AIDS
Health officials call for education

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

The proportion of U.S. acquired immune deficiency syndrome cases that can be attributed to heterosexual relations, while still small, is increasing. Public health officials are concerned, but they're equally concerned with what they perceive as the public's lack of knowledge and mistaken impressions about the disease.

In a recent 36-page report requested by the White House, Surgeon General C. Everett Koop called for AIDS education to "start in early elementary school and at home so that children can grow up knowing the behavior to avoid to protect themselves from exposure to the AIDS virus."

Koop said that by 1991, an estimated 270,000 cases of AIDS will have been detected, with 179,000 deaths. So far, 15,000 people have died from AIDS and an estimated 1.5 million are infected with human immunodeficiency virus — or HIV — the virus that causes AIDS. (Health officials recently changed the virus' designation from HTLV-III to HIV.)

There is no cure or vaccine for AIDS, but it is preventable. Koop said education is the key.

DoD recognized the importance of AIDS education. The department started evaluating materials for its AIDS education program in 1985, according to Army Maj. Edith Gunnels, who chairs the DoD HIV/AIDS information and education working group. Since then, DoD has obtained pamphlets and films from private and government sources for the services to use in their AIDS education programs. In addition, the working group is helping the DoD dependent schools system develop an AIDS education curriculum.

AIDS education is important not only from a prevention standpoint, according to health officials, but to dispel the hysteria and mistreatment of AIDS patients that result from ignorance.

According to the Surgeon General's report:

- AIDS cannot be spread by casual or workplace contact.
- It cannot be spread by sharing drinking glasses — although other diseases can be spread that way.
- It cannot be spread by a child with AIDS biting another child; there is not enough virus in saliva to cause the disease.
- It is not spread by insects, swimming pools or hot tubs.

AIDS is spread through sexual intercourse, through blood transfusions or intravenous injections with needles contaminated with blood from an AIDS patient, and through an infected mother to her fetus or newborn. It also has been spread through artificial insemination and organ transplants from infected donors.

The percentage of AIDS cases in the United States directly attributable to heteroexual relations is now 4 percent — up from 1 percent a few years ago. In African nations, which have few hemosexuals, AIDS is primarily a heterosexual disease. However, public health officials believe this can be partially explained by the fact that doctors in underdeveloped nations often have no choice but to reuse needles for vaccinations. In addition, they say these nations have a high incidence of other infections that cause bleeding in contact areas.

Recent improvements in the safety of blood products have greatly reduced the risk factor for hemophiliacs, persons with a disorder making them subject to bleeding.

Soldiers take advantage of Safetycab's free rides

By Shawn Bryson
The Bayonet staff writer

The Christmas and New Year holidays have always been times for celebration. Alcohol is often a part of the celebration for many people. Although 'twas the season to be jolly recently, it was also the season to be safe by "Designating a Driver" or calling Safetycab.

Dec. 15 kicked off the fourth season for the program aimed at reducing the number of people who drink and drive during the holidays. The program continued through the morning of Jan. 1 and according to Kay Denes, a spokeswoman for the Bradley Center, it was a great success this year. Mrs. Denes said that the program had more participants this year than in any of the three previous years.

Denes said that 1,155 calls were recieved from people who had had too much to drink compared to the only 784 recieved last year.

She also said that of the calls taken this year, 1,056 actual rides were given, which is more than 400 more rides than in 1985.

According to Mrs. Denes, 143 Fort Benning soldiers used Safetycab this year, which made up 13.5 percent of the total number of participants. She said that this percentage is slightly less than last year's.

The program was sponsored by the Bradley Center, The Ledger-Enquirer newspapers and the Association of the United States Army this year.

Twenty-three restaurants also participated in the "Designate a Driver" program this year. The establishments served free non-alcoholic beverages to people who were designated drivers.

Seven Columbus and Phenix City cab companies participated in the program while the Bradley Center accepted phone calls from people needing a ride home. The organization then coordinated with one of the cab companies, which were on a rotation schedule, to give people a free, safe ride home.

Special services planned to observe King birthday

American Forces Information Service

Jan. 19, 1987, will mark the second observance of a federal holiday honoring slain civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Jan. 14 to 19 has been designated "King Week '87" in memory of the slain civil rights leader. The theme of this year's observance is "Living The Dream: Let Freedom Ring!"

Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger said King Week '87 will represent an opportunity for the Department of Defense "to demonstrate our commitment to our nation's tradition of respect for individual human rights and dignity."

Weinberger urged DoD installations to demonstrate this commitment with programs, activities and special observances honoring King.

King's philosophy of non-violent social change, which he preached during 13 years of civil rights activities, sparked the conscience of a generation. He led movements and marches that brought significant changes in American attitudes. His charismatic leadership inspired men and women, young and old, in the United States and abroad.

Congress set up the national observance to "serve as a time for Americans to reflect on the principles of racial equality and non-violent social change espoused by Martin Luther King Jr."

Coretta Scott King, his widow, has called on Americans to celebrate his birthday as "a time for peace and non-violence in all our human relationships and in every aspect of our personal lives . . . a day when all of us put aside our differences andjoin in a spirit of togetherness in recognition of our common humanity."

Loyalty, high ethical standards make soldiers true professionals

By Kevin A. Hom
The Army Flier

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS)— Loyalty to one's country and unit coupled with personal responsibility and selfless service are the basic values that make a soldier professional.

Ethics are formed from ideals and values that have been handed down, withstanding the test of time. Military leaders have relied on the sound moral principles that have developed into our present professional ethics and values.

Defending a nation's freedom is but one aspect of values. Being a professional soldier in the Army requires a soldier to really believe in what he is doing. A true professional military leader is not just trained to kill, to capture territory, or force other people into a different political system.

Professional soldiers are "experts." They train themselves and their subordinates to be the best, so that if the time should come, they will be ready to defend their nation and all that it stands for, and if necessary, to sacrifice their lives.

To properly train subordinates requires loyalty to the unit. This loyalty is earned, through consideration for a subordinate's well-being, to developing cohesion and unit pride. Effective training and forming a group of individuals into an efficient, productive, and highly motivated unit contributes to the overall readiness of the Army and to the defense of the nation.

The only way in which a military leader can achieve unit loyalty and loyalty to the nation is through personal responsibility. He must have the desire to achieve, and to accomplish the mission to the best of his capability, by living up to commitments whether large or small. Personal responsibility is taking advantage of every opportunity that will contribute to the growth and improvement of the individual.

Today's atmosphere of world instability requires us to be solid in our beliefs and values, to be ready to defend our country at a moment's notice, to face any enemy, anywhere at any time, to carry out our mission at all costs.

Speeding ticket takes care of pay raise

Dawn Kilpatrick

More money. Who doesn't want to earn more of it? I know I do. Once again, as loyal servants to our country, we are being rewarded for our hard work and dedication. At the end of January, we will all see a 3 percent pay hike. Yes, those Leave and Earnings Statements will be brimming with newfound wealth.

What to do with all of that extra cash has got to be a question you're all asking yourselves. I know I was giving the dilemma some serious pondering.

Until Wednesday night that is. Wednesday night? Yes, Wednesday night.

As I was driving down Highway 27-280 toward the 3rd Ranger Battalion, after leaving the newspaper at 10 p.m., I suddenly saw flashing red and blue lights as I glanced into my rearview mirror. Quickly, I hit the brakes. Unfortunately, it wasn't quickly enough. (It's difficult to beat the speed of light.)

Then it came to me. The first taste of that 3 percent pay raise would probably find its way into the hands of the Fort Benning Magistrate's Court in the form of my speeding fine. About 15 minutes later, as I pulled away, I could already feel the loss of that $30.

I had been nabbed by one of Fort Benning's finest. He said I was going 64 in a 55-mile-an-hour zone. I don't think so, but isn't that what all criminals say?

Most civilian policemen who have stopped me for one reason or another always seem to want to play "20 questions" about why they pulled me over. "Do you know why I stopped you, ma'am?" "Where were you going in such a hurry?" "When's the last time you checked the right rear taillight on this vehicle, ma'am?"

Not the young specialist who caught me speeding. He very authoritatively and professionally walked up to my car, said "Good evening, ma'am. I'm specialist 'Jones' (name changed to protect his identity) of the Fort Benning Military Police. I just clocked you going 64 miles an hour in a 55-mile-an-hour zone. Could I please have your driver's license, identification card, proof of insurance and vehicle registration card?" When I gave all of that to him, (I was ready, I knew what was coming.) he said "Thank you, sergeant; I'll be right with you."

In my naivete, I thought, "maybe he'll decide all I really need is a warning and a lecture about driving too fast." So, while I sat in my car waiting for him to come back, thinking I was going to get off with a warning, he was sitting in his car, writing up my ticket.

When he came back to my car he stoically handed me back each document I had previously given him, plus one more, which was, as he carefully explained to me, a citation for a speeding violation. He took his time and told me to insert $30 into the envelope, fold it over and mail it in. If I believed the citation to be unjust I could check block "C," fold it over and mail it in and a court date would be assigned. "Do you have any questions? Thank you very much, have a safe evening on Fort Benning, sergeant."

How do you argue?

I couldn't. I was in such shock. No remonstration about the dangers of speeding. No insinuating remarks that I was a menace to society by driving so fast. The MP simply did his job. How can I argue with that?

Although I'm not pleased about getting a $30 ticket, I'm happy to know that the Fort Benning Military Police Activity is staffed by young professionals who have a serious sense of purpose about their jobs.

I won't miss that little bit of extra money anyway. After all, I never had it before.

Alabama full of hidden pleasures for tourists

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

When I heard that a 3 percent raise went into effect this month, I was excited.

Based on my GS-7 step three pay grade, divided by number of pay periods, with Medicare, taxes, retirement and insurance premiums subtracted, I calculated my take home windfall to be $3.39 per paycheck. Needless to say, I was thrilled.

Thinking I could forget about adding to my sea shell collection, I put aside the travel brochures on the Carribean and revised our summer vacation schedule to fit the new budget.

Then I got right on the telephone and called my husband with the news. "Luther load the truck, we're heading for Shangri-la," I told him.

We discovered Shangri-la, Ala., last year on a return trip from Panama City Beach, Fla. Detoured to Highway 22 because a Hereford had been run over on 431 North down near Dothan, Ala., we had to take the scenic route home.

Unsure of our way, we took a left where we should have turned right, and the next sign we saw read "See Shangri-la — 2 miles."

Knowing that Shangri-la is supposed to be a beautiful, though imaginary place where all your dreams come true, I was delighted by our discovery.

And since the kids were threatening "accidents" if we didn't find a restroom, we steered a straight course toward the promised land.

What a paradise was lurking right around the next bend in the road! There it was, "Shangri-la Motor Court and Campground, Reasonable Rates, Restroom Facilities."

While my husband took care of the kids, I decided to take a closer look at the place.

The manager was kindness itself, giving me a brochure listing the prices of camping spaces and another one highlighting the tourist attractions of the area.

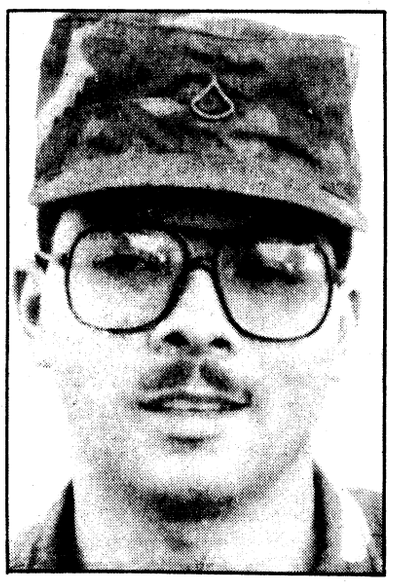
At a reasonable $1.50 per space and free water, I saw that we could easily afford the accommodations and have money left over for food and recreation.

If we wanted a swim, there was a map to the Smiths' Road Abandoned Rock Quarry, where "bottomless pools, fed by deep springs, stay ice cold year-round." Happily, I saw I'd also be able to add to my shell collection on the quarry's limestone beach.

Fresh seafood was available by going back the way we'd come 27.1 miles, to Floyd's Car Wash and Drive-in, where for $3.50 we could wash the truck and get a free fish sandwich.

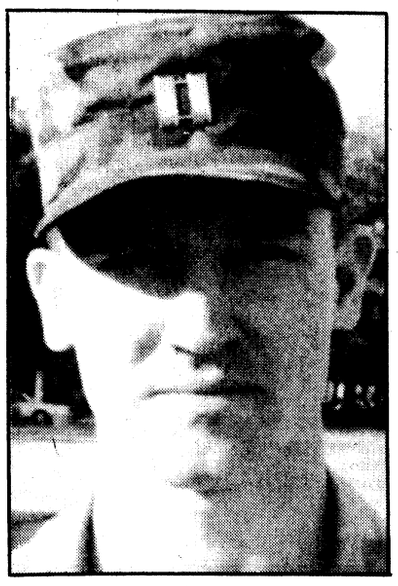
For evening entertainment, a short drive to Intercourse, Ala., and we'd be at the Emporium Movie House, which showed all the popular movies of the day. "I saw that Jane Fonda in "Barbarella" just last week," the manager confided, "and Saturdays are dollar night."

I'll confess; I fell in love with the place and have been dreaming about a return trip ever since.



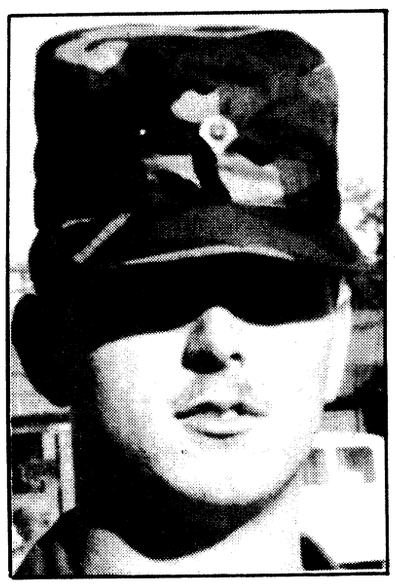
The best thing of all was that the place has no telephones or televisions so you can truly get away from the hustle and bustle of city life.

This place is not on the map, but if you're interested, I'll be happy to show you how to get there.



Just pick up a map of Alabama and drop by my office. And plan a summer vacation that will let you get the maximum enjoyment out of your pay raise.

Various voices



At the end of this month, our pay will reflect a 3 percent pay raise. What do you plan to do with the extra money?

SP4 Wade A. Clifton, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade — "Since I'm alright financially, I'll probably take the extra money and put it in the bank."

SSgt. Cynthia Johnson, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "I'll save the money for a rainy day and hope that it doesn't rain too soon."

Pvt. 2 Edward M. Stennis, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division — "The 3 percent raise won't really be enough extra money for me to makes plans with."

Koop issues AIDS update

Surgeon general supports Army's screening program

American Forces Information Service

Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's recent report on acquired immunedeficiency syndrome recommended against mass AIDS screening for the general population but acknowledged its importance to the military. The military's human immunodeficiency virus screening program is necessary to protect individuals who are required to receive vaccines, to protect individuals deployable to areas with miinimal medical support and severe local diseases, and to protect the buddy blood donor system that may be required in battle.

According to Dr. John Mazzuchi, health affairs principal director for professional affairs and quality assurance, DoD is reviewing the advisability of AIDS screening for civilian employees, particularly before sending them overseas. The review is part of a previously scheduled look at the HIV policy written in 1985.

Service members who test positive for HIV but show no symptoms are retained. However, they are usually restricted from assignments to ships, deployable units or overseas bases.

Until recently, the services did not discharge an individual simply for testing HIV positive, but they could give him an honorable, involuntary discharge if he confessed to being a homosexual or drug abuser. However, the Fiscal 1987 Defense Authorization Act bars the services from using confessions given during medical evaluations to involuntarily separate a member.

Individuals who show AIDS symptoms are medically discharged but provided with treatment. Between, and even within, the services, the point in the disease progression at which an individual is medically discharged varies.

A recent report by Koop's report includes these recommendations for preventing AIDS:

- Those who are sexually active or even slightly unsure of their partner's sexual activity are strongly urged to use condoms, a proven, effective barrier to AIDS. A person can be infected with the AIDS virus without showing symptoms, so the need for caution canot be overemphasized. Condoms also help protect against other diseases, such as herpes.
- The ideal protection is to have a faithful relationship with an uninfected partner who is also faithful. The more partners a person has, the greater the risk of AIDS.
- No one should abuse drugs, but those who can't change their behavior should not share needles.
- Avoid sex with prostitutes (both because they are often drug abusers and because they have many partners), male homosexuals and bisexuals.
- Avoid sex practices that can cause cuts or tears in the linings of vagina, rectum or penis.
- Women who have tested HIV positive should avoid pregnancy both to avoid infecting their children and because pregnancy increases the chance of developing AIDS symptoms.

Civilian EEO policy director to speak at birthday service

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

"Living the dream — let freedom ring!" is the theme of this year's Martin Luther King Jr. birthday celebration.

Fort Benning officials plan a commemorative ceremony Jan. 19 from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. in Marshall Auditorium. Claiborne Douglass Haughton Jr., director of the civilian equal opportunity policy in the Office of the Deputy Secretary of Defense, will be the guest speaker.

Attendees are asked to be seated 10 minutes prior to the beginning of the service.

Haughton, who was born with cerebral palsey and blindness in one eye, entered federal service in 1967 as a quality assurance trainee at the Defense Logistics Agency in Indianapolis, Ind.

In 1972, he switched fields and became an equal employment opportunity specialist in the DoD Contractor Employment Compliance Program. In this and subsequent management positions he gained national prominence for his work in enforcing Federal Affirmative Action Plan requirements at government contractor facilities in Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana.

From February to September 1981, Haughton served as acting deputy assistant secretary of defense (equal opportunity). In this role, he was the principal staff advisor to the assistant secretary of defense for Manpower, Reserve Affairs and Logistics, on all equal opportunity matters affecting DoD military and civilian personnel worldwide. He also exercised staff supervision over the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute.

During this time, he developed the first DoD policy statement on sexual harassment; the first policy statement on EEO for persons with disabilities and the first DoD directive to prohibit discrimination against disabled persons in the DoD Federally Assisted Programs.

Haughton conceived, developed and edited the original DoD publications: "Black Americans in Defense of Our Nation; Women in America's Defense; Asian-Pacific Americans in the Nation's Defense and Hispanics in America's Defense."

He received a bachelor's degree in biology from Dillard University in New Orleans, La., and a master's degree in public administration from The American University in Washington, D.C.

Climbing the mountain

Upbringing grooms King for future in civil rights

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

The ascent to greatness of America's most famous civil rights leader took the right set of circumstances to set it off.

And Dec. 1, 1955, Rosa Parks, a black woman in Montgomery, Ala., committed the "crime" that would eventually lead to the rise of Martin Luther King Jr. as a leader of black people everywhere.

Mrs. Parks refused to give up her seat on a public bus to a white man. She refused to get up, because, she said, "I'm tired."

Black people everywhere united in support of Mrs. Parks, because they too were tired. They were tired of being treated as second-class citizens and they believed that every citizen had the right to ride on a public bus without facing harassment.

In the openly racist South, it was no wonder black people were "tired." At the time, blacks were required by segregation laws to use separate restrooms and drinking fountains. They could not eat at most restaurants unless it had a special "Negro Section" located so that the white customers didn't have to look at them. Blacks were forced to ride in the backs of buses, give up their seats to whites and ride standing up if there weren't enough seats.

Society was separate, but it was not equal for black people, and King was one of many people tired of the situation.

"I could never adjust to the separate waiting rooms, separate eating places, separate restrooms, partly because the separate was always unequal and partly because the very idea of separate did something to my sense of dignity and self respect," he said.

King was born Jan. 15, 1929, in Atlanta. His father, M.L. King Sr., was minister of one the city's largest black churches and had achieved his goal of raising his family in a "fine brick home," a sign of upper class status in the black community.

It was a time of open hostility toward black people, especially in the South. While King lived a fairly insulated childhood, there were a few incidents that reminded him of "his place."

Once a policeman stopped his father for speeding and addressed him as "boy." His father gestured to young Martin and said, "there is a boy; I'm a man."

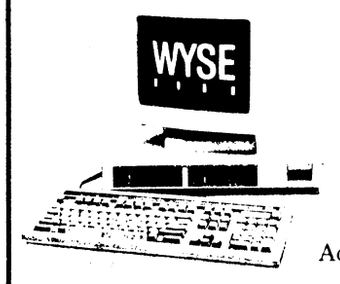
Another time, a shoe salesman refused to sell his father shoes unless he came to the back of the store to the "colored" section. His father stormed out, refusing to buy shoes if he could not be treated as a person instead of a black.

While such treatment could easily have made King bitter and hostile to whites, something inside him refused to categorize all whites as bad because of the cruelty inflicted by a few.

He believed that "to forget that many whites are fundamentally decent would be to eliminate the moral difference between bitter blacks struggling for freedom and equality, and racist whites fighting to hold them back."

King attended public schools in Atlanta, where he skipped the ninth and twelveth grades, and headed to Morehouse University at 15. There he was an adequate student, according to professors, but not an outstanding one. He graduated in June 1948, and having made the decision to follow in his father's footsteps and become a minister, enrolled in Crozer Theological Seminary in Pennsylvania.

Once he began his studies at Crozer, "King the black man" went through a transformation. At this institution where most of the students and faculty were white, King saw it as his duty to serve as a proper example of what a black man was.



As he explained to a friend, "I was well aware of the typical white stereotype of the Negro, that he is always late, that he's loud and always laughing, that he's dirty and messy."

King adopted a solemn demeanor, seldom smiling or making idle conversation, and didn't enter into casual friendships. It was a facade that never entirely left King in his later years, though close personal friends said he continued to be warm and witty in private.

King

He graduated at the top of his class, was senior class president and gave the valedictorian address. From there he headed to Boston University, where he completed the course work for his doctorate in theology.

In September 1954, he became the pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church in Montgomery, Ala., his first full-time position as a minister. There he threw himself into his work and got to know more about the black community in the city.

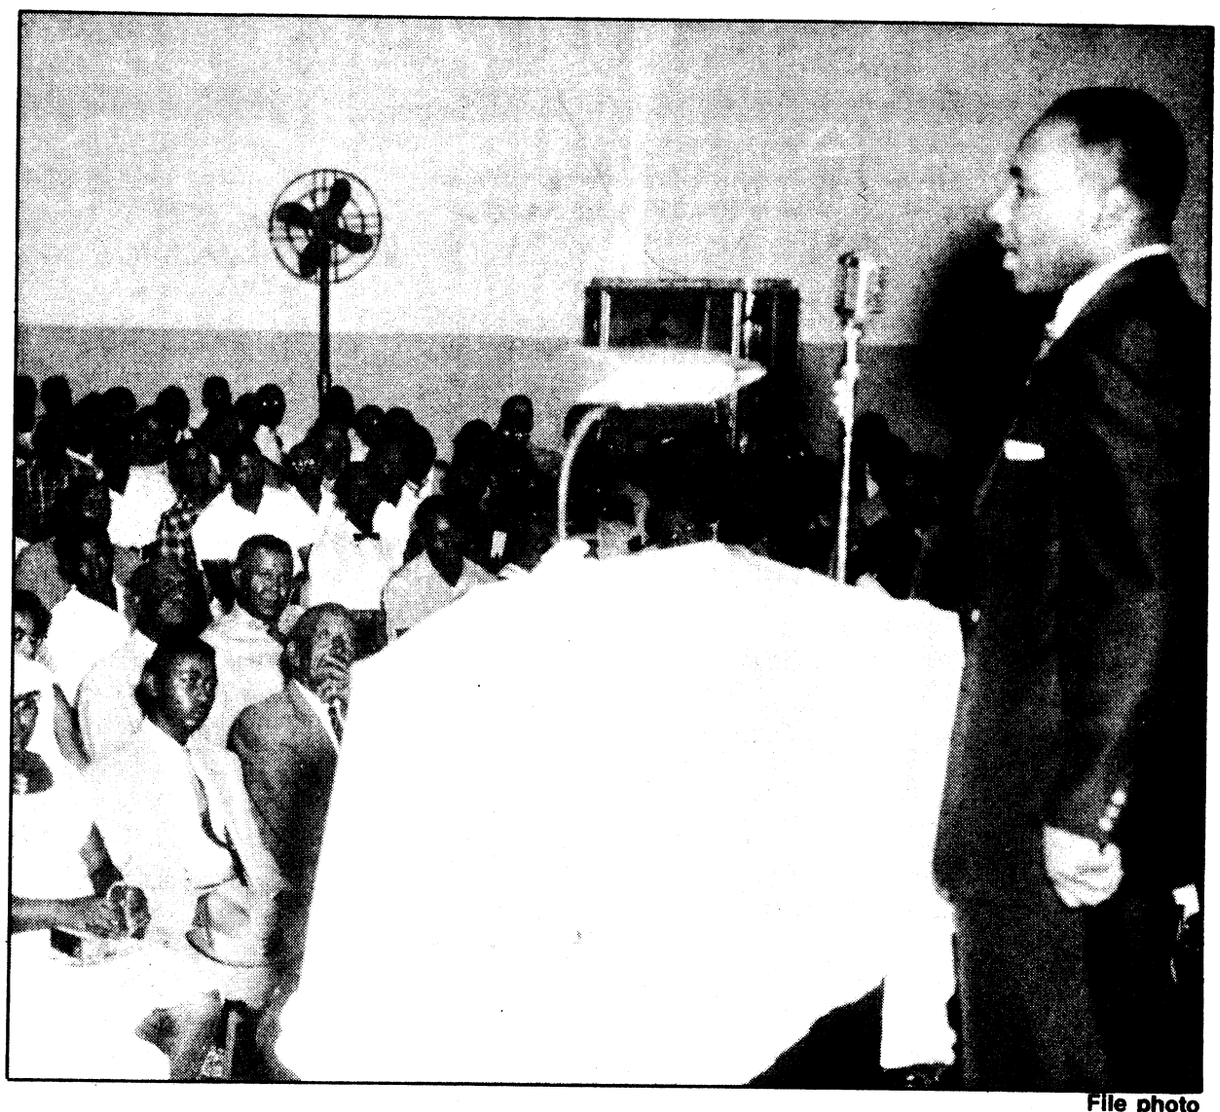
Always interested in civil rights and equality for blacks, it was in college that he became exposed to Ghandi's theory of nonviolent protest as a means of social change. This philosophy meshed with his own beliefs that positive social change must come about through nonviolent actions.

King gradually came to believe that nonviolent action was not the same as simply ignoring an evil. As he put it, "It is a courageous confrontation of evil by the power of love in the faith that it is better to be the recipient of violence than the inflictor of it."

In later years, he humbly explained his rise to prominence by saying that he was at the right place at the right time when he was called on to be the leader in black negotiations during the Montgomery bus boycott that had been borne out of Mrs. Parks' situation. Blacks needed a leader at the time and he fit the bill because he was part of the church hierarchy, but was new enough in town not to have made enemies in the community.

But it was his personal abilities as an orator, as well as his profound moral convictions, that led to his rise as a leader of his people.

Thanks to the leadership provided by King, the Montgomery bus boycott took place without violence on the part of the city's black citizens. Racist whites, however, responded with bombings and vicious attacks. King was not excluded from this harassment, but he faced it with a courage and faith in God that inspired his followers.



Only moments after learning that his home had been bombed, while he was still unsure of the welfare of his wife and child, King spoke to a group of blacks who were frightened by the violence.

"Let us keep moving with the faith that what we are doing is right, and with the even greater faith that God is with us in this struggle," he said.

The Montgomery bus boycott lasted for a little more than a year. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled that racial segregation on city bus lines was unconstitional June 4, 1956, but it was Dec. 21 of that year before the city finally complied with the law of the land.

Blacks everywhere had won an important victory, but it was only the first small step in opening up the "separate but equal" country to all citizens.

Editor's note: Next week, the second article in this series will tell about King's later years, his Nobel Peace Prize, his death and its impact on the civil rights movement.

History provides many examples of Airborne troops being abandoned on drop zones and left to fend for themselves.

A recent example of paratroopers' self sufficiency is the success story of the new mascot in Company A, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Leonard Rossiter

"Dropzone," Company A, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment's mascot, is at home with the students in his unit.

"Dropzone," also known as "DZ" was found on Fryar Field in late November. He had been tied to a cinder block and left. He was first discovered by the cadre of Company B. "Apocalypse" Company later adopted the dog and published orders, officially making him the unit mascot.

DZ's first stop was the veterinarian. According to Capt. Mark Martinez, chief of Fort Benning's Veterinary Services, "He's in overall good condition." However, the dog has heartworms, which could be fatal if not treated. He's on a profile for six months that prohibits physical training and airborne missions. His disposition is good, though, and he's recovering rapidly. When he was discovered he was malnourished and showed signs that he had been mistreated. Now, he enjoys the company of the cadre and students at Co. A.

DZ wanders through the company area freely, collecting affectionate pats and scratches.

"The troops really love him," said Capt. Thomas Foster, Co. A commander. "In a recent cycle a student jumped with a rawhide bone and later presented it to DZ."

DZ is carrying on a long tradition of mascots in the Airborne. He belongs to the troops and they willingly help care for him. The company commander believes he is a focal point for unit cohesion and boosts the students' morale. — Leonard Rossiter, Company A, 1st Battalion, 507th parachute Infantry Regiment.

197th Inf. Bde.

Infantry soldiers from Company B, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry left last week for the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., to look at desert fighting from the other side. The company will train with Fort Irwin's Opposing Force, which uses Soviet tactics to train rotating U.S. Army units.

The soldiers will attend a short course at the OPFOR Academy to orientate them to the Soviet tactics they will employ in battle. They will also become familiar with the OPFOR's vehicles and equipment.

The mechanized infantrymen will get a taste of the life of a light fighter as they will fight dismounted throughout most of the training. They will face light fighters from the 5th Infantry Division from Fort Polk, La. during the training. — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade.

ATC

The total is in and it's one the Army Training Center is proud of. A total of $218,969.79 was contributed by ATC personnel to the Combined Federal Campaign. With a post goal of $500,000, the ATC contribution represents approximately 40 percent of that goal.

"Our contribution relects the generosity of the American soldiers," said Col. R.S. Siegfried, ATC commander. "I am pleased that once again the ATC has been a leader in this effort."

This year's total continues ATC's tradition of supporting a worthwhile effort. The tradition includes a $191,191.19 contribution in 1985, and $215,454.20 in 1984. — Marsha Santiago, Army Training Center correspondent.

Winter maintenance may prevent expensive automobile repair bills

Training and Doctrine Command

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — Doing a maintenance check on your car before the severe winter weather sets in could save some costly repair bills. Also, following some simple driving tips could prevent one of those slick-road accidents common during the cold weather months.

- Check head, tail and parking lights and turn signals for proper operation and adjustment, and for broken glass.
- Check exhaust system for leaks. Any evidence of fumes in the cab can also mean carbon dioxide is present.
- Check radiator hoses, clamps and fittings for leaks throughout the season. Don't forget the antifreeze.
- Check the windshield, mirrors and rear window for any cracks that could affect visibility.

Make sure the wiper blades wipe clean and the windshield washer fluid tank, if present, is full.

The tires and brakes could save your life or prevent serious injury. Brakes should catch evenly with no squeaking or grinding. Remember to also check the emergency brake. It could end up being your only one. It's essential that tires be in top condition, with even tread wear, and plenty of tread should be present.

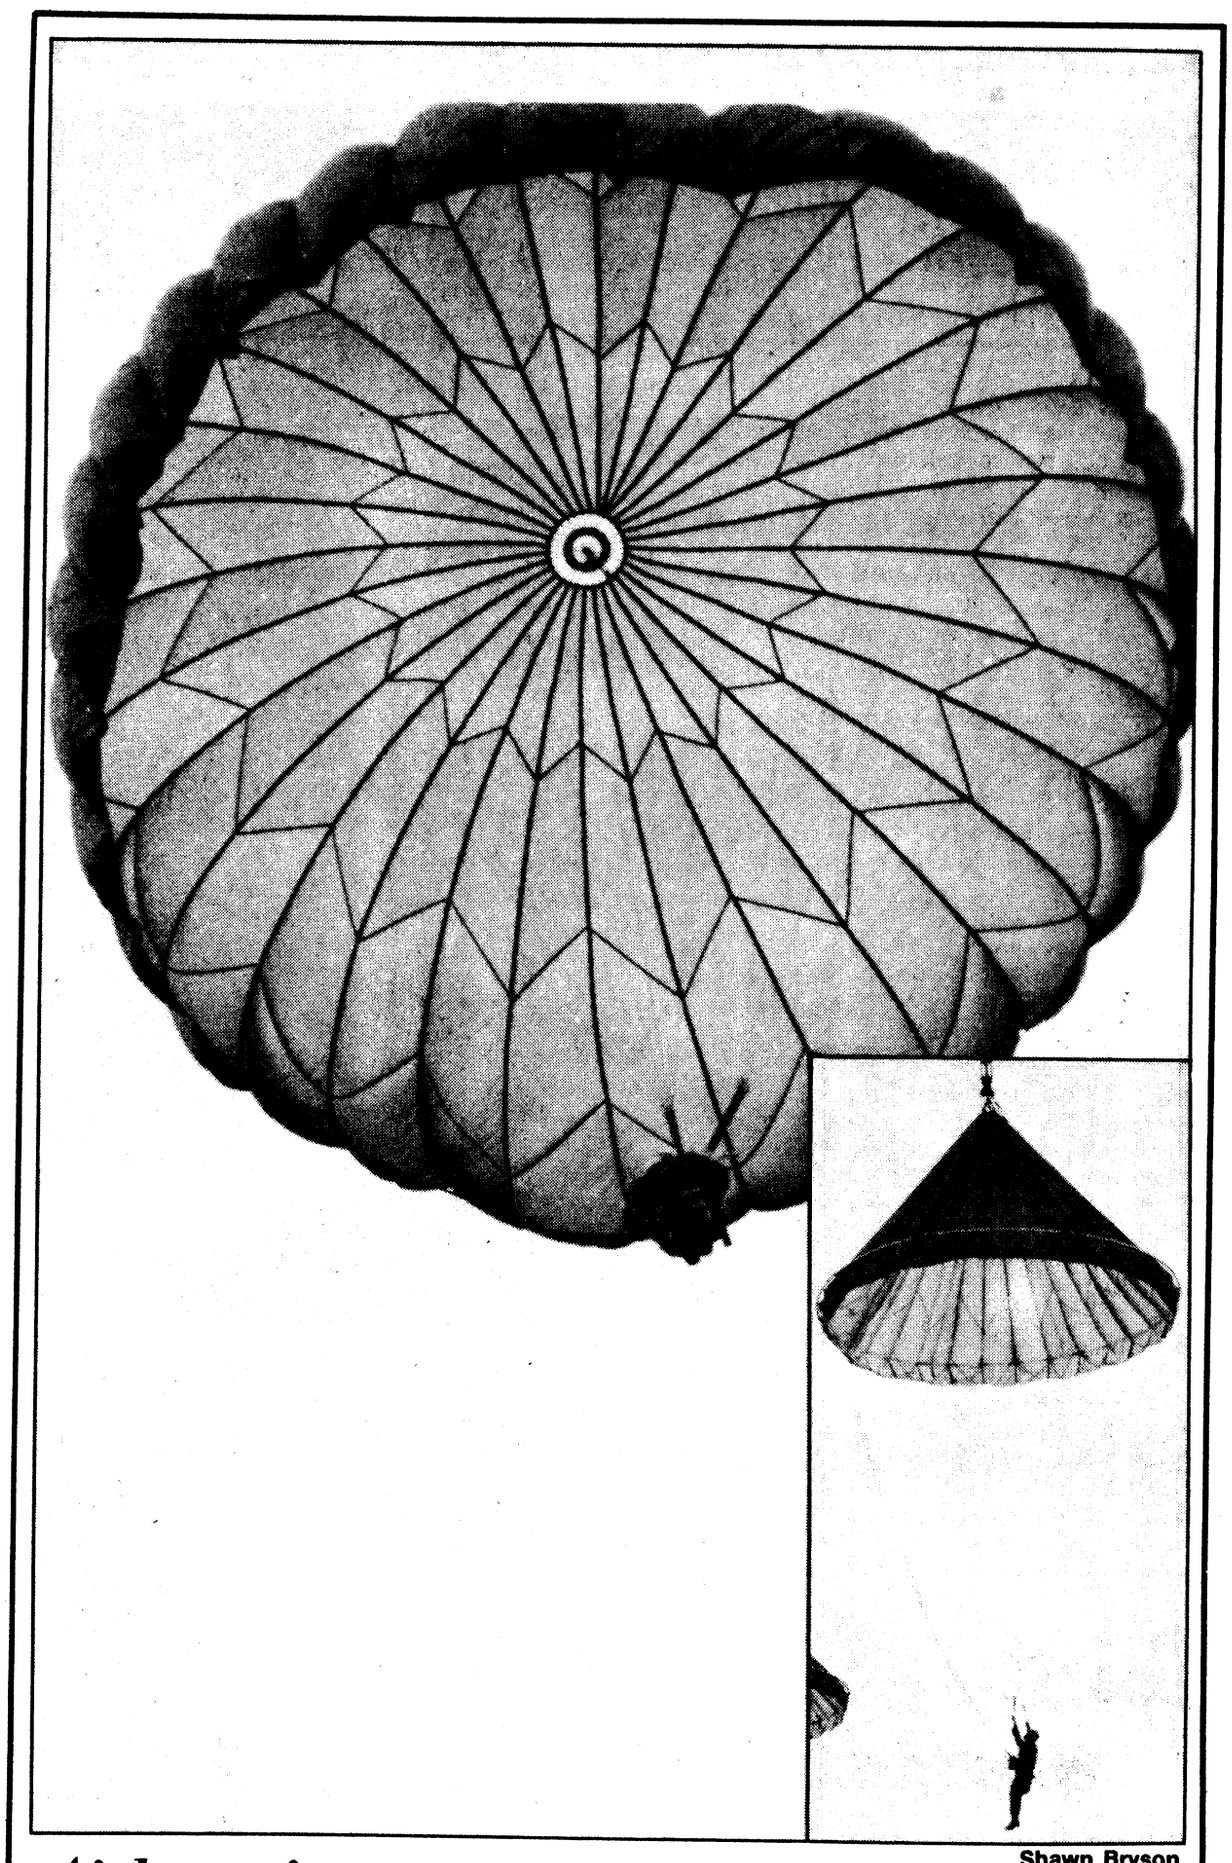
- Check the battery and cables for corrosion or signs of damage or leaks.
- Makes sure the heaters and defrosters work properly and are not clogged.

In addition, here are a few driving tips:

- Steer steady on ice and snow. Don't make abrupt lane changes, starts or stops.
- Remember bridges and overpasses freeze before other surfaces because the air flows over and under the road surface. Adjust your speed accordingly.
- Allow plenty of following distance when the roads are icy or wet. Slow down when going through intersections in case the other guy doesn't.
- Remember that in rainstorms the water mixes with road film to form an extremely slick road surface.
- Keep your speed down in foggy weather. A major cause of accidents in fog is driving too fast for the visibility.
- Keep your headlights clean. Road film easily builds on them in damp weather.
- Plan your trip ahead of time. Ask yourself if the trip is really necessary. If it is, be aware of road conditions and allow plenty of time to get there.
- Help other drivers see you by using your headlights. Be especially alert for pedestrians who may be preoccupied with umbrellas, rain gear or bulky winter clothing.

Drive carefully past runners, cyclists

Safety Office



Nearly everyone has heard the expression "Pride goeth before a fall." That statement can be applied to a lot of people who operate a vehicle on public roadways.

Many drivers are just too stubborn or proud to give the right-of-way to a runner or bicyclist. Unfortunately, their stubbornness and pride often result in tragic accidents.

Runners and bicyclists have many precautions they must take and rules they must follow in order to assure their personal safety. However, unless drivers are willing to take the responsibility to watch out for these individuals, many of them will be injured or killed.

Here are a few tips for drivers to remember when operating a vehicle around runners or bicyclists:

- Never swerve your vehicle toward a runner or bicyclist. Your vehicle reacts much faster than they are able to.
- Always slow your vehicle to a safe speed when approaching and passing runners or bicyclists. You can never be sure whether or not they might trip and fall into your path.
- Don't stare at runners or bicyclists for extended periods of time. First of all, you should be paying attention to all of your surroundings and the traffic situation you are involved in. Secondly, when you look or stare at something for extended periods of time you tend to aim your vehicle toward it.
- Always be courteous. Give runners and bicyclists the right-of-way at crosswalks, or when necessary even if it is not legally theirs. Your common sense, courtesy and generosity could save someone's life.

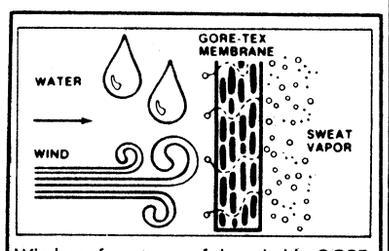
How to Stay Warm and Dry in the Field

By Dennis Davis
ARCCO Staff Writer

I recently went on a camping trip to the Okefenokee swamp in South Georgia. After an enjoyable day watching alligators from our canoe, it began to rain. AND RAIN. AND RAIN. The next day it cleared to a slow drizzle, and we gained enough courage to take another canoe trip. It was wild and beautiful, quietly paddling up a narrow stream surrounded by cypress trees and spanish moss. About three miles into the swamp, the sky opened up and poured. My companions were equipped with a variety of protective devices, including umbrellas, plastic bags, cheap ponchos and sweaters.

After returning to base camp I noticed that everyone seemed wet and miserable, except me. That is because I have learned the value of having good equipment in the field.



Last year I went camping with my best friend from Canada. It was below freezing, yet I was warm and cozy in my sleeping bag wearing nothing but boxer shorts. Rick, however, was wearing wool long johns and was in a sleeping bag, covered with an army blanket, covered with my jacket and his, and was still cold!

The difference was in the sleeping bag. His was cotton, but mine was made of high-tech fiber similar to hollo-fil® II.

You don't think equipment makes a difference when you're out in the field? Let me tell you, it is usually the only difference between being comfortable or miserable, wet or dry, warm or cold, lost or on course, satisfied or hungry. Of course, knowing how to use and choose good equipment is where a good outdoor supply house comes in handy.

The best in this area is ARCCO Military Supply. Actually, for the soldier it is the only one with a wide enough selection to find all you need.

If you are really serious about staying dry, you need to keep rain out, but allow perspiration vapor to escape. That means one thing—Gore-Tex®. ARCCO has Gore-Tex® Parkas, Pants, Ponchos and three kinds of Gore-Tex® gloves. Yes, it's more expensive, but it's waterproof and breathable. ARCCO has regular G.I. rain gear as well.

Windproof, waterproof, breathable GORE-TEX® fabric's the world's leading weatherproof material. The key to GORE-TEX® performance is the GORE-TEX® membrane. It contains 9 billion randomly spaced microscopic pores per square inch, each one 20,000 times smaller than a water drop but 700 times larger than a water vapor molecule. They let perspiration vapor escape but block outside wetness and cold wind, with up to 40% greater warmth than conventional fabrics.

For staying warm and dry underneath, nothing can beat polypropylene underwear. It cannot absorb water, so it wicks away body moisture, and retains body heat.

Let me tell you an experience I had with boots. Last year I went on a backpacking trip at Pine Mountain, Georgia. An easy trail, mostly flat, yet within one mile of hiking I had a blister that made the rest of the trip miserable. This year I hiked down Mt. Mitchell, North Carolina, claimed to be the roughest trail east of the Mississippi. After hiking five miles up jagged rocks, climbing under logs, and sliding through mud, my feet were warm and comfortable. The difference? I got some better boots.

If you've got to spend a lot of time on your feet in the wild, you better have some good boots. ARCCO has the widest selection of boots for soldiers in the Columbus area. The selection includes several that are both insulated and waterproof. Don't know which ones to choose? Again, ARCCO comes to your rescue with helpful, friendly sales people to explain the benefits of different products.

Really all you need to know about staying warm and dry in the field is one word. Let me spell it for you: A-R-C-C-O. Now that wasn't so hard, was it?

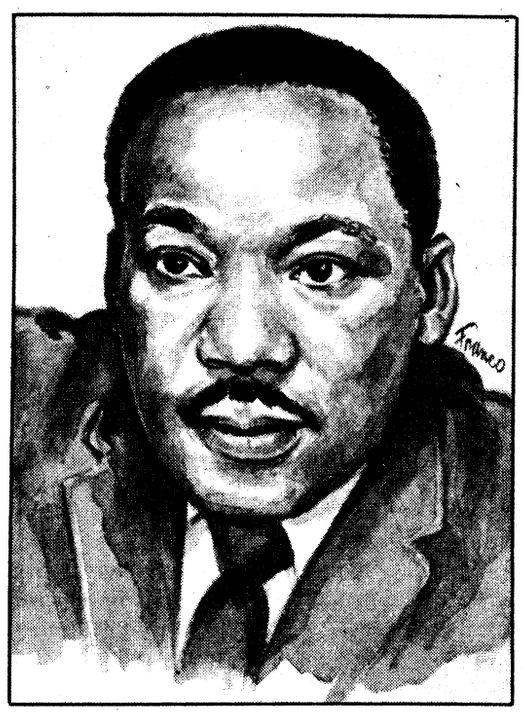
Services nationwide mark 'King Week '87'

Theme is 'Living the Dream: Let Freedom Ring!'

Army News Service

Jan. 19 marks the second national observance of the birth of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., with the week of Jan. 14 to 19 designated as "King Week '87."

The national theme for this year's federal holiday observance, selected by the Martin Luther King Jr. Federal Holiday Commission, is "Living the Dream: Let Freedom Ring!"



In a message to the secretaries of the military departments and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger urged all DoD installations to take this opportunity to "demonstrate our commitment to the nation's tradition of respect for individual human rights and dignity."

Chapman B. Cox, assistant secretary of defense for force management and personnel selected to provide policy oversight, has established a Military Involvement Committee for DoD, activities in support of this holiday observance.

SGM Jerome Bettis of the Office of the Army's Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Equal Opportunity Program Branch is the Army's military equal opportunity representative on the Committee.

He, along with other military service representatives, will actively increase and encourage DoD participation in "King Week '87." As the Army's military equal opportunity program representative, Bettis will assist Army installations with suggestions on the type of programs to use during the observance, and how to publicize local community commemorations.

In a message to the field, Isiah O. Gatling, EEO Manager, Assistant Secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs' Equal Employment Opportunity Evaluation and Research Agency said, "it is recommended that Army installations, worldwide, participate in activities" to celebrate the birthday of Dr. King.

"The United States Forces Command at Fort McPherson, Ga., has been designated as the DoD Executive Agent for the celebrating "King Week '87, and is encouraging all Army installations to give support for the week in the forms of seminars, guest speakers, concerts, displays and other community and special events," said Col. Richard A. Sones chief of FORSCOM Public Affairs.

The Martin Luther King Jr. Federal Holiday Commission has asked FORSCOM for military ceremonial and musical support to a parade scheduled for Jan. 19 in Atlanta, Sones said.

"The U.S. Army Ground Forces Band, along with a joint military color guard, will participate in the parade," Sones said.

FORSCOM has invited the U.S. Marine Corps Drum and Bugle Corps from Albany, Ga.; a U.S. Navy 50 state flag contingent from Orlando, Fla.; and the Old Guard Fife and Drum Corps from Washington, he added.

"Also, Tom Gropple of the Military District of Washington's ceremonial and special events elements is graciously providing us technical advice and assistant for the parade," Sones said.

The parade coordinator is Col. Charles W. Robinson, Second U.S. Army, Fort Gillem, Ga. Robinson is working with the Federal Holiday Commission along with two lieutenant colonels, three military clerks, a driver and seven federal employees. They will stay with the commission until the conclusion of "King Week '87."

At Fort Hood, Texas, Lt. Gen. Crosbie E. Saint, who commands III Corps and Fort Hood, Texas, has asked all subordinate commands to develop programs and activities to commemorate Dr. King's birthday.

"Tentatively, the 2nd Armored Division will be having retired Maj. Gen. John Q. Taylor King as guest speaker on Jan. 11; the 1st Cavalry Division will have as its guest speaker, Chaplain (Col.) John A. DeVaux Jr., Fort Huachuca, Ariz.; and the civilian equal employment opportunity office will feature as the guest speaker Judge Mary Ellen Hicks, 231st Judicial Court, State of Texas," said MSgt. Earl D. Terry, III Corps-Fort Hood equal opportunity advisor.

On Jan. 14, the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) is hosting the Second Annual Martin Luther King Jr. Breakfast, which will be in the Pentagon executive dining room. Julius Becton Jr., director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, and a retired U.S. Army lieutenant general, will be the guest speaker.

Board convenes in March to choose sergeants major to attend academy

Military Personnel Center

A U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy selection board is scheduled to meet at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. March 23 to select soldiers to attend the Academy at Fort Bliss, Texas for the July 1988 and January 1989 resident courses and for enrollment in the nonresident course.

Approximately 630 regular Army soldiers will be selected to attend resident classes. Additionally, about 100 alternates will be selected for these classes.

All non-commissioned officers eligible for resident consideration must submit an acceptance or declination of consideration statement. These acceptance and declination statements must be completed and forwarded to USAEREC before Jan. 19. See your local MILPO or PAC for assistance.

Americans At Their Best.

Losing weight

Watch out for 'Yo-Yo Syndrome'

By Bianca Nieves
USA MEDDAC

You're an overweight GI who's been told to lose 20 pounds or you lose your job. Or maybe you're a serviceman's wife with three kids who finds herself eating all day out of loneliness or boredom. Whatever the circumstances, you share a common problem: weight control.

It is estimated that 80 million Americans are overweight, and at any given time at least 50 million are either dieting or contemplating a diet. Yet very few people actually succeed in losing weight and keeping the weight off permanently.

Permanent weight loss is not impossible. However, it is not simple, fast and easy. Those diets that promise immediate results are doomed to fail, for the basic reason that they provide no realistic pattern for coping with the future. Although anyone can lose 10 pounds by eating only grapefruit for two weeks, no one can or wants to survive on grapefruit for the rest of his life.

Don't be tempted by advertisements for "quick, painless" weight loss diets. Such crash diets only lead to a continuation of the Yo-Yo Syndrome, or what Harvard nutritionist Jean Mayer calls "The Rhythm Method of Girth Control."

You may lose 10 to 20 pounds in a short time, only to gain it all back — plus more — in a few months. Writes Henry A. Jordan, formerly chief of the Department of Psychiatry at the U.S. Army Hospital, Fort Campbell, Ky.: "People who continually lose weight are highly motivated — or they wouldn't keep trying. But they have been snipping the weeds, not ripping out the roots."

In addition, people who are constantly going on and off diets to lose weight may be doing more harm to their bodies than they realize. According to the U.S. Surgeon General, as one gains weight, fats — called cholesterol — are added to the bloodstream. These fats are not removed when weight is lost. Therefore, continual weight loss or gain may perpetuate heart disease and certain blood diseases.

In the past few years, countless fad diets claiming miraculous results have come out. The fact that a "new" diet is invented every few months is proof that there is no magic solution to weight control. Fad diets appeal to the frustrated dieter because they promise immediate results . . . an instant solution to a long-term problem. But unless a diet involves permanent change in one's lifestyle and eating habits, it will inevitably fail.

Consider the "ultimate weight loss" Cambridge Diet. This diet promised a weight loss of 22 pounds in 14 days with a "mix-in-a-minute diet formula." However, the diet has been called unsafe and extreme by the American Dietetic Association.

According to the ADA, which represents 47,000 dieticians and nutritionists, the 330-calorie-a-day diet "is not a common sense approach to weight loss and should not be undertaken without strict monitoring by a medical professional."

Another dietary fad is "Starch Blockers," which claims to block or slow the digestion of starch in one's body. The appeal of starch blockers was that dieters could eat bread, pasta and potatoes without gaining weight. Starch blockers enhanced the myth that carbohydrates are fattening. In truth, carbohydrates provide energy for the body, and should be part of a well balanced diet.

Starch blockers have now been classified as untested drugs by the Food and Drug Administration and the manufacture of them has been halted. While starch blockers may actually block a small percentage of starch digestion (10 percent), they also have undesirable side effects such as cramps and diarrhea. High protein diets such as the Stillman Diet are usually also high in fat and may be very dangerous to persons prone to coronary disease. Such diets are not recommended for anyone because they may also cause sodium and potassium imbalances or dehydration.

Low carbohydrate diets can lead to a condition in the body called ketosis. When carbohydrates are not available to the body, incompletely metabolized substances called ketones accumulate in the blood. Ketosis causes rapid weight loss, but those pounds you lose are mostly water, which will be gained back when a diet containing carbohydrates is resumed.

Military servicemembers may be particularly prone to trying fad diets because of the pressure to lose pounds quickly. However, 10 pounds lost on a 10-day crash diet will only be gained back if no permanent change in eating behavior has been made.

Is there a real solution to weight control? The answer is a qualified "YES!" To be successful, a weight loss plan must be individualized to meet your specific needs.

What's the final word from the experts on weight control? According to Jean Mayer, nutritionist and president on Tufts University, "The formula is the one given here: regular exercise and a diet that cuts down on the quantity of food consumed without lessening too much the supply of required nutrients."

As Stuart and Davis, authors of "Slim Chance in a Fat World" put it, . . . "Loss of weight which can be kept off over time requires much hard work by both the overweight person and those who share his corner of life. Magic drugs, fad diets, super surgery and wonder workouts . . . have all promised to cut the work and the time needed for effective weight loss, but none of these promises has ever come true for any large number of people.

Army leads fight against drinking, driving on posts

By Ann Keays and Shawn Bryson
Army News Service and The Bayonet staff

In recent years, national concern has mounted over drunken driving. Many groups have formed to help prevent drunken driving, and many states have enacted stiffer drunken driving laws. In many respects, the Army has taken the lead in implementing procedures aimed at reducing drunken driving.

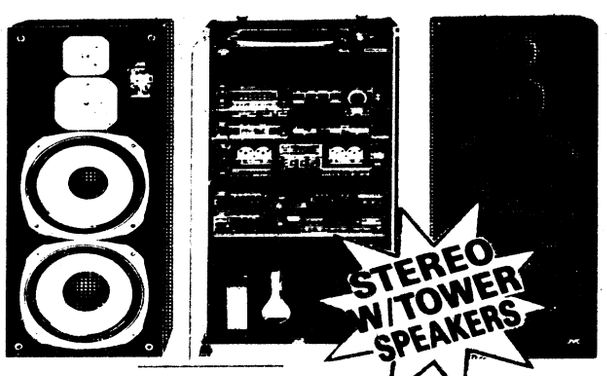
Today, if solders are convicted of drunken driving, it is virtually assured that their military careers are over, said Capt. Thomas K. Emswiller, an attorney with the 9th Infantry Division Staff Judge Advocate Office, Fort Lewis, Wash. This is true even if the conviction was from a civilian court. It is also true even if soldiers are never convicted, but refuse to give a blood sample or take a breathalyzer test.

If apprehended for driving under the influence of alcohol, soldiers face the possibility of either a civilian conviction or a conviction by Federal Magistrate's Court, he explained. If soldiers or civilians are apprehended on post, a Federal Magistrate's Court may try them.

According to Cathy Rock, Fort Benning Magistrate Court Clerk, the penalties for driving under the influence of alcohol on post are the same as Georgia's.

Rock said first time offenders are normally fined $300 and put on probation, while second time offenders will usually spend 48 hours in jail and pay a $600 fine. However, a third conviction for drunken driving results in a $1,000 fine and a jail sentence given by the judge based upon his feelings about the offense, she said.

If convicted of drunken driving in the civilian domain, a soldier must pay for and attend a week-long drug and alcohol rehabilitation class in order to get his driver's license back, according to Rock.



Once convicted and sentenced by either a magistrate's court or a state court for driving while intoxicated, a soldier still faces additional administrative actions from the Army. Post driving privileges may be revoked for one year. (This is also true for family members who have been convicted of drunken driving.)

Second offenses can result in additional revocation privileges for longer, Emswiller explained. At Fort Lewis for example, a second DUI offense can bring a revocation of driving privileges on-post for five years.

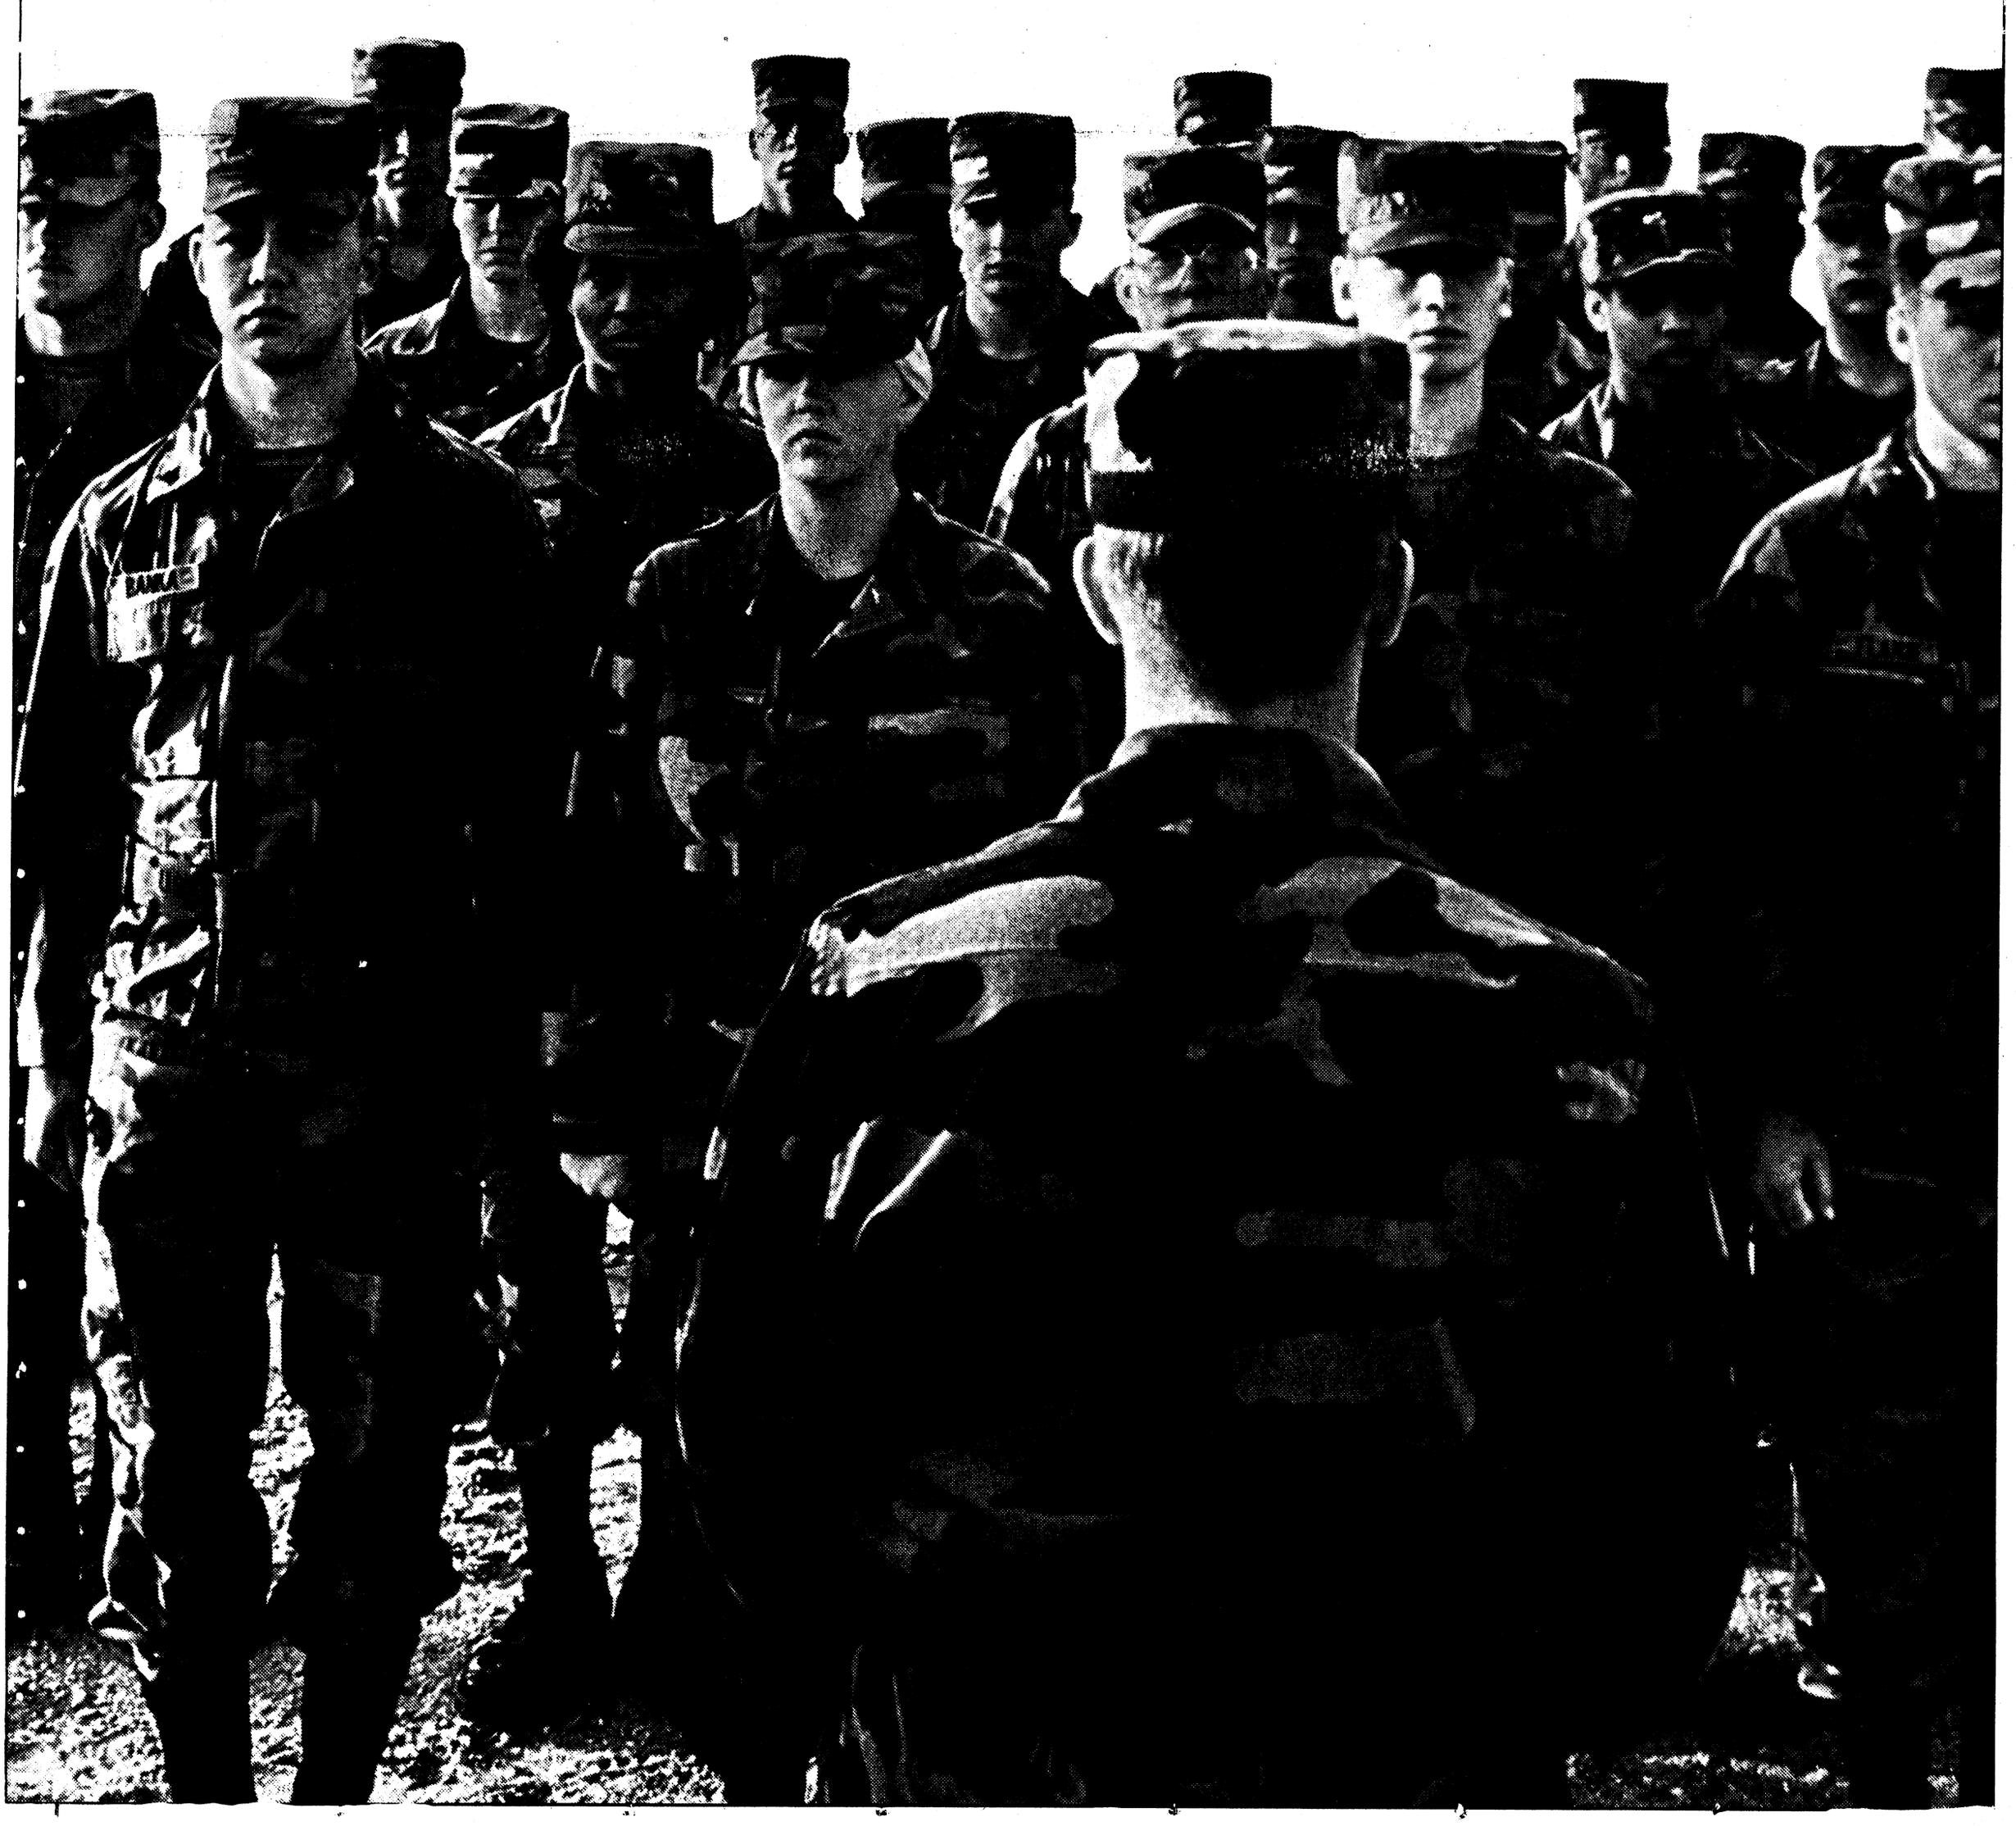
Keeping good soldiers in the Army is part of every leader's job. Whether you're an NCO or an officer, your leadership can have a powerful influence on your soldiers, especially in their decision to reenlist.



Nobody knows better than you that when soldiers are treated fairly, with respect, and with a true concern for their goals and accomplishments, they're more likely to find their Army experience a positive one. And more likely to want to continue that experience.

As you know, it takes a lot to develop a good soldier. Time, patience, and effort. But the end result is worth it. Not just for a proud soldier, or the Army, but as a credit to your ability as a leader.

Next time you stand in front of your troops, remember that they're not just in the Army, they are the Army. And they're yours to keep.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

THEY'RE YOURS TO KEEP.

Exercise tests combined arms concept

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

A Combined Arms Live-Fire Exercise is training most soldiers enjoy. The "real life" scenario is as close to actual combat as can be created on Fort Benning and the live fire shows soldiers exactly what their weapons are capable of doing.

The objective of a CALFEX is to encorporate all elements of the combined arms team into a realistic training scenario.

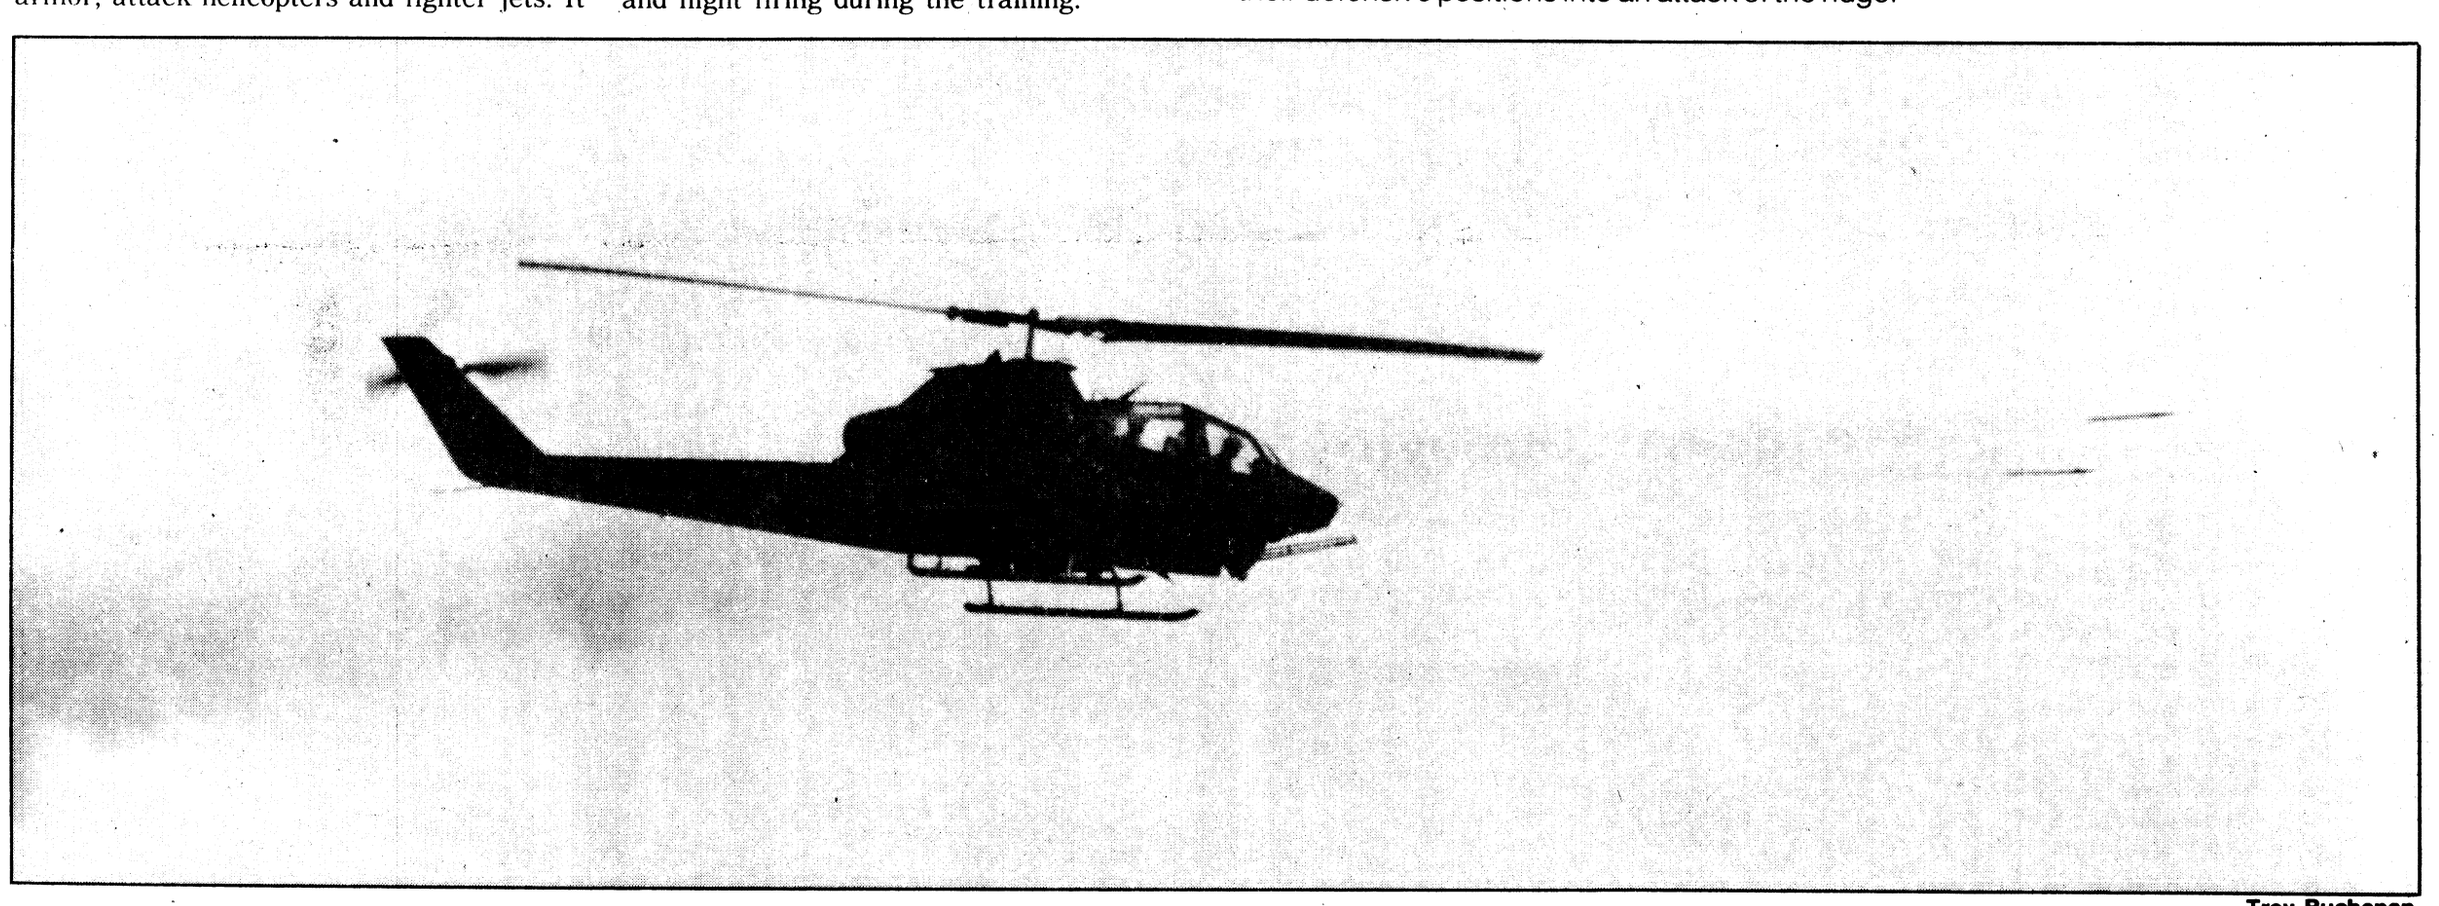
Recently, a combined arms team of mechanized infantry, armor, artillery, mortars and engineers from the 197th Infantry Brigade displayed an impressive show of fire power. The team was also supported by Cobra attack helicopter gunships, scout helicopters and U.S. Air Force Phantom F-4 and Falcon F-16 fighter jets.

"This is the best type of training available on Fort Benning for a (Table of Organization and Equipment) unit," said Capt. Robert C. O'Connor, commander of Company A, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry. "Soldiers get a big thrill out of seeing the effects of artillery, armor, attack helicopters and fighter jets. It then becomes clear what their part is in the combined arms team."

O'Connor explained that the live-fire exercise also helps soldiers understand the need for safety in training. Soldiers must think about where the barrel of their weapon is pointing and see how to safely maneuver with their armor counterparts. Platoon leaders and non-commissioned officers especially benefit, learning to coordinate their movement with the action on the battlefield.

The CALFEX also gave the mechanized infantrymen a chance to stretch their legs as a company team.

"A CALFEX allows soldiers to apply skill-level tasks," said SFC C.A. Schumacher, from the 1-58th operations section. "All the squad and platoon training they do regularly is encorporated into company training with a live shoot."



"The soldiers will also see how each platoon's interlocking fire will cover the enemy's main avenues of approach," Schumacher said.

The combined arms team performed day and night firing during the training.

Teamwork pays off for 197th mechanized soldiers

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Talk about teamwork. During a recent Combined Arms Life Fire Exercise on Fort Benning's Cactus Range, elements of the 197th Infantry Brigade demonstrated exactly how it's done.

The exercise was set up to benefit all elements of the combined arms team.

Three platoons of mechanized infantry were augmented by an M60 tank platoon, an artillery battery, combat engineers and 4.2-inch mortars. No CALFEX would be complete without air support in the form of Cobra attack helicopters, Scout helicopters and U.S. Air Force fighter jets.

A platoon of combat engineers from the 72nd Engineer Company constructed defensive positions for the infantry and armor. The engineers also emplaced a triple strand wire obstacle to challenge the progress of the Brigade's attacking forces.

As the live-fire began, 155mm howitzers from Battery A, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery pelted the Whitson Ridge objective to supress the "enemy" movement.

The 4.2-inch mortar platoon from 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry was augmented with mortarmen from the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry who shared their knowledge and skills.

Also, an M60 tank platoon from Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor moved with the infantry and assisted in breeching the obstacles emplaced by the engineers. The tankers provided overwatch fire while the ground forces maneuvered.

Communication and signaling between the elements of the team proved to be an important part of the training. The elements coordinated their movements to ensure the training proceeded with safety.

Artillery and mortars indicated when their mission was complete with white phosphorous rounds that alerted the air support to begin their attack. The infantry and armor coordinated movements with radio communication, white star cluster flares and smoke grenades. These methods of signaling were encorporated into the training to simulate actual battle.

"This was excellent training for the combined arms team," said 1st Lt. Gregory Clark, from Battery A, 2-10 Field Artillery. "Our rounds were impacting within 900 meters of friendly troops, which could be the situation in actual combat. That helps everyone to think safety during training."

Tips help you stay warm

The RANGER, Fort Lewis, Wash.

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — "Old Man Winter" is just around the corner. Here are some tips for keeping yourself warm during the cold weather and for preparing your home against wintry chills.

● Dress warmly. Even infants can be comfortable at temperatures between 60 and 70 degrees Fahrenheit if they are kept warmly clothed. It also will help if you keep the relative humidity in the room high. Dress in layers (T-shirts, outer shirt, sweater) to trap warm air in. Layers can be removed one at a time for comfort.

● Eat well. Well-balanced meals will help the body produce heat. Especially try raisins, dried fruit and other quick-energy foods.

● Wear a hat. The body loses between 1/2 and 3/4 of its heat through the head. A hat — or heavy scarf — will keep you warmer when outside or on cold, chilly nights (yes, you can even wear a hat to bed).

● Use several blankets, rather than one heavy blanket. The layers help trap the heat in and are warmer than a single, heavy blanket.

● Reduce air leaks. Caulking and weather-stripping materials are available at the family housing self-help store. Make use of these resources to caulk and seal around windows, doors, exhaust fans or whatever cold air can leak into your home. See the self-help store for materials and instructions.

● Keep a "warm room." Close off rooms not used and keep family activities centered in a main area of the house. This takes advantage of heat produced from cooking, lights, washing and playing.

● Report problems promptly. If the power or heat goes out in your home, call the proper authorities and follow their instructions.

NCO's promotion causes some confusion

U.S., Aussie policies differ for career advancements

By Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Recognizing rank and rendering the appropriate courtesy is a basic military skill that most soldiers learn early in their careers.

An instructor with the U.S. Army Infantry School here, however, is making even the basic military customs difficult for some to grasp.

Michael Tugwell, an Australian guest instructor with the Advanced Non-Commissioned Officer Course, was recently promoted in the Australian army to "Warrant Officer Class 2." As he explains it, though, this is equivalent to the grade of E-8 in the American Army. "The title I use is sergeant major," Tugwell said. "That's not to be confused with an American sergeant major, though."

Tugwell explained that in the Australian army, a warrant officer is a senior NCO, much like the U.S. sergeant major.

A veteran of almost 14 years service in the Australian force, Tugwell has been with the Infantry School nearly 15 months and is scheduled to return to Australia in September 1987.

He presently works with the infantry ANCOC and said that since a small-group instruction technique was adopted recently, things are going very well.

Tugwell has been honored as a top instructor in the U.S. Army Infantry School during his tour here.

Edwin H. Burba Jr., Fort Benning commander and Infantry School commandant, was on hand to promote Tugwell Nov. 26. The promotion ceremony was conducted immediately after Tugwell had completed a class for ANCOC students concerning the tactics employed during Military Operations in Urban Terrain. The newly promoted NCO was outfitted in the appropriate military gear.

Ronnie Nelson

Australian sergeant major Michael Tugwell has been confusing some people at Fort Benning with his promotion to the equivalent of an American E-8. He now goes by the title of sergeant major.

VA Q&A

Editor's note: The following are representative questions answered daily by counselors at the Veteran's Administration. Full information is available at any VA office.

Veterans Administration

Q: I have been contacted by a private collection agency regarding my education debt with the VA. Is this collection agency legitimate?

A: The VA has contracted with two separate collection agencies to collect debts which are over one year old. Education debts have been referred to Data Com Systems Corporation and loan guaranty debts have been referred to Corliss Credit Services.

Q: I have been rated totally disabled and I have applied for a waiver of premium on my government life insurance. Should I continue to pay the premium?

A: Yes. You should continue to pay premiums regularly, as they become due, until the VA notifies you of your right to waiver. Since the criterion of total disability for VA compensation and insurance purposes differ, payment of your premiums will prevent a lapse in your policy should your claim be denied.

Q: I understand that as a veteran without a service-related health problem, I may have to pay a co-payment for VA health care, depending on my income. Does VA consider such things as stocks and bonds, in addition to my salary, when making this determination?

A: Yes. When you apply for medical care at a VA medical center, you will be required to complete VA form 10-10F, which requests information on income as well as "net worth," such as stocks, bonds, bank deposits and savings and real estate. Your primary residence is not included, nor is personal property such as one car, clothing and furnishings. You also will be required to provide information on any debts you have. The total amount of your debts will be deducted from your total net worth. Depending on the amount of your income and net worth, you will be placed in either Category A, B or C. If your income plus net worth after your debts have been deducted is greater than $40,000, you will be tentatively placed in Category C and must agree to pay a co-payment for health care. The VA regional office will make the final determination on your financial situation. If the regional office determines that your net worth is a bar to your receiving cost-free health care, you will remain in Category C and will be required to continue paying a deductible for VA health care.

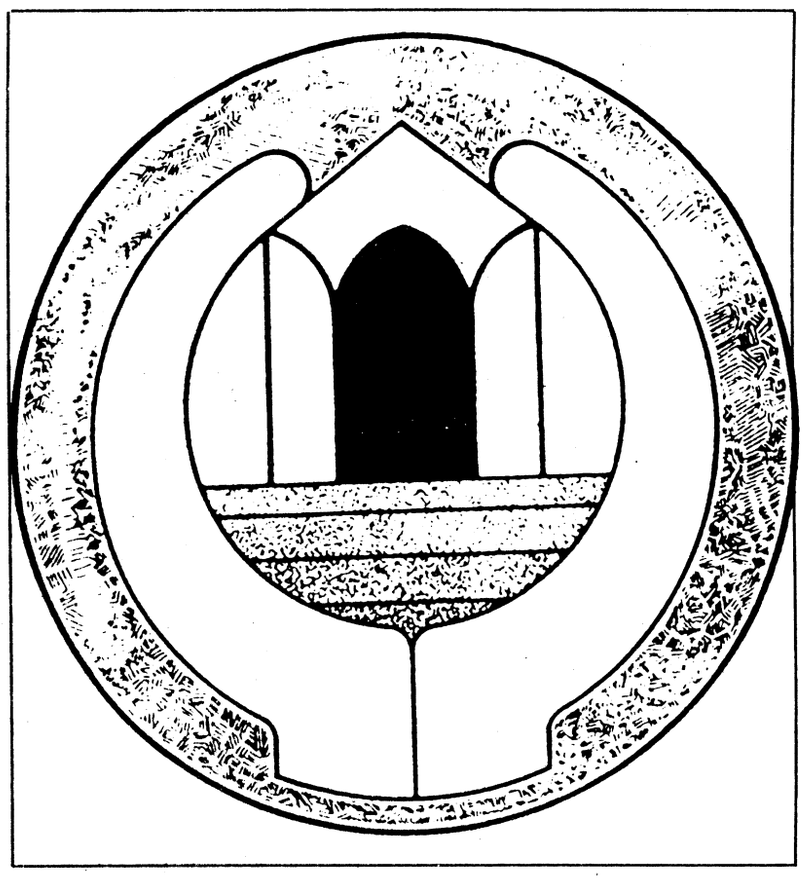
Anniversary commemorates service of chaplain assistants

By Michael Stranz
USAIC Chaplain's Office correspondent

Dec. 28 marked the 77th anniversary of the chaplain assistant Military Occupational Specialty.

The MOS was established by General Orders No. 253, War Department, Dec. 28, 1909, which read: "One enlisted man will be detailed on special duty, by the commanding officer of any organization to which a chaplain is assigned for duty, for the purpose of assisting the chaplain in the performance of his official duties." That meant that the assistants generally cared for the official property, acted as the chaplain's clerk and helped with the educational, religious and entertainment programs.

In order to fully understand the position of a chaplain assistant in the Unit Ministry Team, it is helpful to understand the role of the chaplain assistant in the development of that team throughout the history of the U.S. Army.



The Army Chaplaincy has been providing for the religious needs of the community since pre-revoluntionary war times. In those early days, Army chaplains were sometimes schoolmasters as well as prophets and priests, and it was in this context that the first chaplain's assistant was selected to serve.

In 1866, the Army decided that a soldier found competent to teach common school subjects should be detailed to do so under the auspices of a local chaplain. He was not awarded the title chaplain's assistant, nor was he given that job description but a relationship was established between an enlisted duty and a chaplain's function.

In 1909, the military authorized one enlisted person to be assigned to the chaplain to assist him in the performance of his official duties. He assumed the administrative responsibilities as well as the details and arrangements for religious services. Although high moral character was required, there were no other requisites or generally recognized criteria for performance. The predictable result was that many inadequate and incompetent men were assigned, burdening the chaplain and sullying the image of the chaplain's assistant.

In 1927 and again in 1933, the Chaplaincy made overtures to the Secretary of War to provide a small corps of enlisted assistants. This effort was unsuccessful. Convenience assignment and lack of performance standards were conditions that were essentially unchanged until shortly after World War II. The first "school" was an unofficial effort at San Antonio, Texas, and consisted of selecting clerk-typists for some specialized training in chaplain support subjects. The job had no vocational integrity and men could be assigned to any administrative support requirement in the Army. The maximum grade for service performed in the chaplain support relationship was E-5.

The Korean war gave birth to MOS 718. After almost 100 years of vague existence and misconceptions, there was a job for chaplain assistants. Training was begun at Fort Dix, N.J., and Fort Ord, Calif., with a 40-hour course and an additional week for processing. All trainees were volunteers who had successfully completed nine weeks of basic combat training and nine weeks of clerk-typist training. While a significant step toward professionalism was achieved, the training was not standardized and lacked driver and projectionist schools. The maximum grade authorized was E-7.

In August 1965, during a major revision of Army Regulation 611-201, chaplain assistants were designated as 71M, given a definitive job description and specific skill requirements. A career field as Chaplain Administrators was established for grades E-7 through E-9, and assignment by major faith group (Catholic, Jewish, Protestant) was directed for those in grades E-6 and below. (Today, each 71M is trained in the requirements of the distinctive faith groups and is assigned according to the needs of the Army.)

In 1966, the chief of chaplains urged that the chaplain's assistants schools at Fort Ord and Fort Dix be merged into the United States Army Chaplain Center and School at Fort Hamilton, N.Y. On Sept. 11, 1967, the chaplain school began a new four-week course. Candidates for the MOS completed eight weeks of basic combat training, the self-paced clerk-typist course and drivers training at Fort Dix.

They then proceeded to the chaplain school at Fort Hamilton for three weeks of religious support and one week projectionist training. During 1972 the 71M was implemented into the Non-commissioned Officer Education System, was accorded the same degree of professionalism as other enlisted specialities. During this same period, the way was paved for the acceptance of women into the MOS. Today, women make up a large segment of the Armywide 71M strength.

The Chaplain School was moved from Fort Hamilton to Fort Wadsworth during 1974 and the training course was expanded to eight weeks and included the essential elements of the chaplain assistant program.

Since 1974, constant study and upgrading of the MOS has been carried out. Today, the Chaplain School is at Fort Monmouth, N.J., which has also recently become the home of the Chaplains Corps Regiment.

The chaplain and chaplain assistant comprise the Unit Ministry Team. The UMT is a task-organized, mission-based team designed to accomplish and support the specified religious, spiritual and ethical needs of soldiers in accordance with command responsibilities.

For example, on the AirLand battlefield, at the battalion level, the UMT moves within battalion elements to provide comprehensive religious, moral and spiritual support to soldiers and the unit. A proactive UMT fosters unit cohesion which ultimately encourages high motivation, thorough dedication and effective performance among its members.

The unique mission of the UMT produces team responsibilities that are task generators of dependent, interdependent and independent functions. These functions demand that each participant (chaplain and chaplain assistant) be responsible for the mission of the team, and responsive in such a way that individual tasks are accomplished in support of team functions. For example, the chaplain assistant responds to distressed individuals with a sensitivity to their need for pastoral and priestly care. Responsiveness demands that the chaplain assistant be sensitive to the soldier's needs, and that the chaplain be responsive to the chaplain assistant's referral and insight into the case. Together, they are responsible for the team mission to provide spiritual support.

Dependent tasks are accomplished jointly. For example, the chaplain assistant accompanies the chaplain throughout the area of operations, assembles and disassembles ecclesiastical equipment and assists the chaplain in providing ministry to soldiers experiencing battle fatique.

Independent tasks are not directly supportive of one another. For example, the chaplain assistant manages and maintains equipment and material required to accomplish the UMT's mission. The chaplain performs religious rites, sacraments and ordinances. One does not perform the tasks which are the responsibility of the other.

Interdependent tasks are mutually supportive, but may be performed independently. For example, the chaplain assistant collects information from staff, leaders, briefings and peers about battlefield conditions, morale and religious needs, as well as specific religious support requirements. The chaplain uses this information to develop a comprehensive religious support plan in response to the religious needs of soldiers and units. UMT tasks support the identified command needs. Although the tasks of one member differ from those of the other, together they fulfill the team's responsibilities.

The UMT, as it functions is peacetime garrison operations, comprises specified administrative staff positions. In its educational mission, the UMT may be supplemented by support personnel, such as an organist and educational technician. Collectively, this organization is commonly referred to as the Chaplain's Section.

Please Help A Neighbor's Child In Need!

In Third World countries, hundreds of thousands of children are in desperate need of food, clothing, medical care – the basics of life. These girls and boys are even denied the opportunity to attend school. They are our neighbors in a world that grows smaller every day.

Through CCF, you can sponsor a neighbor's child. The cost is $18 a month – just 60¢ a day – to help a poor child in Asia, Africa or Latin America – a child who has virtually nothing.

The Fort Benning Schools observed Ammo Safety Week in December. Serious emphasis was placed on student safety during the holiday vacation.

The 89th Ordnance Detachment provided materials, films and exhibits for teachers to use with students to promote ammo safety.

Posters, displays and classroom discussions were part of the safety program in each school. A film, "I Wasn't Scared" explained the need for caution and for avoiding items or play areas that might be dangerous.

Faith Middle School's media center exhibited a display of duds, and students viewed and discussed a film called "Duds," which explained the hazards involved.

The ammo safety program is conducted twice a year in the Fort Benning Schools as part of the health and safety program. In December and again prior to summer vacation in May, ammo safety is strongly emphasized.

"We are sensitive to the unique educational needs of children living in a military community," said Suzanne Williams, deputy superintendent. "The ammo safety program is one of the programs that allows us to work with other agencies in the Fort Benning community to ensure the safety and well being of the children we serve."

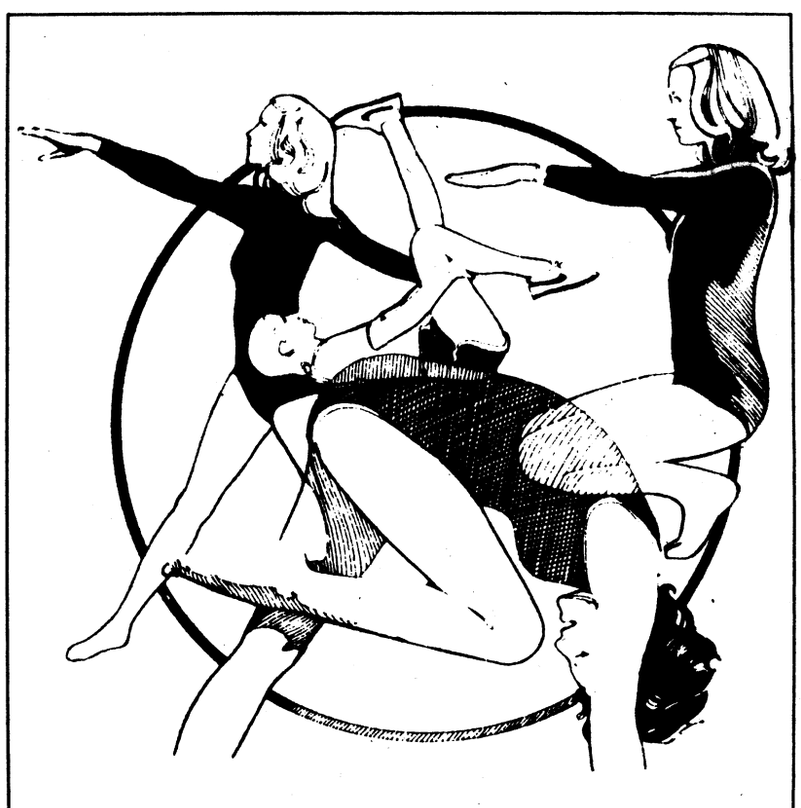
The seven-member staff makes stamped name and U.S. Army tapes. They also sew on all patches authorized for wear in Army Regulation 670-1. The only thing that can't be sewn on is subdued collar rank because it is not an issued item.

There is no limit to the amount of uniforms that can be serviced but, they do not do field uniforms. Old patches should be removed prior to taking the garment in for work.



Another thing that will speed up service is to have all patches separated according to uniform when dropping off an order.

To use this service, take uniforms to Building 243 Kilgore Street, behind the service station complex on main post. The hours are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday. Work is logged in according to unit.

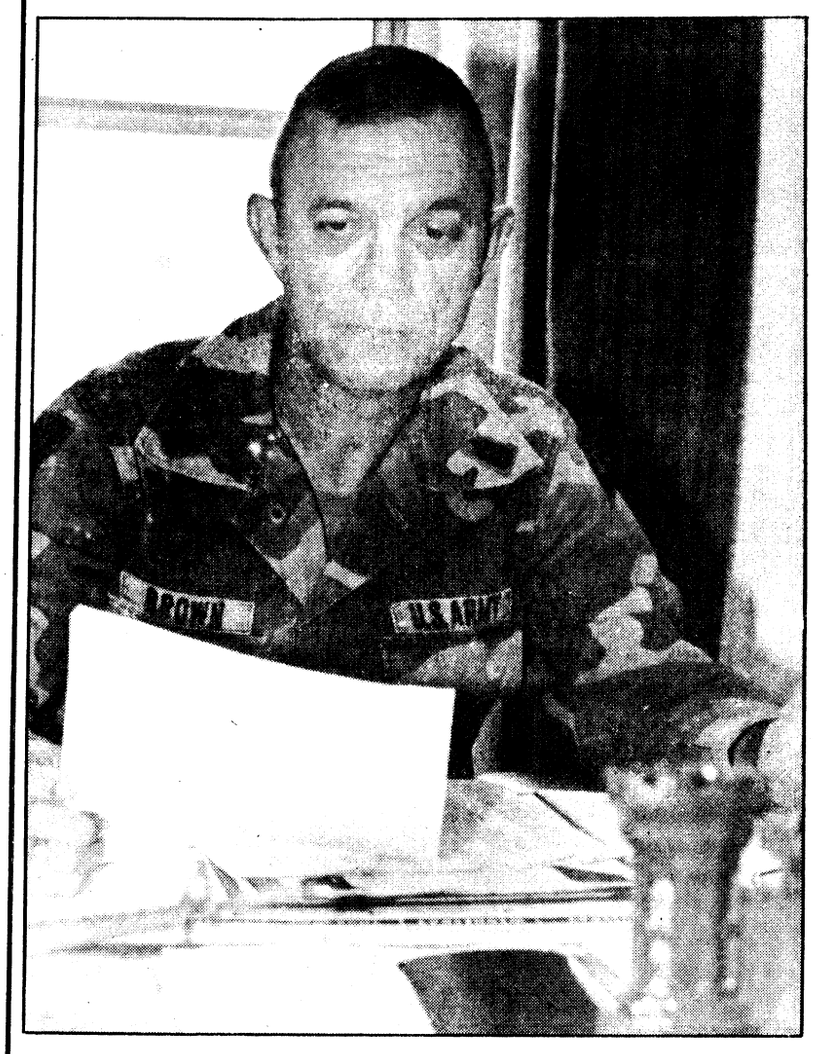
Energy

Fort Benning Energy Office

Recent national surveys reveal a large percentage of adults still do not believe our nation faces serious energy problems in the next 10 to 20 years. This fact is hard to believe, considering the shortages, embargos and four-fold price increases of crude oil experienced since 1973. The complacency that has characterized some energy conservation efforts lately is due mainly to low gasoline prices that resulted from the flooded crude oil market.

This oil glut can be directly attributed to our past energy conservation efforts and the inability of OPEC to limit production and maintain artificially high prices. It now appears that the oil producing countries in the Mideast are reaching some agreement to reverse this situation.

Energy experts have said all along that low fuel prices were temporary and now it appears fuel prices are heading upward again. Wholesale price increases are beginning to reach the consumers.



During the past week most gas stations in our area raised prices from 10 to 20 cents per gallon. Likewise, the cost of heating and air conditioning will increase due to the ripple effect of higher crude oil prices. This should be a reminder that our oil supply is finite and much of it is imported from countries where the United States has little influence.

We must reinforce our conservation effots to ensure the lessons of the past are not repeated. It has worked in the past and with your continued support and cooperation it will continue to see us through.

Dedication key to CSM's success in Army

By Laurie J. Hill
36th Engineer Group correspondent

The young man wipes the sweat from his forehead. Its presence causes constant irritation as it stings his eyes. The heat of molten steel and the fire that melt it provide fuel for a young man's dreams as he makes the decision to pursue something more in life.

CSM James G. Brown: believes dedication is the key to success.

James G. Brown, 47, 36th Engineer Group Command Sergeant Major, leans back in his chair as he thinks back to that day 24 years ago. "Working in a steel mill and driving a truck were just plain unsatisfactory for me," Brown said.

The Army was more fitting to Brown. Today he attributes his success to his sense of dedication over the years.

He remembers the early days of his career: "I was a member of the Army Reserve prior to coming into the regular Army. I have spent almost my whole career working for engineer battalions since then," Brown said.

Talkative and thoughtful at the same time, Brown's small frame is comfortable at his desk in Group headquarters. But he was not always behind a desk and his mind wanders to the places the Army has taken him over the years.

"I had two tours in Germany, two in Korea and one in Vietnam," Brown said.

During Brown's tour in Vietnam he was decorated with the Bronze Star, a Purple Heart and three Air Medals.

"I flew seven days a week. A helicopter would pick me up first thing in the morning. I was responsible for reconnaissance of 110 miles of road. I had to notify my battalion whenever the (Viet Cong) made the road impassable," Brown said.

"I learned two things while in Vietnam. First of all, I learned I could function under fire and pressure. I also learned that I really had to depend on other people. I had to place my confidence in them," he said.

Brown has also been in positions where soldiers had to depend on him. "I trained new recruits as a drill sergeant and was an instructor at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. I was an instructor for three years, teaching map reading from 1969 to 1972. West Point turns out the finest officers in the world. It was really great to be assigned to an institution like that," Brown said.

Brown reemphasizes the importance of dedication and love for the Army. "I live, eat and breathe Army. It's just what you put into it," he said. "If you're going to make the Army a career, you have to make the sacrifices and be prepared to have this dedication," he said.

Brown has made many sacrifices during his 24-year career, including some concerning his family. "I am lucky to have a wife who understands. She has stood by me and is very supportive," Brown said.

"Today the Army is more aware that the family needs to be looked out for. The more supportive the family is the better for the soldier to do his job," Brown said.

Brown believes aspiring command sergeants major need to be dedicated in order to have a successful Army career and he is living proof of his own philosophy.

Diagnostic test helps commanders identify problems

Army News Service

A new leadership diagnostic device, called "unit climate profile," has been standardized for Armywide use via a commander's handbook.

Published as DA pamphlet 600-69, the handbook applies to company commanders in Table of Organization and Equipment-type units who desire to have a scientifically proven way of assessing their enlisted soldier's perceptions and views on what's good and bad about their unit's operation.

"It transcends the traditional ways of obtaining such information," said Lt. Col. James M. Murphy, one of the handbook's authors. From his office with the Army's deputy chief of staff for personnel at the Pentagon.

At the heart of the handbook's process for measuring and evaluating "unit climate factors" is a questionnaire designed around 21 profile areas. These include officer/NCO leadership, promotion policy, quality of training, human relations, unit cohesiveness, sports/social activities, freedom from substance abuse, morale and re-enlistment potential.

Mental fitness fuels marathoners

Editor's note: It's not too late to register to run in the Annual Infantry Marathon or Half Marathon set for Jan. 24. You still have 15 days to get your entry form in. Call 544-4786, 545-7519 or 545-2332 for more information.

By John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

This week we'll explore some of the aspects of fatigue.

Lt. Col. Ken Farmer of 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky., ran the Second Infantry Marathon in 1985 in a very commendable 2:48. He told me he was not really fatigued. In the same race, Maj. Marshall Dressell of Fort Benning finished in 4:45. He told me he became fatigued at 16 miles and had to walk much of the remaining distance.

What was so immense that it stopped one man but so trivial it didn't bother another?

Fatigue, that is, being tired, physiologically spent, in the modern lexicon "wasted."

When muscles do work they function by burning fuel, this is metabolism. Metabolism can be aerobic or anaerobic, the former is very efficient while the latter is accompanied by the accummulation of acid by-products.

As you train for the marathon you are actually training your body, the heart-lung system coupled to the blood and muscle-bone system, to push its aerobic threshold further and further. So you can run longer, faster, etc. But once you out-strip the efficiency of your metabolism to deliver and use oxygen, you shift gears into anaerobic metabolism.

This non-oxygen work is kind of like deficit spending. Toxic acid by-products (lactic-acid) build up. Once these reach an intolerable level the muscle sends a message to the squash saying, "that's it." Not until the blood can whisk away these toxic by-products, and aerobic metabolism return, will fatigue resolve.

So called "hitting the wall" is that severity of fatigue when "anaerobiosis" is no longer tolerable — fuel systems are depleted, maximal "please stop this" messages are bombarding the brain.

It is at this most golden of moments that you reach a fork in your running career:

- You can stop. Swear never to run again. Become an anti-runner. Use your running gear only to look fashionable at the mall.
- You can "manage" your fatigue. Yes, physically you are spent. The only two reserves left are either spiritual fuel or mental fuel. Spiritual fuel is the "feeling" of being able to do something. The Honolulu Marathon has an 85 percent finisher rate because spiritually, people are fueled-up. Mental fuel is the willfulness you develop. Some people call it discipline. Many ultra-marathons are completed on mental toughness, mental fuel.

The crux of elite or olympic training is the perfect blend of physical, spiritual, and mental endurance. For the common man this is an extra-ordinary accomplishment. Have you ever been in a unit that made you strive for this?

To Farmer I say, "Keep polishing your endurance". To Maj. Dressel I say, "Refuel, practice near the limit, push the limit weekly."

All for now. See you on the road.

Local runner gearing up for strong race showing

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

With only 15 days to go, many runners are out in force, prepareing for the grueling marathon course.

The Annual Infantry Marathon, scheduled to kick off Jan. 24 at Doughboy Stadium, will host a variety of runners.

Lloyd McDonald, a local runner, has consisently ranked among the top in his class recently.

It was in last year's Infantry Marathon that McDonald qualified for the Boston Marathon, where he placed 283 in a field of almost 5,000, averaging just over six minutes a mile.

The 32-year-old runner has also run the Marine Corps Marathon in Washington, D.C.

Of all his runs, McDonald rates the Infantry Marathon second only to the Boston.

"The runners of the Infantry run must be prepared both physically and mentally," he said.

"The backside of the course is uphill. From mile three to mile nine, there is a gradual climb," said McDonald."

It's just as hard mentally, in that once you are on the backside, there are no fans to urge you on. Other than the water points, that portion of the course is virtually deserted."

The Infantry Marathon field is expected to be outstanding.

In team competition, Fort Bragg, dominator of the recent Association of the U.S. Army Run in Washington, D.C. already has five teams registered with expectations of five more.

"The run will be loaded with quality type competition," said McDonald. "There is little doubt that the course record will be shattered."

Orienteering enthusiasts can sharpen skills with practice

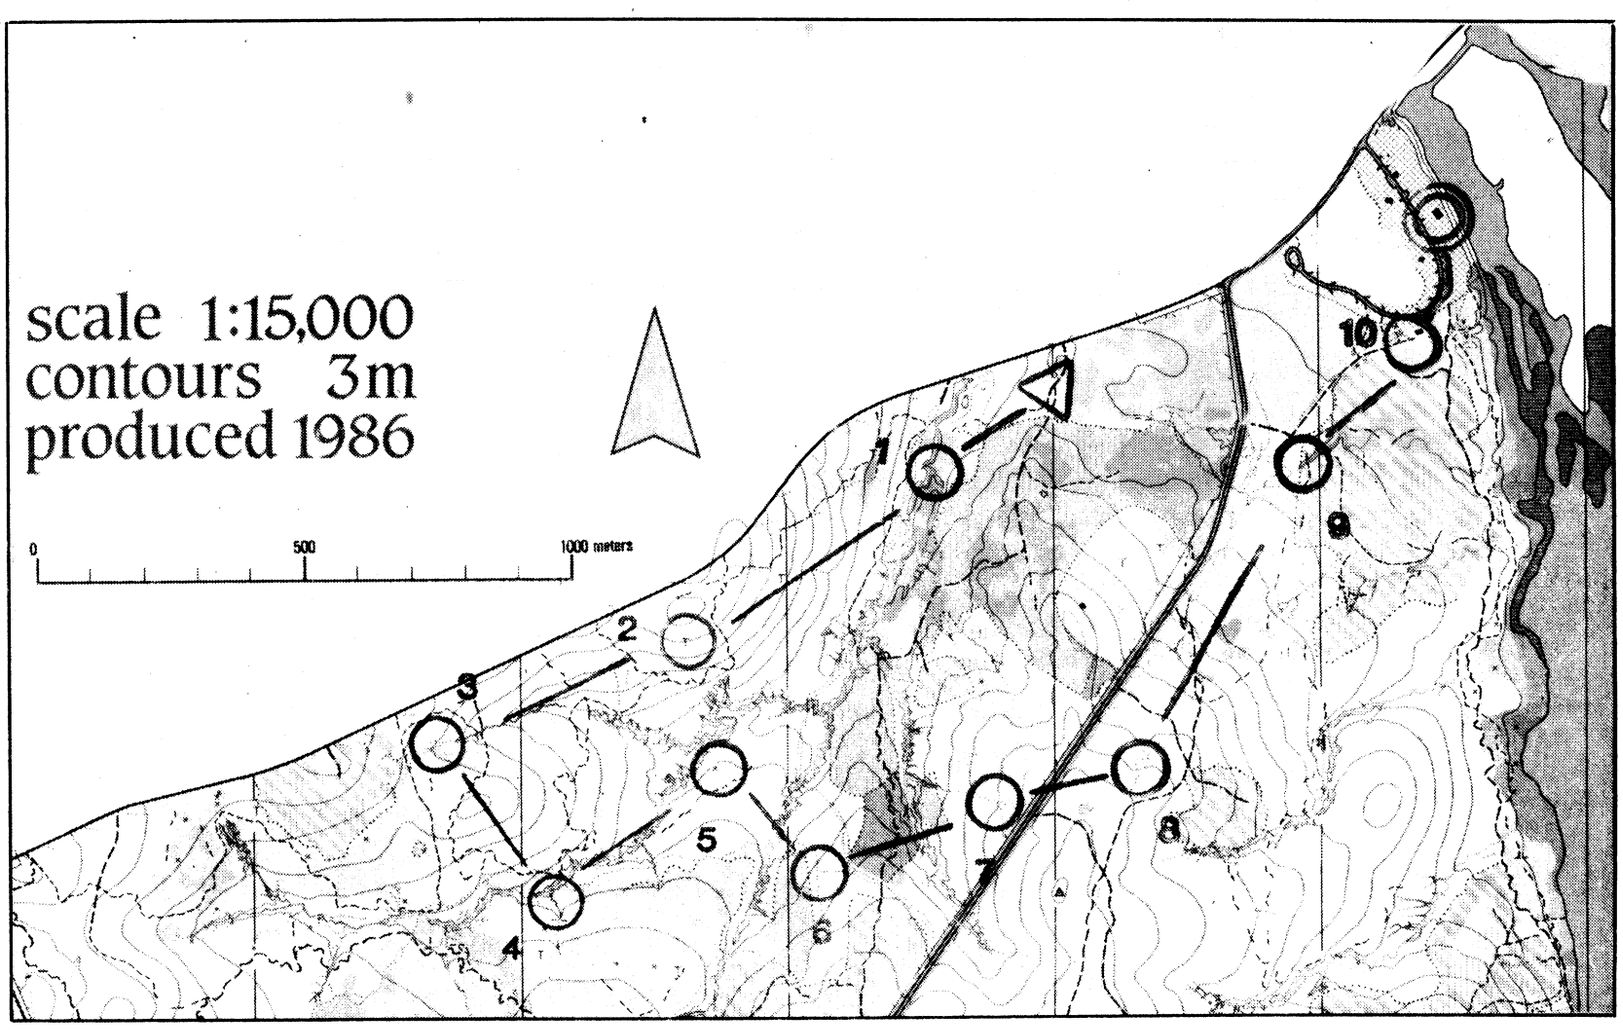
Editor's note: Winnie Stott lives in Auroa, Ontario and is the author of "Arm-chair Orienteering." This article is reprinted from Orienteering North America, June 1986, the official publication of the United States Orienteering Federation.

By Winifred Scott
Reprinted with permission

I have some questions for you. How do you judge distance while Orienteering? Do you pace count? How many paces does it take you to cover 100 meters on relatively flat ground?

Some of you do not pace count and still have an excellent idea of how far you have travelled. That's a fantastic skill. But some of you do not have that inborn sense . . . to you I say: learn how to measure!

Even though I have orienteered for a long time, I believe that I have only a feeble grasp of distance at the best of times. So I rely on pace counting to tell me approximately how far I've travelled.



During the first 18 months that I used pace counting, I'd refer to it throughout the entire race. Nowadays I select when I'm going to use it. One of the key times for me to count each step is from the start to control one (the first feature you're looking for, marked with a flag), whenever I'm on a new map.

You don't have to be in the woods to practice your Orienteering skills. At home, alone or with friends, you can increase your powers of observation by doing some of the following exercises:

Exercise one: (Obtain a 1:15,000 Orienteering map with a pre-printed course.) Allow yourself four seconds to glance at each leg on the course. After you estimate the distance between each pair of controls, quickly write down your estimate. When you've listed the distance for all the legs, measure each one carefully, and record the exact distance. Compare your estimates with the correct answers.

Learning how to judge distance on the map is easy to practice. It won't take you too many legs to become quite accurate. Now . . . all you have to do is get yourself out of your "armchair" and into the forest, so that you can develop the skill of matching the land distance to the map distance.

Exercise two: Look at the map. Carefully draw two seperate route choices you might take for each leg on the course. Next, measure the amount of climb on each route (climb = the total height gain from all of the uphill sections along your route; every contour line that you cross on this map add five meters . . . downhills are ignored in calculations). Now, take out two maps that you have competed on and measure the climb on each leg of your routes. What? You didn't draw your routes on your map after the meet? You should. Finally, examine these two maps and draw in alternate routes. If you can find any that are better than the ones you actually used. Check the climb on the new routes.

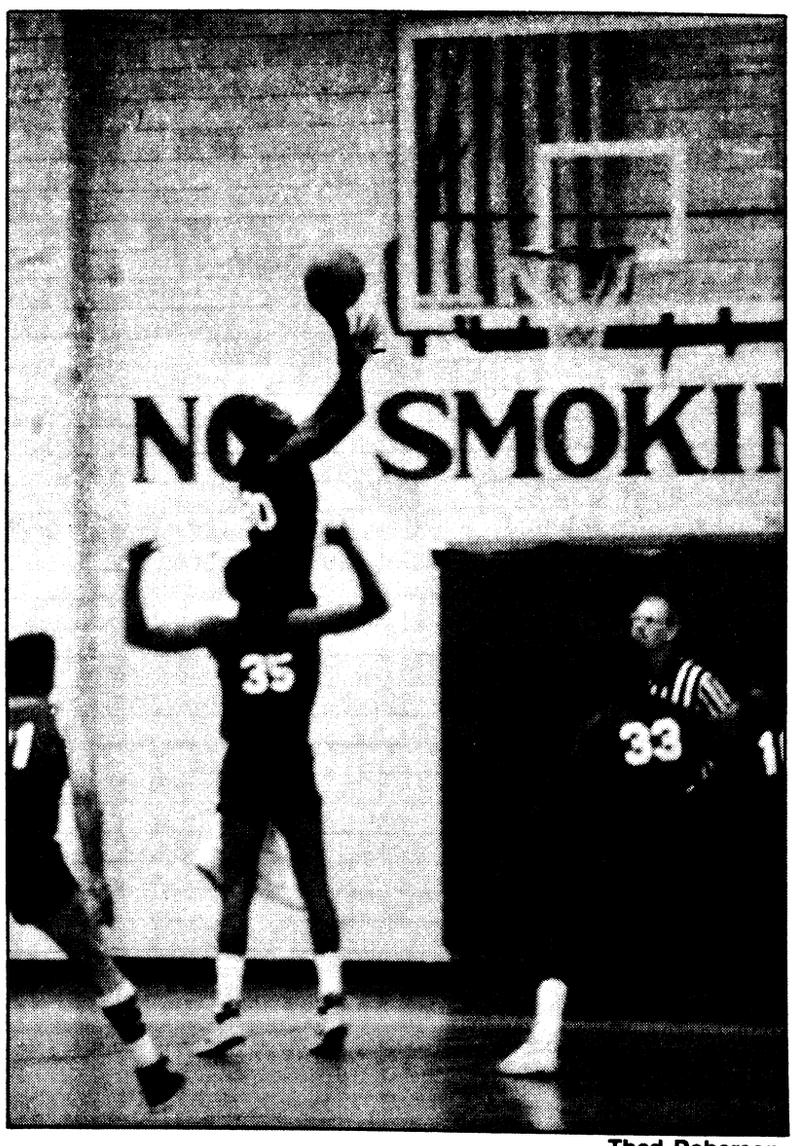
You can become a more skilled orienteer in the forest from your own "armchair" . . . if you practice. Your old maps can help you long after the meet in which you originally used them. Do some of these exercises with afriend!

More calories must be burned to shed pounds, lose weight

By William Slaughter
Randolph Air Force Base, Texas

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — There has never been, and probably never will be, and easy answer to losing weight and maintaining it at a desirable level. The answer has always been simple — to lose weight, more calories must be burned than are taken in.

The "normal" metabolic rate for people who maintain their ideal weight is approximately 15 calories per pound of body weight. This means that a person who weighs 150 pounds can have a daily caloric intake of about 2,250 calories and not gain or lose weight. Unfortunately, many people "turn down" their metabolism through diet and inactivity and do not burn calories at the normal rate.



Calorie reduction has a negative side effect. The body reacts to any significant reduction by going into a "survival" mode. For example, the body tries to protect itself by reducing its metabolic rate. There are endless examples of people who have reduced their food intake to as few as 500 calories a day, and didn't lose weight beyond a certain point.

Recent studies confirm the fact that 85 percent of all overweight people who successfully lose weight through diet regain the weight as soon as they stop dieting. The answer to this problem is very complex and requires a balanced approach involving diet, exercise and behavior modification.

When we run, swim, bike or walk, the heart and lungs work harder and place higher demands on the large muscles of the trunk and legs. The result is that our bodies burn calories to provide energy for the work.

Even when we stop the exercise, our bodies will continue to metabolize at a higher rate for up to eight hours, even during sleep. Therefore, the more frequently we exercise, the higher our average metabolic rate will be during the day.

The long-term result of regular exercise can actually be a significant increase in our metabolic rate. For example, during periods of high intensity training, it is possible to lose weight on a 5,000-calorie-per-day diet. The metabolism rate may increase to more than 33 calories per pound of body weight, and remain at that level for many months.

The referee keeps a close watch as players from 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade battle it out against the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry in Monday night's intramural basketball match up. The 10th Company team emerged victorious, 50-39.

10th Company downs Airborne, in TSB intramural basketball

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

As The School Brigade Basketball League nears tournament play, the second place 10th Company team slammed down another victory, punishing the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry team, 50-39 at Briant Wells Field House Monday.

The game, which usually opens with the jump ball, took an interesting and fortelling turn. As the players took center court, the referee's first call of the night was a technical foul on both teams for "dunking."

With players at opposite goals, the 10th Company took a 1-0 lead before the opening jump.

Just as unusual, were the first period substitutions made by 10th Company Coach, Jasper McCoy.

Only minutes had ticked off the clock, when McCoy pulled his entire starting line-up, which had quickly rallied to a 9-2 lead, and substituted his bench.

"In the first couple of minutes, I wanted to run the team man-to-man, full court to see how the Airborne team was going to play us," said McCoy.

Rick Mikcolasczyk hit a three-pointer to keep things alive, as the charging Airborne team began to close the gap.

When the 507th went ahead by four, Terry Cameron and Darrell Whitney, the 10th Company's high scorers with 13 points, returned to spark an offensive attack.

Whitney, who was three of three at the line, ignited his team to a 24-20 half time lead.

In the second half the 10th Company began to strech out, with Anthony McKinnon hitting three of four at the line, but tallying numerous assists.

"Teams had begun to key up on McKinnon in the past," said Coach McCoy. "So, we decided to spread the points around and show a different look to the defense."

But it was the Airborne's Washington who had the most points, the most fouls and the most freethrows.

Washington was 60 percent at the line in 10 attempts, hitting 16 game points.

It would not be enough, though, as Cameron brought the second half smoke, dealing out a 50-39 defeat.

Nutrition vital in fitness plan

By Michelle Henderson
Walter Reed Army Medical Center

When one thinks nutrition, one imagines a picture of a person eating all those foods that don't taste very well.

But nutrition is much more than this. It not only plays a large part in one's physical well being, but affect the mental attitude as well.

Experts are saying that nutrition is important to any overall total fitness program. Many believe you can't have a fitness program without having a nutritional program.

One thing to note about nutrition is that food alone cannot make one healthy but good eating habits can.

Experts are saying in order to maintain the healthiest level of nutritional fitness, a portion of each of the seven basic food groups should be consumed every day.

Those seven food groups include: milk and dairy products, meat and protein-rich foods, citrus fruits or substitutes, dark green or leafy vegetables, other fruits and vegetables, bread and cereals, and fats.

It's difficult to cover all these food groups in one meal alone.

On the other hand, the consumption of too much of one or more of these groups measured in calories can produce fat.

Adults need at least two servings of dairy products daily. Many adults don't like milk and therefore, lack this daily intake. Eating more cheese or cooking with milk may take care of this need. Beef and pork are higher in fat and calories and are also more expensive than fish or poultry. Those who are beef or pork lovers should try to select the leanest meats possible.

Fresh fruits and vegetables are generally low in fat and are good fillers to help round out a meal. Canned fruits and vegetables may lose some of its nutritional value in storage but probably not enough to matter.

Nutrition watchers should pay close attention to the bread and cereal groups because they can contain high contents of sugar.

To be safe, stick with starchy foods like plain breads and rolls, noodles, rice, pasta and cereals. These foods are low in fat and sugar.

Fats are important for transporting fat-soluable vitamins and providing essential fatty acid.

The typical American diet has far too much fat. There are two types of fats — polyunsaturated and saturated fat.

Saturated fats, found in butter, bacon and mayonnaise are the ones to watch since too much can cause health disorders. Six small nuts, one teaspoon of oil in food, and one teaspoon of margarine respect a full daily serving from the fat group. This makes it easy to see why Americans consume too much fat.

A good reducing program should provide over half its calories from carbohydrate sources (bread, cereal, fruit, vegetables, milk).

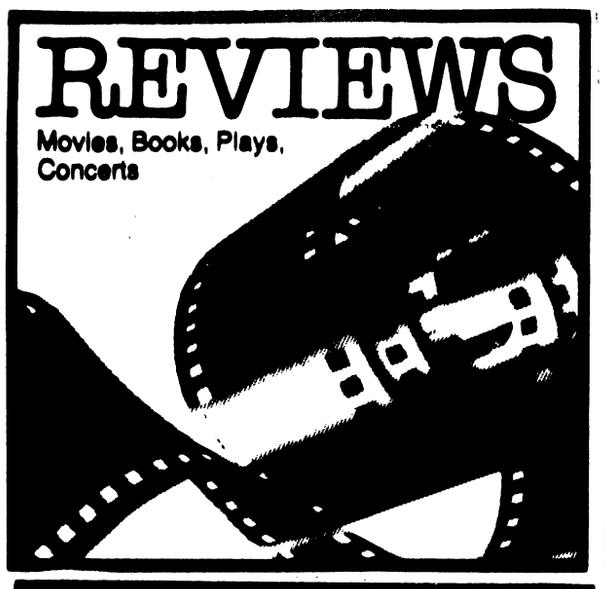
No more than 30 percent of its calories should come from the fat group. In a 1,500-calorie program, this would represent 50 grams. A good weight reducing program should also encourage the use of fresh fruits and vegetables to help meet individual requirements for vitamins and minerals. Diet supplements should be avoided when used in the place of foods.

Since a well-balanced nutritional diet seems to be critical in producing maximum fitness, the following guideline demonstrates how to practice good nutrition when trying to keep in shape:

- Keep food intake regular and do not miss meals.
- Forget the fads; get back to basic eating.
- Select meals from the seven food groups but pick foods that you enjoy.
- Use carbobydrates as a quick efficient primary energy source. Carbohydrates digest faster than protein or fat and leave the stomach sooner. Choose carbohydrates from the grain and fruit-vegetable groups.
- Eat enough to maintain body weight and avoid sporadic weight changes.

Athletes should remember that water is the most important nutrient for physically active individuals. It should not be restricted.

Sometimes drinking water during an event or practice causes cramps and slows the individual down.



On the contrary, water is the experts' first choice for fluid replacement. If it is withheld before competitionor workouts, very serious dehydration, heatstroke, or organ damage may result. The best recommendation to maintaining physical and nutritional fitness is to eat well-balanced meals, and of course, drink up!

'60 Minutes' crew needs portfolio back

A brown, leather, notebook-sized carrying case was lost by the "60 Minutes" crew during Tuesday's visit to Fort Benning.

Although the leather portfolio had no identifying names or symbols, its contents of notes and documents will identify that it belongs to CBS.

If anyone finds the case, please contact the Public Affairs Office immediately at 545-2211 or 545-2212.

Fort Benning hosts '60 Minutes'

By Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

They won't be leaving for New York any time soon, but soldiers from Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, were in the television spotlight Tuesday.

CBS news magazine co-anchor, Morley Safer, and his "60 Minutes" crew were here to look at the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle.

The 29th soldiers staged a live-fire exercise on Redcloud Range in the morning, pitting the BIFV against the M113 Armored Personnel Carrier.

In an impressive capabilities display, the Bradley out-shot, out-manuevered and out-ran the M113 as the two tackled an obstacle course, of sorts, that was equipped with log walls, ditches, dirt berms and hay bales.

While Safer watched the action attentively from his VIP perch between Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. and post Public Affairs Officer Lt. Col. Tony Caggiano, the cameraman and sound technician were busy capturing it all on film.

Wrapping up nearly two hours at Redcloud, Safer did an on-camera interview with Burba and members of a Bradley crew. "Just try to pretend there are no officers here," Safer joked with the soldiers as Burba and a number of his staff officers stood in the background observing.

Pvt. 2 Wayne Combs, a Bradley driver, told Safer he likes the BIFV. "It's really manueverable and easy to drive," he said.

After all of the "60 Minutes" crew had everything they needed at Redcloud, the large entourage headed to Engineer Landing on the Chattahoochee River. The crowd stood entranced while four Bradleys went for a "dip," dispelling a common misconception that the vehicle has a problem "swimming."

Once again, Burba fielded Safer's questions about the vehicle's capabilities saying emphatically, "As a soldier and a user of the Bradley, I think it's great." The general's praise was echoed by the troops from Co. D who work with the Bradley daily. SFC Jeff Pelot, a platoon sergeant, told Safer he had never had any problems "swimming" the BIFV. The only problem he had ever heard of was the result of "crew error," he said.

After all of the "flash," the crew had lunch at the Officers' Club and visited the 29th's Bradley trainer before heading back to the "Big Apple."

Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. shows Morley Safer the targets the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle annihilated at a live-fire exercise on Redcloud Range Tuesday.

Some soldiers getting out of Army early

Army News Service

An involuntary "early out" for active duty enlisted soldiers will begin in February in keeping with budgetary constraints for Fiscal Year 1987.

The fiscal 1987 early transition program for enlisted soldiers will permit eligible soldiers to leave active duty up to two months before their current "expiration of term of service."

The program will permit retirement-eligible soldiers to retire voluntarily up to two months early, said John Slone, personnel policy integrator for enlisted separations in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at The Pentagon.

Under the fiscal 1987 early transition program, soldiers (except those eligible for a selective re-enlistment bonus) who are affected will be released or reenlisted as soon as possible, said Slone, but not later than July 31.

Slone referred to certain rules that affect those recently promoted or expecting to be promoted in 1987:

Soldiers who meet the announced cut-off scores for promotion to sergeant during the period Feb. 1 to Sept. 1, 1987 will be promoted without regard to the three months service remaining obligation.

Soldiers who meet the announced cut-off scores for promotion to staff sergeant will continue to be required to extend or reenlist to comply with the 12-month service remaining obligation. Soldiers with early transition dates under this program who later meet the cut-off scores for promotion to staff sergeant will be permitted to extend or reenlist to accept the promotion.

Soldiers promoted to staff sergent between March 1 and Oct. 1, 1986 will be released on early transition dates even though they do not complete their obligated service. Soldiers promoted to sergeant in December 1986 and January 1987 will also be released on early transition dates.

Slone said Army career counselors will encourage eligible soldiers affected by the program to apply for service with either the Army National Guard or the U.S. Army Reserve.

He added that administrative instructions, along with reporting requirements of the Major Army Commands, are still under development by the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va. "They will be forwarded to the field as soon as they are developed," Slone said.

Becuase of the involuntary nature of this "early out" measure, Slone said, The Army is striving to make the transition pleasant.

National celebration for King helps recall his lasting influence

On Jan. 19, Fort Benning will celebrate the anniversary of the birthday of the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. This day is set aside to commemorate not only the memory of a great American, but also to remind us of the lasting influence that Dr. King has had on American society. It is a time to reflect on the past and to rededicate ourselves to the future, to the principles for which Dr. King lived and died . . . a dream of dignity for all.

In recognition of Dr. King's many lasting contributions to our great country, a commemorative service will be in Marshall Auditorium at 9:30 a.m., Jan. 19. All members of the Fort Benning and Columbus communities are encouraged to participate in this service.

Edwin H. Burba Jr.
Major General, USA
Commanding

All DoD workers encouraged to take part in special activities

The Second National Legal Observance of the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., will be celebrated Monday, Jan. 19, 1987.

The Martin Luther King Jr. Federal Holiday Commission has designated Jan. 14 to 19, 1987, as "King Week '86." The National theme designated by the Commission for this year's observance is "Living The Dream: Let Freedom Ring!"

During "King Week '87," the Department of Defense has the opportunity to demonstrate our commitment to our nation's tradition of respect for individual human rights and dignity.

I believe it is fitting to commemorate Dr. King's birthday with programs, activities and special observances at DoD installations worldwide. It would also be appropriate to release personnel for activities in local communities and to use command information media to take note of Dr. King's birthday.

The Honorable Chapman B. Cox, Assistant Secretary of Defense (Force Management and Personnel), has been designated to provide policy oversight for all DoD activities in support of this holiday observance. He has established a Military Involvement Committee to assist him in carrying out this responsibility and to report to me the results of DoD efforts.

In addition, I am pleased to inform you that my office will be holding its second annual Pentagon breakfast in honor of Dr. King.

I look forward to your full support to observe the birthday of this great American.

Caspar Weinberger
Secretary of Defense

Safer looks ordinary, still inspires awe

Dawn Kilpatrick

Other than having a recognizable face, he looks fairly ordinary.

He wears work boots, brown corduroy slacks, a nondescript button-down shirt and a tan jacket.

His hair is touched with gray and his face shows the nearly 20 years spent in his profession.

Probably the one thing that makes him stand out is his commanding voice.

In person, one-on-one, Morley Safer sounds just like he does on television every Sunday night as he comes into the homes of millions as a co-anchor on the CBS news magazine, "60 Minutes."

Safer and his four-man crew were here Tuesday gathering information for a piece concerning the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle. And I'm not ashamed to admit, I was somewhat in awe of meeting the well-known broadcast journalist.

Hovering near him for most of the day, snapping his picture with various people, I finally saw the opportunity to move in and actually speak to him.

He had just finished a cup of coffee and seemed to be puzzling over what to do with the empty Styrofoam cup. I picked up on this as he started to tear little pieces off and put them inside the portion of the cup that was still intact.

Always the courteous one, I casually sauntered up and asked if I could take the cup for him. (Really, I caught a glimpse of his actions out of the corner of my eye because I didn't want to be too obvious as I stared at him all day. When I saw this chance, I darted over to him before anyone else could get there.) Well, yes I could take it. Thank you," he said.

Realizing this would probably be my only opportunity to actually speak to Morley Safer, I decided to take advantage of the situation. I garnered all of the courage available and attempted to launch into a couple of questions of my own.

Suddenly, it seemed my mind had gone blank. The whole morning I had been mentally rehearsing what I wanted to ask him if I had a chance to talk to him.

So, here I was, face-to-face with a real-life national news person and all I could come up with was "What do you think of the Bradley?" I was so busy berating myself for such an obviously inexperienced question, I almost didn't hear his answer. It wouldn't have mattered if I had missed it, though. All he said was he has a policy never to talk about stories while he is still working on them.

Trying again, I was able to pose another insightful query: "Mr. Safer, how do you feel about the VIP treatment you've been getting here?" He said, "The people at Fort Benning have been real helpful. They've been easy to work with. I wish the rest of the military was so cooperative when we try to do stories."

Feeling I finally had control of myself, I dared another probe: "Do you know when this will be on the show?" With a "No, I'm sorry, we don't," Safer was out of time and had to get back to his interviews.

Standing on the bank of the Chattahoochee River, notebook in hand, cameras hanging around my neck, I watched him walk away. I was a little surprised I had actually talked with him.

Later in the day, members of the local news media had a chance to speak with Safer as a group and I couldn't help feel a bit like the Cheshire Cat as they competed with each other to ask their questions.

I had really talked to Morley Safer. The experience was certainly the highlight of my tour here. Putting things into perspective, it probably ranks right up there with meeting the president of Honduras at Palmerola Air Base in 1984.

And, yes, I did get Safer's autograph, which will be suitably framed for hanging on my office wall.

Soviets troops learn loyalty, discipline early

by Michael Biddle
The Pentagram

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — The values of Russian soldiers are much like ours with a few key differences, according to two Soviet military experts. Both agree that the effect on the Soviets' ability to wage war leads to one indisputable conclusion for American soldiers: "Never underestimate the enemy."

Dr. Ilana Kass, a professor of National Security in the Department of Military Strategy at the National War College, Fort McNair, D.C., said, "We know what they're taught, but we don't know how much sinks in.

"So basically you have to deal with the area of what kind of values they're trying to impart to their soldiers."

She lisfs them as:

- Discipline and obedience — "Carry out orders regardless . . . don't ask questions. Probably the top of the list."
- Courage, self-sacrifice — "The individual is not important; what is important is the greater good."
- Self-sufficiency — "In other words, don't wait for the supplies. Just press on."
- Hatred — "Probably the key difference from what we teach our soldiers. Hate the motherland's enemies. That is beyond any universal soldierly values."

Kass said another key difference between American and Soviet military values is when they are taught and for how long.

"They don't wait until basic training to start teaching these values; they begin in kindergarten and continue throughout the education system — what is called military patriotic education," she said.

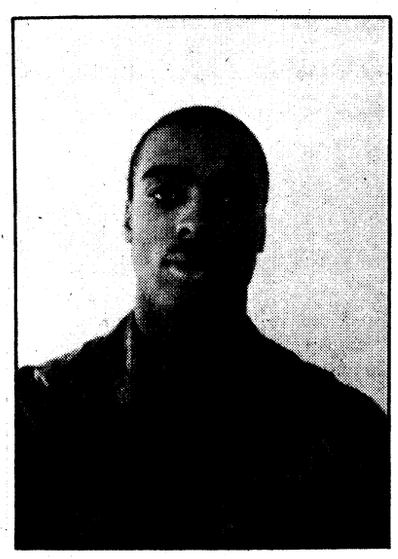
The hatred is reinforced by the controlled media. "In the Soviet view, patriotism is impossible without hatred of your enemy," Kass said. "It's the perception the homeland is under a constant threat from the bad guy from the outside. Therefore, you must always be ready. It's not paranoia; it's vigilance."

Patriotism is a potent tool used in another deadly combination, according to Alexander Ushakov, a language instructor at the Foreign Service Institute in Rosslyn, Va.

"The most dangerous indoctrination is the mixing of patriotism and Marxist-Leninism," said Ushakov, who should know something about Soviet military values. Two-and-a-half years ago, he escaped from the Soviet Union by a three-week climb through the treacherous Caucasus Mountains into Turkey with the secret police hot on his trail. Before that, Ushaakov, the author of four books, had served as a Soviet army soldier in a strategic rocket unit, later as an artillery officer, and still later as a naval associate professor of social forecasting and psychology. Some of his studies conflicted with the party line, and he was sentenced by the KGB to 12 years in Siberia. Shortly after, he was among the less than one percent who succeed in escaping.

Ushakov personally experienced the early indoctrination, the mixing of patriotism and communist ideology. So did his daughter.

"One day she told me (while she was in kindergarten), 'My grandfather is Lenin.' I corrected her. 'Excuse me, Julia, your grandfather is Andrei Romanovitch Ushakov.'"



Ushakov, as a military instructor, tried to separate these two concepts for his students. He said the young soldiers, who are drafted for two-year stints at 18, accept the party line because "you can't separate such abstractions as patriotism and Leninism at that age."

On the other hand, officers were much more skeptical of the system. "The highest level of officers is included in the No-

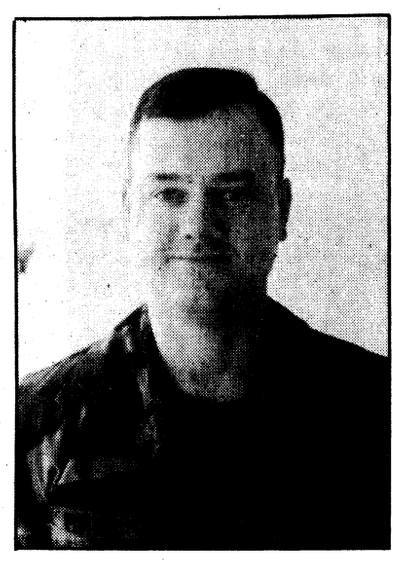
SP4 Ronie Winningham, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade — "He made a lot of people think in terms they normally wouldn't have and have a better attitude toward the different races."



SP4 Stephanie Dunn, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "He made a lot of people open their eyes to desegregation. In turn, it made a lot of people take another view and realize that skin color doesn't matter, all people have abilities."

SSgt. Everett Fowler, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade — "He believed in the peaceful way and showed people you could demonstrate successfully if you were non-violent. Equal opportunity also stemmed from the efforts of Dr. King."

Capt. Gary Cavender, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "He made the whole country realize that under the constitution, equal opportunity pertains to all races. Also, I think he made the most drastic change in America without a revolution."

SSgt. James Purvis, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "I think he helped the country get better united instead of fighting amongst one another."

Installation Tax Officer answers most frequently asked questions

By Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

It's tax time again and officials at the Fort Benning Staff Judge Advocate's Office want people to be aware of the programs available for people filing their 1986 income tax returns.

According to Capt. Jessica L. Kole, the installation tax officer, the following are the most frequently asked questions and answers during the tax season.

Q. What tax programs are available?

A. The tax program used on Fort Benning is the Tax Assistance Program. This command-directed program is designed to provide federal and state income tax preparation assistance to soldiers and their families.

The program is run with the cooperation of the Internal Revenue Service under its Voluntary Income Tax Assistor Program. The program consists of the following components:

- Unit Tax Assistors Programs. Because of the large number of soldiers who need assistance in filing income tax returns, it is impossible for the legal assistance office to help prepare all returns.

Accordingly, assistance to soldiers will be primarily from designated unit tax assistors. One or more tax assistors will be appointed for each company-size unit. These soldiers have completed a one-week course with state and federal officials in tax preparation.

Unit tax assistors will help troops in their unit prepare returns.

- Volunteer Tax Assistors Program. This program is for family members and other eligible retirees.

Army Community Services will identfy volunteers who are willing to donate their time during the months of January through April to provide income tax assistance.

The volunteers are trained with the unit tax advisors. Tax preparation assistance will be offered at the ACS office.

This program is offered for family members whose spouse is unable to visit their unit tax assistor and for retired military. To make an appointment for assistance call 545-5516.

Q. Now that I know about the programs where do I get the tax forms?

A. State and federal tax forms will be available Jan. 27 in Building 5, Room 5, the JAG office. Signs will lead to the room.

Q. To get a jump on things can I send in my Leave and Earnings Statement instead of waiting for my form W-2 to be sent to me?

A. Do not use your LES to file for returns. The ONLY official document the IRS will accept is the W-2. If you send in the LES, you'll probably get your money back but it will be held up because the IRS must verify information with the Finance Center.

Q. Now that I have all the forms what do I do next?

A. Address any questions or problems to your unit tax officer. In addition, you are encouraged to bring the packet to him and he will check it for accuracy.

Your tax assistor will try to answer your questions, but if there is a problem he can't help you with, he will set up an appointment at the JAG office for you. However, the JAG office is not taking appointment unless they are through your unit tax advisor.

In addition, your unit advisor will encourage you to send your packet through him to the IRS. This way your packet will first be checked by your advisor then sent to the JAG office where they check it and forward it on to Atlanta where it is checked again. Your packet is double-checked before it reaches the IRS. This is done also to ensure that the VITA program is working properly.

This system is for people receiving a refund only. If you must pay taxes then you're encouraged to send the packet in yourself.

Q. Is there a fee for this service?

A. No, the assistance is free to military, family members and retirees.

Q. Why should I go to a VITA site instead of my local IRS office?

A. VITA sites are more convenient because during the filing season they are set up in handy locations. Also, some taxpayers simply feel more comfortable dealing with volunteers in their own neighborhood.

Q. What should I bring with me when I go to a VITA center?

A. You should bring with you this year's tax package, wage and earnings statements, (Form W-2) which you received from employer, interest statements you received from banks (Form 1099), copy of last year's tax return, if available, and any other relevant information concerning your income and expenses.

Early

Here is the schedule of affected dates for 1987:

Current ETS	Transition Date
Feb. 1-28	Feb. 1-10
March 1-31	Feb. 11-20
April 1-30	Feb. 21-28
May 1-Sept. 30	Two months prior to current ETS

The exemptions to the early transition program include: members of certain COHORT units; soldiers who will not complete 24 months of active service by their early transition dates; soldiers pending involuntary separation under other provisions of AR 635-200 or pending trial by court-martial.

Soldiers holding the following Military Occupational Specialities are also exempt: Parachute Rigger—43E (all skill levels); Medical NCO—91820; Practical Nurse—91C20; X-Ray Specialist—91P10; Veterinary Food Inspection Specialist—91R10; Preventive Medicine Specialist—91S10; Ear, Nose, and Throat Specialist—91D10/20; Respiratory Specialist—91V10; Eye Specialist—91Y10; Medical Laboratory Specialist—92810; Field Artillery Meteorological Crewmember—93F10; Food Service Specialist—94B (all skill levels); Electronic Warfare/Signal Intelligence Voice Interceptor—986 (all skill levels).

Soldiers in specialties authorized an SRB desiring to reenlist at original ETS in order to avoid losing their SRB entitlements are exempt as well.

Those for whom early transition would cause an extreme hardship to themselves or an immediate family member can be granted exceptions; although the hardship conditions must be so severe that they could not reasonably be expected to be experienced by other soldiers affected by this program. (Approval authority for this exemption is the general court-martial convening authority or the first general officer in the chain-of-command, whichever is the lower grade. Approval authority may also grant delay in release date to alleviate extreme hardship.)

Soldiers who are not medically cleared for separation by the early transition date will not have to get out.

The policy does not apply to soldiers under investigation for military offenses that are likely to result in the soldier being tried by court-martial or involuntary separated under AR 635-200.

Soldiers serving in rehabilitative programs who desire to complete such program for the purpose of becoming eligible for reenlistment may stay in.

Others that the program does not apply to are:
Soldiers assigned to the national training center opposition force;

Soldiers assigned overseas tours of 15 months or less (except Korea);

Soldiers assigned to units that are on temporary-duty-overseas. An example would be where the unit is OCONUS in TDY status;

Participants in the Veterans Education Assistance Program who will not have contributed the maximum of $2,700, and who, for financial reasons, may not contribute the difference in lump sum by the early transition date.

Auto tags can now be purchased on post

By Ann M. McDonald
The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning personnel who are residents of Chattahoochee County may now register their cars at the 1st National Bank on main post. The office is on the second floor of the bank at the Hall Street side.

"This is a big switch from last year as residents had to drive to Cusseta and wait hours to get tags for their cars," said Marilyn Hauck, a county registrar.

Tags are being sold under a staggered system this year. Persons with last names beginning with letters A through D should buy their tags in January. Names E-K should buy their tags in February, with L-R in March and S-Z in April.

According to Mrs. Hauck, it isn't necessary to wait until the month designated for you, but it is recommended.

The tax is figured on the value of the car but non-residents only pay an $8 fee. If you are a non-resident, an ad valorem tax exemption form is necessary and can be picked up at the Staff Judge Advocate's office.

The Chattahoochee County Tax Commissioner is mailing out applications to all people who registered with them last year. Upon receipt, you can mail your application to the commission with a check or money order and a tag will be sent to you. However, the commission is not responsible for tags lost in the mail, Mrs. Hauck said.

The deadline for renewing Georgia tags is May 1 and penalties will be imposed after that date.

The Fort Benning Tag Office is open from 8 a.m. to noon and 1 to 5 p.m. daily. For more information, call 689-8734.

36th Engineer Group

Soldiers from the 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer group recently particpated in a Squad Leader Training Program to better prepare them for promotion.

"The course originated through the battalion commander to train specialists and sergeants promotable for leadership positions," said 1st Sgt. William T. Beatty of Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment.

Soldiers took to the classroom last week where Beatty taught them the standards and techniques of inspections.

The soldiers also learned about policy letters from company to post levels and the reasons for those letters.

According to Beatty, the soldiers also learned about uniform policy, promotion policy, Article 15s, chapter actions and bars to reenlistment.

The one-day class also included information on counseling proce dures and requirements as well as safety counseling and supervisor responsibilities.

"Many times junior non-commissioned officers are not in a position to go out and research this information, but it's something they should know," Beatty said.

"While giving the class I found that the information I put out corrected a lot of misgivings the soldiers had," Beatty added.

Sgt. Arlene H. Watford, legal NCOIC for 67th Maintenance Battalion said, "I think the course is great. We learned a lot as far as how to deal with the soldiers. It's something that should be taught more."

Beatty said he plans another class for his company in February and a number of classes will be taught by first sergeants throughout the battalion. — Laurie J. Hill, The Bayonet staff writer.

Three courses kick off the 1987 training schedule this month at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Twenty-nine non-commissioned officers representing Bolivia, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Paraguay and Peru make up the Non-commissioned Officer Leadership Course that started Tuesday.

The 14-week course teaches NCOs individual leadership techniques. This course emphasizes tactical use of rifle platoons and squads, patrolling operations in an internal defense and development environment and familiarization with basic infantry weapons.

Thirty Salvadoran company-grade officers started Wednesday in the 11-week Combat Officer Course.

The course is designed specifically for Salvadoran officers and prepares them for duty as company commanders or as battalion-level staff officers.

Fourteen countries, including the U.S., will be represented later this month as 49 senior officers commence training in the 45-week Command and General Staff Course.

Countries and students reprsented will be Argentina - one, Bolivia - four, Colombia - three, the Dominican Republic - five, Ecuador - one, El Salvador - three, Guatemala - three, Honduras - one, Panama - four, Paraguay - one, Peru - two, Uruguay - one, Venezuela 12 and eight from the U.S.

Local Air Force detachment aces command inspection

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Excellence is something commanders strive for. When excellence is recognized by an inspecting higher headquarters, a commander and his troops have a reason to be proud.

Recently, Detachment 4, 507th Tactical Air Control Wing, achieved excellence on an inspection by the Headquarters, Tactical Air Command Inspector General, from Langley Air Force Base, Virginia.

"To make excellent on this type of inspection is very difficult," said Maj. Steven Sheffer, Detachment commander. "To do this we had to exceed the standards they had set up for us, and we did."

During the inspection, many aspects of the Detachment were looked at and evaluated. Leadership, administration and job performance, were just a few of the areas that the nine-man team from Virginia checked. During their seven-day stay, they also examined vehicles, facilities and the Detachment's ability to work closely with the Army.

The Detachment is the Air Force liaison to the 197th Infanty Brigade. When the Brigade trains in the field, close air support is acquired through the liaison office.

"We received a lot of praise on how well we are working with the Army," said Sheffer. "Our mission here is ultimately to support the Army."

During a recent Combined Arms Live-Fire Exercise, conducted by the Brigade, fast moving Falcon F-16 fighter jets and Thunderbolt A-10 aircraft, were employed into the air-to-ground attack role.

"We work and play with the Brigade," Sheffer said. "We are not just attched to the Army; we feel that we are part of the 197th."

The liaison office works in conjunction with the Brigade operations section and responds to the Brigade commander's needs.

Quiz helps soldiers recognize, prevent cold-weather injuries

Compiled By Laurie Viggiano
Training and Doctrine Command

FORT MONROE, VA. (TNS)—As a soldier you train in all climates, preparing to fight, survive, and win anywhere in the world. One of the most potentially dangerous climates for training or combat is cold weather.

Cold is an insidious enemy. Depending on other weather conditions, temperatures as high as 50 degrees Fahrenheit can injure or even kill. Cold can also defeat you psychologically as well as physically.

The good news is that proper equipment and knowledge of cold-weather operations can prevent training losses and combat casualties. Try this quiz with a friend and find out how much you both know about cold-weather problems and prevention.

☐ Tight clothing offers less protection than loose clothing because it restricts blood circulation and reduces the thin, warm air layer between skin and clothing that provides extra insulation and helps keep the skin dry.

DID YOU KNOW . . . Loose, layered clothing is best for all cold-weather activities, whether work-related or recreational. Layers should be removed to prevent overheating when you're active, and added as you cool down while inactive.

☐ Why must you drink plenty of water in cold weather?

☐ You don't feel as thirsty in the cold as in the heat, but your body loses water (dehydrates) just as fast, through perspiration and kidney function. Water loss is sometimes less noticeable in cold weather, especially with the new clothing system that wisks away sweat.

DID YOU KNOW . . . By the time you feel thirsty in cold weather, you're already dehydrated. You need to drink a minimum of 3.5 quarts of water a day, especially if you're physically active.

☐ Plain water is best for preventing dehydration, but hot drinks and juices are mostly water and may provide extra nutrition or calories too. You should not drink alcohol, since it hinders circulation and causes the body to lose heat faster.

DID YOU KNOW . . . Drinking too much coffee can be dangerous in cold weather because it passes through your body very quickly and causes increased water loss through urination. In moderate amounts it provides warmth and a psychological boost, plus needed extra calories if you use sugar.

☐ Most of what you eat or drink is used by your body to produce heat for survival. Only a small portion of these calories is left over to produce energy for physical work. To meet both heat and energy needs, you must take in more "fuel" than you normally would.

DID YOU KNOW . . . Soldiers working hard in cold weather need about 4,000 calories a day to meet extra energy requirements for this harsh environment.

☐ Why is it dangerous to smoke in cold weather?

☐ In addition to other harmful effects of smoking, nicotine narrows blood vessels. This decreases the blood supply to the skin and increases the chances of tissue damage from frostbite or other cold-weather hazards.

DID YOU KNOW . . . Besides drinking alcohol and smoking, other factors that increase the likelihood of cold injury are fatigue, negative attitude and poor physical condition.

☐ Wind chill is a measure of temperature that takes into account both air temperature and wind speed.

DID YOU KNOW . . . Your body loses that heat eight times faster in a five-mile-an-hour wind than in still air.

☐ Air movement has an "ultra-cooling" effect that carries away body heat faster. This feels good in hot weather but can be very dangerous in the cold, when your body has to work harder to keep you warm even in windless conditions.

DID YOU KNOW . . . Wind chill's "ultra-cooling" effect occurs not only when air moves past you but also when you move through the air—for example, while running, skiing, or riding in an open vehicle.

☐ Wetness — especially combined with wind — can worsen or cause many serious cold-weather injuries such as hypothermia, trech foot and frostbite.

DID YOU KNOW . . . Wet clothing loses up to 90 percent of its insulating power.

☐ Frostbite is a "freezing" type of cold injury that occurs when water inside and between a person's skin, muscle or nerve cells gets so cold it actually changes into ice crystals, causing tissue damage.

☐ What are the differences between, and the symptoms of, superficial frostbite and deep frostbite?

☐ Superficial frostbite (usually from short exposure; skin only is affected) symptoms include: tingling, stinging, aching or cramping in the affected area; reddened skin that later turns pale gray or waxy white; powdery flaking of skin; blisters forming 24-30 hours after exposure.

☐ Deep frostbite (usually from long exposure; may damage muscle or even nerve tissue) symptoms include: loss of feeling and a pale yellow or waxy look to the injured skin; a solid or "wooden" feeling to the skin when touched; pain when the area thaws; blisters occurring 12-36 hours after thawing.

☐ Do not try to treat deep frostbite; get medical attention immediately. For superficial frostbite, get the victim into warm shelter. Warm frostbitten areas with body heat and dry clothing. Improve circulation by exercise. Get medical treatment.

☐ Hypothermia (dangerously low body temperature) is a "non-freezing" type of cold injury that occurs when the body cannot produce heat faster than cold, wind, and wetness carry it away. Hypothermia can be fatal even in temperatures as high as 50-60 degrees, especially if the body is exposed to wind or water.

Teen-age pregnancy rate reflects 'new morality'

More than 500,000 babies born to underage mothers every year

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

It's a national epidemic. More than 500,000 babies are born to teen-age mothers in the United States every year.

Experts say it reflects the new morality brought on by the sexual revolution of the 1970s. According to Dr. David Elkind, a Tufts University researcher, 50 percent of teen-age girls today are sexually active, compared to 10 percent in 1960. He estimates that more than a quarter of today's 14-year-old girls will become pregnant before they're 20.

Elkind said that most teenagers are looking for intimacy and affection, which their families are not providing.

"If teen-agers feel secure, loved and appreciated at home, they are not likely to seek comfort and support outside the home in the form of sexual intimacy," he wrote in an article in the January issue of "Parent's" magazine.

Peggy Locascio, a counselor at Social Work Service, Martin Army Community Hospital, said most of the teen girls she sees have low self-esteem.

"They have a low view of themselves due to a poor family life," Mrs. Locascio said. "The relationship with a boyfriend makes the girls feel important and good about themselves."

Mixed messages

In today's society, teens get mixed messages about sex and don't always make a responsible decision about it, Mrs. Locasio explained. "They're at an immature age, having difficulty with discipline and impulse control, and feeling the peer pressure," she said.

According to a study published in the July 1986 "AGOC Technical Bulletin," about half of all teenagers do not use contraceptives during first intercourse, and 20 percent of teen pregnancies occur within one month after the initiation of sexual activity, and 50 percent within the first six months.

The study further stated that half of all sexually active teenage girls wait from six months to one year before seeking medical advice, and then want a pregnancy test.

Increased risks

According to Dr. Ehrman H. Eldridge Jr., an obstetrician and gynecologist in the MACH OB/GYN Clinic, early medical care is crucial to the outcome of the pregnancy.

"The major risk once the teen-ager becomes pregnant is nutritional," he said. "The thing we worry about most with teens, especially under age 15, is that the baby will not grow to proper weight."

Any baby that is born weighing less than 5½ pounds is at a higher risk of having problems or even dying.

According to Eldridge, part of the problem is ignorance. He said many teen-agers don't know the symptoms of pregnancy, and this makes it even more important that seek regular medical care once they become sexually active.

Eldridge said that any teenager who is sexually active should see a doctor yearly for a gynelogical examination. They also need to know the symptoms of pregnancy. These include nausea, irritability, missed periods, frequent urination, heartburn, breast tenderness or any combination of the above. "Many of these are flu symptoms and can be misinterpreted as such," he said. "That's why sexually active teen-agers need to be examined by a doctor."

Limited options

Pregnant teen-agers have important decisions to make, and early diagnosis of the pregnancy is crucial to making them, especially from a medical standpoint.

"They have three alternatives," Mrs. Locascio said. "They can continue the pregnancy and keep the child; terminate the pregnancy or have the baby and put it up for adoption."

Eldridge said if teen-agers elect to terminate the pregnancy, the procedure itself is harder on them the longer they wait.

"The risk of death to a woman terminating a pregnancy in the first three months is one in 100,000, while it is one in 10,000 after the 16th week of pregnancy," he said.

Since a recent study showed that 47 percent of teen-agers choose to terminate their pregnancies, it is important that they make the decision early enough to do so safely, he said.

Other risks exist for teen-agers who choose to carry the baby to term. "They're at a higher risk for developing high blood pressure and toxemia," he said.

The ACOG study also pointed out that "of those adolescent women who have a first premarital pregnancy, 15 percent are likely to conceive again within a year."

Prevention vital

Eldridge said the best thing for teen-agers is to avoid getting pregnant by using some form of birth control regularly.

"I think one reason teen-agers don't use birth control is they fear complications," he said. "They need to know that any form of contraception is safer than becoming pregnant."

According to a MACH spokeswoman, any teen can be seen in the OB/GYN Clinic and the Women's Health Clinic for matters of birth control, pregnancy or venereal disease, without parental consent. She is considered an adult when receiving treatment for these conditions.

For an appointment, call the OB/GYN Clinic at 544-1209, or the Women's Health Clinic at 545-5803.

Editor's note: Next week, pregnant teen-agers give their side of the story, plus, what services are available for them on post.

Kindergarten designed to stimulate

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools correspondent

Kindergarten — an important year in a child's school life — provides a wealth of experiences for the child to build upon. Academics are an important component of that year, but socialization and development of fine and gross motor skills are equally important.

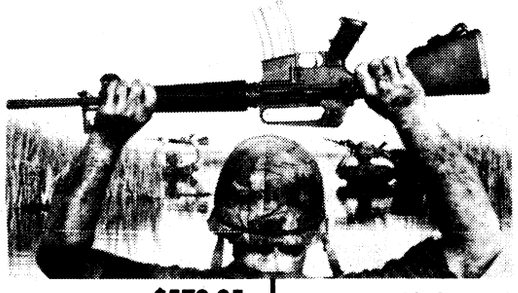
The Fort Benning kindergarten curriculum is designed to provide varied instruction in language development, mathematics, science, social studies and physical education.

Individualization is stressed because children enter kindergarten with varying levels of readiness and previous exposure to all areas of the curriculum.

While the atmosphere is relaxed, the child engages in structured purposeful activities each day. The teacher and her aide provide learning centers with varieties of activities designed to build specific skills.

Using scissors, holding crayons and later pencils, using manipulatives and games, tieing strings, pouring water on sand into different sized containers are only a few of the activities that develop perceptual and motor skills essential in later school years.

Story time, music, discussion, role playing, art, listening activities, computers, cooking activities, field trips and visits from resource people in the community provide an active hands-on learning environment.



Kindergarten children also have scheduled classes taught by the school art, music and physical education teachers.

"Ours is a very child-oriented program," says Velinda Hickey, kindergarten teacher at McBride School. "It is an active program, but we have a well balanced day. There are busy times, but there are also times for free play and for rest."

This year the length of the school day was extended by one

Ask the 'judge'

Editor's note: The following are questions the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be considered a substitute for advice from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

Legal Assistance

Q. I am thinking about buying a used car. What are some of the legal considerations?

A. A used car can be a bargain, but you should know some facts before you buy your car. Only about half of all used cars sold by dealers come with a written warranty.

Any used car sold without a warranty is sold "as is." That means that if you have problems with the car after you buy it, you must pay for any needed repairs yourself. The dealer has no further responsibility for the car once the sale is complete and you drive off the lot. If you buy your car from a private individual, you are probably buying the car "as is."

If there is a warranty, make sure you get it in writing. Do not rely on oral promises, which are difficult, if not impossible, to enforce.

The warranty may be a full or limited type. This means that the dealer will pay for all or part of the total repair bill for covered systems that fail during the warranty period.

Read the warranty carefully. There may be a deductible charge; it may only cover parts, and not labor, or cover only limited repairs.

To avoid potential problems you may want to purchase the car contingent upon an inspection by an independent mechanic. That way, you will have a chance to find out about the mechanical condition of the car before you buy it.

If you are going to buy a used car and want to speak to an attorney about legal aspects of the sale, call the legal assistance office at 545-3281 or 545-3282.

Q: In Georgia, am I liable if my child injures another person, or if he commits acts of vandalism?

A: You are liable for the acts of your child if:

- You command your child to do an act, or if your child is helping you in a business you run, and your child negligently performs the act causing an injury.
- If your child is operating a vehicle (car, boat, airplane) for a family purpose, and negligently causes an injury.
- If you, the parent, are negligent in providing or supervising the child's use of a dangerous object (like a rifle, power saw, bb gun, bow and arrow, etc.), and the child's use of that object causes injury.
- If your child commits "willful or malicious acts" (like vandalism) you may be liable for up to $5,000 worth of damages and court costs, even if you didn't command him to commit the acts, and even if you weren't negligent.

Program lets officers request early outs

Certain categories of troops excluded from taking part

Army News Service

A few Army officers will be leaving active duty earlier than they expected as part of the Officer Early Transition Program announced Jan. 7.

The program is the result of the Army's desire to meet Congressionally mandated officer end strength and budgetary constraints.

Officers eligible for the early transition fall into two categories, according to Maj. Everett Madden, personnel staff officer in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at The Pentagon.

The first category, Madden said, includes both lieutenants and captains, of the regular and other than regular army, who entered active duty before Oct. 1, 1985, and whose current active duty service obligation is not the result of an ROTC scholarship, attendance at U.S. Military Academy (or other service academy), fully funded graduate school or flight school.

The second category includes RA and OTRA officers, as well those in the Army Medical Department (less MC and DC), who will have less than two years remaining and whose current service obligation is the result of an ROTC scholarship, USMA attendance, fully funded graduate school or flight school.

Because of statutory constraints, OTRA officers who attended a fully funded graduate school must have served a period of active duty at least as long as the period of participation in the fully funded education program.

Officers participating in the early transition program will leave active duty between Feb. 1 and Sept. 1, 1987.

Officers in the first category desiring to take part in the program whose current ADSO expires on or after Oct. 1, 1988, must be willing to serve in a USAR troop program unit or Army National Guard unit for the period of their remaining ADSO.

In-service recruiters or officer counselors will assist these officers in obtaining a tentative unit assignment in the reserve components.

Officers whose ADSO expires before Oct. 1, 1988, are not required but are encouraged to seek an assignment to an RC unit. Officers in the following branches and functional area 18 are being excluded from participation in the program: military intelligence, ordnance, quartermaster, signal and transportation.

OTRA officers must submit a request for release from active duty under Army Regulation 635-100. RA officers must submit an unqualified resignation under AR 635-120 and accept a Reserve appointment as a precondition to transition.

Madden noted that most of the requests from officers in the first category are expected to be approved. However, Army headquarters may deny requests on a case-by-case basis, as dictated by the needs of the service, to include statutory or regulatory requirements.

For officers in the second category, the requests also will be considered case by case. If approved for transition, officers must serve in a USAR troop program unit or Army National Guard unit for the period of their remaining ADSO or for one year, whichever is longer.

Officers selected who have previously signed written agreements providing for reimbursement of federal funds spent on their participation in certain advanced education programs are not exempted from repaying the government.

For example, a senior ROTC scholarship recipient entering a civilian institution in the academic year 1981 or 1982, and who graduated from college in June 1985, incurred a four-year ADSO. If this officer requests early transition effective June 1987, then he would be required to reimburse the government for that portion of the cost of his education not satisfied by active duty service.

The priority for approval of requests submitted under the program will begin with those officers desiring the earliest transition dates.

The processing of applications will be on a "first come-first served" basis within each category.

Officers interested in the program, Madden said, should immediately write directly to the Commander, MILPERCEN, Attn: DAPC-OPP-M, 200 Stoval St., Alexandra, VA 22332-0400. The letter should include the officer's name, rank SSN and branch, desired transition date, current mailing address, address upon release, and city and state of anticipated RC unit of assignement (if known).

Madden said the letter is for the Army's planning purposes only, and does not change the requirement for officers to submit requests for resignation or REFRAD.

Requests for resignation of (RA officers) or REFRAD (OTRA officers) must be forwarded through channels to Army headquarters. Officers should coordinate with their servicing Military Personnel Office at the earliest possible date, Madden added.

Counseling requirements established by AR 635-120 (RA officers) and AR 635-100 (OTRA officers) are waived for officers submitting requests.

For officers in the JAGC competitive category, information on the program will be provided at a later date, according to Madden.

The program is closed to offiers in the chaplain, medical corps and dental corps competitive categories.

Fellowships available for post graduate work

Military Personnel Center

An official at the Military Personnel Center is looking for applicants for the Senior Army Fellows Program by the end of January. The fellowships are open to colonels and promotable lieutenant colonels who are graduates of senior service colleges.

"This is the premier post-senior service college professional development opportunity for a colonel," said Col. Fred Wong, chief of the Colonels' Division Personnel Assignments Branch. "It's a tremendous opportunity for an officer to study issues of national importance."

The selected officers study in association with individuals and agencies, in and out of government, who are actively involved in and influencing the formulation and execution of U.S. foreign and domestic policies.

The Army selects four senior fellows each year—one for each of the four specific programs. Army colonels have had fellowships at the Harvard Center for International Affairs in Cambridge, Mass., since 1958. The Department of State Executive Seminar in National and International Affairs in Arlington, Va., has had fellows since 1963, the Council on Foreign Relations in New York City since 1966, and the Brookings Institution in Washington, D.C., since 1970.

"An applicant for these fellowships should have a professional background and experience in national security affairs, international relations and analysis of defense issues," Wong said.

Other requirements include having: a graduate degree; an exceptional record in key staff or command assignments; proven leadership ability and potential; and ability for public speaking, independent research and writing.

Interested officers may volunteer for the fellowships. A panel of general officers selects the candidates from nominations by MILPERCEN, and recommends them to the Chief of Staff of the Army, who makes the final decision.

The four fellowships, which incur three-year service obligations, begin in August each year and end the following June. The deadline is fast approaching for 1987-88 program applications.

MILPERCEN needs to have those applications by the end of this month. The selection process will begin in February, with announcement of the four fellows in late April.

"I'll be glad to talk to any colonel in the Army about this program," Wong said. "My number is autovon 221-7860, commercial 202-325-7860."

197th gets new computer system

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

It's not easy to return from a restful holiday leave and charge head-on into a jumble of computer terms, formats and codes.

However, a group of 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers recently completed a 1½-week familiarization course concerning a new tool that is promising to make their jobs easier and more productive.

The 197th Infantry Brigade Data Center recently received a shipment of 46-Zenith Data Systems; personal computers that mark another step forward in the Brigade's automation.

The personal computers will soon be installed in the Brigade headquarters and staff sections, each battalion headquarters and separate companies, and the Brigade's personnel offices.

"This is an administrative computer system that will be compatable with all agencies on Fort Benning," said Capt. Debra Godwin, from the Brigade Data Center. "It provides a much larger memory to increase storage capabilities, and it will definitely increase the productivity of the soldiers who use it."

During the "train-the-trainers" class, more than 40 Brigade soldiers learned many of the system's possible uses.

For example, soldiers can enter mailing lists, status reports, disposition forms and correspondence, and maintain a record of this information in the system's memory.

At the touch of a few keys of the keyboard, the operator can review stored data, make changes or get a quick copy of any particular form or letter.

"It will take a few months for the Brigade to realize the full potential and power of this system," explained Godwin.

Soldiers who work with these computers are encouraged to develop their own formats to suit their job requirements. Brigade Data Center personnel will be available to assist soldiers in learning and developing the many possible uses for this equipment.

Mechanics unsung heroes

Work is complex, often dangerous

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Working on the M1 tank in the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor motor pool are many mechanics whose daily work goes unnoticed by most soldiers.

The M1 turret mechanic uses more than 40 different manuals to work on the tank. Also, sophisticated electronic equipment must be utilized to maintain the highly specialized machine.

"The manuals are broken down into an easily understood format," explained SSgt. Victor Morales, chief of the Company C maintenance team. "That way it is easier to work on the tanks and find any problems much more effectively."

The Charlie Company tank team uses an Armored Personnel Carrier to follow the tanks around on the battlefield, a shop truck that contains all the tools and special parts and equipment needed for tank maintenance, and a jeep for the team chief. These vehicles enable the maintenance soldiers to be on the job immediately when a tank in battle requires maintenance.

"When there is a problem with one of the tanks, we evaluate the problem before we decide what we need," said Morales. "Once we know what the problem is, and how bad it is, we can start to repair it."

There are eight mechanics on the team who keep the Battalion's 14 M1 tanks fit for combat.

"Different uses of the tanks require different checks," explained Morales. "The turbine engine is much quicker and quieter than other tanks. It's a lot more complicated than working on any other tank."

The M1 tanks requires a four-man crew: a gunner, loader, driver and tank commander. When the tank is in the motor pool and crew performs weekly checks on their vehicle. However, the tank turret mechanic must perform the most important checks on the tank.

These checks involve the range location systems, computer components, firing mechanisms and the movement of the turret itself.

"Our job is to maintain and keep the tanks ready for action," said PFC Gilbert Leos, a tank turret mechanic from Headquarters Company, 2-69th.

"We use different tests to detect any faults in the tank's systems."

"A lot of work goes into the maintenance of the M1 tank," explained Sgt. Joe Sherman, also a tank turret mechanic. "Such sophisticated computer and tracking equipment calls for highly trained soldiers to maintain it."

"Being a tank turret mechanic can be a hazardous job," Leos said. "You have to really watch what you are doing while the computer is performing a systems self-test. It sometimes can cause the main gun to jump around and it can strike you if you are in the way."

The mechanics are currently running pre-gunnery checks for gunnery qualifications coming up soon.

Engineers hone skills working on construction projects

Laurie J. Hill

Soldiers from Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, shovel dirt onto a bucketloader to clear an area for a cement pad.

By Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

Engineers from the 43rd Engineer Battalion were active this week doing what engineers do best — building.

Soldiers from Companies C and D spent the week honing their construction skills with projects in the Fort Benning area.

For instance, soldiers from Company D began a clean-up of Hobo Alley on Lumpkin Road that included clearing the area along the railroad tracks.

"We've been hauling off brush and dead trees. Mainly we've been clearing 100 feet away from the tracks for the safety zone. We're trying to get the brush low enough so it can be mowed (with a lawn mower) and the trains can see if anyone is on the tracks," said Company D's 1st Sgt. Robert L. Anderson.

The Hobo Alley project, which continues throughout January, is such a big project that soldiers from the 67th Maintenance Battalion, the 34th Medical Battalion and the 10th Mountain Division all helped out.

"We even have a stretch of Hobo Alley that the 197th Infantry Brigade is clearing out. It's quite a big project," said Anderson.

Another project for the engineers is at the National Infantry Museum. "Our soldiers were tasked with pouring cement pads for the weapons that are on display in front of the museum," said 1st Lt. Dominic Macaluso, Company C's executive officer.

"They're pouring seven concrete pads and we'll be putting four armored vehicles and three artillery pieces on them for display," said Dick Grube, Museum director.

"I think they're doing a very professional job and certainly one that supports the needs of the museum," Grube added.

Co. C is also doing renovations at the 36th Engineer Group Chapel.

This project enabled the soldiers to practice their wiring and indoor building techniques on a room inside the Sightseeing Road Chapel. The work included putting in a new ceiling, a new wall and additional wiring.

"We should be done by the end of the week. So far everything is going great," said SSgt. James Woodruff, noncommissioned officer in charge of the project.

All projects should be finished by February.

hour and 15 minutes in response to the full day kindergarten requirement outlined in the Georgia Quality Basic Education Act. Teachers say, for the most part, that children adjusted easily to the length of the day, and the longer day enables teachers to enrich the kindergarten curriculum with even more learning experiences.

"I find that the extended day provides time to present a broader view of topics," says Nadine Norton, kindergarten teacher at Patch School. "For example, when my class studied the Mayflower we had more time for role plays, language experiences and other activities that foster student creativity."

Yes, kindergarten is a wonderful year—for growing, for learning, for exploring. In the Fort Benning Schools, the kindergarten experience provides the foundation for future school success.

Benning's diverse missions make it seem like small city

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Combined, the University of Georgia and Auburn's student population is 40,000. The U.S. Army Infantry School and Army Training Center train 38,000 annually.

Albany, Ga., has 64,000 residents. Fort Benning has almost 60,000.

Fort Benning is a school, a city, a strategic base for combat-ready units and home to thousands. Fort Benning is, in a word, diverse.

The primary mission and reason for Fort Benning's existance is to serve as a training center and service school for the Army's largest combat arm, the infantry.

At Fort Benning, the infantrymen of today and the leaders of tomorrow are schooled as soldiers.

Providing basic soldier and infantry skills to new inductees is the Army Training Center. Officers attend the basic and advanced courses and noncommissioned officers are instructed within the NCO Education System. Specialized courses, ranging from Airborne School to Pathfinder and Ranger Schools to mortar courses, are also part of the school's curriculum, to name only a few. All of these courses combine to produce and sustain the consummate infantry soldier, ready to win on any battlefield.

Teaching and influencing an international body of soldiers, the U.S. Army School of the Americas and the Allied Student Training Detachment afford foreign allied soldiers the opportunity for infantry training on the post also.

Through constant revision and refinement, tactics and strategy developed and tested here affects and impacts on infantry and combined arms tactics and strategy worldwide.

Fort Benning also serves as a major center for the development and testing of the most up-to-date, state-of-the-art infantry weapons, equipment and material. Prime examples are the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle and the Squad Automatic Weapon.

The post, however, is much more than a school for the infantry. It is also a base for Army units tasked with worldwide missions, ready to deploy at a moment's notice if called upon. These units include the 197th Infantry Brigade, the 36th Engineer Group, the 75th Ranger Regiment headquarters, the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, the 34th Medical Battalion and the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division. Soldiers assigned to these units and many others also call Fort Benning home.

More than 58,000 soldiers and family members call Fort Benning home. The post is, at least for their tour of duty, their "home town." To take care of the needs of the residents of the "town" of Fort Benning is an infrastructure of housing, retail facilities, public buildings, maintenance personnel, administrators and services.

Specifically, for post personnel, there is a commissary, a post exchange system and shopping mall, a hospital and clinics, dental facilities, a school system for family member children, a police force, a fire department and a road and public transportation system. Rivalling any city's maintenance department and more is the Directorate of Engineers and Housing.

Being a school, a strategic base, and a city and home for thousands makes Fort Benning much more than just a military base.

Court report

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

On Jan. 7, SSgt. Jackie D. Waak of Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment was convicted by a special court-martial.

Following his conviction, Maj. Donald Rogers, military judge, sentenced Waak, who had almost eight years of active duty, to reduction to E-1, confinement for two months, payment of a $1,000 fine and a bad conduct discharge.

Waak, formerly an instructor at the U.S. Army Airborne School, was charged and found guilty of six specifications of stealing from three soldiers. Two of these soldiers were NCOs who Waak had worked and lived with; the third was a trainee hospitalized as a result of injuries he received in a training accident.

Five of the specifications involved stealing from the two NCOs by using their express bank teller cards without authorization. The last specification stemmed from Waak's decision to steal money the hospitalized trainee had trusted Waak with to buy something for him.

Pvt.1 Kevin Daye, Company B, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, was sentenced on Jan. 8 to 34 months confinement, total forfeitures and a dishonorable discharge for larceny and AWOL.

Col. Sebert Trail, the military judge, heard evidence that on July 27, Daye stole a 1984 Datsun pick-up truck from a parking lot near the Airborne School here and drove the vehicle to Delaware. Police apprehended Daye in Delaware several days later following a high-speed chase. He was convicted in civilian court and released to military authorities in October.

Although Daye had been in the Army only nine months at the time of this incident, he had a prior Article 15 for AWOL and was convicted in March in the Muscogee County Superior Court for auto theft.

Daye will be transferred to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas to serve his period of confinement.

A Fort Benning soldier recently learned that a series of relatively minor misconduct charges can have serious consequences. On Jan. 7, Pvt.1 Randall Haynes, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted of wrongful appropriation, two specifications of absent without leave and four specifications of failure to repair.

He was sentenced to six months confinement and forfeitures totaling $2,000.

Haynes told the military judge, Maj. Donald Rogers, that he borrowed a friend's car on Nov. 17 but failed to return it the following day as promised.

He also did not report for work. Haynes returned with the car on Nov. 19. The next week, Haynes went AWOL for two days and did not report for four days to extra duty imposed by a prior Article 15.

Haynes will serve his sentence at Fort Riley, Kansas.

Soviet

menklatura (ruling class)," said Ushakov. "You have to make a difference between high-level officers and those in the ranks of major and colonel."

He added that the goal of the Nomenklatura is to keep soldiers hating potential enemies and keep them expecting aggression from outside.

"They're succeeding because nobody can see the West or outside the borders," said Ushakov. "The warranty of success is the impenetrability of the borders. The Soviet soldiers and seaman are insulated from the rest of the world."

Ushakov agreed with Kass' list of values taught from an early age. He added a few more:

- Discipline — "Much more than in the American Army. For example, American soldiers have more money and free time." The average Soviet soldier will spend the entire two years in the garrison, except for the short period of time each year he is in the field with his unit. His guaranteed 10 days of leave are used for outprocessing. If the soldier is truly outstanding, he may receive several trips. The standard trip is a ride in the back of a truck to the nearest war memorial for a lecture.
- Rigorous training — The Soviet training day is 6 a.m. to 10 p.m., six days a week, with Sunday reserved for organized athletics, and care and cleaning of equipment. Of this period, six hours a day would meet the American definition of training time; the rest is spent in political lectures or maintenance, plus 15 minutes of free time before taps. Soldiers must also complete physical workouts each day before breakfast.
- Ushakov gave an example of weapons training: "One day I was in regiment training. Every year, the regiment had to fire its real rockets without the nuclear warhead. Our target was more than 2,000 kilometers away. We hit it in the central 200- by 500-meter eclipse. This is a good result. That day was very, very cold with a hard snow. It was not easy to prepare, but we did."

The Soviet value of self-reliance affects training and weapons. Soviet officers can not only use weapons, they can repair them. "I can dismantle the AK-47 assault rifle in 40 seconds without light or a screwdriver," said Ushakov. To get to this level, Ushakov and other officers practice twice a week for about half a year.

Of course, it helps to have a simple task. "It (AK-47) has very good construction," he said. "They make all their weapons simple and dependable."

Ushakov said he was also taught to repair rifles, engines and transmissions.

"Maybe I'm not right," he said, "but I heard American officers can use their weapons, but they can't repair them."

Another difference in training is the Soviet lack of emphasis on initiative, according to Kass. "They don't consider that important," she said. "They believe in tactical rigidity — carry out the order. But you have flexibility at the operational level. It's a system that does not promote genius in the ranks, or the native wit of soldiers. They believe it's better to have people well trained. The training is based on repetition, which is based on a view that in war you have panic and fog — and the only way you can overcome that is by being able to do the basic things mechanically.

"They try to train them to deal with hardship. It's very rigorous and realistic training. The motive is to teach them whatever's necessary in war.

"Their motto is, 'Tough in training, easy in combat.'"

Ushakov said that in a real situation, professional officers can kill the political officers if they try to command. "Life is life," he said. "Everyone in the Soviet army knows who is who. They're not stupid."

The Soviet army is good, he said. "Because of the draft, it is very effective. Every man and woman can be used. Can you imagine if today World War III began. They can take everyone and immediately use him. The population is competent because everyone has two or three years of military experience. And periodically everyone has to come back in (the equivalent of our Reserves) to sharpen skills.

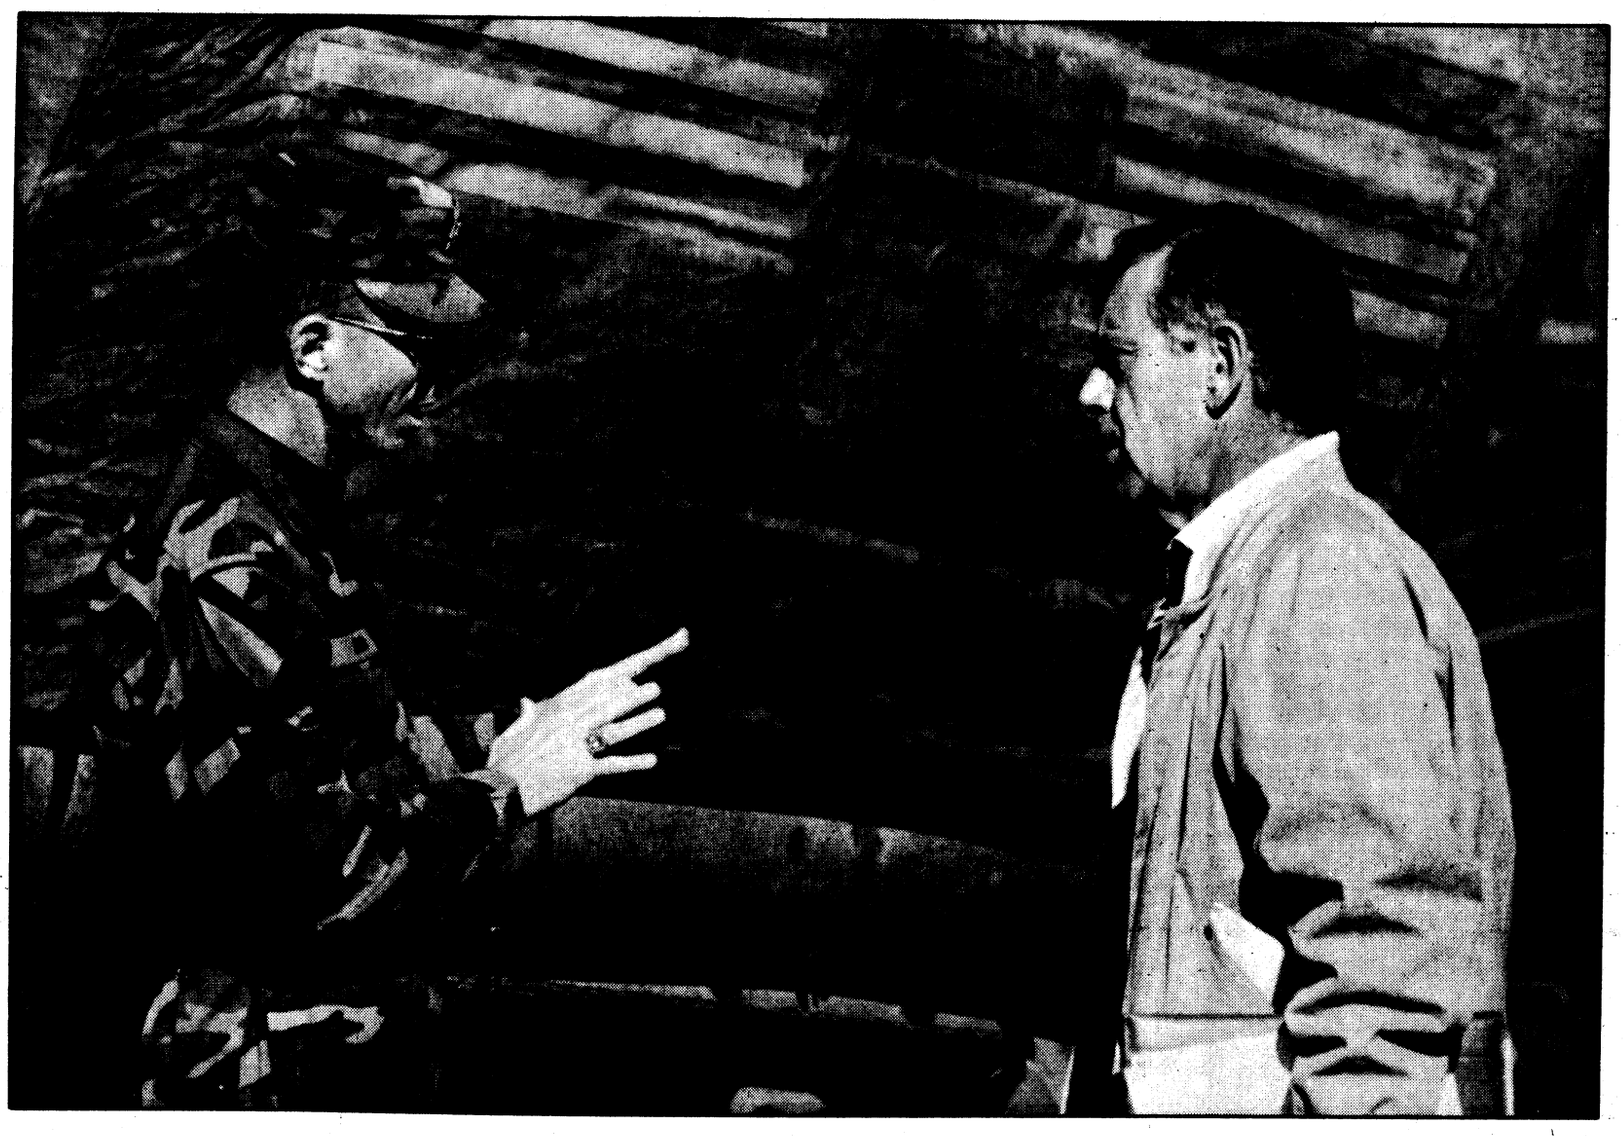
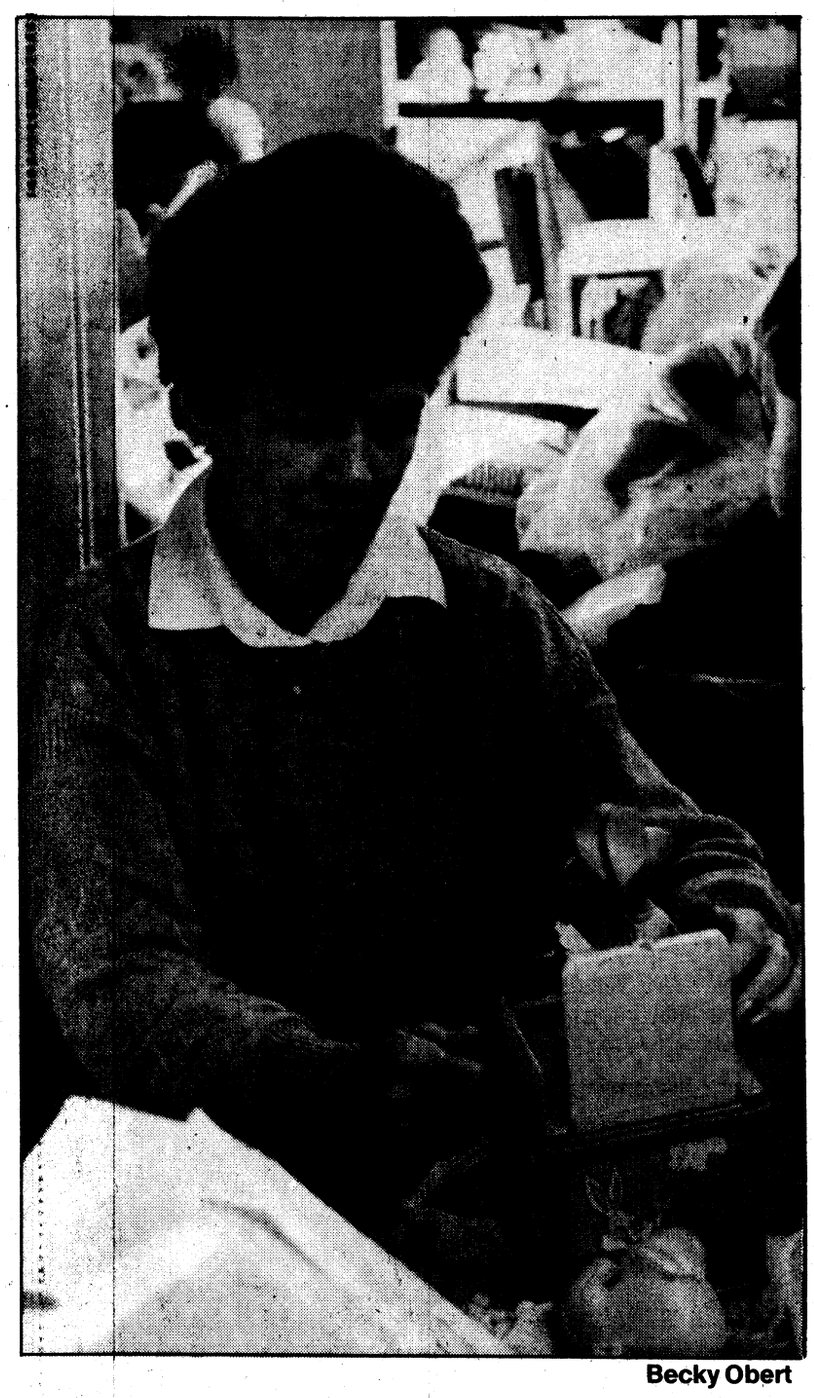
Fort Benning commander, troops in '60 Minutes' spotlight



Photos by Dawn Kilpatrick



"60 Minutes" co-anchor, Morley Safer, talks with a Bradley crew after a live-fire exercise on Redcloud Range Tuesday while his cameraman and sound technician record the conversation. Safer and his four-man team, cameraman, sound technician, producer and light man, were at Fort Benning Tuesday to film various aspects of the Bradley's capabilities for a segment on an upcoming show.

Cpl. Eric Mack, (left) a Bradley driver, and Sgt. Nick Killenberger, a gunner, show the "60 Minutes" cameraman what manuevers in a Bradley look like from their angle. Mack and Killenberger are assigned to Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Morley Safer listens carefully as Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. explains the preparations involved before a Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle can "swim."

Karen Chinen sorts through donated toys that need to be repaired at Santa's Castle.

Volunteer honored for contributions

Woman's hard work helps center give toys to 3,000 kids

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

Playing Santa's helper brought an unexpected gift for one post resident this Christmas.

Karen Chinen was named post Volunteer of the Quarter Dec. 19 by the Director of Personnel and Community Activities.

According to Pat Sneed, a coordinator in the Volunteer Resource Center, Mrs. Chinen has made truly outstanding contributions to the post.

"As the wife of a brigade commander, Karen has a lot of obligations within the brigade and is always available to wives in the 36th Engineer Group," Mrs. Sneed said. "One of the things that amazes people who know Karen is that she still finds time to do so many other things."

Mrs. Chinen is the vice mayor of the South Main Post community, and along with the area's mayor Diane Gravett, was instrumental in forming and managing Santa's Castle.

Santa's Castle is a volunteer organization that repairs used toys and distributes them to needy families at Christmas. The organization was formed in June, and gave away more than 3,000 toy this year.

Santa's Castle is set up like a toy store, Mrs. Chinen said. "People make an appointment and come here to select five toys for each of their children," she said. They are referred to the organization by their units or Army Community Services.

Once the toys are repaired, they are given an inventory number and shelved according to age groups. This allows the staff to keep up with what they have available and what toys are needed.

"It's like managing a toy store in many ways," Mrs. Chinen said. "During our busy season, we have to schedule volunteers to man the office and keep the shelves stocked."

She said she enjoyed working at Santa's Castle. "It was a fascinating experience because I had never done anything like it before," she said.

Once she became involved, it became a family project. "My husband and son built shelves and my daughter dressed a lot of Barbie dolls," she said.

Diane Gravett, mayor of South Main Post, had nothing but praise for Mrs. Chinen. "She's dedicated, hardworking, dependable. Karen really cares about this community," she said.

"She's a good sounding board. If you have a problem, she's good because she listens and helps you sort things out."

Volunteering is nothing new for Mrs. Chinen, who has spent all her married life doing things in the schools and community. Because she has a degree in elementary education, she has been active in the schools her two children attend.

"I got involved because I saw a need," she said. "I've been a room mother, a cheerleading mother and school board president. I've always helped out in the schools because of my children."

Right now she is the team mother with the soccer program at Pacelli High School, where son Paul is a sophomore.

The Chinens have spent most of their Army years stateside, serving in engineering assignments at Forts Bragg and Leavenworth, and most recently in Washington, D.C. Army life also took them to Hawaii for a few years, but Mrs. Chinen said they didn't really consider that an overseas tour because her husband is originally from the Aloha State.

Her husband has been the commander of the 36th Engineer Group for the last year and a half, and they expect to receive new orders in June.

Living on post has been a new experience for the Chinens. "We've mostly lived off post in past assignments because quarters were not available," she said. They like living on post here because, "It's a very friendly community."

Mrs. Sneed said Mrs. Chinen deserved recognition for her work here. "Karen is always thinking of other people, trying to make sure they get credit for what they do, but she tries to keep herself out of the limelight," Mrs. Sneed said.

VA Q&A

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Veterans Administration

Q — May a veteran with peacetime service only be buried in a national cemetery?

A — Yes, providing the service was under conditions other than dishonorable.

Q — My husband had a Veterans' Group Life Insurance policy when he died. An attorney from a company where he owed money said they would attach the proceeds of the insurance to pay the bill. Can they do this?

A — No. Servicemen's Group Life Insurance and Veterans' Group Life Insurance proceeds are not assignable, nor are payments to beneficiaries subject to claims of creditors of the insured or beneficiary.

Q — Does the VA have an alcohol or drug dependence program for veterans?

A — Yes. The VA operates both inpatient and outpatient clinics in most VA medical centers for honorably discharged veterans.

Q: Do the new eligibility assessment procedures for veterans set income limits for VA health care? What are these limits?

A — Yes. Income limits were set by Public Law 99-272, the Veterans' Health Care Amendments of 1986, but they do not apply to service-disabled and several other groups of veterans. The income limits or categories are as follows: Category A applies to veterans whose income is below $15,000 if single or $18,000 if married, plus $1,000 for each additional dependent; Category B covers veterans whose income is above $15,000 (but not over $20,000) if single, or $18,000 (but less than $25,000) if marred, plus $1,000 for each additional dependent; and Category C applies to veterans whose income exceeds $20,000 if single, or $25,000 if married, plut $1,000 for each additional dependent.

Speech reflects commitment to freedom

Editor's note: This speech was given by King on Aug. 28, 1963, at the Lincoln Memorial during a march by blacks on Washington, D.C.

I say to you today, my friends, that in spite of the difficulties and frustrations of the moment, I still have a dream. It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream.

I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: "We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal."

I have a dream that one day on the red hills of Georgia the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slaveowners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood.

I have a dream that one day even the State of Mississippi, a desert state sweltering with the heat of injustice and oppression, will be transformed into an oasis of freedom and justice.

I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but the content of their character.

I have a dream today.

I have a dream that one day the State of Alabama, whose governor's lips are presently dripping with the words of interposition and nullification, will be transformed into a situation where little black boys and girls will be able to join hands with little white boys and white girls and walk together as sisters and brothers.

I have a dream today.

I have a dream that one day every valley shall be exalted, every hill and mountain shall be made low, the rough places will be made plains, and the crooked places will be made straight, and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together.

This is our hope. This is the faith with which I return to the South. With this faith we will be able to hew out of the mountains of despair a stone of hope. With this faith we will be able to transform the jangling discords of our nation into a beautiful symphony of brotherhood. With this faith we will be able to work together, to pray together, to struggle together, to go to jail together, to stand up for freedom together, knowing that we will be free one day.

This will be the day when all of God's children will be able to sing with new meaning "My country 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty, of thee I sing. Land where my fathers died, land of the Pilgrim's pride, from every moutainside, let freedom ring."

And if America is to be a great nation this must be true. So let freedom ring from the prodigious hilltops of New Hampshire. Let freedom ring from the mighty mountains of New York. Let freedom ring from the heightening Alleghenies of Pennsylvania.

Let freedom ring from the snow-capped Rockies of Colorado.

Let freedom ring from the curvacious peaks of California!

But not only that; let freedom ring from Stone Mountain of Georgia!

Let freedom ring from every hill and mole hill of Mississippi. From every mountainside, let freedom ring.

When we let freedom ring, when we let it ring from every village and every hamlet, from every state and every city, we will be able to speed up that day when all of God's children, black men and white men, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics, will be able to join hands and sing in the words of that old Negro spiritual, "Free at last! Free at last! Thank God almighty, we are free at last!"

Editor's note: The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was killed April 4, 1968, while visiting Memphis, Tenn., in support of sanitation workers who were on strike.

Although he died before he saw the great changes that his work helped bring about in the treatment of black people in America, he did see the signing of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

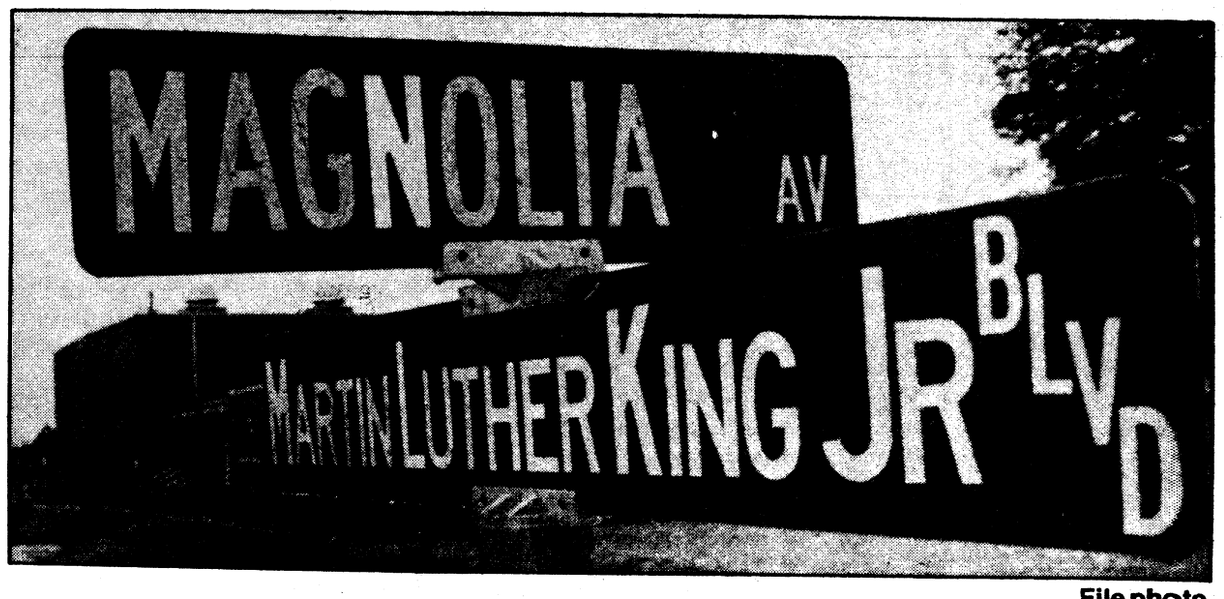
His work laid the foundation for future struggles for the rights of other minorities, such as women and gays.

While his main interest was in obtaining basic human rights, he was also concerned about raising the economic conditions of his people, a task that his survivors continue to carry on.

By Robert N. White
Family Life chaplain

It is possible to have a dream and see it become a reality in America.

America is a land of the free and the brave. When I consider the person and work of Dr. Martin Luthr King Jr., I think of America. It was in this land that this man had a dream. It was a dream of freedom for all. Women, youth and the elderly are all a part of that dream.



It is written in the Bible that, "Where there is no vision, the people are unrestrained..." Our country is great because valiant men and women were willing to turn their dreams into reality at any cost.

The Wright brothers' dream of flight has resulted in space travel. It is interesting to note that on the last space flight, a woman and a black man were among the crew members.

Not all dreams involve the nation as a whole.

Our country is grateful to the memory of King. He was an American who believed in America and its people. He was a Godly man who believed that one must love his neighbor as oneself. He was a rebel who rebelled against the injustices that oppressed Americans.

He was an orator who echoes the words of free people: "Free at last, free at last, thank God Almighty, I'm free at last."

Women's group changes name

The Catholic Women of the Chapel would like to announce a change in its name to the Military Council of Catholic Women.

This was necessary in order to have continuity between the Military Catholic Women's groups in the world.

Though it's name has changed the group is still dedicated to serving the Catholic community at Fort Benning.

MCCW usually meets the first Friday of each month from 9:15 a.m. until noon at the Main Post Catholic Chapel.

The agenda includes the Rosary, Mass, a short meeting, food and fellowship. Many activities are planned that will interest everyone.

New DEH director ready for challenges

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing affects almost every facet of life at Fort Benning. Water, light, shelter, heat, air conditioning — things taken for granted by everyone become major problems for individuals when these services are not provided or are not working.

The man newly responsible for such basic needs on Fort Benning is Lt. Col. Philip R. Harris, director of DEH.

"Everything DEH does has a direct and immediate effect on the quality of life at Fort Benning for residents and those who work here. When you turn a light on, when you have water, when you have heat, when you have a place to live or work — that is because of DEH," Harris said.

DEH, with more than 800 personnel, takes care of 3,865 buildings totaling 20 million square feet; 4,082 family houses; 2,402 bachelor officer and enlisted quarters and more than 23,800 billet spaces.

The directorate operates utility plants, maintains and repairs utility systems, buildings, structures, roads, streets and grounds that include the forests, lakes, ponds and wildlife on the installation.

The directorate also performs engineering design, master planning, contract inspection and real property and real estate management.

Harris says he sees two main challenges in his new job: housing and the Commercial Activities Study.

"As far as housing, let me first address the family housing waiting list. This is a very sensitive issue and rightly so.

"The issue is maintaining a stable list. The secret in maintaining a fair, equitable waiting list is to keep the number of exceptions to policy, for accelerated assignment to an absolute minimum," Harris said.

"There will inevitably be those few situations where a medical necessity or an extreme hardship dictates an exception be granted. When this occurs, however, we owe the families at the top of the list an explanation as to why another family was moved ahead of them. When exceptions do occur, the families affected will receive a letter explaining the situation from me personally," he said.

According to Harris, regulations are very specific concerning the waiting list and he said families should understand these regulations.

"There is absolutely no leeway for personal interpretation. As an example, it is possible for an incoming soldier who is returning from an unaccompanied tour to be initially placed on the waiting list ahead of other individuals who may have already been on the list," he said.

"My point here is that if you don't understand about your placement on the list, ask. Don't sit back and steam, get an explanation," he said.

The new director said waiting lists for housing are exceedingly long because there is a recognized shortage of about 1,000 housing units on Fort Benning. The problem is compounded by the restrictions placed on the movement of personnel by federal budget cutbacks. Additionally, as a result of a number of major renovation projects in the housing areas, the transfer of houses was further delayed.

Harris also said that many troop billeting areas were being looked at for renovation. For the housing of bachelor officers and NCOs, an additional 452 rooms will be added to the existing 1,650 room billeting area. The bottom line to these renovations and additions is funding, according to Harris.

Funding and budget cuts have also affected another area on post. Civilian workers and contracting have gone through substantial change. There is currently a study being undertaken on the feasibility of contracting out the services provided by DEH. Harris said this is a very touchy issue also.

"Our Commercial Activities Study is my second major challenge. I am committed to streamlining my organization to maximize our productivity and retaining the in-house DEH work force.

"I'm convinced that a government work force can and will provide the best possible service to the installation," Harris said.

Just like other federal government operations, DEH is adversely affected by reductions in the military budget. According to Harris, less money means less maintenance on post facilities. However, he believes everyone on Fort Benning can help to improve this situation.

"A large portion of my budget goes for the purchase of utilities. The post's natural gas bill, for example, for December was more than $922,000," he said.

"Every dollar I spend on natural gas is a dollar I can't spend on maintenance. Everyone can play a role in improving the maintenance posture on post by conserving energy.

"Every dollar we save on utilities is a dollar for maintenance and for the upgrading of Fort Benning' facilities," he said.

Energy

Fort Benning Energy Office

Many people at Fort Benning are overcome by anxiety any time they suspect a problem with their heating or air conditioning system. They fear "The Computer" has taken over control of the unit.

The computer they are referring to is the Energy Management and Control System. Perhaps some information on the EMCS will reduce this anxiety.

The Energy Management and Control System is an energy management system that employs a real time computer, peripherals, instrumentation and control equipment for monitoring and controlling remote mechanical, electrical and utility systems from a central location.

The EMCS may be used to effect energy and manpower savings for heating, ventilating, air conditioning, process equipment, lighting, chillers and boilers.

It is also used to assist in maintenance management. The EMCS is a major part of the installations energy conservation program if properly designed, installed, operated and maintained.

Many negative impressions of the system have resulted from its use as a load shedding tool. Load shedding is the process of shutting down air conditioning systems in the summer to reduce our peak demand for electricity. This practice was widespread in the past at Fort Benning but it is no longer the standard policy.

Most people are familiar with the little box attached to air conditioners and heat pumps post wide and controlled by FM signals from the central computer. This device was used during periods of load shedding and they are very unpopular with most people.

Under the new policy, all air conditioners will not be shut off for long periods of time. Units will be selectively turned off for short periods ranging from 15 to 30 minutes so that no one is completely without air conditioning.

This will occur only when Georgia Power requests Fort Benning to cut back energy consumption because its generating plants have reached peak production. This should be a rare occurence.

New agreements with Georgia Power Company along with experience gained in operating the EMCS will allow the energy office to provide more service to our customers and still manage our energy consumption efficiently and effectively.

The first phase of the EMCS was installed in the 9,000 and 2,800 blocks of troop housing and the family housing areas.

The second phase is nearing completion and will include Sand Hill, Harmony Church and main post. This tool will allow us to provide more service to our customers when and where it is needed and support our efforts to live on the energy resources allotted to us by Training and Doctrine Command.

"JIM WAS MORE THAN OUR SPONSOR. HE WAS LIKE A BIG BROTHER."

SGT Loyd Thompson, Jr. and his wife Belinda.

"The night we pulled into Fort Hood, Belinda was pregnant, and we were tired, homeless and low on funds. But thanks to Staff Sergeant Jim Perry, we weren't alone.

"Jim helped us out in so many ways. Finding a place to live. Moving in. Helping Belinda find a job. Getting Jessalyn into the child care center.

Straightening out my pay problem. He really pointed the way.

"He showed us how the system worked and what it was all about. And he never expected anything in return except for me to do a good job.

"I think if you've had a good experience, you want to repay it. When I become a Sponsor, I hope I can do as good a job as Jim."

The Army Sponsorship Program grows in scope and importance as, each day, new Sponsors join the Program and soldiers and their families who have been sponsored in the past reach out to help others. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

Orienteers keep competitive edge through practice

By Linda Ferguson
Fort Benning Orienteering Director

The only way to really get in shape and keep that competitive edge is to practice. Right now, many units are preparing for their Orienteering championships, which will be before the beginning of March.

Many competitors run in a competitive Orienteering meet on a weekly schedule, however, post meets are not always open to fit this schedule or other assignments may prevent attendance at local meets. If you fit in this category, then attending one of the numerous "A" or "B" meets scheduled in Georgia and around the country may cure your training woes.

An "A" meet is always run on a five-color map and all aspects of the meet are approved by the United States Orienteering Federation. These are "formal" meets and are well attended by both international and national competitors. "B" meets may be run on either black and white maps or on five-color maps and are held by local clubs with a minimal amount of formality. They are great opportunities for training and fellowship with local orienteers.

To assist you in keeping that competitive edge, whether here or on temporary duty elsewhere, both national "A" meets and Georgia Orienteering Club "B" meets are included in this list of early spring events. For a complete list of specific regional events, call 545-2332.

Stretching tones muscles, helps avoid injury

By Heinz H. Johnson
Air Force News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — One problem with physical fitness in America is the common backache.

It's the largest single cause of lost work hours in business, and accounts for $1 billion a year in lost output in industry and another $250 million in workmen's compensation claims. Yet, most back pain is simply a consequence of neglected muscles.

Exercise physiologists believe that more than 75 percent of all lower back pain is caused by poor abdominal muscle tone and inadequate flexibility of the lower back. Dr. Hans Kraus, a back specialist, takes it one step further. He believes 99 percent of all back problems can be attributed to too much tension and too little activity.

Flexibility is one of the four basic components of any total fitness and health program. Flexibility is the ability to move body parts in a fluid-like fashion over a full range of motion without stiffness and tightness. Keeping a sufficient degree of flexibility is not only important to general health and well-being, but any successful exercise performance depends on flexibility to reduce injuries to ligaments, muscles and tendons.

Bob Anderson, author of "Stretching," says stretching is the important link between the sedentary life and active life. It is especially important to runners, cyclists, tennis players or participants in other strenuous activities that can promote tightness and inflexibility.

Stretching is easy — but there is a right way to do it. Done correctly, it should be a relaxed, sustained stretch. It should feel good, not stressful. Unfortunately, too many people stretch to the point of pain, or they bounce up and down like yo-yos. These methods do more harm than good.

Stretching should reduce muscle tension, increase flexibility, promote circulation, prepare the body for strenuous activity, and lessen the chance for injury.

Being a skilled athlete or in top physical condition is not necessary. Here are a few guidelines to help make stretching safe and enjoyable:

- Relax. Assume a comfortable position and do not think of anything that creates tension or tightness.
- Stretch at a suitable pace and level. Any feeling of tension should leave as the position is held.
- Stretch slowly and steadily. Fast, jerky movements strain the muscles. Hold each stretch for 10 to 30 seconds.
- Do not stretch too far. Stretch the muscle gently, but not to the point of pain. You should feel mild tension in the muscle.
- Continue to breathe rhythmically and slowly. Exhale with each stretch.

And, regardless of the fitness activity, stretching is essential. It needs to be done before exercise to prepare the body for more vigorous activity. It also needs to be done after exercise to cool down and prevent muscle soreness.

Regular stretching should be a part of everyone's lifestyle. The more often it's done, the earlier it will be to build a healthy lifestyle on the foundation of aerobic fitness.

About the author — Heinz H. Johnson is the chief of Air Force Fitness Operations at Randolph Air Force Base, Texas. He holds a proficiency certificate from the institute of Aerobics Research for implementing exercise and fitness programs.

Weekly influx of 2,000 deer hunters keep game wardens busy

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

They patrol 180,000 acres of hunting land on Fort Benning. They are also responsible for 60 miles of fishable water, 20 fishable ponds and 18 navigable river miles.

The 21 men and women who carry out these duties are Department of Defense police who are also Fort Benning's game wardens.

"We work right alongside the Benning Military Police in regular police work but we also serve as the post's game wardens," said Wayne Eicher, a former military policeman, civilian law enforcement officer, and Fort Benning's supervisor of the DoD police.

"During deer season we concentrate heavily on the game warden side of the house," he explained.

Fort Benning, according to Eicher, has been averaging 2,000 deer hunters weekly. As a result of a new hunting system dividing the post into hunting areas and controlling access to these areas, the control of hunters on post has been enhanced, making the game wardens' jobs somewhat easier.

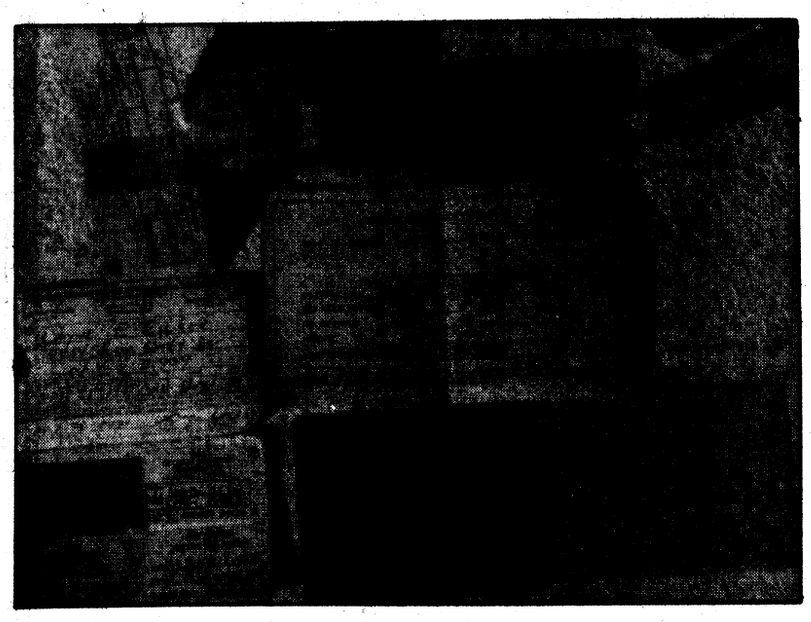
"A hunter must have an access pass to hunt in a specific area. As a result of this we know exactly the location of all hunters within each of the specific areas and this helps us control hunters on post," Eicher said.

The DoD police offiers are trained by Georgia and Alabama game wardens, becoming familiar with state laws and codes concerning hunting and fishing, techniques of detecting poachers at night and various other game warden skills.

Additionally, all of the officers have been through day and night map reading courses, survival technique classes, first aid training, water operations and rescue operations. In addition, most of the officers are avid outdoorsmen themselves.

"I really enjoy being out in the woods and the outdoors. I'm a hunter myself and it helps when we are working in our game warden capacity," said Allen Land, a three-year veteran of the DoD police force and and a former military policeman.

The DoD police patrol on three shifts, 24 hours a day, seven days a week. During deer season their primary duties involve controlling and checking hunters.



"We check hunters for their access passes, state hunting licenses, Benning hunting permits and ensure they're using authorized weapons and ammunition," said Officer George Whitten.

"We also make sure they're hunting in the area they're supposed to be in."

According to Eicher, the main infraction hunters have been cited for on post this year is hunting with no access pass.

To patrol the Chattahoochee River on Fort Benning, the DoD police have a 17-foot power boat. The boat works in conjunction with vehicle patrols in controlling hunters and in nabbing those committing infractions of state and Fort Benning hunting laws and regulations.

"The bottom line to our efforts is safety. Fort Benning hasn't had a hunting fatality since 1983 and we plan to keep it that way," said Eicher.

A hunter must carry all the required documents on his person in order to be legal while hunting on Fort Benning. Papers needed include: (clockwise starting at right corner) two area access passes, Georgia hunting license, deer tag and Fort Benning deer permit (center).

Running fuels competitive spirit

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The upcoming Annual Infantry Marathon will host runners from all walks of life. One such runner is new to the 26.3 mile course, but has galloped before.

Christine Goetz, a mail clerk at the 533rd Transportation Company, 36th Engineer Group, has traveled extensively in her training, but has only been running competitively since entering the Army last year.

The twinkle in her bright green eyes reveals the admiration she feels for the fast track, as she remembers the days of old.

"I love to run," she said. "I've galloped horses in New Jersey, the Dakotas, Florida and all over. But since I don't have them to train, I train myself," she said.

Goetz tends to relate a lot of her training to that of her previous experience on the horse tracks.

"I know that I have the endurance. You just throw your heart in front of you and sooner or later you will catch it," she said.

The vigor in the voice of the 5-foot 7-inch, Airborne-qualified soldier, sounds out her dedication to military life.

"I have always wanted to join the military. Everyone should do something for their country," Goetz said.

Goetz's conviction to competitive running is strong. She has run a race every week since her assignment here. All of the races were a type of benefit.

"I go for the benefit races because they help someone else accomplish their goals and keep me in shape at the same time," said Goetz.

Goetz continues to look ahead. Though this will be her first marathon, she has already set new goals.

"Maybe next year, I will be able to do an 'ultra marathon,' which is a 24-hour course of running and walking," explained Goetz.

Runners beware, Christine Goetz is making a challenge.

"Records are made to be broken. And although there once was a time that I would not compete, I now realize that I'm better than some and worse than others, which only prepares me to go out and try harder to be the best I can."

Celtics down Black Thunder in youth basketball action

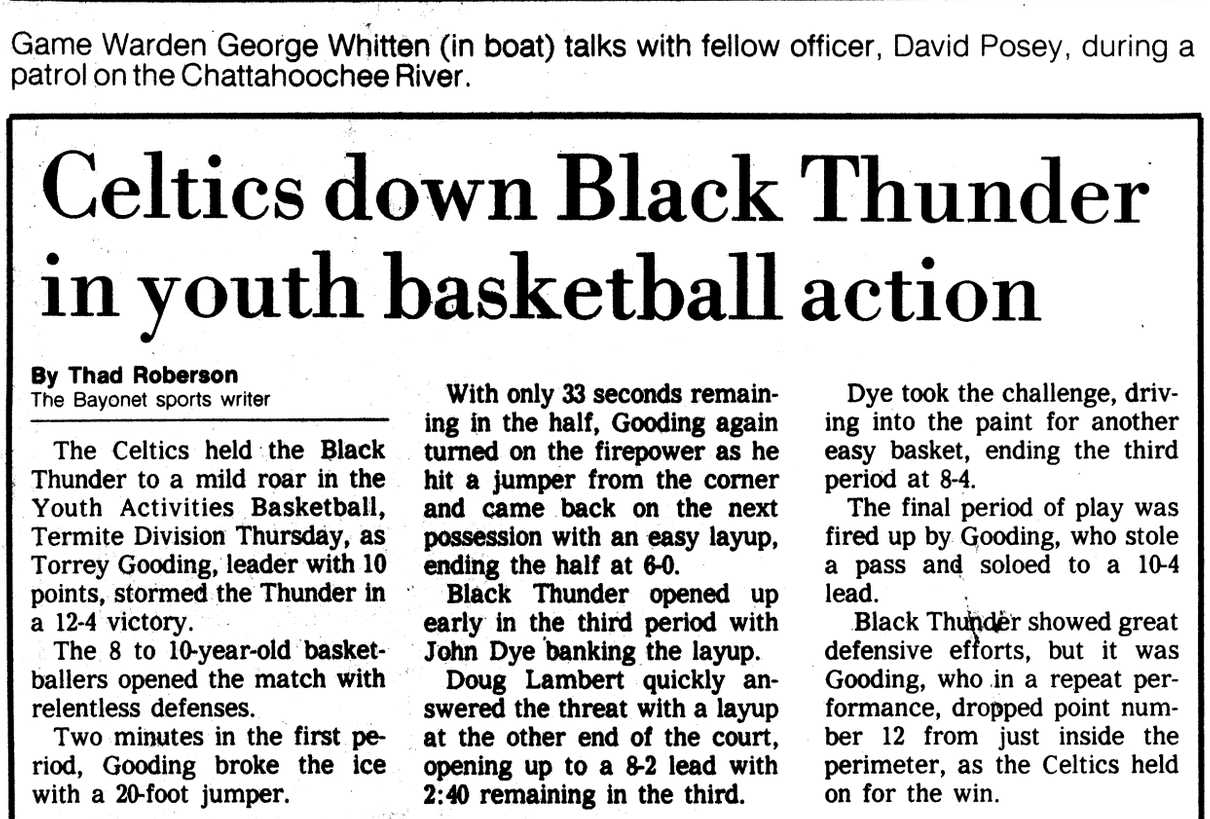
By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The Celtics held the Black Thunder to a mild roar in the Youth Activities Basketball, Termite Division Thursday, as Torrey Gooding, leader with 10 points, stormed the Thunder in a 12-4 victory.

The 8 to 10-year-old basketballers opened the match with relentless defenses.

Two minutes in the first period, Gooding broke the ice with a 20-foot jumper.

With only 33 seconds remaining in the half, Gooding again turned on the firepower as he hit a jumper from the corner and came back on the next possession with an easy layup, ending the half at 6-0.



Black Thunder opened up early in the third period with John Dye banking the layup.

Doug Lambert quickly answered the threat with a layup at the other end of the court, opening up to a 8-2 lead with 2:40 remaining in the third.

Dye took the challenge, driving into the paint for another easy basket, ending the third period at 8-4.

The final period of play was fired up by Gooding, who stole a pass and soloed to a 10-4 lead.

Black Thunder showed great defensive efforts, but it was Gooding, who in a repeat performance, dropped point number 12 from just inside the perimeter, as the Celtics held on for the win.

'Old timers' basketball league heats up

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

In a recent Over-35 Basketball League doubleheader, the Retros and Outlaws logged victories over U.S Army School of the Americas and the 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade, respectively.

The first match-up pitted the Outlaws against TSB, where William Rankin rallied his team with 16 second-half points, paving the lane to a 58-51 victory.

Rankin was held scoreless in the first half. But, the pointing was evenly distributed among guards Stanley Jones and Willie Anderson.

TSB led at the half, as W. Strausbaugh, with 15 points, hit a couple of three-pointers before the half, pushing TSB to a 21-23 intermission.

But when the second half opened, it was Rankin who dominated the flow, traveling coast to coast with the stamina of a high shool senior.

The dust began to fly with 14 minutes remaining, where TSB had pulled to within five, only to be scattered by a Rankin three-pointer, airing out a 42-34 lead.

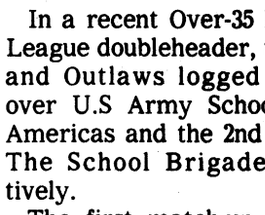
Piper had eight second-half points and finished the contest with 10, many of which were just short of the three-point zone.

The second contest, matching the Retros and USARSA was just as heated, so much so that the gym lights went out before the Retros' final 51-42 sting.

The Retros trailed through the opening minutes, but the steals and assists by Thomas Achery made the Retros active with Willie Thomas and Wheeler Johnson hitting the jumpers that kept them within three at the half.

USARSA's center, Lawrence Jordon, kept pressure on the scoreboard with five first-half field goals and one free throw.

Jordon was shut off in the second half, allowing the Retros' Edward Crook, and L. A. Dunham to slip into the paint.



The Retros' second-half rally was sparked at the free throw line, where the team was seven for eight.

With six minutes on the clock, Crook hit both ends of a one-and-one to move the Retros ahead 35-34. But, the lead traded once more before the blow of the final whistle, as USARSA went up 37-40.

The Retros went on to claim a 51-42 victory.

Infantry Marathon Saturday

It's not too late to register to run in this year's U.S. Army Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon set for Saturday.

Entries are expected nationwide from civilian and military runners competing as individuals or as a member of a five-man team.

Both races will start on Vibbert Avenue near Doughboy Stadium. The marathon gets underway at 9 a.m., while the half-marathon kicks off at 9:30 a.m.

As in the past, the paved course is flat and fast with very few turns. It is double-looped for the marathon and single-looped for the half-marathon.

The course is certified and sanctioned by The Athletic Congress and is an official qualifier for national records and the Boston Marathon.

Late registration fee is $10 and will be accepted for the marathon up to 8:55 a.m and until 9:25 a.m for the half-marathon the morning of the races.Checks should be made payable to the MWR Fund.

Trophies will be awarded to the first three overall individual finishers by sex; the first three overall military, civilain, Reserve component and Infantry Center teams, with the first three finishers of each team receiving an individual award; the best all-female team with the first three team members receiving individual awards and Olympic-style medals to the first five finishers in each age category by sex.

For more information call 544-4786, 545-7519 or 545-2332.

Runners to disrupt traffic on post

Vehicular traffic patterns on main post and around Lawson Army Airfield will be modified Saturday from 8:45 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., during the Fourth Annual U.S. Army Infantry Marathon and Half-Marathon.

Roads that will be closed along the 26-mile marathon route include Vibbert Avenue, Lumpkin, Sightseeing and Dixie Roads and Edwards, Marchant and Ingersoll Streets.

Also closed during the race will be the 101st Airborne Division Road at Alabama Highway 165.

However, in order to accommodate residents and users of the Main Post area, there will be designated route crossover points at Edwards Street and Vibbert Avenue, Ingersoll Street and Vibbert, Lavoie Street and Indianhead Road, Sightseeing and Dixie Roads, Burr and Edwards Streets, Gillespie and Marchant Streets, Yeager Street and Lumpkin Road, Lumpkin and Madden Street, Lumpkin and Sigerfoos Road, Lumpkin and Baltzell Avenue and Lumpkin and Eames Street.

Those residents living along Lumpkin Road and using the throughfare as access to and from the area are requested to park in the rear of their residence if they plan to exit the area during the marathon.

Benning ceremony honors King

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

Marshall Auditorium held a capacity crowd Monday as post and area residents gathered to remember the birthday of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

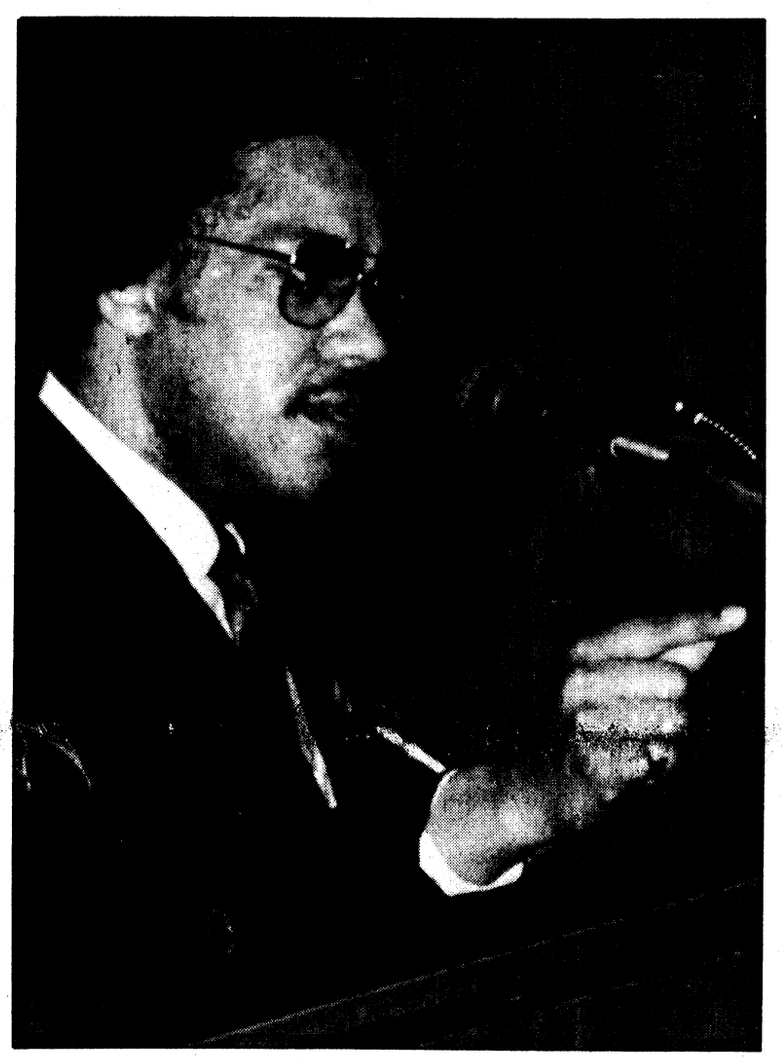
Post commander Maj. Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. welcomed attendees and said it was a time to remember King's non-violent struggle for equality for all people.

"His struggle for equality changed not only the laws of this land, but also changed the manner in which people of different races treat each other," Burba said.

"His message continues to touch the lives of millions worldwide, wherever individuals are fighting for human rights," he said.

Claiborne D. Haughton Jr., the Department of Defense's director for the Civilian Equal Opportunity Policy Directorate, was the guest speaker at the ceremony.

Haughton developed the first DoD policy statement on sexual harassment; the first policy statement on EEO for persons with disabilities and the first DoD directive to prohibit discrimination against disabled persons in DoD federally assisted programs.



He received a bachelor's degree in biology from Dillard University in New Orleans, La., and a master's degree in public administration from The American University in Washington, D.C.

Haughton, who was born with cerebral palsy and blind in one eye, spoke about the important advances King's work made possible.

He said by bringing discrimination against black people out of the closet and fighting to eradicate it, King opened the door to fighting discrimination against other minorities in society, such as the handicapped.

"There is no difference between being denied the right to vote because you are black and being denied the right to vote because you are disabled and cannot reach the polling place . . . It's discrimination," he said.

"There is no 'separate but equal.' There is only separate and inferior," Haughton said.

Marsh: 'Constitution' 1987 Army theme

Army News Service

The official announcement of the 1987 Army theme, "The Constitution" was released in Washington, D.C. last week by the Army after the Secretary of the Army spoke to the Inspector General conference.

The Secretary of the Army and Chief of Staff selected this year's theme to build on previous Army themes, and as a direct follow-up and extension of the leadership and values themes of the last two years.

Additionally, this year's theme is closely linked to the celebration of the Bicentennial of the Constitution, for which activities have already begun. The Constitution will be the Army theme for 1987.

The Constitution will be the Army theme for 1987. We are proud of the progress made in the past year to strengthen values, the theme for 1986, throughout the total Army. Previous themes have developed into a solid flow of ideas and programs, each building on the preceding ones. As a result, we have strengthened the Army's winning spirit, physical fitness, excellence, families, leadership and values.

Those of us in the total Army who take an oath of service have sworn to "support and defend the Constitution of the United States." By doing so, we stand shoulder to shoulder with the framers of the constitution who mutually pledged their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor. We do this freely because it is the Constitution which gives the Army its very purpose for being. It is the Constitution which guarantees all citizens the rights and obligations which are the essence of being an American. And it is the Constitution that our comrades have, in other times and in other places, sacrificed to preserve.

The history of the Army is intertwined with the history of our Constitution. Before our young nation could even be in a position to draft a Constitution, her freedom had to be won. It was won with the courage and blood of the first American soldiers. Once our liberty was secured, these same soldiers became the citizens upon whose commitment and hard work a great nation would be built. The majority of the original signers of the Constitution had served as soldiers in the war for independence. Throughout our nation's history, Americans have always rallied to serve their nation when needed.

The preamble of the Constitution, that famous introduction which proudly begins, "We, the people . . .," gives six statements of purpose under the Constitution. All our laws and bills and every appropriation of public money must be linked directly to one or more of these duty statements. The Army is most directly charged with responsibility for one of these duties: to provide for the common defense. Those of us in, or associated with, the Army speak of loyalty to the nation as well as loyalty to units and other members of the Army team. We also speak of duty, integrity and sacrifice. These concepts are hollow, however, if they are not viewed within the context of meaning provided by the Constitution. To be effective citizens and members of the total Army family, we must understand the concepts of the Constitution.

This year marks the 200th anniversary of the signing of the United States Constitution. Our entire nation will be celebrating the bicentennial as we focus on stimulating an appreciation and understnding of our national heritage. We urge each of you to become a better citizen this year by reading the Constitution and by finding ways to rededicate yourselves, your families, and your fellow professionals to the spirit of that document.

Post joins local program in effort to cut crime

By Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

In an effort to decrease crime in the tri-cities area, Fort Benning is now officially a part of the Crimestoppers Program in cooperation with Columbus and Phenix City.

The installation became actively involved in the program, which uses information derived from unnamed sources to solve crimes in December.

Crimestoppers is designed to assist law enforcement officials through the use of the local media.

Witn rewards offered as an incentive to the public, the media describe a crime that has taken place, hoping a witness or someone with information will come forth. People who provide information remain anonymous and if there is a conviction based on the information, the person receives a monetary reward.

Although the Crimestoppers Program is new to Fort Benning, the reward incentive for information leading to the solving of a crime is not.

"Fort Benning has always offered rewards for participation. We've gone as high as $10,000," said Col. G.M. Kent, commander of the Fort Benning District of the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Division Command.

"We offer up to $1,000 (through the program) for information," he said.

"So far we haven't had any unsolved crimes of a major concern to ask for assistance. We've pretty much solved all the crimes committed on post," said Robert Amick, a CID coordinator.

Soldier's wife feels welcome; new unit refreshing change

Dear Editor:

My husband has recently been assigned to the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, The U.S. Army Airborne School. Within the first few days of this new assignment we were invited to the annual Christmas party sponsored by the Battalion's non-commissioned officers.

It was a surprise to find that we didn't have to pay for anything for the meal or the party; we were only asked to bring a dish. Each company had a different menu entree to supply and, since my husband is in Headquarters and Headquarters Company, we were supposed to bring a casserole.

Not really knowing anyone and never having attended a battalion dinner, we were both unsure of what to expect. In my husband's past units we had never attended any function that had included officers, NCOs and all their families at one sit-down dinner.

When we arrived at McCarthy Hall on the evening of Dec.12, we were soon put at ease by the pleasant and friendly atmosphere of the Battalion. We were amazed at the large amount of food that had been prepared by the wives and was laid out on one long serving table running the width of McCarthy Hall.

Not only were there homemade dishes of Occidental and Oriental foods and desserts, but there was a 350-pound hog that had prepared Hawaiian style in a pit by 1st Sgt. Phillip Sebay of Company A. For drinks we had the choice of soda, hot apple cider or beer.

As if this wasn't enough, there was also entertainment that included dancing with two other NCOs performing the duties of disc jockeys, and skits performed by the cadre members of A, B, D and Headquarters Companies, as well as by the Pathfinder and Jumpmaster Branches.

Due to a week of uncooperative weather, Co. C was still conducting an Airborne Operation with Basic Airborne Class 8-87 in the building next to McCarthy Hall during the party. It gave all the families a chance to see what their spouses really do daily in the 1-507th.

The "Master of Ceremonies" who coordinated the whole affair was the Battalion command sergeant major, CSM Eddie Roberts.

The honored guests were Lt. Col. Jimmie F. Holt, the Battalion commander, and his wife Alice. Holt gave a very informative speech, mainly for the benefit of the Battalion wives who were present, on the Battalion's status since its recent reorganization and in what direction the Battalion is now heading.

After this initial experience with the 507th, we are both very happy to be new members of the Battalion and the Airborne community. They have really made us feel welcome and have shown us what it means to do things in the "Airborne style."

1987 Army theme presents challenge

Dawn Kilpatrick

With his Jan. 14 announcement that the Constitution would be the Army theme for 1987, Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. effectively issued a challenge to soldiers throughout the Army.

Initial reaction in The Bayonet office was less than enthusiastic. As purveyors of the written word, our first concern was how could we possibly communicate with our readers on such a topic. We thought "Values" was difficult . . .

After reading Secretary Marsh's address, however, it is clear to see that there was really no other choice. This year we celebrate the 200th anniversary of the signing of the Constitution. What a significant date

It was Sept. 17, 1787 — 200 years ago — that the rules of our way of life in these united states were outlined and agreed upon by 40 men, establishing the form of national government that we know today.

Consisting of the now-famous and very familiar preamble, seven articles and 26 amendments, the United States Consitution is an impressive document. The history and significance surrounding the document, the composition of it, the signers of it, all are fascinating when examined closely.

The Consitution sets forth the nation's fundamental laws. It establishes the form of the national government and defines the rights and liberties of the American people. It also lists the aims of the government and the methods for achieving them. The Constitution was written to organize a strong national government for the American people.

Putting all of the lofty aims into perspective and taking a look at the events leading up to the signing of the document and the men who signed it, makes the Constitution seem more real, somehow.

The Constitutional Convention was set to open May 14, 1787. However, few of the nation's 55 delegates had arrived in Philadelphia at that time. On May 25, 1787, only 12 states had sent delegates, but the convention formally opened at Independence Hall.

Of the 55 delegates, only 39 eventually signed the Constitution. John Dickinson of Delaware had to leave the convention, but had another delegate sign for him. The convention secretary, William Jackson, also signed the document.

The delegates included some of the most experienced and patriotic men in the new republic. George Washington was the president of the convention. Benjamin Franklin, who was 81 years old, attended as the representative from Pennsylvania. Alexander Hamilton represented New York. James Madison of Virginia became know as the "Father of the Constitution" because of his eloquent speeches, negotiations and attempts at compromise. Madison told the delegates they were considering a plan that "would decide forever the fate of the republican government."

Other men who had much to do with writing the Constitution included John Dickinson, Gouverneur Morris, Edmund Randolph, Roger Sherman, James Wilson and George Wythe.

Morris was probably the most influential delegate after Madison and Washington. He was given the task of "polishing" all of the convention's resolutions and decisions. Morris actually "wrote" the constitution according to the history books. The original copy is preserved in the National Archives Building in Washington, D.C.

Looking at the background and the times leading up to the signing of the Constituion lays a good foundation for actually reading the document. Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. has challenged each of us to read the historic document during this year.

I plan to. Won't you? I know I can certainly use a refresher American history lesson.

Shocking stats don't stop drinking and driving

By Mansoor Abdur-Rahman
Fort Bliss. Texas

FORT MONROE VA. (TNS)—In the society in which we live, we find ourselves being constantly bombarded with information. No doubt, our country is probably the most information-oriented society on earth.

We can request, call for, and research just about anything we need to know about. And if we can't get it ourselves, we need only ask. An abundance of information is out there.

Among the mountains of information in our midst is a thing called statistics. Simply put, statistics is a science that deals with the collection of facts. We presume that these facts are verified and true.

Here are some grim statistical facts about alcohol-related effects on our society:

□ Thirty-five to 64 percent of all automobile accidents with fatilites are alcohol related.

□ An estimated 50 percent of all fire deaths are alcohol related.

□ The risk of suicide by an alcoholic is 30 times greater than one who is not an alcoholic.

As shocking and as frightening as these statistics are, millions of Americans continue to consume alcohol, the legal drug. Many of these consume the intoxicating beverage while on the job, at school, or at home with the children. The use of this drug affects marriages, work production, absenteeism — and the list goes on.

If we look at the illegal drugs and the facts that go along with them, we can come up with some startling conclusions. Did you know that sales from illegal drugs such as marijuana, hashish, cocaine, barbituates, depressants, hallucinogens, etc., are second only to Exxon Corporation? We're talking about $18 to $26 billion per year in drug sales.

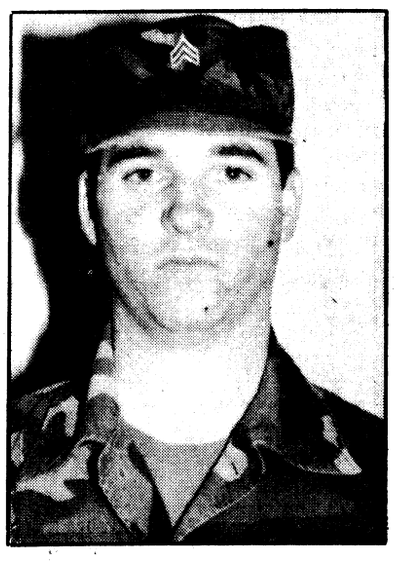
This figure does not include the $2.5 billion per year generated from sales of drug paraphernalia. I would venture to say that alcohol, the legal drug, and the aforementioned illegal drugs, have very similar effects on the moral and social fabric that binds our nation together. A resolution to the problem?

Many people don't like to think of alcohol as a drug, but what else can it be called?

One definition of "drug" is a habit-forming medicinal substance." Alcohol's toxic effects can poison the human system.

Dozens of proposals have arisen to keep the drunk from behind the wheel of a car, motorcycle or truck. Unfortunately, the rate of driving-while-intoxicated incidents continues in a steady, if not increasing, pattern.

I suggest we begin by teaching the reality and truth about alcohol. It's a drug just as marijuana, cocaine, heroin, and all the others are. Alcohol must be viewed in this light. Anything less and we are only deceiving ourselves.



From childhood, our culture, tradition and society have taught us that this drug is acceptable. But if we truly care about the welfare of our youth, our nation, and all the high and noble attibutes that go with it, we will change our perception of alcohol and treat it for what it is.

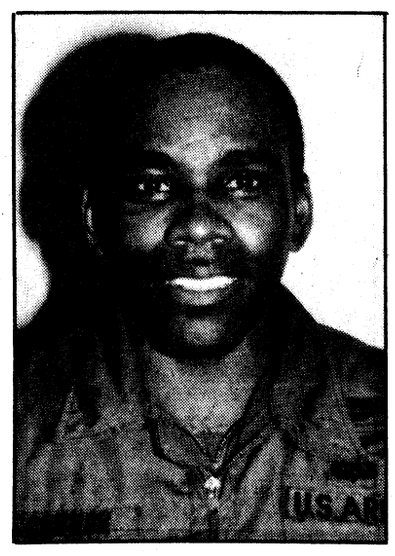
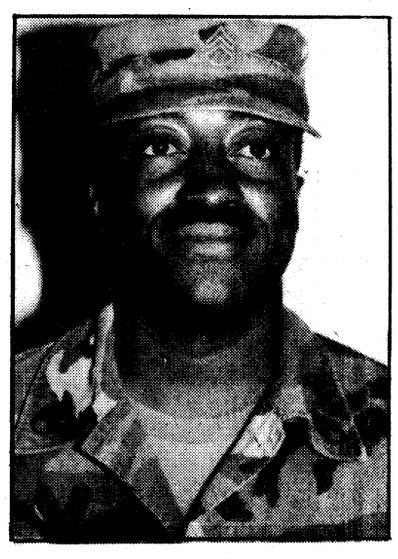
What improvements would you like to see to the recreational services on Fort Benning so they would better meet your needs?

PFC Chris E. Hemphill, 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group — "I think they should upgrade the gyms and make them nicer."



Sgt. Dennis K. Ethridge, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division — "The post has sufficient recreational services. But I'd like to see a moto-cross track built."



SP4 Loren D. Cook, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Some of the gyms could use updating on the weights. The equipment could be improved and the buildings expanded for more space."

1st Lt. Cindy Sbrocco, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade — "I think they need longer hours at all the recreational facilities. They should also provide more satellite enlisted clubs for the soldiers."

CWO2, Henry R. Connor, Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 10th Mountain Division — "I believe that the stuff we have should have better maintenance, especially the raquetball courts. I think they should be repainted."

SSgt. James B. Pitts, Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Personally I'd like to see a football team come back. An indoor ice rink and roller skating rink would also be nice."

Tax tips

Many services available for preparing tax returns

American Forces Information Service

At this time of year, the thought of income tax returns probably already has invaded your serenity. And with that, no doubt, has come the question about whether you should complete your returns yourself or get some help.

Professional income tax preparers will gladly help you for a fee. But the Federal Trade Commission recommends that before you hire one, you make sure you really need to pay for assistance.

If you don't have complex tax details to worry about and use the short (1040) form, Internal Revenue Service personnel will complete most of it for you and compute your taxes free. To find out more about this, call 1-800-424-1040.

If you are thinking about getting help preparing your tax returns, each unit on Fort Benning will have a Unit Tax Assistor to aid you in this, with no cost to you. These people have attended a certification course and are qualified to help soldiers file their returns. Retirees and family members can also get help without a charge from volunteers at the Army Community Services. Next week, The Bayonet will print a complete list of all Unit Tax Assistors and their phone numbers.

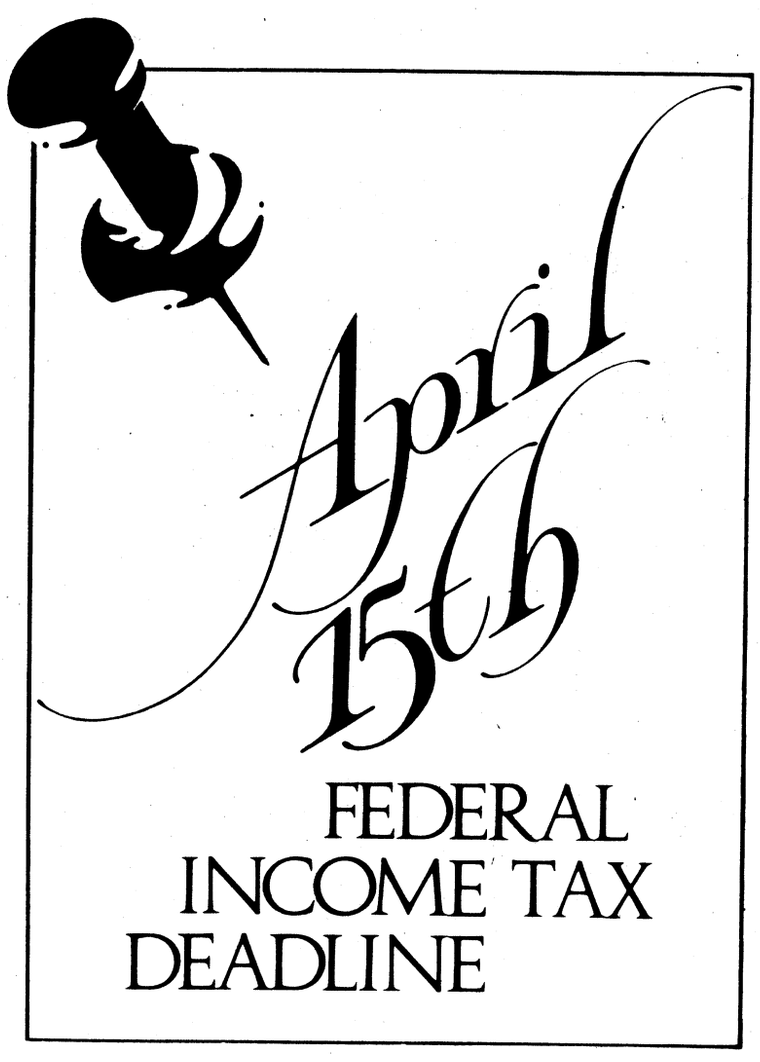
If you're considering getting help from another type of income tax preparation service, bear in mind that these services vary greatly in cost and how much they can do for you. The preparers, for example, are classed according to their education and training:

- An enrolled agent is certified by the IRS after working five years as an IRS auditor or passing a government examination. Enrolled agents are authorized to represent you before the IRS.
- A certified public accountant has passed a professional qualifying examination. Certified public accountants also are authorized to represent you before the IRS.
- A public accountant may have special accounting training, but lacks certification and cannot represent you before the IRS.
- An attorney may not have special tax training. However, attorneys are authorized to represent you before the IRS.
- Any other "tax preparer" may lack special training or experience. Some preparation firms require that their staffs have extensive training and experience; others have less rigorous requirements.

If you are in a special tax situation — run a small business or have income from a number of sources — you may want a preparer with specialized experience. Ask in advance to find out if the preparer suits your needs.

Some things you should ask about before hiring a tax service:

- How much will it cost?
- What kind of accuracy check will be made? Will it be reviewed for arithmetic errors only or also for errors in tax law interpretation?
- Will the preparer represent you if the IRS audits your return? If so, will there be an extra charge?



The tax preparer you visit should go through a checklist of deductions to see if any apply to you. He should sign and enter his Social Security number or federal identification number on your return.

The preparer should not guarantee you a refund before completing your return or suggest that you take non-existent deductions or commit other dishonest acts. And the preparer should not ask you to sign a blank return or one completed in pencil.

Even if you do hire someone to prepare your return, you are personally liable for any additional tax, interest or penalty. That applies even if you have a written guarantee that the preparer will pay any interest or penalty assessed as a result of his work. This, incidentally, is quite different from a guarantee that the preparer will represent you in a dispute over your return.

To get the best results on your return, bring to the preparer any information or documents that might apply to your taxes, including last year's return.

And remember, the earlier you start on your return, the more time you or your tax preparer will have to do a good job.

VA's 1988 budget increases by $550 million

Veterans Administration

The Veterans Administration's budget for fiscal year 1988 calls for $27.6 billion in new budget authority to fund medical, compensation, and other programs for the nation's 27.6 million veterans, eligible members of their families and survivors of deceased veterans.

The request is nearly $550 million greater than the current fiscal year 1987 estimated requirements.

Praising President Ronald Reagan's support for the nation's veterans, VA administrator Thomas K. Turnage said: "We are pleased with the VA's 1988 budget, especially in view of federal deficit reduction requirements. This new level of funding will enable us to move forward aggressively, continuing to modernize our facilities and our major benefits delivery systems, while providing the uncompromised quality service our veterans have earned."

The 1988 budget provides $15.2 billion for benefits programs, $10.3 billion for medical programs and $525.7 million for construction. Total agency full-time equivalent employment is expected to be 218,005, down 3,126 from that currently proposed for 1987 due to productivity improvements and lower workload.

Veteran's benefits

VA's $10.7 billion request for compensation payments is based on estimates that 2.2. million veterans with service-connected disabilities will remain eligible for monthly payments, along with 323,000 survivors of veterans who died of service-connected causes.

In addition, legislation will be proposed indexing the annual compensation cost-of-living adjustment to changes in the Consumer Price Index.

If enacted, this proposal would guarantee a full and timely cost-of-living adjustment to all compensation beneficiaries, protecting them from the erosion of their benefits and the uncertainties of annually legislated COLAs.

It is anticipated that $3.8 billion in pension payments, based on financial need, will be made to 617,000 disabled wartime veterans and approximately 619,000 survivors of wartime veterans. Pension payments are already keyed to changes in the CPI.

An appropriation of $650.3 million is requested for readjustment benefits for veterans education and training programs. This decrease of about $136 million from the 1987 level is due to fewer veterans being eligible.

Legislation is being proposed to increase the funding fee for home loan guarantees from 1 percent to 2.5 percent June 1. The increase would obviate the need for nearly $390 million in appropriations otherwise required to support this program, while continuing its unique no downpayment feature.

As part of a government-wide effort to improve the management and operation of all credit programs, the VA proposes to sell nearly $300 million worth of its loan portfolio of $1.1 billion dollars in 1988. This is anticipated to reduce federal outlays by $210 million in 1988.

Medical care

The budget sustains quality health care for eligible veterans through a nationwide system of 172 hospitals, 231 outpatient clinics, 120 nursing homes and 16 domiciliaries, and carries out the veterans health care amendments of 1986.

Funding for direct medical care will increase by $414 million, to just under $1 billion with an employment level of 190,330.

Medical and prosthetic research will receive $199 million which is an increase over the amount appropriated to the VA this year.

VA anticipated that the number of inpatients treated will exceed 1.4 million, and outpatient visits will be more than 20 million.

The budget provides funding to care for service-disabled veterans, former prisoners of war, those who have health problems that may be related to exposure to certain toxic substances and radiation, veterans of wars prior to World War II, and VA pension recipients, as well as nonservice-connected veterans who earn less than $25,000 annually (with one dependent, $20,000 for single veterans). The VA will continue to furnish care to nonservice-disabled veterans with incomes above $25,000 in locations where resources remain available.

Consistent with this patient care policy, the 1988 request contains a rescission proposal that would eliminate funding that would otherwise be used during the last five months of fiscal 1987 for hospital, outpatient, VA nursing and community nursing services paid for by the VA for the care of higher income, nonservice-disabled veterans.

In view of difficulties with nursing recruitment that are developing in some places, the budget asks for $6 million to reactivate the Health Professional Scholarship Program to support 211 one-year awards and 84 two-year awards to nursing and physical therapy students.

Construction

The 1988 budget requests $404.7 million for major construction projects and $121 million for minor projects, a total increase of $37 million more than last year.

Among the major medical construction projects are $74.1 million for bed replacement and modernization at the Dayton, Ohio, VA medical center; $83.8 million for environmental improvements and patient and nursing home care buildings at the North Chicago, Ill., VA medical center; $13 million to design a new medical center in Palm Beach, Fla.; $6.8 million for design of a clinical addition at the Atlanta VA medical center; $26.6 million for outpatient and ward renovations at the Montgomery, Ala., VA medical center; $11.1 million for a replacement domiciliary in Prescott, Ariz.; $43.4 million for a clinical improvement addition at the Huntington, W.Va., VA medical center; and $38 million for a clinical addition at the Jackson, Miss., VA medical center. VA is requesting $42 million for the State Extended Care Grant program that will provide for 17 projects in seven states.

A request for $11.5 million is included for initial gravesite development and construction of an administration and service building at the planned new national cemetery in Northern California.

Operating expenses

The budget asks for $816 million and 17,751 FTEE to operate the Department of Veterans Benefits, the Department of Memorial Affairs and the various staff offices.

DVB's budget would increase $33 million to $551.3 million. Funding of $34.4 million is included for DVB's project to modernize its ADP and telecommunications systems. This is the second year of a six-year plan to improve service to veterans through more efficient operations.

DMA is requesting $47.7 million, an increase of $3 million, which would support 1,187 FTEE. Interments are projected at 56,000 in 1968, and DMA will maintain 1,730,000 gravesites. Funding is included for the opening of the Florida National Cemetery.

Proposed legislation

In addition to indexing compensation cost-of-living increases and increasing the home loan funding fee, several legislative proposals are included in the appropriations request. Among them are:

☐ Transferring funding responsibility for the entire cost of the all volunteer force educational assistance program (new GI Bill) to the Department of Defense and making it a permanent recruitment and retention program. The VA would still be responsible for administration of the program.

ROTC scholarships help troops climb promotion ladder

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, VA. (TNS)—Active duty enlisted soldiers desiring to move up the career ladder in today's high-technology Army can make their dreams come true by enrolling in a two- or three-year Army Reserve Officer Training Corps Scholarship Program.

The deadline for applications to reach Headquarters, Training and Doctrine Command, is March 15.

The scholarship program provides the opportunity for a soldier to get a baccalureate degree and obtain a commission as a second lieutenant in the U.S. Army.

Upon acceptance into a program, the soldier is released from active duty in order to enroll as an Army ROTC scholarship cadet in a college or university that offers Army ROTC.

Once the soldier applies and gets accepted by the college or university, the scholarship will pay tuition, an allowance for lab fees, textbooks, supplies and other necessary educational expenses.

A $100 monthly subsistence allowance for up to 10 months of each year will also be paid to the soldier while being enrolled as a cadet. Cadets are also paid while attending a six-week Advanced Camp.

Qualified winners also may be able to receive any portion of the GI Bill or Veterans Educational Assistance Program benefits they may have earned while on active duty. The nearest Veterans Administration Regional Office can provide assistance in determining whether or not the soldier is eligible for the GI Bill or VEAP.

There are several requirements a soldier must meet to qualify for the Army ROTC scholarship. The soldier must:

☐ Be under 25 years of age June 30 of the year the soldier will be eligible for commissioning. However, active duty soldiers may be granted up to four years' extension. The length of extension cannot exceed the actual period of service. For instance, with two years' active service, the soldier must be under 27 years of age June 30 of the year in which he is commissioned.

☐ Have a General Technical Aptitude score of 115 or higher.

☐ Have (for the two-year scholarship) completed a minimum of two years of college or the equivalent, and have at least two years remaining in an approved baccalaureate degree program; or have completed a minimum of one year of college or the equivalent, and have only three years remaining in an approved baccalaureate degree program for the three-year scholarship.

☐ Be accepted as a junior in the fall of 1987, with a spring 1989 graduation date, at an institution offering ROTC for the two-year scholarship, or be accepted as a sophomore at an institution offering Army ROTC for the three-year scholarship.

☐ Have a minimum cumulative grade-point average of 2.0 on a 4.0 grading scale for all college work completed.

☐ Have a minimum Army Physical Fitness Test of 180 or higher (minimum of 60 in each event).

☐ Have a favorable National Agency Check and/or Entrance National Agency Check.

Scholarship graduates are committed to serve eight years. This obligation can be fulfilled by serving two to four years on active duty followed by service in the National Guard or U.S. Army Reserve, or by serving eight years in the Reserve Component with only an active period needed to complete the active component resident officer basic course.

Soldiers desiring to move up the Army career ladder by way of the Army ROTC program should visit their education center for applications.

The deadline for requesting applications for the two- or three-year active duty scholarship is March 1. Applications must be received by Army ROTC Scholarships (AD), HQ TRADOC, Fort Monroe, VA 23651-5238, by March 15.

U.S. Army

SFC Shelton Hall leads a platoon of students around the track on a physical training run during his first tour of duty as an instructor with the U.S. Army Airborne School here. Hall, who is on his second tour as a "Black Hat," was assigned to the School from 1980 to 1983.

All the way!

'Black Hats' make Airborne School a success

Company B, 1-507th Parachute Infantry Regiment

"What is a Black Hat?" This question produces several different answers depending on who you ask.

To the officer and enlisted basic Airborne student, the answers differ. Ask the instructors themselves, and the answer is different still. The variety in responses reflects the Black Hat's individuality, occupation, position and status.

To the enlisted basic Airborne student, the Black Hat is an omnipotent instructor who is in total control of his life for the seemingly perpetual three weeks of training — something not entirely new after eight or 13 weeks with a drill sergeant.

Looking through the officer students' eyes, the Black Hat is an individual who blatantly reminds the officer that, for a well deserved change, he is in charge.

In both cases, the Black Hat makes it painfully clear that he is the boss, and consequently, he establishes all rules and regulations and any infractions of these regulations are paid for by a required round of push-ups for "Sergeant Airborne!"

Within a matter of days, the student's perception shifts from a negative aspect to a positive one. He sees the Black Hat as an individual who portrays high standards of dedication. He is also constantly aware of the safety elements required to conduct successful parachuting operations. The student quickly comes to realize that his life depends on the Black Hat's high degree of dedication to the mission.

Analogous to present Airborne students, many of today's Black Hat instructors acquired not only their admiration for the Black Hat, but also their inspiration to become one from their own Airborne instructor.

The paths that brought each back to Fort Benning are many and varied, however. Each returned to the "Birthplace of the Airborne." Each undertook the arduous task of going back "under the helmet," which to the uninitiated translates into becoming a "student" again.

SFC Bruce Dudley, 1st platoon sergeant, explained the unpleasant experience, "The future Black Hat must don a student parachutist's helmet and participate in tower week training as a student.

"By refreshing his memory with how students feel and respond, the newly appointed Black Hat can become a better Airborne instructor," he said.

It is only after completing this phase as a student and after passing addditional instructor training, that one is awarded the coveted black hat that distinguishes the Airborne instructor.

Third platoon sergeant, SFC Radley Christian, entered the Army in 1968 and after serving a tour in Vietnam, attended Airborne School in 1975. While going through Advanced Individual Training, he was in a "Jump Platoon," which he said helped to "properly prepare and highly motivate" him for Airborne School. The experience was also a factor in motivating him to become a Black Hat. Christian said the one thing he likes most about his job is seeing the pride that develops in students in Airborne School.

According to SFC Samuel Shugart, 2nd platoon sergeant, there is pride to be gained by both the students and the Black Hats. He said, "We, as Airborne instructors, have a prestigious and gratifying job." A veteran of the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), Shugart defines a Black Hat as "highly professional, experienced, knowledgeable and fit NCO or officer dedicated to the thorough instructions of the Airborne student."

SSgt. David Simko, another instructor, said he believes being a Black Hat is "an elite and very good job."

The consensus yields that the Black Hat is an individual who makes the entire Airborne program possible. Seeing them in action, doing what they do best, also makes it very clear what a a Black Hat is.

Practice makes perfect for two-time instructor

By Dawn Kilpatrick
The Bayonet Editor

Lead by example; practice makes perfect; experience is the best teacher . . .

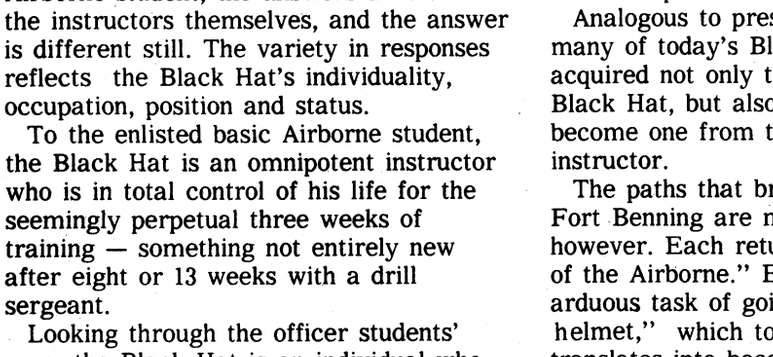
All of these cliches, and more, come to mind when talking with SFC Shelton Hall, an Airborne instructor with Company D, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Hall, a 19-year Army veteran, is a return instructor with the Airborne School. He served his first tour with the school from 1980 to 1983. Then he moved out to Harmony Church as a drill sergeant. He returned to the 1-507th in April 1986.

Inspired by the vision of a Vietnam veteran sporting spit-shined jump boots, razor-sharp pressed khakis and a paratrooper's glider patch, Hall decided when he was a high school junior that he wanted to be a soldier.

Setting his goals and following them through to completion has been the straight and narrow road Hall's career has followed. His philosophy is a popular one and he shares it with his soldiers.

"I tell the troops, 'Don't be afraid to take chances, the right chances. There is nothing in the Army that hasn't been tested and you might as well meet the challenge.' I think life is boring without a challenge," Hall said.



Hall likes to be in a position where he can guide young soldiers, whether as a drill sergeant in a basic training company or as a "Black Hat" with the U.S. Army Airborne School.

Hall believes the soldiers he worked with in basic training and the troops he trains in Airborne School have a lot in common. "You can draw comparisons between the two," he said, "especially if you look at the training each soldier gets in stages. They both develop like a baby learning to walk — first they crawl; then they walk a little wobbly; then they walk with confidence; then they take off running."

Developing the soldier from basic training, through advanced individual training and Airborne School is the job that is accomplished by professional non-commissioned officers — like Hall.

"Leading by example is a big part of this job," Hall said. "When a soldier leaves here he should have increased discipline, confidence and aggressiveness. He should have learned that from me."

Don't be an obsolete 'dummy,' be prepared for cold-weather

By Laurie Viggiano
Training and Doctrine Command

FORT MONROE, VA. (TNS)—Idle and out of uniform, Fred occupies a shadowy corner in TRADOC's Combat Service Support Directorate here.

His job use to be getting decked out in the Army's latest field gear and going along with the CSSD folks to various locations to show it off.

But Fred had an accident. He lost a few fingers. In fact, rumor has it that he got careless while modeling the Army's Extended Cold-Weather Clothing System under sub-zero conditions.

True or not, the tale emphasizes the fact that, while ECWCS gives a soldier improved protection against the dangers of cold weather, it won't work unless the soldier uses it properly and follows basic cold-weather operational rules.

Fred isn't wearing the ECWCS any more, but soldiers in some of the Army's high-priority divisions are. The entire active and reserve Army should get ECWCS within five years, according to CSSD officials.

ECWCS is a layered clothing system designed for what the directorate calls the most important key to cold-weather comfort and safety-moisture management.

High-tech synthetic fabrics like polypropylene and Gortex keep a soldier's skin and clothing next to the skin drier than the old natural fabrics like wool and rubber did. Lighter in weight and bulk, the new fabrics allow sweat to evaporate to the outside while keeping rain and snow from getting in.

The system starts with polypropylene "long-john" underwear and builds up to fiberpile bibbers, polyester batting trousers and parka liners, layered handwear and special outer garments, socks,and boots. Like all cold-weather clothing, it must fit the soldier well to work effectively; tight clothing restricts circulation and reduces insulation ability.

There's a limit to the amount of moisture that even ECWCS can manage, so soldiers must still practice cold-weather caution no matter what clothing system they're wearing, CSSD says.

For example, take Fred, outside, showing off the ECWCS mitten system layer by layer to bare skin. He might have forgotten for a few critical minutes a basic cold-weather operational rule: don't touch bare skin to metal.

Or maybe he joined a march, to demonstrate the wetness wicking-and-evaporating properties of ECWCS. If he and the platoon leader didn't anticipate weather conditions and activity levels, and adjust clothing layers accordingly, Fred may have suffered from the most dangerous cold-weather condition a soldier faces — hypothermia.

This extreme loss of body heat can occur even at temperatures as high as 50 degrees, especially if activity level is high (causing increased sweating) and a wind is blowing.

Wet clothing loses almost all its insulating power, and a five-mile-per-hour wind carries away body heat eight times faster than still air. Because the human body can't replace that lost heat fast enough, it draws blood in toward the heart to protect vital organs.

Less blood circulating in the hands and feet causes numbness and increases the chance of severe frostbite. If Fred tried to "get the blood going" by stomping or running around, he only worsened his condition by increasing the heat loss.

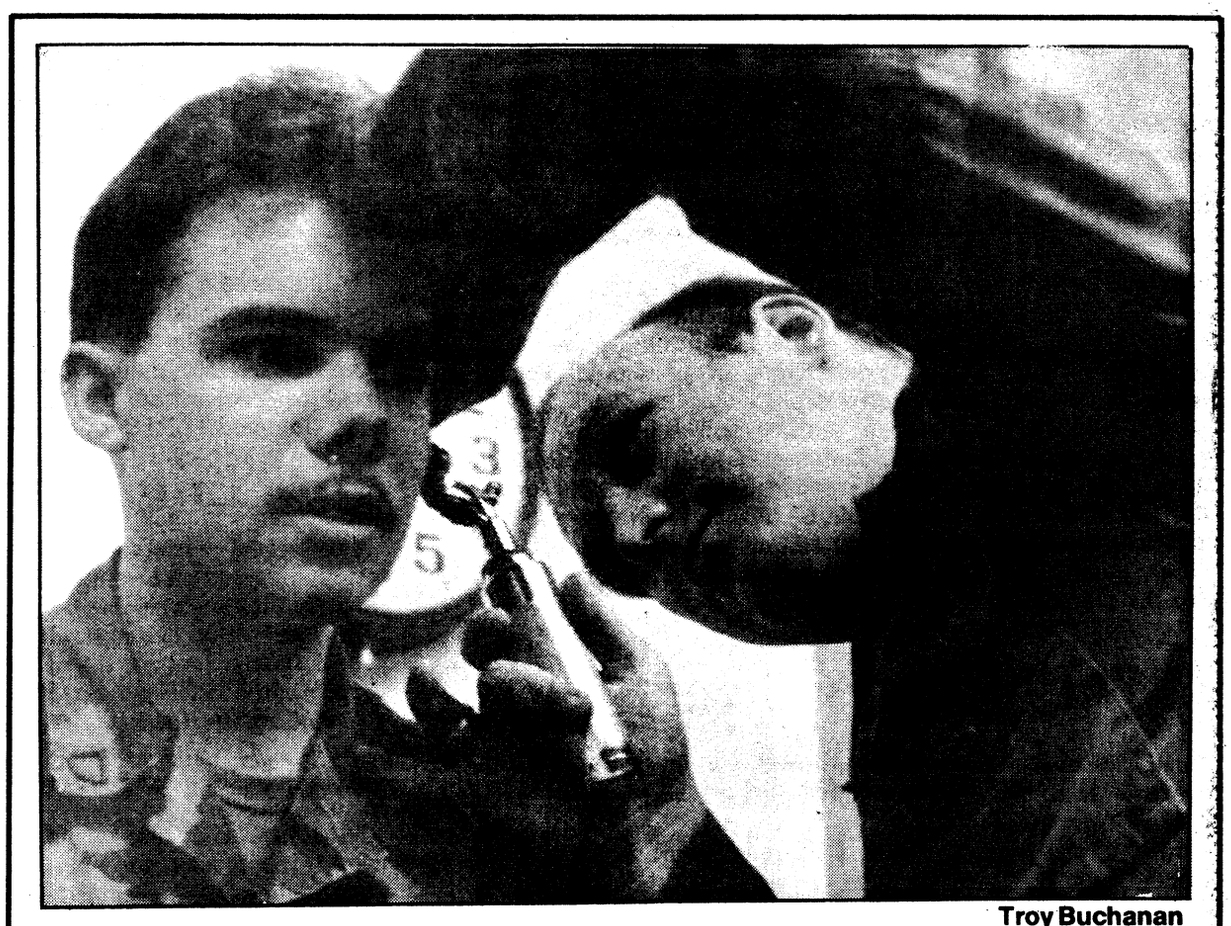
In Fred's brain, the hypothermic lack of oxygen-carrying blood would have resulted in mental confusion and carelessness. This, for example, might have made him forget other basic cold-weather rules.

What he should have done was get to a warm place, get into warm, dry clothing and lie down with his feet raised lightly higher than his head.

But a hypothermia victim can become too disoriented to remember what to do, which is a very good reason for a unit to rely on the buddy system — soldiers who work in pairs and know cold-weather operations, injury warning signs and first aid procedures.

A cold-weather buddy could have helped Fred out at the first sign of hypothermia symptoms — intense shivering, weakness, a false sense of happiness or well-being (euphoria), lack of coordination and slurred speech.

In cold weather, managing the moisture inside, to prevent dehydration (water loss in the form of sweat and urine), is also very important.



Drinking plenty of plain water is the best defense against dehydration, but warm liquids such as coffee and cocoa in moderation give a boost to the mind as well as the body.

Perhaps Fred remembered to drink plenty of liquids but chose alcoholic beverages, the worst kind of liquid in this case. Since alcohol narrows or constricts blood vessels, it worsens the usual cold-weather circulation problems.

A few drinks at the club before going out into freezing temperatures would have hastened Fred's body heat loss. A few cigarettes along with those drinks and Fred was really in trouble, because nicotine has the same circulation-restricting effect as alcohol.

Whatever caused Fred's finger injury, it doesn't worry Fred because he's a dummy — literally — a mannequin.

For real soldiers, preventing cold-weather injury is a serious matter that requires proper training, small-unit leadership and common-sense precautions, along with continuing improvements in individual equipment items such as the Extended Cold-Weather Clothing System.

Providing medical care to soldiers part of physician's assistant's job

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

When a soldier goes on sick call for an injury or illness, his ailment is most often treated by a physician's assistant.

PA's are specially trained medical personnel who consult with soldiers on many medical problems and provide training in medical related areas.

There are four PAs in the 197th Infantry Brigade, each in charge of the medical programs of a battalion, to include the Brigade's separate companies.

CWO2 John E. Donahue, physician's assistant for the 197th Support Battalion and Brigade Headquarters Company, discussed some of the duties and responsibilities associated with his Army work.

"PAs are (used most) in line battalions such as infantry, armor and artillery," Donahue said. "Working with a support battalion does have its advantages because we provide support to all the line battalions in the Brigade."

In the morning, Donahue checks soldiers who report on sick call, but in the afternoon, his time is filled with administrative tasks.

"A physician's assistant holds a doctor's job. We advise commanders on areas of health care, first aid, preventive medicine, field sanitation and personal hygiene," Donahue explained.

"We are concerned with matters that affect the health of 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers."

During one day on sick call, a battalion aid station will screen between 30 and 40 soldiers for illnesses or injuries.

Donahue said there are many ways to evaluate a patient's condition. "What each soldier tells me about how he is feeling and his vital signs, are important ways of determining his degree of illness. Another is the information in his medical history.

"I really enjoy my work as a physician's assistant," Donohue said. "I especially like teaching and spending time with soldiers."

Simple survival kit helps beat the odds in winter driving

National Safety Council

CHICAGO—Even a well-maintained car can stall in winter weather. If your car becomes stuck in freezing temperatures, avoid the temptation to walk for help unless you are sure shelter and a telephone are a short distance away.

Instead, stay with the car, put the hood up, and turn on your flashers. Then make use of your survival kit, which the Council says should include:

☐ Flares or reflective triangles. Put one about five paces behind the car, and another about 120 paces back.

☐ A shovel so you can dig your car out.

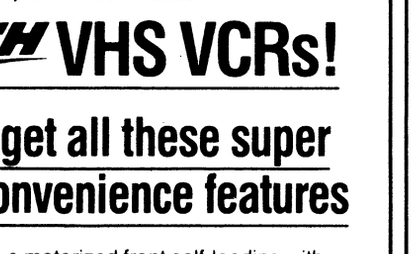
☐ Two large plastic trash bags. Poke a hole in the bottom seam for your head and slip the bag over your body.

☐ A coffee can, candle and matches. You can melt snow for water, and put the candle in the can to warm your hands and feet.

☐ Some non-perishable food for energy. Your body requires substantially more calories to survive in cold temperatures. Don't forget an opener for canned foods.

If you do find yourself stranded, be careful not to keep the windows rolled up while the motor and heater are running.



Poisonous carbon monoxide could be entering your car if there's a leak in your exhaust system.

197th Infantry Brigade

During the last few days the troops of the 72nd Engineer Company (Combat), 197th Infantry Brigade have been carrying out an important mission.

However, the mission is not a routine operation for a combat engineer unit that is accustomed to providing predominantly tactical support to manueuver units.

The 72nd Eng. Co. is contributing its construction skills toward the "Hobo Alley Project" by cutting and clearing thick underbrush and trees behind the Traffic Circle Plaza area on Fort Benning Road.

"I'm excited about the mission because it's something different from an ordinary operation and it helps beautify the area," said SP4 Ken W. Taylor, a combat engineer from the 72nd.

According to Maj. Charlton Brice, 197th Infantry Brigade Engineer, the 72nd Eng. Co. is responsible for clearing 550 meters of the section from Torch Hill Road to Victory Drive.

Brice said, "I think the clearing of this particular area will be well appreciated by the community, because residents have complained about the crime, trash and overgrown brush."

Nick Hunter, a manager at one of the stores in the shopping center said, "The work that is being done helps the community, and people will feel better about shopping here. It definitely has been an 'eyesore' for years and it means a great deal to clear up the area."

The removal of the thick growth and underbrush, entangled with paper, aluminum cans, old furniture and shopping carts has required hard physical labor and job experience, coupled with the engineer equipment.

The 43rd Engineer Battalion, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 34th Medical Battalion and 10th Mountain Division are all doing their part to finish the project, which is expected to be completed by the end of the month. — Clarence Pittman III, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent.

Recently, on Fort Benning's Ware Range, Company C, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry once again proved that within the battalion, its soldiers are the "Top Guns," during mechanized gunnery training.

The Ware Range complex, originally designed for gunnery exercises with the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, is a tactical maneuver course adapted for M112A2 Armored Personnel Carriers.

Target areas, comprised of moving or stationary targets representing dismounted troops and "Soviet" vehicles were attacked with vengence by "Chargin' Charlie" soldiers. Targets ranged from 150 to 1500 meters and were engaged effectively with an array of mechanized infantry organic weapons. — B. A. Souerwine, Company C, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry.

36th Engineer Group

The recent visit of "60 Minutes" co-anchor, Morley Safer, attracted a lot of attention to Fort Benning and to the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle.

However, the demonstrations at Redcloud Range and Engineer Landing Jan. 13, might not have beeen possible without the support of the 36th Engineer Group.

According to 1st Lt. Dominic Macaluso, executive officer of Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, soldiers from Co. C worked into the "wee" hours Jan. 10 through 12 preparing for the team's visit.

Macaluso said that equipment including scrapers to graders were brought out to whip up an obstacle course designed to match the BIFV against the M113 Armored Personnel Carrier.

The 36th Engineer Group soldiers were also instrumental in supporting the exhibition at Engineer Landing.

1st Lt. Kenneth Young, executive officer, 586th Engineer Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, said that soldiers from the 43rd are responsible for taking soil samples and testing the soil at the Engineer Landing as well as measuring the speed of the current of the river.

"Anytime something swims on this post, our company is there," Young said. The Assault Float Bridge company provided support with three MK1 Bridge Erection boats as the "60 Minutes" crew watched the Bradleys "swim" the Chattahoochee River.

Concern for safety was the reason for the 586th support mission. They were there for demonstrations Jan. 10, 12 and 13.

According to Young, the 586th has some important projects coming up, including bridging support for the 197th Infantry Brigade in a February Field Training Exercise. — Shawn Bryson, 36th Engineer Group correspondent.

Army needs soldiers to volunteer for astronaut training program

By Jim Rabon
Military Personnel Center

Do you have a degree in engineering, physical science, biological science or mathematics, and at least three years of related experience?

If you do, you should consider applying to become an astronaut.

To support the continuing space shuttle effort, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration selects astronaut candidates every year based on need and anticipated personnel attrition. The Army's nomination program is open to soldiers of all ranks in both active and Reserve components, according to a MILPERCEN spokesman.

Nominees are chosen from the best qualified applicants by an annual Army Astronaut Candidate Selection Board. Successful Army nominees who are chosen by NASA to enter into the astronaut program can expect a six-year tour with NASA. Those accepted are then required to complete a three-year service obligation with the Army upon release from NASA.

The Army is in a difficult position in being competitive for astronaut-pilot positions because of the 1,000 hours of pilot-in-command time required in high performance jet aircraft. However, soldiers are very competitive for astronaut-mission specialist positions, and there has been one Army astronaut chosen in each of the last four selections.

Currently, Col. Sherwood "Woody" Spring, Lt. Col. Jim Adamson and Capt. Charles "Sam" Gemar are serving as astronauts at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, Texas. Col. Robert Stewart is the senior Army astronaut and is awaiting promotion, at which time his nine years of service at NASA will end.

The 1986 Army Astronaut Candidate Selection Board nominated 45 officers to represent the Army in NASA's 1987 astronaut selection process. These officers came from several branches, but aviation, with 28 selected, had the largest representation. Army nominees selected by NASA as astronaut candidates this year will report for training at Johnson Space Center in July 1987.

From July 1 until Oct. 1, 1987, the Army will again accept applications for the astronaut candidate program. Nominees selected by the Army in 1987 will be considered by NASA for duty as astronaut candidates beginning in 1988.

In addition to the above-mentioned degrees and experience, applicants must be able to pass the NASA Class II flight physical (similar to an Army Class II), to include the following standards:

☐ Visual acuity 20/100 or better uncorrected; correctable to 20/20.

☐ Hearing — not to exceed maximum dB loss in each ear (ISO standards)

Freq (Hq)	500	1000	2000
Loss (dB)	30	25	25

☐ Blood pressure not to exceed 140/90, measured in a sitting position

☐ Height between 60 and 76 inches.

As for specific skills sought by the NASA selection committee, mission specialists are considered in six categories: space science, earth science, life science, materials science, general engineering and flight test engineering.

Factors that will be considered include the level and quality of academic achievement; applicability and recency of education; amount, applicability and quality of work experience; and other demonstrated practical and applicable experience and reference, the spokesman said.

"The Army is continually trying to increase the number of astronaut candidates selected by NASA, and all qualified are encouraged to apply," the spokesman said.

Application letters generally take three to four weeks to complete and should be started as soon as possible.

Write before July 1 for an Army astronaut application packet: Commander, USAMILPERCEN, ATTN: DAP-OPZ-AV, 200 Stovall Street, Alexandria, Va., 22332-0400.

Infantry School tests robotic vehicle for possible use

'Ranger' goes where other troops can't to accomplish mission on battlefield

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Remember R2D2, the little robot in the movie "Star Wars?" Well, the Infantry Center recently tested its version of R2D2 — a "Robotic Ranger."

Ranger weighs 500 pounds and is just 3 feet tall. The robot moves under its own battery power and is controlled by a soldier using a control unit with a video screen connected to Ranger by a thin strand of fibre optics cord.

The Ranger can mount everything from a machine gun to an anti-tank weapon and move out against an enemy almost totally oblivious to terrain conditions, weather or hostile fire.

"Ranger was developed by Grumman Corporation and tested here in May and June," said John Cave, an Infantry School equipment specialist in electronics and robotics.

"The robot soldier did very well in the tests conducted and proved that robotics has a place on the modern battlefield," Cave added.

The tests, conducted by the Infantry Board, consisted of mounting various systems on the Ranger's four-wheeled, battery-driven platform and using the systems in simulated tactical scenarios.

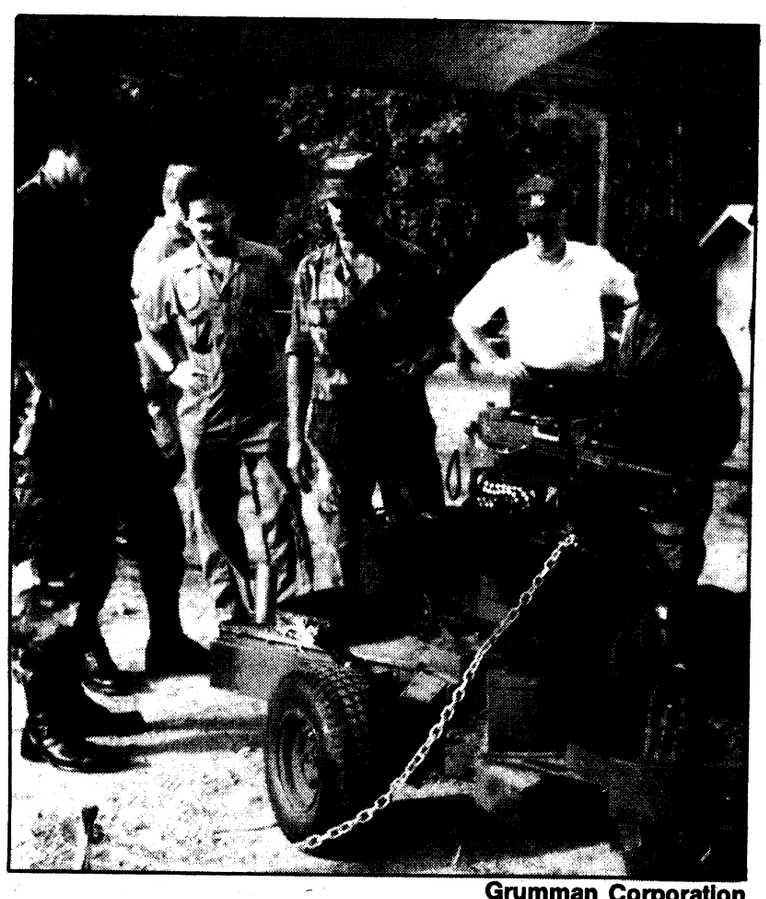
The weapons mounted on the Ranger included the AT-4 anti-tank weapon, a video reconnaissance system, a 240C machine gun from a Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, a chemical and radiation sensing device and a satchel charge device.

Signals for movement and use of systems on the Ranger are sent by a soldier using a video control box that allows the soldier, through the video screen, to "see" where he wants Ranger to go and when to use the system aboard Ranger.

Fibre optics, the cord linking Ranger to the control box, transmits light signals through its glass-fiber to a signal receiver, in this case, Ranger. These signals include video transmissions and multiple communications, an innovation due to fibre optic's ability to transmit signals over a much wider "band" than conventional wire can transmit.

According to Cave, the use of a robot-like Ranger will allow a soldier to perform reconnaissance, knock out enemy bunkers or tanks, lay down fire or detect chemical and radiation levels from a position that is removed from the action, and therefore, less hazardous.

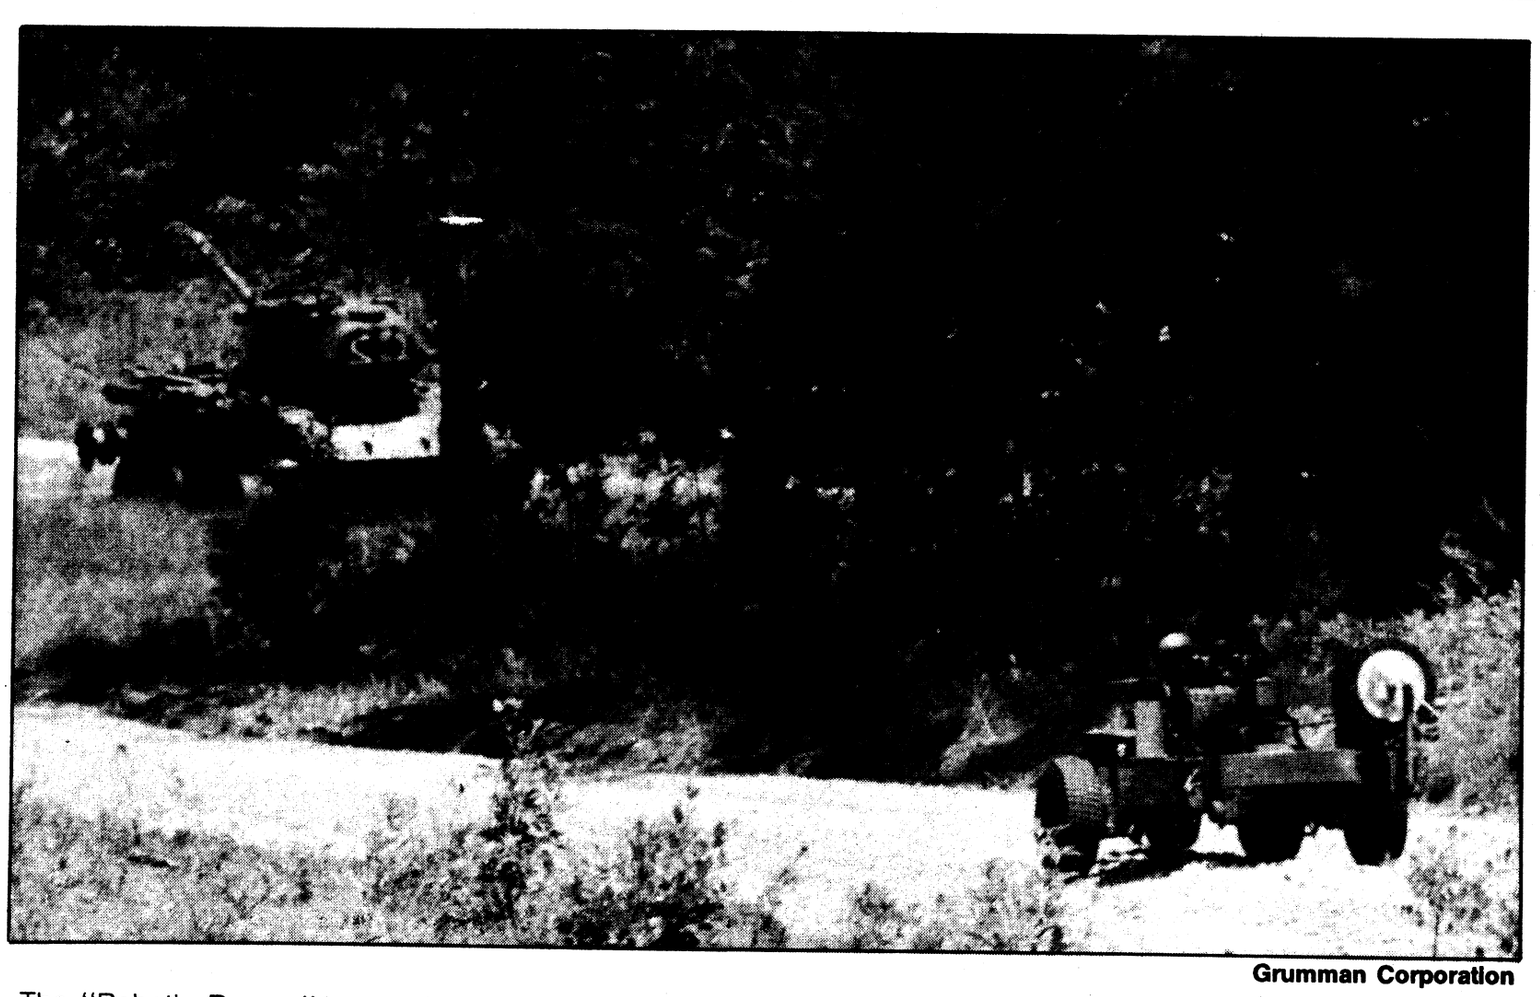
"The infantry is interested, on a priority basis, in a Teleoperated, Mobile Anti-Armor Platform. The production cost of such a robot would be in the $12,000 range. A (tube-launched, optically sensed, wire-guided) missile alone costs $12,000. The TMAP would be cost effective for the Army as an anti-tank weapon," Cave said.



The TMAP robot, besides serving as a weapons platform, could also be used as a decoy to draw fire and, consequently, locate an enemy's position or be used as "guards" at military bases, serving as the eyes and ears of security.

"Using robotics should be a force multiplier and should increase soldier survivability on the battlefield as much as possible but still enable them to accomplish their given missions," said Cave.

He's better because . . .



Robotic weapons are superior to soldiers in many ways. Some of those are:

- ☐ They are not afraid of anything.
- ☐ A robot needs no rest.
- ☐ They never get thirsty or hungry.
- ☐ They will go any place humans are afraid to go.
- ☐ Robots don't get bored.
- ☐ They are always fully alert and vigilant.
- ☐ They'll carry out any com-mand.
- ☐ A robot's senses are keener and he's much more alert than a human.
- ☐ A robot never suffers from battle fatigue.
- ☐ The government doesn't have to worry about costs for a robot's retirement. medical ben-efits or pay.

Energy

Post Energy Office

A comparison of energy consumption in the United States with the performance of our economy shows the two are directly related.

The Gross National Product and energy consumption follow the same track when plotted on a graph.

What would happen if your organization could not get an adequate supply of energy?

Or what would happen if your customers could not get an adequate supply of oil, gas or electricity? If your organization is like most, and your job is like most, neither your organization nor your job would survive.

Another way of looking at this is to consider what would happen to the cost of providing goods and services if energy was in short supply.

The cost of providing goods and services would go up and then the price of these goods and services must also go up in order for the company to stay in business.

Therefore, the cost of living would go up and the demand for goods and services go down. When this happens, surpluses occur and layoffs must follow. All this creates downward pressure on wages and salaries because cheaper labor is also available. In short, we end up with both inflation and unemployment.

If our economy, our country and our way of life are to survive, we must assure that we have an adequate supply of energy for the present and future.

This requires that we eliminate our wasteful uses of energy and that we take the proper measures to assure discovery and development of all of our nation's potential energy resources.

Everyone can and must be involved if we are to be successful. You can make a difference in your home and office if only you make the effort.

Task force studies change to AirLand Battle Doctrine

Military Personnel Center

During the past two years, a small task force has been leading the Army's effort to bring the personnel community on line with AirLand Battle Doctrine.

This Army of Excellence Task Force, operating under a deputy chief of staff for personnel charter, put hundreds of personnel and administrative functions under the microscope, using dozens of workshops to analyze personnel work in the field. The goal — find out a better, more economical way to do business.

Lt. Col. Fred Lamb, who is deputy director of the task force, reports: "We are really making excellent headway. People throughout the personnel community are working hard to clearly define what personnel work is to be done and who does it."

He added that there are major changes in the way we do business in the corps, divisions and posts, as the doctrine and structure for personnel and administrative organizations change.

"In fact, major efforts are underway to absorb significant reductions in the number of soldiers authorized to operate military personnel systems on the battlefield," Lamb said.

"The full effect of reductions won't be felt until 1988, but we must be ready."

Lamb says the task force has focused on five programs during this transition period.

☐ Standardizing personnel operations in the field.
☐ Introducing new manpower standards.
☐ Automating as much work as possible.
☐ Modernizing regulations.

Each of the programs involve a number of key players and many actions. The task force is providing senior Army leaders progress reviews, with the target of late calendar year 1987 for implementation of most improvements and changes.

During the first phase, the AOE task force accomplished the following:

☐ Identified manpower requirements for the Table of Distribution linkage to personnel service companies and division G1/AG shops and entered them into the manpower resource process.

☐ Embarked on producing 18 supporting personnel regulations, which will consolidate major portions of more than 50 current regulations and pamphlets. These regulations will be written in MILPERCEN with guidance form the task force.

"One of our greatest successes has been simplifying, streamlining and eliminating hundreds of time consuming efforts," Lamb said.

Army has openings for SERE school

Military Personnel Center

Survival, Evasion, Resistance and Escape Training teaches soldiers about the Code of Conduct and techniques to support it. The code provides guidelines for behavior for members of the Armed Forces in combat or captivity.

MILPERCEN is seeking applications from active Army enlisted soldiers for course 3A-F38/-12-F27, SERE High-Risk Training, according to SFC Timothy G. Broeder, combat arms team chief of the Enlisted Specialized Training Management Branch.

"The course trains soldiers who require Level C SERE training," Broeder said. The levels are specified by Department of Defense Directive 1300.7, Army Regulation 350-30 and HQDA DAMO-TRF message 131352Z May 86.

"Level C training in peacetime is for soldiers who, because of their assignments or missions, have a high risk of being taken hostage by terrorists or of being detained by hostile government," Broeder explained. "This includes soldiers assigned to Special Forces A teams, Ranger battalions and long-range surveilliance unit reconnaissance patrols."

The three-week course is offered about once a month at the U.S. Army John F. Kennedy Special Warfare Center at Fort Bragg, N.C..

Soldiers should apply for Survival, Evasion, Resistance and Escape training on DA Form 4187, Request for Personnel Action. Applications must be completed in accordance with DA Pam 600-8, procedure 3-10, and must be accompanied by DA Forms 2A and 2-1. Forward forms through the chain of command to MILPERCEN, Attn: DAPC-EPT-F, 2461 Eisenhower Ave., Alexandria, VA 22331-0400. (AV 221-7339, commercial 202-325-7339).

Chattahoochee County opens tag office on post

Move aims to reduce lines, speed up customer service

The Bayonet staff

A story in The Bayonet Jan. 16 included some streets within Fort Benning Housing areas that are in Muscogee County on a list of Chattahoochee County addresses.

Chattahoochee Country residents can now purchase their automobile tags at an office on post.

The office is on the second floor of the Main Post 1st National Bank at the Hall Street side of the buidling.

According to Marilyn Hauck, a Chattahoochee County registrar who works in the new office, tags are being sold under a staggered system this year.

Persons with last names beginning with letters A through D should buy their tags in January. Names E through K should buy their tags in February, with L through R in March and S through Z in April.

The tax is figured on the value of the car but non-residents only pay an $8 fee. If you are a non-resident, you must have an ad valorem tax exemption form, which can be picked up at the Staff Judge Advocate's office.

The Chattahoochee County Tax Commissioner is mailing out applications to all people who registered with them last year. Upon receipt, you can mail your application to the commission with a check or money order and a tag will be sent to you.

"Be sure to include your ad valorem tax exemption form in mail orders," Mrs. Hauck said.

The deadline for renewing Georgia tags is May 1 and penalties will be imposed after that date.

The Fort Benning Tag Office is open from 8 a.m. to noon and 1 to 5 p.m. week days. For more information, call 689-8734.

Education key to reducing teen pregnancy

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

Times have changed since the days when being pregnant outside marriage was considered a sin in the eyes of society.

"You don't see many parents throwing their kids out of the house these days,"said Peggy Locascio, a counselor with Social Work Services at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Part of her job is to counsel all single women who are diagnosed as pregnant at the hospital.

"What I do is deal with the emotional aspects and the crisis of the pregnancy," she said.

Once she gets the referral, Mrs. Locascio said she sets up an appointment to talk with the patient about her feelings toward the pregnancy, her options and alternatives.

"For many, it's a time of panic. They're feeling guilty, embarrassed and afraid," she said. "I try to assess where they are emotionally and what type of support they're going to have at home."

The majority of the girls she talks to want to keep their babies. "Most of them are looking for affection and a loving relationship," she said. While the baby does provide an outlet for their affection, it also demands a lot of attention and may not fulfill all the girl's emotional needs.

Basically the girls have three alternatives, she said. "They can continue the pregnancy and keep the child, terminate the pregnancy, or have the baby and put it up for adoption," Mrs. Locascio said.

"I tell them how their lives will change once the baby is born," she said.

According to a 1980 study on teen pregnancy by Dr. Kantner Hollingsworth, infants born to teen-age mothers are "at risk for a wide range of developmental problems, including prematurity, child abuse or neglect, physical and emotional retardation, poor school performance and serious delinquent behavior."

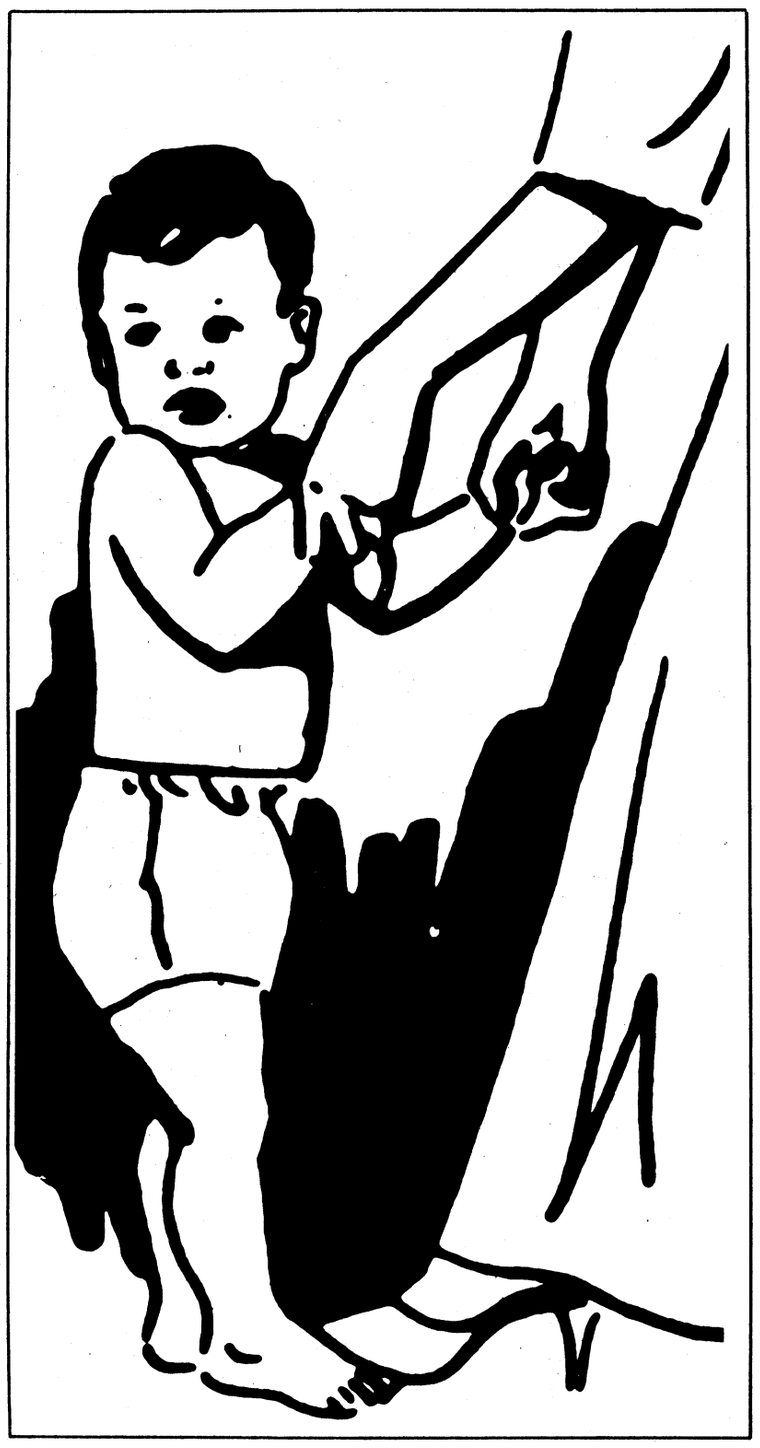
Teen-agers who are military dependents are eligible for medical care at MACH, Mrs. Locascio said, but their babies are not. "The baby is not eligible to obtain an ID card unless the father or mothr is military, or is adopted by the military sponsor," she explained. "Teens have to take their babies to a private doctor and may be eligible to enroll in Medicaid."

For a teen-ager without a high school diploma who has no job and no money coming in, medical care for the child would present an immediate financial hardship.

If a teen-ager chooses to have an abortion, she has to go someplace other than Martin Army Hospital. Mrs. Locascio said MACH does not perform elective abortions, except in a case where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term, or in the case of victims of rape or incest, when such crimes have been reported promptly to law enforcement personnel.

"If they choose termination, I refer them to an appropriate agency locally and CHAMPUS does not pay for it," she said.

Generally, the fathers of the babies do not provide much support, she said. "Most are young adolescents themselves who are not able to provide much support. Most of them are either still in high school or are dropouts," she said.



If a teen mother decides to put the baby up for adoption, a state agency handles the placement with a family, Mrs. Locascio said. "They come out after the delivery and pick up the child. My job in this case is helping the mothers cope with the grief of giving the baby up."

Mrs. Locascio said she doesn't encourage pregnant teens to get married, because "pregnancy is not a good basis for a marriage."

The best solution to the problem of teen pregnancy is to prevent it, Mrs. Locascio said. She said birth control education should be taught at school and at home. "Parents need to teach kids to make decisions and be responsible early in life," she said.

According to a MACH spokeswoman, any teen can be seen in the Obstetrics and Gynocology Clinic at MACH and the Women's Health Clinic for matters of birth control, pregnancy or venereal disease, without parental consent. She is considered an adult when receiving treatment for these conditions.

For an appointment, call the Ob/Gyn Clinic at 544-1209 or the Women's Health Clinic at 545-5803.

60,000 soldiers fired last year

By Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

An airman fails a drug rehabilitation program. A sailor with a pattern of minor disciplinary infractions commits still another offense. A soldier is found to be a homosexual. A Marine is convicted of a felony by civilian authorities.

Think only civilians can be fired from their jobs?

Wrong. Last year, more than 60,000 were discharged from the military against their will, according to a spokesman for the Defense Manpower Data Center.

Of these, almost half were separated for misconduct, including minor disciplinary infractions, a pattern of misconduct, commission of a serious offense, drug abuse or a civilian conviction.

More than 16,000 were discharged for unsatisfactory performance and another 7,000-plus, for failure to satisfactorily complete a drug or alcohol abuse rehabilitation program. More than 8,500 were discharged in lieu of a court-martial, and almost 6,000 were discharged following courts-martial.

And these figures don't include the more than 14,000 recruits discharged because they "washed out" during their first 180 days of duty or the 55,000 discharged "for the convenience of the government," which includes circumstances like hardship and pregnancy.

As high as these figures might sound, they're almost 15,000 lower than in fiscal years 1983 and 1984.

Lt. Col. Monte Lewis, chief of enlisted separations for the Air Force, said the positive trend is probably based on the higher quality men and women being recruited into the military.

"The people we're bringing on are probably the best people we've ever had. They have high scores on their entrance exams, good, marketable skills and a general stableness about them," he said. "This is being reflected directly in the number of involuntary separations we handle."

Involuntary separations are initiated by the services only when all other efforts to help a service member complete a successful enlistment have failed.

Some situations, however, are considered to be so serious that discharges may be initiated by commanders without rehabilitative counseling, but these situations are rare. For example, last year, almost 1,650 service members were discharged for homosexuality and more than 300 others for security reasons.

Unwed mother faced fear, rejection

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

When Faye (not her real name) found out she was three months pregnant, she was surprised and happy.

She had been taking birth control pills but "they were making me sick," so the doctor switched her to a lower dosage. She said she only took them two weeks when she decided to go to the doctor to find out why she was gaining weight.

Despite the initial shock, Faye said she was pleased about it. "I just wanted a baby," she said.

Unlike many teen-agers, Faye had a supportive family behind her. "I was living in North Carolina with my grandmother at the time, and when my mother found out about the baby, she immediately wanted me to come home," Faye said.

Faye's story isn't typical of teen mothers for many reasons. She had completed high school and was 19 years old when she became pregnant. She had been dating the baby's father for two years, and his response to the news was to ask Faye to marry him, but she refused.

"I wanted him to marry me because he loved me, not because of the baby," she said. "I've known a lot of girls who get in that situation and get married, and it doesn't work."

His response to the rejection was to disappear from Faye's life, a five-month separation that suddenly made Faye think about her situation.

"That's when I became scared. I had thought he was going to be there for me, to help with the baby," she said.

"It frightened me, I didn't know what I was going to do. I knew I had my parents but I felt it was his responsibility too."

She gained almost 50 pounds during her pregnancy and had other problems. "I was anemic so I had to take more iron," she said. "The doctors told me not to work because I had problems with my feet and legs." She was forced to drop out of her secretarial courses at Columbus Tech as the pregnancy advanced.

Faye also had a hard time delivering the baby. "I went to the hospital at 6 p.m. on a Tuesday and Crystal was born at 11:55 a.m. the next day.

"They were going to do a C-section because the baby's heart was beating too fast and I had a temperature of 102, but they finally gave me some kind of medicine that speeded up the labor," she said.

Now Faye is back in college and hopes to graduate in December with a degree in data processing and get a job working in civil service.

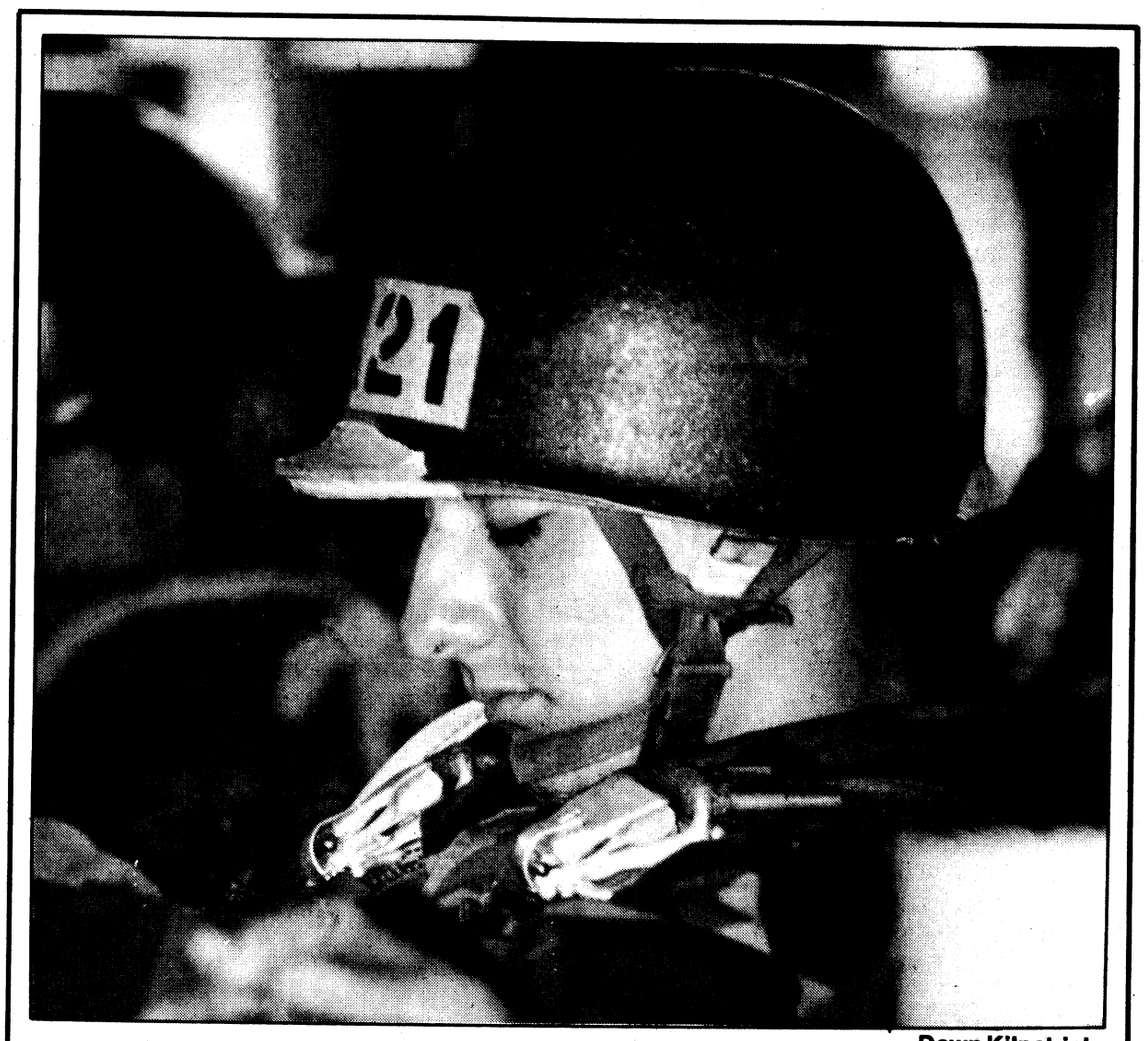
As she holds her 3-weeks-old daughter, her happiness shines through in her face. But Faye is quick to point out that this is not the outcome for most teen-agers she knows.

"Some of my friends' parents didn't want anything to do with them when they got pregnant, while others were deserted by their boyfriends," she said. "One girl I know did get married and they are now separated."

Faye was also lucky because her boyfriend seems to be coming around now."I wrote him a lot of letters." But, she got no response until she wrote him in care of his grandmother's and announced the birth of their daughter.

Then he called her, and they've been talking daily every since.

"He said he got nervous and tensed up when he realized he was going to be a father," Faye said. "Now I think there's a good possibility we'll get back together."



She said she would not recommend unwed motherhood to other teen-agers.

"I always thought it would be best to be married and financially stable. It's best that the baby have both its parents and them be together living in the same house," she said.

Faye's baby is not eligible for services at Martin Army Community Hospital, so she takes her to the Health Department and has applied for Medicaid.

But now that she and her boyfriend are talking again, Faye is hopeful. "He has a good job and has said he'll help me.

"Everything's working out good for me. But, not everybody's this lucky," she said.

Veterans Administration

ATLANTA — The more than 65,000 Georgia veterans who have kept their GI insurance in force will share in record dividends amounting to almost $935 million that will be paid to some 3.2 million policy-holders across the nation during 1987. The total is some $29 million more than was paid out last year.

Georgia commissioner of veterans affairs, Pete Wheeler, said, "These dividends are payable on the anniversary dates of individual policies, and the amounts received by policy-holders will vary, depending on the insurance plan under which a veteran is protected, the amount of coverage provided by the policy, the length of time the policy has been in force and the veteran's age at the time of issue or renewal."

Wheeler emphasized that no application for the annual dividend is necessary. "In fact he said, "Inquiries about dividends could cause a delay in payments. Dividend payments will be made automatically and in the manner previously selected by the policyholder, choices range from cash to the purchase of paid-up insurance."

The average dividend payable to the approximately one thousand Georgia veterans of World War I still holding their U.S. Government Life Insurance policies is about $260.

Georgia has some 55,000 World War II veterans who have kept their National Service Life Insurance policies in force, and their dividends will vary from $174 to $399 depending on the type of policy.

The state's 6,000 Korean War veterans who still have their Veterans Special Life Insurance will receive an average dividend of $234.

The Veterans Reopened Insurance program will share in some $31.9 million in dividends being paid to some 125,000 veterans nationwide. Dividends will average from $242 to $364. Around 2,400 of these veterans live in Georgia.

Dividends for individuals covered under each program will vary according to age, plan selected, and length of time the policy has been in force.

Not affected by the dividend payout are Vietnam era veterans and post-Vietnam era veterans who fall under different life insurance programs.

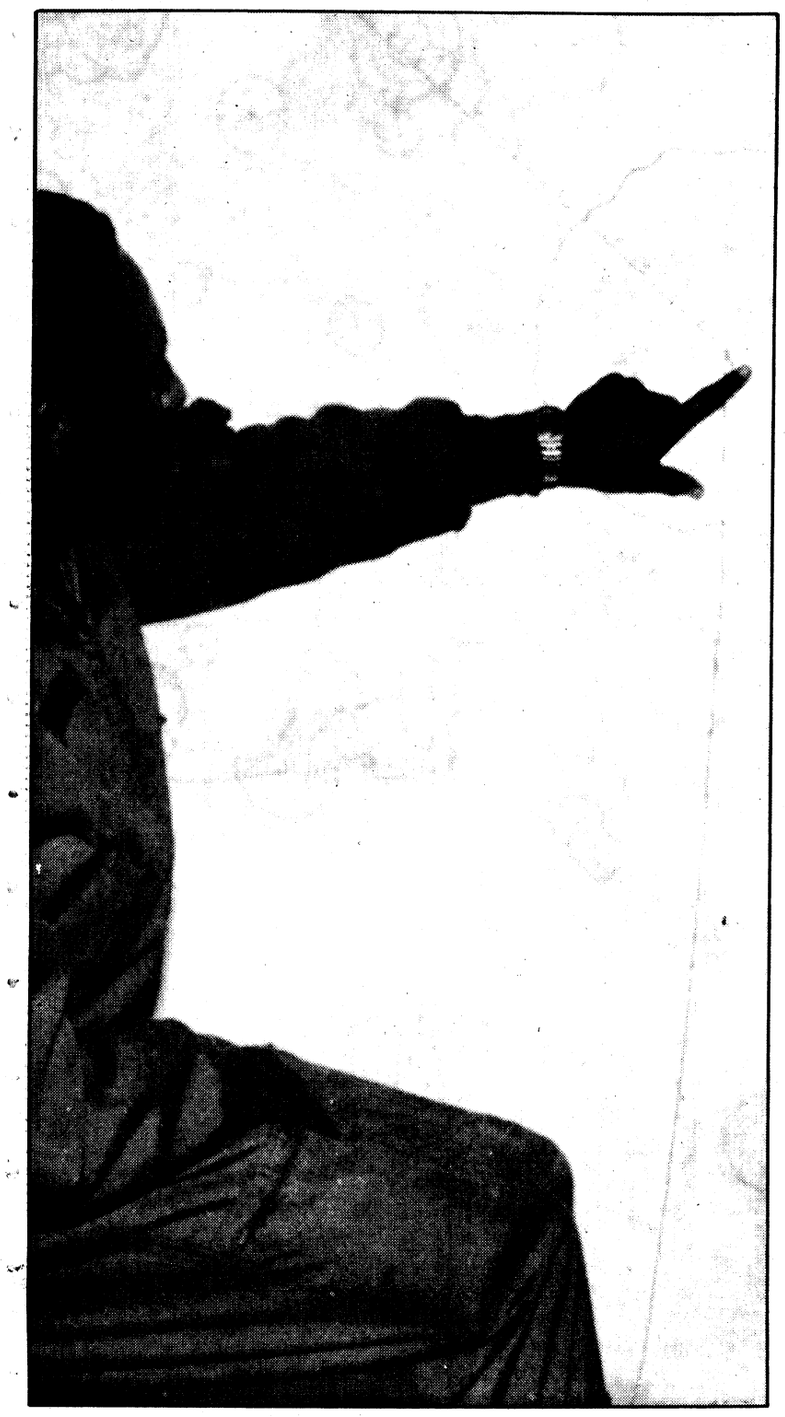
"OUR NEW ARMY HOUSING IS NICE TO COME HOME TO. IT WAS WORTH THE WAIT."

SFC Ron Rhodes and his wife Connie.

"It sure didn't take us long to get comfortable in our new house here at Fort Polk. Connie loves the size and lay-out. Ronnie-Lee loves the playground. And there's even room to store my boat.

"We love our quarters. This house has been very important for us in making a good home.



"Because we're in the Army, people may not expect us to live this well. But the Army has changed a lot in the past five years. It's a good place to live, to be.

"Connie and I feel that the Army's really come a long way in housing and, you know, in taking care of its people."

The overall quality of quarters on posts throughout the Army continues to improve. And housing starts and renovations are at an all-time high. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

Flying the friendly skies

Club provides planes, lessons

By Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

Flying the friendly skies dosen't have to be in C-141s or helicopters with someone else at the wheel. The average "Joe" dosen't have to dream of the day when he can fly himself or the day when he will be rich enough to take flying lessons.

At the Fort Benning Flying Club a pilot's license is within your grasp.

According to Flying Club manager Stewart Whisnant, some people thought the club was going to close. "The club is alive and well. Col. James Ellis, Fort Benning's chief of staff, directed that we keep the club open and that is exactly what we're doing," he said.

Located in Building 2416 at Lawson Army Airfield, the club is a nonappropriated fund activity that is designed to provide a recreational outlet and to teach those interested how to fly and to keep them flying, Whisnant said.

The club is open to military activity duty, retired military and their family members as well as Department of the Army civilains.

Members of the club can rent any of the four planes the club has.

The Cessna C-150 or C-152 (two-place trainer) rents for $32 an hour and the Cessna C-182 (four place instrument trainer or cross country aircraft) is $51 an hour. Also available is a PA—28 R-200 Arrow cross country plane for $46 an hour.

Instruction is also available at the club. "We provide training for private, commercial, instrument and certified flight instructor ratings," Whisnant said.

"All four of our instructors are certified by the Federal Avaition Administration," he added.

People interested in learning how to fly must first join the club and pay an initiation fee of $35 and one month's dues of $15.

"The initiation fee is a one-time fee that entitles you to transfer your membership to any military flying club without an additional iniation fee provided you leave the club as a member in good standing," Whisnant explained.

Club members who are already rated can rent the planes by calling or going to the club.

"Our plane rentals are strictly on a first-come, first-serve basis, but if someone calls or comes down here, I'll put them on the scheduling sheet," Whisnant said.

The club office is open on weekdays except Wednesdays. For more information call 687-0254.

Happy Flying!

Spiritual

Program needs volunteers to show patients 'we care'

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Jan. 18 through 24 is the week of prayer for Christian unity, when Christians the world over devote special attention to the desire of Jesus that his followers become one (John 17: 21).

There is a Christian program at Fort Benning who seeks to put the mandate of the Lord into action, the Martin Army Community Hospital Chapel Volunteer Program.

MACH Chaplains Bob Reese and Phil Touw approached the Protestant Women of the Chapel and the Military Council of Catholic Women, seeking to expand a special ministry to people in the hospital.

Reese explains, "Aurelia 'Pete' Hardman has been very faithful in visiting patients and helping to establish contact between chaplains and patients, maybe dropping off some spiritual literature, and just being a friendly and concerned person.

"For instance, she offers a little 'mothering' to young soldiers away from home and in the hospital. That care can be very important in the healing process. We wanted to offer more people the opportunity to share that experience," Reese added.

Hoping to make it an inter-fatih project, Chaplain Reese contacted the two women's groups, planned an orientation workshop and worked out procedural details. On Nov. 12, 21 women attended the preparation session.

Now, every Friday from 10 a.m. until noon, the volunteers bring their "love ministry" to the hospital wards.

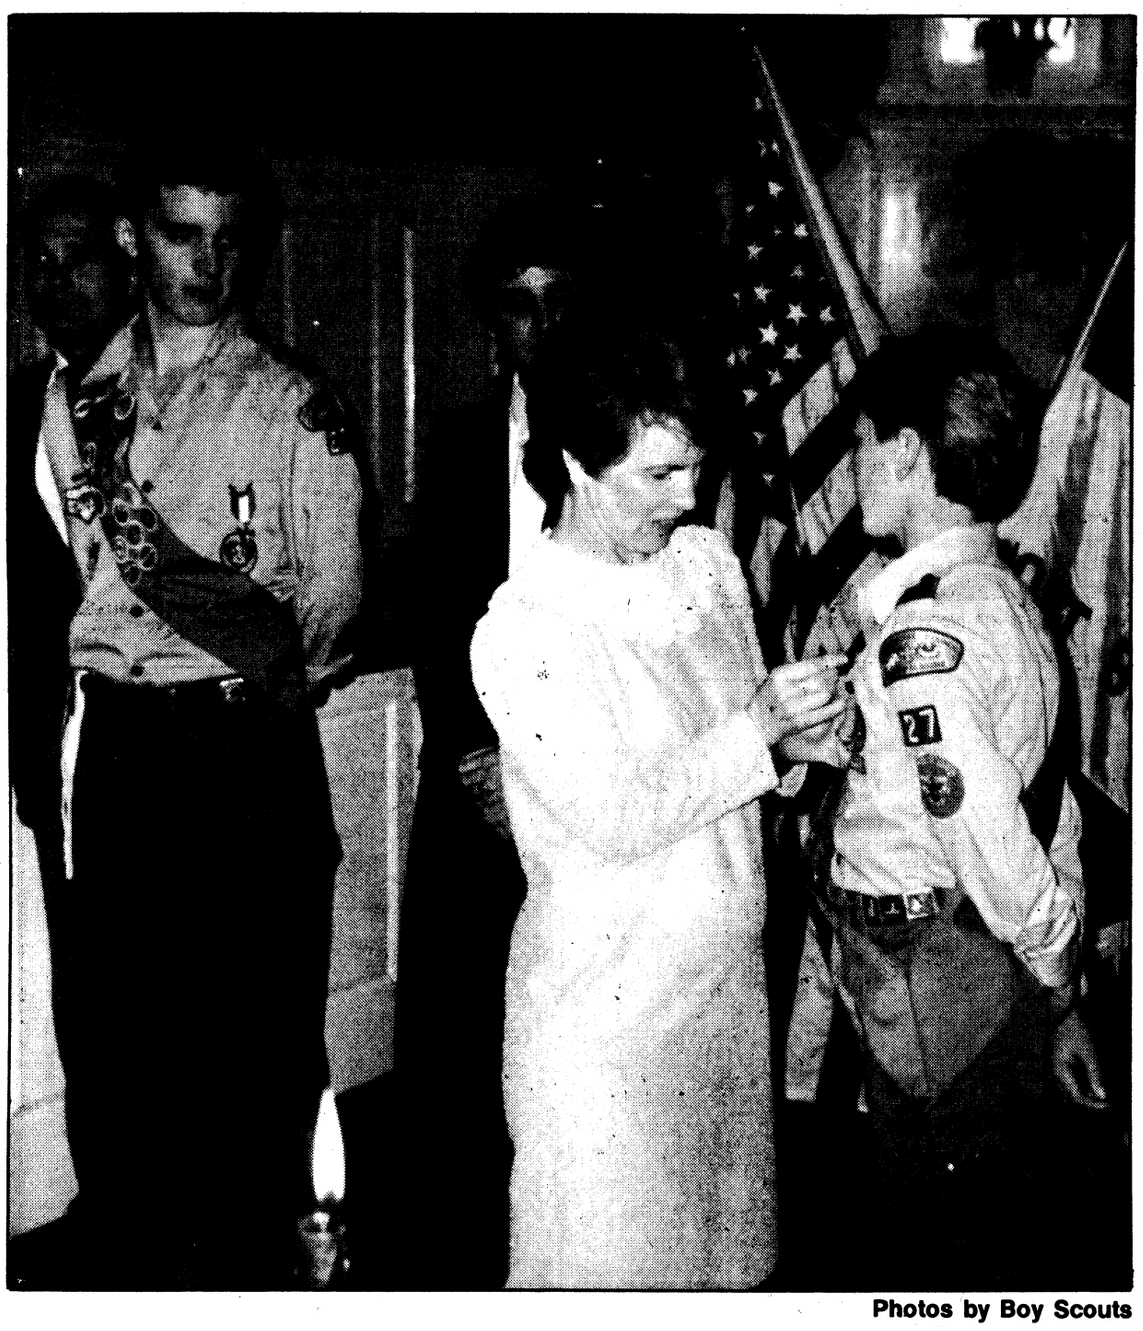
"We don't preach, although we will pray with someone if requested," says Shirley Mull, a program participant. "It's the person-to-person contact we're after, just listening and letting people know that they are cared for. We work with the chaplains and supplement their efforts."

"It's very simple really," says "Pete" Hardman. "You let your faith shine and just be yourself. The Lord will work through you."

The outreach program includes monthly "love ministry" to Oak Manor Nursing Home, as well.

More volunteers are needed. Call the MACH Chaplains Office at 544-1382 for details.

Participants may take advantage of free babysitting at the Religious Education Center on visiting days.



Reese forsees quarterly days when volunteers will get together for fellowship, sharing and further input.

Mrs. Mull summarizes the effect of the Hospital Ministry: "The people in the hopsital really seem to appreciate it. And they actually lift me up, too. Their faith inspires me."

Five post scouts earn Eagle Badges

By Richard Rhoades
Troop 27, Fort Benning Boy Scouts

Five Fort Benning Scouts recently achieved Scouting's highest advancement, the Eagle Scout award. Matthew Seybold, son of Col. and Mrs. Thomas Seybold, and David Bjarnason, sone of Chaplain (Capt.) and Mrs. John Bjarnason, were presented their awards in a ceremony at the main post chapel in December.

Scouts Keith M. Cornett-Latson, Jeffrey S. Niblett and Steven B. Rhoades received their awards in a joint ceremony. Guest speaker and assisting at the ceremony was Col. James R. Ellis, United States Army Infantry Center Chief of Staff, himself an Eagle Scout.

Only approximately 2 percent of all Boy Scouts attain the Eagle rank, according to Scoutmaster Maj. Harvey Latson. A candidate must earn 21 merit badges and successfully complete a community, church or synagogue related services project to earn the Eagle rank.

Keith M. Cornett-Latson joined scouting as a Cub Scout in July 1981. He has earned 27 merit badges as a Boy Scout. His Eagle service project was an old medicines awareness and collection drive. He has served as a patrol leader and member of leadership corps in Troop 27. He is also a member of the National Honor Society, is an accomplished percussionist in the Faith School Band and is a member of Gymnastics Unlimited. His parents are Maj. Harvey H. Latson and Ms. Pat Cornett.

Jeffrey Nimblett began scouting in September 1980 in Mobile, Ala. He has earned 21 merit badges and has attended three summer camps at Camp Calloway Boy Scout Camp. He has served in Troop 27 as patrol leader, assistant senior patrol leader and junior assistant scoutmaster.

His Eagle project involved the cleaning and preservation of a historical cemetery on Fort Benning. Nimblett has been a member of the Fort Benning Barracuda Swim Team. He has been active in high school Math and Science Clubs, and in the Christian Youth Group "Youth Alive." He is the son of Ronald Nimblett and Maj. Raymond and Carolyn Mulcahy.

Steve Rhoades began his scouting in 1977 at Fort Devens, Mass. as a Cub Scout. His scouting experience has included camping in Italy, Switzerland, France and Germany as well as the United States. He has earned 21 merit badges and is currently serving as the troop senior patrol leader.

His Eagle project was to organize the building of picnic tables for the Fort Benning Girl Scout Day Camp. Rhoades is a senior at Pacelli High School, where he is a member of the Interact and VIP Clubs. He is on the school yearbook staff and is a letterman in soccer.

Nurse Corps chief visits Fort Benning

By Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

Laurie J. Hill
Brig. Gen. Connie Slewitzke, chief of the Army Nurse Corps, talks with Maj. Betty C. Jones, a nursing methods analyst at Martin Army Community Hospital, during the general's annual visit.

If you passed her on the street, you may mistake her for someone's mother. But, if she happened to be wearing her "working clothes," a salute would probably be in order — if yoy're not a major general or higher, that is.

Last week, during a routine annual visit, Brig. Gen. Connie L. Slewitzke, chief of the Army Nurse Corps, met with hospital officials and patients at Martin Army Community Hospital.

A small thin woman, Slewitzke carries herself with the earned dignity of a general. She speaks with authoritative directness but there is also a touch of softness to her voice.

It seems that years of nursing and nurturing the needy has developed a gentleness in the general.

Slewitzke is an example of what women are capable of as career soldiers. Her uniform is adorned with ribbons reflecting her achievments.

Among Slewitzke's awards are the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star Medal, two awards of the Meritorious Service Medal, a Joint Services Commendation Medal and the Army Commendation Medal.

Slewitzke is a firm believer in the slogan "Be all you can be" and she thinks the slogan especially pertains to women in the Army.

"The biggest challenge to women in the Army today is to keep pushing to be sucessful," she said. "It's very competitive to remain in the Army. With all the personnel cuts you have to be professionally and militarily competitive. You have to be the cream of the crop," Slewitzke said.

Looking back over the years and the changes that women have endured, Slewitzke said the Army is easier now than it's ever been. "I think it's getting a little bit easier for women if you look at women in the Army in general, not just in the medical profession," she said.

"I remember when women could not be married and stay in the Army, nor could they be pregnant or have dependant children. Women also had to have special permission to live off post."

Her blonde hair neatly frames a face that looks much younger than her 50 years. She peers out of her large, frameless glasses as her mind moves back to the present.

"But we have a lot of opportunities for advancement and opportunity for all kinds of educational levels," she said.

While on the subject of education, Slewitzke proudly mentions her nurses. "We are the most educated of community nurses in the world. Because we all have bachelor's degrees and at corps lvels, many of the nurses have master's degrees and above," Slewitzke said.

As a result of Slewitzke's emphasis on research, new standards have been set in this country. "We are ahead of our civilian counterparts in nursing and research and as a result, I think we have developed the most advanced statistical workload management for staffing. It was recently validated and will develop into new staffing standards," Slewitzke said.

"We are very pleased at where we've been able to go in education and research," Slewitzke said.

Slewitzke is no stranger to education. She is a graduate of the University of Maryland, where she received a bachelor's degree. She went on to receive a master's degree in counseling and guidance from St. Mary's University in San Antonio, Texas.

Slewitzke's military schools include the Command and the General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., where she was the first female class president. She has also completed the Army War College.

Slewitzke believes that travel is a sacrifices commonly made by soldiers. "You really have to be adaptable no matter where you are. You can't join an organization like the Army unless you're willing to travel," she said. "But I never had a job I didn't like," she added.

Promoting the Army throughout her life, Slewitzke said that although she has many memorable experiences of her career, the most unforgetable was the day she became a general officer.

A veteran of more than 29 years service with the Army Nurse Corps, she is planning to retire next year.

She has served many in many stateside assignments, including chief of the Department of Nursing at Letterman Army Medical Center at Presidio of San Francisco, Calif., from 1978 to 1980.

During various overseas tours, Slewitzke worked as chief nurse in the Medical Command during one of her two tours in Korea. She has also served in Europe, Vietnam and Hawaii.

Brig. Gen. Connie L. Slewitzke is a shining example of a woman who is all she can be in the Army.

Schools set bad weather plan

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools correspondent

Since winter months sometimes bring the possibility of snow and/or ice, it is important for Fort Benning parents and students to discuss procedures for possible school closing or early release.

Every effort is made by the Fort Benning School System to keep students in attendance. If, due to weather conditions, schools close for the day of start the day later than the regular starting time, the decision will be made as early that morning as possible. Parents and students should listen to local radio and television stations for announcements regarding school closure or changes in school starting times.

Early dismissal during the school day is rare and would only be considered when student safety required it. Announcements regarding an early dismissal would also be made on local radio and television stations.

While early dismissal is rare, it is important for parents and children to discuss this possibility. Children should know what to do and who to contact when they reach home if early dismissal due to inclement weather occurs.

Legal Assistance

Q. My family and I have just been assigned to Fort Benning. We should be here for a three-year assignment, but there are no guarantees.

Some of my friends say that it is worth it to buy a home instead of renting if on-post quarters are unavailable. It sounds good too me. Are they drawbacks?

A. The buy or rent dilemma is not a new one nor have the considerations changed.

The ownership of a house or trailer may result in less of a monthly payment in some cases, as well as allow some to itemize on their federal tax return.

Considering the changes in the 1986 tax code, except for those with a high monthly payment, the ability to itemize may disappear.

A problem with ownership is that there may come a time when you need to sell the property and there are no buyers or it may take many months to sell. Your ability to maintain two payments for several months may need to be examined.

When you buy a home, you become your own landlord. That means that when something breaks, you have to fix it or pay someone to fix the problem.

The positive side of home ownership cannot be fully appreciated. Besides privacy, you are building equity, creating a solid credit rating and being responsible only to yourself.

Renting permits you to have others worry about maintenance and repair. On the other hand, many times repairs are not made quickly enough and may involve a great amount of irritation.

Many times a tenant is held liable for damages beyond normal wear and tear. Depending on the lease, there is no guarantee that you will be allowed to rent the same apartment or house for your entire tour of duty.

If you wish to discuss this further, contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

Q. My wife and I have wills that were made at Fort Benning about 10 years ago. When a friend of ours died recently his wife had great difficulty in finding the witnesses to the wills. Is there anything my wife and I can do to make sure that our survivors don't have this problem?

A: The best thing you can do is get new wills made. The will can be made identical to the old one, but any changes necessary can be made quite quickly.

Recent changes in the laws of almost all states now provide for "self-proving" clauses, which means that you don't have to track down witnesses (or pay for someone to do it).

At the time of the making of the will, the witnesses sign the self-proving clause, which is basically an affidavit that they thought you, the maker of the will, knew what you were doing when you signed your will.

When you die, your survivors can save considerable time (and money), because of the self-proving clause.

A legal assistance attorney can explain it to you when you come in for an appointment.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

You have probably already noticed the increase in bicycles on and around Fort Benning. Many new bicycles were bought as Christmas presents and are now being operated by the youth of our community. Others are being used as an easy and pleasant way to travel to and from work with the added bonus of exercise.

To ensure safety in cycling, the bicycle's safety equipment should be maintained. Mandatory safety equipment includes brakes, reflectors and a headlight that can be seen from 300 feet away.

Military Police patrols are issuing warnings to cyclists who do not have the proper safety equipment. Continued negligence in obtaining and maintaining the bicycle safety equipment may result in the bicycle being impounded.

As an added precaution, reflectorized stips should be worn on the clothing. They will help to increase the visibility of the cyclist.

I would like to invite everyone to the Faith School parking lot on Feb. 7 to attend the Bicycle Rodeo and Crime Prevention Van Display. The hours are from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

We will be registering bicycles, fingerprinting children over the age 2 and the bicyclist who attend will be given an opportunity to test their safety skills. In addition, our displays in the Crime Prevention van will be available to the public, along with videos and literature on ways of preventing crime in your community. We will be available to answer any question you may have.

I believe this will be a great opportunity for the entire family to become aware of programs and procedures for making our community a safe and healthy place to live.

Margaret Lewis (12), of the 197th Infantry Brigade team, scrambles for the ball during last week's intramural game.

Intruders top 197th team in women's season opener

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The Women's Intramural Basketball League leaped to great heights Wednesday as the Intruders opened up the season, zipping past the 197th Brigade in a 35-28 victory.

Though the 197th took control of the opening jump, and kept the pressure on throughout the first half, there was no restraint for the Intruders as they came to the final buzzer.

Intruder-ball consisted of both the outside and inside game which allowed them to hold a one point lead at the half.

The 197th team found themselves in an early rut, as Suzette Gibson and Mrytle Mixon had led the Intuders to a 8-3 lead. But the 197th fought back as Annette Smith and Margaret Lewis came off the offensive glass for the easy scores.

With only seconds remaining in the half Lewis and Betty Ann Perry combined on a fast break to end the period at 13-14.

The edge was off in the second period as Mixon went to the boards and Mixon fired from every point on the court.

The Intruders' Gibson and Lewis of the 197th were tied as high scorers with 14 points, while Mixon drove 10 points into the hole for the Intruder win.

Margaret Lewis (12), of the 197th Infantry Brigade team, and Intruder Annette Smith (10) vie for control of the ball. The two teams faced off during Women's Intramural League play last week.

Orienteering

Train now for next year's meet

By Linda Ferguson
Fort Benning Orienteering Director

Editor's Note: This is the first of a series of articles on how to teach Orienteering. It is from information provided by Sara and Larry Berman, editors of "Orienteering North America," the official publication of the United States Orienteering Federation.

Believe it or not, this is the time to start training for next year's Orienteering competitions. So many of you have expressed concern about the number of people on your teams who just simply cannot find their way through the woods. They're eager to be part of a team but their skill levels are too poor to be relied on in competition. Right now, while you are training for this year's championship, is the time to work on those skills.

We have a tendency, because of our lack of formal Orienteering coaching courses in the U.S., to simply rely on the basic land navigation training that the military provides or on 30 minutes of very simplistic instruction. This is simply not enough time to learn the variety of Orienteering skills and techniques needed to feel self-confident in competition

In most sports, the techniques involved are isolated and learned one at a time. A skill is taught, it is practiced, and then it is tested. In Orienteering, however, at least in much of North America, we have the tendency to start people off with 10 or 15 minutes of instruction, trying to cram in the whole gamut of skills, and then send them out on a course.

Gunnar Hasselstrand of Oxelosund, Sweden, has developed a step-by-step method of teaching orienteering skills. His approach is a simple and logical progression of skill development.

Refering to the chart, you will be able to follow along with the skill progression that Hasselstrand has outlined in his book, which is due to be translated from Swedish to English, this year. Next week, ground level and levels one and two will be covered. It will be followed by three and four in two weeks. In two weeks, adults, with a minimal amount of land-navigation training can be taught the skills in the first three levels. Accomplishing levels three and four will take more time and will vary with each orienteer and the amount of time they can devote to practicing.

Retros, Outlaws score wins in Over-35 league basketball action

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

In a recent Over-35 Basketball League doubleheader, the Retros and Outlaws logged victories over U.S Army School of the Americas and the 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade, respectively.

The first match-up pitted the Outlaws against TSB, where William Rankin rallied his team with 16 second-half points, paving the lane to a 58-51 victory.

Rankin was held scoreless in the first half. But, the pointing was evenly distributed among guards Stanley Jones and Willie Anderson.

TSB led at the half, as W. Strausbaugh, with 15 points, hit a couple of three-pointers before the half, pushing TSB to a 21-23 intermission.

But when the second half opened, it was Rankin who dominated the flow, traveling coast to coast with the stamina of a high shool senior.

The dust began to fly with 14 minutes remaining, where TSB had pulled to within five, only to be scattered by a Rankin three-pointer, airing out a 42-34 lead.

Piper had eight second-half points and finished the contest with 10, many of which were just short of the three-point zone.

The second contest, matching the Retros and USARSA was just as heated, so much so that the gym lights went out before the Retros' final 51-42 sting.

The Retros trailed through the opening minutes, but the steals and assists by Thomas Achery made the Retros active with Willie Thomas and Wheeler Johnson hitting the jumpers that kept them within three at the half.

USARSA's center, Lawrence Jordon, kept pressure on the scoreboard with five first-half field goals and one free throw.

Jordon was shut off in the second half, allowing the Retros' Edward Crook, and L. A. Dunham to slip into the paint.

The Retros' second-half rally was sparked at the free throw line, where the team was seven for eight.

With six minutes on the clock, Crook hit both ends of a one-and-one to move the Retros ahead 35-34. But, the lead traded once more before the blow of the final whistle, as USARSA went up 37-40.

Dunham hit a clutch shot at 4:15, to trail by only one.

Thomas and Dunham sewed it up, as Thomas hit a jumper at the top of the key, then, returned to the freethrow on the next possession, while Dunham hit the defensive boards allowing USARSA but one shot at the basket.

The Retros went on to claim a 51-42 victory.

Don't over dress for run during cold weather

By John Moore
Walter Reed Army Medical Center

FORT MONROE, VA. (TNS)— What do I wear when it's cold, rainy, and windy outside?

The first thing people need to realize is that even moderate exercise can make the body feel 30 degrees warmer than the actual air temperature. Thus, a run started in 40-degree temperature may be completed with a feeling that it is actually 70 degrees.

A trip to the local running store will reveal a lot of gear you can use in winter for running. Let's take a look at some of it.

—Nylon: This is a light-weight synthetic fabric, excellent for "cutting the wind." It prevents wind from penetrating and chilling you. A disadvantage is that nylon tends to create a sauna-like effect because body moisture can't escape. To offset this problem, good nylon jackets have "vents" built in which allow for the escape of moisture. These vents are a series of three small eyelet-size holes placed in the armpit section of the jacket.

—Polypropylene: This is a good choice of material for wear next to the skin because it won't absorb moisture. Instead, it allows perspiration to pass through its fibers and disperse. This reduces the clammy feeling often experienced with other fabrics.

—Gore-tex or Gamex: These are two brand names for a synthetic fabric which as the unique properties of allowing water vapor to pass through, but blocks water droplets from entering. Like nylon, these fabrics also block wind. So the touted advantage of them is that they will allow perspiration to escape, yet keep rain water from entering.

On the surface, these claims are valid. However, it is unreasonable to expect that all perspiration will be able to escape during a run of, say, five miles. There will be an accumulation of moisture on the inside of the fabric at the end of a vigorous exercise period.

An additional disadvantage of the Gore-tex fabrics for some people is that they tend to make a fair amount of noise as you move in them. It is just a by-product of the bonding process between the fabrics used in making the garment.

—Hats and Gloves: In cold weather, a stocking cap will help keep you warm. As much as 40 percent of your body heat can pass through your scalp, so a wool or polypropylene cap should give you the protection you want. Gloves need not be expensive. Bill Rogers, the four-time winner of the Boston and New York marathons, made cotton painter's gloves famous, and now sells his own version (at two to three times the price you can find them in a local garden store).

In cold weather running, the trick is not to overdress. If you feel comfortable as you step outside, you are overdressed. Feeling a little chilly at the start of your run should help you to feel comfortable at the end.

In very cold conditions, it is advisable to use the "layering" technique—two to three light-weight layers rather than one heavy layer. In this way, you can remove a layer as you start to warm up.

When running in very cold and windy weather, the wind will reduce the temperature even further than the actual temperature, and there can be a significant danger of severe frost bite—both to expose and covered body parts. Men and women should take extra steps to protect sensitive genital areas. A simple technique is to add a small square of dry wool in the appropriate area.

In very windy conditions, the experts advise running into the wind on the first part of the run so the wind will be at your back on the return.

A final note about running in cold weather. No matter how cold it is, your sweat can still cause dehydration. It is always important to maintain a good fluid intake when you run, regardless of the temperature outside.

News briefs

Fort Benning to host conference

Fort Benning will host the fourth Initial Entry Training Brigade Commanders' Conference Feb. 2 to 5. The conference theme is "Quality Begins with Fundamentals."

The conferences are designed to discuss training, doctrine and other areas pertaining to the IET mission. They also allow an exchange of initiatives, group problem solving of mutual issues, strengthening inter-relationships between training posts, and improving standardization in the training base.

The IET conferences were the idea of the Deputy Commanding General (Training), U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command and were originally convened once a year. They are now convened twice a year.

Conference seminars will be in Infantry Hall. Training scheduled for observaton includes an M16 qualification range and a One Station Unit Training field training exercise. Attendees will also see the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle live-fire exercise.

OCS alumni to start association

The formal opening of the Officer Candidate School Alumni Association is planned for Feb. 12 at 10 a.m. in Marshall Auditorium.

The ceremony will take place in conjunction with the OCS Hall of Fame and Patterson Award ceremonies.

The public is invited. Uniform for non-participants is duty. Please be seated no later than 9:45 a.m.

For more information, call 545-5434.

Weapons firing shaking up post

Weapons firing through Feb. 8 will be producing loud noises in the Northeast section of Fort Benning. Weapons being fired include howitzers, mortars, machine guns and aircraft weapons.

The hours of firing will vary each day.

Group needs an English teacher

The International Wives Club needs a qualified teacher for GED and English classes. Classes meet Mondays and Thursdays from 6:30 to 9 p.m. and are free.

A successful applicant must have a Georgia Teaching Certificate. For more information, call Tillinghurst Adult Education Center, Mr. Roberts, at 689-6755.

Vehicle registration never easier

With the coordinated effort of the Fort Benning Staff Judge Advocate's office, Chattahoochee County has opened a vehicle registration office on post.

The new office is on the second floor of the Main Post First National Bank, Hall Street side. This office will permit registration on a staggered system allowing persons whose last names begin with the letters A through D to purchase their tags in January. Names E through K should buy in February.

Anyone who registered their vehicle in Muscogee County last year but who lives in Chattahoochee County should register their car in Chattahoochee County. If you receive a preprinted form in the mail with Muscogee County printed on it, you should check to see if you really live in that county. If you live in Chattahoochee, all you need to do is cross "Muscogee" out and substitute "Chattahoochee."

For Georgia non-residents, be sure to enclose the ad valorem tax exemption form to avoid personal property tax on your vehicle. This form must be signed by your commander or any other officer. The officer signing the form must see a current Leave and Earnings Statement to determine that you are not a Georgia resident. Officers may not sign their own forms. The ad valorem exemption is available to soldiers who are either assigned or attached to Fort Benning. It applies to vehicles titled in either their own names or jointly owned with their spouse. If the car is titled in the spouse's name only, you are not exempt from the tax. If you were assigned to Fort Benning, but were ordered to a short-tour overseas assignment leaving your family in the Fort Benning area, an ad valorem form may be filled out by your spouse if she has a power of attorney to do so. Orders would be required as evidence of this situation.

It is important to check the preprinted form you may receive to determine if your address is correct. The Chattahoochee tag office will not accept a "General Delivery" address. Taking advantage of this mail-in procedure will be a real time-saver. Even if you decide not to use the mail-in system, please bring your pre-printed form into the tag office with you as it will save you many minutes of waiting for a new one to be prepared.

Muscogee tag registration may take place at either the Government Center or at the satellite office at Columbus Square. Muscogee County is also on the staggered system of registration. One should be careful not to register their vehicle late because a fine will be imposed.

Speeding along

Runners in Saturday's Annual Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon appear to be eating the dust of a 35 mph speed limit sign as they pass Fort Benning's Claxe Field. For race results and more photos, see page B-1.

Re-up programs undergoing change

Army News Service
and The Bayonet staff

Soldiers planning to reenlist in the near future will see several changes to the Selective Reenlistment Bonus and the Bonus Enlistment and Retraining Programs.

A total of 29 Military Occupational Specialty changes affecting programs and several career management fields Army-wide went into effect Jan. 14 said Maj. Allen Deutsch, SRB program manager.

The Fort Benning Reenlistment Office says that soldiers in 23 MOSs here will be affected.

The SRB program changes include 19 MOSs getting an increase in bonus payment; four MOSs have been added; one MOS decreased in bonuses to be paid and four MOSs were deleted from the program, Deutsch said. Four MOSs have been added to the BEAR program.

SRB initial payments remain at 50 percent and the total SRB payment will not exceed $20,000.

First-term soldiers on a two-year enlistment who are otherwise qualified for reenlistment in the grade of E-4 and above will continue to receive an SRB computed at zone A SRB multiplier level listed for E-5, Deutsch said.

Soldiers in the grade of E-4 (P), with less than six years active federal service, who apply for entry into the BEAR program for training in a MOS that has no zone B multiplier for grade E-4 and who will age into Zone B prior to the completion of training, may be approved for a Zone B SRB at the E-5 level. As an exception to the by-grade policy, these soldiers will receive an SRB computed at the Zone B SRB multiplier level listed for E-5 in effect at the time of extension or at time of reenlistment, whichever is highest, said Deutsch.

Fort Benning soldiers in the following MOSs will see some of these changes impacting on them: 11B, 13E, 13M, 13N, 13T, 15D, 16R, 18B, 18C, 18F, 19K, 29G, 33T, 45T, 63E, 63T, 66S, 76w/77F, 93H, 93J, 95C, 96H, 97E.

Soldiers brave snow, freezing temperatures

Bad weather becomes motivator in 3-7th field training exercise

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Snow flakes slowly drifted down from the overcast sky. The bitter cold stung the soldiers' faces, but it didn't dampen their spirits as they huddled up against the wind.

Soldiers from the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry got a big surprise during their Battalion Field Training Exercise last week as temperatures dropped into the teens and snow dusted Fort Benning.

"It's a real challenge for leaders to make sure soldiers are taking care of themselves in the cold, wet weather," said 1st Lt. Joseph Osborne, excutive officer of Company C. "It is very important that they stay warm."

Company A played the role of the agressors during the FTX. All other companies were involved in tactical manuevers against the aggressors.

"We were up this morning to prepare for early movement," said PFC Mike Rowe, M60 gunner from Co. C. "It's really not so bad when the sun comes out from behind the clouds."

Soldiers set to work digging defense positions and performing reconnaissance missions, while others camouflaged vehicles to make them less likely to be seen.

As the training exercise continued, the troops performed their infantry missions despite the adverse weather and even seemed to gain stregth from the unfriendly elements.

The FTX lasted three days, then the companies returned to Kelley Hill to clean and service their equipment.

Constitution a document that touches everyone

American Forces Information Service

While some people may still be sweeping up the remnants of their holiday celebrations, others are busy preparing for a celebration of another kind. 1987 is the year for Americans to celebrate the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Constitution.

Why celebrate a faded piece of parchment you've probably given little thought since high school history class?

The reason is that America can't afford to relegate its Constitution to the history books.

The U.S. Constitution is a living document that touches every American's life every day.

But most importantly, the Constitution has survived repeated challenges by those who questioned the principle of a government of the people, by the people and for the people.

Two hundred years later, it still stands as a bastion of freedom — freedom for which our forefathers sacrificed dearly.

Historians say it is not war or dissension or enemies of the United States that pose the greatest threat to America's constitutional freedoms; it is the indifference of millions of people who take for granted what has come to them too easily to be fully appreciated.

They warn that unless Americans develop an understanding of how the Constitution has shaped their lives, they risk losing the commitment necessary to protect its freedoms.

The celebration of the Constitution's 200th anniversary is an appropriate time to rekindle the spirit of America's Founding Fathers. Their spirit, their vision of freedoms that have eluded mankind for most of recorded history, are what the American people must never — and can't afford to — forget.

Post worker needs YOUR help

by Frank McClanahan
Special to The Bayonet

Before you read this message, get up out of your seat and stand straight on your legs. Stretch your arms out as far as you possibly can and wiggle the fingers on both of your hands.

The instructions written above probably sound pretty silly . . . in fact, they probably sound down right ridiculous! How silly would those instructions be if suddenly you discovered you could no longer perform them?

I can tell you a story about a wonderful, hard working lady who takes nothing for granted. You see, she works in a wheelchair. She cannot move either of her legs and has only limited use of one of her hands. Yet, this lady works in the Civilian Personnel Office at Fort Benning.

Even more surprising is the fact that she drives herself to work each and every day. She has managed to turn her stumbling blocks into stepping stones. It has been said many times in the past that God helps those who help themselves.

Hazel Judah has helped herself for many years, but needs the help of others now.

Hazel is in need of a van in order to go to and from work everyday. She presently owns a van that is very old and constantly breaks down, often leaving her stranded at night on the side of the road.

If you are interested in making a contribution to help another human being in need — any contribution at all — call James Ozley at 689-2542 after 5 p.m.

A Hazel Judah account is also open at the CB&T Bank, Fort Benning, Ga., for this worthwhile project.

If you can't afford to contribute even some pocket change, prayers will be also be accepted!

Survey says: The Bayonet doing OK

Dawn Kilpatrick

The results of the biennial Newspaper Readship Survey are in — and The Bayonet appears to be doing a satisfactory job, according to the responses.

Since about mid-December when we received the bulk of the just more than 600 responses, the worker bees in our office have been hard at work, compiling your answers. We were happy to discover that about 62 percent of the respondents think the overall content of the paper is either "excellent" or "good."

We want to thank you for your candid comments and invite any more suggestions you might have that would help us serve you better.

Before I get into the actual results question by question, I want to address one issue that seems to confuse many of our readers.

In addition to answering the printed questions, a few people took the extra time and interest to attach comments. The overwhelming majority of these concerned the advertisements in the paper. Our newspaper is classified by the Army as a "civilian enterprise" publication. For the non-public affairs types, what this means is that a civilian publisher (in our case, The Ledger and Enquirer newspapers) agrees to print the paper at no cost to the U.S. Army. But, to offset the tremendous expense of printing and distributing 22,000 newspapers, the publisher sells advertising. The Army does not endorse any of the advertisers, or their products. However, without those advertisements, there would be no paper.

One reader suggested that we sell the paper. "I'm quite sure I'm not the only one on post who would willingly pay a dime or a quarter each issue to enable the soldier to read about himself and his peers," that reader wrote. Well, we, like every other organization in the armed forces, are governed by regulations and charging for a command information publication is against those regulations.

Often, our editorial decisions do not please everyone. In determining what to cover or use in the paper, we aim for a balance. Our newspaper is by, for and about the soldier. We try to provide a service to all of Fort Benning, though.

We are a diverse community and achieving equal coverage is a large task. We strive to offer something for everyone. Highlighting the family member activities as well as allowing much-deserved publicity for our large civilian work force and reporting on every field training exercise and intramural basketball game requires dedication and hard work by the staff.

The Bayonet has a circulation of 22,000. According to survey conducting experts, the 600 responses we received to our questionnaire equals 2 percent of our readers. This percentage is said to be adequate in a random survey.

Tactical victory really a strategic loss for U.S forces

1968 Tet Offensive a battle of perceptions as media portrayed great casualties, havoc

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Today marks the 19th anniversary of a military action that the U.S. Armed Forces, including the Army, won — tactically.

However, the Tet Offensive of 1968 was eventually translated into the beginning of a strategic defeat.

During the Vietnam War it was customary to observe a ceasefire during the the traditional Vietnamese holiday of "Tet," the beginning of the lunar New Year. The festivities incorporated Western association with the Christmas and New Year celebrations.

George Esper, author of "The Eyewitness History of the Vietnam War 1961-1975," said that while a mood of festivity prevailed among the Vietnamese for the Tet of 1968, it was not so for an uneasy military. "The United States was concerned about a threatening concentration of North Vietnamese forces in the Khe Sahn area and other regions of South Vietnam."

Gen. William C. Westmoreland shifted thousands of American soldiers into the northern part of South Vietnam to beef up the defenses and put out an alert. "There may be Viet Cong activities aimed at various U.S. and Vietnamese headquarters and government billets during the Tet new year holidays. Viet Cong artillery units and Viet Cong suicide cadres are infiltrating into the capital (Saigon) area," said Esper's account, which proved to be almost an understatement.

Since November 1965, according to Col. Harry G. Summers' book, "Vietnam War Almanac," U.S. forces had been tactically defeating the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese army regulars. As an example, in 1965 "...the U.S. First Cavalry Division (Air Mobile) routed three North Vietnamese regular army regiments that had launched an attack in the Central Highlands in an attempt to cut South Vietnam in two."

American soldiers were defeating the Communist enemy in the field. Because of the aggressive nature of U.S. operations, the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong high commands had planned Tet as an all-out, decisive blow to turn the tide of the war in their favor in what has been described by many historians as a last-gasp effort by an enemy becoming militarily drained.

On Jan. 30, 1968 the Tet holiday began. However, shortly after midnight several I and II Corps area cities came under attack and all U.S. units, by noon on Jan. 30, were put on maximum alert.

Stanley Karnow, in his definitive book on the war, "Vietnam: A History," said "nearly 7,000 Communist soldiers launched a surprise offensive of extraordinary intensity and scope..." against South Vietnam.

These 7,000 were Viet Cong select cadre but the total number of VC and North Vietnamese regulars that participated in the attack was close to 50,000.

The enemy attacked more than 100 cities, including Saigon, Hoi An, Danang and Quinhon and rocketed the enormous American complex at Camrahn Bay. They stormed Highland towns and mountain resorts. Simultaneously, 13 of the 16 provincial capitals of the Mekong Delta were attacked.

The most spectacular action was the attack on South Vietnam's capital city, Saigon. Deploying in small teams, 4,000 men infiltrated the capital, one of their key objectives being the U.S. embassy.

Nineteen Viet Cong commandos gunned and blasted their way into the lightly guarded embassy, holding it for more than six hours as their counterparts wreaked havoc on a dazed and shocked military and civilian population.

Summers wrote that "Television footage of this attack received widespread attention in the United States. Initial media reports stated that U.S. Army and South Vietnamese army forces had been surprised and defeated."

These images then, of an enemy supposedly overrunning Saigon, of taking the U.S. embassy and defeating U.S. and Vietnamese units, were beamed into millions of American living rooms on the evening news. According to the media, here, in living color, was the truth of the war in Vietnam: U.S. and our allied forces were being beaten in the war by the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese army.

The Communist leaders had hoped to drive a wedge between South Vietnam and America by assaulting the cities and towns of South Vietnam. Their plan was to demoralize and cause dejection of the South Vietnamese soldiers and civilians to the point where they would rise in opposition against Saigon and the Americans and would "decisively change the balance of power in our favor," Karnow quoted the Communist leaders.

Citing Summers, however, "It was not the United States that was defeated on the battlefield. It was the North Vietnamese Army and especially the Viet Cong. Their general offensive and general uprising had been a tactical disaster. Not only had their military forces been resoundingly defeated, but their ideological illusion that the South Vietnamese people would flock to their banner during the 'general uprising' proved false."

Karnow's findings substantiate Summers' assessment. "Westmoreland's intelligence officers reckoned as well that 50,000 enemy troops had been killed, and, despite their spotty record, the estimate was plausible — as I gathered from Dr. Duong Quynh Hoa, a prominent Communist figure, in 1981 at her villa in Ho Chi Minh City (the new North Vietnamese name for Saigon after they 'liberated' the city).

By Feb. 4, order had been restored to the country and the enemy was being pushed out of the few areas they still occupied.

It had taken bloody, house-to-house fighting to clear and secure Saigon and in Hue, the ancient imperial capital of Vietnam, established 200 years before Christ, it took the equivalent of almost two South Vietnamese and American divisions to dislodge the Communist enemy. Sixty miles northwest of Hue, at Khe Sahn, 5,500 Marines were attacked and bombarded, not being formally relieved until April 5, with the North Vietnamese withdrawing in what was later called a feint on the part of the Communists.

During the Tet Offensive it was estimated that U.S. and ARVN casualties totalled no more than 4,600 killed in action. Communist losses, though, were more than 10 times the number of U.S. and ARVN killed in action.

"Tactics" is defined as "the science of securing the objectives designated by strategy." During Tet, the U.S. strategy, narrowly defined, was to defeat and rout the enemy offensive through tactical operations. This the American fighting man and ARNV soldier did, decisively. However, if strategy, defined as "the art of military command as applied to the overall planning and conduct of large-scale combat operations," is looked at in the broad definition of our Vietnam strategy, then Tet was, resoundingly, the turning point of the Vietnam War.

The United States had, according to Summers, "suffered a fatal strategic blow." The media had beamed to million of Americans our embassy in a shambles, our military as having taken a beating and our war effort as not having any end in sight. Tactically, we had beaten the enemy during Tet, but the media portrayed it as a defeat.

Public opinion, already turning sour on the war, completely turned against the policies of the U.S. in Vietnam. That adverse public opinion and internal dissent within the Democratic party forced President Lyndon B. Johnson not to seek reelection and U.S. "strategy," from that point on, was not how to win the war but how to pull out of it.

Q. I just received the new W-4 form and I am confused. The form looks so complicated. When does it need to be filed and where can I go for help.

A. You are not the only one who's confused about the new W-4 form. Even the people who designed the form admit it is too complicated. First of all don't panic. The filing deadline is Oct. 1, 1987. You don't need to file it in order to receive your 1986 tax return refund.

If your tax situation is relatively simple, you should only have to fill out the first five lines of the form. If you need to go beyond the first five lines, you may want to wait a few weeks before filing it. We will be publishing clarification as soon as possible.

Q: I recently received a letter that explained to me as part of a consumer marketing program for a new make of motorcycle I could receive a "Super 250" motorcycle with mag wheels and many other good features.

All I've got to do is pay $397.48 for shipping, and fill out a survey about the features after I've tested it. There was a phone number for me to call, and I spoke for 10 minutes to a very kind man who explained all of the great features this motorcycle has.

I'm convinced it's a good deal, but my wife won't let me send the check. Please explain to her that it's a good deal, because if I don't send a check by midnight tomorrow, they are going to get another guy to test it.

A: Your wife is probably looking out for your best interests. Many such letters are schemes, designed to bilk people out of their money. Is the address given that of a warehouse or factory, or is it a post office box or office suite? If it is one of the latter, consider what that means — maybe they don't have a warehouse.

You might get a scale model motorcycle instead of a ridable one. The man on the phone might have told you about many more features that the motorcycle has — its size, etc., but you probably don't have such information in writing from them.

Besides making an appointment with legal assistance concerning such offers, you should call up the Better Business Bureau; they can tell you something of the status of the company, and any complaints, if lodged, against it. If you feel that you have been mistreated by someone doing business in this area, you can file a complaint with the BBB. That doesn't mean you are going to get satisfaction, but at least you have done something. The problem is that many such schemes are "boiler-room" operations, which set up in one town for a month or two, and leave (after they've collected their money). Therefore, there may not be any complaints until it is too late for you.

You should use extreme caution in dealing with such "test" or "gift" offers. The better it sounds, and the sooner you must send your money, the more likely it is that you will be defrauded. The address of the BBB in Columbus is 8 13th Street, Columbus, Georgia 31901. Their phone numbers are 324-0712 or 324-0713.

Q: My wife wants to order some things from a catalog that she received in the mail. I'm not sure whether she should do it or not. What are our rights if we decide to place an order?

A: Ordering items by mail can be a good way to save time and energy, but occasionally you can have problems with orders that arrive late or not at all.

The Federal Trade Commission has a rule that requires companies who do business by mail to do the following:

The items must be shipped when promised.

If no specific date is given, the items must be shipped within 30 days after receiving your order.

If the seller cannot ship your order within 30 days, you have the right to cancel that order and receive a prompt refund.

If the seller cannot meet the shipping deadline, he must send you an option notice. This should tell you the new shipping date and give you the option of cancelling the order or agreeing to a new shipping date. The notice will contain instructions on how you can respond.

If you have already paid for an item that you wish to cancel, the seller must mail your refund within seven business days. If you paid with a credit card, he has one billing cycle in which to credit your account.

This rule does not apply to mail order photo-finishing, magazine subscriptions, and other special deliveries except for the initial shipment), seeds and plants, cash-on-delivery orders, or credit orders where your account is not charged before the merchandise is mailed.

When ordering items in the mail, keep accurate records of your order and any further contact that you have with the company.

Soldiers, sailors, airmen, marines keep force safe by reporting fraud

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

"Wing Falls Off B-52, All Aboard Die"

"Howitzer Malfunctions, Killing Six"

"TOW Missile Launcher Explodes; 10 Injured"

Fortunately, these headlines were never splashed across newspapers around the United States. That's because the parts that could have caused these mishaps never made it into service.

Quality assurance inspectors, contractor employees or the soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines associated with the equipment discovered the defective merchandise. Then they reported it to the Department of Defense Office of the Inspector General or to one of the military criminal investigative organizations.

Fraud, waste and abuse doesn't just mean buying too many paper clips or cheating on time cards. In some cases, fraud, waste and abuse can result in death and possible injury. It can even mean the difference between battles won or lost.

Consider some of these cases from files of DoD criminal investigative organizations:

- The Michigan Hardware Corporation was charged with supplying the government with defective bolts that fasten wings of B-52 bombers to the fuselage. The bolts, critical to flight safety, were discovered before they were installed. Two officers from the firm are now serving jail sentences.
- The Gandhi Tool Company was contracted to sell DoD special rings for the breech mechanism of the 155mm howitzer. These rings, which the company certified were tested and met government specifications, were found to be faulty. If the rings had failed, said the DoD Inspector General's Office, this crucial piece of artillery hardware would not have worked properly.
- The Waltham Screw Company had a contract with the Army to produce flash suppressors for its M-16 combat rifle. A flash suppressor screws onto the end of a rifle barrel. When it works as it should, the supppressor diffuses the flash quickly to make the soldier firing the weapon less of an enemy target. Company officials were convicted of supplying flash suppressors that they knew to be defective.

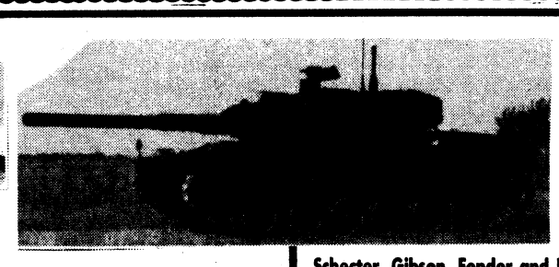
It's no wonder Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger has made product substitution and its related crimes the No. 1 priority of the DoD Inspector General's Office.

According to Michael C. Eberhardt, assistant inspector general for criminal investigations and policy and oversight, that emphasis has already resulted in more indictments, trials and convictions.

"There is no question that a lot more cases of product substitution and related crimes are coming through," said Eberhardt. "Fortunately, we are being tipped off early in many of these cases, thus avoiding some horrendous consequences." In the case of the defective B-52 bolts, for example, Eberhardt said a company employee reported the fraud.

But while defective merchandise is being discovered and reported by quality assurance people and some contractor employees, Eberhardt said "the troops" need to be more vigilant about reporting things that don't work. "They are our last hope of detection — the last chance we have to identify a problem."

One example of a defective item that went unreported was dubbed "the case of the defective locks." An inspector general making the rounds in Germany asked soldiers if they had seen any cases of defective products. Several said they continued to receive padlocks that didn't work. Instead of reporting them, they just threw them away.



That's the kind of thing that needs to be reported, said Eberhardt. "Even if it isn't the result of criminal activity, we still want to know about it."

Any person who believes he has a legitimate fraud, waste or mismanagement complaint is encouraged to use immediately one of the many available avenues. Eberhardt encourages and stresses the efficiency of local and command channels.

To report fraud, waste or abuse, call the nearest office of one of the defense criminal investigative organizations or call the Defence Hotline. Or write, Defense Hotline, The Pentagon, Washington, D.C. 20301-1900. Identities of writers and callers are fully protected.

197th Inf. gets new vehicles; support troops keep truckin'

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The 197th Support Battalion is tasked with missions equally as important as the 197th Infantry Brigade's combat arms battalions.

Whether the Brigade units are in garrison or in the field, elements of the Support Battalion, such as the transportation platoon from Company C, are kept busy moving supplies to the units.

Recently, the 197th Infantry Brigade received several new five-ton cargo trucks and five-ton tractors that are being distributed to all Brigade units.

The transporttion platoon received several of the vehicles. According to SSgt. Arthur Cook, transportation platoon sergeant, will increase the platoon's effectiveness 100 percent.

"Our older vechicles require a lot of maintenance," Cook said. "Their status can change in the course of a day."

Soldiers in the transportation platoon operate the "big wheels" that move supplies throughout the Brigade. However, before they got behind the wheel of their new vehicles, they went through hands-on instruction and familiarization training. Then each operator was road tested to ensure he could properly operate and maintain the vehicle.

In order to remain "ever ready" to support the Brigade units, transportation platoon soldiers are kept busy maintaining their vehicles. Operators and mechanics keep the vehicles running and support missions put their work to the test.

"We often plan roll-outs of up to 30 miles to see how well our vehicles will hold up under these conditions," Cook added. "Most of our garrison missions are short, start and stop trips. But a road march shows us how we will have to react and fix our vehicles when we are on the move."

Presidential proclamation to change UCMJ

By Jeffrey D. Lindblad
Army News Service

Two major changes in military law have reached the review stage, along with other changes, the next step being adoption by Executive Order into the Manual for Courts-Martial.

On Nov. 14, 1986, President Ronald Reagan signed into law the "Military Justice Amendments of 1986" as part of the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1987. These amendments change certain parts of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

The first change redefines Army jurisdiction over soliders in the U.S. Army Reserve.

The second revises the use of the insanity defense.

The most significant change falls under UCMJ Articles 2 and 3, which puts reservists under the legal authority of the Army for criminal acts committed on active duty status or inactive-duty training, said Maj. Charles E. Trant of the Army's Criminal Law Division, Office of the Judge Advocate General. He also represents the Army for the Pentagon-based Joint Service Committee on Military Justice.

"In the past," Trant said, "the Army has had problems maintaining jurisdiction over reservists, because a person would get his discharge at the time his active duty status was terminated. Then the Army would find out he had committed a crime while on active duty; but by that time we had lost jurisdiction over him."

At times, depending upon the act committed, federal and state courts would try the person, but the Army could not, he added.

When the U.S. Navy lost a jurisdictional case over a reservist (U.S. vs. Caputo), military lawyers realized just how serious the jurisdictional gap could be.

A separate, but related, problem involved the lack of meaningful disciplinary controls over reservists serving on inactive-duty training and these amendments place all such reservists under Army criminal jurisdiction when on dury, he said.

"In order to make jurisdiction over the reserve component much easier, Congress changed the rule," Trant said.

The change gives the military the authority to activate reservists for the purpose of court-martial.

"So that the rule will not be abused, the reserve component chain of command decides whether they should activate a reservist for trial, after that the final decision is reached by a general court-martial convening authority, made up of an active duty general officer," he said.

From there the decision goes to the secretary of the army for his approval so the decision can be made by the ultimate civilian authority, not by the military commanders, he added.

"Guidance has been sent, at least within the Army, not to use this portion of the rule until the changes have been made in the regulations," Trant cautioned.

He said he expects few of the cases to be brought forward because of the enormous effort required of the reserve and active-duty components to get them to trail. "But at least the Army has leverage to bring those cases that have merit to trail."

He pointed out that "the other major amendment, Article 50a, will significantly affect the Army's policy regarding the use of the insanity defense in court-martial proceedings and adds to the Code a new clause covering lack of mental responsibility."

Before, the defense of lack of mental responsibility was always addressed in the Manual for Courts-Martial -- not in the Code, which is a congressionally produced document.

He pointed out further that "the new article is similar to what the federal law now states about the insanity defense. "Trant said, "It reflects the Insanity Defense Reform Act of 1984, which resulted from the public outcry over John Hinckley's use of the insanity defense during his trail for the attempted assassination of the president in 1981."

These changes shift the burden of proof for lack of mental responsibility to the accused rather than the prosection, and will require two votings by the court-martial boards -- one voting for the claim for lack of mental responsibility and another voting for the specific charge(s) the defendant faces.

The legal definition of insanity was also changed to be more restrictive so that only the criminally insane escape punishment, Trant said.

As in the Reform Act, Article 50a will do away with the defense of "partial mental responsibility".

"The rule requires the accused to notify the government of his intention to use the defense for the trail; if he does not, the defense may not be used," Trant said. "After the notification, the government can require the defendant to submit to a psychiatric evaluation by a sanity board made up of psychiatrists and/or clinical psychologists.

"The defendant has certain protections as to what he says at the board, and the information presented is treated as privileged communication," Trant explained. "Once presented, the information may not be used as evidence during the trial and if the accused confesses, the confession cannot be introduced as evidence."

The only testimony usable at the trail would center on the lack of mental responsibility, he added.

Other changes are to Article 25 allowing for the oral request for enlisted participation in court-martial boards and Article 43 on statute of limitations.

All the changes result from recommendations by the Joint Service Committee on Military Justice. The committee consists of six members, of which five represent the five armed services and have voting status; the other, a representative from the Court of Military Appeals, has no voting status.

These legislative changes will be enacted by Executive Order of the President to amend the Manual for Courts-Martial. Before being sent to the president for signature, the U.S. Department of Justice will review them.

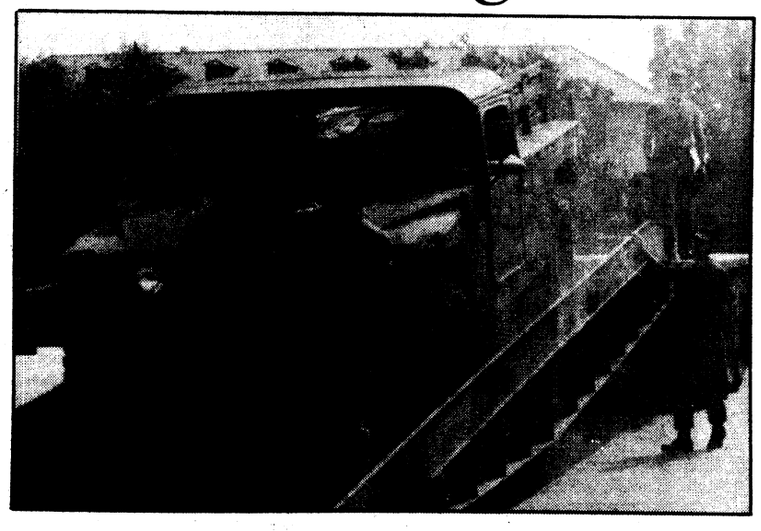
Troops from the 533rd Transportation Company ensure that a load of vehicles is properly positioned before departing on a mission.

533rd Trans. likes 'long hauls'



By Marcia Danziesen
533rd Transportation Company

The truckers of the 533rd Transportation Company, 36th Engineer Group, logged more than 920,800 miles during 1986 in support of the United States Army Infantry Center and School and units throughout the Southeastern United States.

The 173-soldier company's daily mission is primarily support to the numerous weapon ranges on Fort Benning, requiring 15 to 20 tractor trailers.

The realistic training and excitement occurs when the unit operations section receives a "long haul" commitment. The "long hauls" vary from loads requiring two tractor trailers to 30.

A sample of some of the 1986 "long hauls" were convoys to Fort Chaffee, Ark., supporting the Fort Benning Directorate of Engineering and Housing, five convoys to Fort Irwin, Calif., supporting the 197th Infantry Brigade, two convoys to Fort Campbell, Ky., and several convoys to Fort Rucker, Ala., for the 10th Mountain Division.

A high-mobility, mutli-purpose wheeled vehicle is loaded onto a trailer in preparation for a convoy.

Smaller convoys went such places as Rock Island, Ill., David Field, Okla., and Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. On these convoys, the 533rd soldiers haul everything from trash dumpsters to armored personnel carriers.

Virtually every deployable unit on Fort Benning used the services of the 533rd truckers during 1986. The 92nd Engineer Battalion at Fort Stewart, Ga., and the 226th Attack Helicopter Battalion at Fort Rucker, Ala., also receive support from the 533rd.

If you want to see a 533rd trucker smile, send him a tasking for a "long haul" mission.

The 533rd Transportation Company is on the road again and driving toward a million miles for 1987.

Energy

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

The memories of the energy crisis that resulted in long waits at the gas pumps and high utility bills have begun to fade. But the energy crunch of 1974 had a very positive effect and was directly responsible for re-educating the American public on the importance of energy conservation. This need to conserve was even more important to the Department of Defense and the services.

Consider the scope of DoD's energy consumption: 2 percent of all the energy consumed in the United States and 80 percent of all energy consumed in the federal government.

Yet DoD and the services have an energy conservation record to be envied. Jeffrey A. Jones, DoD director of energy policy, said that because of comprehensive energy conservation programs in force during the last 10 years, DoD avoided spending about $3.8 billion. "The department realized an energy cost avoidance of more than $585 million during fiscal 1987 alone," he said.

But while the dollar savings are impressive, they don't begin to show the scope of the effort made in the almost 10 years thoughout DoD to reduce energy needs.

DoD's energy bill amounts to approximately $7 billion a year. Two-thirds is used to operate and maintain ships, aircraft and vehicles; the other third keeps military installations running. Electric bills account for 57 percent of DoD's facility energy needs, and that is the area in which the conservation efforts have been most impressive. "DoD's electricity use was only up 13.9 percent over the last 10 years," said Jones. "But the civilian sector registered a 30 percent increase."

Again these figures don't tell the whole story. Jones said these savings were achieved even while the services were modernizing. The modernization, he said, meant a major increase in high-tech equipment that depends on electricity. In addition, in the interest of increased productivity and improved retention of the all-volunteer military, the services began a massive construction and facilities upgrade effort to improve the quality of life.

"The services, through dedicated energy conservation efforts, were not only able to expand and improve, but were able to do it and still reduce their energy consumption dramatically," said Jones.

"While the most critical ingredient in the success of energy conservation programs is the commitment of top management at each of the various levels, the real key to success is the skill and dedication of the people at the installation level who practice energy conservation in the real, day-to-day world of getting the job done," said Jones.

In the end, he said, it comes down to the mission. Every barrel of oil saved is one that doesn't have to be purchased. "The combined effect is that being responsible in energy consumption improves the security of our defense forces." The lessons learned during earlier crises will clearly not be forgotten.

Finance soldiers out of 'green,' into snow during field training

by Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

The recent frigid temperatures in the local area have forced many people inside. Curling up next to the fireplace with a cup of hot chocolate has become the most popular pastime lately.

However, a company from the 36th Engineer Group braved the cold weather for five days and nights during a field training exercise last week.

Soldiers from the 215th Finance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion put the elements aside in order to complete their mission during a pre-Army Training Evaluation Program in preparation for an upcoming ARTEP.

"If you want a rain storm, just send the 215th to the field," said Capt. Steven Seyfried, commander of the 215th. "Even though we had that long drought last year, it managed to rain when we went to the field," he said.

Although the wet weather caused problems for the vehicles in the mud and some cold feet, the soldiers' spirits and morale remained remarkably high according to Seyfried.

Seyfried said his unit is one of only a few deployable finance companies in the Army today.

"Our wartime mission is very important and therefore we have to keep good relationships among all of our soldiers," Seyfried said.

"In the last six months we have lost 14 people and gained eight back. Our company is now staffed with many young soldiers, which made this pre-ARTEP a necessity," the commander explained.

According to Seyfried, there are always changes and adjustments to be made when a finance company moves from modern, automated offices to the field where everything is done manually.

"During a war, it is necessary that our soldiers work effectively so that the other soldiers don't have to worry about getting paid.

"A soldier will be able to perform his tactical duties better if he is sure that his family members are receiving their allotments, for example," Seyfried said.

The 215th will head to the field again in February. And they're hoping they'll be faced with better weather.

Throughout the Corps of Engineers, units compete annually for the Itschner Award, which recognizes the best engineer company in the Army.

The DA competition covers many areas of basic soldiering, including safety, reenlistment, training, morale, discipline and maintenance. Specific engineer concerns are highlighted in the race for selection as the Itschner Award recipient. Construction projects and recognized events that enhance the Corps of Engineers are the key areas within the selection process.

Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion was edged out by one point at the Fort Benning level of this year's competition. However, the company posted outstanding achievements in all areas.

With an overall reenlistment rate of 150 percent, improvements in maintenance readiness of more than 20 percent, low discipline rates and an excellent safety record, it was a close battle from the start for the nomination to represent Fort Benning engineers. Other elements looked at included the successful completion of an externally evaluated Army Training and Evaluation program and an Emergency Deployment Readiness Exercise. Co. B also finished 34 construction projects on post during the year.

As in any organization, it is the individual soldier who makes or breaks the unit. In particular, it is the non-commissioned officer who is the backbone of any organization. One of Co. B's NCOs recently received special rocognition for his contributions within the 43rd Eng. Bn. and during his previous assignments.

SSgt. Michael Widener was selected as the Fort Benning nominee for the Sturgis Award, which is an individual award for the best engineer soldier in the Army. Widener has to his credit the distinction of having been chosen the honor graduate of his Primary Leadership Development Course and the 12B Basic Non-Commissioned Officer Course. He was also recently selected as the distinguished honor graduate of the 12H BNCOC.

In 1985, Co. B was the runner up at the FORSCOM level of the Itschner Award competition. This year the 586th Assault Ribbon Bridge Company came out on top. — Steven G. Wabnitz, Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion.

"Identify and engage your target," says the tower controller over the tank radio. "You have two enemy vehicles in your area. Fire, fire!"

M60 tanks from Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor put their firing skills to the test during one of their quarterly tank gunnery qualifications at Hastings Range last week.

"Tank qualification is conducted four times a year," explained SFC Clifton Kinsey, master gunner from Co. A. "The tanks are required to score a certain amount of points to qualify."

The tank gunners fire a 105mm cannon, engaging five targets during the day and five targets during the night. Each target is worth 100 points, which gives the tank crew a possible 1,000 points for a perfect score. Not only do gunners fire the main gun to qualify, but also the co-ax machine gun, which is mounted on the tank turret.

"A minimum of 700 points must be obtained or the tank crew must fire again," Kinsey said. "The targets are anywhere from 900 to 1,800 meters away."

The tanks first fire from a non-moving defense position, then they must move out across the range and engage targets from an offensive, or moving, standpoint.

The appearance of targets down range and hits and misses by the firing tanks is controlled and recorded by a computer located in the range tower.

"Days before the tanks even come to the field, the computer is programmed with the proper information," explained Norman Beach, from the Targets System Branch.

"We program in the computer the amount of time each target will stay up, and decide on different target scenerios that can be executed throughout the gunnery qualifications. So we actually operate and maintain the targets."

The stationary targets are made of one sheet of plywood and shaped like different enemy vehicles. Moving targets are made of four sheets of plywood and can even be programmed to simulate firing at qualifying tanks.

Each tank company from 2-69th will qualify on Hastings Range during gunnery qualifications.

Engineers 'build' up Fort Benning

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Whenever something needs to be built, rebuilt, graded, rewired or otherwise "constructed," on post, soldiers from the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, can probably be found doing so.

Recently at Camp Smiley in Splinter Village the engineers were hard at work.

The camp offers recreational activities to mentally and physically handicapped children of military parents assigned to Fort Benning.

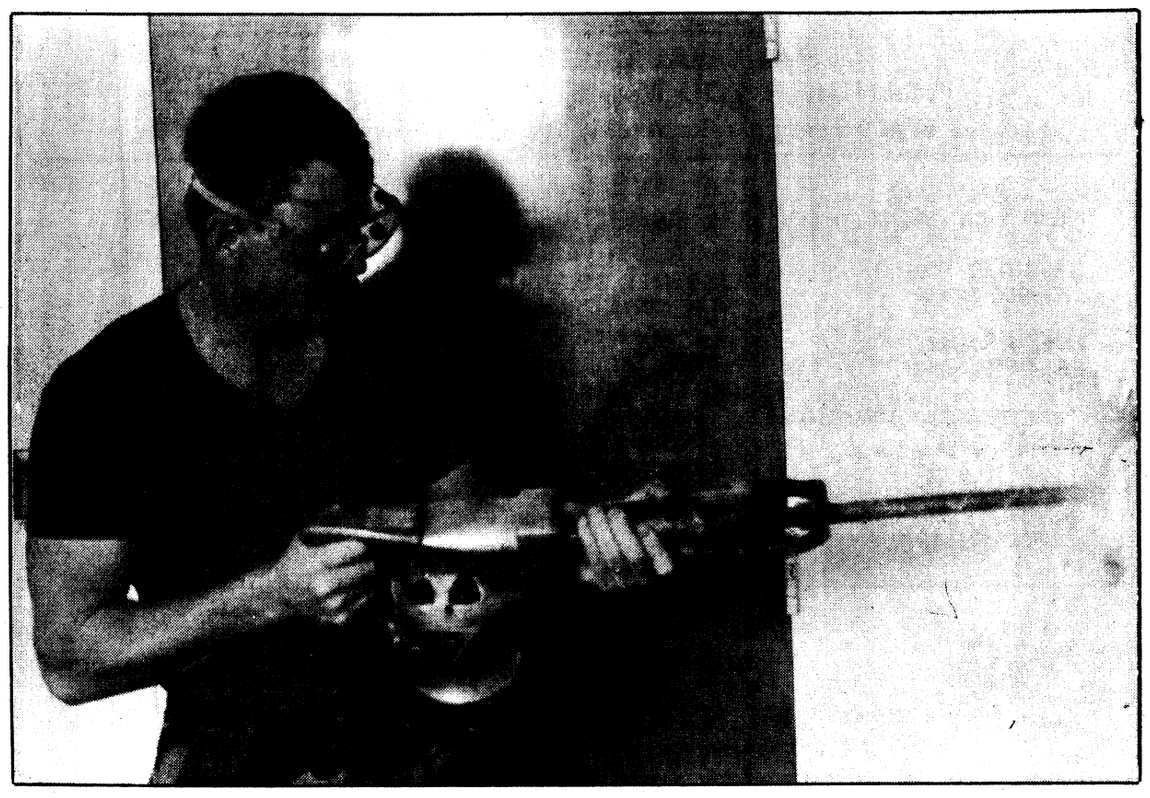
Soldiers from Co. B built a wheelchair ramp onto the back of the building for easier access to the playground for children in wheelchairs, according to 1st Lt. Terrance Ross, Co. B executive officer.

The Bravo soldiers also repaired the front ramp and laid concrete pads for some of the playground equipment, Ross said.

In another project, soldiers from Company C have been using their plumbing and electrical skills a lot lately.

According to 1st Lt. Dominic Macaluso, Co. C executive officer, soldiers from the 1st Platoon started work on the 197th Infantry Brigade Medical Clearing Station Jan. 14.

The engineers have been installing seven sinks and more than 30 light fixtures in the building, he said.



Macaluso said the hardest part of the project was finding the water pipes for the rooms that didn't have sinks. The soldiers had to dig into the walls to find the pipes because the building is old and doesn't have very modern plumbing.

The project is expected to be finished Feb. 5.

Computer creates 'real-life' battlefield

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

How does the infantry know how well the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle will perform in combat?

What will probably happen if the new light infantry units are pitted against a threat force in the Middle East?

Will the new 60mm mortar be a combat multiplier?

These questions and more are answered every day by Janus, an Infantry School computer war game.

"Janus analyzes weapons systems and tactics, both new and existing. This is done using a 'Blue Force' and 'Red Force' commander with additional artillery commanders for each force," said Capt. David Hutchison, chief of the Infantry School's Combat Simulations Branch.

"The players make decisions based on a continuous presentation of the given battle on map-like display terminals and on-call status reports," Hutchison said.

"The commanders are tactical war-gaming specialists with a solid knowledge of tactics and doctrine and schooled in the use of Janus," he added.

Janus, which stands for the Roman God of all beginnings and was invoked as the first of all Gods, was orginally developed and distributed by the Training and Doctrine Command's Analyses Command at White Sands Missile Range, N.M.

"Before Janus, we used three dimensional terrain boards and weapon's system's miniatures to test these systems and tactics. Using the terrain board, one hour of actual combat would take 60 hours of terrain board time," said Matthew Yardley, a combat simulations controller.

"With Janus, one hour of actual combat time takes only three hours. Obviously, Janus is a much better system than the terrain board," Yardley said.

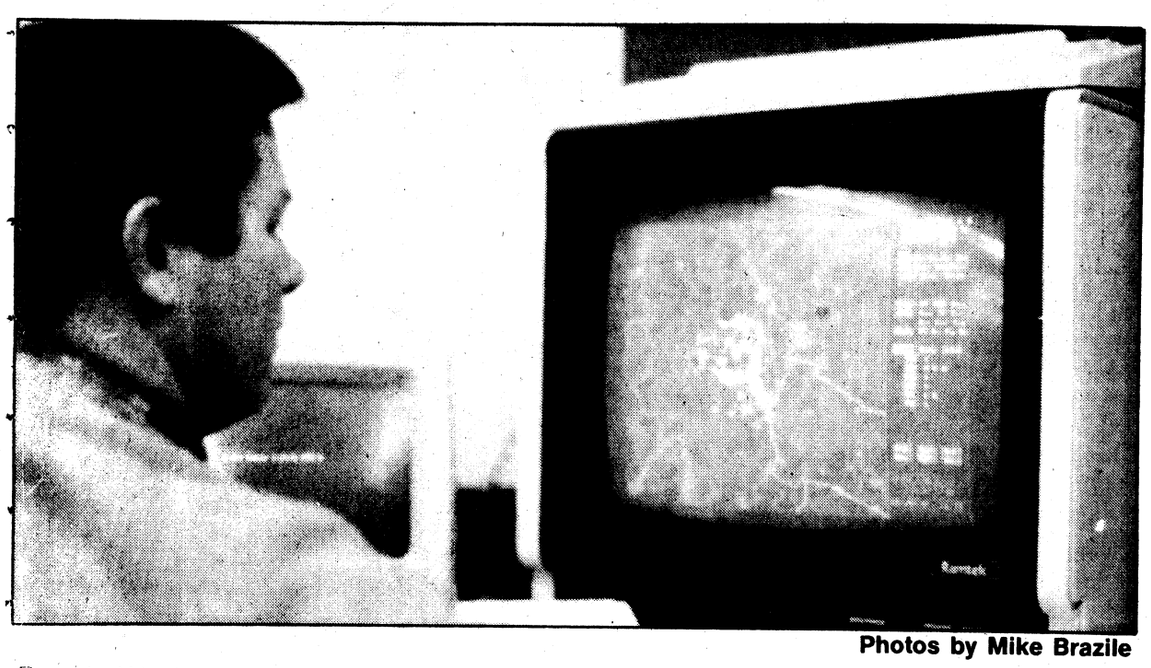
Each force commander and artillery commander has a screen showing terrain to be defended or attacked. This terrain view, however, is not an overall aerial view but a view as each commander would actually see it on the ground.

Hutchison explained the process: "Action occurs in two phases. First, each commander deploys his forces using available terrain on his display screen. The second phase is execution, which shows artillery impacting, direct fire, use of chemicals or whatever the scenario calls for.

"Each player makes decisions using existing or new tactics or weapons systems until the scenario is resolved," he said.

The Blue Force, U.S. units, can be fought up to the level of a battalion vs. the enemy Red Forces, which can be fought to the level of regimental size.

Any terrain can be used, from the forests of Europe to the deserts of the Middle East to the jungles of Latin America. The terrain models are based on actual maps of world areas.



Janus is not a training tool for leaders to use, but rather an analysis system to test tactics doctrine and weapons system's effectiveness.

The model includes most air and ground systems involved in offensive and defensive operations and even has chance developments such as artillery scattering or adverse weather conditions.

Janus concentrates on ground combat based on military systems that maneuver and operate on land. Each unit is simulated on a computer graphics display individually with a specific symbol that denotes that type of unit (mechanized, light infantry, etc.).

The units are placed on a three dimensional terrain model that includes elevations, roads, rivers, cities, foliage, engineer barriers and natural barriers. The terrain scale can be varied from 25-to 200-meter terrain grids, according to Yardley.

In addition to Fort Benning, Forts Sill, Knox and Leavenworth and White Sands Missile Range use the Janus system to analyze tactics and weapon's systems in order for the Army to know how well present systems and tactics will work and to evaluate the effectiveness of new systems and tactics.

Be careful when financing a car

By Hal Haskins
American Forces Information Service

You see a lot of newspaper ads these days in which car dealers offer a choice of low-interest financing or a cash rebate.

Is it better to use the dealer's reduced-rate financing or to take the rebate and finance the car through your cedit union or bank?

It depends on the deal, of course. And bear in mind that car dealers' advertised loan rates tell only part of the story; there may be catches accompanying dealer financing. Here are a few to look out for:

- Available only on selected models. The reduced rate may not be offered on the car you want.
- Less negotiating power. If you read the fine print in the ads, you'll usually see phrases like "subject to dealer restriction and selling price" or "dealer financial participation may affect final negotiated price of the vehicle." These mean just what they say — you'll probably get less for your trade in or pay more for the car than if you finance independently.
- Early payoff penalties. This is an important consideration if you don't keep the car the full term of the loan or if you increase the amount of your payments.
- Large down payment. In some cases, dealers ask for 33 percent down.
- Short term required. You may have to pay off the loan in 12 or 24 months to get the advertised low rate.
- Life insurance may cost extra. A typical charge for credit life insurance that pays off your loan in the event of your death is 78 cents per $100 of the loan amount. For example, on a loan of $10,000, this would be $78. Many credit unions and banks, however, offer life insurance at no additional cost.

Keeping the above points in mind, if a dealer has a car you want, at the price you want to pay, ask what the down payment will be, the payment schedule and the total cost under the dealer's financing plan. By law, he must tell you. Compare these figures with what your bank or credit union offers.

The accompanying chart gives two examples, using a bank or credit union interest rate of 9 percent (annual percentage rate) and the same car price and down payment in each case.

In example A, the car is $42.32 cheaper under the dealer's financing.

In example B, you would have saved $1,017.60 by financing the car at 9 percent through your bank or credit union, even though the dealer offered a low 2.4 percent. Approximately $185 more would be saved in example B if the $1,500 rebate were invested at a 6 percent annual return.

The only general rule that can be drawn from these two examples is that the total price you pay varies greatly with the plan. Although the larger rebate in example B had an effect on the difference in total cost, the size of the rebate doesn't always determine which deal is better.

Find out in advance what the total cost of the car will be undereach financing plan you are considering and look for any hidden catches before making your choice.

Troop realizes dream in Airborne School

Desire drives him around track, determination makes him go on

Editor's note: The following article is the first in a two-part series about a young soldier who recently graduated from the U.S. Army Airborne School here. His story exemplifies the dedication, courage and values held by many of today's young soldiers.

By Christopher Austin and Anne Keays
Training and Doctrine Command

FORT MONROE, VA. (TNS)— "Well, I did it! I finally made my first jump from an aircraft, an Air Force C-141. I was flying 1,250 feet up in the Alabama skies, over Fryer Drop Zone. I was first man out of the plane on the second pass over the DZ. Boy, it was great! It's like no other feeling in the world."

Pvt. 2 Christopher Ray Austin, 18, had just realized a dream he'd cherished for most of his young life. Born in a coal-mining town in the mountains of northeastern Tennessee, he is the first child, and only son, of a career soldier.

His father, MSgt. E. Ray Austin, 40, is stationed at TRADOC headquarters here. He is assigned to the Information Systems Command-TRADOC, and manages ISC's renelistment programs at 19 TRADOC installations, activities.

The Austins will enthusiastically explain that military service is a tradition in Scott County, Tenn. Christopher's grandfather, several uncles, and grand-uncles served and fought for their country in earlier wars. Christopher's father volunteered for Vietnam in January 1969, and returned home a decorated hero.

The younger Austin, his two sisters, and mother moved to New Castle, Ind., after divorce separated the family. The elder remained close to his children and former wife, however, and said he has been able to provide a positive influence in their lives. As for his son Christopher, he's "delighted" the young man is carrying on the family's tradition of military service.

"Chris is really gung-ho," said Austin. "He wants to do it all — Airborne, Ranger, whatever the Army offers."

And the young man is well on his way. On Nov. 6, 1986, he graduated from the U.S. Army Airborne School's Basic Course. Following, in his own words, Christopher Ray Austin, Pvt. 2, United States Army, tells what it means to be an Airborne soldier.

Friday, Oct. 10

We've just graduated from Basic Training and Advanced Individual Training — that's 13 weeks of infantry training. It was really rough, especially in the Georgia heat in the middle of the summer.

Today my dreams of being Airborne-qualified are finally coming true. We graduated from AIT at 8:30 a.m., and I was on a bus headed for the Jump School at 9:45 a.m. It's really exciting, but a little scary. My stomach feels really empty but strong, the kind of feeling I will never forget.

Tuesday, Oct. 14

It's very humid here at Jump School, well in Georgia period. We finally finished inprocessing today. I've never been more mixed up in all my life. The paperwork kept getting messed up and lost. "Sergeant Airborne" (that's what we are required to call the cadre) was getting pretty teed off—and you couldn't blame him.

We found out we have "Zero Week." Zero Week really isn't anything but details and physical training. It really made me mad, because back at Sand Hill where I had One-Station-Unit-Training we were always high speed. We were seldom bored. But during Zero Week we sit around a lot waiting for something to do to keep our minds off the ones we love and miss back home.

One thing my father taught me was that the Army will make you a man — and he was right. Being bored though will make you wish you were back home with your family, especially if you have a girlfriend. My mother, aunt, and my girlfriend came down from New Castle to see me graduate from AIT, and spent the weekend with me. I really felt sick and lonely when they left. But that's part of being a soldier — you have to face it that you aren't living at home anymore. Most of the soldiers here are 18 or 19 years old, and they feel the same way.

Wednesday, Oct.15

Well, another day of policing up the area and doing details with "the riggers." The riggers repair and pack parachutes. Today we did physical training at 5:15 a.m. We ran around the track 1½ miles, and went to the "Gig Pit" (a place for punishment) where we did several push-ups. Then we ran 3½ more miles out to the air strip and back. It was really a good run. We 11Bs (infantrymen) had it pretty easy compared to some. We're used to running four miles every morning and doing a lot of push-ups and flutter-kicks.

I read all the signs up at Jump School and thought to myself how dangerous it really is. One of the sayings is: "DANGER IS NO STRANGER TO AIRBORNE RANGER."

Week one is Ground Week — learning the basic jumps, PLFs or parachute landing falls, and working with the 34-foot "mock" tower, and doing details like unloading parachutes with the riggers.

Week two is Tower Week — with more PLFs, and finally the training on the 250-foot towers.

Week three is Jump Week — and graduation.

I must be crazy. They keep calling us "crazy legs" or "dirty, nasty legs" because we aren't AIRBORNE yet. I can handle it.

Monday, Oct. 20

My first day of Ground Week. PT was at 5:45 a.m. We ran 3½ laps around a track. That was really rough to keep a pace on. It was still dark, and we were running seven-minute miles, with 462 people in formation.

The Black Hats told us that if anyone falls out of two runs during the week, or out of the Friday run, which is 4½ laps, he will be gone from the school, never to return.

We had 74 people fall out today. I didn't. I have my heart set on getting through this school — and there ain't much going to stop me.

Tuesday, Oct. 21

The PT is the worst part of the school. It's hard to get up at 4:15 a.m. and get dressed, shaved and clean up your area, and get into formation at 5 a.m. to run 3½ miles with push-ups and flutter-kicks.

But it's good for us, and it keeps us motivated. You feel like Superman after that run. Your body finally starts to function properly.

We went back to the company area at 6:15 a.m., got dressed, ate chow at 7 a.m., and then left for Ground Branch at 8:30 a.m. We had cable time at 8:45 a.m. Cable time is when we get inspected and have another roll-call formation.

We did more parachute landing falls today. You have to do two front landing falls, two side landing falls and two rear landing falls satisfactorily. You have to qualify on each of these, and they can get pretty rough sometimes. You fall into a sawdust pit, but your body falls about four feet. When you fall 40 or 50 times in two hours, it gets rough on your body. Plus, all the yelling the Black Hats do doesn't make things any easier.

Wednesday, Oct. 22

Well, we "jumped" from the 34-foot mock tower today. I was a little scared at first. I don't like heights anyway — and standing in a mock-up aircraft door, and falling about five feet before you feel the shock of the harness straps catching to the cable is a scary feeling.

Thursday, Oct. 23

Well, I qualified on all my PLFs today. I must have dropped 50 times before I made it. But I did it. I made the PT run again this morning. We had 14 people drop from Airborne training this morning. They just couldn't handle it.

The Black Hats will ask you every day if you want to quit. I always sound off with a loud and thunderous "HELL NO," along with the rest of the company. It is a good feeling to say to yourself, "I didn't quit."

But we still have 1½ weeks to go.

Marathon

Race attracts record field of competitors

Photos by Thad Roberson

Joe Molloy, a soldier from Fort Hood, Texas, finished first.

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

Nearly 1,000 runners braved the wintery temperatures Saturday, hoping to claim the endurance prize by completing the Fort Benning Infantry Marathon/Half Marathon.

Temperatures stayed in the low 30s, and the bright sunlight belied the coldness of the competition.

For the third consecutive year, Joe M. Molloy won the 26.3 mile event.

The 25-year-old runner from the 312th Military Intelligence Battalion, 1st Cavalry Division, Fort Hood, Texas, set the course record last year at 2:26.42, but could not run the distance this year in less than 2:31:43.

Molloy began his Infantry Marathon burst in 1985, when he zipped through the double-looped course in 2:27.

"This was the hardest and the slowest marathon for me," Molloy said.

"I knew that I was not ready for this one. Lately, I've been tired and a bit weak, but, I wanted to try just once more," he said.

Molloy has qualified for the Boston Marathon, but said he plans to take a month off before deciding whether to compete or to train for the All Army Track and Field trials scheduled April 6 through June 6 at The Presidio, San Francisco, Calif.

This may be Molloy's last opportunity to compete in the Infantry Marathon since he is scheduled to move to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

The field may then be open to this year's second-place finisher, Richard Mata, who was less than a minute behind the leader at 2:32:20, and barely edged the third-place Phillip Nielsen by only six seconds.

Teammates Colleen Forshee and Anne Misilin of Fort Campbell, Ky., crossed the tape at 3:03:29, to share the marathon crown in the female division, while finishing 33rd and 34th in the overall competition.

Misilin, a 25-year-old physical therapist, had run this marathon course before. It was two years ago that the Army captain took fifth place in a large field of contestants.

For the 23-year-old Forshee, not only was the course new and mysterious, but the 26.3 mile distance was also foreign to the Fort Campbell civilian.

"We trained together for this run and it really paid off," Forshee said.

"The first half of the course went smoothly. But the second half took a lot more work, almost more than I thought I was capable of," she said.

Angela Jenkins claimed the third-place prize at 3:23:41.

The full endurance race held more than 160 competitors captive in what ended as a five-hour course.

The pace was stepped up in what seemed to be a speed trial, as Jay Woods, 29, shattered the half marathon track record at 1:07:46.

Woods had just finished Basic Training and Advance Individual Training and said that was why he was in shape for the race, but his true strength is the shorter distance.

"It was a beautiful course, there was the scenery on the backside that kept me moving. But, I am a miler at heart," Woods said.

"It has been in the mile that I do my best, with a personal best of 3:54 in the mile," he added.

Though Woods had competed in but two previous half marathons, his training was intense for the Fort Benning Infantry Marathon.

"I'd heard that the competition in this race would be some of the best in the region. I knew that I would have to train hard. But, I limited myself to 120 miles each week, Woods said.

The Provo, Utah, National Guardsman kept a 5:10 pace throughout the 13-plus course, and finished almost two minutes ahead of his closest competitor, Steven Wynder, who labored to a 1:09:27.

Wynder, a member of the Fort Bliss, Texas, Falcons team, found his first-place title in the age group, where the 36-year-old pediatrician claimed the top finish. The third-place slot was filled by a familiar runner to the Fort Benning area. Robert Brooks consistently comes through with a top finish. In this year's half marathon, he sprinted to a 1:10:10 third place finish.

Alicia Livsey, in her second half marathon competition, ignited the course in 1:28, claiming the top spot in the Female Division.

Livsey ran in several local races since competing in a half marathon while in Germany.

The 29-year old family member won the recent 5-mile Faith School race and competed in the Couples Race at Cooper Creek.

Lagrange, Ga., was represented by Kay Williamson, 24, who sped to second place at 1:30:10, followed by Gloria Barron at 1:32:58.

Teams throughout the region pooled times to determine the top dog in a three-person group.

Competitors take off at the sound of the starting cannon.

Colleen Forshee, (left), and Anne Misilin, relax after coming in first and second place, respectively, in the marathon.

Photographs preserve history; show black architecture of past

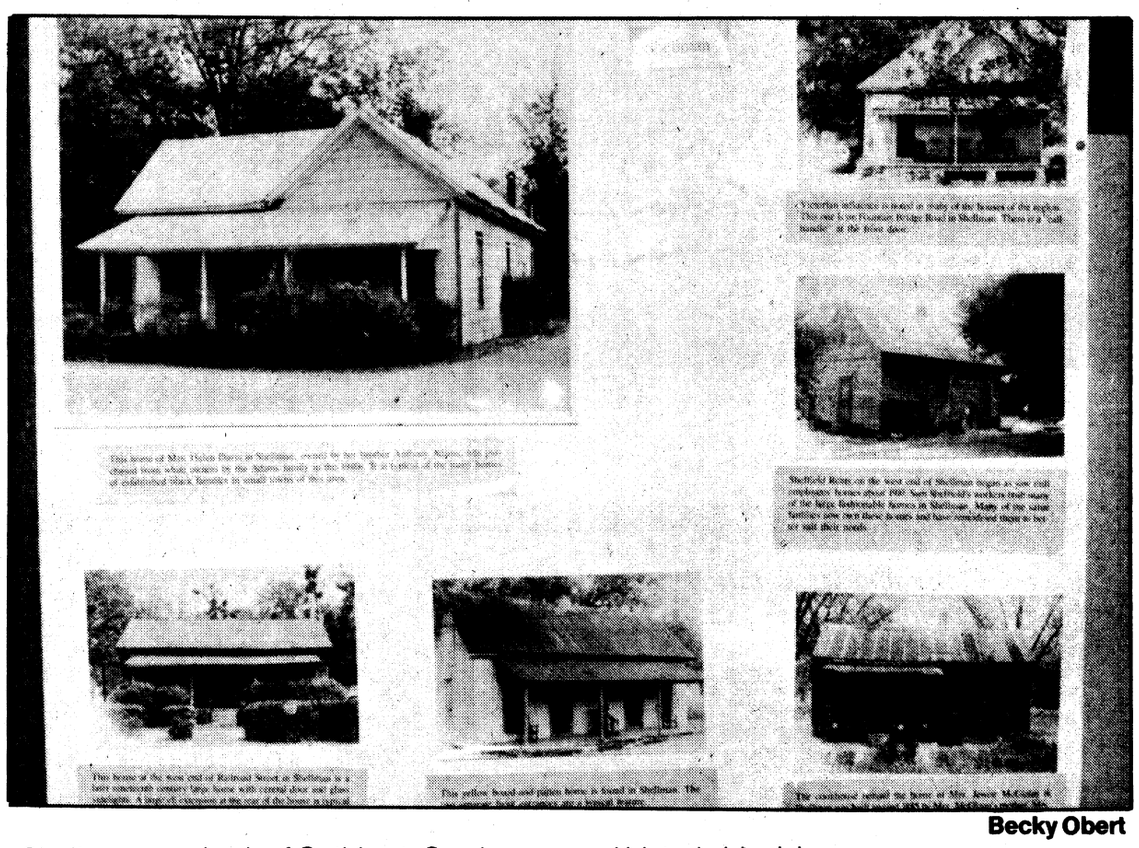
By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

An exhibit of photographs taken during a recent preservation survey of black architecture in West Georgia is on display at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, now through Feb. 2.

Homes of black community leaders, churches, schools and meeting halls, as well as other examples of architectural styles of regional black structures, are featured in the exhibit. It also includes photographs of structures in Clay, Randolph and Stewart Counties.

Volunteers from these counties provided information on black history in their area for the African-American Historic Survey, supervised by Dr. Joseph Mahan of the Lower Chattahoochee Architectural Preservation District Council in Columbus.

Funding was provided by a grant from the State Preservation Office in Atlanta, Ga. Westville Historic Handicrafts, Inc., in Lumpkin, Ga., assisted in the effort. The results of the survey are located in the museum archives. The exhibit is on loan from Westville Ga.



The center, located in Building 9079, is open Wednesday through Saturday from noon to 9 p.m., and Sunday from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

What makes this exhibit especially interesting for history buffs is that along with the black and white photographs on display, historical information on each area depicted is also available. Cities in the exhibit include the Georgia cities of Columbus, Greenville, Fort Gaines, Shellman, Slatonville and Cuthbert.

Houses included in the exhibit are those occupied by blacks during the late 19th Century and early 20th Century.

The exhibit offers insight into the racial makeup of Columbus in the early part of the century.

In 1936, the southeastern portion of the original City of Columbus was predominantly inhabited by blacks. However, several blocks of Second and Third Avenues and the streets connecting them were racially mixed, with blacks and whites living side by side. When taken in the context of the strict racial segregation that was the rule in the South, this is quite significant.

NCO teaches leaders how to keep good soldiers in Army

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

As the command retention sergeant major for Fort Benning, SGM Verray Caldwell has one message he hopes to get across to officers and non-commissioned officers.

"Reenlistment is everything that we do and everything that we do is reenlistment is my slogan," he said.

Caldwell came to Fort Benning from Camp Casey, Korea, where he served as the command retention NCO for 15 months.

He and his staff are responsible for counseling enlisted soldiers who have almost completed their tours of duty and have to decide whether or not to reenlist.

Of the 18,000 enlisted soldiers assigned to Fort Benning, approximately 1,300 first-term troops must make this decision each quarter, he said. Another 350 to 400 mid-term (soldiers who have less than 10 years active duty service) and career (over 10 years active duty) must be counseled.

Caldwell said the 19 retention NCOs under his supervision are well equipped to take care of the actual reenlistment counseling and paperwork.

The statistics prove that they are doing their job. For the first quarter of fiscal year 1987, Fort Benning exceeded its reenlistment goals set by Training and Doctrine Command and Forces Command, signing up 422 soldiers for another tour of duty.

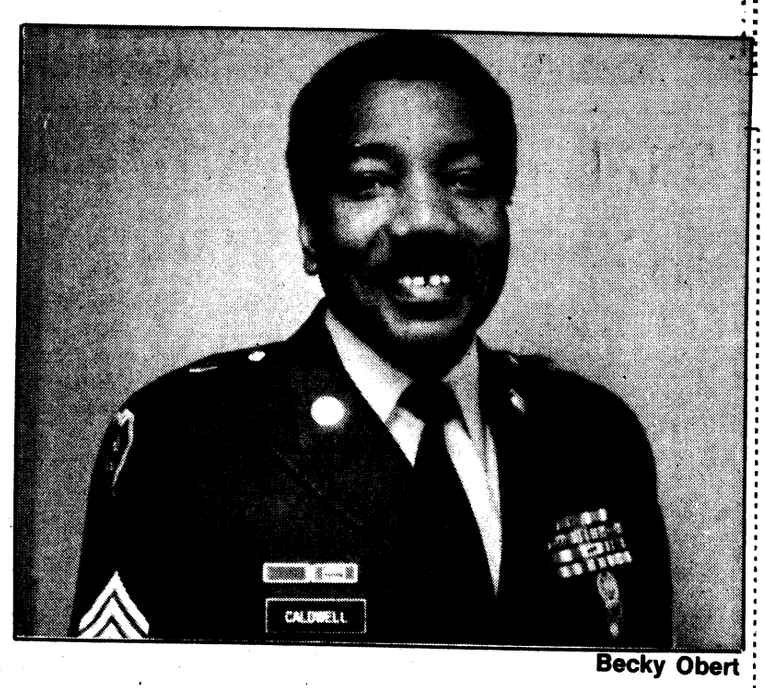
But they can't work miracles if the officers and NCOs in individual units have not done their jobs, Caldwell said.

"When a soldier reenlists in his unit for his present duty assignment, that says something about the unit itself," he said. "Those leaders can be proud that they are a part of the team that made it happen."

What it takes is a conscious effort on the part of commanders to treat their enlisted soldiers right, give them credit when it is their due, and praise them for doing good work.

"Reenlisting soldiers in any unit is a piece of cake when the soldiers feel that they are being cared for, and when leaders are praising the soldiers for doing a good job," he said.

"Often times, our leaders forget that soldiers are watching us around the clock, and when we make a mistake, it's recorded in the soldier's mind," he said. He said it doesn't matter what kind of mistake it is, be it in training, day-to-day caring for the soldiers, or conduct unbecoming of officers and NCOs in their personal affairs, the enlisted soldiers see it.



"I have always tried to get our leaders to understand that it is easy to fool me, but a soldier can spot a phony at maximum range," he said.

Caldwell said that since his arrival to Benning in November, he's met all the retention NCOs on post, and they are capable soldiers who have the skills needed to do their jobs.

But, he said, they cannot do it alone.

"Retention NCOs do not carry around a magic wand that can be waved over a soldier's head to get him to reenlist when the time comes," he said.

"If soldiers feel they've been misused, abused or neglected by our leaders, they are sure prospects for going home to look for the job satisfaction they should have had while in the Army," Caldwell said.

MILPERCEN answers questions on assignments

Military Personnel Center

Here are some of the most frequently asked questions about assignments, with answers prepared by the Military Personnel Center.

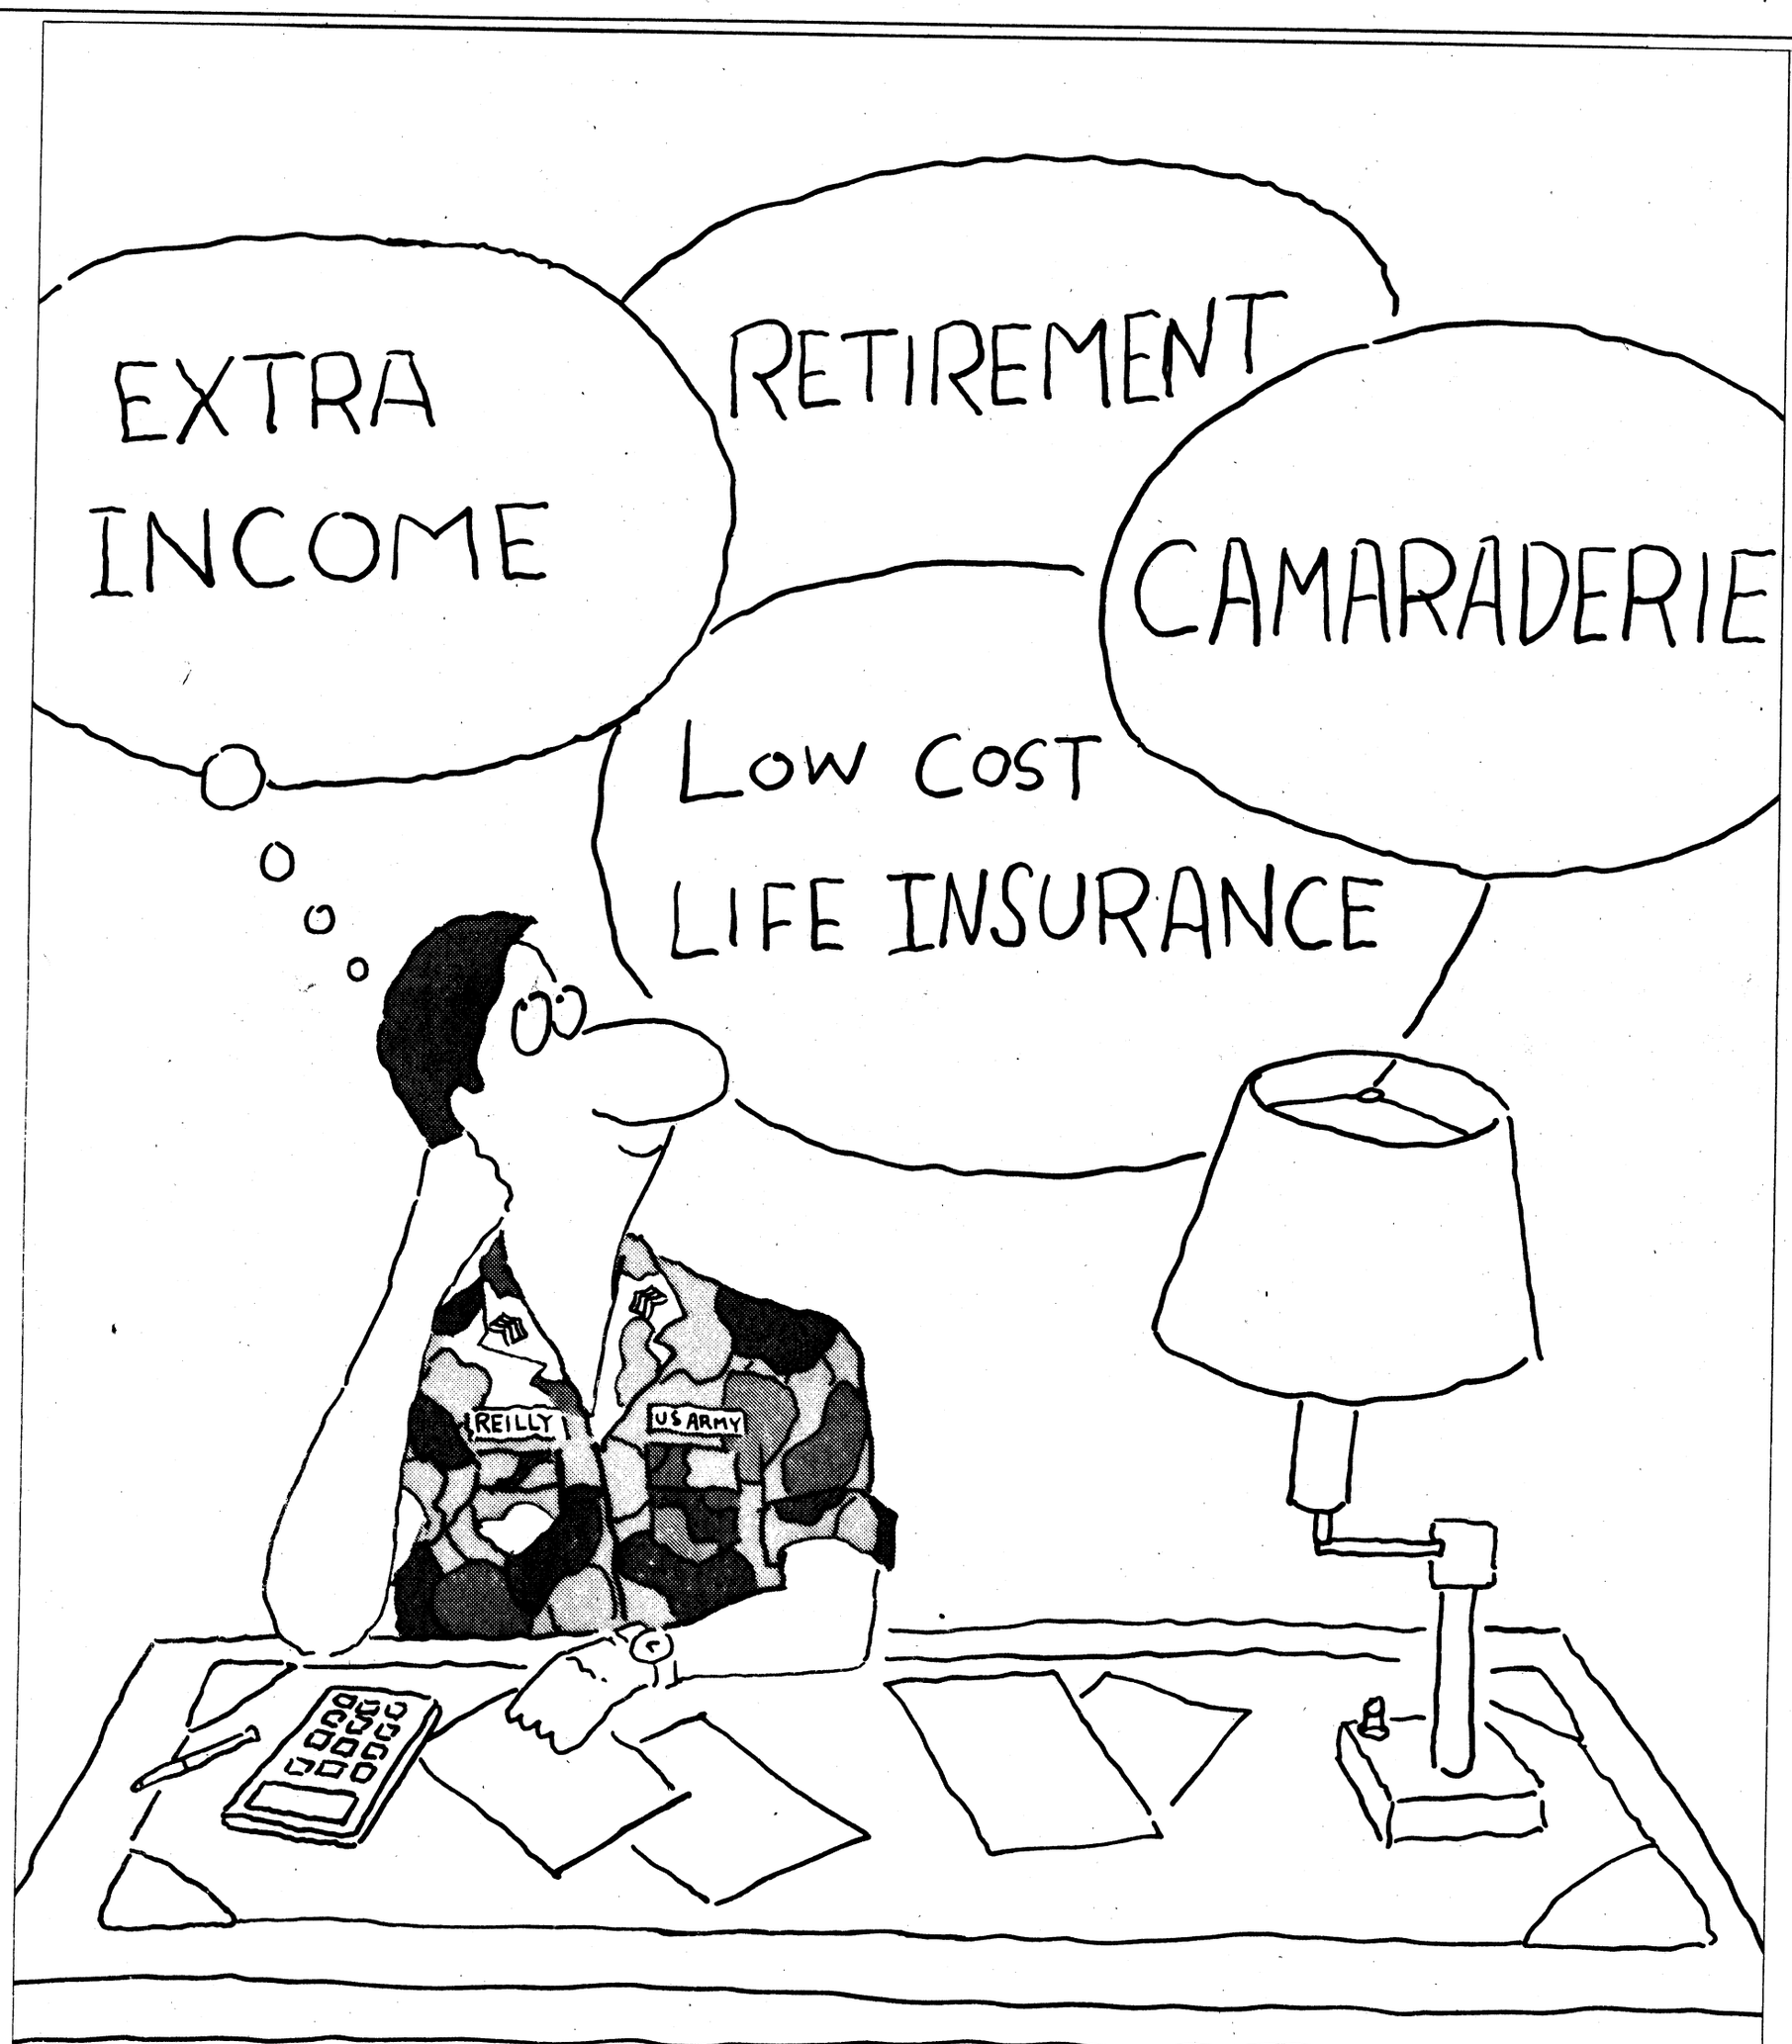
Q. How may an officer not desiring to command for a specific period of time, i.e. one year, remove oneself from consideration?

A. Officers may decline command consideration without prejudice prior to the convening of a board, for any category of command for which they are eligible. This is done by writing the appropriate career branch at MILPERCEN, asking to be removed from consideration for a specified time. However, officers who are selected for command or activated from alternate lists and later decline, for whatever reason, are no longer eligible for command consideration.

Q. Why can't I receive an assignment prior to leaving for an officers advance course so I can resettle my family at my follow-on assignment?

A. A new program has recently been approved that will allow officers selected for an advance course to move their families to a Continental U.S. follow-on assignments before reporting to the advance course. This advance assignment procedure will only apply to officers scheduled for CONUS follow-on assignments and who agree to move their families to that assignment only. For more information, contact your personnel assignment officer.

Q. What is the current policy concerning Conditional Voluntary Indefinite application?



A. Other-than-Regular-Army officers may apply when they are to be included in the promotion zone for selection to captain. Officers must apply to be considered for VCI. Applications should reach MILPERCEN four to six weeks before the convening date of the announced captains' board.

Q. How does an officer get selected to serve as an instructor at the United States Military Academy, West Point, N.Y., and must an officer be a USMA graduate to be selected?

A. No, an officer does not have to be a USMA graduate. Each summer, USMA submits to MILPERCEN its requirements for prospective instructors, those officers who will be sent to graduate school, usually for two years, beginning the following summer. MILPERCEN identifies and nominates officers to fill these requirements. USMA makes the final selection. Officers interested in serving as instructors at USMA should send applications (letter or DA Form 4187) to their assignment divisions as specified in AR 614-130.

Q. How does an officer who has been selected as an alternate for command become activated?

A. When a vacancy occurs for which a principal is not available, the first rank-ordered, qualified alternate from the effective list is activated. Alternates are activated only to fill vacancies occuring in the fiscal year for which designated. Slated principals, if available, will fill those command positions for which slated and that become vacant earlier or later than programmed.

GETTING OUT? YOUR ARMY BENEFITS CAN BE MORE THAN MEMORIES.

It's probably hard to say what you'll miss most about the Army if you've decided to return to civilian life. For some, it's the camaraderie. Others miss the travel and excitement. Still more miss those money-saving Army benefits.

Joining the Army Reserve can help you retain many things you like about the Army. Most important, it will help you keep some of those great benefits. Like your PX and commissary privileges. Space-available air travel. And low-cost life insurance.

The extra income you'll earn will come in handy, too. Right now, an E-5 with four years active duty earns over $125 for a single Reserve weekend. Add two weeks annual training pay, and you've got over $2,000 a year. Plus, you'll continue to qualify for retirement pay.

For more information call SGM Carl E. Pelt, MSG James M. Southern or SGM Curtis B. Haig Jr. at 545-4132, 544-4759 or 544-2062. ARMY RESERVE. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Tickets still available for prayer breakfast

USAIC Chaplain's Office

All leaders in the Fort Benning community are invited to attend the Annual National Prayer Breakfast.

The event will take place Feb. 10 at 6:30 a.m. in the Main NCO Club.

The guest speaker for this year's gathering will be the Army Chief of Chaplains Maj. Gen. Norris L. Einertson.

Einertson became chief of chaplains in 1986 and brings a rich background and a wealth of experience from which to offer spiritual insights.

Last year, more than 300 people attended the breakfast, and 450 are expected this year. "Tickets are going fast," said Chaplain (Maj.) Terry Dempsey, breakfast coordinator.

"We believe spiritual strength is a key element of leadership and this event offers people an opportunity to nurture that strength," he said.

"By getting together in this way, we affirm each other as leaders and as faithful people," Dempsey said.

The timing of the National Prayer Breakfast coincides with a similar exercise in Washington, D. C.

The Presidential Prayer Breakfast is sponsored by the U.S. Senate and House Prayer Groups.

The purpose of the occasion is to bring together the leadership of the United States in recognition of the moral and spiritual values upon which the Nation is founded.

In 1953, members of the Senate and House Prayer Groups established with President Dwight D. Eisenhower the first Presidential Prayer Breakfast.

The Breakfast has taken place each year since then and has become known as the Annual National Prayer Breakfast.

The breakfast normally is attended by the president, the vice president, the cabinet, members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, the Supreme Court, government officials, military leaders and others from across the country.

Each year, soon after Congress convenes, men and women in leadership positions from various aspects of our national life meet together for discussion and prayer on the occasion of the Annual National Prayer Breakfast.

Since the inauguration of the breakfast, the idea of men and women in positions of responsibility meeting together privately and without publicity has spread to every state.

Tickets for the USAIC National Prayer Breakfast must be purchased in advance and cost $3 each.

Because tickets are going so fast, persons interested in attending are urged to make their reservation before the Feb. 3 deadline.

Tickets can be purchased from your unit breakfast coordinator, or call the USAIC Chaplain Office at 545-2288.

Constitution's framers put God first

By Roy N. Mathis
USAIC staff chaplain

During 1987, the nation and the United States Army will celebrate the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution.

The U.S. Constitution is a fantastic document. It is the supreme law of the land. It establishes the form of the United States government and the rights and liberties of the American people.

As soldiers, we are committed to protect the Constitution and defend it at all costs — with our lives if necessary.

Occasionally a soldier is asked, "How can you, as a Christian, serve in the Army?" My normal response is, "With a lot of pride."

Of course, the real questions is, "How can you serve both God and country?"

A similar question was once posed to Jesus in reference to paying taxes. He requested a coin and then asked, "Whose inscription is on the coin?" Someone answered "Caesar's."

Then Jesus said, "Render therefore unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and to God the things that are God's."

In other words, there doesn't have to be a conflict between serving both God and country.

Our forefathers had the wisdom to keep church and state separate, while at the same time guaranteeing freedom of worship. The first amendment to the Constitution reads in part, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religon, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

It should not have surprised anyone that the very first amendment guaranteed religius freedom. The early colonists who settled here were people who possessed a deep faith in God and the Bible, and were in search of a land where they could worship without government interference or restrictions.

Likewise, the representatives from the 13 colonies who met in Philadelphia, Pa., to draft the Constitution, brought religious freedom with them as a high agenda item.

The meeting to frame our Constitution seemed to be doomed when after three weeks of fruitless wrangling, the representatives could not agree on a thing.

It was Benjamin Franklin who arose to his feet and said, "Mr. President, I perceive that we are not in a position to pursue this business any further — our blood is too hot. I therefore move, Sir, that we separate for three days, during which time (we adopt) a conciliatory spirit.

"And I also move that we have a chaplain when we meet again to lead us in invoking the blessings of heaven. Sir, it is wisely written that except the Lord build the city, they labor in vain who build it; and if it be true that a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, surely a nation cannot rise without His aid."

George Washington's face beamed with joy as he arose to second the motion. Three days later, with their minds energized by prayer, these men met again and prepared one of the greatest documents the world has ever witnessed on freedom for mankind.

From that time until now, God has honored us and blessed us, and we have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of heaven. We have been preserved these many years in peace and prosperity. We have grown in numbers, wealth, and power as no other nation has ever grown.

However, we are often guilty of the same sin as many other great nations of past history — we fail to remember.

Too many times we have forgotten the gracious hand which preserved us in peace, watched over us in battle and provided us with bounty.

When we find ourselves in this mode, there are many who justifiably ask the question, "Are we still one nation under God?" We can be.

The Scriptures have the answer: "If my people who are called by my name will humble themselves and repent of their evil ways, I will hear their prayer and heal their land."

As we celebrate the 200th birthday of our great Constitution, it is good to remember what brought us to this point in our history, and at the same time renew our commitment to both our God and our Country.

Boy Scouts' success lies in emphasis on faith, country

By Paul L. Williams
7th Battalion, 1st ITB chaplain

Knock, knock.
Who's there?
Amos.
Amos, who?
A mosquito bit me. Knock, knock.
Who's there?
Andy.
Andy, who?
And y just bit me again.

There are few things more corny than the "Think and Grin" joke page of the Boy's Life magazine for Boy Scouts. But that is where the corniness ends.

There is nothing corny about the fact that no other youth organization has worked so well for so long with so many civic organizations, influencing so many boys in so many ways., The Boy Scouts of America is by far the largest organization of its kind. It has influenced presidents and astronauts. It has influenced rich and poor; black and white and urban and rural youth for over 75 years. It is one of the most influential volunteer organizations in the nation. This is not corny at all.

One may ask, "What makes the Boy Scouts so successful?" In numbers of boys and adult volunteers it has had a profound and lasting impact on so many individual lives. How has it worked where other organizations have failed?

The answer is "priorities!" We can quickly see the Boy Scout's priorities in his oath which he swears as a scout.

"On my honor, I will do my best, to do my duty to God and my country, and to obey the Scout Law; to help other people at all times and to keep myself physically strong, mentally awake and morally straight."

We first note that the Boy Scout sees his goals not just as nice, or if convenient, or most of the time . . . but as his duty. He sees his duty whether it is fun, or comfortable, or popular or not.

We next note that his first priority is the same as that of our nation's founders. They understood that the beginning of strength was knowing one's relationship to God. "In God We Trust" is no idle phase. They knew, and Boy Scouts know, that building character and building a free nation is risky business. The effort is doomed to fail without a proper foundation of attention to God.

We next notice the second priority is duty to country. Boy Scouts know that any one person's freedom is only as secure as everyone's freedom. To not protect the freedom of the weakest person among us weakens the freedom of all. "If we don't hang together, we shall all hang separately," Benjamin Franklin said.

Boy Scouts know that this conviction, along with "obey the scout law" and "help other people," make up our second duty before duty to oneself. Jesus taught that the two great commandments are to first, love God, and second, to love your neighbor.

I am convinced that the Boy Scouts' clarion voice of priorities before self, to God first and to neighbors second, is its great strength. This is why it has succeeded where so many other groups have failed. This is an important lesson for us in this nation. We must hear it. That is why we need Boy Scouting. That is why this Sunday is declared Boy Scout Sunday all across this nation.

Even if he never helps an old lady across the street, the Boy Scout has done us a great "good turn" by showing us priorities.

We may cringe when a Boy Scout tells the old corny line: "The reason that a dog can't dance is that he has two left feet!" But let us rise and join with him this Sunday as he brings his right arm to the square and says, "On my honor . . ."

Parents' patience, understanding vital to child's training

By Herman J. Barthel
MACH Family Practice

A child's control of bowel and bladder function is an important natural step in the developmental process.

Toilet training requires much patience and assistance from parents. When toilet training is begun, the very young child most likely will not have any real understanding of what it is all about.

The process of developing good toilet habits can be very difficult or very easy. This article will attempt to help make it an easy and bearable process.

One of the questions most frequently asked by a mother is, "When is the best time to begin potty training?" There is no specific age that one can state is the perfect age to start.

In order for a child to cooperate in toilet training, he must have the muscular maturity to control his urination and bowel movements. In most cases these conditions will not be present until the child is 15- to 18-months old.

Most mothers find it advantageous to begin serious toilet training of their children when they are between 18- and 24-months old. At this age the child is able to communicate to his parents in some fashion, is able to control the proper muscles and wants to please those he loves.

Parents must remember that as the child matures, he needs and desires their love and approval and if toilet training is important to them, it becomes important to him.

Most people find it preferable to begin training the child using a small potty chair. The child is more comfortable and he regards it as his own piece of furniture. It also gives him a more secure feeling than if he were to sit on the big toilet.

When you believe your child is ready for toilet training, set him on the chair with his clothes on for a few minutes at the time a bowel movement usually occurs. Tell the child in a friendly way what it is you want him to do.

If the child protests, he's probably not ready yet and it would be wise to wait a few weeks and try again. Always maintain a casual attitude.

After the child has been successful at training on the chair for a few days with his clothes on, it's time to have him sit without diapers for a few minutes each day.

Take it slow. Don't make him nervous by hovering over him waiting for something to happen. If he has success, praise him; if not, let him get off the chair without showing any disappointment.

Most likely he will have his bowel movement when you put his diaper on, but remember he's doing what is natural for him, he's not being spiteful. So, do not punish him, for this will lead to rebellion and a major setback in his training process.

If a child is given the time to learn willingly and is not forced, threatened, or punished, control can take place very quickly when it does come. Every child is different, don't compare him with a sibling or neighbor's child.

Remember a child may seem to be completely trained and an illness, fatigue, trip or emotional disturbance might cause him to wet again. Just be patient and loving and he will overcome this.

Toilet training can bring many surprises, particularly for the first-time parent. Children take pride in their stools and may not want you to flush them away. Why? Because they are demonstrating healthy curiosity and if you disapprove of their curiosity, it may seem to a child that there is no way of pleasing you. So, show interest, pride and delight with their "little creations."

Singer delights students with performance

by Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools Correspondent

Jon Bartlett, a bass-baritone who performs with the Atlanta Opera and the Southeastern Savoyards, and who teaches at Columbus College, was the second featured performer in this year's Fort Benning Schools' Fine Arts concert series.

Bartlett was accompanied on piano by Rexford Whiddon, chairman of the music department at Columbus College.

Bartlett sang works by Johannes Brahms, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, Charles Ives, Benjamin Britten and Aaron Copland. The program was composed of folk songs, and Bartlett sang the songs in their original languages; English, German and Italian. He explained how composers down through the centuries have used lyrics and melodies of folk songs as part of their compositions.

Before singing each song, Bartlett told the students about the song's composer. He explained why the song had been written, what the words were saying and how the music itself helped to tell the song's story.

With Bartlett's explanation, most students were able to listen to Bartlett sing and to understand the story that the song was telling.

The next concert in the series will occur in February when Patricio Cobos, director of orchestral activities at Columbus College, will be the featured performer.

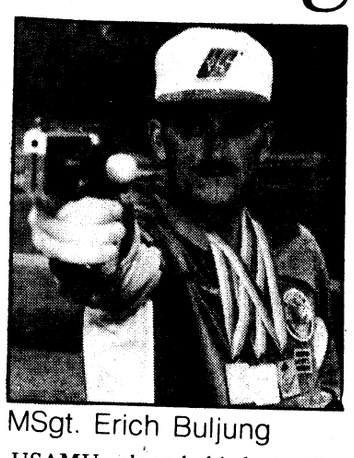
USAMU wins big

Buljung sets firing record

By Tommy Pool
USAMU correspondent



The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's MSgt. Erich Buljung won two individual titles and scored a new national record in pistol competition here January 23-25.

More than 30 of the top competitors in the Southeast participated in this year's National Indoor Sectional Pistol Championships conducted on USAMU ranges.

Buljung's two individual victories came during the Standard Pistol and 10-Meter Air Pistol events. His total of 583 out of 600 in Standard Pistol also established a new national record and erased the old mark of 582 set in 1984.

USAMU members SFC James Laguna and MSgt. Roger Willis, placed second and third behind Buljung with final scores of 572 and 570 respectively.

In 10-Meter Air Pistol, Buljung finished 14 points ahead of teammate SSgt. Rojelio Arrendondo with a final total of 577 to Arrendondo's 563. MSgt. Joe Steed, also of USAMU, placed third at 562.

MSgt. Erich Buljung

Lt. Col. Sharon Best of USAMU captured high individual honors in the Women's Air Pistol event with an excellent total of 370 out of 400 possible points.

The indoor Free Pistol title was taken by USAMU's SSgt. Gary Marsh with a final of 541 out of 600. He was followed by Willis at 539 for second place, while Buljung rounded out the top three places at 538.

USAMU members also swept all three indoor team titles during this year's championships.

Members of the winning U.S. Army "Blue" squad were Buljung, Willis and SSgt. Gary Marsh. Their totals included 1,711 out of 1,800 points in Standard Pistol.

Early training vital to becoming successful orienteer

By Linda Ferguson
Orienteering director

Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of articles on how to teach Orienteering. Much of the information has been provided by Sara and Larry Berman, editors of "Orienteering North America," the official publication of the United States Orienteering Federation.

Beginners can't thrive without the help of an experienced coach. Coaches, however, tend to spend more time training the more advanced orienteers than novices. This is because it's easier to coach someone who knows what to expect and because they are often counted on to bring in those winning points.

Don't put all of your eggs in one basket! Coaches and team captains need to take the time to teach beginners, in order to form the firm foundation and the experience necessary to progress to the more advanced levels of Orienteering.

The benefits may not show immediately, but when advanced team members have moved on, there is a good base of experienced novices who can pull the team together for the next year.

Gunnar Hasselstrand's plan for teaching beginners uses a step-by-step method of logical progression of skills development. With this method of teaching, you can accomplish a lot in a very short period of time.

Hasselstrand has seven levels of skills development which stem from a Ground Level base. The two lower levels can be taught to anyone with a smattering of land navigation skills very quickly.

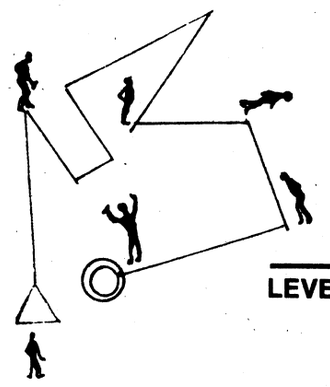
Ground Level: The first step at the ground level is becoming familiar with the woods. A short map or terrain hike is a good way to get the feel of the land. Even for the most experienced woodsman, it takes a few minutes in the woods to feel comfortable again after being away from it for a while.

The second step at this level is learning to orient and reorient the map without a compass. This is done using features: buildings, roads, hills, etc., and can be taught by laying out a route on a field, using ribbon or chalk dust.

The instructor leads the students through the first few turns, showing them ow to change their grip on the map with each turn, so the map is always oriented to what they see. He then steps aside and observes each student to make sure that they are reorienting their maps correctly.

This course can be as simple as a floor plan of a room or building, or as sophisticated as a permanent grid painted on a parking lot.

The grid or floor plan is reproduced on paper to make a "map," and each student has a route drawn from object to object or along the grid lines which act as "points" and combined produce a "course." Markers are placed at each point and the students must count the number that they pass, to locate their position on the map.



The final step in mastering this level is understanding a map. This involves having each student draw a map of a small area, oriented to the position of each object in the area and how they lie, in relation to each other. The actual distance and direction are not important. What is important is learning to understand special relationships.

Level One: After mastering the skills at ground level, the student progresses to Level One. The first skill in this level is the recognition of colors on an Orienteering map and learning the most common symbols. Control descriptors are not needed for beginners, since word descriptions are used at this level. Activities which help teach these skills are provided with map hikes and games similar to relays and trivia games.

The next skill is following a simple course along "handrails." handrails are linear features, such as roads or paths which may be followd to assist in reaching a destination. There will be a control at every junction. The third step is to extend this concept to include junctions, where decisions on which way to proceed must be made.

Once again, no compass work has been included; instead, the students are forced to look at the map and the terrain. This keeps them in touch with every feature and gives them the confidence they will need to use terrain association later, rather than total dependency on the compass.

Next time we'll deal with pushing the novice out of the nest and into the woods.

LEVEL FOUR:
- ☐ M—Reading contours in detail
- ☐ L—Using large features (hills and marshes)
- ☐ K—Understanding contours: Hills, reentrants

LEVEL THREE:
- ☐ I—Fine Orienteering on short leg
- ☐ H—Rough O' on longer legs with catching features
- ☐ G—Making simple route choices

LEVEL TWO:
- ☐ F—Short legs though the woods, with catching features with INTRODUCTION OF THE COMPASS
- ☐ E—Short cuts
- ☐ D—Features next to a handrail

LEVEL ONE:
- ☐ C—Handrails with multiple choices
- ☐ B—Handrails with one choice
- ☐ A—Map colors and most common map symbols

GROUND LEVEL:
- ☐ Understanding a map
- ☐ Orienting the map
- ☐ Getting used to being in the woods.

Badman

197th staff sergeant wins 'tough guy' competition

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

Although it is true that the lion is the king of the jungle, one must realize the terror of the snake that lurks in the brush. He lays there silently, stalking his opponent from a distance, waiting for the perfect opportunity to strike. Then, in an instant, he has released his deadly venom, demonstrating his lethality.

In the Badman Contest at the Columbus Municipal Auditorium Saturday, the baddest among the bad prevailed in the form of a 25-year-old, 155-pound, 59-inch-long " snake."

Jeffrey "The Snake" Johnson released enough venom Saturday to stand tallest among the participating giants.

In the final bout of the two-day challenge, Johnson, a staff sergeant with the 197th Infantry Brigade's Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armored Division, faced Brinson "Black Season" Harley, a boxer outweighing him by almost 100 pounds.

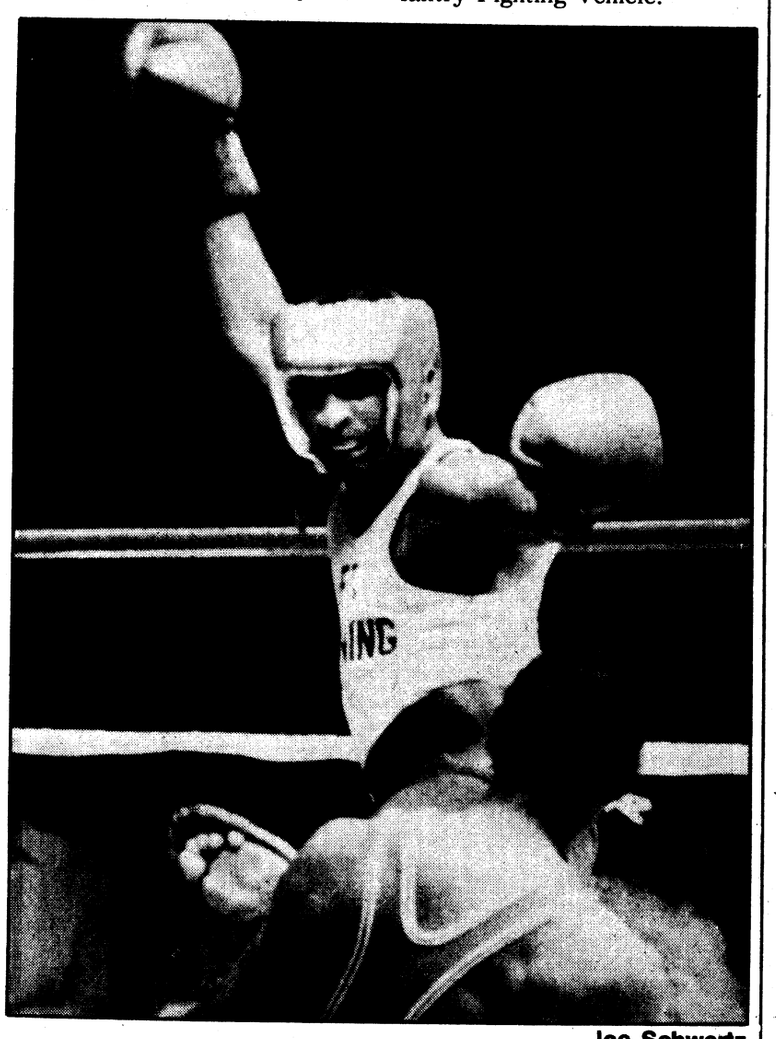
The only thing that made the fight even was that each had to wear 16-ounce gloves.

The match titled "David and Goliath," was Johnson's greatest challenge.

"In a contest where you have to have at least three kicks per round, I knew that I could not let the big man stand on my chest and rock my world. I had to stay on my toes and keep moving," Johnson said.

The stick-and-move technique of the "Snake" is nothing new to him, in that he has been familiar with the ring for more than 10 years.

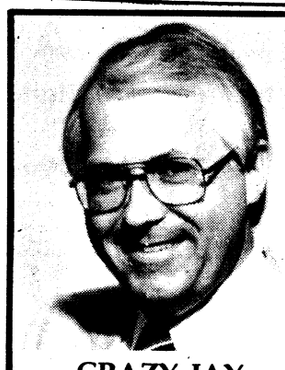
A boxer for eight years, Johnson has also trained others in survival techniques within the squared circle.



To become the baddest man in Columbus, Johnson had to rely on much more than ring experience, however. The man cut from wool and twice as thick had to face street fighters, bouncers, kick boxers and common brawlers, most of whom had built more bulk than the slender "snake."

Each contestant was hungry, but none were hungrier than the "Giant David."

"There were a lot of guys there who were after the same thing," Johnson said. "It was the same thing that I was there for, $1,000."



Opening night went smoothly for the former Georgia Golden Gloves Champion. But, it was the final and deciding night that pitted him against, not one, but three opponents.

Moving close to the ground, but standing clearly in the flats, was Jeffrey "The Snake" Johnson, taking on all challengers and proclaiming the terror of the baddest thing since the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle.

Hosptial has cancellation line

Martin Army Community Hospital officials are asking people to cancel appointments that they cannot keep.

According to Capt. Joe W. Butler, chief of the Specialty Care Support Branch, appointments cancelled more than 24 hours in advance can usually be allocated to another patient, which reduces wasted health care provider time.

In order to assist patients who do not have access to a telephone or cannot get through to the clinic during duty hours, an after duty hours medical appointment cancellation number has been designated. The number is 544-3862. Each call is recorded and forwarded to the appropriate clinic prior to duty hours the next day.

This number will only be operational after duty hours and should be used only if the patient is unable to contact the appropriate clinic to cancel the appointment.

Hosptial officials are asking for eveyone's cooperation. According to Bulter, the line has been in operation for several months and patients are not using it.

Walk-in clinic planned for pets

Fort Benning Veterinary Services is sponsoring a walk-in clinic Feb. 7 from 8 to 11 a.m.

Because of limited space, the clinic will be restricted to the first 30 pets.

The clinic will be in Building 267, the animal impoundment facility, at the rear of the Veterinary Services building on 10th Division Road. For more information, call 545-1127.

Feb. 13 deadline for scholarships

The deadline for submitting appplications for the Officers' Wives' Club scholarships is Feb. 13.

The OWC offers several $1,000 merit scholarships to graduating high school seniors who are military dependents of enlisted soldiers or officers.

In addition, two $500 scholarships will be awarded to be used for a certified vocational or technical program of studies, and scholarships will also be awarded to wives returning to school.

Application forms may be picked up at the OWC office on the corner of Ingersoll and Yeager Avenues, Monday through Thursday between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m.

For more information, call 689-4745 or the OWC office at 687-3537.

New firm gets Army ad contract

Award of the 1987 contract for recruiting advertising for the Army, the U.S. Army Reserve and the Army Reserve Officers' Training Corps recently went to the New York firm of Young and Rubicam, Inc.

In announcing the award, Defense Department officials noted that the contract includes annual, renewable options for 1988 to 1991. For the coming year, the contract's budget is expected to be about $100 million.

VA fights insurance hoax, again

The Veterans Administration is being plagued by an insurance hoax enticing veterans to request an insurance dividend that does not exist.

Despite warnings in the past, many veterans are still taken in by official-looking application forms that appear in various sections of the country stating that a bill has been passed by Congress authorizing payment of dividends on government insurance that was carried by those who served in the military during World War II.

According to VA officials "Such a dividend, amounting to almost $3 billion, was paid in 1950 to approximately 16 million veterans who carried GI insurance during World War II. The 91st Congress, however, later passed an act that states 'No claims by an insured for payment in cash of a special dividend declared prior to Jan. 1, 1952, shall be processed by the VA, unless such claim was recorded within six years after such claim was declared.' " Under this law, any such claim received by the VA is returned to the claimant along with the law and the VA considers the matter closed.

The VA does make insurance dividend payments but only to those veterans who have kept their policies in force. These payments of dividends are paid annually on the anniversary dates of individual policies without any action on the part of the veteran.

Public has confidence in military

A recent Harris Survey of public confidence in leaders of key U. S. institutions conducted late last year ranked the military with the highest approval rating.

The poll, taken between Nov. 26 and Dec. 2, 1986, found that 36 percent of the American public holds the highest level of confidence in the military leadership among those American institutions subject to the survey.

The poll reflects a 4-percent rise in public confidence from the 1985 Harris survey.

After military leaders, the survey lists educators second, with 34 percent, and physicians third, grabbing 33 percent.

Since 1971, the highest rating for military leadership measured 45 percent in 1984; the lowest measured 23 percent in 1976.

Drill Sergeant of the Year announced

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Drill Sergeant of the Year for 1987 credits his fellow drills with his success.

SFC Mike Reynolds said his colleagues in Company E, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade are all outstanding.

"Echo Company didn't have any one real stand-out drill sergeant," he said.

"All of the drill sergeants are professional and did a good job and this made me a stronger drill sergeant, which helped me in the competition for Drill Sergeant of the Year," said the 13 year Army veteran.

Reynolds, who won the competition Dec. 15, had to go before a board of sergeants major, take a physical training test and teach two classes.

The veteran of the 82nd Airborne Division, the Old Guard and the 1st Infantry Division (Forward) said the board was the toughest part of the competition for him.

"Trying to study the right areas was tough. Questions about being a drill sergeant weren't really a problem but the general subjects area was wide open and tough to prepare for," Reynolds said.

The PT test was a job in itself. All competitors had to pass the test with the minimum score of 180, which started each drill sergeant at zero. Then, every three points scored above 180 counted as one point. Reynolds said the competition in teaching classes also presented a challenge.

"We were graded by the cadre of the Drill Sergeant's School and everything had to be perfect," Reynolds explained.

As the Drill Sergeant of the Year, Reynolds serves as the "eyes and ears" of the Army Training Center commander, reporting to him on any problems encountered in training soldiers.

In addition, Reynolds will conduct several seminars for ATC drill sergeants on how they perceive training in the ATC and will report this to the ATC commander.

While serving as the eyes and ears of the ATC commander, Reynolds is also preparing for the Training and Doctrine Command's Drill Sergeant of the Year Competition, scheduled for April 20.

After putting in 18 and 19 hour days as an ATC drill sergeant Fort Benning's new Drill Sergeant of the Year is taking advantage of his light schedule to spend extra time with his family.

He said he's "catching up" on lost time with his wife, Connie, daughters Michelle and Becky, and son, Michael.

Longer tours of duty coming

Stabilizing family, cutting costs cited as goals

Army News Service

In an effort to reduce personnel turbulence, stabilize the lives of families and save money, the Army recently announced a package of new policies affecting permanent change-of-station.

The changes include the increase of a first-term soldier's tour length in Europe and Japan from 16 to 24 months beginning April 1, as well as the immediate increase of CONUS tour lengths (to include Alaska and Hawaii) to 48 months, with new restrictions on the homebase advance assignment program, joint domicile moves and household goods shipped overseas.

Soldiers serving in all 36-month overseas tour areas who have a DEROS between July 1 and Sept. 30, 1987, will be involuntarily extended in the overseas command for up to three months. To facilitate an equitable and orderly replacement flow, soldiers with a DEROS during October and November 1987 will also be extended for one to 45 days.

The changes stem from congressional concern over frequent PCS moves, the high cost associated with the PCS moves and the unnecessary disruption to Army families.

"In addition to reducing PCS moves and conserving funds, these policies will improve combat effectiveness, reduce personnel turnover, foster unit cohesion and provide continuity to programs like COHORT and the Army's Regimental System," said Col. R. Dennis Duffie. He heads the Army's Enlisted Sustainment and Distribution Division in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at the Pentagon.

The Army is continuing to review policies and procedures in search of ways to further reduce the number of PCS moves through better management. Minimum time-on-station requirements and tour completion will be key factors considered during the assignment selection process, along with unit readiness and individual professional development goals, Duffie added.

Personnel officials say that along with the new, longer tour lengths, the Army will work to change the perception that spending more than three years at any location adversely affects careers.

To further enhance the savings produced by the mandatory rules, soldiers will be encouraged through incentives to voluntarily extend their overseas tour lengths.

The most prominent incentive the Army offers is a Leave-Travel Between Overseas Tours Program for soldiers and their families who extend. The program applies to soldiers serving either an accompanied or unaccompanied tour overseas, said Lt. Col. Stephen Westbrook, the Army's representative to the Department of Defense Per Diem Committee. Soldiers will qualify for free, between-tour travel if they meet any of the following requirements:

- ☐ They complete their initial tour, and extend the tour on or after June 18, 1986, for a period equal to their previous tour.
- ☐ They are ordered to a permanent change of station from one overseas location to another overseas location.

With the new tour stability, families will stay at an assignment longer with periods of separation minimized. Spouses and children can become even more active members in their communities and schools with the assurance that they will stay long enough to receive the additional benefits of such associations.

Soldiers with fewer than two years remaining in military service will not be eligible for re-assignment betwen locations within the continental United States. These soldiers will be allowed to extend, re-enlist to be eligible for re-assignment or remain at their current duty station until their separate date.

Soldiers stationed in Alaska and Hawaii will also have a tour length of 48 months, with the same type of tour extensions available, said Duffie.

CG calls for observance of 'Black History Month

In recognition of the numerous contributions of black Americans to America's culturally pluralistic society, the month of February is proclaimed "Black History Month" at Fort Benning, Ga.

This year's theme is "Black Defenders of the Constitution: Colonial Times to the Present."

Black Americans have historically been underrepresented in our history books. However, their numerous and diverse contributions are cornerstones in American society.

Black History Month is a tool to help offset historical omissions of contributions by black citizens. I believe that the increased awareness obtained from this observance will result in increased interracial and intercultural understanding.

I encourage all personnel at this installation and in surrounding communities to join with fellow soldiers and citizens in enjoying activities here at Fort Benning, Ga., for "Black History Month 1987."

Black artists' work on show at Main Post's Sayers Library

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

The highlight of this year's observance of Black History Month will be an art exhibit Feb. 17, 18 and 19 at the Main Post Library.

Individual units also plan static displays and ethnic meals throughout the month.

Sponsored by the Fort Benning Equal Employment Opportunity Office, the exhibit features original and limited edition prints by modern black artists.

The centerpiece of the exhibit is 25 to 40 works by early 20th century American printmaker James L. Wells. Between 1926 and 1986, Wells experimented with various forms of printmaking including etchings and wood block prints. He is best known for his simple, but powerful images depicting the folk roots of black American life, including African themes, mythology, religion and labor.

Larry Lebby, best known for his black and white drawings and water colos, has created images of black people who speak through their expressions.

Brenda Joysmith works in pastel. Pastel is a soft, lush, maleable medium. Because there is so little preparation necessary before beginning to work, pastel supports the spontaniety of a mood. It is an ideal medium for Joysmith. Her themes, both in still life and portrait, are so universal that they create a mood that evokes memories common to us all.

James Melvin, noted for his contemporary style of old Nags Head cottages is a versatile artist who produces works that are bold, clean and colorful. Melvin works in oils, acrylics and pastels. He also does oil and pastel portraits and other subject matter.

Harry Lee Davis, a self-taught artist, began painting seriously after an injury that left him paralyzed from the waist down. Although his talent as an artist was shown at an early age in his drawings and sketches, it was only after his disabling injury that he turned to oil painting as a means of artistic expression.

Admission to the show is free. Viewing schedule is as follows: Feb. 17, 1 to 5:30 p.m. and 8 to 9 p.m.; Feb. 18 and 19, 1 to 9 p.m.

For more information, call SFC Moore at 545-2355.

Trip to commissary worse than PT

Dawn Kilpatrick

I'm not one of these people who delights in getting out of bed at "O-dark-thirty" to punish my body by running or doing endless calisthenics. It probably wouldn't be as bad if it didn't start so early. I didn't think there was anything that I dreaded more than getting out of my nice, warm bed on a cold, cold morning to go to work for PT.

Recently, however, I happened upon something that is even — gasp — worse than getting up at 5 a.m.

Before getting into that, though, I must offer a little insight into my philosophy on raising children.

"What does raising children have to do with getting up for PT?" you may ask. Bear with me.

I consider myself to be a pretty progressive, open-minded type of mother. I read Parents and American Baby magazines; I have all of Dr. Benjamin Spock's books on child rearing. I watch the American Baby show on the Lifeline channel.

So, imagine my shock when I started discovering that my 1-year-old son didn't fit many of the typical personalities all of the experts talk about.

At this age, children are supposed to be neat, "exploring new nesting habits." They are supposed to take great pleasure in putting things in their place.

My idea of "nesting" is to put all of the toys in the toy box, stack the books on the proper shelf, fold the blankets and towels and put them away.

Breaking out of the mold, my son finds his joy in throwing the toys out of the toy box immediately after Mom puts them in it. Scattering books about the room and seeing how high he can stack them in order to climb on them to reach things he shouldn't reach also ranks right up there with fun things to do. And let him get ahold of freshly washed and folded towels and blankets — one child has never had such a wonderful time.

Keeping all of my little one's sterling personality traits in mind, it is hard to figure out why I decided to take him with me to the commissary three days after pay day.

Yes, if you can imagine, it was even more of a personal challenge than getting up at 5 a.m. for PT. And, I think I expended much more energy during our little two-hour shopping excursion.

Initially fascinated with the multitudes of people and the various brightly colored packages lining the shelves, he was momentarily entertained. The novelty of it all wore off rather quickly, however. Once he was no longer enthralled by egg cartons, he began to fish whatever was within arm's reach out of the back of the cart. In and of itself, this action really wasn't that horrendous.

I didn't even get terribly upset when he chewed on a few boxes, leaving holes similiar to those left by a mouse loose in a kitchen cabinet. It was when he started throwing things out of the cart and onto the floor that I really had a hard time maintaining my cheery disposition.

The icing on the cake came when passers by began declaring, "Oh, how cute." Thinking back, I cannot believe that in my pre-motherhood days, I too uttered such inane comments concerning other people's children. They are always much cuter when another mom is pulling her hair out.

I was eventually able to control the rambunctious one long enough to secure everything in the cart and make it through the store. I can't really figure out how I was able to accomplish this great feat — the trip comes back in pieces, punctuated by profuse sweating.

Once we found our place in the line and settled down to wait the requisite hour to check out, my son became even more impatient and insisted on getting out of the relative confines of the cart. Although I promptly affixed his "hand holder" (a type of leash for a child) so I could be ready for anything, the knowledge that there is no way to be prepared for a 1 year old soon hit home.

Everything on the shelves lower than 2½ feet was immediately cleared and the "games had begun." Coffee cans bit the dust; filters and tea bags went in all directions. Getting "cute" again, he decided to growl any time someone came near him. (His Daddy, the Ranger, taught him this trick.)

Finally, after what seemed like days, I was able to sort through my coupons, write out a check and keep my son from tearing the counters apart. Try juggling all of those tasks some time.

With sweat dripping from my weary brow, we left. On the way to the car, I overheard a commissary employee saying that if you shop on a Tuesday or Thursday, it's just like going into any store downtown.

I think I'd rather do PT.

Recruiter tells Dad, 'We'll take care of him'

NCO Corps responsible for safety of America's sons and daughters

Alfred White
Army Safety Center

Editor's note: The following article was written by a sergeant major and is reprinted with permission from "Countermeasure."

This morning at 5:15 the recruiter arrived right on schedule to pick up my son to take him on that one-way trip to the Armed Services Induction Center. My son was eager, looking forward to the challenges ahead. As they walked out the door, the recruiter turned to me and said, "Don't worry. We'll take care of your son."

My son turned, came back through the door and hugged me goodbye. He said, "Don't worry, Dad. I can take care of myself."

As a father, I will worry.

As a noncommissioned officer who has worked as a safety NCO, I do worry.

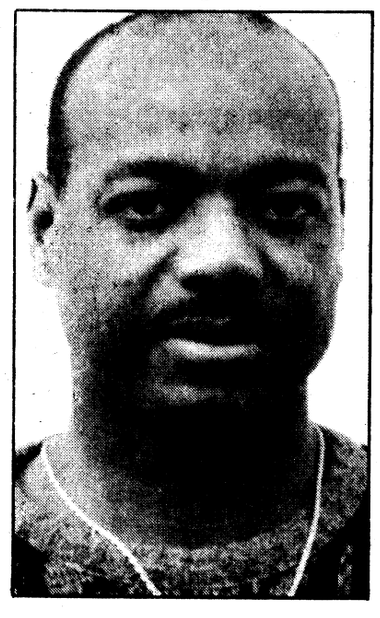
I wonder. Are we really taking care of the young men and women coming to us?

In 1964, the year my son was born, the Army had 864 fatal accidents, and another 17,004 sons and daughters were injured. In 1985, 442 soldiers were killed and 11,137 were injured in accidents. That sounds as if we're improving, but, as an NCO and father, I still wonder if we really are taking care of our sons and daughters.

I don't expect — and don't want — an NCO to baby my son or to be his temporary parent. But, I do hope his NCO has and uses his safety training, his safety attitudes and is motivated to provide my son with the guidance and counsel that he needs to survive — both on and off duty.

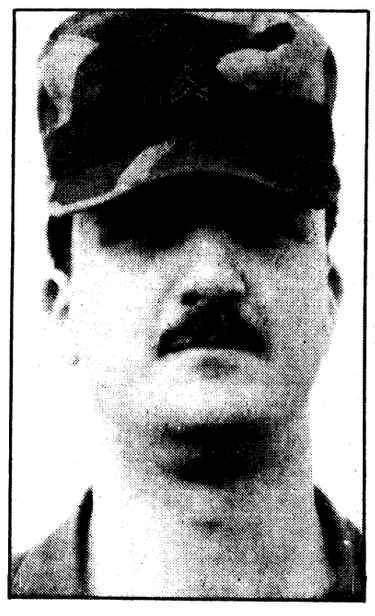
Give my son job safety training before giving him a job to do. See that he's not rushed between permanent change of station and temporary duty moves. Ask him about the condition of his car before he goes home on leave to see his mother and me. Let him know that if he needs help, he can call you, his NCO.

We have the youngest mix ever of personnel in the Army. There are many mothers and fathers who are trusting us with their young sons and daughters. There is a considerable amount of frustration and a large degree of responsibility in bringing these young people into the Army, seasoning them, and returning them to society as mature, healthy men and women. The NCO corps must be worthy of that trust, must accept that responsibility.



Somewhere along the line, you will entrust your son or daughter to someone else's care. Please, give my son the same care that you would want me to give your son or daughter.

"Don't worry. We'll take care of your son."



NCOs can make it happen.

Working on the railroad

Fort Benning units combine strength to clean up post, local areas

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

Since early January, soldiers from some Fort Benning units have been working on the railroad.

No, troops haven't taken to riding the rails to earn extra cash in their off-duty hours. And their work consisted of beautification of the rail lines' right-of-way rather than joyriding on box cars.

Troops from the 197th Infantry Brigade, the 36th Engineer Group's 43rd Engineer Battalion and 34th Medical Battalion, along with soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division, have been chopping down brush, digging up debris and generally beautifying a strip of land along the railroad right-of-way in South Columbus.

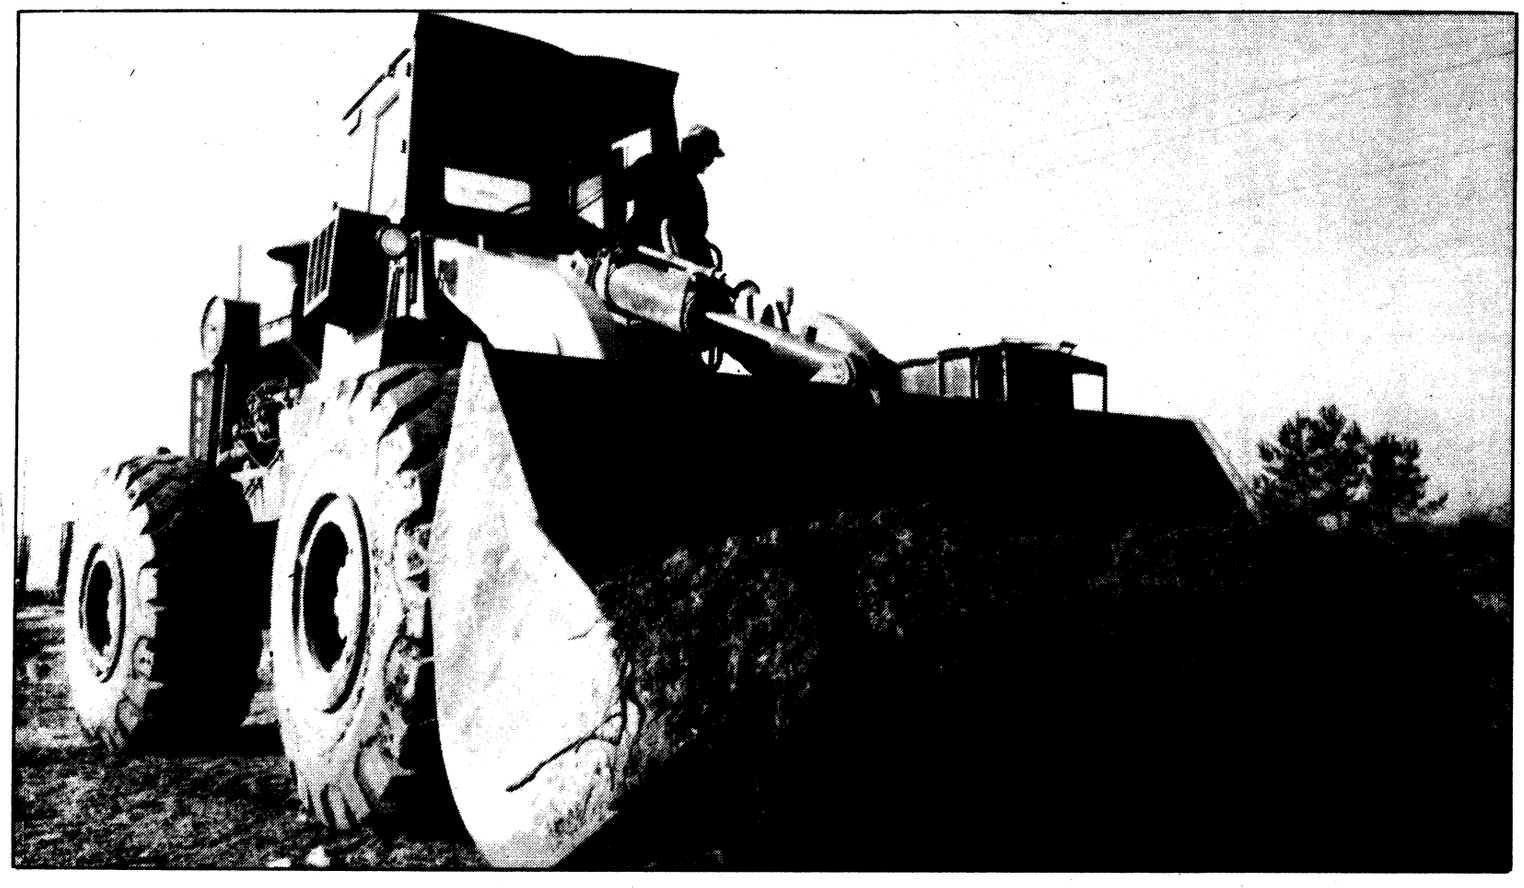
The railroad runs from Old Cusseta Road parallel to Fort Benning Road into the post.

Fort Benning is responsible for upkeep of the area because the post leases the tracks from the railroad, said George Perdue, chief of the Engineering Branch, Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

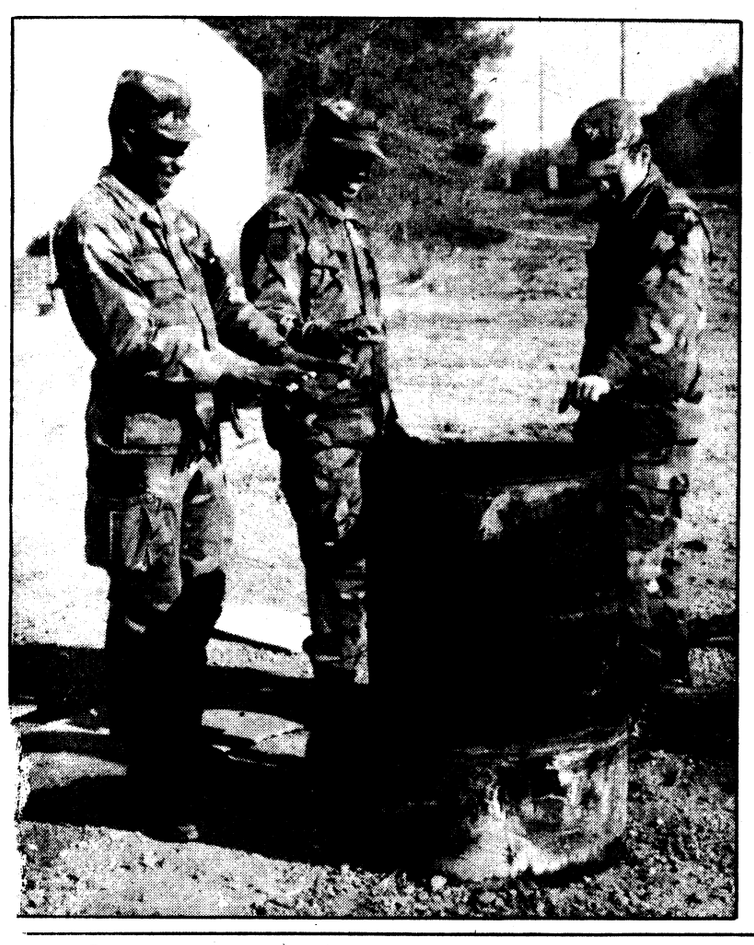
Perdue said the area extends from Old Cusseta Road across Victory Drive, and the 200-foot right-of-way amounts to about 1 ½ miles in length. Now that soldiers have nearly completed the clean-up work, Purdue said Fort Benning will add the strip of land to its current mowing contracts for future upkeep.

Perdue said that by having soldiers do the work, Fort Benning saved money. "If we had contracted the job out, it would have cost $225,000. Our people did it for $50,000, not including soldiers' salaries," he said.

Although the project has been billed as a "training opportunity," much of the work involved falls under "other duties as assigned" for soldiers performing it.



On a recent day, members of a work crew included a plumber, a grenadier gunner, several M203 gunners, a radio-telephone operator and an M60 gunner.



Swinging a machete, operating chain saws and clearing brush was a different kind of target practice, the soldiers agreed.

As luck would have it, area temperatures dropped into the low 20s during January, giving the soldiers the opportunity to practice cold weather injury prevention techniques.

The work is expected to be completed within the next few weeks.

Defense budget communicates U.S. intent in only language Soviet Union understands

Editor's note: President Ronald Reagan presented his fiscal 1988 budget request to Congress on Jan. 5. Included was the first two-year Department of Defense budget request, for fiscal 1988 and 1989. The following highlights of the DoD budget request have been provided in message form and are reprinted here for convenience.

By Donna Bolinger
American Forces Information Service

The need for better pay and living and working conditions for Department of Defense military and civilian employees received special consideration in President Ronald Reagan's DoD budget request for fiscal 1988 and 1989.

The first-ever, two-year DoD budget request submission calls for $303.3 billion for fiscal 1988 and $323.3 billion for fiscal 1989.

The separate one-year requests, submitted as a package at Congress' direction, represent a 3 percent per year increase in defense funding, after adjusting for inflation.

Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger said that while the requested increases won't offset the 7 percent reduction in defense spending in the last two years, they will allow the United States to regain the momentum of the defense rebuilding effort of the past six.

Among the agenda items requested for funding above the 3 percent growth rate are those with a direct impact on military recruiting and retention.

If Congress approves the requests, military personnel could receive a 4 percent pay hike next year, a 4.3 percent increase in fiscal 1987 and 3 percent the following year.

The military family housing situation could improve considerably during the next two years. The request calls for $3.5 billion in fiscal 1988, a 5.7 percent increase over fiscal 1986 levels. For fiscal 1989, $3.7 billion is requested. Other military construction projects could also get a boost next year; the fiscal 1988 budget request calls for a 4.6 percent increase, to $6.6 billion. The fiscal 1989 request is $6.8 billion.

In addition to protecting U.S. successes in recruiting and retaining high-quality personnel, the fiscal 1988 and 1989 budget requests will improve readiness by maintaining the U.S. strategic modernization program and further modernizing conventional forces, Weinberger said.

If the requests are approved: The Army will continue to reorganize and consolidate its force-structure modernization program with two new active infantry battalions; the Navy will reach its 600-ship goal in fiscal 1989; special operations forces will be expanded and improved; communications and facility secur ity support will increse; and medical readiness will be enhanced.

Weinburger pointed out that the requests express the U.S. commitment to the security of future generations through research and development programs. The budget requests call for $43.7 billion in fiscal 1988 and $44.3 billion in fiscal 1989 for research, development, testing and evaluation.

Among the most significant of these programs is the Strategic Defense Initiative and full-scale development of a mobile basing mode for the Peacekeeper intercontinental ballistic missile and full-scale development of a small, single-warhead intercontinental ballistic missile.

Also requested is deployment of 21 Peacekeeper missiles each year, procurement of one additional Trident submarine each year, with Trident II missiles for all existing and future submarines.

The strategic bomber modernization program will receive high priority with ongoing production and deployment of B-1B bombers, continued work on the advanced-technology bomber, installation of air-launched cruise missiles on B-52 bombers and development of the advanced cruise missile.

Weinberger said the DoD budget requests, which exploit America's technical superiority to offset the numerical advantages of the Soviet Union, are necessary in view of the many threats facing the United States.

"This budget takes into account the size and scope of the Soviet threat and the Kremlin's continuous drive to achieve an exploitable military advantage over the free world," he said. "It comprehends the fact that the Soviets have consistently devoted significantly more national resources to military might than the West."

The United States devotes about 6 percent of its gross national product to defense. By comparison, the Kremlin devotes 15 to 17 percent of its gross national product to military spending.

The U.S. defense budget, Weinberger said, communicates U.S. intentions in the only language the Soviets understand.

"What the Soviets understand, what influences directly Soviet political and military behavior, is our willingness to defend the integrity of our political and military position. "Unilateral restraint and unilateral disarmament only serve Soviet ends."

Real-world mission

Pathfinders train in Honduras

By Michael F. Hobby
187th Inf. Det. correspondent

1987 started fast and warm for the 187th Infantry Detachment (Pathfinder, Airborne) of the 34th Medical Battalion.

New Year's Day saw two detachment teams leaving Fort Benning to join the team of Pathfinders that had been in Honduras since October 1986.

The Pathfinders are working out of Palmerola Air Base, but have had a unique opportunity to see the entire country from coast to coast.

Sgt. Robert Brown, Alpha Team Leader, said "Our primary mission has been to support the aviation in their cargo, airmobile and Airborne operations.

"Because they fly both day and night, we also provide assistance in landing zones and ground top air communications."

More than one million pounds of equipment and supplies have been flown into the more remote parts of the country that are virtually inaccessible by wheeled or tracked vehicles.

The soldiers enjoyed a short notoriety, appearing on the national news and "Good Morning America" during a Nicaragua border-crossing incident.

In addition to their claim of being 100 percent Airborne and 90 percent Pathfinder, the troops found time to complete the requirements for Honduran parachutist wings.

They also had time to see and learn the culture with frequent trips to Comayagua and the capital, Tegucigalpa.

Sgt. Bob Hartman, assistant team leader, said the preparation that went into the deployment was a big help.

"The in-country briefing by the U. S. Army School of the Americas Operations Officer and a briefing by a Honduran officer assigned to the USARSA, well prepared us for what we encountered," he said.

"The Latin American headstart tapes the education center loaned us were great in talking to the locals and the Honduran army," he added.

As rotation period rapidly approached, it became time to say goodbye to all the friends that were made over the months. Everyone wanted to stay.

Bags were packed, some more than others. SP4 Jerry Wachtel said he had mostly bought late Christmas gifts for all his family during a last minute souvenir tour of "Ten Limpera Alley" in Comayagua.

A lesson in Airborne history: Los Banos rescue successful

By Bobby D. Mills
Co. B, 1-507th PIR correspondent

Since the development of Airborne forces shortly before World War II, only 37 major airborne assaults have been made. The most recent was the rescue mission carried out by the 1st and 2nd U.S. Army Ranger Battalions and the 82nd Airborne Division on the island of Grenada.

However, this was not the first time Airborne units were used for a rescue mission.

A classic example of such a mission is the Los Banos Prison Camp liberation on Feb. 23, 1945, near Manila in the Philippines. This operation was perfectly planned and executed. However, it remains relatively unknown because of the raising of the American flag on Iwo Jima that very same day. Nonetheless, it serves as an outstanding model for future Airborne operations and exemplifies the performance expected of Airborne soldiers.

The Los Banos Prison Camp, located southeast of Manila, held 2,147 prisoners, including women, children and missionaries. The camp was deep inside Japanese territory and with American forces moving steadily toward that area, there was considerable concern that the prisoners would be executed rather than permit their liberation.

As a result, Gen. Joe Swing of the 11th Airborne Division was instructed to prepare a plan for the rescue of the Los Banos prisoners. His intelligence officer worked with Philippine guerillas and used aerial photographs of the camp to construct a map of the camp's defenses. The camp was surrounded by triple-barbed wire fences with towers and "pillboxes" along the perimeter. The essential information concerning the interior layout and the daily routine of the camp was provided by a former prisoner.

The most important information obtained was a schedule of the camp's daily activities, which showed that at 7 a.m. each day only a skeleton crew of guards were on duty. With this information, a liberation plan was developed. It called for a three-pronged attack by air, water and land as well as a diversionary action to offset the threat of some 7,000 to 15,000 Japanese troops within a four-hour march of the camp.

Prior to the operation, a 30-man reconnaissance team and 80 Philippine guerillas were sent across Laguna Bay to secure a section of the shoreline, establish a drop zone and take out enemy guard outposts around the camp. Two minutes before "H-hour" the recon unit was to mark the drop zone with white smoke grenades. Eleven minutes later, C-47s would drop the paratroopers and the recon unit would open fire on the perimeter guards. Together they would liberate the camp.

Meanwhile, three more companies of paratroopers were to come ashore aboard amphibious tractors, "amtracs," and secure the beachhead before preceding into the camp to pick up the prisoners and return them to the other side of the lake to safety. If the beachhead was secured, the paratroopers and the recon team were then to move north to link up with the glider battalion to perform a diversionary attack near Los Banos. If the beachhead was not secure the unit would have to fight its way along the lake.

The plan progressed as scheduled and the Japanese soldiers were overwhelmed by the paratroopers within a few minutes. All 243 of the Japanese soldiers were killed, with only one minor casualty inflicted on the prisoners or their rescuers.

This operation has been described as a "tactical masterpiece," famous for its exceptional planning and flawless execution. As such, it serves as a model for future airborne operations.

The proficiency exhibited by these units exemplifies the Airborne tradition and level of performance expected of each Airborne paratrooper.

43rd Engineers rebuild Redcloud Range

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Redcloud Range is one of the busiest places on Fort Benning. A drive down Dixie Road usually yields a view of Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicles training on the range.

However, the range has had an unusual amount of attention recently. Actually, the range underwent its second facelift in less than a month this week.

Soldiers from the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, brought out the big equipment, including scrapers, graders, dozers and 2½-ton loaders. They reconstructed the obstacle course they had previously built at Redcloud, according to Sgt. Curtis R. Moore, the assistant non-commissioned officer in charge of the Company C project.

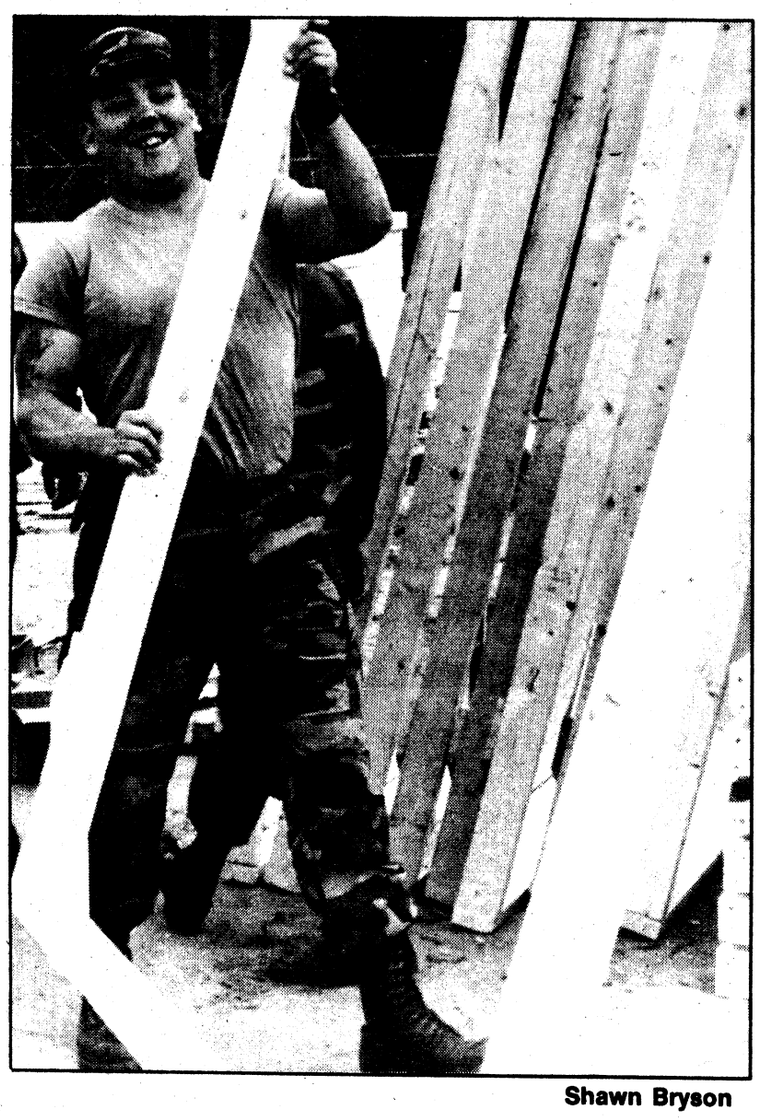
Moore said that when his unit received the task of building the course for the visit of the "60 Minutes" crew in January, it was a rush project. The troops built the first course in a matter of days and were able to work out most of the "kinks" the second time around, he said.

"The main problem with the first course was drainage of rain water," Moore said. "We had had two large pits that the BIFVs and the M113 Armored Personnel Carriers raced through, but they started holding too much water, so we had to fill them in."

Moore said that the materials used for the new course are of much better quality than before.

"We made the course stronger this time and it will hold up much better than the first time," he said.

The main reason for the better quality course is because the soldiers had more time to build it and more time to get materials that will hold up longer, according to Moore.



A 2 ½-ton loader makes the tight squeeze into a pit in order to fill in a ditch on Redcloud Range.

Pvt. 2 William Uhl loads up one of 600 frames used by troops from Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion in the construction of mock buildings for the Rangers on post.

36th Engineer Group

Soldiers from Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group spent most of last week and parts of this week preparing mock buildings for some future Ranger training on post.

According to Capt. Steven Wabnitz, Company B commander, second platoon and parts of the first platoon soldiers received a massive amount of materials with which they were to build more than 600 frames.

The frames were used to erect 24 buildings at 10 different sites on post, Wabnitz said. He said that the frames measured 8 feet by 10 feet, which made for some very large buildings, considering the number of frames.

Wabnitz said that the frames were erected and supported from the inside. A squad from Company D, 43rd Engineer Battalion then stapled large sheets of cloth onto the frames, which composed the walls and roofs.

The soldiers also reared barbed-wire fences around many of the larger buildings, according to Wabnitz.

The project sites included Victory Pond, Lawson Army Air Field, McKenna airstrip, Lee Drop Zone as well as six other sites, Wabnitz said.

10th Mountain Division

The balmy, tropical surroundings of Fort Sherman, Panama, were quite a change to the Barbarians of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry "Golden Dragons" on their first deployment to the Jungle Operations Training Center.

From Nov. 28 to Dec. 17, the Bravo Barbarians and their attachments went through the rigorous training set up by the JOTC instructors. Covering everything from jungle living and survival to the notorious Green Hell Jungle Obstacle Course, Co. B came through it all with the entire company graduating.

Although many of the leaders had been through the course before, this was a first for the rest of the battalion. "I've never been through anything like this," said PFC Mark Pillsbury. "It was really hot, but a lot of fun." The jungle surroundings of Fort Sherman were something totally different from the Fort Benning woods the Barbarians were used to. The daily rain storms, high humidity, and thick terrain was a new experience.

The troops went through classes on rappelling, land navigation, waterborne operations, patrolling, terrorism, jungle living and survival and combat missions. Then it was all put to use. After passing all of their missions on two field exercises, Co. B moved to the Squad Test Lane, where everytning they learned was tested. Once again, the Barbarians achieved all "go's" on all tasks. During the squad Long - Range Recon Course, Co. B was the only one to have every squad finished before dark.

However, Co. B did not conquer the jungle alone. The 1st Battalion, 22nd National Guard from Syracuse, N.Y., and two Air Force personnel went along. And, like the Barbarians, all of them also graduated. Airman First Class Greg Shaefer said, "It wasn't easy down here. Not just the JOTC school, but learning the job of any Army infantryman."

Although the extensive and demanding training forced the soldiers to put in many long days, the Barbarians agreed that they had a good time. "It was tough, but adventurous. I learned alot and had a great time," said PFC Marcus Sutterfield noted.

One of the JOTC instructors said, "These men have a lot of motivation. We don't put them under the best conditions, but expect them to learn a lot in a short amount of time. Bravo Company seems to have a very high moral factor." — Michael J. Ansbro, Company B., 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry.

Company A, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division returned from Fort Sherman, Panama with high honors.

All squads from the company received 100 percent gos on all test lanes; 100 percent gos on the short and long range land navigation course. According to Lt. Col. Cline Williamson, commander of JOTC, this was the first for the school.

Upon completion of training, a task force "supersquad" competition was slated to give honor to the squad that had the best overall jungle operational techniques. Squads from Co. A placed first in two events and one squad placed fourth overall. Another amazing feat occured during the rope bridge competition. A squad from Co. A constructed a one rope across a water obstacle, sent a 10-man squad across with all equipment, recovered and packed the rope in just over 2½ minutes. The amazing event was that this time was only good enough for second place.

The jungle course is divided into three phases. The first phase included water operations, jungle survival, the "Green Hell" obstacle course, cadre assisted patrols and the short range land navigation course.

The second phase included the squad live-fire reaction course, long-range land navigation course, squad test lanes, graded patrols and end with a one day "R&R" in Panama City.

The third-phase battalion FTX was cancelled because of transportation problems.

The instructors praised the company on their motivation, physical fitness and the completion of the school with no major injuries. Ninety-five percent of the company earned the Jungle Expert Certificate. — Mark A. London, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry

Walking into the dining facility you might think you had just stepped into a Burger King.

With new furniture and freshly painted walls, the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry's Dining Facility is getting some appreciative looks from its soldiers.

"We looked through several different catalogues to decide what new furniture to use for the dining facility," said SSgt. Samuel Oliva, food service sergeant. "The furniture is a light color, attractive and easy to clean. The old furniture was entirely too drab."

According to Oliva, the decor of the dining facility makes the atmosphere much more pleasant and welcoming.

"Robert Kelly from the Directorate of Engineering and Housing has really helped us a lot," Oliva said. "Many of the cooks have helped with the painting and the other tasks."

Also, the 3-7th Dining Facility recently received the award for Brigade's Best Dining Facility. SFC Fabio Vargas, food service sergeant, was there to receive the trophy from Col. William Hartzog, 197th Infantry Brigade Commander. The dining facility won the trophy for the first quarter of this year.

The cooks of the 3-7th hope to retain the trophy for the rest of the year. — Troy Buchanan, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent.

Attitude key to success in 9th Battalion, 2nd ITB

By Marsha Santiago
Army Training Center correspondent

"A winning attitude. That is the first thing 9th Battalion teaches soldiers." With these words, Lt. Col. Fred Sheldon, commander of 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, summed up his training philosophy, one that has been instrumental in setting records in basic rifle marksmanship, as well as high scores in other training areas for this cycle of One Station Unit Training.

A graduation ceremony held recently at Dickman Field marked the end of One Station Unit Training for Companies A, B, and E. Companies C and D graduate Feb. 13. Guest speaker for the graduation was Col. William H. Gavan, 29th Infantry Regiment commander, whose instructor cadre, according to Sheldon, is one of several factors responsible for the success of his battalion.

"Lots of credit for the training of these soldiers goes to the 29th Infantry Regiment. The professionalism and concern shown by the committees of the 1st and 2nd Battalions of the Regiment have played a major role," Sheldon said.

During the training observation, Sheldon stated he had seen the non-commissioned officers of the 29th Regiment become so involved in their mission it appeared they were part of the battalion, training their own soldiers.

"Another contributing factor to the winning attitude is that I demand the soldiers get three superior meals a day," Sheldon said. "Soldiers are quick to say they get three meals a day here. The meals are provided by Rice Services, the contractor that began service in 1986. "Rice Services is doing a commendable job," Sheldon said.

Sheldon also praised the 9th Battalion drill sergeants for the example they provide during training, saying the "winning attitude" is taught every day.

"The primary way it is done is by superior non-commissioned officers — drill sergeants living to the standard they expect their soldiers to achieve and showing that soldier care and concern." Sheldon said he believes motivation of soldiers was the key; asking a soldier to perform at his very best.

"We want soldiers with a positive attitude," Sheldon added.

He stated that once soldiers establish goals, the next step is to make them understand how hard they have to work to achieve that goal. "Getting a soldier to understand he has won that goal, this gives him the self confidence that he can do it every time."

All the factors came together for this training cycle as reflected in the BRM scores in November 1986. Records were first set by Company E, scoring 32.12; broken by Company A with a 32.15 and broken again by Company B with 32.55. The "final" post BRM record was set by Company C with 33.92 targets hit out of a possible 40. The average for 9th Battalion was 32.9.

For this cycle the Army Physical Fitness Test could have been difficult since they were part of the EXODUS cycle. EXODUS, during the Christmas holidays, saw the soldiers going home and being away from training for 17 days. They returned to Fort Benning and the first day of training was Jan. 5; 15 days later they began the APFT.

The soldiers were equal to the test since a special effort had been made to keep them in shape while home on leave. They were given performance objectives to meet on a daily basis and the APFT scores indicate they met those objectives.

Out of a possible 300 points, Companies A and B had a 245 average; Company C had a 246 average; and Companies D and E had a 243 average. This gave the battalion an average of 244.4.

Prior to EXODUS, rain and bad weather limited physical training, although all possible training was done in the billets. Cold rain and muddy tracks wee faced by Companies A, B and E in the actual APFT.

During the end of cycle testing, Company B added another success. They received 100 percent, first-time "GOs" on the 10 station, 25 task test. For this achievement an Army Training Center streamer was awarded.

Sheldon summed up his feeling about the soldiers with these words, "These young soldiers today have the guts and determination to "Make It Happen." "

Loyalty to buddies keeps Airborne soldier from quitting

Editor's note: This is the second article in a two-part series about a young soldier who recently graduated from the U.S. Army Airborne School here. His story exemplifies the dedication, courage and values held by many of today's young soldiers.

By Christopher Ray Austin and Ann Keays
Training and Doctrine Command

FORT MONROE, VA. (TNS)— "I felt like quitting the run, but I couldn't. I just put that thought out of my head real quick. You can't ever quit here. If you do, you let yourself and your buddies down. I'll never quit. I ran 500 miles in Basic and AIT. I never once quit there. I just can't. That feeling of being Airborne-qualified is too great a feeling to quit now."

Pvt. 2 Christopher Ray Austin, 18, was halfway through the U.S. Army Airborne School's Basic Course at Fort Benning, Ga., when he said those words. Being Airborne-qualified was a goal he'd had most of his life.

After 13 weeks of One Station Unit Training, he was awarded military occupational specialty 11B, infantryman. Now in the middle of his Airborne training, Austin had already survived mornings of grueling physical training, seven-minute miles running in formation with more than 400 other soldiers, "gigs" for small infractions in personal grooming and military dress, and concentrated training in basic jump techniques.

By Oct. 23, his pride and confidence increasing daily, he was qualifying on a series of parachute landing falls. "I must have dropped 50 times before I made it. But I did it," Austin said. In the middle of Week 2, known as Tower Week, he was about to tackle the 250-foot training towers. In his own words, his story continues:

Friday, October 24, 1986

Today was the five-mile run — the toughest yet. After all were qualified from the 34-foot mock tower and their parachute landing falls, we had cleaning details - cutting grass, raking, picking up trash, all those good things.

The 34-foot tower really wasn't anything after you did it the first time. You have an instructor who grades you who is known as a "Black Hat." He sits in a chair below the mock-up aircraft door and watches you exit the door. You have to jump into a "tight body position," feet and knees together, chin on your chest and hands on the outside of the reserve chute, and count 1,000, 2,000, 3,000, 4,000. While you're counting, the shock or the jerk hits you.

After you slide down the cable to the end of your 10-second ride, you step in front of the grader and he tells you what you did wrong, and whether you were satisfactory or not. To qualify, you had to make four satisfactory jumps. Most of us made it. I think only two didn't; they were recycled to the following class.

Tower Week is next. Oh boy!

Monday, October 27

Well, today we met the Tower Branch personnel. It wasn't too bad. The PT was about the same, and we were doing more parachute landing falls off what they call the Swing Landing Trainer.

Tuesday, October 28

Today we jumped off the mighty 250-foot towers. I was scared to death at first, and a little nervous. But I really didn't have any reason to be. It was fun. You are hooked into a harness and pulled up into the air 250 feet by a cable. You unhook the safety line and yell, "Airborne" to let them know you are ready.

When you look around you at 250 feet up, you can see over into Alabama and all of Fort Benning. Then they let you fall — boy, what a feeling. You feel like your stomach has dropped out, and your toes feel like they have fallen asleep. And all of a sudden you are 100 feet from the ground and you have to prepare to land. You pull the risers down into your chest, and BANG, the ground hits you like a ton of bricks. I couldn't tell when I was gonna hit, but boy, I felt it. It was great. I wanted to do it again, but didn't have time. It really made my day.

Wednesday, October 29

I was really psyched up today. I watched the rest of the company jump from the towers. It's finally starting to soak in: "I'm actually gonna get into a C-141 or C-130, and put "knees in the breeze" and jump.

I used to sit at home after football practice or wrestling practice and wish I was parachuting. It all seemed so easy.

But I have put a lot of hours into Jump School, practicing PLFs and worrying whether I was going to get "gigged out," or break a leg, or something go wrong. It is really enough to make you want to jump you five times and get the hell out!

Thursday, October 30

I did about the same as yesterday.

Friday, October 31

PT this morning — 4½ laps around the track — was pretty hard. The cadence calling helps a lot, and you know the Black Hats are out there sweating it out with you. They wish it was 5 p.m. just as bad as we do.

We received a briefing on what to do if your main canopy (parachute) doesn't open. Boy, it was a real eye-opener. It made you hope that your main chute opens every time you step from the door of that aircraft. I don't ever think about my main chute not opening. It's bad luck.

We did some "suspended agony" today. It wasn't too much fun. It's designed to teach us how to control our parachutes as we are falling, and what to do if we fall into some fellow jumpers.

Monday, November 3

Well, I did it! I finally made my first jump from an aircraft, an Air Force C-141. I was flying 1,250 feet up in the Alabama skies, over Fryer Drop Zone.

I was first man out of the plane on the second pass over the DZ. Boy, it was great! It's like no other feeling in the world.

The jump commands seemed to come easy. Step 1, the warning: "Six minutes." Step 2: "Unfasten your seatbelt." Step 3: "Stand up." Step 4: "Hook up." Step 5: "Check static lines." Step 6: "Check equipment."Step 7: "Sound off for equipment check." Then each man passes the "OK" up to the Jump Master, and the first man says, "All OK, Jump Master." Step 8: "One minute,"and the Jump Master makes his door check. You watch the Jump Master hang his body out the door to check for the DZ. Ten seconds from the DZ, he commands the first jumper, "Stand in the door!"

You stand in the door and hand your static line to the Jump Master. When the green light comes on, the next thing you hear is, "Go!" You jump out the door; the blast catches you and carries you out and down behind the plane. You make sure you are in a good, tight body position, and count "1,000," "2,000," "3,000," "4,000." You feel the jerk, tug, and then wham! Your parachute fills with air. You look up to check your canopy. If everything is fine, you check for fellow jumpers around you, trying not to drop onto anyone. Then you look down over the ends of your toes and realize you're actually "flying."

It was scary standing in the door for the first jump. It seems like that green light never comes on. But you keep telling yourself, "Think about all the hours, the sweat and hard work you have put into this. You can't quit now. You want those silver wings, and you want that paratrooper pride —to be able to say, "I jumped." People look at you differently when you are wearing the "wings" on your chest. I want it. That's what I keep saying to myself.

That is what it's all about. A new step into a different kind of Army. An Army of "high speed, low drag," like the Rangers, Special Forces, 82nd and 101st Airborne. Myself, I am going for the gusto; I want to be in the Rangers. It's got to be the toughest training in the Army. And I know I can do it.

Tuesday, November 4

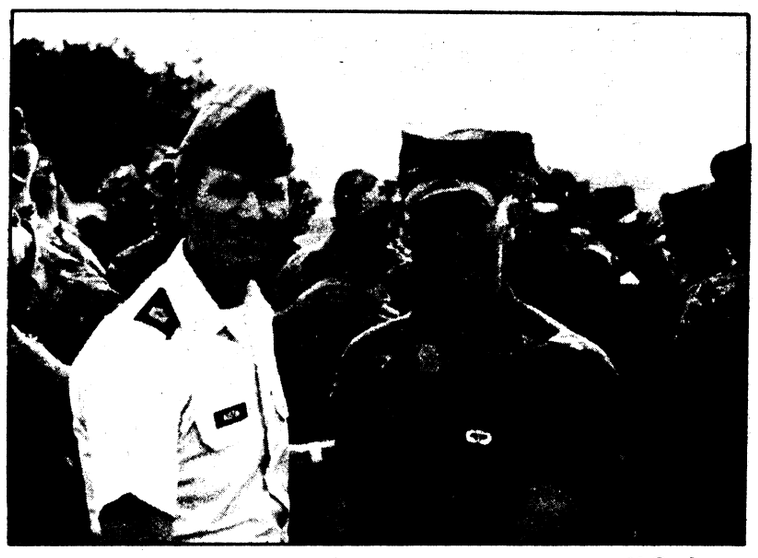
Today we made two jumps. One simulated-combat jump, and one "Hollywood jump" with the MC1-1B parachute. The MC1-1B was really a trip. It has toggles on it so you can steer it. People were going crazy with it; they were going every which way until about two minutes later, when they crashed on the ground. But you got the same feeling as jumping before. Scared, but sure of yourself.

Wednesday, November 5

We completed our night jump. Boy, that was different! Using the T-10B parachute and combat load, we jumped from the C-130 at 6:60 p.m., and it was pitch black outside. We had only three injuries, and two men who landed in the trees. It looks really scary when you're up there flying with the eagles, but you take one look at the trees and hope to God you don't land in them.

I think my biggest fear was getting injured and recycled, or getting dropped from the school because of an injury. But you just look at yourself again, and say, "It' my job." I took on the responsibility of Airborne, and I gotta hang in there.

Thursday, November 6



Today was graduation. We made our last jump and it was great. I was scared and a little nervous to jump today. They were rushing us around all morning. I just wasn't as confident as before. But I just told myself if anything went wrong, I still have a good reserve chute to use. But it's different when you step up to the door, and you know you are getting ready to step outside and get pushed away from the aircraft at 140 miles an hour. It's great! I wish everyone had the nerve to say, "what the hell," and go for it.

Airborne is a lot of fun if you keep yourself in the right frame of mind. But there's a lot of work that goes into all the fun.

I was the proudest man in the whole world when my father, MSgt. Austin, gave me my "Blood Wings." I could tell he was proud of me too. No other feeling in the world is like it. I did it.

I feel like I'm in a different kind of Army now. The high-speed life. I love it. I'm proud to wear these silver wings on my chest. I hope someday my son will have the opportunity to wear the coveted Parachute Badge. The silver wings. "AIRBORNE ALL THE WAY."

Command post exercise tests 197th

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

During the 197th Infantry Brigade Command Post Exercise last week the staff sections provided the "backbone" of the exercise.

"The S-3 (operations section) serves as the operations center for the brigade," said Capt. Eric Schwarz, plans and operations officer. "We serve as the single point of contact for coordination and control of tactical operations."

The officers of the S-3 section who are captain and below are referred to as "battle captains."

"Battle captain is more of a term than a description of a person," Schwarz explained. "In garrison the officers of the S-3 perform three main missions: training, support management, plans and operations. In the field we carry out coordination of all battle scenerios."

Maj. Siegfried Hildebrandt, Brigade S-3, is the actual coordinator of the simulated battles that are fought during the CPX.

"We're either in the Tactical Operations Center the Tactical Command Post," stated Capt. Schwarz. "From those locations we assist the other S-3 branches in combat and combat support."

The S-3 is in charge of planning small unit deployments for FTXs and CPXs. They are also responsible for external evaluations and current operation plans. Some of the officers control ranges, schools and individual training.

The 197th Brigade S-3 is currently preparing for the Field Training Exercise that will be held this month.

Retired paratrooper speaks at graduation

By J. A. Gentile
Company B, 1-507th PIR

On Jan. 29, Company B, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment and Airborne class 13-87 had the distinct pleasure of having as its guest speaker the epitome of an American Airborne paratrooper, retired SFC Charles L. Butler. Butler's career took him to one of World War II's most prestigious offensive operations through 1953 overseas duties in Korea to retirement in 1972.

Butler entered the Army in December 1943 via the draft and immediately began the rigorous infantry basic training at Camp Croft, S.C. Upon completion of basic training in May 1944, he became part of U. S. Airborne Schools' class 123 — a school he truly enjoyed.

He made several jumps at Fort Benning after graduation as well as overseas jumps before being assigned to Company C, 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment. Four months later, that same unit courageously jumped into Northern Germany and took part in the historical Allied operation "Market Garden."

On Sept. 17, 1944, Butler made his ninth jump, which was his most memorable, because it was his first combat jump. He describes it as "outstanding!" Butler and "those devils in baggy pants" performed so well and were so effective in "Market Garden" that their performance was depicted in the hit movie "A Bridge Too Far." On Sept. 21, 1944, one of Butler's cohorts, John R. Towle, earned the Congressional Medal of Honor, an achievement the movie rightly illustrated.

Butler's unit went on to participate in the Battle of the Bulge in December 1944 before he was wounded in action and sent to a hospital in the United States. After a long recuperation period, he was assigned to the U. S. Army Airborne School's Company B.

Butler reenlisted for duty with the 82nd Airborne Division and spent September 1946 to April 1947 in Alaska serving in the Task Force Frigid Cold Weather Test with Company E, 505th PIR. After spending five years at Fort Bragg, N.C., he was assigned to the 45th Infantry Division in Korea for one year. In September 1953 he was transferred to Japan and served four years with the 1st Cavalry Division.

After being reassigned to the 82nd Airborne Division for three years, he spent May 1960 though December 1964 in Okinawa with the 503rd PIR and later with the 173rd Airborne Brigade. He then finished his long and successful career at Fort Benning with the 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile).

During his 14 years on jump status, Butler successfully completed 106 military jumps from various aircrafts ranging from C-46 to C-130, including light aircraft and helicopters.

When asked what contributed to his longevity, Butler with a stern but nostalgic expression remained silent. The only advice Butler, who now resides in Columbus, would like to give present and future U.S. Airborne paratroopers is "Hang tough!"

Butler's awards include the Combat Infantryman's Badge and Master Parachutist wings.

Brigade sacrifices winning so more can participate

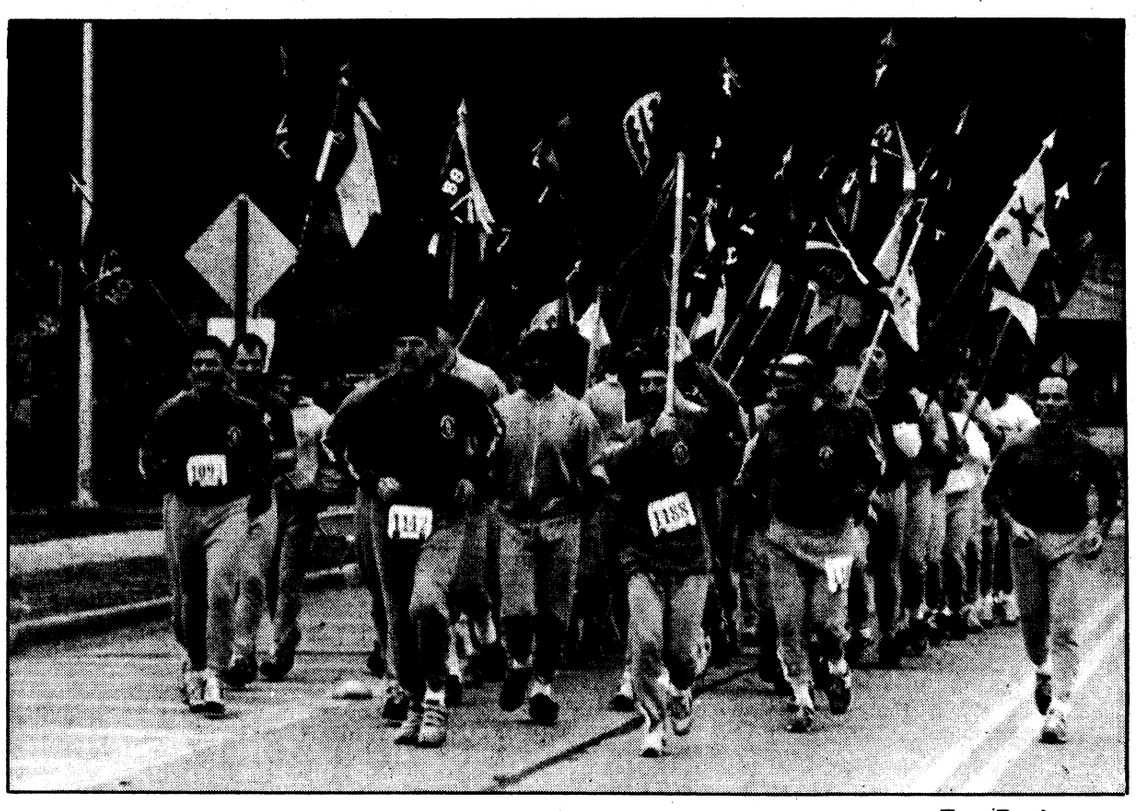
200 guidon-carrying troops go distance in Marathon

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

More than 200 soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade joined the field of runners in the 1987 Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon last month.

However, most of the soldiers representing the 197th ran together in platoon formation, not competing against the clock, but showing the runners and spectators at the event the camaraderie in physical training among 197th soldiers.

Col. William Hartzog, 197th Infantry Brigade commander, organized the Brigade's unique approach to participating in the marathon and led the formation through most of the 28-mile course.



"Since the 197th Brigade espouses a motto of toughness, it is fitting that we continue to display that toughness in deeds," Hartzog said.

"We entered a platoon in the marathon to demonstrate our excellence in physical conditioning."

The platoon was a melting pot of runners representing each unit in the Brigade.

The runners began and finished the race carrying company guidons, but the Brigade guidon was carried throughout the run, passed to each runner in the platoon.

Each company designated teams with soldiers running different legs of the course.

Army survey seeks information from warrant officers

Army News Service

More than 13,000 Army warrant officers will soon be asked to complete occupational surveys about the training, tasks, and equipment required to do their jobs.

The information gathered by the survey will be used to develop task-based training initiatives and professional development programs under the Total Warrant Officer System (TWOS). TWOS provides a method and creates an environment for the Army to capitalize on warrant officer expertise through progressive development and longer service.

Future warrant officer career training under TWOS will be based upon a three-level skill hierarchy that codes position requirements in authorization documents as Warrant Officer, Senior Warrant Officer, and Master Warrant Officer. Responses from the field will be used by the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command to validate and develop requirements or warrant officer training at each of the three levels.

Full implementation of the three-tiered Warrant Officer Training System (WOTS) is expected to occur in early 1988.

According to Bill Badey of the Soldier Support Center — National Capital Region, which is conducting the survey under the auspices of the Army Occupational Survey Program (AOSP), mailing of the survey booklets should be completed by Feb. 1.

"AOSP questionnaires for the technical services are being mailed direct to home addresses of warrant officers in CONUS and to unit addresses of those assigned overseas," Badey said. "Similar questionnaires for aviation warrant officers are being sent to their unit commanders for administration. In addition, special AOSP questionnaires are being mailed to selected CW3 and CW4 personnel to determine which MOS tasks should be formally taught and at what training level."

The majority of warrant officers managed by MILPERCEN's Officer Personnel Management Directorate (OPMD) are being surveyed. Examples of OPMD-managed warrant officers who will not receive survey booklets are those in low density and medical military occupational spcialties.

The following MOS are included in the survey: 031A, 041A, 152B, 152C, 152D, 152F, 152G, 153A, 153B, 153C, 153D, 154B, 154C, 155A, 155D, 155E, 156A, 180A, 211A, 214E, 214EV, 222C, 223B, 223BV, 224B, 224BV, 252A, 260A, 271A, 285A, 286A, 287A, 290A, 310A, 401A, 411A, 421A, 441A, 500A, 510A, 621A, 630A, 630B, 630C, 630D, 630E, 711A, 712A, 741A, 761A, 762A, 951A, 961A, 962A, 964A, 971A, 972A, 973A, 982A, 983A, 984A, 985A, 986A, 988A.

Badey emphasized the importance of completing the surveys and mailing back the questionnaires within 10 days of receipt.

"Naturally, we want to ensure that every warrant officer is given an opportunity to be heard," Badey said. "We expect the survey results to have a profound effect on the content of the new task-based training system, since it will reflect actual doer requirements."

A GOOD PART-TIME JOB IS HARD TO FIND.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Did you know that one out of three Americans now "moonlights" to help make ends meet?

But as a returning veteran, you don't have to "moonlight." If you want an extra income, just "weekend" once a month with your local Army Reserve unit.

For instance, an E-5 with four years' experience now earns over $130 for a weekend's work. Over $2,000 a year, counting two weeks annual training pay.

As a Reservist, you also get PX privileges, low-cost life insurance, and retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have an extra income waiting when you get home?

It can be arranged. See your unit commander, or talk to your in-service recruiter, listed below. Act fast. Good part-time jobs are scarce.

MP dogs vital members of law enforcement team on post

By Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

His bark echoed through the warehouse, sounding doom to anyone in the building illegally. The dog ran about frantically, his handler a few paces behind. The handler, with his weapon drawn, was careful to watch his "partner's" movements. The military policeman is nervous with the knowledge that he is the only obstacle between a prowler and the powerful jaws of his patrol dog.

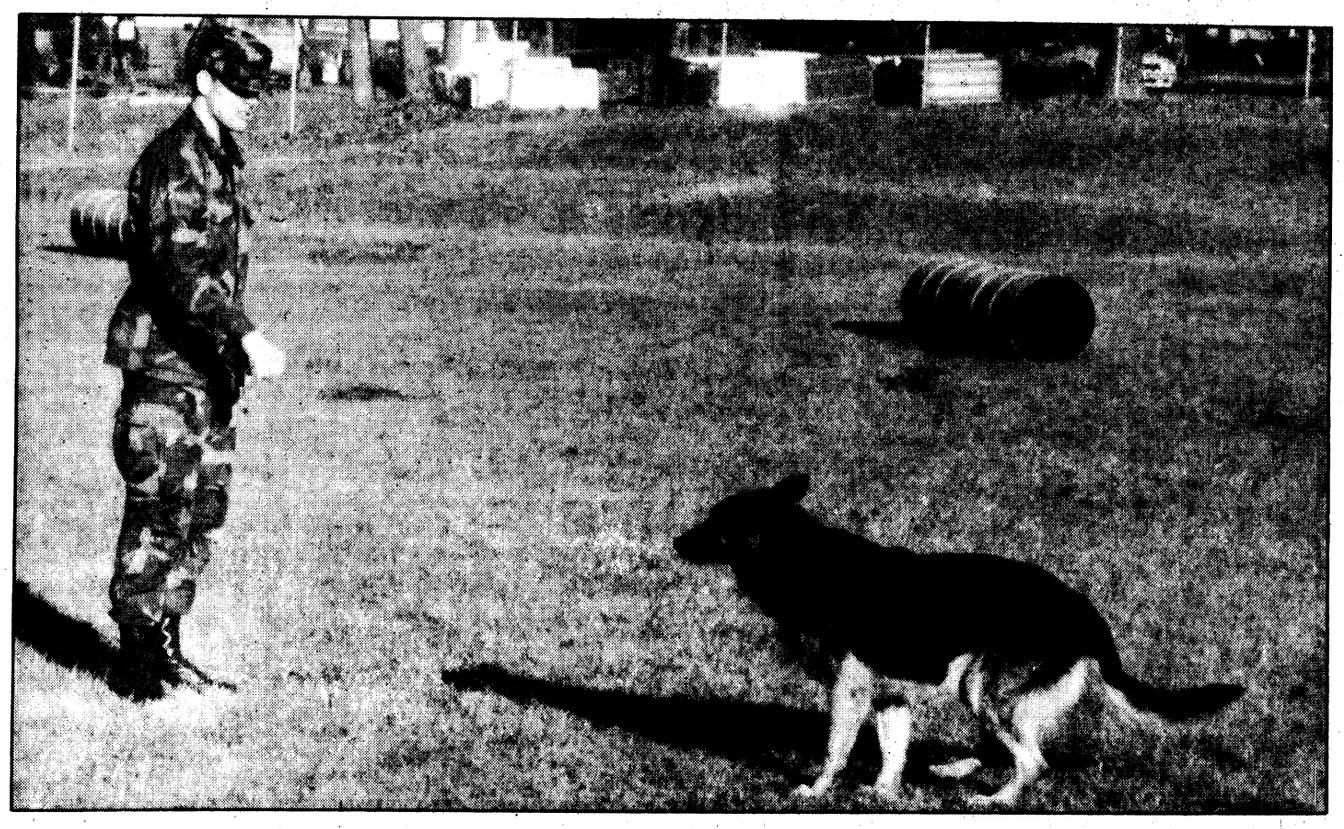
Patrolling warehouses is just one of the routine assignments for the Fort Benning Military Police working dog teams. The dogs have many other responsibilities also.

The working dogs and their handlers are certified for routine patrolling or narcotics and explosive detection missions.

Initially, the working dog teams are trained at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas, and each has a specialty area.

The patrol dogs are the most versatile. They are trained to locate unauthorized people in buildings and open areas. According to MP officials, "The patrol dogs are capable of detecting and detaining criminal offenders in both physical security and law enforcement situations. They will attack on command from the handler and can be recalled from an attack if necessary."

The patrol dog is also used to respond to alarms, control crowds and to search for lost or missing persons.



"The dog hears better and smells better than we (humans) do. It's quicker to send a dog through a building rather than three or four guys," said Sgt. Joseph C. Clayton, patrol

Workshop teaches skills for coping with trauma of death

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet Staff Writer

Death. Not a subject people want to talk about or even think of but Mary Rhodes, wife of an Army major, is paid to talk about and make others think about death.

Mrs. Rhodes, who is a facilitator at Fort Leavenworth's Command and General Staff College's Command Team Seminar, takes part in presenting "Trauma in the Unit" to future commanders and their wives. Invited by Trish Burba to speak at Fort Benning, Mrs. Rhodes talked to over 250 people Jan. 26 on how to understand and cope with death.

"Leaders, soldiers, family members, all are going to eventually encounter death. Encountering death is a part of life and people should know how to handle it, whether it's the death of a soldier in your command, an infant's death, a parent's dying or the passing-on of a wife or husband," she said.

Mrs. Rhodes speaks from personal experience: she lost two small children of her own at different times and was starkly faced with how to cope with the unthinkable.

"When a death occurs, especially a first-time, close death of a child, parent, relative or friend, if people recognizes what is happening to them they will know they're not going crazy because of the death," Mrs. Rhodes said.

Recognizing what is happening and how to deal with it is a five-part experience known as the grieving process.

According to Mrs. Rhodes, denial is the first mechanism in the process. The grieving person is numb and denying their emotions, telling themselves "it can't be true." Denial can last hours or days but, once it's over, then anger sets in.

"Because of the death, the person affected gets angry. They might express anger at their spouse, God, their family, a doctor, friends, anyone. Once their anger begins subsiding, the bargaining stage of the grieving process beings," she said.

During bargaining, the grieving person will mentally say things like "God, if I do this or that for you, will you bring my dead chid or husband or whomever back?" They literally try to bargain for the return of the dead person. Eventually, once they realize bargaining won't work, depression hits, the fourth part of the process.

"Depression is marked by intense sadness, crying, feeling out of control, like they're never going to feel right again. Even physical ailments may manifest themselves, such as insomnia or anorexia. As time goes on, however, the griever begins adjusting to the loss and resolution gradually takes place, the last in the five steps of the process," Mrs. Rhodes said.

Mrs. Rhodes, who became so interested in how to cope with death and helping others after her own losses that she earned a master's degree in community services, said that the grieving process doesn't happen overnight.

"Statistics show that, to achieve a solid resolution of a death, the survivor needs about two years," she said.

Once a death occurs, people around the person or persons suffering the loss need to know what to say in order to help.

"The only really appropriate comments are 'I'm sorry, I care, is there anything I can do to help.' When you make these comments you have to say them like you mean them," she emphasized.

The majority of the time, people who encounter persons suffering a death loss make inappropriate comments such as "It was for the best," It was God's will," "It could have been worse," or "You'll get over it."

"The worst thing you can do is not say anything, which is what many people do. It makes the person grieving feel like you don't care about their loss. Say something and say the right thing," Rhodes said.

Mrs. Rhodes related that the most traumatic death-loss a person can experience is losing a child.

"The death of a child puts an end to all the hopes and dreams the parents had for the child. It is tragic and people are just simply not prepared for this type of death but everyone should be," said Mrs. Rhodes.

The most important things a parent has to do after losing a child is to establish the birth, life and death of the child. With older children this is easy to do through photographs, school awards and report cards, shared experiences and memories established over a period of time. This is hard to do, however, if the death of the child occurs during the child's early infancy.

"When a baby dies you don't have those momentoes or memories that you have with an older child. It's important to establish those ties with the baby in order for the grieving process to begin," she said.

Mrs. Rhodes, who helped establish support groups on Okinawa and at Fort Leavenworth to assist people experiencing a death loss, said they encouraged parents who had lost a baby to have a footprint made of the infant, maybe snip a lock of hair, save the baby's hospital identification bracelet and its clothes and to name the baby, if they have not already done so.

"We helped train the hospital staff in both Okinawa and at Fort Leavenworth on death loss. When a baby died there, the nurses automatically took a footprint, saved the baby's ID bracelet and put it all in a special bag for the parents. It might sound morbid but, speaking from personal experience and having shared situations like this with many parents, these things really help later and begin the grieving process," Mrs. Rhodes said.

To firmly establish the loss, Mrs. Rhodes even suggests for parents to hold the deceased infant or at least view it.

"You have to establish the finality of the loss, that it happened and that it is over with. Then the grieving process can begin," she said.

Many parents, according to Mrs. Rhodes, will, during the denial phase of the grieving process, try to convince themselves that maybe their baby was mixed up with someone else's and didn't die or that there was some kind of mistake. By firmly establishing the death, denial cannot go on and the parents can move forward.

Mrs. Rhodes is very much in agreement that support groups for death loss work positively for those who are grieving.

"This fact was established after the Gander disaster when so many 101st Airborne Division soldiers lost their lives in the air crash. The relatives of the deceased were able to turn to each other for comfort and help, just like a support group world," she said.

Mrs. Rhodes stressed that, throughout the grieving process, those in support groups or individuals trying to help should keep the privacy of those grieving in mind.

"You should make it known to the parents or family who has lost someone of the available help and then act on their expressed desires," she said.

Loss of infant leads mother to form support group

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Debbie Cooper, an Army wife, gave birth to daughter Angela one month early in 1978. Angela lived for only five months, and the infant's death devastated Mrs. Cooper.

"I was in the hospital one day to see Angela. My doctor, who happened to be walking by, said 'Your daughter died today.' I got visibly upset and he said 'Don't worry, you're young, you can have more children.' It took six people to pull me off of the doctor. His remarks didn't help the situation," Cooper said.

Cooper, whose husband is a first sergeant stationed here, said she knew nothing about how to cope with handling her infant's death and nothing about the grieving process. Based on her adverse experience, she is organizing a support group to help and educate other people who experience a death loss or who want to help those who do.

"After Angela's death I felt guilty and angry. When I would try and talk about Angela, people would listen until they found out that she was dead and then they didn't know what to do or say. It made me feel worse," Mrs. Cooper said, who already had a 2-year-old daughter when Angela was born, and has since successfully had a son, who is now 6.

"After Angela died, I felt that I had no one to turn to. I thought I was going crazy and that there wasn't anyone who had ever experienced what I was going through. I found out, later, that this wasn't true, of course," she said.

After her daughter's death, Mrs. Cooper read a book recommended by hospital personnel on how to cope with infant death. She found out that her emotional experience after Angela's death was normal. Her feelings on how to cope with death loss were reinforced when she attended a "Death in the Unit" presentation given recently by Mary Rhodes at Fort Benning, sponsored by the Infantry Officer Advance Course Workshop. During her presentation, Mrs. Rhodes emphasized infant death loss, which interested Mrs. Cooper.

"Based on ideas from Mrs. Rhodes, I'm starting a support group for death loss at Fort Benning," Mrs. Cooper said.

The mother of three says the Chaplain's Office, Martin Army Community Hospital, Social Work Services, Army Community Services and Red Cross have all responded favorably to her idea.

"Our first organizational meeting will be at the Main Post Protestant Chapel on Feb. 26 at 6 p.m. Anyone who needs help or who wants to help is encouraged to attend," she said.

For more information on the Fort Benning Support Group for Death Loss, call Mrs. Cooper at 689-1427.

"There are two requirements for membersip," says Symes, "interest is improving the grounds and willingness to work at improvement and maintenance"

Any person who wants to serve on the task force can call MPCC at 545-1452 for details.

Mass now offered at 197th

197th Infantry Brigade Chaplain, Father Jim Bluett, gathers a congregation each Sunday evening for Catholic Mass at the Kelley Hill Chapel. This recent addition to the Catholic service schedule at Fort Benning answers an expressed need for USAIC personnel.

Bluett explains, "Many people go away for the weekend or have duty or exercises that prevent them from getting to Mass on Sunday morning or Saturday evening. In fact, I believe that this is the only Sunday evening mass in the Columbus area. I really expect that the congregations will get larger and larger."

Recently returned from a tour in the Sinai, Bluett said he realizes that some folks just like to sleep in on a day off from work.

"If it helps people maintain their Catholic practice, I think it should be offered," he says.

The mass begins at 5 p.m. and all are welcome to attend.

'Gospel Hour' meets Sundays

Those who doubt that the Spirit of the Lord fills the earth would do well to experience the Sightseeing Road Chapel Gospel Hour, a weekly gathering on Sunday evening at 6.

The spirit of the gospel is manifest in the singing, the preaching, the praying and the fellowship of this meeting.

Chaplain Andrew Bullard of the 36th Engineer Group serves as pastor for the Gospel Hour, which seeks to offer another opportunity for religious expression to Fort Benning personnel.

"Although it will answer a need for those who cannot attend church on Sunday morning for whatever reason," Bullard said, "we really see the Gospel Hour as a supplement to regular worship—another way of supporting and sustaining the faith among believers in the community."

Bullard believes that people have rich spiritual lives, and that they are anxious to share their prayer lives with others gathered to praise the Lord. "The forms of prayer will vary, based on the needs and desires of the people, says Bullard, "but all will announce the Good News and praise God."

Everyone is invited to attend the inspiring and Spirt-filled Gospel Hour meetings and share in the Christian joy and exuberance to be found there.

Army Chief of Chaplains to speak at Fort Benning prayer breakfast

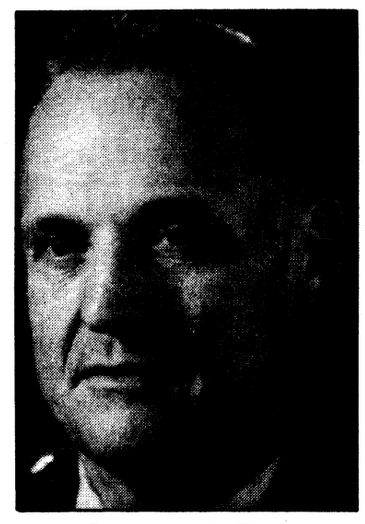
USAIS Chaplain's Office

The National Prayer Breakfast, formerly known as the Presidential Prayer Breakfast, gives us an opportunity to pause and reflect on the moral and spiritual values upon which our nation was-founded.

At Fort Benning, we are called together from all walks of life and many different backgrounds, to join with others across the U.S. in a time of prayer for America, its leaders and one another. The post breakfast will take place Tuesday at 6:30 a.m. in the Main NCO Club.

It is a time to give thanks for our great heritage as we acknowledge God's place in our history and future, and ask for his continued blessings on the country.

On the occasion of the National Prayer Breakfast, whether in attendance or in private reflection and prayer, let us look to God as the one who is ultimately in control of our nation and the affairs of this world.



"If my people who are called by my name humble themselves, and pray and seek my face...I will hear from heaven...and heal their land."(2 Chronicles 7:14)

The guest speaker for this year's post gathering will be the Army Chief of Chaplains Maj. Gen. Norris L. Einertson.

Einertson became chief of chaplains in 1986 and brings a rich background and a wealth of experience from which to offer spiritual insights.

Tickets for the USAIC National Prayer Breakfast must be purchased in advance and cost $3 each.

Tickets can be purchased from your unit breakfast coordinator, or call the USAIC Chaplain Office at 545-2288.

Sergeant major's message: person's color not important

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

CSM William B. Tapp Jr.

"The Army was the first institution that allowed me to be a man and to excel," said William B. Tapp Jr., a tall barrel-chested Texan from Clarksville. "But when you walked outside the gate in those days (the 1950s and early 1960s), there was open segregation and blatant prejudice."

But many dramatic positive changes have occurred since then. Tapp's past has included hiding "in tall weeds" whenever the Ku Klux Klan rode, seeing his brother being refused emergency medical care at a "white only" hospital, riding in the back of the bus and buying hamburgers through the back doors of white restaurants. He has gone on to become the top NCO of a major Army command.

Tapp is command sergeant major of the Army Materiel Command, based in Alexandria, Va. The 6-foot-2-inch, 51-year-old is on the road about 300 days a year visiting AMC's 10 major subordinate commands at 66 installations in more than 177 locations worldwide.

He is the "eyes and ears" for his commander, Gen. Richard H. Thompson, in all matters pertaining to more than 7,000 enlisted soldiers. About 4,000 officers and more than 115,000 civilian employees also work in the command.

Attaining his present rank was a long trek for a black man who joined a brown-shoe Army in 1954. That same Army had fought the Korean War with segregated outfits less than two years before.

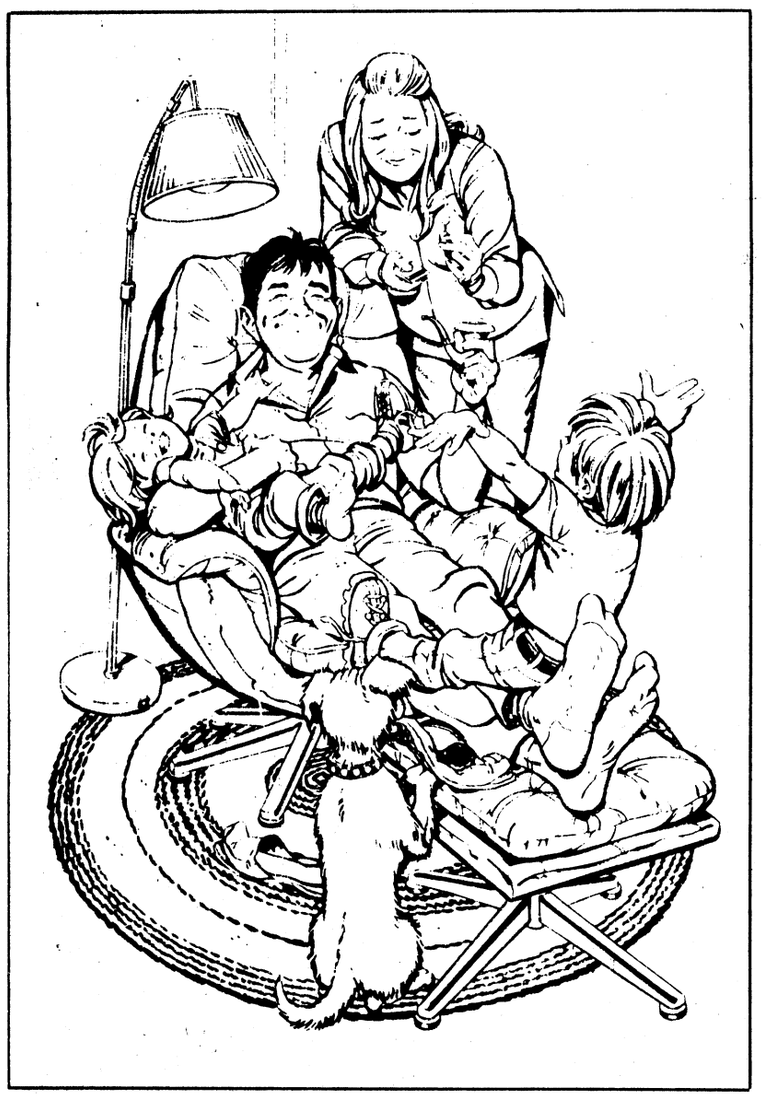
After a year of juggling between night jobs and pre-medical courses at Texas Southern University for a year, Tapp joined the Army at 19 — "to get my military obligation out of the way." Then, he had plans to get a medical degree on the GI Bill. Instead, he decided to become a professional soldier.

"I became so patriotic that I wanted to give something to this country," said Tapp, whose grandfather had fought with Teddy Roosevelt's Rough Riders during the Spanish American War.

And give of hmself he did. Tapp enlisted to become a chemical lab technician, but changed to infantry during boot camp so he could become a paratrooper. By 1958, he was a master parachutist with more than 100 jumps. Tapp spent almost 20 of his nearly 33 years in the Army as a paratrooper, seven of those with Special Forces. Along the way, he's earned a Soldiers Medal and two Legions of Merit among 19 other awards, decorations and badges.

"I love this country. Regardless of the problems we have, it's the best thing going," said Tapp, whose love for America has increased after being in 18 countries in Eruope, Asia, the Pacific, the Middle East and South America.

With the wealth of career and social experience under his belt, Tapp works now to point soldiers in the right direction. "I try to show soldiers that they can make it in the Army," said Tapp, who holds the third longest tenure as an Army sergeant major. "I encourage them to work hard. I believe in education because nobody can take away knowledge.



"Their biggest challenge is education, both military and civilian," said Tapp. "Soldiers must be prepared to assume roles of greater responsibility. So they must be competitive. Don't sit waiting for someone to send you to school — pull out books and read them — seek self-improvement."

After spending a hard day at work, give yourself 30 minutes to wind down

By Marjorie Smith
Fort Lewis, Wash., "Ranger"

FORT MONROE, VA (TNS) — The first half-hour a soldier spends on returning home at the end of the day determines the tone for the rest of the evening, according to a Fort Lewis, Wash., family advocacy coordinator.

"The normal tendency is for one spouse to return home and immediately dump the trials and frustrations of the day's workplace on the other spouse," said coordinator Cecelia MacClure. The spouse who has remained home has the same tendency. If both spouses work outside the home, the frustrations can further multiply.

MacClure explained that in these situations, both spouses are frustrated and almost totally unable to respond sympathetically to the other, each wanting to have priority in relieving frustrations.

The simple solution of just waiting at least one-half hour before getting into the nitty-gritty of what happened during the day. A brief waiting period makes all the difference, MacClure said.

It's almost a case of de-acceleration — especially if the employed spouse comes home to an environment that too often is nothing more than an extension of the workplace.

MacClure suggests that those Army coffee mugs be used at the office, but not at home. Other mementos — those reflecting the workplace — tend to make it impossible for the returning soldier to relax and take his proper place as a husband and parent.

Keep the Army sweatshirt for PT or whatever, and switch to something else around the house — and things may go smoother, according to psychologists, MacClure said.

If the Army spouse can work at keeping the day's events at work and not bring them all home, the pressure will not be a great on the at-home spouse.

The spouse who stays home, dealing with the marketing and child care situations, also has a lot of pent-up frustration by day's end. That spouse, too, wants part of the pie when it comes to releasing emotions.

Many people like a short nap, cool drink, or just a chance to read the newspaper. Thirty minutes spent in a relaxed manner should make any spouse more receptive to the partner. Then the whole tone for the evening, and the marriage, is on a better course.

Dogs

and narcotics detective dog handler in the MP Working Dog Platoon.

Once a dog and his handler have worked together for one year and successfully pass the annual certification, they can be cross-trained to detect narcotics. "Narc" dogs are able to detect the odor of marijuana, heroin, cocaine and hashish. "However, if there is a specific problem (say there is a lot of crack in an area), we are authorized to add crack to the list of odors the dog can detect," Clayton said.

The most elite of the working dogs are those trained to detect explosives. These dogs are certified to patrol and find explosives.

"We have one 'bomb' dog right now. We are responsible for helping out with our dogs at the other posts in Alabama. The most frequently used dog is the bomb dog," said SFC George R. Mims, kennel master for the MPWD Platoon.

The handlers agree that to be qualified as an explosive dog handler is the ultimate job in working with dogs. But that eliteness has its price tag.

"It's the most challenging of the working dogs. Bomb dogs are on call 24 hours a day and travel a lot," Clayton said.

The dogs and their handlers must be able to maintain a 95 percent or better in each of patrolling and explosive detection. The dogs are able to detect C-4 plastics explosives, detonating cord, smokeless powder and two other types of powder, among others.

Regardless of the specific missions, the working dog platoon has a number of other responsibilities.

"It's a lot of work. I don't think people realize that we have other things involved in our missions. For instance, when we're not patrolling, we're training the dogs or taking care of them (grooming, feeding, etc.)," Mims said.

Ongoing training with the dogs is just as important as the daily missions. The dogs are initially trained with one handler and may work with him for years; however, they can be retrained to work with a new handler.

"I've had Michelob for about two weeks now and he responds well to me," said Sgt. Joseph W. Myers, a dog handler.

"Michelob has a reputation around post for not being very friendly, but he's never bit anyone since I've had him," Myers said.

Friendliness, though, is a requirement for any of the dogs.

"Even though the dogs look 'pettable', they are very dangerous," said handler Rob Kinney. "Often people think they can approach the dogs and pet them, but they are trained to respond if anyone comes within a few feet," he said.

The dogs are certainly "as big as their bite."

The working dogs are usually donated to the Army and have to weigh at least 50 pounds and be at least 24 iches high. "They can't be gun shy and should have German Shephard characteristics," Mims said.

Contrary to popular belief, old dogs do learn new tricks. The dogs have to be about 1 year old to qualify for the military training.

Although the dogs are considered the property of the Army, there is an obvious attachment between the handler and his dog.

"There has to be a rapport beteen a dog and handler for them to work well," Mim said. "After all, they are partners."

Reservist shares baking skills with 197th Brigade wives, cooks

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Cooks from the 19th Infantry Brigade recently taught their talents to the wives of soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, during a "Ladies Night Out" at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

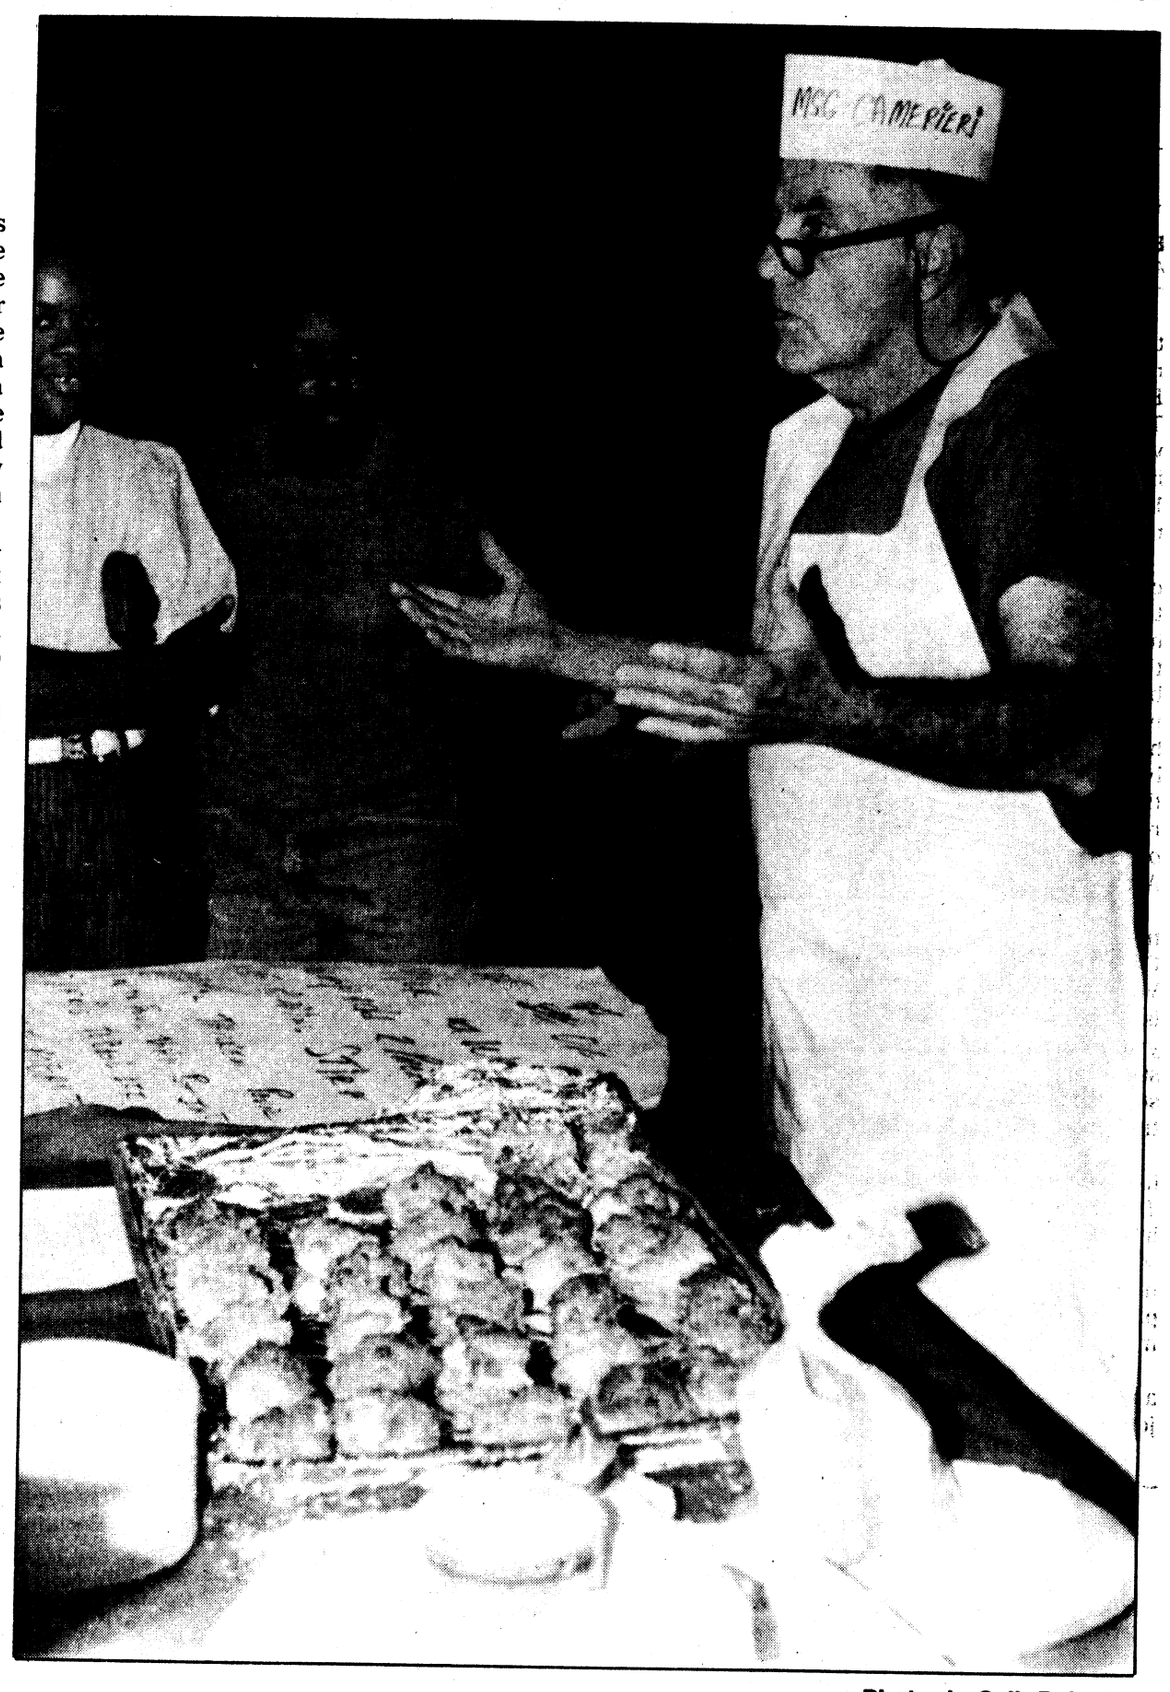
SFC Dawn Evans, the night baker at the Brigade's Separate Units Dining Facility, displayed baked bread and rolls and showed the ladies her recipe for crescent rolls.

SSgt. Edward Magdeleno, from the 2-10th's Dining Facility, specializes in cake decorating and taught the wives simple ways to create colorfully decorated cakes for birthdays and parties.

SSgt. Steve Ramirez, also from the 2-10th Dining Facility, displayed ways to make fancy decorations from fruits and vegetables.

A special guest of the night was MSgt. Michael Camerieri, who is a reservist attached to Service Battery, 2-10th Field Artillery.

Camerieri is a member of the Individual Ready Reserve who spends his annual training work in military intelligence sections at various Army posts. At home in Clearwater, Fla., Camerieri and his family run a small Italian bakery, baking Italian breads and rolls for local restaurants and homes.



During his recent two-week training with the 2-10th Field Artillery, Camerieri loaned his baking skills to the Battalion's "Ladies Night Out," teaching the wives his tried and true recipe for Italian cream puffs. Whether he is performing his duties in the unit or adding his talents to a baking class, Camerieri brings a friendliness formed from more than 35 years in the military, and even a few more years simply living and raising a family in New York City.

Camerieri says that his experiences with the Army have taught him the value of good relations between the United States and other countries: "We need to communicate with people of foreign nations and try to remain friends," he said. This is an

Despite frightening appearance, warden says alligators harmless

Laurie J. Hill

Taxidermist Charles Whitehurst checks a tooth in the mouth of the alligator he stuffed. This gator was shot in September in the Chattahoochee River and will be donated to the Columbus Museum.

By Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

The fisherman sat quietly in the johnboat, carefully feeling the line on his pole for the telltale sign of a fish.

Quietly gliding through the water towards his boat the man saw the alligator. Its huge gapeing jaws moved toward him. "Snap." The sportsman relaxed to see that the victim of the reptile was a 4-feet long water moccasin snake.

Although rare, there have been sightings of alligators on post, but they are seen more as a part of the environment than a threat to anybody, according to Wayne Eicher, supervisor for the Department of Defense Police game wardens.

"They (the alligators) don't bother people unless people bother them," Eicher said.

The alligator, protected by the Endangered Species list, is in the area under mysterious circumstances.

"They got here one of three ways," said Jack Kennedy, one-time Russell County conservationist, now a game warden for Tuscaloosa County, Ala.

"Some were brought in to restock the waters, when they started to disappear. Or years ago when they could be bought, people may have set them free when they got too big to be pets. It's also possible that the Chattahoochee is within the normal range of habitation," Kennedy said.

"They don't bother anything. The only fish they could catch are the sick and injured ones. They also eat a lot of snakes and a few turtles," Kennedy said.

One person, however, was not aware that the gators are harmless. In September a man was convicted for shooting an alligator. "He could be sentenced to one year in federal prison or a $500 fine and up to one year in the county jail," Kennedy said.

"The alligator is still listed as endangered and until the classification changes that will be the punishment," Kennedy said.

The alligator was shot about 400 feet south of post in the Chattahoochee River, according to Kennedy.

"The alligator was shot approximatly 400 feet south of Fort Benning on the Chattahoochee River but there is no doubt that the gator was living on post," Kennedy said.

"What happened was when the drought last summer caused the backwaters to get low, the gator moved out to the river," Kennedy said.

But officials do agree that there are at least two ponds on post in which the gators hold residence.

"We don't like it to be well known where they are because people like to go out and bother them," said Chris Dunn, post supervisor for the Department of Natural Resources.

"We caution the fishermen not to aggravate them or kill them. As long as the fishermen conduct themselves properly, there's no problem," Dunn said.

"I've never heard of anyone getting bitten in this area. Alligators tend to be reclusive and shy. What we need is for folks to leave them alone. They've been here for years and years and don't bother anybody," Kennedy said.

Intruders down Warriors 44-31 in women's intramural action

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

When the Warriors attempted to invade the forbidden territory of the Intruders, there was a battle in the Women's Intramural Basketball League that led the challengers to a 44-31 defeat.

The opening minutes of the contest pitted the combatants in an even matchup.

It was not until the Intruders started working their trap that their true fire power was displayed.

The trap caused several quick steals and pass-turnovers that resulted in a 10-point Intruder turn-around, thrusting them to a 19-8 lead.

Marilyn Mixon and Zonnie Frazier, both hit six points to send the Intruders to a 27-13 lead at the half.

Frazier was perfect at the line, hitting four of four.

The first half play of Shelley Fisher and Tracy Wilson kept the Warriors fired up. Fisher broke the ice with six first half points, as Wilson trailed with five points.

The Intruders came out in the second half as if they had been threatened.

The Warriors began to close the 20-point gap, only to find that there was not enough time on the clock.

The Intruders would not be interfered with, flying to a 44-31 victory.

The teams may matchup again when the Women's Intramural League Tournament begans Monday in Briant Wells Field House at 8:30 p.m.

Outlaws 'gun down' Retros in league play

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The Outlaws gunned down the Retros in a recent shoot-out in Briant Wells City, where the Over 35 League teams matched up in a 61-51 showdown.

The shooting started as Outlaw Andre Tyler demonstrated excellence in the finger roll technique, only to have L. A. Dunham return fire from the corner.

The opening minutes of play were a seesaw battle, with the teams locking up five times in the first half.

While Tyler and Dunham continued to exchange baskets, Outlaw Stanley Jones started making his moves to the hoop.

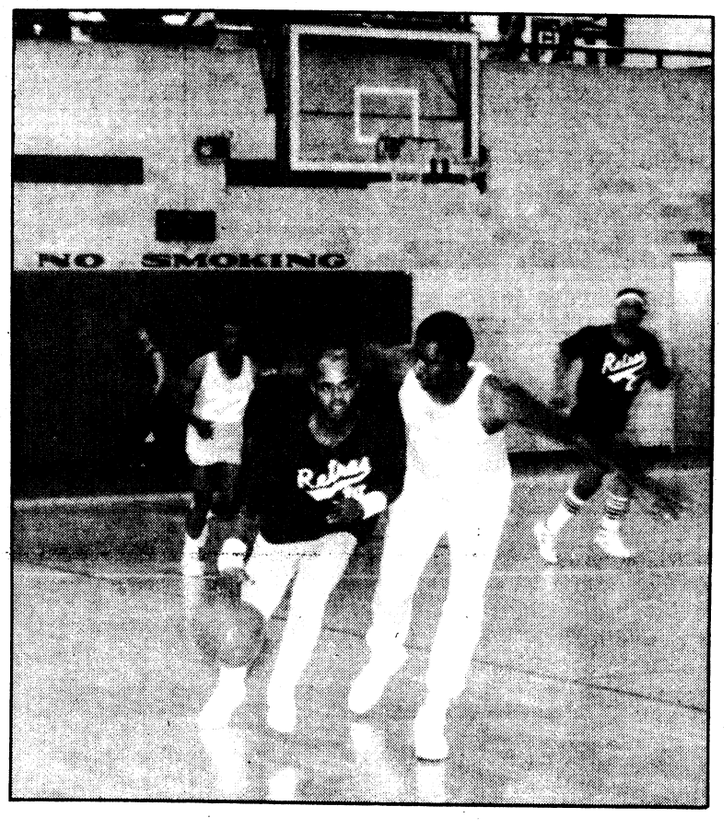
Jones used both strength and skills to power his way into the easy layup, assisted by Jerome Webb on the offensive boards when he came short.

Webb had begun to get physical on both ends of the court, snatching rebounds off the defensive boards.

The Retros began to lose sight of the ball, only to be hit with the fast breaks, as Jones opened up a 25-20 lead with two minutes remaining in the opening period.

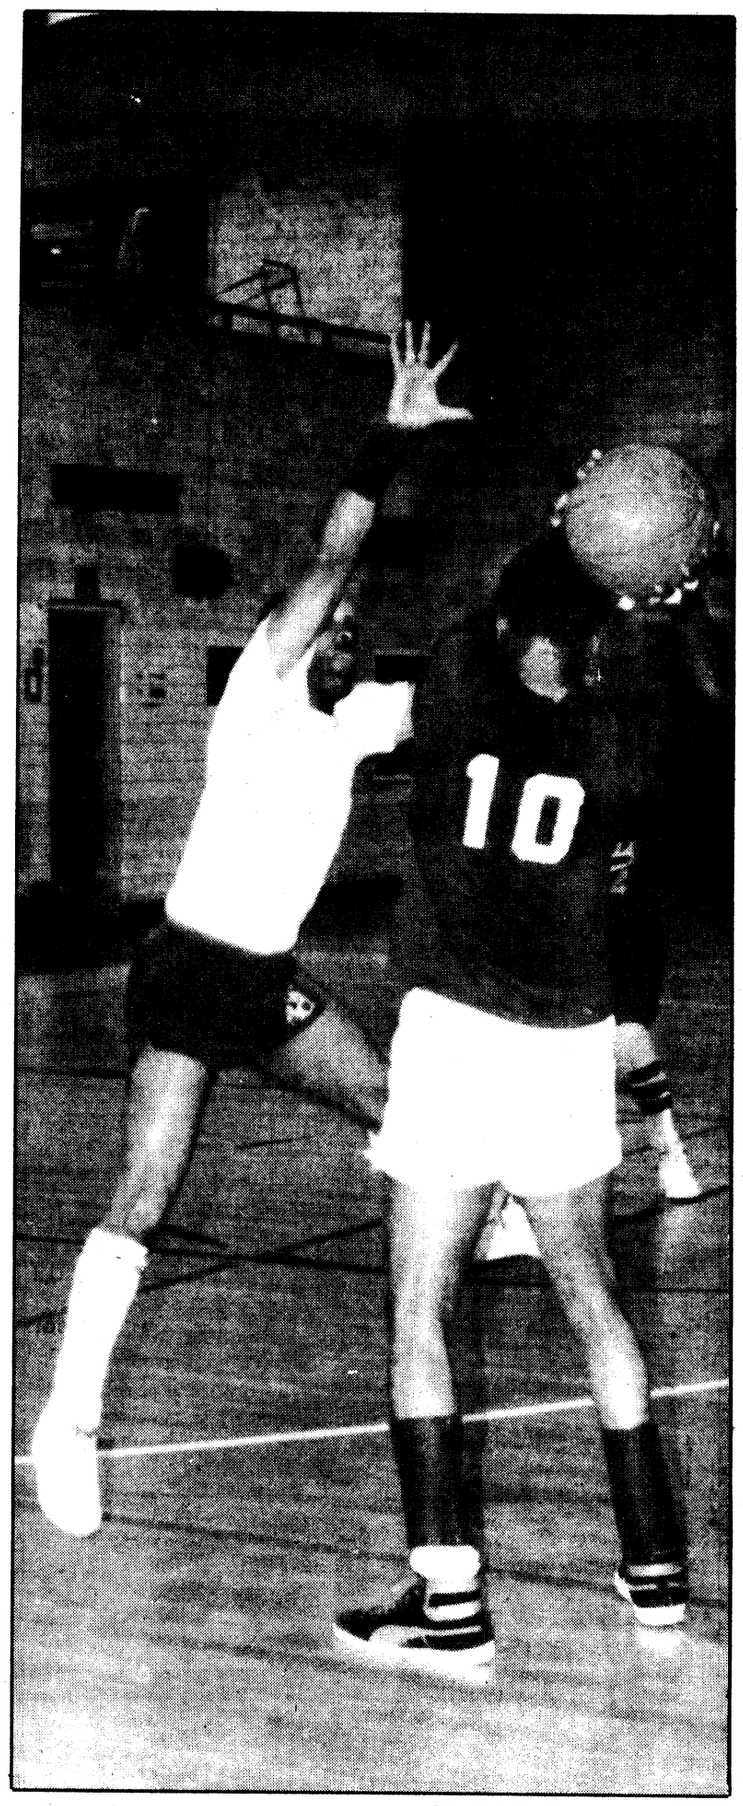
When the smoke had cleared at the end of the first round of shooting, the Outlaws had fired 29 points, as the Retros struggled to clear 21.

After the intermission, the Outlaws were in the rhythm of the game, while the Retros were still backfiring.



The Outlaws quickly jumped out to a 39-25 lead as Tyler continued to float from the free throw, through the paint, operating like the surgeon, "Doctor J."

The Outlaws were in town to stay, as they fired from all angles of the court, kicking up a 19-point lead, to bring the score to 44-25.



Roger Glispy attempted to rally the Retros with five steals in the last six minutes of play.

The Retros then moved to their quickest lineup, igniting the court to get back into the contest.

The Outlaws claimed the turf and would not allow it to be stolen, as they arrested the Retros in a 61-51 victory.

Retro L. A. Dunham escapes an Outlaw guard as he moves the ball down the court.

Photos by Thad Roberson

Feeling the pressure from an Outlaw defender, the Retros' L.A. Dunham tries to pass the ball.

Orienteers learn to recognize terrain visually

By Linda Ferguson
Orienteering director

Editor's Note: This is the third in a series of articles on teaching Orienteering. Much information has been provided by Sara and Larry Berman, editors of Orienteering North America, the official U.S. Orienteering Federation publication.

In the last article, we moved the beginning orienteer from hiking in the woods through Level One, using handrails and making simple choices.

The next level of instruction, Level Two, has the beginner learning to recognize large features such as buildings, cliffs, boulders and other large objects near trails and locate them on the map.

Neither the compass nor contours are introduced at this point. As soon as the orienteer can identify some of these larger features, an Orienterring course is set, locating the markers on these features but just off the trails.

The next step in this level is learning to take shortcuts through the woods, instead of running along the trails. A simple course is set, with good opportunities to cut corners. The controls are placed so that they can be seen from the handrail, luring the student off the beaten path, rather than following it all the way around.

The last step in the second level is doing very short, 50-to 100-meter legs through the woods to a parallel handrail, for example, from one trail to another or from a road to a creek. Streamers or engineers' tape can be placed to mark the appropriate turn-off points. At this level the compass is finally introduced but only as an aid. The route should be arranged so that only the roughest compass work, following the needle due north or south, is used.

Level Three: In Level One the orienteers had to make some decisions, but there was only one correct route. Now, they are introduced to a situation where

Energy

Post Energy Office

Fort Benning operates a huge fleet of vehicles that includes most every size and shape imaginable. The amount of fuel they consume is tremendous.

Last year almost $2.5 million was spent on mogas and diesel fuel. You can easily see the importance of fuel efficiency.

Here are some tips that will ensure you get the most mileage and service from your vehicles.

Consider consolidating routes. Avoid unnecessary trips. Eliminate overlaps.

Eliminate specific delivery deadlines where possible.

Ensure optimum vehicle load.

Consider using radio-controlled vehicles to change routing while on the road.

Increase route volume per truck where possible.

Work with local officials regarding restricted parking which affects delivery efficiency.

Train drivers in economical operation—speed, acceleration, brakes and tire pressure.

Drivers should not exceed a speed of 50 mph. In most cases, speeds from 45 to 50 mph are the most efficient.

Consider installing of tachometers to assist transport drivers in achieving operating efficiency of motor gears.

Have drivers cut off motor to avoid idling or investigate installation of automatic cut-offs. Use reminder decals. A rule of thumb cost figure is $2.50 for every hour of engine idling time.

Share truck mileage and fuel consumption data with drivers to encourage savings efforts.

Drivers should maintain steady speeds whenever possible. One speed change per mile can increase fuel consumption up to 25 percent.

Discourage fast starts. Conservative driving in city traffic can save 10 to 20 percent in fuel consumption.

Drivers should slow down on grades. It takes 55 percent more fuel to maintain 50 mph on a 17 percent grade than on a flat road. A 17 percent grade is the steepest allowed on any of our interstate road systems.

Avoid engine warm-up. Simply drive slowly for a few minutes.

Flyers plan first practice of season

By Steve Gouthro
Fort Benning Flyers

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby team's first practice of the season is planned for next week.

A full schedule of civilian and military opponents is being arranged this season as the team will be at peak performance for the National Military Tournament to be held the first weekend in May in Ohio.

Rugby is a unique sport which combines the hard hitting of American football and the finesse of European soccer.

If you are looking for the ultimate conditioning sport give rugby a try. Your cardiovascular system will be tested during the two 40 minute halves of non stop action.

Upper body and leg strength get a workout in the set scrums, rucks and mauls.

The Flyers are always looking for new players as the turnover rate of folks on post has traditionally been high. So if you have never played, have played only a few games or are a true veteran of many rucks you are invited to link up with the Fort Benning team.

The first practice is Wednesday on Engineer Field across from the Audie Murphy Gym at 6 p.m.

Anyone interested is welcome to practice or call Steve Gouthro at 544-3675 or Steve Tennant at 545-1426.

Last year the Flyers finished third in the Eastern Military Tourney and are currently ranked ninth out of all military teams in the U.S. The team is looking forward to continued success this season so come join the maul.

Tax tips

By Jessica L. Kole
Installation tax officer

Now that the income tax filing season is upon us, unscrupulous individuals who prey on soldiers in financial need will begin to appear. These persons are known as "tax refund discounters."

Tax refund discounters advertise that they will give you immediate cash if you assign your income tax return over to them. They may even prepare the return in addition to discounting the refund for immediate cash.

Frequently businesses, such as auto dealerships, will take an assignment of refund for a down payment on a purchase. In each of these situations, the taxpayer executes a power of attorney to the discounter, giving him the right to receive and cash the refund check. The discounter substitutes his address for the address of the taxpayer and cashes the check once it is received.

The discounts received on the refund checks range from a minimum of 20 percent to more than 50 percent. For example, a soldier is to receive a refund check of $700. He receives a cash payment of $350 from the discounter in exchange for the refund check being assigned to the discounter. Once the return is filed, it takes from five to 10 weeks for the discounter to receive the refund check from the IRS. In effect, a soldier who uses his method of receiving a quick tax refund is borrowing $350 for five to 10 weeks and paying an annual interest rate of about 400 percent!

Refund discounting is not only bad business for the taxpayer, it is also illegal. Assigning a refund check to someone before you receive it violates federal law.

If you need assistance preparing your tax return, contact your unit tax advisor or Army Community Service. These people have been trained by the IRS to help you prepare your tax return and answer your tax questions. Their service is free — take advantage of it.

1st Lt. Daniel Keierleber is the unit tax advisor for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor. His phone number is 544-3354.

Soldiers in units that do not have a unit tax advisor can go to either ACS or another unit for help.

Orienteer

there are two possible routes to the control. An exercise is arranged to provide an opportunity to try out both routes and then compare them. The focus of this exercise is on the route choice decision, so the choices need to be kept very simple.

More complex compass work is introduced with the addition of 200-meter legs toward a "catching feature," using "rough Orienteering." A catching feature is a large feature, usually linear, beyond a destination. It will "catch" or alert the orienteer if the destination is passed.

Rough Orienteering requires following an azimuth on the compass, so the beginners are taught how to set a compass. It isn't until this point that the compass is really needed.

Introducing complex compass work prior to this time, only confuses the student by adding a difficult skill to master. Given a compass too early will also make the student very dependent on the compass rather than self assured about reading the terrain. If the novice has an eye to the compass and not on the ground they can not be taking the time to associate the terrain with what is seen on the map.

This exercise is first learned in an open area so that the controls are easily seen and there is less confusion about watching the terrain, the map and the compass. The lessons progress from fields to a small bounded patch of woods.

The final step in Level Three is "fine" or precision Orienteering on "short" legs (less than 200 meters). The target is not a big catching feature, like a trail, but much smaller, such as a field or marsh, less than 30 meters wide. A course is set so that the orienteer can use the previously learned skills to reach a good "attack point," a trail junction for instance, from here, the compass can be followed into the control.

With the introduction of each new skill, the instructor should review each of the skills that has been taught and how to use it in relation to the skill presently being taught.

Next time, the novice will move ahead to understanding the lay of the land.

Cook

attitude he developed when he began his military career after being drafted into the Army in 1950.

Camerieri was assigned to the 23rd Regiment (Combat Team), 2nd Division during the Korean Conflict. After being wounded in battle, he was sent to Japan to recover and, before long requested to be sent back to Korea. He was assigned to his old unit and was awarded a Bronze Star for valor during the battle for Heartbreak Ridge in September 1951.

After two years active duty, he returned to his home in Brooklyn, N.Y., and enlisted in the U.S. Army Reserve.

During more than 30 years in the Reserves, Camerieri has been assigned to a tank unit, a field artillery battalion and an engineer brigade. He attended Military Intelligence School at Fort Bragg, N.C., and even served his active duty time as an assistant instructor at the school.

When he retired to a family business in Florida, Camerieri continued his reserve duties.

"I feel good that I have done something to help other soldiers," Camerieri said. I've had good times and bad times and I've learned more about the Army. I enjoy working with units and keeping up the morale of the soldiers I meet."

The battalion sponsors a Ladies Night Out monthly as part of the Battalion commander's Family Support Plan. Each month the ladies are invited to get together for different activities such as the baking classes or bingo.

We're sorry

The Bayonet staff would like to apologize to the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, Army Training Center and SFC Michael Reynolds for an error in last week's paper.

We wrote that Reynolds, Fort Benning's Drill Sergeant of the Year, was assigned to Company E, 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

The sergeant first class was selected as the post's top drill sergeant while he was "on the trail" with Company E, 7th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

The long blue line

Their distinctive helmet liners create a sea of bobbing heads as the students in an Officer Candidate School class march from an assembly area on Fort Benning's York Field to participate in the review that marks their passage to senior status in the 10th week of the course. Things have been pretty busy at the Officer Candidate School recently. The Patterson Award was announced Thursday as well as the 1987 inductees to the Hall of Fame. The OCS Alumni Association was also officially recognized in a ceremony at Marshal Auditorium. For the story, see page A-3.

Insurers now being billed for health care

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

Army hospitals quietly began sending bills for inpatient care to some insurers last fall.

At Fort Benning, billing for inpatient care of dependents and retirees actually began in January, but it only affects a small number of patients.

Lt. Col. Alan Mitten, chief of the Patient Administration Division at Martin Army Community Hospital, said only those dependents and retirees who have hospitalization insurance with a third party insurer are affected.

"When a patient comes in, we ask if they have private insurance, and if so, we fill out a billing form and submit it to the company for payment," he explained.

Traditionally, military treatment facilities have not sought payment for services performed as long as the patients met the criteria for receiving treatment.

The change became effective Oct. 1, 1986, as a result of federal legislation signed by President Ronald Reagan April 7, requiring the Defense Department to collect reasonable inpatient health care costs for dependents and retirees who have such insurance coverage.

The move to recover charges from insurers is viewed as a cost-cutting measure to bring some relief to the overburdened military medical system.

The law applies to all insurance, medical service or health plan agreements entered into, amended or renewed since April 6.

Under provisions of the law, the Defense Depa.tment will bill insurance companies the full inpatient rate of $441 per day.

Mitten said the main thing patients need to understand is that the new policy is not going to cost them anything. "Whatever the insurance company pays will be accepted as full payment," he said. "The patient will not be charged for any costs the insurer does not pay."

The Army estimates that eight to 10 percent of family members and retirees across the board carry private medical insurance. These are mostly spouses who work for companies that provide insurance for their employees or those who have taken out their private hospitalization insurance so they can be treated at civilian hospitals.

Civilian Health and Medical Plan for the Uniformed Services payments will not be affected, since CHAMPUS is a publicly funded, separate program.

Because MACH implemented the new billing policy in January, Mitten said it will be a while before Fort Benning has any firm statistics on the number of people involved and the amount of money collected.

He said MACH will continue to charge family members the dependent hospitalization rate of $7.55 per day, and retirees the subsistence charge of $3.85 per day. This charge has traditionally been required for inpatient stays and is not changed by the new legislation.

Benning hosts conference for training commanders

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning was the site of the fourth annual Initial Entry Training Brigade Commander's Conference, Feb. 2 through 4.

"This conference brings together all brigade commanders from all training centers in the Army to disseminate information and to institute needed changes and make decisions affecting IET throughout the Army," said Capt. Stephen Ford, the project officer for the conference.

Brigade commanders from 30 units, seven general officers and representatives from each of the 12 U.S. Army Reserve divisions and one separate resident brigade attended.

The three-day event included briefings in the mornings and observations of training in the afternoons.

The attendees were briefed on the Department of Defense Reorganization Act and Manpower Resources, separation for a physical condition prior to service, a personnel update, the Basic Training Program of Instruction, and physical stress injuries.

Highlights of training observed were a Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle live-fire and capabilities exercise, a squad live-fire demonstration and a One Station Unit Training field training exercise,

Lt. Gen. Robert Forman, the deputy commanding general for training in The U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, said the annual conference "provides a forum to discuss and develop mutually agreeable positions on a wide range of issues in TRADOC and on other aspects of Initial Entry Training missions."

Attempts to 'beat the system' end in arrest for 50 soldiers

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

There is a growing problem at Fort Benning with soldiers falsifying birth dates in order to obtain an identification card showing they are 21 years old.

More than 50 soldiers have been caught in recent months trying to have ID cards made showing they are 21 when they are, in fact, under 21.

"We're not trying to catch soldiers doing anything, but they should be aware that if they falsify any information, such as birth date, on the application for an ID card we will detect it," said Sgt. Michael Dearybury, the noncommissioned officer in charge of the Fort Benning ID Card Section.

According to Dearybury the recent change raising the drinking age in Georgia has been the catalyst for the quest for new ID cards.

He explained the process: "Soldiers fill out their DA Form 428, Application for ID card, and falsify their birth date. Their first sergeant and company commander then sign the 428, attesting to the validity of the information without really ensuring the information is correct.

"When the soldier brings the 428 to us, we check out all information on the form for correctness," he said.

The checks are made using a Standard Installation Division Personnel System roster that is updated every two weeks. This SIDPERS roster contains pertinent information on all soldiers assigned to Post resident complains about 'mini speed bumps'

Dear Editor:

I am writing to complain about something that almost everyone who lives in Custer Terrace has to endure every day of their lives.

I don't know the correct name for them, but a brief description should tell everyone what I'm talking about. I'm referring to the miniature speed bumps, in groups of 25 or 30, that are located in the first two blocks of Craig Drive.

I realize that these were put there for safety, but let's face it, they do more harm than good. The speed limit is 20 mph. If you hit these things going 10 to 20 mph, it feels like your car is going to fall apart. If you go faster, the noise is deafening, but it cuts the vibration a lot.

A lot of people just drive around them, which means they drive on the wrong side of the road for a block and a half.

I can't imagine living in one of the houses right beside these things. I live behind the row of houses on Craig Drive and sometimes the noise still wakes me up at night.

Also, I have not encountered these things anywhere else on post except on Marne Road where Stonewall forks into it. I can see where they would be of use there because it 's such a dangerous place, but even the ones there don't rattle your bones when you cross them. There also used to be some up at the top of the hill on Stonewall, behind the officer's quarters, but I noticed someone got those taken up.

Please, let's get rid of these things. They do more harm than good.

Driving under influence big problem in Feb. 1986

Provost Marshal

During February 1986, the number of people convicted of driving under the influence doubled on Fort Benning. This was not a holiday period and a specific reason may not be pinpointed. The fact is, they occured, and during February 1987, our goal is to avoid a repetition of last year's statistics.

This can only be done by the participation of the entire community. Can you help? Certainly.

If you notice a friend has had a little too much to drink, then you should offer to drive that friend home, or insist that he sleep it off at your home. You will be saving your friend a lot of trouble, or even saving a life.

The tragedy of DUIs is that they are still happening. No matter how much emphasis we place on this offense, and no matter how many people die on our nation's highways, people are still drinking and driving.

Here on Fort Benning, it is our collective responsibility to stop drunken drivers.

Look around you. Do you know anyone who drinks and drives on a regular basis? The next time you are at a party, will you have the courage to take your friends' keys from them for their own good? You may be their last chance. Think about it.

'Platoon' realistic portrayal of war

Dawn Kilpatrick

If you go to movies to be entertained, don't go see "Platoon." If, however, you like to see the world explode on the screen, slamming home harsh realities, don't miss "Platoon." It is certainly a film chock full of reality and truth.

Touted as "the most realistic movie ever made about Vietnam," the show fulfills all of its promises. It is brilliantly filmed; unique camera angles and crisp, clear images abound. It is full of real people who have real emotions.

It is too real.

"Platoon" puts you in the foxhole with the grunts from the 25th Infantry Division somewhere near Cambodia. It is 1968 when you walk into the theater and you may well feel trapped in 1968 for a few days after you leave.

You're there when the new recruits walk off the airplane and are confronted by the seasoned veterans who are on their way out of "The 'Nam" headed back to the "world." The "fresh meat" stand out — they all have good haircuts; they're clean shaven. They even look a little excited, albeit scared to death. They are easily identifiable in their naivete.

We have all known anxious young men like them — eager to do their duty and serve their country. Immediately, they become important to you. The scene changes quickly, though and soon after, you feel as though your heart is being ripped out as you watch their blood splatter. Inexperience meant death in Vietnam. There was a lot of inexperience. There was also a lot of death.

The film leaves no doubt that the new guys didn't get much respect in the bush. Not yet acclimated, they were forced to perform such grueling tasks as walking point (leading the way) through the steaming, mosquitoe-infested jungle. And you're right there with them. As the voracious bugs eat away at the young troops, you feel a strange sensation creeping down your back.

The unlikely backdrop of cleaning outhouses and burning the waste sets the stage for some of the movie's lighter moments. The new guys get a chance to talk to the "short timers" who are preparing to rotate back the the United States.

The seasoned troops share their experience and offer suggestions to make the stay easier. "You gotta' count backwards or somethin'. Like say you been here already five days. It sounds better'n if you say you got 360 days left."

The advice "don't think too much and don't get too serious 'bout all this crap" seems to become more profound as the battle drags on. The light moments are too few.

Suddenly you're back on the battlefield. You're there next to the bumbling platoon leader who can't read a map and calls in an air strike on his own men. You're there with the war-hardened first sergeant as he tells the lieutenant what a stupid mistake he made. You're also there by the lieutenant's side when he feels genuine remorse for his error. Inside of five minutes, you've taken a ride on an emotional rollercoaster like you had never imagined possible.

Then you find yourself in the middle of a village where the people have been storing weapons and enough rice to feed an entire North Vietnamese regiment. You feel the mounting tensions as the villagers fend off questions from the American soldiers. You're there and you feel the frenzy as it builds. There is a hunger in the air. The troops are anxious to kill. It is a strange feeling. And it isn't a pleasant one.

Actually, there are few pleasant feelings associated with the horrors of war. "Platoon" drives this point home and makes it crystal clear that "war is hell." But, if you're looking for an accurate portrayal of what our troops faced and overcame in Vietnam, go see this movie.

Commanders responsible for troops' safety

By Christopher L. Cole
Fort McClellan, Ala.

FORT MONROE, Va. — Company commanders can help prevent Army motor vehicle and privately owned vehicle accidents.

To do this; first ask yourself the following questions:

☐ Is vehicle safety a priority in my company?

☐ When was the last time I spoke to subordinates about safety? Not the formal, stand in formation and read the latest command holiday safety letter, but tailgate teaching, guiding, supervising — leading.

☐ When a new soldier arrives in my unit, do I talk about safety and review his U.S. Government Motor Vehicle Operators Identification Card; Equipment Operator's Qualification Record; and his Defensive Driving Course attendance record?

☐ When was the last time I recommended someone for a safety award or mentioned safe driving (or just safety) in an Enlisted Efficiency Report or Officer Efficiency Report? Do I give soldiers the recognition they deserve when they do a good job?

☐ If I'm in a TDA unit, where are the DA Form 348s filed? Army regulations require they be maintained by the supervisor responsible for control of unit or organization vehicle or equipment operation.

If, as a commander, I don't have a motor pool, the DA Form 348s should be in the company orderly room. Why? Simple. It's tough to review them annually, as required, when SP4 Jones or SFC Smith keep theirs at home.

An unofficial survey on one TRADOC post revealed that only one unit, in 20 contacted, maintained DA Form 348s in the orderly room. Other units allowed the soldiers to keep them.

☐ When a soldier is involved in an "at fault" accident, do I record that accident on the DA Form 348? Even more important, do I schedule the soldier for immediate attendance in the Defensive Driving Course? Have I considered sending soldiers even when they were not at fault?

The bottom line here that commanders should consider is that it could have been an avoidable accident, and refresher training might be helpful.

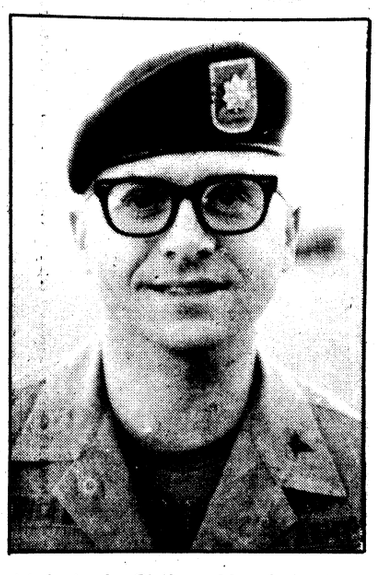
Commanders also need to stay on top of accidents that their soldiers have in their privately owned vehicles. The key point here is that driving a POV on TRADOC installations is a privilege, not a right.

☐ For the troops who may not operate military vehicles but do have POVs, have I considered sending them to the Defensive Driving Course anyway.

Commanders need to stress that it's not punishment, but training. And another thing, the Deensive Driving Course is open to family members when space is available.

☐ Do I wear my seat belt? How can soldiers be expected to wear their seat belts if a good example isn't set? Also, it is required, not optional, on militay posts.

These are also questions that non-commissioned officers should ask themselves. The sergeant major of the Army has charged NCOs with responsibility for the safety of all soldiers. Other leaders and supervisors, both military and civilian, also should ask themselves these questions.



But it is the commander of individual units who must set the tone for safety within the command. Gen. John A. Wickham, Army chief of staff, is the Army's safety officer, and he expects every subordinate commander to be that unit's safety officer.

Commanders should share them by speaking up at commander's call, putting in a suggestion or writing to the post safety office.

After all, it is the commander's responsibility to save soldiers' lives and preserve the Army's fighting strength.

Court report

Soldier convicted for selling cocaine

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

On Jan. 27, a general court-martial consisting of four officers and four non-commissioned officers revealed just how serious an offense the Fort Benning community considers the possession and sale of cocaine.

SP4 Diego A. Becerra, a medic in the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, 34th Medical Battalion, was convicted after a three-day trial of two specifications of distribution of cocaine and one specification of possession of cocaine and marijuana.

On Nov. 18, 1986, Becerra sold about one-third of a gram of cocaine to an undercover Drug Suppression Team member. Becerra agreed to sell more drugs in the future.

On Nov. 24, 1986, the DST member met with Becerra and gave him $300. Becerra left with the money and returned several hours later with neither the drugs nor the money.

Becerra claimed that he had given the money to an unknown man who left to get the drugs but never returned. The next morning, Becerra produced about 1 ½ grams of cocaine for the DST member.

On Nov. 28, 1986, the DST apprehended Becerra and searched his on-post quarters. Inside, they found various items of drug paraphenalia, including gram scales, razor blades, roach clips, marijuana roaches, smoking devices and glass bottles containing traces of cocaine. Included among the drug paraphenalia was a complete set of items needed to manufacture and smoke crack, an extremely addictive form of cocaine.

Despite evidence that the first sale of cocaine was directly to the DST agent, Becerra pled not guilty. During the trial, Becerra testified that he was asked by the government informant to pose as a drug dealer, so that the informant could complete his agreement with the DST and be allowed to leave the Army and go home.

Becerra claimed that he believed it was not wrong to sell the cocaine because he was asked to do by the soldier who was working with the DST. Becerra claimed that the second cocaine sale never occurred and that the cocaine paraphenalia found in his quarters was planted by the informant. Becerra's wife took the stand and testified that the marijuana belonged to her.

The military jury rejected Becerra's claim that he acted innocently. Despite the testimony of five non-commissioned officers that Becerra was an outstanding soldier, the court sentenced Becerra to be reduced to the grade of private, to forfeit all pay and allowances, to be dishonorably discharged from the service and to be confined at hard labor for 10 years.

Tax tips

By Jessica L. Kole
Installation tax officer

If you pay someone to care for your dependent child who is under 15 years of age so you can work or look for work, you may be able to take a tax credit of up to 30 percent of the amount you pay.

A tax credit reduces the amount of tax, instead of lowering income as itemized deductions do. Your tax credit can be as much as $720 if you have one qualifying dependent and as much as $1,440 if you have two or more qualifying dependents. This child care credit applies not only to babysitters and day care centers that watch your children, but also to certain relatives and household workers you pay for this service.

To be able to claim this credit, you must mile Form 1040 or Form 1040A and file a joint return if you are married (unless certain exceptions apply); your dependent care expenses must be incurred to allow you (and your spouse if you are married) to work or look for work; you must have income from work during the year; you (and your spouse if you are married) must keep up a home that you live in with one or more of your qualifying dependents; and you must have made payments for child care to someone you could not claim as a dependent.

You may also be able to take the child care credit if you are divorced or separated and have custody of a child under 15. This is true even if you are not entitled to a dependency exemption for the child. To claim the credit, you must have custody for a longer period of time during the year than the other parent. If you qualify, you may take the credit if your spouse is absent for the last six months of the taxable year.

This care credit may also benefit you if you pay someone to care for your disabled spouse or dependent so you can work or look for work.

More information on the child and dependent care credit is available in the free IRS Publication 503, Child and Disable Dependent Care. You can obtain this publication at the IRS office in Columbus or at the Tax Assistance Office in Room 5, Building 5.

The Tax Assistance Office has received a new supply of federal tax forms and instruction booklets. The office is open from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Stop by for all your state and federal tax form needs.

VA home loan interest rate drops to 8.5%

Veterans Adminstration

For the eighth time in 21 months, the Veterans Administration has lowered its maximum home loan interest rate. Effective Jan. 19, VA-guaranteed fixed rate mortgages dropped to 8.5 percent — the lowest since February 1978.

The trend is the largest and longest sustained drop in the rate in the 43-year history of the VA Home Loan Program. The rate has dropped a total of 4.5 percentage points since April 1985. The largest previous drop was four points in the 16 months between January 1982 to May 1983.

Besides benefiting new veteran-buyers, the cut in the rate can help many veterans who already have home loans with high interest rates. VA loan counselors recommend borrowers consider refinancing when the loan rate reaches two percentage points below the rate fixed in the mortgage.

The VA also decreased by one-half percent the maximum rates for Graduated Payment Mortgages to 8.75 percent and home improvement loans to 10 percent.

The rates for manufactured home loans also dropped one-half percent to 11 percent and to 10.5 percent to purchase a unit with a lot or a lot for a unit already purchased.

VA home loans may be used to purchase, improve or refinance a house or condominium, and to purchase or refinance a maufactured home.

Fort Benning and includes dates of birth.

"If we find information on the 428 that doesn't check with the SIDPERS roster, then we check the information on the Realtime Personnel Identification System," Dearybury said.

If the information doesn't match with the RAPID System's data then a manual check is done with the Personnel Records Branch.

"If the information, such as date of birth, still does not match we then call the soldier's unit and check the date of birth. If we find the dates again do not match and the date is a falsification we then call the military police," Dearybury said.

SFC Gary Leeds, of the Fort Benning Military Police, said that when a soldier is picked up for falsification of a government document he is taken to the MP Station and the incident is entered into the blotter report. The soldier's unit is called so the commander or first sergeant can pick him up. The soldier is subject to punishment under the Uniform Code of Military Justice for falsifying a government document.

"It is just not worth it for a soldier to risk his career over falsification of a birth date so he can get into clubs or buy alcohol off-post," Dearybury said.

"If they come here with any false information on their 428 our system of checks is going to detect the false information and it's just not worth it."

2nd Lt. Brian Meade

In a ceremony at Marshal Auditorium Thursday 43 individuals were inducted into the Officer Candidate Schools' Hall of Fame in conjunction with the presentation of the Patterson Award winner and the formal opening of the OCS Alumni Association.

In the annual ceremony at the United States Army Infantry Center, 2nd Lt. Brian Meade, 23, received the Patterson Award.

The award is named for Robert P. Patterson who served as a captain during World War I and glorified his career as a recipient of the Distinguished Service Cross, Distinguished Service Medal, Silver Star and Purple Heart.

Later, Patterson served as a judge of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and as secretary of war in the Truman administration. Upon his death in 1952, a trust fund for the award was established with monetary contributions from personal friends.

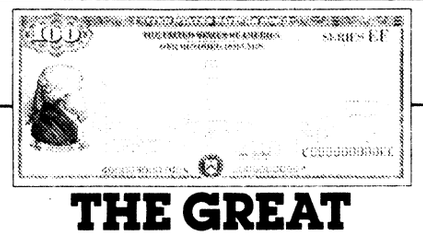
The award is presented annually to the man selected as the exceptional infantry officer graduate of OCS during the previous year who exhibits outstanding qualities of leadership, academic effectiveness, aptitude and character.

Meade received a check for $1,000 and an engraved .45 caliber pistol from Mrs. Patterson Feb. 7 in New York City. Usually on hand at Fort Benning for the ceremony, Mrs. Patterson was unable to travel this year so Meade went to her.

Meade received a Department of the Army certificate of achievement signed by the Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., and a Follow Me plaque during the ceremony at Marshal Auditorium.

The OCS Alumni Association was also formally recognized, with the first membership being presented to retired Col. Jesse W. Walls, the first OCS graduate on Sept. 26, 1941.

Also, 43 individuals were inducted into the OCS Hall of Fame in Wigle Hall. Selection into the Hall of Fame is based on one or more of the following: individual has received the medal honor, attained the rank of colonel while serving on active duty or in a reserve component or has been elected or appointed to an office of prominence in national or state government or recognized and recommended by the commandant of the Infantry School for outstanding service.



The 43 new Hall of Famers are: Dr. Donald A. Hicks, Brig. Gen. Clyde A. Hennies, Brig. Gen. Cloyd H. Pfister, Brig. Gen. Peter M. McVey, retired Col. David W. Affleck, Col. Robert N. Bailey, Col. Soldiers from Troop A, 15th Cavalry, fire light, anti-tank weapons on Fort Benning's Booker Ranger as part of a familiarization with the various weapons used by Cav scouts.

197th Infantry Brigade

The explosive sound from the light, anti-tank weapon shook the air. Then, as the self-propelled 66mm missile struck its target, the sound of clapping and cheering soldiers could be heard echoing through the woods on Booker Range.

During a week-long training phase, a phase that Troop A, 15th Cavalry calls "range week," cavalry scouts from the 197th Infantry Brigade fired several different types of weapons. The LAW was just one of the many weapons the scouts fired.

"We go out and fire the weapons we are associated with on a quarterly basis," said 1st Lt. Joseph Sartiano, Scout Platoon leader. "That includes the M16, M60, .45 caliber pistol, .50 caliber machine gun and hand grenades."

Before actually firing the live LAW, soldiers practiced with a sub-caliber, which is used for training. It is a special LAW designed to fire a small projectile that gives the soldier the feel of firing the actual weapon.

"The weapon itself is used to disable armored vehicles, knock out bunkers and clear obstacles," explained SSgt. Oscar Barnes, Scout Platoon sergeant. "It is a good, light weapon. Easy to carry and fire."

The LAW itself has a maximum firing range of 400 meters and an effective range of 250 meters. The LAW is small, but it extends to make it larger when fired.

"It was a lot of fun, actually getting to fire live LAWs," said Sartiano. "When you use live ammunition training is much more realistic and enjoyable." — Troy Buchanan, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent.

36th Engineer Group

On Jan. 27, a command inspection was conducted in the 608th Ordnance Company by Col. Paul Y. Chinen, commander of the 36th Engineer Group.

The inspection consisted of a detailed look at the Generator Shop, Prescribe Load Listing area, tools, all vehicles and special equipment maintained at the motor pool. Accompanying Chinen were several members of his staff, each member intensely inspected different areas of operations to ensure that a thorough inspection was conducted.

Soldiers of the 608th Ordnance Company spent numerous hours and hard work preparing for the inspection. The hard work did not go unnoticed, as Chinen congratulated the soldiers on a job well done. — Dwayne E. Ford, 608th Ordnance Company.

Recent the 586th Engineer Company (AFB) conducted night bridging and rafting to increase its proficiency in operations during limited visability. Both the 1st and 2nd Bridging Platoons concentrated their efforts toward planning and executing night operations.

A typical mission included moving from the 586th motor pool to a tactical staging area three to five kilometers from the bridge site followed by the building of a bridge or raft on the Chattahoochee River under blackout conditions.

During the most recent night training exercise the 2nd Platoon was able to bridge the Chattahoochee River in one hour and 19 minutes. The Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program standard for this type of mission is three hours and 30 minutes.

Proficiency in limited visibility operations is critical to the company since it is a primary target for enemy artillery and air attacks.

The use of concealment (smoke and darkness) aids the company in not being detected thus increasing its survivability during wartime.

The company's motto "No Bridge Too Far" is a testament to the dedication of its soldiers toward mission accomplishment "night or day." — David R. Neeley, 586th Assault Float Bridge Company.

As a light rain fell, the streamered guidon waved proudly, and the 232-member company came to attention Jan. 16 at the change of command ceremony for the 598th Maintenance Company.

The outgoing commander was Capt. James C. Foster, a graduate of North Georgia College. In his parting comments, Foster highlighted the numerous achievements and awards of the 598th Maint. Co.

The incoming commander is Capt. Abraham B. Compton Jr., a graduate of Appalachian State University. He was presented with a "So You Want A Command" plaque by Lt. Col. Thomas Hopper, 67th Maintenance Battalion commander.

Distinguished guests at the ceremony included Col. Paul Chinen, 36th Engineer Group commander, Col. Michael Plummer, 2nd Brigade commander, 10th Mountain Division, Lt. Col. Charles Rust, 43rd Engineer Battalion Commander, Teresa G. Compton and Cindy L. Foster.

Following the ceremony a reception was in the 598th Maintenance Company dayroom.— Matthew J. Faddis, 598th Maintenance Company

10th Mountain Division

The 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division recently completed its annual "Golden Dragon" racquetball tournament. First place honors went to Headquarters and Headquarters Company's PFC Paul Bristol, second place went to Charlie Company's PFC Thomas Algree, and third place went to Headquarters and Headquarters Company's Capt. Christian Jaques.

Bristol narrowly defeated Jaques in the semi-finals 2-1, yet recovered his top form to take the title from Algree 11-0, 11-0.

The 1988 defense budget has the potential to make history: the first to top $1 trillion and to cope with the mandates of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

Although the actual workings of the law seem to be rather abstract, the harsh reality has hit home at the 2nd Brigade of the 10th Mountain Division.

And upcoming brigade deployment to the Division's headquarters in Fort Drum, New York has been deleted from this year's training calendar due in part to the $5 billion cut from the Defense Department's $312 billion request. Future deployments also seem to be in jeopardy because of a lack of funding.

To cope with the reduction in training dollars, the 10th Mountain's leadership is being taxed to develop and implement low cost, purposeful and motivating training to further develop its soldiers.

The immediate solution for the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry appears to have gained division approval: Company-level deployments to be specialized training areas. Whether it be Military Operations in Urban Terrain training at Fort A. P. Hill, Va., or amphibious training at Little Creek Naval Base, Va., the training cost is lower, is mission essential for light infantry, and most important, motivating for the soldiers of 2-14th.

The ultimate responsibility for the leaders of 2nd Brigade is to train their soldiers whether there are funds available or not. In a time of spending constraints and fiscal awareness, leaders must be immaginative and innovative. — 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry.

The "Terminators" Road Racing Team took 1st place honors for the best Fort Benning team in the 1987 Infantry Marathon. All of their training and hard work paid off and plans are already in the making for the Officers' Wives' Club running festival.

The team consisted of five runners of all ranks. The runners were: SP4 Dean Drake, SFC John Thomure, CWO3 Richard Schick, 1st Lt. Mike Fiacco and 1st Lt. Dan Sullivan.

Along with the 3-foot high trophy and team medals, Schick and Sullivan qualified for the Boston Marathon by breaking three hours. Sullivan also picked up a medal for second place in his age group.

The Battalion also sent approximately 30 runners to participate in the half-marathon. They, along with PFC James Johnson (full marathon), deserve to be gratulated. — 10th Mountain Division

David Perkins replaced Tanner as the HSC Dining Facility manager.

Terri Davis, secretary for the HSC Dining Facility, accepted the award for Thanksgiving Decorations from McKay. Mrs. Davis did much of the holiday decorating and supervised the remainder. — Marsha Santiago, Army Training Center correspondent

197th readies soldiers for upcoming exercise

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry correspondent

Throughout the 197th Infantry Brigade units are preparing for next week's field training exercise "Sledgehammer I," which will take place on Fort Benning.

However, preparation not only requires checks of vehicles and equipment, it also requires preparation of soldiers, especially those who don't frequently train in the field.

Medics from Company B, 197th Support Battalion, are gearing up by constructing a field emergency room to familiarie the soldiers on their field working environment.

According to 1st Lt. Timothy Voller, medical platoon leader, the medics have several new soldiers who haven't spent a lot of time in a field environment.

"We set up our equipment so that the newer soldiers could learn what's available in a field hospital as compared to a garrison hospital," Voller said.

"Then our experienced non-commissioned officers walked them through the functions of the emergency room and ward, reviewing such things as patient care, the uses of different equipment and supply needs."

When the medics set up their field hospital for next week's FTX, their mission is much more than just training. They will be treating soldiers for illnesses or injuries throughout the exercise, keeping soldiers fit for duty during the training.

"When we get to the field, the medics will do a lot of learning through performing their duties," Voller said.

"While working on sick call in garrison, they don't really see what goes into treating a patient. In the field they will observe more of the treatment process."

With this and other "soldier preparation," the Co. B medics will be ready to meet the challenges of providing medical care in a field environment.

Post inspector general explains mission

The Bayonet staff

Col. James R.M. Bouldin, Fort Benning's inspector general recently answered some commonly asked questions pertaining to his office, it's operating procedures and overall mission. Following is a portion of that interview.

Q: What is the mission of the IG?

A: The mission of the IG system is to determine the state of economy, efficiency, discipline, morale, espirit de corps, and readiness throughout Fort Benning. To state it simply, we basically serve as an additional set of eyes for the commander.

Q: How are you organized?

A: Currently the office consists of the inspector general, the sergeant major and a secretary.

The hub of our activity is the Assistance and Investigations and Inspection Branches. These functions are headed by a major and a lieutenant colonel who are graduates of the six-week Inspectors General Course.

Q: What guidance is provided to assist you in accomplishing your mission?

A: As a rule, Army Regulation 20-1 provides the basic guidance concerning my duties. It is rather specific in terms of the scope of my responsibilities.

We also receive guidance in the form of conferences. During the week of Jan. 12 to 16, I attended such a conference hosted by the Department of the Army Inspector General.

Additionally, this agency as well as the TRADOC IG also provide quarterly newsletters and special inspection reports that are tremendously informative in terms of providing guidance.

Q: Your requirements appear to be quite demanding. How do you keep your IG's up-to-date?

This is a constant process that consumes a great deal of our most precious commodity, time. In my opinion, it is essential time well spent.

In this regard, we approach our training in several different ways that include a comprehensive reading program, calling in subject matter experts to give us classes and cross fertilizing information between other IG offices and major command IGs. We also take advantage of training provided by the Army Continuing Education System where appropriate.

As I mentioned earlier, we take advantage of information gleaned from conferences, newsletters, and inspection reports.

Q: How are personnel selected for IG duty?

A: Commisioned officers, warrant officers and enlisted personnel are nominated by their respective branches. The Department of the Army Inspector General conducts a comprehensive review of each nominee's record for suitability for appointment in the Inspector General Corps. He personally approves or rejects the nomination in the name of the Secretary of the Army.

Personnel are selected and detailed to an IG position for up to three years. Career branches must obtain approval from the Inspector General before assigning these personnel to another duty within this three-year period. Those selected for IG duty must attend a six-week DAIG course before performing duties as a member of the IG Corps.

Q: How do soldiers know how to contact you?

A: A primary means for most soldiers to contact us would be to simply check their unit bulletin boards. Unit commanders are required by AR 20-1 to post the name, phone number and building number for the local inspector general. The same format is also posted for civilian employees.

Q: Do you receive requests for assistance or complaints for which redress or resolution is available through other than IG channels?

A: Yes, we frequently receive reports of adverse actions for which a specific means of redress or remedy is provided by law and regulation. In such cases, we advise the requestor to attempt to resolve the matter as provided for by the specific law or regulation.

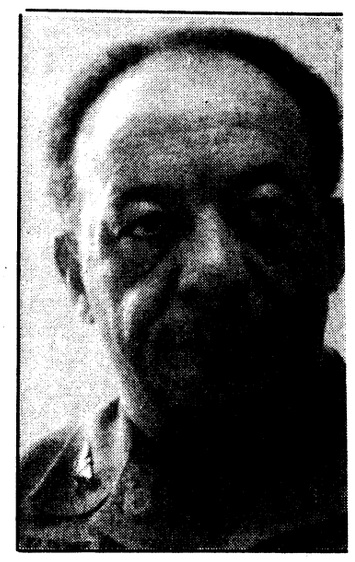
If after using the appropriate redress procedures the individual still desires IG assistance, he is advised that the action of the IG will be directed primarily toward ensuring that the individual was afforded due process, and that the individual's rights were protected as intended by law and regulation.

For military members, specific redress, remedy and appeals procedures are available for court martial actions, nonjudicial punishment (Article 15), violations of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Officer and Enlisted Evaluation Reports, reductions, reports of surveys, type discharge received, Article 138 proceedings and Equal Opportunity complaints.

For DoD or DA civilian members, the Civilian Personnel Regulations and local collective bargaining agreements have procedures for processing grievances, appels and equal employment opportunity complaints that directly affect the employment situation.

Q: Do you respond to anonymous complaints?

A: Yes, we certainly do. Anonymous and Hotline complaints are processed in the same matter as other IG action requests. In cases where the name of the complainant is known, but the individual desires to remain anonymous, the request for anonymity will be honored.



Q: Is an individual afforded protection from adverse action by his supervisor or commander when the individual files a complaint or furnishes information or evidence to an inspector general.

A: Yes, DA personnel are prohibited from restricting in any manner any individual from registering a complaint or cooperating with an IG. Morever, once an individual has submitted a complaint or cooperated with an IG, DA personnel are prohibited from initiating any type of disciplinary, adverse or other actions against that individual solely because of the complaint made to or cooperation with an IG. If an individual knowingly makes false statements to an IG, charges may be preferred against that individual.

Q: Do you apply proactive measures as part of your operation?

A: We certainly do, and we accomplish this in part by distributing a quarterly newsletter. We also provide major commanders feedback from our monthly assistance reports.

We are considerably active in terms of presenting issues to future commanders, fir sergeants and drill sergean at the different courses d signed to prepare leaders f their new jobs. Add to this t many visits we make to unit including random soldier su veys and sensing session and we are very busy wi proactive measures, to nam a few.

Col. James R.M. Bould

It is the IGs job to be working part of the install tion, and one way to stay touch is through sound proa tive measures.

Q: You were a non-commissioned officer early in you career, what advice woul you give our NCOs regardin leadership?

A: Know and practice th big four — leading, caring training and maintaining. B particualrly cognizant tha positive morale in soldier and their families adds a other dimension to read ness.

Be selfless, solve, reall solve, problems and make th effectiveness of the big fou your personal objective When this is accomplished t a high standard you woul have done more than you share to positively contribut to the finest Army in th world.

Q: From your perspective where is Fort Benning in comparison with other TRADO posts?

A: While I will decline comparing Fort Benning with other installations, I wll say without hesitation that i ranks very high from my perspective.

This is particularly relevant with respect to command climate. I can't think of a place in the Army where I would rather work at this time.

Army gets new weapon after eight years in the works hecking their sight groups for battlesight zero, Pvt. 2 arry Hurst (front) and SP4 Donald Stankovich mark their ırgets at Simpson Range.

The most visible change to the basic individual weapon is the redesign of the hand guards. However, the M16-A2 incorporates many new features that make it much better than its predecessor, the A1.

Soldiers from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment listen carefully as Sgt. Michael Thompson, Company A, offers some suggestions for adjusting the zero on the M16-A2 rifle.

3rd Ranger Battalion first to fire improved M16-A2

By Ann M. McDonald
The Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment received a late Christmas present this week — the M16-A2 rifle.

The 3rd Battalion is one of the first units in the Army to be issued the new weapon, which has been in the works since 1979. According to Maj. George Birdsong, M16-A2A project officer, Small Arms Branch, Combat Development, the weapon is a joint venture between the Army and Marine Corps, so that all infantrymen will be using the same weapons.

"Comparing the M16-Al to the new M16-A2 rifle is like comparing a Chevrolet to a Cadillac," Birdsong said.

"At first glance you probably wouldn't notice the changes, but, they are there and are very significant improvements from the old model."

One distinct improvement is in range. The M16-A2 has a maximum effective range of 800 meters, versus only 460 meters for the A1. This was accomplished by changing the twist per inches on the round inside the barrel.

The new weapon weighs 8.79 pounds and is 39 5/8 inches long. It is a little heavier than the A-l, due mainly to the extra length and the new materials used on the weapon.

Also, the Ml6 is no longer automatic; safe, semi and burst (three rounds) are the modes on the A2. The new modes were adopted primarily for ammunition conservation, Birdsong said.

Ammunition for the A2 is also different from the A1. The A2 takes a M-855 round, which is also used for the Squad Automatic Weapon. "The fact that the ammunition is so versatile and is used by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is a big plus," Birdsong said

The material used for the stock, barrel and hand guards are 10 times stronger than the A1, which should eliminate breakage problems that have occurred during Airborne operations with the A1.

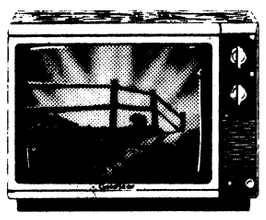
Other new features are rounded interchangeable hand guards, sculpted handgrips and a longer stock, all of which were designed to make the weapon more comfortable and stable, Birdsong said.

Upon receipt of the A2, the Rangers have been busy getting acquainted with their new "friend."

They headed for Simpson Range to zero their weapons. Classes on the new adjustment procedures for obtaining battlesight zero on the A2 were given and the Rangers, always ready, proceeded to fire the weapon for the first time.

SSgt. Charles Derrickson, a Company B soldier, said, "The battlesight zero is easier to obtain with the new weapon because the modified sight allows for more precise adjustments."

Comments about the new weapon could be heard up and down the firing line. One soldier said,"The recoil is less than the A1," "It sure doesn't get as hot as the Al," said another.



They zeroed the A2s by early afternoon and proceeded down to McAndrews Range to fire at known distance targets.

"I noticed the weight difference right off," said Capt. John Lehr, platoon leader, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment. "The weapon feels good and solid, not so much like a toy as the A1 did."

According to Lehr, the Rangers will be qualifying with the A2, and conducting live-fire and squad manuver firing operations with the new weapon. "Of course the A2 will take some getting used to but it's a good weapon."

197th vehicles ready to move in a minute

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

In today's Army, commanders are placing special emphasis on keeping military vehicles combat ready. One way that they do this is through command motor stables.

Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade conducted motor stables last week in preparation for the upcoming 197th Infantry Brigade field training exercise.

"Command motor stables is a set time in a work week where the entire company's attention is directed at the maintenance of the vehicle fleet," said 1st Lt. Creighton Larson, company executive officer.

The drivers perform maintenance checks on their vehicles. Using an operator's manual, they inspect the vehicle for any faults or damages. The vehicle's "gigs" are listed and the list is turned in to the motor pool.

Motor pool mechanics then perform a technical inspection to check the advanced functioning parts of the vehicle. Any major vehicle problems are reported to the motor sergeant. Once the vehicle has been fully inspected, the driver begins to work off the vehicle's deficiencies, leaving any major work for the motor pool mechanic.

During vehicle maintenance, parts are ordered, the vehicle body is examined for dents. Oil and other fluid levels are checked.

Section leaders receive the results of the command motor stables so they will know the shape their section's vehicles are in.

"Performing operator maintenance gives the driver a heightened awareness of the vehicle status," Larson explained.

"For the most part it is the operator's job to perform the vehicle checks."

When operators perform regular vehicle maintenance, they can be sure that their vehicle is ready to roll out on a moment's notice.

Leaders need assistants

Military Personnel Center

Are you an outstanding private first class or specialist four in military occupational specialty 71L, administrative specialist, who wants to get promoted faster? Then consider training and duty in MOS 71C, executive administrative assistant.

According to CWO4 Peter Hertli, director, of Personnel and Special Skills Training at the Adjutant General School, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., soldiers in this MOS provide senior officers with indispensable administrative support. They prepare correspondence and screen telephone calls and office visitors for their supervisors.

"These soldiers are also often completely in charge of making arrangements for important conferences," Hertli said, "and they record and transcribe the proceedings. They handle executive calendars so the officers are always in the right places at the right times with the right documents.

"Executive administrative assistants are often in charge of protocol for their commands," he continued. "These are just some of their responsibilities. They hold vital, demanding positions."

Becoming a 71C requires completetion of an intensive 12-week course at the Adjutant General School. The course stresses English grammer, typing, correspondence procedures, dictaphone transcription, protocol and office management.

Course prerequisites include typing ability of at least 35 net words per minute, a service test score of 100 and eligibility for a secret clearance. A candidate must also have a Test of Adult Basic Education-D (TABE-D) score of 11.0 (will increase to 12.0 in 1988).

The promotion opportunities to specialist four and sergeants are excellent in MOS 71C. In fiscal year 1986, all eligible specialsts four received promotion to sergeant.

"If you meet the course prerequisites and consider tough instruction and a demanding job to be welcome challenges, you should volunteer for training in this MOS," Hertli said. "See your first sergeant, personnel and administration center, or, if appropriate, your reenlistment NCO, to submit an application."

Ask the 'judge'

Editor's note: These are questions the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be considered a substitute for advice from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

Legal Assistance

Q: I recently received some legal documents indicating that I have to appear in court in my hometown far from Fort Benning on a criminal matter. The court date is this Friday. What should I do?

A: The first thing to do is to call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-2181 or 545-3282. Tell the legal clerk that you have received these documents and that you need to respond almost immediately.

Since this is an emergency, you will not have to wait for an appointment.

Many times a legal assistance attorney can contact the court in order to postpone the proceedings until you have the opportunity to appear.

In addition, the legal assistance attorney may be in a position to find out information on the case, perhaps some evidence, and the intention of the prosecutor's office.

The legal assistance office also may be able to help you acquire an attorney in your local area, if you don't already have one. If you receive documents of this type, don't delay.

Q: I don't want to get taken the next time I buy a car. I've seen an advertisement that says that I can check a car dealer's record with the Judge Advocate General's office. What kind of record do you have? Do you have a Consumer Reports type service?

A: Neither the Legal Assistance Office nor the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate maintains detailed files on car dealers in the area.

We do keep individual files concerning individual cases, but they are not available for inspection. They are produced for individual clients.

Of course, we want clients to avoid unwise decisions, and are more than willing to discuss automobile (or other) contracts, both before and after they are made. We can do more for you if you haven't signed the contract yet, obviously.

However, we do not recommend, in our capacity as legal assistance attorneys, individual makes or cars, of individual dealers of cars (or any other goods).

If a particular establishment that you wish to buy from is declared "off limits" for sales by the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board, and your legal assistance attorney were aware of that fact, he would probably inform you of that.

The Legal Assistance Office has handouts on a variety of subjects, giving general advice to consumers.

Additionally, the Better Business Bureau maintains records on consumer complaints. The Inspector General's Office will take complaints about local business establishments.

Finally, the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board at Fort Benning takes complaints on local businesses. Complaints (in writing) can be made to the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board, ATTN: Provost Marshal, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905. The board examines complaints about businesses, and can declare them to be off limits, if sufficient cause is shown.

The bottom line is that a legal assistance attorney can always review a personal contract, can assist in directing complaints, and give legal advice. A legal assistance attorney cannot tell you what car to buy, or where to buy it.

Management Association asks Army officers to join

By Jim Kvicala
Management Association corresponder

During his talk to the membership of the Fort Benning Management Association Jan. 29, Brig. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey, assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School, spoke of the School's mission and the assets with which its objectives are pursued.

According to Mary Burt, president of the association, the general prefaced his remarks by applauding the aims of the FMBA in providing an environment in which military and civilians of all grades join together in the interest of furthering good management practices at Fort Benning.

He went on to compare the Infantry School to a major university, with its staff and faculty of 500 officers, 2,500 soldiers and 500 civilians and an annual budget of some $20.6 million. "Our military students," he said, "number 71,000 each year, attending 23 USAIS and USAIS-supported Army Training Center courses each year."

McCaffrey then expounded on his personal philosophy of management, interspersed with quotations from historical figures who occasionally displayed what might be termed a lack of managerial foresight.

When Robert Fulton, inventor of the steamboat, was trying to sell his invention to Napoleon, the Emperor's reaction was, "What, sir, would you make a ship sail against the wind and currents by lighting a bonfire under her deck? . . . I have no time to listen to such nonsense."

Admiral Leahy told President Harry S Truman in 1945, "That is the biggest fool thing we have ever done . . . The (atomic) bomb will never go off, and I speak as an expert in explosives." McCaffrey added that 60 percent of new ideas fail, yet that is no reason to stifle creativity. Organizations must allow failure without blame.

The general was presented with an inscribed, miniature bayonet as a symbol of leadership exemplified by the FBMA.

His address was the kickoff for the first membership drive of the new year. Along with regular members of the Association were senior commanders from throughout the installation who had received invitations to attend as special guests as part of an effort to attract a larger representation of military members.

The military and civilian members of the FBMA are joined together and mutually pledged through the "Spirit of the Bayonet" to the furtherance and promotion of the following objectives:

To cooperate in the interchange of highly specialized techniques and knowledge for the continuance of improved management methods;

To carry out studies and report upon special subjects and problems of interest to the membership;

To foster a spirit of goodwill among its members;

To perpetuate the friendships, memories and traditions growing out of their service together while managing the world's preeminent military institution for the "Queen of Battle." This association also underwrites a scholarship program which provides tuition for four selectees annually.

If you are interested in good management practices at Fort Benning, why don't you consider joining? Dues are only $7.50 per year. Call 545-2325 for details or look for the next luncheon meeting announcement and attend as a visitor for an interesting and informative hour.

Wearing unauthorized awards can mean big trouble for soldiers

Military Personnel Center

"As soldiers, all of us can recall our first few months of military service when we wished for ribbons and badges to display on our uniforms," said CWO 4 William B. Thayer of the Military Personnel Center's Military Awards Branch.

"We've known a few soldiers who pinned awards on their uniforms when they went home on leave or first wore their uniforms in public," he continued. "Maturity or a first sergeant usually corrected this problem — the wearing of unauthorized awards."

Today the Army has a different version of the same problem. It does not involve naive or immature younger soldiers putting ribbons on their uniforms to create favorable impressions. Today's problem involves the intentional wearing of unauthorized decorations by more senior soldiers. Some of them knowingly alter official personnel records or construct documents that are passed as official documentation to support award of a badge or decoration.

Wearing unauthorized awards and decorations is a violation of federal law: Section 704, Title 18., U.S. Code, and of the Uniform Code of Military Justice. Alteration of official records and creation of counterfeit documents are also violations of civilian and military laws.

"We've been involved in cases that resulted in written reprimands, elimination, resignation, nonjudicial punishment and courts-martial," Thayer said. "All are considered appropriate for soldiers who commit such violations.

"There are other adverse results over and above the criminal aspects," he explained. "Wearing unauthorized awards dishonors soldiers whose valor and achievements resulted in badges and decorations. Alteration of official records and constructed 'official' documents deteriorate the Army's record-keeping system. All these things devalue awards and decorations and cast doubt on the ethics and integrity of the NCO and officer corps."

Awards for combat valor such as the Silver Star and Distinguished Service Cross are among the unauthorized awards and decorations most often found. The Combat Infantryman Badge, Parachutist badge and Ranger tab are also high on the list of items worn by soldiers not authorized to wear them.

"We periodically audit personnel records," Thayer said. "That consists of comparing awards worn in full-length photographs with those shown on Officer Record Briefs or Personnel Qualifications Records, and comparing both with the contents of Official Military Personnel Files."

A Ranger tab or Parachutist badge may appear in the item with awards data on the Officer Record Brief or Personnel Qualifications Record, but there will be no course completion in the military education block. The blocks with military occupational specialty, special skill identifier, additional skill identifier and specialty qualifications identifier data fail to show that the soldier holds or has ever been awarded the appropriate skill indicators.

The record of assignments block will often not show that a soldier performed duty in a jump position or with an Airborne unit. Together these may indicate a need to interview a soldier and ask for orders, diploma or evidence of course completion and award of badge or tab. If necessary, an inquiry can be sent to the Academic Records Branch at the Infantry School.

A photograph may show a soldier wearing a Combat Infantryman Badge. However, the record of assignments does not show that the soldier performed duty in an infantry MOS with an infantry unit engaged in ground combat, or that he performed as an infantry advisor to a foreign infantry unit engaged in ground combat.

In some cases, the records do not show that the soldier ever held an infantry MOS, attended infantry advanced individual training or was ever assigned or detailed to the infantry. All of these are grounds for further research for supporting documentation, including asking the soldier for the orders that awarded the badge.

"We make many cross checks and research many sources when conducting audits of awards data," Thayer said. "Evaluation reports furnish duty position, duty MOS and organizational information."

Finance records show whether a soldier was paid hostile fire pay or foreign service pay, or received a combat tax exemption. Morning reports and medical records show whether a soldier was wounded and treated for wounds. Retired record sets of permanent and general orders will verify the authenticity of questionable documents.

"If soldiers believe they are entitled to badges or decorations, but do not have orders or certificates, commanders should help them initiate actions to get those documents," Thayer explained. "They may submit letters or DA Forms 4187 through channels to MILPERCEN (DAPC-PDA).

Soldiers can send photographs of awards being presented, witness statements, completion certificates and extracts of medical records with their requests to confirm entitlement to awards.

"Soldiers with the expected degrees of maturity, honesty and integrity should never attribute awards to themselves, or put badges or decorations on their uniforms, if they have the slightest doubt about their entitlement to or the validity of those awards," he continued.

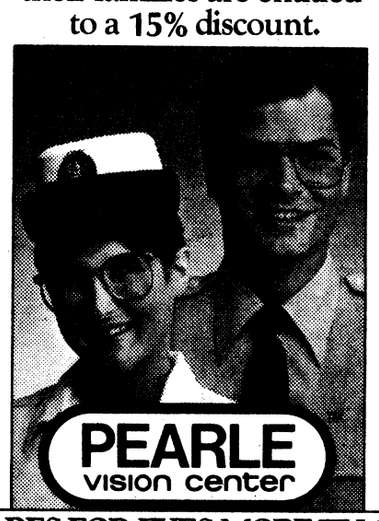
When you leave a job to accompany your spouse to a new duty location, whether in the United States or overseas, your eligibility to receive unemployment compensatuion is determined by the state in which you are filing.

States vary greatly in their eligibility rules. But if the state views your reason for leaving your last job as voluntary, your request for unemployment compensation may be denied, or you'll have to wait longer to receive it.

If you resign from a job, your leaving will almost always be considered voluntary, even if availabilities of the job had depended on your sponsor's tour.

If you're overseas on a job that must end when your sponsor's tour ends, such as a family-member appointment, it might be to your advantage to let your appointment expire, rather than resign.

If you're in the United States, ask your civilian personnel office to place a statement on your last personnel action to show that you are leaving with your sponsor. State unemployment offices may then look more favorably on your request for unemployment compensation.



So, before you leave your federal job, contact your local civilian personnel office for further advice and guidance.

Soldiers provide input to survey on smoking

Army News Service

Since the Army embarked on its "Antitobacco Use Program" last spring, how have things been going, and what's in store for the program?

If you've been reading The Bayonet lately, you've found a number of articles on the program and on the philosophy behind it. Now, some of you have a chance to join in the Army's effort toward achieving a smoke-free environment.

The chance comes in the form of a "sample survey of soldiers about tobacco use." It is being mailed to the field this month to a selected number of soldiers.

Questions include such aspects as family history of tobacco use, extent of current exposure to cigarette smoke at home, smoking habits (if any), past experience with smoking (if a former smoker), record of smoking-cessation attempts, and tobacco-purchasing practices.

Maj. James Paige in the Army personnel chief's leader policy division said that Army officials expect the survey results to reflect a comprehensive picture of how the program is working.

"One thing we already know for sure is that since the program began, sales of cigarettes at some commissaries have decreased by 8 percent," Paige said. Officials view that decrease as a positive move toward realizing the Defense Department goal of reducing the active-duty military smoking rates by at least 10 percent per year.

"If we learn that a similar sales decrease has occurred at other outlets, we'll be safe in concluding that our efforts over the past several months have been paying off," Paige added.

"Right now, more than one-half of the Army smokes, while the figure for the civilian population is one-third." He emphasized that the Army's "controlling smoking policy" is just one of numerous actions from the program offering support to those who want to give up the habit.

Recently, the policy was echoed, and reinforced by, the U.S. General Services Administration's officials reponsible for management of federal buildings. The GSA revised policy on smoking in GSA-managed office buildings and facilities goes into effect this February. It requires that smoking be kept to a minimum where non-smokers are present.

Wait — 'Don't hang up,' AUTOVON being replaced

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

Depending on who you talk to, it's either very, very good or it's very, very bad. AUTOVON — Automatic Voice Network — DoD's private, long distance telephone network, can throw the meekest individual into a rage.

But AUTOVON itself is not to blame, said Nicholas Brienza, of the Defense Communictions Agency. "AUTOVON is a good system," he pointed out. "But the key to successful AUTOVON use is getting access."

Each installation has to pay precious operating and maintenance funds to buy AUTOVON access lines. If your installation hasn't purchased a large number of lines, your chances of getting AUTOVON access could be as low as 20 percent.

That is all about to change. AUTOVON is currently being replaced by the Defense Switched Network, and the probability of gaining access off the installation will be as high as 90 percent. That's because the Department of Defense, through the Defense Communications Agency, will assume responsibility for the access lines.

"The Defense Commercial Telecommunications Network portion of the Defense Switched Network in the continental United States has already increased the quality of service dramatically while ensuring the installations don't pay more than they currently do for AUTOVON," said Brienza.

DoD and the services require specialized communications networks like AUTOVON and the Defense Switched Network because defense business can't stop when telephone lines are jammed. For example, Mother's Day is one of the busiest days of the year for the phone companies. If the national command authorities, a commander in chief or the military departments needed to make an urgent phone call to their subordinate units, the chances of accessing a line immediately on the public network could be very slow.

Brienza said the Defense Switched Network operates with extremely high technology. "Digital switching and transmission will make it perform better and be more reliable," he said. "Even the clicking and long waits associated with AUTOVON will disappear."

The equipment for the Defense Switched Network is readily available in the United States, said Brienza, and can easily be acquired in many areas around the world. This new system is already partially operational in the continental United States, Europe and the Pacific. Full capability is expected worldwide by the early 1990s.

The new service is being phased in gradually, and those installations currently getting service in the continental United States from the Defense Commercial Telecommunications Network will be among the first to receive the new services. "The AUTOVON equipment will be phased out overseas before it is completely gone in the United States," said Brienza.

But the Defense Switched Network is not just a replacement for AUTOVON. It is part of the Defense Communications Agency's overall plant to put together a modern, state-of-the-art information transfer network that circles the globe. The network will also be the backbone of a new generation of secure voice communications to replace the current Automatic Secure Voice Communications Network.

In addition, the Defense Switched Network will come equipped with all the modern features now becoming standard on home telephones. Those include call-waiting, call-forwarding and conferencing.

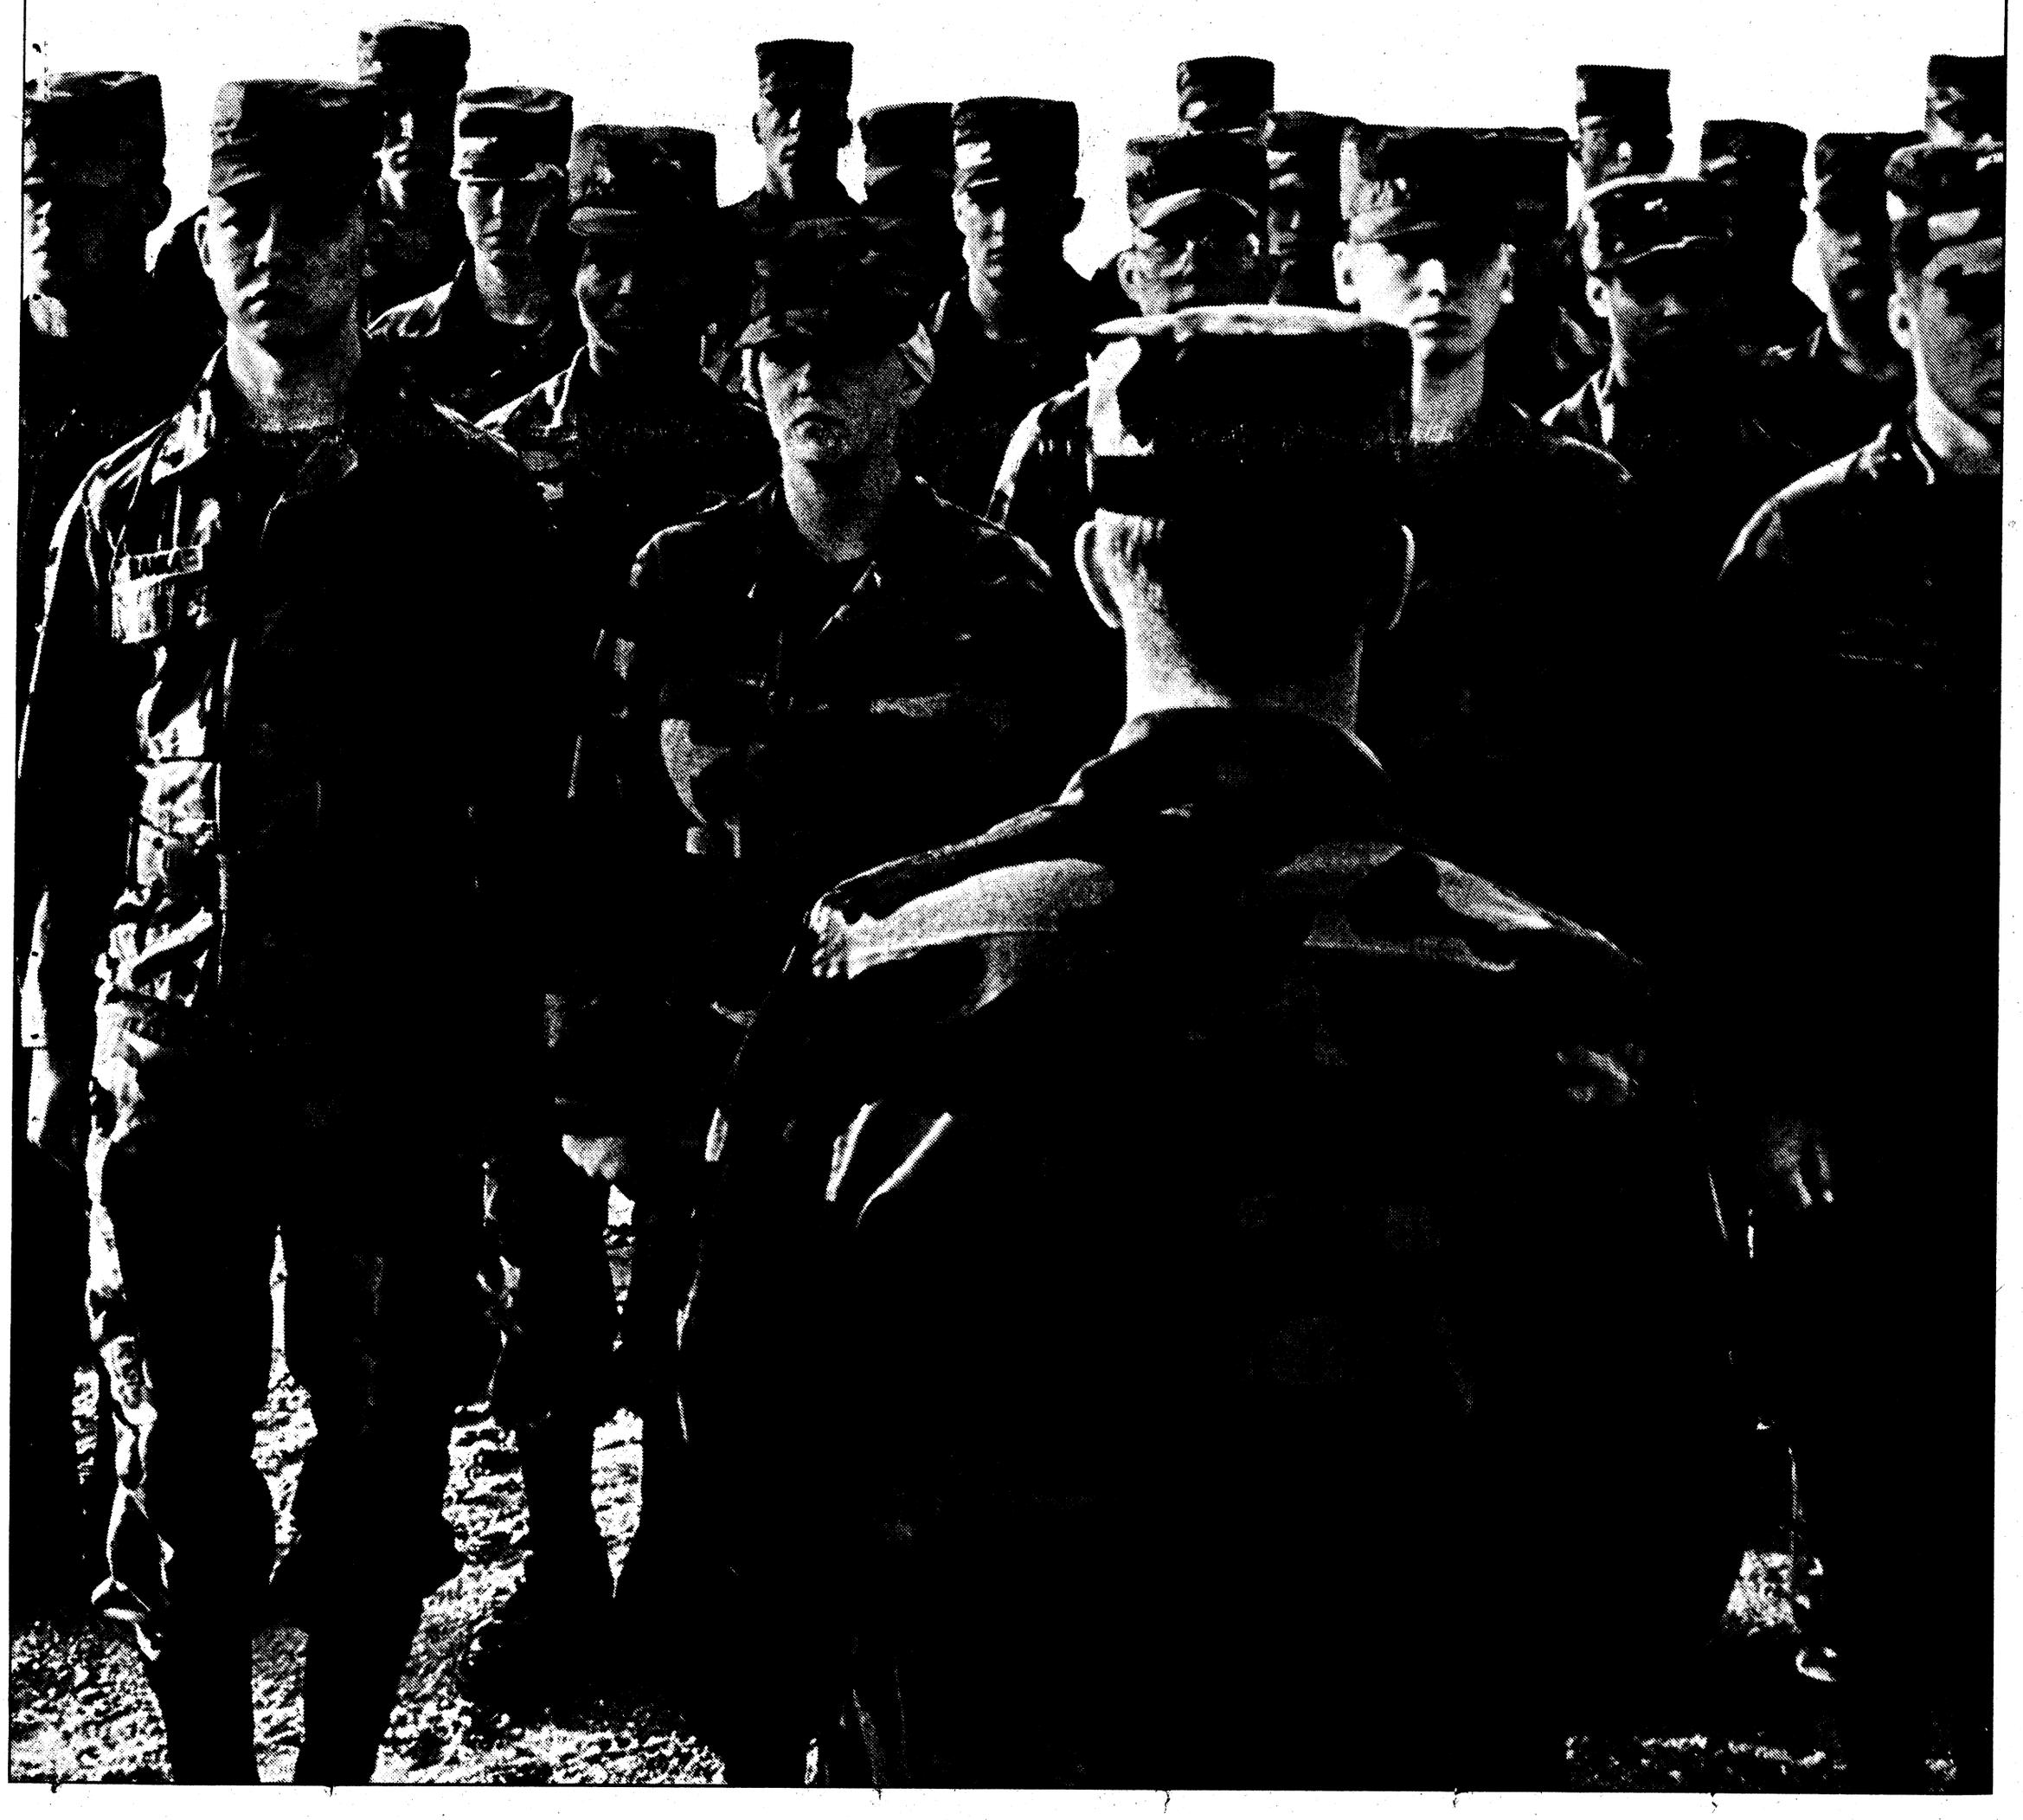
Keeping good soldiers in the Army is part of every leader's job. Whether you're an NCO or an officer, your leadership can have a powerful influence on your soldiers, especially in their decision to reenlist.



Nobody knows better than you that when soldiers are treated fairly, with respect, and with a true concern for their goals and accomplishments, they're more likely to find their Army experience a positive one. And more likely to want to continue that experience.

As you know, it takes a lot to develop a good soldier. Time, patience, and effort. But the end result is worth it. Not just for a proud soldier, or the Army, but as a credit to your ability as a leader.

Next time you stand in front of your troops, remember that they're not just in the Army, they are the Army. And they're yours to keep.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

THEY'RE YOURS TO KEEP.

Help is only a phone call away for the child abuser

By Laurie J. Hill
The Bayonet staff writer

Child abuser. It's not a nice title to have. It can only bring shame to an entire family. Unfortunately, child abuse is a fact of life. It is also a reality at Fort Benning.

Statistics recently compiled by the Fort Benning Social Work Services show that the frequency of child abuse has increased. There were 115 more cases reported in fiscal year 1986 than in 1985.

According to Jesse J. Reese, chief of the Family Advocacy Section at Social Work Services, "We had 34 reported physical abuses of children, 27 sexual, 37 neglect, 13 abuse, neglect, six emotional maltreatment and three deaths. Of these, 15 were unsubstantial reports."

According to the latest statistics compiled at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, most soldiers who abuse their children are in the ranks between private first class and sergeant first class. "The greatest preponderance being E-5 through E-6s." Although it does occur throughout the rank structure, Reese cautioned.

Reese said that many times there is a problem with people who are not used to being parents and are not familiar with disciplinary techniques.

"The bottom line is the parents exasperation with failed disciplinary techniques so they resort to physical punishment," Reese said.

Reese says that 55 percent of child abusers are male and the primary reason is stress.

"Either there is marital discord in the family or a situation where the family members are isolated and can only interact with each other," Reese said.

"The general statistics say that 65 to 75 percent of child abusers were also physically abused as children themselves," Reese added.

However, not all abused children grow up to be abusive parents. Some are plagued with other problems throughout life. "Child abuse victims have learned from their home environment that the way to solve the problem is to fight it out. Juvenile delinquent behavior, running away from home, sexual acting out, mental health problems and substance abuse are common problems with the abused child as he grows up," Reese said.

According to Reese, many abused children become typical adults."Many have made a decision at some point in their life that they will not raise their children the same way they were raised," Reese said.

But those who are not typical and who do abuse their children can get help. In most cases one phone call can be enough to get the recovery process started.

"Initially Child Protective Services (a state agency that falls under the Department of Family and Children Services) does an assesment and will assign a Child Protection Case Management Team. This team will decide upon the treatment and make aware the resources," Reese said.

Treatment consists of home monitoring, counselling and parenting education.
"We (SWS) do parent, child psychological evaluation and offer parents alternative means of disciplining children," Reese said.

For the victim of abuse there is counselling at SWS and the Family Life Center or a wide variety of social service centers in Columbus.

"We recommend that the whole family get involved with the primary focus on the parents. By changing the parents' behavior, you change the childs' behavior," Reese said.

Simulated chemical accident tests emergency preparedness

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Fire Department recently received some realistic training and starred in a movie, all in one day.

Capt. Eddie Willis, of the Fort Benning Fire Department, led more than a dozen firefighters in a hazardous material incident operation involving rescue, control, containment and cleanup of multiple simulated chemical hazards. The "emergencies" involved spillage, leakage and fire. Willis and his firefighters had to evaluate and reevaluate the situation, coordinate with other post agencies for support and then take care of the "hazards," all while being filmed by the Infantry School's Educational Television crew.

While training the firemen on how to handle chemical emergencies, the exercise also provided the backdrop for a training film.

The simulated scenario involved the derailment of five railroad cars, each carrying a hazardous chemical. One car was leaking sulphuric acid, another was leaking chlorine gas, a third car was leaking anhydrous ammonia, and the fourth and fifth cars were burning, one hexane, a flammable liquid, and the other a nitric fuming acid.

Immediate action called for the firemen to evacuate two casualties who had been overcome by the chlorine gas. Once the casualties were evacuated, treated and then moved by helicopter to Martin Army Community Hospital, the firefighters sealed the leaking chlorine gas tank and moved to the next car.

Still wearing the chemical protective suits and breathing apparatus they wore for the chlorine gas, the crew sealed the tank leaking sulphuric acid. This was done with an emergency patch kit developed for such situations.

The car leaking anhydrous ammonia was taken care of by the firefighters by shutting off the leaking valve in the top of the rail car.

The final emergency in the scenario required the firefighters to set up a large, high-pressure hose on a free-standing platform. Water was then pumped onto the burning tank to cool it off and to put out the fire.

According to Willis: "When a container of flammable material catches on fire, a firefighter's primary responsibility is to cool off the burning tank. This is so that the internal pressure in the tank brought about by the heat doesn't reach a temperature where the tank bursts, causing the rest of the flammable liquid to spread, burn and cause a larger fire."

The fire captain added that a situation like this is called a BLEVE, which is a boiling liquid expanding vapor explosion.

"Everything went well. Our people were trained and took the necessary actions to control the situation. I think we looked pretty good on film," said Willis.

One of Willis' primary duties during the exercise was coordinating with other post agencies for support.

"This is a very important part of any emergency situation and all agencies we called on for support reacted well," Willis said.

Based on the situation, Willis called on the Post Safety Office, Martin Army Community Hospital's Emergency Medical Services, a medical evacuation helicopter from the 498th Air Ambulance, the Public Affairs Office and the Military Police.

Throughout all of this action, ETV was constantly filming, with very few breaks or stops. The firefighters did what they had to do and ETV filmed them doing it.This film will be used for training and for other Training and Doctrine Command installations in their training.

"Under the direction of Fort Benning's fire chief, Chief Charles B. Carr, the department has acquired the proper equipment and realistic training to handle hazardous material incidents," Willis said.

Black officers vital to defense since our country's beginning

By S.W. Winbush
43rd Engr. Bn. correspondent

Editor's Note: These are officers, who, because of their courage and dedication to duty, have made a unique contribution not only to black Americans but to all Americans. These are some of the men and women that have rightfully been singled out and honored as pioneers who made the way for all black officers who followed.

The year is 1873. Into the bastion of American military history and tradition came a young black man from Georgia. This was an extraordinary man. He and the rest of America was soon to discover how extraordinary. The young man's name was Henry O. Flipper. He was about to make American History. Of the twenty black candidates admitted to the United States Military Academy in the 19th century, only three would graduate. Henry O. Flipper was to be the first.

Flipper was not the first black to attend, however. That honor belongs to James W. Smith of South Carolina, who entered the academy in 1870 but did not graduate. Henry O. Flipper was not only America's first black graduate of the United States Military Academy, but America's first black graduate in the field of engineering.

Another black officer of considerable note was Col. Charles Young, the highet ranking black officer during World War I. As a young lieutenant, Young was proficient in six languages. He was also a musician and composer who mastered the piano and violin, wrote poetry and authored two books.

The brilliant leadership displayed by Major Young while commanding a squadron of the U.S. 9th Calvary under Gen. John J. (Blackjack) Pershing (so named because he considered it an honor to lead black troops) during the border warfare in Mexico against Pancho Villa, led to his promotion to lieutenant colonel in 1916. One of his daring exploits involved the rescue of a detachment of white soldiers from the jaws of death at the hands of Villa's men near Parral, Mexico.

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Oliver Davis, was destined to become the first black American general. After a distinguished military career spanning fifty years, beginning with the Spanish American War and ending in 1948, Davis retired from the United States Army.

Davis first retired in 1941, but was recalled to active duty to supervise integration of U.S. Armed Forces in the European Military Theatre. From 1945 to 1947, Davis served as assistant to the Inspector General of the United States Army. Following this, he was appointed special assistant to the Secretary of the Army, a post which he held until his retirement in 1948.

Lt. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr. became America's first black Air Force general. After his retirement from the military, Davis was appointed to several major civilian assignments. In 1970 he headed up the first Sky Marshal Task Force after a series of sky-jackings threatened the security of the United States airline industry. Several months later, he was appointed assistant secretary of the U.S. Department of Transportation in charge of civil aviation security.

In 1971, President Richard Nixon appointed Davis to the post of assistant secretary of Transportation for Safety and Consumer Affairs.

Vice Admiral Samuel Lee Gravely, Jr. is best known as the first black American admiral. Gravely's list of accomplishments include the following: He was the first black graduate from a midshipmen school, the first black officer to be assigned shipboard duty and the first black American to command a U.S. Navy ship. He went on to become the first black American to command an American warship under combat conditions since the Civil War (USS Taussig); the first black to command a Major Naval warship (USS Souitt); and the first to command a U.S. Navy Fleet.

Gen. Daniel James Jr., a legendary command pilot, was the recipient of numerous civilian and military awards. He was known internationally as an eloquent advocate of the American way of life. Excerpts from some of his speeches have been read into the Congressional Record. As a command pilot, James was one of the most decorated war heroes in the history of the Armed Forces of the United States. His personal motto was, "Build a nation, don't tear it down."

Brig. Gen. Hazel W. Johnson, had the distinction of becoming the first black woman to achieve the rank of general in the history of the United States of America. Johnson was commissioned by direct appointment in May 1960.

Education, hard work key to success

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

Col. Frederick Peters says there's no magic formula for being successful. "You don't have to be superhuman; you don't have to be super intelligent. You can succeed by planning and working hard."

Peters should know. Growing up as one of 12 children in a tiny Louisiana town (Angie, La.; population 250), young "Fred" learned the meaning of hard work early. He worked on the family farm, helping cultivate the cotton and vegetables that were the main cash crops.

His father died when he was a junior in high school and it was left to his mother to finish raising and educating the Peters' children. It was a duty she didn't shrink from, and education became a family project. "If you were a Peters, you went to school," he said.

Indeed, when Peters attended Southern University, everybody helped. "I had some scholarships and I worked, and Mother and my older brothers helped pay the bills," he said. It was a favor he later returned, helping his younger brothers and sisters financially after he graduated and went to work.

Peters said he was active in the New Farmers of America (now called Future Farmers of America) while in high school, and he successfully ran for the national presidency of the organization during his senior year. "I enjoyed working with the organization," he said.

"I think it proves that it doesn't matter what size town you come from, you can still compete in the large arena. You just have to set your mind to it and work for it," he said.

Col. Frederick Peters — Becky Obert

He entered the Army in 1964 through the Reserve Officer Training Corps. He said in the early years he wasn't sure about a career, but once he married wife Linda, the couple found they enjoyed the Army life, so he stayed in.

"I was lucky to get good assignments early on in command slots," he said. Peters served as a platoon leader, training officer and company commander with the 1st Cavalry Division in Vietnam, and later as a battalion commander with 1st Battalion, 27th Infantry in Hawaii before being assigned to command The School Brigade at Fort Benning, his present position.

In between, he also served at West Point as a tactical officer, an assignment he and his wife enjoyed. "We had a good time working with the cadets there," he said.

Peters started working on his master's degree while at West Point, and the Army gave him six months off to complete his master's degree in business administration from Farleigh Dickinson University in Teaneck, N.J.

Peters said his current assignment gives him lots of contact with young officers, who ask him what he has done to get where he is in his career.

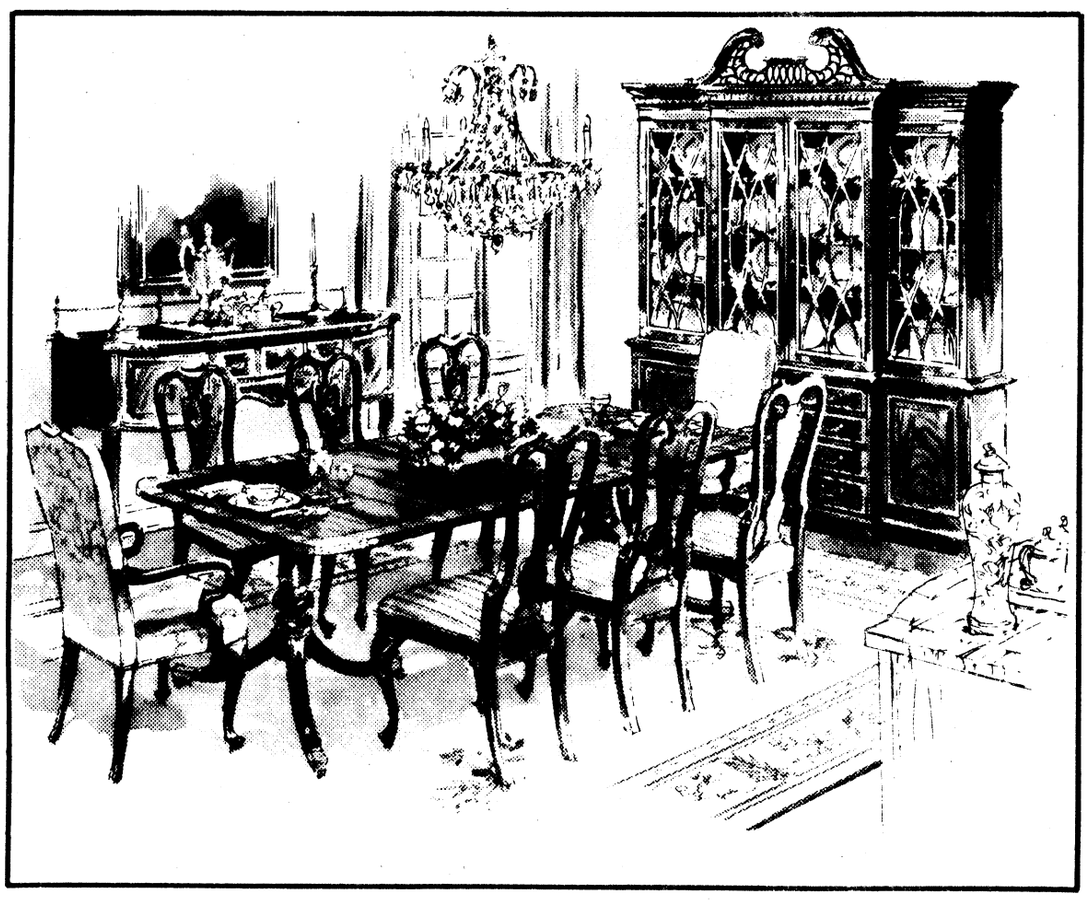
"What they're really asking is 'how can I get there,' and that's a hard question," he said. "There is no one thing you do, it's the daily performance of your job that adds up to success. You've got to be committed to something."

As young leaders, he said lieutenants and captains need to realize that once they go to units they'll be role models to the soldiers under them. "Privates and specialists his same age will be envious of the lieutenant, and he has a responsibility to conduct himself in a positive way they can identify with."

Captains set the example for lieutenants, and lieutenant colones and colonels set the example for officers below them, Peters said. "As officers we have to remember that our job performance, conduct and lifestyle has to set the standards for lower ranking officers or the best of them won't stick around," he said.

"We play a very important role in our "industry," and unlike other businesses, we have to "grow" our top managers, we can't hire from the outside. It's very important that we do the job right so that five, 10 or 15 years down the road they'll be leading as they should be," he said.

Being a black American makes him a minority in the officer corps, but Peters said he did not think he'd ever missed out on an opportunity because of race.



"I think it's important for kids to grow up in a society where they are exposed to all races and creeds because they're going to have to work with all kinds of people when they grow up," he said. "If you don't have that exposure, it makes it a difficult adjustment."

Defense of constitution soldiers' most sacred duty

Editor's note: the following is exerpted from the speech given by Maj. Gen. Norris L. Einertson Tuesday morning at the National Prayer Breakfast.

"Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called sons of God."

You may not see yourself in that light, but that is precisely what you are — what you are called to be by the very founding documents of our nation.

Sept. 17 marks the 200th anniversary of the U.S.Constitution. According to the preamble, one of the purposes of the Constitution is to provide for the common defense of our nation.

By doing so, the Constitution says in effect that domestic tranquility is ensured and the blessings of liberty are secured to ourselves and our posterity. The provision for our common defense is what brought us together this morning.

We talk a great deal about readiness, as we must. Readiness for what? To go to war, if need be. The fact that we are not at war any place in the world this morning is an indication that we are perceived by potential aggressors as prepared to meet envisioned contingencies. That is, we have the capability to fight and win, and the resolve to do so if need be. Because we are not at war, we have been successful, for we are first and foremost peacemakers.

There is no question in my mind but that we are keeping the peace in a troubled world. Because we are doing so, we are preserving for ourselves and our posterity such other deeply held values as justice and freedom, which are also addressed in our Constitution. In fact, our nation is so powerful that in the process of providing for our common defense, we contribute to the defense of liberty for our allies throughout the world. That's kind of exciting to me.

Unfortunately, not all of our citizens see us in that light. A few who do not see the discipline with which we approach our task see the soldier only as one who goes to other countries, kills people and breaks things. This, of course, is not new. In 1971, one of my predecessors, then chief of chaplains Maj. Gen. Frank Sampson, said, "In civilian life many people misunderstand the military mission. I have spoken at various universities and have been challenged by this misunderstanding. I have been asked how I can wear the uniform which symbolizes war and also wear the cross upon it symbolizing peace. One would think they should find the answer to the very questions they proposed — for such questioners are of lofty academic standards, positions and responsibilities.

"It is very easy for me to tell them that, by law and by statute, the mission of the military of the U.S. is, first to preserve peace. Second, to provide for the security of our country, its borders and internal security. And third, to implement national policy as it pertains to peace treaties with friendly nations which of themselves cannot repel the aggression of avaricious neighbors."

I see nothing is his mission that does not appeal to the highest ideals of any man — regardless of his religion."

I am pleased that I live in a nation where the rights of pacifists are protected. I have counseled literally hundreds of them during my quarter century as an Army chaplain. I am pleased that I serve in an Army which makes provision for the rights of sincere conscientious objectors. Nevertheless, I cannot hold to that position myself. While "turning the other cheek" may be good personal ethics, that approach does not seem to work in our relationships with other nations. I do not believe that we as a nation are acting either responsibly, or out of love, if we allow international tyrants to trample on the rights and dignity of the helpless, if by our intervention as soldiers we can preserve those values espoused in our Constitution.

Army Gen. Roland M. Geszer once said, "People seem to forget that the soldier, not the journalist, has preserved the freedom of the press; the soldier, not the poet, has preserved freedom of speech; the soldier, not the campus organizer, has preserved the freedom to demonstrate."

Thomas Paine said, "Those who expect to reap the blessings of freedom must undergo the fatigue of supporting it." The sacrificial actions of those who have gone before us give concrete meaning to the words of Jesus when he said, "Greater love has no one than this; that he lay down his life for his friends."

Indeed, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called sons of God."

What does liberty as expressed in our Constitution, have to do with our common faith? Our Constitution establishes a democracy. This type of government seems to permit the greatest possibility of freedom. It reflects the dignity conferred upon every person by God, who created us in his image and knows us all by name.

The preservation of those values and freedoms which underlie our Constitution against attempts by totalitarian forces to overthrow them is what keeps so many of us in these green or camouflaged suits. To have a part in preserving those values for others by force of arms if need be; to be prepared to lay down our lies to preserve them as we are committed by our oaths to do, is evidence of supreme dedication to the highest values expressed in our Constitution.

In a rank conscious environment such as the military, with its parking spaces for us generals and colonels, our faith in God and our universal need for prayer serves as a common denominator. Gen. Douglas MacArthur said, "The soldier above all other people, prays for peace, for he must suffer and bear the deepest wounds and scars of war."

Communicate love every day of year

By Christopher H. Wisdom
197th Support Battalion chaplain

Ah, Saint Valentine's Day! It's a day filled with cards and flowers, candy and perfume and perhaps even an engagement ring! Valentine's Day has always been a day for lovers.

Do you remember when you first told that special someone, "I love you?" Do you recall how you felt inside when you first heard those words? Perhaps you still smile when you think back to that first date, or daydream about that first kiss.

Many of us have such fond memories. Yet sadly, for too many of us, they are only memories. Those warm and tender feelings are no longer part of our lives because communication has been broken off and relationships have broken up. Barbra Streisand expressed it well in the title song from the movie, The Way We Were:

"Memories of the dreams we left behind, All the sentimental memories of the way we were."

The sad truth is that even some married couples don't know how to communicate with each other. They have forgotten or never learned how to say, "I love you." Oh, they may have uttered that phrase to each other from time to time. But often those "three little words" are soon drowned out by shouts of unbridled rage. Warm and tender feelings are frozen to death by cold, angry silence. For many couples this holiday is a hollow day.

But Valentine's Day raises the question, "How do I tell you that I love you?"Christian tradition helps us to understand why we try to communicate love to one another by sending cards and other gifts of affection on this day.

According to one story, the Roman emperor Claudius forbade soldiers to marry. The emperor thought single men made better soldiers. (There are still some today who think he was right.) A priest named Valentine disobeyed the emperor's orders and secretly married young couples. So Valentine's Day may be seen as an affirmation of holy matrimony in a time when it is unpopular.

Today we try to say "I love you" with fancy cards and lavish gifts. But children say it so easily with their cut-out red paper hearts and white lace doilies. Why do we find it so hard? How do I tell you that I love you?

This question is answered so well by the words of St. Paul.

Paul's point in the fourth chapter of his letter to the Ephesians is that true love communicates! True love communicates in a way that helps solve the problems that arise between those who love each other.

Paul declares in Ephesians 4:25-26, "Therefore, each one of you must speak truth to his neighbor, for we are members of one another. In your anger, do not sin; do not let the sun go down on your anger." (New International Version)

Paul says in effect that there are two ways to lie to your spouse. One way is by stating falsehood; the other is by withholding truth. He says you must lay aside falsehood and speak the truth. This means that clamming up when you disagree is wrong.

A counselor friend of mine told me a true story about a couple who walked into his office one day. The wife threw a notebook the size of a city telephone directory on the counselor's desk. "This is what is breaking up this marriage," she said.

In that notebook was 12 year's worth of notes about each thing her husband had done wrong. That lady had let the sun go down on her anger for 12 years. And like a festering boil, her resentment had finally burst.

Paul says in effect, "Don't clam up!" You must care enough to confront your partner about the conflict that is clogging up your communication.

In a recent episode of "The Bill Cosby Show," Cosby's daughter Vanessa breaks up with her boyfriend, Robert. Robert is confident that they will get back together because they have compatible horoscopes. "The good vibrations will bring us back together," Robert says. Cosby responds, "If you want Vanessa back, you better stop vibrating and start talking!"

In the same way, this year's "Valentine vibrations" will not rekindle the love in your relationship. Those warm fuzzy feelings brought on by the holiday will eventually fizzle out like a bottle of uncorked champagne. Every romantic evening full of love's passion is followed by a real morning full of life's problems. Like Vanessa's boyfriend, we have to "stop vibrating and start communicating."

Candor does not rule out kindness. The disagreement may be about money, sex, or who gets the car today. The problem may be his mother, her father or their kids. At such times some couples attempt to "score points" off one another when they fear they might lose the argument. They attack their partner, not their problem, with their words.

He may shout, "You're just like your mother!" She may spit back, "what should I expect from a man who has to join the Army just to hold a job?"

What does any of this have to do with the problem? Words like these are just cheap shots. Scripture says, "Don't let any unwholesome talk come out of your mouths, but only what is helpful for building up others according to their needs, that it may benefit those who listen (Ephesians 4:29) Don't stick it to your spouse, stay on the subject until you pinpoint the problem. Stick to the issues.

St. Paul counsels us to "get rid of all bitterness, rage and anger, brawling and slander, along with every form of malice."

This Valentine's Day, love can be more than just a memory. It can be a present power that opens up channels of communication once more. "How do I tell you that I love you?" No one ever said "I love you" more eloquently than God has said it to humanity in Jesus Christ.

Love does not have to be destroyed by desertion, divorce or by just drifting apart. We can confront the problems, stick with the issues and control our emotions, with the help God promises in his son.

You can get spiritual help for your marriage and family through your unit chaplain, or by calling the Family Life Center at 545-1760.

Chief of chaplains speaks at prayer breakfast

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

"Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called sons of God."

That is the message Army Chief of Chaplains Maj. Gen. Norris L. Einertson brought to Fort Benning Tuesday.

Einertson was the guest speaker at the National Prayer Breakfast in the NCO Club, which 500 people attended.

Einertson said that the greatest challenge facing Army chaplains today is providing quality ministry with limited resources.

He said that in doing so, chaplains must keep in mind what their goals are. "If the Army is going to take the chaplaincy seriously, then the chaplaincy must take the Army seriously," he said.

Einertson said the chaplaincy is doing just that with its forward thrust doctrine.

"What that means is assigning unit ministry teams in the most forward, exposed areas of the battlefield," he said. "And involved in that is training our chaplains and chaplain's assistants in dealing with battlefield stress and battle fatigue."

Only by constant planning and practice can chaplains fulfill this vital role. "Someone once said an Army does well in war only those things that have become second nature. That's what I want our chaplains to think of the battlefield ministry," he said.

Since he became chief of chaplains, Einertson has approved one new chaplain for Fort Benning, a Catholic priest for the U.S. Army School of the Americas. He has also supported Benning's proposal to build a new 600-seat chapel at the Army Training Center, and approved a Clinical Pastoral Education Training program on post, which will begin this summer with a supervisor and five students.

Einertson said one of his goals since becoming chief of chaplains in July 1986, has been working to recruit the highest quality clergymen available, to improve the quality of the ministry.

"Once we've got them, we need to assign them where their unique qualities can best meet the needs of soldiers and family members," he said. "We want to assign the best preachers to the most visible pulpits, those with superior counseling skills to a unit where they can be counselors, etc."

Educating and training also rate high with Einertson. "We want to use these quality people to train up those with weaker skills, so that the entire program becomes stronger," he said.

Einertson stressed that soldiers have to constantly keep in mind what their purpose is.

"We soldiers have to think hard about our profession and our mission of preserving peace and defending justice in the world. Although civilians often misunderstand our role, we must never do so.

"I think we have to ask ourselves are we acting responsibly out of a motivation of love," he said.

Einertson said he thinks Fort Benning is one of the Army's most important installations, with a great variety of training going on.

"My impression is we've got a great bunch of soldiers here. The commanders seem pleased with the chaplaincy support and regard them as a vital part in the total development of soldiers," he said.

Shop keeps Army flying

by Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet Staff Writer

From the road it looks like another one of the airplane hangars sitting alongside Lawson Army Airfield.

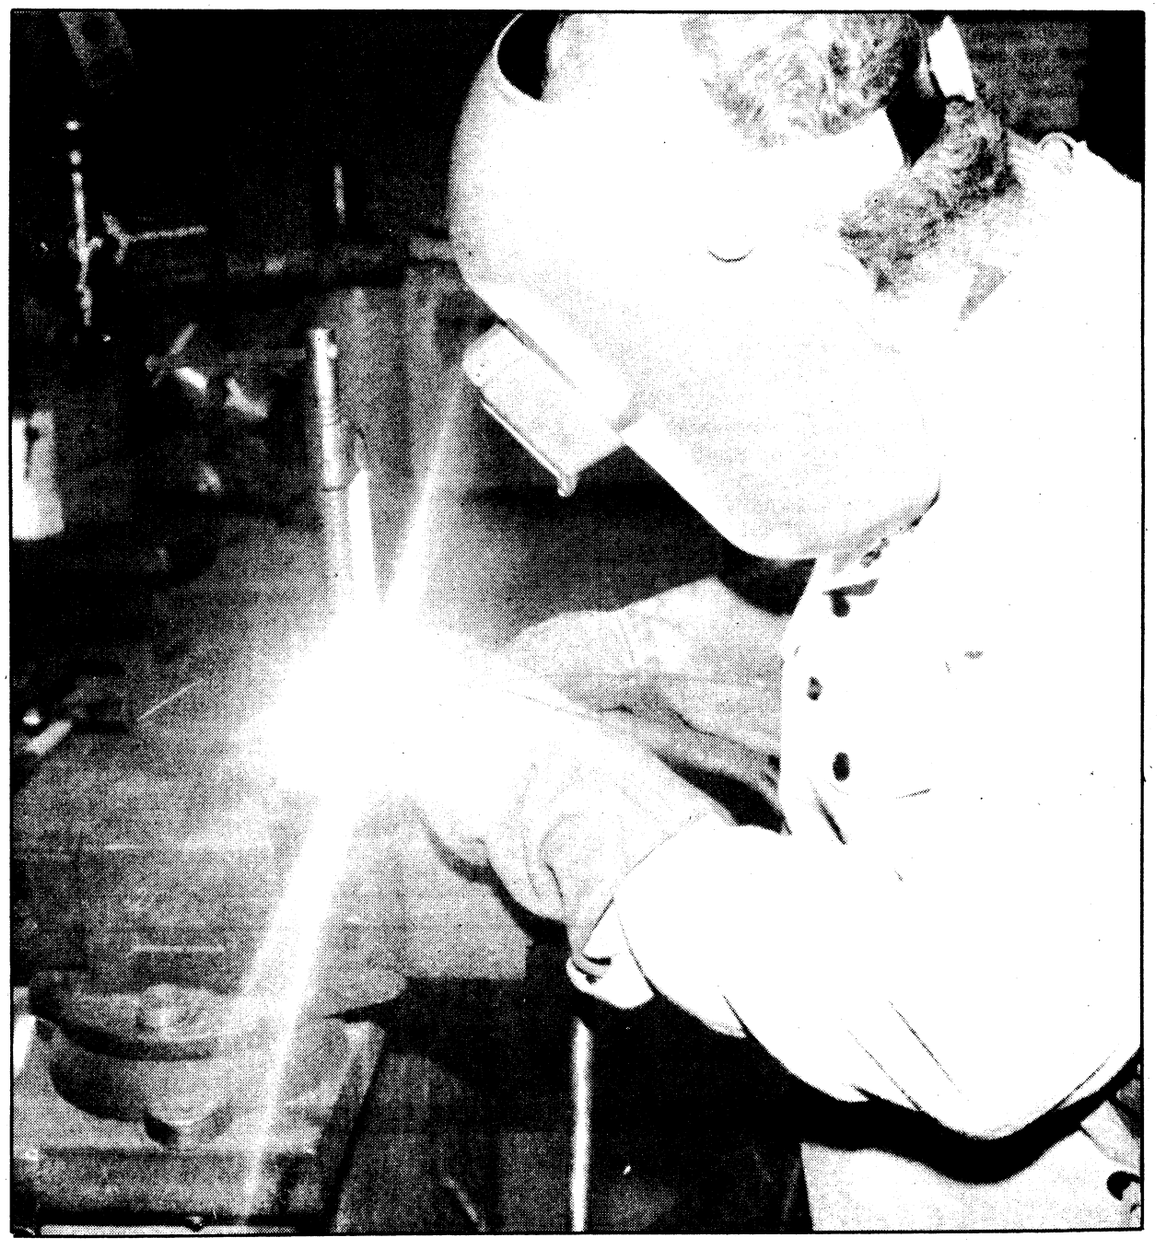
The buzz is coming from Maintenance Division Shop 4 Branch (Aircraft) and the many shops within it s walls.

"The mission of this shop is to provide support for all the active and reserve Army aviation units within the Fort Benning area," said Ferrell T. Cook, aircraft engine mechanic foreman for Shop 4.

The shop is responsible for repair of fixed wing and rotary aircraft.

What is unique about Shop 4 is the scope of their work.

"We support approximately 160 aircraft in a five-state area," Cook said. "We fix aircraft from Fort Jackson, Fort Gordon, Fort Stewart, Dobbins Air Force Base and Fort Rucker. We also support a reserve unit in Vicksburg, Miss., and Orlando, Fla.," Cook added.



Moreover, Shop 4 repairs crashed and damaged aircraft. "In 1986 we recovered 11 downed aircraft and one crashed and damaged aircraft," Cook said.

When the aircraft can't come to Shop 4, the mechanics pack up their tools and spare parts and fly to the aircraft needing repair.

"In addition, we have one full-time test pilot who makes sure the aircraft is working properly," Cook said.

School screenings identify problems

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

In preparation for National Children's Dental Health Month in February, DENTAC personnel have conducted dental clinics in each of the Fort Benning schools. "Our clinics reinforce the importance of good dental health," Karen Wetherell, Community Health dental hygienist said.

Screenings conducted by DENTAC dentists point out problems that require immediate attention. Wetherell emphasized that the screenings serve a vital function because they alert parents to problems, but that these screenings do not take the place of regular dental checkups.

In addition to the screenings, students learn proper brushing techniques as well as information on nutrition. Smokeless tobacco products were discussed in clinics this year with students in fourth through eighth grades.

Armed with a toothbrush, tooth paste, a dental screening report for parents, and information in dental health, students left the clinics ready to observe the month

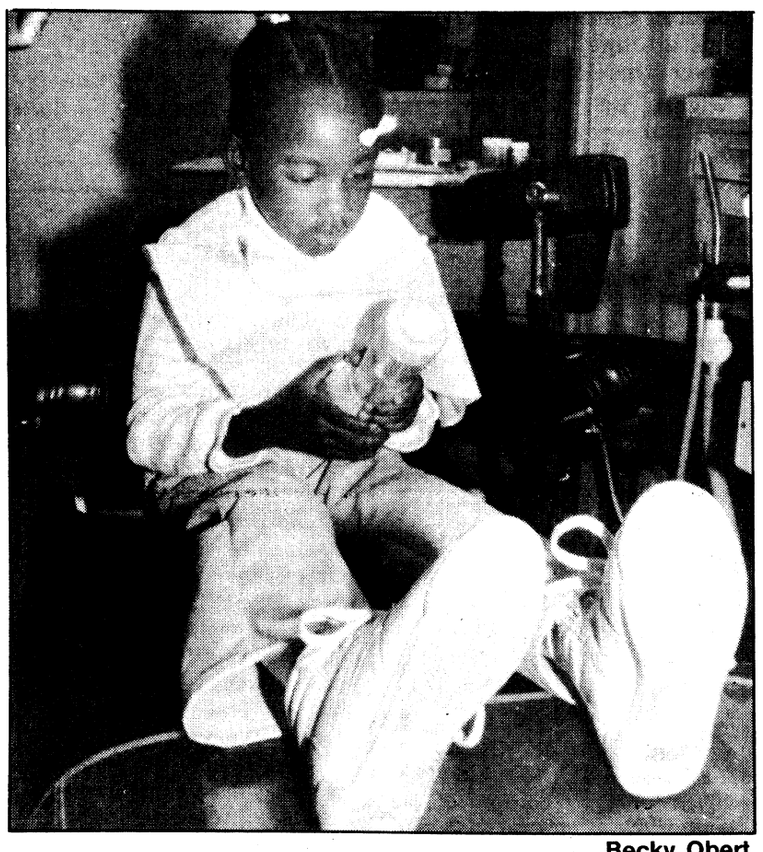
Teaching kids dental hygiene helps ensure healthy teeth

Bleeding, irritated gums signs of peridontal disease

Troop News Service

FORT MONROE, VA. (TNS) — Periodontal or gum disease is as old as mankind. Signs of it have been found in prehistoric skulls and in Egyptian mummies. Among the Romans, it was so common that it was used as a method of draft dodging.

When young men were being examined to see if they were healthy enough to serve in the Roman Legions, they would suck on their irritated gums, making their mouths bloody. By doing this, they sometimes fooled the examining doctors into thinking they had tuberculosis.



Unfortunately, periodontal disease is not just ancient history; it's still a problem today. If you are over 18 and in a room with another person of that age or older, the chances are that at least one of you has a mild form of this disease.

Periodontal disease is caused by plaque, a thin film of bacteria that forms on everyone's teeth. If plaque is not removed daily, it produces waste products that irritate the gums. The gums begin to swell, bleed easily, and pull away from the teeth.

Mineralized plaque, also called calculus or tartar, builds up around the teeth, making them harder to clean. If the disease is not treated, the teeth eventually lose their bony support and fall out or have to be removed.

To prevent this, the teeth should be brushed and flossed thoroughly at least once a day.

All the Romans had to use against periodontal disease were folk remendies — honey, opium, and oil of roses. These days we have better weapons — dental floss. If we brush and floss daily and see the dentist regularly, we can defeat one of mankind's oldest enemies — periodontal disease.

Brushing plus flossing helps to remove plaque

By Craig A. Chilton
William Beaumont Army Medical Center

FORT MONROE, VA. (TNS) — Snakes and sharks don't have to worry about oral hygiene. If they lose a tooth, a new one grows in its place.

Not so with humans. If you want to keep your natural teeth all your life, you must do your part to keep them healthy. But your toothbrush alone can't prevent dental disease. Dental floss shold be a part of your daily oral-hygiene regimen.

Only brushing and flossing together can thoroughly remove plaque, a sticky layer of bacteria constantly forming in your mouth — and a primary contributor to the two most common dental diseases. Plaque combines with the sugars and starches you eat to form acids that attack your tooth enamel. These acids can cause cavities.

If not removed regularly, plaque can also lead to gum disease, which gradually destroys the tissues and bones supporting the teeth. Gum disease can eventually cause teeth to shift, loosen, and fall out.

While brushing removes plaque from the inner, outer, and biting surfaces of teeth, only flossing removes plaque from between teeth and under the gumline. Tooth decay and gum disease often start in those tight spaces where your toothbrush can't go. Flossing also removes food particles from between teeth that a brush can't reach.

The key to effective flossing is gentleness. Never snap the floss against the gums; this can damage gum tissue. Gently ease floss between your teeth. And be thorough. Make sure you floss every tooth, includng your back teeth, where plaque readily accumulates.

Energy

By Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

Fort Benning finished the first quarter of fiscal year 87 6.25 percent over the Training and Doctrine Command energy target. A big factor in our performance was the unseasonably warm fall weather we experienced after the start up of heating systems.

When this situation occurs, our energy goals are adjusted downward to compensate for what should be a reduced demand for heat. During these periods it is essential that we make an extra effort to control building temperatures and ensure heating systems are off when not needed.

To overcome this poor first quarter performance we must increase our level of energy awareness to spot and eliminate energy waste and abuse. One tool that will be utilized is stepped up energy inspections conducted post wide by personnel from the Energy Management Section.

We can reverse this poor start and continue the success that was achieved last year, but only with your continued support of the energy program. If everyone would bring those energy savings habits to work that they practice at home we would be well on our way to another successful year in energy conservation. Remember the rule that applies here. If it's to be, it's up to me.

Wigger sets two records, ties another in swan song

By Tommy Pool
USAMU correspondent

Competing in his last match for the Army, the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Lt. Col. Lones Wigger set two new national records and tied another during last week's indoor rifle events.

Wigger, who plans to retire later this month, made his final appearance as a member of the U.S. Army Shooting Team during this year's National Indoor Rifle Sectional Championships at Fort Benning Feb. 6 to 8.

During the matches, Wigger won both the National Rifle Association Three Position and NRA Four Position rifle titles that included new record scores for both events.

His total of 1,192 out of 1,200 in the Three Position event was one point over his own previous record of 1,191. Wigger scored 399 in the prone phase, a perfect 400 in the kneeling position and 393 in the standing phase. His 400 score in the kneeling position also tied the existing national record.

Second place in the championship went to Capt. David Erickson, formerly of USAMU and now assigned to Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry. Erickson defeated Army Reservist Wanda Jewell of Columbus, in a tie-breaking procedure after both competitors finished with identical scores of 1,180 out of 1,200.

In the NRA Four Position Championship, Wigger fired a perfect 800 out of 800 posible points that included 20 shots each in the prone, sitting, kneeling and standing positions.

Wigger continued to fire after the regulation event and scored 46 additional 10s (bullseyes); to break his own mark of 44 additional 10s.

Maj. Robert Aylward, also of USAMU, finished second in the match with a total of 799 points. He was followed by Army Reservist David Cramer and USAMU's SFC Mark Kauder, who finished with tie scores at 798.

In team events, the U.S. Army and Army Reserve squads each scored victories to split the nationalsectional team championships.

The U.S. Army "Blue" team fired a winning total of 4,712 out of 4,800 in the Three Position event, while the USAR "Gold" team scored 1,596 out of 1,600 in the Four Position match to edge the Army squad by two points at 1,594.

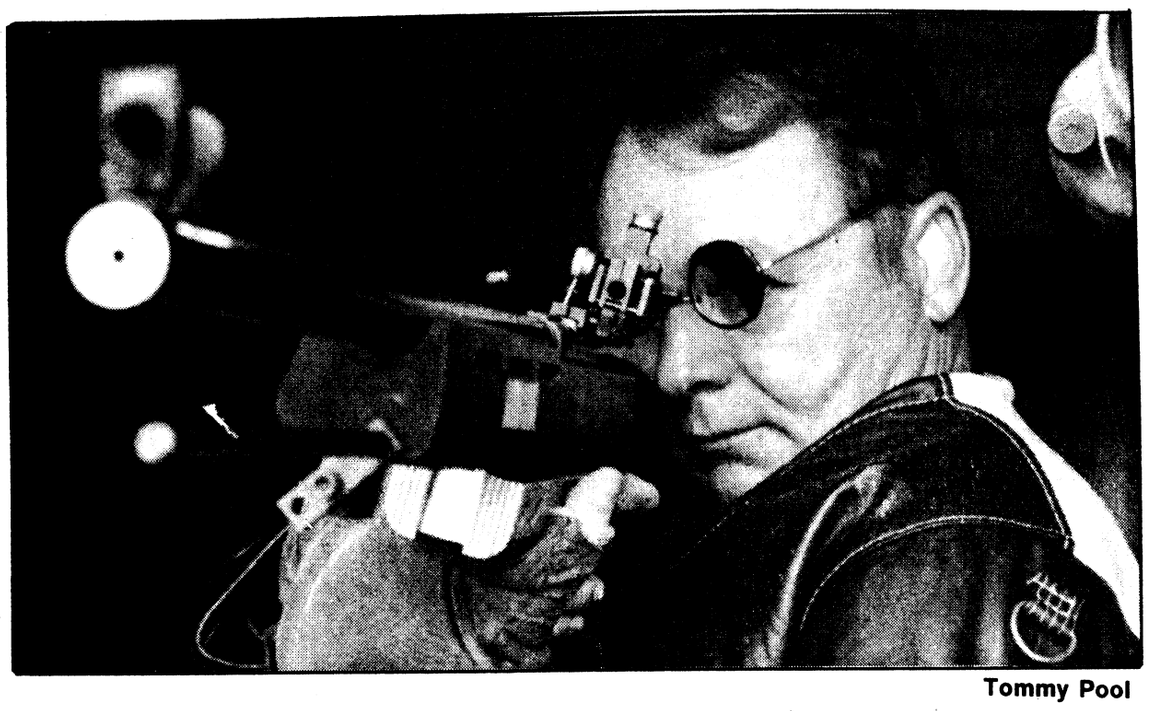
Members of the winning Army "Blue" team in the Three Position event included Wigger, Aylward, Erickson and 1st Lt. Kurt Fitz-Randolph.

When Wigger retires he will have completed more than 25 years of military service.

During his amazing shooting careef, he has often been called a legend in his own time. Many knowledgeable shooting experts have named him one of the best rifle marksman in the world.

His staggering list of accomplishments would certainly support this claim. He has won two Olympic gold medals and a silver medal during three Olympic Games that he participated in. He has held or co-held a total of 13 individual world records and was a member of 16 world record setting teams.

Wigger has been a member of more than 20 United States Shooting Teams that completed in the Olympics, World Championships and Pan American Games.



During these world-level shooting events, his overall medal count in both individual and team events include 65 gold, 38 silver and 8 bronze, for an overall total of 111 medals.

This figure is more medals won in international competition than any other shooter in the world.

Wigger has also won two individual world titles and was a firing member for the United States on a total of 22 world championship winning rifle teams.

In national competition, he has won more than 80 individual national rifle titles and contributed to more than 100 national championship winning U.S. Army teams as a firing member. Both of these totals are more than any other shooter in the United States.

Wigger was also the first shooter to ever be nominated as a finalist for the Sullivan Award in 1981. This award is given annually to the outstanding amateur athlete in America.

Tommy Pool

Lt. Col. Lones Wigger checks his sights before competing in the National Indoor Sectional Championship.

Of all his personal shooting accomplishments, however, Wigger has said that he is even more proud of those made by his daughter Deena.

Only 20 years old, Deena has already won more than a dozen national rifle titles and has scored two gold and a silver medal in international shooting competition, including the Pan American Games and the Championship of the Americas.

During last year's World Shooting Championships in Suhl, East Germany, she was a member of the U.S. Team along with her father, and tied the existing world record in the Women's 10 Meter Air Rifle event.

Although Wigger has announced his retirement from international competition, he will continue to be actively involved in the United States shooting effort.

He was recently named as the Director of U.S. Shooting Teams, and will assume his new duties at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo., in April.

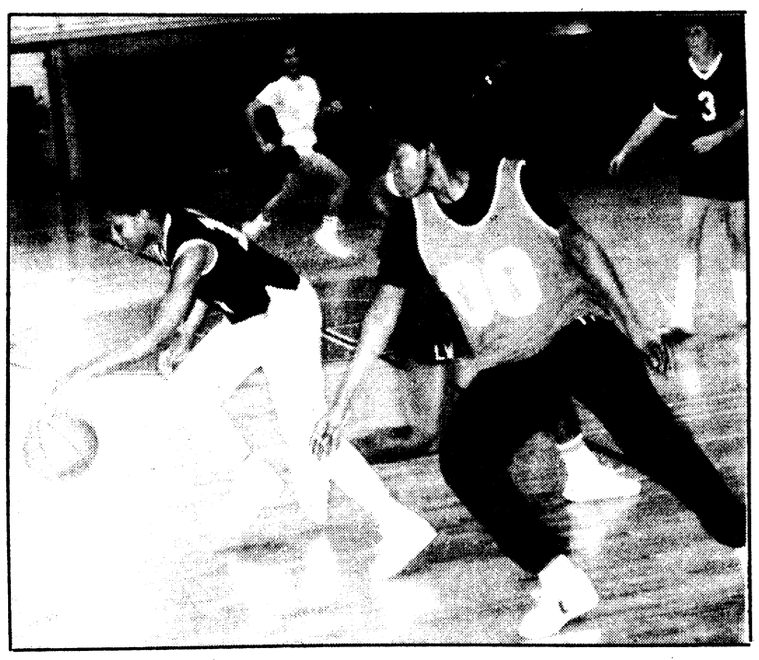
Intruders snare women's crown

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The battle proclaiming the Women's Intramural Basketball Champions took the Intruders into a doubleheader when they faced the Warriors Tuesday to claim the coveted title.

In the double elimination tournament, the previously undefeated Intruders forced the Warriors into a "must win" in the opening game.

Warrior Joanna Gabbard and official Allen Garner teamed to harness the champion Intruders 60-57 in the initial contest.



A "technical" telethon sent Gabbard to the line, shooting both one and two shot fouls and missing none.

Gabbard, the game high scorer with 31 points, was perfect at the line, hitting 13 freebies.

When it seemed that the Intruders would be blown out, they repeatedly battled back in championship form.

The Warriors snatched up an eight-point lead at the half, making the score 34-26. Shelly Fisher and Gabbard lived on the boards, both in double figures after the first period, Fisher with 12 and Gabbard with 14.

Intruder center Veronica Thomas kept the champions within range as she pulled out 16 points, dropping eight in the first half.

Thad Roberson

Warrior Regina Crouch tries for a steal as an Intruder player moves the ball down court.

With Thomas charging through the middle, Suzette Gibson presented the outside threat.

Mid-way through the second half, the first in a series of technical fouls was called, pushing the Warriors to a 37-30 lead.

The Intruders continued to fight back as Marilyn Mixon fired from the corner to pull bring the team within one point of a tie game.

Gabbard quickly retaliated with four points. But Mixon stayed close, leaning into the paint for the layup.

Reading contours final level to be mastered

By Linda Ferguson
Orienteering Director

This is the last of a four part series on teaching Orienteering. Much information provided by Sara and Larry Berman, editors of Orienteering North America, the official USOF publication

In the three previous articles we have detailed a plan provided by Gunnar Hasselstrand of the Swedish Orienteering Federation, which teaches Orienteering using eight levels of skills progression. In Levels 1-3, the orienteer has gone from simply hiking in the woods to actually Orienteering for 200 meters, using precision orienteering in locating their points. All of this has been accomplished without studying contours.

Anyone who has ever been taught to read contours knows that until it is possible to build a frame of reference, contours are difficult to master, to be just mystical lines on the paper. By this level of Orienteering, however, Hasselstrand's vast experience as an Orienteering coach and instructor has shown that, the orienteer has enough experience in the woods to be able to relate what they see on the map with what they have traveled over while moving through the woods. Until a frame of reference is established, however, contours are hard to understand.

To begin this level of instruction, a walk through a hilly area where students may see the profiles of the hill and how they appear on the map, is a good start. Winifred Stott's book, Armchair Orienteering, a self guided text, has many excellent exercises on contour reading. After hills are learned, then the reentrants, or draws, are taught.

The students then progress to using large contour features, such as hills and reentrants as "handrails." A handrail, once again, is a large feature, which may be followed to assist one in reaching a destination. At first they run around the edges of the features, using other large features, such as marshes, to get from one contour feature to another. Following the compass needle it can also be used. An O' course is then set where "contouring" or using the edges of the features to lead to the controls.

The last step in the fourth level is learning to read contours in detail. The instructor uses a map hike in a detailed area to discuss how the smaller features look in the terrain. Following this, an O' course is set in detailed terrain for the orienteers to navigate without the use of the compass.

Hasselstrand's program is a very workable means of teaching Orienteering, in easy progression. With the mastery of each skill, then the Orienteer may move up, a step at a time, to each level. The program is so well accepted, that the Swedish Orienteering Federation is restructuring their competitive class structure to match the step levels.

The Finns and Norwegians are following suit and the U.S. and Canada are looking at the system for future adoption. Using this method, it would be a matter of simple progression to move from one class to the next, without the current problems that are involved with competitors moving into inappropriate classes, becoming discouraged and dropping out. It also will be an enormous aid to the course planner, who will know preciscely what skills should be incorporated into each course.

This series of articles is available from the Orienteering Office, Door 8, Doughboy Stadium.

3rd Battalion seals playoff slot with win

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

Santiago Gym really rocked as the top finishers in the Eastern and Western Divisions of the Army Training Center Basketball League head-up in tournament action Wednesday.

The Eastern Champions, 3rd Battalion, narrowly escaped the retaliatory strength of the 9th Battalion, Western Champions, in a 43-39 near upset.

Both teams were defending a two lost regular season record, though 3rd Bn. had 13 wins compared to the seven victories of the 9th Bn.

Forward Clarence Boggess led the attack, opening the first half with eight points and driving on to be top scorer with 12.

The towering forward stayed close to the basket, giving the 3rd Bn. the edge.

The 9th Bn. could seldom get off a good shot except when the fast breaks of forwards Curtis Campbell and Donald Copeland sent the Western Champions breaking down court.

The 9th Bn.'s greatest opportunity for the easy basket was at the free-throw line, where they converted on only seven of 14 first half opportunities.

Boggess hit a three point shot that pumped the 3rd Bn. to a 22-7 lead with only two minutes remaining in the opening period.

Michael Boone, 9th Bn. guard, would not remain silent, hitting a three-pointer and pulling his team to a 27-16 half.

Coach Glen Harris of the 3rd Bn. pulled his starters in the closing period, confident of a title burst with an 11-point lead.

"It almost proved to be a fatal mistake," said Harris. "I put them in ice cold and our momentum was lost."

The shift in gears was not a smooth transitions for the 3rd Bn., but by no means was it lost.

It was the 9th Bn. who quickly picked up the momentum, capitalizing on their opponents errors.

When the 3rd Bn. opened with the quick long range shots, falling short of the basket, the 9th Bn. was there to swing a 12-point turnaround, scoring six unanswered points.

Campbell and Copeland consistently punished the 3rd Bn. bench, to pull within five, as 3rd Bn. held onto a 27-22 lead.

The game was nip and tuck for the remainder of the contest, with the combatants locking up four more times.

When Robert White fouled 9th Bn.'s Michael Josey, then perfect at the line, the strong forward missed both shots.

Copeland pulled in the clutch offensive rebound at 1:11 to again jam the clock at 39-39.

As the game wound down, 9th Bn. could find only four of the nine second half freebees and the ATC Champions, 3rd Bn., marched on to the victory and the upcoming post level tournament.

News briefs

Storm test

Fort Benning will conduct its yearly storm plan test Feb. 25. If severe weather exists on the day of the test, it will be rescheduled for Feb. 27.

All subordinate commands and directorates are instructed to review the U.S. Army Infantry Center storm plan for actions to be taken. Family members are reminded to review USAIC Pamphlet 500-1 (issued with quarters occupancy packet) for instructions.

In the event sirens cannot be heard or are identified as inoperative, please call 545-1711. If family members need a copy of USAIC Pamphlet 500-1, they are available at Building 385, the Faclities Training Branch, 545-4207.

Income tax help

Soldiers, family members and retirees, if you need assistance filing your income tax return, bring you W-2 and other tax-related documents to the Main Post Exchange Feb. 21.

Fort Benning's Legal Assistance Office is planning a tax assistance booth from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Volunteers trained by the Internal Revenue Service will be available to answer questions and help prepare tax returns. State and federal forms will be available if you did not receive any in the mail.

Don't get caught in the rush. Do your taxes now.

Promotion requirement

Soldiers who want to be promoted to sergeant will need a high school diploma or General Education Diploma equivalency as of March 1.

Army personnel officials add that mid-career soldiers, those below the rank of sergeant who are on their second or subsequent reenlistment, will need the high school credential to reenlist.

The policy change takes into account that about 90 percent of the persons now enlisting in the Army have high school diplomas, according to SGM Dennis Smith of the Enlisted Programs Branch of the Army personnel chief's office at the Pentagon.

The soldier charged with training and leading such educated troops should have at least that level of education, Smith said.

The policy requires that soldiers on the sergeant promotion list who do not meet the new requirement on March 1 be removed from the list.

Parachute training

The U.S. Army Parachute Team (The Golden Knights) will conduct a free fall training camp from April 13 to 17 at Fort Bragg, N.C. The camp will include instruction and practical application of style, accuracy, relative work and demonstration parachuting.

The camp is open to all active duty personnel. Soldiers in grades E-1 to E-6 will have priority, followed by those in the grade of E-7 and above and finally by other Department of Defense active-duty servicemembers.

To be eligible, applicants must have a record of at least 75 free falls. Participation is limited to 50 soldiers.

Applicants must bear the cost of attendance, since meals and quarters are unavailable. The team will provide ground-to-air video, transportation to and from the training site and aircraft

Interested soldiers may call or write for an application, which should be submitted before March 15. Phone: AUTOVON 236-2036 or 236-1539 or commercial (919) 396-2036 or 396-1539.

Points of contact at U.S. Army Parachute Team operations are MSgt. Thomas Bennion or Capt. Marcus Bonds. Written requests should be mailed to: Commander USAPT, ATTN: Training Camp Coordinator, P.O. Box 70126, Fort Bragg, N.C.

Oops — again

We've been told that "the third time is the charmer." And we're hoping that the folks at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade agree.

It seems that last week when we corrected the Drill Sergeant of the Year's unit, which we had incorrectly identified the week before, that we apologized to the wrong unit. We should have said "sorry" to the 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

The post's top drill sergeant, SFC Michael Reynolds, is assigned to the 1st Infantry Training Brigade of the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center here.

Post hosts largest exercise in more than two decades

By Sally Roberts and Griff Godwin
197th Infantry Brigade and USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 6,000 soldiers and airmen are currently participating in the largest field training exercise staged on Fort Benning since the 11th Air Assault Division trained here in 1965.

Some 4,300 soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade rolled out Tuesday to begin exercise, "Sledgehammer I."

Light fighters from the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division are also playing an important role in the exercise.

At the begnning of the week, 10th Mountain troops secured an area of operation and enabled the 197th forces to pass through. Brigade forces then moved out to occupy the forward assembly area.

Light and mechanized infantry units are testing their effectiveness as a fighting team during such operations.

According to a 197th Infantry Brigade spokesman, training of this kind requires detailed planning of the war game scenario. The mission is mainly designed to train soldiers and improve the use of command and control procedures.

The exercise calls for a mechanized infantry and armor threat in a mid-intensity conflict.

In order to meet the enemy threat, the 197th elements are reinforced with units from as far away as Fort Bliss, Texas, providing additional personnel to the Brigade's military intelligence section, medical unit, artillery battalion and chemical unit.

Offensive and defensive operations taking place throughout the week are staged in order to blunt an attack by the enemy force, or to attack and deny the enemy the opportunity to consolidate and defend their territorial gains, according to the 197th.

The training is also being supported by U.S. Air Force and Air National Guard units that providing attack, fighter, observation and cargo aircraft for various operations. The air support will be highlighted by supply extractions with C-130 aircraft at McKenna Airstrip; and a live-fire exercise combining the 197th's infantry and artillery, and Air Force attack and fighter jets.

The 36th Engineer Group and the 34th Medical Battalion. are also providing support for the exercise.

Other units involved are the 519th Military Intelligence Company, Fort Bragg, N.C.; the 304th Chemical Company (Smoke), Jasper, Ala.; the 431st Civil Affairs Company, Little Rock, Ark., and Battery A, 5th Battalion, 62nd Air Defense Artillery, Fort Bliss, Texas.

New evaluation system approved for NCOs

Military Personnel Center

A new Non-commissioned Officer Evaluation Reporting System concept, recently approved by the Army's chief of staff with a target implementation date of Dec. 31, 1987, replaces the existing Enlisted Evaluation Reporting system that's been with the Army since October 1981.

In approving the concept, Gen. John A. Wickham Jr. indicated that it's a "far better approach to NCO professionalism," providing a complete measure of a young soldier's development, with a positive indication that the Army is sensitive to the growth of its NCO corps.

The concept is based on extensive input from the entire Army. It establishes the direction the new system will take while guiding the choice of techniques that will be included on the form as well as the evaluation policies that will be included in the regulation, said SGM Clyne Goode, chief of NCO Evaluation Systems Policy in the Military Personnel Center's Evaluation Systems Office.

Prior to the December 1987 implementation date the Army will distribute a draft version of the form in April. Although the draft will go to the major commands it will initiate an Army-wide education process to introduce the form, Goode said.

Dedicated to NCO excellence, the new report will emphasize the important role the NCO plays in the Army's success, providing the focal point for NCO pride. To indicate this focus, the name of the report will change from Enlisted Evaluation Report to Non-commissioned Officer Evaluation Report.

While it is to early to tell exactly what the new form itself will look like, a number of items appear to be certain, Goode said. It will include: rating scales for Army values and NCO requirements, requirements for bullet narratives instead of prose, a move away from numerical ratings, trigger words with expanded definitions for the NCO requirements, dedicated blocks for the physical fitness test, height and weight, a structured duty description which will include key performance elements and additional duties and a change in names and roles for rating officials.

Military police on the lookout for litter bugs

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Assistant Editor

Fort Benning is being invaded by a plague of "insects" — "litter bugs," that is.

According to SFC Gary Leeds, assistant operations sergeant at the Military Police Activity, MPs have noticed an increase in trash being discarded along several roads.

He said the areas hardest hit are out on Highway 27 at major intersections such as Marne Road and Kelley Hill, and out around Lawson Army Airfield off 82nd Airborne Division Road.

"People are throwing out Burger King sacks, magazines, anything they want to get rid of is being tossed out car windows along the roadways" he said.

"In the past 60 days, I've noticed it more along 82nd Airborne Division Road when I drive to work mornings," he said. "People just don't seem to care."

Feb. 6, someone did care. Post CSM Roy C. Owens saw a taxi driver toss trash out of his cab on Cusseta Road in the Harmony Church area. Owens took down the vehicle's tag and cab number and turned the information in to the MPs.

"We called the cab company, got the driver's name and issued him a citation for littering, which requires a mandatory court appearance," Leeds said.

Because the driver was a civilian, he has to go before the federal magistrate downtown, according to Leeds.

Littering is a violation of state law. "Georgia Code 16-7-43 puts the penalty at a fine of from $25 to $300, while Alabama Code 13-A-7-29 says a person convicted can get 90 days in jail and or a $500 fine," Leeds said.

According to both laws, it is unlawful to throw trash from a vehicle onto a public roadway and any road on Fort Benning is considered a public road.

Soldiers are cited on the standard Form DD 1805, which police use for all traffic and Georgia Code violations, he said. They face the same penalties as civilians.

Because the officer has to either see someone littering or have a witnesses' sworn statement, Leeds said the MPs need the help of people riding on post.

"If you see someone throwing trash, get the vehicle's tag number and report it," he said.

Opinion

'Platoon' not realistic view of war, says combat veteran

Dear Editor,

Dawn Kilpatrick's column last week in The Bayonet energized me to publicly repudiate the image of American combat troops in Vietnam painted by the skillful photography and acting of the disturbing movie, "Platoon."

Hundreds of my friends fought (and many died) in Vietnam. I personally served there during parts of 1966 through 1969 and in 1971.

"Platoon," the movie, portrays a combat outfit characterized by: murder of civilians, rape, arson, murder of prisoners, cowardice and incompetence of NCOs and officers and massive drug and alcohol abuse. All these terrible crimes and more have without doubt occured in places and times in Vietnam and every other American war.

The Vietnam War was characterized by particularly bitter small unit actions, some of which were fought in populated areas. The savagery of these fights was perhaps as brutal as even the heavy combat among the civilian populations of Europe during World War II.

However, do not for a minute believe that the movie, "Platoon," is an accurate picture of the U.S. Army in Vietnam. Even during the depressing days of the RVN withdrawal from 1970 onward, our combat units never came apart. In general, we treated the civilian population with respect and affection. Millions of the Vietnamese have since risked their lives to escape by sea and through Cambodian jungles. In combat, when U.S. rifle companies captured VC suspects (or in particular, North Vietnamese soldiers) we got them to talk by giving them milk and cigarettes. Our teen-age captives were treated with dignity by teen-age U.S. soldiers who had captured them.

Newly arrived soldiers may not have "gotten much respect in the bush" but we sure didn't make them walk point. Most units had volunteers for any dangerous, sensitive job such as point team, tunnel searches and recovery of wounded. Cripes! The last thing a combat unit would do is put a "new guy on point."

There are two other things the movie didn't bring out. First, we prayed a lot. We had chaplains in the field conducting church services. We prayed with our wounded. We prayed with our dead. Second, we loved each other. Infantry combat is brutal, exhausting, occasionally terrifying and incredibly uncomfortable. We grew to depend on each other totally in order to survive. The enormous bond of love and trust that grew among combat infantry soldiers is absent from the screen of this movie.

Go see "Platoon." It's beautifully photographed and the acting is good. Go see "Platoon" to look upon a unit without honor, without courage, without moral leadership. "Platoon" is a film about what can happen to an American Army unit that slips into evil. "Platoon" is not a movie about the Army that battled so valiantly, so long, and to no avail in our country's longest war.

Barry R. McCaffrey
Brigadier General, USA

Defending freedom part of being American

Dawn Kilpatrick

American. Each morning when I get up and put on my uniform, I think how great it is to be an American. While some may not be able to understand such pride, I find it difficult to see the other side of the coin. That is to say, I cannot imagine what it must be like for those people who feel no sense of national pride.

All of us who wear the uniform of the United States Armed Forces should feel a certain amount of such pride. The reasons each of us made the commitment to serve our country are undoubtedly as different as each of us. However, the tie that binds, the common thread, is the pride in being an American.

Being an American is not a given, however. Everyone cannot be one. Everyone may not want to be one. Being one, though, requires some conviction. If we are to maintain our way of life, if we are to keep a grip on all that we hold dear, we must be willing to fight.

Our fight may not be overt. Our fight may not even be outward. But, there is a fight that must be fought in each of us. That fight involves staying mindful of how valuable our way of life is.

Apathy is not conducive to staying free. If Americans become a group of individuals, unable to rally around a common cause, the fiction of the television mini-series, "Amerika" may become a reality.

Set 10 years after the United States has been taken over by the Soviet Union, "Amerika" depicts a wasteland inhabited by individuals who only want to survive. The characters run the gamut from outspoken flag wavers to pacifist slugs. All, however, are primarily interested in self-preservation.

So, what is wrong with self-preservation? Nothing — as long as there is some unity among the people. "You lost your passion," is the reason a Soviet diplomat gives for the ease with which we were conquered.

"I never really thought of myself as an American," a young actress confides. Maybe that was the problem.

No passion. No pride. No national identity. Lacking those necessary ingredients, they were assured of eventual takeover.

The series has caused a lot of controversy. Some say the portrayal of the Soviets is too harsh. Some say the people of Russia are no different than we Americans. Some say they are all people too. Some say that life in Russia is good for those who live it. These factions say that Russians are happy with their way of life.

However, those Americans who have visited the Soviet Union tell a different story. The Soviets who have fled their motherland also tell a different story. They tell a story of want and hunger. They tell a story of restriction and dictation. They tell a story void of freedom.

Who's right? How much is propaganda — on both sides. Does it really matter? I don't think so.

The fact remains that we are different. The United States and the Soviet Union subscribe to two very different political beliefs. We cannot meld these beliefs into one. We cannot be joined without one country losing its identity. These are simple facts.

It is, therefore, imperative that we Americans maintain our way of life. It is time to rekindle the flames of national pride. The time to rally around a common cause is now. And that cause should be preserving these United States of America.

Living King's dream everyone's responsiblity

By Donald C. Cubbison
Army News Service

"I don't know what will happen now. We've got some difficult days ahead. But it doesn't matter with me now, because I've been to the mountaintop . . . and I don't mind. Like anybody, I would like to live a long life; longevity has its place. But I'm not concerned about that now. I just want to do God's will." — Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

On Jan. 19, we celebrated King's birthday. This national holiday provided us time for reflection and introspection — reflection on the progress that has been made in the civil rights movement and introspection regarding our personal commitment to this imperative.

"Being a Negro in America is not a comfortable existence . . . being a Negro in America means trying to smile when you want to cry." — King.

I grew up with segregation. As an Army brat in the 40s and 50s, I saw and felt the frustration and misery that blacks had to endure. I was eyewitness to racism in such places as Columbus, Ga.; Columbia, S.C.; Fayetteville, N.C.; Washington, D.C.; and Carlisle, Pa.

"The ultimate measure of a man is not where he stands in moments of comfort and covenience, but where he stands at times of challenge and controversy." — King.

When I joined the Army in 1954, I slept under the same roof as blacks and dined with them in the company mess hall. However, that was about as far as any relationship with them got until I finally became friends with Private Joe Cody during the last week of basic.

Could I have done more in those days to promote equality, friendship and cohesion? Yes, I could have; and yes, I should have. I still carry the shame.

"I have the audacity to believe that peoples everywhere can have three meals a day for their bodies, education and culture for their minds, and dignity, equality and freedom for their spirits." — King.

While the nation and the military have come a long, long way since King and his followers boycotted buses in Montgomery, Ala., began sit-ins in Atlanta and started marching for freedom. We still have a long way to go. I have a long way to go, too, but would like to believe that I'm now a civil rights activist. And, sometimes I see and hear things that perhaps you don't.

I see that we have too few minority members at the upper echelons of leadership, and hope that we can encourage college deans and university presidents to "sell" the military to more minority youngsters. In this way, the imbalance could be corrected in the not-too-distant future. We also need to check our advancement systems — continually — to make sure that they're operated fairly and without the slightest hint of prejudice.

I sense that too many reminders of segregation and "Jim Crowism" remain. In this day and age, why do we still put up with racial jokes, racist graffitti and bigots?

I suspect that far too many of us espouse equal opportunity at the workplace, but no opportunity beside the fireplace — integration in public, and segregation in private.

"Forgiveness is not an occasinal act; it is a permanent attitude." — King.

For 1987 we can all take pride in, I ask you to join me in two New Year's resolution:

"Free at last, free at last. Thank God Almighty, we are free at last." — King.

(Note to editors: Cubbison serves with the headquarters of U.S. Army Japan, IX Corps. King's quotations were drawn from "The Words of Martin Luther King Jr.," selected by Coretta Scott King, published in 1983 by Newmarket Press.)

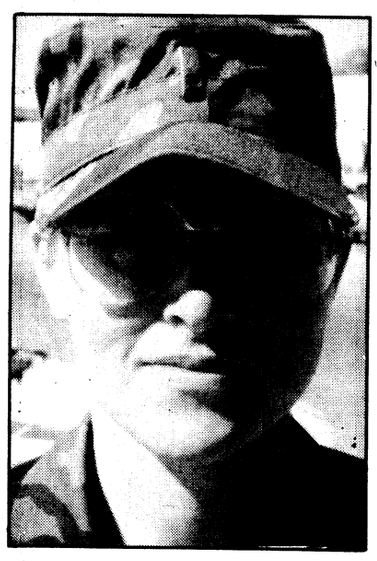
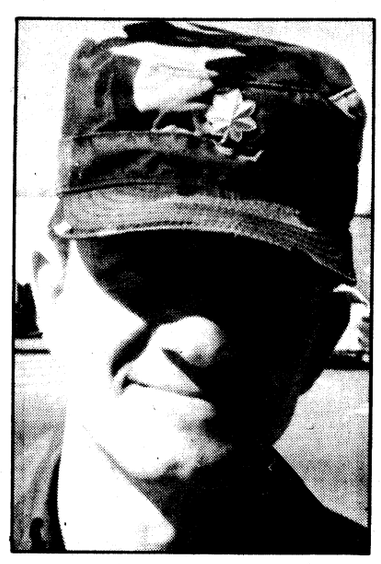
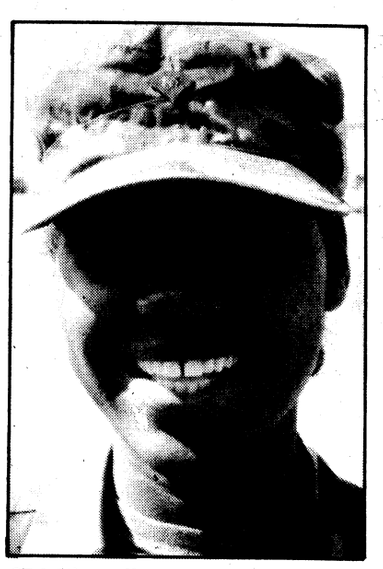
What is the most common uniform violation that you see (besides a haircut) on Fort Benning?



SP4 Michelle Broughton, Company A, Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade — "The one thing I've noticed is incorrect wear of rank insignia."



SFC Eddie Crawford, Special Security Detatchment —"I see a lot of people not wearing belts with their Battle Dress Uniform. Because they can't be seen, a lot of people don't wear them."



2nd Lt. Bobby Mundell, 2lst Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade — "I see a lot of officers wearing their branch insignia parallel to their collar, which is incorrect. I also see people wearing unauthorized uniform parts with civilian clothing."

1st Lt. Toni Duffy, Company B, 507th Parachute Infantry Infantry Regiment — "I see a lot of people with their boot laces hanging out (snakes) and females with their hair hanging below the bottom edge of the collar."

Lt. Col. Louis Brackett, Headquarters Company, lst Battalion, The School Brigade — "I occasionally see soldiers without headgear while in uniform."

SP4 Kim Allen, 608th Ordinance Company, 67th Maintainance Battalion — The biggest violations I see are while soldiers are in military vehicles, they don't wear their headgear and a lot of times I've seen them in just T-shirts."

10th Mountain

The "HHC Hogs" of the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division basketball team have run, shot, passed and dribbled their way to the 2-14th league championship.

The mighty Hogs completed their regular season with eight wins versus one loss; by far the best record within the battalion.

The Hogs' lightning fastbreak was too devastating for any of their opponents. Combined with an air tight defense, the Hogs were just too powerful to be handled.

The team was led by the slick ball handling and pinpoint passing of guards Sgt. Spencer Abroms, SSgt. Noble Harris, Sgt. John Smith, 1st Lt. Derreck Johnson and Sgt. Willie Arrington. Help also came from the board crashing forwards: SSgt. Ralph Dudley, PFC Gary Johnson, SP4 Kenneth Smith, PFC Charles Waller, Pvt. Carlos Balams, 1st Lt. Martin Herbert and SSgt. Bruce Shuttleworth.

The centers included 1st Lt. Joel Carter, "The Dunk Master," 1st Lt. Richard White, "Clean Sweep," 1st Lt. Janmichael Graine, "Airwolf," and 1st Sgt. Willie S. Brown, 6'8" of pure shot-blocking power.

The Hogs have had a very successful season but are very hungry. Now that they have clinched the battalion championship, they are eagerly tackling the brigade championship, which will be decided in the best of three games series. — Thomas Brown, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry.

The 608th Ordnance Company fielded four teams of four persons each for the Infantry Half Marathon last month. Few of the runners had ever attempted a long distance run and were very content to simply finish.

Everyone attempted to stay together for the run. However, this proved to be a difficult task.

The times on the team ranged from approximately one hour and 30 minutes to two hours and 20. The 608th also had one soldier who ran the entire marathon. — 608th Ordnance Company.

CSM William N. Roland, commandant of the Fort Benning NCO Academy, and MSgt. Gene A. Young, Primary Leadership Development Course branch chief were on hand recently as the United States Army Sergeants Major Academy sponsored its fourth annual Training and Doctrine Command, Primary Leadership Development Course conference that brought together representatives from around the world to discuss training at NCO academies.

This year, the five-day event was conducted at the Marriott Hotel in downtown El Paso, Texas.

Some 135 senior non-commissioned officers, officers and DA civilians involved with planning, developing, managing and conducting Primary Leadership Development Courses in NCO academies Armywide merged to the sunny Southwest to attend the conference.

According to Sergeants Major Academy CSM Larry J. Hampton, the purpose of the conference is to ensure standardization and discuss proposed changes in PLDC.

"The conference also allows attendees to share lessons learned and gain important updates on issues that affect NCO training at the primary level," he said. "Experience has proven these conferences to be of great benefit to the people who make PLDC a viable program. Much of the overall success of PLDC can be attributed to meetings such as this," he adds.

The Sergeants Major Academy, at Fort Bliss, became responsible for the development of a standard PLDC curriculum in July 1982. Today, all Army NCO academies teach a common curriculum consisting of studies in leadership, communications, resource management, training management, professional skills and military studies. — U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy.

Army Training Center

The Second Brigade of the 95th Division (Training) recently arrived at Fort Benning for annual training.

The soldiers of the 2nd Brigade, headquartered in Norman, Okla., and commanded by Col. Herbert M. Graves, stepped in with their active Army counterparts to help train the soldiers of the Army Training Center's 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

The battalions of the 2nd Brigade have displaced the battalions of the 1st ITB and and evaluated by their active-duty counterparts.

The 1st Battalion, 378th Regiment of Chickasha, Okla., displaced the 1st Battalion, 1st ITB. The 2nd Battalion, 378th Regiment of Clinton, Okla., displaced on the 3rd Battalion, 1st ITB. The 3rd Battalion, 378th Regiment of Norman, Okla., displaced on the 6th Battalion, 1st ITB, and the 1st Battalion, 379th Regiment of Guymon, Okla., displaced on the 5th Battalion, 1st ITB.

The success of the displacement mission depends on the ability of both units to blend together and not hinder the training mission of the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center.

This is the second consecutive year that the 95th's 2nd Brigade has come to Fort Benning for annual training. The soldiers of the 2nd Brigade consider this type of training to be a valuable experience, because it is an excellent opportunity for the unit to improve its readiness to perform its mobilization mission. — 95th Division (Training.)

29th Infantry

Range of the Quarter competition within the 29th Infantry Regiment is taken seriously by all range personnel within the 1st Battalion and 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The competition is stiff, for each and every range is trying to be the best, but only one range can come out on top.

U.S. Mines, Land Mine Warfare recently won the Range of the Quarter for the second consecutive quarter.

SFC Ralph J. Trillo, principal instructor at land mine warfare, said that the preparation is not the hard part. The anticipation waiting for the command sergeant major and the battalion operations NCO to inspect is the most difficult portion of the competition according to Trillo.

In preparing for the competition, Trillo had a meeting with his instructors to plan their strategy. After scrutinizing the situation, each instructor was given a specific task. The areas inspected were: policy letter, unit SOP's, vault files, regulations; instructors, instructional intent; police of the range, latrine, range office, feeding area for the OSUT soldier; bulletin board, information, organization of the range; key control, safety, medevac procedures and physical security. — 29th Infantry Regiment.

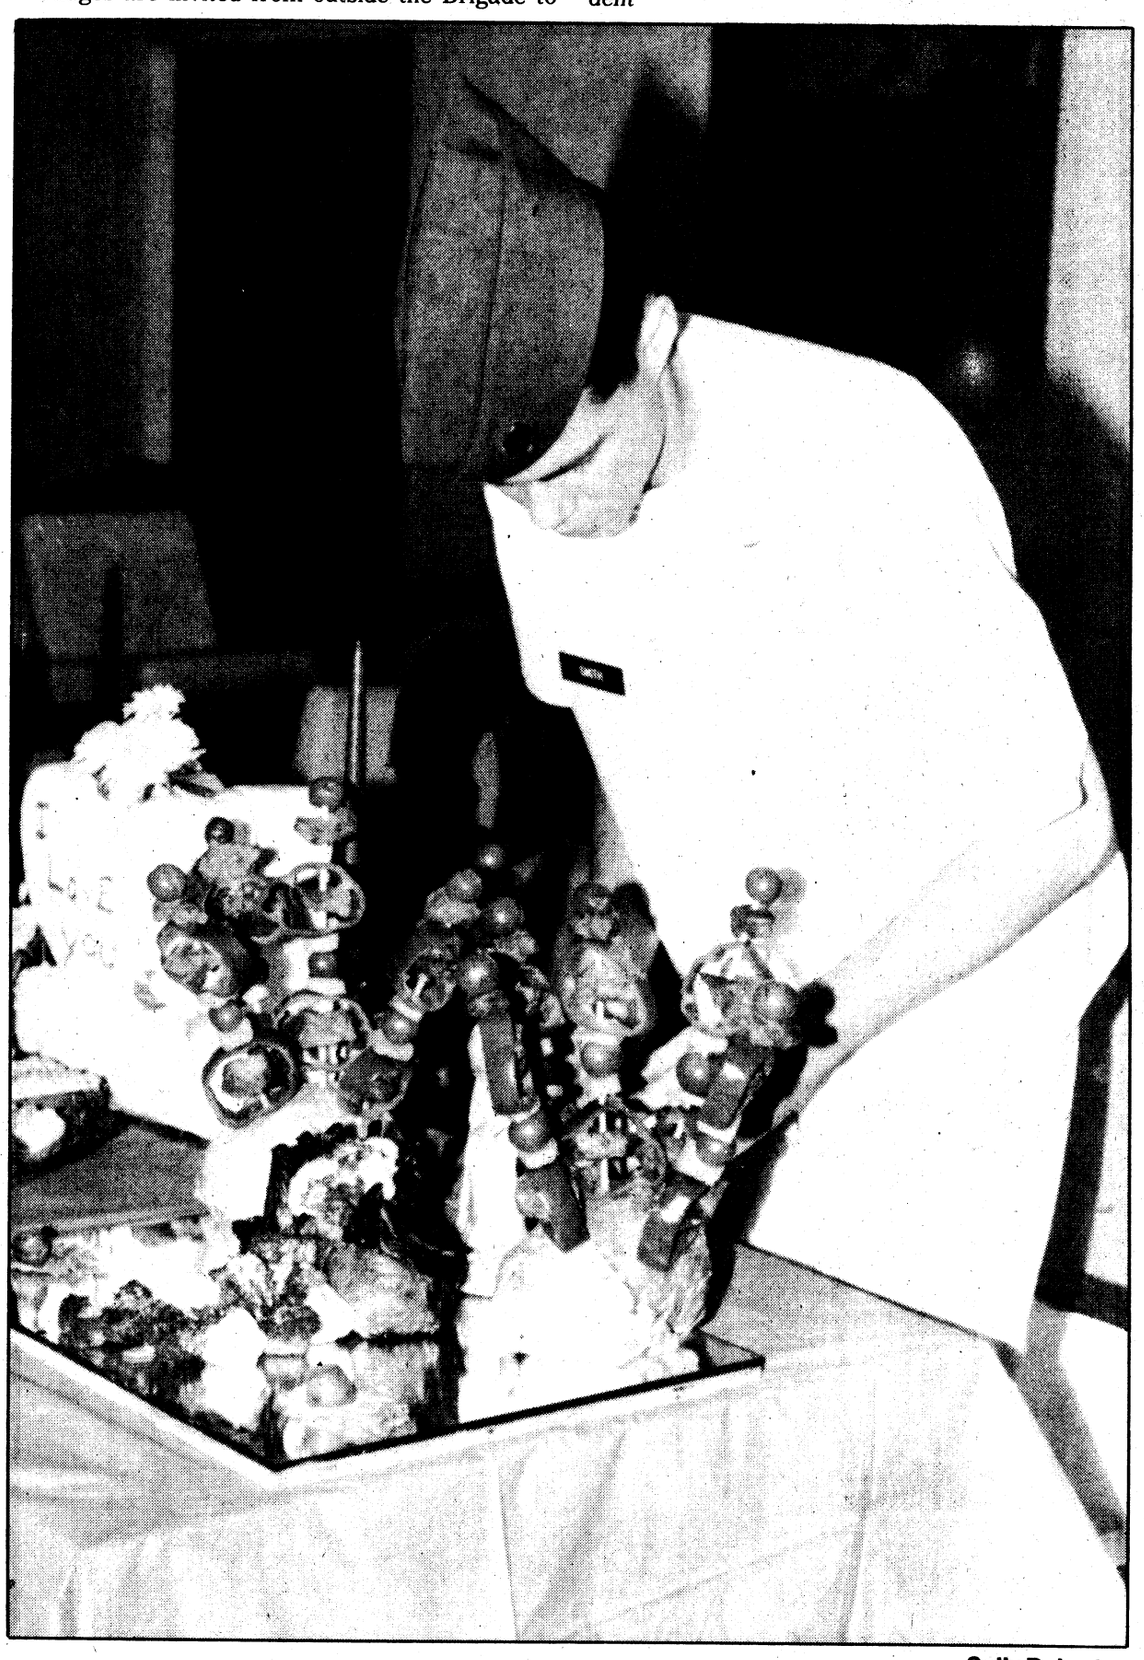
197th Infantry

Once every three months, cooks from each of the five dining facilities on Kelley Hill prepare their finest culinary dishes for the 197th Infantry Brigade Chef of the Quarter competition.

The competition is organized by Brigade Food Service. According to CW3 Tommie McLemore, Brigade Food Service Officer, "The competition is designed to let commanders and soldiers know what they are capable of doing and to recognize the cooks who have special talents for the culinary arts."

The competitors are asked to prepare a menu that includes a meat, starch, vegetable, bread and dessert. All the items are made from scratch and prepared in the dining facility.

The dishes vary from roast pig and duckling to tasty vegetables in cream sauces. Desserts of fresh fruit and pastry tempt the appetites of the judges and guests.



The cooks put a lot of effort into the preparation of their dishes. First a menu must be planned and ingredients gathered. Much of their work goes into displaying their projects in a colorful spread of edible garnishes. Common fruits and vegetables are turned into decorative flowers and birds to add eye appeal to the meals.

Judges are invited from outside the Brigade to pick the winners. The entries are judged on the appearance and expertise of the chef and the eye appeal and taste of the food.

McLemore explained that since the Brigade began the Chef of the Quarter program in 1983, the degree of the competition has increased along with the support and interest of Brigade soldiers who are invited to taste the delacacies after the judging.

"This program greatly improves the quality of the food prepared every day in the dining facilities by offering an incentive to the cooks," McLemore said. "They have a chance to be creative and prepare whatever they want to for the competition."

The winners of the Brigade's recent Chef of the Quarter competition were: First Place, SP4 Wayne Zabala, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry; Second Place, PFC Richard Smith, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; Third Place, Pvt. David Wemberly. — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

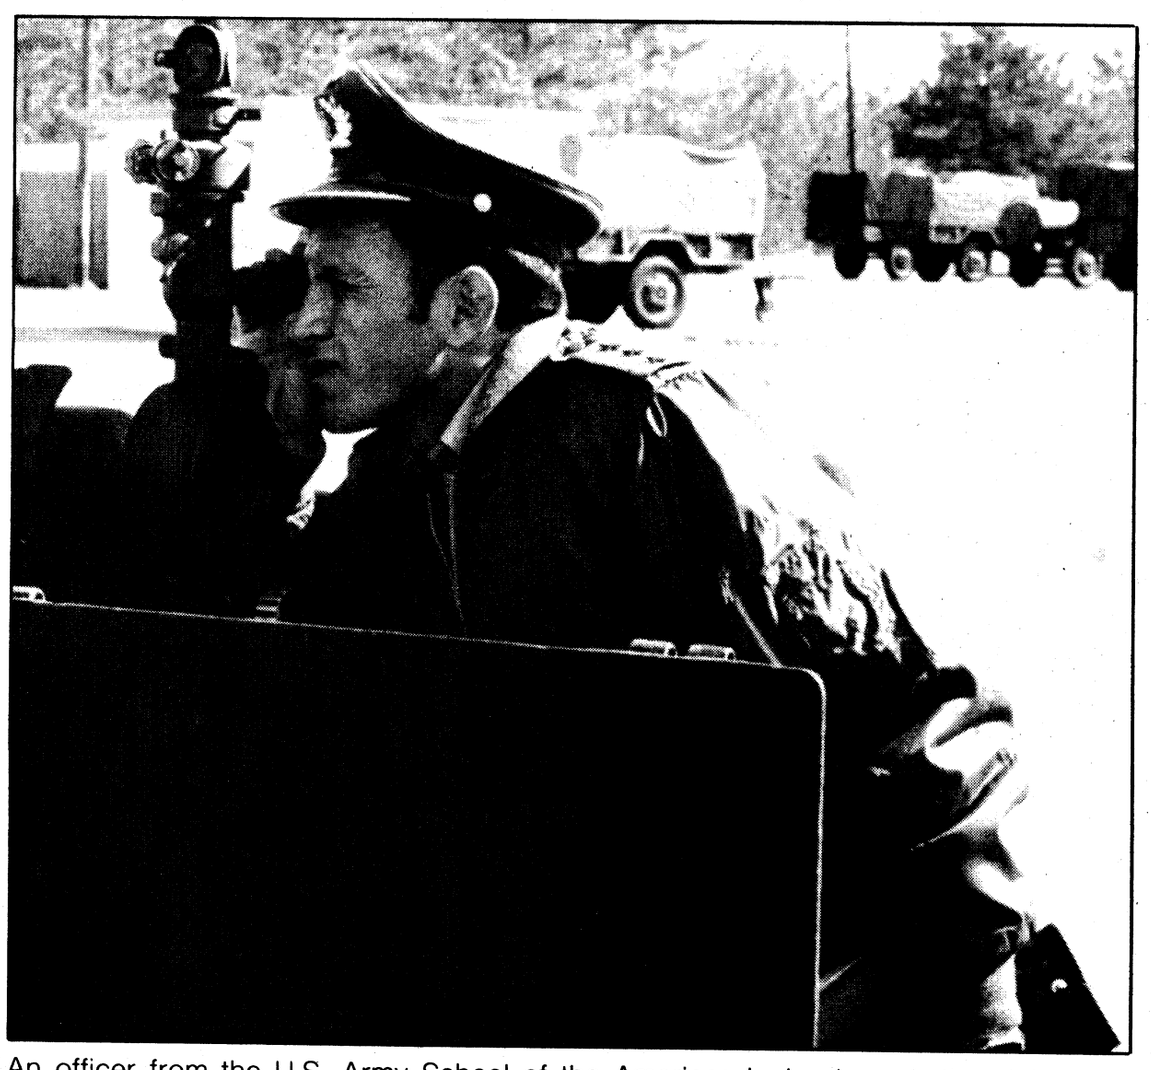
USARSA officers tour 197th to learn about U.S. artillery

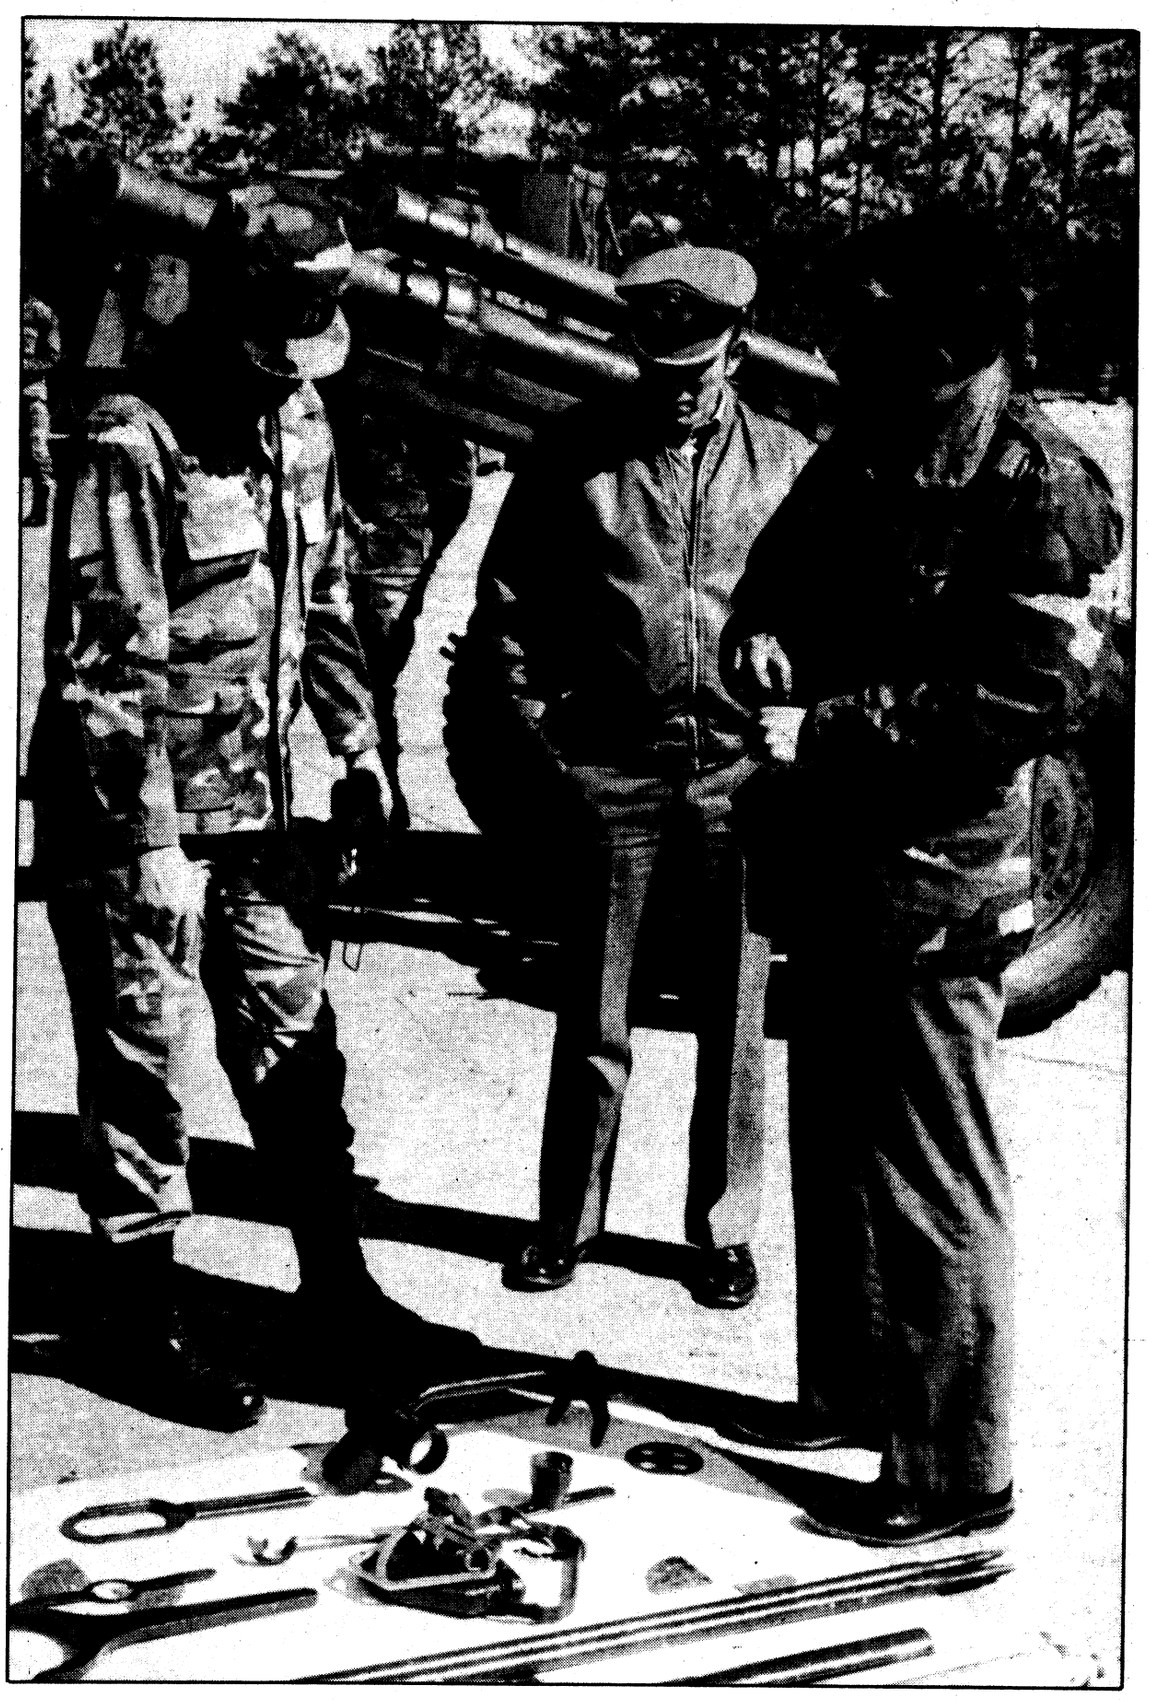
By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Last week, the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery welcomed six foreign officers from the U.S. Army School of the Americas to visit the battalion and learn more about the U.S. Army's field artillery.



"The six officers were from various countries: Chile, Mexico, Bolivia, Equador and Venezuela," explained Maj. William Engle, Battalion executive officer. "The whole idea was to give them an orientation of a 155mm self-propelled artillery battalion."

During their brief stop at 2-10th, the officers were given an explanation of the organizational structure of an artillery battalion, a tour of the barracks and were hosted to lunch at the battalion dining facility.



"After the battalion tour, we took them to the motor pool," said Engle. "They were very pleased to have the opportunity to see our equipment, but they really wanted to see us live fire."

A short briefing on the 155mm cannon was given at the motor pool and other points of artillery tactics were discussed with the foreign officers.

"The foreign officers teach tactics and doctrine of artillery at the School of the Americas," said Engle. "They will have a chance to see us in action during the Brigade's Field Training Exercise (Sledgehammer I)."

Engineers learn truth to 'it always rains on the Army'

Sgt. Carlos Manfredi patrols the woods during early morning training.

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Soldiers from the headquarters of the 36th Engineer Group played out actual rolls in their latest Field Training Exercise.

The Headquarters and Headquarters Company battled the elements of the unpredictable Georgia weather Feb. 5 through Feb. 9 at a training area on post. However, the below-freezing temperatures and rain, which was steady for three days, didn't stop the HHC soldiers from completing their normal FTX missions. The soldiers participated in classes on Hasty Protective Mine Fields, cold weather injuries, Nuclear Chemical Biological as well as many other Common Tasks Tests.

The Headquarters Tactical Operations Center was probably the busiest tent during the FTX as it was the heart of the second mission of the FTX. According to Capt. Carl R. Davis, Assistant S-3 for the 36th Engineer Group, HHC also participated in a Command Post Exercise. "Our company supported the 560th Engineer Battalion of the Georgia National Guard during their FTX here," Davis said. The two FTX sites were adjacent to each other and Davis said that the roll of Headquarters was similar to its roll in an Army Training Evaluation Program.

Since the National Guard only trains once a month and two weeks each year, this CPX was arranged to give the Guard some practical experience in tactical exercises while in the field, according to Davis. "We were basically going through a paper work drill," he said. "The 560th was given a series of messages from our TOC and they sent back messages explaining how they would respond to the original message if they were in a tactical situation." Davis said the exercises were simulations of wartime incidents.

Examples of the simulated incidents included updating maps and charts, enemy invasions, or nerve agent invasions, according to Davis.

The Captain said that aside from a few wrinkles that needed to be ironed out, the CPX went well. "The CPX was only a one day event so we didn't have the time to conduct a totally accurate evaluation of the 560th," Davis said.

From merchant marine to Army green; MP soldier now Fort Benning's top cop

By Becky Obert
The Bayonet Assistant Editor

How does a guy go from riding the seven seas as a merchant seaman to guarding prisoners?

According to Cpl. Gary W. Brown, a correctional specialist at the post stockade, the choice wasn't that difficult.

"I traveled everywhere as a merchant seaman, but had to quit once I got married," he said. "The Army was appealing because you get to travel and take your family along with you."

Brown was named military policeman of the year by the Columbus Exchange Club last week. He was selected for the honor by the Military Police Activity, based on his performance before soldier of the month, quarter and year boards.

He said he became interested in competing for soldier of the month as a way to prepare for his promotion board. He was soldier of the month six times last year and recently "maxed" his promotion board.

Brown spent three years in the merchant marines, traveling from Russia to the Carribbean and back again. He said he liked the Asian countries best and singled out Singapore as his favorite. "It's a city that's alive 24-hours a day. It's so clean and beautiful and there's no crime," he said. "That's because the penalty is death if you're caught carrying a loaded gun, and life in prison for carrying an unloaded one."

Brown said it wasn't that big of a transition into the Army. "The merchant marines had basically the same rules as the military, except there's no saluting and no drill and ceremony," he said.

Another factor that influenced him to try the Army was his father, who spent seven years in the Army working in the communications field. "I just felt it was something everybody should do and I always wanted to get into the police field," he said.

MSgt. Roy Taylor, provost sergeant and Brown's supervisor, said Brown is a good troop. "He's an excellent soldier. He sets the standards for his peers to follow," he said.

"Throughout the past year, by working hard, studying and doing an excellent job at work, he's achieved a lot and done very well," Taylor said.

Brown credits wife Tammie with much of his success. "I think she could have done as well on the boards as I did, because she helped me study and knows all the answers too," he said.

Taylor said Brown is devoted to his work. "He's highly interested and concerned about the prisoners' welfare," Taylor said. "He invests a lot of personal time looking into their needs and making recommendations about the prisoners."

Motivation seems to be the key to Brown's success, and Brown credits his superiors for this. "They set the example for me," he said, "seeing what they have accomplished in the past."

It also helps to like your job, Brown said.

Taylor said that he's seldom seen a soldier with such a close knit family as Brown, which Taylor sees as another motivating factor.

Brown and his wife have three children; Jessica, 8, Erica, 3, and Raymond, 4 months. Brown enjoys working with Jessica's Brownie troop. "I sold a lot of Girl Scout cookies this year," he said with a grin.

"I was a scout and thoroughly enjoyed it," Brown said. "I can't wait until Raymond is old enough to be involved with it."

Brown said he plans to reenlist for another six years, and if all goes well, he'll make it a career.

His next goal is educational. He's enrolled in the Army's educational fund program and already has one year of college under his belt. "I hope to attend Troy State University and earn a degree in criminal justice," he said.

The Exchange Club presented him with a plaque and a free dinner at the Columbus Hilton. They also presented him with a check, which Brown said he immediately gave to his wife. "She really earned it," he said.

For winning soldier of the year honors, he received an Army Achievement Medal and is exempt from all duty and details for one year.

'Round brown' symbolizes excellence of drill instructors

Editor's note: Ralph W. Widener Jr. has written several articles for military publications. He recently went through a portion of basic training here. The following is an account of his experiences.

by Ralph W. Widener Jr.
Special To The Bayonet

I spent the better part of 13 weeks with a company of new soldiers of the 1st Infantry Training Brigade going through One Station Unit Training at the Sand Hill infantry training area of Fort Benning, Ga. I lived with these men, ate my meals with them, attended their classroom lectures and went out in the field with them.

The subjects taught range from basic marching and physical training to the use of the most advanced infantry equipment. Excellent ranges, bivouac sites, and other facilities are used, all under the direction of carefully selected and experienced trainers.

• If you had to come up with a symbol that instantly identifies the non-commissioned training cadre associated with the day-by-day training of new soldiers, it would be a "Round Brown." Each year, more than 35,000 new soldiers find out that the center of the universe has suddenly shifted. It's now beneath a tobacco-brown felt hat with a flat brim and four evenly spaced hollows in the crown. The wearer is the drill sergeant. He represents the ultimate soldier — everything the soldier is urged, directed and expected to be.

An NCO (Non-Commissioned Officer) can become a drill sergeant by either volunteering or being selected to serve. Standards for drill sergeant service are high.

Drill sergeant candidates train at a drill sergeant's school, and usually serve their two-year tour at the same installation where they receive their training. Fort Benning has a drill sergeant's school. Selected drill sergeants may extend their tour one year, either as a drill sergeant or drill sergeant instructor.

The infantry drill sergeant will have to supervise and train up to 60 men on a daily basis for 13 weeks. It is very demanding work, as he has to show a soldier what to do, train him to do it, and make sure it's done properly. In addition, he is, in effect, a mother, father, minister, counselor, psychologist, you name it, for the men under his direction. He's the one person they're closest to. As a result, he determines the quality of soldier that will be passed on to other Army units.

From my perspective as an observer, I can say that the first two weeks of the beginning training environment are very important, for it is during this period of time that civilians are taken through what has been called the "School of the Soldier," where they are taught to walk, talk and look like a soldier. Then they are taught how to fire a weapon, throw a hand grenade, handle a machine gun, and all those other things that have to do with being soldier, but which they cannot do until they know how to be a soldier.

In spite of the image drill sergeants have for being hard-nosed, merciless, and overly-demanding, I found them to be highly respected individuals. The soldiers I was with saw them as "caring," as having a total commitment to the task of training civilians to be soldiers. "We do what our drill sergeant expects of us," soldier after soldier told me, "because they set the standard of excellence for us to begin with." The same soldiers told me that their drill sergeants "make us want to be winners in all aspects of our training." This is certainly evident by the fact that all of the soldiers I was with passed every test they were required to take to graduate and thereby earn the privilege of wearing the coveted infantry cord on their dress green uniform.

It can be said without question that the soldiers were motivated to do their vey best during their 13 weeks of training, and that their drill sergeants played an integral part in their training and in their success.

Several weeks before the soldiers I was with graduated, I asked them some questions about their training. The questions were approved by their commander, but were asked, and answered, in privacy.

I first asked them why they joined the Army. Some joined for the cash bonus offered if they agreed to serve with in a particular military specialty, in their case, the 10th Mountain Division. of course, they had to meet other requirements for the bonus, including scoring higher than 50 on the Armed Services vocational aptitude battery test, be a high school graduate, and successfully complete the 13 weeks of Infantry One Station Unit Training. When they graduated, they received half of the bonus, the rest was paid in equal monthly payments thereafter.

A good number of the soldiers enlisted because of the educational benefits. All new enlistees are automatically enrolled in the new GI Bill. Each man is counseled at the reception center on the benefits of this program. He must then decide if he wants to remain in it or be disenrolled. Those who elect to stay in it will contribute $100 monthly from their base pay for 12 months.

Two-year enlistees receive $7,800 matching funds, plus their contributin of $1,200 for a total of $9,000.

Three- to four-year enlistees receive $9,600 matching funds, plus their contribution of $1,200, for a total of $10,800.

Soldiers who do not use their benefits will not be authorized repayment of their $1,200 contribution.

Many of the soldiers I was with also chose to participate in the Army College Fund, offered if they agreed to serve with the 10th Mountain Division for three years. This offered them the opportunity to get thousands more dollars for their education.

Patriotism was an important factor in the enlistment of virtually every soldier I spoke with. They thought a man should be willing to serve his country in some branch of the Armed Forces, telling me "the freedoms we have in this country are worth living and dying for.

And there were some men who enlisted, as they told me, "to see the world." I was surprised when some of them told me they had never been more than 100 miles from their home up to the time they enlisted in the Army.

Finally, there were some men in the company with prior military service. After being discharged and going home, they found they missed the military life.

The second question I asked them was why they chose the infantry over some other branch of the Army. Most of the soldiers gave me two answers:

Their Army recruiter convinced them that they would advance more quickly in the infantry.

They were likewise convinced that the infantry training they were receiving would provide them with more marketable skills than any other area of the Army.

My third question was asked of just those who signed up for the bonus. I asked them if they would have enlisted in the infantry if it had not been offered to them. Only 10 percent of them said no, their reason being that their families needed the money they hoped to make. The rest of them told me that it made no difference. They accepted it because they were not particularly interested in the educational benefits, but felt they could qualify for the bonus and make some extra money.

"What are you most proud of as far as your training is concerned?" was my next questions. I received the following replies:

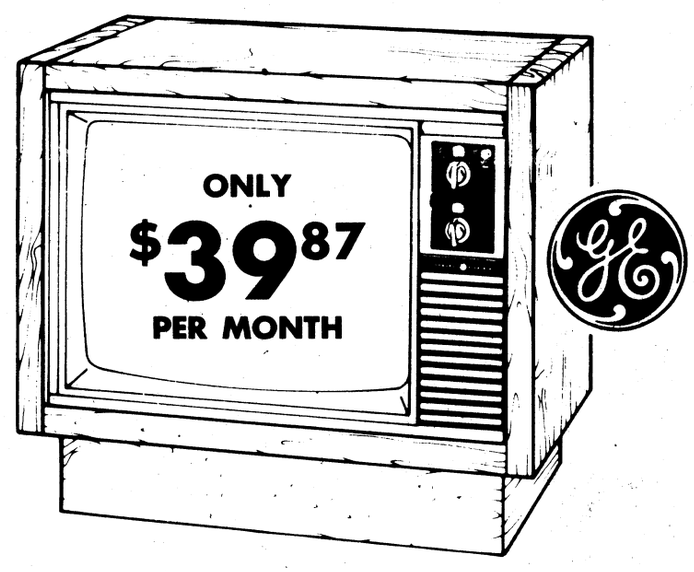
• Many of the soldiers told me that they had never held a rifle in their hands until after they enlisted, and that they experienced a real satisfaction when they qualified as an expert rifleman, or as a sharpshooter, or as a marksman.

• To a man, they were pleased that they had competent drill sergeants training them.

• All of them enjoyed their tactical field training, but admitted that the hot, humid weather was a factor that affected their endurance.

• They were pleased with their ability to handle stress and still complete the tasks they had to carry out.

• Losing excess weight and building up muscle.



I came away from Fort benning, and more specifically, the training company I was with at Sand Hill, very impressed with today's Army infantry. The instructors, commissioned and non-commissioned alike, are quality men who have been specially selected and trained to work with new infantry recruits and turn them into well-disciplined, physically fit, and highly-motivated infantry soldiers.

The soldiers I was with were, from the very start of their training, determined to become the best infantry soldiers possible.

Two Benning officers inducted into OCS Hall of Fame

Col. David D. Watson III, president of the U.S. Army Infantry Board and a recent inductee into the OCS Hall of Fame, takes care of some work in his office.

Program honors graduates who go on to make important contributions in life

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

Last week 43 officers were inducted into the Officer Candidate School's Hall of Fame here.

The Hall of Fame was established in 1958 to honor graduates of the OCS program who have distinguished themselves in military or civilian pursuits. One of the criteria for selection into the Hall of Fame is that the soldier attain the rank of colonel while serving on active duty or in a reserve component.

Fort Benning's Col. Harvey D. Watson III and Col. Franklin W. Trapnell are OCS graduates who recently attained the rank of colonel and were inducted into the Hall of Fame.

Watson came to post a year ago as the president of the U.S. Army Infantry Board.

"I could say there have been many satisfying times. There have also been some frustrating times, but as I look out into the civilian realm I don't see anything that can provide the variety of challenges the Army does," Watson said.

Watson is pleased to have his name in Wigley Hall.

"Obviously I'm flatterd. I'm humbled by the fact that someone saw fit to nominate me for the Hall of Fame," he said.

It may have been Watson's firm belief in hard work that helped him receive the nomination. "If you work hard, you can do whatever you want," he said. He is one man who lives his own philosophy.

Upon completion of OCS in 1967, Watson's first duty assignment was at the Florida Ranger Camp.

"I've had three assignments as an instructor and I think teaching is a very satisfying experience," Watson said. "Being with soldiers and watching them achieve is obviously one of the most satisfying times," he added.

Watson has also had teaching experience at the United States Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. While at the Academy he taught general psychology and research methods and statistics.

He qualified as an instructor through years of hard work and plenty of time on the learning side of the educational desk. "I have a doctorate in psychology. I think it's interesting to note that I have gotten all of my education while on active duty in the Army. So you see, it can be done if you want an education," Watson said.

The 42-year-old soldier has been in the Army for 20 years and was promoted to colonel in September. He says that he enjoys his position at the Infantry Board.

"It's as much of a challenge as Iv'e ever had," he said. "However, the job I've got right now presents an absolute wealth of opportunities to confront challenges," Watson said.

Challenges are not new to Watson. His duty assignments before coming to Fort Benning a year ago include Vietnam, Korea, Germany and Fort Carson, Colo.

Among Watson's decorations are the Silver Star, the Bronze Star with "V" device, the Meritorious Service Medal and two Air Medals.

Watson looks forward to the coming years in the Army. "They tell me that the second 20 years are better than the first and I'm into my second 20 years now," Watson said.

Fort Benning's other inductee is also into the second 20 years of his Amry service.

Col. Franklin W. Trapnell is the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command's Systems Manager for the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle.

Trapnell, who graduated OCS in 1963 after serving in the enlisted ranks for 1 ½ years was promoted to colonel last year. "I've been kicking around the Army for more than 30 years now. I think I qualify as an old soldier," Trapnell said.

Trapnell's brown eyes turn serious when he talks about "his baby," the Bradley. "We've needed the Bradley for 20 years. It's really getting a bum rap from the media," he said.

The colonel is sincere in his faith in the vehicle. "From 1982 to 1984 I was commander of the 2nd Army's first Bradley battalion. I've been doing Bradley and nothing but Bradley for the past five years, so I think I know what I'm doing," Trapnell said.

Trapnell's military career speaks for itself. He served in Vietnam and Germany and his stateside tours include Fort Bragg, N.C., Fort Hood, Texas, and Fort Stewart, Ga.

His military awards include the Bronze Star, the Presidential Unit Citation, an Air Medal, the Vietnam Service Medal, the Vietnam Campaign Medal and various foreign awards.

Fort Benning Rugby Club gears up for spring season

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet sports writer

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby Football Club is anxiously awaiting the season opener against Kennasaw College in Atlanta Feb. 28.

But the local action is set to begin in a scrimmage Feb. 21 against the Columbus Rugby Club.

This year's nine-week season could host as many as 15 games with tournament play beginning as early as April.

Stillwell Field, across from the Briant Wells Field House on post, will serve as the Flyers' home field.

Last year the Flyers proved to be contenders among the rugby elite, closing the season second in the Georgia Rugby Union Division Two, and placing 10th in the Military Nationals, where more than 30 teams competed.

This season the Flyers will hit the field with a new look.

"Our team sponsor, Col. Paul Chinen, through the Association of the U. S. Army, assisted the club in getting new jerseys, which will represent Fort Benning," said Steve Tennant, team president.

The Flyers welcome all who wish to jon the Rugby Club, ranging from the novice to the pro, those here for a short time and those permanently assigned.

"To provide playing time for the beginners or those who will not be here for the entire season, we organized both "A" and "B" side teams," said Coach Steve Gouthro.

The Flyers have been a part of Fort Benning for 12 years. Those who wish to become a part of the proud tradition should contact Coach Gouthro at 544-3616 or 545-3675.

Unit tries Tae Kwan Do for PT

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Chuck Norris, watch out. Soldiers from Company C, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division are taking Tae Kwan Do lessons as part of their unit physical training program.

Kicks, punches and blocks fly through the air every Tuesday and Thursday morning at Sand Hill's Santiago Gym when more than 50 "Mountaineers" practice the age-old Korean martial art.

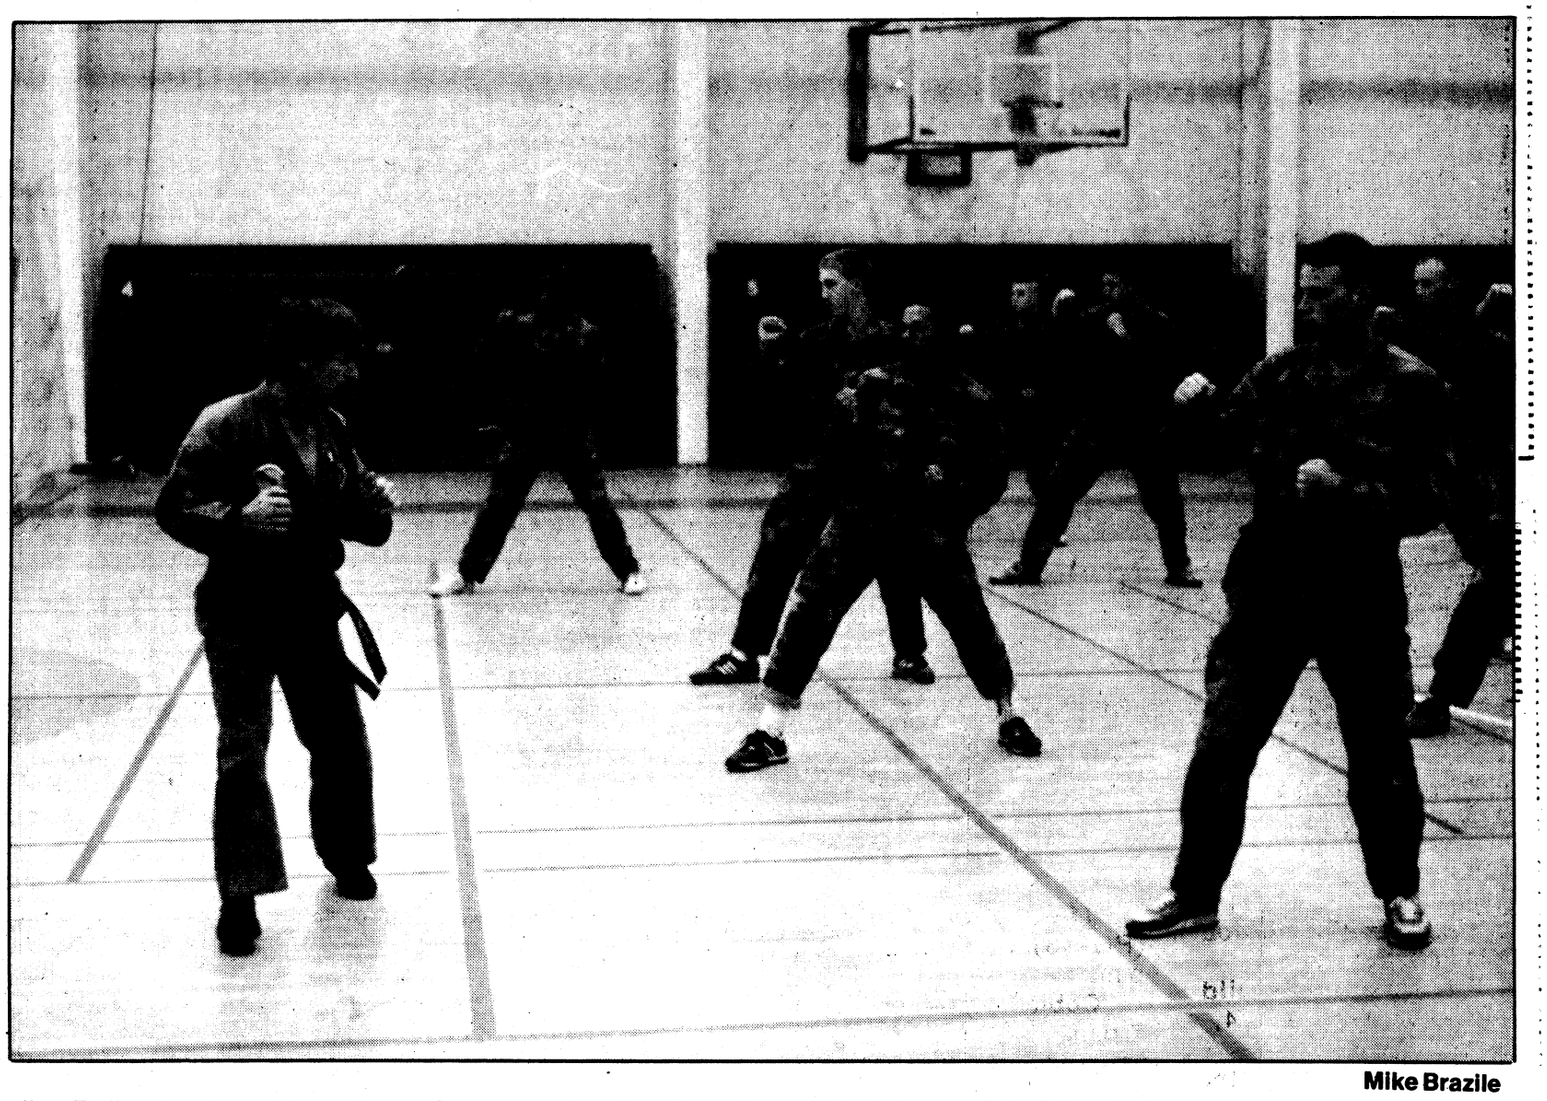
"I originally wanted to set up this program for after-duty hours, but when I talked to the first sergeant and the commanding officer they said set it up for volunteers in lieu of morning PT two days a week.

"I did and the response was great," said SSgt. Robert Florek, the non-commissioned officer in charge of the program and a squad leader in Charlie Company.

Florek contacted Jim Bolles, who is a civil service electrician at Fort Benning during the day and an instructor at his own Tae Kwan Do Academy at night, to provide the instruction.

Bolles, a third degree black belt with 13 years experience in the martial arts, jumped at Florek's invitation to teach and the program got underway three weeks ago.

"I've never taught soldiers before, but I've really enjoyed it so far. These guys are motivated and eager to learn. They're making fast progress and I hope to start testing for proficiency in the near future," Bolles said.



Bolles charges the soldiers $2 each for every lesson and if the soldier has a prior commitment or cannot attend the lesson then there is no charge. Company C's first sergeant stressed that the program is strictly voluntary and does not exempt any of the participants from the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division's PT standards.

"This program is a great PT alternative twice a week for our soldiers. The commander and I support it 100 percent. It broadens our physical training program and standards," said 1st Sgt. George Coleman.

"Most of the soldiers taking Tae Kwan Do have to work out on their own to keep their PT standards up, so these guys are really working."

"I really enjoy this program. We get a good workout and it helps our hand-to-hand combat skills," PFC Ken Phillips said, during Tuesday's practice.

"This is a way for soldiers to stay in shape, have fun and learn a valuable skill," Florek said.

"We are expecting a great turnout for the races, and I am looking forward to the event," Laurie Lester, Jekyll Island's new superintendent of recreation, said. "I understand that the soldiers, running in formation, chanting, singing and carrying flags, really add an interesting and exciting aspect to the race."

European meet tough competition

Recently, the results of the East European armies Orienteering Championships were released by the International Orienteering Federation. Teams and individuals from Bulgaria, East Germany, Hungry and the USSR competed in the meet outside Krakow, Poland Sept. 5 and 6, 1986.

Although the runs are quite different, it is interesting to compare their winning times with those of the NATO Confederation of Interallied Reserve Officers in Greece, last summer, the USAIC 1986 Championships and the F.D. Roosevelt "A" Meet in November of 1986.

There are differences you need to note in the length and climb of the courses, the length of time that Orienteering has been taught and the emphasis placed on it within each of the countries. All but the CIOR competitions were on Orienteering maps, although it is traditionally held on a 1:15,000 Orienteering map, it was held on sections of a 1:15,000 aerial photograph, which made for a unique competition.

Apprentice program helps candidates gain experience

By Matt Woodbery
The School Brigade

It isn't often that one finds an experience that offers on-the-job training, a chance to be the "fly on the wall," and still function as a full team member. Recently I was afforded just such an experience.

During January, I served as an Army chaplain candidate at Fort Benning, Ga.

The program is designed to provide candidates an opportunity to experience the ministry in the military in all of its diverse forms.

My time included counseling soldiers and their families, conducting class briefings at the Infantry School, hospital visitation, assisting in post-wide projects such as rewriting the chaplain section mobilization plans and designing an exhibit for Chaplain Appreciation Week.

The Army candidate program requires that the active-duty training period be no less than 12 days, and no more than 45 days in order to provide comprehensive OER's.

My "mentor chaplain" was a fellow United Methodist, Chaplain (Maj.) Greg Hill, whose insight and leadership I greatly benefitted from. But chances are that candidates will be working with chaplains from other Christian traditions, just as they will work with candidates from a variety of traditions.

I found my experience to be personally challenging as I was given real opportunities for ministry as a chaplain candidate, as well as being held accountable as an officer in the U.S. Army. The experience was also an opportunity for the chaplains of Fort Benning to showcase the ministry of the Army Chaplaincy, whose ministry I recognize as vital and necessary.

Prayer breakfast planned for Feb. 26

Fort Benning's monthly prayer breakfast is set for Feb. 26. from 6:30 to 7:30 a.m. at The Infantry Center Chapel annex. Dr. (Maj.) Gary Goforth, chief of Aviation Medicine at Martin Army Community Hospital will speak on his recent medical missionary trip to Nigeria. Everyone is invited to attend. For more information, call 545-2050.

Bible study groups cover variety of topics

The Protestant Women of the Chapel offer Bible study classes on several subject.

Classes include: "Free to Be Thin — A Spiritual Discipline for Weight Control" taught by Joby Bird; "The Pursuit of Holiness" to be led by Denise Brice; "A Study in the Book of 1st John" (Precepts) instructed by Nancy Andre and the very popular "Mothers of Preschoolers," taught by Dackie Blackwell and Terry Cairnes.

The group meets Thursdays from 9 to 11:30 a.m. at the Religious Education Center on Ingersoll Street at Dixie Road.

A nursery is always provided. Children ages 2 through 5 are offered crafts, Christian film strips and Bible stories.

PWOC offers a wide range of subjects and activities to interest all Christian women.

For more information, call the chapel office at 545-2050.

Center offers instruction on natural birth control

Classes on natural family planning are currently being offered at the Religious Education Center.

The method taught is the Sympto-Thermal Method. This is considered the most complete method available and is safe and effective.

For more information, call David or Rosemary Jaswa at 561-2242 or Phil Reilly at 545-2771 or 545-5508.

Tax tips

American Forces Information Service

Filing a Form 1040, 1040A or even the 11-line Form 1040EZ can be an ordeal if prepared in haste at the last minute.

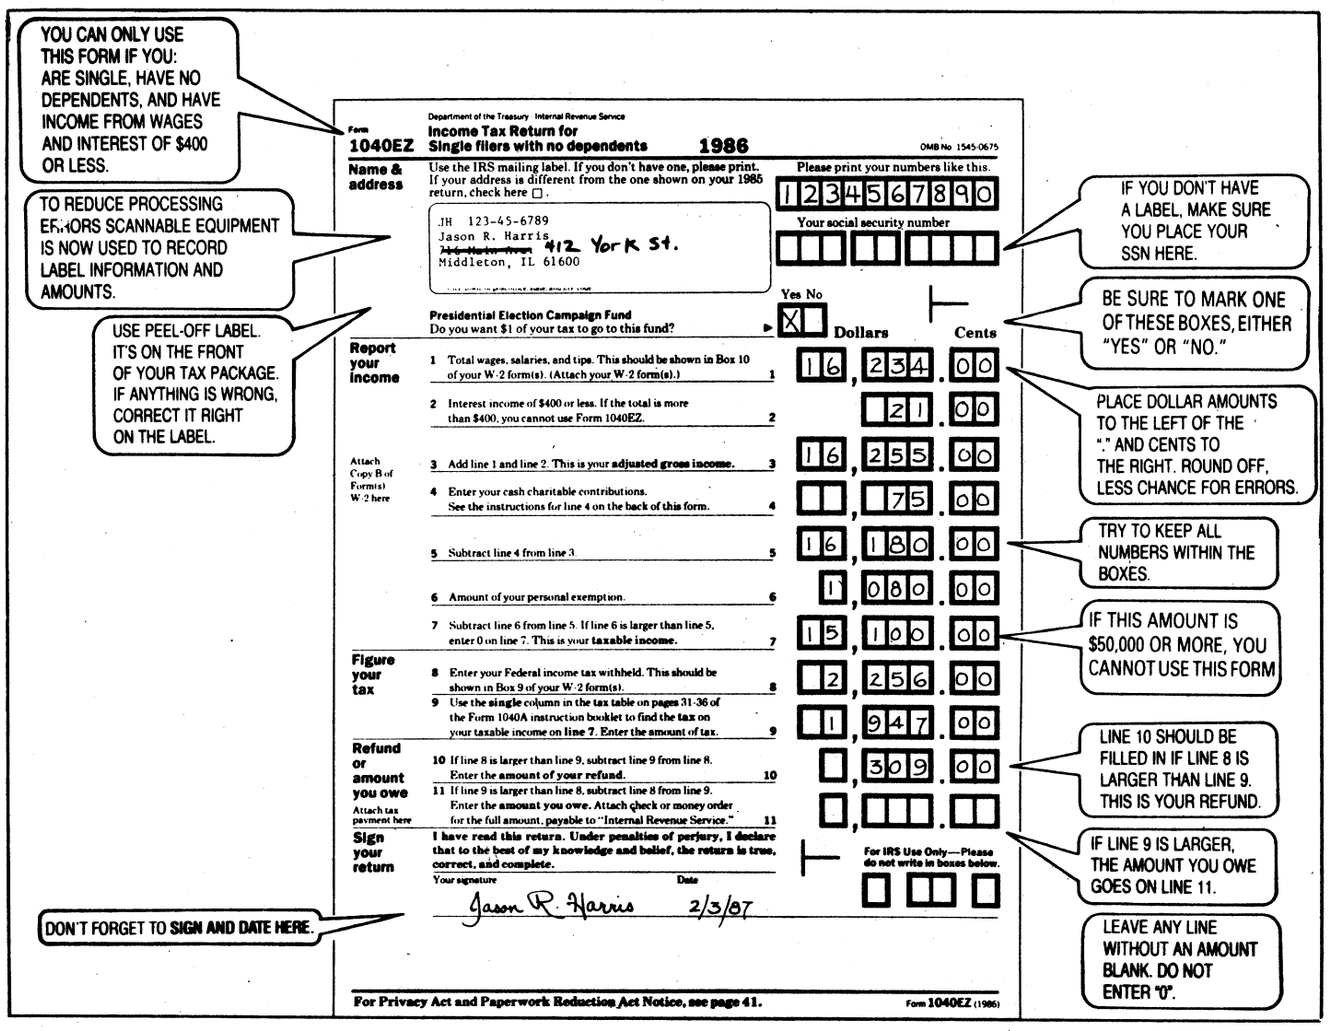
Through the years the Internal Revenue Service has seen a trend in filing practices. Some taxpayers file as soon as they receive their tax return packages, Form W-2 and interest information notices. Others prefer to wait until the last minute when running shoes are a necessity to ensure timely filing before midnight on April 15.

However, those who wait until the last minute might find that preparing their returns earlier — even if only a week or a few days — could make a big difference.

Preparing the return over a two- or three-week period will lessen the chances for mistakes as taxpayers will be more relaxed and take more time in completing the form and appropriate supporting schedules.

Taking time in preparing an income tax return will reduce the possibility of making errors, and can help taxpayers discover credits or deductions for which they qualify and might have otherwise missed.

Of course, many file close to the filing deadline because they must wait for certain necessary forms like Form W-2, Wage and Tax Statement, or Form 1099-INT, Statement for Recipients of Interest Income.



The IRS advises these taxpayers, if they haven't already received their statements, to contact the employer or payer and request that the form be issued.

There is also a toll-free telephone number that you can call for assistance. In Georgia and Alabama, the number is 1-800-424-1040.

When contacting the IRS, taxpayers will be asked to provide the employer's name, address and employer identification number. Having the necessary information available on the first contact, IRS adds, will prevent the need for taxpayers to call again.

Those waiting for Forms 1099-INT should note that they should not attach this form to their completed returns. All that is required is the payment information from the forms; so if the taxpayer has kept accurate records or can get the information from the issuing company, he can file without having received the form.

The important thing to remember about filing a federal income tax return is to file by April 15 and ensure that the correct postage is affixed to the envelope. Thicker returns, IRS advises, usually containing more than four items (i.e. Form 1040 and three attachments), will require extra postage. Returns that are sent back to taxpayers for additional postage will not be considered timely filed tax returns even if they were originally mailed on April 15th.

Ask the 'judge'

Editor's note: These are questions the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate commonly responds to while counseling clients. Though accurate, the answers that are given are not to be considered a substitute for advice from an attorney. If you have a legal problem that you cannot resolve, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment.

Legal Assistance

Q: My husband and I are thinking about getting a divorce. My friends tell me that I can force my husband to make a separation agreement at JAG and that after two years it becomes a divorce, and that I can get a divorce at JAG. Are they right?

A: Often, clients come into legal assistance demanding a separation agreement, expecting that the lawyer who represents them to order their spouse (if a military member) to sign a separation agreement. A legal assistance attorney can't do that! Your spouse also has the right to seek legal counsel concerning a separation agreement.

A separation agreement never becomes a divorce. However, the terms of a separation agreement can be included in a divorce decree, if the civilian judge or jury that grants the divorce decides to.

It is not the policy of the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Office to represent military members in divorce actions. To get a divorce, you must get a civilian lawyer. The Legal Assistance Office has a list of attorneys who practice in the Columbus area, which includes their areas of concentration.

Q: I returned some Chritmas presents during the first week of January, but the store has still not taken the charges off of my account? What can I do to keep from being billed for these things?

A: "Open end" credit accounts such as credit cards, revolving charge accounts and overdraft checking, are covered by the Fair Credit Billing Act, which was passed in 1975. The law covers billing errors such as changes not made by an authorized user, charges incorrectly listed, charges for items not received, computation errors, failure to reflect payments or returns, charges for which you request an explanation, and failure to receive a bill at your current address (provided you give a change of address 20 days before the billing period ends).

The law requires you to send a written notice to the company within 60 days of the date on which the bill was mailed. Include your name, account number, a statement that there was a billing error, the amount involved, and the reasons why you believe there is a mistake.

In order to prove that the letter was mailed, you need to send it through certified mail, with a return receipt requested. The company has 30 days in which to send you a notice that they have received your inquiry. They must conduct an investigation and resolve the problem, or send you an explanation as to why they believe the bill is correct, within two billing cycles, or 90 days.

While the investigation is in progress, you may withhold payment of the amount in dispute and the finance charges placed on that amount. The company may not take any legal action to collect this amount or attempt to close your account while the dispute is being settled.

If you have additional questions about the Fair Credit Billing Act and how it might apply to your situation, please contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 or 545-3282 and make an appointment to discuss your situation with one of the attorneys.

MSG promotion board scheduled to meet June 2

Military Personnel Center

A Department of the Army Selection Board will convene at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., June 2 to consider soldiers for promotion to master sergeant, Military Personnel Center officials announced recently.

The board will also review records of soldiers for possible elimination under the Qualitative Management Program.

Sergeants first class with dates of rank of Oct. 31, 1983, and earlier, and basic entry service dates, basic active service dates before Jan. 1, 1980, will be eligible for consideration. A soldier must also have a high school diploma or General Education Degree equivalent.

Soldiers who have approved retirement dates before June 2 or approved bars to reenlistment are not eligible for consideration. Sergeants first class with dates or rank of April 1, 1981, or later who have not completed an Advanced Non-commissioned Officer Course are not eligible either.

The board will also screen sergeants first class meeting the date of rank and service date criteria above for QMP. Those who have approved retirement dates before June 2 or approved bars to reenlistment will not be considered for QMP.

Any required evaluation reports must be sent to Commander, USAEREC, attn: PCRE-RE, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. 46249-5301, by May 22.

The boards require original Personnel Qualification Records — DA Forms 2A and 2-1 — for all soldiers eligible for consideration in any category. Fort Harrison must receive the records by March 30.

Soldiers may get copies of their Official Military Personnel Files by writing to Commander, USAEREC, attn: PCRE-RF-I, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. 46249-5301. Requests must include full name, complete social security number, correct return address and soldier's signature.

Forward OMPF update material following AR 640-10. Documents must have the soldier's full name.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

With February designated Crime Prevention Month, the Fort Benning Military Police Activity's goal is to make the local community aware of the crimes that occur and how everyone can work together to prevent them.

The loss of government and private property, due to larceny, is staggering. The cost to the individual and the U.S. Army affects us all. That is why there is an urgent need for all of us to participate in "Operation Identification." This system is simple and only requires a little time on your part to ensure the safety of your valuables.

High-value items are of primary concern. Stereos, televisions, bicycles and other items can be easily marked for identification. These items should be marked in a way that they can be easily identified, without damaging or destroying your property.

This will have two major effects: a thief will be less likely to steal property that has been marked because of the difficulty in disposing of the marked item. In the event that a marked item is recovered, it will be easy to return it to its owner, and possibly solve the crime through an investigation.

The Fort Benning Crime Prevention Section, in the Provost Marshal's Office, Building 215, is ready to assist you. They will provide you with an engraver, identification stickers, and tips on preventive measures you can take. Feel free to stop in or call 545-7115, or 545-7154.

Army regulations specify that unit commanders will ensure that all high-value items owned and stored in the unit billets by service members will be marked and recorded on DA Form 4986, better known as the "High Value Item Sheet." Frequent updates and inspections must be accomplished to maintain an accurate record of these items.

Changes to preference statement make assignment decisions easier

Military Personnel Center

Changes to management documents at the Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va., have made the new Automated Officer Preference Statement more valuable to the officer and MILPERCEN assignment officers, according to a Center spokesman.

Placing the preference information in MILPERCEN computer data banks makes this information immediately available to the career manager through computer terminals and the Officer Records Brief. Assignment officers are now able to scan their entire population in a matter of minutes to help identify officers who desire a particular location or duty preference.

The Officer Preference Statement, in use for nearly two years, is a self-contained mark-sense form used by officers to indicate their individual preferences, schooling desires and family considerations. It includes instructions, codes and a free-form comment sheet.

"A valuable feature of the new automated form is that assignment preference information is now recorded in Section X, Remarks, of the Officer Record Brief," the official said. In minutes an assignment officer can now review numerous ORBs to see if an officer's background, expertise and preference warrant a complete file review against a projected vacancy, he added.

Another feature is the listing of officer preference in assignment officer's management books (a listing of officers available for reassignment by date of availability). These books are used extensively by all assignment managers in the assignment process.

More than ever before, officer assignment preference is easily brought into the assignment process. Assignment officers in the past may have stopped at the first file they pulled when finding a preference that matched a specific vacancy.

Today, because of automation, every officer who has submitted a preference statement automatically has his file pulled by the assignment officer.

Officers are encouraged to submit statements (DA Form 483) within the following time frames:

- Approximately 12 months prior to completion of a long overseas tour.
- Upon arrival in a short tour area.
- Approximately one year after reporting to a CONUS duty station.
- Within 60 days of beginning a course of instruction at a military service school; a civilian institution; or training with industry that require a permanent change of station in the continential United States.

Parents can help teens avoid drugs

Derus Media Service Inc.

FORT MONROE, VA. (TNS) — Two years ago, a Public Television outreach project called "The Chemical People" brought the issue of school-age drug and alcohol abuse to the forefront of community concern.

The two-part broadcast, hosted by first lady Nancy Reagan, included a unique outreach program that resulted in the formation of thousands of voluntary community task forces across the nation. The program focused on a problem that is still with us — substance abuse by youngsters.

There are many avenues open to concerned parents who may be experiencing this problem with their children. Many communities have hot lines, parent groups, school drug abuse programs, and religious activities to help deal with the problem. In addition, many hospitals and private physicians offer health care and counseling services.

Following are steps parents can take to combat drug dependence by their children — before it is too late.

- Talk with your child about alcohol. Parents can intervene to help change mistaken ideas their children may have obtained from peers.
- Learn to really listen to your child. Children are more likely to communicate when they receive positive cues.
- Help your child feel good about himself. Self-regard is enhanced when parents praise efforts, not just accomplishments.
- Help your child develop strong values. A strong value system can give children the courage to make decisions based on facts rather than pressure from friends.
- Be a good role model or example. Parents' drinking habits and attitudes may strongly influence their children's perceptions.
- Help your pre-teen deal with peer pressure. Children who have been taught to be gentle and loving may need parental "permission" to say no to negative peer pressure.
- Set specific rules against alcohol use, and specify the consequences of breaking those rules.
- Encourage healthy, creative hobbies and school events to prevent children from experimenting with drugs out of boredom.
- Team up with other parents by joining in support events to prevent children from experimenting with drugs out of boredom.
- Know what to do if you suspect a problem.

VA Q&A

Veterans Administration

Editor's note: The following are representative questions answered daily by counselors at the Veterans Adminstration. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q — I plan to travel overseas to visit the grave site of a close relative of mine who was killed in action in World War II. Do I have to pay a fee to obtain a passport?

A — No. Immediate members of the family (widows, parents, children, sisters, brothers and guardians) of veterans buried in or commemorated on the Tablets of Missing of the permanent American military cemeteries of foreign soil may be eligible for "Non-fee or Fee-free" passports. For more information you should write to the American Battle Monuments Commission, Room 5127, Pulaski Building, 20 Massachusetts Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. 20314.

Q — My husband has been rated 100 percent for his service-connected disability and has been receiving compensation for the last 15 years. If he dies from other than service-connected causes, will I be entitled to Disability Indemnity Compensation?

A — Yes. The widow of any veteran who was in receipt of 100 percent compensation for service-connected disabilities for 10 or more years immediately prior to death, is entitled to receive DIC benefits, regardless of the cause of death.

Q — Must I make a downpayment when I buy a home using the Veterans Administration's home loan guaranty program?

A — The VA seldom requires any downpayment in connection with a VA-guaranteed loan. One exception is when the veteran chooses a loan with graduated payments. The other is when the veteran pays more for a home than the amount the VA has determined to be its reasonable value. VA will not guarantee a loan larger than the reasonable value of the home. In that case the veteran must certify that the difference between the sale price and the reasonable value is being paid in cash without any borrowing.

Q — Are lenders required to notify the Veterans Administration if a veteran defaults on a VA-guaranteed loan?

A — Yes. Notice must be forwarded to VA within 45 days after an installment has been unpaid.

Local center offers teens safe, drug-free place to party

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

The Bradley Teen Center in Columbus has a Fort Benning connection in the form of family-member-teen-agers enjoying the actvities there. Director Jack Key III would like to see more Fort Benning youths use the Center.

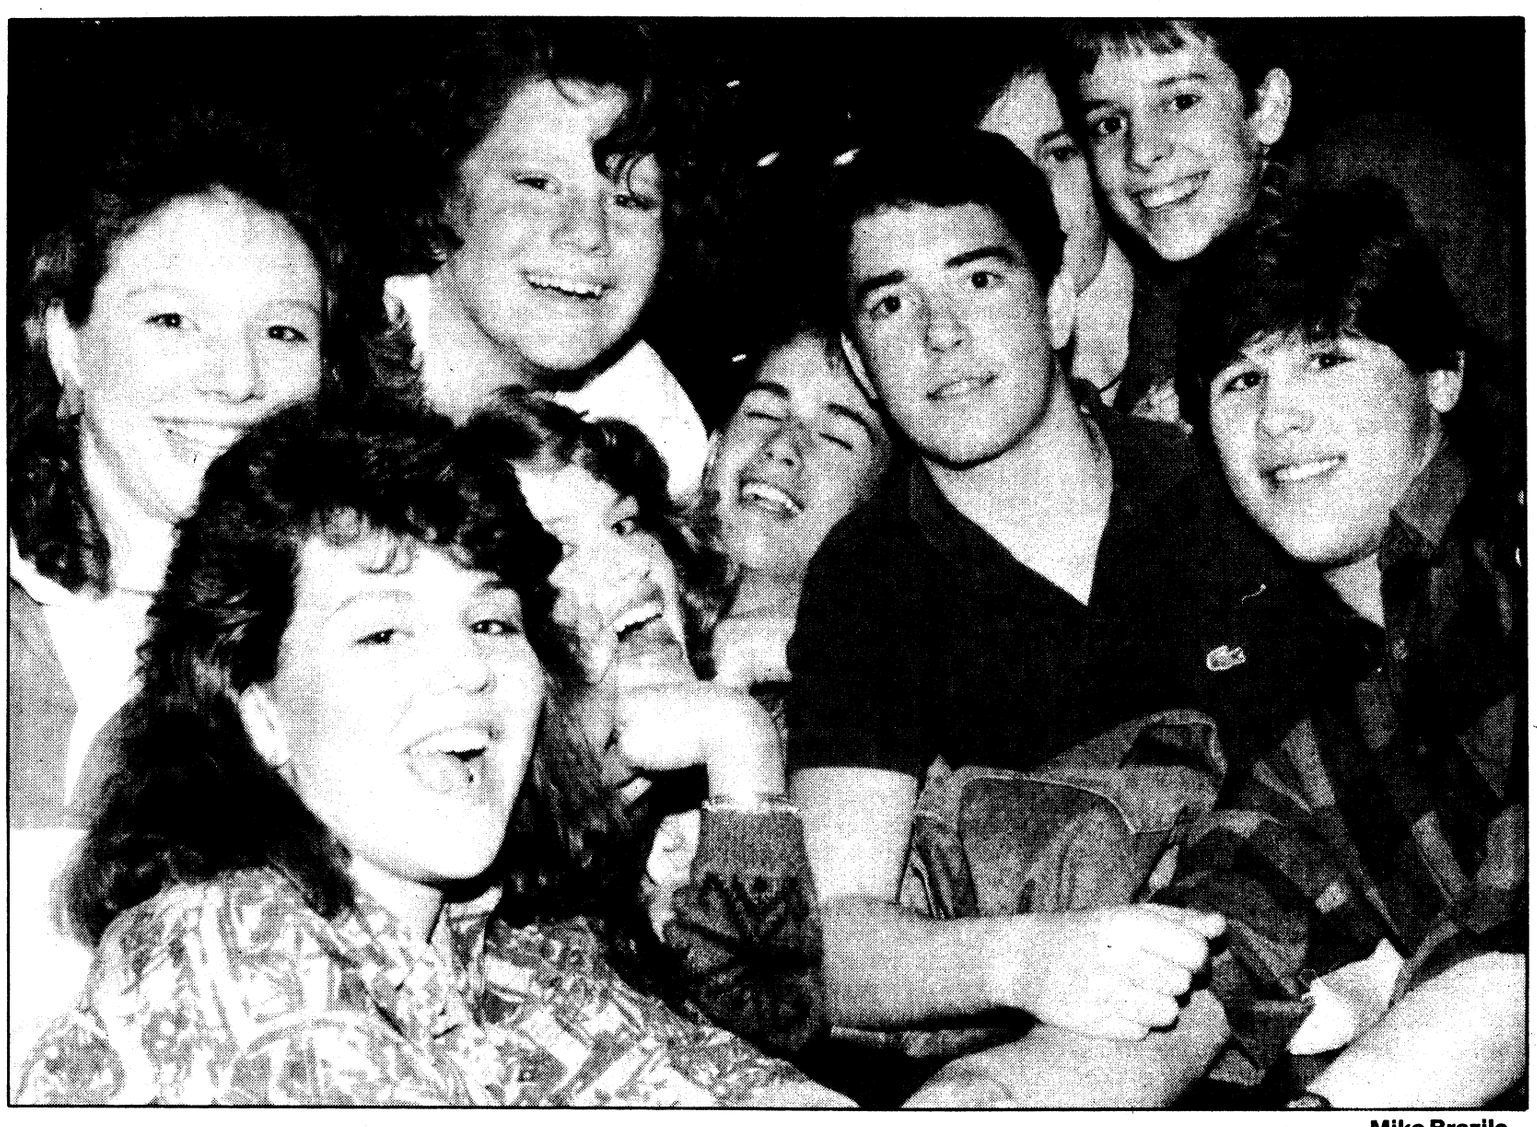
"We get a lot of kids from Spencer High and many from Faith Middle School who are Fort Benning family members. We'd like to see more kids from Benning because we think we have a lot to offer," said Key, who has been with the Center, on Broadway Street, since it opened in May 1986.

According to Key, the Center's primary selling point is an environment that is alcohol- and drug-free where kids can relax and have fun. "We allow no drugs, alcohol or tobacco on the premises. This makes for a relaxed atmosphere because the kids are not in a peer-pressure situation where they feel they have to drink, do drugs or smoke to have fun and be accepted," Key said.

The Center, the brainchild of the Columbus Task Force for Drug Free Youth, wanted to establish a place for teen-agers to have fun in a place free of drugs and alcohol. Key said parents like this idea and the idea of the Center.

"Parents like our wholesome environment. They also like the security we provide for their kids while the kids are having fun," Key said.

Two off-duty Columbus police officers are posted outside the entrance to the Center to control entry and exit. Inside, security guards are constantly present to enforce the rules of the Bradley, centered around no drugs, alcohol or fights.



The Center's main attraction for teen-agers is the dance floor and music.

"Kids like to dance so we put a focus on music and dancing," Key said.

The core of this focus is a $130,000 sound, lighting and special effects system that keeps the 350-person capacity dance floor "...full almost all of the time," Key said.

In addition to dancing, the Bradley boasts a video screen near the dance floor for music videos, a 250-person movie theatre showing two contemporary movies each Friday and Saturday night; a concession area tht sells pizza, snacks and soft drinks; two television screens that feature sporting events and video tapes and special events.

"Our special events center around the kids and their interests. Three weeks ago, for example, the Arnold Jr. High School Drill Team put on an eight-minute routine for us. We currently have a lip-sync contest going on and we had a Valentine's Day dance," Key said.

The Center requires all students to have either a school identification card or a Bradley Teen Center ID showing a student's name, school and grade for screening purposes at the entrance.

"Friday nights are for 7th and 8th grade and some 9th grade students. Saturdays are for grades 9 through 12. We keep the two groups apart so they can pursue their age-group interests. We also check IDs to ensure only teen-age kids in school are coming in. We don't want older teen-agers who aren't in school coming to the Bradley," Key said.

Admission to the Bradley is $4 and entitles a teen-ager to use the entire facility except for playing video games and buying food items.

"We have one of the finest facilities in the Southeast. I think Fort Benning teen-agers would enjoy the Bradley and I wish more would come," Key said.

Know warning signs, help prevent suicide

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Johnny was 25, married, and had a one-year old daughter. His father died some years earlier but, his mother, brother and two sisters remained very close.

Johnny had back trouble and was unable to work. He began spending time by himself but that was okay, Johnny did that sometimes.

One day while Johnny was at his mother's house, his sister tried phoning, but there was no answer. That evening when the family trickled in they saw signs that he had been there, but no Johnny.

His cousin went down to the basement and found him — dead. He had hung himself with a rope on one of the pipes. No one in his family knew he felt like that; no one had a clue.

His sister Sandy said, "I knew he was worried after his back went out but we would have stuck by him. We always have before."

According to the Channing L. Bete Company, Inc., in America today between 25,000 and 30,000 deaths are attributed to suicide each year.

Suicide — not a nice word, not a word people want to hear, but educating people about the warning signs and directing them to places where they can find help can prevent it.

During a recent visit to Fort Benning, Maj Robert Thomas, suicide prevention action officer, deputy chief of staff of personnel said, "The Army is aware of the need for people to be educated on suicide prevention." At present, Thomas is working a Department of the Army circular to be used as a guideline for installations to create their own plan.

According to Capt. Wynn P. Baldock, chief of the Pschological Service, Department of Psychiatry, Martin Army Community Hospital, suicide is not perceived as a problem on post, but the command is concerned about it.

"Although attempts or gestures are made," said Baldock, "When you ask the patients, they normally didn't want to kill themselves."

Baldock stressed communication as a "biggie" in suicide prevention. He also recommended several agencies available to the soldier or family member.

Army Community Service, Social Work Services and the Family Life Center are available to everyone, he said.

The Family Life Center offers professional counseling, enrichment opportunities and pastoral care. They deal with such areas as communication skills, raising children, coping with stress and relationships.

The center, located in Building 2606 on Dixie Road. For an appointment, call 545-1760 or drop by.

The center and chaplain services are where people are normally referred to fo suicide prevention informtion, Baldock said.

The Community Mental Health Center is open to active duty soldiers, who can call for an appointment at 545-1717.

CONTACT is a local hotline available to people who need to talk to someone about problems. The number is 327-3999.

"The need for a hotline on post was looked into," Baldock said, "but it was found that CONTACT served the needs of the community."

He said there is also a psychologist on call 24 hours a day at MACH.

According to a study done at the Brigham Young University Personal Development Center, there are times when the pressures of life are so intolerable to some people that suicide is seriously considered. This is known as a suicidal crisis. It usually passes when the pressures are gone or when the person is able to cope. Because this is an extremely dangerous time, expert help and reassurance is needed during this period.

The BYU study lists four main types of crisis that people should be aware of.

Number one is impulsive suicidal behavior, when in the heat of anger, disappointment or frustration some people react with suicidal impulses.

For example, a jilted young man may run out in front of a car; a girl angry at her parents may take an overdose of sleeping pills or cut her wrists. Although these may be temporary crises, they should be recognized as dangerous situations and treated accordingly.

Another type crisis comes when a person feels life is no longer worth living. This person is in a deep depression and may not realize that these feelings will go away, given time and help. People in this condition should be encouraged not to do anything rash and to seek professional help immediately.

Very serious illnesses make some people suicide risks. When a person is in constant pain or believes his illness is incurable, he will sometimes resort to suicide. It may see easier on loved ones, but in reality, suicide in these cases just causes more pain for the survivors.

The fourth type, "communication suicides" occur when a person attempts to communicate a message by using suicide. This happens when a person is trying to change a person's mind in a divorce or separation. The suicidal person does not realize that threats of this nature only increase personal problems by arousing guilt and hostility in the person he wants to influence.

The BYU study says that suicides can be prevented if you know what signs to look for. These include repeated talk of death or suicide threats. "I can't stand it any longer. I want to die," are common statements.

People planning for their death or absence by making a will should be watched. This alone is not cause for alarm but when accompanied by suicidal threats or chronic unhappiness, are indications of suicide.

Other signs of suicidal behavior are chronic sleeplessness, loss of weight, withdrawal from social contacts, loss of sex drive or when a person shows abrupt disinterest in hobbies or just doesn't seem quite their normal self.

In situations such as these, the BYU study recommends that professional help be sought.

"The big message is there are better ways of dealing with depression and help is available," Baldock said.

Instead of taking aspirin for headache, try relaxing

by Gail Braymen
Inside The Turret

FORT MONROE, VA. (TNS) — If you've got a headache this BIG, don't automatically pop an aspirin — try relaxing.

Dr. Anne Brennan, an assistant professor of psychology at the Unversity of Louisville, Ky., is conducting a study of the effect of biofeedback and relaxation techniques on headaches. Her individual subjects have now undergone eight biofeedback sessions, and preliminary results are good, she reported.

Brennan used only married women for her study of sufferers of chronic headaches because "women tend to get more headaches than men" and "a close relationship with a person such as a husband can be a main source of headache — causing tension."

Originally, Brennan planned to compare the effects of biofeedback on headaches versus her treatment method — marital and stress counseling. Eventually, the two concepts merged.

For her study, Brennan first allowed the women to talk about stressful situations while the biofeedback machine monitored their muscle tension.

"As we talk about her problems, her tension level goes up, and she's able to see it's going up," Brennan said. "Biofeedback lets her become aware of her muscle tension and know what it feels like."

The women were also taught relaxation techniques to lessen muscle tension, thereby avoiding or reducing the severity of their headaches. The key to using relaxation for headaches, Brennan said, is to learn to relax before you have one, or during a stressful, headache — producing situation.

"Relaxation is a skill," agreed Dr. Willard Whitehead, a University of Louisville psychiatry instructor. "Unless you've practiced it a lot, you won't be able to use it that effectively.

"It's like trying to go out and play basketball without having learned to dribble. You have to put in your time and practice for it to work."

Because of their biofeedback training, they recognized headache — causing muscle tension. Brennan made the training more effective by making it harder for her subjects to relax during their sessions.

"The problem with most biofeedback is that patients learn to relax under ideal conditions, like a quiet room with low lights, and then they can't relax during stressful conditons," she said. "I try to make conditions in the lab less ideal, so they will learn to relax under conditions similar to those at home that cause the headaches.

"During their sessions, I play tapes of them talking about arguing with their husbands, or whatever is causing their headaches. They learn to relax while the tape is playing."

Relaxing is "easy to do," said Whitehead. "I have my patients sit down, close their eyes, concentrate on their breathing, and clear their minds of disturbing thoughts. It takes 10-15 minutes two or three times a day to practice.

"Relaxation can be pretty useful, in general, for chronic pain."

Besides reducing the number and severity of their headaches, Brennan has noticed that her patients often have done something about the original source of their pain.

Training evaluation

A review of the Army's Individual Training Evaluation Program is now taking place at the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command at Fort Monroe, Va. However, the Army's Individual Training Evaluation program structure for 1987 will continue.

This applies to soldiers scheduled to take the Skill Qualification Test, the Common Task Test and the commander's evaluation.

Actions required to support ITEP should continue, said Maj. Dick Hayford of the Training Directorate in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans at the Pentagon.

The three primary ITEP methods used to evaluate the individual soldier's skill proficiency are the CIT, SQT and the commander's evaluation.

Special operations

Special operations forces are growing, and the Army needs qualified sergeants and above to apply for special forces training and assignment.

"Special operations, Career Management Field 18 is a non-accession CMF. Therefore, recruiting and filling of the requirements must come from within the current force," said Capt. Ray Michalak of the Military Personnel Center's enlisted infantry, armor branch.

Duties within the field primarily involve participation in special operations in unconventional warfare, foreign internal defense, strike operations, strategic reconnaissance and counter terrorism.

"Mental and physical qualifications are among the most demanding in the Army," said Michalak. "There is strong emphasis placed on analytical ability, detailed recall, stamina, agility and endurance."

Duties of a special operations soldiers place a high premium on knowledge of conventional light infantry doctrine, expertise in low intensity conflict and unconventional tactics and include participation in waterborne, desert, jungle, mountain and winter operations.

Prerequisites concerning CMF 18 can be found in AR 614-200 (paragraph 6-15).

Additional information can be obtained from the MILPERCEN Special Operations Professional Development NCO. MSgt. Henix, Autovon 221-8340, or Commercial (202) 325-8340.

ID cards confiscated

Beginning March 1, Army and Air Force Exchange Service personnel will confiscate expired or altered identification cards if they are presented to gain exchange privileges. "We used to deny exchange privileges to holders or expired or altered cards until good cards were reissued," said Col. Robert Finkel, AAFES chief of public affairs.

"The new policy puts us in line with what many other installation activities do and better protects exchange privileges for everyone."

Customers whose cards are confiscated will receive receipts that should be presented to installation pass and identification offices to obtain new IDs.

"If you have an expired card, we'll ask for your card, direct you to the issuing office and give you their telephone number. If you show an altered card, we'll ask for your card and the activity manager will ask for an explanation," Finkel explained.

"Our people will also remind you if your card is due for reissue in 60 days or less," Finkel said. "Whatever the case, we'll try to handle the situation with good judgment and tact."

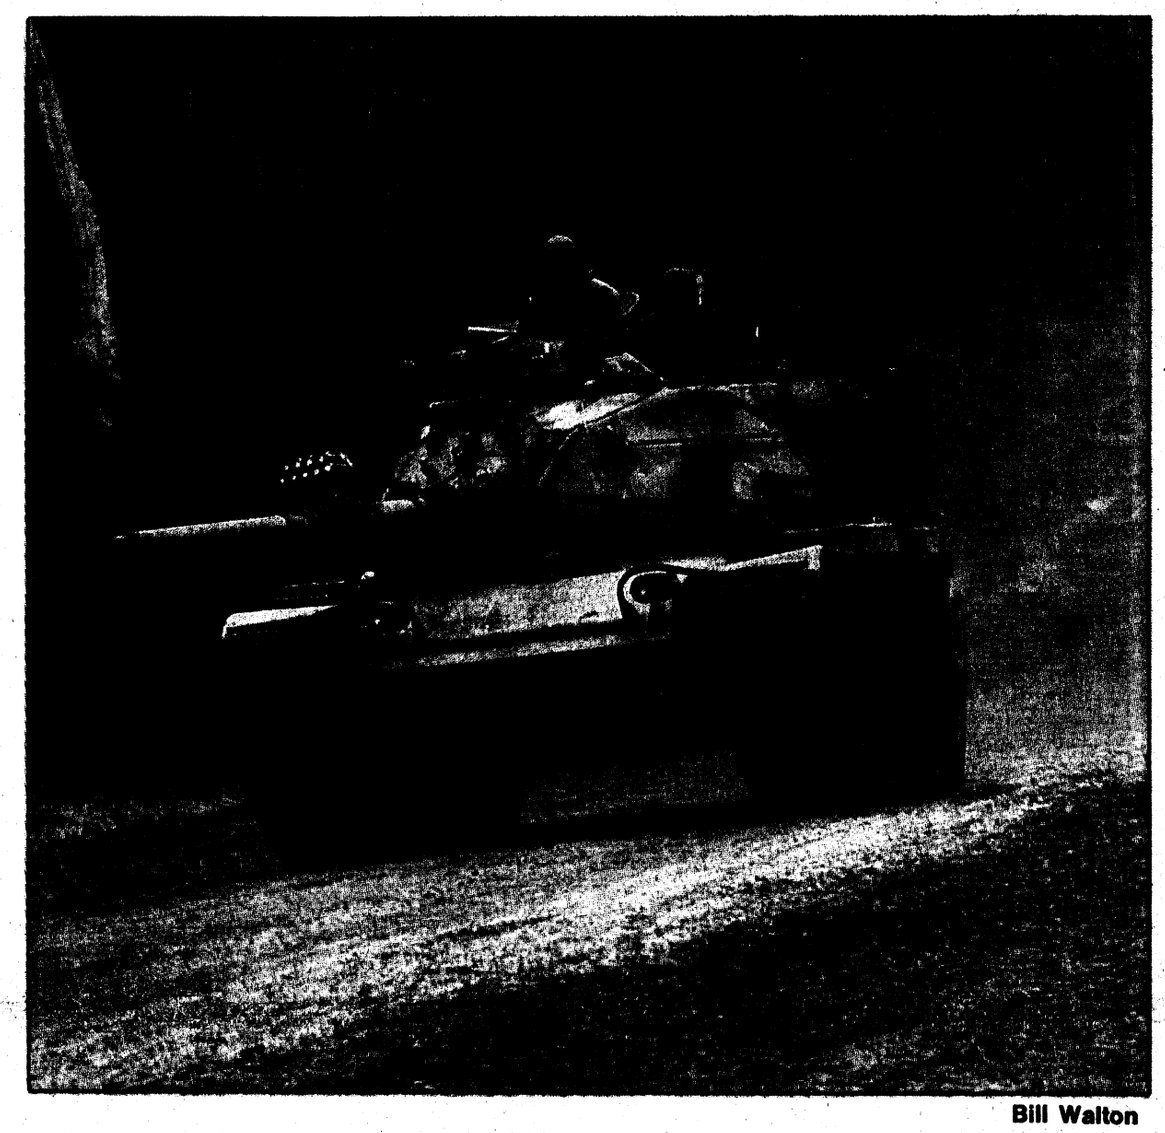
197th improves skills with 'Sledgehammer'

Extra training opportunity expected to pay big dividends when Brigade deploys to NTC

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The more than 7,000 soldiers and airmen that participated in Operation Sledgehammer I here recently packed a lot of training into the week-long exercise.

"One of the goals of the field training exercise was to determine if this type of exercise could be conducted and supported here on Fort Benning," said Capt. Eric Schwarz of the 197th Infantry Brigade operations section. "Within certain limits, we were able to combine all the operational and logistics support aspects of a major deployment."



During the first days of the exercise, units reinforced their capability to roll out to the field fully equipped to perform combat and support operations. Combat arms units faced day and night battles, while support elements put in long hours to perform their varied missions.

One highlight of the FTX was a live-fire exercise, which began with indirect artillery fire against simulated targets on Fort Benning's Cactus Range, and a strike by Air Force attack aircraft in a demonstration of coordinated air and artillery support.

This was followed by a live-fire of a tube-launched, optically-sighted, wire-guided missile and mechanized infantry and armor direct fire engagements.

"The Brigade benefitted from the training through the practice and improvement of procedures for conducting this type of joint operations with other units," Schwarz added.

The Brigade will use these improved skills during upcoming deployments to Canada and the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

Fort Benning stages post-wide tornado drill

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

With sirens blasting and telephones ringing, Fort Benning, in conjunction with Georgia's Tornado Awareness Week Feb. 23 through 27, tested its tornado warning system Wednesday.

"April, May and June are, historically, the major time of year for tornadoes in Georgia. Tornadoes are a fact and can hit any time and any place. This test was to ensure that all commands and activities on post know what to do in the event of a tornado or severe weather," said J.R. Addington, the project officer for the Infantry Center's storm plan test.

The test began with a tornado watch from the National Weather Service in Atlanta, which issued the watch for the entire state, meaning a tornado is possible. Benning's Detchment 10, 5th Weather Squadron, U.S. Air Force relayed the watch warning to the post. Approximately 30 minutes later Detachment 10 issued a post tornado warning to the Directorate of Security, meaning a tornado has been visually seen or spotted on radar.

"Once the warning was issued all directorates and activities were notified on the Emergency Radio Net, over the telephone or by the post siren systems sounding," Addington said.

The siren warning consisted of a steady five-minute warning to alert post personnel not warned by telephone or radio that a tornado warning was in effect. The exercise was terminated by an "all clear" siren sounding, consisting of three two-minute soundings at one minute intervals.

During a tornado drill emergency teams are activated from the 36th Engineer Group, the 197th Infantry Brigade, the 34th Medical Battalion and the Public Affairs Office. These teams are organized into configurations such as heavy and light mobile rescue squads, a water supply team, an electric lighting team, a food service team, a mortuary team, medical teams and a public affairs team and would be used in the event of a tornado disaster to assist post personnel and residents.

According to the National Weather Service, 20 tornadoes will develop over Georgia during 1987 and will primarily occur during March, April and May.

"Tornadoes are a reality in Georgia. This test ensured that Fort Benning is prepared in the event of an actual tornado. Tornadoes are serious business and can hit in a matter of minutes. Not being prepared and not knowing what to do in the event of a tornado could result in tragedy," Addington said.

Here's what to do when siren sounds

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

You're on post, you hear a 5-minute long blast on the Benning siren system and you realize it's a tornado warning. What do you do?

When a tornado threatens, your immediate action can save your life. Stay away from windows, doors and outside walls. Protect your head.

In homes and small buildings you should go to the basement or to an interior part on the lowest level. Small interior rooms without windows such as closets, bathrooms or interior halls are safest.

In schools, nursing homes, hospitals, factories and shopping centers go to pre-designated shelter areas. Interior hallways on the lowest level are usually best.

In high-rise buildings go to interior small rooms or hallways. This probably saved numerous lives and injuries on May 3, 1984 when the side of a six story office building was torn off by a tornado in the Atlanta area. Because the office personnel were warned and had taken cover in the interior halls, no one was injured.

Motorists, slow down!

Military police out in full force to catch speeders

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Military policeman SP4 Ronald Burke is making a routine patrol suddenly, whoosh, a van zips by. The radar shows the driver is doing traveling at 69 mph in a 55 mile-an-hour-zone.

The patrolman puts his car in overdrive and takes off in hot pursuit after the offender, signals the driver to pull over to the side of the road and issues a ticket for speeding.

Similiar scenarios happen several times a day on Fort Benning and the Military Police Activity is actively combating the problem.

According to SFC Gary Leeds, assistant operations sergeant at the MPA, recent statistics show 1,544 citations have been issued for speeding since the beginning of the year. Of those, 758 went to soldiers and 796 to civilians. The figures average out to approximately 30 tickets issued daily.

"Of the tickets issued to civilians," Leeds said, "it's a mixture of people, some employed on post and others just passing through."

According to Leeds, the soldiers that speed do not fall into one category either. He said there is no one rank group that speeds the most. However, recently many senior noncommissioned officers and officers and company-grade officers have been cited.

Leeds said a captain was "clocked" driving 47 mph in a clearly marked 35 mph zone. "That is a $50 fine right there," he said.

According to Georgia Statute 40-6-181, exceeding the speed limit by one to 10 mph calls for a $30 fine; 11 to 21 mph calls for a $50 fine and those who chose to travel more than 21 mph over the speed limit will face a mandatory court appearance.

Leeds said some of the big problem areas on post are Dixie Road, Eddy Bridge, Custer Road, Highway 27, and I-85.

"Speeding in school zones is still a problem," he said, "even though flashing warning lights and signs with the hours in effect have been installed in most zones.

"People are simply not allowing themselves enough time to get to physical training formations, work or other commitments," Leeds said.

"PT mornings are the worst," he said, "especially in the area around Infantry Hall."

Leeds said on mornings that most units have PT the MPs are out in full force and the problem areas are saturated with radar devices.

"The crackdown has been in effect since mid-September and as a result there has been a noticable decrease in speed related accidents," Leeds said.

Speeders beware, the MPs have an eye out for you! Allow yourself enough driving time to get to your destination and the tendency to speed will be lessened.

Opinion

Reader sees reality in movie 'Platoon'

Dear Editor:

Having read Brig. Gen. McCaffrey's comments about the movie "Platoon" in last week's Bayonet, I feel compelled to comment from the point of view of one who was there as an enlisted infantryman in 1966 with the 1st Brigade, 101st Airborne in I and II Corps areas, as a combat aviator in III Corps in 1969 and as one who now has no official ax to grind.

"Platoon" claims to depict one soldier's view of his 12-month tour as a grunt in 1968. By necessity, the significant events of that tour are compressed into two hours of devastating reality. By necessity, the long interludes between those events in which our soldiers had time to reflect upon what they had experienced and time to fear what was to come, are reduced to a few scenes.

I was never witness to the murder of fellow soldiers, or of prisoners or civilian noncombatants. But that does not mean that such incidents did not happen. I knew officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers who were under such stress that they would have committed the same acts given similar circumstances.

I did witness the physical abuse and intimidation that was depicted. I did see apathy and indifference among inexperienced lieutenants and sergeants, who evidently lacked the moral fiber that we wish for in our leaders.

I didn't see these things all the time in all our leaders. Most were like the company commander in "Platoon," in control of themselves and those in the immediate vicinity, and desperately seeking to guide and safeguard the lives of those elements that were at the edge of disaster.

I didn't see the rampant use of drugs in 1968, but I did see mild versions in 1969 among the support folks in an aviation battalion. There's ample evidence that drug abuse was widespread and prevasive.

McCaffrey is right about the love soldiers felt for their comrades and some leaders. Where such love existed, it was based upon mutual trust and confidence that each would behave ethically and in the best interests of both mission and men.

As a former soldier and leader, to me this movie accurately depicts what happens when that trust and confidence is betrayed by unethical or immoral conduct, particularly among leaders. It is precisely this type of activity that planted those seeds of doubt, guilt and psychological anguish that continue to haunt the veteran with a conscience.

Before I retired and until I saw "Platoon," I felt much as McCaffrey does. I had tucked those memories into a secured closet and sandbagged the door, not only because it was a way to cope, but because it is virtually impossible to share the experience with our young soldiers and developing leaders without tearing ourselves apart.

I am thankful for the reminder of reality provided by "Platoon." I recommend it to wives, daughters and mothers of those veterans who are or were troubled and in despair from that experience. It may help them understand.

I recommend it to all infantry officers and NCOs who have yet to witness violence and mass death. I would recommend command-sponsored discussion, including veterans who volunteer to discuss what happened, what was good or bad as depicted by the film, why it was good or bad, and what should have been done to stop the tragedies depicted.

While I can empathize with McCaffrey, especially in his position of public trust, and I understand his defense of the Army as an institution, I don't think it is in the best interests of your readers to deny that these problems didn't surface with disturbing frequency in our combat units.

Our Army cannot be better in the future if we deny our past.

Editor reflects on tour at Benning

Dawn Kilpatrick

As I prepare to leave Fort Benning, I find I'm taking a look at the last 15 months. I think looking back over a tour, its high points and low points, is pretty natural for most people. As a newspaper editor, though, I have the opportunity to share my observations with all my loyal readers (and there really are some out there.)

Undoubtedly, one of the most satisfying aspects of the last months has been my position as The Bayonet editor. Although I've been a newspaper editor for years, the position here was the most challenging because I had the chance to make some rather dynamic changes. The most obvious of these to the reader is the format of the paper. So far, we have heard primarily favorable responses. That's good. I hope the paper serves its readers better now than ever before.

Serving the reader is the sole purpose for having a post newspaper and if The Bayonet accomplishes that, we are doing our job.

The guidance for carrying out the mission comes from exceptional leadership. In the Public Affairs Office, that inspiration is provided by Lt. Col. Anthony Caggiano. He cares about all soldiers, the ones that work for him and the ones that read the paper. Always mindful of the community's needs, the colonel is solely responsible for offering me the chance to give you a good newspaper. He has faith in the non-commissioned officer corps and he is the epitome of an Army officer.

Good leadership is the first ingredient in an award-winning recipe. The next crucial element is a good staff. Although the road was a bit rocky at times over the last months, the soldiers and civilians that are The Bayonet staff are dedicated and hard-working.

They were there with the 10th Mountain Division in the jungles of Panama. They were there in the frozen wasteland of Dugway Proving Grounds with the Rangers. They were on the side of the mountain in Dahlonega, Ga., with the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry. They go where Fort Benning goes so that they may better tell the story of The Home of the Infantry.

There is another side of The Bayonet that most readers know nothing about. Our paper is published by the R.W. Page Corporation, the same publisher for the Columbus Ledger and Enquirer newspapers. There are some valuable people there who are share our concern for our paper. All of the people behind the scenes are really the ones who make the paper happen each week. Without the men in the production department, headed up by Joe Rivais, The Bayonet would not be. Their careful consideration over the last months has made my job much easier and I will certainly miss them.

There is much I will miss about Fort Benning as I move on. The people, however, those I worked for and those I worked with, will be the greatest loss.

Although my tour here has been a relatively short one, I believe I accomplished a great deal in that time. The nature of the business, however, always leaves more to be done.

I will use the knowledge gained here and the lessons learned here to be a better soldier, leader and newspaper editor in my next assignment, which, by the way is with the Western Command at Fort Shafter, Hawaii. That is the real beauty in dedicating your life to serving our country in the armed forces — always an opportunity to excel, to learn, to broaden horizons.

I must share one last story before I leave. When I arrived at Fort Benning, I wasn't overwhelmed with happiness. I had served with various Forces Command units at Fort Bragg, N.C., for six years and Training and Doctrine Command was a mystery to me. I recall grumbling one day about my lot in life and one of my colleagues in the Public Affairs Office, a wisened old retired warrant officer, reminded me that there are only two good assignments in the Army — the one you just left and the one you're going to. I'll always think of that as a truly profound observation of human nature and our inability to recognize something good when we have it.

As I move on, I'm passing my responsibilities, although not my desk, to Becky Obert, the assistant editor. She's ready to take on the world, or at least the small portion of it that affects you — our readers.

I wonder if I'll complain about the white, sandy beaches on Waikiki and wish I was back in Georgia? Somehow, I think not. Aloha.

Key to strength lies in weapons' superiority

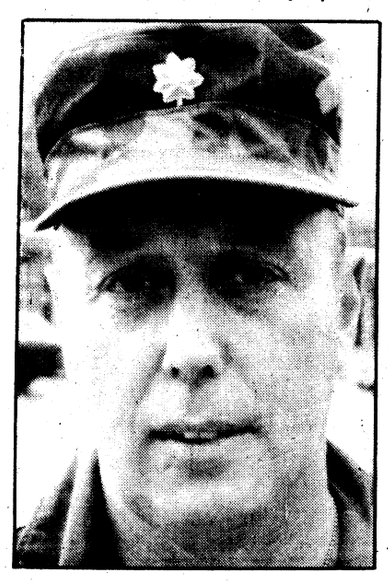
Association of the U.S. Army

For a generation, the security of the United States has rested on its strategic nuclear capability as the key to deterrence. But conditions have changed considerably in the past decade.

First and foremost, the Soviet Union has achieved nuclear parity and, in doing, has built a massive nuclear arsenal. The potential for mutual destruction is a haunting reality, which leads us to seek other ways to guarantee security and deterrence.

As the relative reliance on nuclear weapons decreases between the United States and the Soviet Union, the weight of deterrence will shift increasingly to conventional forces with a greater dependence on landpower.

Sadly, however, U.S. conventional forces today are not prepared for this shift. Army modernization is only a little more than one-third complete, yet successful deterrence without resort to nuclear weapons requires our conventional forces to be significantly strengthened and modernized.



NATO is the keystone to our worldwide defense structure; but even the most cursory assessments show that NATO conventional forces today are not as well equipped as Soviet and Warsaw Pact forces and this situation is not improving. The fact remains that the Soviets continue modernizing at a faster pace than the U.S. or its allies and, consequently, are better organized and equipped to exploit their conventional superiority.

To counter the Warsaw Pact quantitative edge, Army planners have sought measures that would significantly enhance the effectiveness of our conventional forces. Their major conclusions were that, while much of the technology required for a conventional defense initiative already exists, the United States has been slow in taking advantage of it. These conventional force improvements are feasible today. They are seriously curtailed, however, by lack of funding.

The present reduction in our defense budget clouds the whole issue, but the future credibility of U.S. forces demands immediate attention. We simply cannot afford to let our conventional forces gradually slip to lower and lower relative levels vis-a-vis the Soviets. If we do, we will surely pay dearly.

36th Engineer Group

The 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge), 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, was in the field last week as a part of its annual Army Training Readiness Evaluation Program on post.

However, the 586th also played a big roll in the largest Field Training Exercise on Fort Benning since 1965 at the same time the ARTEP was being conducted, according to 1st Lt. Kenneth Young, the executive officer of the engineer company.

Shawn Bryson

PFC Kevin Brown digs in near the field training exercise site.

"We supported the 'Sledgehammer I' exercise a number of different ways," the XO said. "Our company provided the 197th Infantry Brigade with bridging support. We constructed our assault float bridge on one of the night missions so that the tanks could cross the Chattahoochee." The 586th also supplied the float bridge during daylight exercises Young said.

Aside from the primary mission of bridging, the soldiers from the 586th brought their combat engineering skills into play during the support mission. The engineers were tasked to use their dozers to dig defensive fighting positions for the tanks from the 197th according to Young.

Young said the fighting positions enabled the tanks to fire with a lower profile, which made the positions like foxholes.

The executive officer also said that the 586th filled its roll in the exercise very well. "We are getting a lot of training in our Military Occupational Specialties and are getting evaluated at the same time, which makes the FTX and support mission a really exciting and valuable exercise." — Shawn Bryson, 36th Engineer Group correspondent.

The 29th Infantry Regiment Weapons Department is looking for quality instructors to conduct the new U.S. Army Infantry School's Sniper Course, which is scheduled to begin July 11.

Individuals who have sniper experience or have attended a sniper course in the past are prime candidates for this mission.

Applicants should be highly motivated expert marksmen who are well versed in individual movement techniques and target detection.

To apply, interested personnel in the grades E-4 through E-7 are asked to contact SFC Knox, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry at 544-6006 or 545-6985 to arrange for an interview. — 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

USARSA

Thirty-eight Lakeside High School students from Eufaula, Ala., toured the U.S. Army School of the Americas recently.

The students, who are studying first and second-year conversatinal Spanish, were briefed on USARSA's mission and spoke Spanish with the school's staff and faculty while on their tour.

The students received an audio-visual presentation on the Republic of Chile presented by Capt. Pedro Olid and SSgt. Pedro Inostroza, guest instructors at USARSA.

As part of their intercultural exchange and probably the highlight of their tour, the Lakeside students ate lunch with about 70 cadets from the Dominician Republic who were out in the woods conducting land navigation training.

Unaware the students were joining them for lunch, the Dominican cadets, most of them 18 to 20 years old, looked up at the blue school bus pulling up to the training site.

"That's when he cadets realized there were American people close to their age-group stepping out of the bus," said Maj. Leslie Verde, chief, general subjects, Department of Combat Operations USARSA. "They quickly set aside all language and cultural barriers and made friends," Verde said.

As the cadets ate their Meals, Ready to Eat, the students nibbled at their sack lunches all the while exchanging addresses, Spanish and English phrases and past experiences in each other's native country.

Boarding their school bus heading back to Eufaula that same afternoon, Spanish teacher and chaperone Claudia Methvin said, "This is the second year we've visited USARSA and both times have been very culturally enlightening."

USARSA Commandant Col. Miguel A. Garcia presented the students with a plaque at the end of their tour.

"Our students really enjoy the language and cultural interchange and talk about their visit long after we've returned to Eufaula," Ms. Methvin said. "I hope to continue making this trip to Fort Benning and USARSA in the future," she added. — Marco Morales, U.S. Army School of the Americas correspondent.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

You lay your checkbook down for just a moment. When you turn around, it's gone. Perhaps your wallet or your purse is missing, also. You call the military police.

There is no physical evidence to determine the thief, and now you're in a bind. Soon, your checks start turning up all over post with a forged signature and you are forced to prove you did not write them. Does this sound familiar? It's beginning to sound too familiar to Fort Benning law enforcement officials.

Recently, there has been an increase in stolen checkbooks and fraudulently negotiated checks. These checks are being cashed all over post and the thiefs are successful.

Not only does it cause problems for the victims, but it causes unit commanders and directors to spend a great deal of time assisting in resolving the problem.

Now, how can you prevent this from happening to you? Fiirst, you must realize that even though these checks are not actual funds and your information may even be printed on them, it's not difficult to produce supporting identification. Realizing this, it is necessesary to take precautionary measures to secure checkbooks.

Around the work place, a checkbook should never be left unsecured. Do not leave your checkbooks in plain view in your car, and, by all means, lock your car. Always be aware of where your checkbook is when you are in a public place. If you have to lay it down, keep it in visual contact at all times.

It's tough enough to manage money with today's inflation. Don't jeapordize your financial well-being by giving a thief access to your funds.

Candidates needed for mayoral elections

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Community Life Office is looking for a few good candidates for the upcoming mayoral elections slated for April 10.

According to Fort Benning's Community Life officer, Maj. Jerry Latta, "The mayoral program can have a significant influence on the day-to-day lives of people at Fort Benning. The military provides a wealth of services to soldiers and family members. Full use of these services can only be achieved by publicizing the services.

"That's the role of the mayor, to coordinate what the community needs with the agencies providing these needed services. The mayors are the community's number one volunteer."

Each community has its own campaign and elections are then held to decide who each community's mayor will be. These mayors, who each represent one of Fort Benning's six communities, provide service to more than 4,000 soldiers and family members living in post housing. They need the community's support in order to serve the community.

This support comes in the form of volunteers from the community who assist the mayor in getting things done for their respective community. These volunteers serve as the mayor's link to the rest of the community and provide a two-way channel for information going to and from the mayor.

Pat Sneed, Director of the Volunteer Resource Center, had praise for Fort Benning's mayors. "The job of mayor is demanding but very gratifying. These women are working, as volunteers, on the behalf of their communities. The mayors are a vital link in getting out information and helping to solve community problems. They are the 'Big Communicators' for the communities."

The payoff for mayors, according to Latta, is "Feeling satisfaction in bettering their community, whether it's a big project or just helping a small group of children getting their community playground fixed up."

For more information on the Fort Benning mayoral program and on the coming election, call the Community Life Office at 545-2910, 2830 or 1389.

Positive attitude vital to success as community mayor

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Diane Gravatt has been serving as mayor of Fort Benning's South Main Post community for 18 months. She says to be a positive mayor who gets things done, a positive attitude is necessary.

"Serving as a mayor involves being the link between the command and on-post residents. To be positive, to be effective, you have to have a positive attitude. You're neither an advocate nor adversary. You're more of an ombudsman, having community problems brought to you and contacting an agency for assistance," she said.

Mrs. Gravatt stresses the "community" in community problems.

"As a mayor you have to make sure that problems brought to you for action are community problems. If one family is experiencing a specific problem it probably doesn't fit in as a community problem. But if a number of families are experiencing the same problem, that constitutes a community problem," Mrs. Gravatt said.

The day-to-day problems a mayor deals with are as simple as drainage areas needing repair to complex issues such as relocating 150 families while their houses are rewired.

"As a mayor, I deal with the quality of life on Fort Benning and in my community. I live in the community where I serve as mayor and I see and experience the problems that the rest of the community residents experience. It's gratifying to help my neighbors and community," Mrs. Gravatt said.

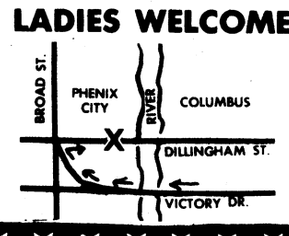
Mrs. Gravatt stressed the importance of a mayor having active support from the community.

"I put together a mayor's council with what I call a 'street representative' for each street on South Main Post. They let me know what's going on, any problems they're having and it keeps the line of communication open. The street reps keep me informed of what's going on," she said.

Mrs. Gravatt's advice to a new mayor just coming onboard is to listen to the community to see what it needs, ensure that problems acted upon are community and not individual problems and to know and understand the military system and Fort Benning agencies that provide assistance.

"Another thing mayors have to keep in mind in oneness. They have to think in terms of Fort Benning as one large community with many needs to be met and not just think in terms of the needs of their own specific community," Mrs. Gravatt said.

Energy



By Rodney Carroll
Fort Benning Energy Office

Too much. Too fast, Too wastefully. Too complacently. That's how energy is being used, and the consumer is just now beginning to pay the price.

Too many unfortunate circumstances have occured that almost entirely wiped out any interest in conservation or any belief that there is an energy problem.

Regardless of what seems to be the situation, the United States face a serious problem, and the longer the nation waits to confront it, the more critical it becomes. Since the 1973 Arab oil embargo, the United States increased its imports from 36 percent to 52 percent in 1977. Imagine what effect an embargo would have on the nation now!

The more dependent the United States becomes on Middle East oil, the more it is at the mercy of the Oil Producing Export Countries cartel. If the United States imports more than 50 percent of its oil and OPEC prices rise, the country can obviously expect gasoline and other fuel costs to rise.

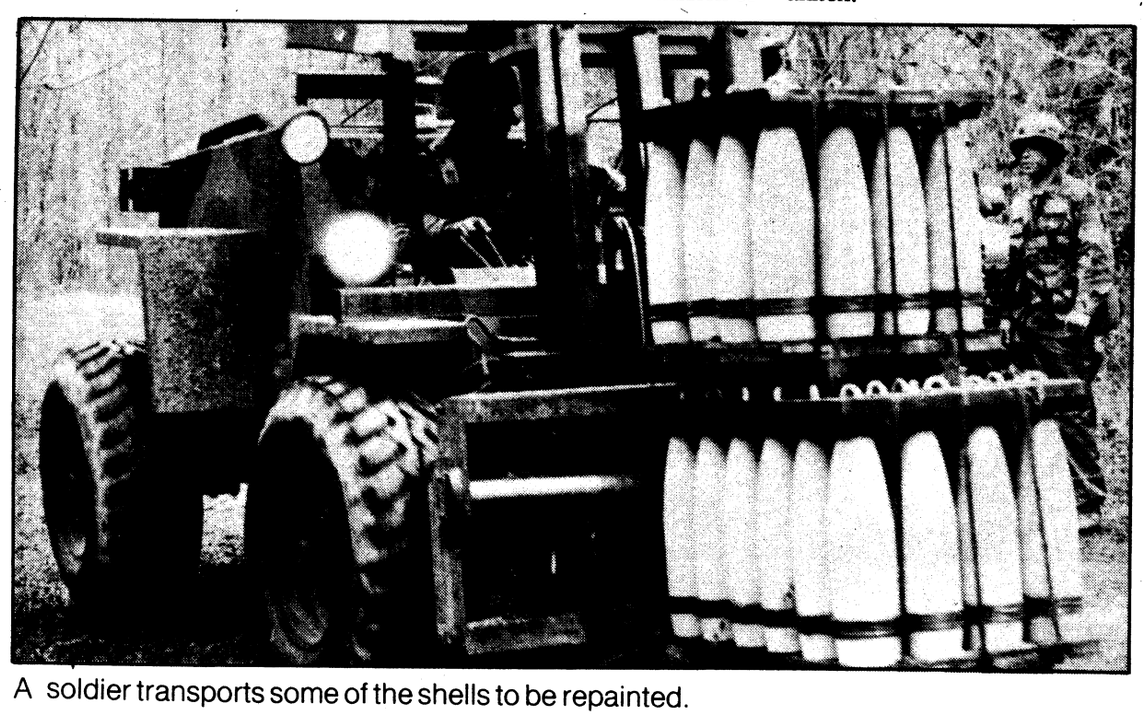
608th troops head to Talledega for special field training exercise

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

For the first time in years, the 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group, 67th Maintenance Battalion, deployed off post for its quarterly Field Training Exercise. This was no ordinary FTX for the company, however, according to 1st Lt. Lana Guyton, executive officer of the 608th.

The soldiers of the 608th deployed Feb. 18 headed for five days of training at the Coosa Annex in Talladega, Ala., to get a taste of their wartime mission, Guyton said.



According to Capt. Carl Runyon, company commander, the annex is controlled by the 111th Ordnance of the Alabama National Guard. "In conjuction with the 111th, our company came here to renovate the annex and make it a training area for all ordnance components of the U.S. Army, including the National Guard and Reserve units as well as the regular Army," Runyon said.

Guyton said that the training the soldiers are receiving has given them a good understanding of what it is really like to perform their mission in a wartime situation. Most of the training involved the restoration of ammunition storage bunkers and inert ammunition, according to Guyton.

"We came in here and set up reproduction lines on which soldiers sanded, painted and stored inert ammunition such as the 155mm shells that would be used in Howitzers, as well as other types of ammunition," Guyton said.

The 608th was the first active duty unit to use the annex since WWII according to Runyon, and the cooperative effort between the Alabama National Guard and the 608th has made the mission of reinstituing a ammunition corps storage site a successful one.

Guyton added that the 533rd Transportation Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group was also helpful as it transported residue ammunition from Fort Benning for maintenance and storage at the annex.

Everybody gets into the act during 'Sledgehammer'

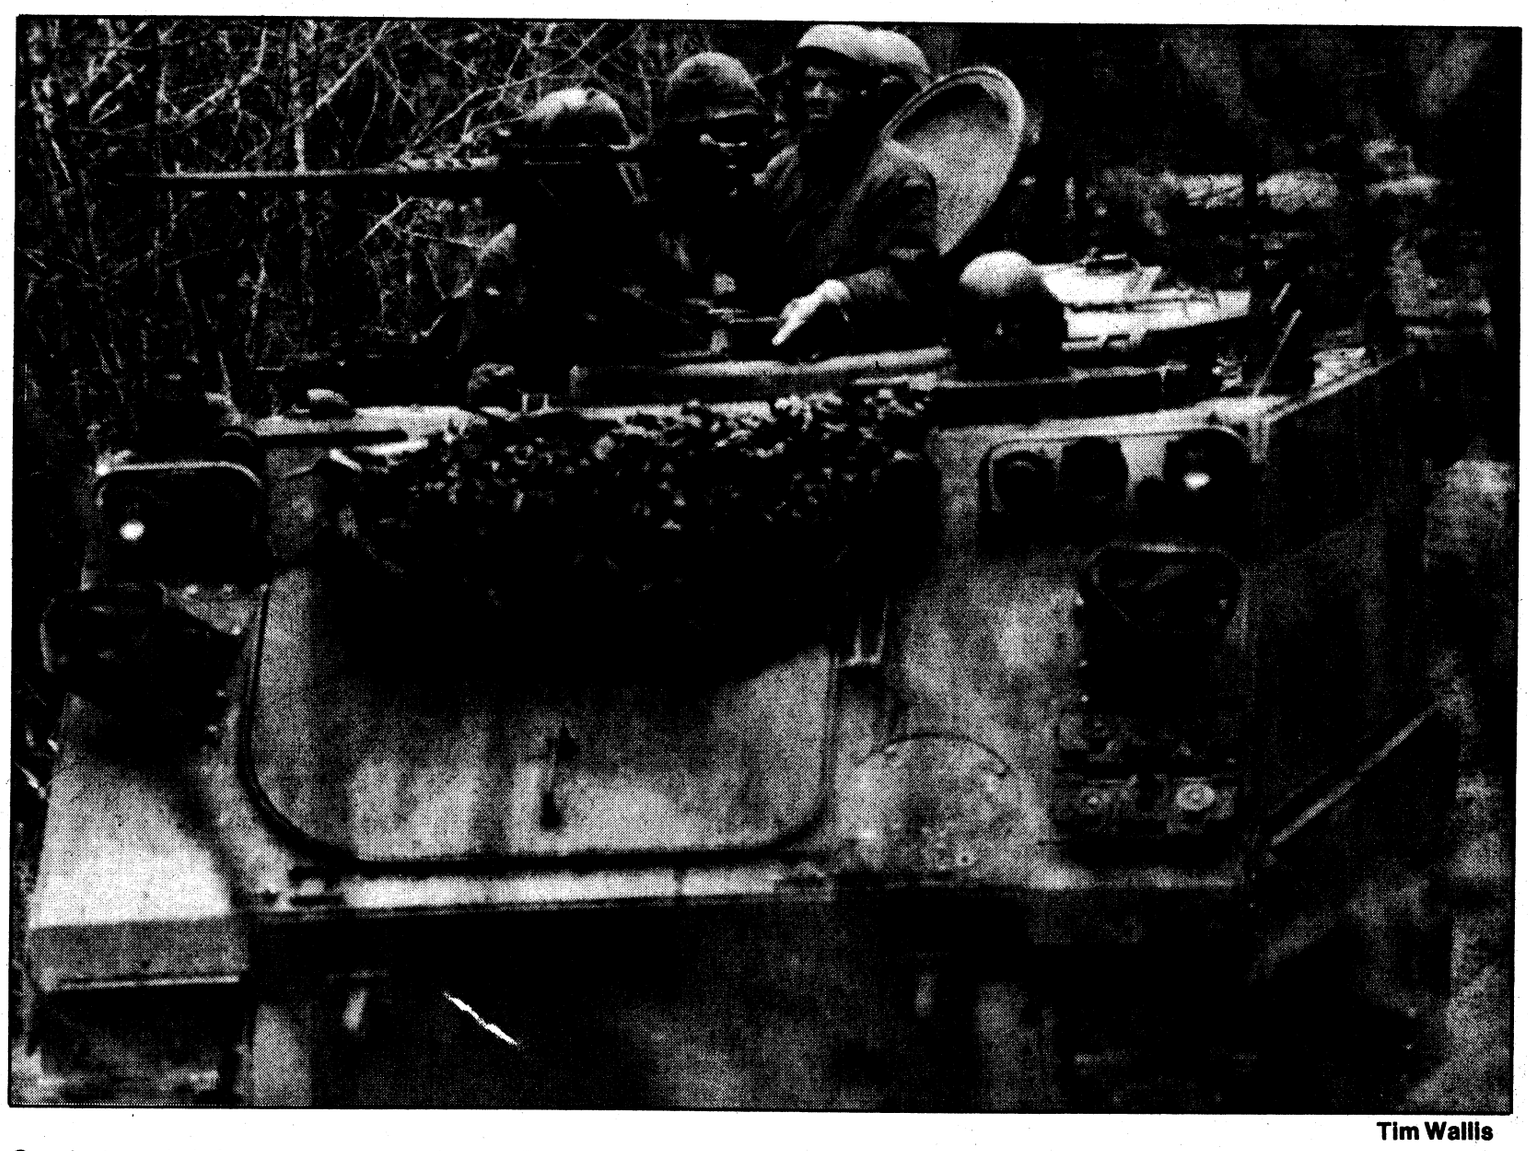
Support units see differences in light infantry

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

It has been said that successful combat operations rely on the quality of their support. During Operation Sledgehammer I, support elements within the 197th Infantry Brigade, as well as other Fort Benning units, combined their skills to accomplish the objectives of the Field Training Exercise.

"One of our accomplishments was that the Brigade was able to coordinate and conduct operations with both organic and outside units, including the U.S. Air Force, the 43rd Engineer Battalion and the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division," said Capt. Eric Schwarz, from the Brigade Operations Section.

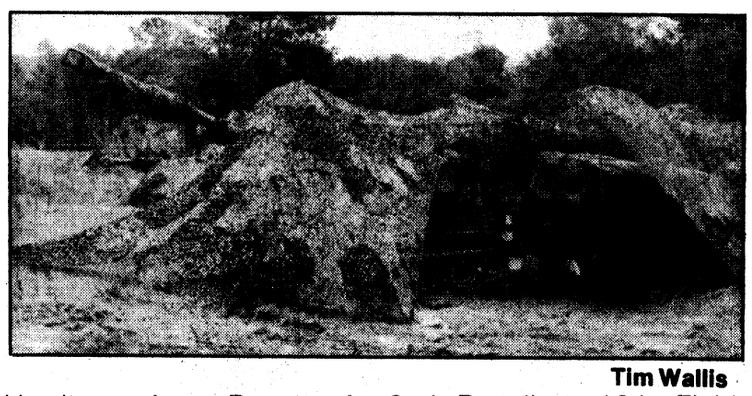
Combat operations such as a forward passage of lines, were conducted, combining the Brigade's mechanized infantry and armor with the light infantry capabilities of the 10th Mountain Division soldiers.



"Brigade soldiers benefitted from seeing how the light infantry can go remarkable distances while carrying a heavy logistics burden," Schwarz said. "When the light fighters arrived at their next position, they were still motivated and ready to fight."

The U.S. Air Force also had several missions with the 197th. They conducted air strikes on both friendly and OPFOR forces and participated in the live-fire exercise. However, the Air Force also helped bear the logistical burden by conducting a "containerized delivery system" drop of supplies that were recovered by soldiers from the 197th Support Battalion. Air Force C-130 aircraft dropped two bundles of supplies on Fort Benning's McKenna Airstrip.

"CDS is one means to get resupplied in war," said Capt. Mark Morrison, from the 197th Support Battalion Operations Section.



"This was good practice for our soldiers because they learn how to recover the supplies as well as the parachute and rigging from the drop."

Also, engineers from the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge), 43rd Engineer Battalion, provided bridging capabilities during a river crossing of the Chattahoochee River at night and a daytime operation on Victory Pond. Engineers also augmented the 197th with equipment.

Military police get to practice wartime mission

By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Sporting M60 machine guns, a train of jeeps sped along through rough terrain. The riveting sound of rapid fire bounced around the forest as the barrels of the machine guns smoked and spouted.

The enemy had been setting up an ambush. But, they had been caught — by a group of military police patrolling in their gun jeeps.

During the recent 197th Infantry Brigade's Field Training Exercise, the military police played a very important role.

"The military police have four primary battlefield missions in support of the Brigade," explained Maj. Robert Kyser, 197th Brigade provost marshal.

"First, we provide battlefield circulation control, second, we pull area security operations, third, the MPs transport enemy prisoners of war, and fourth, we keep the discipline of law and order."

Using small tactical elements, or gun jeeps, and operating in three man teams, the MPs perform their various missions.

Each three-man team consists of a gunner, a driver and a radio operator. Using their mobility, communications and fire power, they pull 24-hour combat patrol missions. Providing convoy escort and security is a part of their job.

"People should understand that we are not just a garrison soldier, the field is an important part of our training," Kyser said.

"In the field the military police are a mobile security team on roads and other traveled areas."

The military police force, which is attached to the 197th, is broken into two sections; the Provost Marshal Office and the MP platoon.

"The FTX was a very good learning experience for the entire MP platoon and myself," said 1st Lt. Edward Frimel, MP platoon leader.

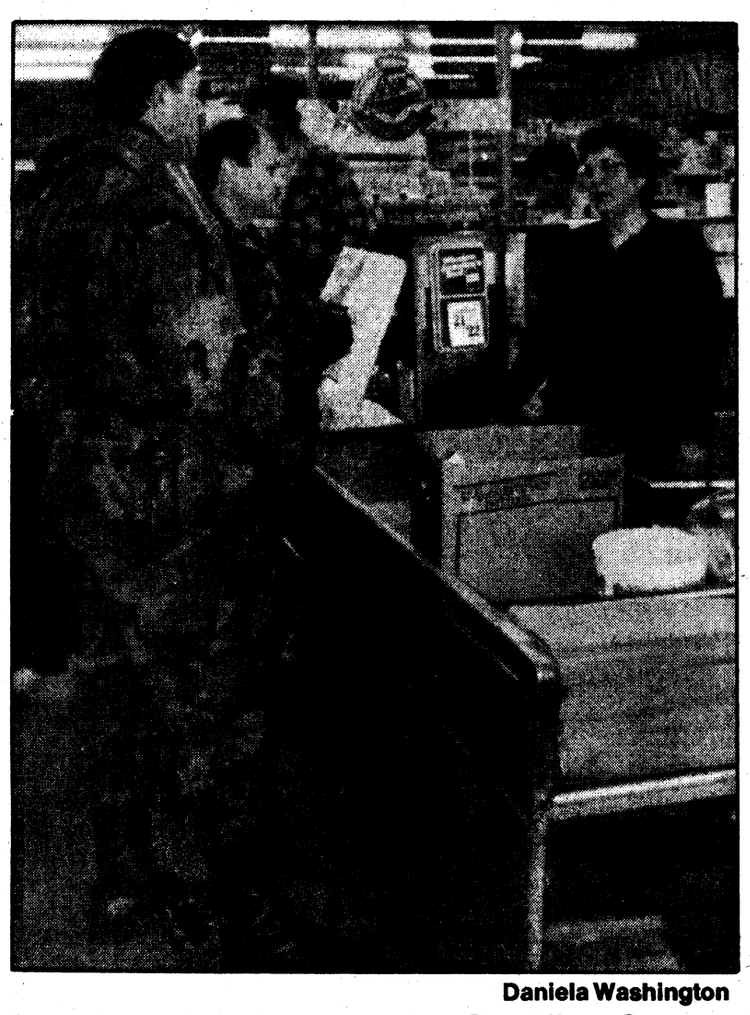
During last week's field training exercise, Sledgehammer I, an M60 tank from Troop A, 15th Cavalry drives onto a mobile ribbon bridge. The cavalry unit from the 197th Infantry Brigade was one of many Army and Air Force units to participate in Fort Benning's largest exercise since the mid 1960s, giving the 431st Civil Affairs Company from Little Rock, Ark., a huge task in dealing with local citizens.

Reserve civil affairs officers bridge the gap

By Daniela Washington
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Combat operations affect many people. In addition to the soldiers fighting and supporting the battles, the residents of the local area must deal with troop and equipment movements and the devastation of land caused by the battle.



Soldiers from the 431st Civil Affairs Company, from Little Rock, Ark., interacted with the the people of Cusseta, Ga., during the recent Operation Sledgehammer I.

"The basic objective of civil affairs operations in support of combat maneuver units is the prevention of civilian interference with ongoing military operations," explained Capt. Dan Chapel, Civil Affairs team chief. "This is obviously for both the safety of the local populace and for the freedom of movement of military forces."

Chapel added, "It's our duty to promote good relations between the civilian populace and the military. The first step is to contact all civilian local authorities and let them know about (the unclassified aspects of) our maneuvers."

The 197th Infantry Brigade Civil and Military operations officer, Maj. Richard Hopkins, coordinated with local authorities, including law enforcement personnel and the county commission, before the exercise began.

"During the exercises, the Civil Affairs team conducted an area assessment, which identifies the local area's capabilities to sustain itself as well as to identify civilian businesses that can benefit the Army's operations," according to Hopkins.

An M60 gunner from 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry occupies his position during Sledgehammer I. Helping local citizens understand the nature of such manuevers is a critical part of the civil affairs mission during peacetime exercises as well as in an actual combat situation.

Sgt. William Wilkinson gears up for a road march, making sure his ruck suck fits properly.

Vietnam veteran rejoins active Army; drawn back by love for military life

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

"I wouldn't call them confirmed kills. We called them hits. When there's a whole platoon walking, you just pick out one or two. But, at 400 to 500 feet you never really know if you killed them or not," said one-time sniper Sgt. William A. Wilkinson of his "60 or 70" sniper missions in Vietnam.

The 37-year-old Ranger is proud that he served in all five campaigns in Vietnam. And he's even more proud that the missions with his Long Range Patrol Unit in Vietnam were not in vain.

Today the Long Range Surveillance Leaders Course is renamed and reactivated to perform a vital mission. Wilkinson is grateful for that.

"I saw how important it was during Vietnam. What is really great is that I experienced it firsthand so I feel I'm in a good position to instruct it. Most of the other soldiers who worked with me in Vietnam are either out of the Army or are in higher ranks and don't deal with the students directly," Wilkinson said.

How did a soldier with an outstanding military record manage to end up a sergeant while his buddies climbed the rank ladder?

In 1974 Wilkinson got out of the Army and with the consistency of the Army Reserves joined the civilian world. But it was his experience as a soldier and the yearning to do what he does best that motivated him to rejoin the active Army after an 11-year separation.

"I was making $40,000 a year running my own bar. I also owned a business called Bodyguards International. But I just wasn't satisfied," Wilkinson said.

Wilkinson remained active in the Army Reserve and from 1974 to 1985 he helped train law enforcement officers from his home base in Florida. "I helped train Special Weapons Attack Teams in anti-terrorist techniques," Wilkinson said.

But it was Wilkinson's experience in the Army and his love for the military that sparked his interest in combat and kept the fire simmering.

"In 1968 I was with Echo Company, 20th Infantry, 1st Field Force, started by (Gen. William C.) Westmoreland. In 1969 this Long Range Patrol Unit turned into Ranger Company C, 75th Infantry," Wilkinson said. "I went on many missions with them," he added.

The dark-haired, ruggedly built soldier speaks freely about his experiences in combat. "A lot of Vietnam guys try to forget. Guys like me who spent two-thirds of the time in the woods over there, have to think about it," Wilkinson said.

"Don't get me wrong I have my bad days but I have friends that came back and just couldn't handle it," he said.

Wilkinson's bright eyes become intense as he remembers the past. He shifts around, either uncomfortable to be behind a desk or antsy about his memories. His voice betrays that it is probably the former because he speaks with an assuredness of someone who has come to terms with his past.

"As part of a LRP unit we were basically supposed to just recon. But, many of the missions ended up in combat. There were times I was so close to the enemy I watched them conduct classes," Wilkinson said.

Wilkinson was a team leader of six-man teams that did everything from assaults and bomb assessments to prisoner of war snatches.

"We would hide in the woods and when the enemy walked by with POWs we would snatch them from the end of the line. It got pretty hairy at times," Wilkinson remembered.

But his time in combat was not unrewarded. Among other awards, Wilkinson earned three Bronze Stars, an Army Commendation Medal with a V Device for heroism, a Purple Heart and an Air Medal.

During his first tour in the Army, Wilkinson was an instructor with the Airborne School and he worked with the Air Assault School, ("I helped with the Pathfinder portion of it,") he said.

He also went to Sniper School, Pathfinder School, Reconnaissance and Military Assistance Command Vietnam (MAC V) School.

"MAC V Recondo School was the only school I ever heard of that graded you after having combat with the enemy. (Combat) was part of the (course) requirements," he said.

As interesting as his war stories are, Wilkinson's career took on an even stranger twist when he decided to rejoin the active Army from the ground up.

"What's ironic about it is I had to come in as a private, go through basic training and Advanced Individual Training all over again," he said.

Wilkinson is now an instructor at the Ranger Department here. "He's the best instructor we have," said colleague SFC Rodney Campbell.

"The best training a guy is going to get is from the guys that have been (in combat)," Wilkinson said.

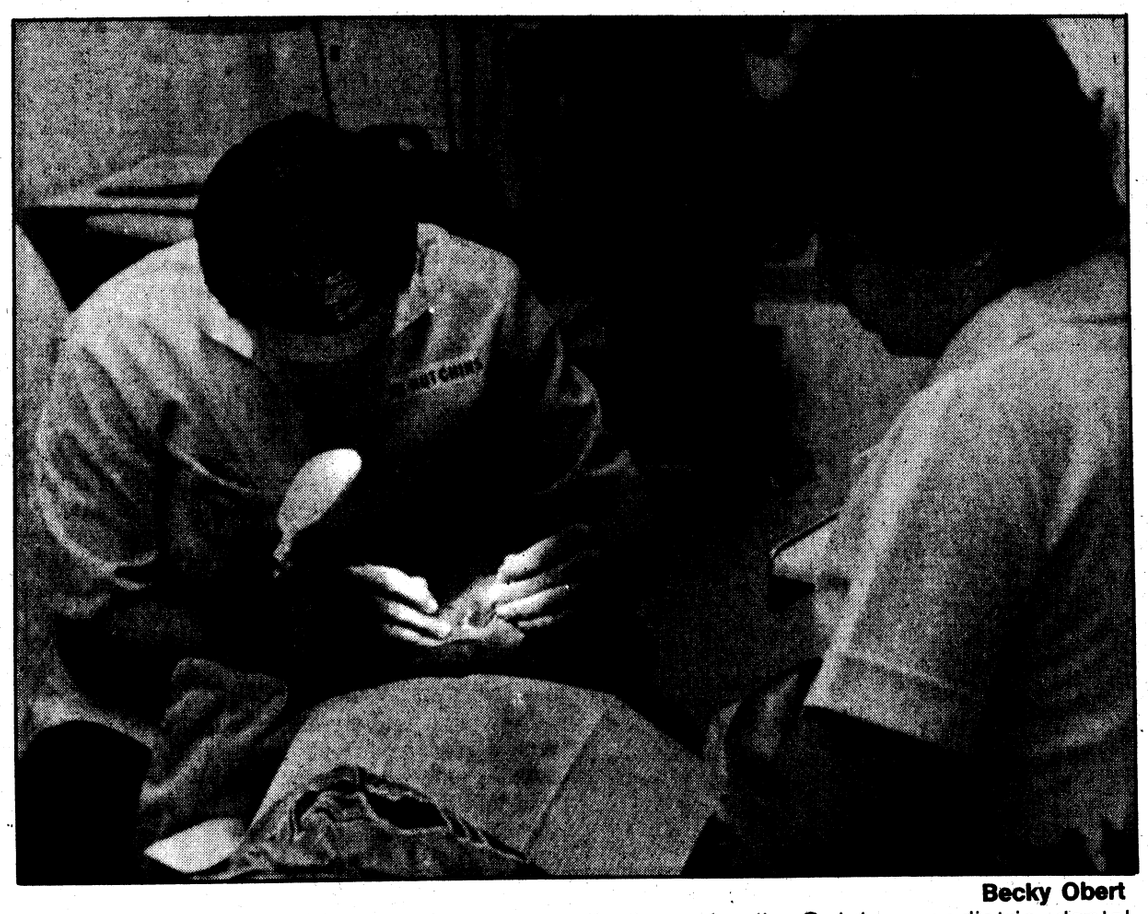
Good dental health key to bright, attractive smile

Eat nutritional foods to grow healthy teeth

Dental Activity



A good diet is essential for proper growth and development and for keeping healthy. Like the rest of the body, the teeth, and the bones, and the soft tissues of the mouth need a well-balanced diet. A variety of foods, including vegetables and fruits, breads and cereals, milk and other dairy products, and meat, poultry, fish or nuts, should be present in everyone's daily diet.

Proteins, vitamins and minerals — especially calcium, phosphorus, and fluoride — are needed during childhood to help make teeth strong and decay-resistant. Since the teeth begin to develop some time between the third and the sixth month before birth, expectant mothers need diets that provide enough of these nutrients for the baby's teeth too.

Most of us know that foods containing sugars can be harmful to dental health. Sugars are used as an energy source by the bacteria in plaque, the thin, invisible deposit that forms on everyone's teeth. Plaque bacteria use sugars to produce acids that attack tooth enamel, eventually leading to decay. But it's not only sugars, it's also starches, such as those found in cereals, breads, and processed foods, that can cause the plaque bacteria to produce decay-causing acids. The amount of these fermentable carbohydrates (simple sugars and starches) you eat is only one element that determines the effects food has on your teeth. Many other factors are of equal or greater importance.

- Frequency of eating. Each time you eat a food that contains simple carbohydrates, the teeth are attached by acids for up to twenty minutes. The more often you eat these foods, the more often decay-producing acids are formed.
- Physical characteristics of the food. Food such as raisins, dates, dried fruits, and toffee tend to stick to the teeth. As long as they remain in the mouth, the bacteria in plaque continue to produce enamel-destroying acids.
- Time needed to eat the food. Foods such as hard candy, cough drops, and breath mints stay in the mouth for long periods. Your teeth are under attack by acids the entire time.
- When food is eaten. Some research indicates that certain foods, such as cheese, peanuts, or sugar-free gum, may be "friendly" to the teeth. Eating these foods along with, or after, foods that contain carbohydrates may help to counter the effects of the acids produced by the bacteria in plaque.

To ensure that your diet promotes good dental health, develop sensible eating habits. Limit snacks. Read the labels on food containers. Labels list ingredients in descending order, with the ingredient present in the highest quantity listed first. If some type of sugar leads the list, try to eat that food as part of a meal, not as a snack.

Getting child to dentist can save damaged tooth

Dental Activity

Dental emergencies happen every day — with a sudden stop, a bicycle tumble, or a skateboard slip. A sudden toothache can be as painful as a broken bone; a loosened wire on braces can irritate the gums or cheeks; a fractured jaw can lead to serious complications.

That's why parents should be aware of the steps to take if a dental emergency arises. Some guidelines are:

Knocked-out tooth — If the tooth is dirty, rinse it gently in cool running water. Do not scrub it — you may accidentally damage soft tissues that can help the tooth heal. Gently insert and hold the tooth in the socket.

If this is not possible, place the tooth in a container of milk or cool water. Go immediately to your dentist (within 30 minutes if possible). And be sure to bring the tooth along.

If you cannot reach your dentist, call a hospital emergency room; they may have a dentist on call.

The dentist may be able to replant the tooth and apply a splint that will hold it in position until it reattaches itself to the jaw and is able to function normally.

Broken tooth — With warm water, gently cleanse dirt or debris from the injured area. Minimize swelling by applying cold compresses on the face in the area of the injured tooth. See the dentist immediately.

Sometimes all the dentist has to do is smooth the rough edges of the break. If the break is more serious, the tooth may need medication and can be covered with a crown ("cap") or plastic resin material.

Toothache — Clean out any debris by vigorously rinsing the mouth with warm water. Remove any food that might be trapped between teeth with dental floss. Do not place aspirin on the aching tooth or gum tissue as it may cause chemical burns. See your dentist as soon as possible.

Orthodontic problems (braces and retainers) — If a loose or broken wire is causing irritation, cover the end of the wire with a small cotton ball, beeswax, or a piece of gauze until you can get to the dentist.

If the wire is embedded in the cheek, tongue or gum tissue, do not attempt to remove it. See your dentist immediately. If an appliance becomes loose or a piece of it breaks off, take the appliance and the piece to the dentist.

Bitten lip or tongue — Using a clean cloth, apply direct pressure to the bleeding area. Apply cold compresses if swelling is present. Go to a hospital emergency room if bleeding persists.

Objects wedged between teeth — Try to remove the object with dental floss. Guide the floss carefully to avoid cutting the gums. If this does not remove the object, see the dentist. Do not try to remove the object with sharp or pointed instruments.

First six years of child's life vital to tooth development

Dental Activity

The first six years of a child's life are important in the development of strong permanent teeth and healthy gums. A child's teeth begin forming in early pregnancy, and good dental health care begins then.

An expectant mother can help her baby have healthy teeth by following proper dental hygiene care for her own teeth: Brushing and flossing daily, eating a balanced diet, having regular dental examinations.

From the moment the first teeth appear in a child's mouth, they are susceptible to decay, so dental hygiene habits must be established early.

The Dental Activity offers these tips for helping your children develop good dental care habits:

- When your child begins to teethe, clean the gums and teeth with a washcloth or gause pad to remove any plaque (a sticky, colorless film of bacteria that forms on everyone's teeth).
- When your baby's first teeth have erupted, continue cleaning them with a wash cloth or gauze pad. When the molars appear, begin to use a small, soft toothbrush.
- You can begin showing your child how to brush at an early age. You will still need to do most of the brushing job yourself to ensure the teeth are cleaned properly. Your dental hygienist can demonstrate the proper brushing technique for you.
- At age four or five, your child may be able to brush alone, under your supervision. Assistance will be required until your child is around age seven or eight and the skill is acquired.
- Check and replace your child's brushes often. Bent bristles don't remove plaque and can injure gums.
- Begin taking your child to the dental office at an early age (before age four).

Court report

Staff Judge Advocate

On Feb. 3, SP4 Randy Tolliver, Battery C, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convincted of three specifications of larceny.

Tolliver told the military judge at the trial that he took a good friend's automated teller machine card while visiting him at his barracks room in August.

After taking the card, he went to the First National Bank at Columbus Square Mall and withdrew $20 from the friend's checking account. He returned to Columbus Square Mall the following day and withdrew an additional $150. Tolliver claims his friend had told him the personal identification number for the account prior to the theft.

Col. Sebert Trail, the military judge, sentenced Tolliver to a bad conduct discarge, 45 days confinement, reduction to private, and forfeitures totaling $875.

SP4 Roy C. Young, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, recently learned the harsh realities of dealing cocaine at Fort Benning. After hearing the evidence presented at the trial, Col. Sebert Trail, military judge, sentenced Yount to a dishonorable discharge, 26 months confinement, total forfeitures and reduction to E-1.

Young admitted to the judge that he and a friend traveled to Atlanta, Ga., in October to purchase drugs. He claims he paid $250 for approximately 3.4 grams of cocaine and returned to Fort Benning intending to sell it to soldiers on post.

Two days later, Young, who was a student at the Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course, met with a soldier at his barracks room and offered to sell him one-eighth ounce of cocaine.

Young was unaware that the soldier was working with the Criminal Investigation Division Drug Suppression Team at the time. Both individuals left the barracks, went to a car parked near the building and met with an undercover CID agent. Young then sold the agent a packet of cocaine for $270.

When apprehended, Young refused to identify the individual who traveled to Atlanta with him to purchase drugs. He also refused to reveal his source for drugs in Atlanta. Young will serve his period of confinement at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

On Feb. 19, 1987, Pvt. 2 Dennis Snezak of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry Brigade, was sentenced to a bad conduct discharge, confinement for 15 months, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, and reduction to E-1.

Snezek plead guilty to stealing $1,150 from the Columbus Bank and Trust Company. According to evidence introduced at trial, Snezek made false deposits into his account then used his automatic teller machine card to withdraw money. Although there was only $26.87 in his account, Snezek was able to withdraw $1,150.

Research works.

Exercise challenges many units

10th Mountain Division troops practice light infantry mission

Troops from the 10th Mountain Division joined forces with other post units to make Sledgehammer I Fort Benning's biggest field training exercise since 1965.

In a massive display combining light and heavy armor with light infantry soldiers, 6,000 troops fought each other and computers in simulated combat.

Soldiers from the 2nd and 3rd Battalions, 10th Mountain Division, agreed that they aquired valuable experience from the FTX.

"The mountain men were given a training opportunity that allowed them to understand the increased combat effectiveness of blending the unique capabilities of the light and the fire power of the heavy," said Col. Mike T. Plummer, commander of the 10th Mountain Division.

"This exercise was a mock-up of an opposing force of a greater size attacking us, and we're a combined-arms Army defending against them," said Capt. Steven Duckworth, battlecaptain for the 10th Mountain.

The mountaineers offered support in the FTX with computers and soldiers. "We were under the control of the 197th. We were actually fighting the computer battle," said Capt. Steven Cage, commander of Headquarters Company, 2nd Bn.

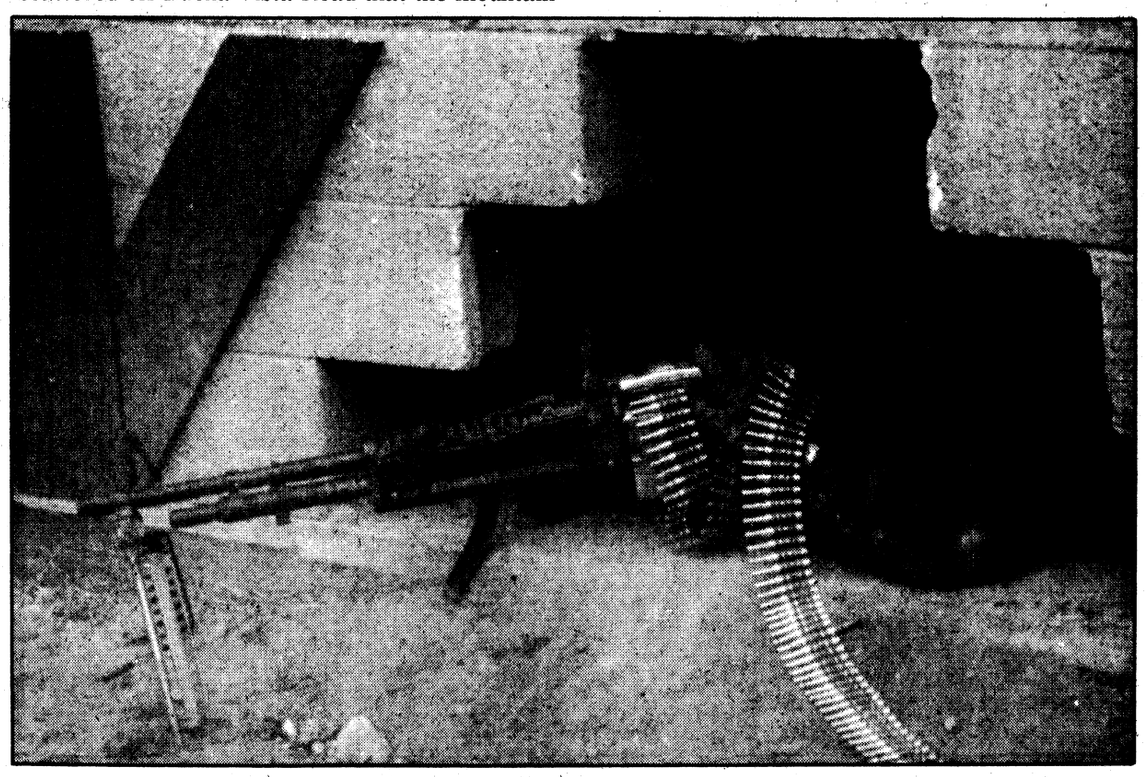
Staff at the 10th Mountain Brigade headquarters on Sand Hill worked 24 hours a day manning the computers and putting information on the battle scenario. "The computer provided relative strengths and combat powers," Cage said.

On the scoreboard it was easy to see how the battle was shaping up. But it was in the woods scattered off Buena Vista Road that the mountain men proved their importance as light infantry soldiers. Equipped with Multiple Integrated Lasar Engagement Systems, the troops spent the week moving throught the woods participating in attacks and raids under the cover of darkness.

According to Maj. Gregory C. Vogel, logistics officer for the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, "The 3rd Battalion began screening and reconnaissance in the early morning of Feb. 17 and finished on Feb.20. Then they went out, moved into an area and secured it for the armor to move through."

Another 10th Mountain mission was to represent the opposing force or the "Red Force," as the enemy was called. Company C from the 2nd Bn. was attached to the 197th as part of an aggressor force, Vogel said.

Sunday morning the FTX finished with a colossal attack on the Military Operations and Urban Terrain site on Hourglass Road. After a night of patrolling through the woods, soldiers fought in the early morning rain to regain the site. "We conducted a battalion-size, air-mobile raid to recapture the town from the enemy and to defend it until link-up with the 197th," Vogel said.



Once the MOUT site was secured the cold, wet and muddy mountain men went home.

"All of the objectives were achieved and the soldiers had an opportunity to display their commando skills," Plummer said. "It is becomming increasingly obvious that there is a great role for the light infantry in terms of shaping the battle and providing economy of force.

"The mountain men returned with a great appreciation for their brothers in the heavy force," he said.

197th team provides vital coordination for admin tasks during 'Sledgehammer'

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

During Operation Sledgehammer I, thousands of troops from the 197th Infantry Brigade and various other units were able to simulate what they would do in a wartime situation.

Among the participating sections was the 197th Infantry Brigade Personnel Actions Center (Adjutant General, S-1).

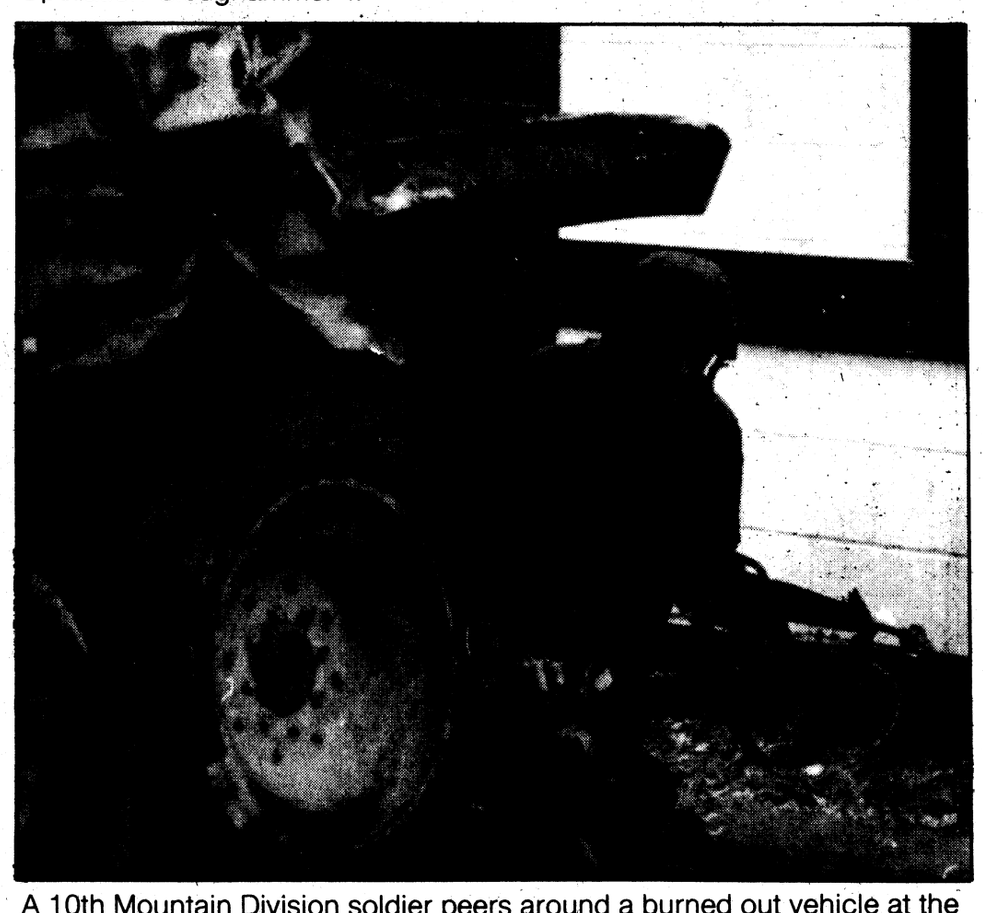
According to Maj. James Vigent, Brigade AG, S-1 officer, there are three primary missions the S-1 performs during war. They are: personnel strength reporting, casualty documentation and reporting and all the administrative services they normally provide in a peacetime environment.

"In personnel strength reporting," said Vigent, "we know the exact number of personnel in each unit before departing for a mission.

"The counts are constantly being changed and updated." he added.

"Personnel strength reports are very important when we are doing casualty documentation and reporting," Vigent said. Knowing the correct numbers enables the S-1 to replace soldiers in the units where casualties have occurred without putting stress on other units.

"When we document a casualty an officer is appointed to gather personal effects and clear all accounts and generally put the records in order," he said.



Dealing with casualties takes someone with compassion, he said. They handle the deceased's affairs, coordinate with graves to ensure the body is moved, and also that the family has been notified personally of their loss before sending letters of condolence or sympathy.

The casualty officer also does basically the same thing for a soldier missing in action except that there is no body and the records are put on hold and updated as information is made available.

In the basic administrative duties of S-1, Vigent described the tasks as the three most important things to soldier — mail, money and promotions or awards.

He said that in a single day during the exercise his section received 18 postal bags of mail to distribute to the soldiers.

"S-1 is like the inner workings of a clock," Vigent said, "We provide commanders the information needed to make wise and judicious decisions during combat."

Spiritual

Lent offers time to renew spirit, faith

By Camillus Gott
Army Training Center chaplain

For Christians, the season of Lent can have various interpretations. It was and is a time to prepare interested persons for baptism into the community of the church.

It was, and is, a time for committed Christians to reflect on how well they have kept their baptismal promises to reject sin and satan and to live the gospel.

It was, and is, a time of purification in preparation for the great triduum of Holy Thursday, Good Friday and Holy Saturday which flow into the Great Feast of Easter celebrating the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

Lent was originally that time when the church prepared candidates for full participation in her life and ritual by public scrutinies and questions performed at the principal Sunday liturgies during that 40-day period prior to the celebration of Easter.

Part of the original lent was the imparting to the candidates the creed (traditi symboli) and then at a certain point having them give it back by publicly reciting the creed (redditio symboli) in order to demonstrate that they, the candidates (catechumens), were sufficiently grounded in faith.

Because Lent has this baptismal background it soon took on an added dimension of purification. Christians experienced what Paul wrote to the Romans, "all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God," and thus began to use this time to return to the journey they began at baptism.

The symbolism of ashes made from the palm branches of the previous year's celebration of Christ's entry into Jerusalem become the sign of an individual's yes to that return. It is a sign that one repents of the root causes of sin in life and believes anew in the good news.

It is also a sign that we are created; and, left to our own designs, we cannot change our attitudes or direction without God's help. "Repent and believe in the good news," or "Remember, you are dust and unto dust you shall return," are the words that remind us to stop and reflect on our pilgrimage in life through, with and in Jesus Christ.

That journey is taken with the catechumens week by week with election, prayer, reflection on one's lack of response to the gospel life, blessing, acceptance of the creed and renewal of baptism. The aspect of mortification or personal denial through fasting, prayer and almsgiving is performed so that the Christian becomes more aware of God in his life.

It is not an end in itself, but rather a means of focusing on who our God is for us and why it is that we as Christians want to continue our journey with him.

Thus Lenten abstinence is very much like the ancient Phoenix that ises from the ashes, or the caterpillar which in time transforms into a georgeous butterfly. Lent begins on the somber note of our origins and the sinfulness of humankind and ends in the brilliant blast of light of the Easter candle and the glorious strains of "He is Risen, Alleluia."

B-ball championship begins as 12 teams vie for top honors

By Thad Roberson
Bayonet sports writer

The 1987 Post Intramural Basketball Championship Tournament jumped off to a lightening start Tuesday, as 12 teams compete for the crown jewel of Fort Benning roundball.

Among the many thrillers of the night, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, blew out the Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, thrusting them into the loser's bracket of the double elimination tournament, with a 84-51 victory.

With an array of shooters and great height, the HHC team was well rounded.

Alicton Ritter continually fed the bullets to the HHC fire powers, Kevie Battle and Eddie Smith.

Battle blasted 22 points at the suffering 29th Infantry team, while Smith, the three-point king, opened up with 21 points.

It appeared that any spot in the open court was within firing range, as Smith dropped four clutch three-pointers.

The HHC starters were all on target, while Charlie Company was forced to depend on the outstanding solo play of Larry Walker, who racked up 21 points from the baseline.

HHC's Reginald Worrell was in double figures, with 15 points, while Derrek McConnico and Ritter hit eight and seven points, respectively.

Both teams were aided by their bench. The Charlie bench provided 13 points and the HHC bench tossed 11 points into the goal.

Michael Guyton provided seven of those 11 points in the first half.

It was the defensive play of HHC that stood out in the opening period.

Worrell applied a continuous one-man press that brought results. With Worrell passing the ball down court after each steal, the HHC fastbreak was underway, allowing Battle, with his great leaping ability, to tower through the paint for the uncontested layup.

HHC took the first commanding lead, as Worrell hit unanswered back to back jumpers, to send the HHC team ahead 30-26.

His final shot at the buzzer gave him eight first half points and the team a 38-29 lead at the intermission.

The HHC guns were fully loaded and set on automatic, opening the second period.

Two minutes into the period, HHC had jumped to a 20-point, 51-31 lead.

Smith opened with two consecutive three-pointers, while Battle kept Charlie at bay from the free-throw line.

The HHC defense was still un-able to contain the Co. C threat, as Walker took off for ten second half points.

The consistency of the HHC attack prevailed, as they marched on to smoke the challenging Charlie team.

There were six other teams in the winners circle after the Intramural Basketball Tornament's opening night.

The 9th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade thrashed the 75th Ranger Regiment, 77-25, while the 598th Maintenance Company schooled the U.S. Army School of Americas, 64-50.

The School Brigade's 5th Battalion clobbered HHeadquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 62-37.

It was Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 10th Mountain Division that arrested the Military Police Activity, 44-42.

In a narrow victory, 586th Engineer Company edged Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, 60-51.

The final match-up closed 62-55 as 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hosptial operated on the Dental Activity

Preparation can lead to success in upcoming Orienteering meet

By Linda Ferguson
Fort Benning Orienteering director

As the U.S. Army Infantry Center Orienteering Championship Meet approaches, now is the time to begin your mental conditioning and formulate a strategy for winning.

Part of your winning strategy should be aimed at being completely prepared for the race ahead of you. If you arrive unprepared and harried, your concentration will not be optimum. Take the time and begin to think ahead. Visualize your arrival and your start. When the day arrives you will be able to focus on your winning strategy in the woods, without having your concentration broken by all the little things that you did not anticipate at the start.

Before the start

- Get plenty of rest the night before. Stay away from diuretics such as alcohol; these will cause your kidneys to deplete your system of fluids. There will be plenty of time for celebrating . . . after the awards and you can get your carbohydrates from pizza or pasta!
- Maintain high fluid levels through the morning up to an hour before you start. High fluid intake helps fight both fatigue and heat injuries. Water in the stomach is not absorbed for 30 to 33 minutes after ingestion, though. Drinking too much within half an hour before the race may result in an uncomfortable feeling while you run.
- Before you leave home, check your equipment: compass and whistle; first aid supplies; Orienteering clothes and shoes; lunch; fluids; high-energy snack; large zip-lock bag; towel for after the race; tape to secure shoe laces from snagging; gum to keep the mouth moist; insect and chigger repellent.
- Try to arrive early.
- On the way to the meet assembly area, look at the terrain as you pass by. It is illegal to enter the course area, but not to be observant on the way.
- If the map is posted in advance (normally in the assembly area without marked courses), study it carefully and compare the information with how the ground around you looks.
- Decide what type of approach the terrain and map are most likely to demand. Think about whether to use pace and count or terrain association, or both.
- Check the symbols and be sure to check the scale and contour interval.
- If you can remember your pace count, use the pace course to verify your walking, running, uphill and downhill pace. Often an average can be formulated to use in specific types of terrain.
- Listen carefully to the information given in the pre-meet assembly and make sure you have read all posted or handout materials.
- Warm up 20 to 30 minutes before reaching the start. Arrive at the start in plenty of time and get oriented to which way North lies, before your time is called.
- Lock all of your equipment and valuables in a safe place.
- Do not foget your whistle! This is an important safety measure and as with IOF and most USOF meets, you will not be allowed to begin your course without it!
- Do not be late for the start. You will be required to wait until all the other competitors are started before you can begin your course. Your time, however, will be calculated using your original start time.

After the start

- If there are master maps, take care to copy down the correct course and the right number of controls. Stay calm! Misplacing a point on a similar reentrant or stream junction can be disastrous.
- Don't get rattled at the start. Look carefully at your map and don't let the other competitors cause you to run off in the wrong direction. It's hard to psychologically recover from being lost on the way to your first point.
- Select a safe route to the first control and take it slowly. On this first leg try to get the "feel" of the map by reading it most of the way. Remember, every mapper feels that different things do or do not belong on a map. Look to see how much detail is represented and if features appear when you think they should. Most mistakes occur before you have adjusted to the map and the terrain.
- Do the map and the terrain really match or are you making them fit? A fit mistake for inexperienced orienteers! If you are in question about where you are, don't walk, run back to your last known location. You will spend a lot more time trying to correct your error by hoping the next turn will reveal your location, than returning immediately to a known point.
- As you progress through the course, adapt your tactics as necessary by choosing techniques and routes that match your mental and physical state.
- Carrying a high energy snack might help you along the way but don't become distracted while eating it! Wait until you hit a long run area, keep in touch with the ground while you run and eat your granola bar or raisins . . . (Don't leave the wrappers!) Chewing gum may help keep you from drying out if you tend to be a mouth breather.

Muscular fitness important part of maintaining healthy lifestyle

By Frank Gross
Air Force News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. (TNS) — Muscular fitness is important to health and quality of life. Fifty percent of adult society has back trouble, and serious thought needs to be given to his "little exercised" component of fitness.

By enhancing muscular fitness, a person can prevent, decrease, or even ove8enhancing muscular a person can prevent, decrease, or even overcome his common condition. People who intend to remain active beyond middle age should give serious thought to some form of fitness enhancement.

There are three basic parts to muscular fitness: strength, endurance, and flexibility. As flexibility increases, so does strength and endurance.

Weight training is an efficient way to train for muscular fitness. The following information will help you select the appropriate mode of weight training. Also, it should allow you to estimate the rate of progress that can be expected, as well as help develop a well-rounded fitness program.

Two basic directions can be taken in weight training: strength and endurance. Strength and endurance are different, but one is just as important as the other.

Obviously, the main difference between training for strength and endurance is the level of tension or resistance and the actual number of repetitions. A simple prescription for endurance is: 12 or more repetitions, three sets, three times a week.

Remember, a good exercise program includes a warm-up with stretching, and a cool-down with stretching.

Stretching increases muscle fitness.

Progress comes quickly when training for muscle endurance, while training for strength takes longer. Of course, ultimate progress is dictated by genetic background.

Some SFC promotions come early

Officials at the Military Personnel Center began promoting some soldiers on the 1987 sergeant first class list March 1, even though there are still soldiers on the 1986 list.

"The Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel directed us in February to begin promoting soldiers in shortage military occupational specialties from the 1987 list," said Lt. Col. Robert J. Albertazzi, chief of MILPERCEN's Promotions Branch.

"When the Army decided in November 1985 to promote soldiers to sergeant first class by MOS instead of seniority, we recognized the possibility of promoting soldiers from one list before an older list was exhausted. However, we didn't expect this to happen with the two sergeant first class lists now in effect.

"We implemented this policy to help balance the Army's noncommissioned officer force," he explained. "We are not promoting soldiers in any MOS that would cause it to become overstrength. That requirement and the needs of the Army have made it necessary to begin promoting soldiers in 14 shortage MOSs off the 1987 Sergeant First Class List."

The Army will promote 146 soldiers off the 1986 list in March, leaving 250 soldiers on it. That list should be exhausted by May. There will be 204 promotions in March from the 1987 list.

Letter clarifies uniform policy

"A soldier may not drink alcohol or patronize any establishment that sells alcohol by the drink while in fatigues, battle dress uniforms, cooks' and medics' whites or flight suits."

That's the word from Maj. Gen. Edwin L. Burba, post commander, in a Feb. 20 command letter clarifying wear of military uniforms off post.

The letter stated that the Army Green uniform (all versions), the Army Blue uniform, Army Green Classic and all other semi-formal or formal uniforms may be worn off post at any time.

Other uniforms, including fatigues, BDUs, cooks' and medics' whites and flight suits, may be worn anywhere in the local area until 8 p.m. on normal duty days (Monday through Friday.) In addition to using drive-through windows at "fast food" restaurants, getting gas, dropping off or picking up cars at repair facilities, picking up basic grocery items, picking up or dropping off laundry, picking up license tags for POVs, a soldier may now sit down inside a "fast-food" restaurant or visit a mall.

However, only Class A and B uniforms and civilian attire can be worn to off post establishments after 8 p.m. on duty days, weekends and holidays.

NCOs sought to attend class

The Specialized Training Management Branch at the Military Personnel Center is looking for non-commissioned officers to attend the Corps-Division Level Force Integration Course at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

The course is for active Army NCOs in force integration and force modernization positions at corps, division and separate brigade levels. The course teaches them how to integrate new doctrine, organization and equipment into an existing force structure.

NCOs must be assigned to these duty positions to be eligible for the course and have a secret security clearance.

The course is one week and one day in length. Interested NCOs should complete service school applications in accordance with DA Pam 600-8, Management and Administrative Procedures, procedure 3-10. Soldiers should send their DA forms 2A and 2-1 with their applications.

Send completed applications Commander, MILPERCEN, ATTN: DAPC-EPT-F, 2461 Eisenhower Avenue, Alexandria, Va. 22331-0400.

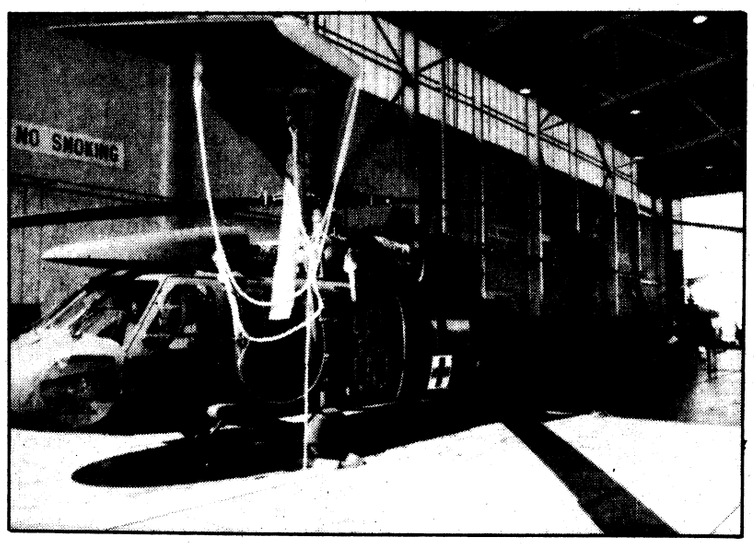
Benning welcomes Black Hawks

498th Med. first post unit to get copters

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Out with the old and in with the new; new helicopters that is.

This week, 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 34th Medical Battalion formally accepted three UH60A Black Hawk Helicopters. These are the first of several they will be recieving through the United States Army Fielding Program.



498th Commander, Maj. Tommy W. Mayes officially accepted the helicopters from Jack B. Hill, a Sikorsky Representative, in a dedication ceremony at Lawson Army Airfield. Sikorsky is the manufacturer of the Black Hawk helicopter.

According to Mayes, the Black Hawk will eventually replace all the UH1H (Hueys) currently in use at the company.

CW02 William E. Van Wagner, a Black Hawk pilot with the 498th said, "The Hueys are good helicopters and they've been proven, but," he added, "the Black Hawk will better serve our mission."

Their primary mission is to provide air evacuation in a battlefield. In peace, they provide medical evacuation support for Fort Benning and the surrounding community.

Another part of their mission is taking patients from Martin Army Community Hospital to other hospitals, when MACH deems it necessary for the patients interests. For instance Van Wagner said, flights are frequently made to Eisenhower Medical Center, Fort Gordon Ga. "With the new helicopters we will be able to fly to the center without refueling," he said.

Ann M. McDonald

The new Black Hawk helicopter was officially welcomed this week.

Another bonus with the Black Hawk is the speed. With it we will be able to get to the evacuation site faster, Van Wagner said, "we can also handle more patients because of the increased patient capacity in the Black Hawk."

Van Wagner added that the aircraft is a very powerful and extremely manueverable machine and that with the automated flight systems pilot fatigue will be lessened.

"Preparing for the incoming helicopters was a big job," Van Wagner said, "Maj. Mayes, was the prime mover on fielding the copters, he did all the coordination involved in the project."

"A different Military Occupational Specialty is required for each type of helicopter," Van Wagner said, "Since all our personnel were trained for Hueys they had to be retrained or new personnel have to be brought in."

The 498th has done both, pilots have been sent to Fort Rucker, Ala. for training and some mechanics were sent to Fort Eustis, Va.

"We have also coordinated closely with Personnel Center here in acquiring new personnel," he said.

Besides acquiring new personnel, new equipment is needed for the new addition to the 498th. "Supply has beefed up their inventory in preparation for the change over," Van Wagner said.

Upon receipt of the aircraft certain modifications are added to the Black Hawk. "When we get the Black Hawks they are still equipped for just basic passenger use," he said "we install a carousel with litters, and a rescue hoist inside the aircraft."

Army approves installation of flight recorders

U.S. Army Safety Center

Gen. John A. Wickham, Jr., Army Chief of Staff, has approved the installation of flight data recorders in 200 of the Army's Black Hawk helicopters.

A contract has been let to Sundstrand Data Control, Inc., to provide the recorders for installation in selected UH-60 aircraft. This FDR records 66 channels of data onto a magnetic tape housed inside the FDR unit.

The data includes information from the aircraft's systems and instruments as well as recording input from the crew throughout an accident sequence.

Built to withstand the violent forces of an accident, the FDR preserves vital information which will provide focus and direction to an accident investigation team.

While Army safety personnel recognize that FDR data may not reveal the cause of an accident and processing data from the recorder will take a lot of time and work, the FDR will add a new dimension to accident investigation.

With the systems used in Army aircraft growing more complex every year, the DFR will be a valuable tool to investigators in constructing a clear picture of what happened both before and during an accident.

That information will be vital in determining whether changes need to be made in aircrew training and whether aircraft modification is necessary.

Anti-drug abuse program getting results

By Jeffrey D. Lindblad
Army News Service

The Army's anti-drug abuse program is meeting with success in stemming drug abuse among its total force members through a variety of drug-abuse prevention programs.

Spearheaded by the Army personnel chief's drug and alcohol policy office and by the U.S. Army Drug and Alcohol Operations Agency in Falls Church, Va., the program echoes President and Mrs. Reagan's nationally televised call for a "drug-free America."

"Drug abuse has been reduced dramatically in the Army, especially since the introduction of drug testing. The percentage of marijuana use, as indicated by biochemical test results, has dropped to less than five percent and the use of cocaine to less than one-half of one percent among active duty soldiers," said Ross Deck, program specialist in the drug and alcohol policy office at the Pentagon.

Marshalling resources

He attributes the success rate to such efforts as drug testing, installation alcohol/drug treatment centers, education and public awareness campaigns, law enforcement efforts and specific training of supervisors in detecting alcohol and drug abuse.

"Some time ago we realized the problem existed. Our top Army leaders had looked around and seen the problem areas. Instead of putting our heads in the sand and relying on the private sector to treat our soldiers, we realized tht they should be treated internally, by resources dedicated to that effort," he said.

Right now, some 190 Army drug and alcohol treatment centers are in operation — one at each installation worldwide. Each center works on a three-tier approach in treating drug abuse and addiction. The first tier, called Track I, provides alcohol-awareness and other drug-awareness education and individual or group counseling as needed. It lasts up to 30 days. The second, Track II, is an out-patient program offering more intensive counseling. It lasts up to one year. Track III starts with a six-week, highly intensive hospital in-patient treatment and continues with follow ups on a non-resident basis. The total program, Deck said, is highly effective. "It has a 70 percent success rate in getting the soldier off the substance and back into his or her old job."

Urinalysis testing

Deck pointed out that probably the most effective deterrent to drug use is regular urinalysis. This test alone has helped reduce illicit drug use throughout the Army, as his figures show.

"The Army has the best drug-testing labs in the Defense Department, and DoD has the best in the world. Their testing procedures are impeccable." What has helped make the tests first-rate? deck said the answer lies in the edication of those military and civilian staff who run the labs, the Army surgeon general's consultants and Army leadership up to the highest levels. What's more, the system is constantly testing by the Army judge advocate general's Trial and Defense Service and various forensic authorities during litigation, challenging and validity and handling of drug-test samples.

Today, the Army's urinalysis program includes the entire active component, selected soldiers in the reserve components and selected DA civilians. Currently, out of 450,000 Army civilians, only 10,000 are being tested for drug abuse.

Civilians that do test positive are referred to the Employee Assistance Program for counseling and treatment. Policy requires their transfer to non-critcal jobs, upon which they may enter a treatment program. For some, there may be no jobs for which they qualify — in which case discharge from employment is the end result, since they have violated a condition of their employment with the government. Those treated successfully, however, may not return to their former critical jobs.

Coordinating efforts

In stopping the flow of illegal drugs, whether it be on or of post or through international channels, the Army has a network of cooperation. Installation commanders assist local communities in spotting problem areas. The nforcement of local laws is left up to area law enforcement agencies. The Army's criminal investigation division and military police work closely with their civilian counterparts, Deck said.

In the line with DoD policy, the Army also provides equipment to federal-and prvate-sector agencies involed in international drug interdiction. This includes, for example, the loan of helicopters and detection and surveillance equipment. Such technical support remains a key element of the president's plans for further interdiction of drug traffic.

Committed to fight

The program emphasizes the "total Army family," Deck said. "The chief of staff and his deputy for personnel have said, loud and clear, that we're one family, one Army, whether we wear the green uniform or the civilian uniform."

The Army, he added, wants the best environment and support for all Army members. "When it comes to stemming drug problems, the Army is in the lead with its detection, treatment and awareness programs. Given the recognition of the drug problem, we will continue to fight toward eradicating it.

President proclaims March National Red Cross Month

Few events humble men more than natural disasters. Last year in the United States along, hurricanes, floods, and tornadoes killed 290 people and destroyed property valued at $15 billion. Working to mitigate the human toll of that devastation were nearly 90,000 American Red Cross disaster relief workers — 95 percent of whom were volunteers — helping the victims first to survive, and then to rebuild their lives.

Disaster assistance speaks to the deepest and purest ideals of the Red Cross movement. It is the reason the Red Cross was formed more than a century ago, and it remains the truest example of its continuing commitment to service.

The American Red Cross has responded to recent disasters swiftly and magnanimously, as it always has. Sinee September, nearly a dozen major disasters — including eight large-scale floods in the South and Midwest — have pressed the American Red Cross into action.

The organization continues to lead the way in making the Nation's blood supply as safe as possible. It recently introduced testing to reduce post-transfusion nonA, nonB hepatitis, following up its 1985 implementation of HTLV-III testing for AIDS. It also launched its Look Back initiative, a program that notifies people who have been transfused with blood or blood components from donors who later tested positive for the AIDS antibody.

The American Red Cross continues to train millions of students in first aid, cardiopulmonary resuscitation, water safety and small craft operation. It maintains vital communication services to the Nation's military through a network of Red Cross posts at 277 domestic and overseas military installations. Every 11 seconds, the Red Cross helps someone in our Armed Forces or a member of a service family.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, RONALD REAGAN, President of the United States of America and Honorary Chairman of the American National Red Cross, do hereby proclaim the month of March, 1987 as American Red Cross Month. I urge all Americans to continue to give blood, to volunteer their time whenever possible to assist in this great service and to give generous support to the work of the American Red Cross and its local chapters.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this seventeenth day of February, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighty-seven, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and eleventh.

It's time to stop joking about AIDS

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

It's time people start talking about condoms with a straight face.

For some reason, when the word is mentioned, people start giggling, turning red in the face and making jokes.

Maybe that's the reason television network executives can't bring themselves to air ads for condoms. They say the public is not ready for this kind of advertising.

It's hard to believe these are the same network executives who approve soap operas filled with steamy love scenes and extramarital affairs, not to mention the evening prime-time lineup.

They're also the same guys who don't find anything wrong with accepting advertising revenue from products ranging from Preparation H to feminine hygiene products.

A recent Doonesbury cartoon strip highlighted the media's efforts to be less than outspoken in ads for the birth control devices.

In the cartoon, creative types were given the job of designing an ad campaign for condoms without using that offensive word. So they substituted the word "condo."

The last frame of the strip shows a teenager turning to his father after watching the ad, asking, "But what does real estate have to do with sex, Dad?"

> "I recommend the use of condoms during any sexual encounter where the partners have not been in a mutually faithful monogamous relationship for a period of five or more years." — Col. William L. Moore, Army project manager for AIDS testing, treatment and programs.

The correct answer to this question is, "absolutely nothing."

According to the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, there have been 31,036 cases of AIDS reported as of Monday. Of this number, about 4 percent occurred in heterosexuals. Since 1983, 17,338 people have died of AIDS.

The number of cases doubles every 13 months, and by 1991, the center projects that 270,000 people will have developed full-blown AIDS, 10 percent involving heterosexuals.

The U.S. Surgeon General has predicted that there will be 179,000 deaths from AIDS in the U.S. by 1991, and 100 million deaths worldwide by the year 2000.

A recent study done in Washington, D.C., found that 50 percent of the street prostitutes tested positive for the virus. A similar study done in Miami, Fla., found that 40 percent of the prostitutes who took part in the study tested positive.

Last year, the Army conducted a study on prostitutes in Germany and came up with similar figures.

Does 100 million dead sound like a joke to you? It doesn't to me.

According to medical professionals, use of condoms is one of the most important things sexually active adults can do to avoid contracting the human-immunodeficiency virus that causes AIDS.

Unlike the civilian community, the military does not think AIDS is funny, and the Army is standing right up and telling it like it is.

Col. William L. Moore, project manager for the Army Surgeon General for AIDS testing, treatment and programs, recently said, "I (would) recommend use of condoms during any sexual encounter where the partners have not been in a mutually faithful monogamous relationship for a period of five or more years."

This forthrightness is not new. From the beginning, the Army has led the way in AIDS education and testing.

Recognizing the need for a healthy, deployable force, the Army instituted mass testing for the virus, and has developed strategies for dealing with soldiers who develop AIDS. Army medical researchers are at the forefront of the search for a cure for the disease.

At Army posts, soldiers are being given presentations on AIDS, shown video tapes and have the opportunity to get straight answers from trained medical personnel.

A misconception that many soldiers have is that condoms are available free at medical clinics. According to a spokeswoman at the Preventive Medicine Section, they are not available, but are on sale at retail outlets on post. No longer hidden behind a drug store counter, you'll find them in attractive displays in a prominent location.

When you look at the facts, there's really nothing funny about condoms. Not when you think that one might just save your life.

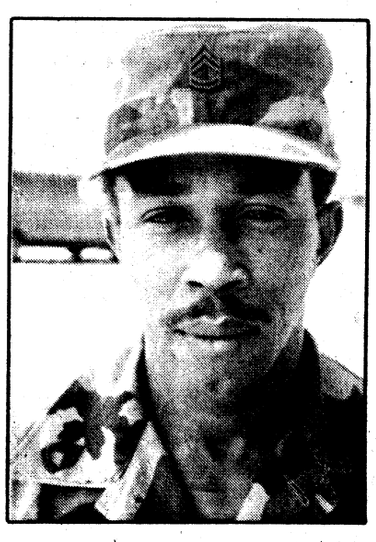
Constitution spells out rules for liberty

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — The Constitution of the United States is a history of vision, a personal meaning for every American citizen. It is as intimate as the air we breathe. It is our individual declaration of privilege.

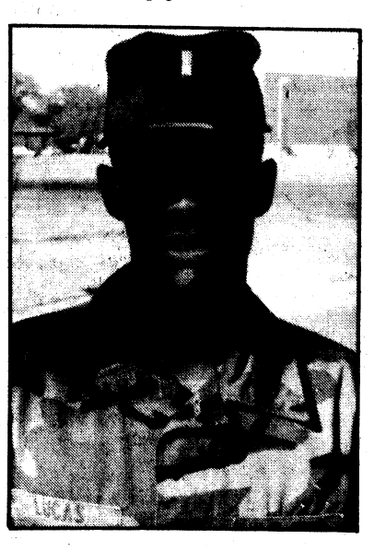
As George Washington said, "Interwoven is the love of liberty with every ligament of the heart." It is a trust, and vision is the key. If we fall to grasp that, we fail.

It was a peculiar group that gathered to form the Constitution. Something else was burning in their minds; something not quite of the world they knew stirred in their hearts. They understood some truth they couldn't yet prove; they reached for a reality that it seemed at times only they recognized.



But they refused to be defeated; they struck out confidently against ridicule and discouragement under an audacious banner of faith: ". . . one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

And they spelled out that liberty and justice to the people. The vision was meant to materialize — not rest in an ivory tower. It was meant to be a righteousness worked out into practical, everyday life: justice tempered with mercy, peace assured by defense, and equality claimed by the sheer right of being common men. The vision was humility, that being men, we share all things. We are one.



But our rights cannot remain without protection. Our prerogatives are not without responsibility. Our immunity did not come without affliction. Patrick Henry, champion of the Constitution's Bill of Rights, cautioned, "If we wish to be free; if we mean to preserve inviolate these inestimable privileges for which we have been long contending . . . we must fight!"

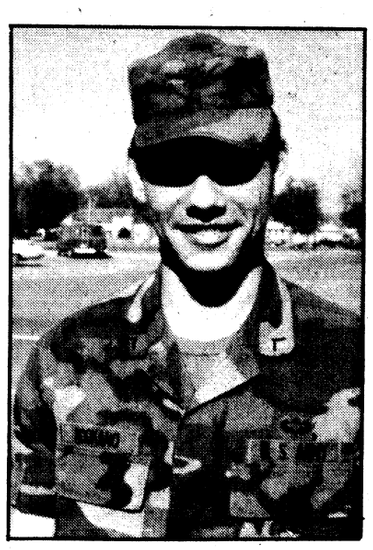
Why do you think we should support the Girl Scouts?



SFC Amos Wright, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade - "Primarily I think we should support the girls just because they are the youth of America and I feel scouting is instrumental to the girls' growth."

2nd Lt. Gary Lucas,23rd Company, 2nd Battalion, The School Brigade - "I think we should support them because it helps the girls mature into women and it's been a long standing tradition in the United States."

SP4 Jennifer Harrison, Driver, Deputy Chief of Staff - "I think everybody should support the Girl Scouts. In scouting the girls learn many worthwhile things such as survival techniques, CPR and communication skills."

Pvt. 2 Kami K. Hookano, Headquarter and Headquarters Company, 43rd Engineers - "I think that it is a good activity for the girls. It keeps them off the streets and helps them build leadership-qualities.

PFC Luis Trinidad, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 43rd Engineers - I feel we should support the girls because it gives them something to occupy their time and hopefully keep them away from drugs and alcohol."

Alicia Prieto, family member - "I feel it gives the girls something worthwhile to do. I myself have two girls in scouts."

Nation headed toward 'health catastrophe'

By Bob MacNaughton
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — Dr. David Baltimore, Nobel-prize-winning biochemist at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, outlined the situation in stark terms: "AIDS is a problem for everyone — gay and straight, urban and rural. We are at a critical point in the progress of the epidemic; we are quite honestly frightened by the future prospects."

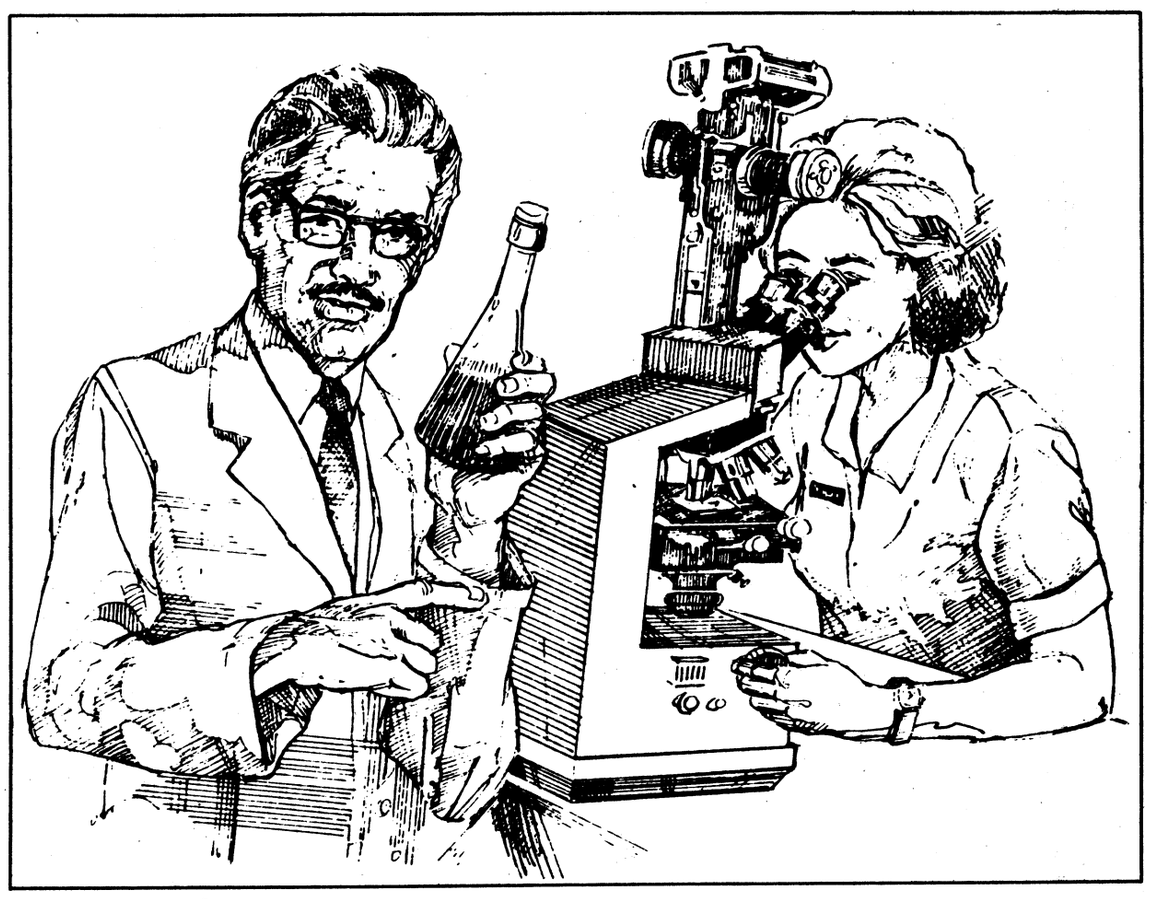
Quoted in a recent edition of Newsweek magazine, Dr. Baltimore is co-chairman of a special assessment group from the Institute of Medicine and National Academy of Sciences, a group that Newsweek described as "the most prestigious body of scientists in the nation."

The Newsweek article claimed that the nation can no longer hope to completely avoid a health catastrophe because of AIDS. "In plain language, the choice now is between a lesser catastrophe and a very much larger one," the article said.

It recommended a sharply increased program of education and research that is urgently needed to control the disease.

At Wilford Hall Medical Center, Lackland Air Force Base, Texas, the focus is on treating AIDS patients, but research and education also get strong emphasis.

More than 200 people have been treated as inpatients at the medical center as a consequence of human-immunodeficiency virus infections since the first one was treated there in 1983.



Wilford Hall's research centers around a $1.6 million federal grant administered by a team led by Col. (Dr.) R. Neal Boswell. The money funds programs at Wilford Hall, the Southwest Foundation for Biomedical Research and the University of Texas Health Science Center at San Antonio.

Education at Wilford Hall is taking three main paths. One has been for the hospital's own staff, because the epidemic of AIDS is also accompanied by an epidemic of myths, misconceptions and fears — and medical people are not exempt. A second is for the patients and the third is directed toward the entire Air Force family.

The education program teaches:

- Blood has different kinds of white cells that do different things to fight diseases. They include cells called lymphocytes, and among them are some B cells and T cells.
- Some T-cell lymphocytes, also called T-helper cells, assist the B cells to produce the antibodies that kill germs. Then there are other T cells known as suppressor cells. Their job is to stop the B cells' battle against germs after the infection has been overcome.
- In a healthy person, the T helpers outnumber the T suppressors two to one. In a person with AIDS, suppressors outnumber helpers, which makes the immune system weak. Other illnesses also can cause this situation.
- The virus that causes AIDS is called a "retrovirus." That's basically because it splices itself into the host cell and uses an enzyme called reverse transcriptase to reproduce. However, in reproducing itself and killing a portion of the T-helper lymphocytes, it kills its host.
- The virus was formerly named HTLV-III because it is the third discovered in the family of human T-cell lymphotrophic viruses. However, last summer, scientists working with AIDS agreed to call it simply the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV.
- HIV has been isolated from human blood, semen, saliva, tears, breast milk and urine. However, all the evidence studied to date indicates that it has only been transmitted by blood and semen. Thus, non-sexual contact between people is almost always safe, even if one of them has AIDS.

In fact, all military staff members at Wilford Hall have been tested for HIV antibodies and, despite the fact they have worked and associated with a concentrated population of AIDS patients and some of the sickest cases, not one person directly involved with the AIDS treatment program tested positive.

The Newsweek article said a "massive national crusade" is needed "to emphasize the necessity for 'safe' sexual practices for all Americans, especially the young."

The campaign can be boiled down to two gritty ideas. One is that random sex of any sort is dangerous. Second, all sex outside of monogamy with a well-known partner should involve the use of condoms.

Those involved in treating the patients agree — the massive national crusade is urgent.

Among the patients seen at Wilford Hall, 62 percent have been between the ages of 20 and 29, and 26 percent between 30 and 39.

The hospital staff says this is one of the saddest aspects — watching young men and women, in the prime of life, die because they learn about AIDS and safe sex too late.

Army spokesman provides answers on threat disease poses to military

By Col. John Lundberg
TRADOC News Service

WASHINGTON — AIDS continues to dominate the national media for good reason; since 1983, 17,338 Americans have died from the disease and the number is expected to raise to 179,000 by 1991. Recently, an interview was conducted with Col. William L. Moore, Medical Corps, project manager for the Army Surgeon General for AIDS testing, treatment and programs. Listed below is his blunt, candid and to many, frightening assessment of AIDS in the U.S. The disease is claiming an astonishing number of victims. Here's what all of us need to know about AIDS.

LUNDBERG: What would you say to the soldiers of the Army about AIDS if you had them as a captive audience for one minute?

MOORE: First, I would explain that AIDS is caused by a virus that cannot be transmitted by casual contact, only by the exchange of bodily fluids such as blood or semen. Second, I would point out that soldiers residing in the Washington area live in the sixth largest concentration of reported AIDS cases in the U.S. and it is doubly important for them to avoid high-risk behaviors which could expose them to the virus. Third, I would stress that the only sure means of avoiding exposure is to abstain from high risk behaviors such as intravenous drug use and promiscuous homosexual and heterosexual activity. Fourth, I would recommend use of condoms during any sexual encounter where the partners have not been in a mutually faithful monogamous relationship for a period of five or more years.

LUNDBERG: When was the first case of AIDS reported in the U.S. and how many cases do we have today?

MOORE: The first cases were seen in the late 1970s, and the disease was officially recognized by the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta in 1981. As of Feb. 2, 30,396 cases have been reported to the CDC and the number is doubling about every 13 months. The U.S. Surgeon General estimates the U.S. will have 270,000 cases by 1991.

LUNDBERG: Is AIDS always fatal?

MOORE: Yes. Once the AIDS virus has effectively destroyed the immune system, it appears that all the victims eventually die.

LUNDBERG: How many Americans have died to date as a result of AIDS?

MOORE: As of Feb. 2, the CDC reports that 17,338 have died since 1983, but this is considered to be under-reported by perhaps as much as 25 percent. The U.S. Surgeon General estimates that 179,000 Americans will have died by 1991. He also estimates that 100 million could die worldwide by the year 2000.

LUNDBERG: How many people infected with the virus will get the disease?

MOORE: We don't know. Early estimates were that 10 to 25 percent would develop the disease, but more recent estimates, supported by better studies, indicate that at least 50 percent of those infected will eventually develop classical AIDS.

LUNDBERG: How fast does the virus attack those people who get the disease?

MOORE: Again, we don't know. It appears that those infected with the virus progress at varying rates. In general, it seems to take about five years for those who progress to develop AIDS. One of the most important objectives of Army research is to determine the natural course of the disease and how to predict its effect.

A patient who has developed full-blown AIDS can be expected to survive from 18 to 24 months. Episodes of severe illness occur intermitently throughout this time and response of opportunistic inections to threatment is variable.

LUNDBERG: How long will it take to develop a vaccine for the disease?

MOORE: Researchers from the National Institutes of Health have stated that no vaccine can be expected before the mid-1990's. One problem is that the virus mutates rapidly and vaccines against current strains are not likely to produce broadly effective protection.

LUNDBERG: How can a person tell for sure he or she has the AIDS virus?

MOORE: The only practical way is through a blood test. The Army testing program uses two forms of tests: the ELISA, a quick, inexpensive screening test, and the more specific Western Blot confirmatory test. Persons are considered positive only after repeated positive results from both types of test.

LUNDBERG: Why does the Army test for the AIDS antibody instead of for the AIDS virus?

MOORE: It's very difficult and expensive to detect the virus itself in the bloodstream. It's far easier, cheaper and quicker to use the very sensitive ELISA screening test, subjecting any positive samples to the more specific tests for the virus itself.

LUNDBERG: How long is the incubation period from the time an AIDS virus enters the body until the virus can be detected or the antibody appears?

MOORE: We don't know. The test usually becomes positive within two to six weeks of infection with the virus, but there are reports of individuals who have been infected without showing antibody development for more than a year. This is another area where a great deal of research is being focused.

LUNDBERG: Has anyone who tested positive for the AIDS antibody ever tested negative later?

MOORE: No.

LUNDBERG: Have there been any reported cases of a person being infected with the AIDS virus as a result of "social contact", i.e. hugging, kissing, crying, sneezing, etc., or from an insect bite?

MOORE: No. That's the good news; the virus appears to be transmitted only through exchange of blood or semen, or during childbirth.

LUNDBERG: What is the difference between a bacterium and a virus?

MOORE: A bacterium is a self-contained cell, alive in its own right. A virus is a small particule which enters a cell of the body and interrupts the cell's normal function to reproduce itself. The cell may die as a result, releasing more of the viral particles into the body to infect even more cells, and so on.

LUNDBERG: What does the AIDS virus actually do?

MOORE: The AIDS virus selectively attacks the T helper cell — the major component of the immune system — in which it reproduces, eventually destroying the cells. This leaves the body virtually defenseless against infections by unusual as well as common organisms. Death is frequently the result of pneumonia or meningitis.

LUNDBERG: How can a person be sure his or her sex partner isn't infected?

MOORE: There is almost no way to be certain. Even a negative blood test for viral antibodies is of questionable value in those who continue high risk behavior such as intravenous drug use or sexual promiscuity. In a mutally faithful monogamous relationship for the past five to 10 years, in which neither partner has been transfused with blood or blood products during the same period, neither should be infected.

Reserves, Guard prepare for testing

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Army Reserve wants to begin blood tests in April to determine whether Reservists have been infected with the AIDS virus, according to a story published in the March 8 issue of Army Times.

Officials reportedly said the timetable could change, but that they hope to complete testing of about 285,000 reservists assigned to units by April 1989.

"These aren't firm dates. This is only a goal," said an Army Reserve spokesman in the Pentagon.

According to the Times report, guidelines for the program call for members in reserve units (Troop Program Units) to be tested first, followed by tests of soldiers assigned to the Individual Ready Reserve.

Forces Command is in charge of the program's contract requirements. Civilian labs will be asked for bids. Officials said about $1 million has been designated for the blood test program. FOSCOM already is conducting a pilot program among some reservists in Florida and Georgia, Pentagon officials said.

Reservists will be given information about the program before their blood is drawn and tested. Army doctors will notify reservists of the test results and provide counseling if needed. Any medical evaluations will be performed at regional Army medical centers before decisions are made on whether reservists should be discharged.

The story quoted officials as saying that as of Jan. 1, all Army reservists scheduled for overseas training must be tested before deployment.

Tests of Army National Guard members began in July. Guard officials said that through Jan. 31, about 124,000 guard members in 27 states had been tested. The Guard wants to complete testing of all its soldiers by February 1988. Guard members headed overseas must be tested before they leave.

Army policy says active-duty soldiers will be tested yearly and Guard and Reserve soldiers will be tested every two years. Soldiers with positive test results may not be deployed. They also may not be assigned to Ranger units.

National Nutrition Month

Eating balanced meals results in higher energy level

"The foods you eat affect your health, energy, looks and disposition."

By Teresa M. Kemmer
Tripler Army Medical Center

Editor's note: March is National Nutrition Month.

Good nutritional habits should be included as part of your everyday routine.

The foods you eat affect your health, energy, looks and disposition. It is important to eat the right amounts and kinds of foods to supply the body with needed calories and nutrients for growth and maintenance.

Everything you eat belongs to five food groups. Nutrients in these foods fit together like pieces of a puzzle to help your body grow and stay sound and healthy. These five food groups are:

- Fruit and vegetables: These are good sources of vitamin A, vitamin C and fiber. Different fruits and vegetables with give different amounts of these and other nutrients, so it is a good idea to vary the ones you eat. Most fruits and vegetables are low in fat and none contain cholesterol. Dark green, leafy, or orange vegetables are recommended three or four times weekly for vitamin A. Citrus fruit is recommended daily for vitamin C. Four servings of this group are recommended daily.
- Breads and cereals: Breads and cereals, especially whole grain products, are important sources of the B vitamins, iron and fiber. They also supply some protein. For servings of this group are recommended daily.
- Milk and milk products: Milk and cheese products supply most of the calcium in your diet. These products also supply vitamin D, riboflavin and protein. Daily recommendations for this group vary with age: adults need two servings daily; teenagers need four servings daily; and children need three servings daily
- Protein Group: This group includes meat, poultry fish, eggs, dry beans and peas, lentils, seeds, soy extenders, and nuts.

Good nutrition is an important factor when considering your overall health. Eat sensibly!!

Dieters should eat less fat, not less carbs

ARNEWS

WASHINGTON — The major sources of energy in the Average American's diet are carbohydrates and fats. (Proteins and alcohol also supply energy, but to a lesser extent.) When people lower their fat intake, they should eat more carbohydrates to supply their body's energy needs.

In weight-reducing diets, carbohydrates have an advantage over fats in that they contain less than half the number of calories per ounce than fats.

Complex carbohydrate foods are better than simple carbohydrates in this regard. Simple carbohydrates, such as sugars, provide calories but little else in the way of nutrients. Complex carbohydrate foods such as beans, peas, nuts, seeds, fruit, vegetables, whole-grain breads, cereal and cereal products contain may essential nutrients in addition to calories.

Start your day with breakfast

By Elizabeth Charles
Martin Army Community Hospital

Everyone, regardless of age, should start the day with a good breakfast. A good breakfast does not necessarily have to consist of all the food one is accustomed to eating on Sunday morning. Very few people have the time to prepare such elaborate meals on a week day morning.

Starting the day with breakfast can help prepare you for the challenges that await you during the day. It has been shown that students perform better in school after they have eaten breakfast. It has also been proven that adults are more productive on the job and around the house after eating the morning meal. Many people report feeling tired, irritable and listless as the day progresses, if breakfast has not been eaten.

Breakfast provides valuable energy that will pick you up and allow you to function at a much higher level no matter what you plan to do with your day. Most people who miss breakfast start to feel that very familiar hunger feeling around mid-morning.

The problem here is that in most homes and at many work places, the most convenient foods are those that are excessive in calories and fat. Examples: sodas, candy, chips and doughnuts.

These foods do take care of the hunger feeling but they provide very few vital nutrients and too many calories. A good breakfast should be one that allows you to get through the morning without excessive hunger pains. Most people who do eat the morning meal report very little mid-morning snacking. People who miss breakfast also tend to overeat at the next meal. If you are hungry you tend to "eat with your eyes" In other words, you will probably take and eat more food at lunch time, than you would have if a good breakfast had been eaten.

Who says that breakfast must consist of eggs, bacon, grits, SOS, hot cakes, hash browns and buttered toast? Anyone who has ever prepared a meal of this magnitude is well aware of the great amount of work involved in preparation and cleaning. This type of breakfast is fine for weekends when there is plenty of time to enjoy it.

The following are some examples for quick and easy morning meals: Make a sandwich out of leftover meat from the day before. Use leftover soups or casseroles along with fresh fruit or juice. Dry or cooked cereals, milk, fresh fruit or fruit juice and toast also makes for a fast breakfast.

Lack of the time should not be an excuse for skipping breakfast. Most of the above suggestions take very little time and minimal clean-up.

Eat a good breakfast and feel the difference throughout the day.

Make effort to cut down on salt

Army Health Fitness Center

FORT MONROE, Va. — Cutting down on salt may sound difficult and distasteful. But it doesn't have to be either one. Yet the health consequences can be significant, for reducing the amount of salt or sodium consumed often aids people who have high blood pressure.

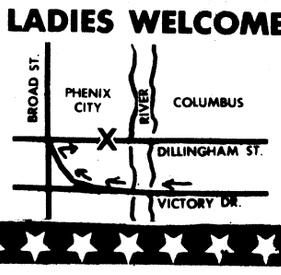
Salt, or more correctly sodium (salt is 40 percent sodium), is important to the body. However, excessive salt in the diet has been linked with hypertension, or high blood pressure. High blood pressure, in turn, can result in heart or kidney disease or stroke.

We Americans are generally accustomed to highly salted foods. It's a taste we acquire almost from birth. We not only like to salt our foods heavily, but we are also used to packaged and processed foods that have salt added to them.

However, concern about the link between sodium and high blood pressure has brought about changes. Many people have learned to cut down on the salt they use in cooking and at the table.

They usually report that after a while they just don't miss the salt flavor. It's generally best to cut back gradually to give the tastebuds time to adjust.

People are also using food labels to help reduce their sodium consumption as more and more labels list the salt content of their products. In addition, food manufacturers have begun to offer a wide variety of low-sodium products. Indeed, grocery stores today carry a variety of low-sodium items, including canned goods, snacks, beverage, cereals, condiments, pasta and dairy products.



Sodium amounts are often listed in milligrams per serving on food labels. A milligram is a tiny fraction of an ounce, but the important thing to remember is that 1,100 to 3,300 milligrams of sodium per day is usually all a person needs. (For the record, a teaspoon of salt contains nearly 2,000 milligrams of sodium.) However, your physician may determine that your sodium consumption should be a different amount.

If your doctor determines, for example, that your intake should be 2,000 milligrams a day, and a food label reveals that the product contains 500 milligrams per serving, you would know that one serving has one-fourth of the sodium that may be safe and adequate for you that day.

Labels that don't list ingredients by amounts will carry the items in the order of their dominance. That is, the first ingredient listed will be the one most used in the product. So if salt comes third on the list, it is the third most used ingredient.

On such labels, the sodium-conscious reader will also look for other sodium-containing items such as monosodium glutamate, baking soda (also identified as sodium bicarbonate), garlic salt, brine and sodium citrate.

Two 6th Bn., 1st ITB soldiers named top troops of quarter

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

You might say 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Brigade produced a bumper crop this quarter.

Two of its soldiers were named Fort Benning's top Soldier and Non-commissioned Officer for the second quarter of fiscal year 1987

SP4 David A. Meade of Company A and SSgt. Samuel P. Watkins of Company B were named 1st ITB Soldier and NCO of the Year, and Army Training Center Soldier and NCO of the year, respectively.

Meade, an administrative clerk at Battalion Headquarters, entered the Army in 1984. "The educational benefits are what drew me in," he said, "but I really do enjoy the Army and my position here."

His main mission at the Battalion is to process enlisted and officer evaluation reports and awards. "I get a certain satisfaction out of intiating the paperwork, sending it through channels and then receiving a letter from Fort Benjamin Harrison notifying me they received it," Meade said. "I feel that what I've done will hopefully help that soldier's career."

Meade himself has not yet decided if he is going to make the military a career, although at present he said he is looking into the Army Funded Legal Assistance Program. "I want to be a lawyer," he said, "that it is the best way to learn how our government works."

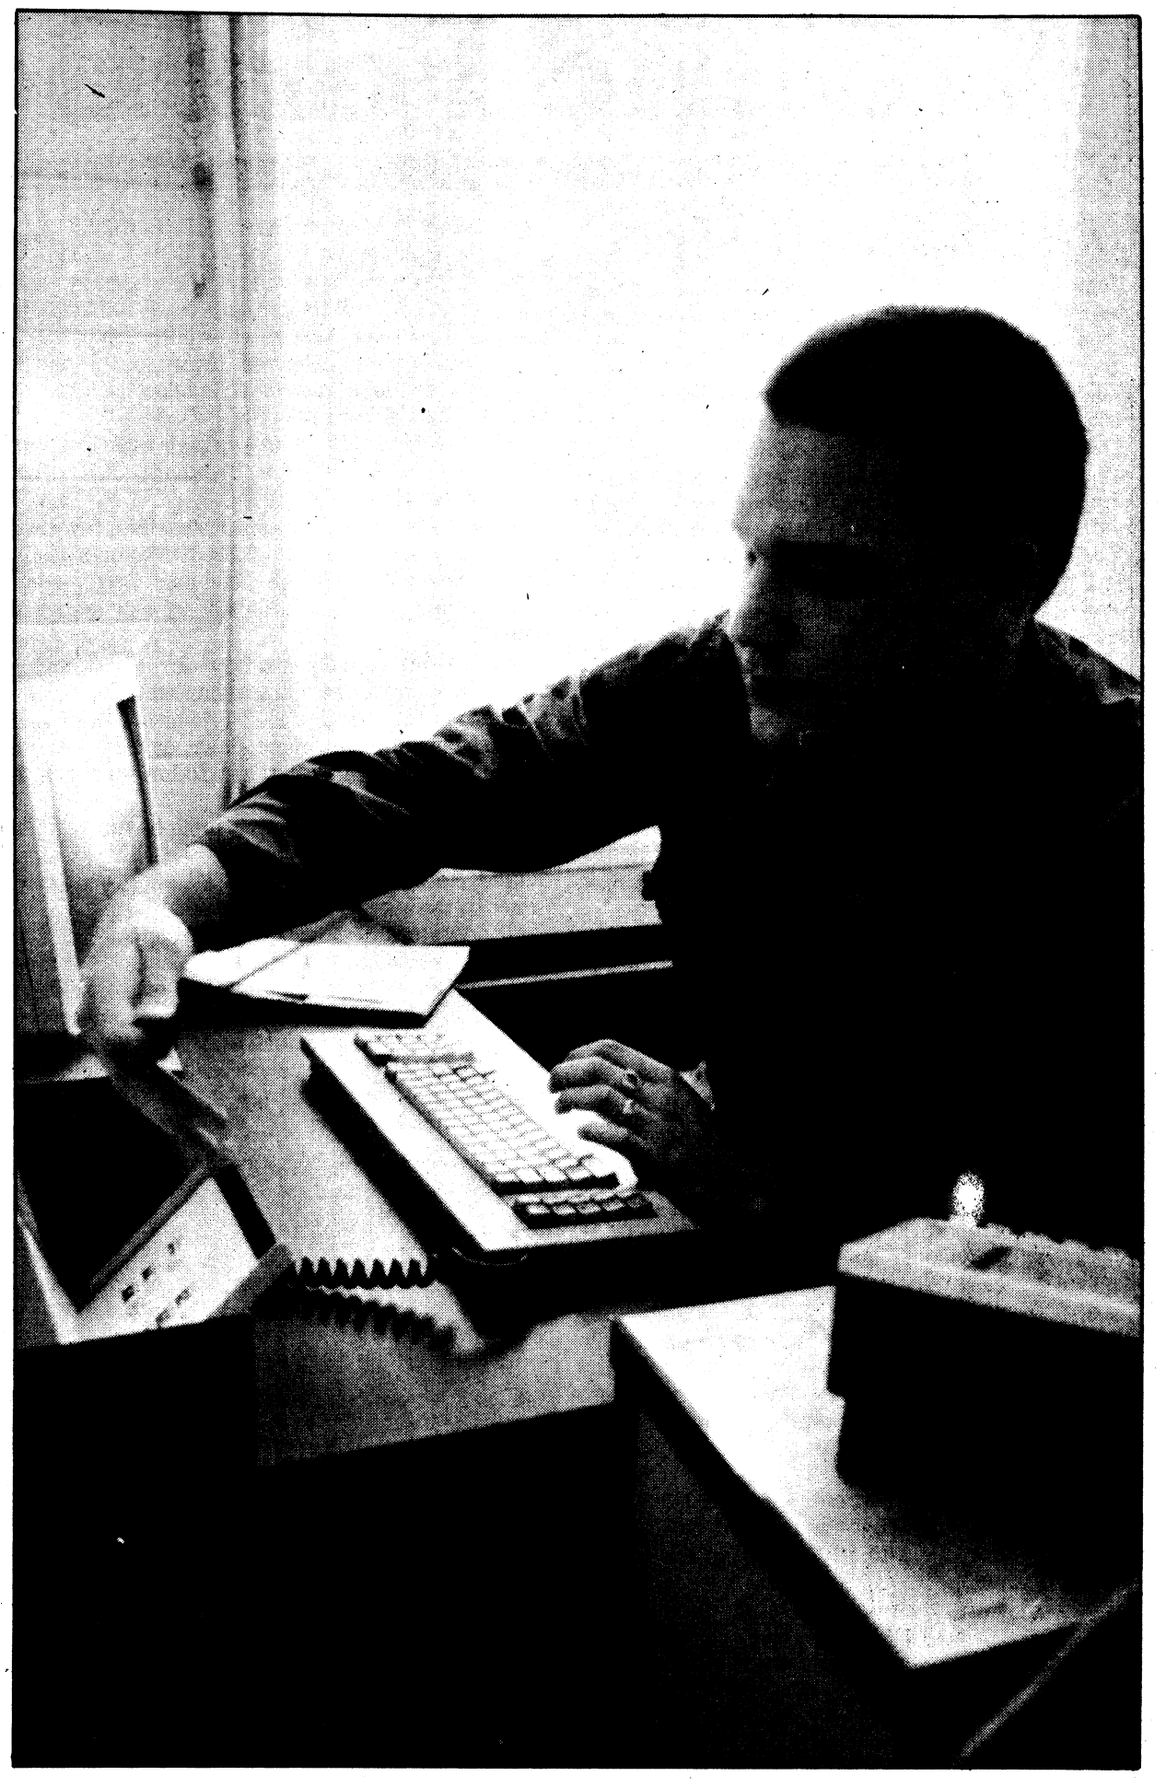
Meade describes himself as a family man and there is a smile in his eyes when he speaks of his one year old daughter, Jessica and wife Stacie, who he met in junior high school.

"I know it seems funny that we were together so young but we just felt good about our relationship," he said.

Meade said his motto is, "You always have to have a goal and you find a way to get there." It seems his success thus far is proof positive that he is a man of his word.

If SSgt. Watkins motto isn't the same as Meade's, it should be, as this soldier has certainly found his way. Watkins is a drill instructor with Company B and has been on the trail for eight months.

He joined the Army in 1978 because he liked the security the Army offered. "I also wanted that challenge of being all I could be," Watkins said.



Since coming in the Army he has earned an associates degree and has attended both the Basic and Primary Leadership Course for his Military Occupational Speciality.

He considers his highest achievement to date as winning the Distinguished Leadership Award at Drill Sergeant School.

"I like being a drill sergeant," Watkins said, "I feel I'm dedicated, and after all, I volunteered for this job."

"I demand high standards from myself and from my subordinates," he said. "If they have problems achieving those standards, I offer them guidance and try to bring their motivation level up."

He describes himself as an avid outdoorsman who enjoys fishing and motorcycle riding. Watkins attributes his success to support from his peers and his own strong desire to win.

Around Fort Benning

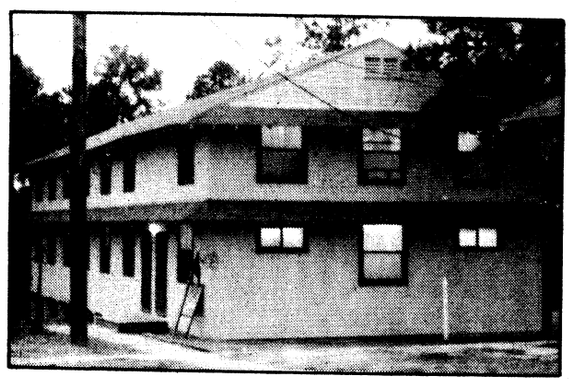
Inf. Training Center

One area with three totally different views describes the 8th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. The first view is of buildings with sparkling new paint; the second is of gutted buildings and the third view shows buildings that reflect 40 plus years of use by troops.

The 8th Battalion occupies buildings constructed during World War II, buildings which, have seen almost continuous use since constructed in 1939 and 1940. During the years, very little has been done to upgrade or repair the buildings. Now, all that is changing due to a U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command approved renovation project.

The one-year renovation project involves 25 barracks and 43 support buildings at a cost of $2,441,752. The contractor received the first set of buildings in August 1986. The construction is on a phase schedule — as one set of buildings is completed, a company moves into those buildings, and the contractors begin work on the vacated buildings. Working on a phased schedule, taking troop training cycles into account, minimizes training disruptions.

The contractors finished work on the first set of building Feb 6, and a new group of soldiers moved in Feb. 17.



The bulk of the work is done on building interiors. First the buildings are gutted; then they are rebuilt. Outdated latrines and showers are replaced with an eye to relieving overcrowding and increasing efficiency. New laundry facilities are constructed. New floors and roofs, as well as energy efficient windows and doors, add to the facelift.

Support for and pride in the project, as well as praise for individuals involved, has come from several sources.

Capt. Francis Farrell, S-4, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center, praised the Directorate of Engineering and Housing. "The support from DEH has been wonderful," he said, "and Marvin Wright has done a great job." Wright, an employee of the Construction inspection Branch, DEH, is the contract coordinator for the project.

Col. R.S. Siegfried, ITC commander, said, "I am delighted that my post and TRADOC think enough about soldiers to add dignity to the place where they live."

TRADOC interest in the renovation did not end with project approval. Lt. Gen. Robert H. Forman, deputy commanding general for training, TRADOC, has visited the area each time he is at Fort Benning. — Marsha Santiago, Infantry Training Center correspondent

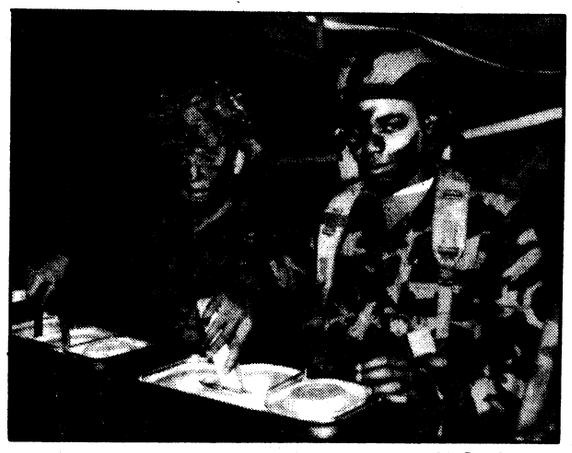
67th Maintenance Bn.

Three messages came, each a week apart, prior to the alert. Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 67th Maintenance Battalion prepared for deployment.

The messages indicated that the assigned vehicles were to be rail loaded and ready for deployment no later than 12 hours after initiation of alert. The mission was executed prior to the alert, the vehicles deployed as scheduled to post of debarkation, Jacksonville, Fla.



The personnel along with baggage were to make their destination (Camp Blanding, Fla.) two days later by C130 aircraft.

Soldiers from HHD, along with soldiers from the 598th Maintenance Company, 586th Engineer Company along with the 36th Engineer Group command group boarded the C130 in two separate groups.

The troops were pleasantly surprised during their one day and two night stay at Camp Blanding. CW2 Benjamin W. Edwards (36th Engineer Group S4) had come down earlier and set up billeting and a field kitchen so hot meals were served.

In the middle of the camp is a big beautiful lake. The weather was nice, so the NCOs conducted training and weapons cleaning on picnic tables by the lake.

All operators departed for Jacksonville, picked up their vehicles and convoyed back to Camp Blanding for their last night. Half of the soldiers deployed back to Fort Benning by commercial buses, while the operators and supervisors convoyed back. The exercise was a great learning experience for the soldiers. — Linda Daniels, 67th Maintenance Battalion

PFC Duane Ingersoll and Pvt. 2 Eddie Conaway, both cooks, test the food.

After returning from an Emergency Deployment Readiness Exercise five days prior, Officers and soldiers of the Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 67th Maintenance Battalion evaluated two Army Training Evaluation Program simultaneously.

The units were the 215th Area Finance Support Center and the 586th Assault Flat Bridge Company. Upon completion of the ARTEPS, HHD remained in the field to conduct their own Field Training Exercise in preparation for their forth coming ARTEP.

After conducting pre-ARTEPs and ARTEPs for five subordinate units within the battalion throughout the past year, conducting their own FTX was a transition that could easily be compared to changing from instructor to student on the same subject matter.

Despite the transition, hard work, and the long hours, HHD held its head high and drove on with the mission.

The FTX turned out to be of great value to HHD. The evidence showed a need for training and reorganizing in certain areas. HHD plans to improve productivity by being well organized. the soldiers did a great job during the the ARTEP evaluation phase and the actual FTX.

The Battalion's main objectives in all training is to develop effective leaders, well-trained soldiers, and organizations that can perform their doctrinal missions. Realizing the constant turn around of soldiers, and the fact "practice makes perfect," demanding FTX's are conducted quarterly, and ARTEPs for units of the 67th are conducted annually. — Linda K. 197th Infantry Bde.

Field training exercises are a commander's tool to capitalize on lessons learned. The 197th Infantry Brigade's logistics section is preparing for an upcoming operation with Canadian Forces in Canada, from lessons learned during last year's Operatio Maple Fury.

Last year, the Brigade faced logistical difficulties in getting major class IX assemblies, such as tank engines or transmissions, from Fort Benning to field training sites at Camp Wainwright in Canada. With the development of a Logistics Interface Operation Network, Brigade and Canadian logistics officers hope to integrate their supply systems and avoid sucl problems during this year's training, "Rendezvous 87."

Capt. Richard Bathurst, 197tl Infantry Brigade logistics officer, explained that the purpose of Operation LION is to ma'ntain operational readiness during the exercise while reducing a dependency on support from Fort Benning.

"We have taken a total look at our system, from the user level, through the 197th Support Battalion, Fort Benning's Installation Supply Depot," Bathurst said. "The interoperability network is there, now we are going to test it."

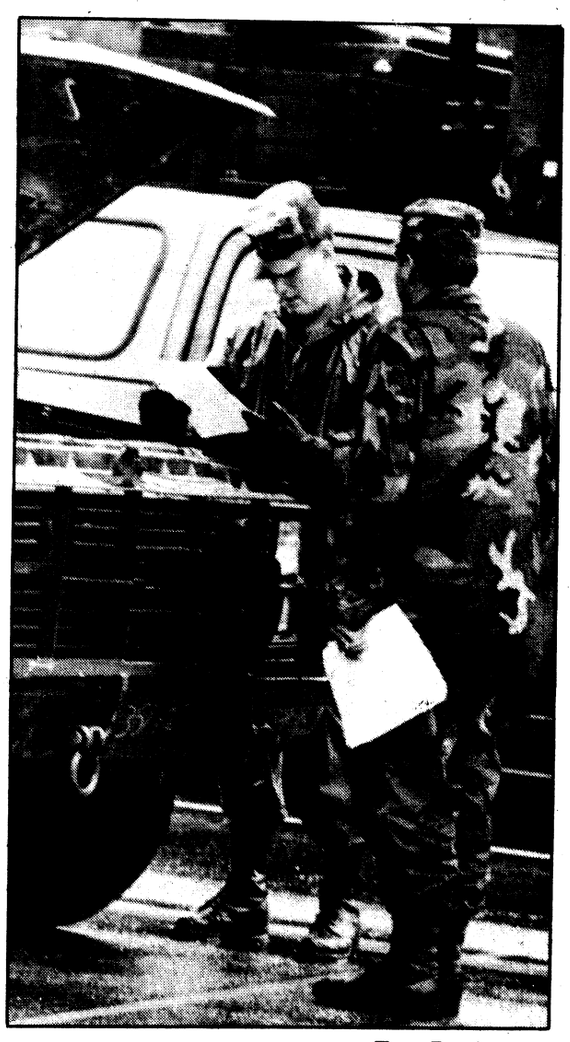
Bathurst explained that such a logistics system exists between NATO allies. During operations with Canadian forces, the 197th Infantry Brigade has the opportunity to "flex the system" and see how it works.

"We must be intercapable with NATO allies and be able to support each other," Bathurst said. "We may face a time in Europe when we see these situations and we can't came back to Fort Benning for support. So we are trying to eliminate the dependency on Fort Benning by shipping these items directly from Anniston, Ala., to the forces on the ground in Canada."

The Brigade will deploy a task force on infantry, armor and support elements to Canada in April, for nearly a month of training with Canadian forces. — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

After returning from Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade found this to be true, along with many other things, during their initial return from the Sledgehammer I field exercise.

"We performed an after operations inspection upon returning from the field," explained 1st Lt. Terry Cole, executive officer for Headquarters Company. "The inspection included such items as TA50, tents, and vehicles."



"I inspected TA50 items of equipment using an item sheet from the supply section," said 1st Sgt. John Washington, of Headquarters Company. "The equipment was accounted for and I was satisfied with the inspection. But we have a long way to go, inspections like this prove how good of a job supervisors are doing."

Not only were the company executive officer and 1st Sgt. involved, but also the company commander as well.

"The concept behind the program is to provide time to maintain equipment, such as weapons, vehicles, and personal equipment," said Capt. Frederick Schulze, Headquarters Company commander. "We need to have our equipment in top shape, ready to deploy anywhere at anytime."

The inspection included all items that were used while in the field. Everything was accounted for and inspected, and perhaps this will give the soldier that one step ahead of the enemy if it is ever needed. — Troy Buchanan, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

10th Mountain Division

Company A, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division has recently completed the U.S. Marine Corp Amphibious Training Course at Little Creek Naval Amphibious Base, Norfolk, Va.

There they received instruction on classes and characteristics of amphibious ships, techniques of debarkation and embarkation, breaching wire obstacles, ship to shore movement, amphibious raids, attacking a fortified beach and evacuation of friendly personnel from a hostile environment.

Leaders of Company A were tested during three training exercises. The first was a night amphibious raid. The second exercise consisted of an evacuation of friendly personnel from a simulated hostile country.

The last exercise consisted of an amphibious beach assault. Amphibious operations were new to the soldiers of the Army's new light division.

The soldiers were taught new techniques of arriving on the modern battlefield. Additionally, the majority of the soldiers experienced their first nights sleep aboard a naval ship, the USS Saginaw.

The deployment was a valuable learning experience for the whole company. The understanding of the missions of the combined forces will aid the leaders of the future. — 1st Lt. Kurt Runge, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry.

67th Maintenance Bn.

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor may not look upon their motor pool as the perfect setting for a maintenance documentary film. However, during a recent visit to Fort Benning, Forces Command Commander, Gen. Joseph T. Palastra Jr., visited the "Panther" motor pool with exactly that in mind.

Palastra visited the 197th Infantry Brigade last week to see first-hand the level of maintenance within the Brigade, and to film a brief documentary film with a backdrop of M-1 and M60 tanks and other vehicles.

"Gen. Palastra visited our motor pool to produce his own maintenance film, directed to Division and Brigade commanders," said Maj. Walter Bunyea, 2-69 Armor executive officer. "The film emphasizes that commanders should learn more about motor pool operations."

Bunyea explained that the high level of maintenance in the battalion enabled the soldiers to quickly recover vehicles and equipment from Operation Sledgehammer I, and prepare the motor pool for the general's visit, within four days.

The general was particularly interested in the battalion's field maintenance operations and spent extra time learning how it works. The armor battalion has a small fleet of tool trucks, trailers and a battalion maintenance van that deploys right along with the tank companies. This enables maintenance soldiers to be on the job quickly, keeping the tankers combat ready. — Sally Roberts, 197th Infantry Brigade correspondent.

Kimbro Gymnasium was dedicated in honor of his uncle, Truman Kimbro, who was a soldier in the 2nd Combat Engineer Battalion, 2nd Infantry Division in Germany during in World War II.

The battalion received a Presidential Citation for its outstanding performance in supporting the invasion of the Siegfried Line from December 13, 1944 to Dec. 20, 1944.

Truman Kimbro received the Congressional Medal of Honor for his individual heroism and self-sacrifice, before he was killed Dec. 19, 1944.

In addition to Truman, his three brothers Jewel, Glen and T.C., also fought in World War II. Jewel, who is SFC James Kimbro's father, served in the Phillipines, while the rest of his brothers served in Europe. The entire family is from Madisonville, Texas.

Presently, SFC Kimbro is the platoon sergeant of the 498th's Service Platoon. He has more than 18 years in service and has reenlisted for another three years.

He lives in Columbus with his wife Donna and their son, Scott, 13, and daughter, Karen, 9. — Anthony J. Intrepido, 34th Medical Battalion correspondent.

Soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group can be found working all over post during these last few months of the winter season.

However, many of the engineers won't be found doing their usual jobs, such as bridging, carpentry and maintenance.

The 36th soldiers have been busily supporting Fort Benning as cyclic support is in full swing for the group.

According to SSgt. Ezzard Crittenden, the 36th Engineer Group Tasking Non-Commissioned Officer, this cycle of support began Feb. 9 and will continue through Mar. 22.

Crittenden said that so far during this cycle, as many as 390 soldiers a day are being tasked from the Group to support Fort Benning.

The soldiers being tasked can be found doing a variety of details including funerals, support for the United States Infantry Board, range details, driving for Protocol, post guards and escorting officers and VIP's, Crittenden said.

The sergeant said, "Every day of the six-week cycle, we receive as many as six calls for funeral details."

The 43rd Engineer Battalion and the 67th Maintenance Battalion split the cycle with each providing soldiers for three weeks. The Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group is used to make up the slack when soldiers from the battalions can't be provided, according to Crittenden.

The biggest tasking of this cycle was one for 109 people per day throughout the six weeks to help with the Lomax training on post Crittenden said.

The 36th Engineer Group is also involved with supporting the post throughout the year, as they are often called upon to back up the 34th Medical Battalion and the 10th Mountain Division when they are in cycle, according to Crittenden. — Shawn Bryson, 36th Engineer Group correspondent

Evaluation system for NCOs approved

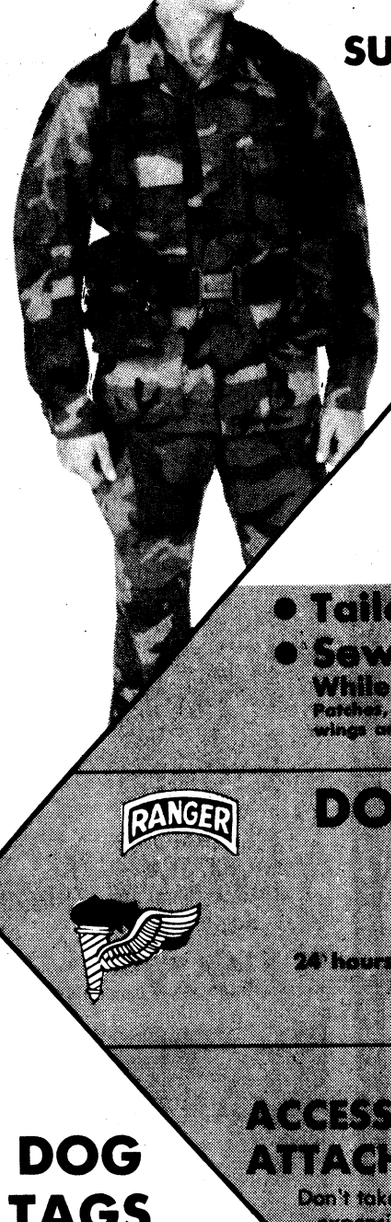
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A new concept for a Non-commissioned Officer Evaluation Reporting System recently approved by Army's Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., is due to replace the existing five-year-old Enlisted Evaluation Reporting System by year's end.

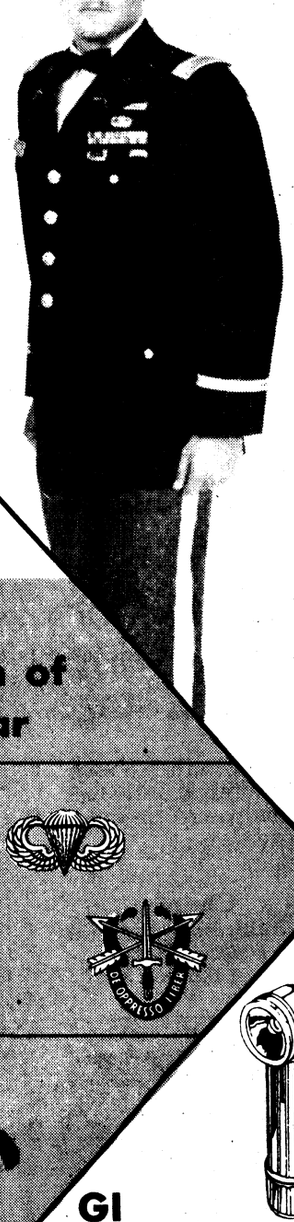
In approving the concept, 'Wickham noted that it's a "far better approach to NCO professionalism," providing a complete measure of a young soldier's development, with a positive indication that the Army is sensitive to the growth of its NCO corps.

The concept derives from extensive input from the entire Army. It establishes the direction the new system will take while guiding the choice of techniques offered by the form as well as the evaluation policies to be included in the regulation, said Sgt. Maj. Clyne Goode, chief of NCO evaluation systems policy at the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va.

Before the December 1987 implementation date, the Army will distribute a draft version of the form in April. Goode explained that as the draft makes its way to the major commands, it also will set in motion an Army-wide education process to introduce the form.



Dedicated te NCO excellence, the new report will emphasize the important role the NCO plays in the Army's success, providing the focal point for NCO pride. The report's name change reflects this new focus, Goode said.



Although it is too early to tell exactly what the new form itself will look like, a number of items appear to be certain, he added. It will include rating scales for Army values and NCO requirements; the requirements for "bullet narratives" instead of prose; a move away from numerical ratings; "trigger words" with expanded definitions for the NCO requirements; dedicated blocks for the physical fitness test and height and weight measurements; a structured duty description which will include key performance elements and additioal duties; and a change in names and roles for rating officials.

Marshal's viewpoint

By Provost Marshal

The major problem in preventing rapes is due to our lack of a proper understanding of the true nature of this crime. In this issue, we'll explore rape and attempt to define this crime by its true nature. Our lack of understanding may stem from television stereotypes of rapists, or from chauvinistic ideals. Regardless, there are many myths and misconceptions about this crime, which causes the rapist to often times remain at large, and the victim left to herself to suffer the trauma alone.

Myths are based on mistaken assumptions and erroneous information, but they are extremely powerful. Myths color society's beliefs; attitudes and actions — in this case, those concerning the women, the rapist and the rape act. There is some truth in some of the myths for certain individual rape situations, but they cannot be seen as facts about rape. Here are some examples:

MYTH — Rapist is a Stranger.

Studies have shown that in the majority of rapes committed, the rapist was known to the victim. They may be related, associated through work, school, or their community. These rapes often occur in the most innocent of circumstances,with the victim being lured into the situation because of trust.

MYTH — Rapist is a Deranged, Mentally-ill Individual.

To say that rapists do not have psychological problems would be wrong, however, they are generally normal people with normal lifestyles. This creates a serious problem for prevention, because the victim has little or no reason to suspect her enemy.

MYTH — Rapes only occur outdoors in secluded places.

Rapes occur wherever the opportunity lies for the rapist. It may be in a home, automobile, office, and many other places.

MYTH — Rape is purely an Act of Sex.

Although sex is the vehicle used to carry out the crime, rape is actually an act of violence and aggression.

MYTH — Only certain Women are Raped.

Any woman may fall prey to a rapist. Cases have been reported that clearly show victims ranging anywhere from six months to ninety years of age.

The bottom line is that rape is a hideous crime against women of all ages, races, and walks of life. In conclusion, it is our responsibility to learn about rape, its prevention, and the care and treatment of the victims. Be prepared to read the next BAYONET issue for the upcoming article dealing with the "Psychology of the Rapist."

Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I received a set of books in the mail which I did not order. A bill was attached, but a friend of mine said that if I did not order them I could keep them without having to pay for them. Is this true?

A: Yes. Any merchandise that you receive in the mail, but did not order, may be kept as a free gift. You have no obligation to tell the company that you intend to keep it, but if you send them a letter telling them that you did not order the merchandise and that you are going to keep it without paying, you may discourage them from sending you repeated bills and dunning notices. You may want to send this letter by certified mail, especially for high priced merchandise, in case it becomes necessary for you to prove that you sent it.

If you believe there was an honest error and you feel uncomfortable keeping the merchandise, you may write the seller and offer to return it if he pays for postage and handling. Give them a reasonable time to do this, (i.e., 30 days), and inform him that you reserve the right to keep the merchandise or to dispose of it as you wish after the time period has passed.

Be sure that you have not obligated yourself by purchasing these items through some type of mail order "club" by reading all the fine print in ads which state that an item is "free," "trial," or "unusually low priced."

If you have any additional questions, feel free to contact the local United States Postal Inspector's Office, or your Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

Q: My wife has been wanting me to buy her a new washer and dryer, but I have been putting it off because I know that lots of people end up being ripped off by appliance stores in military towns. What things do I need to know to help me make this purchase?

A: Planning is the key. Write down exactly what you want out of any major appliance before you begin to shop. Decide what features are most important, such as economical energy features, the size of the appliance, or the cost.

Once you determine what is most important, begin looking at the ads, reading the manufacturer's information on the various models, and talking to salespeople about the products they have available. You may also want to check the local library for a consumer buying guide or similar information.

Once you know what model you are interested in, you need to select a dealer. Check with your friends to see if they can recommend someone within your community. Then contact the Better Business Bureau to see what their records are. It is always a good idea to get two or three suggestions and do some comparison shopping.

Be sure that you total the cost of the item, delivery and installation charges, and any service charges before you make your purchase. Sometimes extra fees like these are hidden in the contracts and may catch you off guard when the bills arrive.

If you have any additional questions, feel free to contact the local Attorney General Consumer Protection Office, or you Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 or 3282.

Tax tips

Quick, EZ tax forms available for returns

By Jessica Kole
Installation tax officer

There are three tax forms you can choose from to file your federal income tax return: Form 1040EZ, Form 1040A and Form 1040.

Form 1040EZ is the easiest and quickest form to complete.

You may use Form 1040EZ if: your filing status is single; you do not claim exemptions for age or blindness; you do not claim any dependents; your taxable income is less than $50,000 and it is all from wages, salaries, tips, and from interest income of $400 or less; you do not claim any tax credits.

If you do not qualify to use Form 1040EZ, you may be able to use Form 1040A. This form is more complicated than the Form 1040EZ but not as detailed as the Form 1040. You can use this form if:

- Your income is only from wages, salaries, tips, interest, dividends, and unemployment compensation;
- Your taxable income is less than $50,000;
- You do not itemize your deductions;
- You have no adjustments to income other than the deduction for a married couple when both work or the deduction for payments to an IRA; and
- You claim no credits other than the political contributions credit, the credit for child and dependent care expenses, or earned income credit.

You may choose to use the Form 1040 since you may pay less tax by taking itemized deductions, adjustments to income, and some credits that you cannot take on Form 1040A or Form 1040EZ.

However, you must file a Form 1040 if you have taxable income in excess of $50,000.00; any foreign bank accounts; foreign trusts; income other than wages, salaries, tips, interest, dividends, or unemployment compensation; and if:

- You are married and your spouse files a separate return and itemizes deductions;
- You are a qualifying widow(er) with a dependent child.
- You are a nonresident alien during any part of the year and do not file a joint return.
- You were married at the end of the year to a nonresident alien or dual-status alien who had U.S. sources of income and does not file a joint return.

If you have any questions regarding which form to use, see the instruction booklets for the various forms or see your unit tax advisor.

Correct filing errors, file amended return

American Forces Press Service

Income tax conversations are the norm during this time of year and taxpayers thrive on swapping tax filing stories. Quite often during such conversations, some taxpayers realize that they have made an error on their tax return by forgetting to report income or claim tax credits and deductions to which they are entitled, or they have erroneously claimed deductions or credits to which they were not entitled.

These errors made on previously filed tax returns can be corrected by filing an amended return. Form 1040X, the Internal Revenue Service says. Taxpayers who find it necessary to amend this year's tax return should wait at least 10 weeks after they originally filed to submit Form 1040X. However, if money is owed, they should submit the amended return by April 15.

It is not necessary to file an amended return to correct addition and subtration errors. These are automatically corrected by computers at IRS service centers when the returns are processed. It is also not necessary to file an amended return if a required schedule was not submitted, IRS adds. If this is the case, IRS will write to request the schedule or attachment.

The amended return which is filed on Form 1040X, Amended U.S. Individual Income Tax Return, can be used to correct any previously filed Form 1040, 1040A, or 1040EZ. Form 1040X must be filed within three years from the date of the original return or within two years from the time the tax was paid, whichever is later, according to the IRS.

Form 1040X and instructions may be obtained by using the handy order form in the tax forms package, or by calling or writing IRS.

Special deductions for married couples

American Forces Press Service

Marries couples who both work are eligible for a special deduction of as much as $3,000 on 1986 federal tax returns. This deduction may be claimed on either Form 1040A or Form 1040 as a subtraction from gross income, the IRS said.

The deduction is limited to 10 percent of the qualified earned income of the lesser-earning spouse. However, the maximum amount allowed is 10 percent of up to $30,000 for a deduction of $3,000. To take the deduction, both spouses must have earned income, such as wages, salaries, and tips. However, income earned by one spouse working for the other does not qualify; now does such income as interest, dividends, pensions, ammunities, IRA distributions, unemployment compensation, deferred compensation or nontaxable income.

More complete information is contained in the tax forms instructions for Form 1040 and Form 1040A.

Some business travel may be deductible

American Forces Press Service

If your normal workweek is Monday through Friday and you attend a meeting of an armed forces Reserve unit that meets one weekend a month in the general area of your tax home on Saturday night, the cost of transportation from your home to the Reserve meetings is a commuting expense. You may not deduct it.

If the meetings are held outside the general area of your tax home, you may deduct the cost of your transportation to attend them. If the Reserve meetings are held after work on a normal workday, even if your regular employment is with a defense activity, you may deduct the expense of getting from one place to the other. However, if for some personal reason you do not go directly from one location to the other, you may deduct only the amount it would have cost you to go directly from the first location to the second.

PCS expenses in '86 could be deductions

American Forces Press Service

If you have a permanent-change-of-station move during 1986, you might be able to get back some out-of-pocket expenses Uncle Sam didn't cover, even if you don't itemize deductions.

PCS expenses are considered an adjustment to income, not itemized deductions. That means there isn't a minimum amount required to file IRS Form 3903, Moving Expenses. But to file the 3903, you have to file the Form 1040. You still don't have to itemize, but you do have to use the 1040.

PCS expenses that can be claimed include:

- Additional insurance coverage on household goods en route;
- The cost of shipping the family pet;
- Charges for renting trailers, roof racks and other moving items;
- Extra expenses resulting from shipping your car overseas; and
- Added costs for exceeding your weight allowance.

All of the above may qualify as adjustments less any money the government paid you for your move.

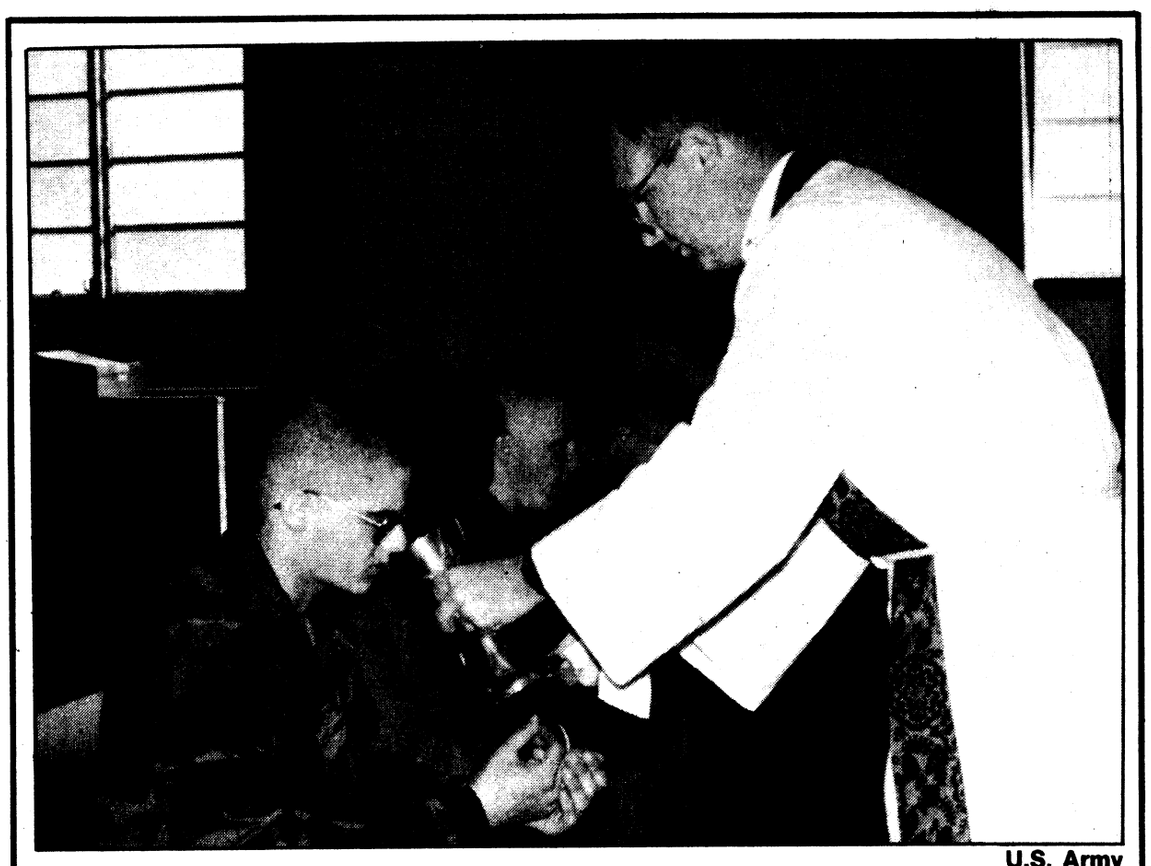
Prayer an act of faith we value

By Karen J. Diefendorf
Chaplain, 2nd MASH, 34th Med

"Now I lay me down to sleep" or "God is great; God is good. Let us thank Him for our food." Interesting, isn't it? One of the first acts we teach our children is prayer. It is an act of faith we value.

Prayer for some is little different than psychological catharsis — just getting it off one's chest. But for those who accept it as the way one communicates with God, it is Power.

The church has taught the importance and discipline of prayer. It is not limited to the head bowed, eyes closed, hands folded form we often see portrayed. It is the discipline of a life praising the nature of God, struggling to know the will of God, seeking the counsel of God, and requesting the power of God.



Prayer puts us in a position of awareness so that we can receive from God those things which meet our needs. "We do not depend on our prayers when we pray, but by prayer we depend on God." (F.W. Woods, "Praying God's Way," Essays on Prayer).

Today is the 100th Anniversary of the World Day of Prayer, a moement of global dimensions. The first Friday in March is set aside for all Christians everywhere to pray. While global today, its beginnings were local. In 1887, lay women of the Presbyterian Church called for a day of prayer for home missions.

In the 1890s, two Baptist women called for a Day of Prayer for Foreign Missions. By the 1920s a National Committee had formed to prepare worship materials for women everywhere to use. By 1927 offerings were taken and sent to the National Committee for both domestic and foreign missions. Even more significant though, in that same year, the Day of Prayer became the World Day of Prayer.

Each year's service was and is written by women from different areas of the world. It has become a day of learning about the needs of a selected area in the world with the service written by women of that area.

The World Day of Prayer is a wonderful testimony to that which bonds together people of faith. The service will be observed locally at St. Matthews Lutheran Church, 4026 Macon Rd., Columbus, Ga. Due to scheduling conflicts it will be on March 14 at 11.

"I reeled in $4,500 by spending $10.62"

Spending a little money in Ledger-Enquirer Classified to sell something like a bass boat can mean big money for you. For example you can run a 3-line ad for 3 days for just $10.62 on a big-ticket item. Or, you can run a 3-line ad for 5 days for just $5 in some classifications. Either way, where you have something to sell, spending a little can help you pick up a lot!

Update your file before it goes to promotion board

By Phil Zarate
Military Personnel Center

At least six months before your records are to appear before a DA selection board, you should begin getting your records in order. Three parts of your file — your photograph, your microfiche and your PQR — contain more than 95 percent of the information on which the selection board members will decide whether or not to select you for promotion or school attendance. You must not ignore this important fact. Review your file.

Update photographs

Beginning with the fiscal year 1986 Sergeants Major Academy Selection Board, centralized Enlisted Promotion/School Selection Boards were furnished original photographs for all soldiers in announced zones of consideration. Official photographs are no longer microfiched as part of the OMPF.

If you have lost weight, been promoted, or have several new awards and decorations or a better fitting uniform since your last photo, you might want to have a new one made. The photograph is critical and carries a lot of weight with board members. Ensure that your photo is sharp and your image does not blend in with the background.

A sloppy appearance, unauthorized awards and decorations, or being overweight could adversely affect your selection opportunities. A missing photograph may mislead board members to believe that you are apathetic or are trying to hide something (overweight?). It could also cause a negative reaction by board members.

Your photograph is to be sent to: The U.S. Army Enlisted Records and Evaluation Center, ATTN: PCRE-FS, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. 46249. Do not send photos to MILPERCEN.

Review your file

You can request a copy of your OMPF by writing to Commander, USAEREC, ATTN: PCRE-RF-I, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. 46249. Your request must contain your full name, complete social security number, and address to where the OMPF is to be sent. A copy will be provided to you free of charge. Although you can review your file in person, you will be given the same microfiche to review. Once hard copy documents sent to USAEREC are placed on your microfiche, the documents are destroyed.

Don't forget PQR

The Personnel Qualification Record is the third and final portion of your file that you must thoroughly review. DA Form 2A (part I of the PQR) is the computer printout that shows some of the same things shown on the DA Form 2-1 (part II), but the former is more limited in information. Therefore, these two forms must be compared to see if there is conflicting data. For example, a selection board member may become confused if item 4, section I, of DA Form 2-1 indicates you have no physical limitations but item 9, section B, of your DA Form 2A indicates you have a permanent profile. There are numerous blocks of corresponding information on these two forms, so check them carefully. After you have reviewed your PQR, you must certify that you have done so, and that your correct height and weight are annotated.

Errors to watch for

Following are some common discrepancies found by DA enlisted selection boards in the military histories/files of soldiers. These are not all inclusive; they are offered simply as a tool to use when reviewing your files.

Missing/outdated photos. (Compare with item 9, section 9, DA Form 2A).

Missing awards, decorations, letters of appreciation, etc. (Compare with item 9, section II, DA Form 2-1).

Missing PQR.

Missing soldier certifications.

Missing EERs. (Compare with item 7, section D, DA Form 2A).

Height, weight differences between iem 22, section IV, DA Form 2-1, and the individual's own certification and/or photo.

Authorized position dates. (Compare items 2 and 3, section E, DA Form 2A, with item 35, section VII, DA Form 2-1.)

Wearing of unauthorized badges, tabs, awards, and decorations.

Illegible copies of DA Forms 2A and 2-1.

Medical system ready for fielding

By Donna Bolinger
American Forces Press Service

Active duty and Reserve component medical personnel will soon get a chance to train using the Defense Department's newest deployable medical system, DEPMEDS.

Scheduled for official introduction later this year, the system will be the first to be used by all four military services to treat combat casualties.

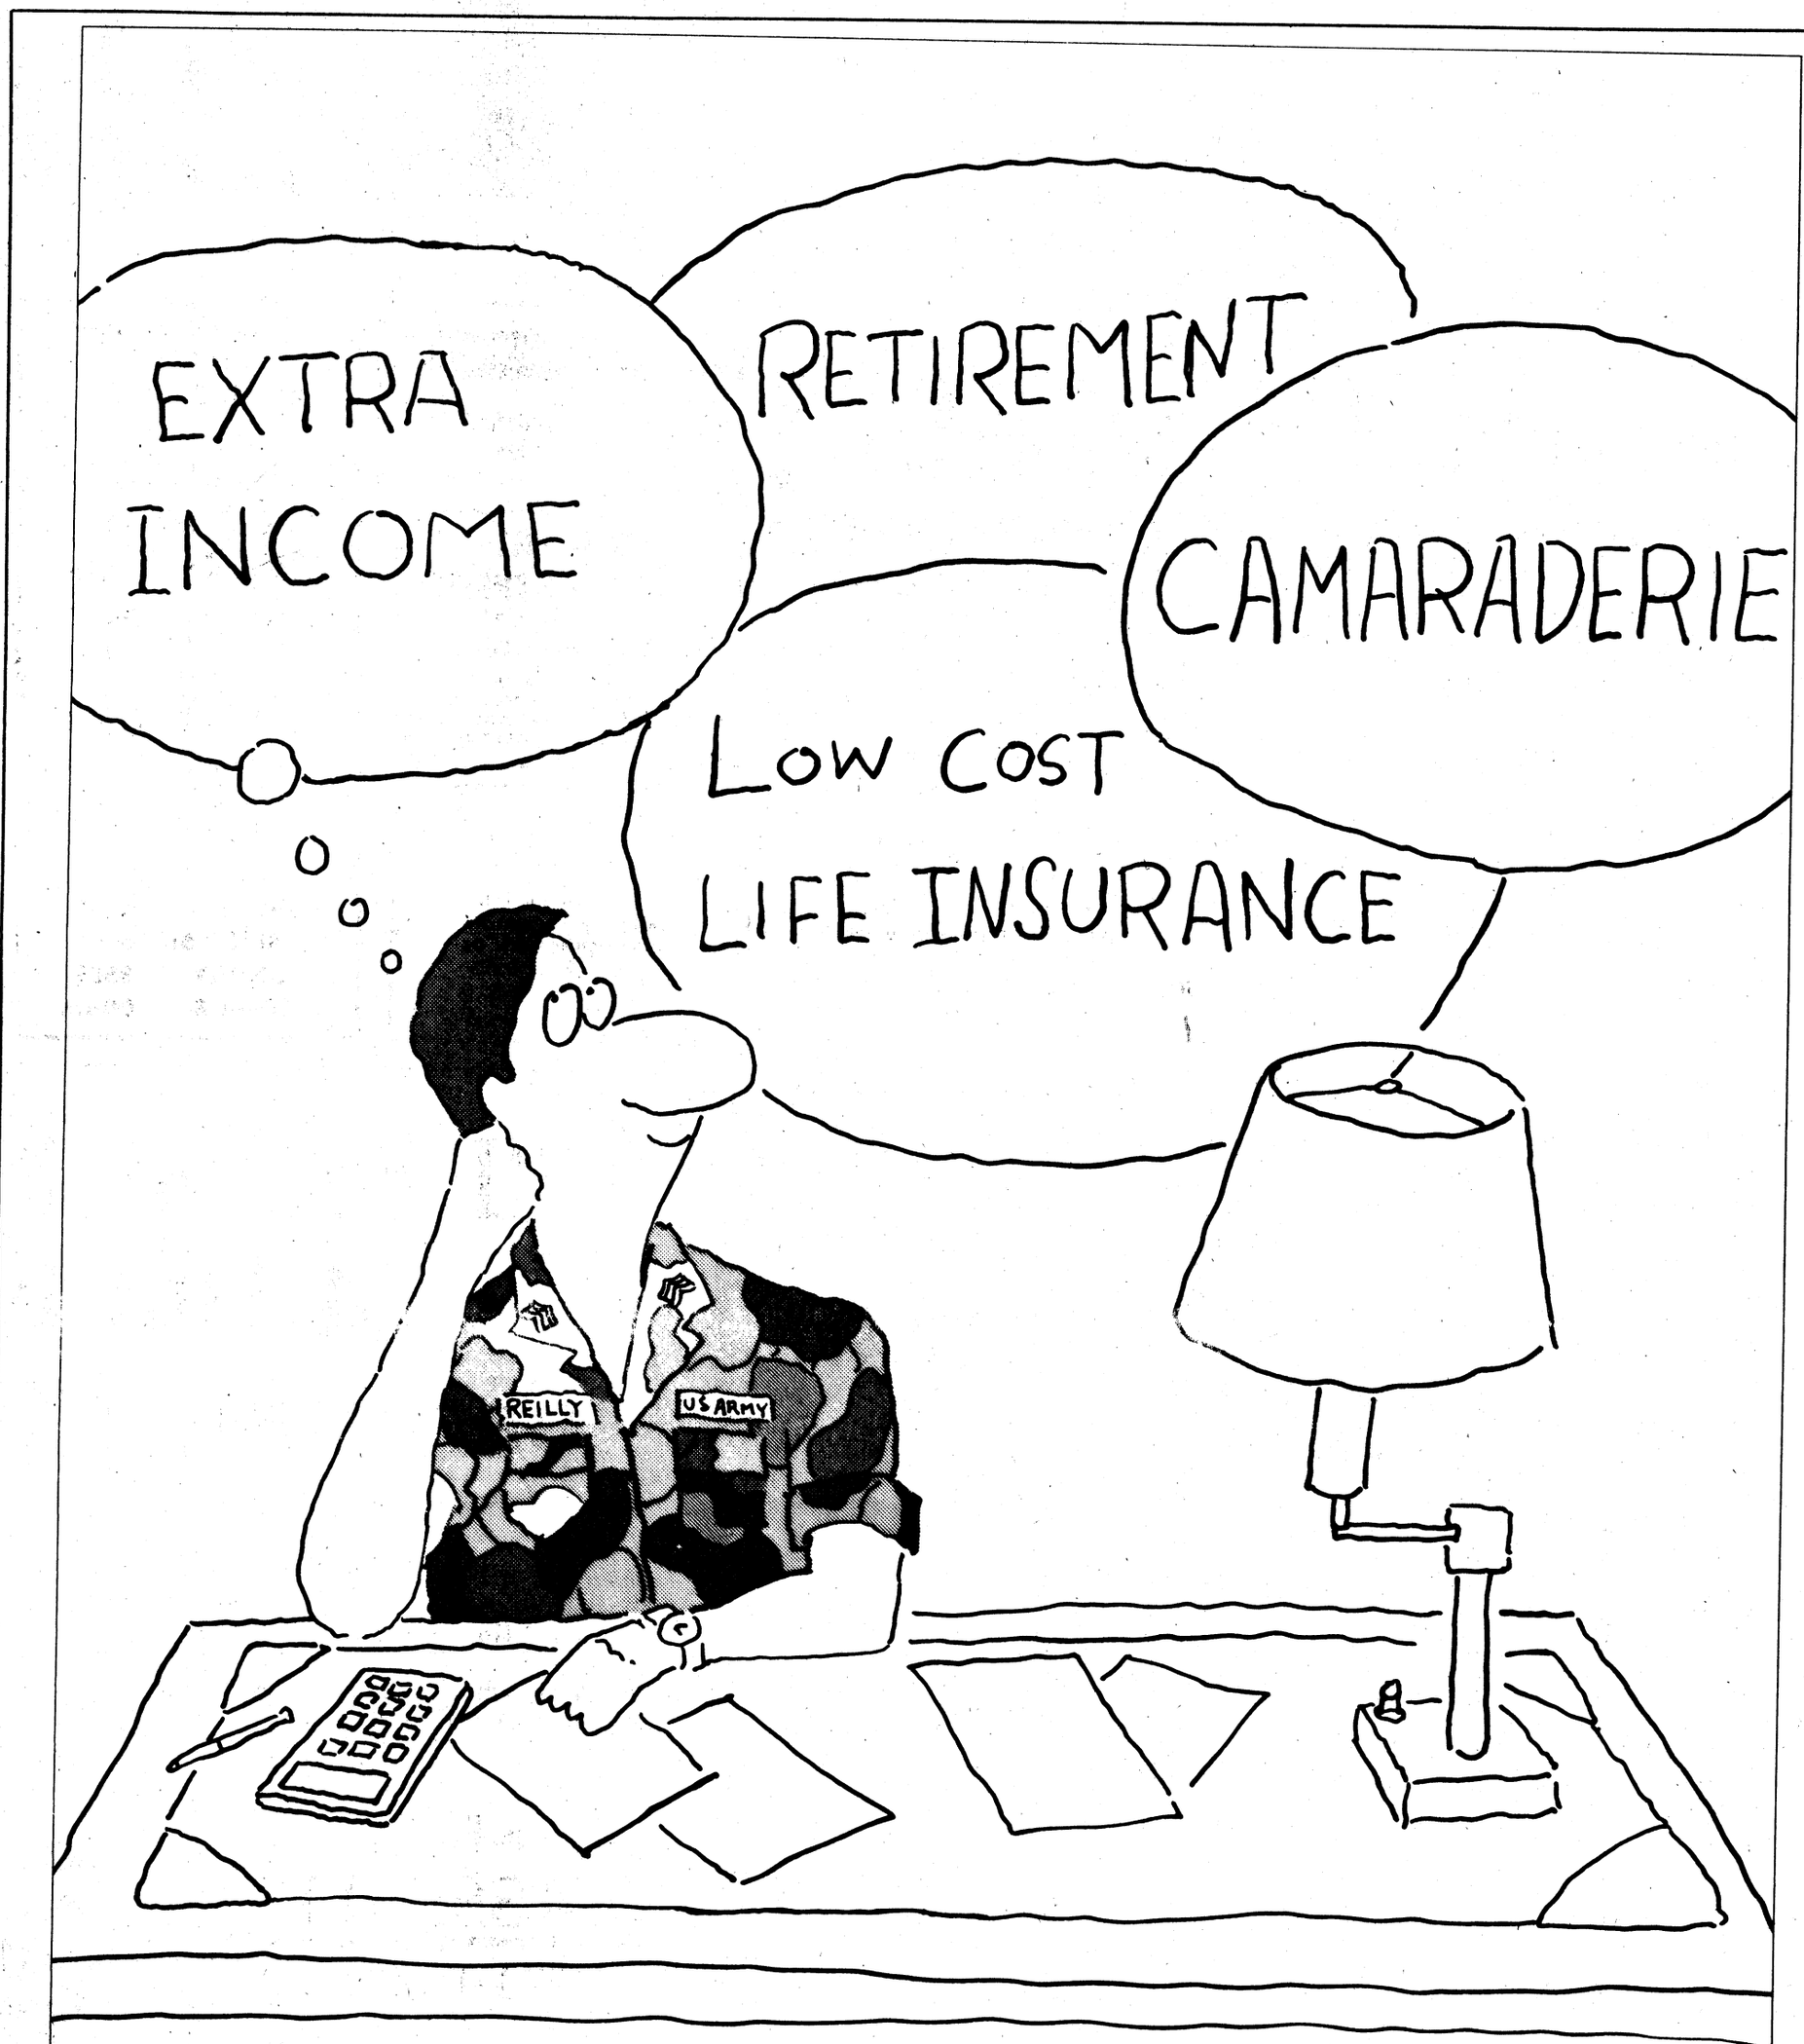
Providing the best wartime medical care possible has always been a major concern of the military. But with the new deployable medical system, improved health services will be offered closer to the front lines than ever before. This will allow medical personnel to tend to casualties with fewer delays, speeding up injured service members' recovery and return to duty.

And because the system is standard for all services, it is being brought in larger quantities, at a lower per-unit cost than those it replaces, according to Wilbur J. Balderson, assistant staff director of the Defense Medical Standardization Board.

Balderson said the new deployable system consists of medical specialty sets, housed in newly designed expandable shelters or tents.

These modules can be positioned together into about 15 different configurations, depending on the size, mission and location of the facility.

In the case of a 356-bed hospital to the rear of the combat zone, for example, about 25 of the basic deployable medical system's modules can be positioned together.



This was the configuration used by the Army's 21st Evacuation Hospital at Fort Hood, Texas, which gave the new system the thumbs-up after testing in late 1984.

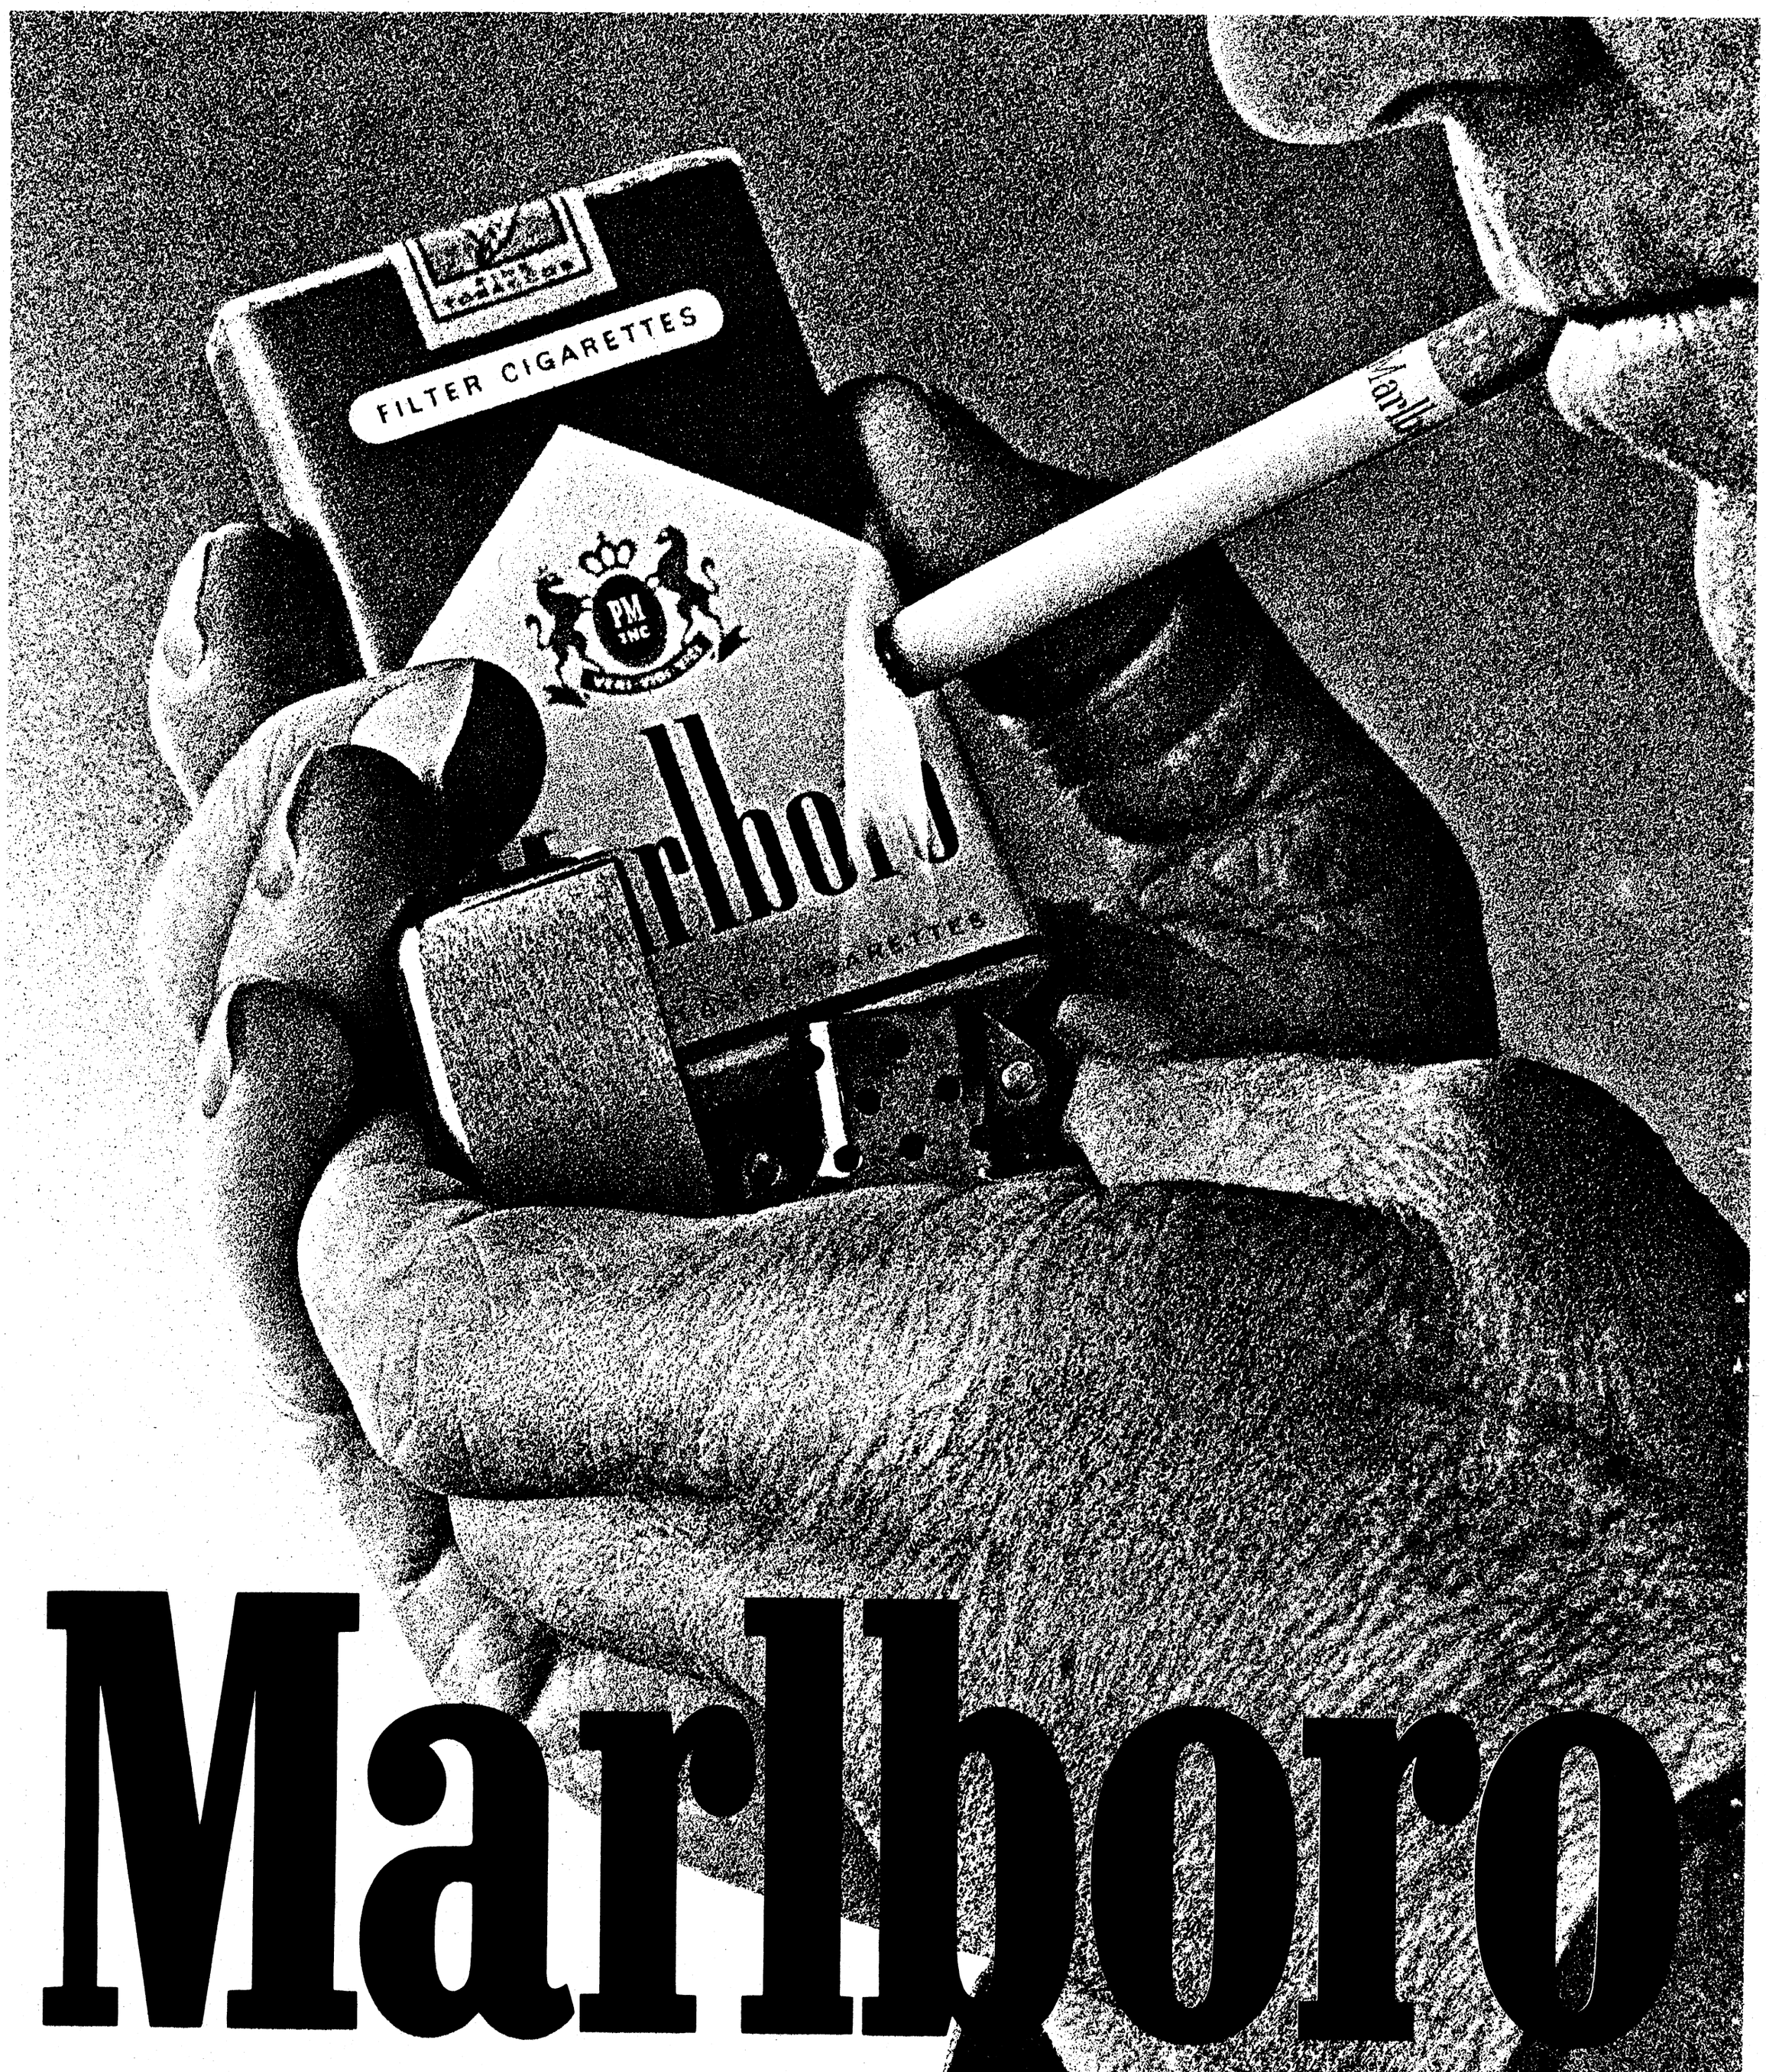
The unit positioned these modules to provide operating roms with six operating tables, X-ray rooms, a pharmacy, laboratory, blood bank, triage, emergency and pre-operation area, patient wards, a physical therapy area, and optometry and general entistry clinics. Separate modules were used for central materiel services and medical supply areas.

Balderson said each DEPMEDS unit will be equipped with the surgical sets and other medical and non-medical support equipment needed to operate it. Many of the items used in the Army's MUST (Medical Unit Self-Contained Transportable) system, such as the Army-developed operating table, hospital bed, anesthesia apparatus and surgical instrument tables, were adapted to DEPMEDS.

The new systems will include standardized non-medical equipment: generators, food service systems, water distribution and utilities support systems, hospital baths, oxygen generating systems, special water-production systems, power distribution systems and environmental-control units.

As proven during the test, the individual modules are easily transportable and can be quickly disassembled, repacked, transported to a new field site and reassembled. They can be strategically airlifted as well, providing a flexibility not available in the systems they replace.

GETTING OUT? YOUR ARMY BENEFITS CAN BE MORE THAN MEMORIES.



It's probably hard to say what you'll miss most about the Army if you've decided to return to civilian life. For some, it's the camaraderie. Others miss the travel and excitement. Still more miss those money-saving Army benefits.

Joining the Army Reserve can help you retain many things you like about the Army. Most important, it will help you keep some of those great benefits. Like your PX and commissary privileges. Space-available air travel. And low-cost life insurance.

The extra income you'll earn will come in handy, too. Right now, an E-5 with four years active duty earns over $125 for a single Reserve weekend. Add two weeks annual training pay, and you've got over $2,000 a year. Plus, you'll continue to qualify for retirement pay.

For more information call SGM Carl E. Pelt, MSG James M. Southern or SGM Curtis B. Haig Jr. at 545-4132, 544-4759 or 544-2062

Taking the heat just part of the job for post firemen

Photos by Mike Brazile

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Fire Station No. 1 is one of four on Fort Benning. No. 1 takes care of all fire emergencies on Main Post. The firefighter's jobs are much like those of soldiers: long hours of maintaining and training coupled with occasional, short bursts of intense, dangerous action.

"We have to maintain and train to keep our equipment and ourselves ready to go at a moment's notice. We don't have to respond to a lot of fires at Fort Benning because there aren't many. That's a result of a good fire safety awareness and fire prevention program," said lead firefighter Lt. Kenneth Nickerson.

The firefighters, who work for 24 hours and then are off 24, maintain their equipment in a high state of readiness as a daily ritual.

"The first thing we do when we come in in the morning is check the operational readiness of all of our equipment. We have to be ready to go 24 hours a day and if our equipment isn't ready, we can't properly respond," said the 16-year firefighting veteran.

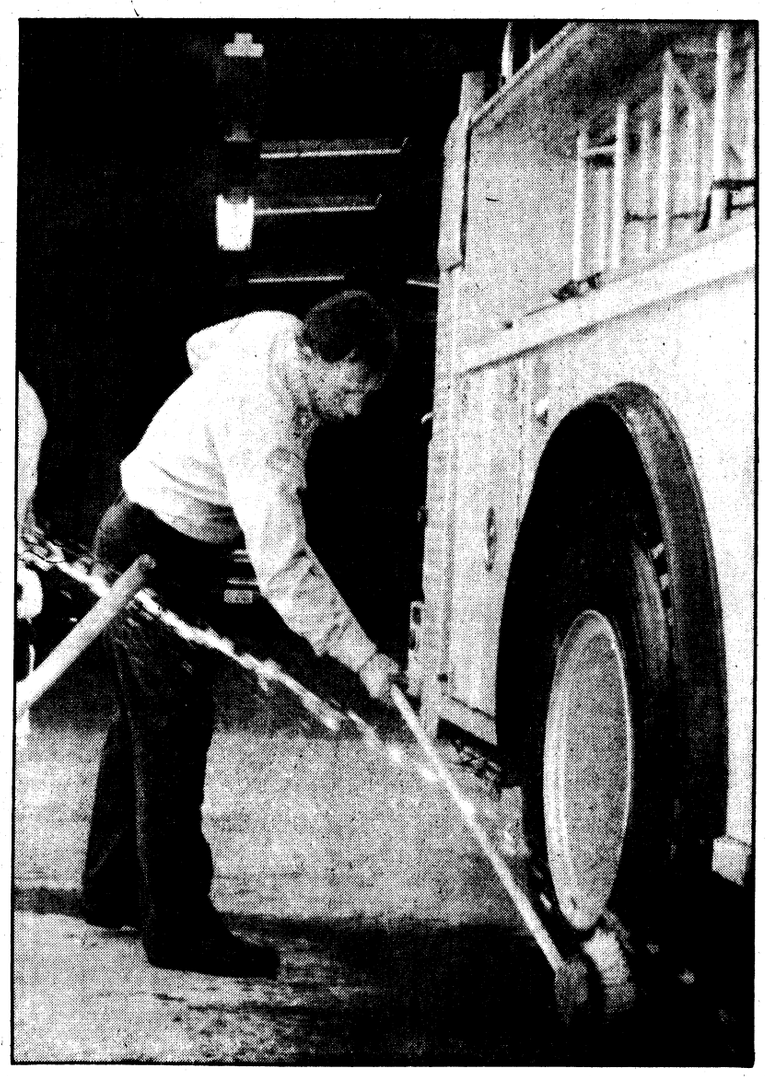
Station 1 maintains a ladder truck, a pump engine, a rescue truck and an assistant fire chief's sedan.

The firefighters are required to conduct one hour of training daily in addition to maintaining equipment and being ready to respond to an emergency.

"We practice laying hoseline off trucks, using rescue equipment hazardous materials training, fighting live training fires, conducting rescues of "people" in crashed airplanes and vehicles and situational maze training involving a darkened maze and a firefighter negotiating it," said Lt. Leslie Brossett.

In addition to responding to fires, Benning firefighters conduct fire inspections, prepare and maintain fire plans on all buildings at Fort Benning, conduct fire safety classes and maintain all fire extinguishers on-post.

"We also respond to all major vehicle accidents at Benning. Many times we have to extract people who are pinned in vehicles or ensure wrecked vehicles don't catch on fire or continue to burn if already on fire," Nickerson said.



Fort Benning firefighters must have at least two years of firefighting experience or have at least an associate degree in fire science.

Besides long hours and sometimes dangerous situations, firefighters also spend much of their time away from their homes and families. Why do they do it?

"I like helping people. I've been a firefighter for 10 years. I don't really think about the stress or danger, I just think about the people I'm trying to help or the property I'm trying to save," said firefighter James Brown.

"We're like firefighters everywhere except for a station dog. Regulations won't allow us to have one," Nickerson said, smiling.

The Benning firefighters, like their civilian counterparts, cook their own meals in the station's kitchen and all have a bed for sleeping while on-call.

James Brown scrubs down the ladder truck, part of a firefighter's daily work routine.

Animal related incidents on the increase at Benning

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning is "going to the dogs" as far as animal control is concerned.

SP4 Gary Ballard, the Animal Control Specialist for Fort Benning, is charged with responding to complaints about animals, picking these animals up and with investigation of all animal-related adverse incidents on the post.

"One of the primary problems we have on Fort Benning with animals is control. A dog or cat on Fort Benning must be on a leash or under voice control. Otherwise, they are in violation of post regulations," Ballard said.

Voice control means a loose animal responding immediately to a voice command the first time the command is issued. If this is not the case, then the animal is not considered under control.

If Ballard is contacted about a loose animal, the animal is picked up and taken to the Veterinary Activity. The owner of the animal is then contacted for pick-up and is charged $2 for each day the animal is kept in confinement. If a dog is picked up more than twice for running loose, the owner is usually required to get rid of the animal.

Ballard said another problem with animals is nuisance calls, such as dogs continually barking.

"If a post resident calls more than three times about an animal causing a nuisance, then the animal is impounded and the owner of the animal is not allowed to keep an animal on the reservation," Ballard said.

Dog bites are also cited as a concern on Fort Benning.

"If a dog attacks and bites a person, unprovoked, one time, then the animal is impounded and the owner is not allowed to keep a pet on Fort Benning. If a dog bites someone after being provoked, such as a child deliberately teasing a dog more than twice, then the animal is, again, impounded and the owner is not allowed to keep a pet on post," he said.

Ballard stressed that, once a post resident has been instructed that he or she can no longer keep a pet on the reservation but elects to do so anyway, then that resident is subject to being evicted from post housing. This has occurred twice since Ballard has been the Animal Control Specialist.

Ballard also stressed that post residents should leave all wild animals alone.

For more informaion on animals at Fort Benning call Ballard at 545-1731.

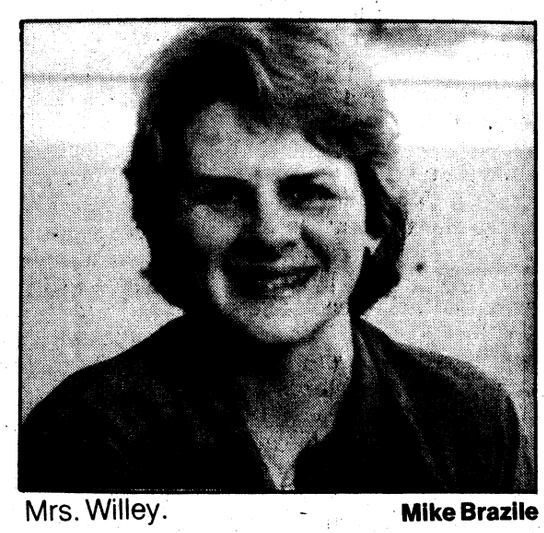
Army spouse shares helpful tips for coping with strain of lifestyle

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Barbara Willey is an Army wife who doesn't take the time to worry about what's bad about having a husband in the military — she looks at what's positive.

"I don't want to sound like Pollyanna, acting as if everything's great all of the time. It isn't, but there are planty of groups who address the shortcomings of military life. I like to look at the pluses," said Mrs. Willey, who has been a partner in the Army with her husband for the past 12 years.



Mrs. Willey said she had a very bad experience as an Army wife when her husband, now a major, was sent to Panama as a company commander.

"We have two babies, were assigned to substandard housing and my husband went immediately to the field. That seemed to be the way it went for a long time," she said. "I felt the Army was stealing my husband from me and that piled on the not-so-great quarters and having to take care of two young ones. I eventually reached a point where I couldn't handle all the pressures of being a company commander's wife, a mother and a housekeeper. I finally had to go into therapy for serious depression."

Through her experience with depression and 10 moves in the last 12 years, kids changing schools, and homes being left behind, she developed her "Ten Survival Techniques to Make the Army Work for You." She began her presentations for coffee groups and it has grown into a program that Army posts pay her for putting on.

Her survival techniques are:

- Get involved in the community for the sake of making relationships. If you move a lot you meet people from all walks of life and it broadens your experiences. You may not have roots but you'll have a lot of friends that you'll keep running into over the years.
- Take advantage of the opportunity of living in different places. Explore and discover people, places and things wherever you're sent and remember, it's all at the expense of Uncle Sam.
- Strike a balance between involvement with the military community and with the civilian community, get involved in both.
- Develop a good sense of humor and be able to laugh at yourself and your situation.
- Get informed about wills, insurance papers, powers of attorney and finances. If something happens to your soldier-spouse, you have to be able to carry on.
- Get smart by taking advantage of local college classes, craft classes, music lessons, whatever interests you and is available.
- Get hospitalable and relate your experiences to others. There's always someone else who has had a similar experience and it helps to talk.
- Get gorgeous, mentally and physically; take care of and improve yourself.
- Get away sometimes by yourself, with the family and with your husband. Your soldier-spouse is going to be very busy and you have to be the initiator.
- Get patriotic about what you're a part of, the Army.

Suspect a spy? Call hotline

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army personnel now have a special, toll-free hotline by which they may report suspected cases of espionage.

The hotline — 1-800-CALL SPY (1-800-225-5779) — gives Army counterintelligence agents another tool in responding to the threat of subversion and espionage directed against the Army and the nation.

Installation of the hotline under a pilot program comes at a time of heightened national publicity over the incidence of Americans caught, tried and convincted of spying.

Army intelligence officials say that most of these cases became known because someone reported the suspicious behavior to the proper authorities.

Now that the hotline is in place, officials expect the reporting process to be easier, but not necessarily leading to exposure of every spy. They realize that professional spies are crafty and strive hard to avoid detection. But if you should spot dead-give-away activity on the part of someone in or around your areas of work, training or leisure, you have a duty to report it. Your security officer can brief you on some of the classic warning signs that may warrant investigation by appropriate authorities. Those signs range from a soldier's frequent, casual, low-profile contact with an unidentified foreign-government official to a sudden acquisition of wealth by a relatively low-paid colleague.

If you think you know a spy or someone who has been contacted by a spy, you are encouraged to call the hotline or to contact the local resient office of the U.S. Army Intelligence and Security Command. Calls to the hotline are answered 24 hours a day. Overseas, contact your nearest military intelligence unit.

Will the hotling accept anonymous calls? Yes, said Lt. Col. Richard Holk, public affairs officers at INSCOM headquarters in Arlington, Va. "Confidentiality of sources will be protected in all cases," he added.

Forestry Management Program reaps huge rewards

By Mike Brazile
The Bayonet staff writer

The Natural Resources Management Division, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, enhances military training at Fort Benning, protects and nurtures the environment and makes money for the Army, all at the same time.

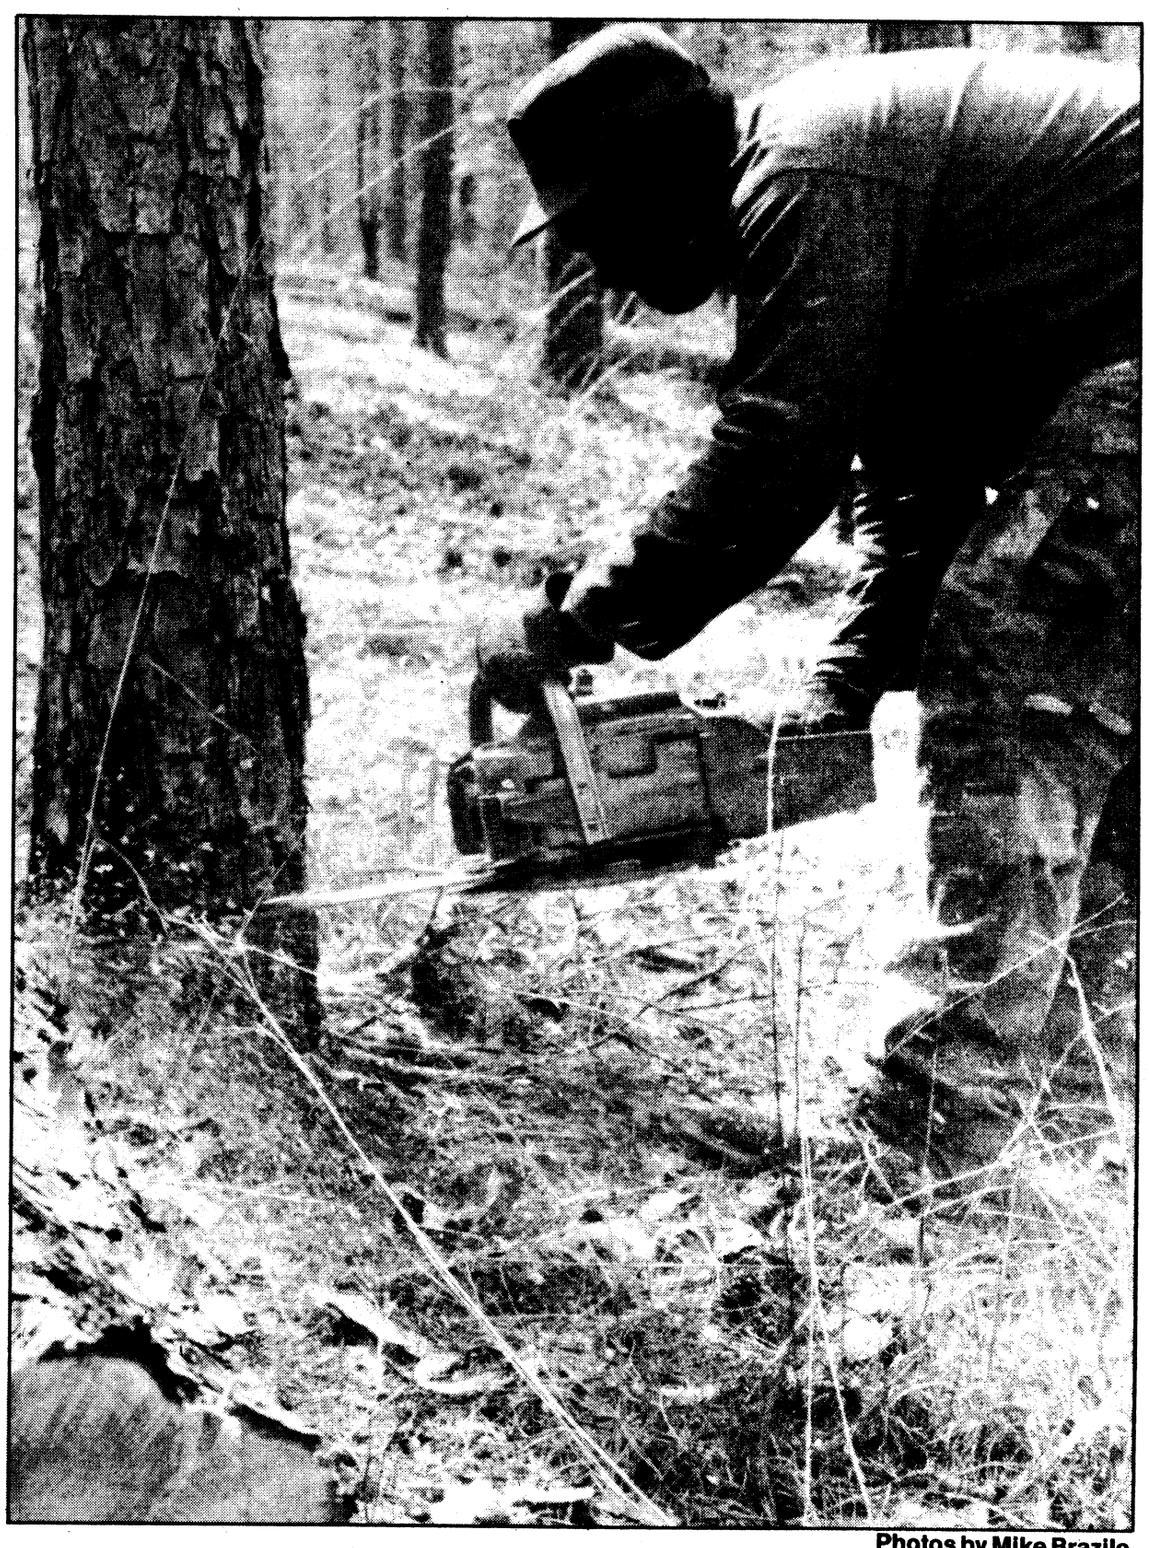
Since the 1950s, the Natural Resources Management Division under their Forestry Management Program has harvested timber on the Fort Benning reservation.

"We harvest over-mature trees, thin dense tree stands and keep trees growing. We do all of this to keep areas open for military training and to preserve the natural environment," said Chris Dunn, chief of the Natural Resources Management Division.

A spin-off of this timber harvesting is selling the harvested wood.

"Once we decide an area needs to be thinned or over-mature trees taken out, the Corps of Engineers is called in to take care of the actual cutting," Dunn said.

"Once Chris lets me know what has to be done, I put out a logging contract for bid," said William Lord, of the Savannah District Corp of Engineers. "Once a contract is awarded, the logging company wining the contract comes in and does the actual cutting and hauling."



In fiscal year 1986, the timber harvesting project grossed more than $1 million, from the sale ofof six million board feet of soft woods and 7,500 cords of pulp wood. The soft woods are cut into lumber and the pulp wood goes to paper mills.

From the net of this gross figure, 40 percent goes to Muscogee, Chattahoochee and Russell Counties for use in their school and roads budget. The remaining funds go to a variety of projects.

"Our forestry management program is totally self-sufficient because of the timber sales," Dunn said. "No tax dollars go to support the forestry program because the program's operating budget is taken from the net timber sales figure and the remainder goes to the government."

In additon to making recommendations on care of each compartment, forestry personnel also plant new trees where needed.

"We look upon ourselves as an asset for military training. We try to support the military activity at Fort Benning," Dunn said.

Avoiding things you fear won't make them go away

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

The young soldier mind was in turmoil as he watched his buddy crawl into the tent they just erected. It was starting to rain and the raindrops blended with the sweat that beaded on the young man's forehead. He began to tremble at the thought of going into the small, enclosed dark shelter.

This situation is not unlike that which happens to soldiers who are clastrophobic. They have a profound fear of enclosed spaces. What about those who have a fear of height? They might as well forget Airborne training. But all hope is not lost.

According to clinical psychologist and chief of the Psychology Department, Dr. Wynn P. Baldock, at Martin Army Community Hospital, all phobias are treatable.

"There are basically three different kinds of phobias. There is agoraphobia, sociophobia and simplephobia," Baldock said.

The least serious phobia is the simplephobia. This is a fear of bridges, heights, elevators, cats, etc. "However this fear can develop into a more serious phobia if it is fed," Baldock said. "Most Simplephobics avoid the situation they fear. But in doing so they are reinforcing the phobia.

"Realistically they know it is unreasonable but it just intensifies as they reinforce it," he said.

Sociophobics are also unreasonable in that they fear situations where they will or could be scrutinized by others, "such as a public lavatory or public speaking," he said.

The most serious phobia is agraphobia. This fear is usually triggered by tramatic event. "This fear is of being alone in public places or novel situations," Baldock said.

Although this fear effects more women than men, many of these cases go untreated. "In a lot of cases they're afraid to go to the doctor because it means going out," Baldock said.

All of the phobias can be combined with each other to form different kinds of anxiety disorders but they all usually begin with the anticipatory anxiety. "It's a matter of degree. Everybody experiences shades of them. But the phobic reaction is an extreme case of anxiety," Baldock said.

Although there are about 18 million people in America that experience phobias. Fort Benning does not seem to have many.

"Occassionally we see agraphobic family members and we do treat a few soldiers who may be clostaphobic or have a fear of insects or water, but I don't think I've seen anything more than a simplphobia in soldiers in the two years I've been here," Baldock said.

The folks on post have been successful in treating phobias and go about it in two ways. First of all, the most common method chosen according to Baldock is the "Systematic Desensitization." "We gradually present the fear stimulious. Most phobics who face their fear more than once and see that they did alright realize that they made it once they can make it again," Baldock said.

Another method that is more drastic and used less frequently is the "Flooding" Technique. "This is where we basically confront them with the fear sort of throw them in the fire. It's not used as often but the results are basically pretty good," he said.

Whatever the fear there is help. Treatment is available on post or in the numerous support groups in the Columbus area. "We really want people to know that there is hope," Baldock said.

Army couple graduate Airborne Training together

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"I take thee, Aurelia Colon for better or worse; for richer, for poorer; in sickness and in health; through United States Army Airborne School..."

No, Airborne School wasn't included in their wedding vows 12 years ago but perhaps it should have been for these Fort Benning soldiers; husband and wife, SFC Aurelia Colon and SSgt. Rosa Colon. The couple recently graduated Airborne School together, with Company C, 1-507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

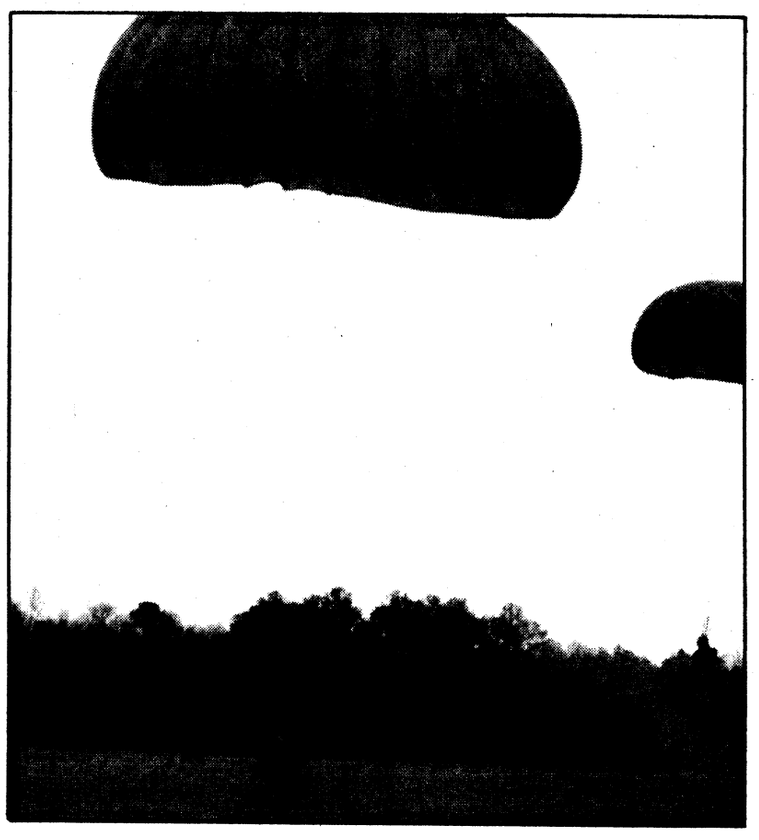
According to the Colons, they went through the course for separate reasons, but agreed they could not have done it without each other.

"We would come home from training, take care of each other's "wounds" and spend time with our children," Mrs. Colon said. "We understood what each other was going through."

They have two children, son Rogelia, 9, and daughter Alexis, 1.

They describe themselves as very confident, very secure and feeling very good about themselves, their family and their mission in the Army. "We are always striving to be all we can be," Colon said.

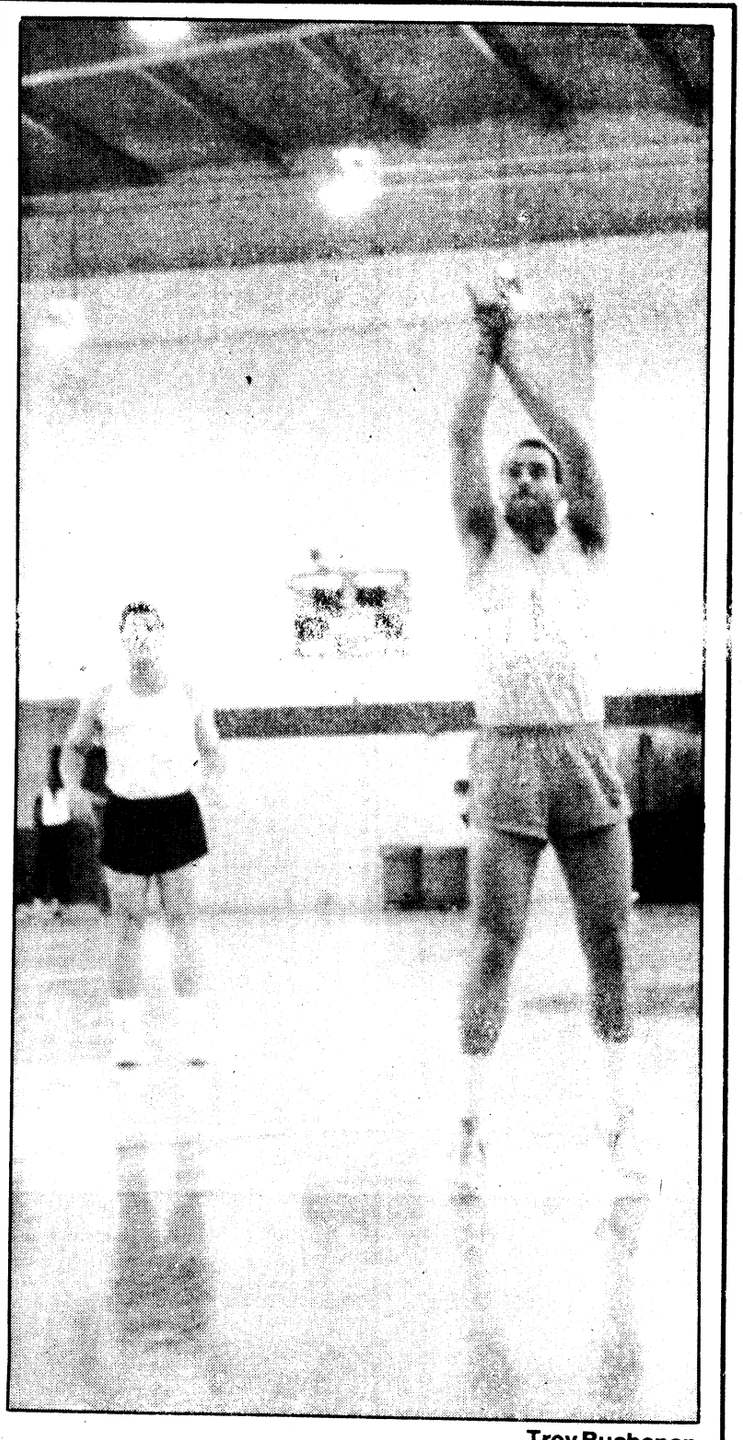
Colon, a 15-year Army veteran, is a Food Service Sergeant with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment. He said his position with the battalion is the main reason he went through the course. "I have always wanted to be Airborne, but I just never seemed to be in the right place," he said. "I'm excited about being on jump status; as a matter of fact, soon after I return to my unit we have a jump scheduled."



Although not assigned in an Airborne position, Mrs. Colon hopes to use her newfound skills sometime in her Army career.

SSgt. Colon, a 4 year Army veteran is an administrative clerk, with the Office of the Secretary, 10th Company, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade. She enlisted in the Army at age 28, after being a dependent wife for eight years. "It was hard to leave my family to go through basic training and advanced individual training," she said, "but that was what I had to do if I wanted to be in the Army, so I accepted it."

During the graduation ceremony on Fryar Drop Zone, the Colons volunteered to pin on each others wings, and by the power invested in the Commandant of the United States Army Infantry School they were pronounced "Airborne" husband and wife.



SFC Aurelia Colon makes minor adjustments to wife Rosa's chin strap.

Separate Unit wins playoff in Brigade officer's league

By Troy Buchanan and Clarence Pittman
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

1st Lt. Alvin Hawthorne sank two free throw shots during the last 10 seconds of the game to give the Separate Units team a 60-59 victory over the 2-10 Field Artillery team during the championship game of the 197th Infantry Brigade Officers Basketball League at the Kelley Hill Physical Fitness Center.

One would like to think that these two teams were battling for a post season spot in the NCAA tournament, for his championship skirmish was a heart-pounding sight to see.

Capt. Michael Norton, guard for the Separate Units team, scored 23 points, dropping four clutch three-pointers, which undoubtedly led them to victory.

The game, which consisted of two 20-minute halves, saw the 2-10 team maintain the lead throughout both halves, but only by a few points. pacing the artillerymen in the scoring column were Maj. Richard A. MacCauley, 16 points and Capt. Thomas J. Lynch, 14 points.

This, however, did not give them the advantage during the closing seconds of the game. As the last few seconds ticked away on the clock, 2-10 made a final attempt to win the game. However, the inbound pass was stolen by Capt. Robert Heather, securing the championship victory for the Separate Units.

Celtics win top slot in YA tourney

By Thad Roberson
The Bayonet sports writer

The Youth Activities Basketball League ended their 1987 season with a tournament of champions, as matchups in all divisions hit the courts Friday.

The opening thriller was in the 8-10 year-old Termite Division, where the Celtics pulled out an overtime victory, rejecting the Black Thunder 18-15.

Through the four periods of regular play, both teams faced off equally. But the Black Thunder was held scoreless in the overtime.

The Black Thunder sounded off in regular play, lead by Giovanni Quiles, Eric macon and Robert Pearce, each scoring four points.

But, the edge to victory was sharpest when Jimmy Yow and Torrey Gooding boosted the Celtics with three points.

Gooding had kept the fire burning in the regular periods with nine. But, Yow pulled out the momentum with two points in the overtime, after clearing five in regular play.

In the Pee Wee Division, 11-12 year-old, Rough Riders' Andy Nix and Lovell Trotter were riding high to lead the Pee Wee Champions to a 36-27 shootout against the Hawks.

The season was open as Nix and Trotter fired at the Hawks from opening jump. The Rough Riders moved to a narrow 18-12 lead after the first half.

Hawks Derrick Carr and La'Kia RAdcliff kept swing low, dropping 10 first round points on target.

Carr's 16 point attempt at victory fell short against the team efforts of the Rough Riders, as Nix went out with 20 and Trotter closed in double figures with 14.

The 13-15 year-old Juniors went "heads up", as the Bull stormed the 76ers 48-41.

Bull guard, Herman Johnson, was the game's hot hand. While perfect at the freethrow, hitting six of six, Johnson rallied the Bulls with a 28-point jam session.

Fellow guard, James Townsend contributed 10 point, while Center Richard Lewis layed low in the paint with six.

The 76ers greatest threat was in the form of Robert Bagley who led his team to a 23-18 lead at the half. Bagley's 22-point effort sas not enough, as the Bulls' Johnson charged straight ahead in the second half.

Friday marked the end of a season, but the beginning of a reign of new champions in the Youth Activities League.

Practicing Orienteering skills using map, memory

By Robin Shannonhouse
Special to The Bayonet

Editor's note: Robin Shannonhouse is the Executive Director of the United States Orienteering Federation. Mrs. Shannonhouse is a Georgia orienteer and resides in Forest Park, Ga., where her entire family is involved with USOF and the Georgia Orienteering Club.

Some orienteers don't need to actually be in the forest to orienteer, give them a map with a course on it and they are instantly transported to that place in their minds. They can 'run' the entire course without ever moving. They are enjoying themselves by planning how they would be running the course if they were there, they are making route choices.

Every course but the White beginner course will have route choice problems. On each leg, the orienteer must make a basic decision — how do I get to the next point? A crafty course setter will make sure he not only has at least two ways to get there but may even 'hide' a third, better route. This is why so many orienteers seem to be talking to themselves while out on the course — they are discussing their route choices with the course setter.

The route choice process is actually three-fold. The first part is finding all possible routes. These possibilities usually fall into one of these categories: the long/safe route, the short/very technical route, and a combination medium-length/fairly-safe-but-must-be-careful route.

The long and safe route is the one in which you follow handrails (trails, streams, ridges, etc.) almost all the way. The short/technical route is usually more-or-less straight line, but you must pay careful attention to the terrain that you pass through. The combination route is usually not a single route but rather a series of short routes, not as technical as the shortest one, but technical enough that you must remember which part of the leg you are on and what you next expect to see.

How important is quickness in the route choice planning process? One night a large group of orienteers, seated at tables, participated in a route choice exercise.

Each had an identical map with the same Red course on it. Everyone began to plan his route choices for the entire course at the same time and made note of hw long he took to plan the entire course.

There was slightly more than a 10-minute difference between the fastest and the slowest planner with the majority of the orienteers around the halfway point.

The fastest planner had an approximate 5-minute lead on most of the others without ever stepping out into the woods — that person was a former U.S. Champion.

Major command teams will compete for Commander's Trophy points on courses ranging in difficulty from the low, 3.5 thru 4.5km, to the advance, high, 7 thru 12km level.

There will be five color-coded courses each day, each color code representing the level of difficulty.

Active duty military are eligible to participate, with awards given in both the team and individual categories.

In addition to the overall champions, awards will be presented to the top two scoring woment entries.

Points will be awarded to team members for time, course and placement. At the end of each day, team points will be combined to form the total team score.

The team with the highest combined scores for two days will be awarded the Company Level Championship.

Start times will be conducted in two to three minutes intervals, but no team member will began at the same time and no more than two members per team will enter on the same course.

Start times will be available at the Orienteer Office, Doughboy Stadium Wednesday, but all competitors should be present for the pre-meet briefing at 9:30 a.m, March 17 and 18.

The course will be set and the maps available. All that is needed will be those who wish to be steered in the right direction.

Flyers victors in first game

By Steve Gouthro
Fort Benning Flyers

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby team started the 1987 Spring season with a bang by trouncing the Kennesaw Rugby Club in Atlanta 38-0.

The playing conditions were atrocious, as there were puddles all over the field and a steady rain with a biting wind throughout the match.

Benning applied pressure from the start and it quickly paid off as Roy Kreuger slid across the goal line for a 4-0 lead. The Flyers kept the ball in the Kennesaw half of the field where it slithered around until team captain Steve Tennant got a hand on it and scored the first of his three scores of the day.

Henry Himstedt added a conversion for a 10-0 lead. Two penalties proved costly for Kennesaw as Himstedt hit for two field goals, increasing the lead to 16-0. The first half scoring ended as Brett Perry, playing in his first rugby game, crashed through two defenders for the score and a 20-0 halftime lead.

The field was in worse shape in the second half and both teams slid, slipped and just tried to hold on to the slippery ball. The Benning squad managed some control as Tennant dove across the goal line to fall on a loose ball and up the score to 24-0.

Kennesaw tried to mount an attack late in the secod half but it was for naught. After some pressure defense Lou Boone picked up a loose ball, evaded three tacklers and scored the final score of the day. The conversion by Trawinski was no good but the Flyers went home with a 38-0 victory.

The Flyers next game is at home, March 7 at 1 p.m. on Stillwell Field, against High Country from Atlanta.

!Charles Levy Says!

We do business the old fashioned way. Have you ever left a dealership with the feeling that you had just been released from prison? With today's highly competitive market many dealers have resorted to high pressure tactics in order to meet sales demands. We at Charles Levy Motors have a simple theory: sell a quality automobile at a fair price and treat the customer the way you would want to be treated. It's worked for me for 30 years.

Army begins reorganization

Army News Service

WASHINGtON — The Army will immediately make a number of organizational and functional changes consistant with the Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986.

The changes under Title V of the Act are some of the most dramatic and far-reaching since 1947. In announcing these changes, Army Secretary John O. Marsh Jr. said that the changes will streamline the Army's management processes, reduce the size of management headquarters throughout the Army, and redistribute personnel to field commands.

The widely publicized Act limits the combined strength of the Army secretariat and the military staff of 3,105, requiring the reduction of at least 548 spaces. This reduction does not constitute a cut in the Army's total end-strength.

This decrease in personnel specifically includes a 15-percent reduction in the number of general officers assigned and detailed to the Army headquarters. In addition to reductions at the Department of the Army headquarters, Title VI of the Act requires 10 percent reduction in the size of headquarters staffs of major field commands. Those 10 percent reductions must be accomplished by Oct. 1, 1988.

The legislation provides for five assistant secretary positions on the secretariat staff yet specifies two of them: the assistant secretaries for civil works, and for manpower and reserve affairs.

In addition to those two secretariat positions, Marsh will have three other assistant secretaries, those dealing with financial management, acquisition, and installations and logistics.

To oversee the Army's acquisition process, Marsh recently appointed the Under Secretary of the Army, James R. Ambrose, as the Army's Acquisitio Executive (AAE). As te AAE, Ambrose will be responsible for the supervision of al major acquisition programs through the implementation of a Program) Executive Officer (PEO) system. All major program managers who handle the development and acquisition of material will report directly to a PEO, who will in turn report directly to the AAE, Ambrose.

The Army will have an assistant secretary for research, development, and acquisition. The personnel in this newly focused office will consolidate the offices of the secretariat's assistant secretary of the Army for research, development, and acquisition, and the Army staff's deputy chief of staff for research, development, and acquisition. The three-star general whoserves as the DCSRDA will become the deputy to the assistant secretary for research, development, and acquisition.

The AAE and the assistant secretary for research, development, and acquisition together will form the acquisition organization in the Department of the Army headquarters.

Through the reorganization changes, the secretariat will increase from 11 percent of the current HQDA staff to about 30 percent of the new organization — an increase of approximately 535 spaces that mainly come from the Army staff. The Army staff, reduced from 89 percent of the current headquarters, will comprise 69 percent of the new HQDA.

On the Army staff, the office of the chief of staff will have a vice chief of staff and a director of the Army staff. The chief of staff will also have for primary deputies, the deputy chiefs of staff for personnel, for intelligence, for operations and plans, and for logistics.

As a result of the reorganization, the army anticipates a new management structure with greater economies and efficiencies that at the same time improves the effectiveness of the Department of the Army.

News briefs

Candidates needed

The Fort Benning Community Life Office is still accepting applications from anyone interested in running for mayor in one of six post communities.

"We're looking for people who like to help people and who want to provide needed services to their communities," said Maj. Jerry Latta, post Community Life Officer.

To run, a person must be a resident of the community he or she wishes to represent.

The person also needs to have lots of enthusiasm for bettering his or her's community, Latta said.

The mayoral campaigns kicks off April 1 and continue through April 14.

Elections will take place April 15 and 16.

For more information on running for mayor, call Latta at 545-2910,2830, 1389 or applications can be picked up at each respective communitie's Community Life Center.

Tax assistance available

Soldiers, family members and retirees if you need assistance with your income taxes, bring your W-2 and other tax-related documents to the post exchange this Saturday.

Fort Benning's Legal Assistance Office will sponsor a Tax Assistance booth from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. IRS-trained volunteer income tax assistors will be available to answer questions and help prepare tax returns.

State and federal tax forms will be available if you did not receive them in the mail. Don't get caught in the last minute rush. Do your taxes now!

Promotions speeded up

MILPERCEN began promoting some soldiers on the 1987 sergeant first class list March 1, even though there are still soldiers on the 1986 list.

"The Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel directed us in February to begin promoting soldiers in shortage military occupational specialties from the 1987 list," said Lt. Col. Robert J. Albertazzi, chief of MILPERCEN's Promotions Branch.

"When the Army decided in November 1985 to promote soldiers to sergeant first class by MOS instead of seniority, we recognized the possibility of promoting soldiers from one list before an older list was exhausted. However, we didn't expect this to happen with the two sergeant first class lists now in effect.

"We implemented this policy to help balance the Army's noncommissioned officer force," he explained. "We are not promoting soldiers in any MOS tht would cause it to become overstrength. That requirement and the needs of the Army have made it necessary to begin promoting soldiers in 14 shortage MOSs off the 1987 Sergeant First Class List."

The Army will promote 146 soldiers off the 1986 list in March, leaving 250 soldiers on it. That list should be exhausted by May. There will be 204 promotions in March from the 1987 list.

Hero awarded medal

SFC William Allensworth of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, was recently awarded the Soldier's Medal for heroism during ceremonies held at Fort Benning, Mar. 5.

SFC Allensworth's act of heroism occurred on the night of September 27, 1985, in the Republic of South Korea, while assigned as Scout Section Leader with the Combat Support Company, 1st Bn, 9th Inf, 2nd Infantry Division.

While constructing a rope bridge across the Imjin River, SFC Allensworth disregarded his own personal safety to save the life of SP4 Charles Gilden.

SP4 Gilden had been pulled into the raging current of the incoming tide. Braving the current and risking his own life, SFC Allensworth swam to SP4 Gilden, securing him by the shirt collar and pulled him to the safety of the river bank. SFC Allensworth currently serves as a small arms marksmanship instructor with USAMU, and also competes on the unit's Running Target Team.

Triskaidekaphobics beware!

Strange things may happen today

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Don't jump out of that plane. Don't fire that weapon. Don't rappel down that tower. Don't get out of bed!

Look at the calendar, shudder and roll back over. It's Friday the 13th.

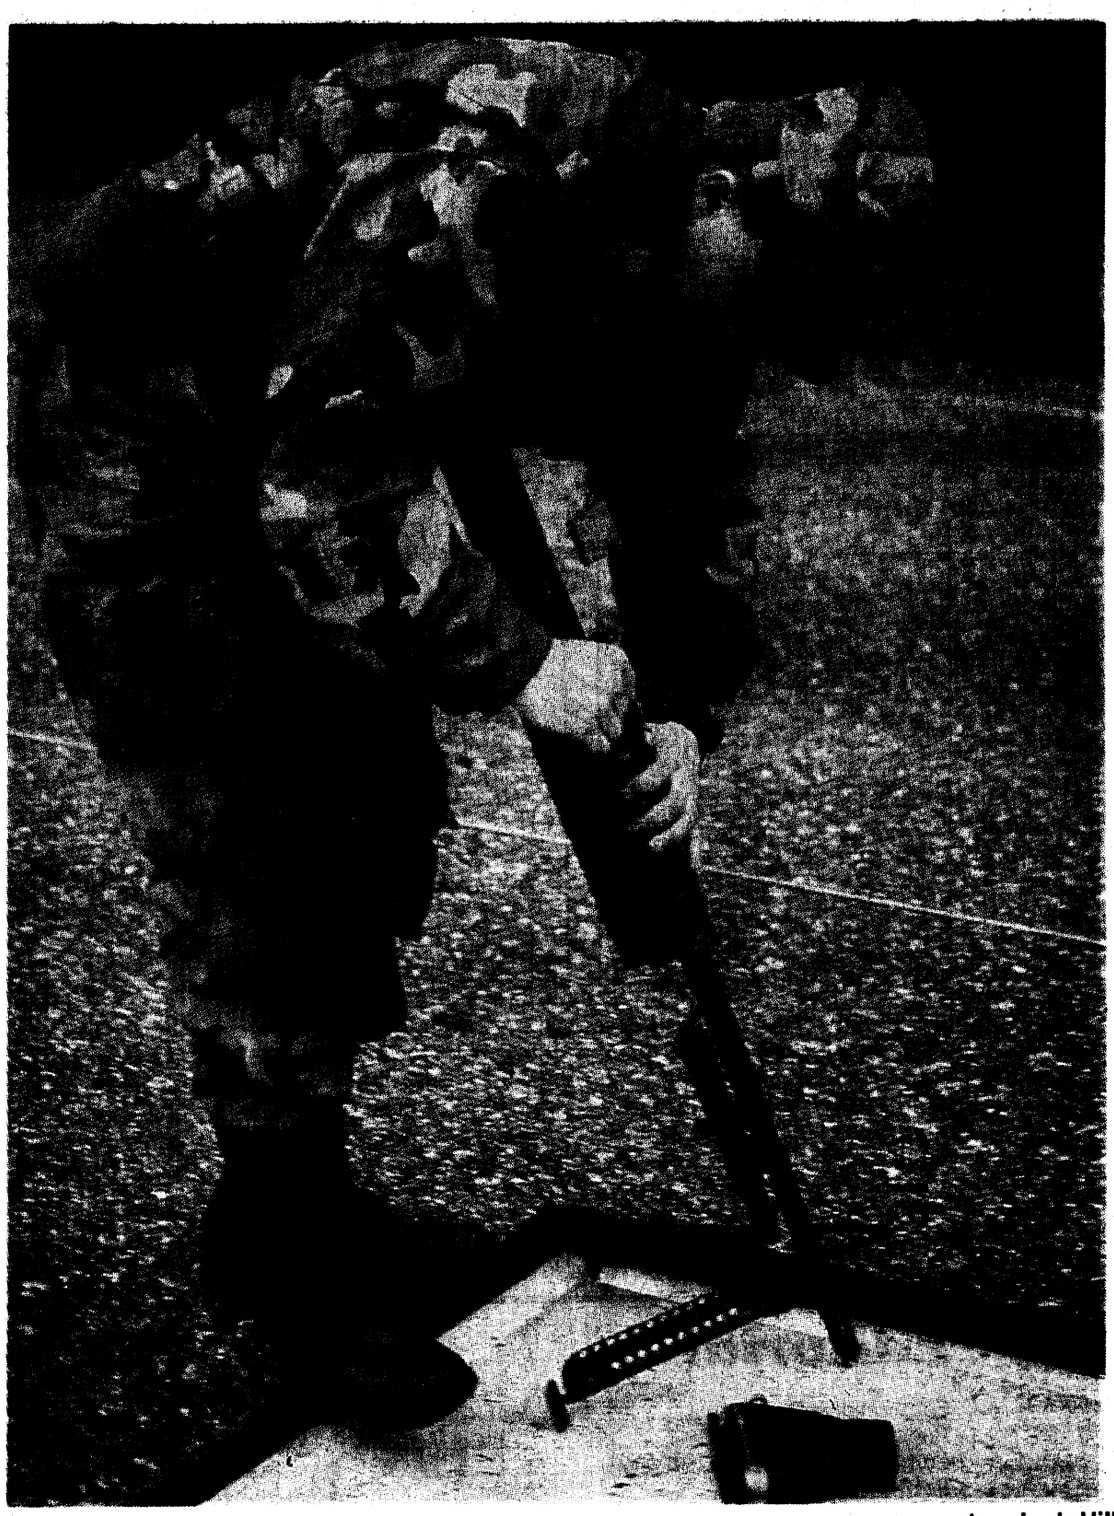
Fridays are considered unlucky in general. Actors don't like to start a play on Friday and weddings are considered cursed if they happen on this day of the week. Lots of people won't begin a project on a Friday for fear of bad luck.

When you couple a "13" with a Friday, though, there may be real problems.

Having an exaggerrated fear of the number 13 is called "triskaidekaphobia" and there are a lot of those "triskaidekaphobia-ers" out there.

Architects won't number a floor "13" on a building and some people say the superstition of 13 started with Christ making up the 13th person when sitting with the 12 disciples.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt always had his secretary ensure there were always less than or more than but never exactly 13 people at his dinner parties and witches even get into the "13" superstition. A coven of witches is made up of 12 witches or warlocks and the 13th member is Satan.



But the number "13" also has its positive side.

German composer Richard Wagner, with 13 letters in his name, a birthdate of 1813 and the composer of 13 operas must have considered "13" lucky.

On a national note, there are 13 stars and 13 bars on the seal of the United States, an eagle with 13 tail feathers holding 13 darts, 13 olives and "E Pluribus Unum" has, you guessed it, 13 letters. Also, never forget that it took 13 original colonies to start the U.S.

How about the Infantry and 13? "U.S. Infantryman" has 13 letters as does "Fort Benning, Ga.

Was there a reason filmmakers called their bloody slasher movie "Friday the 13th?" Who knows, but if I were you, I'd "stay home today" (uh-oh, that last phrase has 13 letters).

Loss of cookie cash makes Brownies blue

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning Brownie Scout Troop 298 had big plans for 1987 but, because of an envelope lost Feb. 26, 18 little girls are going to be very disappointed.

Their "Cookie Mom" went to deposit $546 of their hard-earned cookie money but accidentally lost it on the way to the bank.

The woman had stopped at the Custer Terrace shoppette on her way to Columbus Bank and Trust to deposit the Brownie's money.

She said when she got out of the car she dropped her purse and everything fell out of it. It was raining and she hurriedly scooped everything back into the purse and left for the bank.

When she opened her purse at the bank to make the deposit only one of the two brown manila envelopes marked "Girl Scout Cookie Money" was there. The envelope containing the $546 was missing.

The woman said she retraced her steps back to the Custer Terrace Shoppette but could not find the lost envelope. Hoping to find the missing envelope with the money at home, she checked there but to no avail.

Next she called the Fort Benning Cookie Chairperson, reported the incident to her and then to the military police.

"There's 18 little girls who worked a lot of hours to earn that money. I think it's terrible that whoever found the money hasn't returned it. It was clearly identified as Girl Scout cookie money. What kind of person would keep money like that?" the cookie chairperson said.

The money was earmarked for camping trips, hikes, learning and growing experiences, picnics and Girl Scout sponsored activities. Without the money the year looks bleak for the girls.

"Someone obviously picked it up and has decided to keep it. I think it's terrible," the cookie chairperson said.

Anyone with any information about the money or who wishes to assist Troop 298 can call the military police.

Both women said that the person who had found the money could return it with no questions asked by mailing it anonymously to Girl Scout Headquarters, 1807 17th Street, Columbus, Ga. 31901.

Opinion

Surveys indicate people trust their armed forces

Association of the U.S. Army

The American people have more confidence in their Armed Forces than in any other public or private institution in the land according to the latest Gallup and Harris polls. For the first time, both of these widely respected opinion surveys have placed the military at the top of their annual measurement of public trust.

In the Gallup Poll, the military has, for nearly a decade, ranked second behind the church or organized religion while leading all other government organizations in which those surveyed indicated a "great deal" or "quite a lot" of confidence.

In the most recent survey, the church lost its primacy as the institution in which the American people have the greatest confidence by about six percentage points. The military topped the list with 63 percent, the church came next with 57 percent.

Results of the Harris Survey were strikingly similar — with the military having led other government institutions for nearly 10 years, while usually ranking second or third overall among institutions included in the survey. The 1986 poll reflects a four percent rise in public confidence from the previous year. This time, 36 percent of the people surveyed expressed confidence in the Armed Forces.

Among the government institutions covered by the Harris Survey were the White House, Congress, the Supreme Court and the military. Private institutions included medicine, newspapers, organized religion, higher education and television news. The people were asked in which of these institutions they had a great deal of confidence, quite a lot of confidence, some confidence or very little confidence.

The Gallup Poll asks a slightly different question concerning essentially the same institutions. The major disparity in the percentage figures between the surveys is probably attributable to differences in the way the two organizations tally their results.

The high levels of support for our military forces indicated by these opinion surveys is reflective of renewed American pride and patriotism as a result of restored strength of our national defense. More and more bright young Americans are proud to serve in uniform and more and more Americans take pride in those who serve.

Reader questions advertising

Dear Editor:

I am writing to you in reference to the Feb. 13 issue of The Bayonet. On page A-10, there is an article titled "Soldiers Provide Input to Survey on Smoking," which refers to the "Antitobacco Use Program" embarked upon by the Army; the article takes up less than a quarter of the page.

As a Civil Service employee who smokes, I was affected in a positive way by this program as I have cut my smoking almost in half. This is to my benefit as far as my health and even the amount of money spent on cigarettes.

I am not opposed to the "Antitobacco Use Program" as long as I am not mandated to quit smoking or else be relieved from my job.

On page B-2 of the same issue of The Bayonet is a full page advertisement for Benson & Hedges Cigarettes. In the first picture a lady is smoking and in the second picture the man is smoking; both seem to be happy and relaxed smoking their Benson & Hedges.

I feel that if the Army wants to enforce the "Antitobacco Use Program," The Bayonet should NOT advertise for any brand cigarette. The advertisements only encourage people in the military and civilian communities to smoke.

Press-on nails not for faint hearted

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Editor

I am not by nature a superstitious person, but since February, I make an exception for Fridays that fall on the 13th of the month.

That's when the great "press-on nails" debacle occurred.

Let me preface this story with a bit of explanation. I can't grow my fingernails. As deadlines loom and work piles up, I start tearing out my hair and chewing my nails. (My hair's pretty pitiful too.)

But I've always envied women who have long, perfectly groomed fingernails.

For people who don't grow such nails, manicurists can "sculpt" some in a salon for around $25 per hand. That's a bit much for my budget, so I decided to try some of those press-on nails the drug store sells for $5.95.

A friend suggested I might want to give the nails a trial run before wearing them to a Valentine's Day banquet. So, the night before the big event, I got out the kit and went to work.

The first thing I discovered is that the people who write the instruction booklets are all brazen liars. They made it sound so easy. "Apply glue pads, press on nail firmly and wait two hours for nail to adhere properly."

They use words like "simple" and "easy." Well, it may sound simple and easy, but it's not. It took me a good two hours just to get the things on, what with having to trim the glue pads and nails to fit my fingers.

I have to admit that when I finished the job, my fingernails really looked good. I carefully applied several coats of polish (taking another two hours) and I had nails any fashion model would be proud of.

So I went to bed, visions of glamorous fingernails dancing in my head. Perhaps it was a premonition of things to come that made me have nightmares that night.

The first thing I discovered when I woke up that Friday was that I couldn't use my hands — I was crippled.

Even the simplest task, like making coffee, had turned into a challenge similar to climbing Mt. Everest.

The problem stemmed from the fact that I had bought "glamour length" nails, which just about doubled the length of my fingers. It was as if my hands had become possessed by evil spirits. They refused to do what I required of them.

But never let it be said that I cringe from a challenge. I overcame the initial hurdles with the help of my 6-year-old daughter. She kindly gave me a bath, washed my hair and helped me put my makeup on.

I got less help from my husband, who couldn't keep from making snide remarks as he zipped my slacks and buttoned my buttons. "What are you going to do when you have to go to the rest room?" he cruelly inquired.

It was a question I had been uneasily mulling over all morning, and I resented the implications. At that point, I stopped drinking my coffee, hoping to avoid such a crisis.

The second hurdle came when I got to work. Now, everybody there knew I couldn't have grown four inch fingernails over night, but people didn't know quite how to react.

I mean, one day they know the grungy me, and the next they're confronted by a glamorous stranger. A coworker summed up the general feeling around the office when she said, "Well, isn't that ... special."

I appreciated her understanding nature later in the day when she accompanied me on a trip to the ladies' room.

I didn't get much work done that day, because I couldn't type or dial a telephone, although I discovered the nails made an excellent letter opener.

And I was getting less sure of my ability to cope with the demons that had taken over my hands. I was starting to have visions of reaching out to shake hands with my husband's boss and having a nail pop off in my wake.

Before it reached disaster proportions, I decided to take the silly things off and go to the banquet as myself. But then I found that getting them off was harder than putting them on.

Whoever invented "press-on nails" (could it have been SATAN?) had to have been a woman-hating sadist. After soaking my hands in boiling hot water for 20 minutes, the nails were off. But they forgot to mention the the glue stays on. It had the texture of rubber cement and rubbing it only made my fingers sticky. Nail polish remover only made it spread.

In a panic, I returned to the handy instruction booklet. "Remove excess glue by rubbing gently with fingertip."

It took another hour, using boiling water and various other home remedies, before most of the glue was off. So what if my hands looked like I'd been scrubbing walls?

I was a lot more comfortable at the banquet that night, though I did get a few strange looks after giving people sticky handshakes. Hopefully I earned the reputation of "having a handshake that just won't quit."

Today it's Friday, the 13th again, so don't expect to find me at the office. I'll be at the manicurist's, having my nails sculpted.

Our most important defense investment is people

Association of the U.S. Army

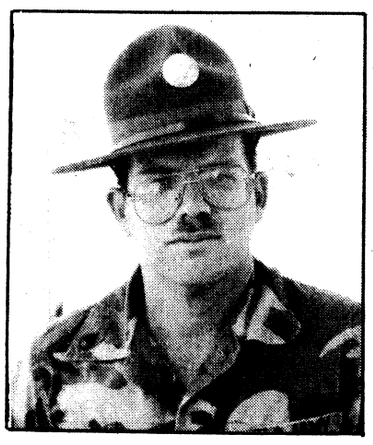
As Congress deliberates the president's new defense budget, one of the questions frequently raised is: "Did we get our moneys worth from the trillion dollars spent on defense in the first five years of this administration?"

What the questioner is really dealing with here is the difference between the defense budgets of fiscal years 1976 through 1980 and the President Ronald Reagan's military budgets for fiscal years 1981 to 1985.

Simply put, the 1976 to 1980 defense appropriations totaled $964.5 billion, while appropriations for 1981 to 1986 came to $1,314.3 billion. So the question truly revolves around what we purchased for the $349.8 billion that has been added since fiscal 1981.

In response to that question, every civilian and military leader knowledgeable on the subject of America's defenses will tell you that the most important investment we have made is in the people who serve in our armed forces.

It is impossible to measure the full value of this investment, not only in the increased numbers who have been attracted to the service as volunteers, but also in the enhanced quality of our present force. While we increased the size of the active force by about 85,000, in the number of high school graduates in the enlisted force grew from 69 percent of 93 percent.



Improvements in the combat effectiveness of our armed forces over the past five fiscal years would seem unarguable. B1 bombers are on station, the first MX missiles are in their silos and naval deployable battle forces have increased from 479 to 554 ships.

Even more important are the additions to our arsenal made possible by our investment in "Landpower." For example, M1 Abrams tanks, M2 Bradley fighting vehicles and AH-64 Apache attack helicopters have increased the combat capability of our Army divisions by 55 percent, while the addition of the Multiple Launch Rocket System has increased the firepower of the division by some 50 percent.

Each new gun, tank, plane or ship helps improve our deterrent and our fighting capabilities. And each time a bright young American man or woman volunteers to join the ranks, he or she is helping to guarantee that the taxpayers or our country will always have the degree of security that they deserve and that they pay for.

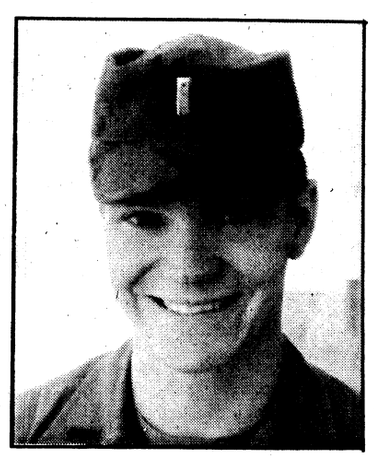
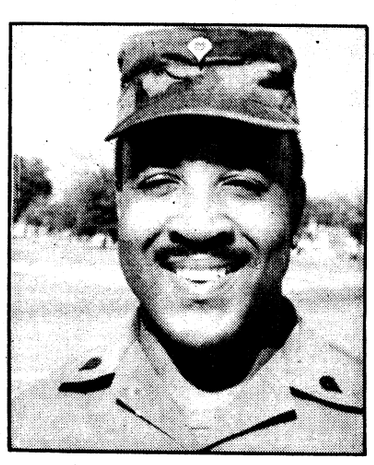
When you think of spring what comes into your mind?



SSgt. William Pike, Company C, 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, - "I think about training soldiers. Spring is when we get our biggest influx of troops."



Sarah Stewart, family member, - "Picnics come into my mind along with making traveling plans for our family vacation."

SFC Bill Ryan, United States Army Infantry Board, - "I think about more jumps in the spring we make more jumps than any other time of the year, I also think about Easter Egg coloring with my kids and the Yankees warming up for their National Championship."

1st Lt. Vince Alonso, Protocol division, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion The School Brigade, - "I think about a new beginning, rejuevenating myself, making new plans; I appreciate the end of harsh weather and the fact that the climate will be a lot less harsher on the troops."

SP4 Kerry Hunt, HHD, 34th Medical Battalion, - "I think about going to the field, we're going to the field next week and with nice spring weather it makes the going a whole lot easier."

Mary Ann Norton, Training and Audiovisual Support Center, - "I think about flowers; planting them and caring for them, flowers are special they are the first color we see in spring."

Declaration of Independence signals birth of U.S.

By Laurie Viggiano
TRADOC OCPA

FORT MONROE, Va. — It's been said that the United States was conceived in 1776 with the Declaration of Independence and born in 1787 complete with a "birth certificate," the Constitution.

The gestation period included five years of war and six years of economic and political confusion. Labor lasted our long, hot summer months in. Philadelphia at the Constitutional Convention.

On Moday, Sept. 17, 1787, 39 Founding Fathers attended the birth in Independence Hall and signed the four-page certificate of a new nation's existence. The bouncing baby nation was a checked-and-balanced democracy within a republic, something new in a jaded old world of monarchies, empires and dictatorships.

Like all babies, it needed care and feeding. Luckily there were plenty of people around with the knack and the will to "parent" a nation.

Some of the best at the job were the soldier-statesmen of the Constitution. They were the 23 Revolutionary War veterans among the Constitution signers.

They included the Continental Army commander-in-chief, a brigade chaplain, two military doctors, an adjutant general and a paymaster in the militia, even a one-time British Army officer — plus assorted lawyers, merchants, planters, and politicians turned citizen-soldiers.

More than half the soldier-statesmen were in their 30s or 40s, and two were not yet 30. Many had been born to wealth and prosperity, but some were self-made men — a blacksmith's son, a frontier farmer's son, a trader's son. However they had managed it, they were all well-educated.

Despite their similarities, the soldier-statesmen did not unanimously agree on the complexities of bringing up baby. They lectured and argued and compromised, as parents will.

But they were united on one point. Like true parents, they stood ready to dedicate their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor to something small and new and full of shining promise.

After the Constitution became the law of the land in 1788, "We the People" took over from the Founding Fathers. We developed the baby nation into a geographical giant; doctored its economic, political and social ills; and defended it from the bullies in the world neighborhood.

As we celebrate the bicentennial of the Constitution, we congratulate ourselves on 200 years of good parenting. But we also remind ourselves that we can never sit back, relax, and stop being parents.

The Founding Fathers left in our care a nation that was as much a creation of their collective mind and spirit, blood and toil as any living human child.

To keep the United States alive and growing, we the people must continue to guide and guard it as did those original parental role models, the soldier-statesmen of the Constitution.

Signers of Constitution not afraid to fight for freedom

Brearly defends beliefs in uniform

By Laurie Viggiano
TRADOC OCPA

FORT MONROE, Va. — David Brearly's English ancestors had settled in New Jersey almost 100 years before the Revolution and were thus quite "Americanized."

It was no surprise to the family that young lawyer Brearly was nearly arrested for openly criticizing British policies, nor that he would defend his beliefs in uniform.

He recruited and trained county militia soldiers to disarm local Loyalists and, in the regular army, helped reenlist soldiers and re-equip New Jersey's senior regiment.

Always highly motivated, Brearly's soldiers gained even more confidence under Baron Von Steuben's training at Valley Forge and fought honorably at Monmouth in 1778.

In 1779 Brearly was appointed chief justice for the State of New Jersey. He established the principle of "judicial review," which allowed a court to declare a piece of congressional legislation unconstitutional.

Brearly helped incorporate this principle into the U.S. Constitution at the 1787 Constitutional Convention, as a New Jersey delegate. Later he served as a member of the first Electoral College, which chose Washington as the nation's first President under the Constitution.

Washington in turn chose Brearly as New Jersey's federal district judge, but the noted young jurist and patriot served only one year before he died at 45 years of age.

Livingston served in militia at 52

By Laurie Viggiano
TRADOC OCPA

FORT MONROE, Va. — In the mid-1700s, William Livingston moved in the highest circles of colonial society and politics. But by 1775, he had retired to the quiet life of a gentleman farmer in the New Jersey countryside.

When New Jersey organized its militia that year, Livingston was 52 years old. Nevertheless he promptly joined, becoming the state's ranking officer. With British forces massing in New York harbor, Livingston took his militia north to protect the New Jersey shore from sudden attack. He even used his own nearby estate mansion as a barracks for his soldiers.

In 1776, Livingston left military service for public service. As governor of New Jersey for the next 14 years, his greatest contribution to his state and the nation was his work with the militia.

He upgraded citizen-soldier forces by getting the best equipment available and by training soldiers according to the famous Prussian Baron von Steuben's drill manuals.

In 1787 Livingston represented New Jersey at the Constitutional Convention. There his views on the different but equally important roles of the militia and the regular Army were translated through the new Constitutional into the nation's law.

Hamilton was aide George Washington

By Laurie Viggiano
TRADOC OCPA

FORT MONROE, Va. — Unlike most of our nation's Founding Fathers, Alexander Hamilton was not born in the American colonies and did not come from a prosperous family.

The illegitimate son of a drifting trader, Hamilton grew up in the British West Indies in near-poverty. With the help of a kind employer and other friends who saw his potential, 14-year-old Hamilton went to New York in 1771 to begin his formal education.

Four years later he entered college, but the American Revolution interrupted. Hamilton joined the New York militia and later raised his own artillery company.

His combat leadership abilities in the Trenton-Princeton campaign won him an appointment as Gen. Washington's aide. Through the Revolution and the postwar struggle to build the nation, he remained Washington's friend and confidante.

Hamilton never finished college, but after the war he completed in three months an apprentice program in law that normally took three years.

In 1787 he represented New York at the Constitutional Convention. For personal reasons his fellow delegates had to leave Philadelphia early, so Hamilton was the only delegate from New York to sign the new Constitution he had helped to write.

Later he served the nation again as its first Secretary of the Treasury. Like the Constitution, the fiscal and economic program Hamilton designed for his adopted country has lasted two centuries.

Dickinson fought first in Revolution

By Laurie Viggiano
TRADOC OCPA

FORT MONROE, Va. — As a Continental Congressman in 1776, John Dickinson refused to sign the Declaration of Independence. Congress turned him out, yet he was among the first to fight for independence in the Revolution.

A lawyer and a state legislator in both Delaware and Pennsylvania, Dickinson thought economic pressure rather than war would force the British to see that American grievances were just.

But he also believed citizens had the right to defend themselves against direct attack. When the British invaded New York harbor in 1776, Dickinson realized war was inevitable. He volunteered to defend New York and later fought in the defense of Philadelphia.

Delaware sent him back to the Continental Congress in 1779, and elected him as a delegate to the Constitutional Convention in 1787.

He supported the formation of a strong central government, because he had learned that many problems could only be resolved at the national level — for example, that the new nation could not depend solely on temporary and often inexperienced state militias for defense.

Dickinson did not sign the Constitution, either — at least, not personally. He was ill on Sept. 17, 1787, and someone else signed for him.

Bassett was farmer, county politician

By Laurie Viggiano
TRADOC OCPA

FORT MONROE, Va. — When Richard Bassett was a child, his father deserted the family. With hard work and his relatives' help, young Bassett succeeded in becoming a Delaware lawyer and farmer.

His legal, social and charitable work gradually led Bassett into county politics. In 1776 he began to work with the military, mobilizing Delaware's forces for service in the Revolution. The state's only unit of Continental Army regulars was considered one of the best under Gen. Washington's command, largely due to Bassett's organizational genius.

As a county official, Bassett was exempt from militia service, but he volunteered in the defense of Philadelphia to learn firsthand what it meant to be a citizen-soldier.

Bassett supported a strong national union, but he also worked to protect small states against larger, more populated states that might try to control the new government. At the Constitutional Convention he advocated the "Great Compromise," giving each state equal voice in the Senate and letting state population determine House seats.

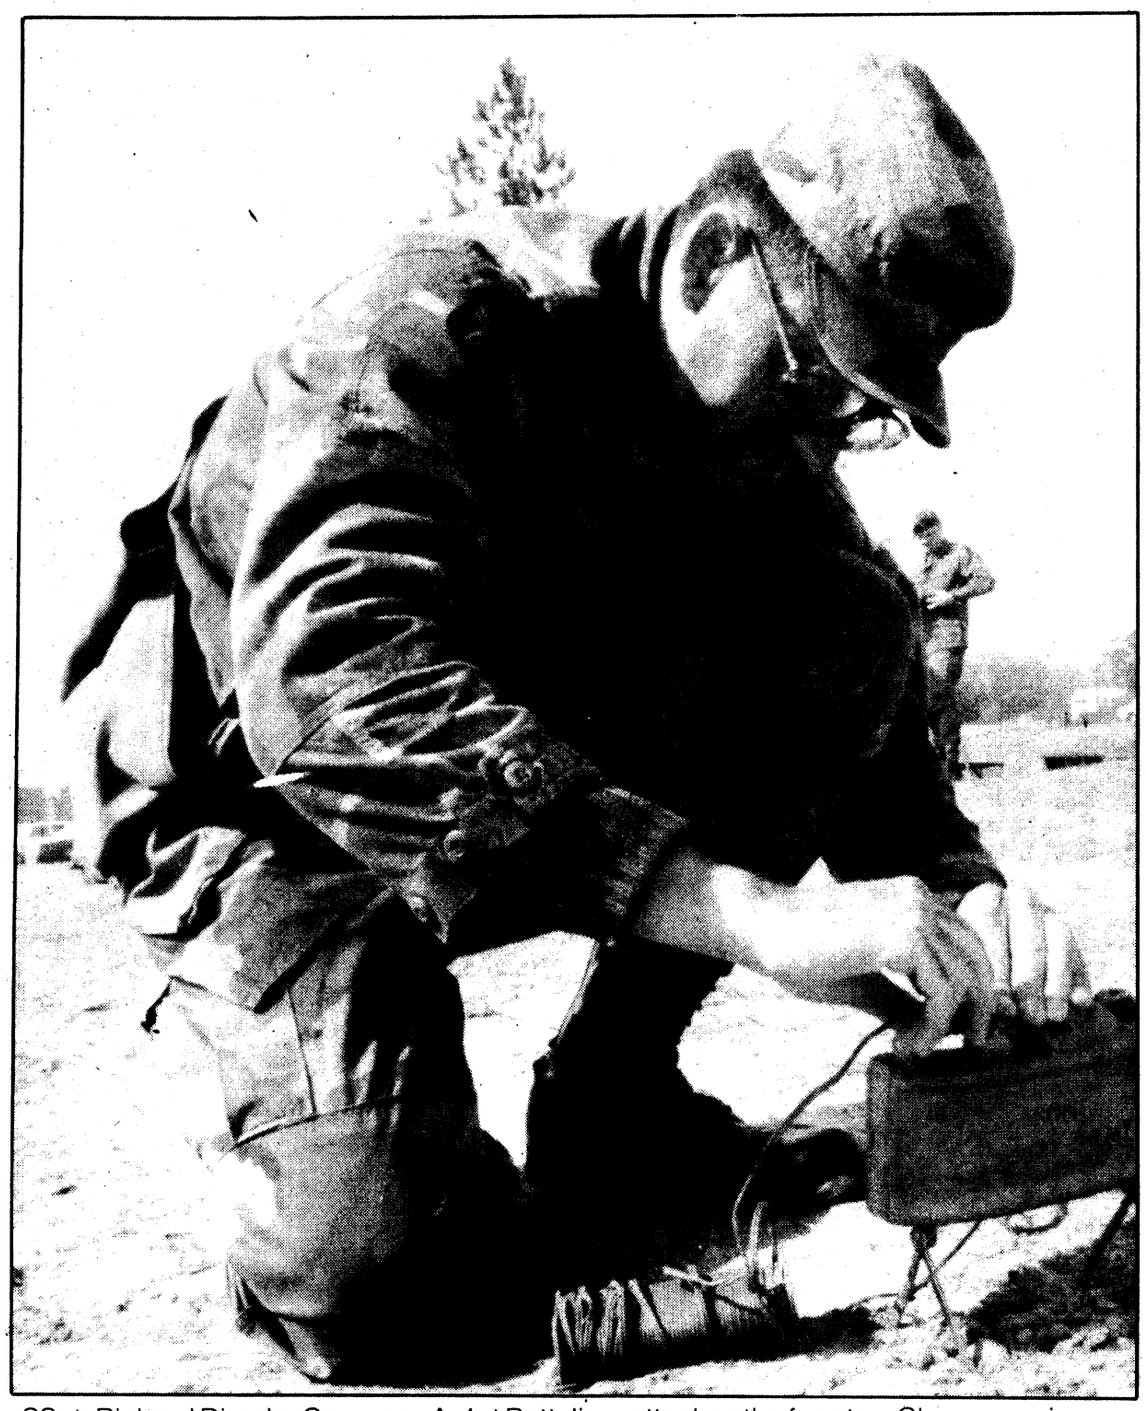
Later, U.S. Senator Bassett was first to vote for relocating the nation's capital out of large states like New York or Pennsylvania to an independent federal district on the Potomac River, where it remains to this day.

McHenry established civilian control system

By Laurie Viggiano
TRADOC OCPA

FORT MONROE, Va. — James McHenry of Maryland was a doctor, a Revolutionary War veteran, a signer of the Constitution, and Secretary of War under our first and second presidents.

To McHenry we owe our constitutional system of civilian control exercised over the military by Congress, by the civilian Secretaries of Defense and the sister services, and by the President as Commander-in-Chief.



McHenry knew the United States had won its Revolution with dedication, good leadership, and luck. He was convinced, however, that only strong, disciplined, and professioal armed forces could meet future threats to national security.

From European history and from post-Revolutionary attempts by colonial military leaders to influence political appointments, McHenry also had learned the wisdom of preventing the military from interfering with governmental decisions. These ideas were written into the Constitution, and became firmly established during his four-and-a-half years as Secretary of War under both Washington and Adams.

McHenry's son followed in his early footsteps as a soldier. In 1814, his son fought in the battle that inspired the writing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," at Baltimore's Fort McHenry — named for James McHenr .

TSB soldiers complete week-long common task tests

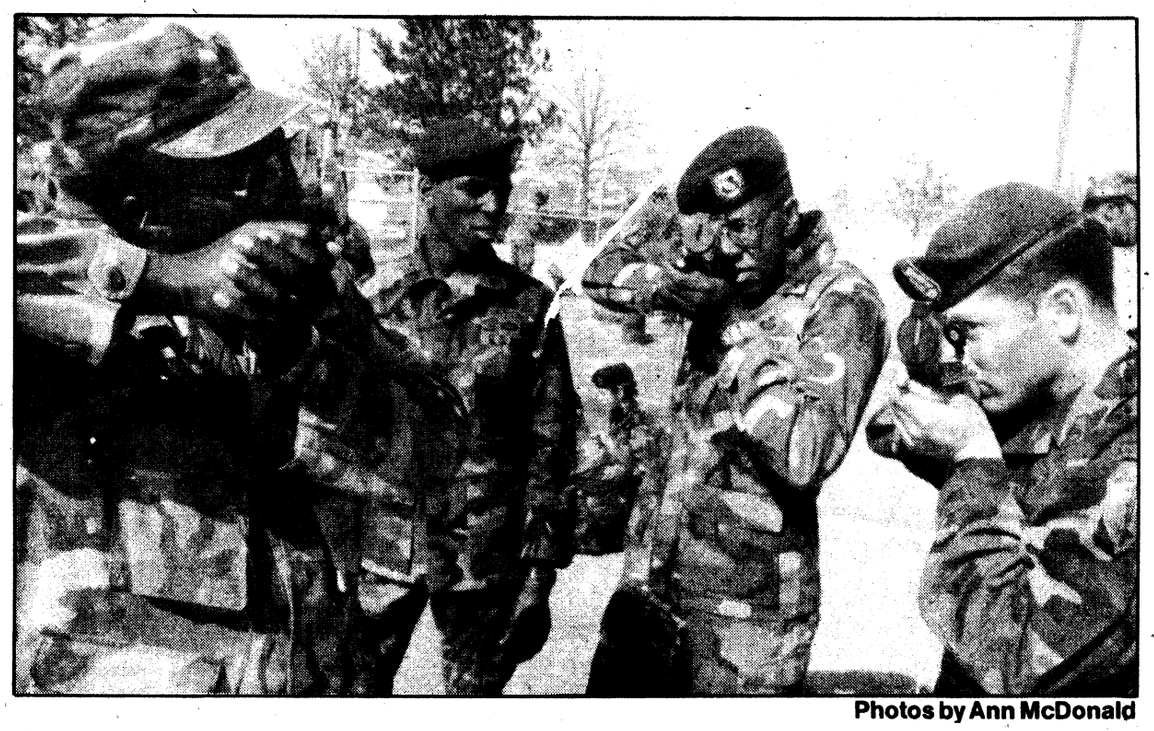
First aid dummies, Gas mines, enemy tanks and camouflaged soldiers setting up Claymore mines; not something you see every day in Hangar 2486, Lawson Army Airfield. The hanger was the site last week of The School Brigade's Common Task Testing.



According to MSgt. Jeremiah Joe from Headquarters, 1st Battalion, TSB, during the one-week period of evaluation, nearly 1,000 troops were tested on the common tasks, basic skills all soldiers must know.

Subjects covered in the testing included identifying armored vehicles; navagational skills; the Claymore mine; camouflaging yourself and your equipment; wearing and maintaining the M17 mask, Mission Oriented Protective Posture gear, decontaminating skin and equipment and various First Aid situations.

"Setting up the Claymore mine is what seemed to give the troops the most trouble," Joe said, "But all in all, most of them did very well."

Government agrees to reimburse losses

Army News Service

FORT BENJAMIN HARRISON, Ind. — Soldiers required to participate in "Sure-Pay" can now be reimbursed for any overdraft charges incurred from the bank, credit unit or savings and loan institution, when the charges are a direct result of government error.

This change in the U.S. Code affects only soldiers who entered the Army on or after Oct. 1, 1985. That was the date that "Sure-Pay" became the mandatory method of payment for all soldiers entering the Army.

The types of errors covered by the change in the code include: pay sent to the wrong financial institution or to the wrong account; a transfer of an erroneous money amount to the account; failure to provide information to the financial institution in time to credit the account prior to the opening of business on payday; or any other administrative or mechanical error.

Officials at the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center caution that the new change does not apply to fees charged by non-financial institutions. This would include grocery and department stores, oil companies, etc. — none of whom are eligible under this program.

Soldiers who have been required to be entered in the "Sure-Pay" program, and who are charged fees by the financial institution due to government error, should contact the finance office which serves their assigned unit.

67th Maintenance Bn.

Who says the finance company only works in the office to provide your pay support?

The 215th Area Finance Support Center, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, recently went to the field to conduct its annual Army Training Evaluation Program.

To get the most out of the evaluation, the commanders of the 215th Finance and the 67th Maint.Bn. scheduled the evaluation to coincide with Sledgehammer I, the largest field training exercise held on Fort Benning in the last 20 years. The scenerio which the 197th Infantry used was incorporated for both the 215th AFSC and the 586th Engineer Company, a sister company also undertaking its yearly ARTEP.

Over the last several years, the 215th AFSC's ARTEP has consisted of an internal technical evaluation from a DA inspection team and an external tactical evaluation in the field. This year both technical and tactical evaluations were conduted under field conditions.

The 215th AFSC, soon to be a finance support unit under the new finance fegimental system, needed a complete field ARTEP covering both technical and tactical play to determine the unit's level of expertise.

The decision to conduct the ARTEP in this manner was made by Lt. Col. Thomas Hooper, the Battalion commander, Lt. Col. N.E.M. Holder, the post finance and accounting officer and Capt. Steven M. Seyfried, commander of the 215th.

To assist in the evaluation of the 215th, the 67th Maint. Bn. requested and received technical assistance from the XVIII Airborne Corp Finance Office. Capt. Roy McLeon provided the finance technical play to assist the 67th in the ARTEP evaluation of the 215th AFSC.

The finance company deployed and set-up in the field as it would following its real world scenerio. The majority of the technical play centered around the disbursing and commercial vendor functions. The disbursing section would fund and process the returns from Class A agents, along with the implementation of a "Forward Support Team" that makes special disbursements to soldiers in a field environment.

A commercial accounts section controlled the documentation flow from the Class A agent. The agents would fund their ordering officers with funds to purchase foods or services from commercial vendors and would have to keep a close accountability on the funds and the exact use of the funds.

The 67th conducted the tactical evaluation from the Army Training and Evaluation Program Manual No. 14-203 for Area Finance Support Centers. The major tactical missions evaluated were: sustaining and surviving techniques, supply and maintenance functions, communications, personnel administrative functions and command, control functions. — Steven M. Seyfried, 215th AFSC.

36th Engineer Group

"Attention" is heard throughout the Service and Recovery shop bay last month as Battalion commander Lt. Col. Thomas Hooper began the TA-50 inspection. This was the last of the 598th Maintenance Companies' Battalion Command Inspection.

The Battalion command inspection is a week-long series of inspections used to see how well prepared, trained and run a company is.

The inspection teams look at all the areas of a company, including supply room, mail room, training, NBC and the motor pool.

All these areas had been inspected in the preceding four days with a satisfactory result in all areas. The Battalion commander was to do the final inspection himself and it was the inspection of each soldier's TA-50 gear.

The 253-man company spread out their equipment in the work bays of the direct support shops and the motor pool.

Hooper took his time going through the unit and each platoon was inspected at for at least 30 minutes. As he went through, he looked to insure the equipment was not only clean but also servicable. He would also ask the soldiers general questions on how they liked the unit and their jobs. — K.M. Weber, 598th Maint. Co.

The School Brigade

On March 5, newly promoted Maj. Lee Stuart passed the guidon of Co. B, 1st Bn., (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment on to Capt. Rick Heney at Fort Benning.

Stuart said, "to serve this twenty-month tour as the commander of Bravo Company was a dream come true."

He entered Airborne School in September 1967, as a private. He was then selected to go through the Pathfinder course before being shipped out to Vietnam, where he served with the 4th Battalion, 503rd Parachute Infantry Regiment, 173rd Airborne Brigade.

Upon being wounded the third time, he was medevaced to Japan. After recovering from these wounds, he was assigned back to the Airborne Department, where he served as a Blackhat until he got out of the Army in 1973.

Stuart went through the Reserve Officer Training Corp program and was commissioned a second lieutenant in the infantry in June 1976. He served with the 1st Bn., 75th Infantry (Rangers), Fort Stewart, Ga., and returned to Benning in 1983 to attend the Infantry Officer Advanced Course.

Afterwards, he was selected to be an instructor in the Special Operations Branch as the primary instructor for all Airborne and Air Assault instruction. Stuart was named the USAIS Instructor of the Year for 1985 and selected to command Co. B, 1/507th.

Better known as the "Rock" by his NCO's and students because of his strict discipline and strenuous PT workouts, Stuart truly led the way, "All The Way", in all of his mannerisms. It was not uncommon to find him down in the sawdust pits or at the base of the 34' tower helping some unsure "future paratrooper" with a problem.

Women in the military continue centuries old tradition

American Forces Press Service

The official history of women in the armed forces began in 1901 with the formation of the Army Nurse Corps. However, women have served with the military since 1775, when the Second Continental Congress authorized the Army to hae a woman "allotted to every hundred sick or wounded."

These women performed their mission of mercy for the pay of $2 a month and one ration per day. In 1777, their pay was raised to $8 per month and one ration a day.

Serving for no pay was the legendary "Molly Pitcher" — Mary Ludwig Hays — who carried water to the men on the field. When her husband collapsed from heat, she took his place at the cannon.

During the Civil War, large numbers of women volunteered as nurses with both the Confederate and Union forces. One of the Northern women, Clara Barton, founded the American Red Cross. Susie King Taylor, another Northern supporter, was a famous black nurse.

One woman served as a doctor during the Civil War — Mary Edwards Walker, the first female surgeon in the Army. Walker was awarded the Medal of Honor.

Women also served as spies in the Civil War. Belle Boyd, a Confederate spy, was imprisoned several times — but released for lack of evidence. After the war she became an actress. She also lectured and wrote a book on her experiences as a spy.

Spying for the North was the famous black abolitionist, Harriet Tubman. Tubman served throughout the war as a nurse, scout, spy and guide for the Union forces. She even led a raid up the Combahee River in South Carolina, freeing more than 700 slaves and destroying Confederate property valued in the millions.

In 1917, during World War I, the Navy authorized the enrollment of women other than nurses. The women, popularly known as "Yeomanettes," served primarily as skilled clerical personnel and freed men for sea duty. The Yeomanettes were enlisted in the Naval Reserve Force. By the end of the war, there were 11,275 Navy women.

On Aug. 13, 1918, Opha Mae Johnson became the first female Marine. Except for nurses, women did not serve in the Army in the World War I, but were employed as civilians under contract.

By World War II, some 265,000 women answered the call to "Free a Man to Fight."

In 1942, Congress established the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, or WAAC, to serve with the Army alongside the Army Nurse Corps. That same year, the Navy established the Women Accepted for Voluntary Emergency Service, better known as the WAVES, and the Coast Guard Women's Reserve, or SPARs was formed. The SPARs nickname came from the Coast Guard's motto and its translation: "Semper Paratus — Always Ready."

In 1943, the WAAC became an Army component and was renamed the Women's Army Corps — WAC. Also in 1943, the Marine Corps Women's Reserve was formed. Various nicknames were suggested, but the decision was made to call the women "Marines."

To release male pilots for combat flying, the Army Air Force established a civilian Women's Air Service Pilots in 1943. The WASPs were under Civil Service, but were subject to a number of military procedures. They handled a number of flying and administrative duties. About 1,000 women flew 60 million miles in 77 types of aircraft before the organization was inactivated in December 1944.

During World War II, women served worldwide in jobs ranging from communications to gunnery instruction — jobs that sometimes took them into combat areas. Some military nurses became prisoners of war in Guam and the Philippines.

In 1948, Congress passed the Women's Integration Act, giving women regular and Reserve status in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps ad Air Force. Women in the newly established Air Force were called WAFs, for Women's Air Force. Legislation in 1949 re-established the Coast Guard Women's Reserve.

The law limited women to 2 percent of the total military strength and limited the grade of women officers to O-5 and below, except for a temporary O-6 director of women in each service.

At the peak of the Korean War in 1952, 48,700 women served in the military, some of whom gave their lives and many of whom received medals for meritorious service. But it wasn't until the Vietnam War era, in 1967, that the 2 percent ceiling on women in the military was lifted. At the same time, the law allowed promotion of women to flag and general officer rank.

At the height of the Vietnam War, 33,000 women were serving in the armed forces — 7,500 of them in Southeast Asia.

During the 1970s, women were assigned in large numbers to jobs previously considered the exclusive domain of men. In addition, the acronyms WAC, WAVES and WAF were eliminated, symbolizing the commitment to integrate women into the mainstream.

In recent years, women have made a lot of progress in the military. Between 1971 and 1986, the number of military women rose from 43,000 to about 211,000, almost 10 percent of the force. And of the end of 1986, 318 women held the grade of O-6 and above. Eight had achieved flag- or general officer-rank. Some 527 women held the senior enlisted grades of E-8 and above.

Seminars highlight ways women can advance

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Women's History Week has grown since it was first observed in 1981 and is now observed throughout the month of March.

The National Women's History Project first promoted the idea of a women's history observance. Mary Ruthsdottir, organization spokeswoman, explained the extended time period:

Although the observance is called National Women's History Month, the Department of Defense focus will be what women can achieve today and tomorrow. According to Rosemary Howard, DoD Federal women's Program manager, the month will be observed by publicizing the many training opportunities available to DoD women.

The theme for DoD's observance is "Taking Charge: Leadership and Empowerment." Seminars on subjects such as negotiating techniques, conflict resolution, individual development and management and leadership will be presented on DoD installations in the United States and overseas. Civilian and military women, military spouses, and men are encouraged to attend.

The seminars are designed to appeal to everyone in the DoD community. Employment opportunities for military spouses is one of the popular subjects that is expected to be addressed. Howard said that a number of men attended last year's seminars — "some because they are managers who want to help women get ahead, and others because we have good information and they want to learn too."

Cost-of-living allowance recently authorized for overseas

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The 10-to-20 percent increase in the monthly cost-of-living allowance recently authorized to servicemembers overseas reflects the vigorous support of the Army's top enlisted soldier.

SMA Glen E. Morrell expressed his feelings to the secretary of defense in a recent memo summarizing Morrell's findings on the importance of COLA payments to those servicemembers stationed overseas (in Germany, Italy, Japan, Korea, Panama, Philippines, Spain and the United Kingdom).

"The cola facts are very simple," Morrell said. When the dollar is devalued, the cost of everything for everyone in the affected area goes up.

Our young soldiers and their families who reside in economy housing, especially in Germany, suffer the most."

Conceding that existing mechanisms "perhaps do a reasonable job of protecting defense personnel in foreign lands from financial distress," Morrell said there is too much limitation of that protection. Soldiers' pay is not adequately protected — "because of cost-of-living allowance is computed based on 'spendable income' tables formulated by the Department of Labor in 1972. Spendable income has certainly risen during that time."

Even as this appraisal made its way to the defense secretary, the decision on instituting a change to COLA was making its way to the finance centers of the military services. There, the new COLA figures are being processed for payment using more recent labor-department data.

For example: in Augsburg, Germany, a soldier in grade E-5 with six years' service and a wife and child would see a monthly COLA increase of about $14. A single second lieutenant in Augsburg would see about a $12 monthly increase; and a single soldier in grade E-4 would see about an additional $11 per month in COLA payments. Those figures are based on the COLA trigger points applicable to "full support areas."

In those areas designated as "partial support" and "no support," the amount of COLA is proportionately greater. For example, an E-5 resident of the no-support area of Rhineberg, with six years' service and with a wife and child, would receive a monthly COLA payment of about $253, whereas his counterpart in Augsburg would receive about $117.

Army personnel officials explain that the declining value of the dollar overseas affects soldiers directly through cost-of-living and housing costs and indirectly through reduced, deferred or delayed construction of family support facilities.

"The cost-of-living allowance," said Lt. Col. Stephen Westbrook, "is paid to servicemembers to maintain their purchasing power for non-housing living expenses at a level equivalent to that of soldiers stationed in the continental United States. The amount paid is adjusted as frequently as twice a month for currency fluctuations. For example, as the exchange rate worsens, the dollars paid in COLA increase."

Westbrook serves as the Army's military representative on the Defense Department's Per Diem, Travel and Transportation Allowance Committee. He cites a basic issue of interest to soldiers in Germany: "What is the purpose of COLA payments?" He said that soldiers tend to compare their costs today (at mark 1.82) to what their costs were when the mark was higher and think COLA should be paying them enough to live the same way. "This is not the case; COLA is intended only to maintain parity with CONUS, not with some previous extremely favorable exchange rate."

For most soldiers in Germany, COLA did not start until the mark rate dropped to 2.25. When the rate was above 2.25, soldiers were living better than soldiers in the states; at about 2.25, their living costs matched that of stateside soldiers; and when the rate was below 2.25, COLA payments kicked in to keep them equal to the CONUS standard.

Housing allowances for soldiers living on the economy are also adjusted as frequently as twice per month for currency fluctuation. The overseas housing allowance system pays soldiers the amount of their actual rent, subject to a ceiling. The allowance also determines the dollars needed to pay that rent at the current exchange rate. As the exchange rate worsens, the dollars paid are increased so the soldier can buy the marks needed for rent.

Morrell's sentiments concern that junior soldiers be afforded every chance keep pace with the overseas economy was matched by his sentiments about those soldiers' non-command-sponsored family members. In this connection, just so happens that a recent change in Defense Department policy authorizes space-available, free air travel via military aircraft to those qualified family members desiring to return from Germany, Japan, Italy and Spain to the United States.

Bradley specialist MOS no longer on critical jobs

Military Personnel Center

The Army's Military Personnel Center is well on its way to eliminating a shortage of soldiers in military occupational specialty 63T, Bradley Fighting Vehicle System Mechanic. Soldiers in that MOS fix a family of vehicles, but they are the principal maintainers and repairers of the Bradley.

"This is a critical piece of equipment in the Army Force Modernization Program," said Lt. Col. Kent W. Fontaine, chief of MILPERCEN's Enlisted Ordnance Career Branch. "So we picked up early, in August last year, that we had a problem with skill level one (private through specialist four) 63Ts.

"Authorized positions for that MOS grew faster than projected," he explained. "We had a shortfall in fiscal year 1986 recruited goals, and a low first-term retention rate for Bradley mechanics. We immediately applied all the tools we had to deal with the problem. Our first efforts were directed toward explaining training."

The Army first increased the number of training seats for Bradley mechanics at Fort Knox, where the Advanced Individual Training course is taught. Then MILPERCEN selected high-quality 63T noncommissioned officers returning from Europe to provide the cadre for that training.

"First I must get training seats and instructors," Fontaine said. "I can't do anything if I can't fill those requirements." The next steps involved improved retention and recruiting of 63T soldiers.

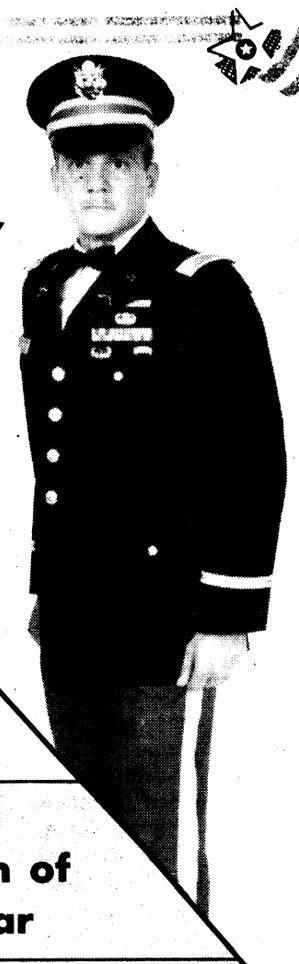
The Army established a Selective Reenlistment Bonus for MOS 63T to help retain Bradley mechanics. The MOS has also been opened for reclassification at skill level one.

MILPERCEN has ensured that there are good promotion opportunities to sergeant and staff sergeant for soldiers in MOS 63T. "Promotions provide NCO leadership and expertise, and they help improve retention of quality soldiers in the MOS," Fontaine said.

In the recruiting area, MILPERCEN has worked with Recruiting Command on several initiatives. The command has increased its priority for signing up enlistees in MOS 63T. It has also reestablished a $2,000 enlistment bonus for Bradley mechancis, and those who enlist for the MOS are now eligible for the Army College Fund.

MILPERCEN also asked Recruiting Command to include Bradley mechanics in the recruiter incentive program, which has been done. The program rewards recruiters for enlisting soldiers as 63Ts.

"The net result of these actions is the MOS 63T retention is going up, and the recruiters are doing well and I'm sure will make their mission for us," Fontaine said. "The NCOs are arriving at Fort Knox, and the training increase is about to begin."



The Army's projections are that, while not quite reaching 100 percent of the goal for Bradley mechanics, it will be close to that goal by the end of this fiscal year. MILPERCEN expects to reach 100 percent MOS fill in early fiscal year 1988, and to maintain the new level of training as long as it's needed.

"We recognized a problem and developed a solid course of action to solve it," Fontaine explained.

Q. Is there any particular sequence in which schedules and numbered forms should be attached to a Form 1040?

A. Be sure to attach forms and schedules in order of sequence. The IRS prefers that schedules be attached in alphabetical order (i.e. Schedules A & B, C, D, E) followed by numbered forms in numerical sequence. Below the year in the upper right hand corner of the form or schedule is the sequence number. Forms without sequence numbers should follow next in numerical order. Separate sheets should be attached at the end of the return.

Q. I will need an extension of time for filing my individual income tax return. How can I be sure that my application for extension will be approved?

A. To request an extension, you will need to mail a completed and signed Form 4868, Application for Automatic Extension of Time to File U.S. Individual Income Tax Return, in time to reach the IRS office prior to April 15. When you submit the Form 4868, you will have to make a tentative tax estimate for the year. If you expect to owe income tax, you must make full payment of the estimated tax amount with the application for extension.

Q. My husband and I filed a joint federal tax return. He owed money for back child support, and the state took our tax refund to satisfy the debt. I don't understand wh they took my share of the return. Is there any way for me to get my share of the refund returned to me?

A. Yes. If you are not responsible for the obligation and had your own earnings and withholding, it may be possible for you to receive a percentage of the refund by filing Form 1040X. The claim should be marked "Injured Spouse" at the top. Make sure the name, address, and filing status on the 1040X are the same as they were on the original return.

In the explanation section, list your income and withholding as the injured spouse. Also list any exemptions, itemized deductions, and credits you would have been entitled to had you filed married filing separately.

The IRS will make the computation to determine the amount of your refund. You must be aware that this type of claim may take a while to process since it concerns child support. This is because the IRS must verify information with Health and Human Services.

Christian Band rocks 'The Hill'

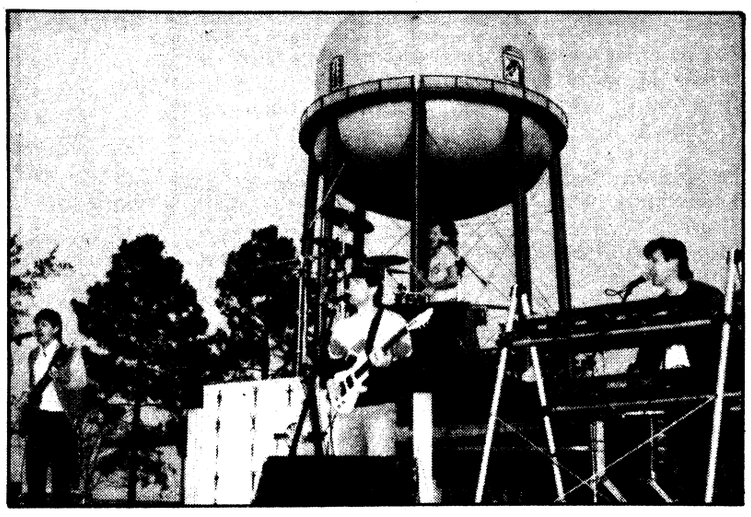
By Troy Buchanan
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Last week the music of the Christian rock group "David and the Giants" could be heard all across Kelley Hill.

The Christian band was sponsored by the Kelley Hill chaplains, who thought the concert would be a big success. And as much as the soldiers seemed to enjoy themselves, the chaplains were right.

Band members were: David Huff (lead guitar, lead vocals), Rayborn Huff (keyboards), Klayborn Huff (bass guitar), and Keith Thibodeaux (drums).

"I came to the Lord in 1974," Thibodeaux said. "Then I started to witness to the other band members."



He said the other band members became Christians in 1977. Then the group formed the band "David and the Giants" in 1979.

"Its really been great, we've been all over the U.S. and have seen a lot of lives change," Thibodeaux said. "We spend about half the year traveling and singing on the road. The rest of our time is spent in the studio."

"David and the Giants" performed their concert on the 197th Infantry Brigade's front lawn, using two flat-bed trailers as a stage. Direct power for their lights and other equipment was supplied through the Brigade. A generator was on stand-by in case it was needed.

A detail of soldiers was supplied to assist the band members in setting up and tearing down their equipment.

"The travelng is very tiring," Huff said. "But the rewards in Heaven are worth it, music is out ministry."

Purim observance to begin

By Craig Allen
Reception Battalion chaplain

At sundown Saturday, Jews throughout the world begin the observance of Purim, a celebration with scriptual basis in the book of Esther.

It commemorates an event that has no connection to Israel, actually taking place in Persia about the fifth century B.C.E. Moreover, nowhere in the book of Esther is God mentioned, although His divine providence and active involvement is an over-riding theme.

The story of Purim typifies a long history of persecutions against the Jewish people. It is a story of Persian court intrigue. The initial message is the continuous vulnerability of a minority group to a host country's whims of discontent.

Because of a personal grudge against Mordecai the Jew, Haman, a high official in the Persian government, uses a classic anti-Semitic argument and describes the Jews to King Ahasuerus as a dangerous people, "scattered and dispersed throughout the empire . . . refusing to obey the king's law."

The king then issues a decree ordering the destruction of the Jewish people. The evil decree is averted when Queen Esther reveals her true Jewish identity, moving the king to modify the decree by allowing the Jews to defend themselves.

The book ends with a description of the Jewish military success as well as the demise of Hamam who, for his poor judgment and disloyalty, was hanged by the King on the same gallows he (Haman) had planned for Mordechai. But that is not the only irony.

Historically, the period described in the book of Esther should have been one of marked stability and happiness for Jews. They had achieved significant influence in government. Mordechai, the head of the Sanhedrin, (the Jewish court) was also an official of government who sat among those assembled at the "gate of the kings."

Esther was the wife of the king. Never before (or since) has a Jewish woman been the wife of a monarch who reigned over the entire civilized world. Consequently, Jewish survival and prosperity should have been assured.

But, as scripture tells us, the opposite was the case, for it was precisely in this environment that we see the issuance of the decree to "destroy, slay and annihilate" all the Jews from "the youth through the aged, infants and children, all in one day." Never to date had there been a command of such severity directed against the Jews.

We could spend much time attempting to analyze the social dynamics leading to the decree, phenomena like anti-Semitism or assimilation. Let us instead focus on the deliverance.

One would expect Esther, upon hearing of the decree, to react politically, i.e., to immediately seek a solution based on her position and influence with the king. However, we read that rather than using that approach, Esther's course of action was to fast and to order all the Jews to do likewise for a period of three days. Only then did she feel that the climate was spiritually right, both personally and as a people, for an encounter with the king. It would seem that her instincts were sound since the evil decree was altered and the Jews saved.

What do we learn from this? Clearly the message is one of priorities. Just as Esther placed her relationship with God before her relationship with the king, we in our day would do well to do likewise and place God first in our lives. According to the timeless truth of scripture as revealed in the Book of Esther, such values yield high dividends both individually and collectively.

One of the central features of the holiday of Purim centers around the public reading of the Megillah (Book of Esther). It is chanted with a special melody and each time Haman's name is mentioned, the audience boos and hisses. Costumes and noisemakers (groggers) add spice to the reading as does a community meal of special foods like hamantaschen (a special triangle-shaped tart whose hidden filling symbolizes Gods concealed involvement in the Purim story).

Purim emphasizes unity and friendship, which helped bring about the miracle, and is therefore commemorated by sending gifts of food to friends and family.

Giving to charity, while a year-round duty, has added significance on this occasion, since it was decreed by Mordechai and Esther to celebrate Purim in this manner.

During the times of the Holy Temple in Jerusalem, a half-shekel was collected from every Jew above the age of 13. This money, collected during the Hebrew month Adar (which would later become the time of Purim,) was used to pay for the communal sacrifices for the coming year.

Our custom today is to give the equivalent of a half-shekel ($5) to charity on Purim.

The celebration of Purim has helped the Jewish people during their darkest times, to maintain their trust in their inevitable deliverance from all who would plot their destruction.

The merrymaking, feasting and masquerading at Purim have served as a much needed relief from the seriousness of much of the remainder of the year.

Mormons dedicate new worship facility

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Columbus Stake, celebrated the opening of its new worship and activities center at a ceremony recently.

Chapel, education, social and recreation services are provided in the new complex.

Chaplain (Capt.) Paul Williams of the 1st Infantry Training Brigade is affiliated with the local L.D.S. Group. "The term "stake" indicates the function of this facility," Williams said. "We see ourselves as pilgrims on a journey, building the Kingdom of God. Just as a stake supports the structure of a tent, so the L.D.S. Stake supports the structure of the kingdom of God on earth."

Begin training now for running festival

By Bill Connolly
Race Director

Three weeks to go — are you ready for your race (or walk)?

These 21 days are critical in your preparation for a safe and enjoyable event. Safety has been one of the major concerns in organizing the race and it should be yours also.

Be absolutely sure that you are ready physically for this competition. Your approach should vary according to previous experience.

Seasoned runners, if you're going for the gold, some speedwork and possibly another race to sharpen your competitive edge would be appropriate.

If you are a beginning runner, retain the focus of completing the run and having a good time — the trophies will come later. Work on easy endurance runs, concentrate on a comfortable warm-up pace. You'll need to have that pace firmly in your mind on race day so you don't get caught up with the rabbits sprinting the first quarter mile — you'll run out of gas!

A primary consideration at this point in your preparation is climatization.

April 4 may be the first hot, humid day of the year. If all of your training has occurred at 5:30 a.m. in March, a hard run at 9 a.m. in April may take your system by surprise.

So get a few easy runs in during the noon hours to allow your body to get ready for the weather changes. Don't push too hard and drink plenty of fluids before and after the run.

If you run over 30 minutes, plan a water stop during the route. Stretch and warm-up for all training runs.

Experiment with breakfast selections 1 1/2 - 2 hours before a run to insure you can hold food down during the race.

Fluid intake is extremely important. Be sure you are adequately hydrated before and after running.

Aerospace specialist visits school

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning schools

Not a space man, he told the students, but a space educator — Wesley McCoy, an Aerospace Education Specialist representing NASA's John F. Kennedy Space Center, thrilled Fort Benning students and their teachers last week with his science lessons.

Students and teachers prepared for McCoy's week-long visit with studies of the solar system, aeronautics and aerospace. His programs involed every student in the school system.

The teacher, not the bus, was what captivated the students as he unloaded the bus and brought inside the satellites, robots and computers that it contained.

In presentations designed for each age group, McCoy talked about the planets,about space shuttles and about satellites and the tasks that they perform in outer space.

Models of experimental planes that had led to the development of the shuttle that is presently in use where shown along with exclusive NASA footage of astronaut activity within the shuttle. A brief history of space exploration with a review of the missions and achievements in the Mercury, Gemini and Apollo programs was also presented.

Students learned the secrets of flight without fuel or wings — paper airplane flight — and how the study of flying things is related to NASA's mission.

McCoy did not confine his presentation to blast-offs, orbitings and landings. He presented the practical benefits of space travel — development of new medicines and metals that can only be produced in a weightless environment, use of satellites for weather monitoring and cable TV, long distance communications, etc.

Courtney Spratt, a Dexter School kindergartener, models a space suit while Wesley McCoy stands by.

Tour guides at the Infantry Museum become 'wise and trusted counselors'

By Mike Brazile
Bayonet staff writer

How would you like to be a "wise and trusted counselor or teacher?" That's the definition of "mentor" and if you join the Mentor Program at the National Infantry Museum, you could be one of these wise and trusted counselors.

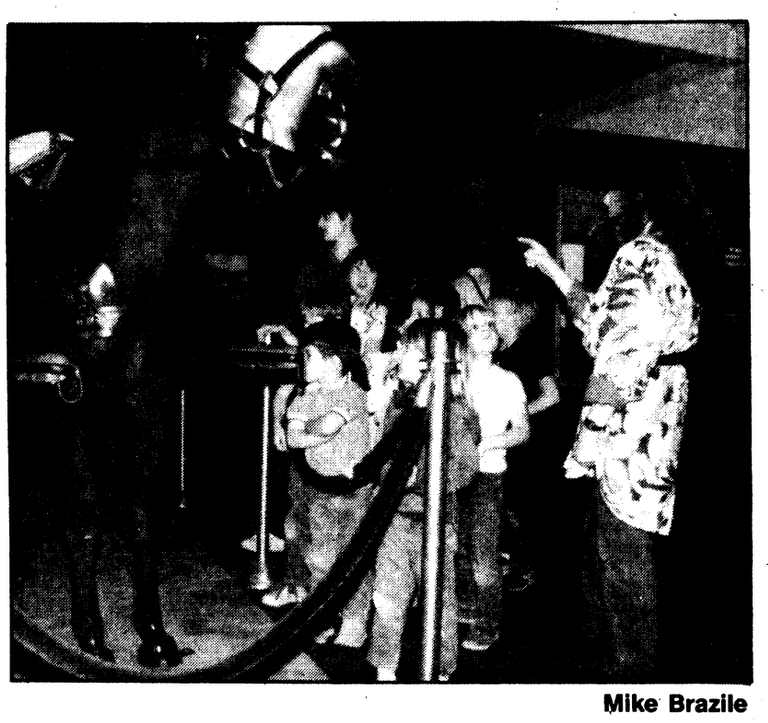
Betty Tuma, the director of volunteers for the museum, is looking for volunteers to serve as tour guides at the museum.

"We currently have 11 dedicated, hard-working people working in our volunteer program, but we need a lot more," Tuma said.

Museum Mentors undergo a training program that provides them with a broad base of information on displays exhibited on each of the three floors of the museum. In addition, they are assigned an experienced tour guide who they can observe giving tours until they feel comfortable in taking on a group themselves.

"We don't have to have history buffs or experts on the infantry to serve as tour guides. What we do need are caring, concerned people who like others and want to share their time in a worthwhile community effort," Ms. Tuma said.

One added incentive for becoming a mentor is free baby-sitting.



"Our volunteers receive free sitter service while they're here at the museum working. It gets them out of the house and away from the children for a while, plus the community and museum get some much-needed assistance," she said.

Besides leading tours of the museum, the mentors also conduct the Haversack Program. A canvas soldier's haversack is literally filled with military and historical items from a specific period of history. The mentor takes the haversack to a post schooland teaches the school children about that specific historical era. Showing students the actual items makes the history lesson "come alive," Ms. Tuma said.

The mentors don't work on a specific schedule but on an on-call basis, scheduling their work hours to fit the museum's needs.

Ms. Tuma also said that the museum is in dire need of bilingual tour guides because of Spanish-speaking visitors to the museum.

Anyone interested in becoming a "wise and trusted counselor or teacher" can call the National Infantry Museum at 545-2958.

Marshal's viewpoint

Provost Marshal

Rape is about violence and power. Thus, it is safe to say that a majority of rapists do so to satisfy a need or needs that are lacking.

Some of us share the misconception that all rapists are "sexual psychopaths," and that all rapes involve mutilation and murder. This is not true. On the contrary, most rapes involve "normal" people. Thus, the average rapist shares the same misconceptions as you and I. They do not see themselves as rapists, and may even hold the same views about rape as does the rest of society.

This type of rapist does not see himself as a brutal person and thereby rationalizes his behavior as "lovemaking." This is the basic problem with the average rapist. He may offer his victim a ride from a cocktail party and then force himself on her.

Although she is unwilling, he considers his role as that of seduction, particularly because he did not kill or maim her. So, his activity will most likely continue until restrained by confinement or treated and rehabilitated.

In one study, the majority of rapists were 15 to 24 years of age — the period of a man's life when he is most anxiously flexing his muscles in the new role of adult masculinity. While trying to fit into this new role of "macho-aggressiveness," the typical young man may feel a tremendous sense of frustration and inadequacy. In the case of the rapist, this is often transferred into his feelings about women.

In the case of the man who feels inadequate with his masculinity, he may attempt to cover up those feelings by dominating a weaker being. Thus, the female, being generally weaker physically, may become the means by which the potential rapist satisfies his inadequacies.

So, when a man rapes a woman, there is a lot more going on than non-consensual intercourse. There are many reasons and states of mind that contribute to the act of rape.

The key is to understand that the rapist does not look like a "rapist." There is no stereotype of a rapist.

DEH plans inspections

By Rodney Carroll
Energy Office

Energy inspections currently being performed by Energy Management personnel have revealed an unacceptable trend. Many units and activities do not have energy conservation personnel on orders. If these duties have not been assigned to anyone, you can bet they are not being performed. This situation must be corrected if we are to continue the progress we have made in using our energy resources wisely and efficiently.

The USAIC 11-27 Energy Regulation outlines the necessary personnel and their duties. This includes the Energy Conservation Officer who is the point of contact for all matters relating to energy. He or she is responsible to their commanding officer or chief for a functioning energy program that complies with all the applicable regulations.

If we are to have a viable energy program it is essential that the above personnel are on orders, trained and performing their assigned duties. Commanders and activity chiefs must be involved in their energy programs to ensure that it is functioning properly. This includes making sure the energy personnel have sufficient time and support to perform their duties.

The following is the inspection schedule for 1987:
March — 1st ITB and DPTM
April — 2nd ITB and DRM
May — Reception Station and DEH
June — MEDDAC and DOL
July — DENTAC and DPCA
August — 36th Engr. Gp. and DOC
September — 34th Med. Bn. and USARSA
October — AG and 75th Ranger Reg.
November — USAIB and DAIM
December — 29th Inf. Reg. and PMO

Court report

Staff Judge Advocate

PFC Kenneth D. Pappas, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment, was convicted at a special court-martial last week of one specification of larceny and five specifications of forgery.

Sometime before June 1986, Pappas obtained a driver's license belonging to a civilian named Hagenbuch.

On or about July 18, Pappas took a check belonging to Pvt. Lee Ann D'Angelo, a soldier assigned to the Dental Activity. Pappas wrote the check out to Hagenbuch, signed D'Angelo's name, and, using the stolen driver's license, cashed the check for $75.

A few months later, Pappas found a book of checks belonging to Sgt. Seth Thompson, an soldier in Pappas' company who resided in the barracks with Pappas.

Rather than return the checks to Thompson, Pappas forged Thompson's signature to four of the checks, wrote them payable to Hagenbuch, and cashed them at a Columbus bank. The four checks were cashed for a total of $375.

The bank at which Pappas cashed the forged checks used a video camera to monitor all transactions at the bank counter. Pappas was caught when Thompson identified him negotiating one of the forged checks on videotape.

Pappas made full restitution soon after he was caught. Despite this, he was convicted of all offenses.

He was sentenced by Col. Sebert L. Trail, the military judge, to be reduced to the grade of E1, to forfeit $438 per month for two months, to be confined for two months, and to be discharged from the service with a bad conduct discharge.

On March 3, PFC Carl Stiner, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was sentenced to 45 days confinement, reduction to E-1, and a bad conduct discharge after pleading guilty to charges of distributing marijuana at Fort Benning.

In February, Stiner was apprehended and was informed that he had sold the marijuana to an undercover agent.

Stiner was scheduled to get out of the Army on February 10. As a result of this conviction, he will be required to serve his confinement prior to leaving the service.

Scouting helps girls build self confidence

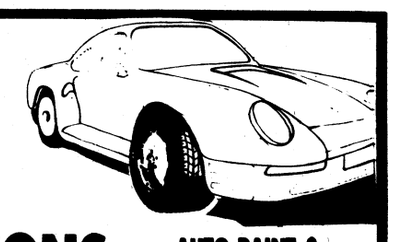
Fort Benning Girl Scouts

From the time that Girl Scouting began in 1912 by the founder Juliette Gordon Low, in Savannah, Ga., the organization has grown to become a household word. In its 75 year history Girl Scouts of USA has had 19 remarkable and dedicated national presidents. Juliette Low became the organizations first president following a national convention in 1915.

Anne Choate, the second president of Girl Scouts USA, believed that girl scouting builds health, a sense of social responsibility, democracy, character, through the teachings of generosity, initiative, reliability, loyalty, self control, cheerfulness, obedience, usefulness and thrift. Throughout our 75 year history we have lived up to our matriachs ideals.

The Movement also encourages girls to know themselves. To appreciate their own specialness as indicated in a statement made by Tuck Price during her presidency (1963-69): "As our society continues to become more depersonalized and crowded, it becomes more and more important to help girls discover their own identities and to speak out on their own rather than be a part of the mass."

Milly Hawk Daniel stated in the 75th Anniversary issue of Girl Scout Leader, an official magazine of the GSUSA that: "Girl Scouts every where are indeed the recipients of a previous legacy handed down by a succession of women whose own lives are an example of service to others and determination to succeed. As Girl Scouts celebrate te organization's 75th birthday, take a moment to remember those guideing forces whose tireless efforts helped this Movement grow.



The Fort Benning Girl Scout Association is carrying on the deals established by our past presidents and current Girl Scout programing. It is our effort to reach Girl Scouting's ultimate goal, the development of responsible citizens.

Service projects are projects that teaching girls responsibility and focuses on their community.

An upcoming service project is "From Hearts to Home" which is a community food drive that will benefit the ACS Foodlocker thereby directly benefitting the Fort Benning Community.

The Fort Benning Girl Scout Association is always looking for volunteers to help share in the development of children. If you would like to be that special volunteer or have a daughter who wishes to join Girl Scouting, contact Judy Purkett, Service Unit Director, at 682-1111.

Project SPIRIT names winners

By Laurie J. Hill
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning announced the winners of the Systematic Productivity Improvement Review in the Training and Doctrine Command Award recently for the fist quarter of fiscal year 1987.

Divisions and individual employees were acknowledged forhelping the Army get the most from available resources by officials from Project SPIRIT.

"Project SPIRIT is an umbrella program which covers all existing efficiency programs including audits, investigations, commercial activities, suggestions, management improvements, management studies and internal control reviews just to name a few," said Sarah McLaney, Project SPIRIT coordinator for Fort Benning.

The Directorate of Resource Management Division received a trophy and wall plaque for winning first place for the greatest amount of savings in the first quarter.

DRM offered two suggestions and three management improvement actions that resulted in an annual savings of $91,422. DRM accomplished this by automating the commanding general's review and analysis/active actions briefings, by suggesting onsite training for Automated Data Processing and in the Army's internal control systems. DRM was also acknowledged for computerizing the SRIRIT year end report.

Also cited was the Directorate of Logistics for implementing seven suggestions and two capital investment projects, for an annual savings of $39,431. DOL was presented the Meritorious Award for purchase of drum handling attachments for forklifts, installation of a manual fire suppression device, fuel cell repair for the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, modification of airborne training equipment, fabricaton and placement of recycle paper containers an hiring five trainees.

Five individuals were recognized for their contribution to the SPIRIT program.

William Bland, an employee of Services and Support Division, DOL was honored for a proposal he made to modify some airborne training equipment that would result in an annual savings of $629.

Jim Ray Lance and Carlton K. Mason Jr. of the Maintenance Division, DOL, received individual awards for proposed improvements on the periscope head of the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle that will save Fort Benning $547,000 annually.

Roland Newsome Jr. of Maintenance Division, DOL, received an individual award for his proposal to repair the M-21 Sniper Rifle's ATR II telescope instead of sending it to California for service. This will save Fort Benning $43,000 annually.

Charles A. Piper, a worker at Maintenance Division, DOL, was presented an individual award for his proposal to use a substitute power source to replace the lithium batteries used on Lee Field. This will save the government $117,900 per year.

"The award is presented to employees who have contributed significantly toward attaining the SPIRIT objective of enhancing combat readiness by maximizing Army resources," said Lt. Col. Billy R. McCrary, deputy of DRM.

"These are people who care about our economy and have taken the action to help stretch our resources," McCrary said

National Poison Prevention Week

Educating public, special packaging decreases fatalities

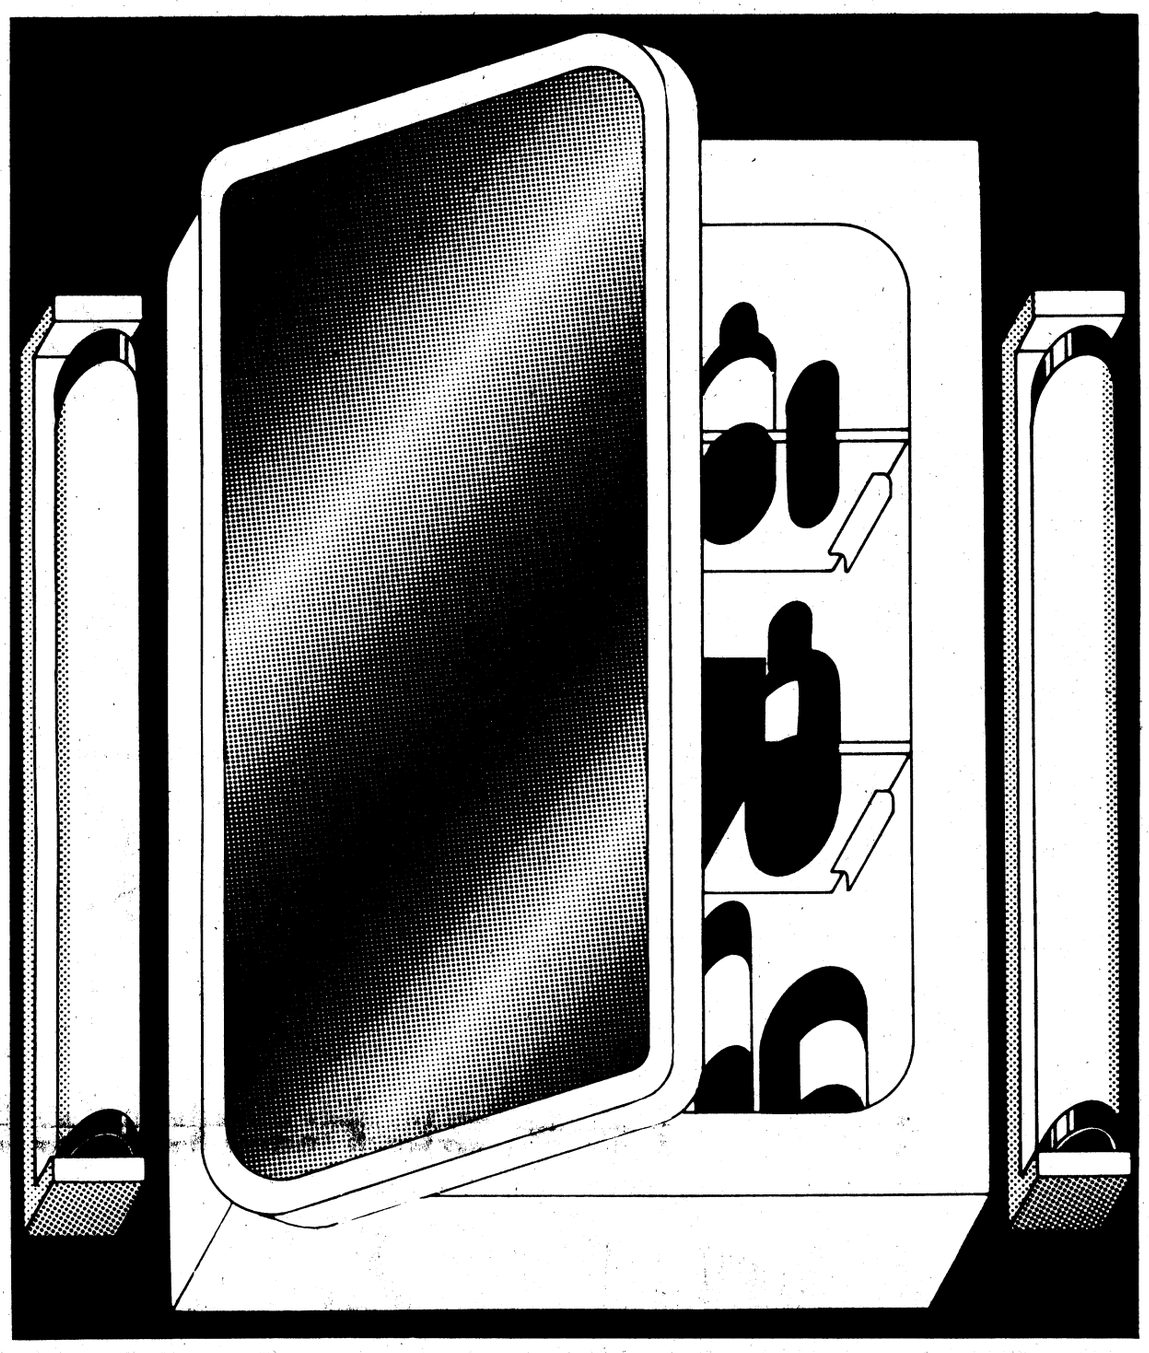
By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Awareness — and protective packaging — work. In 1961, when Congress first passed the law authorizing an annual observance of National Poison Prevention Week, 450 children under 5 died from accidential poisoning in the United States. As President Ronald Reagan noted in last year's proclamation of National Poison Prevention Week, "By 1983, (the last year for which we have complete statistics), the annual death toll for children under 5 years of age had dropped to 55 — an 88 percent reduction."

This dramatic reduction has been attributed to the combined effects of greater public awareness of the need to keep children and poisons apart and protective packaging on may dangerous products.

Of the two, awareness is perhaps more important. The first protective packaging law — for aspirin — went into effect in 1972. But accidental poisonings began to decline in the 1960s — when the nation's poison prevention efforts consisted of public awareness campaigns alone.

As one safety official pointed out, "Safety closures won't work if people don't use them."



This year, the National Poison Prevention Week Council is using the same main slogan it has used for the past 26 years, "Children Act Fast . . . So Do Poisons!" According to the council's secretary, Ken Giles, this year's week will emphasize awareness not only on the part of parents and grandparents, but also by everyone who comes into contact with children.

A recent national study found that children were getting into poisonous substances belonging to people visiting their home or whose homes they visited. For example, a friend visits the family and has tranquilizers in her purse. While the adults are talking, the 2-year-old is exploring guess were. Or the child and his family could be visiting in a home with no children — thus, no safeguarding or poisons. Little Johnny or Mary goes under the sink to the bleach, which could look like a bottle of milk to a toddler, and takes a drink.

Fortunately, today most children accidentally exposed to poisons survive — thanks to the work of poison control centers and emergency rooms. In 1984, the American Association of Poison Control Centers reported 730,224 human-poisoning exposures — 90 percent of which were accidental. There were 293 fatalities — 233 of them from intentional poisonings, with the remaining 60 fatalities acciental. Only 21 of the fatalities involved children uner 6.

Many of the 500,000 poison exposures in 1984 that involved children under 6 were successfully managed at home — after calling a poison control center — using syrup of ipecac, which induces vomiting. Poison experts caution against using syrup of ipecac if the poison is a corrosive, such as acid or lye (drain cleaner).

Poison control centers are located around the United States, with trained people to answer questions about what to do about a specific poison. The centers have hotline numbers that are publicized in the community, in military clinic pediatricians' offices and in the telephone book. In the United States, military personnel are encouraged to call such regional hotlines for poison information. Overseas, call the military hospital emergency room.

Of course, prevention is much better than cure. Here are some tips that may help you avoid the poison hotline call or emergency room trip:

- Poison-proof your home if you have children or if children visit regularly.
- Buy a bottle of syrup of ipecac, and keep it were you can find it fast. Don't forget to tell your babysitter where it is. Post the number of the nearest poison control center (or emergency room) by the phone and call if poisoning is suspected. Don't give syrup of ipecac unless told to do so.
- Never take medicines in poor light — a common cause of acciental adult poisonings.

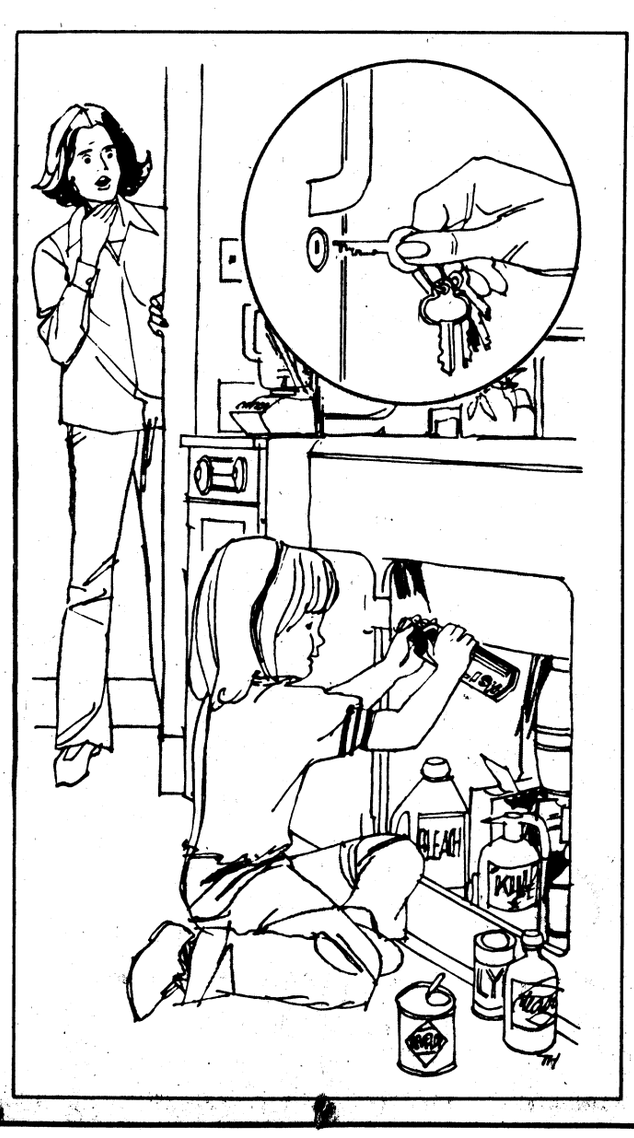
Make sure home can stand up to child's inspection

By Ann Marie McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Rrrring! The sound of the telephone beckons little Suzy's mother. While her back is turned, Suzy, a curious 3-year-old, sees her chance to examine the contents of the pretty little brown bottle on daddy's dresser. It looks like it has candy inside. She quickly snatches up the bottle, opens it, and swallows several pills.....

Unfortunately, this scenario happens all the time.

According to Maj. Jerome F. Potts, Chief of Emergency and Ambulatory Care Service, Martin Army Community Hospital, treats an average of 12 children each month in the emergency room for ingested poisons. "Fortunately, in most cases they are not serious enough to warrant hospitalization," he said.



Potts said only about two children a month are hospitalized for additional treatment.

According to the National Safety Council, while children are most often associated with accidental poisoning, adults actually suffer the most casualities. Studies show that in 1985, 3,000 people died from ingesting poisonous solids or liquids; of that number, 75 percent were adults aged 25 or over.

The National Safety council offers these tips on how to prevent accidental poisonings.

1. Store all household cleaning products out of a child's reach and lock up all toxic products. Do not store cleaning supplies on the same shelves as food.
2. Keep medicines, household cleaning products, paint and any potentially harmful products in their original containers, and be sure the content label is legible.
3. Never tell children that medicine is "candy" — they may seek it out later. Teach children the danger of taking someone's medicine and make sure medicine packages are child-resistant.
4. Always read the label before taking medicine and take ONLY the recommended dosage. Do not take medicine in the dark or in light so dim that you cannot read the label. Never take medicine prescribed for someone else.
5. Do not mix medicine and alcohol — many such combinations can produce dangerous physical reactions, and even death.
6. Avoid putting cleaning fluids, paint thinner or any potentially harmful products in beverage bottles — children (and adults) may mistake the liquid for the original beverage. If you must transfer a product from its original container, be sure to clearly label the new container.

Take this test to see if your home is safe for children

The home areas listed below are the most common sites of accidental poisonings. Follow this checklist to learn how to correct situations that may lead to poisonings. If you answer "No" to any questions, fix the situation quickly. Your goal is to have all your answers "Yes."

The Bathroom

1. Did you ever stop to think that medicines could poison if used improperly? Many children are poisoned each year by overdoses of aspirin. If aspirin can poison, just think of how may other poisons might be in your medicine cabinet. Yes No

2. Do your aspirins and other potentially harmful products have child-resistant closures? Aspirins and most prescription drugs come with child-resistant caps. Check to see yours have them. Yes No

3. Have you thrown out all out-of-date prescriptions? As medicines get older, the chemicals inside them can change. So what was once a good medicine may now be a dangerous poison. Flush all old drugs down the toilet. Rinse the container well, then discard it. Yes No

4. You always give medicine only to the person the doctor prescribed it for? The medicine that worked wonders on one person may harm the next. Give drugs only to the person the doctor told you to give them to. Yes No

5. Are all medicines in their original containers with the original labels? Prescription medicines may or may not list ingredients. The prescription number on the label will, however, allow rapid identification by the pharmacist of the ingredients should they not be listed. Without the original label and container, you can't be sure of what you're taking. After all, aspirin looks a lot like poisonous roach tablets. Yes No

1. Do all harmful products in the cabinets have child-resistant caps? Products like furniture polishes, drain cleaners and some oven cleaners should have safety packaging to keep little children from accidentally opening the packages. Yes No

2. Are all potentially harmful products in their original containers? There are two dangers if products aren't stored in their original containers. Labels on the original containers often give first aid information if someone should swallow the product. And if products are stored in containers like drinking glasses or pop bottles, someone may think it is food and swallow it. Yes No

3. Are harmful products stored away from food? If harmful products are placed next to food, someone may accidentaly get a food and a poison mixed up and swallow the poison. Yes No

Garage or storage area

1. Do all these poisons have child-resistant caps? Yes No
2. Are they stored in the original containers? Yes No
3. Are the original labels on the containers? Yes No
4. Have you made sure that no poisons are stored in drinking glasses or pop bottles? Yes No
5. Are all these harmful products locked up and out of sight and reach? Yes No

When all your answers are "Yes," then continue this level of poison protection by making sure that, whenever you buy potentially harmful products, they have child-resistant closures and are kept out of sight and reach.

More than 250 students compete, representing 15 regional colleges

Reserve Officer Training Corps cadets met on Todd Field last week to compete in the first Ranger Challenge.

"We had approximatly 250 cadets competing in teams. Each team was made up of eight cadets with one alternate standing by," said Capt. Linda J. Epple, assistant professor of military science at Auburn University.
