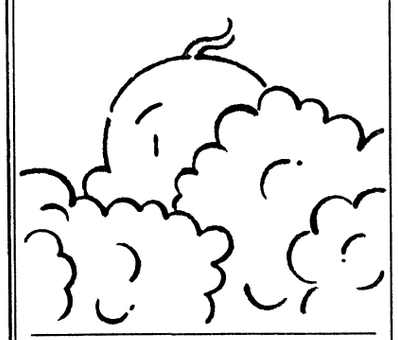
By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group

A change of command ceremony for the 36th Engineer Group took place June 18 at York Field.

Col. Paul Y. Chinen relinquished his command of the 36th Engineer Group to Col. Douglas R. Church as honored guests and soldiers from the group looked on.

After the inspection of the troops and honors to the nation, the traditional passing of the group's colors from Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba, post commander, to Church signified the change in command.

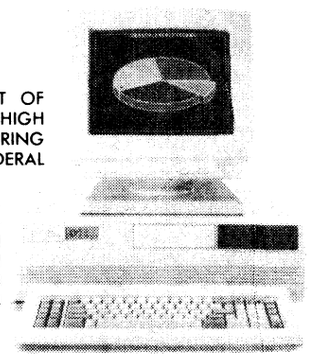
Chinen then received the Legion of Merit Award from Gen. Burba for his outstanding leadership of the 36th Engineer Group.



Following the presentation of the award, Burba gave a speech acknowledging Chinen's achievements in his two years as commander of the 36th. Burba said the leadership displayed by Chinen and the skills and professionalism of the group's soldiers have played an important part in the modernization of Fort Benning's training facilities. Burba also welcomed Church to Fort Benning.

Chinen followed Burba's speech with his farewell speech and Church gave his first speech as commander of the 36th Engineer group.

Chinen is headed to Fort Belvoir, Va., to become the assistant commandant of the United States Army Engineer School and Center.



Church comes to Fort Benning from Fort Knox, Ky., where he served as the Engineer president of the United States Army Armor and Engineer Board.

Program delivers quality care to families

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

In 1973, less than one year after the birth of the Family Practice program, the clinics cared for approximately 820 families. Today, more than 3,500 families are enrolled in the Martin Army Community Hospital Family practice program alone.

When the Family Practice Residency Program opened July 1, 1972, the Army had envisioned a program to train doctors for the specialty of complete medical care for the entire family.

"Those doctors specializing in family practice are trained to care for about 85 percent of all medical problems," said Maj. Wayne G. Stanley, Director of Resident Training.

The Family Practice specialty concerns itself with the primary care of entire the family unit.

Three years of intense residency trains the family practice physician to care for the mother and child in the delivery room, the youth in his growing years, the adult in life's prime and the elderly, in the latter stages of life.

It is a long, hard trail from the first day to the last of a doctor's residency.

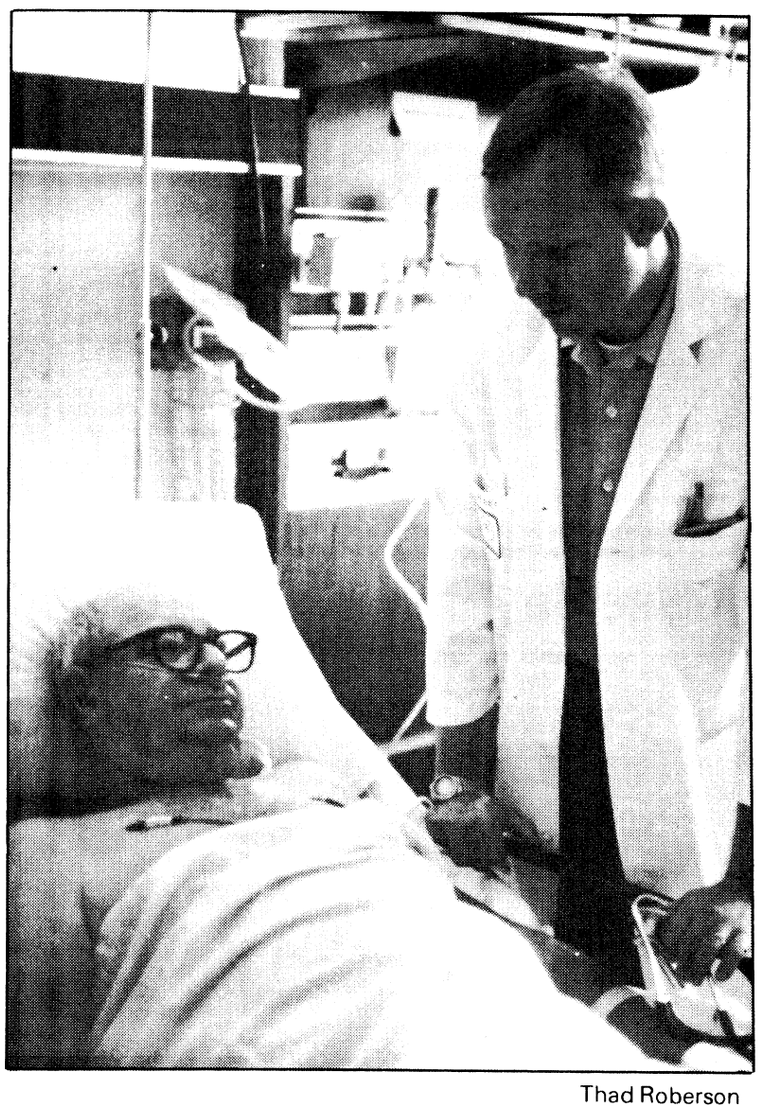
"Their internship during the first year is probably the residents roughest trial," Stanley said. "They are on call every third night, working 24-hour shifts, after putting in 10 to 12 hours each day."

Though the work is hard, residents find gratification in many other ways.

Capt. James R. Stewart, the incoming chief resident, has been in the program for two years and revels in an "an awarding career."

"It is exciting and educational here, because we have such a wide spectrum in population," Stewart said.

"There is a large troop base with unique problems and concerns. And because of the large retired comunnity," he said, "we get a lot of training in geriatrics, which deals with the diseases and hygiene of old age."



Even with what may be the hardest part behind him, Stewart looks forward to the future.

"I really look forward to my third year, in that, with staff supervision, I will be caring for a panel of 150 patients, managing their entire health care program." he said.

Residents at the MACH Family Practice Residency Program, train at the oldest and most prestigious program in the Army," Stanley said.

Since MACH was selected to conduct the first Family Practice Residency Program in July 1972, the staff and directors have set numerous goals, with the patients wellbeing in mind.

"Upon completion of the program, the family physician should be able to give continuous and comprehensive primary care to military personnel and dependents and retired personnel and their dependents," Stanley said, " providing care in the full realm of medical, surgical, obstetric, pediatric and psychosocial fields."

Seven family practice residents graduate at recent ceremony

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

Seven doctors recently completed their specialized training and are prepared to venture throughout the Army's medical community to serve as Family Practice physicians.

The Surgeon General of the Army, Lt. Gen. Quinn H. Becker, spoke to the graduates of the Martin Army Community Hospital Family Practice Residency Program, in a ceremony at the Infantry Center Chapel.

During the ceremony, several outstanding residents were recognized. But claiming top honors, receiving the Outstanding Resident Award was Capt. Kenneth J. Fish, MC.

Fish will depart Fort Benning in route to Wilcox Health Clinic, Fort Drum, N.Y.

Other members of the graduating class included: Capts. Herman J. Barthel, Mark W. Bonneville, Clark H. Cobb, Robert O. Snoddy, Christopher Tromara, and Jon J. Wilson.

Nine interns completed their first year of family practice residency. They were:
Capts. Wayne J. Berry, Darwin L. Davis, Ronald C. Dorman, Victor G. McGlaughlin, Jr., Don P. Speers, Jr., Paul M. Spezia, Andrew W. Torrance, Peter V. Weber, and Timothy C. Wood.

Larcenies top Benning police blotter

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

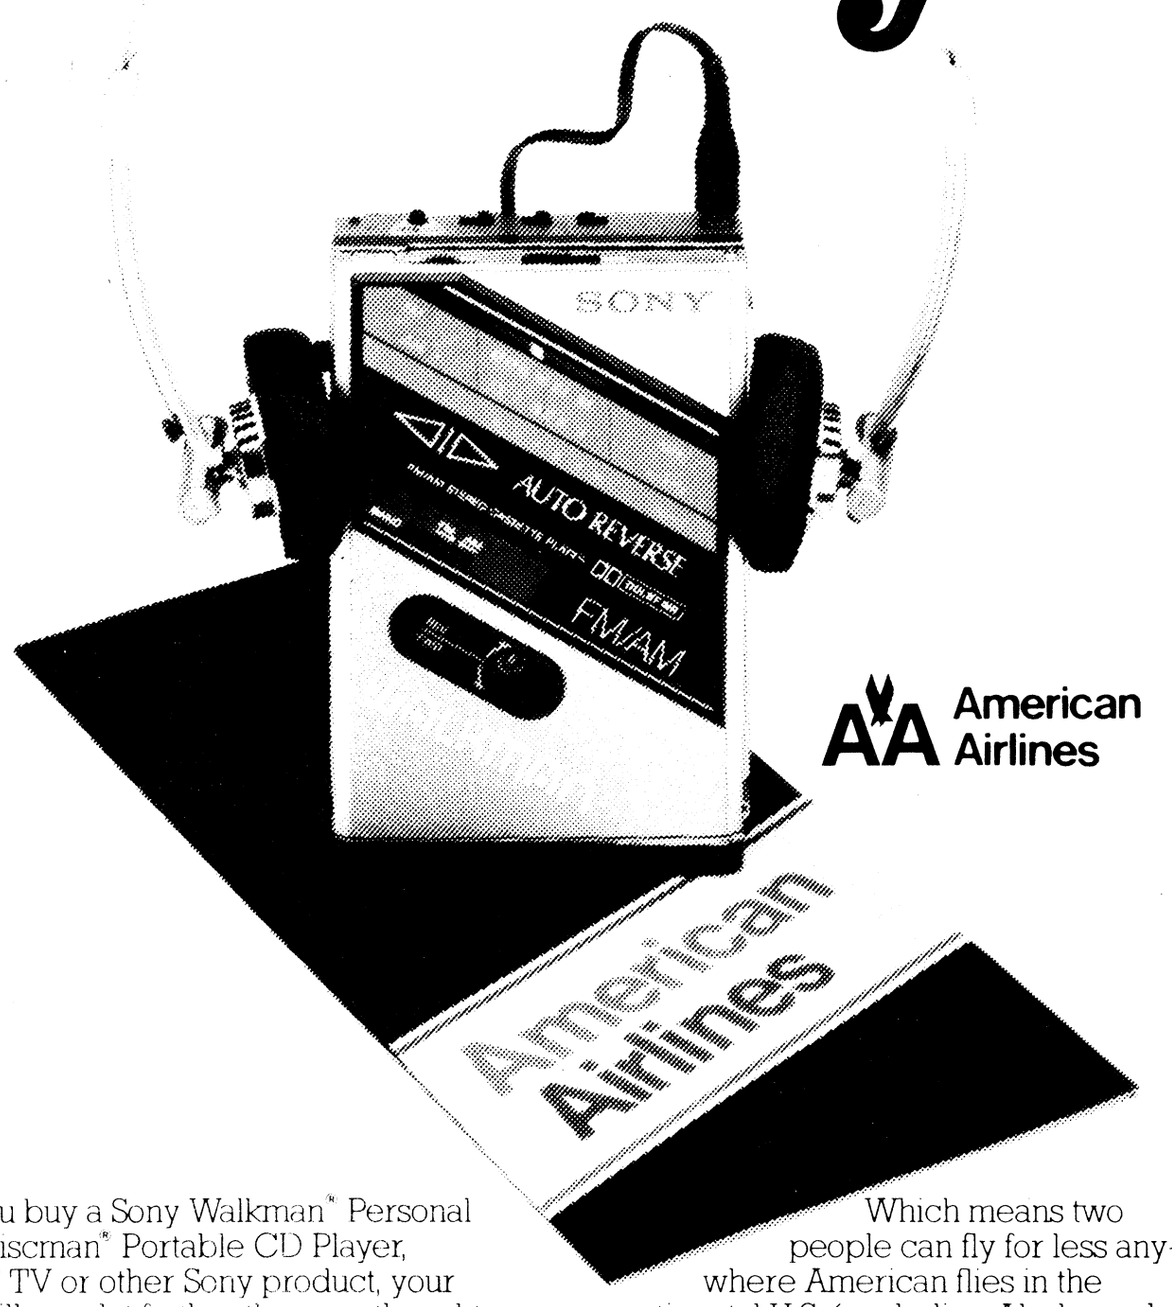
Contrary to popular belief, people on Fort Benning are still susceptible to having their personal property stolen.

According to the Military Police Activity, simple larceny (somebody taking somebody else' s personal property) is still the most prevelant crime on post.

But how is the crime rate on post as compared to the civilain community? "A lot less,"said Capt. Frank Buttram, physical security crime prevention officer. "We have as many MPs patroling a small area as there are on a civilian police department."

The most victimized are members of the enlisted ranks and their families. "That's because there are more enlisted personnel on post," Buttram said. But he stressed that civilains on post are also victimized.

According to Buttram, items taken from unsecured cars are the most common type of theft. "Car radios and personal belongings are usually taken," he said. And contrary to what people think, most of those larcenies occur during the daytime hours. "Right now we're seeing a big increase in cases of damage to automobiles," Buttram said. The types of damage he is referring to are rock damage and keys scratches across the paint of cars. Buttram says that this form of vandalism happens more frequently during the summer months.



The highest incidents of larcenies were done on main post, with an average of 55 per month, Kelley Hill is second with about 12 a month and Sand Hill has 10 a month.

Buttram explained that if anyone on post sees something suspicious please call the military police at 545-5222 or 545-5223 and they will investigate.

Neighborhood groups take 'bite out of crime'

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours.

That's about how the Crime Watch Program works. And if you are part of a crime watch program, your summer vacation will be more enjoyable, knowing you've done everything you can to make your home burgler proof and your neighborhood safe.

To get a crime watch program started, the first thing that you should do is to contact your community life mayor. Together with the mayor you will need to drum up some interest in your neighborhood. "The mayor then calls us up and we arrange a briefing," said Sgt. Victor L. Smith, physical security inspector for the Military Police Activity.

The MPs sent out to do the briefing will first determine it there are enough people at the meeting to warrant in a crime watch program.

"We like to have a minimum of 15 to 20 people involved," Smith said. "But the actual size of the housing area will determine if there are enough to start the program."

The briefing consists of setting up "Block Captains" and explaining how the program will work.

Smith said there is no foot patrolling by the participants and they only need to look out their windows periodically. "If they see something suspicious, they need to call their block captain. It's a system where you look out the window and have a list of numbers to call to report things," Smith said.

CPO chief wins TRADOC leadership award

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

You can find her in an office tucked into a corner beneath The School of Americas. The locale is deceiving, for her domain covers every civil service employee on Fort Benning.

Theresa Gunter is Fort Benning's Civilian Personnel Officer, the first female to occupy that position on post.

Gunter recently was recognized by the Training and Doctrine Command for leadership in Civilian Personnel Administration.

To receive a nomination for this award, one must display superior performance of supervisory or managerial duties resulting in significant improvements indicated by program excellence, affirmative action support, outstanding customer service, substantial cost savings and individual excellence of subordinates.

According to Joyce Wood, Employee Relations Specialist, HQ, TRADOC, Gunter was chosen over employees from more than 17 installations.

"This is the second year this award has been in existence," Wood said "Mrs. Gunter has an excellant overall program, there are no shortcomings in her shop, she really does a super job."

Gunter started her civilian personnel career in Alaska as a temporary in supply. There she met her future husband, Furman Gunter.

Originally from Connecticut, she became interested in civilian service work and ended up in Alaska.

Since entering civil service, she has worked in every functional area of civilian personnnel. Gunter literally climbed the ladder of success.

She is definitely a self-made woman, something she is proud of. Gunter considers her current position her greatest triumph.

"I'm flattered that I received this award but I don't feel I did anything special," she said. "I'm just doing my job.

"I feel good and I'm happy here. I am interested in making this office just what it is supposed to be - a service," she said.

She recommended being persistent when in search of a job with civilian personnel or in anything you are interested in.

"It doesn't always work out the first time, so you just have to keep pushing," Gunter said.

"You really have to work hard at what you are doing and pay attention."

Gunter

In her case, she gives a lot of credit to her family and the support she received from her husband.

Leuer

But ask him about his family, and another side of his personality emerges.

Then he'll pull out the photographs and proudly tell you about his family.

He gives all the credit to his wife. "My wife has been very devoted and has done the things that welded our family together," he said. "The children have done very well, they all finished college in four years and went on to rewarding lives, and a lot of that I credit to my wife."

He credits his wife's parents for teaching her high values. "Her parents believe in God, hard work, integrity and sharing love, and I came from a family of similar values," he said.

They are people who believe in doing what is right, because that was their upbringing. "I never, ever want to do anything to upset, embarrass or dismay my parents," he said. "Although my father is dead now, I would never do anything to hurt my mother, because I love her so much."

"That's what I mean when I talk of doing what is right," he said.

He said the question he asks himself and his commanders is, "Would I be satisfied if these soldiers were my sons and daughters? "

" If I can say yes, then we can go to war and have a high chance of survivability," he said.

ASK THE JUDGE

Q: I am seriously considering leasing a new vehicle. Several soldiers in my unit have heard that this is a bad idea, but none of us know why. What's the bottom line?

A: The obvious advantage to leasing is lower monthly payments. Offsetting this advantage, however, is the fact that most leasing companies will not permit leased vehicles to leave the country and the government will not ship leased vehicles for you. To make matters worse, termination of a lease agreement without excessive cost is nearly impossible. A car dealer's offer to lease you a car should be appraoched very cautiously and is probably not in the best interests of the average active-duty soldier. Still not sure? See your legal assistance attorney for an appointment!

Q: I had to pay a hefty fine after police picked me up coming out of a bar with a plastic take-away cup. Is it really illegal to drink in public?

A: According to the Columbus city code, it is not only a criminal violation to drink alcohol on public property, but it is also a violation to drink in parking lots and on other outdoor premises of private businesses. The rule applies to all alcohol, including wine and beer. The bottom line is that if you must drink, do it either inside a licensed establishment or on nonbusiness, private property. If you are offered a plastic take-away cup, refuse it and report the establishment to both the Columbus Police Dept. and the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board. Questions? See your legal assistance attorney for an appointment!

ENERGY UPDATE

Energy Office

The rain and mild temperatures we have experienced during recent days has a tendency to reduce our concern for energy conservation. After all, air conditioners don't have to work as hard and most people aren't watering their lawn, so the water treatment plant doesn't have to work as hard. Right? Even though this is true, we shouldn't become complacent or we will fall into a trap we can't get out of.

We must remember that our energy goals are adjusted for weather. If temperatures are above normal our goals are adjusted upward. If temperatures are below normal for this time of year, the goals are reduced.

We have found ourselves in trouble in the past when heating and air-conditioning systems were not controlled properly and not turned down during periods of mild weather. These weather adjustments can make or break our efforts to reach energy goals.

Right now we are only slightly above the energy targets assigned by higher headquarters. The remainder of the summer through September will be critical if we are to end the year successfully.

Fort Benning's demand for electricity and natural gas triples during the air-conditioning season. This time of increased demand provides the greatest potential for energy savings.

Movers liable for damages to household goods

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Protection for a service member's household goods during shipment is moving in the right direction now with new policies, according to the Fort Benning claim's office.

In a change that became effective May 1, contract carriers/movers will now have to pay the government full value for soldier's household goods which are damaged during shipment. "Under the old system, the carriers only paid 60 cents per pound or for repair or replacement cost, whichever was less and the government had to make up the difference," said Joyce Curentor, a Supervisory Claims Examiner in the Claims Division of the Staff Judge Advocate. "Now, the carriers must pay the full depreciated replacement cost."

Under the previous system, for example, Curentor said a turntable missing from a stereo system would cost the carrier about $9 with the government making up the rest. Now, according to Curentor, soldiers have better basic coverage and can elect for additional protection from the carrier.

"All carriers offer additional insurance to service members. Soldiers can buy insurance that covers a higher value for their goods or an option that provides full replacement protection. This insurance is very reasonable ond offers better protection," Curentor said.

Soldiers, Curentor said, should also protect themselves by carefully ensuring that inventories taken down by the carriers are accurate in regard to the condition of the goods being put into the truck.

"Soldiers are going to have to be careful that carriers don't 'overwrite' damages that existed on goods prior to being shipped. If the carrier writes down that a table has a chip in the top but it doesn't and the soldier lets it go, then if the soldier tries to later claim damage to the table, he won't be able to because, according to the inventory sheet, it was already damaged," Curentor said.

A GOOD PART-TIME JOB IS HARD TO FIND.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Did you know that one out of three Americans now "moonlights" to help make ends meet?

But as a returning veteran, you don't have to "moonlight." If you want an extra income, just "weekend" once a month with your local Army Reserve unit.

For instance, an E-5 with four years' experience now earns over $130 for a weekend's work. Over $2,000 a year, counting two weeks annual training pay.

As a Reservist, you also get PX privileges, low-cost life insurance, and retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have an extra income waiting when you get home?

It can be arranged. See your unit commander, or talk to your in-service recruiter, listed below. Act fast. Good part-time jobs are scarce.

Army Chief of Staff Wickham retires

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A departure ceremony in honor of Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr. and Marine Commandant Gen. Paul X. Kelley took place at Fort Myer's Summerall Field in Virginia on June 15.

The ceremony, led by Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Adm. William J. Crowe, featured vice president George Bush as the distinguished guest speaker.

Bush praised both men as patriots in the best sense of the word. He called their service to the country invaluable. In Wickham's case, Bush specifically cited the development of the light infantry divisions as an example of his innovative leadership.

Wickham, who has served as chief of staff since 1983, stressed "jointness" in his statements.

"We have all made great progress over the last four years in our ability to fight alongside our sister services and allies," said Wickham. "Each service has an obligation to jointness because if we had to go to war tomorrow, we would go as a joint and combined force.

"Army forces inherently depend on our sister services to do our jobs. Army forces would go on someone else's ships and someone else's aircraft. Someone else would 'see deep' into the enemy's rear for us when the battle is joined. Joint weapons systems and munitions will help us to realize the full potential of the Army's AirLand Battle Doctrine in the close-in, as well as deep battles. Deterrence and warfighting depend upon our joint strength."

The outgoing Marine Commandant, who has also served in his position since 1983, sounded a more controversial note in prepared remarks that were not delivered because of the heat and humidity that caused many participating servicemembers to pass out. "My first concern is with the growing attitude in Congress which places more credence in the views of (congressional) staff members on matters dealing with national security than in the views of the service chiefs. This attitude is driving a wedge between the members of Congress and the nation's principal military advisors. We must reverse this trend and make a conscious effort to restore cordial and substantive relations between members of the congress and the service chiefs — relationships which, in the past, have been so essential for the proper addressal of defense issues by the legislative branch."

Kelley Hill sergeant finds time to lend a hand to local scouts

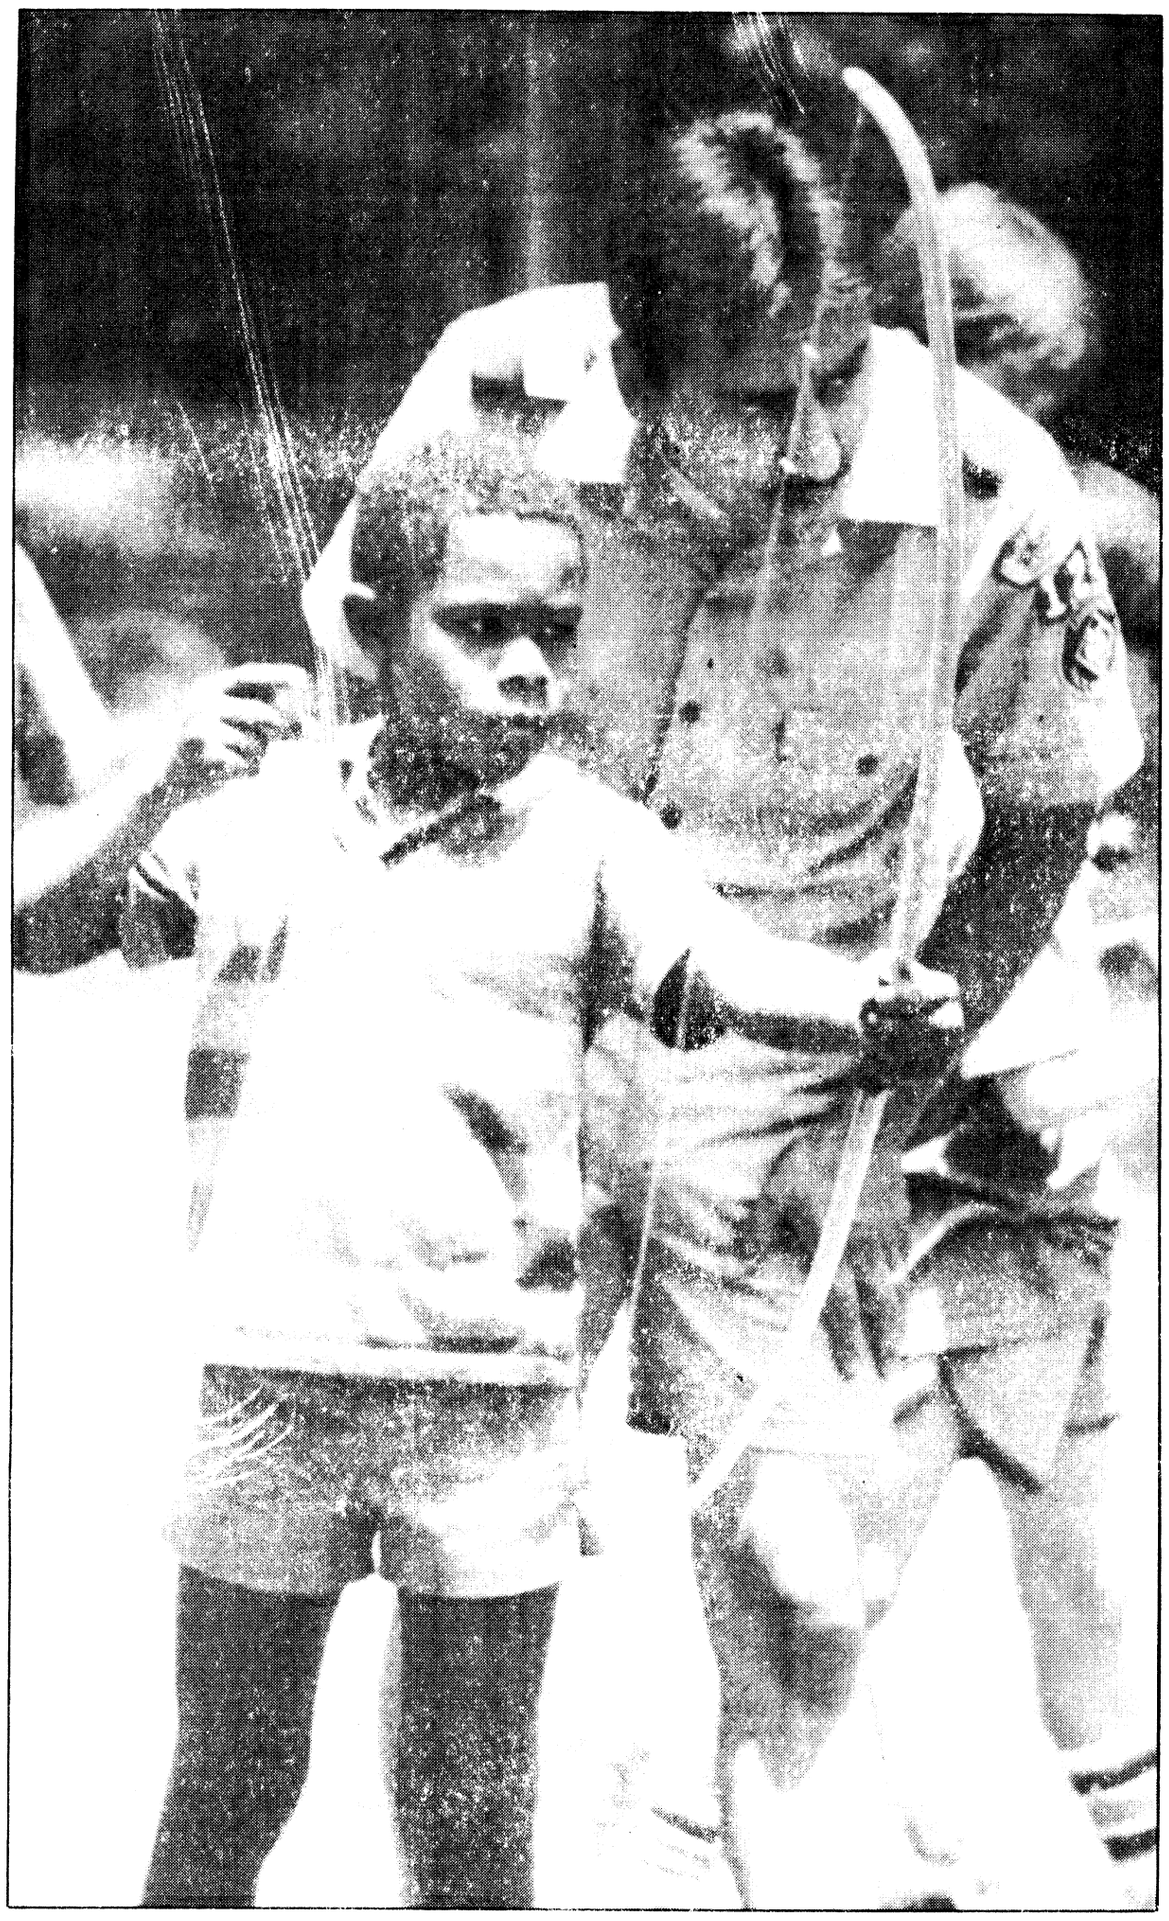
By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

The life of a soldier is a busy one. Long hours, varying schedules and hard work leave little time for volunteer activities, such as committee chairman for a local Cub Scout pack. But SSgt. Edward Magdaleno, a food service specialist with the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, doesn't seem to think so.

"I have plenty of time to do both," said Magdaleno. "It gives me something to do to keep from getting bored." Magdaleno became committee chairman of Cub Scout pack 127 (McGraw Manor) last January.

"My son joined the pack when we first came to Fort Benning, then my wife, Celeste, became a den leader," said Magdaleno. "So it was natural for me to get involved."

Magdaleno was at the Cub Scout jamboree at Camp Cowpie June 15-19. The day camp provided the scouts with various activities and learning opportunities. Magdaleno helped to instruct about 250 boys in BB gun rifle marksmanship. Forty boys from Pack 127 attended the camp.



"Fort Benning is very supportive of local scouting," said Magdaleno. "I was able to get permissive temporary duty to attend the jamboree. And the Army supplied buses both on and off post for the scouts. They even supplied a medic for the aid station."

In the past six months that Magdaleno has been committee chairman, he has seen Pack 127 grow from 14 to 73 boys.

"We're steadily growing, we still have boys coming in," he said. "We need more adult volunteers for the McGraw Manor area. We're also starting up a new Boy Scout Troop."

Magdaleno said he thoroughly enjoys working with the Cub Scouts.

"Watching the kids develop into proper young men, watching them learn, helping them learn, it's all very rewarding," said Magdaleno. "It gives the boys something to do to keep from getting bored, and it keeps me from getting bored too...I know the boys get a lot out of this, and so do I."

Chris Thomas fires an arrow down range as SSgt. Edward Magdaleno looks over his shoulder.

197th units drive trucks rodeo style

By George Mingee
197th Brigade Correspondent

What a day for a rodeo. a vehicle rodeo that is, conducted by the 197th Support Battalion.

The vehicle rodeo brought out the best drivers from each company of the Support Battalion. Drivers participated and tested in three separate categories: the Light class division, which consisted of ¼ ton jeeps and commercial utility cargo vehicles (CUC-V); the Medium class division which consisted of 2½ tons cargo vehicles and 5-ton cargo vehicles; and the Heavy class division, which consisted of heavy expanded mobility tactical trucks (HEMITT) and 5-ton tractors with steak and platoon (SP) trailers.

"This rodeo is good for morale; it promotes good driving habits, with safety always first," Capt. Mark L. Morrison said. "And, it also promotes the good drivers and gives them the recognition they deserve."

One of the obstacles the soldiers encountered was called the "Offset Alley," where the driver had to guide his vehicle between two wooden obstacles which allowed just enough space for the vehicle's body width. Another difficult event was the "Serpentine Course" which consisted of three, 55-gallon drums spaced 30-feet apart. A soldier drove his vehicle, with a trailer attached, in and around the drums before coming to a complete stop, then continued back through the course with the truck backing up in reverse. This feat made a few drivers literally scratch their heads as they repeated futile attempts before successfully completing it.

It's easy to understand why Sp4 Henry G. Vaughan said, "It's good experience driving larger trucks through these obstacles, but I would much rather drive my CUC-V."

Not only were the drivers physical skills tested, but other areas were examined as well, in order to determine who would be judged as the top driver.

Each driver took a written test on safety and general driving rules. Additionally, driver's uniforms, haircuts and knowledge of Preventative Maintenance Checks and Services were closely scrutinized and rated.

"It's totally outstanding; it gives us a chance to recognize soldiers who are doing a good job on vehicle maintenance," CW2 Preston J. Hamilton said. "They are helping the unit by being 'combat ready.'"

The rodeo was an outstanding chance for the individual soldier to find out if one truly could drive to his or her fullest potential. This outing, once again, proved that today's soldiers are always striving to improve at whatever they attempt.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Fort Benning community depends on volunteers to keep the many service programs going which allows the Army to "take care of its own." The Volunteer Resource Center is a clearing house of information for all volunteer agencies on the installation and at the present time has many volunteer job opportunities available which enable people to gain experience for paid employment or to fine-tune current skills. If you are looking for something to fill your needs, please consider one of the following positions:

Administrative Assistant: The Volunteer Resource Center is looking for someone with typing and computer skills to assist in keeping the many records of our volunteers documented. Other responsibilities are answering phones, filing, talking to clients and referring to appropriate agencies.

Receptionist: If you like working with children, organizing activities and keeping records posted, we have an opening in the Learning Abilities Center under the Red Cross Program.

Typist: A short term position needed to help compile a cookbook for the Child Development Services.

Caseworker: This position helps military families in emergency situations. Requires no previous experience, the Red Cross will provide training.

Tour Guides: Why not try your hand at being a tour guide at the National Infantry Museum? Hours are flexible and you will find the training to be quite motivational.

Budget Counselor: Do you enjoy working with figures and planning and preparing budgets? Then ACS has the answer for you.

Thrift Shop: Interesting jobs in tagging and consignment, sales clerks, etc. at the Main Store, Furniture Barn or Craft Cabin.

Library: A position for the book worm. Duties include shelving books, putting up newspapers and repairing old books.

Receptionist: A busy job greeting visitors and directing them to the right place, plus answering phones. ACS and Family Life Center have openings in this field.

Youth Activities: This is for the person 16 years old or older who likes children and who would like to work with the Day Camp program.

Clerk: Lovers of animals will enjoy this position at the Vet Clinic. You will answer phones, file and fill out patient records.

Santa's Castle: For the "kid at heart," duties include repairing and cleaning old toys and making doll's clothes.

Free nursery care is provided at Tot Town and with some of the Child Care Givers. If you are looking for a position that you don't see listed the Volunteer Resource Center will assist you in finding the right job. For more information, call 545-5602 or stop by the office in Building 241, Room 210, at DPCA next to the Infantry Museum. Hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The Columbus Museum offers a variety of classes and workshops for young people and adults. All classes are open to the public and meet at the Columbus Museum Uptown, 1202 Front Avenue. By Tim Pinkham (USAR)
2nd Brigade, 80th Division

"I cried because it was tough to leave, the hardest thing I've ever done," said Pvt. Timothy Hylton of Delta Co., 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. The cause of Hylton's grief was leaving his wife, Sandra, at home in Stewart, Va., eight months pregnant.

"I felt I was deserting her, but I also knew I was doing the right thing," continued Hylton. "When they dropped me off at the Recruiter's office (to begin active duty), I stayed outside until the car was out of sight. I wanted to steady myself emotionally before going inside."

After 13 weeks of One Station Unit Training, Hylton graduated June 11 as an infantryman. The afternoon before graduation, Tim saw his nine-week old son, Timothy Clayton Hylton Jr., for the first time.

Mommy and little Timothy drove down to watch him graduate, along with Hylton's parents, Clayton and Ella Hylton, his 13-year old brother, Benjamin, and his sister and brother-in-law, Tony and Rebecca Cockram.

"I was sent a bunch of pictures, but they didn't do him justice," Hylton said of his son. "He's a whole lot prettier in person. I'm so happy he looks like his mother."

Hylton and his sister have red hair like their father, while Sandra's hair is black. Little Timothy is too young to determine his final hair color.

The soldiers in Hylton's platoon organized a pool to guess the baby's sex and birthdate. The pool was equally divided between the winner and the baby, with each receiving $51. Tim said his son was the hero of the platoon, with all the soldiers wanting to see pictures of him.

"The night before they came down, I was like a 10-year old boy on Christmas Eve," Hylton said. "I couldn't sleep, but was up and down all night. I couldn't eat breakfast yesterday or today either."

Soldiers are allowed to spend the evening before graduation with their family and friends. Hylton was too excited to go to a restaurant to eat, but talked virtually nonstop about his experiences during training.

"At the hotel, he waded through the pool to show us how he had waded through a pond with his rifle over his head," said Ella Hylton. "I think (the Army training) has helped him grow up a lot. He is more mature and he is not as picky an eater."

After 13 weeks of being deprived of many things we often take for granted, the one thing Hylton craved was chocolate. Tim told his family he would never forget the reward of being able to run to the PX to buy a candy bar.

Hylton enjoyed seeing his new son and the rest of his family, but he reserved his greatest display of affection for his lovely wife.

"I felt like crying when I saw her," said Tim, "but not in front of my family. I knew I loved her when I left, but being away made me realize what she really means to me."

Pvt. 1 Timothy Hylton holds his 9-week-old son Timothy Jr. for the first time, as wife Sandra looks on.

"I'm glad he came, it was good for him," said Sandra, who displayed remarkable calm patiently waiting to see Tim. "He's changed for better."

Three months apart could destroy some young marriages, but as Tim and Sandra hugged each other and looked into each other's eyes, they demonstrated a love that was strengthened by hardship and separation. Since Tim joined the National Guard, his family took him home after graduation. The Hyltons celebrate their first anniversary June 28.

SPIRITUAL

Constitution separates church and state

By Gordon S. Miller

A recent newspaper article on the constitution stressed the heroics of the Revolutionary War. Although history is full of moments of heroism in battle that remind us of the cost of that vow to defend the Constitution of the United States of America, there has been another struggle in history, often bloody, giving us a background for Our First Amendment to the Constitution. This warfare was between mitre and crown, church and state. This historical contrast to our First Amendment makes our constitution very unique in world history.

In 1791, James Madison proposed a series of amendments to the constitution. The First Amendment states: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

Before our constitution was written the relationship between the church and the state was usually dominated by the king. He determined the religion of his subjects. The motto was, "Whose is the government, his is the religion." The state was seldom willing to tolerate any exception. An example is the dark, violent time in the history of the protestant church in Scotland in the 17th century.

Those who held that only Christ was the Head and Lawgiver of the church and not the state were fined, imprisoned, scourged, branded with redhot irons, burned at the stake and tortured without their day in court. Over 18,000 people suffered during the years 1660 to 1668, because their principles rejected state control of worship.

However, in 1689, the English Act of Toleration permitted those people living in the American colonies to worship God outside of the established church. Political ideas are never formed in a vacuum, but are underpinned by the way one looks at God and the world.

Our constitution is the flowering of a Christian theistic world and life view that dominated the thinking of the framers of the constitution. In contrast to the Constitution, deism was the viewpoint underneath the Declaration of Independence. Deism is the notion that God set the world in motion and left it alone, leaving man to rule autonomously.

But the theology of the Constitution did not come from deism, which was at the time of its writing, on the wane. Instead, it originated from the theology of the New England Puritans. That was the cultural seedbed producing the federal political philosophy of the Constitution. The notion of a free church in a free state, came from them.

The Puritans believed in the individuals immediate access to God, the equality of all men before God, and the freedom of individual rights. The Cambridge Platform of 1648 distinguished two spheres of authority. "Church government stands in no opposition to Civil Governments of Commonwealths, nor in any entrencheth upon the authority of the civil magistrates in their jursidiction...it is unlawful for church officer to meddle with the sword of the magistrates...the civil magistrate should not meddle with the work proper to church officers...compel their subjects to become church members."

But this forerunner to the Constitution did allow the state to punish sins that were more in the realm of the church; such as, profanity and atheism. This was part of the historical background to our Constitution that sets our country apart as unique in the history of the world. In order to appreciate the First Amendment, let us imagine what life would be like without it.

Congress might pass a law ordering every citizen to join and attend a particular church. A tithe of every income would be mandatory for the support of the church. All other churches would be declared illegal.

When prominent community leaders complain, they are arrested for speaking against the government. The local newspaper is now under new ownership, which is a political appointment. The past owner is in jail for printing a critical editorial against the new law. There is not just an end to freedom of religion, but freedom of the press as well.

Such a hypothetical situation is far from coming to pass. It is interesting that with all the scandals in the news today, some are advocating the elimination of all religious broadcasting on radio and television. The abuse rightly appeals to man's moral sensibilities.

But what is often overlooked is that the freedom of religion, with all its abuse, is inextricably bound up with the freedoms of speech, press, assembly and petition. Let us not take for granted these freedoms.

CHAPEL BRIEFS

Community invited to prayer breakfast

The Office of the USAIC Chaplain is about to reactivate a major program for special training of Army Chaplains which also serves as an important addition to the ministries offered by the Chaplain Division to soldiers and families.

The Clinical Pastoral Education program is under the direction of Chaplain (LTC) Richard Goldsmith, Chief, Chaplain Training Management Branch, and will occupy the Pastoral Resources Center (newly renovated using self-help)at Custer Terrace Chapel Building 10800, 544-3305/3179.

Catholic women give Friday mass

The Military Council of Catholic Women (MCCW) will sponsor the First Friday Mass at 1200 hours on Friday, July 3 at the Main Post Catholic Chapel. Following the Mass there will be a social (watermelon splash). Everyone is invited.

See Pope during September visit

The Pope is coming to the United States in September. Mother Mary Mission and Saint Patrick's Church in Phenix City are sponsoring a complete tour package to New Orleans for the visit of Pope John Paul II.

Buses depart Sept. 10 and return Sept. 13. The cost of $150 covers transportation, room (double occupancy) and buffet breakfast on arrival. Reservations are available but will be closed soon. For additional information call Mary Huggins at 682-1576.

Benning Test Pilots

Trouble shooters make sure post aircraft meet standards

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

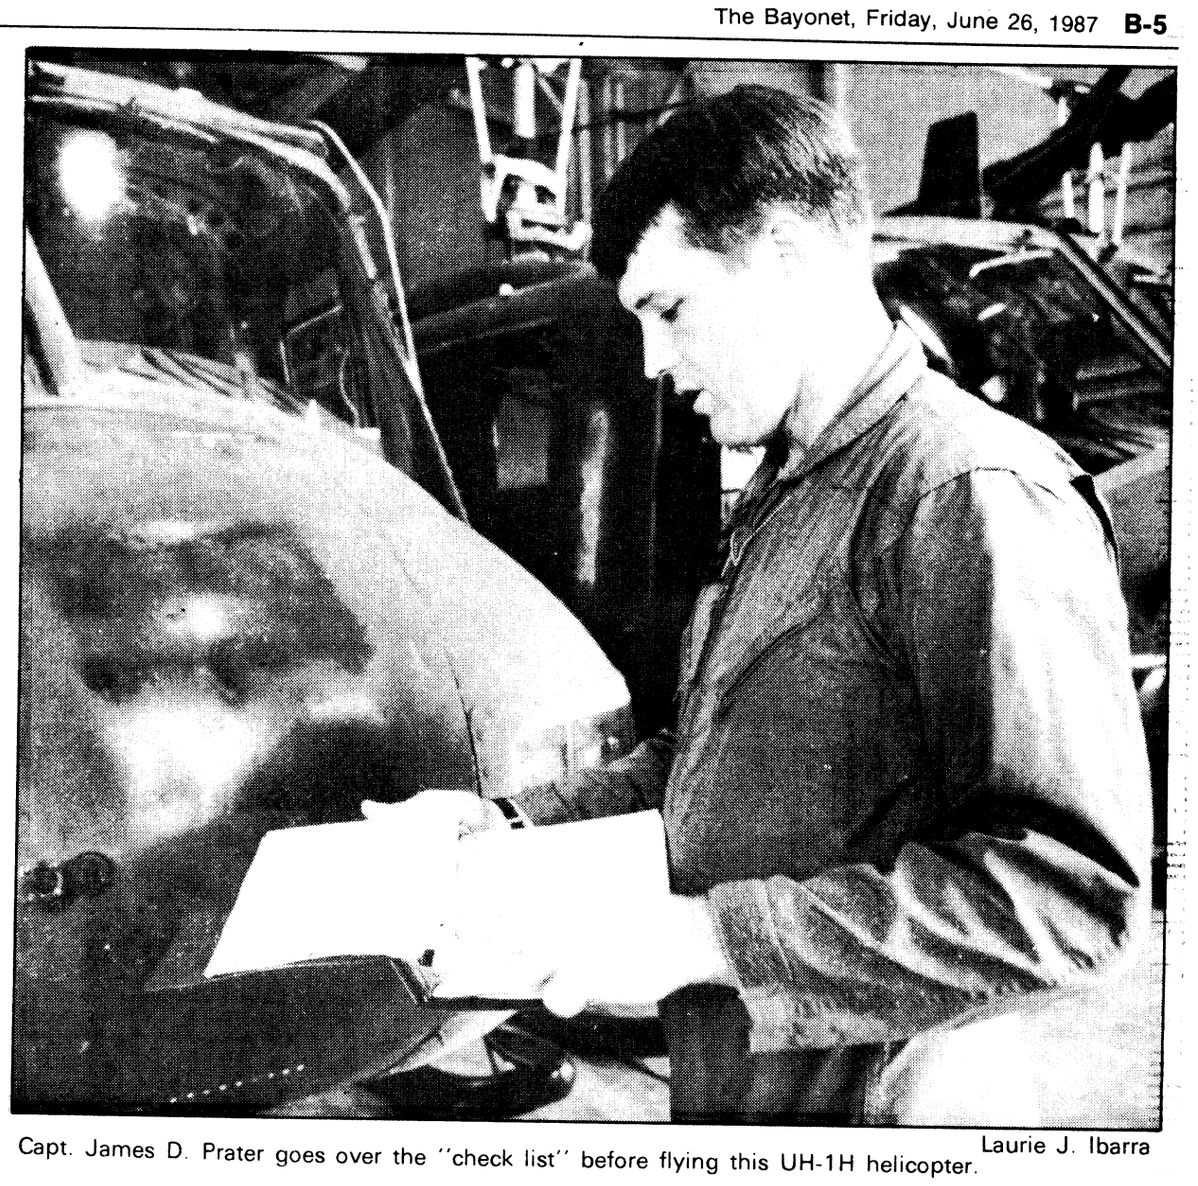
The helicopter hovered 75 feet above the trees and power lines it coughed and sputtered. The pilot couldn't see it but the tail boom and rotor were completely engulfed in flames.

This was one of the more harrowing experiences for test pilot, Capt. James D. Prater, chief of Department of Plans, Training and Mobilization Aviation Division Maintenance Branch.

Prater, one of the seven test pilots working on Fort Benning, had gone out to recover the UH-1 Helicopter in a confined area. The incident happened "back when I was a young test pilot," he said.

Prater had gone out to see if he could fly it back to the hangar. "Our job is to either fix it or fly it back in a situation like that. However, if the helicopter is in no condition to do either we call for someone to come and pick it up," Prater said.

In this particualr situation the pilots did not know what the malfunction was. "Just that the engine did not run properly. We thought there was air in the carberator," he said. Prater proceded to purge the fuel control and perform what aviators call a "hit check list". This is the system of walking around the aircraft and carefully looking at every detail that can be seen without acually taking the craft apart. The test pilot will go so far as to check and see if nuts and bolts are tight. "Then I started it up and picked it up to a hover a couple of times. I then checked the engines ability to respond by doing a light responce test," he said. This procedure is done by pulling the aircraft straight up and down.



Prater then hovered the aircraft off the ground and was about to fly it back to the hangar when the engine started sputtering. "I eventually brought it down," Prater said. The aircraft had to be driven back to the hangar. "But that is a situation that every test pilot has to expect."

"The school we go to teaches you to be ready for anything," said test pilot CW2 Larry Butler.

The school Butler is referring to is the Maintence Test Pilot Phase Two portion at Fort Eustice, Va. Although there is no set requirement on how many hours a pilot logs in the air to become a test pilot, "...but normally a person should be in aviation before going to flight school and have aviation experience.

Experience with specific aircraft is even more beneficial. Each test pilot, or maintenance technician, becomes a technical expert on an individual aircraft.

Another position and one with more responcibilty is that of maintenance officer. "My responcibility is to assure that the 26 aircraft in my control are maintained safely. I am responcible for all the maintenance that is done on them," Prater said.

ROTC cadet honored in ceremony

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. presented the Hughes Trophy Award to 2nd Lt. David A. Dykes as the most outstanding Army ROTC cadet in the nation for 1986 during a Pentagon ceremony held June 4.

Dykes, a graduate of the University of Mississippi, was selected as the most outstanding Army ROTC cadet in the nation for 1986 from among the more than 7800 ROTC commissionees.

The Hughes Trophy, provided by the Hughes Aircraft Co., has been awarded annually since 1964 to the previous year's most outstanding ROTC commissioned graduate. Dykes is the 23rd recipient of the Hughes Trophy Award.

Each nominees is recommended by his college's professor of military science as the most outstanding graduate of his class from the standpoint of military and academic grades, officer potential and academic leadership.

The trophy will remain on display at Dykes' alma mater, the University of Mississippi in University, Miss., throughout the next year.

In presenting the Hughes award, Marsh told the audience that "Dykes brings with him an excellent background of scholarly achievement and leadership culminating in his selection for this award. All these great talents he's already demonstrated are now very effective resources for the United States Army."

Dykes, a native of Tallahassee, Fla., graduated Cum Laude in May 1986 with a degree in chemical engineering. His cumulative grade point average was 3.60 on a 4.0 scale with an ROTC grade point average of 4.0.

While pursuing his degree, Dykes established his academic excellence by taking no less than 16 hours each semester and as many as 20 hours or greater for three semesters in a very demanding major. He earned a place on either the Chancellor's Honor Roll or the Dean's Honor Roll for six semesters. As a result, he received the Chancellor's Award for ranking first in ROTC for scholarship and leadership his senior year. His other academic achievements include: selection for the highly competitive Society of Military Engineers Award (only 20 engineering majors earn this award nationwide); receipt of a four-year Army ROTC scholarship, award of the Elton L. Park Memorial Scholarship for outstanding performance in chemical engineering, selection to Tau Beta Pi Engineering Honorary, and selection to Outstanding Young Men of America.

Upon receiving the award, Dykes said that "the competition was really stiff. More than 80-percent of my flight school class are distinguished military graduates. It makes me realize how fortunate I am to have received this award. A lot of people influenced and assisted me including the cadre at 'Ole Miss,' my parents and the people from Third ROTC Region at Fort Riley, Kansas, who submitted my application for the award."

Dykes, who plans to make the Army a career, spoke of the military lifestyle. He stated that "the military is a good place to raise a family. They take care of their people and work with the community to make it a better place in which the military family can live."

Dykes is presently attending the U.S. Army Aviation School at Fort Rucker, Ala. Upon graduatiion from flight school, Dykes hopes to serve with a cavalry unit in Europe and fly attack helicopters.

His wife, Patricia, is a native of Tupelo, Miss. He is the son of Col. (U.S. Army, retired) and Mrs. Glenn M. Dykes of Tallahassee. His brother, Army Capt. Daryl Dykes, who recently completed medical school at the University of South Florida, entered active duty on June 9.

Military, civilians join in fight against drugs

By Donna Bolinger-Miles
American Forces Information Service

When he served as commanding general of the Marine Corps Recruit Depot at Parris Island, S.C., Lt. Gen. Stephen Olmstead remembers watching the "cream of American troops" enter military service.

"But one thing that always nagged at me," Olmstead said, "was that every year we had to put about 750 young men and women on the bus and send them home because they'd lied about prior drug use.

Here they were, in the prime of their lives with the whole world before them, and they'd already ruined it for themselves by getting involved with illegal drugs."

Today, Olmstead devotes his full energy to countering the drug threat. As deputy assistant secretary of defense for drug policy and enforcement, he coordinates defense assets for the national war on drugs.

It's a battle being fought on many fronts. But Olmstead's main focus is supporting civilian drug enforcement authorities in their effort to block the flow of illegal drugs into the United States.

The military role in the war on drugs has grown steadily since 1981, when Congress first permitted the use of military personnel and equipment to support federal, state and local law enforcement agencies.

In fiscal 1986 alone, military aviators clocked almost 16,000 flight hours in airborne surveillance and by the end of 1986, DoD had loaned more than $138 million in equipment to civilian drug enforcement agencies.

The 1987 Omnibus Drug Supplemental Appropriations Act calls on the services to dig deeper into their pockets to support drug interdiction. It calls for the Navy to provide $198 million for aircraft, Coast Guard tactical law enforcement teams and radar systems for Coast Guard aircraft; the Air Force, $90 million for aerostat radars, Civil Air Patrol equipment and helicopters; and the Army, $18 million for Black Hawk helicopters.

Olmstead recently told Congress that DoD is proud of the assistance it has provided to civilian drug enforcement agencies.

Walter Reed researching cancer

By Loretta Browder
Walter Reed Army Medical Center

FORT MONROE, Va. — The Walter Reed Army Medical Center hemotology/oncology clinic is using a new class of drugs for cancer patients. The drug, hexamethylene bisacetamide, or HMBA, turns malignant cells benign without killing them, which might destroy the organ itself.

When the National Cancer Institute started using HMBA, a few months ago, the patients had to be hospitalized for four or five days while having four or five IV infusions of HMBA. This would be done every three or four weeks, indefinitely.

Today, HMBA is being tested at WRAMC orally on patients who are in advance stages of cancer and have exhausted all other possibilities of treatments.

"Walter Reed is the first hospital to use HMBA orally on patients. We (WRAMC) got involved with this research due to our interest, close proximity to the National Institute of Health and a good track record," said Dr. Raymond B. Weiss, chief of Medical Oncology.

Working as an advisor on day-to-day handling of patients receiving medication and taking urine and blood samples is Maj. Frank T. Ward, M.D., principle investigator, Oncology Fellow. Also on hand is Maj. Fred A. Lombard, Oncology pharmacist.

"The new research provides convincing evidence that we can take away a cancer cell's most terrible attribute — its ability to endlessly divide and induce it to act like a normal healthy cell," said Paul Marks, president of Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York.

"What's encouraging to us so far is that we can give patients doses as high as those required to get cancer cells to differentiate in test tubes without causing restrictive side effects," says David Van Echo, a pharmaceutical researcher at University Hospital in Baltimore, one of three medical centers studying HMBA.

"But," says Dr. Van Echo, "higher doses of the drug have caused nausea, feelings of nervousness and even hallucinations among some patients."

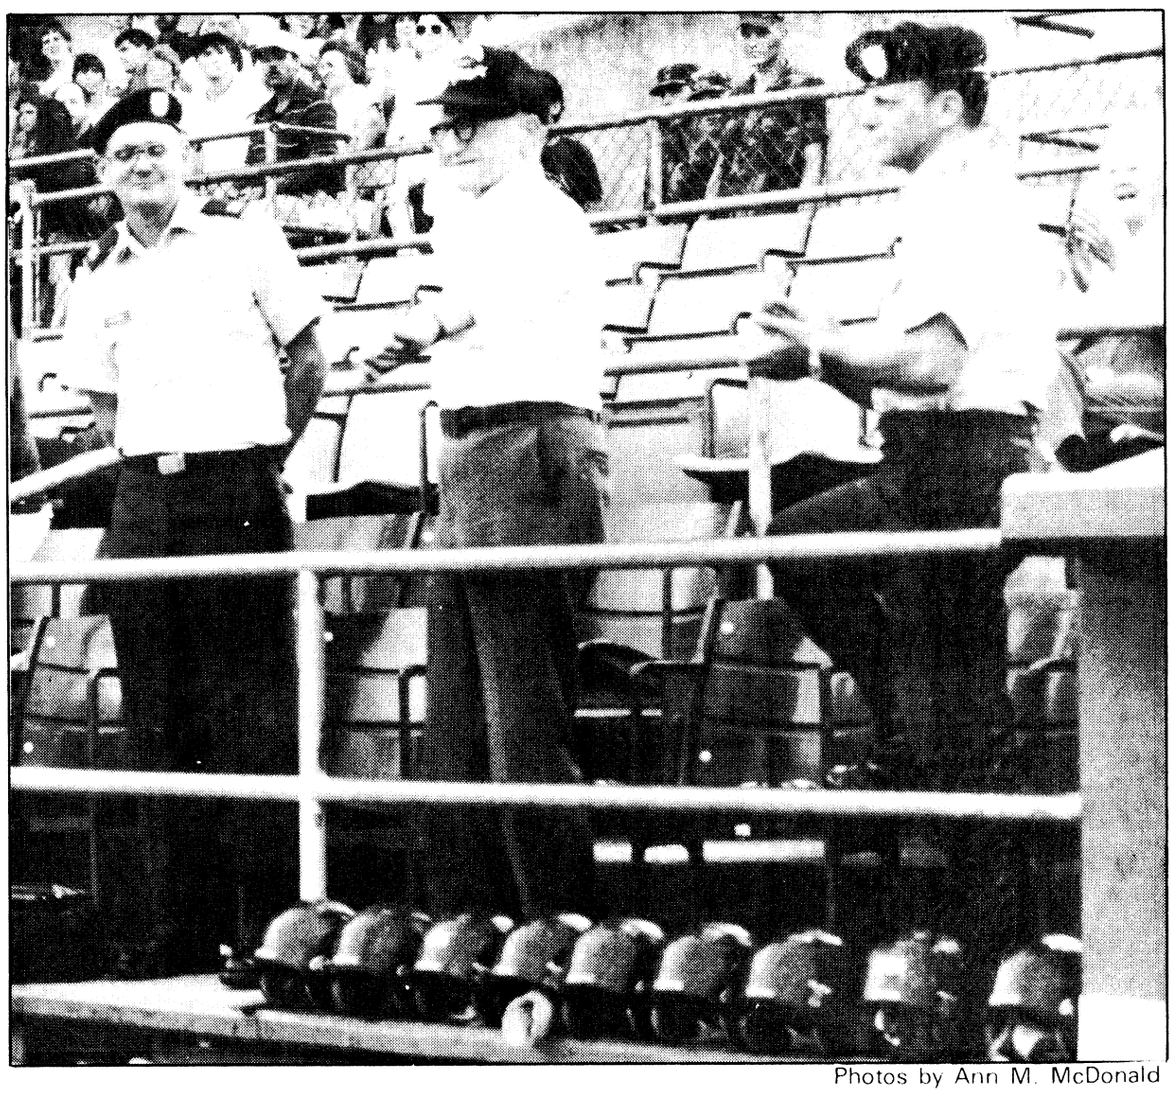
First paratroopers gather for their annual reunion

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

They descend on Fort Benning once a year. The place where they made military history so long ago.

The original Airborne Test Platoon gathered here last week for their annual reunion. Nineteen of the original 40 are left, but they are all together in spirit. Ten of them came together for the reunion.



You could see it in there eyes as they toured post during their two day visit. They viewed the current training and remarked on the vast difference from yesteryear.

The days when they packed their own chutes and had to travel to Highstown, New York to train on the prototypes of the 250 foot towers now located on Fort Benning.

They attended a graduation of brand new paratroopers and were able to pin on some to those silver wings.

One test platoon member, Retired 1st Sgt. Hobart Wade, also known as "Old Faithful" said with a twinkle, "When my wife was alive and she went to these reunions with me she wouldn't let me pin the females. Well now I find everyone I can."

Most of them considered it an honor to be able to come back to Fort Benning for their reunion. "Red" King, the first enlisted paratrooper remarked, "I love Fort Benning and being around the soldiers."

Obesity begins in early years

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, VA. — At a time when most Americans seem concerned with getting in shape, shedding extra pounds, and generally living a healthier lifestyle, there is a group being left behind — our children. They are being left behind to sit back, eat poorly, watch television, and live a generally inactive lifestyle that can lead to obesity.

Obesity is defined as a body weight 30 percent higher than the values listed on accepted height and weight tables. Recent studies show that the total number of obese children ages 6 to 11 has grown 54 percent in the last 15 to 20 years. Among those 12-17 years of age, the prevalence of obesity has increased 30 percent. And the incidence of obesity is twice as high among pre-adolescent black children than in pre-adolescent white children.

The problem of childhood obesity is not that it's just physically unattractive, or psychologically damaging in the formative years. It also possess a significant potential health problem for youngsters. Some experts think obesity is an independent risk factor for heart disease. It is a strong contributing factor to two other heart disease risk factors, high blood pressure and adult on-set diabetes. In addition, overweight children usually have higher blood pressure than children who are not overweight.

Heredity plays a big role in this problem, meaning every child is not at equal risk. But there are other contributing factors. Many scientists are pointing an accusing finger at television. Children eat more while they watch television, and they watch a lot of it. They also have a tendency to eat more of the foods advertised on television. The message to them says they will be thin no matter what they eat, because everyone on the screen is thin.

The solution? A combination of proper diet and exercise will help provide the answer to this growing problem.

Exercise has become a national, recreational pastime, and more and more people are beginning to realize that not only is exercise good for your health — it's also fun. Parents can take the lead by encouraging children to get out of the house and away from the television by limiting TV viewing time. They can offer exercise suggestions from bicycling to roller skating. Mom and dad can get the physical activity they need in their lives, too, by joining their children in exercise. When it's time for a favorite show on TV, a low-calorie snack such as popcorn, without the butter and salt, can be prepared to satisfy the munchies.

Your local American Heart Association can help provide the guidelines for diet and exercise that will help combat the problem of childhood obesity. The answer lies in educating parents, teachers, and most importantly, the children themselves. Ultimately, the best hope is that the children will assume resonsibility for their problem. Good health habits formed early in our children's lives will follow them for a lifetime.

YA teaching fitness to kids

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

The Youth Activities Center is planning a fitness program tailored for children who wish to stay fit and trim.

"The program, scheduled to get off the ground by July 6, caters to the needs of boys and girls, ages 9 to 19, who are at least 15 pounds over their desired weight, and want to get into an exciting exercise program," said Billie C. Smith, Youth Activities director.

The fitness program will provide more than the physical activities normally associated with a weight-loss program.

A representative from Martin Army Community Hospital's Social Services Department will conduct a "rap session" with the youth to talk about several important issues.

The "rap session" will address peer pressure, stress management, personal interaction and assertiveness.

"An additional phase of the program, will be nutrition classes," Smith said. "In educating youths on the proper eating habits, we can expect better results in the program."

The desired results are those set up by the fitness program participants.

Each participant will set their own personal goals, and will gain individual satisfaction from success, Smith explained.

Also included in the program will be microwave cooking classes.

To suppliment the cost of the various programs, there will be a fee of $10 per month.

Those interested in signing up for the program or seeking additional information, may contact Smith at the Youth Activities Center, or by calling 545-3070.

Golf, soccer trials slated in August

The dates for the 1987 All-Army and Armed Forces Golf and Soccer Trials Camp/Championships have been changed.

The 1987 All-Army Golf Championship dates will begin Aug. 26, at Fort Huachuca, Ariz.

The Armed Forces Golf Championship dates are changed to Sept. 5 through 10, at Naval Air Station, Pensacola, Fla.

The golf dates were changed in order that the four services' Golf Teams may compete in the Annual Military PRO—AM Golf Tournament Sept. 11 through 15, at the Avenel Golf and Country Club, Avenel, Md.

The All-Army Soccer dates are changed to Oct. 14 through Nov. 14, at Fort Hood, Texas.

The Armed Forces Championship dates are Nov. 14 through 20 at Camp LeJeune, N.C.

The soccer dates were changed in order that the Armed Forces All-Star Soccer Team could compete in the 1987 U.S. Soccer Federation's Senior Cup in Orlando, Fla., Nov. 24 through 27.

Deadline dates for an athlete's application to reach the DA Sports Office are: golf — July 17, and soccer — Aug. 14.

THE PRESIDENT DOESN'T TAKE AN OATH TO DEFEND THE AMERICAN FLAG OR THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

The President takes an oath to defend something even more important than a majestic symbol of our country.

The President takes an oath to defend the Constitution of the United States. A document that has been described as the greatest leap forward for freedom in human history. A document that is the foundation of our country. And the means by which we achieve the rule of law and protect our freedom.

As we commemorate the Bicentennial of the Constitution, there is no better way for you as an American to reaffirm the principles for which our country stands than to learn more about the Constitution.

Put on a pretty face

Team to judge installation on its appearance

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Training and Doctrine Command, Installation of Excellance evaluation team will be inspecting Fort Benning facilities July 14 through 16, to evaluate against set standards and bring the appropriate recognition and awards to those who have successfully implemented the program.

The program is the brainchild of General William Richardson, former TRADOC commander.

It is based on the philosophy that by making work surroundings more attractive, soldiers and civilians will perform better.

The Installation Design Guide recently created on post is part of meeting the requirements for the program, said Craig Taylor, Installation of Excellence coordinator. The guide sets standards for the post's visual environment.

Some of the more noticable improvements resulting from the guide are: color coordinating exterior painting with beige and brown earth tones and replacing substandard signs the new brown ones that comply with current standards.

"Last year, Fort Benning won the Four Star Commanders Awards for best classroom and billeting in the large post category," Taylor said. "The post was also awarded $280,000 to make future improvements.

"Some future improvements in the works are screening of unsightly dumpsters, landscaping major intersections and constructing a new masonry facade for the main post mini-mall,"he said.

Col. Philip R. Harris, Director of Engineering and Housing, stresses that the program is not just a DEH program, but a command program for all commanders, directors and their personnel. "We are asking everyone to put forth a team effort during this evaluation to revalidate our reputation as the best post in TRADOC," he said.

Awards designed to reward civilians

Army News Service

Army civilians have on the horizon two new service awards designed to help the Army broaden its recognition of their contributions to the mission.

In creating the new awards, Army personnel officials sought to align the scope of such recognition with that of the military side of the total Army family.

Under that concept, said Col. Jim Bushong in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at the Pentagon, the alignment will place civilian's awards on a scale comparable with soldier's awards.

For example, he explained, the new "Superior Civilian Service Award" would be comparable to the Meritorious Service Medal designed for soldiers.

The other new award — the "Achievement Medal for Civilian Service" — would equate to the Army Achievement Medal.

Since gaining the recent approval of the Army chief of staff, the two new awards have been scheduled for design as medals and rosettes wearable on the recipients' clothing, Bushong said.

Proposals for the designs have just been submitted by the U.S. Army Institute for Heraldry in Alexandria, Va.

Bushong said that as soon as the proposals undergo evaluation and approval, the casting order will proceed.

The proposal process could take several months, he added, saying that it's too early to tell when the medals will enter the supply inventory.

He gave this breakdown on the status of the new awards, in relation to existing ones for civilians, in order of importance: Decoration for Exceptional Civilian Service; Meritorious Civilian Service Award; Superior Civilian Service Award; Commander's Award for Civilian Service; Achievement Medal for Civilian Service; and Certificate of Achievement.

Public invited to celebration

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The public is invited to celebrate Independence Day with the Fort Benning community Friday, when more than five hours of entertainment is planned. This year's fireworks display has been expanded to be bigger and better than past years.

The celebration begins at 4 p.m. on York Field in front of Building 4. It will include a country-western band, music by the Infantry Center Band and the Officer Candidate School Chorus, a 50-gun salute to the nation, national flag pageantry, demonstrations by Army Rangers and the Silver Wings Command Exhibition Parachute Team, and a fireworks display.

Food, beverage and game booths will be available at the site for a nominal fee.

In the event of bad weather, the activities will take place July 5. Due to the large crowd expected, no dogs will be allowed.

Schedule of events

Time	Activity
4 to 5 p.m.	Country western band
5 to 6 p.m.	USAIC Band
6 to 7 p.m.	Country western band
7:10 to 7:30 p.m.	Silver Wings

Military's service guards freedoms

On July 4, Americans everywhere gather to celebrate the birth of our nation. We commemorate the achievements of the founders who built the republic; we reaffirm our dedication to liberty; and we pause in pride and gratitude to remember the service and sacrifice of those who made us and keep us the land of the free and the home of the brave — the men and women of our armed forces.

Independence Day 1987 is special because this year we mark the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution. The anchor of the frredom and independence cherished by all Americans. The magnificent document the founding fathers hammered out two centuries ago remains as relevant and timely as the day the final draft was signed. But, as the members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps and Coast Guard well know, the freedoms it embodies have been safeguarded at great price.

Throughout our history, millions of Americans have made tremendous sacrifices — many giving up their lives — in defense of a common vision of a nation governed of the people, by the people and for the people. Today, this legacy continues in the dedicated professionalism of you — our servicemen and women at home and in outposts around the globe. Long after this year's Independence Day parades are over, long after the last skyrocket explodes in the night sky, the American people will continue to look to you to guard their hard-won independence. As your commander-in-chief, I am proud to send a special salute to all of you who wear our nation's uniform so proudly. Your commitment to our country's defense means that we will always have cause to celebrate freedom on the fourth of July and every day. God bless you and God bless America.

Ronald Reagan
Commander-in-chief

Troops guard liberty's path

When Thomas Jefferson drafted the Declaration of Independence in 1776, he lived in a world in which government was imposed by decree of absolute rulers, a world in which men were not equal, a world in which men had very limited rights and privileges granted at the whim of the ruler who could revoke them just as easily as he gave them.

The signing of the Declaration of Independence is celebrated today as the birth of our nation.

It, combined with our Constitution, provides for the rights and freedoms we enjoy today.

But, as we celebrate our nation's independence, let us also reflect upon our responsibilities as its citizens.

Throughout our history, soldiers have shown that they take their responsibility as citizens seriously. They were showing their responsibility on July 4, 1814, when they advanced toward Chippewas under the command of General Jacob Brown; on July 4, 1944 as they fought their way through Northern France from their Normandy beachhead; and on July 4, 1968 in the jungles of Vietnam.

Those of you wearing the uniform today, those of you working as Department of the Army civilians, continue to assume this mantle of responsibility as you do everything in your power to assure peace through strength, and preparedness.

As we celebrate our independence, let us be thankful for all Americans before us, especially the American soldiers who preserved independence for us, as we stand ready to preserve it for generations to come.

Have a safe and joyous July 4.

K. C. Leuer

Children and the Constitution

Kids would create unique laws if they could rule their parents

Army News Service

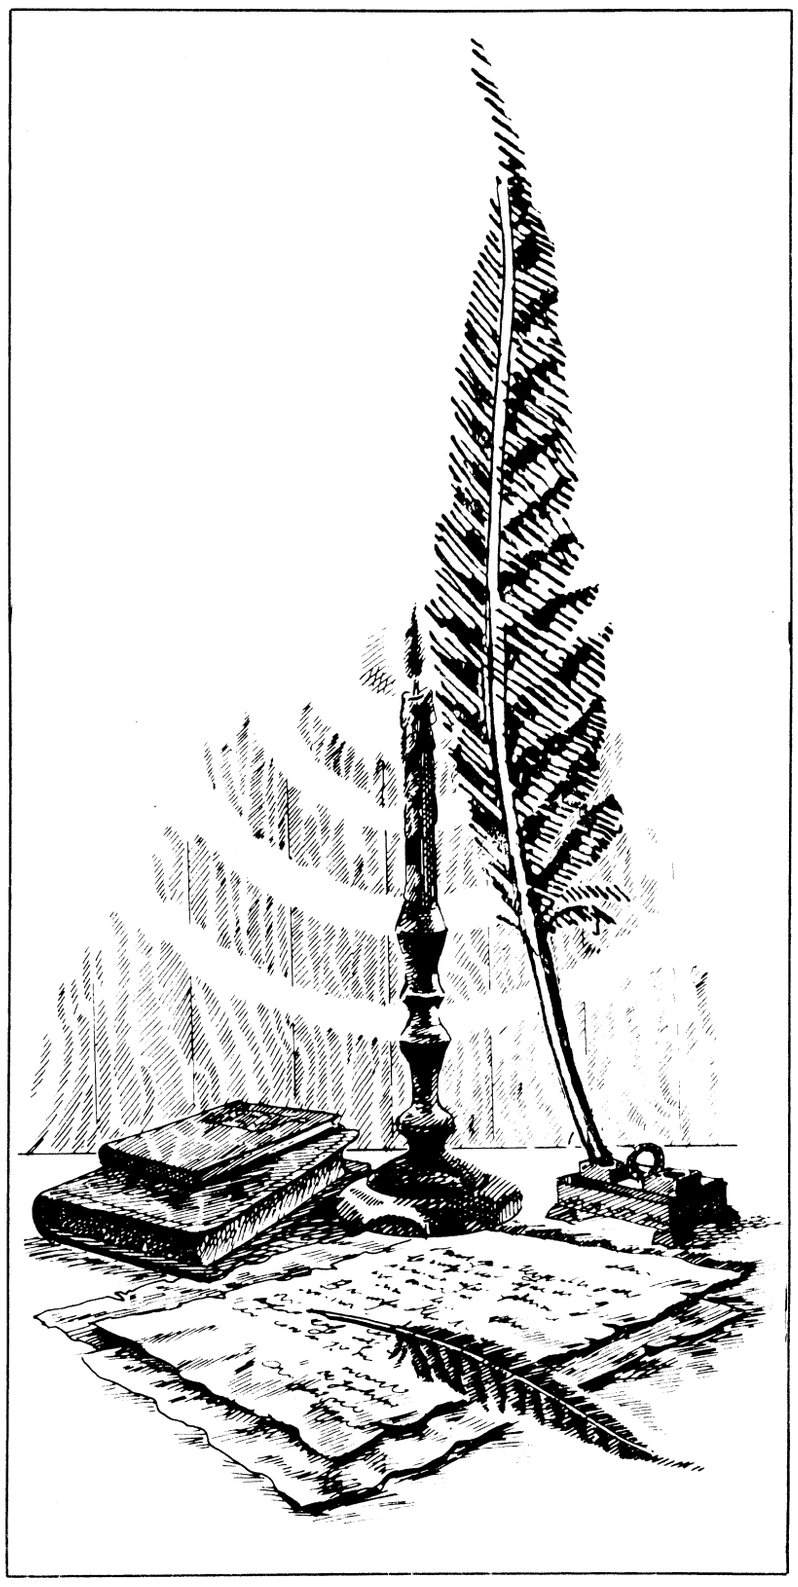
While most school-age children are generally aware of the U.S. Constitution (two-thirds say they have heard of it), an almost equal number (64-percent) don't know why 1987 is a special year for the Constitution and more than half couldn't name anyone who helped write it, according to a poll that asked children a variety of questions about the bicentennial of the United States Constitution.

These are among the findings of the recent Sesame Place Kids' Poll, which regularly surveys 400 children between the ages of 8 and 12 at Sesame Place, a children's play park in Langhorne, Penn.

When shown pictures of Benjamin Franklin, George Washington and Ronald Reagan and asked to identify who among the three helped write the Constitution, 76-percent of those children correctly named Franklin or Washington, but five percent thought Ronald Reagan was one of the Constitution's drafters.

While children at this age don't have specific views about laws that are needed in America — half said they want to help make laws when they grow up, but two-thirds could not think of a new law that is needed in America — almost all could think of new rules they'd like at home.

Of the children surveyed, 87-percent had suggestions for the primary rulemakers — Mom and Dad. Later bedtimes, not having to clean up, higher allowances and more television led the children's "wish list."



Other children surveyed wished for more unique rules at home: "grownups would have to obey kids;" "I could have lots more animals;" "Could have chocolate every day;" "I'd be allowed to watch David Letterman;" "If you don't like your supper, you don't have to eat it, but still get dessert;" "If you turn on the TV first, you get to watch the show;" and "I would be in charge."

When asked about the roles of the president and vice president, 83-percent of the youngsters surveyed knew what the president's job is, but almost half (45-percent) were unable to name any vice-presidential responsibilities.

Among those children who ventured to guess what the vice president does, responses ranged from "keeps the president in shape" and "supervises the president and gives him ideas for things to do" to "goes out of the country when the president can't go" and "if the president can't make it to a meeting, he goes instead."

An action-oriented play park designed for families with children ages 3 to 13, Sesame Place blends wholesome physical and play activities with science experiments, computer games and classes, live entertainment featuring regular appearances by Jim Henson's "Sesame Street" Muppet characters and a working replica of a TV studio.

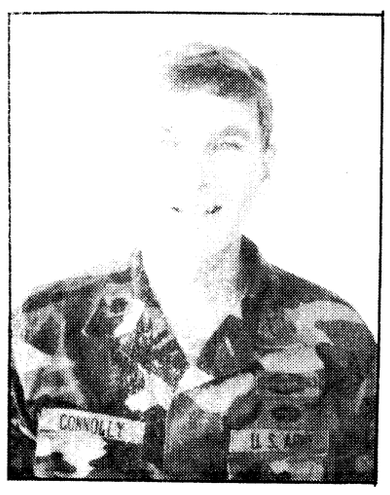
Sesame Place is located off Pennsylvania Interstate 95 at the Morrisville exit and is a 30-minute drive north of Philadelphia, 15 minutes west of Trenton, N.J., and an hour and a half from New York City. For further information about Sesame Place, call 215-752-7070.

It's a fact — smoke detectors save lives

By Donald Waling
TRADOC News Service

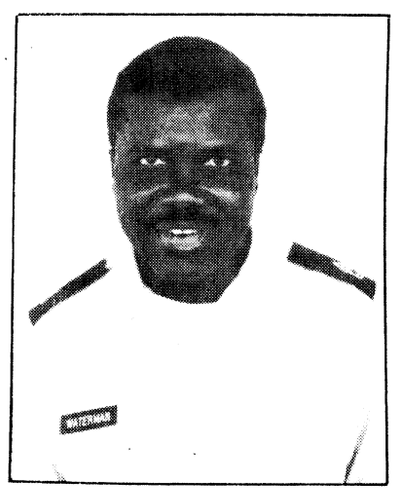
FORT MONROE, Va. — Since Jan. 1, 1987, smoke detectors have saved the lives of 10 family members in 24 separate fires throughout the Army Training and Doctrine Command. In every instance, the smoke detector was the major contributing factor in warning that a fire was about to start or was underway.

The activation of a detector in an Army family housing unit at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, alerted a family of three to the presence of an early morning fire. They escaped unaided and unhurt, although the house and personal property received substantial fire damage.



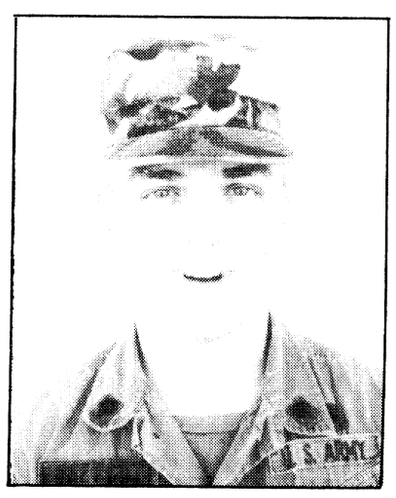
At Fort Belvoir, Va., a smoke detector alerted seven sleeping family members making them aware of a fire in their quarters early Easter morning. They too escaped from their burning quarters without injury, but the house and contents were heavily damaged.

Smoke detectors are no substitute for sound fire prevention practices, but they are a good and inexpensive investment in personal safety. The Army is currently having smoke detectors installed in all AFH sleeping and living areas to protect its occupants. The Army also requires them in privately-owned mobile homes on post, although mobile home owners must bear the expense of the detectors.

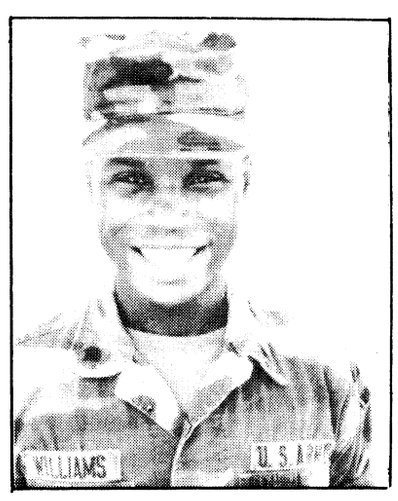


What about TRADOC family members who reside off post? Certainly smoke detectors are required in your homes, too, from a fire safety standpoint. Whether they are required or not from a legal standpoint is a matter of local law, ownership, type of home or other factors. Regardless of the foregoing, a smoke detector is needed, even if you have to buy it.

Any fire department throughout TRADOC or the Army will offer advice on the type of detector needed, where and how it should be installed, operated and maintained. No one can afford to be without this inexpensive family guardian with a proven track record.



VARIOUS VOICES / What are you going to do on the 4th of July?



Lt. Col. William Connolly, Executive Officer, Infantry Training Center, - "My family and I are going to the 4th of July barbecue at the Officers Club and then we are going over to York Field to watch the fireworks. My family and I always stay around post on the 4th. We usually have relatives come visit but it doesn't look like anyone will be able to come this year."

SFC Calvin Waterman, School of the Americas, - "Well my wife has to work on the 4th so I'll just stay home with the kids and barbecue and then take them over to York Field for the fireworks that evening."

SP4 Donald Honeycutt, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment, 10th Mountain Division, - "I think I'm going down to Florida and just hang around the beach. I've never been there and I think now is a good time to go."

SP4 Scott Williams, 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group, - I probably will go to Atlanta and visit some of my relatives. We'll probably have a cookout and enjoy the holiday."

PFC Jane Sutherland, 51st Company, 5th Student Battalion, The School Brigade, - "I don't really know what I'm going to do. My company said something about the events on York Field. Whether I'll be able to attend pends on the work load."

2nd Lt. Randall West, 24th Company, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade, - "I'm going to Atlanta to Stone Mountain Park. We are going to have a family gathering up there around Lake Lanier."

Redeye

Live fire exercise offers troops realistic training

By George Mingee and Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondents

As the countdown came over the loudspeakers, "Three, two, one," A red Ballistic Aerial Target ignited and streaked into the sky, traveling over 420 miles per hour.

In a matter of seconds, a Redeye gunner visually tracked the target as it headed up toward the clouds. "Fire!" cried the team chief. There was a hush over the audience as the heat-seeking Redeye missile shot skyward at about Mach 1 speed and zoned in on the BAT. The Redeye sped straight to its target, knocking the BAT from the air.

As the BAT fell from the sky, Sp4 Jose Sepulueda, a Redeye gunner, said, "When I hit the target, it was like I got first Christmas present!"

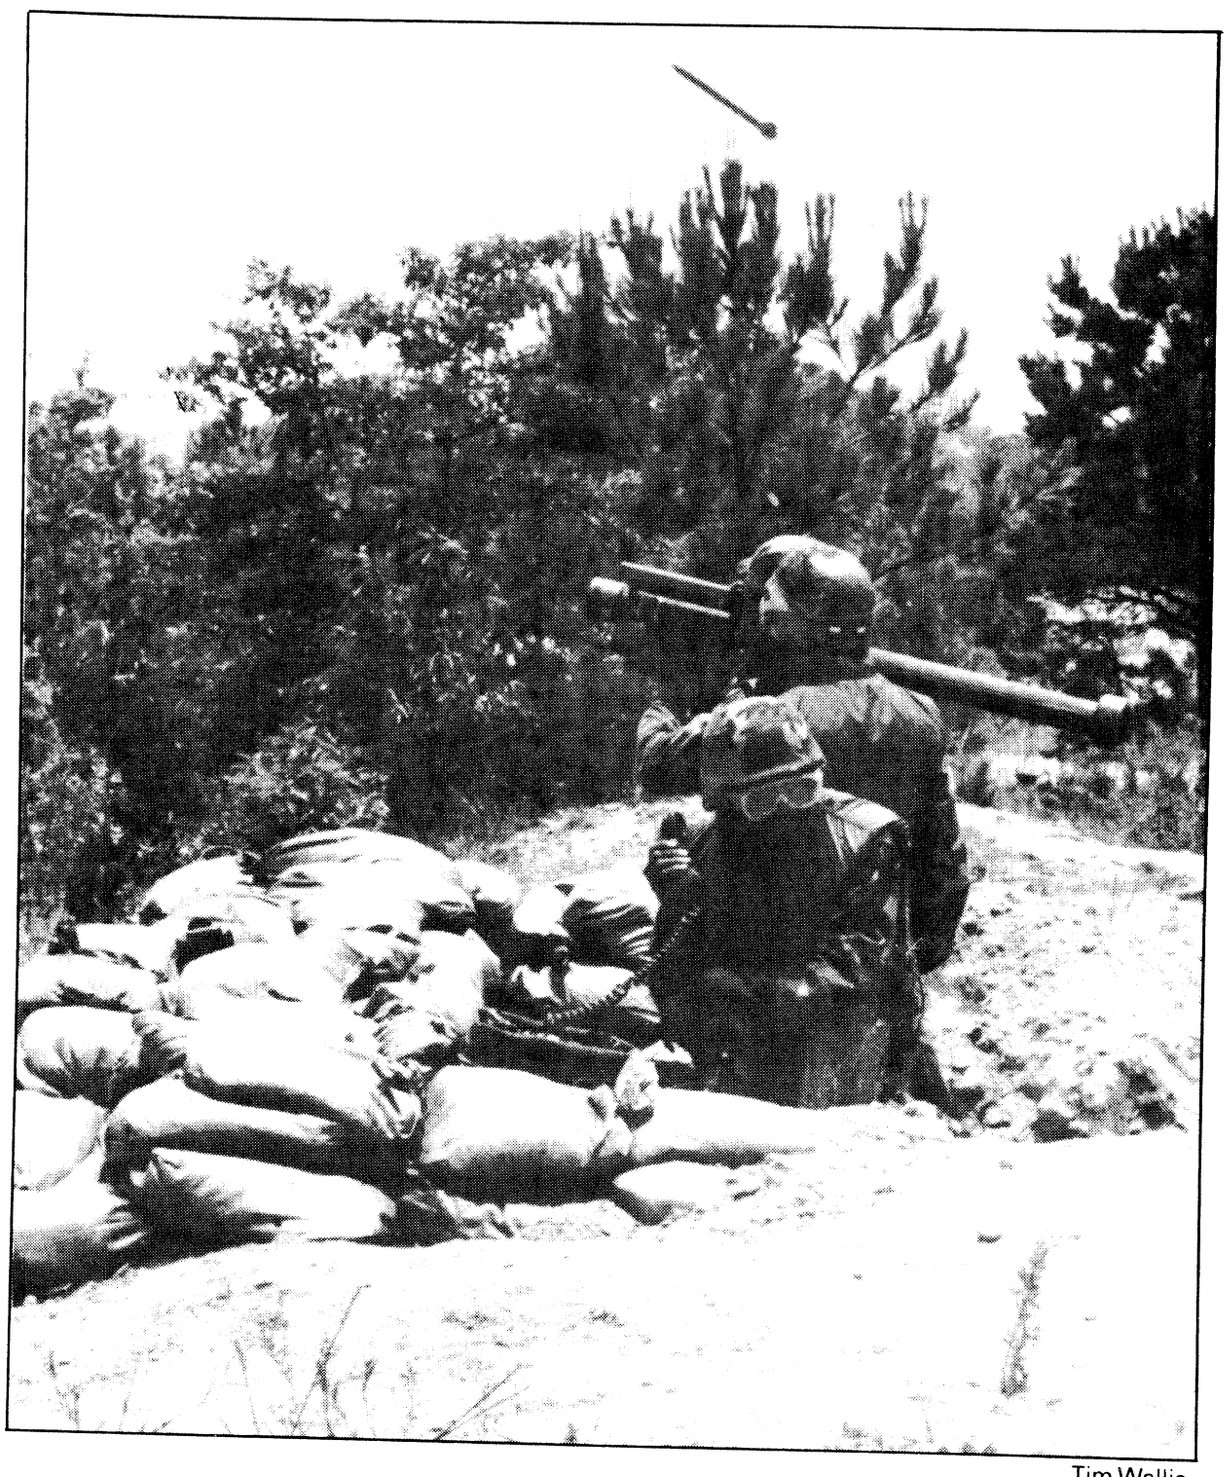
Members of the audience were on their feet cheering their hearts out as the impact explosion echoed back to them.

This was a scene from the recent, once-a-year, Redeye live fire on Ferguson Range at Fort Benning. The five Redeye teams that participated in the exercise were from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade.

Before the Redeye platoon defended Ferguson Range against hostile aircraft, the two men assigned to each squad were trained in detection and recognition of planes. Also, in the past few months, the soldiers have participated in moving target simulation training at Fort Stewart, Ga. They have also performed other tracking exercises at Lawson Air Field.

"This live fire exercise has given the soldiers more confidence to do their job and it will help them when they go to National Training Center to shoot down fast moving objects," 1st Lt. Elijah Campbell, Redeye Platoon leader said.

"I think the training leading up to the actual live fire, had a direct bearing on their performance at the range," he said.



The team scores reflected four direct hits and one tactical kill, an above-average result.

"It was a little easier than I had expected," Sepulueda said. "Even though the BAT was a lot smaller than an actual aircraft."

Another gunner agreed that the training was beneficial. "This is what we trained for and I could do this seven days a week," said Cpl. Donald Morrow.

Soldiers from A Company, 15th Cavalry, 197th Infantry Brigade, also participated by firing 50 caliber and M60 machine guns at an aerial target. They found out it was possible to shoot down a fast-moving object.

The combined training and precision of all the soldiers was evident by their job performance. Once again the 197th Infantry Brigade proved to the rest of the Army that they are always striving to be one step above the rest.

Medics mobilize MASH for manuevers

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

The 34th Medical Battalion went to the field last week, leaving just the 498th Air Ambulance as rear support, as the 34th's 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital supported the 675th and 676th Medical Detachments in their Army Training Evaluation Program.

Familiar with support in field exercises, the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital was quickly set up on their Military Operation Urban Terrain (MOUT) site.

The MASH unit set up operating rooms in the abandoned buildings of a bomb riddled village.

When required to make a night move, the unit remained operational by moving half the facility, setting up in the new location, then closing down the remains of the village hospital.

The 2nd MASH is one of four such units worldwide, which are 100 percent mobile.

The 60-bed, air-conditioned, hospital provides surgery to the critically injured and wounded soldiers in combat situations.

The surgical hospital is supported by the Utility Pack (U-Pack) which provides the facility with both air-conditioning and heat.

"While the hospital was set up in top operating condition in eight hours, in combat situations, the field medical center is ready to receive casualties within two hours," said Capt. Efrem Hawkins, commander and operations officer, 34th Medican Battalion.

On day two, after spending the afternoon encoding and decoding messages, an evening hush fell upon the Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, as they practiced light and noise discipline.

On the scarcely traveled roads of Fort Benning, the 690th Ambulance Company also moved during the dark hours, as they traveled in a convoy.

The night convoy class took the emergency vehicles through enemy terrain, under blackout drive conditions, led only by a ground guide's red-lensed flashlight.

The 690th Ambulance Company supported both their regular mission on Fort Benning and the field exercise which took them to the extremes of the installation.

After five days of roughing it, the entire unit was ready to return to the comforts of a hot barracks.

197th troops sweat it out to learn Close Assault Tactics

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

When you have to drink three quarts of water a day and wring two quarts of sweat out of your uniform each night, you wonder if all this training is really worth it. But when you check the calendar and see you only have eight weeks before going to the National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Calif., you realize you need it.

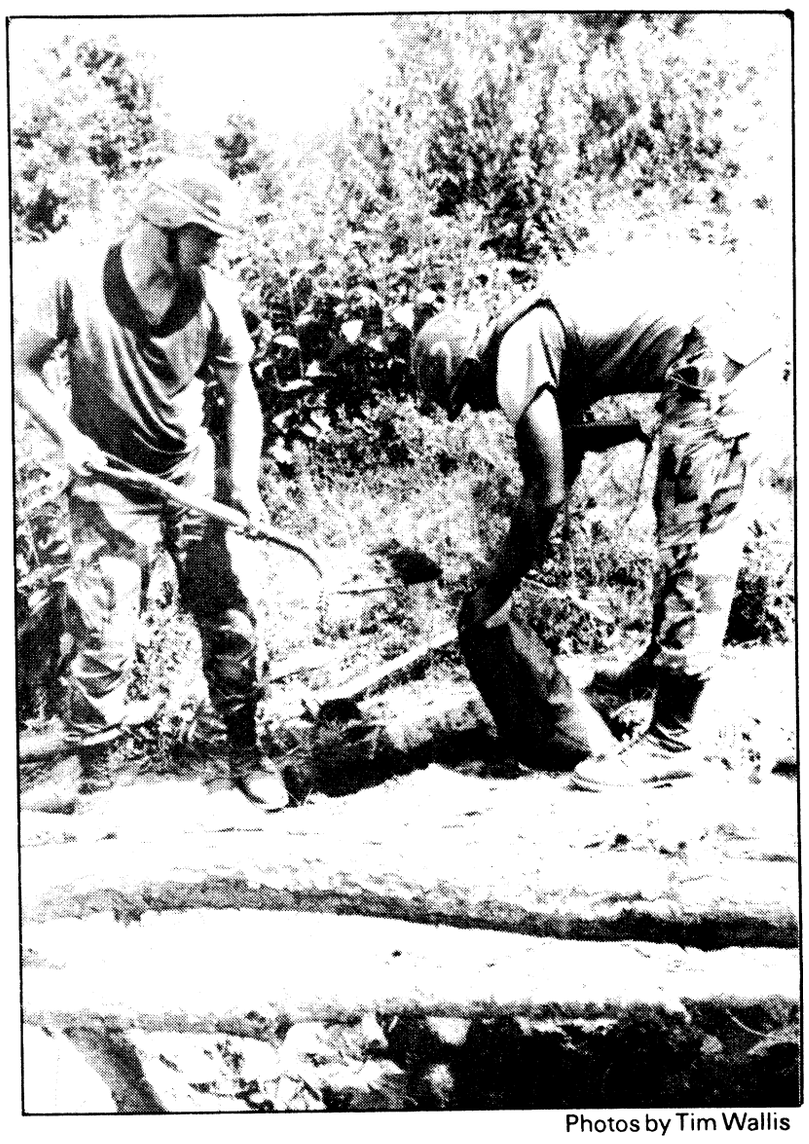
Soldiers of the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry and 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, were in the field June 21 through 25 to test Close Assault Tactics, which will be used at NTC.

"We're trying to get this exercise as close as possible to what it's like at NTC," said 1st Lt. Orest M. Logusz of 2/69 Armor's S-3 section. "The soldiers are getting used to working in heat, constantly drinking water, long duty hours, night movements and the CAT techniques."

The concept of CAT training is to deploy armor and infantry units together as a task force. Two armor companies from 2/69 were used in the 3/7 "Cottonbalers" task force and the two infantry companies from 3/7 were sent to the 2/69 "Panthers" task force.

"This is just like the old World War II movies where the infantry is running alongside the tanks, fighting together," said 1st Lt. Tommy W. Jefferson, a platoon leader in Company A, 2/69 Armor, who is attached to the Cottonbalers task force. "Our coordination with infantry troops has never been this close before, it works real well."

The exact posture of the units in the task force varies according to the mission. Breakdown can be anything from an armor and infantry company fighting together to individual platoons in close coordination, depending on whether it is day, night, offensive or a defensive maneuver.



"I learned a lot about the M-1 tank," said Sgt. Eugene Kyser of C Company, 3/7 Infantry. "They would put down the heavy firepower for us as we moved up and we were able to take out more enemy vehicles than we could with just our armored personnel carriers."

Extra support for the exercise was provided by the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, which simulated indirect fire. Detachment 4, 507th Tactical Air Control Wing of the Air Force provided F-16 and F-4 fighter planes to simulate enemy air raids. The 72nd Engineer Co. also deployed troops and equipment used for building and destroying obstacles and creating defensive fighting positions.

The CAT techniques used in this exercise provided fast-paced training battles to the soldiers of the 3/7 Infantry and 2/69 Armor. This training is expected to help defeat opposing forces at NTC when the units deploy there later this summer.

New staff college offers training in military doctrine

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — At it's temporary location near Baltimore, the newly-created Army Management Staff College has scheduled the first of two pilot classes lasting 19 weeks for selected Army civilians and officers.

In this first class, 42 civilians in grades GS/GM-12-14 and eight officers in grades 04-05 will report July 6 to the college's temporary location, the Maritime Institute of Technology and Graduate Studies in Linthicum Heights, Md. There, they'll take part in studies of management systems, leadership and military doctrine, said Col. William T. Zaldo III, who directs the staff college project.

Zaldo noted that when the classes expand to full operation in fiscal year 1989, some 240 intermediate civilian managers and 60 majors/lieutenant colonels (chosen from both the active and the reserve components) will attend one of the two 19-week classes scheduled for each year.

Results of the two pilot courses, he said, are expected to help the Army refine the college's curriculum and to spread the word throughout the Army that the college has moved from concept to actuality.

The school is designed to offer key civilians (and their military counterparts) training comparable to that found at the military staff colleges and the senior service college levels. The new college thus becomes paramount to managers and leaders from civilian career fields and military functional areas who now occupy, or expect to occupy, key leadership positions in what Zaldo calls "the Army's sustaining base." Their work environment, Zaldo explained, covers such areas as acquisition management, logistics management and installation management. The TDA-type organizations include installations, major headquarters, depots, research-and-development centers and medical centers in the United States and abroad.

Right now, he added, an effort is underway at the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command to recommend a permanent site for the new college. After the Army staff reviews the recommendation, the final decision on the site could be made by the end of the fiscal year, Zaldo said.

He pointed out that development of the new college is just one of the initiatives related to the Army's modernization of civilian personnel management.

Prospective students and others interested in getting more information about the college may direct their inquiries to HQDA.

Lt. Col. Gene Lewellyn says a few words in accepting command of the 197th Support Battalion.

Lewellyn assumes command of 197th Support Battalion

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Lt. Col. Gene Lewellyn assumed command of the 197th Support Battalion last Friday on Kelley Hill. Lewellyn will succeed Lt. Col. John N. Stewart.

Stewart, who has served as commander since June 1985, will relocate to Washington, D.C. and a job at the Pentagon.

Lewellyn comes to Fort Benning from Fort Polk, La., where he worked at the Material Management Center.

Students invade post for ROTC summer camp

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Junior ROTC summer camp opened this week as 135 Columbus high school students converged on post to "be all that they can be."

The students were selected from a population of more than 1,000 cadets, representing the eight schools of the Muscogee County School District.

"The mission of the camp is to support the goals and objectives of our new statewide Quality Basic Education Program,"said Col.(retired) Floyd G. Stephenson, Director of Army Instruction, Musgogee County.

"Our mission can be accomplished by providing each cadet an opportunity to develop self-descipline and to gain a knowledge of their own capabilities to overcome difficult situations," said Stephenson.

The Fort Benning Ranger Department provided the challenging training which the cadets were to undertake.

The fun, carefully intertwined with training, began with Airborne, Bradley and tank demonstrations to give the youths an idea of what to expect during the one-week camp.

It was then off to the range, where they fired the M-16 rifle and M-60 machinegun, before losing themselves in the woods to map their way along during the orienteering phase of the training.

As the sun rose on the second day, the cadets found themselves in another training site, where they ended up drenched in both sweat and water.

"Rangers lead the way," screamed an excited student, as she tackled the Leaders Reaction Course.

During the course, cadets were given the opportunity to become leaders for their team.

The Darby Queen Obstacle Course also proved to be a challenge to the possible future defense force members.

The course became competitive when the companies were broken down into teams.

Crossing the finish line first was the team of Derrick Kendrix, Hardaway; Harold Dennis and Jose Delapaz, Spencer; and Marchantia Neal, Central-Talbolton.

Though Delapaz, the team leader and first-year cadet, had never faced the Darby Queen, the course had "taught him a valuable lesson..."'It may be a lot of hard work, but I want to be an Airborne Ranger," he said.

Each of the team members found the Darby Queen Obstacle Course to be the highlight of the camp.

Although, Dennis attended two previous summer camps at Fort Benning, this was his first opportunity to run the Camp Darby course.

"We had a lot of strenuous activities, which required good team work. Without the team work, nothing could be accomplished," he said. "But we knew we could do it."

That "can do" attitude was echoed by Neal, who said, "the most diffucult portion of the course was climbing the ropes, but when I really thought about it, I knew that I could do it. Then it was fun."

After reaching what appeared to be their maximum endurance for "fun," the troops moved out to Todd Field, in preparation for the ultimate trip, or fall. Atop the 20 and 55-foot towers, the cadets "rappelled" to the cheers of those who chose not to participate.

At the close of the day, when relaxation seemed to be the immediate order of the day, the summer camp games began.

After pushup competitions, tug-of-wars, and softball games, it was time for the cadets to return to their barracks, attend their wounds and get ready to return to the civilian community - fully equipped with bragging rights. "I completed the 1987 summer camp at Fort Benning...HOO-AH!"

Rec center dishes out the chips, as troops show up for Casino Night

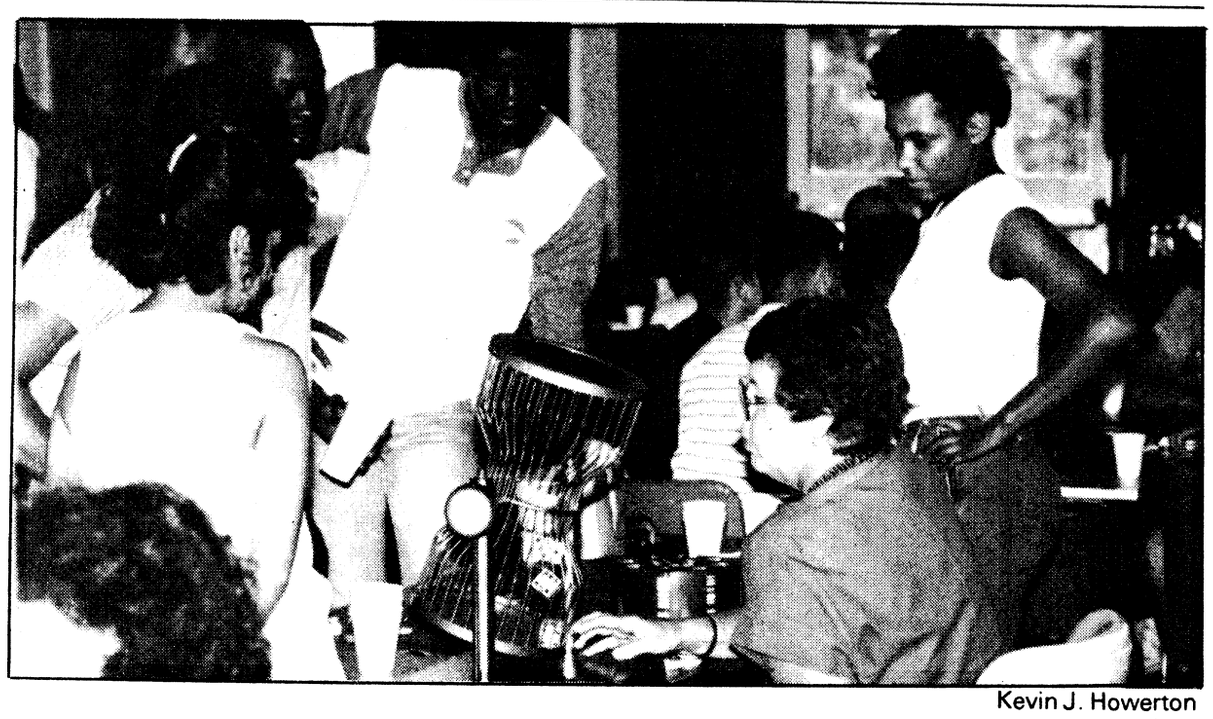
By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade

I scowled at my last two chips sitting behind the nine of spades and seven of diamonds.

"Card?" the dealer asked with a smile as he held the deck above his jack of spades and unknown hole card. My mind told me that the odds of drawing a six or less were less than good, but my gut said the dealer probably had his usual seven or better as a hole card.

"Hit me," I said. He flipped over the Queen of Hearts. I hate losing. If I hadn't been playing with free chips, I would have really been mad.

But that doesn't mean there weren't any winners at the "Las Vegas Night II," held at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center last Saturday night. Sgt. Clinton Latimer Jr. of Headquarters Co., 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, won a free trip to Atlantic City, furnished by the Information, Tours and Travel office on Fort Benning. Many other prizes were also awarded.



Each person received an initial issue of 20 chips with one 20-chip refill should they lose their first batch. The person with the most chips at the end of the night was the winner. Real currency or money was not used all night long.

"Sgt. Glenn Buxton of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, was the 'Casino Manager' and invaluable in helping to package and promote the Las Vegas nights," said Anne Honeycutt, KHRC director. "The program has been quite a success."

The Las Vegas Night II is just a part of the recreation center's varied field of activites and special events.

"A lot of people think that all we have are a few pool tables," said Ms. Honeycutt, "but really we have everything on earth."

Upcoming events at the recreation center include everything from a dog obedience class to computer courses taught in the center's ten-computer classroom. Eight-ball pool and Spades card tournaments are also held on a weekly basis.

Students serve as escorts for pageant

21st Company, 2nd Training Battalion,

Soldiers from Infantry Officer Basic Course 6-87 got a chance to have fun and serve the community recently.

The 17 lieutenants served as escorts for the competitors in the Ms. Wheelchair Georgia 1988 Pageant in Warm Springs, Ga.

According to Capt. John Sapinoso, a senior platoon trainer for the 21st Company, and officer in charge of the event, the escorts had dual roles to perform.

Sapinoso said in addition to escorting the contestants, the lieutenants also provided reassurance and served as friends and confidants for the ladies as well.

"Although there may have been some initial trepidation on how to deal with a person with disabilities, by the end of the pageant, there was a feeling of mutual respect, admiration and understanding between the contestants and their escorts," he said.

Another benefit was learning about the causes of their disabilities. Sapinoso said many of the ladies were disabled as a result of accidents, which reminded the soldiers of the need to be safety conscious.

The pageant weekend was filled with exciting activities for all participants, he said. Activities included a parade through Warm Springs, a street dance, workshops on a variety of subjects and the coronation ball.

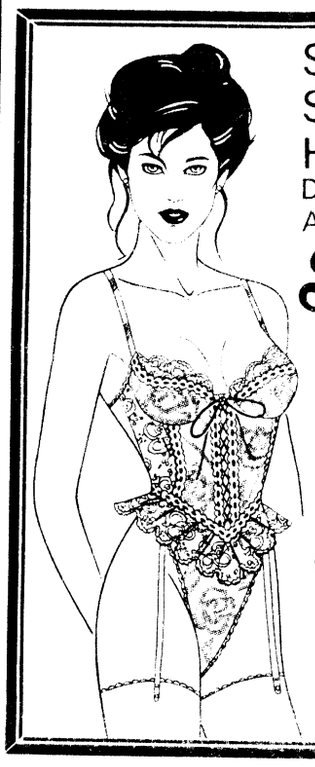
Reenlistment soldiers lauded at luncheon

Reenlistment Office

The post Reenlistment Office recently hosted a luncheon to recognize the efforts of reenlistment soldiers and NCOs.

Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba Jr., post commander, was guest speaker. He commended the reenlistment staff for reenlisting better educated and more competitive soldiers.

After the general's speech, awards were presented to units who had done an outstanding job reenlisting good soldiers.



The next reenlistment luncheon is planned for late October.

Act offers employment help for spouses

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Readers learning of the Defense Department's program for affording hiring preference to military spouses in certain federal jobs may find the following information useful. It's gathered from responses to numerous queries received at Army headquarters.

Personnel officials there emphasize that the most practical source of further information or related assistance is your installation's civilian personnel office.

Q: What does "spouse preference" under the Military Family Act mean?

A: When a management official makes a selection to fill a vacancy from a competitive referral list of applicants and there is a spouse preference eligible among them, that spouse must be offered the job before another applicant.

Q: If I have spouse preference, must the personnel office find me a job?

A: No. There must be a job vacancy and you must apply with the proper application forms and meet all eligibility requirements. Most important, you must be referred for selection as a best-qualified candidate on a competitive referral list.

Q: How long can I get preference?

A: In the United States, the eligibility period lasts from 30 days before and up to six months after your sponsor's reporting date to a new duty location, under Department of Defense guidelines. In foreign areas, there is no time limit; but, in all cases, placement into any job lasting 12 months or more ends preference eligibility until you move again. (In foreign areas, you may file your application with the overseas civilian personnel office 30 days before you move, but may not receive preference until you actually arrive.)

Q: If more than one spouse preference eligible gets referred as a "best-qualified" candidate, how is it determined which one must get the offer?

A: The selecting official can choose from among the spouses in any order.

Q: Who is eligible?

A: Spouses of active-duty military personnel in the Department of Defense when they accompany a sponsor on a permanent change-of-station move.

Q: Can I get spouse preference overseas, too?

A: Yes, spouse preference is given in foreign areas as well as in the United States, but the rules are slightly different; so check with your civilian personnel office.

Q: Do I have to be a current government employee?

A: No. Spouse preference is also given (after veteran's preference) when a selection is made from an Office of Personnel Management list of applicants who have no previous federal govern-

CPO clarifies its role in program

USAIC Public Affairs Office

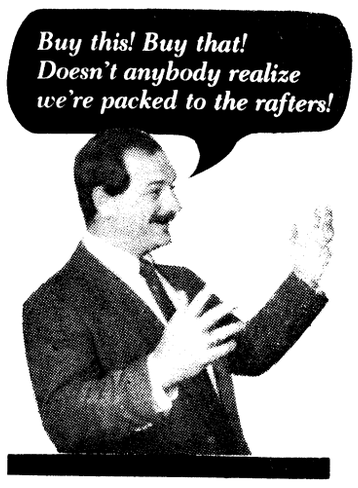
A recent article in the Bayonet raised questions among readers about local implementation of the The Military Family Act of 1985.

This act gave preference to military spouses seeking government jobs at their spouse's duty station. Although the act was signed more than 18 months ago, according to Peggy Hawkins, local implementation was delayed pending bargaining with the local unions. The bargaining has been completed and the act will be implemented at Fort Benning immediately.

Significant events that have happened since the Act was passed in Congress.

November 8, 1985: Congress passed the Military Act of 1985 giving preference to spouses of military members for jobs General Service grades 8 and above.

November 14, 1986: Congress amends the 1985 Military Act preference to General Service grades 5 and above.



March 9, 1987: Army issues bulletin on Military Family Act of 1985.

April 6, 1987: Training and Doctrine Command issues letter to implement amended Military Family Act of 1985.

SPIRITUAL

Like farmers tilling the fields, we reap what we sow in life

By Donald McSwain
Religious Activities Branch

There was a tenant farmer who from time to time was required to renew his lease. Year after year he had worked long hours on the land and made it into a model farm. One day he was visited by the owner's agent, who informed him that the owner required the farm for his son who was about to be married.

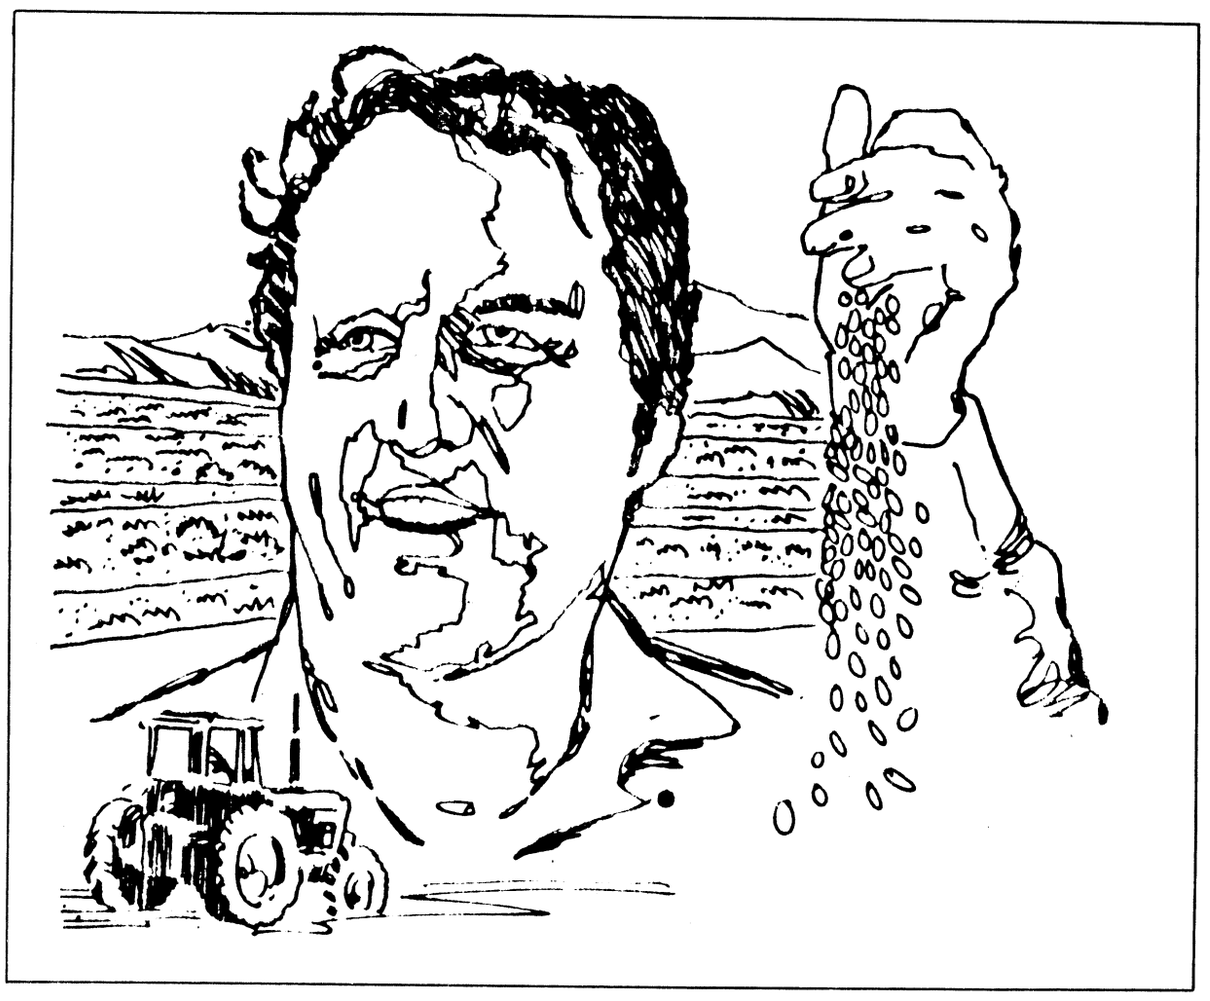
The farmer was greatly upset and made a number of offers in hopes the owner would change his decision, but the owner still intended to reclaim the farm. The day drew near when the farmer would have to vacate his home.

Angry over the injustice of having to give up what he had worked for so long, he gathered seeds of all the pests of the farmer and when it was dark, he moved up and down the fertile clean soil casting in all this rubbish.

The following morning the agent came to his door and informed him that the owner had reconsidered his position after remembering all his faithful years and had decided to permit the farmer to renew the lease. He did not understand the farmer's "My God, what a fool I've been!"

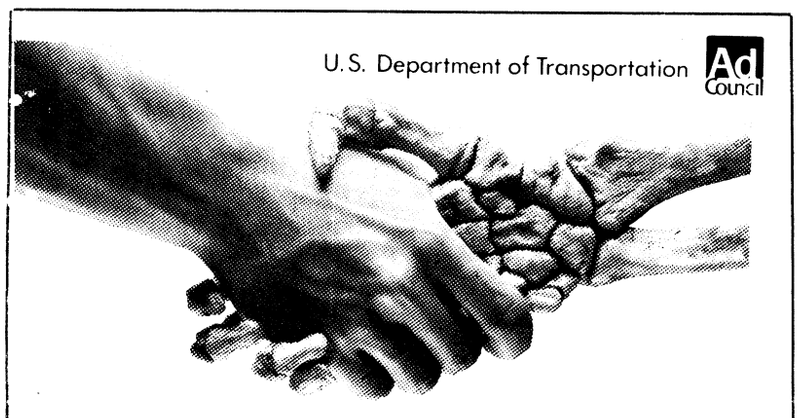
The scriptures pointed out to us long ago that "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." We live in a world that holds us responsible for our actions. If we sow poor study habits, we reap poor grades; if we are caught breaking the law, we pay a penalty of some sort; if we are negligent in our business, our income declines. The kingdom of God is no different.

It really is true that we are a part of everything that has gone before us. The company we keep, the places we go, the language we use, the ethics we observe and the values we live by are the "sowing" we will someday "reap."



Our thoughts, acts, attitudes and habits all contribute to making our character and personality what it is. Every time we confirm our beliefs to a thoughtless crowd we destroy a part of ourselves that can never again be completely whole.

Hazel Morris of Kentucky tells the following story. "During my early childhood, I had a fiery temper which often caused me to say or do unkind things. One day, after an argument had sent one of my playmates home in tears, my father told me that for each thoughtless mean thing I did, he would drive a nail into our gatepost. Each time I did a kindness or a good deed, one nail would be withdrawn.



Months passed. Each time I entered our gate, I was reminded of the reasons for those ever-increasing nails, until finally, getting them out became a challenge.

At last the wished-for day arrived — only one more nail! As my father withdrew it, I danced around proudly exclaiming, "See, Daddy, the nails are all gone."

My Dad looked at the post as he thoughtfully replied, "Yes, the nails are gone — but the scars remain."

We sow a thought and reap an act;
We sow an act and reap a habit;
We sow a habit and reap a character;
We sow a character and reap a destiny.

Post office honored for advancing women

Equal Employment Opportunity Office

The Soroptimist International of Columbus presented the business organization 1987 award for assisting in "advancing the status of women" to the Fort Benning Federal Women's Program. The Women Helping Women Awards Banquet was held at the Country Club of Columbus June 23, where a plaque was accepted by Winifred Torain, the installation's Federal Women's Program manager. Robert Galer, post EEO officer, represented the CG at the awards banquet. "This is the first year the Soroptimist International has presented this particular award," Torain said. "We are indeed honored to be the first recipient."

According to Ferinez Phelps, Soroptimist member, the federal women's program at Fort Benning was nominated for a Soroptimist International of Columbus "Advancing the Status of Women" award because the program has been in place since 1969 at the installation and has made significant gains in advancing women to full employment opportunities. The FWP helps applicants for government employment and approximately 2,800 women employees. Women constitute almost half (44 percent) of the appropriated fund civilian work force at Fort Benning.

Within the past four years, the EEO Program, of which the FWP is an integral part, has been the recipient of two prestigious honors. In 1985, EEO received the top program rating of all installations forming the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, and in 1984, Fort Benning's entry won the worldwide Secretary of the Army's annual award for outstanding achievements in EEO. Torain, an EEO specialist and FWP manager, works under the guidance and general supervision of the commanding general and the equal employment opportunity officer. The program is designed to address those special civilian employment issues and concerns affecting women civilian employees and job applicants and assist the commander in affirmative action as it affects women. The Federal Womens Program has a working committee composed of a principal and an alternate member from installation staff organizations and tenant units.

Two EEO employees awarded for exceptional achievement

Equal Employment Opportunity Office

Two Fort Benning employees have been recognized by TRADOC for their achievements in the Equal Employment Opportunity Affirmative Action Program.

Dura D. Wilson, the EEO Affirmative Action Program manager, and Gary Burkhalter, the EEO recruiting program coordinator for the Civilian Personnel Office, received TRADOC certificates of achievement at a ceremony Monday.

The two were cited for their "outstanding leadership and substantial accomplishment in their area of program responsibility in the equal employment opportunity program."

The awards, together with a congratulatory letter from Fort Benning's former commander, Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba Jr., were presented to the two employees by Robert F. Galer, equal employment opportunity officer on Monday, June 29.

According to Galer, the teamwork between Ms. Wilson and Mrs. Burkhalter signifies EEO/CPO coordination at its best and is exemplary in TRADOC. "One reason that Fort Benning does so well in Affirmative Action is because of the consistent cooperation of the EEO and CPO in helping managers to attain Affirmative Action goals," said Galer.

Jobs

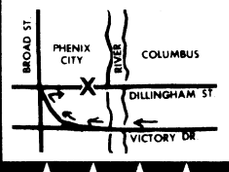
ment experience. It is also given in certain non-appropriated fund jobs.

Q: Is spouse preference given in only certain positions?
A: Yes. The position must be a GS-5 through GS-15 or a comparable blue-collar (wage system) job when the job is in the appropriated fund. For non-appropriated fund jobs, preference is applied at levels UA-8 and below.



Q: If I'm eligible for appointment under Executive Order 12362 after returning from overseas, can I still get preference?
A: Most overseas returnees are appointed without competition, in which case spouse preference is not applied. If, however, you meet all eligibility requirements for spouse preference by competing with other candidates, being determined best-qualified, applying within six months of a PCS move, etc., you may be given preference.

Q: May I decline a job offer then still get preference?
A: No. A declinationof a job for which you had indicated availability ends preference for that PCS move.

Q: What do I have to do to get preference?
A: For Army jobs in the United States, you must inform the civilian personnel office that you wish to receive preference by submitting a copy of your sponsor's orders along with the customary application forms. Procedures may differ; however, in foreign areas and for jobs with other military departments, it is best to check with the personnel office where you wish to apply for jobs to make sure you apply correctly.

Q: May I receive preference each time my sponsor is re-assigned?
A: Yes, if the new assignment is in a different commuting area from the former assignment and your sponsor received PCS orders. Spouse preference is not given, however, on a move to a new location for the purpose of retirement or separation.

Q: Should I apply for jobs in other ways too?
A: Definitely! Spouse preference is only one way to get employment assistance. Spouses should continue to explore their eligibility for other employment programs — such as the Army Family Member Priority Placement Program, merit program, OPM registers, or special appointments like those made under Executive Order 12362 (for overseas returnees).

FAMILY VIOLENCE

Stress, poor communication big factors in abuse

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

It's the ultimate family secret that the neighbors probably know about. The despair is clear in the eyes of the children as their minds wander off in the classroom. Mother wears long pants on the hottest days to cover the bruises on her legs. The problem is family violence.

Family violence has occured in different forms on Fort Benning. The cases that have been reported are 264 for the FY 1987, according to Social Work Services. "Those are the reported cases," said Nancy Parker, Family Advocay coordinator for Fort Benning. "What scares me are the cases that go unreported."

But the statistics at SWS seem to bend towards an increase in cases. "I'm guessing we're talking about an increase because of a general awareness of the public," said Jesse Reese, chief of Family Advocacy section, Social Work Services.

There are many forms of family violence. There is child abuse which can be neglect, passive neglect, physical and verbal abuse. There is also spouse abuse. "The most common type of family violence is spouse abuse. But we also see a lot of child abuse in about 50 percent of those families where the spouse is abused,"Reese said.

The perpetrators of violence in the home is usually enlisted personnel from the ranks of E-4 to E-7. Mainly because there are more enlisted people. But Reese cautions that there are no real bounderies. "We need to keep in mind that it runs throughout the rank structure to all racial and educational levels," he said.

According to Reese, the primary reason for family violence is stress. But there are additional factors which contribute to or cause that stress. For instance,poor communication pattern in the family, financial problems, marital mistrust, substance abuse or job dissatisfaction. "These are all situations that seem to create violence between a husband and wife. Violence between a parent and child occur for different reasons," Reese said.

Child abuse usually occurs because of parental immaturity or deficits in parenting skills. "But those problems added to the stresses already mentioned add to the reasons for child abuse," he said.

A question often asked is why would a woman stay with an abusive husband and father?

"I was lucky not to have any kids but I stayed with an abusive husband for almost two years after he got really violent," said Jane, who agreed to the interview only if her identity is protected. "As with most abused women I came from a violent home growing up. I hardly noticed it when my husband began verbally abusing me. What little self-esteem I had gradually slipped away," she said. Jane went on to explain that every time she was beaten it diminished her self-esteem even more. "So I didn't think I could leave and make it on my own. I just kept thinking that someday it would stop, that my husband was sick and I vowed to stay with him through sickness and in health," she said.

It has been years since she finally reached the saturation point and left her husband. "I began to fear for my life and could see that it was just getting worse. We tried therapy for a while but by this time my husband was drinking too much and he chose not to stop or continue with therapy. I felt like I did all I could do," Jane said. Today Jane is invoved in a support group and is learning to improve her communication skills. "It's going to take more time but I think I can keep from falling into the pattern of another abusive relationship," she said.

Part of Jane's support system is speaking with a counselor at SWS. Unlike Jane there are a number of couples working together to solve the problem of family violence in their homes. "We have a total of 242 active cases that we are currently treating," Reese said. The folks at Family Advocacy offer a variety of counselling to address the families needs. "We have Couples Counselling, Parent/ Child Counselling and Family Counselling. Specifically for spouse abuse,we have a couples counselling group," he said.

Reese says that the success rate is high. Counselling may last from eight weeks to two months. "If we measure the success rate by subsequent incidences, we have a very high success rate. Less than 10 percent have subsequent incidences. However, this could mean that couples may continue to fight but don't report it," Reese said.Although military programs don't guarantee confidentiality, SWS will only give out information to those who have a right to know. "If someone comes in,I automatically assume they have cleared it with their commander. We don't call the commander," Reese said. Reese explained that couples may come in on their own and the commanders may never need to know.

The idea is to get counselling before the situation gets out of hand," Parker said.

Whatever the type of abuse,it dosen't need to continue. There is hope at your fingertips...the telephone. For more information call Social Work Services at 545-7645.

Shelter gives battered wives time to weigh options

By Laurie J. Ibarra
Bayonet staff writer

Tired of walking on eggshells? Have you reached what experts call the "saturation point" and will kill your husband if he does one more abusive thing.

Theres a house on post where a battered or threatened wife can go to feel safe. It's called the Battered Wives Shelter and it's designed to house women who have been beaten by their husbands or fear they will be harmed.

The shelter, which has been open since 1980, has been a place of refuge for about 200 women who have been the victims of abuse and need time to decide if they want to stay in the marriage or get a divorce. Although the average has dropped over the years, the shelter still helps two to three women a month.

The shelter's whereabouts remains a secret and each woman who stays there signs an agreement to keep that secret, "For her safety and the safety of future occupants," said Nancy Parker, Family Advocacy coordinator for Fort Benning. "That's a unique situation. I'm almost certain we're the only post in the Army that has a shelter on post. Most other places contract off post," she said.

Having the shelter on post enables people like Nancy Parker or a volunteer counselor to monitor the victims' progress. "We're able to have some control in seeing the family get the counselling it needs," Parker said.

In most physically abusive spouse cases, it is the woman who is abused and the abuser is usually the soldier, said Parker. "But if the abused is the male, he can also go to the barracks."

Children are welcome at the house also. "However, if there is a young teenage boy 12 years or older and the mother feels he is safe at home, we recommend he stay at home," she said.

Women who have stayed at the house usually agree that it is a "quiet place," a place to take the time to sit and think. Usually a women comes to the house after an altercation and the military police recommend the shelter. In this case, a counselor, who is on call, will respond to the station and talk to the victim. "Sometimes we have to go to the emergency room where she has been treated and find out if she would like to go to the shelter. If she does want to go, we take her there," Parker said.

Often times the calls for help come in through the Family Advocacy office. Parker says that many women are fearful of people finding out about their situation, particularly the soldier's commander. "Many times the women will decide not to utilize the shelter because of the intervention involved," she said.

"Very often she has been threatened with the soldier's career being ruined," Parker said. And the soldier's commander is notified of the wife's admission to the shelter. Then the commander can make an assessment of the situation,"she said.

"All of us, the soldier's commander and Family Advocacy are here to help. all she needs to do is let us know it's going on. We help the violence to stop," Parker said.

"The victim dosen't necessarily have to have black eyes, broken bones or whatever. She may simply feel threatened. If so, she is a good candidate for the shelter," Parker said.

And once the wife has moved into the shelter, she can take the time to decide what to do next. They can stay at the shelter for up to two weeks if necessary. "The average stay is usually three days. She may need time to wait for money being wired to her or just to decide what to do," Parker said.

Her average day will be filled with taking care of her children and getting the counselling she needs. "We tell her of resources for funding. She can use the phone and we do supportive counselling," she said.

Mainly the time is taken to decide what to do next. "We don't encourage her one way or another," she said.

The shelter is available for active duty female soldiers, wives of active duty soldiers and wives of retirees or retired female soldiers. Counselling is mandatory for those who choose to stay there with the exception of retirees. "As far

Researchers find direct link between skin cancer and sun

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

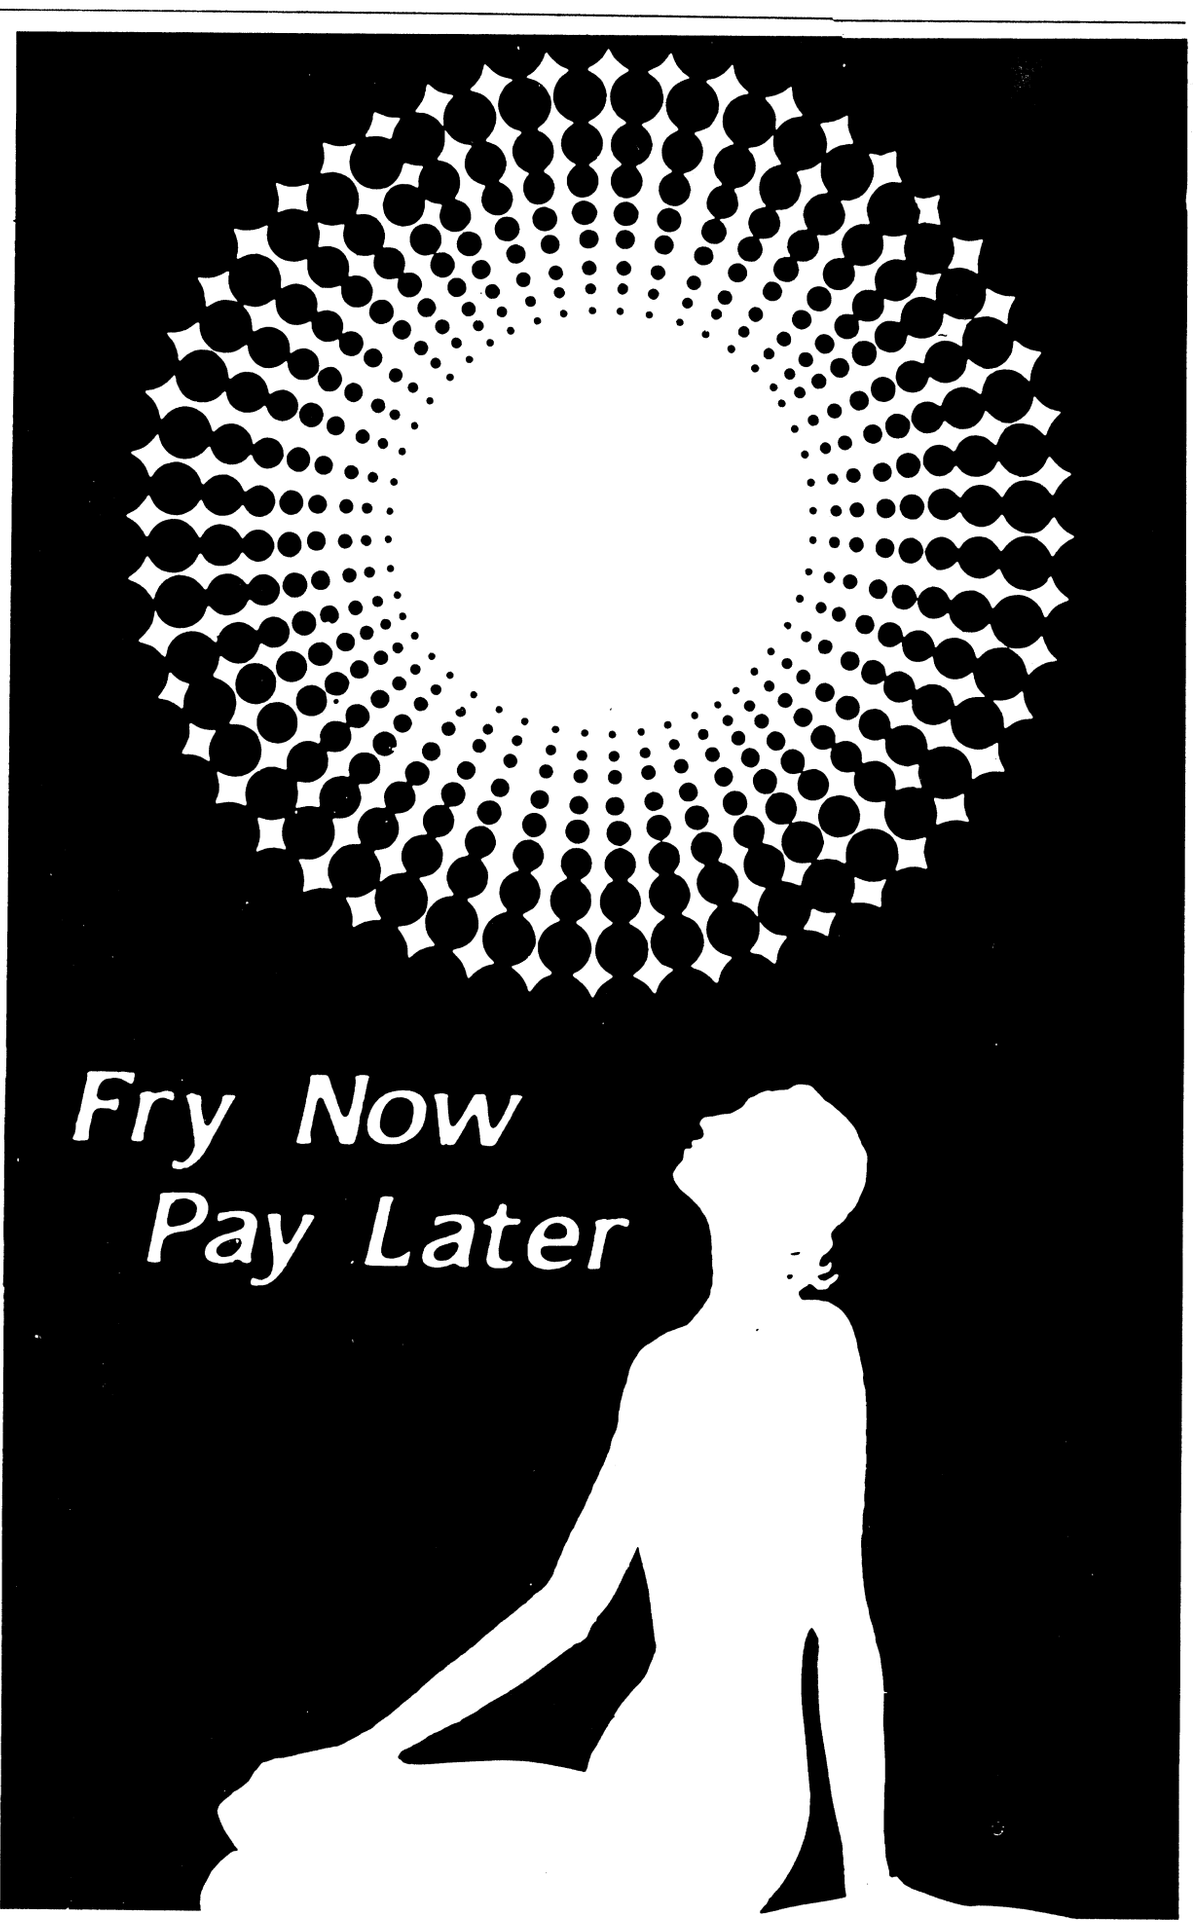
Planning to catch some rays this weekend? Go ahead — but be careful.

More than 90-percent of the 450,000 new cases of skin cancer that will be diagnosed this year will develop in parts of the body directly exposed to the sun. Skin cancer is the most common form of cancer, and the number of cases increases every year.

Fortunately, most new cases are either squamous cell or basal cell cancer. These cancers are easy to treat if caught early, often with a simple outpatient procedure similar to having a wart removed.

But a third kind of cancer, melanoma, is potentially fatal. About 22,000 new cases of melanoma are reported every year, resulting in as many as 5,500 deaths. The rate of melanoma cases is almost three times what it was 10 years ago. The disease is also affecting a younger age group than before.

Perhaps the growing number of skin cancer cases does have something to do with the depletion of the ozone layer, as some scientists believe. But it could also be attributed to the fact that tanning has become fashionable in this century. Bafore, ladies took care to avoid so much as a freckle.



Fair-skinned people, particularly blondes and redheads, are at more risk for cancer than others. They lack sufficient melanin, a pigment substance that filters out the sun's rays. People who work outdoors and those who live in sunny latitudes are also more at risk. However, no one, no matter how dark their skin, is immune.

Since overexposure to the sun is the main cause of basal and squamous cell cancer and is believed to be the cause of melanoma, skin protection is important.

In addition to protection against cancer, career protection can be an incentive to respect the sun. Military members are subject to disciplinary action for reporting to duty with an incapacitating sunburn. According to Army Lt. Col. (Dr.) George Winton, assistant chief dermatologist at Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Washington, D.C., some early research to develop modern sunscreens was sponsored by the military.

Here are some of Winton's tips for saving your skin:

- If you feel you must get a tan, do so gradually, giving yourself a little more exposure every day. This allows your skin to thicken, providing more protection.
- If possible, avoid - or limit yourself to 15 minutes - exposure during the hours of 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. Ultraviolet rays are strongest during these hours.
- Use a sunscreen. Para-aminobenzoic acid — PABA — is the most common effective ingredient in sunscreens, but a few people are allergic to it. Winton recommends sunscreens containing cinnamate if you're allergic to PABA. Both sunscreens are available in popular brands. Most of these products carry a number indicating the degree of protection they afford. The higher the number, the more the protection. Fair-skinned people and very young children should use No. 15. Lifeguards and others who are out in the strong sun a lot should use an opaque sunscreen on their noses and lips.
- Be extremely careful about using tanning salons. Winton said the American Academy of Dermatology recommends against using tanning salons at all. Researchers aren't yet sure, but they believe repeated use of the salons may also lead to skin cancer.
- Be careful, even if it's cloudy — ultraviolet rays can get through clouds.
- Certain drugs, such as tetracycline, can make your skin more susceptible to burns.
- Finally, get to know your skin and your own patterns of moles, freckles and beauty marks. Once a month, after your shower, give yourself a onceover. If you spot any change in size, color, texture or shape of your marks, see a doctor.

Avoid 'deadly traditions' July 4

American Forces Information Service

For all their spectacle, fireworks present a serious safety hazard, especially to children.

While they may seem like a fun and patriotic way to celebrate the Fourth of July holiday weekend, fireworks are dangerous combustible devices that can cause severe injury and even death, according to the National Safety Council.

Each year, more than 10,000 people are treated in hospital emergency rooms for fireworks-related injuries ranging from severe burns to blindings. Nearly half of these injuries occur among children aged 14 and younger.

To keep your holiday safe, the Council recommends that you view a professional fireworks display and avoid home fireworks altogether. For those who do plan to use fireworks, the Council offers these safety suggestions:

- Do not permit small children to handle any kind of fireworks. Even the sparkler, not generally considered dangerous, has an estimated burning temperature of more than 1000 degrees Fahrenheit and can easily ignite clothing.
- Follow all warning instructions and read all directions which explain how to properly ignite the device.
- Light fireworks outdoors in a clear area — away from people, houses and flammable materials such as gasoline cans.
- Don't ignite fireworks in a metal or glass container.
- Don't try to re-light or handle malfunctioning fireworks. Douse them with water and throw them away.

Fireworks can cause serious injuries

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

The Fourth of July without fireworks is like Thanksgiving without a turkey. Right? Well, maybe. But military safety people hope you'll watch the big display put on by professional fireworks people on your installation or in your local community rather than try to do it yourself.

"After all," said a safety officer at Fort Belvoir, Va., "we have a big open house and a grand fireworks display. Why incur the risk of trying to do it yourself?"

Although individuals in military housing are not allowed to use any fireworks that are illegal in their state, base commanders can, and often do, restrict fireworks further. For example, Virginia permits Class C fireworks — those with less than 50 milligrams of gunpowder. Yet Fort Belvoir permits only sparklers — and discourages even their use. And at Andrews Air Force Base, sparklers are prohibited, even though the state of Maryland permits them.

Even the most seemingly innocent fireworks can cause injury. In one incident, an 8-year old girl received second and third degree burns on her leg when a sparkler ignited her dress.

Of course, illegal fireworks are even more dangerous. According to the Consumer Product Safety Commission, two men were injured, one of them critically, when several illegal M-1000 firecrackers stored in their pickup truck accidentally ignited. The truck exploded.

A boy using a mail-order, "make-your-own" fireworks kit seriously injured himself and destroyed much of the family home when the chemicals in the kit exploded.

The commission estimates that in 1985, 10,300 people were treated in hospital emergency rooms for injuries associated with fireworks. More than half the injuries were burns, many of them involving the face and head — including the eyes. Forty-two percent of the victims were under 15 years old.

If you are going to use fireworks, safety experts say to follow these guidelines:

- Do not allow younger children to play with fireworks under any circumstances. The sparkler, considered by many the ideal "safe" firework for the young, burns at very high temperatures and can easily ignite clothing. Children can't appreciate the danger involved.
- Older children should be allowed to play with fireworks only under close adult supervision. Don't allow any running or horseplay around fireworks.
- Read and follow all warning instructions printed on the firework label before use.
- Light fireworks outdoors in a clear area away from houses and flammable materials.
- Keep a bucket of water nearby for emergencies.
- Don't try to relight malfunctioning fireworks. Soak them in water and throw them away.
- Be sure other people and pets are out of range before lighting fireworks.
- Never light fireworks in a container, especially one of glass or metal.
- Store fireworks in a dry, cool place. Check instructions for special storage directions.

PM Card: a new service from DEH

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

In an effort to better serve Fort Benning housing residents the Directorate of Engineers and Housing has re-implemented a system to alert maintenance personnel that their assistance is required.

According to Craig Taylor, a DEH spokesman, a preventative maintenance card is being issued to all post residents and is available at the Facilities Training School (U-DO-IT), Building 385, through Dominic DeCarlo.

When assistance is required, the occupant should put the card in a readily visible window. Maintenance teams will look for those signs during their daily rounds and will stop if they see the sign posted.

"Do not put the sign in the window if you're not going to be home," Taylor said, "and we encourage people to try to fix it themselves first, and if a mistake is made we can fix it."

Items of an emergency nature such as broken glass and repairs to kitchen equipment including stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers and garbage disposals should continue to be called to the Work Order desk at 545-2135.

Post residents are also urged to wait for the PM man instead of calling in service orders for minor repairs. If the repairs are beyond his capabilities he will phone in a service order for you.

"This whole system is aimed at providing a better service," Taylor said.

Shelter

as the regulations go, we cannot mandate retirees to go to counselling, but they can have it if they want it," Parker said. Civilains are encouraged to use the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women. Apparently many military wives don't know about the shelter on post. "We get calls from military wives," said Carol Sumner, executive director for the Columbus shelter. "Either they don't know about the shelter on post or they don't want to get their husbands in trouble," Sumner said.

Sumner's volunteers screen the callers and "strongly recommend military wives use the post shelter, where they can get counseling," she said. Her office refers the caller to the Family Advocacy Office, who they work closely with. "However, if it comes down to them not going anywhere and staying in the situation, we will take them here," she said.

Sumner said that they keep no statistics on military women they have sheltered, but in the past year they sheltered 112 women and 144 children from the Columbus community.

Civilain victims of spouse abuse can call the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women. Their hotline is 324-3850.

Married couple honored for community volunteer efforts

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Every quarter, volunteers are singled out for making an especially outstanding contribution to the Fort Benning community.

This quarter the award goes to the husband and wife team, Lt. Col. William and Janice Connolly for their unwaivering dedication in coordinating the Officer's Wives Club Festival of Running.

Although neither are strangers to the world of volunteering, this is the first time the two have really worked as a team. That's because he usually gives his time to sports, while she leans more toward schools and fundraising.

"I started volunteering when our oldest son started playing ball," Connolly said, "They needed coaches,so I helped out. I saw then that there was a real need and I've helped out ever since."

Mrs. Connolly started volunteering around the same time.

"I'm a biology teacher by profession," she said, "and there is not always a position available for me. So, I just started helping out at the schools whenever they needed a hand."

Always an active member of the Officers' Wives' Club, she volunteers a lot of her time at the Thrift Shop. "I feel that is one area that does not receive enough attention," she said. "It's one place where people can get rid of a lot of things when they're moving and where newcomers can pick up some items they need at a low price."

This award is not the first one Mrs. Connolly has received for her volunteer efforts. She was named volunteer of the year, at 1st Infantry Division, VII Corps, in Goppingen, West Germany, for organizing a Christmas bazaar, the largest one that had ever been conducted there.

With all that experience behind them, it's no wonder that the OWC Festival of Running was such a success.

Mrs. Connolly's interest in the family aspect and his from the runners point of view made them the perfect team.

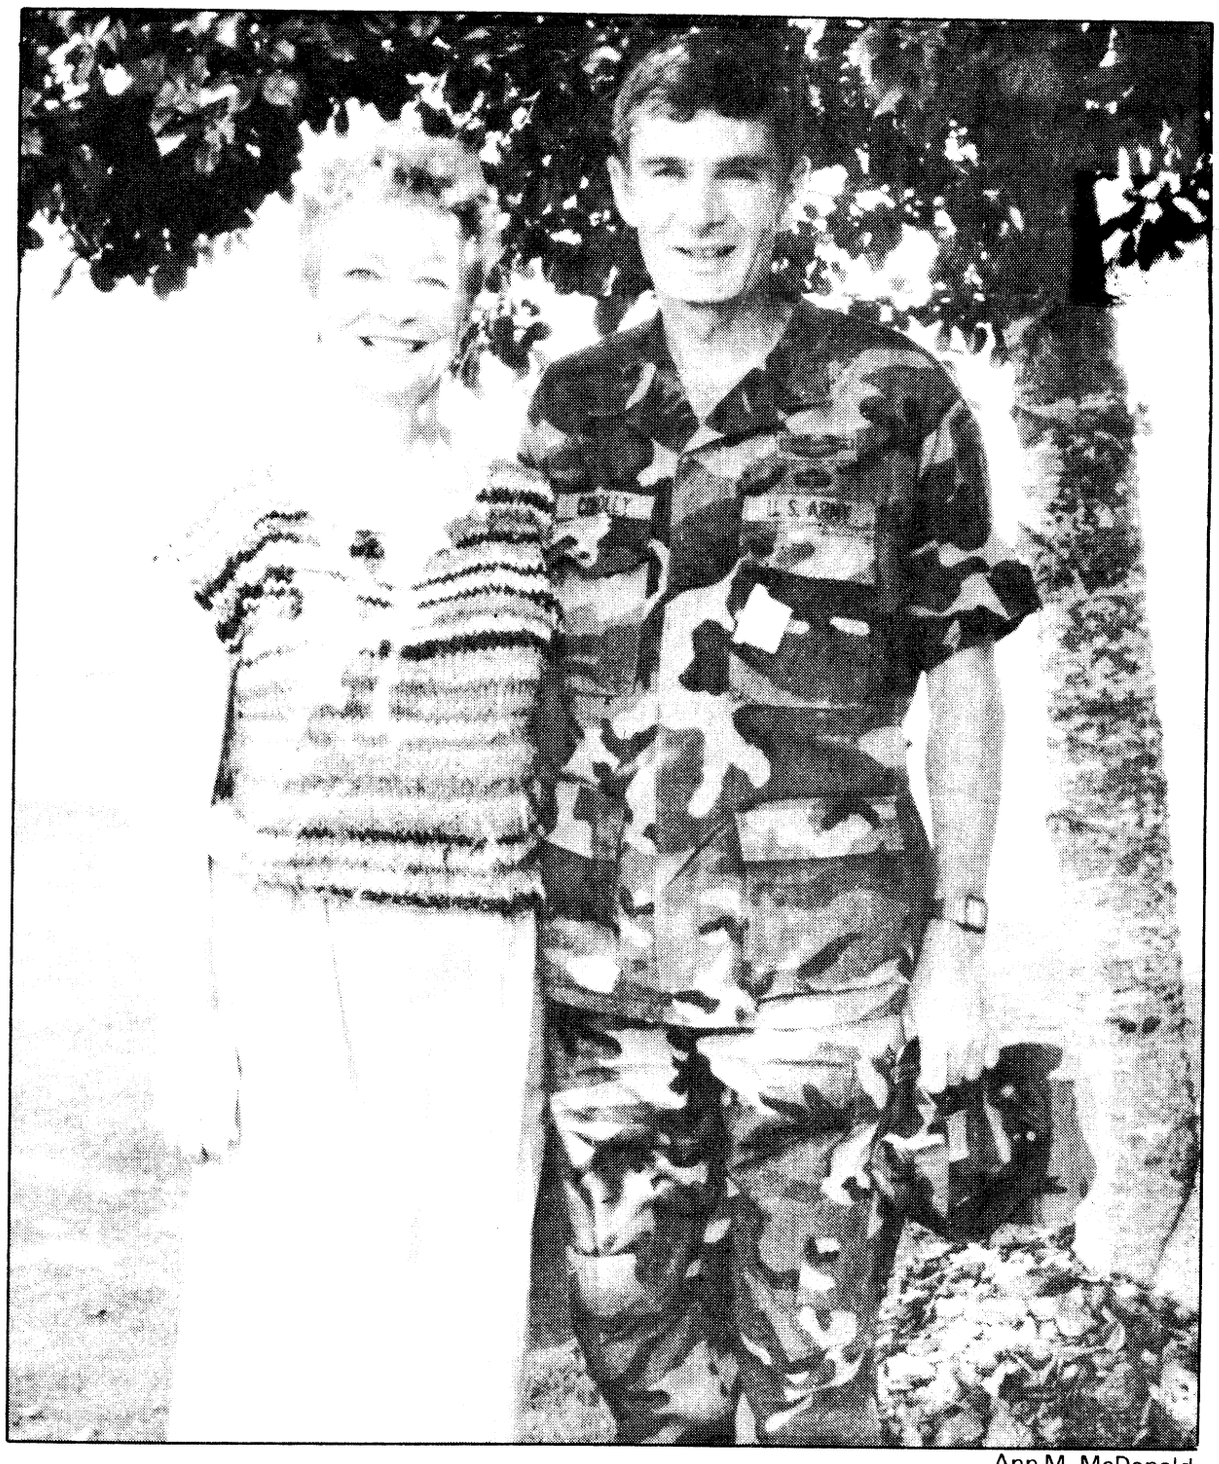
"We both really felt that the word festival was the key," she said, "and in order to live up to that, we felt all the elements had to be there."

They credited "brainstorming" for many of their ideas and said they always kept safety at the top of list in all their planning.

"If just one person had been hurt during the run,I would have considered it a failure," Mrs. Connolly said, "so we bounced a lot of "what ifs" off each other."

New events such as the 5 kilometer walk were added so that the whole family could participate and the course was made flat enough so that it was even accessable to people in wheelchairs.

They drove many miles in their car measuring the route with their odometer seeking the perfect route. "We wanted people to see a pretty part of post, it had to be shady and it had to be in a spot where it would least interfere with the rest of the community." Mrs. Connolly said.



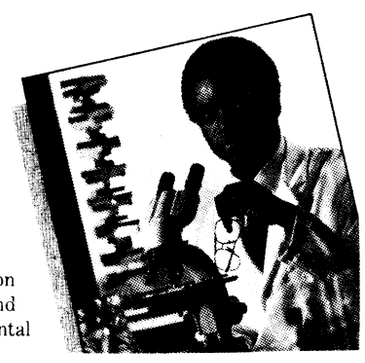
"Statistics show that the run is the third largest in the state of Georgia," said Connolly, "which is excellent for post public relations."

The entire reason behind the race is to make money. Funds raised are used by the OWC to provide scholarships for post children.The OWC also uses the funds generated for other community projects.

"We just paid the insurance for It's a Small World Preschool in McGraw Manor," she said, "so that they could continue to provide a needed service to the community."

Both of the Connollys see a need for certain things in the community and both feel they are making an impact on the community.

"You're heart has to be in it, Mrs. Connolly said."There are a lot of places on post that couldn't run without volunteers and the rewards are endless."



Ann M. McDonald

Janice and Lt. Col. William Connolly are Fort Benning's volunteers of the quarter.

Now There Is Treatment.

Now there is treatment for people who suffer from anxiety disorders, depression and other mental illnesses. Thanks to biomedical research, new drugs are helping people lead normal, productive lives. There's no cure yet. But through such research, people are being treated who didn't have a chance a few years ago. Meanwhile, your local Mental Health Association is helping patients, their families and the public learn the facts about mental illnesses.

Ghostbusters finish on top

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

The 1986 T-Ball World Series featured the top teams from the National and American Leagues of the Youth Activity Softball Division.

In the three-game series, which began Monday on Faith School Field, the Ghostbusters held on to defend their title against the Tigers.

The 1986 T-Ball Champion Ghostbusters, went throughout the regular season without a defeat.

The most valuable player of the series, Donohue McNeal, sparked the Ghostbusters with three home runs.

The series was a dead heat from the opening pitch. In the first game, the Ghostbusters edged pass the Tigers in a 12-10 victory.

In a do-or-die match up the following night, the Tigers continually clawed at the Ghostbusters, holding on to a one-point margin at the bottom of the ninth, to win 11-10.

The decision game came on Thursday, when the Ghostbusters took the field after suffering their first season defeat. This contest would not be so close, as the champions pulled out a clear victory, 19-4.

Winning had become a common activity for the Ghostbusters.

"We just went out there and did what we had to do, said Jason Hammel, 7, Ghostbuster third baseman.

A member of the Ghostbusters fires the ball to first, trying to make a play.

"I just made $100 by spending $5."

Spending a little money in Ledger-Enquirer Classified to sell something can mean big money for you. For example, you can run a 3-line ad for 5 days for just $5 and sell items up to $300 in some classifications. Or you can run a 3-line ad for 3 days for just $10.62 on a big-ticket item. Either way, when you have something to sell, spending a little can help you make a lot!

THE PRESIDENT DOESN'T TAKE AN OATH TO DEFEND THE AMERICAN FLAG OR THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

The President takes an oath to defend something even more important than a majestic symbol of our country.

The President takes an oath to defend the Constitution of the United States. A document that has been described as the greatest leap forward for freedom in human history. A document that is the foundation of our country. And the means by which we achieve the rule of law and protect our freedom.

As we commemorate the Bicentennial of the Constitution, there is no better way for you as an American to reaffirm the principles for which our country stands than to learn more about the Constitution.

CPO brings retirement expert to Fort Benning

Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

Civilian employees have until Dec. 31 to choose whether they want to remain with the single-tier Civil Service Retirement System or transfer to the new three-tier Federal Employees Retirement System.

To help employees decide, a series of briefings on the new system is being offered July 21 through 23, sponsored by the Civilian Personnel Office here.

Saundra Harman, an employee benefits consultant from Sykesville, Md., will conduct the briefings. Harman is an expert of retirement plans, according to CPO officials.

The briefings have been organized according to employee eligibility for the different retirement plans. Workers are asked to sign up for the session that applies to them.

The briefing schedule is: July 20 — 8:30 a.m. to noon — briefing for personnel automatically covered by FERS; July 20 — 1 to 4:30 p.m. — briefing for CSRS employees who have the option of converting to FERS; July 21 — 8:30 a.m. to noon — briefing for off-set employees (employees with five or more years under CSRS who have a break in service of over one year and who were rehired after Jan. 1, 1984);

July 21 — 1 to 4:30 p.m. — CSRS personnel with the option to convert to FERS; July 22 — 8:30 a.m. to noon — CSRS personnel with option to convert to FERS; July 22 — 1 to 4:30 p.m. — personnel automatically covered by FERS; July 23 — 8:30 a.m. to noon — CSRS personnel with option to convert to FERS; and July 23 — 1 to 4:30 p.m. — CSRS personnel with option to convert to FERS.

All briefings will be conducted in Building 4's Marshall Auditorium, except for the morning session July 21, which will meet in Classroom 6, Building 4.

Directorates and units are asked to contact the Training and Development Branch , CPO by July 17 with the number of employees who plan to attend.

Supervisors sending hearing impaired employees should coordinate with the Training and Development Branch for seating instructions and location.

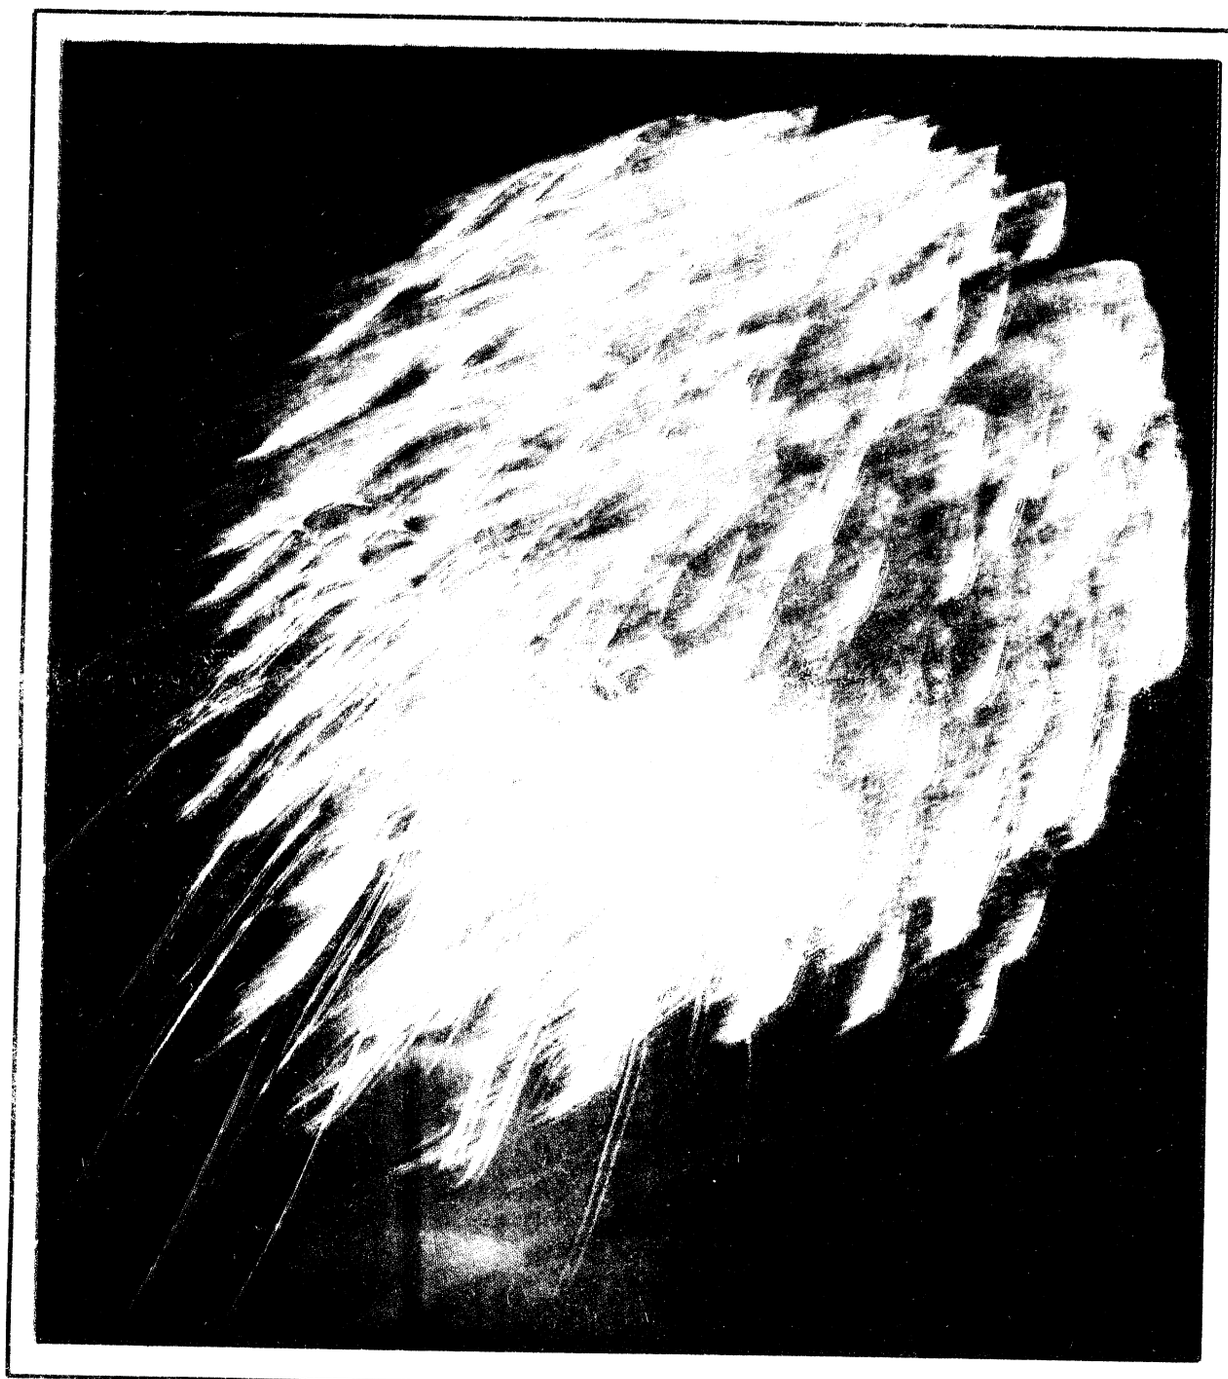
CPO officials say that every employee should have received a FERS Information Booklet and enrollment form by now, which provides basic information about the system. If you haven't received the booklet, call the Technical Services Branch at 545-5666 or 545-5578.

Video films which explain the new system have been distributed to all offices, and CPO officials recommend that persons view the film before making a decision.

Employees have until the end of the year to return the Election of Coverage form to CPO. The form must be filled out and returned, regardless of which plan the employee chooses.

This means that if you plan to stay with the Civil Service Retirement System, you should mark box B in section IV of the Election of Coverage form. The form becomes a part of your official personnel file.

Soldiers battle blaze caused by lightning



By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

On the afternoon of July 4, two soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade suppressed a natural gas line fire in the Custer Terrace area at Fort Benning until the fire department arrived.

At the time of the fire, Sp4 Daniel L. Payne of A Troop, 15th Calvary, was barbecuing in his backyard. He heard and saw the lightning strike that started the fire and, realizing it was close, began searching the area to see if it had caused any damage. Payne was first to locate the fire, behind a nearby storage shed on Kessler Court.

PV2 Don A. Sylvester, from Company D, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, was watching television at a friend's house when he saw a brilliant flash of light and heard a loud boom "like an explosion." He ran from the house and heard Payne's daughter, Dana, yelling "Fire". Within seconds he joined Payne, and together they used a nearby garden hose to contain the blaze and prevent it from spreading to the buildings.

Night lights

Fireworks light up the sky above York Field during Fort Benning's two-day Independence celebration. The fun began Saturday night with music by the Infantry Center Band, but ended early when a thunderstorm blew in. Sunday the celebration resumed with more music, national flag pageantry, a 50-gun salute to the nation, and an expanded fireworks display. Rains didn't dampen the patriotism of post residents, however, as large crowds turned out both nights.

For family members overseas, Form SS-5 will be available through overseas publications centers on Aug. 1.

Send completed applications, unless you are in the Philippines, to social security administration, International Program Service Center, Box 1756, Baltimore, Md. 21203. In the Philippines, send completed applications to U.S. Veterans Administration Regional Office, Attn: SSA Division, APO San Francisco 96528.

"Applications require proof of a family member's date of birth, identity and the United States citizenship or legal resident alien status," Mulkey explained. "If a family member was born in the U.S., the birth certificate will usually serve as proof of age and citizenship."

Depending on the circumstances, other required documents might include a Report of Birth Abroad of a Citizen of the United States of America, Certificate of Naturalization or Alien Registration Receipt Card ("green card"). Documents such as a military identification card, passport or official school record can establish identity.

Applicants may use certified copies of some of these personal documents if they need to forward the information with the form. Copies can be certified at legal assistance or U.S. consular offices. Those offices can also help family members who need more information or help with their applications.

"You should carefully review the application and supporting evidence before you send them to be sure they are correct and complete," Mulkey said. "Incomplete material will cause more delays before you get your social security number."

OPINION

U.S. cannot neglect conventional forces

Association of the U.S. Army

Once again there is debate over the desirability of withdrawing some or all American troops from Europe. The proposals of Senate Armed Services Chairman Sam Nunn and former national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski to draw down our troops there should be taken seriously by every American who has the slightest concern about national security. You can bet their proposals are the subject of careful attention on the part of Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev and the marshals in Moscow.

Talk of troop withdrawals now seriously undermines the United States' position in negotiations with the Warsaw Pact nations on arms and troop reductions. The unilateral removal of any substantial portion of our forces in Europe would effectively yank the rug from under U.S. and NATO negotiators who are entering into comprehensive negotiations with the Warsaw Pact on conventional force reductions "from the Atlantic to the Urals."

The East bloc negotiators must be shaking their heads in wonderment as they contemplate American troop reductions with no requirement for a quid pro quo on their part.

Advocating a reduction in the American conventional commitment to NATO is particularly ill-timed, now that prospects are increasing for agreements to significantly reduce the nuclear forces of both East and West. In view of our commitment to defend our own interests in Western Europe, what we should be debating is the extent to which we are willing to bolster our conventional forces in Europe — not their removal.

Until there is solid agreement for the balanced reduction of forces in Europe, it is in our vital interests to maintain our forward deployed forces and to get on with their planned modernization as a measure of our deterrent strength.

To weaken that strength by unilaterally cutting back the U.S. Army in Europe would seriously endanger the ties between the United States and Western Europe, would play directly into the hands of the Kremlin and would invite the military adventurism that could lead to the demise of a free, independent and democratic Europe.

U.S. troops in Europe vital to NATO security interests

Association of the U.S. Army

The way defense planners on both sides of the Atlantic have neglected NATO's conventional fighting forces could turn out to be some of the greatest savings we ever regretted. Admittedly, the doctrine of flexible response, with its reliance on nuclear weapons, has given the people of Europe the longest period of peace in history.

But lately, the distinct possibility of reducing or removing nuclear missiles from Europe makes the specter of the massive Soviet conventional arsenal loom ever larger over those who live in its shadow.

Warsaw Pact non-nuclear forces outnumber those of NATO in every category. The Soviets and their Eastern Europe satellites have a 2-1 advantage in tanks. In mortars and artillery the edge is slightly greater. They have a 5-1 advantage in fixed-wing aircraft and a 2-1 margin in armored personnel carriers and infantry fighting vehicles.

In total division equivalents, the communists again outnumber the democratic nations by better than 2-1. Even the U.S. lead in helicopters is rapidly diminishing as the Soviets improve their weapons through purchased or stolen Western technologies.

NATO military commanders have for years pressed their governments for increased modernization of their conventional fighting forces in order for them to be successful in blunting any possible Warsaw Pact attack. "Still," says Gen. Bernard W. Rogers, the retiring Supreme Allied Commander, "the NATO Army is not now adequate to the task."

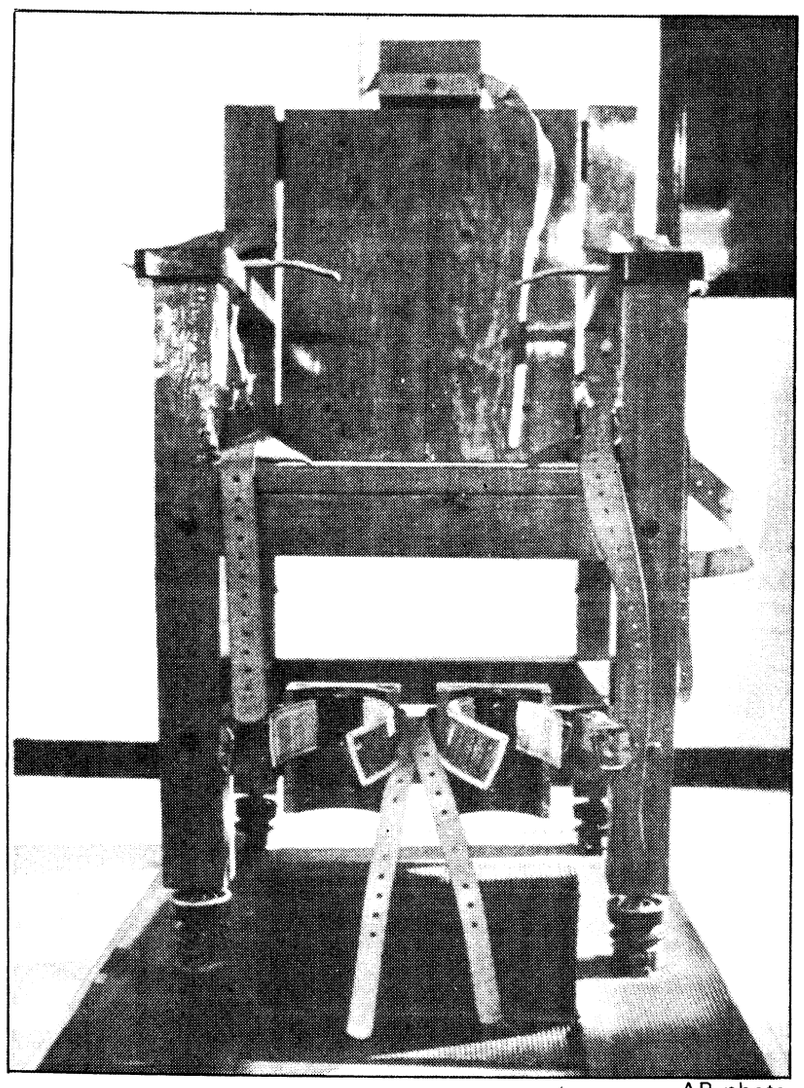
Commentary

Sometimes it's not easy to explain the difference between right and wrong. Especially when you're talking about the death penalty.

In college, I was taught that the purpose of incarcerating criminals was to rehabilitate them. The theory was that people are criminals because they haven't had the advantages that average Americans take for granted.So the job of prisons was to help criminals learn the right values, and through education, equip them with the skills they needed to become productive members of society.

That was basically my philosophy when I entered the workforce.



It's hard to pinpoint any one thing that made me change my mind. Part of it was that as a hard working citizen, my taxes continued to go up along with the crime rate, and I didn't like paying so much taxes.

Another thing that changed my mind was fear. Every day's headlines brought more horror stories of murders, robberies and crime sprees, complete with gruesome photographs of victims and sad stories of their survivors.

As my feelings were changing, so were those of many Americans. The country shifted toward more conservative leaders, looking for "cures" to social problems that the Great Society had not been able to solve.

In time the Old Testament philosophy of "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth" became the rallying cry.

Researchers found that capital punishment was not effective as a deterrent, a principal argument used by its proponents.

My viewpoint on capital punishment became, "Well, it may not deter them all, but at least that particular murderer will not be killing anyone else."

It was a cowardly position on a difficult subject, but I managed to live with my rationalization.

That is until I tried to explain it to my 7-year-old daughter. We were watching the television news when a story came on about a Death Row inmate who had been executed that day.

She was shocked when I explained what execute means. She just couldn't understand how the government can kill people, when murder is against the law.

It seemed like a good time for a Government 101 lesson, so I explained to her how our system works.

I told her about our Constitution, how it says all people are created equal, and sets out a form of government with power spread out in the hands of many, including judges as well as lawmakers.

I told her how no one in America can be arrested or imprisoned without just cause, and how a person accused of a crime is considered innocent until proven guilty.

I explained how any accused person can request a trial with a jury of our peers, 12 people just like us, to listen to all the facts and make a fair decision.

And I said that because we live in a free country, nobody is executed until he or she has have exhausted all their avenues of appeal, which takes years.

Because I was trying to calm her fears, there were a lot of things I didn't tell her about our system of government.

I didn't admit that the Constitution was originally written by wealthy landowners, and applied only to free white men who were eligible to vote.

Nor did I mention the years of struggle by black people to win equal protection under the law, and I left out the fact that women still don't have equal rights guaranteed them under our Constitiution.

I did not tell her that corruption, graft and bribery are as much a part of our government's history as George Washington

It takes two to allow a crime to happen

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A song several years back stated the obvious by observing that it "takes two to tango."

It also takes two for a crime to take place--the criminal and the victim. But apparently the obviousness of this fact is lost on many of us.

At Fort Benning our business is security. We have security of weapons, classified information, military vehicles and equipment, etc., drummed into our heads from the moment we raise our right hands and say "I do."

We accept that responsibility. We are security conscious and we know that our fellow soldiers and civilians working here, like us, have a common goal--security of this nation.

Realizing this, we tend to let our guard down when it comes to our personal property. This sets us up to be ripped off, beat up and taken advantage of by fellow soldiers and workers here at Fort Benning.

Without thinking, we wander down the hall in the barracks to get a Coke, leaving our wallet on the bunk; we park our car without rolling up the windows and locking it; we head out for class at Infantry Hall without storing our valuables in a secure wall locker.

We trust our fellow humans, but when we return, we find the wallet missing, the car stereo gone, the gold watch taken. We are crest fallen. How did this happen to us?

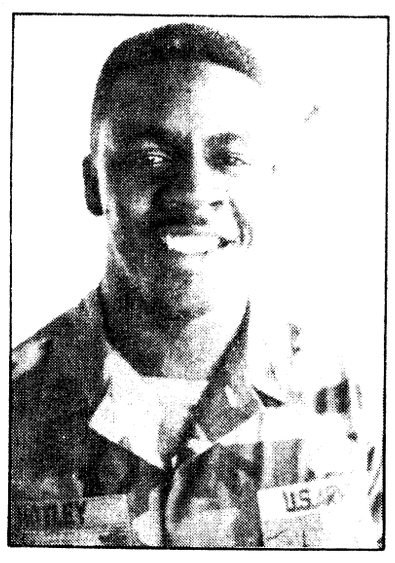
No soldier who shares a barracks with us, eats with us, works in the motor pool with us, would dream of taking our cash, our property.

No person who lives and works at Fort Benning would go into parking lots and steal things out of our cars.

No officer or cleaning lady would go into BOQ rooms and rifle our personal valuables.

Of course not. But someone is. Check the daily blotter. Not a day goes by that someone doesn't report a crime, doesn't become the other half of the formula; the victim, of a crime.

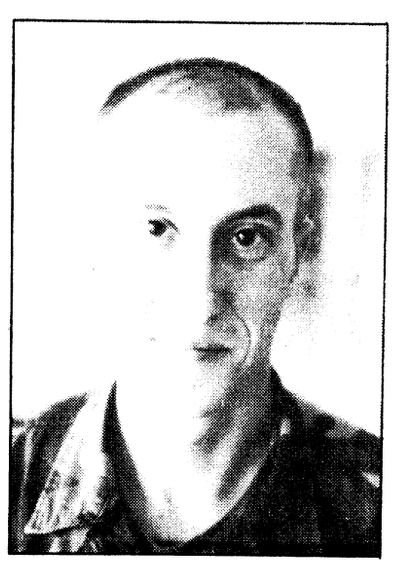
Company commanders and first sergeants don't stand up in front of us, telling us about security of personal property to hear themselves talk.



They aren't talking to the soldier standing on our right, or sitting on our left. They are talking to us. But we don't believe them. We know crimes happen to other people, not us.

Sure they do.

VARIOUS VOICES / What do you think about the death penalty?



Capt. William Egan, 12th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "I'm for it! If an individual is convicted of first degree murder and it is proven guilty beyond a shadow of a doubt, the death penalty should then be used as an option. There is always talk about the rights of the murderer, but he didn't consider his victims' rights before killing them."

Sp4 Maurice Motley, 533rd Transportation Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, - "I'm against the death penalty. No man has the right to determine whether or not another man should die. I think we should take another look at the decision they made about the death penalty."

Sgt. Patrick Dennis, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, The School Brigade, - "I'm for the death penalty. For one thing it saves the government money because they don't have to pay for upkeep, and besides, if they killed someone they deserve to die anyhow."

Officer Candidate Joseph Secino, 50th Company, 5th Battalion, The School Brigade, - I'm in favor of the death penalty, especially in crimes of unusual brutality or crimes in which there are basically no extenuating circumstances."

Capt. Lawerence Pryor, Headquarters and Headquarters Compan 36th Engineer Group, - "I'm favor of it, but I think it's a alternative. However, it d as a deterrent but a poo the death penalty was it would more serve it but people are still kill What it all boils dow ing values that society

1-58 troops test mettle on Rangers' Darby Queen

Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

Keeping a physical training program interesting is a tough job. But Company E, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry found a way to relieve the boredom. They completed the Ranger's Darby Queen obstacle-course before departing for Independence Day fun.

"I went through this course in Ranger school," said 1st Lt. Nathaniel Johnson. "This course builds camaraderie and confidence in a unit, and is a change in the PT schedule."

"I'd rather do this than PT," said Cpl. Edwardo C. Alvez. "This is a real good course with 26 obstacles that you must complete, so it's very difficult. If anyone tells you they went through this course without getting "smoked," they're lying."

The Darby Queen includes everything from balancing across logs and ropes, climbing towers and cliffs on ropes or netting, to crawling through a ditch covered with barbed wire. Some obstacles require the men to work together as teams, pushing and pulling each other up a tower.

"I learned that I'm a little bit tougher than I thought," said Pvt. 2 Charles N. Palmer.

Engineers practice construction skills in Honduras

By Sgt. David J. Adams
129th PAD

PALMEROLA AIR BASE, Honduras — Soldiers of the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, Fort Benning, Ga., recently deployed to Palmerola Air Base for 90 days of hard work and training.

Enduring high temperatures and austere conditions from April 2 to late June, the engineers worked supporting many of the units here on base as well as assisting the Air Force PRIME BEEF teams.

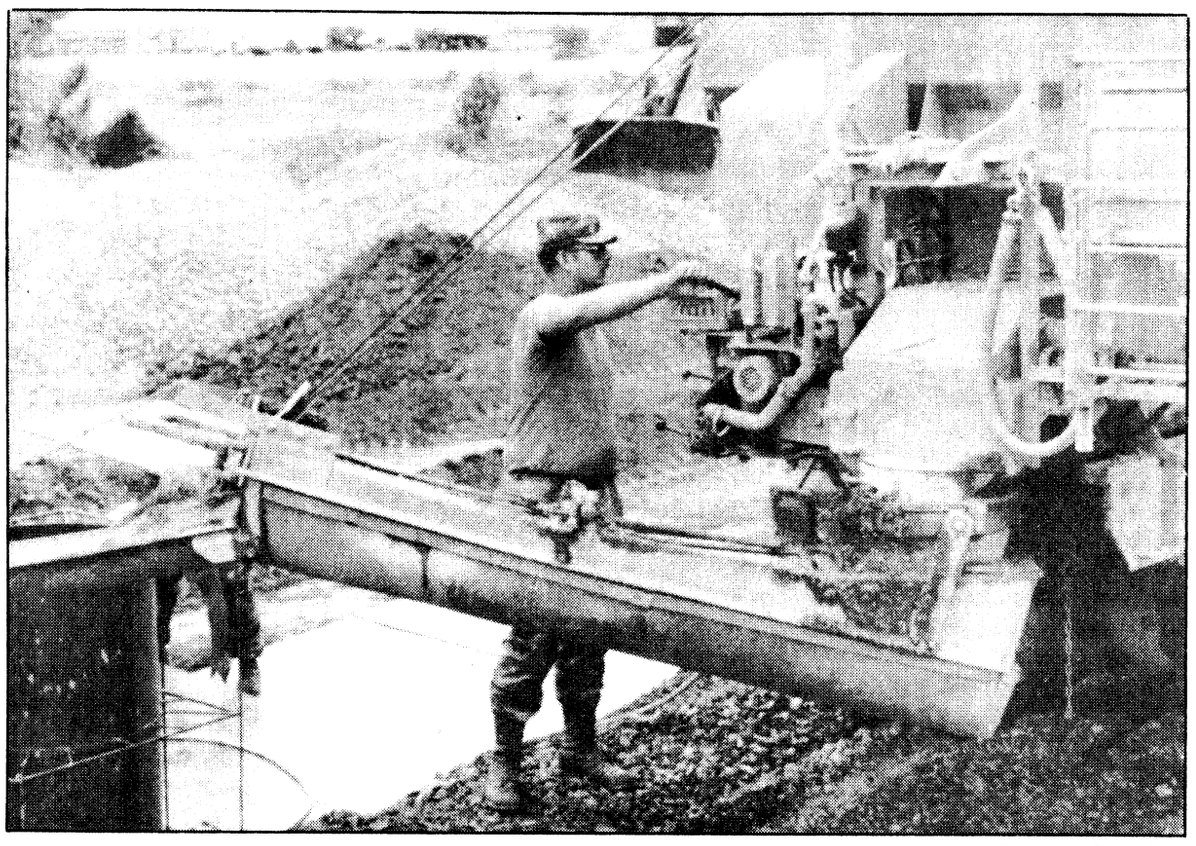
Two construction projects were the focus of the engineer's training. Soldiers from Company A replaced the old OV1 aircraft apron located near the base fire station, while soldiers from Company B continued construction on the new base dining facility.

First, the members of Company A removed the existing aircraft apron and taxiway, which had been damaged when the weight of the aircraft parked on it had caused portions of it to buckle and sink into the soft wet ground beneath. After rolling the old panels up in strips, the large bundles of now scrap metal were moved to the side. Much work needed to be done to restore the area to ideal conditions. A grader was used to make a one percent grade descending from the center of the apron to the sides to assist water drainage.

Next, a large rubber membrane was placed over the ground to keep it hard and dry. The M8 runway matting, each panel weighing about 114 pounds, was then placed over the rubber membrane and held in place with locking pins. According to one of the engineers, the job was "sort of like putting together a jigsaw puzzle."

SSgt. Don Grewe said, "The training has been good, we've had no major problems. We had a little trouble trying to take apart the old matting so we just rolled it up."

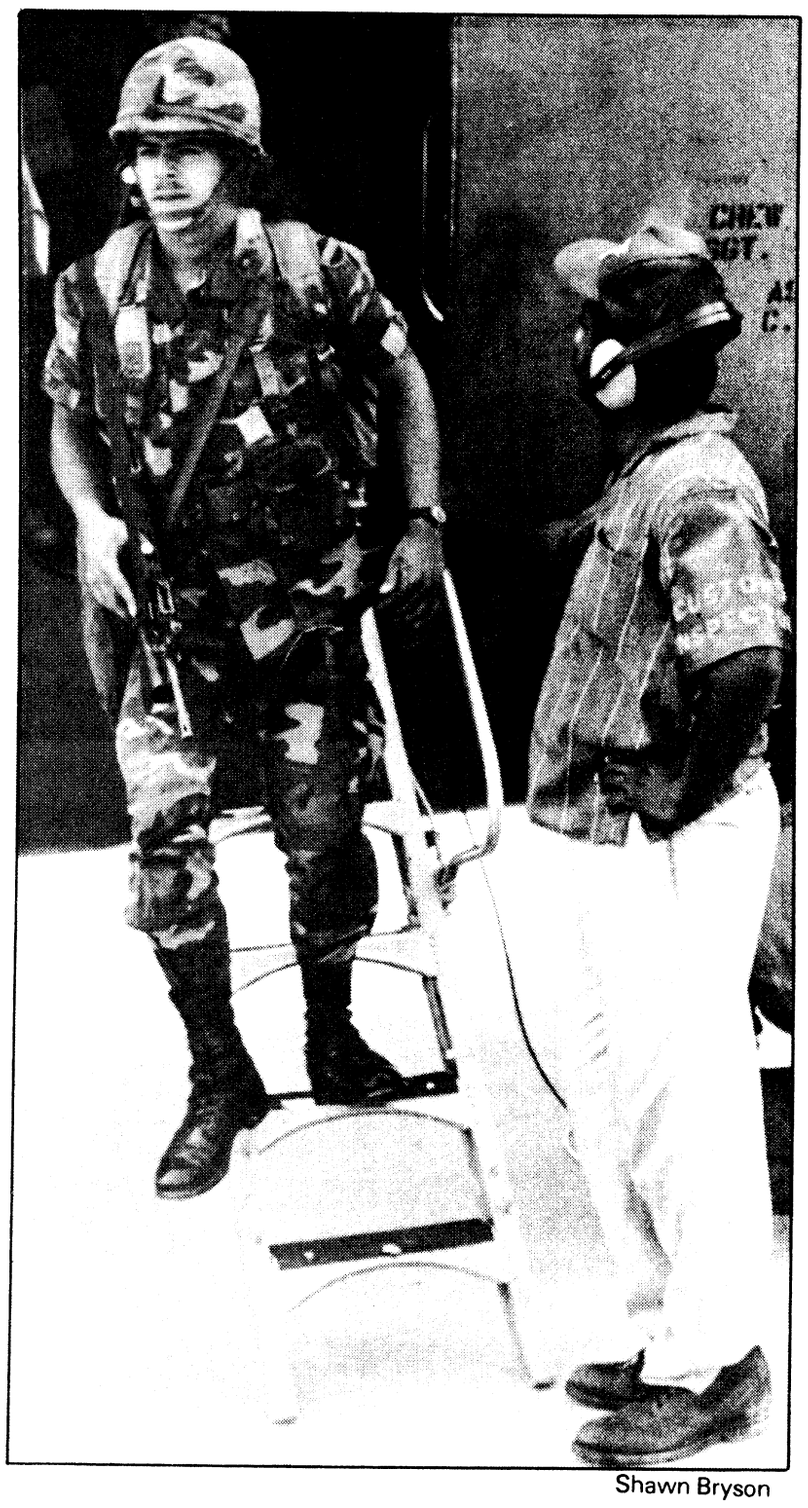
Once the panels have been laid, the engineers will tack down the sides, paint guide lines and install runway lights along the taxiway.



When finished, the new apron and taxiway will total 119,735 square feet.

The new dining facility, built by members of Company B,will be able to seat approximately 760 people at a time and feed up to 1,100 soldiers per meal. Based on a basic design from the Army Facility Component System, the 6,500 square foot dining facility is an increase in size over the current facility by 1,600 square feet.

The engineers began by laying the concrete foundation. The $175,000 facility is the first major construction project to be built using a concrete foundation said 1st Lt. Thomas Smythe, the group's platoon leader. Next, the engineers built the frame work for the walls and roof.



Smythe said, "The weather has slowed us down because we take breaks periodically and almost force feed water. The conditions aren't too much different from those at Fort Benning. The heat is similar." "The training here is two thousand percent better," said Smythe, "it's good training for the troops, squad leaders and management. The soldiers really get to practice their Military Occupation Specialties. There is a lot of value in the training we got from preparing to deploy as a unit and work under these conditions."

The soldiers from Company B and Company A returned to Fort Benning June 25 in the late afternoon. They were welcomed home at Lawson Army Airfield by their families, friends and fellow soldiers. Lt. Col. Charles Rust, 43rd Engineer Battalion Commander, also welcomed the soldiers home and congratulated them on a well-done mission.

586th troops explore explosives at Brown Range

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

For anybody who has never worked with high-power explosives before, it's definitely risky business.

But for many of the soldiers of the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge), 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, the handling and use of explosives is just another part of their job.

Recently the 586th soldiers, whose primary mission is bridge building, tested their abilities with explosives at Brown Demolition Range. According to 1st Lt. Kenneth Young, executive officer for the company, approximately 70 soldiers from the 586th along with 15 soldiers from other companies of the 43rd were on hand at the range to fine-tune their demolition skills.

"During the morning, the soldiers were reacquainted with and tested on the basics of preparing and firing electrical and non-electrical explosives," Young said. "After the morning walk-through, the soldiers qualified with live explosives in the afternoon."

Young said that the soldiers worked with TNT, military dynamite and C-4 (plastic explosives) and more powerful explosives such as crater charges and shape charges.

"Probably the most dangerous task when working with explosives is fastening the blasting cap to the detonation cord," Young said. A mistake in this part of the training could be costly since the "det cord" burns at 24,000 feet per second, he said.

Young commented that demolitions is a required skill for the military occupation specialty of 12C (bridge builder). "Our soldiers receive this valuable training twice a year and the company is involved with Brown Demolition Range about 10 times each year," he said.

"When we qualify here, the Engineer Branch from Building 4 helps us. However, the 586th also supports Building 4 by assisting in demolitions training for the Infantry Officer Basic Course, the Infantry School and the Rangers," Young said.

He said it's important for the soldiers of the 586th to stay proficient in demolitions. "It's especially important for our engineer officers and non-commissioned officers to stay proficient since they would have to calculate the amount and kinds of explosives needed in wartime," Young said.

Young added that while many types of soldiers work with explosives, the engineers are the specialists at doing it the right way.

Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, await orders to fire a 155-mm howitzer during a recent live-fire exercise.

Gunners take aim at live-fire range

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade

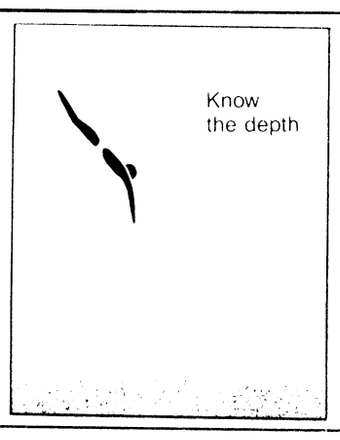
"Once again, fire!"

This is the command given to soldiers of 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery. They were firing the 155mm howitzer at various firing points on Fort Benning's live-fire range.

This field training exercise will be the last one that the 2-10th will have in preparation for the National Training Center. The training was designed to set a pace for the soldiers even though it's hard to anticipate what may take place at NTC.

These howitzer batteries will be challenged to constantly move on the battlefield in order to keep up with the maneuver forces. A battery is a company-sized element with about 90 soldiers and six 155mm howitzers at its disposal.

Included in this training is the full-blown use of Tacfire, which is an automated way for artillery to deliver fire by using digital messages. Tacfire uses a digital message which is sent out by the Fire Direction Center. When using the old communications system, it took more time for the information to travel. It was only possible to relay one message at a time, but with the new system, multiple signals can be sent out at the same time.



The key assets for Tacfire consists of the howitzer guns, the Fire Direction Center, the forward observers, and, of course, the ever-present Battalion Tactical Operations Center.

"Tacfire works; it's a continuing effort for the soldiers, with constant energy being applied at all times," said Capt. Thomas Lynch, assistant S-3. "If we're not in the field using it, we're training at least 24 hours a week to stay familiarized with the system."

The forward observers play a vital role in Tacfire because they give the coordinates for the guns to adjust fire.

"We are the eyes of the artillery. We tell the guns where to adjust fire, so we're in charge," said Sp4 Alvin M. Bilby of Headquarters and Headquarters Battery. "Without us, the Infantry has a hard time doing their job; they depend on us," he said.

The soldiers of the 2-10th are training to their fullest, in order to be ready for NTC and the challenge presented by the opposing forces there.

Ranger battalion commander believes in leading by example

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

He sat back in the chair, comortable in his surroundings, but omehow he looked like he would e more at ease in the outoors.

If you could define how a anger should look, this man ould definitely fit the bill.

It is fitting that such a man ook command of the 3rd Ranger attalion, 75th Ranger Regiment esterday.

Lt. Col. Robert M. Hensler is ie new commander of the youngest Ranger Battalion in the nited States Army.

Just arriving from a command ost in Fort Drum, N.Y., he is nxious and ready for his new osition, one that he feels very rivileged to have.

"This unit was organized on a ery strong foundation," Hensler id, "and I want to sustain it at s current level of proficiency as art of the best light infantry rce is the world."

A West Point graduate, ensler's command philosphy is hat he refers to as the "Eight illars of Excellence."

"Leading by example" is top his list; followed by maintaing a "battle focus." This means, said, "if it is not a battle sential task, don't waste time doing it."

Hensler

Hensler's belief in noncommissioned officers is evident in that his third pillar is "em-powering subordinates." This means pushing the job or task down the chain of command to the lowest level where it can be properly executed, he explained.

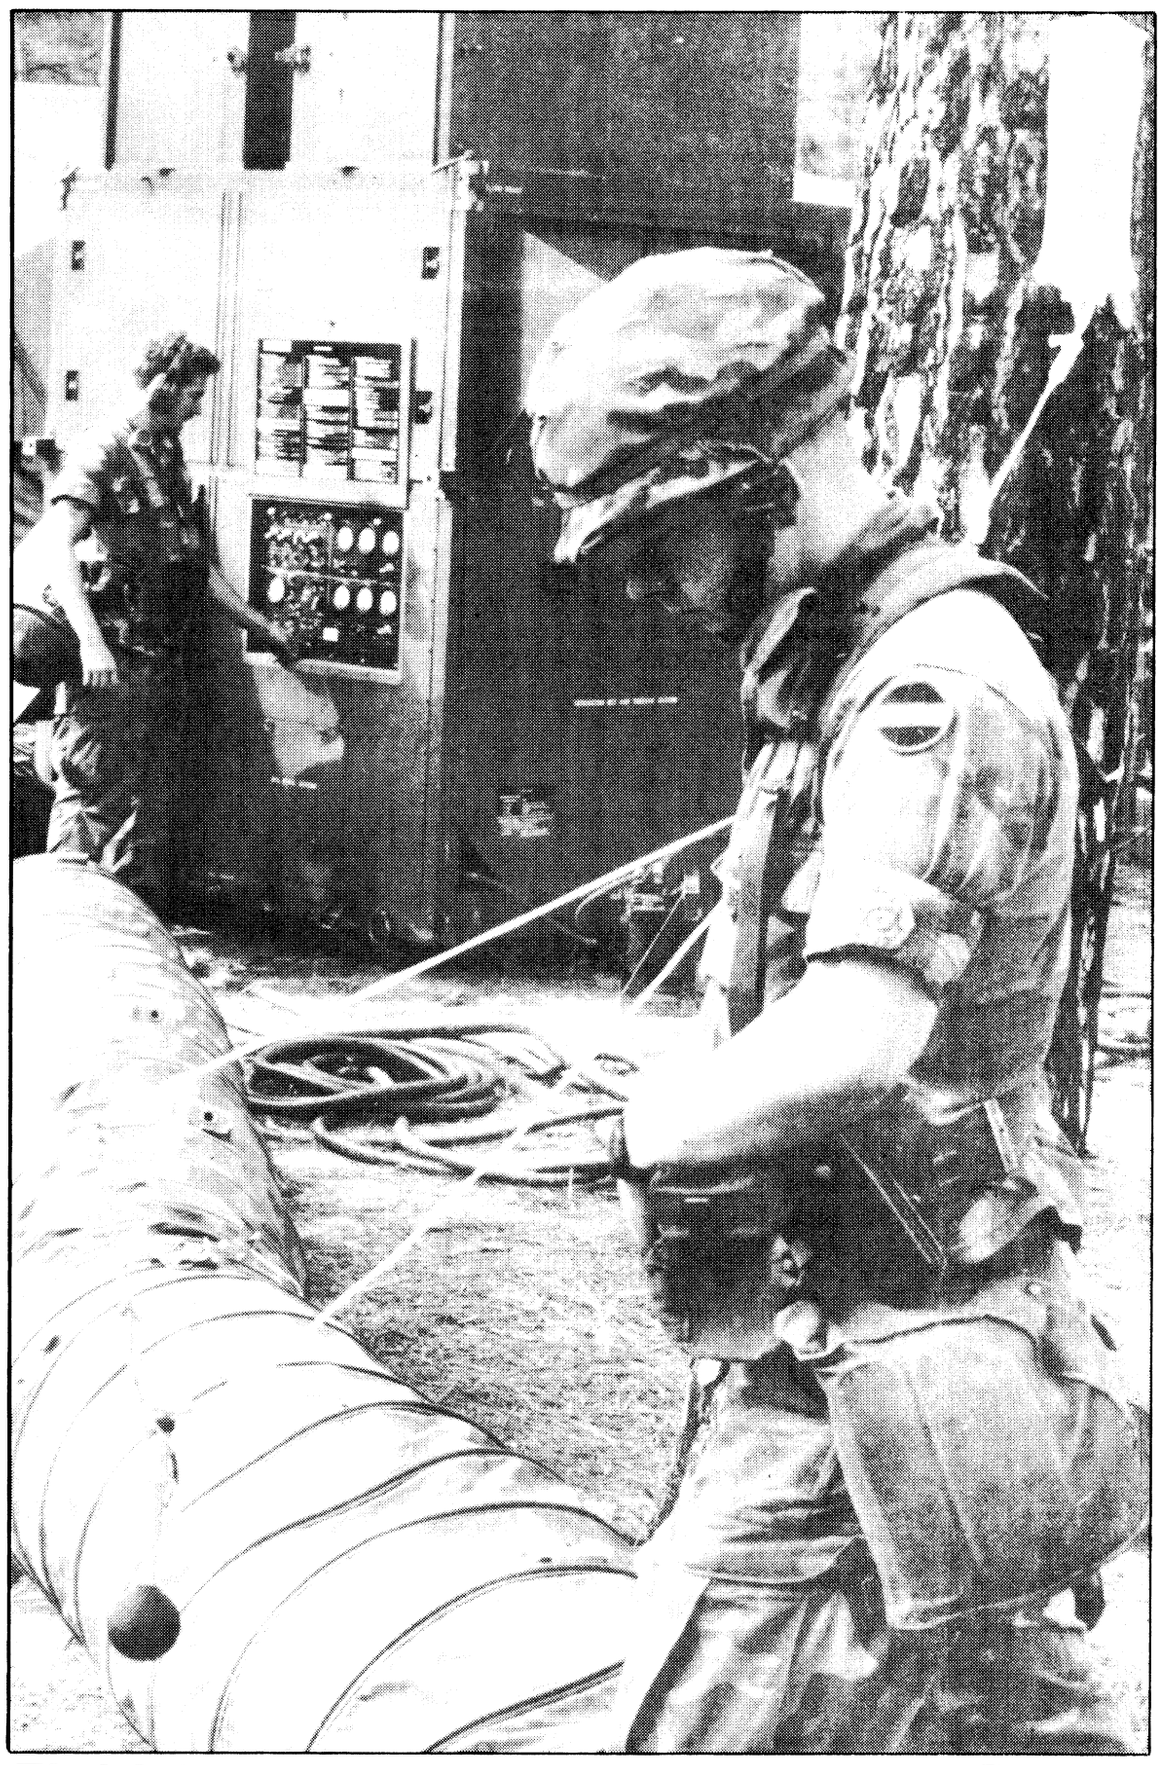
Strong unit identity, cohesion and morale, caring, high standards and discipline, consistancy and teamwork round off his philosophy.

He credits his leadership technique to the mentoring and education he has received during the past seven years of his career.

"I expect my men to sleep, eat and breathe the Ranger Creed," Hensler said. "I don't want them merely to mouthe the words during our early morning physical training formations.

"I want them to live by the pillars of excellence; quiet, humble excellence," he said.

Hensler said there is no room for braggarts or houligans in a Ranger battalion.



He describes himself as a borderline introvert who enjoys spending time off by himself in the woods but, at different times likes being around people.

Spending time with his wife and his two sons are big on his list. "My wife and I are a team," Hensler said. "I command and she works with the wives. Our intrests lie in the same place."

He is veteran of Vietnam and Grenada and more recently, he helped activate the 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry, the first combat battalion at Fort Drum.

He said he believes in the military and the Rangers, and the high standards they uphold, which separates them from other units in the Army.

"Rangers don't have the freedom to fail," Hensler said.

)rd-bound Wolfhounds host family day

By Bradley Iwafuchi
h Battalion, 2nd Infantry

Braving a gray, drizzly day, iends and family of the Fort rd-bound 2/27th Infantry Wolfhounds" attended Fam-y Day for Companies E and , 4th Battalion, 2nd Infantry raining Brigade.

Not only did this family day ive the soldiers and their milies a chance to see each her, but the future men of ie 2/27 Infantry were able to eet the officers and NCOs ho will command them hen they arrive at Fort rd.

Even the rainy weather didn't deter the happy mood. "The men are pretty excited," said Lt. Col. Robert Frizzo, commander of the 4th Battalion. There was a meeting in the morning at the Harmony Church theater where the Wolfhounds received a lecture on what to expect at Fort Ord.

One point of the meeting that Frizzo mentioned was that "every married man in the Wolfhounds has a sponsor at Fort Ord." What the sponsor does is help the family look for appropriate housing and create a smooth transition for the family.

The Family Day was filled with exhibits of infantry weapons and demonstrations. Families watched Pugil Stick, hand-to-hand combat, M16 A1 Rifle and Drill and ceremony demonstrations. The family day was topped off with a delicious barbeque for everyone.

When asked about meeting their new commanding officer from Fort Ord, the men's moods were positive. Pvt. Thomas Stinson said the experience "gets me ready for Fort Ord." Pvt. Jefferey Lobato felt that family day "brought up morale."

The Wolfhounds graduate from Infantry OSUT July 16.

Army seeks officers for special forces branch

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Plans are underway for bringing qualified officers into the Army's new special forces branch.

The general order formally establishing special forces as the Army's newest career branch was signed in ceremonies June 19 at the Pentagon. The new branch is expected to provide the Army with professionally-trained and developed officers in both special forces and a functional area, as well as strengthen the overall capabilities of Army special operations forces.

In a message to the field outlining their implementing instructions, Army personnel officials said that 3,000 letters would be mailed within the next 30 days to officers with special forces backgrounds. The letters will inform the officers of procedures for submitting branch-transfer requests.

Officers currently holding both a basic branch and functional area 18A (special forces) will be afforded the opportunity to voluntarily branch-transfer to special forces. If rebranching is desired, these officers will be asked to indicate their preference for a new functional area. Officers in this category who are administratively, medically and professionally qualified will be rebranched to special forces within 90 days, and a new functional area will de designated, based on the officer's qualifications and the needs of the Army.

Those officers not assigned to a branch but who currently hold two functional areas, one being 18A, will be notified that they automatically will be brought into the special forces branch and will retain their other functional area.

Officers who have completed the special forces qualifying course and who hold skill identifier 5G, but do not currently hold functional area 18, may submit a written request for branch transfer to special forces. A board will review these requests and rebranch qualified officers to special forces in accordance with the needs of the Army. Rebranched officers will be given the option of either retaining their current functional area or requesting a new one, as appropriate.

Some officers will have to submit an application for special forces training in accordance with AR 612-162. This category includes those who currently hold functional area 18A and who have not completed the Special Forces Detachment Officer Qualification course. Officers who are between their fourth and seventh year of service and who have completed their basic branch advanced courses, but do not have a functional area and have not completed SFDOQC also fall into this category.

Upon completion of special forces training, each officer will be rebranched to special forces. These officers will be designated in a functional area at the appropriate time for their year group.

Captains who volunteer for special forces will be considered branch-qualified only when they have completed their basic branch advanced course and the SFDOQC and have successfully commanded an operational detachment for 18 months (plus or minus six months).

Officers in psychological operations (formerly 18B) and civil affairs (formally 18C) will be managed separately from special forces branch officers. A new functional area is being established to manage and professionally develop these officers. The reserve components will generally access, train and manage their special forces personnel in the same manner as the active component.

Revisions to AR 611-101 (Commissioned Officer Classification System) and DA pamphlet 600-3 (Commissioned Officer Development and Utilization) will appear in "Officer Ranks Update" No. 12, to be published in April.

For more information, interested officers should contact the special forces branch by writing to Commander, U.S. Army Military Personnel Center, ATTN: DAPC-OPB-SF, 200 Stoval St., Alexandria, Va. 22332-0400.

Soldiers needed in electronic warfare field

Military Personnel Center

The Electronic Warfare/Cryptologic Operations enlisted career management field needs qualified soldiers to reclassify into CMF 98. MILPERCEN career managers are looking for sergeants (not in promotable status) and below in overstrength military occupational specialties.

According to Master Sgt. Michael A. Callahan, senior career advisor for CMF 98, the Army has not been able to recruit enough people to fill all the slots of the career management field's six MOSs. The high level requirements for test scores and security clearances take time to process and many qualified candidates enter other MOSs where they can get signed up more quickly.

"Our field has a lot of opportunities and benefits," Callahan said. "Because of the shortages, promotions are quicker. The soldiers are entitled to selective reenlistment bonuses and they get technical training that they can use in civilian life."

A CMF 98 soldier can also receive as many as 21 semester hours of college credit for advanced individual training, depending on the length of the course and the policy of the civilian school involved. Assignments in the field are varied and the locations include just about every Army installastion in the US and overseas.

The MOSs in Career Management Field 98, with brief descriptions, are:

- Electronic Warfare/Signal Intelligence Emitter Identifier/Locator (O5D) soldiers operate radio direction finding and advanced indentification systems. They intercept and acquire direction finding bearings on target transmitters and analyze maps or charts to establish probable locations of target transmitters. Training is at Fort Devens, Mass.
- Electronic Warfare/Signal Intelligence Morse Interceptor (O5H) soldiers perform detection, acquisition and exploitation of foreign communications using International Morse Code and simple printer systems. Training is at Fort Devens.
- Electronic Warfare/Signal Intelligence Non-Morse Interceptor (O5K) soldiers intercept, identify and record foreign radioteletype, facsimile and data communications transmission. Training is at Pensacola, Fla.
- Electronic Warfare/Signal Intelligence Analyst (98C) soldiers analyze and report on intercepted foreign communications including identifying crypto-system characteristics and simple systems. Training is at Goodfellow Air Force Base, Texas.
- Electronic Warfare/Signal Intelligence Voice Intercept Operator (98G) soldiers perform detection, acquisition and exploitation of foreign voice communications using foreign language systems. Training is at the Defense Language Institute in Monterrey, Calif., then at Goodfellow Air Force Base.
- Electronic Warfare/Signal Intelligence Noncommunications Interceptor (98J) soldiers operate noncommunications intercept, recording and analysis noncommunications signals. Training is at Fort Devens.

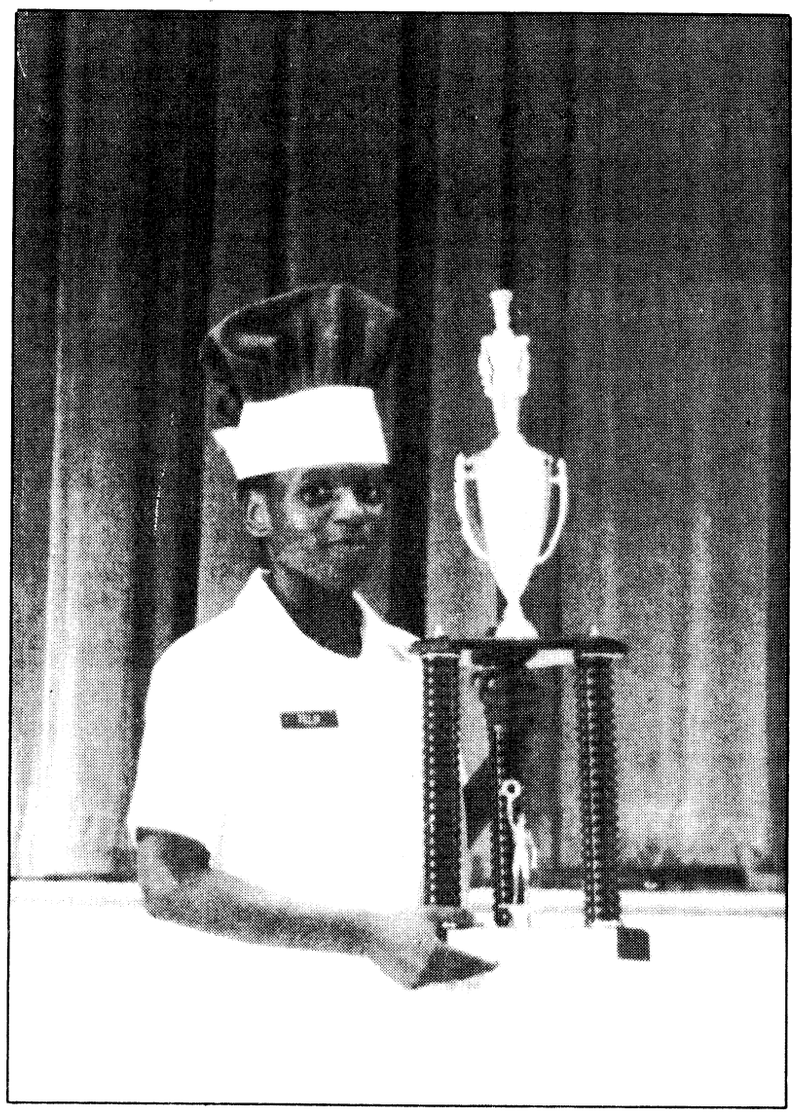
"To qualify for classification into one of these MOSs, you must be a high school graduate," Callahan said. "You also must have a standard test score of 100 or higher and must qualify for a top-secret special intelligence security clearance."

Interested soldiers who meet all the qualifications for CMF 98 should call the enlisted Military Intelligence Branch at MILPERCEN: autovon 221-0076/0141, commercial 202-325-0076/0141. Ask to speak to the professional development NCO for the military occupational specialty that interests you.

Brigade cook-off spotlights bicentennial

George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade

The 197th Infantry Brigade recently held a chef-of-the quarter competition. The participants were 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry; 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry; 197th Support Battalion; and Headquarters and Headquarters Company.



The theme of this cook-off was the bicentennial celebration as the cooks prepared different types of food consumed by Americans on July 4. Most of the tables were dressed with spare ribs, chicken, salads and many different types of cakes.

With the contestants representing their individual dining facility, the participants were judged on the appearance of the food and, of course, for taste.

The judges were composed of various commander's wives from throughout the brigade. The judging took nearly an hour but when the results were in, Headquarters and Headquarters Company edged out the other participants.

"It's so close to the fourth of July, so it wasn't hard for us to decide what to prepare," said Sgt. Michelle Troublefield of HHC, who was judged the overall winner. "All the cooks helped out, but I was chosen to represent the dining facility."

It's good to know that so many dining facilities are always striving to serve the best food. The soldiers who eat in the mess hall day after day know that their cooks are always striving to get better so one day they can be chef-of-the quarter.

George Mingee

Sgt. Michelle Troublefield of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, shows off the trophy she won in the chef-of-the-quarter competition.

Five facts you should know about depression

1. Depression is not a character flaw. It is nothing to be ashamed of.
2. Depression is very common. As many as one in twelve of us suffer from depression right now.
3. Depression often is not treated because many of its victims don't complain. But they may have severe symptoms—both physical and psychological.
4. Modern treatment can help. There is no reason to suffer in silence.
5. With the help of millions of people like you, we're working for more and better treatment for depression and other forms of mental illness.

ASK THE JUDGE

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: Back in February of this year I asked about this company that sent me information about a Kamasura Super 250 motorcycle. All I had to do was pay $397.48 shipping and insurance and they would send me the motorcycle as part of a marketing test. Well, I participated in the test and sent the money. I haven't gotten the motorcycle yet and it's been several months. I got my cancelled check back. I've written a letter to the company and tried to call them up dozens of times, but no luck. What's up? What can I do to get my motorcycle or money.

A; Well, we hate to say we told you so, but...earlier this year we told you not to get involved in this kind of scheme. The possibility of fraud was too great.

Based on many complaints received by people who got bilked, postal inspectors and other agents of the federal government recently seized all the available assets of one company in California that had been involved in this kind of scheme.

Two-thirds of the people who sent in money got nothing. The other one-third received what has been described as a 20" girl's bicycle with a tiny gas engine (similar to those used on model airplanes) with a tiny plastic gas tank.

The motor could propel the bike at walking speeds. We're going to reprint the article for the information of others. You need to call the Office of Postal Inspections in Atlanta.

Their phone number is (404) 765-7369 and their address is: Office of Postal Inspections, Box 16489, Atlanta 30381.

Here is that article from a February Bayonet:

Q: I recently received a letter, which explained to me that, as part of a consumer marketing program for a new make of motorcycle, I could receive a "Super 250" motorcycle with mag wheels and many other good features. All I've got to do is pay $397.48 for shipping and fill out a survey about the features after I've tested it. There was a phone number for me to call and I spoke for 10 minutes to a very kind man who explained all of the great features this motorcycle has. I'm convinced it's a good deal, but my wife won't let me send the check. Please explain to her that it's a good deal, because if I don't send a check by midnight tomorrow, they are going to get another guy to test it.

A: Your wife is probably looking out for your best interests. Many such letters are schemes, designed to bilk people out of their money. Is the address given that of a warehouse or factory, or is it a post office box or office suite. If it is one of the latter, consider what that means — maybe they don't have a warehouse. You might get a scale model motorcycle instead of a ridable one.

The man on the phone might have told you about many more features that the motorcycle has — its size, etc.

Besides making an appointment with legal assistance concerning such offers, you should call up the Better Business Bureau, who can tell you something of the status of the company, and any complaints that have been lodged against it.

If you feel that you have been mistreated by someone doing business in this area, you can file a complaint with the BBB. That doesn't mean you are gong to get satisfaction, but at least you have done something. The problem is that many such schemes are "boiler-room" operations that set up in one town for a month or two and leave after they've collected their money.

Fire

"If they hadn't used the garden hose prior to our arrival, the utility shed would more than likely have caught fire," said Lt. Monte M. Simonton of the Fort Benning Fire Department. "They did a good job and should be commended. People like them make our job easier."

"We just wanted to keep everthing wet untill the fire department came," said PV2 Sylvester. "We just wanted to keep the guy's house from catching fire."

The two men were able to contain the blaze untill the Fort Benning Fire Department arrived and the firemen extinguished it.

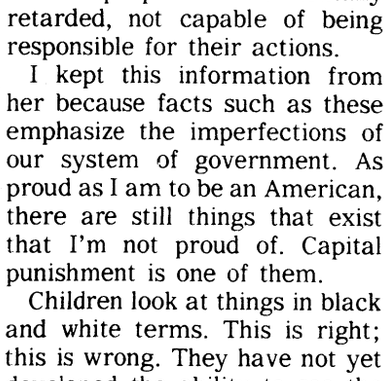
and Betsy Ross.

Nor did I mention the fact that for many years, white Southern juries routinely handed out stiffer penalties for blacks who requested a "jury of their peers."

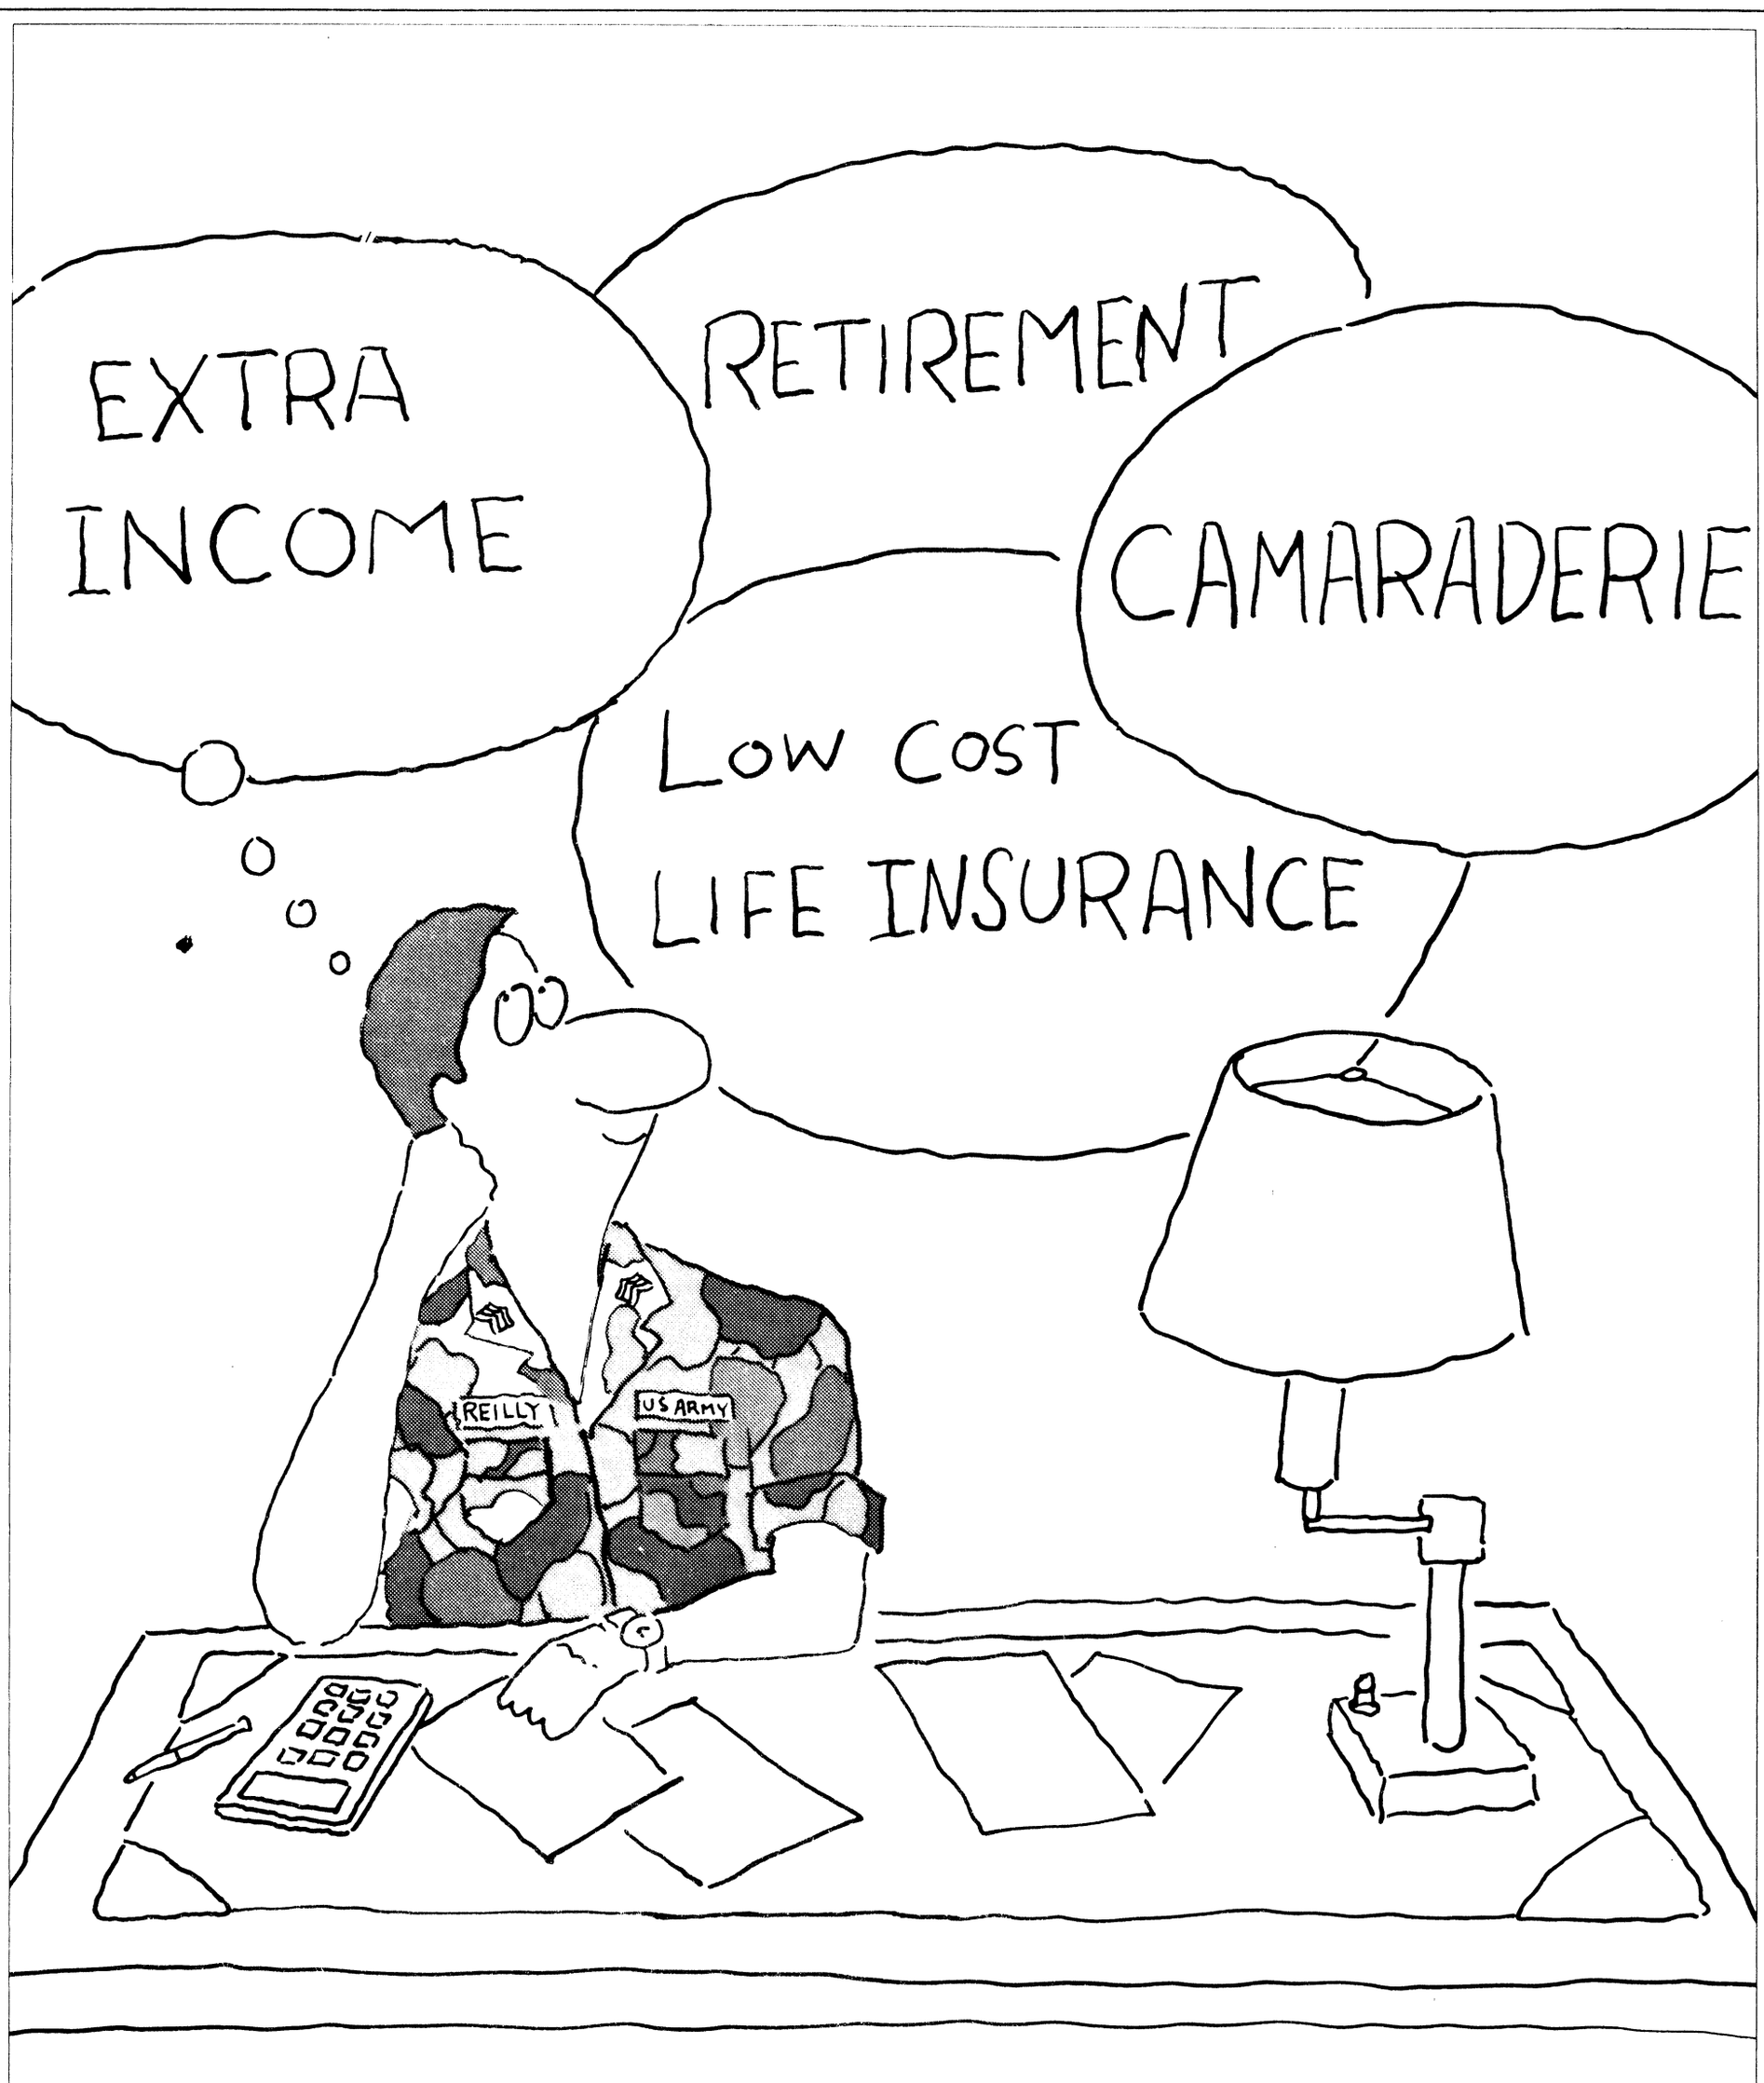
I didn't tell her that 81 people have been executed in this country since the U.S. Supreme Court reinstated capital punishment in 1976.

I did not tell her that we execute people who are mentally retarded, not capable of being responsible for their actions.



I kept this information from her because facts such as these emphasize the imperfections of our system of government. As proud as I am to be an American, there are still things that exist that I'm not proud of. Capital punishment is one of them.

Children look at things in black and white terms. This is right; this is wrong. They have not yet developed the ability to see the shades of gray that exist in between.



Or maybe I'm still rationalizing. Could it be my vision that is clouded?

There was one other thing that I didn't tell my daughter. I didn't tell her that executions scare me too.

GETTING OUT? YOUR ARMY BENEFITS CAN BE MORE THAN MEMORIES.

It's probably hard to say what you'll miss most about the Army if you've decided to return to civilian life. For some, it's the camaraderie. Others miss the travel and excitement. Still more miss those money-saving Army benefits.

Joining the Army Reserve can help you retain many things you like about the Army. Most important, it will help you keep some of those great benefits. Like your PX and commissary privileges. Space-available air travel. And low-cost life insurance.

The extra income you'll earn will come in handy, too. Right now, an E-5 with four years active duty earns over $125 for a single Reserve weekend. Add two weeks annual training pay, and you've got over $2,000 a year. Plus, you'll continue to qualify for retirement pay.

For more information call SGM Carl E. Pelt, MSG James M. Southern or SGM Curtis B. Haig Jr. at 545-4132, 544-4759 or 544-2062

ARMY RESERVE. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Keeping good soldiers in the Army is part of every leader's job. Whether you're an NCO or an officer, your leadership can have a powerful influence on your soldiers, especially in their decision to reenlist.

Nobody knows better than you that when soldiers are treated fairly, with respect, and with a true concern for their goals and accomplishments, they're more likely to find their Army experience a positive one. And more likely to want to continue that experience.

As you know, it takes a lot to develop a good soldier. Time, patience, and effort. But the end result is worth it. Not just for a proud soldier, or the Army, but as a credit to your ability as a leader.

Next time you stand in front of your troops, remember that they're not just in the Army, they are the Army. And they're yours to keep.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

THEY'RE YOURS TO KEEP.

CRIME WATCH

Provost Marshal's Office

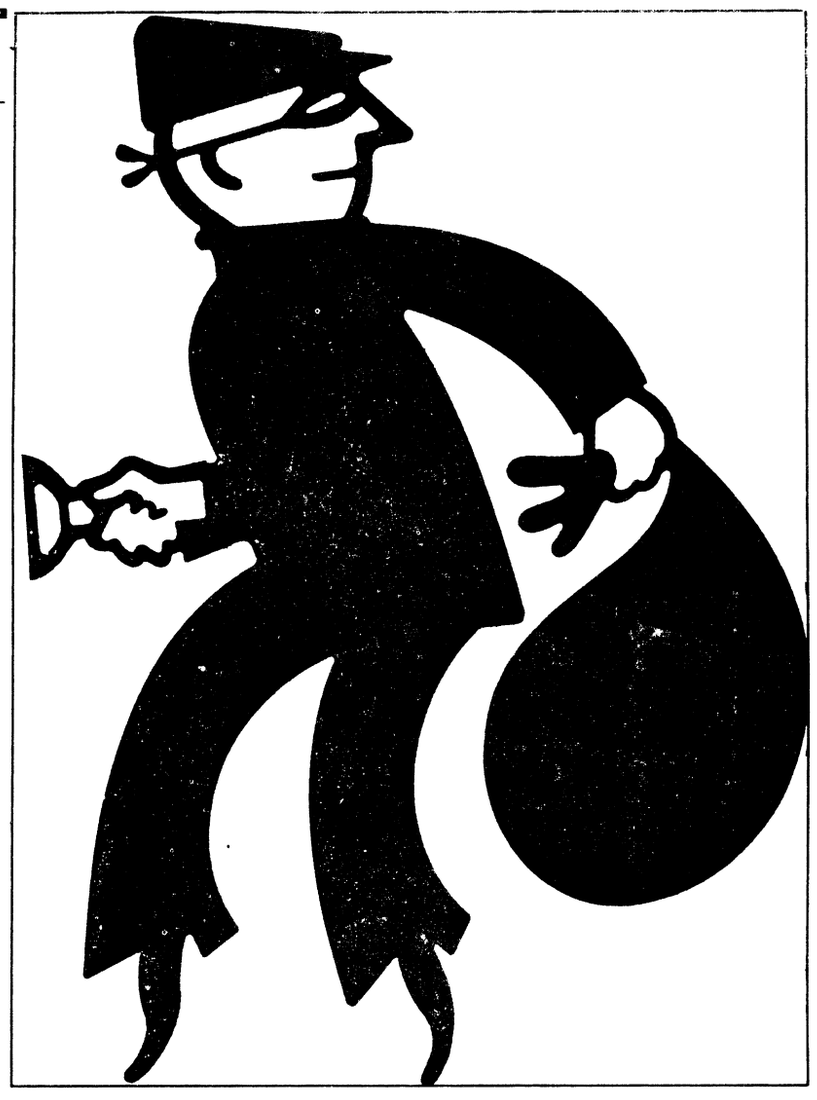
The following is a breakdown of crimes reported to the Fort Benning Military Police during June.

McGraw Manor had six larcenies of private property, one failure to control pet, three reports of dog bite, three aggravated assaults, two damages of private property, one domestic disturbance, three assaults and one curfew violation.

Custer Terrace had three larcenies of private property, one aggravated assault, four damages of private property, one assault, one wrongful possession/distribution of marijuana and one report of prowler.

Davis Hill/Bouton Heights had one larceny of private property, one failure to control pet, four damages of private property, one domestic disturbance and three damages of government property.

North Main Post had two larcenies of private property, one report of dog bite, one damage of private property, one domestic disturbance and one burglary.



South Main Post had two larcenies of private property, one domestic disturbance, one damage of government property, one housebreaking and one failure to obey order/regulation.

Indianhead Terrace had nine larcenies of private property, one aggravated assault, six damages of private property, one domestic disturbance, one assault, one curfew violation and four damages of government property.

Battle Park had one failure to control pet, one aggravated assault and one attempted robbery.

Upatoi Terrace had one disorderly conduct.

During the month of June, there were 10 reports of stolen bicycles from various locations on this installation (two 10-speeds and eight BMX-type bicycles). Commanders and sponsors should brief their personnel and dependents on the importance of registering their bicycles and marking them for future identification.

The party's over if you drink, drive

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

"Sure, 'he was' a little high... But he was the life of the party. He was.

The "fast lane," that strip of highway oiled with drugs and alcohol, may lead to the end of the road.

According to safety officials, we are about to enter the most dangerous period of the year.

"For the past two fiscal years, our fourth quarter fatal accident experience has been alarming," said Phyllis Taylor, a post safety specialist.

More than 55 percent of FY 86 fatalities occurred during July, August and September, while the fourth quarter of FY 85 accounted for 45 percent of the deaths.

While there were 20 fatalities in FY 85, nine of those occurred in the fourth quarter. In the last fiscal year, eight of the 14 fatalities were in the final quarter.

As we approach another quarter, there have already been four deaths.

"Though there is a downward trend in total fatalities," said Taylor, "we must not get complacent in the fourth quarter."

The fewest fatalities recorded since 1950, occurred in 1982, where six people died, all in traffic accidents.

"Although the types of accidents vary," said Taylor, "to include falls, drownings, and heat, the majority of the accidents occur in privately owned vehicles and involve alcohol."

The safety office emphasises that because most off duty accidents involve alcohol, individuals should exercise moderation in drinking, especially before boating, swimming, or operating a POV.

"On duty accidents usually occurred when the common standards set up to provide the greatest amount of safety were violated," said Fred Young, post safety manager.

"We want this to be an accident-free quarter," said Taylor, "one where there are no funeral services to attend, and no friends to console."

Official record briefs need updating as your career information changes

Military Personnel Center

Although Army officers are required by regulation to audit their officer record briefs once a year, they may need to update their ORBs more often than that to ensure good career management.

"Officers need to keep their ORBs current at all times," said Gerald E. Viator of MILPERCEN's Field Systems Integration Division. "Career managers constantly use ORBs to make decisions on assignments and schooling for officers, so they should always be complete and up-to-date.

"You should never put off an ORB audit until just before your records go before a board," he cautioned. "If you wait until then, your ORB may not get updated in time, and board members might miss some important information about you."

While Department of the Army selection boards rely primarily on an officer's overall Official Military Personnel File, board members use the ORB as a summary document. The information on the Officer Record Brief comes from the officer Master File, but officers are responsible for ensuring the accuracy of their own ORBs.

To help officers ensure that accuracy, AR 640-2-1 requires that they review their ORBs in their birth months. MILPERCEN sends officers copies of their ORBs in the month before their birth months, followed during the next year by two more copies.

The copy intended for audit during the birth month is marked AUDIT at the top. The next copy comes four months later and another one arrives four months after that. Both of these ORBs are marked "feedback."

"Because of processing time, your first feedback ORB may not have all the changes you requested," Viator said. "You should wait to review your second feedback ORB, unless your records are going before a board, before you submit changes that were not accepted after your annual audit."

Officers should work with their personnel service centers to correct or update their Officer Record Briefs. Personnel service center staff members review changes and submit them to the Officer Master File. They can do this through the automated Standard Installation/Division Personnel System (SIDPERS), or by sending a correction letter to MILPERCEN for input by officer career branch managers.

"If you don't receive an audit ORB in your birth month, you should ask your personnel service center to request one. You should also go through your PSC if you need to check your ORB at any other time," Viator explained.

"Whether you're doing your annual audit or updating your ORB for a selection board," Viator said, "All information needs to be as complete and accurate as possible. You are responsible for what's on your Officer Record Brief. It's your career that could be affected if the data is wrong or out-of-date."

Officers should use DA Pam 640-1, Officer's Guide to the Officer Record Brief, dated April 1, 1987, when reviewing their ORBs. This pamphlet explains each ORB data element and so will answer most questions about the ORB.

Copies of this pamphlet have been distributed throughout the Army. Units can get more copies through normal distribution channels.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Provost Marshal's Office

The Military Police here on Fort Benning are giving shoplifters all kinds of special treatment — none of it very pleasant. Police escorts, fingerprints, and even a phone call home so their parents can get involved, and if the shoplifter is a soldier, a phone call will be made to their assigned company at no expense.

So, why all the fuss? Maybe you didn't realize that shoplifting nationally amounts to losses of $20 million dollars a day. In fact, shoplifting is the single largest monetary crime in our state and nation. Over 10,000 shoplifters are caught each year in AAFES facilities located on military installations.

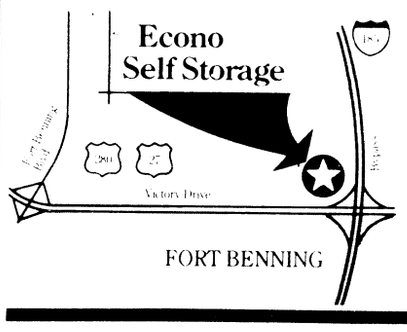
If these figures don't concern you, look at it this way. Shoplifting takes away profits from business that pay taxes to support employees and their families. These merchants will have to raise prices to you, the consumer, in order to cover store losses and increased cost of security.

The majority of shoplifting incidents on post involve active duty military personnel. Without a doubt, this is an excellent way to ruin your future. Military shoplifters found guilty by a court-martial can receive a bad conduct discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, and up to six months confinement at hard labor.

The next largest group of shoplifters are military dependents. They are also prosecuted. They may receive six months in jail and a $100 fine, in addition to losing their PX privileges. Juveniles who found shoplifting are processed and prosecuted by the juvenile court system in Columbus. Juveniles 17 and older will generally be prosecuted as adults.

Let's face it, shoplifting can be the beginning of a lifetime of trouble, personal embarrassment, broken dreams, and missed opportunities. If you think of it as a cheap thrill, you'd better think again. It's your decision — and it's you who will have to suffer the consequences.

For more information on shoplifting, contact the Crime Prevention Office at 545-7115, and help take a bite out of crime.



You're never too old to quit blowing smoke.

Arts & Crafts:

Centers celebrate 45 years, of providing creative outlet

Arts & Crafts Center

This year the Arts and Crafts Center is celebrating its 45th year of service in the military. The Crafts center provides relaxing leisure-time activities that encourage creative self-expression and cultural enrichment.

Every commander is responsible for the well-being of his men. To assist the commanders in the discharge of this responsibility, community recreation division assists the commander in the organization and operation of a comprehensive recreation program. One of the activities is the Arts and Crafts Center.

The most important psychological benefit obtained from recreation is relaxation. The rigors of military training and the strain of everyday life can lead to an unhappy, unproductive soldier. The Arts and Crafts Center provides an essential source of relaxation for the military person.

The Arts and Crafts Cenrter provides activities, programs and services that help in the development of mission-related skills, improves the quality of life within the military community and serves the need of the troops in social, cultural, recreational and educational awareness.

The core of the crafts program is its multiple-national and multiple-cultural participant; it's balance of activities where anyone can pursue arts and crafts and find the answer to their search has brought new meaning to the arts and crafts program. In its centralized facility, the program can expand or contract to meet the changing needs of Army personnel and thei families.

The arts and crafts facilities are available to the military and his family five days a week and available at other-than-normal operating hours on request. The activities included are open-shop, self-help maintenance, individual instruction, regularly-scheduled classes, community involvement and cultural enrichment.

The arts and crafts program had its inception on Jan. 15, 1942. It was established by the War Department under the title "Interior Design and Soldier Art Group." Its mission, while intended for increased morale, was directed toward enhancement of buildings and grounds. Many artists were assigned to paint murals, decorate dayrooms and landscape grounds. For each artist at work, there were a thousand troops who watched.

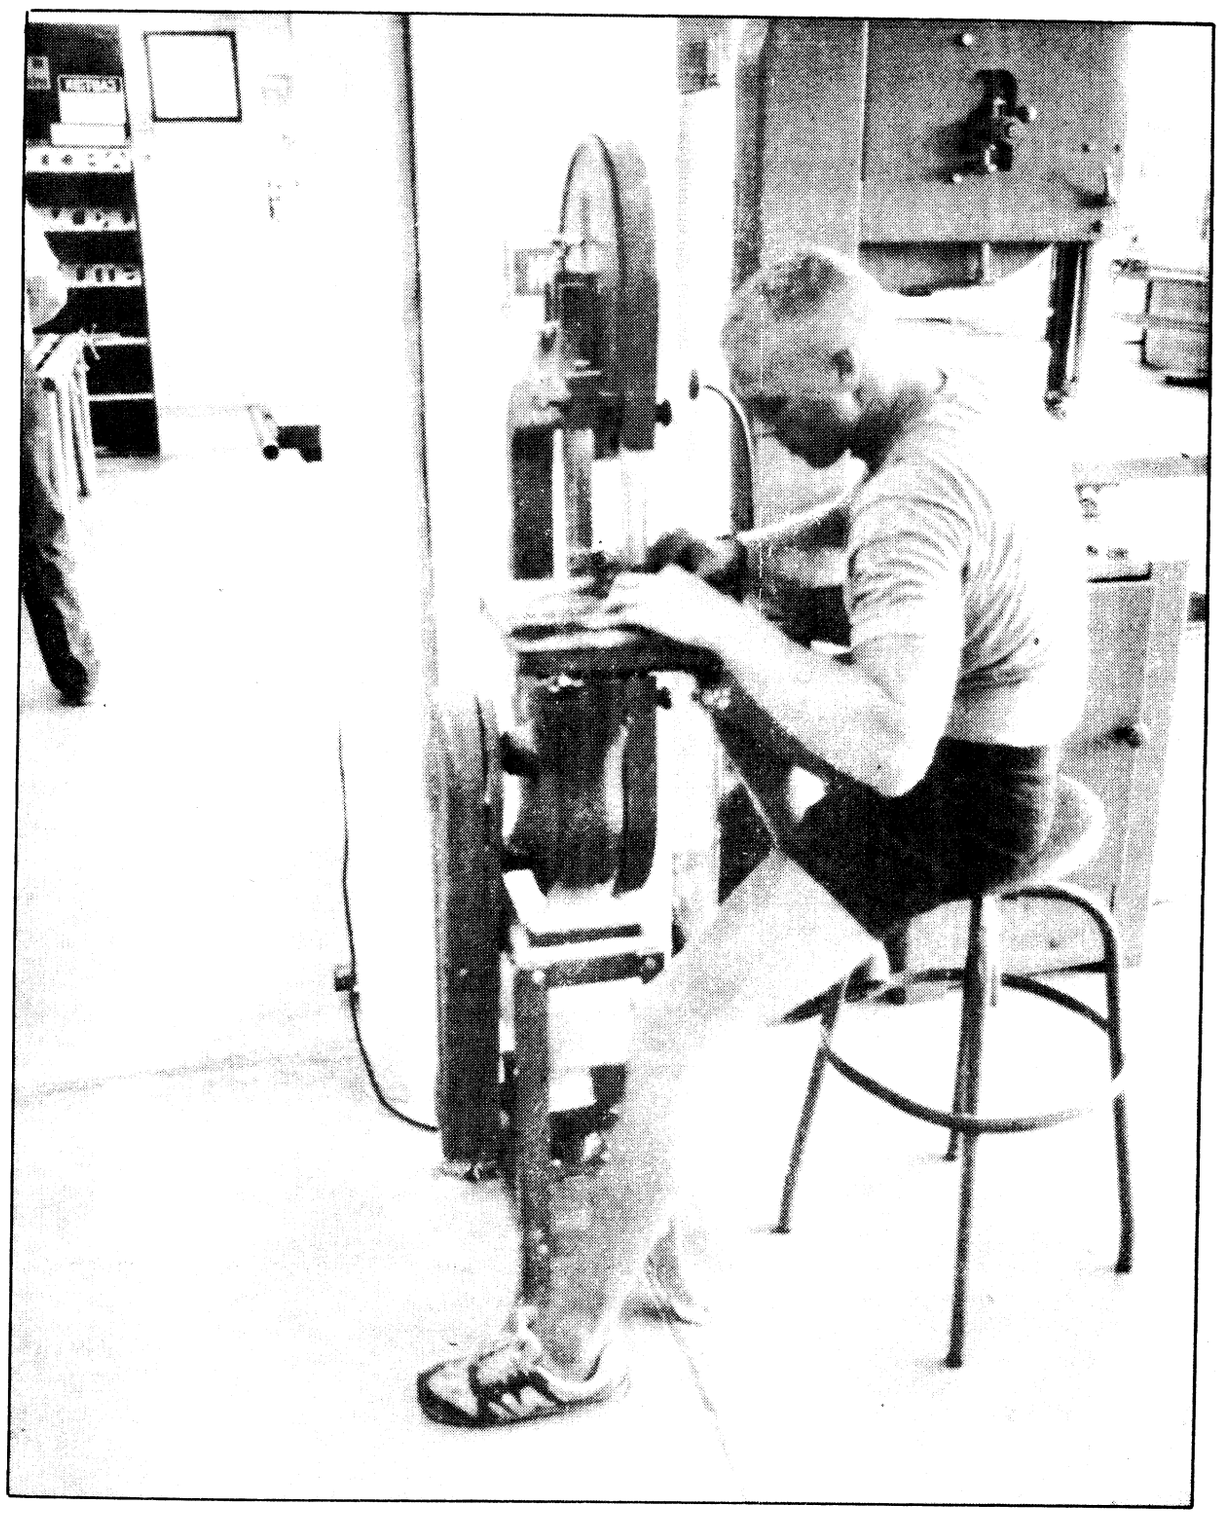
Arrangements were made to conduct classes in drawing, painting, sculpture and photography. The success of these classes was immediate and demands arose for larger working space and more instructors. By 1944, this initial program was redesignated as "Arts and Crafts Section of Special Services" with broadened mission to fulfill the natural human desire to create, provide opportunities for self-expression, serve old skills and develop new ones and assist the entire recreation program through construction work, publicity and decoration.

At first the program was conducted primarily in the United States. Soon, with the large consignments of troops overseas handicrafts packages were designed and approximately half a million of these packages were distributed throughout the Army.

In 1945 the name was changed to "Handicrafts Branch." To implement this emphasis, a technical manual, "Soldier Handicrafts," was published by the War Department. Due to the interest shown in crafts, the National Gallery of Art in Washington opened its facilities for exhibition of soldier art and photography which was submitted in the first National Army Art Contest in 1945.

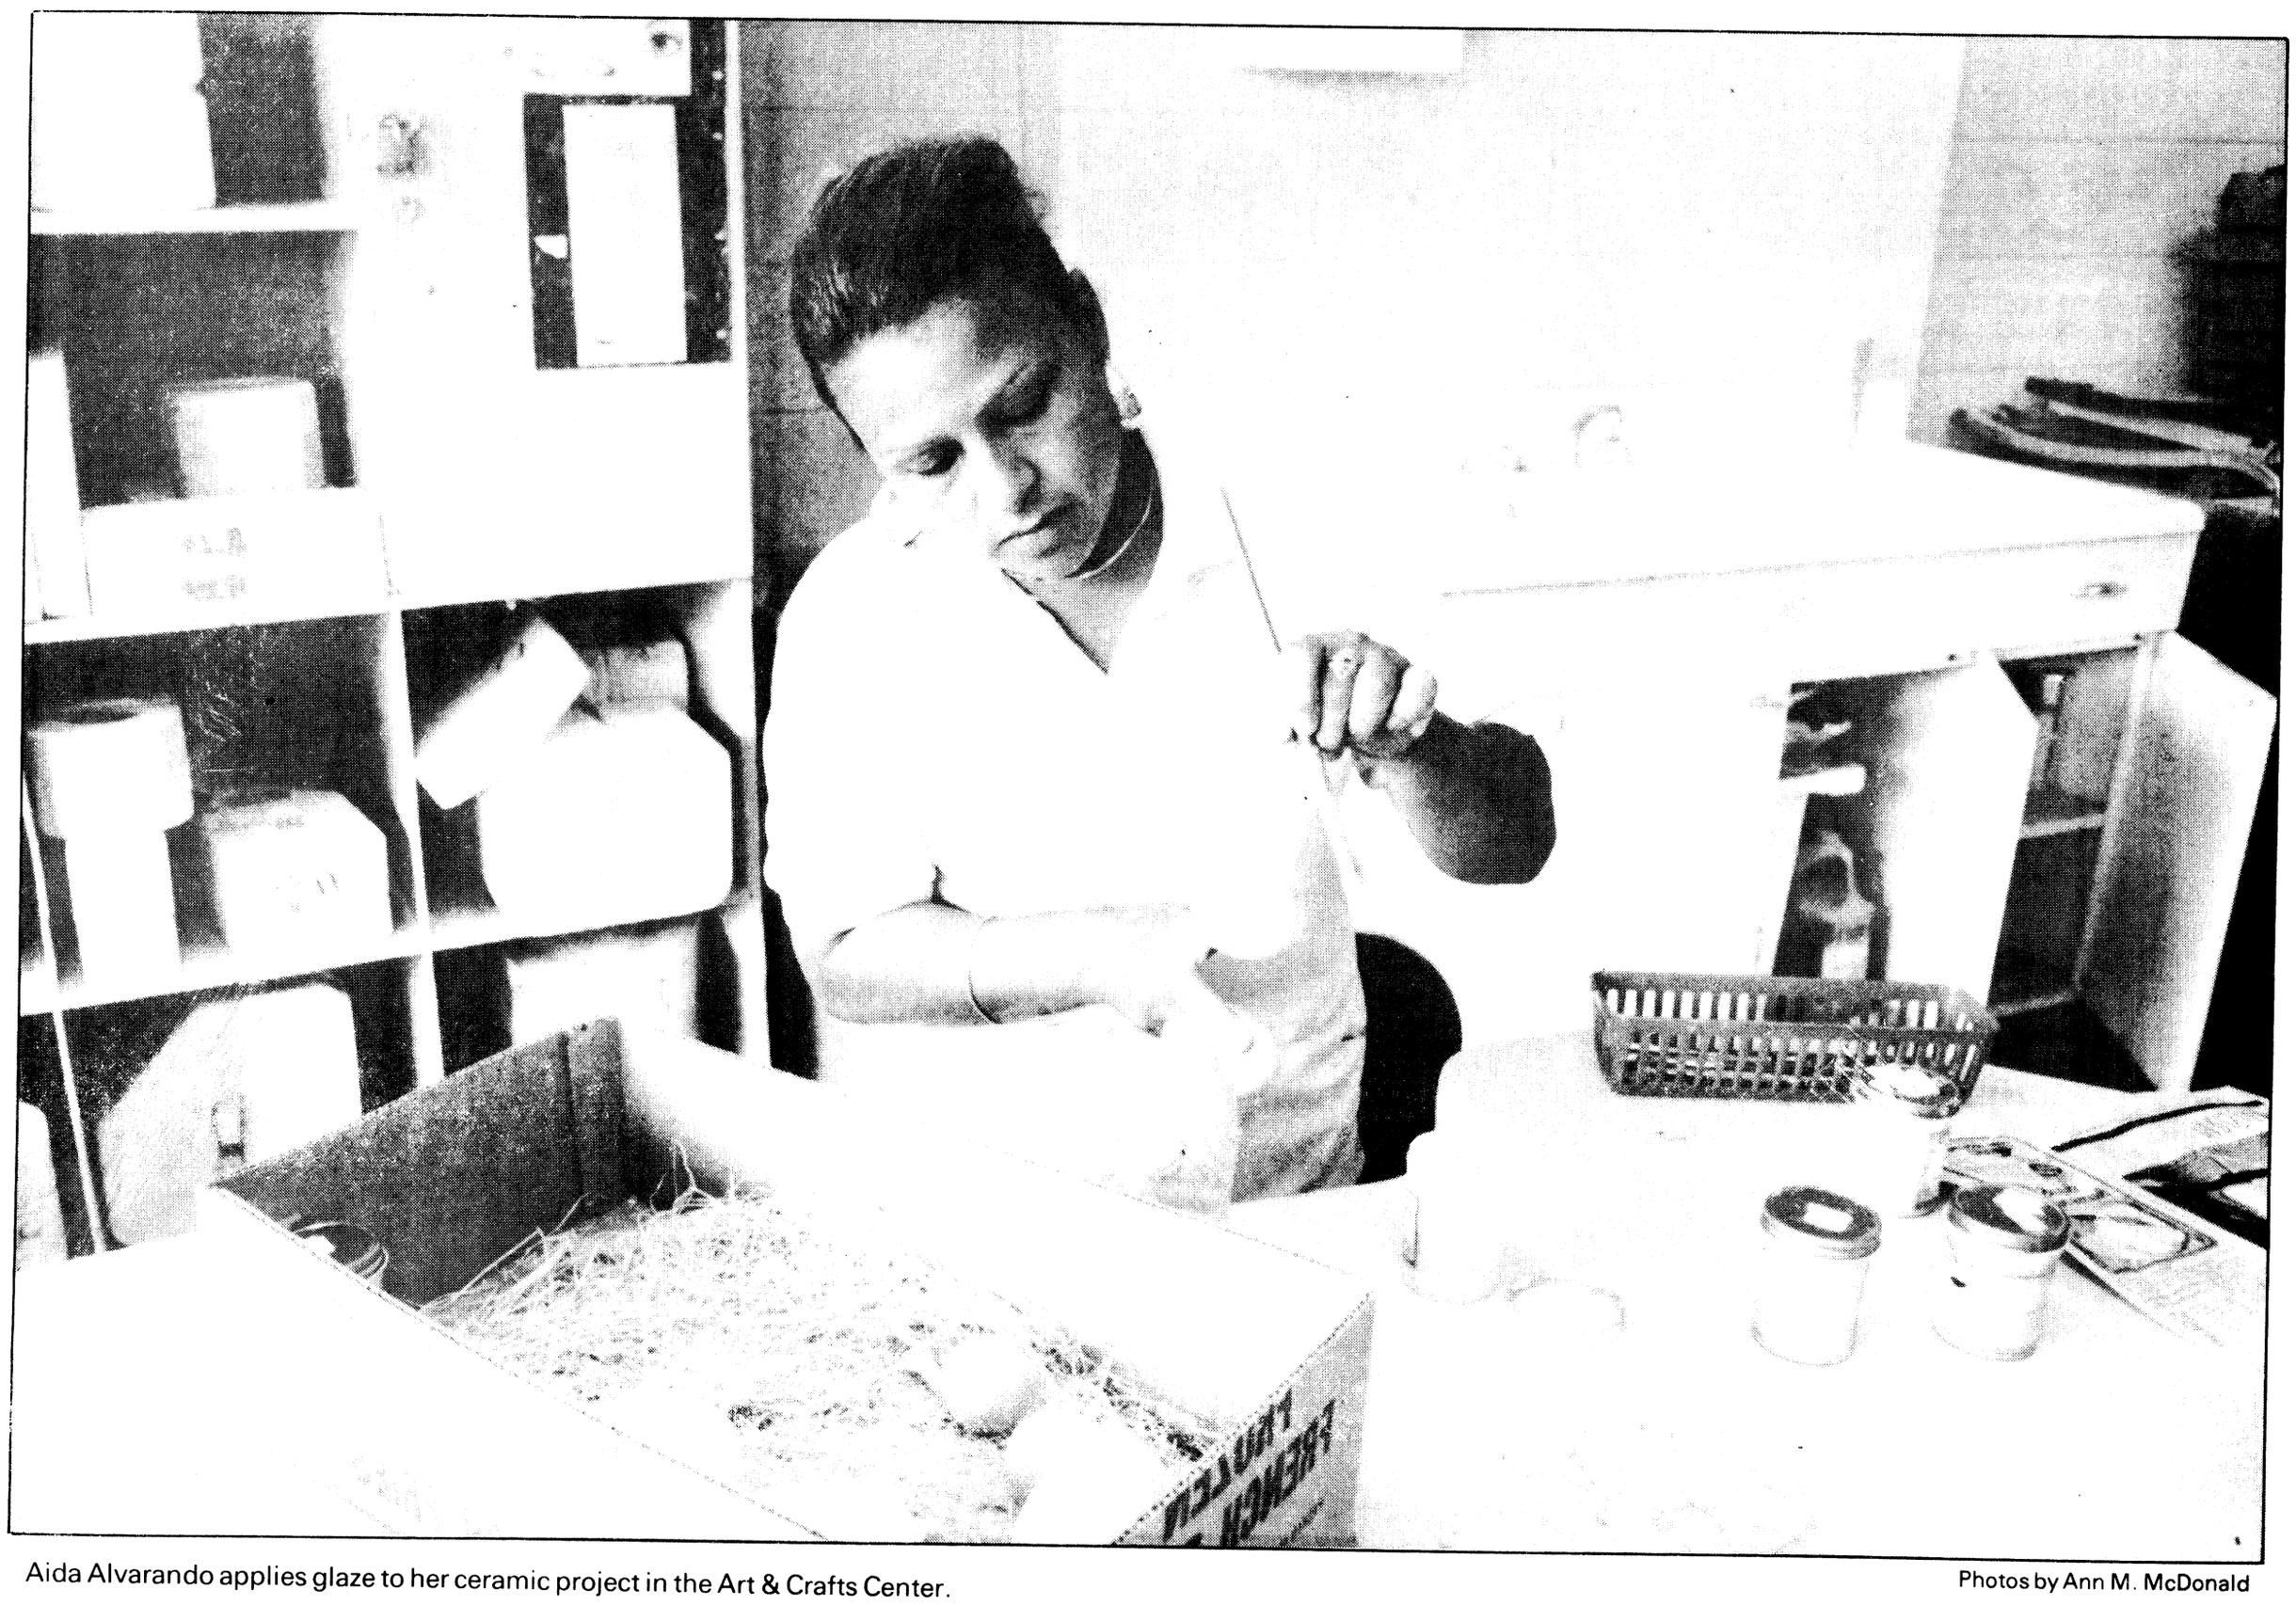
In 1946, the name was again changed. Under the name "Manual Arts" many local artists and craftsmen in Germany, France, Japan and Okinawa were employed to operate the facilities and instruct in a variety of arts and crafts.

In 1948, the title, "Hobby Shops" was adopted, but in 1951, due to the impact and growth, the formal designation "The Army Crafts Program" was enacted and the program was recognized as an essential Army recreation.



The Arts and Crafts Program is composed of seven arts and crafts. Benefits derived from the seven arts and crafts are directly related to military skills and to the general education development of Army personnel. The following statements are examples of these correlations:

A. Clay, minerals and stones, which are part of man's environment are transformed through the techniques of pottery, ceramics and lapidary to objects, both utilitarian and decorative. Interest in the character and sources of these materials lead to greater awareness and knowledge of terrain so essential in Army training and encourages further study and research important to military careers.



B. Painting and drawing develop powers of observation and coordination of eye, mind and hand required for artillery, infantry and all forms of marksmanship. These skills are important in the preparation of training aids, plotting charts and diagrams and designing equipment.

C. General handicrafts gives the individual soldier the opportu-

Special attention, care required when filing medical claims

American Forces Press Service

People eligible for the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Veterans Administraion need to take a little extra care when filing claims.

The form used is the same as for CHAMPUS, the yellow Claim Form 500. But special attention needs to be paid to Blocks 8 and 11. If these blocks are not fille out correctly, the claim will be rejected and sent back to the patient or sponsor, causing an unnecessary delay in the processing of the claim.

In Block 8, write or type in whatever number appears on your sponsor's CHAMPVA CARD. It may be his or her Social Security number or a different number, depending on how the file was originally set up by the VA.

In Block 11, be sure to check the small "VA" box.

Otherwise, fill out the form as you normally would when seeking cost-sharing of medical care from either CHAMPUS or the Veterans Administration.

CHAMPVA claims must be sent to the same claims processors who handle CHAMPUS claims. When you complete your CHAMPVA claim form, send it to the CHAMPUS processor for the state where you received the care, regardless of where you live.

The following persons are covered by CHAMPVA, as long as they are not eligible for Medicare (Part A):

■ The spouse or child of a veteran who has a total disability, permanent in nature, resulting from a service-connected disability; and

■ The surviving spouse or child of a veteran who died as a result of a service-connected disability or who at the time of death had a total disability, permanent in nature, resulting from a service-connected disability.

Through CHAMPVA, the Veterans Administration helps pay for medical services and supplies obtained from civilian sources. The benefits are the same as those under CHAMPUS except for the following:

■ You don't need a non-availability statement; and

■ You are not eligible for the Program for the Handicapped.

For more information on CHAMPVA, write:
CHAMPVA Registration Center
Veterans Administration Medical Center

nity to work with and learn the properties of a variety of materials such as leather, plastics and natural or synthetic fibers. Similar analytical techniques and processes are also learned in automotive and electronic repair work. These techniques of acquiring knowledge are indispensable in developing work performance methods in any job or position to which the individual soldier is assigned.

D. Jewelry and art metalwork require small tools and minute detailed operations demanding patience and concentration, which are requisites for the dentist, the surgeon, the rifle repairman and the mechanic whether auto, aviation or missile.

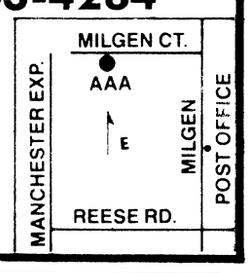
E. Model building and display require the development of engineering skills transferable to many military assignments, especially in missiles, construction and training.

F. Photography is basic to a communications job, but has additional merit in developing precise laboratory techniques required by chemical corps.

G. Woodworking skill qualifies men for both the Engineer Corps and the Quartermaster. A practical knowledge of hand tools is mandatory to troops in isolated areas.

The process of creating objects from start to finish affords a genuine sense of satisfaction, provides the opportunity to make choices, to experiment and to overcome failure making it possible to be resourceful. It challenges a person to better the product, improve skills, increase knowledge and appreciation of other people's efforts. These psychological benefits, while intangible, contribute directly to efficiency and morale.

The arts and crafts program is directed toward the recreational, vocational and educational needs of the military community. These activities are intended to stimulate new interests and to increase comprehension in fine arts, in crafts and in industrial arts.



The ultimate goal of the arts and crafts program is to expand the quality and nature of activities and services to provide maximum opportunities and growth, thus to contribute to the personal and group morale.

The objectives are to —

- Assist commanders in maintaining morale, esprit, mental and physical fitness and combat readiness.
- Support Total Army Goals by improving the quality of life for soldiers and their families.
- Offer opportunities for self-fulfillment, skill development, social activity and leisure-time enjoyment.
- Provide services and activities for the military community which are equal or better than those in comparable civilian communities.
- Create an environment in which CRD leisure pursuits are both attractive and inviting.
- Offer diversions from the rigors of military training and stresses of daily living.
- Contribute to a vital, self-sustaining military community.

The Arts and Crafts center also operates two automotive crafts shops and a car wash for the convenience of military personnel. One automotive crafts shop is on Kelley Hill, the other is on Main Post. The car wash is also on main with another one being constructed near the Main Post exchange.

The automotive crafts shops are fully equipped to do anything from oil change to a complete overhaul. There is a sum computer engine analyzer to assist the patron in doing a professional job on their car. There is also a spray paint booth at both automotive shops. There are trained instructors available for assistance at all times. Classes are given in all phases of the crafts program on an on-going basis, both automotive and arts and crafts.

THE PRESIDENT DOESN'T TAKE AN OATH TO DEFEND THE AMERICAN FLAG OR THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

The President takes an oath to defend something even more important than a majestic symbol of our country.

The President takes an oath to defend the Constitution of the United States. A document that has been described as the greatest leap forward for freedom in human history. A document that is the foundation of our country. And the means by which we achieve the rule of law and protect our freedom.

As we commemorate the Bicentennial of the Constitution, there is no better way for you as an American to reaffirm the principles for which our country stands than to learn more about the Constitution.

Award honors those who give beyond the call of duty

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

A ribbon of blue silk, lighted by 13 stars, representing the original colonies, supports the soaring spread-winged eagle which watches over a bronze emblem, wreathed in green enamel.

Within a two-inch space, on the tab of the emblem, is a word larger than the destruction caused by all wars, past and future; but it is also a word distintive enough to represent only a chosen few...those who have gone beyond the call of duty in "honor and valor."

Those who possess this symbol of honor and valor, hold the highest military award for bravery given in the United States, The Congressional Medal of Honor, and will celebrate its birthday Sunday.

It's birth dates back to 1862, though the idea was conceived much earlier, to recognize those who served with special valor in building this nation.

Previously, soldiers had been recognized with various awards presented to them by individuals.

George Washington saw the need to honor those especially brave soldiers as early as the American Revolution in 1782, from which originated the Purple Heart.

The first decoration formally authorized by the American government to be worn as a "badge of honor" was the Navy Medal, established for enlisted men.

A 1862 draft outlined by Senator Henry Wilson, Mass. provided for the "Medals of Honor," for all enlisted men and voluntary forces, "distinguishing themselves by their gallantry in action..."

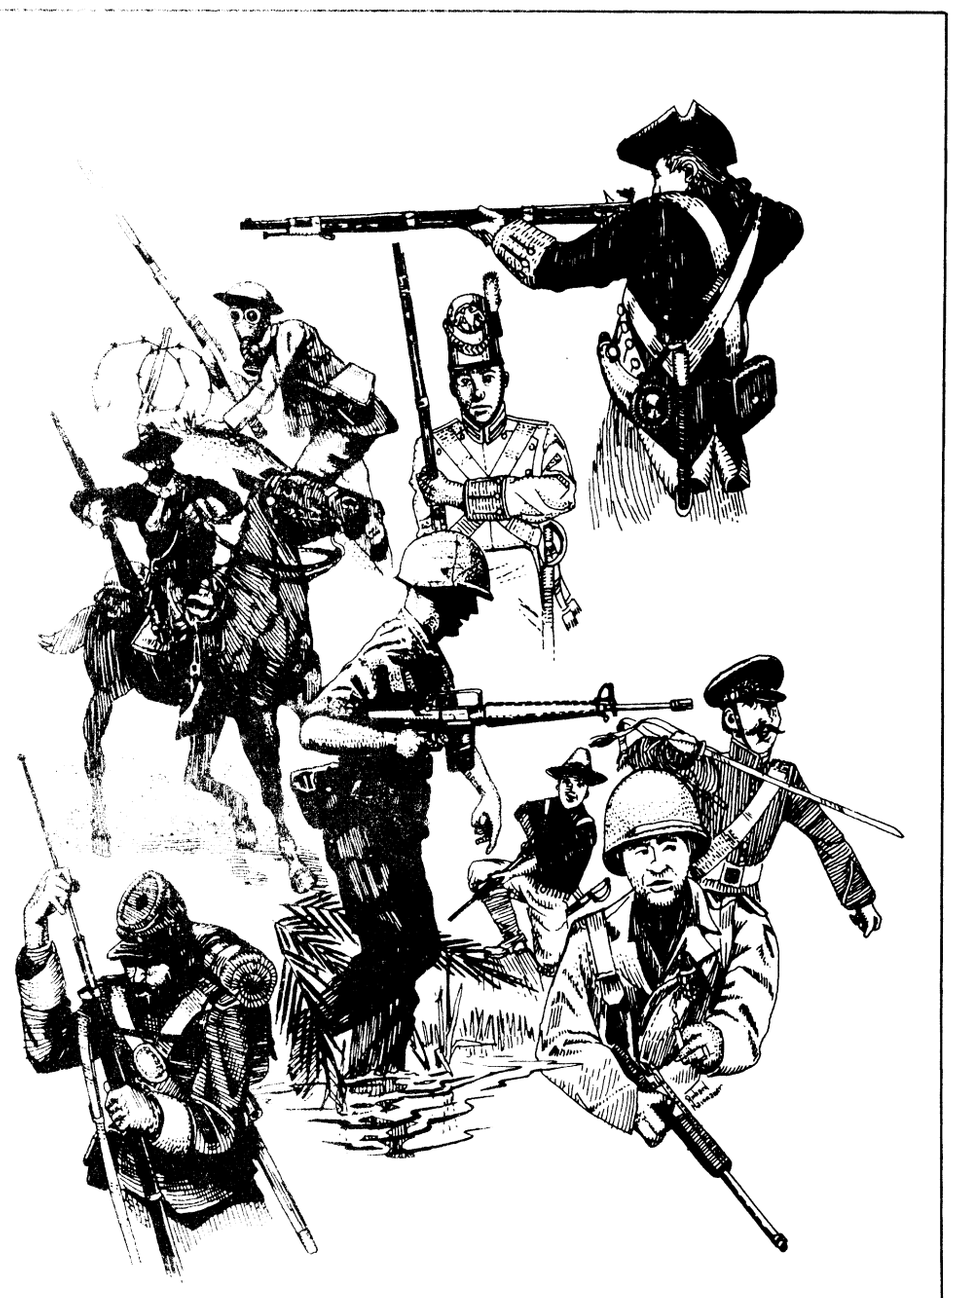
One such gallant soldier, Maj. (retired) Freeman Horner, is a area resident.

Horner, of Columbus, received the Medal of Honor for extraordinary courage in Wurselen Germany, November 16, 1944.

Horner's citation sites the courage that he displayed on that day in critical combat conditions.

As machine gun fire pinned Horner and his unit, Company K, 119th Infantry, 30th Infantry Division, on the flat, open terrain, 100 yards from their objective, and artillery fire came upon them, causing serious casualties, Horner made the decision to take action.

"Horner stood up with his sub machinegun and rushed into the teeth of concentrated fire. After knocking out one machinegun position, Horner charged two positions 50 yards away, forcing the enemy to abandon their guns and take cover in the cellar of the house they occupied, where he then burst in and hurled two grenades down the cellar stairs, calling for a surrender.



"By his extraordinary courage, Horner destroyed three enemy machinegun positions, and captured four enemies, clearing the path for his company's successful assault on Wurselen."

There are thousands of others listed among the elite who have displayed the special courage, qualifing them to wear the highest "badge of honor."

While the original resolution, which President Lincoln signed into law on July 17, 1862, provided recognition for just the enlisted soldier and Volunteer Forces, an amendment on March 3, 1863, extended the provisions to include officers as well as enlisted men, and also made the provisions retroactive to the beginning of the Civil War.

Dedicated individuals and families from campaigns as early as the Civil War, proudly hold the bronze emblem, enscribed with a story of the "Valor" which demonstrates the heart, will, and soul of a people, whose country's honor could not be tarnished.

"The estimate and valor of a man consists in the heart and in the will; there his true honor lies. Valor is stability, not of arms and legs, but of courage and the soul... He that falls obstinate in his courage, if his legs fail him, fights upon his knees."
— Michael E. Montaigne

Vietnam medal available for public purchase

American Forces Press Service

A Vietnam Veterans National Medal is now available to the general public from the U.S. Mint.

The bronze medal, issued in 3-inch and 1 ½-inch sizes, honors the courage and dedication of the men and women in the U.S. armed forces who served in the Vietnam conflict.

The medals can be purchased over the counter at four locations in the United States or by mail from the U.S. Mint in Philadelphia.

The smaller medal cost $2 ($2.25 by mail) and the larger one is $15 ($16 by mail).

Send a money order or check made payable to the U.S. Mint.

The design chosen for the obverse (front) side was submitted by Army Cpl. Terrill K. Tritch, stationed at Fort Campbell, Ky. His design depicts U.S. combat troops engaged in a helicopter assault operation.

The reverse design was submitted by Jim Peed, a visual information specialist with the U.S. Mint. His design features the phrase, "In honor of those men and women who gave of themselves in an effort to ensure demoracy and peace throughout the world this medal is struck by act of Congress 1984." An eagle with American flags and the U.S. Capitol in the background is in the lower part of the design.

The Volunteer Resource Center is a clearing house of information for 24 organizations on the installation involving volunteers. If you are looking for ways to gain experience for possible paid employment or just want to keep your skills current stop by the Volunteer Resource Center and find out about the following positions.

Library - Just the thing for the person who likes to spend time in the library. You will shelve books, put up newspapers and assist in mending those books that are tattered.

Clerk-typist - Army Community Service has a need for three volunteers to work in the Army Emergency Relief office. Typing is a must with accuracy more important than speed; filing, answering phones, distributing messages, referring individuals to the right person are all part of the responsibilities.

Budget Counseling Committee Chairperson - If you have management and training abilities this might be the position for you. ACS needs one person to fill this job. Responsibilities include attending monthly board meetings, acting as a liaison between committee and Volunteer Supervisor, assures training for all personnel, supervises records, prepares articles concerning budget counseling for media release.

Receptionist - Red Cross needs volunteers for answering phones and to do general office work. Typing is helpful.

Administrative Assistant - If you have clerical ability and experience this might be for you. Assisting the Budget Chairperson and Counselors with the administrative areas of budget counseling are the main objectives. Typing is amust.

Budget Counselor - Are you a good listener? Are you aware of good budget practices and consumer affairs? Is arithmetic (basic) one of your strong suits? This position helps the service member to improve his/her credit, reliability and reputation and reduce levels of indebtedness.

Information Specialist - ACS needs several volunteers in this area where you will assist the Provost Marshal Office in providing information and giving directions to visitors stopping at the Information Center. A great way to meet people.

Assistant - The Learning Abilities Center is in need of someone who can work with children who have learning disabilities, very rewarding.

Loan Closet Chairperson - Management and Training abilities and a working knowledge of the English language is helpful for this position at ACS.

Publicity Chairperson - If you are able to coordinate publicity with groups and media and have an interest in news and reporting ACS can help you. Typing is helpful but not required.

Typist - If you are looking for a way to fine-tune your typing skills this position will help. Objective is to provide neat, error free typing.

Veterinary Clinic - Needs receptionist who will file, make appointments and fill out patient records. This falls under the Red Cross.

Receptionist - If you possess a clear, concise telephone voice, good penmanship, have a pleasant personality and like dealing with people you will find this job quite exciting and rewarding. ACS has five to 10 openings in this field.

Child care is provided at Tot Town or with Home Child Care Givers. Now is the time to take advantage of what is offered while the children are being cared for by professionals. For more information, please contact 545-5602/5931 or stop by DPCA, Building 241, room 210.

OFF DUTY

CA

Officer's Club — The Ft. Benning Officers' Club is proud to announce the addition of our long-awaited executive chef. Peter McGrath was formerly an executive gourmet chef with Blau's Goetchius House, one of the most popular restaurants in Columbus, and the Hamilton House, national chain gourmet restaurant in Atlanta.

The selection of chef for our club has taken almost a year as we wanted to canvass the country and get the best chef available who would be interested in the position. McGrath has impressive credentials, having established a superb reputation with other first-class restaurants. You are cordially invited to sample his epicurean delights today from 4:30 to 8:30 a.m. in the Ballroom. A wine tasting will also be provided for the occasion.

B.B.Q. Mongolian Style - you choose the meats, vegetables and seasonings and give to the broilerman for cooking. This is a "by the ounce" buffet (price based on weight of food). Mongolian soup, rice, rolls, butter, coffee and tea provided at no extra cost. We hope to see you at the Supper Club July 17 from 6 to 8:30 p.m. The Lexington Room will be closed for this event.

The Officers' Club — provides afternoon of entertainment for our children. "Saturday Afternoon Delight" is planned for your children July 18. In addition to our regular matinee, a free group tennis lesson will be offered.

Afterwards your children can enjoy a cool refreshing dip in the pool. Time is from 12 to 6 p.m. The pool is open until 6 p.m. Children under the age of 10 must be accompanied by an adult when attending "FLICKS" or when swimming in the pool.

BEACH PARTY — "Where the boys and girsl are" July 18 from 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. The lower pool will be open until midnight in conjunction with our regular I-Bar Disco (playing your favorite beach music) so that you can enjoy the best of both worlds and take a refreshing swim to cool off after dancing. Wear your bathing suit and don't forget to bring along a towel. Note: Swimwear optional but required for entry into the pool.

Follow Me Golf Course — A beginners golf clinic will be held July 14-17 at 10 a.m. The cost of this clinic is $17. For more information contact the Pro Shop at 687-1940.

NCO Club — Family night specials at the Main NCO Club offers excellent food at affordable prices. Bring the family to dinner at the Main NCO Club every Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights from 6 to 9 p.m. at the cost of $3.95 for adults and $2.50 for children under 12. Two-for-one steak is offered every Friday night for $7.95 and ham steak is the entree every Saturday night at $4.50 for adults and $2.50 for children under 12.

Bring your boss to Bosses' night at the Main NCo Club July 17 from 5 to 7 p.m. This event promises to be the biggest and best with more food and food lines set up for your convenience. Club cards are required. Avoid the rush and get your card early.

Club cards cost only one dollar and offer numerous privileges as follows: check cashing, free snacks every Wednesday and Friday evenings, free use of the four new tennis courts, also reduced price on entertainment charge.

Marksmanship unit wins big in U.S. championship

Tommy Pool
USAMU PAO

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit captured a total of 7 individual and 5 national team titles during the annual U.S. Shooting Championships held from Jun 23 - Jul 3.

This year's matches were held in Prado Dam, CA, site of the 1984 Olympic shooting events and included more than 400 of the top civilian and military competitors in the United States.

The championships were fired in each of the international shooting disciplines for both men, women and junior competitors in smallbore rifle, pistol, shotgun and running target events.

Individual winners from USAMU included MSgt. Erich Buljung with two pistol titles, SSgt. Matthew Dryke winning a record eighth national Skeet title, Capt. John McNally in Rapid Fire pistol, 1stLt. Denise Morrison in Women's Trap, Sp4 Troy Lawton in Running Target and SSgt. Rjelio Arrendondon in Center Fire pistol.

In the pistol events, USAMU competitors won four out of the five open championships with MSgt Buljung winning both the 50 Meter Free Pistol and 10 Meter Air Pistol matches.

Buljung scored 1,202 points in the two-day championship to defeat ARmy reservist, Donald Nygord, by four points. Buljung also won the Air Pistol Championship by one point over civilian competitor, R. Appleton, with a total of 1,152 points.

In the Rapid Fire pistol event, Capt. John McNally and SSgt. Rojelio Arredondo placed first and second in the championship, while USAMU team member, MSgt. Joe Steed finished in sixth position.

The USAMU trio of McNally, Arredondo and Steed also combined their scores to win the rapid fire national team championship. Their total of 1,764 out of 1,800 was 19 points ahead of the second place finishing team.

In the Center Fire Pistol event, SSgt. Arredondo came back from an earlier second place finish in rapid fire, to win the overall championship.

Arreodondo scored daily rounds of 584 and 594 for an aggregate total of 1,178 out of 1,200. His final score was five points ahead of the runner-up, A. Bacon of Los Angeles, at 1,173.

USAMU's LtCol. Sharon Best finished in a tie for third position during the Women's 10 Meter Air Pistol championship. Her final score of 840 was only three points off the winning total of 843 and one point out of second.

SSgt. Matthew Dryke won his eighth national individual title during this year's International Skeet championship to further establish himself as the world's best shotgun competitor.

In the individual event, SSgt. Dryke and team-mate SFC Alger Mullins finished first and second for another USAMU sweep of the top awards.

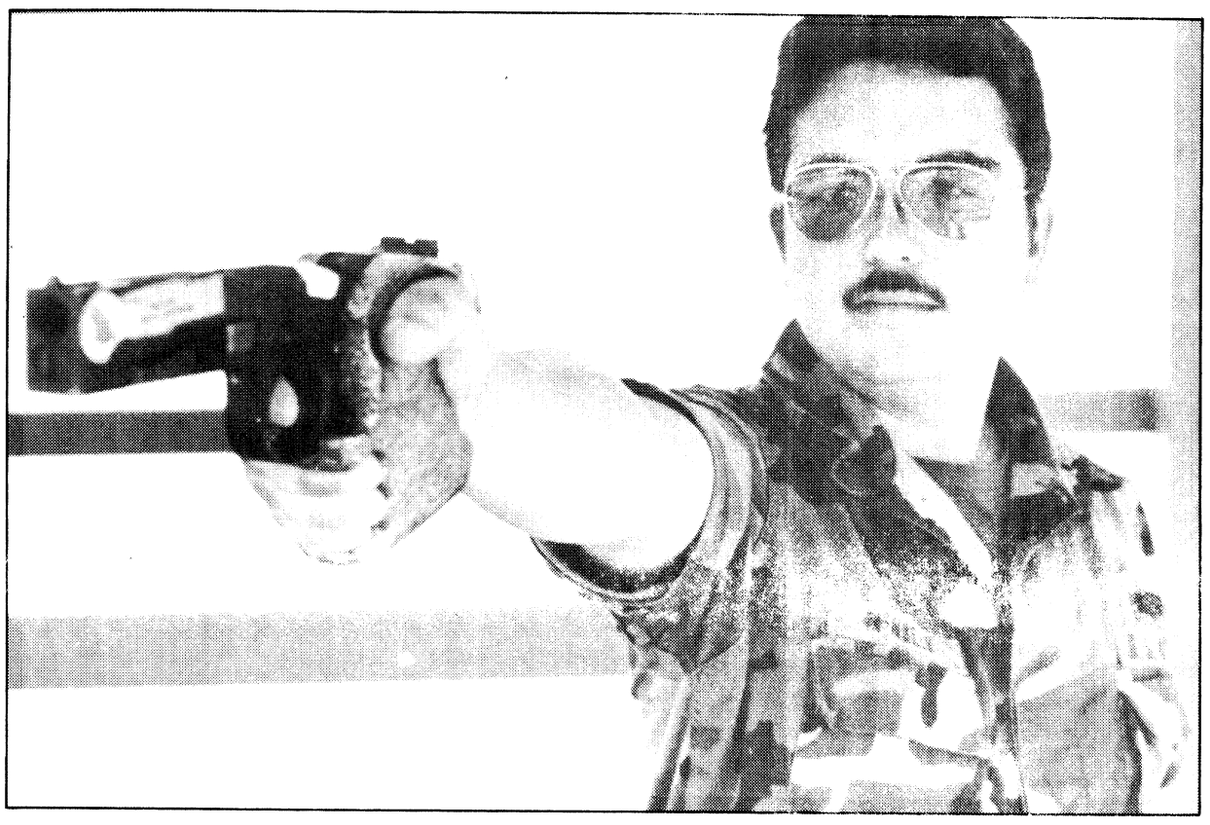
Dryke scored a four-day total of 417 out of 425 targets, while Mullins finished with 413. Placing third was former USAMU member Daniel Carlisle, with a total of 411.

The victory marked Dryke's eighth since winning his first skeet championship in 1978. He also added titles in 1979, consecutive victories frm 1981 through 1984 and last year.

The USAMU "Blue" squad of Dryke, Mullins and Sp4 Robert Wilson also claimed the sixth consecutive national team championship for the U.S. Army. The team was coached by Mr. Burl Branham, veteran USAMU Shotgun Coach.

In Clay Pigeon (trap) action, the USAMU squad of Sgt. Bret Erickson, Sp4 James Graves and Sp4 Mark Hobbs won the national trap team championship, scoring a total of 419. Mr. Branham was again the winning team coach.

USAMU's 1stLt. Denise Morrison scored a one target victory to win her first national title in the Women's Trap event.



Morrison finished with a total of 352 targets to finish one ahead of civilian competitor, Connie Tomsovic of Jackson, MT, at 351.

During the 50 Meter Running Target championships, Sp4 Troy Lawton defeated more than 60 competitors to win the overall Olympic Runs title.

Lawton scored a two day total of 1,162 to finish two points ahead of L. Lazoff, at 1,160.

The Running Target championship marked Lawton's third national title in the past two years, as he also won the Silhouette Rifle championships.

In the final smallbore rifle championships, USAMU's 1stLt. Ronald Wigger placed second in the 50 Meter English Match event after losing in a tie breaking procedure for the individual title.

Tommy Poole

Capt. John McNally of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit set a new record in the rapid fire pistol event at this year's U.S. National Shooting Championship.

Wigger and Army reservist, Maj. William Beard, finished with identical scores of 1,195 out of 1,200 points in the overall championship, with Beard being declared the winner on the last ten shot series.

In the team event, the USAMU squads finished first and second with tie scores 1,787 out of 1,800. The winning team members included 1st Lt. Wigger, Capt. Richard Hawkins and SFC Mark Kauder on the "Blue" team, while Capt. Steve Goff, PFC Thomas Tamas and Sp4 Baker made up the "Red" team.

USAMU's 1st Lt. David Cannella, claimed an individual third place finish in the 10 Meter Air Rifle event, while Capt. Glenn Dubis also placed third in the 50 Meter position championship.

This year's championship was also used in the selection of the United States shooting team that will compete at the Pan American Games to be held in Indianapolis, Ind, this August.

The final team selection will be announced later this month by the National Rifle Association. Army personnel that are expected to be named to the U.S. Team include the following individuals fom USAMU:

(Pistol) MSgt. Erich Buljung, Capt. John McNally, SSgt. Rojelio Arredondo and Lt Col. Sharon Best.

(Shotgun) SSgt. Matthew Dryke and SFC Alger Mullins.

(Rifle) Capt. Glenn Dubis, 1st Lt. David Cannella and 1st Lt. Ronald Wigger.

Players face off in men's baseball action

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

While Fort Benning worked on rebuilding a post softball club, WestVaCo, a construction firm in Columbus, was constructing a powerhouse, fortified with enough explosives to blow away the post team into 9-3 and 11-3 last week at Gowdy Field.

There has not been a post softball team since Fort Benning's Men and Women's teams, became the final Training and Doctrine Command champions, in 1983, before the league was disbanned.

Abdur Hassan, then coach of the TRADOC Women's Softball Champions, went on another duty assignment. Recently he returned to Fort Benning to form the Post Men's Softball team.

Though, the post team went into the double header, with a 3-1 record, it was to be a long night when they faced WestVaCo, which holds the top seat in the Industrial League of Columbus.

It was WestVaCo's right center fielder, Greg Commander, who provided the power, slaming the ball through the infield with industrial strength.

Commander was five of seven at bat in the double header, scoring three runs.

In the opening game, the Post club was able to keep the Columbus team scoreless for three consecutive innings.

Though the power hitting of WestVaCo, continually sent the ball flying into the outfield, Fort Benning's left fielder Bill Timney, would let nothing pass.

"Defense and experience prove to be our strongest asset," said Coach Hassan. "We have guys whose knowlege of the game, allows them to make the right decisions in key situations."

Broadening the Fort Benning defense, was Allen Garner, short stop, who fired bullets to first base.

While the Benning Club played top of the line defense, they still had problems rocking the bat, finishing the night with only 14 hits and six scores for both games.

"We need better control when we enter the batter's box," said Hassan. "We can hit hard and long, but we need to work on placing the ball where we want it," he said.

Martin Fair demonstrated that power, hitting the night's only home run.

Fair lined the homer straight down first base, then circled the diamond on the heals of teammate, Martin Glasser.

But, it was a bit late to rally, the WestVaCo had outflashed the Fort Benning team with speed and their own power.

The Fort Benning culb continues to ready themselves for such a power attack, but realizes the battle will be hard.

"One of our biggest problems is lack of depth," said Hassan. "We have so few players, that we must play a lot of games with people who are tired and recovering from injuries."

In an effort to increase the depth of the club, Hassan will conduct tryouts. Those interested, should contact Coach Hassan, at 545-5475.

AIDS

AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) destroys the body's ability to defend itself against diseases. People with AIDS are killed by infections that are usually harmless.

The virus is transmitted through homosexual and heterosexual sexual contact, blood transfusions or sharing contaminated needles. There are currently no documented cases of anyone developing AIDS through non-sexual casual contact.

The risk of getting AIDS increases through . . . .

- Sexual activity with:
  - Homosexuals or bisexuals
  - Prostitutes
  - Numerous sex partners
- Contaminated needles
- Contaminated blood

IF EVERYBODY SAYS IT CAN'T HAPPEN TO THEIR KIDS, THEN WHOSE KIDS IS IT HAPPENING TO?

Not yours, right?

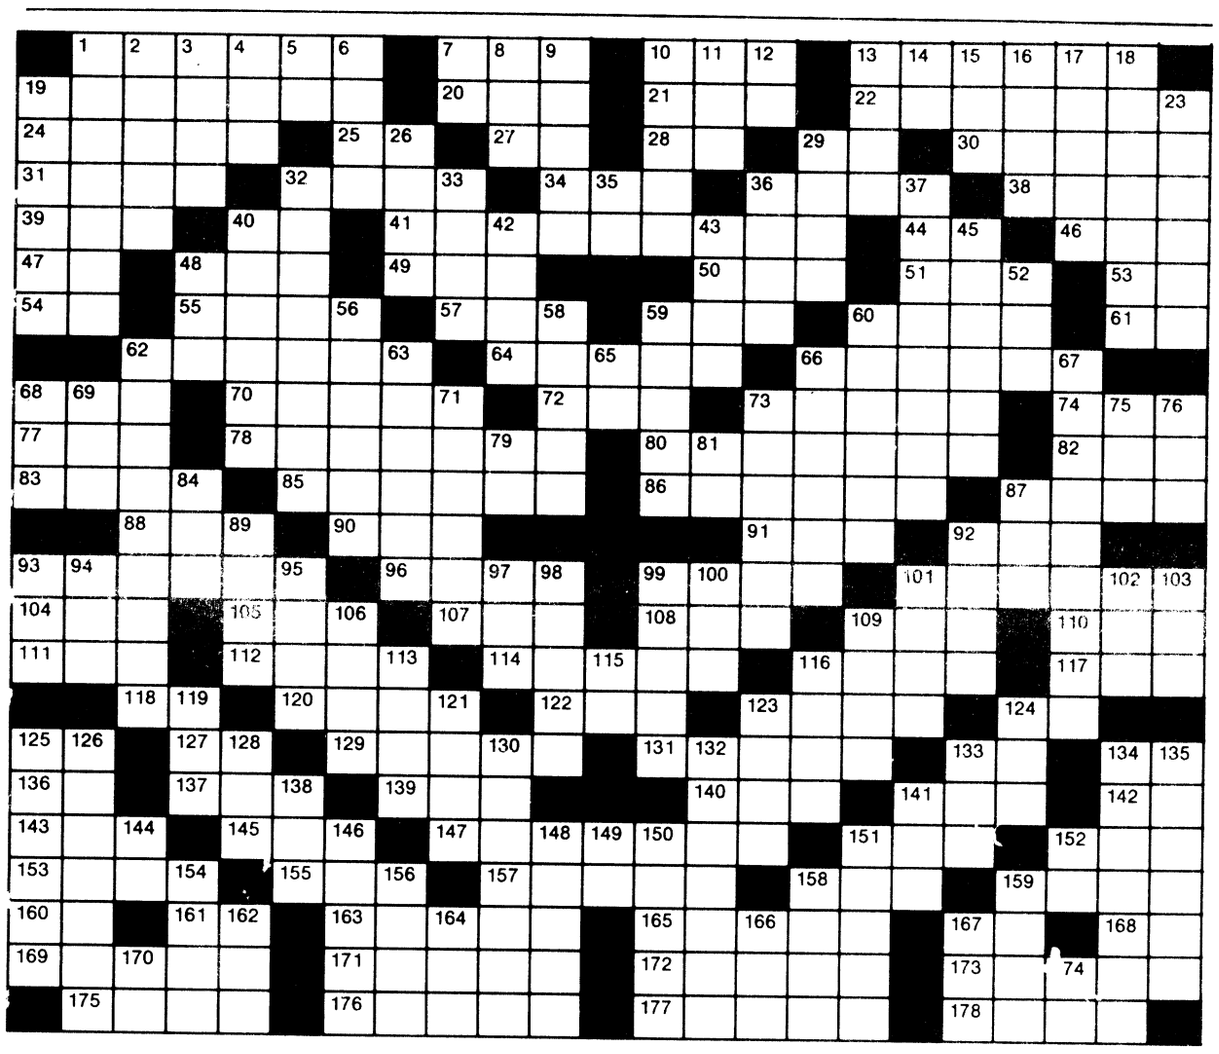
Well, would you feel any differently if you knew 17% of all high school seniors have tried cocaine? And 40% of those are using it currently.

Not your kid? Well, how about this...54% of all high school seniors have smoked marijuana. And over half of them smoke it regularly.

Still not your kid? Or maybe you're not so sure anymore.

Well, the best way to know for sure is to talk with your child. Of course, speaking to your child like this takes a lot of courage. And to do it effectively takes a lot of homework—like reading articles, attending meetings, and talking to other parents. This way, your child will see you as a well informed source.

Listen, we're not using these statistics about marijuana and cocaine to scare you.



Then again, that's exactly what we're trying to do.

If you're afraid your child may be included in some of these numbers, get help. Contact your local agency on drug abuse for more information.

Solution

VA Q&A

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q: Is there a charge for the opening and closing of a grave in a VA National Cemetery?

A: There is no charge. However, expenses related to preparation, casketing or transportation of the remains from the place of death to a national cemetery must be paid from private funds. The VA may provide reimbursement under certain circumstances for burial expenses. Social Security pays a burial benefit to a spouse in some cases.

Q: Will I lose my VA compensation if I get a job?

A: Employment is generally a factor in receiving VA compensation only if you are being paid at the 100-percent rate based on your employability.

Q: What rating must a service-connected disabled veteran have in order to receive additional compensation for a wife, child or parent?

A: Veterans whose service-connected disabilities are rated at 30-percent or more are entitled to additional allowances for dependents.

Q: The IRS withheld part of my refund for a Veterans Administration education overpayment that occurred in 1978. I want to request a waiver. What can I do?

For overpayments incurred before 1983, the VA could consider a waiver request if received within two years of the initial notification to the claimant. In 1983, the time limit was reduced to 180 days. However, if you have evidence that shows you were not afforded due process rights, you should present your case to the VA.

Benning soldier pulls duty at sea

By Mike Hagburg
U.S. Army Public Affairs Representative

SP4 Eric Conyers of Harmony Church, Troop Medical Clinic 8, joined the Army because he wanted a challenge. On his latest assignment, Conyers is getting a challenge of a lifetime - he's one of only 67 soldiers selected to serve on the maiden voyage of the United States Naval Hospital Ship Mercy.

Currently the largest military hospital ship afloat in the world, the Mercy carries more than 700 medical and support personnel from the Air Force, Army, Navy, United States Public Health Service, and the Phillipine medical community. Its 12 operating rooms, 80-bed intensive care unit and 1,000-bed hospital make it the largest trauma center in the United States.

The Mercy's first assignment is a five-month humanitarian and training mission to the Philippines and South Pacific, where its Philippine and American medical teams are providing medical, surgical and dental support to the Philippine people.

Since the ship's arrival in the Republic of the Philippines March 18, staff members have been working and training hand-in-hand with Filipino medical personnel embarked aboard the ship - and civilian doctors in communities visited by the ship.

Conyers jumped at the chance to take this assignment.

"I didn't hesitate," he said. "I thought it would be a great adventure."

Conyers is trained as a combat medic. He enjoys his job.

"I like to spend time in the field with the infantry and artillery," said Conyers. "They're the guys in the mud - and I like to see that they get taken care of."

"He trys to do everything for everybody," said Erma Williams a medical clerk at TMC #8.

During the Philippine mission, medical personnel from the Mercy have been setting up shore-based clinics to treat Philippine civilians. At these Medical-Dental Civic Action Project sites, Mercy staffers treat up to 1,000 patients a day. Conyers likes this kind of work.

"It's different from working in the states because you get to see so many different conditions and diseases," said Conyers. "I think I'll be a better medic after this."

Ft. Benning Claims Office offers sound advice for filing reports

By Dennis Brower
Legal Assistance Office

It's been a hard day at the office and as you go to your vehicle to drive back home you notice that your vehicle door has been damaged. The end of a perfect day! You only acquired liability insurance for your vehicle, as required by Fort Benning regulations, and figure that the Claims Office will pay for the damages.

After phoning the Claims Office you are told that the damage is not payable and that all expenses for repair will have to be paid by you. How could this be true? Aren't all damages and thefts to vehicles of civilian and military personnel, which occur on post, paid for by the government?

No, says the Claims Office. Although many instances of damage are payable, many are not. The Claims Office is here to help the soldier and the civilian employees and will pay all claims that are proven and allowable under the regulations.

However, the government regulations do not cover all instances of theft or damage and individuals should not consider the government as the insurer of their vehicles while on post. If individuals do not have comprehensive or collision insurance on their vehicles, they may have to pay for the damage themselves.

The payment of claims for damages to vehicles of civilian employees and military personnel and their dependents is covered by Chapter 11 of Army Regulation 27-20. The regulation generally provides for the payment of claims for damages caused by fire (not a vehicle catching fire, but being consumed by a fire from another source), flood, hurricane, or by other unusual occurences or by theft or vandalism.

Some examples of things that are not payable are:

Collision with another vehicle (unless it is a government vehicle and the government vehicle is at fault), hit and run incidents, unexplained damage to vehicles, theft of "fuzzbuster," or like radar detection devices, damage caused by baseballs, golfballs, rocks thrown by a lawnmower or by a truck or treebranches falling (unless government negligence is proven), and theft of stereos and their accessories which are not permanently attached or bolted to the vehicle (items that slide into brackets or a frame and do not require tools for their removal are not permanent).

Individuals must also be aware that any loss or damage caused wholly or in part by their negligent or wrongful acts may result in the denial of the claim. Failure to exercise reasonable care to protect and secure a vehicle can be considered negligence. Some examples of this would be failure to lock the vehicle, items left in the passenger compartment which would invite theft or the use of car "bras" or covers which are not permanent attached or secured by locking cables.

Soldiers in the barracks or in the BEQ's or BOQ's should not store their personal possessions in their vehicles. The claims regulations state that vehicles are not a proper place for storage and that claims for those items will generally be denied.

Another misconception is that the government will pay for all of the damaged or stolen items. This is not so, says the Claims Office. The regulation states that the maximum amount payable on a claim for damage or theft to a vehicle while on post is $1000.

The amount for stereo equipment and its accessories is a lower amount of $500. There are also limitations on the amount of stereo tapes that can be paid for, the amount for tools left in a vehicle and most items replaced or repaired are required to be depreciated.

Under the regulation, there is no reimbursement of fees for rental vehicles while the damaged vehicle is being repaired. If the vehicle is damaged in an attempt to steal an unpayable item, for example, a "fuzzbuster," then any damage to the vehicle will not be payable.

Vandalism is another area in which the Claims Office reports there is much misunderstanding. Often individuals file claims on damage to their vehicles for small scratches, scrapes and small cracks in the windshield. The owners are not sure how the damage was done, but assert that someone must have damaged their vehicles.

For damages of this type to be payable, it must be shown that the damage was intentionally done to the vehicle. Unexplained minor damages ususally cannot be established as vandalism. Damages done accidentally by children or others is not vandalism and cannot be claimed.

For damages and thefts which are payable, the Claims Office stands ready to help with the filing of the claim and any questions that individuals may have. The Claims Office states that when individuals discover damage to, or theft from, their vehicle they should report it to the Military Police and then bring the vehicle to the Claims Office as soon as possible for inspection.

It is essential that the vehicle not be repaired before the claims inspection as it may jeopardize any payment of the claim. After inspection of the damage, the Claims Office will provide the individual with all the necessary forms and instructions on how to file a claim.

Some of the things needed to file the claim is proof of ownership of the vehicle, insurance papers, Military Police report and two estimates. Regulations require that individuals file with their insurance company before the filing of the claim against the government.

Individuals must also prove their vehicles were properly registered to be on post in accordance with USAIC Regulation 190-5. If the vehicle was not properly registered, or did not have the required liability insurance, then the vehicle may be determined to not be properly on the post and the claim denied.

Although the Claims Office will be able to handle many of the claims for vehicle damages and thefts, there are many which leave individuals with little or no protection. The only way to fully protect yourself is to be security-conscious and to acquire comprehensive and collision insurance from your private insurer.

The Claims Office is located un Building 5 at the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos. It is open from 0800 to 1700 hours daily for the inspection of vehicles and the picking up of claim forms. Times for the filing of the claims are noted in the forms. Individuals can get additional information by calling 545-2285.

Proof of insurance is Georgia Law

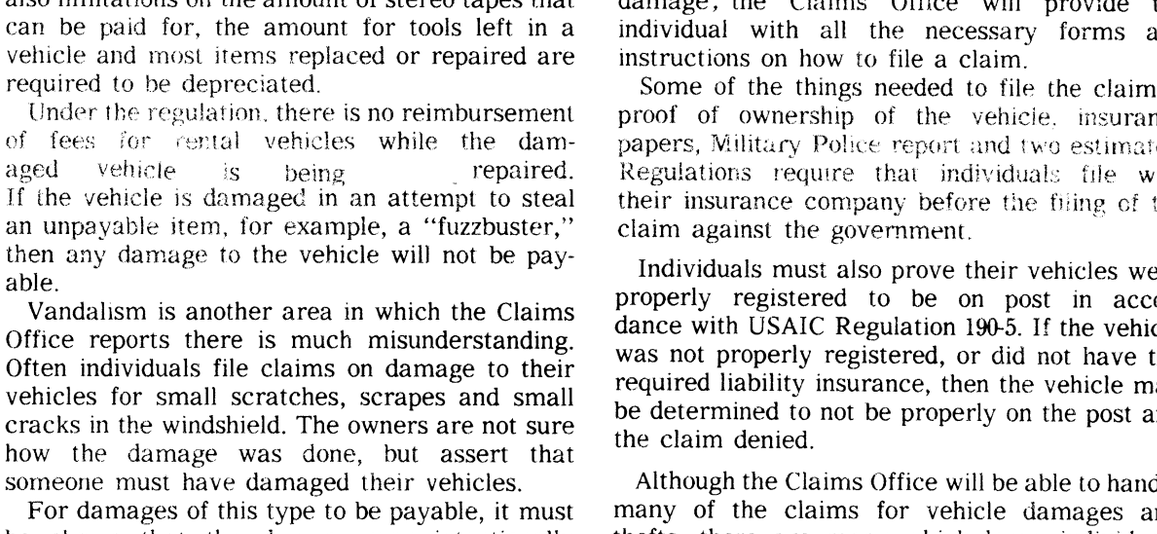
By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

During the 1987 session of the Georgia General Assembly several laws were passed. Two of the laws will have a direct impact on Fort Benning soldiers and civilians.

Georgia code (33-34-120) "No proof of insurance," states that if a person driving a vehicle cannot show proof of the required insurance; a citation is issued and the drivers license is taken and forwarded to the court of competent jurisdiction.

Georgia code (40-6-206) "Towing vehicles for no proof of insurance," authorizes a Georgia Law Enforcement Officer to confiscate a vehicle of a person that can not show proof of insurance.

The laws went into effect on July 1.



According to Maj. Jean Kennedy, Operations Officer, Military Police Activities, in efforts to support the new laws, post police are paying closer attention to post stickers.

"The reason behind this," Kennedy said, "is because proof of insurance is required to register vehicles on post, so if the sticker is current the insurance is too."

She said that more patrols are being conducted in post parking lots as well as spot checks along roadways.

"All of this is being done to support the commanders." Kennedy said, "We are just trying to insure that all soldiers are within the law."

She added that the your vehicle can be impounded if no proof of insurance is available.

Quality Management measure up or get out!

By Army News Service

The Army's Qualitative Management Program (QMP) was designed to improve the quality of the enlisted force by denying reenlistment to those soldiers who do not measure up to Army standards. The program has two subprograms that act independently.

"The Qualitative Retention Subprogram is more commonly known as the 'up or out' policy," said Maj. Steven A. Sultan of MILPERCEN's Appeals and Separations Branch. "It sets time limits called reenlistment ineligibility points. These points are the maximum number of years of active federal service that a soldier of a specific rank may have and still be allowed to reenlist.

"Soldiers cannot reenlist or extend beyond the reenlistment ineligibility point for their ranks. For example, a sergeant cannot extend or reenlist or have an expiration of term of service date beyond 13 years of service," he explained.

The general court-martial convening authority or the first general officer in the chain of command can, under certain circumstances, grant a waiver of reenlistment ineligibility point.

The Qualitative Screening Subprogram is most commonly associated with the term "QMP." Under this subprogram, centralized Department of the Army boards reveiw soldiers' records to determine if they have the potential for continued service.

"All sergeants with more than 11 years of active federal service and all staff sergeants through command sergeants major (with less than 28 years of service), are eligible for consideration," Sultan said.

If a soldier does not have potential, the board imposes a DA bar to reenlistment. The bar can only be lifted through an appeal by the soldier or the commander. While the chances of having an appeal approved are fairly good (40-45 percent of all appeals are approved), not all soldiers choose to appeal.

If the soldier and commander do not appeal, or if an appeal is denied, the soldier is ineligible to reenlist. Commanders of soldiers barred under the QMP must start separation proceedings if the bar is still in effect 18 months after it was imposed.

"Because bars to reenlistment imposed by the QMP are so serious," Sultan said, "we encourage commanders and administrative personnel to give priority to assisting barred soldiers in preparing and submitting QMP appeals."

Check AR 601-280, Chapter 10, for details of the Army's Qualitative Management Program. However, soldiers who have questions should contact their Total Army Career Counselors.

Responsibility lies with everyone

By Chaplain (Capt.) Wisdom Support Battalion

Our freedom is in danger today. It is threatened not only by hostile powers outside our country, it is also being endangered from within. Our freedom is threatened when we forget what our freedom means to us.

American freedom means we have responsibilities, as well as rights. Some "liberators" today call for power without principles. If we listen to them, our freedom may be abused, unused or confused.

We abuse our freedom when we want liberty without law. True freedom is not the right to do whatever we like. Liberty includes responsibility to obey the law of the land. Living solely by our selfish desires is not liberty, but lawlessness.

Often in the world where lawless "liberty" takes over, tyranny and slavery soon follow. Anarchy usually leads to dictatorship, not to democracy.

Freedom is fostered in America by a framework of law. This is why America's Declaration of Independence led to writing of our Constitution. Our founding fathers realized that it was not enough to break away from an unjust ruler. They saw the need to establish a new order based on just laws. They understood that enduring freedom could not be built upon the whims of human nature.

Secondly, freedom includes the responsibility to care about the rights of our fellow citizens. It is not enough to protect our own personal freedom. We must also uphold the civil liberties of others. Freedom does not last long in an atmosphere of apathy.

During World War II, the Nazis were bent on killing off certain groups of people. Others knew about it. But most of them said and did nothing. Martin Niemoller, a German churchman who suffered eight years of imprisonment under the Hitler regime, explains why:

"In Germany, they came first for the Communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Communist. When the Nazis came for the Jews, I did not speak up, because I was not a Jew. Then they came for the Trade Unionists, and I didn't speak up because I was not a Trade Unionist; then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Then they came for me, and by that time, no one was left to speak up."

If we don't lose our liberty to protect the rights of others, we may eventually lose it ourselves.

Finally, there can be no lasting freedom without any faith. We, as a nation, have traditionally acknowledged God as the Author and Preserver of our freedom. We declare this in our Pledge of Allegiance. We sing it in our patriotic songs. We even stamp it on our money.

Many today, however, seek to remove religion in any form from public life. They do this in the name of "separation of church and state." These actions grievously confuse the religious freedom guaranteed in the First Amendment.

Secretary of Education William Bennett asserted in a 1986 speech that the early leaders of America would be puzzled at our modern "religious" dilemma. "From churchgoers to rationalizing deists," he says, "the Founders spoke with one voice about the importance of including religion in civic life."

It was Thomas Jefferson who originated the idea of the separation of church and state. Yet, it was he who penned the original draft of the Declaration of Independence that we remember each Fourth of July:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, and endowed by their Creator, with certain inalienable rights, namely ;life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

If our freedom is worth celebrating, then it is worth protecting. We must defend not only against invading armies, but also against harmful ignorance. We are endangering our freedom by our forgetfulness. If we want to keep our freedom, it must mean more to us than the right to be selfish, apathetic and intolerant. Freedom in America must mean fulfilling the responsibilities as well as enjoying the rights of citizenship.

Our founding fathers believed that it was God who had granted our nation this priceless blessing of freedom. May God then help us to be a people who practice liberty with law, who promote independence with involvement, and who uphold freedom with faith.

Soldiering; not just a job it's a way of life

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Leaders are judged in many ways. One mark of a leader is how he cares for his troops and their family members.

Thus, when commanders of those leaders and Inspectors General for those units pay visits, an area they will look into is that of how well the leader is doing in caring for soldiers and the families of those soldiers.

At post level, these commanders and IGs will look at PXs and commissaries, day care centers, arts and crafts centers, medical facilities, chapel programs, gymnasiums, etc., to see if hours of operation are adequate, the product line supports a cross section of cultural and ethnic needs, parents have a place to care for their children and that there is an outlet for the soldier during off-duty time.

At company and battalion level, the emphasis might be on dining facilities, day rooms, athletic programs and barracks to see if soldiers have a clean, cheery place to eat well-prepared food, to see that there is an outlet for them to expend their energy after work.

How well leaders do this given various restraints such as lack of funds and facilities is a mark of leadership.

Good leaders rise to the occasion and overcome these obstacles.

But they could do an even better job if soldiers under their command would exercise "soldiership."

We believe soldiers have certain responsibilities to their leaders, to their fellow soldiers...that those responsibilities extend beyond duty hours, beyond the company or battalion area.

To us, soldiership means more than just following orders and getting along with fellow soldiers during duty hours.

It means respecting fellow soldiers during off-duty time as well...having respect for personal as well as government property.

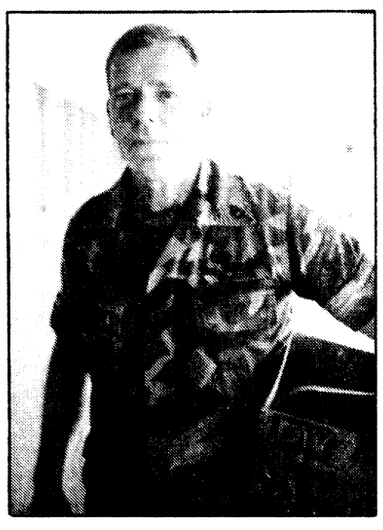
If more soldiers practiced soldiership, soldiers' cars wouldn't be vandalized, latrine stalls wouldn't be ripped out of the floor, video machines wouldn't be smashed for a few quarters, pool cues broken, graffiti scrawled across walls or ceilings in the bowling center pulled down.

To repair and replace all this takes money. Money that could be used to purchase new equipment, construct new facilities and repair items damaged through normal wear and tear.

We all have a good understanding of leadership and what a leader's responsibilities are. But leaders are not miracle workers. They can't be everywhere at once, be all things to all people. For this reason, we need to turn our attention to soldiership and to what a soldier's responsibilities are and just when those responsibilities end.

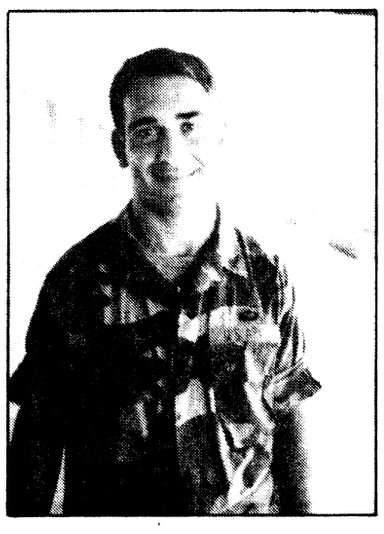
We think soldiership is a 24-hour-a-day job. That it means proudly representing the unit and the Army both on and off post, both in and out of uniform.

Soldiership is coming to a buddy's aid when his car breaks down on the way to work or when he's jumped by thugs on the way back to the barracks late at night.



Soldiership is making the Army and the unit a better place to live and work. It's stopping other soldiers who are in the act of vandalizing property instead of joining in.

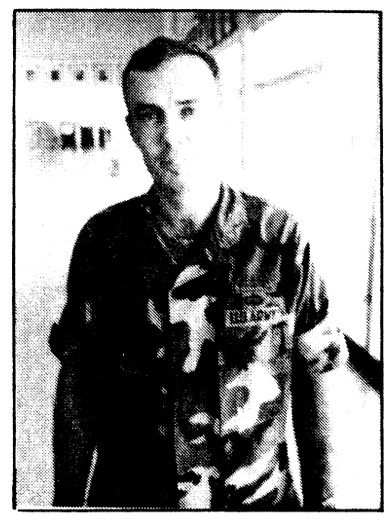
Soldiership is caring. And more of us need to practice it.



VARIOUS VOICES / Why is a soldier on duty 24-hours-a-day?

SSgt. Timothy Ward, 24th Company, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade, - "Because a soldier is a soldier all of the time - 24 hours-a-day, seven-days-a-week, 365- days-a-year, regardless of place time or what country they are in."

SFC David Lowery, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "Because a soldier is on call 24-hours-a-day to answer situations as they come up throughout the world."



Capt. James Drago, 12th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "Because threats to our freedom exist around the clock and we as soldiers appreciate that freedom and need to guard it continuously."

SP4 Timothy Wyatt, Protocol, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "Because there is a need to do things at different times, we as soldiers always have to be ready."

2nd Lt. Tom Sharp, 24th Company, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade, - "Because they have a duty to their country, their job entails that they be ready at all times. Our country can call on us day or night because this is not a job, it is a lifestyle."

Maj. John Little, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "It's our chosen profession its not a job. There are no set hours. Our Common Defense calls for us to be ready 24-hours-a-day."

UNIT NEWS

U.S. Army

Pvt. 2 Edward L. Fisk (left), Sgt. Gregory King, 2nd Lt. Eugene F. Speed, and Pvt. 2 David J. Kent (right) Company A, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, discuss plans for an offensive manuever at the "Animal House," a shelter that the platoon built at a Kelley Hill training site.

Kelley Hill training site educates field soldiers

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

After fulfilling the mission of providing school support, a unit must readjust its training schedule and focus on sharpening its basic soldier skills. That's why Company A, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry held a "Sledgehammer Academy" on Kelley Hill July 7-9.

The purpose of the "Sledgehammer Academy" was to train infantry squads in mounted, dismounted, offensive and defense combat tactics.

"It gives the men the opportunity to work in their squad to the point that they develop a second nature," said 2nd Lt. Eugene F. Speed, a Platoon Leader A Com pany. "It gets to the point that they don't even have to think about it. They know what to do and they know what the other men in the squad will do in any given situation."

Speed's platoon (nick-named "Animal House" after a log shelter the platoon constructed at the Kelley Hill training area) was training in dismounted tactics. While one squad was given the task of defending a hilltop bunker, another squad would assault the hilltop and attempt to overtake the bunker.

Squad leaders were allowed to plan their own defense and attack methods. Defense leaders choose how many men to place in the bunker, and how to position the remaining men to best ward off the attack.

Offensive leaders decided which direction to attack from, which squad members would breech obstacles, which man would distract the opposition with supportive fire and those that would make the actual assault on the bunker. Leaders also choose whether to initiate the attack with visual signals or use a time-hatch, a method where the men manuever into position, then begin the assault at a pre-determined time.

Skill and communication are the key elements to the battle.

Competition between the squads can bring out clever and unexpected moves. A squad leader may not notice a well-hidden sentry that pops up after they pass to toss a grenade and open up with rifle fire. Or he may see his assault team get within 30 meters of the bunker only to find that the entire opposing squad is inside the bunker, waiting to detonate Claymore anti-personnel mines.

After each exercise, all the members of the squads participated in an after-action briefing to discuss the strengths and weaknesses each squad displayed. Each soldier leaves the "Academy" more aware of his combat skills, as well as the skills of those he must fight with.

Training revamped at Airborne School

Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Known as Hunters from the sky the 1st Battalion (Abn), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, the unit responsible for the conduct of the U.S. Army Airborne School, recently modified its way of conducting training.

The battalion changed from the 40-year-old committee approach, which had a different set of instructors for each of the three weeks of training. It adopted unit training approach where one set of trainers mentor the students through the entire three-week course. This training approach resembles the style of training used in the 1940s when combat units trained the soldiers they would lead in war.

Statistics from before, during and after the change show the overall attrition rate remaining the same, but significantly there has been a decrease in drop zone injuries.

"Improved professional development of the cadre, a focus on leadership, and the increased attention given to the students are just a few of the obvious advantages to this approach," said Lt Col.Holt, 1/507th Commander.

Because the NCO leadership is on a more personal basis with their students, the team approach comes into play. "Trainers see their students struggling through Ground Phase, learning how to do parachute landing falls and exiting the 34 foot Aircraft Mock-up Tower," he said.

During Tower Phase, the trainers continue to measure their students progress. They have their skills on the Swing Landing Trainer and the 250 foot Tower inpreparation for that first jump from an aircraft in flight, Holt said.

"During Jump Phase, the trainers see the fruit of their labor," he said, "they experience a sense of personal accomplishment and pride with each paratrooper they have successfully molded."

Rangers change commander

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

Command of the 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment changed hands in a ceremony on York field Friday.

Lt. Col. Robert M. Hensler became the new commander as Lt. Col. Glynn W. Hale moves on to Fort Bragg, N. C.

Hensler, a U.S. Army Military Academy, West Point graduate, comes to Fort Benning from the 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry, Fort Drum, which he helped to activate.

Hensler has also been an instructor in the Department of Physical Education, US Army Military Academy.

He is a graduate of the Airborne, Ranger, and Jumpmaster Courses.

His decoratiions include the Bronze Star Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster, Meritorious Service Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster, Air Medal, Army Commendation Medal, Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal with Arrowhead, the Combat Infantryman's Badge, the Expert Infantryman's Badge and Senior Parachutist Badge.

Awards given to 1-29 troops in ceremony

By Ronald Tillman
29th Infantry Regiment

The "Pioneers" of 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment celebrated their monthly Award Ceremony recently, presenting 17 awards during the ceremony.

Several soldiers received Army Achievement Medals for being named "Instructor of the Cycle" and for "outstanding performance as participants in support of the Infantry Commander's Conference.

SFC Ralph Trillo, the United States Army Infantry School Instructor of the month, received an Army Commendation with third oak leaf cluster.

Department of the Army Certificates and 2nd Bn "Pioneer" awards went to soldiers selected as the Non-commissioned Officer and Soldier of the Month and Quarter.

Under a new battalion incentive program, Carol A. Tullos was named "Employee of the Month,"becoming the first "Pioneer" civilian.

Tullos, 2nd Bn SIDPERS Clerk, received a DA Certificate and a monetary award.

Also in the days cermony, Phyllis Allen of Rice Services, was recognized as "Clerk of the Quarter."

The ceremony concluded with remarks from the Battalion Commander, LTC Barry W. Mahek, who praised the assembly for their continued outstanding performance in spite of the complexity and diversity of the mission and a severe personnel shortage.

Co C soldiers hit Honduras

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group Correspondent

While soldiers from companies A and B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group arrived home from Palmerola Air Base, Honduras, June 25, soldiers from Company C were settling in at the base for their training tour in Honduras.

According to 1st Lt. Dominic Macaluso, executive officer for Company C, the advanced party for the tour, consisting of five soldiers from Headquarters Support Company, left for Honduras June 18 and the main body, made up of 44 Company C soldiers,deployed the morning of the 25th. The soldiers departed Lawson Army Airfield on the same C141 aircraft that brought the soldiers from Companies A and B back later that afternoon.

The soldiers will be working on a number of projects while in Honduras, including the completion of a new dining facility. Macaluso said that Company B laid the cement foundation and put up the superstructure of the facility during its tour. The lieutenant said that the soldiers will be putting in the plumbing and electrical wiring and will finish the facility before returning to Fort Benning.

Company C will be working on several other projects as well as the construction of the dining facility. Plans call for the soldiers to also build a new off-duty lounge , according to Capt. Lance Jackson, construction officer for the 43rd Engineer Battalion. Jackson also said that the soldiers will be upgrading a communications site on the base and several other smaller projects.

The engineers are expected to return to Fort Benning in late September.

Army News Weekly

Bonuses increased in eight of the Army's military occupational specialties while another four specialties were added to the program July 3. No MOS mutipliers were decreased and no specialty was deleted from the program.

The four additional specialties include 11H (Heavy Antiarmor Weapons Infantrymen); 16S (Manpads Crewman); 24C (Improved Hawk Firing Section Mechanic); and 82B (Construction Surveyor).

Specialties with multipliers increasing include 11B (Infantryman); 11C (Indirect Fire Infantryman); 11C with "G" or "V" Skill Identifiers; 11H with "G" or "V" skill identifiers; 12B (Combat Engineer) with "G" or "V" skill identifiers; 18B (Special Operations Weapons Sergeant); 18C (Special Operations Engineer Sergeant); and 63Y (Track Vehicle Mechanic).

According to Maj. Allen Deutsch, in the Army personnel office at the Pentagon, these changes should remain in effect until the end of September.

The re-enlistment bonus program traces its origin back to March 3, 1791. At that time, soldiers were paid $6 to re-enlist, as compared to a maximum of $20,000 in 1987 for soldiers in selected Army specialties, said Deutsch.

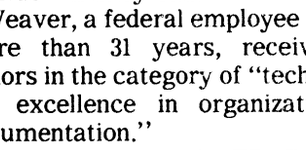
TRADOC award won

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

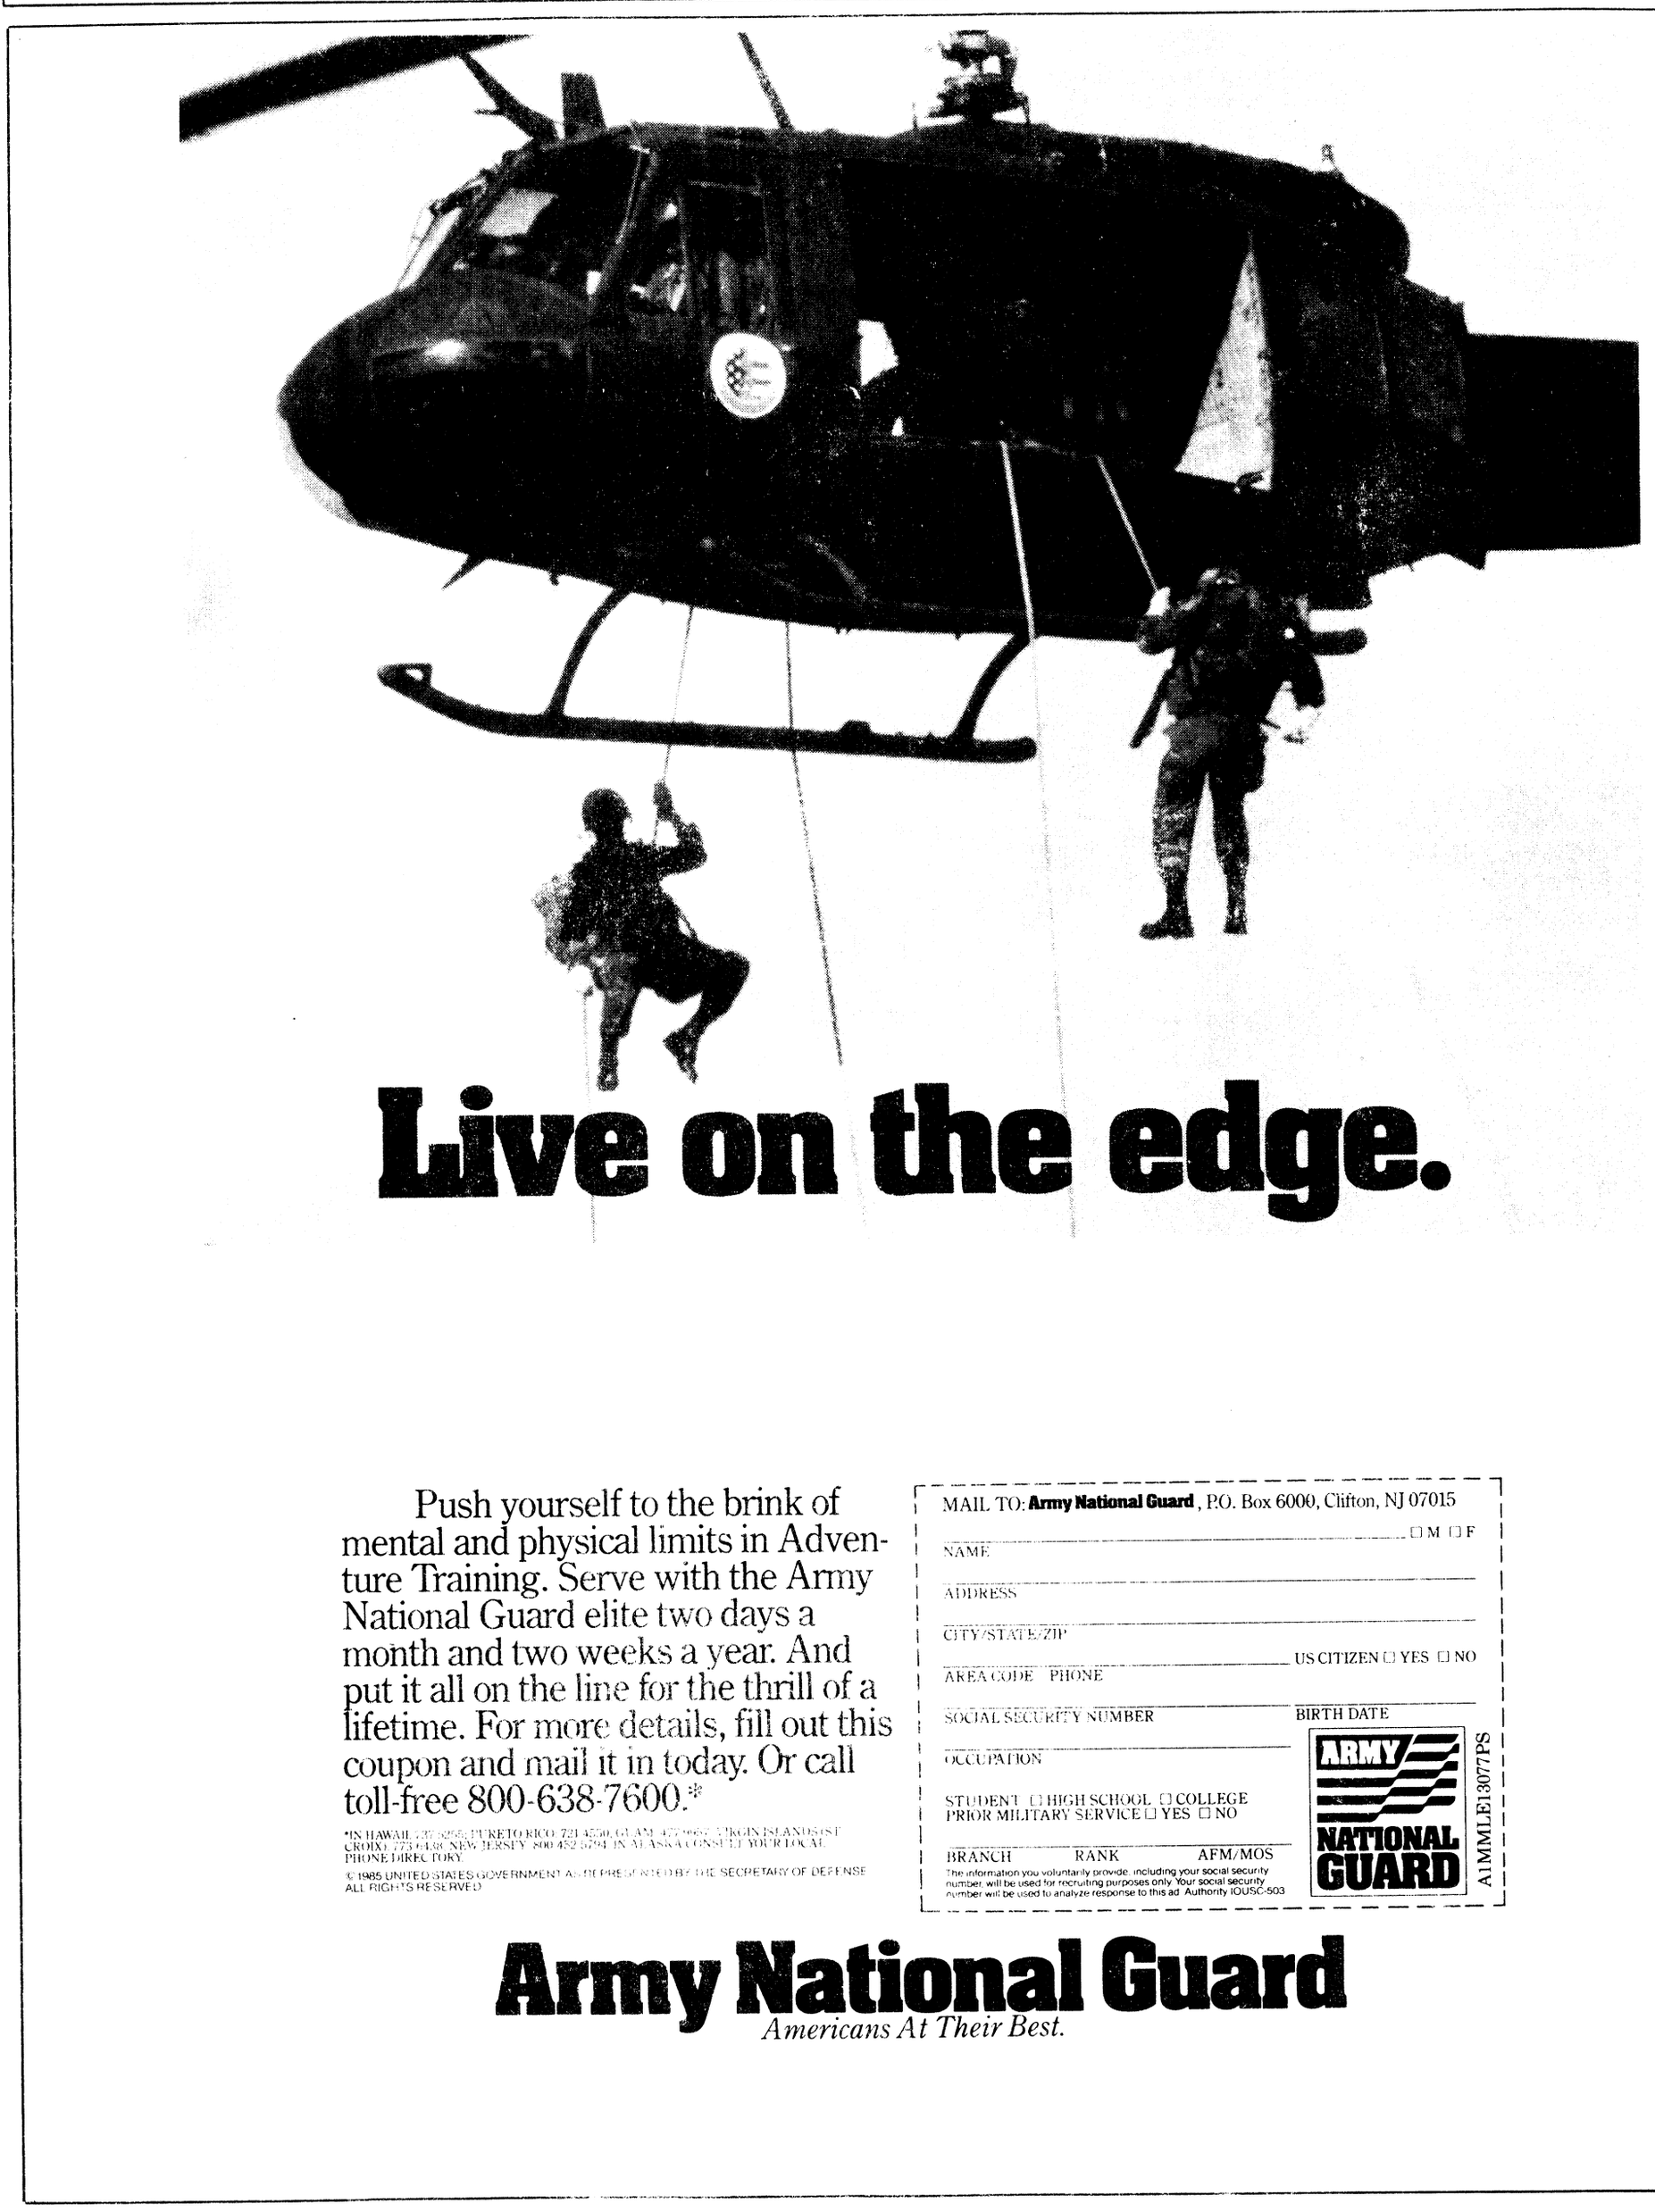
Fort Benning's Billy R. Weaver received honors from the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command as BG Barry McCaffrey, Assistant Commandant, presented him with the TRADOC Organization Documentation Incentive Award and a $1500 monetary award during a ceremony outside Infantry Hall.

Weaver, a federal employee for more than 31 years, received honors in the category of "technical excellence in organization documentation."

The criteria set up by TRADOC required "demonstrated performance of supervisory, managerial, and technical duties resulting in significant achievements and improvements."



"Weaver, as an Organization and Equipment Planner in the Organization and Personnel Systems Division, Directorate of Combat Development, is the Infantry School' s functional expert on all matters pertaining to Basis of Issue Plans (BOIP), and Qualitative and Quantitative Personnel Requirement Information (QQPRI)," said McCaffrey.



Weaver personally wrote the Infantry School Standard Operating Procedures for BOIP development.

According to Col. Thomas K. Seybold, Director, Combat Developments, "this document, which is the single most definitive publication on basis of issue management and development to date, is being used by the Allen Corporation to develop an instruction guide for TRADOC school use in BOIP development."

In nominating Weaver for the award, MG Edwin H. Burba Jr., said that "the complicated processes of documenting the force are tedious, difficult, often routine, but always critical. Correct documentation requires dedicated, loyal and professional civilian personnel who often work with little or no recognition."

TRADOC, in an effort to recognize "significant accomplishments by civilian personnel employed in support of, or in a TRADOC organization documents office," found the command's top civilian, Billy R. Weaver, at Fort Benning.

PTSD problems, solutions aired

By Chaplain (Maj.) Philip R. Touw
Martin Army Community Hospital

It has been called many names — shell shock, war neuroses and combat stress to list but a few. Today, it is known as Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD), and it is closely linked with Vietnam Veterans. While coming home was difficult, most made the transition and have adjusted well to their postwar life. Others, however, have not been so lucky. For approximately 500,000 veterans, PTSD disrupts not only their lives, but the lives of others who come in contact with them.

The problems surface in any number of ways and vary from one vet to another. Sleep disturbances, flashbacks of combat, feelings of isolation and anger, depression, loneliness, emotional numbing, sometimes alcohol and drug abuse, and even suicidal feelings are common symptoms of PTSD. To date, statistics show that Vietnam Veterans have almost twice the suicide rate as those who were non-Vietnam Veterans. A recent televised report stated that as many as 60,000 have taken their own lives. This is especially tragic when one considers that this number exceeds the number listed as killed in combat.

If these behaviors have existed following all wars, why are the problems of the Vietnam Veteran so unique? It has been said that Vietnam was "difficult," and it was. The average age of the soldier fighting in Vietnam was 19.2 years. This was much younger than the age of those involved in combat in either World War II or Korea. The less mature soldier was more vulnerable to the stresses of combat.

Youth, the nature of combat, feeling of alienation, and the futility of the war effort, coupled with the availability of drugs and alcohol led some to "self-medicate" in an attempt to escape the reality of daily living. For some Vietnam Vets, this escape technique has persisted to the present.

Isolation was another major factor in making the Vietnam experience different. DEROS was instituted in order to provide soldiers with shorter combat exposure. That was its positive point. But from a negative standpoint, soldiers were rotated into and out of combat, individually. There was little or no time for orientation to one's unit and very little re-orientation upon their return home.

Some tried to reenter a peacetime culture only to find that their outlook and future life expectations had completely changed. Fantasy led many to believe that all would be well once they returned to the "real world," but too often, this wasn't the case. And just as there had been no time to grieve for the loss of a friend, there was no time to depressurize.

With the convenience of modern transportation, it was possible to be lifted from the rice paddy and transported to one's own living room within as little as 36 hours. And just as the vet left home alone, he returned alone. Some were fortunate. They came home to those who would help the wounds to heal. Others with little or no support sought out less satisfactory means of coping. Some continued to "self-medicate." Some sought only peace and solitude and surrounded themselves with a kind of self-imposed isolation. For some, this life continues. Most admit to having a few friends and those to whom they feel the closest are fellow vets. There isn't much opportunity or desire to socialize, especially with those who weren't there. There is sometimes the feeling that others do not understand. And so depression and loneliness become a vicious cycle.

There is a popular adage that time heals all wounds. Time, however, has been slow to take away the hurt of the Vietnam Vet. Support groups, family therapy and individual therapy have provided much in the way of helping. The results have shown that the efforts were worthwhile. For the Vet, there is the ability to learn, to trust, to feel, to socialize and to live life more fully. For the rest of us, there is the realization that they can come home again.

Soldiers lend a hand to Texans

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group Correspondent

In today's world, the philosophies of "every man for himself" and "survival of the fittest" seem to be practiced by more people than ever before. The reason for those attitudes might be because many people find it hard to take time out from our complex society to help those with greater problems and very much in need of a helping hand.

However, the Army has always prided itself on helping people in times of crisis and over the years, units from Fort Benning have come to the aid of people in need in many parts of the world as well as our own country.

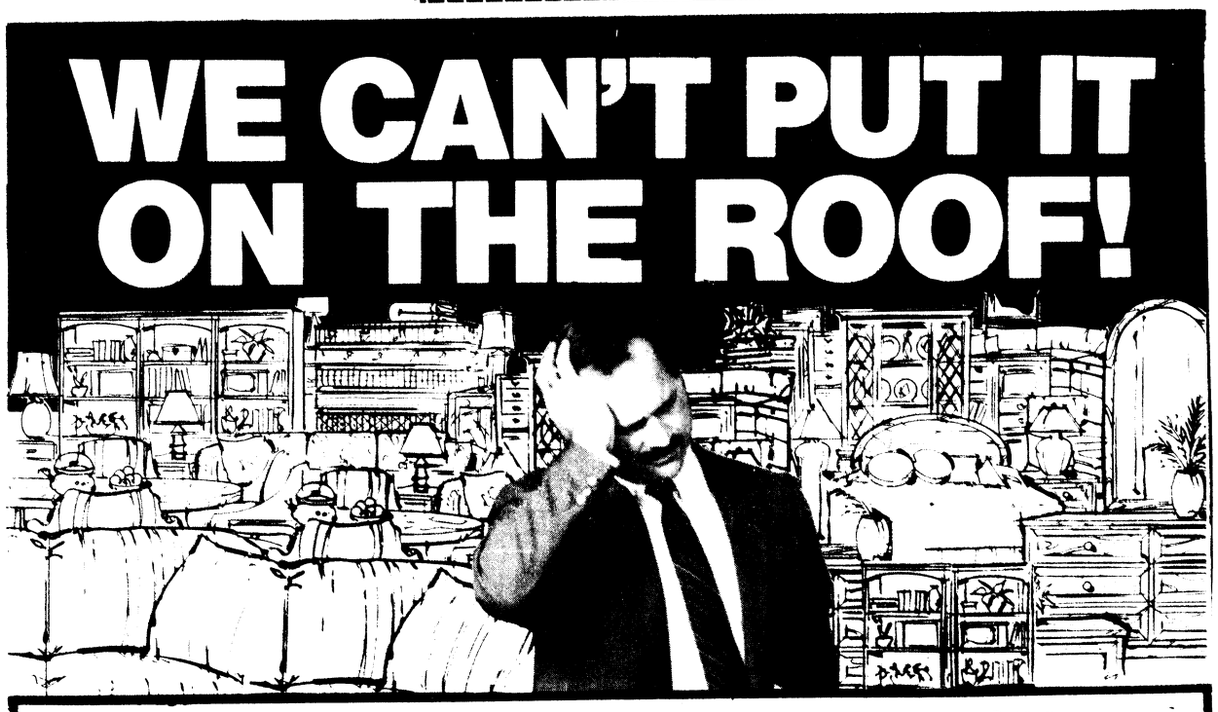
One such unit from the 36th Engineer Group has truly lived up to its motto "We Care" by aiding a small rural town in Texas recently after it was devastated by a tornado in late May.

The soldiers of the 608th Ordnance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion learned of the disaster, which claimed the lives of 32 school children in the town of Saragossa, through the evening news reports and through Sgt. Maj. Eugene Ashley, of the 608th Ordnance Company. According to Capt. Carl Rynyon, commander of the 608th, Ashley was the primary force behind the company's efforts to collect clothes for the people of Saragossa, whose town was literally destroyed by the tornado.

"When we heard that the people of Saragossa were in desperate need of food and clothing, we decided to put together a clothing drive," Ashley said, "so the 608th soldiers and their families went to work gathering new and used clothing, shoes, boots and blankets. After all of the clothing had been donated some wives and children of the soldiers of the 608th spent hours separating and packing the donations which were loaded onto trucks."

On June 25th Ashley and three other soldiers from the 608th, Sgt. Robert Parker, SSgt. Carl Pope and SP4 Ward Rice left for Sargossa.

Ashley said the soldiers of the 608th charish the fact that they were able to be part of such a humanitarian project.



Five facts you should know about depression

1. Depression is not a character flaw. It is nothing to be ashamed of.
2. Depression is very common. As many as one in twelve of us suffer from depression right now.
3. Depression often is not treated because many of its victims don't complain. But they may have severe symptoms—both physical and psychological.
4. Modern treatment can help. There is no reason to suffer in silence.
5. With the help of millions of people like you, we're working for more and better treatment for depression and other forms of mental illness.

Trick bikers entertain Summer Camp youngsters

Allen Horne

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

Three competitive "Freestylers"entertained Youth Activities Day Camp youngsters last week during a bike demonstration at the YA Center.

Brian Morris, 15, Chris Brown and Charles Davis, 16, performed such tricks as the Cherry Picker, Bar Ride, Miami Hopper and others.

The "Bar Ride" sent the Freestylers speeding along the pavement with hands extended while standing on top of the handle bars. While the bike is supported on it rear wheel for the "Cherry Picker," riders sole support for the "Miami Hopper" is the handle bars, where they spin the bike around, laying it to a complete stop on its handle bars.

The youngsters perform these and other tricks in competition, where judges score them on smoothness, difficulty, and overall showmanship.

"At each contest," said Morris, "there are at least 20 to 30 people competing in each class."

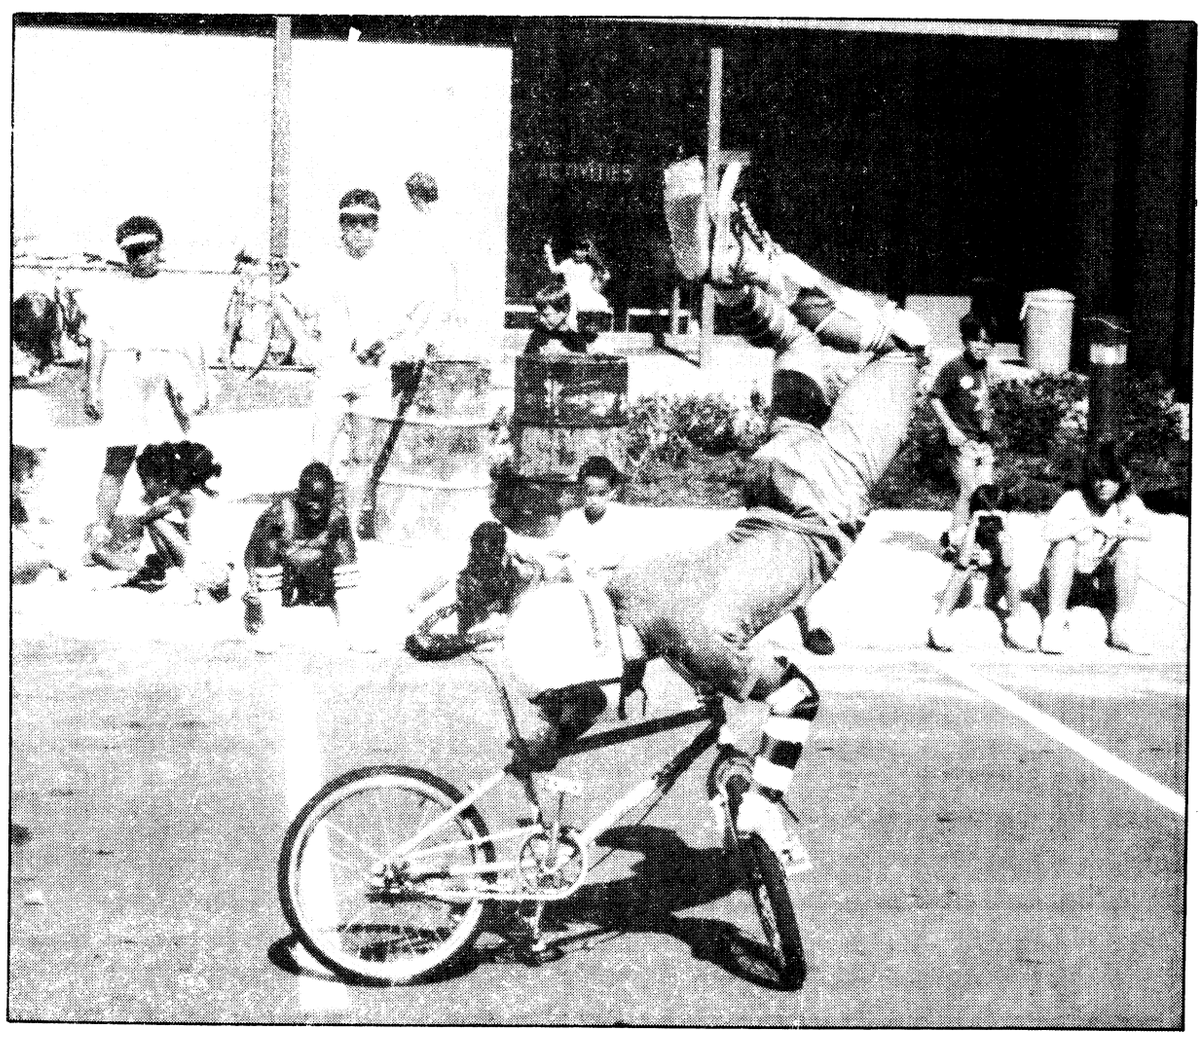
Classes are broken down by age groups, according to novice, intermediate, expert, or professional experience.

The local daredevils' experience comes from more than a year of practice and competition.

"It started for me when a magazine came to the wrong house, said Morris." "I read it, enjoyed it, and then started to save for the bike that I've had for more than two years."

The bikes used to perform the stunts are not the common 20-inch street bike, nor do they compare in price.

"These bikes are designed with the strength in the center, allowing greater balance"said Brown.



"They also have a tangle-free brake-cable system, with 48 spokes rather than 36. The frames are made of chrome alloy steel.

Dressed out with all the extras, stunt bikes can get expensive.

"I have more than $700 invested in my bike," said Morris. "The three of us together have over $1,500 tied up in just the bikes. The ramps used in some of the stunts begin at around $250, but can easily reach the $3000 range."

On a $3000 ramp, the professional bikers rocket 12 to 14 feet above the top of ramp, before turning around in mid-air to make their decent, very similiar to the skate board aerial trick. But even in the early stages, Morris boasts a 4-foot turnaround.

While the ramp really ignited a sparkle in the eyes of the six to eight-year-old day camp kids, the freestylers reminded the youth that "should they decide to become stunt riders, it is best to start with the basics, and most importantly to always wear safety gear. Because, the greatest trick is to practice safety."

Combat Medics construct rafts at Uchee Creek

Steve Simpson

With all their might, soldiers in Company B, 197th Support Battalion, desparately paddle their raft around a buoy in route to the launching area to evacuate the injured.

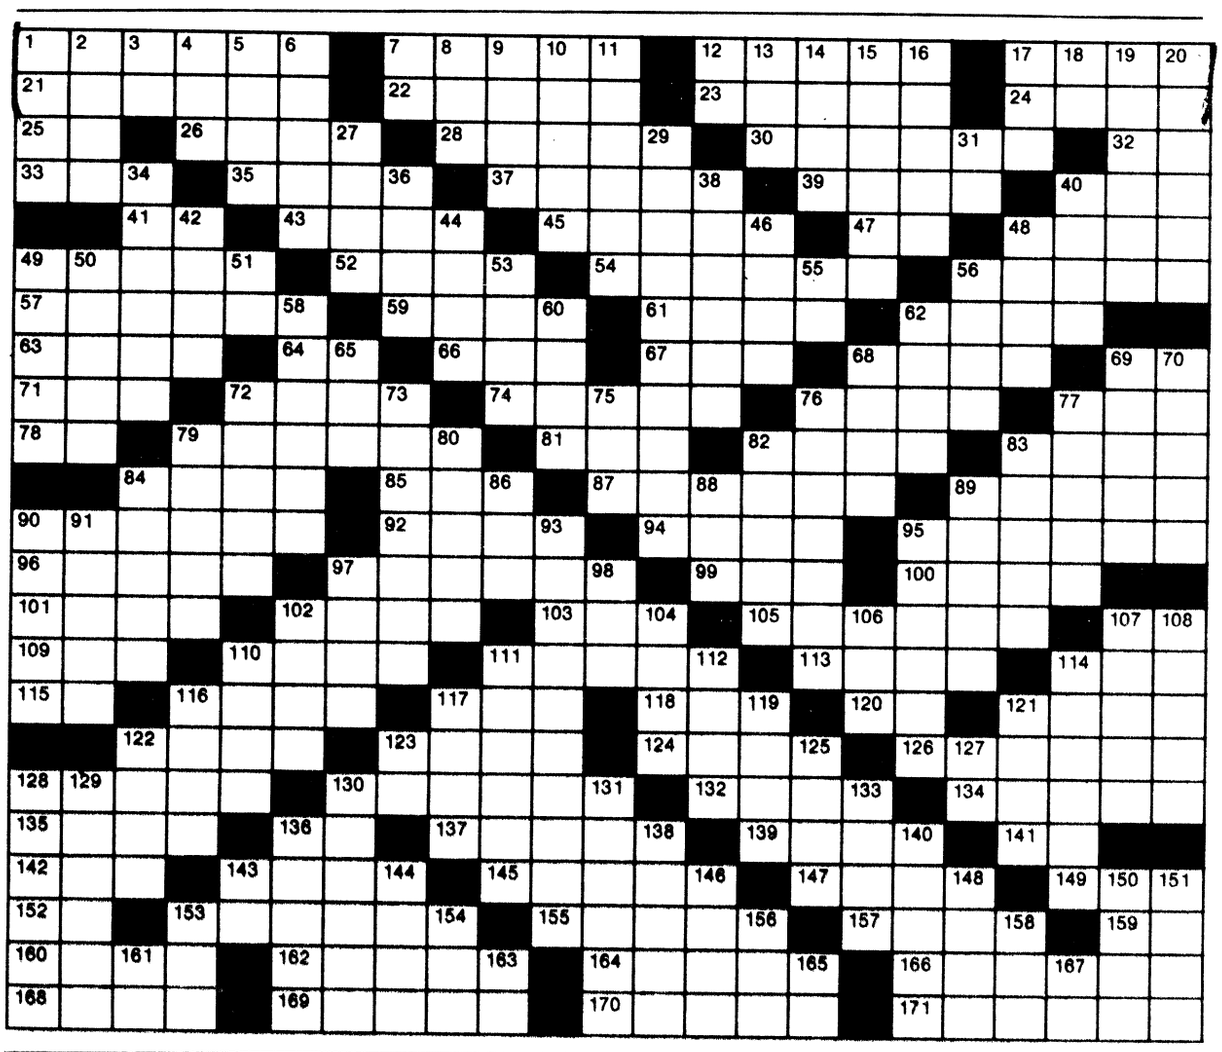
By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

Company B of the 197th Support Battalion recently held a class on raft-building at Uchee Creek recreation area.

The class was held on the bank of the Chattahoochee River. SFC Alfred C. Vogekang, Treatment Platoon Sergeant, was the primary instructor. The only materials the soldiers had at their disposal were medical litters, ropes, litter straps, and one of the most critical items, a large piece of canvas to create the floor of the raft. The soldiers used shorthand shovels as rafting paddles.

"We recently had several classes on water-safety and, of course, everyone has participated in drown-proofing," Vogekang said. "The raft building idea came straight out of our Combat Medic technical manual with special emphasis placed on patient safety and evacuation techniques.

When the three canvas rafts were launched, it was a smooth ride, with the crew and patients aboard, there was only one thing left to do, try to reach the other side of the creek bank and return. Even with all the talented soldiers exhibiting brains and brawn, only one raft managed to survive the grueling test. The other two rafts didn't make out quite as well, but it taught the soldiers they could indeed make a raft out of combat medic materials in order to increase their odds of survival.



"I wouldn't be afraid to try this in wartime," said PFC Leo Laclair, "because it really works."

"I didn't think our raft would float because of the big hole in the middle of it," added Lucien S. Chandler, "but to our amazement, we're the ones that made it."

The training that Company B completed was a boost to their confidence. It showed once again that soldiers can overcome any obstacle that may get in their way.

VA Q&A

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q: What is the current VA-guaranteed mortgage rate?

A: The VA-guaranteed mortgage rate was set at 10 percent on May 11 of this year.

Q: May a veteran who has served only during peacetime in the US Armed Forces be buried in a national cemetery?

A: Yes, providing the service was under conditions other than dishonorable.

Q: How does a veteran qualify for the annual clothing allowance payment from the VA?

A: Any veteran who is entitled to receive compensation for a service-connected disability for which he or she wears or uses a prosthetic or orthopaedic appliance, including a wheelchair, may qualify. Before paying the allowance, the VA must determine that the appliance wears out or tears clothing.

ONE-FOURTH OF ALL AMERICANS WHO HAVE HEART ATTACKS DIE QUIETLY.

They tell themselves it's indigestion. Or that they're too young to be having a heart attack. Or too healthy. They wait an average of three hours before they even think about calling for help.

If you experience pressure, fullness, squeezing or pain in the center of your chest that lasts two minutes — or pain that spreads to your shoulders, neck or arms — or dizziness, fainting, sweating, nausea or shortness of breath — call the emergency medical service.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Operation Crime Watch has come to Fort Benning! Anyone witnessing criminal or suspicious activity is encouraged to notify the Military police by calling 545-5222. An MP patrol will be dispatched to investigate the incident or other action will be taken, as may be appropriate.

The objective of the Crime Watch Program is to educate and motivate the Fort Benning community to immediately report crimes or suspicious occurrences. Experience has proven that the sooner a crime is reported, the greater the chances that the perpetrator(s) will be identified and apprehended.

If you wish to make a report, you should provide the Military Police with as much of the following information as possible:

Who — Identify yourself or state that you wish to remain anonymous. Next identify and/or describe the person or persons involved in the incident.

What — State as direct as possible the crime or what suspicious occurrence is involved.

When — Take care to say specifically whether the crime is about to happen, is in progress or has already happened.

Where — Pinpoint the location as exactly as possible by giving the name of the nearest landmark or intersection, a specific address or other information as appropriate.

How — You should provide a narrative description of what specifically was observed; for example, whether the crime was at gunpoint or another weapon was used, what injuries were involved; vehicle descriptions, directions of escape, etc.

With your help, operation Crime Watch can make Fort Benning a safer place to live and work. Your help now could save you, your family and your friends from becoming crime victims in the future. Dial 545-5222.

Persons making Crime Watch reports and identifying themselves will recieve a Crimebiter award from the Crime Prevention section of the Fort Benning Military Police activity.

3rd Herd nips Co D, 7-5

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

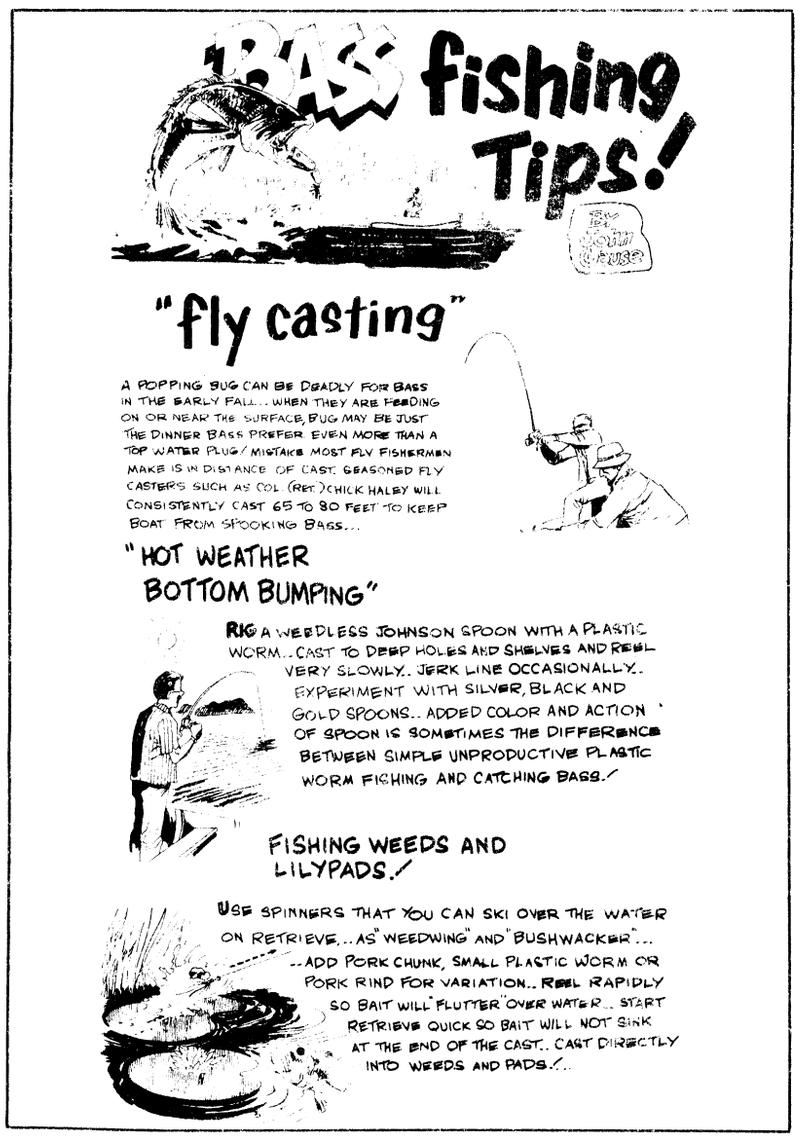
A third inning homerun by Terry Hill, third baseman for HHC, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, sparked a two-run rally that led to a 7-5 victory over Company D, 197th Support Battalion in brigade softball league play.

The HHC 3-7 players never trailed after scoring four times in the bottom of the second inning. With the combined skills of the entire team the players believed that it was just a matter of time before they would beat Delta Support and take the lead in in the Red Division.

"With a record of 12-2, all we had to do was win to take over first place," said Michael Siehr, coach of Company D.

But even with Delta Support's optimistic attitude and scoring four runs in the bottom of the fifth inning, it wasn't enough to keep HHC 3-7 soldiers from outscoring them.

"Hey, what can I say, it's just another game for us, now it's off to the brigade playoffs," added Bob George of HHC 3-7.



A soldier from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Infantry, 7th Battalion, slides into home plate, but is called out.

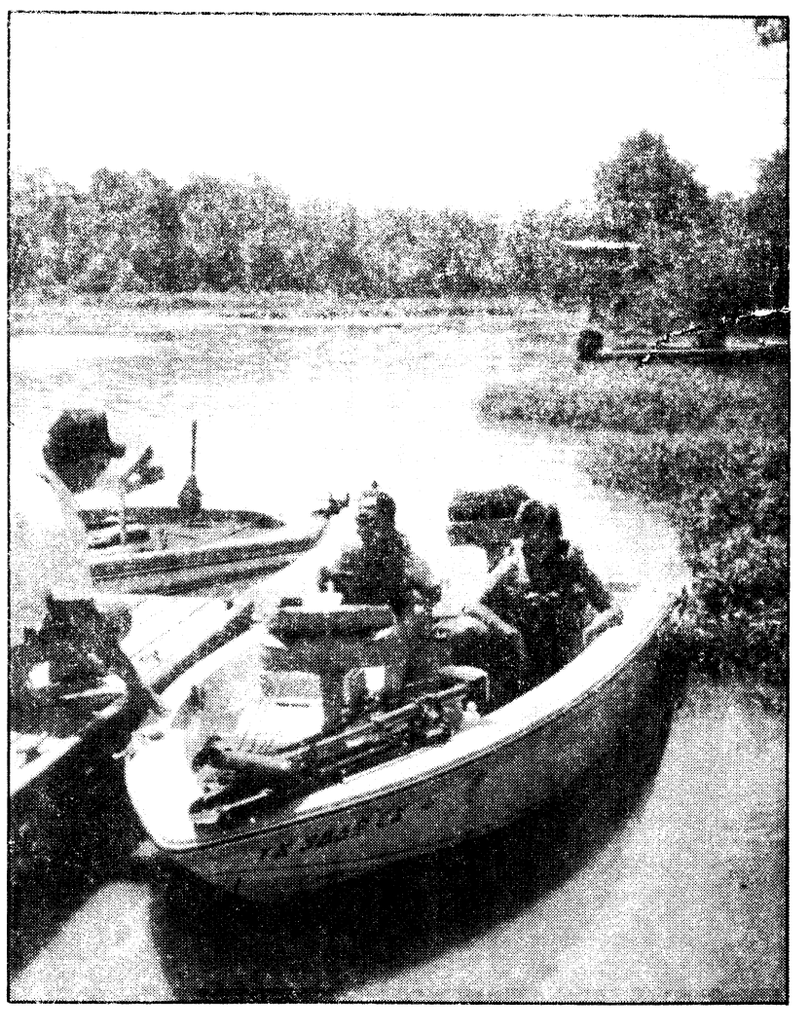
Scouts fish for bass to earn merit badge

The Bass Club of Fort Benning conducted its seventh fishing and motor boating Merit Badge clinic June 27 at the Uchee Creek Recreation Area.



The clinic was attended by scouts and scout leaders from Troops 27, 302, and 325, all member troops of the Chattahoochee Council. Scouts were trained and tested on the tasks required by the merit badges, as well as taken fishing by the club members. Eight bass boats and 14 club members supported the clinic.

The scouts spent a full day at the creek receiving training and being tested on boating safety, boat operation, fishing equipment, knots, boating and fishing laws, fish recognition, and conservation.

Training and testing was provided by club members Harry Hall, Jennifer Waugh, Marshall Graham, George Nichols, Jim Southern and Skip Ray. Boats were provided by Bob Billman, Willie Goble, Jesse Waugh, John Campbell, Max Kravig, Pat Bennett and Otis Carter.

The scouts were able to accomplish the Fishing Merit Badge requirements of catching two species of fish by legal means. They were able to use artificial lures and professional type tackle provided by the boat owners.

The Fort Benning Morale Support Activities supported the clinic with facilities, fishing boats and outboard engines for training. Leon Jordan Marine loaned the troop a fully rigged boat and Tom Mann's Fish World supplied prizes and literature for the scouts.

Post scores well during inspection

Installation of Excellence team finds improvements since last year's visit

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A Training and Doctrine Command Installation of Excellence inspection team toured post last week, as part of a program that seeks to upgrade morale by upgrading the appearance of installations. The program rewards military installations that seek ways to improving the appearance of facilities.

The team was led by Col. Benjamin Taylor, chief inspector for the program. During the visit,the team toured the whole post and gave spot awards to people who were doing an exceptionally good job in their particular area.

Benning drew praise for its design and implementation of an Installation Design Guide, which sets standards for the post's visual environment.

Part of complying with design guidelines is the post color scheme of beige and brown, and the new signs that have been replaced on post.

The team said that Fort Benning has made vast strides since last year's inspection, but there is still room for improvement.

According to Craig Taylor, Installation of Excellence coordinator, the team was especially impressed with the Clothing Sales Store.

"They said this is the best Clothing Sales Store that we have seen thus far in TRADOC," he said.

"They also noticed the progress made by the Main Post chapels on improving their landscaping," he said.

Improving the appearance of Fort Benning is a ongoing project, Taylor said, and urged post residents to keep up the good work.

Two colonels tapped for general's stars

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two Fort Benning officers are among 56 colonels nominated by the President to be general officers.

Selected for general's stars are Col. Richard S. Siegfried, commander, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center and Col. William W. Hartzog, commander, 197th Infantry Brigade.

Siegfried enlisted in the Army in 1961 and served with the 100th Division at Fort Chaffee, Ark., and Fort Benning, before being commissioned as a second lieutenant of infantry in 1963.

He is a graduate of the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, Armed Forces Staff College, and the U.S. Army War College. He holds a bachelor of science degree in commerce and business administration and a master's in industrial management, both earned at the University of Alabama.

Before his current assignment, Siegfried commanded the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

Hartzog received his commission on graduation from The Citadel, in Charleston, S.C., in 1963.

During his nearly 25 years service, Hartzog has served in a variety of command, instructor and staff positions, including tours in Panama, Vietnam and West Point, N.Y.

In addition to a bachelor's degree in English, Hartzog also holds a masters degree in psychology.

He attended the Basic and Advanced Courses, U.S. Marine Corps Command and Staff College, and the U.S. Army War College.

Before assuming his current command, Hartzog was the executive officer to the commanding general at Training and Doctrine Command, Fort Monroe, Va.

The nominations now go to the U.S. Senate for confirmation.

Soldiers find problem-solving easier using new single source data system

Army News Service

Soldiers will now have an easier time resolving some of their pay and personnel problems since the Army began to implement Single Source Data July 20. SSD is the concept of using input from one system to update information in another system.

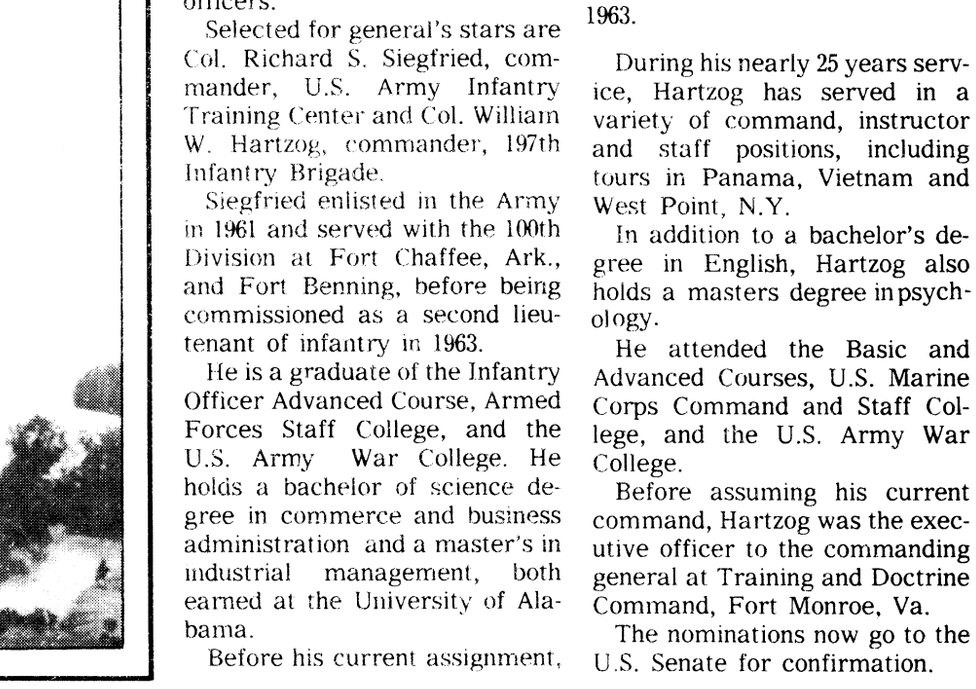
The two systems involved are Finance and Personnel. Officials from the Army's Finance and Accounting Center and Personnel Information Systems Command have been working together on this new way to verify, share and maintain information in soldiers' files.

A Finance-Personnel Joint Task Force identified 14 data elements that both systems use. Data elements are pieces of information about soldiers that the Army needs to keep in soldiers' records.

"Finance and personnel have been separately entering these data elements into their systems, even though we both use the same elements," said Richard Polacheck, Single Source Data project manager for the Personnel Information Systems Command. "If either of us made the wrong entry, it could cause problems for the soldier."

Under Single Source Data, either Finance or Personnel is responsible for each data element. The three data elements that have been implemented and their proponents, are pay grade, personnel; and basic active service date and pay entry basic date: finance. All three elements affect the amount of pay a soldier receives.

"The proponent enters and maintains its data element in soldiers' files, and only the proponent may make changes to that element. However, the personnel and finance systems interface to share that information," Polacheck explained.



When personnel changes a soldier's pay grade in its Standard Installation/Division Personnel System (SIDPERS), the change also goes automatically into finance's Joint Uniform Military Pay System (JUMPS). One entry results in two updates.

For soldiers, SSD means that they will have to go to only one place — the proponent — to get a problem with one of these pieces of information fixed. They will not have to deal with both finance and personnel to correct one of these data elements.

"Single Source Data will increase the accuracy of the finance and personnel data bases," Polacheck said. "It should save many hours of time for technicians who enter the information and for soldiers who need to solve problems caused by incorrect data elements."

The Army successfully tested the three data elements that have been implemented and teams have been in the field since early June training finance and personnel users on SSD.

The finance and personnel communities are continuing to combine their efforts to improve service to soldiers. The joint task force is working on a plan to implement the other 11 SSD data elements.

POW/MIA flag to fly monthly in remembrance

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Today, a flag honoring American prisoners of war and those missing in action flys beneath our national colors atop the flagpole in front of Infantry Hall.

The flag will fly the fourth Friday of each month to pay tribute to Americans who have been held prisoner of war, or who were or are still missing in action in any conflict that United States soldiers have participated.

The flag design shows the silhouetted profile of a man beneath the backdrop of a guard tower and is bordered in black. The flag was the idea of Mrs. Michael Hoff, the wife of an MIA. Hoff is a member of the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia.

Other occasions the flag will be flown are Veterans Day, Memorial Day, National POW-MIA Recognition Day and Jan.27, the anniversary of the signing of the Paris Peace Agreement.

OPINION

New TRADOC commander stresses professionalism

Army News Service

Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman became the commander of Training and Doctrine Command at Fort Monroe, Va., in June. In his speech at the ceremony, he shared some of his command philosophy, exerpts of which follow.

- TRADOC's Role: TRADOC's responsibilities in building our nation's warfighting capability are based on an understanding of the lessons of history and understanding of our nation's global responsibility and the envisionment of the future.
- Training: We will continue to focus on the excellence in training, for the United States Army soldier, who is the embodiment of this nation's commitment to the defense of freedom around the world, deserves no less.
- Competence: We must be secure in the knowledge that we have prepared our soldiers in peacetime in the tactical and technical competencies that they will need in war. Training and education are our business. We owe our best efforts to our National Guard, our Army Reserve and to our active soldiers to train to the highest individual and collective standards.
- Quality products: The soldiers that TRADOC trained five years ago are the professional noncommissioned officers of today, quality TRADOC products. Today's superb company commanders were ROTC graduates and officer basic course graduates and advance course graduate students five years ago. Quality TRADOC products. "The big five weapons systems the TRADOC leadership dreamed of a decade ago are the foundation of our warfighting capabilities in the field, in the hands of the troops today. The Abrams, the Bradley, the Blackhawk, the Apache and the Patriot. Quality TRADOC products."
- Winning: The greatest gift that this command and the Army can give soldiers is to prepare them to fight and win and survive on the battlefield, so that they may return to their country and their families having accomplished their missions and preserved our freedoms.

Revolutionary War chaplain knew importance of religious freedom

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Abraham Baldwin, who represented Georgia at the Constitutional Convention and served as a chaplain to soldiers in the continental Army of the United States, was a truly great American during the Revolutionary War. Throughout his career he combined a strong faith in democratic institutions with a strong belief in an informed citizenry as essential to the continued well-being of those institutions. The son of an unlettered Connecticut blacksmith, Baldwin's own distinguished public service clearly demonstrated how a strong faith in God and academic achievement could open opportunities in early American society.

Educated primarily for a position in the church, he served in the Continental Army during the climactic years of the Revolution. There, close contact with men of widely varying economic and social backgrounds broadened his outlook and experience and convinced him that public leadership in America included a duty to instill in the electorate the tenets of civic responsibility.

As a chaplain during the Revolutionary War, Baldwin faced the risks and hardships suffered by other soldiers in the Army. His patriotism, valor, and loyalty to the new Nation is unquestioned. He stands in history as one of those who served God and Nation in war and peace, and as a framer of the government under which we now enjoy religious freedom.

Cuts in recreation programs hurt morale

Association of the United States Army

Congress seems resolved to severely limit the funds spent in support of the Army's Quality of Life programs for soldiers and their families. In the 1987 Continuing Resolution, the law which permits the Army to operate for the current fiscal year, Congress reduced the Army's Morale, Welfare and Recreation programs by $32.5 million.

It was the intent of the legislators to reduce the taxpayer support of certain revenue producing activities in metropolitan areas of the United States, such as bowling alleys, clubs, golf courses and temporary lodging facilities (guest houses). Unfortunately, the amount of the cut was twice the size of appropriated fund support for these activities forcing the Army to spread nearly half the reduction to overseas and remote areas and to deprive some non revenue generating programs of essential support.

Programs such as physical fitness and recreation centers, libraries, gymnasiums and other athletic activities have traditionally received more than two-thirds of their funding from the profits of post exchanges and other revenue generating MWR programs. Thus, soldiers and their families were already paying most of the cost of these activities. The remaining third of the support came from the taxpayers in much the same manner that similar programs are normally funded in local municipalities with tax revenue.

Gen. Carl E. Vuono, the new Army Chief of Staff, is reported to have a sign in his office which reads, "Quality of life is a readiness issue." Additional Congressional cuts to the Army MWR program, which contributes so handily to that quality of life, will undoubtedly force the closing of some of these facilities.

The exceptional young men and women who wear the uniform today are entitled to the same quality of life that is afforded the society they are pledged to defend. The Army's MWR programs help tremendously in providing soldiers and thier families that quality of life. They directly affect our ability to man the force and to maintain a high degree of readiness. These programs deserve the full support of the Adminstration and Congress.

Monday marks Korean Armistice

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Monday marks the 34th Anniversary of the signing of the Korean Conflict Armistice- the official end to hostilities between North and South Korea.

It is a reminder of how American Forces fought and died to help keep a people free. It is a day to recall the 33,000 Americans who gave their lives and the more than 100,000 Americans who were wounded.

It is a day to remember the 41,000 American soldiers and airmen, along with 600,000 South Korean soldiers, presently guard a 150-mile demilitarized zone dividing the two countries.

If the absence of armed conflict between the two Koreas is to continue, it is a day to remind ourselves that aggressive ambitions are not held in check by words alone.

Play teaches kids about sexual abuse

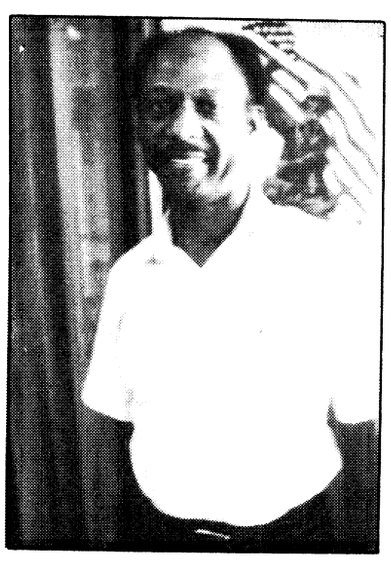
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The curtain goes up at 1 p.m. at the Youth Activites Center Tuesday, as summer camp participants watch "Private Places", a play presented by the Open City Inc./Creative Resources Enhancing Art Theather Education (CREATE).

This special showing is sponsored by the Army Family Advocacy Administration in support of their Child Sexual Abuse Prevention Program.

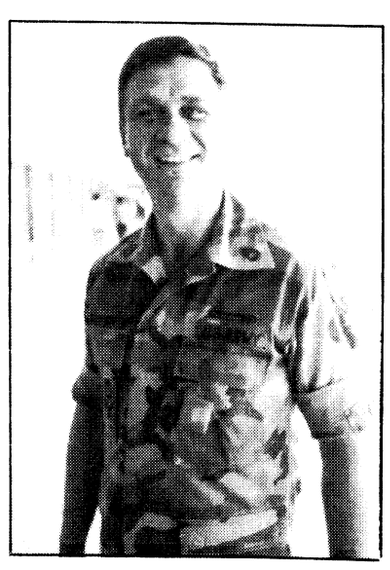
"Private Places is a one act play about sexual abuse and how children can be empowered to say "NO."

VARIOUS VOICES / What is your opinion of the unrest in Korea?



2nd Lt. Jay Henry, 21st Company, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade, - I think they are taking some positive steps to alleviate the problems over there. I think the future for the young people is improving."

Capt. David Hlass, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - "The students are part of the younger generation and the govenment needs to listen to them. It is a democratic society and they should listen to the ideas and recommendations of the students and the elected government officials."



Capt. James Crews, 12th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - I am assuming that, since the population is now better educated, the old strict conservatism is not being tolerated especially by the student population who are making the largest noise. I would say that there is room for reform."

CSM (retired) William Kendrick, DOTD, - I agree with the students. They may be going a little bit overboard but sometimes it takes that to get the point across. Free elections will eliminate the hand picking of successors. Let every man sell himself."

SFC Tom Hockaday, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade, - It's a shame that it has gone as far as it has but it is apparent that the populous wants the same thing. They all just want a more democratic government. Hopefully, this push will get the people what they want."

SFC Raymond Prickett, 10th Company, The School Brigade, - "Korea is an industrial country who is moving right up. The people are standing up for their rights. They have been working for so long for pennies and now they are just asking for what is justifiably theirs."

Soldiers from Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, load 105 mm shells onto an M60A3 tank, preparing for firing during exercise "Hell Fire."

Training is sheer 'Hell Fire' for combined arms soldiers

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

Three miles can be a long way to go when you're a soldier in 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor or 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry. Especially when it's the last three miles on the road to Hasting's range for a training exercise called "Hell Fire," conducted July 13-17.

The exercise was designed to test the combined arms tactics that the armor and infantry task force has been training in, as well as bring in the live-fire operations.

The first thing the soldiers of the Armor task force did was breech a large concertina wire obstacle while in a chemical environment. Then the vehicles and personnel had to be decontaminated.

As the task force continued, "enemy" prisoners were taken. The prisoners were disarmed, moved quickly to a safe area, then searched for weapons or information. Wounded were given medical care or possibly evacuated. Officers were segregated from enlisted men. Then the battalion was notified of the capture and the prisoners moved quickly to the rear.

"This exercise incorporates various aspects of training," said 1st Lt. Orest M. Logusz of the 2-69 Armor operations section, "such as clearing obstacles, decontamination, prisoner of war handling, plus shooting as a task force on the gunnery range."

After the tanks and armored personnel carriers arrived at Hasting's Range, they pulled up to the firing line in company-sized elements.

"We are trying to incorporate all the weapons systems we will have at the National Training Center's live fire," explained master gunner Sgt. 1st Class Robert L. Tucker.

The gunnery on Hasting's Range simulates a battalion-size enemy attack. Drone aircraft simulates an attack on the firing line, and machine gun fire filled the sky to ward off the attack.

F-16 aircraft from Shaw Air Force Base, S.C., flew overhead to bomb targets miles in front of the firing line. As the enemy force advanced, cannon fire from Battery B, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery and mortars from HHC, 2-69 Armor layed in indirect fire.

Then the targets began to appear on the range. The task force fired simultaneously on the tank, APC and troop targets. The blast of the tank's 105mm guns stirred up dust to the point that it was hard to see the vehicles on the firing line. Later, during the night fire, muzzle flash and tracer rounds lit up the entire area.

The Hell Fire exercise was alot of training in a short period of time, but, it will prove invaluable when the task force deploys to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., next month.

As cadre, families and the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center chain of command watched, the history of the 10th Battalion (Vanguard) of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade was brought to a close on July 13 during an inactivation ceremony at Dickman Field.

Lt. Col. Paul F. Cullinane Jr., the last commander of the battalion and now 9th Battalion commander, said, "Today's ceremony was a sad occasion for the cadre and families of the 10th Battalion, bringing to a close a dedicated team of skilled trainers. The brief history of the "Vanguard" Battalion will long be remembered for its contribution to the ground combat force of both Reserve Component and Regular Army Forces around the world."

Activated on Dec. 3, 1982 at a ceremony in front of 2nd Infantry Training Brigade headquarters by Col. Lester Bennett, then USA infantry training commander, the 10th Battalion was the fifth battalion assigned to the 2nd ITB.

Three command teams have led the battalion.

The battalion's four training companies, staffed by 85 permanent cadre, are being redesignated and reassigned within 2nd ITB. On July 19, Charlie and Echo companies became Foxtrot and Golf companies, 9th Battalion.

Delta Company became Echo Company, 2nd Battlion on July 24. On Aug. 4, Alpha Company will be redesignated Bravo Company, 8th Battalion.

Since the 1982 activation, the Vanguard Battalion had trained more than 8,200 infantrymen now serving in combat units worldwide.

For now, even though the 10th Battalion is no more, the One Station Unit Training (OSUT) load will remain the same. The remaining nine battalions of USAITC will carry on with the mission of producing "combat-ready, fit-to-fight" infantrymen.

Illinois reservists dig in for hands on work experience

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

What's training you ask? Troop E, 106th Cavalry, found out when they arrived at Fort Benning and hooked up with Troop A, 15th Cavalry, 197th Infantry Brigade, for their annual external evaluation.

Nearly 170 National Guardsmen from Rock Falls, Ill. arrived in early July to test their combat skills and troop readiness.

"We've found that Fort Benning is the place for good extensive training on tactical maneuvers and performing maintenance," said the 106ths 1st Sgt. Courtney E. Penkhurst. "We can't build obstacles or forge creeks in Illinois. The level of training here has been a big help."

15th Cavalry soldiers are playing a major role in the training for the National Guardsmen. Mechanics are teaching technical skills to the National Guardsmen. The Illinois tankers and mechanics are learning firsthand the capabilities of the M60A3 tank, a weapon not available at their home unit. The Guardsmen were also interested in Tan Thermal Sights, another piece of gunnery equipment they don't often get to train with.

The 106th Cavalry received a real workout during tank gunnery, which culminated in a live-fire exercise.

Fort Benning's wide-open training areas and availability of equipment proved to be a valuable asset during the evaluation.

Engineers battle river during bridge building

Photos by Shawn Bryson

A 586th Engineer Company truck backs into the river while a Company E soldier awaits the release of his Mach I Combat Support Boat.

Soldiers from Company E climb aboard a Mach I after securing a bay.

A soldier from Company E secures a bay to be pushed to the other side of the Chattahoochee River to extend the bridge.

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group

With the river quite calm from the night's stillness and dawn only an hour away, Engineer Landing on the Chattahoochee was a very peaceful scene.

However, in the distance, the roar of trucks could be heard. Within moments, the once-still beachfront was turned into a battlefield. The aggressors were engineers and the opposing force was the river itself.

For the soldiers of Company E, 17th Engineer Battalion, 2nd Armored Division, Fort Hood, Texas, it was time to bridge the river in a way they'd never known. They were to bridge the Chattahoochee in blackout conditions with less than two weeks of steady experience with a ribbon bridge.

As the dust billows with each truck's passing, Echo's 1st Sgt. Gerald Flom, supervising his soldiers carefully, said "If it hadn't been for the great joint efforts between our company and the 586th Engineer Co. (Assault Float Bridge), the outstanding training our soldiers received in the past two weeks would not have been possible."

Company E came to Fort Benning July 2 to prepare for the upcoming REFORGER '87 in Europe, where its soldiers will be tested on their bridge-building skills, according to Flom. The first sergeant said that many of the ECHO soldiers had not trained with a ribbon bridge since their Advanced Individual Training (AIT). The 586th Engineer Co. (Assault Float Bridge) of the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, was called upon to provide Company E with a ribbon bridge and the Mach I Combat Support Boats necessary to construct the bridge.

After several days of classes and drills, the ECHO soldiers began constructing the ribbon bridges, reacquainting themselves with the split-second timing and do's and don'ts of river bridging.

According to Sgt. 1st Class Willie Thompson, the first platoon sergeant, both first and second platoon worked separately during the first part of their training, each trying to better itself by outdoing the other. However, when it was time to work together, the two platoons came together and truly demonstrated teamwork, according to Flom.

"First, the boats are lowered into the water, the boat crews climb aboard and the drivers position the boats," Thompson said. "Once the Mach I's are positioned," Thompson continued, "one by one the bridge's bays and ramps are released into the river." Thompson added that within seconds after a bay unfolds, a boat crew is fastening it to the boat and heading to the opposite side of the river, where other crews are waiting with more bays to be connected, eventually forming a ribbon bridge or raft.

Both platoons were timed from the time that the bays hit the water to the time that the floats and bridges were completed and moved into positions on the banks of the river, Thompson said.

"It's really great that my soldiers have performed so well even with the little experience they've had," said Sgt. 1st Class Don White, platoon sergeant for the second platoon. "I'm confident that my soldiers could go to Europe for the REFORGER right now and do very well."

The ECHO soldiers trained for several days in both daylight conditions and blackout conditions and left Fort Benning July 16 with all the skills necessary for a successful REFORGER in Europe. "We're leaving with a great deal of respect and gratitude for the 586th Engineer Co.," Flom added.

Summer finds USARSA busy training Latin American troops

By Marco Morales
U.S. Army School of the Americas

These past weeks of sunny, humid weather haven't affected training or the vast array of activities at the U.S. Army School of the Americas. In fact, summer months are the busiest at the schools.

Five different courses have graduated 203 officers and cadets from five Latin American countries since June 19 at USARSA.

Twenty-nine Salvadoran company grade officers graduated June 19 from the 11-week Combat Officer course. This course centers on company and battalion-level tactics and practical training on offensive and defensive operations and field artillery. This course also offers instruction on internal defense and development, which focuses on psychological operations.

Graduating June 25 from the 21-week Infantry Officer Qualification course were 58 cadets from the Dominican Republic. Designed to fit the training needs of that country's military academy. This course offers training in squad, platoon and combined arms tactics. This includes tactical doctrine, offensive and defensive operations, airmobile oprations, field artillery employment, armor operations, combat engineer operations, small unit patrolling and basic military mountaineering. The cadets get extensive training on individual and crew-served weapons.

The five-week Joint Operations course (Latin America) graduated 13 field grade officers June 24. This course prepares these officers to work together with other multi-service officers from within Central and South America and the Caribbean in preparing and planning for a joint task force operation using a map exercise.

Eighty-seven Colombian cadets graduated June 29 from the four-week Cadet Branch Orientation course. Colombian cadets have been receiving training at USARSA based on that country's military academy training needs. Each iteration of cadets receives specialized branch-oriented training, that is, infantry, field artillery, engineering, logistics or mechanized infantry.

Sixteen company grade officers representing Costa Rica, El Salvador and Honduras graduated July 15 from the Small Unit Training Management course. This six-week course prepares officers to plan, test and evaluate unit and individual training, skills qualification testing, instructional system development and war games.

USARSA has graduated more than 49,000 officers, cadets and noncommissioned officers from 22 Latin American countries since its inception in Panama in 1946.

197th soldier's 'hobby' leads to published novel

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

When you first meet Pvt. 1 Terrence G. Patterson, he looks and acts like any other soldier in the 197th Infantry Brigade. But Patterson knows more than driving on M113 Armored Personnel Carrier. He knows popular rock stars, famous thieves, great kings, enchanting princesses and strange beasts that no man has seen before. He knows them because he creates them, with a single stroke of his pen.

Known by the nickname "Stroke" to his friends in Company D, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, Patterson started writing when he was a pizza cook in his hometown of Savannah, Ga. He would make up jargons for the marquee in front of the pizza parlor.

Form this simple beginning, Patterson made his first attempt at writing a novel when he was a biology pre-med student at Savannah State College.

"When I first started, I wrote about six pages and said, 'wow, I got a book,'" says Patterson. "Other people would read my 'book' and say I had something good here, but I needed more. I kept looking at it and saying, 'no, this is a book.' Then I realized I was missing the dialogue."

"So, I made another draft and it came up to about 18 pages. Another draft brought it to about 100 pages, and now it's almost 300 pages long."

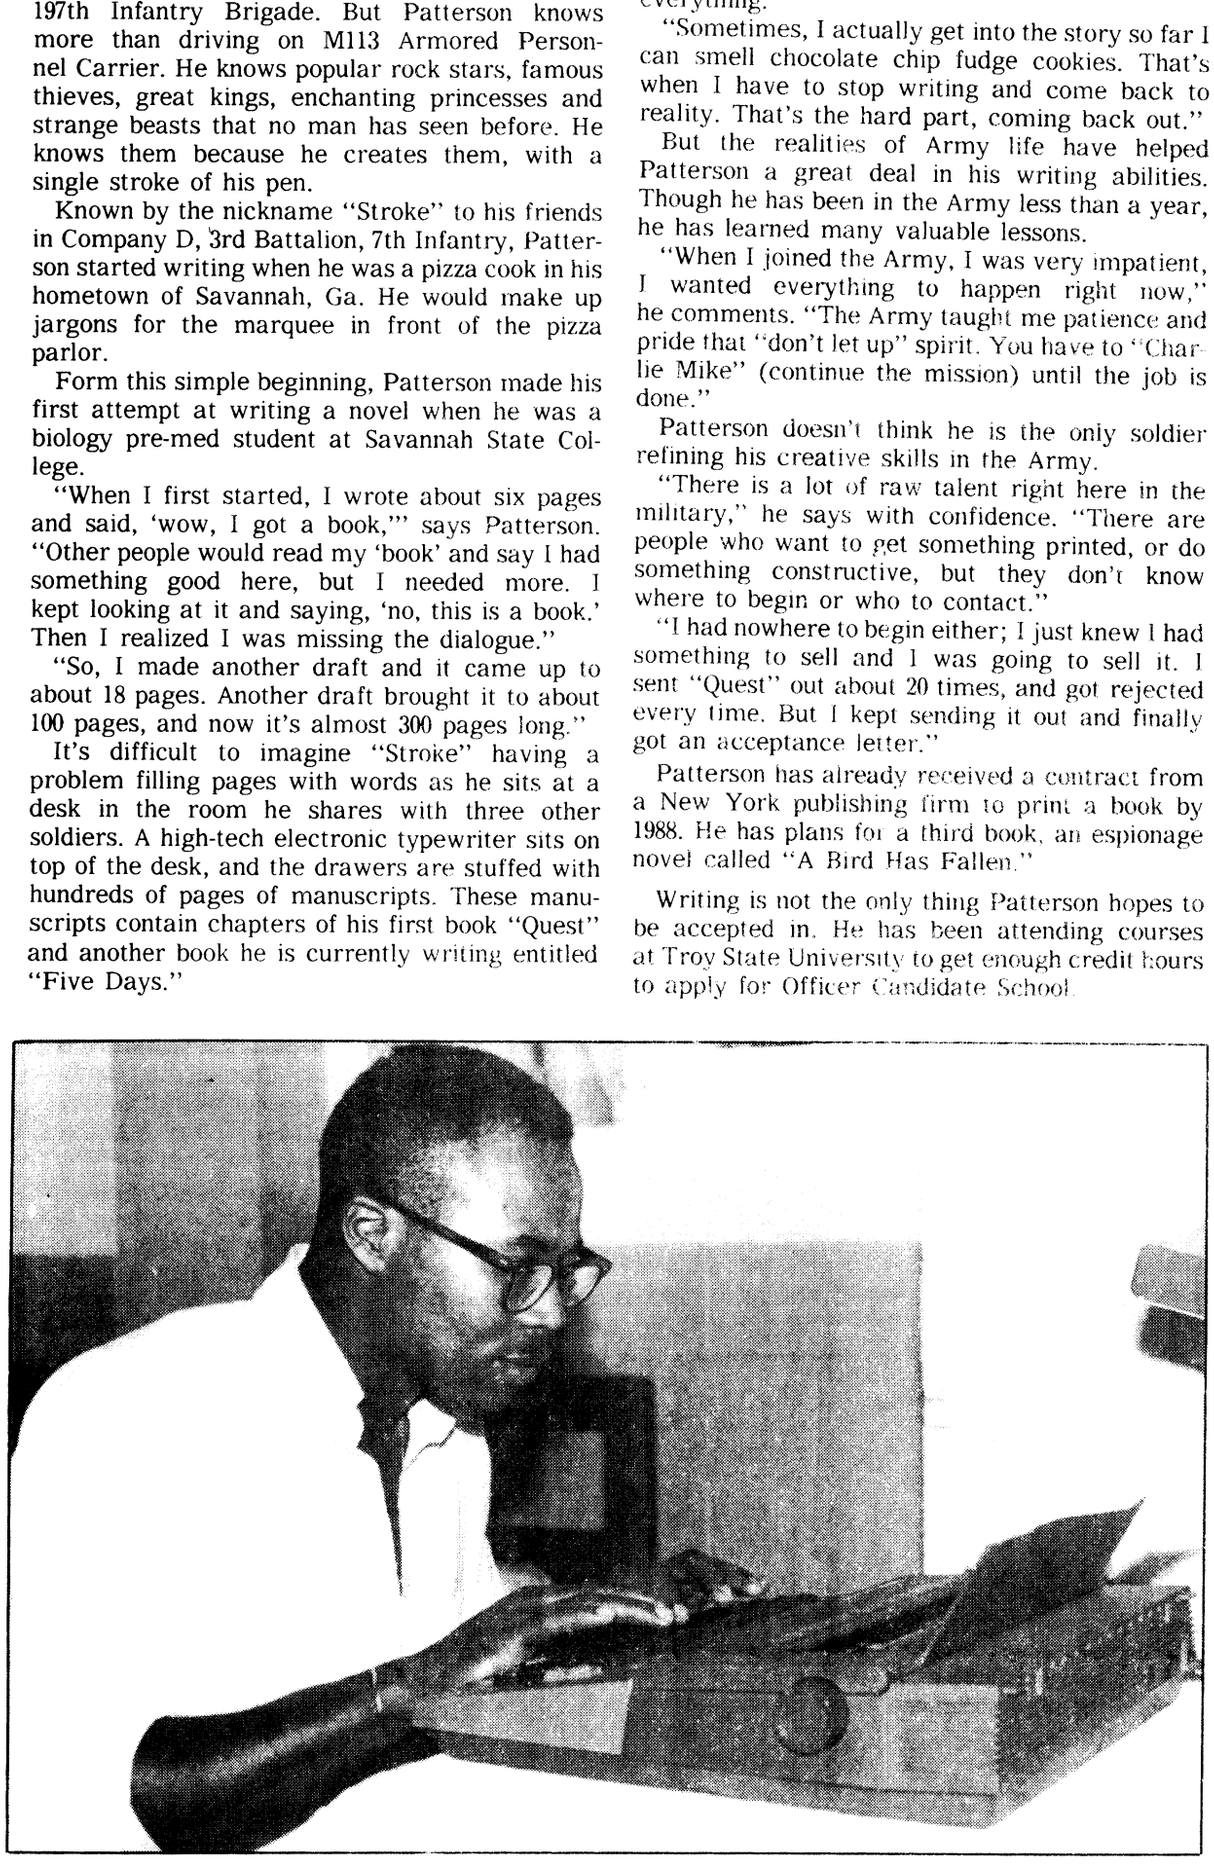
It's difficult to imagine "Stroke" having a problem filling pages with words as he sits at a desk in the room he shares with three other soldiers. A high-tech electronic typewriter sits on top of the desk, and the drawers are stuffed with hundreds of pages of manuscripts. These manuscripts contain chapters of his first book "Quest" and another book he is currently writing entitled "Five Days."

"Writing is like a form of entertainment to me," says Patterson. "I use the way I think and feel as my main character, and I tell him what to do. It's like I'm really there; I can see and hear everything."

"Sometimes, I actually get into the story so far I can smell chocolate chip fudge cookies. That's when I have to stop writing and come back to reality. That's the hard part, coming back out."

But the realities of Army life have helped Patterson a great deal in his writing abilities. Though he has been in the Army less than a year, he has learned many valuable lessons.

"When I joined the Army, I was very impatient, I wanted everything to happen right now," he comments. "The Army taught me patience and pride that "don't let up" spirit. You have to "Charlie Mike" (continue the mission) until the job is done."



Patterson doesn't think he is the only soldier refining his creative skills in the Army.

"There is a lot of raw talent right here in the military," he says with confidence. "There are people who want to get something printed, or do something constructive, but they don't know where to begin or who to contact."

"I had nowhere to begin either; I just knew I had something to sell and I was going to sell it. I sent "Quest" out about 20 times, and got rejected every time. But I kept sending it out and finally got an acceptance letter."

Patterson has already received a contract from a New York publishing firm to print a book by 1988. He has plans for a third book, an espionage novel called "A Bird Has Fallen."

Writing is not the only thing Patterson hopes to be accepted in. He has been attending courses at Troy State University to get enough credit hours to apply for Officer Candidate School.

3rd Battalion troops carry on distinguished tradition of service

Tim Wallis

Today's 3-7th Infantry soldiers are highly mechanized to provide the mobility, protection and firepower needed to be successful on a fast-moving battlefield.

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

EDITOR'S NOTE: In September, the 197th Infantry Brigade will mark the 25th Aniversary of its activation into the regular Army at Fort Benning. The following is the first in a series of stories illustrating the history and traditions of the units in the 197th.

The history of the 7th Infantry is one that soldiers on Fort Benning's 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, can be proud to be a part of. In fighting to preserve our nation's unity, settle our western frontier and preserve our interests in international conflicts, 7th Infantry soldiers of the past have created the unit's colorful history in the traditions of gallantry and honor.

Over the years, the 7th Infantry, now part of the 197th Infantry Brigade, has fought under the leadership of many famous American military men, in our nations most historic battles. The unit has received 74 battle streamers, making it the most decorated Infantry regiment in the United States Army.

The unit's roots in the infantry emerged during the War of 1812 as a part of Gen. Andrew Jackson's fighting force. Today, the nickname "Cottonbalers" continues as a symbol of the inventiveness of 7th Infantry soldiers when facing their enemy in battle. During the Battle of New Orleans, the soldiers defended the city from behind a wall of cotton bales and prevented the British advance.

During the Mexican War, a young Lt. "Stonewall" Jackson led 7th Infantrymen against Santa Ana's Mexican Army. Years later, as fate would have it, Confederate Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson was killed in the Civil War battle at Chancellorville, Va. The 7th Infantry was a part of the Union Forces at Chancellorville, as well as Gettysburg and Gen. Sherman's sweep across the South.

The Regiment continued to be in the places our history was being made: the Indian Wars on our western frontier, San Juan Hill during the Spanish-American War and the Philippines Insurrection.

As a part of the 3rd Division in Europe during World War I, the 7th Infantry received seven battle streamers, more than any other U.S. Regiment received during that war.

During World War II, the regiment participated in North African campaigns and then regrouped to join the Allied assaults on Italy and France.

The 7th's fighting traditions continued during Korea and Vietnam.

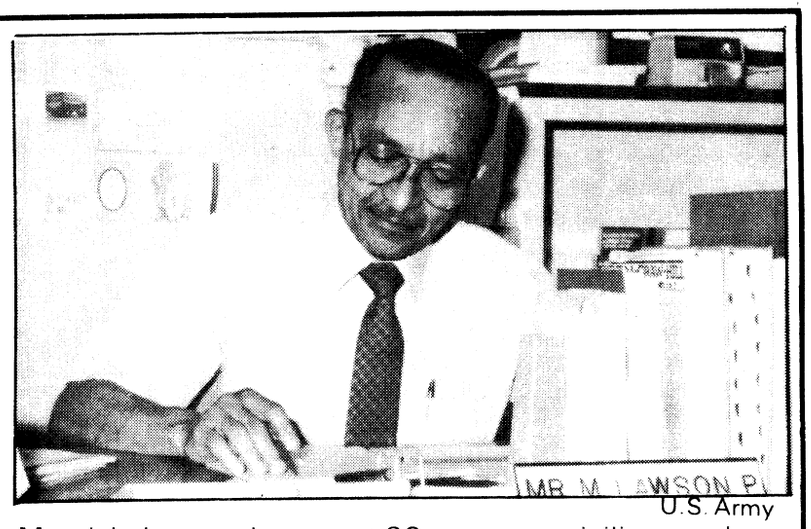
Employee looks back on years spent with USARSA

By William H. Acklen
U.S. Army School of the Americas

At a recent civilian awards luncheon at Fort Benning, Mauricio Lawson, assistant supervisor, Language Services Division, U.S. Army School of the Americas, received an award in recognition for 30 years of exemplary service as a department of the Army civilian employee. A native Panamanian, he moved in June 1986 from Panama to Fort Benning to continue his service with USARSA. Lawson talked about his 30 years of civil service.



"Following a friend's advice, I applied for civil service with the Army in Panama," said Lawson. "At the time I really had not expected to find a job with the Army, but within two weeks I was accepted and began work in the training aids department of the School of the Americas — which was known as the U.S. Army Caribbean School at the time. From there, I was promoted and reassigned to the central pass department. Presumably, because of my bilingual writing skill, my next promotion was into the translation department where I have worked for 27 years," he said.

Lawson spoke of his transition from Panama to Fort Benning. "With what I had heard people saying about life in America, I thought I might have problems. But, after arriving here, the people who I have met in the community and who I work with are very pleasant," Lawson said.

Lawson talked about the school's development and its people. "The standards of teaching at USARSA have always been very high. I've seen a high turnaround of military and civilian employees, and 'technological' developments such as going from operating with pen and pencil to computer automation," he said. "Right now, we have a reduced work-area since moving here from Panama."

Commenting on the tedious task of accurately translating from one language to another, Lawson said, "The English language is much easier to translate into Spanish. Spanish is a language that one can learn in a shorter period because of its 'fluid' pronunciation — that is — the spoken word is pronounced almost exactly the way it looks to the reader.

While comparing the tropical setting of Panama to the southeast weather of North America, Lawson said, "The weather in Georgia during the summer months is similar to that of Panama, on occasion, it is much warmer here. But, Panama does not have cold weather."

U.S. Army
Mauricio Lawson has spent 30 years as a civilian employee at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Having worked and traveled in both the U.S. and Central America, Lawson had these comments on their differences. The U.S. is more socially-advanced. The work pace here is much faster. In Panama, you completed as much as you could today and continued the next day whereas in the United States it seems like everything must be completed today.

Lawson worked with the School in the late 50s and early 60s and gave some insight on those years. "The school was completely different back then. Instruction varied from civic action courses such as auto mechanics, dining facility management and medical to combat training. Now, the courses are geared more toward combat operations, leadership development and management courses although the demand for more civic action-type courses is on the rise again. Also, in the late 50s a lot of Panamanians preferred to work in the Panamanian workforce instead of for a foreign government," Lawson added.

Lawson enjoys jogging and walking in his spare time. "In my younger days, I used to play softball in Panama," he said.

Proud of his family and home, Lawson has a daughter who is studying civil engineering and his wife has a doctorate in education. "You get out of life exactly what you put into it," he said.

Eight residents graduate from advanced program

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

In a ceremony at the Martin Army Community Hospital Friday, eight residents graduated from the Advanced Educational Program in General Dentistry.

Major General Bill B. Lefler, Assistant Surgeon General for Dental Services, and Chief, Army Dental Corps addressed the graduating class, outlining the "elusive secret of success."

"As you enter upon a broader career,"said Lefler, "always be alert for the positive and negative feedback, using both the positive and negative to assist you in doing your job. Always try to reduce the negatives and increase the positives."

The graduating residents have completed a one year program in General Dentistry, accredited by the Commission on Dental Accreditation and American Dental Association.

The residency program sponsored and conducted by Fort Benning's U.S. Army Dental Activity, encompasses supervised training and clinical experience in all major specialty areas of dental practice.

The residents awarded certificates in General Denistry were Capts. Maureen T. Baldy, Robert L. Cross Jr., Michael D. Cunningham, Ralph P. Ergas, Jerome E. McMahon, Susan N. Mongeau, David G. Smith and Thomas N. Stall.

Army Dental Corp chief visits Fort Benning

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

Major General Bill B. Lefler, visited Fort Benning last week, to address the graduating class of the Advanced Educational Program in General Dentistry.

Lefler, a native of Clinton, Ark., is now the Assistant Surgeon General for Dental Services and Chief, Army Dental Corps.

In his dual role, Lefler supports the Army Medical Department's theme of "We Care."

The Army Dental Care System, which is responsbible for providing quality dental care to soldiers, family members, and the military community, unites in the Army Medical Department to provide health care.

In addition to supporting the "We Care" theme, the Army Dental Care System relies on a theme of "Excellence in Action."

"We in the Army Medical Department, exist for only one reason," said Lefler, "to support the Army, making sure the soldier is healthy if called to serve, that they would not become a causality due to improper health care."

"We also wish to enhance the quality of life, so that we might retain families and thus maintain our quality Army, so that it can continue to deter aggression," he added.

Since Lefler assumed the job of Assistant Surgeon General for Dental Services, Chief Army Dental Corp. on December 1, there have been numerous changes designed to "enhance the quality of life" for the soldier and family.

"For 30 years, we have been trying to develop a method of supplimenting the care that we are able to provide to the soldier and family member," said Lefler.

"The new Department of Defense Insurance Program will give us the ability to offer care to our active duty family in areas where we are not able to adequately provide service on a space available basis,"he added.

Lefler praised the people who get such programs implemented and operating effectively.

"I just want to personally thank the Fort Benning staff for the great support that they provide our DENTAC," said Lefler. "Without this support we could not provide the care given today."

ASK THE JUDGE

Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I have been ripped off by a couple of mechanics and before I have more work done, I would like to know if there are some things I can do to protect myself.

A: The first thing to do is to pick a reputable mechanic. Ask your friends who have been in the area awhile to give you some suggestions. Then call the Better Business Bureau to see if they have had any complaints about the company. Finally, you could call the Attorney General's Consumer Protection Department and ask if they know of any complaints or investigations involving that mechanic.

Once you have selected a mechanic, be sure to get a written estimate of the repairs. Tell your mechanic and write on the estimate something similar to this: "I will need any additional repairs not included on this estimate, notify me and get my consent before any work is performed." This is especially important if the repair is going to be a major one.

If, in spite of your best efforts, the final bills is much larger than you expected, remember that the mechanic has a legal right to keep your car until payment is made. The simplest way to handle the situation is to pay the bill, making it clear to the mechanic that you do not agree with it and then sue.

Remember to get everything in writing and to keep copies of everything. This information will be helpful in proving that the charges were not justified. If you have questions about a particular problem, contact the Legal Assistance office and make an appointment to review the situation with an attorney.

These fine facilities are fully-equipped and staffed by knowledgeable instructors. The facilities are available for use by active-duty, retired military, reserve personnel, their family members and authorized civilians working at Fort Benning. A listing of the many scheduled activities are printed monthly and are available at the Arts & Crafts Center, Building 2783, Eckel Street, or at any of the Arts & Crafts facilities during operating hours.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Provost Marshal's Office

The cry of a child is heard. A dog runs away from the child after having bitten him. The child is taken to the hospital and treated. Meanwhile, a search for the dog is underway and no one knows where the dog will strike next.

The fish and game section of the Military Police has initiated a crackdown on stray animals on post. During the month of June, over 39 stray animals were caught and impounded on the installation. Of this number, there were only five animals reclaimed by their owner.

Calls received from persons wanting to report stray animals are being handled by trained personnel, who will not only pick up dogs and cats, but wild squirrels and snakes.

Particular attention is given to on-post housing areas of Fort Benning. Any animal impounded for a biting incident will be quarantined for 10 days. If the animal doesn't have rabies, it is returned to the owner. When a pet is impounded and has no tag, it will be kept for three working days and, if by this time, it has not been claimed by the owner or adopted, will be out to sleep. If a pet is impounded for being loose and has a tag, the owner will be notified.

If an animal has been apprehended and was confined more than once, the owner will be notified in writing of his or her failure to control the animal. If a pet has been apprehended and confined three times or more, it will be removed from post.

The owner is responsible for the care and well-being of his pet. If the animal is abused or neglected to the point of physical pain, suffering or death, or the owner fails to provide food and water, he can be charged and disciplinary action taken under the UCMJ.

SPIRITUAL

Improving parent-child relationships focus of workshops

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Improving parent-child relationships will be the focus of a series of discussion sessions beginning September 1987 at the Family Life Center according to Chaplain White. The discussions will be based on Systematic Training for Effective Parenting (STEP), the most widely used parenting education program in the country.

More than one million people throughout the United States, Canada, and other countries have participated in STEP discussion groups and used the accompanying Parents' handbook since American Guidance Service (AGS) of Circle Pines, Minn., introduced the program in 1976.

STEP encourages mutual respect between parent and child, increased cooperation, more effective communications and a more responsible, self-reliant attitude among children.

Our community's interest in parenting education is part of a nationwide trend. A recent nationwide survey conducted by AGS showed that parenting education is a growing phenomenon, sponsored by hundreds of diverse groups and organizations and conductd by thousands of individuals throughout the country.

The trend in parenting education is a result of many social changes in the U.S. These include changing roles for mothers, a shift away from the autocratic "Father Knows Best" value system to a more democratic viewpoint, and the increasing mobility of families.

The survey showed that very diverse organizations sponsor STEP groups: schools, religious groups, community centers, social service agencies, mental health centers, hospitals, individuals, and state and local government agencies.

Of the 1,300 STEP leaders who responded to the survey, 88-percent said they received positive feedback from parents about the program;

The parents who participated in STEP groups said they found the program beneficial for many reasons. High on the list was the opportunity it provided for them to share experiences and learn from others. Some STEP leaders spoke of networks of parents that had grown up locally around the program. Others said that STEP enabled parents to "learn new ways to handle persistent problems,

STEP was also credited for improving a participant's relationships with other people, including husbands and wives, employers and employees. Benefits cited for children included the opportunity for children to take more responsibility for their own behavior; a calmer, more relaxing environment in which to develop emotionally, and less spanking and parent "snooper-vision."

For more information on STEP groups being organized at Fort Benning, contact Chaplain White at 545-1760.

Chaplains celebrate corp's 212th birthday

By James D. Bender
2/10th Battalion chaplain

I'm 212 years old today and I have never felt better! As I look over the years I have served, I find satisfaction for the many people: faith or no faith, creed or no creed, that I have served. I've shared the horrors of war and physical deprivation and the warm flow of peace. I have spent hours devoting myself to the needs of one person, perhaps to enable them to catch a glimpse of or embrace their Creator. And often, in the midst of the struggle, I have been struck down, only to return to Him that commissioned me.

There were just a handful of us in the beginning. I followed Gen. Washington and his ragged band of soldiers across the Colonies and was with him when our victory and freedom were assured. As the birth pangs of this new nation continued, I remained in service to it and its people. I've spent months on horseback, on foot, visiting, marrying, baptizing, preaching, teaching, pastoring, counseling, with the soldiers and their families.

There was a time when I had fellow chaplains, wearing a uniform of a different shade, doing the same tasks for God and man. I served with great armies of men, locked in mortal combat for the soil of this nation...divided then, united now. I was over a century old when my nation entered the 20th century, and I was about to become very busy again.

The European continent exploded in all-out war, and I was there with our men in the trenches. I shared in their terror and fear through the bombardments and the assaults. I even acted as sort of mailman, delivering messages from home, and often sending sad messages home.

Another conflict soon erupted and then another and another. The trials and the fear, the letters and the tears, it would end, then start again and again. I was captured, tortured, abused, but never forgotten by the men and women and their families that I served.

I'm 212 years old today. I've held a million trembling hands, absorbed rivers of tears, soothed many the worried brow, trudged mile after mile everywhere in the world. I've preached a message every day of every week of every year since I was first called.

I'm old in years, but young in spirit always. I am ever-present in your midst and when I am needed by you or your family, I'll be there. I'm your chaplain.

Vietnam veteran tells of reintegration problems

By Frank Minott
Special to The Bayonet

I am a Vietnam Vet who had severe problems with reintegration, but did not admit or recognize it. Others knew I had a problem, but didn't know what it was.

After my return from Nam, I started out "making it" successfully in a career as a firefighter. As my success grew as a fire chief, so did my problem with Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). The memory of many things that happened in Vietnam and that happened when we returned to the states became a very real problem. It cost me my career, freedom, family and many relationships, and almost my life. Without going into long details of what brought me up to the explosion point of PTSD, the final outcome was prison and hospitals.

Many doctors and friends thought I would never return to a productive life in society. I owe a great deal of thanks to people who cared enough to work extra with me. They carried their job a step further than they were required.

There are many other important reasons why I am able to talk about my past problems and work with helping others with theirs. As I think back, the most important reason for my recovery is that I was extremely tired of being tired. I found out that I had to be tired of being tired before I would allow anyone to help me, and then I had to learn to do my part by helping and caring about myself. It wasn't until then that I was able to start working my way back into successful relationships and become a useful and productive part of society.

I am not one for putting words on paper, but I did want you who are tired, or are getting tired, to know that there is a resource which you can draw upon that understands and cares. I don't have all the answers and I don't claim to, but I am willing to listen and to share what has worked for me.

If you're ready and willing to take the first step by stopping in or calling and just say let's talk, then we'll see where it goes from there. You have to start somewhere. This may be the start of a renewing in your life. Don't you think it's about time for us to get on with our lives? I am looking forward to talking with you. It was through our efforts together in conflict that we are survivors and it is important that we continue to work together to assure our success and productive lives.

Remembering how much it helped me is the reason that I am going to be a co-facilitator with Diann Sloan and Chaplain Phil Touw in the Fort Benning Post Traumatic Stress Disorder Support Group. We plan to begin the group on July 30 at the Custer Terrace Counseling Center. We will begin at 7:30 and end at 8:45. This will be an ongoing, weekly support group. Enrollment is limited. If you are interested, call 544-3305/3179 and ask for Frank or call the TSB chaplain's office at 545-1314/3715.

CHAPEL BRIEFS

Religious 'EXPO' planned in August

A religious education EXPO will be held Saturday, Aug. 29, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the youth activity center and adjacent grounds. The EXPO will include all faith groups active on Fort Benning and all chapel groups who are involved in chapel activities at Fort Benning.

The Chaplain section is planning many activities such as singing and music and clowning, plus souvenirs for children.

The EXPO will provide an opportunity to raise an awareness of the various activities and groups within the chaplain section as well as opportunities to register for Sunday school and CCD classes. The EXPO will also provide an opportunity for volunteers to become active in chapel groups.

This program will be a joint effort with DPCA, which is planning a Family Information Fair. All agencies supporting family life at Fort Benning will be represented to provide information.

Marriage seminar offered for Catholics

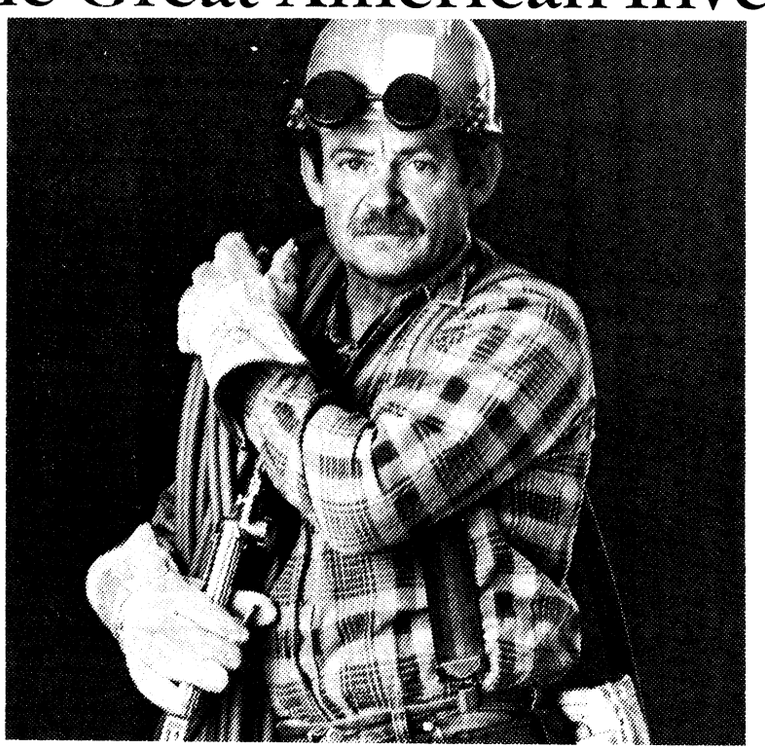
A pre-marriage seminar was held on July 12 in the Religious Education Center. The program is directed to those who are planning to be married in the Catholic church. The scope of the program is wide and includes presentations and a discussion on communication, finances, legal problems, sexuality, spirituality and family life. The next seminar is scheduled for Aug. 23 at 1 p.m.

Pre-baptism class offered for youths

A pre-baptism class was held for parents and for expecting parents who plan to have their children baptised in the Catholic church. The class was held on July 19, in the Religious Education Center. The next class is scheduled for Aug. 30 at 1:30 p.m.

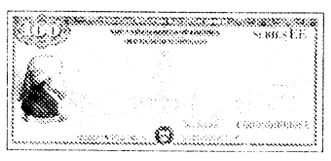
Training available for volunteers

Training sessions for the volunteer and Confraternity Christian Doctrine teachers and aides is planned Aug. 11 and 18, at 7:30 p.m. in the Religious Education Center. Morning sessions will be offered Aug. 12 and 19, at 10 a.m. for those who cannot attend the evening session.



The classes are intended to prepare the teachers and aids for the coming CCD school year which begins Sept. 20.

There will be classes in scripture, theology, classroom management, lesson-planning and curriculum. All teachers are required to have a minimum of five hours training in order to be certified for the program. Monthly in-service training is scheduled during the school year.



Council plans weekend retreat

The Catholic Pastoral Council will meet at Holy Trinity Retreat center for a weekend planning session. The retreat begins Friday at 6 p.m. and ends Saturday at 6 p.m. The council will work on planning activities for the 1987-88 year.

MACH chief aims to keep the quality of patient care high

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Community has every reason to expect high quality health care said Col. Herbert E. Segal, the new Post Director of Health Services.

"We currently have an excellent quality assurance program at Martin Army Community Hospital," said Segal, "and will be constantly evaluating the care we provide."

Though the quality of care is one of Segal's major concerns, he also recognizes the need for accessible health care, and for the availibility of a strong communication system for the many beneficiary groups that receive care.

"We must first insure that those who need care, are seen in a timely way, utilizing an effective appointment system, said Segal.

"But, even with quality care available, it is important that we communicate with retirees, mayors, commanders of the various military units and all the benefit groups we serve, in order to acheive the feeling of a real partnership on post, with the hospital being responsive to the needs of the community," he said.

To insure that the quality of care is the best possible, Segal has set as a major priority, "making sure that we have a full compliment of medical and surgical specialists.

While there is now an opening for a staff Cardiologist, there are also several other areas in MACH which merely do not have enough practioners.

"Because this is such an enormous military community, and MACH is such a diversified speciality hospital and because the by speciality strength for military physicians is currently not balanced, we must seek other avenues of aquiring the trained physicans needed," said Segal.

One such avenue, is the contracting of civilian specialists to serve on the hospital staff.

Though there are shortages in certain specialties, many young doctors are drawn to a military career.

"The lure for many medical officers is the opportunity to receive fine training, ability to practice without financial pressure of malpractice insurance costs and being able to teach at major community hospitals and medical centers," said Segal.

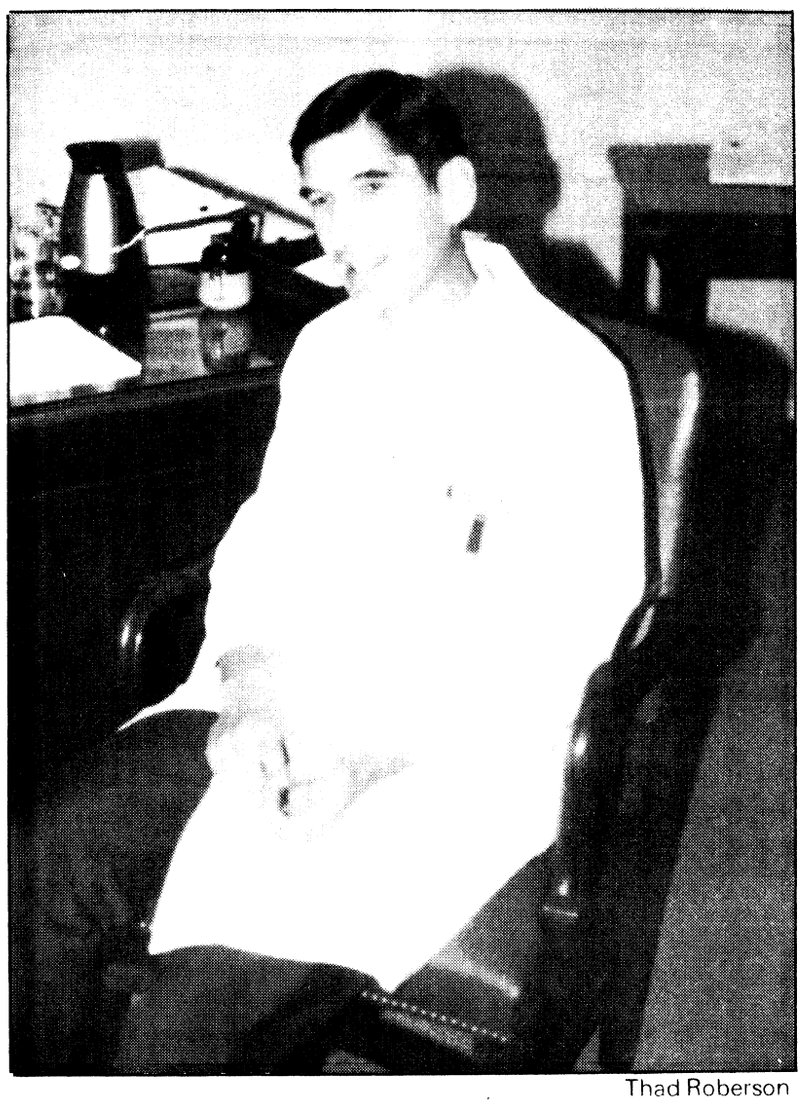
"Being able to teach young physicians is a great inspiration," he said. "The opportunity to get into executive medicine, also provides additional attractions for the military physician. They are given the opportunity to truly influence the course of medical care in hospital clinic settings."

Those "fine hospitals" send the medical officer to assignments around the world.

"Unique to the military physician," said Segal, "are the overseas assignments, where these physicians are able to interact with professionals and patients from various countries and cultures."

Segal, a specialist in tropical medicine, while serving in Thailand, in addition to his regular hospital duties, also served as the American Ambassador's principle advisor on refugee health affairs.

He also considers the designing and equipping of the Fort Stewart Post Hospital from it conception through occupancy as an important accomplishment.



Segal a native of Newark N.J., chose medicine as his profession at an early age. "I can never remember wanting to be anything other than a doctor," said Segal. "Probably since I was 11 years old, I've known that medicine would be my life's work.

"Several of my neighbors were doctors. During my high school years, they would allow me to go on their rounds with them. One neighbor, a heart surgeon allowed me to work in his laboratory. The experiences were invaluable," said Segal.

Segal went on to obtain a Bachelor of Arts from Rutgers University, a degree in medicine from the Duke University School of Medicine, and a Masters in Public Health from the Harvard School of Public Health.

Segal and his family, wife, Patricia, daughters, Stacy and Melissa, and son Danny, now embark on a new experience at Fort Benning.

"It is a great honor to be selected to command this hospital, one of the Army's three largest community hospitals,"said Segal. "And I will do my best to insure that the hospital fulfils its important health care mission."

Trainee dentist program bonus for post residents

U.S. Army Dental Activity

The Fort Benning community continues to enjoy the benefits of a local dental residency program.

The General Dentistry Residency is a one year training program, providing professional education at the post-doctoral level.

It encompasses supervised training and clinical experience in all major specialty areas of dental practice, with the hopes of producing qualified practitioners, who are fully prepared to function within the health care community, acting as the point of first contact for the patient, and as the coordinator for the patient's total oral health care.

Upon completion of the residency, the dentist will know both is capabilities and his limitations. This knowledge will enable him to provide his patients with comprehensive dental treatment or referral to the appropriate dental or medical specialist.

The program is sponsored and conducted by Fort Benning's U. S. Army Dental Activity.DENTAC is composed of six dental clinics, including the Hospital Dental Clinic of the Department of Dentistry, Martin Army Community Hospital.

In the clinical phase of the program, residents are expected to provide for the patient's total dental treatment, within his capabilities, and to coordinate referrals to the appropriate specialists for those specific treatment needs, that are beyond his capabilities.

Laboratory support is provided by two prosthetic laboratories and one orthodontic laboratory within the DENTAC.

Additional laboratory support is available from the Area Dental Laboratory at Fort Gordon, Ga.

The majority of the training is conducted at Dental Clinic number 1. However, small but significant portions off the training occur at other clinics, to include oral surgery and anesthesiology at Martin Army Community Hospital, and orthodontics at Bernheim Dental Clinic.

The teaching staff includes at least one board eligible or board certified specialist in every area of dental practice.

The criteria for their selection as mentors for the General Practice Residency requires not only education qualifications, but also a firm commitment and dedication to post-doctoral dental education.

The teaching staff is augmented by a visiting staff of distinguished civilian and military consultants, also representing each of the major disciplines of dentistry.

ENERGY UPDATE

Energy Office

Fort Benning finished the third quarter 1.6-percent above the energy target. We are now well into the critical fourth quarter that will determine our final standing for the year. If we are to repeat last year's successful performance, we must have a strong finish.

IN FY86, we met our energy goals for the first time ever. As a result, Fort Benning received an Energy Award from TRADOC of over a million dollars. In addition, more than a million dollars was available for use on the installation that would otherwise be spent on utility bills. This money will fund a variety of projects, including a basketball court in Bouton Heights, exhaust fans for Audie Murphy Gym and a handicap ramp for Patch School.

If we exceed the energy allotted to us, we could have to pay for it with those funds from other operating budgets. With today's tight budget restraints, this would be a difficult alternative for all of us.

By reaching our assigned targets each year we can also build a higher degree of flexibility into the energy program. We will be able to provide more service for a longer period of time by eliminating energy waste and abuse. If we fail to meet our goals, that flexibility is lost.

What is a VPR? According to US Army Troop Support Agency Commissary Management Specialist Larry Pendleton, it's a special marketing technique used by manufacturers to introduce shoppers to their products and, hopefully, cultivate return business. Goods offered through VPR promotions provide customers with savings of at least 15-percent.

Shoppers should check out VPR products offered through various point of sale materials. TSA's familiar "Minute Man" signs depicting a soldiers dressed in a red, white and blue Revolutionary War uniform, are located around the sales floor area and on end-of-aisle displays. By glancing at the sign which is used to point the way to merchandise sold as a VPR, customers can see the regular price, sales price and amount they will save by buying the item.

In addition, product representatives display specialized decorative point-of-sale shelf announcements to let you know about a good deal.

So, if you're in the market to lower your grocery bill, make it a point to cash in on Voluntary Price Reductions.

"JIM WAS MORE THAN OUR SPONSOR. HE WAS LIKE A BIG BROTHER."

SGT Loyd Thompson, Jr. and his wife Belinda

"The night we pulled into Fort Hood, Belinda was pregnant, and we were tired, homeless and low on funds. But thanks to Staff Sergeant Jim Perry, we weren't alone.

"Jim helped us out in so many ways. Finding a place to live. Moving in. Helping Belinda find a job. Getting Jessalyn into the child care center.

Straightening out my pay problem. He really pointed the way.

"He showed us how the system worked and what it was all about. And he never expected anything in return except for me to do a good job.

"I think if you've had a good experience, you want to repay it. When I become a Sponsor, I hope I can do as good a job as Jim."

The Army Sponsorship Program grows in scope and importance as, each day, new Sponsors join the Program and soldiers and their families who have been sponsored in the past reach out to help others. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

Nurses complete student training

Graduation ceremony marks end of grueling six-week ROTC program

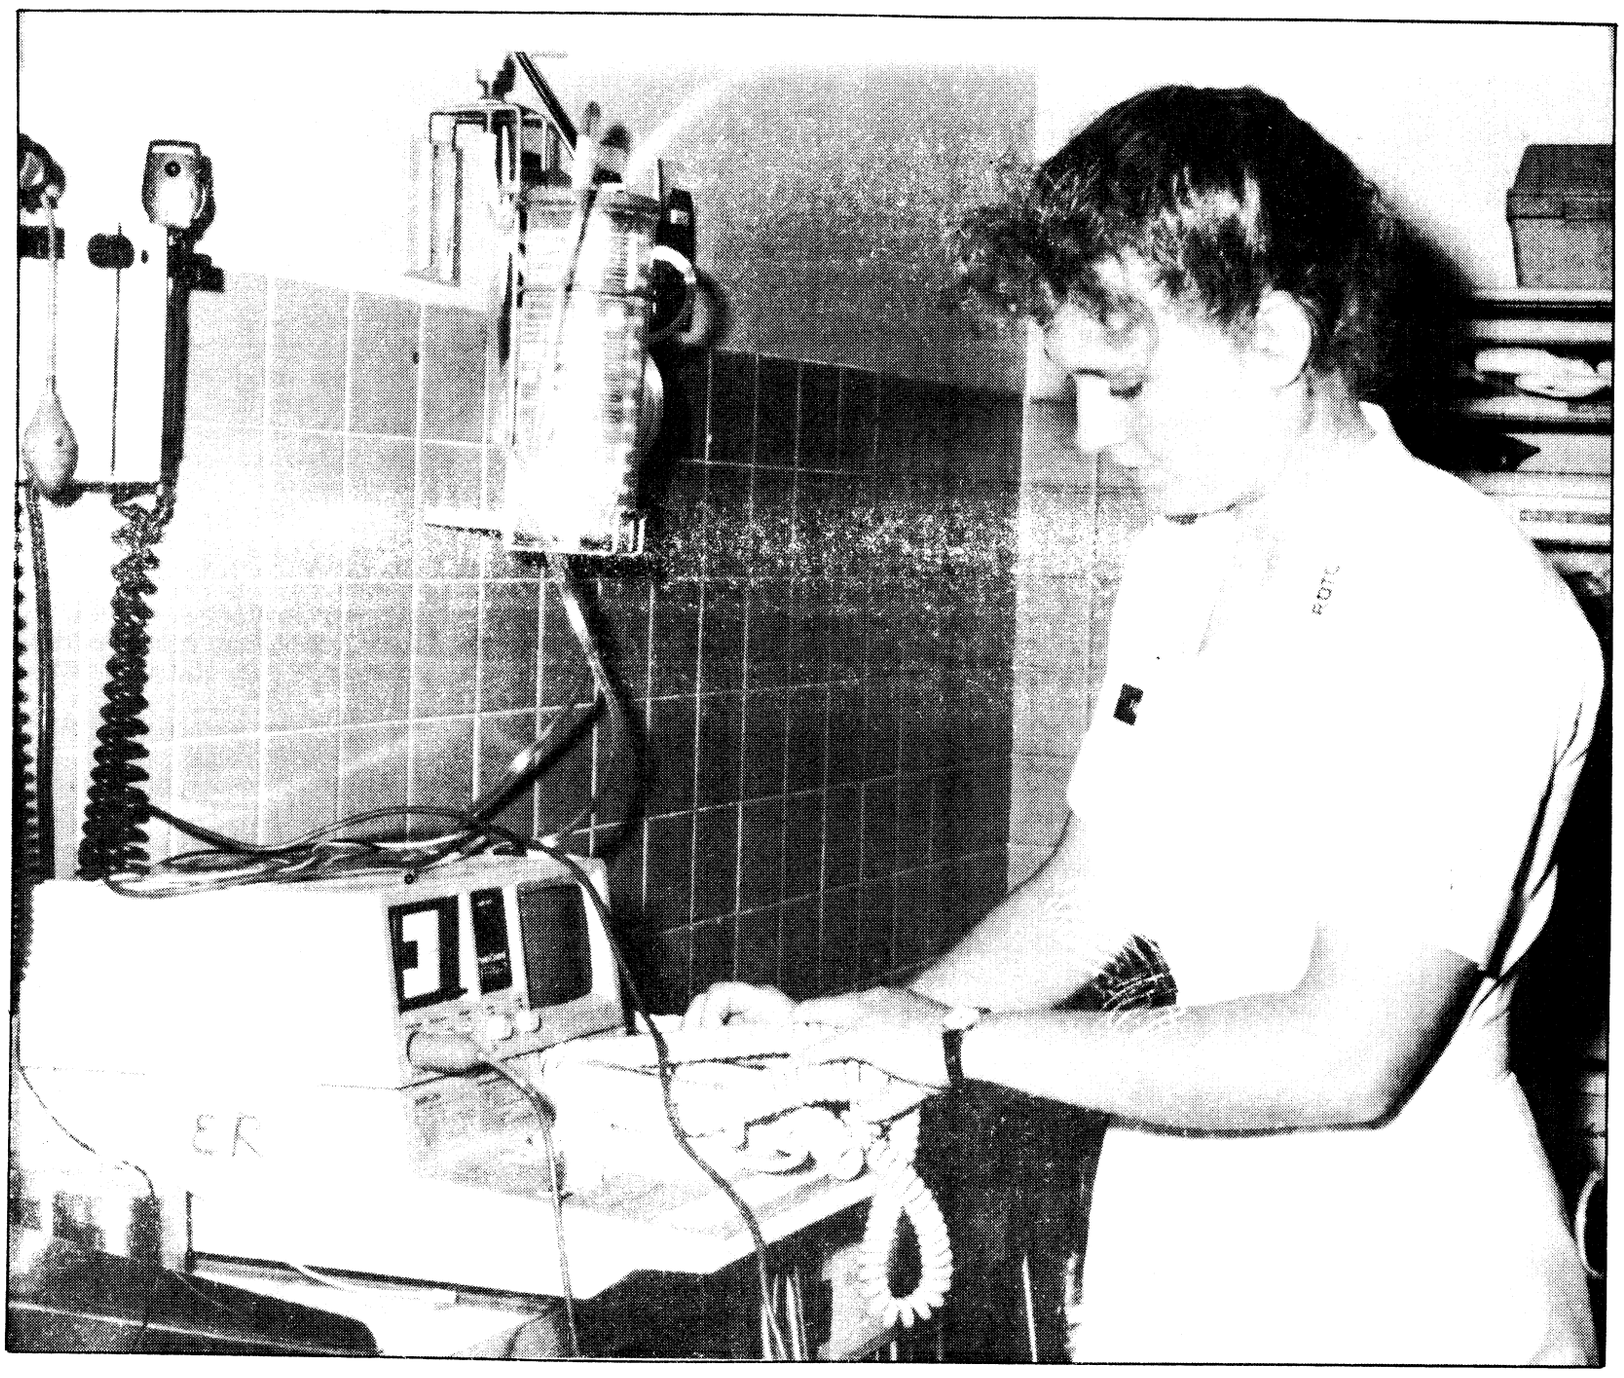
By Jean E. Hammond
Army Nurse Corps

Six weeks of training culminated Friday morning for eight Reserve Officers Training Corps nurse cadets from the 1st ROTC Region.

The students graduated from the Nurse Summer Training Program at Martin Army Community Hospital. Their first week was spent at Camp Perry, Ohio, where the emphasis was on leadership and soldier skills. Included in this week were day and night land navigation courses, marksmanship training on the M-16, and the Army's Physical Fitness Test.

Training at the hospital concentrated on developing of leadership skills, and secondarily, on the development of nursing skills.

The cadets were assigned to a preceptor who worked with them throughout the five-week period on all shifts, over weekends, holidays, in-inpatient areas throughtout the hospital.



During this time, the cadets were "introduced" to the reality of Army nursing as a career.

After this experience, these nurse cadets will return to their schools with a much deeper insight into what military nursing really is.

They will be able to tell their peers, with great accuracy, what it is like to be present and help perform cardiopulmonary rescuscitation during a cardiac arrest; they will share the excitement of seeing a baby born; and relating just what it's like to work a seven-day shift.

These cadets will also be able to do other things that nurses do (give reports, communicate clearly, rapidly assess patient status, address issues in patient care priorities) and will be able to share this knowledge with their peers.

Seven of the eight cadets will stay for further leadership experience in nursing throught the Cadet Troop Leadership Training Program. The eighth will go to Fort Campbell, Ky., to attend Air Assault School.

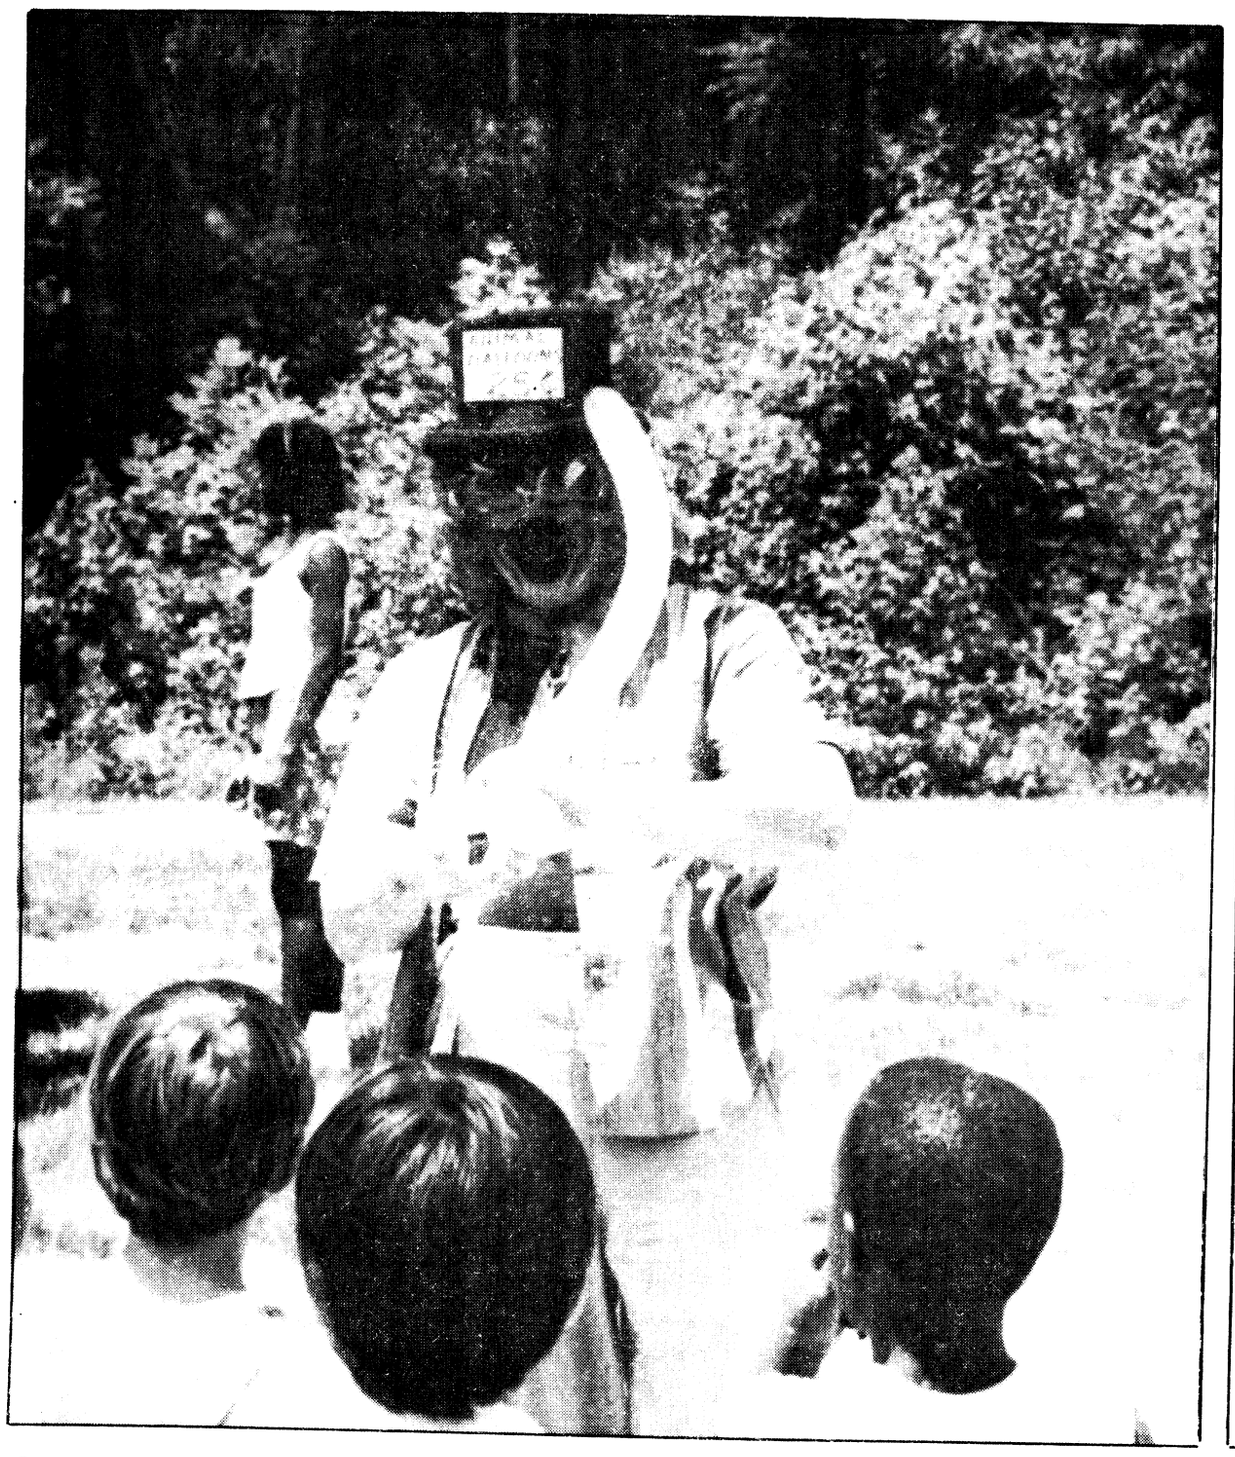
197th Infantry Brigade brings out the clowns for carnival

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

What a day for a carnival. Mother nature was cooperative and so were all the children who attended.



The Fun Carnival took place during the weekend to bring together the residents of the Custer Terrace, Upatoi Creek and Battle Park housing area. As a sponsor unit for the housing areas, the 197th Infantry Brigade provided assistance to the Custer Terrace Community Life Center to make the day a success.

The smiles and laughter of the children who received animal-shaped balloons from a carnival clown or won colorful prizes playing games were evidence of the day's success.

"It's pretty nice and it's good for the kids; the games are so easy to play and after all, the children just want to paly so they can win a prize," said Sgt. Jaime Mroposki, a Custer Terrace resident.

Community Mayor Genita Mazzola said, "This Fun Carnival is just one of the many things we do at Custer Terrace Community Life. We give out food commodities and we print a newspaper every week to inform the community of events. However, one of the biggest things we do is sponsor fingerprinting of our children at the MP station."

Such events demonstrate the cooperation between units and the Fort Benning community and strengthen the quality of life for the community's many residents.

Children watch as, with a twist and a pull, the clown at the Fun Carnival creates an animal out of a balloon.

With a balloon in hand, the clown prepares to create some magic for a little boy at the Fun Carnival.

Defense Department makes security high priority

Donna Bolinger-Miles
TRADOC News Service

The Department of Defense has taken extensive steps within the past two years to improve security throughout the department.

A recently released DoD report shows that nearly all recommendations made by a committee that evaluated DoD's security programs and practices have been put into effect.

The others are being studied to further assess their impact on DoD personnel and programs.

The DoD Security Review Commission, often referred to as the "Stilwell Commission," was appointed by Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger in June 1985, following revelation of the John Walker spy ring.

In addition to reviewing DoD security programs and practices, the commission was directed to analyze lessons learned from the Walker and other espionage incidents.

The commision made 63 recommendations to strengthen DoD security programs. These included expansion of background investigations done for secret clearances, special requirements for people who need access to cryptographic information and stricter limits on access by non—U.S. citizens and recently naturalized citizens from hostile countries.

The commission also recommended expanded requirements for reporting foreign travel and unauthorized contacts with foreign representatives. It called for annual security evaluations of military personnel and civilian employees and new procedures for reporting information of possible security significance outside command channels.

Another recommendation called for all DoD components to conduct a one-time, top-to-bottom security inspection at every level of their organization.

These intensive inspections covered areas such as command individual reponsiblity, the need-to-know principle, classification authority, guidance and holdings and information control, security awareness and security violations.

According to a DoD report, the inspection showed that security programs were satisfactory overall, but not without faults. It pointed to the need for greater management emphasis on security — emphasis that implementation of other Stilwell Commission recommendations has helped create. In fact, of the 63 recommendations made, the secretary of defense approved 48 for implementation, and 43 have already been implemented.

By amending some of the department's basic security regulations, security officials be able to satisfy most other commission recommendations.

Generally, those amendments place stiffer standards on government employeees and contractors qualifying for and maintaining security clearances. They also require supervisors to provide stricter oversight of access to, and handling of, classified material by their employees.

Some Stilwell Commission recommendations were quite specific, such as the one that calls for disposal of most classified material more than five years old.

Others were broader in nature, such as the one that urged DoD to evaluate the feasibility of having defense counterintelligence agents provide more support to the FBI in monitoring hostile intelligence activities within the United States.

Other recommendations placed new emphasis on finding better ways to prevent or detect security breaches. For example, at the suggestion of the Stilwell Commission report, the Defense Department established the DoD Personnel Security Research and Education Center to conduct and contract for research in the personnel security field. It also directed the DoD Polygraph Institute to oversee research regarding polygraph tests.

Weinberger said he recognizes that no security system is totally foolproof. The new security measures, he said, can only make espionage more difficult to accomplish and help lessen the likelihood that national security information is inadvertently compromised.

"In the final analysis, safeguarding national security information relies on the supervision, training and motivation of those entrusted with such information," Weinberger said. "Here is where much of our effort is being focused."

Program aids MWR modernization

Army News Service

• WASHINGTON — Application of proven business practices to the management of morale, welfare and recreation has sped up the Army's effort to modernize aging MWR facilities.

• As explained by Army MWR officials, the "self-suffiency" program sets up the means by which local installations may finance their MWR operations without benefit of dividend distribution of earnings from the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES). This year, those earnings are projected at $70 million, and, along with projected slot machine earnings of $29 million, they are being earmarked for financing various minor and major MWR construction throughout the Army.

• Officials note that the self-suffiency program gets much impetus from the "installation MWR fund" concept. Under that approach, installation business management expertise becomes concentrated and cash flow to needed local construction projects becomes accelerated. Officials report that because of this arrangement, nearly $500 million thus far have gone toward locally financed capital purchases and minor construction. That figure is complemented by $750 million in non-appropriated funds for major construction projects.

• What's more, officials say, the Army's community and family review committee recently moved to bolster the installation self-financing program by:

- redirecting $26 milion worth of loans due to the Army Central MWR Fund and, in effect, allowing those installations with loans to pay themselves back.

- assuring that all earnings from the AAFES contract with AT&T for local and long-distance telephone service will be retained locally — about $10 million each year.

- distributing locally all 50-percent of AAFES food earnings, including those from activities that AAFES will be operating under agreement with the Army, (such as food outlets in bowling centers and recreation centers).

Noting their goal of sustaining a quality of life at least comparable to that found in American society at large, MWP officials point to a record $140 million to be spent on construction in 1987. As down payment for their major construction needs, the major Army commands will be contributing $38 million of installation MWR non-appropriated fund monies in 1988. They had contributed a total of $20 million in 1987.

More than $83 million in soldier-generated non-appropriated funds have been earmarked for construction to support the stationing of the Army's Light Infantry Divisions at Fort Drum, N.Y., and Fort Wainwright, Alaska. Officials say that these outlays are intended to meet the needs of several thousand arriving soldiers and their families, many of whom expect to use such traditional MWR activities as centers for youth activities, auto crafts, bowling, sports, lodging and military clubs.

Few understand Vietnam War

By John Lundberg
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — As an increasing number of books and movies focus on the Vietnam War, a surprising number of Americans know little of the conflict that preoccupied America for 16 years. Listed below is basic information on America's longest and most controversial war:

• A total of 2.7 million Americans served in Vietnam from 1959-1975.

• A total of 58,132 Americans lost their lives as a result of Vietnam: 300,00 were wounded, 80,000 of those severely; and 2,436 remain unaccounted for. Blacks comprised 12½-percent of those who died out of an age group of 13.5-percent of the American male population.

• Despite the unpopularity of the war and the uncertain ends for which it was fought, a 1980 Harris Poll of Vietnam veterans, the most comprehensive one done to date, showed that:

• The ones glad they had served their country consisted of 91-percent of those polled.

• Eighty percent disagreed with the statement, "The U.S. took unfair advantage of me."

• Seventy-four percent "enjoyed their time in the service."

• Seventy-two percent strongly agreed with the statement, "The trouble in Vietnam was that our troops were asked to fight in a war which our political leaders in Washington would not let them win."

• A Washington Post/NBC Poll showed that: Vietnam veterans were more likely than their peers to have gone to college, own a home or earn $30,000 a year or more.

• A majority of Vietnam veterans said they benefitted from being in Vietnam, supported the bombings of North Vietnam and use of napalm, and weren't bothered by the fact that that the others had avoided military service in Vietnam.

• The U.S. Bureau of Justice statistics state Vietnam veterans are less likely to be in prison than their non-veteran peers.

• Of those serving in Vietnam, 2/3rds were volunteers, compared with 2/3rds drafted in World War II.

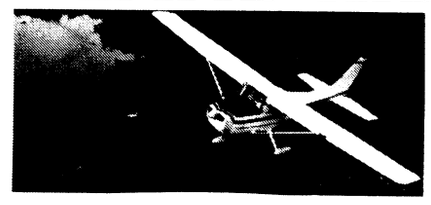
• The average age of Americans who fought in Vietnam was 19, compared with an average age of 26 for those in World War II.

• Americans who won the Medal of Honor for heroism in Vietnam numbered 150.

• Six hundred and thirty-six American POWs, some of whom had been held by the Communists for up to seven years, returned to the US with honor after the war.

• The war began with impressive U.S. public support, and as late as 1968, 53-percent of Americans favored stronger military action.

• The first American ground troops arrived in Vietnam in March 1965, and at the peak of the fighting in 1969, the U.S. had 550,000 troops fighting the wars.



• American ground forces defeated the Viet Cong and North Vietnam Army in every major encounter of the war — from the Drang Valley in 1965, to the TET offensive in 1968, to the Easter Offensive in 1972.

Exchange provides service, savings

Army & Air Force Exchange Service

Shoppers in Army and Air Force Exchange Service stores save an average of 24.4 percent compared to prices charged in commercial stores, according to the 1987 A.C. Nielson Co. price-comparison survey.

The survey showed AAFEs had lower prices 91-percent of the time while commercial prices were compared in February outside 17 Army posts and Air Force bases in the United States.

The 24.4 percent savings does not include state or local sales tax.

"We use the Neilsen survey to see if we're meeting our goal of saving customers 20-percent compared to downtown prices," explained Maj. Gen. John E. Long, AAFES commander. "I'm proud to say we exceeded our goal."

The survey included 317 national-branded items. Five test shoppings of each item in each location were attempted. The survey compared commercial prices of the day, including "sale" prices, with the AAFES regular price for like items. Clothing offered the highest savings at 31-percent, followed by household goods and appliances at 30.1 percent, stationery items at 30-percent, jewelry at 22.7 percent, automotive merchandise at 17.7 percent, tobacco products at 17.5 percent, toiletries at 16 percent and recreational merchandise (electronics, sporting goods, photography gear and toys) at 12.6 percent.

Markets surveyed were areas around England AFB, La.; Fort Sill, Okla.; Randolph AFB, Texas; Fort Jackson, S.C.; Patrick AFB, Fla.; Robins AFB, Ga.; Cameron Station, Va.; Fort Monmouth, N.J.; Pease AFB, N.H.; Ellsworth AFB, S.D.; Fort Carson, Colo.; Fort Knox, Ky.; Scott AFB, Ill.; Fort Lewis, Wash.; Norton AFB, Calif.; Fort Ord, Calif.; and Williams AFB, Ariz.

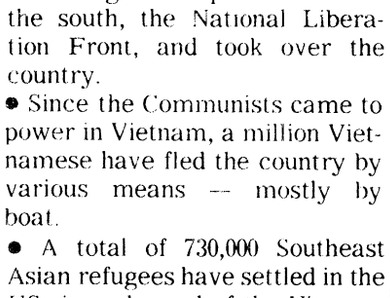
What is MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS

Can MS Be Treated?

Yes, to a degree. Much can be done to help people function at their best level on a day-to-day basis.



There are medications which can provide symptomatic relief for acute attacks and for more chronic disease. Muscle relaxers aid in reducing spasms. Tension, bowel and urinary distress, pain and other manifestations of the disease can also be eased by judicious use of medication, taken under a physician's direction.

There are other treatments that help. Counseling, to decrease emotional stress; physical therapy; exercise programs; attention to diet and adequate rest—all of these are extremely valuable in helping a person remain independent and able to lead a full and productive life.

Vets

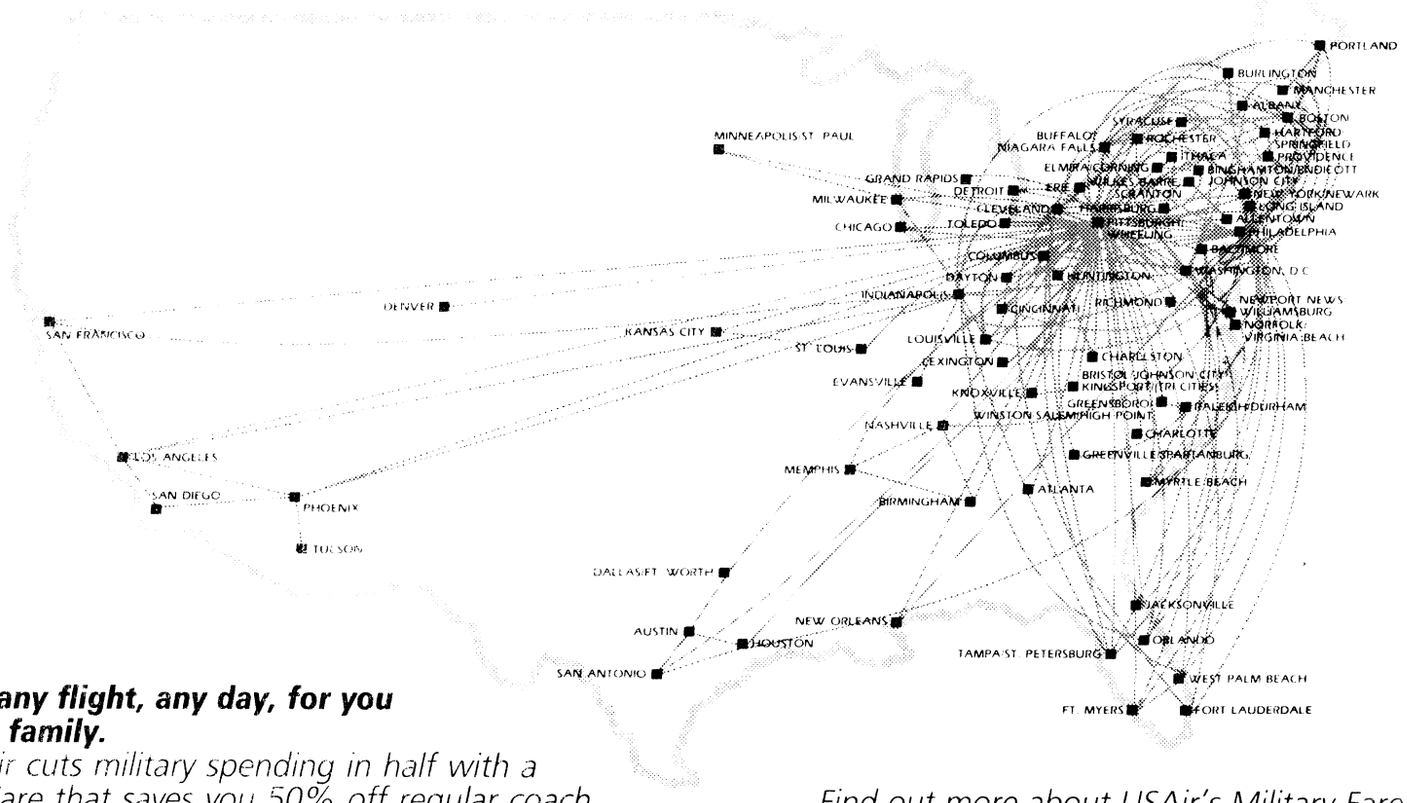
- Three theories developed by experst on why US objectives in the war weren't reached are: the US didn't clearly articulate a national objective for Vietnam, or a strategy for achieving the objective. The Pres committed the nation to war without invloving Congress and people in the process. The North Vietnamese, who lost an incredible 600,000 combat soldiers in the war, the equivalent to the US losing 10 million, were absoultyely detemrined to continue fiting.
- Once the war was over, the North Vietnamese abolished the Viet Cong and its political arm in the south, the National Liberation Front, and took over the country.
- Since the Communists came to power in Vietnam, a million Vietnamese have fled the country by various means -- mostly by boat.
- A total of 730,000 Southeast Asian refugees have settled in the US since the end of the Vietnam War — 468,000 from Vietnam, 147,000 from Laos, and 115,000 from Cambodia. The refugees have adjusted remarkably well. They have a higher employment rate than that of the US population as a whole, and their children have done well in school.
- The period of the Vietnam War brought time for other Southeast Asian countries — particularly Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand and Singapore — to develop and strengthen themselves politically and economically.
- During the decade following the end of the Vietnam War (1975-1985), east Asia has replaced Western Europe as America's overseas trading partner. During this decade, the noncommunist Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) grew at an average economic rate of seven percent in real terms after infaltion -- about twice the global average.



DREAM MAKER
that's what a baby is . . .

From the moment a baby is born, proud parents and grandparents dream of a future doctor or teacher . . . an astronaut or attorney . . . a tennis star or a quarterback . . . that future business partner. A baby is love, a maker of dreams, a dream come true. When a baby is born, the world is all right. When a baby dies, the dream dies, too.

Help us keep the dream alive. For 23 years, in the belief that every child should live the National SIDS Foundation has been helping families affected by Sudden Infant Death Syndrome. The Volunteer Resource Center is a clearing house of information for 24 organizations on the installation involving volunteers. If you are looking for ways to gain experience for possible paid employment or just want to keep your skills current stop by the Volunteer Resource Center and find out about the following positions.

Library - Just the thing for the person who likes to spend time in the library. You will shelve books, put up newspapers and assist in mending those books that are tattered.

Clerk-typist - Army Community Service has a need for three volunteers to work in the Army Emergency Relief office. Typing is a must with accuracy more important than speed; filing, answering phones, distributing messages, referring individuals to the right person are all part of the responsibilities.

Budget Counseling Committee Chairperson - If you have management and training abilities this might be the position for you. ACS needs one person to fill this job. Responsibilities include attending monthly board meetings, acting as a liaison between committee and Volunteer Supervisor, assures training for all personnel, supervises records, prepares articles concerning budget counseling for media release.

Receptionist - Red Cross needs volunteers for answering phones and to do general office work. Typing is helpful.

Administrative Assistant - If you have clerical ability and experience this might be for you. Assisting the Budget Chairperson and Counselors with the administrative areas of budget counseling are the main objectives. Typing is a must.

Budget Counselor - Are you a good listener? Are you aware of good budget practices and consumer affairs? Is arithmetic (basic) one of your strong suits? This position helps the service member to improve his/her credit, reliability and reputation and reduce levels of indebtedness.

Information Specialist - ACS needs several volunteers in this area where you will assist the Provost Marshal Office in providing information and giving directions to visitors stopping at the Information Center. A great way to meet people.

Assistant - The Learning Abilities Center is in need of someone who can work with children who have learning disabilities, very rewarding.

Loan Closet Chairperson - Management and Training abilities and a working knowledge of the English language is helpful for this position at ACS.

Publicity Chairperson - If you are able to coordinate publicity with groups and media and have an interest in news and reporting ACS can help you. Typing is helpful but not required.

Typist - If you are looking for a way to fine-tune your typing skills this position will help. Objective is to provide neat, error free typing.

Veterinary Clinic - Needs receptionist who will file, make appointments and fill out patient records. This falls under the Red Cross.

Receptionist - If you possess a clear, concise telephone voice, good penmanship, have a pleasant personality and like dealing with people you will find this job quite exciting and rewarding. ACS has five to 10 openings in this field.

Child care is provided at Tot Town or with Home Child Care Givers. Now is the time to take advantage of what is offered while the children are being cared for by professionals. For more information, please contact 545-5602/5931 or stop by DPCA, Building 241, room 210.

Two youths drown in river behind housing area

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two Fort Benning youths drowned last Thursday in the Chattahoochee River behind their Logan Street home.

Dead are Ashley R. Coleman, 11, and Carlos S. Coleman, 9.

According to another child who was playing on the river bank at the time, the pair undressed to their underwear and jumped into the river. Later, he heard the boys shouting for help as they became submerged in the Chattahoochee River and were swept away.

The witness said he ran back to the housing area and told his mother, who called police.

Rescue workers began searching that afternoon, but the bodies were not recovered until late Friday. Rescue crews included scuba divers, Rangers, military and DoD police and 36th Engineer Group boat crews. Also aiding in the search were teams from the Georgia Canine Rescue Association, Search and Rescue of Columbus, the Phenix City-Russell County Rescue Squad, The Fort Mitchell, Ala., Fire Department, Muscogee County Sheriff's Office, the Columbus Emergency Medical Rescue and the Georgia Department of Natural Resources. Approximately 75 volunteers also participated in the search.

Woods and rolling hills separate the Indianhead Terrace apartments from the river along with a section of a 6-foot high fence, which borders a ravine that lies within the housing area.

Indianhead Terrace is not, however, completely surrounded by fence.

Col. Philip R. Harris, Director of Engineering and Housing, said that as a result of the incident, funds have been provided by Training and Doctrine Command to put up a fence in the area through which the boys walked to the river. About 1900 feet of fence will be connected with the existing ravine fence, eliminating direct access to the river.

"Our aim is to fence the area immediately adjoining the river," Harris said, adding that "fencing, in and of itself, is not the total solution.

"Parent cooperation and supervision of children is also needed," he said.

Chattahoochee's currents pose dangerous threat

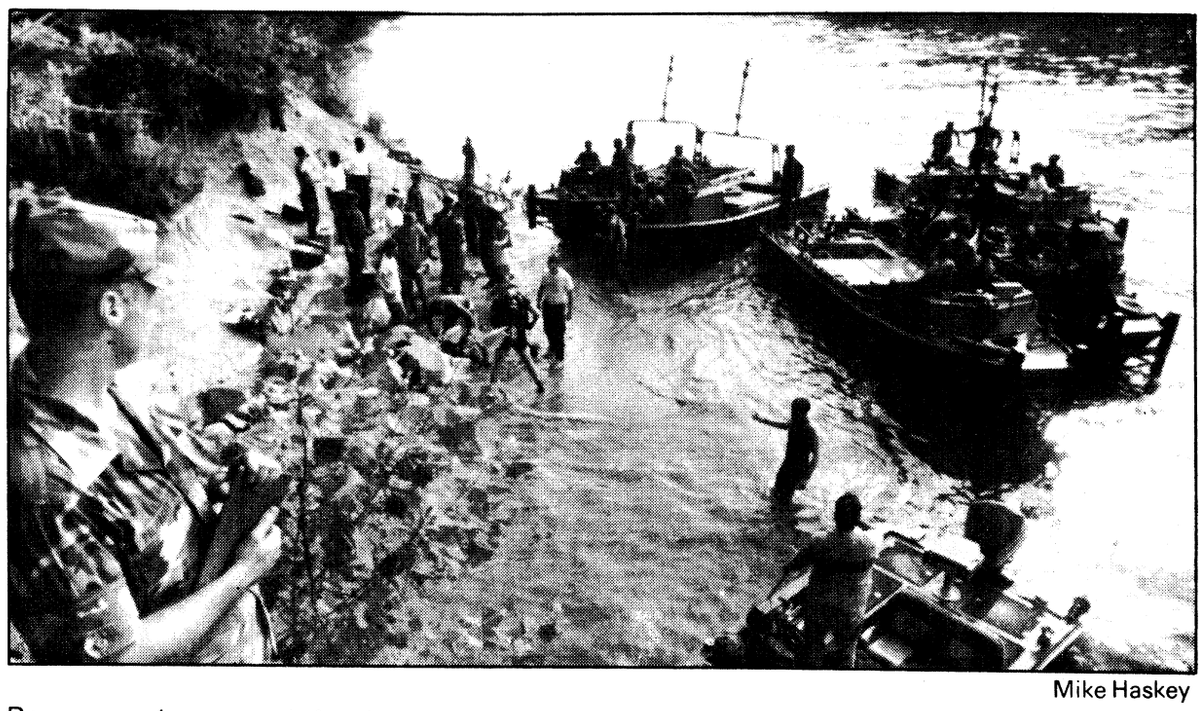
By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

The drowning last week of two post youths is a tragic reminder of why post rivers, streams and ponds are off limits to swimmers.

Fred Young, post safety officer, said the Chattahoochee can be a very dangerous body of water.

"There is always some current in the river, and this can increase tremendously on the immediate downstream side of dams when a gate is opened," he said.

By law, gates can be opened without any kind of warning siren or signal, he said. When the gates are opened, the water depth also increases, and this, combined with the increased current, can be a deadly combination, Young said.



The river banks are also dangerous, he said, because they are constantly being undercut by the current and the wakes of boats. Frequently, a bluff 20 feet or higher will slough off and fall into the water. For this reason, the river poses an added danger to children playing along the banks and to fishermen, he said.

In the last 25 years, 24 soldiers have drowned in the river, Young said. Many if not all of these deaths could have been prevented if proper safety precautions had been taken.

Several regulations prohibit swimming in the river. U.S. Army Infantry Center Reg. 210-5, paragraph 67.(b) prohibits swimming in all streams, ponds, lakes and rivers under military control, except for training purposes approved by the command.

USAIC Reg. 40-5 states that all artificial and natural pools, lakes, streams, and other bodies of water located on the installation are "considered unsafe for swimming, bathing and wading and are off-limits to all personnel," with command exceptions allowed.

Young said that commanders are responsible for informing incoming soldiers that the Chattahoochee River is dangerous and off-limits. In the wake of last week's deaths, his office is also in the process of posting more "No Swimming" signs along the river banks and at other ponds and streams on the installation.

Mike Haskey

Rescue workers search for the bodies of two boys swept away by the Chattahoochee River last Thursday.

Because the latest victims were children, Young also stressed the importance of education.

"All kids do things that their parents have forbidden; it's part of being a child," Young said. "So it is vital that parents educate their kids about the river and tell them why they shouldn't play around or swim in it."

He urges parents to tell their children why the river poses such a danger. "They (the children) need to know that if they go into the river, they're likely to die," he said.

Ranger who led the way in Grenada Conflict assumes command of 75th Ranger Regiment

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

ARanger who led the way during the Grenada Conflict is now the new commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment.

Col. Wesley B. Taylor assumed command from Col. Joseph Stringham last week, during a ceremony that showed off the regiment's air-mobile skills.

Taylor said he was on cloud nine when he received word last year that he would be the next commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment, a position he considers the best job a colonel could hold in the Army.

"I plan to continue the precedence where my predecessors left off," Taylor said., "I am going to maintain the regiment in the highest state of readiness because few will be on the battlefield before the Rangers, so everything must be focused on that."

Taylor said Ranger soldiers are unique people. "It takes a very special man to do this because he truly has to believe in what he is doing," he said.

"There are many personal sacrifices made when you are a Ranger. You are committing yourself to something greater than yourself — to the Army, to your country."

He considers understanding the combat mission essential and explained why the Ranger Indoctrination and Orientation Programs are important to that purpose.

"Testing the men both physically and mentally ensures us that they are fully committed to the effort," he said. "They are also taught important combat skills, plus legion and honor, all preparing them for the unit."

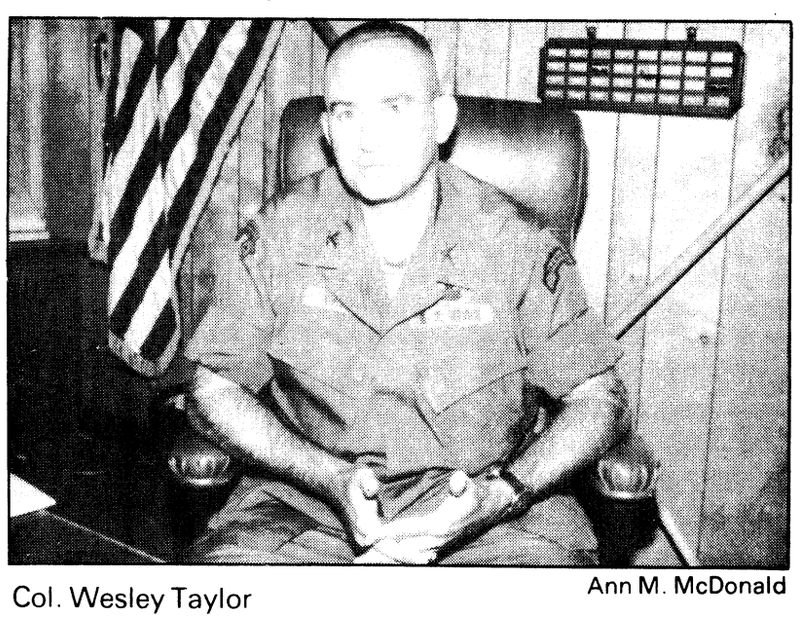
Once the Ranger has arrived at his particular unit, Taylor said it is very important to orient him as quickly as possible and, if he is married, orienting his family as well.

"The goal is to make that individual soldier feel important, welcome, and to get his feet on the ground as quickly as possible because he may have to go to war that night," he said.

Taylor said several things must be done to promote unit cohesion. First, soldiers must be taught the standard and be held to it. The second thing is discipline, and the third is telling people you appreciate them.

This means "thanking them for a good job and making a big deal of it when they leave," he said.

There is no room for selfishness with Taylor. "If you are wrapped up in yourself, you won't survive on the battlefield," he said.



Another thing he cannot stand to see is a soldier disgracing his uniform, and people who don't know their job technically or tactically.

Some more of his peeves are leaders who waste soldiers' time. "I can't stand walking into a training site and seeing Rangers sitting around while their leaders are getting their act together."he said. "I also don't like to see a lack of uniformity and standardization within a unit."

Taylor said he believes in supporting his non-commissiond officers. He said he truly believes in the old adage, "You are only as good of an officer as your first NCO."

He considers the most influential person in his career to be his first platoon sergeant at the 101st, Raymond Soto. "That man taught me how to be a platoon leader, to survive on the battlefield and why uniformity and standardization is so important within a unit," Taylor said.

That is one piece of advice he wishes to pass on to all officers. "Never discard the source of information you have in an NCO," he said. "You still have to weigh it out and act on your own, but never discard that source."

Col. Wesley Taylor

Ann M. McDonald

Besides the influence of his platoon sergeant, Taylor said he would have never made it this far without his wife, who is very important to him. "She and my two children keep me humble," he said. "I found out from them that being a commander and making all those decisions doesn't work at home."

Taylor foresees more multi-battalion exercises."Maybe two, maybe three battalions,"he said, "depending on the mission."

He stressed the importance of good communication flow up as well as down. He sees the need for leaders to share the hardships of their soldiers and to watch them and talk to them. He said he loves being with soldiers, and considers the staff time he has done as "payback" for the time he has spent commanding.

Benning school officials announce schedule for fall term sign-up

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The first day of school is less than a month away. The Fort Benning Schools will begin their 1987-88 school year on Tuesday, Aug. 25. It is time for all students — kindergarten through eighth grade — to register.

This year there will be 10 registration days instead of just one in all eight post schools. Parents can choose the day that best fits their schedule as long as registration is completed by Aug. 14.

Registration days and times are: Aug. 3 through 7 and 10 through 14, 9 a.m. to noon.

Parents should bring certain items to the school when they register. The items are determined by the student's age, grade and whether or not the child has previously attended a Fort Benning school. They are:

- Parents of all students (except kindergarteners) should bring last year's report card or grade replacement record.
- Parents of all students who are new to the Fort Benning school system should also bring an immunization certificate.
- Parents of all kindergarten students and first grade students who are new to the Fort Benning school system should also bring a birth certificate and proof of a physical examination.

A student must be five years old on or before Sept. 1 to enter kindergarten in Fort Benning schools.

Sixth, seventh and eighth grade students from all housing areas should report to Faith Middle School for registration.

High school students (grades 9-12) who did not attend a public high school in Muscogee County last year and who have not already pre-registered for the 1987-88 school year should report immediately to the Columbus Roberts Center (CRC) at 539 Brown Ave., Columbus, to pre-register.

Those high school students who attended a local public high school during the 1986-87 school year and those students who are new to Fort Benning, but have already obtained their school assignment from Columbus Roberts Center and pre-registered during the summer must report to their school of assignment on Tuesday, Aug. 25, between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. to confirm their registrations, obtain their class schedules and school bus pass, and complete any other required processing. Muscogee County school buses will run on that date for your convenience. All high school students must present evidence of immunization. School will begin in Muscogee County on Monday, Aug. 31.

For further information regarding registration in the Fort Benning Schools, phone 545-2915/2500.

OPINION

Uncontrolled children worry post resident

Dear Editor:

I am a dependent wife and mother, and one of the first to admit that I feel there are "things" the military could (or should) do for its military personnel and dependents.

I feel terrible for the parents of the two boys who died in the Chattahoochee River. I am not putting any blame on the parents of these boys. I am writing to the parents on this post in general.

I don't feel that the issue should be used to blame post officials (this time). Maybe it could, instead, be used to make parents more aware of the dangers of unattended children. It could have just as easily been a smaller child. "Children will be children." A fence "might" have helped, but children can climb and will, if they want, beyond a fence.

Many parents on this post do not know where their children are most of time. Many also allow them to go wherever they want. It is parents who are responsible for their children, not the children themselves.

One can drive (especially when it's cooler out) through a housing area and see children (from toddlers and up) roaming free with no adult supervision.

I feel a fence might have helped, but this is not the real problem. If post officials are to be at fault at all, it is in the fact that they are not forcing parents to supervise their young children.

Name withheld by request.

Bill of Rights outlines freedoms

American Fo[illegible] Press Service

When members of the Constitutional Convention met in Philadelphia 200 years ago, one of the major problems was how to provide for a more powerful central government while safeguarding basic rights for all citizens.

Although it is hard to believe now, some major American leaders of the day were adamantly opposed to the very idea of a Constitution for fear the new government would be too powerful.

Even after the new Constitution was written, it was, by no means, certain that the necessary number of states would ratify it.

When the Virginia Constitutional Convention met to consider ratification, Patrick Henry spoke in opposition. "The rights of conscience, trial-by-jury, liberty of the press — all pretensions to human rights and privileges, are rendered insecure, if not lost, by this change."

The battle lines were drawn over how to shape this new experiment in democracy. Alexander Hamilton, James Madison and John Jay collaborated on the famous Federalist Papers explaining the new Constitution. These documents were widely-circulated and debated in the states.

Supporters of the Constitution won, but not by much. The vote in Virginia was 89-79, and in New York, it passed by the slim margin of three votes.

Even though they lost the battle against ratification, the opponents contributed as much to our modern system of government as the supporters. It was their criticism that forced supporters to promise an immediate series of amendments to guarantee individual rights.

Ten amendments were adopted in 1791 to safeguard individual rights and freedoms from government encroachment. It is in those 10 amendments — the Bill of Rights — that we find the protection given the right to peaceably assemble, freedom of the press and speech, the right to a speedy and public trial by jury, and the right to the free exercise of religion.

These provisions are considered such an integral part of the Constitution that many don't realize they were not included in the original proposal. It is the combination of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights that is considered one of the greatest documents in human history.

This is one of a series of columns celebrating the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Constitution.

Workers must be highly efficient to be competitive in market place

USAIC Public Affairs Office

When a moratorium on the commercial activities program was announced recently, a collective sigh of relief could be heard over Fort Benning.

The sigh came from the hundreds of post employees whose positions are being studied to determine what is the most efficient way to do business — in-house, or by contracting out.

But the sigh was premature. The program is not dead. It's only on hold until the Department of the Army and Congress decide what approach to take.

The idea for contracting out originated in 1921 when Congress stated that the federal government should not compete with private industry, but should rely on industry to provide goods and services. This would be done where the result would be the expenditure of fewer tax dollars without jeopardizing the national defense and without infringing on an inherently governmental activity.

In other words, as long as the government is doing something the private sector can do, there will be a commercial activity program. As long as there is a chance to save taxpayers money by having local industry provide the goods and services, there will be a commercial activity program. If there is a chance of making more soldiers available for TOE units, there will be a commercial activity program.

Thus, if a post has a refuse collection service, or laundry operations, it will be directed to study those activities to see if it can be done cheaper and more effectively by a commercial firm. After studying the operations, the management analysts will develop the most efficient way of performing a function. Based on that data, costs will be developed and a sealed bid submitted on behalf of the government.

At the same time, private industry will submit its bids. The bids will then be opened, and if the lowest commercial bid is at least 10-percent below the government's bid, more than likely, that service will be contracted out.

Is it pre-ordained that the private sector will win out over the federal government?

To date, Fort Benning's track record is not good. The post has gone up against the private sector on four occasions and lost each time.

It lost the Guard Service Contract, the Laundry and Dry-cleaning business, the Refuse Collection and Disposal service and the dining facilities operation.

In all, 580 part-time and full-time civilian positions were affected. However, the federal government stands to save about $15 million over the term of these contracts.

Based on this, what chance does Fort Benning stand of keeping in-house such major functions as DEH and DOL?

The post commander, Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer said, "It's not a foregone conclusion that we will go contract." We can win it in-house, but if we don't work very hard and it goes contract, we deserve to lose it.

"We aren't in the business of providing jobs," he said. "We are in the business of accomplishing a mission. We need to be proficient, efficient and productive."

Currently, teams from the management analysis division of the Directorate of Resource Management are working with the DEH and the DOL. They are studying every position in each division and making recommendations on how to accomplish the mission most efficiently.

Performance Work Statements — how a job is done and how often — will be drafted. Cost studies will be conducted and the government's bid will then be prepared.

It is this bid that will go up against the private sector. Under the current moratorium, all these actions will continue to take place up to the point where bids are requested.

If the post is to stand a chance, the people doing the studies have to be recognized as "white hats," not "black hats."

They need cooperation from all levels of management, as well as the workers.

"We cannot and should not tolerate less than a work ethic which calls for doing the best job at the least cost," says Dave Flog, director of Resource Management.

"If management resists by not going along with recommended change, the government will not be competitive," he said. "If a manager thinks he is doing a worker a favor by promoting him to a grade not commensurate with the position, he's wrong."

"He's not only hurting the worker, but the entire workforce as he just made it more expensive to do business," he said.

More expensive means less competitive. Thus the entire operation is now jeopardized.

To stand a fighting chance, workloads need to be documented, jobs streamlined, marginal positions eliminated.

Only then can a most efficient organization be established. Only then can Fort Benning be competitive.

There are definite advantages to keeping positions "in-house."

Federal workers tend to be more mission-oriented, responsive to the needs of the commander, offer more flexibility and are loyal to the organization.

However, if the workforce is not operating at the optimum efficiency, all these advantages fall by the wayside. It all comes down to "how much money can be saved."

Fort Benning can win the contracting fight

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The death knell for commercial activities program has not yet tolled.

The philosophy that the government shouldn't be competing with industry has been around since 1921 and, while it received a boost during the Eisenhower years, no one really took it seriously until the 1970s.

Oh sure, a post would lose a guard service or a training and audiovisual operation to the commercial sector, but most of us figured it would never happen to Fort Benning.

Suddenly, four operations were commercialized, 600 federal positions affected and now they are knocking on the doors of DOL, DEH and DPTM. Now, we're talking of thousands of employees and all of our backs are against the wall.

Then Department of the Army announced the moratorium. "Relief," we thought. "Back to business as usual," we figured.

Don't bet the house and car on it. CA has not gone away. Instead of wishful thinking, we need to be talking to the management analysts, listening to their recommendations and gearing up for

Essay contest offers cash prizes

The Fort Benning Public Affairs Office and the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army is sponsoring a Bicentennial essay contest for active duty military and Department of the Army civilians. The topic will be, "What does the Constitution Mean to You."

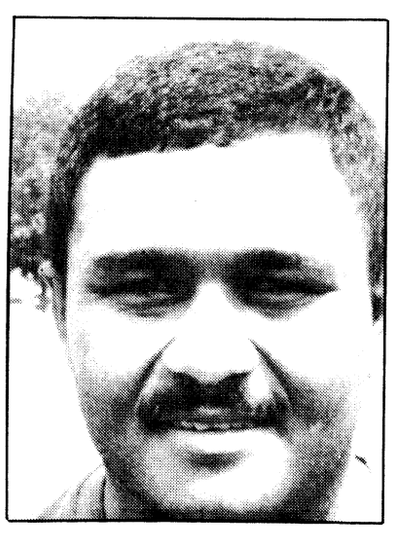
The first place winner will receive a $500 U.S. savings bond, second place a $200 bond and the third place winner will get a $100 bond.

Winning essays will be run in a special Bicentennial issue of The Bayonet Sept. 11.

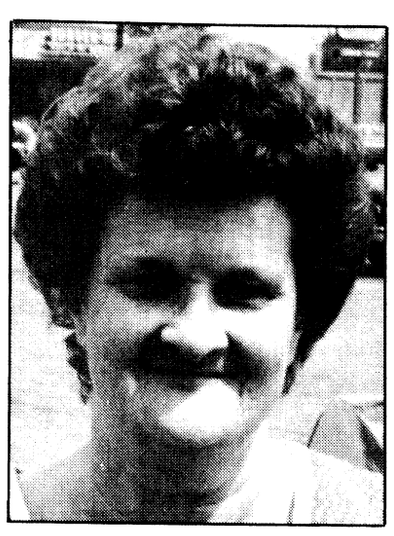
All entries must be turned in to the Command Information Office by the close of business Sept. 1.

The essay must be typed, double spaced on 8-1/2 by 11-inch paper, and be at least 250 words long, but no longer than 750 words. The entrant's social security number must be typed on each page in the upper right corner. A 3 by 5-inch card must contain the typed name, social security number, duty phone number and duty address.

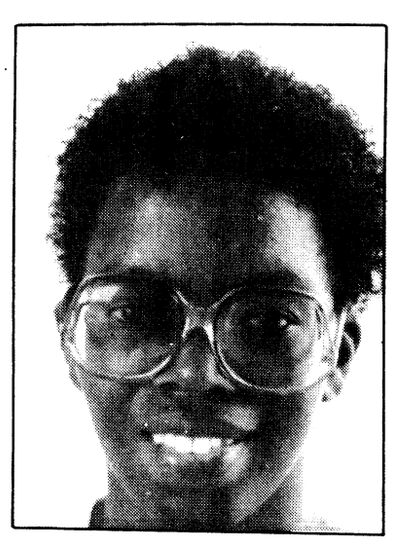
Essays can be dropped off or mailed to The Bayonet office in Room 601, Building 4, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.



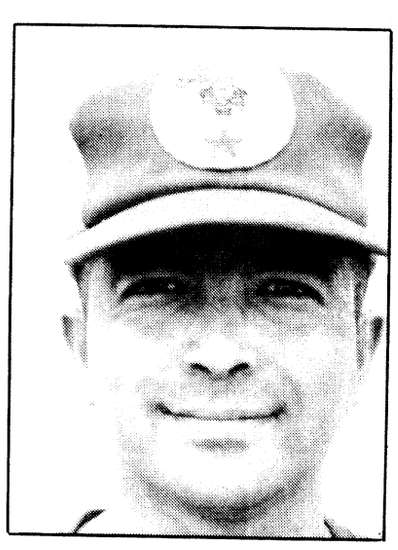
VARIOUS VOICES / What do you think about chapel programs on post?



SSgt. Alfred Tarjeron, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I think the overall program is good. It fills the needs of the community and adds to the morale of soldiers and family members. I would like to see more activities such as going on trips to different places."



Lisa Mihal, family member — "I like the chapel programs here. The chaplain at my church knows what is going on and puts humor into it. I can relate to him and understand what he is saying.



Sgt. Carlos Color, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division — "I think the programs are very good. I attend the Spanish Catholic services on main post. The hours are convenient for my family because they are later in the morning, so it gives them time to relax."

Betty Grantham, retiree — "I think the chapel program on Fort Benning is fantastic. My daughter just got married in one of the chapels and everyone was very nice and helpful."

Sp4 Hennette Butts, 80th Tactics Division, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I think the chapel programs are good. They offer a wide variety of services. One thing I would like to see is some church-organized cookouts."

SFC Arturo V. De Los Reyes, 3rd Ranger Company, Ranger Department — "I attend the Catholic services at the main post chapel and I can relate to the chaplain. He tries to balance civilian, military and God all together. They also have activities for the entire family, religious instruction and coffees."

Upgrading of phone system begins in Harmony Church

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

Upgrading of the Fort Benning telephone system is in its first phase, as new distribution cable is now being laid in the Harmony Church Area.

The new distribution cable being laid by COMSTOCK Communication Inc., is fiber optics and expected to be in place by August 12.

According to Donald L. Brown, Chief of Logistics, Information System Command, the current cable and switch system was installed in the Harmony Church Area as early as 1950.

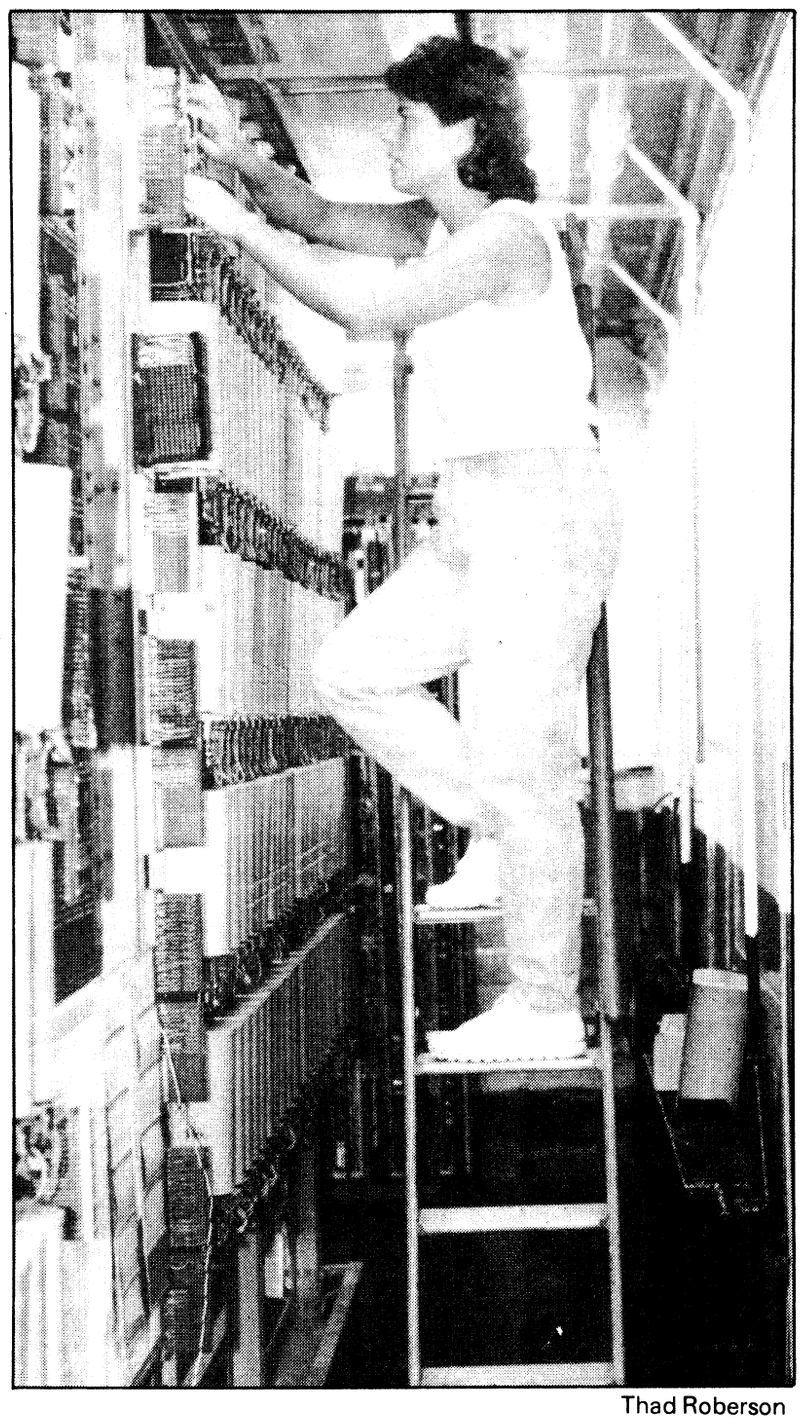
The old lead cables are being replaced by new distribution cable which, according to Brown, "is more durable, and a better conductor for the upcoming switch.

"The upgrade is the initial phase of a modernization effort to replace obsolete electromechanical switches with Electronic Computerized Switching Systems," said Brown.

In the second phase of the upgrade, a new GTE switch will be installed in the Harmony Church area. At the time of "crossover" to the new system, the Harmony Church cable will be able to service 1,400 lines with the capability of expanding to 4,800, without any interuption of service.

When the entire post telephone system has been upgraded, which the Information System Command estimates will be next July, the Electronic Computerized Switching Systems will provide added attractions for the user.

The new system will provide new call features such as call-forwarding, call-transfer, speed calling, three-way calling and call waiting.



There will be four new switches on Fort Benning, each servicing a major location. They will be located in Harmony Church, Main Post, Sand Hill and Martin Army Community Hospital, which will share with the Kelly Hill community.

Users will be able to access telephone numbers within their community, simply by dailing the last four digits of the number. When this new feature is operational, the current prefixes will remain effective so that callers on Main Post must dail the entire seven digit number when calling Harmony Church.

"In the near future," said Brown, "we will be going to a WATTS system, replacing the FTS. The Electronic Computerized Switching Systems will allow us immediate access to numbers called using the WATTS line, making it easier to identify any phone abuse.

"The printout provided by the vendor, will list the number called from, the number called, length of conversation, and just about everything except social security number," said Brown.

With the first phase soon to be complete at Harmony Church, Fort Benning will have state-of-the-art telephone communications.

the next round.

DOL, DEH and DPTM can be won in house if we work hard, work smart and develop the most efficient organization. Fort Lee proved this when it kept DOL in-house.

But, if we are complacent, or even "give up," figuring we don't stand a chance, then we won't stand a chance.

Sacrifices must be made. Some jobs must be eliminated, positions streamlined.

We all have a role to play: worker, supervisor and union.

We need to be determined to win; then, we must cooperate with one another and we will win. We need the courage to make the tough decisions on jobs and space.

Determination, courage and a lot of cooperation — that's the formula for success and for becoming a most efficient organization to keeping the jobs in-house.

It can be done.

507th PIR

By F.R. Hayse
HHC, 1-507th PIR

An airborne trainer in the 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment puts up with a lot of hardships when he volunteers to train our nation's airborne forces. But why does he do it?

Why does he regularly get up at 4:30 a.m. to be able to get his airborne squad up at 5 a.m., when his neighbors usually go to work at 7:30 or 8 a.m.? Why does he not return home at the end of a long summer day until around 7 p.m. when those same neighbors are all home with their families by 5 p.m.? Why does he leave his wife and children at home to go make a night combat equipment parachute jump with his squad, knowing their worry and concern for him?

Why does he train from sun-up to sunset, 50 weeks a year, constantly re-enforcing the slow-to catch-on while continuing to motivate the quick learners? Why does he move his squad from physical training to parachute landing falls and mock doors, from 34-foot towers to swing landing trainers, from 250-foot towers to MACO briefings and operations orders, from parachute issue to sustained airborne training?

Why does he do it?

He does it because the sight of the parachute canopy above his head, the cool night breeze in his face, and the quiet calmness of the silent sky embracing him are sensations that no one but a paratrooper can really experience and appreciate.

He does it because he has such strong feelings of love and loyalty for his family, his friends, his students, his unit, and his country.

He does it because he is a tough and disciplined professional, a "Black Hat," trained to endure hardship and train others like no other soldier in the world.

He does it because he's an airborne trainer in the 507th Parachute Infantry...a "Black Hat,"...and he's one of a kind.

2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment, 10th Mountain Division has added a new twist to the already intense competition between the platoons within the battalion. One particular platoon will now have the honor of being selected platoon of the quarter.

According to 2nd Lt. Loren Ramos, this award was the brainstorm of the battalion S-1. "The S-1 devised a series of tests to go along with the Army Readiness Training Evaluation Program and combined them as a test to see how each platoon would fare in real battle conditions."

Ramos said that this is very good way for the battalion commander to see how well his unit is prepared for war.

There are 18 platoons eligible for the honor and this quarter 3rd Platoon, Company A came out on top.

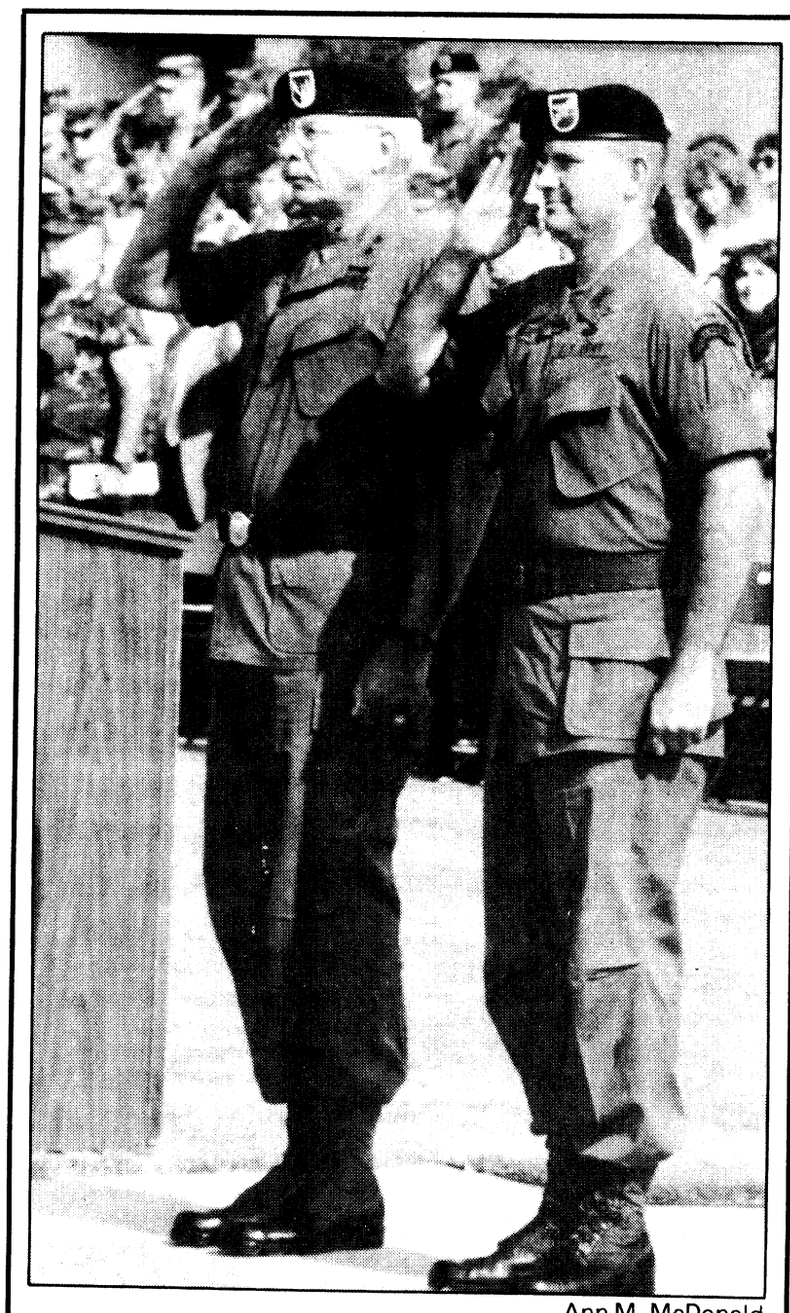
Rangers singing new tune

Infantry Band member composed special song for regiment soldiers

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Rangers not only received a new Commander last Thursday but they received something else as well, a gift in the form of a song.

The song was dedicated to the Rangers by CW02 Gary Crown of the Infantry Center Band.



According to Crown, he wrote tne march late last year because he had heard the one the Rangers were using and didn't feel the song was appropriate.

"I wasn't tasked to write the march," he explianed, "writing music is something I enjoy doing and I saw the need so I filled it."

Crown then wrote the song and met with Col. Joseph Stringham.

"Col. Stringham was delighted with the idea and it was decided that it would be presented on the date of the Regimental Change of Command." Crown said.

Col. Wesley Taylor, new commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment, said, "The Rangers are very appreciative of his efforts, and the fact that he singled us out to honor in this way is a super gift that will be remembered long after he leaves Fort Benning."

Ann M. McDonald

Maj. Gen. Leroy N. Suddath Jr. (left), Special Operations commander, and Col. Wesley B. Taylor, incoming commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment, salute the colors during the change-of-command ceremony last week.

Fort Benning Management Association seeks college scholarship applicants

Management Association

The Fort Benning Management Association is seeking applicants for college scholarships. All active duty or retired military and civil service employees and their family members residing within a 50-mile radius of the Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning area are eligible to apply.

The scholarships are intended for undergraduate applicants who are interested in studying in the field of management or business.

The association will select a recipient for a $1,260 per-year scholarship to Troy State University at Fort Benning. This must be used during the period of fall 1986 and summer 1987 and will comprise nine courses. The association will also award an additional two scholarships: a $300 per quarter or $900 per year scholarship to Troy State University at Fort Benning and $200 per quarter or $600 per year to any accredited college or university.

Applicants are required to write a letter to the association formally requesting considertion for the scholarship, including highlights of applicant's academic career and extracurricular activities.

Along with the letter, applicants should include a copy of their high school transcript, a completed application to Troy State University or the college of their choice, and a copy of their request for SAT or ACT scores. Applicants must also submit three letters of recommendaion, with one, if practical, from their principal or high school guidance counselor, transcripts from any college previously attended.

Applications must be submitted to Maj. Gravatt, 36th Engineer Group, Building 2827 (545-2886) or M. Crescioni, 36th Engineer Group (545-2686) by Aug. 12.

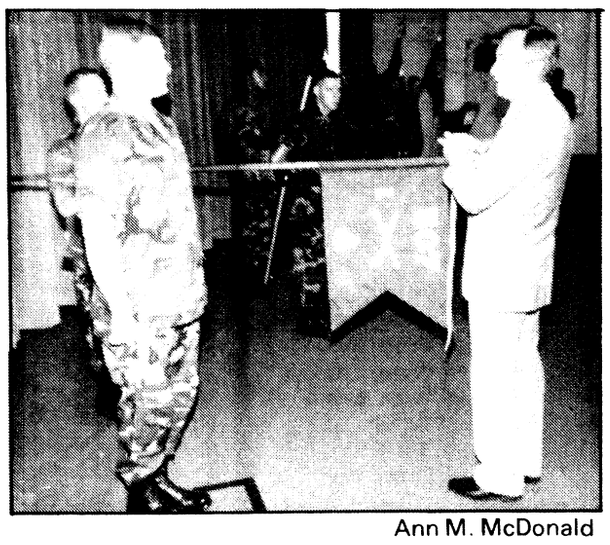
Airborne unit wins AUSA award for memberships

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

In keeping with true Airborne spirit, the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment is truly leading the way. Their unit is at 100 percent strength in Association of the United States Army memberships.

CSM Eddie Roberts of the 507th, attributes their success to the team player concept. "It just started out as one company at 100 percent and went from there," he said. "The first sergeants played an important part. They pointed out the benefits to their NCO's and importance of setting the example."



According to Roberts, the 507th wanted to lead the way for the whole post.

"With our funds we have beer blasts," Roberts said, "and we buy tickets to events and hand them out to deserving individuals in the companies."

SFC Robert Reeves, a platoon sergeant with Company A, stressed the importance of AUSA when recruiting the soldiers directly under him. "I'm totally committed to the mission," he said, "not only in training but in all army activities as well, and AUSA is a part of that."

Reeves said that in his company they use AUSA funds to give an award to the NCO selected as instructor of the cycle. "We give a plaque which helps boost the morale and gives that little extra pat on the back," he said.

"Besides, AUSA is probably the only lobby we have left in the military and, we need to support their effort."

Ann M. McDonald

Capt. Gerald Stansel, Company A commander, accepts the 100 percent streamer from Jim Gallagher, AUSA president.

AUSA President Jim Gallagher praised their efforts. "The willingness of the 507th to support AUSA demonstrates the high level of professionalism of the personnel in that unit."

Since AUSA was formed 37 years ago it has become the "one voice" for a total Army including the active, retired, Army Reserve, National Guard, DA civilians and family members.

The principal objectives of AUSA are to educate the public, coordinate with industry, provide support for the people who serve in uniform and enhance military development.

DOL accepts 3rd quarter SPIRIT award

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

In a ceremony Tuesday at Infantry Hall, the Directorate of Logistics was recognized as the winner of the 3rd Quarter "Project SPIRIT Award."

SPIRIT, which stands for "Systematic Productivity Improvement Review In TRADOC," is a program for capturing and documenting all savings generated at Fort Benning and throughout the Department of Army.

Col. James Daily, Chief of Staff, presented the award to the DOL team, which documented eight suggestions and ten management initiatives to generate an annual savings of almost 1.5 million dollars.

"Improving productivity is what SPIRIT is all about. Any savings generated as a result of managing our resources in a productive manner," said Daily, " whether time, money, manpower, or equipment, is eligible for inclusion in SPIRIT."

The second place Meritorious Award went to the Internal Review and Audit Compliance, whose one management improvement recommendation of an audit for better control over small arms, registered an annual saving of almost $1.3 million.

The Directorate of Plans, Training, and Mobilization received the third place Achievement Award. An annual savings of $24,000 was generated in the three quarter by its three suggestions.

There were also six individuals who received project spirit awards.

According to David L. Flo, Director of Resource Management, "the individual project SPIRIT Award is presented to employees who have contributed significantly toward attaining the SPIRIT objective of maximizing Army resources."

Those individual award receipients are Debra A. McCarter, DOC; Patricia D. Thomas, DOC; James A. Grantham, DOL; Bob Wilson, DEH; James E. Lawrence and Donald S. Nelson, DOL; John L. Derhammer, CPO.

Suggestions implemented by these individuals provided annual savings ranging from $2,000 to $379,393.

"Everyone likes to be a winner," said Daily,. "and Fort Benning is usually number one in everything. We can be number one in SPIRIT by getting involved and reporting things we are already doing to save government dollars."

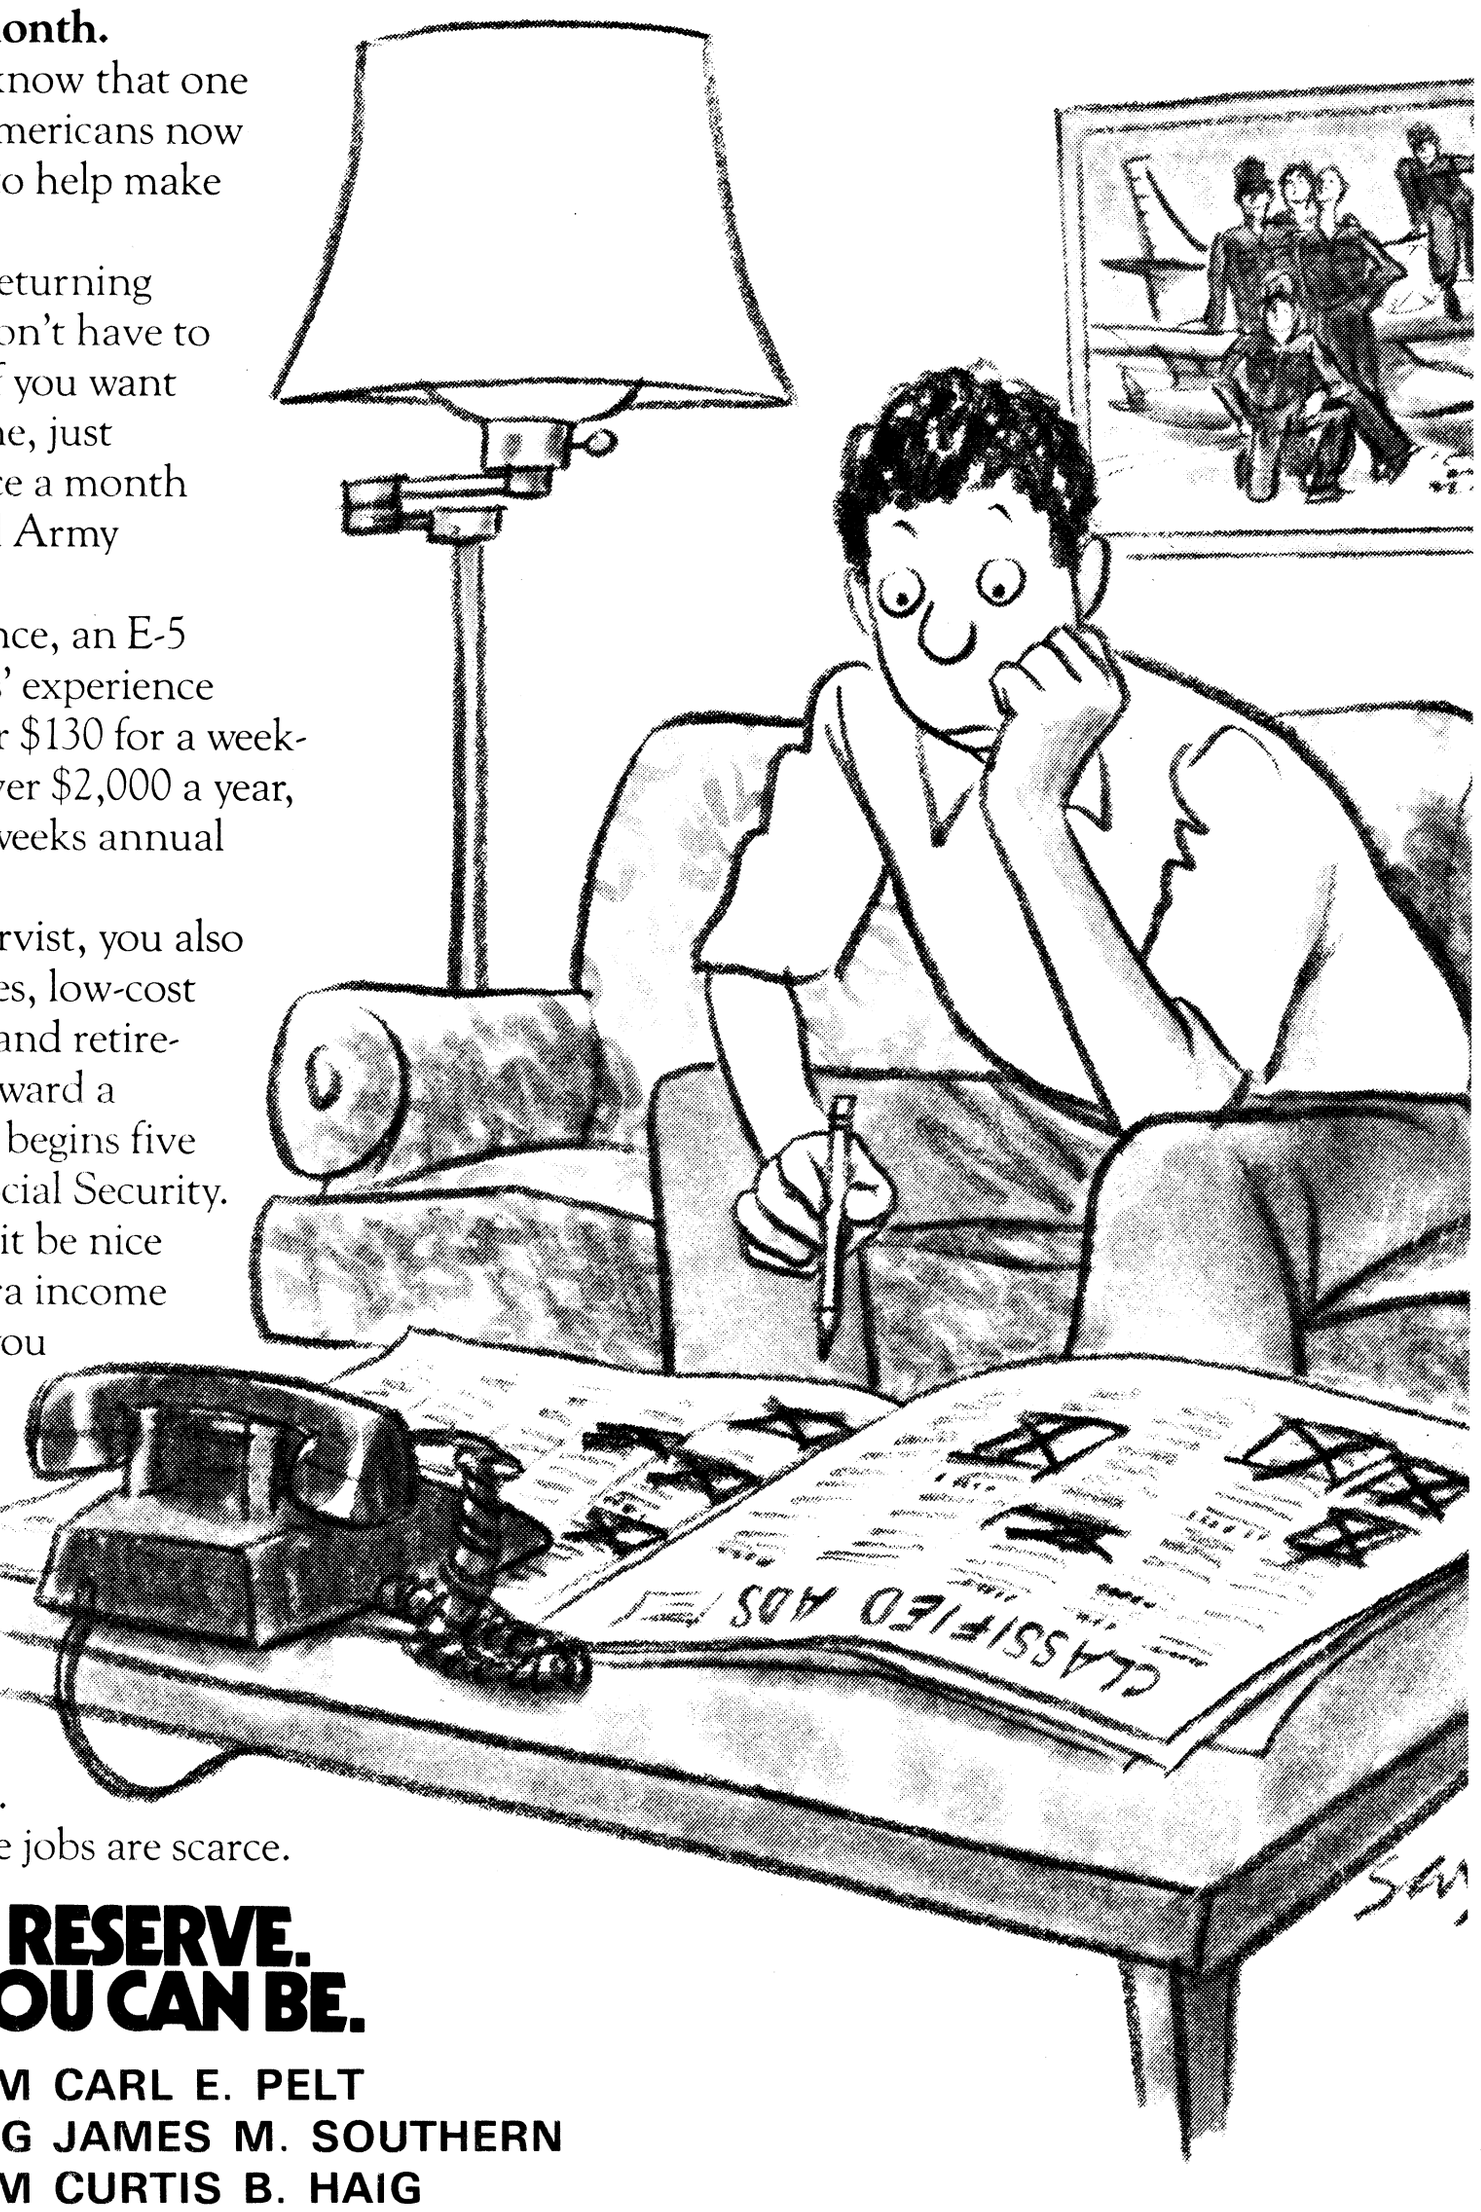
A GOOD PART-TIME JOB IS HARD TO FIND.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Did you know that one out of three Americans now "moonlights" to help make ends meet?



But as a returning veteran, you don't have to "moonlight." If you want an extra income, just "weekend" once a month with your local Army Reserve unit.

For instance, an E-5 with four years' experience now earns over $130 for a weekend's work. Over $2,000 a year, counting two weeks annual training pay.

As a Reservist, you also get PX privileges, low-cost life insurance, and retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have an extra income waiting when you get home?

It can be arranged. See your unit commander, or talk to your in-service recruiter, listed below. Act fast. Good part-time jobs are scarce.

LIFEGUARD

Watery job not all fun, glamour

By George Mingee
197th Inf Bde Correspondent

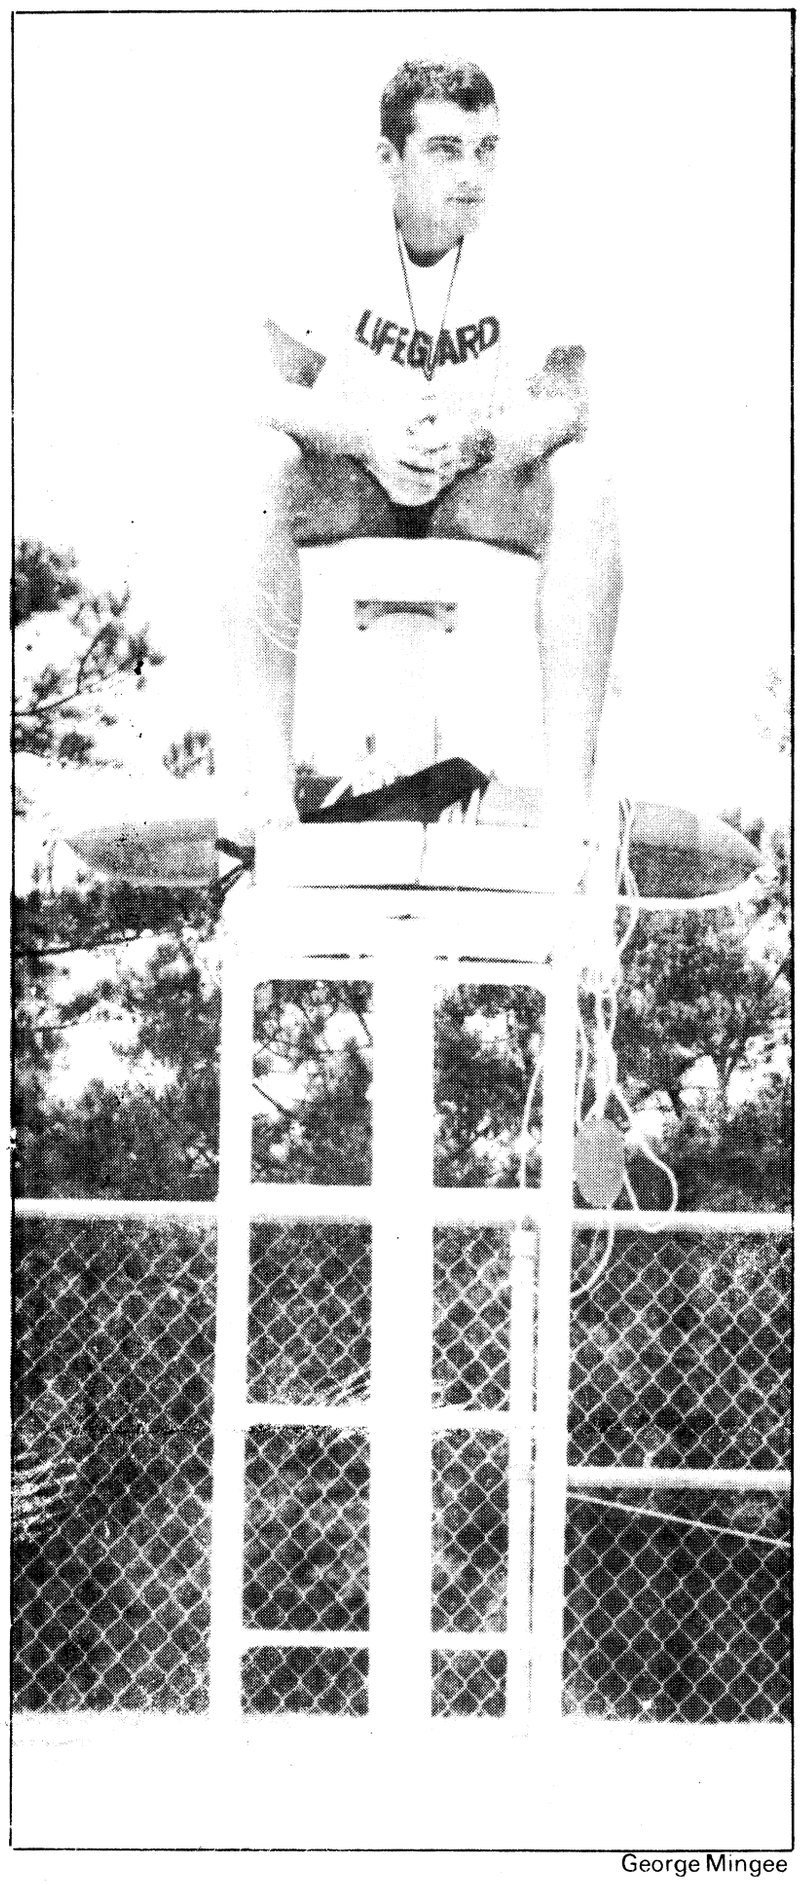
A lifeguard's job is thought to be a glamorous one, with little more to do than sit in the sun and tan. But a lifeguard does have to become certified in many ways.

A certificate in lifesaving is needed, with a written and water test given and a passing grade recorded. You must also obtain a certificate in CPR (cardio-pulmonary resuscitation). A further class is given on first aid. All of these requirements must be met in order to become qualified to be a lifeguard.

The Kelley Hill Pool recently reopened, after going through minor repairs. Lifeguards at the pool chipped in and painted the surrounding area, including the entire side of the pool. One of the many duties of a lifeguard is to ensure that the area stays clean and safe for all that come to swim and bask in the sun.

"The job of lifeguarding is not all the fun and glamour some people think it is," said Teri Johnson, supervisor of the pool. "The first year I was a lifeguard, a guy had an epileptic seizure. It was really a scary moment for me."

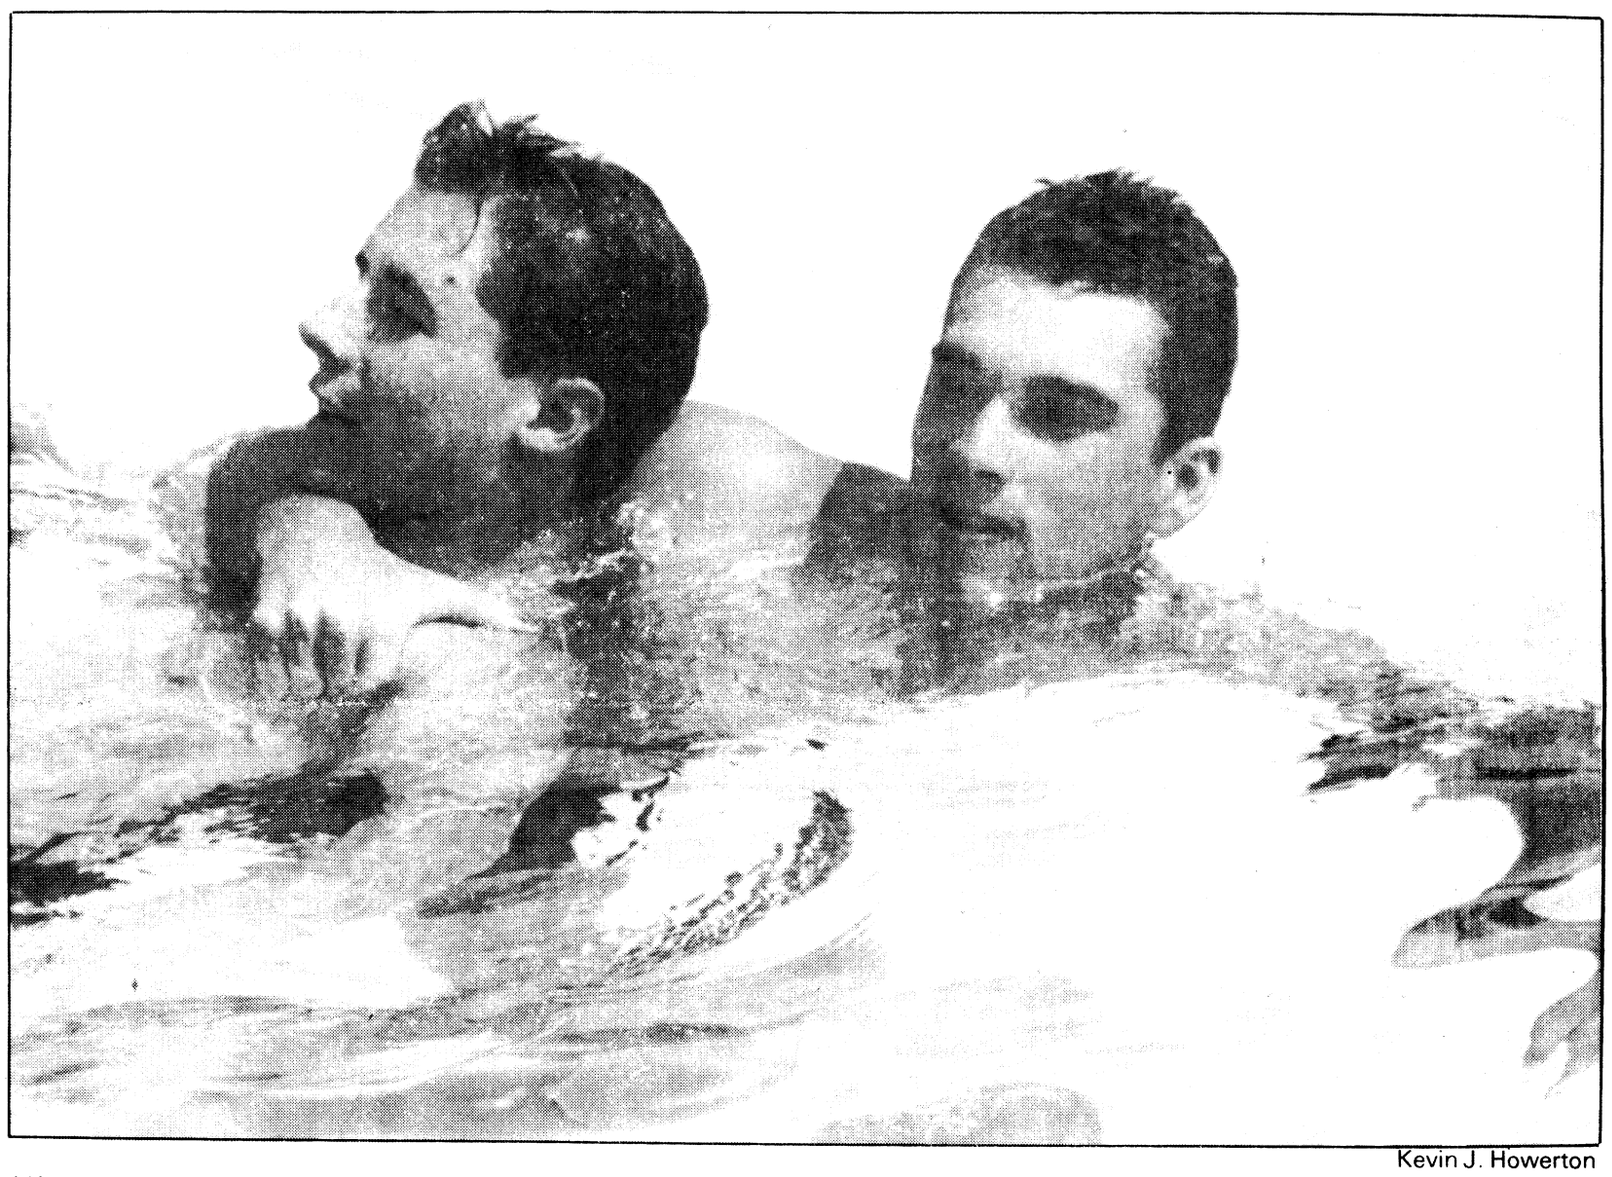
Soldiers who are selected to lifeguard have a big responsibility placed on them.



Pvt. William Comedy, a supply specialist, in Company C, 2-69 Armor, said "lifeguarding has it's moments. It's not all fun and games."

The job of a lifeguard can be a rewarding experience, but on the other hand it's a commitment that you have to uphold. Lifeguards must ensure that everyone has a safe day at the pool.

Water is not always friendly, even an experienced swimmer can become fatigued and panic. That's when a lifeguard and all of his training comes into play to save a person from becoming a casualty.



With the sun setting and the pool closing, a lifeguard's job is done for the day, but his duties are not forgotten.

"I would love to lifeguard all year, as long as possible," said Spec. 4 Mike Magnum, one of the lifeguards at Kelley Hill pool.

Soldier overcomes obstacles with never-say-die attitude

By Sally Roberts
197th Correspondent

When Rafael Castro-Leon entered basic training in 1975, one thing he learned from his drill sergeants was that he could depend on them for help and advice. Early in his career, Castro benefitted from the non-commissioned officer's experience, and now, Staff Sgt. Castro follows the example that NCOs had set for him early in his career.

During the past 12 years in the Army, Castro has maintained a never-say-die attitude. He has overcome many obstacles and has taken advantage of every opportunity. Through the varied positions he has held as a soldier, Castro has developed a strong sense of obligation toward his duties as an NCO, as well as a great respect for the officer corps.

When he entered the Army, Castro could not speak English. However, he managed to overcome the language barrier and benefit from his physical stamina to be awarded a promotion upon graduation from basic training.

When he reached his first duty station to work as an administrative clerk, Castro became an example to the Spanish-speaking soldiers that he in-processed into the Fort Knox receptions station. He worked as a trouble-shooter, assisting the Spanish soldiers in understanding the Army, and showed them the benefits of learning to speak, read and comprehend English.

Castro's determination to succeed gained the notice of his supervisors and led to his recommendation for a position as the commanding general's driver. This position exposed Castro to many senior officers and NCOs and demanded that he stay sharp at all times.

"This job gave me the chance to work with people who were really educated to the military," Castro explained. "I listened to what they said, developed a sense of discipline and learned to organize myself and not to make mistakes. Everything that I acquired from them was only to better myself."

On the advice of these leaders, Castro made a decision to pursue a combat arms military occupation specialty. He attended school at Fort Knox, Ky., and strengthened his soldier skills as a tanker. He later made another career switch to a medical supply specialist and also found the time to complete drill sergeant training, spend two years "on the trail" and earn his jump wings.

"I always want to stay ahead of the game," said Castro. "I have the experience to do many things. If the Army needs me in combat, I have served as a tanker and I'm a qualified paratrooper. If the Army needs me to train new soldiers, I am ready for it."

Staff Sgt. Castro attributes his success in the Army to the quality NCOs and officers he has worked with.

"I have always had someone to pat me on the back and recognize my achievements," Castro said.

Housing list

Whenever a soldier applies for military family housing, he or she is given an eligibility date. This date is not necessarily the date of application. Each waiting list is maintained and housing is assigned in accordance with the eligibility date.

If when called for quarters, a soldier is unable to move because of a lease, temporary duty assignment, sickness, etc., he or she will be passed over until they are available for quarters, but they will maintain their original eligibility date.

As of July 27, the eligibility date of the last person to be assigned quarters in each category is as follows:

Junior NCO, 2 bedroom — Sept. 23, 1986
Junior NCO, 3 bedroom — July 15, 1987
Junior NCO, 4 bedroom — June 30, 1987
Junior NCO, 5 bedroom — May 2, 1985
Senior NCO, 3 bedroom — Feb. 6, 1987
Senior NCO, 4 bedroom — July 22, 1987
Senior NCO, 5 bedroom — Dec. 1, 1986
Company grade officer, 2 bedroom — June 26, 1987
Company grade officer, 3 bedroom — May 27, 1987
Company grade officer, 4 bedroom — June 24, 1987
Field Grade officer, 3 bedroom — Sept. 16, 1986
Field grade officer, 4 bedroom — Dec. 15, 1986
Senior grade officer, 3 bedroom — May 29, 1987
Senior grade officer, 4 bedroom — Dec. 15, 1986

New Youth Activities Center opens

Thad Roberson

Ten-year old Katie Kendall talks on the telephone at the new Youth Activity Center.

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

With hands cupped in a perfect "V" to block out the sun, little faces have peered through the windows of the new Youth Activities Center in anticipation of opening day.

The excited faces need wonder no more. The 22,000-square-foot facility officially opens today at 1:30 p.m., as Brig. Gen. Barry McCaffrey, post deputy commanding general, cut the ribbon in an opening day ceremony.

There will also be a reception and guided tour through the facility.

The new center houses a multipurpose ballroom, which can be divided into three areas.

Ballroom one is mirrored and has training bars to accommodate the YA fall ballet classes, while the center ballroom features a lighted dance floor. The third ballroom is reserved for general meetings.

According to Billy Smith, Director Youth Activities, there will be an increase in shows featuring live entertainment.

"Because there is a stage in ballroom two, we will host more productions as a result of our Youth Amateur Theater Group," Smith said.

"There will also be more table games, such as pool, air hockey, and table tennis, due to the additional space in the new center," she added.

Also located in the center area of the building is a unique craft center, equipped with sink and adequate storage for ongoing projects.

The Center will have a open house Saturday, beginning at 2 p.m. "We want to give the Fort Benning family an opportunity to become familiar with the place where their children will be spending so much of their time," Smith said.

On Saturday, there will be pre-teen and teen dances, featuring live entertainment, provided by "Suite 16," a local Columbus band.

The pre-teen dance, ages 6 to 12, will be from 7 until 8:45 p.m. Then the teens, ages 13 to 19, will take the set from 9 to 11 p.m.

The "Punch and Judy" puppet show highlights the Sunday activities. The show begins at 2 p.m., and is followed by a "strolling magic" show, in which, the magician moves throughout the facility, interacting with the audience in the performance.

Operating hours for the Youth Activities Center Summer Schedule are:

Wednesday thru Saturday..... 11 a.m to 8 p.m.
Sunday..... 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.
Monday and Tuesday..... Closed

POW/MIA Flag raised at Infantry Hall

A flag honoring American prisoners of war and those missing in action flew in front of Infantry Hall July 24 as it will each fourth Friday of every month.

It will pay tribute to Americans who have been held prisoner of war, or who were or are still missing in action in conflicts that the United States has participated.

The flag design shows the silhouetted profile of a man beneath the backdrop of a guard tower and is bordered in black. The flag was the idea of Mrs. Michael Hoff, the wife of an MIA. Hoff is a member of the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia.

The flag will also be flown on Veterans Day, Memarial Day, National POW-MIA Recognition Day and Jan. 27, the anniversary of the signing of the Paris Peace Agreement.

"That's what has kept me going."

In his present position as NCO in charge of the Brigade Medical Supply Office and as platoon sergeant in Company B, 197th Support Battalion, Staff Sgt. Castro shares his knowledge and experience with his soldiers.

"I really demand a lot from my soldiers, not only the privates, but also the NCOs," Castro added. "Sometimes, soldiers get their stripes too early without the benefit of the training I have had. That's why I have taken it upon myself to be ahead of the game and to seek a level of self-improvement. I have to give them guidelines and build them up to be good NCOs."

At this point in his career, Staff Sgt. Castro has become the teacher, who is responsible for the development of his soldiers.

In leadership, Staff Sgt. Castro still benefits from the examples set for him by the NCOs and officers he has encountered throughout his career.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Provost Marshal's Office

Using stereo headphones while driving is dangerous and illegal.

The numerous improvements in stereophonic equipment over the past few years has provided the auto industry with a quality of car stereo comparable to most home units. This makes for more pleasurable driving, but can be potentially dangerous to the motorists.

Some car systems now have adapters for the use of headphones, and use of the compact stereo headsets by motorcyclists is commonplace. Though the stereo effect may be greatly increased, the use of headphones while operating a motor vehicle is illegal on military installations and in most every state.

When using headphones, the driver blocks out almost all the sounds necessary for the driver to hear, and would probably not hear the sounds of emergency equipment of police, fire or ambulance, or even the horns of other motorists.

The compounding factor to this problem arises with the newer cars that are close to being soundproof. This, along with the use of a radio at high-volume level, seriously impedes the driver's ability to hear outside warnings.

Another equally-dangerous problem is a driver who has the windows down, but the volume of the audio system so high that it can be heard for some distance from the vehicle. This makes it almost impossible for the driver of the vehicle to hear sounds from outside.

Vehicular stereo systems are designed to make driving more pleasurable, but if they are not used wisely by the driver, they can make driving extremely dangerous.

Remember: Only you can prevent accidents.

Buljung comes from behind to win championship

By Tommy Pool
USAMU PAO

Master Sgt. Erich Buljung of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, came from behind to win the 1987 National Pistol title in matches held recently at Camp Perry, Ohio, from July 17 through 21.

Buljung won this year's championship after trailing the early leaders by as much as five points going into the final day of the competition.

His total aggregate score of 2,627 out of 2,700 points propelled him past Sgt. Mitchell Reed, U.S. Marine Corps, who finished in second place at 2,622. Army reservist Staff Sgt. Darius Young, placed third after leading the first two days of the championship with a final of 2,619.

Buljung also picked up two second-place finishes in the individual centerfire and .45 caliber events, while teammate Master Sgt. Roger Willis finished third in the .22 caliber event.

Last week's victory marked Buljung's third national individual pistol champsionship for the year as he had previously won the 50-meter Free Pistol and 10-meter air pistol crowns during the U.S. Nationals held at Prado Dam, Calif., in June.

Other winners in the national trophy matches included USAMU's Master Sgt. Joe Steed and Staff Sgt. William Albrecht. Steed scored a total of 290 out of 300 to win the Gen. Mellon and military police trophies as high-scoring individual in the national team match.

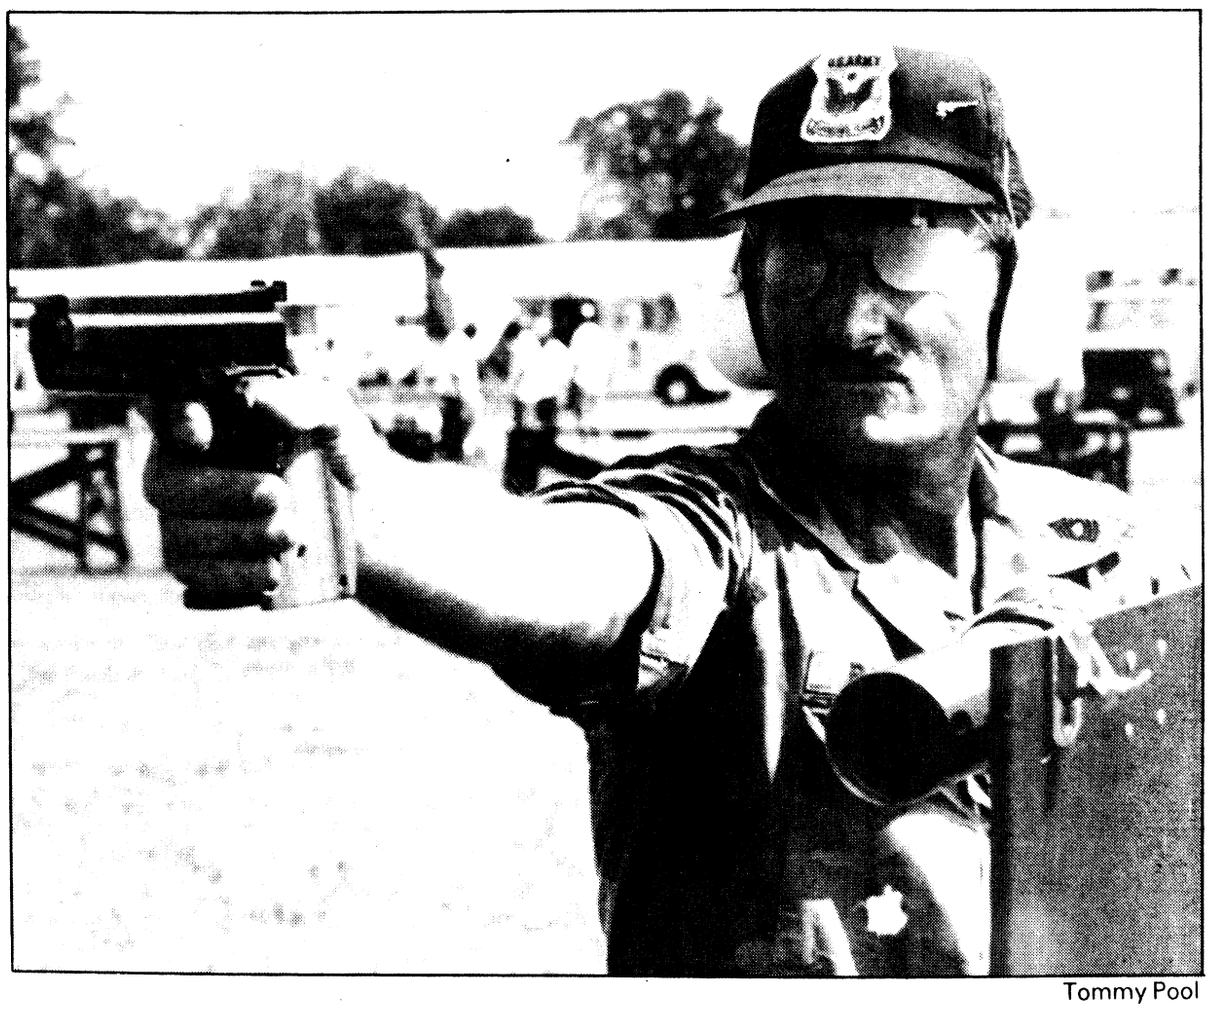
Albrecht also won the U.S. Army Forces Command Trophy for the highest-scoring Army competitor in the combined individual and team aggregate matches.

More than 1,000 of the top competitors from across the country were on hand for this year's national pistol matches to set a new attendance record for the event.

In other competition, early results from the National Sports Festival being held at Raleigh/Durham, N.C., show USAMU members winning two gold and two silver medals.

Sgt. 1st Class Alger Mullins won the individual gold medal in a narrow victory over teammate Staff Sgt. Matt Dryke in the International Skeet event.

Mullins finished with a total of 198 out of 200 targets to edge Dryke by one target at 197. Both individuals will compete in the Pan American Games next month at Indianapolis, Ind.



In the rapid-fire pistol matches, Capt. John McNally set a new Sports Festival record with a total score of 695 out of 700 possible points enroute to winning the individual gold medal.

The final international Trap championship was won by former USAMU member Todd Graves with a total score of 193, and was followed by Sgt. Bret Erickson, winning the silver medal at 191.

More scores and results from the National Sports Festival and the National Rifle matches curently underway at Camp Perry, Ohio, will appear in future issues of The Bayonet.

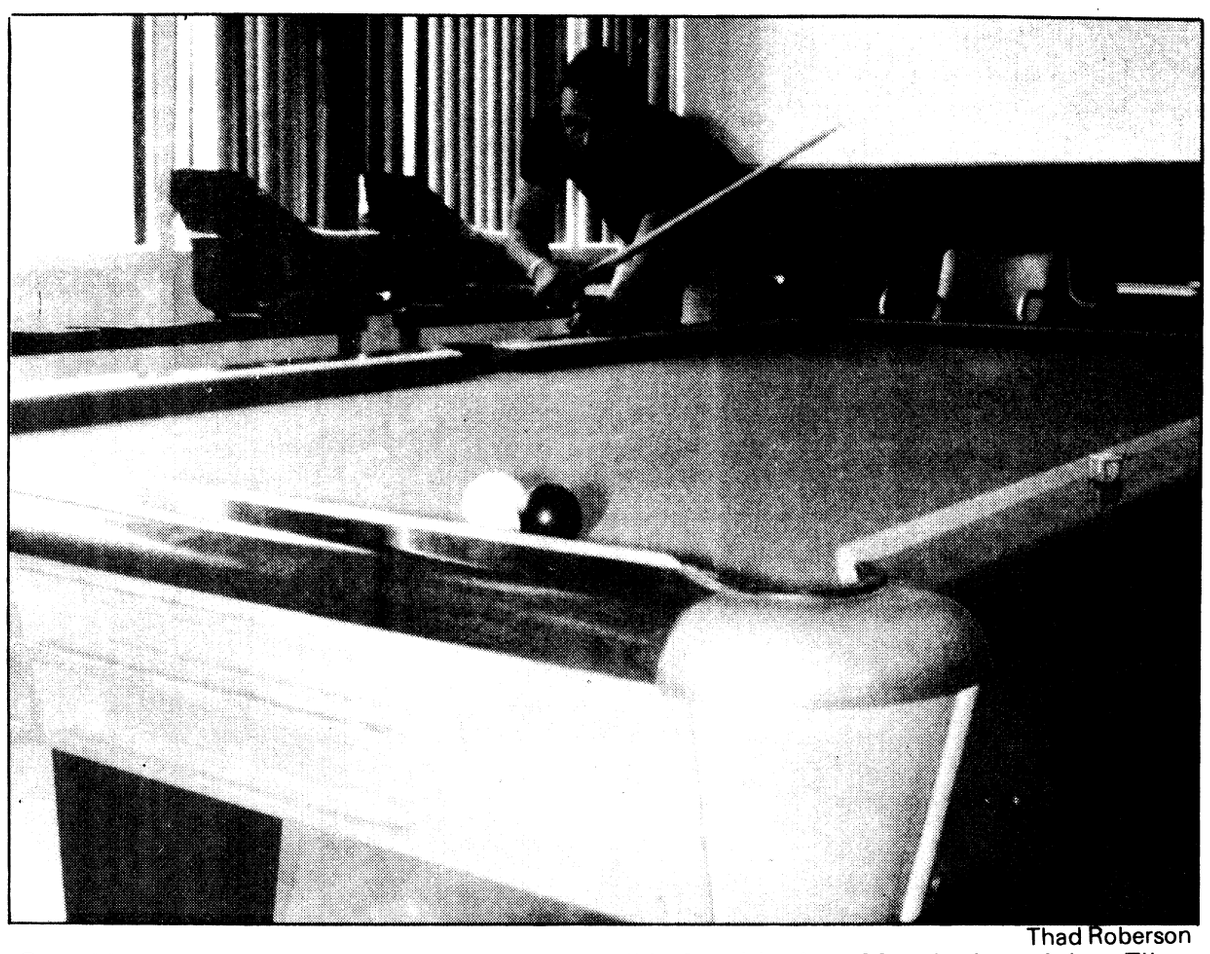
Murphy wins

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet staff writer

In the monthly pool tournament held at Kelly Hill Recreation Center Saturday, it was Greg Murphy who "be stroking."

The three and one-half-hour tournament pitted Murphy against 15 other opponents, which made his task greater than the daily game of eight ball.



Murphy won 14 games in regular play, suffering one loss to Adam Zilem.

Zilem had also dropped one game, forcing him into a playoff with Murphy.

To determine the outright champion, Murphy and Zilem tangled in a two-out-of-three elimination match.

Murphy began to really stick, winning the first two games, bringing his total win record up to 17 and claim the coveted trophy.

The next tournament will be August 8, 1 p.m. at the Kelly Hill Recreation Center.

Panthers bite Bulldogs

By George Mingee
197th Correspondent

John Chesney started the ball rolling in the bottom of the second inning by hitting a double and driving in the first run as the HHC, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor "Panthers" beat the "Bulldogs" from HHC, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 11-6 in 197th Infantry Brigade Softball playoffs last week.

John Chesney's double in the bottom of the second sparked the Panthers to a 5-0 lead. In the bottom of the fourth inning, the Panthers drove in six more runs, making the score 11-0.

Bulldog players didn't make the scoreboard until Patrick Smith singled and brought in a run in the top of the fifth inning. Two more runs were added in the fifth making the score 11-3.

The Bulldogs had a 12-1 regular season record with their only loss going to the Panthers.

Panther coach Leonard Beech said, "A whole lot of teamwork got us through the regular season, and now the same thing will carry us through the playoffs."

The Panthers won the 197th Infantry Brigade Softball Championships Monday, beating Company B, 2-69 Armor 8-3 and 7-4 in the double elimination close of the playoffs. The 197th softball champs will now advance to the post-wide tournaments.

Downpour doesn't stop Infantry Training Center quarterly run

By Marsha Santiago
ITC Correspondent

A torrential downpour did not dampen the spirits or slow the pace of over 3,400 soldiers of the 1st Infantry Training Brigade, United States Army Infantry Training Center, who turned out for the quarterly brigade run on Saturday. Members of the 1st Brigade, 95th Division (Training), United States Army Reserve, on post for annual training, also participated in the run.The 95th is commanded by Col. Clayton R. Smart.

A 6 a.m. reville formation kicked off the morning's activities, followed by the three-mile run, a leaders breakfast and presentation of trophies.

Col. Jose Feliciano, 1st ITB commander, led the run with Command Sgt. Maj. George Mock carrying the colors. Guest runners included Lt. Col. William Connolly, ITC deputy commander; Col. Conrad Boterweg, DPCA; Lt. Col. James S. Milling, post Adjutant General; and his wife, Gaye, an ITC headquarters employee.

At the end of the run, the Brigade staff and guests watched and cheered while the 17 training companies double-timed a pass and review.

The leaders' breakfast at the Sand Hill Duck Pond was hosted by the 3rd Battalion. At the breakfast, Feliciano spoke on the importance of physical fitness, mental toughness and the team effort which had been demonstrated by the soldiers participating in the Brigade Run.

The morning's activities ended with the presentation of trophies. Command Sgt. Maj. Norman A. Moutray, 1st Battalion, and Lt. Col. Terry Finkbiner, commander of 1/377th Regiment, 95th Division, accepted trophies from Feliciano for 100-percent completion of the run by their soldiers. Accepting the trophy for the Brigade softball championship was 1st Sgt. Robert Sackett, coach of the 7th Battalion team. Feliciano charged the 7th Battalion coach and team with bringing home the Post championship.

Dates for Soccer trials changes

The dates for the 1987 All-Army and Armed Forces Soccer Trials Camp/Championships have been changed.

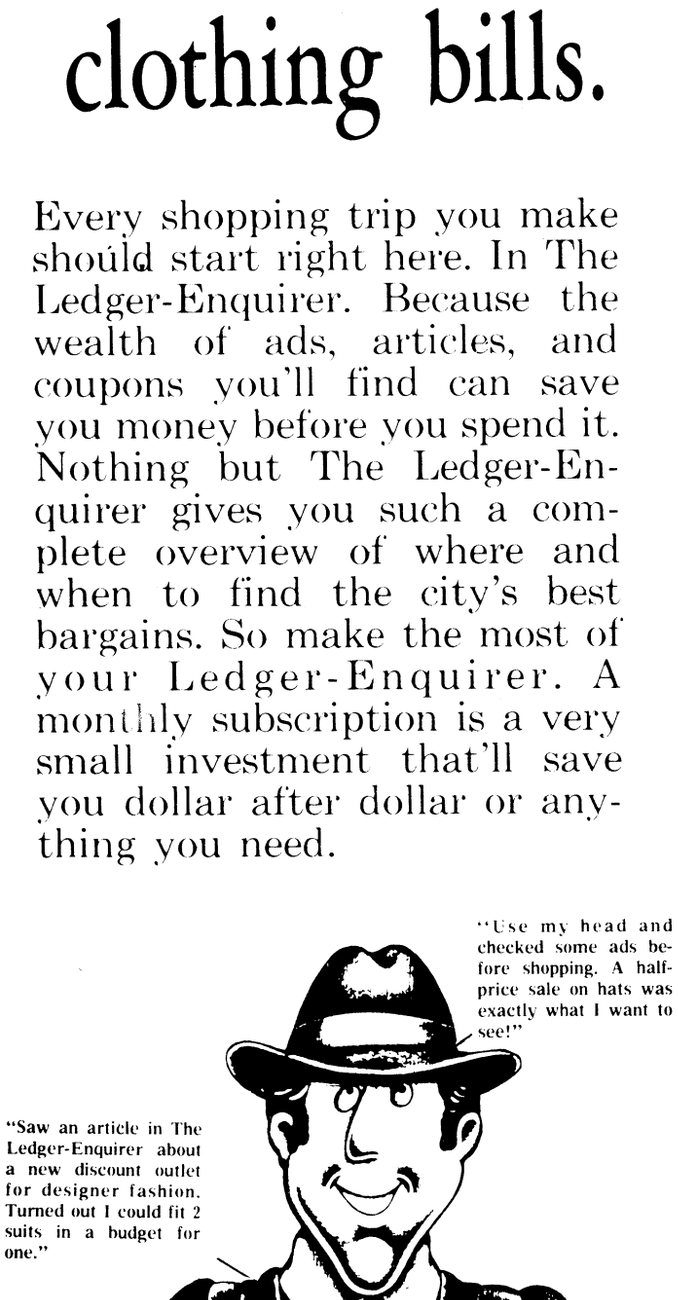
The All-Army Soccer dates are changed to Oct. 14 through Nov. 14, at Fort Hood, Texas.

The Armed Forces Championship dates are Nov. 14 through 20 at Camp LeJeune, N.C.

The soccer dates were changed in order that the Armed Forces All-Star Soccer Team could compete in the 1987 U.S. Soccer Federation's Senior Cup in Orlando, Fla., Nov. 24 through 27.

Deadline dates for an athlete's application to reach the DA Sports Office are Aug. 14.

USAIC Softball Championships to be held



The 1987 USAIC Softball Championships will begin Aug. 10 at 5:30 p.m..

There will be 20 teams competing on Gowdy Field, Glenn Fields #1 and #2 for the Post Championship Trophy.

A meeting for all coaches and all A&Rs will be held at Braint Wells Field House at 10 a.m. on Aug. 5 to put information on the tournament as well as information on up-coming changes to Fort Benning's sports program.

A student at Fort Benning's Precision Sniper School gets a bead on a target, as his camouflage allows him to remain undetected by the 'enemy.'

Benning graduates first sniper class

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

On a quiet hilltop overlooking Benning's Gallaway Range, history was made last week.

That's when 18 soldiers graduated from Fort Benning's Precision Sniper School.

Although there have been other sniper courses taught in the past, SFC William Knox II explained to the graduates why their achievement is so significant.

"You are making history today," Knox told the students, "because you 18 men are the first graduates of an officially sanctioned Army sniper school."

Knox, who was project officer in charge of setting up the sniper school at Fort Benning, said the establishment of the school makes the sniper a viable asset of the Army.

Col. John Fuller, commander of the 29th Infantry Regiment, told the graduates that their biggest challenge is still to come, as they return to their units and begin the task of selling their sniper skills to commanders in the field. "You'll be working for officers who have not been trained in how to employ you. You've got to educate them," Fuller said. "What will 'sell' the value of school-trained snipers is the graduates themselves.

"When you men go to the National Training Center and help your unit win the battle, you'll sell this program to commanders, because that means something to them," he said.

He challenged the 18 graduates to keep in touch with the school and let instructors know how the snipers are being utilized in the field.

Knox said that after completing the three-week sniper course, the soldiers are now ready to go into battle and using precision rifle techniques, they'll be able to take out targets up to 850 meters away.

"The school combines training in precision marksmenship along with tactical training in concealment, stealth and movement techniques," said SFC Dewey Hardeson, a marksmanship instructor from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit who helped teach the first class of students. "While one group was on the firing line, another was in the woods learning to move about undetected," he said.

Knox stressed the importance that teamwork played in graduting the snipers. "We couldn't have done it without the cooperation of the instructors from USAMU, who worked closely with instructors from the regiment," he said.

Sp4 William C. Hite, a soldier from the 3rd Battalion, 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment at Fort Bragg, N.C., received the "Top Gun" award for the class, for scoring highest on his shooting tests. Hite scored 190 (out of a possible 200) on the first phase of testing, and 200 on the second and third tests.

Hite said he had no special marksmanship skills when he came to the class. "It was the first time I've ever used this weapons system," he said. "I think these people are great teachers."

SSgt. Windsor Parker, who is from Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was named honor graduate of the class. Parker said the instruction was superb, both from USAMU and 29th Infantry instructors. He said the course was different from others he had attended. "In this class they teach you survival through concealment, how to get in, take your shot and get out safely," he said.

Knox said that the instructors learned nearly as much during this class as their students did. "They (the students) gave us feedback on a daily basis, that will help us to make the next class even better," he said.

The sniper school will graduate 11 classes each year. Prospective students must be qualified as expert marksmen, be exceptional soldiers and be recommended by their commanders to attend.

MIP is here! Call 545-IDEA

Program offers commanders way to cut through 'red tape'

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

After months of billboards, posters and flyers announcing,"MIP is coming - call 545-IDEA," MIP is finally here.

MIP stands for the Model Installation Program. The post chief of staff signed a decision paper last week, officially approving the establishment of Fort Benning's MIP office.

The basic philosophy of MIP is that there is too much red tape and bureaucracy in the Army, and the program offers commanders a way to cut through the web of stifling bureaucracy, said Gwen Merritt, chief of the Productivity Branch, Directorate of Resource Management. Merritt put together the program at Benning, which will be administered by Beverly Howell, a management analyst who reports to Merritt.

"If there is a regulation out there that is keeping a commander from doing his job, then maybe it could be a MIP," Mrs. Merritt said. "The object is to change or modify the regulation so that it removes impediments to the mission."

The program challenges every commander, supervisor, soldier and civilian employee to survey his area of responsibility and seek ways to do their jobs more efficiently.

"It means actively challenging the mind set "we've always done things this way," and looking for a better procedure," Merritt said.

When you find an idea to improve your work area, put it in writing on an FB Form 50, and submit it to the MIP office in Building 2604, located in Splinter Village.

Once it's received there, administrators have two days to log it in and send it out to appropriate agencies for evaluation. The agencies have 15 days to make a recommendation to approve or disapprove the idea, and return it to Mrs. Howell.

One big change from previous programs is that disapproval authority can only come from the chief of staff, Mrs. Merritt said. Agencies can decide to implement the idea or opt for a test period to see how the change will work in the long run.

Mrs. Merritt said another important aspect of the program is that it places approval authority at the lowest possible level. Along with establishing Fort Benning's MIP office, the chief of staff also approved transfer of the Army Suggestion Program to DRM, where it will be administered together with the MIP program. That's because the two really belong together, Mrs. Howell said.

"It all starts with ideas, and it depends on what kind of change must be made as to whether or not it's a MIP or a suggestion," she said.

MIPs are ideas that result in a

Troop earns medal for saving worker

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A 29th Infantry Regiment soldier was presented a Soldier's Medal Friday, for helping rescue a construction worker last August.

Sgt. Frank Stewart, a Bradley Infantry Vehicle gunner assigned to Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was awarded the medal for his help in saving the life of a Billy Joe Foster, a construction worker.

Foster, an employee of Cleveland Construction Company, was working in an 18-foot deep ditch in Kelley Hill repairing pipes, when the walls of the ditch collapsed, burying him under more than 2 feet of wet sand and dirt.

Stewart was parking his car in a nearby lot when he heard someone calling for help. He quickly assessed the situation, jumped down into the ditch and began digging. Stewart, along with several others who arrived at the scene, dug Foster out of the ditch.

Foster suffered head, back and mouth injuries as a result of the accident, and is still under a doctor's care.

Twenty minutes after Stewart left the site, he heard that the rest of the ditch had caved in. It was only then that he realized he'd put his one life in danger.

"All I could think of when I jumped into the ditch was, please let him be alive," Stewart said. "I was going on instinct and letting the Lord lead me. He said dig, so I dug."

The Soldier's Medal is the highest medal awarded to soldiers during peacetime. Stewart said that receiving the medal was the highlight of his Army career thus far.

"I told my wife that if I did nothing else in the Army, I accomplished this," he said. "It makes me feel good that I can serve and contribute to the community."

Know how to recognize, deal with sexual harassment

By Dave Akridge
US Army Forces Command

FORT MONROE, VA. — John Smith, an employee in an open office with several other men and women, enjoys his role as clown and storyteller. Usually, his stories are enjoyed by everyone. Lately, however, several of his stories have situations.

Mary Jane, who sits three desks away, does not like the stories, but she laughs along with the others. Is she the victim of sexual harrassment?

Not really. Mary Jane has no complaint until she complains. Mary Jane has a personal responsibility to tell John Smith or his supervisor that his jokes of a sexual nature are not appreciated. After she has made it known that she finds the sex-oriented jokes embarrassing and inappropriate, the situation quickly becomes harassment if John continues to tell those types of jokes in Mary Jane's presence.

Sexual harrasment is a particular type of sex discrimination. As with all sex discrimination, it is illegal. It violates the standards of honesty, integrity and impartiality required by all Army personnel. It interferes with work productivity.

The most obvious forms of sexually harassing behavior are grabbing, touching, patting, leering or any activity with sexual overtones that is intimidating or offensive to the recipient or observers of the behavior,.

Verbal harassment may include:

Jokes that express hostility, or make someone a fool, or put down a group.

Comments about someone's body or dress, having little to do with normal job duties.

Reward or punishment for personal characteristics rather than work-related behavior.

Sexual remarks, from subtle hints to direct propositions.

Invitations to lunch, drinks, dinner with sexual overtones.

Threats: from hints such as "Your life would be easier here if you were friendlier," to blatant remarks such as "If you want that training or assignment, maybe we'd better get to know each other better this evening."

Physical harassment includes unwelcome bumping, touching, stroking, cornering, pinching, kissing, hugging or grabbing, leaving offensive notes and displaying sexist cartoons, pictures or magazines — these are also forms of harassment.

Ideally, everyone has a personal responsibility to avoid sexually harassing behavior and should stop the act immediately when the victim indicates discomfort.

Supervisors are personally responsible for preventing sexual harrasment and ensuring it does not continue once the problem has surfaced.

Individuals who are targeted for any form of harassment have several possible solutions at their disposal.

First and foremost, is the significant choice of whether to do nothing or to take action. Deciding to endure or submit to the

U.S. forces must prepare to face chemical warfare

Association of the U.S. Army

No one detests wars any more than the soldiers who must fight them. But there is one form of warfare — the use of chemical weapons — that occupies a special position of abhorrence. A soldier is no less a casualty when attacked with chemicals than he is when hit by machine-gun fire. It is the insidiousness of chemicals that marks them for special dislike and generate the justifiable effort to have them banned from the battlefield.

As evidence of the extent of our commitment to that anti-chemical warfare policy, the United States, in 1969, unilaterally halted the production and manufacture of all chemical weapons.

Today, the armed forces of the United States face, almost unprepared, a vast and potent chemical warfare threat and little is being done to repair that situation. In the words of Adm. William J. Crowe Jr., chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, "we have no deterrent to chemical warfare in NATO or elsewhere."

For years, the Defense Department has recommended to Congress a program for providing our soldiers the protection of a credible chemical warfare deterrent — some means to let our potential foes know that the use of chemical weapons against our forces will be met with swift and effective retaliation in kind. It is somewhat gratifying to note the resurgence of concern that has resulted in Congressional approval of the production of some new chemical munitions. But the small and hesitating step is only the first such needed to carry us to a position of chemical sufficiency — one which guarantees prompt and adequate battlefield competence if deterrence fails.

The time has long-since passed for this nation to stand blindly on the high moral plane it reached with its unilateral renunciation of chemical munitions production. Our forces around the world are in danger of chemical attack and they are dangerously incapable of deterring or countering such an attack. We urgently need a national awareness of the chemical war threat and a military program to re-establish American chemical warfare credibility in order to overcome that lack of preparedness.

Demonstrations in Panama threaten stability in region

Association of the U.S. Army

Among the several crises currently boiling in the Central American region, the one that has the highest relative portent for United States national security concerns the violent demonstrations and general strikes that have jarred Panama's military leadership in recent weeks.

Nowhere in Central America is the situation more volatile than in Panama, where a weak and suspect economy has been shaken by an unstable political situation. Panama's current problems were brought to a head with the firing of Col. Roberto Diaz Herrera, second in command to Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, the man who actually controls all in Panama.

The strategic and economic implications for the United States which grow out of Panamanian unrest are grave indeed. Some 15 percent of all U.S. exports and imports pass through the Panama Canal. Militarily, the U.S. Southern Command is headquartered there, and in addition to commanding the 10,000 U.S. troops at 11 bases in Panama, it controls all U.S. military assistance and operations throughout Central and South America.

For our part, the U.S. government is torn between supporting the present government as a force of stability which protects the canal and encouraging the establishment and continuity of democratically-elected Panamanian governments. How we play this one out could have serious implications for the future of most of the North American continent.

Bicentennial a time to celebrate freedom

By Donna Bolinger-Miles
American Forces Information Service

Two hundred years ago, on Sept. 17, 1787, members of the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia wrapped up 16 weeks of debate and voted to approve the U.S. Constitution.

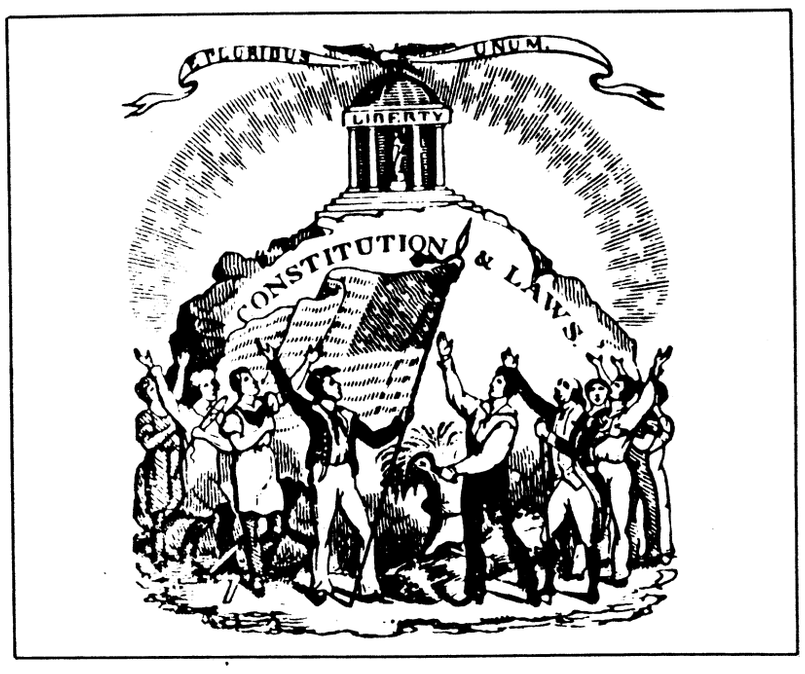
Twenty-three of its signers were veterans of the Revolutionary War. They had fought bitterly for America's independence and were committed to the success of their newly-freed nation.

In framing the Constitution, they embodied the dream of America — the first country in the world to begin life with a written constitution protecting the freedoms of its citizens.

The result of their efforts has been called one of the mysteries and triumphs of the political world, a masterpiece of political philosophy. Scholars still marvel at the genius and insight demonstrated by its framers.

Today, the Constitution stands as the oldest instrument of government in the world.

But the bicentennial of the Constitution is far more than a historical observance. It is the celebration of the freedoms and ideas that have allowed Americans to flourish as a people.



The bicentennial is a time for America, as a nation and a people, to reflect on where it's been and where it intends to go in fulfilling the dreams and visions of its forefathers.

Two hundred years ago, the Constitution was written for a nation of barely three million people. Today, it serves 250 million. Since 1787, it has endured much.

It has survived repeated challenges — some by those who questioned the principle of a government of the people, by the people and for the people. It was also challenged by some Americans who recognized the legitimate need for change.

The reason the Constitution remains a living document, 200 years after its creation, is that it has grown with the people it serves. It has been flexible enough to withstand a civil war, momentous social transformation, an industrial revolution and the addition of 37 states.

Within its first four years, 10 amendments were added. They granted freedoms of religion, speech, the press, the right of public assembly, the right to keep and bear arms, assurance of a speedy trial and protection against self-incrimination.

Later in the lifetime of the Constitution, slavery was abolished. Suffrage was granted to blacks in 1870, to women in 1920 and to all citizens age 18 and older in 1971. Prohibition was established in 1920 and repealed in 1933.

With these amendments, the Constitution has remained as meaningful and important today as when it was first written. It continues to guide a country faced with contemporary problems and questions: capital punishment, school prayer, abortion and women's rights, to name a few.

For 200 years, the Constitution has provided a stable government through which the people have molded the America we know today. Even amidst the celebration of the Constitution's bicentennial, it stands as the framework for the America of the future.

Information flow vital to victory on modern battlefield

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

No matter how well-trained and equipped the troops are, it takes good, solid decision-making to win the battle. Massive amounts of information flow into the highest level of command to help the critical decision-making process. But if the procedures used to correlate that information are obsolete, then those important decisions might be made without the benefit of the most recent data.

In times of tension, literally millions of bits of information flow into command centers at each unified and specified command around the world. That means those making the decisions must be supported by state-of-the-art information processing systems to help ensure the most accurate decisions on the deployment of nuclear and strategic forces.

The commands continually upgrade their command centers to keep pace with the threat. However, the upgrade at one center is often dependent of those at others, frequently resulting in duplication of effort and poor designs. And, in most cases, the upgrades are not designed to take full advantage of the "human-technology" interface.

Changing these outdated designs and making command centers more uniform is a mission of the Defense Communications Agency, Washington, D.C.

Air Force Lt. Col. Joe Laposa heads a division within the agency's Center for Command, Control and Communications Systems. He oversees the Command Center Improvement Program, a program he says will enable command centers of the future to better meet the needs of commanders. This will be accomplished, he said, by providing the technical leadership and engineering support in modernizing unified and specified command centers.

"When we look at designing new command centers, we stress the human factor as strongly as we stress new technology," said Laposa. "Not only do we want to have the latest in automated data processing equipment to correlate and present the key information to the commander-in-chief, we want to be sure there is a good environment for the people to work efficiently." Command centers must also be flexible enough to accomodate large increases in personnel during a crisis.

The agency helped establish a model command center at the Military Airlift Command headquarters, Scott Air Force Base, Ill., where researchers test and demonstrate the latest command and control center equipment and share lessons learned.

"The model command center not only demonstrates how these facilities can be made more effective, but also gives us a central place to look at new technological concepts," said Laposa.

Those new concepts include rapid prototyping that allows operational testing of new technologies. "If industry feels they have come upon new technology that will make command centers operate more smoothly, we have a laboratory where it can be tested," said Laposa. "They call us. We don't have to go find them."

Revolutionary concepts in acquisition were also used in the model command center. Most of the equipment in the new $30 million center was off-the-shelf technology.

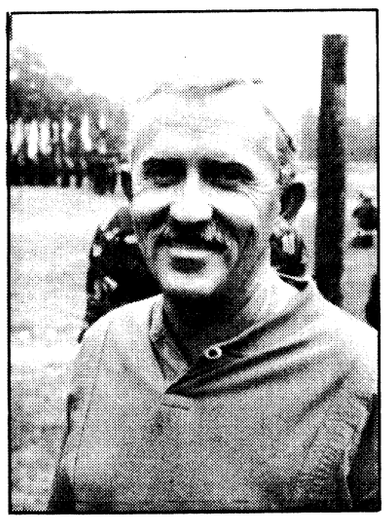
"New technology emerges every day that might be incorporated into command centers," Laposa pointed out.

The Military Airlift Command's command center is dominated by a 30-foot by 12-foot display screen driven by two laser projectors. A world map fills the entire screen, which can pinpoint the position of every MAC aircraft in the world.

Each workstation is "human-engineered," said Laposa. "We took into account what the operator needed to do the job."

Research indicated that console operators needed room to study maps, so the monitors and keyboards recess into the consoles. Integrated phone systems were installed so operators could conduct secure or unsecure conference calls. From a single handset, an operator can talk with 40 different people at one time. When the room lights need to be lowered for a presentation, console operators can use the lights at their individual work stations to continue working.

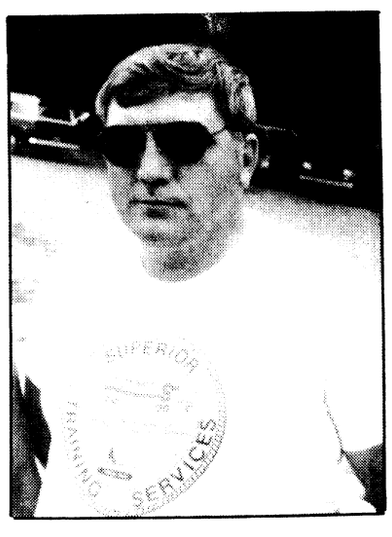
The Defense Communications Agency would like all command centers to be modernized in this fashion. That, said Laposa, would ensure that each command center would be able to work efficiently with others, using common equipment.



VARIOUS VOICES / What is the biggest change you have seen in your soldier?

1st Sgt. Will Harris, Paris Island, N.C. — "My son looks older, especially in his eyes. He's lost some weight, and is a lot more physically fit. I think this training has been good for him. He goes on to Airborne school from here. I'd like to see him do well there and have him go on to Ranger School. My son didn't want to be a Marine because he said he already has been one for 20 years."

Linda Thompson, Beckley, W. Va. — "It killed my husband's spirit. He has turned shy and quiet. He is not the same person who would call up his neighbor at midnight for the heck of it and ask them for cookies. It's a good change for him. The Army has definitely helped him grow up."



Billy Pate, Pennsacola, Fla. — "I think he is a lot more disciplined and he definitely is in a lot better shape. I saw fear in him for the first time. I saw fear and respect of his drill sergeant and the fear of not making it at all."

Carol Wright, Brandon, Fla. — "He has grown up and become a man. He has confidence and motivation. He has told us that he now understands why we have done some of the things we did as parents. It's a wonderful change."

Hildegard Gaffney, Signal Mountain, Tenn. — "He looks like a soldier. I think he has developed more self discipline, which is a change for the better."

Harold Wright, Big Rapids, Michigan — "Well, he's lost his voice and he has gained respect. He's changed completely; he has a lot more self respect. This change is fantastic for him. I want all my kids to join the military."

School sign-ups underway

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Parents have one more week to register their children for the fall term at the Fort Benning Dependent Schools. The first day of classes is Aug. 25.

Parents can register children daily from 9 a.m. to noon, today, and Monday through Friday next week at the eight schools located on post. To find out which school your children should attend, check the registration schedule (boxed below).

Parents should bring certain items to the school when they register. The items are determined by the student's age, grade and whether or not the child has previously attended a Fort Benning school.

- Parents of all students (except kindergarteners) should bring last year's report card or grade replacement record.
- Parents of all students who are new to the Fort Benning school system should also bring an immunization certificate.
- Parents of all kindergarten students and first grade students who are new to the Fort Benning school system should also bring a birth certificate and proof of a physical examination.

A student must be 5 years old on or before Sept. 1 to enter kindergarten in Fort Benning schools.

Sixth, seventh and eighth grade students from all housing areas should report to Faith Middle School for registration.

High school students (grades 9 through 12) who did not attend a public high school in Muscogee County last year and who have not already pre-registered for the 1987-1988 school year should report immediately to the Columbus Roberts Center at 539 Brown Avenue in Columbus, to pre-register.

Students who are already pre-registered must report to school Aug. 25 between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. to confirm their registration and complete processing.

Muscogee County school buses will run on that date for your convenience. All high school students must present evidence of immunization. School will begin in Muscogee County on Aug. 31.

For more information, call 545-2915 or 545-2500.

harassment can cause physical and emotional stress because of the fear of being blamed, of not being taken seriously, and of those in authority, not believing the harassment is taking place.

When immediate supervisors do not take harassment issues seriously, or effectively correct harassment situations, harassed people have other options. They can go further up the chain of command or use other official channels, which include organizational and outside professional sources.

According to Robert Galer, Equal Employment Opportunity officer at Fort Benning, if a person feels they are being sexually harassed, the first thing they should do is report it through their chain of command. If this doesn't get results, they can report it to Winifred Torain at Benning's Federal Women's Program, who will investigate it.

Galer said military personnel should also report it to their chain-of-command, and if they don't get the problem resolved, they can call the EO office or report it to the Inspector General.

Each manager and supervisor must complete a four-hour class on sexual harassment, which has been offered since 1984, Galer said.

Maj. Gen. Kenneth Leuer, post commander, recently directed that all new managers and supervisors, both military and civilian, who supervise civilian employees, must complete the class by Dec. 31.

Organizational channels include the Federal Women's Program manager, EEO officer, EEO counselor, management employee relations specialist in the personnel office, the inspector general, and, if the victim is a member of a union, the union's representative.

Outside channels include filing an official EEO complaint, writing the next level of command (higher headquarters) and informing congressional representatives.

You should follow the above steps in sequence to demonstrate you are a serious, responsible individual, fully aware of your rights and management's responsibility to prevent sexual harassment.

For civilian employees, Ms. Torian's number is 545-1872. For soldiers, the EO number is 545-2355.

change to regulatory guidance, can be tested at an installation and focus on improvements at the installation. A suggestion is all other good ideas that focus on improvements, Mrs. Howell said. The ideas can result in a monetary savings or an intangible benefit.

Mrs. Howell said that MIPs that require approval at a higher level, such as changed to TRADOC or DA Regulations, will be forwarded up the chain to the appropriate approving authority.

People will continue to receive cash awards for suggestions implemented through either program. "The suggestion must be outside the scope of your normal duties in order to get a cash award," Mrs. Howell said.

If you have an idea for a suggestion, you don't have to decide if it fits under MIP or the Army Suggestion Program, since FB Form 50 is used for both programs. Just submit the suggestion and Mrs. Howell said she'll take it from there."

If you would like more information, call Mrs. Howell at 545-IDEA.

UNIT NEWS

34th Med. Bn.

By Anthony J. Intrepido
34th Medical Battalion

On July 30, the 34th Medical Battalion was awarded the commanding general's safety award for the second consecutive quarter.

The battalion had no reportable accidents during the entire third quarter.

Col. James I. Daily, chief of staff, presented the safety cup to the battalion commander, Lt. Col. Robert D. Deaderick.

In congratulating the battalion, Daily stressed to the soldiers not only the importance of the soldier's safety, but the safety of family members both on- and off-post. He also emphasized that not only the chain of command, but each individual soldier must be involved to make safety work.

With family and friends looking on, 780 soldiers joined the ranks of qualified infantrymen during the 1st Infantry Training Brigade One Station Unit Training (OSUT) graduation last Friday at Wetherby Field.

Marsha Santiago

Benny Parker, Military Services Association, presents AUSA plaques to the distinguished honor graduates of 1st and 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade OSUT cycles. The are (left to right) PFC Bert J. Vanderschaff, Co. E, 7th Bn., Pvt. 2 Heath Hennon, Co. C, 7th Bn., PFC Anthony L. Reisz, Co. C, 1st Bn., and Pvt. 2 Barry K. Orletsky, Co. B, 1st Bn.

For the soldiers of companies B and C, 1st Battalion, the ceremony marked the end of 13 weeks of rigorous training. For the U.S. Army Reserve and National Guard soldiers, a majority of the soldiers from companies C and E, 7th Battalion, the ceremony ended their "split-option" training. Under the split option concept, seven weeks of OSUT training is completed one year. The Reservists and National Guard soldiers return the following year, complete the remaining six weeks and graduate.

During the last two weeks of the OSUT cycle, training was conducted by U.S. Army Reserves at Fort Benning for their annual training.

Displacing the first battalion was the 1st Battalion, 377th Regiment, commanded by Lt. Col. Terry Finkbiner. Displacing the 7th Battalion was the 3rd Battalion, 377th Regiment, commanded by Maj. Olan Hill. Both units are part of the 1st Brigade, 95th Division (Training), USAR, headquartered at Tulsa, Okla., and commanded by Col. Clayton Smart.

Col. R.S. Siegfried, ITC commander and reviewing officer for the graduation, asked the spectators for a cheer, "To let these new infantrymen know just how special we think they are." The rousing audience response left no doubt that all agreed with Siegfried.

Among those graduating from Charlie Co., 7th Battalion, was Pvt. 2 Tommy Palastra, son of Gen. Joseph T. Palastra, commanding general of United States Forces Command, Fort McPherson, Ga.

Host unit for the graduation ceremony was 1st Battalion, commanded by Lt. Col. Roy F. Zinser. Lt. Col. Joel Williamson is the 7th Battalion commander. The four company graduation was the largest for the 1st ITB in more than a year.

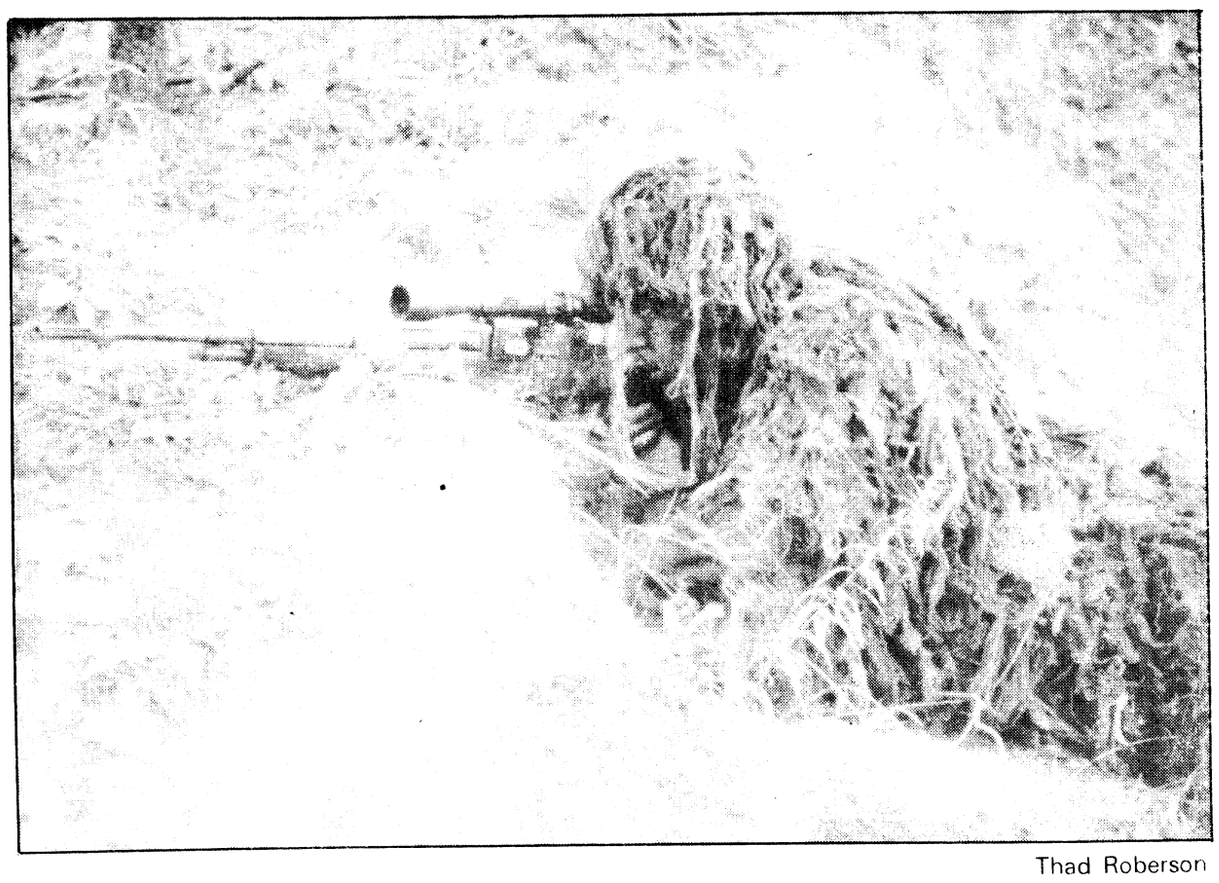
They move slowly through the underbrush, unconcious to the stress and fatique, remaining concealed at all times. Once at their destination, they create havoc and confusion amid the enemy.

They are the newly trained snipers who recently completed Fort Benning's Precision Sniper School.

Not since World War II, has there been an official Army sanctioned school to train a rifleman in long-range, deliberate, precision fires, beyond the effective range of the normal infantryman.

Though the course consist of varing strenous activities, some phases, taxed the soldiers to their limits.

"Field craft was the most challenging part of the training, which consisted of observation, range estimation, camouflage and concealed movement," said SSgt. Elroy E. James, Company D, 1st Bn, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade.



Other than their marksmanship abilities, camouflage and concealment become most critical assets to the two-man sniper team.

For Sp4 Cedric Parker, Fort Campbell, Ky., the 24-hour field training exercise proved to be the most taxing. But, according to Parker, was worth every minute of it.

"When I enlisted, three years ago," said Parker, "all that I wanted was to become a good shot. Because of this training, I not only know how to shoot, but also how to move without being seen or heard."

Sgt. Scott Johnston, company B, 1st/58th, said that it was the stalking, moving silently and hugging the terrain for more than three hours, which was the most strenous portion of the training.

"We never had a moment to sit around," he said.

'Two hats' fit just fine on NCO

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade

Being both unit armorer and unit Nuclear, Biological and Chemical non-commissioned officer is no ordinary job. Especially when that unit is Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade. But Sgt. Noriel Y. Deleon is no ordinary NCO.

With over 1,400 weapons and pieces of NBC equipment to be accounted for, you would think that Deleon would be too busy to solve special problems. But when a soldier comes to him with a strange problem with his weapon or protective mask, his response is almost automatic.

He pushes his glasses up, smiles and says, "No problem. I'll square you away."

Deleon's record in his three years in the U.S. Army is a true reflection of his outstanding efficiency. He was promoted to sergeant in less than 24 months. His awards include an Army Commendation Medal with two oak leaf clusters, an Army Achievement Medal with two oak leaf clusters, plus a Good Conduct Medal.

His arms room, in the words of one inspector, "not only sets the example for the 197th Infantry Brigade, but for Fort Benning as well."

Deleon attributes much of his success to the self-discipline and self-confidence he developed while growing up in his hometown — Bamban, Tarlac, the Philippines.

Kevin J. Howerton

Sgt. Noriel Y. Deleon, armorer of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, shows his assistant, Sp4 Angela S. Booth, how to inspect an M-17 protective mask.

"My parents raised me to be responsible in anything I do," Deleon says, "and I believe in myself."

Before leaving the Philippines in 1983, Deleon received a bachelor's degree in business administration and served as an officer in the Philippine Army.

Deleon runs his combination arms room/NBC room with the help of two assistants, Sp4 Angela S. Booth and Sp4 Mark W. McDermott. Deleon's ladership ability helps them perform to their fullest ability.

"We're a team, we help each other," Booth says. "Sgt. Deleon is a great person to work with, he has a lot of excellent ideas and maintains a good working atmosphere.

"He looks out for his people," she says. "If you have a problem, he will go to bat for you. That lets us do our job, what we are here for, and that gives us a lot of pride."

"He has a sense of mutual respect that we appreciate," adds McDermott. "Any input we have he takes it into consideration, and that makes you feel good about doing your job."

Engineers vital to victory

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

When lead maneuver elements of the 197th Infantry Brigade move forward on the battlefield, the 72nd Engineer Company (COMBAT) can be found following at a close distance. At a moments notice, the engineers can provide support to an element that encounters an impassable enemy obstacle.

This is best accomplished by eliminating the obstacle with the use of one of the Engineer's weapon systems, the CEV (Combat Engineer Vehicle).

In order to maintain crew proficiency with this crucial battlefield weapon, the engineers recently held their CEV gunnery at Cactus Range.

"This is the first time I've ever witnessed a CEV live-fire, and from what I've seen, it's pretty impressive," said platoon leader and 1st Lt. Timothy Brown. "I don't think there is much the CEV can't do."

A CEV is designed to destroy obstacles such as bunkers and log cribs that may hinder the movement of friendly tanks. It has one main gun, a 135-mm cannon, which enables the CEV to blow up an obstacle or take out an opposing tank. It's also equipped with two machine guns, making it easy to engage ground troops which may be lurking in the brush or concealed in bunkers.

Since it's equipped with a large steel blade, it can also easily dig tank ditches and set up culverts. These obstacles will stop the forward movement of enemy vehicles, therefore making the CEV an important piece of equipment in the defensive mode.

The CEV crew consists of four soldiers, a driver, the CEV commander, a main gun loader and finally, the gunner himself. These soldiers who operate the CEV realize that their equipment is a necessity on the battlefield, so the training they recieve is always helpful in keeping them proficient in their jobs.

"We need more live-fire training, but, because of the high cost for main gun rounds, it's hard to get a large quanity," said Staff Sgt. James Shaw. "However, when we do live-fire once a year, we get the most out of it; everyone loves it."

George Mingee

Soldiers of the 72nd Engineer Company (Combat) upload ammunition onto a combat engineer vehicle during a recent live-fire at Cactus Range.

Ceremonies mark redesignation of three battalions

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 1st, 2nd and 5th Battalions of The School Brigade are going regimental.

The battalions will be redesignated to the 11th Infantry Regiment in separate ceremonies on Aug. 13 and 14.

The 5th Battalion is first in line with a combination change of command and dedication ceremony being conducted Aug. 13 at 10:30 a.m. on the Field of the Four Chaplains.

1st Battalion, will conduct their ceremony Aug. 14 on Gardner Field at 11 a.m. A Battalion Organization Day will follow the ceremony at 12 p.m.

2nd Battalion will finish the redesignation that afternoon at 4 p.m. at Building 74.

According to Capt. Paul Hurley, S-3, The School Brigade, the switch has been in the works for some time now. The delay was in getting all the units affiliated with one regiment.

"This change will be good for the units," Hurley said, "it is something the whole Army is reverting to and it builds espirit d'corps.

Bradley exercise planned Monday

USAIC Public Affairs Office

There will be a Bradley Capability Exercise at Red Cloud Range, Monday, from 1 to 2 p.m. The public is invited to attend. Visitors will be directed to parking areas since privately owned vehicles are not allowed on Red Cloud Range.

The capability exercise on Wednesday is not open to the public. Military Police will control entry to Red Cloud Range for this exercise.

Fine tuned powers of observation help solve criminal cases

By Ronald McCuistion
Provost Marshal's Office

How well developed are your powers of observation and perception? Many of us are under the impression that there is little around us that escapes our attention.

Unfortunately, investigators pursuing criminal cases too often find that witnesses to, or victims of an offense, can be of little assistance due to their inability to adequately remember or describe the criminal act, the perpetrators, or other circumstances surrounding the incident.

Military police invesitgators and CID agents are specially trained in questioning techniques designed to elicit all necessary descriptive data pertaining to criminal offenses and offenders. However, these techniques are to no avail if the witness/victim did not adequately observe or does not remember the information desired by the investigator. The seemingly most insignificant details can often determine whether the case is successfully solved and offenders apprehended.

The prevalence of crime in today's society increases the chances that you will, at some time, be a witness to, or victim of, a crime. More often than not, the conditions under which crimes occur are less than ideal for optimum observation of all details. Crimes, particularly those of a violent nature, often involve a flurry of fast-moving events, by strangers, under circumstances of danger, poor lighting and a myriad of other distractions.

So, what can you do to maximize your ability to help the police after the crime has occurred? The following are a few helpful hints:

Observe and mentally note as many details as possible while the crime is in progress.

Select one or two significant features, such as scars, limps, or birthmarks may be helpful in identifying a criminal.

When observing a vehicle, such features as dents, special equipment and license plates are good ways of identifying the vehicle.

Note any accents in the individual's speech.

Note any nicknames, distinctive expressions or gestures used.

Note the type of clothing worn. Is it neat, sloppy, well- or poorly-tailored, soiled, clean, or in any other way unique?

Write down what you observed as soon as possible after the incident. If this is impossible, keep repeating it to yourself until you can tell it to the police or write it down.

For further information on this subject and other ways to stop crime, contact the crime prevention office at 545-7115.

COURT REPORT

Provost Marshal's Office

On July 24, Spec. 4 Jeffrey D. O'Kelley of B-Company, 2/69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted by a special court-martial for the crime of distribution of 4.02 grams of marijuana. Following his conviction, Col. Sebert Trail, military judge, sentenced O'Kelley to be confined for a period of five months, to forfeit $438 per month for five months and to be reduced to the grade of E-1.

O'Kelley, who otherwise was shown to have had good duty performance, was charged and found guilty of distributing the marijuana to a semi-covert member of the Fort Benning Drug Suppression Team on Feb. 16. O'Kelley sold the marijuana in a parking lot adjacent to his unit barracks for sum of $20. O'Kelley will serve his sentence at the US Army Correctional Activity at Fort Riley, Kansas.

On July 31, Pvt. Michael D. Wilson of Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 3/7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted by a special court-martial. Following his conviction, Col. Sebert Trail, military judge, sentenced Wilson to a Bad Conduct discahrge and 36 days of confinement.

Wilson, who was formerly the battalion legal clerk for the 3/7th Infantry, was charged and found guilty of one specification of AWOL. The AWOL was initiated on June 5 and, although Wilson was not apprehended, it was not until 34 days later, on July 8, that Wilson returned himself to military control.

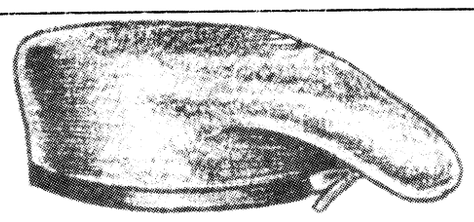
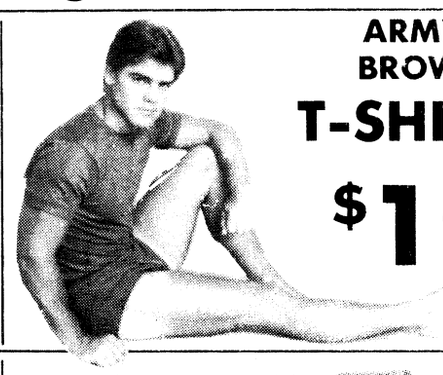
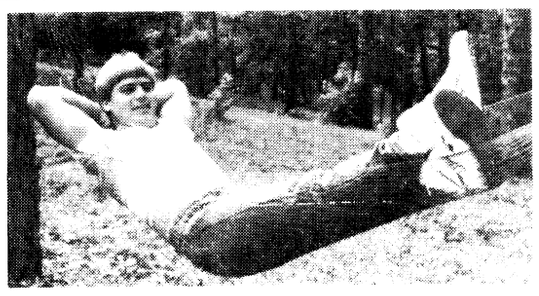
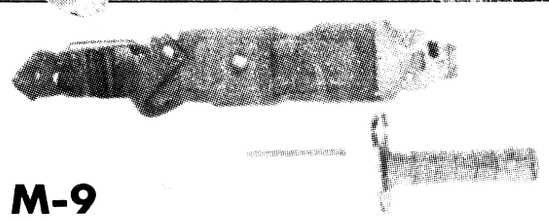
Housing office announces eligibility dates

Housing Office









Whenever a soldier applies for military family housing, he or she is given an eligibility date. This date is not necessarily the date of application. Each waiting list is maintained and housing is assigned on accordance with the "eligibility date." If, when called for quarters, a soldier is unable to move because of a lease, TDY, sickness, etc., he or she will be passed over until they are available for quarters, but they will maintain their original "elibility date."

As of Aug. 3 the eligibility date of the last person to be assigned quarters in each category is as follows:

Jr. NCO, 2 BR—Jan. 31	Co. Grd. Off, 2 BR—July 7
Jr. NCO, 3 BR—July 6	Co. Grd. Off, 3 BR—July 15

What Specialist Hales has been aiming for during his off-duty time.

Specialist Four Jason Hales has been aiming for the best. As a soldier, and as a student. He's an Infantryman at Fort Myer, Virginia, as well as a B.S. candidate in Mechanical Engineering at Park College. And he's just one of the over 100,000 soldiers who are building brighter, smarter futures through the Army's Reaching for Excellence education program.

It's a terrific opportunity that's available to each and every soldier, at virtually every Army post around the world. Reaching for Excellence is everything from basic educational skills and technical skill development to undergraduate and graduate studies at the college level. And it's a chance to have at least 75% of your college tuition paid for by the Army.

Continuing your education is a commitment that's fully supported by the Army leadership. You can start taking advantage of this commitment at your post's Education Center. There, you'll find a professional education counselor who can help you set short- and long-range goals which fit both your educational and career plans.

Drop by your Education Center and find out, as Specialist Hales did, how you can turn some off-duty time into a lifetime of rewards. If you want to get ahead, now's the time to get started.

ARMY EDUCATION. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.
